Army leaders visit post

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning began its new year by hosting the newest top member in the Army family.

Acting Secretary of the Army Robert M. Walker began his current position by coming back to where his Army career began — Fort Benning.

He and recently appointed Sergeant Major of the Army Robert M. Hall toured the post visiting 2,500 trainees at the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) and saying hello and goodbye to Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) who are deploying to Kuwait for Intrinsic Action.

While talking to the Soldiers at ITB, Walker stood at the podium with a giant sized photo of himself, taken while he was attending basic training in 1969. He told them he never imagined he would return to Fort Benning as the Army's top civilian.

"Never in my wildest imagination did I ever dream that Private Walker would some day become the acting Secretary of the Army."

Walker, who was serving as the Under Secretary of the Army, assumed his position when former Army Secretary Togo West moved to Veterans Affairs. Walker said his roots with the military are firmly grounded at Fort Benning and he said it was important to him to come here first.

"I wanted to come to Fort Benning as my first official trip as acting secretary because this is where it all began for me," he said.

Walker capped off a busy day on post with a speech at a dinner sponsored by the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA), which

Soldiers leave for Kuwait

Taskforce deploys for four-month long rotation in Middle East

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Soldiers of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), left Fort Benning this week for Intrinsic Action, an annual exercise conducted in the deserts of Kuwait. The deployed include more than 1,157 Soldiers from a variety of combat and combat support specialties.

The unpredictable weather grounded airplanes and had Soldiers spend too much time waiting at Kelley Hill, but most Soldiers were excited to put their skills to the test in this four-month rotation.

Sgt. 1st Class Keith Howard, the task force communications sergeant, will be expected to keep the leadership communication channels strongly linked.

"I haven't been in that area before, but communications should be okay," Howard said. Like most 3rd Brigade Soldiers, he can apply his experience from the National Training Center (NTC) at Fort Irwin, Calif. He expects to be using both frequency modulation (FM) and high frequency (HF) for communications.

Howard said wire-based communications will be used throughout the rear headquarters area where operations are managed. Communication problems in the Kuwait desert are similar to those experienced back in the U.S., Howard said.

"You can't do your mission without communications. How can you call in for supplies without communications?"

The tension between the United States and Iraq may be on some Soldiers' minds, Howard said.

"I think it crosses a lot of Soldiers' minds. 'What happens if something actually escalates while we're over there?'" Howard said. "When we go to Intrinsic Action or the NTC, we train to Army standard, to prepare for when the President of the United States calls on us."

Sgt. Milton McKoy will be tasked with supervising the mission essential repair parts to repair deadlined vehicles

ACOE team set to visit

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army Communities of Excellence (ACOE) Army Performance Improvement Criteria (APIC) Evaluation Team will arrive on post Sunday for a week-long visit.

During the on-site visit, the team will be verifying and clarifying the contents of the post's 1998 ACOE self-assessment packet. The team will also be capturing best practices to share with other Army installations.

Continuing a tradition of excellence, Fort Benning will again compete for the Chief of Staff of the Army (CSA) Award for Best Installation in the Continental United States. The post has won the award five years running.

The post can net a $200,000 cash award if selected as a CSA winner.

The CSA is the highest award Fort Benning can win in 1998 because agencies can only apply for the Presidential Quality Award every four years and new rules stipulate installations can no longer win the Commander in Chief's Award two years in a row.

The team members are as follows: Maj Gen. Michael T. Gaw, 143rd TRANSCOM, Orlando, Fla.; Donna M. Decker, Department of the Army civilian, 43rd Adjutant General Battalion, Fort Leonard Wood, Miss.; Dr. C. Ray Eary, a Systems Integration Specialist, Garrison Commander's Office, III Corps and Fort Hood, Tex.; 1st Lt. (P) Jennifer L. Newlon, 409th Base Support Battalion, Germany; Maj. Larry J. Smith, Headquarters, 143rd TRANSCOM, Orlando, Fla.; Maj. Eric E. Keyes, Headquarters, STARC, Wyoming; Kristie Thomas, Headquarters, USAREUR.

"Let's give the team a big 'Hooah' welcome!" said Sarah McLaney, chief, Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management.

ITB manages successful exodus, return for trainees

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

The Infantry Training Brigade used trains, planes and automobiles and about 100 drill sergeants to assure nearly 10,000 trainees from four installations made it home for the Christmas holidays.

This annual mission called "Exodus" included trainees from Fort Benning; Fort Gordon, Ga.; Fort Jackson, S.C.; and Fort McClellan, Ala.

Trainees are authorized a two-week break in basic training or advanced individual training to travel home for the Christmas holidays. This is considered ordinary leave and the transportation is paid for by the trainee.

The bulk of these travelers flew home from the Atlanta airport. This year, the ITB was tasked as the overall coordinators and monitors for all trainees traveling through the airport.

The ITB established a command post (CP) at the airport to manage this mission. From Dec. 17 to Dec. 19, Soldiers in the CP monitored 7,017 trainees fly home to their families. On the return mission, 4,768 trainees came through the airport.

About 100 drill sergeants from the four posts assisted with such tasks as moving the Soldiers through the airport and lending an expert eye in uniform spot corrections.

"The drill sergeants greeted the trainees on the bus and gave them professional reminders, airport travel and procedures, some of the do's and don'ts," said Sgt 1st Class John Cox, operations NCOIC for the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

"We just tracked the progress at the CP and corrected the trainees on uniform discrepancies. As they carry bags, they lose buttons, so we square them away."

Extra hats, buttons and ribbons were available at the CP for trainees who had misplaced a part of their uniform.

Retired Col. Bill Kreuger assisted trainees and other military personnel at the United Services Organization located next to the CP.

"It's a pleasure to give them a hand," Kreuger said. "Having been part of the military. I know how difficult it can be for troops to deal with strange airports."

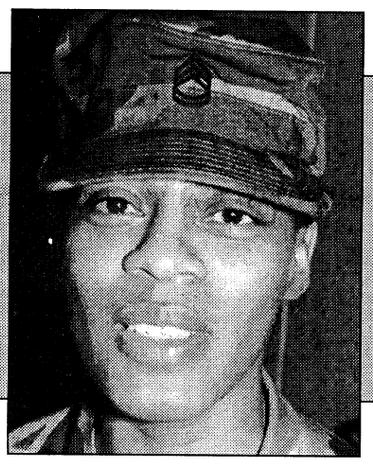
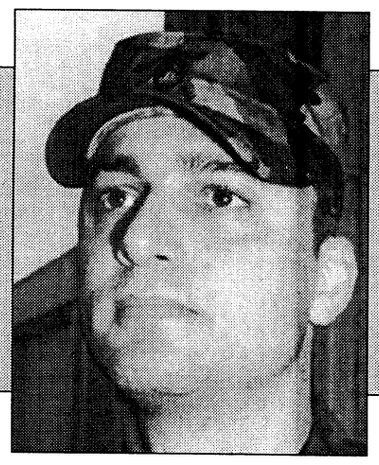
VARIOUS VOICES

What issues do you think Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. would focus on today?



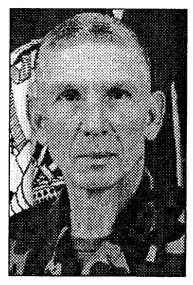
John Garrett, Directorate of Public Safety — "He would focus on teenage violence and unwed mothers."



Retired Master Sgt. James Nance, Columbus — "He would focus on defending himself. In California they named a school after him and it has caused a lot of controversy."

Mary Siegel, family member — "He would focus on what he did then — there hasn't been much improvement. People are still afraid of each other. King would be disappointed today if he were alive, not much has changed."

Sgt. 1st Class Cathy Dease, U.S. Army Aero Medical Center, Fort Rucker, Ala. — "He would focus on the escalating racial tensions."



Staff Sgt. Michael Fiame, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.) — "He would focus on the nation's education system and affirmative action. As a recruiter, I saw a lot of discrimination, especially in the high schools against minorities."

Yvette Stewart, family member — "He would focus on the gang problem and the importance of education. Everybody has the opportunity to be better but not everyone is taking it. You can take a person out of the ghetto but it's hard to take the ghetto out of the person."

Commander wants new year better than last

1997 was a great year for Fort Benning. God blessed us and continues to bless us with a great team, making Fort Benning the best place to train, live and work in our Army, the Department of Defense and the world.

You made a clean sweep of all the awards for quality Army Communities of Excellence; Commander-in-Chief's Award; and the Presidential Award for Quality, best in the entire federal government.

1997 was also a safe year. Not perfect, but better than 1996. Not easy in the third largest post in our Army and the highest training operation tempo; a 3rd Brigade rotation to the National Training Center and 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) rotation in Bosnia.

All of these blessings were possible because of our team and its focus on the individual and high standards, symbolized by "Iron Mike."

Simply stated, our Soldiers, families, civilian employees and retirees are the reason we are the best. Add to this team a very supportive local community in Columbus and Phenix City, Ala., folks who genuinely care about you, our mission, and Fort Benning.

More important than the awards is how we feel about ourselves and Fort Benning. "Best" is not and cannot be a trophy, sign on a bridge or bumper sticker. We live best here, every day. It is how we look, how we act, how we treat our customers — Soldiers, families, retirees, civilian employees and each other.

I am proud of who and what you are and your part in making us the best. I am also privileged, indeed, to serve with you.

1998 will be busy, marked by tight resources. However, the prime resource for a great team is the same value of the individual players and their willingness to serve the team. That is you!

This week the secretary of the Army and sergeant major of the Army visited. Mr. Walker and Sergeant Major of the Army Hall left impressed by you. This week we deploy Task Force 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, from our 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) to Kuwait for four months while the 608th Ordnance continues on duty in Hungary and the 75th Ranger Regiment's 3rd Battalion stands ready to launch quickly, anywhere.

This year the Infantry School's 11th and 29th Regiments, Ranger Training and Infantry Training Brigades will train nearly 40,000 Soldiers to our very high standards and we will continue our Bosnia deployment mission.

And, next week the Army Communities of Excellence Team returns to determine if we are still best. I ask your help in showing off how good we really are.

Thanks for being who you are and what you do — The best! Pray that God will bless and protect you in 1998.

King holiday reflects America's past, future

By Sgt. 1st Class Terry J. Thomas Equal Opportunity Office

'Remember! Celebrate! Act! A Day On; Not A Day Off!!" This is the national theme for this year's celebration of the legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

commentary

This theme means, remembering King and his work — what was done and what needs to be done.

Celebrate his contributions, his legacy and work in your communities on the holiday given in his name. Act on it and continue his work. Not a day off like regular holidays where we usually take the day to relax and do nothing, but a day of helping someone or maybe learning about someone different from yourself. Sometimes learning about another ethnicity or culture goes a long way in personal growth.

As we take this time to recognize the many contributions of King, it's important to remember and understand how important his struggle for freedom and equality really was. I believe one of the most profound aspects of the struggle was his fight for the rights of all people. The things he spoke out against and protested for transcend race, gender, culture or ethnicity.

King was truly a freedom fighter for all people who were victims of unfair and unjust treatment. He truly dreamed of an America and world in which we could all live together as brothers and sisters free of violence and hatred.

In his campaign to seek justice, King worked on the moral conscience of a nation. As he lead protest after protest in a nonviolent manner, he managed to put a country with an immoral offense, fueled with hatred and segregative attitudes, on the reluctant defense.

I sometimes find it hard to believe some of the treatment King and those who struggled with him had to endure. I say to myself "After all, he was only trying to ensure all people received the very things that are guaranteed by our constitution."

He only fought to ensure everyone received equal opportunity, people would be judged only by their character and not their color or gender.

King fought for the right of all people who didn't have the means or ability to fight for themselves. People like my grandfather, an entertaining man now at the old age of 82 and very patriotic.

I remember my grandfather once gave me advice as he often did, and still does. He told me a story how as a very young man he and some of his friends decided to join the Army to fight for their country. The other young men did just that, but he was not allowed to because he was an African-American.

I guess when King decided to seek justice in the face of injustice, he had people like my grandfather in mind. I often wonder if King might have been a little ahead of his time as he tried to lead a struggle for nonviolent social change in a nation that was so unwilling to change. Then I ask myself if not then, when?

King made many great speeches. One of the most famous is the, "I Have A Dream," speech in which he basically outlined his dream for our great country. He talked about things such as people judging people by the content of their character rather than the color of their skin. He spoke of things like people of all races, cultures, ethnicities and genders being able to live together in peace and harmony. I often think about the legacy and the times of Dr. King. I often say to myself, "we have come a long way in this country."

On the other hand I sometimes look around as I interact with people and our society as a whole from day to day, and again I find myself wondering just how far have we really come?

Writer thanks volunteers

Thanks to all our volunteers who give so unselfishly so that others who are unable to give of their time can benefit.

Fort Benning volunteers are a blessing to this community, as they continue to give and give. Carol Van Allen was recognized as the Volunteer of the Quarter at the CG's Celebration of Excellence Breakfast for her dedication to Santa's Castle. Because of her giving spirit, the children of Fort Benning found Christmas morning a more joyous event.

Judith Markelz and Laura Miller were recognized at the CG's Command Retreat for their dedication to the Fort Benning community.

Markelz was recognized for her dedication, hard work, and commitment to improving the quality of life for our community, and Miller for her outstanding performance as a family support group leader for the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The Family Unit Network salutes our volunteers for a job well done. Because of their dedication, support and commitment, the Fort Benning community reaps the reward of their labor. "Thank you" appears to be small words but with it goes love and appreciation.

King's dreams of equality live on

By Spc. Robert D. Francis
HHC, 1st Battalion, 15th Inf. Regt.

commentary

As we prepare to honor Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on the 30th anniversary of his death, let us stop for a while and ask this question, "is Dr. King really dead?"

The answer should be "no." Though physically he is not here, his dreams of nonviolence and racial equality lives on.

It is through his dreams that we learned to stand firm and respect ourselves without fear of anyone.

It is through his dreams that we learned to unite and use the power of words and not might when demanding equality.

It is through his dreams that we learned we must search within ourselves to find the importance of love and teach our children and the children of others.

It is because of his dreams that all Americans regardless of the ethnicity are protected by the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

And it is because of his dreams that we no longer have to live with the anxiety of racial injustice but, instead enjoy the life that makes America great. "...With liberty and justice for all."

Soldiers: Deploy

and other equipment. McKoy has been on four NTC rotations, was alerted for Operation Desert Storm and will be getting his opportunity to deploy now.

"We make sure all of the equipment and parts essential to having an effective fighting force are on hand or ordered," McKoy said. This is the prescribed load list, that is, the parts to have on hand in a wartime mission or training exercise.

Daily preventive maintenance is the key to keeping the equipment working in the field, the Soldier said. Most wheeled vehicles are equipped with air hoses to blow out sand from filters.

"You have to do your regular maintenance and keep sand out of your equipment. From the feedback the of Soldiers who actually participated in Desert Storm, the biggest things were sand and dust getting in the equipment."

Sgt. 1st Class Tony McGee Direct Support Military Police Platoon, 3rd Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga. said the MP mission will be just the same as in any environment.

"We'll be working our traditional MP missions, area security, battlefield circulation control, enemy prisoners of war control and law enforcement," McKoy said. The majority of the MP mission will be force protection.

"I was with this division when it was the 24th Infantry Division during Desert Storm. I think the only challenge will be the desert life for four months," McKoy said. "Most of these missions we know as operations other than war. The MPs have become experts at these missions in the last four or five years."

For military intelligence personnel and linguists, this deployment will give Soldiers the opportunity to work with the people and region they have studied, said 1st Lt. Lan-Dinh Vile, platoon leader for the counterintelligence and linguist team, Company C, 103 Military Intelligence Battalion.

"I'm looking forward to be in a new culture and I'm going to try and get my Soldiers to see some of the area," Vile said. "I'm fortunate because all of my Soldiers volunteered and are excited to go."

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Soldiers practice putting on protective masks.

Learning a language in a classroom and practicing its use in the field are two different challenges, she said.

"Our linguists go to the Defense Language Institute and practice speaking their language, but there's nothing to compare with actually going over to the country and speaking with native speakers. The dialect is different. So all of the nuances they pick up will really enhance their speaking skills."

Intrinsic Action is mostly a maneuvering exercise, including two Bradley companies, two tank companies and a field artillery battery. The equipment is prepositioned at Camp Doha in Kuwait. An engineering company and many combat support elements are also deployed.

There isn't a notional scenario for the exercise, said Maj. Rene Burgess, operations officer for this exercise. However, Soldiers will get the opportunity to have a little more freedom to maneuver and live-fire armor weaponry in a challenging environment.

"The majority of the time that we're there, we'll be able to do our own training, almost unconstrained," he said.

"Compared to Fort Benning or the NTC, it's much less restrained as far as freedom to maneuver, freedom of live-fire and the ability to operate under your own schedule."

In the first two weeks of December, the Soldiers went through "gate tasks," those critical tasks they thought they needed to accomplish before deploying, Burgess said. Some of these tasks were training in rules of engagement, use of force and some specific training based on the physical and political environment of duty in Kuwait.

"Most of this task force just came back from the NTC this summer, so we did a lot of company and platoon level lanes and some dismounted squad qualifications," Burgess said.

The training goals include joint maneuvering exercises with the Kuwaiti army and training designed to train the Soldiers on 3rd Brigade's mission essential tasks.

The most important goal of this exercise, Burgess said, is to deploy the force to Kuwait, accomplish the training and return the force home without any injuries.

"The reason for this mission is to make ourselves better, to do our nation's mission, which is to project a strong forward presence and to assist the host's nation forces improve their ability to defend themselves," Burgess said. "But first priority is force protection, making sure we bring everybody back."

Walker: Talks about Army future

was at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The dinner was attended by some 150 commanders, command sergeants major and key community leaders from Columbus and Phenix City, to include Mayor Bobby Peters of Columbus and Mayor Sammy Howard of Phenix City, Ala.

In their remarks, AUSA President retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White and Fort Benning Commander Maj Gen. Carl F. Ernst set the tone for the secretary, extolling the attributes of Fort Benning, the Soldiers and civilians and the special relationship that exists among the three communities.

During his speech, Walker talked about many subjects facing the Army today.

He said President Clinton and Defense Secretary William Cohen have made it clear — America's Army will continue to be second to none ensuring no other Army can effectively challenge its Army.

Walker went on to say the Army must be prepared for the enemy of the future — no matter what type. He mentioned asymmetrical warfare and cyber terrorism as two examples of what the Army of tomorrow may be up against.

"Modernizing the Army for the information age will require substantial investment and a commitment to do things differently," he said.

The new secretary focused on six subjects that in his mind, will keep the Army focused and ready for any future problem or enemy.

"First, we must always keep our focus on people. Soldiers are what makes the Army work, so Soldiers must take care of themselves and take care of their Soldiers and their families. In return, the nation must take care of her Soldiers. America is asking a great deal from Soldiers and Army civilians. So, leaders at all levels must always make decisions with people foremost in mind."

His second recommendation was directed at the Army's strategic demands.

"The Army must continue to be trained and ready to fight the nation's wars while helping prevent conflicts, shape the international environment, promote America's interests and influence democracy."

Walker next told his audience how vital modernization is to the Army's future.

"Warfare in the information age requires new weapons, new doctrine, organization and training. Our modernization program will focus investments on securing the capabilities needed to evolve today's Army into Army XXI and the Army after next."

Walker said gender and race relations are extremely important and play a big role in how the Army operates.

"The Army must always be a disciplined force where men and women from all races, religions and backgrounds serve together with dignity and respect. We must be an Army of Soldiers and civilians who exemplify the values and character of the nation.

"Next, our Army must be a total force where each component — the active force, the National Guard and the Army Reserve contributes to one seamless total Army team. They must tirelessly work to leverage the use of all three components into one total force for the nation."

Finally, Walker described how the Army must work together with the other branches of the military to make America's defense the strongest it can be.

"The Army must be a full partner in the joint force where each military service provides complementary capabilities to fulfill the national military strategy."

But in the end, Walker said, the responsibility falls on the Army leaders to commit themselves to taking care of the Soldiers who will make up the Army of the future.

"Leadership is the key. Our leaders must lead. They must take care of their people. They must ensure their people always come first and they must set their priorities accordingly.

In this rapidly changing world, leaders must embrace and promote innovation while they continue to maintain the warrior ethic and the culture and traditions of the Army."

A theme that ran throughout his speeches all day was the need for integrity.

"I expect all of our Soldiers and civilians to be committed to integrity, taking responsibility to mentoring, innovation and fostering the concept of one team, one fight, one future."

He said, "Integrity is the most important quality in people. Each of us must accept responsibility for doing our jobs to the best of our abilities."

Walker quoted retired Lt. Gen. G.M. Flangan when he said, "In no other profession is integrity more important than the profession of arms."

CG solicits feedback from 545-BOSS calls

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers and civilians alike can now voice their opinions and suggestions about Fort Benning at the same phone number they call for problems, 545-BOSS (545-2677).

Since the post won the Presidential Quality Award for 1997, a sign was put up on an overpass on the highway leading out of post. The sign was put up in September and informs drivers who have comments and suggestions on bettering Fort Benning to call 545-BOSS.

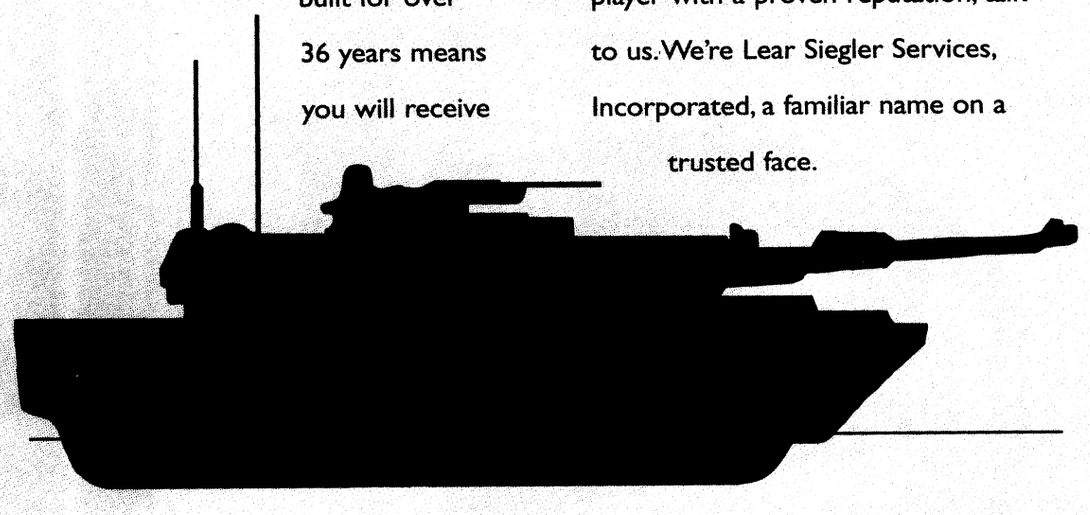
Callers are instructed to use Mailbox One for their comments and suggestions and Mailbox Two for problems.

"I've gotten a lot of calls in Mailbox One that are really 545-BOSS calls," said Cora Wright, administrative clerk in the Secretary General Staff's office. "People don't listen to the instructions and press Mailbox One for 545-BOSS and don't end up having enough time to record their message."

Wright listens to the messages, types them up and then gives them to the Chief of Staff Col. Lawrence K. White Jr. Wright said most of the comments and suggestions are anonymous and no reply is needed. The callers are instructed to leave their name, social security number and what unit they or their sponsor is with. Without that information, no reply can be made. Callers are told they will receive a reply within seven days.

So far there have been 13 calls to Mailbox One, Wright said. The suggestions include improvement of the golf course, the improvement of certain roads on post, a suggestion of using the award money to improve enlisted housing and the supervision of children outside.

People are encouraged to call the fully automated line to give their ideas.



"The line indicates the interest of the community to improve the post," Wright said.

Soldiers reap benefits from Operation Holiday activities

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers not able to make it home for the holidays had the opportunity to get off post through a variety of activities called Operation Holiday, sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley — Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army (AUSA).

Operation Holiday began in 1980 at the request of the Commanding General of Fort Benning, said Master Sgt. Rodney Tiller, AUSA. It was originally for Soldiers left behind at Christmas but, with a constantly changing Army, soon expanded to include all Soldiers from Fort Benning.

Operation Holiday kicked off Dec. 19 at the Government Center in Columbus and ended on Jan. 2 with a trip to the Georgia Dome for the Peach Bowl.

Chief of Staff Col. Larry White spoke on behalf of Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst who was unable to attend.

White read a version of "Twas the Night Before Christmas" more befitting for the Soldiers of Fort Benning.

"Twas the night before Christmas, he lived all alone, in a one bedroom house made of plaster and stone. I came down the chimney with presents to give and see just who in a home like this just who did live," White read.

When done reading the poem, White thanked the tricommunity for the support shown to the Soldiers.

Congressman Mac Collins spoke of how Soldiers are from many parts of the country and the world and now the Army is their home.

"I just returned home from a trip to Bosnia and could see how the Soldiers wished they were at home with their wife, their mother and father; and even though they missed those homes, they have those thoughts of memories."

The kickoff ended with Miss Columbus Amy Swanson singing holiday songs.

Events scheduled during Operation Holiday were many Columbus Cottonmouths hockey games, Atlanta Hawks games and a bowling tournament on post.

"I went to a hockey game," said Pfc. Melissa Clark, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "It was great to see all the Soldiers enjoying themselves away from the barracks. I think everyone had a good time."

"I want to thank the Columbus area merchants who contributed to Operation Holiday. I appreciated it very much," said Clark. "I couldn't go home for the holidays so it was a nice break. I hope Soldiers will continue to receive this benefit."

A new addition to the schedule this year was a trip to the Hollywood Connection here in Columbus. Soldiers enjoyed the opportunities to skate, play miniature golf, sample a Dinglewood Scramble Dog or try their hands at the arcade or watch a movie.

The USO provided food, coffee and a place for troops to play cards or rest while waiting for their flight. The USO also offered a last minute Christmas wrapping service.

"It just gives you a good warm feeling to watch people come in and see the look on their face when they see a helping hand. It's kind of like a haven in a storm."

Pvt. Jonathan Hoke, an Infantryman on his way home to Kansas City, Mo., looked forward to seeing his four-year old niece.

"I know she's grown a lot since I've been here," the recently graduated Infantryman said as he waited for his airplane. "I can't wait to see my niece and all of my family. I've been waiting for this for a long time. I thought it would come a lot sooner."

The Christmas break was appreciated, Hoke said, after about 20 weeks of basic and Infantry training.

"There were some slow times, but there were some times when we had no personal time at all. Everything was constant work and you're lucky if you get four or five hours of sleep," he said.

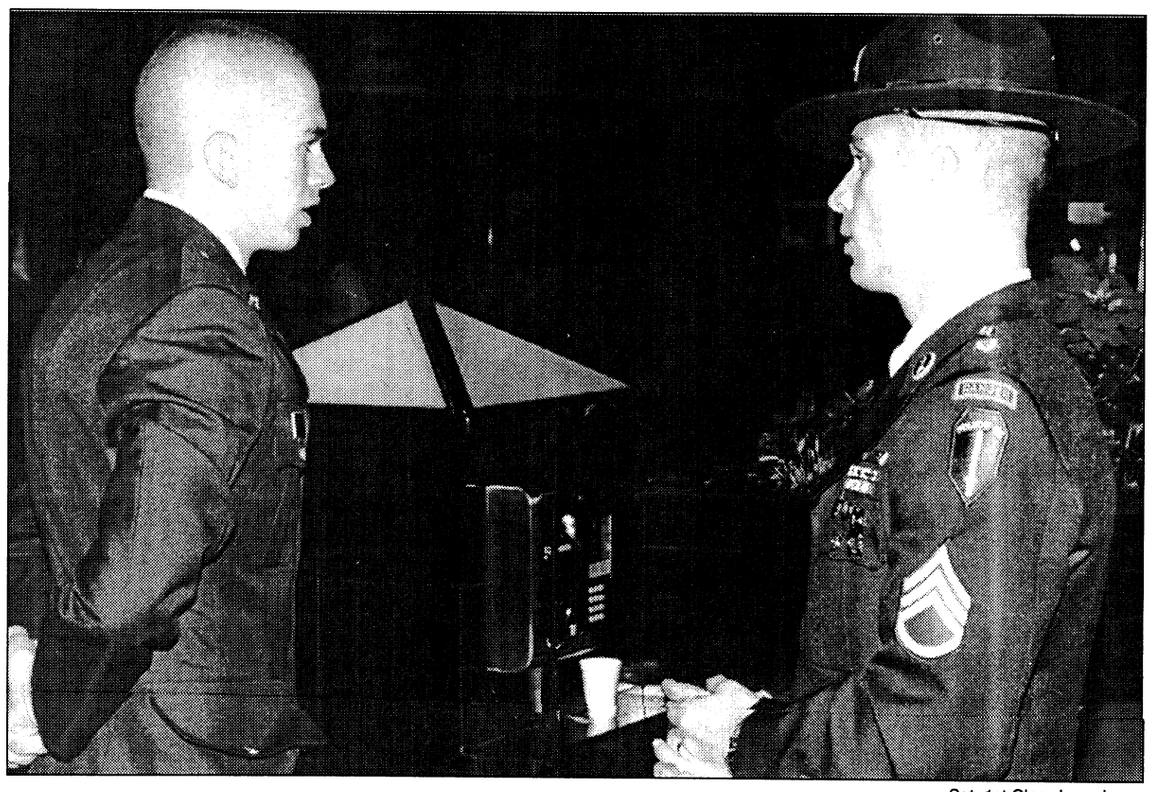
"I realized how there are some things I took for granted. I went to a field training exercise and it rained four days in a row. My tent was soaked. My sleeping bag was soaked. I didn't have any dry clothes. It was cold. Going through that, made me realize how much I took for granted and how lucky I really am."

To get back home, another 200 Soldiers rode chartered buses, some flew from the Columbus Airport, while others were picked up by family members.

Dave Christensen, a training analysis with ITB's Training Management has worked 13 such Exodus missions. Drill sergeant support at the terminal was one of the most important elements in making sure the trainees started their holiday on the right track.

"The trainees identify with drill sergeants and they know if something's wrong, a drill sergeant will help them fix the problem," Christensen said.

Christensen said the Exodus mission has become easier every year, but new problems may surface.



This year, the mid-month pay of several companies of trainees was delayed and several automatic teller machines were not functioning. After Christensen placed a few calls, the trainees were able to fill their wallets for the holidays.

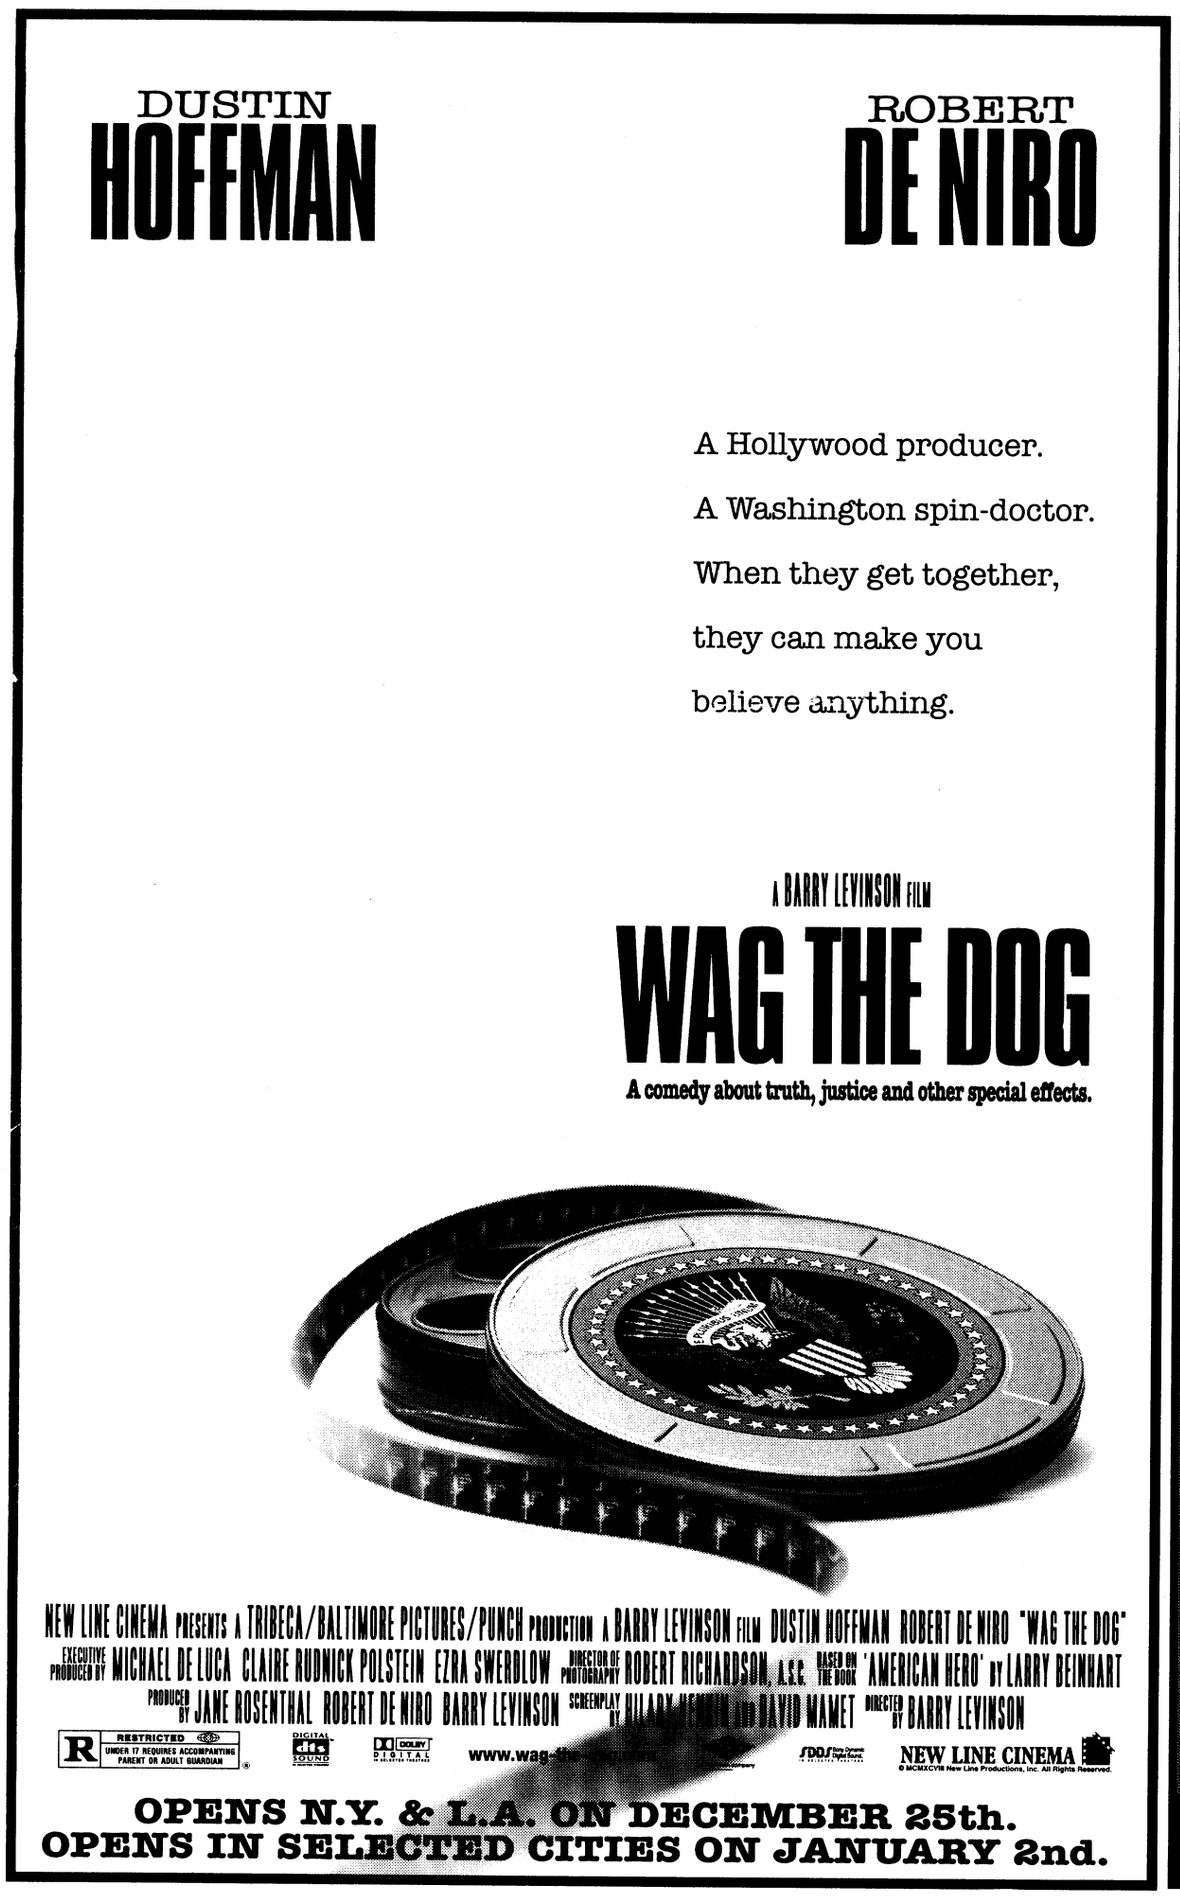
Support from many agencies was necessary to accomplish the Exodus mission, Christensen said. The Directorate of Information Management supplied telephone and fax lines and an e-mail connection to the CP at Atlanta.

The Directorate of Logistics provided the transportation resources. The Directorate of Public Works assisted by providing the support at the local assembly areas for the troops. The Finance Office and the local banking agency were critical in making sure the trainees had money.

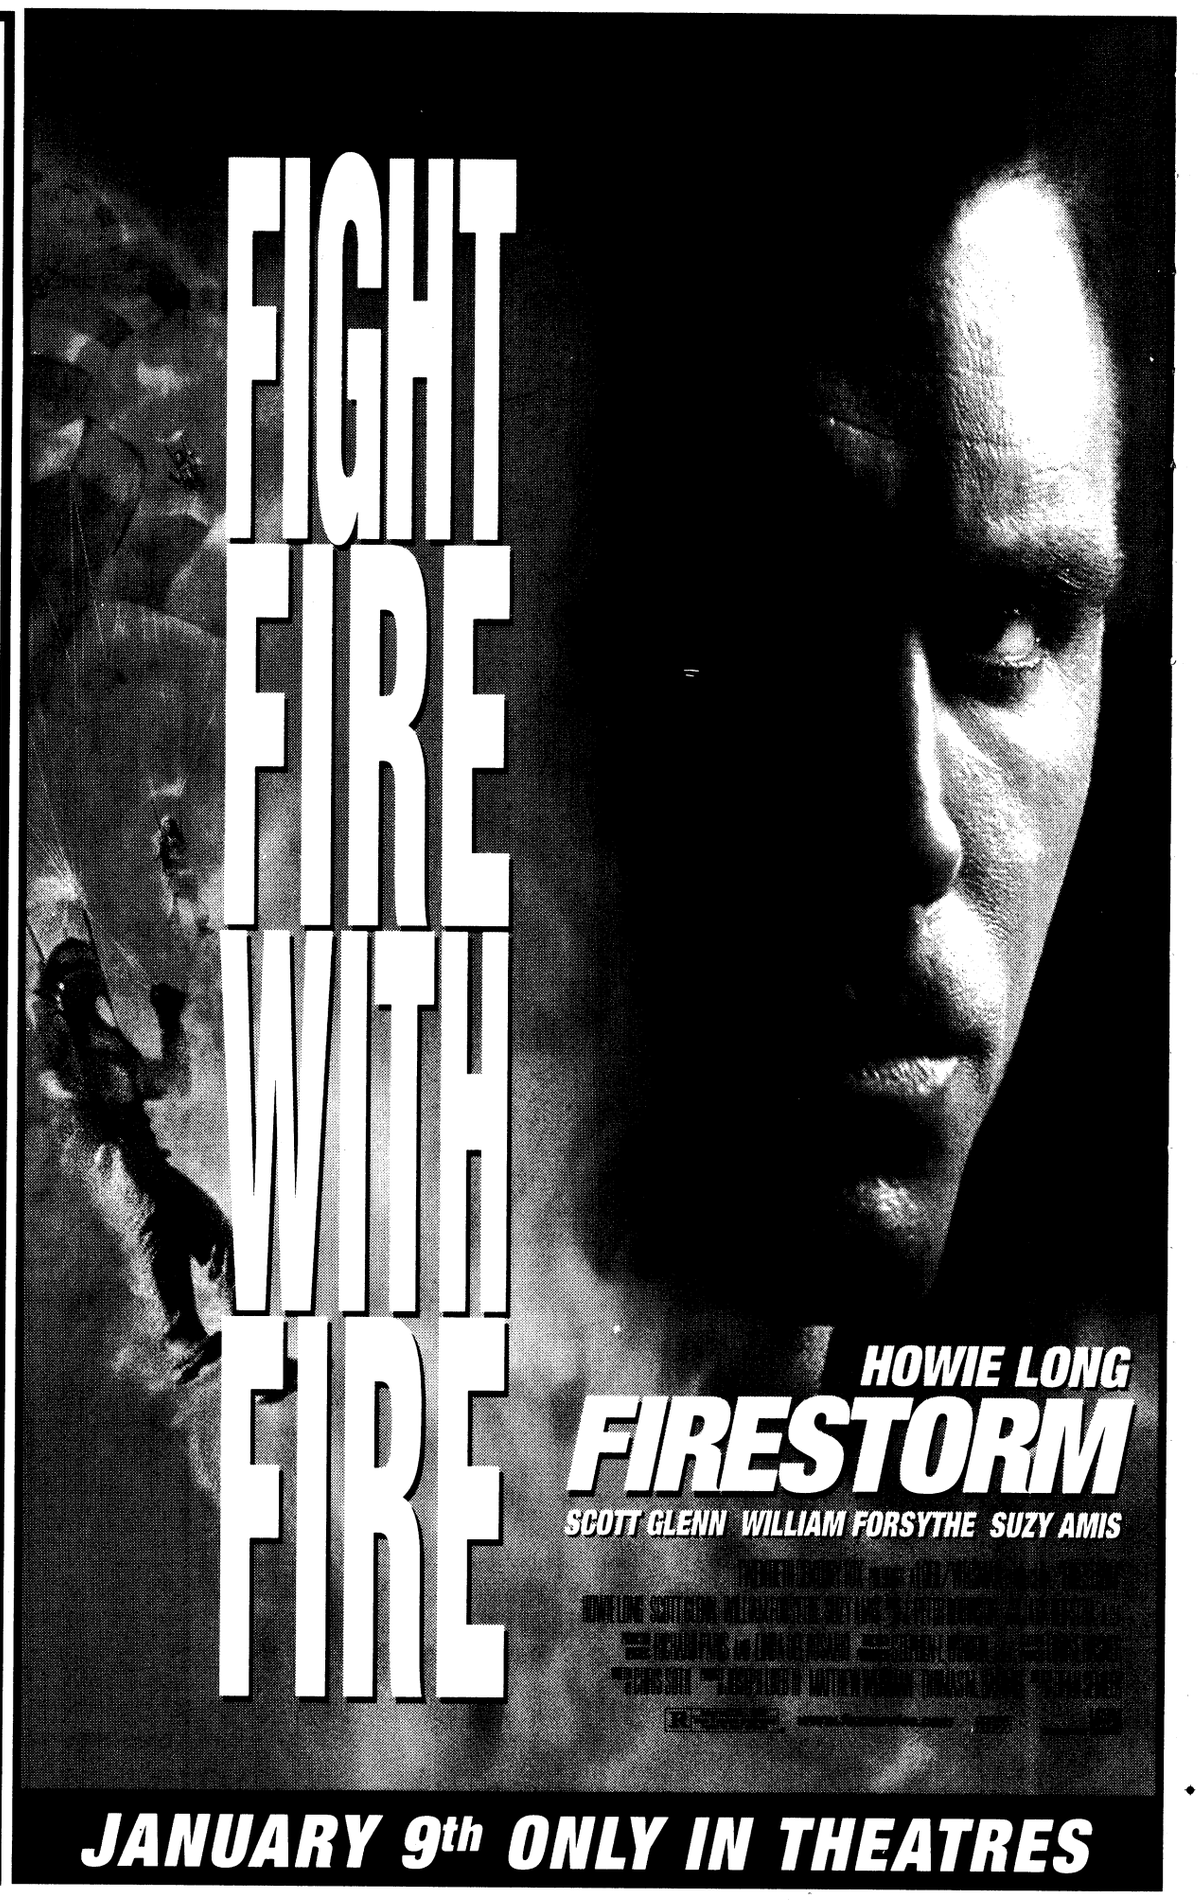
The trainees were only able to take with them a small bag of personal items and their dress uniform. Before releasing their trainees for the holidays, drill sergeants made sure they knew the proper way of wearing the dress uniform, for many, a first time event.

"A lot of these privates haven't been away from home and this may be their first time to travel without their parents," Staff Sgt. Taisi Gerrick said about his trainees on the night of their departure.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane



Pvt. Aidan Lydon listens to Staff Sgt. Robert Olsen, Company D, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment at the Atlanta airport.



Gerrick, a drill sergeant with Company C, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment spent much of his time that night checking how trainees wore their dress uniforms and checking their paperwork.

After several basic training cycles with no breaks between, the two-week Exodus break was also a rest for drill sergeants, Gerrick said. It may be difficult for trainees to get back on the old training schedule, Gerrick said once they return from home.

"We will probably have to be back on total control for a week," Gerrick said. "It will be like 'day one' until our commanding officer says, 'OK, we're back on track again.' The drill sergeant is going to be there when they wake up and when they go to sleep."

Trainees who didn't participate in Exodus remained behind and were available for duty. As a consequence, Operation Holiday provided these trainees with such things as tickets to sporting events and holiday meals with local families.

CRC mission doesn't change in '98, continues deploying Soldiers

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
NCOIC Public Affairs Office

While Soldiers around the world celebrated the new year with family and friends, another long line of troops were on their way to the former Yugoslavia. Dec. 17, President Bill Clinton announced the Bosnia mission would have to be extended to achieve the goal of securing a lasting peace.

The warring is over. What remains behind are bullet-riddled buildings, the future of a war crimes tribunal and the continuous deploying and redeploying of military personnel from the many countries helping to maintain this peace.

Over the Christmas break, it was business as usual at Fort Benning's CONUS Replacement Center, where all United States personnel process for duty overseas and where these same troops will eventually transition through when they return from an average six-month tour.

Active duty, Reserve, National Guard, Department of Defense civilians, personnel of all military branches — a microcosm of government service — helped keep the center active over the holidays. Still, National Guardsmen and Reserve Soldiers accounted for a large number of those deployed, evidence of the strong role these Soldiers play in today's missions.

Soldiers who returned over the holidays included the Massachusetts Army National Guard's Battery E, 101st Field Target Acquisition. Deployed in June 1997, this was the first overseas deployment for the unit whose missions included detecting fire from artillery, rocket and mortars. Their detection equipment track the round back to its source, then digitally relays the information to gun batteries where commanders determine to fire on the source of fire.

"In the beginning of our deployment, we were getting a number of detections," Chief Warrant Officer 3 Michael Sellars said. "No rockets or mortars that we could determine, but a good deal of small arms was being fired."

Away from his Guard duty, Sellars owns his own business and wasn't concerned about returning to unemployment. Some of his fellow Soldiers expressed concerns about having a job when they returned home, he said, but the Employers Support of the Guard and Reserve is one organization that has helped curb these fears of receiving a "pink slip."

"From my perspective, as an employer and a member of the Guard, I think it's a good program," Sellars said. "I think most employers don't really understand the Guard, what the requirements are and just how much of a commitment it really is. I think the program should be expanded."

One successful program, Sellars said, is the "boss lift," where the Soldiers are visited in the field during annual training by the employers, public officials and reporters of their hometown. In this way, the community has a better understanding of the sacrifices made by their military personnel.

Meteorologists from the Arkansas National Guard's Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 197th Meteorologists and 142nd Field Artillery, were among a recent batch of Soldiers deploying to Bosnia. It is expected their services will be in great demand by flight operations and others planning missions.

Sgt. Edward Piscopo of the 197th MET had been a combat engineer and construction equipment operator with the Army before switching to a meteorologist. His two earlier jobs helped him secure a job with a civilian construction company back in Arkansas.

Piscopo said he expected to be laid off in the winter when the construction work lags, but he said his boss would keep his job available to him when he returns.

"A lot of the guys who work for the company are prior service," Piscopo said. "I just told him to not call me in the spring because I wouldn't be there. I'll definitely have a job for me when I get back."

Piscopo said he was looking forward to the deployment, though he would have to put his civilian life on hold.

"This is a great opportunity. I've been looking forward to it since I was notified," the Soldier said. This is his first deployment. "It's not really something that you have a choice in. You have to deal with it— it's a fact. It's not something we can put on the backburner and worry about it later. The family is handling it very well."

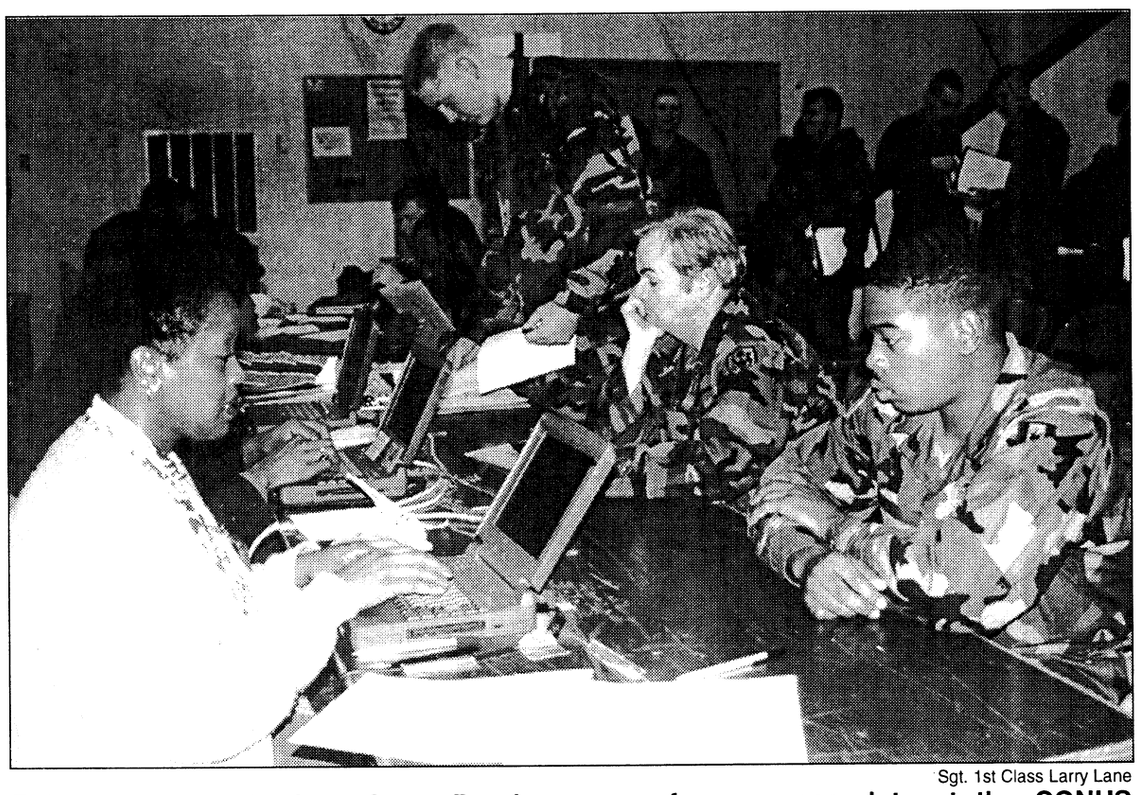
Another meteorologist, Staff Sgt. Jack Barnes of the 142nd FA, deployed to Operation Desert Storm and is able to share his experience with what he called the "pups," those Soldiers deploying for their first time.

"I'm going over with two Desert Storm veterans and five 'pups,' who have never been to anything like this except summer camp," Barnes said. "This all new to them, so our group is pretty close. We just have to watch out for the five new ones."

Barnes is a factory worker with the Campbell Soup Company in Arkansas. Like all Guardsmen, Barnes depends upon an employer who understands and supports his military obligations.

"We went through the same thing during Desert Storm," Barnes said. "I was gone for six months and came back to my same job."

Sergeant Maj. Joe Edwards of the Readiness Group, Headquarters Fifth Army, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, was at the center as the active advisor to the Arkansas Army National Guard. Various readiness groups assist at the CONUS Replacement Center by providing "theater specific training," that is, teaching Soldiers the common tasks all Soldiers need to know while in Bosnia, regardless of specialty.



"Most of them are high priority units and are pretty well prepared for this, once they are recognized as a forward support unit," Edwards said about Reserve and guard units in general.

"We tell them throughout the year, that based on the mission of the reserve components and how important their support is to active duty units because of the drawdown, it is important for them to take their training seriously, because they're going to be called up."

The Arkansas Guard unit, Edwards said, was alerted for deployment about seven months ago and were able to focus on its specific overseas mission during annual training.

"This unit wasn't sure if they were actually going to get to go to Bosnia. It would have been a letdown if they didn't get to go because they trained up for it," Edwards said, commenting on the recent extension of the Bosnia mission.

"A lot of them were enthused when they heard the mission was extended," he said. "They got fired up and they look forward to their mission."

2nd Lt. Will Parker

Lieutenants from Company B, 2nd Bn. (IOBC), 11th Inf. Regt. conduct the Blue Cord Ceremony.

New officers honor Infantry heritage during ceremony

Legacy of blue cord worn by Infantrymen lives on

By 2nd Lt. Will Parker
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regt.

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, recently conducted one of the final operations that the Soldiers of class 7-97 had to accomplish, the time honored Blue Cord Ceremony.

Cords and epaulets have long been a tradition in the U.S. Army. Carried over from European armies, cords were used to identify the different branches within the military. Both George Washington and Lafayette issued orders that their Infantrymen wear cords to distinguish them from other Soldiers.

The color of the Infantry over the next hundred years or so shifted back and forth between white and blue. It wasn't until 1905 that the official color for the Infantry became Infantry blue. In 1951, the cord became the official designation to identify those Soldiers who would be the first called into harms way when their country called. Now the cord is awarded to all Soldiers who are qualified as Infantrymen.

Co. B conducted their ceremony in the Officers' Club Dec. 18 with the command sergeant major, family and friends present. Each lieutenant was presented his blue cord by the senior NCO in his platoon. This is done by the NCOs to symbolize the lieutenants are accepted by the Soldiers they will lead based on the accomplishments they have made.

For many Soldiers, this is a goal they have worked very hard to attain and represents months of hard work to prepare themselves to lead troops. However this is not the end of their preparation to become platoon leaders.

Many of the lieutenants will be attending ranger, bradley, airborne and mortar courses depending on the unit to which they are assigned. But the blue cord ceremony represents the first step for these officers to be all that they can be.

Second Lt. Kenneth Reed said, "It's hard to believe that this day is already here. The basic course seemed to fly by. You sometimes wonder if your really ready."

After the ceremony, Co. B had a luncheon in the officers' club to celebrate their accomplishments.

Editor's note: Class 7-97 graduated Dec. 19.

ACAP's mission reaffirmed for 1998

Army Career and Alumni Program

Fort Benning's Adjutant General (AG) has overall responsibility for execution of Army Career and Alumni Program. The AG provides preseparation and transition services for Soldiers and families through the Transition Services Manager (TSM), the ACAP Center, and supported by many other service providers.

According to Harold Ericksen, ACAP Center manager, the overall purpose of ACAP is to make sure Soldiers receive information, counseling, and advice regarding transition benefits, entitlements, and services to assist adjustment to civilian life.

ACAP was established by the Department of the Army to support public law and Department of Defense mandates.

All Soldiers will be afforded the opportunity to receive preseparation counseling to fully understand the benefits and enticements they will or will not receive when they transition from the Army. Additionally, Soldiers should receive this counseling at least 90 days prior to separation. A preseparation Counseling Checklist, DD Form 2648 will be used to document compliance and must be completed before final clearing. It is recommended the ACAP process begin 180 days prior to separation to allow greater scheduling flexibility around Army mission requirements.

The ACAP process begins with preseparation briefings, discussions, and workshops designed to jump start Soldiers, spouses, and civil service workers nearing separation. This three-day process provides the tools needed to successfully leave the Army and find employment in the private sector. During the three-day preseparation program, individual counseling sessions in the ACAP Center will be assigned.

"As scheduled, ACAP counselors meet with Soldiers and spouses and provide individualized transition assistance and referrals. Additionally, job search assistance, counseling, computer systems and services are also available in the ACAP Center.

For ACAP information, please call or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza, 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Operation Green to Gold seeks enlisted Soldiers

By Jerry Rogers
U.S. Army Cadet Command

Every year hundreds of enlisted soldiers exercise a "leap of faith" by turning in their chevrons to pursue a long-term "golden" opportunity.

Risky proposition? Just ask the more than 340 active duty Soldiers, who, in fiscal year 1997, strongly believed they had the "right stuff" to one day earn lieutenant's bars through the ROTC's Green to Gold Scholarship Program.

Each year, the U.S. Army actively recruits thousands of highly qualified men and women to join the leadership ranks of the Total Army, through its Reserve Officers' Training Corps Program. In addition to offering scholarships to some of the country's "best and brightest" high school graduates, Army ROTC officers a way for enlisted soldiers to attend college and receive commissions.

Green to Gold offers qualified enlisted Soldiers with officer potential, two-, three-, or four-year ROTC scholarships to attend college. The benefits include money for college, the opportunity to earn a baccalaureate degree as well as commission as a second lieutenant, and increased leadership opportunities. And, Soldiers entering college to attend ROTC get to keep their Montgomery GI Bill or Army College Fund benefits earned at time of selection.

Enlisted Soldiers who qualify can voluntarily request discharge from active duty under Army Regulation 635-200, Chapter 16-2. Soldiers will first contract into the Army ROTC program, then enroll in college as a full time student. After completing all academic requirements, soldiers receive their commission as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army.

In addition to pursuing their undergraduate degree, the Department of the Army has approved a three-year pilot program allowing Soldiers to earn a graduate degree. The graduate degree program cannot exceed two years. Soldiers can apply during the normal Green to Gold scholarship window, Dec. 1 through March 15, and must use the two-year scholarship application.

In August, Maj. Gen. Stewart W. Wallace, commanding general of U.S. Army Cadet Command, added another enhancement to the Green to Gold program with the "Commander's Hip Pocket Scholarship."

The initiative provides Army corps and division commanders with "dedicated" two-year scholarships to offer to the great Soldiers of their commands. The U.S. Army Cadet Command's Scholarship Division handles all administrative details and works with each recommended Soldier.

Green to Gold 's two-, three-, and four-year scholarships, as well as the two-year nonscholarship option allows participants to major in all academic disciplines, except for theology. Scholarship applications are available at installation Army Education Centers or at ROTC counterpart battalions supporting each post.

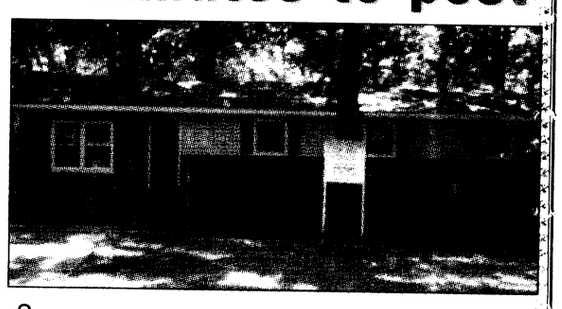
The ROTC counterpart battalion plays a key role in assisting an applicant and determining one's eligibility.

Application deadline for nonscholarship enrollment in ROTC is the first day of the fall semester.

Soldiers who are considering the nonscholarship option must have enough credits to enter college as an academic junior. This must be verified by letters of acceptance from the University Admissions Office and the Professor of Military Science at the university's ROTC department.

Other eligibility requirements are spelled out in Army Regulation 635-200, Chapter 16-2 (Enlisted Ranks Personnel Update), Army Regulation 145-1 (SROTC Program: Organization, Administration, and Training), and Cadet Command Pamphlet 145-4 (Gold Standards-PMS Guide). Finally, Army transition points must not conditionally discharge soldiers before they meet all enrollment eligibility requirements.

Have the "right stuff" to become the future leadership of America's oldest military profession? Then talk to a Army career counselor, visit the installation education center or ROTC counterpart battalion, call the Army ROTC toll-free number: 1-800-USAROTC, or log onto the ROTC web site at: http://www-tradoc.army.mil/rotc/index.html., and get all the facts.



And remember: Army ROTC is the "Smartest College Course You Can Take."

For more information, call Capt. Sheila Denham of the Columbus College ROTC Department at 568-2058.

Youth Services offers variety of activities

Terrika Barnes, left, a fifth-grader, Treskall Monk, middle, a fifth-grader and Ross Brown, right, a fourth-grader do their homework after school in the snack bar at Youth Services. Youth Services offers a variety of programs for children of all ages.

Whether you're just arriving on post or have been here for years, parents of children of all ages should be aware of a program called Youth Services. Although created for children six and up, there are many programs for younger children. Youth Services offers a variety of programs for all children.

For younger children, Youth Services offers programs including ballet and piano.

Teen-agers have recently become a larger part of Youth Services.

On the first and third Friday of each month, there is a dance for children in grades one through five. On the second Friday, there is a dance for children in grades six through eight and the centers also offer teen pool tournaments and teen spades tournaments.

Once a month, Youth Services holds a teen counsel and the teenagers take trips to Destin and Uchee Creek during the year.

Youth Services is always looking for new project ideas and volunteers, said Linda Lane, sports director of Youth Services. Volunteers need not be a parent, but each volunteer will have a background check done. After that is done, when volunteers are needed for field trips or sports programs, Youth Services will call the volunteer.

"We have about 2,400 registered kids, which is approximately 75 percent of the children on Fort Benning. The sports program depends on volunteers," Lane said.

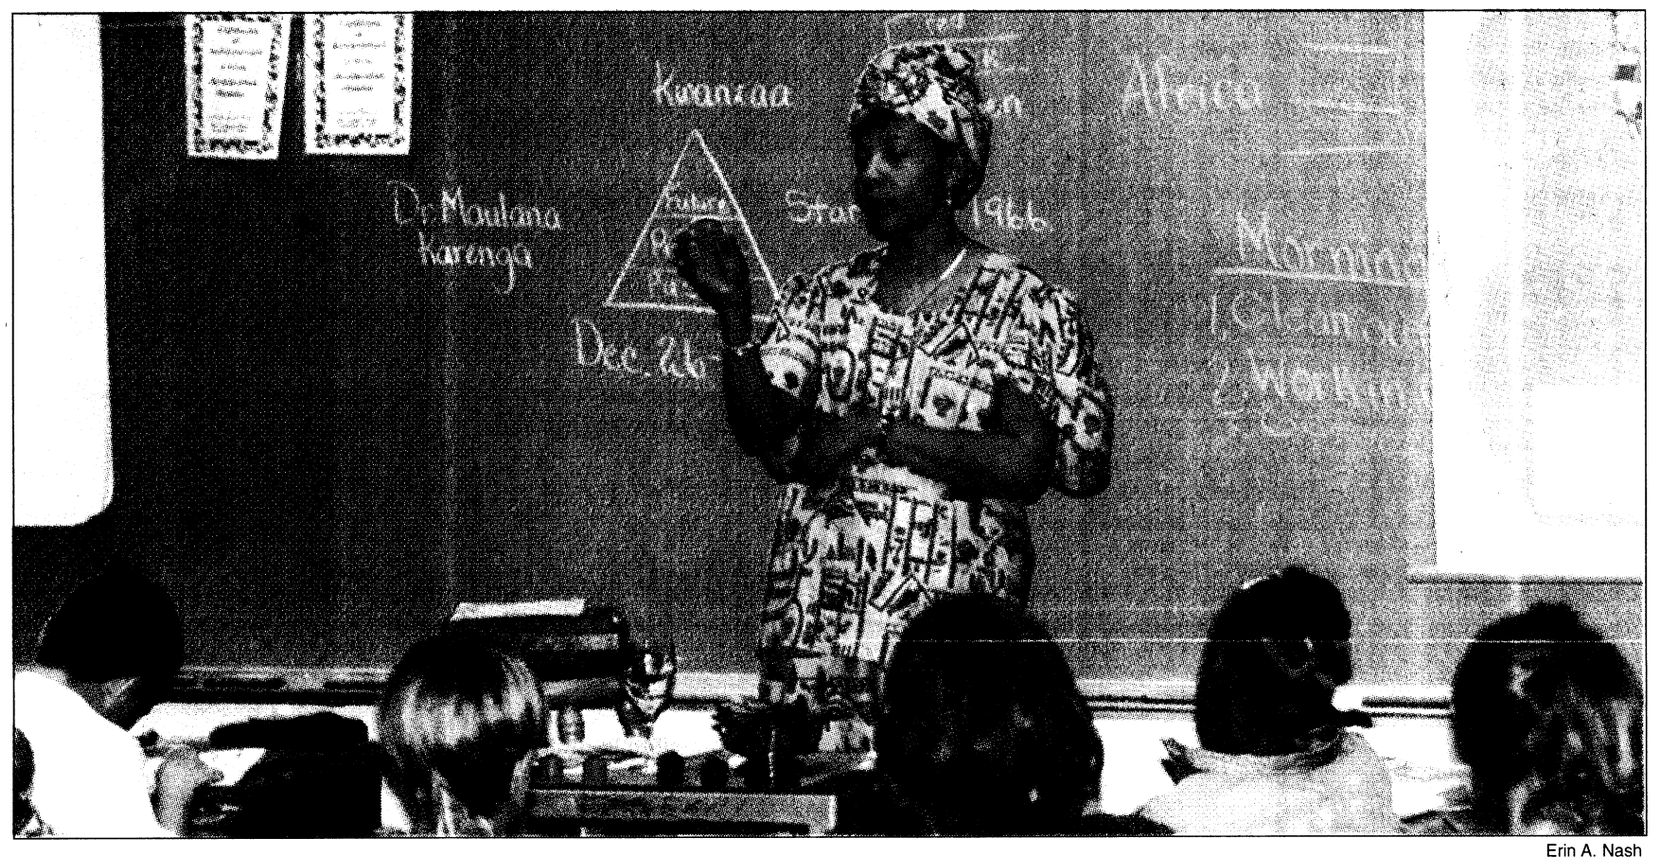
Capt. David P. Anders, Company D, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, is a volunteer at Youth Services.

"I coach my son at soccer. It's a great program. It's important for kids to learn sports and get involved," "Anders said. "Not only do they have sports, but dance classes and more — it really runs the gamut."

There are also two Outreach Centers located in Bouton Heights and McGraw Manor. The Bouton Heights and Davis Hill Outreach Center is located in Building 9608. For more information, call 544-1472. McGraw Manor Outreach is located in Building 11303. For more information, call 544-2673. Both are open from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturdays.

Programs scheduled for January include Learn to Play Dominoes and a preteen 8-ball pool tournament at the Main Center. Scheduled for McGraw Outreach is a connect-four contest and a bumper pool game. Bouton Heights and Davis Hill Outreach have a preteen UNO game and bingo for all ages scheduled.

Ross Brown, a fourth-grader, said he likes going to Youth Services.



"I like coming here because my mom won't have to worry about me staying at home by myself," Brown said. "I like playing pool and winning the 8-ball tournament," Brown said

Youth Services offers many year round sports, including two seasons of soccer, football, basketball and baseball. For children of privates to sergeants, registration fees are $12 for the first child, $20 for two children and $26 for three or more children. For staff sergeants and above, it's $15 for the first child, $25 for two children, and $30 for three or more children.

There is a $20 yearly fee for families, which is among the lowest prices of TRADOC installations, said Lane.

For parents interested in signing their children up, all they need to do is visit the Youth Services Center located in Building 1056 on McIver St., located adjacent to the National Infantry Museum. Parents will need their children's shot records and will be asked to fill out a registration card and pay the $20 yearly fee per family.

For more information on programs and hours of operation, call Youth Services 545-3070 or 545-7945.

Girl Scout Cookies Fund The Future!

Concharty Council of Girl Scouts

Organization to kick off annual fund raiser

Concharty Council of Girl Scouts

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts starts taking pre-orders today. Girls between the ages of six years old and 17 will take pre-orders for the cookies through the end of January. The Scouts will deliver the cookies and sell them through the month of February.

Since 1934, Girl Scouts have sold commercially baked Girl Scout Cookies in order to raise funds for programs and activities.

"Today, Girl Scouts from all over the world unite each year during the annual Cookie Sale to develop life skills such as goal-setting, time and money management, teamwork, service and responsibility," said Renee Noble Nolan, Concharty Council of Girl Scouts director of communications.

"In addition to learning these skills, proceeds from the annual Cookie Sale remain with the Concharty Council and impact the lives of the girls serviced by the Council."

Nolan said the proceeds are used to develop resources and training for its adult volunteers, to maintain Camp Robert Lewis and Camp Concharty, to provide camp scholarships to girls in need, as well as subsidizing the cost of many program and activities.

"So much of Girl Scouts depends on the success of the annual Cookie Sale," Nolan said. "It is the largest source of revenue for the Council. Coupled with generous individual and organizational donations, the Cookie Sale provides a financial means in which the Council can continue to offer quality programs and activities for thousands of girls within Concharty."

This week's article provides schedule changes for the Federal Holiday in remembrance of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and information on flourescent tube management.

MLK Day changes trash collection schedule

There will be no yard waste picked up Jan. 19. The next scheduled yard waste pickup will be Jan. 26.

There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups Jan. 19. The areas normally scheduled for pick-up on Monday are Port, Kawamura, Fernandez Streets and Indianhead Terrace. These areas will be picked up Jan. 20. Refuse and recycle collection in family housing for Jan. 20 through Jan. 23 will be picked up as normally scheduled. For more information, call Wilber Busby at 545-1568.

MLK schedule for the Self Help store

In observance of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Day, the Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed Jan. 17 and Jan. 19. The center will reopen for business Jan. 20 at 8:20 a.m. For more information, call Doc Shirley at 545-1121.

Fluorescent tube lighting

There has been growing concern over the proper method to dispose of fluorescent tubes. Most fluorescent tubes on the market contain mercury, a substance that causes damage to the nervous system as well as birth defects. For this reason, care must be taken in the handling and disposal of these bulbs.

Breaking fluorescent tubes can be quite dangerous as it releases mercury in the air and poses an environmental and health hazard. If you accidentally break a fluorescent tube, ventilate the room immediately by opening a window and turning on a fan. Leave the room until all vapors have been exhausted outside. Wearing gloves, carefully sweep up broken glass and place it in a plastic bag for disposal. Any food exposed to the vapors should be thrown away. Wash hands thoroughly with soap and water after cleaning up the glass.

Fluorescent tubes used in the home may be placed on the curb for disposal in the landfill. If possible, tubes should be carefully packaged in the original packing containers to avoid breakage. Tubes should not be placed outside until just before pickup so that children will not be tempted to play with them.

More stringent rules apply to tubes generated at the work place. At work, fluorescent tubes must be managed as a hazardous waste. Tubes used at the work-site cannot be placed in dumpsters. The local Directorate of Resource Management Office (DRMO) sends Fort Benning's fluorescent tubes to an off-post recycler where the mercury and other chemicals are reclaimed. Fluorescent tubes should be packaged in their original containers, carefully labeled with a yellow hazardous waste label and taken to the DRMO through normal turn-in procedures. All rules pertaining to hazardous waste management apply to waste fluorescent tubes. Workers who place fluorescent tubes in dumpsters are violating the law and could be subject to criminal prosecution.

Recently, Phillips Lighting began manufacturing tubes with a low-mercury content that are not hazardous waste when they go bad. These tubes have a green cap on the end of them, making them easy to identify. DPW Self Help has begun stocking these tubes for issue on-post. The ability to dispose of these "green" tubes in the normal trash and the added safety of the lower mercury content make them an attractive replacement to other fluorescent tubes.

More information on fluorescent tube management can be obtained from the Environmental Management Division of DPW. For more information, call Deborah Gamble or Michael Nuckols at 545-4766.

Accountants clarify misconceptions of Social Security retirement benefits

Georgia Society of CPAs

When it comes to Social Security benefits, people have a lot of misconceptions about what to expect.

Some people are convinced they'll never see a Social Security check. Others mistakenly believe they can live entirely on their Social Security checks alone during their retirement years.

The Georgia Society of CPAs offers the following overview to clarify how Social Security can, and can't, help you during your retirement years.

You can count on getting an estimate of your benefits from the Social Security Administration (SSA). To learn more about your benefits visit the local SSA office or call (800) 772-1213 and ask for Form 7004-SM, Personal Earnings and Benefit Estimate Statement. You also can download Form 7004 from the SSA's Internet site. In three to four weeks, you'll receive a statement that shows your Social Security earnings history and how much taxes you have paid into the program. It also estimates your future benefits (in today's dollars) and explains how to qualify for benefits. Check your benefit statement carefully to be sure it is correct.

You can't count on retiring with full benefits at age 65. Today. the normal retirement age is 65, but that is gradually changing. If you were born between 1943 and 1954, the retirement age for receiving full Social Security benefits will be 66. Thereafter, the retirement age for receiving full benefits will continue to be raised in two-month increments so that if you were born in 1960 or later you won't qualify for full benefits until you reach age 67.

You can count on receiving benefits even if you're working. According to the SSA, there's no law against working after you refix, but there are limits on what you can earn without affecting your monthly benefits. Generally, the exempt amount increases each year with increases in the national average wage index.

In determining whether your income is within the limit, count only compensation and net income from self-employment. Other income, such as that from interest, dividends, capital gains, gifts or inheritances does nor affect your monthly benefit. If you are younger than age 65, you can earn $53.640 in 1997. Earn more than $8,640 this year, and your benefit check will be reduced by 51 for every $2 over the limit.

If you are between the ages of 65 and 69 in 1997, you can earn up to $13,500 this year and still receive your entire benefit check. However. if you earn more than this sum. your benefit check will be reduced by 51 for every $3 over the limit. Once you reach age 70, you can earn an unlimited amount and still receive the full amount of Social Security benefits to which you are entitled.

If you plan to work, you will need to provide the SSA with an estimate of your future earnings. Your benefits are based on this estimate, so it's important to be as accurate as possible. At the end of each year, you file a report of your actual earnings. The IRS will send you a check to make up the difference if your estimate was too high. If your estimate was too low, the overpayment will be withheld from your checks during the following year.

You can count on receiving more if you delay receiving benefits. The later you start collecting, the larger your payments. If you continue working past age 65, you can earn delayed-retirement credits which, based on your age, increase your benefits by a certain percentage for each year you delay benefits up to age 70. This delay means that each Social Security check you collect when you retire will be larger than it would have been if you started taking benefits at your normal retirement age. Once you turn age 70 the amount you're eligible for won't increase any further.

If you return to work after you start receiving benefits, your additional earnings could result in a high benefit. The SSA automatically recomputes the benefit amount as additional earnings are credited to your earning record. You can t count on getting Social Security benefits automatically. Don't expect your benefits to appear automatically in your mailbox the day you're eligible to receive them.

You'll have to ask the SSA to start paying them and you'll need to provide evidence that you qualify. To allow time for the paperwork, the SSA suggests you apply for benefits a few months before you are scheduled to begin receiving them.

You can count on cost of living increases. Unlike most pension plans, Social Security benefits automatically increase as the cost of living goes up. Each year, benefits rise by the same percentage as the advance in the Consumer Price Index. You can't count on your benefits being totally tax free. For the majority of beneficiaries, Social Security benefits are totally tax free. But retirees with higher incomes may find themselves taxed on 50 percent of their Social Security benefits — or 85 percent for the most affluent. You may want to consult a CPA if you need help determining what portion of your Social Security benefits are taxable.

The Last Hundred Yards
The NCO's Contribution to Warfare

Bruce Gudmundsson, coauthor of On Infantry, calls this "the best book on ground tactics ... in the last 50 years." Infantry leaders, learn how to: (1) add surprise to standard U.S. tactics, (2) use maneuver warfare at the small-unit level, and (3) enjoy training to the actual threat. There will be no frontlines in the next war, so support personnel will need this one too. It contains the collective common sense of 1200 infantry NCO's, reads like an action novel, and has 250 illustrations. Save lives, send $22.75 to Posterity Press, P.O. Box 5360, Emerald Isle, NC 28594.

Peace: An essential element can be found throughout many aspects of life

By Chaplain (Capt.) Xuan N. Tran
1st Battalion, 10th F.A. Regiment

Peace is an essential element not only individually but also collectively.

reflections

We all need to have peace within our family, marriage, work place, community or church. We all have different opinions, backgrounds and tastes about things, which concern our daily lives.

It is hard to have peace, unity and a same mind in all things such as working together in a unit, a work place or living together as husband and wife. As Christians, we should learn to live peacefully with each other.

There are three lessons that we can learn from in the Book of Philippians Chapter 4. They are:

•Peace and unity between the believers,

•Peace with God, and •Peace in all circumstances.

In spite of disagreements, and disunity in the Philippian Church, Paul encouraged the believers to resolve their differences and to end their conflict over personal disagreements. Because of this, Paul exhorted the believers to "stand fast in the Lord … to be of the same mind."

When we are unified in love, Christ's strength is most abundant. Keep before you the ideals of teamwork, consideration of others and unselfish service.

It is possible to believe in Christ, work hard for his kingdom and have broken relationships with others who are committed to the same cause. Do you need to be reconciled to someone today? Philippians 4:4-5 "Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice. Let your moderation be known to all men. The Lord is at hand."

We all have worries on the job, in our home or about finances. But Paul's advice is to turn our worries into prayers. Do you want to have less worry? Then you should pray more. The way to be anxious about nothing is to be prayerful about everything. Put your prayers into God's hands and go off and leave them there. Do not worry about them.

Whenever you start to worry, stop and pray. If you do this, then the peace of God will stand guard over your heart and mind. God's peace is different from the world's peace. True peace is not found in positive thinking, in absence of conflict, or in good feeling. It comes from knowing that God is in control.

Paul wrote this letter to the Philippian believers when he was in a Roman prison. Paul's attitude teaches us an important lesson, that our inner attitudes do not have to reflect our outward circumstances. Paul was full of joy because he knew that no matter what happened to him, God was with him.

Ultimate joy comes from Jesus Christ dwelling within us. He is near and at his second coming we will fully realize this ultimate joy. Whatever the circumstances, Paul learned to be content. He faced excruciating poverty, abundant wealth and everything in between. Paul knew how to be content whether he had plenty or whether he was in need.

Do you have great needs, or are you discontented because you don't have what you want? God will not give what you want, but will always supply all your needs. Philippians 4:19 says, "And my God shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Often the desire for more possessions is really a longing to fill an empty place in a personal life. How can you find true contentment and peace? The answer is Jesus Christ. He alone can offer true peace and joy to all of us.

Discovery Channel to feature USAMU — The Discovery Channel will air a story about the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit on the channel's Discover Magazine Wednesday at 9 p.m., Thursday at 1 a.m. and Jan. 17 at 5 p.m.

The show, called The Science of Guns, will focus on the unit's Action Shooting Team, the Custom Firearms Shop, Shotgun Team Coach Burl Branham, as well as Fort Benning's Sniper School.

Fitness Center closes basket-ball floor — The Audie Murphy Fitness Center's basketball will be closed until Thursday for renovation; however, the center remains open for other activities.

For more information, call Fred Woods at 545-1940 or 545-4592.

YS offers programs — Youth Services offers instruction in taekwondo, tumbling, piano and dance for children ages 6 to 15.

Class fees range from $20 to $25 per month.

Registration is open to youth family members of active duty and retired military personnel and Department of Defense employees.

All children who participate must possess a YS card, which costs $20 per year, per family and can be purchased at the YS administration office and the Main Post Youth Center, as well as all community outreach centers.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Rifle match set — Fort Benning's Rifle and Pistol Club will conduct a tactical rifle match from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday on English Range.

Preregistration fee for the pistol match is $15 and $20 the day of match.

This event is designed for beginners and seasoned shooters.

There are nine categories of competition in the match and all participants will receive a free logo t-shirt.

For more information, call Jim Graham at 689 3371.

1998 WINTER OLYMPICS

Soldiers participate in trials

Armed Forces Information Services

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Ten soldiers are among Olympic hopefuls for the XVIII Winter Olympic Games scheduled for Feb. 7-22 in Nagano, Japan.

Four men, currently members of the U.S. Bobsled National Team vied for berths on the U.S. Olympic team in the 2-and 4-man bobsled events at the Olympic trials in Park City, Utah, Dec.29-30 and Jan. 4-5.

They pushed, drove and rode fiberglass sleds weighing as much as 1,300 pounds down an icecovered, downhill curved track at speeds up to 90 miles per hour. Inside a two-man bobsled, the driver sits in the front seat and steers. The brakeman rides in the back seat and stops the sled with a brake — a large claw that digs into the ice.

Races start with the athletes pushing the sled; the faster the start, the faster the finish. Side-push sledders ride in the middle of four-man bobsleds. Maneuvering the sled in tums where the walls are 12 feet high is tricky, as the driver can see into the tum, but not out of it.

"Danger is imminent at every curve. The thrill is surviving the course and getting to the bottom," said Tuffield LaTour, who drove his two-man bobsled to victory at the U.S. National Championship.

At six feet, one inch and 220 pounds, side pusher Garrett Hines is strong and fast having run track at Southern Illinois University. Hines and civilian teammates Brian Shimer, Randy Jones and Chip Minton made U.S. Bobsled history when they set a course speed record enroute to a World Cup win Nov. 30 in Winterberg, Germany.

A medical specialist in the Vermont National Guard, Hines finished third in the U.S. National Push Championships held in August at Lake Placid, N.Y.

Biathlon might not be as dangerous a sport, but it is no less stressful.

A combination of cross country skiing and marksmanship with a rifle, biathlon events include three timed competitions for men and women: a distance event, a sprint and a relay in which skiers shoot in prone or standing positions at targets 50 meters away. A missed target means punishing penalty laps on the cross-country course. The Olympic trials were scheduled for Dec. 26 to Jan. 4 at Camp Ripley, Minn.

Biathlete Spc. Ntala Skinner was the first military athlete to qualify for the 1998 U.S. Olympic team. In 1997, she finished 12th in the 15km individual event in a field of international competitors at Antholz, Italy.

Skinner took first in the 7.5km sprint and the 15km individual at the World Team Trials and the National Championships, both in Lake Placid, N.Y.

Raised on her father's wilderness camp in Pinedale, Wyo. Skinner moved with her family to Idaho. Her name (pronounced "en-tall-ah") is African.

"My father was in the Peace Corps in Cameroon," she explained. "Ntala is a popular African lady's name meaning 'of the village.'"

In 1993, she joined the Idaho National Guard where she heard about the World Class Athlete Program. An outstanding soldier, Skinner has earned two Army Commendation Medals.

It's not Skinner's first time at the Olympics. She was a driving force on the 1994 Olympic team in Lillehammer, Norway, acting as team captain.

"Biathlon offers an athlete the unique opportunity to make a link between mind and body, a concept not found in any other sport. That's why I love biathlon," said Skinner.

The soldiers are members of the Army's World Class Athlete Program.

Biathlon and Bobsled World Class Athletes at the Olympic Trials were:

Marcus Walton, a local 12-year-old child, smiles as he displays his new bicycle. The bicycle was donated during the Christmas holiday by B Shift at Fire Station 33 and the Directorate of Public Safety. Each year, these firefighters rescue bicycles from the trash, restore them and donate them to area children. This program is also supplemented with bicycles from Wal-Mart. The safety conscious firefighters also provided helmets to the riders.

Post defends 'best' title, gets evaluated

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

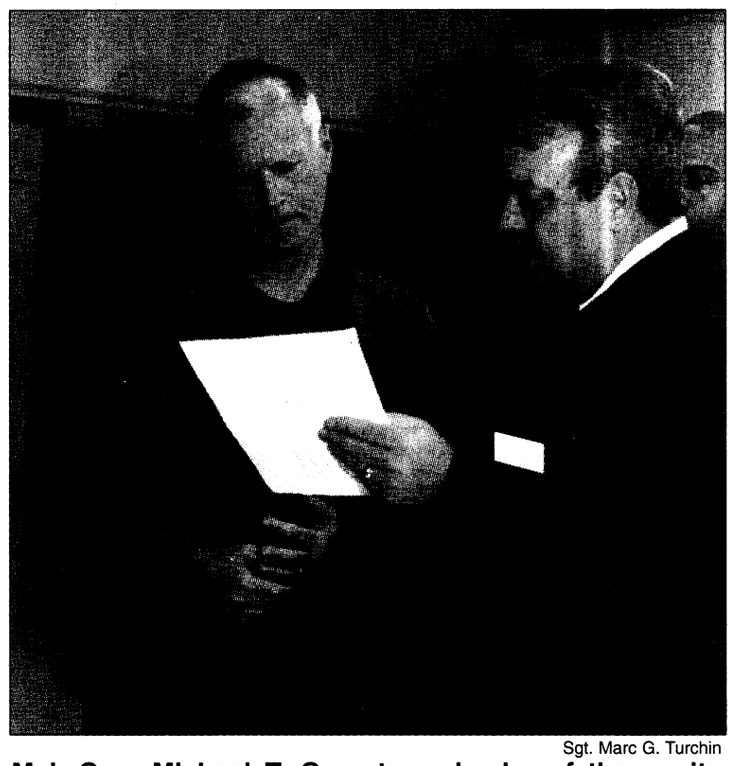
The title defense has begun. The season began months ago. The opposition is ready to take Fort Benning's title and call it it's own. For the past five years other Army installations were distant seconds — none have come close to knocking Fort Benning from the top of the pack as the Best Army Installation in continental United States. Fort Benning would like to keep it that way for at least another year and the time has come to prove it.

The Army Communities of Excellence evaluation team arrived Sunday to take a peek at some of what Fort Benning is all about.

The six-day inspection had evaluators asking questions, listening as Soldiers and civilians described their work processes and attending ceremonies. Those ceremonies will include today's Two-Star Excellence Breakfast and Command Retreat Ceremony.

"There was a very extensive selection process that was gone through to select installations that would receive site visits," said team leader Maj. Gen. Michael T. Gaw, 143rd Transportation Command, Orlando, Fla.

The seven-member team is made up of Soldiers and civilians from different units across the Army.



Joining Gaw as a team member from Orlando is Maj. Larry J. Smith. Other members included Donna M. Decker, Department of the Army civilian, 43rd Adjutant General, Battalion, Fort Leonard Wood, Miss; Dr. C. Ray Eary, Systems Integration Specialist, Garrison Commander's Office, III Corps and Fort Hood, Texas; 1st Lt. Jennifer L. Newlon, 409th Base Support Battalion, Germany; Maj. Eric E. Keyes, Headquarters, State Area Readiness Command, Wyo. and Kristie Thomas, Headquarters USAREUR.

Some of the places team members visited included Soldiers' Plaza, the Department of Defense schools, The Dismounted Battle Space Battle Lab and the CONUS Replacement Center.

Midway through the evaluation, Gaw said things were going well.

"You can't help but be impressed when you come to Fort Benning," he said. "Fort Benning

PX to implement visitor policy

New policy will limit access to Main, Mini Mall Post exchanges

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Beginning Feb. 1 all ID card holders with post exchange privileges will be allowed to sign in only two family members. Friends of authorized personnel will not be allowed into these facilities.

This new policy stems from the high number of shoplifters caught at both the Main Mall Post Exchange and the Mini Mall Post Exchange.

Between April 1 1996 and April 1 1997, 252 cases of shoplifting occurred at the Main Mall Post Exchange. From April 2, 1997 to Dec. 1 there were 242 cases at the same facility.

"The frequency of shoplifting at the exchanges on post is too high," said Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, Fort Benning's garrison sergeant major. "Something needed to be done to prevent shoplifting on post."

Officials from the post's Garrison Commander's Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, the Directorate of Community Activities and the Directorate of Public Safety put together a process action team last April to come up with ideas and actions to prevent shoplifting from occurring.

As of December, the team implemented more security measures at all post exchanges on post. This includes more store detectives at the Main and Mini Malls Post Exchanges and more security cameras in selected areas in all exchanges.

The team found that in 20 percent of the shoplifting cases, the people caught were not authorized to be in the exchange at all. Therefore, the team determined making sponsors responsible for guests will significantly reduce the opportunities for theft, Van Allen said.

Sponsors will now be responsible and accountable for their guests.

If family members shoplift, the sponsor could face punishment, administrative action and loss of exchange privileges.

"These steps are being taken in hope of preventing shoplifting," Van Allen said. "This policy brings us online with most other installations. When you get right down to it, shoplifting affects everyone."

Van Allen said shoplifters increase prices and cost the exchanges a "substantial amount of money each year." He said that money lost affects the Morale Welfare and Recreation (MWR) fund which receives a percentage of the exchanges profits each year.

"That makes it a quality of life issue," he said. "I try to shop at the exchanges as frequently as possible. The more money spent there, the more money goes back into the MWR fund."

The visitation policy goes into effect Feb. 1.

Post tax offices to open

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Tax time is right around the corner, and this year the Legal Assistance Office is making it even easier for Soldiers and their families.

Previously, there were more than 20 unit tax advisors who worked for one week in Infantry Hall and then within their unit. This year, there will be 20 full time unit tax advisors available. The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) trains the advisors for 40 hours. There will also be 10 volunteers and four temporary helpers.

Capt. David Barrett, Installation Tax Officer, projects a more efficient tax office this year.

"The quality of service will be better and quicker. We have more computers online," said Barrett.

Soldiers are offered free tax help, state and federal tax forms and electronic filing, which guarantees tax refunds in an account in two weeks, although most have been approximately eight days, said Barrett.

Barrett also stresses the quality of the tax office over services offered in Columbus.

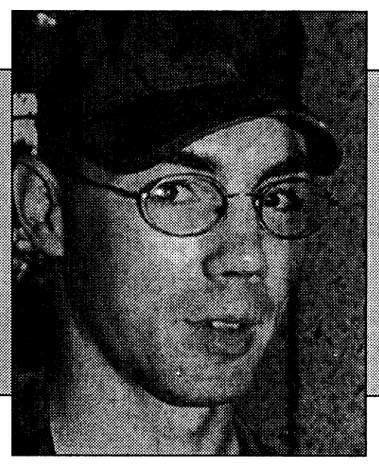
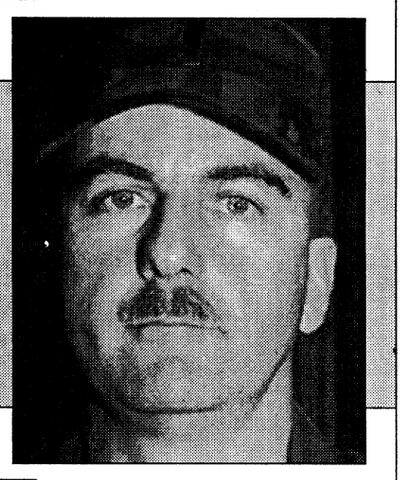
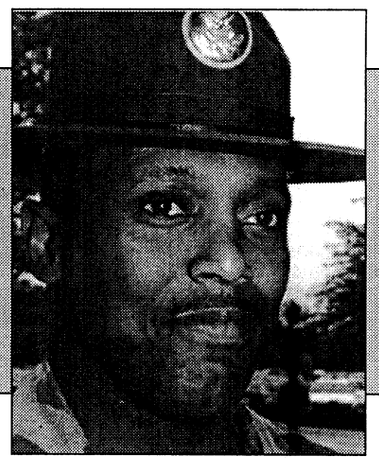
VARIOUS VOICES



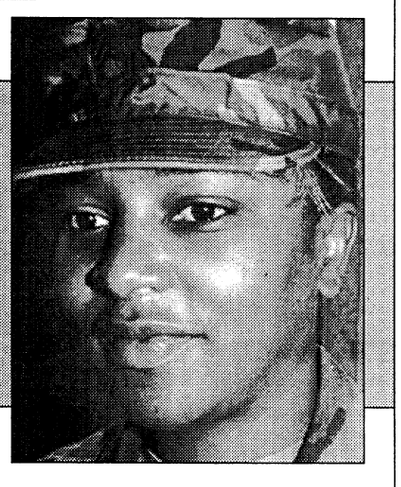
How do you feel about the National Anthem being played in the post movie theater?



Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Smith, Company A, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "I think it's great. That's the way it should be and we should continue it."



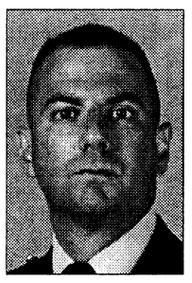
Carla Bailey, family member — "I think it's great. It shows patriotism to our country and it should be played."



Sgt. Tim Robitaille, 104th Transportation Company — "I think it's a good idea. It shows pride in why we wear the uniform. It's our country's anthem — we should be proud of it."

Chief Warrant Officer 3 Charles Mueller, 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) — "It is a sign of respect. It shouldn't be considered an inconvenience — we're in the military here."

Staff Sgt. William Dixon, Company E, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment — "I think it should be played. It helps people respect and have pride in the country."



Sgt. 1st Class Irma Ray, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It's no big deal. It's played overseas. You should be proud to hear it."

National anthem strikes chord at movie theater

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane thinks it is a good idea to play the national anthem in movie theaters.

The Wynnsong 10 movie theater recently added the national anthem to the beginning of its movie presentations. Audience members are requested to stand for the playing of the national anthem, a short film reel of Fort Benning scenes and Soldiers training.

commentary

The whole film clip takes about one minute, give or take, and is followed by the regular showing of previews, the occasional soda commercial and the feature presentation.

I would think standing for the national anthem would not be considered such a sacrifice, but the brief observance appears to be an inconvenience for some moviegoers.

Here are some of the whinings I've heard from those who either refuse to stand or, after releasing a heavy, burdensome sigh, rise up, frown and wait until "the torture" is over.

"I'm not in the Army. I don't have to stand."

"I'm off duty. This is my free time."

"This isn't a baseball game. I'll stand at a game."

"This is stupid."

These are some of the top complaints I've heard from the Goober Gallery.

In my opinion, the playing of the national anthem at the movie theater is a welcome return to an old military tradition.

I underwent my AIT at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., where I first learned military movie theaters played the national anthem before showing the movie. I'm ashamed that I didn't know what to do when the music started.

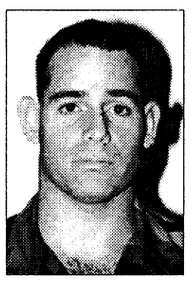
I associated the anthem with the end of TV transmission, baseball games and fireworks on the New Jersey beach. So I just sat there in the dark until someone prodded me and said something like "Stand, that's the national anthem," or probably something less polite.

Through my years traveling with the Army, I've used the post movie theaters and I would have to say just about every installation plays the national anthem before the movie presentation. I've grown accustomed to the tradition and I have now become the guy who jabs the person in the back and says "Stand, that's the national anthem."

I guess I'm just an old patriotic softy who hates to see traditions die, but I don't understand why a person can't stand for a moment to observe the national anthem. Is a baseball game a worthier event or a better forum for the anthem than a movie? Observing the anthem is more about being an American than about being a Soldier. A Soldier just happens to be one of the many defenders honored in the anthem.

Okay, this brings us to the choices, because this is America and we are all free to make choices.

The first choice is to observe the anthem by standing during the music. You'll be rewarded by a short film clip professionally produced for Fort Benning and starring Iron Mike.



Another choice is to remain seated and maybe go unnoticed, get a scornful look or be reminded about standing for the anthem. A bad scene would be an off duty drill sergeant catching a group of basic trainees sitting while the anthem plays.

Yet another choice is to wait outside in the lobby until the anthem is over like I've seen some moviegoers do.

The final choice for moviegoers is to go to the movie theaters off post, if paying respect to the country's national anthem is too objectionable. Once again, we all have choices.

Theater doesn't need patriotic theme

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin believes the national anthem doesn't belong in a movie theater.

Let me just start out by saying I love this country and I believe in it wholeheartedly. But there comes a time when you have to look at what is really reasonable.

commentary

I am nearly 30 years old and have been an avid movie fan for as long as I can remember. I can still remember going to see such early movies as One Flew over the Cuckoos Nest, Star Wars and The Godfather. I didn't necessarily understand them then, but I do remember my father taking me to see them.

What I don't remember is having to prove my patriotism before watching those, or any other movie until last week when I visited the Wynnsong 10 to see Good Will Hunting, which I highly recommend.

The mere fact that I am watching the movie in a post movie theater sort of proves that I love my country and respect what it stands for.

Standing for the national anthem is showing your respect for the country. I understand that. But is it necessary in a movie theater?

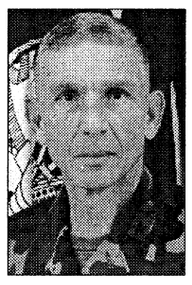
The theater is totally black, there is no flag in the theater and, in this case, is more of a waste of time before the feature presentation is shown.

We are already viewing many movie trailers and are now bombarded with soda and candy commercials before the actual movie we came to see starts. I've even seen previews for shows on HBO and ABC in theaters. Why put the national anthem in a place where I believe your patriotism is the last thing on anyone's mind?

If we continue to play the anthem in awkward, inappropriate places, where does it end?

Next we'll have to say the "pledge of allegiance" before we order anything from the concession stand.

Now I have spoken to quite a few people on this subject and have come up with this question — if this is such a great idea, why isn't the anthem played in civilian theaters? Because they know, as I do, that the moviegoers go to the theater to enjoy a movie, eat popcorn and spend some free time with friends and family. How many of us need to be reminded of how much we love our country in a movie theater?



Through schooling, sporting events and ceremonies we are given the chance to show respect to our country. Is standing at attention or with our hands over our hearts in a darkened room really making a difference? Or is it just getting in the way of why we're in the theater in the first place?

I remember the days when television stations weren't on 24 hours-a-day and the anthem was played at the end of the broadcast day in respect to the land that allows the programming to be aired in the first place. And at the time, I found that very patriotic — I guess because if I didn't want to watch it, I could turn the channel. But if I'm in the movie theater, I have to stand.

I want to reiterate, I love my country and I am all for standing for the national anthem. I just don't think the anthem belongs in the darkness of a theater where it becomes more of an hinder than a patriotic theme.

Holiday offers time to remember, celebrate

Fort Benning will celebrate the anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday on Jan. 15. This day commemorates a great American.

The theme for this year's Dr. Martin Luther King Commemorative Service is "Remember! Celebrate! Act! A Day On; Not A Day Off!" This encourages us to remember Dr. King's work (what was done and what needs to be done), celebrate his legacy, and act on it by giving our services back to the community.

We began our celebration yesterday with an inspirational commemorative service in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall. I want to encourage all members of the Fort Benning and tricity community to reflect on this year's theme and seek ways to work towards encouraging unity.

Marksmanship Unit gets new electronic target system

By Paula Randall Pagán
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit received more than $3.5 million in new state of the art computerized targeting equipment Jan. 6, as announced at a Columbus Chamber of Commerce press conference Monday.

The Army Marksmanship Unit expressed an interest in the Suis Ascor targeting system, which was used at Atlanta's Wolf Creek range in the 1996 Olympics, because it will modernize the USAMU ranges for training world-class shooters and will allow Fort Benning to host world-class shooting events. The new equipment is worth approximately $3.5 million and was offered on the international market for about $1.5 million.

With the new target system, the USAMU ranges can now conduct national and international competitions leading up to the 1998 Olympics. There are 77 50-meter rifle and pistol target systems, 40 25-meter pistol target systems, three 10-meter running target systems and 72 10-meter rifle and pistol target systems.

"Our shooters will be the beneficiaries of better training, more training and cheaper training as we seek to be all we can be as shooters," USAMU Commander Col. Arch Arnold said at the press conference. "It does significantly upgrade our capability to train faster and better."

Arnold added that the USAMU shooters will also get a "great home court advantage" from the new equipment.

"Can you imagine being able to train everyday and then compete right on that same shooting range that you've been training on as opposed to going to some other place to actually compete? So it provides us with some real advantages."

"The equipment will allow for better training for Soldiers by providing immediate feedback for the Soldiers on his shooting while creating a great facility for the United States to be used for major marksmanship competitions with made-for-TV spectator viewing," USAMU Deputy Commander Bob Aylward said. "We can now host any national or international competition to include the Continental Games and the World Shooting Championships and we can and will host competitions in concert with the Atlanta Olympic facility."

The Marksmanship Unit received the equipment primarily through the efforts of U.S. Rep. Mac Collins who initiated action in Congress to get $1.5 million added to the 1997 Defense Appropriations Act, which was approved in October of 1996, for the acquisition of the equipment.

Bob Jursnick, the executive director of USA Shooting, which is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States, congratulated the Marksmanship Unit on this great improvement to its ranges.

"This range complex is now a premier world-class international marksmanship facility, which is the only range in the Western Hemisphere capable of hosting all international marksmanship events," Jursnick said. "USA Shooting is looking forward to working with the tricommunity of Fort Benning to present many national and world-class marksmanship events."

The equipment is presently being installed and should be operational by mid-February. The USAMU will host the first major national-level competition using the new targets April 13-25 when it conducts the U.S. Team Selection Match for the 1998 World Championships. The first major international competition will be the Columbus-Fort Benning Grand Prix May 3-10, in which hundreds of shooters and coaches from about 48 countries are expected to participate.

Taxes: Offices to open

"We are more in tune with the military and have the formal training from the IRS. Soldiers will be paying for a service they could get here for free," said Barrett.

There will be a tax office available in Building 4, Classroom 1, which is the same as last year and also Building 9025, the Legal Center on Kelley Hill.

Third Brigade Soldiers now deployed in Kuwait will have ample opportunity to file their taxes when they return. The Legal Center will also set up a tax program for Soldiers when they return. Spouses can file for Soldiers deployed with a power of attorney.

If you're planning on visiting the tax office, you will need your W-2 form, social security card and a copy of last year's return if you have it. Every taxpayer must also have a social security number for children, if claiming as a dependent.

Barrett also said the name and social security number must match with the name on the tax papers. Those recently married should check with the Social Security office in Columbus for a new card.

The tax office is open to Soldiers, family members and retirees, anyone who has an ID card.

The tax offices will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m Feb. 2-April 15. Tax help and filing is available on a walk-in basis.

For tax questions before Feb. 2, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281. For questions during tax season, call the Main Post tax office at 545-4267.

Soldiers help pick up community during MLK cleanup

By Kelly Twedell
Bayonet correspondent

Soldiers from Fort Benning helped kick off the Martin Luther King Jr. Month Clean-Up Jan. 10.

The clean-up drive is an annual area beautification event organized by Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus (CCSC), Inc.

Saturday's event kicked off with members of the tricity community taking the Anti-Litter and Beautification Pledge. This pledge was sponsored by the Columbus legislative delegation and encourages local schools to adopt the pledge.

"That street itself should be clean all year round because of what and who it represents," said Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, Garrison sergeant major.

The areas cleaned up were along Martin Luther King Blvd. and 10th Street. Spc. Anthony Birdsong, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president, said the stretches of property were city owned, not belonging to businesses or housing areas.

"Most of the trash that we collected consisted of aluminum drink cans, extraneous paper, bottles, cigarette butts and wire," Birdsong said. "It took a little over an hour to clean up our designated area."

Post participation included Soldiers from Ranger Training Brigade, 36th Engineer Group and Garrison Commander staff.

The MLK Pride Month clean-up drive runs through Feb. 28.

For more information contact Lonnie Jackson of CCSC, Inc. at 687-5357.

has been very successful in the implementation of quality programs and it's evident in the services provided to its Soldiers."

Sarah McLaney, Fort Benning's chief of the Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management, said the competition is about getting better.

"It's really about continuous improvement," McLaney said. "It's a proactive competition. It's looking at where we are and trying to improve instead of waiting for things to happen."

Gaw said he likes what he saw in the post work force.

"I have been impressed with the working relationship between the military and civilian people who work on Fort Benning," he said. "It's a team atmosphere."

Fort Benning's team will have to wait a few months to see if it was successful in yet another title defense as the best in the country. The announcement of this year's winner is set for this spring.

AER helps Army take care of its own

Army Emergency Relief

By its very nature, Army Emergency Relief (AER) may be considered a quasi-military organization.

Its establishment was authorized by the Secretary of the Army in 1942, shortly after the United States entered WWII, at the recommendation of the Chief of Staff Gen. George Marshall.

The chairman of the Board of Advisors is always the current chief of staff who is presently Gen. Dennis J. Reimer.

The Board of Managers is composed of active and retired members of the Army, and such others as the membership may elect. The organization functions under the guidelines of Army Regulation 930-4. AER's local operations require the approval and support of local military commanders.

The categories of authorized emergency financial assistance have changed slightly over the years to meet the realistic needs of soldiers; however, the underlying philosophy of the program has remained constant. At the time of AER's inception, there was no other Army agency at the disposal of commanders to render assistance to personnel and family members in time of financial distress.

Commanders were often forced to resort to the practice of "passing the hat" among members of a Soldier's unit to provide the necessary financial assistance. The fact that this became a time-honored tradition is testimony of its effectiveness and the esprit which existed within segments of the military society. AER, while it remains the spirit of this former practice, was conceived as a more efficient and sound method of preserving the tradition, "The Army takes care of its own."

There are many leaders within the Army who are still unfamiliar with AER and its mission of helping commanders take care of their Soldiers.

Take for instance, the case of a specialist assigned to a major Army installation in the Southeast. The specialist, along with his wife and three children, have been at his present unit for the past two years. Up until now the Soldiers' greatest concern in life was how he could arrange for a sitter to watch his three children while he and his wife enjoyed a much deserved evening at their favorite restaurant.

The specialist always felt comfortable knowing that should something unforeseen ever happened to him, that his family would be taken care of by the Army.

However, like most young people, he never considered the possibility of something tragic happening to his wife. But at the young age of 22, with no warning, his wife suffered a fatal heart attack.

Aside from the terrible emotional trauma of losing his wife, this young specialist was faced with considerable financial commitments for his wife's funeral and associated expenses. His wife had no life insurance and there was no family savings so the Soldier knew he would also be facing considerable financial expenditures for future child care.

The specialist was well liked, so Soldiers in his unit began taking up a collection to help him meet these expenses. While the actions of his fellow Soldiers are commendable, they were misdirected.

This specialist's situation is a perfect example of why AER was established — to assist Soldiers in time of financial emergencies.

When the Soldier's situation was brought to the attention of the installation Army Emergency Relief officer (AERO), a comprehensive evaluation of his financial situation revealed he required immediate financial assistance, but did not have the means in which to repay a loan.

The AERO, with the garrison commander's concurrence, provided the specialist a grant of more than $4,500 to cover the funeral and emergency travel associated with his wife's burial.

In the end, this specialist received a grant for his emergency needs, but this would not have been possible without Army Emergency Relief funds donated by fellow Soldiers.

These donations did not come just from Soldiers at this unit, or installation, but rather by his comrades throughout the Army.

The average Soldier, like this young specialist, is the Army's most valuable asset. AER makes an important contribution to the well being of our Army by ensuring Soldiers like this specialist are assisted in times of financial crisis.

But remember, the success of AER is dependent upon the support of local commands and the generosity of Soldiers worldwide.

Soldiers to elect new BOSS president

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

The Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers (BOSS) Program is scheduled to elect the 1998 president during the next meeting at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday .

To be eligible to serve as the BOSS president, the Soldier must be single and have served at least one year at Fort Benning and have another year remaining.

The BOSS program is designed to improve single Soldiers' morale through community service and recreation, said Spc. Anthony Birdsong, the current president.

Free promotional items will be given to those who attend the open meeting.

For more information, call Birdsong at 545-6800 or 545-1500.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas takes place Monday through Jan. 24. If weather permits, the following compartments will be affected: A-13, B-4, B-6, E-6, F-3, G-3, I-3, K-5, K-7, K-9, K-10, M-4, M-5, M-7, R-1, T-5, U-2, V-2, V-3, X-1 and Z-3.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas.

Personnel proposing to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily. Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility.

ID Card Section takes appointments

Main Post ID Card Branch has an appointment system for more convenient service. Personnel with appointments have priority over walk-ins and are seen within five minutes of their scheduled appointment time.

Walk-ins are always welcome but appointments are highly encouraged.

The appointment desk phone number is 545-4068. Operating hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday to Friday, and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday.

Regulations require proper PT uniform

Post regulations require that Soldiers wear the standard Army physical fitness training uniform for PT from 6 to 7:30 a.m. on duty days, whether units organize PT or Soldiers conduct it on their own. Reflective vests are required.

The only approved exceptions are the School of the Americas, the Ranger Training Brigade and the 75th Ranger Regiment. These units have an exception to wear a different uniform, but they must remain uniform.

Report available to review at IG's Office

The Senior Review Panel Report on Sexual Harassment and Sexual Misconduct in the Army is now complete. The report is consolidated into two volumes and is available for review at the Inspector General's Office. For more information or to review the report, call Sgt. 1st Class Kathy Myrick at 545-4780 or 545-3961.

Hawaii pet import requirements change

The state of Hawaii now requires all dogs and cats entering the state to have an electronic microchip implant (issued by the state itself). Additionally, there is now an option for a 30-day quarantine if specific pre-requirements are met well in advance.

If you have pets and anticipate a PCS to Hawaii in the near future, please contact Veterinary Service at 545-4444 or 545-5690 for more information.

Soldiers help stop incoming illegal drugs

By Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

IQUITOS, Peru — Rusted tin- and thatched-roof huts rise on narrow stilts at the edges of the jungle and along the banks of the brown Amazon River. Boats of varying sizes — but none of them large — creak against crude docks. Young men in long rowboats drift slowly, some holding bamboo fishing poles, others just staring silently toward shore. None pays heed to the Peruvian naval patrol boat carving a deep wake as it diesels up the middle of this quarter-mile-wide stretch of the 2,000-mile long Amazon.

Nor have narcotraffickers had to worry much about the federales interfering with the shipment of Peruvian coca north to Colombian plants where they process tons of cocaine. With U.S. assistance, however, South Americans — Peruvians, in particular — are applying increasing pressure.

Operations to stem the drug trade have met with the most success in Peru, officials said. Peruvian coca plantations yield the bulk of cocaine flowing into the United States, but the combined efforts of the United States and Peruvian governments have reduced the coca harvest 18 percent.

"We've broken the (drug traffickers') air bridge into pieces and impeded their ability for long hauls," said Army Lt. Col. Byron Conover, a U.S. Southern Command spokesman with extensive experience in Central and South America. "They used to be able to move coca over long distances from the growing regions of Peru to Colombia processing plants, then up through Mexico or directly into the United States. Now, we've forced them to take small hops."

Not only have the routes changed, Conover said, but also the methods of transit. Today, traffickers are as likely to try moving their illicit cargo by surface, and in particular, by boats. In Peru, Department of Defense (DoD) efforts include aerial tracking and surveillance, ground-based radar and training assistance.

"Our current role in the drug program is important but discreet," Conover said. "We're not the lead agency — our Department of Justice law enforcement agencies take the lead. We support them and the participating host nations."

The U.S. can't afford to concentrate in any one area, Conover said. New to tackling the drug problem at its source, however, the U.S. Southern Command has focused its efforts in Peru, the largest producer of coca, from which cocaine is derived.

At a remote outpost along the Amazon River, a small cadre of U.S. Military Advisory Assistance Group members are training Peruvian naval and law enforcement specialists who in turn will train their agencies to battle drug traffickers using the river.

Training includes river operations in small patrol boats, of which more than two-dozen are being prepared for drug interdictions.

Students also learn to conduct jungle warfare and how to stay alive eating various fruits and drawing rain water stored naturally by certain plants and trees.

"We train the trainers," said Army Col. Manuel Fuentes, the assistance group commander based in Peru's capital city, Lima. "They, in turn, train Peruvian naval (including coast guard) and police specialists."

The school is still growing. When fully operational, Fuentes said, about 60 students will graduate every six weeks.

At the riverine training center, Navy Lt. Cmdr. Fred Jones is helping develop the curriculum and "advising the host nation on how to get this thing off the ground." "The United States and Peru have high hopes," he said. "In 1996, the (Peruvian) coast guard confiscated 400 pounds of coca. Last year, using just seven speedboats, it captured 7 tons."

Also in Iquitos — and at one other Peruvian location and two sites in Colombia — DoD operates relocatable ground-based radar sites to provide a surveillance blanket over transit sites along the borders shared by Peru, Colombia and Brazil. But the radar's impact at times is indirect, Conover said.

"For example, the ground-based radars may well have had no direct part in the last few months in downing an aircraft," he said. "After a while, the traffickers know where the radar sites are. As a result, they know that's an area they have to avoid, so they go to another area where it's more difficult for them to transit and where we can better track them."

Plus, DoD moves the radar units around. For example, two years ago, the Iquitos unit operated by Detachment 4, 24th Operations Group, Howard Air Force Base, Panama, wasn't in Iquitos.

"They are positioned to properly interact with other detection assets — interceptor aircraft, tracking aircraft, and relocatable over-the-horizon radars in the Chesapeake Bay area and Texas," Conover said. A third over-the-horizon site will be placed in Puerto Rico in the near future, he said, to provide surveillance not only of the transit zone but the source area — "where we get them moving and flying out," the colonel said.

Other U.S. resources employed against drug traffickers include high-altitude aerial surveillance, satellite imagery of cultivation areas and radio monitoring.

"Our approach is to layer our radar efforts with local capabilities, including air traffic control networks," Conover said. "We take cues from their intelligence sources and from our aircraft overflying the drug zones."

Active duty and reserve component Air Force members staff the ground-based radar sites. At Iquitos, six Peruvian enlisted controllers complement 33 U.S. airmen.

The American airmen serve 90-day tours of duty, while the commander and key staff pull six-month rotations. They work, sleep, eat and shower in air-conditioned Quonset-shaped tents that block out the sweltering jungle heat and frequently heavy rain. The compound is heavily fortified with concertina wire, tall watchtowers and sandbagged bunkers. An array of radar scanners and satellite dishes scan the skies above the vast Peruvian rain forest, while the Amazon flows by silently.

Whether impeding air routes or tracking down traffickers in the jungle and along the river, the U.S.-South American team makes slow but steady progress.

"We can never expect to eliminate drug use and smuggling entirely," Conover conceded. "But we can reduce the amount of cocaine being illegally smuggled into the United States.

Soldiers from 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, board an airplane headed for Kuwait Jan. 11.

Post unit to spend months in desert

By Staff Sgt. Clifton Kershaw
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

As the final plane load of Task Force 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Soldiers disembarked at the Kuwaiti International Airport Sunday, most looked forward to first getting off the airplane, and then getting busy on their next task — drawing vehicles.

The Task Force is comprised mainly of Soldiers from Fort Benning, as well as nearly 40 Soldiers from units throughout Fort Stewart, Ga.

Moving from the airport straight to Camp Doha, the "Battle Boars" drew training aids and other essential equipment — along with an assortment of tracked and wheeled vehicles — before moving to a large encampment.

There, the Soldiers established an operations center and tried to make themselves at home in the Kuwaiti desert.

"I'm used to the California desert — not this," said Spc. Jeremy Oliphant, Company D, 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

"This is different from California. I'm not used to looking out and seeing for miles around," Oliphant said, referring to the flat terrain of the Kuwaiti landscape.

As of now, Kuwait has the promise of being an eye-opening experience for the Battle Boars, said 1st Sgt. Vidal Rivera, Co. D., 1st Bn. 30th Inf. Regt.

Taking into consideration the stress of being away from home, Rivera has devised a plan to take some of the sting out of the extended stay in the desert.

"We're going to set up a volleyball net, we have sports equipment," and, Rivera said, "boxing gloves so when the guys feel they have some frustration they need to get rid of they can have a (boxing) smoker out here."

While time in the desert is rough, Capt. Jeff Diullo, Co. D commander said this is an opportune time to establish stronger unit cohesion and strengthen solidarity in the company.

"This is probably the only time these Soldiers will get to train uninterrupted," Diullo said. "The beauty of this is I have my leaders minus the demands I'd be competing for at home station."

Reservists, ITB give leadership training

Capt. Roger Cavazas
Co. D, 1st Bn.,19th Inf. Regt.

Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment recently conducted the Leaders Reaction Course (LRC) during their 10th week of training. The drill sergeants and company leadership came from the Co. D, 1st Bn., 330th Infantry, 84th Training Division.

They rotate in two-week increments. The two weeks on Sand Hill are the Reservists' annual training cycle. The LRC was originally designed to help identify leaders and further hone leadership skills.

Pvt. 1 Daniel N. Greer of 2nd platoon, Co. E, 1 Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., said the course helped the company understand the importance of being open to suggestions.

Pvt. 2 Jason M. Weilard of 4th platoon, Co. E, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. believed the course helped them learn to think on their feet.

Command Sgt Maj. Leon Aaron, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. Command Sergeant Major, said he wanted the Soldiers to learn more about teamwork communication under stressful conditions.

"People may have heard that only dummies go Infantry, but if they saw how some of these Soldiers solved these challenges, they would understand how smart Infantry Soldiers really are," said 1st Sgt. James Ytuarte, Co. E first sergeant.

The Reserve commander of Co.. D, 1st Bn., 330th Inf. Regt., 84th Division, Richmond, Ind. Capt. Leroy King said this clearly showed to complete the Army Physical Fitness Test, five-mile Eagle Run, Squad Tactile Training and other events during the unit's two weeks here, requires drill sergeants who are physically fit and highly motivated.

Lt. Col. Mark A. Stevens, the battalion commander, said he wanted to challenge, motivate and excite the Soldiers and also drive home that Soldiers must know how to do the individual tasks to make the unit successful.

This was the first time an Infantry Training Brigade unit used the LRC.

Soldiers land in Kuwait, begin first stages of Intrinsic Action

By Cpl. Michael Rautio
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division

Working 16 hours following an 18-hour plane ride may sound like an eternity, but for the Soldiers of Task Force 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) it's just the beginning of Intrinsic Action 98-01.

Being able to deploy with very little notice and to successfully project combat power requires that once Soldiers hit the ground they can quickly become combat ready.

The process of making Soldiers combat ready is known as reception, staging, onward movement and integration (RSOI).

This four-stage process takes the Soldiers through a 16-hour time line, which begins as soon as the plane lands and ends once units are in place and combat ready.

Prior to landing, Soldiers are oriented to the RSOI process so they know what to expect when they arrive. Because the time line is designed to simulate contingency conditions, the process is completed as rapidly as possible.

The first step of the process is reception. During reception Soldiers deplane and move to Camp Doha. Once on Doha they are taken to the draw yard where they prepare for the next stage of the process.

The staging or drawing process, is the second stage and takes six hours when done to standard, according to Walt A. Miller, Material Storage Unit Level Maintenance Track branch supervisor.

During this stage, each unit receives their vehicles and inspects them. If a unit has any trouble during this stage, they have a line boss who can assist them, Miller said.

The line boss is responsible for setting up the line, making sure the vehicles are ready for issue, ensuring all vehicles are properly inspected and he also coordinates with the unit executive officer to make sure all vehicles are signed for.

By doing thorough preventive maintenance checks and services individuals ensure vehicles are in top working order before leaving the draw yard. Miller said the vehicles are in good shape.

"The same vehicles are used for contingencies as what we use for training so we maintain them all to a very high standard," he said.

If a vehicle is found to have a problem then the unit coordinates with the line boss who gets it fixed as soon as possible, Miller said.

All personal baggage as well as food and water is also loaded onto the vehicles during this stage.

Once everything is loaded and tied down, the units move to the staging area where they draw ammunition and prepare for the next stage.

During onward movement the task force is moved to a predetermined release point by truck. The task force moves by truck to increase efficiency and to prevent unnecessary wear on tracked vehicles and roads, Miller said.

Once at the release point, the units form up and begin the integration stage. During this final stage, the task force moves from the release point to their battle positions at a large encampment. Once the encampment is secured they begin setting up for the several months stay.

ACAP offers help for Soldiers, family members

Army Career and Alumni Program

Fort Benning's Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) Center mission is to make sure separating Soldiers receive information, counseling and advice regarding transition benefits, entitlements and services to assist with adjustment to civilian life.

The ACAP Center is first, the umbrella agency created to be the focal point for transition assistance matters and a referral to service providers. Second, it serves to directly assist with a separating Soldier's job search, said Chick Eagle, one of Fort Benning's ACAP counselors.

"The ACAP Center staff has pledged to create a positive, supportive and caring environment for separating Soldiers, family members and civil service workers," he said. "Many stresses are felt by personnel in transition and they need such a place to refocus on their next career. ACAP counselors and automation specialists actively assist by identifying, referring and resolving individual concerns about the transition process."

"This one-stop transition information office in Soldiers' Plaza has built a reputation on providing top quality and responsive customer service to separating Soldiers and their family members. The ACAP Center again pledges to apply all effort to satisfy customer needs within all available resources," Eagle said.

For ACAP eligibility and scheduling information, please call or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza, 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Post continues tradition of improving its landscape

Georgia Urban Forest Council

The Georgia Urban Forest Council recently named Fort Benning the 1997 Outstanding Community.

Fort Benning has a long history of concern with providing a better quality of life for the Soldiers and civilians who live, work and train on the post. Under the command of previous commanders in the twenties and thirties, major efforts were taken to improve landscape on post. The planting of trees in the main post area, which is now part of the Historic District, was a primary thrust. The Historic District is characterized by wide, curvilinear, tree-lined streets. These trees make up the foundation of what is now called the Fort Benning Urban Forest. With the hiring of Richard A. Kesselring, landscape architect, in 1994, the urban forest quickly became the focus of the Landscape Development Plan for the Main Post. This manifested into a seven point project outlined as:

•Add tree protection to the environmental protection section of contract standards. This has afforded a greater concern for the protection of the existing trees on construction sites by contractors;

•Development of the Urban Forest Management Plan. This will provide for a higher level of maintenance of the existing trees and provide for the replacement of trees at the rate of 2 to 1;

•The development of a Street Tree Planting Plan that was implemented in 1996—approved by the State Historic Preservation Office of Georgia;

•The implementation of a contract to remove hazard trees, prune existing trees and replace trees according to the Planting Plan-delivery orders for 630 trees of 12 species have been issued;

•Develop a sidewalk replacement contract that included protection for the existing urban trees;

•Team with the Boy Scout troop on the post for a tree planting project performed within the frame work of the Urban Forest Management Plan.

After another 60 or 70 years we believe that those responsible for the Fort Benning Urban Forest will find that they have been outstanding stewards of their wonderful natural resource.

The Last Hundred Yards
The NCO's Contribution to Warfare

Bruce Gudmundsson, coauthor of On Infantry, calls this "the best book on ground tactics ... in the last 50 years." Infantry leaders, learn how to: (1) add surprise to standard U.S. tactics, (2) use maneuver warfare at the small-unit level, and (3) enjoy training to the actual threat. There will be no frontlines in the next war, so support personnel will need this one too. It contains the collective common sense of 1200 infantry NCO's, reads like an action novel, and has 250 illustrations. Save lives, send $22.75 to Posterity Press, P.O. FAITH MIDDLE SCHOOL

Students learn about technology

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Faith Middle School has recently had an "explosion of technology" according to principal Dr. Beth Middlemiss. Faith has a brand-new personal computer (PC) lab, a data projection room and a discourse lab now being completed.

Mary Barnette, educational technologist, a former language arts teacher, is in charge of the PC lab and all the labs at Faith; she is also in charge of helping the teachers stay current with computer technology.

There is an educational technologist in every school on Fort Benning, compared to other schools in Georgia, which have one per school system.

"We have 29 brand-new IBM multimedia computers. When everything is connected, we will have Ethernet, which is the intermediate Internet connection. It is very, very quick. Our connection to the Internet is through the Fort Benning server," said Barnette.

The PC Lab also has three laser printers, two color printers, three color scanners and six page scanners for document or picture scanning.

"Children have been creating posters. They bring their research in here and we find many pictures on the Internet," said Barnette.

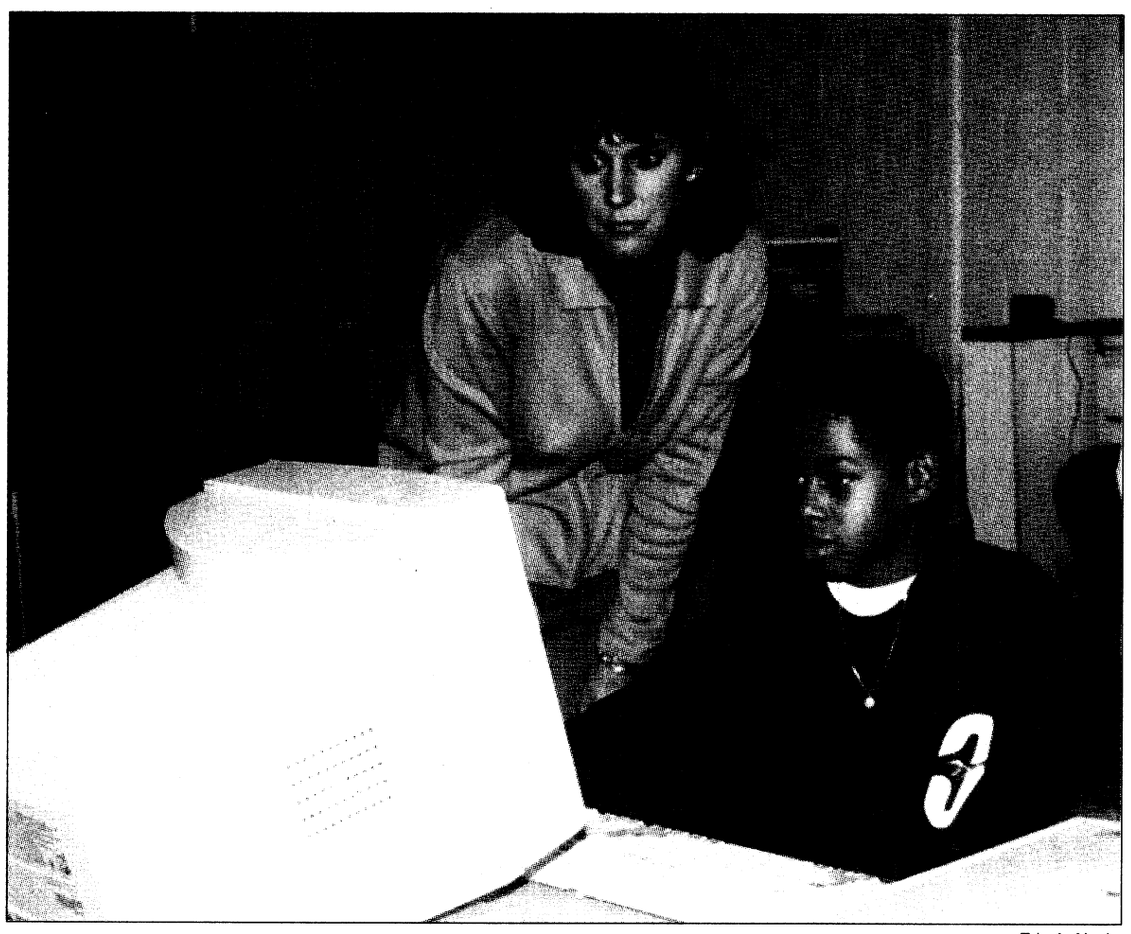
Faith has also been doing power-point presentations in the data projection room. The data projection room was restructured to meet technology needs and was designed by industrial arts teacher Anne Shaw. Power- point is a presentation tool that is used mainly in businesses and education. Information once used on overhead projectors or slide projectors is done on a computer. Everything is animated and students can make their information have sound. The data projection system was funded by the Parent-Teacher Organization.

The discourse lab is run by a master computer, connected to several other smaller computers. Teachers on the master computer can ask questions, opinions, etc., and receive an answer from each student on a computer. The teacher knows what student answered what, but other students do not.

"We think this discourse lab is going to be especially valuable to our language arts teachers as they work with students on various types of writing," Middlemiss said.

"We're trying to get teachers and students to use all the types of technology in all of the classes. We don't want technology to be a separate entity unto itself. We want it to be an enhancement of the curriculum" said Barnette.

Faith also has an Apple computer lab, a Macintosh lab used for word processing and a PowerMac lab for multimedia.



"The kids really enjoy the computers," said Barnette. "They're excited about using them. As long as their learning technology, it doesn't matter what they want to do."

"The lab is fun," said sixth-grader Jose Conley, son of Charles and Staff Sgt. Marta Garner, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "It's nice to learn new things. I like the color and the graphics."

"I like the PC lab because you get to learn new things you didn't know," said sixth-grader Bracha Williams, daughter of Sgt. 1st Class Annie Williams, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Faith Middle School teachers have ongoing training on the computers. When students have Jan. 23 off, the teachers will have a day of training.

"It's constant learning. While the teachers are learning new things, I'm also always learning," said Barnette.

Welcome Josefina!

Fundraiser offers contest for tickets

Tortorici & Company

LUMPKIN, Ga. — What do you like about one of the six American Girls historical characters — Samantha Parkington, Josefina Montoya, Felicity Merriman, Kirsten Larson, Addy Walker or Molly McIntire? Westville invites you to enter its American Girls Essay Contest and win tickets to Westville's February Welcome Josefina! fundraiser.

In 200 words or less, participants should address the theme of why they like a specific American Girls character or what they have learned about that character's time period through the American Girls Collection. Essays will be divided into two age-group categories — 6 to 9 years old and 10 to 13 years old.

All entries must be received by Jan. 31 and can be mailed to American Girls Essay Contest, Westville, P.O. Box 1850, Lumpkin, Ga., 31815. At the top of the page, list your name, age, address, telephone number, theme category and American Girls character. Only one essay per child will be accepted and essays must be written by the child. Winners will be notified by Feb. 14.

The essay contest is being held in preparation for Westville's upcoming Feb. 28 Welcome Josefina! fiesta fund-raising event, which focuses on Josefina Montoya — a 9-year-old Hispanic girl growing up in New Mexico during 1824. Two tickets to the Welcome Josefina! event and one-year family membership to Westville will be awarded to the grand prize essay contest winner in each age category.

Designed to bring history alive for girls age seven and older, the American Girls Collection is a series of books, dolls, clothes and accessories focusing around the historical fiction about six 9-year-old girls growing up during key turning points in America's history.

For more information about the American Girls Essay Contest and the Feb. 28 Welcome Josefina! fiesta event, call Westville at (888) SEE-1850.

Westville is a historic destination, which provides an opportunity for visitors to experience life in the pre-industrial South. Located in Lumpkin, Ga., approximately 40 miles south of Columbus, Ga. at the intersection of U.S. 27 and Ga. 27, Westville's hours of operation are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. EST.

Scholarships available to help afford college

National Academic Funding Advisory

With the college application season in full swing, families are now facing the dilemma of how to pay for tuition, room and board, text books, lab fees and other expenses.

Skyrocketing costs coupled with cutbacks of government grants and college assistance are putting extra strain on family budgets and assets. As a result many families are relying on burdensome debt to finance their children's education.

The good news is there are nearly 400,000 scholarship and grant sources now available to help students pay for college costs. More than 80 percent of these scholarships do not depend on family need or high grades but are awarded based on factors such as the student's interests, activities, field of study, age, ethnic background or parent's work or military service.

According to the U.S. Department of Education and financial aid experts, many students are missing out on the financial assistance opportunities available to them simply because they are not aware of the scholarship process and where to find scholarships that can help them.

"Students who take the initiative to find out what sources they qualify for are usually successful in funding either part or all of their education."

Now through the resources of the National Academic Funding Advisory (NAFA), an updated and expanded publication for 1998 is available which provides important information for all students seeking financial assistance, how to use the new tax changes to save money on your educational expenses, and where to secure direct scholarship money.

For information on how to receive academic funding and scholarships for college, graduate school or trade school, send a self addressed, double stamped envelope plus $2 to cover handling to the National Academic Funding Advisory (NAFA), 188 Summer Street Dept. M1, Portsmouth, NH 03801.

Faith seeks volunteers for writing project

Faith Middle School

Writing is a major portion of the language arts curriculum at Faith Middle School and this year the writing process is receiving even more emphasis as teachers and parents join together in a new pilot project.

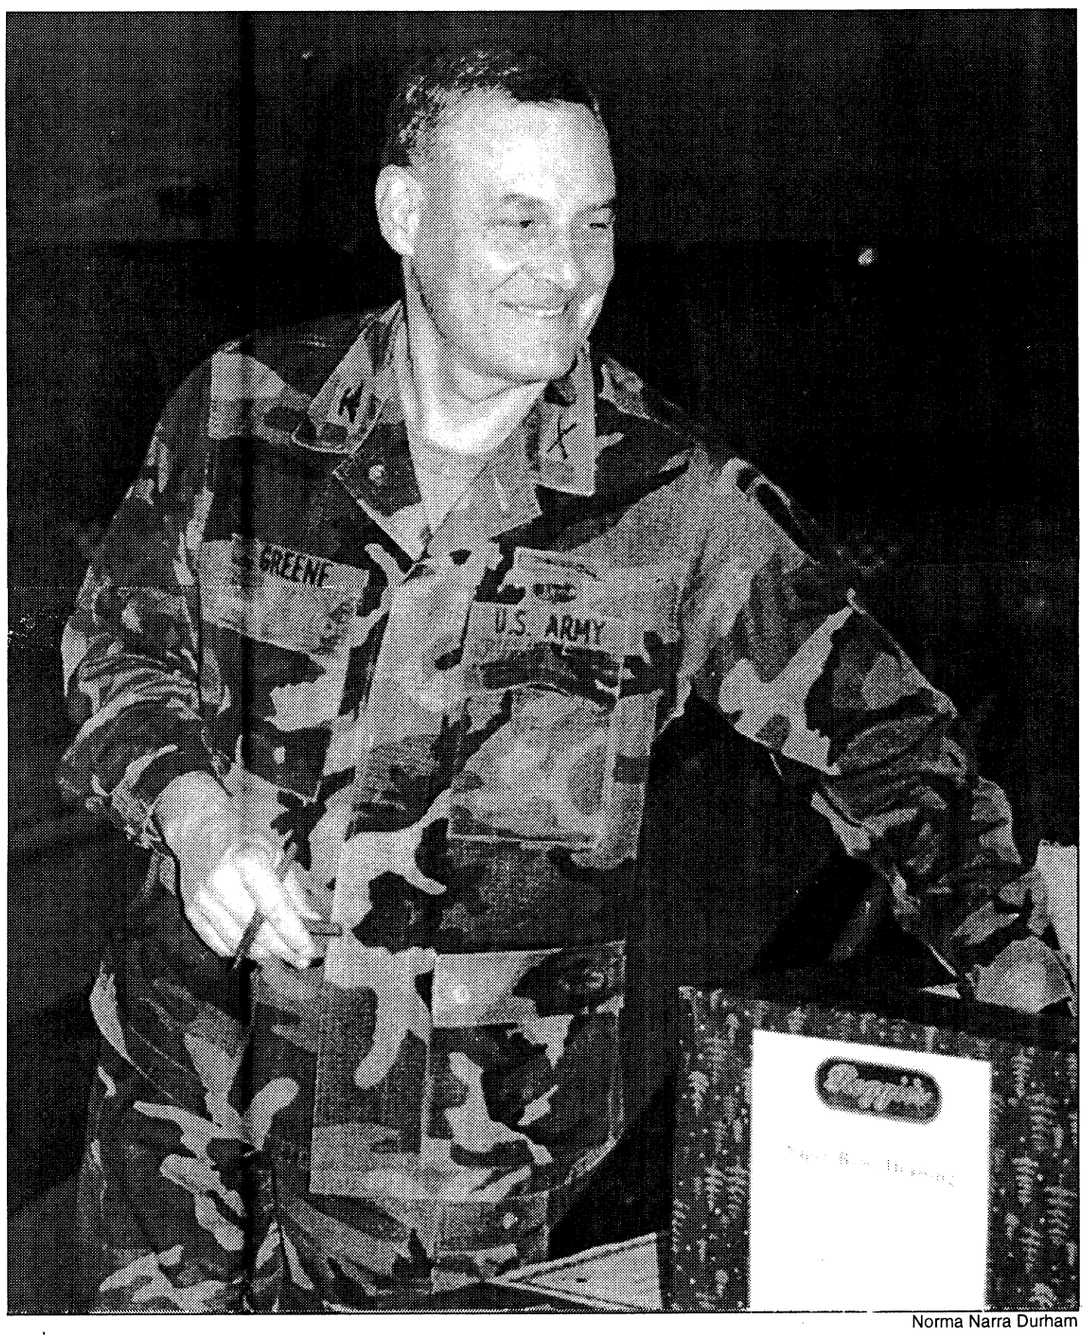
Parents will join teachers in providing feedback to students about writing samples that students produce.

"We're looking for 20 Faith parents," said Dr. Beth Middlemiss, principal, Faith School. "These parents will train along with members of our teaching staff to evaluate student writing using a set of simple, written guidelines.

"We believe it will be an interesting project for parents, while also providing them insight into the specific guidelines that we will be using to assess many of our future writing assignments."

Middlemiss said no special qualifications are needed for this volunteer assignment.

Though the project will work with only samples of eighth-grade writing this year, parents from all three grade levels are needed.



No student names will appear on the samples. Student writings will be identified by a number known only to their language arts teacher.

What is needed is a commitment of volunteer time — time to be trained and time to participate in the group that works together to assess the student writing samples. Volunteers will need to agree to participate in all three of the sessions listed below:

A training session from 1 to 3:30 p.m. Jan. 23, an assessment session from 9 to 11:30 p.m. Feb. 5 and an assessment session from 9 to 11:30 a.m. March 5.

The Faith faculty and Parent-Teacher Organization invite Faith parents to join in the pilot project. They believe Faith students will benefit, and all involved will benefit from the opportunity to participate in this partnership between parents and school staff.

To volunteer or to receive additional information on the Parent-Teacher Writing Assessment and Feedback Pilot Project, call Jean Fry at 689-6049; Cindy Lefler at 682-3913; or Middlemiss at 545-5524.

Investment in wellness leads to healthier lifestyle

By Maj. Christine N. Parker
Martin Army Community Hospital

Investment programs always say "pay yourself first." Investment in health should be no different. Taking care of and improving on health will impact life.

Everyone makes New Year's resolutions at this time of year. Make them really count this year and make resolutions that will have a long-term impact on the overall wellness and quality of life.

So what is "wellness?" It is certainly a phrase of the 90s. Basically, wellness combines body, mind and spirit to produced a balanced lifestyle. Wellness breaks down the ideal of "all work and no play." It encourages people to get rid of bad habits such as smoking, overeating, not exercising and stress and encourages them to take positive control of their lives and form new healthy habits.

The following is a list of suggestions for accomplishing wellness.

•Be positive — no one likes to be around a "downer" and being positive reduces stress, improves the ability to communicate with others and it not only improves self image, but how others see you.

•Break bad habits — stop the two most dangerous health habits, smoking or using tobacco products and drinking too much alcohol. For help, call the American Cancer Society, the local Alcoholics Anonymous or health care provider.

•Connect with others — keep in touch with society, beyond the family, by taking an active role in worship or by volunteering in the community to help those less fortunate.

•Self-exams — both men and women should be alert to early warning signs of cancer by performing breast and testicular self-exams. The Tricare Taking Care of Yourself Manual can provide additional information and guidance.

•Eat healthy foods — eat a variety of foods, focusing on grains, fruits and vegetables and decreasing fat intake. Use nutrition labels to help identify truly nutritious foods.

•Exercise regularly — a minimum of 30 minutes of moderate-intensity exercise every day should be the goal for adults. Exercise improves physical and mental health while helping to control weight. Always consult a doctor before beginning an exercise program and always include a warm-up and cool down before exercising.

•Get checkups — be sure to always get a routine physical and dental on time. Other than prevention, early detection of any health problem is critical.

•Keep the environment healthy — try to avoid areas that have polluted air or water, excessive noise and dust. Avoid smoke-filled rooms and wear earplugs while working around noise.

•Practice good hygiene — hand washing is the best line of defense for preventing the spread of germs. Shower or bathe often. Brush teeth after meals and floss daily.

•Protect skin — children and adults should use a sunscreen with a Sun Protection Factor (SPF) of 15 or more. Wearing long sleeves in the sun also provides added protection. Babies under 6 months should not be in the sun at all.

•Reduce stress — a little stress is normal, but too much stress can actually produce physical symptoms such as cold hands, rapid breathing and heartbeat, anxiety, forgetfulness, shakiness, headaches, muscle tension and knotted stomach. Manage stress by breathing deeply, expressing yourself, being realistic, eating right, thinking things through, stretching and getting enough sleep.

•Reflect on life — allow the time for personal reflection. Evaluate the goals and plans to achieve them. Be thankful for now.

•Remember to rest — medical experts typically suggest seven to eight hours of sleep per night. Inadequate sleep increases stress, worsens physical problems and makes one less alert.

•Stimulate the mind — take challenging classes, read, play board games and visit cultural places. Keep your mind "tuned" by using it as often as possible.

Directorate of Public Works

This week's article provides schedule changes for the Federal Holiday in remembrance of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and an update on the Cardboard Recycling Program.

MLK Day changes trash collection schedule

There will be no yard waste picked up Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pickup will be Jan. 26.

There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups Monday. The areas normally scheduled for pick-up on Monday are Port, Kawamura, Fernandez Streets and Indianhead Terrace. These areas will be picked up Tuesday. Refuse and recycle collection in family housing for Tuesday through Jan. 23 will be picked up as normally scheduled. For more information, call Wilber Busby at 545-1568.

MLK schedule for the Self Help store

In observance of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Day, the Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed Saturday and Monday. The center will reopen for business Tuesday at 8:20 a.m. For more information, call Doc Shirley at 545-1121.

Cardboard recycling update

The green containers being used to recycle cardboard have been a huge success. During the past several months the recycled cardboard has increased by 55 percent. For those not yet taking advantage of the program, it is an easy way to recycle a product that has a use rather than taking up expensive landfill space. Here is a refresher on the program.

These containers are marked on the front with white lettering stating "Recycle Cardboard Only." Corrugated cardboard is two layers of dense paper (usually brown) with fluted inner layer. These containers provide a convenient alternative for units and activities to dispose of cardboard rather than making trips to the recycling center.

The containers are designed to accept only boxes that have been flattened. A narrow horizontal slot, near the top, allows the users to place the cardboard in the container. The top doors of the container are not to be opened by the user. Attempts to open the doors will cause damage to the container. To optimize the system do not put any material in the green containers except corrugated cardboard.

Flattening the boxes will allow much more actual material to be stored in the containers, thereby greatly increasing efficiency. These containers are a tool for commanders to use to assist the installation in meeting the Army's goal to recover and recycle solid waste to the greatest extent possible. Most of all, by recycling cardboard there is a direct cost avoidance for every pound that is not transported off the installation to a landfill.

Other forms of paperboard are not to be placed in the green containers. This includes cardboard that is coated with plastic or was or grossly contaminated with oil or food. This form of cardboard should be flattened and placed in your refuse containers for disposal.

For more information about the green cardboard containers, call Walter Nichols, DPW, Solid Waste Program manager at 545-1007.

BENNING

Holiday allows time to remember, reflect, react to MLK's principles

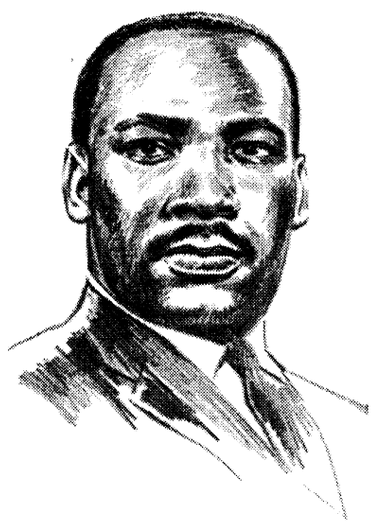
By Chaplain (Capt.) Lane Stockeland
2nd Bn, 69th Armor

What will you be doing Monday? Perhaps taking a well deserved day off, enjoying the last day of a three-day weekend or doing some late season hunting or fishing?

reflections

Some of you may be involved in a Martin Luther King Jr. Observance of some kind.

Monday we will celebrate the observance of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr's. birthday. King was born Jan. 15, 1929. I think what we do on this day however, is not so important as how we celebrate and honor King each day the rest of the year. It may be easy to think for a few minutes next Monday on what King stood for, contemplate the values and truths he embraced, or the goals and ideals he dreamed of, and then go on our merry way. Well, you say, "What should we do?"



First, we must remember. Remember what he stood for. Integrity, decency, fairness, a visionary, a dream of equal rights and privileges for every human being regardless of race.

The Scripture reminds us to remember what God did in the past. So too, we must remember what King did and stood for.

Then, reflect. Reflect on what that means to you. How do I incorporate those ideals in my life? Maybe I have to change the way I think, act or behave about certain issues or problems. Perhaps that means I reach out more to others in more practical ways; giving food, helping a friend with a car problem, or being more tolerant of other's views or beliefs.

Last we must react. How? By actually being better people, better Soldiers, better employees, better Americans. Most of us know how we should behave and how to treat others, the hard part is actually doing what is right.

Perhaps Dr. Donald Phelps, chancellor of Seattle Community College District sums it up best, "I think this holiday should be devoted to some activity, which expresses love of our fellow person, or spiritual recognition of some kind. As we've celebrated it in the past, it's become a day where people come together. In an ecumenical way, go to other churches, worship together the way we don't on Sunday, than any other. It's a day when we can honor King's principles, which are really American principles in their truest forms. It shouldn't be a holiday where we all go fishing.

On this holiday let us all covenant to uphold these principles and make our community, our Army and our nation a better place to live, work, and serve.

Shooters compete in tactical rifle match

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

During a competition designed for all types of shooters, sounds of bullets flying down range rang across Main Post Sunday.

Fort Benning's Rifle and Pistol Club opened the new year and English Range during it's first winter tactical rifle competition of the year.

Among the new shooters was nine-year-old Scott Cramer Jr. Cramer's father, Scott, who first got the younger Cramer started shooting rifles, acted as his spotter during the competition.

"I've been shooting ever since I started going hunting with my dad when I was seven," the younger Cramer said. "This is my first real competition besides the youth competitions held here every once in a while."

Cramer used a 6 mm Remington rifle during this competition and he was joined by more than 45 other shooters.

"I've only been shooting since October," said Al Edwards, who acted as a range safety officer and competitor. "Besides the excitement of shooting, you learn self-discipline."

Although the competition had several categories for each level of shooter, the scoring remained the same.

Each shooter had 30 rounds of ammunition to shoot at targets at 100-, 200- and 300-yard distances. The competitors had 30 minutes to shoot. The possible high score was 300 and any type of rifle could be used.

The competitor level was for the experienced shooter who had placed with a score of 295 or above in prior competitions. The bolt-action Sporter level allowed shooters to use rifles, "bought right off the shelf," Edwards said.

"I think people are really afraid to come to shoot because they don't know how to shoot," Edwards said. "But this type of competition is where they can learn to shoot."

The Cramers said they will be back.

"I really enjoy it — that's why I got him interested," said the elder Cramer.

"I learn new things all the time," said the younger rifleman. "It was kind of scary at first, but I'm looking forward to coming out here again."

The next rifle match is scheduled for 1 p.m. Feb 15 on English Range.

The results of the match follow.

Boxers prepare for All-Army Championships

By Harriet Rice
Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Fifty Soldiers started the new year by reporting to the All Army Boxing Trial Camp at Fort Carson, Colo., Jan. 5.

For two weeks, the boxers worked out in training sessions as coaches teach, guide and push these athletes to their limits. There will be sparring and practice bouts during which Soldiers are observed and screened; then final selections are made in each of 12 weight classes. Some won't make it to the All-Army Boxing Championships scheduled for Tuesday through Jan. 23.

The majority of boxers are from Forces Command installations; every other major Army command except Army Materiel Command is also represented.

Head coach Byron Moore is working with the boxers, putting them through drills to work on balance, combination punches, slipping, parrying, catching and power.

Five of the 50 Soldiers, members of the Army's World Class Athlete Program, are nationally ranked boxers; three of them are experienced veterans.

Bradley Martinez, 106 pound, is the most experienced boxer, with a record of 158 wins and 25 losses in his 17-year Army boxing career.

"His great strength is in his legs," said Moore. He also said Martinez has a strong work ethic in the gym.

Nationally ranked eighth in the light flyweight division, Martinez, a native of Rapid City, S.D., holds six All-Army and six Armed Forces titles and won gold at the 1997 USA Boxing Nationals.

Nationally ranked number two light heavyweight Olanda Anderson, 178 pounds, is a Sumter, S.C., native looking toward the 2000 Summer Olympics in Sydney, Australia.

"He is the most talented boxer the Army has at this point," Moore said, although Anderson was defeated by tough competition from the Russians in the semi-finals of the 1997 international military competition.

Another returnee from the 1997 roster is Julius Fogle III. A middleweight ranked number 10 nationally, the Houston, Texas, native is another hopeful for the 2000 Olympics.

"An athlete like him makes a coach's job easy because of his determination to win and because he's an excellent student of the sport," Moore said. "His greatest attribute is his mental strength."

Nationally ranked newcomers are ninth ranked light middleweight Nickolaus Meyers and sixth ranked lightweight James Webb.

Winners from the All-Army Championships make up the Army team, which meets its counterparts at the Armed Forces Boxing Championships hosted by the Navy Feb. 10-15 at Port Hueneme, Calif. Martinez, Fogle and Anderson are defending Army and Armed Forces Champions.

Soldiers make Olympic team

By Harriet E. Rice
Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — When the sun rises on Nagano, Japan, for the XVIII Winter Olympic Games, eight Soldiers will be among the 200 athletes representing the United States of America.

Five biathlete and three bobsledders, members of the Army's World Class Athlete Program based at Fort Carson, Colo., qualified for nomination to the U.S. Olympic team during Olympic trials held Dec. 26 to Jan. 4.

Three women and two men qualified at competitions conducted by the U.S. Biathlon Association in Jericho, Vt. In the women's Biathlon, Kara Salmela, Elk River, Minn., had the highest composite score after four days of cross-country skiing on fast snow and smallbore rifle shooting in strong winds.

"I'm definitely happy," said Salmela, 26, who came in first in one of two 15K individual races. "I told myself this wasn't a big deal even though it's the Olympic trials and all that. I told myself I had to have 20 good shots and I hit 17."

Kristina Sabasteanski, Richmond, Vt., came in third overall. The women raced in two 15K individual events and two 7.5K sprints. On the last day, Sabasteanski was in sixth place and decided to go for broke. She won the sprint in 26:10.8, missing no targets.

"I had nothing to lose. Not only did I have to beat four people, but I had to beat them by about one minute," said Sabasteanski, 29, who is no stranger to Olympic trials. In 1994, she finished one place shy of a trip to Lillehammer, Norway.

"It's slowly hitting. It really hasn't sunk in. I'll see the Olympic bad we have and when I see the Olympic rings, it's, like wow! That's actually me," she said.

A third woman qualifier, Ntala Skinner, did not have to participate; she prequalified by virtue of her performance during the 1997 season on U.S. Biathlon team.

In the men's biathlon, Daniel Westover clocked winning times in the 20K individual event and the 10K sprint, which he skied in 30:10.8, 30 seconds faster than teammate and fellow Soldier Rob Rosser.

"Right now I'm so excited. I'm really looking forward to the (Olympic) races — seeing how I stack up. It's a life dream come true, the whole experience," said Westover, 23, a Vermont native.

The nine-member U.S. National Biathlon team departed for Europe to train and compete in two World cup events in Ruhpolding, Germany, and Artholz, Italy, before their trip to Nagano.

USAMU starts New Year with a bang, plans travel to Germany

USAMU Public Affairs Office

The first international competition of the 1998 shooting season will be in Munich, Germany, for the 1998 Bavarian Air Gun match, Jan. 29-31.

The USAMU will send eight shooters from the International Rifle, International Pistol and Running Target teams.

Shooting for the International Pistol team will be Daryl L. Szarenski, who was the 1997 national champion in the Air Pistol Competition.

International Rifle will be sending Stephen C. Goff, Kenneth A. Johnson, Timothy R. Manges and Jason A. Parker.

The Running Target section is sending National Champion Lance D. Dement, Interservice Champion Armando R. Ayala and Michael E. Moore.

Shooters with the USAMU scored some major victories in the past few weeks. The following results are just some of the recent accomplishments:

•Wolf Creek Monthly match, Atlanta, Jan. 10 — USAMU international pistol shooter Carl W. Trompeter II won the Rapid Fire match, followed by Eric G. Daniels in second place. Steven M. King was the winner in the Center Fire Match and Daniels took second and Trompeter third. King also won the 50-meter Free Pistol Match and Terry Travis A. Jorgenson was second. Jorgenson also won the Standard Pistol Match with Terry S. Bradley in second place. Bradley also won the Junior Sport Pistol Match.

Volksmarch challenges walkers worldwide

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

"Volksmarch? What's that?"

That was my response when a friend invited me to one when I was stationed in Germany. He explained it was a way to get out of the barracks, meet people and get some exercise.

I went and I was glad I did.

Many American service members get their exposure to volkssports in Europe. Now they can continue the sport in the United States.

The American Volkssport Association (AVA) has been up and running for two decades. Like its European counterparts, the association encourages average Americans to exercise. Local chapters sponsor biking and swimming, but the main events are the volksmarches.

Volksmarches are measured hikes, usually 10 kilometers long. Participants can walk, jog, run or mosey along.

The march is not competitive — you don't get extra credit for finishing first. But you do get a sense of accomplishment when you finish.

What all participants do receive is credit. The AVA tracks the kilometers a person walks and the number of events. The participant receives a pin and patch upon reaching certain milestones.

America differs from Europe in that U.S. clubs sponsor two different types of volksmarches: scheduled events and year-round events.

Organizers usually hold one-time-only scheduled events on weekends. Participants pay a nominal fee and receive credit for the walk and a patch, medal or other commemorative souvenir. Local clubs sponsor literally hundreds of events across the country most weekends.

Year-round events are just that — open to walkers all year long. Local clubs map a course and participants check in at a start point. They fill out paperwork, pay their $2 and follow the map. There are checkpoints along the way.

Most year-round events go through historic or scenic areas. The 10 most popular year-round events for 1997, for example, were the Riverwalk in San Antonio, Texas; West Point, N.Y.; Devils Tower, Wyo.; Central Park and Midtown Manhattan, both in New York City; the National Mall, Washington; Hot Springs, Ark.; Savannah, Ga; Princeton, N.J.; and the Garden of the Gods, Colorado Springs, Colo.

The American Volkssport Association has more than 40,000 members in the awards program. Still more Americans take part in association-sponsored events. More than 530 local clubs do the grunt work of setting up events. To find a local club, call (800) 830-WALK. An electronic voice takes you through a menu.

The association also maintains an Internet homepage at http://www.ava.org. The page includes links to local clubs.

A quick perusal shows many clubs on or near military installations. For example, there's the Pentagon Pacesetters in Virginia, the Falcon Wanderers in Colorado Springs, Colo., the Northern Lights Volksmarchers of Alaska at Fort Richardson and the Coronado Beachcombers in San Diego.

The American Volkssport Association is part of the International Federation of Popular Sports — more commonly known by its German abbreviation, IVV. Countries participating in the IVV are Germany, Austria, Liechtenstein, France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Norway, Denmark, Italy, Sweden, Finland, Canada, Netherlands, Great Britain, Japan, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Spain, Hungary, Ireland, Greece, Turkey, Poland, the Republic of Korea and Estonia. All IVV-sponsored events count in the United States.

AVA officials said service members also can process their award books through AVA if they have an APO or FPO address.

An association program also honors those who complete volksmarches in all 50 states. Group officials said more than 400 people have completed this program.

"Volksmarching is healthful, it's fun, nobody competes against anyone," said Ron Hamner, president of the Pentagon Pacesetters.

"Many in the military believe the sport is only in Europe. They come up to me when we sponsor an event and say they are so happy that volksmarching is coming to America. I tell them, 'We've been here for 20 years.' People who got into the sport in Europe can participate and we want them to."

13th CSB conducts race

By 2nd Lt. Eric Hilberg
104th Transportation Company

The 13th Corps Support Battalion conducted the second annual Jingle Bell Jog, which took place Dec. 13. The run was a 5-mile charity event, which raised more than $300 for the Santa's Castle.

The top finishers were:

•Jeremy Hildebrand, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), finished the race with the best overall time of 32:02.

•Gina McCloskey finished the run with a time of 40:52 in the female category.

•Donald Bonds, 104th Transportation Company, 36th Eng. Group, won the 30 and older category with a time of 34:15.

SOLDIERS: Make team

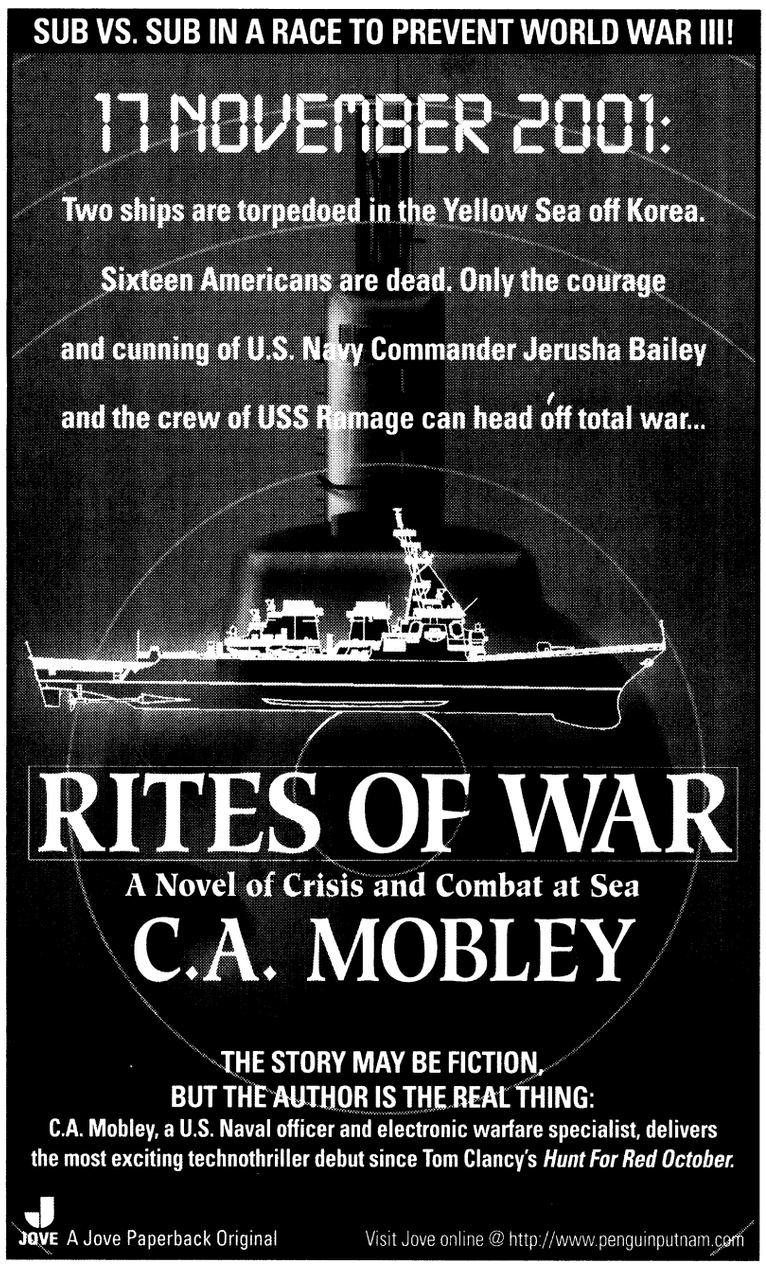
two World Cup events in Ruhpolding, Germany, and Artholz, Italy, before their trip to Nagano.



Olympic bobsled trails were held in Park City, Utah. Darrin Steele, his brother Dan Steele and Garrett Hines were selected as crew members on each of three USA four-man teams.

Hines, 28, will serve as brakeman on the four-man sled. A six-foot, 210-pound track athlete, Hines pushed the two-man USA II sled to three World Cup medals in the 1996-97 season.

Dan and Darrin Steele are twins, natives of Moline, Ill. Both were star athletes in college; Darrin placed fifth in the decathlon at the 1995 U.S. Track and Field National Championships. He was recruited first by the U.S. Bobsled Federation in 1996 from the 1996 U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials where he competed as a member of the Army World Class Athlete program.

"Half of us — in fact, most of us — wouldn't even be here at this point without the World Class Athlete program," Sabasteanski said. "Financially, we would never be able to get this far, and the support we've gotten from everyone has been amazing."

The Army World Class Athlete Program is an activity of Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation operated by the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin

Sgt. Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall talks with students at the Bradley Fighting Vehicle Master Gunner Course. Hall spent time with the NCOs during his three-day trip to Fort Benning.

SMA visits Fort Benning

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

The Army's highest ranking enlisted Soldier visited Fort Benning for the second time in two weeks.

Sgt. Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall traveled from one edge of Fort Benning to another telling Soldiers what he can do for them and what Soldiers can do for him.

He visited with Soldiers from Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, as they were going through military operations on urban terrain training at Brann Range.

Neither the cold nor the intermittent rain slowed Hall down as he went from Soldier to Soldier learning a little about the weapons they were holding or about the role they played in the mission at hand. Finally, he gathered most of the company around him and asked if there were any questions.

"No one has a question for me?"

He asked, "So when I go back to Washington I can tell my boss (Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis Reimer) that life is too good in the Ranger Regiment." The Soldiers remained quiet.

Hall then moved to the mock building where a squad of Soldiers were preparing to conduct a live-fire exercise. Hall dawned a kevlar helmet and flack vest and went with them to observe the exercise.

After speaking to hundreds of Soldiers, Hall said the concerns are usually the same.

"The Soldiers here have the same concerns as Soldiers throughout the Army," Hall said. "They want to know about pay, medical and dental care and quality of life issues."

It's this type of questioning and answering that has Hall going from installation to installation talking to Soldiers.

"There are a lot of good things going on in the Army today," Hall said. "I have to use every opportunity possible to get the word out."

When he's not "getting the word out," he's listening to what Soldiers have to say — both good and bad.

One topic of discussion that came up throughout his trip was downsizing and promotions. Hall said it's a matter of faith.

"You have to keep the faith in the Army, in the Army leadership and in yourselves," he said. For those who don't, early retirement can be an option for some.

"Early retirement allows some Soldiers in certain MOSs to get out early with some benefits," Hall said. "Going into this, the decision was made that we're not going to involuntarily force any Soldier out of the Army. If they want to serve, they can serve."

Hall said promotions will most likely stay the same.

"In the long run, promotion opportunities will stay where they're at or were at," he said. "I don't want to 'ballpark' it, but I think 20 percent of those eligible getting promoted every year is reasonable."

Hall seemed more than reasonably pleased Jan. 16 after visiting with Soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment and the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU).

He learned about future weapons and equipment while walking inside the headquarters of the 29th Inf. Regt. and he got a chance to fire an air rifle while visiting with USAMU.

Again, he asked questions to every person he met — inquiring about how long that person had been in the Army and what it's like to be a Soldier in that unit. The more he asked Soldiers' questions, the more he learned about their

Post remembers MLK

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Although Monday was the national observation of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, many Fort Benning community members took time out Jan.15 to pay tribute to the civil rights activist during a ceremony at Infantry Hall.

On the anniversary of what would have been King's 69th birthday, more than 500 Soldiers and civilians filled into Marshall Auditorium to witness the celebration, which was titled "Remember! Celebrate! Act! A Day On; Not a Day Off!"

Sgt. 1st Class Terry Thomas, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment Equal Opportunity advisor and chairperson of the MLK observance committee, said he hoped the ceremony would help people understand King's message of unity and inclusion for all American's no matter their race, ethnicity, culture or gender.

The ceremony included two performances by the Kendrick High School Mens Chorus and a performance by Celeste Lee, a Directorate of Operations and Training employee, who sang the Battle Hymn of the Republic.

Unit Equal Opportunity Leaders from around post also participated in the ceremony by reading portions of King's Principles of Nonviolence.

Zimmerman

The guest speaker was retired Maj. Gen. Matthew A. Zimmerman, director of the Veterans Affairs National Chaplain Center.

Zimmerman, who was the first African-American director in the 51-year history of the VA chaplaincy program, used his experiences as both a Soldier and ordained Baptist minister to inspire the audience.

"We need to remember his (King's) whole life was lived around the idea that you and I, all of us, were given worth and dignity by God,. . . and no matter the trials and temptations, no man can take that away from us unless we willingly give it up," Zimmerman said. He also said it is everyone's obligation to speak out against injustice.

"Any negativity that's in our society today, and there's a lot of it, is a function of the fact that good people refuse to step up, speak up, and stand up when they see bad things going down."

Zimmerman concluded his speech by telling the audience that the observance of King's teachings should not be limited to the one day of the year set aside to honor King.

1/30 TF learns about Kuwait

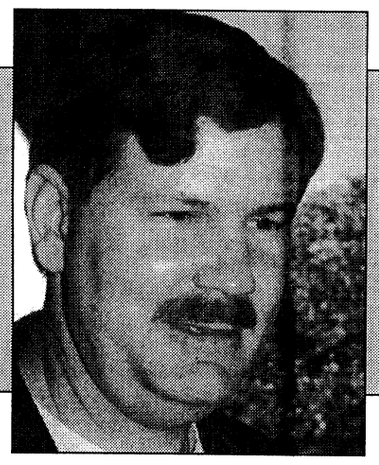
By Staff Sgt. Clifton Kershaw
3rd Inf. Div. PAO

CAMP DOHA, Kuwait — Soldiers of the 3rd Infantry Division's Task Force 1-30 participating in Intrinsic Action 1-98 are discovering the vast openness of the Kuwaiti desert does not lend itself easily to navigation.

For the Bedouins — a nomadic people living in and around the Arabian Peninsula — the path has become clear during their endless treks across these barren lands.

Well-established paths meander into the sand, leading from one destination to another, and marked only with stones and the stars to guide them, they have existed for thousands of years.

For the average Soldier, the situation is slightly different.



"Americans have only been here for a few years, and 'Joe' needs a map and compass," said Sgt. Vanny Johnson, Task Force 1-30 general supply representative.

Now that training is in full swing at the Kabal (a desert encampment) and Task

Stores have long had Valentines Day equipment up for sale.

You know all that stuff to make you feel guilty if you don't buy the love of your life candy, flowers, cards, and some simple diamond pendant. If you don't you're the world's worst heel.

commentary

Well, guess what merchants? I ain't even written my thank you notes from Christmas.

I'll tell you who ain't getting no thank you notes from the Snively family. Those hoity-toity relatives and friends who write "newsletters" about their superior children, their fabulous jobs and their exotic vacations.

One of these years I'd like to send out one of those letters:

"The Snively Clan is doing great. Clyde Junior just got released from the state pen where he was doing time for armed robbery. The good news is, they cured him of his crack habit while he was there.

"We're hoping he gets back together with his common-law wife and six illegitimate children.

"Bubbaette just celebrated her 23rd birthday and chances of graduating from high school are looking better all the time. The shoplifting charges were dropped, so now we can concentrate on the DUI charges. Her case goes to court this spring.

"Mrs. Snively just got laid off from the garment factory. They caught her pinching clothes, but since she's been working there since the sixth grade, they aren't pressing charges.

"Mr. Snively is doing as well as can be expected." (You notice how there is never any claim for authorship on these letters. Who writes the damn thing? Some out of work author who finds you through telephone solicitation — ''Hey, this is Joe the Writer, would you like me to write your Christmas letter for you this year? Just $50 for five pages.'

"Mr. Snively just got promoted at Starvin' Marvin. He was moved from nights to days. Course that means he'll have to shave at least every other day now. But that's the price of success.

"Big vacation planned this year. The Snivelys will be taking in the bicity bowling tournament this year."

Not quite, but nearly as annoying as these letters is the hoopla over the Super Bowl, which is so high and mighty they only write about it in Roman numerals. And who said Latin was a dead language.

I think we're at version XXXII.

I've never watched a SB of any Roman numeral designation. For one thing the pregame hype, which is practically unavoidable can never be matched by the game itself. It's a lot more exciting trying to guess which guesser will be the correct guesser when it comes to the game's outcome.

They have more reasons for their picks than my dog has fleas.

So by game time, I'm looking for something else to do. From what I can gather, it's a good thing because the highlights of SBs past have always been the commercials.

You know, the ones the beer people, athletic gear manufacturers, car and chip makers, etc., unveil at $1.3 million for 30 seconds. But, hey, those commercials will be around for awhile, so why fret about missing them the first time out of the blocks?

But don't expect the same excitement from the game.

And what can you expect? These guys are tired. First they just finished a long season, then you take them out of their natural habitat — the frigid air of Green Bay for instance, and stick them in some sunny climate or domed stadium and expect the players and fans to get excited over the whole thing. No way.

Oh I'm sure there'll be one or two BIG plays during the four hours it takes to get it over with, but a close game? There may have been one or two in years past, but it's like taking money to the bank, bet on the NFC.

Yeah, I know, people think a mediocre quarterback who's been to the big dance three times already finally should win one.

Hey man, he's got to earn it. Packers ain't going in there being sentimental. It's like saying Fort Benning shouldn't be in the competition for the Commander-in-Chief's Award for best Army installation in the world because Fort Benning won too many times already so let some other post win. How do you think that post will feel, knowing it didn't beat out the best. Oh, someone decided to do that!

Well anyway, come SB XXXII night, you won't find me in front of whatever channel it's airing on. I'll be out back picking fleas off of Ralfe.

Writer needs to see movies elsewhere

To say that I am disappointed after reading Sgt. Marc G. Turchin's commentary on the playing of the national anthem at Wynnsong 10 is an understatement.

Where are the values that built this country from barren wilderness to the greatest nation under the sun? That Turchin feels standing for the national anthem is "having to prove his patriotism" and "is more of a waste of time before the feature presentation is shown" disturbs me.

Like Turchin, I am also nearly 30 years old and saw the same movies he did years ago. But unlike Turchin, I have stood for the national anthem at movie theaters before — and each experience has moved me; standing side by side, civilian and Soldier, citizens together sharing a common ideal.

The sarcastic prediction that "next we'll have to say the 'Pledge of Allegiance' before we order anything from the concession stand" is simply in bad taste. Yes, I agree that there should be a flag flying on the screen and I'm sure there will be one soon. But Turchin, if you feel that you are pressured or forced to show your patriotism, then exercise yet another of your constitutional rights: Go to the movie theater at Peachtree.

— 1st Lt. David Moore
Fort Benning

Anthem revives theater tradition

Playing the national anthem in theaters shows respect for Soldiers who currently and have previously served in the defense of our country.

I do remember the first time standing up for the national anthem in a post theater during the 1960s at Fort Ord, Calif. My father told me to stand. He explained later the reason we stand is to show respect to brave Soldiers who gave up their lives throughout history for the defense of our country, so we can now enjoy, as Americans, freedom of choice.

One does not show patriotism by standing up for the flag or national anthem, this is called respect. However, one who serves in defense of the flag and national anthem is showing patriotism.

It has been a long time since I have seen the American flag on the movie screen with the national anthem playing. I never thought of the theater darkness as being a hindrance or waste of time to paying respect for those who serve my country.

What is really a waste of time is the soda and candy commercials you are bombarded with before the feature film begins. Considering you just walked through the lobby where the concession stand is stocked with popcorn, candy and soda, in large enough quantities to feed a small army.

I can tell you why I feel the national anthem is not played in civilian movie theaters. Like usual, civilians have a habit of taking their freedoms for granted. If one minute of your time is too much to show respect for these individuals, remember those who gave their lives so you could have that choice.

It is amazing that those who are unwilling to serve this country are not willing enough to give one minute of their time to remember those who have.

Thank you Wynnsong 10 theater for taking the time to show your respect to our nation's Soldiers who help preserve our country's freedom.

— Emilio Barriga
Columbus

Anthem has place in post theaters

I felt compelled to respond to the issue presented in the Jan. 16 edition of the Bayonet about the national anthem being played in the Wynnsong Theater.

This is a surprisingly touchy subject to many of us. What I would like to express is my disagreement with the people who don't want the anthem played before a movie.

I do not question Sgt. Marc G. Turchin's patriotism or anyone else's for that matter. I know Turchin and I know he's dedicated to the United States of America and the U.S. Army. I would say, however, that the same freedom that lets us say we don't like certain things about our country is represented by the anthem.

I know I am not alone in saying that I have lost family members while they were fighting for the country represented by the national anthem. I would go so far as to accuse anyone not feeling a little pride while hearing the anthem of being in the wrong country. You are definitely in the wrong place if you're here on Fort Benning.

I know that the commentary presented in the Bayonet will rouse the ire of many, but it is the same right that lets us sound off that make this country as great as it is. I feel that not only is the anthem appropriate in the theaters on military installations, it should be mandatory. If moviegoers feel so strongly that they don't want to put down their overpriced popcorn and the supermega big gulp that holds more liquid than the human bladder, to show proper respect for the anthem then perhaps they should go to a theater off post.

ITB honors King

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

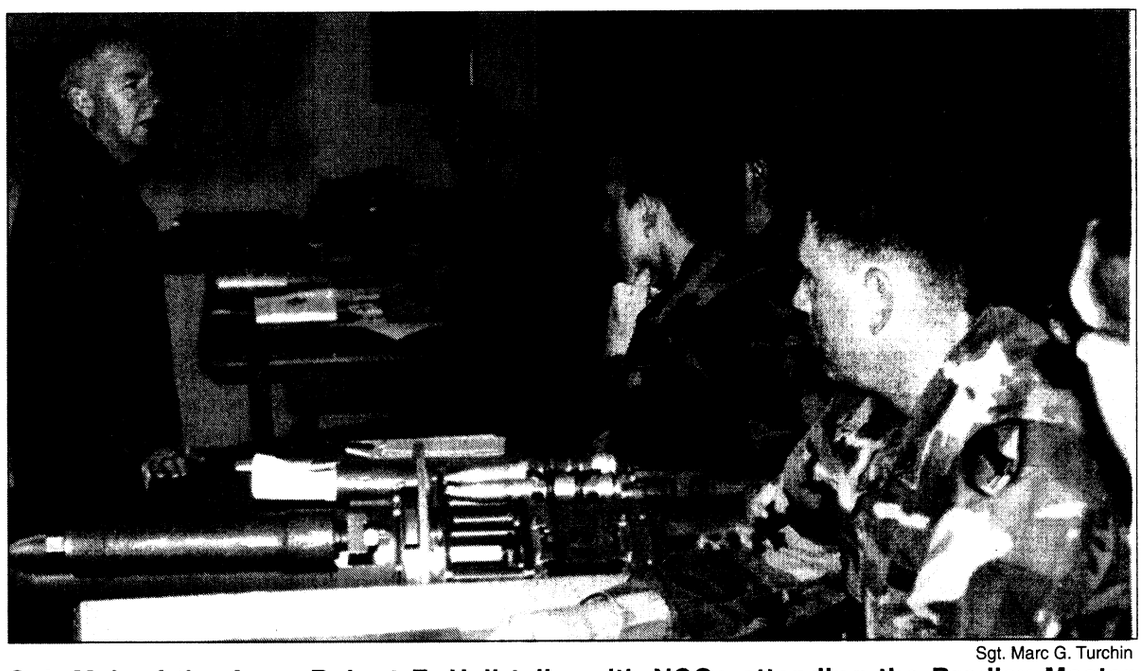
The Infantry Training Brigade celebrated Martin Luther King Jr. day during a luncheon at the Sand Hill Recreation Center Jan. 13.

More than 300 people attended the luncheon, which was made possible by Paul Lawrence, manager of the recreation center. The guest speaker was the Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters. Peters spoke about equality and judging people by the contents of their character. Peters also thanked everyone for inviting him.

"I have never seen a more energetic commander in my life," Peters said as he introduced Pedro Rivera, who retired as the commandant of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

"I wanted to first thank you for the military and civilian relationship. We will support you anyway we can, as well as I know that you support us," Rivera said.

"Determination that we have unity in our community, is a real determination. We are not perfect on that, but we are working on it. Our most important project that we do is to bring the people of this community together, Rivera said.



"Most of us that use the words of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. want all people to be judged 'Not by the color of their skin but by the content of their character'," Rivera said. "I certainly can't stand here and say I have been discriminated against because of my race, but I know what it feels like because years ago when I applied to get into the police department they said you can't do it because you're too short. You had to be 5 foot 8 inches and I am only 5 foot and 6 inches so they denied my application. Now today as mayor and safety commissioner, I am in charge of the police department."

The event was attended by many distinguished people, most of who were previous guest speakers.

A special thanks was given to Capt. James Blount who spoke at the MLK ceremony last year. Coach Lenny Wilkens was also thanked for his participation in the Black History Month celebration. Dr. Beth Middlemiss, principle at Faith Middle School was recognized for her participation in Women's History Month.

"These people were mentioned and attended the ceremony to show not only their support for Dr. Martin Luther King, but to show how diversified the ITB is in their celebrations," said Sgt. 1st Class Paul D. Horton.

"Last night in preparation for today's program, I had a dream that if Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was alive today, someway, somehow, he would be a part of the Equal Opportunity program at the ITB." quality of life.

"We'll continue to work for single Soldiers' quality of life, but we're also going to work the quality of life for married Soldiers," Hall said. "Soldiers are concerned about how and where they live — be it barracks or family housing.

"We'll eventually get somewhere close to a one-plus-one concept in the Army," he said. "It will take time and money. At the same time, you're looking at initiative to improve the quality of life for our married forces. Over half the Army is married these days. In the end, we'll work the total Army quality of life package."

Earlier in the day, Hall had the opportunity to speak to NCOs going through the Bradley Fighting Vehicle Master Gunner Course. Here, he told the NCOs not to let their standards fall.

"Your biggest challenge is to maintain the standards," Hall said. "Make sure you train to task, standard and condition. Enforce the standards upon your subordinates and maintain the standards yourselves. If you do that while maintaining dignity and respect and doing what's right legally and morally everyday, that's all you have to do."

Before leaving post, Hall attended Fort Benning's Command Retreat Ceremony held in Marshal Auditorium. This ceremony allows the post's Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst an opportunity to thank community members for doing great work and supporting the post.

Hall said the Army, like those honored at the ceremony, continues to do good things.

"The Army is in great shape," he said. Soldiers are doing great work everyday. NCOs are responsible for everyone of those great Soldiers out there.

Kuwait: Soldiers practice land nav

Force 1-30 Soldiers are becoming acquainted with their environment — they're finding out just what it takes to navigate the seemingly endless middle-eastern desert.

"I'm learning to use terrain association along with the GPS (Global Positioning System) to navigate," said Pfc. Eddie Lardell, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor. Lardell was one of many Soldiers who recently conducted land navigation training here.

The land navigation training was scheduled to teach Soldiers how to effectively move about in the desert terrain.

According to Sgt. 1st Class William Tager, 1st Platoon sergeant, Co. D, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, the desert has its share of surprises. For instance, markers set out to be used as navigational reference points have mysteriously disappeared into the sands. As for the berms — protective barriers standing as remnants of past training missions — they conceal a hazard in the form of holes left by Kuwaiti companies scouring the desert for gravel.

For these reasons, and the fact the featureless terrain distorts the observer's depth perception — which prevents accurate artillery range estimation — learning to navigate in the desert is extremely important to Task Force 1-30 Soldiers.

He said, "It doesn't matter what your station and status in life are all about, but it does matter that you understand that when there are negative things happening around you, you'll be American enough, God-like enough and human enough to say no — that is his legacy."

Sabrina Scott, who works in the resource management division of the Directorate of Operations and Training, said she enjoyed the ceremony and was moved by the presentation.

"Everyone came together as one, and that's what Martin Luther King Jr. was all about," she said.

Logistics director plans to retire

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Most people look forward to their retirement, in fact, some even count the days until that 'glorious' day.

After more than 36 years of government service, Dale E. Ellis is no exception as he prepares to step down Jan. 30 as Fort Benning's Director of Logistics.

"I think people just know when it's time. I could surely work for many more years in reasonably good health, but it wears on you after this number of years. It's time to let someone else have that challenge," Ellis said.

The 62-year-old Thermopolis, Wyo., native held the post's top logistics spot for the past 13 years, during which he has had to face many challenges.

"Downsizing definitely hasn't made it easy. It (DOL's job) gets harder every day, or at least it seems to me," Ellis said as he described the many facets of the logistics directorate, which includes maintenance, supply and transportation divisions.

Although his daily missions may have been challenging if not stressful, Ellis said there are many things he will never forget about his time here.

"I'll never forget the feeling of pride when we put aircraft and Soldiers on the ground during deployments like Just Cause in 1989 and Desert Storm," said Ellis, who holds degrees in both geology and industrial engineering.

Ellis

Ellis was not always leading from the top, though, as he began his civil service career in 1961 as an industrial engineer intern for a naval shipyard in Washington.

It wasn't until 1979 that Ellis found himself on Fort Benning's doorstep.

Coming from Fort Carson, Colo., Ellis said that August in Georgia was something to behold.

"I can still remember after all these years, stepping off the airplane, feeling the hot air hit my face and thinking, 'what did I get myself into'," Ellis said with a smile.

The University of Wyoming graduate initially filled the chief of maintenance slot for DOL and was later promoted to his current position.

Mike Ware, chief of DOL's supply and services division, has worked with Ellis for the past nine years, and said he will be sorely missed.

"He is the epitome of 'Mr. Logistics'," Ware said. "He's a mentor to a whole bunch of us as to how to accomplish these things. I don't know anyone who takes a greater interest in taking care of soldiers than Dale Ellis."

Ken Strumpler, who is currently chief of DOL's maintenance division, has been named as an interim replacement for Ellis.

Ellis said his successor will do fine as long as he remembers a few important words of advice.

"He just shouldn't forget there's a lot of people out there who are capable of doing their job. It's our job to let them do their job and to empower them."

Despite his approaching retirement date, Ellis said he has yet to make plans for what to do afterward.

"I'm sure there'll be something out there to keep me busy," laughed Ellis, who is thinking of volunteering or even starting his own business.

One thing Ellis does know for sure is that he and wife Jan will initially remain in the Columbus area.

"We have three daughters and all have married Georgia boys. They all have kids now, which kind of means I have a lot of roots in this part of the country. Whether I like it or not, Georgia is home now."

post briefs

Auto craft shop to close for class

Main Post Auto Crafts, located on Way Street, will be closed Jan. 28 to Feb. 1 for a mandatory class.

Kelley Hill Auto Crafts will be open from 1:15 to 9 p.m. Mondays, Tuesdays and Fridays and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sundays. The shop is closed Saturdays.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas takes place Monday through Jan. 31. If weather permits, the following compartments will be affected: A-13, B-4, B-6, F-3, G-3, I-3, K-5, K-7, K-9, K-10, M-4, M-5, M-7, R-1, T-5, U-2, V-2, V-3, X-1 and Z-3.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas.

Personnel proposing to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility.

Render honor to the flag, national anthem

Upon hearing the national anthem, everyone on post is expected to face the music and salute.

While in civilian clothes, one places their hand over their heart and stands at attention. If in a vehicle and one hears the national anthem, they should stop the vehicle, get out and salute.

When with a group in a military vehicle or bus, riders should stay in the vehicle and only the individual in charge will exit the vehicle and salute.

The same rules apply when the flag is being raised in the morning and lowered in the evening.

These honors also apply to the flags and national anthems of foreign countries during ceremonies and parades.

AER celebrates birthday

Army Emergency Relief will celebrate 56 years of service Feb. 5.

From 9 a.m. to noon, stop by Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, for a piece of birthday cake.

AER is a private nonprofit organization which provides emergency financial aid to Soldiers and family members.

Post tax centers to open Feb. 2

The Fort Benning Tax Office will open Feb. .2 in Classroom 1, Infantry Hall. The hours will be 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The 3rd Brigade Tax Center will be located in the brigade Legal Center, Building 9025.

Electronic tax filing is available for most federal returns. Many state and federal tax forms are also available.

Limited evening and weekend dates will be scheduled.

For more information, call Capt. David Barrett at 545-3281.

Units set to graduate from training

The One Station Unit Training graduation ceremony for Co. E, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Reg. and Co. E, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Reg. is set for Thursday at 9 a. m. on Kanell Field.

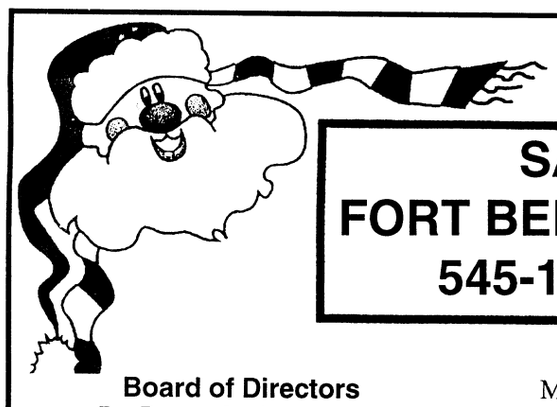
Hawaii pet import requirements change

The state of Hawaii now requires all dogs and cats entering the state to have an electronic microchip implant (issued by the state itself). Additionally, there is now an option for a 30-day quarantine if specific pre-requirements are met well in advance.

If you have pets and anticipate a PCS to Hawaii in the near future, please contact Veterinary Service at 545-4444 or 545-5690 for more information.

Fort Benning to test tornado sirens

Fort Benning will test the tornado sirens at noon, the first Saturday of every month. The test will not occur in the event of bad weather.



ID Card Section takes appointments

Main Post ID Card Branch has an appointment system for more convenient service. Personnel with appointments have priority over walk-ins and are seen within five minutes of their scheduled appointment time.

Walk-ins are always welcome but appointments are highly encouraged. The appointment desk phone number is 545-4068. Operating hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday to Friday, and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday.

Special Forces briefs continue on post

The Special Forces recruiting office conducts briefings at 6 p.m. every Tuesday and 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. every Wednesday in McVeigh Hall, Building 75B, Room 408. For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class David Boyer at 545-3079.

Soldiers earn top titles

By Susie Kim
Editorial assistant

Cpl. Damen Torres and Spc. Rebekah Champouillion were named the Noncommissioned officer and Soldier of the year for 1997.

According to Col. John Latimer, chief of Staff, U. S. Army Infantry School, the Army is at its best because of the quality of the Soldiers.

"Quality Soldiers do not walk off the street and into units," Latimer said. "Soldiers become what they are because of the NCO."

Soldiers expect their leaders to be physically fit, knowledgeable about the technical aspect of their training and have the ability to lead their Soldiers, Latimer said.

According to Latimer, Torres and Champouillion epitimize these qualities.

Champouillion who is currently assigned to Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, is the Soldier of the Year. Some of the awards she has include Army Service Ribbon, National Defense Medal, Basic Parachutist Badge and the German Parachutist Badge.

Torres who is currently assigned to 988th Military Police Company is the NCO of the Year. Some of the awards Torres has includes Army Commendation Medal, Army Achievement Medal, Army Service Ribbon, NCO Professional development Ribbon, National Defense Service Ribbon and the Physical Fitness Badge.

"The honorees for this year did not just study hard," Latimer said, "each had NCOs around to train, mentor, and encourage these honorees into the Soldiers they are today."

What Soldiers want to know is not how much leaders know, Latimer said, but how much leaders care.

Both Soldiers received gifts from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, the Association of the U.S. Army, Four-in-One Restaurant, Columbus Bank and Trust, First Union Bank, TIC Federal Credit Union, Express Boots Repair, Freeway Ford, Geico Insurance, the Ledger Enquirer, MBA, McCoy Environment, the Noncommissioned Officers Association, Pioneer Military Lending, Ranger Joes, Regency Jewlers, the Sergeants Major Association, Sprint, UAFA, U.S. Cavalary and USPA.

Job research before leaving Army can pay off

Army Career and Alumni Program

When entering the civilian job market, do your homework first.

"Separating Soldiers will find transition back to civilian life less stressful if they conduct some research before beginning the ACAP process," said Chick Eagle, Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) counselor at the Fort Benning ACAP Center. ACAP counselors have helped thousands of Soldiers develop a job search strategy.

"The best strategy is one built around a sound career plan developed through research by the separating Soldier and family," he said.

"The Army teaches many skills and affords ample opportunity to gain experience. But, it is the responsibility of the separating Soldier to research the job market and decide, if possible, what career path is best for him or her," Eagle said. "If time and circumstances permit, we advise conducting visits to job sites, companies, offices, police departments, schools and training programs or wherever more information is needed about jobs, qualifications and the application process.

"High on the priority list of separating Soldiers is civilian pay and benefits. Finding out about pay and benefits requires not only good research but also detailed analysis of current military base pay, housing, food, medical, dental, and insurance to arrive at what is needed to support a desired lifestyle," Eagle said. He said the best way to get more information is to ask around.

"Perhaps talking to friends and others for information about careers, pay and businesses can help," Eagle said. "People like to talk about what they do and how they got there. This kind of friendly interrogation can help transitioning personnel find out whether they are really suited for a particular job or not.

"Some Soldiers, with permission from their chain of command, have found part-time employment off post to research first hand the civilian job market," Eagle said.

According to Eagle, the ACAP Center is a good place to meet employers and do some research. Watch the paper or visit the ACAP Center for upcoming events.

For ACAP eligibility, scheduling and information, call or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza, 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Martin Army Community Hospital

Maj. Clayton Neil, a nurse at Martin Army Community Hospital, is this year's recipient of the Mary Bishop Award. The Mary Bishop Award is named after the founder of the Uniformed Nurse Practitioner Association, a non-profit organization of nurse practitioners and certified nurse midwives serving in or working for the Army, Navy, Air Force and the Public Health Service.

Neil, a former president of the association, has been responsible for improvements in membership, enrollment, conference quality and interservice cooperation over the past eight years.

This award is the highest honor a member can receive. He is the only officer to ever receive this award.

CG honors Fort Benning's best

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Army Communities of Excellence (ACOE) team and Sgt. Maj. of the Army Michael Hall participated in the first Two-Star Excellence Breakfast of 1998, Jan. 16 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst welcomed the ACOE team that was visiting the post to check out Fort Benning's submission for the communities of excellence award, the sergeant major of the Army and Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians by saying that he was proud to show off Fort Benning — and the breakfast was a way to say thank you to those who helped the post become the best Army installation in the world.

Ernst told the crowd that one of the reasons Fort Benning was great was because of the three 250-foot airborne towers.

"Even if the sky is falling everywhere else, at Fort Benning we have the 250-foot towers to hold up the sky," he said.

Survey to check troop climate

By Sgt. 1st Class Connie Dickey
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A recent policy change will soon require commanders to do a command climate survey within 90 days of assuming command.

"It is all positive attributes, there is nothing negative about this survey. It is for all the right reasons. It is not to identify poor commanders, it is not to identify poor units, it is a tool to make a unit better," said Brig. Gen. Clayton Melton, director of human resources within the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

He explained the policy has changed not for any specific reason, but because of a combination of things, such as, the Army's drawdown, the shift in mission, the change in operation tempo and the attempt to provide more predictability on what Soldiers are doing in their units.

"It is a very positive requirement because it is another way we (Department of the Army) are recognizing the fact there has to be an assessment at lower levels. Corporate America uses surveys all the time to measure the workforce's attitude, to measure the working environment, so why shouldn't we use some of these things that have been proven to work?"

Instructions will be sent out on how to administer the survey and once the Army is sure leaders understand it, the requirement will be enacted, probably by Spring 1998. However, the survey is available now and some units are already using it.

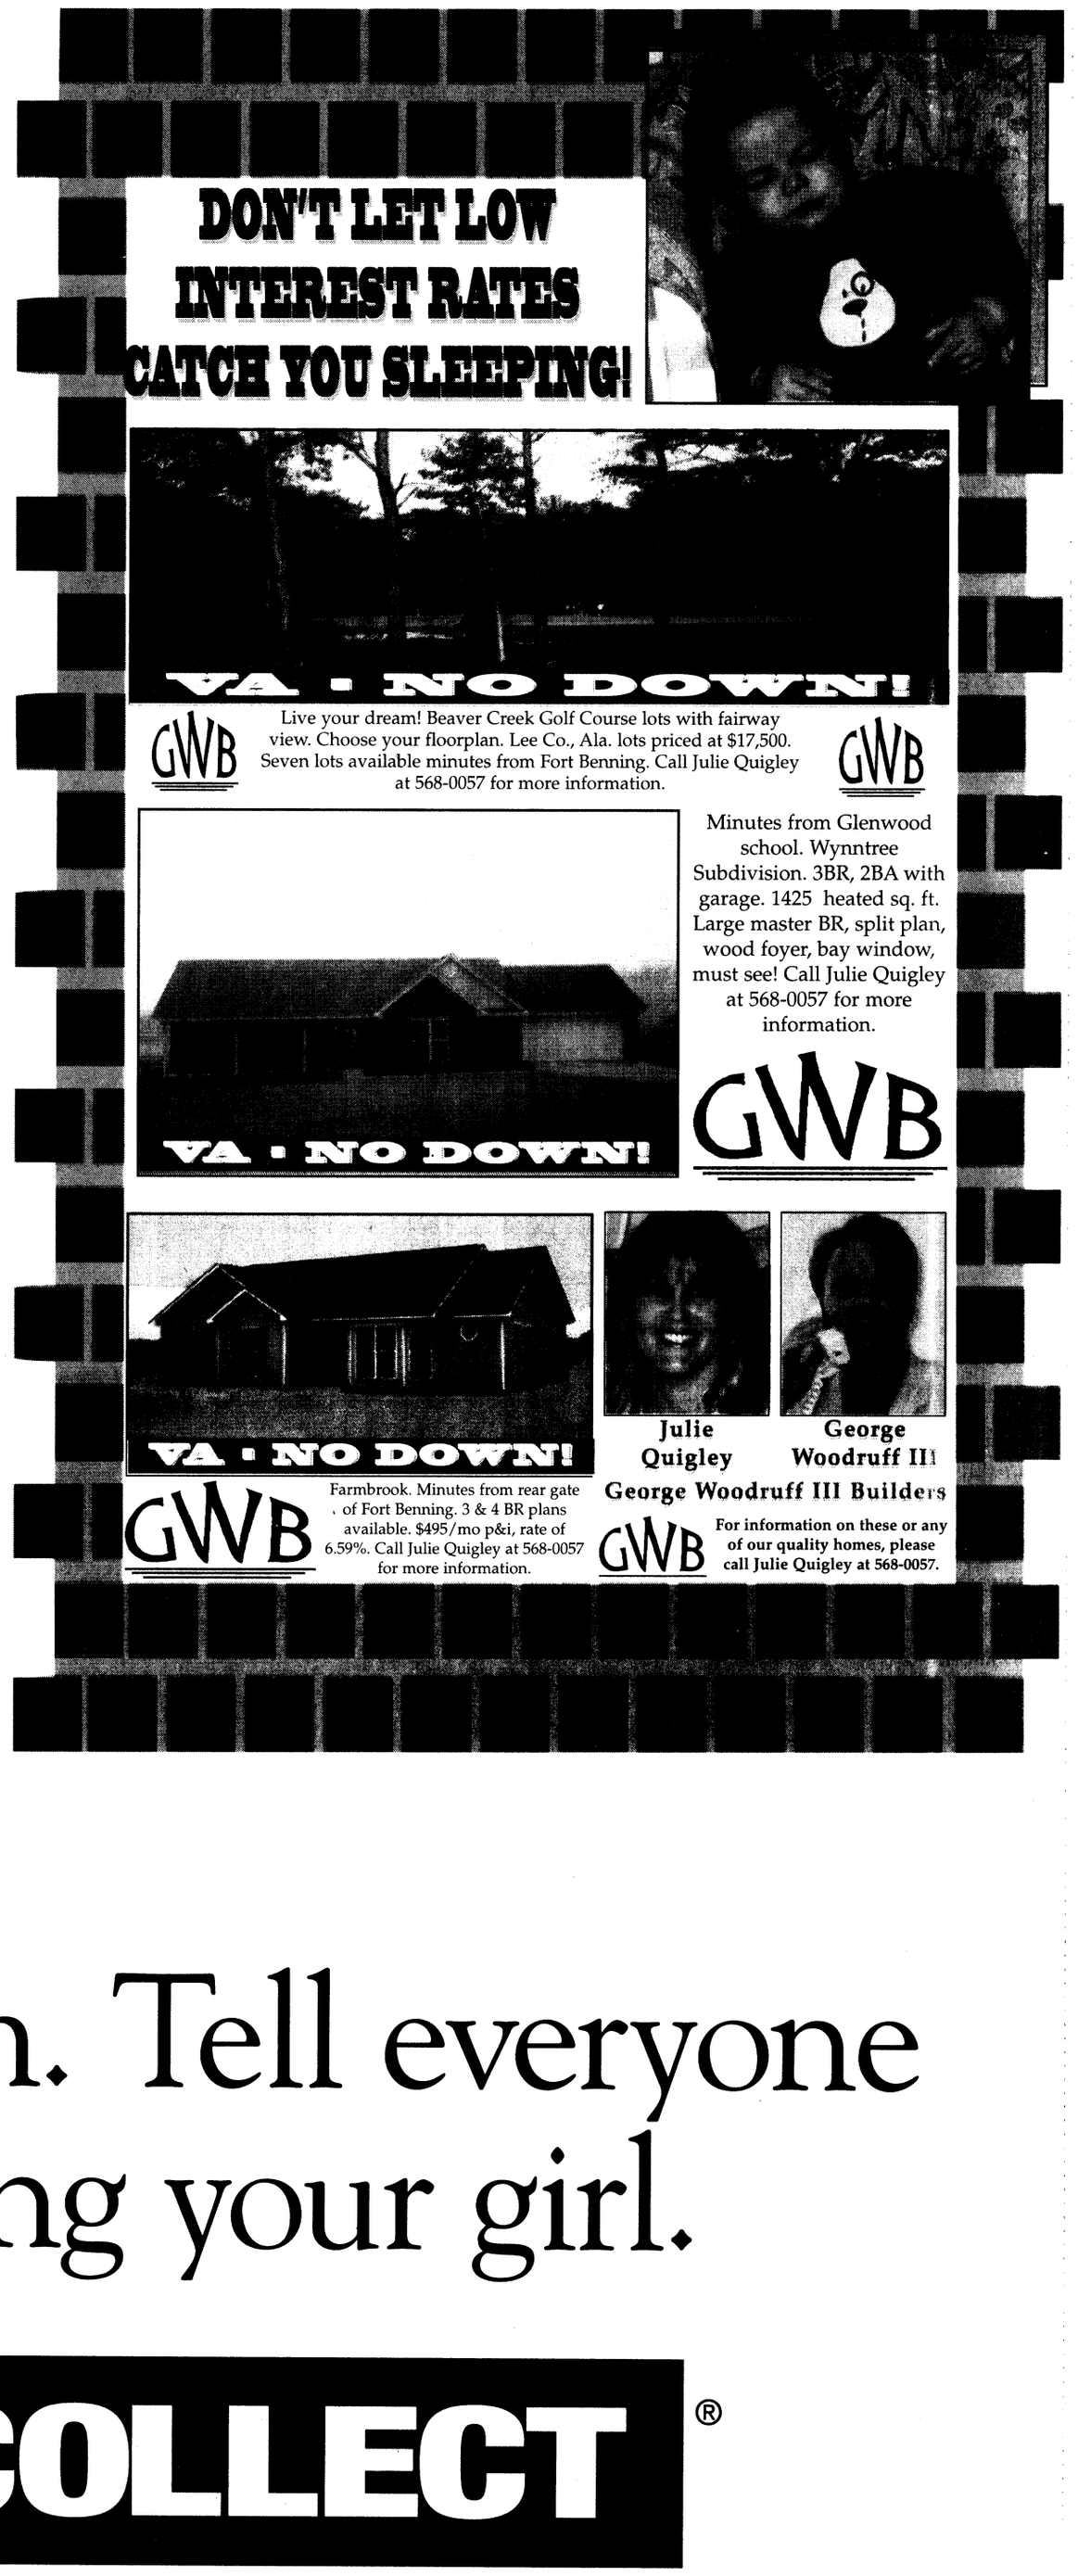
Melton said although the survey and requirement have been in the works for awhile, the incidents that surfaced this past year involving Aberdeen Proving Ground probably gave it some momentum and said, "we are looking at everything we can do so this does not happen again."

He acknowledged too the survey doesn't adequately address a training environment where Initial Entry Training is done. "We could probably do a better job on focusing on those issues in a training environment and we're working on that."

The 24-question survey addresses an array of issues with simple questions addressing unit readiness, racial climate, sexual harassment and predictability of what the Soldiers are to do in the unit. It also includes two comment-type questions. Melton said Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, set the tone for the survey and even came up with some of the questions.

Two questions from the survey ask, "Usually, how far in advance do you know the unit training schedule; that is, where you will be and what you will be doing?" and "To what extent do the persons in your chain of command treat you with respect?" Both of these questions have a multiple choice response.

Soldiers who would like to see the survey can access it through the worldwide web. The address is: www.odcsper.army.mil (after entering this site, select "Information Index" then "Human Resources" then "Command Climate Survey".)



Melton emphasized that neither the company commander nor the members of the unit need fear the survey. He said that 100 percent of the Soldiers are to be surveyed, but it is anonymous and the surveys do not go anywhere once the commander retrieves the data needed.

"We determined that at the company level you should have a mandatory instrument where the soldiers are surveyed on a periodic basis to see how we are doing. We want the commander to take ownership of the survey," Melton said, explaining the intention is for the commander to introduce the survey to the unit, explain it, administer it, score it and give feedback to the company.

"We will give instructions on how to score the survey, and the commander will use the survey results to help identify areas to address. The survey is to assist the commander in the execution of their responsibilities, and the commander's responsibility is to know their Soldiers," Melton said.

"A good commander will use the required survey in combination with personal observations, sensing sessions, feedback from subordinate leaders, so they can get a handle of predictability of what's going on in their unit."

Beginning Feb. 1, the Main and Mini Mall Post Exchanges will have a new guest visitation policy.

Third-graders at McBride Elementary School are keeping up with the times with a new club, the math technology club.

The club was established by principal Del Hicks and started the first week of December.

Third-graders voluntarily attend the club, which is 3:15 to 4:15 p.m. every Wednesday.

Since the club started, one-third of the 63 third-grade students have joined.

"I like math and computers," said third-grader Chris Kline, son of Rilla and Sgt. William Kline, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity. "When you do math it helps you think. I like computers because of the games you can play and what you learn."

Hicks said he believes the school day is too short to accomplish everything students want to do.

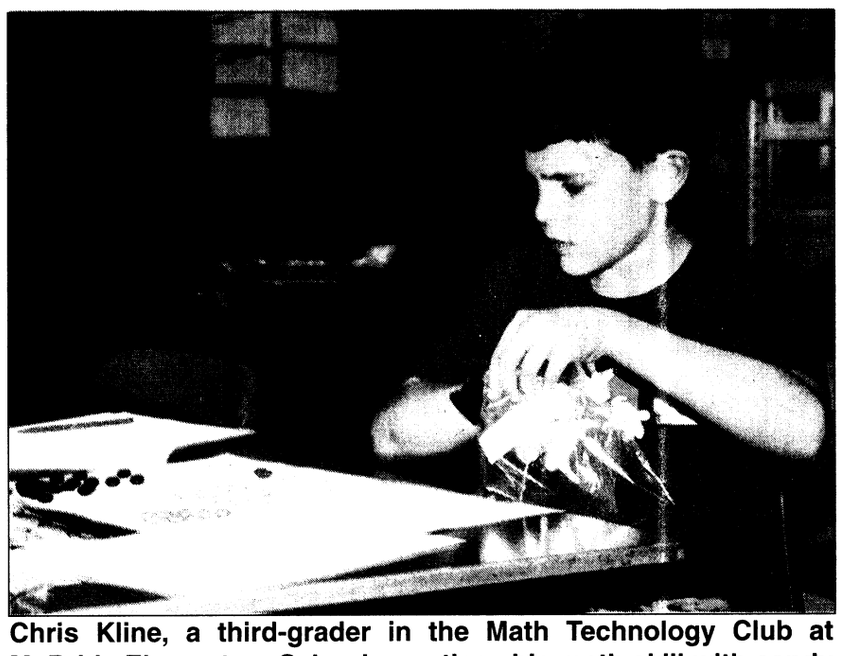
"Kids like to do fun, educational stuff," Hicks said. "They like and enjoy technology and math. They choose to be here and they can do more because they have the extra time to do so."

Third-grade teacher Brenda Lynem and educational technologist Jean Batey volunteered to run the club.

"I volunteered for the club so kids would have the chance to have fun with math," Lynem said. "The kids really enjoy math and seem to enjoy the club. They love the computers and what they get to do with them."

During the Jan. 14 club meeting, students learned 14 different math skills using M&M candies.

Each student was given a plastic baggie full of the candies. First the students predicted how many of the candies they thought were in the bag and what color they had the most. Then they compared and contrasted their prediction with the actual number.



The students sorted the candies by color and counted how many of each color they had. Using these figures, the students converted them to fractions, even though they haven't yet learned fractions.

"The club gives students the chance to do advance math," said Lynem.

Hicks said the eventual goal of the the club is to get parents to volunteer and help with club activities.

"Parents have abilities they can share with us and our children," Hicks said. "We believe in achievement, high self-esteem and have fun while learning."

Before being able to eat their candy students had to make a pattern with the candy.

Chris Kline, a third-grader in the Math Technology Club at McBride Elementary School, practices his math skill with candy at a recent meeting of the club.

Hicks would like to see more clubs established in the future.

"We want kids to take a chance and explore," Hicks said. "We believe all kids can learn. When a youngster can tell you how they arrived at their answer, then they've learned."

Georgia Advantage

Initiative saves college students $$

Georgia Student Finance Commission

ATLANTA — A new college loan discount program for Georgia students was announced recently by the Georgia Student Finance Commission (GSFC).

Called Georgia Advantage, the new initiative is designed to save students money and reward good financial habits.

On a typical $10,000 loan, a student will save $865 by participating in the program.

Student loans disbursed on or after July 1, 1997 will be eligible for Georgia Advantage.

"Our mission is to increase access to education beyond high school for Georgia students GSFC executive director Glenn Newsome said. "The Georgia Advantage program will reduce the debt students face when they graduate and have to begin repaying their loans, plus it eliminates the hassle of writing a check every month."

Six months after graduation, students who have taken out a federal Stafford loan to finance their undergraduate or graduate education must begin repayment.

Here are the three ways Georgia Advantage will save students money:

•Students who agree to automatically deduct their loan repayments from their checking account will have their loan interest rate reduced by .25 percent. On a $10,000 loan, that's a savings of $241.

•If a student borrows more than $8,333 and makes the first 24 scheduled repayments on time (no later than 10 days after the due date), the student earns a partial credit or the loan origination fee. On a $10,000 loan, that is a savings of $93.

•After 48 on-time payments, the student's loan interest rate will decrease by 2 percent for the remaining repayment period. This will save the student $531 on a $10,000 student loan.

"By making repayment simple, and rewarding students who pay on time," Newsome said, "the Georgia Advantage program encourages students to establish good financial habits that will benefit them throughout their lifetime."

What is a Georgia Advantage Stafford Loan?

It's a federal guaranteed student loan to help you pay for college—but with some special features to save you money. It works like any other Stafford Loan, allowing you to borrow for undergraduate or graduate study. The "advantage" is when you start paying back your loan — you start saving. Loans taken out after July 1, 1997 are eligible for Georgia Advantage.

How will Georgia Advantage save me money?

With a Georgia Advantage Stafford Loan, money can be saved three ways. On a $ 10,000 loan, you can save $865. Here's how:

•Interest rate discount for Auto-Debit Payment

If you have your monthly payment automatically deducted from your checking account, you'll reduce the interest rate on your student loan by .25 percent. It's easy to set up this repayment option, and you also avoid the inconvenience of mailing your payment each month—no more scrambling around looking for a stamp and an envelope. How much can you save? On a $10,000 student loan, the Auto-Debit Payment can save you $241.

•On-time payments earn Principal Reduction

If you borrow more than $8,333 and make your first 24 scheduled payments on time, you'll earn a reduction in the amount you owe on your loan. Your good payment record on your Georgia Advantage Stafford Loan earns you a partial credit of the loan origination fee paid when you first took out the loan. Every dollar over the $250 that was paid to the federal government will be credited against the amount you owe on your loan. It's our way of rewarding student borrowers who pay on time. On a $10,000 loan, this translates into a $93 savings.

•On-time payments earn an Interest Reduction

By paying your Georgia Advantage Stafford Loan on time, you can also earn an interest reduction. After 48 on-time payments, your loan's interest rate will drop by 2% for the remaining repayment period. This can save you $531 on a $10,000 student loan.

May we send you a Georgia Advantage Stafford Loan application?

The Georgia Student Finance Authority a part of the Georgia Student Finance Commission, is your Georgia Advantage lender. Please call us at (770) 414-3000 in Metro Atlanta or toll-free at (800) 776-6878 for an application. We'll also be glad to answer any questions that you may have. Or visit us on the Internet at www.gsfc.org. We're ready to help you save money on your student loan.

Faith seeks volunteers for writing project

Faith Middle School

Writing is a major portion of the language arts curriculum at Faith Middle School and this year the writing process is receiving even more emphasis as teachers and parents join together in a new pilot project.

Parents will join teachers in providing feedback to students about writing samples students produce.

"We're looking for 20 Faith parents," said Dr. Beth Middlemiss, principal, Faith School. "These parents will train along with members of our teaching staff to evaluate student writing using a set of simple, written guidelines.

"We believe it will be an interesting project for parents, while also providing them insight into the specific guidelines we will be using to assess many of our future writing assignments."

Middlemiss said no special qualifications are needed for this volunteer assignment.

Though the project will work with only samples of eighth-grade writing this year, parents from all three grade levels are needed.

No student names will appear on the samples. Student writings will be identified by a number known only to their language arts teacher.

What is needed is a commitment of volunteer time — time to be trained and time to participate in the group that works together to assess the student writing samples. Volunteers will need to agree to participate in all three of the sessions listed below:

A training session from 1 to 3:30 p.m. today, an assessment session from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Feb. 5 and an assessment session from 9 to 11:30 a.m. March 5.

The Faith faculty and Parent-Teacher Organization invite Faith parents to join in the pilot project. They believe Faith students will benefit, and all involved will benefit from the opportunity to participate in this partnership between parents and school staff.

To volunteer or to receive additional information on the Parent-Teacher Writing Assessment and Feedback Pilot Project, call Jean Fry at 689-6049; Cindy Lefler at 682-3913; or Middlemiss at 545-5524.

The NCO's Contribution to Warfare

Bruce Gudmundsson, coauthor of On Infantry, calls this "the best book on ground tactics ... in the last 50 years." Infantry leaders, learn how to: (1) add surprise to standard U.S. tactics, (2) use maneuver warfare at the small-unit level, and (3) enjoy training to the actual threat. There will be no frontlines in the next war, so support personnel will need this one too. It contains the collective common sense of 1200 infantry NCO's, reads like an action novel, and has 250 illustrations. Save lives, send $22.75 to Posterity Press, P.O. Directorate of Public Works Information Corner 'Essayons'

Directorate of Public Works

During the past several months we've received numerous questions about the installation's policies on the Family Housing residents installing fences. The Standing Operation Procedure (SOP) for fences on Fort Benning follows.

Authorized types of fences: The following fence types may be approved.

•Chain link (2" mesh) commercially installed, not to exceed 4 feet in height including top with finished top fencing (no sharp points or exposed edges).

•Redwood or treated pine finished top fencing will be used only as privacy screening, installed either privately or commercially, not to exceed 6 feet in height, plumed and securely set to insure a neat and attractive appearance; having no exposed sharp edges or hazardous extrusions and stained brown in a compatible manner with the installation of excellence. Privacy screening will not enclosed an area. Only a single side of "L" shaped fence is allowed.

To assist you in choosing the right fence for your application, we have photographs of approved fencing on display at the Family Housing Office, Olson Hall, Building 399 or for more information, call Ben Anderson at 545-8323.

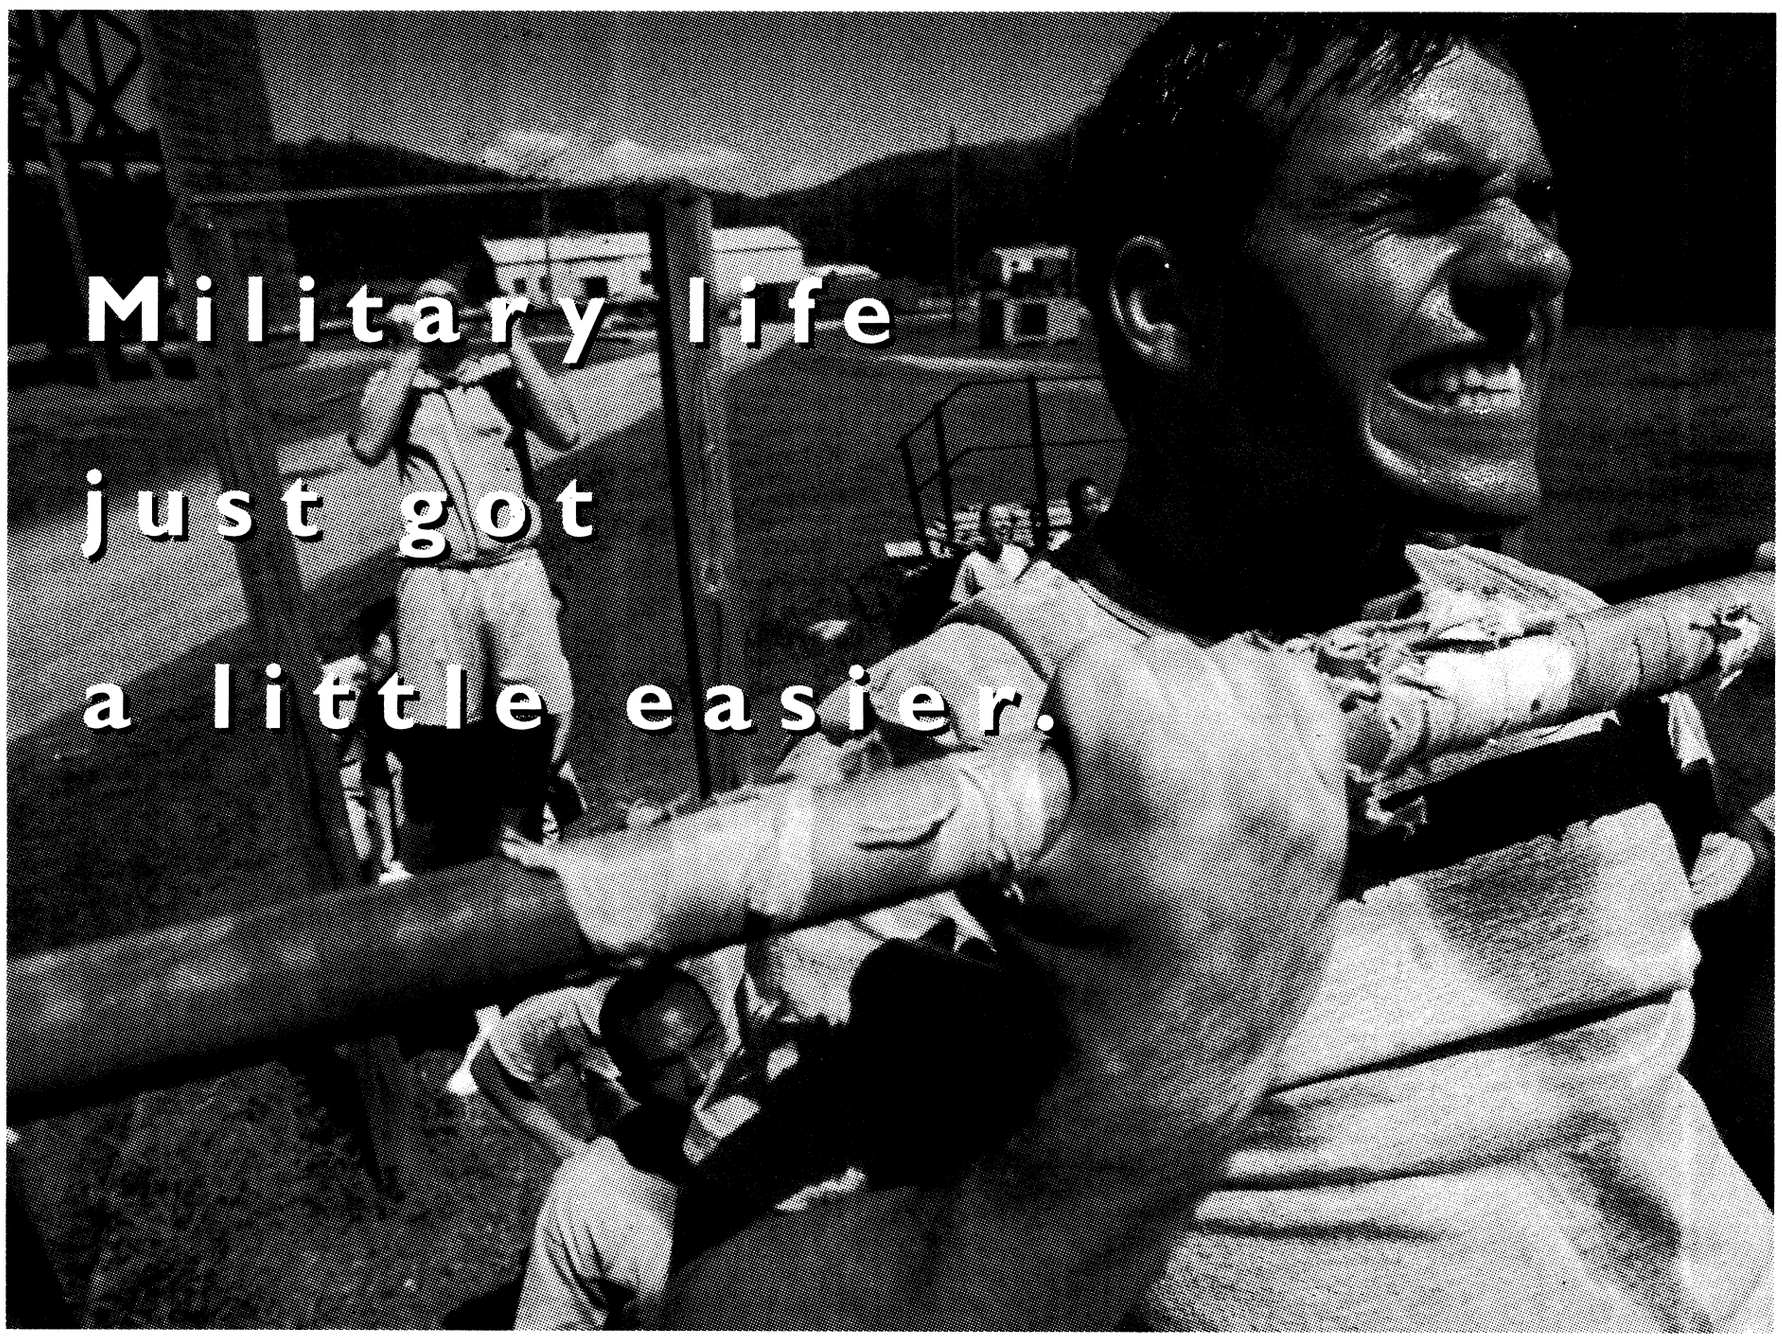
Several points of interest should be seriously considered by the resident prior to installing an authorized fence in the family housing area. All fencing will be rigorously inspected prior to final approval.

Fencing is expensive to purchase, install and remove. Restoration of the area is very difficult. Commercially installed chain link fence is considered to be an improvement and becomes a permanent part of the residence. Other privacy fencing that would cause excessive damage upon removal may also be declared a fixed part of the property and become government property. Upon termination of occupancy, unless declared fixed property, all fencing must be removed and the yard area restored to its original condition prior to final clearance of quarters.

Families residing in multiple dwelling units (four to eight complexes) must be especially cognizant of common use items (e.g. outside hose bibs, equipment rooms, ect.) when considering installation of fencing.

No fencing of any type will be permitted in the front yards or street sides of any residence on Fort Benning.

Approved fencing to the immediate rear yard area must not restrict free access across open public areas. Construction of fencing will allow free passage that will not be impeded in the event a rapid evacuation of quarters becomes necessary and that access and passage of maintenance vehicles, mowers and fire-fighting equipment is available. All fences should have a minimum of one gate exit to allow free passage from the yard without going through the residence. This gate will be constructed in a manner compatible with the surrounding fence. Fencing should not extend more than 50 feet to the rear of quarters. Where chain-link fence has been installed within 50 feet of the rear of quarters, permission may be granted to connect to existing fencing.



The Family Housing Manager or the authorized representative will review each application based on the merit of each case.

For housing units in the Historic District (Old Main Post Area), the Family Housing manager will insure appropriate coordination with the Georgia State Historic Preservation Officer (SHPO) prior to granting approval. No fencing of any kind will be installed prior to approval. Violators will automatically have their application disapproved and subsequent forced removal of fencing at no expense to the government. The Family Housing manager will inform the resident in writing of approval or disapproval and whether the structure is considered permanently fixed property. Written resident concurrence will be required and make a part of Housing records. The Family Housing Manager reserves the right to approved or deny permission in accordance with aforementioned requirement.

Upon receipt of approval (and written tenant acknowledgment of the terms), the applicant my install the fencing he/she has indicated and will inform the Family Housing Branch within five days after completion. Within 30 days after receipt of notification of completion, Family Housing will make an inspection to insure compliance; after which all related subject matter will be make an official part of the resident's housing record. Thereafter, maintenance, upkeep and appearance of the fencing becomes the responsibility of the resident. Failure to comply with prescribed standards will result in immediate removal of fence at resident's expense.

Can we find an explanation for the great universe? Is there any convincing interpretation of the secret of existence?

We realize no family can function properly without a responsible leader, that no city can prosperously exist without sound administration and no state can survive without a leader of some kind.

We realize nothing comes into being on its own. Moreover, we observe the universe exists and functions in a most orderly manner and it has survived for hundreds of thousands of years.

Can we, then, say all this is accidental and haphazard? Can we attribute the existence of man and the whole world to mere chance?

Man represents only a very small portion of the great universe. If he can make plans and appreciate the merits of planning, then his own existence and the survival of the universe must also be based on planned policy.

This means there is a designing will behind our material existence and there is an extraordinary power to bring things into being and keep them moving in order.

In the world there must be a great force in action to keep everything in order. In the beautiful nature there must be a great creator who creates the most charming pieces of art and produces everything for a special purpose in life.

Enlightened Muslim people recognize this creator and call him "Allah" God.

He is not a man because no man can create or make another man. He is not an animal, nor is he a plant. He is neither an idol nor is he a statue of any kind because none of these things can create anything else. He is different from all these things, because he is the maker and keeper of them all. The maker of anything must be different from and greater than the things that he makes.

There are various ways to know "Allah" God and there are many things to tell about him.

The great wonders and impressive marvels of the world are like open books in which we can read about Allah.

Allah himself comes to our aid through the many messengers and revelations he has sent down to man.

These messengers and revelations tell us everything we need to know about Allah.

The complete acceptance of the teachings and guidance of Allah as revealed to his messenger Mohammed is the religion of Islam.

Islam enjoins faith in the oneness and sovereignty of Allah, which makes man aware of the meaningfulness of the universe and of his place in it.

This belief frees him from all fears and superstitions by making him conscious of the presence of the almighty Allah and of man's obligations to him. This faith alone is not enough. Belief in one Allah requires we look upon all humanity as one family under the universal omnipotence of Allah the creator and nourisher of all.

Islam rejects the idea of chosen people. Belief in Allah and doing righteous deeds is the only way to heaven.

Thus, direct relationships are established with Allah, without any intercessor.

Islam is not a new religion. It is, in essence, the same message and guidance that Allah revealed to all prophets — Adam, Noah, Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, David, Moses, Jesus.

But, the message was revealed to the prophet Mohammed, is Islam, comprehensive, complete and final.

The Koran is the last revealed word of Allah and the basic source of Islamic teachings and laws.

The Koran deals with the basis of creeds, morality, history of humanity, worship, knowledge, wisdom and God-man relationship in all aspects.

Comprehensive teaching on which can be built sound systems of social justice, economics, politics, legislation, jurisprudence and international relations are important contents of the Koran. Hadith, the teachings, sayings, and acts of prophet Mohammed, meticulously reported and collected by his devoted companions, explained and elaborated on the Koranic verses.

National Prayer Breakfast set — The Fort Benning annual National Prayer Breakfast will be 7 a.m. Feb. 4 at The Infantry Center Chapel with retired Chaplain (Col.) Dave Peterson as the guest speaker. Immediately following the speaker a continental breakfast will be served.

Sunday School meets at White Elementary — Sunday School meets every Sunday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. at Edward A. White School.

There are classes for all ages from two years of age through adults.

Child care is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel for children two years and younger, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School.

Bus transportation is available if needed, by calling 545-4715.

Sunday services need musicians — The custodian of the Consolidated Chaplain's Fund is accepting applications for musicians for Sunday morning chapel services.

For more information, call Staff Sgt. Tamitha Wahlstrom at 545-1934.

Women's Bible study meets Thursdays — The Protestant Women of the Chapel (PWOC) is a nondenominational group of military and civilian wives who meet 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. Thursday for Bible study, prayer support, singing and fellowship in Building 2521, the Religious Education Center, on Indianhead Road (near the Airborne School) and we provide child care at no cost in Building 2517.

The new Winter-Spring Bible studies started Jan. 8 and run will go through May. The studies are:

The Joy of Hospitality by Dee Brestin — this book will show you ways to help you make your home a haven from the storm for family and friends; Intimacy with God by Cynthia Heald — this book will help you pursue a deeper experience with God as you explore his heart through the Psalms; A Mother's Heart, by Jean Fleming - this book provides encouragement for mothers and reveals what is your role and God's role in raising your children and provides ways to effectively pray for your children; and The Jesus I Never Knew. by Philip Yancey - this book tells the story of Jesus according to the Word, not according to the World - "no one who meets Jesus ever stays the same."

For more information, call Cackie Howe at 685-2217 or Robin Kennedy at 569-0890.

PARTY meetings set — The children's group called "Personal Attitudes Related To You" meets from 10 a.m. to noon the first and third Saturday of each month in the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

Activities for this group include Bible study, music, recreation and refreshments.

All students ages five through 14 are eligible and invited to attend.

Youth Services B-ball season kicks off

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Youth Services Basketball season kicked off Jan. 9 with two games played in the 13- to 15-year- old division.

In the first game, Relentless beat the Warriors 22-20. John Ferendez lead the scoring for Relentless with 18 points. Travis Mathews was the leading scorer for the Warriors with 11 points.

The second game of the season saw Swoop sneak pass the Tarheels with the final score of 41-38. Dorian McConnell contributed 18 points to Swoop's victory. The Tarheels' Brian McClay scored 16 points and Montrell McMillian helped with 15 points.

In the 6- to 7-year-old division, Nichlos Holley and Rickey Jones each contributed 4 points for the Hawks victory over the the Spurs 16-5. Diontrae Hogan and Justin Goss tossed in a basket a piece.

In the second game of the day, Andrew Turner led the Wildcats to a 13-7 win over the Fort Benning Hawks.

In the early game of the 8- to 9-year-old division, Lazerrius Patterson led the Pacers with 10 points in their 13-10 victory over the Magic. Javier Marshall contributed 6 of the Magic 10 points.

During the second game, the Sonics defeated the Bulls 14-9. Eddie Jones was the high scorer for the Sonics with 8 points.

Joshua Bailey contributed 8 points for the Fort Benning Sonics 16-14 win over the Spurs.

In the other 8- to 9-year-old game the Celtics topped the '76ers 12-10. Leschelle Matthews and Tanisha McFadden each contributed 4 points for the win. Sixers' Bishop Stewart was his team's lead scorer with 6 points.

In 10- to 12-year-old action, the Heat's Antonio Holder led the team with 8 points in the team's 30-24 win over the Raptures. Percy Valentine led the Raptures in scoring with 9 points.

Greg Raymond and Leo Crawford each contributed 9 points a piece for their respective teams during the Pistons 25-19 win over the Warriors.

In the last game of the day, Derrick Powell led the Spurs with 11 points in the team's 26-13 victory over the Knicks.

In the season's second week of games, which were played Jan. 16 and Saturday in the 13- to 15-year old division, the Tarheels stomped the Warriors 52-34. Brian McClay and Cornelius Lights combined for 41 of the Tarheels 52 points. Nick Ellerson contributed 13 points for the Warriors efforts.

The second game of the night was between Relentless and Swoop. The game was forfeited. Swoop was given the win.

Saturday's games began with 6- to 7- year-old action when the Fort Benning Hawks swooped the Spurs 4-3. Hawks players Raishaun Bennett and Andre´ Childs contributed 2 points apiece. Spurs player Andrew Riley contributed 3 points for his teams efforts.

In the second game of the division, the Bulls' Kahlee Tyler contributed 12 of the team's 19 points while the Hawks' Rickey Jones tossed in 4 of the 6 points.

In the 8- to 9-year-old division games, the Bulls triumphed over the Fort Benning Sonics 12-7. Anthony Terrell was the high scorer for the the Bulls with 4 points and Ross Brown gave the Sonics 3 points.

The Pacers and the Spurs game ended in a tie with 11 points. The high scorer was Spurs' Robert Nicholas.

In the third game, the Sonics stunned the '76ers 40-6. Eddie Jones was the leading scorer with 20 points.

Javierre Marshall led the Magic to a win with 19 of the team's 24-20 win over the Celtics. Leschelle Mathews helped the Celtics with 8 points.

In the 10- to 12-year-old division, the Warriors routed the Knicks 31-13. Breon Lewis led the Knicks in scoring with 9 points and Greg Raymond contributed 8 points for the Warriors.

In the second game for the division, the Raptures topped the Pistons 25-19. Termaine Jenkins led the Raptures in scoring with 9 points and Robert Penn led the Pistons with 12.

In the last game of the day, the Heat burned the '76ers 33-18. Abe and Ossy Carela contributed 8 points apiece for the win and Marcus Patterson gave the Sixers 6 points.

USAMU Soldier receives award while in DC

By Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

James T. Graves of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit was named as the 1997 Army Marksmanship Unit Association Shooter of the Year. USA Shooting of 1 Olympic Plaza, Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States. Graves is also the Army Athlete of the Year.

Graves was honored Jan. 16 in Washington, D.C., for winning the Army male Athlete of the Year Award at the Pride of the Nation Banquet. Lt. Gen. David K. Heebner, vice chief of staff of the Army, presented Graves with the medal at the Press Club in Washington. Next week Graves will travel to Lawton, Okla., and Fort Sill to sign autographs with Olympic gymnasts Nadia Comenici and Bart Conners.

Graves enlisted in the Army in January 1984 and was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit after completing basic and Infantry training at Fort Benning. In 1990, he was assigned as a team leader with the 20th Infantry Regiment in Korea and returned to the Army Marksmanship Unit in 1991.

As a member of the U.S. Skeet Team, Graves won the Team Gold Medal in November at the World Shotgun Championships in Lima, Peru. He also won an individual and team Gold Medal in skeet at the Championship of the Americas in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in November. He won a Silver medal at the Skeet World Cup Final in Montecatini, Italy, Sept. 12, coming in second to the 1996 Olympic Bronze Medalist in that match.

Graves also won two medals at the World Cup in Nicosia, Cyprus, in April. He won the Gold Medal in Skeet edging out Falco and Benelli, who took the Silver and the Bronze respectively; Graves also was awarded a Team Silver Medal for being a member of the second-place three-man U.S. Skeet Team. He also won a Bronze Medal in Skeet at the World Cup in Lonato, Italy, in April, behind Benelli who won the Gold and Falco who took the Silver.

In 1996, besides shooting skeet in the Olympics, he also won a Gold Medal in the National Skeet Shooting Association World Championships and Silver Medals in Skeet in the North American and Interservice Championships.

In 1995, he won a Gold Medal in Trap and a Silver Medal in Double Trap at the Interservice Championships. Graves won Bronze Medals in Trap at the Cairo World Cup and in Double Trap and Skeet at the U.S. National Championships in 1994. In 1993, he was the Double Trap and Skeet National Champion, won a Gold Medal in Trap at Interservice, and Silver Medals in Skeet at the U.S. World Cup and in Trap at the Nationals.

He was a member 1992 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team in Trap and Skeet and that year won Gold Medals in Skeet at the Suhl, Germany, World Cup, in Double Trap, at the Cairo World Cup and in Trap at Interservice.

USAMU Soldiers win shooting matches

JAG offers tax help

By Capt. David Barrett
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

The 1998 Fort Benning tax program begins its full service operation Monday. The tax program is here to serve Soldiers, saving the time of preparing taxes as well as the expense of hiring commercial tax preparers.

The Follow Me Tax Program offers free tax preparations for the 1997 tax returns, to include electronic filing of federal returns and automatic bank deposit.

The Main Post Tax Center is located in Classroom 1, Infantry Hall. A second location for 3rd Brigade Soldiers is located in Building 9025, Brigade Legal Center, Kelley Hill.

During the 1997 tax season, the Follow Me Tax Program serviced more than 13,000 tax filers and saved Soldiers more than $1 million in tax preparation and filing fees. This year's tax program features full time tax advisors who have received IRS tax preparation training with an emphasis on the military taxpayer. The free income tax assistance is available to all active duty service members, spouses, dependents and retirees beginning Monday.

The Tax Center operates on a walk-in basis from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to noon Saturdays during February. In order for the center to effectively provide the best and fastest service possible, bring the following when visiting the tax offices.

- All W-2 Forms
- All 1099-INT Forms (Interest Income Statements)
- All 1099-DIV Forms (Dividend Income Statement)
- Form 1098 (Mortgage Interest Statement)
- Power of Attorney (for spouses filing jointly in the absence of the other spouse)
- Social security cards (including one for your spouse and each dependent)
- Voided check or savings account statement (for those who desire direct deposit of refunds)
- If itemizing deductions, bring all applicable receipts for all expenses deducted.
- If eligible for the Credit for Child and Dependent Care Expenses bring the address and employer or identification number of your daycare provider.

For more information, call the Main Post Tax Center at 545-4267.

TV station offers job for those interested

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The post television station, USAIC-TV, is looking for Soldiers or family members interested in working for the television station.

They should be interested in media affairs, as the job will have a number of duties that go along with television production.

Those interested would be responsible for helping the Public Affairs Office produce weekly television programming for the Fort Benning community.

Some of the job duties include: shooting and editing video, writing scripts, working closely with units on post, learning to package productions for airing on the station and interviewing Soldiers and community members about stories being covered by the station.

The job requires working Monday through Friday and sometimes weekends. Television experience is preferred, but the office is willing to train someone who has the right attitude and motivation to handle the job.

Anyone interested should call Sgt. Marc G. Turchin at 545-3367.

Rangers roll out Soviet BTR

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

A Soviet-style armored personnel carrier (APC), a BTR-60 rolled into the Ranger Training Brigade inventory Jan. 21. The new vehicle will be used by the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's opposing force (OPFOR) in its training mission.

The BTR-60 is an eight-wheel drive APC. It is powered by two six-cylinder engines, has a 14.7 mm machine gun weapons system and is capable of carrying an 11-man squad.

The rangers were at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., when they first discovered the vehicle was available. It was part of a former Soviet Union equipment collection maintained by a downsizing unit, the 203rd Military Intelligence Battalion.

"We talked to them about how we could get some of this equipment down here to make our OPFOR look more realistic," Maj. Steve Townsend, 4th RTB executive officer, said. Personnel from the gaining and losing unit worked together to get the vehicle in operating condition.

The Air Force assisted by transporting and delivering the vehicle by a C-130. In addition to the BTR-60, the rangers also received Soviet radios and weapons parts to complete the look of a unit outfitted with Soviet equipment. Allies and enemies of the U.S. often use equipment purchased from Russia.

"Our OPFOR will look more and more like what you might find in the type of insurgency we may be fighting, a mixture of weapons and equipment primarily from the former Soviet bloc," Townsend said. The vehicle, captured during the invasion of Grenada, was transported to the U.S. The BTR-60 still has the original Russian instruction plates on the inside.

Townsend said the BTR is an unusual piece of equipment to acquire by a unit considered Table of Distribution and Allowances (TDA). A BTR-60 is more commonly found at the National Training Center (NTC), Fort Irwin, Calif., or the Joint Readiness Training Center (JRTC), Fort Polk, La.

"Unlike the NTC or the JRTC, which have large OPFORs, our OPFOR is recognized as only a support element," Townsend explained.

"The BTR-60 is not part of the unit's Table of Organization and Equipment, so they had to get special permission from the Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va., among several other agencies before receiving the equipment.

"People have been supportive for a number of reasons," Townsend said. "It's good equipment, it's working and they wanted to find a use for it. It's operable and it seemed a waste to just junk it."

Some of the rangers have been trained on foreign weapons and equipment, Townsend said, but the 4th RTB doesn't have a specialist in maintaining such a vehicle. In preparation for receiving the BTR-60, three Soldiers were sent to Aberdeen to learn more about how to drive and maintain the vehicle.

Staff Sgt. Dan Goligoski is one of the rangers who was trained up on the BTR-60.

"Inside, they've taken all of the Russian gauges and have translated them into English," Goligoski said. "They've modified the engines. They're Americanized, so we can use American parts."

The machine gun was plugged so it can't be fired. An operable American weapon will probably replace that weapon, one that will be able to add simulated fire to the vehicle.

"It's a pretty interesting vehicle. It has some history behind it," Goligoski said about operating

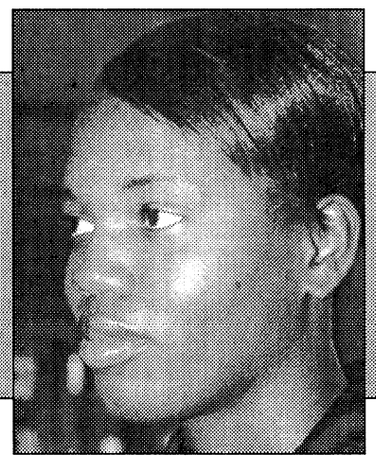
VARIOUS VOICES

How should the Army make allowances to pregnant Soldiers?

Lula Evans, family member — "Sometimes it takes more than six weeks to recover. We need to make sure the Soldier has enough time to recover."

Spc. Jeremy B. Fields, Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "They should have more time off before and after the birth. They shouldn't do any strenuous activities. Basically, treat them the same as regular profiles."



Charles H. Culberson, Army and Air Force Exchange Services employee — "Each pregnancy is different. My wife worked to the last day while a friend's wife was in hospital for three weeks prior to giving birth. They should judge each case differently by what the doctor recommends.

Spc. Valerie D. Jackson, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "They should give them a regular 40-hour work week until maybe the last month. It would be the same as working for a big corporation — they just don't go to the field."

Staff Sgt. Wayne D. Jackson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "Husbands should also be allowed to take time off to help out with the newborn. Otherwise, what the Army has in place now is good."

Angela D. Fogle, family member — "Being pregnant and working is really hard, especially when you have a family at home already. It's good to have time off and a shortened work schedule."

Pregnant Soldiers deserve to decide

By Capt. April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Enlisted Soldiers who become pregnant may leave the service under Chapter 8. Many Soldiers think this option is unfair because it allows women to get out of their service obligation.

Capt. April N. Olsen thinks pregnant Soldiers should have right to decide to stay in or get out of the Army.

commentary

I disagree. Chapter 8 is a necessary option and allows enlisted women to do what they believe is best for themselves, their baby and the Army.

Many oppose this option, I think, simply because of a prejudice and an overall negative attitude that exists in the Army against pregnant Soldiers.

I think that negative attitude exists because the Army makes certain allowances for pregnant Soldiers, including Chapter 8.

Should pregnant Soldiers get special treatment? No, but allowances should be made just as allowances are made for a Soldier who breaks an arm or a leg and has to change his or her work routine or schedule.

Working a 40-hour week and extra time off to go to medical appointments is not asking too much. But some Soldiers do not think it's fair. Some complain that pregnant Soldiers get out of regular physical training (PT).

How easy do they think it is to carry 30 extra pounds around? I didn't feel one bit shy about ceasing all push-up and sit-up activity on the PT field during my pregnancy. It was a big enough chore to get out of the bed six times a night to get to the bathroom.

Granted, for healthy pregnancies, walking and swimming are acceptable PT routines. But, that's for a doctor to decide; not another Soldier or the chain of command. There were days when I could swim laps for an hour, and others when I didn't feel like tying my shoes.

I can honestly say the three months since my son was born have been more physically demanding than anything I've ever done in the Army. So, I laugh in the face of anyone who thinks a woman leaving the Army to take care of her baby is getting off easy.

In many cases, the pregnant Soldier is taken out of her job because the situation, such as work in a motor pool, could be hazardous to the unborn baby.

Others have to pick up the slack and work harder to make up for the absence. But this also happens if a Soldier, male or female, goes on emergency leave for an extended time. There are times when you have to do someone else's part, it's called teamwork and the Army is based on it.

Proponents of Chapter 8 maintain the obvious reasons for the option such as unavailability of adequate or affordable child care and the possibility of deploying on short notice affects male Soldiers with families as well.

I agree. But it just so happens in our society, the image exists that if a father goes away, he's doing his duty; if a mother goes away, she's considered abandoning her child.

The problems facing working mothers are not exclusive to the military services. Daycare is a national issue. I think it's arrogant for military types to think Soldiers are the only people who might have to work long hours or be away from their families.

A male Soldier doesn't complain when his wife quits her civilian job to stay home with the kid(s). Yet some of them are upset that female Soldiers have that option.

I realize some women abuse the system and take the option for selfish reasons. And some, I know sham during their pregnancy and try to get out of work they are capable of doing. However, that is the minority of pregnant Soldiers.

As preposterous as it sounds, a few women have even gotten pregnant just to take the Chapter 8 option. Please do not judge all Soldiers who get pregnant by those morons who think raising a child is easier than any military assignment.

"What were they thinking, getting pregnant while on active duty?" some ask. Let me say that it is dangerous for anyone to try to put themselves in the mind of a pregnant women. But to answer the question, they were probably thinking about raising their child to the best of their ability and they didn't think they could do that as a Soldier.

If a female Soldier thinks she must choose a Chapter 8, so be it. I have faith she has thought the decision through.

It seems pregnancy is just another excuse for some male Soldiers who are just waiting for a female to buckle under the pressure of military service or wimp out in a high pressure situation.

High pressure situation? The most high pressure situation I know is laying on a labor and delivery table, in indescribable pain, hearing the doctors and my husband and mother discuss how my baby's heart rate wasn't "doing what it's supposed to."

Pregnant Soldiers deserve the opportunity to decide if remaining in the Army will be the best thing for them and their child. Others, who have never experienced their situation should check their attitudes.

For many, the controversy boils down to signing on the bottom line and making a commitment to serve our nation.

Every one of us make decisions every day based on our priorities. Priorities change. Especially when you are faced with the responsibility of raising a child. Is that responsibility greater than the one Soldiers have to the military?

A year ago I would have said no. Today, I say yes it is.

What is the military all about anyway? What is any job about?

The future. We in uniform swear an oath to defend our way of life so the generations that follow will enjoy the same freedom, the same liberties.

Children are the future. I commend anyone who dedicates him or herself to raising a good child.

My priorities begin and end with my son. I didn't come into the military thinking I'd have a child on active duty. And I tried my best to set a good example for pregnant Soldiers when I was pregnant. But the moment that little guy became a part of me, my priorities changed.

I was quite the serious green suiter when I took my oath — duty, honor, country and mission first and all that business. I took great pride in wearing my uniform, as I still do.

But being a mom is without a doubt, the most important thing I will ever do.

Any job I'll ever have in the military could feasibly be done by somebody else. I'm the only mommy my son will ever have.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller said consideration should be given to providing a water fountain at Stewart or Watson Field.

Directorate of Public Works response:

DPW agrees that a water fountain would be good to have at Stewart or Watson Field. An engineering analysis and cost estimate was made, but at this time, there are no funds available for this endeavor.

Call: The caller said residents in her housing area missed garbage pick up because of the holiday and trash was strewn all up and down the street.

Directorate of Public Works response:

It was explained to the caller that normal procedure for holiday schedules moves pickup days either back or ahead, depending on what day the holiday falls. First of week schedules are set back to Mondays or the last of week schedules are set ahead on the following Monday. Notices are put out by the Bayonet, Benning Bulletin and community newspapers.

Club improves horse stable

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Hunt Club is currently renovating the post stables in an effort to bring the riding facility back to standards.

The club, which was founded more than 50 years ago, began the face-lift by repainting the perimeter fences and removing construction waste from the area.

Other projects the club will undertake include restoring the pasture and riding trails and repairing the clubhouse and surrounding buildings.

"Those are our goals for this spring," said Lt. Col. William Hollowell, chief of the Test and Evaluation Coordination Office and hunt club president.

"I was really appalled at the condition of the facility when I first got here," Hollowell said, who took over the presidency last month. "It has failed some inspections, but it's time we turned this place around."

The 18 members of the hunt club along with a handful of volunteers began renovations at the start of the new year and have been holding workcalls Saturday mornings to work on the list of projects.

Spc. Michelle J. Davis

Natya Fedowitz and Lenis Ingram remove construction waste from the Fort Benning stable.

"Probably the biggest thing we're trying to do right now is remove the pile of construction waste that has been dumped behind the barn over the past years," Hollowell said. "Once we have accomplished that, we will be well on our way."

After Saturday's workcall, the members and volunteers managed to dispose of nearly half of the waste, which was comprised of rotten wood and sheets of metal mostly from one of the barns that burned down years ago.

Staff Sgt. Antonio Graves, a drill sergeant with the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, recently joined the hunt club and said they're doing the right thing by fixing up the stable.

"We most definitely need to clean up if we want to keep this place alive," Graves said. "All it needs is a lot of hard work."

Besides bringing the facility back to standards, the hunt club is also making plans to get more involved with the community by holding fund-raising events at the stable.

One of the first events the club hopes to sponsor is a horse show that is slated for April. The show will tentatively exhibit the different horse breeds as well as give demonstrations of various horse events.

"The club has been sort of quiet as far as involvement in the community," Hollowell said. "It's time we opened up more. That's why the stable is here — to provide a place for Soldiers and family members who love equestrian sports and are horse people."

Despite the renovations, the stable office is open Monday through Saturday from 8 a.m. until 4 p.m. Although a majority of the horses kept are privately owned, the club owns three horses that can be rented out to community members.

a vehicle of a former United States enemy.

The outside of the vehicle is painted a tan and green camouflage. A new paint job will help it blend into the Fort Benning green environment. The BTR-60 should have no problem navigating the Fort Benning terrain, Goligoski said.

"With the wheel system it has, you can't get stuck in mud," he said about the eight-wheel drive. The driver is also able to inflate and deflate the tires from the inside for different types of terrain.

In maintaining the vehicle, Soldiers will have to draw on ingenuity. Parts like fan belts are not readily available, so those responsible for maintenance have to comb through American catalogs to find something close in size to the original part.

The BTR-60 is expected to be in use within the next month, Townsend predicted.

"It's fully functional now and once we get it written into the scenario, students will see this and have to prepare to ambush it."

3rd Brigade Soldier dies in car accident

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), paid homage during a memorial service Wednesday to Sgt. Jason L. Irwin who was killed in an automobile accident Jan. 22.

He was buried in his hometown of Ebensburg, Pa., Thursday.

The 24-year-old NCO, a member of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, died when the car he was in hit a tree one-mile south of Exit 11 on Interstate 85, near Newnan, Ga., shortly before midnight Jan. 22

The driver of the car was Sgt. Terrance Davis, also of the 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. He sustained minor injuries in the accident.

Tristin L. Irwin, the Soldier's two-year-old son was also in the car. He was in a car seat and sustained minor injuries.

"Sgt. Irwin was well thought of by the Soldiers throughout the battalion, not just the company," said Lt. Col. Addison Davis, battalion commander.

Post officials are advising Soldiers, family members and post civilian workers to be aware of the hazards of winter driving.

They note that besides the obvious dangers of snow, rain, and sleet as drivers proceed north, there are also dangers of fog.

Official also remind drivers to rest up before starting off on long journeys, noting that being tired and driving is an invitation to fall asleep at the wheel.

Commanding General honors community members

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning tradition continued Jan. 16 as 32 Soldiers and civilians were honored during a retreat ceremony in Marshall Auditorium.

The quarterly ceremony recognizes those who have distinguished themselves with their work throughout the Fort Benning community.

The two ranks of nominees stood on the stage as Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst presented each with their award, an Infantry Center coin, some words of thanks and a firm handshake (or in a few cases, a hug).

The list of awardees included:

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert M. Santry was recognized for his service with the U.S. Army Europe where he served as the Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe (SHAPE) Community International Chaplain, the U.S. Army chaplain and as the SHAPE parish priest. Santry was awarded the Defense Meritorious Service Medal.

Lt. Col. Robert Morris, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, commander, was recognized for procuring more than $1.4 million worth of equipment through the Base Realignment and Closure process for Fort Benning.

Master Sgt. Royce Jarmon and Walter Nichols, Directorate of Public Works, were recognized for coordinating the clean-up of several illegal dump sites on post. Jarmon received an Army Achievement Medal and Nichols was awarded an Army Achievement Medal for Civilian Service.

Second Lt. Louis D. Lancon, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Reg., was recognized for volunteering more than 650 hours at the Montessori School in Columbus. Lancon was presented with the Army Volunteer Medal.

Lt. Col. Stephen Carmichael, Professor of Military Science at Columbus State University, was recognized for being selected as post volunteer of the month. Carmichael was presented a Certificate of Achievement.

Command Sgt. Major Manuel Valdes, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Division (Mechanized), was recognized for outstanding conduct and implementation of the Train the Trainer program for the past Expert Infantryman Badge testing. Master Sgt. Douglas Hall accepted a Certificate of Achievement on Valdes' behalf.

1st Sgt. David E. Sisk, 60th Ground Ambulance Company, 36th Engineer Group, was recognized for orchestrating the memorial service for the late Staff Sgt. Kara L. McCauley. Sisk was presented a Certificate of Achievement.

Sgt. 1st Class Stephen E. Joseph, 6th Ranger Training Bn, Ranger Training Bde., was recognized for outstanding performance as a Ranger School instructor. Joseph was presented a Certificate of Achievement.

Spc. Rebekah Champouillon, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Reg., was recognized for being selected as Fort Benning's Soldier of the Year. Champouillon was presented a Certificate of Achievement.

Joe W. Simmons, Dismounted Battle Space Battle Lab, was recognized for service as project officer, Battle Command Division, DBBL. Simmons was presented the Army Achievement Medal for Civilian Service.

John C. Davis, Defense Automated Printing Service, was recognized for service as the Director of the Defense Automated Printing Service. Davis received the Commander's Award for Civilian Service.

Chris Hurley and Pat Bosse were recognized for the planning and execution of the 1997 Santa's Castle. Hurley and Bosse both received the Commander's Award for Public Service.

Retired Sgt. Maj. Nathaniel E. Guydon Jr. was recognized for his efforts as a member and enlisted chairman of the Fort Benning Retiree Council for the past 10 years. Guydon received the Department of the Army Certificate of Appreciation.

Earnestine Ezekiel, kindergarten teacher at Dexter Elementary School, was recognized for her selection as Teacher of the Year by the Georgia Association of Young Children and Women of the Year by the Georgia Clean and Beautiful Commission.

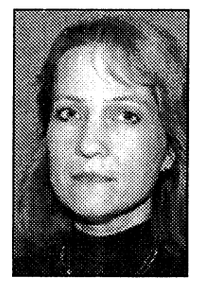
Doris King, bilingual secretary for U.S. Army School of Americas, for her selection as installation employee of the month for June 1997.

Larry McCoy, a supply clerk for the Directorate of Community Activities, was recognized for his selection as installation employee of the month for July 1997.

Lisa Clark, transportation assistant for the Directorate of Logistics, was recognized for her selection as employee of the month for August 1997.

Haydee Pinero, a secretary for USARSOA, was recognized for her selection as employee of the month for September 1997. King, McCoy, Clark and Pinero were each presented with a Department of the Army Certificate of Achievement.

Arnie N. Moi, Sandra G. Babb, Quitman L. Kirby, Pat McCann, Reba G. Watson and Twyla Shimizu of the Directorate of Resource Management were recognized for their selection as a Team of Excellence. Each received a post Certificate of Achievement.



April Turner, Dory L. Huber and Michelle Gammon were recognized for being selected as post Volunteers of the month. Each received a Certificate of Achievement.

Steve Smith was recognized for his performance as a support contractor. Smith received a Certificate of Appreciation.

Jim Irvin, GEICO Insurance, was recognized for his support of Fort Benning through his work as a member of the Civilian-Military Council. Irvin was presented with a Fort Benning memento.

Mary Wake was recognized for her service to Fort Benning and the local community. Wake was an influence on this year's Combined Federal Campaign and was presented with a Fort Benning memento.

Five years ago, American soldiers in Somalia were involved in the biggest U.S. firefight since Vietnam.

Just recently, and for the first time ever, the complete story was told, unleashing truths the military had never before released and painting a picture of the battle that not even the combatants fully understood.

Now comes your chance to experience the honor, the courage, and the sheer adrenaline of this battle.

This story – Blackhawk Down – was told in three powerful ways. First, it was unveiled in a gripping 30-day serial adventure in the Pulitzer Prize-winning newspaper The Philadelphia Inquirer. Then it was detailed in an enhanced form on the acclaimed Philadelphia Online website. Then, it was grippingly shown in a one-hour video documentary, Somalia: Good Intentions, Deadly Results, produced by Knight-Ridder Video and shown on public TV.

Respond now to this special offer and you can own all three versions in the Blackhawk Down Collector's Edition. You'll get the complete newsprint series, a CD-ROM from the online expose, and a one-hour video documentary ... all for just $23.99!

You'll read, hear, and see firsthand accounts from the soldiers and their leaders. You'll see classified military video of the skirmish itself. You'll hear the voices of soldiers under fire. You'll experience crashed choppers, pinned down soldiers, heroic rescues and more as you glimpse the honor and the challenge of military service.

Get this collector's edition for yourself, or get one for a friend. Get the complete story of America's battle in Somalia.

Call and order Blackhawk Down today.

And be one of the privileged few to know the whole story.

Soldiers continue PT during pregnancy

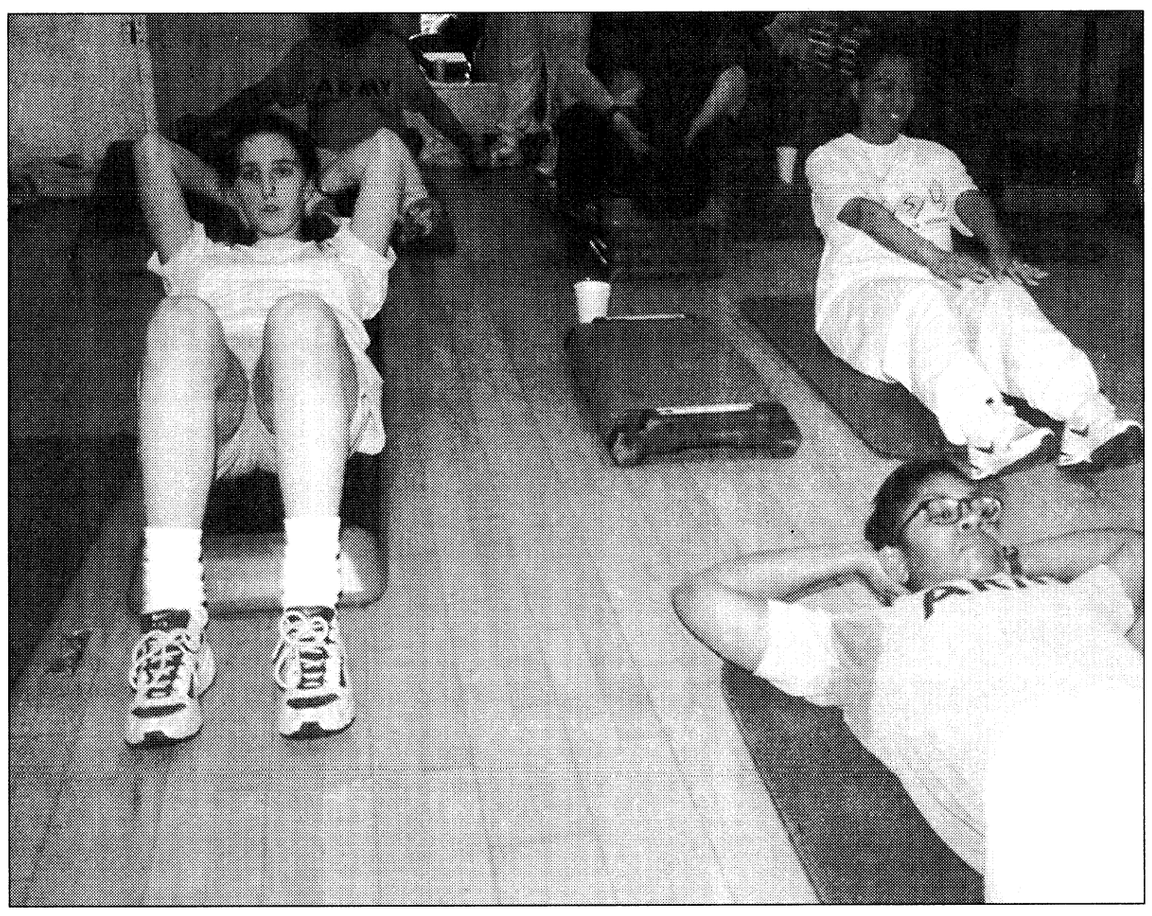
By Capt. April N. Olsen and Pfc. Tricia Schipmann
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When a female Soldier stationed at Fort Benning becomes pregnant, she no longer has to worry about falling behind in the area of physical training (PT).

The Martin Army's Community Health Nursing Department in cooperation with the U.S Army Physical Fitness School, designed a series of programs to train a Soldier from the time she gets pregnant to the day she takes her next Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT).

Krystal McGee heads the project and has worked in the health and fitness field for nearly eight years. She is a Master Fitness Trainer and is certified by Motherwell, a civilian pregnancy and postpartum agency.

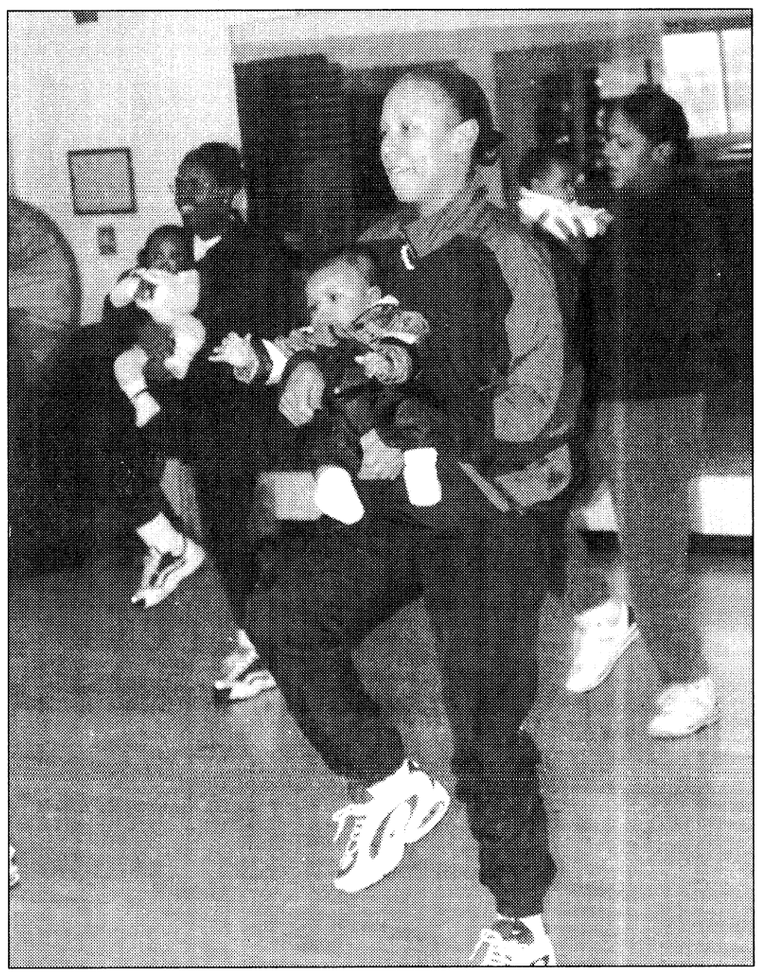
The three components of the program include Pregnancy PT, Mother and Baby PT and Postpartum PT. All programs are open to active duty and reserve Soldiers. Family members can attend the Mother and Baby PT.



The first course a Soldier attends is Pregnancy PT. The participants perform modified versions of push-ups and sit-ups along with step aerobics and walking at a brisk pace.

"This program acts as a support group for pregnant Soldiers," McGee said. "The women have an opportunity to talk with other Soldiers experiencing the same things they are."

An integral part of this course includes educational classes. Once a week Soldiers receive tips on positive parenting, stages of pregnancy, nutrition and any topic requested.



Pregnancy PT is available to Soldiers from the beginning of pregnancy until the day of delivery.

The next part of the series is the Mother and Baby PT. This program is designed primarily for Soldiers during their convalescent leave, McGee said.

Pfc. Tricia Schipmann

Pfc. Nicole Baker, USAIC Military Police Company (left), Staff Sgt. Shirley Massey, 14th Field Hospital, and Spc. Crystal Joyner, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 13th Combat Support Battalion, go through a workout during morning pregnancy PT.

Capt. April N. Olsen

Sgt. Pamela Smith, Company A, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, and her 3-month-old son, Devin, participate in low- impact aerobics during a recent Mother and Baby PT session.

Doing PT with their babies allows new mothers a chance to transition back into a regular PT program, McGee said.

Staff Sgt. Errica Dupree said continuing a fitness program during the normal convalescent time is a good idea.

"We work on variations of push-ups and sit-ups so it's not so hard when we get back (to our units)," Dupree said.

For instance, rather than doing a regular sit-up, a mother lays the baby on her stomach and does crunches.

"The program also gives a mother a chance to bond with her baby during the first weeks of life which is very important," said McGee.

The third and final area of training is Postpartum PT. This four to six-week program transitions a Soldier back to regular unit PT.

Soldiers in the program concentrate on improving push ups, sit ups and running. Soldiers also work on strength and resistance training and participate in weekly weigh-ins and diagnostic APFT.

"The program is important because we help improve Soldiers' readiness and fitness levels while focusing on individual weaknesses," McGee said.

"These Soldiers haven't been doing traditional physical training for the length of their pregnancy and postpartum period and this program helps them return to their unit's regular training at least as fit as when they left."

Sgt. Pamela Smith said the programs have helped her stay in good physical condition throughout her pregnancy and post partum recovery.

"It keeps your body in tune," Smith said.

Although she just started the new mother and baby portion, she believes it will be a good experience for her and her son.

According to McGee, one goal now is to have the program made mandatory post-wide. Currently, pregnant Soldiers receive various training based on company policy.

"I want this to be a mandatory formation for pregnant Soldiers, and if they're tardy or absent from formation they should be held accountable the same way any other Soldier would be."

Spc. Carmeshia Butchee, an instructor of the courses said, "People who aren't familiar with the program criticize pregnant soldiers and accuse them of 'shamming.' But the aerobics we do are the same as anyone else would do, only it's harder because these women are pregnant."

McGee wants company commanders to know that an accountability formation is held each day and a roster is submitted at the end of each week.

McGee also encourages unit leaders to call her at 545-8038 for a table-side briefing on the program.

Any Soldier interested in participating in any of these programs may also call McGee.

for the record

Last week's front page photograph of Sgt. Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall with Soldiers in the field was reported as being with the Soldiers from the Bradley Leaders Master Gunner Course.

In actuality, he was visiting with Soldiers from Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, while the unit was training at Brann Range.

In last week's Bayonet, it was reported in a photograph cutline on page B-2 that the Patient Affairs liaison, Carolyn Bradley, at Martin Army Community Hospital, was the only person awarded a certificate for having a high level of customer of satisfaction.

In actuality, the entire hospital received the certificate for having a high level of customer satisfaction.

In a story on page A-3 in last week's Bayonet about The Infantry Training Brigade honoring Dr. Martin Luther King, Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters introduced Pedro Rivera, former commandant of the School of the Americas.

The article went on to quote Rivera throughout the story, instead of giving the correct attribution to Peters. Peters should be the person quoted throughout the story, not Rivera.

Units join forces at JRTC

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

First Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), sent one of its companies to the Joint Readiness Training Center (JRTC), Fort Polk, La., Wednesday to begin a month-long exercise with the 101st Airborne Division.

Company B will be at Fort Polk in support of the 1st Brigade, 101st Airborne Division. The Soldiers are due back to Fort Benning Feb. 22, said Capt. Dan Streetman, company commander.

According to battalion commander, Lt. Col. Addison Davis, this is something that hasn't happened in a while.

"We haven't trained with the 101st in the last several years," he said. "We do have the likelihood of being deployed with light Infantry units."

While in Louisiana, the battalion's Soldiers will experience a different type of training, Streetman said.

"This will be the first time some Soldiers are introduced to guerrilla operations," he said. "There will be terrorists in every town and we'll have to provide route security for the Infantry brigade."

"These terrorists role-playing at the JRTC know what they're doing," Streetman said. "They do this type of training on a full-time basis. It should be as realistic as possible."

According to one Soldier, having terrorists in the scenario is a concern.

"I'm not too sure about working around civilians," said Pvt. 2 Nikolas Vuksanovich. "You never know who's who or what's what."

The battalion did some anti-terrorism training before heading south. Soldiers were pulled from the unit and acted as terrorists and innocent civilians. But, most Soldiers said they expect to see the 'real deal' at Fort Polk.

"We tried to detain the civilians and terrorists as best we could," said Spc. Robert L. Dunbar. "But I'm sure it will be a lot different down there."

Another factor that plays into the training is the terrain. Streetman said most Soldiers in his unit are used to desert or the Fort Benning terrain.

Commanders from the battalion traveled to Fort Polk last year for 10 days to plan for the deployment.

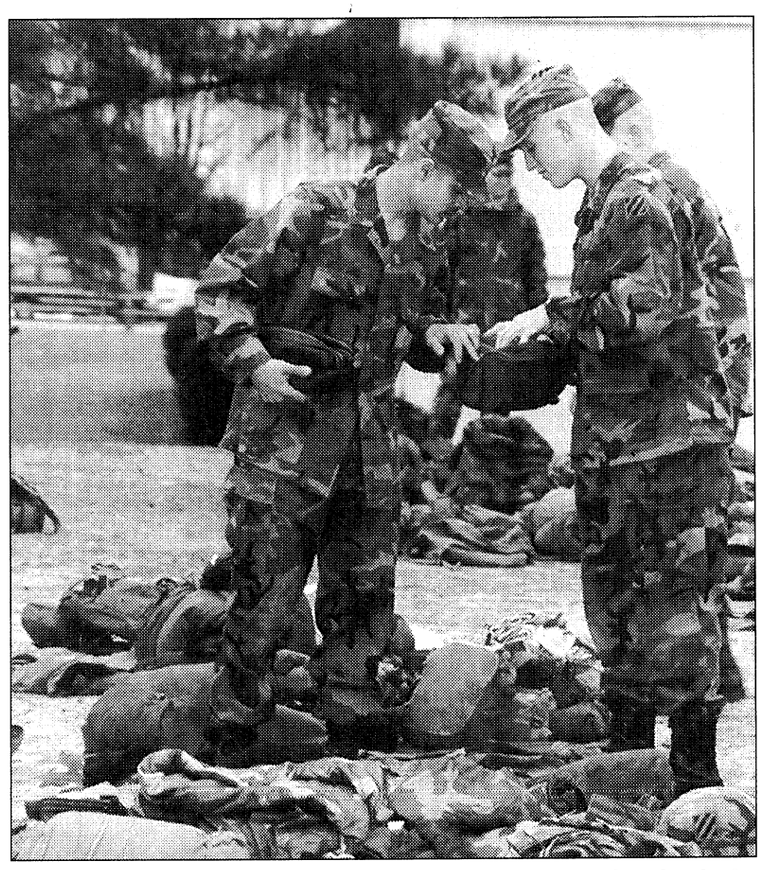
"While we were there we learned a lot about the terrain and how to use that terrain to fight," Davis said.

The deployment will include periodic live-fires.

"I hear there are supposed to be some pretty intense live-fires," said Spc. Brian J. Gagnon. "We might see Apache Helicopters and A-10 jets also."

Streetman said some live-fires will be squad-sized and will be conducted in urban and wooded terrains.

While in Louisiana the Soldiers will conduct both logistic and combat missions. Davis said the company is bringing most of it's vehicles and equipment; plus, equipment from other units that will be attached to the battalion during the deployment.



Going with the battalion includes 13 Soldiers with the 203rd Combat Support Battalion, five Soldiers with the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, and 20 Soldiers from the 317th Engineer Company.

Nearly 220 of the battalion's Soldiers returned from the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif. Companies A and D returned to Fort Benning Thursday after spending the last month as the opposing force to 2nd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga.

Photos by Sgt. Marc G. Turchin

Pfc. James L. Mervicker, Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, shows his platoon sergeant that he has his socks and is ready to pack them for the trip.

Soldiers from the battalion compare what to bring in their shower bags while checking what gear to bring on the deployment.

Aids info

•Georgia is the eighth in the nation for the total number of AIDS cases.

•There is no possibility of contracting AIDS while donating blood since fresh needles are used for each donor.

•Since 1984 the proportion of female AIDS cases has increased from 4 to 19 percent. Many infected women are sex partners of men who have used drugs or have had sex with other men. People who become infected through heterosexual contact are the fastest growing group of people with AIDS.

•Casual contact with a person who is HIV-positive will not transmit the disease.

•HIV transmission is through risky behavior, such as drug use and unprotected sex.

Continuing education gets children away from school

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning school children may have gotten a break from classes Jan. 23, but it was the teachers who went back to school for the day.

The Fort Benning school district held an in-service day to instruct the teachers on new equipment and technology that had become available to the schools, said Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development for the district.

One thing teachers at Faith Middle School were instructed on is the operations of a new projection room.

The remodeled room, complete with high-tech computers and data projector, would allow the screen of a computer to be projected onto a six-foot wide, six-foot long screen.

"The possibilities of this room are just unbelievable, not just for teachers' presentations, but for the students as well," said Cindy Givens, media specialist at Faith.

Special area teachers from all the elementary schools also rode the wave of new technology as they learned how to cruise the Internet and use it in their lesson plans.

Science teachers at the schools were also introduced to a new hands-on program called the Full Option Science System (FOSS). Wilson said the FOSS kits are different for each grade level and allow students to grasp science lessons through hands-on experiments.

"The teachers seemed really excited about the new program," Wilson said.

In addition to FOSS, teachers were also given classes on motivating students as well as on the new standardized test all students will be required to take.

The new test, which replaced the Iowa Test of Basic Skills, focuses more on performance-oriented tasks.

"Teachers were learning performance-based techniques to better prepare their students for the new test and the challenges of the 21st century," Wilson said.

Although the in-service days are only once a semester, Laura Feagin, a second grade teacher at Dexter, said the instruction is instrumental for the teachers.

She said, "the in-service days help us to get interested in what's available and they also get us motivated about teaching."

Parents help teachers with new program

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Faith Middle School recently completed the first step of a pilot writing project as 15 Faith parents stepped forward to participate in a training session Jan. 23.

During the two and a half hours of training, the parent volunteers learned about the overall program, which will involve parents joining teachers in evaluating student writing assignments, said Dr. Beth Middlemiss, Faith School principal.

In addition to learning general information about the pilot project, the parents also went over the basic fundamentals of writing and what to look for in a student's paper.

"This project will accomplish two things," Middlemiss said. "It adds brainpower by combining parents and teachers to give feedback back to the students and also helps the parents understand the guidelines of future writing assignments," she said.

Sheila Watts, one of the parent volunteers, said that was exactly why she decided to volunteer for the project.

"I thought it would be interesting and I could also pass the things I learned down to my son who's in the sixth grade," Watts said.

This year the program will work with samples from Faith's eighth grade class, which gives those students an opportunity to practice their writing skills in preparation for the actual writing test that is held at the end of April, said Middlemiss.

The next training session is scheduled for Feb. 5. It will focus on the parents getting into groups and evaluating practice samples, Middlemiss said.

After the practice evaluations, the parents will then be prepared to sit down and evaluate students' papers on their own during the third session.

"Our goal for this year is to just train our staff and get some feedback on how we can improve the program," said Middlemiss, who added the school plans on expanding the program to include the sixth and seventh grades.

"That will help prepare the younger grades for what they will be tested on in eighth grade and actually give them a head start at all different types of writing," she said.

DENTAC offers tips during National Children's Dental Health Month

U.S. Army Dental Activity

As the 21st century quickly approaches, one phrase comes to mind: The future is now. The way children care for their bodies today will have an impact on their health as adults.

The good news is that preventive dental care has dramatically improved the oral health of American children. Nowadays, it's possible for many children to reach adulthood without ever experiencing tooth decay.

February is National Children's Dental Health Month and the U.S. Army Dental Activity has these tips for parents and caregivers:

•Take your child to see the dentist regularly, beginning by the child's first birthday

•Put only water in a child's nap-time or bed-time bottle;

•Start brushing as soon as the first tooth erupts;

•Begin flossing when two teeth begin to touch;

•Brush and floss your child's teeth daily until the child can be taught to do this alone. Then encourage him or her to brush and floss;

•Make sure your child gets the fluoride needed for decay-resistant teeth. Ask your dentist how this should be done;

•Ask about dental sealants. A sealant is a protective barrier that shields the chewing surface of back teeth against tooth decay.

Good oral health practices should begin in infancy and continue throughout adult life. In your child's early years, you must provide this care. Later you will need to instruct, monitor and motivate your child to help maintain good oral health habits.

Attitudes and habits established at an early age are critical in maintaining good oral health throughout life.

Dentists from the U.S. Army Dental Activity will visit Fort Benning Schools to complete a dental screening on the students. The following is the schedule of when the dentists will be at the schools:

Faith Middle School — Wednesday and Feb. 11; Tot Town — Monday and Tuesday; Patch Pre-school — Thursday and Feb. 6; Family Child Care — Thursday; White Elementary — Feb. 9; McBride Elementary — Feb. 10; Dexter Elementary — Feb. 12; Loyd Elementary — Feb. 13; Santa Fe CDC — Feb. 17; Wilson Elementary — Feb. 18; McGraw CDC — Feb. 19; Main Post CDC — Feb. 20; and Stowers Elementary — Feb. 24.

Tying the knot

Girl Scouts Tashena River, 12, left, Kelly Lefler, 14, and Lisa Richardson, 13, tie the knot of a rope bridge the girls were building with the help of adult volunteers at Fort Benning's Camp Hideway. Lefler, a cadet working on her Silver Project, said the project entails Girl Scouts working 30 hours planning and carrying a service project to help the Girl Scouts or the community. Volunteers were cleaning up the area, latrines, painting bleachers, raking and picking up fallen timber. The rope bridge is a new addition to Camp Hideway. Another Silver Project includes a fitness day using the rope bridge for Daisies and Brownies.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I just got paid and I have seen ads all over town at tax preparation services promising "quickie tax refunds" that will get me my tax refund in 72 hours. What does this service involve and what does it cost? Why can't the Army do this?

A. To answer your question, we need to discuss three separate concepts: the tax preparation system, the IRS electronic tax filing system and refund anticipation loans (RALs).

The Internal Revenue Service regulates all three of these areas. A tax preparer is a private businessman who prepares taxes for a fee. These may be mailed after preparation, but this takes a period of about eight weeks.

To speed things up, the IRS set up a computer system nationwide, called Electronic Filing, to allow sending of completed tax returns to IRS via computer modem.

This system is much faster, allowing the tax refund to arrive in about 15 days if it is sent directly to a bank account and about 21 days if a check is cut by IRS. The person who sends is allowed to charge a fee for the service.

American enterprise then entered the picture with the Refund Anticipation Loan. A tax preparer and a bank enter into a contract. The bank agrees to loan money to the tax filer based on the security of his tax refund check.

The tax filer signs over his tax refund by power of attorney. The bank charges a fee and shares it with the tax preparer.

The advertisements you have seen combine all three of these things at once.

The client comes in, fills out a questionnaire and turns over the W-2 to the preparer. The preparer has the client fill in a power of attorney and loan data at the same time.

The client signs the tax and loan forms and is told to return in two or three days to pick up his money. All costs are taken out of the refund. The tax refund is then sent by the IRS directly to the bank.

The average cost of a refund anticipation loan is $100. On a $300 refund, this means that the client will receive $200 after the three-day waiting period.

This seems to be 33 percent interest, a little high. But the annual percentage rate of this cost if expressed as a loan for 21 days instead of charges is actually about 500 percent.

The IRS is seeking ways to avoid these high costs. A program called "Telefile" allows selected single persons to file by touch-tone phone, with no forms to fill out, and a 21-day turnaround time.

This option is available only for persons receiving an IRS packet by mail, but is bound to get bigger in the future.

The Army will help prepare your taxes and send them electronically, but it cannot get into the loan business. Free tax preparation and electronic filing is provided at no cost to ID card holders.

There are two Tax Assistance Offices at Fort Benning. The main office is located in Classroom 1, Building 4, and a Kelley Hill Branch is located at Building 9205 in the Brigade Legal Center. Hours of operation for the Main Office are 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. hours, Monday through Friday until April 15, except holidays. Kelley Hill Branch may provide services after that time for returning Soldiers who have missed tax season.

Armed Services YMCA sets 1998 essay contest

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — A program supporting installation libraries, Department of Defense (DoD) schools and other agencies that serve the children and youth of military families was outlined recently by the Armed Services YMCA.

The nonprofit organization's "Young Readers Project" Essay Contest is a worldwide effort to encourage reading among military family members. Winners of 20 U.S. Savings Bonds will be announced in April.

To help strengthen an awareness of the importance of reading in an era dominated by electronics, the Armed Services YMCA will award Savings Bonds totaling $5,000 to students who submit winning essays related to the value of reading in their lives.

Students should submit their essays by midnight March 31 via electronic mail to the Armed Services YMCA at: asymca@erols.com. Contestants can also use regular postal mail, but entries must be postmarked by midnight March 31. Last year, 4,200 essays were submitted, with approximately one-third received electronically.

Two high school students (one in the United States and one living overseas) will each receive a $1,000 bond. And $500 bonds each will be presented to a student in middle school, one at the fourth- to sixth-grade level and a child in the pre-school to third-grade level.

Fifteen additional $100 bonds will go to runners up.

Military libraries on installations, DoD Education Activity schools worldwide, and youth and child development services program staff have been invited to participate in the Young Readers Project.

The program focuses on the importance of good reading skills among youth and children in military families.

The DoD Education Activity is committed to enhancing the reading and writing skills of its students worldwide.

"Research continues to demonstrate that reading — for children of all ages — improves their ability to learn, enhances their vocabularies and strengthens their social skills and sense of self," said Joan Gibbons, DoDEA's reading coordinator. "Efforts by the community to help us reinforce the importance and pleasure of reading are helpful and appreciated."

Essays submitted for consideration in this contest will be on subjects that develop the theme of reading as a valuable and enjoyable activity.

•Pre-school through third grade:

The child's essay in this group should be a paragraph or two beginning with these sentences or thoughts: "I like my Mom and Dad to read to me because ..." Or "The favorite story I like my Mom or Dad to read to me is ..." Pre-school and second-grade children may submit entries "as told to a parent." Third-graders should write their own.

•Fourth grade through sixth grade:

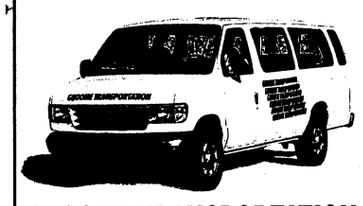
The essay length in this category is 100 to 200 words, with the student relating his or her opinions and thoughts about reading. Possible themes: why the student chooses to use her time or his time to read; or an explanation directed to other children about the reasons they should read. Or "Why my library is so important."

•Middle school.

The length of the essay for this age group is 200 to 300 words, beginning with the following sentences or thoughts: "The most exciting thing about reading is ..." Or "The kinds of books I like to read the most are ..." Or "Reading is especially important in the electronics age." Or "How reading has helped me as a member of a military family."

•High School:

Student essays should be 400 to 600 words in length. Subjects should center on the pleasure and value of reading. For example, students could develop the theme of how reading has better prepared them for adulthood. It could be about how the student first discovered the value and importance of reading, what reading has meant to the student as a member of a military family or the importance of reading in the electronics age.



Each entry must clearly indicate the student's name, age, grade and address, as well as parents' names and military unit affiliation, telephone number, and the name and location of the school attended.

The name of the school is important, because books and other publications will be contributed to installation libraries and the libraries of participating schools.

Libraries and other agencies on the installation with access to the Internet are all contest entry points.

Chaplain wishes for more than just happiness — joy

By Chaplain (Capt.) Vern Jordin
30th AG Battalion (Reception)

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. Well thanks Chaplain, but aren't you a little late? After all, the holidays are completed. The holidays are completed, but the wish continues throughout the year. However, I would like to take a closer look at the meaning of the greeting.

reflections

The term "merry" implies a high-spiritedness or festive feeling. This certainly is associated with the holidays, but it's temporary — kind of linked with the holiday. That's the nature of merriment. Lots of fun, friendship and festivity; but temporary.

My mother-in-law collects frogs (knickknacks, not real frogs). Her collection includes one frog with a subscript that reads, "Don't worry, be hoppy."

Do you remember when the song came out with the phrase "don't worry, be happy"?

We learned in the history class that the founders of our country believed that one of our basic human rights is the pursuit of happiness. It's not uncommon to see people in pursuit of happiness.

Great disappointments come out of running after the things we think will bring happiness, but when found only leave us empty and unfulfilled. I cannot recall the number of privates I have talked with that joined the Army in search of what they thought would bring happiness; but, once they met their drill sergeants, think they found quite the contrary.

Happiness, by definition, is circumstantial or transitory. It's based on events. The dictionary describes it as "characterized by luck or good fortune." In Spanish the same holiday greeting is, "Feliz Navidad y Prospero Año Nuevo." A loose English translation is "Happy Christmas and prosperous New Year." In attempting to give the same greeting in another language, its translation magnifies the meaning for us. This is fitting with the idea of happiness meaning good fortune. Good fortune is circumstantial and often fleeting.

Some circumstances can help me feel happy. Our son and his wife are expecting their first child in March (I can't believe I'm this close to being a grandfather). The prospect of a new baby in the family brings us happiness. His wife had some difficulty with her pregnancy (now corrected and thankfully she is doing well). That was not a happy circumstance.

What I prefer to wish for you in the New Year is joy. I think that people in pursuit of happiness are really searching for joy. The dictionary describes joy as "the condition or feeling of high pleasure" — that is, something above the ordinary.

In the list of synonyms for happy, joy represents the strongest form and implies extremely high spirits or a strong sense of fulfillment. The word "joy" appears in the list of synonyms for pleasure as well. There "joy" represents the highest form of pleasure and implies a sustained state. It is associated with sharing, self-realization, and high-mindedness.

In other words, happiness and merriment are circumstantial and fleeting. Joy is that which rises above circumstances and is based on things that are lasting or eternal.

I believe real joy comes from God. The Apostle Paul tells us that the source of joy is the Spirit of God "But the fruit of the Spirit is ... joy." (Galatians 5:22, NIV) Our access to joy is through the higher level of the spiritual. We can obtain this joy through regular devotions, worship, prayer and fellowship with other believers.

Jesus said it this way, "Do not store up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust destroy, and where thieves break in and steal. But store up for yourselves treasures in heaven ... For where your treasure is, there your heart will be also." He also said, "see first his kingdom and his righteousness and all these things will be given to you as well." (Matthew 6:19-21, 33, NIV)

May you know real joy in this coming year and the peace of God that also comes with the fruit of the spirit of God.

The term "cultural resource" refers to archeological sites and historical structures, which are eligible or potentially eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

The National Register of Historic Places is a list of historic structures, archeological sites, landscapes and, which meet one or more of the Secretary of Interior's four criteria for eligibility.

The criteria include:

•Association with events that have made significant contributions to the broad patterns of American history;

•Association with the lives of individuals significant to American society;

•Embodiment of distinctive characteristics of a type, period or method of construction, or representative of the work of a master, or that represent a significant distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; and •Having yielded or likely to yield, information important in prehistory.

Working with the state historic preservation officers of both Alabama and Georgia as well as with 11 Native American tribes with interests in this area, the historic architect and archeologist of Fort Benning seek to assist in achieving a proper balance between present and future military needs and historic preservation.

There are more than 690 historic structures in the Main Post Historic District, including the Cuartels.

The Cuartels are brick and stucco constructions built as barracks and remain the core of an historic district surrounded by administrative buildings and family housing, including Riverside, the Commanding General's residence.

Built just after the turn of the century and currently on the National Register, Riverside remains a centerpiece for Fort Benning.

The National Infantry Museum, part of the old hospital complex built it in the 1930's, is an historic structure and is eligible for the National Register.

More than 2,500 archeological sites, some perhaps 8,000 years old or more and one of which has been designated a national landmark are recorded on Fort Benning. More than 1,500 more sites are expected to be located by the time surveys are completed in 2002.

Sites include those created by the Muscogee (Creek) tribe the Yuchi (Euchee) tribe and their predecessors. After the removal of most Native Americans from the region to Oklahoma in the mid-1830's, archeological sites were created by European and African Americans in settlements such as Eelbeck and Jamestown.

The preservation of these cultural resources is an ever-present consideration as DPW maintains and seeks to enhance the high standard of our quality of life at Fort Benning.

For more information about the installation's cultural resources, call Dr. Christopher Hamilton at 545-7573.

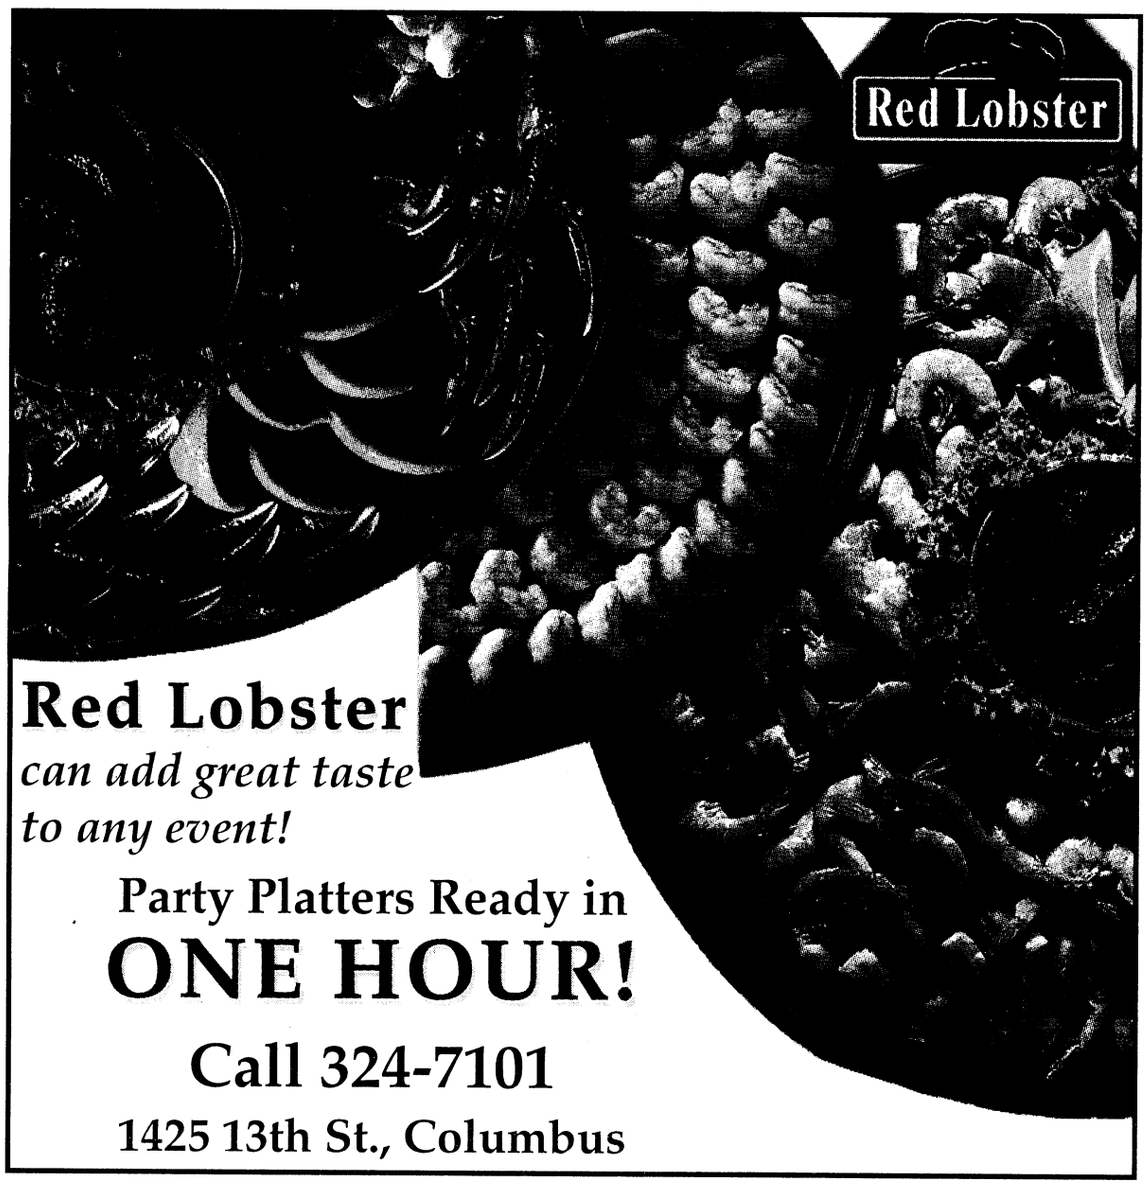
Measures, escape plan fundamental to fire safety

Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation

Every year there are 1.55 million burns and fire-related injuries in the United States and Canada and 75 percent of them are preventable.

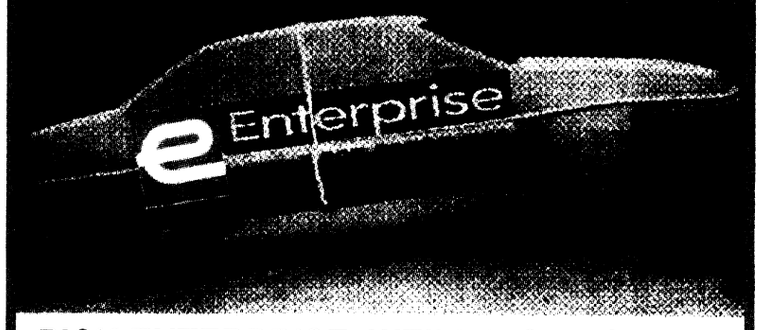
Children are scalded or burned by tap water that is too hot; a woman's pants catch fire while burning leaves; a young father's clothes catch fire while grilling dinner or a senior citizen's night gown catches fire from being too close to a space heater.

All of these instances, and many more, happen regularly in Georgia.



During Burn Awareness Week, Feb. 1-7, and throughout the year, Georgia citizens can help prevent needless burn injuries by ensuring homes and workplaces are fire safe.

This can be done easily by lowering the temperature of the hot water heater — it should be set no higher than 120 degrees F; practicing your fire escape plan with your family and coworkers; exercising safe cooking and outdoor grilling habits; and ensuring that the electrical wiring in your home is safe and up to standard. All of these simple safety measures can be done quickly and can save a life.



Nationally the statistics show that burn injuries and deaths are down by 35 to 40 percent. In Georgia alone, fire deaths have reached an all time low — less than 100 during 1997.

"The reduction is due to education efforts by Georgia fire and burn professionals and the Burn Foundation, as well as Georgia residents taking part in safety measures," said Barbara Larson, Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation Community Relations director.

Citizens who would like to make their family, home and work-place fire safe can request free fire safety brochures and materials by contacting the Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation at (404) 320-6223 or (800) 273-2876 or visiting their web site at www.gfbf.com.

Shooter sets 8 national records

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A service pistol shooter of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) recently set eight national records.

Kimberly J. Kolb broke eight women's short-course national records at the Service Pistol 2700 Match conducted at Fort Benning's Phillips' Range Jan. 19.

In the .22 Caliber Slow-Fire Match, Kolb shot a score of 189 points with 5 Xs out of a possible 200 points with 20 Xs breaking the old record of 187 points with 3 Xs (an X is a bull's eye center shot used in tie-breaking).

Shooting the .22 caliber in the National Match Course, Kolb scored 291 points with 13 Xs out of a possible 300 points with 30 Xs, which broke the old record of 291 points with 5 Xs. Out of a possible 900 points, she scored a 878 with 41 Xs for the 900 Aggregate with the .22 caliber pistol, the old record was 856 points with 22 Xs.

With the .45 caliber pistol, Kolb broke the old slow-fire record of 188 points and 6 Xs out of a possible 200 points with 20 Xs with her score of 190 points with 4 Xs; and in the National Match Course she fired a 290 with 12 Xs, breaking the old record of 288 with 11 Xs. In the .45 Caliber 900 Aggregate, Kolb score a 869 with 28 Xs, which downed the old record of 851 and 24 Xs.

She also broke the old Center Fire Aggregate record of 852 points with 31 Xs with her score of 861 and 36 Xs and the Grand Aggregate record of 2,564 points out of a possible 2,700 points with her score of 2,608 points.

"I appreciate all the support of the Army Marksmanship Unit gunsmiths and from my team; I couldn't have done it without them," Kolb said. "Sgt. Joe D. Harless recently worked on my guns and got them in form and my teammates are my biggest fans and each and every one of them helped me achieve this goal."

An Eagle Rock, Va., resident, Kolb graduated from James River High School in Buchanan, Va., in 1986 and received a bachelor's degree in history from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University four years later. She is currently working on a master's degree in international relations.

Kolb joined the Army in 1990 and was assigned to the 303rd Military Intelligence Battalion at Fort Hood, Texas, where she was a signals intelligence analyst. In 1993, she was assigned to USAMU.

Besides graduating from Basic Training at Fort Jackson,. S.C., in 1990, Kolb is also a graduate of the Basic Russian Course at the Defense Language Institute at the Presidio of Monterey, Calif., in 1991, the Signals Intelligence and Electronic Warfare Analyst Course at Goodfellow Air Force Base, Texas, in 1992, the Tactical Signals Intelligence and Electronic Warfare Analyst Course at Fort Devens, Mass., in 1992, the Primary Leadership Development Course and the Instructor Training Course both at Fort Benning in 1993, and the Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., in 1995.

She has been awarded the Army Commendation Medal, Army Achievement Medal, Good Conduct Medal, National Defense Service Medal, Army Service Ribbon, two Noncommissioned Officers Professional Development Ribbons and the Physical Fitness Training Patch.

AER, Red Cross join forces

Quicker response time reason for coming together

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

The American Red Cross and the Army Emergency Relief (AER) just made getting financial assistance for emergencies less time consuming. The two organizations teamed up to help those in need more efficiently.

In the past, Soldiers and their family members who needed money before going on emergency leave spent anywhere from an hour to a half a day waiting for approval from the Red Cross or AER, said Alphonsa Oliver, station manager of Fort Benning's Red Cross Station. Those needing assistance today are only looking at about 30 minutes.

The partnership will be used anytime a Soldier or family member uses the Red Cross for financial assistance for emergency leave.

"This partnership will benefit the Soldiers and their family members in times of need," said Alfonso Deane, AER officer.

Whatever money is loaned out to someone by the Red Cross will be reimbursed by AER. The person receiving the loan will have to pay back AER, Oliver said. Retirees can also use the Red Cross for emergency financial assistance on a case by case basis. To get assistance, retirees need approval from AER and the Red Cross's national headquarters.

Deane said there are many ways for those receiving loans to pay AER back. But he said most loans from the Red Cross are done with allotments and are usually paid back in 10 months or less.

It's less time-consuming because a Soldier or family member does not have to be referred from Red Cross to AER, Deane said. That person can obtain assistance from either agency.

"The Red Cross only has to ensure the emergency leave was approved by the person's chain of command," Oliver said. The Red Cross still has to verify the emergency. In the past, there were more steps that would take more time.

AER continues to be another source of financial assistance, but is not limited for emergency reasons only, as is the Red Cross.

"It makes getting help a more rapid process," Oliver said.

Red Cross now allows service members to get financial assistance on behalf of almost any family member. The help is no longer just for service members; the assistance is for any of their family members. The dollar amount is limited to $2,000 for both service members and their families, Oliver said. If more money is needed, Oliver said all it should take is a phone call to the national headquarters. Still, he said, "The process should be a lot quicker."

For more information about emergency financial assistance, call Oliver at Fort Benning's Red Cross at 545-5194 or call AER at 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

AER can also be reached on the Internet at www.aerhq.org.

Movin' on up

A Soldier from Company D, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, practices pulling himself up a wall during training at the post's Malone Military Operation on Urban Terrain site Jan. 31. The new Soldiers learn basic tactics of operating within this type of environment. The Soldiers will use what they learned later in their basic training during the scheduled Field Training Exercise. Soldiers return from NTC OPFOR rotation

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiers from Fort Benning's 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), returned to post Jan. 29 after spending a little less than three weeks training in the Mojave Desert at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

The majority of the returning group hailed from the brigade's Companies A and D, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment; although, there were Soldiers from other units within the brigade attached to the unit including 317th Engineer Battalion and the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regt.

It wasn't business as usual for the more than 200 Soldiers. This rotation had them acting as the opposing force (OPFOR) while the 2nd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), Fort Stewart, Ga., went through as the Blue Force. The Blue Force is the unit focusing on it's particular type of training while the OPFOR acts as a Soviet-style threat.

The OPFOR has three main missions. Task-Force Angel, an air-assault unit that is inserted behind or on the flanks of the Blue Force lines; Task-Force Rampage, a company-sized element mounted on Armored Personnel Carriers (APC) that assist the OPFOR's mechanized battalion by taking out the Blue Force's dismounted Infantrymen and seizing terrain; and Task-Force Destroyer, an element inserted by trucks whose mission it is to keep the Blue Force from moving out around the flanks or to the rear.

The brigade's Soldiers were mostly responsible for the first two missions because a unit from the Canadian Army, the Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry Company was used as the Task-Force Destroyer.

Lt. Col. Addison Davis, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. commander, said he was impressed with the unit's training.

"The thing I was most pleased about was the attitude of the Soldiers," Davis said. "Their attitude enabled them to go out and learn about conducting operations in the desert."

Davis said he spent a good bit of time with the unit while deployed and accompanied a few missions with them.

"Of the two missions I was fortunate enough to go on, both fights went extremely well," Davis said.

Soldiers from the unit echoed Davis's praise of the deployment.

"It went real well," said Sgt. 1st Class Mark Taylor, platoon sergeant for 1st platoon, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. "It was fun seeing it from the other side."

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin

Soldiers disembark at Lawson Army Airfield Jan. 29.

Taylor said most never knew how to fight based on the old Soviet doctrine. He said things are a little different.

Taylor spent most of his time with Task-Force Angel, but was able to participate with Task-Force Rampage also.

"It's very tough training," he said. "You have to be very prepared to succeed out there."

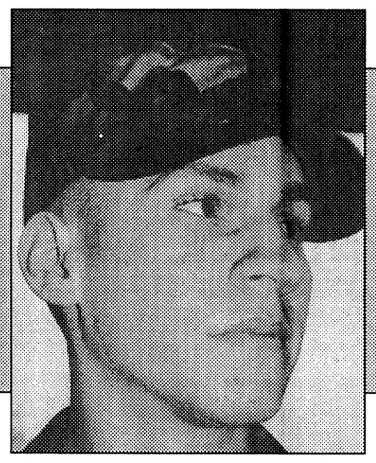
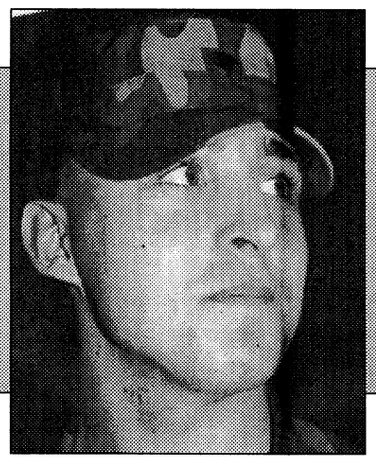
VARIOUS VOICES

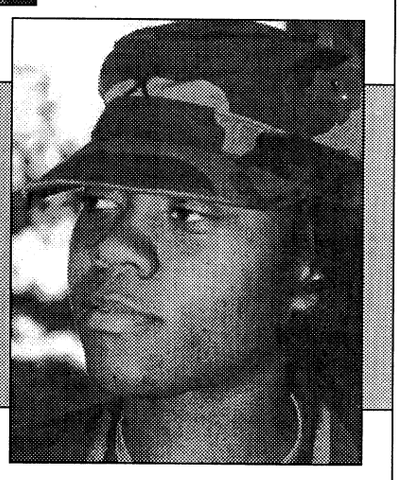


How can the quality of life improve on Fort Benning?

Yvette McDuffie, federal employee — "The Commissary and Main Mall Post Exchange need help. They should also limit the amount of people who can go into the stores."



Staff Sgt. Donnell H. Joseph, Bradley Instructor Course, 29th Infantry Regiment — "They need more activities on post for not just single Soldiers, but families as well."



Pvt. 2 Jaime Martinez, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Artillery Regiment — "I just got here not too long ago, but everything looks good so far."

Jeannie A. Jenkins, family member — "Housing needs to be improved especially for those who have large families. I'm also upset about all the cutbacks in the school system."

Spc. Glen D. Fry, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade — "High-interest military loan businesses should be put off limits. The 20 to 30 percent interest rate can get privates into trouble."

Pvt. 2 Delories Houchens, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "The barracks need improvement. They also should let students do more around post like participate in organized sports."

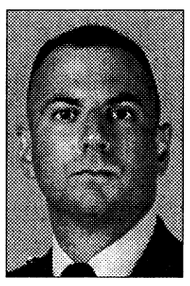
Litter bugs need to respect community

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

commentary

Driving down Dixie Road on the way to physical training (PT) a couple of mornings ago, I noticed the driver in front of me crack his window and toss out a flaming cigarette butt. I could see his PT greys and a black cap. Two thoughts crossed my mind.

I'm pretty sure the driver was a Soldier on his way to PT and I wondered how he could demand so much from his lungs. This Soldier has to be in good shape, I thought, to suck down smoke one minute, then minutes later, knockout his high-speed workout session. What a champion.



Then I thought, what an inconsiderate, self-centered cretin (I had another word, but I can't use that here). He must think the world is his ashtray.

I was just happy I had my window rolled up. When I was in high school, a cigarette butt melted a hole through the back seat of my car.

"How did that happen?" my dad asked about the damage.

"I don't know. It must have flown in," I guessed.

"Cigarettes don't fly," my dad said. "I smoked in the Navy.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane thinks Fort Benning is the best installation, but there's always room for improvement

Don't start smoking. I hate smokers. It's like the world's their ashtray."

Smokers, don't send me nasty grams — I'm not out to get you. You've already been beaten up by the fanatical nonsmoking community. And sorry dad, I do smoke a fine cigar every now and then.

I'm just tired of seeing people treat Fort Benning like an ashtray, trashing the community with cigarette butts, beer bottles and all kinds of garbage.

Every morning Soldiers are taken from their workplace to perform police call. They comb the roads and parking lots with garbage bags and pick up the overnight damage.

Some of this mess can be contributed to stray animals rummaging through the dumpsters, but after performing police call several times, I would have to say most of this trash comes from lazy litter bugs tossing stuff from their vehicles.

This whole litter business bothers me on several levels.

First, police call takes Soldiers away from their workplaces, wasting many work hours. Our office is so small, I usually put myself on police call so the rest of the Soldiers can drive on with the mission. Sure, I have my work to do but they're responsible for producing a weekly newspaper and television program on a very tight schedule.

Second, every unit seems to get hit with police call, but that doesn't stop the littering. I hate picking up someone else's box of fried chicken bones or broken beer bottles. I would think people would adopt the philosophy of "don't litter, because you'll eventually be the one who has to pick it up."

Finally, littering in itself is a selfish personal choice, a character flaw. This bad habit impacts on the entire Fort Benning community, not just the Soldiers on police call wearing those geeky-looking orange road guard vests.

Fort Benning is one of the best installations I've been assigned to, with some of the finest facilities in the Army. I know we're the best Army installation in the world — I see the signs everyday. But there's always room for improvement.

The one improvement I would welcome is something that cannot be built or bought. That is everyone learning to respect this community, whether at Fort Benning temporarily for school or locked in for a longer tour.

With the reduction in force and cutbacks we've all lived through in the last years, it's not like we have a bunch of Soldiers hanging out with nothing to do. Little tasks like police call impact greatly on a mission, when Soldiers have to be pulled away from their jobs.

Locals and visitors can help by treating Fort Benning like their parents' front lawn. Hey, I don't expect you to be out there with a lawn mower and weeding the sidewalk, though I know that happens at some units.

Wouldn't your mom slap in you in the back of the head if you dropped a burger wrapper on her front porch?

Instead of walking around that empty drink can, pick it up. I know you didn't leave it there, but how hard can it be to bend over and pick up a little can.

Think of it as the bend and reach exercise. I draw a line at cigarette butts and some other items.

I guess I could have followed the Soldier who tossed the butt out the window and confronted him, but I don't think I would have changed his habits. "Smoking" the Soldier and helping him "become one with the Fort Benning soil" in the front-leaning rest position might have helped him to appreciate a litter-free community. Maybe not. I know I would have felt better.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller is concerned the facility where she does aerobics does not allow parents to bring their children under 10 anymore. She said it is hard to find child care in the evenings and it is too expensive using Tot Town.

DCA response:

The chief, Community Operations Division, spoke with the caller who said her primary concern was she and a couple of others wanted to bring their children to the Fitness Club and keep them in the room with them while they exercised. He explained the Safety Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, and childcare personnel reviewed this; and the Officers' Club does not and cannot meet the federal standards for child care on site. The patrons were trying to get around the rules by keeping the children in the room with them. This cannot be allowed from a safety standpoint.

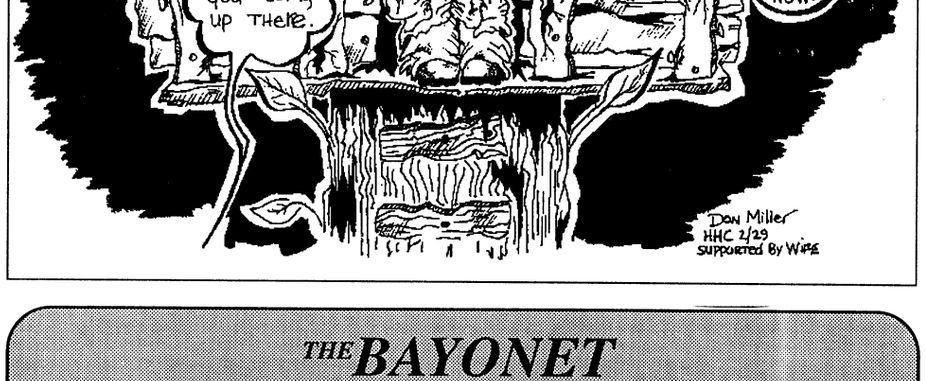
Call: The caller said that for more than eight months now the residents of Christian and Merrill Lane have been having problems with their mail being delivered to wrong addresses and to empty quarters.

DOIM response:

The Columbus postmaster told the caller that the mail delivery will get better. She was advised that if she continued to have problems she may go to the Fort Benning Branch Post Office and file a written complain on PS Form 4313-C (Consumer Service Card).

CG declares February Black History Month

In 1976, the First Presidential Proclamation proclaimed February as "Black History Month." In recognition of the numerous contributions of African Americans to every aspect of our nation, I hereby declare the month of February as Black History Month at Fort Benning.



1998's theme for Black History Month is "African Americans in Business: The Path Towards Empowerment."

The month of February is a time to focus on past experiences and to gain encouragement and motivation to reach new heights well into the next century.

Increasing the awareness of Black History will help promote harmony and improve understanding among all Americans.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and the surrounding community to participate in and enjoy activities during this observance.

Construction workers continue to work on the new dining facility being constructed on Kelley Hill Jan. 27. The new facility is being constructed across the street from a new barracks complex for the Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

NTC: Desert trainers return

— based 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, the permanent OPFOR for the training facility.

"These guys are true professionals," Taylor said. "They know the terrain, they conduct great rehearsals and they're good at what they do. It's really a humbling experience to go out there and see them"

Seeing the NTC for the first time was Pvt. 2 Bryan Sommers, a Bradley Fighting Vehicle driver.

"You'd think in the desert it's hot all the time, but it gets very cold at night," he said."

Sommers said training as the OPFOR was a learning experience.

"It's really rough terrain," he said. "As a driver I had to always watch where I was going. You'd think something that weighs as much as a Bradley couldn't get airborne, I know differently now."

At times the training was tough, and at other times it was boring, he said.

During fights he said his adrenaline would rush and he'd really enjoy what was going on. But when he was killed, he had to sit for hours sometimes before the next mission would begin.

"I'd just use that time to pull maintenance on the vehicle," he said. "There was plenty of good training to offset the downtime."

During one downtime, the Soldiers traveled to Las Vegas. But most were glad to get home and the commander welcomed them home with handshakes and pats on the back.

With one deployment over and one ongoing, the unit isn't done yet. Company C is currently preparing for its deployment to the Joint Readiness Training Center coming up in March.

Registers benefit customers

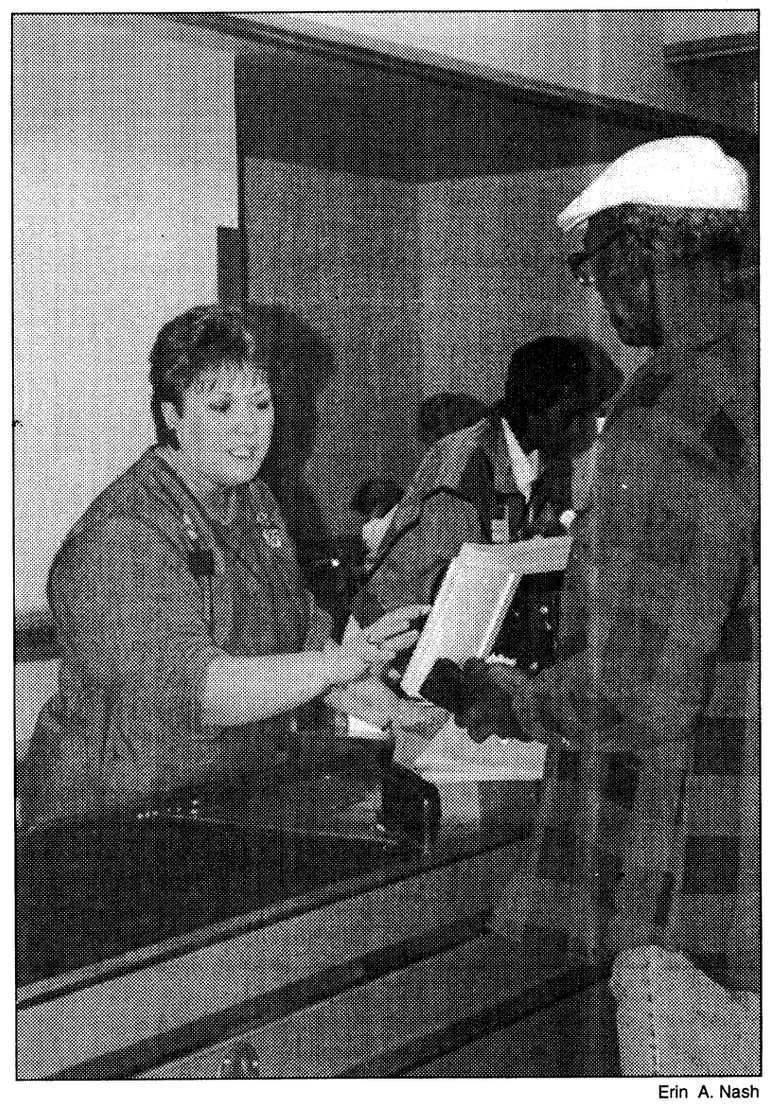
By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning commissary, under renovation since December 1995, recently installed new cash registers and will be undergoing more renovations before the construction is over.

The $8 million used to renovate the commissary includes a new floor, electrical wiring, new water supplies, a new roof and new doors. The commissary has gone from being 38,000 to 47,000 square feet, although none of the outside walls have moved.

During the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. holiday weekend, 22 new cash registers were installed in the commissary, including four handicapped accessible registers.

Tallie Taylor, store manager, said the new registers are more efficient.



"We can carry more line items, the receipt tapes are more detailed and easier to read and we now accept debit and credit cards," Taylor said.

Besides being easier on customers, the registers are also easier on the cashiers.

"The scanners read broken UPC's on items," Taylor said. "The scanner also will read a UPC on any side but the top, when it used to be just the bottom, so they can process customers faster."

When a customer wanted a price before, a cashier had to leave the register and consult a book. The new registers are equipped with a price inquiry button.

"The registers also know what's authorized for the Women, Infant, Children system and what's food stamp accessible," Taylor said. "Everybody I've talked to loves it. It's so much easier for them."

Cashier Karen Newman checks out a customer.

Deputy commissary officer Michael S. Waksmonski said the new registers help the administrative office be more efficient.

"Everything is computerized," Waksmonski said. "We have new software. We can add items, change prices and delete items faster."

Also planned to be added is a fresh bakery, customer restrooms, a portable register for special sales, an electronic shelf labeling system and point of sales signs showing customers the regular and sale price of an item and how much they're saving.

"We expect construction to end in May or June of this year," Waksmonski said.

Taylor also stressed the importance of customer feedback.

"There's always a manager on duty," Taylor said. "We welcome suggestions, complaints and anything else the customer wants us to know. If I don't know there's something wrong, I can't change it."

ACAP offers business class

Army Career and Alumni Program

The U.S. Small Business Administration and the University of Georgia Small Business Development Center are again sponsoring a monthly seminar for Soldiers, family members and civil service employees.

"We are delighted to have Mike Elliott present a monthly two-hour seminar on starting a small business," said Chick Eagle, Fort Benning Army Career and Army Program (ACAP) counselor. "The first seminar will be presented in the Retirement Services Office training room Building 2635, Soldiers' Plaza from 2 to 4 p.m., Jan. 12.

"The seminar will give potential entrepreneurs a sound understanding of what is needed to start a small business and have a reasonable chance for long term success. Subject areas to be covered are: taking inventory of required personal assets, analysis of the business environment, developing a business plan, projecting costs, potential financing options," said Eagle.

Additional seminars are scheduled for the second Thursday of each month at the same place and time. The Small Business Development Center not only offers this type of group training but also gives individualized professional business consulting, advanced marketing and research programs.

"Soldiers interested in the possibility of starting their own small business will find this presentation increases basic understanding of getting started and offers help with weighing the risks involved in business decisions," said Eagle.

For additional information, call 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Eng company changes command

By 2nd Lt. Carmen Hancock
63rd Engineer Co., 36th Engineer Group

The 63rd Engineer Company (CSE) conducted a change of command ceremony Jan. 14.

Col. A. Allen Rasper, Commander, 36th Engineer Group, oversaw the 1:30 p.m. ceremony in the Arrival Departure Control Group hangar next to Lawson Army Airfield.

Numerous previous and present officers and Soldiers of the 36th Eng. Grp., as well as many friends and family members attended the ceremony. Upon viewing her company, Capt. Melody D. Smith, outgoing Commander, commented, "I consider this command of the finest engineer company in the Army the highlight of my career and welcome each Soldier to a place in my future endeavors," she said.

Smith praised her Soldiers for the tasks they accomplished during her time in command and her fellow officers and leaders for the support they gave her. Although Smith is looking forward to her next assignment as the Operations Officer, DCSOPS, Camp Zama, Japan, she said she is leaving with mixed emotions.

The Company presented her with a plaque containing a miniature guidon, photograph of the Soldiers, her ribbons, and the insignia of each rank within the company. Her three-year-old son Roderick was given a construction toy set.

Capt. Robert H. Carr, incoming commander, previously worked as the Assistant Operations Officer, 36th Eng. Grp. He also addressed the company and spoke of his high expectations and optimism for his time with the 63rd.

His wife, Capt. Temaki Carr, Assistant intelligence officer for the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), and daughter Dominique, attended the ceremony. The company family support group and Soldiers from the unit presented his wife and daughter with bouquets of flowers. The company held a reception in the dayroom following the ceremony.

At the reception, Brig. Gen. Pat Anderson said it was an honor for her to attend the change of command for an officer who she knows has done an excellent job.

Rasper also echoed these remarks.

He said although the 63rd is losing an outstanding commander, who took the unit to new levels of readiness, the company is also gaining another high quality commander. He sites this as a prime example of the Army's ability to continue to produce high quality, professional officers.

AAFES starts benefit program

Army and Air Force Exchange Services

Within the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) associate staff, customer service is number one in importance in serving Fort Benning patrons, said Gary Greene, general manager.

In an effort to consistently improve the service to valued customers, a program has been introduced that invites customers to recognize AAFES associates when they receive top-notch service. The associate recognition (POG) program has been adopted which literally gives the customer the opportunity to award an associate a "Thanks for a job well done" POG or token when superior service has been rendered. In turn, associates turn in the awarded POG or token for incentive award to encourage continued good customer service performance.

A $5 award is granted per POG turned in by associates or they may accumulate the POGs for larger awards.

Ten POGs: Awards a brass pin, $50 and a letter or recognition for the associate's personnel file.

Ten Brass Pins (100 POGs equivalent): Awards a silver pin, $100, a letter of recognition for the associate's personnel file and recognition in the exchange post newspaper.

Two silver pins (200 POGs equivalent): Awards a gold pin, $200, a letter of recognition for the associate's personnel file and the associate's picture placed in the exchange newspaper.

The important factor to the program is how the customers are the controlling agents in an employee's award. Therefore, it encourages workers to go out of their way to please customers and of course, that is what retail is all about, Greene said. POGs may be obtained from the Main Mall Post Exchange management office located next to the cashier cage.

Cohen spells out defense budget

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — "Shape, respond and prepare" is the mantra Defense Secretary William S. Cohen keeps repeating about the fiscal 1999 Department of Defense (DoD) budget.

Cohen told reporters these were the operative words behind DoD's defense strategy. The strategy calls for the United States to shape the international environment, respond to the full spectrum of crises and start to prepare for the armed forces called for in Joint Vision 2010.

DoD based the budget on the requirements of the Quadrennial Defense Review, Cohen said. "This comprehensive analysis examines the threats and the risks the United States faces through 2015," he said. "The budget is also based on the Defense Reform Initiative. This study calls for us to adapt the best business practices from private industry, making DoD leaner and more agile."

Cohen said the fiscal 1999 budget puts into place the funding for the future force. The budget protects readiness and puts DoD on the road toward modernization. However, that road could abruptly stop if Congress does not approve two more rounds of the base realignment and closure process, he said.

He said the closure process has already closed or realigned 152 major DoD installations and 235 smaller ones. DoD has invested $23 billion to implement the recommendations of the 1988-1995 commissions. By fiscal 2001, these will yield a net savings of $14 billion with annual savings of $5.6 billion after that. The money saved goes directly to the modernization account, Cohen said. Without further closures, DoD cannot meet the modernization target of $60 billion per year recommended by military planners.

"There was a substantial reduction of submarines between the height of the Cold War and those recommended under the Quadrennial Defense Review," Cohen said. "Yet there has been no reduction in pier space." The same applies to ramp space for aircraft, the secretary said.

"I told Congress during my confirmation hearings that all the easy choices are gone," he said. If the department spends money on maintaining excess bases, it cannot afford modernization, and this will eventually impair readiness to the extent the United States "will send their sons and daughters into harm's way with less than adequate equipment and support," he said.

If Congress does not approve new rounds of base closures, then it must bear some of the responsibility when U.S. military readiness drops, Cohen said.

DoD has been worried about readiness and applied $1 billion extra toward spare parts, depot maintenance and pilot retention in the fiscal 1999 budget.

The budget also called for an extra $1 billion toward chemical and biological defense programs and puts funds toward the Defense Information Assurance Program. The program will protect vital information systems from attack. "States and some federal agencies have already started this," Cohen said. "We need to integrate this."

The fiscal 1999 budget is essentially a flat budget — after discounting for inflation there is no real growth. Part of this is due to the bipartisan balanced budget agreement negotiated between President Clinton and Congress. In the past, Congress was able to add money to the defense budget. This is unlikely this year, Cohen said, because Congress will have to take money from other defense programs in order to fund add-ons.

Cohen said he is asking Congress for a supplemental appropriation to cover an extended NATO mission in Bosnia and increased operations in the Persian Gulf. "Rapid approval of this request is essential to protect readiness," Cohen said. Historically, DoD has had to borrow from fourth-quarter operations and maintenance money to fund unanticipated operations. This causes readiness to suffer.

Cohen also spoke about anticipated Defense Reform Initiative savings. He said the initiative will streamline DoD operations — the Office of the Secretary of Defense alone will be cut one-third.

"We are also moving into paperless contracting," he said. "By July 1998, all contracting will be done on the Internet, and we expect significant savings from that."

DoD will also open 150,000 to 200,000 civilian positions to competition with private firms. He said he expects the public sector to win about 50 percent of those competitions. "But even so we will see a 20 percent savings with higher production at the best prices for the American taxpayers."

Army authorizes combat awards

By Sgt. 1st Class Bill Costlow
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army has authorized the award of the Combat Infantryman Badge (CIB) and Combat Medical Badge (CMB), as an exception to policy, for eligible Soldiers who served in El Salvador during the period Jan. 1, 1981 to Feb. 1, 1992.

In reaching this decision, several factors were considered, including the 1996 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) which authorized award of the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal for Soldiers involved in operations in El Salvador.

The Shoulder Sleeve Insignia — Former Wartime Service (SSI-FWTS) and individual awards for valor were previously authorized for service in El Salvador during this time period.

According to officials at the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command (PERSCOM), a message will be disseminated Army-wide announcing the authorization of the CIB and CMB for service in El Salvador along with the procedures for requesting award of the badges. The change authorizing the badges for service in El Salvador will also be reflected in the next update of the regulation (DA PAM 600-8-22).

About 5,000 Soldiers served in El Salvador, however the CIB is awarded only to Infantry and Special Forces Soldiers and the CMB is awarded only to those in medical specialties.

Upon receipt of requests at Headquarters, PERSCOM, action will be taken to determine if the individual is authorized award of the badge. If so, orders will be issued announcing award of the badge for the period of qualifying service.

New Soldiers adapt to field time

By Staff Sgt. Clifton Kershaw
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

KUWAIT — As the Bradley commander gave the order to dismount, squads of Company C, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry, stood on the verge of running a dusty gauntlet Jan. 24.

One particular squad, lead by Sgt. Paul Bennett, stood at the ready. The Bradley moved into position and dropped its ramp, releasing a flood of Soldiers with one goal in mind — to advance through a sandy corridor and engage enemy targets in the form of remote-operated, pop-up silhouettes.

During the engagement, the targets appeared, requiring squad leaders to respond by deploying their teams in support and assault elements.

One team engaged the target as the other maneuvered to flank and overrun the enemies' position.

Although a lot of these Soldiers are new to the Army, most fresh out of One Station Unit Training, according to one of them, they understand the value of their training here and are realistic about the prospects of encountering real combat.

"Before we came here, everybody said 'I can shoot,' but you don't know until it comes down to it," said Pvt. 2 Joseph Johnson. "Everything could change when you're under fire, but this (training) gives me a lot of confidence in my squad and what we can do together"

Learning the importance of being ready for anything is a step in the right direction for these young Soldiers, said 1st Sgt. Nicholas Hope.

"This is the first time that a lot of these Soldiers have worked together as a squad," Hope said. "Under the conditions these Soldiers encounter in the Kuwaiti desert, it's learned quickly that teamwork is essential to mission success."

"I'm ready to go anywhere with these guys," Bennett said. "They've proven they have a winning attitude and that they have all the things it takes to come home alive."

Officers test leadership skills, trust during training

By 2nd Lt. Francis E. Germanese
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) class 2-98 was introduced to the Leaders Reaction Course Jan. 29. This 16-station course is designed to test a new Infantry lieutenant's problem solving skills and squad teamwork.

The course is conducted by squads of lieutenants. A squad leader is designated and he receives the mission from a staff NCO or officer instructor. The instructor briefs the squad leader on the mission and allows the squad leader two minutes to formulate a plan. The squad leader then briefs his troops as to the course of action and asks for input. When the formal plan is made it is implemented with a 12-minute time limit.

"What the instructors are looking for is to assure troop leading procedures and Mission, Enemy, Terrain, Troops-Time Available are incorporated into the squad leaders process the squad leaders process," said Staff Sgt. Lenny Bernholz of San Antonio, Texas. "The mission parameters are designed to put stress into the scenario," said Capt. John El-Zinga.

The event is not measured in the traditional "go" or "no-go" grading system, but on the overall teamwork of the squad and the control of the troops by the squad leader. Many of the missions include traversing water and minefields in order to carry ammunition or demolition equipment to the front lines. Squads are given such items as large ropes, ammunition carts and wooden planks to complete the missions. In some cases, the items given to the squads have no value and are introduced into the scenario to cause confusion.

"The course was mentally challenging and forced you to think in ways that you're not normally used to thinking in," said 2nd Lt. Bryan Compton of Port Tobacco, Md.

Defense secretary tours eastern countries

By Douglas J. Gilbert
American Forces Press Service

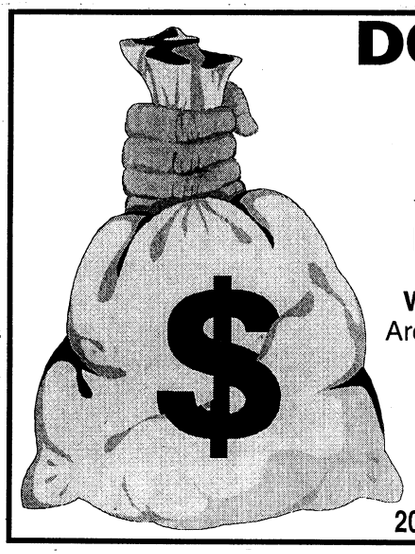
WASHINGTON — Two themes emerged early and intensified as Secretary of Defense William Cohen toured seven East Asian countries during 12 days in January. From warm and muggy Malaysia to the frigid Korean Demilitarized Zone, Cohen sent a clear message to our Asian allies: "We are with you in good times and bad." And although his focus was on security interests in the Asia-Pacific region, the secretary didn't hide his and the administration's increasing frustrations with Saddam Hussein. "Patience is a virtue, but not eternal," he at one point voiced in a veiled warning to Iraq.

This was Cohen's longest trip as defense secretary and came at a time when Asia is reeling from economic calamity. The financial crisis gripping the region is so strong, in fact, Cohen repeatedly had to restate his journey's purpose — to bolster and where possible, strengthen U.S. security interests in the region.

His mission was successful. In Beijing, he signed a military maritime agreement with China to prevent accidents or confrontations between the two nations' over-water naval and air forces. In Jakarta, he announced agreements reached with the Philippines to reintroduce visiting U.S. forces to that country following a long hiatus. And in Singapore, he received a commitment from Defense Minister Tony Tan for a new harbor built to U.S. specifications and accommodating American aircraft carriers and other ships of war.

As the secretary wended his way north, his rhetoric against Iraq sharpened, culminating on the flight deck of the USS Independence at Yokosuka Naval Base, Japan. He saluted the Indy's sailors and confirmed earlier reports the carrier would soon depart for the Persian Gulf. He then stepped up his verbal warnings to Iraq that the United States won't back down from its demand that the rogue nation comply with U.N. resolutions banning Iraqi production of nuclear, biological and chemical weapons.

"You are our warriors, ... our great diplomats," Cohen told the Indy's crew. And he had similar words of praise and thanksgiving for American service members in each of the countries he visited. From embassy courtyards to the Korean front line, he greeted Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines — and civilian embassy staffs, too — for their dedication and commitment.



Whenever he could, Cohen stepped away from his entourage of aides and traveling reporters to walk among the troops, shaking hands, patting backs, asking and answering questions. Although his schedule included meetings of tremendous import with heads of state and defense ministers, it was clear the secretary was most relaxed and happiest when he visited Soldiers inside an armored vehicle at the DMZ or promoted a Marine security guard at the U.S. Embassy in Kuala Lumpur.

The secretary didn't miss a chance to link U.S. forward military presence in East Asia to regional stability and security. In Korea, he cautioned newly elected President Kim DaeJung against cutting his country's defense budget as he grapples with Asia's worst-hit economy. In China, Cohen reasoned the U.S.-Japan defense agreements don't threaten Asia's largest country, but in fact provide it the stability to grow and prosper in a nonthreatening environment.

Long suspicious of one another and unsure of U.S. resolve in the face of the financial crisis, East Asian countries should be reassured following Cohen's visit. As the secretary so clearly stated, our military presence paved the way for Asia's spectacular growth, and our continued presence will enhance its recovery.

Saddam Hussein, on the other hand, can take little comfort from the defense leader's 12-day absence from the Pentagon. The secretary made it clear time and again in East Asia that U.S. resolve in the Persian Gulf is undiminished.

Children learn about responsibility through television

By Pfc. Tricia A. Schipmann
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Loyd Elementary School has a new way of teaching children responsibility while they have fun.

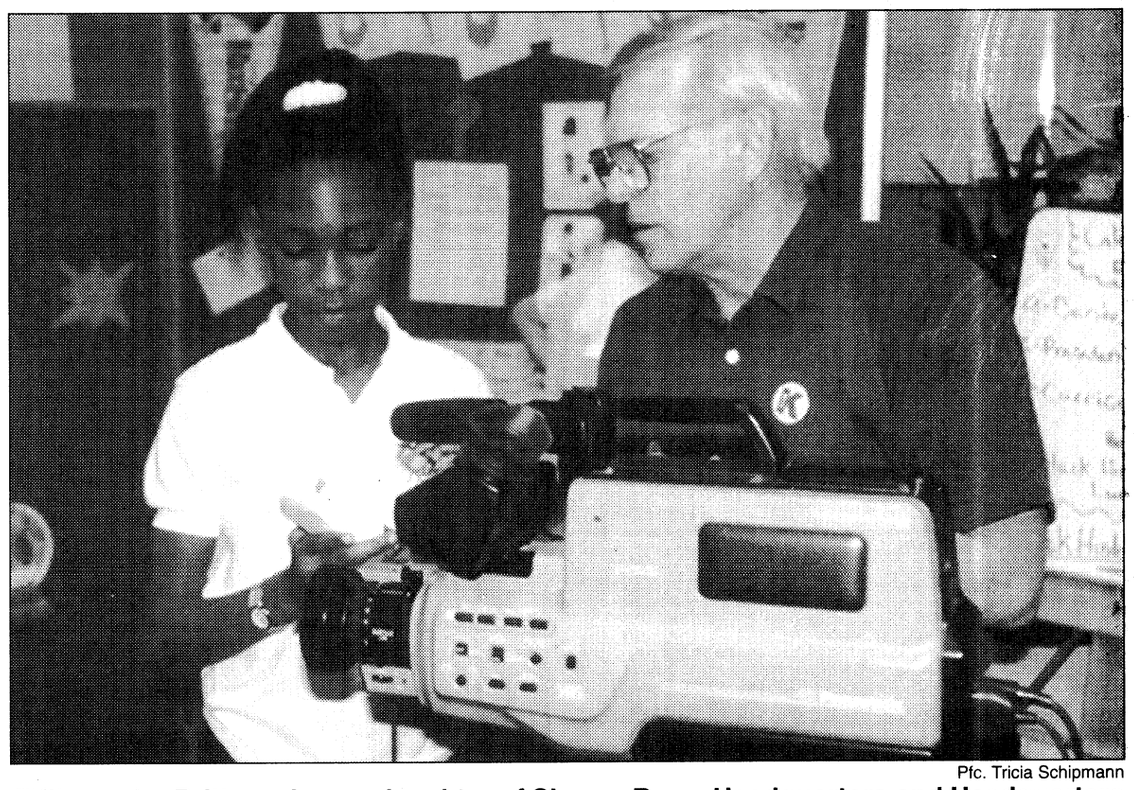
Students from both Loyd and Dexter Elementary School produce a television show complete with headline news, weather, sports and various other weekly topics.

Cy Dietrich, a music teacher at both schools heads the program. Self-taught in television production, Dietrich produces the show using one video camera, two VCR's, an audio tape player and a set he built out of room dividers.

"The show provides a wonderful opportunity for the students," he said. "They learn responsibility, confidence, self-esteem and cooperation."

Six children are chosen to participate in the show based upon classroom performance.

"It's an honor for children to be on the show," said Cathy Ross, a fifth grade teacher at Loyd.



She said she's seen a more motivated atmosphere at the school. "It isn't just the students who appear on TV who benefit, all the children are proud of the show and they really get involved in the learning that comes with the various trivia questions asked on the show", she said.

Each student is assigned his or her own segments for the show and is responsible for assuring the segments meet the standards of their peers.

One fifth-grade student participating on the show, Meagan Renfroe, daughter of Staff Sgt. Lance and Stacey McMahon, said she's learned her actions have consequences.

"I've learned that I have to be responsible," she said. "I have to get things done on time or the show will be late and that would be my fault."

Another student on the show, Kristopher Thorpe, son of Staff Sgt. Kris and Maureen Thorpe, said he's had to develop other skills as well.

Pfc. Tricia Schipmann

Fifth-grader Brittney Jones, daughter of Sharon Ross, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, and Cy Dietrich look at show props.

"I have to be creative in order to say what I think other people mean," he said.

Part of Thorpe's segment includes taking a popular proverb and presenting the moral to other students. This requires not only understanding the meaning himself, but also presenting it in a way younger students will also understand it.

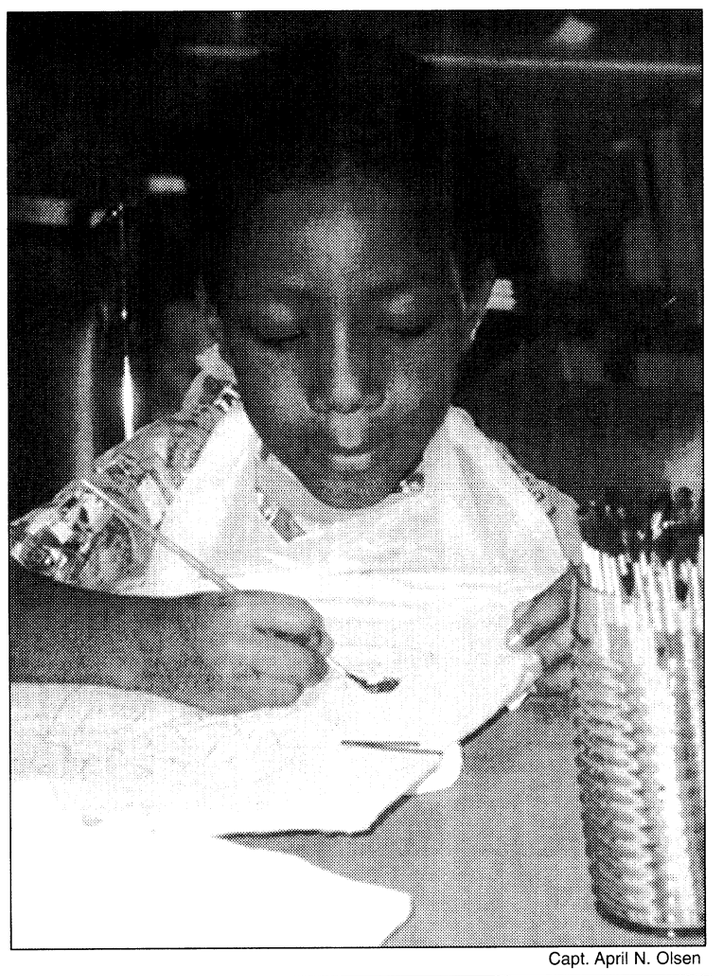
Another lesson these students learn is through a segment of their show called the Kindness Club. The "K Club," as the children call it, is an organization devoted to "committing random acts of kindness."

Loyd fifth-grader, Jennifer Bustamante, daughter of Juan and Staff Sgt. Corrina Bustamante, summed up this part of the show best by sharing one of the lessons she's learned.

"I've learned to show kindness to everybody whenever I can," Bustamante said. "There's always someone to be nice to."

Amber Bateman, a first-grade teacher at Loyd also sees the effect the television show has on students.

"It's such an incentive for the kids," she said. "They have such fun singing along and trying to answer the questions they ask on TV."



Bateman and Ross agreed the students have become more aware of the world around them.

"They feel very special," Ross said. "They walk through the halls and other students recognize them. They're so proud and they have wonderful self-esteem."

Ross said the students who aren't regulars on the show have better behavior when they have a goal such as the TV show to work toward.

Dietrich said, "While the students have standards to meet for the show, they also have to keep up with their regular schoolwork."

He said the show is only as good as the students behind it.

Dental care begins with birth, continues throughout life

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Dental care begins at birth. With good home care practices and regular check-ups, children today can enjoy excellent dental health throughout their lives.

Prenatal

Infants teeth begin developing months before birth. By the time your child is born, the 20 baby teeth which will appear during the next two and a half years are already present in the baby's jawbones. They will remain hidden by the gums until the baby begins teething.

Teething

When a baby's teeth are ready to break through the gums, the gums usually become swollen and irritated. Rubbing your baby's gums with a clean finger or with a small, cool spoon may improve some relief. Giving your baby something to bite on may also be soothing. Remember that teething is a natural process and when the tooth emerges, the symptoms vanish.

Bottle and Bedtime

If you put your baby to bed with a bottle, the child risks developing "nursing bottle mouth." This is a dental condition that occurs when a bottle containing sweetened liquid — milk formula, fruit juice or sweetened water — is given to the infant frequently, especially before the child goes to sleep. it can destroy your child's teeth through early, serious decay. When children are awake, the saliva tends to carry away the liquid. But during the sleep, the saliva flow decreases. If the child needs a bottle before falling asleep, use plain water.

Thumbsucking

Sucking is one of a baby's natural reflexes. It's a normal infant habit that usually decreases after the age of two. However, if vigorous and prolonged thumbsucking continues past age four, however, dental development could be threatened. Call your dentist and he or she will suggest ways to wean your child from this potentially harmful habit.

Teeth cleaning

Even before teeth begin appearing, you should start cleaning your baby's mouth with a damp washcloth or gauze pad. This will remove harmful plaque. You should begin brushing and flossing your child's teeth after each meal and before bedtime when the primary (baby) teeth first appear in the mouth.

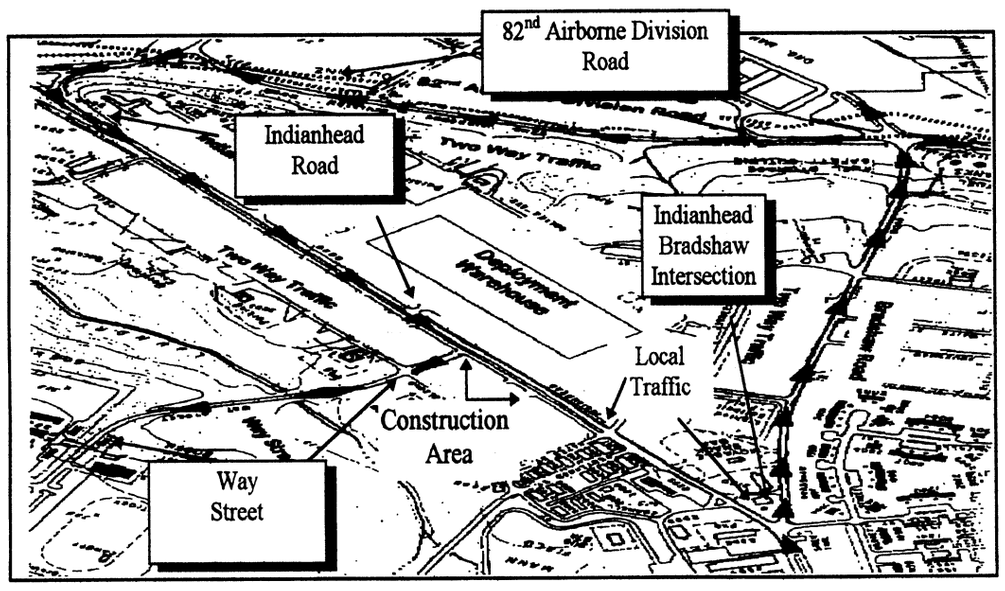
First dental visit

The best time to schedule the first dental visit is anytime after the first tooth appears, early visits to the dentist can help the child keep his or her teeth for a lifetime.

Premature tooth loss

If your child loses a tooth prematurely (usually due to an accident), you should consult your dentist immediately. The dentist may recommend using a space maintainer which can do the work of the missing baby tooth. These small plastic or metal devices keep nearby teeth from drifting into the vacant spot.

Sealants



You may have heard of sealants. These are plastic films, which apply to children's teeth to form a protective barrier to decay. The procedure is simple and painless and it can reduce tooth decay by 90 percent.

Juvenile gum disease

About 10 percent of American children suffer from a form of gum disease known as "juvenile periodontitis." This gum disease, which often lacks symptoms, strikes the permanent teeth of otherwise healthy children. When diagnosed early (usually from a dental X-ray unexpectedly revealing bone loss around the teeth), it can be treated.

If you have any questions about children and their teeth, call the dentist. The dental staff is always ready to answer your questions.

Directorate of Public Works Information Corner 'Essayons'

Directorate of Public Works

Indianhead Road will be closed to through traffic in the vicinity of Way Street at the entrance to the New Deployment Warehouse Feb. 16.

The purpose of this road closure is to construct a concrete turning pad at the Prussman Street access drive to the Deployment Warehouse on Indianhead Road. Construction of this pad is being managed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, West Georgia Area Office.

The road closure will last through April 15. The recommended detour route is for through traffic to use Bradshaw Road from Indianhead Road to 82nd Airborne Division Road. (As noted on map above) This closure will not preclude any activity from access to their respective destination. The Directorate of Public Works will have signs posted marking the detour route.

For more information, call Richard Chancey at 545-4749.

President's Day garbage collection schedule changes

There will be no yard waste picked up Feb 16. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be Feb. 23.

There will be no refuse and recycle pick-ups Feb. 16. Port, Kawamura, Fernandez Streets and Indianhead Terrace will be picked up Feb. 17. Refuse and recycle collection in Family Housing for Feb. 17-20 will be picked up as normally scheduled. For more information, call Wilmur Busby at 545-1568.

Holiday schedule for the Self Help Center

In observance of President's Day, the Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed Feb. 14-16.

The center will reopen for business Feb. 17 at 8:30 a.m. For more information, call Doc Shirley at 545-1121.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics of concern to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA, 31905.

ask the judge

By Rick Parker
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am supposed to be receiving child support from my son's father, who lives out on the west coast. It's been more than a year since I've gotten anything and I can't seem to get anywhere with this. Are there any laws that might help me get my support?

A: As time goes on, the methods of collecting and enforcing the payment of child support become more numerous and get tougher. The last few years have seen the passage of both federal and state laws which are designed to make it harder for parents who have a child support obligation to escape their duties. Many of the newer laws have concentrated on interstate support cases. A recent governmental study found that in 1989, only $11.2 billion of the $16.3 billion in child support owed was collected. Most of the uncollected child support was due from noncustodial parents who did not live in the same state as the child.

One of the ways in which this problem is approached is to make the failure to pay support a criminal offense. Forty-two states have laws making the willful failure to pay support a crime. However, trying to enforce these state laws across state lines is difficult. As a result, in 1992, Congress passed a law called the Child Support Recovery Act (CSRA), which makes it a federal crime to willfully fail to pay a past due child support obligation owed to a child residing in another state.

In order for this law to be applied, the parent obligated to pay support must have failed to pay a support obligation created by a court order for more than one year, or be delinquent on that court order in excess of $5,000. Additionally, the obligated parent must know of the existence of the order, and must live in a state different from the state where the child lives. Finally, the failure to pay must be willful. On a first offense, the parent is subject to a fine and six months in prison. Subsequent offenders face fines and up to two years in prison. The law also requires restitution of the past due amounts. Payment of restitution is usually a condition of probation with supervised release.

What is a willful failure to pay? Normally, willfulness is proven by showing that the obligated parent had the ability to pay the support but chose to do otherwise. For example, in one case, a father was required to pay only $25 per week for support, but spent his money buying a classic car and three boats instead. This was found to be a willful failure to pay.

Because the CSRA is a federal criminal statute, prosecution of the offense is under the jurisdiction of the Office of the U.S. Attorney.

For more information about this or other child support matters, call the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment with one of the attorneys. The telephone number is 545-3281.

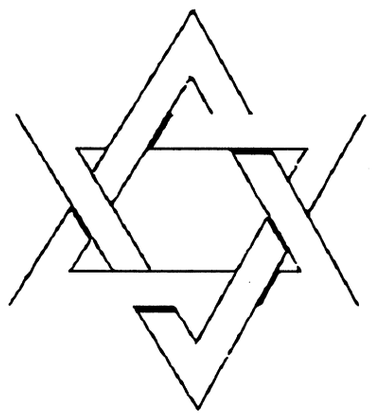
Jews celebrate Tu B'Shvat

By Chaplain (Capt.) Chana Timoner
The Infantry Center Chapel

Next week we celebrate one of four Jewish new years. That right, four.

reflections

One of the new years is for people to repent from sin and seek redemption. This is called Rosh Hashanah.



The second one is Nisan, the first month on the ancient Jewish calendar. This includes the birth of the Nation of Israel, called Passover. This holiday notes the beginning of spring and the rebirth of God's cyclic system (called nature).

The third new year is Elul. This is regarded as the month for tithing animals.

The fourth new year is for the trees and is called Tu B'Shvat. This is the 15th day of the Hebrew month of Sh'vat.

Tu B'Shvat is the time when the sap has risen in the trees and spring is soon to arrive.

It is a minor holiday. When Jews were forced into the diaspora, it became a day in which to commemorate the deep spiritual connection to the land of Israel.

The holiday is mainly celebrated by eating produce that is grown in Israel.

Deuteronomy 8:8 speaks about five fruits and grains that are associated with it as "a land of wheat and barley, of vines, figs and pomegranates, and a land of olive trees and honey."

The honey is extracted from dates rather than bee hives.

Jewish services meet on post at Regimental Chapel, Sand Hill every Friday night at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday morning from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. For more information about the Jewish program on Fort Benning, call 545-2050.

chapel notes

Sunday School meets at White Elementary — Sunday School meets every Sunday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. at Edward A. White School. There are classes for all ages from two years of age through adults.

Child care is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel for children two years and younger, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School.

Bus transportation is available if needed, by calling 545-4715.

Premarriage seminar set — There will be a premarriage seminar 1 p.m. Feb. 8 for couples who are planning to be married in the Catholic Church at the Religious Education Center, Building 2522. To register, call 545-5508.

Sunday services need musicians — The custodian of the Consolidated Chaplain's Fund is accepting applications for musicians for Sunday morning chapel services.

For more information, call Staff Sgt. Tamitha Wahlstrom at 545-1934.

PARTY meetings set — The children's group called "Personal Attitudes Related To You" meets from 10 a.m. to noon the first and third Saturday of each month in the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

Activities for this group include Bible study, music, recreation and refreshments.

All students ages five years through 14 are eligible and invited to attend.

Women's Bible study meets Thursdays — The Protestant Women of the Chapel (PWOC) is a nondenominational group of military and civilian wives who meet 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. each Thursday for Bible study, prayer support, singing and fellowship. The group meets in Building 2521, the Religious Education Center, on Indianhead Road (near the Airborne School) and provide child care at no cost in Building 2517.

The new Winter-Spring Bible studies will go through May. The studies are:

The Joy of Hospitality by Dee Brestin — this book will show ways to help you make your home a haven from the storm for family and friends; Intimacy with God by Cynthia Heald — this book will help you pursue a deeper experience with God as you explore his heart through the Psalms; A Mother's Heart, by Jean Fleming — this book provides encouragement for mothers and reveals what is your role and God's role in raising your children and provides ways to effectively pray for your children; and The Jesus I Never Knew, by Philip Yancey — this book tells the story of Jesus according to the word, not according to the world.

For more information, call Cackie Howe at 685-2217 or Robin Kennedy at 569-0890.

Pancake jamboree set — The Women's Day Committee of Fourth Street Baptist Church is sponsoring a pancake jamboree, from 8:30 a.m. to noon Feb. 14 at the Julia Frederick Banquet Hall at the Fourth Street Baptist Church.

The cost for the all you can eat pancake breakfast is $5. The menu will include pancakes, sausage, eggs, orange juice and coffee.

The church will also sponsor a fashion show and luncheon at the church in the Julia Frederick Banquet Hall at noon Feb. 21.

The public is invited.

FMDP conducts contest — United Concordia, the administrator for the Tricare Active Duty Family Member Dental Plan, celebrates National Children's Dental Health Month by sponsoring a poem-writing and coloring contest.

Children ages 3 to 7 years old can participate in the coloring contest, while children ages 8 to 12 can submit an original poem.

One winner from each age group will be selected from each region and each winner will receive a $100 savings bond.

Entries will be accepted no later than Feb. 28 and should be submitted to United Concordia Companies, Inc., FMDP Professional Affairs & Marketing, P.O. Box 898206, Camp Hill, PA 17089-8206.

Corporation recruiter to visit ACAP — Cedar Valley Corporation will also be recruiting for heavy equipment operators, mechanics, managers and shop foremen for work in the construction industry around Iowa, Nebraska and Minnesota.

They will be at the ACAP Center, Building 2634, 8 to 11 a.m. Monday.

For more information, call the ACAP center at 545-2308.

Soldiers celebrate own Super Bowl

3rd Brigade troops take part in football festivities

By Cpl. Michael Rautio
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

KUWAIT — A touchdown after a botched punt return in the first half was all the Soldiers of Battery B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), needed to beat Mortar Platoon 12-0 in the championship game of the Battle Boar Bowl played as part of the superbowl festivities in the Kabal (encampment area) Jan. 25.

After the original field of 18 teams was whittled down to the top two, the championship game pitted the throwing game of the Mortars against the runner-ups during the Fort Benning flag football tournament.

Going into the game as defending Kelley Hill flag football champs and runners-up for this year's post championship, Battery B, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., felt confident of the win, but Marvin J. Lancaster, coach, was quick to point out what he felt helped win the game for his team.

"I have three key players. They are my offensive line who provide protection for the quarterback and give him time to run the offense," he said.

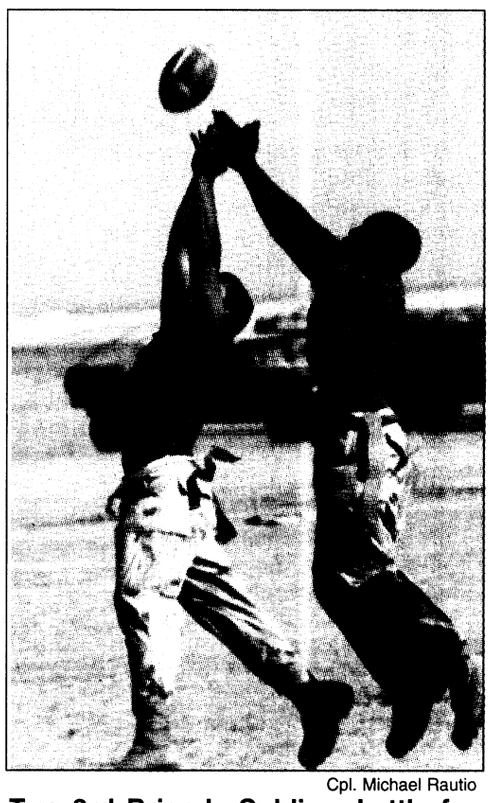
Although he was quick to credit his offense for the team's success, Lancaster said they couldn't have done it alone. "My defense played an outstanding game and kept the other team from scoring."

Although the score was 12-0, the game wasn't over until there was less than a minute left.

Battery B went on to score the first touchdown after recovering their own punt. They intercepted a pass and drove right back down the field, but the Mortar defense stood their ground and kept their opponents out of the endzone as the first half came to a close.

In the beginning of the second half, both teams punted the ball as the defenses of each team dominated the field.

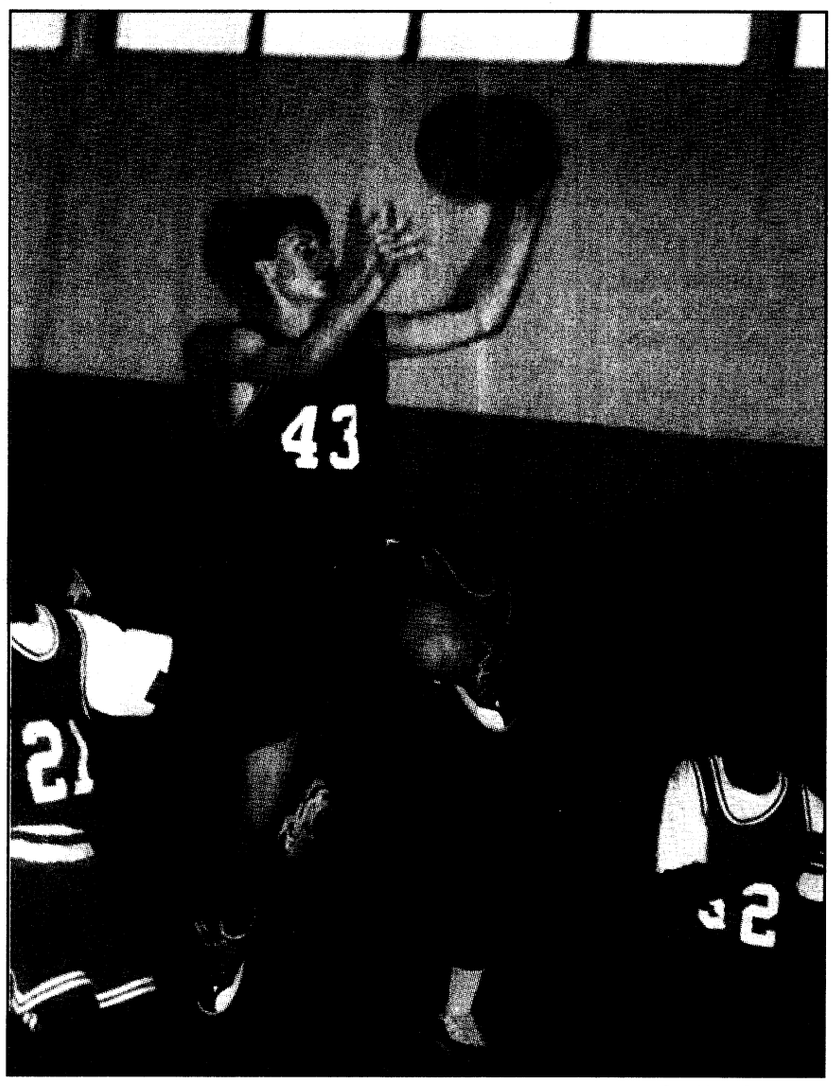
Then with five minutes left in the game Battery B picked-off a pass and took over on offense.



The Battery B offense then got into the end zone once, but the play was recalled back because of a penalty.

Undeterred, Battery B got the ball back into the end zone with less than a minute left to make the score 12-0 after a failed extra point attempt.

As the clock was winding down the Mortars fate was sealed when Battery B picked-off another pass and let the clock run out.



After it was all over the winning team was presented with specially made front row tickets for the upcoming Super Bowl that was played later that evening.

Just prior to the beginning of the Super Bowl, they were presented with a guidon banner by Lt. Col. Thomas K. Heineken, Task Force 1-30 commander.

Youth Services basketball teams continue to battle

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

The Youth Services' basketball season continued Jan. 30 and Saturday as 22 teams took to the court.

In the 13- to 15-year old division, the Warriors beat out Relentless 32-31. Warrior Daniel Demsey led the attack with 10 points, but Relentless' John Fernandez was the high scorer with 14.

During the second game Jan. 30, the Tarheels clobbered Swoop 71-40. Brian McClay put 23 points on the board for the Tarheels. Ian Radcliffe led Swoop with 18.

Saturday's games kicked-off with teams from the 6- to 7- year old division on the court. In the first game of the day, the Wildcats slid past the Bulls 8-6. Andrew Turner and Charles Smith teamed-up and scored all of the Wildcats' baskets while Jeremy Vega scored 4 of the team's 6 points.

During the second game, the Hawks flew by the Fort Benning Hawks 15-7. Shawn Bennett and teammate Roderick Shelton each contributed 4 points for the Hawks. Gegoria Thomas led the Fort Benning Hawks with 7 points.

The 8- to 9-year old division teams hit the court during the third game as the Celtics pounded the Spurs 16-7. Leschelle Matthews and Brittany Fox led the Celtics to victory with 6 points each and Robert Nicholas had 3 for the Spurs.

In the division's second game, the Sonics dominated the Fort Benning Sonics 26-7. Dominque Love scored 16 points for the Sonics and Ross Brown led the Fort Benning Sonics with 6 points.

The Magics cruised by the Bulls 13-7 during the third game of the division. Emmett Blount had 6 points for the winning team and Gunnar Hanson led the Bulls with 3.

In the last game of the division, the Pacers charged past the '76er's 34-6. Lazerrius Patterson dominated the court with 20 of the Pacers' points. Matthew Larocque contributed all of the '76er's points.

In the 10- to 11-year old division , the Spurs cruised past the Pistons 44-17. Roberto Celestine led the Pistons with 16 points and Omar Tyler was the Spurs' high scorer with 8.

During the division's second game, the Warriors rousted the Heat 24-17. Zavier Raymond led the Warriors with 8 points while Joshua Artis contributed 7 of the Heat's points.

In the final game of the day, the Raptors edged the '76er's 33-27. Jermaine Jenkins was the high scorer for the Raptors and Marcus Patterson led the '76ers.

Despite cold weather Girl Scout Cookie Run draws crowd

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

More than 500 community members gathered Saturday at Weracoba Park in Columbus to participate in the 18th annual South Trust Bank Girl Scout Cookie Run.

The day's events consisted of a 5K race, a 1.5 mile "Run for the Cookies," a 1.5 mile handicapped race, a 100-yard tot trot and a Girl Scout fun run.

The Cookie Run was the official kick-off for Girl Scout cookie sales in the Concharty Council's 12-county service area, said Melody Hyde, the council's communications director.

"All proceeds from the race and cookie sales benefit the more than 4,000 girls and volunteers active in the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts," she said. "It goes towards things like adult training and it also helps keep the cost down for camp and other activities."

Christi Hampton, a Fort Benning family member, said her family participated in the race to show support to the Girl Scouts.

"My daughters are Girl Scouts on post and running is something that we like to do as a family," Hampton said.

While some participated in the race to show support, others really did just want to "run for the cookies."

"The top three finishers in each race get free Girl Scout cookies," joked John Detro, a physician's assistant with 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). Detro ended up finishing second in the 5K race, coming in behind Marietta, Ga. resident Pete Rea

"I'm about to turn 36 and as long as I can run my PT (physical training) test in under 10 minutes, I'll be

AMU helps Boy Scouts

By Spc. Michael J. Brock
USAMU Public Affairs Office

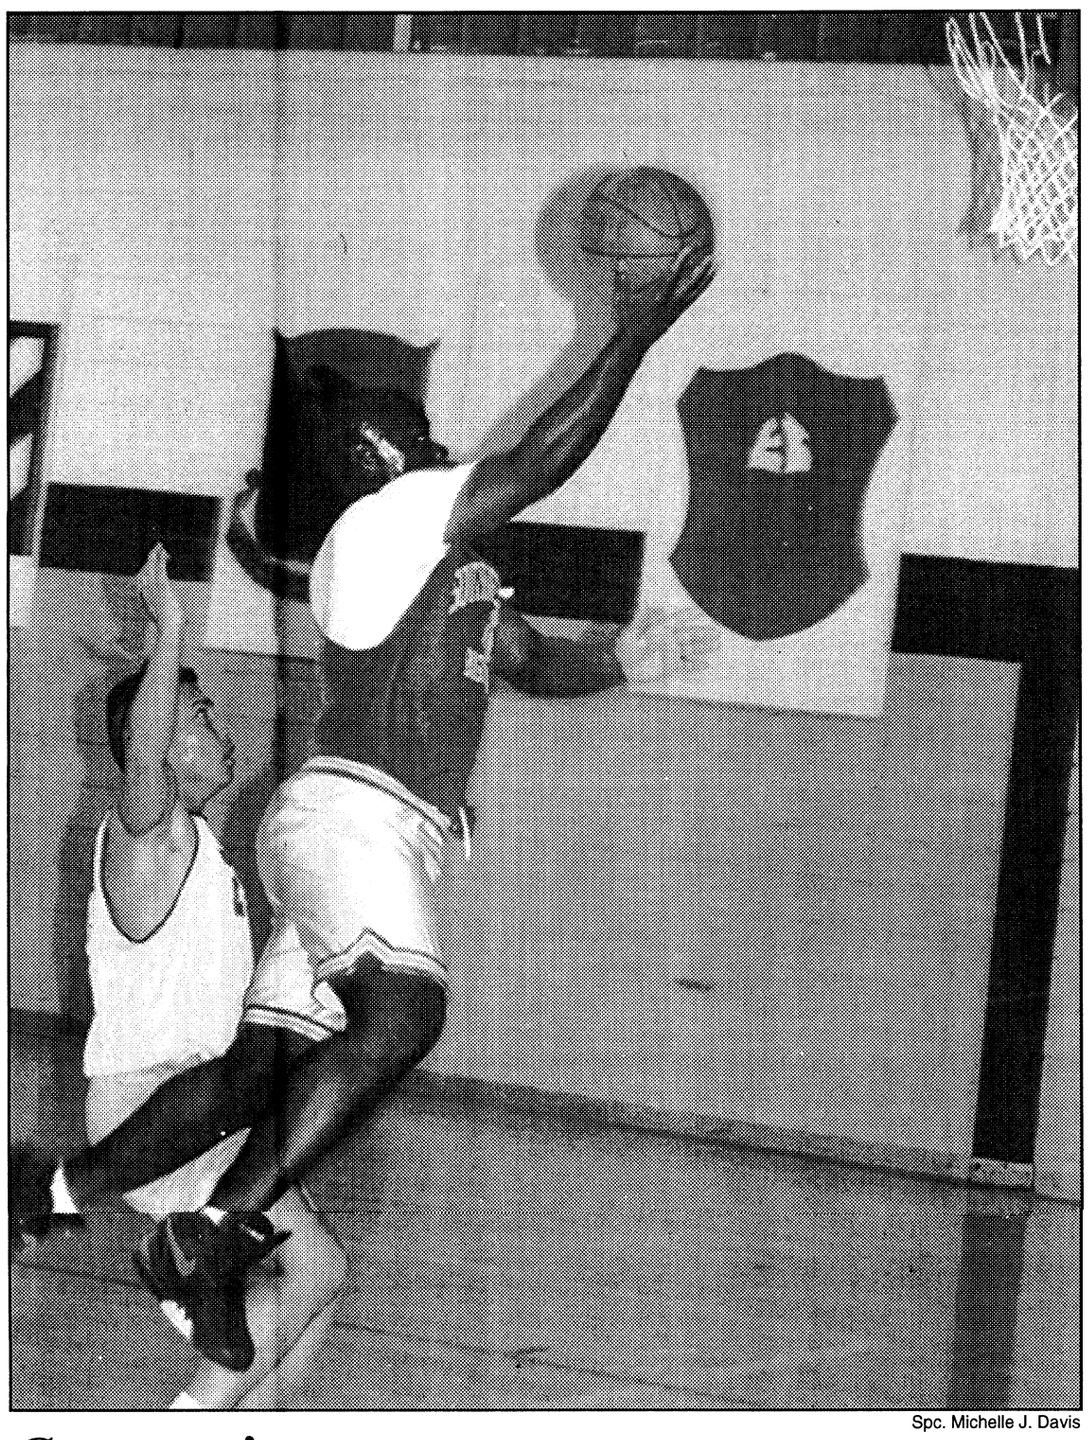
Twenty-five Boy Scouts from Troop 750 out of Marietta, Ga., visited the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Jan. 24 at the Pool Indoor Shooting Complex.

Members of the marksmanship unit's Service Rifle and International Pistol teams helped the Scouts earn their rifle and shooting merit badges for the third straight year.

"We are helping the Scouts get their merit badges," said Sgt. Lewis A. Tippie, Service Rifle Team. "The Scouts are shooting air rifles and .22 caliber rifles."

"It was a lot of fun," said Jonathan Powell, Boy Scout and a descendant of Lord Robert Stevenson Smythe Baden-Powell who was the founder of the Boy Scouts. "This is just what we had expected."

The Scouts received individual training on both rifles with an emphasis on safety.



"All of the Scouts qualified with the weapons," Tippie said. "However, our priority was to always teach safety."

The Scouts picked up on the training very fast.

"I was impressed on how well the kids listened and picked up on the training techniques," said Erik A.

AMU: Teaches Scouts

Burge, Service Rifle Team. "The Scouts I trained shot very well."

The Scout leaders also got the chance to learn the shooting techniques from the Service Rifle Team.

"The adults were much more challenging to teach because they already developed bad habits," Tippie said.

"It is very difficult to unlearn what has been taught and practiced over the years."

Being taught the right way from the very beginning is the best way to keep good shooting habits, he said.

"As an instructor the best part about teaching the Scouts was seeing the kids faces when they made a good shot," Burge said.

"I hope to do this again next year."

Breaking and Entering

Soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, practice entering a building during training at the post's Malone Military Operation on Urban Terrain site Jan. 31. The new Soldiers learn basic tactics of operating within this type of environment. The Soldiers will use what they learned later in their basic training during the scheduled field training exercise. DFAS catches W-2 error

Army News Service

ARLINGTON, Va. — The Defense Finance and Accounting Service has identified a software problem which resulted in erroneous information being placed in block 13 of some Army members' 1997 W-2 forms.

This error affected more than 200,000 Soldiers and will result in DFAS issuing Forms W-2C, corrected W-2s, for those Army members. Although there are a large number of Soldiers whose W-2 contains this error, DFAS does not believe that each and every one of these Soldiers' tax returns are impacted. For example, in calendar year 1997, there were less than 1,000 Soldiers who claimed advanced Earned Income Credit, which is a good indicator that potentially a very small number of Soldiers qualify for and will claim EIC. However, to be certain all Soldiers who may be eligible for EIC receive a correct W-2, DFAS will issue W-2Cs to all affected Soldiers.

Block 13, the nontaxable earned income block, is used in combination with taxable income to determine if a Soldier is eligible for EIC. The nontaxable earned income amount is

Allowance changes begin this year

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

While looking at Leave and Earning Statements for January 1998, Soldiers may have noticed a few changes, which became effective with the start of the new year.

One change was an increase in basic pay. All military members were authorized a 2.8 percent basic pay raise this year, said Maj. C. R. Neal, chief of Fort Benning's Defense Military Pay Office.

In addition to the pay increase, Neal said another change that is sure to bring inquiries is the implementation of the Basic Allowance for Housing (BAH).

Basic Allowance for Quarters (BAQ) and the Variable Housing Allowance (VHA) was combined into a single housing allowance (BAH), which became effective Jan. 1.

"The intent of this new housing allowance is to provide military members a housing allowance that is comparable to their civilian counterparts (of comparable salary and dependency status)," Neal said.

To calculate BAH rates, a private contractor will collect data on market housing costs by location. The housing data will be collected each June with new BAH rates becoming effective the following Jan. 1.

"It is anticipated those who will benefit most under the new allowance will be personnel in high cost housing areas and junior enlisted personnel," Neal said.

Although BAH has already been implemented onto LES's, Neal said there should be no significant change in housing allowances during the first year.

"The program will be phased in over approximately six years and will contain a "save pay" provision so no one will lose money out of their paycheck at their current duty station, provided their dependency status doesn't change or they are not demoted," Neal said.

If certain duty stations or locations require a change in housing allowance, both increases and decreases will be phased in, Neal said.

Additional benefits under BAH legislation include: BAH will be non-taxable, there is no longer a requirement for annual recertification of housing costs, and the VHA offset is eliminated. With no VHA offset, a member will receive the full amount of the housing allowance allotted for his or her pay grade, duty station and dependency status regardless of the cost of the housing. Members will no longer be penalized for sharing rent.

In addition to the housing allowance, Neal said the Basic Allowance for Subsistence (BAS) is also undergoing some reforms.

The BAS reform, which is expected to transition over a five-year period, is aimed at putting money into the pockets of barracks' residents who must miss at least two meals a day, Neal said.

Those who fall under these circumstances will be entitled to partial BAS of $9.30 a month and will continue to increase over the five years. These enlisted Soldiers will still be required to use government dining facilities. At the end of the transition, the members will receive BAS at the separate rations rate and charged for three meals a day.

Although the Soldier would pay for government meals, Soldiers will still pocket money each month, Neal said.

Besides entitlement reforms, certain allowances have also been increased.

Family Separation Allowance was raised to $100 per month as of Nov. 18.

Hazardous Duty Incentive Pay has also been increased from $110 to $150 a month as of Nov. 18.

The maximum amount for Aviation Continuation Pay was increased to $25,000 as of Oct. 1.

For more information on the new entitlements or changes, Soldiers are encouraged to call their unit's personnel action center.

Col. Lawrence K. White parachutes onto York Field during his retirement ceremony.

Chief of staff retires

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

"What a great jump, what a great jump," said former post chief of staff Col. Lawrence K. White as he landed on York Field after jumping out of a helicopter nearly two-miles above Infantry Hall. White began his retirement ceremony by jumping with Fort Benning's Command Exhibition Parachute Team the Silver Wings.

He landed, unhooked himself from the parachute and shook hands with post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. Ernst replied to White's comments about the jump with,"C'mon Larry, let's get down to business."

The business at hand brought Fort Benning's commanders, Soldiers and tricommunity members to the front of Infantry Hall Tuesday afternoon to say goodbye to White after 28 years of Army service.

Almost everyone has had to say goodbye to a coworker at one time or another, but Ernst said saying goodbye to White was not easy.

"I'd rather do most anything than what I'm doing," Ernst said. "I think I'd rather put on a ruck sack, fill it up with rocks and march until my feet bled than to do this, this afternoon."

Ernst followed that statement with the reason why it was so hard to watch White retire.

"Every once in a while you get lucky. You find someone you serve with that you really admire and respect," he said. "Not only a great Soldier, but a friend."

This is the second time Ernst and White served together at Fort Benning. Before this tour, White was the 11th Infantry Regiment's commander and Ernst was the deputy Commanding General.

White's career began in 1970 when he was commissioned. White was a troop commander in Vietnam with the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment. Later he commanded the 4th Battalion, 502nd Infantry Regiment in Berlin and in 1996 was

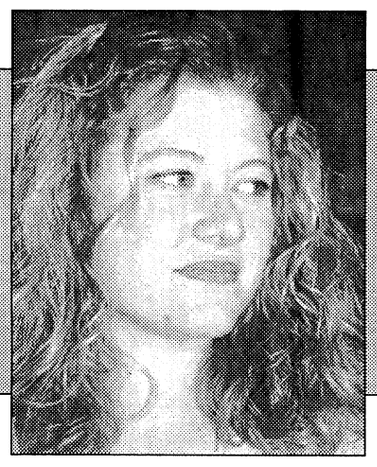
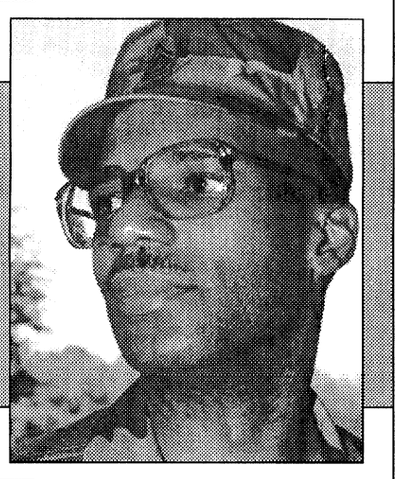
VARIOUS VOICES

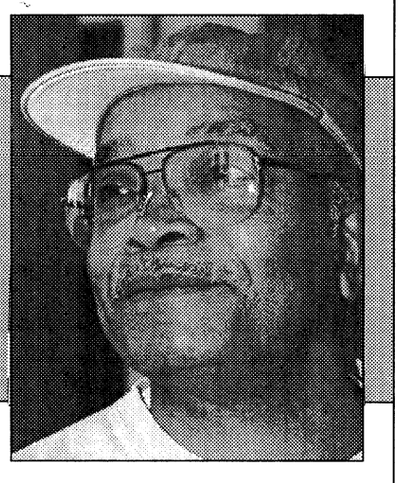


What is your best or worst Valentine's Day memory?



Sgt. Troy A. Basshan, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit — "During the first year I was married, I came home and my wife had actually cooked dinner and she put a candle in a ding-dong. That's what I remember."

Mechelle Webb, family member — "Last year was the best because my husband was home. He's in Kuwait this year."



Spc. Cynthia Miller, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Nothing really stands out. My teddy bear collection is pretty much complete."

Sgt. 1st Class Michael Cofield, 14th Field Hospital, 36th Engineer Group (Combat) — "I've been to Korea unaccompanied a few times, so the best would have to be the years when I could be with my wife."

Pvt. 1 Heather Sorg, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Inf. Regiment — "I got dumped on Valentines' Day once, but I was happy about it."

Retired Sgt. Maj. Robert Hymes, Columbus — "Last year stands out. Several of us took our wives out dancing. We had a real nice time."

Friday the 13th, Valentine's Day make good combination

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

By some stroke of good or bad luck — it depends on how you look at it — today is Friday the 13th and tomorrow is Valentine's Day. This is perfect for the gentlemen celebrating the "day of love" because they can blame their failures on the bad luck from the day before.

commentary

"Sorry, my loved one. I ordered you a dozen of the finest red roses, but they weren't delivered. That show you wanted to see was sold out. That restaurant you like was all booked up for the night. It must be bad luck — yesterday was Friday the 13th. How about a video and a pizza?"

When you say all of this garbage, make sure you're smiling. First, a lie is more believable or easier to stomach when said with a smile. Second, it is a scientifically proven fact that whatever facial expression you have on when you get slapped will be frozen on your face forever.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane thinks Friday the 13th makes an excellent excuse for forgetful Valentines.

I point out this Friday the 13th loophole only to the gentleman, because the ladies can't possibly do anything wrong on Valentine's Day, what I consider to be the most one-sided holiday of all. Face it ladies: you're in control, it's your day.

If a fellow doesn't receive anything in the way of a card or gift on Valentine's Day, there's a good chance he won't notice. However, he better have remembered his lady or he'll suffer a cold shoulder, a lot of brooding and eventually get the "I can't believe you forgot it was Valentine's Day. You're so insensitive."

He'll also get ripped apart by every female neighbor and friend until he can't walk into a hardware store without the lady driving a forklift giving him a sneer.

This is the time when you fellows can break out my patented Friday the 13th excuse. Take advantage, because this loophole doesn't come around often enough. Just remember to include those three little words, "I'm sorry, honey." Go ahead guys, say it. You know you don't mean it anyway.

"I'm sorry, honey" would fit neatly on one of those candy hearts. You know the ones I mean — heart-shaped with enough sugar to help an old nag win the Kentucky Derby.

I bought a bag of those sugary words of wisdom at the Post Exchange. These candy hearts are filled with phrases from the '70s like "Hot mama," "Be mine" and "Cute dish."

The sayings on these hearts should be updated to reflect the current relationship building habits and the attitudes of the politically correct 90s.

Instead of "Hot Mama," use "I find you an attractive person."

Instead of "Be Mine," use "Let's do coffee sometime."

Instead of "Cute dish," use "I like you more than just a friend."

Sure, the size of the candy would have to be increased to fit all the words, but the information would be closer to the truth. Everyone can use more sugar in their diet (don't call me doctors).

Here are some other ideas for Valentine's Day messages:

"I like you as a friend."

"I recently passed my blood test."

"Call me" or "I'll call you."

"It's over."

"Prenuptial needed."

"E-mail me."

"Lighten up."

"Commit" or "I'm not ready to commit."

"Sorry honey." Order extra.

"It's not you — it's me."

"Almost divorced."

"Can we still be friends."

And my favorite, "Thanks for tearing out my heart and stomping on it with golf cleats."

I'm sure I just scratched the surface of the possibilities here. And with a little variety, an entire relationship can begin, develop and end with one bag of candy hearts. Heck, that already happens with e-mail.

Safety — everybody's business!

During the past four weeks, our Fort Benning family has suffered the tragic loss of three Soldiers. All three were vehicular accidents — two involved automobiles and the third a motorcycle — and all were in some way preventable.

In the two automobile accidents the Soldiers involved were driving long distances late at night — and both accidents were single vehicle accidents indicating some degree of driver error.

In two cases, the Soldiers were students at Fort Benning. In one case, the Soldiers involved were attempting to make a long drive at the end of a duty day. These accidents highlight the need for everyone to be involved in making Fort Benning a safe place to live, work, play and visit.

What we often fail to realize is the collective tragedy of accidents like these — the Soldier who died last week left behind a wife and three small children.

Safety at Fort Benning is everybody's business. There are at least three levels of safety here — individual, family and unit safety. Our "family" consists of active duty and Reserve component Soldiers, family members, our civilian work force, our retirees, and our civilian friends who frequent Fort Benning. At the unit level, I have asked commanders to conduct unit safety reviews of all safety policies and procedures with special emphasis on reviewing the distances Soldiers are allowed on weekend passes and the conditions under which they travel. This pertains to students as well as permanent party Soldiers. As part of this effort, I am encouraging all of our "family" members to review their own safety procedures.

This includes such areas as the wearing of reflective material during all hours of darkness while walking or running on roadways; use of approved roadways for physical training; and the wearing of helmets while bicycling and knee and elbow pads for skateboarding. It also means being actively involved in the decision making process for long distance travel. The director of Public Safety will be assisting our efforts by applying special emphasis on the enforcement of published safety standards.

Two final notes. First, since we are all family, it means taking responsibility and caring for each other. If you see child or adult without a bike helmet or the runner without reflective clothing or a driver or passenger not wearing a seat belt — say something — don't wait, do it because you care.

Finally, we are approaching well deserved, long weekend — let's all work together to make it a safe one! HOOAH!

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding General

608th continues to support Joint Guard

Members of Detachment One of the 608th Ordnance Company have been battling the Hungarian cold, wind, and mud in support of Operation Joint Guard. The 13th Corps Support Battalion commander and I had the privilege of visiting our Soldiers during the Thanksgiving holiday. It was obvious to me after spending a week there the Soldiers are highly motivated and committed to their mission of providing ammunition support to the Intermediate Staging Base in Taszar, Hungary. The detachment's mission is varied and difficult, made even more so by the austere conditions in which they work. The detachment has successfully completed more than 170 missions, including ammunition issues, receipts, turn-ins, and shipments. The 608th Soldiers are even occasionally called upon to escort ammunition shipments by ground and air into Bosnia itself.

The hard work of the 608th Soldiers does not go unnoticed. Most recently, two Soldiers, Sgt. Requitha Pettaway and Spc. Nancy Smith, both won the 111th Area Support Group NCO and Soldier of the Month competitions.

Despite severe working conditions, the Soldiers are fortunate to have excellent living quarters. They are housed in tents supported by wooden frames, four to five Soldiers per tent. They each have their own cubicle with a bed and sufficient space for clothing and personal effects. Shower facilities consist of trailers located nearby. A shuttle bus service provides transportation to the several small posts in Taszar. MWR also provides Soldiers with the opportunity to take day trips in the local area and to take four day passes to Budapest.

Many of the 608th Soldiers have taken advantage of the opportunity to enhance their education by enrolling in college courses.

I could not be more proud of the dedication and commitment of 608th's fine Soldiers. They are making the most of their time in Hungary, learning and honing their military skills and advancing their careers through promotion and educational opportunities. The leaders are rising to the challenge of being responsible for young lives while serving their country and enforcing the charter of the United Nations.

the chief of staff for Fort Lewis, Wash., before coming to Fort Benning to end his career.

His awards include the Combat and Expert Infantryman Badges, Ranger and Special Forces Tabs and the Master Parachutist Badge.

White added to his award collection Tuesday when Ernst awarded him the Legion of Merit for his service to the Army. White also received the Order of St. Maurice from Ernst. White talked about St. Maurice and his ideals affect today's Infantry.

"St. Maurice stands today as an example of a tough-minded, no nonsense, principled Infantryman that we can all be proud of," he said. "That's what being an Infantryman is all about. We, in this profession of ground-gaining arms are sworn to defend an ideal — our constitution."

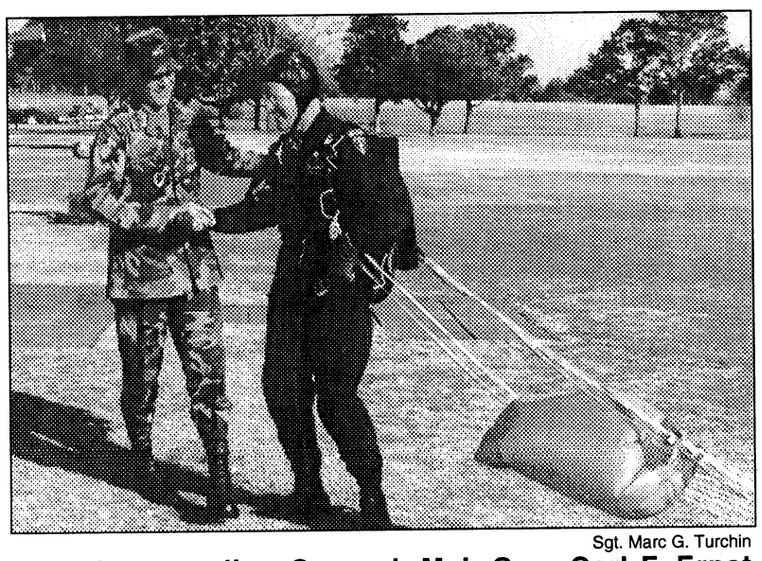
Later, White said Infantrymen, like the Iron Mike statue that stood above him, are driven by the human spirit.

"It will always be the Infantryman's' job to go forward with rifle, bayonet, hand grenades and notice on his (Iron Mike) right hip is a shovel," White said. "Because it is his job to go forward to take and to hold ground. We hear a lot of talk about tough things and fights in the press these days. As you and I know, talk is cheap. But, there is nothing cheap however, about the human spirit — the essential elements of character that are this country's greatest assets, the hallmark of our Army and the lifeblood of Infantry Soldiers."

White takes his place in the civilian world working for an electronics company based in Atlanta. Although, his wife Signe, and the rest of his family will remain in Columbus.

While White was in the Army, Ernst said he was the type of Soldier who took care of his own.

"Larry is the kind of Soldier you'd want on your flank in a tough fight," Ernst said. "Larry is the kind of Soldier you'd give your children to as a combat leader and know he'd lead them well. Larry is the type of Soldier you'd trust with your life," he said.



White was also the type of Soldier who would 'right a wrong.'

White said the reason he wanted to jump with the Silver Wings again before he retired was because of what happened on York Field in 1993.

When he was getting ready to leave Fort Benning then, he jumped onto York Field. Tuesday he said, "I landed flat on my butt."

White said former Post Commander retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White leaned over to Signe and said, "You know, that wasn't very good."

White said, "Signe, who's quick on her feet, said 'he does that on purpose. he's saving his knees.' They're going to retire my jumpsuit, it's worn-out on the rear end."

Community members get history lesson during luncheon

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

The Black History Month luncheon began with a prayer that echoed the words of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

"Help us to respect each other, no matter what race, as we ... try to reach that promised land, a land where our children will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character," said Chaplain (LTC) James W. Blount, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, as he gave the opening invocation at the Officers' Club, Feb. 10.

Although Black History was the focus of the event, a hint of religion loomed in the air.

Besides a speech from guest speaker, Maj. Samuel F. Mosteller, Directorate of Public Safety, the luncheon included a rendition of R. Kelly's I Believe I Can Fly by guest, Vince B. and ended with the hymn, Lift Ev'ry Voice and Sing.

The words from Mosteller attracted a plethora of "amens" throughout the luncheon as the guests listened to Mosteller's harrowing description of African-Americans' lack of a publicize culture.

"We are described by what we look like, not by where we are from. All people know their roots and are identified by them, Chinese, Japanese, Europeans ... except Africans."

Ignorance of one's roots is dangerous, Mosteller said.

"Africans are the only people without a published history ... A nation of people cannot thrive unless they know their roots."

In closing, Mosteller encouraged African-Americans to celebrate Black History Month and to remember and take pride in their heritage.

"Oh, (it was) very educational. He said a lot of things I didn't know, said Joann Johnson, Directorate of Operations and Training.

Sgt. 1st Class Julius Young, Company A., 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who was in charge of organizing the event said, "He went back to things I never did learn."

Blount explained learning about the accomplishments of African-Americans during Black History Month was beneficial to everyone at Fort Benning.

"If you don't know where you came from, you're like a tree without roots and without roots, that tree is gonna shrivel up and die."

made up of the actual payments of basic allowance for quarters or the amount forfeited if the soldier lives in government quarters, basic allowance for subsistence and income earned in a tax exempt area, such as a combat zone.

It is important to understand that income earned in a tax exempt area, while excluded as taxable income, is still considered income for the purpose of entitlement to EIC. As a general rule, members who have more than one child and have a total combined taxable and nontaxable earned income of less than $29,290 are eligible to receive the credit. Members without children who have a total combined taxable and nontaxable earned income of less than $9,770 are eligible for the credit.

DFAS will mail the W-2Cs no later than Feb. 15. Soldiers who believe they may be eligible for EIC should wait until a W-2C is received before filing the 1997 tax return. Soldiers who have already filed their 1997 tax returns and are eligible for EIC will need to file an amended tax return. See your unit tax advisor for details.

First of McKinney's accusers takes the stand, testifies

By Spc. Greg Jones
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The first of Command Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney's accusers to take the stand in his court-martial testified Monday and Tuesday to allegations involving 10 of the 19 misconduct charges against the Army's former top enlisted man.

The accuser, a female staff sergeant, said McKinney maltreated her, threatened her career, indecently assaulted her and obstructed justice over a two-year period. She said incidents occurred at an Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA) Convention in 1994, in McKinney's Pentagon office, on a walking path near the Jefferson Memorial and on a bike trail near Mount Vernon, Va.

A tape recording of a phone conversation between the staff sergeant and McKinney was admitted as evidence and played before the jury in the Fort Belvoir, Va., courtroom. The prosecution said the tape was evidence of obstruction of justice in the investigation. The defense contends that McKinney was directing the staff sergeant to be truthful about their relationship.

On the tape McKinney tells the staff sergeant to tell the Criminal Investigation Command investigators that their relationship was professional and nothing inappropriate occurred.

"Well, all you have to tell them is that we talked a lot," said McKinney on the tape. "You call the office because you want to talk about career development and that kind of stuff. That's it."

"I felt like he was telling me to lie," said the staff sergeant when asked by the prosecutor what the conversation meant to her.

On the tape McKinney says the allegations of one of his six female accusers are based on hatred for him. "Well, what they are trying to do is make me look like I'm a bad guy," said McKinney on the tape. "And because this one sergeant major who just outright hates my guts because she couldn't live up to the standard, now she's dragging everybody who ever called me into this."

Lead defense counsel Charles Gittins cross-examined the staff sergeant extensively about the various transfers and other administrative actions she was involved in while being protected from alleged threats to her life. Threatening phone calls, letters and graffiti scrawled on her door made her fear for her life, she said. She was put under witness protection and the necessity for this protection was contested by the defense.

"The government was willing to make any concession to get her into court," said Gittins.

Gittins asked the staff sergeant about travel orders and payments related to government efforts to protect her from alleged anonymous threats. Gittins also questioned the staff sergeant about housing and clothing allowances and her use of a government phone card.

Gittins questioned the staff sergeant's motives in accusing McKinney of misconduct. He pointed out that the staff sergeant, who had been moved by the government from Washington, D.C., to Monterey, Calif., and then to a location in the southwest, had accumulated more than $16,000 in travel expenses. Gittins said that the staff sergeant wanted to be moved to California to be near an Army officer she had earlier dated. He also questioned her about the allegations involving the AUSA convention. At the end of the day Tuesday, Gittins had not finished his cross-examination and planned to continue it Wednesday.

Before the staff sergeant was called to the stand, both trial teams presented their opening statements on Monday. Using a visual timeline, prosecution counsel Capt. Brian Dolan recounted the allegations, incident by incident.

The prosecution said McKinney used his position as Command Sergeant Major, U.S. Army Europe and later as the Sergeant Major of the Army to try to intimidate his alleged victims for sex. "This is a case about abuse of power," said Dolan.

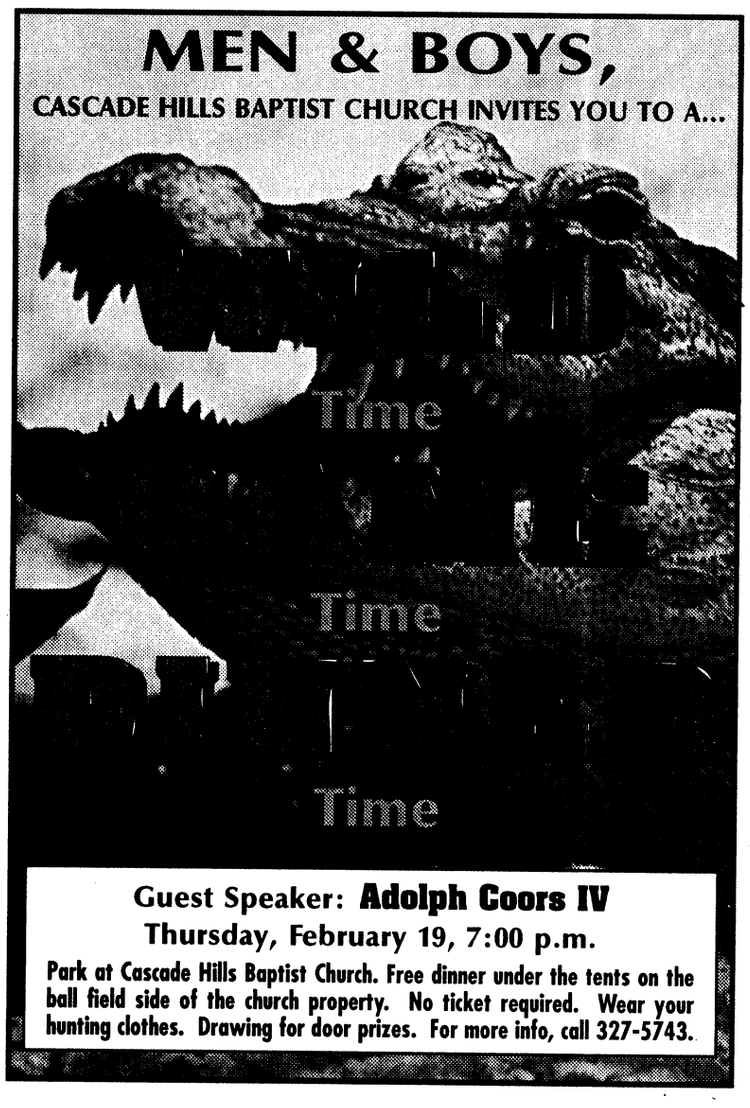
Dolan said although McKinney achieved an outstanding career as a noncommissioned officer, the jury would hear evidence that McKinney was like Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. "(The accusers) saw another side of McKinney; a side that does totally inappropriate things and then acts like nothing happens," said Dolan.

The defense said the allegations were not true and used a three-word description to discount the credibility of the accusers. The six women, defense counsel Lt. Col. James Gerstenlauer said, had falsely accused McKinney for purposes of revenge, reward and deceit.

"McKinney is innocent, plain and simple," said Gerstenlauer.

Gerstenlauer said some accusers simply wanted revenge against McKinney for being too tough as a leader. "Sometimes, as a leader, he was direct and forceful," said Gerstenlauer.

Some of the women received special treatment as a reward for accusing McKinney, said Gerstenlauer. Deceit involved simply lying about the charges, he said.



Feb. 6, the court-martial panel, or jury, was impaneled, or finalized at eight members. The jury consists of four commissioned officers and four command sergeants major. All four of the command sergeants major on the jury are male. The officers include: a male colonel, who is president of the jury; a female lieutenant colonel; and two majors, one male, one female. The male major is the only African-American member of the jury. McKinney's jury had to be composed of at least one-third enlisted members.

Finding command sergeants major senior to McKinney and far enough removed from him to be impartial proved to be the biggest challenge in forming the jury. A total of seven command sergeants major were dismissed during the process of choosing the jury.

One African-American command sergeant major was removed from the jury because he testified he was a friend who had visited the former Sergeant Major of the Army in his Fort Myer, Va., quarters in October after the charges were preferred and the case was discussed in their meeting.

MOUT: Trainees get initial urban scene lesson

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Today's Army is being asked more and more to operate in built-up urbanized terrains. With operations in Panama, Grenada, Haiti, Somalia and Bosnia, Soldiers have found themselves involved with combat of a different nature.

To prepare for this type of conflict, the Infantry Training Brigade is teaching initial entry Soldiers the basics of military operations on urbanized terrain (MOUT). There is one day of basic fundamentals in the recruit's training schedule and now a new portion of the field training exercise (FTX) will incorporate MOUT training.

The Soldiers get their first glimpse of MOUT techniques during their ninth week of training at the Malone MOUT site outside of Sand Hill.

The purpose of having MOUT training during basic training is to introduce the Soldiers to the fundamentals and concepts of fighting in built-up areas, said Sgt. 1st Class Gary Fox, NCOIC of the MOUT site.

Operating in an urban environment requires the Soldier to do things a little differently than anywhere else, Fox said.

The Soldiers are taught the proper carrying method for their weapons, which differs from what is used in wooded areas; how to assume firing positions; move as a four-man fire team in a MOUT environment and enter a building using upper and lower entering techniques.

"This training is very important because it lays the groundwork for the real-world missions they have to accomplish out in the field," Fox said.

The morning portion of the day was spent teaching the trainees about walking and crawling along walls. Range cadre attached to Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, talked to the Soldiers by platoon.

The cadre described techniques including moving from one building to another, following each person in the team in a line and what to do when they reach the inside of the building.

The training is very visual and involves a lot of different movements, but that didn't seem to phase the Soldiers from Co. D, 1st Bn., 38th Infantry Regt.

"It's been good hands-on training," said Spc. Jeff Sotosky, who went through the training. "It teaches us to work as a team and trust each other."

Other Soldiers agreed with Sotosky.

"No matter if you like the guy or not, in this case, you have to trust him," said Pvt. 1 Antonie Roach. "The way we're doing here, it could save our lives and the innocent people involved."

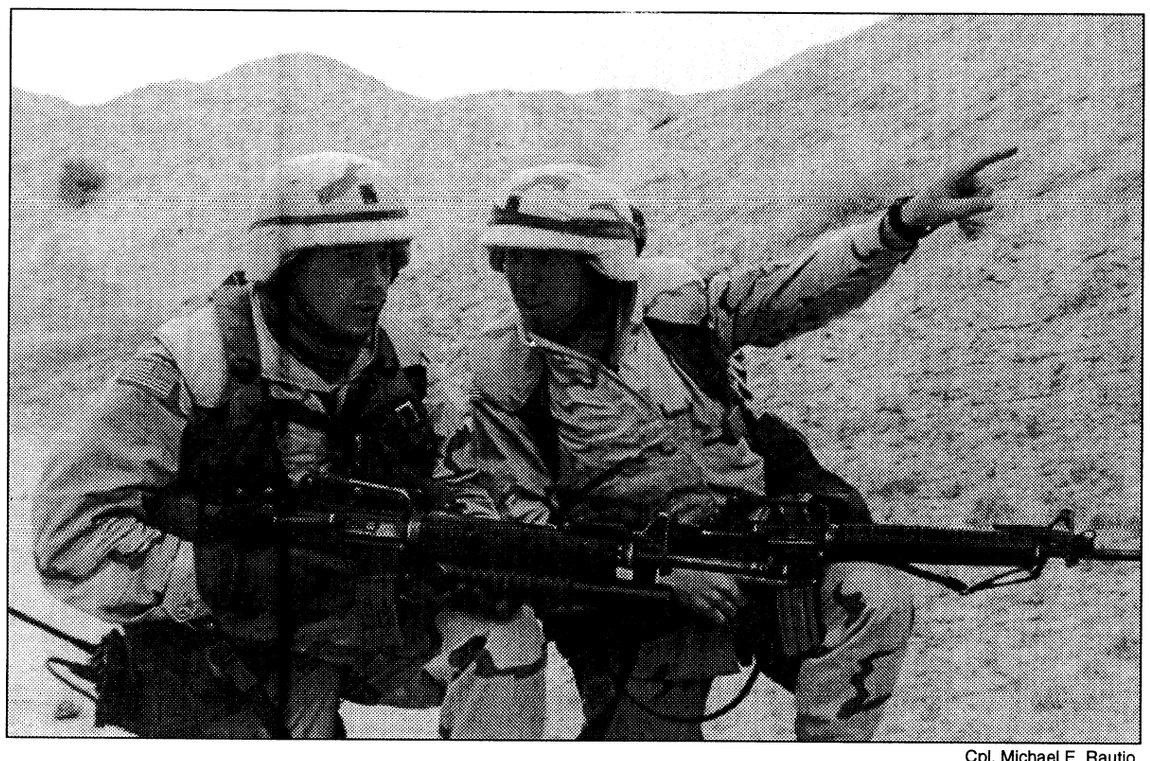
After lunch, the Soldiers tackled the task of entering a building using upper and lower techniques and learned the proper technique for entering a building through doors.

"It feels pretty comfortable to me," Roach said. "I've always had an interest in SWAT tactics."

By the end of the day, the Soldiers were laughing and having a good time, but the seriousness of the mission did not escape them.

"This is a real-world thing," Sotosky said. "It's a confidence builder right now, but who knows what will happen when it's the real thing."

One Soldier scans down the side of a building while other new Soldiers watch and learn.



Soldiers work together as one of them climbs into a building on the second level.

One Soldier struggles to pull himself up on the rope. The Soldiers practiced entering the building on the second floor using rope techniques and using a ladder. All performed each task numerous times ensuring all tasks could be accomplished.

A range cadre instructor tells the Soldiers where they should be looking and where to go while going through MOUT drills. The Soldiers were given a class on entering a building by climbing a wall and then had the opportunity to try it themselves.

Soldiers at Task Force 1-30 train in the deserts of Kuwait at part of Intrinsic Action.

Desert training may prove needed for unexpected

By Staff Sgt. Marlene Bland
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

"Focus on training and let international events take care of themselves," is the message Maj. Gen. Robert Ivany, 3rd U.S. Army deputy commanding general delivered to Task Force 1-30 Soldiers Friday.

Aware of how the news of the current standoff between Iraq and the U.S. may affect Task Force 1-30 Soldiers, Ivany spoke while he visited Company D, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

Escorted by Task Force 1-30 Executive Officer Maj. Carl Johnson, Operations Officer Maj. Rene Burgess and Command Sgt. Maj. Julian Kellman, Ivany addressed the Soldiers following observation of their platoon dismount training.

Acknowledging the buildup of Allied forces in the Persian Gulf region, Ivany encouraged the Soldiers to concentrate on their mission as part of Intrinsic Action 98-01 — to train, be safe and further develop their warfighting skills.

"Intrinsic Action rotations are important for the U.S. Army in regards to the training opportunity they present," Ivany said.

Due to almost continuous tensions in the Gulf region, participating in Intrinsic Action rotations in Kuwait brings home the reality Soldiers may someday use training lessons learned here in a combat situation.

If that's the case, Ivany said the state of readiness of Task Force 1-30 Soldiers is high.

"So far the training I've seen has been very impressive," Ivany said. He also commented on the successful reception, staging, onward movement and integration process the Task Force Soldiers conducted alongside Army Central Command when they first began arriving in Kuwait Jan. 9.

Soldiers getting mail with minimal delay

By Staff Sgt. Clifton Kershaw
3rd Infantry Diviosn Public Affairs Office

By stagecoach, pony express, train, boat or running at double time — it's coming. Not even villainous biting dogs, extra duty or even incoming irate first sergeants can stop the mail as the postal clerks of Task Force 1-30 deliver the goods on time.

"There is just a few of us, but we make it happen," said Spc. Roxxan Francis, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Infantry Division.

Working alongside Army Central Command Soldiers (ARCENT) and International Telephone and Telegraph personnel at Camp Doha, this small group of postal workers have dedicated themselves to the task of making sure Soldiers deployed to Kuwait can send and receive their mail.

The postal clerks are providing not just stamps — but postage handling, money orders and service with a smile.

"I like taking care of my fellow Soldiers," said Pvt. Carol Lookabaugh, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion. "I'm still learning the job, and I enjoy it. But this is a real challenge."

According to Staff Sgt. Garland Phillips, HHC, ARCENT, the challenge comes through the extent of service the postal workers provide.

This service includes sorting mail for Task Force 1-30 Soldiers, as well as Al-Jabbah and Ali Al Salem Air Bases, ITT Personnel, and Soldiers and family members at Camp Doha and those throughout the region.

"We are providing the best service to America's best," said Phillips.

While cards, letters and care packages are sorted and sent on their way, Phillips said he realizes the importance of Task Force 1-30 postal augmentees and how they impact on postal operations.

"The augmentees here are invaluable to me," Phillips said. "If it weren't for their hard work and dedication, the mail would be a lot slower. As of now, we have a one-day turnover. The mail comes in and we deliver the next day."

The efforts of the postal workers are appreciated by many as there is no relief like news from home.

"It's nice to get letters from home," said Pvt. Rodrick Polk, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry. "It's nice to know someone is thinking of you when you're so far away from home.

Officers set for training

By 2nd Lt. Francis E. Germanese
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) class 2-98 was officially formed Jan. 25. After an initial weigh-in, 128 second lieutenants from across the country and seven allied nations were officially received in Infantry Hall by the new company commander, Maj. Iscandora Ellerson.

"What you are about to learn is serious business," Ellerson said to the newly assembled Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "Learn everything you possibly can because the parents of America are entrusting their children's lives with you."

The class breakdown shows 75 National Guard officers, 34 active Army and 11 allied-nation officers. The international officers represent the countries of Cameroon, Guyana, Kuwait, Macedonia, Lebanon, Ukraine and Thailand.

The class was then broken down into four platoons and a student chain of command was established. The allied-nation officers were assigned sponsors to help with the orientation process and help to overcome any language barriers.

The platoons separated into different locations where they were introduced to their cadre, consisting of one officer and two senior-enlisted trainers. The function of the cadre is to set the example and to provide an enlisted viewpoint to the new officers, Ellerson said.

"This is the most challenging of all the branches in the Army and we will make you the best," said Capt. John El-Zinga from Montana, a nine-year officer with experience in mechanized Infantry.

"I was told by some older officers this would be a gentleman's club, but to my surprise and excitement, I learned we will spend a lot of time in the field," said 2nd Lt. Justin Anderson, a Connecticut National Guardsman. The program of instruction calls for seven of the 17 weeks to be in field training. Students are expected to qualify with their M-16s and become familiar with all of the weapons of an Infantry platoon.

As the day came to a conclusion, the officers were treated to the first experience with the social side of Army life with a meal at the Officer's Club and an opportunity watch the Super Bowl as a class.

"I really enjoyed being able to talk with other officers in my platoon in this type of setting," said 2nd Lt. Eric Dinoto of the Massachusetts National Guard. "We have a lot of talented officers here and we will be able to use that experience to help us complete the mission."

The class is scheduled to graduate May 20 with many students staying for ranger and airborne schools.

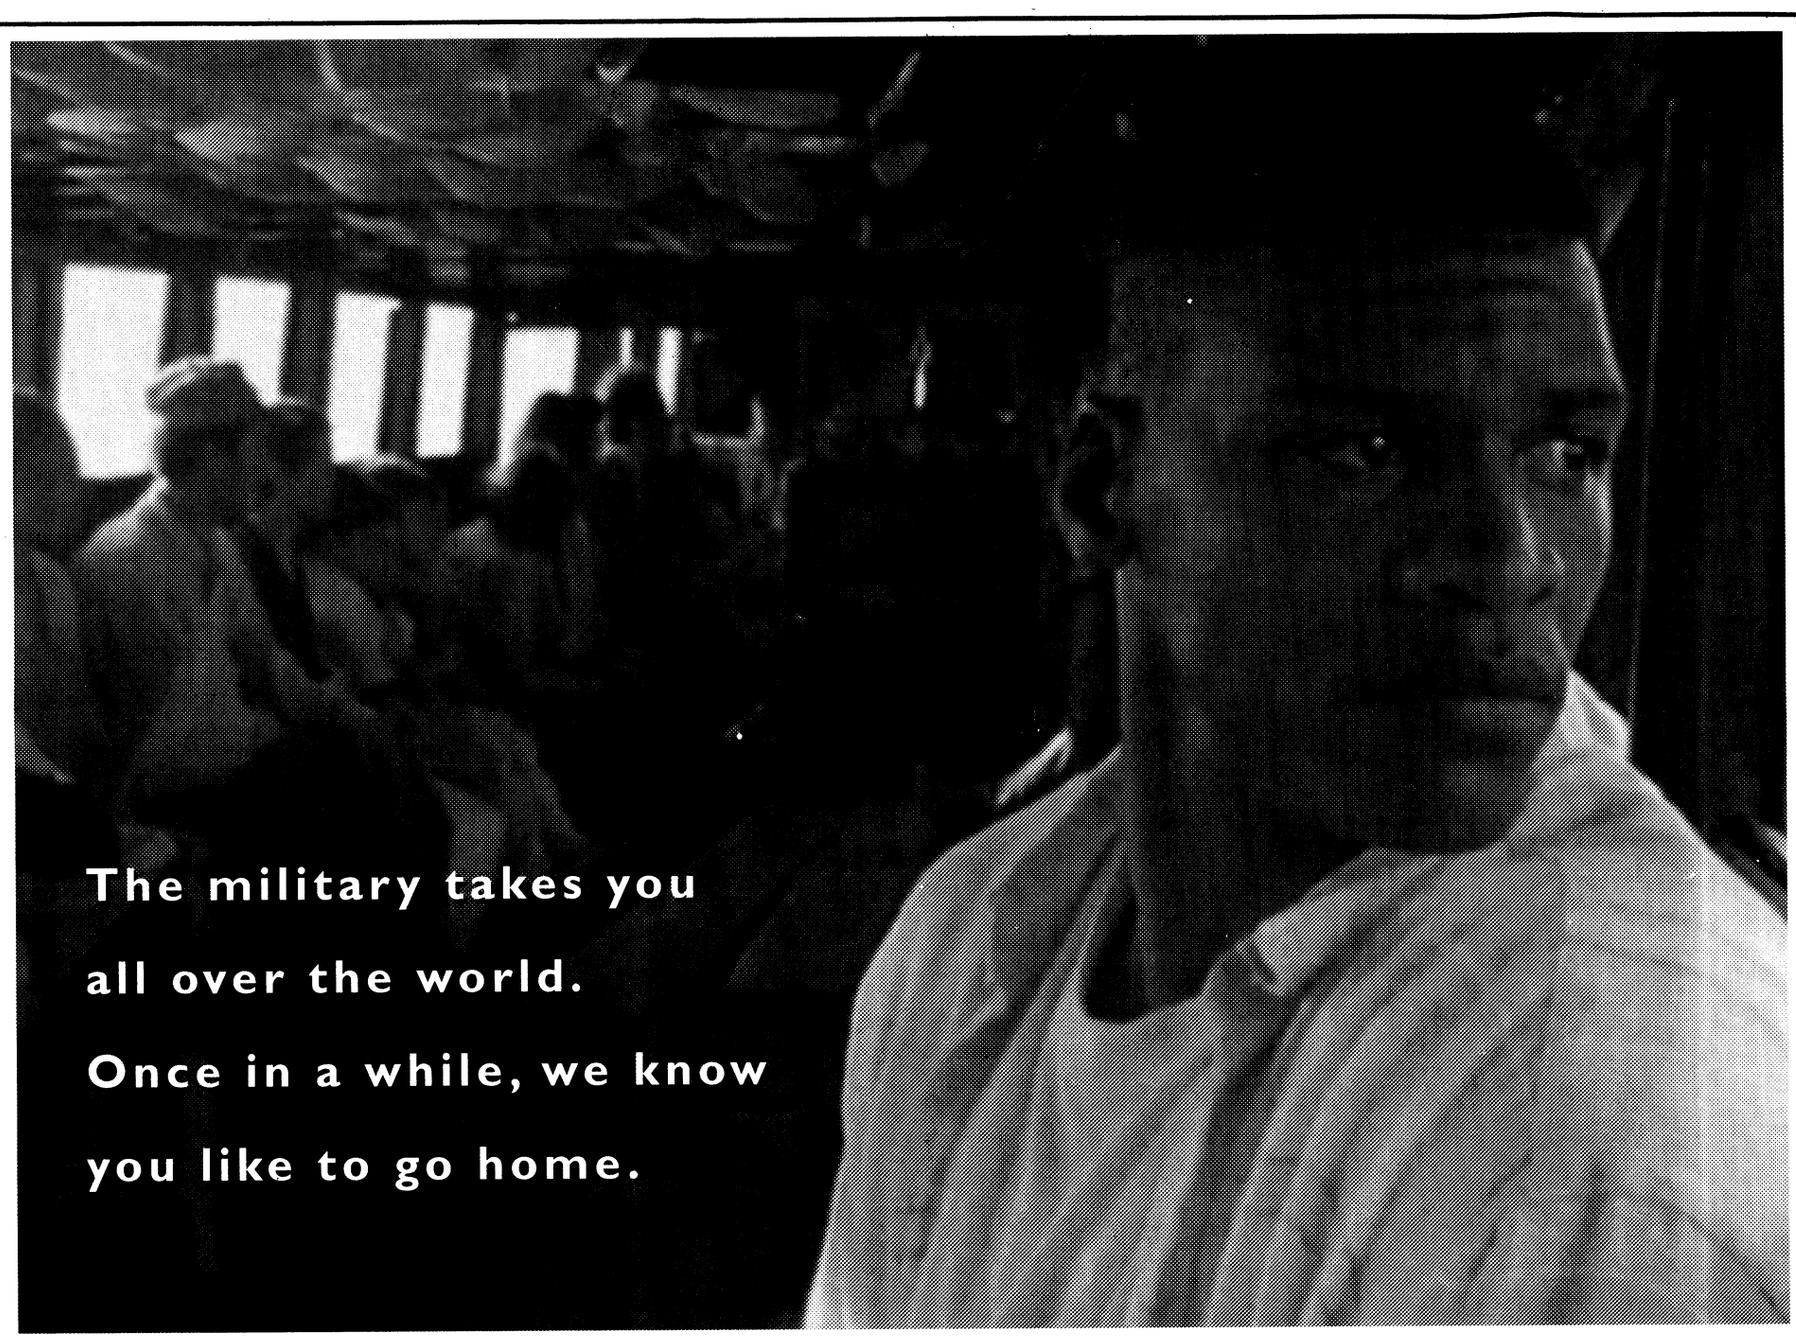
Newspapers can assist job search

Army Career and Alumni Program

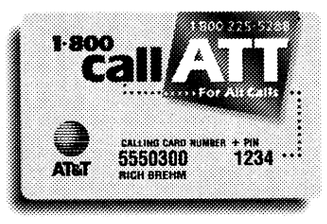
The newspaper is a good information source for separating Soldiers and families.

"The local newspaper is an excellent source of information for separating Soldiers and their families," said Chick Eagle, Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) counselor.

"Wherever a transitioning Soldier may relocate, he or she can find out about the job market, economic trends, business growth, people on the move, housing and more by regularly reading the local paper. The newspaper is an information source, which has the advantage of being available when it is convenient to the reader's schedule and when compared to other forms of news media, gives much more detail about local events," he said.



"Sunday's paper usually has the most complete classified employment section because employers know it is more widely read by job seekers. The Sunday paper also has special sections that may describe one or more successful business, the employment outlook and may also give biographical information about successful employees. Along with actual job ads are announcements of upcoming events, training programs and recruiting campaigns in the classified section of the paper," Eagle said. "Soldiers can match their professional Army skills, training and experience with the requirements found in newspaper classified ads," said Eagle.



"It is recommended that separating Soldiers learn more about the job search process and how to find the jobs by beginning ACAP benefits briefings and job assistance workshops. ACAP instructors will teach how to network, use job data bases on the Internet, ACAP hot leads, the transition bulletin board, job fairs, employer days, placement firms as well as the newspaper," said Eagle.

"Begin reading the classified ads in the local paper by buying it, getting someone to mail it to you or using the Internet. This information source may help you locate a job, and it will certainly make you better prepared with local news which makes you better at the interview."

For ACAP eligibility, scheduling and information, please call Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Prep youngsters for dental visits

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Dentists have said your child's first dental visit can and should be educational and enjoyable. Here are some steps you can take to assure the first visit is a pleasant one.

You can begin by talking about dental care and a visit to the dentist in a confident manner. Children are very impressionable. If you don't portray dentistry as something to be afraid of, they'll be much less likely to feel anxious. Try to explain the importance of good dental home care and regular dental visits. Your positive attitude about dentistry can make all the difference in the way your child will view dental care the rest of his life.

When you have a dental appointment, let your youngster know it's "no big deal." Consider bringing your child with you on one of your own routine visits to show him or her what really goes on in the dental office. Let your child know this first dental visit signifies an important step in growing up.

When it comes to preparing your child for a visit to the dentist, don't use words that will frighten him or her like "needle", "shot" or "drilling". Terms such as "a little pinch" "sleepywater for your tooth" and "tooth tickler" are much better understood and accepted by children.

Before you actually bring your child in for the first visit, you might consider a "make-believe" session. One parent can pretend to be the dentist and the other parent or a family member can be the dentist assistant. Have your child sit in a chair with a napkin around his or her neck. Use a spoon for the dental mirror. Say things like "open wide, please," then count the teeth out loud and move the tongue with the "mirror." Let your child watch the make-believe session with a hand held mirror. The practice session is an excellent way to prepare for the actual visit.

Because we realize a child's first dental visit is often the most important one, we take extra time and effort to make the visit a special one. While we check and count teeth and look for cavities, we also demonstrate how our dental equipment works and we teach the child how to brush.

If children are introduced to dentistry in a healthy way, they won't be afraid of dental care. Help your children enjoy a lifetime of good dental health by starting off with a dental visit anytime after the first tooth erupts.

Teachers work to improve learning process

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Although students are already planning their summer vacations, teachers and administrators in the Fort Benning school system are still at work, constantly trying to improve the learning process. One of the ways teachers and administrators are doing this is through strategic planning.

Benchmarks are the smaller steps of Goals 2000, or the Education reform bill, sponsored by the Clinton Administration, enacted by the Congress and signed by the President March 31, 1994. There are 10 goals in all and range from Goal 1, which is readiness, to Goal 10, organizational development.

The Department of Defense Education Activity (DoDEA) established benchmarks or measureable commitments, for each of the ten goals, said Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development.

"The school improvement teams, which each Fort Benning school has, carefully analyzed data such as student test scores and survey results and identified areas in which to place priority emphasis," Wilson said.

The teams decided that goals 3, 8 and 10 were the priorities for Fort Benning schools.

Benchmarks 3.1, 3.4 and 3.7 focus on student learning in reading and language arts, the achievement gap between racial, ethnic and gender groups and students being able to apply information, solve problems and think critically in the areas of reading and language arts.

Faith Middle School has recently started a writing project involving parents joining teachers in evaluating student writing assignments.

"Benchmark 3.1 is instrumental because students will be taking new tests in the spring," Wilson said.

Benchmark 3.10 deals with technology. Since the start of the school year, an educational technologist was hired for each of the seven schools on Fort Benning. All the educational technologists received training at the instructional technology center at Columbus State University.

Telecommunications are also an important part of Benchmark 3.10. Last fall, students at Wilson Elementary communicated with students on the island nation of Yap through e-mail.

Benchmark 8.1 discusses parental participation and the home-school partnership.

"Benchmark 8.1 focuses on the key communicators — teachers and parents. They work with the community," Wilson said.

A project being implemented this year is the Giraffe Project, a program designed to help students recognize and emulate "giraffes" — people who have acted with courage, caring and a strong sense of community.

Other programs include the Parent Academy, Lunch n' Learns and the VIP and PIE programs.

Benchmark 10.8 establishes the use of electronic technology.

"It's important for all of our schools to be connected and for all of them to have Internet access," Wilson said. "It took some schools longer because of older wiring, but we're retro-fitting the existing infrastructure."

Each school focuses on the goals and Benchmarks and applies these to their own individual curriculum.

"Each school has it's own individual needs and plans its own strategies as a school," Wilson said.

Parental involvement elevates academic achievement

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Teaching children extends beyond the school day. According to Kathy Einhorn, parental involvement in children's education is necessary and enhances the learning process.

"Studies have shown increased parental involvement leads to improved achievement, higher test scores, increased social skills, better school attendance, reduced drop out rates, increased motivation and decreased delinquency," Einhorn said. "So there are plenty of benefits from a good, strong school-home partnership initiative."

Fort Benning Schools' school-home partnership initiative is one of the schools' benchmarks and also part of a national goal to improve working relationships between school and home.

This partnership is a five-tiered effort, Einhorn said.

Parents work with the schools as co-advisors and co-advocates, co-communicators, co-supporters, co-learners and co-teachers.

The real thrust of the program is to improve children's academics, Einhorn said.

To do this, the schools purchased programs to help parents get involved with their children's school work at home.

One program aimed at achieving this goal is Teachers Involve Parents in Schoolwork (TIPS) out of Johns Hopkins University.

"We purchased TIPS because we know it is unrealistic to believe parents can spend a lot of time in the classroom as co-teachers," Einhorn said. "It is not the parents' job to be the teacher in the classroom, but certainly at home parents have a role as a co-teacher."

The schools all have a set of TIPS materials. Math activities are emphasized for the elementary schools and language arts for the middle school.

The teachers provide lessons at the different grade levels that complement the kind of skills worked on in the classroom, Einhorn said.

For instance, if the teacher was working on multiplying by 10s, 100s or 1,000s, there is a TIPS activity the teacher can send home for parents to work on with the children.

"The nice part of the TIPS, I think, is that they really are interactive," Einhorn said. "Each activity will ask the child not only to do the activity but also to explain how they did it to a family member. TIPS really gets people in the household involved in the children's learning. Also by having the children explain what they are doing it increases their understanding.

"If a child can perform a math function and then explain to somebody what they did, they understand exactly what they're doing."

On each TIPS activity there is a home school communication form. This allows the parent to respond back to the teacher about how the child did with the activity.

For pre-K and kindergartners, there are monthly lessons through the "I Care" program parents can work on with their children at home. Suggested reading materials and activities parents and children can do together emphasize the learning that is taking place in the classroom, Einhorn said.

The school-home partnership is not a new benchmark for Fort Benning Schools, Einhorn said. This year, each school has a designated parent and teacher as key communicators.

It is the key communicators' job to disseminate information to Einhorn, the district key communicator, who in turn shares information from Department of Defense Education Activity (DoDEA) with the schools.

"As the district key communicator, I get a lot of information from different programs throughout the country that I share with the schools," Einhorn said. "They can then take it to their school-home partnership school improvement team and determine whether or not the information would be useful."

A major emphasis from DoDEA is to involve the community more in the school-home partnership, Einhorn said. Community includes not only those people who have a direct connection to the school because a child is in the school but also other members of the community.

Former Secretary of the Army Togo West and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer issued a memorandum last September that allows any military and civilian personnel, mission permitting, to be excused from work up to one hour per week to volunteer in a DoDEA school.

There is a lot of command support behind the home-school partnership initiative, Einhorn said.

"We feel we have tremendous support from our community and we get many volunteers in our schools — both fathers and mothers," Einhorn said.

"Parent involvement in schools is evolving from bake and book sales to a higher level with school-home partnership where we truly are partners with parents in educating children.

"We can't accomplish all of the learning within the school day," Einhorn said.

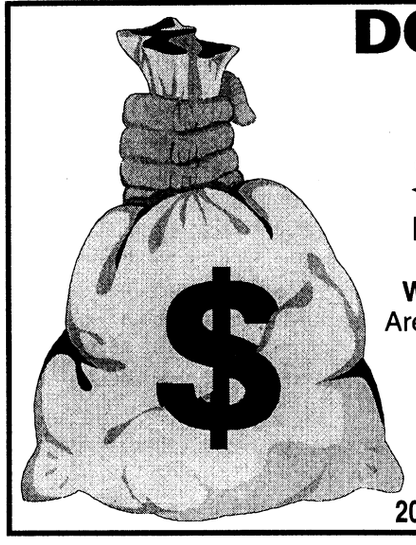
Handle deer meat with care, officials advise hunters

Ga. Dept. of Human Resources

Public health officials are reminding hunters and their families that raw meat, including wild game, needs careful handling and thorough cooking. This notice follows discovery of a dangerous strain of E. coli bacteria in three deer killed by hunters in Georgia.

"It's easy to prevent infection from harmful bacteria that may be found in deer meat," said Jane Koehler, D.V.M.; infectious disease epidemiologist for the Georgia Department of Human Resources. "Wash everything that comes in contact with raw venison and cook the meat thoroughly, especially ground meat or sausage, just as you would pork or beef."



A survey of 300 hunter-killed deer from several areas of Georgia detected the bacteria E. coli 0157:H7 in the intestinal tracts of three deer from Floyd County. The survey is the first proof deer in Georgia may be carrying the potentially harmful bacteria. The hunters of the three affected deer have been notified of the findings. The survey, which involved the Southeastern Cooperative Wildlife Disease Study, the Georgia Department of Natural Resources and the University of Georgia Center for Food Safety, indicated the prevalence of E. coli 0157:H7 in deer in Georgia is low.

E. coli has caused outbreaks of bloody diarrhea, and occasionally kidney failure, in people who had eaten undercooked ground beef contaminated with the bacteria.

The bacteria can be spread from the animal's intestinal tract to the carcass through contamination with its fecal material. Cooking the meat to 160 degrees is essential to kill the organism. Laboratory studies have shown some traditional methods of preparing venison and beef, such as dry-cured "summer" sausage and dried jerky, do not kill the E. coli 0157:H7 bacteria.

"Game animals and domestic animals can be contaminated with bacteria harmful to humans, but no one needs to get sick if they're careful," Koehler said. "Careful dressing of the carcass to prevent fecal contamination, cleaning all surfaces that touched the raw meat during dressing and preparation, as well as thorough cooking, are all important in preventing disease. And of course, wash your hands well after you handle any raw meat."

For more information, call the county health department or Public Health district office; Koehler at (404) 657-2588; or Beth Brown, Georgia Department of Natural Resources, at (770) 918-6400.

AIDS information

•Georgia is eighth in the nation for total number of AIDS cases.

•There is no possibility of contracting AIDS while donating blood since fresh needles are used for each donor.

•Since 1984 the proportion of female AIDS cases has increased from 4 to 19 percent. Many infected women are sex partners of men who have used drugs or have had sex with other men. People who become infected through heterosexual contact are the fastest growing group of people with AIDS.

•Casual contact with a person who is HIV-positive will not transmit the disease.

•HIV transmission is through risky behavior, such as drug use and unprotected sex.

Desert Storm vet speaks at prayer breakfast

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

Shouts of religious enthusiasm echoed from the pulpit of the Infantry Center Chapel during the National Prayer Breakfast Feb. 4.

"Excited for the faith," was how guest speaker David Peterson was described by Chaplain (Col.) Henry Wake of Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, a long time friend of the guest speaker.

With his arms thrusting toward the heavens, Peterson began his sermon to more than 100 people with a discussion of God's active role in society, primarily in times of war.

During Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm, Peterson was appointed to the position of senior military chaplain. While serving in this position, Peterson learned first hand about God's role in society during a war.

"Over there you get into a case where you are totally dependent on God."

Peterson went on to warn the congregation about society's tendency to confuse the passage in the Bible that reads, "man is created in the image of the Lord."

He said some confused souls interpret this passage as saying man is equal to the Lord, using such examples as Adolf Hitler and Saddam Hussein.

"Just remember that all of you were created in the image of the Lord, therefore all of you are gifts to this world," Peterson said

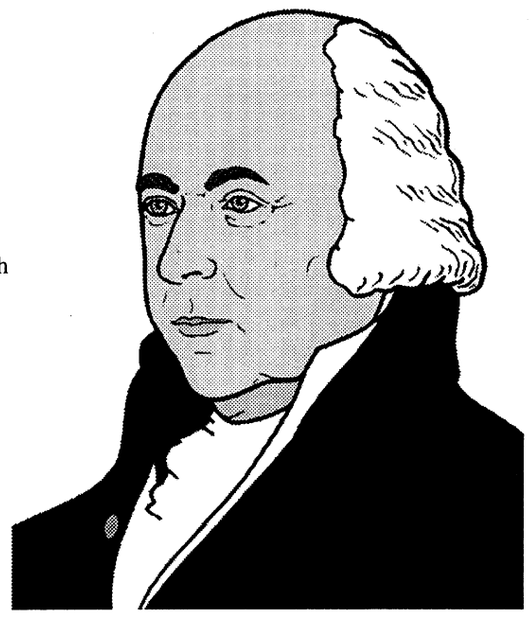
David Peterson speaks during last week's National Prayer Breakfast.

"Chaplain Peterson's sermon was inspiring," Chaplain (Lt. Col.) William C. Shelnutt IX, 1st Bn., 11th Regt., said, "He stepped out from the pulpit, took off his glasses and drove the principle home."

President's Day offers opportunity for reflection

By Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Peter Roggia
Chaplain Family Life Training Program



One night Calvin Coolidge took a walk around the White House grounds with a senator from Missouri. As they walked the senator pointed to the executive mansion and said facetiously, "I wonder who lives there?"
"Nobody," said Cal. "They just come and go."

reflections

On President's Day we reflect on those who have come and gone. Those great men who led this nation.

Washington was one such man. James Thomas Flexner wrote of Washington, "In all history few men who possessed unassailable power have used that power so gently and self-effacingly for what their best instincts told them was the welfare of their neighbors and all mankind." His dream was not power, but freedom and the rights of men.

Washington was truly one of God's heroes. Lloyd Newell described God's heroes as individuals who are conspicuous for their humility, preferring that their good deeds go undiscovered, they are concerned more for others' needs than for their own. They are not consumed with things nor driven to acquire riches, but instead, freely give of their time, of their skills, of their substance. Their names are not written on pages of the newspapers, the names of God's heroes are written on the hearts of the hungry, the hurt, the unhappy. They leave behind a legacy of humble service, which speaks more eloquently than any monument or myth ever could.

Another of God's heroes is President Lincoln. He embodied much of what is good about America. When the Emancipation Proclamation was brought before him he picked up his pen twice to sign it and then put it down. Turning to Secretary of State Seward, he said, "I have been shaking hands since nine o'clock this morning and my right arm is almost paralyzed. If my name ever goes into history, it will be for this act and my whole soul is in it. If my hand trembles when I sign the Proclamation, all who examine the document hereafter will say, 'He hesitated.'" He then took up the pen again and slowly and firmly wrote, "Abraham Lincoln."

Truly one of God's heroes, Lincoln wrote: "You cannot help small men by tearing down big men. You cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong. You cannot further brotherhood of man by inciting class hatred."

Lincoln would be the first to say that we need in our nation less speaking of our weaknesses and more focus on our goodness and strength. Washington and Lincoln remind us we need to stop seeking out the storms and enjoy more fully the sunlight. They would accentuate the positive. They would want us to look a little deeper for the good.

They would inspire us to exercise faith. It has been said if we still our voices of insult and sarcasm, we would more generously compliment virtue and effort. They would also be the first to say our reliance should not be on man but on our creator. The source of their strength was found in the motto "In God We Trust." On this Presidents Day, let us reflect about two of God's heroes and remind ourselves that these are they who love God with all their heart; these are they who love their fellow man. These are they who give us a glimpse of what it means to be a true hero.

ask the judge

By Capt. David Barrett
Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I currently contribute to an IRA account. Lately, I have heard about the new Roth and educational IRA. What is the Roth and educational IRA and should I consider using one?

A. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 made several changes to retirement accounts, and most of them are beneficial. The new Roth IRA is particularly attractive as it has fewer restrictions than a traditional IRA. While no tax deductions are allowed for Roth IRAs, they offer a feature that could be even more attractive than an up-front deduction. Specifically, withdrawals after age 59 will be tax-free provided the Roth IRA has been established for more than five years. In the new Roth IRA you may make annual non-deductible contributions of up to $2,000 per taxpayer. You can avoid paying any income tax on your account earnings if you leave your money invested for five years and you withdraw it after age 59; you withdraw it (up to $10,000) for a first time home purchase; you withdraw it for a disability; or if your beneficiary withdraws it after your death.

As with traditional IRAs, contributions to a Roth IRA can be made only by someone whose earned income at least equals the amount of the contribution. A Roth IRA contribution can also be made on behalf of a non-working spouse (or a spouse with low earnings). The Roth IRA is particularly attractive for service members because the phase-out limits for being able to contribute are $150,000 to $160,000 for taxpayers filing a joint return and $95,000 to $110,000 for any other taxpayer.

Whether or not to convert your traditional IRA to a Roth IRA is dependent upon many factors. A taxpayer should consider their current tax rate, their estimated tax rate at retirement, your current age and length of time until retirement, your withdrawal plan and whether you participate or are eligible to participate in an employee sponsored retirement plan. Service members with spouses should consider contributing to a Roth IRA if their spouses employer offers a retirement plan. These plans are often more beneficial than an IRA account. If you are currently in a higher tax bracket than you expect to be at retirement, the advantages of a Roth IRA are reduced, however, if you are being taxed at a low rate a Roth IRA may be wise as your IRA earnings will not be taxed at retirement. The younger the investor, the greater the advantages may be of a Roth IRA, since earnings compound tax free over a longer period of time. If you decide to convert your current IRA to a Roth IRA, you will have to pay taxes on the money not previously taxed in your old IRA. However, if you convert in 1998 and your adjusted gross income is less than $100,000 tile IRS will allow you to spread the tax payments over four years.

The new Education IRA is actually an educational savings account. Starting in 1998, a parent or anyone who meets the adjusted gross income limitations may make a nondeductible contribution to an Education IRA on behalf of a child who is under age 18.

Unlike contributions to a traditional or a Roth IRA, contributions to education IRAs must be made by the last day of the beneficiary's taxable year (generally, that is, by Dec. 31). The total of all contributions made to an education IRA in a given year for one child is $500 per year.

The big advantage of education IRAs is that withdrawals are tax-free if they are used for qualified postsecondary educational expenses such as tuition and room and board.

Any balance remaining in an IRA for education when beneficiary reaches 30, must be distributed, and the beneficiary will have to pay both taxes and a penalty on the earnings. However, the balance may be rolled over to an education IRA for another family member.

Do not be too hasty in making investment decisions. Consider what is best for you and your particular goals. If you are unsure, or have further questions, be sure to contact your financial advisor. The Legal Assistant Division is able to provide advice in this area. For an appointment, call 545-3281.

AFTB offers classes about the Army

Army Family Team Building

Have you ever wondered where to learn more about the role of the spouse in the Army community? Now, free, multiphased-skills training is taught through the Army Family Team Building (AFTB) program.

This volunteer program is designed to teach spouses how to prepare for deployment and other day-to-day challenges that exist within the Army community.

AFTB teachers are volunteers who have been specially trained. They receive a specifically tailored job description and receive credit for their volunteer hours.

Through AFTB training, spouses receive the tools needed to function in any military life situation with minimal outside support.

As a result of this training, personal and family readiness will improve and strengthen the quality of life and Army readiness within the Army family, said Mary Allen, AFTB master trainer.

AFTB training consists of three levels. Level I courses are targeted toward people new to the Army or anyone interested in updating personal skills or basic knowledge.

Level II courses are targeted toward emerging leaders within the Army community.

Level III courses offer training to enhance the professional growth and leadership development opportunities of family members, especially those who might assume advisory and mentoring roles within the community and unit.

There is no charge for any of the courses or materials.

To register for any AFTB course, call the AFTB on Monday office Tuesday from 8 a.m.to1 p.m., at 545-5377 or 545-2794, or call Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

The next AFTB Level I courses begin Feb. 24. Classes will be conducted from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at AFTB, Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza.

Course descriptions of Level I classes

1.01 — Military Terms, Acronyms, Customs and Courtesies
1.02 — The Chain of Command and the Chain of Concern
1.03 — Introduction to Military and Civilian Community Resources
1.04 — Benefits, Entitlement and Compensation
1.05 — Family and Military Expectations
1.06 — Impact of the Mission on Family Life
1.07 — Basic Problem Solving

Rugby club cruises to victory in home opener

By Jim Muldoon
The Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club

In their home game opener, the Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club Cruise-A-Matics rallied to beat division rivals, the Fort Rucker Flyers 11-6 Saturday at the Cruiser Dome rugby grounds in Columbus.

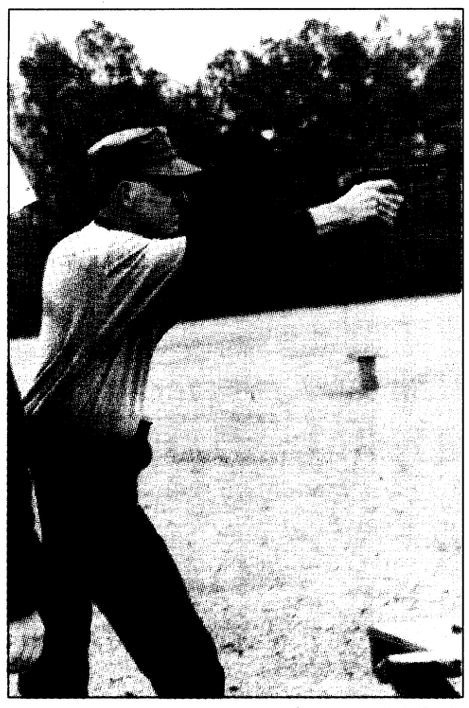
Fort Rucker jumped out to a 3-0 lead 20 minutes into the match on a penalty kick by fullback Stu Miller.

The home team rallied back. with aggressive play from the forwards and backs until wing forward Mike Higgerson was able to crash over the line to put the Cruise-A-Matics up 5-3 going into halftime.

Fort Rucker was not to be denied, as they pressured the local team for another infraction after the break and Miller converted again to regain the lead for the Flyers at 6-5.

The Cruise-A-Matics settled down and pressured their rivals into two costly mistakes, which inside center Rob Cochran converted to secure the team's 11-6 victory.

The Cruise-A-Matics face off against the Birmingham Vulcans 2 p.m. Saturday at the Cruiser Dome rugby grounds.



Undefeated so far this season, Saturday's match will be the Cruise-A-Matics third match of the season.

The rugby grounds are located in Columbus at the corner of Blanchard Industrial Park Drive and 22nd Avenue, one block from Victory Drive behind the Dolly Madison bakery.

Participants shoot 'em up during match

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club held its second tactical pistol match of the year Saturday at English Range.

More than 40 Soldiers and community members participated in the shooting event.

"I just came out because I love to shoot and I don't get that many opportunities to do so," said Alan Goetzinger, Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officers Academy.

While many of the participants have taken part in shooting events before, Jim Graham, match director, said the matches are the perfect opportunity for new and inexperienced shooters to become more familiar with the weapons.

The match was comprised of three stages at which the shooter faced a variety of targets at different distances. After completing each stage, the participants were then graded.

"We take the score from each stage and divide it by the time it took them to complete the stage," Graham said. "This balances both speed and accuracy. You have to be quick, but you want to hit as many targets as possible."

In order to separate skill levels, participants placed in one of five categories: Competitor (National Rifle Association expert or higher, U.S. Practical Shooting Association or higher), Standard (civilian), Military (active duty), Female and New Shooter.

Pistol matches are normally held the first Saturday of every month and rifle matches are scheduled for the second Sunday of every month.

Next month, the pistol match will be a warm-up for the Glock Match that is scheduled for April 4 and 5.

The Glock Match is held once a year and is one of the biggest shooting events held on Fort Benning.

Graham said the only prerequisite is that you use a Glock pistol or use a club-owned Glock for the match.

"They come from all over for this match," Graham said. "We expect between 300 and 400 shooters for the competition."

For more information on any of the rifle or pistol events, call 689-3371.

Youth basketball players 'strut their stuff' in YS action

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning's youth continued to compete in this year's basketball season. The games were held inside the gym at Youth Services.

Parents cheered and coaches yelled as the children attempted shots, played defense and ran back and forth on the court.

In the 13- to 15-year-old league, the Tar Heels handled the Warriors 47-39 behind Brian McClay's 15 points. The Warriors' top scorer was Daniel Demsay who pumped in 15 of his own.

In other action, Relentless swamped Swoop by 30 cruising to an 82-52 win. Ernie Tyler had the game high with 26, while Darian Lyles scored 21 for the Swoop.

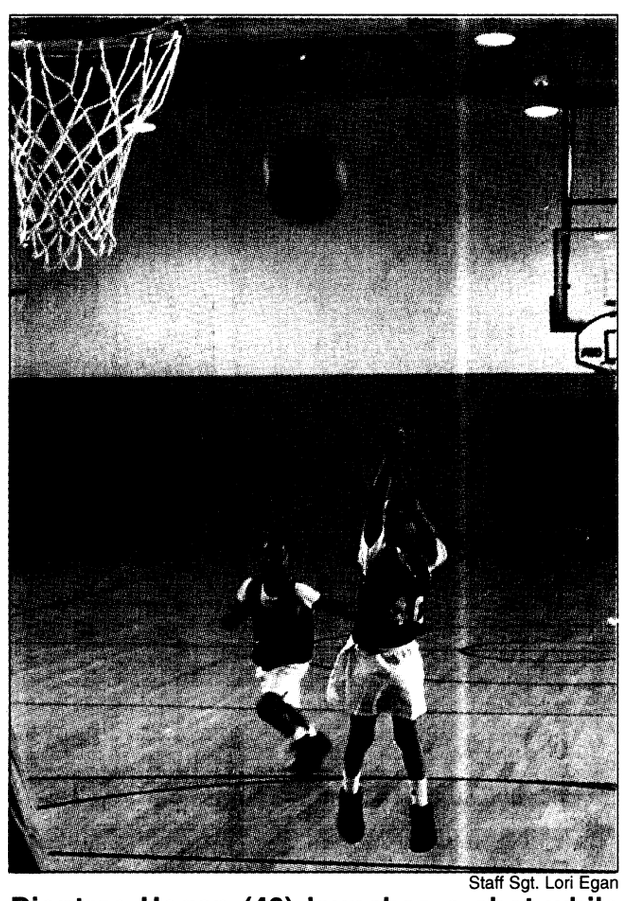
In the younger age groups, beginning with the 6- to 7-year-olds, the Hawks won by forfeit beating the Wildcats by default 2-0.

On the court, it was action packed as the Bulls man-handled the Spurs 20-3. The Bulls were sparked by James Braddy's 12 points. LaQuintin Bray scored the only field goal for the Spurs.

The 8- to 9-year-olds games began with the Pacers squeaking by the Bulls 15-12. Lazarrius Patterson had 9 for the Pacers and Anthony Terrell scored 5 for the Bulls.

Marcus Lewis ended the game with 10 points as the Spurs beat the '76ers 20-6. Matthew Laroeque scored 4 in a losing effort.

The Fort Benning Bulldogs and the Magics played to an 11-11 tie. Ross Brown knocked down 6 points for the Bulldogs and Jauierre Marshall hit 8 for the Magics.



The final game for this age group had the Celtics beating out the Sonics 23-14. The Celtics' Brittany Foxx had the game high with 6 points and Kevin Picardo and Marcus Valentine each scored 5 points for the Sonics.

The Knicks breezed by the '76ers 31-21 in 10- to 12-year-old action. Breon Lewis dumped in 10 points for the Knicks while Marcus Patterson of the '76ers had the game high of 16 points in a losing effort.

In a closer game, the Raptors topped the Spurs 27-20. Percy Valentine scored 8 points for the Raptors and Omar Tyler and Geoffrey Ellerson both had 6 for the Spurs.

The final game pitted the Pistons vs. the Heat. The Pistons, behind the strong-arm shooting of Robert Penn who scored 16, beat the Heat 31-24. Terif Rivers and Osualdo Carela both scored 6 for the Heat.

Youth Service basketball continues tonight with games beginning at 5:30 p.m. and Saturday at 9 a.m. For more information, call 545-3450.

Racquetball players square off during post tournament

Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Sports Branch conducted a singles racquetball tournament Feb.6 through Saturday at Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

After a few cancellations, eight men and two women competed in the tournament, which was broken down into four categories, said Fred Woods, sports coordinator.

The tournament began as competitors took to the court in the men's novice division and women's open division.

Carmen Foster took the women's title after beating Yvonne Seay, while Miguel Florse beat out Terrence Arnt for the men's novice title.

Saturday began with "B" division matches as Denzil Whyntt took first place after beating William H. Holmes and James A. May.

In the open division, Stephon Calhoun was victorious over Junie Christian and Joshua Mitchell.

Despite the low number of participants, the players said the tournament was well worth their time.

"A lot of us normally play each other all the time not just for exercise, but it's fun and it lets us reminisce of our younger days," said Holmes, a military retiree. "This sport lets us compete again people at our own age and skill level, which is different than other sports."

The next racquetball tournament is tentatively scheduled for September.

Soldiers make Olympic debut in Nagano

By Harry F. Thompson
Pacific Stars & Stripes

NAGANO, Japan — You never forget your first Olympic experience.

Kristin Viljanen-Sabasteanski's came when she was in the third grade in Milford, N.H.

"The opening ceremony is something I saw when I was in the third grade and I remember saying, 'Wow, that's got to be the most amazing thing.' I don't remember if it was a tape or what, but I specifically remember looking at a TV and watching people walking in the opening ceremony and thinking that was the coolest thing I could ever imagine doing," said the 28-year-old member of the Army's World Class Athlete Program. "I think it's going to be the one thing I'm going to remember for the rest of my life."

And after Saturday, some other little girl will have sat in front of a television set in Milford and experience her first Olympic dream when Sabasteanski and eight other military athletes marched into Minami Nagano Sports Park in front of 50,000 spectators and billions more watching around the world.

Robert Rosser, a first lieutenant from Applegate, Ore., began his competitive drive toward the Olympics in the fourth grade when he was a wrestler in Montana. Although he changed sports, Rosser's Olympic aspirations never wavered.

"It's going to be great," Rosser said of the long march into the stadium. "Next to winning a gold medal and hearing them play the national anthem, this will be the greatest feeling of my life."

Eight of the nine U.S. military athletes will be making their Olympic debut.

Also on the team are Kara Salmela of Elk River, Minn., and Dan Westover of Jericho, Vt., and Anchorage, Alaska, native Deborah Nordyke, a member of the Air Force's WCAP.

The military is also represented in the bobsled event, where Garrett Hines of Memphis, Tenn., is a brakeman on the USA I sled, and twins Dan and Darrin Steele of Moline, Ill., are pushers on USA II.

Soldiers have competed in the Olympic Games since 1912, when 2nd Lt. George S. Patton placed fifth in the modern pentathlon in Stockholm.

Since 1948, 155 soldiers have been members of the U.S. Olympic team in the Winter Games.

In addition to the nine athletes, two coaches with military ties will also march with the U.S. delegation. Tim Derrick, the team leader of the biathlon squad, and Capt. Chuck Lyda will march with the red, white and blue rank and file.

Biological detection team departs Fort Benning

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

As tension continues to build in the Middle East, a detachment of Fort McClellan, Ala., Soldiers along with a small Marine outfit from Camp Lejeune, N.C., flew out of Fort Benning's Lawson Army Airfield Feb. 13 on their way to the Persian Gulf region.

The detachment, composed of less than 50 Soldiers from McClellan's 20th Chemical Company, specifically focuses on biological warfare surveillance. The handful of Marines, a slice element of Lejeune's Chemical, Biological Incident Response Force, also specializes in chemical and biological threats.

The Army detachment's primary mission will entail detecting the presence of any biological or chemical agents in an area using the Biological Integrated Detection System (BIDS), said Capt. Brenda A. Jacinto, detachment commander.

"These Soldiers are trained on all chemical detection equipment, but our specialty is biological warfare surveillance and detection," she said. "There is no other unit in the Army like this one."

The BIDS, which has been in use for the past two years, detects changes within the composition of the atmosphere alerting the detachment to the presence of biological agents, said Staff Sgt. Tim Anklam, a detachment team leader.

"There were a lot of lessons learned from the Gulf War," Jacinto said. "I think the system will not only give the Soldiers deployed to the Gulf region a feeling of security, but family members back home can feel better as well."

Although Jacinto would rather not come face-to-face with any biological agents, she said it is better to be prepared for the worse-case scenario.

"It would always be better to avoid any contact with agents, but at least with this system we can detect the contaminants and take necessary measures."

Pfc. Carranean Johnson, a chemical, biological specialist, said she is not worried about the deployment.

"I have total confidence in the people I work with and we have trained specifically for this type of deployment," Johnson said. "I know the BIDS won't let us down."

In order to prepare for missions such as this, the Soldiers have completed numerous field training exercises at Dugway Proving Grounds, Utah, during the past months to prepare them for any contingency.

"We've been training for something exactly like this, and I think we're well prepared for the mission ahead," Jacinto said.

The Marine element deployed with a similar mission as the Army, said Marine Staff Sgt. David Grigsby, a member of the Chemical, Biological Incident Response Team.

Spc. Michelle J. Davis

Pfc. Eboli J. Knight, Directorate of Logistics, helps Sgt. William H. Lowden, 20th Chemical Co., strap down equipment onto a pallet at Lawson Army Airfield.

"We operate independently from the Army, but we have similar capabilities using the same technology," Grigsby said. "We don't want anything to happen either, but we will be prepared."

Retreat

Soldiers from Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Regiment, fold the flag recently during retreat. To honor the flag during reveille and retreat, people should stop and either place their right hand over their heart or if in uniform salute. Motorists should stop the car, get out of the car and either salute or place their hand over their heart.

2/69 Soldiers prepare for deployment

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin

More Fort Benning Soldiers are on their way to Kuwait as part of the United State's build-up in preparation for a conflict with Iraq.

Two companies from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), are scheduled to leave this morning headed for Fort Stewart, Ga. From there, the Soldiers will join other Soldiers from the division before departing for Kuwait.

"We're confident and ready to go," said Pvt. 2 Scott Rowbutham, a tank driver with Company A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. "I know my job, the Soldiers I work with know their jobs and we work well together."

Rowbutham, along with the Soldiers from Co's. A and B, spent Tuesday and Wednesday taking classes, packing and talking with their families. Rowbutham said his family supports him.

"My family back in Ohio is behind me," he said. "My father served in the military, so he knows the deal."

The deal at large this time is the biggest build-up of American troops since the Gulf War. Being called Operation Desert Thunder, nearly 30,000 troops are in the Gulf region, along with 30 Navy warships and almost 400 military aircraft.

Some of the Soldiers in Kuwait include a 1,000 member task force from Fort Benning's 1st Bn., 30th Infantry Regt. These Soldiers have been there since January taking part in a joint exercise with the Kuwaiti army, Intrinsic Action.

Considering the recent build up of tension and troops in the area, the commander of the task force, Lt Col. Thomas Heineken, said Feb. 13 the exercise is going as planned.

"Right now we are continuing to execute the training schedule we developed several months ago," he said. "We are currently working on our tank platoon gunnery, our Bradley platoon gunnery and some platoon situational training exercises."

Although training in Kuwait is going as

Hazmat Center

Helps post dispose of waste

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Protecting the environment is the mission of the Centralized Hazardous Materials Control Center, or Hazmat center.

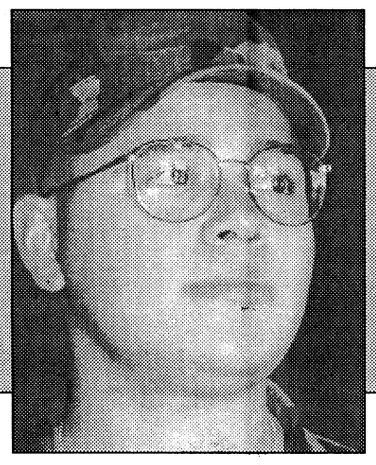
The Hazmat center monitors and controls all hazardous materials and hazardous waste on post. The center keeps track of what's coming in and if it's been disposed of properly, said J.R. Addington, chief of Plans and Operation Division, Directorate of Logistics (DOL).

Phase 1 consists of hazardous waste from activities on post and was set up under the Directorate of Logistics and the Directorate of Public Works to meet environmental standards.

Phase 1 receives hazardous waste from motor pools, such as solvents and oils and paint, cleaning chemicals and fluorescent lighting from other activities.

Units are responsible for packaging the waste and the center checks it. It is then entered into a automated system and sent to the Directorate of Resource Management (DRMO).

"Safety is our top priority. Everyone has training," said Paul Pierson, manager of the Hazmat center. "We have all the proper equipment for packaging. Each of the 12 buildings containing hazardous waste is equipped with a fire alarm directly linked to the fire station, automatic shutdown and fire extinguishers. This is the safest location on post."



"It's a one-stop center for activities," Addington said. "We have the storage capability, we inspect, insure it's packed right,"

Overspending, debts trouble military families

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Erin A. Nash thinks military families have no reason to be deeply in debt.

When my husband and I moved into our on-post housing a year and a half ago, we owned a $350 entertainment center, a four-year-old 19 inch color television, a microwave and a vacuum.

The entertainment center we bought with gift certificates from a wedding present, the television was a Christmas present from my mom from my single days and the microwave and vacuum were wedding presents. Oh yeah, we also had a $16 desk from Kmart.

The vacuum didn't do us much good, considering our housing is wall-to-wall tile, reminiscent of my elementary school and convent where my great aunt used to live.

That's usually where the trouble begins for most military families. Some think an empty house means shopping and acquiring as much credit as humanly possible.

I've heard many stories of families going out and spending thousands of dollars on new furniture, cars, big screen televisions and the "all-important" sound system, which lets your new neighbors know your taste in music.

And then I heard the stories about the bills coming in and the bad checks written all over Columbus.

My point is this — unless one of the spouses entered the marriage with bills, no military family should be deeply in debt. For that matter, no single Soldier should be in debt either.

Along with a sparkling personality and an almost-new car, I brought along $3,000 in college bills and the payment book to the car into my marriage. My husband brought his paycheck.

OK, I will take all the blame for not being out of debt yet. My husband hounded me intermittently throughout the year to get a job while I proclaimed I wasn't quite ready. Meanwhile, we couldn't afford hamburger.

Now, we could have run out to Montgomery Ward and charged our life away, but we didn't.

We got a free loveseat from a friend's neighbor who was PCSing. It's the kind of loveseat everybody's grandmother had in the '70s, complete with wagons and pumpkins, but then again, you can sit on it.

We bought a brand-new recliner on an installment plan from friends who knew what it was like "to have nothing."

We also bought a well-worn couch from friends for $50. My furniture doesn't match, but I have seats for everybody when we have people over; no more folding chairs or plastic lawn furniture for my friends.

Other friends gave us an old coffee table.

The point is my husband and I could have been sitting around, complaining because we didn't have brand-new furniture, but we didn't. We took what resources we had and turned our house into a home.

We used the twin-sized comforter I brought from home to cover the loveseat and I saved my money and discovered I knew how to stencil, so I stenciled our living room and kitchen.

My husband used his woodworking skills and built a breakfast bar in the kitchen, because we didn't have a kitchen table.

We put mattresses on layaway while we were living in a furnished apartment and picked them up our second day of getting quarters. A year later, my husband built a country-style bed frame and we are no longer sleeping directly on the floor.

Now, I know not every man has woodworking skills, but I'm also an advocate of yard sales and used furniture.

After not working for a year, I decided enough was enough and got this job. Now I regret not working sooner because our lives are that much better. We still have the same furniture, but have also gotten a new 26 inch television thanks to the extremely low price and layaway at the post exchange. We buy things with cash, because we know we can afford them if we have the extra cash.

The only stupid thing we did do was put a washing machine on a credit card. I figure it will take about 20 years to pay off. We did get smart, though, and bought a used dryer from friends moving to Germany.

The one beef I do have is with single Soldiers. I'm sick to death of hearing their sob stories about how they have no money. Yet they have state-of-the-art computers and stereos. Where is all their money going? I think mainly beer and pizza, which I enjoy regularly myself — if I have the money.

I know the amount in everyone's paycheck is laughable, but if you live in free housing, don't pay electric bills and don't pay for food (single Soldiers), there's no reason not to have money or be in debt.

Sure, it would be a lot easier if we lived near relatives, because moms are notorious for making sure you have everything you need and will readily part with an old dresser or other piece of furniture.

My husband and I have done it with the help of relatives. My dad sent money two Christmas' ago so we could buy a carpet. My mother-in-law bought us a dining room table. It took us a year to get it down here because we missed block leave, the only time my husband could take leave.

But we've mostly done it ourselves and I wouldn't have it any other way.

Of course we all want nice houses and nice cars. But most of us need to realize you can't have it all at once.

Computers expand communication

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

commentary

Today's society is surrounded by electronic technology. But is that technology submerging the communication skills learned at early ages — speaking, listening and hearing. Times are changing, but are they for the better?

There are things going on around us that no one could have imagined 20 years ago. Who knew that by the 1990s, we would be able to see an infant's first tooth via a satellite from space. Who would have thought we would have hundreds of television stations to choose from? But, who would have thought a computer would link the entire world together by virtually only using two symbols that for years went almost totally unnoticed? The (@) and the (.) symbols have forever changed the way we communicate (dot) or (period).

Before the Internet ever came about how many of us ever used the @ symbol for anything other than comic book curse words? I mean for countless years that key on a person's keyboard sat useless — only being depressed when the number two was called upon.

I ask anyone, "who's idea was it to use that key for communicating with the rest of the world?" Maybe someone chose it because it wasn't getting enough use. Maybe someone liked the way it looked and thought it would look keen among all of the jargon we see when we look at the addresses of some of the web pages.

I have been looking at a lot of pages recently and am still trying to figure out what in the world some of that stuff means.

In the Bayonet's entertainment section, we offer movie trivia. One of the sites used to locate trivia (I'm not trying to give away any trade secrets) has an address that to me makes no sense. Here it is:

www.cis.ohiostate.edu/hypertext/faq/usenet/movies.trivia-faq/faq.html. What does all that mean? To get to that site, you'd still have to use the @ symbol along the way. It would seem a lot easier if there weren't so many letters and symbols to use to get to these addresses. Thank God for bookmarks.

But today, com and net are used as a freeway to dreams. These words are commonly used in the business world also. No longer are fax and phone numbers given, but e-mail addresses and home pages. Not that this is wrong, but is taking short cuts and being less personal the wave of the future?

Maybe schools have changed since I went to elementary school, but as far as I was taught, this (.) is a period, not a dot. Why did the higher-brain types, who get paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to build home pages, new systems and faster moving equipment, have to change English grammar to make the Internet work? Well, not so fast. It's not the symbol that has changed it's what we call it.

That small, circular space is a period, not a dot. Of course it is a dot, but it's called a period. Well — which is it?

I suppose computer wizards and English teachers would have a field day with this argument. With today's technology, is it worth arguing whether or not a small spec on a piece of paper is a dot or a period? I don't know. But whatever it is, or whatever symbol or made-up word is being used to communicate with China, Australia and Great Britain, we can all watch what we type on a computer screen linked to a satellite in space.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller said they buried their daughter here in May and when they visited the gravesite, it was covered in mud along with others in that row and she would appreciate anything that could be done to correct this.

Directorate of Logistics response:

It was explained that two burials within close proximity to their daughter's grave had recently taken place. The excessive rains caused backfill dirt from those gravesites to wash over several adjacent graves. The caller was assured that the conditions were corrected.

Commanding General responds to civilian questions

The Fort Benning Garrison Office

During the Commanding General's call to the civilian work force, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst responded to many questions from the civilians in attendance. Those questions and issues requiring additional information appear below:

Q: Where can we find the rules for Voluntary Early Retirement Authority (VERA) and Voluntary Separation Incentive Pay (VSIP)?

A: The letter to all employees announcing the VERA and VSIP open window in September described the criteria for both VERA and VSIP. The rules are listed on the Fort Benning Home Page.

To access the Fort Benning Home Page enter: www.benning.army.mil.

For specific questions regarding eligibility for VERA and VSIP, talk to your supervisor or call either 545-1139 or 545-5562 and ask to speak with the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center specialist who services your organization.

Q: When will the VERA and VSIP window open for fiscal 2000.

A: Officials at Fort Benning are working on the reductions for Fiscal Year 1999. The window was open Sept. 1-30, 1997. The window will be opened again for certain job categories when determination is made for exactly how many reductions will be needed to meet FY 1999 budget.

When the FY 2000 budget guidance is received, the number of reductions necessary to meet the guidance will be determined and the decision about the VERA and VSIP will be made. However, this will not happen until after the start of FY 1999, Oct.1, 1998.

Q: Each spring a "dream sheet" is distributed for training and junior employees who have difficulty getting computer classes. It seems only supervisors are sent to classes. Why?

A: Only those supervisors who have a demonstrated need for computer classes receive this type of training. Training billets for automation classes are prioritized and the vast majority of those billets are used by clerks and key staff personnel who have a need to use computers in their work assignments. Directors and commanders decide who needs to attend training.

•Q: Directorate of Public Works employee expressed concern that five supervisors were cut but the same amount of work remains. This is the same situation in the Operational Maintenance (OM) Shop and the Roads and Grounds chief was upgraded despite a reduction in force (RIF) and a GS-12 was "created from nowhere," an employee said. Why?

A: The OM Shop mission was transferred to the Directorate of Logistics and DPW positions (four mechanics in the OM Shop) were abolished. When the shop was transferred without personnel, it created an initial backlog that took some time to work out.

This action resulted from joint initiatives between DOL and DPW to consolidate functions. The two organizations are working to improve support. With the charter of the repair cycle time team greater progress is expected for support and repair.

The new shop has repaired and returned two of the three bucket trucks and the third is undergoing an extensive overhaul.

Two GS-11 branch chiefs in the Buildings and Grounds Division of DPW were upgraded to GS-12 in August 1993 as a result of application of the new Supervisory Grade Evaluation Guide. One additional Building and Ground GS-12 resulted from the transfer within DPW of a GS-12 with retained pay and grade.

•Q: An employee believed DOL had not followed policy because Fort Benning did not bid on Integrated Sustainment Maintenance (ISM) programs such as major assembly overhaul and other installations did. Why?

A: Maintenance Division was established as an Associate Maintenance Activity (AMA) for ISMs in the spring of 1997. The first opportunity to bid was in the August Production Planning Control (PPC) when four lines were submitted, which were unsuccessful. Additional bids will be submitted for the February PPC. Bids are also being submitted when the opportunity presents itself for national level work.

Q: Mission essential equipment is sitting deadline, e.g. two bucket trucks belonging to a tree crew. An employee suggested the work force should replace its own batteries, fuses, etc. Employee complained about delays in fixing equipment; said it sometimes takes one day to fix the equipment and 45 days to do the paperwork. Why is this?

A: The transfer of Equipment Maintenance from DPW to DOL was a consolidation of functions action. The consolidation will continue to be reviewed to improve the turnaround time on repairs and increased automation will reduce paperwork.

Additionally, Col. R.O. Buck, director of DPW, stated that DPW and DOL are looking at what replacement parts, such as batteries and fuses, could be operator installed which would result in less time in the shop. One such initiative that has already began is replacement of grader cutting blades. Also, a more real time production system will be fielded in DOL's Maintenance Division the spring of 1998 and should minimize much of the paperwork which clogs the current system.

Q: An employee complained that 1,200 housing units went contract and asked if Fort Benning got to bid on those. The employee asked if DPW and DOL can be taken apart piece by piece going to a contractor the same way the 1,200 housing units already mentioned. Is this possible?

A: The Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Circular A-76 describes the procedures used when the federal government bids against private contractors. Without an A-76 study, Fort Benning could not bid on the housing units contract.

The 1,200 housing units went to contract because the Family Housing Shop was stretched thin and was working an inordinate amount of overtime. DPW determined it would be more cost effective and would provide better customer service if the employees in the Family Housing Shop were used elsewhere and a contractor was hired to maintain family housing.

Most importantly, no inhouse personnel lost jobs as a result of contracting maintenance of these housing units. Privatization of all housing is also a Department of the Army goal by 2003.

Hazmat: Center allows for waste turn in

Addington said. "We have the storage capability, we inspect, insure it's packed right and recycle the excess."

One way the center recycles hazardous materials is to check if any other branch of the military needs the specific item.

For example, if the Army had an item no longer used, the Hazmat center checks to see how much it would cost to dispose of the product.

Usually this price is much higher than the original price to purchase the product, so the Hazmat center checks within other branches to see if there is a need for that item.

"We've already saved more than $1 million dollars for the post," Pierson said. "If another unit wants it, they either pay to pick it up or have it sent to them."

The goal of the Hazmat center is to have zero percent hazardous waste turned in, said Addington.

Kuwait: Soldiers deploy

scheduled, the realization of possible combat has a different effect on everyone.

Rowbutham said there are a variety of emotions going around.

"It depends on the person," he said. "Some of us are really confident — others, it's hard to say."

The same can be said for those in Kuwait. Heineken said his Soldiers get just about the same information that is being disseminated stateside.

"There's really not much stress at all here," Heineken said. "We let the Soldiers know what's going on and they get the same information from CNN international that you get back there in the states.

"We know we came here to train and we're staying focused on doing that. If we're required to do other things, then of course, we'll go ahead and execute as told."

Hoster testifies at McKinney court-martial

By Spc. Greg Jones
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Taking the stand on Tuesday, retired Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster said then Sergeant Major of the Army, Gene C. McKinney, grabbed and kissed her in a Hawaii hotel room in the spring of 1996.

Hoster is the third of Command Sgt. Maj. McKinney's six female accusers to testify in his court-martial at Fort Belvoir, Va., now in its third week.

Just over a year ago, Hoster went public with allegations citing McKinney for sexual misconduct.

McKinney has pled not guilty to all 19 specifications of misconduct involving the six women. If convicted of all charges, he faces a maximum of 55.5 years of confinement and a dishonorable discharge.

In the early evening during a trip in Hawaii April 10, 1996, an agitated McKinney left an informal meeting with his staff, Hoster said. McKinney returned to Hoster's Hale Koa Hotel room later that night.

Hoster said McKinney kissed her and then gestured toward his groin area, stating, "Look what you've done to me."

McKinney again asked Hoster to look down at his groin.

Hoster said she refused, saying "No, leave my room now."

"I just couldn't believe it was happening," said Hoster, describing her reaction to the incident. Hoster said she didn't report the incident because she wanted to simply, "go on with her life."

"I just really wanted to try and forget about it," she said.

Army Criminal Investigation Command obtained a sworn affidavit from Hoster through her attorney Feb. 4, 1997.

The defense questioned Hoster about subsequent media coverage of her allegations. Hoster went public with her allegations against McKinney and appeared on the television shows "Prime Time Live," Feb. 5; "The Today Show," Feb. 6; and "This Week with David Brinkley," Feb. 9.

In June 1996, Hoster said she told McKinney she would retire, in part, because of the incident in Hawaii. In response, McKinney tearfully apologized, she said. Hoster retired Nov. 1, 1996.

During Tuesday's proceedings, Judge Col. Ferdinand Clervi and defense and prosecution counsels discussed a letter Hoster sent McKinney in December 1996. In the letter Hoster tells McKinney to remove himself from the Secretary of the Army's Senior Review Panel on sexual harassment or she will go public with her allegations. The judge ruled that portions of the letter would be admitted as evidence.

Before Hoster took the stand, a female major testified about three incidents she said occurred in the spring of 1995 when she and McKinney were stationed with U.S. Army, Europe (USAREUR) in Heidelberg, Germany.

The major, the only commissioned officer among McKinney's accusers, testified Feb. 13 that he twice asked her to go to bed with him.

During the second incident, McKinney grabbed her arm, pulling her towards him in a USAREUR headquarters hallway.

The female major said McKinney seemed almost to be joking the first time he propositioned her, but was more serious during the second incident. The female major said she was upset by the second incident.

"(The first time) I thought he was ... fishing, to see if I was interested," she said.

Under cross-examination by defense counsel Lt. Col. V. Montgomery Forrester, the female major said she did not feel threatened by McKinney, but felt that she was still a friend of the McKinneys and did not consider herself to be a victim.

Forrester questioned her about times and events immediately surrounding the alleged misconduct and challenged her memory.

Two witnesses, a male Judge Advocate General's Corps captain from Fort Benning, Ga. and a female Army Reserve lieutenant colonel from New Jersey, testified Tuesday the major told them about the incidents before Hoster publicly surfaced her allegations.

Lead defense counsel, Charles Gittins, cross-examined the first of McKinney's accusers, a female staff sergeant, Feb. 11 and part of Feb. 12. The staff sergeant, who said she received anonymous threats, was moved around the country by the prosecution as part of a protection program.

Feb. 12 Gittins questioned the staff sergeant about per diem TDY rates in Monterey, Ca., and Washington, D.C., noting that she had accumulated more than $16,000 in expenses. Gittins accused the staff sergeant of making up entries in her personal notebook, including one where she alleged misconduct toward her by McKinney at the Association of the U.S. Army convention in October 1994.

Two of the staff sergeant's friends, a female staff sergeant and a male specialist, testified Feb. 12 that she told them about the alleged misconduct before Sgt. Maj. Hoster publicly surfaced her allegations against McKinney.

In the defense opening statement, the defense contended all the allegations of misconduct were false. The defense said the women were motivated by revenge or were seeking special benefits from the Army.

The defense cross-examination has developed some inconsistencies between witnesses or attempted to present details supporting these themes. The defense is expected to begin presenting its case late next week.

Editor's note: With the exception of retired Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster, the female accusers' names are withheld due to privacy concerns because they are alleged victims of sex crimes. In February 1997, Hoster publicly announced her allegations against then Sergeant Major of the Army Gene C. McKinney on national television.

Websites answer questions about anthrax

By Doug Gilbert
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — By now, everyone in the armed forces should be aware that Iraq may harbor chemical and biological weapons or the means to build them. And it may not be the only country with such capabilities.

For the Department of Defense (DoD), it's a force protection issue. In December, the Pentagon announced a plan to mass-inoculate the armed forces against anthrax, one of the most lethal biological agents and the easiest to affix to weapons. Realizing the decision to immunize would raise many questions in the ranks and in military households, DoD decided to get the facts out through press releases and now, through a comprehensive site on the World Wide Web.

To get there, go to www.defenselink.mil, click on "Highlights," then click on "More Anthrax Info." You'll get an overview of the defense immunization program and a definitive list of questions and answers about the anthrax vaccination program.

Examples:

Q. How real is the threat?

A. Very real. Our assessments of the potential offensive biological threat facing American service men and women indicates it is necessary to have a robust biological defense program today.

Q. How does the vaccine work?

A. The vaccine promotes increased resistance to anthrax by active immunization. The recipient develops protection by means of antibodies and other immune mechanisms to the bacterium following immunization.

Other questions (there are 34) deal with the immunization regime, past uses of the vaccine and the Pentagon's plans to inoculate the entire armed forces. The effort will begin after the Army as executive agent works out logistic details for inoculating service members. One of the questions dispels the frequently expressed theory that anthrax vaccine used during the Gulf War may be a cause of reported illnesses.

An information paper available at this site also discusses the anthrax vaccine's use during the war and a hypertext link connects directly to the Gulf War illnesses home page. Go there (www.gulflink.osd.mil) to learn more about DoD's ongoing investigation of Gulf War illnesses.

GulfNEWS, the site's on-line newsletter, carries an article by Baxter Ennis on the third phase of DoD's comprehensive clinical evaluation program for Gulf War vets. At Walter Reed Army Medical Center, the Specialized Care Program administers a multidisciplinary treatment program addressing persistent, disabling symptoms of veterans and family members. These are symptoms that remain undiagnosed after evaluation or are unlikely to respond to specific biomedical treatments. Such symptoms include fatigue, joint pain, headaches, indigestion, skin rashes, weight gain or loss and memory problems.

The program aims to improve work performance and other activities of daily living and promote the overall well-being of its patients. For more information, visit the Gulf War Health Center's home page at www.wramc.amedd.army.mil/departments/gulfwar.

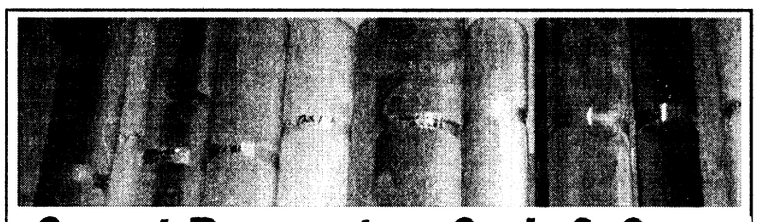
AIDS information

•Georgia is eighth in the nation for total number of AIDS cases.

•There is no possibility of contracting AIDS while donating blood since fresh needles are used for each donor.



•Since 1984 the proportion of female AIDS cases has increased from 4 to 19 percent. Many infected women are sex partners of men who have used drugs or have had sex with other men. People who become infected through heterosexual contact are the fastest growing group of people with AIDS.

•Casual contact with a person who is HIV-positive will not transmit the disease.

•HIV transmission is through risky behavior, such as drug use and unprotected sex.

Schools getting help from NATO

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

OBERAMMERGAU, Germany — Learning one nation's military acronyms is hard. Imagine being assigned to NATO or SHAPE, where military personnel from 16 allied nations, plus 28 Partnership for Peace countries now work.

Help is available.

Last year, about 5,800 military men and women, including more than 1,000 Americans, studied at the NATO School, which is specifically designed to teach them how to communicate and cooperate in the international environment.

The school introduces students to operations. Tucked away in an Alpine village in Bavaria, about 50 miles southwest of Munich, it is far from the phones, faxes and e-mail of any military headquarters. That's the way it's intended to be, officials here said. Their goal, they said, is to give students a solid week, without interruption, to listen and learn, and to bond with foreign counterparts.

Instructors teach courses in NATO command and control, multinational crisis management, peace support operations, electronic warfare, nuclear surety and other specialties. Courses introduce students to the allied military community; advanced courses build upon the basics. General and flag officers attend courses on policy, planning and analysis as well as more technical areas.

Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe publishes the school calendar annually and distributes it throughout NATO and the allied commands. The most popular class is the NATO Staff Officer Orientation Course, taught 12 times a year and always full, said U.S. Air Force Lt. Col. Christopher "Red" Campbell, NATO School academic director.

"Ideally, an officer should attend that course in the first six months of his posting," he said.

NATO School courses are aimed at teaching one thing, interoperability — one of the most difficult problems NATO has faced throughout its nearly 50 year history, Campbell noted. Interoperability applies not only to equipment, but to personnel.

"If I land an American airplane at a British base, I need to ensure that gas nozzle fits in that aircraft," Campbell said. "Likewise, I need to be able to ensure I can plug a German officer into a U.K.-based NATO headquarters. That's where we come in. We introduce people to different nationalities, different uniform colors, different accents, and give them a good foundation from which they can then function in their appointment."

Who's eligible to attend classes depends on the course. Most courses are classified. Some are for NATO general and flag officers only; most are for officers on multinational staffs.

About 10 percent of the students are NCOs. "Some of our courses are somewhat more technical in nature. Those tend to be the ones NCOs are eligible to attend," Campbell said.

School officials are considering adding courses for NCOs in the future — possibly as early as this year, he said. "We think there is a need for courses such as an introduction to NATO for senior NCOs, or perhaps a course for senior NCOs who are going to be posted to NATO's stabilization force in Bosnia."

Each course has anywhere from 20 to 100 students. Four classrooms hold a maximum of 237 students. Students come from national headquarters as well as from NATO and SHAPE, Campbell said. Many of the Americans who attend are from U.S. Army Europe, U.S. European Command and the Joint Staff.

A typical class begins at 8 a.m. and ends at about 5 p.m. Most work is done in the classroom through lectures and seminars. Normally, no homework is assigned because most students are not native English speakers.

"It is very difficult as a non-native English speaker to sit in a classroom for eight hours and pay attention to a different language and assimilate that information," Campbell said. "We try to give the student time to listen. We try to speak slowly and clearly. One of my key efforts is to get our native-English speakers to slow down."

The school teaches leaders to prepare for and run an operation like NATO's stabilization force in Bosnia. "When it's a NATO operation, we have to use policies agreed upon at NATO headquarters in Brussels," Linder said. "When you work with NATO, you have to know NATO doctrine and policies and work accordingly."

About 30 of the school's permanent party of 110 are Americans. U.S. Army Maj. Cindy Connally is an electronics warfare instructor in Oberammergau. It is her first NATO assignment, and she said it's proving to be a rewarding one.

"Most of my education has been focused on U.S. forces and it didn't really include a lot about the other nations we now work with," she said.

Teaching nonnative English speakers often affects the pace of her class. "Sometimes we have students whose grasp of English is not quite as good (as others)," Connally said. "Sometimes the student will ask a question and the individual on the podium doesn't understand the question."

Overall, Connally said, learning from other people is exciting. "One of the great things about here is just the exposure to the various nations and how they do things a little bit differently. Making sure we use the NATO-approved language is certainly another challenge. This is a wonderful tour. I'm not sure if I've learned more here, or I've actually taught more."

U.S. Air Force 1st Lt. Tara Keene of the 52nd Operations Support Group at Spangdahlem Air Base, Germany, is one of three Americans who attended the Command and Control Warfare in mid-January. Her 24 classmates were from Italy, Norway, France, Spain, the Netherlands, Belgium, United Kingdom and Denmark.

Keene, an intelligence officer who hails from Tallahassee, Fla., said attending the course gave her a broader understanding which will lead to better interaction with other agencies, be it NATO or U.S. Air Force Europe.

"There are different terms that every country uses," Keene said. "Not everybody means the same thing by the same terminology." The course aims to "reach a common ground so everybody is on the same footing and speaking the same language."

3rd Brigade Soldiers train at JRTC

By Maj. Roger McDonald
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

"Stimulating," "high-speed," "realistic" and "intense" are among the phrases 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Soldiers used to characterize their most recent live-fire training at Joint Readiness Training Center (JRTC).

Instead of the traditional month-long deployments to the heat and sand of the National Training Center (NTC), Ft. Irwin, Calif., members of the brigade spent their early February mornings in the swamps of Louisiana.

In late January, Soldiers from Company Band, some from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, including Soldiers from 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., 317th Engineer Bn. and the 203rd Forward Support Bn., deployed to Ft. Polk to train with 1st Bde, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) in order to provide the division with the lethal combat power of M-1 Abrams Tanks and M-2 Operation Desert Storm Bradley Fighting Vehicles (BFV).

Much like a rotation at the NTC, the JRTC offers both force-on-force operations and live-fire exercises for the participants. The Soldiers participated in three separate live-fire exercises during the rotation including: a heavy-light live-fire, a movement-to-contact live-fire and a deliberate attack (trenchline) live-fire. Each of the live-fires included separate orders process, rehearsals and execution of combined arms assets to provide units with what Lt. Col. Addison D. Davis, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. commander, characterized as, "the most realistic live-fire in the Army."

Capt. Daniel Streetman, Co. B, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. commander, provided the command and control for the deliberate attack (trenchline) live-fire. He described the training event as, "a fantastic opportunity to integrate all our systems — engineers, Infantry, artillery — and all of the weapons systems each branch offers: bangalores, AT-4s, live-grenades, BFV with 25mm guns, 120mm mortars and 155mm Howitzers." Streetman touted the JRTC live-fire experience as, "the most realistic, exciting and educational training event I've experienced in my 18 months of command."

"For many, the JRTC live-fires offered participants their first look at the effects of our weapons systems," said 2nd Lt. Michael Phillips, fire support officer. He said the live-fires allowed everyone the chance to, "witness the devastating effects of indirect fires. It was the first time I stood on an objective after pounding it with artillery and mortar fires," said Pfc. Jose Montanez, a grenadier, who was also impressed with the effects the systems had. "The breach we had to do was intense. Setting up live C-4 was really something to think about. I loved seeing the fragments flying all over the place."

Unlike most training opportunities for the mechanized forces of the brigade, the JRTC provided the opportunity to train with light Infantry forces, sharing, tactics, techniques, procedures and lessons learned in the process.

Sgt. Daniel Topper, a team leader during the deliberate attack on the trenchline, had positive observations on his experiences with the light Infantry. "The fighting in the trench went really well. It was good training, especially with the dismounted and the Bradley Infantrymen together. It worked well once we ironed out the details. I enjoyed working with the 101st in the trenchline."

With the excitement of the live-fires behind them, the Soldiers now shift focus to force-on-force operations against the JRTC opposing force. The Soldiers will battle in the force-on-force maneuver box for about two weeks, then begin redeployment to Fort Benning February 22.

Commo Soldiers keep everyone in touch

By Cpl. Michael Rautio
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

Every Soldier knows whether on the battlefield or in the rear one of the keys to success for any operation is effective communication.

This holds true for Task Force 1-30 Soldiers whether it's communication while on a live-fire range or communication between two tents in the Kabal.

Keeping the lines of communication open is no easy job, according to Sgt. 1st Class Keith D. Howard, communications section sergeant of Headquarters and Headquarters Company 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

The job of keeping those lines open falls on Howard and his Soldiers. "Our mission is to ensure the task force can communicate at all times. Whether it's over land line or an FM system," Howard said.

When they initially arrived in the Kabal, Howard and his troops had a large job in front of them. With more than 30 miles of communication wire being used inside of the Kabal alone, Howard and his Soldiers had to ensure everything was set-up and working properly.

With so much wire inside of the Kabal, accidents are bound to happen, Howard said. "If a communication line goes down for any reason, my Soldiers can usually respond and have the problem fixed within five to 10 minutes," Howard said. "Normally, we average between 10 and 15 calls a day to help someone who is having a problem with their communications equipment."

Fixing broken lines of communication isn't the only job his Soldiers perform while in the Kabal, Howard said. They are also responsible for ensuring the commercial communication and DSN lines stay open.

Additionally, several of the units in the Task Force have a communications Soldier who assists the company commander with the company's internal communication needs. This Soldier is used to ensure the unit has effective communications between the different platoons of that unit, Howard said.

Another large role Howard's communications Soldiers play is the role of preventive maintenance and trouble shooting. "If someone is having trouble with a radio or their communications, we can help them try to fix the problem. We also assist units by performing monthly and quarterly checks on the equipment during organizational maintenance days to keep it in top shape," Howard said.

Although the communications section is not at full strength Howard said his Soldiers are working hard and staying motivated. The busiest part was setting up all the lines of communication and ensuring they worked properly. "Now we are into a maintenance phase where we keep everything running and troubleshoot any problems," Howard said.

Since any nature of problems can arise, it makes for interesting work, according to Pfc. Anthony C. Belanger. "There is no average day, if something breaks we have to fix it."

As for training while in the Kuwaiti desert, everyday on the job is training according to Howard. "While we are here we are only focused on our mission — we completed all of our other training while still at Fort Benning."

Reserves, active duty working well meeting Bosnian job requirements

By Sgt. Jerry Parisella
Army News Service

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Carrying out tasks as varied as the Army itself, Reservists deployed to the peacekeeping mission in Bosnia are again showing the vital role they play in today's military operations.

From the military police patrolling the streets of the war-torn country to the doctors performing emergency surgery, the Reserve component troops supporting Operation Joint Guard are demonstrating they can and do, work well with the active component troops.

Of the approximately 8,000 U.S. Soldiers in Bosnia, about 1,600 are from Reserve components. "There is a great deal of professional ability from the Reserve component troops," said Command Sgt. Major Carl Christian, the command sergeant major of Task Force Eagle, the name for the American-led contingent of Soldiers in Bosnia.

"I think if one day you put a red hat on all the Reserves and a yellow hat on all the National Guard, there would be a lot of active duty people who would be surprised they have been working right next to these folks," Christian said.

Lt. Col. Craig Morton, the Reserve component liaison officer for Task Force Eagle, said it would be more difficult for the active Army to perform the Operation Joint Guard mission without assistance from the Reserves.

"The modern Army concept is leaner, more efficient and more reliance on the Reserve component," Morton said. "If you take the Reserve component out of the equation you have to rely much more heavily on the active component. So it would be much more demanding on them (active component) and their resources, especially in certain critical MOS areas where Reserves have the bulk of the manpower."

One such MOS is civil affairs, which has only one active duty component, based at Fort Bragg, N.C. Capt. Michael Price of the 426th Civil Affairs Battalion, Upland, Calif., noted the relatively small number of active duty civil affairs Soldiers means deployments such as Operation Joint Guard rely heavily on Reservists to perform civil affairs duties.

"The active Army could not function as effectively without Reserve civil affairs folks augmenting the active duty — there are not enough people," the former active-duty, enlisted Soldier said. Price stated he has had a good working relationship with the active-duty troops in Bosnia. "I've experienced nothing but positive things."

The Bosnian mission has not only given Reservists the chance to work with active-duty troops, but a chance to meet Bosnian citizens and Soldiers from around the world.

With 30 pairs of eyes staring at him intently, Sgt. Paul Brink of the 12th Psychological Operations Battalion, Mountain View, Calif., carefully explains to the class of 8-year-old children the dangers of the ever-present landmines scattered throughout Bosnia. Brink and his fellow reservists often visit schools with troops from Sweden, Denmark, Norway and other countries that make up the Nordic Polish Brigade.

"I think (visiting schools) is the most rewarding thing a PsyOps team can do in a country," he said. "It is a lot of fun and I like it very much. And we get a lot of feedback about what people think about (Stabilization Force)."

For the first time during a peacekeeping mission, military police are taking over for active component MPs. Troops from the 810th Military Police Co., Tampa, Fla.; 351st MP Co., Ocala, Fla. and 423rd MP Co., Uniondale, N.Y., participated in extensive training at Forts Benning and Polk, then deployed to Bosnia to take over for active duty Soldiers.

Many leaders in Bosnia said one of the bonuses of bringing in Reservists is they bring a variety of skills from their civilian jobs, that enhance their ability to carry out their military mission. "The more depth of experience you have, the better off you are going to be when it comes time to do your military job," Morton said.

Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, the Army chief of staff, noted in an interview with Army Times, that it would be difficult to train active-duty Soldiers to match the varied experiences some Reservists, such as civil affairs, bring to their military job.

"The experience they bring is absolutely based upon their civilian experience," Reimer said. "So I think you're going to continue to have, as much as possible, civil affairs being in the Reserve component because it's just a great transition program and there is no way we can train them as well as they're being trained right now."

Many of the military police Reservists in Bosnia work in civilian law enforcement. For example, Sgt. Gregory Cobb of the 351st MP Co. is a narcotics investigator with the Florence, Ala., police department and was a patrol officer for five years before assuming his current position.

He said there are variations in military and civilian police work, such as the paperwork, but essentially the skills developed in the civilian world are helpful to doing his job as an MP.

As an MP and civilian officer, he has investigated traffic accidents and crimes such as larceny. "All in all I think it is an asset to the military because a lot of the members of my unit are involved in law enforcement. It helps a lot to know the questions to ask, the way to treat and talk to people," Cobb said.

A Reservist whose been in the Army 13 years, Cobb said this is his first deployment and he has had a good working relationship with the active duty MPs.

"We've been able to work well together and I don't see any hard feelings between the two groups," he said. "There isn't any of this, 'I'm better than you because I'm active duty.'"

Unit provides help for task force in Kuwait

By Staff Sgt. Clifton Kershaw
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

While the majority of Task Force 1-30 is hard at work conducting various types of training, a small group of Soldiers works whenever the call comes to keep the task force on the move.

Working throughout the days and into many nights, Soldiers from the 203rd Forward Support Battalion (FSB), Unit Maintenance Collection Point, are responsible for providing the upper echelon of maintenance for all task force vehicles.

This maintenance includes major assembly replacements of vehicle parts such as engines, transmissions and differentials, said Sgt. 1st Class Lester McCord, Direct Support Maintenance noncommissioned officer in charge.

"We have to do what we have to do," said Sgt. William Rogers, Company B, 203rd FSB. "Nobody is here against their will."

The mission of these Soldiers requires them to have a vast knowledge of many different vehicles used by the task force. The pursuit of perfection produces its share of work for those responsible for keeping the "Battle Boars" rolling.

According to McCord, the task force goal is to maintain 90 percent operational status of its vehicles. But, McCord and his troops have a much higher goal.

"If the Task Force is not at 100 percent, then we are busy," he said.

American forces in Gulf region sit ready, continue to prepare

By Linda D. Kozaryn

ABOARD THE USS GEORGE WASHINGTON — Commanders are confident. Troops are ready for action. The world is waiting. Will the United States launch air strikes in response to Saddam Hussein's failure to comply with U.N. resolutions?

For nearly four months, U.S. sailors and Marines aboard this warship have been watching CNN and waiting. They have a personal interest in the outcome of the U.N. standoff with Iraq.

If diplomatic efforts succeed, they will head for home as scheduled April 3. The carrier USS John C. Stennis will deploy to carry on the mission, maintaining stability in the region.

On the other hand, if diplomacy fails, the 5,000 U.S service members aboard will most likely go into action along with the more than 20,000 other U.S. troops in the region. If the president so orders, they will launch an offensive against the Iraqi dictator's regime.

In about a week, all the pieces of the strike force will be assembled, Marine Gen. Anthony C. Zinni, U.S. Central Command commander, told reporters Feb. 11. Along with the forces already in the gulf region, Zinni has requested even more ships, planes and troops that are now on the way.

The USS Guam Amphibious Readiness Group with another 3,000 Marines is steaming toward the gulf. Another 3,000 Soldiers at Fort Stewart, Ga., will soon deploy to Camp Doha, Kuwait, to draw pre-positioned armor. They'll join 1,000 Soldiers already there for exercise Intrinsic Action.

Aboard the George Washington, F-14B Tomcat, FA-18 Hornet, S-3 Viking and other aircrews are at the ready. "Our battle group is ready to go," said Adm. Michael G. Mullen, group commander. "We're very focused. We're very ready. Morale here is very high."

The George Washington carries 50 fighter aircraft. The USS Independence, the second U.S. carrier deployed in the gulf, carries another 50. The British carrier HMS Invincible sails with her U.S. counterparts and carries about 14 GR-1 Tornado ground attack planes. Since November, U.S. naval pilots have been flying 80 to 120 sorties a day over Iraq in support of Operation Southern Watch. U.S. naval forces also carry precision-strike Tomahawk cruise missiles.

"The threats that exist on land are threats we understand — threats we think we can handle," he noted. Everyone in the battle group would like to see a diplomatic solution, he said, but in the meantime is ready for however long it takes to do what's required.

Since the George Washington arrived in the gulf in November, people aboard have maintained their enthusiasm, according to Lt. Susan Vitale Deni, the ship's intelligence systems officer, one of about 35 women aboard.

"People are ready to do whatever it takes to resolve the situation," said the Binghamton, N.Y., native. "The president sent us down here, and we're ready to do whatever he wants us to do, whenever."

Among the ship's naval aviators, the often-repeated phrase is simply: "We're ready to go." They said they've put their affairs in order, and they're focused on the mission. If an attack is launched, U.S. defense officials aim to curtail Hussein's capacity to build and deliver weapons of mass destruction and his ability to threaten his neighbors.

"If that's what they want us to do, we're ready to go at a moment's notice," said U.S. Marine Corps Maj. Mark Wise, an 11-year veteran F-18 pilot from Redmond, Wash., assigned to Fixed Marine Fighter Attack Squadron 251.

Maintaining high readiness is nothing new for the fighter pilots, said Navy Lt. Cdr. Tom Lalor of Strike Fighter Squadron 86. "We came to the gulf prepared to do a mission. We're ready to execute just as we were the first day we showed up. There's a little more sense of anticipation right now. Morale is high. There is a great sense of purpose on the ship. We're very excited to be here and be a part of the international resolve against Saddam's regime."

With only two months left in their six-month tour, Lalor said, the sailors and Marines are in "a win-win situation." "Either we get to employ the military tactics and training we've trained for all our careers, or we get to go home," he said.

Prior planning helps transitioning Soldiers

Army and Career Alumni Program

"The Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) was established by the U.S. Army to assist Soldiers, their families and civil service employees with successful transitions from the active Army to the ranks of Army alumni," said Chick Eagle, a counselor with the Fort Benning ACAP Center. "Since it's inception in October 1991, more than 18,000 Fort Benning Soldiers and family members have used ACAP's job assistance services to help start new careers and adjust to changes in location and situation."

"Although the Army has prepared Soldiers to qualify for a vast array of civilian occupations, our experience has shown some ACAP clients have not established a job search objective or objectives before deciding to separate," he said. Eagle said establishing an objective requires an honest assessment of MOS skills, training and experience as they apply to civilian employment. If a direct correlation between MOS and the civilian occupation exists, then the objective is clear, he said. "But, does the job market have openings available? If there are openings, do employers want civilian certification before they will hire? In that case, some additional education and testing for skill certification may be required. If education is required, is the individual's financial situation sound enough to delay employment long enough for school? If still on active duty, is training and certification possible before separation using off-duty time or terminal leave? Developing a sound job search plan requires some hard work," Eagle said.

If the Soldier wants employment in an area outside his or her MOS, it becomes even more important to plan each step along the path to the desired occupation, Eagle said. If so, this means analyzing transferrable skills, outside experience, hobbies, training, funding for retraining, certifications and more. The ACAP Center has assisted thousands of Soldiers with transition planning a full year or just days from separation," he said. "However, the most successful transitioning Soldiers are those who have actively studied their options before starting the ACAP Process," said Eagle.

For more information about ACAP eligibility, scheduling, and information, visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza or call, 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Writers wanted for essay contest

American Forces Press Services

WASHINGTON — The deadline to enter the U.S. Naval Institute's 5th annual Colin L. Powell Joint Warfighting Essay Contest is April 1.

The contest, honoring the 12th chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, encourages military and civilian professionals to analyze and discuss joint issues, institute spokesman retired Navy Capt. James A. Barber Jr. said. The top three prizes are $2,500, $2,000 and $1,000 and publication in the institute's Proceedings magazine.

Contest officials said essays:

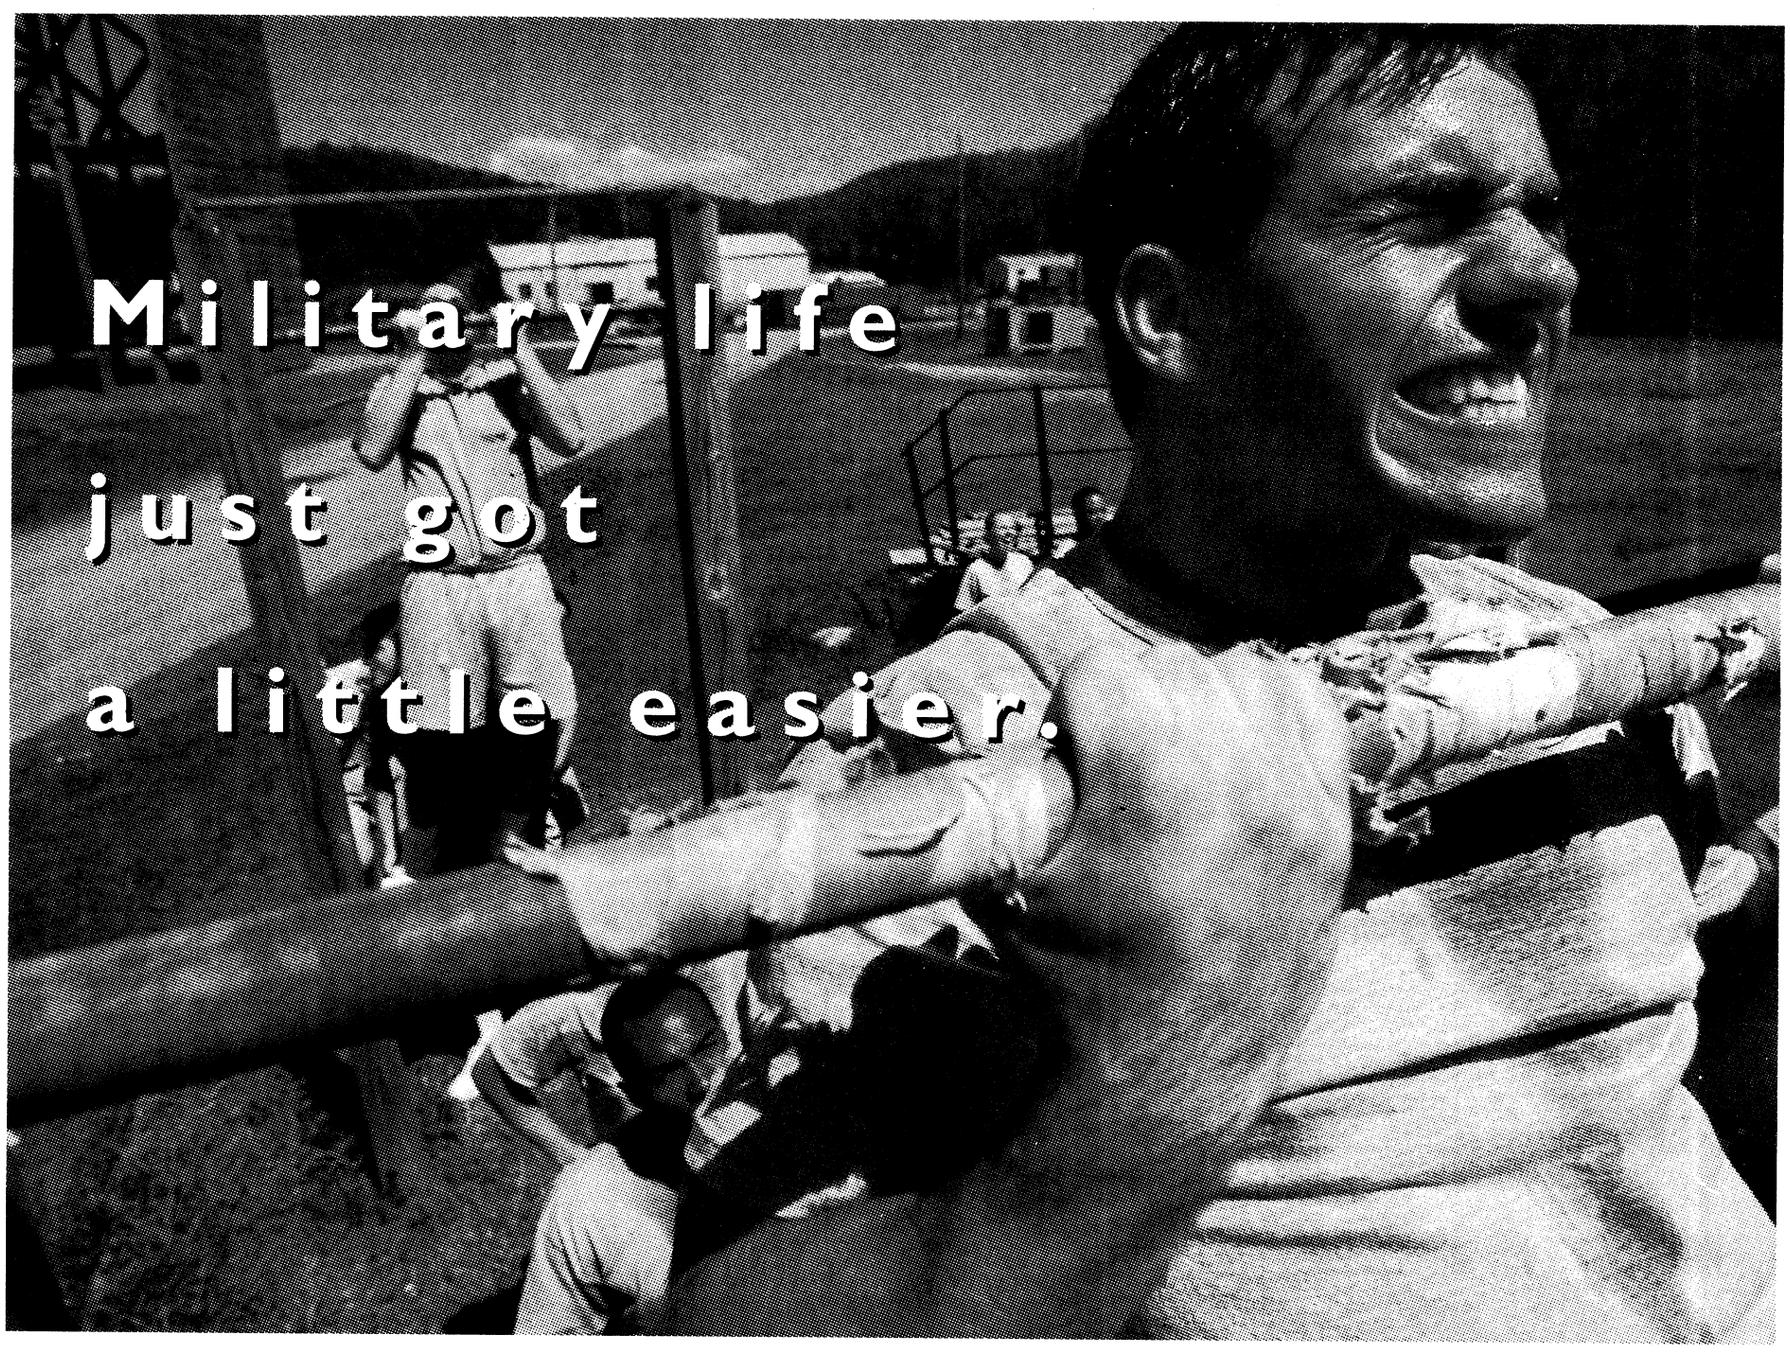
•Must be about combat readiness in a joint contest, which includes persuasive discussions of tactics, strategy, weaponry, combat training or other issues involving two or more services.

•May be heavy in single-service detail, but should have a joint application in terms of force structure, doctrine, operations or organization for combat.

•May address hardware and procedural interoperability within the context of combat readiness.

•Must be original, unpublished work and cannot exceed 3,000 words. The author's name should not appear on the essay. Entrants should assign their essays a motto and a title, both of which should appear on a title page along with an exact word count.

•The motto should also appear by itself on the outside of an accompanying sealed envelope containing a sheet of paper with the author's name, address, telephone and Social Security number, short biography, the essay title and the motto. The envelope is opened only after the essays are judged.



Two typewritten, double-spaced copies (include on 3.5-inch disk if composed on an IBM-compatible computer or word processor) should be submitted.

Bicycle safety awareness spans generations

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Bicycles can be and are dangerous for the biker as well as pedestrians and two- or four- wheeled vehicle operators.

According to Regis P. Beighley, safety manager, Infantry Branch Safety Office, the numbers support this statement. Since the early 1940's, the bicycle population nationwide has grown from 8 million to a total today of more than 100 million. Nationally, more than 1,100 accidental deaths are attributed to bicycle operation. Forty-two percent of these deaths occur in the age group below 15 years old and 25 percent in the 25 and older category.

"So you see, it is a problem that spans the generations," Beighley said. National Safety Council statistics show more than 41,000 personnel are injured annually in bicycle accidents, with 21,000 alone being in the 5 to 14 age group.

The operation of any vehicle has some intrinsic dangers. The goal is to minimize the hazards through proper maintenence of equipment, proper operation and appropriate education on how to do it safely.

The equipment checklist for safe operation of bicycles include:

•Helmets–wear an approved helmet.

•Pads–wear elbow and knee pads.

•Headlamps–clean and visible during nighttime operations.

•Horn–Operates properly and is loud enough to attract attention.

•Saddle and handlebars–adjusted to the correct height and angle and tightly fastened to prevent inadvertent movement.

•Reflectors–clean and visible from 300 feet away.

•Tires–check tire pressure and tread wear. Check for cuts or gouges. Is the tire valve straight and uncut?

•Wheels–roll free and evenly, without wobble or rubbing on the forks. Are the spoke reflectors in place an while you are there, check for broken or bent spokes.

•Pedals–tight and not excessively worn. Are the reflectors unbroken or damaged links or for too much play.

•Chain–check for broken or damaged links or for too much play.

•Brakes–smooth, effective operation.

As a minimum, the following bicycle rules of the road should be observed.

•Obey post rules concerning bicycles.

•Obey all traffic regulations, signs, signals and markings.

•Ride with traffic, not against it.

•Ride in single file only. Don't ride alongside cars and trucks.

•Ride on the right side of the road, always.

•Watch for road surface hazards.

•Don't carry passengers or oversized packages.

•Use hand signals for turns and stops.

•Have reflective and a bright light at night.

•Above all, keep the bike in good shape –check tires, handlebars, brakes, etc.

Beighly said by using caution, bike accidents can be prevented.

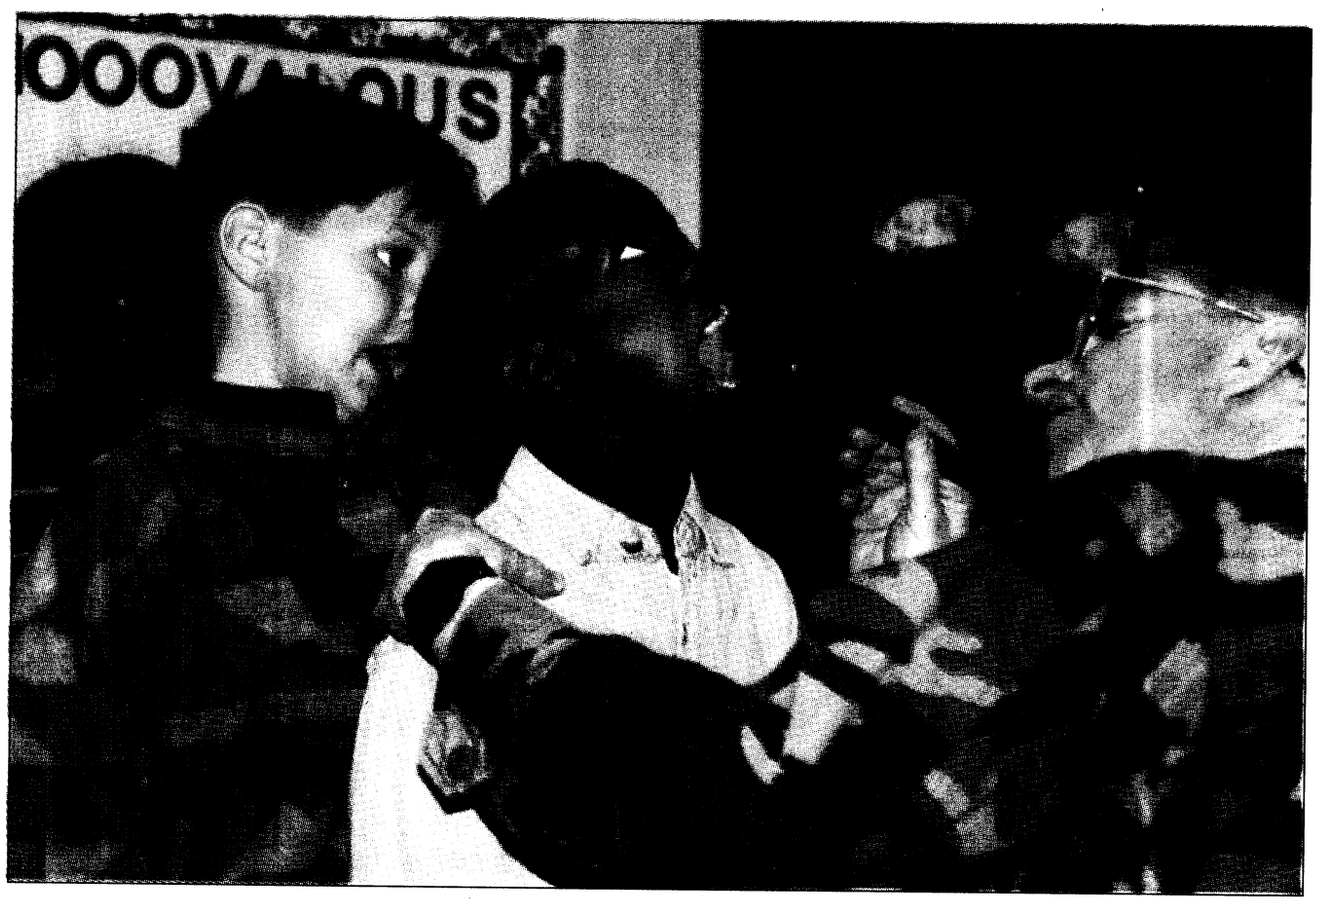
Dentists offer tips to prevent Tooth decay

U.S. Army Dental Activity

With proper care and regular checkups, children's teeth can last a lifetime. February is National Children's Dental Health Month. The U.S. Army Dental Activity has these tips for keeping your child's teeth healthy and decay free.

Tooth decay is caused by bacteria. The bacteria is found in a sticky, colorless film called plaque. For tooth decay to occur, three elements are needed: plaque, food containing sugars and starches and a susceptible tooth.



When foods containing sugars and starches are left in the mouth, plaque bacteria produce acids that can dissolve tooth enamel. The sticky plaque holds these acids onto the teeth, where they attach the enamel for 20 minutes or more. After repeated attacks, the enamel may break down, forming a cavity.

According to Col. Alberto Lugo, Preventive Dentistry officer, to prevent tooth decay, toothbrushing and flossing are needed daily to remove harmful plaque from a child's teeth.

"Children should clean their teeth twice a day with a pea-sized amount of fluoride toothpaste," Lugo said.

He said flossing will remove plaque that hides between the teeth and under the gumline, areas where a toothbrush can't reach.

"Supervise your child while brushing and flossing to insure that a proper job is done," Lugo said.

Nicole Longstreath

Felicia Marvel, daughter of Hattie and Staff Sgt. Clifton Marvel, Henry Caro NCO Academy, and Lundyn Dodge, son of Catherine and Sgt. Jeffery Dodge, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Bradley Instructors Course, 29th Infantry Regiment, anxiously watch as Gregory Spears, son of Barbara and Staff Sgt. Gregory Spears, Company D, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, gets a check-up from Col. Robert Anson, chief of Pediatric Dentistry. Anson was at Loyd Elementary School Feb. 13 as part of the National Children's Dental Month screening of Fort Benning children.

Another preventive measure is dental sealants, which can help prevent or reduce tooth decay, Lugo said. A sealant is a clear or shaded plastic material that is applied to the chewing surfaces of the back teeth (premolars and molars), where decay most often occurs. The sealant acts as a barrier, protecting the decay-prone areas of the back teeth from plaque and acid.

It only takes a few minutes to seal each tooth in the dental office, he said.

When the sealant is applied, finger-like strands penetrate the pits and fissures of the tooth enamel. Although sometimes the sealant cannot be seen with the naked eye, the protective effect of these strands continues.

As a result, it may be several years before another application of sealant is needed. Reapplication of the sealant will continue to protect against decay and may save the time and expense of restoring a decayed tooth.

Sealants are checked during a child's regular dental visits to determine if reapplication is necessary.

For long-lasting, healthy smiles, Lugo and the other dentists at DENTAC recommend a total prevention program including regular dental visits, the use of fluoride toothpaste, daily brushing and flossing and avoiding frequent between-meal snacks. If these measures are followed and sealants are applied to the child's teeth, the risk of decay can be reduced or may even be eliminated.

Community members find help through EIS

By Pfc. Tricia A. Schipmann
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Most people hope to have a perfect child, one free of any physical or developmental delays. When that isn't the case, many families need a support group to turn to.

Families of active-duty Soldiers at Fort Benning have that support available.

Early Intervention Services, (EIS), in cooperation with the Medical Department Activity's Pediatric Department, offers help for children with developmental delays.

The program offers services to children ages birth to 3 years, with delays in motor, language, cognitive, social and behavioral or adaptive skills.

Ute Chavers, a registered nurse with EIS, explained how the program works.

"We are a multi-disciplinary team working not only to help the child, but also help the family help their child," Chavers said.

EIS staff includes speech-language pathologists, early childhood special educators, a registered nurse and a family therapist.

EIS also provides physical and occupational therapy off post

Play groups are conducted in quarterly sessions for children based on different developmental ages and parent support groups are also available.

Pfc. Tricia Schipmann

Ute Chavers, a registered nurse with Early Intervention Services, leads children in one play group to experience different textures.

A family can enroll in EIS through parent, physician, clinic or self-referral.

Basically, anyone who has a concern for the child should notify EIS, Chavers said.

A representative will then call the family and discuss setting up an appointment to meet the family.

At this meeting, the representative will screen the child to determine his or her individual needs.

Then the family may choose to either accept or refuse any or all treatment suggested.

"Early Intervention is excellent," said Kim Hackney, who's daughter, Candace is enrolled in the program. "As a parent, I learn better ways to stimulate my daughter's motor and cognitive skills."

EIS encourages parents to introduce various shapes, sounds, tastes and textures to their children.

During one play group session, the children listened to various rattles, bells and shakers.

They splashed their hands in water, and felt the different textures of smooth beans and grainy sand.

They also tasted sweet oranges and sour lemons. They were allowed quiet time, when they looked at bright pictures in books and listened as their parents read to them.

Garolyn Jones, who participates in this play group with her son Nathaniel, told how they benefit from the program.

"We enjoy coming to the play group," she said. "I'm learning to help him develop social skills and he's just having fun."

If you or someone you know has a child who may benefit from Early Intervention Services, call 545-1161 or 545-3895 and speak to an EIS representative.

Girl Scouts visit Columbus television station

By Yvette Stewart
Bayonet correspondent

Fort Benning's Girl Scout Troop 283 got a hands-on lesson in television broadcasting at WCGT.

Virgil Thompson, station manager at WCGT met the troop outside the office and once inside he spoke in great detail about the station. He explained how the air waves allow the satellites to work. The girls learned how programs air on their television sets at home. Thompson also explained about advertising and advertisers, how important it is to have them and to show how that works, the girls were allowed to tape a commercial.

A short walk to the studio and a brief meeting with Mike Telkey, production manager and Greg Conkel, production director, got them started. The girls were a little nervous at first, but Greg got them to relax, face the camera and say "Hi we're Troop 283 and you're watching TV 16." It took three takes for the right one. The commerical is scheduled to air soon.

After the commercial was taped, the girls were allowed to tape a wild and crazy commercial. With much emphasis on the Spice Girls, these girls have a great deal of "girlpower." One thing they did not know was the cameras were still rolling after the commercial was taped. The girls acted as if they were on a talk show, complete with camera, microphones and lights. They danced, sang and acted like normal 11-year-olds. Greg asked them to come into another room to view the commercial and they were pleased. However, they were amazed to find out that they were taped doing their simulated Oprah and Natasha is the Bomb shows.

Directorate of Public Works

While inprocessing Fort Benning, one of the first stops may be to the Directorate of Public Works' Community Home Finding Relocation and Referral Services Office (CHRRS) in Soldiers Plaza.

The CHRRS staff works with newcomers in finding off post apartments and houses. The CHRRS program is available to the following military and civilian personnel:

•All active duty military personnel and family members.

•Department of Defense employees (APT and NAF) incident to a PCS.

Some of the different services CHRRS provides include providing transportation to visit available rental housing when you have a permanent change of duty station, permissive temporary duty or when changing your off-post residence (apartment or house).

The office also verifies a rental or lease agreement is in conformance to state laws and military regulations. This ensures that military families will be released from a lease upon receipt of orders for a permanent change of duty station.

CHRRS provides listings of rental and homes for sale, information on local schools and community amenities, the rights under the Equal Opportunity if discrimination is experienced in obtaining housing. CHRRS also provides a list of housing that may not be rented by military personnel.

The CHRRS office has expanded their services to include the Home Estimate Program and Permanent Change of Station House Express.

•The Home Estimate Program helps families in developing a monthly budget by estimating affordable housing cost in conjunction with other expenses.

•The Permanent Change of Station (PCS) House Express Program helps families when moving to another installation by providing phone numbers and other pertinent information on:

•Basic Allowance for Housing (BAH);

•Waiting period for on post housing;

•Profile of the typical cost for off post housing at your new duty station;

•Summary of up-front moving costs and waiting periods;

•Lists of authorized realtors and advertisements provided by relocation companies;

•Availability of housing for handicapped; and •Welcome packets to describe new duty station and surrounding community.

The CHRRS Office works with the Columbus Board of Realtors, the Columbus Apartment Association and the Staff Judge Advocate Office. This allows the CHRRS Office to act as a mediator to assist in resolving off-post housing problems in a fair and equitable manner.

For more information on the services and programs provided by the Community Home Finding Relocation nd Referral Services Office, call Anna Wilson at 545-3921.

CHRRS is located in the Soldier Support Center (Building 2621), phone number 545-3921 or 545-6610, fax 545-3393 or on the Fort Benning Home Page.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

ask the judge

By Rick Parker
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My husband and I are considering adopting a child. What are the requirements in Georgia for doing this? Can the Staff Judge Advocate help us with it?

A: The pursuit of an adoption is somewhat complicated and the requirements vary depending on what kind of adoption you are pursuing. There are, however, some very general requirements that apply to all adoptions of minor children in Georgia.

First, you must be at least 25 years of age or you must be married and living with your spouse. Second, you must be at least 10 years older than the child you are seeking to adopt. Third, you must have resided in Georgia for at least six months prior to filing the adoption and last, you must be financially, physically and emotionally capable of having permanent custody of the child.

Assuming you meet those general requirements, we next have to figure out what kind of adoption you are filing. Many adoptions we see in this office are step-parent adoptions — in these cases, you are adopting a child your spouse had by a previous marriage or relationship. In some cases, the husband and wife may be adopting a relative, such as a sibling or cousin. Finally, you may be adopting a non-related child, either by private placement or through an adoption agency.

Each type of adoption has different requirements, but all require the biological or legal parents of the child have either consented to the adoption, surrendered their rights to the child or have had their parental rights terminated without their consent.

A step-parent adoption is possibly the easiest type of adoption proceeding. The spouse who is the parent of the child to be adopted must consent in writing and then it is a matter of either obtaining a surrender from the other parent or terminating the other parent's rights. Termination is usually based on the failure of the other parent to provide support or to have contact with the child for a substantial period of time. The method of terminating the rights of the other parent depends on whether or not he or she is a "legal" parent — that is, has a legally-established parental relationship with the child.

With other types of adoption, surrender or termination of the rights of both parents of the child is required. As in step-parent adoptions, termination is based on nonsupport or failure to contact and the method depends on legal status of the father and mother of the child. An additional requirement in these other types of adoption is that a criminal background check of the prospective adoptive parents be accomplished and a home-study or investigation be conducted.

In all adoptions, the case cannot be finalized any earlier than 60 days from the date of filing. The final hearing is held before a judge of the Superior Court, is conducted in chambers (that is, the judge's office) and is not open to the public. Assuming the judge grants the adoption, information concerning the adoption is then forwarded to the state where the child was born so the birth certificate can be amended to show the adoptive parents and the child's new name.

When an adoption depends upon a child's parent surrendering his or her rights, the surrender must be voluntary and it cannot be obtained through "inducements." Inducements are promises of usually money or other financial assistance in return for a surrender of rights to a child. The only exception in Georgia is an offer to pay for or to reimburse for medical expenses directly related to the mother's pregnancy and hospitalization for the birth of the child and for medical care for the child once born. Anything else is tantamount to the sale and purchase of a child and is considered a felony offense punishable by a fine of up to $10,000 and imprisonment for up to 10 years.

The Legal Assistance Office does offer in-court representation in step-parent adoptions. Lawyers from the office represent the ranks of E-4 and below without regard to financial ability to pay for a civilian lawyer. E-5s and higher must demonstrate a financial hardship. The only financial obligation is to pay the court costs associated with the proceeding. These costs range from $64 to $150. Availability of this service can also depend on other missions in which the division may be engaged at the time. For more information about adoption, call the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment with one of the attorneys at 545-3281.

Ash Wednesday

Chaplain learns of other significant religious holidays

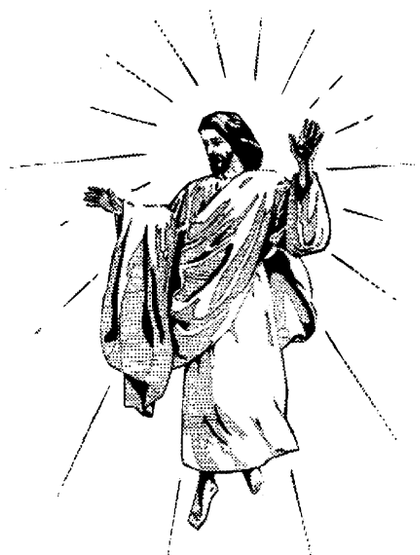
By Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Center

Have you ever suffered from "foot-in-the mouth" disease? I have but I learned a very valuable lesson about how different groups practice their faith.

I was new to the Army Chaplaincy and had much to learn — especially when it came to celebrating the different seasons of the church year.

It was a Wednesday in early March 1986 and I had been an Army chaplain for just a few months. I was sitting in my office when the Catholic chaplain came in to pay me a visit.

Juan walked into my office and his forehead was covered in black soot and I asked him, "Juan, what's all that black stuff on your forehead?"



I thought Juan was going to laugh himself into convulsions and I had no earthly idea what was so funny. After a few moments Juan composed himself and went on to explain that it was Ash Wednesday.

I gave him this blank stare as if I had no idea what he was talking about and in fact I had no idea. For you see, I come from a denominational background that does not celebrate religious holidays other than Christmas, Good Friday and Easter.

For the next two hours Juan lectured me on the finer points of the church year.

I soon learned that there are Principal Festivals, Sundays and Days of Special Devotion, Lesser Festivals and Commemorations. Ash Wednesday falls under the classification of Sundays and Days of Special Devotion.

Well, I must admit, especially given the fact that I was a chaplain, that I felt pretty ignorant about all of this. Christmas and Easter were easy because they are the religious holidays I was used to celebrating.

So then, what is the significance of Ash Wednesday and the smearing of ashes on one's forehead?

From the early days of the church, Easter has been preceded by a period of preparation called Lent, a 40-day period that commemorates the temptation of Christ by Satan.

Ash Wednesday is the first day of Lent. Lent is a time for Christians to reflect upon the death and resurrection of Jesus.

Lent, therefore, is a time to prepare for the single most important event in all of history, the resurrection of Jesus.

Many Christian faith groups, namely Roman Catholics, Episcopalians and Lutherans spread ashes of the previous years palm leaves in token of penitence and human mortality because all things must eventually return to ashes.

Those two hours spent with Juan proved to be a valuable lesson and in the words of Paul Harvey, "Now I know the rest of the story."

So, next Wednesday if you see someone with black soot on his forehead you will not have to ask, "What is that stuff on your forehead?" Now you know the rest of the story.

chapel notes

Sunday School meets at White Elementary — Sunday School meets every Sunday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. at Edward A. White School. There are classes for all ages. Child care is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel for children two years and younger, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School.

Bus transportation is available if needed, by calling 545-4715.

Sunday services need musicians — The custodian of the Consolidated Chaplain's Fund is accepting applications for musicians for Sunday morning chapel services.

For more information, call Staff Sgt. Tamitha Wahlstrom at 545-1934.

PARTY meetings set — The children's group called "Personal Attitudes Related To You" meets from 10 a.m. to noon the first and third Saturday of each month in the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

Activities for this group include Bible study, music, recreation and refreshments. All students ages five years through 14 are eligible and invited to attend.

Women's Bible study meets Thursdays — The Protestant Women of the Chapel (PWOC) is a nondenominational group of military and civilian wives who meet 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. each Thursday for Bible study, prayer support, singing and fellowship. The group meets in Building 2521, the Religious Education Center, on Indianhead Road (near the Airborne School) and provide child care at no cost in Building 2517.

The new Winter-Spring Bible studies will go through May. The studies are:

The Joy of Hospitality by Dee Brestin — this book will show ways to help you make your home a haven from the storm for family and friends; Intimacy with God by Cynthia Heald — this book will help you pursue a deeper experience with God as you explore his heart through the Psalms; A Mother's Heart, by Jean Fleming — this book provides encouragement for mothers and reveals what is your role and God's role in raising your children and provides ways to effectively pray for your children; and The Jesus I Never Knew, by Philip Yancey — this book tells the story of Jesus according to the word, not according to the world.

For more information, call Cackie Howe at 685-2217 or Robin Kennedy at 569-0890.

Youth basketball players continue winning play

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

The youth basketball stars of Fort Benning resumed the competition this week at the Youth Services Gym.

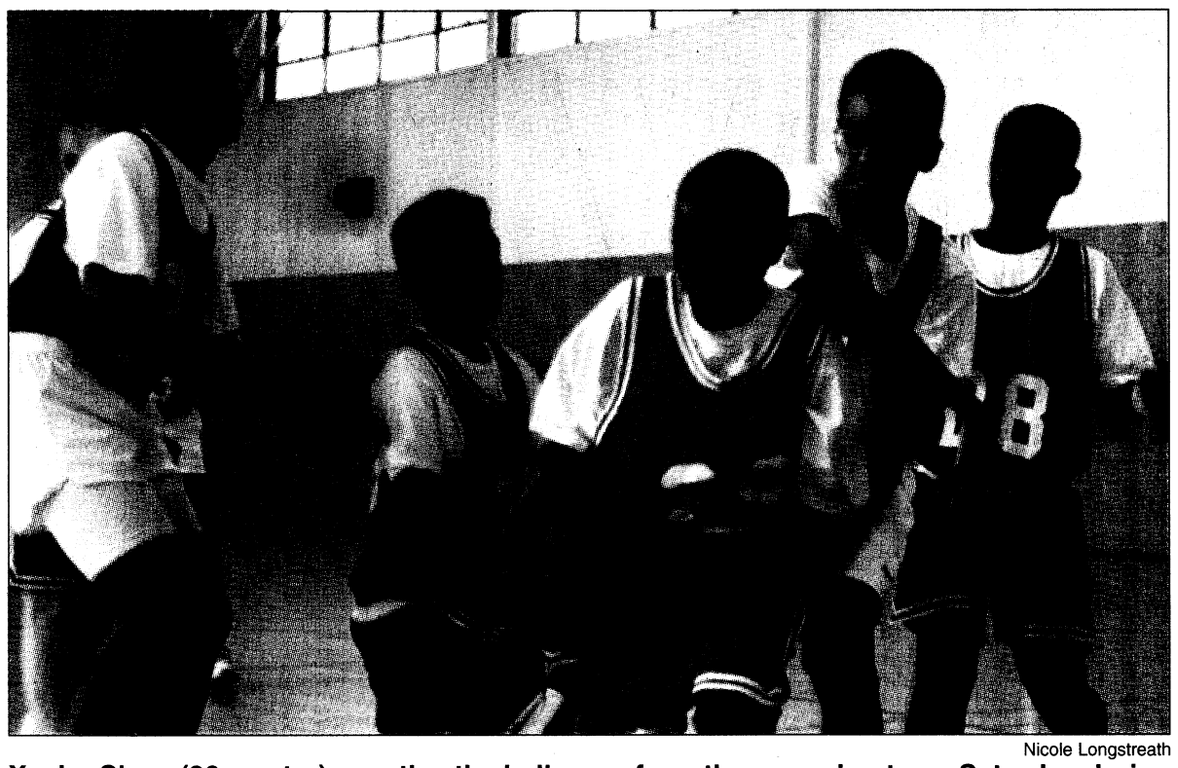
Coaches clamored and fans (parents) cheered the youngsters up and down the court.

In the 13- to 15-year-old division, the Tarheels sprinted past the Relentless 45-44. Ernie Tyler had 13 for the Relentless while Cornelius Lights scored 18 for the Tarheels.

In the 10- to 12-year-old division, the Knicks blazed past the Heat 29-23. Dominic Whitley unloaded 20 points while Oswaldo Carela scored 8.

The Spurs shut out the '76ers 26-17. Marcus Patterson scored 7 points against Samuel Miller's 15.

Barely squeezing past the Raptors, the Warriors won 32-31 with Jammal Shaw putting 12 points for the Raptors past Warrior Greg Raymond's 10.



In the youngest division, 6- to 7-year-olds, the Hawks breezed past the Spurs 22-2. The top scorer, Rickey Jones carried the Hawks with 8 points over the Spurs whose only points by Ashley Johnson.

The Fort Benning Hawks won 2-0 over the Wild Cats when they forfeited.

Meanwhile, the Warriors swished past the Swoop 55-47. Dorian McConnell had 13 points for the Swoop while Daniel Demsey scored 19 for the Warriors.

In the 8- to 9-year-old group, the Bulldogs were stomped by the Celtics 13-8. Ross Brown and Joshua Bailey carried the Bulldogs with 4 points, as did Steve Antonia and Tanisha McFadden for the Celtics.

The Sonics and the Pacers tied at 18 with Eddie Jones scoring 10 points over the Pacers' Lazerrius Patterson's 8 points.

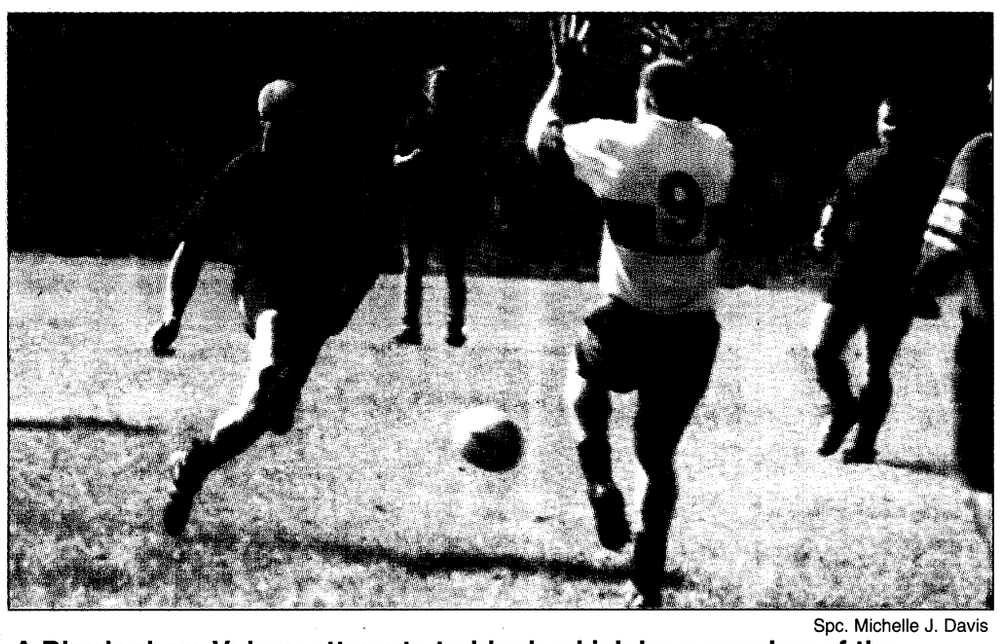
Xavier Shaw (36, center) wrestles the ball away from the opposing team Saturday during a 10 - to 12-year-old division Youth Service's' basketball game.



The Magics sparkled past the Spurs in a close game. They won 7-6 with the Magics' Javierre Marshell scoring 3 points and Marcus Lewis of the Spurs scoring the game high of 4.

The Bulls trampled the '76ers 19-17. Anthony Tatum of the Bulls knocked out 10 points over Bishop Steward's 9 points for the '76ers.

In the 10- to 12-year-old division, the Knicks blazed past the Heat 29-23. Dominic Whitley for the Knicks unloaded 20 points while Oswaldo Carela scored 8 for the Heat.

In the final game the Raptors barely squeezed past the Warriors winning 32-31 with Raptors' Jammal Shaw putting up 12 points against Warrior Greg Raymond's 10.

Youth services basketball continues tonight with games beginning at 5:30 p.m. and Saturday at 9 a.m. For more information, call youth services at 545-3450.

The Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club Cruise-A-Matics lifted their record to 3-0 with Saturday's 41-15 win over the Birmingham Vulcans at the Cruiser Dome rugby grounds in Columbus.

The Cruise-A-Matics dominated the first half with powerful forward play and quickly jumped out to a hefty 24-3 lead.

Birmingham rallied back in the second half narrowing the margin to nine points before Columbus-Fort Benning erupted for two converted tries to close out the match.

This was the team's second home game. Games are normally held Saturdays at the Cruise-A-Matics' rugby grounds. The rugby grounds are located in Columbus at the corner of Blanchard Industrial Park Drive and 22nd Avenue, one block from Victory Drive behind the Dolly Madison bakery.

The Cruise-A-Matics travel to Mobile, Ala. Saturday to participate in a tournament.

Army athlete fulfills dream of Olympics

By Harry F. Thompson
Pacific Stars & Stripes

NOZAWA ONSEN, Japan — After barely missing a spot on the 1994 Olympic team, Kristina Viljanen-Sabasteanski is trying to make up for lost time.

The 28-year-old Army athlete gave the U.S. biathlon team its best finish of these Olympic Winter Games, placing 33rd in the women's 7.5-kilometer sprint Sunday.

Air Force World Class Athlete Program member Deborah Nordyke finished 48th and Stacey Wooley of Newbury, N.H., was 58th.

Once again, Sabasteanski's shooting saved her. She missed only one target on the shooting range. And while her skiing is improving, it lags far behind Olympic champion Galina Koukleva of Russia.

"I was really happy with my shooting. I missed my first shot but settled down. I tried to pace myself, especially in the standing (portion)," Sabasteanski said, who was 2 minutes, 4.2 seconds off Koukleva's pace.

"I wasn't as happy with my skiing. It wasn't as snappy as it's been in the past. I gave it everything I had, but my body didn't want to do it."

Nerves were not an issue for Nordyke, who was competing in her first Olympic race. The 35-year-old Anchorage, Alaska, native skied a solid race but was shaky on the shooting range.

"I didn't want to go in thinking it was a different race. If you try too hard you won't have a good performance. So I approached it as another race and just another workout," said Nordyke, a veteran of the World Cup circuit.

Nordyke got off to a strong start and was fifth after the prone shooting stage. But after she missed two targets in the standing portion, she fell way off the pace.

Courtesy Photo

Kristina Viljanen-Sabasteanski competes in one of the events.

Shooting accuracy is critical in the sprint, which has only two shooting stops. For each miss, the competitor must ski a 150-meter penalty loop, which adds about 30 seconds to their times.

"You always want to take back any misses. If I hit the shots in my standing I would've had a pretty good result," Nordyke said, who was 38 seconds behind her teammate.

Sunday's race was another stepping stone in Sabasteanski's career, which took off when she joined the Army.

She first tried biathlon during her career as a cross-country skier for Castleton State College in Vermont, where she graduated in 1991 with a degree in exercise science.

After barely missing a spot on the 1994 Olympic team, Sabasteanski joined the Vermont National Guard. Her results have improved steadily over the years.

"We're really happy with Kristina's race. She had only one penalty and finished 33rd, which is a decent finish," said team leader Tim Derrick.

"It's not a great race, but we're happy with it."

Starting last in the 64-woman field, Sabasteanski was the final racer to cross the finish line, drawing a tsunami of applause from the 20,000 Japanese on hand for the race.

With five women on the team, one will have to sit out Friday's race.

"I'm hoping I clinched it," Sabasteanski said of her performance Sunday. "I feel like I have a better race left in me."

Golf course conducts Sweetheart Couples tournament

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

The Follow Me Golf Course held a Sweetheart Couples Tournament Saturday.

11 teams of four players took to the course Valentines' Day to woo their dates with hopes of a first place trophy.

First place went to the team consisting of Arch Arnold, Curdy Arnold, Fred Wintrick and Kimberly Kolb with an overall score of 67.

Second place was awarded to Ron Greene, Nina Greene, Jim Schmidli, and Tanna Schmidli with a total of 67.

Al Dunn, Mozelle Dunn, Dan Mims and Nancy Mims placed third with a total of 68.

Fourth place was presented to Bill Stewart, Sharon Stewart, John Stanley and Ann Stanley for a score of 69.

A special contest was held to see who could get closest to Hole 13. Winners were Fred Wintrich and Tanna Schmidli.

The winners along with the special contest winners received gift certificates to the Follow Me Golf Course Pro Shop.

After the tournament, all the participants received a sit-down dinner complete with Valentines' Day candy and dessert.

The Follow Me Golf Course schedules a couples tournament once every two months, according to Golf Course officials.

Boaters beware

Temperature change brings more than warm weather

By J. R. Addington
U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary

commentary

As Spring's weather gets warmer more and more boaters are on local rivers and lakes. Warm spring weather means better fishing conditions, but it also means rapid changing weather conditions, such as temperature changes, showers and thunder storms. Don't ever forget it is during these conditions a killer lurks around our waters and shores — I don't mean sharks or snakes, one more dangerous than those — hypothermia!

Boaters and fishermen should always be on the lookout for and be aware of hypothermia. If your boat capsizes or someone falls over board, getting back on to your boat, being picked up by another boat or getting to shore does not always make you safe. When you are wet for whatever reason, a boating accident or sudden rain shower you are in danger of hypothermia until you get dry and warm.

Being in the water or getting wet from rain fall for even a very short time, even in water more than 50 degrees can drop the body temperature. Just wearing wet clothing from falling overboard or getting caught in the rain can lower the body temperature to dangerous levels. While boating don't forget that boat speed effects the "wind chill factor" by lowering the air temperature you feel. You can feel the change the warm or cool air gets colder as we increase speed. If wet, try to stay out of the wind flow.

To recognize hypothermia, you must know a few basic facts about how the human body works. Normal internal body temperature is 98.6 degrees fahrenheit. The body automatically regulates it's self to remain very close to this temperature. A minor deviation is good but, a major change — well that's another story. For example, a cold is often accompanied by a fever, it does not take much of a temperature increase before the body is severely incapacitated. Cold air may also adversely affect the body. Abnormal loss of internal body temperature from the cold is called hypothermia, a word which means literally "under heated." Hypothermia is basically freezing to death from the inside (internal body). Again even a minor loss of internal body temperature may cause severe incapacitation.

You can estimate the body temperature of a hypothermia victim by noting the present of the following symptoms.

Body temperatures above 95 degrees fahrenheit. The victim is conscious, alert, and may have vigorous shivering.

90 - 95 degrees fahrenheit —The victim is conscious, but has a mild to moderate clouding of mental facilities, impaired speech, poor coordination, numbness, and disorientation. Shivering is present, but diminished.

85 - 90 degrees fahrenheit — The victim has sever clouding of consciousness, or may be unconscious. Bluishness of the skin, collapse of the veins in the skin, enlargement of the pupils and muscle stiffness will take place.

Below 85 degrees fahrenheit — The victim is unconscious and breathing rate is diminished. Heart becomes irregular and the pulse barely detectable.

Besides the presence of symptoms which help you estimate body temperature, there are other observable signs that indicate a person is suffering from hypothermia. In general appearance, the victim looks pale. If you touch the victim's skin you would find it very cold. The victim's pupils will be dilated and will not adjust properly when exposed to light. Other symptoms you may observe are poor coordination, slurred speech, incoherent thinking, unconsciousness, muscle stiffness, weak pulse, very slow breathing, and an irregular heart beat. Obviously, you are not expected to be a medical specialist. You may not be able to tell when a person is suffering from hypothermia. But if any doubt exists, treat the person as a victim.

Once an individual has been recovered from cold water or extended exposure to serve wind chill, place the person in a sheltered warm environment and look for signs of hypothermia. To be safe, start treating the victim for hypothermia. The same applies for you or any other person with you who may have gotten wet or cold. Never postpone treatment, even if you or the other person is no longer exposed to cold air or water, a hypothermia victim's condition will continue to deteriorate, perhaps to the point of no return. Handle the victim gently, excessive movement may cause heart beat irregularities which can be fatal. Keep the patient calm and quiet. Do not allow the person to perform any physical activity other than what is absolutely necessary. Exertion can use up large amounts of body heat which would other wise be available for rising internal body temperature. If possible, position an unconscious or semiconscious victim face up with head slightly lower than the rest of the body.

The treatment of hypothermia will of course depend on both the condition of the victim and facilities available. If dry clothing or blankets are available get the victim into them and into a warm environment. If these are not available do not remove wet clothing. In all cases contact should be made for medical evacuation. Request detailed information on care and handling of the victim. While waiting for medical instruction or evacuation administer first aid. Be prepared to give CPR (if qualified) if necessary, treat for shock, use whatever is available to rewarm the victim but do not aggressively rewarm an unconscious victim, gentle rewarming techniques should be used. Your main goal in providing first aid is to prevent the victim from getting colder.

Hypothermia is a true medical emergency, therefore evacuation to a medical facility should be accomplished as soon as possible.

So if you are out boating keep your eyes and mind open to the possibility of hypothermia and learn what conditions can cause hypothermia and what the symptoms and treatment are. Above all boat safely and be prepared for an emergency.

Troops deploy to Kuwait

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Soldiers with the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), prepare to load the buses in front of the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

After several days of waiting, Soldiers said goodbye to their families and left Fort Benning Saturday morning for Fort Stewart to link up with 3rd Infantry Division Soldiers en route to Kuwait.

The Soldiers are part of the U S. military build up in the region in response to the conflict with Iraq not allowing U.N. weapons inspectors access to sites suspected of housing chemical and biological weapons.

Soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mechanized) and family members said farewell at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

"The waiting has been driving me nuts," said Christa Valencia who was holding her 14-month-old son Kyle. "We've been waiting for several days and finally you just want to say, 'Go already!'" Valencia's husband, Pfc. Fernando Valencia is with Company A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

Tookie and Doil Harris had been waiting since Wednesday. They drove from Houston, Texas, to say goodbye to their son, Spc. David Hobbs and to take their daughter-in-law Sylvia back to Houston.

"He's been in the Army for two years and it's been a good experience for him," Tookie said as she watched her son hug his junior high school sweetheart goodbye.

"I'm glad he joined the Army. At first I was shocked that he enlisted — in fact, I didn't believe him until he called from Fort Knox during basic training. But I think the military is a good experience for every young man.

"I think they'll be safe in Kuwait," she said. "You just have to have faith in God."

For many of the Soldiers, this is not the first trip to the deserts of Southwest Asia.

Staff Sgt. Dwayne Burke who went to Kuwait for Operation Vigilant Sentinel, sat with his family giving last minute instructions to his 3-year-old son about listening to his mother.

"I'm ready, but I hope a long-term solution is found," he said.

Sgt. Dustin McIntosh with Company A, said, "This is the second time around for me. I hope we do something this time. But either way, it is a great opportunity to train the new privates — a great tank opportunity."

Col. Jack Gardner, 3rd Bde. commander told the Soldiers and family members the brigade had a wealth of talent, that the Soldiers do a "super job in everything they do and the two great tank companies shoot as well as anybody in the Army."

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst said, "I pray for diplomacy to work but if diplomacy fails, the Soldiers will be the line in the sand."

As the Infantry Band played the theme song from Rocky, the Soldiers loaded the buses and left for Fort Stewart enroute to Kuwait to take part in Operation Desert Thunder.

Secretary of Army visits post

Walker talks with civilians while at CONUS Replacement Center

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

As more than 200 Fort Benning Soldiers began their journey to Kuwait Saturday, Secretary of the Army Robert Walker visited the post for the second time this year.

Arriving just hours after the 3rd Brigade Soldiers boarded buses for Fort Stewart to join more deploying troops, Walker toured the CONUS Replacement Center, which processes Soldiers and civilians for overseas deployments to such places as Bosnia and Kuwait.

During his hour-long stay, Walker was briefed on the operations of the Harmony Church facility and spoke to a classroom of contracted civilian workers preparing to deploy to Kuwait.

"I would like to thank you for everything you are doing for this mission," Walker said to the group, who will off-load equipment and prepare it before additional Soldiers arrive in Kuwait.

"Your job is very important because having that equipment ready when the Soldiers get off the airplane is a true deterrent," Walker added. "It helps prevent war, it's just that simple."

Although Walker said it was too early to say if additional Fort Benning Soldiers will be deployed to Kuwait, he said more will be decided within the next couple of days depending on further actions by Saddam Hussein.

"It's always hard to see troops off to what could be a dangerous situation, but I'm so proud of them because they are the best troops we've ever had," Walker said.

Fort Benning was Walker's second stop of the day. After flying into Lawson Army Airfield from Fort Bliss, Texas, Walker was on his way to Fort Stewart, Ga., where troops were scheduled to leave for Kuwait.

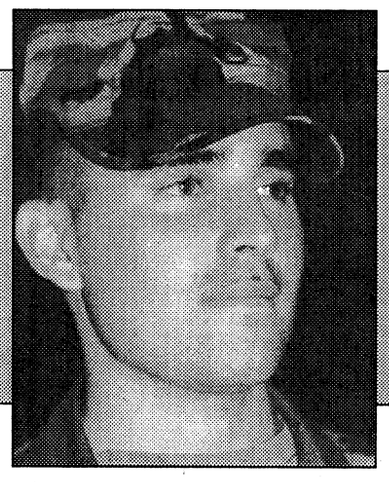
AER campaign kicks off Monday

Army Emergency Relief

The 1998 Army Emergency Relief (AER) fund campaign kick-off will take place Monday in Infantry Hall, Classroom 6.

Col. Ron Greene, U.S. Army Infantry Center garrison commander, will give the opening remarks beginning at 10:30 a.m.

Unit, directorate and separate office designated project persons are required to attend.



Commanders, directors, command sergeant majors and first sergeants are invited.

Following the completion of opening remarks, the installation AER officer will conduct a workshop and distribute campaign material to the project persons.

Mom delivers life-long lessons

By Capt. April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Capt. April N. Olsen aspires to follow in her mother's footsteps as hero.

My mother is my hero. She faced many challenges and difficulties while raising my sister and me but never gave up. I admire her tenacity. She handled many ugly situations with honesty and pride in herself and I respect her for it. She is the strongest person I know.

commentary

I've loved her all my life, but was unable to say exactly why until the birth of my own son last year. When he was born, I realized the tremendous duty and responsibility that comes with a baby. I realized then how much my mom did for me.

I think the best repayment would be to teach my son some of the lessons she taught me.

She raised me to be independent. Through her I realized I must be capable of taking care of myself. Although I can't imagine life without my husband, I know if something terrible happened, I could manage on my own. My mother gave me the courage in myself and knowledge that I can face hard times.

She taught me the most important thing about a person is his or her character, not physical attributes or origin. For this I am grateful because it opened me up to a world full of people to learn from.

My mother instilled in me pride for my body. Knowing I am worth more to myself than anyone else has given me the willpower to forego dangerous activities like promiscuous sex and drug use that degrades and humiliates.

By her example, I learned to be compassionate. No matter how rough I think I have it sometimes, I know there is always someone else who needs my prayers and aid. I consider it a gift to be able to help someone less fortunate.

One of the more important lessons my mom taught me was by accident. I don't think she was trying to teach me that generosity is important when she talked me into donating my favorite toys to poor and needy kids. I think she was just house cleaning. But when I gave up my Winnie-the-Pooh, Raggedy Ann pillow and my little yellow stuffed rabbit, I realized happiness is not in objects but in the joy they bring others.

Don't think I got carried away with generosity, though. I refused to give up Tubby, my next teddy bear. He's on the top shelf of my closet and he's not going anywhere.

By far, the most important thing my mom taught me is to have faith in God. When all else fails and things seem to be at their worst, a little bit of faith goes a long way. It is through mom that I developed my own religious identity and began my relationship with God. This provides the basis for all other aspects of my life.

I've always put my mom on a pedestal because of the way she lives her life. Now, I call her my hero because I see how important and hard it really is to bring up a child. She gave me life and therefore made possible my son. I thank her for raising me to be a good person capable of being a good mom to him.

Maybe someday he'll think of me as a hero.

Former Army leader questions Soldiers' commitment

By Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

In his book "For Cause & Comrades, Why Men Fought in the Civil War," historian James McPherson relates a rather troubling, yet thought-provoking comment from then-Army Chief of Staff Gen. John Wickham.

commentary

During a visit to the Antietam Civil War battlefield in the 1980s, Wickham was struck by what he saw as the intense sense of duty and purpose of Civil War Soldiers. Looking out on an area called "Bloody Lane," where several assaults by Union Soldiers had resulted in tremendous casualties before they finally broke through, Wickham said: "You couldn't get American Soldiers today to make an attack like that."

The general's seemingly simple and straightforward observation jumped off the page and struck me as immensely profound. For it speaks volumes about who we are, as individuals, as a society and as a nation.

One could easily dismiss the statement by arguing Soldiers today wouldn't make such sacrifices today because modern weapons and tactics make them unnecessary. One could similarly argue Civil War Soldiers faced unique circumstances.

First, the issues they confronted had deep emotional roots, involving the survival or destruction of entrenched economic, social and political patterns and institutions. Secondly, the conflict was on our own soil.

For many Civil War Soldiers it was in their own backyard. Thus, it could be said Soldiers were driven to take greater risks because the stakes were so high. The Civil War was indeed personal.

Although valid, these arguments are but a superficial view of Wickham's statement. He was not comparing Civil War tactics to modern warfare. He wasn't even talking about passions of the Civil War. He was talking about commitment, sacrifice, and the ability to understand when we are involved in events transcending our own lives and personal interests.

Given our society's penchant for instant gratification and intolerance to personal inconvenience, the former general's remarks seem to ring true. With worldwide communication, endless entertainment and limitless recreational possibilities at our fingertips, commitment and sacrifice, are increasingly foreign to our lives. We don't even want to know what's happening around the corner, never mind in our individual states, the nation or the world. As our access to the world has expanded, we have retreated, seeking insulation and consolation from all the people, events and issues which demand our time, energy and involvement.

Yet the ability to look beyond our own lives and personal interests, to become involved and make sacrifices, are characteristics we can ill afford to lose. For they affect every aspect of our lives and, in doing so, affect the state of our families, our communities, the nation as a whole and the world in general.

These are the characteristics that make parents role models and mentors to their children. They are the characteristics that make athletes Olympic champions. And they are the characteristics that make Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines heroes.

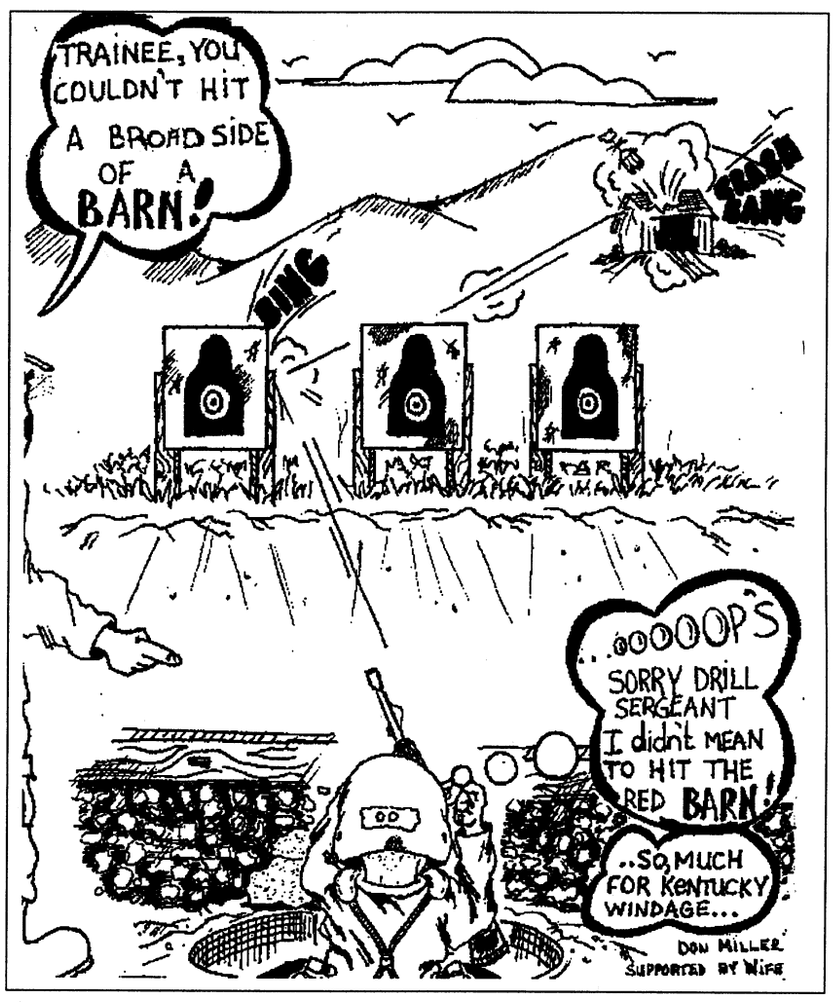
They turn dreams into imagination, innovation and invention. They turn fear into courage and action. And they transform self-involvement into selfless service.

It is not uncommon for leaders nearing retirement to reflect on our history, as well as their personal experiences and to sentimentally pronounce that we are less than they were. And perhaps that's what the general was doing when he made his comment at Antietam.

Then again, perhaps he was issuing us a challenge.

Regardless, it deserves our thought.

Post commander designates Women's History Month



In recognition of the numerous contributions of women to every aspect of our nation, the month of March is designated as "Women's History Month."

This year's theme is "Living the Legacy of Women's Rights." I urge everyone to reflect upon the women who have struggled for equal rights for all, thus enabling us to live in harmony, to reap the benefits and to pass on this great legacy from generation to generation. Increasing the awareness of Women's History will promote harmony and understanding that we are "one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

I encourage all Soldiers, family members and civilian employees on Fort Benning and the surrounding community to participate in and enjoy the many activities scheduled during this observance.

Retired colonel participates in Arbor Day

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

When someone is recognized as a hero, there is always someone waiting to name something in their honor.

Such is the case with retired colonel and Medal of Honor recipient Robert Nett.

Fort Benning honored him with a building at the Officer's Candidate School named Nett Hall.

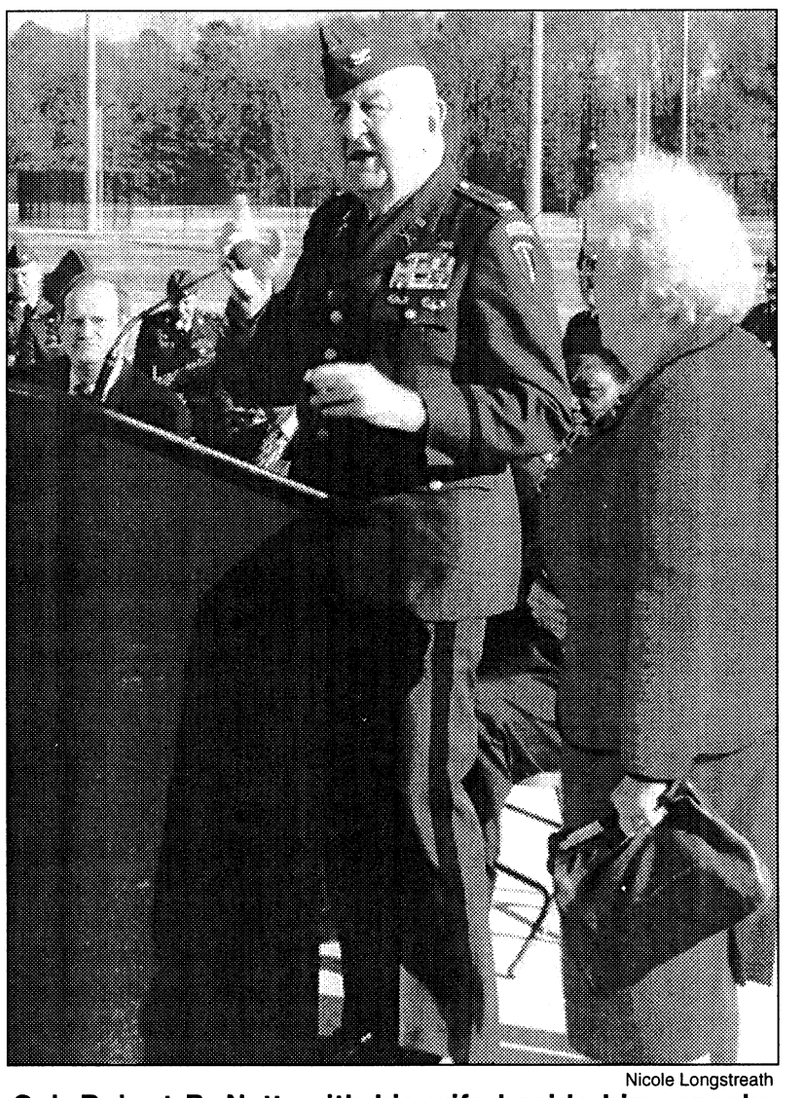
The State of Georgia honored him by naming a portion of Highway 27 Col. Robert B. Nett Medal of Honor Highway.

"I was most grateful because the strip of highway that was named in my honor runs from Victory Drive out to the areas that I trained in," retired Col. Robert B. Nett said.

Georgia Power recognized him Feb. 20, during the Arbor Day ceremony honoring Medal of Honor recipients at Rigdon Park, Columbus.

"I believe that the word, 'hero' means an individual accomplished a given task in such a manner that all of his or her training was applied in an intelligent way so the mission was accomplished with a minimum of casualties," Nett said as he described a word he has been labeled by others.

Born and raised in New Haven, Conn., Nett lost his father at the early age of 10.



A friend of the family, who was also a World War I veteran, suggested Nett enlist in the Army.

Being the child of a poor family, with no hope for college, Nett enlisted at the age of 17 with a doctored birth certificate.

While training in Fort Benning, Nett attended Officer Candidate School and the Advanced Infantry Course.

With Hitler's troops emerging on western Europe, a national emergency was declared and Nett's division was ordered to active duty Feb. 2, 1941.

After seeing duty in various Pacific islands as a company commander, Nett, a lieutenant, was assigned to the island of Leyte in the Philippines.

Nicole Longstreath

Col. Robert B. Nett, with his wife beside him, speaks during the Arbor Day "Celebrate America's Heroes" ceremony Feb. 20 at Rigdon Park, Columbus.

"The U.S. forces killed 20,000 enemy Soldiers and yet the enemy had reinforced by 25,000," Nett said. "It was concluded that the major port of Leyte (named Ormoc) was used to bring in reinforcement and supplies. That had to be captured."

After successfully taking the city of Ormoc, Nett was wounded critically in the neck, the shoulder and later, a rib was blown out by enemy fire.

With a collapsed lung, Nett arranged for the the transfer of command. Nett received the Medal of Honor Dec. 14, 1944 for these actions.

"I share my Medal of Honor with all of the great Soldiers in my company," Nett said. "It was the result of them training so hard and fighting so thoroughly as they were trained that we were able to do this."

After completing 33 years in the service, Nett retired from the Army in August, 1973.

With the University of Maryland's overseas program, Nett was able to earn college credit while still in the service and after retirement, eventually earned a teaching certificate in social sciences and industrial arts.

After teaching at Spencer High School, Faith Middle School and winning the Teacher of the Year award in 1985, Nett retired from teaching in 1987.

As with all stories about heroes, there is always a heroine involved. The hero and the heroine fall in love and live happily ever after.

During corrective surgery in the Philippines, Nett fell in love with his nurse who became his wife a year later and have been married for 54 years.

"She and a sergeant were running 12-hour shifts, all front line casualties. I saw her in action and I fell in love with her. To me, she is the real hero."

Frances Nett raised their two children as their both mother and father, as described by Nett, "and proved to be a wonderful Army wife as well as an Army nurse. Therefore, I share my successes with her."

Holiday ceremony honors heroes

Arbor Day celebration salutes Medal of Honor receipients for actions, service to America

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

Three Medal of Honor recipients were recognized at the Arbor Day celebration on Feb. 20 at Rigdon Park, Columbus. The theme for the ceremony was, "Celebrating American Heroes."

The individuals honored were retired Maj. Freeman V. Horner, retired Col. Robert B. Nett and Spec. Donald R. Johnston.

After an invocation by Chaplain (Capt.) James W. Blount, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Mayor Bobby Peters and Mayor Pro-temp A.J. McClung were presented with a Tree City USA flag by Steve Smith of the Georgia Forestry Commission.

Following the Infantry Band's performance of The Army Song, the citations for the Medal of Honor recipients were read by Mike Hazelton of Georgia Power Company before a group of 60 listeners.

The first to be honored was Horner. Then a staff sergeant, Horner was awarded the Medal of Honor for capturing or killing seven enemy soldiers and clearing the path for his company's successful completion of a mission.

Nett, the next recipient to be honored said, "As always, I share my award with all of the men in my company." Nett was awarded the Medal of Honor for an act of courage despite three wounds to the neck, shoulder and chest.

Representing the deceased Johnston were his mother, Alma Johnston and friend of the family, David Delffs.

Johnston was killed in Vietnam as he gave his life while muffling a blast from explosives. As a result, six lives were saved.

"He was my best friend and I miss him dearly," Delffs said as he displayed Johnstons' Medal of Honor to the crowd.

The trees planted by the Medal of Honor recipients werea Mount Vernon Red Maple, an Admiral White Oak and a Medal of Honor Red Oak.

After the trees were planted, Taps was played in honor of Johnston.

Post tax centers file electronically

The Fort Benning Tax Office is in Classroom 1, Infantry Hall. The hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The 3rd Brigade Tax Center is located in the Brigade Legal Center, Building 9025.

Electronic tax filing is available for most federal returns. Many state and federal tax forms are also available. Limited evening and weekend dates will be scheduled. To file taxes, bring the W-2s, Social Security card for yourself and family members, Power of Attorney (if applicable), 1099 statements and other tax documents.

For more information, call Capt. David Barrett at 545-8859.

OCS selection board set

U.S. Army Personnel Command (PERSCOM) has announced that the next OCS Selection Board is scheduled for Aug. 17-21. Cutoff date for applications to arrive at PERSCOM is July 17.

The Adjutant General Personnel Operations and Services Division (POSD) set up two local boards to accommodate Fort Benning Soldiers for Department of the Army's August board. The local boards are scheduled for June 15-19 and June 22-26. Applications must arrive in POSD no later than May 1.

For more information, call Lynnesia Thomas, AG Personnel Operations and Services Divisions, at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

Awards to be given

The Chairman of the Joint Chief of Staff has awarded the Joint Meritorious Unit Award (JMUA) to those individuals who were assigned or attached to the following units:

Headquarters, Joint Task Force Silver Wake, for the period of March 12, 1997 to July 14, 1997.

Joint Task Force Assured Lift, Abijan, Ivory Coast, for the period of Feb. 4, 1997 to March 8, 1997.

Headquarters, Combined Task Force Provide Comfort, for the period of July 1, 1995 to Dec. 31, 1996.

Joint Command and Control Warfare Center, Kelly Air Force Base, Texas, for the period of Sept. 15, 1994 to Jan. 31, 1997.

Headquarters, North American Aerospace, Defense Command , for the period of July 1, 1992 to Aug. 26, 1996.

If you feel you qualify for the JMUA, contact your servicing records section for an appointment to have the award posted to your records.

For officers assigned to 3rd Brigade or 36th Engineer Group, call 544-2172. For enlisted Soldiers assigned to 3rd Brigade or 36th Engineer Group, call 544-2542 for an appointment. All others should call 545-5648.

IG office seeks two inspectors

The Inspector General's Office needs two Soldiers to join the Inspection Branch. These positions require two Soldiers with the MOS 92Y40-supply inspector and 63H40-automotive inspector.

Soldiers eligible for the positions will have no more than 18 months on station or possess assignment instructions. If selected the Soldier will be assigned to the IG office for two years. For more information, call Maj. Bob Popowski at 545-3961 or 545-4780.

Union meeting set

The America Federation of Government Employees, Local 54, plans meetings for the second Thursday of each month starting at 5 p.m. March 12 in Building 235. All union members and perspective members are invited to attend. For more information, call 545-5379.

ACCP courses available on the web

Soldiers can enroll in the Army Correspondent Course Program through the Internet.

A catalog of courses is available through the Army Institute for Professional Development home page at http://206.135.244.97/accp/aipd htm.

Another route to the AIPD home page is through the Army Training Support Center's Trainer on Line home page.

The address is http://www.atsc-army.org.

ID Card Section takes appointments

Main Post ID Card Branch has an appointment system for more convenient service. Personnel with appointments have priority over walk-ins and are seen within five minutes of their scheduled appointment time.

Walk-ins are always welcome but appointments are highly encouraged. The appointment desk phone number is 545-4068. Operating hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday to Friday, and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday.

Regulations require proper PT uniform

Post regulations require that Soldiers wear the standard Army physical fitness training uniform for PT from 6 to 7:30 a.m. on duty days, whether units organize PT or Soldiers conduct it on their own. Reflective vests are required.

The only approved exceptions are the School of the Americas, the Ranger Training Brigade and the 75th Ranger Regiment. These units have an exception to wear a different uniform, but they must remain uniform.

Fort Benning to test tornado sirens

Fort Benning will test the tornado sirens at noon, the first Saturday of every month. The test will not occur in the event of bad weather.

Special Forces briefs continue on post

The Special Forces recruiting office conducts briefings at 6 p.m. every Tuesday and 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. every Wednesday in McVeigh Hall, Building 75B, Room 408. For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class David Boyer at 545-3079 or 545-6778.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will takes place Monday through March 7. If weather permits, the following compartments will be affected: A-13, B-4, C-3, D-4, E-7, F-3, G-3, G-6, H-3, K-5, K-10, M-4, M-5, M-7, O-5, O-8, O-11, Q-2, Q-7, S-2, S-3, T-1, T-5, V-2, V-3, X-1, Z-3, AA and BB-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas.

Personnel proposing to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily. Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility.

Requirements for pet imports change

The state of Hawaii now requires all dogs and cats entering the state to have an electronic microchip implant (issued by the state itself). Additionally, there is now an option for a 30-day quarantine if specific pre-requirements are met well in advance.

If you have pets and anticipate a PCS to Hawaii in the near future, please contact Veterinary Service at 545-4444 or 545-5690 for more information.

Time at range proves to be 'just another day'

By Cpl. Michael Rautio
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

Fire! With one word, and a yank on the lanyard, a projectile is sent 18 miles down range with deadly accuracy.

Although this may sound impressive, for the Soldiers of the field artillery it's just another day on the job.

"Our mission is to provide accurate and timely indirect fires to the maneuver commander — in this case the Task Force 1-30 Commander," said Capt. Clark B. Taylor, commander, Battery B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment.

Although this may sound like a simple mission, it actually takes the hard work of three separate and distinct groups to have the rounds fall on target, according to Taylor

The first part of the equation, according to Taylor is the Fire Support Team or "FIST," which is known as the eyes of the Artillery.

"They are the ones who put the rounds on the target."

The second part is the Fire Direction Center, which is known as the brains.

"They decide if to shoot, when to shoot and what to shoot," said Taylor. "The FIST makes the request to the FDC. They then decide if to attack based on a number of criteria."

"Once they have decided to shoot, they verify that the area has no friendly targets and send the mission to the guns," said Taylor. The final part of the equation is the "guns," which are known as the muscle of the artillery, said Taylor.

Each Paladin section has two vehicles, an M109 Paladin and an M-992 Field Artillery Ammunition Support Vehicle, and an eight-man crew between the two vehicles. Once the mission is sent down to the guns, everything is computerized. The crew double checks and verifies all of the information and loads the gun. If the computer goes down the crew is also trained to fire using a noncomputerized method.

When a mission is sent down to the guns, "Our standard to react and fire is 60 seconds, if moving, but much shorter if stationary," said Taylor.

The Kuwaiti desert gives a great opportunity for the Paladin crews, said Staff Sgt. Addison E. James, section chief.

"We get the opportunity and time to train our lower enlisted Soldiers. We try to crosstrain all of our Soldiers so anyone can do any job in the section."

Intrinsic Action also gives Taylor a very unique opportunity.

"The terrain allows us to employ the Paladin the way it was designed to be used," said Taylor." The amount of room in the Kuwait desert as opposed to the limited training space on Fort Benning and Fort Stewart allows the Paladin sections to maneuver and fire as they would under contingency conditions.

"As a commander I have been given the freedom to train on what we have identified as weaknesses from our last NTC rotation," said Taylor. This allows the more experienced Soldiers in the unit to train the newer Soldiers on past lessons learned.

Reimer, Hall visit deploying troops

By Pfc. Amanda Cheney
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer and Sergeant Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall visited Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Airfield Feb. 18-19, to visit the troops before they deployed.

Hall arrived first, commencing his tour with a visit to 3rd Battalion, 69th Armor, to watch Soldiers train with Nuclear, Biological Chemical equipment.

He toured each station, and asked questions about what they learned and how they learned it.

Hall also said to the Soldiers leaving for Kuwait, "You're going to do what you have to do over there and get the job done."

His encouraging words brought smiles to the Soldiers' faces.

After visiting the training area, Hall took time out to visit the family members who were sewing on patches and name tags on the troops' desert camouflage uniforms. He commended them for their hard work and dedication.

"The Army is there (Kuwait) as a show of force, to support our allies, train and make sure that Saddam Huessein doesn't do anything stupid," Hall said.

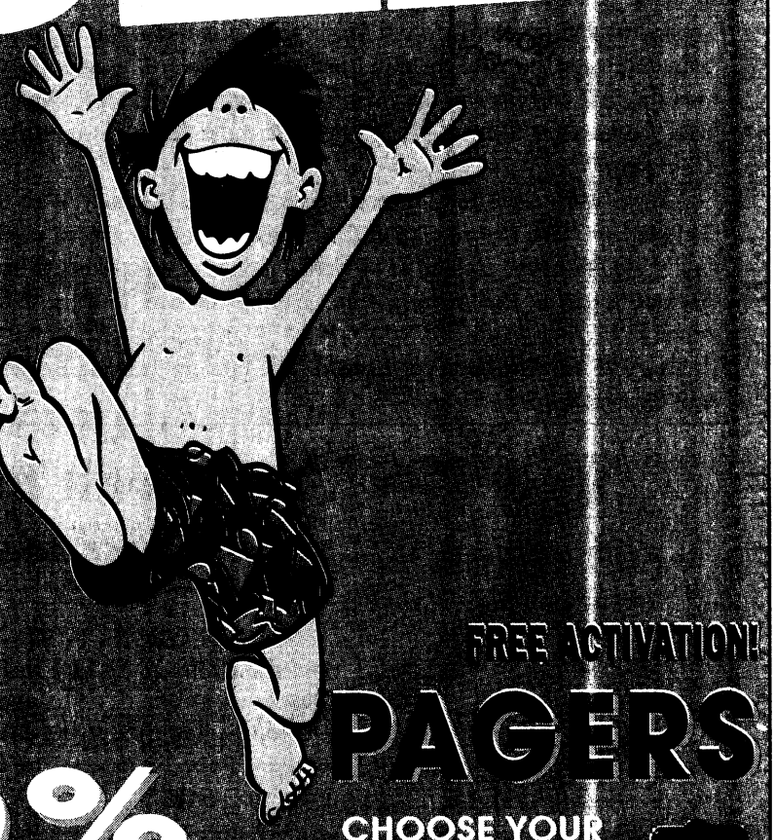
He continued to ask them questions about their time in the Army and if they were going to re-enlist.

"I was thinking about getting out, to go back to college," said Pfc. John Smalls, 3rd Bn., 7th Inf. to Hall.

"Well, if you do, make sure that you take all of the goodness of the Army back into the world," Hall replied to Smalls.

Hall was then transported to the 3rd Battalion, 15th Infantry motorpool, to see first-hand, the soldiers working on equipment. He asked several questions about what could be improved on the equipment and how it functioned. Hall then focused on the question of soldiers coming out of basic training, and if they were tough enough.

"Well, we're going to enforce Army values and traditions more. Along with putting rigor and discipline back into it," said Hall. "We're also going to extend it by one more week. Everyone should see an improvement."



Reimer expressed his confidence in the troops by adding that they were very focused, and will concentrate on the job at hand.

The question of how the Army is planning to help out family's emotionally while the soldiers are deployed came up.

"I'm really pleased at how these programs function. Everyone will be cared for," added Reimer.

This visit by Hall and Reimer gave Soldiers and family members a chance to see the Army's leaders at work.

Basic training changes mold future Infantrymen

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

The ITB has implemented a new training system, which gives all new Infantry Soldiers the chance to learn all they can about being an Infantryman before moving on to their specific weapon system training.

The new system has all new Infantry Soldiers going through the 13 weeks of basic Infantry training. Then additional training time is added for specific MOS skills.

For example, after graduating from basic, tube-launched, optically tracked, wire guided missile system (TOW) and Dragon gunners and mortarmen move on to another company for the additional training.

In the past, the last two to three weeks of the 13-week basic was focused on the MOS specific skills, not on just Infantry training.

Bradley Fighting Vehicle (BFV) Infantrymen have always stayed for additional training after basic. Standard Infantrymen will continue to ship to a unit after completion of basic training.

Now the TOW and Dragon gunners and the mortarmen will get the same training the BFV and standard Infantrymen have been getting all along, plus their specific MOS training.

"This will ultimately produce a better Infantryman," said Lt. Col. Richard G. Kaiura, Deputy Commander, ITB.

He said this type of system has been talked about for many years.

As far back as possibly 1993, commanders have been concerned about mortarmen, TOW and Dragon gunners coming to units not fully trained as an Infantrymen, Kaiura said.

He said the time spent working on MOS skill-specific training may have hurt them once in the field with their new unit.

"They were missing about two-weeks of training on certain skills 11B Soldiers got," Kaiura said. "The problem wasn't obvious or apparent until you saw these Soldiers go on a deployment."

The Soldiers would be able to do the MOS-specific tasks without many problems, but some hadn't been trained on other Infantry tasks such as the M-60 machine gun or squad automatic weapon (SAW), Kaiura said.

"Now all Infantrymen, whether they're 11C mortarmen or 11H TOW gunners or Dragon gunners, will be able to perform other duties as 11B straight Infantrymen," he said.

The first company responsible for MOS specific training is Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

The mortarmen and TOW gunners stay with the company for an extra 10 days, while the Dragon gunners stay for five.

"The key (to the new system) is the extra time that we have and all the recourses we have at our disposal to train these Soldiers," said Capt. Todd Bearden, commander, Co. C, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

The Soldiers are not rushed through the training and have 13 drill sergeants who are specifically trained for each MOS.

Unlike the old system, training doesn't end when the Soldiers leave the range. The company is equipped with each of the weapon systems at the company barracks for the Soldiers to continue training once back at the company, Bearden said.

That's if they come back at all.

The mortarmen spend almost the entire extra training in the field.

"They carry their complete weapon system with them and they roadmarch everywhere they go," Bearden said. "Their rucks have 60 mm and 81mm round chambers filled with sand to let them know what it's really like to carry their weapon systems around," Bearden said.

But, for those at the company area, there is a handful of useful equipment including:

- six 60 mm and 81mm mortar tubes
- two 50-caliber machine guns
- two MK–19 machine guns
- two complete TOW systems

Another example of more resources is the company's vehicles.

Bearden said most One Station Unit Training (OSUT) companies have one pick-up truck and a 2.5 ton cargo truck to transport equipment. His company has one pick-up and four cargo trucks — one cargo truck for each platoon.

"That gives each platoon sergeant his own vehicle to transport equipment or personnel to and from the range without delay," he said.

Plus the Soldiers don't miss out on physical training (PT), he said. "We do PT six days a week," Bearden said. "If they fail a PT test, they are recycled back to their old unit until they can pass one."

The MOS-specific training also features live fires.

The weapon systems are live-fired by the top gunner per weapon system so the Soldiers can see and feel what it's like to actually fire the weapon, Bearden said.

But all the MOS specific training won't take place at 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt. The company responsible for the extra training will change every five and half or six months, Bearden said.

"We will hold this mission until May 28," Bearden said. "Then it will revert to another company in the brigade," he said.

No matter what company is doing the training, the idea is to make a better Infantryman, Kaiura said.

"The Army is getting a better Soldier," he said. "The Army is getting a Soldier who knows more, who's going to be more flexible and who will ultimately give units in the field more versatility in terms of how they employ their Soldiers."

Sgt. Marc Turchin

Pvt. 1 Joseph Hidalgo loads the mortar round into the chamber during a live-fire exercise while Pvt. 1 Benjamin Kay watches. Both Soldiers, from Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, are going through an extra two weeks of training as part of the new One Station Unit Training at the Infantry Training Brigade.

Soldiers learn during roadmarch, ceremony

1st Lt. Aaron F. Gess
C Co., 2nd Bn, 58th Inf. Regt.

Company C, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, was introduced to the rigors of life as an Infantryman Feb. 6. The 25 km footmarch is designed to test the basic trainees physical stamina and endurance at the end of One Station Unit Training (OSUT) at Fort Benning.

The footmarch is conducted at the end of a seven-day field training exercise, which is designed to evaluate the trainees understanding of basic Infantry skills. The 25 km footmarch is a graduation requirement and demonstrates to the trainees the life an Infantryman can expect to have when he gets to his unit.

"What the drill sergeants are looking for are mentally and physically tough Soldiers who are capable of going to their duty station ready to perform to the high standards of table of organization and equipment units," said Sgt. 1st Class Shawn Lengyel, drill sergeant with Co. C, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

What sets this footmarch apart from all other 25 km footmarches conducted during OSUT, is the finish point was not at the Soldiers' barracks, but at Sacrifice Field in front of the Infantry Museum. Co. C was the first company in the Infantry Training Brigade to complete their footmarch at Sacrifice Field and conduct the first Crossed Rifles Ceremony.

"These were Americans at their best," said Spc. Anthony Whit of 2nd platoon. "The Crossed Rifles Ceremony was a truly special event in my life. When the crossed rifles were put on my chest, I knew I had become a part of the Army's elite, leading the way into the 21st century."

Every 25 km footmarch conducted by the Infantry Training Brigade will finish at Sacrifice Field.

Advanced radar system gets more field time

By Skip Vaughn
Redstone Arsenal Public Affairs Office

REDSTONE ARSENAL, Ala. — The Army has decided to deliver its advanced air defense radar to more units in the field.

Fieldings of the Sentinel system began last summer. Originally the plan was to deliver 115 radars to active duty and National Guard units through year 2003. The Army decided last December to increase the number of National Guard recipients, boosting the total to 172 radars through 2006.

This decision was based on need, "although I think the radar's performance has been a factor," said Lt. Col. Tim McKaig, the Sentinel product manager.

Besides fielding to tactical units, two Army schools have received Sentinel training systems. The 2nd Battalion, 6th Air Defense Artillery, Fort Bliss, Texas, received a Sentinel Training System in a ribbon-cutting ceremony Jan. 20. This system for operator training includes six student stations, two instructor stations and a software support center.

"With the trainer, it saves a lot of operational costs (rather) than having the prime system," said Jerry Isbill, logistics management specialist in Sentinel Product Office. Using the trainer rather than the actual radar saves money in training Soldiers.

The Sentinel Maintenance Trainer (SMT) for teaching Sentinel maintenance personnel was delivered last September to a training detachment at Fort Sill, Okla. The detachment is part of the Redstone-based Ordnance Missile and Munitions Center and School. The SMT includes four student stations, one instructor station and a software support center.

"We have fielded to both the schools — the school at Fort Sill and the school at Fort Bliss. That's completed," Isbill said.

Jasper Burgess, configuration management and test specialist in Sentinel Product Office, said the training systems have received high marks from the schools.

"They think it's an excellent training system," he said.

Fieldings to tactical units are scheduled through the turn of the century. The Sentinel radar was first fielded last summer to the 1st Bn., 44th Air Defense Artillery, 4th Infantry Division at Fort Hood, Texas. In early March the 1st Cavalry Division at Fort Hood is to become the second tactical recipient.

Originally the plan was to field radars to 12 active Army units and 10 National Guard units through 2003. The Army subsequently decided to field to more National Guard units including 11 National Guard Avenger battalions plus 17 separate brigades. Each of these National Guard brigades will receive two radars.

"Deliveries now are scheduled out through 2006," McKaig said.

"I think it's the right thing to do," he said of the increased deliveries. "I feel real good about it."

For gaining units, the arrival of Sentinel means, "their warfighting capability has just increased greatly," McKaig said.

Sentinel consists of two major components — the antenna transceiver group and the Humvee group. The radar detects airborne targets and reports their position and velocity to command and control centers and the weapons.

It costs about $2.5 million per radar. Contractors include Raytheon Systems Company (formerly Hughes Aircraft), which builds the radar; and Allied Signal of Baltimore, Md., which makes a major component called the interrogator. The Humvee group modifications are done by Tobyhanna Army Depot, Pa.

Sentinel replaces the Forward Area Alerting Radar (FAAR) which was retired in the early 1990s. Its advantages over FAAR include, "greater range, greater reliability, better maintainability, and it's more survivable," said McKaig.

The development effort began with source selection in December 1991. The radar was formerly called Ground Based Sensor until it became Sentinel in October 1996.

Sentinel Product Office, located in Huntsville, is under the Program Executive Office for Intelligence, Electronic Warfare and Sensors at Fort Monmouth, N.J. Thirty-six people work in the product office plus 14 employees from VISTA Technologies, the El Paso-based support contractor.

American businesses work with Army to keep Soldiers, families close

By Staff Sgt. Alicia K. Borlik
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Department of Defense (DoD) and AT&T made Valentines Day even sweeter for troops calling the United States by cutting rates up to 50 percent Feb. 14, according to Pentagon officials.

AT&T decreased the per-minute rate of its Military Saver Plus calling plan in Bosnia, Croatia and Hungary from 99 cents to 50 cents for Operation Joint Guard troops who are plan members.

Troops in the Balkans will also save when making calls to Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom. AT&T cut rates under the program to $1 per minute, a savings of up to 74 cents.

Pentagon officials said the savings are the result of efforts by AT&T, DoD and the Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES). AAFES contracted AT&T phone service for troops deployed to the Balkans since operations began there in 1995, AAFES spokesman Larry Phillips said. AT&T also donated $1 million in calls to military personnel in the Balkans during Christmas.

Suzanne Chung Park, an AT&T spokesperson, said the Military Saver Plus program is the company's most popular calling program for military personnel overseas. To sign up, call (800) 299-9432 in the United States. Customers outside the United States can call collect to (904) 448-8100.

Because subscribers to the program receive a calling card with unlimited use, AT&T does a credit check prior to issuing the card, Park said. Callers should having billing address information and their Social Security number available when applying.

Once a member is approved, a calling card follows by mail in 10 to 15 days. Members can use the plan before the card arrives if they confirm their approval by calling AT&T a week after applying.

The plan costs $5 per month (in addition to calling charges); the fee is waived any month the subscriber does not make a call. Subscribers are charged a $2.50 connection fee for direct service after their first 30 calls per month

Local morale, welfare and recreation funds reap the benefits of this contract, Phillips said. MWR funds help build new stores and better existing facilities and pay for sports programs, youth activities, unit functions and other quality of life programs, he said.

In 1997, AAFES earned $2.9 million from telephone sales in the Balkans — 80 percent went into Army and Air Force MWR funds in Europe. Phillips said the other 20 percent is split equally between AAFES and the two services.

ITB announces top drill

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

The Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) announced the 1998 Drill Sergeant of the Year during a small ceremony conducted in the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment's dining facility Feb. 20.

This year's winner is Staff Sgt. Clifford Drysdale from Company E, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment. The runner-up is Staff Sgt. Rick Stuckey, Co. C, 1st Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

Drysdale was one of six competitors in the three-day competition conducted Feb. 10, 11 and 13 throughout the brigade.

"I was very surprised at the announcement," Drysdale said. "When the competition initially started, I didn't fair too well," he said. Apparently Drysdale wasn't too proud of his performance during the Army Physical Fitness Test, which was the first event of the competition.

Other events included giving classes on drill and ceremony and physical training (PT); a written exam covering basic rifle marksmanship and regulations governing drill sergeant duty and an oral board consisting of nine members.

"I thought I did pretty well during the board portion," Drysdale said. "I answered a lot of the questions. There were a few of them (questions) that stumped me, but I thought I did all right," he said.

Although he wasn't pleased with his PT score, he insisted the worst part was the board.

"There was between 22 and 25 subject areas to study for," he said. "It was hard to memorize all 25; I know I didn't know them all, but I answered what I knew."

Drysdale said he studied the manuals from back to front, spending one to two hours a night preparing for the classes and the board.

Before becoming Drill Sergeant of the Year, Drysdale was the Drill Sergeant of the Quarter during last fiscal year for his battalion, as were all the competitors.

The other four competitors were Staff Sgt. Connie Rounds, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.; Sgt. 1st Class Kevin Chaney, Co. C, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.; Staff Sgt. Gerome Anthony, Co. E, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., and Staff Sgt. Shawn Bloomer Co. E, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.

The ceremony included Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen, post command sergeant major, Command Sgt. Maj. Clifford West, Infantry School command sergeant major and Command Sgt. Maj. Larry Durham, ITB command sergeant major.

Before the ceremony began, Durham thanked the 1997 Drill Sergeant of the Year, Staff Sgt. Sean Polwort for his his dedication to his job and all he had done for the brigade.

Vereen talked about the importance of the job as top drill sergeant.

"This NCO will stand and represent Fort Benning wherever he goes," Vereen said. "He represents the Infantry to everyone and everywhere."

Drysdale has been a drill sergeant for 18 months. He and his wife Tami, have two children Ryle, 10 and Cassidy, 5.

The official drill sergeant of the year ceremony is tentatively scheduled for April 19 at the Sand Hill Recreation Center.

Temp jobs may start new careers

Army Career and Alumni Program

Employment agencies have come a long way since the days of the "Kelly Girls."

"Separating Soldiers and their families may want to take a look at temporary and permanent job placement services offered by the growing number of employment agencies," said Chick Eagle, Army Career and Alumni (ACAP) Center counselor at Fort Benning. "I looked in the phone book under employment agencies and counted a total of 40 local and national staffing and placement organizations. Most of these agencies ask for no fees from job seekers, but will get their income from fees paid by the company where the work is performed," he said. "Statistics show that about one third of the jobs currently held in the U.S. are under some sort of a temporary arrangement.

"Employment agencies are growing in popularity with industries for many reasons." Some of which are listed here:

•They want to make sure employees are right for the job before offering permanent status.

•It is easier to downsize, upsize, remove or replace workers when using temps.

•The placement firm screens employees and does background checks and drug tests which saves the client company money and time.

•Some companies accept employees only through a single placement firm and have reduced their recruiting staff and saved even more.

•Employees in this status are actually employed by the placement agency and all pay and benefits come from the placement agency.

"As a job seeker, temporary placement might offer the opportunity to begin work in an outstanding company or at the entry level of a career field to gain experience," Eagle said. "It is recommended that separating Soldiers and family members consider temporary employment agencies as a place to start a new career. Many temporary jobs have turned into permanent positions when Soldiers are given a chance to apply their skills and experience in private industry." Just look in the phone book or work with the ACAP for more information about these temp placement services, they definitely have more to offer than the clerical jobs of the "Kelly Girls" of the past.

For more information about ACAP eligibility, scheduling and information, call 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Schools plan day of reading — The Fort Benning School System, in conjunction with the Benning Education Association, invites all children and parents to participate in Read Across America Monday.

Read Across America is a nationally sponsored event designed to promote reading and early literacy. Monday is the day chosen for this day in honor of children's author Dr. Seuss' birthday.

Many Fort Benning schools are planning celebrations. For more information call your child's school.

OWC offers scholarship — The Officers' Wives' Club offers its annual scholarships to graduating high school seniors and continuing education students. The application and guidelines are available at the Thrift Shop, Fort Benning Officers' Club, Sayers Library and at area high schools' counselors' offices. For more information, call Karen Kinnison at 682-6417.

OWC accepts welfare requests — The Officers' Wives' Club is now taking applications from private, nonprofit organizations for funding requests. Requests for funds need to include the amount of money requested; the total amount of money needed; specific purpose of money requested; fund raising efforts; other organizations contacted for funds; number of military personnel and families affected; and the name and phone number of the organization's point of contact. The OWC needs to receive the request by March 13.

Submit requests to: OWC, P.O. Box 51978, Fort Benning GA 31995-1978.

For more information, call Judy Rasper at 689-4530.

Red Cross offers classes — The American Red Cross, Fort Benning Station will sponsor adult, child or infant CPR classes Tuesday and Thursday. Classes are open to the public at a cost of $5.

A baby-sitting course will be offered for children ages 13 and older from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday at the Red Cross Building on the corner of Vibbert and Ingersoll.

A pet first aid and CPR course will be March 14. This course is open to the public for ages 10 and older. Parental supervision is recommended for minors taking the course. Space is limited and reservations are recommended.

The American Red Cross' next basic orientation is 1 to 3 p.m. March 7.

For more information, call 545-9154.

Dexter celebrates Arbor Day by introducing Giraffe Program

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Giraffes are known for sticking their long necks up to reach the highest leaves on the tallest trees.

Helping the Fort Benning school children reach for the tallest, highest goals are three teachers recently nominated for "giraffe" status.

The three teachers nominated for giraffe status were:

•Linda Turner who sponsors the Green Thumbs Environmental Club for first graders,

•Joyce Flatt who was responsible for Dexter receiving the greenhouse and •Ernestine Ezekiel who sponsors the e-Club program for the kindergartners.

The giraffes and the Giraffe Program were formally introduced to the Fort Benning community Feb. 20 during Dexter Elementary School's Arbor Day tree planting ceremony.

The Arbor Day theme this year was celebrating America's heroes.

Vicki Rogers, principal, told the children and adults assembled for the ceremony the hero concept is also the theme of the Giraffe Program.

"The Giraffe Program recognizes people who stick their necks out for the well being of others," said Peggy Gindville, Dexter kindergarten teacher and chairperson for implementing the program.

This is a school-home curriculum, which focuses on developing the virtues of courage, responsibility, caring, concern and service.

"The Giraffe Program gives kids real heroes to look up to," Rogers said. "People who are willing to stick their necks out for the common good, to go the extra mile for a cause that they believe in."

"The Giraffe program was designed to recognize and give special thanks to some great people for simply sticking their necks out for the well being of others and the community," said Capt. George Fredrick, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who is part of the Dexter school home partnership team. "Giraffes are people who've acted with courage, who possess a strong sense of community, which is why these women were chosen — for their outstanding environmental leadership."

"(These teachers) have done a wonderful job of bringing the environment and the awareness of the environment to Dexter school and the Fort Benning community," Gindville said.

"The kindergarten e-Club has done a really fantastic job of keeping our campus beautiful and making all of (the school) aware of ecology."

Projects the green thumb members have done include planting plants and picking up the banks of the Chattahoochee River.

They have stuck their necks out a lot of times and will continue to.

The e-Club members and Green Thumb members planted a live oak near the baseball diamond on the Dexter School campus.

Ebony Johnson, 4, and Connor Zalenski, 4, pre-K in Nancy Gordy's class, shovel dirt on an oak tree being planted in front of McBride Elementary School Feb. 20. The tree was being planted in honor of Arbor Day and was donated by the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission. Each child at McBride was then given a dogwood tree to take home. The dogwood trees were donated by the Directorate of Public Works Natural Resources Management Branch.

AER scholarships deadline draws near

Army Emergency Relief

Soldiers with college-age children often wonder how they can afford educational costs. Many people don't realize that part of the answer may be found from Army Emergency Relief (AER).

The AER provides financial assistance through scholarships. This relatively little-known resource can make college possible for many people. To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students must be enrolled for the entire academic year in post-secondary educational institutions approved by the U.S. Department of Education.

Scholarships are available through AER. To be eligible a student must be: unmarried, a U.S. citizen or a permanent U.S. resident, under the age of 22 June 1, preceding the beginning of the school year for which the scholarship is requested and an authorized dependent of an active duty, retired or deceased Soldier. Scholarships are awarded based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishments.

Students who are awarded scholarships must reapply each year. Students must be in good academic standing, minimum cumulative GPA of 2.0 to receive scholarships. The application is simple. By requiring students to reapply each year, AER can monitor the progress they are making.

As part of the application, students must submit a family financial analysis and an essay describing their goals and accomplishments. Applications must be submitted by March 1 for the upcoming academic year. Initial application and request forms are available for the school year '98-'99 at AER, Building 2643, Soldiers Plaza. Hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Letters to students are mailed in mid-May, from Headquarters AER informing them whether they have been awarded a scholarship, and if so, how much money they will receive.

Post students help homeless

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Fifth-graders at White Elementary recently learned a lesson in giving when they sponsored a food drive for the homeless.

Evelyn Braman's class read the book A Family Under the Bridge by Natalie Sawyer, in which a family loses the father to death and find themselves homeless. They meet a man who lives under a bridge, where the family makes their home. The man gets a job and takes responsibility for the family and they are no longer homeless.

The students enlisted the help of the entire student body so they could bring in more items. The students made posters and went into classrooms to let other students know they would be having a food drive and passed out sheets of paper letting students know what was needed.

The fifth-graders decided on their own to give the canned food, hygiene products and clothes to the Valley Rescue Mission, Braman said.

"The kids were very generous," said Kelly Torrance, 11, daughter of Ellen and Lt. Col. Thomas Torrance, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division. "They gave more than 400 cans of food, clothes and hygiene products."

The students learned not all children have the food or toys they have.

"I'm happy we helped someone," said Nicole Kagee, 11, daughter of Jacqueline and Command Sgt. Maj. William Kagee, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group.

"I feel thankful that I have these things and I could help," said Fernando Rodriguez, 11, son of Annette and Capt. Fernando Rodriguez, Company B, School of the Americas.

"I'm glad that I gave because if I was homeless I would sure want somebody to give me these things," Kagee said.

The food drive inspired the students to help year-round.

"I can collect stuff from my house and bring it down there myself," Kagee said.

"I'll volunteer," Torrance said.

The students said how important it is to think of others and how the book taught them that.

"The book taught me things, that anybody can be homeless and people all over the world, even children go hungry," Kagee said.

"The book made me stop and think," said Rodriguez.

The students also learned it's never too soon to start helping.

"We learned that you're never too little to help," said Torrance.

Disease prevention comes with care

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Adolescence is a crucial time to reinforce dental care that may prevent periodontal diseases later in life advises the Dental Activity. While only half of U.S. school-aged children have dental decay, adolescents have a good chance of joining the three out of every four persons in the U.S. who have periodontal (gum) diseases.

Periodontal diseases, the number one cause of tooth loss among adults, are caused by a sticky, colorless film of bacteria called plaque which is constantly forming on the teeth.

These bacteria create toxins (poisons) that irritate the gums and loosen the attachment of gum tissues to the teeth.

For people older than 18, the chances are greater than half that a form of the disease is already present in their mouths. Anywhere from 5 percent to 46 percent of 12 to 15-year-olds already have a destructive form of periodontal disease.

Since periodontal diseases are painless, teenagers may not be aware they have gum disease unless it is diagnosed.

Whether or not today's adolescents lose their teeth to gum disease is a matter of choice. With very rare exceptions, the condition is due to neglect and can be prevented by removing plaque through daily flossing and brushing.

In fact, recent studies have recognized that toothbrushing actually reduces an early form of periodontal diseases, gingivitis, which is characterized by red, swollen and bleeding gums.

Thanks to an emphasis on preventive dentistry, the percentage of older Americans who have lost their natural teeth decrease 12 percent between 1962 and 1986.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services made the reduction of gingivitis and periodontal diseases high priorities for the 1990 health objectives.

Although the prevalence of destructive forms of periodontal diseases is lower in adolescents than in adults, studies have indicated that gingivitis is nearly a universal finding in both children and adults.

Even though many teens know the importance of good dental care, they often neglect their oral health because of their busy schedules and because they view this neglect as a way to assert their independence.

But, by encouraging their children to assume responsibility for their dental care, parents are motivating them toward good health habits that will last a lifetime.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school this fall:

•Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.

•Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.

•Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

Association plans Honor Roll Ceremony — The Follow Me Chapter of the 1st Cavalry Division Association honors its fallen comrades with an Honor Roll Ceremony at 11 a.m. April 18 at Chattahoochee Valley Veteran's Center, 1000 Victory Drive, Columbus.

For more information, call Jim Hollander at 689-7471 or Bill Stanfield at 563-2306.

Vets plan reunion — Team 162, Red Markers and the Society of the Vietnamese Airborne Division are holding a reunion April 22-26 at the Holiday Inn NW, in San Antonio, Texas.

For more information, call Fred Brander at (615) 645-3082.

CSU forms support group — Columbus State University is forming a local chapter for the National Association of Anorexia Nervosa and Association Disorders.

The meetings are scheduled for Thursdays at noon at CSU.

Any interested participants can contact the CSU Counseling Center at 568-2273.

Debt management assistance is available — There are two non-profit agencies in Columbus that offer debt management assistance.

They will each make an evaluation of your financial status and work with your creditors, if your financial status allows. They can work with creditors to adjust payments. Soldiers can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated amount to each creditor.

•Alternative Financial Resolutions provides free debt management assistance to all clients. They can take information from you in person, by phone, or by mail. After they have made an evaluation of your financial status, they will be able to determine if you have the resources to do a debt management plan. They will then work with your creditors to adjust payments to fit within your income and meet creditor approval.

You can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated payment amounts.

You can reach Alternative Financial Resolutions by calling 323-2108, or by writing to them at Post Office Box 9364, Columbus GA 31908-9364.

•Consumer Credit Counseling Service (CCCS) is a department of Columbus Family Counseling Center, located at 1350 15th Avenue, across from the side of Red Lobster Restaurant.

The monthly fee for their service is $15. You can make an appointment with the CCCS by calling 327-3239.

Program seeks host families — The Program of Academic Exchange is seeking host families for a foreign student exchange program. All participating students speak English, have full medical coverage and their own spending money.

Host family requirements are to furnish meals, a place to sleep, a place to study and a supportive atmosphere.

For more information, call Rhonda Mobley at 571-0406.

Red Cross needs blood — The Red Cross needs 900 to 1,000 people to donate blood each weekday to meet the needs of hospital patients in the region. Most healthy people age 17 or older, who weigh at least 110 pounds, can give blood.

Please call (800) GIVE-LIFE for blood drive information.

CCSC needs volunteers — The Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus School Year Program needs volunteers to act as teachers and aides.

The volunteers will tutor students in reading, math and other core areas. Classes are 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. every Saturday during the school year.

The volunteers will work at either Eastway School, 4601 Buena Vista Road or Davis School at 1822 Sheperd Drive, Columbus. For more information, call Lonnie Jackson at 687-5357 or Daisy Honor at 687-8808.

MRCA seeks cowboys — The Military Rodeo Cowboys Association seeks active duty, retired, active-reserve or military dependents to be members.

For more information, call the MRCA Atlantic Circuit director Mike De La Pena at (703) 892-7625 or the Circuit secretary at (757) 249-3808.

March commemorates Bataan Death March — The 10th annual (56th Year Commemorative) Bataan Memorial Death March will take place April 19 at the White Sands Missile Range, N.M.

The Memorial March commemorates the Bataan Death March that occurred in the Philippines after the Japanese invasion April 9, 1942 during World War II and pays tribute to Bataan Veterans for their sacrifices. Only 60,000 out of 80,000 veterans survived the grueling 65-mile force march from the Bataan peninsula to San Fernando, a small town in the Philippines.

For more information, call (505) 678-3374.

Directorate of Public Works

McDonald Manor has inadvertently undergone a name change during the years.

While a street in the housing area was named McDaniel Street, the housing area was originally memorialized as McDonald Manor.

The Directorate of Public Works is in the process of setting the signs records and history straight ensuring everyone is aware of the American hero for whom McDonald Manor is named.

In 1973 the NCO Housing Area bordered on the north by 10th Division Road, on the east by Clark Road and on the west by Gillespie Loop was named in memory of Pfc. Phill G. McDonald, 1st Battalion, 14th Infantry, 4th Infantry Division.

McDonald was awarded the Medal of Honor for actions near Kontum, Republic of South Vietnam, in June of 1968.

In memorializing areas like McDonald Manor future generations have a daily reminder of Soldiers who paid the ultimate price in the defense of the nation.

Environmental planning

Fort Benning has many unique plant and animal communities. These include the old growth longleaf pine forest, which provides habitat for the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker; the scrub oak-longleaf pine sandhills, which are home to the gopher tortoise; and the extensive hardwood bottom land and river system, which provides habitat for the endangered relief trillium and bald eagle.

DPW also actively manages the installation's game and nongame wildlife including wild turkey, deer, wood ducks and bluebirds. The focus of both the forestry and wildlife management programs is to maintain or restore these natural communities. Collectively, these communities may be termed an ecosystem.

Maintaining or restoring the various ecosystems has become the new management paradigm. Within the last five years, all federal agencies have enhanced land stewardship programs to better manage the installation's forests and wildlife.

As part of the Natural Resources responsibilities, DPW has embraced this enhanced management approach. DPW works with The Nature Conservancy on a continuing basis for the development of a management plan called the Integrated Natural Resources Management Plan (INRMP).

The overall objective is to use an ecosystem approach to land management with no net loss in the capability of the land to support the training mission.

Development of the plan will include input from numerous individuals with expertise in a variety of fields: ecology, wildlife, botany and forestry.

Military personnel will provide input regarding the compatibility of proposed land management with the mission requirements.

The long-term goal of the INRMP is to bring together all management activities in a way that sustains, enhances' or restores the health and integrity of the natural communities. Furthermore, the INRMP process takes a proactive approach in maximizing available land for training.

For more information, call John Brent at 545-4766.

DoD plans Medicare subvention demonstration

By Douglas J. Gilbert
American Forces News Service

WASHINGTON — Enrollment should begin this summer for Department of Defense's (DoD) trial run at delivering health care to beneficiaries over the age of 65.

The DoD demonstration of Medicare subvention was confirmed Feb. 12 by Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala and Defense Secretary William Cohen. The project will allow Medicare-eligible military retirees and family members to receive comprehensive health care through military health facilities.

Defense health officials hope the demonstration will show that DoD can cost-effectively provide Medicare-eligible beneficiaries health care treatment through military facilities. If the test is successful, the program is expected to eventually become available for military retirees everywhere.

The three-year demonstration will take place at six sites, some of which include more than one hospital, including:

•Keesler Air Force Base, Miss.;

•Brooke Army Medical Center, Texas; Wilford Hall Medical Center, Texas; Sheppard Air Force Base, Texas; and Fort Sill, Okla.;

•Fort Carson and Air Force Academy, Colo.;

•Madigan Army Medical Center, Wash.;

•Naval Medical Center San Diego; and •Dover Air Force Base, Del.

Officials plan to begin enrolling participants at two sites this summer, most likely Madigan in Tacoma and Brooke and Wilford Hall in San Antonio. They then will phase in the remaining sites. Actual health care services will begin at each site 60 days after enrollment begins, officials said.

"This is a very significant step forward in our efforts to care for all military beneficiaries," Cohen said in a statement. "With our partners at Health and Human Services, I believe we can achieve a successful demonstration that will benefit everyone."

The Balanced Budget Act of 1997 authorized this demonstration to include two components. The first, Tricare Senior Prime, will allow military health facilities in six sites to be treated as Medicare and Choice plans such as HMOs and provide a full range of comprehensive health care benefits to enrolled retirees. These military facilities must meet the same terms as HMOs serving Medicare.

Under Tricare Senior Prime, DoD will spend the same amount of money it currently does for this group.

Then, Medicare will pay DoD an amount equal to 95 percent of what it pays other health maintenance organizations, less the cost of medical education, special payments to hospitals serving large numbers of low-income patients, and some capital payments excluded because they're included in DoD's appropriations.

The second option, Medicare Partners, permits military retirees enrolled in a limited number of Medicare and Choice plans to receive Medicare services through military health care facilities. This demonstration also allows Medicare and Choice plans to contract with DoD to provide specialty and inpatient care to military retirees in those plans.

Participants in the demonstration must have received some care from military providers in the past or have become Medicare-eligible after Dec. 31, 1997.

They also must be in the Medicare fee-for-service plan or switch from a Medicare HMO, continue to pay monthly Medicare Plan B premiums and agree to receive all their care through the demonstration.

Participants in the Tricare Senior Prime demonstration won't have to pay the annual Tricare Prime enrollment fee.

DoD and HHS will jointly assess the results of the demonstration before making a recommendation for full implementation. In the meantime, the administration has proposed a similar demonstration for the Department of Veterans Affairs.

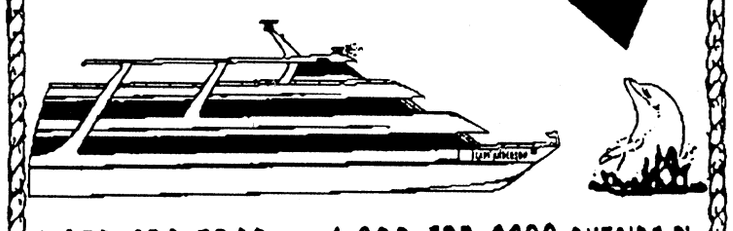
Q: I have read a lot recently about changes in the way cars are going to be registered in Georgia and about how the taxes are to be paid. Can you please explain how this is going to work?



A: Sure. As you probably know, car registrations in Georgia have gone to a system of using the owner's birthday to determine the time of registration, whereas, under the old system, annual tags had to be purchased sometime between January and May, depending on the owner's last name. This year has been particularly confusing because of the transition from one system to the other. But from now on, deadlines for tag purchases are going to be based on the concept of the "owner's registration period" and the "initial registration period." Payment of ad valorem taxes on vehicles is tied to the registration, and depends on the owner's birthday. Of course, an active duty Soldier who is the sole owner of a vehicle and who is not from Georgia but who registers his or her vehicle here is generally exempt from that tax.

The "initial registration period" is the 30-day period immediately following the date you either purchase a car or first bring a car into the State of Georgia. The "owner's registration period" is the 30-day period ending at midnight on your birthday. Unless you are active duty military and choose to keep your vehicle registered in your home state, you should register your car here within 30 days of purchase or within 30 days of bringing the vehicle into the state. If this occurs after your birthday, no ad valorem taxes are due and you will be issued next year's tag with your birth month decal. If this occurs more than 30 days before your birthday, you will be issued this year's tag with your birth month decal, and you will have to go back to the tag office during the "owner's registration period" to register your vehicle again, pay the ad valorem tax and receive next year's tag (you can go ahead and prepay the ad valorem tax during the initial registration; this will save you the second trip back to the tag office and the second $20 registration fee). If your purchase or initial basing of the vehicle in Georgia occurs within the 30-day period expiring at midnight on your birthday, you will pay the ad valorem tax and be issued next year's tag with your birth month decal.

Now, all of that sounds real confusing, but the most important fact is if you are subject to ad valorem taxes, you will save yourself some money if you wait until after your birthday to either purchase a vehicle or to bring a vehicle into Georgia. In that circumstance, you will not have to pay ad valorem taxes on the car until the next time you register it.

If you have any questions about registration of a vehicle in Georgia, payment of or exemption from ad valorem taxation or matters pertaining to the selection, purchase and financing of a vehicle, call a Legal Assistance attorney at 545-3281.

Lent helps Christians prepare for Easter

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain Office

For many people who do not come from a church which observes the liturgical seasons of the year, the terms Lent, Maundy Thursday and others have little or no meaning. This is no reflection upon them or their background, but merely indicates their lack of familiarity with the liturgical terms and observances.

The season of Lent, which Ash Wednesday begins, is a period, counting from Ash Wednesday and continuing for forty days, not counting Sundays. This period brings us to Easter. It is the most somber period of the church year.

During this time, Christians prepare their hearts and minds for the forthcoming Holy Week and the acts and events that occurred during that week and look forward to Easter.

reflections

These events begin with Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem on Palm Sunday. Subsequent events that week include his preaching and teaching, then his observance of the Passover with his disciples, his betrayal, capture, trial and crucifixion on what we now call Good Friday.

The Passover meal that Jesus and his disciples observed on Maundy Thursday was in the best

Jewish tradition. It originated just before the Exodus when God instructed the Israelites through Moses, to prepare a lamb to eat with their families and to sprinkle blood of the lamb on the threshold of their door. As you remember, the blood on the door would be seen by the Death Angel and he would "pass over" the homes where he saw the blood and their firstborn would not be killed. This was in response to the tenth plague, which was the death of all the first born.

Christians find the roots of the observance of Holy Communion in the Passover meal Jesus and his disciples celebrated on that Maundy Thursday.

We read that during the meal, Jesus took bread and broke it and passed it to his disciples and told them to eat it, that it was his body. Then he passed the cup of wine to them and told them all to drink of it, that it was his blood of the covenant, shed for the forgiveness of their sins. He explained to them that they should do this in remembrance of him. To refresh your memory of this, you may like to read Matthew 26:26-30.

The word Lent has several probable origins. It comes from a Middle English word meaning spring and from another word meaning to lengthen, pertaining to the lengthening of the days in the spring.

Different churches and denominations observe Lent in different ways. It was once a period when new converts were prepared for Holy Baptism. For some, denominations, it is still a season for preparation for "joining the church" and being baptized. For some, it is a season of prayer and fasting, self denial, repentance and Bible study in preparation for Easter.

Many give up something for Lent, for example, meat, desserts or other foods or smoking or alcoholic beverages. All of this is in the spirit of preparing for Easter.

The Lenten season comes to a climax on Good Friday when Jesus was crucified, which is the saddest of all days in the Christian year and ends with Holy Saturday while he was in the tomb.

Easter Sunday is a day of celebration of the resurrection of Christ and his triumph over death and the grave. It indicates new beginnings and new hope for new life after the Lenten season has ended.

If you are a Christian, why not consider observing Lent in some of the ways mentioned above. It will assist you in preparing for Easter.

Youth basketball season concludes

Players to square off in All-Star game

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

This season's Youth Service's basketball came to an end Saturday at the Youth Activities Center Gym.

In the 13- to 15-year-old division, Relentless barely defeated the Warriors 38-39. Daniel Demsey carried the Warriors with 22 points and Ernie Tyler of the Relentless scored 16.

The Tarheels trampled the Swoop 65-45. Ian Radcliffe of the Swoop knocked out 11 points and Cornelius Lights of the Tarheels scored a winning 15 points.

In the youngest division, 6- to 7-year-olds, the Spurs tied the Fort Benning Hawks 6-6. Bruce Grazier, LaQuinton Braye and Andrew Riley of the Spurs combined for 6 points while Dominic Robinson put down 4 points for the Hawks.

The Hawks defeated the Bulls 15-10. Rickey Jones of the Hawks scored 10 points while the Bulls' James Braddy's 8 points.

In 8- to 9-year-old action, the Bulls spiked the Spurs 12-10. Anthony Terrell of the Bulls carried the team with 8 points and the Spurs' Robert Nicholas' and Marcus Lewis' 5 points each.

The Sonics zoomed past the Magics at lightning speed as they won 28-19. Eddie Jones of the Sonics scored 15 over the Magics' Arthur Scott's and Javierre Marshell's team effort of 8 points each.

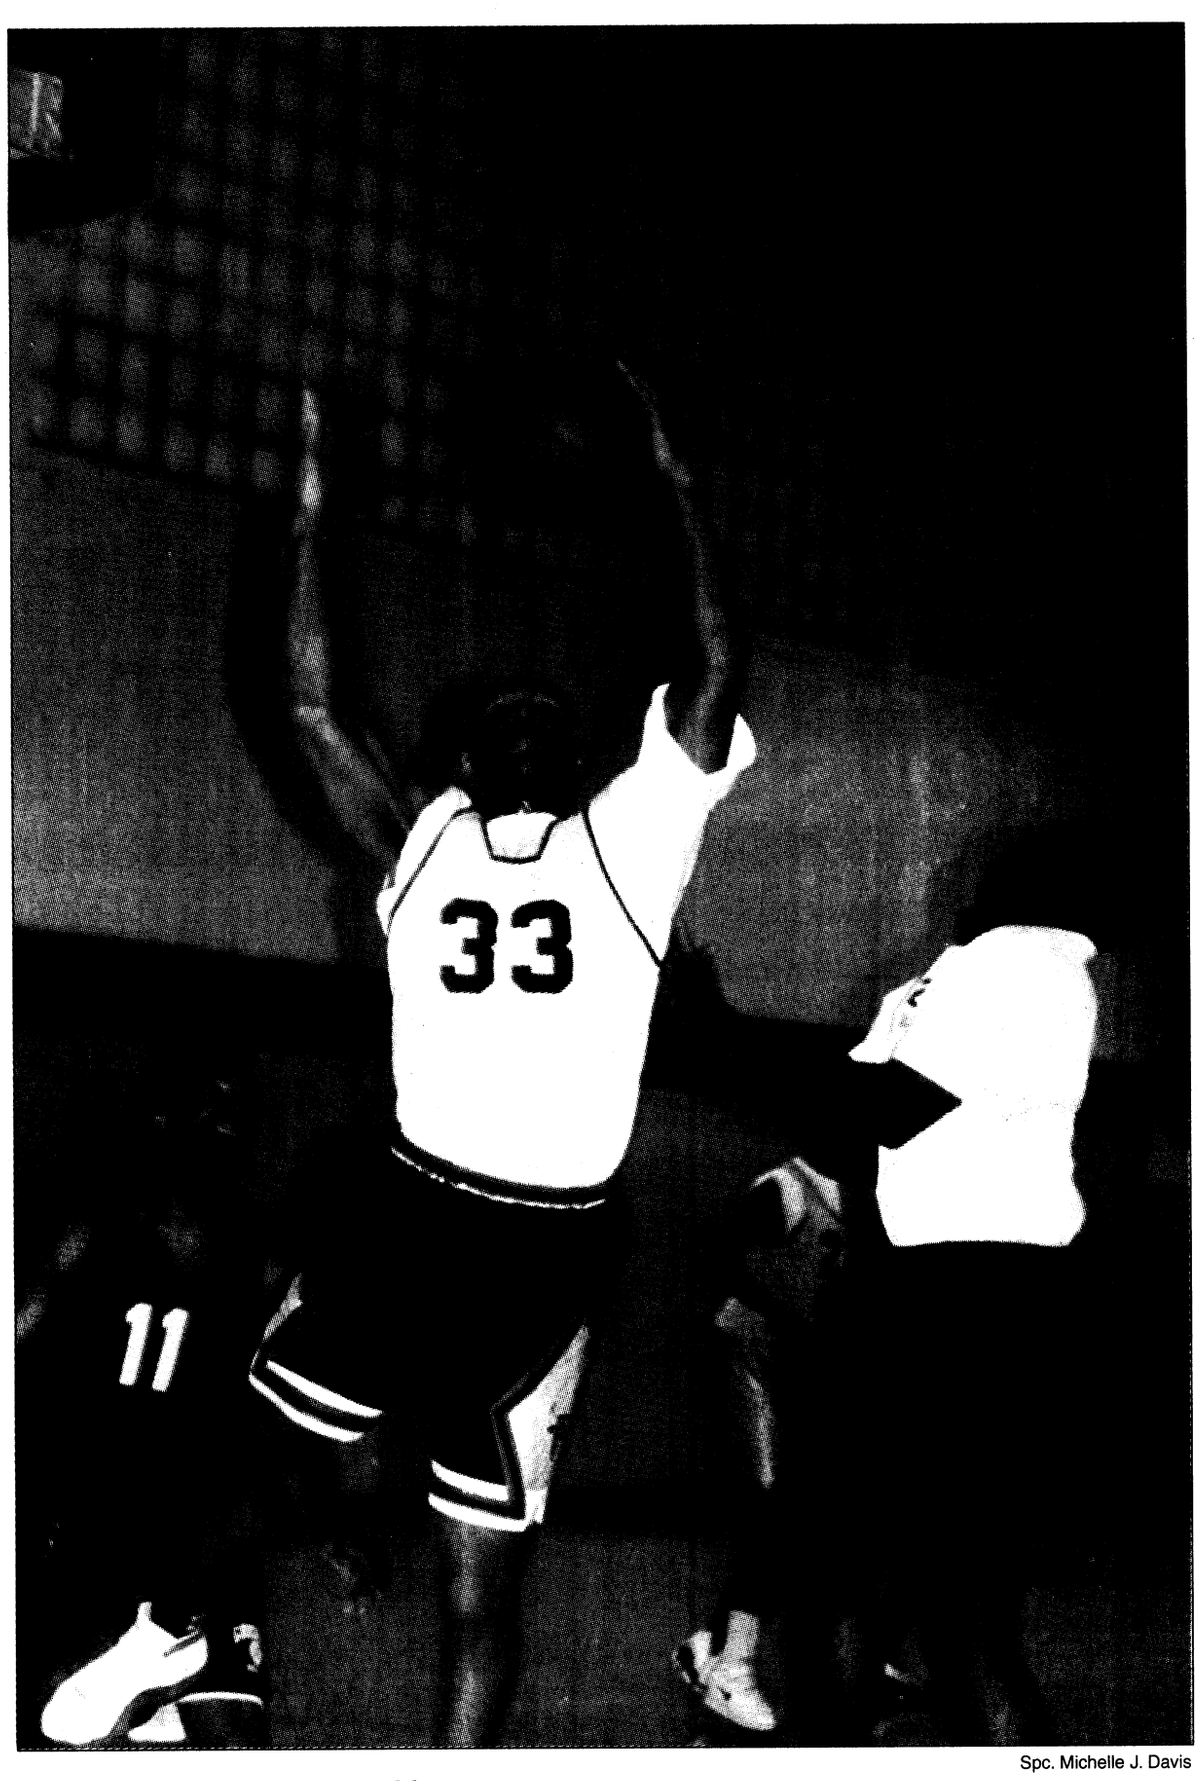
The Celtics devastated the Pacers 25-14. Warren Pruitt and Kahlee Tyler of the Pacers both scored 4 points while Leschelle Mathews and Steven Antonia of the Celtics carried the team with 8 points each.

The '76ers beat the Fort Benning Bulldogs 15-5. '76ers' Bishop Steward scored a winning 9 points. Bulldogs' Ross Brown and Joshua Bailey's teamed for 2 points each.

In the 10- to 12-year-old division, the Pistons shot out the '76ers 32-30. Robert Penn of the Pistons had the game high of 11 points while Marcus Patterson and Jonathan Cole of the '76ers scored 5 points each.

The Raptors barely squeezed past the Knicks 37-36. Percy Valentine of the Raptors scored 12 points and Breon Lewis put down 16 points for the Knicks.

In the last game of the season, the Warriors outlasted the Spurs 30-23. Jeffery Holley of the Warriors had 11 points while Derrick Powell of the Spurs scored 7 points.



Although the regular season is finished, the youth All-Star game is Saturday at noon.

For more information, call Youth Services at 545-3540.

USAMU continues winning streak

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Shooters from Fort Benning's U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories in the past few weeks.

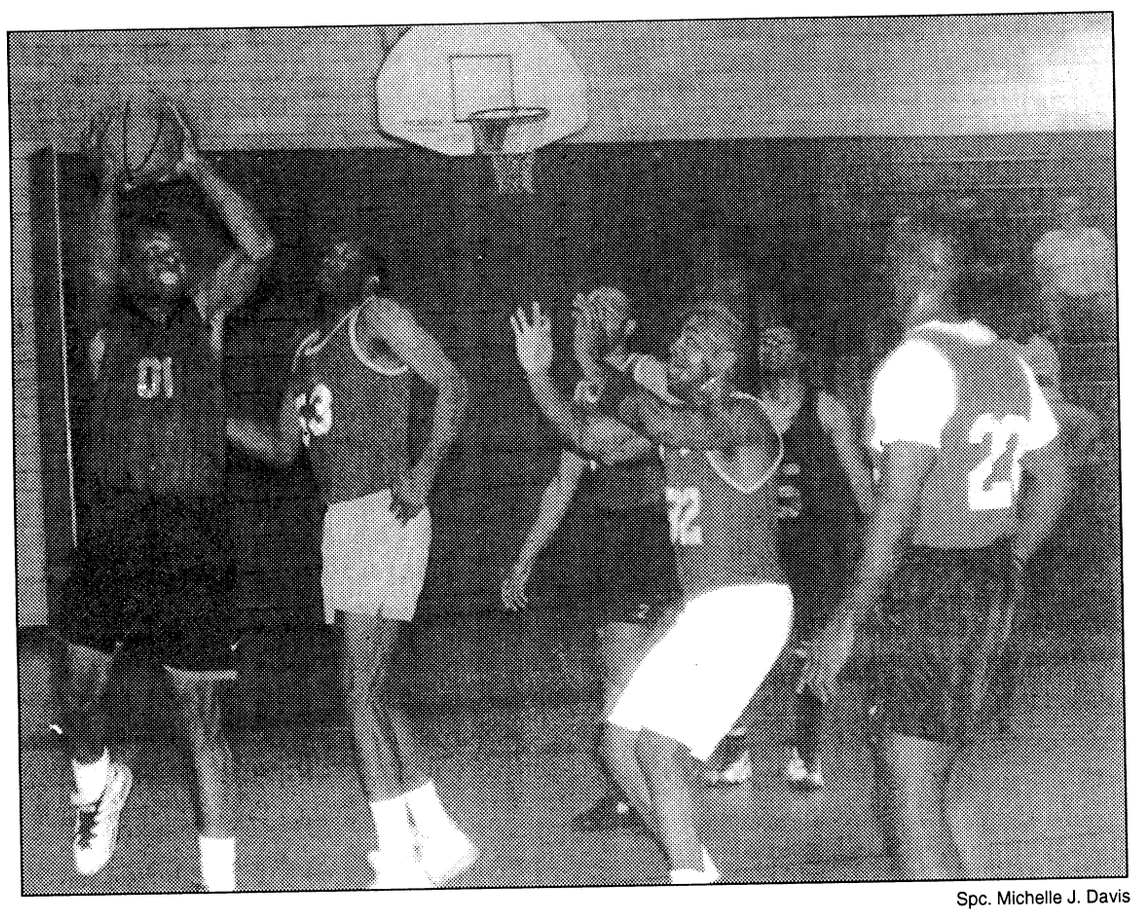
The following results are just some of their recent accomplishments:

During the Palm Bay Regionals in Palm Bay, Fla., Feb. 20-23, USAMU service rifle shooter Christopher S. Hatcher won the overall match Feb. 21. Kevin B. McMahon took first place and Norman L. Anderson placed third in the High Master Division. In the Master Class, Troy L. Alexander placed first, Emil Praslik III took second place and Charles W. Herlth Jr. took third.

USAMU shooters traveled to Helsinki, Finland Feb. 18-23 to take part in the Finish Nationals. Out of 140 competitors, running target shooter Armando R. Ayala placed third in the 30+30 Match and Lance D. Dement took fourth. In the Mixed Run 20+20 Match, Dement was fifth and Ayala seventh.

During the Florida Invitational Pistol Tournament Feb. 22 in Titusville, Fla., Harold A. Christy Jr. came in seventh out of 318 competitors. Julie A. Goloski took fourth place in the Women's Division.

During the monthly pistol training match Feb. 21 on Fort Benning, service pistol shooter Fritz A. Ficke won the Center Fire Match and took third in the .22-Caliber Match. Thomas A. Rose placed second in the .45-Caliber Match.



The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is currently preparing to host the International Grand Prix, which is scheduled for May 4-11. More than 30 countries from around the world are expected to participate.

This tournament will be the final tune-up match for the U.S. Shooting team as well as International shooters before they compete in the 1998 World Shooting Championships in Barcelona, Spain which is scheduled for July.

All shooting events will be held at USAMU Ranges which are adjacent to Soldiers Plaza and all events are open to the public.

Match schedules will be posted in the Bayonet closer to the start of the International Grand Prix.

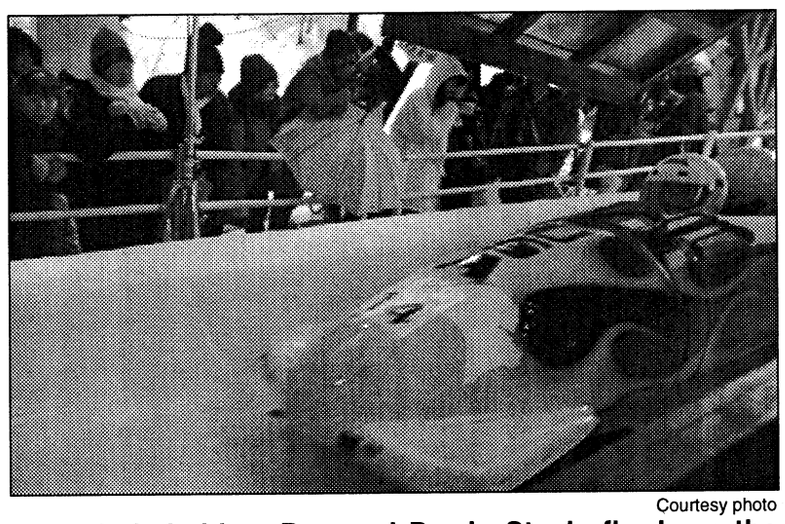
Army Athletes leave Nagano empty handed

By Harry F. Thompson
Pacific Stars and Stripes

NAGANO, Japan — If success is only measured in medals, then the U.S. military athletes participating in the XVIII Winter Olympic Games fell well short of expectations.

The U.S. military sent nine athletes, its largest contingent ever to a Winter Games and still came up empty handed. A service member hasn't stood on the medals podium since five Soldiers helped bring home the silver in hockey in 1972.

Like those before them, these Olympians came to Nagano with the same goal as any athlete, to represent their country, their services and themselves.



"I'm still an Olympian, and that in itself means a lot," said the Army's Garrett Hines, the brakeman on the USA I bobsled that missed the bronze medal by two-hundreths of a second in the four-man competition.

"It goes to show you that nothing is guaranteed. I'm just glad we got it over with and did the best we could."

It was never that close in the biathlon, where the highest placement for an American was 33rd by the Army's Kristina Viljanen-Sabasteanski in the women's 7.5-kilometer individual sprint.

But any hope of a U.S. medal here was not based on history. No American biathlete had ever finished higher than 14th and there was little chance of it happening on the challenging 4-kilometer course in Nozawa Onsen.

That string was easily kept intact, as the Americans not only battled a world-class field but the elements as well. From the opening race, the women's 15-kilometer individual, the U.S. was stumped by the snow conditions. Throughout the two-weeks of racing, "we picked the wrong skis" was the battle cry from the U.S. camp.

"We've seen a thunder and lightning storm in the snow, and a thunder and lightning storm in the rain, we've had brand new snow, wet snow, dry snow. It was crazy," said Army World Class Athlete Program member Kara Salmela.

It will be a short holiday before the U.S. biathlon team gets back to work. After a quick stop in Hawaii and a short visit at home, they're off again to Europe for the final month of the season. Then it's back to the U.S. for the national competition, and then it's time to start training for Salt Lake City.

Most were already laying the groundwork for that in their minds as the last fireworks trickled to the ground marking the end of the last Winter Games of the millennium.

Just as the unknown Japanese biathletes enjoyed their best Olympic success on home snow, the U.S. team hopes to use the local conditions and high altitude of the Rocky Mountains.

"It should be nice in 2002," said the Army's Dan Westover, who finished 49th in his 10-kilometer race. "If we're going to do anything in biathlon, that's the year."

This was considered the year the United States would finally win another bobsled medal. It had been 42 years since Arthur Tyler drove USA I to the bronze medal at Cortina d'Ampezzo.

The 1998 counterpart of Tyler's sled, driven by Brian Shimer, was one of the favorites not only to take home a medal, but likely the gold.

After completing only three of four scheduled runs because of rain, the U.S. missed a medal by the blink of an eye.

"Even though we didn't win, today was the highlight of the Games, just knowing you were with the best on the hill and you competed against the best and anything can happen," said Hines, of Atlanta.

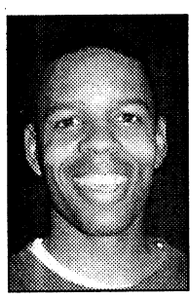
"I feel a little disappointed but in a way I'm glad that it's over with. Now I can go on and do some other things."

Those other things include possibly enrolling in officer's candidate school or returning to his first love, track and field.

"I would like to do OCS, but I don't know how willing they'd be to allow me to maintain my athleticism without causing me to go so far away from what I'm used to as far as training," said the former track and football star at Southern Illinois University.

"Military training for officers and enlisted men is not conducive to athletic training. If there was a way for that to happen, I'd like to do it."

For the time being, Hines is ready for a break and a long-awaited honeymoon with his wife Fleana.



Army bobsledders Dan and Darrin Steele have Olympic plans of their own. They were decathletes before they hit the icy slopes and they're looking to go back to the roots.

"I'm going back to track and field," said Dan Steele, a former All-American in the decathlon at Eastern Illinois University. "I'll be doing that through 2000 and hopefully make the Games in Sydney in the decathlon. And there's a good chance you'll see me in 2001 getting ready for 2002 in Salt Lake City."

For all the military athletes here, and for those with future Olympic aspirations, any run toward Sydney or Salt Lake will be powered by the World Class Athlete Program.

"For sure, as long as the World Class Athlete Program is around. That'll be a big bonus for all the people who are going to train for Utah," said Army biathlete Robert Rosser, of Bend, Ore.

Vice President Al Gore shakes hands with school children prior to his departure from Lawson Army Airfield.

Vice president visits Fort Benning

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Vice President Al Gore landed at Lawson Army Airfield Monday morning to waves and cheers of a small crowd of Columbus and Fort Benning residents.

Gore flew to Fort Benning on his way to visit Columbus State University to discuss a summit concerning lifetime learning and to learn more about the school's Intellectual Capital Partnership Program. The program trains workers to fill high-tech jobs. After Gore announced the summit, he returned to Fort Benning and flew to Atlanta.

When Air Force Two left later in the afternoon, the Infantry Band was playing, commanders and command sergeants major were part of the color guard and school children were talking about future political aspirations after shaking hands with the vice president.

All of Fort Benning schools sent student representatives to the airfield for the opportunity to see the vice president, but more than 200 third-, fourth- and fifth-graders walked approximately two miles from Wilson Elementary School.

"It was worth the walk," said fifth-grader Donald Francis. "I got to shake his hand — it was cool."

People of all ages echoed Francis' opinion.

"How often do you get to see the vice president of the United States and get to shake his hand?" Capt. Patrick Garcia, U.S. Army School of the Americas, asked.

"Seeing how the kids reacted to him also made coming down to the airfield worth it," Garcia continued. "The kids were screaming 'I touched him' like he was a rock star, not the vice president."

Seeing Gore in person changed some of the students' opinions of him.

Ten-year-old Erika Sledge said Gore looks younger in person than she expected.

"At first I thought he was old, but he turned out to be young," she said.

Sledge described shaking Gore's hand as a once in a lifetime opportunity.

"I shook the vice president's hand," she said. "I'm never going to wash my hand again! I'm going to write to all of my friends in Texas and tell them about Vice President Gore coming to Fort Benning. This was a once in a lifetime opportunity."

Fifth-grader Gary Moken, 11, said he was excited about seeing the vice president of the United States and hopes to be the president or the vice president someday.

"On the walk here I told my classmates that someday I would be the president. People look up to you if you're the president or the vice president of the United States."

Judge finds protesters guilty of vandalizing federal property

USAIC Public Affairs Office

After deliberating for less than one hour Wednesday, a federal jury convicted three women and two men for attempting to damage or destroy government property.

The three-day trial, which started Monday, found the five defendants guilty of the felony charge of willfully and maliciously vandalizing the Fort Benning welcome sign at the entrance of the post last September.

The defendants used crowbars to pry the metal letters from the sign and then spray painted anti-U.S. Army School of the Americas slogans on the wall.

During the trial, the protesters admitted to the vandalism, but refused to show repentance arguing their actions were in protest of the U.S. Army School of the Americas. In the past, protesters have accused the school of teaching human rights abuse in Latin and South America. Army officials, however, said the school strongly supports human rights and is responsible for promoting democracy throughout Latin and Central America.

The five are expected to be sentenced in several weeks, which could carry a prison sentence of six years.

Another protester, John Patrick Liteky, was arrested Feb. 25 by Department of Defense police and charged with criminal trespass and injury to government property.

Liteky, a protester since 1990, was charged after splattered red print on the entrance of the U.S. Army School of the Americas building and threw protest message leaflets on the school grounds.

"Someone saw him approach the entrance to the building and then he began spraying red paint and throwing pamphlets everywhere," said Capt. Kevin McIver, USARSA, Public Affairs officer.

Liteky was detained by military police for about four hours, charged, and then released.

Liteky, who will be arraigned in several weeks, has been arrested in the past for acting out his protest against the school.

AER campaign kicks off, benefits Soldiers

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Army Emergency Relief fund campaign kicked off Monday afternoon after the vice president left Fort Benning.

"This morning wasn't a rehearsal," Col. Ron Greene, garrison commander, said in reference to the kick-off ceremony, which was originally scheduled for the morning and postponed for later in the afternoon.

The kick-off ceremony was attended mostly by key personnel, people assigned to represent the post's various units during the campaign.

Greene told the key personnel this was one of two authorized fund activities the Army sanctions — the Combined Federal Campaign and AER.

"This campaign, in my opinion, is the most important one we do every year because it is us taking care of our own.

"The way to take of our own is by telling everyone in the unit about the opportunity to contribute to the campaign," he said.

Last year's campaign was very successful, Greene said. Contributions to the AER campaign were $175,000, $20,000 more than the goal.

This year's goal remains the same — $155,000.

Al Deane, AER officer, talked about how Fort Benning benefited from the money received.

Fort Benning Soldiers and family members received more than $850,000 in interest-free loans or grants last year and during the past six to seven years received $4 million in aid.

The campaign lasts until May 15.

AER helps Soldiers, retirees and family members with emergency financial needs for rent, food and utilities, emergency transportation and vehicle repairs, funeral expenses, etc.

Roadways lead to new learning

commentary

The meaning of Lent for most Catholics is giving something up.

Still stuck in our childhood, we think of it as meatless Fridays and giving up something like candy, desserts or television.

The last Sunday before Lent, our pastor made the astonishing observation that if we really wanted to purge our souls, it made more sense to give up negative feelings such as anger and hatred.

I weighed giving up anger with giving up snacks and decided maybe he had a point.

Now normally I'm a pretty cool guy, but there are two exceptions. One is when I'm behind the wheel of a car and some dunderhead executes an incredibly obtuse move in front of me. The other is when I'm on the golf course and I make an incredibly obtuse shot.

I figured my soul would be much better off without all that anger, so I vowed to give up road rage (golf rage would have to wait, one step at a time).

Now the wife doesn't believe I can do this. And I can tell you, don't try it without a plan.

Fortunately I had a plan, a means to cope, a way to diffuse my anger.

And because of that, so far I'm hanging in there.

The way I cope is by putting myself in the place of the errant driver. I imagine excuses for these people who have been put on the highways and byways to test me.

If I'm sitting at an intersection, waiting to pull into the lane of traffic and someone fails to signal a turn, which would have given me that opportunity, now, instead of screaming obscenities, I smile to myself and say, that poor person, I bet she's got carpal tunnel syndrome and can't operate her turn signal without a lot of pain.

When I'm behind a driver doing 55 mph in the left lane of the interstate, instead of getting on his bumper and gnashing my teeth and making gestures, I now tell myself he pays his road tax just like I do and he has every right in the world to help the police enforce the speed limit — even if it means causing a wreck along the way.

The same for the person putt-putting down the single lane road. I now tell myself it's my fault I'm impatient with his driving, that if I'd left earlier, I wouldn't be in such a rush.

For people who suddenly pull out in front of me from a driveway or side road, causing me to hit the brakes, then poke along for one block before pulling back off the road, I have only positive thoughts. I know on the surface he may appear to be an incompetent boob who thinks the road belongs solely to him, but really he has a calling and needs to get to that special place as fast as he can.

Finding an excuse for drivers who continue to make left hand turns into the mall, long after the green arrow's turned red was tough. But after much soul searching I came to realize these fine citizens have a mission to get to the mall before it closes. By doing so, they are pumping money into our economy. Remember, time is money.

Of course, if the Columbus Police Department would do like the Germans and place a camera at these intersections to record violations, their coffers would be overflowing and they could buy all the high-tech equipment they need.

For people who do not understand the meaning of "acceleration lane," I reflect on the fact that in these here parts motor vehicles and interstates are a fairly recent phenomenon. Thus, they are just now getting a hang on how to enter interstates.

And by golly, they need to learn somewhere, so why not in front of me?

Over and over and over again.

Especially blessed are they who honk at me when they are at fault.

But I've even rationalized this one. I've come to the conclusion they are so embarrassed at nearly running me off the road, cutting in front of me, suddenly stopping in front of me, that they honk to cover up. They hope that those who witnessed this idiotic maneuver will think I, the innocent victim of their bad driving, am really the one at fault. So by forgiving their trespasses, I make myself out as the bigger person.

Finally, special thanks to the boom boxes on wheels drivers. I appreciate you sharing your "music" with me and while in the past I may have gotten annoyed, I now just turn off my radio and listen to yours.

Since the day I gave up road rage, I've felt a lot more content with myself, it's like a great weight has been lifted from my soul.

I'm at peace with the world.

And one of these days I may even try it at golf.

Post Commander thanks Soldiers, civilians involved in VP visit

Monday was another tremendous day at Fort Benning. As most of you know, Vice President Al Gore visited Columbus State University and used Lawson Army Airfield for his arrival and departure.

It was a great day because of the fantastic Soldiers, civilian workforce and family members who make Fort Benning a special place to live, work and play.

In addition to the vice president, we were also honored by having a number of other distinguished guests on hand. Georgia Governor Zell Miller, Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters, U.S. Representative Sanford Bishop and State Senator Calvin Smyre were there to help welcome the vice president, Senator Max Cleland and Secretary of Education Dick Riley.

Visits like this just don't happen — it takes a lot of hard work by a lot of folks to make it happen to our very high Fort Benning standards.

As you can imagine, security and force protection are key to any movement of our national leadership.

Once again our military police demonstrated why they are the best in the world. They worked closely with the secret service and state and local police to develop and execute a flawless security plan.

Our folks who run Lawson Army Airfield did an equally superb job in managing the demands associated with the travel of the White House staff and security.

The unsung heroes of these types of visits are the folks who coordinate hundreds of visits by VIPs each year — our Infantry Center protocol section. Once again their special touch ensured our visiting dignitaries felt welcomed and were properly cared for. Our commanders, their command sergeants major and color guards and the Infantry Band all looked great. It was also great to see several hundred of our school children and their teachers walking down the hill to Lawson Army Airfield to attend the ceremony and meet the vice president.

The vice president was introduced and spoke to the Soldier of the Year, Spc. Rebekah Champouillon and NCO of the Year, Cpl. Damon Torres; Drill Sergeant of the Year, Staff Sgt. Sean Polwort; Staff Sgt. Nick Struzik, a 75th Ranger veteran of Somalia, Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools; and Medal of Honor recipient Retired Col. Bob Nett.

Everyone was magnificent and represented Fort Benning and the Army in a great way. It was evident to the Vice President and his staff that they were at the best installation in the world.

It was definitely a "Hooah" kind of day.

Thanks to all of you for what you do for Fort Benning, our Army and our nation each and every day. You make this "old Soldier" proud as indeed I am privileged to serve with you.

Hooah!

P.S. And finally to all the Soldiers who "volunteered" for those extra police calls — thanks.

Nutrition Month promotes healthy diet and lifestyles

Good nutrition and a healthy lifestyle are force multipliers. National Nutrition Month enables us to focus on the importance of nutrition and its impact on fitness, wellness, and prevention of chronic illnesses. Along with other Americans, the military community has an opportunity and an obligation to learn more about good nutrition.

Every March, National Nutrition Month is celebrated nationwide. This year's theme, "Make Nutrition Come Alive — It's All About You," emphasizes our individual responsibility to make meeting our nutrition goals part of our daily lives. Good eating habits should not be sacrificed due to our fast-paced lives. Nutrition and readiness are linked and inseparable. Active-duty Soldiers, Department of Defense civilians, family members and retirees all benefit from a healthy diet. Make good nutrition part of every day; it forms the necessary foundation for everything you do.

I strongly urge all of the Fort Benning community to take advantage of the many nutrition education opportunities available during the National Nutrition Month and throughout the year. Set the example for your families, Soldiers and peers and "Make Nutrition Come Alive — It's All About You!"

Overall wellness — diet, lifestyle and exercise is important to all of us.

DTS conducts anti-terrorism training

Directorate of Threat Security

During the last 25 years the world has been plagued with acts of violence. The threat of terrorist activity is an increasing and ongoing world-wide problem.

"Anytime we turn our backs, when we become complacent and mostly when we least expect it," said 2nd Lt. Michael O'Connor, Directorate of Threat Security intelligence specialist, "terrorism surfaces its ugly head on the world."

During the 1972 Olympic Games in Munich, the spirit of the Olympic Games was scarred by the terrorist killings of the Israeli National team.

In Beirut, the destruction of the U.S. Marine headquarters building caused the single greatest loss of American military personnel to a single terrorist act.

The bombing of the Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, Okla., and the 1996 bombing at the Olympic Games in Atlanta proves that terrorism truly knows no boundaries.

The United States has projected its presence and influence to all parts of the world.

"In every corner of the globe, we have made our presence felt, displayed our military power and promoted the idea of democracy," O'Connor said. "Our Soldiers and their families live and work all over the world. These are the places where they raise their families. These will indefinitely be the places that must be prepared for an unexpected, ever-present ongoing threat. Unfortunately, our ideals, influence and mere presence have made us unlimited targets of opportunity."

The terrorist mission is simple — strike the one who influences the majority, O'Connor said. The power to influence other governments and to create change puts the United States in a vulnerable position.

"The violent acts of terrorism that are readily committed on this great nation are meant to do one thing — to intimidate us to succumb to terrorist demands," he said.

The Army, along with the Department of Defense (DoD), has taken a determined interest to assure that citizens are protected and aware of the world wide terrorist threat. DoD has created a series of initiatives committed to defeat the menace of terrorism around the world. To combat these threats, individual awareness of terrorists tactics, techniques and procedures (TTP's) are essential to protect Americans.

The DoD has made it mandatory that all Soldiers and civilian employees departing on PCS, TDY, or going overseas (outside the 50 U.S. States) receive Anti-terrorist Level 1 training.

Fort Benning is no exception to this commitment of awareness. As a part of Soldier levy briefings, the Foreign Analysis Division, Directorate of Threat and Security, conducts anti-terrorist Level 1 training every Wednesday. This training takes place at 2 p.m. in Building 2605, Soldiers Plaza.

This mandatory training requirement must be met before personnel are permitted to depart to for overseas assignments. Notifications of the Anti-Terrorist Level 1 Training are sent to each unit as a part of the AG Levy Brief Memorandum.

Two ranger students prepare to box as Sgt. 1st Class Bryan Finch, ranger instructor with Company A, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, gives the thumbs up that the Soldiers are ready to box.

Boxing: Students 'put up their dukes' at Ranger School

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiers going through the U.S. Army Ranger School have a multitude of tasks to learn and execute. They learn how to work as a team, climb up and down mountains and navigate over swamp terrain. The Soldiers also learn to box. Boxing is now a required period of instruction for the school.

Each student goes through three periods of instruction learning hand-to-hand techniques. In the fourth period the students don gloves, head and waist gear and a mouthpiece and knock each other around. Each round is only 15 seconds. The matches take place on a drop zone near the Darby Queen Obstacle Course at Camp Darby.

"Everything we have taught them in previous hand-to-hand instruction leads up to this — the "live-fire" of hand-to-hand," said Staff Sgt. Jay Carter, NCOIC of the hand-to-hand instruction.

After the boxing is completed, Carter said the students probably won't use the techniques again while in Ranger School. He said the idea is for them to take the training back to their units and share the knowledge.

"We try to teach them (the students) some basic stuff in hopes they'll incorporate it in their physical training (PT) sessions," Carter said. "Hand-to-hand is a good conditioner, it is good for physical fitness and it builds confidence."

The hand-to-hand training begins with the very basics of boxing. Period one happens on the second day of Ranger School. Carter said the students learn the basic stances, punches, how to use their elbows and how to use their knees and feet.

Period two, which is taught on the same day, has the students defending themselves.

Carter said they are taught counters to punches and kicks.

Period three is a refresher course for what has been already taught, Carter said. This block of instruction leads up to the 15-second boxing match.

Before the boxing begins, the ranger instructors put the students through a 30-minute workout or "smokefest."

It includes 50 side-straddle hops at a fast pace, 50 mountain climbers, 50 more side-straddle hops, push-ups and leg-lifts for time limits and finally extra work on boxing stances and punches.

During the workout, screams of "you can quit anytime," came from the instructors. "All you need to do is bad mouth this country and it's all over." No one quit. No one stopped trying. All were groaning and grimacing.

Carter said the workout is essential.

"The stretchout prevents injuries," he said. "It also warms them up and adds some tension to the event. Once they get into the ring it's all out for 15 seconds."

All the pain and agony seemed to go away as the Soldiers gathered around the four mock boxing rings. Three companies take part in the boxing at one time. Each company has one ring and the fourth ring is for anyone who has had boxing experience.

The students were paired with another Soldier from a different company who has about the same build and height. The Soldiers gathered around the ring to act as ring-ropes — if one or both of the fighters move beyond the ring's boundaries the students push the fighter back into the ring.

Inside the ring with the fighters are two ranger instructors. Carter said they are there to make sure the students don't get out of control. The center piece of the four rings is a five-foot high podium where Carter stands and watches all the fights. He blows a whistle to begin fighting and 15 seconds later, he blows the whistle again to signal the match is over.

Once a match is over, both fighters quickly move to see a medic. Two medics are positioned at every ring, plus an ambulance and a physicians' assistant stand nearby in case they are needed.

The medics check each Soldier for dizziness, bleeding and their motor skills — basically to see if there are any problems.

The night before the matches, all students are checked out to see if there are any recent physical problems, Carter said. That way, the medics will know if a Soldier might develop a problem stemmed from.

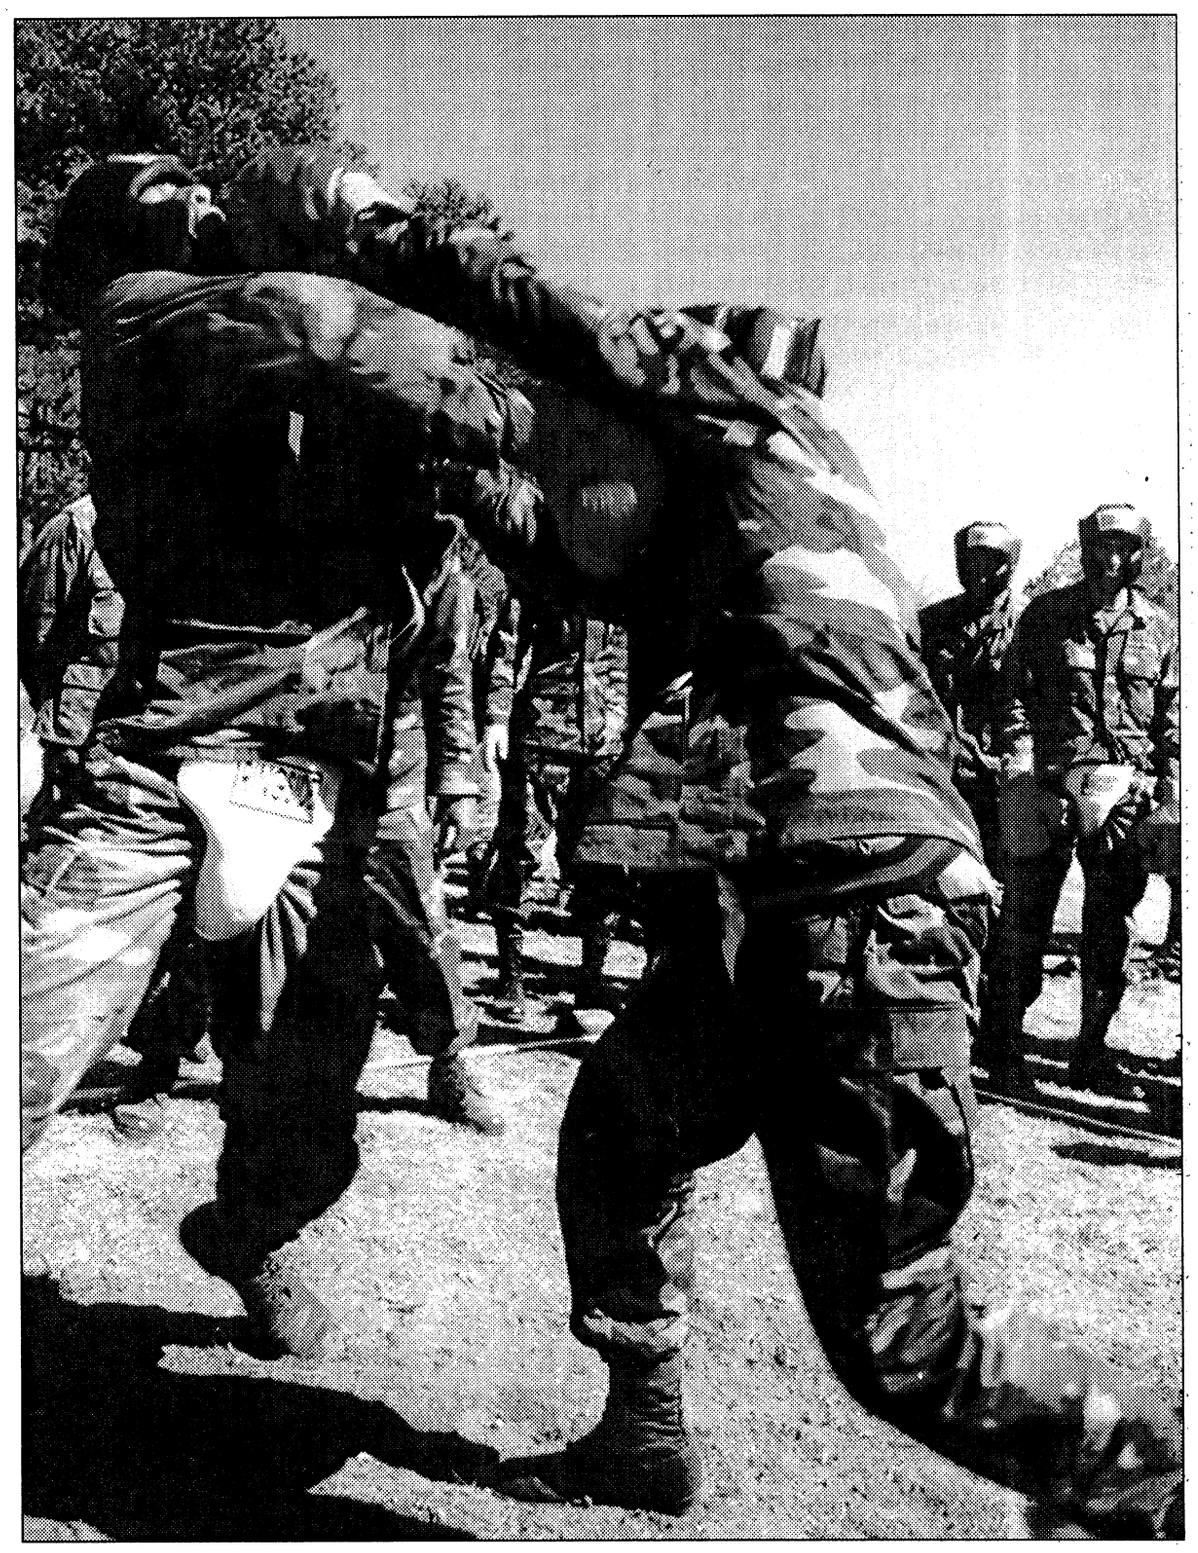
The medics also rub alcohol on the gloves the Soldiers use after each fight. This is to prevent any disease transmittal during the matches.

"We've had a couple of people knocked down," Carter said. "We had one guy break his nose. But that didn't keep him from staying in the course and graduating."

Carter said the time limit for each match is to protect the students.

"The brigade commander didn't want anyone getting hurt badly," Carter said. "We haven't had any real serious injuries since we started boxing More students get hurt on runs."

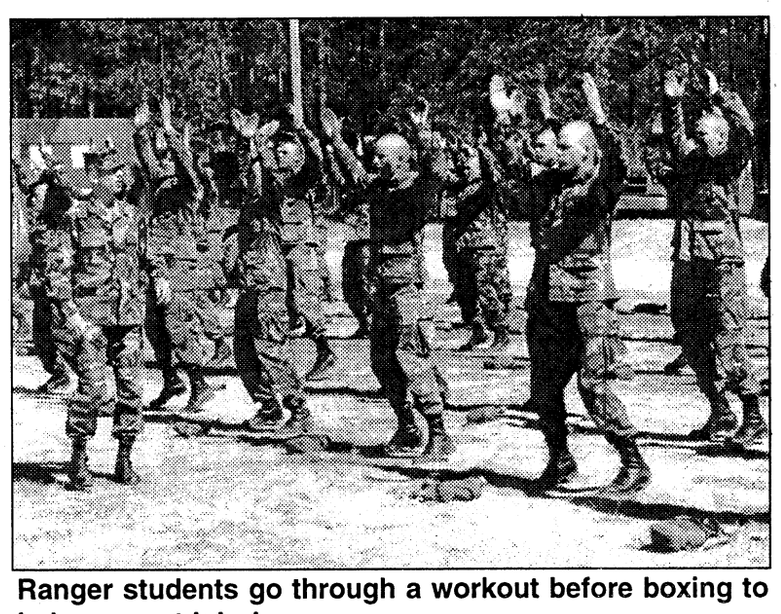
Boxing officially became a requirement for ranger school in October 1997.



The school also took on a more aggressive look with the addition of boxing, bayonet and pugil-stick training, the remodeling and refurbishing of student objectives at Fort Benning, new mountain climbing techniques at Camp Merril, Dahlonega, Ga., and the newly established ship-to-shore training going on at Camp Rudder, Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

A ranger school official said the boxing portion is meant to make the ranger student more rigorous.

"We want to toughen our people up," Lt. Col. Eric Hutchings said, 4th Ranger Training Battalion commander. "Our students need to be able to receive a blow and then return one."



Hutchings said in a real combat situation, when the time comes for the close battle, the hand-to-hand fight won't last long.

"After the first couple of punches, it's over," he said. "I want our guys giving those first punches."

Coffey, USAMU; Staff Sgt. Charles E. Haley, Co. C, 5th RTB; and Staff Sgt. Robert L. Pierce, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"These are the best of the best of Fort Benning," said guest speaker Command Sgt. Maj. Edmond Singleton of the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. to the crowd of more than 170 people.

"These Soldiers have been challenged and have rose to the occasion," he said. "Today is their day. They are all winners in my eyes."

Once the winners were announced Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst and the post's top enlisted Soldier Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen presented each with an Army Achievement Medal and congratulated them on their victory.

"These are the Soldiers who truly standout of the 25,000 Soldiers we have on post on any given day," Ernst said. "I have respect and admiration for all of today's nominees. These are the individuals that make Fort Benning truly great."

The Soldier and NCO of the Quarter were also presented with gifts from the competition's sponsors. The sponsors were: 4-N-One restaurant, the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, the Association of the U.S. Army, Columbia Bank and Trust, Express Boot Repair, First Union Bank, Freeway Ford, GEICO Insurance, the Military Benefits Association, McCoy Environmental Technician, NCOA, Pioneer Military Lending, Ranger Joe's, the Sergeants Major Association, Sam's Club, the Barracks Phone Center - Sprint, TIC, the United Armed Forces Association, USPA, IRA, Regency Jewelers, US Cavalry, the Ledger-Enquirer.

Army Career and Alumni Program

Academic and skills education and training should be considered well before deciding to separate from the Army.

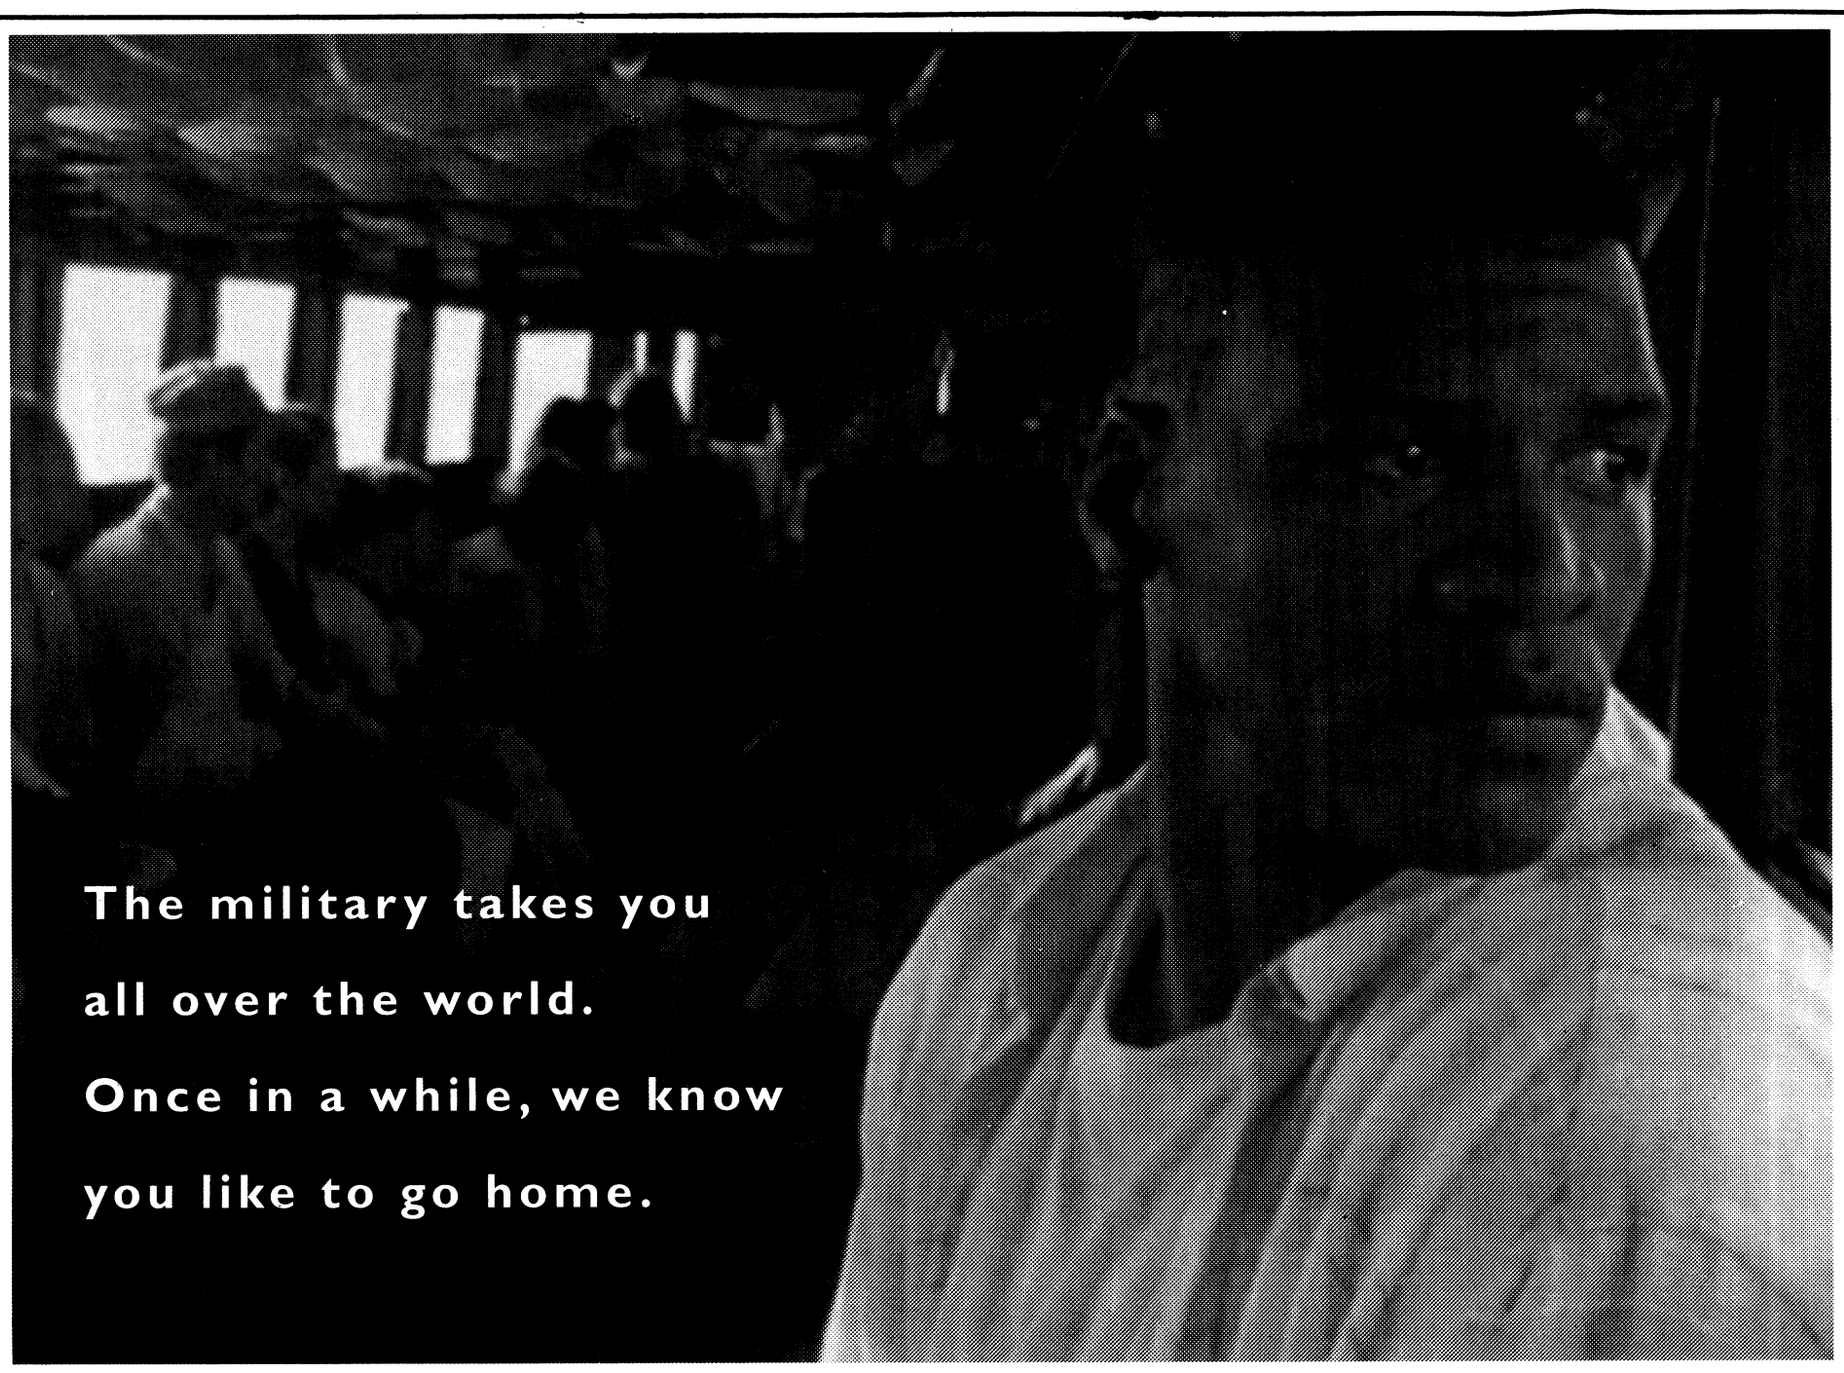
"Soldiers and their families should take a good look at the benefits of formal education and training opportunities before and after separation from the Army," said Chick Eagle, a counselor at the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) center. "The best place to go for information and counseling about training and education is the Fort Benning Education Center in Soldiers' Plaza. It really helps to make some long range occupational goals before visiting the Education Center if possible to make academic and training decisions easier. Education and ACAP counselors can be much more helpful when the client has his or her goal well established."

When the decision has been made on the school and study program, the next concern is usually funding, Eagle said.

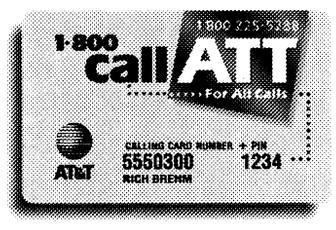
There are many funding programs available to Soldiers and families and advice is available at the Education Center on funding while on active duty and after separation.

For many Soldiers, the Veterans Administration Office, also located in Soldiers' Plaza, has information about G.I. Bill programs and procedures. Additional retraining program funding might be available through the Georgia Department of Labor (other states, too) and the federally funded Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA).

Also, each college, school or training institution has a tuition advisor to help prospective students find available grants, scholarship and loan options.



"Separating Soldiers should focus on funding options other than loans if at all possible," said Eagle.



Each Wednesday morning from 9 a.m. to noon in the ACAP Center a financial aid expert from Fort Valley State College is there to help.

Under a Department of Education grant, Dorothy Bass-Scruggs provides information about student financial aid to separating Soldiers, family members or any other interested Fort Benning personnel. Bass-Scruggs has a computer database with information about available education funding programs from colleges across the nation and will assist personnel with completion of applications for financial aid.

"The spring semester is about to begin and the time is right to start working on those academic credentials or professional skill certifications," Eagle said. "Start by visiting your Fort Benning Education Center."

For more information about ACAP, call 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza.

School brings author's literary creation to life

By Pvt.1 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

It's green, slimy and somewhere in between a liquid and a solid. It resembles a science project gone terribly wrong. When you poke it it's hard and when you hold it in your hands it gushes through your fingers. Many parents may be scared to let their children touch it. However at White Elementary School children were encouraged to play with it.

This interesting substance is called Ooblek. Ooblek was just one way children in pre-K, third and fourth grade at White Elementary School helped celebrate Dr. Seuss's birthday Monday.

The children took time to eat cupcakes with Ooblek colored sprinkles and play with the Ooblek as part of celebrating Dr. Seuss's birthday and the joy of reading. It was also part of the children's studies on solids, liquids and gasses, according to Cynthia K. Hill, a third and fourth grade teacher at White Elementary School.

The word Ooblek comes from Dr. Seuss's book Bartholomew and the Ooblek. Scientists invented the substance and received permission from Dr. Seuss before he died to use the word Ooblek to name it, Hill said.

She said, playing with the Ooblek helps the children to better grasp the concept of solid, liquid and gas. "Ooblek allows them to come up with their own ideas and opinions," Hill said. "It also allows them to experiment and form a hypothesis and reasoning.

"I'm the best teacher in the world after this project. The children absolutely love it," Hill said.

"My favorite thing about the Ooblek is when I put it on my fingers and it slimes of my hands," said Kelly Parker, a third grader and daughter of Maj. Christine Parker, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity.

"It's gooshy and slimy. It's like it melts when you touch it," said Stephen Ott, a third grader and son of Marisol and Sgt. Michael Ott, Marine Corps liaison office.

Dr. Seuss has become an important part of the curriculum and a high interest for the children said Janie Pride, a pre-K teacher at the school.

There are books and CD-Rom's where the children can explore the world of Dr. Seuss on the computer.

"Children cannot grasp the concept of death. It is hard for them to understand the celebration of Dr. Seuss's birthday when he isn't around. The most important thing for them to understand is that we are celebrating that he still lives with us through his books," Pride said.

The celebration also promoted "Read Across America." The promotion encouraged parents and children to read a book Monday night. Children received certificates for reading a book.

Community gathers for 'Read Across America'

More than 200 students and parents gathered at Stowers Elementary to listen to readings of children's books. The event was conducted March 2 in honor of the late children's book author, Dr. Seuss.

Among the books read at the event called "Read Across America" were Chicken Little by Steven Kellogg and I Was So Mad by Mercer Mayer.

"I can remember when I used to read to my own children and I still love reading to kids," said Col. Michael Bingham, chief of staff, U.S. Army Infantry School.

Bingham, who is the president of the Fort Benning School Board, was invited to read along with other people from the community, including Cynthia Calix, president of the Stowers Parent–Teacher Organization and Rosalyn Giles of WRBL-TV, Columbus, along with various teachers.

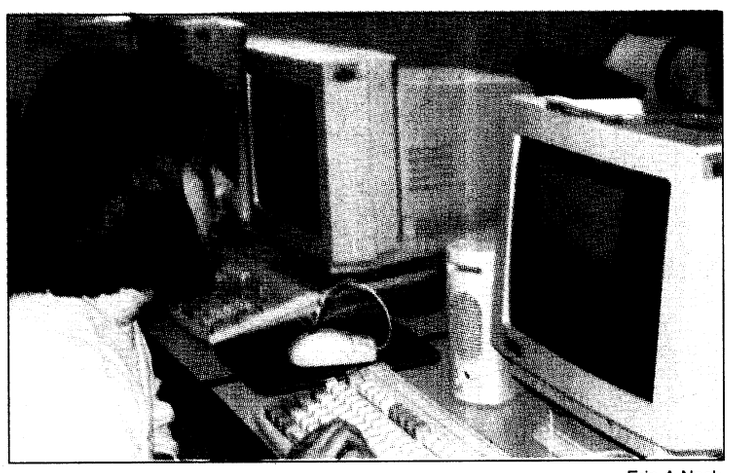
Principal Glenn Hughes, read Shel Silverstein's Where the Sidewalk Ends during the evening. Hughes said, "Our goal was to provide an evening to present books to children in an effort to get them to read more often."

He said he still reads to his daughter every night and some of her favorite books are from the "Berenstein Bears" series.

"I think this will encourage the kids to read more. I know my kids like it," said Sgt. 1st Class, Guy Nadeau, Bradley New Equipment Training Team.

"I would never hear the end of it from my children if I didn't take them," said Sgt. 1st Class, John Cox 1st Battalion, 50th Inf. Regt.

Cox added that extra curricular activities like "Read Across America" are perfect opportunities to get parents involved in the community by meeting other parents and students.



Hughes' advice to parents was to keep children interested in reading by encouraging them read books they relate to.

"Parents make themselves good role models when they read with their children."

Students at White Elementary School are keeping up with the times and they way they are doing it is with computers.

The computer lab has been up and running for about a month, said Teresa Sawyer, a fifth-grade teacher.

"The computer lab gives us the capability to take an entire class and do a lesson," Sawyer said.

When a teacher wants to use the lab, they sign up on a sheet for the time they want to use it. Students can use Power Point, ClarisWorks and the Internet and can also print and scan.

Wilson Elementary celebrates Black History Month with skits, fashion show

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

Black History month ended with a presentation by Darlene Baker's Drama Club at Wilson Elementary School. The Dreamer – The Dream, Let Freedom Ring included a play about the Montgomery bus boycott and a colorful fashion show of African-American attire.

The presentation began as the Wilson Chorus led the school with Lift Ev'ry Voice and Sing, as students, teachers and parents stood and sang together.

"Blacks learned to read by reading their slavemaster's Bible. Reading the Bible gave the black man hope," said Lillian Stenson, Wilson School's reading specialist.

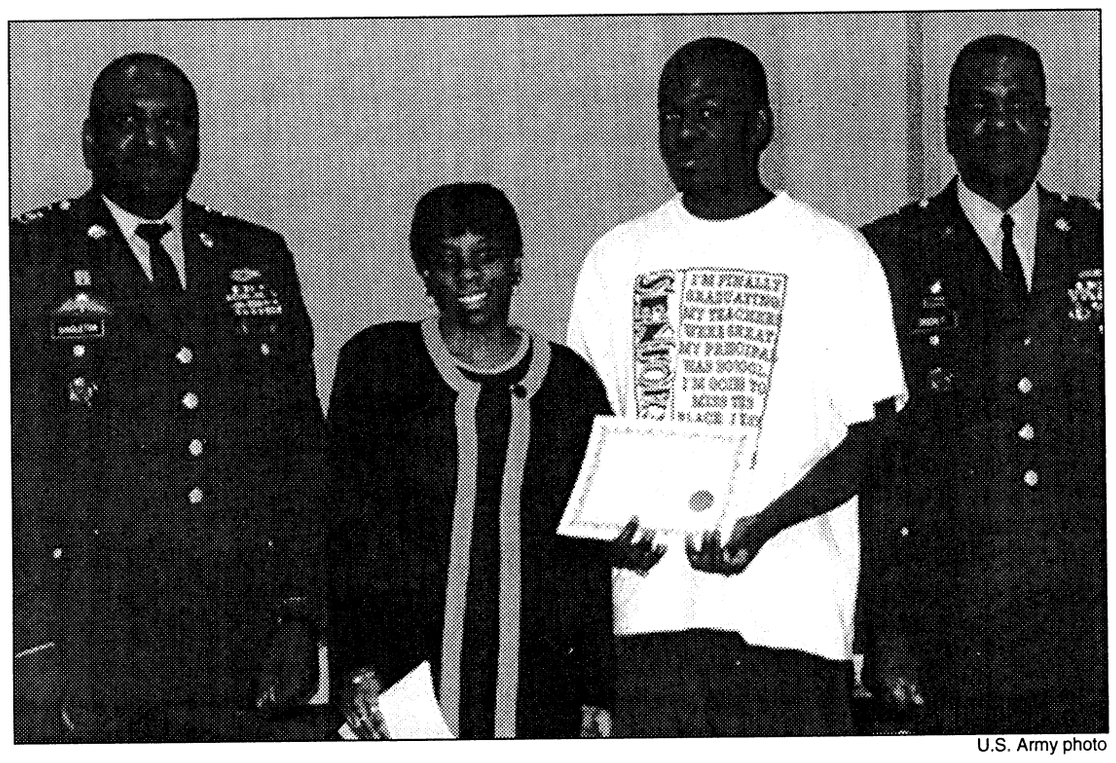
Hope and the struggle of Martin Luther King Jr. during the days of the bus boycott was the subject of the play, A Protest for Peace starring 5th-grader, Lance Shumacher as King.

The junior actors waved their hands in the air and leaped across the stage while portraying the ending of the boycott.

A Protest for Peace ended with the students getting on a cardboard bus together as a narrator told of the final days of King's life.

During a fashion show mimicking Paris-runway style, the drama students sashayed across the stage and struck poses for the crowd. The pint-size models paraded African-American fashions including styles called kinsei cloths.

February turned out to be quite educational for students at Wilson elementary.



4th-grader, Farrah Carrens said, "We need to remember when Martin Luther King was alive he brought people together."

Bringing people together was only one of the objectives of the presentation.

Another objective was to educate children, teachers and parents of the contributions of black Americans.

Principal Phyllis Parker said in closing to the students, "I hope as you continue your studies you will see the significance black Americans have had in the shaping of our country."

"This takes a lot of parents' participation and motivation from the students. That motivation is beneficial to the community as well as the students," Baker said.

Post to receive environmental assessment

Directorate of Public Works

A team of Army environmental experts will visit Fort Benning March 23-April 8 to conduct a review of the installation's Environmental Management Programs, Occupational Health and Safety, Hazardous Waste Management, and Petroleums, oils, lubricants Management for the Army's Environmental Compliance Assessment System (ECAS).

The ECAS is an initiative by the Army's Assistant chief of staff for Installation Management to assist Army installations with identifying potential environmental problems before they endanger health, cause expensive cleanups and violate Federal, state or local regulations.

A multi-disciplinary team including environmental engineers, scientists and other specialists from the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine (CHPPM) and Headquarters, Training and Doctrine Command will conduct the review.

The team will review operations that have the greatest potential for causing environmental problems to include units, activities, tenants and contracted operations. During the ECAS, the CHPPM team will be working closely with the DPW Environmental Management Division.

Following the ECAS inspection, each commander or activity chief, or appropriate persons within the inspected area will receive a briefing on problems identified and possible solutions.

For more information regarding the upcoming ECAS, call Dock Hicks at 545-4521 or Wendy Duffy at 545-9878 with Fort Benning Environmental Manage-ment Division.

Tricare Prime available to transfer posts

Martin Army Community Hospital

All Tricare Prime enrollees may now take their Tricare Prime enrollment with them, if they move from one Department of Defense (DoD) Health Service Region where Tricare is operational, to another.

Active-duty families have been able to do this since last July but as of Dec. 1, "portability" of Tricare Prime enrollment has been extended to all other Prime enrollees.

Tricare Prime enrollment portability lets a family continue its Prime coverage when moving from one DoD Health Service Region to another. Enrollment fees and enrollment anniversary dates now transfer along with Prime enrollment.

Prime enrollees other than active-duty families may transfer enrollment twice during an enrollment year, as long as the second transfer is back to the original region of enrollment. There's no limit on transfers for active-duty families.

"Split" enrollments — that is, the ability to pay one family enrollment and have family members enrolled in different Tricare regions — will be available in the spring of 1998.

If you're a Tricare Prime enrollee and are traveling from your old Tricare region to a new one, you should stay enrolled at your old location and should follow existing guidelines concerning authorizations for non-emergency care and notifications for emergency care. When you arrive at your new destination, call or stop by the local Tricare service center (TSC) to transfer your enrollment to the new region in which you live.

If you pay your Tricare Prime annual enrollment fee on a quarterly basis, payment of the quarterly installment must be current in order to transfer the enrollment.

Your transfer is effective once you choose a new primary care manager (PCM) and return a signed enrollment application to the TSC or to the contractor in your new region.

If Tricare Prime is not yet available in the area to which you're moving, you may disenroll from Prime before leaving your prior location or you may disenroll after you move to the new location. If you disenroll, you'll go back to coverage under Tricare Standard. Active-duty military sponsors are covered for health care by their service branches.

If you wait to disenroll from Tricare Prime until after you've completed your move and then don't disenroll immediately, you'll have to pay higher costs under the "point-of-service" (POS) health care option if you seek non-emergency civilian care without an authorization before disenrolling from Prime.

Under POS, you pay an annual $300 deductible (for one person) or $600 (for a family), for inpatient or outpatient care, before Tricare cost-sharing begins. When the deductible has been satisfied, Tricare contractors will pay 50 percent of the allowable charges for covered care, instead of the 75 to 80 percent they'd pay under Tricare Standard.

If you're a Prime enrollee and you need emergency care while traveling, go to the nearest hospital's emergency room (you don't have to get prior authorization for emergency care). Be sure to report the emergency care episode to your PCM — or have someone else do it — within 24 hours of getting the care.

For other types of care, call the Tricare contractor's health care information line for an assessment of your symptoms and recommendations for care. Or, you may call the health care finder (HCF) or your PCM at the region you're leaving, to get an authorization for civilian care, if necessary. Care that isn't urgent, such as a routine eye exam, won't normally be authorized. You should wait for this type of care until you transfer your Tricare Prime enrollment to your new location.

For more information on transferring your Tricare Prime enrollment, contact your nearest TSC or call your regional Tricare contractor.

Dietitians recommend making small changes over time

By Monica M. Maroyka
Martin Army Community Hospital

If you care about yourself and your family and you have strong feelings about food, then you have much to gain from learning about nutrition.

Each day newspapers, radio and television stations present stories on how we can lower our cholesterol, increase our energy and avoid cancer. If you are overwhelmed with all the misinformation out there and do not know where to turn for reliable information, this is the month for you. March is National Nutrition Month. During the month, registered dietitians around the country are focused on getting the word out about good nutrition.

Nutrition is more than the food consumed, it is a science. Because nutrition is a science, it is an active, changing, growing body of knowledge. It is important to listen to information you hear on the radio, television and read in the newspapers carefully. Before changing your diet, make sure nutrition claims are backed by scientific data. Not data from just one study, data from several studies done over time. People who take action based on a single study are almost acting impulsively, not scientifically.

This year's National Nutrition Month theme is "Make Nutrition Come Alive, It's All About You" with the message being to make healthy choices that fit your lifestyle so you can do the things you want to do. In doing this, the American Dietetic Association recommends you be realistic, make small changes over time in what you eat and the level of activity you do. After all, small steps work better than giant leaps. Be adventurous, expand your tastes to enjoy a variety of foods. Be flexible, go ahead and balance what you eat with the physical activity you do over several days. No need to just worry about just one meal or one day. Be sensible, enjoy all foods, just don't overdo it. Be active, take time to include activity into your daily routine.

This is the first in a series of articles written by registered dietitians in the Columbus District Dietetic Association and Fort Benning. More articles are scheduled throughout the month of March. For more information, call the nutrition clinic, Martin Army Community Hospital at 544-1542 or the nutrition clinic of your local hospital.

Jewish holiday celebrates queen's bravery

Chaplain (Capt.) Julie Rowan
29th Infantry Regiment

reflections

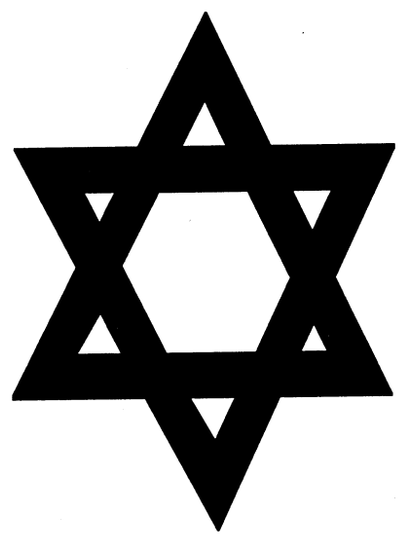
Today in America, we celebrate many holidays. The most familiar to most of us are Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas.

However, other faith groups celebrate many holidays of which we are not aware. The Jews have a lot of great holidays.

One of these is Purim. Purim is celebrated with a festive meal of meat and wine and includes the wearing of costumes and singing.

It commemorates the feast that Queen Esther organized, through which she gained favor with the king and saved her life along with the lives of the other Jews in Persia.

The Book of Esther begins with drama, power, romance, and intrigue. As the story unfolds, Esther, a young Jewish woman, was chosen to be King Xerxes' new queen after his wife, Queen Vashti, refused to obey a request of the king.



Meanwhile, Esther's cousin became a government official and in his capacity, he became aware of an assassination plot that was being organized against the Jews.

The second in command in the empire was an ambitious, self-serving man named Haman. Mordecai refused to bow in reverence to him because Haman was determined to destroy Mordecai and all other Jews along with him.

To accomplish this vengeful deed, Haman issued an edict condemning the Jews to death. He deceived the king in order for the edict to be issued. Mordecai exposed Haman's scheme to Queen Esther and she decided to risk her life to save her people.

She asked King Xerxes to give a banquet at which Haman would be a guest. The king, being pleased with the banquet, asked Queen Esther what she wanted and told her that he would give her anything. She requested another banquet with Haman and Mordecai as guests.

That night, the king caused the royal records to be searched and found that Mordecai had learned of the assassination plot and had thwarted it.

Surprised to learn of Mordecai's great deed, the king asked Haman how best to reward a hero. Haman thought that the king was referring to him and suggested a lavish reward. The king took his advice, and honored Mordecai in the manner suggested.

At the second banquet, the king learned that Haman had been the culprit all along and that he was the one who had plotted to kill the Jewish people. The king instantly sentenced Haman to death and appointed Mordecai to Haman's position.

With Mordecai as second in command, the Jews would be guaranteed protection throughout the land. A whole nation was saved through the courageous act of Queen Esther. Hence, that feast of Purim is celebrated annually.

We can see God at work in this entire book. Esther seized the day, when she saw God's given opportunity to make a difference in the lives of her people as well as her own life.

Esther was a woman we can admire and respect. Her beauty, character, courage and concern for others gave her strength to act in a time of need. Esther broke through all the cultural norms, stepped outside her expected role, and risked her life to help God's people.

Purim is celebrated on the 14th of the Hebrew month of Adar, which is Thursday this year. Happy Purim.

Local residents give Latin American students a home away from home

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Acting as informal U.S. ambassadors, several local residents extended their hospitality to 29 Latin American students attending the United States Army School of the America's Command and General Staff Course Feb. 20.

According to Corey Loomis, president of Host Of Latin Americans (HOLA), the reception at the Columbus Convention Center gave many of the students the opportunity to meet their American sponsors for the first time. "This was a good ice breaker," he said.

Unlike the Army's sponsorship program which helps families integrate into the military community, Loomis explained that HOLA sponsors try to show the students what life is like in the U.S.

"The sponsors invite the students for a cook-out; a RedStixx baseball game or anything else," he said. "They basically show them how we live and what we're all about."

The former public affairs officer with USARSA and military liaison for HOLA, Loomis said he began working directly with program when he left the Army in 1987.

"I realized how important the program was when I was on active duty," he said. "When I became a civilian, I affiliated with HOLA immediately and have been actively involved with it since then."

He said HOLA sponsors gain a tremendous appreciation for what life is like in other countries, and they have the opportunity to act as informal ambassadors for our country.

"You don't establish relationships between countries with treaties alone," he said. "You need to establish relationships with people one at a time. These ties of friendship truly create an international relationship. That's why this is such an important program."

As sponsors and students chatted while enjoying hors d'oeuvres, Dolores Ortiz, a seven-year HOLA veteran and 33-year Columbus resident, became acquainted with her new friends Maj. Jose Maldonado and his wife Maritza, from Venezuela.

"Being a sponsor with HOLA has been extremely rewarding," Ortiz said, a Puerto Rican native. "Not only do the students learn about America and of course Puerto Rico, but I learn so much from them about their country."

During her time with HOLA, Ortiz said she's sponsored students from Bolivia, El Salvador, Paraguay and Colombia.

"I'm always here if they need me," she said. "I'll continue sponsoring students until somebody fires me."

Maldonado said prior to coming to USARSA, he had already heard about how great the HOLA program was and how it helped the Latin American student.

"HOLA gives us the opportunity to integrate into a society which we will be a part of for the next year," he said. "I feel this program is a very positive contribution for developing lasting friendships."

Cecilia Alexander, International Military Student officer and coordinator for the social event, was very pleased with the evening's turn-out and the continual support the community gives USARSA.

She said that the special bond formed between the students and the sponsors creates "a friend for life."

Before the night was over, Danilo Espinoza was voted in as the new HOLA president.

Post's counseling service helps civilian workers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Civilian Counseling Service helps employees deal with a variety of problems.

The CCS offers assessment, crisis intervention, community referral information and supervisory consultation, said Yvonne Wilbanks, Civilian Program coordinator.

These services are free of charge and are available to all civilian employees (Department of the Army and Non-Appropriated Fund) and their families.

"We have no restrictions on what kinds of problems we deal with," Wilbanks said. "Stress, family problems, problems with children, depression, anger, substance abuse ... anything that affects the well-being of employees and their performance at work."

Wilbanks said the CCS will help employees recognize what problems they are having and determine a course of action. If it is necessary to refer the employee to outside counseling or services, then the CCS will work with the employee to try to find services that the employee can afford.

Civilian counseling services are conducted on a completely confidential basis.

"No one will ever know that you came unless you tell them," said Wilbanks, "and participation in the program will not adversely affect your employment or promotion status."

Wilbanks encouraged employees to seek help while their problems are small.

"If the problem is tackled while it is still small, it will be easier to overcome; but no matter what the problem, large or small, we are here to help," she said.

She also encouraged supervisors to refer employees experiencing problems to the program as a form of nondisciplinary assistance.

Anyone desiring more information on the program or to schedule an appointment with a counselor can call 545-2475, 545-1138.

"I look at the program as an employee benefit. Similar services downtown cost money and our services are free," Wilbanks said.

Computers: Aid learning

Sawyer recently took her two English classes to the lab to do projects about black historians and american presidents.

"We went through the whole process of doing a research paper. The students learned how to make an outline, do a bibliography and cover sheet and how to write up a rough draft," Sawyer said.

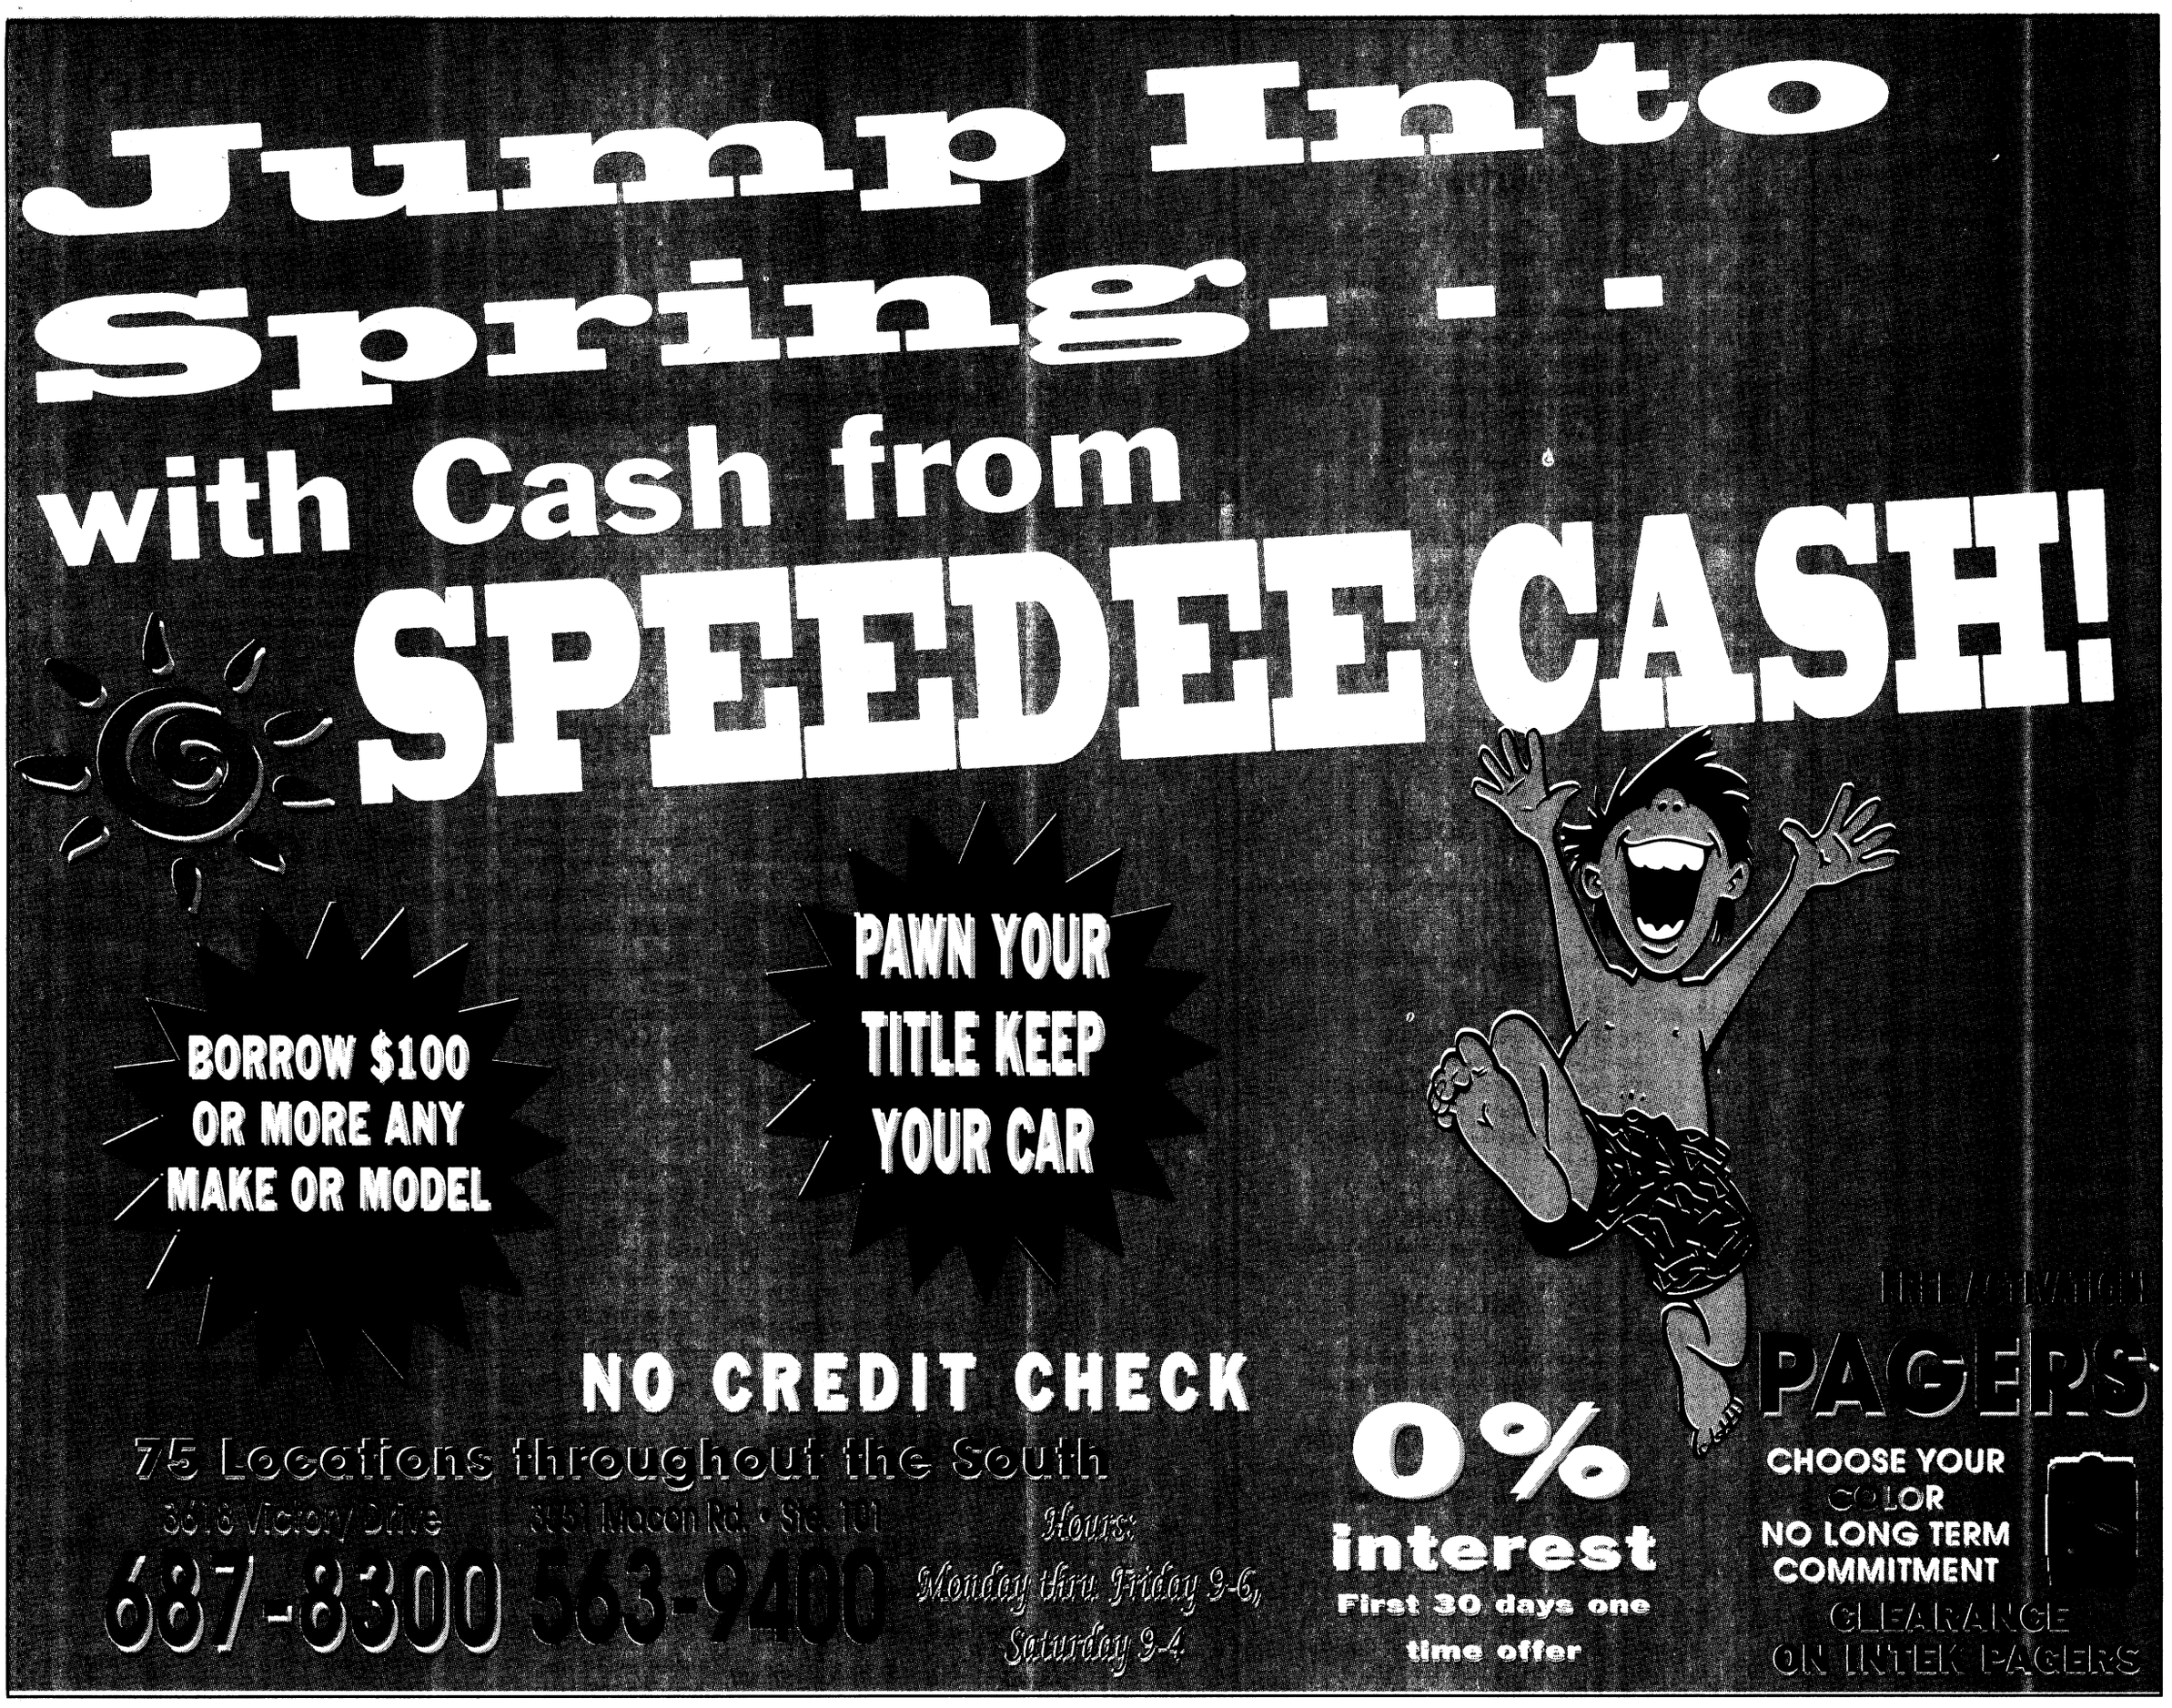
"The students followed a specific format. They had twelve different resources to choose from and they had to have at least three to five different ones. They had access to the Internet and a CD-Rom encyclopedia through the computer lab," Sawyer said.

The lab is also a source of information for teachers. They are able to hook up to educational websites and pull information for lesson plans.

"I like the computer because it actually teaches me how to use it," said Desiree Meredith, 10, daughter of Laarni and Staff Sgt. Alfredo Townsend, Company A, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment. "In the future, there's going to be a lot of computers and I can learn how to use them now."

The need for children to know how to use a computer is important, Sawyer said.

"It's important that we expose children to real-life experiences. They can get accustomed so they're not afraid of technology," Sawyer said.



The lab is equipped with 30 computers, but since it is still fairly new they are still trying to work out all the kinks, Sawyer said.

"It's more fun doing projects on the computer," said Amanda Whitted, 10, daughter of Jill and 2nd Lt. Stewart McCall, Company D, 1/29th. "If we have a report due, our moms don't have to type it."

The computer lab is also helpful for students who use English as a second language.

"When I was in Guatemala, I worked faster," said Marco Garcia, son of Sandra and Lt. Col. Marco Garcia, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, School of the Americas. "Everything was in Spanish; it's harder to do in English but I like it."

Sawyer said the computer lab will help students keep up with current events, follow special projects and in the future enable students to have e-mail pals in other countries.

Women learn gun safety during class

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

In this day of crime and violence, many people find it necessary to take measures to protect themselves whether it be through taking karate lessons, installing high-tech security systems or buying guard dogs and weapons.

During a basic personal protection course Saturday at English Range, 14 women from the tricommunities came together to learn how to protect themselves using handguns.

"I wish everyone would do what you all have done — that is learn how to be safe," said instructor Bize Haines, a National Rifle Association certified firearm instructor. "Many people just buy a gun without knowing how to operate it. That can get them into more trouble than they realize."

During the class, the students learned about the different types of handguns, ammunition and shooting techniques.

Haines, who has been teaching pistol safety for more than 30 years, focused his shooting technique portion of the class on responding to close range confrontations.

"What I show you here won't help you in any shooting matches because we're not working with the sights, but it may save your life one day if someone breaks into your home," he said.

Haines introduced three shooting techniques to the students. The decision to use which technique depends on the intruders' distance from the shooter.

"I am teaching you some of the best techniques in the world," Haines said. "These are the same techniques that people who protect themselves for a

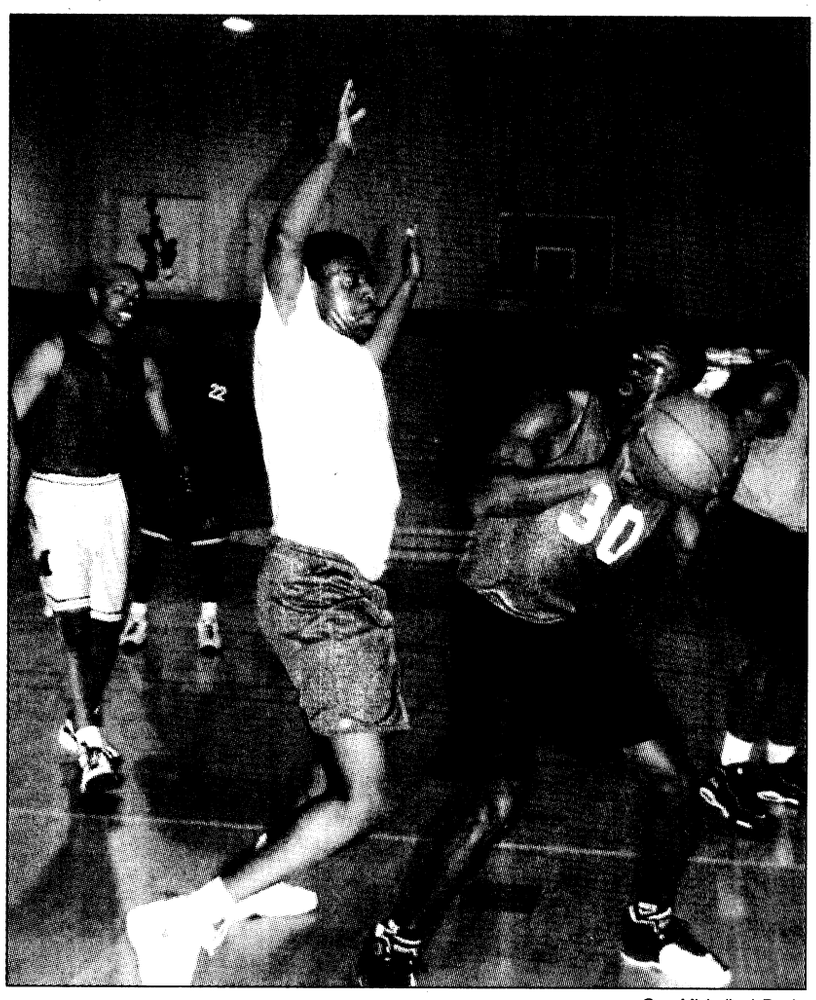
USAMU wins matches, prepares for tournament

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Public Affairs Office

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories in the past few weeks. The following results are just some of their recent accomplishments:

During the Rocky Mountain Rifle Championships Feb. 27 to Sunday at the U.S. Olympic Training Center, Colorado Springs, Colo., USAMU international rifle shooter Glenn A. Dubis was the overall winner followed by Kenneth A. Johnson in second place. Dubis won the Three-Position Smallbore and Prone Rifle matches. The USAMU Team of Dubis, Lance S. Hopper and Johnson won the Three-Position Team Match and took second place in the Prone Team Match. Johnson won the Air Rifle Match in which Jason A. Parker took second place and Troy A. Bassham was third. The USAMU Team of Stephen C. Goff, Johnson and Parker won the Air Rifle Team Match and shot a score that was 2 points higher than the existing world record.



During the Zone 8 Championships, San Antonio, Texas, Feb. 27 to Sunday, Shawn C. Dulohery won the Skeet Match and Joseph D. Buffa took third place; Joetta R. Novinski was the highest finishing female shooter. Bret E. Erickson won the Double Trap Match and David R. Alcoriza came in second. In the Trap Match, Alcoriza was second. Erickson was third and Novinski was the highest finishing female shooter.

USAMU is currently preparing to host the International Grand Prix of Shooting May 4-11 at Phillips, Pool and Hook ranges.

There will be competition in all four Olympic shooting disciplines — International Pistol, International Rifle, Running Target and Shotgun — in preparation for the upcoming World Cup to be conducted at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Complex in Atlanta May 12-17, in which more than 50 countries and 600 athletes are expected to participate. The Atlanta World Cup will offer nations the opportunity to win country quotas for the 2000 Olympic Games and allow athletes to meet individual qualifying standards for Olympic participation at the 2000 Games in Sydney, Australia.

"The Grand Prix will be the final tune-up match for the U.S. Shooting Team as well as international shooters before they compete in the 1998 World Shooting Championships in Barcelona, Spain, in July," said USAMU Deputy Commander Bob Aylward. Approximately 45 1996 Olympians are anticipated to compete in the Fort Benning Grand Prix, he added.

The Grand Prix will be open to the public. For more information, call the USAMU Public Affairs Office at 545-5436.

3rd Brigade discovers who's king of hill

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Kelley Hill intramural basketball teams found out who's the best of the best during the King of the Hill tournament Feb. 22-27 at Kefurt Fitness Center.

Ten teams entered the annual tournament which gives the winning team bragging rights as Kelley Hill's top team as well as the tournament trophy.

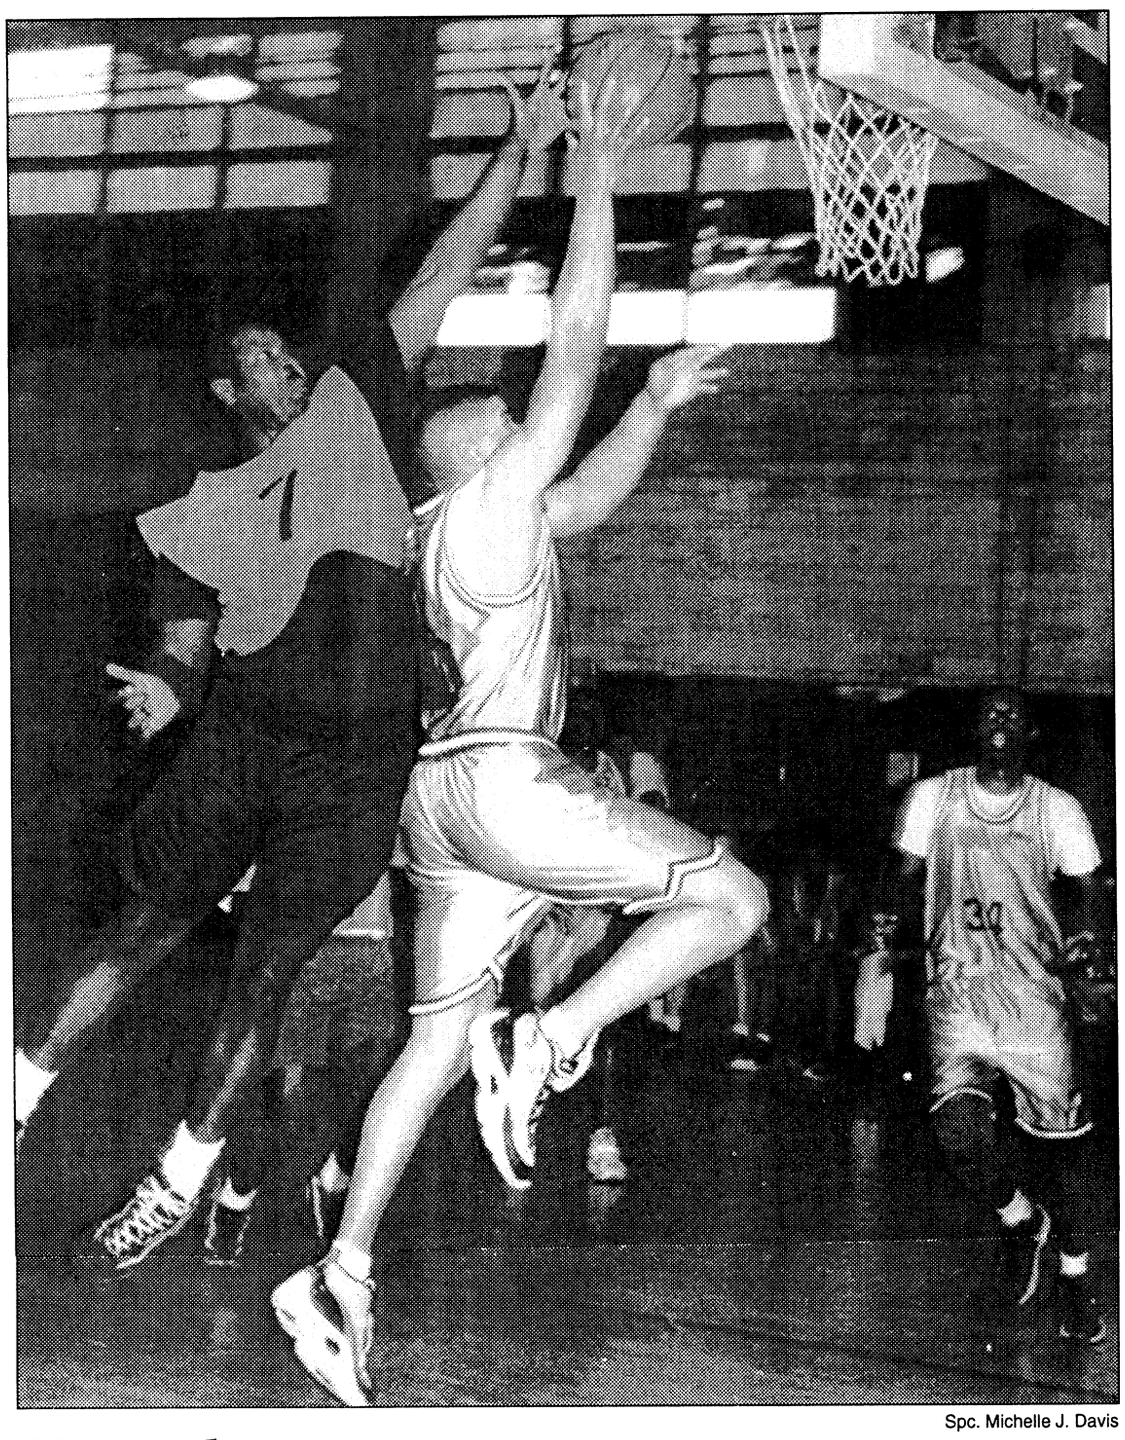
After four days of fighting for a chance to win the trophy, only two teams were left unscathed to battle each other in the main event.

Battery A, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, cruised by their opponents to face-off in the championship round.

Service Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, settled for third.

In a best of three game duel, Battery A began claiming victory after edging HHC 47-40 during the first game.

During the second game, however, HHC came roaring back and pounded Battery A 57-52.



The title came down to a deciding game where both teams kept the intensity despite fatigue, but it was HHC who came out on top 59-44.

"I think a lot of it came down to which team was in better shape," said Blakely Jones, captain of HHC's team. "Playing three games in a row really wore us out and it just came down to who had the will to win."

Jones said the team put in an amazing performance in the tournament and is more organized now that most of the team's players are back from field exercises.

The tournament also triggered the end of regular season play for Kelley Hill teams as they currently wait to see which teams will advance to the post basketball tournament, which is scheduled for March 16-26.

The 29th and 11th Infantry Regiments are also conducting their own King of the Hill tournament at the Briant Wells Field House. The tournament began Tuesday and the championship game is scheduled for Wednesday at 7 p.m. living use everyday."

In addition to teaching how to react to their attackers, Haines also discussed some of the habits that make women easy targets for criminals and a few precautions to take while out alone.

"Even when walking to your car from the mall or work, always be alert. Walk with your head up and with self-confidence," Haines said.

Although each student came into the class with varied amounts of handgun experience, each agreed learning how to protect themselves was the number one reason for attending.

Beth Lumb, a military family member, attended the course to learn more about her weapon.

"We have a gun in the house already and I wanted to make sure I knew how to use it if I had to," Lumb said.

Another student, LeAnn Carney of Columbus, was recently involved in an attempted armed robbery. Carney, who works at a local pawn shop, thwarted a burglary after drawing a weapon of her own and chasing the two armed thugs out of the store.

"I just wanted to learn more about the weapon I used and want to be prepared in case it happens again," Carney said. "I really hope I will never have to use it, but at least I'll know that I can and will."

The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club sponsored the protection course, and Haines said he tries to hold the class about every two months .

McKinney trial nears end

By Spc. Greg Jones
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — At press time, an 8-member jury was deliberating the fate of Command Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney.

The trial and defense counsels presented their closing arguments Tuesday, concluding the six-week trial at Fort Belvoir, Va.

The week of testimony preceding the closing arguments began with the trailing end of McKinney's testimony, which concluded March 4. The defense rested its case March 5. The prosecution's rebuttal case, where they counter the defense case, concentrated on attacking McKinney's alibi and rebutting the character witnesses who testified that the accusers were not credible.

Then the defense was given a chance to respond to the prosecution's rebuttal. The defense focused on the character of one of the prosecution witnesses and evidence presentation was completed. One hundred nineteen witnesses testified during the findings phase of the trial.

The military judge instructed the court members on consideration of the evidence, then the prosecution made their closing arguments.

"This case is not about sex," said Lead Prosecution Counsel Lt. Col. Michael Child to start his closing argument. "It is about abuse of power. The highest ranking enlisted Soldier abused the power granted to him."

The accusers, according to Child, have gained nothing by their testimony as had earlier been contended by the defense.

"These women have given up a lot to come forward and testify," Child said. "These women are telling the truth and we ask you to declare that truth."

Child recounted the testimony of each accuser.

Starting with the female major, Child said there was no abandonment of her office or position, as the defense had earlier suggested, and there was no mistaking the alleged assault. "(The grabbing incident) could not possibly be misunderstood," Child said.

The sergeant first class recruiter, who accused McKinney of grabbing her in a hotel room and asking her if she wanted to kiss him, also had nothing to gain by testifying, according to Child.

Child said the recruiter's testimony about the layout of McKinney's hotel room and details of his itinerary that day proved she was not fabricating the story.

"How could she know what the (hotel room) looks like?" Child asked. "How would she know (who) was going to pick McKinney up that morning?"

McKinney's earlier testimony he pulled a navy petty officer aside to counsel her about making passes at him does not ring true, according to the prosecution, because he told no one else about the counseling. The further suggestion that the petty officer, who has accused McKinney of making passes at her when he pulled her aside during a military health benefits conference in Denver, fabricated her story as an insurance policy is "absurd," according to Child.

"(The petty officer) came forward because it was the truth," Child said.

Retired Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster was not having trouble meeting the standard, according to Child, and was willing to live with the incidents and go on with her life.

"But McKinney's being appointed to that senior review panel was the last straw" said Child, who recounted Hoster's testimony that "the hypocrisy was too much."

The female staff sergeant, who has accused McKinney of offenses totaling 10 of the 19 specifications of misconduct, had nothing to gain by her testimony, according to Child. He said the staff sergeant's memory is not perfect, but she is truthful.

Construction begins on barracks

Army plans to spend $32 million on new living quarters

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers of the 75th Ranger Regiment can now look forward to new barracks with larger living areas and freshly painted walls, but they will have to wait just a little longer before moving.

During a groundbreaking ceremony Thursday, the rangers, along with representatives from Metric Constructors, gathered at the site of the future barracks to celebrate the start of the $32 million construction project.

The project, which is scheduled to officially begin Monday, will include the construction of seven barracks, two community buildings and a dining facility, said project engineer Michael L. Graham of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

"It's a lot of work, but we will have it completed in a little more than two years," Graham said.

Once completed, the three-story living quarters will be capable of housing more than 500 Soldiers from the regiment.

"We wanted to improve the living arrangements for the Soldiers by giving them more room and better conditions," said Capt. Bob Kaiser, regimental engineer.

In addition to the barracks complex, the construction company will also build a perimeter fence around the regiment's areas of operation and construct an additional three buildings for the 36th Engineer Group (Combat).

The barracks project is the first phase of a plan to completely remodel the ranger regiment's facilities, Kaiser said.

"We have a lot we would like to get done, but we wanted to take care of our Soldiers first," Kaiser said.

Future projects will include a new headquarters and operations building for the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt., as well as new regiment headquarters and motorpool.

Although the barracks construction is just beginning, the rangers have already decided to dedicate the barracks in memory of Col. Francis W. Dawson, a World War II veteran who was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for his actions on D-Day. Dawson, who was assigned to the 5th Ranger Bn. during the war, continued his involvement with the Army even after his retirement in 1968 until his death last October.

"He was truly a great American and continues to be inspiration to us all," Kaiser said.

HIV-positive Soldier pleads guilty

USAIC Public Affairs Office

An HIV-infected Soldier pleaded guilty to aggravated assault and other charges and was sentenced to 15 years in prison Tuesday.

Spc. Raymond L. Humphries, 25, was sentenced to 15 years in prison; reduced to the grade of E-1; forfeiture of all pay and allowances; and a dishonorable discharge.

Six women testified that Humphries, assigned to the U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company, had unprotected sex with them after he had been ordered by the company commander to tell prospective sexual partners about being HIV-positive and to wear a condom during sexual intercourse.

Three people have since tested positive for the virus, including a baby Humphries fathered.

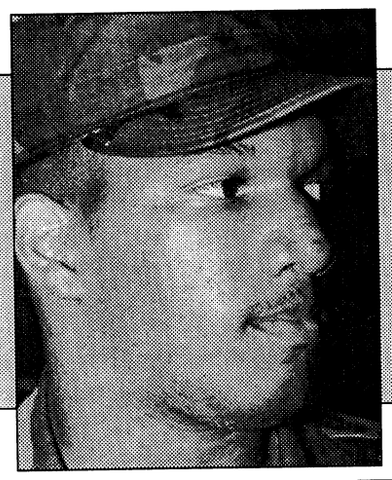
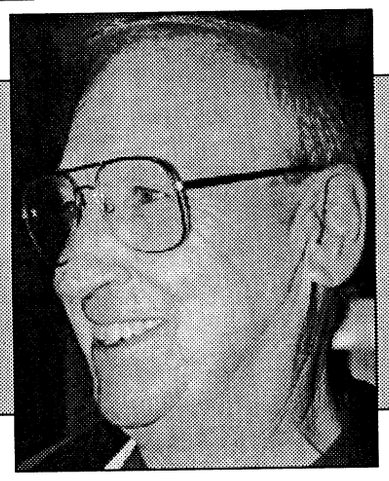
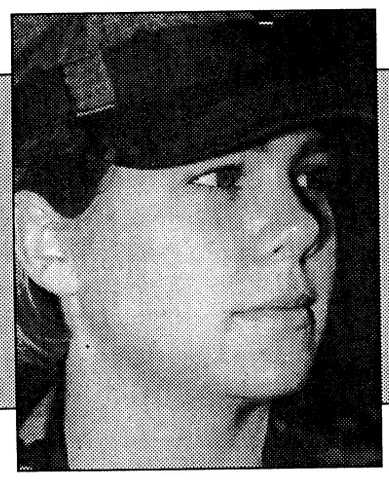
VARIOUS VOICES



How has technology improved your life?



Pfc. James Salanitro, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I have a cell phone that I can use in case of emergencies."



Arika Mobley, family member, — "My life is the phone. My phone works therefore I am."

Pvt.1 Mark Vargas, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "Computers and television have allowed us to keep up on things going on around the world."

Retired 1st Sgt. John D. Tiernan, Columbus — "I wouldn't be living if it weren't for technology. I had a clogged artery and the doctors were able to go in and fix it."

2nd Lt. Kristine M. Ostrander, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "Working in a hospital, everything we do requires advanced technology. Even the charts are now computerized, which saves time."

Shurette D. Williams, family member — "With computers, things are now more accessible. They make day-to-day living easier for me especially at work."

Technology needs more personality

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

As we hurtle headlong and headstrong into the 21st century like a runaway train about to derail, I sometimes wonder if we are headed toward devolution.

commentary

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lanes thinks technology isn't always a good thing.

I remember when "communication" meant an exchange of ideas, an action that involved two people and sometimes a debate.

To use some archaic words, the communication process involved a "message" delivered to an "audience" by a "messenger."

The best communication process involves two people talking face to face, so immediate "feedback," agreement or disagreement, may be obtained.

How do you think Christopher Columbus coaxed Queen Isabella I of Spain into financing his trip to the New World? Somehow I don't think a letter would have worked as well.

"Dear Izzy. Send cash. I need a few ships. Going on a three-hour tour. Love, Chris."

Okay, lets back up. A "letter" is something that was invented to take the place of person to person conversation, in case anyone was wondering. In this letter process of communication, one person writes a message on a piece of paper and pays another person to deliver this message to a third person. Of course, the person who receives the letter has the option to respond or deny ever receiving it.

Scene: Columbus shows up in the palace after not receiving a return letter from Isabella.

"Izzy, why didn't you write me back? Didn't you get any of my letters?" Columbus asks.

"Uh...," Isabella shuffles her feet. "Letter? What letter? That darn post office."

Columbus asks for money. Isabella caves in and finances the trip because she can't bring herself to turn him down in person. She sympathizes with Columbus because he wears a stupid looking hat the size of a life raft.

Move ahead a few hundred years when Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone, the cure and cancer of communication.

"Is Isabella home?" asks Columbus from his car phone.

Isabella's secretary covers the telephone with her hand and whispers, "It's Chris. Are you here?"

"Tell him I'm in a meeting," Isabella says. "He probably wants money."

Today we have a lot of communication options — e-mail, faxes, voice mail — but somehow the process of delivering a message hasn't become any more efficient.

Columbus is working late at his shipping office and e-mails Isabella. "Izzy. Attached is my proposal for a trip to what I call the 'New World.' Let me know what you think."

A couple of days go by and no response from Isabella. Columbus sends another e-mail. "Izzy. Did you get my last e-mail? If so, what do you think of my proposal? Need to know if it's a go by next week."

Another day passes and Columbus decides to call Isabella. He gets her answering service.

"You have reached The Queen, Incorporated. If you already know the extension..." The message goes on and on until he gets Isabella's voice mail and leaves a message.

"Izzy. This is Chris. Where've you been? On vacation? Call or mail me. I'm faxing you a proposal. Let me know what you think."

Another day drifts by and Columbus gets an e-mail from Isabella. "Chris. My e-mail has been down. Got your e-mail but I couldn't convert your attachment. Re-send or fax. I got the fax header but the rest didn't come through. Got to get back to the throne. Ciao. Izzy."

Columbus' trip doesn't get financed, he goes bankrupt and winds up selling oranges on a roadside stand in Orlando, Fla.

I can't buck the communication technology trend, but I find it can be a two-edged broadsword. E-mail has the plus of being an immediate form of communication, but like a fax, it has a cold, impersonal side. It's a one-way form of communication requiring someone on the other end to care about your message and respond.

I've learned if I have an important message to deliver, something I really care about, I have to show up in front of that person's desk and hand over a dated memorandum explaining what I need, person-to-person. Sure, this takes the communication process back to a poor man's Pony Express, but sometimes you have to ride that horse.

Yeah, I'm "killing trees," but I'm afraid an e-mail memorandum just doesn't cut it for me. I wind up printing out some of my important, task requirement e-mails anyway. I'm just one of those guys who has to have a piece of paper on the desk as a reminder. "Mission complete. I can throw this away." And then there's the chance of accidentally deleting an e-mail or the system crashing and all of the important stuff becoming unrecoverable.

"Hey, Izzy," Columbus asks. "Did you get a chance to look that proposal over?"

"I can't seem to find it, Chris. I must have accidentally deleted it. Could you send it again?"

Yup, the further we plunge ahead, the more it seems we digress in this new world of communication. Sometimes I think I would be better off beating on a hollow log for communication, like in the Tarzan movies.

"What do the drums say," Columbus asks Tarzan.

"It's Queen Isabella," Tarzan reports. "She says she couldn't read your last hollow log message. Wrong format."

Well, maybe not. Some excuses will always work.

Science can't replace everything

By Pvt.1 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Since the beginning of time experiments, inventions and even accidents created new ways of life and made the world what it is today. The common man has been given the key to the universe through technology and allowed to flourish. The world is at our fingertips. No longer is distance an issue. Neither water, mountains nor deserts separate the people of the world. We have become a world of wonder devoted to the advancement of life. We have become a world dependent on technology.

commentary

Pvt. 1 Amy L. Nyland thinks science has a limited place in society.

If you ask people, they will most likely tell you technology is enhancing their lives. Most of them will agree that without technology the quality of life would go down. However, is technology everything it's cracked up to be?

Every new invention is devoted to making our lives smoother and easier, promising we will have to do less work with faster solutions.

But is this really what we want life to come to? Are we going to be satisfied when we reach our zenith of potential? What is our zenith of potential?

It is sad to think that no longer can we enjoy the simplicities of life without having a huge elaborate explosion of technology to entertain us. No longer is a walk in the park or the beauty of a setting sun good enough.

Technology has allowed us to take life for granted. Things that were once cherished, that were once the foundation of life have become second to fast cars and highspeed computers. Instead of giving someone a hug and handshake for a job well done, it's easier to fax them or send them flowers from the internet. It is easier to sit our children in front of video games and movies rather than read books with them or or teach them new games to play. Instead of taking time each year to make a trip to see family, it is easier to send a video and an e-mail wishing them Merry Christmas.

Why has technology broken down our most important values and put them in distant running to an expensive piece of equipment? Why have we allowed ourselves to place such importance on what we have, rather than what we have achieved?

These are all questions we must ask ourselves. Technology has become our safe haven. We entrusted ourselves into the hands of scientists and inventors in hopes that one day they will completely alleviate all burdens of life.

We must realize technology is our friend and hopefully it will stay that way. We cannot allow technology to become our enemy. We must accept the limits of technology and stay within them even if they are broken.

Technology was created to make life easier. It wasn't created to alleviate the true spirit of life.

It was also created to bring us together not to tear us a part.

We cannot allow our technology to become greater than the importance of life.

Besides how do we know how far technology can go? Haven't we already gone far enough? It is scary to think that humans hold the life of every individual in the palms of our hands. With the click of a button we can destroy the world. Isn't this enough to make us place limitations on what we can and cannot do?

I am not against technology. In fact I am all for it. It has given us the key to the world. It has opened our minds and allowed us to explore places we never thought possible. It has brought us closer together. It has given us the ability to live longer, stronger, and healthier lives.

However as the theory goes that for every action there is an equal and greater reaction, technology is proving this correct. It is up to us whether or not we let technology take over our lives. We must open our eyes to see if we are falling into a trap where technology is becoming more important than the real things that we love. We must realize to place ourselves completely into something as uncertain as technology could be potentially dangerous. But above all we must take technology as it comes. We must understand that technology was created for the good of mankind. It must be mankind who decides to use if for good.

Vet loses groceries

What a surprise I received this year for my birthday present. On March 3, a couple of days before my 71st birthday, I was at the Fort Benning commissary to buy my monthly groceries.

I'm a disabled Vietnam veteran and don't drive, so I always ride with someone.

My purchase consisted of items like potatoes, vegetables, meat, milk, eggs and bread totaling about $61.

After making my purchase, I came upon a friend who is also disabled and told him that I would be waiting for him outside the store. We are both disabled vets, but he is 100 percent disabled and relies on an electric wheelchair to get around.

Somehow I missed my friend and went to the outside to look for him. While I was looking, someone took my shopping cart with the six bags of rations.

I'm sure it was a mistake.

Fort Benning's facilities privatization study continues

By Pvt.1 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

An ongoing cost comparison study as part of the reinventing government initiative began Nov. 17 at Fort Benning and is scheduled to end October 1999. The study is an A-76 cost comparison study consisting of the Directorate of Public Works (DPW) and Directorate of Logistics (DOL).

According to John M. Machovec, project manager for DPW A-76 cost comparison team, the purpose of the study is to determine whether it is more cost effective to have a contract through private industry for services currently performed by DPW and DOL, such as maintenance and repair.

DPW's and DOL's primary job within the studies is to provide information to the contractor preparing the study documents. An example would be a list of all work orders done by the DPW and DOL. After providing the information DPW and DOL must review it to make sure that the work is accurately captured in the documents. This ensures that private industry is bidding on accurate and complete information.

During the process the government develops performance work statements, management studies and a quality assurance plan. These are then incorporated into a solicitation or the document that is being advertised.

The solicitation will contain a performance work statement for the areas being studied. The potential contractor would then prepare proposals to provide a price for doing the work shown. The proposals are sent for review by the government.

After a final contractor is decided upon by a selection board both the government bid and the private contractor bid are compared. The decision is made based upon whichever bid is most cost effective.

If a private contractor wins the bid a residual work force of both DPW and DOL will continue to oversee the private contractor's performance. They would also make sure the contractor does quality work in a timely manner, Machovec said.

Machovec said that not all functions within DPW and DOL are under study. Currently being reviewed are buildings and grounds, utilities, work coordination and supplies and equipment.

According to Machovec, requirements for future studies are currently being reviewed. The studies will continue until all remaining contractable functions are reviewed.

"The biggest concern of the Director of Public Works (Col. R.O. Buck) is that employees be fully informed during all stages of the study and that we comply with the Commanding General's directive to be as competitive as possible," Machovec said.

A monthly newsletter on the status of the study is currently distributed to all DPW employees. There is also a hotline where affected employees can call anonymously if so desired with any questions. The number is 545-1775.

Soldiers find dead man in car

USAIC Public Affairs Office

An elderly man's body was found in the woods at the east end of post Monday afternoon.

Military police said there were no signs of foul play, but they are conducting an investigation into the cause of death.

Police said Soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment found the body while they were conducting a route reconnaissance. They said the car was about a half mile from any road.

The 69-year-old man,was identified as Leland A. Bramley, a retired NCO. He was found inside a sleeping bag in the back seat of his car.

Criminal Investigation Division investigators said Bramley was identified on "presumptive evidence" by the car he was in and dental work.

Post celebrates women's history

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

The theme for Tuesday's Women's History Month Seminar was "Living the Legacy of Women's Rights."

Guest speakers Don and Laura Braswell from The Learning Curve Training Group of Marietta, Ga., spoke to a crowd of 50 men and women about influential figures in women's history.

"The women's movement has been a movement from the gap we've had of the opportunities for women," said Don Braswell. "I think the military has played a big part in that movement by letting women serve their country."

Laura Braswell began the speech with a discussion about the early days of the women's rights movement. She spoke of pioneers of women's rights such as Elizabeth Cady Stanton, author of the "Declaration of Sentiments," a proclamation of the angst of women over the lack of the right to vote.

Braswell also described the progress women's rights have made since the late nineteenth century.

"If women were even allowed to work, their salary went directly to their husbands. Women were made to feel totally dependent on men."

Dependent on men was not how Don Braswell described former female Soldiers who disguised themselves as men to serve in battle, or women who went to war with their husbands as nurses or cooks.

Braswell even told a legendary story of a woman named Molly Pitcher who fought in her husband's place when he had been wounded.

"Legend has it that as her husband lay dying, Molly grabbed the weapon from his hand and marched into battle," Braswell said.

Members of the audience also had their own ideas and opinions about women's rights and the movement.

"There have been many important women in American history who have made a lot of changes. I think every female has benefitted from these changes," said Jennifer Morgan, community life director, Directorate of Community Activities.

"The speech was very outstanding. They (Don and Laura Braswell) are so innovative," said Sgt. 1st Class Evelyn J. Richardson, Chairperson, Women's History Month, Equal Opportunity Adviser, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"I thought it was important that her (Laura) husband participated," Richardson said. "Women's History Month is not just for women, but it is for men as well because women have an impact upon men."

AUSA conducts dinner, hosts former chief of staff March 26

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Former Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, will be the key note speaker at the winter general membership meeting of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army March 26.

Sullivan served as the Army's 32d chief of staff from 1991 to 1995.

Commissioned through the Norwich University ROTC program, Sullivan commanded at every level from platoon through division.

His overseas assignments include tours in Germany, Korea and Vietnam.

An armor officer, he served as the assistant commandant of the Armor School at Fort Knox, Ky, and commanded the 1st Infantry Division.

Sullivan is currently serving as president of the Association of the U.S. Army.

The dinner is scheduled for the Fort Benning Officers' Club and will begin with a social hour at 6 p.m.

Soldiers and civilians are invited to attend. Those wanting to make reservations or needing more information should call their unit AUSA representative, or the AUSA office at 689-3272.

AER campaign helps Soldiers

Army Emergency Relief

The Army Emergency Relief (AER) exists solely to help the Army care for its own. Since AER is the Army's own organization, a separate campaign is conducted for AER. The AER solicits funds only from Soldiers, active and retired.

Major campaign objectives are to: increase awareness about AER for all Soldiers (active and retired), and family members — including orphans of deceased Army members; publicize procedures so all Army people know how to obtain AER assistance in time of need; and raise funds to support AER assistance programs.

The annual fund campaign is the only time each year Army people are asked to help their own organization and their fellow Army members.

Need caused AER's creation in 1942. The AER has provided more than $647 million in assistance to more than 2.5 million Army people worldwide — active and retired — and their family members since it was founded.

More than $34 million in AER assistance in 1997 was provided to almost 54,000 Soldiers and their families. Included in these figures are 46,000 active duty Soldiers and families who were provided more that $28 million in assistance, 5,100 retired Soldiers were provided more than $3 million in assistance, 1,800 widows, widowers and orphans of deceased Soldiers were provided more than $1 million in assistance and 1,100 dependent children were awarded more than $1 million in educational scholarships.

Special Forces: Fort Benning sends its share of Soldiers to skilled Army unit

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

They've been immortalized on the silver screen where actors like John Wayne, Sylvester Stallone and Steven Seagal have portrayed them. They are the Army's elite group of "Quiet Professionals" leading the way in peacetime operations and armed conflicts dating back to World War II.

The specially-trained Soldiers of the U.S. Army Special Forces Command (Airborne) are carefully selected from posts around the world and many are recruited from Fort Benning.

Last year, more than 40 Soldiers were selected to join the Special Forces from Fort Benning, said Sgt. 1st Class David Boyer, NCOIC of Fort Benning's Special Forces recruiting station.

Boyer, who runs the recruiting station along with one other Special Forces Soldier, explained although Soldiers volunteer for the Special Forces assignment, they must actually be selected to wear the green beret.

The road to acceptance begins at Fort Bragg, N.C., as recruits take the Special Forces Assessment and Selection (SFAS) course, a three-week long program that tests Soldiers' physical and mental stamina.

"This is some of the most rigorous and stressful training in the Army today and the key is knowing what you're getting yourself into," Boyer said.

After the intense month of roadmarches, endurance runs and obstacle courses, normally less than 42 percent of the 250 recruits in a class make it through successfully.

"Soldiers don't make it for different reasons. A lot go (to SFAS) not knowing what to expect or without proper training," Boyer said. "It is our job to make sure they know what is going to be expected of them and show them how to prepare," he said.

Although the percentage rate fluctuates depending on how many Soldiers are sent to each SFAS class, Boyer said usually about 50 percent of Fort Benning Soldiers are selected.

Boyer contributes the post's high selection rate to the preparation the Soldiers receive before heading to SFAS.

Before even scheduling an SFAS class date, potential recruits are required to pass an Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT) in the 17-21-year-old category. However, in addition to the traditional sit-up, push-up and two-mile run events, Soldiers must also swim 50 meters in a certain time without touching the floor or walls of the pool.

"We grade them exactly how they will be graded at SFAS," said Boyer, who added the APFT also allows the recruiters to assess the Soldiers' physical condition.

"Statistics show Soldiers with higher APFT scores have a better chance of making it through the selection course," he said.

Once the Soldier has made a decision to go ahead with the selection phase of recruitment, he is given a recommended training regime to prepare for the physical demands of SFAS.

In addition to training on their own, the recruiters also conduct weekly training sessions before scheduled SFAS class dates to further prepare the recruits. These sessions include road marches, endurance runs and land navigation training among other skill training.

"A lot of Soldiers prepare on their own and sometimes they don't have a clue as what to expect so it does them no good," Boyer said. "We are one of the only recruiting stations that provide this extra training and we have found that it does make a difference."

Spc. James Carkner of 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, recently returned after successfully completing the selection course.

"It was helpful knowing what to expect because then I could concentrate on other things and not have to worry as much," Carkner said.

Although the candidates are officially out of the recruiters' hands after they leave for SFAS, Boyer said the station likes to keep tabs on the selectees.

"We like to monitor and assist them if we can. It's sort of a never-ending relationship."

After selection, the journey to becoming a full-fledged Special Forces Soldier is still not complete. The next step requires the Soldiers to attend the Special Forces Qualification Course, which is between six months up to a year long depending on the chosen specialty.

Soldiers interested in more information about Special Forces can attend briefings held 6 p.m. Tuesdays and 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Wednesdays in Building 75, Room 408.

For more information call, 545-3079 or 545-6778.

Competition 'challenges' teamwork efficiency

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, scrambled up ropes and shimmied under barbed wire, racing to the finish at the obstacle course phase during the Pioneer Challenge competition at Sand Hill March 3.

The Pioneer Challenge was created to challenge Soldiers ability to perform a particular task to standards, said Command Sgt. Maj. Joe Bradley, command sergeant major of 1st Bn, 29th Inf. Regt.

The day began with a Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT) at 6 a.m., which was followed later at Red Cloud Range, "where their skills were challenged extensively," Bradley said.

Each squad had to demonstrate their ability to perform the following tasks to standards: BGST (Bradley Gunnery Sustained Training), disassembling and assembling an M-16, breaking and joining track and manually traversing the turret.

"This gives a Soldier a chance to demonstrate their leadership capabilities," Bradley said at Tuesday's event.

"The land navigation test is challenging and demonstrates the Soldiers leadership skills because the squad leader has to organize a squad, negotiate obstacles and then the squad has to find as many points as they can before they run out of time."

Privates to staff sergeants were chosen from their units to participate in the challenge.

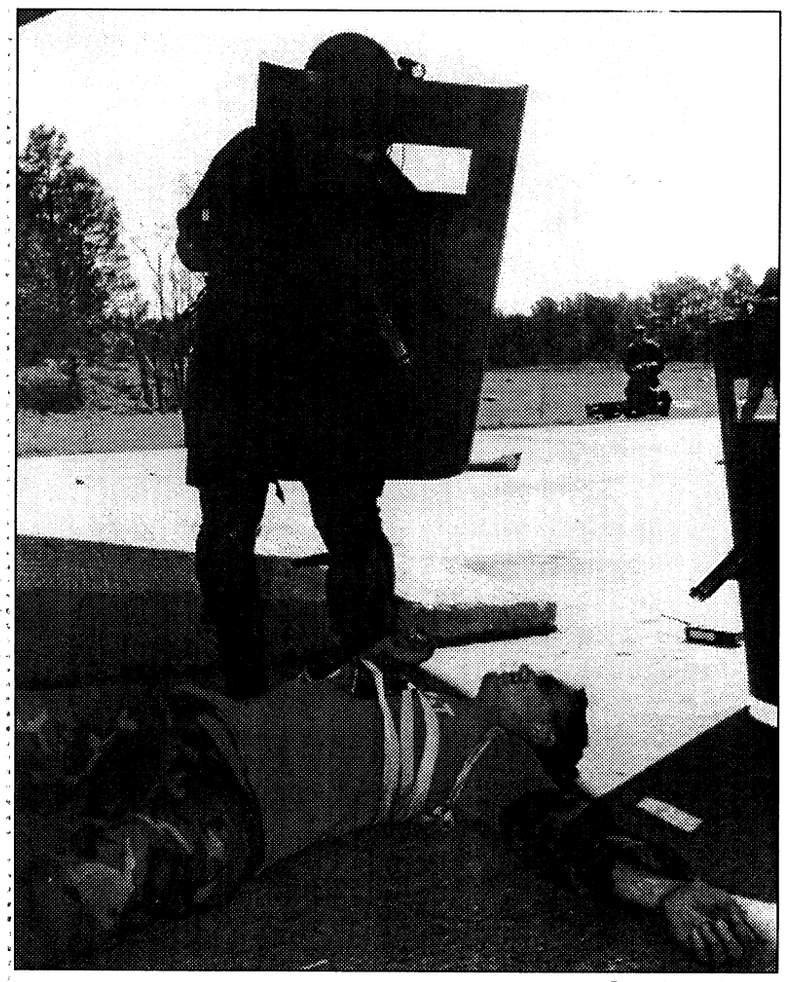
"The majority of the younger Soldiers are learning things above what most Soldiers would learn at their rank," said Sgt. 1st Class Antonio Clay, NCOIC, Company C, 1st Bn, 29th Inf.

During the obstacle phase, Soldiers had only three minutes to complete the course. The course consisted of a rope climb, horizontal ladder, foot maze, horizontal rope, low wire, fence hurdles, low rails, an 8-foot wall and ended with a tunnel.

"It's been a challenging day I couldn't have done it without the training," said Pvt.2 Neils Godfredson, Co. C, 1st Bn, 29th Inf. Regt.

"This exercise is to promote teamwork. Teamwork is the most challenging part of this," Bradley said.

"Although the Soldiers did exceptionally well at the obstacle course," Bradley said, "the most difficult part of the obstacle course seemed to be the rope climb."



That didn't seem to be a concern to most of the Soldiers competing in the challenge.

"The most important part is that we are all doing it as a team. We start together, we finish together," said Pfc. Jose Barbosa, HHC, 1st Bn, 29th Inf. Regt.

The Pioneer Challenge did more than challenge the Soldiers selected to compete, Clay said.

The entire day is a learning experience for the Soldiers starting with an APFT test that teaches endurance and later a test that qualifies the Soldiers with M-16s, Clay said.

Exercise allows units to practice for emergencies

A Special Reaction Team member guards Sgt. Thomas Hayseldon, 988th Military Police Company, who acts as a terrorist.

By Pvt.1 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Lawson Army Airfield was in trouble. Terrorists had seized control and taken hostages. Lives were at stake and the terrorists had bombs and weapons. The situation was critical and Fort Benning's emergency services were ready. It was now in their hands to handle the situation.

This scenario became the basis for the Force Protection and Mass Casualty exercise conducted March 4, involving the protection services of Fort Benning and the surrounding communities' medical facilities.

According to Maj. Samuel F. Mosteller, chief of Law Enforcement Service, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company, Directorate of Public Safety (DPS), the exercise was a "no-notice" exercise. Agencies were given little or no advanced notice of the situation, to test the ability of the agencies to adapt to a threatening situation without warning.

He said the exercise required the military police (MP), fire department and the emergency medical services (EMS) at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) to work together to resolve the situation portrayed in the scenario and bring things back to a normal operating capacity, such as handling the terrorists and keeping the area secure.

"The main idea behind the exercise is to build closer bonds between the force protection services," Mosteller said. "Each agency is a 'life protection' agency. When there is a situation where life is threatened it is up to us to tighten the bonds that make us a team. By doing so we can protect life and bring a situation back to normal with much more ease."

The exercise had four phases. Each phase required a specific agency to react according to the demands of the scenario. In the end, all agencies ended up working together to advance through the phases of the scenario, Mosteller said.

Phase one consisted of the events leading up to the attack and the attack itself.

Mosteller said the exercise began with the terrorists' call to E-911 claiming hostages were being held in a C-130 at Lawson Army Airfield. From there the scenario unfolded requiring immediate planning and response from all involved agencies.

According to Mosteller, phase two focused on the DPS's ability to respond and react to the situation.

The first responsibility of the MP's was to immediately secure the area. From there, the Criminal Investigation Department (CID) handled negotiations with the terrorists.

"It's our job to to keep the chain of command informed of what the terrorists' demands are," said special agent Stanley Monroe, 86th MP Detachment, CID. "We find out what the terrorists want and why they are doing what they are doing."

Mosteller said as the exercise progressed the Special Reaction Team (SRT) was given the command to act. Dressed in black from head to toe the SRT snuck onto the plane and seized control. The team apprehended the terrorists and gave initial assessments on injured hostages.

In phase three of the exercise, the terrorists blew up the plane. The fire department responded by putting out the fire and containing all hazardous materials (HAZMAT) and helped in early treatment of injured hostages.

"We want to make sure we contain the fire, take care of HAZMAT and assist the EMS," said Capt. Arthur Simmons, Chief of Fire Prevention and Protection Division. "There's nothing more important than functioning in a critical situation and the only way to learn how is to hold an exercise like this."

The fourth and final phase tested the response, treatment and transportation of Martin Army Community Hospital's EMS. The EMS set up a triage, a team which assesses the condition of the injured. By evaluating the injured, the EMS was able to treat and transport the victims according to severity.

The exercise ended with the transportation of two injured hostages by air ambulance to surrounding community hospitals.

"When you have a community type exercise, you involve all of your resources, because if there is a real attack you have to work together. This exercise helps us learn how to work together," said Capt. George Allen, chief of readiness branch hospital education and readiness division, MACH.

The importance of the exercise was to set up communication among the agencies and learn from each others mistakes, Mosteller said.

He said his hopes are to conduct many more exercises on a more frequent basis. He would also like to involve other essential agencies of the Fort Benning community.

"This exercise only involved the medical emergency response of the community. In the long view we need to look at all agencies on Fort Benning becoming involved and contributing to the best of their capabilities," Mosteller said.

"The Army motto has always been 'train how you fight' and that is exactly what we are doing," Mosteller said.

ACAP offers tips to succeed

Army Career and Alumni Program

"Prior to separation from the Army, Soldiers are required to receive briefings, information, and assistance to fully understand their benefits and entitlements," said Harold Ericksen, Fort Benning's ACAP (Army Career and Alumni Program) Center manager. This process begins with the three-day ACAP preseparation session.

The individual counseling sessions are scheduled next.

Congress legislated and the Army directed separating Soldiers begin the ACAP process no later than 90 days before ETS, separation or retirement date.

The three-day program of briefings and workshops is presented in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, by ACAP Center personnel, Georgia Department of Labor Local Veteran Employment Representative and Fort Benning service providers (Transition Services, Retirement Services, Veterans Administration, Finance, Reserve Component and TriCare).

Successful participation in this program empowers Soldiers and their families to more efficiently transition to civilian life with dignity and pride, Ericksen said. Upcoming three-day ACAP sessions for ETS & other separatees for the remainder of March begin Monday, March 23 and 30.

A special ACAP session for retiring Soldiers is conducted once each month to address retirement issues and is not appropriate for those separating on ETS dates or for reasons other than retirement.

The April, May and June 1998 ACAP Schedule follows: (First day begins at 7:30 a.m., classroom 30, Infantry Hall, civilian casual dress)

April 1998
- 6-8 Retirement
- 13-15 ETS or other
- 20-22 ETS or other
- 27-29 ETS or other

May 1998
- 4-6 ETS or other
- 11-13 Retirement
- 18-20 ETS or other

June 1998
- 1-3 ETS or other
- 8-10 Retirement
- 15-17 ETS or other
- 22-24 ETS or other
- June 29-July 1 ETS

Family members earn quality child-care award

Diane Sinkule
Child Development Services

Four Family Child Care providers at Fort Benning have earned their Child Development Associate Credential.

This is a nationally recognized award from Washington, D.C., and is presented to those who are providing quality child care.

Kim Powell, Stephanie Rayner, Mary Sutton and Jessica Jenkins earned the designation by completing activities with children, written and oral testing, formal observation and by compiling a personal resource file.

Their activities showed proficiency in working with children ages infant through preschool. They covered all areas of a child's development, including physical, social, emotional and mental.

Jessica is married to Sgt. John Jenkins. She has a daughter named Ashley and provides care in the Custer Terrace Housing Area.

Kim is married to Sgt. 1st Class Harry (Bill) Powell and is the mother of Ryan and Alexandria. She lives in the Davis Hills Housing Area.

Stephanie is married to Staff Sgt. Derrick Rayner and has three children, Derrick, Valencia and Shanae. She has also been a provider in Germany and at Fort Carson.

Mary's husband is Sgt. Robert Sutton. She has two children, Amber and Aric. Mary worked in Child Development Services while in Germany and now provides care in her home in the Custer Terrace Housing Area.

Trial: Court-martial nears completion; jury begins deliberation

McKinney had sex with her at his Fort Myer, Va., quarters, Oct. 30, 1996, was truthful in the trial and only withheld information from her first sworn statements out of fear, according to Child. She also had truthful but imperfect memory, according to, Child said.

"(Lead Defense Counsel Charles) Gittins would hold (the accusers) to a computer-like memory," said Child.

After recounting the testimony by the accusers, Child attacked the alibi McKinney presented for the allegation of adultery.

The prosecution said similarities in the accusers' testimony helped prove the credibility of their allegations. Child closed his argument on that idea.

The defense began its closing argument by re-emphasizing McKinney's outstanding career and the admiration and respect he has earned in his more than 29 years of service.

The defense said McKinney pulled himself up from humble beginnings to the top enlisted post in the Army.

"Gene McKinney is America," Gittins said. "He made himself a success." Gittins recounted and listed the positive character witnesses for McKinney and summarized that part of his argument by saying, "Character does count."

From good character witnesses for McKinney, Gittins recapped the witnesses who testified that the accusers were not truthful.

"If you believe the allegations you have to accept the testimony of cheaters, adulterers and admitted liars," Gittins said.

Gittins also attacked the investigation of this case saying that investigators took false statements, and gathered evidence in a biased manner to mislead the jury. Gittins also attacked the prosecuting of the case and the immunity granted to some of the accusers.

"The government is willing to excuse any misconduct to get to McKinney," Gittins said.

Gittins also recapped the accusers testimony, supplementing with it McKinney's version of what happened.

Gittins repeatedly attacked changes in testimony by the accusers and the inability of some to remember some of the details surrounding alleged events.

"The truth doesn't change," Gittins said. "The truth is a constant. If this were the truth, it wouldn't be changing."

Gittins said a notebook presented by the staff sergeant as a daily journal was a fabrication. Gittins said the allegations were recently fabricated. Thus, a journal entry dated in October 1994 mentioning one of the alleged incidents had to be backdated.

Gittins closed his statement by emphasizing that the government had failed to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt.

"Will you be as sure in 20 years of your decision as you will be when you deliver it?" he asked the jury.

Child, in the rebuttal of the defense closing argument, related what would have to have happened if the defense statements are true. Child related seemingly unlikely conspiracies and schemes he said the defense was alleging. Often repeating the phrase, "You have to believe..." Child said these stories were unbelievable.

Before presenting closing arguments, the prosecution presented its rebuttal case March 5-6.

To refute an alibi offered by McKinney, the prosecution brought a document examiner and the auto craft shop manager to the stand. Their testimony was to discount McKinney's alibi for night of Oct. 30, 1996, when he allegedly had sex in his quarters with a female sergeant.

The alibi is a sign-in sheet for the Fort Myer automotive craft shop. Child said the alibi was fabricated and the fabrication was proven by an expert document examiner and the manager of the Fort Myer automotive craft shop. The craft shop sign-in sheet for Oct. 30 showed 12 names. McKinney's name was the last name on the sign-in sheet. The sign-in sheets were in a clip board at the front desk of the craft shop.

The document examiner testified that there were impressions on the sheet that was underneath the Oct. 30 sign-in sheet for every name except McKinney's. Child said this showed McKinney put his name on the sheet later, when the allegations came out and he needed an alibi.

The craft shop manager said he keeps a separate daily log of how many persons use the craft shop each day. His daily log Oct. 30 only showed 11 names. The manager, who is a friend of McKinney's, asked the court not to base their decision solely on his counting of the users of the craft shop because his records were not sufficiently accurate to disprove McKinney's alibi.

McKinney had previously testified that he signed in Oct. 30 at 7:55 p.m. and paid a craft shop employee $4 to use the lift so he could change his oil. The craft shop employee denied that he was present when McKinney signed in and said he was not paid to use the lift, indicating he had not placed a check mark next to McKinney's name on the sign-in roster. There was a check mark by the other 11 names on the sign-in roster.

Seven of the users of the craft shop that night testified that they did not see McKinney that night.

Child also attacked the credibility of a witness who said he saw McKinney there that evening by highlighting his prior inconsistent statements to CID.

The prosecution's rebuttal case followed Wednesday's testimony, including cross-examination of McKinney. Under direct examination McKinney recounted his relationship and interactions with the female staff sergeant, saying it was all professional and they only met in person twice.

Under cross-examination McKinney repeatedly denied Child's accusations that he committed the offenses outlined in the charges.

Students learn math with Beanie Babies

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

McBride pre-kindergarten teacher Nancy Gordy came up with an innovative way to teach her students colors, counting and more. Gordy uses the popular stuffed bean bag animals Beanie Babies as a teaching tool in her classroom.

Gordy started collecting Beanie Babies more than a year ago after her son Chris got caught up in the Beanie Babies rage himself. Since that time, Gordy has collected more than 100 Beanie Babies, many now worth large amounts of money.

"Teaching four- and five-year olds is always a challenge and teachers are trying to find new and exciting ways to keep their attention," Gordy said. "Beanie Babies are a hit in the classroom. The children love them."

Gordy came up with the idea of using the Beanie Babies as way to teach the students various subjects.

"I first brought them in to help teach some of my students their colors — they would choose one and have to tell me what color it was," Gordy said. "If they had trouble with a color, they would carry the Beanie Baby around to remind them of the color.

Gordy then discovered she could use the animals for more than colors.

"As I was reading a story from a Ranger Rick magazine about marsupials, I figured out they could not understand the concept, so the Beanie Babies kangaroo and koala were a great help," Gordy explained. "The kangaroo has a baby in it's pocket and the children could relate and remember what a marsupial was. This was a great science lesson."

The Beanie Babies are also helpful when teaching the students math.

"For math we count and sort them. We sort by color and by categories: dogs, cats, farm animals, wild animals and more," Gordy said.

Besides math, Gordy uses the Beanie Babies to teach the students about marine animals.

"There are many sea animals like the whale, dolphin, crab, fish and more. The students have a sea and land map they use. The hands-on experience and their imagination bring the animals to life-like while they are learning," Gordy said.

Many parents have also gotten into the spirit of Beanie Babies. Several parents have given Beanie Babies to the class, especially the Teenie Beanies from McDonald's Happy Meals, Gordy said.

Gordy would still like to enlarge the classroom collection of Beanie Babies and invites any donations of Teenie Babies or Beanie Babies.

AAFES announces hazardous magnet recall

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — The Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), announced the recall of 21,000 hazardous cookie-shaped refrigerator magnets.

Fisher-Price Inc., of East Aurora, N.Y., in conjunction with the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), initiated the voluntary recall because the magnets can come apart, releasing small plastic pieces that might present a choking hazard to young children.

The refrigerator magnet toy looks like a partially eaten chocolate cookie with colorful candy pieces on top. The bottom of the cookie is white.

There is an alphanumeric imprint on the back of the magnet, the first three numbers of which make up the date code. The recall involves only cookie-shaped magnets sold after Sept. 1, 1997, with date codes from 224 through 228.

The cookie-shaped magnet sold as part of a three piece Refrigerator Activity Set, Fisher-Price No. 71126. The other magnets look like a carrot and a piece of cheese. The recall affects only the cookie magnet.

Customers should take the magnet away from children immediately and call Fisher-Price toll-free at (888) 407-6479 between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m EST, Monday through Friday, for a replacement magnet. Customers overseas may return the magnet to their nearest AAFES exchange for a full refund.

Healthy snacks are beneficial to all ages

By Maj. Christine N. Parker
Martin Army Community Hospital

"Hey, Mom, what can I have for a snack?" Or, "I'm starved and I won't be home for hours and I don't have anything here to eat."

These statements are said everyday somewhere throughout the country.

Being hungry is okay. It is what we choose to eat when we are hungry that can hurt us.

All age groups benefit from eating snacks. Some age groups need to snack because they can't get everything they need within the three meals or they can only eat small amounts of food at a time.

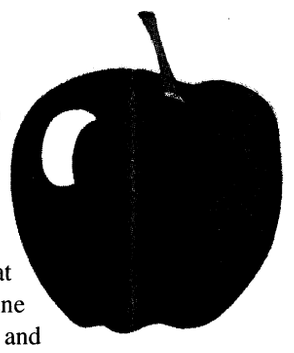
Despite what many people think, snacking is a good thing and is frequently the best way for children to obtain all the nutrients they need.

The key is to pick the right snack. Candy, cookies and soda provide empty sugar and fat calories and provide no important vitamins, minerals or fiber.

Sneaky snacks are another thing to beware of. Some foods such as granola bars, trail mix, fruit drinks, microwave popcorn and fruit rolls sound like nutritious alternatives to traditional high fat snack foods.

Unfortunately these foods are not good alternatives because they may also be loaded with hidden sugar and fat, depending on the brand.

Whether thinking about snacks for work or school, the important thing is planning. Planning ahead is the best way to avoid snacking on the wrong food.



Keeping a supply of nonperishable foods, such as instant vegetable or bean soup, pretzels, single-servings of water-packed tuna or oatmeal, dried fruit or low-fat crackers can be the best defense against raiding the vending machine.

Not all vending machines offer healthy alternatives, but some do. If the vending machine is the only option, select pretzels, low-fat crackers, fresh fruit, fruit juice or nonfat yogurt.

School snacks or sack lunches should include foods such as applesauce, graham crackers, fresh fruit, air-popped popcorn, celery or carrot sticks with a thin layer of peanut butter.

Low-fat dressings and cheese as well as low-fat yogurt can be included if the sack will be able kept chilled. Flavored rice cakes, bagels, vanilla wafers, raisins fig bars, low-fat puddings and sugar-free jello are also popular choices.

Choosing the right snack is important. Poor choices can add unwanted fat and sugar, providing only additional calories without adding important nutrients.

A report from the American Dietetic Association indicated that 75 percent of men and women eat at least one snack a day and preschoolers rely on snacks to provide one third of their energy requirements each day.

This is why it is critical that nutritious snacks are planned. Be prepared for the next snack attack and have some of the foods recommended in this article on hand.

Don't blame the kids if they snack on the wrong foods, make sure there are only good snacks available for them.

Teaching good snacking habits now may prevent future chronic problems such as obesity and heart disease.

Faith artists display work at Columbus Museum for NYAM

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Faith Middle School celebrated National Youth Art Month (NYAM) March 8 with a showing of their artwork at the Columbus Museum.

NYAM was established by the National Art Educational Association to promote creativity and awareness of art approximately 20 years ago.

"National Youth Art Month allows students to exhibit their artwork and get recognition. It also makes the community aware of the different art programs done in schools," said Faith art teacher Gloria Loar.

Every year in March the U.S. celebrates NYAM, said Loar. For the last four years, Loar has been chairman of the local schools participation in NYAM.

"I get the event organized, contact teachers and supervise the organization of the artwork. Teachers from eleven different schools, including Muscogee and Harris counties, submit artwork and the museum decides what two and three dimensional artwork will be displayed," Loar explained.

Thirty-seven seventh- and eighth-grade students participated in the art show, including eighth-grader Claribel Navarrete, 13, daughter of Betty and Sgt. 1st Class Luis Navarrete, Headquarters and Headquarters Detatchment, Henry Caro NCOA.

"I did a tempera batik of Tweety Bird because he's my favorite cartoon character," Navarrete said. "It's made with three layers and all have to dry in between. It took me three weeks to make it, but when I was done I felt really proud."

Students did not make projects for the show; Loar picked projects to showcase from artwork already done. The students also took a field trip last week wearing T-shirts Loar made for the students, with a picture of their own artwork on the T-shirt.

"I encourage the kids to do their best and this keeps their creativity open," Loar said. "The curriculum I use includes tempera batiks, printmaking, maskmaking, watercolors and more."

One student who made a mask was eighth-grader Michelle Roth, 14, daughter of Pamela and Sgt. 1st Class George Roth, Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

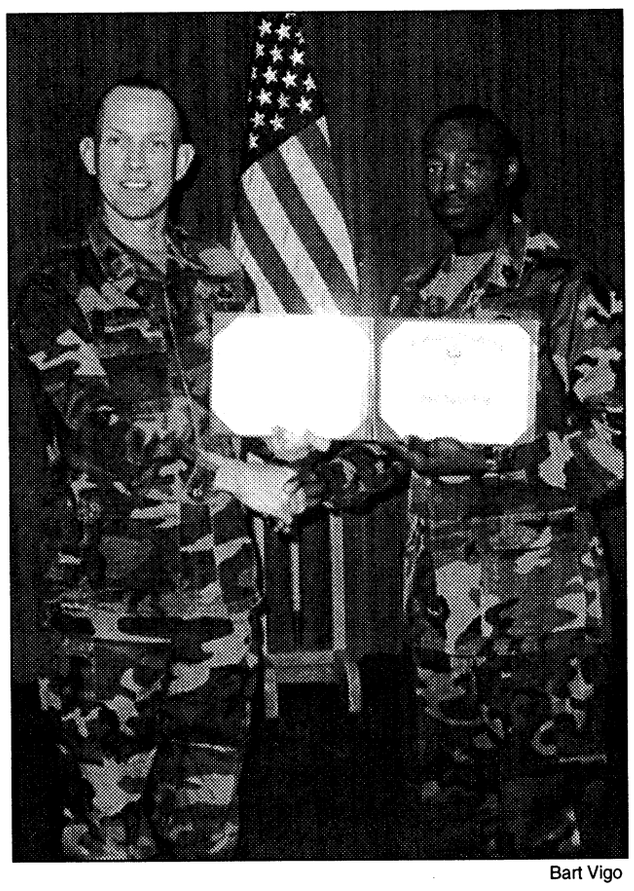
"It took me a week to make the mask out of paper-mache. Then I painted it using weather symbols. I used my imagination when deciding how to paint it," Roth said.

Seventh-grader Madison Kniskern, 12, daughter of Deborah and Staff Sgt. Patrick Kniskern, 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, used her creativity to paint with watercolors.

"I used watercolors to paint theatrical masks. I like using lots of different colors, so I thought of something using lots of colors. When I was finished, I felt proud of it," Kniskern said.

The students had the chance to exhibit their artwork March 8 to the community.

"We had a very good showing despite the rain," Loar said. "We showed more artwork than we had in the last four years. I was very pleased with the results."



The art show will run until Sunday at The Columbus Museum. The hours of the museum are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Admission to the museum is free.

For more information, call 297-4484.

Health Fair to be conducted — A Russell County Health Fair will be conducted from 1 to 5 p.m. Tuesday at the Riverview Housing Authority Activity Center in Phenix City, Ala.

There will be free exhibits and free blood pressure, diabetes, sickle cell and HIV testing.

For more information, call Beth Williams or Lani Thompson at (334) 298-5581.

Association plans Honor Roll Ceremony — The Follow Me Chapter of the 1st Cavalry Division Association honors its fallen comrades with an Honor Roll Ceremony 11 a.m. April 18 at Chattahoochee Valley Veteran's Center, 1000 Victory Drive, Columbus.

To help surviving spouses and other descendants certify that their loved one was a member of the 1st Cavalry Division a representative will be available to look over the military records of the deceased veteran from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. every Friday in January at the Old Welcome Center (near the Farmers Market in Columbus).

For more information, call Jim Hollander at 689-7471 or Bill Stanfield at 563-2306.

Vets plan reunion — Team 162, Red Markers and the Society of the Vietnamese Airborne Division are holding a reunion April 22-26 at the Holiday Inn Northwest in San Antonio, Texas.

For more information, call Fred Brander at (615) 645-3082.

CCSC needs volunteers — The Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus School Year Program needs volunteers to act as teachers and aides.

The volunteers will tutor students in reading, math and other core areas. Classes are 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. every Saturday during the school year.

The volunteers will work at either Eastway School, 4601 Buena Vista Road or Davis School at 1822 Sheperd Drive, Columbus. For more information, call Lonnie Jackson at 687-5357 or Daisy Honor at 687-8808.

Debt management assistance is available — There are two non-profit agencies in Columbus offering debt management assistance.

They will each make an evaluation of your financial status and work with your creditors, if your financial status allows. They can work with creditors to adjust payments. Soldiers can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated amount to each creditor.

•Alternative Financial Resolutions provides free debt management assistance to all clients. They can take information from you in person, by phone, or by mail. After they have made an evaluation of your financial status, they will be able to determine if you have the resources to do a debt management plan. They will then work with your creditors to adjust payments to fit within your income and meet creditor approval.

You can make one payment to them and they will disburse the negotiated payment amounts.

You can reach Alternative Financial Resolutions by calling 323-2108, or by writing to them at Post Office Box 9364, Columbus GA 31908-9364.

•Consumer Credit Counseling Service (CCCS) is a department of Columbus Family Counseling Center, located at 1350 15th Avenue, across from the side of Red Lobster Restaurant.

The monthly fee for their service is $15. You can make an appointment with the CCCS by calling 327-3239.

Program seeks host families — The Program of Academic Exchange is seeking host families for a foreign student exchange program. All participating students speak English, have full medical coverage and their own spending money.

Host family requirements are to furnish meals, a place to sleep, a place to study and a supportive atmosphere.

For more information, call Rhonda Mobley at 571-0406.

Red Cross needs blood — The Red Cross needs 900 to 1,000 people to donate blood each weekday to meet the needs of hospital patients in the region. Most healthy people age 17 or older, who weigh at least 110 pounds, can give blood.

Please call (800) GIVE-LIFE for blood drive information.

March commemorates Bataan Death March — The 10th annual (56th year commemorative) Bataan Memorial Death March will take place April 19 at the White Sands Missile Range, N.M.

The Memorial March commemorates the Bataan Death March that occurred in the Philippines after the Japanese invasion April 9, 1942 during World War II and pays tribute to Bataan Veterans for their sacrifices. Only 60,000 out of 80,000 veterans survived the grueling 65-mile force march from the Bataan peninsula to San Fernando, a small town in the Philippines.

For more information, call (505) 678-3374.

Unit carwash fundraiser set — Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment will conduct a carwash 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. March 21 and April 18 at Advance Auto Parts located at 3553 Victory Drive in Columbus.

The carwash is being held to raise funds for support of the family support group.

Support group meets — The Sickle Cell support group meets at 7 p.m. every fourth Tuesday of each month in the Medical Center conference room.

If you are interested in volunteer service, need assistance or information on sickle cell or just want to meet with others who have this disease, call 571-6852.

CSU forms support group — Columbus State University is forming a local chapter for the National Association of Anorexia Nervosa and Association Disorders.

The meetings are scheduled for Thursdays at noon at CSU.

Any interested participants can contact the CSU Counseling Center at 568-2273.

MRCA seeks cowboys — The Military Rodeo Cowboys Association seeks active duty, retired, active-reserve or military dependents to be members.

For more information, call the MRCA Atlantic Circuit director Mike De La Pena at (703) 892-7625 or the Circuit secretary at (757) 249-3808.

Military construction project to begin

Directorate of Public Works

The 75th Ranger Regiment barracks and company operations military construction project will begin Monday. The 75th Ranger Barrack site comprises the area south of 1st Infantry Brigade Loop, west of Sightseeing Road and northwest of Dixie Road. This area is presently referred to as Sergeant Major's Field.

The company operations facilities site will be constructed in the area bounded by Dixie Road west of Building 2805, 1st Infantry Brigade Loop, Lexington Street and Building 2812. This project is scheduled to be completed in the spring of 2001. The total cost of this project is about $34 million.

The West Georgia Area Office, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, is managing the construction contract for the installation. For the safety of everyone concerned, the construction site is off limits to unauthorized personnel during this three-year period. There will be minimal impact to personnel who live or work in this area, but as construction gets into full swing, some limited road closures and utility outages will be required. As these closures and utility outages are scheduled, DPW will provide ample notification and coordination to ensure appropriate action can be taken.

If you have any questions related to this project, call Michael Graham at 545-1082 or stop by his field office in Building 2830.

Family housing satellite dish policy

During the past several months, the Directorate of Public Works has received numerous questions about the installation's policy on satellite dishes. The following information clarifies the installation's policy.

Residents must receive approval to install a satellite dish by stopping by the Family Housing Branch, DPW, Building 399, and completing a satellite dish application before installing a dish. If you have already installed a satellite dish without completing this application it is very important that you stop by the Family Housing Branch as soon as possible.

The installation's policy is:

•Dish must be installed in the rear yard. (Non-road side for Austin and Miller Loop)

•Dish or associated equipment cannot be attached to buildings, privacy walls, garages or storage buildings.

•Cables must be buried or concealed to avoid a safety hazard.

•All evidence of dish must be removed prior to leaving the installation.

•Existing cables are not to be removed or damaged.

•Provide a sketch of the location of dish and the means of getting cables from dish to television.

•For more information, call 545-2990.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," call Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWC (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Healthy hearts

Exercise and diet help prevent coronary disease

By Krystal McGee
Martin Army Community Hospital

For every minute of each day, an average of three Americans will suffer a heart attack.

When added together, this adds up to almost one and a half million attacks each year. These attacks help to make coronary disease the No. 1 cause of death and disability in the United States.

But there is better news — in the past 20 years, death related to coronary heart disease has declined. It has declined because Americans are paying attention to health information and putting into practice the valuable information that has been provided.

For years, information has been published about the three primary risk factors (high blood pressure, high blood cholesterol, and cigarette smoking) associated with coronary heart disease, but it has not been until recently that research has addressed another risk factor — inactive lifestyles.

Studies now show regular physical activity can reduce the risk of coronary heart disease. Regular physical activity reduces the risks by burning calories which may help weight loss or maintain weight. It also helps to control blood lipids, diabetes and other risk factors. Physical fitness is even great for people who have suffered a heart attack. The chances of survival increase after beginning a fitness regimen approved by a doctor.

There are potential risks for exercising, but when comparing the risks to the benefits, risks lose the race.

Muscle and joint injuries are a possibility due to exercising too hard or for too long. Heat exhaustion or stroke on hot days can occur if precautions are not taken. These can be avoided by drinking plenty of fluids.

There is a possibility to aggravate existing heart problems also.

People have actually died while exercising. However, most of these deaths are caused by overexertion in people who already had heart conditions. People also die while sleeping, but it doesn't mean they shouldn't sleep. The key is to gradually increase the intensity and length of the exercise program.

The benefits of exercising are more energy and less stress caused by the release of endorphins in the body during exercise. Burning calories helps to lose weight and decrease body fat. The risk of heart attacks are reduced as a result of an improved efficiency of the heart and lungs. Stamina and strength level also improves. The bottom line is regular physical activity improves quality of life.

So decide to start an exercise program. The most important things to do are find an enjoyable activity and to do it consistently. The program should be at least three times per week. If 30 to 60 minutes of time doesn't fit into an exercise schedule all at once, schedule three 10 minute walks into each day. Set goals and don't forget rewards when the goals are met. Choosing enjoyable activities helps keep one exercising regularly.

Other things to do to become more active throughout the day are:

•Use the stairs.

•Park far away from the building and walk.

•Do housework at a more brisk pace.

•Mow the lawn.

•Carry out groceries.

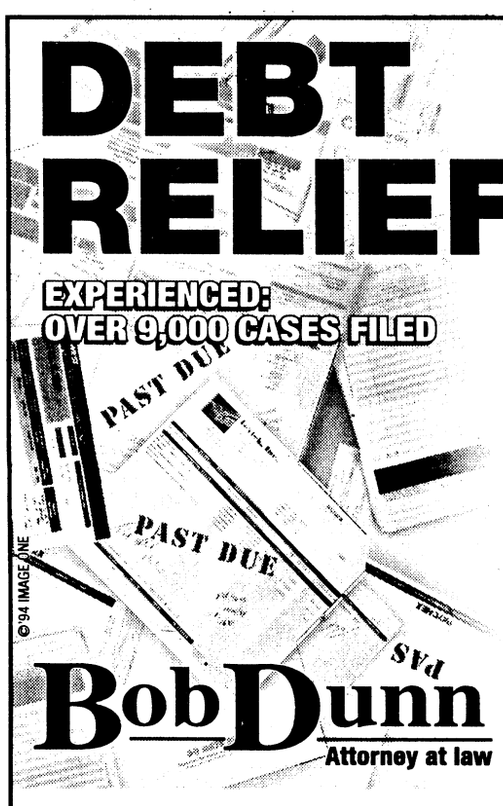
•Go dancing instead of a movie after dinner.

•Take a walk after dinner instead of watching TV.

Physical activity benefits a person in so many ways, especially to reduce the risks of coronary heart disease. However, a regular physical fitness program doesn't preclude the possibility of heart disease. Reduce or eliminate any risk factors to lower the chances of having a heart attack. Some more tips to help reduce any risk factors are:

•Stay active.

•Stop smoking.



•Control high blood pressure.

•Cut down on total fats, saturated fats, cholesterol and salt in the diet.

Remember these tips and stay "fit to win" for life.

PWOC's meets Thursdays — The Protestant Women of the Chapel (PWOC) meet and study the Bible Thursdays.

The PWOC is a nondenominational group of military and civilian wives who meet 9:30 -11:30 a.m. Thursday for Bible study, prayer support, singing and fellowship in Building 2521, the Religious Education Center, on Indianhead Road (near the Airborne School).

Child care is provided at no cost in Building 25 1 7.

For more information, call Cackie Howe at 685-2217 or Robin Kennedy at 569-0890.

Sunday School meets at White Elementary — Sunday School meets every Sunday from 9:30-10:30 a.m. at Edward A. White School. There are classes for all ages from two years of age through adults.

Child care is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel for children two years and younger, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School.

Bus transportation is available if needed by calling 545-4715.

Sunday services need musicians — The custodian of the Consolidated Chaplain's Fund is accepting applications for musicians for Sunday morning chapel services.

For more information, call Staff Sgt. Tamitha Wahlstrom at 545-1934.

PARTY meetings set — The children's group called "Personal Attitudes Related To You" meets from 10 a.m. to noon the first and third Saturday of each month in the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

Activities for this group include Bible study, music, recreation and refreshments.

All students ages five years through 14 are eligible and invited to attend.

Chaplain advises community not to worry about yesterday, tomorrow

Chaplain (Maj.) Sherman Baker
Martin Army Community Hospital

There are two days in every week one should not worry.

reflections

Just two days should be kept free from all fear and apprehension. Within those days we should place our trust in God and in living in peace.

The first day in which we should not worry is yesterday. It is forever in the past.

We cannot retrieve one single moment of a day gone by. No matter how hard we try, we cannot change a single action or word that was said.

So, let yesterday's failures, cares, mistakes, aches and pains become just what they are, a memory of the past. Let us lay our former days aside in God's keeping.

The other day in which we should not fret is tomorrow. It is always beyond our immediate control.

Tomorrow will come with its possible burdens and adversities, but our anxiety will not alter its dawning. Let us choose to be at peace in God, letting tomorrow come in its own time.

Only one day remains for us to consider. That day is today. Any person can face the battles and hardships of just one day, a mere 24-hour span of time.

It is only when we start looking behind us at yesterday and before us at tomorrow, that we become afraid and apprehensive.

Psalm 118:24 says, "This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it."

God has made this day we have to face. We can only trust him to help us face our daily problems and anxiety.

Trusting in God means belief in God. Trusting in God means confidence in God — a confident knowledge, born of your own experience can be depended upon — that knows and cares, that is sufficient for all things. You can put the hands of your life in his outstretched hand and go where he leads.

Let us face fears by remembering yesterday is gone and tomorrow has not yet come, and let's start today by resting in the peace and love of God.

"Take delight in the Lord, and he will give you the desires of your heart."

— Psalms 37:4

Students run for 100 Mile Club

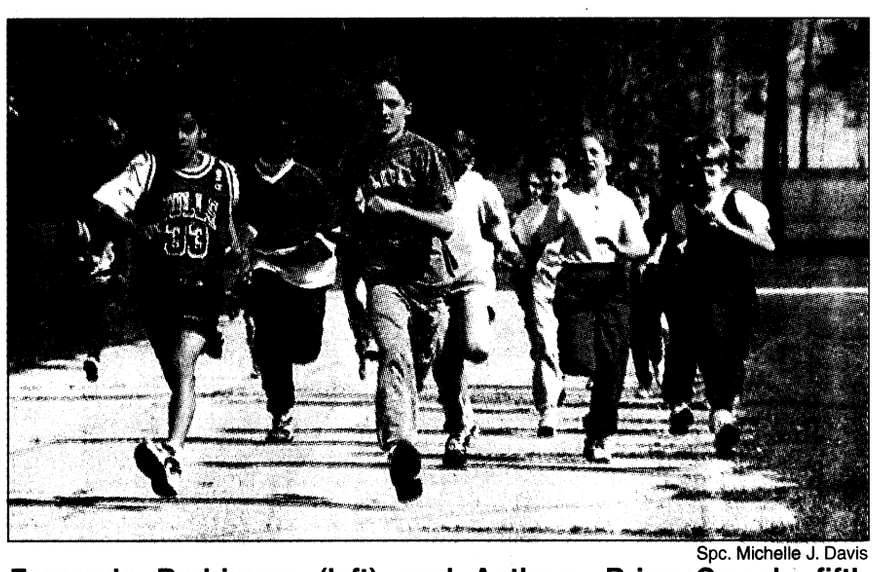
By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Thanks to a new program at Edward A. White Elementary, third-fourth- and fifth-graders at the school now have a new way to burn off some of that extra, after-school energy.

More than 40 students from the school have joined the 100-Mile Club, which gives students an opportunity to participate in running events throughout the school year, said A.C. McGinnis, a physical education instructor at the school who helps with the club.

The club also keeps track of the miles each participant runs and awards those who rack up more than 100 miles by the end of the year.

Although many of the students will reach the 100-mile goal, McGinnis said the club is really about getting children excited about running and making the club a positive experience.



"The key to the club is that each member is a winner no matter how far or fast they run," McGinnis said.

McGinnis added the club was actually contrived by Kris Keske, a fourth-grade teacher at the school.

"It was actually her idea to start the club," McGinnis said. "This was our first year and so far we've had excellent participation from both students and parents."

During the monthly meetings, the club conducts running activities such as informal track meets and group runs.

"Last month, we held a long-distance run from the school to the Infantry Museum and back," McGinnis said. "It was a lot of fun and the military police helped us out by providing escorts."

This month's festivities included a track meet where club members took part in 50 and 200-yard runs in addition to a 10-minute timed run.

Although the winners in each grade were noted, each participant received a ribbon for participating in the event.

"I really like the club because I get exercise and they always make it fun for us," said Danielle Jansch, a fourth-grader at White.

Fourth-grader Lindsay Eidenberg agreed with her classmate.

"The 100 miles is a good goal to go after," she said. "The club also helped me get in shape for soccer season."

McGinnis said the club plans to continue the club in future years after the success they've had so far this year.

Quality, quantity prevail in USAMU ammo section

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Public Affairs Office

Keeping abreast of the constant demand for world-class match ammunition for the shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is far from easy. Yet the Soldiers of the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop Ammunitions Loading Section say it's a challenge they eagerly face.

Only four Soldiers, Robert S. Finch, David J. Sheely, Justin A. Meyer and Joshua E. Steen, are responsible for the thousands of rounds produced each day. Some days when preparing for upcoming matches, the Soldiers load as many as 3,000 rounds, each measured and adjusted to within 500ths of a grain.

The men produce ammunition for rifles and pistols, including center-fire rifles, M-14s, M-16s, 300 Magnums, .38 supers and .45 automatics. They also perform many tests on each cartridge case, propellant, primer and bullet and say quality is the section's priority.

While production reigns as their primary mission, the Soldiers must ensure each round they produce is of the highest quality.

Quality control for the ammunition section is much more in-depth than at comparable facilities, said Darryl W. Seawright, noncommissioned officer in charge of the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop.

USAMU's ammunition technicians are checking to see the quality of the components fit USAMU standards. Cartridge cases are checked for weight, hardness, dimensions and thickness, while bullets are air gauged for consistency.

The role of these Soldiers (reloaders) and the quality of their products are paramount to the success of the USAMU shooters in competition, Seawright said.

"We have to produce ammunition that outperforms the gun, which in turn has to outperform the shooter," Finch said. "That way shooters have all the advantages to improve themselves and the equipment doesn't impede their performance. If the ammunition produced here isn't up to our standards, the shooters are at a disadvantage."

Maintaining the number of rounds and the high quality demanded sometimes is a tangible pressure the Soldiers can feel. One-tenth of a grain of gunpowder in a mismeasured round changes the impact of the bullet enough to cause a top shooter to lose a competition.

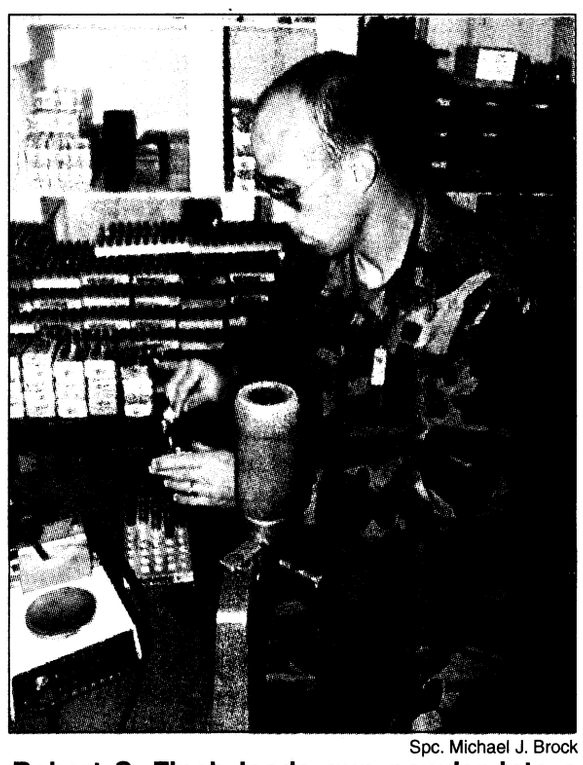
"All it takes is one round with the wrong powder charge," Finch said. "That's how important it is for us to be here doing our job."

Despite the constant demand for quality ammunition, the reloaders rarely fall behind.

"We constantly forecast what will be needed for the year," Sheely said.

Constant communication between the ammunition technicians and the shooters, as well as periodic checks of the ammunition bunker, help keep the Soldiers on top of the demand.

In their off-duty time, the ammunition technicians search for even higher quality by striving to create new combinations of gunpowder, primers, casings and bullets that will outperform the unit's current standards.



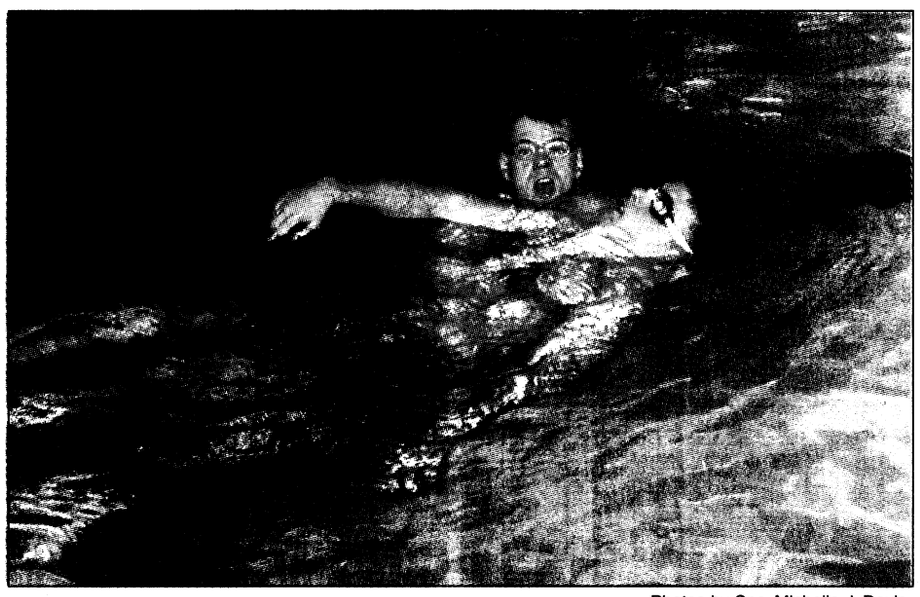
"We're always looking for better ways to streamline our production process to improve production flow and product quality," Finch said.

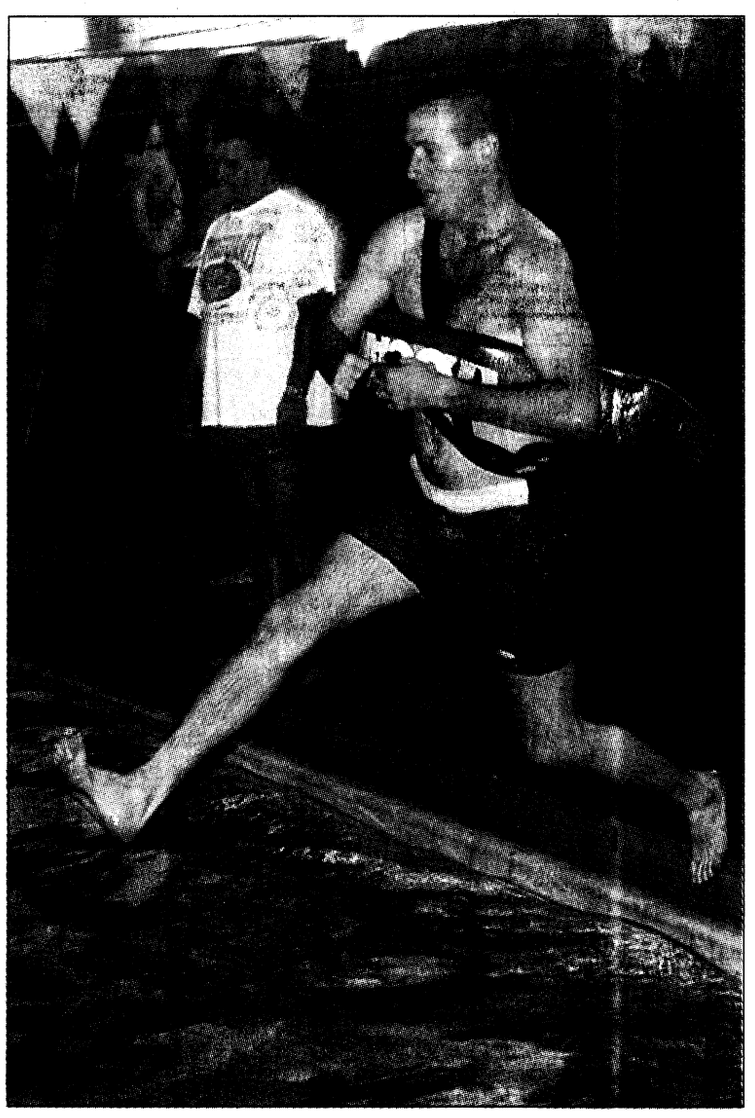
The reloaders constantly test the various ammunition components and equipment for quality and reliability. Each product they use is evaluated for internal purposes so as to supplement commercially published results.

"We have the luxury of being a completely unbiased organization concerned only with performance," Meyer said.

While they do not publish their testing results, the Marksmanship Unit will provide information when requested to companies that produce the equipment so improvements can be made, which results in better equipment in the future.

Manufacturers are not the only ones interested in the USAMU testing results. Frequently the Marksmanship Unit is inundated with telephone calls for information and advice. According to Seawright, many other specialized units that are concerned with accurate ammunition have called wanting load data.





Spc. Michael J. Brock

Robert S. Finch loads gun powder into a 300 Winchester Magnum bullet.

Despite the continued interest from the competitive shooting sphere, the Marksmanship Unit will only give minor technical advice not specific about the manufacturing process since the ammunition they produce is designed specifically for use in USAMU custom-built firearms.

"Our mission remains the same," Steen said. "We're trying to find that combination that makes or breaks the game."

Army boxers win interservice meet

By Petty Officer 3rd Class Jason W. Carter
Special to American Forces Press Service

PORT HUENEME, Calif. — The Army continued its dominance of interservice boxing competitions by winning the overall 1998 Armed Forces Boxing Championships Feb. 10-13 at the Naval Construction Battalion Center.

The championships pit the top boxers from each branch of the military. In the end the Army had once again proved dominant, winning nine of 12 bouts. The Marines left with two golds and the Navy, one. Winners in each weight class automatically qualify for the International Military Sports Council CISM Championships in Warendorf, Germany, Sept. 12-21. This will pit each boxer against the top military boxers from other countries.

The interservice rivalries reached their pinnacle during the Feb. 13 finals, which would crown gold medal winners. Although the winning service is not awarded a trophy or officially recognized, bragging rights were at stake.

Army advanced 11 of its boxers to the finals, followed by the Marines with eight. The Air Force and Navy saw two of their boxers reach the final bouts.

In the 112-pound matchup, Marine Matthew Winters of Camp Lejeune, N.C., squared off against last year's champ, Army John Medina of Fort Carson, Colo. Trying to take the early offensive, Winters came out swinging and led a charging attack with quick jabs and body shots. At one point Winters even lost his balance and fell down. Medina used a patient attack of timely punches and won the gold in a close decision.

The 119-pound bout would not fare well for the Marines as Severo Henry of Camp Lejeune took on the Army's George Cofield, last year's winner. The match lasted only 44 seconds with Henry never really getting himself on track. Marine Corps boxing coach Roosevelt Sanders Jr. threw in the towel ending the fight and giving the Army another gold.

At 132 pounds, the Air Force's Ellis Johnson of Kelly Air Force Base, Texas, faced Army's Hong Gu of Fort Carson. Johnson, in the first of two "respect" fights for the Air Force, was unable to ward off Gu's patient, well-timed quick jabs. Hong Gu was in control for most of the fight, but Johnson did remain strong throughout.

The pace of the matches went up a notch at the 139-pound clip as Army's James Webb of Fort Carson took on Marine Felson Perez, 3rd Marine Division, Okinawa, Japan. Perez, who won his earlier fight in impressive fashion, took the initiative quickly opening up a cut above Webb's nose. Both Perez and Webb exchanged vicious punches and head shots into the final seconds of the fight, with Webb getting the better of the two and winning the bout by decision.

The Marines got on the board in the 156-pound match-up as last year's winner, Henry Markin of Okinawa successfully defended his title against the Army's Shaheed Shakir of Fort Carson. Markin's aggressive style and tenacity were too much for Shakir, as the energized Markin was in control for most of the fight.

The Air Force's Frazier hoped to ride his success from his semi-final bout in the 165-pound class against last year's winner, Army's Julius Fogle of Fort Carson. Frazier, who only boxed for a year, couldn't overcome Fogle's experience and consistent barrages of jabs and lost by decision.

The first of the Navy's two final competitors, Steven Cunningham, faced-off in the 178-pound final against 1997 winner Olanda Anderson of Fort Carson. Anderson, currently rated as the country's No. 2 boxer made easy work of his three rounds and won the bout by decision.

Although there's a common rivalry between each service, each boxer and coach was quick to point out the solid level of competition they faced from other opponents, and each stressed the importance of representing their respective service.

"I think the armed forces (as a whole) has a better team than last year," said Osmar Alaniz, All-Air Force Boxing Coach, from Kelly Air Force Base. "Hopefully if things go well and we get a good draw in the Nationals we should get some armed forces guys in the finals."

Final team standings:
Army
Marine Corps
Navy
Air Force

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE
More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school this fall:
•Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.
•Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.
•Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

Fort Benning wins again

Award brings post $200,000 to help better community

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When the Chicago Bulls talk about dynasty the best they can come up with is four championships in a row, five in the past seven years.

For the sixth year in a row, Fort Benning won the Chief of Staff of the Army, Army Communities of Excellance Award for installation excellence. Army Communities of Excellence officials made the announcement March 13.

Fort Carson, Colo., was named the winner of the Commander-in-Chief's award. Fort Benning won the award last year, as well as in 1994 and 1995 and was declared ineligible to compete for it this year.

How is Fort Benning able to do this year in and year out? Post Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, said, "We live 'best' every day. It's not another notch on our gun, it's not a bumper ticker, it's taking care of mission, Soldiers families civilian emplyees and retirees every day. Competing is a daily process, whose end-game is that we are proud of who and what we are and where we live and serve."

In addition to the honor of being named the best large installation in the United States, the award also brings with it a prize of $200,000.

The post recently received $500,000 from winning the Commander-in-Chief's award last year.

Post officials are currently finalizing plans on how to best spend the money, but note that most of it will be used to enhance various quality of life programs.

Representatives from Fort Benning, Phenix City and Columbus will travel to Washington, D.C., April 30-May 1 to receive

Former SMA receives verdict

By Spc. Greg Jones
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Command Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney, convicted March 13 of obstruction of justice, received a sentence of reduction to the grade of E-8 and a reprimand on Monday. A panel, or jury, of eight senior-ranking Soldiers found McKinney guilty of this one of 19 specifications of misconduct in his court-martial at Fort Belvoir, Va.

Lead Defense Counsel Charles Gittins said he would appeal the decision.

"We will pursue (McKinney's) appellate rights," Gittins said.

The panel deliberated on the sentence for about two hours after hearing the defense and prosecution argue the potential sentences.

The defense said the panel should impose a sentence of no punishment, contending McKinney had already been punished by his removal as the sergeant major of the Army.

The prosecution asked for a confinement of not less than six months and reduction to the lowest enlisted grade, saying McKinney, as the sergeant major of the Army, should have set an example for other Soldiers.

McKinney asked the panel to allow him to retire without further punishment.

"I will simply ask that you let Wilhemina and I move on," McKinney said. "I would appreciate being given the opportunity to retire with honor."

The verdict was delivered around 6:45 p.m. March 13 on the third day of jury deliberations in the sixth week of the court-martial. Obstruction of justice, for which the former sergeant major of the Army faced up to five years confinement and a dishonorable discharge, was the one charge at least two-thirds of the panel believed. McKinney was found not guilty of the other eighteen specifications.

"The panel members obviously believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the charge was true," said Gittins.

The sentence will next go to the convening authority for approval. The convening authority reviews evidence presented in the court-martial, the finding of guilty, and the sentence adjudged. The convening authority may disapprove the finding of guilty and can grant clemency on the sentence. The convening authority may not change findings of not guilty or increase the sentence of the court.

The McKinney court-martial convening authority, Maj. Gen. Robert F. Foley, provided testimony in a pre-trial motions hearing and will refer the case to another convening authority for action.

The panel came to its decision after nearly six weeks of testimony and three days of deliberation.

If McKinney's federal criminal conviction survives the appellate process, "a cloud" will hang over him for the rest of his life, according to Defense Counsel Lt. Col. V. Montgomery Forrester. "He will have to explain (this conviction) where ever he goes," said Forrester.

In response to questions about the effect the outcome may have on women in the military, defense counsel members said the Army has a complaint system that works for those who use it.

"If a Soldier, male or female, has (a complaint), they need to go to their chain of command," said Defense Counsel Lt. Col. James Gerstenlauer.

"You make the report and you do it right away," said Defense Counsel Capt. Christopher McDowell. "You stand up to be counted."

To convict McKinney of the obstruction of justice charge, at least six of the eight panel members, or jurors, voted guilty, since a guilty

Vet adoption program helps pets

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Locked in their own jail cells, three dogs and two cats waited for their death sentences to be fulfilled as the clock quickly ticked away. At 3 p.m. the animals would breathe their last breath unless their owners came forth to rescue them.

The Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic is trying to save animals like these every day through their Adopt-a-Pet program.

"We normally get between six and 10 new animals here a week," said Sabine Poff, kennel manager. "Many of them are found wandering around post and some are even left tied to a pole or in an empty house."

During a typical week, less than half of the kennel residents are adopted leaving the rest to be put to sleep, Poff said.

The clinic gives owners three days to claim the pet. On the third day, if the animal hasn't been claimed by 2:30 p.m., it can be adopted. However, if the animal hasn't been claimed or adopted by 3 p.m., it is put down.

"It's just so sad," Poff said. "People just leave them behind when they move. They don't do that to their children; they shouldn't do that with their pets," Poff said.

In the past year, the clinic has been able to place more than 300 of the animals in homes, but Spc. Barbara Crow, NCOIC of the clinic, said this number is still minute compared to those put to sleep.

"Usually only about 20 percent of the animals we take-in are adopted; the rest have to be put to sleep," Crow said.

People looking for a pet can view the animals from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. The cost to adopt one of the animals is $42 for dogs and $52 for cats. In addition to a fecal exam, the cost covers shots, which include rabies and heartworm for dogs and rabies and leukemia for cats.

"It really surprises me to see what kind of dogs we get in here," Poff said as she pointed to purebred Rottweiler and German Shepherd puppies. "We can only pray that someone comes to adopt them before it's too late."

For more information about claiming or adopting a pet, call 545-4444.

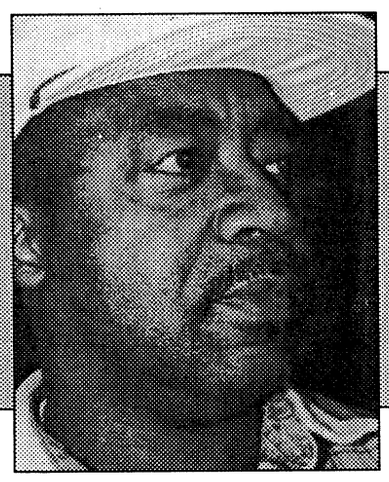
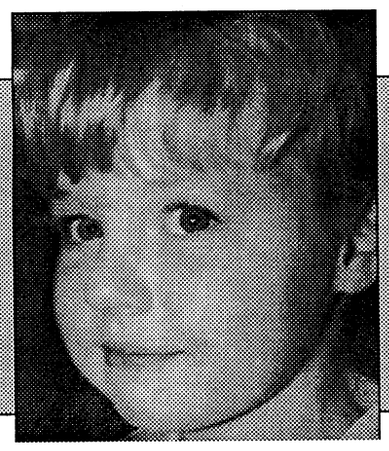
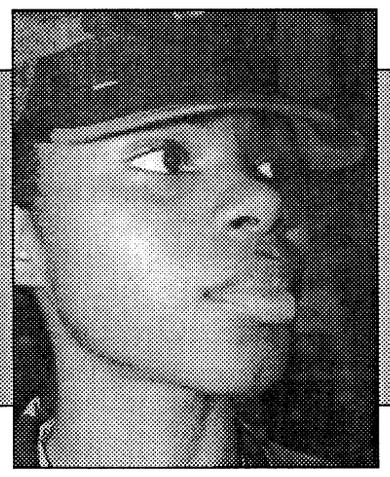
VARIOUS VOICES



What animal do you think makes the best pet and why?



Colleen P. Boylan, family member — "Dogs because they're loyal and they're man's best friend. They always listen to you."



2nd Lt. Damien W. Choi, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Snakes because you don't have to feed them every day and they're very low maintenance."

Retired Staff Sgt. Albert Hardwick Jr., Columbus — "Dogs because they're loyal. They'll do whatever you tell them to. They are also good protectors."

Ashley M. Shipley, family member — "Dogs make the best pets. I like to play frisbee with my dog Trigger."

Dogs make excellent pets with right owner

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan thinks dogs are great animals and pets.

I love dogs — but they are such responsibility. I always wanted to have a dog when I grew up, but I didn't think I was responsible enough to own one until after my daughter Jessica was born and she started begging for a dog.

commentary

I had a lot of excuses why we shouldn't have a dog.

First, we had to wait until we had a home with a yard because you can't keep a dog in an apartment — not enough room.

So we moved on post and voila, we had a front and back door and a yard. (Couldn't use the yard excuse any more.)

Then we had to get a fence for the backyard because you can't let a dog run loose and keeping a dog on a chain is inhumane.

I bought a small amount of fencing from neighbors who PCSed to Germany.

Next thing you know, I'm reading the classifieds in order to buy more fencing. Have you ever noticed you can never find what you want to buy when you want to buy it in the classifieds — it is only after you've paid retail that someone advertises it at a really good price.

So June 1, 1996, we went dog shopping, which meant I read the free animal column in the Ledger-Enquirer.

My daughter and I, armed with a map, started driving around. Our first stop was at a place where there were really hairy, barking dogs that looked like powder puffs on legs.

We continued our search.

We stopped at a place in North Columbus that had eight golden retriever, black Lab puppies advertised. There were two black puppies left when we got there, a boy and a girl.

The "girl" puppy climbed all over my 4-year-old daughter and Jess named her Tanya. The "boy" puppy went exploring and didn't pay my daughter the slightest bit of attention.

We left with Tanya.

We stopped at the library on our way home to check out books about training dogs and even one about how to choose a puppy (a little late).

Jessica was in love and I was in the proverbial doghouse because I wanted a dog, not a second child. Jessica was convinced Tanya should sleep with her, eat with her, take baths with her, etc.

Jess carried the puppy every where. I stayed in the doghouse with comments like "Jess put the dog down. Let the dog walk." This went on for the rest of the weekend.

Monday morning when Jess and I left for work the puppy was confined in the kitchen.

A coworker, along with the four books I read during the last 36 hours on dog training, convinced me that getting a crate would be best for the dog and me.

At lunch I went home to spend some time with Tanya without my daughter, to start the backyard training. When I left for work, Tanya was heartbroken, yelping and yipping, howling her little head off. I felt really guilty — poor little puppy all alone in a cold kitchen with only the radio for company.

During the afternoon, I called the people who gave us Tanya to see if they still had the other puppy. They did and now we do.

Jess, Tanya and I went after work and picked up the boy puppy.

And the two puppies played happily ever after.

Of course this isn't true. Neither Tanya nor Rolly were exactly ecstatic over being spayed and neutered.

I wasn't exactly ecstatic over the chewed up furniture, the holes in the yard and the need to purchase a new vacuum cleaner, which I blame the dogs for.

A year after we acquired the dogs, a friend gave Jessica another puppy — a small one that would stay small.

So we now have three dogs for whom I am responsible for supplying heartworm tablets, keeping fleas off and feeding.

But in exchange for me giving the dogs a home I am always greeted with happy tail wags and excited slobber when I get home from work at night — someone is always glad to see me.

Owning a pet requires responsibility, commitment

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

Spc. Michelle J. Davis thinks people should take owning a pet more seriously

Sure, pets are wonderful. They're fuzzy, furry, cute and cuddly; what's not to like? The companionship and attention animals give are all attractive reasons for bringing home a cuddly creature, but many people do not realize the commitment it takes to raise a pet.

commentary

Having worked at an animal shelter while in high school, I witnessed many acts of pet owners' cruelty and stupidity. A visit to the post vet clinic Monday only served as a reminder.

As I walked down the line of kennels, I couldn't believe what I saw. There were dogs of all shapes and sizes including a few purebred dogs and itty-bitty puppies.

Just as I bent down to get a better look at one of the unlucky pups, the cutest little ball of fur waddled in my direction. She looked like a little sausage with legs.

As I cooed to the adorable furball, the kennel manager quickly pointed out the puppy was one of five animals scheduled to be put to sleep that day if no one came to claim them.

After briefly contemplating whether I should hide the puppy in my camera bag and run, I decided to try and talk someone into taking the puppy home for me. Unfortunately, I don't think I convinced anyone.

The whole day I walked around furious thinking of how the puppy's owner either didn't care enough to search the post or purposely dropped her off somewhere to wander around and get hit by a car.

I was told almost everyday animals are brought to the shelter and most never leave.

I was too scared to call the vet clinic back and find out whether the puppy was put to sleep. I would rather just assume someone took her home.

It would be one thing if this sort of incident rarely happened, but the furball was just one of millions of animals that are put to sleep around the country each year.

Why? I would like to ask the same question to those who bring home animals they are not prepared to keep or people who refuse to spay or neuter their pets.

I suppose I will go as far as to say most people have good intentions when they take home a pet, but I don't understand why some rush into the decision.

Dogs and cats are not toys. You can't throw them away when they are full-grown and no longer resemble the cute puppy or kitten you once brought home. Pet owners often don't realize when they decide to give up their adult animal, they are almost certainly giving that pet a death sentence. Who wants to bring home a full-grown pet? The answer is almost no one.

The animal may be obedient and well-mannered, but most people have their minds set on obtaining a puppy or kitten.

As military members, who are called upon to move quite a bit during our time in service, we should especially take this into consideration before deserting our pets as we leave for the next assignment. We can surely pick up a new cat or dog later, but the pet isn't likely to pick up a new family.

Post wins award for sixth straight year

Fort Benning is the Chief of Staff of the Army, Army Communities of Excellence Award for installation excellence winner for the sixth year in a row. Hooah!

It was no accident we won this competition and luck had nothing to do with it. We won because of the great teamwork. We are a team of teams — Soldiers, families, civilian employees, retirees and a very supportive local community in Columbus and Phenix City.

We won because we never look back, never rest on our laurels. We live excellence and seek to improve on excellence daily. As the sign above the overpass says on the way out of Fort Benning, "let us know how we can improve."

We come out on top because we are the best team extant. We are not content with second place because our primary mission is to prepare Soldiers and units for operations wherein there is no second place. But we also win because we know this is the best way, the only way, we have of taking care of our Soldiers, our family members, our retirees and our civilian work force.

As I told a U.S. House of Representatives committee on military readiness, "our number one resource is our Soldiers. We have to take care of them first."

As long as we at Fort Benning remember that, we will always be the best post in the nation.

You've been called upon to do a lot with less. You've risen to every occasion, done what you've been asked to do and more. Thank you.

I am proud to serve with you. To the entire team — thanks! Hooah!

New dining facility opens

By Pvt. 1 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Amidst the construction and commotion practically hidden by a slew of yellow and orange signs sits the newest addition to Kelley Hill, the Sgt. Eric G. Gibsons Consolidate Dining Facility.

The grand opening of the dining facility, conducted March 12, marked the end of a two-year project under the Soldiers Improvement Plan.

According to Chief Warrant Officer 2 Jacob Dingle, brigade food advisor, construction on the $4.5 million facility began August 1997 and was completed March 5.

The 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 1st Battalion 30th Infantry Regiment, 317th Engineer Battalion and 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, will all share the dining facility.

The dining facility accommodates up to 800 people and offers the latest in equipment and services, according to Dingle.

He said the dining facility has three rooms and resembles a restaurant. There is a take-out service, taco bar, potato bar, fitness bar, hot grill and short order menu. There are also salad bars and televisions located in every room.

The dining facility features state of the art equipment such as restaurant-style deep fryers and grills, Dingle said.

"We wanted to bring Soldiers with a meal card back into the dining facility so we made it into a food-court atmosphere," Dingle said. "Hopefully we will be putting money back into the Soldiers pockets by having them eat here rather than spend their money on food somewhere else."

According to Lt. Col. Joseph B. Lowder, executive officer of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), the dining facility was created especially for the Soldier.

He said the fitness bar and salad bars fulfill the Soldiers needs for healthy and nutritious foods while the other menus offer a variety of foods found in favorite restaurants.

"We (Soldiers) need a place to come to have nutritional meals to keep ourselves healthy," said Spc. Doris A. Stewart, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 203rd Forward Support Bn., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. "It's good to be in a comfortable environment and feel appreciated. I think it's great that someone took the initiative to do this for the Soldiers."

The dining facility was named for Sgt. Eric G. Gibsons, a Technician Fifth-Grade Gunner and company cook, who received the Medal of Honor for leading his squad through a dangerous mission and destroying four enemy positions. The grand opening commemorated Gibsons.

McKinney: Trial comes to close finding requires a two-thirds majority.

The defense team was successful in planting a reasonable doubt in the minds of at least three jurors on the other 18 specifications.

Gittins said the defense team was disappointed in any conviction, but he thought the jury's decision was arrived at through a fair process.

"The system worked," Forrester said. "Everybody had their day in court. This was not a kangaroo court, or a rubber stamp. This was the military justice system in full action."

Army officials have also asserted that the court-martial was an example of the fair and unbiased military justice system at work.

"There has been one overriding principle throughout this whole process and that has been to do what is right, and what is fair for all Soldiers," said Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, chief of staff of the Army. "We live in a country where a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty in a court of law. In this case, the military justice system ran its course."

Gittins said his client's one guilty charge, obstruction of justice based upon a tape-recorded Feb. 18, 1997, phone conversation between McKinney and a female staff sergeant, was the result of government efforts to ensnare McKinney.

"The specification (McKinney) was found guilty of was an effort by the government to trap him and they succeeded," Gittins said.

McKinney's reduction in rank to master sergeant occurs automatically 14 days after the sentence was announced by the court members, unless the convening authority takes action to stop it.

Editor's note: With the exception of retired Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster, the female accusers' names are withheld due to privacy concerns because they are alleged victims of sex crimes. In February 1997, Hoster publicly announced her allegations against then Sergeant Major of the Army Gene C. McKinney on national television.

Auto center to benefit post

Facility will feature 42-working bays, high-tech equipment

By Pvt. 1 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The new Automotive Skills Center (ASC) located on Marchant Street which is scheduled to be completed July 15, may bring a touch of fix-it-up fever to those who know cars best and maybe even to those who don't know a thing about mechanics.

According to William J. Place, chief of arts and crafts, Directorate of Community Activities, the $3.5 million project fully funded by Moral Welfare and Recreation began Sept. 29.

Place said the new Automotive Skills Center will provide full automotive capabilities. Soldiers will not only be able to have their cars repaired by ASE certified mechanics, they will also be able to service the cars themselves.

The ASC will have 42 bays equipped for almost any automotive need. It will feature a state-of-the-art automotive paint booth, machine shop area, muffler shop and bays for quick lube, body work and tune-ups. It will be equipped with classrooms where qualified instructors will give classes on a variety of automotive maintenance.

According to Place, the ASC will be open seven days to all active duty personnel, retired military, civilian employees and their family members. Basic bay fees begin at $1.50 an hour for E-5 and below and $2 an hour for E-6 and above including retired Soldiers, Department of the Army employees and dependents. Soldiers will also have free access to tools and computers.

"We will have computerized information systems, so that if someone wants to replace their starter, all we have to do is look it up in the book and print it out for them. It will give them the instructions all the way down, step by step," Place said.

Place said the Lemon Lot will also be added to the ASC. Soldiers will be able to advertise their cars on a lot specifically for used car sales.

He said this gives car buyers an advantage because they can simply drive the car from the Lemon Lot into the ASC and check it over without hassle.

The ASC was built to consolidate the staff, money, and equipment of the two other auto craft centers located on Kelly Hill and Main Post, Place said.

"This autocraft center is designed for the Soldier to be able to repair his car, truck, boat or motorcycle in an economic way. That way they do not have to go downtown and stand the chance of being taken advantage of," Place said.

He said the ASC was designed to give the Soldiers a better product and quality service, while providing them with the newest technology in automotive maintenance.

"This center is going to benefit the Soldiers immensely because it will be centralized, state of the art, and easy accessible," Place said. "But mostly it is going to save people a lot of money and heartache."

Liaison officer heads home

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

For more than four years, Col. Wolfgang Mettler has been the liaison officer between the Infantry School and the German army. Soon his tenure at Fort Benning ends and he will head back to Germany for his next assignment.

Mettler, outgoing officer in charge of the German liaison office, leaves for Germany Tuesday.

Mettler was responsible for sharing information between the two countries. He would share U.S. Infantry technology with Germany and vice versa.

"This job was very different from anything I had done in the past," he said. Mettler's next job will be the second in command at the German Airborne School.

He said he was extremely impressed with the Land Warrior program and what he learned from the Dismounted Battle Space Battlelab.

"Because I was here for so much of the new technology, my commanders decided I should stay an extra year," he said. That was around this time last year.

During his stay here, Mettler has made many friends.

"Everyone here has been so nice to me and my family," Mettler said. "We've learned a lot about the American culture during our stay here."

The American culture he talked about is the freedom the American people have, he said.

"You can travel as you want to. You have the freedom to go as you please," Mettler said. During the Mettler's stay here, he said the family did a lot of traveling within the country. They spent last Christmas in Canada with his wife Lyane's family. However, the western type culture, as he called it, is nothing new for him.

Lyane is from Canada. His two sons, Lynn and Christian, are well versed in this country's culture.

"Both my sons speak very good English," he said. "They can speak with almost no accent."

His oldest son Lynn, graduated college in the states and is working in Atlanta as an engineer. Mettler's youngest son, Christian, is finishing up at Columbus State University and is scheduled to graduate next year.

"I'll miss a lot of things," he said. "But my wife will miss leaving her two boys here when she heads back to Germany."

Mettler's future is back in Germany, but he said he wants the future between the U.S. and Europe to remain good.

He said he thinks it's important to have knowledge of other cultures. "The world is getting smaller," he said. "Being able to speak more than one language may become necessary to survive in the world's future." He also said Europe can't afford to isolate themselves from the rest of the world and according to Mettler, neither can the United States.

No matter what the future holds for either country Mettler said, he'll look back at his time in America and smile.

Mettler said some of his fondest memories include killing a nine-point deer while hunting on Fort Benning and sharing experiences with all the people who have lived in his neighborhood and at work.

"Mary Tyler and Pat Weekley have always been so nice to me," he said. "Everyone here has been so helpful and friendly — something I'm not used to around the military."

New computer upgrade helps ACAP center

By Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

"The Department of the Army has funded an Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) Center computer upgrade which caused some disruption in services last week," said Harold Ericksen, manager of the Fort Benning ACAP Center. "Full services with computer system enhancements are now available in the ACAP Center,"

"The upgrade enhances an already excellent job search and career planning system. The upgrades were made without disturbing any of the existing programs and databases," Ericksen said. "Perhaps the most significant additions are expanded access to the Internet and Federal Job Application program," said Cindi Lacey, project technical analyst and former automation specialist with the Fort Benning Center.

The heart of the upgrade is the addition of a Microsoft Windows '95 operating system. The program makes it possible to convert resumes to a more standard format, save to a 3.5 inch disk and then modify as needed.

Transitioning Soldiers, their adult family members and separating civil-service workers are invited to use the ACAP Center computer system as a part of the separation job assistance benefit provided by the U.S. Army.

For additional information about eligibility and services, please call 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza.

College offers programs for Soldiers

The University of Tennessee-Knoxville

The University of Tennessee Army ROTC has a deal too good to be true.

Since 1844, the University of Tennessee's Army ROTC Program has offered the combination of academic quality, ROTC excellence and cost that someone can find.

Get a degree as a full-time college student at the University of Tennessee.

As an active-duty or prior-service Soldier, 12 hours of academic credit toward a bachelor's degree at the University of Tennessee is available.

Apply the Montgomery GI Bill or apply for a ROTC scholarship and get a degree in Knoxville as a full time student.

After college graduation, re-enter the Army as a second lieutenant.

As a ROTC cadet at UT, Soldiers are eligible to compete for on-campus two or three year full tuition academic scholarships.

They will also receive a $150 month stipend and up to $450 a year for textbooks and fees.

The University of Tennessee is an active supporter of the Army Green to Gold Program.

This program allows active-duty Soldiers the opportunity to leave active service prior to ETS and pursue a college degree and commission as an Army officer.

Army ROTC at the University of Tennessee is a program of leadership and military skills training. The cadre of officers and NCOs take pride in the ability to develop and mentor the Army's leaders of the next century.

Assistance is available for those who need help applying to the University of Tennessee and entering the ROTC program.

Experience the learning environment, the "All Volunteer" spirit and the great location.

Units work out with aerobics

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Physical training (PT) has a new twist these days, one that may be very different from what most Soldiers are used to. Available now to units is a step-aerobics class given at the Officer's Club.

"Some of the Soldiers think it's easy but after they take my class, they realize how hard it really is," said Cynthia Irwin, aerobics instructor.

Irwin started doing aerobics after her first child was born several years ago. She was in the Army for two years and always had a hard time running.

"I hated running because I wasn't good at it, so I started doing aerobics. After doing aerobics my run time increased greatly and now I enjoy running," Irwin said.

Irwin then decided to become certified as an aerobics instructor.

"I was sent books and had to attend workshops. I then took a written test and had to do a five-minute routine," Irwin said.

Since then, Irwin has taught step-aerobics at the O'Club five days a week and most recently began to give classes to units who requested it.

"Aerobics help build the cardiovascular system, build endurance and give the body an all-over workout," Irwin explained.

Irwin believes if units add aerobics along with PT, it will help with a Soldier's run time.

"Soldiers think aerobics are easy; it's a hard workout. It's all in how much you put into it, which decides if you're going to get a really good workout," Irwin said.

Soldiers from Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, attended one of Irwin's classes March 17.

Before the class started, Cpl. Todd Shields said the class would be a learning experience for him.

"I've never done aerobics," Shields said. "I think it might be hard."

After the class, Shields said the class was harder than he thought.

"The class was hard, but it's a good alternative to regular PT. It beats running," Shields said.

Classes at the O'Club are given from 9 to 10 a.m. and 6 to 7 p.m. every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 6 to 7 p.m. Thursdays and 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. Saturdays.

Classes are open to all ranks and family members. For a member of the O'Club, 15 classes is $16.50 and for non-members 12 classes for $16.50.

Officers graduate IOBC, move on

2nd Lt. Peter Juliak
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Students of Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) Class 1-98 will graduate as Infantry officers Friday marking the end of the four-month course. One hundred fifty-six students are scheduled to receive their diplomas — two of which are from the allied nations of Lebanon and Uzbekistan. Upon successful completion of the basic course, Infantry officers are qualified for any number of assignments in the Infantry, including Infantry rifle platoon leader.

Most of the 10 Army Reserve and 35 National Guard officers graduating Friday will return to their units. A few will attend follow-on schools. The bulk of the 109 active-duty component officers will attend follow-on schools upon graduation, including Airborne, Infantry Mortar Leaders Course, Bradley Leaders Course, Pathfinder and Ranger School.

The students came from 38 different states and four different commissioning sources: 18 from state Officer Candidate Schools, 21 from the federal Officer Candidate School, 102 from ROTC and seven from the United States Military Academy West Point, N.Y.

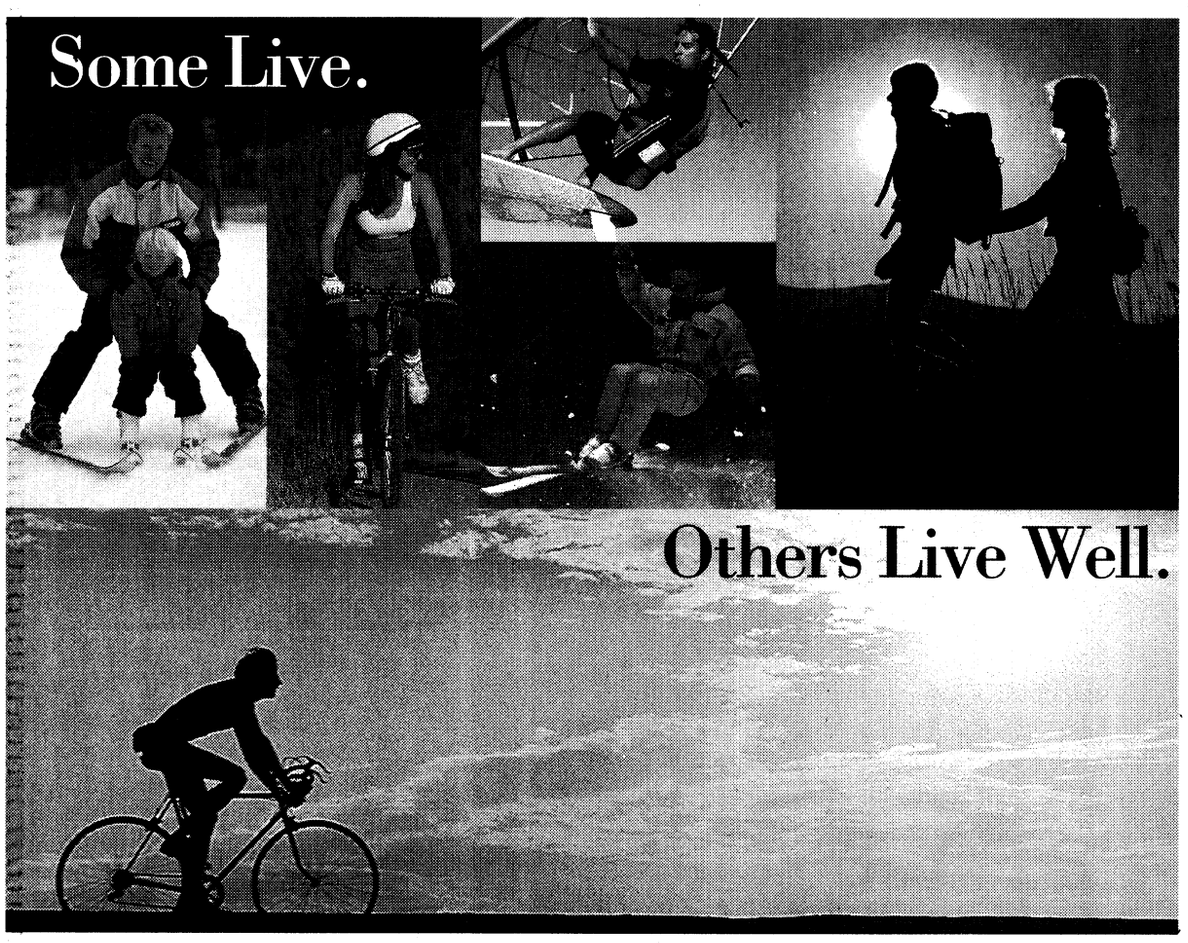
The student graduating at the top of his class is named Distinguished Leadership Graduate (DLG) and named to the Order of St. Maurice. This cycle's DLG is 2nd Lt. Robert Toon.

The Ironman award recognizes the overall top performer from the class in seven events: the Army Physical Fitness Test, 5-mile run, 12-mile road march, Commander's 9-mile run, bench press competition, 100-meter swim and the obstacle course. Second Lt. Luis Fuchu from Puerto Rico is this cycle's winner. The top performers from each platoon will be recognized during the graduation ceremony, as well as those who achieved Commandant's List (the top 20 percent of the class).

Traditionally, the primary training NCO in each platoon puts the Infantry blue cord on the shoulders of their students.

"When I put that cord on my student," said Staff Sgt. Mark A. Kane, 2nd platoon trainer, "it's like I'm saying to that lieutenant, 'You are ready and I'd be proud to have you as my platoon leader.'"

"If somebody is not ready upon completion of the course to lead an Infantry rifle platoon into combat, they simply don't graduate," said Maj. David B. Batchelor, Company C commander. "Neither I, the battalion commander, nor any other cadre member of 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., will send an unprepared lieutenant to his unit."



"I gained a solid grasp of Infantry tactics and methods. The officers in the battalion were great role models and mentors throughout the course," said 2nd Lt. Jeffery Fair, a graduating officer.

Accompanying the graduation is a blue cord ceremony and a formal reception at the Officer's Club. The graduation itself is in Building 4's Marshall Auditorium.

Trainees tackle rappelling

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

As part of basic training, trainees test many things — among them are abilities, fortitude and fears.

All three of these challenges came into play March 9 when the Soldiers of Company B, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, were given the task of tackling the rappelling towers.

Although this training may prove useful in these Soldiers' Army future, the day had a more important purpose.

"It's meant to be a confidence builder," said Capt. Keith Rautter, Co. B commander. "It's a fun day for the Soldiers. They've seen this type of stuff on television and now they get the chance to try it."

Before conquering the towers, the Soldiers spent the first few hours learning some of the basics.

Covered with mud from an earlier road march, the Soldiers stood one by one in lines with stretches of rope extended in front of them. The day's temperature, with the added wind chill, kept most shivering while the drill sergeants demonstrated how to tie the proper knots.

"You have to pay attention," one of the drill sergeants said to the platoon of Soldiers. "It's important you tie the rope tight. If not, you'll have the reddest rash of your life, I promise you."

The Soldiers paid attention, but giggled a little among themselves, not exactly understanding what the drill sergeant was talking about.

Step by step the drill sergeants walked the Soldiers through tying the knots — ensuring each Soldier had it down well enough to tie by himself.

After a lunch break, the Soldiers used their newly acquired knowledge and refitted themselves with the proper tying of the "hip rappel seat."

The Soldiers seemed tense as the first task was to successfully rappel down the 15-foot practice tower.

Some of the men slipped on their first attempt, clinging to the rope. Others moved at a snail's pace, slowly backing down the tower while instructions from the drill sergeant and cadre members echoed around them.

A line of Soldiers formed outside the gate where both towers stood. The Soldiers pointed fingers at fellow comrades beginning to rappel and when needed, yelled words of encouragement to the top of each tower.

Getting each Soldier to the top of the towers came only after the drill sergeants and company cadre prepared the area and towers for safety.

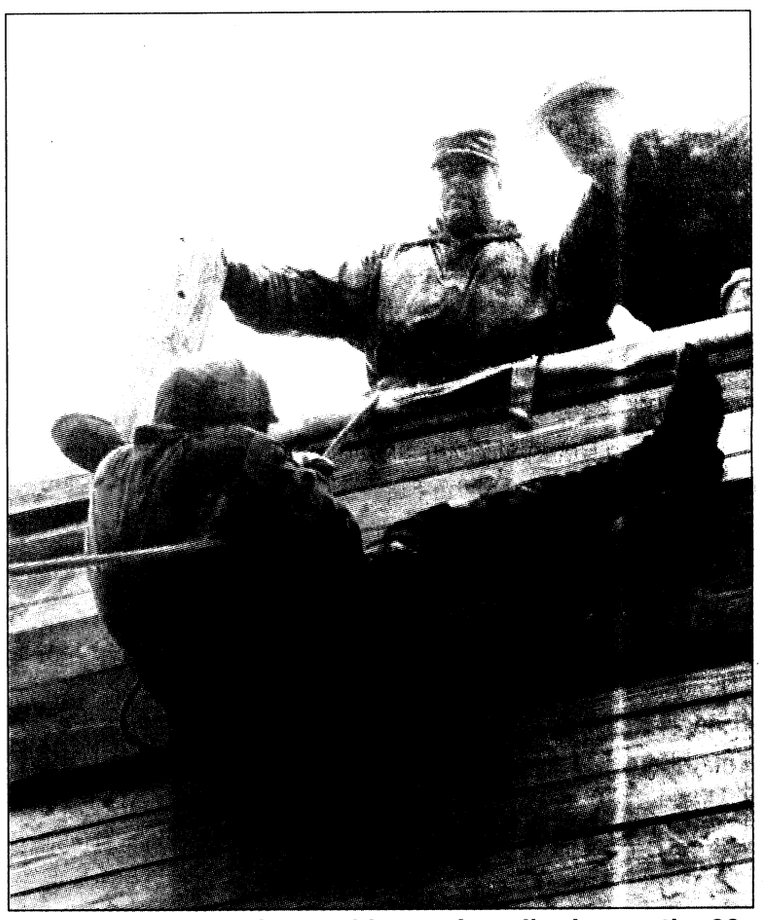
"What it takes is a thorough plan," said Sgt. 1st Class Jason Shipley, drill sergeant for Co. B. "The company commander and the executive officer had a lot of input to what happens out here," he said. "It takes many, many rehearsals. The drill sergeants find the time within the other tasks we teach to get out here and get on the ground and look at it from the private's point of view."

Shipley said the walk-through is to ensure the towers are safe. While the company cadres conduct walk-throughs, Rautter said the weather plays a role in deciding to use the towers or not.

Rain is the main reason for not using the towers, Rautter said. The wind can be dangerous, but it's usually not a problem.

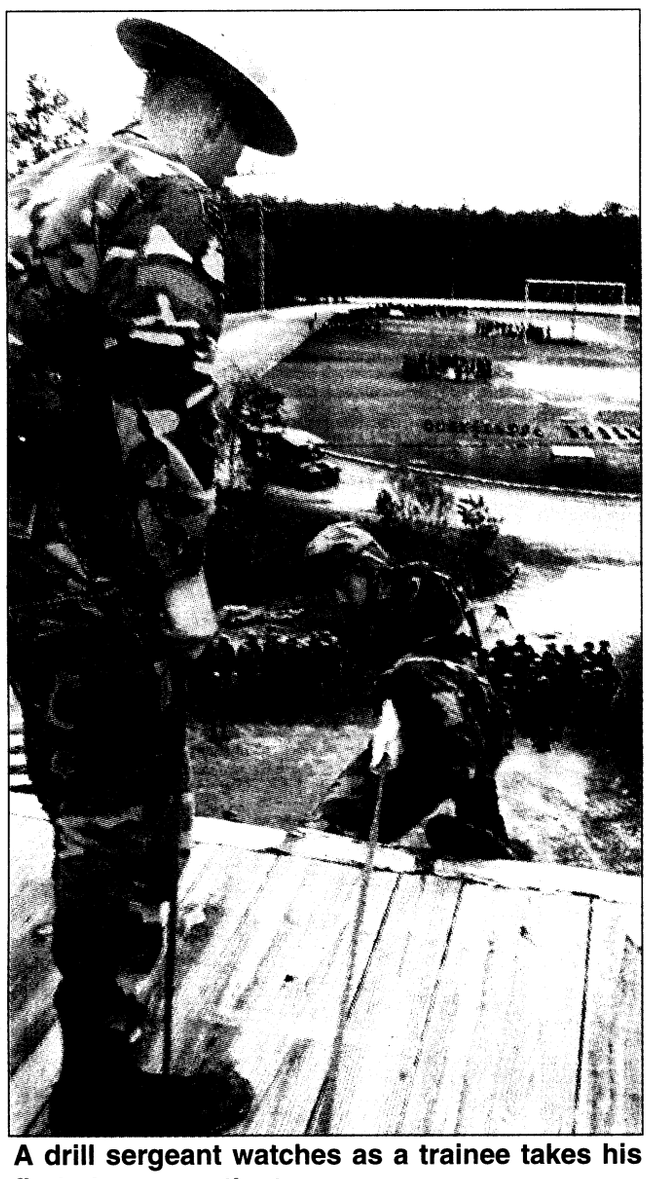
"We take all types of things into consideration before using the tower," Rautter said. "The block of instruction requires that I and the first sergeant be on site for the training. I think it just puts more eyes on the towers and that makes the towers more safe."

Soldiers said they felt safe about the training, but once they were on the 32-foot tower, it seemed a lot higher. "It was a rush," said Pvt. 1 Nathan Taliaferro, Soldier with Co. B. "You look like you're so high, but it doesn't take long for you to get down."



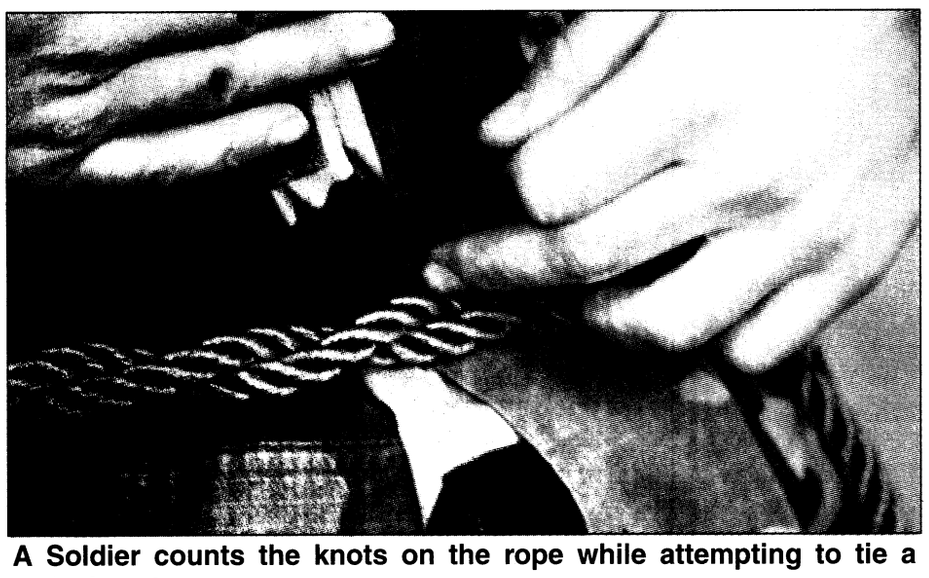
Even with the temperatures in the mid 40's, one Soldier said once he got to the top of the tower, he started to sweat.

"My whole mind went blank," said Pvt. 1 Wayne Findley, Co. B Soldier. "The drill sergeants really helped me. I was praying in my mind, 'please don't let me fall drill sergeant' and it worked out alright."



Once the Soldiers finished with both towers, they sat on bleachers and watched others take turns. In the end, some smiled, some cried and others said it was no big deal.

Findley said the drill sergeants made the training successful.



"While you're on the tower, he's a god at that point," he said. "It doesn't matter how much he's smoked you in the past, you have to trust him now. They're there to make sure you don't get hurt."

One Soldier has a few problems after slipping on the 32-foot tower.

A drill sergeant watches as a trainee takes his first steps over the tower.

A Soldier counts the knots on the rope while attempting to tie a rappel seat.

A drill sergeant shows the trainees where to grab the rope when tying the knots.

Media center learning offers more than books

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The days when a student just went to the library to check out a book are long gone. Media centers, as libraries are now known as throughout Georgia and most of the U.S., offer students a variety of things to do and different ways to learn.

"We're not your run-of-the-mill library anymore," said Mitzi H. Crow, media specialist at McBride Elementary. "I see every child in the school everyday, or almost everyday."

Students visit the media center everyday for many things. Students come in small groups, about a third of a classroom, to the media center and usually there is about six classrooms in the media center at one time, Crow said.

"Activities are planned with the media specialist and the classroom teacher for what the class is learning at that time," Crow said. "We offer reading programs, math, social studies, you name it. We offer videotape centers (all videos are pre-approved and appropriate to the lesson), tapes and film strips, books on cassette, computers with CD-Roms and electronic learning tools."

The media center is an open environment, which means students are always welcome, even if they are not doing an activity for the classroom.

"Our reading activities are very individualized. We offer a learning environment so students don't just think a classroom is a place to learn. We are a busy place," Crow said.

Julie Pelletier, media specialist at Stowers Elementary, has a different schedule.

"The students see me one week and the counselor the next week. When the students come here, I teach a class, one that focuses on listening, library or reference skills," Pelletier said. "They come in as classes and do reports, research and the Accelerated Reader program."

The Accelerated Reader program is also available at McBride.

Pelletier likes to read to the students and wishes there was more time to do so.

"The students are in and out all day long. It really fills up your time. It's wonderful having them."

Pelletier also has reading classes with the pre-kindergartners and helps students choose age-appropriate material to read.

"We highly encourage parents to come in and check out books to read to and with their children. They are always more than welcome to check out books."

Students read books and take tests and earn points from those tests, which they can turn in at the media center for items such as erasers, T-shirts and lunch with the principal.

Pelletier said when the students see the counselor it is "catch-up time" for her and two library technicians, Johnnie Wise and Diana Mir.

"I plan the lesson for next week and set up bulletin boards and I always have a display in the middle," Pelletier said.

Pelletier also coordinated the entire Reading Across America program recently held at Stowers.

"We had more than 250 people attend. I was thrilled with the turn-out," Pelletier said.

Media specialists help teachers when they are planning lessons. The teachers come to the media center when they are planning something specific and the media specialist pulls any materials they might have in the media center to help the teacher, Crow said.

Besides helping students, the media specialist and library technician, who processes books, locates materials, etc., identify the weaknesses and strengths of the material in the media center.

"We weed out old materials and keep the collection and teacher materials up-to-date," Crow said. "We purchase new materials, for both students and teachers, purchase equipment such as batteries, light bulbs for the overhead projectors, videotapes and magazine subscriptions."

Crow also said the media center is another arm of the classroom.

"The students get to work in areas they wouldn't have time to do in the classroom in the media center," Crow explained.

Parents play role in how children test

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Monday begins the start of a new testing era for Fort Benning school children.

The Terra Nova, a performance-based test with the main content areas like reading and language arts, math, science and social studies integrated throughout the test replaces the Iowa Test of Basic Skills and is the new standardized test measure for all Department of Defense Elementary and Secondary Schools.

"Parents play an important role in helping their child do his or her best," said Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development.

"One of the best things parents can do for their children is just encourage them to do their best — tell children that you know they will try their hardest."

Other tips school officials offer are:

•Schedule medical appointments during the afternoon. The test is given in the morning.

•Make sure children bring their eyeglasses the day of the test.

•Arrive at school on time.

•Dress appropriately for the weather.

•Eat a nourishing breakfast.

•Don't sweat the small stuff on test day.

"If your child forgets to make the bed or put the cap on the toothpaste, attribute it to test-day nerves — not a lifestyle change," Wilson said.

The night before the test is equally important, she said.

•Eat a nutritious dinner and avoid junk food.

•Make sure the child gets a good night's sleep.

"An extra 30 minutes of sleep is ideal because fatigue can hamper test performance," Wilson said.

•Lay out clothes, book bags, etc. the night before so the morning isn't rushed.

•Talk to children about a positive attitude towards the test. Emphasize there is nothing to be afraid of, just to do the best work possible.

Wilson said the Terra Nova, like its predecessor measures achievement in reading, language arts, mathematics, science and social studies. Test items consist of both multiple choice and open-ended questions. While the Terra Nova will continue to assess achievement in the basic skills, it also measures progress on more advances skills, such as analytic, evaluation and problem solving skills, as well as more advanced communication and writing skills.

AAFES announces hazardous alert on car seat

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — The Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), announces a hazardous alert involving the Evenflo "On My Way" infant car seat and carrier.

Concerns about a defect that can cause serious injuries to children in the seat caused the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) and the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) to issue the alert.

The red push button assembly on each side of the seat and carrier can sometimes release and cause it to flip forward. The defect only affects the seat and carrier when it is in the carrier configuration. Parents should continue to use these rear-facing infant car seats, but should not use the carrying handle until the installation of new parts to fix the problem.

A child safety seat installed and used correctly is still the most effective safety device available for young children in automobiles.

In 176 reports, the carrying latch handle released unexpectedly causing 89 injuries to children. The injuries occurred to both restrained and unrestrained children and included bruises, concussions and skull fractures.

The alert involves "On My Way" infant car seat and carrier model numbers 207 and 492. The manufacturing date code, located on a white sticker on the underside of the car seat and carriers reads between Dec. 1, 1995 and July 27, 1997.

Model number 492 includes a stroller and model number 207 does not.

AAFES sold only model number 492 for $139 from Feb. 1997 to the present.

To request a free repair kit with redesigned buttons that make the latch much stronger, customers in CONUS should call (800) 203-2138 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. EST Monday through Friday. Overseas customers can return the item to their local exchange for a full refund. All customers can also request the repair kit by writing directly to Evenflo at the address below:

Post plans annual Easter egg hunt

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The annual Easter egg hunt takes place 10 a.m. to noon April 4 at Riverside, the home of Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst and his wife, Linda.

The Easter bunny is planning to make a special appearance along with McGruff, the crime dog and Blinky, the talking car.

Children ages 18 months to 9 years of active duty and retired military and Department of Defense civilian employees are encouraged to participate in planned activities, which include rides, games and prizes.

Free soft drinks and cotton candy will be available.

Parents are reminded that pets are not allowed.

For more information, call 545-3070.

School officials respond to Education 2000 Symposium suggestions

New educational web page will better inform arriving students

Fort Benning Schools

Editor's note: During the Education 2000 Symposium, the participants suggested ideas for making the transition easier for students moving into the Fort Benning Schools and surrounding high schools.

The Bayonet will publish the suggestions and the progress made by the schools in the coming weeks.

During the symposium, high school students discussed the lack of school information for incoming students. Suggestions were made to set up a web page with course outlines, graduation requirements, extracurricular activities, student handbook, floor plan and map of whole campus.

Fort Benning Schools response

During the fall of 1997, all Fort Benning Schools established a unified web page. Each individual school followed an outline provided by system coordinators to ensure vital information was covered equitably for all schools.

Information shared includes principals' highlights of site-based programs as well as basic information incoming families would want to know, such as housing areas served and phone numbers for registration contacts.

Currently the district web pages are being hosted by the Directorate of Information Management and made a part of the Fort Benning installation official web site. Individual school web pages have been designed and approved for publication and linkage to the Fort Benning Schools web pages.

The plan for completion of all links is contingent upon full LAN and WAN operation. According to Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent, this approach to school-home partnership will enhance our communications with families even before they arrive at Fort Benning.

The Martin Army Medical Mentor

... a community service from Martin Army Community Hospital

Colds: Hospital offers advice for treatments, prevention

By Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

The common cold usually begins abruptly, often with sore throat, followed by a runny nose or congestion, inflamed sinuses, cough and decreased energy.

A study in the February Journal of Clinical Microbiology proved, by testing, that nearly all colds studied were caused by viruses. Antibiotics do not work on viral infections.

Viruses are passed between people through water sprayed with sneezing or coughing, or spread by contact with mucus or saliva on hands. Doctors are experimenting with a nose spray that attracts the most common type of cold virus and keeps the virus from attacking your cells. However, until a cure is found, you can learn ways to treat some of the annoying symptoms of your cold.

Learn to wash away mucus containing germs from your nose and throat with a recipe of 1 quart warm water, 2 teaspoons salt and 1 teaspoon baking soda.

The salt will also shrink some of the swelling causing you pain and congestion. Squirt or sniff the solution into your nose so the liquid washes down into your throat. Spit the solution out of your mouth. It's okay to cough or swallow a little. You can gargle with this solution also.

Over-the-counter cold remedies, to include generic varieties, can also be helpful. Reading labels will help you select the best product for your needs. The pharmacist can explain the products. The five major classes of cold remedies are: antihistamines, decongestants, cough suppressants, analgesics and antipyretics and expectorants.

Most have side effects and undesirable effects so be sure to read labels for warnings.

Antihistamines relieve watery eyes, runny nose and itching. They can make you drowsy which may be helpful if you need to sleep. Look for the ingredients diphenhydramine, chlorpheniramine, brompheniramine or triprolidine.

Decongestants relieve nasal stuffiness, sinus and head congestion. They can raise your blood pressure and can be dangerous for some people with heart or thyroid problems. Look for the ingredients pseudoephedrine, phenylpropanolamine or phenylephrine.

Cough suppressants should only be used for dry coughs that are interfering with normal activities or sleep. Remember, coughs are how we clear the excess mucus that contains the germ causing the cold. The most common suppressants are dextromethorphan and codeine.

Analgesics and antipyretics are used to reduce fever and pain. Tylenol (acetaminophen) is the most common of these. Aspirin should be avoided in children with viral illnesses. Ibuprofen (Motrin) may cause stomach upset. But all these medications relieve fever and pain.

Expectorants stimulate the production of fluid in the mucus with the goal of making mucus easier to cough up. The most common ingredient is guaifenesin and its use is not recommended in children younger than 2 years of age.

Alternative medicine therapies such as herbal remedies to stimulate the immune system have been more commonly used in Europe than in the United States.

Among the most effective is echinacea. Increased amounts of Vitamin C is advocated by some. Astringent teas such as sage may soothe a sore throat. The mineral zinc is suggested as a treatment to lessen the overall intensity of your cold symptoms.

Acupressure or manual therapy by pressing or massaging the scalp and tender hollows of the face bones decreases pain symptoms in some people. Humidifiers and steam moisten the dried mucus of nasal passages and relieve congestion in some.

Your mother's home remedy of rest, plenty of fluids and chicken soup continues to stand the test of time.

Overall, colds tend to run a course of one or two weeks. While adults rarely have significant fever, children can. Most colds are self limiting and can be treated with simple home remedies. Fever and feeling severely ill or the presence of a cold, which persists into the second week are all indicators to call your doctor.

DENTAC discusses dental joint disorders

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Nearly 40 years ago, dentists became aware of a group of disorders which affects about one out of every five people. These disorders, which can cause severe headaches and a number of other symptoms (many of which seem unrelated to any dental problems) are called temporomandibular joint disorders, or TMJ.

To understand TMJ disorders, an understanding of how the joint operates is necessary. Like the door of a small cabinet, the jawbone opens and closes at "hinges" near the ears. These "hinges" are the temporomandibular (TM) joints.

A small disk sits between the temporal bone and the lower jawbone to help the joint glide smoothly. Movement originates in five pairs of muscles which open and close the jaw, and move it forward, backward, or side-to-side.

For many years, TMJ disorders were considered a single disease, stemming from malocclusion, or problems in the way the teeth fit together. While this does cause some TMJ disorders, many other factors can also cause the joint to function poorly.

One of the most obvious causes is injuries, like blows to the head or jaw, or accidents which damage facial bones. Such injuries can leave the joint out of its proper alignment, but so can unexpected events like yawning with your mouth opened too widely.

Another common TMJ dysfunction is caused by jaw clenching or grinding teeth, usually as a response to tension or stress. This disorders strikes three times as many women as men.

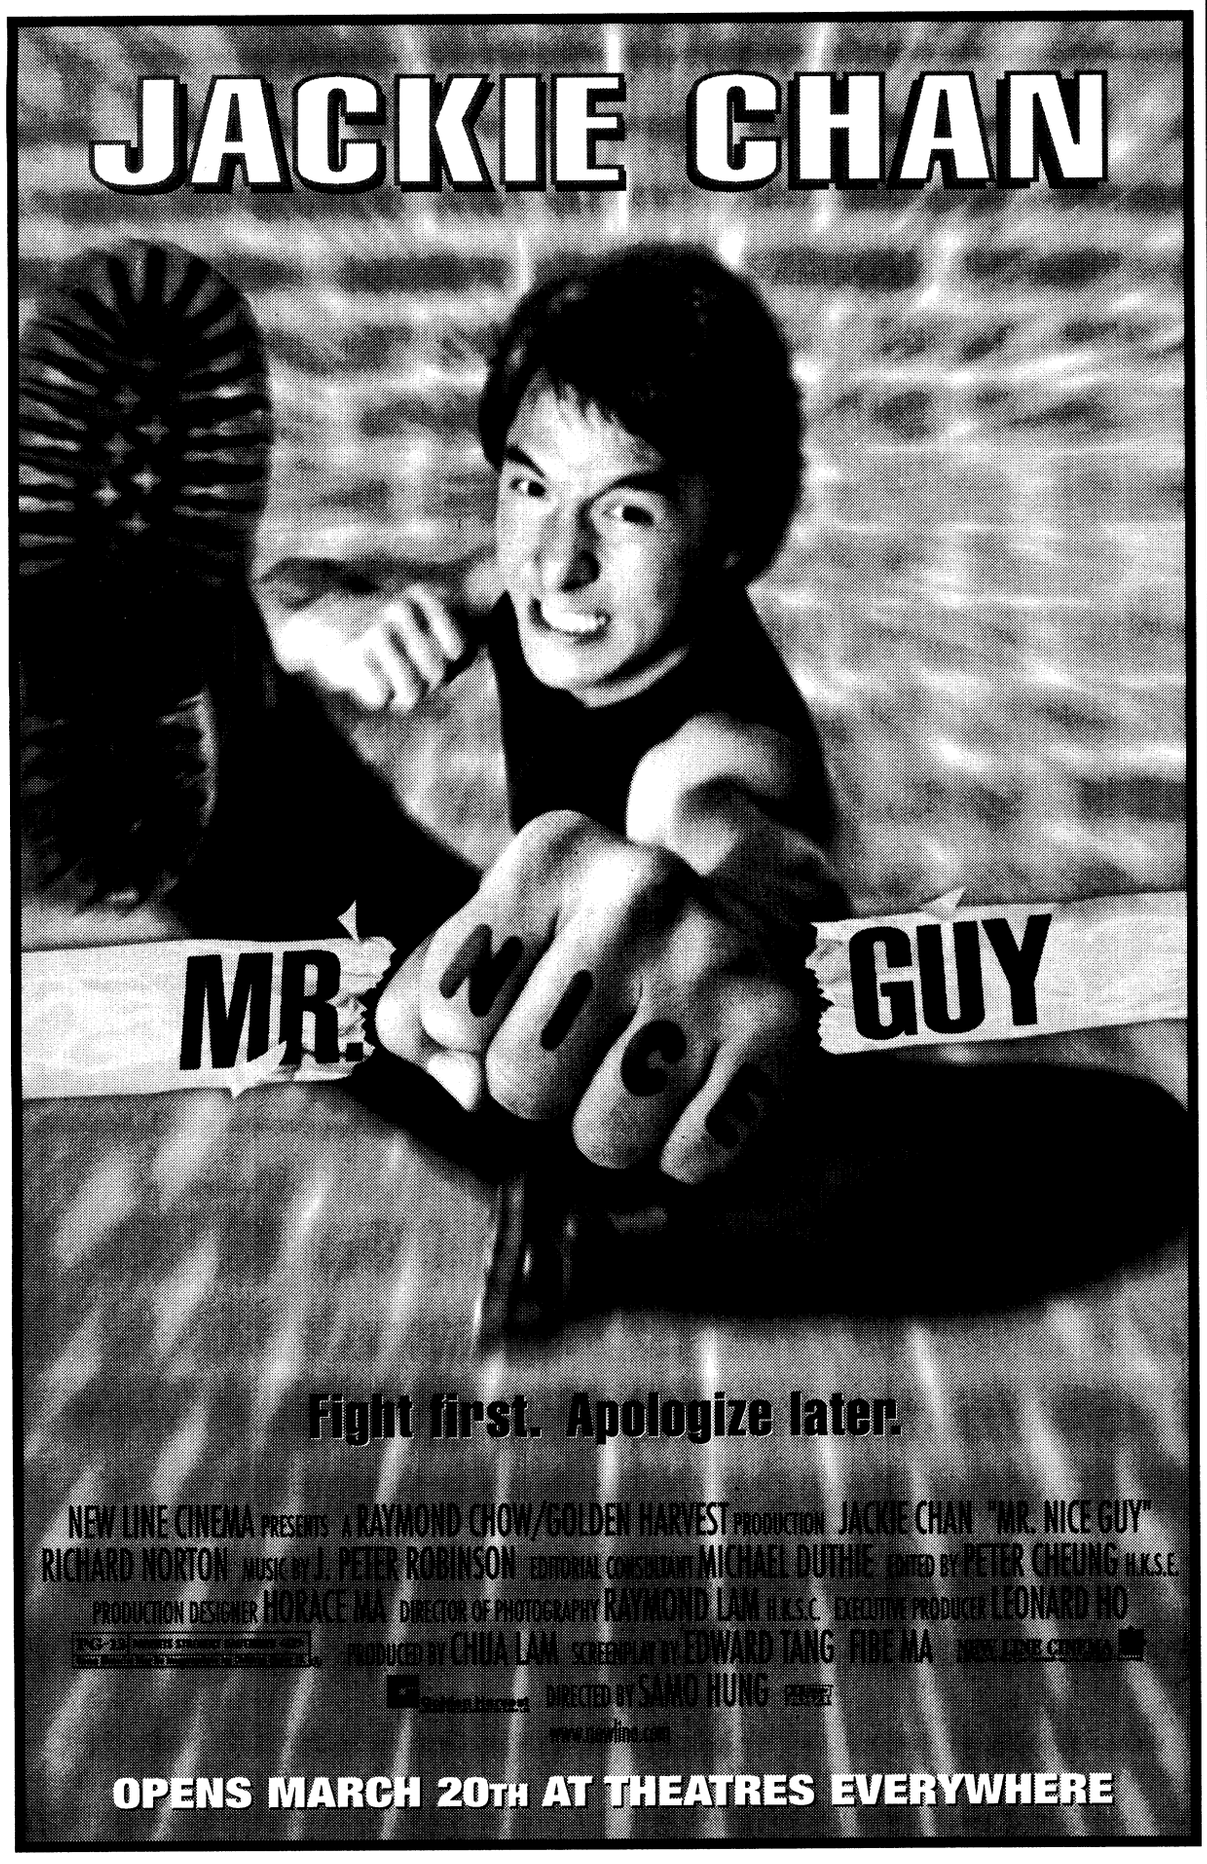
When any of these things happen, the muscles around the TM joint have to work harder or less efficiently, causing them to tire. This, in turn, may result in muscle spasms and severe pain, and ultimately, injury to the muscles.

The symptoms of TMJ are common and can indicate a number of health problems. For this reason, from time to time we may have some difficulty diagnosing TMJ. A complete medical history, physical examination and sometimes even x-rays may be in order for a proper diagnosis.

Once diagnosed, successful treatment is quite likely, but varies considerably. Dentists can identify the cause and extent of the problem and then determine which treatments will work best. Dentists may find that only minor corrects need to be made.

To stop the pain and muscle spasms related to TMJ, dentists may recommend eating a diet of soft, easy-to-chew foods, applying heat or massaging the muscles.

Or, dentists may fit you with at special bite plate or splint. This device repositions the jaw, which promotes healing, prevents further injury and can help alleviate the effects of clenching or grinding the teeth.



Some TMJ disorders can also be corrected by restoring or replacing lost teeth or by corrective orthodontics (braces). In extreme cases, correction can only be accomplished through jaw surgery, although this is quite unusual. Still other people benefit from counseling, relaxation exercises or biofeedback techniques to monitor and control their stress levels.

TMJ is not one disorder, but a collection of disorders, all of which can cause pain and discomfort. If headaches, neck aches, ear problems or facial pain which don't seem to have an obvious cause or if you're experiencing aches in your teeth or jaw, make an appointment with your dentist or family doctor.

Notice of road closure

Directorate of Public Works

Indianhead Road remains closed to through traffic in the vicinity of Way Street at the entrance to the New Deployment Warehouse.

The purpose of this road closure is to construct a concrete turning pad at the Prussman Street access drive to the Deployment Warehouse on Indianhead Road. Construction of this pad is being managed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, West Georgia Area Office.

This closure will end April 3. The recommended detour route is for through traffic to use Bradshaw Road from Indianhead Road to 82nd Airborne Division Road. (As noted on map above.) This closure will not preclude any activity from access to their respective destination. The Directorate of Public Works (DPW) has signs posted marking the detour route.

For more information, call Richard Chancey at 545-4749.

Fire can be a good thing

Fort Benning is on fire. At least, that's what many post residents or people in the tri-community area probably think when they see burning areas around Fort Benning from January to August.

DPW conducts controlled burns from January through August each year. The purpose of these burns is to help maintain and restore the natural habitat of the red-cockaded woodpecker, an endangered species, which lives in the mature pine forests of the Southeastern United States.

Fort Benning received a directive from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in 1994 to burn on a three-year rotation to help promote the habitat of the red-cockaded woodpecker. At that time there were 180 active woodpecker clusters on Fort Benning and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service requested that the population be increased to 360. The ideal tree for the red-cockaded woodpecker to make its home (called a cavity) in is the longleaf pine.

At one time, there were more than 90 million acres of longleaf pine in the Southeast. Now there are approximately 3 million. The primary objective is to restore the longleaf pine ecosystem on Fort Benning. The decline of the ecosystem is why the red-cockaded woodpecker is an endangered species, as well as some other species that rely on similar habitat.

Logging in the late 1800s and early 1900s is one of the main reasons the longleaf has declined. Trees were harvested and not replanted. A lack of fire is another reason for the loss of habitat. This ecosystem needs periodic fires to stay healthy. The longleaf pine is a very fire resistant species, which is why it is a better home for the woodpecker than other pine species.

Although burning occurs January through August, in order to meet the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service three-year burn rotation requirement, the best time to burn is during the early growing season, from mid-March to May, because the trees have the rest of the growing season to recover and manufacture food for their dormant period. Also, understory (lower branches, small bushes, vines and weeds) competition is better controlled by burns during this period.

During controlled burning, trees may experience some scorch on the lower branches, but live trees aren't harmed. The fuel load is reduced every time we burn. Burning the understory also opens the land for more military training. In the past, a lot of land that had not been burned for many years, made it difficult for Soldiers to train in those areas. Now that more growing season burns are done, the installation's military training ares have actually been improved. The occurrence of wildfires has also been reduced. Fires don't burn as intensely or get as large because the fuel is not there as it was in the past.

The goal is to burn 25,000 acres of pine and pine and hardwood stands per year. No two adjacent compartments are burned in the same year, which enhances biological diversity.

The controlled burns are controlled by natural boundaries such as creeks and roads. Fire breaks are plowed only if necessary. The bottom line is ecosystems have to undergo periodic fires in order to stay healthy. And burning during early growing season best mimics the natural fire season, during which lightning was the primary ignition source. Ultimately everyone benefits because controlled burning maintains and restores the longleaf pine ecosystem, opens pine land s for training, and reduces the amount of fuel on the ground, which reduces the likelihood of catastrophic wild fires.

Spiritual growth begins with family

By Chaplain (Capt.) J. Resto
2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, ITB

As parents, we often wonder what our children will remember about their childhood when they are grown. Will there be anything in their memories that will stand out above everything else — something that will have been a shaping influence in their lives?

reflections

I knew a family that gathered together just before bedtime every night to conduct family devotions. They gathered in one of the bedrooms where a Bible story was read, after which they knelt around the bed and said prayers.

The children in that family learned at an early age that God loved them and he talked to them through the Bible and they could talk to him through their prayers. They learned to pray through listening to their father and mother pray.

Devotions were so much a part of that family, that the children thought every family did the same thing. They didn't realize until they became older, their family's devotions were not a routine event in many other families.

As these children grew older, they realized how blessed they had been by having parents who had brought them up under this Christian influence, showing them the love of the Lord and how to return it. Those devotion times became stamped in their memories, and the impact of that tradition on their lives is immeasurable.

God wants us as parents, to take an active role in the religious instruction of our families, and in the spiritual development of our children.

God's word as recorded in Deuteronomy 6:4-7 states, "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord; and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might. And these words which I command you this day shall be upon your heart; and you shall teach them diligently to your children and shall talk of them when you sit in your house and when you walk by the way, and when you lie down and when you rise."

God's intentions and purposes are clear. With so many powerful influences competing for the time, energy and attention of our children these days, we can't afford not to be doing everything we can on a daily basis to teach and show our children how to love the Lord.

The investments we make in the spiritual lives of our children, though, will last forever.

May the Lord and our children find us faithful in our responsibilities as parents.

Spiritual growth begins with family

By Chaplain (Capt.) J. Resto
2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, ITB

As parents, we often wonder what our children will remember about their childhood when they are grown. Will there be anything in their memories that will stand out above everything else — something that will have been a shaping influence in their lives?

reflections

I knew a family that gathered together just before bedtime every night to conduct family devotions. They gathered in one of the bedrooms where a Bible story was read, after which they knelt around the bed and said prayers.

The children in that family learned at an early age that God loved them and he talked to them through the Bible and they could talk to him through their prayers. They learned to pray through listening to their father and mother pray.

Devotions were so much a part of that family, that the children thought every family did the same thing. They didn't realize until they became older, their family's devotions were not a routine event in many other families.

As these children grew older, they realized how blessed they had been by having parents who had brought them up under this Christian influence, showing them the love of the Lord and how to return it. Those devotion times became stamped in their memories, and the impact of that tradition on their lives is immeasurable.

God wants us as parents, to take an active role in the religious instruction of our families, and in the spiritual development of our children.

God's word as recorded in Deuteronomy 6:4-7 states, "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord; and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might. And these words which I command you this day shall be upon your heart; and you shall teach them diligently to your children and shall talk of them when you sit in your house and when you walk by the way, and when you lie down and when you rise."

God's intentions and purposes are clear. With so many powerful influences competing for the time, energy and attention of our children these days, we can't afford not to be doing everything we can on a daily basis to teach and show our children how to love the Lord.

The investments we make in the spiritual lives of our children, though, will last forever.

May the Lord and our children find us faithful in our responsibilities as parents.

Athletes shine during post track championships

By Spc. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet staff writer

More than 60 Fort Benning community members gathered at Doughboy Stadium Wednesday and Thursday to participate in the post track and field championships.

The athletes participated in 14 events including team relays, shot put, high jump, discus, 100 and 1500-meter relays.

"I think the cold weather kept a lot of people from participating, but we had a good turnout anyway," said Lulu Mitchnor, meet organizer. "We even had three people who are now interested in trying out for the All-Army team."

Results for the track meet include: Middle Distance Medley Relay (200x200x400x400) — 1st place: Antonio Mitchell, Rodney Thomas, Henry Ash, Ramone Meyer, 2:51:03. 2nd place: Frederick Harrison, Butch Campbell, Jacob Mayo, Jason Colbert, 2:54:55.

Shot put — Marvilis Dupree, 47 ft., 7.5 in. Phillip Hand, 31 ft., 5 in.

200 meter finals (male) — Jason Umberger, 23:87; Felick Vallot, 24:53, Meyer, 25:17.

200 meter finals (female) — Kate Marshell, 28:15, Beofra Butler, 29:50; Joni Litzin, 36:25.

5000 meter finals — John Detro, 17:02; Rick Deshaw, 22:07.

4x400 relay — Omar Salam, Deon Timmons, Robert Dowdy, Brent Bertschy, 3:52:53. 2nd Place: Meyer, Joseph Price, William Spencer, Ash, 4:10:75.

Discus — Dupree, 152 ft.; Jason Miner, 115 ft.; Hand, 113ft.

Youth Services kicks-off start of spring sports

Ahhh, spring. Blooming flowers, singing birds and Youth Services spring sports.

Spring training for soccer and T-ball began March 3 as youngsters reported to their coaches for practice.

Since a sports program is not offered to elementary students at Fort Benning, Youth Services is helping children in more ways than one.

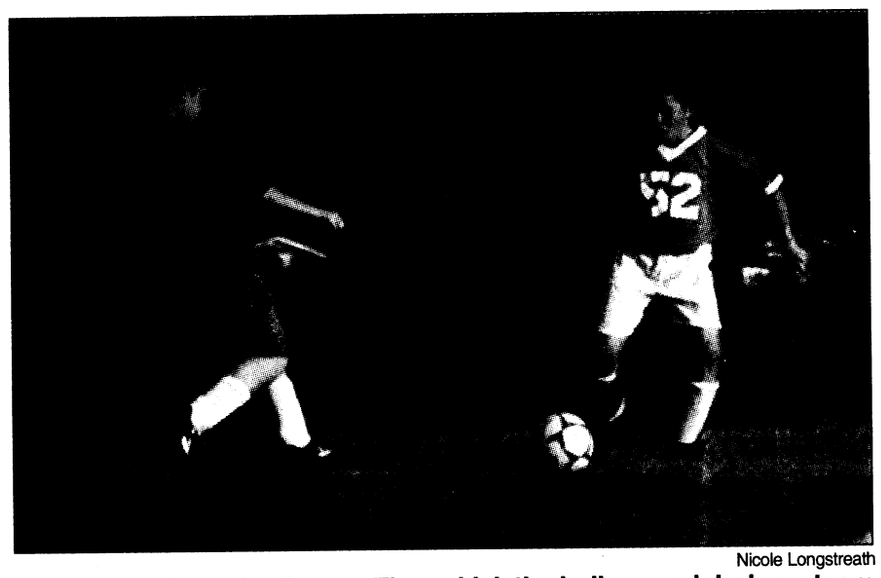
"Playing soccer makes me stronger when my coach tells me to run laps," said 10-year-old Tameka Mitchell, player for the Orange Tigers Soccer team.

Another way Youth Services is helping kids is teaching them teamwork.

"Youth Services sports is provided to the kids to promote sportsmanship," said youth development coordinator, Quintella Thorn. "Here at the Fort Benning Youth Services Center we help the kids develop their teamwork and physical skills."

Thorn said that participation in sports brings the leader out in a child.

"Although you have coaches, sometimes there is a need for a child to show leadership because children often interact better with children than adults," Thorn said.



Thorn also said that it is crucial that parents get involved in their child's interest in sports.

"We would really like parents to be at the games, even with the older kids," Thorn said.

While most would agree that it is important for parents to get involved, one coach lent a friendly warning to parents of participants.

"The 'win-at-all-costs' attitude doesn't work," said Spc. Anthony Birdsong, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Ranger Training Brigade, and volunteer coach of the 6- to 8- year- old, self-named "Terminators."

"Kids already know who is good on the team. The last thing they need is a parent criticizing them in the stands," Birdsong said. "Playing is all about learning the game and having fun,"

Nicole Longstreath

Two players from the Orange Tigers kick the ball around during a team practice Monday in preparation for Saturday's season opener.

Youth Services Soccer and T-ball will begin Saturday starting at 9 a.m. T-ball will be played at Green Field on 10th Division Road, Dexter Field at Dexter Elementary and Old Faith Field at Faith Middle School and soccer will be played at French Field, also on 10th Division Road.

Kids learn all A.B.O.U.T. chess

By Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

Three teams from the Fort Benning All A.B.O.U.T. Chess Club competed March 11 against other schools including Blackmon Middle School, Columbus and Ridgecrest Elementary, Phenix City. Two of the three teams left victorious.

Fifty third- to fifth- graders from Fort Benning schools make up the club which has competed in four tournaments so far. The chess-playing youngsters are represented by three teams that are made up of five students who competed for a team spot.

The "A.B.O.U.T." in the All A.B.O.U.T. Chess Club stands for Army Brats Outstanding United Team and all of the students are automatically registered with the U.S. Chess Federation and receive national standing for tournaments they compete in.

The club began in October of 1997 when Marjory Brasfield, sponsor of the club, felt there was a need to provide children with a chance to play chess.

"I wanted to provide kids who knew how to play chess to have a chance to play and to teach kids who don't know anything about chess how to play," said Brasfield.

"I like chess and I like competing against other teams," said club member Kory Duncan of Dexter Elementary, son of Sgt. 1st Class Ronald and Roberta Duncan, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

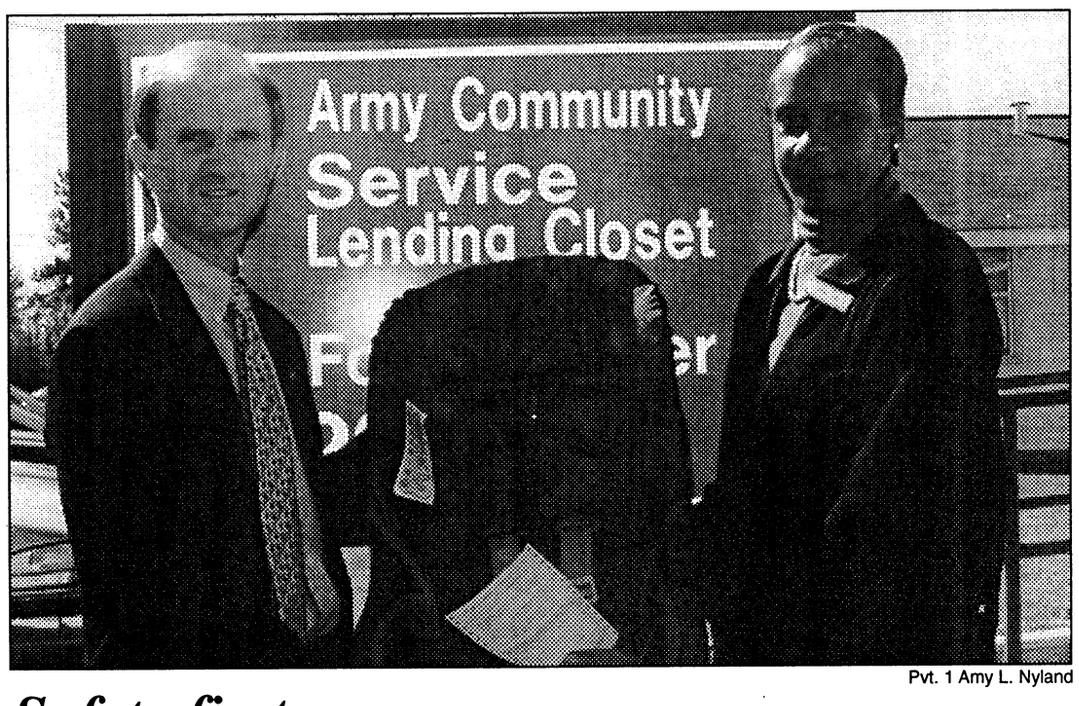
"I really think that it makes a difference in the way the students think," Brasfield said. "It teaches them to take their time and to look at things a different way before they react to a situation."

According to Brasfield, playing chess also helps children develop patience.

"Once children start to learn to play, look at strategies and react to someone else's strategy it makes them better problem solvers," Brasfield said.

The meetings are held at Dexter Elementary the first and third Wednesday of every month. Although the meetings are held at Dexter, all Fort Benning third through fifth-graders are eligible to participate. Students who don't know how to play chess but want to learn are encouraged to come.

"I didn't even know how to play chess, but I learned" (after he started attending the weekly meetings), said Dexter fourth- grader, Lamont Fredrick son of Capt. George and Cassandra Frederick, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.



For more information, call Brasfield at 545-3424.
