USAMU shooter wins gold, sets world record

USA Shooting and USAMU

MUNICH, Germany — An international rifle shooter with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit won a gold medal and set two world records at a recent World Cup.

Jason A. Parker, won the Men's Air Rifle Match at the 1998 Munich World Cup of Shooting May 23, besting a field of 107 of the world's top marksmen. Parker's first-place finish also earned the United States a guaranteed berth at the 2000 Olympic Games in the air rifle event.

Parker's near perfect qualification match score of 598 points out of a possible 600 broke the world record of 597 set in 1995 by Germany's Tosten Krebs. Parker than added a stellar 102.6 in his first World Cup final for a total score of 700.6, breaking the world record of 700.2 set in 1997 by Leif Steiner Rolland of Norway.

After shooting with the Army Marksmanship Unit for only a year, the 23-year-old triumphed over world champions and Olympic medalists to win the gold medal. Rajmond R. Debevec, a world-record holder and 1996 Olympian, finished 3.3 points behind Parker and took the silver medal for Slovenia, and Christian C. Bauer of Germany, who was four points behind Parker, got the bronze. The 1996 Olympic Air Rifle Gold and Silver Medalists, Artem Khadjibekov of Russia and Wolfram Waibel of Austria, took 12th and 13th place, while the 1996 Olympic Bronze Medalist Jean Pierre Amat of France took 29th.

"I started getting the shakes after my 30th shot," admitted Parker, whose previous personal best score was 594 points fired just two weeks earlier. "I just tried to take some deep breaths and keep up my concentration with my pre-shot routine for the last 30 shots."

Parker fired 60 shots in the qualification match from his .177-caliber air rifle from the standing position at a target placed 10 meters away. To score a perfect 10 points on each shot required hitting the "10-ring," the size of a period at the end of a sentence. The top eight athletes from the qualification match returned for the final, a tense shot-by-shot showdown of 10 shots in which the target scoring rings were further divided in 10ths of a point. Continuing the dominance he showed in the qualification match, Parker's 102.6 finals score was the highest among the eight finalists.

"Jason's performance was incredible," said U.S. National Rifle coach Dan Durben. "And to set the world records on the Munich range in front of a large crowd in the heart of a country that takes such pride in the shooting sports, was really something special."

"It was kind of scary to look at all the talented athletes on the firing line who were capable of shooting good scores," Parker said. "Today it was my turn."

Parker credits his world-record performance to his fellow U.S. Team members and USAMU International Rifle Coach Bill Krilling.

"Mr. Krilling has really helped me develop my technique," Parker explained. "And we now have so many strong air rifle shooters on our team pushing the scores higher and higher, that my expectations had to be raised just to keep pace with them."

"He's been close several times to a world-class score and he's steadily improving," Krilling said. "He has a lot of potential so I expect big things from him. He has a good shot to make the Olympics."

Raised in Omaha, Neb., Parker graduated Bryan High School of Omaha in 1992. In 1996, he received a degree in psychology from Xavier University in Cincinnati, where he won team gold medals in Prone and Air Rifle, a Team silver medal and individual bronze medal in Three-Position at the 1994 Junior World Championships, and was the 1994 and 1995 Junior Olympic Air Rifle Champion.

Parker enlisted in the Army in January 1997. After completing basic and advance training, he was assigned to USAMU in April 1997.

Team makes direct hit in TV show

Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Shotgun Team shot scenes for an upcoming television show April 27-30 at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Park in Atlanta.

The show, called "Direct Hit," produced by Seals Communication Corporation, will air on the Outdoor Life Network in August.

Bret E. Erickson, James T. Graves, Theresa E. Dewitt and Shawn C. Dulohery made up the team for the marksmanship unit.

"The whole purpose behind the series is to portray shooting sports in a positive fashion to the masses," said Rodney Mull, producer with Seals Communication. "We want to see the shooters compete and have a good time doing it."

And having a good time is exactly what the shooters did, Mull said.

"It was fun," Erickson said. "It was a lot different than anything we have done before."

The competition was divided into 13 individual matches with 47 targets — 37 skeet and 10 trap targets.

"They made the competition a little harder by changing the course of fire from a normal competition," Graves said. Only one person in the entire competition had a perfect score of 47 out of 47 and that was Dulohery.

"I told myself that I could do this and I did it," Dulohery said. "I wasn't thinking of this as a competition, but more as this was supposed to be fun, so I had fun."

Be prepared, carry water to prevent dehydration

Feature Outdoors

When mountain biking, hiking, backpacking and cycle touring, many people expose themselves to a danger that never crosses their minds — dehydration.

And, you do not have to be in a desert wasteland or marooned at sea to experience it. Dehydration can occur five miles from your home if you are not prepared.

Because your body is 60 percent fluid, most of the metabolic energy production that is essential for outdoor fun and recreation requires water. That is why it is important to maintain an optimum body fluid level when you are active outdoors.

Just a four percent fluid depletion can reduce your aerobic work capacity by almost 50 percent. As you ride, hike or climb, your fluid level steadily declines because of sweating and muscle use. If not replaced, this liquid loss leads to dehydration. Symptoms include: lack of sweat, dry mouth, chills, severe fatigue, nausea, muscle cramps and in extreme cases, heat stroke.

The answer for an increasing number of active people is to carry a compact water purifier and refill their water bottle at a convenient stream or public faucet. Weighing less than a pound, a water purifier eliminates all microorganisms and ensures the water is safe to drink.

"Let's face it," said Tom Klein, Marketing Manager for PUR, a company specializing in antimicrobial water purification products, "it's tough to carry a full day's supply of drinking water, and the days of dipping a canteen into a nearby stream are gone. Bacteria, protozoan cysts, such as Giardia and even viruses, can contaminate any stream or lake and cause serious illness. If you don't have a safe way to refill your water bottle, you run the risk of becoming dehydrated."

Some water purifiers weigh only 12 ounces and can produce up to one quart of water per minute with a simple pumping action, like that of a bicycle pump. If you are thirsty while cycling or hiking and the nearest water source is a pond or stream,a water purifier will quickly eliminate any dangerous microorganisms, filter out suspended sediments and produce safe, good tasting water. Unlike slow-acting iodine tablets, which leave a strong iodine taste in the water, a water purifier quickly produces safe water that is much more palatable and appealing to drink.

A water purifier is a good investment for all outdoor enthusiasts. For example, a cyclist loses one to 112 quarts of water cycling at a moderate pace for three hours on a typical 80-degree summer day. But, cyclists may not feel thirsty or sweaty, even though their bodies are rapidly losing fluid. The wind generated from biking constantly cools the skin and evaporates the sweat, leaving cyclists unaware of the amount of moisture being lost. A good rule of thumb is to drink three to four glasses of water before heading out and drink a standard size bottle of water for each hour of cycling, or four to eight ounces every 15 to 30 minutes.

It is almost impossible to drink too much water when active. Remember, thirst is not a reliable signal that dehydration is setting in, so drink water steadily and make sure it is safe by using a water purifier.

Eye protection prevents injuries during sports

Army News Service

While nearly 90 percent of all sports eye injuries are preventable, eye safety is often at the bottom of a team's or individual's priority list, announces the Tri-Service Vision Conservation and Readiness Program (TVCRP) Office, at the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.

According to Prevent Blindness America, more than 40,000 eye injuries occur annually in sports and recreational activities. More than half of these injuries are to children. Yet, only a handful of sports organizations mandate the use of eye and face protection to young athletes.

"Children are often injured in sports because they are not as fast, as accurate or as experienced as their adult counterparts," said Lt. Col. David Hsieh, TVCRP manager.

Sports eye injuries may include bruises around the eyes shattered facial bones, retinal detachment and even permanent vision loss. Basketball is now the leading cause of sports eye injuries for both children and adults. Baseball follows at a close second. Swimming and pool sports are ranked third.

"Within the next decade, the number of sports eye injuries could increase because more Americans are moving toward a more active lifestyle," noted Hsieh. "As Americans become more active, sports eye injuries will continue to climb if people do not take the necessary steps to protect themselves."

GWB GEORGE WOODRUFF BUILDERS

Proudly Salutes Fort Benning

KNOW YOUR BUILDER

The Woodruff name has been associated with the home building industry in Columbus for the past 40 years. Our company represents the same high standard instilled by George's grandfather many years ago, in providing people from all walks of life the opportunity of owning a quality home.

Julie Quigley

George Woodruff III

George Woodruff III Builders

GWB For information on these or any of our quality homes, please call Julie Quigley at 568-0057.

It is not our company's goal to build the most homes in a year. It is, however, our goal to deal fairly with our customers and provide them with the best possible house for their money.

We believe one of the miracles of the construction industry is that workers, each skilled in different areas, can work together to create a dream born from a set of blueprints. Our job is to ensure that this is done smoothly.

We provide a wide range of services such as mortgage assistance, custom designs and plans, selection of your homesite, decorating assistance and much more. We hope that you will allow us the opportunity of making your dream come true.

Budget cuts in store for Army Career and Alumni Program

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

For Soldiers leaving the Army, whether they're retiring or ETSing, the time of making the transition to civilian life can be stressful, both for the Soldier and the family. At Fort Benning and throughout the armed forces, the Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) makes that transition easier. But ACAP might be greatly affected by a $16 million budget cut that will occur by October 1999.

ACAP now receives $29 million per fiscal year. The remaining $13 million provided to ACAP is a contribution from the Department of Defense (DoD). The Army was the only branch of service that placed extra money into the program.

ACAP's mission, as a whole, is to provide timely and effective transition assistance to all DoD personnel and their family members. All transitioning Soldiers are required to visit the ACAP center prior to departing the Army and attend a preseparation briefing no less than 90 days prior to separation.

The ACAP counselors prepare transitioners for success by providing the following services: preseparation briefings, counseling and referrals; job assistance workshops, counseling and resources; and assistance in securing and using the Verification of Military Experience and Training (VMET) document.

> "We're still moving ahead. We have a very strong program for what can be a very stressful time and we will continue at 100 percent."
> — Diane Ermi
> ACAP career counselor

Dwayne Wight, transition service manager, said despite the $16 million cut, ACAP is still going to work to provide the basic services so as to not affect Soldiers. He said the biggest impact was probably the reduction by 50 percent last year.

On May 28, Jayson L. Spiegel, acting assistant secretary of the Army for manpower and reserve affairs signed a memorandum asking the deputy chief of staff for personnel to establish and chair a policy review committee to assess ACAP and make recommendations on where to make the cuts.

The committee is expected to make it's recommendations on the cuts by Aug. 30.

Diane Ermi, an ACAP career counselor, said they are going on with business as usual.

"We're still moving ahead," Ermi explained. "We have a very strong program for what can be a very stressful time and we will continue at 100 percent."

"I had heard the rumors for a while about the cut," Wight said. "Until that time, a lot of things could happen."

Despite not knowing what services will be cut, ACAP will still provide services required by law, which is the preseparation counseling, delivery of the VMET.

For those who want more information about ACAP and their services, the Fort Benning ACAP center has a new website, which was created by Ermi.

"It's very user-friendly," Ermi said. "It makes things clearer for the users — it fills in those gaps of information they may be missing."

On the website, users can find the briefing schedule for the next year along with job postings that are offered by employers. The web site is accessible at www.benning.army.mil/fbhome/ACAP/acapweb1.html.

Sniper students prepare to board a Blackhawk Helicopter to begin the field training exercise.

Students test five weeks of training with FTX

Sniper School teaches Soldiers how to search and destroy without detection

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

The ear-piercing sound of the rotors can be heard when the Blackhawk lifts from the ground on a mission that will end a long and rigorous training session for 19 Soldiers.

The five-week course prepared the Sniper School students for one final task — a three-day field training exercise (FTX).

The FTX is the final requirement before graduation.

Sniper School trains Soldiers to seek and destroy the enemy while remaining undetected. A prerequisite for Sniper School includes the ability to shoot accurately.

During the course, Soldiers are taught how to blend in with the surrounding area while searching for key targets, such as an enemy platoon leader, company commander or battalion commander.

During a portion of the FTX, the students worked in teams of three trying to assassinate an instructor who was positioned 1,000 meters down range When a student had the "target" sighted, the instructor exchanged places with a dummy.

After the live-fire stalking exercise, the Soldiers marched to the next mission.

"This FTX will take us to various places on post," said Spc. Christopher Noell, 1st Battalion, 5th Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas.

Places where the students trained include McKenna MOUT and various other sites. Grid coordinates for the other locations were given to the Soldiers over the radio while the students were on the ground moving to the next objective.

The sniper students were prepared for target identification, preparing operation sites and camouflaging themselves to blend into the background, along with other tasks.

"During the FTX we are going to be out there on our own," said Staff Sgt. Gerardo Sanches, Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). "We need to know what we are doing. It has taken a lot of preparation to get ready for the field."

With a dropout rate of three students per week, the school was a challenge, said Spc. Kedo Chanthadongsor, Company D, 25th Cavalry Division, Fort Hood.

"It's been really hard," Chanthadongsor said. "Everyday I have to give 110 percent. This is the most effort I've ever had to give just to get to the FTX.

The weather is another factor making the FTX a challenge to the students, but the instructors monitor the heat to help the students avoid heat injury.

This FTX was different from any other conducted at the Sniper School because this was the first time the eight-day Sniper Employment Officer Course was integrated with the students, said Lt. Col. Samuel Nelson, 108th Division, Charlotte N.C.

"Officers need to know how to employ snipers in the field," Nelson said.

The officers were responsible for giving the grid coordinates and other employment orders to the Soldiers during the FTX.

"The officers are doing fairly well for their first time (employing students)," said Staff Sgt. Eric Davis from Fort Drum, N.Y.

"I feel this (the integration of officers employing students) is an important addition to the Sniper School," said 1st Lt. Conrad Schupay, Company B, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade. "Officers often don't have the training needed to employ snipers. This gives me hands-on training. The course will definitely help me and I will take the knowledge back to the unit," Schupay said.

Knowing how to use snipers is important for platoon leaders and scouts, Schupay said.

Snipers are the best defense against other enemy snipers, Nelson said. Snipers know exactly what to look for, and can spot a sniper easily.

Post outlines new heat policy

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Post officials issued a new policy covering the prevention, treatment and evacuation of heat casualties.

The responsibility for preventing heat injuries is placed on commanders. According to the memorandum, "Leaders can prevent heat injuries. The consequence of a heat injury can be profound. Permanent complications, including death are possible.

The three steps for prevention are cited: drink plenty of fluids, get plenty of rest and eat the proper foods. The memorandum notes that cool water is the fluid of choice, but leaders must ensure that soldiers do not over hydrate by drinking more than one and a half quarts per hour, or 12 quarts in 24 hours.

Work cycles based on the heat index and type of work must be followed.

Examples are provided in the memorandum.

For instance, weapon maintenance is considered light work, calisthenics, moderate work and walking on a hard surface at 3.5 mph, carrying a 40 pound load is considered to be hard work.

As for diets, the memorandum says soldiers in training should maintain a regular diet.

Signs of heat injury, range from such mild symptoms as weakness, headaches, fatigue and nausea to serious symptoms that include confusion, combativeness, disorientation and loss of consciousness.

Serious cases necessitate immediate evacuation and hospital treatment, the memorandum states.

Combat lifesavers or medics are charge with evaluating, treating and monitoring the casualty until the casualty improves, is evacuated or a more experienced care giver assumes responsibility.

Treatment listed includes placing the victim in the shade, loosening or removing clothing, fanning the casualty, and fluids or an intravenous line for seriously ill or unstable patients.

The memorandum was distributed to the entire installation Wednesday, the day the heat index exceeded 100 degrees for the second straight day.

Regulation update outlines rules for motorcycle riders

Infantry Safety Office

Motorcycles accounted for two out of five motor vehicle fatalities over the past two years, according to Regis Beighley, Infantry Safety Branch manager.

"Looking at the number of automobiles to motorcycles, the rate of motorcycle accidents is considerably higher," said Beighley.

Per mile traveled, the number of deaths on motorcycles is about 16 times the number in cars.

Regulations: Debate continues over uniform policy

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

OK, it happened again: I was wrong. I should say "we" because everything published in this newspaper is read, improved and questioned by half a dozen or more writers and editors.

commentary

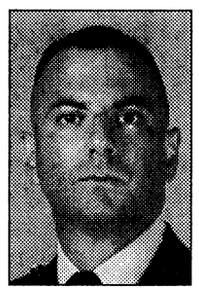
In a commentary I wrote about the recent changes to uniform regulation, AR 670-1, it reads "Army reg. states nails will be no longer than a quarter of an inch."

I don't know who added that information to the commentary, but I'll take responsibility for the error.

However, I can't find a regulation anywhere that specifically gives guidance on a fingernail length.

Thanks to that outstanding NCO who called to let me know about this inaccuracy. And the telephones keep ringing.

Now, is someone able to whip out an Army regulation and show me with a big yellow highlighter where there is an established length for fingernails? And if there isn't one, does it need to be more specific than "so as not to interfere with performance of duty?"



I'm just asking.

OK, enough of that. What I wanted to do is thank the Navy for getting rid of their denim bell-bottom trousers.

Sailors are getting straight leg pants and a more comfortable shirt. They're no longer made of denim and they are supposed to look pretty sharp.

Now if they could just get rid of that hat.

Fortunately, the bell-bottoms never transferred to any other service and the Navy kept their denim bell-bottoms for 60 years.

Perhaps on a ship these pants might have been a great asset, but a landlocked sailor training at a fort in the Midwest always cuts an unusual image.

In my job as a public affairs specialist, I often work in a "joint" or "purple" environment.

I was billeted with a sailor for two months while attending a school and now I am forever calling the "latrine" a "head" and a "duty station" a "billet."

My family always asks me questions about uniforms, what each ribbon means, or why did I join the Army after seeing what all the other services get to wear.

For example, why do most enlisted Soldiers wear the silly-looking, non-functional garrison cap? The best thing I can say about the cap is I can fold it up and shove it in my pocket.

Having to wear the garrison cap is enough to make anyone want to jump out of an airplane and earn a beret.

Why can't Soldiers wear the round, sharper-looking service hat that officers, band personnel and recruiters usually wear?

Well, the service hat appears to be optional wear for enlisted personnel, but try and find one.

Of course, there was a push to give all Soldiers some kind of generic service beret, but I think that was a little misguided.

I can understand why Soldiers in BDUs shouldn't hold an umbrella. Clearly, it looks stupid. We're warriors first and have the wet weather gear to keep us dry and continue to look "hooah" under any weather conditions.

However, male Soldiers in a dress uniform should be able to use a plain black umbrella, because in this case, not using an umbrella makes us look stupid.

Perhaps that will be the next change.

I like the Army's dress uniform, but I think the Marine uniform is by far the best looking of the service dress uniforms.

The Army dress blue uniform is pretty sharp, but I'm not about to shell out the cash for a uniform I'll wear once a year.

A fellow Soldier was shocked that I don't own one. He said, "Aren't you supposed to buy one when you make sergeant first class?"

Owning a dress blue uniform might be good advice, but it's still an option for enlisted Soldiers.

I always thought the Coast Guard would be fun, because I could grow a beard, wear shorts and ride around on one of those fast boats off the coast of Florida.

Well, the beard policy changed and after cruising around on an old minesweeper off the coast of Egypt, I discovered I'm not as "sea worthy" as I thought.

The Army mustache policy is tough. I don't know how you guys do it. You have to be a real artist to keep that fuzzy caterpillar under control.

The Air Force pilot leather jacket is great looking but it appears one has to fly an airplane before getting to wear it. I've tried the simulators and based on my performance, I would be better off wearing a life vest or a parachute.

Of course, if I could wear what I wanted without cracking open the AR 670-1, I would wear tanker boots, a crew chief flight suit and a beret of sort.

I think that would make a fashion statement.

If there's a point in all of this rambling, it is this: regulations and post policy are the ultimate authorities and not what a person thinks or remembers about a regulation.

If we didn't have a specific uniform to wear for physical training, the command would probably look, as a first sergeant once told me "like a bag of Skittles" running down the road.

Cheers, and keep those comments coming.

Fort Benning

Community offers array of events

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet assistant editor

I like Fort Benning. I like being stationed here (much to the dismay of my branch manager).

commentary

I like the fact that people try to make Fort Benning a good place to be. Activities are scheduled all the time to give people the opportunity to enjoy themselves — last week there was a Consideration of Others 3 on 3 Basketball Tournament.

Next week there is the Fourth of July Fireworks Extravaganza that was conveniently scheduled for July 2. This is a fun time — the fireworks are great and the Silver Wings and ranger demonstrations are always exciting.

It seems as if special events like the Military Appreciation Week award ceremonies and other events are now being scheduled in order for Soldiers to get the maximum enjoyment out of the activity. I like that.

I have been stationed elsewhere, so I have something to compare Fort Benning to.

For my first AIT, I spent nine months in the middle of Texas at Goodfellow Air Force Base. The base is right outside the small town of San Angelo.

Goodfellow was a small base. I could walk from one end of it to the other. I did — often. That was one of the ways I spent my free time. Because I was still in training I didn't really have that much free time, but I still found the time for the gym, the movies and drinking beer Saturday nights at the little cafe across the street from the barracks. I had fun there.

My next PCS move was to the area Goldie Hawn in Private Benjamin thought she would be at — the Presidio of Monterey in beautiful Monterey, Calif., and barracks with a view of the Pacific Ocean.

I spent a year studying the Russian language, walking along the coast and zipping up and down the interstate to visit my sister and her family who lived in San Diego.

I loved running the hills of the Presidio, day trips to San Francisco and skiing at Tahoe.

The Russian course was only a year long and I had to leave Monterey and training assignments for an actual duty assignment. I wanted to go to Fort Meade, Md., home to the National Security Agency; but instead I was sent overseas for the 16 months I had left in my contract.

Just my luck, I got the Hilton of all MI assignments — Field Station Augsburg in the beautiful German state of Bavaria.

Augsburg is a beautiful city with narrow cobblestone streets, great architecture, friendly people and fantastic beer.

My job, which I can't say much about (otherwise I would have to cut off your head and put it in a safe) was fun and challenging

Which brings me to my present job — it too is fun and challenging. But my job is only a part of why I like Fort Benning.

I feel a sense of community here that I didn't feel in the other places. I don't know if it is because I have a 6-year-old daughter who keeps me involved in school and sporting activities or if it's because of my job where I interact with so many more people.

At the other places, I felt the Army community was all that pulled the people together, but here it's not just the green-suiters but also the civilians and family members who make this place more than a duty station but also a home.

I often ask people how they like being stationed at Fort Benning and the responses are often varied by what the person's present job is.

Someone once told me something that I don't quite remember about your last duty station always being the best.

I think people should make the present duty station the best.

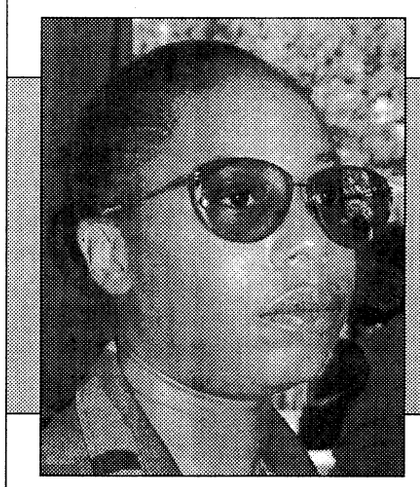
Fort Benning and the surrounding community has a lot to offer from Uchee Creek to two bowling alleys, a state-of-the-art movie theater, an arts and craft shop where woodworkers can build things to the many gyms for getting sweaty or pools to cool off.

Another way to work up a sweat and get off post is riding along the Riverwalk. The Riverwalk is a great place to view wildlife (snakes, armadillos, deer, etc.) not the two-legged kind because the Columbus police and parks department patrol the area regularly.

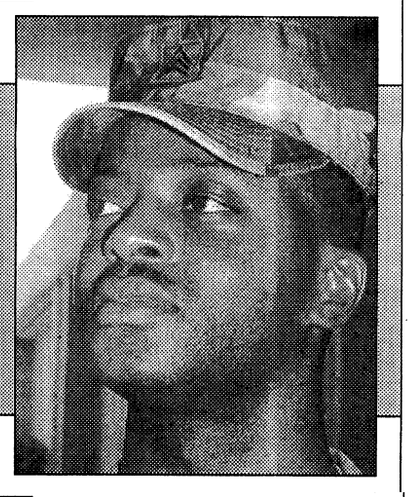
Another place to view nature and cool off is Callaway Gardens, near Pine Mountain, Ga. This is a perfect place to take the family for a picnic and watch butterflies or get a group of friends together and play sand volleyball next to Robin Lake.

My point is this — wherever you are will be what you make it.

VARIOUS VOICES

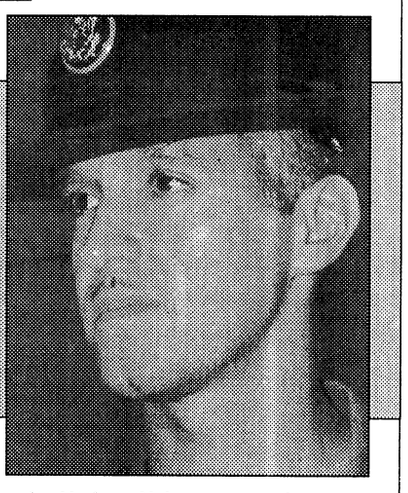


What is your favorite duty station? Why?



Retired 1st. Sgt. Woodrow Fisher, Columbus — "Redstone Arsenal. I was close to home. I also taught while I was there, and I love teaching."

Irene Thomas, family member, Columbus — "Fort Benning. It is close to home and a clean post."



Spc. Sheridena Turner, 5th Signal Command — "Germany! It was the bomb!"

Sgt. Derrick White, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "The 2nd Armored Division in Germany. It was my first duty station and the support from the NCOs was excellent.

Barbra Joyce, family member — "Fort Riley. I liked the area and the people."

Staff Sgt Raul Munoz, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade — "Fairbanks, Alaska. The challenge of the mission was different being in the colder weather and the leadership.

DoD eyes new civilian personnel system

Maj. Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense (DoD) is taking a hard look at the civilian personnel system and hopes to usher in the year 2000 with new, more flexible rules that reward performance and improve productivity.

In the face of downsizing and restructuring expected to continue for at least five more years, the department is considering an unusual personnel system for its 790,000 civilian employees, who make up about 40 percent of the U.S. Civil Service.

Diane Disney, deputy assistant secretary of defense for civilian personnel policy, said the 1997 Quadrennial Defense Review, DoD's blueprint for the military of the future, pointed out shortcomings in the existing civil service system. It's more rigid than it needs to be, she said, but efforts to change that are under way.

DoD's labor-management partnership council, made up of representatives of the services as well as the general counsel's office, national labor unions and Office of Personnel Management, is evaluating a wide range of personnel programs. The members are looking at staffing, pay and classification, performance management, benefits and entitlements and work-force shaping.

Council members have a blank slate.

"Basically, we're starting from scratch," she said.

"We asked what we could do to improve staffing. What we could do in terms of pay and classification that would enable us to benefit the individual employee and make life better all around for managers and the department."

> "Basically, we're starting from scratch. We asked what we could do to improve staffing."
> — Diane Disney
> Deputy assistant secretary of Defense > for civilian personnel policy

Pay banding is one concept the group is considering. In a demonstration expected to begin this fall, some 35,000 to 40,000 members of DOD's civilian acquisition work force will put the concept to the test.

Instead of remaining in their 15 current general schedule pay levels, they'll be assigned to four broad bands.

The goal, said project deputy director Dick Childress, is to make climbing the pay ladder easier for standout performers.

"When you get into a broad band, you can go all the way to the top level without having to get a promotion," he said. "So, essentially, if you come in at a GS-5, you can go all the way up to being a GS-11 under this system without ever having to be promoted — just by working hard and making a strong contribution."

Disney said another concept under consideration is "cafeteria options" — mix-and-match provisions and benefits employees can select based on their individual circumstances and preferences. She called this plan one of the council's long-term initiatives, but said it could ultimately make the personnel system more responsive to workers' needs.

Disney stressed the council has no intention of eliminating benefits of DoD's civil service employees, who, like most other government workers, are governed by Title 5 of the U.S. Code. She said the council specifically decided not to focus on issues that don't need fixing or that are too sensitive to consider at the moment — such as hiring and firing protections, benefits, veterans preference and unemployment compensation.

She said revamping the personnel system is in everyone's best interests and will reward the hardest workers with better pay and more training.

She said managers should gain more flexibility and the tools to improve productivity. It will put DoD in a better position to react to change.

Officials say efforts by DoD, the government's largest single employer of civilian workers, are likely to set a pattern for the entire civil service.

DoD intends to submit plans for the new system as part of the fiscal 2000 legislative package, Disney said. If Congress approves, she said, DoD will have "a wonderful opportunity to open the new millennium ready to meet the challenges of the next century."

Safety: Law requires helmets while riding on post

times the number in cars.

Motorcyclists are more prone to crash injuries than car drivers because motorcycles are unenclosed, leaving the rider vulnerable to contact hard road surfaces.

"It's a very dangerous vehicle, if they or another driver makes a mistake, they could end up losing skin on the road," Beighley said.

Army Regulation 385-55 provides the Highway Safety Program Standards which outlines motorcycle safety to include the proper gear that each operator must maintain to operate a cycle on Fort Benning:

Operators of privately or government-owned motorcycles and mopeds must be currently licensed by civil authorities.

Each driver of a privately or government-owned motorcycle or moped will be required to satisfactorily complete an Army-approved motorcycle safety course. The course will consist of classroom instruction, hands-on training and the successful completion of hands-on and written evaluation.

Motorcycles and mopeds must have headlights turned on at all times.

Soldiers will wear a properly fastened, approved helmet whenever and wherever (on or off post) they operate or ride a motorcycle or moped. Civilians must wear a helmet while driving or riding as a passenger on a motorcycle or moped on Fort Benning or while on government business off the installation. The helmet will be properly fastened (under the chin) and meet DOT motorcycle safety helmet construction standards. (The Army and Air Force Exchange Service, the Navy Resale System and the Marine Corps Exchanges will offer for sale only those helmets that meet at least the DOT standards.)

Soldiers will wear proper eye protection, full-fingered gloves, long trousers, longsleeved shirt or jacket, high-visibility garments (bright color for day and retroreflective for night) and leather boots or over-the-ankle shoes whenever and wherever they operate or ride a motorcycle or moped.

Civilian personnel must wear the same protective clothing specified for Soldiers when operating or riding a motorcycle or moped on Army installations or while on government business off the installation. Proper eye protection includes clear goggles or a face shield attached to the helmet. A motorcycle or moped windshield or fairing is not considered proper eye protection.

Government-owned motorcycles and those motorcycles and mopeds registered on an installation by Soldiers must have two rearview mirrors (one mirror on each side). Motorcycles and mopeds owned by civilian personnel and operated on a military reservation must also have two rearview mirrors (one mirror on each side).

Motorcycle and moped safety requirements do not apply to bicycles; however, bicycle riders should be encouraged to use the protective equipment listed above.

The use of headphones or earphones while driving a motorcycle or moped on Army installation roads and streets is prohibited.

Editor's note: Free motorcycle safety courses are available on Fort Benning by calling 545-5043.

He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit $600 per month for three months, to be confined for three months and to be discharged from the service with a bad-conduct discharge.

At a special court-martial empowered to adjudge a bad-conduct discharge on June 13, Pvt. Joseph F. Baugman, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), was convicted of missing movement and being absent without leave. He was sentenced to be confined for two months and to be discharged from the service with a bad-conduct discharge.

At a special court-martial empowered to adjudge a bad-conduct discharge June 18, Sgt. Brett Brown, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, was convicted of wrongful use of marijuana. He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit $600 for one month and to be confined for 30 days.

At a special court-martial June 3, Spc. Taletha Manigo-Brown, 104th Transportation Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), was convicted of failure to repair, disrespect toward a NCO and making a false official statement. She was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-2.

Holiday hours set

The Main Post ID Card Branch will be closed July 3 through July 6 in observance of the 4th of July holiday. Normal hours of operation will resume July 7.

ID card office lists appointment hours

Main Post ID Card Branch has an appointment system available for more convenient service. Personnel with appointments have priority over walk-ins and are seen within five minutes of their scheduled appointment time.

Walk-ins are always welcome but appointments are highly encouraged. The appointment desk number is 545-4068. Operating hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Friday, 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Wednesday and 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Thursday. The facility will close at 1 p.m. every Thursday for training.

Moving requires appointments

Peak moving season is here. Soldiers who have their reassignment orders should call the transportation office at 545-3156 to make an appointment for shipment or storage of household goods to avoid delays. Ten copies of orders are required.

For more information, call Linda Kelley at 545-6010.

Humanities award approved

The Humanitarian Service Medal (HSM) has been approved for personnel assigned to the rescue mission in Ecuador who provided this humanitarian assistance in response to the crash of the Million Air Cargo jet aircraft on Oct. 22, 1996.

The period for the award is Oct. 24-31, 1996.

The HSM has been approved for personnel assigned to the Korean Airlines Flight 801 rescue mission on Guam who provided this humanitarian assistance during the period of Aug. 6-23, 1997. For officers assigned to 3rd Brigade or 36th Engineer Group, call 544-2172 for an appointment. For enlisted assigned to 3rd Bde or 36th Eng. Grp., call 544-2542. All other Soldiers should call 545-5648 for an appointment.

Special Forces briefings set

Special Forces is looking for enlisted and officer volunteers. Briefings are held at 6 p.m. every Tuesday and at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. every Thursday in Building 75, McVeigh Hall, Tower B, Room 408 on the fourth floor.

Special Forces is accepting application packets from officers commissioned in year group 1995, but will also accept officers in year groups 1992-1994.

Enlisted Soldiers in pay grades E-4 through E-7 can apply. Soldiers in pay grade E-4 need not be in a promotable status.

Any officers or enlisted Soldiers that are interested in Special Forces are encouraged to contact the Fort Benning Special Forces Recruiting Team at 545-3079.

Storage building changes hours

The Equipment Rental and Storage facility, Building 1707, will be closed on Sundays.

The normal work hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 10 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Saturdays.

For more information, call 545-7978.

Voting booth offers absentee ballots

A Voting Booth will be held today from 11 a.m. - 2 p.m. at Infantry Hall main entrance lobby area. All military and their family members that are at least 18 years of age are encouraged to register for absentee ballots from their home state.

For more information, contact Marsha Covington, Installation Voting Representative, AG, POSD at 545-0334 or 545-4702.

Pharmacy announces holiday hours

Pharmacy services will be closed July 4 in observance of Independence Day. Pharmacy services will be operational from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. July 3. July 6 is a scheduled training holiday; however, pharmacy services will be available 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Falmouth Institute comes to post

The Falmouth Institute is coming to Fort Benning in the fall of 1998. Offering the nation's "only accelerated" Master's of Science Degree in Quality Systems Management, this is a 12-month program targeted to start after October.

For more information, call (800) 838-2580 or visit web site at www.falmouth.org.

European recruiters to visit post

A recruiting team including the Chief, Planning and Evaluation Division, Civilian Personnel Directorate, Heidelberg, Germany, will conduct an employment opportunity briefing from12:30 to 5 p.m. June 29 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 23.

Immediate openings are available at the GS 11 through GS 14 level. Specialty areas include information management, engineering, logistics, resource management, child development services and public affairs. Interested employees should bring an application, most recent performance appraisal and SF-50.

EOD jobs available

Are you an E-4 or below looking for an exciting job, with above average promotion potential? A job that earns an extra $150 a month? A job that has assignments working with the United States Secret Service ad the State Department? A job that has close working relationships with the military and civilian law enforcement? A job that offers frequent TDY travel? If this sounds interesting to you, consider applying for MOS 55D, Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD).

If you meet any of the following requirements:

- E-1 through E-4;
- 0-3 or below (must branch transfer to Ordnance)
- GM of 105;
- Not presently drawing a bonus for shortage MOS;

Not previously eliminated from EOD; not on stabilized tour; not pending court-martial; must be able to get a secret clearance; normal color vision; minimum physical profile of 111121; service obligation after school completion of 24 months; one year minimum on station. For more information, call Sgt. Constance Conrad at 545-3761 or 545-4154.

29th Inf. Regt. blood drive set

The 29th Infantry Regiment will conduct a blood drive from 7:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. July 16 in Infantry Hall, Classrooms 22 and 25.

Vincennes University offers seminars

Soldiers can earn their associates degree by taking a one semester hour weekend seminar offered by Vincennes University.

The course, ICL 106-Counseling Soldiers, will be held from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in Infantry Hall. The classroom will be announced. Topics include counseling skills and procedures and the art of communicating. Cost is $85. If eligible, tuition assistance will pay $60. Registration for this class will be at the Army Education Center, located in Building 2602, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. July 15-16.

Vincennes University is a two-year community college in Indiana. It is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schoolsand is a member of the Servicemember's Opportunity College. For more information, call 545-5826 or 545-3093.

USARSA events set

The U.S. Army School of the Americas will hold an activation ceremony for the Roy Benavidez NCO Academy at 10 a.m. Wednesday in front of Ridgway Hall.

The U.S. Army School of the Americas will hold its annual organizational day from 1 to 4 p.m. today at Uchee Creek.

A Soldier demonstrates the improper technique to execute a push-up.

A Soldier demonstrates the proper way to execute a push-up.

Quality precedes quantity for push-ups

Ed Thomas, Ed.D.
Troy State University

The pushup has been an integral part of Army physical readiness for more than a century. It is now widely used in both training and testing. At a glance, the pushup appears to be a simple exercise that can be safely and effectively performed with minimal attention to detail. Closer analysis reveals a series of movements that can be executed with widely varied degrees of proficiency and results.

In the front leaning rest, gravity pushes the unsupported part of the body toward the ground, so the abdominal muscles contract to keep the distance between the ribs and the front of the pelvis short enough to hold the trunk horizontally. The iliopsoas maintain the position of the hips, and contraction of the quadriceps keeps the knees from bending. The serratus group stabilizes the shoulder girdle, and the elbows are mobilized and stabilized by the triceps. Other muscles are involved, but these few examples clearly demonstrate that there is much more to a good pushup than is commonly realized.

The Army pushup of the early 1900s was a clearly defined sequence of postures that included precise entry and exit parameters. From the position of attention, the Soldier assumed a deep squat with heels elevated and touching. The hands were placed shoulder distance on the ground directly in front of the toes with fingers pointed forward. The legs were then fully extended to the rear with body straight, head up and eyes to the front. During the pushup phase, the arms were bent with elbows directly pointed to the rear until the body almost touched the ground. The motion was completed by fully extending the arms back to the front leaning rest. A sharp and precise recovery to the squat and then position of attention was standard.

The 1946 Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT) for men included a maximum of 54 pushups. There was no time limit, but the test ended when the Soldier failed to maintain proper posture or stopped to rest. Quality performance and precise attention to detail were standard.

The Women's Army Corps (WAC) did not widely employ physical fitness testing during World War II. WAC physical training stressed proper body mechanics including a variety of pushup variations ranging from a standing imaginary pushup to an approximation of the classic pushup motion. Then, as now, the pushup with arms positioned directly under the shoulders was difficult for most women, so doctrine allowed them to place their hands anywhere beyond shoulder distance and point their fingers forward or to the side. This compromise was eventually rejected and the standard pushup was deleted in the 1956 revision of Women's Physical Training Manual FM 35-20.

The 1965 FM 35-20 re-employed the pushup in women's physical training doctrine and the 1975 revision introduced it into testing. Both prescribed a classically precise shoulder distance hand placement with fingers pointing forward. This position naturally guides the elbows toward the rear and deeply involves the triceps. The exercise was modified by allowing the women to bend the knees and place them on the ground. With less weight to lift, the qualitative currency of the pushup for women was increased.

When doctrine introduced the current gender integrated three-part APFT in the early 1980s, women were again faced with the traditional pushup. Then, as almost 40 years before, it was difficult for most females to properly execute them. Something had to give, and it was quality. The hand position was compromised to "where they are comfortable to you." Other modifications have since followed and today's pushup no longer resembles its rational ancestors.

According to Frank Plakoska, Chief of Doctrine at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS), "Adjusting Army physical fitness test standards is a logical first step. That has been done, but we must now focus on attention to detail and precise execution of current and future physical training. We are currently reviewing previous doctrine, especially that developed during wartime."

A good pushup improves body alignment and muscular efficiency and it teaches a Soldier how to effectively push something or someone, said Palkoska. It contributes to physical fitness in preparation for more complex movements that lead to motor (movement) fitness. Basic motor skills make possible the mastery of mission essential combat skills. Mechanically incorrect pushups impair motor performance and promote unnecessary injuries. The focus should first be on common sense qualitative standards and realistic quantitative expectations will follow.

When the body is pulled off balance by improper alignment, all movements from the simplest to the most complex are made more difficult and dangerous. Rounded shoulders, sagging abdomen, swayback, pelvic tilt and other common postural deformities force the muscles to work overtime against gravity's pull. This leads to unnecessary fatigue and strain. Poorly performed physical training and testing contribute to chronic muscular imbalance and impaired motor development.

Simply stated, Palkoska said, if we improperly employ the body in both training and testing, we will eventually misshape the organism and leave it unable to move efficiently in real world situations.

Smart training and assessment begin with good military bearing and body alignment, precise attention to detail during training and a clear understanding of the vital link between physical, mental and emotional development. All of these plus the numerous other principles of rational physical training can and should be applied to the pushup sequence.

"Time and energy spent wrestling with issues pertaining to quantity should not exceed attention to and interest in the quality of those movements we expect to mobilize us for a fast and furious 21st century," said Col. Steve Cellucci, commandant, USAPFS.

"Ten thousand misplaced rounds will not kill an enemy," Cellucci said, "and ten million poorly executed pushups will not teach Soldiers how to effectively push anything or anybody; quality must precede quantity."

Soldiers learn spirit of bayonet during training

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

The drill sergeant ordered the basic trainees to "parry left, slash, butt stroke to the kidney." His orders were answered with a series of whirling bayonets and lethal moves committed on torso-sized targets made of old tires.

In the next series of movements, the trainees parried right, used their rifles to push away the swinging pole, as if it was an enemy's outstretched weapon and finished by thrusting the seven-inch plus M-9 bayonet blade through what might be the enemy's chest or belly.

Drill sergeants reinforced the lesson by telling the trainees to be more aggressive and to yell at their enemy when they thrust the bayonet forward. An aggressive, growling Soldier with a sharp bayonet, the drill sergeants explained, would give them the edge by intimidating the enemy.

All Soldiers learn bayonet training, but for these future Infantrymen, the practice target may one day be replaced with a real enemy. In seconds, the Soldier will have to make the quick decision whether to use a butt stroke to the groin, to parry or to try and thrust the bayonet to its hilt into another man's chest.

It's bloody business, but even in this day of "smart bombs" and precision airstrikes from a distance via computer terminal, the frontline Soldier still needs to remain honed on his trenchline skills essential to root out an enemy, drill sergeants and instructors agree.

That's why the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) at Fort Benning's Sand Hill and the 4th Ranger Training Battalion (RTB) at Harmony Church continue to train Soldiers to be proficient with the Army's M-9 bayonet.

"High technology is good, but you still need to know the basics," said Staff Sgt. Louis Olive, a drill sergeant with 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment. "You still need to shoot, move, communicate and protect yourself at all times."

The bayonet is just one more survival tool at the Soldier's dispense, Olive explained.

"Today, you might be 'urbanized' and have to go hand-to-hand," Olive said, referring to such street-fighting scenarios as what happened in the back alleys of Somalia.

"You might not have the opportunity to actually fire a round in close quarters, so you may have to fix bayonets to take a building. If you start clearing trenches, you may find yourself fixing bayonets."

The bayonet is often considered the last means of defense, said Staff Sgt. Antonio Pastor, a drill sergeant with 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

"You can only carry a basic load of ammo on you — you're not always going to have rounds," Pastor said. "When you run out of rounds, you fix bayonets."

The trainees begin bayonet proficiency with classroom instruction, followed by pugil stick training and eventually, training on the ITB's bayonet assault course. It's a gradual process designed to build confidence in the trainee.

"We have to try and instill confidence in them because when you get on the battlefield, there's no room for fear," Pastor said. "It's either you or the enemy. It's kill or be killed."

The bayonet assault course uses wall and wire obstacles, smoke and simulated weapons fire to simulate battlefield action. The trainees navigate through the obstacles as a group, learning how to be an element within a bayonet charge.

One of the last bayonet charges was led by Col. Lewis L. Millet in the vicinity of Soam-Ni, Korea Feb. 7, 1951. A captain at the time, Millet led his company against a hard-held position. His 1st Platoon was pinned down, so Millet fixed his bayonet and led the rest of the company forward, attacking the enemy with bayonet, grenades and whatever he could to lead his men forward.

His men followed behind with the same courage and the enemy was overrun. For that act, Millet received the Medal of Honor.

At the 4th RTB bayonet assault course, recently renamed in honor of Millet, rangers emulate the soldier's feat. The obstacles are a little tougher than basic training and the pace is a little faster.

"The bayonet is an extension of their weapons system," said Sgt. 1st Class Brian Salvi, primary instructor for the course.

"If the enemy is coming at them, they have to have a way to defend themselves," Salvi said.

The rangers spend many hours of pugil stick training and other instruction building up to the final running of the assault course. The assault course itself is long and winds through the woods, up and down small hills and over obstacles. It's a course of complex butt strokes, slashes and thrusts, anything to kill the enemy.

"When I enlisted back in 1978, one of the questions on the test was 'If you had to, would you kill someone with a bayonet?,'" Salvi said.

"Well, it's either me or him. You can either have your opponent's blood on your bayonet or they can have your blood on their bayonet."

Salvi described the series of learned movements with the bayonet. The thrust is for stabbing the chest, stomach, throat or face. The sweeping slash movement is to slice anything left vulnerable on the body. The butt stroke to the head or groin are good methods for killing or stopping a Soldier.

"The spirit of the bayonet is an aggressive attitude that keeps someone driving on to destroy or to instill such fear in the enemy that they run away," Salvi said.

Soldiers talk about the "spirit of the bayonet" and this phrase has always been part of the bayonet lore.

"What is the spirit of the bayonet?" an instructor might ask.

"To kill," is the right answer.

"What makes the grass grow?"

"Blood, blood blood," Soldiers chant.

There's much more to the bayonet than its mere appearance, said 4th RTB commander, Col. Eric Hutchings.

"Very few people in the world have been shot, but almost every human being from any country has been cut some time during their life," Hutchings explained.

"Whether as a child whittling on a piece of wood or cleaning an apple, there's a deep feeling about the pain of a cut that translates virtually to every human being."

The design of the bayonet, with its lustrous sheen and fine point, is enough to send an enemy running.

"It is important for the bayonet to be seen by the enemy," Hutchings said. "It indicates the seriousness to close with and complete to the bloody end, whatever operation you are undergoing."

The rangers, Hutchings said, are responsible for the "last 300 meters of the battlefield" and part of that battle might be rooting out the enemy in a trenchline.

"We figure a fight in a trenchline will last about 15 seconds," Hutchings described. "In John Wayne movies, it's a barroom brawl. Chairs are broken over people. The fight lasts 15 minutes. In reality, people are scared and they bump into each other in the middle of the trenchline. It's a very frantic fight and we want our guy to win it."

OCS students tackle training in Phase III

1st Lt. Adam B. McGarry
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

June 13 was the first day of Phase III Officer Candidate School training for 149 Senior National Guard Officer Candidates from 13 states. The states represented include: Connecticut, nine candidates; Delaware, six candidates; Massachusetts, 15 candidates; Maryland, 17 candidates; Washington, one candidate; Maine, two candidates; New Hampshire, two candidates; New Jersey, 13 candidates; New York, 18 candidates; Pennsylvania, 26 candidates; Rhode Island, seven candidates; Virginia, 19 candidates; Vermont, two candidates; West Virginia, 11 candidates; and Alabama with one candidate. Upon arrival, the candidates inprocessed at Nett Hall. Inprocessing included a review of officer candidate records to ensure completeness and accuracy and medical records screen for previous heat injury incidence or allergic reactions to insect stings. Squads and platoons were formed and company leadership positions were assigned.

The second day of training began with a 2.5-mile road march to the Leadership Reaction Course (LRC). While at the LRC, the candidates moved through 17 different stations while maintaining their squad integrity. These stations, seven land and 10 above water, are designed to challenge each officer candidate to perform as a member of a team to solve the task at hand while developing individual and collective leadership skills. After action reviews, (AAR), were conducted after each rotation to reinforce lessons learned. Maj. Gen. Allen Tackett, adjutant general of W. Va., and Assistant Adjutant General, Brig. Gen. John Barnette was on site to observe the training and to talk with candidates. After completing the Leadership Reaction Course, the candidates returned to the barracks area to conduct recovery operations and to prepare for the next day's training.

The third day of training began with a road march to the Confidence and Obstacle Course. Candidates negotiated the obstacles, which were designed to enhance their teamwork skills while developing and reinforcing individual confidence to accomplish complex tasks. Following a noon meal, training resumed at the Carey Pool where candidates were introduced to skills in Combat Water Survival. Each candidate was given the opportunity to reinforce and practice skills in the pool while under the watchful eyes of the TAC Staff. Candidates returned to their barracks area to recover from the day's training and to prepare for movement to the field.

The training area adjacent to Garnsey Range was the site for Squad Level Tactical Leadership training during days four through six. Officer Candidates develop and hone leadership skills while conducting squad level training. Each task is briefed, rehearsed and executed by the student chain of command while in a tactical environment. After action reviews are conducted once each task is accomplished to reinforce lessons learned. Maj. Gen. Carroll Thackston, adjutant general of Va., and Brig. Gen. Francis Vavala, deputy adjutant general of Del. were on hand to observe training and to talk with candidates from their respective states.

Phase III Candidates will end their first week of training with a staff ride to Andersonville, Ga., site of a civil war prison camp, to continue their leadership studies while learning more about Army values and ethics.

volunteer of the week

Name: Diane C. Goodine
Hometown: Seneca, SC
Volunteer job title: Coach — t-ball, soccer and cheerleading
Volunteer organization: Youth Services, Columbus Youth Association

Why do you volunteer?
I volunteer because it's exciting and challenging. Because of my love of kids, I enjoy helping to develop young minds and instilling team showmanship.

What do you like about volunteering?
I like to see a child's face light up, and knowing that I can help a child.

What are your special interests and hobbies? I enjoy mentoring, singing, reading and racquetball, to name a few interests.

What others say about your contributions.
"Mrs. Goodine has been a YS coach for four seasons. She has proven to be a kind and caring coach, one who teaches the kids she works with. She instills in the kids an ideal of fair play and good sportsmanship. She teaches that winning is not the most important thing, that how well you play the game and how much you enjoy the sport is far more rewarding in the end."

Medics receive true-to-life training in boating accident

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Like a scene taken straight from Rescue 911, two Soldiers encountered what could have possibly been their worst nightmare.

The two Soldiers arrived at a scene to find three boats piled up, two of which had hit each other head on.

Without thinking, the two rushed into the situation using their skills and training to tackle tragedy and try to preserve human life.

Sgt. Ronald E. Henly and Sgt. Adam M. Lammers, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Infantry Regiment both received Army Commendation Medals Monday for their efforts and assistance in aiding two men involved in the boating accident that occurred June 14 at Uchee Creek.

"It's hard to accept an award when you know two men died, but yet I know I had no control over that and I did what I could to help them," Henly said.

Henly and Lammers, medical NCOs, were participating in the Bass Tournament at Uchee Creek during Military Appreciation Week when they were notified of an accident that occurred on the river.

"It was a hot day," Henly said. "It was one of the first weekends where we had 90 degree heat and it was burning up, but as soon as we got to the scene and I saw the victims, I got chills running up and down my spine."

Henly said two of the men involved in the accident were conscious while one man was in the water and another slumped over the controls of the boat.

"Immediately, from everything we've been taught and learned we knew these guys needed help," said Lammers. "There was never a question in my mind. I knew we had to do everything we could to save these men."

Henly and Lammers began assessing the man in the boat while pulling the other out of the water.

"When I first got to the scene, my mind went blank and I was like 'Oh my God what do I do', but then it all just came back to play, everything we learned from day one," Henly said.

Henly said one of the victims had a partial airway blockage while the other had no vital signs. Both of the victims had suffered extensive injuries from head to toe.

Henly and Lammers tried to stabilize the victims and worked continuously for more than forty minutes to keep them alive while en route to Uchee Creek after the Coast Guard Auxiliary picked them up.

"There was no medical equipment, so all we had were our hands to assist these guys," Henly said. "The key element was to get an airway and stabilize the victims the best we could."

Lammers said once the two had made it back to Uchee Creek and the victims were turned over to the Fort Benning Emergency Medical System it was almost as if the world was in a haze.

"When something like that happens it's almost as if you get tunnel vision," Lammers said. "We were concentrating so hard that we couldn't remember any details of the things around us. It was almost as if everything had become blurred."

Henly said he worked as an emergency medical technician since 1987, but had never encountered something as traumatic as the boating accident.

"When we were relieved by the EMS and we had time to sit down I was completely burnt out," Henly said. "I was useless because the rest of that day I could smell the smell and see the faces of the victims. Even to this day I can picture their faces. It's just not something you can easily forget."

Henly said it's a horrible feeling to know that the two victims didn't survive and he has mixed feelings about receiving the award.

Lammers said almost anyone could have done what they did, but it feels good to be recognized.

"All of the men in our platoon from the platoon sergeant to the lowest ranking private could have done what we did," Lammers said. "It was nice they took the time to recognize us. Not necessarily us, but medics in general."

U.S. Continental Army Band wins Howard Award

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

The U.S. Continental Army Band of Fort Monroe, Va. has won the Howard Award sponsored by the John Philip Sousa Foundation. The award is named for Col. George S. Howard, founder of the U.S. Air Force Band. Each year the Sousa Foundation chairs a panel of distinguished band conductors from around the country. Their job is to select the outstanding military band among all those nominated for the Howard Award.

It is rare for a military band not based in Washington, D.C., to win the prestigious award, according to Maj. Thomas H. Palmatier, commander and conductor of the Continental Army Band.

"Receipt of the Col. George S. Howard Award is especially meaningful to the band members because it is awarded not just by fellow musicians, but from some of the finest conductors in the nation," Palmatier said. "That the band can achieve such a high level of concert band performance in addition to the many other things they do so well is a real tribute to their talents and dedication."

The award was presented to the band by Gen. William W. Hartzog, commander of Training and Doctrine Command.

Children learn about Jesus at VBS

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan

Hannah Sifers (left), 10, daughter of Debbie and Lt. Col. Steven Sifers, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment; Michelle Stevens, 10, daughter of Vivian and Lt. Col. Mark Stevens, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, Infantry Training Brigade; and Michelle McDonald,10, daughter of Kim and Maj. Roger McDonald, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized); work on arts and crafts projects during the vacation Bible School.

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet assistant editor

Less than a week after summer vacation began for Fort Benning school children, White Elementary School rooms were filled with enthusiasm and music filled the auditorium while children attended Vacation Bible School (VBS) June 15-19.

An average of 300 children attended the morning program where approximately 70 volunteers taught Bible verses, provided snacks, helped with craft projects, played games with the children during physical education and sang religious songs during the music period.

"This was the best Vacation Bible School I've ever gone to," said Krisie Anderson, daughter of Kathy and Lt. Col. Bruce Anderson, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, commander. "I like learning to be hooked on Jesus, to know, trust and teach others about Jesus."

This year's program was Hooked on Jesus, where a different beatitudes was studied and applied to daily life.

"The children seem as if they were having a blast," said Kathy Anderson, one of the VBS co-directors.

"Vacation Bible School was fun because we learned about Jesus through songs and finger plays," said 6-year-old Austin Patterson, daughter of Angie and Brian Patterson, Company C, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

"We're learning about Jesus in a fun way — it's not boring," the 10-year-old Anderson said.

Volunteers are a big part of the VBS success, said Bill Putman, Religious Education director.

"Recruiting the teachers for the five-day program requires a lot of effort," Putman said. "Our co-directors volunteered to do this and keep track of the logistics of the program."

Co-director Debbie Cellucci said the work wasn't a difficult task because of God.

"God orchestrated it," she said. "We're the little people and God worked through us."

One of the volunteer teachers passed the 30 year mark. Edwina Redfoot , who taught second grade this year volunteered for her 30th year. The White Elementary third-grade teacher attributes the Vacation Bible School success to family involvement.

"Families are involved in Vacation Bible School," she said. "Parents are volunteering and the children are in the classes.

"It takes a family to raise a family," Redfoot said.

Redfoot's great-grandson, Ryan, was one of the children who attended this year's program.

"All my children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren attended the Fort Benning Vacation Bible School," she said.

Faith Middle School

PTO supplies new sound system

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Students just starting or returning to Faith Middle School will be in for a surprise when they enter the auditorium for their first program, concert or speaker. That's because the Faith parent-teacher organization (PTO) is in the process of purchasing a new sound system.

The current sound system was put in when the school was built eleven years ago, said Faith principal Dr. Beth Middlemiss.

The PTO met with Middlemiss, and solicited advice from the technology committee and the leadership team to find out their choice for what Middlemiss described as "major things that don't fall within the normal budget."

The PTO then determined that their goal was $6,000.

"The PTO conducted two major fundraisers. They sold wrapping paper and gift items," Middlemiss said.

"The PTO also bought us the data projection system last year. It is used daily," Middlemiss said. "It was an incredible contribution. With the contribution of the sound system, we will feel the effect greatly."

As for how the sound system will impact the school, Middlemiss said it will have an incredible effect.

"We have soloists, speakers — students and guests — and dramatic productions," Middlemiss explained. "They were excellent performances, but they sometimes have not been able to be heard in the back of the auditorium. The new system will enhance what's currently going on."

The sound system is expected to be installed after the construction of the new air conditioning and heating unit is installed, which is expected before school begins.

Lucinda Spinelli, PTO treasurer for the past two years, said it is exciting to make a difference.

"I think it really makes a difference to the kids. They actually see where the money goes, which improves the atmosphere and that makes it better for everyone," Spinelli said.

Middlemiss had much praise for the PTO.

"They've worked tirelessly in so many areas, like the volunteers for the Parent and Teacher Writing Assessment Project and Spirit Day. They are so much a part of our daily activities. With the purchase of the sound system, the board and the parents have made a lasting contribution that will benefit students, parents and teachers in years to come."

Col. Frank J. Stone, PTO president for the past year, had high praise for the new sound system.

"I am highly complimentary on the most recent sound system that was purchased and I can attest that this system will serve the unique needs of Faith Middle School."

School registration begins July 27

Fort Benning Schools

Registration for the 1998-99 school year for students in pre-kindergarten through eighth grade will be held at all seven Fort Benning Schools from July 27 to August 7. Hours for registration will be from 8:30-11:30 a.m. and from 1-3 p.m. each day. School will begin on August 25.

Requirements for registration

Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register their children. The items are determined by the student's age, grade and whether the child has previously attended a Fort Benning School.

•A child must reach the age of 5 years on or before September 1, 1998 to enter the Fort Benning Schools. The pre-kindergarten students must be 4 years old on or before September 1, 1998.

•Birth certificates or other proof of birth will be required for children to be enrolled in either pre-kindergarten, kindergarten or first grade unless they attended kindergarten at Fort Benning last school year.

•Students registering at Fort Benning for the first time will be required to present a Record of Immunization at registration. This requirement will be strictly enforced. Check with your physician or clinic if you are not sure of your child's immunization requirements.

•All students except pre-kindergarten and kindergarten must have a report card or grade placement record.

•Georgia Certificate of Eye, Ear, and Dental Screening is required for all pre-K and kindergarten students. An appointment for a Georgia Certificate of Immunization and a Georgia Certificate of Eye, Ear and Dental Screening is required for all pre-kindergarten and kindergarten students. An appointment for a Georgia Certificate of Immunization and a Georgia Certificate of Eye, Ear and Dental screening can be obtained by calling the ENT clinic at 544-3041 or 544-3042 for an appointment.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Schools at 545-2500.

Fathers, sons spend time on court

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Fathers were able to spend some time with their sons and enjoy a little competitive basketball Saturday during the Father and Son 2 on 2 Basketball Tournament sponsored by Youth Services.

The tournament, which pitted father and son against father and son, brought out 10 teams, eight in the 6-12 pre-teen category and two in the 13-18 teen category.

According to Justine Boone, recreation assistant for Youth Services, the tournament was held in honor of Fathers Day and gave fathers and sons the chance to spend some time together.

"This kind of activity helps bring fathers and sons closer together," Boone said. "It gives them something to talk about for years and years to come."

Boone said the tournament is a fun way for fathers to bond with their sons and teach them the importance of teamwork and build self-esteem.

"With the military fathers being out in the field so much and working the hours they do there's not many things they get to do, together," Boone said. "This just gives them the opportunity to come out and do something together and have fun at it."

Gerald Dixon said he decided to enter the tournament with his son Corey because he thought it would nice to do something with his son in a family environment.

"It's great to come out and see fathers and sons and watch all of the talent," Dixon said. "The kids do some amazing things you never knew they had in them."

The younger Dixon agreed that the tournament was good because it brought fathers and sons together.

"We can come out here and spend some quality time together," the younger Dixon said. "It's also nice to whoop some butt."

First place in the pre-teen category went to father and son duo Roosevelt and Roosevelt Jr. Vickers. Second place went to Ernest and Omar Tylers.

First place in the teen category went to Rickie and Robert Day.

Sons presented their fathers with the first and second place prizes as Father's Day gifts Sunday. First-place prize was a travel garment bag and second-place prize was a shaving kit.

CHRRS Office helps newcomers find housing

While inprocessing at Fort Benning, one of the first stops may be to visit the Directorate of Public Works' Community Home Finding Relocation and Referral Services Office (CHRRS) in Soldiers Plaza.

The CHRRS staff works with newcomers in finding off post apartments and houses. The CHRRS program is available to the following military and civilian personnel:

•All active duty military personnel and family members.

•Department of Defense employees (APT and NAF) incident to a PCS.

Some of the different services CHRRS offers include providing transportation to visit available rental housing when you have a permanent change of duty station, permissive temporary duty or when changing your off-post residence (apartment or house).

The office can also verify that a rental or lease agreement is in conformance to state laws and military regulations. This ensures that military families will be released from a lease upon receipt of orders for a permanent change of duty station.

CHRRS provides listings of rentals and homes for sale, information on local schools and community amenities, rights that apply within the equal opportunity act if discrimination is experienced when trying to obtain housing. CHRRS also provides a list of housing that may not be rented by military personnel.

The CHRRS office has expanded its services to include the Home Estimate Program and Permanent Change of Station House Express.

•The Home Estimate Program helps families in developing a monthly budget by estimating affordable housing costs in conjunction with other expenses.

•The Permanent Change of Station (PCS) House Express Program helps families when moving to another installation by providing phone numbers and other pertinent information on:

•Basic Allowance for Housing (BAH);

•Waiting period for on post housing;

•Profile of the typical cost for off post housing at your new duty station;

•Summary of up-front moving costs and waiting periods;

•Lists of authorized realtors and advertisements provided by relocation companies;

•Availability of housing for handicapped; and •Welcome packets to describe new duty station and surrounding community.

The CHRRS Office works with the Columbus Board of Realtors, the Columbus Apartment Association and the Staff Judge Advocate Office. This allows the CHRRS Office to act as a mediator to assist in resolving off-post housing problems in a fair and equitable manner.

For more information on the services and programs provided by the Community Home Finding Relocation nd Referral Services Office, call Anna Wilson at 545-3921.

CHRRS is located in the Soldier Support Center (Building 2621), 545-3921 or 545-6610, fax 545-3393 or on the Fort Benning Home Page.

Vasectomy offers best form of permanent contraception

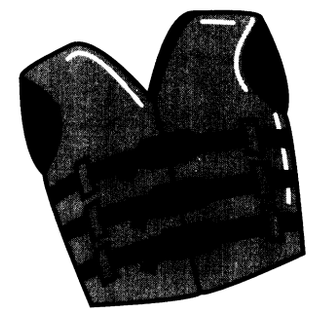
Dr. Kevin Henning
Martin Army Community Hospital

Did you know that a vasectomy is the safest, easiest form of permanent contraception?

Although a tubal ligation in a female is a more commonly performed operation, vasectomies are far simpler since they involve cutting the vas deferens tubes in a man's scrotum, which is outside the body cavity. Physicians and others who are knowledgeable about both forms of sterilization tend to choose vasectomy.

The Family Practice Department at Martin Army Community Hospital performs vasectomies every week. The surgery is done on an outpatient basis under local anesthesia, sometimes with a mild oral sedative.

The vas deferens tubes, which carry sperm from each testicle to the outside, are cut and a section is removed.



The procedure is normally done on Friday and it takes from 30 minutes to one hour. After a weekend of rest most men can return to work on Monday with a profile for restricted physical training for about two weeks.

Occasionally patients have mild swelling and discomfort for several days, but long term side effects and more serious complications like bleeding are rare.

Although the procedure is intended for men who have fathered children, any man who is eligible for care at Martin Army may speak with a physician about the procedure. If you have completed your family and are interested in permanent contraception you should consider a vasectomy.

For more information, call 544-3065 to make an appointment with a family physician or see your own primary care doctor or physician's assistant for a referral.

Q: I want to join a health spa. How can I make sure that I get a good deal?

A: It is important to be familiar with Georgia law before you sign a contract with a health spa. The contract should be in writing, and there should be certain information included in the contract. The date that the contract was signed must be included, as well as the name and address of the health spa, all of the rules and regulations and the cancellation and refund policies.

In Georgia, you can cancel a contract with a health spa if you notify them of the cancellation before midnight of the seventh business day from the date that it was signed. You need to return the cancellation notice, membership card, contract forms, and other relevant documents. For your own protection, you should send these items certified mail, with a return receipt requested and keep copies for your own records. Once you have done this, the health spa must return your money, minus the fair market value of the services that you have used until that point. The spa cannot keep more than $100.

There are circumstances that allow you to cancel after the seven-day limit. For instance, if there is a substantial change in the services that are provided, you can cancel within 30 days of when you knew or should have known of the change. An example of a substantial change is if the spa changes from a co-ed club to a single sex club. Some other examples where the contract can be canceled are as follows: the club closes and cannot offer a substantially similar alternative within ten miles of the original facility; the member becomes disabled for more than 45 days, if the person cannot use the club to the same extent that it was used before the disability.

Before signing a contract with the health club, ask to see the letter from the Office of Consumer Affairs that authorized the disclosure information in the contract. Check to make sure that the terms in your contract match the terms in the letter.

The most common complaints from consumers are that health clubs misrepresent their services, they use high-pressure sales tactics and they close with too little notice. Here are some tips to avoid these and other problems:

•Visit the health club during the hours that you plan to use the facilities. Check to see if promised equipment and services are actually available. Are there personal trainers? What are their qualifications? Are there any special services and are they included in the cost? If not, how much do they cost? Talk with current members about their satisfaction. Check out several clubs before you sign. Seriously consider a commitment to a long-term program. Many consumers quit using the spas within a few months. The length of a health spa membership, in Georgia, can be a maximum of 36 months. Try to pay for the shortest term possible, in case you quit using the spa or the spa closes.

•Beware of joining a health spa that hasn't opened yet. You might lose your money if the spa never opens its doors. If your health spa closes, immediately notify the financing company, if applicable, so you don't have to continue making payments. Also, notify your bank to cease making deductions from your bank account if that was your method of payment.

•Understand every detail before you sign the contract. Read the fine print. Many low cost ads severely restrict hours of use and services. Never sign the contract if it's blank or incomplete. Is there interest included in a payment plan? Are all the promises in writing? Calculate all the costs, including the monthly payment, the total number of payments and the total cost including financing agreements and additional costs and charges. Know the details about payment options before you sign.

•Avoid automatic monthly billing. The health spa might make an error, or there might be a dispute about the amount that is owed. You want to have as much control over your money as possible.

•Check the Better Business Bureau and local and state consumer protection agencies for complaints against the company. The Better Business Bureau in Columbus, Georgia, is located at 208 13th St., Columbus. The phone number is 324-0712. The phone number for the Governor's Office of Consumer Affairs is (800) 869-1123.

State now requires minimum age for boat operation

Emerson "JR" Addington
United States Coast Guard Auxiliary

According to information released by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources (DNR) new Boating Laws for 1998 changed the minimum age required for boat operators. Therefore, before you let your children under the age of 16 operate a boat this summer make sure you know the new Georgia laws, which take effect July 2, 1998. On that date Georgia will join the ranks of 26 other states requiring a minimum age to operate boats and personal watercraft (PWC) on the state's waterways. The new requirements are based on the age of the boat operator and the size of the vessel.

The minimum age requirements according to DNR are as follows:

Youth under 12 years may not operate a PWC or a Class I, II, or III vessel (Vessels 16 feet in length or over). They may operate a Class A vessel less than 16 feet in length with a 30 horsepower or smaller motor if accompanied by a sober adult (not under the influence of alcohol or drugs) age 18 or older. They may not operate a Class A vessel with a motor larger than 30 horsepower.

Youth 12 to 13 years old may operate a PWC if they meet any of the following conditions: 1.) Are accompanied by a sober adult age 18 or older; or 2.) Have completed a DNR-approved PWC safety course; or 3.) Are under the direct supervision which is defined as being within 400 yards and line of sight of a sober adult age 18 or older. They may not operate a Class I, II or III vessel.

Youth 14 to 15 years old may operate a PWC, Class A Vessel, Class I, II, and III vessel if they meet any of the following conditions: 1) Are accompanied by a sober adult age 18 or older; 2) For PWC operation have completed a DNR approved PWC Course and for Class A, I, II, and III vessels have completed a DNR approved Boating Safety Course; 3) Are under direct supervision of a sober adult 18 or older.

Youth 16 years and older may operate a PWC, Class A, I, II, and III vessel provided they are carrying proper identification. Boat operators age 16 or older will be required as of July 1 to have identification on board. Identification may be a driver's license or any other identification issued by a governmental agency containing the person's date of birth and photograph.

Kids under 10 take note — Georgia law requires children under 10 to wear a life jacket at all times when the boat, of any class, is underway unless they are in an enclosed cabin.

For more information about the boating laws or PWC and boating courses, call the nearest DNR Office in Manchester, Ga., at (706) 846-8448 or the local Coast Guard Auxiliary unit — Flotilla 81, Columbus, at 568-1235.

Wisdom offers peace

Chaplain (Capt.) Jim McNeely
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

I am thrilled to be alive. As a chaplain, I come in daily contact with life in all its fullness.

reflections

A young private first class came to talk to me about the consequences of his decision to become an Infantryman.

The choice he made affected not only his own life, but also that of his pregnant wife. Together they are forging a new life within the rigors of the Infantry.

The anxieties they now face can be transformed into opportunities if they allow themselves to be shaped by the hand of our God.

This private is but an example of the great adventure of life. I equate each individual's life with the great stories we all know from literature: Greek heroes, Shakespearean tragedies, Scriptural faith pillars. Like them, so much of this epoch is formed by how we perceive it. As one of my professors said so often to us, "Context is everything."

I want to suggest a few simple tidbits of wisdom I've drawn from my ongoing story in the hopes that you can make your life a masterpiece.

•Our lives are a great gift from God. Make no mistake about it. The fact that we have been offered life at all is a miracle.

I worked for a time on the neo-natal unit of a hospital as a chaplain. Many of the opportunities I had for involvement came when the life of an infant ended much too soon.

In the end, I came to appreciate the fact that I was alive to enjoy my Lord, wife, kids, family and church. To be alive at all is such a special favor from the Divine. From this perspective, life is lived out of the richness of blessing rather than the curse of pain!

•All persons are spiritual. This became real to me when I read Stephen Covey's book The Seven Habits of Highly Successful People.

Covey discovered that success literature of the 18th and 19th centuries focused on the development of virtues. In this century, he said, the majority of the books and articles of a "success" genre focus on technique.

Covey's book attempted to integrate character with technique, but focused on virtuous living. Covey discovered what the great world religions already know: true fulfillment and success in life come from becoming a virtuous person.

Violating these principles is, moreover, the greatest source of stress in our lives. For me, the virtue I want to realize is grace — a gift given not because of my own work or action but rather because of the love of the giver.

Grace motivates me to find peace and increase my efforts to be its channel in my life and ministry.

•We are fully responsible for living our lives. We live in a "victim" culture where, everyone else is responsible for my problems but me. "

If I have a problem with anxiety, it is because my mother yelled at me too much. If I get to work late, my father didn't train me properly.

In reality, no one is responsible for my decisions and behaviors but me. When I was able to understand that my choices affect my life's course, I felt much deeper peace.

To a great degree, I am the navigator who decides where I am going! I deserve all the credit and repercussions for my own choices.

These are but a few of the important sparks of wisdom that help me live out my life's journey. When I apply them, I discover how rich and full life is. I invite you to join me in my making your life a best-seller.

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment squeaked past HHC, 1st Bn, 29th Inf. Regt., 16-14 in the Spring Season Intramural Softball Tournament June 18 at Knappenburger Field.

A close first two innings kicked off the game with the HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. taking an early lead over the HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. 3-1 at the end of the second inning.

The HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. widened the gap with four additional runs during the third inning. The HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. failed at an attempt to keep the game close in the inning, only scoring two runs bringing the score 7-3.

The HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. answered back in the fourth inning. Scoring seven runs, they put the HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. on the run with a bombardment of doubles and singles ending the fourth at 11-10 with the HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. trying to hold on to the lead.

The HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. took the lead in the fifth scoring three runs. A homerun and stolen base by the HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. topped over the HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. who hung in and scored two runs, keeping the HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. behind one run.

The HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. scored two additional runs in the sixth, trying to reclaim the lead. The HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. tried to keep their lead alive by answering back with an additional two runs finishing the inning 15-14.

A final score of 16-14 proclaimed the HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. the proud winners of the tournament.

The players from the HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., were the only team to represent the 3rd Brigade. No other team could attend due to field problems.

Ten teams entered the tournament for the first season. The next season begins at 1 p.m. July 7 with a coach and officials clinic at Gowdy Field.

3 on 3 tourney nets winners, positive play

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan

The first Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers (BOSS) and Consideration of Others 3 on 3 Basketball Tournament took place Saturday at the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) outdoor basketball court.

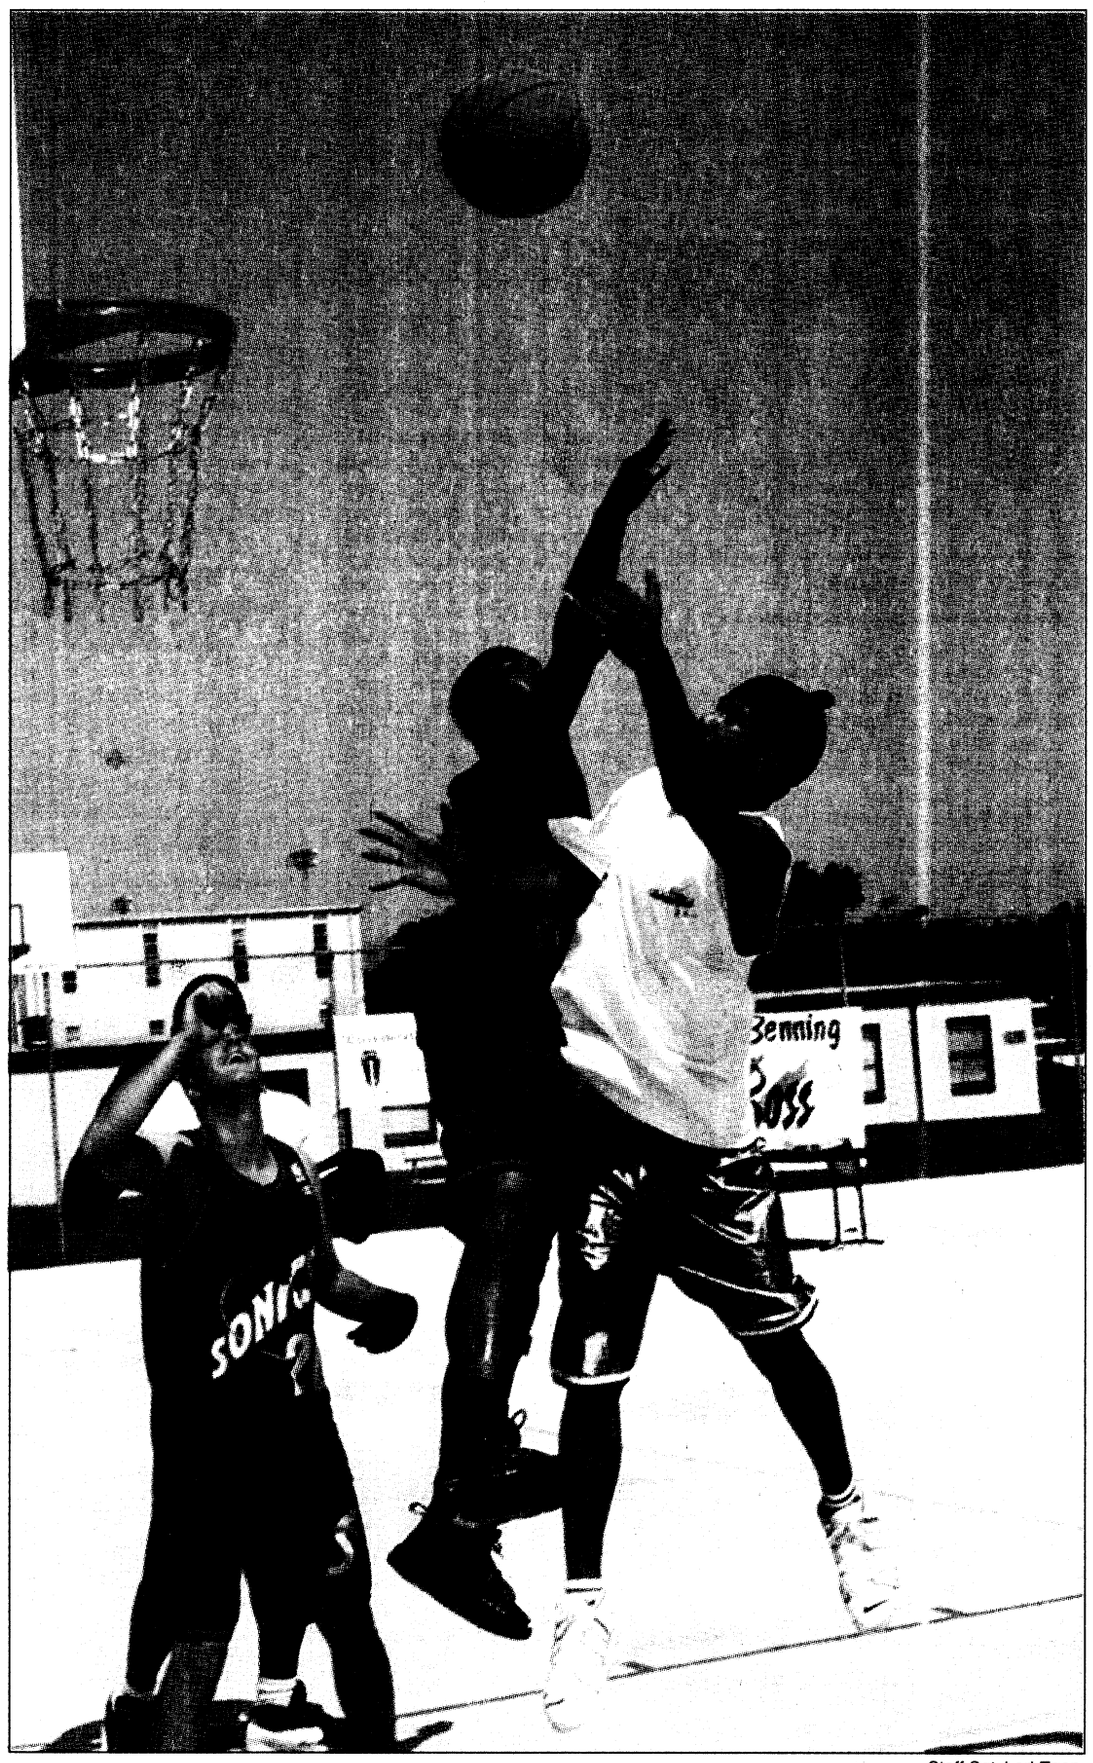
Nineteen teams paid a $10 entry fee for a chance at the first place trophy in three different categories: male, female and coed.

Because of few female and coed team entries, both the female LTM team and coed team 911 won by default. However, there was no lack of competition for the men's division.

The winners of the male division were Bryan Short, Chris Harvey and Mordecai Johnson whose team the Hoopers stormed the competition. They beat the second place team Bone Crushers 20-14. The third place trophy was nabbed by the 317th Engineers who grabbed the win from the Terminators 20-14.

An exhibition game was played by the female LTM team against the male Renegade team during the break before the final four competition. The Renegades won 20-10.

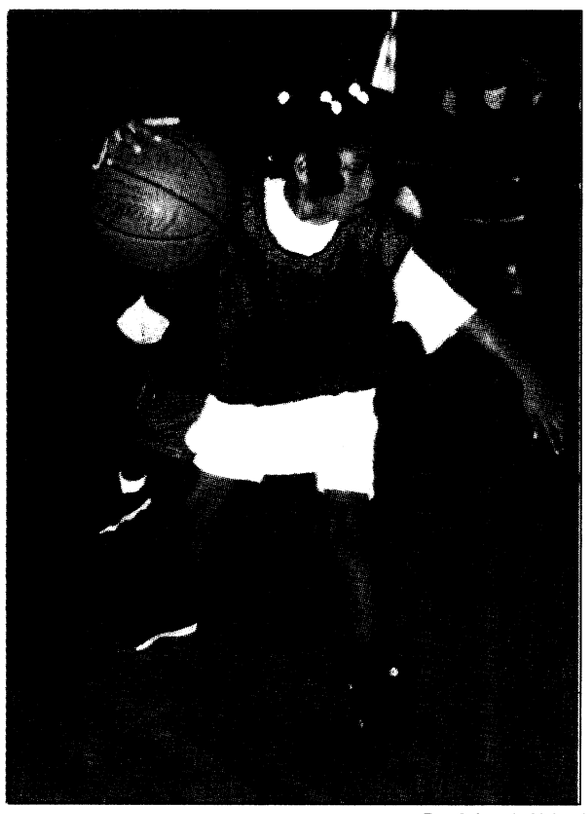
"We had fun and I'm glad we got to play," said family member Tamika Blossom with the LTM team. "We won the division by default, but we entered the competition to play basketball not just ref the games."



The single-elimination tournament was organized because both the BOSS program and the Equal Opportunity Office wanted to support the Soldiers and publicize the Consideration of Others (CO2) program, according to Jose Morales, NCOIC of the Equal Opportunity Office.

"We want to mingle with the Soldiers, find out their needs and sell the (CO2) program," Morales said. "We plan to make this an annual event."

"This tournament was an opportunity for people to get out of the barracks and meet new people — to do something," Short said. "Most guys just sit around and do nothing. It's nice to have something constructive to do.



The tournament was sponsored by the American Fidelity Life Corporation, which held a drawing for a five-day, four-night vacation in Florida.

Prizes for first place finishes were a $25 gift certificate from the Army Air Force Exchange Services, a trophy and a T-shirt. Prizes for second place were a trophy, T-shirt and indoor-outdoor basketball. Prizes for third place were a trophy, $10 gift certificate for an entree at Reggies and a T-shirt.

Kids learn basketball basics at YS

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Some of the children barely stood taller than Michael Jordon's knee cap, yet most didn't seem to notice the inconvenience as they dribbled, passed and attempted to slam dunk the ball during Youth Services annual basketball camp .

Children ages 6-15 came out to Youth Services basketball camp June 14-19 to spend a few hours a day learning the basics of basketball and to challenge their peers to some friendly competition.

According to Robert Moore, director of the basketball camp, the camp is a great outlet for kids and provides a good foundation for children who plan to play basketball down the road.

"A lot of time kids don't have a lot to do during the summer and this gives them the chance to really participate in something," Moore said. "Rather than watching television or playing video games,the basketball camp allows kids to play with their friends and have a good time."

Children learn the fundamentals of basketball, everything from dribbling and shooting to passing and lay-ups.

"We get a chance to learn about all parts of basketball," said 11-year-old Dwain Watts. "It's neat because no matter how much skill you have, you get to play."

Moore said teaching the children the basic techniques of basketball is a good start, but it is critical for the children to learn the value of teamwork and a positive attitude.

"We want them to know having a good team attitude is most important," Moore said. "We try to explain to them that it is O.K. to lose a game because you aren't going to win them all. We tell them to just go out there and do the best they can do and that's all that matters."

"I really like to win," said Richie McDonnell, 6. "But I mostly just like to play and shoot the ball."

Moore said the camp also helps teach the children discipline and the importance of practice and persistence.

"We try to get them to understand that if they have a dream to be a great basketball player they should never give up on it," Moore said. "But we also want them to understand they need something else to fall back on, like good grades just in case things do not work out."

Public Notice

Notice is hereby given of Georgia Power Company's (GPC) intention to apply for a new operating license for the Middle Chattahoochee Project (FERC No. 2177). The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's (FERC) regulations allow applicants to prepare their own Environmental Assessment (EA) for hydropower projects and file it with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission along with their license application as part of the applicant-prepared EA (APEA) process. On May 26, 1998, the Commission approved the use of the APEA process in the preparation of license application for Georgia Power Company's Middle Chattahoochee Project, No 2177. As part of this process, GPC will hold two public scoping meetings to identify the scope of environmental issues that should be analyzed in the DEA. The meetings are to encourage public input into the issues. The first scoping meeting will be held on July 9, 1998 from 8:30a.m. until noon at The Columbus Hilton, Chattahoochee Room, 800 Front St., Columbus, GA 31901, (706) 324-1800. The second meeting will be held at Columbus State University in the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center, 4225 University Avenue in Columbus, GA at 7 p.m. on the same day. In addition, a site visit to the project will be conducted between 1:30 and 5 p.m. on the same day, for interested persons. The site visit will depart from and return to the Columbus Hilton. An Initial Stage Consultation Package and Scoping Document 1 is available for review prior to the meetings. Those documents contain summary descriptions of the project, project environmental resources, and plans for environmental studies. Copies will be available at the meetings.

Comments from the public concerning these issues are requested. All interested agencies, organizations and individuals are invited and encouraged to attend.

Festivities set for today

Karen A. Ellis
Bayonet Editor

Fort Benning will host its annual Independence Day celebration from 5:30 p.m. until dark today on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

The festivities will include a demonstration by the Silver Wings parachute team, Ranger Training Brigade, and performances by the Infantry Band. There will also be a pageantry of state flags. A fireworks display will end the celebration.

The following is a schedule of events:

5:30 p.m. to dark — Food, drink, games and rides

5:45 to 6:45 p.m. — Infantry Band

6:45 to 7 p.m.— Ranger demonstration

7 to 8 p.m. — Special entertainment

8 to 8:20 p.m. — Silver Wings Parachute Team

8:20 to 9 p.m. — National Flag, pageantry and retreat

9 p.m. until dark — Infantry Band

Dark — Fireworks

Leave fireworks to the pros

Directorate of Public Safety

Fireworks, for all their patriotic associations, present a very serious safety hazard, especially for children. Deaths, blindness, loss of limbs and severe burns are all too often the result of Fourth of July celebrations.

Each year, some 12,000 victims are treated in hospital emergency rooms for firework-related injuries, two-thirds of the victims under 15 years of age. While some of these accidents are caused by banned fireworks that were illegally sold, the majority are linked to legal fireworks.

Fireworks should be used only with extreme caution. Used carelessly, they can cause painful, possibly severe injuries. To help use fireworks more safely, the following recommendations are offered:

Remember, fireworks are not toys for children. The sparkler, considered by many the ideal 'safe' firework for the young, burns at very high temperatures and can easily ignite clothing. Do not allow young children to play with fireworks under any circumstances. They cannot appreciate the danger involved and cannot act correctly in case of an emergency.

If older children are allowed to use fireworks, be sure they use them only under close adult supervision. Do not allow any running or horse play while fireworks are being used.

Before using any fireworks, read and follow all warning instructions printed on the label.

The sale, storage, possession, or use of fireworks of any description on an Army reservation or property, including Army-owned housing areas, is prohibited. Fireworks are also against the law in Georgia.

Attendance at the post fireworks display today is encouraged. Professional personnel as well as the Fort Benning Fire Department are on hand to make sure the fireworks are used safely. So why not enjoy the fireworks display on post rather than breaking the law and possibly injuring yourself and others.

USARSA celebrates opening of first Spanish-speaking NCO Academy

USARSA Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army School of the Americas activation ceremony for the Roy Benavidez NCO Academy was Wednesday in front of Ridgeway Hall.

The academy will be the Army's first Spanish-speaking NCO training institute. Its curriculum will enhance the Latin American NCO's leadership skills and professional development, said Command Sgt. Maj. Ricardo F. Layne, USARSA Command Sgt. Maj.

It is named after retired Master Sgt. Roy P. Benavidez, a Medal of Honor recipient, who distinguished himself by a series of daring and extremely valorous actions while assigned to Detachment B-56, 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, Republic of Vietnam.

Traffic to be rerouted for holiday

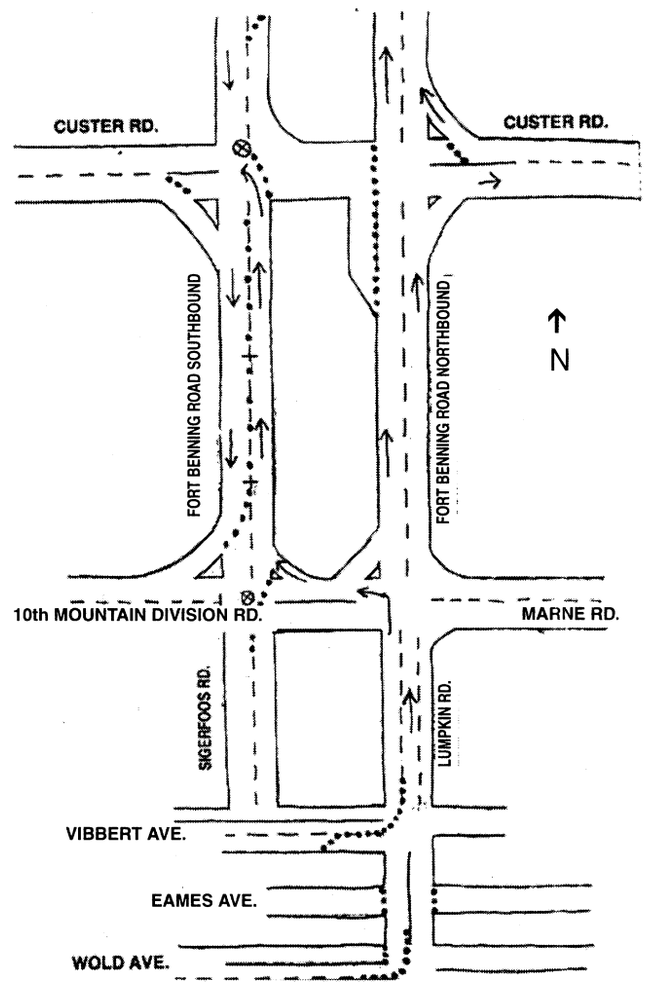
Directorate of Public Safety

Fort Benning military police have planned for traffic congestion because of the Independence Day fireworks display.

Beginning at 9 p.m., traffic control posts will be in place to facilitate the movement of spectators after the fireworks display.

People who park in the west parking lot of Infantry Hall will be routed out Burr Street to Edwards Street to Vibbert Avenue and Vibbert Avenue to Lumpkin Road.

People who park in the east parking lot of Building 4 will be routed out the east access road of the lot to Michael Street and onto Dixie Road east at the intersection of Dixie Road and Lumpkin Road. Traffic will be routed down Lumpkin Road and out Benning Boulevard or east to I-185.



Additional parking will be opened up off of Dixie Road on the following ranges; Easley, McAndrew and Shelton. People who utilize these parking areas will be routed onto Dixie Road for access to either the Alabama side via Highway 165 or east to Lumpkin Road and I-185.

No parking will be allowed anywhere on Dixie Road from I-185 to Sightseeing Road. Violators are subject to fines and towing. All other marked lots will be available for legal parking.

A traffic cut will be in place from Wold Avenue to Custer Road. This includes the temporary closure of Miller Loop and Eames Avenue at Lumpkin Road until completion of the Egress.

Whether its assisting the Rangers in countless training exercises or dropping the Silver Wings to dazzle crowds, the aviation services of Fort Benning fly mission after mission in support of the Infantry School and Infantry Center.

According to Chief Warrant Officer 4 Jim Vines, chief of Flight Support Branch of Aviation Division, Directorate of Training, the Aviation Division's primary job is to provide helicopter support to the different programs of instruction of the Infantry School such as Ranger School, Pathfinders, Sniper School and Infantry Officer Basic Course.

The aviation division handles all types of missions from training and tactical to support missions.

"We fly just about every mission that can be done with a helicopter with the exception of skyboard operations," Vines said.

According to Chief Warrant Officer 3 Matt Bentson, pilot, Aviation Division, Directorate of Operations and Training, Fort Benning's aviation division is unique because it supports such a large variety of missions.

Bentson said the Aviation Division not only handles such missions as airborne, air assault and heliocast operations but also provides V.I.P. transport, public relations and environmental support.

The aviation division has seven UH-60 Blackhawks and flies an average of 10 missions a week.

"Not only do we support Fort Benning but also the 4th, 5th and 6th Ranger Battalions," Bentson said. "We do all of this with seven helicopters and eight crews where as some posts have 15 aircrafts for a brigade.

Vines said about 80 percent of the missions are troop transport and most hours are spent supporting the Ranger School.

He said aviation missions introduce Soldiers to the capabilities and limitations of flying and helps create a foundation of aviation experience.

"We don't get the chance to make anyone experts in flying, but we do expose them to the different aspects of aviation," Vines said. "It would be difficult to produce a well rounded Infantry Soldier without exposure to aviation operations."

Vines said aviation plays an integral role in support of training and combat operations.

He said aviation assists the ground Soldier's and is highly effective on the battlefield for moving equipment and supplies long distances much faster than any other methods.

"We try emphasize to our combined arms brothers that we are a part of the combined arms team," Vines said. "When people think of combined arms, everyone thinks of Infantry, artillery and armor. One rarely thinks of aviation."

Bentson said some people do not realize how much support the aviation services provide for Fort Benning.

He said missions do not stop for holidays or weekends.

"We fly 365 days a year, day and night," Bentson said. "We are pretty much out of sight and out of mind until were needed."

Military life makes Fourth meaningful

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

I love the Fourth of July. How can you not love it? It's America's day to celebrate our independence from England in 1776. This will be my 24th Fourth of July. As the years have gone by though, the Fourth of July has come to mean a lot more to me.

commentary

When I was little, say about five, I can remember covering my ears in fear of the fireworks. Sure, they were neat to look at, but the noise was just too much for my ears. To this day, I still cringe waiting the boom of the fireworks. That is my earliest memory.

When I was a wild teenager, I could have cared less about the fireworks. It was an excuse to party. The Fourth of July meant barbecuing, drinking and hooking up with a guy to me and my equally wild friends.

In 1995, I spent the Fourth on a sightseeing boat in Hyannis Harbor in Massachusetts, my home state, with my then boyfriend, now husband. We both worked for the ferry line and had recently fallen in love. It was a bittersweet night, seeing as he was leaving for the Army in a month and a half.

My first Fourth at Fort Benning in 1996 was spectacular. We started out at a barbecue at our friends' house and then went to York Field to watch the fireworks. It was my first Fourth away from home, but somehow it meant a lot more to me that year. The fireworks were excellent, and as I sat there among Soldiers and their families, I realized that this was the true meaning of the Fourth of July.

Who better to spend the Fourth with than the military? Our military forefathers were the ones who gained our independence for us, who gave us this day to celebrate it with.

Since my somewhat normal life turned into a somewhat befuddled military life, anything having to do with the military, freedom and independence have a deeper meaning for me. I cry at the monument dedication ceremonies I cover, after hearing of the sacrifices our Soldiers and veterans made for us. I stop and think on Veterans and Memorial Day, instead of thinking of what to do on my day off. My husband and I place small flags on the Ranger Memorial and the Ranger World War II monument. Basically, because the military so affects my life, I don't take it for granted anymore.

So, this Fourth of July, when you're listening to the patriotic songs and watching the fireworks, take a minute and look around you. This is America. This is why we are free.

Fourth of July

Post celebration conjures memories of holidays past

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet assistant editor

Fourth of July has always been one of my favorite holidays.

commentary

I think one of the reasons why it has always been one of my favorites is because in Idaho it usually means summer has actually arrived. It has snowed on the Fourth but it melts really quickly.

When I was a child we always had a picnic. Mom would fry chicken, make potato and shrimp salad, buy cookies, chips and sodas.

Sometimes my family went to the South Hills for the picnic and fished for trout in Rock Creek. Sometimes we went boating and sometimes we just stayed at home.

But the one thing my brothers and sisters always did was light sparklers and dance around the front yard writing messages in the twilight. When the sparklers were gone we would go and sit on the front step and wait for the bottle rockets and other types of fireworks to ooh and aah about.

Mom or Dad always set the match to the fireworks — never one of the children.

As I grew older, the city took the initiative with the fireworks and we would watch the fireworks from the local community college grounds.

I remember one year when my nephew was just a baby and the noise of the fireworks along with the music being played in conjunction with the fireworks really scared him. (This was when he still called me La because he couldn't say Lori.)

I also remember some years when there were bans on private fireworks because the weather was too dry and there was high risk of fire.

The national forests in the area always prohibited fireworks because of the fire risk.

One of the best Fourth of July fireworks displays was in 1986. I was in Boston sitting along the banks of the Charles River and the Boston Pops played. More than 250,000 people viewed the fireworks from the same general area — more people who live in Boise, the capital of Idaho. There were a lot of collective oohs and aahs.

I like the fireworks display at Fort Benning. I like celebrating the country's birthday with people who help protect the freedoms the United States stands for. And I like the audience participation of oohs and aahs.

Another benefit of watching the fireworks on York Field and living on Fort Benning is I have an honest excuse for not buying my daughter sparklers — fireworks are prohibited on Fort Benning. But I already promised her a glow stick the next time we were at a place where they're sold.

CG thanks Soldiers, urges holiday safety

This weekend we join the rest of the country in celebrating our nation's 222nd birthday.

Our celebration this evening includes ranger and Silver Wings demonstrations, music by a civilian band and our own Infantry Center band. We will also have the pageantry of flags to remind us of the history, diversity and unity of our great nation.

All will conclude with a hooah version of a fireworks display.

We are celebrating two days early to give our Soldiers and their families a much-deserved, long weekend.

Soldiers from Companies A and B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, will return next week from five months in Kuwait where they formed the front line of defense against the threats of Iraq's Saddam Hussein.

Others are returning from field training exercises and others, such as a platoon from the 608th Ordnance Company still serve in far away places such as Bosnia.

While we are not at war in defense of our liberty and freedom, we are asking more of our Soldiers as the Army downsizes, and the tempo of deployments increases.

So take a well-earned break and have a great weekend while recalling your heritage of always being there when the American public needed us.

Have a safe and enjoyable holiday.

Thank you for your dedicated service to our country.

Return safely.

Soldiers uphold nations principles on battlefield

On July 4th, we join together to celebrate two important events in our nation's history: the 222nd birthday of the Declaration of Independence and the 200th anniversary of George Washington's return to active duty as commander in chief of the armies of the United States.

Our nation's founding document first spelled out our unshakable belief in the equality of all people and in the rights of the individual. But the Declaration of Independence would have been little more than ink spread across a sheet of parchment had the nation not put its Soldiers on the battlefield to uphold these principles.

They fought both for independence and for the unalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

As the first commander in chief of those soldiers, George Washington, who later served as our nation's first president, knew well that to remain free, the young nation would need to maintain a trained, disciplined Army.

Not long after his retirement from public life, war loomed on the horizon again, this time with France. In a letter to president John Adams, dated July 4, 1798, Washington agreed to assume command of the Army again, on condition that the soldiers recruited be of good "character ... with knowledge of their duties; able, active and firm; and of incorruptible integrity, and prudence; and withal such as the commander in chief can place entire confidence in."

The tradition of Army values that began under George Washington's leadership has remained constant.

Today's Army is a values-based organization, the world's best, a full spectrum force of quality Soldiers, trained and ready to accomplish our enduring mission — to conduct prompt and sustained land warfare. our army team — the active component, the U. S. Army Reserve, the Army National Guard, and highly motivated, quality civilians — is ready to meet any challenge. They are heirs to a proud tradition of Army values that began almost two and a quarter centuries ago.

That tradition will continue into the next century and a new millennium.

Too much water can lead to over hydration

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The spring and summer months bring warm and hot weather. Everyone has heard the age-old adage of "drink water to stay hydrated." Drinking water is an important way to prevent heat injuries.

But with that comes the danger of drinking too much water and becoming over hydrated.

"That can have some severe consequences," said Maj. William Corr, chief, Preventive Medicine. "Basically, what happens is the water dilutes the salts in your body, particularly sodium."

Knowing if someone is suffering from over hydration can be difficult because the symptoms are similar to that of a heat injury.

Corr said some of the symptoms include nausea and sweating. Severe conditions can include confusion, seizures and even death.

What Corr recommends is following guidelines announced recently by the U.S. Army Research Institute for Environmental Medicine to track water intake.

He said a person's water intake should be no more than 1.5 quarts per hour. He also said the intake should not exceed 12 quarts per 24 hour period.

Corr added that in most cases, over hydration victims feel bloated.

"The stomach can only process 1.2 quarts of water per hour," he said. "Sometimes people who drink lots and lots of water will throw it up." He said those who do vomit due to over hydration can vomit repeatedly.

"All it takes is two to four extra quarts (of water) to push someone into the over hydration state."

Over hydration, while not widely publicized, does get medical attention. Corr said Fort Benning averages six to eight cases a year. There have been at least two cases hospitalized this summer so far. But, eight out of 10 people who suffer from the symptoms, according to Corr, experience a heat injury, rather than over hydration.

If someone is suffering from either, there is a policy concerning transportation of victims to medical facilities.

First, if the victim has a change of mental status or is confused, then that person should be taken to a medical facility, Corr said.

"If your buddy doesn't know who he is, what he's doing, where he's at or what time of the day it is, he should be evacuated to a medical facility," Corr said.

According to the policy, if the person being treated isn't getting better, the person should be brought to a medical facility. If the person is suffering from a heat injury, a quart of water should be administered every 30 minutes. If after the first quart, the person's condition has not improved, then the person should be seen by a medical professional. If they have not recovered by the second quart, they should be seen by a medical officer.

If a person vomits more than once in a hot weather setting, he also needs to seek medical help.

Finally, if someone has doubts about someone else's medical status, that person should also be taken to be seen by a medical professional.

By following the guidelines and watching how much water is taken in throughout the day, almost anyone can avoid over hydration. Prevent diluting your body salts by:

- drinking no more than one-and-a half quarts per hour,
- eating regularly and
- resting periodically.

There is more than enough salt in a normal diet to replenish salt lost by sweating. It is also important to regularly rest during the hottest summer days. Typically, 15-30 minutes of rest every hour will be sufficient. But in some cases (hard physical labor during the hottest days), we encourage 50 minutes of rest every hour.

Memorial service set

A memorial ceremony for Staff Sgt. Frank Anderson is scheduled for 11 a.m. July 9 at the Main Post Chapel.

Anderson, a member of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, died while spear fishing off the coast of Panama City June 26. His wife, Susan, was with him in Florida at the time of the accident, which is under investigation.

The 31-year-old Anderson had been assigned to the ranger training battalion for the past three years. Prior to that he was with the Army Marksmanship Unit. He also served with the 7th Ranger Training Battalion at Fort Bliss, Texas.

The 14-year Army veteran was from Canyon, Texas, where he was scheduled to be buried today. The 4th Ranger Training Battalion furnished a casket detail.

Anderson is also survived by his 7-year-old daughter Amanda.

Army travelers need electronic funds transfer for TDY

Gerry J. Gilmore
TRADOC News Service

WASHINGTON — Army finance officials have advised that effective Jan 1, 1999, all federal payments will be made via electronic funds transfer (EFT).

This rule is a result of the Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996 and will affect Army vendors and all Soldiers and Department of the Army civilians.

These changes to EFT are part of the federal government's ongoing initiative to convert most of its nearly one billion annual payments from paper check to EFT by next year.

Working under the mandate of legislation signed by President Bill Clinton on April 26, 1996, federal departments and agencies are on the fast track to ensure that all payments, except income tax refunds, are made electronically by 1999.

To streamline administrative procedures and cut costs, the Department of the Treasury wants all federal organizations, to include the Department of Defense, to cease disbursement of hardcopy checks to employees, such as those owed monies for travel advances and temporary duty.

This is of concern to Army finance officials. Early word from the Defense Finance and Accounting Service is that travel vouchers will be returned to individuals who do not have an EFT account by January 1, 1999, said Command Sgt. Maj. Hans Kennedy, command sergeant major for the U.S. Army Finance Command in Arlington, Va.

"About 99.9 percent of active-duty Soldiers are already signed-up for electronic fund transfer for travel pays," Kennedy said. "That's the good news. Reaching out and advising every reservist, National Guardsman and Department of the Army civilian about this mandate is going to be the challenge, and that, quite frankly, is our concern — the total Army."x

There are certain limited conditions, Kennedy said, which allow someone to continue receiving checks.

But, these conditions, he said, will not apply to most DoD employees.

After Jan. 1, people who haven't registered for electronic transfer will have their travel voucher returned, Kennedy said.

NG Soldiers step up to fight Florida fires

Army News Service

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla. — Forest and brush fires have burned more than 155,00 acres in Florida the past month and Soldiers of the Florida National Guard are mobilizing to fight the blazes.

The first 80 Florida National Guard soldiers mobilized for possible wildland fire fighting duty report to Camp Blanding Training Site today to begin certification training by USDA Forest Service and Florida Division of Forestry instructors.

Guard officials are implementing the first stage of a contingency plan that could make as many as 500-trained Guardsman available for assistance to Florida forestry officials who are directing the fight against the wildfires sweeping the state.

"Fire suppression is not one of the missions for which we normally train," said Col. Jimmy R. Watson, assistant adjutant general for the Army National Guard. "We can't send our people to help in this battle until they have the skills and safety training that will make them effective members of the team."

Approximately 16 hours of intensive training took place at Camp Blanding on June 27 and 28, primarily in classrooms at the training site.

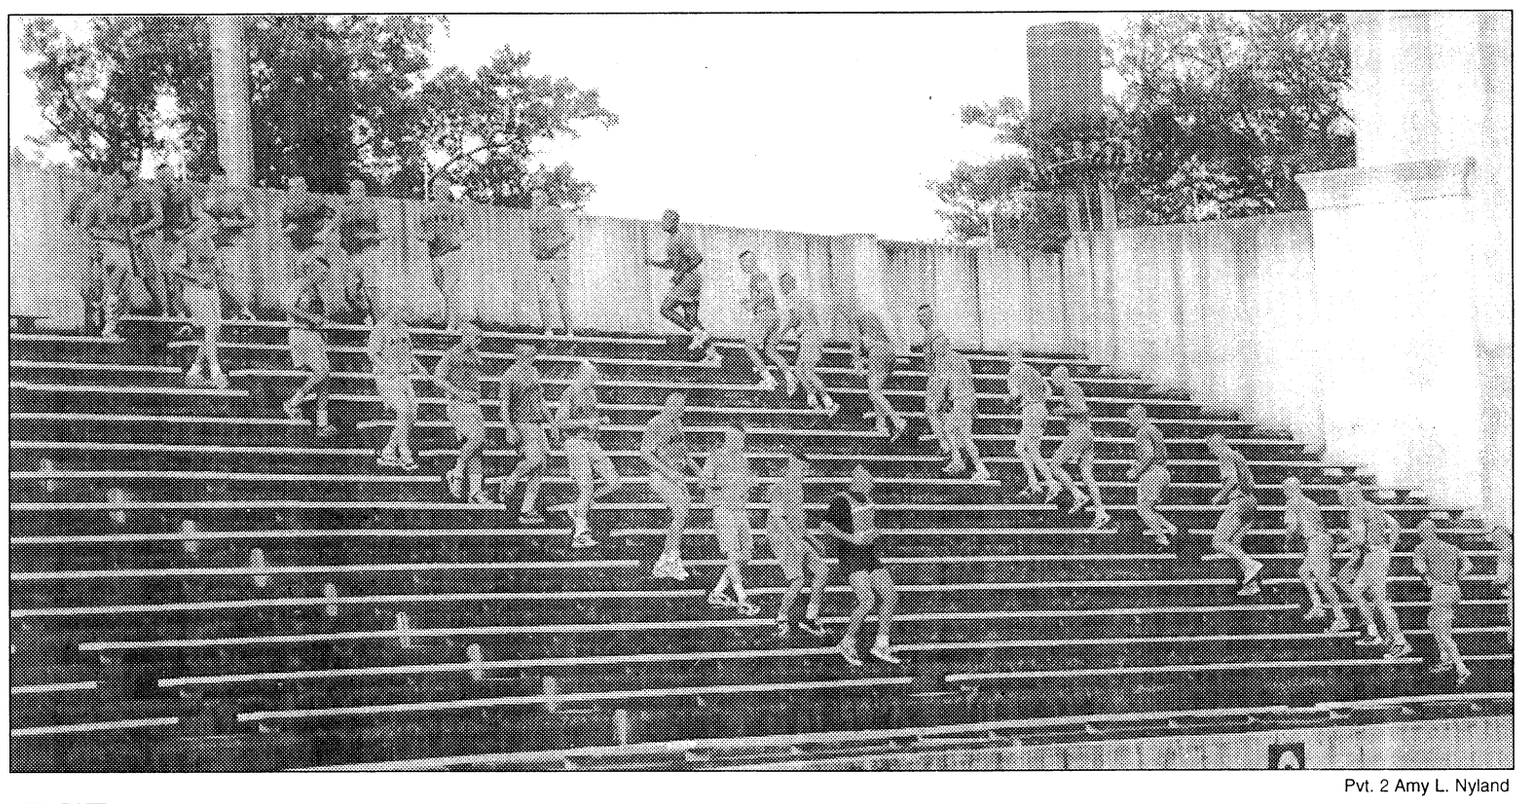
Individuals from 1st Battalion, 265th Air Defense Artillery, headquartered in Daytona Beach, and 146th Signal Battalion from Jacksonville, will make up the first class to receive this specialized instruction.

The Florida Division of Forestry has made no decision at this time regarding the deployment of Guard personnel to actual fire locations.

"We have seen the heroic efforts of the firefighters and forestry people who have continued to work non-stop to bring this situation under control," said Watson. "We want to be ready if they ask for additional help."

Since June 19, the number of Florida Guard soldiers and airmen called to state active duty has grown to 375. In addition, eight civilian forestry personnel from Camp Blanding have contributed their skills to the battle.

Blackhawk helicopters from the Army Guard have flown more than 115 missions and dropped almost 1,400,000 gallons of water on fires.



The Air Guard's C-26 aircraft, equipped with infrared mapping equipment, has flown several missions to help forestry officials locate "hotspots" and potential problem areas.

Army and Air Guard personnel continue to operate bulldozers, water tankers and fire fighting vehicles, primarily at northeast Florida locations

Four provisional support platoons have also been organized and deployed to DOF sites at Wacasassa (Gainesville), Lake City, Bunnell, and Perry to provide refuel capability and maintenance support for heavy equipment in remote areas and rough terrain.

In order to assist in coordinating requests and deployment of National Guard assets, 43 liaisor personnel have been sent to DOF locations throughout the state of Florida, in addition to the Guardsmen manning emergency operation centers in Tallahassee and St. Augustine.

"As members of the effected communities ourselves, we have both a personal and professional interest in providing fire-fighting support," said Watson. "We are ready to continue our support to the Division of Forestry in any way we can."

Junior enlisted Soldiers strive for EIB

Staff Sgt. Clifton Kershan
Army News Service

Considering his youth in the Army, Pvt. Robert Turner could be considered something of a visionary when it comes to the Expert Infantrymans Badge.

Less than a year after he left his mother's embrace and slipped into the Army's, Turner — an infantryman with Company D, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry — stood on a sun-baked patch of Georgia clay trying to earn his EIB, one of the most prestigious awards a Soldier can pin to his BDUs.

"When I reach a leadership position and have Soldiers under me, I think they will respect that accomplishment," said Turner, showing wisdom beyond his years. "The EIB means a lot to me."

Pvt. Jamie Smith shares Turner's vision and, without even knowing it, has already set the right example for privates like Turner — as well as captains, master sergeants and other senior people who have suffered years of futility trying to earn the EIB.

During last year's EIB testing, he was one of the few privates left standing when the demanding days of testing ended.

"It's definitely worth getting," said Smith, a member of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 7th Infantry. "Not everyone can have it — you have to earn it, and you have to want it."

Preparation for the test, which sometimes begins months before the testing, is neither stagnant nor fixed. It includes road marches as long as 12 miles, M-16 ranges, extra physical training to boost test scores, land navigation ranges and hours in the outdoors practicing the more than one dozen tasks a Soldier must master to earn the EIB.

During testing, the margin for error is as narrow as the topics are broad. Anyone who must retest more than twice while going through the sites can shelve their EIB hopes until next year.

Considering the odds and the number of tasks that lay ahead of him, Turner said he was ready. "I feel confident about the training I got, it all relies on me now," he added.

HAMMER FOCUS '98

Engineers take to the field

1st Lt. Will Brown
63rd Engineer Co. (CSE)

The 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), returned from the field June 18 after taking part in Hammer Focus '98.

Throughout the 18-day exercise, the 63rd displayed it's versatility and combat readiness by supporting both the 3rd basic combat training and Fort Benning construction projects.

"This exercise was an excellent training opportunity for us to train on two of our wartime missions: conduct horizontal construction and survivability operations," said Capt. Robert Carr, commander of the 63rd.

During the exercise, the company was attached to the 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). The 63rd assisted the Buffalo Battalion in digging in six company teams during the survivability lane training.

Each dozer team supported a different company team and was responsible for constructing vehicle fighting positions for that company.

"This training is critical to the success of our Dozer Team at NTC (the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.) in September and shows we are fully able to complete our wartime survivability missions," said Sgt. 1st Class Sylbert Atkins, 2nd Platoon sergeant.

63rd also supported the 203rd Forward Support Battalion (FSB) and 13th Corps Support Battalion (CSB) by digging dozens of individual fighting positions and by constructing a six-foot tall protective berm around Thunder Dome, the Tactical Operations Center for the 203rd.

Simultaneously the rest of the company conducted construction operations throughout Fort Benning. These construction projects saved Fort Benning approximately $180,000, the cost to hire civilian contractors to do the same job.

Third Platoon constructed a berm 200 feet long by four feet high by 10 feet wide on Red Cloud Range. The berm replaced a concrete retaining wall, which had collapsed during a recent training exercise. The platoon completed the project in four days.

"This construction project not only saved the military $80,000, but also provided a valuable training opportunity for the soldiers in this platoon. Operators tested their skills on the equipment, while leaders tested their construction management skills on the battlefield," said 1st Lt. Mike Walker, 3rd Platoon leader.

1st and 3rd platoons combined to complete the upgrade of 4th Ranger Training Brigade roads. The platoons combined to haul more than 2,300 cubic yards of soil while completing eight miles of road upgrade. The platoons also emplaced five culverts to improve area drainage and prevent the future washouts.

2nd Lt. Aaron Titko, 1st Platoon leader, summed up the difficulties of the mission.

"This was a true leadership challenge for me and my NCOs to get the job done safely. Not only did we have the lane training and construction going on, but we also had hazards like fatigue, heat and snakes to deal with," he said.

"The biggest excitement came when we discovered some unexploded ordinance during construction," Titko said. "The 789th Explosive Ordinance Disposal Detachment came and blew the mortar round in place."

Throughout the exercise, the Organizational and Direct Support Maintenance Sections kept the tested equipment operational.

"Many people do not understand the hard work and long hours that mechanics put in, especially when the unit is in the field," said 1st Lt. Carmen Hancock, Maintenance Platoon leader. "These Soldiers completed over 165 job orders while conducting a field exercise."

The 63rd also sent platoons through the Assembly Area and Convoy Lane Training. After recovery the 63rd will continue construction on post and prepare for Marne Focus '98 and an upcoming rotation through NTC.

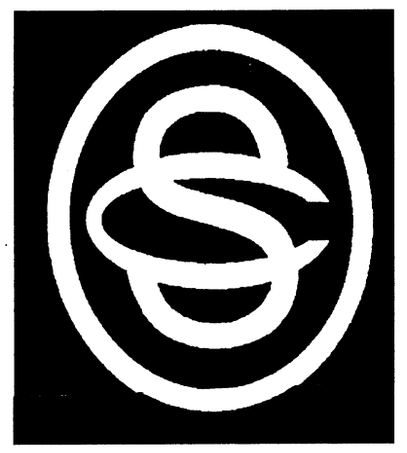
OCS candidates visit historic prison camp

1st Lt. Adam B. McGarry
Phase III OCS PAO

Andersonville, "... it takes seven of its occupants to make a shadow" (Sgt. David Kennedy, 9th Ohio Cavalry).

Andersonville, or Camp Sumter as it was of officially known, was one of the largest of many Confederate military prisons established during the Civil War.



More than 140 officer candidates from Phase III OCS visited the historic complex June 19.

The candidates received a tour of the prison's facilities which consisted of the Cemetery, the prison complex, and the newly opened National Prisoners of War Museum.

The prison was built in 1864 after Confederate officials decided to move the large number of Federal prisoners kept in and around Richmond, Va. In addition, the Southern Army needed a place of greater security and a more abundant food supply.

During the 14 months the prison existed, more than 45,000 Union Soldiers were held in the confines of the prison. Of these, almost 13,000 died from disease, poor sanitation, malnutrition, overcrowding or exposure to the elements.

The prison initially covered about 16.5 acres of land enclosed by a 15-foot high stockade of hewn pine logs. Inside, about 19 feet from the wall, was the "deadline", which the prisoners were forbidden to cross upon threat of death.

Flowing through the prison yard was a stream, which supplied water to most of the prison. Eight small earthen forts located around the exterior of the prison were equipped with artillery to quell disturbances within the compound. It was also used to defend against feared Union Calvary attacks.

The first prisoners arrived in Andersonville in February to hold 10,000 men, the population swelled to more than 32,000 in August 1864.

The deteriorating economic conditions, an inadequate transportation system, and the need to concentrate all available resources on its army, the Confederate government was unable to provide adequate housing, food, clothing and medical care to their Federal captives.

These conditions, along with a breakdown in discipline, resulted in much suffering and a high mortality rare.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst added the candidates travel to the prison during the OCS Phase III program of instruction to instill "Army Values" into officer candidates based on lessons learned from America's military past.

The training focused on the following three distinct lessons: Ethics of a supervisor, ethics of a subordinate and ethics of a peer. The intent of this experience is to instill those ethical values before an officer embarks on a new career, so when faced with such issues, they will have a solid foundation to make responsible ethical and legal decisions.

Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Graze, from Connecticut, presented a historic overview of the national cemetery and discussed the roll that the Raiders played during the internment of prisoners at Andersonville.

Topics of ethics, discipline and command and control were highlights of the presentation.

Capt. Luis Maldonado, from New Hampshire briefed an overview of the physical layout and living conditions at the prison site.

Candidates were also given an opportunity to explore the prison complex and to view onsite displays. A visit to the National POW Museum completed the staff ride activities to Andersonville.

Name: Donna S. Knight

Award or recognition: Directorate of Contracting Employee of Quarter
Unit or Activity: Directorate of Contracting Job Title: Procurement technician
Years on the job: 25 years of civil service

What were your reasons for joining civil service? I joined civil service for job security and career advancement.

Define your work ethic: I take pride in my work and myself. I strive to do the best job I can, no matter what the circumstances.

What person has most influenced your career? Sylvia Fountain, a fellow employee encouraged me and gave me the push I needed to go back to school and get my college degree to help further my career.

If you were supervisor for a day, what improvements would you make? If I were supervisor for a day, I would try to open up the communication lines between supervisors and employees.

Describe a memorable moment in your career: A memorable moment in my career was when I was accepted in the Department of Defense's Army Acquisition Tuition Assistance Program. By being accepted in this program, I have been able to pursue and obtain my bachelor's degree from Columbus State University in business administration and computer information systems.

What are your future career plans? Now that I have obtained my degree, I hope to advance in the acquisition field.

What others have to say about you:

New counselor joins the staff at ACAP Center

Army Career and Alumni Program

"We are pleased to welcome Guy Smith to the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza," said Harold Ericksen, Manager of the Fort Benning ACAP Center. As an ACAP counselor, he will assist separating Soldiers, spouses and civil service workers with transition planning understanding benefits and entitlements, how to conduct a successful job search, skills assessment, resume writing and interview preparation.

Smith has extensive military and corporate personnel management experience, most recently serving as a human resources manager with a Columbus based corporation. Prior to his corporate experience, he served as the Fort Benning Adjutant General.

Smith is a Vietnam veteran and volunteers as the Chair of the Veterans Employment Committee of the Georgia Department of Labor. He also serves on the Columbus Employer Committee, Personnel Review Board of Columbus, and the Georgia Council of the Society for Human Resource Management.

"Guy brings to the ACAP Center a unique background and special insights into the corporate hiring processes," Ericksen said. "He adds another dimension to our staff and this will benefit our separating Soldiers as they enter the job search."

For more information about the ACAP Center call 545-2308, 545-2309 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

•Because of the extended Fourth of July weekend, the ACAP I session scheduled for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in Infantry Hall is canceled.

Martin Army Community Hospital

Physicians join ranks of family practice

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

After three years of long hours, days without sleep, injury and illness, 10 physicians graduated from Martin Army Community Hospital's Family Practice Residency Program June 26 to join the ranks of family physicians throughout the world.

Along with the 10 physicians, eight interns completed the first year of their internships and moved forward to spend the next two years as Family Practice residents.

"The internship is a very long and difficult year," said Capt. Sarita D. Key, intern, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity. "It takes a lot of perseverance because you can work anywhere from 36 to 40 hour shifts. I'm just relieved that the first year is over."

The hospital's residency program has graduated 189 family physicians since its inception in 1972 and is the Army's oldest Family Practice Program.

All doctors must complete a three year residency in an accredited Family Practice training program and pass an intensive board certification exam before they can become family physician certified.

"Everyone who has taken the board certification after completing this program has passed," said Etta Dudley, director of Family Practice Residency Program. "We are so proud of that."

Dudley said the doctors rotate through different medical departments such as internal medicine, pediatrics, emergency medicine and family counseling.

According to Capt. Scott E. Kinkade, family practice resident, the residency is an intensive training program that requires dedication.

"We have to deal with people who are sick, ill or hurting in some way all of the time and that's when people aren't at their best," Kinkade said. "Not only are we called upon to do the right thing for the patient through medical knowledge, but also take care of them as a person."

Kinkade said the physicians are required to work rigorous schedules in all areas of medicine.

"We cover the whole spectrum," Kinkade said. "We say we take care of patients from cradle to grave, so we are called upon to know about everything. It's tough because we work such long hours and sometimes we don't have a day off for an entire month."

Kinkade said it's a great feeling to complete the residency program.

"This is great," Kinkade said. "It's a lot of hard work and I think the road will still be long, but it's also going to be fun."

During the ceremony, three residents were honored with awards.

Capt. Mark K. McPherson received the Outstanding Resident Award and Army Achievement Medal for leadership and service to his patients and fellow residents.

Kinkade received the Resident Teacher Award and Army Commendation Medal for contributions to his fellow residents and commitment to family medicine education.

Capt. David M. Wallace received the Army Achievement Medal for leadership and dedication as chief resident.

Graduating resident class and assignments are:

•Maj. James J. England, Fort Lewis, Wash.
•Capt. John W. Faught, Korea
•Maj. William T. Humphrey, Germany
•Capt. James L. Persson, Germany
•Maj. Dana K. Renta, Italy
•Capt. David E. Ristedt, Germany

crime briefs

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning military police blotters for the month of June. Entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of guilt or innocence of any person.

•As of June 20, there have been at least 25 driving under the influence (DUI) cases on Fort Benning.

•A nonaffiliated civilian was observed soliciting meat products in the housing area. The civilian was approached by the military police. When questioned, he stated he was making a delivery to someone's house. The tenant indicated they did not order the products. The civilian was charged with solicitation. However, the tenant purchased meat from the civilian.

•A specialist was observed playing loud music emanating in excess of 100 feet from the vehicle. A traffic stop was initiated revealing the attached license plate was not registered to the vehicle. Upon contact, the specialist identified himself as another person by producing that person's driver's license. He was charged with the following offenses:

Larceny of private property, wrongful possession of a military identification, loud music and obstructing justice, illegal transfer of state plates, no proof of insurance and giving false information to a law enforcement official.

•This week's "No Go Award" is awarded to a private, for shooting fireworks from the window of his barracks. One of the fireworks rockets hit an MP patrol vehicle. The MP informed the CQ who escorted the MP to the private's room. When the door was opened, smoke billowed from the room. The private was then escorted to the CQ desk where he became disrespectful towards the CQ and the MP. He was then taken to the military police station.

He was charged with possession of a prohibited item, drunk and disorderly conduct, resisting apprehension and insubordinate conduct towards an NCO.

FORT BENNING SCHOOLS

School board meets, gets tech update

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's school board met on Monday for their June meeting. Among topics discussed were the results of the Terra Nova testing done in March, a staff development summary, a special education update and a summary of technology visits.

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of schools, started the meeting with a special recognition of Donna Ford, facilities manager, for her work ethic, knowledge and cooperation in the area of contracting.

Gail Wilson, director of staff development, gave a summary on staff development, which included training for educational technologists (ETs) and technology training for teachers.

Wilson explained that there are many training opportunities available for certified and non-certified personnel and that technology training is the system's highest priority.

The training for ETs from Sept. 1997 to May 1998 included Windows '95, Microsoft Word, Excel, Access, PowerPoint, the Internet, Troubleshooting the PC, Seamless Integration of Technology in the Curriculum, Software Reviews in Language Arts, Word Processing to teach Process Writing Skills and Assessment of Student Learning for Technology Based Projects.

Wilson also explained the extensive training available to teachers both on and off-site.

"They have the best of all possible worlds. On-site training is provided by the educational technologist during the duty day on Tuesday afternoons, in-service days and planning periods. Off-site training is available through the Columbus State University Instructional Technology Center and the Muscogee County Instructional Technology Center after the duty day."

Wilson went on to break down the additional training teachers underwent from August 1997 through May 1998, which included the First Annual Leadership Institute, a five-day institute which focused on planning and system priorities.

There is also summer training available to teachers.

"Columbus State Instructional Technology Center offers 46 different technology programs, Muscogee County Instructional Technology Center offers 22 programs, OxBow Meadows offers eight environmentally focused programs and the Georgia Youth Science and Technology Center offers nine programs," Wilson said.

Plans for the 1998-1999 school year are, according to Wilson, "well under way," including the Second Annual Leadership Institute scheduled for August.

Tommye Woods, director of special education, then gave a special education update to the board.

She reviewed the first year implementation of the program of three registered nurses and four nursing assistants throughout the schools.

"It worked very well in our schools," Woods said.

She also reported that the personnel involved in special education are working hard.

"It's education with a twist. We work on getting the students back into the regular classroom and give them support when they need it."

Woods announced the addition of four aide positions and the approval for two additional teaching positions.

"Our goal for the 1998-1999 school year is to serve children as best as possible and have good communication with parents," Woods explained.

McMullen gave a summary of the technology visits she and Christy presented to all 216 teachers from November to June.

"It increased our awareness of what was going on," McMullen said. "It was professionally and personally rewarding."

McMullen estimated that she and Christy spent approximately 71 hours talking to teachers.

The Consolidated Income Statement for the School Lunchroom Fund for the month of May was given, followed by the superintendent's report.

McMullen received word from Washington on June 25 that four areas have been funded: $300,000 for language arts texts and materials; $85,000 for SuccessMaker, a skills-building computer software program in math and reading for Loyd School; $3,000 for summer school for approximately 54 students at Loyd and $9,000 to pay for the Language Arts committee to complete the revision and alignment of the language arts curriculum this summer.

McMullen also announced that Dr. Wanda Person, media specialist at Wilson, was chosen as the Fort Benning Schools Teacher of the Year.

McMullen ended the report saying that The Benning Education Association and Fort Benning Schools management team negotiated a three percent salary increase for teachers during the first week of June. Negotiations with the American Federation of Government employees are scheduled for the first month of August.

There will be no school board meeting in July. The next meeting is scheduled for August.

Terra Nova results in, students did well overall

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The results of the Terra Nova testing done March 23 in Fort Benning schools were announced at the School Board meeting Monday.

This is the first year the schools have used the Terra Nova testing. It is a standardized test used in all Department of Defense Elementary and Secondary schools. The test replaces the Iowa Test of Basic Skills.

Jerry Christy, director of technology education, presented the report that was prepared by Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum, to the school board.

"Terra Nova is based on national standards as is our curriculum," Christy said. "The test combines multiple choice items with open-ended responses, which require students to explain the process used in arriving at their answer."

Christy also explained that the norm group used to compare scores consisted of 200,000 students which represented all regions, racial and ethnic groups and socioeconomic groups in all schools. The Department of Defense Education Activity looked at the median percentiles.

Fort Benning students scored above the national mark (50 percent) in 44 out of 48 subtests.

The four weakest areas were fourth-grade math, which finished in the 45.9 percentile, fifth-grade math, which finished in the 47.9 percentile, first-grade science, which finished in the 46.4 percentile and third-grade social studies, which finished in the 47.8 percentile.

Christy said the 47.8 in the third-grade social studies could reflect gaps in the curriculum.

Christy showed an example of a math problem, which required students to collect and organize data which is more than the computation of the problem.

"The students need to know what operation to use and how to use it," Christy explained. "This is being taught at our schools."

All parents whose children took the test should have received their child's individual report, which showed their scores in each area and also identified their strengths and weaknesses.

Christy then showed the school board a 1997 and 1998 comparison in scoring in each area using the third, fifth, seventh and eighth grades. The comparison was between the scores on last year's Iowa Test of Basic Skills and this year's Terra Nova testing.

He also said how receptive the students were to the testing.

"The kids were much more excited about it. They were being tested on what they are learning. Terra Nova or tests like it are being used in 39 states. This is the way to go today because it requires more individual thought."

The Terra Nova testing, said Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of schools, "tests the way we should be teaching our students."

Prevention offers best defense against sun cancer

Lt. Col. Lynele Rockwell
Martin Army Community Hospital

What's all the hype about protecting our skin from the sun? Don't we need the sun to be healthy? To get a daily dose of Vitamin D? Now we hear, along with all the other unhealthy things for us, the sun can cause cancer. How can this be, when we see all the people on the beach working on their tans for the summer, or the suntanning parlors advertising winter specials? What is the truth? Who can give us the facts?

As with many things in life, too much of a good thing can be harmful. The American Cancer Society reports that skin cancer has become the most common type of cancer, affecting more than 800,000 people each year. By far, the sun causes most skin cancers.

The good news is that we can prevent skin cancer with a few simple actions. Cover up. When you're out in the sun, whether working in the garden or on the water fishing or boating, wear a wide brimmed hat, long sleeved shirts and pants. If you're going for a swim, of course you'll be dressed differently and then you need to use sunscreen with a sun protection factor of 15 or more. Apply 20 minutes before going in the sun, and after swimming or perspiring.

Fair skinned people with blond or red hair get skin cancer most often. It is less common in people with black or deep brown skin but can occur in anyone who spends a lot of time in the sun. Ninety percent of skin cancers occur on parts of the body not usually covered up with clothes — the face, hands, forearms and ears. People who are trying to get a tan are also at risk for getting it on the shoulders, back, chest or legs.

People who work outdoors, such as farmers and construction workers, and those who go boating often, play a lot of outdoor sports or sunbathe are at the highest risk of developing skin cancer.

Children in particular should be protected from the sun because of the possible link between severe sunburns in childhood and greatly increased risk of melanoma, an aggressive and potentially deadly form of skin cancer, later in life.

Some warning signs of skin cancer include: a mole changes size, shape or color; there is an unusual growth on your skin; your skin changes color in certain spots; or a sore won't heal. Be familiar with what your skin looks like. Check moles, spots and birthmarks monthly. Consult a health care provider if any suspicious areas appear. Cover up and use sunscreen when exposing skin to the sun's rays, particularly from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. when the sun's rays are the strongest. Avoid using sun lamps or tanning booths. Whether a tan is achieved by artificial means or natural sunlight, the ultraviolet dose adds to the total life-time accumulation of UV and to the rash of skin cancer.

Window safety guidelines keep awareness level high

National Safety Council

Summer is here and school is out, the trees and grass have turned green and the windows in our homes are open to catch fresh breezes.

The American Architectural Manufacturers Association, the National Wood Window and Door Association, and the Screen Manufacturer's Association have joined the National Safety Council to raise the awareness of how to safely use windows and patio doors. This coalition has created a Window Safety Awareness brochure that contains safety information about windows and patio doors. Safety guidelines include:

•Do not place furniture under windows. Children can use furniture for climbing and may climb to an open window.

•Screens are designed to provide ventilation while keeping insects out; they are not designed to prevent a child from falling out of a window.

•Plant shrubs under windows to cushion a potential fall.

•Use window guards only if they are easy to release and only if everyone in the house knows how to release them and escape through a window in an emergency. Before applying a window guard, check with the local fire department and building code official to ensure the windows comply with all applicable fire and building code requirements.

•Develop an emergency escape route from the home and practice it until all members of the family are familiar with the plan. In the plan, include two avenues of escape from every room. A window or patio door can be an alternative avenue for escape or rescue.

•Do not paint, nail, or weatherstrip windows shut. Residents must be able to open them to escape in an emergency.

More information can be obtained on the National Safety Council website at www.nsc.org or from the Window Safety Awareness brochure available at the National Safety Council, Attn: Community Safety Division — Windows, 1121 Spring Lake Drive, Itasca, IL 60143.

Braces keep smiles beautiful

American Association of Orthodontists

Nearly 4.5 million people in the United States and Canada are in the care of an orthodontist and look forward to a beautiful, healthy smile that's good for life.

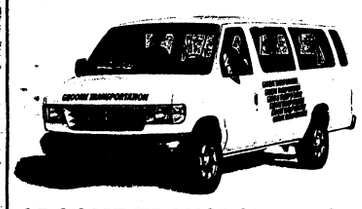
Orthodontics can boost a person's self-image as the teeth, jaws and lips become properly aligned, but an attractive smile is just one of the benefits. Alleviating or preventing physical health problems is just as important.

Without treatment, orthodontic problems may lead to tooth decay, gum disease, bone destruction and chewing and digestive difficulties. A "bad bite" can contribute to speech impairments, tooth loss, chipped teeth and other dental injuries.

When should my child first see an orthodontist? The AAO recommends that every child should get an orthodontic screening no later than age 7 In some cases, this could be as young as 2 or 3.

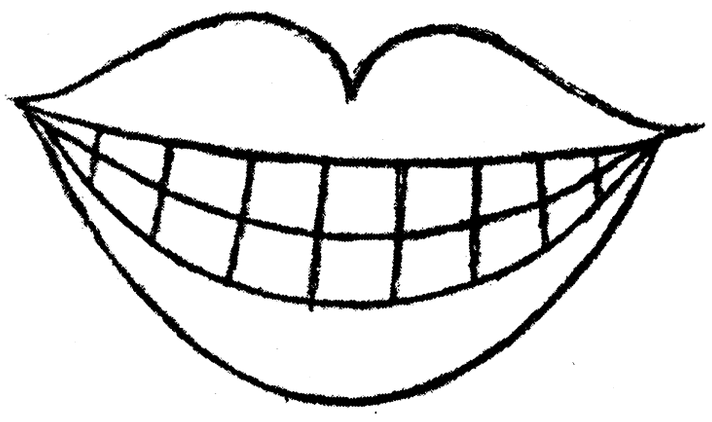
Many orthodontic problems are easier to correct if detected early rather than waiting until jaw growth has slowed. Early treatment may mean a patient will avoid surgery or other more serious corrections later in life.

Is it ever too late for a person to get braces? No. Because healthy teeth can be moved at any age, an orthodontist can improve the smile of practically anyone. In fact, orthodontists regularly treat patients in their 50s, 60s and older.



What makes an orthodontist different from a dentist? Orthodontists are the dental specialists who correct dental and facial irregularities, day in and day out.

Orthodontists are uniquely qualified to correct "bad bites." The American Dental Association requires orthodontists to have at least two years of post-doctoral, advanced specialty training in orthodontics in an accredited program, after graduation from college and then dental school.



What about costs? This will vary, of course, depending on the nature of the problem. Many orthodontic problems require only limited treatment. Discover that orthodontics is less expensive than you thought.

An orthodontist will be able to discuss fees. He or she may offer payment plans to help meet individual financial needs. In addition, many dental insurance plans now include orthodontic benefits. Of course, it's important to keep in mind the lifetime value that orthodontics provides.

Who can recommend an orthodontist? Ask the family dentist to recommend an orthodontist. Interested also can find the names of AAO members in their area simply by calling (800) STRAIGHT or (800) 787-2444.

This week's article provides information on the July 4 yard waste and refuse and recycle collection schedules, Self Help Center closure and fluoride in the Fort Benning water system.

Holiday garbage collection schedule

There will be no yard waste pick up Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be July 13.

There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups in McGraw Manor Friday. McGraw Manor will be picked up Monday along with those areas normally scheduled for Monday, which are Port, Kawamura, Fernandez Streets and Indianhead Terrace. Refuse and recycle collection in family housing for Tuesday through July 10 will be picked up as scheduled.

For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

Self Help Center closes for holiday

In observance of Independence Day, the Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed Thursday through Monday. The center will reopen for business Wednesday at 8:30 a.m.

For more information, call Doc Shirley at 545-4207.

Fort Benning fluoride system

Fort Benning, like most other communities, introduces fluoride into its water system during the purification process.

The relationship between adding fluoride to one's water system and the prevention of tooth decay has been well documented throughout the 20th century.

Fluoridation has been determined to be the most cost-effective method of providing protection and has the benefit of reaching all segments of a population, regardless of age. Hopefully, the information listed below will help the DPW customer understand the need for fluoridation.

Q: Is tooth decay a problem in America?

A: Yes, tooth decay continues to be a significant oral health problem which is preventable in most cases. Tooth decay is, by far, the most prevalent and costly of oral health problems among all age groups. It is also the principal cause of tooth loss from early childhood through middle age, when tooth loss from periodontal disease is also a major concern.

Q: Can adults benefit from fluoridation?

A: Yes, research has shown that the tooth decay preventive effects of fluoride are not limited to children but adults obtain substantial benefits, also.

Q: Can fluoridation provide long-term benefits?

A: Yes, studies over the past fifty years show that fluoridation plays a protective role against dental decay throughout life. One example of the benefits was documented in New York state where 16-year-olds who had been exposed to fluoridated water for six years had 41 percent fewer decayed teeth than those in a nearby non-fluoridated community.

In conclusion, it does not matter how you get fluoride whether through your drinking water, supplements, toothpaste, mouth rinse or your health care professional. You can be confident that DPW is making it easier as we help you fight tooth decay by providing fluoride in the installation's drinking water.

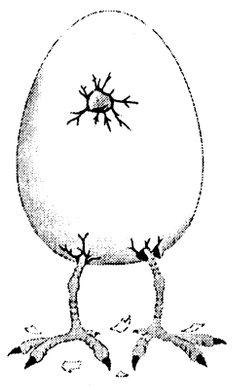
Rate hike set for family dental care

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The monthly premium for the Tricare active duty family member dental plan will increase Aug. 1.



The rate for a single enrollment will increase from $7.64 a month to $8.09. Family enrollment premiums will rise from $19.09 to $20. July leave and earnings statements will reflect the premium increases, according to Tricare officials.

United Concordia Companies, Inc., which provides active duty family dental care under contract to Department of Defense (DoD), requested the hikes to cover expected program cost increases. Monthly premiums for family dental care represent 40 percent of the total premium cost for the plan — DoD picks up the rest.

PAGERS
NO LONG TERM COMMITMENT

People achieve through God

Chaplain (Maj.) Tom Wheatley
11th Regiment

As I prepare to celebrate Independence Day, I have to become more dependent to be truly free.

reflections

It might sound strange to make this statement, but spiritually speaking it is accurate. We all like to think of ourselves as independent, as not needing anyone or anything. (Picture the ad with the man standing next to his Jeep, a vehicle that can clearly help one gain independence — or at least distance — from others, on top of the mountain, surveying the scene below).

Yet , Jesus paints a different picture in John 15:5-8: (NIV) "I am the vine; you are the branches. If a man remains in me and I in him, he will bear much fruit; apart from me you can do nothing. If anyone does not remain in me, he is like a branch that is thrown into the fire and burned. If you remain in me and my words remain in you, ask whatever you wish, and it will be given you. This is to my Father's glory, that you bear much fruit, showing yourselves to be my disciples."

Apart from Christ we can do nothing. That goes against everything we are being taught in our society.

Our children are learning there are no absolute rules or standards. They can live without any standards or rules or they can just make up their own if they like. They are reminded they can achieve anything they want to on their own abilities.

A Christian would disagree with part of this statement — he would certainly encourage his or her children that they can achieve anything they want to in life, but this would not be done on their own. Anything they achieve would be done through skills and talents that God has given them for the glory of God.

There is a balance here between recognizing that we do not achieve anything on our own and the understanding that "I can do all things through Christ who strengthen me." Philippians 4:13 (KJV)

Once we do achieve great things through Christ, there is the battle with our own human pride that wants to take credit for the accomplishments.

I can remember clearly the day I ran my first Boston Marathon. I prayed fervently before the race for God's help and I studied specifically Isaiah 40:31, "But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. They shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walk and not faint."

During the toughest times in the race when I felt I couldn't go on, I called upon God, and he strengthened me. Just as soon as I crossed the finish line, though I had called upon God, and certainly had received his help, I began congratulating myself on how well I had done. Our sinful nature or human pride will always operate this way.

Yet, we are encouraged by Christ. God will help us to succeed in all our good human endeavors when we are operating within his will; then we are to give God the credit for our success.

As Christians, we are never out there in the world operating independently of God. We are always living within his presence. Paul stated that in God "...we live and move and have our being..." Acts 17:28 (KJV)

Why would we ever want to be totally independent, apart from God and his presence and power and love?

If Jesus himself, who worked so many miracles while he walked among us, and is still performing miracles in the lives of so many today could say, "I can of mine own self do nothing..." John 3:30 (KJV), why should we think we can say anything different? Jesus recognized that the Father was doing all the work, and it is the same for us.

Now if there is anything we should work on being independent of this Fourth of July, it is the sin and human will that plagues each of us daily.

Paul has a great solution for this at the beginning of Romans 8. After talking about the issue of sin in Romans 7, and admitting that the sinful nature has been governing his actions, he asks, "Who shall rescue me from this body of death? Thanks be to God — through Jesus Christ our Lord!" Romans 7:2425 (KJV)

Then he goes on to give us encouragement by saying "... There is now no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus, because through Christ Jesus the law of the Spirit of life set me free from the law of sin and death." Romans 8: 1-2 (KJV) This is true freedom that can be celebrated every day of the year.

So let's be dependent upon God, Christ Jesus and the Holy Spirit to make us independent from human will, the carnal nature, the teachings of this world and all the other workings of evil that would try to make us slaves.

Rangers travel over land, water during Endurothon

1st Lt. Warren E. Davidson
75th Ranger Regiment

The 75th Ranger Regiment conducted a rigorous physical training event, the Ranger Regiment Endurothon, June 22.

Twenty-one teams entered the competition and all but two teams finished the event.

The competition, loosely based on the ECO Challenge, started with a 3.2-mile run and transitioned to 7.7-nautical mile canoe leg that ended at Uchee Creek Recreation Center.

From there, competitors hopped onto mountain bikes and navigated over a 17-mile course and transitioned to a 300-meter swim across the Chattahoochee River.

The course ended with an 8-mile foot-march carrying a 50-pound rucksack (30 pounds for the two wives who particpated and placed ahead of some all-male teams).

The course and the sequence of events were kept secret. Competitors moved from one check point to another never knowing whether the next check-point would allow them to transition to the next discipline (run, canoe, bike, swim or ruck) or force them to go farther.

Consequently, sweat-drenched and exhausted, the competitors had to read and record the final checkpoint before they knew they had, in fact, reached the finish line.

The winning time of 5 hours, 5 minutes and 48 seconds (5:05:48) was turned in by Lou Zeisman and Michael Foster of 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt.

Bo Balcavage and Kyle Lear, the second-place team, also of 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., finished with the same time but were penalized one place for an error in recording a checkpoint.

Third place went to Stephen Fogarty and Ralph Holstein from Regimental Headquarters (5:40:38).

Indicative of the event's grueling nature, the last team, delayed by a broken bike they carried (rather than rode) for nearly 5 miles, finished at 10:09:09, more than five hours after the winning team had crossed the finish-line. Competitors differed sharply on which discipline (run, canoe, bike or ruck) proved the most demanding.

Those who finished near the top were in superior physical condition, but a basic Soldier skill probably cast the decisive blow.

U.S. Army photos

Two rangers road march during the Endurothon.

"Navigation, especially on the bike, made all the difference," Balcavage said.

The support for the event, the physical condition required to compete, and the broad range of participants (E-3 to O-6) validated the rigorous physical training rangers regularly conduct.

The competitors paid $13 to enter and received a t-shirt for their effort.

"As long as they've got something cold to drink and my T-shirt at the finish line it'll all be worth it," said participant J. C. Glick.

The ranger regiment is already planning the events for next year's Endurothon.

AN OLYMPIC DREAM

Former Soldier prepares for 2000 Paralympic Games

Sgt. C. Tyler Jones
MDW News Service

Throughout the history of sports, there have been people nicknamed "The Comeback Kid," but few epitomize it to the extent of former Soldier John F. Register.

After having his left leg amputated following a hurdle-jumping accident that shattered his dreams of ever making it to the Olympics, Register all but swore off competing in track and field again. But four years after the accident, he is back and looking to make the 2000 Paralympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

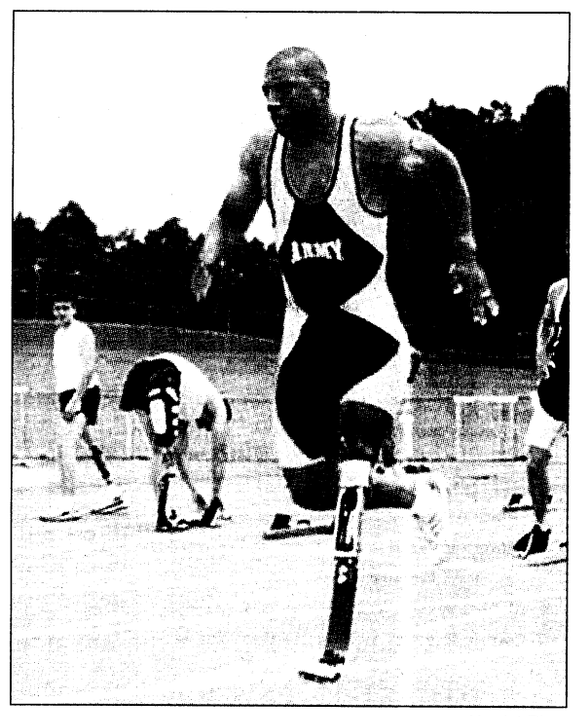
"Run, jump, swim 2000," is his motto.

At the Disabled Sports USA track-and-field national championships June 12-14 at George Mason University, Register exceeded the world-game qualification standards in the 100-meter dash and the long jump and made the U.S. national team.

Although track and field was where he made his mark as an all-America hurdler at the University of Arkansas, Register thinks his best event might be the 100-meter freestyle swim. He said he feels like he is on pace to break the paralympic world record of 1 minute, 0.18 seconds. Register wants to break that mark at the World Swimming Championships in Christ Church, New Zealand, in October.

Like many Division I track-and-field athletes, Register's goal was to one day compete in the Olympics. After graduating with a bachelor's degree in communications, he was unable to find a job that would allow him the flexibility to train for the Olympics while working full time.

He said he heard about the World Class Athletes Program (WCAP) offered by the Army and decided to pursue it, although he did have reservations about joining the Army.



"When I first came in, I was apprehensive because of all the horror stories I had heard," Register said. But he quickly dismissed the rumors and found that he enjoyed the Army and decided early he would like to make a career out of it. "I enjoyed the responsibility and being rewarded for hard work," he explained.

Things were right on track for Register, as far as being selected for the WCAP. Immediately after graduating from AIT, where he was trained as a single-channel-radio operator, Register attended his first all-Army track and field meet and won three of the four events in which he competed.

By 1990, Register was selected for the WCAP. Before reporting, he attended the primary leadership development course at Fort Dix, N.J. His stay was cut short when, two weeks into the course, he received orders sending him to Saudi Arabia for Desert Storm.

As he approached the first hurdle — just as he had done hundreds of times before — he extended his leg in hurdler form, but he had started his jump too far out. When Register arrived at the hospital, the doctors discovered that it was more than a simple dislocation. He had severed the popliteal artery, the main artery that supplies blood to the lower leg, and the leg had to be amputated above the knee.

Register said he was impressed with the support his "Army family" showed after the accident. He said the first person to call him was Gen. Fred Franks, his VII Corps commander, who is a below-the-knee amputee. He said it meant a lot to him that "this four-star general," who could understand what he was going through, called to give him words of encouragement.

Harriet Rice

John F. Register warms up for the 100-meter dash.

In addition to his training schedule and his work with the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program, Register is a minister in training. He lives in Northern Virginia with his wife, 9-year-old son and 18-month-old daughter, Ashley.

USAMU shooters bring home medals during matches

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Public Notice

Notice is hereby given of Georgia Power Company's (GPC) intention to apply for a new operating license for the Middle Chattahoochee Project (FERC No. 2177). The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's (FERC) regulations allow applicants to prepare their own Environmental Assessment (EA) for hydropower projects and file it with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission along with their license application as part of the applicant-prepared EA (APEA) process. On May 26, 1998, the Commission approved the use of the APEA process in the preparation of license application for Georgia Power Company's Middle Chattahoochee Project, No 2177. As part of this process, GPC will hold two public scoping meetings to identify the scope of environmental issues that should be analyzed in the DEA. The meetings are to encourage public input into the issues. The first scoping meeting will be held on July 9, 1998 from 8:30a.m. until noon at The Columbus Hilton, Chattahoochee Room, 800 Front St., Columbus, GA 31901, (706) 324-1800. The second meeting will be held at Columbus State University in the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center, 4225 University Avenue in Columbus, GA at 7 p.m. on the same day. In addition, a site visit to the project will be conducted between 1:30 and 5 p.m. on the same day, for interested persons. The site visit will depart from and return to the Columbus Hilton. An Initial Stage Consultation Package and Scoping Document 1 is available for review prior to the meetings. Those documents contain summary descriptions of the project, project environmental resources, and plans for environmental studies. Copies will be available at the meetings.

Comments from the public concerning these issues are requested. All interested agencies, organizations and individuals are invited and encouraged to attend.

Soldiers return after five-month deployment

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

More than 150 Soldiers from Companies A and B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), returned to Fort Benning early Tuesday after spending nearly five months in the Kuwaiti desert.

Deployed in mid-February as American forces prepared for a potential conflict in the Middle East, the Soldiers represented the last of Fort Benning troops to return from what turned into training exercise Desert Thunder.

"I'm so happy to finally have him coming home," said Evelyn Smith as she awaited the return of husband 2nd Lt. Travis Smith. "He's got a lot of catching up to do," she added as she clutched 5-month-old Spencer, who was only eight days old when his father deployed to Kuwait.

Smith admitted that she was nervous when the Soldiers were first called up for the deployment, but keeping in touch with both her husband and family support group kept her spirits high.

"You'd have to be crazy not to worry with all the talk of Saddam Hussein and chemical warfare," she said. "I am so glad things worked out the way they have and that they can now return home."

As the commercial airliner rolled to a halt at Lawson Army Airfield shortly after midnight, Smith, along with nearly 100 other anxious friends and family members, welcomed the desert BDU-clad troops home with waving flags and loud cheers.

After a few words from 3rd Brigade commander Col. John D. Gardner and Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, the Soldiers were released to visit with their families.

As Sgt. Patrick Hawkins hugged his 2-year-old son Patrick Jr., wife Connie said the deployment was a trying time for their household.

"It was very hard," she said of having her husband away. "Our phone bill was outrageous."

Although the tension in the Middle East slowly dissipated after nearly 30,000 troops were deployed to the Gulf region in February, Fort Benning troops still got a chance to put their skills to the test as part of a training exercise.

"They mainly did a lot of force-on-force and gunnery exercises," said Capt. Peter Dargle, deputy operations officer for 3rd Brigade. "Basically, it was like an extended rotation through NTC (the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.) except they were in the deserts of Kuwait rather than California."

Pvt. 2 Eric Chavez of Co. A said the deployment provided him with much needed experience.

"This was my first time working around tanks," he said. "I think I learned more in the five months we were there than what I have back here."

TRADOC commander to retire in October

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Gen. William W. Hartzog, commander of Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC), announced June 30 he would retire in October. Lt. Gen. John N. Abrams, currently deputy Commanding General of TRADOC, will be promoted to general and take over leadership of the command.

Date of the change of command has not been announced.

In his four years as TRADOC commander, Hartzog spearheaded the Force XXI and the Army After Next programs, both revolutionary models for organizational change and materiel development.

Hartzog recently announced the new heavy division design, the first of several organizational changes intended to prepare the Army for the 21st century.

"Army XXI is the culmination of more than six years of study and experimentation. We have created the Digital Division. It's smaller, has smaller and more compact combat elements, is reliant on digital technology and computers, and integrates the active and reserve components. It is the future — today," he said.

Abrams, who arrived at TRADOC headquarters in August 1997 as Hartzog's deputy for "futures" developments, had previously served as V Corps commander in Heidelberg, Germany.

"Since TRADOC was created, its Soldiers and civilian employees have trained and educated the people for our Army and provided the doctrine and combat developments to ensure their success," Abrams said. "It will be an honor to continue this tradition and lead the outstanding men and women of TRADOC.

"I look forward to continuing the superb work done under the brilliant leadership of Gen. Bill Hartzog."

Hartzog was commissioned as an Infantry officer after graduating from The Citadel in 1963. He served two tours in Vietnam, beginning as an Infantry company commander and then as an intelligence officer from May 1967 to February 1968. From 1972-73 he was on the staff of Military Assistance Command Vietnam in Saigon.

Hartzog was also an instructor at West Point. He served two previous assignments in TRADOC, as executive officer to the TRADOC commander from 1984-85 and as assistant commander of the U.S. Army Infantry School, Fort Benning.

Before taking command of TRADOC, Hartzog was the deputy commander in chief and chief of staff of the U.S. Atlantic Command, Norfolk, Va. In that job, he was directly involved in the conduct of Operation Restore Democracy in Haiti.

Abrams enlisted in the Army in February 1966 and was commissioned after completing Officer Candidate School in February 1967. Then came a two-year combat tour in Vietnam in which he started as a platoon leader and ended as an armored cavalry troop commander.

Since then he has served in command and staff positions in Europe, Korea, Kuwait, Hungary and the United States, including the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment in Fulda, Germany; the 2nd Infantry Division in Korea; and V Corps.

USARSA activates NCO Academy

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Eighteen months of patience, persistence and tenacity paid off during the U. S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) activation ceremony for the Roy Benavidez NCO Academy July 1 in front of historic Ridgway Hall.

"This is a remarkable day," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst. "What's occurring here today is a first and the significance of it should not be lost by anyone here or anyone else in the Army."

The academy will be the Army's first Spanish-speaking NCO training institute. Its curriculum will enhance the Latin American NCO leadership skills and professional development.

"This academy is unique and it's different," said Ernst. "It will have a pivotal role on what a professional Army's role is in democratic sustainment. That's what our NCO's do. They set up standards of discipline and behavior for the training readiness of our Army. We expect this academy to have the same impact on the Armies of Latin America.

Command Sgt. Maj. Ricardo Layne of USARSA, was the guest speaker for the ceremony. Layne spoke about the significance of the NCO corps and how it truly is the "backbone" of the Army. He also thanked everyone who supported the development of the academy.

"We have the tremendous opportunity to help shape the NCO corps of Latin America, and to help make their countries safe," said Layne. "We definitely have the tools, resources, attitudes, motivation, knowledge, soldiers and the proper leadership to accomplish this mission."

The academy was named after retired Master Sgt. Roy P. Benavidez, a Medal of Honor recipient, who distinguished himself by a series of daring and extremely valorous actions while assigned to Detachment B-56, 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, Republic of Vietnam.

"It took 18 months of patience, persistence and tenacity to make this happen," said Ernst. "Today, these three great hallmarks of the NCO corps are being rewarded. This is a proud day in my life. This is a real pleasure for Carl Ernst."

Warrior Inn Dining Facility wins competition

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

The Warrior Inn Dining Facility was evaluated at the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) level June 26 and was named the Best Large Dining Facility in TRADOC July 2.

Beating out Fort Gordon and Fort Sill, the Warrior Inn's major competitors, the dining facility now advances to the final stage of the competition and will compete against other Army dining facilities around the world for the Phillip A. Connelly Award.

The Phillip A. Connelly Award, named for the former president of the International Food Service Executives Association, was established in March 1968. The award recognized excellence in Army food service.

"We all have standards for the way we run facilities, it is just in how those standards are applied that makes a dining facility good," said Ed Hilton, installation food advisor.

The staff of the dining facility is upheld to strict standards and guidelines.

The areas of the dining facility and staff are evaluated in sanitation, food protection, accountability of supplies, time and temperature of the food while being prepared by the staff.

The workers of the dining facility are inspected everyday before their shift. They are checked for the cleanliness of their uniforms, hair, nails and shoes ensuring they meet the standards of the dining facility.

The dining facility is evaluated by TRADOC inspectors twice a month.

The dining facilities that are chosen can compete in three categories:

•Large Dining Facility — an average of 201 or more diners per meal and field kitchen

•Battalion or larger commands that have an organic field food service capability and a field food service mission.

Last year, the Warrior Inn dining facility made its way to the TRADOC level competition but did not advance to the Armywide level.

This year it has the chance to compete to be the best dining facility in the Army.

"We are the best in the world," said Master Sgt. Phillip Law, 36th Engineer Group (Construction).

"We have the ability to adjust, adapt and overcome any mission requirement and still maintain standards," Law said.

To enable the dining facility to run smooth and efficiently, the staff of the Warrior Inn dining facility must also have the ability to work closely and communicate with each other.

"The staff of the Warrior Inn Dining Facility is like a family," Law said. "They like the customers who visit here to feel as if they are a part of that family."

Just as a commercial restaurant is concerned about the customer service its patrons receive ,so is the team of the Warrior Inn Dining Facility.

Featuring television entertainment, the eating area is decorated with flowers on the tables and plants in the corners. The dining area is well lighted because of the many windows.

"We are always looking for ways to better satisfy our customers," Law said.

We offer take-out service and short-order grill, which suits some of the busier customers needs, Hilton said.

The post has an open door policy. Any Soldier who wishes to dine at the Warrior Inn Dining Facility is welcome by the staff and management to come and eat, said Hilton.

Army life comes with its share of challenges

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

What did that Forrest guy say about life and a box of chocolates?

Well, life is certainly full of challenges and I like to think that being in the Army provides us with just a few more opportunities to see what exactly we are made of.

commentary

The first test comes before even making the transition from the civilian world as we walked into that recruiting station despite friends and family questioning our sanity.

I really didn't have a clue about what I was getting myself into except that I was going far, far away from the land of Wayne and Garth (yes, there really is an Aurora, Ill., and no, there really isn't any big, hockey donut shop).

And so, away I went ... all the way to sunny South Carolina. Basic training at Fort Jackson was about what I had expected. I was constantly tired, sweaty and hungry — my three least favorite things. Dealing with nasty fire ants and "convenient" torrential downpours during our overnight exercises were challenges in themselves let alone sharing a six-stall bathroom with 60 other females.

OK, so that was a long time ago. In fact, it's been four years and the Army has tested me many, many more times since then.

During AIT, I was the only active duty Soldier in my class. So while my compadres were looking forward to going home to mom and pop, I was nervously awaiting news of my first assignment.

"Alaska!" I nearly screamed after my instructor told me of my orders. All I could think about was how there would be no more fast food runs, no more shopping frenzies — all I had to look forward to was digging snow caves, clubbing baby seals and being run down by polar bears. I wasn't going to Alaska, I was going to hell. (That just goes to show you how much I knew about the land of the midnight sun.)

Needless to say, I was overjoyed when I reached Anchorage that December to find civilization despite the - 20 degree temperature.

The thrill quickly wore off though as I dreaded waking up each morning for physical training (PT). My favorite activity was using my hair dryer to remove the chunks of ice that clumped to my eyelashes after a long run.

As fun as PT was, two weeks after arriving at Fort Richardson, my five-Soldier unit received word of an upcoming deployment. I was nervous, but I had heard that we'd be heading to a tropical location. Hawaii, the Bahamas — how bad could that be? Suddenly, those photos of pristine beaches in the recruiter's brochure made sense.

Well, I should have been watching the news, because I wasn't even dreaming of a Haitian vacation. Operation Uphold Democracy was in full swing when our plane touched the ground and I can still remember walking off the plane only to be greeted by an unpleasant stench and a 100-degree temperature difference.

Despite the huge changes in temperature and culture, I enjoyed most of my time in Haiti. It was a good learning experience for me as I honed some very important skills.

After taking the Haitian offensive driving course, I successfully navigated the congested streets of Port-au-Prince in my trusty humvee as other vehicles failed to obey traffic devices. Oh wait, there weren't any lights or signs. I think the country had one traffic light and no one knew what it was so it didn't serve its purpose.

Haiti was also where I was first introduced to what has become my best friend — my woobie (a.k.a. poncho liner). This blanket is the most important piece of equipment a Soldier can have. My woobie has been by my side through the sweltering heat of places such as Haiti, Guam and Thailand to the Siberian-like conditions of the Alaskan wilderness.

After three years of traveling around the world with my woobie, somehow I ended up here at Fort Benning. Although I don't receive the same opportunities to travel, I face new challenges every week and sometimes every day. In fact, most days I even look forward to dealing with a new problem or situation, but that's only because I've learned perhaps the biggest lesson — what doesn't kill you only makes you stronger.

Soldiers face bigger and more difficult obstacles every day

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

I always love a good challenge. Sometimes I think the reason I joined the Army was for the challenge.

commentary

Then I think harder and remember that my recruiter had a Dodge Stealth and because she had one I thought I would be able to get one too.

What she failed to mention was that her uncle is Ross Perot.

OK, so now I'm in the Army and I don't have the Dodge Stealth, but I do have the challenges.

I find it completely amazing that the Army can make even the most routine things in life difficult.

I found this to be the truth while I was in basic training. No matter how simple or relatively common the task seemed, the Army found a way to make you hate it.

Let's take standing for example. I had always thought standing was relatively simple and mundane — I was wrong.

When I got to basic training, standing was no longer standing, it was a complex procedure requiring extreme discipline.

I remember being put at attention or parade rest for long periods of time and the torture of it.

I understand how some people would be grateful for the silent break, but not me. The minute I heard the words "Platoon! Parade Rest," I knew I was doomed. My body was ready to begin its many ways of torturing me.

It always started out with an itch in a new and fascinating region of my body. Then I could feel little beads of sweat perform ballet on my forehead and back. Before the whole ordeal was over my feet would be numb and I had sampled half of South Carolina's bug population.

That wasn't the worst of it. The worst part was the complete silence. I found the no talking part the most difficult. I just can't stand around in complete silence. It's almost a form of torture for me.

To keep from going nuts I would retreat to the back of my mind where I had created a sort of soap opera series for myself.

In my mind I was a famous Las Vegas lounge singer, Lola BigUn's, who falls madly in love with man from Fargo, N.D., who resembles Fabio. Together we run away to a North Georgia nudist colony where we make our living raising goats and making fake butter.

OK, so it isn't Emmy material, but it helped me keep quiet and keep my mind off of how long I had actually been standing.

In all seriousness though I must give the Army credit. Taking things as simple as standing, walking, talking, eating and drinking and turning them into something evil is pure genius.

Of course I know that everything we did at basic training and continue to do helps build strength and discipline.

The Army is my biggest challenge and everyday I'm faced with all it's little challenges. When I get frustrated about some of the things I'm doing and question their purpose I have to stop and realize that in some way this may be helping me.

I've realized that the challenges I face, no matter how difficult they seem, are nothing compared to war. And everyday without me knowing it, I am in some way being prepared for that ultimate challenge.

The fact of the matter is that the average Joe off the street couldn't just jump into a Soldier's life and do what we do.

We've tackled basic training and we continue to face bigger and more difficult challenges everyday. Some of us have seen and done things we never thought possible. Living with our daily challenges we experience things the average person couldn't even dream of.

I guess in a way that makes us all pretty darn special.

Family thanks unit for assistance and support after accident

Editor's Note: On Jan. 23, Sgt. Jason L. Irwin, a medical NCO with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), was the victim of a fatal vehicle accident on Interstate 85 near Newnan, Ga. Irwin and fellow medic, Sgt. Terrance Davis, were enroute to Ebensburg, Pa., when the unexpected and tragic event occurred.

During the period following the accident, our family was very appreciative of the support and assistance provided by members of Jason's unit. We would like to thank in particular the members of HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Bn., for the memorial service they performed. The ceremony was executed with dignity and respect for Jason and their undeniable attention to detail made the service a gathering truly fitting the occasion.

Please also express our gratitude and thanks to the medics of HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Bn., who voluntarily gave their time to drive to Pennsylvania through a blizzard to serve as pallbearers and perform the funeral ceremonies at the Basilica of St. Michael the Archangel, in addition to the graveside ceremony held in Loretto, Pa.

You can certainly be proud of the members of your post who participated in these events. Included in this detail were: Sgt. 1st Class Joey A. Gibbons, Sgt. Kevin X. Kane, Staff Sgt. Gregory L. Johnson, Sgt. Timothy C. Potter, Sgt. Christopher C. Hunter II, Spc. Timothy S. Pond, Spc. Richard A. Reese, Cpl. Joseph K. Young and Chaplain (Capt.) David Kirk who conducted the wake services, funeral mass and grave side ritual. I would be remiss if I failed to mention 1st Sgt. William B. Mitchell, who made himself available during the entire period. It was very comforting to have someone like him on hand to answer questions and to guarantee that any request and all details were handled completely. Also, a special thanks goes to Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane from The Bayonet, who forwarded articles about the incident from the Georgia papers to us.

Words on behalf of the family cannot completely express our gratitude, rest assured that the effort put forward by your Soldiers did not go unnoticed. All I can say is thank you and God Bless, please be safe in whatever your future missions may be.

— Christine, Jessica and Tristin L. Irwin
Ebensburg, Pa.

Caldera takes oath as 17th Army secretary

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — West Point Class of 1978 graduate Louis Caldera, 42, became the 17th secretary of the Army during a July 2 swearing-in ceremony at the Pentagon.

Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen recited the oath of office to Caldera.

"Our nation is blessed with an abundance of superb young men and women serving in uniform throughout the world ... helping to preserve freedom (and) to promote peace and democracy," Caldera said after swearing in. "I want the American people to understand, know and appreciate the character and quality of our Soldiers, the bedrock values and proud heritage of our Army.

"I want to help ensure that ours will always be the best-trained, best-equipped, best-led Army in the world," he said.

Cohen spoke of Caldera as supremely fit for his new position.

"At West Point, I recall, Douglas MacArthur stated that the cardinal virtues of a Soldier are discipline, courage and loyalty ... the man who stands before you today embodies those virtues," Cohen said. "Throughout his career he has earned the reputation of a man of extraordinary ability and unquestioned integrity."

Caldera, a lawyer, former California legislator, and government executive, expressed thanks to President Bill Clinton and Cohen for the chance to serve as the Army's senior civilian.

"I'm grateful for the marvelous opportunity to provide civilian leadership for the Army at a time of great challenge," Caldera said. "I will work closely with (Army Chief of Staff) General (Dennis J.) Reimer, an extraordinary soldier and human being, and Vice Chief (William) Crouch and the entire Army staff.

"Moreover, I will be privileged to be relying heavily on an outstanding assemblage of assistant secretaries, undersecretaries and the entire Army Secretariat. I know that by working together as a team, we can successfully meet any challenge," he said. Caldera's wife, Eva, his daughters Allegra and Sophia, and Cohen's wife, Janet Langhart, attended the ceremony.

Caldera was born in El Paso, Texas, and raised in Whittier, Calif. He served on active duty in the Army from 1978 to 1983, rising to the rank of captain. His assignments included tours as a military police platoon leader, a battalion intelligence officer and a battalion executive officer. He was awarded the Meritorious Service Medal and later served in the U.S. Army Reserve.

After leaving active duty Caldera attended Harvard University, where he earned his law degree. He also received an M.B.A. from the Harvard Business School in 1987. Caldera practiced corporate law in the private sector and later represented Los Angeles County in state and federal court as a deputy county counsel.

Caldera said he came from blue-collar roots to successfully apply for an appointment to West Point. The institution on the Hudson River and subsequent Army assignments, he said, inculcated in him the importance of public service and the values of duty, honor and country.

"The opportunity to serve as an Army officer has made all the difference in my life," Caldera said. "I am deeply honored that I will now have the opportunity to give something back to an institution, the U.S. Army, that gave so much to me."

The secretary of the Army is responsible for all matters relating to Army manpower, personnel, reserve affairs, installations, environmental issues, weapons systems, equipment acquisition, communications, and financial management. The Army has a yearly budget of about $60 billion. The secretary of the Army leads over one million active-duty, National Guard and Army Reserve Soldiers and 270,000 civilian employees and has stewardship of more than 25 million acres of land.

DNA testing identifies pilot's remains as Vietnam Unknown

Spc. Nicole Gearheart
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Defense Department forensic experts have determined that the service member buried at Arlington National Cemetery as the Vietnam Unknown in 1984 is Air Force 1st Lt. Michael Joseph Blassie, Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen announced Tuesday.

The determination was made by a team whose members come the Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory, the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory and the Defense Prisoner of War Missing Personnel Office.

Members of the team said the key to the identification was the ability to compare mitochondrial DNA samples taken from bone fragments of the Vietnam unknown with the MTDNA of his mother and sister, Patricia.

Blassie's A-37 Dragonfly aircraft crashed May 11, 1972, during a combat mission near An Loc, South Vietnam. His I.D. tags and equipment from an A-37 were found near the remains, according to officials, yet with the evidence and the science available in the 1980s, identification could not be determined.

Blassie's family appealed for disinterment and testing of the remains to answer the question to which they believed they had the answer. The remains of the Vietnam Unknown were removed from the Tomb of the Unknowns May 14 and taken to the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology at Walter Reed Army Medical Center where the work of identification began.

The family's belief was sustained. Ed Huffine, chief of the mitochondrial DNA section of the Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory, said that "there is a 99.9 percent certainty (of the identification) based on the perfection of the match."

He explained that the mitochondrial DNA from Blassie's family, typed according to 610 different markers, was unusual and that the samples from the Unknown matched at every marker. It was, he said, "a vivid match."

The Air Force, represented by Lt. Gen. David Vesely, assistant vice chief of staff, said that plans were for the remains to be transported to the family in St. Louis for reinterment with full military honors.

"Some 2,087 Americans who died in that conflict remain unaccounted for," Cohen said, offering up a renewed pledge that the U.S. government and DoD "will continue to search for each of the American warriors who died in foreign lands defending our nation."

DoD has approximately 100 sets of remains they have recovered for which they are attempting to obtain identifications. Given the state of the science, de Leon agreed it would be difficult to identify another set of remains from the Vietnam War whose identity it could safely be said would forever remain "known but to God."

"In the weeks ahead," he promised, "I and other Defense Department officials will consult with the Congress, the military services, the leadership of veterans organizations, and with the family associations in an effort to determine how best to honor our missing Vietnam veterans in the absence of a Vietnam Unknown."

U.S. ARMY RANGER SCHOOL

Students conquer mountains

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

Throughout Ranger School, students learn that they must be prepared to overcome whatever obstacles lay in their path. During one phase, that may even entail dangling from cliffs, scaling steep slopes and climbing mountains.

The second or Mountain Phase of ranger school, which is conducted at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., introduces students to the basics of military mountaineering, which includes learning the fundamentals of climbing and rappelling, said Capt. Jason Swaim, mountaineering OIC.

During the 21-day phase, students spend five days focusing on mountaineering techniques. Swaim said the first three days are focused on learning the different types of knots as well as becoming familiar with the types and characteristics of mountaineering equipment.

"For some Soldiers, this is their first time climbing and rappelling so we start with the very basics and work from there," Swaim said.

In order to pass the moun-taineering portion of the phase, the students are tested on 10 types of knots.

"In order to be safe and efficient in this type of environment, Soldiers really have to know how to use different knots," Swaim said.

Ranger student Staff Sgt. John M. Fraser said that the technical aspect of the phase made it much more of a challenge.

"You learn a lot during this phase and really have to pay attention to what you're doing," Fraser said.

"It was a lot to learn, but the cadre really took the time to make sure everyone was staying with it," added student 2nd Lt. Lino Miani.

After learning the basic skills necessary for mountaineering, the students then set off for a two-day exercise at Yonah Mountain where they put their new skills to use.

"They will mostly do a lot of balance and two-man party climbing during this exercise," Swaim said. "Yonah Mountain isn't too rough, but it is a good challenge for beginning climbers."

Once the mountaineering portion of the phase is complete, the students then begin preparing for an eight-day field training exercise (FTX) that requires the use of their climbing skills during combat scenarios.

"The FTX here is definitely a lot harder because of the terrain we have to cover," said ranger student, Pfc. John M. Michaud. "Overall, the whole phase is more challenging because you really have to know what you're doing or someone could get hurt."

While the Mountain Phase has been aroundyeaching mountaineering since 1951, the phase has undergone many changes since it was originally created.

Swaim said most of the changes have taken place over the past two years, as the school replaced old ropes with modern kernmantle ropes due to their durability and strength. He added that students now wear full body harnesses to conduct mountaineering.

"We've really done a complete turnaround," he said. "There is such a big difference. The harnesses are much safer and reduce the chance of injuries while conducting mountaineering."

Swaim said the new equipment has allowed the students to perform more climbing and rappelling maneuvers than were previously possible.

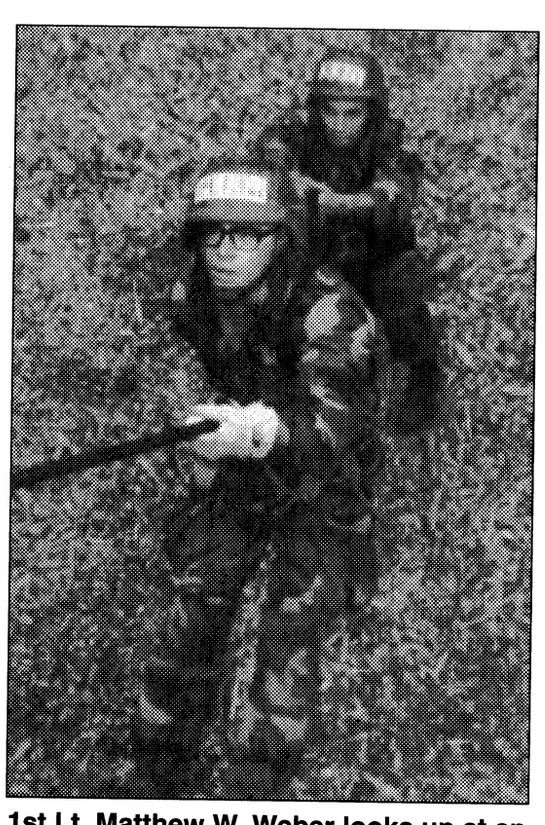
"I went through five years ago, and so much has changed even since then," he said.

Although the Mountain Phase may be perhaps the most dangerous phase of the school, Swain said safety is the cadre's number one priority.

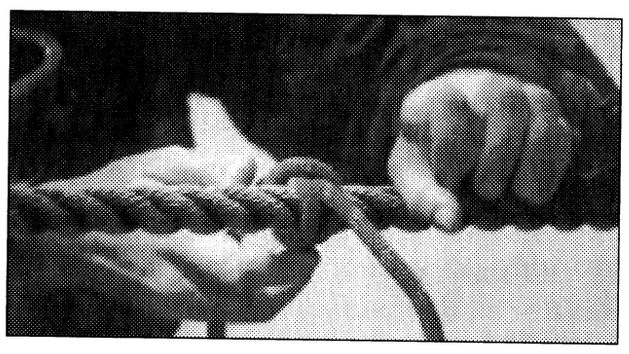
"If they're not mentally alert, there's a greater chance of injury," Swaim said. "We are here to coach, teach and mentor students."

Athough discipline is a key factor throughout the course, student Pfc. Francis Brennan said the instructors were the most professional he's seen.

"Instructors are supposed to motivate, teach, mentor and evaluate," he said. "They actually do those things here and it really makes a difference."



Ranger instructors ask students to hold up a piece of equipment after completing a rappelling exercise.



Students Staff Sgt. Danzell L. Harrell and 2nd Lt. Lino Miani work together to tie two tree limbs together.

Ranger students struggle to pull a fellow student up a cliff during a climbing exercise at Camp Merrill.

ACAP

Center goes on-line to help Soldiers through transition

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program Center provides a comprehensive, easy to use Internet home page that provides another tool for separating Soldiers and their families.

The page can be accessed as a link from the larger Fort Benning main home page, or by using the following internet address: http://www.benning.army.mil/fbhome/ACAP/acapweb1.html.

"The ACAP Center located in Soldiers' Plaza recently received a computer system upgrade. This will allow personnel to access resources on the World Wide Web.

"It made sense to go one step further and develop the home page," said Diane Ermi, ACAP counselor and creator of the new Internet page. "We believe the ACAP page will be a good starting point for separating personnel and will also serve as an excellent information source throughout the separation and job search process."

The home page main menu allows the user to select items and go directly to topics, services and links supporting transition planning, the job search process as well as some local area information.

For example, Soldiers facing separation can view the ACAP schedule and training agenda and program their attendance around unit deployments and exercises. The home page also features links to job listings offering Soldiers the opportunity to look at job availability in the civilian sector.

ACAP clients, as a part of their transition, will receive hands-on training with the Internet. The new home page provides a single starting point and becomes an instructional tool as well as an information source. Each visitor to the web site is counted and the total count is displayed on the page.

The home page allows separating Soldiers from Fort Benning or anywhere in the world to access information and services that will assist in their transition from active service to civilian life.

For more information about Fort Benning's ACAP, call 545-2308, 545-2309 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Independence Day

Families gather for celebration despite weather

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Not to be outdone by man-made ventures, mother nature demonstrated its own display of light and sound July 2 during the post's Independence Day celebration.

Almost before the celebration had a chance to begin, it was halted and the growing crowd was herded into Infantry Hall as rolling clouds began their presentation of rain, thunder and lightning.

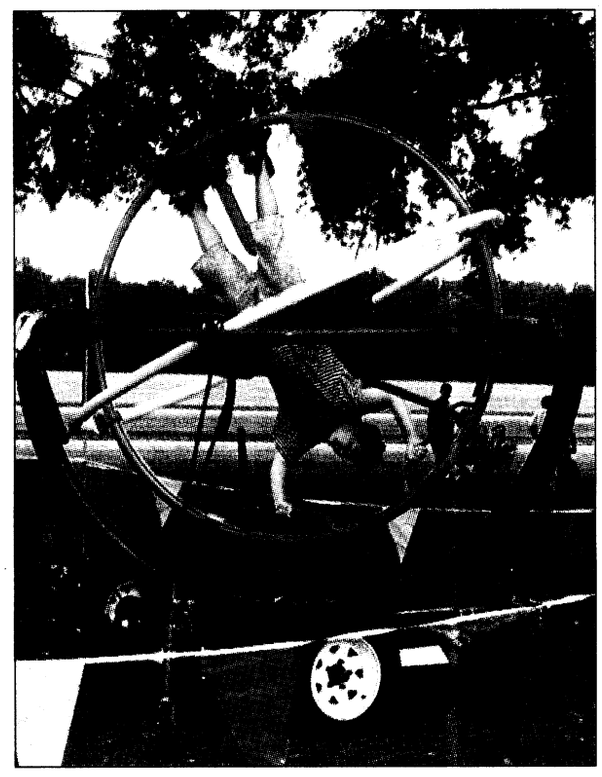
Most people waited out the hour delay determined to not let a little rain ruin the evening.

"The rain didn't deter us at all," said Brenda Thorne. "We have three little girls who couldn't wait to see the show and we were determined to wear them out so they'll sleep good tonight."

Even with a faint drizzle and the cancellation of the Silver Wings and Rangers in Action demonstrations, the crowd returned to York Field to enjoy the remaining festivities which included rides, games, a flag pagentry and the fireworks display.

Basic training Soldiers stormed the field in a sea of green and brown as they attacked the row of food vendors, stacking their arms full of hot dogs, sloppy joes, chips, candy and soda.

"It's great to have a break from training," said Pvt. 1 Greg Rayle, Company B, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment. "I've been at basic training for 12 weeks and I'm really looking forward to seeing the fireworks."



Children kept the field alive with games and fun as they crawled, bounced and slid on colorful rides with names like The Moon Walk and Orbitron.

"We came out here so the kids could see the fireworks, but there is much more to do," said Shirley Hughes. "They have rides for the kids and a little bit of something for everyone to see and do."

After the sun began to fade, the evening calmed down as the crowd moved to the center of the field to relax on blankets and chairs and to wait for the rest of the night's events.

During the flag pageantry and retreat, Soldiers paraded down the field with the flags from all fifty states and canons fired rounds in honor of the states.

The night ended with ooohs and aaaaahs as the fireworks demonstration light the sky in a flurry of rainbow colors.

DoDEA increases graduation requirements

Staff Sgt. Alicia K. Borlik
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense Education Activity (DoDEA) recently increased its high school graduation requirements and will apply them starting with the 1998-99 school year.

The class of 2002 will be the first to graduate under the new rules.

Changes include a two-credit increase to 24 and tougher academic standards — more required courses and fewer credits left for electives. Generally, one full-year course equals one credit and a semester course equals one-half credit. Required courses will account for 19.5 of the total credits needed, and the remaining 4.5 comprise electives.

DoD increased math and science requirements by one credit each and doubled the half-credit computer technology requirement. The new graduation rules also call for students to have two credits in one foreign language and to spend 20 hours in a service-learning program.

In 1996, the education activity compared its high school graduation requirements with those of stateside civilian schools. Surveyors found a gap of up to six credits, said Jane A. Ware, DoDEA service-learning coordinator. Most stateside schools set the bar at 24 credits, but some demanded as many as 28.

Ware said some students ran into problems when they transferred to a stateside school that required more credits than their previous DoD school. Transferring seniors, for instance, sometimes needed more credits to graduate than they could complete in a year. She said that problem was a major reason for the change.

In choosing where to increase credits, DoD looked at what would benefit students most, Ware said. Math and science were increased from two credits each to three. Math courses must include at least two credits in algebra and geometry. All science courses taken must have a lab component.

The new requirements will help provide the math and science backgrounds students need for college. "These changes will ensure all students are prepared," Ware said.

Service learning — community service tied to the curriculum -was added to prepare students for higher learning, Ware said. She noted some colleges and universities use service learning as an admission criterion.

In service-learning programs, teachers provide the subject matter while students identify a community need and brainstorm a curriculum-based solution. Students will use a different subject each year social studies is their freshman-year subject.

Projects can be group or individual in nature, and students can do as many as they want but at least 20 hours' worth. Teachers and students initiate the projects, but students drive them, Ware said.

She said research indicates service learning positively impacts students' academic growth, self-esteem and attendance records. "It challenges students to develop a sense of community and of what it means to be a productive citizen,""she said.

The contest is open to everyone and entry is free. The contest deadline is July 31. To enter, send one original poem, any subject and style to: The National Library of Poetry, Suite 1945, 1 Poetry Plaza, Owing Mills, M.D. 21117-6282 or www.poetry.com.

Poems should be no more than 20 lines and the poet's name and address should appear on the top of the page. Entries must be postmarked or sent via the Internet by July 31. A new contest begins August 1.

Hawaii requires microchip for pets — Hawaii requires all dogs and cats entering the state to have an electronic microchip implant (issued by the state itself). Additionally, there is now an option for a 30-day quarantine (the only current option is 120-day quarantine) if several specific pre-requirements are met well in advance. If you have pets and anticipate a PCS to Hawaii within 6-12 months, call Veterinary Service at 545-4444 or 545-5690 for complete information at the earliest opportunity.

Avoid chronic insomnia with good sleep hygiene

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Most of us have experienced problems with sleeping at some point in our lives. Estimates are that one in three people have sleep problems on a recurrent basis. As we get older, we are more likely to face sleep problems.

Insomnia can include problems with falling asleep, problems staying asleep or problems with awakening too early. Awakening unrefreshed, daytime fatigue, irritability and poor concentration all may be the result of disturbed sleep.

Insomnia can be brief, lasting a few days to weeks or can be chronic (long term) lasting more than three weeks.

Short term sleep problems are often the result of changes in work schedule, vacations or temporary stressors. People usually are able to identify the event(s) associated with poor sleep.

Those who have chronic insomnia may have more than one factor causing the problem. Some of those factors include medications, medical problems, poor sleep hygiene or behaviors contributing to poor sleep, overuse of substances and environmental factors.

Regardless of the duration or cause of the sleep disturbance, an understanding of good sleep behavior is the first step people can take to begin treatment. This behavior modification treatment is referred to as "sleep hygiene measures."

Sleep hygiene measures include the following:

•Maintain a regular bedtime and wakeup time, even when traveling or on vacation.

•Avoid naps. Naps may be the reason you're not tired at bedtime.

•Don't stay in bed after awakening hoping to get more sleep.

•Avoid caffeine, nicotine and alcohol in the evening as each is associated with poor sleep.

•Engage in a relaxing activity before sleep, such as reading or watching TV, instead of an invigorating activity such as exercise. Listen to relaxing music or do relaxation exercises.

•Reserve the bed for sleep and avoid doing activities in bed such as writing bills or homework.

•Reduce noise (earplugs if necessary), light, and temperature extremes.

•Do not lie in bed unable to fall asleep for over 30 minutes. Get out of bed, engage in a relaxing activity until sleepy, then return to bed.

•A snack may help curb hunger. Some studies suggest eating foods high in the amino acid L-tryptophan (milk, chicken, turkey, cottage cheese, eggs) as a bedtime snack may help make us sleepy.

Over-the-counter sleep chemicals may help some people. Read instructions carefully to lessen side effects. Avoid alcohol when using any sleep aid.

Kava, an herbal relaxation remedy, was recently associated with a death. The problem, however, involved the use of kava with the use of alcohol.

Prescription sleeping pills are reserved for cases which fail sleep hygiene efforts. They are used only for a very brief period for the purpose of retraining the body clock, then stopped. They can disturb the dream pattern and can become ineffective if overused.

Discuss your sleep problems with your doctor if they fail to improve with sleep hygiene measures.

Know weather facts to keep safe

Michael Norris
Army News Service

Hurricanes and tornadoes are awesome acts of nature with devastating powers of destruction.

According to statistics compiled by the National Severe Storms Laboratory in Norman, Okla., more people have been killed in the U.S. by tornadoes in the first half of this year than in all of last year.

They estimated that many of those fatalities could have been prevented if people had taken the necessary precautions to protect themselves from life-threatening weather.

When funnel clouds threaten, weather officials advise the general public to pay attention to weather broadcasts on radio and television that provide notification of storm conditions. If there is a severe-weather threat, stations will interrupt their broadcasts with pertinent advisories, to include emergency evacuation if the situation calls for it.

In preparing for a storm, make sure to keep a portable battery-operable radio on hand in case of power outages or the need for evacuation to higher ground in the event of flooding.

Keep a working flashlight ready in the event of power outages, and be sure to maintain a first-aid kit. Keep your vehicle's gas tank full during hurricane season.

You should always have a stock of food, water and supplies in your home. Most people need at least one quart of water or other liquid to drink each day, but more is better.

When a tornado or hurricane approaches, be more concerned for your health than potential property damage. While it is good to nail boards over windows or tape glass to minimize flying glass from high winds, the important thing is so get out of harm's way.

If you are inside your house, seek a place beside the building's structural supports. Stand under interior doorways, nestle down in a bathtub or seek shelter in the basement.

Protect yourself and others by limiting items outside the house that could become airborne and cause damage during a hurricane or tornado — things such as garbage cans, lawn furniture, toys or tools.

Keep trees trimmed so weakened branches won't break and become projectiles during a storm.

Insurance can be purchased against flooding, hurricanes and tornadoes. Have a prepared list of personal property ready for insurance agents in case damage occurs.

Place important papers like birth and marriage certificates, wills and insurance papers into a waterproof container with your food supply or in a safe-deposit box at the bank.

If you're uncertain of the ability of a dwelling to withstand high winds, such as a mobile home, evacuate the dwelling and find shelter elsewhere.

If you are outdoors and unprotected, be aware of your vulnerability. Seek shelter in low-lying areas. Don't make yourself a target of lightning, high winds and flying debris.

Be aware of designated emergency-evacuation routes from home or work to areas to shelter in case primary routes or blocked or storm damaged.

Don't be fooled into thinking the worst of a storm is over when the "eye" of the hurricane passes over you. It is important to remember that when the "eye" is overhead, it means the other side of the storm will be next.

Even after a tornado or hurricane has abated, safety should be a concern. Do not re-enter your home unless you are sure it is safe and there is no danger of it collapsing.

Coast Guard Academy accepts applications

United States Coast Guard PAO

The U.S. Coast Guard Academy is now accepting and processing applications to the Class of 2003. Appointments are tendered solely on the basis of an annual nationwide competition with no congressional nominations or geographical quotas.

Applications must be submitted to the Director of Admissions prior to December 15, 1998. Candidates must arrange to participate in either the SAT I or ACT prior to or including the December 1998 administration.

Appointments are based on the candidate's high school record, performance on either the SAT I or ACT, and leadership potential as demonstrated by participation in high school activities, community service and part-time employment. Most successful candidates rank in the top quarter of their high school class and have demonstrated proficiency in both mathematical and applied science.

Candidates must be unmarried at the time of the appointment, have no legal obligations, and must have reached the age of 17 but not 23 by July 1, 1999. Candidates must be assured of high school graduation by June 30, 1999.

Coast Guard cadets obtain an excellent undergraduate education at no personal expense. In addition, they receive pay and allowances for living expenses. The Academy curriculum emphasizes engineering and science, leads to a Bachelor of Science degree, and establishes a solid foundation for a challenging career. Graduates of the Academy are commissioned as Ensigns in the United States Coast Guard.

The Academy graduate can look forward to a varied, exciting, and demanding career as a regular Coast Guard Officer. Under the Department of Transportation, the Coast Guard performs a variety of missions including search and rescue, maintenance of aids to navigation around the globe, operation of icebreakers, enforcement of maritime law, boating safety, and marine environmental protection. Selected officers may pursue further postgraduate education in such fields as aviation, business administration, electronics, engineering, law, and oceanography.

To obtain an application or further information write: Director of Admissions, U. S. Coast Guard Academy, 31 Mohegan Avenue, New London, CT 06320; or call 1 (800) 883-8724.

Information provides new aspect on bats

Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning is home to seven known species of insectivorous bats which can be extremely beneficial to humans.

These bats eat pest species of insects such as mosquitoes and moths. There are no bats in the U.S. which feed on blood.

In the Fort Benning area, the most frequently seen bats are the twilight bat (Nycticeius Humeralis) and the Mexican free-tailed bat (Tadarida brasiliensis).

A single free-tail bat can eat several thousand mosquitoes each night that it feeds. Although bats provide this benefit to humans, they sometimes are in conflict with humans when they try to set up housekeeping too close.

The twilight bat has a perfect safety record, and even freetailed bats are far safer than having a dog in a neighborhood. But bats are wild animals and can carry diseases, so adults and children should leave bats alone, just as we learn to leave bees, fire ants and unfamiliar dogs alone.

The sound and odor that bats produce when living in large colonies can be offensive to most people. Several types of buildings on Fort Benning are frequently used by bats for shelter and raising their young. Many older structures such as the cuartels and housing units in the "Iron Triangle" have Spanish style clay tile roofs which provide shelter for bats. In most of these housing units, the bats only inhabit the spaces between the tiles and the solid roof. They rarely cause a conflict by entering the living space.

In the cuartels, the bats sometimes find a way into the attic spaces through cracks and loose boards. These spaces provide shelter from the temperature extremes since the heating and cooling permeate the attic spaces. Buildings which are single story structures rarely make a good home for bats since they must drop from about 14 feet high to begin flight.

Bats have a different flight mechanism than birds which requires the bat to drop this distance to fly.

Some species of bats use loose tree bark, bridges and abandoned structures for shelter, but human dwellings can be much more attractive, especially to females about to give birth.

Bats have one or two "pups" each year, depending on the species of bat. The young bats are incapable of flight for the first several weeks of life and depend on the mother for milk.

Bats are protected by state law as a "non-game" species, which means that they may not be indiscriminately killed or harmed. "Exclusion" is the term used when bats are professionally and legally removed from a space for the safety of humans and the bats.

Removing bats from inhabited structures can only be accomplished during certain times of the year. The best time to begin the exclusion process is in the spring after they resume feeding activities, but before their pups are born. When they are ready to give birth, the exclusion process must cease until the newborn pups can forage on their own. The exclusion process may begin again in late summer and last until the first frost.

Bats are dormant in the southeast during the winter, but they do not hibernate in the true sense of the word. They may emerge on warm evenings as late as December.

Bat activity begins in the spring when there is a warming trend of several warm afternoons in a row and when overnight temperatures remain above 60 degrees.

Bats show a high degree of site fidelity, that is, they often use the same roost site for their entire life. Bats can be quite determined to gain access after they have been excluded and only need a hole about the size of a dime to enter a structure. This is the reason it can be a difficult and long-term project to totally have a successful exclusion process once they have established residence.

The best method for controlling bats is to ensure all routes of entry are blocked. To report places where bats might enter the home or building, call the DPW customer service at 545-2135.

Residents in Davis Hills or Bouton Heights can call Building Service International (BSI) at 689-5400 and for residents in Perkins Place or McGraw Manor call BSI at 689-1773.

To obtain more information about bats call the DPW Natural Resources Management Branch at 544-7319, 544-6206 or 544-6120 during the hours of 7:45 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. Monday through Friday.

If you have any questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Legal Assistance Office

Many Soldiers who deploy to the area formerly known as Yugoslavia have tax questions about their service there.

Since November 21, 1995, this area has been designated as a "qualified duty hazardous area" by the Military Tax Relief Act. It extends favorable tax treatment to these areas in the same way that combat zone areas have been treated by the tax laws.

Active, reserve and support personnel deployed overseas in these areas get full benefits; those who are in support of these areas, but are not assigned in the qualified duty hazardous areas, qualify for limited benefits.

Two major benefits are discussed here: exclusion of military pay and extension of deadlines for filing tax documents. Reserve and active personnel deployed outside the U.S. to "back up" troops sent to the hazardous duty area can use the extension provisions, but do not qualify for income exclusion. Income exclusion is complete for all enlisted personnel and warrant officers while commissioned officers pay exclusion is limited, but only at the highest pay levels.

Excluded Income: When income is excluded, the money is paid to the Soldier, but is not counted as W-2 income on the tax forms prepared by the Finance Center. Most State tax authorities also give the tax break. Some types of military pay exempt from taxation:

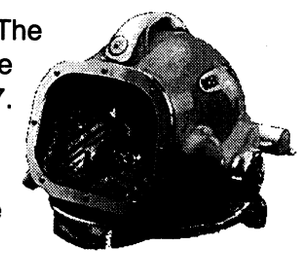
- active duty pay earned in any month serving in the hazardous area;
- a dislocation allowance, if the move begins or ends in a month in which the Soldier serves in the hazardous area;
- reenlistment bonuses if the reenlistment or extension occurs in a month the Soldier is in a hazardous area; and
- pay for accrued leave earned in any month of service in a hazardous area.

Pay benefits may extend to personnel supporting the hazardous area who are assigned outside of it, if they are classified as in direct support of military operations. Also included are personnel who are hospitalized as a result of service in the hazardous area. Finance is the agency responsible for administering pay matters. Any errors in the W-2 must be referred to finance for correction before submitting income taxes for the period of deployment.

Extension of Deadlines: This part of the law is intended to make sure that military personnel are not penalized on taxes for serving overseas. For qualified personnel, the Act extends the deadlines for taking care of a number of types of tax business, including:

- filing income, estate or gift taxes;
- paying income, estate or gift taxes, except employment taxes and withholding;
- filing a claim for refund or credit of any tax;
- bringing suit for any claim for credit or refund;
- making a qualified IRA contribution; and
- postponing IRS enforcement actions, such as collecting taxes for prior years.

Obviously, this is a valuable benefit that stops all IRS action until the extension period is up. It lasts for at least 180 days after the taxpayer leaves the hazardous duty area, or completes a continuous hospitalization for injury incurred in the area and must be individually calculated in each case.



If the taxpayer owes money, he can use this time to pay the tax interest-free, because interest on IRS debts is frozen during the period.

For information or assistance in this and other tax matters, contact the Legal Assistance Office for an appointment, at (706) 545-3282. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, Building 5, Main Post.

Relationship with God takes top priority

Chaplain (Capt.) Kip McKee
1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., ITB

God has set high standards for his children. God demands that he be the number one priority in our life.

reflections

God has revealed these things to us in his Holy Word. In Deuteronomy 6:4-9 it is written, "Hear O' Israel: The Lord our God is one. Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your strength. These commandments that I give you today are to be upon your hearts. Impress them on your children. Talk about them when you sit at home and when you walk along the road, when you lie down and when you get up. Tie them as symbols on your hands and bind them on your foreheads. Write them on the door frames of your houses and on your gates."

We must focus on our relationship with God. Priorities are important to God and he requires the first place in our life. The Scripture states that we are to "Love the Lord Our God with all of our heart." When you put your heart into something that means you give your all.

God commands us to serve him at all costs. Our faith will be tested in some trying situations, but if we depend on his power and grace we will be victorious in the end.

When we love God with all of our heart we are brought into closer communion with our Heavenly Father and he will lead into the ways of righteousness.

Next, God's Word instructs us to love God with all of our soul. What is our soul? The Holman Bible Dictionary defines the soul as, "The vital existence of a human being."

Our souls lie at the very core of our being. God wants the innermost parts of us to be committed to serving him as our first priority. Therefore we must seek to serve him with all of our soul. We need to know that God knows everything about us. He knows our strong points and our weaknesses. God is willing to help us overcome our weaknesses if we are willing to place our lives fully in his hands.

Then we are instructed to love the Lord our God with all of our strength. We only have a limited supply of time and energy. God requires us to give our first priority in our time and energy to him. That means that we must invest our time in the things of God.

We all need to do certain things each day and at the top of our list should be to spend a portion of time with God. God wants us to read his Holy Scriptures and to pray to him. We need to take the time to meditate on the blessings God has given us and ask for his divine guidance in our lives.

God is available to us at all times. The question is will we choose to follow his commands and invest our physical and mental strength for his Kingdom or will we choose to disobey God.

At the end of this passage, God instructs us to pass on our faith in him to our children and to speak about these matters in our daily lives.

The most important thing parents can do for their children is to lead them in to a proper relationship with God. The best way to do this is to live for God each day and to share your faith often. The children will learn from our example.

In closing, I would ask you to examine this passage, Deuteronomy 6:4-9, for yourself and then evaluate your relationship with God. Is God the first priority in your life? This is a question that we each must answer for ourselves. We must ensure that God is number one in every respect. Always remember, God loves you.

Panther Olympics

Soldiers take break from work for day of sports

Susie Kim
Bayonet correspondent

To get relief from the grueling heat, spectators found shelter in the shade, while participants found little relief from the sweat that adorned their body.

Another typical RedStixx game? No, actually, it was the Panther Olympics.

The Panther Olympics is an annual event, which is sponsored by the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). This year the event was at Uchee Creek.

It is an organization day for the unit, but what makes it different is that it includes sports competition, said Lt. Col David J. Styles, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. commander.

"The purpose of this day is to give the Soldiers a day away from the work environment that can be quite stressful," said Styles. "It brings unit cohesion and boosts the Soldiers' morale."

The smell of hot dogs and hamburgers roasting on an open fire wafted through the air and the usual uniforms were discarded for T-shirts and shorts.

Family members were included in this event because the unit believes that spending time with the family is a very important, Styles said.

Some of the games included volleyball, horseshoes, home run derby and basketball. The children were also included in the competition.

Lisa Ishop, a family member, coordinated the children's events such as an egg race, water balloon toss.

Another attraction for the families and Soldiers was the dunking booth, which provided relief from the sun, Styles said.

"I was the first person to be on the dunking booth and it was really cold this morning," Styles said. "Now the children are more than willing to play in it."

To coordinate the event, the unit did what it does best: organize and delegate responsibilities. Each company had to provide equipment for the sports events, a referee and a team to compete in the sports events, Styles said.

According to 2nd Lt. Jason B. Periatt, coordinator of the Panther Olympics, everyone contributed to the event and it brought unit cohesion which is what he hoped for.

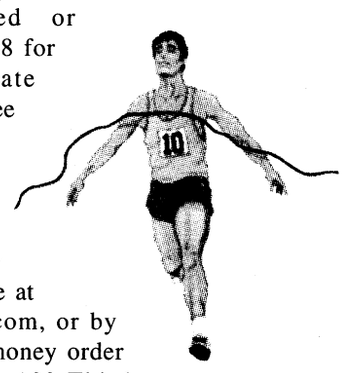
"Companies C and D just came back from Kuwait," Periatt said. "It was nice to have this day to bring the unit back together."

Runners prepare for upcoming Army Ten-Miler

Army News Service

The 14th Annual Army Ten-Miler will be held at 8 a.m. Oct. 11 at the Pentagon where the start and finish lines will be established.

The Fort Benning Sports Branch, in conjunction with the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, will be conducting a qualifier to select a male and female team to compete in the race. The qualifier is scheduled is scheduled for 7:30 a.m. Aug. 9 at Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill. Fort Benning team members must be active duty personnel.



The top five finishers in each division will qualify to compete at the Army Ten-Miler.

For more information about the Fort Benning qualifier, call Danny McMillian at 545-6386.

The Army Ten-Miler, the largest 10-mile race in the United States, is hosted by the U.S. Army Military District of Washington and the Association of the U.S. Army. More than 9,000 runners completed the 1997 race and more than 11,000 registered.

Race officials said the new course is wider and better designed to meet the growing number of runners. The flat, fast USA Track and Field certified course leaves the Pentagon, crosses the Memorial Bridge, passes the Lincoln, Korean War, Roosevelt, and Jefferson memorials, the Washington Monument, the Smithsonian Castle and the U.S. Capitol before crossing the 14th Street Bridge on the way to the finish line.

There is a $20 registration fee if postmarked or submitted by Sept. 18 for all runners. (Late registration is $25. See late registration section below.)

Individuals may register online by going to the Army Ten-Miler Home Page at www.armytenmiler.com, or by mailing a check or money order to: Army Ten-Miler, 103 Third Ave, Building 48, Fort McNair, D.C. 20319-5058.

Teams may not register online. Team registration must be mailed to the above address and must be postmarked by Sept. 18. There is no additional charge for teams.

Teams will consist of no more than eight and no less than four runners. A team's time will be based on the combined average of the team's best four running times.

The team divisions are: open men, open women, mixed open, masters men, masters women, mixed masters, active duty military open men, active duty military open women, active duty military open mixed, active duty military masters men, active duty military masters women, National Guard, reserve, government agency, corporate (to include AUSA sustaining and corporate members), military academy, ROTC and all comers.

For the 12th consecutive year, the revolving Commander's Cup trophy will be awarded to the top military team (men and women) in the active Army, National Guard, reserve, ROTC and military academy divisions.

In 1997, the Fort Carson Men's Team, Fort Carson, Colo., with a time of 3:27:44, and the Fort Bragg Women's Team No. 2, Fort Bragg, N.C., with a time of 4:23:43, won the Commander's Cup.

All runners will receive a newly-designed, six-color, long-sleeved Ten-Miler T-shirt.

At the race's conclusion, there will be a ceremony where awards will be presented to the winners to include: the overall winners (male and female), the masters winners (male and female), the wheelchair winners (male and female), the top finishers (male and female) in each award category, the top teams in each division, plus additional special awards.

For additional race information or to receive an Army Ten-Miler brochure, write to: Army Ten-Miler, 103 Third Ave., Building 48, Fort McNair, Washington, D.C. 20319-5058; call: (202) 685-3361, DSN 325-3361; fax: (202) 685-3382, DSN 325-3382.

Race information is also available on the Army Ten-Miler Home Page: www.armytenmiler.com, and on the AUSA Home Page (Annual Meeting) at: www.ausa.org.

Fort Benning Soldier wins Daddy's Day 5K

U.S. Army School of the Americas

John Detro, a physician's assistant with the 3rd Brigade 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), scorched the competition during the 2nd annual "Daddy's Day" 5-K Dash with a 15:45 first place finish in Columbus June 21.

Detro led from the start, hitting the turnaround mark in 8:03 and turned a negative split of 7:40 on the second half of the flat, fast course that had a small incline near the turnaround point.

More than 70 runners participated in the race, which started behind the Columbus Ironworks and ran south towards Fort Benning along the scenic Riverwalk.

Besides Detro, several other Fort Benning Soldiers participated in the race.

Hector Clemente of the U.S. Army School of the Americas finished fourth overall with a time of 18:11.

Jay Brooke, Ranger Training Brigade, finished fifth overall and first in the 25-29 age group with a time of 18:28.

Danny McMillian, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, finished sixth overall and first in the 30-34 age group with a time of 18:30.

Marylin Pagan-Seda, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, USARSA, finished with a time of 26:43.

The proceeds of the race will benefit community projects for the needy of Columbus.

Special Education

Fort Benning revamps program for children with disabilities

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

When the words "special education" are heard, most people probably think of children in wheelchairs or with physical disabilities. That stereotype has long since been forgotten in schools around the country, especially those on Fort Benning.

In schools here, special education incorporates students who are learning and physically impaired, emotionally disturbed, unable to communicate, and developmentally delayed.

The goal of special education, said Tommye Woods, director of special education, is to mesh these students into the regular classroom.

"We hope that you would go into a classroom and have a hard time trying to find the special education student," Woods said.

The special education program consists of 22 staff members. There are six speech and language pathologists, 14 special education teachers and two preschool special education teachers. Two of the special education teaching slots are to be filled this upcoming school year.

"Special education services and speech services are available in all seven schools," Woods said.

Woods added the service tries to serve the children as much as possible.

"As you can imagine, many, many kids transfer in from other places and that's quite a challenge to accommodate," Woods explained. "All of the children have a label or category — they have to do that in order to make them eligible for services."

How they go on to serve the students is very individualized. Each student has an Individual Education Program, which is a plan specifically for that student.

"What we're trying to do is not immediately move that child towards special education; that isn't the goal — the goal is can we accommodate that child without ever having to put a label on them," Woods said.

For instance, if a child is having difficulty with reading, and the teacher hasn't seen a lot of progress, first the teacher might send them to remedial reading. If that child is still having difficulty, the teacher might call a team together.

At that point, the child's vision and hearing will be tested to rule that out as the cause of the problem. They will then look at the strategies that the teacher is using, because that strategy might work for every other student but that one. The teacher is equipped with a strategy notebook and can try different strategies to find one that works.

If that does not solve the problem, the student is then referred for educational and psychoeducational testing after meeting with parents. After the testing, the parents come back and the test results are discussed.

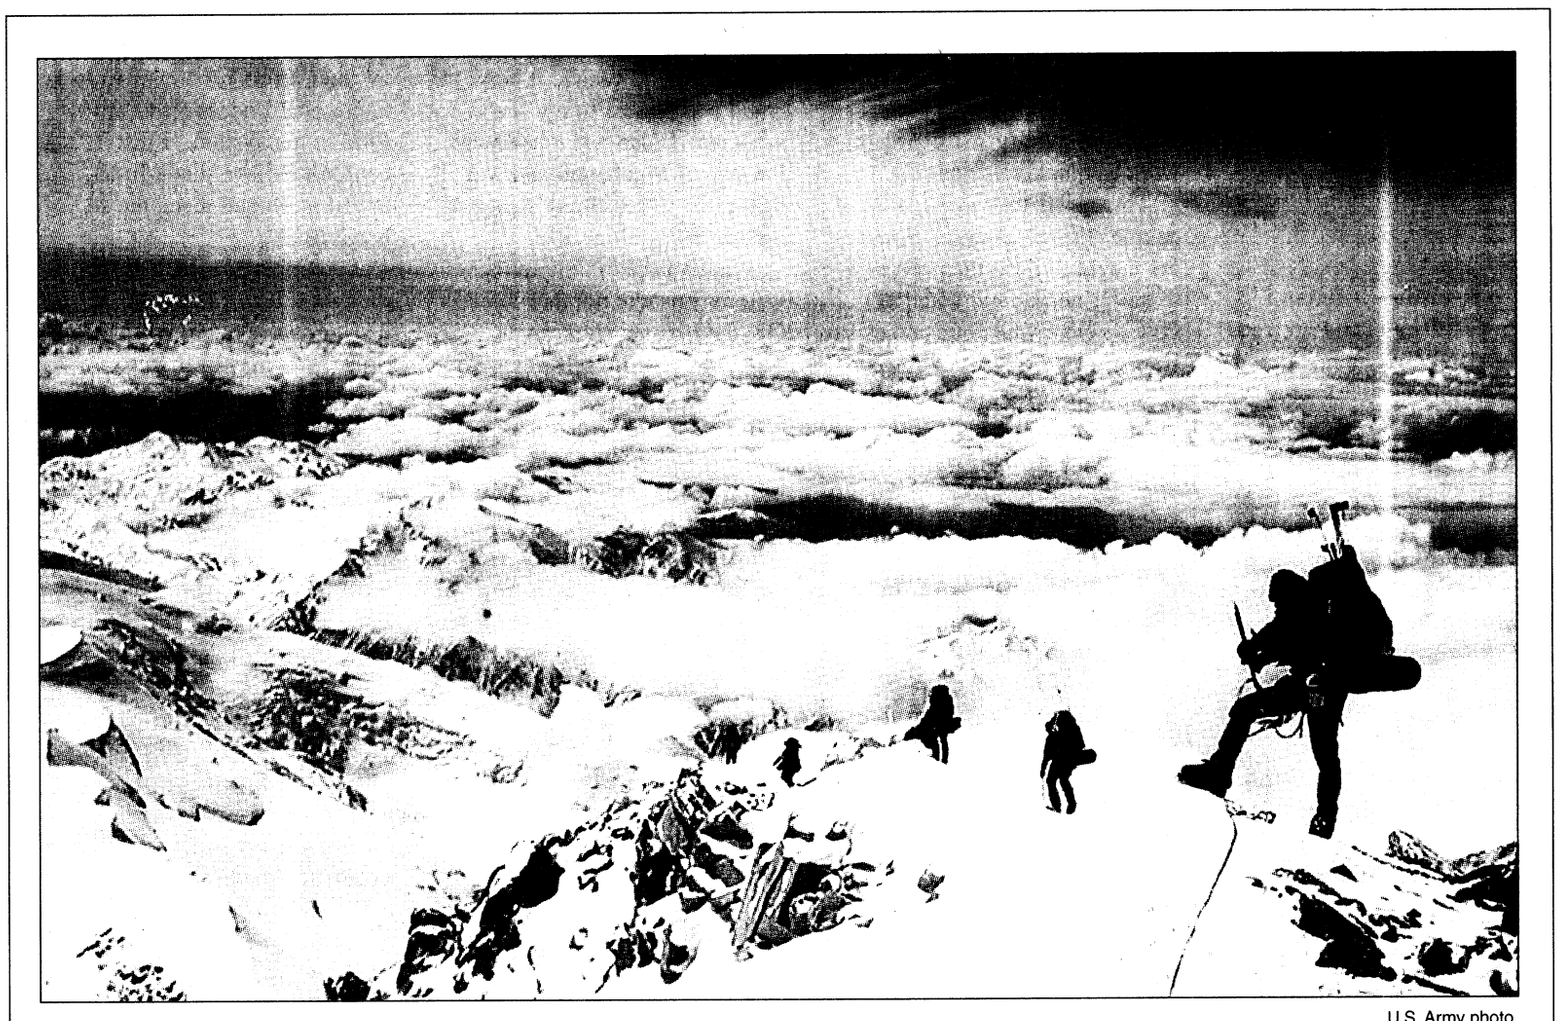
"From there, we ask; what can we do?" Woods explained. "Because we tested doesn't automatically mean the student is eligible. A lot of times what it does is give us more strategies and we learn a little more about the student."

The next step is how to deliver that service. It may be checking with the student every week to monitor in the classroom to placing students in a self-contained model, where the student spends most of their time in special education.

"The goal is not to see how many students we can put in special education — the goal is how many students we can make successful in the regular classroom," Woods said.

Rather than pull the students from their classroom, a special education teacher joins and assists the student along with the regular classroom teacher.t

"The beauty of it," Woods said, "is that after working with the special education teacher, the regular classroom teacher picks up different strategies for further use in the classroom with the student."



"The regular teacher may lecture and the special education teacher jots down salient points. Planning is critical for both teachers," Woods said.

For preschoolers, special education takes place directly in the classroom. The occupational therapist, physical therapist and speech pathologist come directly into the classroom.

"For 3- and 4-year olds, their natural environment is play. While the child is playing, the speech pathologist will be working on vocabulary while the child is engaged in play. What we do in special education has to relate back to regular education," Woods explained.

For the upcoming school year, Woods said the goals include more inclusive teaching and more technology.

The ultimate goal, though, is to provide special education students with the services they need while trying as much as possible to keep them within the mainstream of the school.

House speaker visits Battle Lab, views technology

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

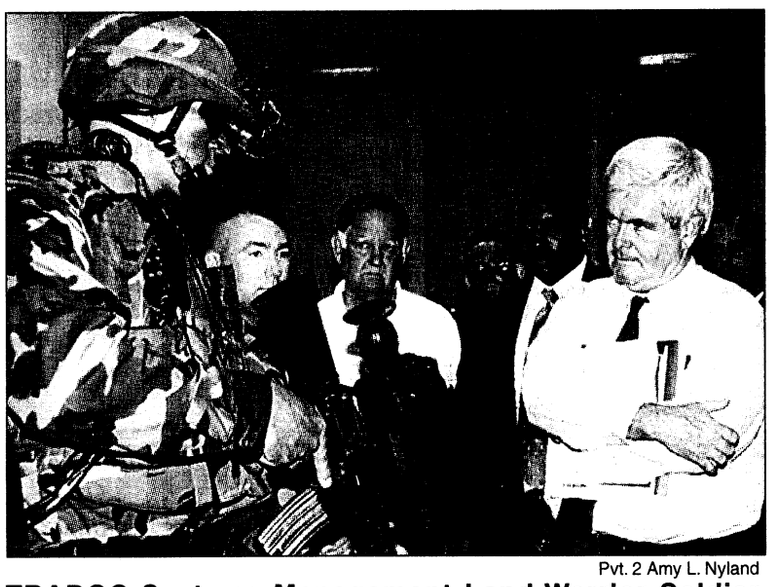
Speaker of the House of Representatives Newt Gingrich visited Fort Benning July 10 to tour the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab and view the latest advances in warfighting technology.

Gingrich came to Columbus to speak at an awards banquet, but made a detour to Fort Benning's Battle Lab to observe demonstrations of the Land Warrior Fighting System and other research projects.

Gingrich said he has been following the revolution of Infantry doctrine for about 15 years and that it is always interesting coming back to Fort Benning.

He said he supports the Battle Lab and what it's working towards.

"I think the Infantry keeps growing in the right direction," Gingrich said. "I think the way they are trying to bring in the information age and make sure we are still able to do our job all over the world is remarkably impressive."



Gingrich said the new technology doesn't necessarily save money, but it does save lives.

"If we can have the right investments in the right technologies and the right training programs, which is a part of why Fort Benning is so important, then I think we will get the job done faster with fewer losses of American lives," Gingrich said.

Gingrich added that one of the keys to staying at peace is for the world to decide the United States is too strong to fight.

He said by continuing advanced development, in about five or 10 years, Soldiers will have technology that no one else in the world has.

"I think the trick here is for America to always be better trained and better equipped than any of our competitors," Gingrich said.

TRADOC Systems Management Land Warrior Soldier Spc. John Petree, left, demonstrates new warfighting technology for Newt Gingrich.

However, Gingrich said there will never be a magic era when a robot replaces people. He said it's not the weapon that will win the war, but the quality of the Soldier.

"The right people with the right training and equipment will always defeat those who have less of any of those three and I think we need to keep a balanced approach," Gingrich said.

If it ain't raining ...

Post relies on squadron for weather forecasts

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

The weather is something people usually consider as a contributing element to weekend fun in the sun. The weatherman on the news is usually the one people turn to when they have big plans ahead.

Not many think of the people who work behind the scenes, manning equipment around the clock to ensure the safety of those who rely on the weather to travel in planes and to keep safe those who are exposed to the outside elements when conducting training exercises.

"Our largest mission here, other than aviation, is the safety of personnel and resources," said Air Force Master Sgt. Robert Dempsey, 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, Flight C.

Fort Benning consists of 186,000 acres of land that Soldiers train on. For this reason it is imperative the weather station keep training units informed of weather conditions that could be potential hazardous for Soldiers.

Cloud cover must be within a certain height and winds must not blow harder than a certain speed in order for airborne students to conduct jumps safely, Dempsey said.

Although the weather station at Lawson Army Airfield does not make any operational decisions, they are there to advise. Airborne training relies on the information they relay to the pilots.

Not only does the airborne school depend on weather information to train, units in training at the ranges and in the field are also affected by the results the weather station relays.

The weather station keeps the post informed on the weather for a variety of situations. Everything from what flag flies in front of Infantry Hall to decisions if training will continue for the day come from the calculations the Airmen relay to the post.

"Lightning is a big problem here," Dempsey said. "Lightning has struck on ranges and other training areas around post. Fortunately no one has been killed by the lightning."

Fort Benning has three lightning detection devices attached to the lightning detection system. The lightning detection system alerts the weather station of lightning activity.

Not only is putting out a weather advisory important, canceling it is just as imperative.

The post has a sensor system at the airfield. All sensors that detect weather elements except for the lightning devices are posted on the runways.

Weather observers are sitting by watching for any change in the weather around the clock to alert units of any changes in the weather.

"Observers are our key personnel," Dempsey said.

Using computerized equipment and sensors, the observers and forecasters are able to relay weather conditions all over the world.

The weather station uses the Doppler Radar from Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala. and also receives information from Offutt Air Force Base, Air Force weather agency, Neb. and Tinker Air Force Base, Okla.

"The Doppler Radar is located at Maxwell Air Force Base so we actually get a better reading without having one here." Dempsey said. "When a storm gets closer to the radar, they are harder to read. It is easier to give a weather forecast for a pilot traveling half way across the world than to give surface weather more than 10 days in advance."

"The weather above the clouds is pretty much unchanging unlike the weather on the ground which is always changing," Dempsey said.

The general ground weather can be forecasted accurately from seven to 10 days in advance while the flight weather can be forecasted up to 45 days in advance.

The weather station is an essential asset to the operations of the post. Not only do they let the residents of the post know what to expect for the weekend, but they help in the safe training of Soldiers.

Beat the heat

Drink plenty of water to prevent heat injuries

Pfc. Tricia Schipmann
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

When I was in basic training, one of the drill sergeants liked to play this game. He'd yell, "Drink water!" and like good little privates, we'd yell, "Beat the heat, drill sergeant, beat the heat!"

We'd then slurp from our canteens until we barely noticed the foul taste left by a hundred privates before us. No matter how busy we were or how cool the weather was outside, we could always count on hearing those two words.

So where was Drill Sergeant Wagoner last week when I stood on the M-16 range all day? Probably at home somewhere doing flutter-kicks for fun.

And so, I was left with the simple task of deciding on my own when I was thirsty. Nothing too taxing there, right? Wrong.

The next 12 hours would prove to teach me a lesson.

Looking back on the day, it's plain to see where I went wrong. I was in a hurry. I had scripts to write, stories to edit and a TV show to prepare.

Spending the day at the range was an inconvenience to say the least. I wanted to qualify and get back to work as quickly as possible.

This is where, I think, a lot of people get into trouble. Soldiers are taught to push themselves — to go farther, do more and not give up even when our bodies say stop.

So, with a few, short water breaks spread throughout the day, I was planning my escape by 2 p.m. By then, I was tired, hungry and I was thirsty. In other words, it was too late. I had already reserved a one-way ticket to Dehydration Nation.

I began feeling dizzy and a little sick to my stomach. My NCOIC noticed that I had stopped sweating and reasoning that that was probably not a good thing, went to get a combat lifesaver.

This is when I made my second mistake. I insisted that I would be fine and that I didn't need the IV that was recommended. It wasn't so much that I was trying to keep up my macho image, because I was certain I never had one. It was more that I didn't want anyone making a fuss over me.

So, I told everyone I felt fine and just wanted to go home and lie down.

By the time I made it home, I could add nausea to my list of ailments. I also had a headache the size of Manhattan and was beginning to see funny shadows around everything.

What a perfect time to make way for mistake number three. OK, four if you count that I actually drove myself home like this.

It crossed my mind that perhaps I should go to the hospital and get that IV after all. However, since there's not a lot of things I hate more than trips to the hospital, I decided I'd be fine if only I could rest a little longer.

Even though I was honestly beginning to consider the possibility that I may shrivel up like a week-old prune and die right there in my bed, I didn't see my chances as being too much better at the hospital.

Well, it turned out that I had no choice in the matter. When my husband noted that I was unable to stand up on my own, he called an ambulance.

By the time I got to the hospital that evening, I was confused and unable to recite with certainty my own social security number. Clearly I had waited too long before seeking treatment.

A few hours and one glorious IV later, I felt good enough to go home. All I needed was a little fluid in my system. I just couldn't believe that a little dehydration had made me so horribly ill.

Like most people, I never thought it was a big deal. If you don't drink enough water, you get tired. You may even get a headache. But take it from me, it is so much worse than that!

I've broken bones and that really hurts. I've given birth to an 11-pound, 5-ounce child, which was no block party. But what really kicked my butt was this dehydration stuff!

In the end, I didn't qualify at the range. I didn't write my scripts, edit my stories or finish any of the work I'd been in such a hurry to complete.

Also, I learned you can't be in too big a hurry to take care of yourself. And besides, the Army really can't afford to pay someone to follow you around reminding you to drink water all the time.

Common sense says protect self from sun

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

Common sense isn't a common commodity these days. The other day I was driving around looking for an interesting subject to photograph for the paper.

What I saw instead continues to amaze me — a woman sunning herself and her infant at the crowded O'Club pool. From my vantage point, inside my air-conditioned car, the baby couldn't have been more than 5 months old and was as red as a cherry tomato sitting in the crook of the mother's leg.

The temperature on this day was 90 and it wasn't yet 3 p.m. What was this woman thinking?

I understand that some people want to look like dried and peeling leather and I say to each their own; however, a baby's tender skin shouldn't be subjected to the sun's harshness.

Sunburns hurt. Yes, I know this a no brainer but sometimes it takes a while for some to get it.

Pediatricians recommend keeping infants 6 months and younger in the shade and avoid the use of sunscreen because their skin isn't developed enough to handle the chemicals in the sunscreen.

Another way to keep babies sheltered from the sun is to plop a hat on their heads and clothe them in something lightweight.

Children younger than 2 cannot regulate body heat as efficiently as older children and adults. Therefore, they can be prone to heat illness and their vocabularies don't include the words heat exhaustion or heatstroke.

Children often need adults to remind them to play in the shade and to drink plenty of water.

Studies are now suggesting that people who suffered from blistering sunburns as children or teenagers are at risk for melanoma skin cancer.

Some ways to avoid sunburns include using lots and lots of sunblock and keeping out of the sun from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. when the sun's rays are strongest. But this means using two little words — common sense.

Common sense says when it's hot, stay out of the sun.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller wanted to know why small children can't wear floaties while in the Custer Terrace Pool if they are in the shallow end.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

The sports director explained that there are safety concerns associated with inflatable flotation devices and regulations that preclude using them (TB Med 575, USAIC 40.5 and a memorandum dated Aug. 8, 1991). He recommended the caller use a Coast Guard approved flotation device, which is authorized in federal government facilities

Call: The caller said the restroom facilities at Uchee Creek need to be renovated to accommodate the handicapped in wheelchairs.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

The chief of the Recreation Division said that the Uchee Creek Campground and Marina has three bathrooms that are equipped for the handicapped. He said the only latrine that is not equipped for the handicapped is the one outside the campground. The Country Store latrines can also accommodate the handicapped. The lodge latrine will be renovated in fiscal 1999.

Call: The caller said the shuttle bus drivers are asking riders to show ID cards, but ID cards were not checked in the past.

Directorate of Logistics response:

The acting chief of the Transportation Division of DOL said the requirement for passengers to show ID cards to ride the military shuttle buses has been suspended.

Community member thanks Soldier for help

My daughter and I were traveling on I-185 when suddenly there was an explosion. We'd had a blowout. With no cellular phone or emergency call box in sight with cars flying by, I had not a clue what I should do.

Then, a "lone" Fort Benning Soldier (recognizable by his crew cut) emerged from a black Ford with Georgia license plate.

Bill changed my tire then followed us for miles to make certain we were OK. He refused any money adding that if his mother back in Indiana had car trouble, he hoped someone would stop to help her.

Thank you, Bill, your mother for your early training and Fort Benning for your training as a Soldier and gentleman. You were a Good Samaritan.

1998 U.S. ARMY SOLDIER SHOW

Soldiers set to perform at Sand Hill Theater

Harriet Rice
Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va —What if?

What if you could show the world that the Army is more than spit and polish, crawling through mud, driving tanks, marching for miles, and training for war?

What if those performers are so good they bring cheering, teary-eyed capacity crowds around the world to their feet year after year?

No "what ifs" about it. Each year since 1983, a select group of Soldiers have done exactly that when the U.S. Army Soldier Show comes to town.

The Soldiers will perform on Fort Benning at 7 p.m. July 24 at the Sand Hill Theater. This performance will be open to all military and their family members as well as Department of Defense civilians and their family members. Two performances will be held at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. July 25 at the Sand Hill Theater for Soldiers of the Infantry Training Brigade. A single performance will also be held at 2 p.m. July 26 for Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers.

For more information, call Sally Ghent, directorate of community activities, community recreation division.

The 27-member cast and crew of the 1998 United States Army Soldier Show cast not only celebrate the show's 15th anniversary, but they also carry on an 80-year tradition of "entertainment for the Soldier, by the Soldier."

That tradition was established by a World War I Soldier, Sgt. Israel Beilin, a Russian immigrant to New York whose first musical in 1918, Yip Yip Yaphank, provided rallying and rousing patriotic music for Soldiers and civilians alike.

This year's show pays tribute to that Congressional Gold Medal winner known to us as Irving Berlin. The show's theme, "What If?" pays tribute to Soldiers' dreams come true.

"The theme revolves around ''what if you could be all you can be'?" explained Ron Smith, the show's artistic director. "Reba McEntire did the song What If for the Salvation Army as a fund-raiser over the past Christmas season. The song is currently on the charts as a hit single."

Once in the Army, Smith served as choreographer for the Heidelberg-based U.S. Army Europe Soldiers' Chorus and was selected for the 1991, 1992 and 1995 Army Soldier Shows before being selected as fourth artistic director of the modern Soldier Show.

To mark the anniversary, Smith is taking musical elements from shows of the past two decades, including remembrances of World Wars I and II.

"We're doing two songs from the 1984 show: God Bless America, which Irving Berlin wrote as the finale for Yip Yip Yaphank and This is the Army written by Richard M. Cohan for the 1943 stage show "This is the Army."

The show will also include more current hits like My Heart Will Go On from Titanic. "I can't think of a truer way to describe a Soldier who's out there performing a mission separated from his or her family," said Smith.

No Soldier Show would be complete without its Broadway-style production numbers. Smith promises a "huge spectacle"

"We're doing a section dedicated to kitchen police that will involve elements of Bring in Da Noise, Bring in Da Funk from Broadway, Stomp from off-Broadway, and a World War I song We're on KP!"

DNA 'fingerprints' enable identification

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

ROCKVILLE, Md. — Ten minutes by car from this Washington suburb is a deep-freeze warehouse containing foolproof identifications of more than a million Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines.

In the freezer reside the DNA "fingerprints" of nearly two-thirds of all active duty and reserve component service members. By the turn of the century, everyone in uniform will have a DNA card on file.

"Each card holds two drops of blood that form stains about the size of 50-cent pieces," said Air Force Dr. (Col.) Vernon Armbrustmacher. "That's enough to establish the DNA identification. We keep the specimens in vacuum-sealed envelopes with a desiccant to keep them dry, and freeze them at minus 20 degrees Celsius (minus 4 degrees Fahrenheit)."

The Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, set up the DNA registry and repository shortly after Desert Storm. Defense leaders wanted a better means of identifying human remains than fingerprints and dental records.

"With battlefield casualties, bodies don't always produce fingerprints or dental information," said Armbrustmacher, chief deputy medical examiner for the Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory in Rockville. "Sometimes, we may have fingerprints and teeth with the body but can't find the records."

Every servicemember gets fingerprinted during induction. The FBI keeps the prints in a special file, but a third of them aren't usable, because they are smeared or incomplete in some way, according to Armbrustmacher. The FBI discards those prints. Neither are dental records fully reliable references, especially if the individual has no fillings.

Although it still uses fingerprints and dental records, DoD wanted a surer thing and settled on the emerging science of DNA fingerprinting.

The DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) found in the nucleus of every human cell contains unique genetic code — it's who you are. Medical examiners can draw nuclear DNA samples from any part of the body. The only requirements are that the body or body part be reasonably "fresh," or at least well preserved. Even severely burned bodies often will yield DNA, Armbrustmacher said.

For older remains or those damaged by extreme heat, moisture or other environmental factors, researchers also can draw DNA from mitochondrion, which are tiny rod-like structures outside the cell nucleus. Most recently, mitochondrial DNA, or mtDNA, identified Air Force 1st Lt. Michael Blassie's remains as those in the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier of the Vietnam War at Arlington (Va.) National Cemetery.

"Mitochondrial DNA is remarkably preserved under adverse conditions and for longer periods of time," Armbrustmacher said. "You have many copies of mtDNA in a given cell. In a nuclear DNA, you basically have one copy, and it degrades rapidly (upon a person's death)."

Since the DNA registry began in June 1992, DoD has collected blood specimens from more than 1.2 million service members. The majority of the collections occur when recruits arrive at induction centers.

For members in uniform when collections began, a Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System database "window" shows whether or not they've provided DNA samples. Their DEERS records are checked when they seek care at a military medical facility, and a specimen is collected if they haven't already provided one.

A third opportunity to collect DNA specimens comes during deployment queues. "Anyone in that group deploying, even if it's just for training, will be checked, and if necessary, sent to the clinic," the colonel said.

Specimens can be collected anytime blood is drawn for other tests, Armbrustmacher said. If DNA sampling is the only reason for drawing blood, most of the time lab technicians will use a finger stick like the ones used by blood banks.

The DoD DNA Registry collects specimens not only for service members but also for contract employees who may be sent to hostile areas. "We have talked about collecting specimens for family members, but the legalities are different," he said. Instead, he suggested that interested family members contact local hospitals and commercial firms that advertise DNA reference services.

"Sometimes, for example, a former service member will disappear," Armbrustmacher said. "Then, a body will be discovered and the family recalls that we have this DNA file and wants us to help identify the individual as perhaps their missing relative. We'll compare samples of the remains sent to us against our database. If there's no match, we say so, put the cards back and don't release any other identification information.

"This is a very simple program, solely for the identification of remains."

Normally, the registry will retain DNA cards for 50 years, the same length of time military medical records are kept on file. Once you complete your full service obligation, you also can request destruction of your DNA record. The required form and instructions are available from:

Armed Forces Repository of Specimen Samples for the Identification of Remains, 16050 Industrial Drive, Suite 100,
Gaithersburg, MD 20877.

President approves GI bill increase

Armed Forces Information Service

Veterans enrolled in the active duty or reserve component versions of the Montgomery GI Bill will see a 20 percent increase in monthly education payments beginning Oct. 1.

The president signed the legislation June 9, approving the increase in benefits.

The benefit to full-time students will increase from $439.85 monthly to $528 for active duty enrollees with three years' service. Total payments for the 36-month maximum will increase from $15,834 to $19,008. The rate for enrollees with two years' service goes from $357.38 monthly to $429 or an increase from $12,865.68 to $15,444.

Vietnam-era GI Bill enrollees who converted to the Montgomery GI Bill Active Duty Program will see their monthly rates increase to $251 or to a maximum total or $9,036.

Other veterans benefits improved under the law taking effect Oct.1 include:

•A one-time allowance for disabled veterans needing modified controls or wheelchair lifts for an automobile increases to a maximum of $8,000.

•A one-time specialty adapted housing grant for disabled veterans who have lost, or lost the use of, both lower extremities increased to $43,000.

•The special housing adaptation grant for veterans who are blind or have lost the use of both hands increases to $8,250.

•A $50 monthly increase in pensions paid to low income veterans in need of regular aid and attendance.

The law also repeals a 1990 law that permanently ended eligibility for dependency and indemnity compensation for a veteran's survivor who remarries. The pre-1990 policy will allow survivor benefits to be restored if the survivor's remarriage ends.

volunteer of the week

Name: Lori Swanson

Hometown: Murray, KY

Volunteer job title: Family Support Group (FSG) President, 1st Battalion 19th Infantry Regiment

Volunteer organization: Family support group, Multiple Sclerosis walk, Muscular Dystrophy walk, Relay for Life (cancer walk)

Why do you volunteer?
The Lord has blessed me with so many talents, skills and abilities, I feel these gifts are to be used, not wasted.

What do you like about volunteering?
I like interacting with people from all walks of life. I love diversity in group settings. It gives me the opportunity to practice patience and tolerance!

What are your special interests and hobbies? It depends on my mood and the balance in my checking account. I don't have one particular thing I am absolutely devoted to — except my family.

What others say about your contributions.
Mrs. Swanson contributed much more of her time and energy than could have been expected as the FSG president. She can be credited for many of the activities enjoyed by the members of the 1st Bn. 19th Inf. Regt. Her ability to handle many different personalities in group settings is due to her firm but kind manner. She is a great president and supporter of her husband Drill Sgt. Robert Swanson.

Computers help Soldiers

ACAP provides computers for job searches and more

Army Career and Alumni Program

"The ACAP Center offers an added benefit that separating Soldiers may not know about until they start ACAPing," said Chick Eagle, one of Fort Benning's ACAP Center counselors.

"The benefit is to get some hands-on experience and coaching on upgraded computer equipment and software," Eagle said.

"A basic familiarity with computers is becoming more important as a skill needed for employment in any career. Soldiers should be somewhat familiar with the standard computer keyboard, mouse, basic programs and the Internet," Eagle said

The ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza has six computer terminals reserved exclusively for transitioning personnel.

Additionally, each ACAP counselor has an almost identical system to demonstrate programs and applications during coaching sessions.

A total of 12 desktop computer systems are available to support the ACAP process.

The original ACAP management information system, still used today, has WordPerfect 5.1 (does not use the mouse), resume writer, a mini-resume program and direct access to worldwide (hot leads) job announcements.

Recent additions have added Windows 95, MS Word 97, MS Internet Explorer and the Quick and Easy federal job application kit.

A new and useful computer application is Internet access on every computer.

The Internet offers a vast array of information sources for Soldiers and their families throughout the transition process.

According to Eagle, computer terminals are scheduled in advance and are available to separating personnel on active duty currently enrolled in ACAP.

Computer use and other ACAP services continue to be available for 90 days after separation.

For additional information about ACAP eligibility and services, call 545-2308, 545-2309 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Local post chapter awards scholarships

Omega PSI Phi Fraternity

Two Spencer High School students have been named recipients of scholarships for the 1998-99 academic year, courtesy of PI Iota Iota Chapter Omega PSI PhI, Fraternity, Fort Benning Ga.

The recipients are Keenan Bates and Greg Johnson. Bates will attend Howard University in Washington, D.C. and Johnson will attend Morehouse College in Atlanta, Ga.

The scholarships were awarded to both students based on a cumulative grade point average of 3.0 or better, community service efforts and a potential for a career in public service.

Medics compete for expert badge

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Once a year Soldiers who hold positions within the military medical fields train for three weeks to prove their knowledge and their ability to assist other Soldiers in and out of combat with medical emergencies.

The training takes place in two different locations. The first two weeks of training takes place here at Fort Benning, and the last week of training is given at Fort Stewart. The Soldiers run evacuation drills, land navigation exercises and survival exercises, such as nuclear biological chemical warfare (NBC) techniques.

After the Soldiers complete the training conducted at Fort Stewart, testing for the Expert Field Medical Badge (EFMB) begins.

"The training and testing the Soldiers receive is very tough," said Sgt. Adam Lammers, Headquarters and Headquarters Company 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

Soldiers competing for the EFMB must go through a variety of challenges to receive the badge.

Weapons qualification, physical fitness testing, a written exam, 12 - mile roadmarch, cardiovascular pulmonary resuscitation testing and an obstacle course are just a few of the areas the Soldiers must complete to receive the EFMB.

They also are tested in what is called a 'lane', which is a series of tests in a particular area.

Emergency evacuation, emergency medical technician, communication lane, survival, and land navigation lanes also must be passed in order to go home with the EFMB.

During lane training, one person, who is being tested for the EFMB, must take charge of an emergency situation and instruct three others on how to take care of a casualty.

"It is all an individual task," Lammers said. "The Soldiers must know what to do on their own."

The testing is a challenge for the Soldiers, Lammers said.

Even with the knowledge the Soldiers have gained through training it is still a challenge for every Soldier.

"Only 20 to 30 percent of people who go through the testing come back with the EFMB," Lammers said. "Even if they do not receive the badge, this is excellent training."

Soldiers expect a challenge ahead at Fort Stewart. Being able to prove their capability through the EFMB could probably make any seasoned Soldier nervous.

"I am nervous about not bringing the EFMB back with me," said Pfc. Rodolfo Ocasio, HHC, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

"This has been excellent training for me though," Ocasio said, "earning the badge would give me additional confidence in my (medical) skills when I help people and do my job."

Once a Soldier earns the EFMB, the rewards last throughout his career.

The EFMB is a one-time qualification. Once they have earned the EFMB, they will have shown they are an expert in their field, Lammers said.

"It is like the Expert Infantrymen's Badge only medical," Lammers said.

The Soldiers will finish up their final week of training here this week and the challenge will begin for them as they begin testing July 17. They will finish testing with a roadmarch and graduation, which is set for July 25.

Candidates keep cool during LRC

Lois J. Olsen
Bayonet correspondent

It may be hot, but Officer Candidate School (OCS), Phase III, candidates know how to keep cool while training.

During June 28's Leadership Reaction Course (LRC), candidates proved their leadership skills in both land and water exercises.

After course instructors briefed team leaders on their mission, the leader then relayed the exercise's intent to his team members and together the team executed a plan to accomplish the mission.

After completing their water exercises, teams kept cool in the water while conducting their After Action Reviews (AAR).

OCS candidate Fernandel Cornelious from Tupelo, Miss., was one of the Soldiers who performed what is known as the "dying cockroach" in order to get the water out of his boots.

Russi Russev and chief Mladenov Mladen Mihailov, both from the Personnel Policy Department, Ministry of Defense of Bulgaria, were on site with Capt. John Lott and Col. William Poland of the Tennessee National Guard, to observe training.

Bulgaria is the sister state of Tennessee in "Partnership for Peace."

The LRC helps training candidates learn how to handle unusual situations and lead their team members through the problem-solving stages.

In one water exercise, the candidates were tasked with transporting ammunition boxes and a wagon across the water without getting wet. The only tools given to accomplish the mission were several narrow boards.

The teams that removed the wheels from the wagon and transported each across the boards separately were the ones that completed the mission successfully.

June 28 was the second rotation of cadets from OCS, Phase III, to complete the LRC. Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, is providing the standard by which OCS, Phase III, training should be conducted nationally.

The LRC is just one of many stages OCS candidates must perform before being commissioned.

RTB: Rangers face harsh conditions to tame North America's highest mountain

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

Two Soldiers from the 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega, Ga., received an opportunity to climb North America's highest mountain last month during a joint service expedition on Mount McKinley.

Sgt. 1st Class Gregory S. Baker and Staff Sgt. David Blum left Camp Frank D. Merrill May 25 where they joined 11 other servicemembers in Alaska for the journey up the 20,300-foot mountain.

Baker, who is the chief mountaineering instructor for the ranger school, said the climb was part of an annual gathering of the military mountaineering community, which includes Soldiers from the 10th Special Forces Group, Fort Carson, Colo. and Northern Warfare Training Center (NWTC), Fort Greely, Alaska in addition to Marines from Bridgeport, Calif.

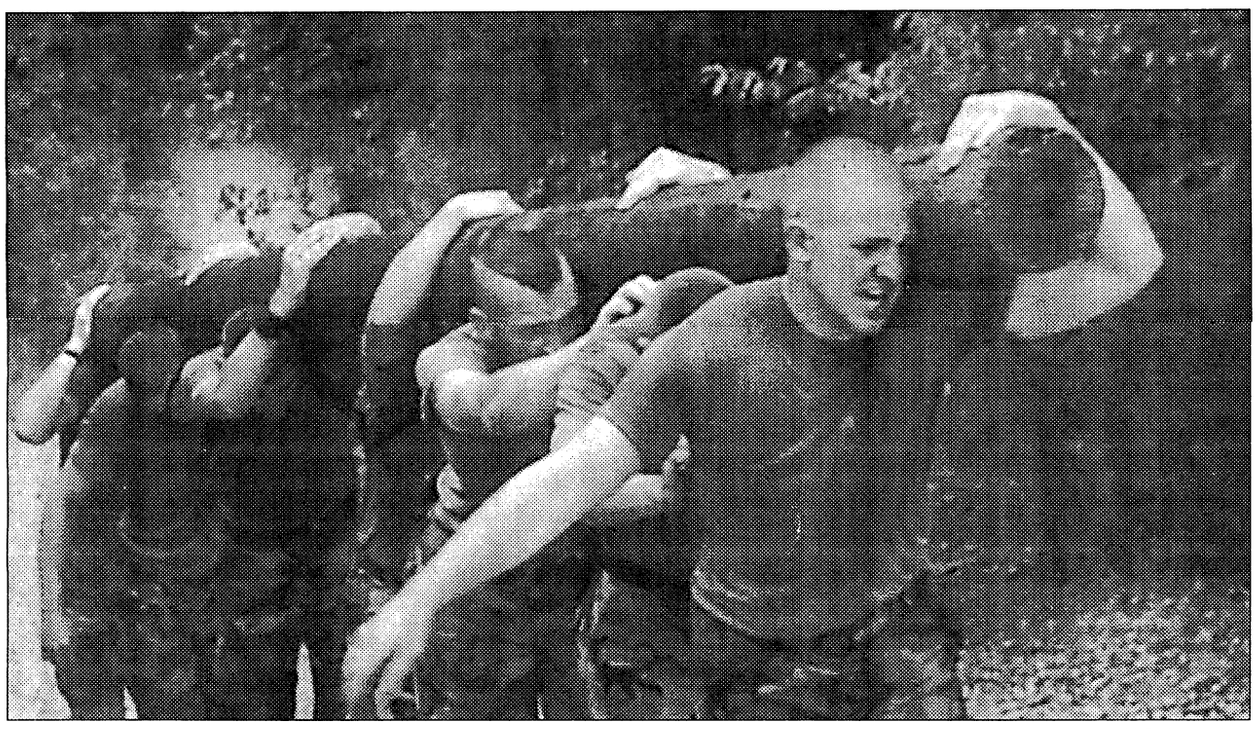
"Every year, the four major components get together to discuss new mountaineering techniques and how we can better train," said Baker. "This year, NWTC hosted the gathering and coordinated our climb on Mount McKinley."

After a five-day train-up, the group began their ascent where they faced winds in excess of 70 mph in addition to harsh temperatures which often sank below zero degrees.

Just 2,000 feet short of the summit, Baker said the expedition had to back off at 18,200 feet because of bad weather.

"It got pretty cold at times. We had just a little more to go, but the weather kept us from going any further," said Baker, who previously climbed the massive mountain in 1987.

"We had better weather then," he said. "We just didn't get a break this year."



While climbing 18,000 feet may be an accomplishment in itself, the group spent more than three weeks on the mountain.

"The air was so thin we had to let or bodies adjust to the altitude. We spent four days at the 14,200-foot base camp," said Baker. "That and we were carrying so much equipment that we would take a load up to a certain point, bury it and then go back down to sleep before starting over the next morning. So, it was like we really climbed the mountain twice."

Although the mountain has already claimed three lives and caused numerous injuries so far this year, Bakers said he was confident is his skills and those of his peers.

"The key is to move methodically and watch the weather," he said. "If you're knowledgeable and know what you're doing, then climbing is pretty safe."

Baker said plans are already in the works for the group's next expedition, which will take them back to Alaska where they will climb 17,000-foot Mount Sanford.

One of four squads carry a log during the physical fitness portion of the Pioneer Challenge June 25.

Soldiers use brain, brawn during Pioneer Challenge competition

1st Lt. Brandon C. Sanchez
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Four squads, each representing a company from the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment came out June 25 to see which squad was the battalion's best during the unit's Pioneer Challenge.

The Pioneer Challenge is a rigorous squad competition that provides the opportunity for the companies to show each other who is the best, said Lt. Col. Jerardo Reyes, battalion commander.

The quarterly competition takes place in one day and is comprised of eight events.

The first event for the ten-Soldier squads was a 4.2-mile race in which the squad's score is established by the final time the last team member crosses the finish line. The squads then moved to the boat race, which consisted of each squad maneuvering zodiac boats around a series of pylons for 500 meters.

During the race, an alligator visited the squads, which may have helped improve the squads' times. After the initial running portion of the challenge, the squads faced a task that was mentally oriented, the land navigation phase. This phase of the event required the squads to complete a written test as well as a practical application.

The next event, a physical fitness test, required the members of the squad to execute a 25-meter rope climb, traverse a 10-meter length of monkey bars and conduct a 100-meter combat run with a log.

With the physical fitness test complete and the heat index reaching 105 degrees, the squads had to buckle down and find a way to collect themselves for the upcoming M-16A2 qualification.

After qualifying, the squads moved on to a series of Bradley Gunnery Skills Tests. This timed event consisted of tests such as disassembling and reassembling an M-240C, a coaxial machine gun as well as the M-242, a 25mm Bushmaster main gun.

Once the skills test was completed the squads had two events remaining, the fitness trail and 50-meter swim. The fitness trail encompassed a 2.5-mile cross-country run through a wooded area with a log carry and finished with a chin-up portion. The 50-meter swim culminated the Pioneer Challenge and became the event which determined the winners.

"The day's heat combined with the events being back-to-back really pushed a person to his limits," said Spc. Jamie L. Sills.

Although his leg muscles were cramping and he had received two intravenous solutions, Sills continued to compete in all of the events and played a key role in the success of his squad.

As a result of each of the squads' determination and effort, two squads share the Pioneer Challenge trophy as co-champions. One of the winning squads represented Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. and consisted of Sgt. Joe Todd, Sgt. Michael Timms, Sgt. Wayne Hodges, Spc. Jason Alaniz, Spc. Jimmy Punzo, Spc. John Blades, Pfc. William Watson, Pfc. Glen McNeil, Spc. Jermaine Rafferty and Pfc. David Maki. The co-champion squad from Company B included Staff Sgt. Thomas Weathers, Sgt. Cedriz Burks, Sgt. Philip Kimball, Sgt. Terrence Nealy, Spc. Bobby Irvin, Spc. Markika Allen, Sills, Spc. Christopher Mehalopoluls, Pfc. Adam Ricks and Pvt. 2 Isaac Belenger.

Requirements change for OCS

AG Personnel Operations and Services Division

A recent message from PERSCOM announced changes in the educational requirements for Officer Candidate School (OCS). Effective immediately the Educational Requirements to be eligible to apply for Officer Candidate School (OCS) are changed as follows:

Soldiers must have a minimum of 90 Semester Hours of college in order to apply for OCS. This requirement cannot be waived.

Semester hours must be verified by the installation education center if the Soldier does not have a Baccalaureate Degree, but meets the 90 semester hour minimum.

The necessity for changing the OCS education criteria is to allow officers the opportunity to obtain a Baccalaureate Degree before promotion to captain. Because of such few years between commissioning and promotion to captain, the maximum time the Army can afford for degree completion will be one year. Therefore the Army cannot continue accepting OCS candidates with less than 90 semester hours of college credit.

The OCS Boards will ensure that candidates selected for OCS with 90 or greater semester hours but without a Baccalaureate Degree will complete their degree before they are in the zone for promotion to captain.

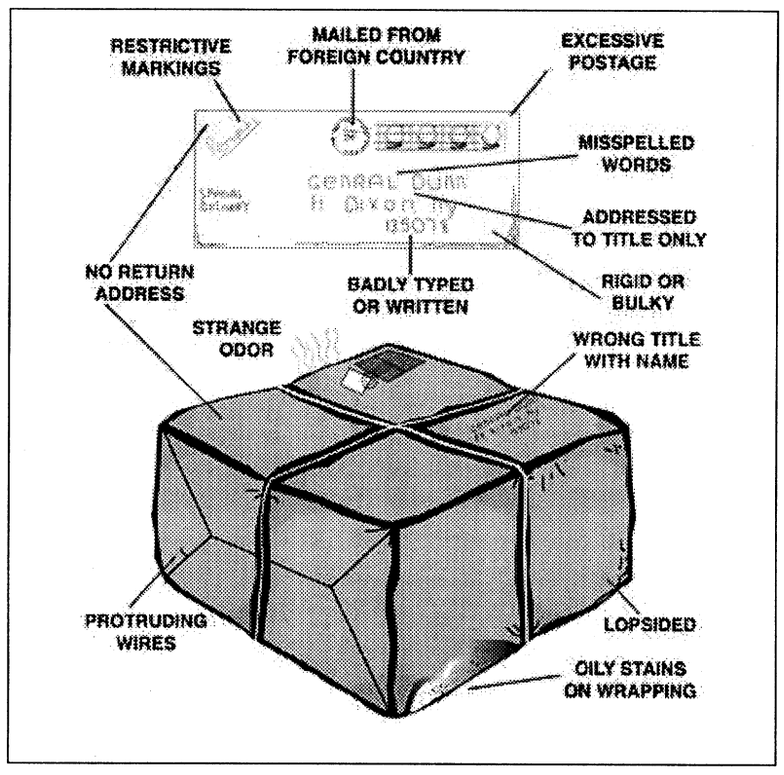
Terroristic attacks spark fear

Sherry Wade
Directorate of Threat and Security



In the past, when someone has mentioned antiterrorism, images of foreign terrorism; for instance, bombing, kidnapping or even hijackings of aircraft in far away places may have come to mind.

But due to the increase in domestic terrorism such as the Oklahoma City Bombing and the bombing that occurred at the Olympic Games, it is important to be aware of all forms of terrorism.

According to the FBI, U.S. Postal Service and multiple intelligence sources, terrorism can take many forms including manmade explosive devices or other hazards in letters or packages that may be received through the mail. The awareness of this form of terrorism requires active support from everyone to protect our soldiers, civilians, and family members.

The first line of defense is education and detection of certain indicators on mail that may alert persons to suspicious activity.

In 1997, eight letters containing explosive devices were sent through the U.S. Postal Service to the National Press Building in Washington, D.C., and to the Federal Penitentiary in Leavenworth, Kansas. One letter was partially opened by an employee who observed wires inside the letter. The letter was immediately turned over to the authorities and was determined it contained a bomb.

The other letters were intercepted before they were opened. Inside the envelopes were musical holiday cards that contained a letter bomb, which, if detonated, could have caused severe bodily injury to the recipient. The envelopes carried a postmark from Alexandria, Egypt, with no return address. The cards were enclosed in plain white envelopes, five by six inches in size, with computer generated addresses on the front of the envelopes.

It is very important for military and civilian personnel, and their dependents, to remain alert for suspicious parcels.

Becoming familiar with the characteristics of suspect parcels may avert a tragedy.

It is important to know the type of mail a particular organization or residence receives.

The following list highlights suspicious indicators that can warn of potentially dangerous contents.

Check for the following:

•Improper spelling of common names, places, or titles.

•Generic or incorrect titles.

•Leaks, stains, or protruding wires, string, tape, etc.

•Strange odor.

•No return address or nonsensical return address.

•Any foreign writing, addresses, or postage.

•Excess postage on small packages or letters indicates that the object was not weighted by the Post Office. Normally, a bomber does not want to mail a parcel over the counter and have to deal face-to-face with a window clerk.

•Handwritten addresses or labels from companies. Check to see if the company exists and if they sent a package or letter.

•Inspect for lumps, bulges, or protrusions, without applying pressure.

•Balance check if lopsided or heavy sided.

•No postage or non-canceled postage.

•Handwritten notes, such as: "To Be Opened in the Privacy of" — "Confidential" — "Your Lucky Day is Here" — "Prize Enclosed."

•Any letters or packages arriving before or after a phone call from an unknown person asking if the item was received.

If anyone is suspicious of a letter or package and are unable to verify the contents, observe the following safety precautions:

•Do not open the article.

•Isolate the suspect parcel and evacuate the immediate area.

•Do not put it in water or a confined space, such as a desk drawer or cabinet.

•If possible, open windows in the immediate area to assist in venting potentially explosive gases.

•Make sure family members or clerical staff know to refuse all unexpected mail at home or the office.

•Do not be concerned with possible embarrassment if the item turns out to be innocent. Instead, contact a supervisor, the Military Police or the local police department.

It is important to be alert for suspicious parcels. Remember that the item does not have to be delivered by a professional carrier. A designated "runner", a secretary, mail handling personnel, or even a family member could make the delivery or bring it into the home. When in doubt, remember the steps previously mentioned. Antiterrorism is everyone's mission.

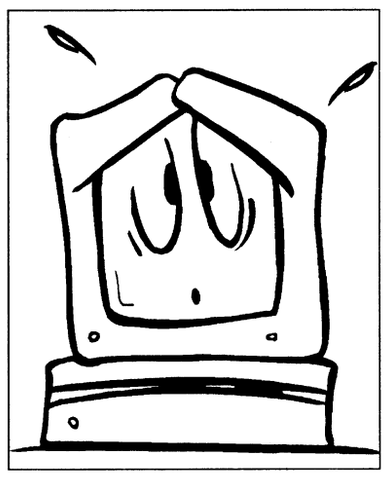
DoD focuses on year 2000 computer fixes

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Jan. 1, 2000, is a deadline staring all of the Department of Defense in the face.



That's when DoD military and civilian workers find out if years of hard work have been successful. DoD is working to solve its Year 2000 problem.

The Year 2000 problem, its nickname "Y2K" becoming more familiar every day, came from the early days of automated data processing. Then, computer memory was precious. To save memory, programmers for decades used only the last two digits of years rather than all four — 1998 would be written '98.' In 2000, however, when computers see '00,' they may not know whether it's 2000 or 1900.

So why is this a problem? The United States runs on computers, mostly linked together. Almost every computer and computer program contains some type of clock or date function. A date error might not affect much in some cases. The results could be disastrous, however, if the date controls electronic bank deposits or critical equipment.

For high-technology, computer-dependent DoD, a Y2K computer glitch might cause an F-15 fighter pilot to crash. A date error in a pay computer system may mean thousands don't get paid on time — or get paid wrong amounts. Telecommunications, transportation, the electric power grid, the movement of gas through pipelines; All these and more are controlled through computer networks. A date error could shut them all down.

"This is really the first major engagement of the information warfare age," said William A. Curtis. He is director of DoD Y2K oversight and contingency planning in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications and intelligence.

"We know what the enemy is and we know when it's going to strike," he said. "We know what's going to happen. We know what to do to fix it. We're not going to have that sort of perfect intelligence in the next engagement. But how we handle this one will really set the stage for how we handle attacks in the future."

Curtis said DoD expects to spend $1.9 billion correcting the Y2K problem. All told, the U.S. government will spend about $4.3 billion. According to some estimates, he said, fixing the problem in every automated system in the United States could cost about $30 billion.

In DoD, the Year 2000 problem is also a readiness issue. The U.S. military mission is to defend the United States and its critical interests before, during and after 2000. There are 25,000 computer systems in DoD. Of these, officials said 2,800 are mission-critical.

"We must make sure the American people know that they are safe and that our potential adversaries know that the Year 2000 does not pose a vulnerability that they can exploit," Curtis said.

Recent reports by the General Accounting Office, the Office of Management and Budget and the DoD inspector general found the department is about four months behind schedule. But DoD is making progress: A congressional committee assigned DoD a grade of "D" for the last quarter — up from an "F" last time. OMB assigned DoD to "Tier One" — its red zone, meaning DoD must do more, more, more.

"The technology behind this is not tough. We know how to fix it. It's not a technical problem," Curtis said. It is a tremendous management problem. The year problem could be hiding in so many applications, machines and systems that weeding out every instance is a massive effort, he said.

The goal, simply, is to have computer systems work. To get there, DoD is developing what officials call an Enterprise Level Strategy. At the heart of this strategy are three vectors: report and evaluation, programmatic oversight and coordination, and test and contingency planning.

The are only six quarters left until the year 2000," Curtis said. "We need information monthly so we can see where we need the effort." He said officials have designed the reporting system to be useful and not just a bureaucratic exercise. The core of this effort is a DoD Web site at http://www.disa.mil/cio/y2k/cioosd.html. Links to the department's recently updated Year 2000 Management Plan and much more Y2K information are at this public site.

Celebration, reflections on the integration of the Armed Forces

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — This July marks the 50th anniversary of the Integration of the Armed Services. President Harry S. Truman signed Executive Orders 9980 and 9981 July 26, 1948.

The Army will recognize the contributions of minorities throughout the history of the military in a special ceremony July 24. The 50th anniversary of the Integration of the Armed Services celebration will begin at 7 p.m. at Constitution Hall.

In commemoration of the anniversary, Staff Sgt. Angele Ringo of Soldiers Radio and Television recently interviewed Gen. Johnnie Wilson, chief of the Army Materiel Command, on his thoughts of that historic landmark.

On reflecting the significance of President Truman's order, Wilson said, "He had the vision to see that it was extremely important to our Army and to our nation to allow all people to serve." One of the executive orders integrated the government work force and the other one integrated the armed forces.

"I see this year as a year of celebration for all the progress that has taken place," Wilson said. "Our Army, America's Army, is a leader and continues to be a model to all institutions to emulate."

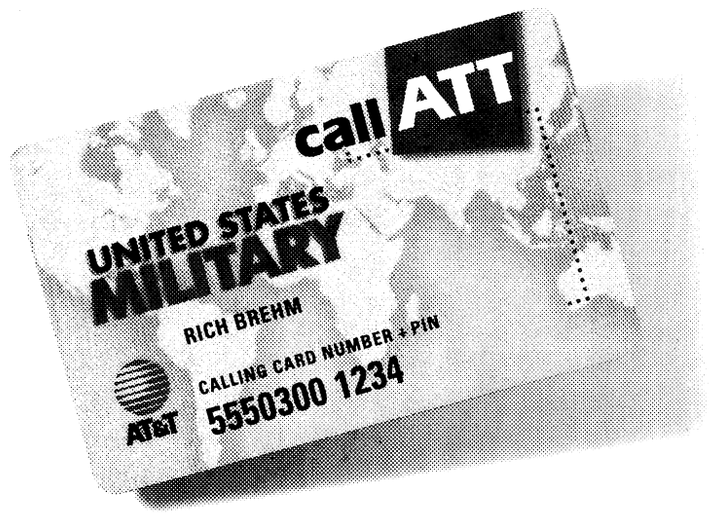
Even though President Truman ordered integration into the services, he could not order a change in attitudes. Wilson said he has seen the Army work that issue.

"By working together, learning together and trusting each other, you build up a trust and depend upon each other and you break down barriers that separate us all."

He said as a 17-year-old high school graduate, he entered the armed forces in 1961 and said he has seen people from all colors, all walks of life, male and female, working together to make it integration happen.

On the subject of why there are no more minorities in the officers corps (there are one in five minorities in the enlisted ranks, but only one in 10 minorities in the officer corps), Wilson said that the senior level has worked this issue for many years.

"Many young people who have worked through ROTC (Reserve Officers Training Corps) are high-performing individuals and as such there has been robust competition for their services, so they have had a lot more opportunity to branch out compared to the enlisted ranks."



He said that through the Officers Corps, you see people from all walks of life that have had the opportunity to serve.

"We will continue to build on that base. The Army has reached out to all the universities to enhance its ROTC program, and is working with the military academies and even below the colleges with schools throughout the nation with these very successful JROTC programs."

He said as the Army continues to work this, he thinks many more people will be coming into the officer ranks. As the first African-American that has risen through the ranks as an enlisted person to a four-star general, he said his success could be attributed to many aspects of the Army institution and to the many, many shoulders he stands upon.

"Many have built the base, but the institution is inclusive so that anyone can compete. Our goal should be looking in a few years to see not one minority in the four-star rank, but maybe two, as well as a female."

"The Army is a great institution to work for, to serve and to learn. It cares for people and you have an opportunity to work and to learn, but you have to work at it, and I think many young people understand that to be successful you have to work."

Girl Scouts

Volunteers impact lives

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

How do cookie drives, Christmas caroling and friendship sound? For the 300 plus girls ages 5 through 17,who are part of Fort Benning's 28 Girl Scout troops, this is the appeal.

That same appeal holds true for the volunteers who work with the Girl Scouts.

Barbara Singleton, co-director along with Deb Wayland, has been involved in the Girl Scouts at Fort Benning for six years.

Singleton told of the benefits she has received from volunteering.

"I have the opportunity to impact girls in a positive way, to help them in the future. I can help make them better citizens," Singleton said.

The Fort Benning Girl Scouts are currently looking for more volunteers.who are needed in the following areas: leaders and assistant leaders, director and assistant director, treasurer, secretary, area coordinator, publicity, special events coordinator and age-level consultants.

"Volunteers can pick which age level they work best with," Singleton said. "They can be a troop leader or helper or be on the service team, which does the planning for extra programs and events and ensures everything goes correctly."

Volunteers are required to fill out a volunteer form and are invited to attend a troop meeting, which most troops hold once a week in the scout huts in each housing area. Once a month they also hold a get-together for all the girls. Volunteers are not required to be parents.

Volunteers are required to attend a two-part basic leadership training course. The first part teaches the scouting program. The second part teaches how to work with that particular age level. Both courses are three hours in length.

Volunteers are also required to take a basic first aid course with the American Red Cross and outdoor training. The outdoor training is three hours and incorporates what to expect outdoors, everything from cooking skills to how to dress.

Besides weekly meetings, the Girls Scouts also hold various programs throughout the year.

In February, a program called "Thinking Day" shows the girls other countries who also have scouting programs.

In March, the Girl Scouts anniversary, they have a week's worth of programs.

The organization also invites people who specialize in various fields to their meetings.

"Volunteers might teach first-aid training or tell about their experiences in other countries," Singleton explained. "They might talk about their jobs or show a craft they know well."

Singleton believes the Girl Scouts have a positive impact on girls.

"You can see the difference in their schooling," Singleton said. "They are more involved in extracurricular activities."

Sylvia Singleton, 16, has been a Girl Scout for nine years.

"I like being a Girl Scout because you always get to meet new people," Sylvia said. "There's never a dull moment; there's always something new around the corner."

Singleton said one of the most important parts of being a volunteer is just being there for the girls.

"You can see the changes in the girls' lives, just being there for them, listening. They can voice what they're thinking without feeling scrutinized."

Sylvia also had praise for the volunteers.

"They're always there when you need them," she said.

For more information on volunteering for the Girls Scouts, call , Singleton at 689-7627.

Fort Benning offers summer tutorial program

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Even though the school year has ended and the summer's promise of fun in the sun is in full swing, some children are already preparing their minds for another academic season by attending the Youth Services tutorial program.

According to Quintella Thorn, recreational specialist, YS started a new math and reading tutorial program for children in kindergarten through fifth-grade.

Thorn said this is the first time YS has offered a tutorial program and it is the only one available on Fort Benning.

She said other off-post programs have been extremely successful and it was time Fort Benning to implemented some type of tutorial program.

"We want to be available to the children in all different ways with a variety of resources because we have a lot of different needs to meet," Thorn said. " That is why we decided to implement this program."

Thorn said the program is starting small with a limit of ten students. She said there has been a good response from the community and a waiting list has already been established. She hopes the program will be able to expand into the school, but she said that will require more personal involvement from adult and teen volunteers.

Approximately 10 teens between the ages of 15 and 17 currently volunteer in the program.

"At the end of the school year we have a lot of teens come to the center to volunteer," Thorn said. "This year I decided they weren't going to sit around and play games or pass out equipment; they are best served by using their minds and talents to help the younger children."

Thorn said the children really respond to the teens just as if they were a big brother or big sister.

She said the children look up to the teens and it gives them incentive to learn.

Those who volunteer to become a tutor go through an orientation and receive packets of information to review about how to work with young children.

Danielle Edmond, a teen volunteer, said she volunteered for the program because she remembers needing help when she was young and feeling frustrated when she couldn't find any.

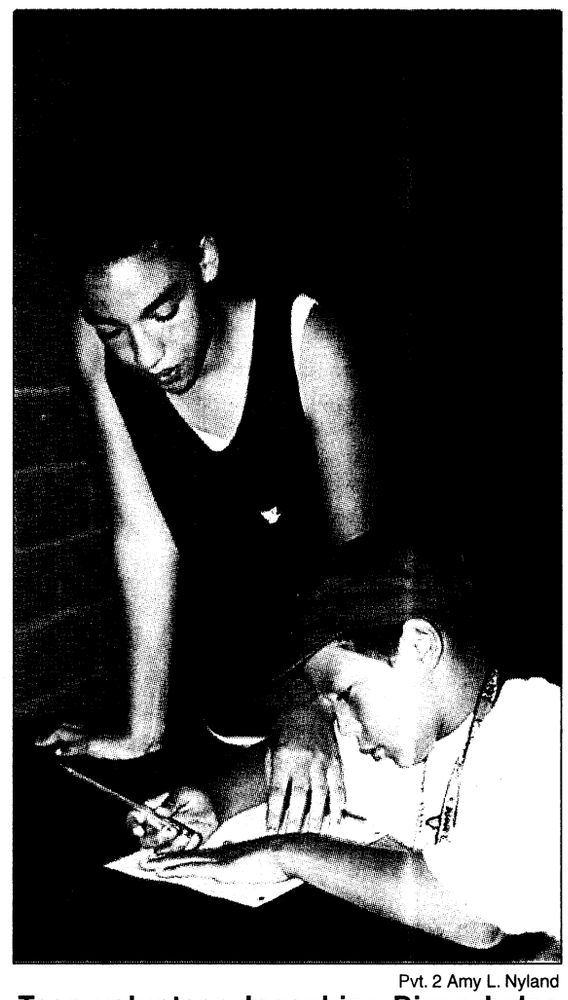
"A lot of kids need help and I think if volunteers take the time to help them understand they will learn better down the road," Edmond said.

During the math sessions which are held Wednesdays from 11 a.m. to noon children work one on one with the volunteers using worksheets, visuals, flash cards and games to practice their basic math skills.

"We try to keep it small and have the children and the volunteers form a kind of partnership," said LaTanya Wagstaff, recreation aide. "We just want to help build upon the skills they already have and get them ready for the next year."

Reading sessions which are held Fridays from 11 a.m. to noon focus on reading comprehension, said Myrtis Johnson, volunteer for the tutorial program.

Johnson said the children pick from a variety of story books and read out loud to the volunteers. The children then write about what they just read.



"We want to have the kids develop a joy for reading," Johnson said. "Instead of just recalling words on a page we want the students to understand what they read."

Tabitha Kearse,7, said she is happy that she can come to the center and have someone to read to.

"It's fun to come here and read and I like it when people help me because some of the words are hard to understand," Kearse said.

Thorn said the program is a wonderful experience for both the children and the teens.

"This program is good for the volunteers because it develops leadership qualities," Thorn said. "The teens get a chance to become little teachers and they work hard to improve upon the skills of the younger children."

Safety tips help keep heads above water

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Drowning is defined as unintentional death from lack of oxygen within 24 hours of submersion in water. Near drowning is defined as survival for more than 24 hours after submersion in water, regardless of whether the victim dies or not.

As you can see "drowning statistics" only include those who die in the first 24 hours and may grossly underestimate the problem with water safety in this country.

Drowning accounts for 9,000 deaths in the United States each year. Drowning is the second leading cause of accidental death. Motor vehicle accidents are the leading cause.

In states with seat belt laws, drowning is the leading cause of accidental death of children.

The peak drowning months are May through August with the greatest numbers of deaths occurring in July. Thousands more nearly drown every year.

Drowning kills mostly the young. Sixty-four percent of victims are less than 30 years old. One fourth of drowning victims are less than 5 years old.

The peak ages for drowning are 2 years of age and 18 years of age. Among teens and young adults, the greatest numbers of victims are male and drownings are most often boat related.

Drowning can occur in water ways, swimming pools, bathtubs, toilets and even cleaning buckets containing liquid. The majority of drownings in children under 4 years old occur at home.

Although swimming ability does not determine who will drown, several facts are known. Nonswimmers and beginners account for the majority of drownings in home pools. Alcohol consumption, falls and horseplay account for many of the drowning incidents among those who are able to swim.

Medical problems which can lead to a drowning includes seizures, heart attacks, neck injuries, low blood sugar and fainting. A person who hyperventilates prior to trying to swim for long distances underwater can lose consciousness and drown.

While every person would benefit from knowing basic cardiac life saving techniques, better known as CPR or Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation, a person with a home pool or small children would definitely benefit from this training

A person rescued from the water should be assessed for breathing and loss of a pulse or heartbeat. A person who knows CPR can assess this and begin the CPR life saving measures. Time should not be wasted on trying to press or squeeze water out of the lungs because those measures have not been shown to help.

Most drownings are preventable. A 1997 survey of members of the American Academy of Pediatrics found that patients are often unaware of who is at greatest risk for drowning and also unaware of important water safety precautions.

Important drowning prevention measures include:

•Do not swim while under the influence of alcohol.

•Never swim alone.

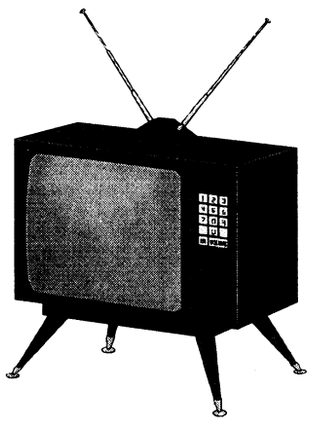
•Install a fence around home swimming pools.

•Encourage all family members, including infants, to learn to swim.

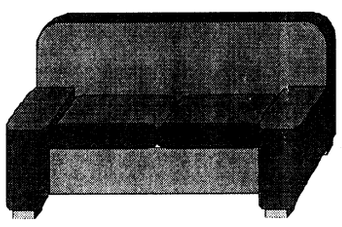
•Learn Basic Cardiac Life Support or CPR.

•Never leave children unattended in the tub.

•People with seizure disorders should take showers instead of baths.



•All people participating in water sports should wear flotation vests.



•Never leave buckets or containers of water around the home.

BBB cautions customers of internet investments

Better Business Bureau

The Better Business Bureau warns consumers to be cautious when searching on the Internet for business opportunities.

Internet-related business opportunities are promoted on Web sites and through e-mail solicitations, as well as through traditional advertising methods like infomercials, classified ads, newspapers, magazines, seminars and direct mail.

Although the Internet has vast commercial possibilities, everyone who buys into an Internet opportunity doesn't automatically strike it rich.

Many Internet related business opportunities often target individuals who know little about computers. In fact, many pitches seem specifically designed to take advantage of an individual's "Internet innocence." The pitches oftentimes call for "no computer experience" or "no sales experience required."

Con artists use many different methods to pitch a variety of business opportunities. For example, individuals are promised that thousands of dollars per month can be earned by joining multilevel marketing plans, selling machines or kiosks that provide walk-up access to the Internet, or by becoming Internet consultants who advertise free seminars to teach consumers how to "make money on the Internet."

The Better Business Bureau, along with the Federal Trade Commission, urge consumers to investigate Internet-related business opportunities as carefully as you would check out any business opportunity. Before you invest or buy into any Internet related business opportunity:

•Realize that seminar "trainers" or "consultants" often are there to sell a business opportunity, not to teach Internet basics. In fact, they may be counting on a lack of experience with computers or the Internet.

•Investigate all earning claims. Talk to others who have purchased the opportunity to see if their experience verifies the claims. Visit them in person, if possible.

•Demand to see the company's claims in writing. In fact, get all promises in writing.

•Don't accept a list of references selected by the company that offers the business opportunity as a substitute for a complete list of franchise or business opportunity owners.

•If interested in a franchise, ask for a disclosure document. This document is required by law. It should provide detailed information to help compare one business to another. Be skeptical of companies that do not have disclosure documents.

•Be sure to check the company out with the Better Business Bureau where you live and where the company is headquartered, your state securities agency, attorney general and local consumer protection agency.

State of Georgia recognizes Fort Benning for champion trees

Directorate of Public Works

During this time of year when temperatures become unbearable as they soar to 100+ degrees, large shade trees are very desirable, but sometimes hard to find. However, Fort Benning does maintain some very large trees, according to the Georgia Forestry Commission.

Recently, Fort Benning was recognized as the owner of the largest mimosa (silk tree) in the state of Georgia (77 inches in circumference and 64 feet tall) and the largest spruce pine in the United States (10 feet 5 inches in circumference and 149 feet tall).

These trees were discovered by Natural Resources Management Branch forestry technicians during a routine forest inventory operation.

It was noted that these trees were large in comparison to other trees of the same species on Fort Benning and nominated to the Georgia Forestry Commission for the Georgia Champion Tree Program.

Georgia's Champion Tree Program is recognized by American Forests, which maintains a National Register of Big Trees in all 50 states.

The champion tree programs recognize nominators and property owners for their significant contributions. Trees are graded according to a mathematical formula considering trunk diameter at breast height (4.5 feet above the ground), total tree height, and spread of the crown.

Two more Fort Benning trees, a laurel oak and an Arkansas oak, have recently been nominated as champion trees and will be validated soon by the Georgia Forestry Commission.

Who knows how many other champion trees may be lurking in the forests of the Fort Benning training areas or on the grounds of Infantry Hall, just waiting to be discovered? These trees may carry a historical significance and are a credit to Fort Benning in recognition of the valuable resources associated with the Best Installation in the World.

Anyone who knows of an unusually large tree may nominate it for the champion tree program by calling the Natural Resources Management Branch at 544-6206.

ask the judge

Capt. David Barrett
Legal Assistance Division

Q. I recently applied for a credit card and the company said they need to look at my credit report before they approve my loan. What is a credit report and what can I do to be sure it is accurate? Can those credit repair agencies really help me improve my credit rating?

A. A credit report contains information about you — where you work, where you live and your bill-paying habits. It will list if you have filed for bankruptcy, if you have pending legal actions against you, total outstanding balances, payment histories, foreclosures, tax liens, garnishments and much more. Companies called "credit reporting agencies" compile these reports and sell the reports to businesses, which use the report to evaluate applications for credit, insurance, and employment.

It is important that this information be accurate; if it's not, a business can deny your application based on the information in the report. It is smart to review your credit report every several years, as well as prior to making a major purchase.

There are three major reporting agencies: Equifax, Trans Union, and Experian (formerly TRW). Each agency gathers its own information, and therefore it is necessary to ensure that all three have correct information.

If you are denied credit, insurance, or employment based on the information in a report, then the report recipient must give you the name and address of the agency that supplied the information. The Fair Credit Reporting Act requires the agency to give you a free copy of your credit report if you request a copy within thirty days of denial.

If you have not been denied credit then you may request a copy of your credit report for a small fee. However, if you are a resident of Georgia, a recent law allows you two free reports a year.

When contacting a credit agency, be sure to include the following information: your full name, birthdate, Social Security number, current address, former addresses of the last 5 years, a photocopy of drivers' license showing current address and a photocopy of your Social Security card. They may also request a copy of a utility bill that links your name to your current address.

If you find an error in your credit report, then you have the right under the Fair Credit Reporting Act to dispute the information in the report. When the agency receives a dispute, they must research the disputed item. If they can not verify a disputed item, they must delete it. If the creditor stands by the disputed debt you may request that the credit agency put a statement of dispute in your report. This statement may be up to 100 words and will be sent to anyone requesting a report.

The agency is also required to update any information in your report. If the report says you are late paying a bill that you have since paid, it must show that the payments are now current. If the agency sent out an erroneous report, they must send out a correction to any one who checked your report in the past six months.

However, if the information is accurate it may be difficult to remove. By law, a credit agency can keep negative information on a report for up to seven years, and a bankruptcy for up to ten years.

When registering a dispute, be sure to clearly identify the disputed item, explain why you are disputing it and request deletion or correction of the item. Be sure to state all the facts and include copies of any proof you may have to support your position such as canceled checks.

If you are denied credit based on having an "insufficient credit file" or "no credit file" and you have accounts with creditors that are not appearing on your file, you can then request that the credit agencies add this information to your future reports. The agencies' addresses are:

Equifax
P.O. Box 740241
Atlanta GA 30374-0241
(800) 548-4548

Trans Union
P.O. Box 390
Springfield PA 19064
(800) 916-8800

Experian
P.O. Box 2104
Allen TX 75013-2104
(800) 643-3334

In addition, the advertisements guaranteeing credit approval are most likely filled with false promises. There is nothing that those companies can do for you that you are not able to do yourself or with some help from the Legal Assistance Division.

If you need more information or assistance in correcting your credit report, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 and make an appointment to meet with an attorney.

Jesus helps us resist temptation

Chaplain (Capt.) Jose D. Resto
1st Battalion, 10th FA

One of the agonizing challenges that confronts a Christian is the hour of temptation — a constant reality from which no person is exempt. Not even Jesus was immune to temptation. (Mark 1 :12-13; Matthew 4: 1- 1; Luke 4: 1-13; Hebrews 2:18; 4: 15)

reflections

The scripture shows two aspects of temptation.

The first is testing that reveals our true reasons, values, loyalties, and commitments to God, to ourselves and to others.

The second temptation is an invitation to evil, to participate in a practice contrary to the creative, sustaining and liberating purpose of God for his creation. This type of testing does not build up, but destroys; it deals not with revealing but with rebellion; it leads not to good, but to evil.

To be resisted, temptation must be discerned. This is the critical ability conferred by God's good will so as to affirm and follow it.

The following are some of the temptations of the contemporary Christian that pertain to the second aspect of temptation indicated above.

Lust — (sexual desire or appetite specifically when uncontrolled or illicit) Sexual relationships are considered normal and not lustful when they are in a marriage relationship, but as we know, this is one of the most common temptations.

Greed — (excessive, inordinate, or rapacious desire, specifically for wealth) This is another common temptation for human kind, since the beginning of creation. As mentioned before, even Jesus was tempted when the devil offered him the kingdoms of the world and their splendor.

Pride — (the state or quality of being proud) Pride also can be defined as arrogant behavior or conduct. We need to be proud of who we are, but when we want to be God or the center of the universe; this can be a dangerous temptation.

Murder — (the brutal or violent killing of a person) I John 3:15 says, "Anyone who hates his brother is a murderer, and you know that no murderer has eternal life in him."

There are many other temptations that as Christians we may confront in our lives.

However, I want to point out that to be tempted is not a sin. As humans, we will face temptation. Once again even Jesus faced temptations throughout his life, but every time, he came through victoriously. Jesus' victory is our victory. He did not allow temptation to cross the line to become sin.

We have to remember what James said in chapter 1, verse 13, "When tempted, no one should say, God is tempting me. For God cannot be tempted by evil, nor does he tempt anyone." So temptation will come from the evil one, or from our flesh, but not from God. Therefore, we can count on him for help to overcome temptation.

To overcome temptations we must: pray continually (11 Thessalonians 5:17), fast (Matthew 4:2), read and diligently study the Bible (John 5:39), and worship God (John 4:24). In doing these things, we will crucify the sinful nature with its passions and desires (Galatians 5:24). We must resist temptation and submit ourselves to God and we will be victorious Christians. Amen.

Army PT to get tune up

Ed Thomas
Troy State University

Army physical training (PT) is scheduled for a tune up in the next few years and the doctrine team of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS), under the leadership of the school's commandant, Col. Stephen D. Cellucci, is gearing up for the challenge.

Current PT doctrine was developed at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., by the U.S. Army Physical Fitness Center during the early 1980s. The last revision to the manual was completed in 1992.

"In the early 1980s, we started leaning away from battle-focused physical training," Cellucci said. "Moving the proponency back to Fort Benning in the early 1990s was a smart move. Commanders want PT shaped for combat, and the USAPFS now has a team of military and civilian personnel ready and able to do the job."

"It's about training smarter, not harder," said Capt. Dan McMillian, physical therapist for USAPFS. "Progression, variety, precision, and recovery are the foundation. Not all physical training should hurt. For instance, Soldiers should learn a variety of restorative movements that bring the body toward its optimal state of readiness and compensate for the stresses of rigorous training. Restorative exercises are normally simple, fast and painless, but they pay tremendous dividends."

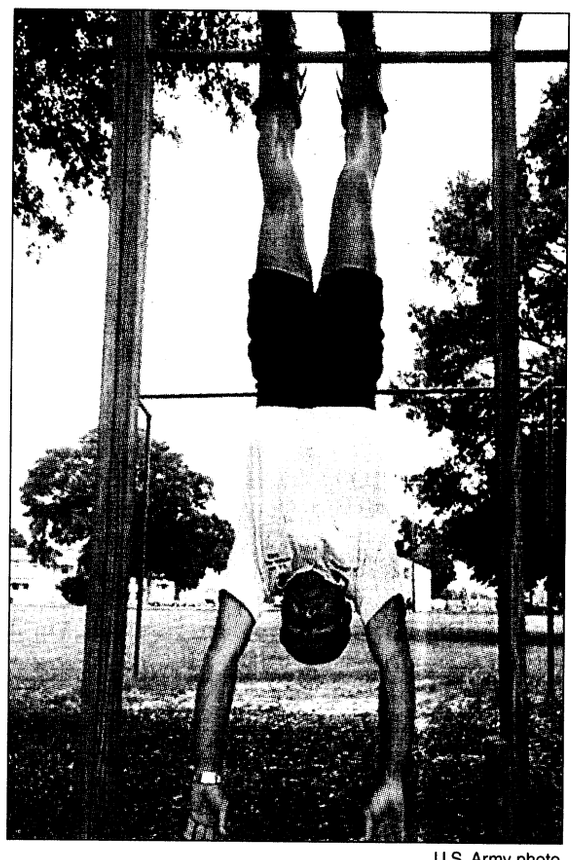
Restorative gymnastics were first introduced at West Point more then a century ago but faded from the doctrine as sports and games emerged supreme in the early 1920s. The medical community has continued to explore the healing potential of movement and Lt. Col. Frederick J. Sheffield's pioneering research concerning inverted traction during the early 1960s represents the kind of wisdom that has been slow to catch on, but extremely valuable when it does.

Sheffield and numerous other researchers and physical fitness experts since then have come to realize that suspending or turning the body upside down under the right conditions and with proper technique is a quick and effective way to compensate for the debilitating stress of gravity on the entire human organism.

"Dr. Robert M. Martin, a retired chiropractor, osteopath and physician further refined the inversion concept with his theory of six basic human postures," Cellucci said. "Three postures are common and three are uncommon. The uncommon postures compensate for the stress of the other three, so it makes sense to employ all six."

The three common positions are the upright (standing), horizontal (lying down) and flexed (bending forward). The three uncommon postures are the extension (leaning backward), brachiation (arm hanging) and inversion (upside-down).

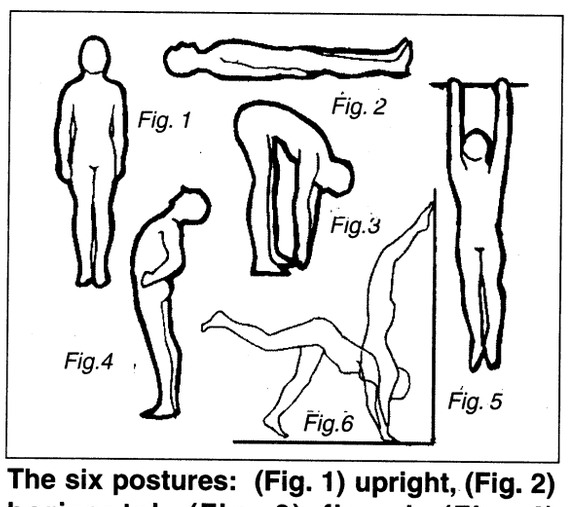
There are lesser degrees of inversion.



McMillian said in the field, it can be as simple as lying head downward on a hillside. In the inverted posture, the force of gravity upon the body is reversed and the whole organism is allowed to elongate. The spine decompresses, the abdomen draws inward and headward instead of sagging footward and outward. The chest is easily expanded, and the diaphragm is pushed and pulled headward.

"The benefits are too numerous to mention, and turning upside-down can feel natural once we rediscover and adapt to the posture," he sai.

Training solely for the PT test will do little to prepare a Soldier to move well under fire, said Steve Van Camp, Instructional Systems specialist at USAPFS. "PT doctrine, especially that developed at the turn-of-the-century at West Point and the post-war PT manuals, has much to offer us," Van Camp said.



Reviewing past doctrine while keeping up with increasing OPTEMPO is not an easy task," said Frank Palkoska, chief of doctrine. "But it must be done if we expect to develop a combat-ready force which is physically and psychologically prepared to mobilize, deploy, fight, and win wars anywhere in the world. We would be foolish to ignore lessons learned in the PT arena."

Cellucci agreed. "You will be seeing the best of the past, combined with the latest wisdom of the present, in future PT doctrine," he said. "It will be a battle-focused 21st century wheel that we won't have to waist time reinventing."

No shows, rain dampen post softball games

Chuck Davis
Bayonet correspondent

Six teams from the post intramural softball league were scheduled to play official games Tuesday night at Bennett Field, but inclement weather and no shows proved to be the greatest challenge for the teams.

The night's lineup included the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, hitting off against the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, ITB. The second game of the night had members of the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, ITB, facing off against the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, ITB. The third and final game had 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, ITB, squaring off against the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, ITB.

The 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., the 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., and the 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., all won by forfeit as the opposing teams failed to step foot onto the baseball diamond.

The 2nd Bn., 54th Inf., Regt., also known as the "Mailed Foot," added a second win to their record with the forfeiture earned from Tuesday's game. Their first win was on July 9 from a game against 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.

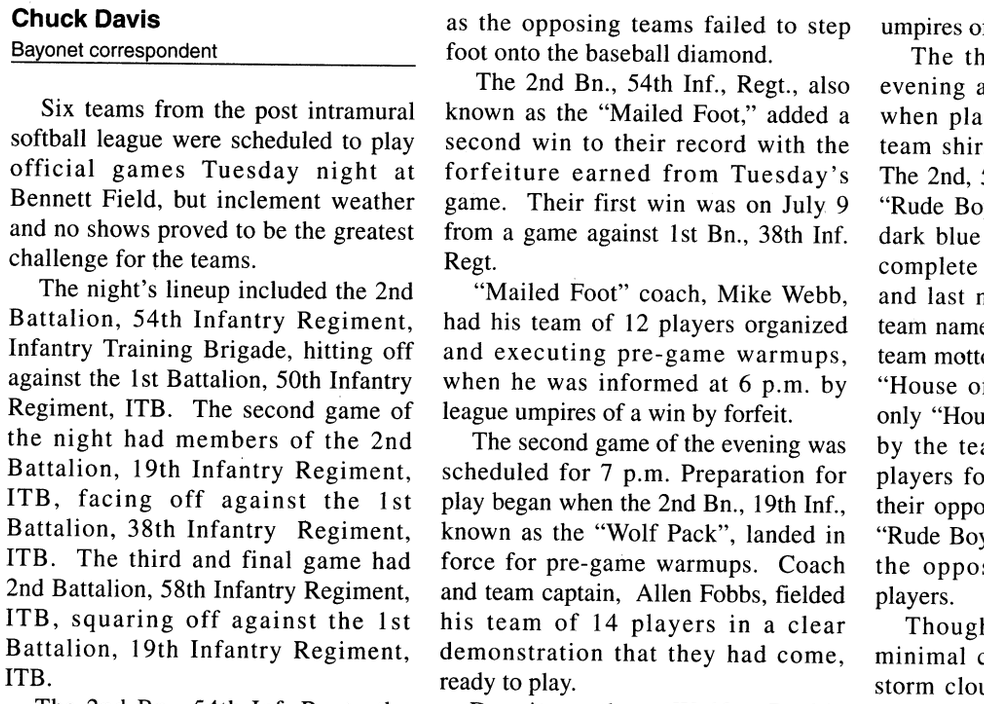
"Mailed Foot" coach, Mike Webb, had his team of 12 players organized and executing pre-game warmups, when he was informed at 6 p.m. by league umpires of a win by forfeit.

The second game of the evening was scheduled for 7 p.m. Preparation for play began when the 2nd Bn., 19th Inf., known as the "Wolf Pack", landed in force for pre-game warmups. Coach and team captain, Allen Fobbs, fielded his team of 14 players in a clear demonstration that they had come, ready to play.

Despite the Wolf Pack's determination and desire to play, they were also informed by the league umpires of a win by forfeit.

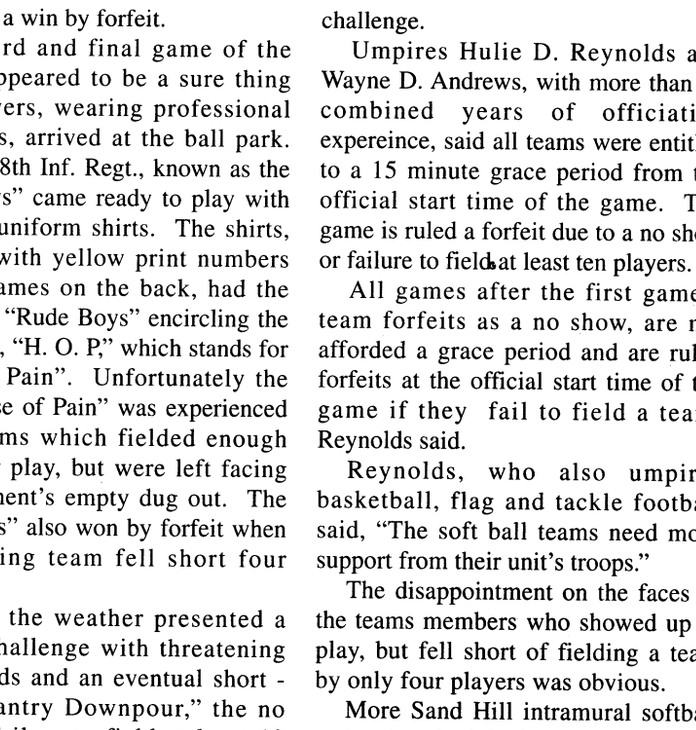
The third and final game of the evening appeared to be a sure thing when players, wearing professional team shirts, arrived at the ball park. The 2nd, 58th Inf. Regt., known as the "Rude Boys" came ready to play with dark blue uniform shirts. The shirts, complete with yellow print numbers and last names on the back, had the team name "Rude Boys" encircling the team motto, "H. O. P," which stands for "House of Pain". Unfortunately the only "House of Pain" was experienced by the teams which fielded enough players for play, but were left facing their opponent's empty dug out. The "Rude Boys" also won by forfeit when the opposing team fell short four players.

Though the weather presented a minimal challenge with threatening storm clouds and an eventual short - lived "Infantry Downpour," the no shows or failure to field at least 10 players proved to be the greatest challenge.



Umpires Hulie D. Reynolds and Wayne D. Andrews, with more than 15 combined years of officiating expereince, said all teams were entitled to a 15 minute grace period from the official start time of the game. The game is ruled a forfeit due to a no show or failure to field at least ten players.

All games after the first game a team forfeits as a no show, are not afforded a grace period and are ruled forfeits at the official start time of the game if they fail to field a team, Reynolds said.



Reynolds, who also umpires basketball, flag and tackle football said, "The soft ball teams need more support from their unit's troops."

The disappointment on the faces of the teams members who showed up to play, but fell short of fielding a team by only four players was obvious.

More Sand Hill intramural softball action is schedule for 6 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday at Bennett Field.

Army dominates Armed Forces track and field championships

William Wassersug
Army News Service

SAN DIEGO — The Army swept the men's and women's competitions recently to dominate the Armed Forces Track and Field Championships.

Army men racked up 80 points to take the first place crown in the May 27-28 meet at San Diego State University. Army women stacked up 57 points for first place in women's competition.

The Army tallies easily outpaced second-place Air Force men, 45 points, and Navy women, 31. The Marine Corps men earned nine points, and the sailors, eight. Air Force women scored 23 points while a five-member Marine Corps squad trailed with 15.

Army picked up 41 medals, including 18 golds and 13 silvers. Tangela Stevenson, 63rd Signal Battalion, Fort Gordon, Ga., and Bryant Williams, 102nd Quartermaster Company, Fort Campbell, Ky., led Army with three gold medals each.

Williams clocked 10.43 seconds to capture first in the men's 100-meter dash, edging Hoy Thurman, Robins Air Force Base, Ga., who finished at 10.54. Army's Dionicio Napier, 1st Battalion, 15th Field Artillery, South Korea, was third. Williams also won the men's 200-meter and was a member of the 1,600-meter relay team that beat the Air Force by just under a second.

Stevenson won the women's 100-meter dash with a 12.10 finish and edged teammate Niambi Dennis of the Army World-Class Athlete Program at Fort Carson, Colo. She followed that victory with a second gold in the 200; second place went to the Marines' Angelique Longstreet, Camp Lejeune, N.C.

At least one record was broken: Army's Dawn Burrell of the World-Class Athlete Program leaped to gold with a 6.69-meter long jump.

Army coach Charles Swindell, Defense Information Technical Contracting Organization, Defense Information Systems Agency, Scott Air Force Base, Ill., did more than just coach — he successfully defended his triple jump crown with 51-5 3/4 combination.

Christine Czaja, 430th Replacement Company, Hiller, Pa., won the women's discus with a 42.94-meter toss. Teammate Marilyn Senz, 3297th U.S. Army Hospital, Asheville, N.C., was second.

Army's Roxanne Bernstein, Headquarters, Western Sector, U.S. Military Entrance Processing Command, Aurora, Colo., won the women's 1,500-meter run. Jacqueline Hunter, 24th Ordnance Company, Hunter Army Airfield, Ga., won the women's 400-meter dash.

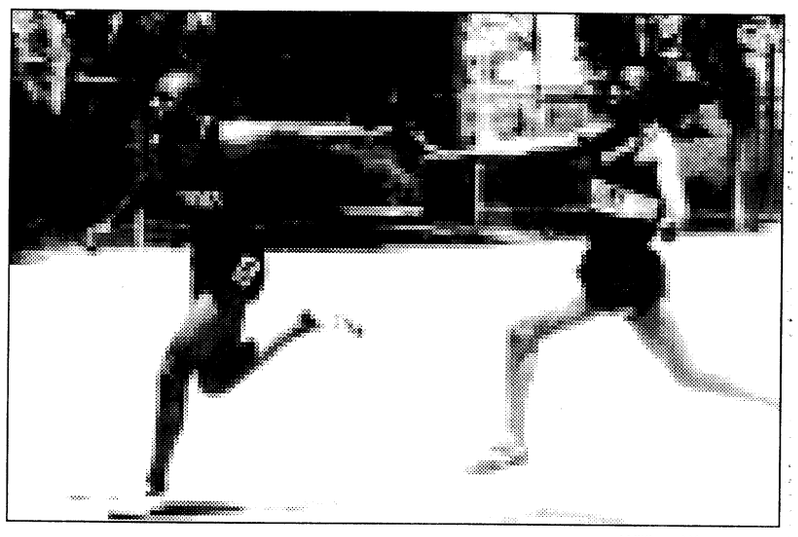
Army swept the 1,600-meter and 400-meter women's relays. Brooks, Stevenson, Dennis and Flora Hyacinth of the World-Class Athlete Program formed the 1,600-meter team. The 400-meter squad was composed of Cynthia Swift, SHAPE Headquarters, Brussels, Belgium; Melinda Williamson, Beaumont Army Medical Center, Fort Bliss, Texas; Simone Brooks, Personnel and Community Activities Directorate, Fort Myer, Va.; and Hunter.

Other Army gold winners were Dan Browne, World-Class Athlete Program, the 1,500; Thomas Peterson, 7th Air Defense Artillery, Hanau, Germany, 110 high hurdles; Tonyo Sylvester, Moncrief Army Community Hospital, Fort Jackson, S.C., shot put; Mike Mielke, Moffett Field, Calif., discus; and Marco Montoya, Beaumont Army Medical Center, javelin.

Leon Eriberto, Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington, D.C., ran a personal best to finish second in the 10,000.

The Marines' Longstreet picked up three silvers to lead her team. Coach Farley Simon named her the team's outstanding runner and presented her with a pair of running shoes for her effort.

Robert Adams, Marine Corps Base, Quantico, Va., won the 10,000-meter run. Sammie Tibbs, 7th Marines, 29 Palms, Calif., won the 400-meter run and silvered in the 800. Jennifer Mills, Camp Pendleton, Calif., also won three silvers.



Simon was pleased with the effort of his undersized 19-member squad. "I'm impressed and happy," he said. "For the number of people we brought, the amount of individual honors is great."

Air Force coach Matthew Zuber, U.S. Air Force Academy, Colorado Springs, Colo., was the big winner in the field events, winning golds in the long jump and the pole vault. Zuber hit 15-7 in the pole vault and had a 25-2.5 long jump. His pole vault won by six inches.

Other Air Force gold winners were Kimberly Markland, Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, women's 5,000 and 10,000; Valerie Manning, Air Reserve Personnel Center, Denver, 100 high hurdles; Jeffrey Kuzma, Air Force Academy, 800; Michael Reed, Dover Air Force Base, Del., 400 intermediate hurdles; and Clayton Cole, Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., high jump.

The Navy's leader was Christine Stancliff, U.S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., who took golds with a 50.94-meter javelin throw and 12.97-meter shot put.

Other Navy event winners were Regina Ware, also from the Naval Academy, 800; Jonathan Clemens, Naval Aviation School, Pensacola, Fla., 3,000 steeplechase; and Julie Gould, Sea Control Squadron 33, San Diego, Calif., high jump.

William Wassersugt

The Army won the 1,600-meter relay with help from a perfect handoff on the final leg.

Pistol team dominates match

Spc. Michael J. Brock
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Pistol Team dominated the 39th Annual Interservice Pistol Championships held at Camp Joseph T. Robinson, North Little Rock, Ark. June 12- 18.

USAMU's Blue Team dominated the team matches winning two out of four and taking home the Interservice Pistol Championships Team Aggregate for the first time in 10 years, said Roger C. Jacobson, Service Pistol Team member.

The AMU-Blue Team also did something that hasn't been done in a while, which was to win the Interservice Pistol Championships 4-man Team Match for the second year in a row with the modified M-9.

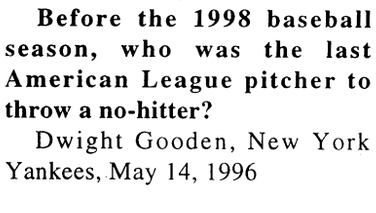
The AMU Blue Team consisted of Steven M. King, Jacobson, Fritz Alan Ficke, Thomas A. Rose and Coach Kimberly J. Kolb.

The AMU Blue Team also finished first in the .45-Caliber Team championship match and second in the .22-Caliber Team Championship and the Center Fire Team Championship matches.

"When the team wins, it feels like I win," Kolb said. "I still call home and tell everybody that we won."

Behind every winning team, there are the people who help support the team, Kolb said.

"I would like to thank the gunsmiths for doing a great job out here with the M-9," Ficke said.



"We were one of the only teams whose guns didn't break down during a match.

"Not only were the guns reliable, they were accurate," Ficke said. "The guns were even better than last year, and the gunsmiths have more ideas for modifications next year."

The Service Pistol Team had five of the top 12 shooters in the Individual Championship Grand Aggregate, which is a compilation of scores from all of the individual matches.

Other top finishers were Aaron P. Schreiber with a third place finish and King placing fourth in the .22-Caliber Individual Championship match. In the Center Fire Individual Championship match, Ficke took third place while taking second place in the .45-Caliber Individual Championship match with Rose coming in third. In the Service Pistol Individual Championship match, King came in second while Jason A. Sargent took fourth place.

"Our shooters did really well," said Ray Arredondo, Service Pistol Coach. "They poured their hearts out and it shows."

3RD BRIGADE, 101ST AIRBORNE

Field experiment begins Monday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In the continuing effort to build the most lethal and effective force for the 21st century, Fort Benning will host the Rapid Force Projection Initiative (RFPI) Field Experiment Monday through Aug. 11.

Soldiers of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) from Fort Campbell, Ky., and 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) from Fort Stewart, Ga., accompanied by the staff of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, will conduct the experiment designed to assess emerging technologies and their application for light forces.

By using various information gathering sensors, in conjunction with multi-capable weapon systems, light Infantry commanders in a digital and mobile tactical operation center can make a difference early in the battle.

For the experiment, the 2nd Brigade Task Force is augmented with eight new warfighting systems. Advanced digital communications also is provided to the 2nd Brigade and the divisional command posts. The division trained on these systems for six months prior to the experiment.

The new systems stationed at Fort Campbell are: a Light Digitized Tactical Operations Center, two Hunter Sensor Suite systems, one Remote Sentry system, the Tactical VideoLink, the Integrated Acoustic Sensor with both land and air emplaced sensors and a firing battery equipped with eight 155 mm Howitzers.

There are two new XVIII Airborne Corps units stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., participating in this exercise are a High Mobility Artillery Rocket System platoon and an Enhanced Fiber Optic Guided Missile company.

"Preparations for this exercise began at Fort Benning July 14," said Lt. Col. Terrence P. Ryan, the 101st Airborne Division's project officer for the exercise. "The division moved 1,459 Soldiers and more than 1,000 wheeled items to Fort Benning on 73 rail cars, semi-trailers and 10 C-17 sorties.

Deputy CG to leave Fort Benning for Kuwaiti assignment

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Wojdakowski

Honore´

Brig. Gen. Walt Wojdakowski, Fort Benning's assistant commandant of the Infantry School and deputy post commander, will depart this summer for a new assignment in Kuwait.

The Army announced Tuesday that he will be the chief of the Office of Military Cooperation at the American Embassy.

It was also announced that Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore´, the assistant division commander for support of the 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas, will be Wojdakowski's replacement.

Wojdakowski assumed his current duty assignment in January 1997.

Prior to returning to Fort Benning, Wojdakowski was stationed at Hohenfels, Germany, where he served as commander of the operations group of the Combat Maneuver Training Center.

The 26-year Army veteran commanded the 3rd Battalion of the 41st Infantry Regiment, Tiger Brigade, from 1989 to 1991. The brigade was one of the heaviest involved in fighting during Desert Storm.

Following that tour of duty, he served as the senior Infantry Task Force combat trainer at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

Other Fort Benning assignments include instructor and company commander at the Ranger Training Brigade's Mountain Ranger Camp and commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment.

A U.S. Military Academy graduate, he also holds a master's degree in business administration and a master's degree in Military Arts and Sciences from the School of Advanced Military Studies from the University of Alaska.

Wojdakowski and his wife Candy have a son, Steven, a cadet at West Point and a daughter, Ami, a student at Columbus High School.

Honore´ is a graduate of Southern University Agriculture and Mechanical College in Baton Rouge, La.

He attended both the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses at Fort Benning

Honore´ is also a veteran of Desert Storm, having commanded Task Force 4-16 during that war. Honore´ attended the Air War College at Maxwell Air Force Base and earned a master's degree in human resource management from Troy State University.

He too served at Fort Irwin's National Training Center where he was the senior mechanized Infantry trainer.

Prior to his Fort Hood assignment, Honore´ commanded the 1st Brigade of the 3d Infantry Division at Fort Stewart.

He and his wife Beverly have four children, Stephanie, Michael, Kimberly and Steven Bradley.

Belarussian child visits post, receives 80 duffel bags

The 1986 explosion of the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant left parts of Belarus (part of the former Soviet Union) radioactive and unfit for people to live in.

An organization named Children of Chernobyl was established in 1992 and works to bring children who have various forms of cancer from the contaminated areas of the country to the United States once a year for eight weeks. While here the children receive medical care to boost their immune system to a normal functioning level.

The volunteer nonprofit organization places children with qualified host families who supply children with clothes, healthy food and medical care in addition to entertainment and recreational activities.

Approximately 120 to 150 children with different forms of cancer are flown to the United States via Lifeline pilots and are then taken to their host families where they will stay.

Tanya Aniskova, a 9-year-old leukemia patient who is sponsored by the Children of Chernobyl, visited Fort Benning Tuesday with retired Command Sgt. Maj. Wayne R. Westover and his family.

"This is her second summer here," said Jutta Westover. "By the end of the first summer she was like our own child." She said the language barrier wasn't a problem for her family. Aniskova understands some English and speaks enough for her needs to be met. "Tanya has become the peacekeeper between my children."

According to Westover, the area Aniskova is from is so contaminated with radiation that the levels of certain types of cancer have increased 800 percent.

The high concentration of radiation prevents the children's antibodies from fighting various illnesses and even tooth decay. One of the trips for medical treatment included a visit to a dentist.

"Tanya froze up when she saw the needles," Jutta

USARSA gets new commandant

U.S. Army School of the Americas

More than 400 people witnessed the U.S. Army School of the Americas change of command ceremony in front of Ridgway Hall July 17.

Col. Glenn R. Weidner assumed command of USARSA from outgoing commander Col. Roy R. Trumble.

Weidner, a U.S. Army field artillery officer, formerly served as the Army's Senior Fellow at Harvard University's Weatherhead Center for International Affairs.

Trumble, a U.S. Army Special Forces officer, retired after 27 years of active service. For the past three years he was the school's commandant.

Gen. William W. Hartzog, commander, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, was the reviewing officer during the ceremony.

"The U.S. Army School of the Americas. serves to foster hemispheric understanding and cooperation," Hartzog said. "It provides sound relevant military education and training and has graduated more than 57,000 officers, cadets, NCOs and civilians from 22 Latin American countries. The school is marked by pride and professionalism and a strong sense of teamwork."

Guests attending the event included U.S. ambassadors, general officers from several units including the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Southern Command and the Pentagon, as wel! as representatives from the U.S. Congress.

Hartzog added the school is "recognized as a significant contributing factor to the emergence of democracy throughout the Americas."

The U.S. Army Soldier Show performance is 7 p.m. today at Sand Hill Theater 3. The public is invited.

Memories crucial to learning, growth

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Memories, you got to love them. Sometimes I think I love them just a little too much.

commentary

Many times I find myself taking a trip back in time to when life was simple and He-Man was quality programming.

Sometimes I find myself becoming so wrapped up in my memories I forget what's going on around me. This can become extremely dangerous, especially when I'm competing in amateur sumo wrestling night or performing my knife throwing act.

I believe memories are crucial to my existence and are very important in learning and growing.

Memories help me stay safe and keep me out of trouble by preventing me from repeating the not so bright moments in my life.

They also help me laugh at myself, which I find I do an unusually large amount of.

Before I took the time to really think about it, I never realized how many idiotic things I have done over the course of my relatively short life.

I have done everything from trying to suck soda through a straw using my nose to covering my entire face in masking tape.

I believe I became an expert at making a fool out of myself right around the time I learned to talk. It seems to me I always had both feet in my mouth and could never make it through a day without at least one humiliating experience.

This became especially true during my fifth-and sixth-grade years of school.

I think my parents believed that only God's divine intervention could help me because they got this wild idea to send me to a Catholic school.

It was there I learned that doing stupid things, whether intentional or not, could earn me a few laughs and keep me from being bored.

Church was always my favorite time for this.

Don't get me wrong, I feel awful about using God's time for my personal amusement and I am still repenting, but I was young and immature.

Church is where my best friend and I found the most joy in being holy terrors, excuse the pun.

I also found I had a knack for catching the clergy's embarrassing moments and had no problem pointing them out to everyone else.

I always noticed when our priest would have his robe tucked into his pants or when he would trip over the invisible spot on the rug. I always would catch an unsuspecting nun's wig was on incorrectly or who's socks didn't match.

There was a time though when I did something that I will never forget as long as I live. It was the only time I remember feeling both humiliated and frightened about something stupid I had done.

It all started when my friend and I decided to have a race to the bathroom. She ended up beating me there, so I got this crazy idea to pull myself up on the bathroom stall to look over the door and scare her.

After I had managed to pull myself up far enough to peek over the stall, I noticed it wasn't my friend sitting contently behind the door, but my math teacher, Sister Mary Tillman.

The minute I saw her I was sure my life had ended and I was going to burn in hell. My terror was so great I got chills up and down my spine and the hair on my neck was standing on end. I knew God would make me suffer for what I had done.

I wasted no time in peeling out of that bathroom to the safety of my homeroom classroom. There I closed my eyes tight and prayed to God like I had never prayed before.

"Please God! Please, please, please do not let her come in this room and find me. I will do anything, I promise. I won't lie about brushing my teeth, I'll wash my hands after I go to the bathroom and I promise to never stuff my brother in a dresser drawer again."

I found out that day that God doesn't appreciate little girls who only pray to him when they are in a jam.

It didn't take long before an angry sister came barging into the room marching up and down each aisle studying everyone's shoes.

I cringed as she walked past me, took a good look at my shoes and pointed her long bony finger at me. Needless to say all I got was a stern lecture, but I will never forget it.

That is just one example of a story my friend and I discuss every time we get together. Even though at the time I was completely mortified and felt like I would never live it down, today I cannot help but laugh.

I think that same principle will hold true for the rest of my life. Everything that happens to me and everyone else is stored in our minds and eventually remembered and used one day.

No matter what we do and no matter how embarrassed we get, I know that one day we will look back on ourselves and laugh.

I guess that's the beauty of memories.

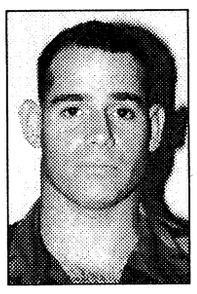
Locked out; Oh how irony followed

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

People make mistakes. Hopefully they learn from them. I made a mistake recently and it cost me a day's worth of activities.

commentary

I walked out of my room without my keys and was accidentally locked out.



I was caught outside of my room in only a pair of shorts. I had no shirt or shoes, no wallet and no plan of what to do next. After yelling obscenities at the top of my voice for the next few minutes, I decided I'd remedy the situation. This was at about 11:30 a.m.

In my company, the supply sergeant and one other person have access to the room keys. So I went to the charge of quarters (CQ) office, got the supply sergeant's home phone number and spent the first two hours calling his residence every five or 10 minutes with no success.

I went back to the CQ later and found out there was one other person who controlled the room keys. It was 1:30 p.m before I found out he wasn't home either.

While waiting for someone to return, I came to the conclusion that not having access to the room keys was completely stupid. What's the use of having a second set of room keys if no one can get to them?

Desperate, I called the first sergeant. In my mind, he would have the answer, if not a set of keys of his own.

But I got more bad news — he told me the two people who had the keys were out of town and he didn't have a set so I'd just have to wait until one of them got back.

I was dumfounded. How could both people with access to the room keys be out of town at the same time? Isn't that the reason for having a second person — in case someone goes on leave or out of town?

By the time I did finally get into my room, it was nearly 10 p.m.

Remember, this ordeal began at 11:30 a.m.

The next day I spoke with my company commander, but left his office with my jaw open in astonishment when he said he'd only look at the company policy. He also said he told me he refused to have his cadre's weekend interrupted every few hours so they can swing by the barracks to open someone's door. He said they had a rash of problems of this type early into his command and it became a pain in the "you- know-what" for the cadre members.

You know what? I totally agree. I wouldn't want my weekend ruined because some idiot locked himself out of his room (I use idiot lightly here because I'm talking about myself). Who can't understand that?

After doing some hindsight research, I found out this — my company nearly stands alone in its policy.

In the 29th Infantry Regiment the regimental staff duty NCO has a pass key.

In the 3rd Brigade, they follow Army regulations that outline procedures for signing keys in and out and holding people accountable for them.

My thoughts on the getting back into your barracks room process finds me thinking the chain of command didn't seem too concerned that I was locked out of my room. My first sergeant didn't have the ability to fix the situation and my company commander told me the day after, "as a last straw, you could go by the CQ — they have a pillow and a blanket so you could crash there."

In years past, the CQ has always had the room keys. Yes, there were times when things ended up missing, but it fell on the CQ's shoulders for responsibility. If the keys are locked up in a lock box and only the CQ has the key, who else is there to blame? I don't see anything wrong with that system.

That may not be the answer. That of course is up to the chain of command. But, it seems to me the smart thing to do would also be the most efficient thing to do. People do make mistakes. Even leaders have their bad days. Maybe this was just a bad call and a misunderstanding. But, I surely don't want this to happen to me again or anyone else. Let's hope we all learn from our mistakes.

Congressman congratulates Faith Middle School

Dear Ms. Middlemiss:

Congratulations to you and Faith Middle School's "Odyssey of the Mind" team for their great accomplishment of first place at the Georgia state competition and seventh place at the worldwide competition.

Their selection for this award is well deserved and an impressive tribute to both the students and faculty at Faith.

Please accept my warm congratulations and best wishes for continued success in all your future endeavors.

— Congressman Mac Collins

Animals susceptible to heat injuries, exhaustion

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

As the summer drudges on and the sun's blazing rays take its toll people should not only think about protecting themselves from heat injury, but also protecting the critters that keep them company.

According to Capt. Chris Lanier, chief of veterinary service, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, it is important for people to know how to recognize the signs of heat injury in their pets and also ways to prevent it.

Lanier said even though pets can take much more than humans, they too are susceptible to heat stroke and heat exhaustion. If a pet suffers from a heat injury and does not receive treatment the result can be death.

He said an animals' immune system is often weakened by the heat which can open them up to other diseases such as Parvovirus.

Many of the signs of heat injury are not obvious to humans, Lanier said. People need to watch their pets to notice any changes that occur in them.

A pets main mechanism for cooling itself is panting. Some of the more obvious signs of overheating is constant panting and heavy breathing. He said other signs that aren't as obvious, but can be indicators of heat injury are a darkening of the mucous membranes around the mouth and the tissue around the eyes.

More serious indicators of heat injury are vomiting, diarrhea and lethargy.

"Obviously, if your dog gets to the point where he is just lying on his side in the sun without moving, he's in pretty bad shape, Lanier said" "Usually a pet won't even make it to the point where they are vomiting or have diarrhea."

Lanier said even though it is good to know what to look for, it is better to prevent heat injury in the first place.

If pets are left outside unattended it is post policy they have food, water and shelter that is accessible at all times

Lanier said it is important for pets to have fresh water they can get to. He said some people forget that when they chain their pet up, there is the possibility it will get tied up in the leash and not be able to reach the food and water.

Lanier also said a pet should have adequate shelter or shade from the sun.

"People often make the mistake of buying enclosed animal houses," Lanier said. "What they don't understand is it doesn't allow proper circulation of air and and it becomes like an oven to the animals."

Pets should never be left in a car or tied up in the back of an open vehicle.

"Just because a dog is in the open air in the back of a vehicle doesn't mean they are safe from the sun," Lanier said." "Metal or plastic heats up under the sun just like anything else."

If someone notices any of the heat injury signs in their pets they should remove their pet from the heat right away.

Lanier said it is good to hose your pet down with water, but never dunk them in ice water.

After a pet has been soaked down, an owner can pour rubbing alcohol on them to help cool the pet down.

If signs of heat injury persist and none of the cooling methods work it is advised to call a veterinarian.

"If you know it's going to be unusually hot, don't set yourself up for a problem by leaving your pets unattended," Lanier said. "If you do take the right precautions to ensure your pet is going to stay safe and healthy."

Post policies protect pets, prevent problems

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For those who are just PCSing to Fort Benning or have lived on post for awhile, the rules and policies regarding pets may seem rigid.

According to Barbra Burger, receptionist for the Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility, most of the rules concerning pets helps protect the pet and owner by preventing problems down the road.

Burger said the clinic stresses early prevention of disease and the post helps enforce this by outlining specific shots and programs a pet must follow.

She said anyone who owns a pet or plans to buy one should be familiar with all the rules and regulations to properly protect themselves from possible legal action or the chance of having their pet taken away.

Soldiers who have just PCSed to Fort Benning or who plan to buy a pet must have them registered within 14 days of the pets arrival on Fort Benning. Ownership of more than three pets is illegal and only dogs, cats, small caged animals and horses may be kept on post.

Burger said early prevention begins with a number of required shots including a year round program to protect pets from common diseases.

All dogs must be vaccinated against rabies, canine distemper, infectious canine hepatitis, leptospirosis, parinfluenza and canine parvovirus.

Dogs are also required to be tested annually for heartworm and are to be kept on a heartworm prevention program year-round.

"We have a big problem with heartworm disease because people do not follow the prevention program," Burger said. "What they don't understand is that heartworm in fatal and far more expensive to treat."

Cats are required to be vaccinated against panleukopenia, rhinotrachetitis and calcivirus and a fecal exam is required annually.

Horses must be vaccinated against equine encephalomyetitides, rabies and tetanus prior to entry on post.

Burger said all animals must be kept up-to-date on vaccinations and dogs and cats must wear a current rabies tag.

She said the clinic encounters a lot of difficulty identifying strays because many do not have tags.

"We have problems with animals getting loose and not having proper tags," Burger said. "People often forget to put them on or change them out and then they can't find their pet. It's a sad story when a pet and owner cannot be reunited."

If an animal is impounded an owner is given three days to inquire about the pet before it is put up for adoption. If the pet is neither found nor adopted within another three days it is put down, Burger said.

She said another problem the clinic faces is pet neglect and abandonment.

"We have so many cases of people who are PCSing or ETSing and they don't want to take their pets cause they figure they can get another one at the next post and that's ridiculous," Burger said. "That just shows people do not have responsibility when they do something like that."

If an owner is accused of neglect or abuse a case will be started against them and there is the possibility it will go through the legal system. People may even loose their housing privileges, she added.

Burger also mentioned that breeding pets on post is illegal. If a pet becomes pregnant they are allowed to carry to term but the off-spring must be out of the house by three months and they must be given away not sold.

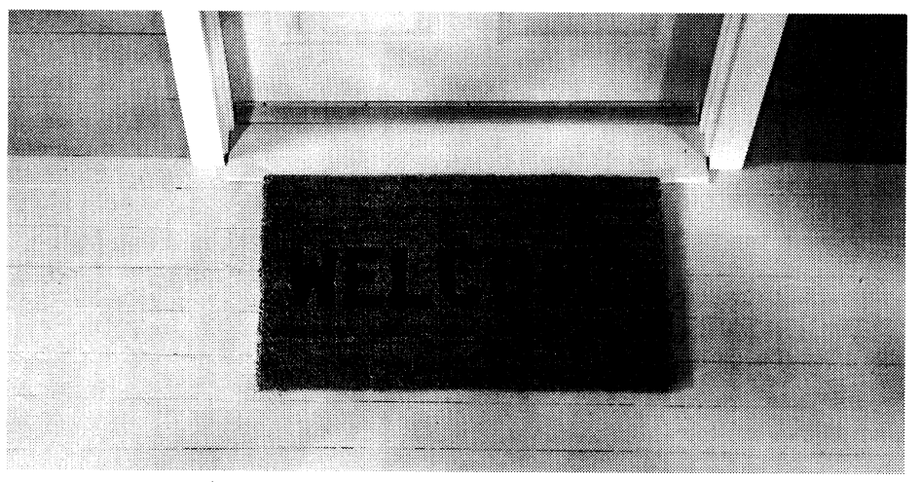
Visitor: Radiation victim receives gift said. "Nothing could be done this visit because she remembered last year's trip. Major work needed to be done last year. The children's teeth are in bad condition because of the radiation and the children usually end up having teeth drilled and pulled.

"We sent toothbrushes over with Tanya last year," Jutta said. "Some of the families in Belarus have only one toothbrush per family."

According to the retired sergeant major, the children who arrive in the U.S. are usually malnourished and suffering from many symptoms of radiation poisoning because of a immune deficiency. It takes the entire eight weeks to get their immune system to normal.

It takes two weeks for the body to cleanse itself from the radiation, Jutta said. Meanwhile the children are fed healthy meals and are given the chance to breath clean air. This gives their immune system the chance to build itself up.



The organization is able to treat the medical needs of the visiting children through private donations, fund raising events and local church and civic organization sponsorship. The funds raised pay for the airfare of the new children to the program. Doctors, dentists and eye care specialists donate their time and services to provide care and treatment for these children.

"Tanya's trip is a preventive trip," Westover said. "Only children who are not sick can come. If they have so much as a rash they are not allowed to leave Belarus.

The Westovers visited post in order for Aniskova to accept 80 duffel bags from the American Red Cross. These bags will be used by the program's children when they return to Belarus. Each child is authorized two 70-pound bags filled with food, medical supplies, hygiene products and gifts.

SWITCH OR STAY?

Government offers guide to retirement plans

Army News Service

From now until Dec. 31, more than a million employees throughout the federal government will face a decision that could have a substantial impact on their personal finances.

All these employees are currently covered by the Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS). They are being given an opportunity to transfer to the newer Federal Employees Retirement System (FERS), under terms of a Congressionally mandated open season that began on July 1 and runs through the end of the year.

According to Willie Varner, chief management services division, "all employees who are eligible to switch their retirement plans were notified by letter and encouraged to attend one of six orientation sessions that would explain the retirement plans. All employees were cautioned that the decision to switch from CSRS to FERS would be entirely the individual's decision." The two remaining sessions will be held at 9 a.m. Aug. 4 and 6 at Infantry Hall, classroom 9.

Deciding whether to stay with CSRS or switch to FERS won't be easy for most employees. The two systems are very different from one another, and the only way to know with absolute certainty which one is better for you would be to know exactly what the future will hold.

Fortunately, both CSRS and FERS are good retirement systems offering good benefits. You can figure out which one will probably benefit you more by assessing your present financial status and future financial goals; making reasonable assumptions about what will happen in the future; and educating yourself on CSRS and FERS.

The article which appears here provides a general overview of various aspects of the two systems, in order to help personnel make an informed decision. The information presented here was taken from a number of different official and unofficial sources, and may or may not apply in all individual cases. The decision to switch should be decided by the person enrolled in either plan, so more research may be necessary before choosing whether to switch or to stay.

Introduction

Let's begin with a basic comparison of the Civil Service Retirement System and the Federal Employees Retirement System.

CSRS is a classic "defined benefits" program which pays benefits according to a set formula and requires no positive action on the part of individual employees.

In the case of CSRS, annuity payments are calculated using a formula based on the average amount of the highest three years of salary earned by an employee. Employees covered by CSRS do not pay into the Social Security system (unless they are covered by CSRS Offset); instead, a fixed percentage of basic pay is withheld for CSRS.

While some changes have been made over the years, CSRS isn't much different today than when it was first formulated in 1920. CSRS works best for employees who have a long, uninterrupted career with the federal government, and its benefits essentially cannot be transferred to other jobs. According to one study, only 30 percent of federal employees work long enough to qualify for full CSRS benefits.

The Federal Employees Retirement System is a three-tiered program requiring positive action on the part of employees who hope to enjoy their retirement years. FERS is made up of Social Security, a small pension known as the Basic Benefit, and the Thrift Savings Plan, which is similar to 401(k) and other tax-deferred plans offered to employees in the private sector.

Employees covered by FERS are responsible for opening their own Thrift Savings Plan accounts and regularly contributing money to them. Those who fail to do so may find that Social Security and FERS pension payments will not be adequate to maintain their lifestyles into retirement.

Though CSRS employees can open and contribute to Thrift Savings Plan accounts, they do not receive the matching government contributions offered to FERS employees.

Under the law which set up the Federal Employees Retirement System, all employees hired on or after Jan. 1, 1984, are automatically covered by FERS. The law permanently closed CSRS to new hires but contained a "grandfather clause" which allowed present employees to remain in the system.

FERS is designed to be "portable," meaning that employees can easily take their retirement benefits with them when they interrupt or end their government careers. Such a system is well suited for the fast-paced, modern world of work, in which employees can expect to change jobs and employers several times during their careers.

With no new employees entering CSRS, FERS has gradually overtaken it as the most popular retirement system among federal workers. As of the end of 1996, 49 percent of all federal employees were covered by FERS; 44 percent were covered by CSRS; and the remaining seven percent were covered by other systems.

If you are in the "other" category, you may or may not be eligible to transfer to FERS, or other special conditions may apply. The CSRS category includes employees covered by CSRS Offset, a hybrid of CSRS and Social Security that generally applies to employees originally covered by CSRS who left federal service for one year or more and returned after 1983. You can transfer to FERS if you are now covered by CSRS Offset, but you should consider your special circumstances before making that decision.

Cost to participate

Simply stated, the cost to participate in both CSRS and FERS is seven percent of your basic pay, an amount which is taken out of each paycheck automatically. However, you should not transfer to FERS unless you can supplement that automatic payment with some contributions of your own.

The seven percent deducted for your CSRS annuity is matched by a seven percent contribution from your employing agency. The money is invested in securities issued by the U.S. Treasury, with contributions and earnings used to fund annuity payments.

The seven percent which you must pay to participate in FERS is divided into two parts. Employees pay 0.8 percent for their Basic Benefit, plus another 6.2 percent in Social Security taxes. If your earnings are relatively high, though, you will actually pay a lower percentage to Social Security, which will in turn bring your automatic contribution below seven percent. That's because Social Security taxes are only taken out on earnings below the "maximum taxable wage base"; in 1998, that base is set at $68,400.

Beyond the seven percent, FERS employees should be prepared to contribute some of their own pay into a Thrift Savings Plan account. Financial analysts agree that failure to do so could result in a drastic loss of income at retirement. Thus, if you are a CSRS employee who is unwilling or unable to make Thrift Savings Plan contributions, you ought to stay with CSRS.

Regardless of whether you are covered by CSRS or FERS, the contributions you make to a TSP account are tax deferred. This means that the money is taken out before federal and state income taxes are calculated, which lowers the amount of income subject to taxation and so reduces your tax liability. So, if you choose to put 5 percent of your income into your TSP account, your actual take-home pay will be lowered by something less than 5 percent.

Figuring CSRS annuity

As stated, CSRS is most generous to those who spend a long career with the government, with a bonus thrown in for those who save their sick leave.

The basis for your CSRS annuity is a percentage of your highest three consecutive years of basic pay, i.e. the three years in a row when your salary was at its peak. In nearly all cases, the "high three" years are the final three years of an employee's career.

CSRS annuity payments are fully indexed to inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index. If the CPI for a given year is 5 percent, your annuity payments will rise by 5 percent. In certain years, however, Congress has sometimes chosen to cap or delay the increase.

Figuring FERS annuity

The formula for calculating FERS annuities is also based on "high three" salaries and years of service. For FERS, the formula works as follows: 1 percent of your "high three" for every year of service. If you are age 62 with at least 20 years of service when you retire, the percentage increases to 1.1 percent.

The Thrift Savings Plan

Thanks to a booming stock market, many federal employees have seen their Thrift Savings Plan accounts grow substantially in the past few years. Some observers feel that the lure of big TSP

Something was clearly different on Camp Rogers Tuesday afternoon as a group of trainees tried to tame the Malvesti Obstacle Course.

The obstacles stood as they have since the course's creation and ranger cadre issued the same motivational words of advice, but the silhouettes which scaled each obstacle seemed slightly smaller in stature than the course's usual victims.

More than 100 Naval Sea Cadets, all ranging in age from 13-17, tackled the course as part of the federally chartered organization's two-week boot camp held on Fort Benning.

This is the first year Fort Benning has hosted the camp due to the closure of two out of three major naval training stations, said Lt. Cmdr. Paul Friedman, commanding officer of the Alexandria, Va., based section of the corps.

"The Great Lakes station was getting an overload of trainees so we looked into holding the camp elsewhere," Friedman said. "Fort Benning was able to accommodate our training needs and permitted us to use their facilities."

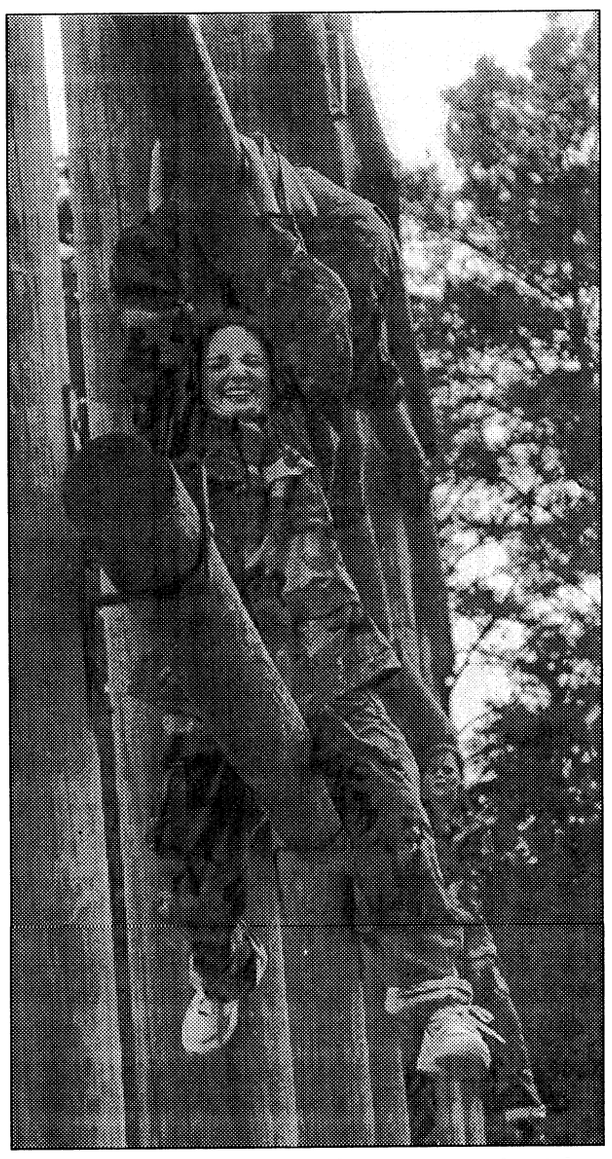
Unlike most summer camps, the purpose of the naval camp was to accomplish more than just having fun.

"The purpose of this camp is to introduce the cadets to maritime services and military life," Friedman said.

During their stay, the cadets were required to complete both academic and physical training (PT) portions of the camp.

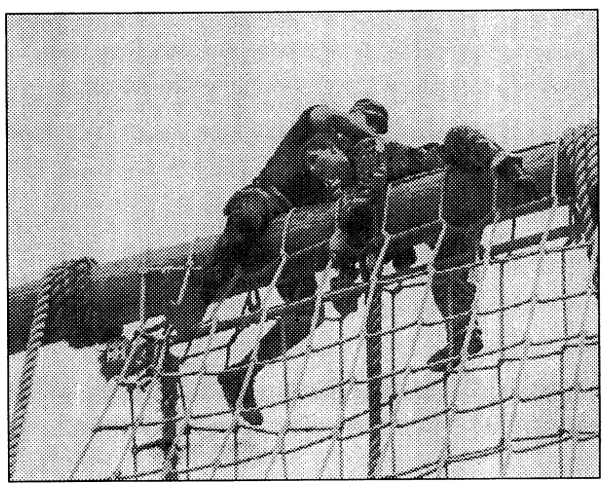
The academic portion of the camp included instruction on areas such as chain of command and shipboard communications while the physical aspect tested each cadet's stamina and endurance during numerous obstacle courses and PT sessions.

"This camp is similar to what Soldiers go through during BCT (basic combat training)," Friedman said. "We have drill instructors who lead the cadets through exercises dealing with areas such as customs, procedures, PT and teamwork."



Friedman added that the camp is a requirement for cadets before they can go to the more advanced courses offered to naval cadets.

Justin Bosch, 15, of Miami, said he joined the program because he would like to become a naval pilot.



"This program is a good way to get started out," he said. "I have learned a lot already about the Navy and this is definitely something I would like to continue."

While the camp focuses on educating the cadets on the military, Friedman hopes the students take home a little more.

"They should walk away with self-pride, dignity and confidence in themselves for what they've accomplished," he said.

Cadet Natalya Lenko grimaces as she tries to lift herself up onto one of the obstacles Tuesday at Camp Rogers.

Instructors

TLB cadre trains thousands of officers each year

Capt. Joel B. Krauss
Infantry Officers Basic Course

At Fort Benning, literally thousands of Soldiers receive training daily in every facet of the Infantry skills. While some instructors receive more attention than others, there are many unsung heroes on post.

One such organization is the Tactical Leadership Branch (TLB) assigned to the 2nd Battalion (IOBC), 11th Infantry Regiment.

The TLB is a committee of instructors charged with the training of Infantry lieutenants at Fort Benning, but their commitment and dedication to duty spans a much greater responsibility.

Under the leadership of Sgt. 1st Class Brett Shafer and Sgt. 1st Class Johnny Starkey, the junior and senior NCOs which comprise the TLB give many lieutenants their first contact with the professional NCO Corps.

The leadership branch instructs IOBC students on a wide range of tasks all of which are based out of the TLB training area on Garnsey Range. The cadre annually trains more than 3,000 lieutenants and officer candidates.

The training conducted may occur in several different formats, but the most common is the Squad Drill Situational Training Exercise.

During this program of instruction, student officers receive an eight-hour period of instruction in Infantry Hall, then proceed to Garnsey Range for the practical application phase which lasts four days.

While on Garnsey Range, the students plan, organize, resource and execute 12 squad-level battle drills. Of these drills, two are live-fire exercises and a third includes the employment of live hand grenades at Flint Attack Course.

During the course of a training year, TLB trains seven active component IOBC companies in addition to several federal and state OCS companies.

Besides the operations conducted on Garnsey Range, TLB also plans and executes two advanced land navigation field problems per IOBC company. These advanced land navigation courses are up to 24 hours in length and are physically demanding on the student as well as the cadre.

Finally, TLB has the additional responsibility for conducting the pre-ranger course which is between one and three weeks and is designed to help the prospective ranger student for the rigors of Ranger School.

They may not receive the accolades of their more publicized fellow NCOs, but the cadre lives up to the battalion motto of "Train the Leaders" each and every day.

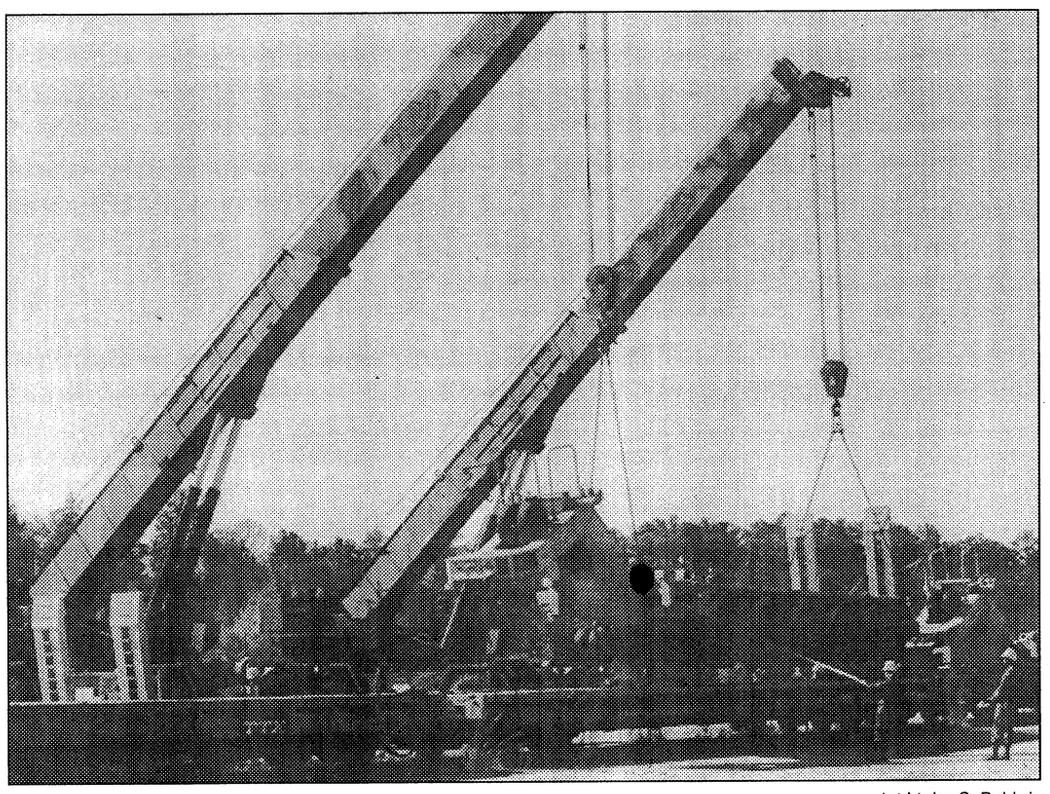
13th CSB rises to daily challenges

1st Lt. Glenda Gill
13th Corps Support Battalion

The U.S. Army Infantry Center and School are vital units of the Army that produce Soldiers trained for a variety of tasks. But like every combat unit in the Army, they need help to accomplish their critical mission.

As the only corps-level support battalion on Fort Benning, the men and women of the 13th Corps Support Battalion (CSB), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), rise to the daily challenge of providing direct and indirect logistics support to every unit on post.

The 13th CSB, however, is by no means a garrison support unit, said Maj. Mike O'Bea, the battalion's executive officer.



In recent years, the battalion has deployed in support of Operations Desert Shied, Desert Storm and Restore Hope in addition to supporting the 1996 Olympics and numerous rotations through the National Training Center (NTC) in Fort Irwin, Calif.

"The 13th CSB performs its daily mission quietly and professionally," said O'Bea. Some of the battalion's daily missions include operating the Ammunition Supply Point (ASP), transporting line-haul missions, moving armored vehicles, operating cranes and forklifts in addition to providing direct support maintenance.

The battalion also supports the 75th Ranger Regiment and 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) during their Division Ready Brigade cycles.

In addition to performing these logistics tasks, 13th CSB Soldiers also serve as the Opposing Force (OPFOR) for various classes around post and serve as color guards, escorts and drivers for visiting dignitaries, O'Bea said.

While the battalion mainly serves those around Fort Benning, more than 80 Soldiers from the battalion are currently deployed to Taszar, Hungary where they are operating the ASP for U.S. forces in support of Operation Joint Guard. O'Bea said the remaining portion of the company has been busy processing more than 1,800 transactions through the Fort Benning ASP.

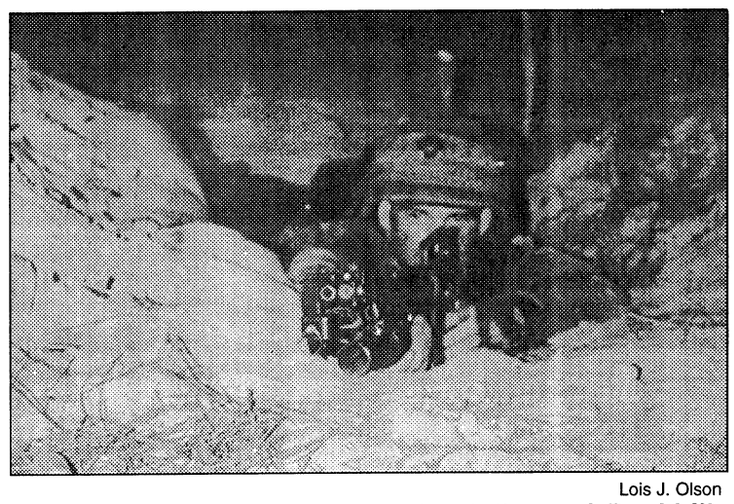
Members of the 608th Ordnance Company load trailers from the 233rd Heavy Equipment Transport Platoon in preparation for an NTC rotation .

Fifty Soldiers from various units throughout the battalion have also worked with the Fort Benning Directorate of Logistics at the port of Jacksonville, Fla., to support the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) from Fort Campbell, Ky.

Other recent missions include moving more than 80 semi-trailer loads of material worth $8 million from the U.S. Marine Corps Logistics Base in Albany, Ga. by the 104th Transportation Company.



The 598th Maintenance Company has also completed 545 work orders this year and processed more than 36,500 supply transactions through its parts warehouse.

O'Bea added that the 233rd Heavy Equipment Transport Platoon has saved 3rd Brigade and 29th Infantry Regiment units more than $400,000 in costs associated with transporting armored vehicles to and from ranges and training areas.

The 13th CSB will continue their full schedule of events well into the fall. In addition to an upcoming external evaluation, the battalion will also support 3rd Brigade during exercise Marne Focus and a rotation through NTC.

O'Bea said while the Infantry remains the Queen of Battle, the Soldiers of the 13th CSB will continue to keep her well supplied, serviced and able to train future warriors.

"The leaders and Soldiers of the 13th CSB are proud of their contributions to the Army and Fort Benning community," O'Bea said. "We are always ready to provide professional and responsive logistics support."

Candidates conquer Capstone exercise

Lois J. Olson
Bayonet correspondent

As dawn turned the sky purple July 8, Officer Candidate School candidates from five states and one U.S. territory ended Field Leadership Exercise III, better known as Capstone.

Capstone, the culmination of five days of platoon operations conducted by National Guard OCS candidates from Ga., N.C., Miss., Ky., S.C., Ala., Fla. and Puerto Rico, started with a bang. Flares lit up the early morning sky and gunfire broke the stillness as 2nd Platoon defended a landing zone on Selby Hill against a company attack from 1st, 3rd and 4th platoons.

OCS candidates from 2nd Platoon stretched rolled concertina wire across the red clay road and dug into fox holes, their weapons locked and loaded, in preparation for the attack. When it came, the dam broke. Those who "died" lay where they fell and found themselves laughing at each other.

"Dead people don't talk," barked one OCS instructor. The "living" regrouped and formulated their next move. Despite careful planning by 2nd Platoon, Selby Hill fell to the attackers.

Capstone, a rotation of four missions conducted for platoon leadership training, consisted of a platoon raid, movement to contact, vehicular ambush and dismounted ambush. Capstone is the culmination of candidates' OCS Phase III training.

ACAP advises early planning

Army Career and Alumni Program

Separating Soldiers need to start their Individual Transition Plan (ITP) early.

An individual transition plan is a separating Soldier's comprehensive plan for transition back to civilian life and a new career.

"So you think life in the Army is difficult? Well, leaving the Army just might be one of the most challenging and stressful tasks you could undertake as a Soldier. If not prepared with a well organized transition plan, a person might end up with last minute panic, stress and confusion when attempting to clear the military," said Chick Eagle, ACAP counselor. "A Soldier might also find himself or herself taking a job paying less than a military salary. The ACAP process was developed by the Army to answer quality-of-life concerns our congressional leaders had concerning the separation process. ACAP prepares Soldiers and helps them and their families make transitions with dignity and respect."

Ideally, the ITP should be prepared six months before separation or retirement date if the date is known. Ninety days before separation or retirement date is the minimum directed by Congress. If the exact date is pending, but not known, the ACAP center recommends starting the process as soon as possible to ensure the Soldier has sufficient time to prepare for transition.

Attending a three-day ACAP pre-separation briefing and workshop in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, starts the process. The briefings scheduled for August, September and October 1998 are as follows:

August 1998: Aug. 3-5-ETS, Aug. 10-12-Retirement, Aug. 17-19-ETS, Aug. 24-26-ETS

September 1998: Aug. 31-Sept. 2-ETS, Sept. 14-16-Retirement, Sept. 21-23-ETS, Sept. 28-30-ETS

October 1998: Oct. 5-7-ETS, Oct. 19-21-Retirement, Oct. 26-28-ETS

For more information about ACAP pre-separation briefings, workshops and services, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309. The ACAP Center is located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

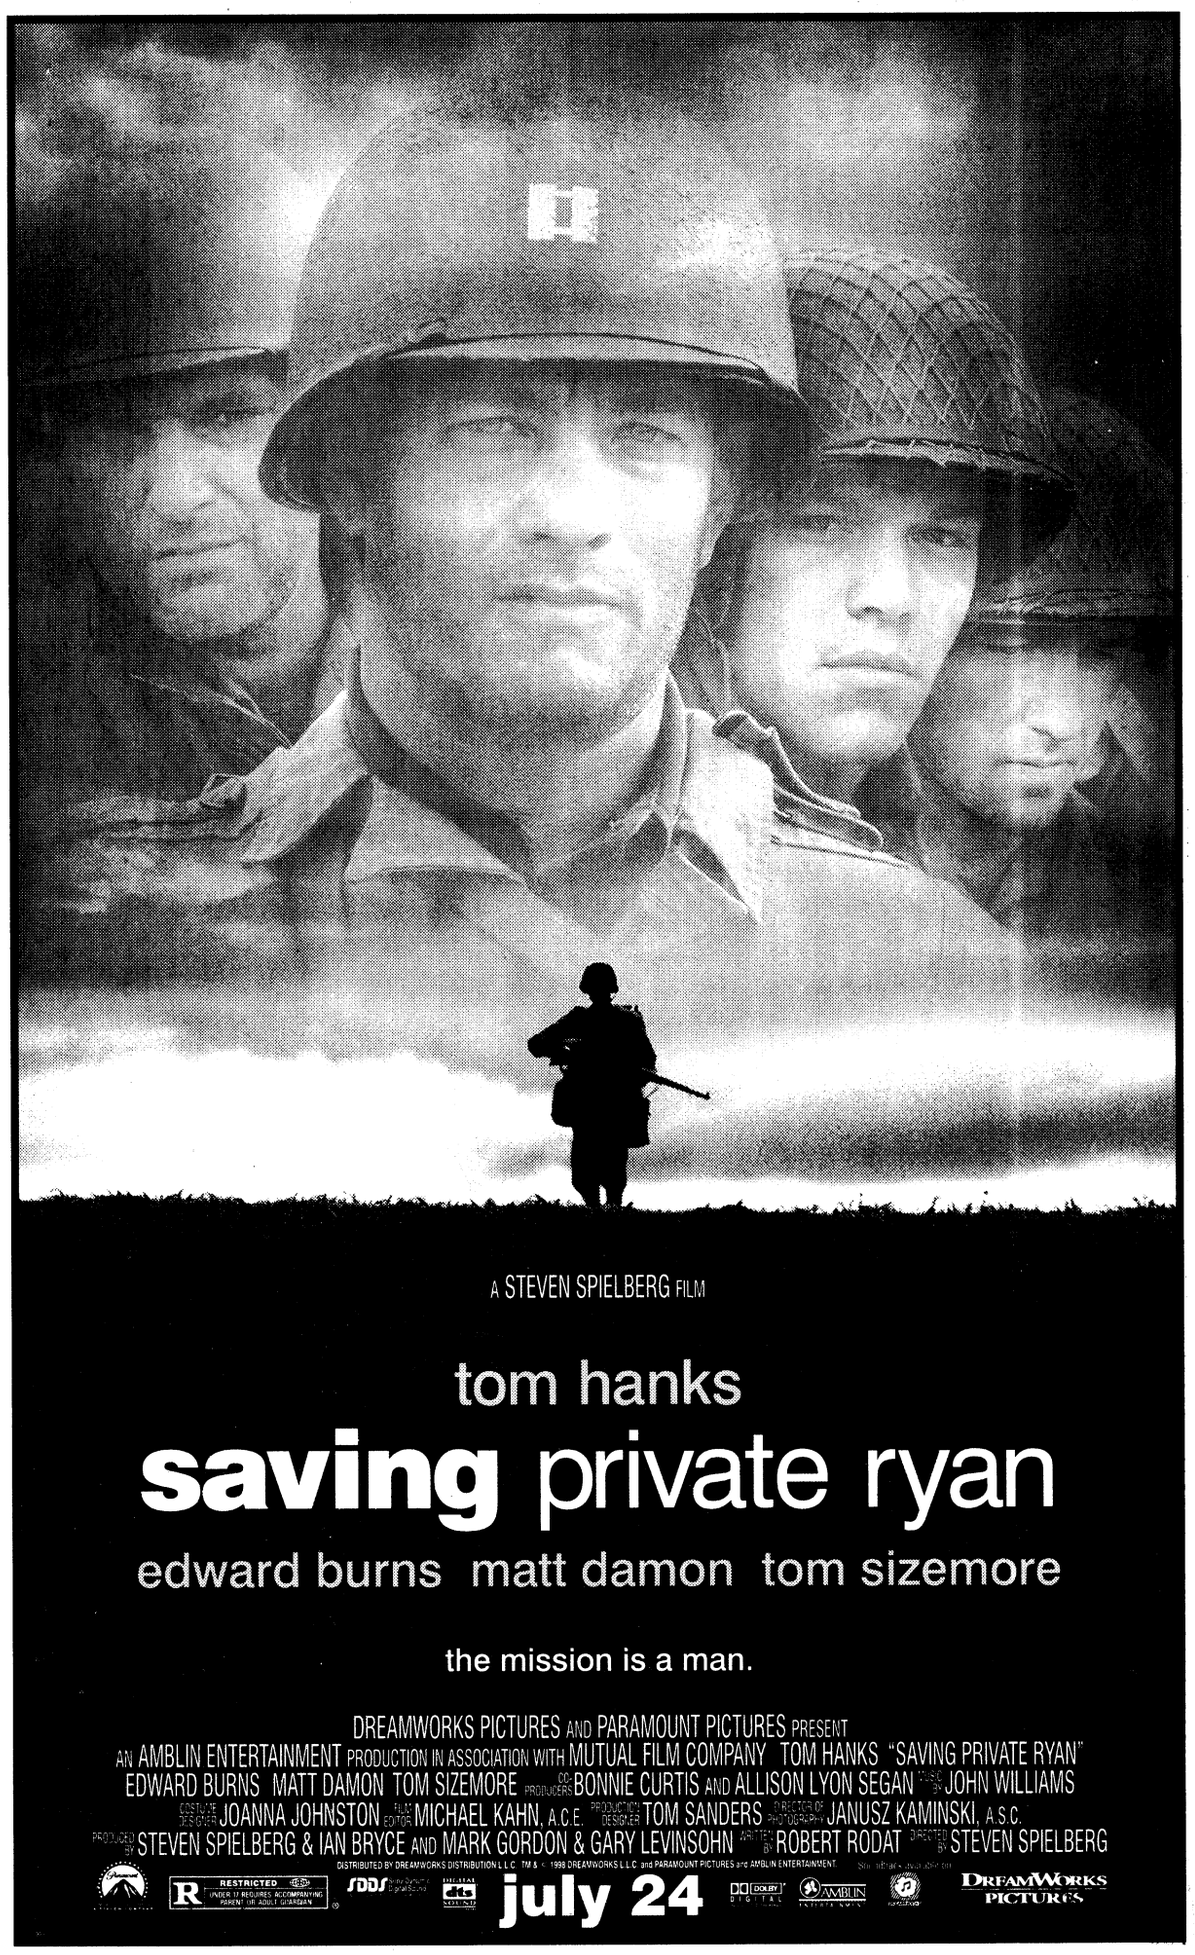
Geico Direct's 3 Millionth Policyholder From the Military

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 10, 1998 — GEICO Direct, one of the country's fastest growing auto insurers, reached a milestone when it added its 3 millionth policyholder on May 21. Randall and Carol Ertzberger, a military family from Kennesaw, Ga., purchased the policy through GEICO Direct's Fredericksburg, Va., office.

Command Master Chief Randall Ertzberger, who just returned to the U.S. from duty in Italy, serves at the Naval Recruiting District in Atlanta, Ga.



"We're particularly pleased that a military couple helped GEICO reach this milestone, since military families have been with us since our beginning in 1936," said Richard Kidd, assistant vice president for GEICO's military services. "Our military marketing program and national advertising campaign is helping drivers realize the savings from dealing directly with the company and the convenience of 24-hour service seven days a week. Our goal is to serve all those who serve our great nation."

GEICO Direct began accelerating its growth in 1995 with a strategy that let it provide rate quotes to almost every caller. The company grew by 10 percent in 1996, the year that it became a part of Berkshire Hathaway Inc., and 16 percent in 1997. Its growth reached 18.9 percent during the first quarter of 1998. The company adds more than 10,000 drivers each week and insures more than 4.5 million automobiles.

To handle the growth, GEICO has initiated an expansion program that will add new buildings in five locations. Nationally, it has increased the number of associates from 8,975 at the beginning of 1997 to more than 12,000, and those numbers continue to grow.

GEICO has five regional offices (Fredericksburg, Va.; Woodbury, N.Y.; Macon, Ga.; San Diego; and Dallas), four branch offices (Lakeland, Fla.; Virginia Beach, Va.; Coralville, Iowa; and Honolulu) and corporate headquarters in Washington, D.C. It is wholly owned by Berkshire Hathaway.

CSRS-FERS: Option to switch available until December 31st earnings will lead a number of employees to switch from CSRS to FERS. But before you make the switch, consider these facts:

*The Thrift Savings Plan is not a "get rich quick" scheme. It's designed as a long-term retirement savings program for those can invest some of their own money a little at a time.

Just as FERS is made up of three components, the Thrift Savings Plan is made up of three funds: The C Fund, a common stock fund that is coming off two straight years of record returns; the F Fund, a bond index fund made up of high-quality, fixed income securities; and the G Fund, a U.S. Treasury fund made up of short-term, non-marketable government securities issued especially for TSP investors. In terms of risk and reward, the C Fund offers the highest potential returns but also the greatest risk; the G Fund is super-safe, having never posted a loss in any month while plodding along at a relatively low rate; and the F Fund is somewhere in between.

In about two years, the C, F and G Funds will be joined by two new funds. The S Fund will be made up of small-capitalization stocks traded on domestic markets, while the I Fund will be made up of international securities traded on overseas markets. If history is any guide, the S and I Funds will offer even greater risk, and potentially higher returns, than the C Fund. The addition of the funds will enable TSP investors to further diversify their investment portfolios.

Contributions to a TSP account can be made through payroll deduction only, meaning that only active employees can make payments into their accounts. You can put up to five percent of basic pay into your TSP account if you are covered by CSRS, and up to 10 percent if you are covered by FERS.

Along with a higher contribution limit, FERS employees also receive a matching government contribution. Even those who choose to contribute nothing receive a matching contribution equal to 1 percent of pay that is placed in a TSP account set up in their name.

If you do contribute to your TSP account, your contribution is matched dollar for dollar up to 3 percent of your pay, and matched 50 cents on the dollar for the next 2 percent. After that, contributions are no longer matched. Add it all up, and the matching government contribution has a maximum limit of 5 percent.

You decide how the money is allocated among the C, F and G Funds. You can change the way you allocate your payroll contribution, or change the amount of that contribution, during Thrift Savings Plan open seasons held twice each year. You can also perform interfund transfers, which allow you to move money among the funds in an existing account, up to once a month.

Your TSP account is fully portable, meaning you can take it with you when you leave government service either through retirement, resignation or involuntary separation. At that time, you can choose to receive your account in a lump sum payment; to avoid taxes, you can have TSP administrators make an institution-to-institution transfer to an Individual Retirement Account or other eligible plan. You can also purchase a life annuity, or receive your account in a series of equal payments. If you choose the latter option, any money remaining in your account will continue to earn compound interest.

You can learn more by visiting the Thrift Savings Plan site on the World Wide Web, at www.tsp.gov. The site contains a calculator which you can use to project the growth of your current account balance plus future contributions and earnings.

If you transfer

When and if you transfer to FERS, you can choose your retirement date based on the more flexible FERS rules. All your years of federal service, including those spent under CSRS, will be used in determining your retirement eligibility.

Upon retirement, employees who transferred to FERS from CSRS will receive annuity payments with a CSRS and a FERS component. The CSRS component will be calculated using the CSRS annuity formula applied to the years of service spent under CSRS; ditto for the FERS component.

Unused sick leave will be credited toward the CSRS component based on the sick leave balance you had when you transferred or when you retired, whichever is less. Full cost of living adjustments will be paid on the CSRS component.

A transfer to FERS takes effect in the first pay period following processing of the transfer form. The 30 days following submission of the form serve as your own Thrift Savings Plan open season; during that time, you can adjust the amount and allocation of your TSP contribution or open an account, even if a regular TSP open season is not taking place.

How to transfer

You can switch retirement plans by filling out and signing an SF 3109, the form needed to transfer to FERS.

Remember, your decision to transfer to FERS is absolutely irrevocable, and you will never be allowed back in CSRS. Do not submit a transfer form unless you're absolutely certain that you want to switch to FERS.

If you plan to stay in CSRS, you need do nothing during the open season. But those who fail to act by the Dec. 31 deadline will likely never get the opportunity to switch to FERS again.

The best source of official information on the CSRS-FERS open season is the U.S. Office of Personnel Management's Web site, at www.opm.gov. There, you can download a copy of the "FERS Transfer Handbook," which contains detailed information on the two retirement systems, and the "FERS Transfer Model," which you can use to compare the benefits you'd receive under FERS with those you'd receive under CSRS.

For more information or to volunteer, call the First Steps office at 544-2020.

Pharmacy phone-in system gets $15,000 upgrade — The phone-in refill system has received an upgrade and it is no longer necessary to wait for the recording. If calling from a touch-tone phone, it will instruct customers to press one. This enables customers to bypass the remaining recorded message and begin refill requests immediately. The number for the Pharmacy Phone-In Refill System is 544-1352.

For information, call pharmacy services at 544-4497 or 544-4771.

Red Cross needs books — The Fort Benning Red Cross station seeks old and new books, games, playing cards and magazines for Martin Army Community Hospital. Donations can be delivered to 601 Wickersham Drive or dropped off at the Red Cross office on Vibbert Street.

For pick-up or more information, call Judith Markelz 687-7246 or 545-5194.

OWC needs instructors — The Officer Wives' Club needs instructors and facilitators willing to share their talents to teach others a new skill for the OWC Fall Activities Sign-up.

Anyone interested in teaching anything from a language to quilting can contact LeAnn Volesky at 682-7890.

School assignments, requirements set for 1998-99 Registration

Fort Benning School Administration

Registration for the 1998-99 school year for students in pre-K through eighth grade will be conducted at all seven Fort Benning Schools from July 27 through Aug. 7. Hours for registration will be from 8:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and from 1 to 3 p.m. each day. School will begin on Aug. 25.

Requirements for Registration

•Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register. The items are determined by the student's age, grade and whether the child has previously attended a Fort Benning School.

•A child must attain the age of 5 years, on or before September 1, 1998 to enter the Fort Benning Schools. Pre-K students must be 4 years old on or before Sept. 1, 1998.

•Birth certificates or other proof of birth will be required for children to be enrolled in either pre-K, kindergarten or first grade unless they attended kindergarten at Fort Benning last school year.

•Students registering at Fort Benning for the first time will be required to present a Record of Immunization at registration. This requirement will be strictly enforced. Check with your physician or clinic if you are unsure of your child's immunization requirements.

•All students except pre-kindergarten and kindergarten must have a report card or grade placement record.

•Georgia Certificate of Eye, Ear, and Dental Screening is required for all pre-K and kindergarten students.

An appointment for a Georgia Certificate of Immunization and a Georgia Certificate of Eye, Ear and Dental Screening is required for all pre-K and kindergarten students.

An appointment for a Georgia Certificate of Immunization and a Georgia Certificate of Eye, Ear and Dental screening can be obtained by calling the ENT clinic at 544-3041 or 544-3042 for an appointment.

For further information regarding registration in the Fort Benning Schools, call 545-2500.

Families put in Soldier's boots for day

Maria Taylor
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The mouth of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle opened and out rolled four VIPs — four little "towheads" followed by their dad in his battle dress uniform and mom with baby on hip.

Minutes before, the family had buckled up, their heads covered with helmets the weight of small iron skillets and lurched forward for a bumpy ride around Red Cloud Range. Inside the tight, dark quarters of the Bradley, the only light was provided by a five by seven inch square window on either side.

The ride was compliments of the 1st and 2nd Battalions, 29th Infantry Regiment, which sponsored "Family Orientation Day" July 15 for Soldiers, family members and other guests.

For the 250 who took advantage of the cool morning, it appeared to be more of an outdoor museum for kids and adults alike: peering through the sights of machine guns and sniper weapons, climbing around the track vehicles larger than some houses, riding in HMMWV's, and even testing their aim on Weaponeers, M-16 marksmanship trainers that allow "firing" either at computer screen target or normal targets.

Many children walked away looking like little Soldiers, with their faces painted in camouflage by the big Soldiers.

However the thunder of the ammunition during the Bradley live-fire demonstration reminded everyone of what their husbands, daddies and friends constantly train for.

"It helps us understand who they are," said Melanie Eaker, whose husband, Spc. John Eaker, serves in Company A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"We want to be involved," said Jennifer Winekoff, wife of Staff Sgt. Jason Winekoff. "The Army is a total lifestyle. We want to be able to relate to them when they come home and talk the Army talk."

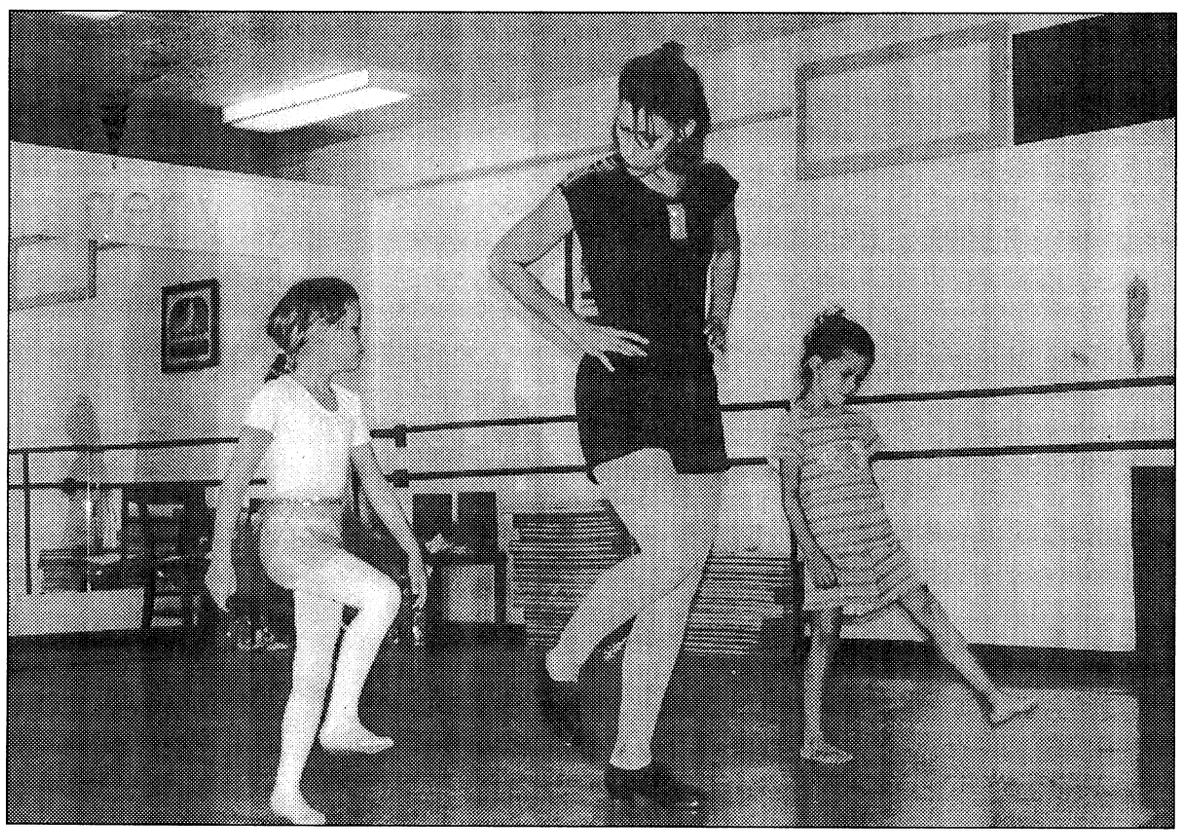
Lt. Col. Jerry Reyes, commander of 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., and chair of the event, said Family Day is especially helpful to spouses for whom the military world is still new. He said it is meant to be more than a field trip, it is about building family support in the unit.

Not only does it give the Soldier a chance to show his family what he does, said Reyes, "It gives the chain of command the opportunity to meet the families we never see." The families themselves get to know each other, as well.

Maria Taylor

Bettie Jones of Cincinnati, attempts to climb out of a M-88 heavy recovery vehicle. Jones attended Family Orientation Day July 15 with her grandson, Pvt.1 William Marshall, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The 1st Battalion's Family Support Group, composed of Soldiers and spouses, meet once a month to come up with new ideas. Reyes said the feedback from spouses on events like Family Day is simple: "More of it."



Problems at home are no respecter of military families, either.

"Our families experience accidents, death and poverty. Where do they turn? They turn to other family and that's what we are," Reyes said.

Soldiers in the regiment's two battalions were given time off to spend the morning with their spouses and children, but many, like Sgt. Barry Kulinski, also had a hand in making the event happen. Kulinski's wife, Soon Kyung, recently joined him from Korea and was with him at Family Day.

"She knows I go to work and come home every day, but that's about it," Kulinski said. Kyung has adjusted well to life at Fort Benning, he added, in part due to activities like Family Day.

"Fort Benning is great," Kulinski said. "They really focus on family development, especially in the battalion."

OWC dance camp

Little feet learn basics of dance

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

It's already mid-summer and the constant pitter patter of feet running through the house may be enough to have some parents wish the school year would arrive early. However, parents received a break and children were able to expend some of the summer's energy by putting their pitter patter to good use at the Officers' Wives Club (OWC) School of Performing Arts dance camp June 13-17.

According to Regina DeStefano, dance teacher for OWC dance camp, the camp gave children ages 3 and up an opportunity to spend two hours each day learning the basics of ballet, tap, jazz and creative movement.

Creative movement, which is directed towards the younger children, helps the children develop large motor skills and organization by doing things like marching with instruments such as triangles and wooden sticks.

DeStefano said the dance camp sets a foundation for children to allow them to determine whether or not they have enough interest in dance to pursue it.

"I teach them the basics and help them decide if they want to further themselves as dancers," DeStefano said.

During the camp, children jumped, twirled, marched and tapped as DeStafano went through basic movements of a variety of dances.

"I like tap the best because I like to dance like that," said Nicole Brodie, 8, a dance camp student. "I've danced for two years and it's a lot of fun."

DeStefano also said that besides dance camp, year-round dance lessons are available for $25 a month and are open to all military children.

Classes are held from September through June, with recitals in December and May.

For more information about dance lessons, call DeStefano at 682-4789.

Beat the heat with summer tips

Georgia Emergency Management Agency

The sweltering summer heat struck Georgia early this year, and temperatures will likely continue to hover in the 90s for the next few months, creating the potential for serious, and potentially fatal, heat-related illnesses.

Georgia's summertime temperatures commonly reach the 90s for days or weeks at a time. An increase in humidity occurs as well, causing the body to lose water in an effort to cool itself.

The effects of sun and heat can be deadly. Young children, the elderly, and people with health problems, such as a cardiac or respiratory disease, are more likely to be affected by the heat since their ability to absorb and retain water may be inhibited by medications and poor blood circulation.

Strenuous activities cause the body to lose water in the form of sweat. Sweating, by itself, though, cannot cool the body unless excess water is removed by evaporation. The evaporation process, however, is depressed by high humidity.

The various heat-related disorders are linked to the body's inability to shed heat by circulatory changes and sweating, or a chemical imbalance caused by too much sweating. The heat disorders include heat cramps, heat exhaustion, and heat stroke. An estimated 175 people die each year in the United States from heat related illnesses.

Medical experts advise: wear lightweight and light colored clothing; drink plenty of water or electrolyte-replacing fluids or "sports drinks;" avoid alcoholic or caffeine beverages; avoid strenuous activities outdoors, if possible; limit exposure to high heat and humidity; and never leave children in closed, unattended vehicles.

Heat Cramps — Muscular spasms and pains, usually in the abdominal muscles or legs. They are caused by a build-up of acid compounds and an excessive loss of fluids in large muscles.

What to do:

•Move person to a cooler place, out of the sun.

•Have person sit or lie down to rest cramping muscles.

•Give small amounts of cool water and gently apply pressure and massage to the cramping muscles.

•If cramps do not subside, seek medical attention.

Heat Exhaustion (Heat Prostration) — Cool, clammy skin, dizziness, faintness, nausea and vomiting, and rapid pulse. A serious condition, it is caused by loss of fluids through heavy sweating. Blood flow to the skin increases, while vital organs experience decreased blood circulation.

What to do:

•Lay the victim down in a cool place and loosen clothing.

•Apply cool wet cloths dipped in water in small amounts. Continue with cool water every 15 minutes with the victim resting in a comfortable position.

•Administer up to one liter of water or electrolyte replacing beverage. Do not give fluids by mouth if victim is unable to hold cup or is not alert.

Heat Stroke — The most extreme and life threatening heat emergency, it can result in brain damage or death. The internal body temperature control system stops working and does not produce sweat. The internal body temperature reaches 106 degrees or higher. Heat stroke occurs when a person has suffered heat exhaustion, but has not received treatment and is continually exposed to additional heat. The victim has dry, hot skin, a rapid pulse and is typically unconscious.

What to do:

•Call 911 or Emergency Medical Service Immediately.

•Remove the victim to a cooler environment, preferably with air-conditioning.

•Remove victim's clothing and cover with a sheet or towel soaked with cool water.

•If vomiting persists, do not give victim anything to drink.

•If emergency medical care is delayed, apply ice packs to abdomen, armpits and neck.

Injuries result from unsafe use of mowers

USAIC Safety Office

Every year more than 50,000 adults and children are treated at hospital emergency rooms for injuries associated with power lawn mowers. Probably three times that many people are injured, but not seriously enough to require professional medical attention. The extra care taken while mowing grass at home or on the job is certainly worthwhile when considering some of the alternatives.

What's the cause? Serious lawn mower accidents are caused by objects picked up and thrown by mowers; riding type mowers tipping over when used on steep slopes; garden tractors or riding mowers used in reverse and running over or into innocent victims; and contact with the lawn mower blade when clearing grass from the discharge chute or adjusting the machine before the blades have fully stopped.

Victims of hedge trimmer accidents are most often hurt while changing hand position with the trimmer still running, operating the trimmer with only one hand or trying to hold the cord away from the blade.

Don't let accidents cloud the summer days ahead. Instead, follow the safety rules outlined below:

Lawn Mowers

•When buying a power mower, make sure it has a rear guard to protect hands and feet from blades and a downward-aimed discharge chute so debris is less likely to hit anyone nearby.

•Before mowing, rake up wires, cans, rocks, twigs or other litter cluttering the lawn.

•Don't ever cut a wet lawn — grass often clogs the discharge chute which makes it tempting to clear it with the machine running.

•Always turn off the mower and disconnect the spark plug wire or electric plug before unclogging or adjusting the machine. Even a slight rotation of the blade could start the engine.

•Never refuel a mower while it is running or the engine is hot.

•Mow across slopes if using a walk behind mower. With a riding type mower, drive up and down slopes for stability.

•If using an electric mower, take care not to run over the cord.

•Push, don't pull, a hand mower.

•Don't smoke near a power mower or near gasoline.

•Keep children and others out of the area being mowed.

•Wear safety glasses or goggles when mowing.

•The use of ear plugs is recommended for nearly all gasoline powered mowers.

•Don't store either the lawn mower or gasoline in a heater or utility room, or other confined area, where fire or explosion may occur.

Hedge Trimmers

•Buy a trimmer with the teeth and guards close enough together so as fingers can't fit between them.

•Be sure the trimmer has two handles, including a wide forward handle high above the cutting blades.

•Make sure the trimmer is a lightweight machine which can be handled easily.

•While cutting bushes, don't stand on a chair or ladder.

•Keep hands away from the blade.

•Use a three-wire extension cord with a three-pronged plug.

•Never clean or adjust the trimmer while it is plugged in.

•Periodically check the cord for cuts, cracks or breaks in insulation. If the cord must be repaired, use only recommended electrical tape, available at any hardware store.

•Keep children and others out of the working area.

•Don't rush. Hurrying heightens the risk of getting injured.

Fainting occurs from lack of oxygen

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Syncope (SING-kuh-pee), or fainting, occurs when the brain doesn't receive oxygen.

People lose consciousness when the brain is not getting enough oxygen rich blood for normal metabolism.

One third of all adults will experience syncope in a lifetime. Generally, there is a sudden lightheadedness and weakness. Sometimes there is blurred vision, nausea, or a rapid heartbeat. The skin may become pale, cold or sweaty.

Syncope can have many causes. A recent Mayo Clinic publication estimated the cause is unknown in as many as 35 percent of cases. The risk for syncope increases as persons age.

Syncope can be caused by something temporary which is not serious and of little concern. Fainting can signal a serious medical problem.

Fainting can be related to a drop in blood pressure. There are several causes of blood pressure drops. One of the most common is standing up too quickly.

If a person stands up faster than the body can adjust to direct blood to the brain, a person will feel faint.

As adults age, they become slower with this response. The blood pools in the legs for a longer period of time. For persons who are taking blood pressure medication, the response is slowed even more. Therefore all persons who take blood pressure medication should come to a stand slowly, especially when getting out of bed.

Anxiety, emotional and physical stress such as pain can stimulate the vagus nerve. This simulation causes the heart to slow down and causes arteries to expand. As a result the blood pressure drops. Exercise in the heat and humidity will drop pressure for this reason also.

Low blood sugar is a rare cause of syncope and can often be prevented with regular meals.

Some causes of syncope are serious. Most of these are related to a problem with the heart or with the blood vessels going to the brain.

Consult with a doctor if any of the following symptoms are identified or see your doctor if you have syncope or any of the following symptoms:

•Palpitations or irregular heartbeat

•Fainting when you turn your head

•Chest pain

•Shortness of breath

•Confusion

•Trouble talking

•Blurred vision

•Black or bloody bowel movements

For persons who may exhibit fainting symptoms, check to assure the person is breathing and has a pulse. If a person feels they are about to faint, gently ease the person to the ground to avoid injury. Simple non-serious fainting will

DPW provides update on recycling program

Directorate of Public Works

This week's article provides an update on the Fort Benning Recycling Program.

Rules

Curbside recycling collection is weekly on the same day that garbage is collected. Residents are provided with a brown recycling bin. The bin must be placed at the curb by 7 a.m. Do not put the container out prior to 6 p.m. on the previous day. Remove empty containers from the curb on the day of collection.

The following items are collected for recycling. Items that are collected for recycling may change from time to time.

•Aluminum cans

•Plastic food and beverage containers with the PETE 1 or HDPE 2 logo. Plastic containers should also be flattened.

•Glass food and beverage containers. Rinse and remove tops from glass and plastic containers.

•Paper products that can be recycled are newspapers, magazines, bags, newspaper flyers, office and school and non-corrugated paperboard boxes (flattened).

•Rinsed steel and tin cans

•Corrugated cardboard — flatten and place next to recycle bin. One box can be used to store the remaining cardboard.

•Furniture and large household appliances — place on curb on the day of pickup. To arrange for pickup of refrigerators, freezers and air conditioners, call DPW Customer Services at 545-2117.

Personal items

Personal items such as tissue, napkins, bandages, diapers, pet bedding, pizza boxes or any other contaminated items should not be set out for recycling.

Unacceptable items can result in public health problems to others and cannot be tolerated in recycling bins. Rejected items must be removed immediately from recycling bin.

Yard waste

Place leaves and grass clippings in a plastic or metal durable waste container (preferred) or in paper bags. Paper bags can be obtained at DPW Self Help Shop, Building 385.

Put yard waste out by 7 a.m. Monday. If a durable plastic or metal container is used, it will be returned to the curb after being emptied into the collection vehicle. Small limbs are acceptable if less than three feet long and two inches in diameter. Tie small limbs into a bundle. Do not place them in bags. Do not put soil in yard waste bags. Bags weighing more than 50 pounds will not be picked up.

Recycling makes a difference

With everyone's help, recycling offers great promise for improved management of solid waste. Fort Benning has exceeded federal and state solid waste reduction goals with its waste reduction, recycling and yard waste composting programs. Resident support not only has helped exceed these goals, but considerable landfill disposal capacity has been conserved for material that cannot be economically recycled.

Tips for solid waste reduction

•Recycling is more than just setting out recyclables; it is buying, recycled products and products with high recycle content.

•Reduce the amount of unnecessary packaging.

•Consider reusable products.

•Maintain and repair durable products.

•Reuse containers and other items.

•Borrow, rent and share items used infrequently.

•Sell or donate unwanted or unneeded material.

•Compost yard waste.

•Educate others about waste reduction and recycling.

•Be creative — find new ways to reduce waste.

For more information about recycling, call Walter Nichols at 545-1007 or Thomas Moore at 544-6142.

Comments and questions

For questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," call Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 67, Room 409, ATTN:ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning,GA, 31905.

Start year off with immunizations

Martin Army Community Hospital

School children are required to have immunization at the start of the school year. While immunization requirements may vary slightly from state to state, most of these immunizations will be covered by TRICARE under the Clinical Prevention Services benefit. Covered immunizations include diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus (DPT), measles, mumps, chicken pox, rubella, polio vaccine and hepatitis B.

As a TRICARE Clinical Preventive Services benefit, these immunizations are available to all TRICARE beneficiaries in age-appropriate doses and at specified age intervals.

For TRICARE Prime Beneficiaries

The following guidelines apply for immunizations given as part of the TRICARE Prime Clinical Preventative Services Benefit:

•They are available to all Prime enrollees.

•They do not require an authorization.

•If provided by a network provider, they do not require a referral.

•If performed by a non-network provider, a referral is required.

•The immunizations must be administered in a physician's office.

•If the patient goes to the doctor for the immunizations only, no copayment will be required at the time of service.*

*One co-payment may be required if the immunizations are given along with a comprehensive disease prevention exam for which the age and frequency guidelines have been exceeded. The Clinical Prevention Services benefit covers one comprehensive disease prevention exam in each of the following age ranges: 2-4; 5-11; 12-17; 18-39; 40-64.

For TRICARE Extra and Standard Beneficiaries

•There is no preauthorization required.

•There may be cost shares associated with individual CHAMPUS services if they are the only service performed and completed in the physician's office.

Your child's school should be notifying you soon if your child is due to have immunization.

If you are notified, make an appointment right away with your child's doctor for the required immunization, plus any other preventive services that may be due under the Clinical Preventive Services benefit.

And remember, you can count on TRICARE to provide for the wellness and preventive services that keep your family members healthy.

For more information about the TRICARE Clinical Preventive Service, call the Beneficiary Service Line, (800) 444-5445.

ask the judge

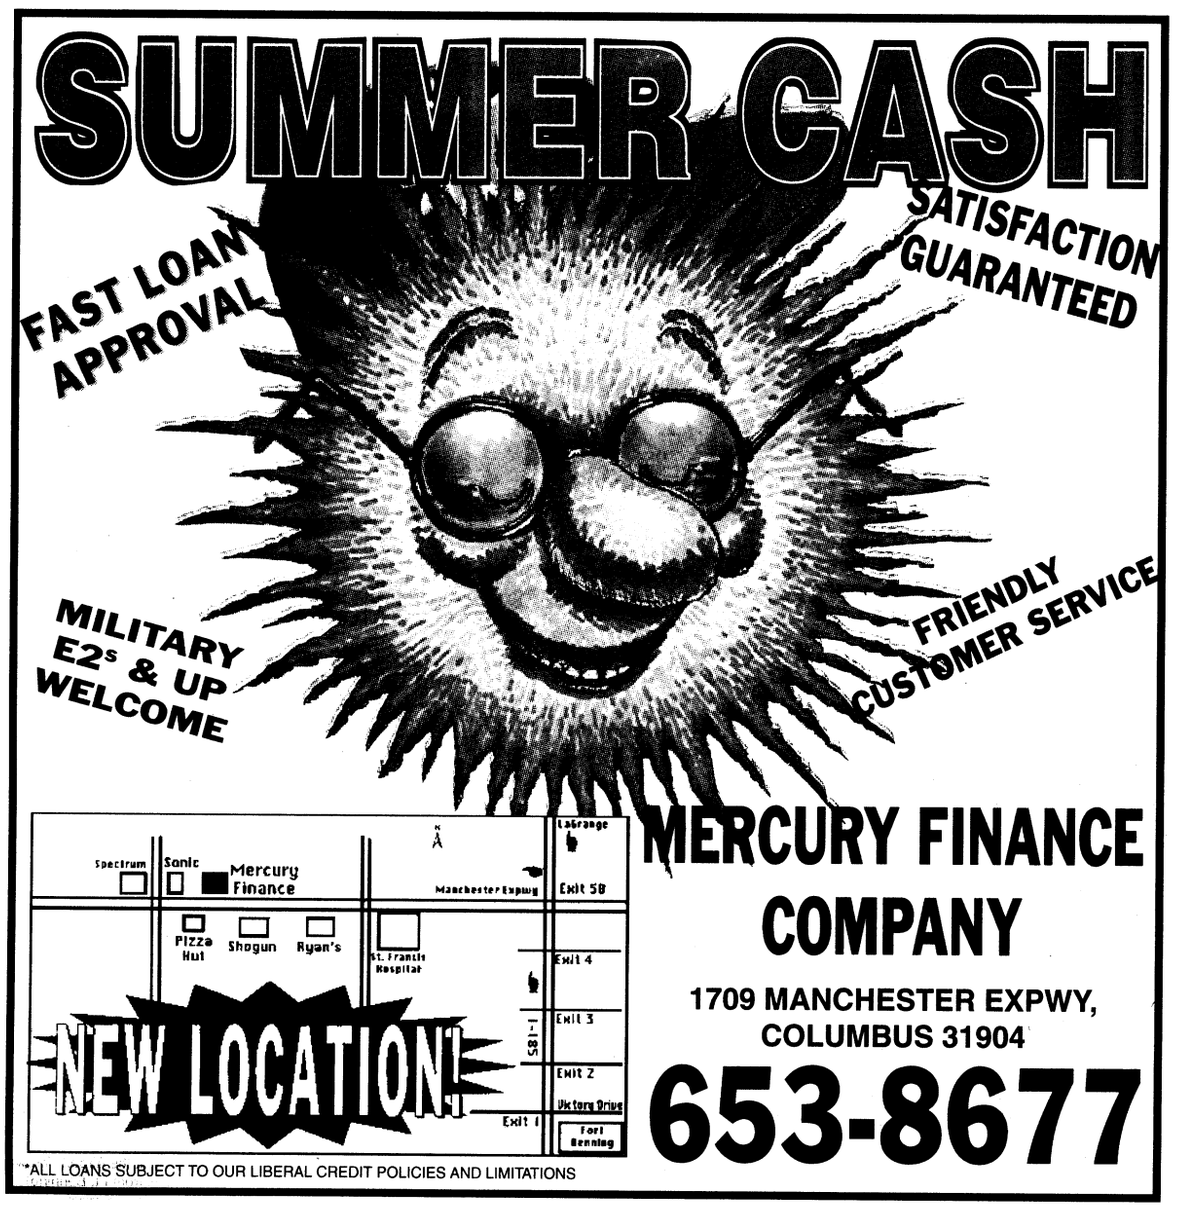
Jane M. Winand
Legal Assistance Division

Q: I have just transferred to Fort Benning and I am looking to rent an apartment in town. At my last duty station, my landlord refused to return my security deposit and I had to get the JAG attorney involved to get my money. My old landlord tried to charge me more than the security deposit to repair damages to the apartment that were there when I moved in. How can I protect myself from an unscrupulous landlord?

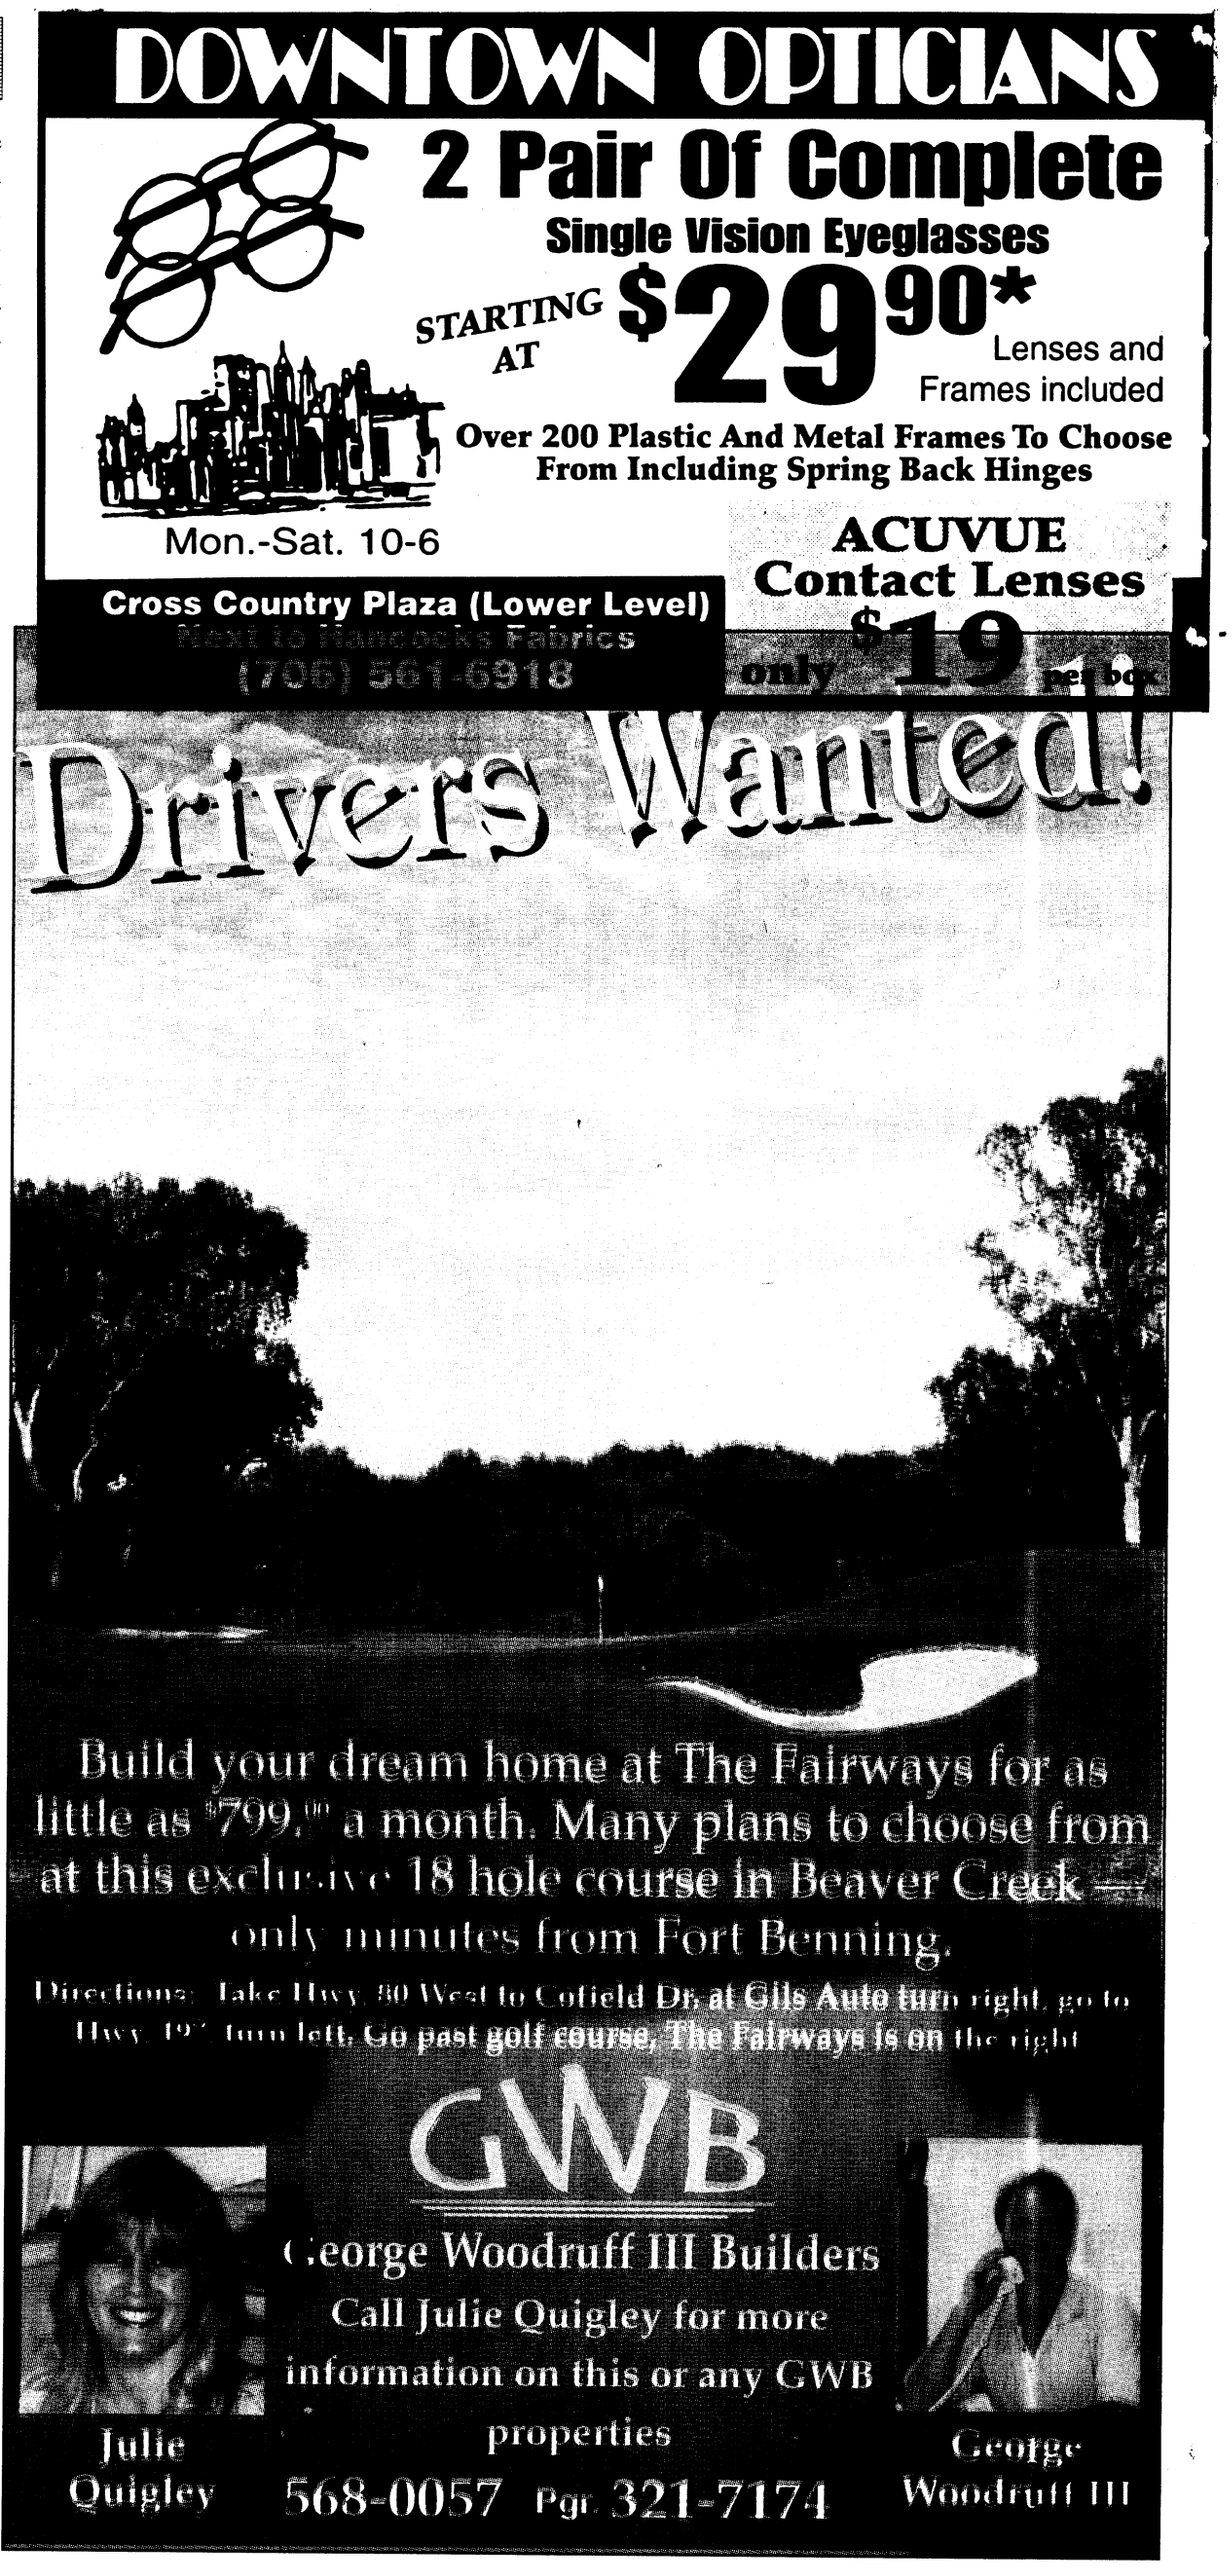
A: The best way to protect yourself is to thoroughly document all of the pre-existing damage to the rental property before you move in.

Georgia law requires all landlords who own more than ten units, or are professional property managers, to conduct a pre-move inspection to determine if the rental property is in any way damaged. Usually, the landlord will simply give you a standard form, tell you to list any damages and ask you to return the list to the leasing office. A word of advice: Fill out the form and keep a copy of it! Far too many tenants do not take the time to properly complete the form and return it to the landlord. Consequently, when the landlord withholds the security deposit for "damages" to the property after you move out, there is no way to dispute the claim, other than to pit your word against the landlord's version of the facts.

By thoroughly inspecting the property and filling out the form, you will establish the condition of the property at the time that you move in, making it difficult for the landlord to take advantage of you. Photographs and a videotape of the property will document pre-existing damages. Make sure that you keep a copy of the form and have the landlord sign your copy.



Once you move out of the apartment, the landlord must conduct an inspection, within three business days and compile a comprehensive list of damages that he or she plans to offset against your security deposit. The landlord may only charge you for damages, beyond normal wear and tear, that occurred during your tenancy. As the former tenant, you have the right to inspect the property within five business days of termination to determine if the list is accurate. If the list is not accurate, you must write a statement to that effect and submit it to the landlord immediately.



Assuming the property is substantially in the same shape when you vacate as when you moved in, the landlord must return your deposit within 30 days. A completed pre-move inspection sheet helps prevent charges for damage that existed prior to your occupancy. In Georgia, a detailed inspection sheet signed by both you and the landlord is conclusive proof as to the condition of the property at the time you moved in.

But what do you do if the landlord still will not return your security deposit, despite your "conclusive" proof? If the landlord won't return your security deposit, or worse, charges you more than your security deposit to repair pre-existing damage to the property, you may file a suit in small claims court to recover your money.

Georgia law allows you to recover three times the amount of the security deposit if the judge determines that any portion of the security deposit was wrongfully withheld.

If you decide that this course of action is necessary, you should make an appointment to speak with an attorney in the Legal Assistance Division. You may make an appointment by calling at 8 a.m. on Fridays 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Love: Become part of community by helping people you care about

Chaplain (Maj.) Sherman Baker
Martin Army Community Hospital

Too often have we spoken of love and interpreted it in a negative way. We have measured it by the scope of our willingness to deny ourselves, and how much we are willing to give up for others.

reflections

This can be very depressing. We don't always make the impression that we want to make.

However, God put love within our reach. The act of loving is something that we can participate in this very day — this day in the year of our Lord!

God tells us in his holy Word, that we should bear one another's burdens, and in doing so we will fulfill the law of Christ.

Perhaps the need to bear these burdens is greater than most of us realize.

Some fellow Soldier may be about to lose his spiritual and moral capital by gambling with his private interpretation of situation ethics. He needs to be cared for.

A Soldier's spouse or parent may be crushed and bruised by a series of events that she could not prevent. They need to be cared for.

An officer may be overextending himself as he goes beyond the call of duty to help his Soldiers. He needs to be cared for.

The above situations are just a few of the occasions when we can help and care for one another. At the same time, they represent opportunities to experience what it means to be truly human, to be a part of a community that cares.

"There is no fear in love, but perfect love drives out of fear." I John 4:18

Competitors take aim during match

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Rifle and Pistol Club hosted its monthly Tactical Rifle Match Sunday at English Range.

The rifle match gave competitors a chance to shoot from the prone supported position at three different target distances.

The competitors were given 10 rounds and allowed 30 minutes to shoot at each target. The targets are placed at 100, 200 and 300 yards.

"The 100-yard line is fairly easy," said competitor J.W. Husky. "At the 200- and 300-yard line the shots get harder. The winds start to affect the shots more, and if you are going to win, you have to put the bullet in the center of the target."

"Anyone can shoot a target, but you must be consistent each time, Husky said. "This is where the difficulty comes in."

The match is scored on-site and the players are informed of the standings within 10 minutes of the match.

Each shot is worth 10 points in the scoring system for this particular match.

"I don't think anyone has scored a 300 here yet," Husky said.

The rifle matches give everyone interested a chance to shoot and win using skill and concentration.

"Anyone with a rifle and a scope can find a category to compete in," said Jim Graham, assistant manager of English Range.

Although the competition is challenging according to Graham, expensive equipment is discouraged.

"These rifle matches are open to all walks of life. Anyone is welcome to shoot," Graham said.

With the various categories and side match available, Graham said almost anyone can find a category they can qualify in.

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham

David Hall prepares his weapon during the tactical rifle match at English Range Sunday. More than 20 community members competed in the match.

There are a total of 9 categories to chose from:

•Competitor — any shooter with a score of 295 or above that "placed" in a previous match. Any rifle, any sight or scope.

•Bolt Action Sporter — standard barrel hunting rifles. Safe, internal modifications only. No optics with speed knobs. This category is restricted to essentially "stock" hunting rifles with "hunting type" scopes.

•Bolt Action Precision — heavy barrels varmint or sniper rifles with any scope.

•Semi-Auto Sporter — standard configured semi-autos with any scope.

•Semi-Auto Precision — heavy barreled semi-auto with any scope.

•Iron Sight Rifle — any rifle using iron sight.

•Foreign Military Rifle — special category limited to SKS and AKs with any scope of sight.

•Hunter Pistol — any firearm without a buttstock with a barrel length of 18 inches or less with any scope.

•Custom Sporter — bolt action hunting rifles that do not meet the criteria for Bolt Action Sporter or Precision with any scope.

The winners are awarded in first, second and third place. There must be eight shooters per category to award three places, and at least three shooters in a category to award first place. New shooter awards are given in two categories, High Precision and High Sporting Rifle. Competitors are classified as new shooters in their first match only.

Winners are awarded a trophy, but everyone leaves the match with something.

"Win, lose or draw you are going to walk away with something. You will leave here with at least a shirt," Graham said.

Elevan people competed in the Competitor category. Holding the highest score was Sam Tedders who shot a score of 299, a near perfect match.

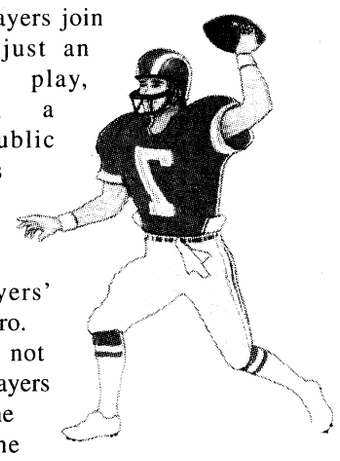
Herbert Brewer came in a close second with a final score of 296. Not far behind Brewer, J.D. Ladd ranked third with a score of 294.

Bolt Action Precision had a total of 18 competitors in Sunday's match. The highest score of 299 went to Rusty Rossey. With a score of 296, second place went to Timothy Ford. Third place was taken by Travis Owens with a final score of 295.

Are you ready for some football

Chattahoochee Express set to battle during IFL action

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor



If the "Boys of Summer" are beginning to put you to sleep and you're already humming that Monday night theme song by Hank Williams Jr., the Chattahoochee Express may be the team to watch.

Formerly known as the Phenix City Stars, the Express, which belongs to the International Football League (IFL), is gearing up for this year's season which begins Saturday.

In addition to selecting players from the Columbus and Phenix City areas, more than 10 Soldiers from Fort Benning have also joined the team.

Ryan Hopkins, a Soldier with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said he learned of the team through a fellow Soldier and began attending practices.

"Football is one of my favorite sports," said Hopkins, who played the sport while in high school. "The contact and skills needed to play are what I like best."

While most players join the league for just an opportunity to play, Charles Love, a volunteer public relations coordinator for the team, said the league may also be players' one chance to go pro.

"It's definitely not likely, but great players do have a shot," he said. Some of the IFL's success stories include the Phoenix Cardinal's Eric Swann, who was the 1991 number one draft choice after he played one year with the Bay State Titans in Boston. Defensive end Ray Seals, who is currently with the Carolina Panthers played in the 1996 Super Bowl for the Pittsburgh Steelers after playing with the Syracuse Express.

While Hopkins has dreams of one day making it to the NFL, he said the experience he is gaining through the league will help him with his future goals.

"Maybe one day, I will make it, but until then, I'm gaining a lot of experience and learning a lot through the team," he said.

During the 1998 season, the team is scheduled to play against teams in the Southeast Division including the Brunswick Tigers, Orlando Panthers and Valdosta Vipers. The Chattahoochee Express'es first game is scheduled for Saturday against the Palmetto Dragons in South Carolina.

"They have a lot of talented players, and I think they'll do well this year," Love said. "We just need to get people interested and come out to support our team."

The team's home opener is scheduled for 7 p.m. Aug. 8 at Garrett Stadium in Phenix City where the Express will face off against the Savannah Panthers.

Admission to the games is $7 for adults and $1 for children 12 and under.

For more information on the team, call 888-1588.

Fans create 'true' sporting action by attending games

Chuck Davis
Bayonet correspondent

It is the bottom of the ninth, the score is tied 1-1. The home team has two outs with the bases loaded, the batter has a full count and here comes the pitch.... Did I forget to mention the pitch is in extreme slow motion which will give us plenty of time to discuss a few things.

commentary

First grab something really cold to drink. You don't want to over heat in this sub-tropical weather, not to mention how hot this information is we are preparing to discuss.

OK, back on track with our discussion. By the way, the pitch is spinning at approximately 238 rotations per second to the left, give or take a thousand and is creating a severe air deficit on the opposite side. Would I be throwing you a "curve" if I asked you what type of pitch was being thrown? Our batter at the plate is busy counting the rotations and reversing the figures to determine which way the pitch will curve. Good thing the pitch is in extreme slow motion.

While we are waiting for the pitch to effectively curve left or right, let's talk about the reason you are actually sitting here enjoying a game of this magnitude. Without doing a "Top Ten" list, lets just list the most probable reason why you have dedicated your time and interest to this ball game. It has got to be "the love of the game."

Now imagine this. If the number one reason is "the love of the game" how would you rate the following reasons someone such as yourself may have for dedicating their time and interest to watch or even play in a good old fashion, dust raising, earth shaking, belly sliding, dive catching, head bumping, steam rolling, sweat dripping, softball smashing Fort Benning intramural softball league game.

Here are a few reasons you may come up with:

• Your husband, boyfriend, wife, girlfriend, dad, mom, uncle ... starting to get the picture ... play on the team.

• A team plays much better when their side of the field has more than just the extra fans from the other team (who couldn't fit in their own bleachers) sitting on their side.

• All games have a one low price entrance fee for all ages...Free!

• If you take the whole family, your son or daughter may become totally inspired and grow up to eventually achieve free agency with a signing bonus of 2.5 million.

Please do not forget to watch the pitch. It has now travelled approximately 44 feet and is curving to the pitcher's left and the batter's right with a strong wind from center field. The strong wind is caused by the all the fans, including you, gasping for breath at one time and sucking every available molecule of air from the ball park into their lungs in torrid anticipation of how the batter is going to handle the pitch. But, as you probably guessed, since the pitch is in extreme slow mo we still have time to discuss a few more important details.

There are currenty three divisions of the intramural league on post. The Sand Hill and Kelley Hill combined division will play their games out of Knappenberger Field on Kelley Hill. A division comprised of units from the 11th Infantry Regiment and 29th Infantry Regiment will play their games at Gowdy Field on Main Post. Teams from the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) and other various units on post will battle on the baseball diamond at Engineer Field.

Time for more discussion is quickly coming to an end. The pitch, as you can see has come even closer to the batter and the batter is ready to swing. As luck would have it, the laws of physics were denied and the pitch did not curve as expected. Instead, it gained speed and maintained momentum in a direct path exactly center of the strike zone.

Since the batter has an extremely acute sense of timing and eye for recognizing a perfect pitch, he suddenly realized the only one capable of hitting a real home run is you, the fans. Remember the song by Alabama? The batter politely stpes back from the plate and times stands still until the start of next week's softball games.

Area golfer wins match

U.S. Army School of Americas

Carl Smith, son of Dr. Russell Ramsey, a professor of Latin American Affairs with the U.S. Army School of Americas, reached the semi-finals in the first national Long Drivers of America match held July 6 in Pomona, Calif., at the Mountain Meadows Course.

The purse for his new national event was $30,000.

Smith qualified for the national event by winning the regional round at the Falcon's Fire Country Club Course in Kissimmee, Fla. His winning drive was 375 yards, 2 feet, 8 inches.

The six-foot, seven-inch left hand hitter uses a 8.5 degree titanium headed driver with an extra stiff, extra long 47" shaft.

Smith has competed in several tournaments at Callaway Gardens and won the State LDA tournament in Albany, Ga., in 1997.

His next goal is the REMAX World Long Drive Championships in Mesquite, Nevada, Oct. 21-24.

U.S. TRANSPLANT GAMES

Team Georgia prepares for event

Jenni Palocsik
National Kidney Foundation of Georgia

Team Georgia is scouting for athletes, volunteers and sponsors to help plan and promote activities in the state of Georgia for the 1998 U.S. Transplant Games, sponsored by Sandoz Transplant and presented by the National Kidney Foundation. An Olympic-style competition for recipients of life-saving transplants of all kinds, the Games will be held Aug. 5-8, on the campus of the Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio.

With an anticipated 1,500 transplant athletes from across the country participating, the 1998 U.S. Transplant Games promise to be the largest-ever gathering of transplant recipients. Transplant athletes — including kidney, liver, heart, lung, pancreas and bone marrow recipients — will compete for gold, silver and bronze medals in one or more of 14 sports, including bicycling, bowling, golf, racquetball, swimming, tennis and track and field events.

The Games will also feature special programs such as Kids' Time for children from 2 through 11 years old; and a 5K road race promoting organ donation awareness that is open to all.

One athlete gearing up for the transplant games is Richard Herpel, a 60-year-old Columbus resident. Herpel received a heart transplant in 1997 and is now ready to prove that with his new heart he can run as fast, jump as high and swim with the best of athletes.

"The U.S. Transplant Games are a wonderful opportunity to meet other transplant recipients and let the public see living proof of the success of transplantation. The event also calls attention to the critical need for organ donation," Herpel said.

Herpel also added that people sometimes have misconceptions that transplant recipients are disabled.

"Not only have I adopted a normal daily routine, I have become more physically active since receiving my heart transplant."

Transplant athletes from Georgia may register for the 1998 U.S. Transplant Games by joining Team Georgia.

To become involved with Team Georgia as an athlete or for planning pre-game events and activities, call Judy Bellenger at (404) 248-1315 or outside metro Atlanta at (800) 633-2339.

The 1998 U.S. Transplant Games have been made possible by a grant from Sandoz Transplant, a division of Novartis Pharmaceutical Corporation.

More than 55,000 Americans are currently waiting for transplants of vital organs. Nine to ten people die each day waiting. In Georgia alone, more than 850 are awaiting organ transplants.

The National Kidney Foundation of Georgia is one of 51 Affiliates of the National Kidney Foundation, the major voluntary health agency dedicated to preventing kidney and urinary tract diseases, increasing the health and well-being of individuals and families affected by these diseases and increasing the availability of all organs for transplantation.

Currently more than 58,000 Americans are on the national waiting list for organ transplants. In Georgia alone, 825 people are awaiting life-saving transplants.

For more information about Team Georgia, call (800) 633-2339, ext. 17.

USAMU shooters score victories during matches

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories recently.

Accomplishments include:

Action shooter Jay Christy won the Master Division during the Area 8 Championships July 11 and 12 in Erie, Pa. Christy finished sixth overall out of 238 competitors. Julie A. Goloski finished third in the Women's Division.

During the Wolf Creek monthly training match July 11 and 12 in Atlanta, pistol shooter Steven M. King won the Center Fire Match with his personal high score of 586. King also won the Standard Pistol Match. Eric G. Daniels won the Rapid Fire Match. Justin F. Barberi won the Junior Sport and Air Pistol matches while Renee D. Cunningham finished second in the Women's Sport and Air Pistol matches.

During the North American Championships in Quincy, Ill., June 29 through July 3, Christy also won the Action Shooting Limited Shoot Off and was on the winning Gold Standard Team. Goloski finished third in the Women's Division.

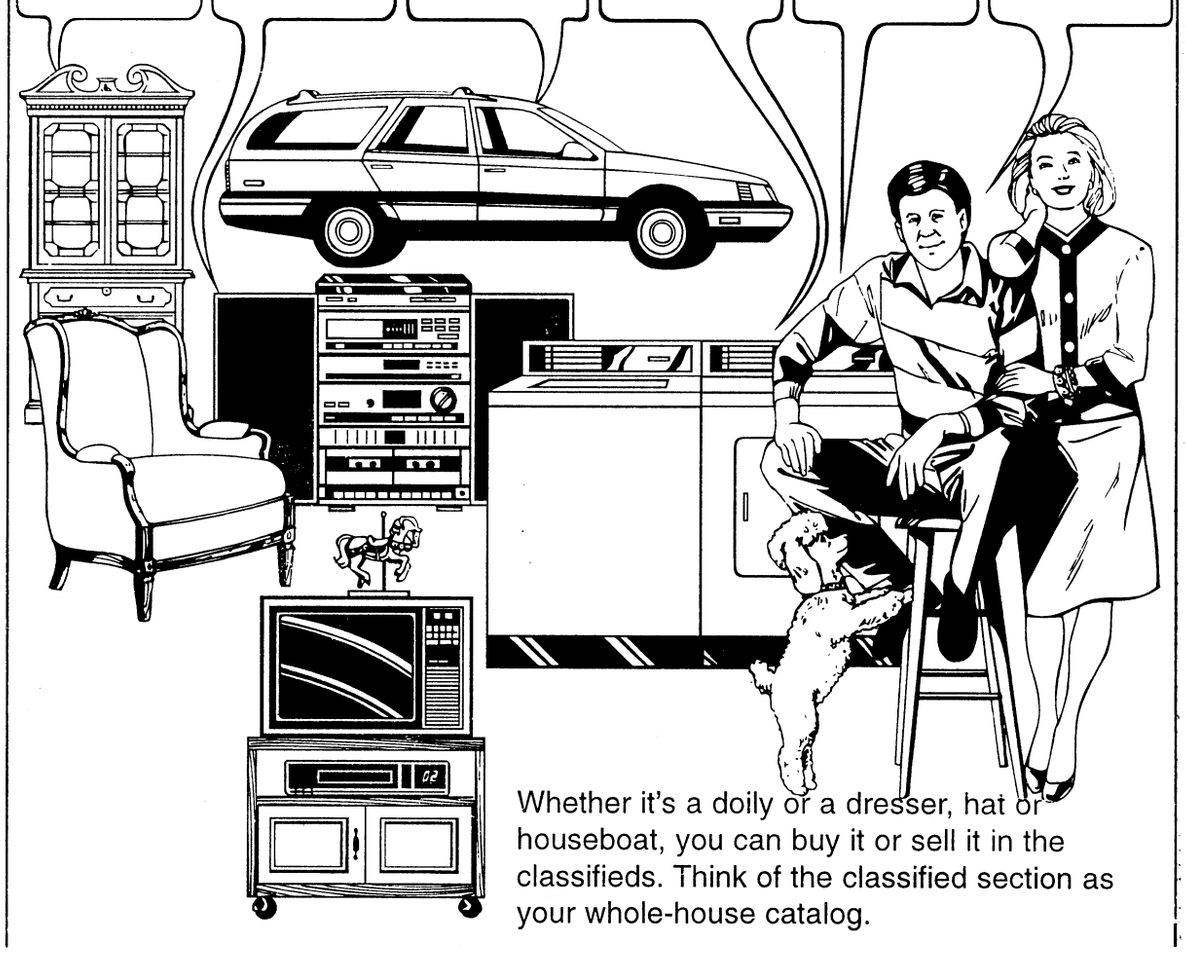
FURNITURE
Mrs. Brown bought most of her furniture through the classifieds (except for the bunk beds left behind by Mr. and Mrs. Zorn when they moved to Mozambique).



CAR
The classifieds are the best place to shop for all kinds of automobiles. Mrs. Brown was happy to find that her new car was actually much larger than the attractive picture in the paper.

PET
The classified section is more than a directory —it's a zoo! When Mrs. Brown was searching for the perfect miniature horse, she found it in the classifieds (it was purely coincidental that Widget's coat happened to match the living room couch).

APPLIANCES
When Mrs. Brown wanted to trade her scooter for either a washer or dryer, she took a spin through the classifieds.

ELECTRONICS
Cameras, stereo components and more—they're all in the classifieds. Prices are so reasonable that Mrs. Brown has set a new goal for herself—to buy one television for each cable channel.

HUSBAND
When Mrs. Brown read her husband's personal ad in which he mentioned his fondness for Bach, bagels and boats, she knew it was true love. Neighbors now refer to them as the Fugue, the Round . . . the Marinas.

Whether it's a doily or a dresser, hat or houseboat, you can buy it or sell it in the classifieds. Think of the classified section as your whole-house catalog.

Soldiers test Army's future during RFPI experiment

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

More than 2,000 Soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky., and the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), Fort Stewart, Ga., along with 250 civilian support personnel are conducting a two-week exercise on Fort Benning, which may affect the future of the Army's light forces.

The Rapid Force Projection Initiative (RFPI) Field Experiment, which is aimed at testing the newest in light Infantry warfighting technology began Monday. Fort Benning's Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, the 29th Infantry Regiment and 988th Military Police Company are supporting the exercise.

According to Lt. Col. Jeffrey Arneson, chief of the Battle Command Division, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, this is the first time the Army is conducting a large scale digitized light-Infantry field experiment.

Arneson said the RFPI is a combination of live and virtual exercises conducted by Soldiers from the varying units.

He said Soldiers from the 101st Abn. Div. (AA) are acting as the operational force while the rest of the units make up the opposing force.

"There is a division-size enemy force modeled after a traditional Soviet motorized rifle division, attacking about a brigade-size light force," Arneson said. Both are done using live and virtual simulations."

Arneson said the experiment is being done to test the effectiveness of an array of high-tech digitized sensors and shooters which are connected by a light digital Tactical Operations Center (TOC).

Sensors, shooters and the TOC make up the three main systems being tested.

Arneson said the TOC is one of the main elements of the RFPI because it incorporates a wide variety of the digital advances being tested and acts as a kind of monitor over the other systems.

"The TOC is definitely the focal point of this exercise because it is kind of like the brain cell of battle and what we are experimenting with is the digitization part of that," Arneson said.

He added it closely resembles the usual brigade TOC, but has been enhanced with digital computers.

The sensor systems being tested involve three different kinds of sensors which incorporate low light level television cameras, acoustic sensors and laser range finders. One example of this is the Hunter Sensor Suite systems.

Arneson said the sensors are meant to help increase a Soldier's situational awareness and give him an advantage on the battlefield.

"The advantage of this system is it should make our forces much more lethal," Arneson said. "The whole idea is to pick up enemy targets at greater ranges and engage them before they get within direct fire of our front line units."

According to Arneson, the RFPI is running three scenarios, which are Air Assault, Defense in Sector and Deliberate Defense.

One of the more unique scenarios Arneson said, is the Air Assault because it involves dismantling an entire TOC, transporting it by Chinook helicopter and then reassembling it in a new location.

"This is first time that I know of where a digital system has been completely folded up and moved by air to another site," Arneson said.

The RFPI experiment will slingload the entire brigade TOC and transport it to the McKenna Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT) Site. Soldiers will then simulate a combination air assault and MOUT attack.

According to Gaylon Stockman, senior manager with quality research, the main purpose of the RFPI is to make sure the systems work properly.

Stockman said the Soldiers play a critical role in the RFPI because they are testing the systems. He said the RFPI is a good training tool because it will give the Soldiers an assessment of what will happen on the battlefield and how accurate their systems will be.

"It is important for people to realize that this is not some kind of big video game," Stockman said. "Most of the these Rangers of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Battalion conduct a fast rope exercise as part of Combat Search and Rescue training.

During the CSAR training, the ranger task force practiced rescuing members from downed aircraft.

The ranger element teamed up with Air Force rescue helicopters and pararescue personnel to conduct the mission.

According to 1st Lt. Lawrence Basha, the battalion's special projects and civil affairs officer, CSAR missions are different from other ranger operations.

"These operations do not require the rangers to follow standard Infantry tactics of closing and destroying the enemy," he said.

Post set to celebrate anniversary of orders

USAIC Public Affairs Office

President Harry S. Truman signed two executive orders 50 years ago that have had monumental impact on race relations in America.

One order was "Regulation Governing Fair Employment Practices Within the Federal Establishment," which provided for nondiscrimination in the federal government.

The other, "Establishing the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Forces," resulted in the desegregation of the military services.

Fort Benning will commemorate the 50th anniversary of these monumental orders 8 a.m. today in the Officers' Club during the Commanding General's Two-star Excellence Breakfast.

The awards breakfast will commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of President Harry S. Truman's signing of Executive Order 9981, which desegregated the Armed Forces. Signed on July 26, 1948, Executive Order 9981 established the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Forces.

This order mandated equality of treatment and opportunity for all members of the Armed Forces regardless of race, color, religion or national origin.

In attendance at the awards breakfast will be retired Lt. Col. James A. Seddon, retired Sgt. Maj. Regis E. Blair, retired Master Sgt. Charlie L. Oats, retired 1st Sgt. Walter Harris Jr. and retired Maj. William F. Schafer, who served on active duty at the time Executive Order 9981 was signed.

New policy to regulate fraternization

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen Wednesday directed actions to standardize good order and discipline policies among the Services and to clarify guidance on the offense of adultery under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ).

These steps complete the remaining two of three initiatives he announced in June 1997.

"From the beginning of this effort, my goal has been to maintain the high standards of the U.S. Armed Forces," Cohen said. "There have been no changes in the Code, and there will be no lowering of standards. The measures I am taking will clarify the Manual for Courts-Martial provisions relating to adultery and establish uniform Service policies and regulations governing fraternization."

U.S. Army Soldier Show

Performers 'jazz up' Sand Hill with musical production

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

From music of the '50's to hits from today, the cast of the 1998 U.S. Army Soldier Show had the crowd roaring Friday night..

A crowd of more than 500 people turned out for opening night, packing the house at the Sand Hill Theater.

"This is a high powered, high energy show," said performer Spc. Sherette Cline, a photojournalist stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C.

The show following a theme of "What if," meaning what if we could change the world, Cline said.

The show eatured songs such as I Heard It Through The Grapevine, and Thunder Rolls, which brought the crowd to their feet.

The non-stop entertainment that lasted approximately an hour and 40 minutes, was filled with a variety of dance and song.

"This is a variety show," Cline said. "We perform song and dance numbers consisting of country line dances to hip hop and rhythm and blues. We will hopefully have something here everyone will enjoy."

Judging from the crowd's response, it seemed as though everyone was pleased.

"The show was great," said Pvt. Kevin Wardis, Company B, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade. "I was definitely entertained. It was so up beat."

For the show to go on, a lot of behind the curtain work was put into the performances.

The cast puts in an average of 12 to 16 hours of practice and rehearsal time a day.

"The Soldiers are really professional about the show," Cline said. "Most of the cast want to do this for a living after leaving the Army."

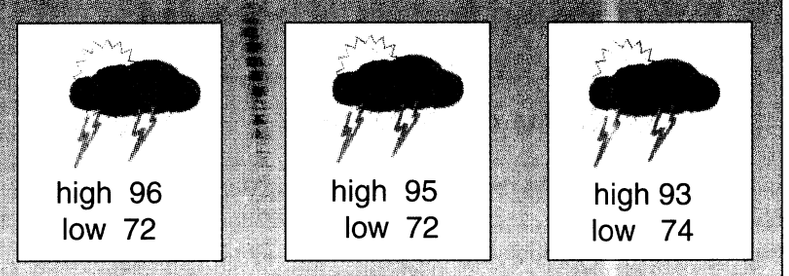
It may be difficult for some to believe Soldiers in the Army can tour from May to November singing and dancing for other Soldiers.

"The first time I saw the show I could not believe Soldiers actually did this for a living," Cline said. "It was the neatest thing."

Although the cast's main goal is to entertain, there is a lot of hard work involved in putting on the musical production.

Not only the physical demands of the dance, but the demands of setting up a 42,000 pound set are met by the cast.

"Setting up for the show is hard work," Cline said. "Some shows are set up, performed and broken down all in one night."



Despite all the hard work put into the performance, Cline said it is all worth it when she sees a smile on someone's face.

"You know you have brightened their day," she said.

The cast also put on two other shows this past weekend exclusively for ITB Soldiers.

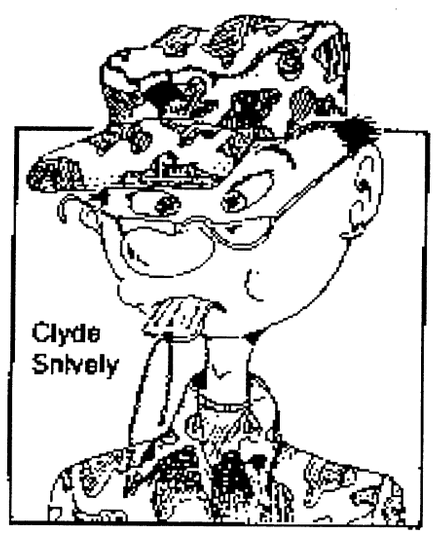
Field training

Soldiers train for 21st century



Spc. Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

To a civilian whose most strenuous form of exercise is looking for the remote to the television, the idea of spending a couple of weeks in the field under a blazing sun probably has about as much appeal as having toe nails removed without an anaesthetic.

commentary

Yet for a Soldier, a field training exercise (FTX) is as natural to them as saying "hooah."

And weather and terrain make no difference to a Soldier. One FTX might find them battling wait-a-minute vines, under an August sun that turns the field into a gigantic sauna. On another, they may find themselves humping a mountain in the dead of winter; their sweat turning to ice almost as soon as it forms on their exposed skin.

Soldiers know the only way to perfect their skills is to practice them. Working simulators in the training center, attending classes on warfare, all contribute to the development of the professional Soldier. But it's the field exercises that put the edge on the bayonet's blade.

Leaders understand it's better to give a gallon of sweat in training than a pint of blood in combat.

Travel out to the Fort Benning ranges and you'll find the 3rd Brigade (Mech) taking gunnery practice or Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers culminating 13 weeks of training with a seven-day FTX where they're tested on everything they've learned since they stepped onto Sand Hill.

We're also in the middle of a major training exercise involving the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) and the 29th Infantry Regiment.

They are testing equipment, techniques and technology that will contribute to making sure the American Soldier continues to be the best-trained, best-equipped Soldier in the world.

This equipment will make the Infantryman more lethal while adding to his survivability.

Fort Benning is in the forefront of bringing the Army into the 21st century and these Soldiers all have a role to play.

CO2 Program: Work force tackles issues to help build relationships, unit cohesion

Harry Noyes
Reprinted from the Mercury

I had to go to a two-hour briefing on the Army's "Consideration of Others" (C02) program recently. Boy, was I an inconsiderate crank when that was over!

But seriously, folks, doesn't it seem ... well, strange, for the Army to be teaching this kind of

commentary

stuff? Isn't this what "Mr. Rogers" does?

How can we frighten our enemies if they think our four-stars take off their cammie jackets, put on sweaters, and say, "Now boys and girls, can we say C-O-U-R-T-E-S-Y?"

Well, that was my initial reaction but, after some thought, I decided that:

"Consideration of Others" is a bona-fide readiness issue and here is good reason for the Army to teach this subject.

Actually, the Army has been teaching this subject a long time one need not think too deeply to see the readiness implications.

Consideration within units lays the foundation for "buddy-bonding" — the glue that wins battles and saves lives. Consideration for families wins support for military careers and keeps Army strength up. Consideration for our fellow citizens wins us public support.

Overseas, consideration for civilians, allied Soldiers and even wounded or captured enemy Soldiers wins "hearts and minds." And that is essential to real success in any conflict or conflict-prevention scenario.

But why do we have to teach it? Can't "Mr. Rogers" and "Sesame Street" do it? And, by the way, where the heck are the parents?

Ahh ... Good questions, Pilgrim. A full exploration of our society's success or failure in teaching youth to treat others considerately is beyond the scope of this commentary and of my expertise. Suffice it to say that armies rarely waste time training people on stuff they already know.

In short, armies teach Soldiers what they didn't learn in civilian life. And, apparently, in today's America, some citizens (not all) are growing up — shall we say — a little unclear on certain aspects of civility and respect for others.

Evidence for that conclusion includes the sad spectacle of sexual misconduct at scattered times and places Army-wide. It also includes the appalling racism displayed by a few extremists who, having infiltrated an Army dedicated to defending human rights, stain that Army's honor by hurting innocent people.

Our Army has a right and a duty to attack such dangers to its cohesion, its public support and its mission. For the most vicious violators, the only remedy is expulsion from the brotherhood and sisterhood of American warriors. But others can be salvaged through education.

Some are well-meaning people who just need to be sensitized to the hurt caused by careless words and behavior. For them, the C02's moderated but candid discussion groups — involving both soldiers and civil servants — will be eye-openers.

A few hard-nosed types will insist that all this stuff is a crock and will persist in harboring bad feelings toward others. That is sad, because they are missing out on friendships and learning experiences they cannot even imagine.

But the Army doesn't really care about their secret feelings as long as they keep them secret and don't mistreat people. Two decades ago, in days of overt racial conflict, the Army learned it cannot change everyone's heart but it also learne it doesn't need to. To get the job done, it only needs to change people's behavior. And the Army certainly does have the leverage to change behavior.

The remolding of Army race relations in the 1970s proves not only that the Army can change people's behavior, but also teaching consideration is an old Army tradition.

Even earlier, in the brown-shoe Army, some unit commanders and sergeants reportedly made Soldiers write letters home. If that isn't enforcing Consideration of Others, what is?

Of course, old-time sergeants didn't call it that, 'cause they weren't "touchy-feely" types. Well, actually, they were in a way, they touched you, and you felt it. But that isn't done any more, a form of consideration all junior enlisted Soldiers can be grateful for.

Which raises a vital distinction. Making Soldiers write home is a form of paternalism that really isn't the Army's business. However, protecting Soldiers from violence, humiliation or unfair career damage — at the hands of other races, the other gender, or higher rank — is vital to readiness, and that certainly is the Army's legitimate business.

If we keep that distinction in mind in executing C02 programs, there will be no grounds for Mr. Rogers to call his copyright attorney or for enemies to snicker at us.

C02 will deserve respect and will work as long as we:

• Stay focused on vital issues like racial and gender harmony, respect for other arms and branches, and customer service. Avoid trivialities, personalities, pet peeves. Remember two rules of civility: do not, needlessly offend others, and do not be too easily offended.

•Use dignified techniques such as discussion groups while avoiding childish sensitivity games and other off-beat claptrap. This doesn't preclude some well thought-out fun and creativity, but we must safeguard the dignity of the Army and its people.

•Don't allow C02 to develop a bureaucratic life of its own. Training, teaching and inspiring Soldiers is a leadership task and C02 must remain a leadership method, not a structural addition to the list of Army agencies and budget items.

Call: The caller was not clear on what customers can take into Carey Pool.

Directorate of Community Activities response:
The Sports Branch explained that its SOP and TB Med 575 states that no food or drinks are allowed within the confines of the pool. However, squeeze bottles, with water only would be allowed since spillage is improbable.

Call: Residents in Battlepark Housing were concerned because the water pressure was low and the water was brown.

Directorate of Public Works response:
The Energy & Utilities Division, DPW said an electrical malfunction caused an electrical outage which included the Water Plant. Before the emergency diesel pumps could be put into service, the normal water usage lowered the water level in the water storage tanks. This caused a low pressure in the distribution system. With the sudden shut down of the water pumps due to the electrical outage, excessive turbulence in the pipes dislodged some of the minerals on the inside of the water piping, causing the discoloration. The water is still safe to use.

C.O.P.S: MPs cruise housing areas, unite community

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

They patrol the streets of housing on bikes, armed with a weapon and handcuffs, trying to keep the peace for the residents of Fort Benning.

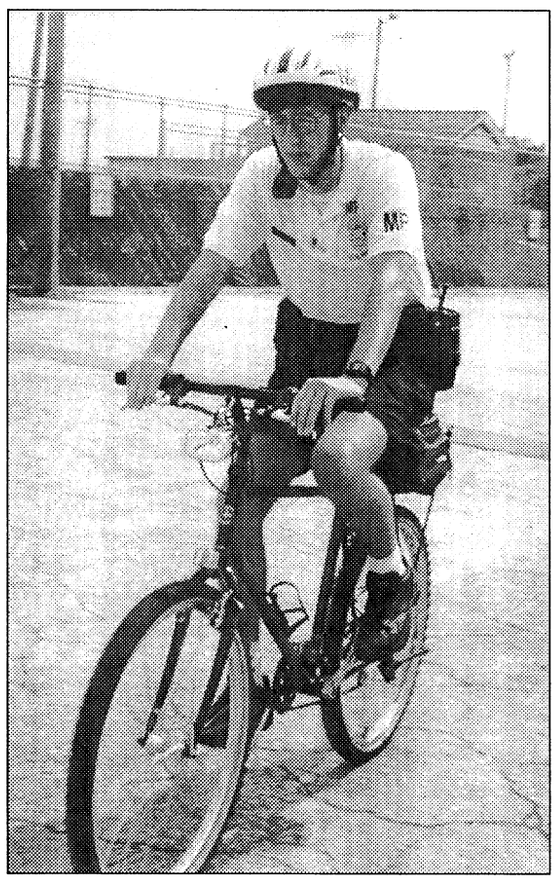
Established in 1994, the Community Oriented Police Squad (C.O.P.S) was designed with the intention of bringing the community and military police closer together, said Sgt. 1st Class Charles Cosby, C.O.P.S. platoon sergeant.

With a force consisting of five C.O.P.S per shift spread out over the housing areas during summer months, the bicycle patrol is in full effect catching speeders and apprehending suspects who break the law.

One resident of Indianhead Terrace expressed her appreciation of the C.O.P.S program.

"I like the fact that they patrol the housing areas, said Kenda Hearne, family member. "It makes me feel good they are watching out for our families and children."

In addition to providing security, the MPs are involved in community programs designed to allow them to interact with the residents.



"We sponsor the "McGruff" crime dog presentations, and are currently looking for new ways to bring us closer to the community," said Cosby.

Events such as dances and car washes are currently being planned in order to receive a supportive response from the community, Cosby said.

One of the MPs talked of his enjoyment in being involved with the residents of Fort Benning.

"I like working in the C.O.P.S program," said Spc. Keith Kuhn, USAIC MP Co. "This gives me a chance to get involved with the kids and families of the post."

All of the MPs receive a chance to interact with the community. The MPs rotate bike patrol shifts.

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham

Spc. Keith Kuhn, USAIC Military Police Company, begins a bike patrol.

During the bike patrol shifts the MPs are on the look out for residents who are not following post regulations such as the 10 p.m. curfew for minors.

We have been having a problem with the curfew being followed, and we are starting to crack down, Cosby said.

In addition to the patrols of the housing areas, the patrol also monitors the hospital area and the welcome center.

in the all volunteer force are not widespread," Cohen added, "but perceived and actual inconsistencies in policies and practices addressing those breaches must be remedied."

On the good order and discipline issue, Cohen directed the Service secretaries to produce draft implementing plans within 30 days and training materials within 60 days to ensure that Service policies and regulations are more uniform, clear and fair.

Cohen directed the military Services to produce similarly worded policies and training materials that:

•Address how the policies are applied and enforced, and the possible consequences for noncompliance in language that is clearly understandable to all;

•Prohibit personal relationships such as dating, sharing living accommodations, engaging in intimate or sexual relations, business enterprises, commercial solicitations, gambling and borrowing between officer and enlisted personnel, regardless of the member's Service. This change will not affect existing marriages;

•Prohibit personal relationships between recruiter and recruit; and

•During Initial Entry Training, prohibit instructors and staff from having personal relationships with students and trainees.

Emphasis will continue on proper training and leadership by example as the best way to curtail inappropriate or unprofessional relationships. Should inappropriate relationships occur, commanders must carefully consider all facts and circumstances in reaching a disposition that is warranted, appropriate, and fair, and is addressed at the lowest appropriate level, in accordance with the general policy of the Manual for Courts-Martial for all offenses.

Good order and discipline issues involve interpersonal relationships both on and off duty among Service members. The training materials drafted by the Services will address how the policies will be applied and will be written in language that is understandable to all.

Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness Rudy de Leon chaired a task force of senior representatives from the Services including the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Office of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the DoD General Counsel and DoD Inspector General that reviewed current Service policies and practices for maintaining good order and discipline.

The information gathered by the task force indicated that breaches of good order and discipline in our Services are not widespread but that the Services defined, regulated and responded to unprofessional relationships between Services members differently.

These differences result in the same conduct being punished by some Services and permitted under some circumstances by other Services.

systems have a high degree of fidelity in their engineer models which will represent their performance in the field."

Pfc. Kacie LaCombe, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, said it is a great opportunity for the Soldiers to be part of something that may affect the forces of the future.

LaCombe said, "Being able to practice with the technology first and see how all the elements come together gives us an idea of what could possibly happen in a critical situation," LaCombe said.

Spc. Elaine Diehlman, U.S. Army School of the Americas, said these new systems could completely change the strategy of war.

Diehlman said it's good to try new techniques in modern technology because it makes the Army more proficient.

"With anything new you have to test it, and test it again to find out if there are any problems along the way," Diehlman said. "It just goes toward improving the original and making the best possible product for the Soldiers."

Arneson stressed the fact that the whole purpose of the RFPI is to evaluate the systems, but if they find that the systems work live as well as in simulation, they will be extremely useful in battle.

"These systems, if they work, will increase a Soldier's situational awareness and targeting capability which will in turn increase the survivability and lethality of the light force unit."

MOS: 91B3H-medical NCO
Unit or activity: Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, NCOA (PLDC)
Years on the job: 14

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
I joined to follow in the footsteps of my brother.

Define your style of leadership.
I usually use the participating style. I like to have a hand in everything that's going on but I don't seek the limelight; I keep a low profile.

What person has most influenced your career?
Sgt. 1st Class Cynthia Donnell because she's really laid back and her answer to any job is "It's too easy, sergeant." Also Staff Sgt. Ronald Cummings, because he is all about taking care of Soldiers.

If you were Sergeant Major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would make it a requirement that every Soldier completes a land navigation course prior to attending PLDC.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
It chose me, but I don't regret it.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
The first time I got on the platform as an instructor. It was like I was born to do this.

What are your career plans?
To make it as far as I can through the ranks prior to retiring.

What others have to say : "Staff Sergeant Steele is a well-rounded NCO who is extremely dedicated to the professional development of junior NCOs."

DENTAC receives new commander

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

U.S. Army Dental Activity (DENTAC) received a new commander during a change of command ceremony Monday at Love Dental Clinic.

Col. David Bruce Clem assumed command from Col. Craig A. Moore who will head to Fort Sam Houston.

Moore said he really enjoyed his time at Fort Benning and especially the chance of getting to work with such great people.

"The dental activity itself I feel is truly blessed," Moore said. "These folks are second to none. I can't imagine working with a better group of people."

Clem took command of DENTAC after serving as the commander of the DENTAC at Fort Sill, Okla.

Clem said it was an honor to have been selected as the commander of an outstanding organization like the Fort Benning DENTAC.

He said changes of commands are filled with expectations of which he hopes to fulfill.

"The motto of the command I just left was 'Serving the Soldier,'" Clem said. "I can't think of a better motto for a dental activity to have and that is my promise to the Soldiers of Fort Benning. As an activity, we will strive to follow the seven Army core values of loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, integrity and personal courage."

Clem was born in Goshen, Ind., in 1946. He received a bachelor's degree in science from Purdue University in 1968 and his doctorate in dental surgery from Indiana University before enlisting in the Army in 1972. He completed a two-year general dentistry residency at Fort Knox, Ky., in 1982.

Some of Clem's military assignments include Big Island Dental Clinics, Korea; Fort McNair Dental Clinic; Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington D.C.; and director of Advanced Education in General and Two-Year Program, Fort Bragg, N.C.

Clem is a graduate of the U.S. Army War College and a diplomat of the Federal Services Board of General Dentistry. He is also a member of the American Dental Association, a Master of the Academy of General Dentistry and a member of the Association of Military Surgeons.

Some of Clem's military awards include the Meritorious Service Medal with five Oak Leaf Clusters, Army Commendation Medal, Army Achievement Medal, Army Reserve Medal, National Defense Medal with Star, Overseas Service Ribbon and Army Service Ribbon.

Clem and his wife, Ann, have two sons, Sean and Jeremy.

Soldiers meet possible employers through ACAP

Army Career and Alumni Program

"The Army Career and Alumni Program employer day program has been a great success for separating Soldiers and the participating employers since we started this concept in January," said Betty Johnson, an employer day organizer for ACAP.

Throughout the first half of 1998, more than 50 separate companies have sent recruiters to the Fort Benning ACAP center to meet with separating Soldiers one-on-one. Individual employers are scheduled for recruiting visits over the entire year rather than in large job fairs.

By spreading employer participation out, a greater number of separating Soldiers have been able to participate and interview with recruiters. Timing can be very important in the job search and the employer day program creates a large window of opportunity for Soldiers, no matter when they transition out of the Army, Johnson said.

"Recruiters of all kinds participate in our employer days because they have discovered what we already know, that separating Soldiers make outstanding employees in any industry. We hear this word over and over again when employers visit the ACAP Center. Soldiers have training, experience, technical and managerial skills, a solid work history and clean background checks to mention a few reasons why businesses send recruiters to Fort Benning," Johnson said.

Companies and placement firms not able to come to Fort Benning regularly place job vacancy notices in the Department of Defense and Army Transition Bulletin Boards and Hot Lead programs. Separating Soldiers, family members and civil service workers can use these job search tools as part of ACAP transition services. With the recent addition of Internet access on all computer terminals and a local home page, Soldiers have access to military, federal and non-federal civilian job listings and much more at the ACAP Center.

Upcoming employer days and events for job seekers can be found in the Bayonet each week, in flyers sent to each unit on post, by checking the ACAP Bulletin Board in Infantry Hall outside Classroom 30 and by visiting the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

For more information about local ACAP services and to schedule briefings, visit the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

1st Lt. Lawrence Basha

3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment Soldiers maintain security on a civilian role-player during CSAR training.

Rangers execute rescue training

3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

"Never shall I leave a fallen comrade to fall into the hands of the enemy."

This phrase from the Ranger Creed may bring to mind scenes of rangers breaking enemy contact in the jungle with his wounded ranger buddy draped over his shoulder.

Rangers' spirit of loyalty was demonstrated when Soldiers of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, recently conducted Combat Search and Rescue Training (CSAR).

According to 1st Lt. Lawrence Basha, special projects and civil affairs officer, the training scenario was designed so the rangers could practice rescuing members of a ranger task force from a downed aircraft.

"Whether in the woods or in a city, rangers need to be prepared to deal with almost any contingency during the rescue and recovery mission," said Basha, who explained that CSAR missions are different from other ranger operations.

"These operations do not require the rangers to follow standard Infantry tactic of closing and destroying the enemy," he said.

To prepare for CSAR missions, rangers are required to complete additional training in fire suppression and advanced medical training.

The rangers cannot complete CSAR missions by themselves.

Teamed up with Air Force rescue helicopters, combat controllers (CCT) and pararescue personnel (PJ), the ranger rescue element is capable of supporting the main effort of the ranger force.

"The joint effort truly demonstrates how combined specialization ensures mission success," said Basha who explained how the tasks were distributed.

While the rangers conducted the security mission, Basha said the CCT controlled the air assets and the PJs performed medical treatment on the injured. The pilots and crew of the aircraft were also available to assist.

During the recent CSAR exercise, the team loaded onto the helicopters and flew in support of the ranger's main effort which was a company air assault raid. The scenario of the training involved a small helicopter from a raid force which had crash landed. Although the "crew" was alive, they were trapped in hostile setting.

Before the CSAR aircraft could land, it first conducted an overflight so the entire team could see the area.

"This was so the team could get a good idea of the situation on the ground," Basha explained.

Depending on the situation, Basha said the ranger team can either be inserted by fast rope or by the aircraft landing.

Once on the ground, the rangers initially set up a security perimeter around the aircraft so Air Force pararescue personnel could move to the crash site and assess the situation.

"While the rangers are on the ground, their mission is multi-faceted and the priority shifts quickly among the security of the crash site, treatment of the injured and direction of the air strikes," Basha said. "All team members must remain fluid to work together to successfully accomplish the mission."

Basha also said that integrating forces in such training may eliminate problems often encountered when the different services work together.

In a CSAR mission, security positions are smaller than normal as mostly three-man teams are controlled by junior fire team leaders. Because of the limited number of personnel the comprise the team, security positions are few and far between.

"CSAR scenarios provide excellent training for the junior leaders since they have the opportunity to make decisions on the ground in a time critical environment," Basha said.

Engineers conduct Army values run

36th Engineer Group (Construction)

As the sun rose above Engineer Field July 24, Soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) executed a five-mile run promoting the seven corps Army values: loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage.

Each unit within the Group was responsible for displaying a vignette of one Army value along the run route for Soldiers to view as they passed by.

"We hope the vignettes give them a better appreciation and understanding of the values," said 2nd Lt. Daniel Bracken, assistant personnel officer for the 36th Eng. Grp.

Vignettes included a Soldier giving blood to promote selfless service, Soldiers re-enlisting to promote loyalty and a Soldier pulling security while wounded to promote personal courage.

"The run was a great success in instilling in the Soldiers a deeper focus and understanding of what the Army values represent," Bracken said.

While the run let the Soldiers grasp the basics of the seven Army values, Bracken added that the run also created a feeling of esprit de corps within the Group and each unit belted out its own cadence as they passed their own vignettes along the route.

Battle Lab makes training a reality

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

For the past four years the Department of Defense has been interested in bringing virtual reality training to the dismounted Soldier.

At Fort Benning's Dismounted Battlespace Battle lab, efforts are being made to possibly make this avenue of training a reality.

Combining technology with training may help in tactical maneuvers with the ability to show Soldiers potential weaknesses of different approaches in combat situations, said Jim Monar, project manager of the Dismounted Soldier Simulation (DSS).

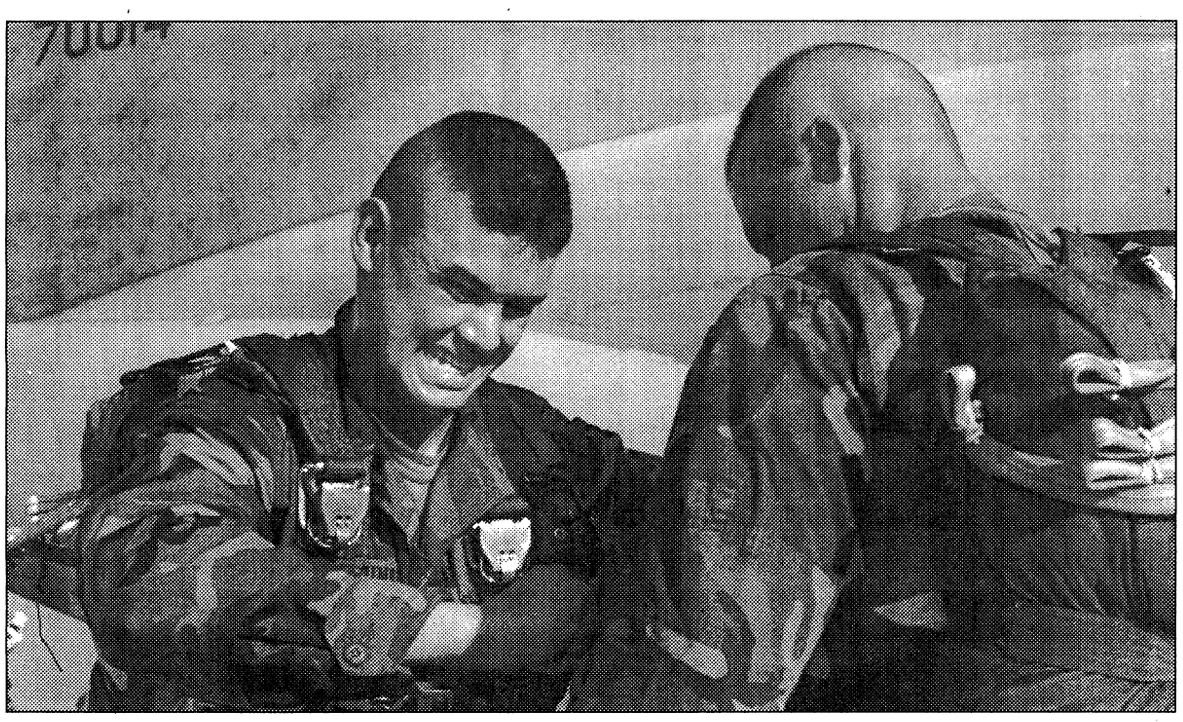
Although the equipment is still in a raw state, these experiments are a stepping stone of possibilities in the world of virtual training.

The DSS is one of the stations being experimented with. It consists of motion-capture cameras, for relaying the Soldiers' position; a wireless head-mounted display, so the Soldier may move freely throughout the station and sound to add to the intensity of the mission.

When the Soldier is in the virtual world, he becomes completely immersed in the synthetic environment, Molnar said.

There is no screen to inhibit the Soldier. He is completely surrounded by the virtual world.

The benefits of virtual combat is Soldiers may be able to rehearse missions, and terrain problems before the actual mission, Molnar said.



Among training benefits the virtual reality system also offers time saving solutions.

The Soldiers may do seven or eight missions in the same time it would take to complete two at a MOUT site, said Traci Jones, Head Engineer at Simulation Training and Instrumentation Commands.

Event though these technologies are not new, they may bring a new level of training to dismounted Soldiers.

One of the goals of these experiments is to enable the dismounted Soldier to have the same training technology as aviation has had, Jones said.

It's easy to give this technology to aviation training , but to bring it on the ground is the real challenge, Jones said.

U.S. ARMY SPECIAL OPERATIONS COMMAND

Elements seize local airfields

Sgt. 1st Class T. Anthony Bell
U.S. Army Special Operations Command

Elements of the U.S. Army Special Operations Command (USASOC) converged upon several states in the southeastern U.S. last month, coordinating and executing a large-scale airfield seizure and noncombatant evacuation operation training exercise.

The major players in the training, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, took to airfields in Gadsden, Ala., and Avon Park, Fla., to further enhance one of its core missions in a training endeavor that covered five states and involved approximately 2,000 military personnel. They included those from the U.S. Army Special Forces Command (Airborne), U.S. Army Civil Affairs and Psychological Operations Command (Airborne), and U.S. Army Special Operations Support Command (Airborne) headquartered at Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 160th Special Operation Aviation Regiment, headquartered at Fort Campbell, Ky.

Lt. Col. Michael Ferriter, 3rd Battalion commander, presiding over his last major exercise in that position, said his rangers confronted each challenge before them with vigor and resolve.

"They did a super job," he said. "(They were) highly motivated, kept their heads in the game all night long and really made me proud."

"All night long" could be the unofficial theme for the training, which consisted of three separate airfield seizure exercises (two rehearsals) over five days, all under the cover of darkness. Each rehearsal presented a few twists to a general scenario in which an unstable nation requests assistance in evacuating certain noncombatants to include American and allied citizens.

This was only the second time the 3rd Battalion had conducted a noncombatant evacuation operation (NEO). Consequently, it presented a challenge to the battalion because many of its Soldiers were inexperienced in NEO.

"We have learned and grown a lot on this," said Sgt. 1st Class Dennis L. Smith, Company C, 3rd Bn. platoon sergeant, noting that half his platoon had never seen the likes of a NEO. "We got cracking on the books, conducted a lot of leader rehearsals, a lot of troop-leading amongst ourselves and putting out the word to the youngest man. That really helped us out."

During the first rehearsal at Gadsden, the rangers jumped into the targeted location and secured the perimeter under hostile fire.

According to Capt. Larry Perino, the battalion assistant operations officer, once the airhead was seized and secured, Soldiers from the 160th quickly unloaded helicopters from various cargo aircraft and prepared them for missions that included air assault raids into marshalling areas located throughout the country.

The 3rd Bn. Soldiers, along with Special Forces teams, then secured the marshalling areas and moved the noncombatants to a forward support base established earlier by elements of 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment of Fort Lewis, Wash.

The second rehearsal, also held at Gasden, and the final mission, conducted at Avon Park, varied somewhat from the first rehearsal. Most notables were a planned air-land assault on the targeted location during the second rehearsal and a last-hour order not to jump during the final mission. These scenario variations forced the players to make adjustments to their respective missions.

"How we would assault our objectives or where we templated the enemy to be was different between an airborne assault and an air-land assault," said Perino. "So we had different forces moving to different places for each of those tasks. Those tasks themselves are different for those platoons ..."

Many of the rangers, who pride themselves on an 'always-ready' posture, seemed quietly satisfied at how the unit collectively performed its mission, even when things didn't go as planned. Spc. Michael Burgess was part of a detail charged with securing enemy prisoners of war in an aircraft hangar. He said that mission went as planned during the rehearsals, but his team was taken by surprise in Avon Park.

"I think it was great training," said Burgess, whose team put down an attack by the opposing force in the hangar. "We don't normally do too many airfield seizures where we have to worry about bringing in noncombatants. We had to rely on a lot of internal and external parts (to complete the missions)."

Perino said the success of the exercise is testament to the unit's flexibility and the ability of noncommissioned officers to manage that flexibility.

"We had aircraft breaking with maintenance problems, and to be able to account for each individual soldier with people coming in and going out of the airhead, then bring them back safely (was an accomplishment)," he said. "Our ranger NCOs and our Soldiers demonstrated they are very capable of performing this operation to standard."

The rangers' success during the operation was undoubtedly complemented by various elements of the joint special operations community. It was responsible for an extensive package of support to include fixed wing aircraft, civil affairs, combat controllers and special tactics. Furthermore, its participation in post-rehearsal after action reviews and its willingness to provide constructive input helped create a team atmosphere.

"I really think that each participant had a lot to offer and bring to the fight," Perino said. "By the end of this exercise, each individual knew or had a greater appreciation for or knowledge about what each asset had to offer.

"We could look around, and amongst each other, and know ... that you could go to combat with them to fight and win if you had to."

DoD tests digital dog tags

Staff Sgt. Alicia K. Borlik
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Stuck to the sweaty chest of a Soldier humping through a hot, humid jungle or subjected to sub-zero temperatures in an Arctic ice storm — the Department of Defense's (DoD) new digital dog tag will have to brave these varied conditions and more.

DoD has been working for nearly a decade on a suitable personal information carrier — a high-tech "digital dog tag" containing a member's full or partial medical history. One of the seven candidate devices being tested now may someday hang from the neck of every servicemember.

The latest stage of testing began June 15 at the Army Electronic Proving Ground at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., said Maj. Catherine Beck, who handles hardware acquisition as acting chief of the Telemedicine and Advanced Technology Research Center's Information Science Division, Medical Research Materiel Command.

Technicians test the tags in the proving ground's environmental testing facility, Beck said. The scheduled 60 days of tests include subjecting the devices to temperatures ranging from 158 degrees to minus 67 degrees, air pressure and altitude tests simulating 400 meters below mean sea level to 15,000 meters above, dust, wind, humidity, mechanical shock, immersion in water and freezing rain.

Not only must the dog tags withstand these factors, they must also pass other military standards for storage capacity, data access speeds and compatibility with other defense computer systems, Beck said. Most carriers use PC Card slot adapters and can be read in Microsoft Windows NT, she added.

The eventual winner has to be small and light. Beck said it also must be scalable, meaning its abilities can grow as the military's needs increase over time.

Another big factor, she said, is ease of use, such as the parts and accessories needed and how many steps it requires to operate.

Test results will be passed to Beck when completed and will be used to develop a request for proposal outlining certain military specifications. The request for proposal should be on the street by October, Beck said.

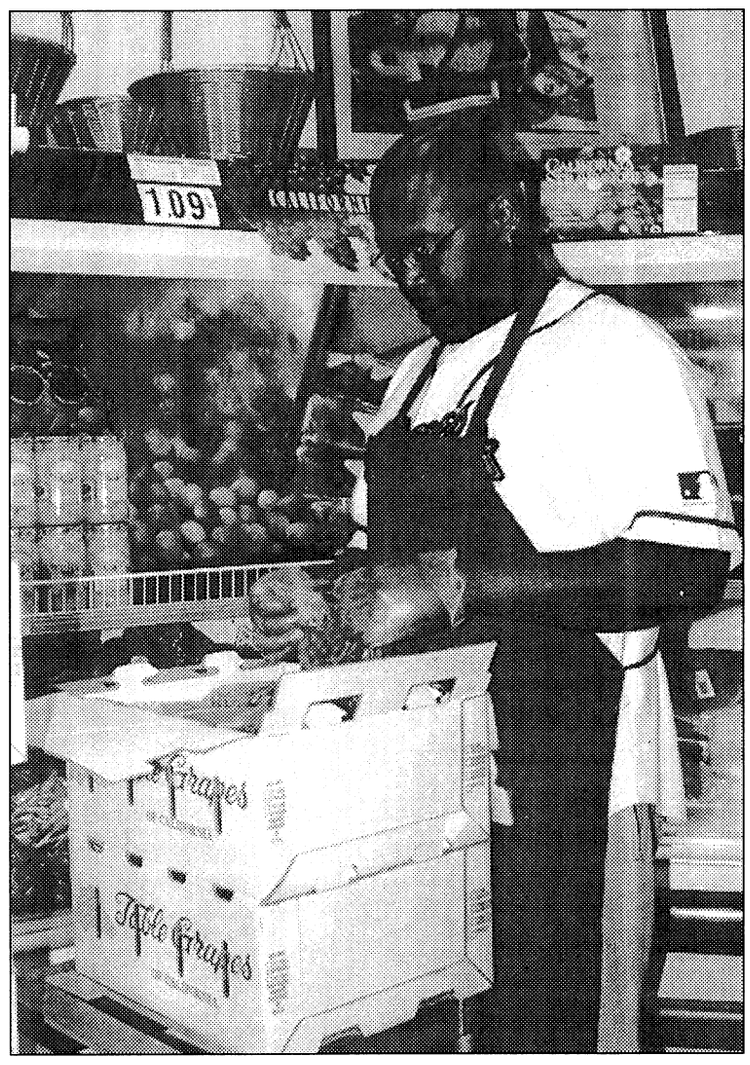
After a 45-day bidding period for vendors, DoD will choose candidates for a second set of tests, she added. Actual field testing, slated for fiscal 1999, will involve 30,000 troops across the services, Beck said. Test sites have not been determined.

If a clear winner emerges, it someday will replace some or all of a member's paper medical records, Beck said. Data could include imagery, video and sound recordings. Medical personnel will use portable computers to read the tags and update them as necessary.

The dog tag won't be the service member's only medical history record. A copy of the information will be stored in a consolidated database so information can be restored if a tag is lost or damaged.

In 1996, DoD and Data-Disk Technology Inc., developed the Medi-Tag, a 10-megabyte storage prototype. The tag also seemed more durable and stable than the previous card and it could hold any type of data, Beck said. Its success showed DoD might make use of other off-the-shelf products with far larger storage capacity.

Some of the devices being tested at Huachuca can store up to 340 megabytes of data and they range in size from a dime to a credit card.



Fresh win

Michael Ramey, a work leader in the produce department of the Fort Benning Commissary, restocks grapes July 28.

The Fort Benning Commissary recently won the Best Produce Department award in the large commissary category for the Defense Commissary Agency's Eastern Region.

Commissary management and staff specialists selected the winners from among 113 stores in the eastern region. Each nominee was evaluated according to criteria provided by DeCA headquarters at Fort Lee, Va.

There are 298 stores worldwide in the DeCA system.

NG, Reserve Soldiers get green IDs

Sgt. Jack Siemieniec
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army officials took one step closer to a seamless, total force last month when a ceremony formally recognized the demise of the red identification card for members of the Army Reserve and National Guard.

Reserve component Soldiers, effective June 1, now receive a green ID card as they enter the service or have a change in status.

The new cards are exactly the same as those issued to the active component, except they have "U.S. Army Reserve" printed in the upper right-hand corner, where active component Soldiers have "U.S. Army Active."

Soldiers can obtain the new cards at their Reserve or Guard center when they reenlist, are promoted or their cards otherwise expire. It is anticipated the complete phase-in of the program will take about five years.

According to U.S. Total Army Personnel Command officials, only Reserve and Guard retirees who have not reached age 60 and dependents will continue to receive the red card.

Reserve component Soldiers who come on active duty for more than 30 days will still receive an "Active" card, as they have in the past.

Defense department project to solve military housing problems

Jim Garamore
Armed Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — A quality of life initiative to improve military housing has not gone as fast as defense officials wish, but it is making headway and is starting to pay off, said Pentagon spokesman Ken Bacon July 23.

A recent General Accounting Office report on military housing questioned whether the military initiative to get private firms to renovate and build military housing would save money. Further, the report said, the Department of Defense (DoD) would have to pay service members more to afford this privately constructed housing.

"The government put up about $9.5 million for the Corpus Christi project and got $30 million in housing," Bacon said at a July 16 press briefing. "[In Everett], the government put up a total of $5.9 million and got housing units worth $19 million."

Bacon said the program is the only way the department will solve military housing problems. DoD estimates 200,000 of the department's 300,000 housing units are substandard. If the department stuck to traditional ways of doing business, renovating or replacing these units would cost $20 billion and take 30 to 40 years. Using privatization, DoD may solve housing problems by 2010.

DoD is ready to push forward with a 420-unit project at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. A 155-unit project is set for the Marine Corps Logistics Base, Albany, Ga. Solicitations will go out later this year for 760 units at Robins Air Force Base, Ga.

DoD is pursuing bids for nine projects totaling 22,989 housing units. The projects are: Fort Hood, Texas; Fort Stewart, Ga.; Fort Lewis, Wash.; Fort Meade, Md.; Fort Irwin, Calif.; Naval Air Station Kingsville, Texas; Elmendorf Air Force Base, Alaska; Camp Pendleton, Calif; and Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Going back to fully financed government housing is not an alternative, according to John Goodman, deputy undersecretary of defense for industrial affairs and installations.

"The department's inability quickly to resolve the shortcomings of its housing programs in light of funding constraints was a major factor in its decision to privatize family housing as a means of maintaining quality of life for our family members," Goodman said in a written statement.

"We also expect commercial management of housing to result in better maintenance than under government ownership and have put explicit controls into privatization contracts, including mandatory reserve accounts, to ensure this is the case," he said.

Goodman disputed the GAO claim that DoD must increase service members' housing allowance. He said rental costs would be based on members' normal basic housing allowance.

He said Cohen's concern covers all quality of life initiatives. "[Military] compensation is also one of the things we'll be looking at," Bacon said.

"I think we'll be well-positioned to convince Congress this is a program that should continue and perhaps be expanded."

crime watch

Military Police Activity

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning military police blotters. Entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of guilt or innocence of any person.

This week's hot topic concerns a form of shoplifting, which has become increasingly popular. It is known as price changing. Switching price tags on items in the Post Exchanges (PX) or any store, is considered shoplifting by the criminal justice system, even though most patrons who are guilty of this crime do not consider it shoplifting.

In most instances, the patron will remove an item from a box and place it in another box which has a considerably lower price, or switch price tags on items of clothing.

Post policy requires sponsors to remain with their guest(s) for the duration of the PX visit.

*Attention Sponsors: If family members engage in inappropriate behavior, the sponsor can lose exchange privileges.

Note: Guests are not authorized to make purchases. Sponsors are authorized to sign in two family members at a time.

•A private tried to depart the Main Exchange PX with two Playstation games without rendering proper payment. He was later apprehended and charged with larceny of property.

•A private reported that she was raped by an NCO. Further investigation revealed the private was involved in a consensual sexual relationship with the NCO. The private felt pressured into reporting she was raped when the unit found out about the relationship. The private was later charged with false swearing.

•A captain accompanied by his wife and two NCOs were involved in a verbal altercation when the captain accused his wife (an NCO) of having an affair with another NCO. After the confrontation with the accused NCO who was accompanied by his wife (also an NCO) the officer assaulted the NCO.

The wife of the assaulted NCO and the officer's wife broke up the altercation. The NCO who was assaulted ran. Once the NCO ran, his wife then assaulted the captain's wife. The captain was charged with assault and conduct unbecoming of an officer. The NCO who assaulted the captain's wife was charged with assault.

Remember to help "Make our post the best — give crime arrest."

Fort Benning Schools offer gifted program — Fort Benning Schools offer a self-contained gifted program at Dexter Elementary School for students in grades 3-5. The program is based on curriculum that emphasizes higher thinking skills, creative problem solving skills, development of a strong self concept, aesthetic awareness and the development of positive interpersonal relations.

At Faith Middle School, gifted students in grades 6-8 are provided accelerated academic instruction by regular classroom teachers. In addition, children go to a resource teacher for the gifted for enrichment activities.

Students must qualify in three of four categories to include ability, achievement, grades or creativity. Parents who are interested in their child or children participating in this program must bring the most recent achievement scores, ability scores and a report card to Dexter or Faith. Students already qualified in the State of Georgia will be entered in the gifted program without further testing.

For more information, call Kathy Einhorn at 545-8254.

ACS offers spouse orientation — The Army Community Service Program will hold a Fort Benning Spouse Orientation at 8:45 a.m. Aug. 14 in Building 359 on Ingersoll Street.

All newly assigned personnel are encouraged to attend. Child care is provided; however, to access this service family members are asked to make reservations.

To make reservations or for more information, call Marsha Collins at 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Thrift Shop offers late night — The post Thrift Shop located at the corner of Dixie and Ingersoll Road will be open to the public from 6 to 9 p.m. today. Consignments will be taken with military ID card from 6 to 8 p.m.

For more information, call 687-4830.

Family Advocacy seeks volunteers — The Family Advocacy First Steps Program seeks volunteers to work with Fort Benning parents of newborns.

Various responsibilities include making ward visits to mothers at the hospital and follow-up calls after they leave the hospital with their babies.

For more information or to volunteer, call the First Steps office at 544-2020.

Ladybugs

Families learn about environment during FSG organizational day

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The guests of honor for one unit's family support group (FSG) organizational day may have had some non-bug lovers squirming in their seats. But the families of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), who gathered at Riverside for the Ladybug Ball July 18, know the tiny red and black bugs are more than just pests — they are warriors for the environment.

During the ball, parents scooped up handfuls of ladybugs for the children and helped them safely deliver more than 8,000 of the little critters to the trees surrounding Riverside.

According to Shannon Wilson, FSG coordinator, the group came up with the idea of the Ladybug Ball as a fun and unique way to bring families together and help them learn about the environment.

Wilson said the ladybugs protect trees and bushes by killing aphids and other softshelled insects that can harm them.

She said the day was meant not only for fun, but also as a learning experience.

"This was a great way for families to learn more about the environment," Wilson said. "Families were able to get together and find out what the ladybugs do for the trees and also get the chance to help in that process."

She said the children learned ladybugs are the good guys.

Most of the children seemed to understand the mission at hand and the reason for having the Ladybug Ball.

Katie Smith, 4, explained putting the ladybugs on the trees keeps them safe.

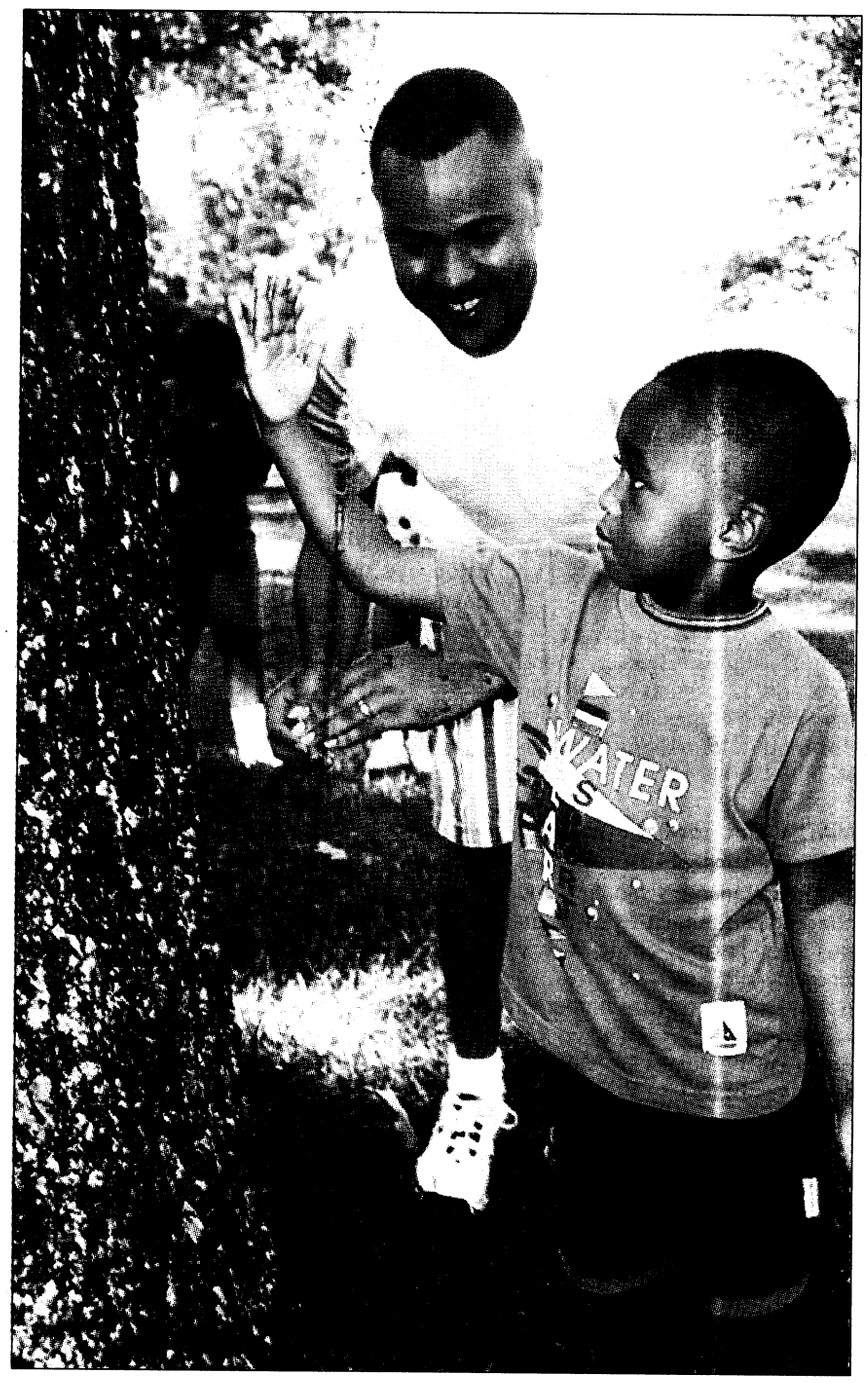
"When you put the ladybugs on the trees they eat all of the bad bugs," Smith said. "That way the trees won't die."

Running back and forth with ladybug-covered limbs, children watched as the creatures made the trek from hand to tree. Using water guns the children also made sure that the trees, as well as unsuspecting bystanders, were adequately watered .

Kayla Comiskey, 4, said she likes the ladybugs because she thinks they are cute.

"I like their little spots," Comiskey said. "They tickle when they crawl up my arm."

Wilson said it took two months of preparation to get the Ladybug Ball together. The 8,000 ladybugs were ordered from a company in California and the FSG made ladybug hats and magnets for the festivities.



She said she thinks the Ladybug Ball sparked an interest with family members because it was something different.

"Because this is something so unique, we had no problem getting people to come out here," Wilson said. "We definitely didn't have to pull any teeth this time."

Wilson said there will be a lot of deployments and field time coming up and getting together to do something like the Ladybug Ball helps families get to know each other better.

She said it's good for the families to know they have another support network they can depend upon.

"The most important thing is for the families to come together because not all of them know each other," Wilson said. "This has been a good time for them to get together with friends, as well as meet new friends that can be there when their husbands are gone."

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland

Staff Sgt. Darryl Johnson helps Tevin Bryson, 4, put a ladybug on one of the trees surrounding Riverside July 18.

Staff Sgt. Darryl Johnson, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., said he came out to the Ladybug Ball because he wanted to spend some quality time with his family and he thought it was a neat idea to incorporate the ladybugs.

"It's great that we can come out here with our kids and do something for the environment," Johnson said. "It's important for our children to learn more about the environment through activities like this."

Robin Bruce, FSG co-coordinator said the children and families had a blast with the Ladybug Ball.

"I think we had to minimize the adult contact with the ladybugs," Bruce said.

MACH program offers support to new mothers

Michele E. Hanson
Bayonet correspondent

The Baby Friendly Hospital Initiative is a global program sponsored by the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund. The initiative encourages and recognizes hospitals that offer an optimal level of care for breast-feeding mothers. The Baby Friendly Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) assists mothers with information, confidence and skills needed to successfully initiate and continue breast-feeding their babies.

Since the opening of the Baby Friendly Clinic, many new military and family members have successfully chosen to nurse their babies. Capt. Lisa Leazenby, Community Health Nurse and lactation consultant for MACH, said the ultimate goal of the clinic is to improve infant health by offering positive choices and encouragement to parents, enhancing their new family.

"The Baby Friendly Clinic offers a variety of services and is there to provide pre- and post-natal education and support," said Jennifer Ledwick, a breast-feeding educator at the clinic.

The why and how to breast-feeding is introduced during the Expecting Parenting Class and the Obstetric Orientation. During labor and delivery, the nurses are all actively involved, helping the new moms nurse within the first hours of life. Before the patients are discharged from the hospital, the nurses and breast-feeding educators offer support and assign appointment slips for a 72-hour postpartum appointment at the Baby Friendly Clinic.

"This appointment is a tremendous help to mothers, especially if they are frustrated. They find out that nursing is going well by the baby's weight gain and all of their problems and concerns are addressed," Ledwick said.

Follow-up calls are made to each breast-feeding mother during the first and second weeks and the first, fourth and sixth months. The La Leche League holds breast-feeding support group meetings each month for additional support if the mother chooses. The meetings are held at 10 a.m. the second Tuesday of each month at Aldergate United Methodist Church.

"Moms who surround themselves by other moms making the same choices, such as breast-feeding, get the support they need to continue the breast-feeding relationship," Ledwick stated.

The Baby Friendly Clinic is located on the third floor of MACH. Patients are seen by appointment and walk-ins are welcome from 9 a.m. to noon Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

For more information, call 544-4036 during clinic hours or the Community Health Nurse line at 545-4041.

Healthy lifestyle helps reduce symtoms of GERD

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Gastroesophageal is a word that refers to the stomach and the long tube that carries food to the stomach after swallowing — the esophagus.

Reflux means to flow back or return. Gastroesophageal reflux is the return of the stomach's contents back up into the esophagus. Gastroesphageal reflux is a normal phenomenon. It typically occurs briefly after eating.

This is different from gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD). GERD is a condition where the degree of exposure of the esophagus to the stomach contents is greater than normal.

Heartburn is the most common complaint people make about GERD.

The symptoms of GERD can be very close to the symptoms of heart problems such as pain or pressure in the chest. Some differences are that the pain of GERD may be caused by lying down and relieved by standing up or relieved by taking an antacid.

Normally, your stomach valve called the lower esophageal sphincter (LES), closes so stomach contents do not flow back up into the esophagus.

Cigarette smoking, onions, peppermint, chocolate, caffeine, fatty foods and alcohol can relax the LES, allowing stomach contents to reflux.

The treatment for GERD begins with getting rid of as many of the risk factors listed above as possible. For those who continue to have problems, the acidity of the stomach contents should be reduced to lessen damage to the esophagus.

Over-the-counter antacids are effective for some, but are are lower in dose than what is available by prescription and may be ineffective.

Another way doctors decrease acid is with drugs which turn off the pump that makes acid. These are proton pump inhibitors (Prilosec, Prevacid).

Other approaches used by doctors for GERD include drugs that make the stomach empty more quickly (Reglan, Propulsid) and drugs which increase the strength of the LES (Bethanechol, Reglan, Propulsid).

At some point when GERD does not respond to treatment, doctors examine the person through a variety of tests which include looking at the esophagus and stomach with a light (endoscopy), examination with XRays (Upper GI series), tests which measure the acid in the stomach (pH test), tests which measure the ability of the LES to close (manometry), tests of the ability to reproduce symptoms by putting acid in the stomach (Bernstein test) or tests for bacteria which do not allow ulcers to heal (H. Pylori).

Regardless of the cause of the problem, uncontrolled GERD leads to serious complications such as ulcers, bleeding, infections, scars that narrow the esophagus and changes in the lining of the esophagus called Barrett's esophagus. Doctors believe Barrett's esophagus can lead to cancer of the esophagus.

For those with severe GERD unresponsive to treatment, surgery to increase the pressure at the lower esophagus (fundoplication) may help.

GERD is not an uncommon health problem. Generally, a good understanding of the things which worsen GERD and early treatment help most people find relief.

Special thanks to Dr. James Dill, Gastroenterology Clinic.

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

The Ultimate International Experience

For the extraordinary individual who wants more than a job, this is a way of life that will challenge the deepest resources of your intelligence, self-reliance, and responsibility. It demands an adventurous spirit ... a forceful personality ... superior intellectual ability ... toughness of mind ... and the highest degree of integrity. It takes special skills and professional discipline to produce results. You will need to deal with fast-moving, ambiguous, and unstructured situations that will test your resourcefulness to the utmost.

This is the Clandestine Service, the vital human element of intelligence collection. These people are the cutting edge of American intelligence, an elite corps gathering the vital information needed by our policy-makers to make critical foreign policy decisions.

The CIA's Clandestine Service Trainee Program is the gateway to a unique overseas experience. To qualify, you must have first-rate qualifications: a bachelor's degree with an excellent academic record, strong interpersonal skills, the ability to write clearly and accurately, and a burning interest in international affairs. A graduate degree, foreign travel, foreign language proficiency, previous residency abroad, and military experience are pluses. We are particularly interested in candidates with backgrounds in Central Eurasian, East Asian, and Middle Eastern languages and those with degrees and experience in international economics and international business, as well as in the physical sciences. Entrance salaries range from $33,302 to $51,049.

All applicants must successfully complete a thorough medical and psychiatric examination, a polygraph interview, and an extensive background investigation. Maximum age for entrance into this program is 35. US citizenship is required for both applicant and spouse. The CIA encourages applications from men and women of every racial and ethnic background, from all parts of the nation — we represent America and we want to be representative of America.

To apply, send your resume (please include your college GPA) and a letter explaining your qualifications. We will respond within 45 days if there is further interest. Interviews are scheduled throughout the United States. Promising applicants will then be required to travel to the Washington, DC, area for testing and further processing.

DPW provides tips for waste management

Directorate of Public Works

Each year Americans throw away enough office paper to build a 12-foot high wall of paper from New York to Los Angeles. The most effective way to manage waste is to reduce what we generate through Source Reduction. This means making goods last longer, reusing products and reducing packaging. Here are some more ideas for reducing our waste items:

Reduce

Reduce the amount of trash you generate. Be picky about packaging. Look for durable products. Avoid disposables. Buy loose, unpacked fruit and vegetables.

Reuse

Reuse those items that are normally thrown away like jars, wrapping paper, boxes, ribbons and more. Repair appliances, furniture and clothing. Donate unwanted clothes or other items. Have a garage sale.

Recycle

See matrix below; if you have questions, call the Installation's Recycling Manager, Walter Nichols at 545-1007 or Tom Moore at 544-6142.

Rebuy

Rebuy products containing recycled material. Nothing is truly recycled until it's been repurchased as a new item.

Reject

Reject products that are wasteful, environmentally harmful or of poor quality in favor of those that can be reused, repaired or recycled.

Respond

Respond to retailers and manufacturers. You can encourage simpler, less complex packaging. Show that new neighbor how the Fort Benning recycling program works. Call us with your suggestions.

Notice of temporary road bypass

There will be a temporary road bypass constructed on Jecelin Road near LAAF, Dixie Road and the DPW Sewage Number 2 between Aug. 2 and Aug. 29. The purpose of this bypass is to permit the construction of a new 36-inch diameter sanitary sewer line across Jecelin Road. The bypass will consist of a ramped earthen embankment. This work is part of the 75th Ranger Barracks Complex construction by the Savannah District, Corps of Engineers. For additional information, call Mike Graham, Project Engineer, West Georgia Area Office, Corps of Engineers at 545-1082.

Comments and Questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" please call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWC (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

PAGERS
NO LONG TERM COMMITMENT

God hears us through prayers

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) William C. Shelnutt IX
TIC Chapel Pastor

Dr. D.M. M'Intyre wrote: "In prayer, Jacob became Israel; in prayer, Daniel saw Christ's day and was glad; in prayer, Saul of Tarsus received his commission to go to the Gentiles; in prayer, the Son of Man accomplished His obedience, and embraced His cross."

reflections

Prayer has been and will always be the avenue through which God hears our needs and answers those needs.

To be hasty in prayer is to be weak in prayer. We must never forget that God alone has the answer to every problem we could ever encounter. We must never be in such a hurry that we miss God and his answer.

Psychiatrist Carl G. Jung once expressed, "Hurry is not the Devil, it is the Devil." To the Thessalonians Paul wrote, "Study to be quiet." It is in the quiet that God trains our ears to hear him.

For several years, I have had the great privilege of leading individuals through a study on prayer. This study has been tremendously instructional for me each time. Out of this study, I have come to realize a major concern for many people is how to know how and when God is speaking to them.

I have come to believe that listening is probably one of the most neglected aspects of prayer.

Jo Kimmel, in her book Steps to Prayer Power, reminds us of the need to learn how to listen to God. She said: "In the listening aspect of prayer we must learn to quiet our bodies and ourselves in a receptive attitude, an attitude of ... listening. We need to tune our ears to God's wavelength, and just as a radio has to be delicately adjusted, to get the fine tuning we want, so our ears must be carefully tuned, to hear the voice of God."

If prayer is the school of spiritual life, then silence is surely the laboratory where God shares his best secrets. Those who desire to seek God's will must spend much time in that secluded laboratory. Some people, however, are so busy in the work of God that they have little or no time to be with God.

How can we develop this aspect of prayer called listening?

• First, ask God specific questions about personal problems, needs and situations.

• Then, search the Scriptures for specific answers to your questions. As you search, quietly wait upon the Lord to hear what he may say within the inner resources of your heart through His Word.

•Next, mentally *e*valuate all the circumstances that relate to the specific request. Ask God to show you His plan through these circumstances ... be specific.

•Finally, don't give up. It takes time and experience to develop a listening ear and an understanding heart.

As Fenelon said, "Oh, how rare it is to find a soul quiet enough to hear God Speak." Would you develop that rare quality?

Bandits take top spot during B-Ball tourney

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

After 10 games and 11 hours of play, the Fort Benning Bandits came out on top after beating the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) team 77-59 for the Summer Basketball Tournament championship.

Eleven basketball teams representing various units from around post came out to Audie Murphy Fitness Center Saturday to participate in the tournament.

The Bandits, which is comprised of Soldiers mainly from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), made their way to the top spot by first taking out Battery B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.) 64-38.

The 104th Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), then tried to knock the Bandits out of contention, but were defeated 63-55 in the semi-final game.

The ITB team climbed their way to the championship game by beating out 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.) 64-43.

Their title spot was clinched, however, when they slid past Battery C, 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regt. 58-55.

ITB player Lewis Haywood said his team played well throughout the tournament despite their loss to the Bandits.

"I think we still played outstanding. We were a little tired in the last game, but it was tough playing three games in a row," Haywood said. "They're a good team. At least we got beat by the best."

Although 11 teams participated in the tournament, Bandits coach Michael Swinson said he knew it would come down to the Bandits and ITB.

"Since they were the post champions this year, we knew that we were probably going to face them sometime today," Michael Swinson said of the ITB team.

Swinson added he was confident going into the tournament that his team would make it to the finals.

"We were probably the most veteran team to play today and I would have been pretty disappointed if we didn't make the championships," he said.

Swinson said the Fort Benning Bandits have played together for several seasons including last year when the team participated in an Air Force southeastern basketball league.

"This tournament was good practice for the upcoming season. We faced some good competition today," he said. "I think we're going to have a good season."

Swinson said he also used the tournament to scout for possible additions to the Bandits.

The Bandits are currently preparing for the upcoming season, scheduled to begin in September.

Service Pistol Team wins national title

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Just a month after dominating the Interservice Pistol Championships at Camp Robinson, Ark., the Service Pistol Team of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) won the Service Pistol National Championship — something the Army has not done for a decade.

The Army's pistol shooters went up against more than 700 of the best shooters in the country and walked away with several victories at the National Pistol Matches conducted at Camp Perry, Ohio, July 16-20.

USAMU's Service Pistol Team won the National Trophy Team Match at the National Pistol Matches. The new National Service Pistol Champion Team, coached by Kimberly J. Kolb and comprised of Thomas A. Rose, Aaron P. Schreiber, Fritz A. Ficke and Roger C. Jacobson, accepted the Gold Cup Trophy during an award ceremony July 20 at Camp Perry.

The U.S. Army Reserve Team took second and the U.S. Marine Corps Team was third.

"The service pistol shooters are all hard-working individuals who make up a strong team," said USAMU Service Pistol Team Coach Ray Arrendondo. "The team works well together always assisting each other in team development. I am very proud of their effort to succeed and am very fortunate to have such motivated and dedicated Soldiers who strive to be the best."

According to the shooters, the M-9 pistol, which is built and modified by USAMU's Custom Firearms Shop, is what won the match for the Army team.

"The improvements to the M-9 have helped us to excel," Jacobson said. "It has a totally better feeling trigger that's smoother and crisper; it just feels great."

"The M-9 is definitely getting better all the time," said Schreiber. "The gunsmiths did some trigger work before the match; their good work, speed and proficiency is what made it happen."

"The Service Pistol Team win was fantastic and another confirmation that the M-9 pistol is quickly gaining ground as a competitive pistol," Arredondo said. "The success could not have happened without the help of the gunsmiths who built the guns."

During the NRA National Pistol Championships, the USAMU teams took second place overall out of 97 teams.

Because of his high score in the .22 Caliber Championship, Jacobson was named to the 1998 U.S. Mayleigh Cup Team that scored 2,728 points, breaking the previous record of 2,688 points. The Mayleigh Cup Team is made up of the 10 best slow-fire shooters in the U.S. and competes against other teams around the world. Jacobson was also a member of the 1996 U.S. Team that won the Mayleigh Cup Match.

For being the top Army shooter, Rose won the Forces Command Trophy, which was presented by USAMU Commander Col. Archibald V. Arnold III during the award ceremony. During the championship, Ficke beat 719 competitors and won the .45-Caliber National Match Course Championship.

Jason A. Sargent earned his President's Hundred Tab and won the Custer Medal for placing fourth out of 344 in the Nondistinguished Class of the National Trophy Individual Match.

Schreiber came in second in the President's Hundred Tab, only two points behind the winner; Schreiber, Jacobson, Ficke, Rose and Sargent all made the President's Hundred.

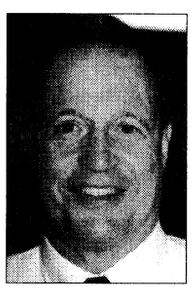
"The National Championships turned out to be an excellent competition," said Michael A. Lane, NCOIC of the Service Pistol Team. "The best part of this competition was competing against the best teams in the country."

According to Lane, the USAMU Team shot well throughout the championships and they did it in all types of weather including very windy conditions, heavy rain and high heat and humidity.

When the shooters' pistols malfunctioned, the USAMU gunsmiths — Anthony W. Kidd, Charles P. Gartland, Simon C. Reynolds and Paul Kneuper — who traveled with them to Camp Perry, were able to correct the problems. According to William O. Harden, the chief of USAMU's Custom Firearms Shop, the gunsmiths also worked on the guns of the Army Reserve team, fixing trigger problems and other malfunctions, which helped the Reserves win the NRA National Championships.

Civilian employee swims away with Gold Medals

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor



A Department of Defense civilian employee at Fort Benning recently brought home the gold after taking part in the 1998 Georgia Games in Atlanta.

Chuck Gantner, deputy chief for the Office of Infantry Proponency (OIP) and chief of OIP's Personnel Proponency division, swam away from the games July 19 with three Gold Medals and a perfect record.

The 53-year-old New Jersey native, a combat Infantryman, was previously stationed here as an Infantry officer before getting out in 1975.

Gantner took first in all three events he had entered, which were the 50-yard freestyle, 50-yard butterfly and 50-yard backstroke.

This was Gantner's fourth trip to the Georgia Games where overall he has collected a total of 17 Gold Medals competing in masters-level swimming events.

Gantner

"In the past I entered more events, but I only tried three this year because I didn't think I was in good enough condition," Gantner said, who first began swimming at the age of 11.

In addition to racking up medals at the Georgia Games, Gantner has also made numerous trips to national and world-level meets.

At the 1985 World Championships in Toronto, Gantner brought back four Gold Medals and duplicated his effort at the 1986 Championships in Tokyo with an additional four.

"Throughout my competitive career, I've had the opportunity to take part in a lot of different competitions," he said. "In '64, I went to the Olympic trials, but missed making the team — just barely though."

Although his main competitive days are behind him, Gantner said he still enjoys swimming.

"I swim now basically for physical and mental fitness," he said.

While most people may grab a bite to eat during their noon-time break, Gantner typically takes to the pool at Briant Wells Field House or Carey Pool for a quick lunchtime workout.

"Depending on what's going on at work, I try to swim either before work or at lunch," Gantner said. "It's very relaxing and it's helping me stay in shape."

Gantner said he is already planning on attending next year's Georgia Games in Augusta.

"I really enjoy the competitive aspect of swimming," he said. "And I'm going to keep going to the games as long as I can."

USAPFS compares Army fitness with WWII test

Ed Thomas
Troy State University — Fort Benning

Critics of today's Army physical training (PT) program often complain that too much time and energy is spent preparing for the three-event Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT).

Push-ups, sit-ups and the two-mile run dominate PT in many units because the APFT is directly linked to promotion and retention. This trend is slowly changing as commanders look for alternative assessments to measure the combat physical readiness of their Soldiers.

"As the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) prepares to revise PT doctrine in the next few years, alternative PT assessments will be a priority," said Frank Palkoska, USAPFS's chief of doctrine. "Literally hundreds of valid, reliable and objective PT tests have been developed over the years and we are evaluating many of them.

"Some already exist in previous PT manuals and could provide us with valuable data as we shape future doctrine. The 1946 APFT is a good example, and it allows us to compare our scores with Soldiers from that period," said Palkoska.

Meeting or surpassing World War II physical fitness standards would be reassuring, but falling short would provide valuable information as PT doctrine is reshaped to meet the future, Palkoska said.

Lessons learned during WWII resulted in the 1946 revision of FM 21-20 Physical Training. It describes three kinds of fitness: technical fitness provides the knowledge and skill to fight; emotional fitness develops the incentive and the will to fight; and physical fitness contributes the strength and stamina to fight. The 1946 PT manual also stressed the integral relationship between strength, stamina, agility and coordination to survival and victory on the battlefield.

The manual states that "Soldiers must still perform most of the arduous tasks which fighting men for thousands of years have had to do. There are always places where mechanized units cannot maneuver, tasks which they cannot accomplish, and situations in which equipment becomes disabled."

The battle-focused orientation of WWII PT doctrine resulted in a variety of exercises, some of which are now considered too difficult and dangerous for many of today's Soldiers.

"The current APFT falls short in the area of motor fitness," said USAPFS Instructional Systems Specialist Steve Van Camp. "Motor fitness is simply the ability to move well. It includes a composite of physical readiness factors including speed, agility, endurance, balance, flexibility, strength, power, precision and coordination.

"Motor fitness training and testing were well developed in Army PT doctrine during WWII and we can do much better today," said Van Camp, who added the Army definitely needs to expand its horizons in the motor fitness arena.

The 1946 APFT was comprised of five events.

The pull-up was executed with hands facing away from the body. This exercise measured Soldiers' ability to climb obstacles.

Squat jumps predicted a Soldier's ability to repeatedly assume a low cover position and quickly return to the upright.

"The push-up is strict by today's standards with hands placed on the ground directly under the shoulders," Palkoska said. "There was no time limit for the pushup event, but the test ended when the Soldier stopped to rest, bent the body or moved his hand or foot."

The sit-up event is similar to current doctrine, but Soldiers then had to touch alternate elbows to their knees adding a flexibility dimension to the event.

"The 300-yard shuttle run simulated the short anaerobic burst often required to accomplish individual movement techniques," Palkoska said. For this event, five laps of 60 yards each were done on a flat, open field.

"More than 150 Soldiers from numerous units have taken the 1946 APFT within the last two years," Van Camp said. "We see a wide variety of scores, with some units doing much better than others. Many Soldiers fall short on the squat jump, pull-ups and 300-yard shuttle run.

"We have also found that the Soldiers do far fewer pushups when held to the WWII standard. However, sit-up scores were comparable," Van Camp said.

Palkoska said in the future, the Army must develop and employ assessments that measure Soldiers' ability to complete the most physically demanding mission essential tasks.

Palkoska said the WWII test may fit some of those requirements and is ready for export.

Units interested in learning how to administer the test can email Palkoska at palkoskaf@benning.army.mil.

Camping allows freedom, solitude but comes with responsibilities

Wildlife Resources

For some people there is no other way to camp except in a fully loaded campground. For others, camping means getting away from even the most primitive campgrounds.

There is definitely a big difference between "car" camping and backcountry camping—hiking into remote, roadless destinations. It certainly gets the camper away from it all. But for those who seek a balance, they may enjoy the solitude of a tucked-away campsite without sacrificing all of the campground conveniences.

"When people think of backpacking, they picture a trip that goes from point A to point B in the wilderness, setting up camp along the way each night," said Linda Grebe, an outdoors marketing manager. She also said there is another option.

"Instead of hiking all day and setting up a new campsite every night, you can hike in, establish a 'base camp' and plan your activities from there," Grebe said. "Base camp backpacking allows you more options for planning your day and limits the time you spend hiking; whereas through-hikers typically hike all day, and sometimes have to hike longer than they wish to reach a suitable campsite before nightfall."

Kids especially need flexibility in their activities to stay interested and avoid getting overly tired. A hike from the camp can be a leisurely day of exploring the surrounding area, carrying only a daypack for essentials.

Find an open field and fly a kite, then return to camp and relax with a good book or a game of cards. Establishing a base camp in mountainous regions allows you to travel more lightly up and down the summits and cover more ground in less time.

Because you don't have to hike as long and far to a base camp, weight is not as much of a factor, and you can carry in more "luxury" items—a small cooler, a lantern, compact camping chairs, or extra fishing equipment.

With the freedom and solitude of backcountry camping, also come responsibilities. Conveniences such as running water, waste facilities and trash containers are not accessible. Backcountry campers are responsible for carrying out their trash and practicing low-impact camping. Some wilderness areas do not allow campfires, so you will need a cooking stove.

The variety of activities are just as available in the backcountry as they are in campgrounds. Discover new wilderness areas and car camping may be a thing of the past.

RFPI tests sensors, technology

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In its eternal quest for improving the light Infantryman's lethality and suvivability, the Army has been testing one of its latest battlefield systems, the Rapid Force Projection Initiative (RFPI) at Fort Benning this week.

The RFPI, a collection of sensors, weapons and command and control technology adds more firepower and intelligence gathering capability to a light force's makeup.

When a Division Ready Brigade (DRB) Infantry unit is deployed as an early entry force and becomes the first unit to initiate contact with an enemy, this force may seem tenuously linked to its rear supporting elements.

"There was a vulnerability of an early entry force," said Lt. Col. Jeffrey Arneson, chief of the Battle Command Division, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab. "A light force that's deployed somewhere worldwide arrives in theater and has to sit and wait for follow on forces. During that time period, they're vulnerable because they don't have a lot of assets."

The light Infantry early entry force doesn't have the mechanized weapons, the protection of tanks and Bradleys, Arneson said. With the potential threat of a larger, more dangerously equipped enemy arriving, the light force will need to have the detection equipment that is necessary to sense a potential threat and the firepower to repond to that threat.

While the equipment may have some offensive applications, the RFPI is a "primarily defensive" system for the light infantry, Arneson said. With this early detection and target acquisition equipment, early entry forces will be able detect and stand-off enemy attacks while waiting for supporting elements to arrive.

To field test this developing battle system, more than 2,000 Soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky. and the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Fort Stewart, Ga. have been doing battle in an Advanced Concepts Technology Demonstration (ACTD). The 3rd ID is the opposing force (OPFOR), while the 101st Abn. Div. (AA) is the experimental force (EXFOR) fielded with the new system.

Following this field exercise, the 101st Abn. Div. (AA) will keep the equipment for two years for further field testing.

"The intent of the RFPI is to give the early entry force more of a fighting chance, make the more lethal, and provide sensors that will pick up targets coming at greater ranges," Arneson said.

The RFPI system can be transported by C-130 aircraft and some of the individual pieces can be slingloaded. The weapons that makeup the system include:

• The Enhanced Fiber Optic Guided Missile Company (EFOGM), a missile system mounted on a HMMWV

Visiting force set to return home

The 1,800 members of the 101st Airborne Division, Air Assault, return home to Fort Campbell next week after a month as the main exercise force in the Rapid Force Projection Initiative.

Post Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst noted their professionalism in executing all missions. "They were a pleasure to have on post," he said. "What they did will go a long way to moving the Army, especially our light forces, into the next century, contributing to their survival and making our Soldiers more lethal on the next battlefield."

Because of the high visibility of the exercise, the Screaming Eagle Soldiers were visited by general officers, Department of the Army staffers and the media.

All came away with a renewed respect for the Soldiers who were able to talk knowledgeably about the equipment they were testing, to include offering ideas for improvement and for modifications.

"From the highest ranking officer down to the lowest private, the professionalism of these Screaming Eagles and XVIII Airborne Corps Troopers was clearly evident. They were great representatives of America's Army," Ernst said.

Col. Tim Bosse, field experiment director, said, "We couldn't have executed this exercise without them. A warfighting unit is the key to Advanced Concepts Technology Demonstrations, such as this," he said. They provided credibility to our results."

Ernst also had high praise for the 400 Soldiers of the 3d Squadron, 3d Infantry Division, members of the 29th Infantry Regiment, 988th Military Police Company and 3d Infantry Regiment who made up the opposing force.

"It was a great experiment," he said, "and all the Soldiers should be proud of the roles they played."

Virtual museum allows veterans to share experiences on-line

Pvt .2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Events leading to triumph or defeat can be remembered by almost anyone who has been involved in combat. Some, if not all of these events, have significant historical value. Should those memories be allowed to fade?

The Drop Zone Virtual Museum, a non-profit website, was created to keep the legacies of America's World War II airborne veterans alive, said Maj. Shawn Faherty, Chief of the Information Management Division at Martin Army Community Hospital, and one of the site's webmasters.

The Drop Zone was originally created by Faherty's friend Patrick O'Donnell, a historian who operates the website out of Virginia. O'Donnell began interviewing and cataloging stories of WWII veterans about six years ago. The website was created four years later, so those stories could be shared with others interested in learning about WWII.

"There was a website for WWI and other wars, but there was no one doing what we were doing; obtaining and preserving oral history on WWII airborne units," said Faherty. "The Drop Zone was then created to establish contact with veterans so their memories could live on."

Faherty said he became involved in the project with O'Donnell because he was interested in the technical side and wanted to learn how to manage a web page.

Stories such as "A Walk with God," written by WWII veteran Bernie Coon, tell tales of losing friends to enemy gunfire and being left for dead, but persevering to stay alive and beat the odds in enemy territory.

Although Americans have been taught history, this may be a better way to learn from those who have experienced it first hand. Now, with the help of The Drop Zone, veterans can share their stories with people all over the country.

Schools around the country have taken advantage of The Drop Zone. Teachers log onto the site for use in the classroom where students can interact directly with Soldiers who fought in the war.

Through e-mail, students can contact veterans with questions they have about the war.

"We have had a good response from high school teachers," Faherty said.

The information is also just as accurate as a textbook lesson. Unit journals, morning reports and archived information from Washington D.C. are used to verify stories, Faherty said.

Once the stories are verified, they may be placed on the web for the public to read.

"We receive about five to 10 stories a week and we research and validate all of them," Faherty said.

Not only does the website allow veterans to share their stories, they can also search for those they served with.

The website has a virtual reunion where veterans can log on and post what unit they served with and how to contact them as well as look for others who have posted their information.

The biggest challenge the creators face is the expansion of the website due to the abundance of stories that have been collected.

In the future, Faherty said they would like to expand and allow voices of Korean War and Vietnam Conflict airborne veterans to be heard also.

To check out The Drop Zone, log on to www.thedropzone.org.

Lightning safety

Incidents cause post officials to review preventive measures

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

After lightning claimed the life of one Soldier and injured nine others last week on Fort Benning, post officials are reviewing storm warning procedures and lightning safety measures on post.

"Fort Benning is distressed by this incident ... We are currently reviewing procedures to see if anything else can be done," said Col. Steven Eldridge, Fort Benning's deputy chief of staff. "I don't anticipate any changes though. Everything we do works well."

According to Eldridge, the post's Automated Weather Dissemination System (AWDS) alerted officials to the approaching storm hours before the incident.

The nine Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) Soldiers involved in the July 30 strike on Malone Range were spread out in a dispersal area when the lightning struck, he said.

Pvt. Robert L. Weckesser II of Company B, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, ITB, died Saturday from injuries incurred during the strike. The other Soldiers involved in the lightning incidents were treated and released with lesser injuries.

"They were doing what they were supposed to be doing," said Regis Beighley, safety manager of the Infantry Branch Safety Office, of how the Soldiers dispersed and crouched into a low position. "Lightning is very unpredictable. Although we can watch for it, there's no way we can tell where or who it will strike."

Despite the large number of thunderstorms experienced each year in this area, Beighley said the recent tragedy was only the second death related to lightning on post in the past five years.

"You are more likely to be killed driving to work than by lightning," he said.

Although the safest place to be during a severe storm is inside a building or home, Beighley said community members should still stay away from anything that conducts electricity such as telephones and electrical appliances.

"We've even had incidents reported where lightning came through a window and struck someone," he said.

While a building will always provide the best protection, Beighley said vehicles are the second best option, providing drivers don't touch any exposed metal on the car.

For those who are caught out in an open area, Beighley said the best defense is to crouch down in a ditch or depression.

"You don't want to lie flat on the ground though. Just keep low to the ground" he said.

Beighley also said to stay away from tall, isolated objects such as towers, metal fences and bleachers, and to always stay at least six feet away from tree trunks..

While the fierce crackle of thunder and blinding flashes of lightning may be enough to keep most people inside during a thunderstorm, Beighley said the right precautions can allow daily missions to continue no matter what Mother Nature has in store.

"We take risks every day by just walking across the street," he said. "You just have to pay attention and watch what's happening around you."

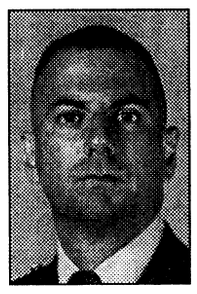
Fraternization: Policy needs adherence between Army ranks

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers will soon have a new directive on something called "fraternization," a word the Army has plundered from the dictionary and made its own. Officer and enlisted Soldiers will no longer be able to have "personal relationships," inside or outside the chain of command.

commentary



A joint-services task force looked at the issue, and Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen decided all services should be consistent with their fraternization policy. The Army stood alone in its practice of officers and enlisted Soldiers maintaining personal relationships outside the chain of command.

Although I do not agree it was necessary to resurrect and redefine this policy, I will support it like any other regulation. I'm just not sure what defines fraternization.

Several pairs of boots ago, before I enlisted, I was watching an old black and white World War II movie about some island invasion. A couple of Marines were looking after a Japanese prisoner. One of the guys offered a cigarette to the prisoner.

"Hey, what are you doing?" his friend angrily asked. "I ought to turn you in for fraternizing with the enemy."

That makes sense, I thought to myself. Moments before, they were shooting at each other. Fraternizing, I figured out, must mean to "make nice" with the guy who just bayoneted your buddy.

After watching more war movies, I figured out fraternization also meant to give intelligence to the enemy or to help the enemy in some way to endanger your squad. Heck, I thought, a fraternizer deserves to be punished and in the movies, that punishment would be quick and permanent.

Once I started wearing black boots and I was at my advanced individual training I was again challenged with this fraternization issue. "There won't be any fraternization between the cadre and students," our drill sergeants warned.

Hmm. I wonder what he means by that, I thought to myself and asked a couple of the Soldiers. "Dating," a female soldier enlightened me. She then explained how a drill sergeant and basic trainee were busted for "fraternizing," which after given the details of her story meant much more than "giving aid and comfort to the enemy." My drill sergeant sometimes seemed frightening, but I looked at him as a teacher, not as an enemy.

Over the years, my working Army definition for fraternization became something like "you can't date anyone within your chain of command," which I think is the same definition that many Soldiers have grown up with and have imbedded in their psyche.

As we await the specifics of a new policy, I have to wonder what "fraternization" means and where in the heck did we go wrong? So I did a little couch potato research and came up with a better understanding of the word.

I made the mistake of checking the dictionary and found two opposing definitions. The first definition is "to associate with others in a brotherly or congenial way." Okay, that's not a bad thing. Isn't that what camaraderie is all about?

The second definition reads "to associate on friendly terms with an enemy or opposing group, often in violation of discipline or orders." Okay, I think the second definition is what I was after, but where does personal relationships between officers and enlisted Soldiers come in, as redefined by the Army policy makers in recent statements?

The new directive will prohibit a relationship between the ranks which "involves or gives the appearance of partiality, preferential treatment, or the improper use of rank or position for personal gain, as well as being prejudicial to good order, discipline, and high unit morale."

Again, this all makes sense to me but the magnifying glass seems to be specifically investigating the relationships of officers and enlisted Soldiers. It seems every other service prohibits personal relationships between the ranks and the Army just jumped in for consistency within the services.

Until we have a new regulation in hand, we will have to define what a "personal relationship" is for ourselves, just to train up. Can an officer mom and an enlisted mom trade off babysitting duty? If I'm in a local bar and I see my boss, can I buy him a beer? You can think up your own scenarios.

It seems dating will be a big focus of the future policy. Simply put, whether in the chain of command or not, enlisted and officer personnel can't date. Ongoing personal relationships will either terminate or be "made honest" to avoid fraternization charges. Book with the post chapel soon, there might be a big surge. Maybe Soldiers will choose to leave the Army.

There are "about 500" officer-enlisted marriages in the Army, according to Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness Rudi de Leon. These relationships will be considered ok, acceptable by Army standards because the couples are already married.

Hasn't the Army always had a strong stance on fraternization, in regards to the chain of command? Beyond the chain of command, what does it matter if a major from an aviation unit is dating an enlisted Soldier from the medical activity? It is likely neither Soldier will ever work with each other or be in a position to influence the career of the other.

The new policy is bound to set some Soldiers up for failure, some rushing into a commitment they aren't prepared for, while others may sneak around to prolong the courtship.

The Army's current fraternization policy is not broken, in my opinion. The policy just needs to be enforced with attention to the "chain of command" and how personal relationships impact a unit's mission. And, as ever, a touch of common sense might help.

Top Doc's report promotes active lifestyles

Brad A. Taft
U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine

Since its release in 1996, the Surgeon General's report "Physical Activity and Health" has become a source of information and inspiration for Americans who want to achieve healthy lifestyles for themselves and their loved ones, but find it hard to do.

commentary

We have known for some time that most of us are not very physically active (60 percent of Americans engage in little to no regular physical activity in their leisure time, according to the Surgeon General's report). But important new research tells us that even moderate levels of physical activity, performed regularly as part of daily life, provide remarkable short and long-term benefits to health and well-being.

The moderate levels of physical activity identified in the report are quite different from the strenuous exercise often thought of as necessary to improve health. The health benefits of regular, intense aerobic exercise are well known. More "ordinary" types of physical activity performed regularly as part of daily life, such as taking a brisk walk, washing and waxing the car, working in the garden and dancing, can improve health and well-being.

Moderate physical activity done on most days of the week helps people live longer. It reduces blood pressure, the risk of heart disease, the risk of developing colon cancer, and the risk of developing diabetes mellitus. It helps control weight, relieves symptoms of depression and anxiety, and promotes psychological well-being. Moreover, these health benefits can be achieved regardless of gender or age.

Research has shown that males and females of all ages — children, youth, adults, and elders — can benefit from regular, moderate physical activity. The negative health risks of moderate physical activity are minimal, while the positive health benefits are great.

The key to achieving health benefits is making simple lifestyle changes, rather than tackling time-intensive, structured exercise programs. In fact, moderate physical activity should not be something "extra" to do, instead, it should be a part of everyday life. Most Americans already do some things that engage them in physical activity and these things can contribute to a healthy lifestyle. As the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention says, "physical activity: it's everywhere you go!"

What helps us to recognize these opportunities for moderate physical activity? First, look at your daily routines to see all the things you already do that include some type of physical activity. These may be things such as going to work, shopping, household chores, yard work, and recreation. Now, think of ways to include more physical activity into these routines. For example, when going to work, park at the edge of the parking lot rather than close to the entrance and walk the extra distance into the building. If you use mass transit, get off one stop early and walk the remaining few blocks to work. At work, use the stairs if you are going up one flight or down two. If you must use the elevator, get off before the floor you are going to and walk either one flight up or two flights down.

When going shopping, park on the opposite side of the mall from the store you are going to. In the grocery store, push the cart up and down each aisle rather than skipping aisles.

At home, get everyone away from the TV and take a walk together around the block. Walk to a friend's house in your neighborhood rather than drive. Mow the grass with a push mower and do other yard work by hand to allow yourself to be more physically active while working outside.

There are many ways in which moderate physical activity could become part of your everyday life, but it is up to you. You can become more physically active! Moderate physical activity requires a little creative investment and returns a lot in health benefits. You can have a healthier lifestyle and you will feel better as you make moderate physical activity part of your everyday life. So think "physical activity" and remember, "it's everywhere you go!"

RFPI: Enhances early entrance force

chassis, capable of defeating armor vehicles and rotary wing aircraft up to 15 kilometers. The two-man crew served weapon can be air dropped or slingloaded.

• The High Mobility Artillery Rocket System (HIMARS), a lightweight, truck-mounted version of the Multiple Launch Rocket system (MLRS) is built on a five-ton truck chasss. The HIMARS has a three-man crew.

• An old standard on the battlefield, the 155mm Howitzer, or M198 incorporates a Digital Fire Control System (DFCS) which increases responsiveness and accuracy.

Early detetection equipment such as, sensors, are a large part of the RFPI system. These sensors include:

• The Integrated Acoustic System (IAS), a standalone, transmit targeting information. Information on wheeled and track vehicles, helicopters and weapons is fed back to the Tactical Operations Center (TOC).

• The Hunter Sensor Suite (HSS) is a heavy HMMWV with an integrated stabilized sensor suite, capable of stationary and on the move operations. It is also designed to provide long range targeting information as well as battle damage assessment.

• The Remote Sentry (RS) is a smaller sensor suite with such technologies as Forward Looking Infrared (FLIR), an Eysesafe Laser Rangefinder (ELRF) and a Low Light Level TV (LLLTV) Camera for acquiring and tracking multiple targets at longrange. The RS links sensors to commanders and aides by providing precise situational awareness on weapons and targets.

• Command and control will be greatly improved with the Light Digital TOC (LDTOC) where information from all of the RFPI elements is provided to the battle commander.

"For Soldiers who will become command and control operators in the LDTOC, there will be dramatic changes in how they do their jobs," Arneson said. "They'll be working on a digital system instead of the old voice communications."

Arneson said during some of the prepatory exercises, some commanders may become too confident with the information they see on the screen.

"Those digital systems are so good, when they see it they take it as gospel and sometimes they don't do the cross checking." he said. "There's some good lessons to be learned from these systems, but we don't want to get too comfortable, and think we can just sit in a room and fight a battle looking at a TV screen."

Beyond running a successful field exercise and testing the RFPI system, feedback from the Soldiers running the new technology will be key to assessing what the next step for this system may be, Arnseon said.

"The user feedback is the most important element," Arneson said about this field testing. "We have a lot of important agencies here, but when you get a Soldier who takes that piece of equipment to the field for a week or two, his opinion is invaluable. He's the guy on the ground using the equipment and you can get your best information from him."

EFMB ensures exercise complies with regs

Directorate of Public Works

Since July 15, the Rapid Force Projection Initiative (RFPI) is being conducted at Fort Benning. This experiment, designed to assess emerging technologies and their application for light forces, takes place throughout the installation until Aug. 15.

While the experiment began only two weeks ago, preparations and coordination for compliance with all environmental regulations began long before the arrival of equipment and personnel.

The initial step began on Feb. 26, 1997 when the Environmental Programs Management Branch (EPMB), Directorate of Public Works, received a Fort Benning form 144-R (Record of Environmental Consideration) from the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab.

According to Debbie Gamble, DPW's hazardous waste program manager,"the document began the process of evaluating the potential environmental impact that this exercise could cause for Fort Benning," Gamble said.

Because the exercise involves such a large number of personnel, vehicles, and training areas, all EPMB program managers provided comments, information and instructions to enable the units to avoid any environmental impact.

The DBBL also scheduled a briefing session prior to the arrival of personnel and equipment. During the meeting,an EPMB representative informed staff from the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) and other participating units on specific environmental issues and procedures at Fort Benning.

The DBBL tasked Jerry Barricks to serve as the environmental coordinator for all aspects of the exercise.

Immediately after the troops and equipment arrived, EPMB hazardous waste program managers provided a courtesy inspection and informal training at motorpool and airfield locations.

"The units' responses were quick and complete to issues noted during the initial inspection " Gamble said. "One of the biggest concerns we have with any field exercise are fuel spills."

During the briefing and the initial courtesy inspection, spill prevention and preparedness were emphasized to the DBBL and to the unit commanders.

"Fuel spills are most likely to occur at the fuel points. They normally dispense up to 800 gallons of fuel per day and this creates the potential for a large spill." Gamble said. "The personnel operating the fuel points for this exercise have done an outstanding job and have taken every precaution to prevent a fuel spill."

Gamble said that in order to avoid potential contamination of a waterway, fueling locations have been located so they are not near any of Fort Benning's streams or rivers.

The process of planning ahead for environmental protection has become standard for any field training exercise.

"With early planning as demonstrated by this exercise, the potential for environmental impact, chances for serious environmental damage can be reduced without compromising the training exercise," Gamble said. "Fort Benning's unique training environment can be preserved and soldiers can conduct realistic, valuable training."

RTB gains new leader during ceremony

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

Another page in ranger history was recorded Monday as the Ranger Training Brigade's colors passed from the hands of Col. Dorian T. Anderson to Col. Frank G. Helmick on Todd Field.

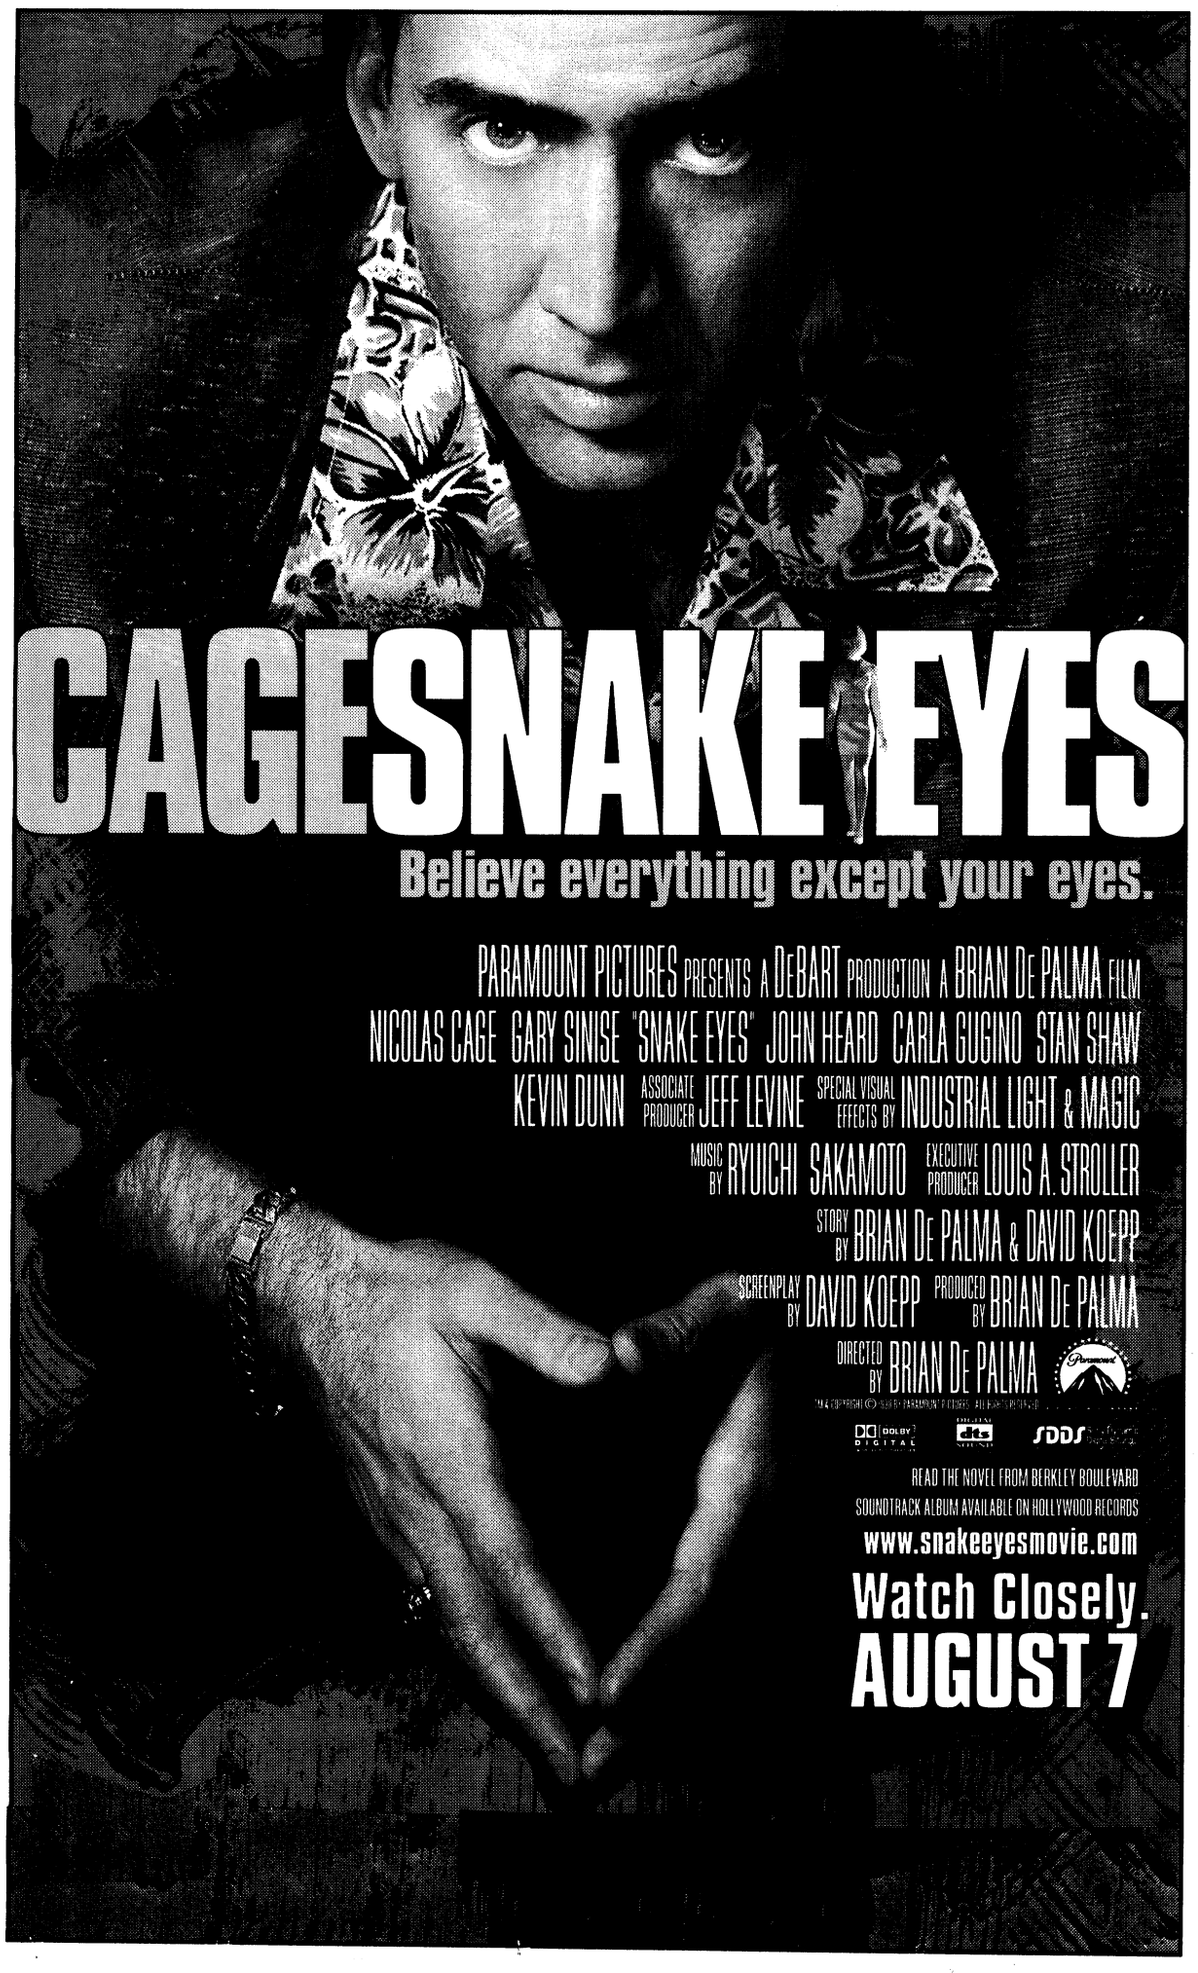
Helmick, a 1976 West Point graduate, joined RTB after completing an assignment as the operations officer for the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Anderson, who later in the day pinned on the rank of brigadier general, will head to Fort Bliss, Texas, where he will assume duties as special assistant to the commander of Joint Task Force-6.

During the ceremony, Commanding General Carl F. Ernst welcomed Helmick and thanked Anderson for his contributions in making the ranger brigade what it is today.

"Dorian can be very proud indeed of what he's done at the helm of the Ranger Training Brigade," Ernst said. "It (RTB) is as good today as it has ever been. In my view, it's better than it's ever been and Dorian Anderson's fingerprints are all over that."

During his speech, Helmick promised to uphold the high standards of the brigade and continue training U.S. Army ranger and Long Range Surveillance leaders.



"I promise to you all that I will do my absolute best to continue to uphold the high standards of rangers in all that we do," Helmick said. "We will never quit, never let you down. Rangers lead the way."

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst passes the guidon to incoming commander Col. Frank G. Helmick.

Helmick, who is joined by his wife, Melissa and daughters, Jane and Christina, is no stranger to Fort Benning as he has previously served as the 75th Ranger Regiment's operations and executive officers. Helmick, who holds a master's degree in management, has also completed tours with the 1st Calvary Division and 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division.

Army screens drill sergeant candidates

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

The first group of Army drill sergeant candidates who have successfully completed more stringent background screening began reporting for training at drill sergeant schools July 31.

As of April 1, all Soldiers who would like to be a drill instructor must undergo more scrutiny, said Master Sgt. Michael G. Wilson, manager for the drill sergeant program at U.S. Total Army Personnel Command, Alexandria, Va.

Changes made to tighten the drill sergeant selection process were incorporated in the Oct. 31, 1997 update of Army Regulation 614-200, which covers criteria for drill sergeant candidates, Wilson said.

Since August 1997, all Army drill sergeant nominees, whether volunteers or those selected by the Department of the Army, have been required to:

•Undergo a commander's evaluation, to include a personal interview, by a commander in the rank of lieutenant colonel or higher;

•Be physician-evaluated for mental suitability;

•Have the restricted portion of their military personnel file examined for negative personnel actions and military police records.

From December 1996 to April 1997, a special Department of the Army Inspector General Task Force (DAIG) traveled to 22 Army, Navy and Air Force initial entry training facilities in the wake of reported drill sergeant misconduct during 1995-96 at the U.S. Army Ordnance Center and School, Aberdeen, Md.

The need to tighten up the drill sergeant selection process was one of many DAIG team recommendations pertaining to initial entry training included in the Human Relations Action Plan.

"Senior leadership, training cadre and trainees have high confidence in the quality and performance of their drill sergeants," the IG report noted.

However, the report also said, "the inspection disclosed procedural weaknesses in the drill sergeant candidate selection process. There is no formalized process beyond records screening to determine good military bearing and leadership of prospective drill sergeants in the ranks of staff sergeant and sergeant first class. The search of disciplinary records does not include the restricted fiche."

The DAIG report also noted 70 percent of Army's drill sergeant candidates were involuntarily selected, while 30 percent were volunteers. Volunteers, who comprised the smaller pool of candidates, received a mandatory mental screening, while DA-selected drill sergeant candidates received no mental screening.

"The review of medical records does not normally go beyond the physical profile limitations. Involuntarily selected nominees do not receive a mental screening. Volunteers receive a mental screening, however, the screenings are not standardized within the Army," according to the DAIG report.

Commanders of all drill sergeant nominees, volunteers and DA-selected, will evaluate soldiers' qualifications to enter the drill sergeant program according to selection criteria defined in AR 614-200.

The commander will personally interview the soldier and complete the commander's evaluation form. Commanders' interviews with nominees can not be delegated; the commanders must conduct them.

Commanders are to consider the "whole soldier" when making their recommendations. Commanders' input should include, but is not limited to, the soldier's demonstrated leadership ability and potential; physical fitness; character/integrity; the soldier's ability to perform in stressful situations; and any incidents of abuse which the chain of command is aware of. All negative evaluations must include a full explanation.

"Soldiers' records will be screened for negative evaluations that would disqualify them for drill sergeant duty," Wilson said.

Commanders will also ensure that a report of mental status, DA Form 3822-R, Mental Evaluation Statement, determining that the Soldier is emotionally stable as determined by screening of health records and a clinical evaluation is included with the commander's evaluation.

Possessing mental balance is especially important, said Wilson, a former drill sergeant, due to the inherent stress of drill sergeant duty.

Effective April 1, Wilson said, drill sergeant nominees' record checks were expanded to include the review of:

•Department of the Army IG records, including personnel security and criminal records;

•Community and Family Support Center records.

Soldiers with reports citing involvement in sexual harassment, assault, rape, indecent acts with minors, adultery, homosexual activities, incest, bestiality, fraternization, sexual activity with subordinate Soldiers, extremist organizations, and any court-martial convictions will disqualify them for drill sergeant duty, permanently.

Soldiers with unfavorable information citing driving under the influence, assault involving someone other than a subordinate, spouse or child, any drug offense, larceny or theft, traffic violations with more than six points assessed, and any record of unfavorable information other than the above in the past three years will exclude them from consideration for drill sergeant duty for five years.

Cadets participate in training program

Spc. Kimberly A. Green
Army News Service

KAISERSLAUTERN, Germany, — It has been an eventful week for Cadet Briah L. Carey. The 20-year-old West Point cadet from Rumford, Maine took part in a field training exercise with the 21st Theater Army Area Command's, 5th Maintenance Company, 51st Maintenance Battalion. There she gained realistic leadership experience and first-hand knowledge of the duties and responsibilities of junior officers in today's Army.

Carey is one of six cadets from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., assigned to the 21st TAACOM this summer. As possible future logisticians, the cadets are participating in the U.S. Army, Europe Cadet Troop Leader Training Program (CTLT). The cadets are the first of four rotations to USAREUR.

The program gives Army cadets in their junior or senior year the opportunity to train with an active-duty unit at the company level. Cadets are provided hands-on leadership experience while performing duties normally given to second lieutenants.

Ernie Dumlao, deputy assistant chief of staff for security plans and operations, said the 21st TAACOM strongly supports the CTLT program. "We have the opportunity to show cadets how a combat service and combat-service support organization works. They have a chance to meet and lead logistics Soldiers in maintenance, movement, law enforcement, transportation and ammunition supply operations. This program shows the logistics side of the Army," Dumlao said.

Cadet Carey said her experience in CTLT has been interesting and worthwhile. "There is a wealth of knowledge to gain about the Army and about leadership. When we returned from the exercise site, I felt like we had accomplished something. We completed the mission, and I was able to make significant contributions," Carey said. "But as a platoon leader, without the assistance of noncommissioned officers, it would not have been possible. They are truly the backbone of the Army."

Sgt. Felix Rivera, a water purification specialist with the 574th Supply Company, 51st Maintenance Battalion, Mannheim, had the opportunity to work with Cadet Nicholas J. Lange, 20, from Fergus Falls, Minn.

"He picks up on things quickly and he handles pressure well. He has shown confidence in his instruction. I wish he could stay a little longer. There is so much we can show him," Rivera said.

"As with any successful leader there has to be a good teacher," Lange said.

Lange, the platoon leader, said he feels his job is to run the platoon through the NCOs. "Running a platoon requires supervision and delegation. But the NCOs always come through. I delegate missions to them and they make it happen," Lange said.

Lange said he has gained meaningful experience this summer at the 574th Supply Co. "Through the experience, insights and first-hand knowledge received during CTLT, I know it will enhance my career as a successful future leader," he said.

Breakfast recognizes integration decree

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst held his Two-Star Excellence Breakfast July 31 to honor more than 50 military and civilian personnel who have distinguished themselves with outstanding contributions to Fort Benning.

The Two-Star breakfast also honored the anniversary of the integration of the armed forces.

Ernst said the Executive Orders of 1948 finally delivered what was declared when America was created.

He said the Army is made up of Americans — people from all over the world who sought a better life.

"Look around at the leadership in this room," Ernst said. "This is what the Army looks like. This is what America looks like. And this is the way America should be."

Six people were awarded with the Integration Commemorative Award.

•Retired Lt. Col. James A. Seddon
•Retired Maj. William f. Schafer
•Retired Sgt. Maj. Regis E. Blair
•Retired 1st Sgt. Walter Harris Jr.
•Retired Master Sgt. Charlie L. Oates
•Retired Sgt. 1st Class J.C. Wright.

Three people were honored with the Civilian Length of Service Award for forty years of service.

•Larry Hickman, Directorate of Information Management
•Edward Hilton, Directorate of Logistics
•Myrle McIntosh, Directorate of Logistics.

Cynthia Calix was honored for being named Volunteer of the Quarter and Justine Vance, Adjutant General received the Commander's Award for Customer Service Excellence.

Those who received the Quality Champion Award were:

•Sgt. 1st Class Janice Willaims , 11th Infantry Regiment.
•John Przenkop, 29th Inf. Regt.
•Staff Sgt. Margaret Jones, 36th Engineer Group
•William Mason, 75th Ranger Regt.
•Juanita Pike , Adjutant General
•Linda Hollimon, Army Marksmanship Unit
•Lyn King, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate
•Staff Sgt. Clifford Sinclair, Command Group
•Brenda Gomillion, U.S. Army Dental Activity
•Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Waldo, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab
•Martha Erivez, Directorate of Community Activities
•Benjamin Maxham, Directorate of Combat Development
•Mary Ann Werner, Directorate of Civilian Personnel
•Martha Jenkins, Directorate of Information Management
•Kathy Menendez, Directorate of Logisitics
•Stanley Slater, Directorate of Operations and Training
•Pfc. Orlando Ochoa, Directorate of Public Safety
•Jeffrey Bailey, Directorate of Public Works
•Carol Seamster, Directorate of Resource Management
•Sgt. 1st Class Ernst Jett, Jr., Equal Opportunity Office
•Brenda Webb, IG
•Linda Rose Greer, Noncommissioned Officer Academy
•Capt. April Olsen, Public Affairs Office
•Capt. Todd Peterson, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School
•Kathryn Perdue, Staff Judge Advocate
•Jess Gilmer, TRADOC Systems Manager Antitank Missiles

The Commander's Award for Best Self-Help and U-Do-It Project went to 1st Battalion, 29th Inf. Regt.

The Bradley Fighting Vehicle Master Gunner Branch, 1st Battalion, 29th Inf. Regt. was named the Team of Excellence in the Single Category and the Advanced Infantry Marksmanship Standards Team was named the Team of Excellence in the Cross-Functional Category.

Of the Commanding General's Special Awards, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group Dining Facility received the Fort Benning Trophy and USAIC Certificate of Appreciation.

The McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain and Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab received the Commanding General's Coins of Excellence.

The 3rd Quarter Large Category Retention Excellence Award went to the 29th Inf. Regt. and Small Category went to the Infantry Training Brigade.

Ernst said that there has been a lot of hard work by a lot of people and one of the best parts of being a commander is being able to recognize these people.

"There are some things that go with a command that are really great, and recognizing people is one of them, Ernst said." "Seeing folks doing well and recognizing that they are doing well is probably one of the more satisfying things that we get to do."

CG honors Soldiers, civilians for contributions

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians were honored during the Commanding General's Command Awards Ceremony July 31 in Marshall Auditorium.

During the short ceremony, Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst honored 18 Soldiers and civilians for their contributitions to the Fort Benning community.

While the ceremony is traditionally conducted in conjunction with retreat, Ernst said the timing didn't matter because the idea was right.

"We are here today to honor some of the people who make the Army great, who make our country great," he said.

"These are some of the people who work hard every day to make Fort Benning a better place."

The awardees included:

Lt. Col. Robert Morris, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, received a Military Outstanding Volunteer Service award for his work with the World Food Program in Africa.

Sgt. Mark Biggins, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, was presented an Army Commendation Medal for aiding an injured motorist.

Employment agencies grow in popularity

Chuck Eagle
ACAP Counselor

Employment agencies have come a long way since the days of the "Kelly Girls."

"Separating Soldiers and their families may want to take a look at temporary and permanent job placement services offered by the growing number of staffing agencies. I looked in the phone book under Employment Agencies and counted a total of 40 local and national staffing and placement organizations. Most of these agencies ask for no fees from the job seeks, but will get their income from fees paid by the company where the work is performed," said Chuck Eagle, ACAP Center counselor at Fort Benning.

Employment agencies are growing in popularity with industry for many reasons, some of which are listed here:

• They want to make sure employees are right for the job before offering permanent status.

• It is easier to downsize, upsize, remove or replace workers with using temps.

• The placement firm screens employees and does background checks/drug tests, which saves the client company money and time.

• Some companies accept employees only through a single placement firm and have reduced their recruiting staff and saved even more time.

• Employees in this status are actually employed by the placement agency and all pay and benefits come from the placement agency.

For a job seeker, temporary placement might offer the opportunity to begin work in an outstanding company or at the entry level of a career field to gain experience. Many temporary jobs have turned into permanent positions when Soldiers are given a chance to apply their skills and experience in private industry. Just look in the phone book or work with the ACAP Center for more information about these staffing services. For more information about ACAP eligibility, scheduling, and information, please call or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza, 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Tornado safety depends on preparedness, self-sufficiency

Sherry Wade
Directorate of Threat and Security

Tornadoes can occur at anytime during the year; however, they occur most often during the summer months.

The 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, the U.S. Air Force weather unit located at Lawson Army Airfield, monitors the weather continuously. Weather warnings are issued for Fort Benning when severe weather is forecast to affect this, installation. The AF Weather Squadron will issue a Tornado Warning if a tornado is sighted or indicated by radar. The installation siren system will sound for five minutes continuously to alert everyone to seek shelter immediately. (NOTE: The first Saturday of each month at noon, a test is conducted of the installation siren system. In the event of bad weather, the test will not be conducted.)

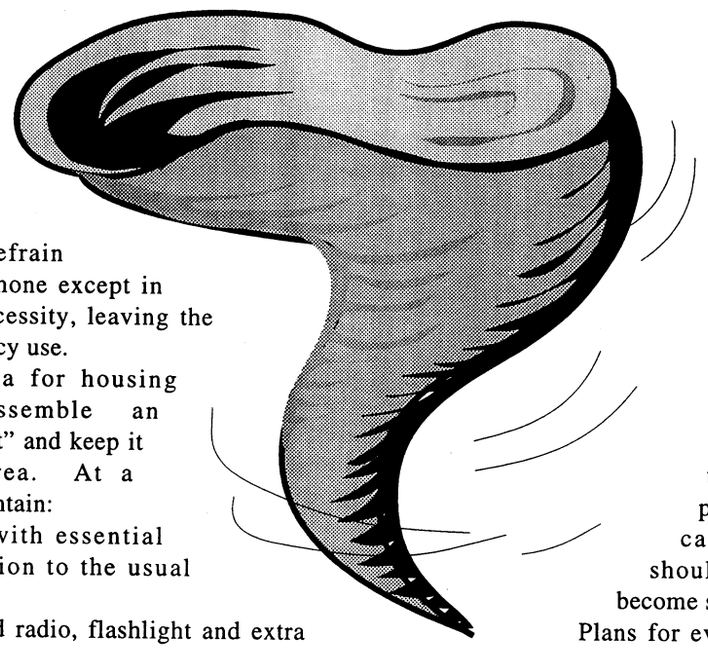
The safety and welfare of Soldiers, family members, and civilians depends on the state of preparedness and the degree of self-sufficiency of the occupants themselves.

Occupants of Fort Benning government buildings should observe the following safety measures:

•Evacuate, only when directed, all places of assembly such as theaters, auditoriums, churches, post exchanges, commissaries, gymnasiums, etc.

•Return to quarters immediately or follow the organization's Storm Plan.

•Stay off the streets. Serious injuries, often fatalities, result from flying glass, signs, building cornices and other debris. Do not try to outrun or outdrive a tornado. Tornadoes can travel an excess of 90 mph. The best thing to do is find the nearest shelter.



•Secure awnings, doors, shutters, signs, etc.

•Secure loose items that could be blown about, causing damage or injury.

•Prepare to use temporary lighting methods in case of power failure.

•Monitor local television and radio networks.

•Personnel will refrain from using the telephone except in times of absolute necessity, leaving the lines free for emergency use.

It is a good idea for housing occupants to assemble an "emergency supply kit" and keep it in their shelter area. At a minimum it should contain:

•A first aid kit with essential medication in addition to the usual items.

•A battery powered radio, flashlight and extra batteries.

•Canned and other nonperishable food and a hand operated can opener.

•Bottled water.

•Candles and matches.

•Sturdy shoes and work gloves.

•Written instructions on how to turn off your homes utilities.

•Old blankets, quilts, unused mattresses or metal trash cans to protect against flying debris.

Housing occupants should conduct annual emergency drills. The shelter should be well known by each member of the family. Everyone should know what to do and where to go when a tornado is approaching. Choose a friend or family member in another part of town or elsewhere to be a "contact person" that will be called by everyone should family members become separated.

Plans for evacuation should be posted in all permanent buildings. Units and activities should outline storm safety procedures in their Standard Operating Procedures.

The following are immediate actions to be taken when a tornado warning has been issued or tornado has been sighted.

• If in home or small building: go to the basement (if available) or to an interior room on the lowest floor, such as a closet or bathroom. Wrap yourself in overcoats or blankets to protect yourself from flying debris.

• If in a school, hospital or shopping center: go to the interior rooms and halls on the lowest floor. Stay away from glass enclosed places or areas with wide-span roofs such as auditoriums and warehouses. Crouch down and cover your head.

• If in cars or mobile homes, abandon them immediately. Most deaths occur in cars and mobile homes. If you are in either of these locations, leave and go to a substantial structure or designated tornado shelter.

•If no suitable structure is nearby, lie flat in the nearest ditch or depression and use your hands to cover your head.

There are two things that you should not do in case of a tornado:

• Do not open your windows. Opening the windows will not help in any way. If a tornado is near enough to effect the pressure of your building in any way, it is probably right on top of the building.

•Do not try to outrun or outdrive a tornado. Tornadoes can travel in excess of 90 mph.

More information is available in the United States Army Infantry Center Storm Plan, USAIC Pamphlet Number 500-1-Severe Weather Instructions for Housing Occupants, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Severe Weather Safety Guide.

NATO mission enters new phase

Linda D. Kozaryn
Armed Forces Press Service

BRUSSELS, Belgium — This summer, the NATO-led stabilization mission in Bosnia known as SFOR enters a new, open-ended phase.

In May, NATO authorities extended the SFOR mission indefinitely. The original 18-month SFOR mission named Operation Joint Guard ended June 20, and a new operation dubbed Joint Forge began. The stabilization force itself will still be called SFOR, according to NATO officials.

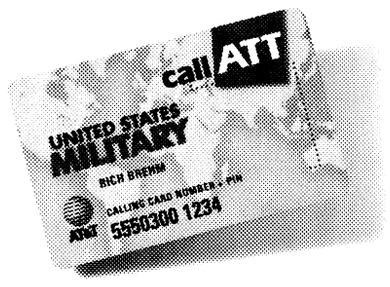
Operation Joint Endeavor, NATO's initial, year-long mission, involved a peace implementation force, IFOR, of about 60,000 multinational troops, including 20,000 Americans. When IFOR changed to SFOR, the force dropped to about 33,000 multinational troops, including about 8,500 Americans.

At a July seminar in Sarajevo, Bosnia, NATO officials highlighted what aspects of the stabilization force will remain the same and what will change in the new phase.

The overall number of multinational troops will remain at about 33,000 troops (including 3,000 in Croatia), but the number of Americans is slated to drop to about 6,900. As part of an effort to spread the Bosnia mission load beyond U.S. units in Europe, 1st Cavalry Division units from Fort Hood, Texas, will replace Germany-based 1st Armored Division units this fall.

NATO's 16 nations will continue contributing to the operation along with 17 Partnership for Peace nations and five non-NATO nations — Egypt, Jordan, Malaysia, Morocco and Ireland. U.S. Army Gen. Eric K. Shinseki remains in command, and his mission mandate stays the same: SFOR will continue to provide a secure environment so civil peace implementation efforts can proceed.

While the military tasks outlined in the Dayton accord have been accomplished, much work remains in the civilian arena, said Gregory L. Schulte, director of NATO's Bosnia Task Force.



"SFOR's priorities will include support for refugee returns and for this September's elections," he said.

NATO officials aim to promote public security, Schulte said, but not by supplanting local police authorities. "SFOR, with this new specialized unit, will continue to work closely with the U.N. International Police Task Force to reform and restructure the local police and help them assume their proper role in protecting civil society," he said.

Following the September elections, NATO officials will review force levels and tasks at regular intervals, Schulte said. "The end state we seek is a peace that can last and provide the basis for [Bosnia's] continued reconstruction without the continued presence of a NATO-led force," he said.

Aviation, missile command to avert year 2000 snafu

Skip Vaughn
Army News Service

REDSTONE ARSENAL, Ala., — A worker at higher headquarters was getting ready for a vacation with his wife. He wanted some extra cash so he went to an automatic teller machine and inserted his brand new credit card. To his chagrin, the machine coughed up his plastic and told him to contact his bank.

He knew he had enough money in his account. That wasn't the problem.

It was the bank's fault, by failing to update its computers so his card, supposedly good for three years until February 2000, couldn't work. The bank representative told him they'd send him a new card, good until February 1999.

John Finafrock, the Aviation and Missile Command ombudsman and project manager for the Year 2000 Task Force, likes to tell this story which actually did happen to underscore the Year 2000 issue. Ironically, the victim was an Army Materiel Command employee who works on this very problem.

"The Year 2000 issue is basically making sure that any equipment we have that functions with any type of information technology that uses a year date will function at the turn of the millennium on Jan. 1, 2000," Finafrock said.

Many of the business systems use a date, but it's a two-digit year date, 98 or 99 for example.

The programmers who developed these programs didn't realize back then that the year 2000 or 00 would actually arrive. This means 00 could be confused as 1900 on those systems.

The solution is either creating a four-digit year date field — 2000 or revising the program logic to tell the computer that 00 means the missing digits are 20 and not 19.

The Army and its various organizations, including the Aviation and Missile Command (AMCOM), are working to update their computers so there won't be a massive crash of software at the turn of the century.

"I think our organizations (at AMCOM) have really taken the bit in their teeth and have done an extremely good job on fixing and testing the systems," Finafrock said. "The only concern is the amount of documentation required to support the certification process for headquarters, Department of the Army.

"It is envisioned that if we put all the certification documents together at one time we would fill a rental truck with boxes and boxes of certification documents to support that process."

"The leadership provided by Maj. Gen. (Emmitt) Gibson, his senior executive service deputies, Col. (Clifton) Broderick who has served as the program executive officer for the Y2K task force, and all of our organizational heads will ensure that these tasks are completed correctly and on time," Finafrock said. "We expect that we'll meet all the DA and AMC imposed deadlines."

The effort here began in June 1996 after a tasking from headquarters Army Material Command and DA to ensure that managers were aware of the potential year 2000 problem.

"We have completed the inventory and assessment phases of the project," Finafrock said. "We are nearing completion of the fix phase and we expect that nearly everything we're responsible for will be fixed by Sept. 30; and that the associated testing and certification, that anything that required fixing has been fixed and tested, will be complete by Dec. 31.

"This initiative will flush out anything that is not truly fixed, permitting us to fix the systems and equipment prior to the millennium."

Just about every organization at AMCOM is involved in the various target areas, which are called staff leads. These include information technology infrastructure, business systems, weapon and support systems, training devices and simulation equipment, analytical systems, intelligence systems, and facilities and base operations.

Federal employees to receive survey

Army News Service

This week, about 750 Army employees will find surveys in their mailboxes about the progress of reinventing government.

The National Partnership for Reinventing (NPR) Government randomly selected some 40,000 federal employees to receive the surveys. The survey covers the entire government, but specifically targets 32 high impact agencies, agencies that serve the most people. About 80 percent of all federal employees work in these agencies.

In a cover letter sent with the surveys, Vice President Al Gore asks that employees, "Please help me assess our progress in reinventing government. I will share the results with you later this year through the National Partnership for Reinventing Government Web Page. Your agency will then meet with employees to discuss actions to be taken as a result of the survey."

An NPR information sheet explains that NPR, in partnership with survey experts from the Office of Personnel Management, the Merit Systems Protection Board and the Federal Aviation Agency developed the 33-question, 15-minute survey over the past two years.

The purpose of the survey is to determine if reinvention is working from the perspective of those doing the job.

Questions cover key areas such as customer service, leadership, teamwork, employee development, streamlining and job satisfaction.

Fort Benning Schools offer gifted program — Fort Benning Schools offer a self-contained gifted program at Dexter Elementary School for students in grades 3-5. The program is based on curriculum that emphasizes higher thinking skills, creative problem solving skills, development of a strong self concept, aesthetic awareness and the development of positive interpersonal relations.

At Faith Middle School, gifted students in grades 6-8 are provided accelerated academic instruction by regular classroom teachers. In addition, children go to a resource teacher for enrichment activities.

Students must qualify in three of four categories to include ability, achievement, grades or creativity before enrolling the student. Parents with children who are interested in participating in this program must bring the most recent achievement scores, ability scores and a report card to Dexter or Faith Schools. Students already qualified in the State of Georgia will be entered in the gifted program without further testing.

For more information, call Kathy Einhorn at 545-8254.

ACS offers spouse orientation — The Army Community Service Program will hold a Fort Benning Spouse Orientation at 8:45 a.m. Aug. 14 in Building 359 on Ingersoll Street.

All newly assigned personnel are encouraged to attend. Child-care is provided; however, family members are encouraged to make reservations.

To make reservations or for more information, call Marsha Collins at 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Family Advocacy seeks volunteers — The Family Advocacy First Steps Program seeks volunteers to work with Fort Benning's parents of newborns.

Various responsibilities include making ward visits to mothers at the hospital and follow-up calls after they leave the hospital with their babies.

For more information or to volunteer, call the First Steps office at 544-2020.

OWC needs instructors — The Officer Wives' Club needs instructors and facilitators willing to share their talents to teach others a new skill for the OWC Fall Activities Sign-up.

Anyone interested in teaching anything from a language to quilting can contact LeAnn Volesky at 682-7890.

Pharmacy phone-in system gets $15,000 upgrade — The phone-in refill system has received an upgrade and it is no longer necessary to wait for the recording. If calling from a touch-tone phone, it will instruct customers to press one. This enables customers to bypass the remaining recorded message and begin refill requests immediately. The number for the Pharmacy Phone-In Refill System is 544-1352.

For information, call pharmacy services at 544-4497 or 544-4771.

Students at Loyd Elementary's Summer Enrichment Program discuss a story they read in language arts class Tuesday. The program was held for three hours a day for one week to prepare students for the upcoming school year.

LOYD ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

School offers pilot summer enrichment program

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Most students don't think about the upcoming school year until the night before it starts. However, fourth- and fifth-grade students at Loyd Elementary participated in the Summer Enrichment Project July 28 through Wednesday as a way to help their studies through the not-so-far-away school year.

Out of the 44 students who were encouraged to participate, 32 enrolled in the program. These students were asked after thorough examination of their Terra Nova test results determined they needed improvement in certain areas.

Loyd Principal Debra Mabry, along with Kathy Einhorn, curriculum director of Fort Benning schools and Mike Starrett, assistant principal of Stowers, volunteered their time to teach language arts, math and computers, respectively.

"In the areas of language art and reading, students learn many different areas," Mabry said. "These include critical thinking, analytical thinking, phonics, parallel learning and responding to open-ended questions.

In math, students focus on communication skills. In many instances, they have to give the correct answer and the actual process they went through to arrive at that answer."

The goal of the pilot program, Mabry said, is to not allow the students to fail.

"The children knew up front that they wouldn't fail. They are really excited about it. They're really doing great."

Along with the administrators, Betty Navarrete, Linda Donohue and Diane Roquemore have volunteered their time and energy to the program.

"I always volunteer," Navarrete said. "I like spending time with children and adults and being able to do something for somebody."

Starrett said he enjoyed being back in the classroom.

"I volunteered because I have a strong knowledge of computers and I was able to get back to teaching."

The students attended from 9 a.m. to noon, with an hour spent in each classroom and a break in-between. The students were not divided by grade.

Administrators looked at the test results and Mabry, Einhorn and Starrett taught using Terra Nova methods, asking quality questions and using dialogue back and forth. Mabry also used the Socratic Method in language arts and reading. It involves asking easy questions and then going forth with logical sequencing.

Mabry stressed the importance of not teaching down to the students.

"Our expectations should be higher. We're using a middle-school curriculum. I knew the kids could do it and enjoy the challenge. They liked the idea of using a middle-school curriculum."

Crystal Westgerdes, 11, said she liked the program.

"The program helps us because we go through more steps in all the areas."

Starrett said the children caught on very quickly.

"The kids aren't as afraid of computers as adults. They were willing to jump right in."

Starrett also believes in the encouragement of parents.

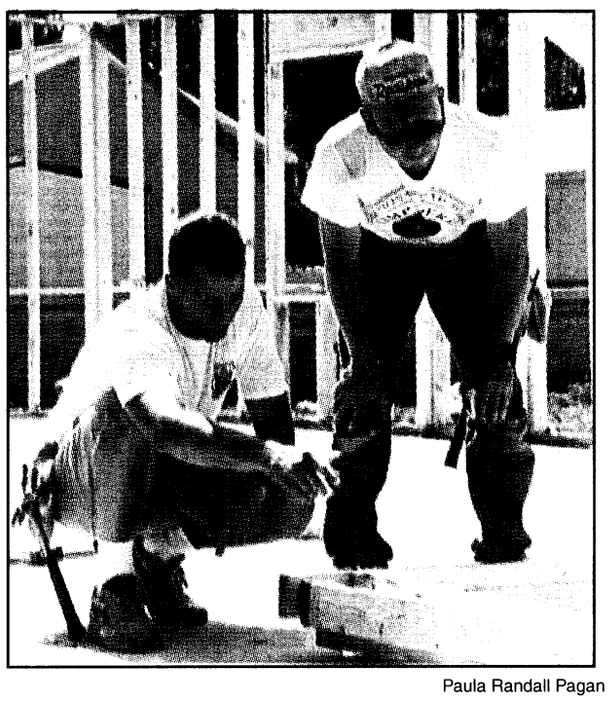
"Support and encourage kids in every way you can when it comes to learning," was his advice.

Mabry had recognition for all those who have helped with the program.

"Thank you to the volunteers, administrators and parents," she said.

Oral hygiene benefits more than gums

Col Mike Rethman
Tripler Army Medical Center



Did you know that thorough oral hygiene — good enough to prevent the various gum diseases such as gingivitis and periodontitis — may help your cardiovascular system, lungs, unborn baby and diabetic condition?

Recent research suggests a strong link between the presence of periodontal inflammation and a higher rate of serious health problems, some of which can be life-threatening. Indeed, data now available suggest that periodontitis may be a more important risk factor for heart attack than excessive levels of serum cholesterol.

The link between gum diseases and systemic problems is thought to be the result of interplay between the potent bacterial toxins and immune chemicals released into circulation at the site of oral inflammation. Of course, more research is needed to confirm the biochemical mechanisms and the value of therapeutic intervention aimed at limiting the deleterious effects the gum diseases may have on overall health. Such research is underway.

It used to be that you kept your mouth healthy so you'd have your teeth when you hit 90 years of age. Now, you may need to keep your mouth in tip-top shape so you can get there.

Editors Note: Rethman is the chief of periodontics for Tripler Army Medical Center.

Family group promotes unity

Temaki Carr needed a perm. When she spotted a little shop and went inside, she was immediately impressed by the warm atmosphere. What really impressed her, however, was the way she felt when she left the salon.

Of course, she liked the new hair style, but there was something more. She genuinely felt good about herself and that was a feeling she wanted to share.

As Family Support Group Advisor for the 63rd Engineer Company, (Construction Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), Carr had stumbled upon a new way to bring the unit's families together.

"Our focus is on unity," Carr said. "And we want people to know that while we spend all this time putting on make-up and nice clothes, the real things, the important things come from the inside."

Local cosmetologist Laura Logan met with community members Saturday for the Beauty Extravaganza. Logan provided complimentary make-overs with a motivational speech highlighting the importance of inner beauty.

Capt. Robert Carr, commander for the 63rd Eng. Co., (CSE), 36th Eng. Grp., said the event helped families get to know each other.

"Soldier morale improves when the families are comfortable with the unit. If we deploy somewhere, the Soldier doesn't have to worry; he knows his family is being taken care of. That adds to the combat readiness of my unit."

Sgt. Ernest Joseph from the 36th Engineer Group attended the extravaganza with his wife, Donna and son Christopher. While Joseph said everyone was there to have fun, he reiterated the importance of unity.

"When you have a stronger home, you have a stronger Soldier. When you have a stronger Soldier, you have a stronger unit. And that," he said, "is what it's all about."

Protect your home

Take precautions to avoid wildlife problems

Georgia Insurance Information Service

See that beautiful red and black woodpecker in your backyard? Did you notice that opossum lumbering across your property? What's that upside down thing on the overhang of your roof, a bat? Are those tiny footsteps at night on your roof or in your attic?

Wildlife can be great to see near the home, but those little critters can invade the home, and lots of money may be spent to repair the damage, according to the Georgia Insurance Information Service (GIIS).

Squirrels and raccoons may crisscross the attic. Bird condos are often located behind small holes in siding, or an opossum mother and babies may like their new quarters under a porch or crawl space. Squirrels can easily chew up deck chairs, deck railings and they love electrical wiring. That means real trouble.

Wildlife causes more than $4 billion in damage annually just in the top 100 metropolitan areas across the U.S. (Atlanta is the 10th largest metro-area), according to a Utah State University study. What can homeowners do when the animals move in? Not everyone is a do-it-yourself specialist, but there is help available even though prevention is the best defense.

Local animal control officers can be called, especially when the critters have potential to carry rabies such as a raccoon or a fox, but they may not always be available for every animal problem. There are local companies and organizations that specialize in information and control of urban wildlife.

Mark Long, wildlife curator of the Chattahoochee Nature Center, an educational facility located on the banks of the Chattahoochee River in north Fulton County (Atlanta), said there are precautions homeowners can take to avoid problems with animals.

• Constantly check for knot holes that fall out of cedar siding homes and plug them up to prevent birds and squirrels from moving in. Check carefully for any openings that an animal can use to gain entry to any part of the home. Look for open spaces where the roof and the outside walls come together or where the air vents are located. House fires that start in the attic are, many times, the work of squirrels that chew through electrical wires.

• Install bird feeders away from your home, not close to it. Wildlife see a home as just another big tree.

• If pets are fed outside, control the amount of food. Do not leave large amounts of cat or dog food outside for long periods of time. That attracts wild animals.

• Constantly monitor the attic area and under the home for signs animals are living there. Besides the potential damage from wildlife, there is a significant health risk since these animals carry lice, mites and other ectoparasites. Usually. large amounts of feces will be present where animals gather.

•The most dangerous animals are those that are known for carrying rabies, such as the red and gray foxes, raccoons, squirrels, bats and opossums.

Wood Richard, director of Wild Lifeline, a not-for-profit and 24-hour animal control and rescue service, says the rodent population creates a great deal of the problems faced by homeowners. Mice, rats, squirrels and flying squirrels by nature will intrude. They can be hard to remove without doing further damage to remove them, such as tearing out walls. The spring and the fall are the worst times because that's when the animals are raising babies.

Richard adds that if a wild animal is found, do not pet it under any circumstances and do not bring it into your home due to health hazards. Also, do not feed the animal. The health of your family and the potential for problems with your property are at risk.

GIIS is a non-profit consumer and media information organization sponsored by major property and casualty insurance companies doing business in the state. GIIS member companies represent more than 70 percent of the automobile and homeowners insurance policies written in Georgia.

Viral infections can cause hepatitis

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

The word hepatitis means inflammation of the liver. While the most common cause is a viral infection, other causes include alcohol, toxins, medications and a disease present from birth called Wilson's disease.

With hepatitis, the levels of certain liver chemicals rise in the blood. The person may or may not also have other symptoms such as jaundice, a condition where the skin turns yellow, abdominal pain, nausea, vomiting, loss of appetite, and fatigue.

The viruses associated with hepatitis include the five Hepatitis viruses types A, B, C, D, and E.

After much research, the newly discovered hepatitis G virus appears to affect the liver only occasionally.

Hepatitis A is usually a mild form of hepatitis, but it has gained a lot of attention as a public health issue because of the large regional outbreaks it can cause. The most recent U. S. outbreak followed eating frozen strawberries contaminated with the virus.

Hepatitis A is passed out of the body through the feces of the infected person. The feces in turn contaminates water or hands and can then go on to food. A person obtains the virus by ingesting the contaminated food or with contact of contaminated hands to the mouth. Good handwashing prevents the spread of Hepatitis A.

Hepatitis A grows inside the body for two to six weeks before symptoms appear. There is no specific treatment. The illness can last up to several weeks. A person does not carry the disease for life.

Hepatitis E is spread the same way as Hepatitis A. It is rare in the U. S. and found mostly in Asia.

The remaining Hepatitis forms, types B, C and D,are more serious diseases than Hepatitis A and E. They are not passed through water and food. They are passed through blood and blood products, through contaminated needles, by sexual contact or by mother to fetus. Treatment is bedrest and a nutritious diet.

Types B, C and D can also cause chronic, lifelong hepatitis and are capable of making some people lifelong carriers of the infection. Eventually, the person may progress to cirrhosis or liver cancer. The drug Interferon may be used to treat chronic hepatitis.

The Center for Disease Control recommends universal Hepatitis B vaccination programs for infants and sexually active adolescents. This vaccination is also recommended for high risk groups such as health care workers. This vaccine protects against Hepatitis D also, because Hepatitis D requires Hepatitis B to infect and reproduce.

DPW provides tips for waste management on post

Directorate of Public Works

Did you know that each year Fort Benning has a 50 percent turnover in Family Housing? To keep residents informed on current procedures for disposal of garbage and trash, recyclable items and yard waste (grass, leaves and tree limbs), DPW has developed the following Brown Recycling Container guide, Where to Dispose list and curbside recycling and garbage and trash pick-up schedule.

For more information, call the Installation's Recycling Manager, Walter Nichols at 545-1007 or Tom Moore at 544-6142.

"Where to Dipose" list

•Baby diapers should be placed in household garbage or trash containers.

•Food waste should be placed in household garbage or trash containers.

•Household batteries should be placed in household garbage or trash containers.

•Automobile batteries should be returned to the retailer where the battery was purchased or the Auto Craft Shop will dispose for a two dollar environmental fee.

•Scrap metal can be disposed of at Building 4000 between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The facility is closed on weekends and holidays. For more information, call 544-6142.

•Resident owned washers, dryers and furniture should be placed at the curb on the day of garbage or trash and recycle pick-up. These items are identified by the trash or garbage contractor for pick-up later that day or the following day. For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

•Residents who own refrigerators, freezers and air conditioners can call the DPW Customer Relations Office at 545-2117 to schedule a pick-up.

•Used motor oil can be disposed of at Building 4000 between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The facility is closed on weekends and holidays. For more information, call 544-6142. The DCA Auto Craft Shop will recycle used motor oil for a two dollar environmental fee.

•Tires should be returned to the retailer where tires were purchased or the Auto Craft Shop will recycle each tire for a two dollar environmental fee.

Notice of temporary road bypass

There will be a temporary road bypass constructed on Jecelin Road near Lawson Army Airfield, Dixie Road and the DPW Sewage Number 2 now until Aug. 29. The purpose of this bypass is to permit the construction of a new 36-inch diameter sewer line across Jecelin Road. The bypass will consist of a ramped earthen embankment. This work is part of the 75th Ranger Barracks Complex construction by the Savannah District, Corps of Engineers. For more information, call Mike Graham, Project Engineer, West Georgia Area Office, Corps of Engineers at 545-1082.

Comments and questions

For questions or topics that interested persons would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWC (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

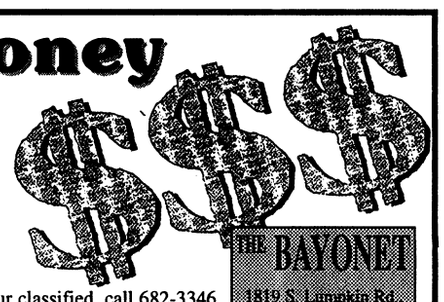
Rick Parker
Legal Assistance Division

Q: My spouse and I are considering buying a house. We don't know yet if it will be a new one or a previously-owned home. Is there anything from a legal standpoint we need to watch out for?

A: First and foremost, if and when you find the house you want to buy or build, make sure that you enter into a written contract with the seller which contains all of the promises of the parties. In Georgia, as in most states, a contract dealing with real estate must be in writing to be enforceable.

Second, make sure the contract contains all of the promises. If it's a previously-owned home and the seller is allowing you to keep appliances (like a refrigerator), light fixtures (like a dining room chandelier) or window treatments (like blinds or curtains), it should be in the contract. These items are not normally considered to be part of the house. If it's a home you're having built, make sure that the contract contains all of the specifications of the new construction. For example, the type and amount of insulation to be installed, the number of light fixtures and electrical outlets, the grade of appliances, carpet and the like to be installed, all should be specified. Many times, in new construction, the builder will give you an allowance or an amount of money allowed out of the purchase price to be used to buy appliances, light fixtures, carpet and the like. This should be spelled out.



Third, make sure you allow yourself a way of getting out of the contract if certain events do not occur. For example, most real estate contracts are contingent on the buyer is being able to get a mortgage to buy the house. These provisions usually state that the buyer will not be required to go through with the sale unless he or she can get a mortgage of a specified amount, at a specified minimum interest rate with a minimum amount of discount points. As a result, if, after giving it your best shot, you don't succeed in getting a mortgage, you get to walk away from the contract with your earnest money. Sometimes, the contract will contain a privilege of having the home thoroughly inspected (very important with previously-owned homes) and allow the buyer to have the option of insisting that the seller repair or that the buyer be allowed to walk away from the deal.

If this is your first time buying a home, you should definitely consider letting an attorney look at the contract before you sign it. Even if it is not your first time, an attorney review is a good idea. Remember, a home is a substantial investment of money, energy and emotion. With so much at stake, you should be cautious. You can call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 for an appointment with an attorney to help you with a real estate contract.

God speaks during quiet times

Chaplain (Capt) Michael Neufield
1st Bn., 50th Inf., ITB

reflections

We who live in the modern world do not easily embrace silence. Our world is filled with constant noise, and where there is none, we create it. When we are at home alone, the television squawks at us incessantly.

As we drive the car, the radio is our constant companion. More often than not, we pay little or no attention to the noise. Indeed the clatter is like a soothing drug which protects us from the quiet we fear so much.

And yet, God calls us to silence. He bids us to enter the stillness, not because silence is good in and of itself, but because the quiet is filled with his presence. God does not scream from the heavens. Rather, he speaks in whispers which may not be audible to the human ear, but which can and do move the human heart. The "still small voice" spoken of in I Kings is the voice of God. To hear God's voice, we must be silent and attentive.

We find our deepest meaning as human beings in intimacy with others. Before all else, you and I were born to know God and to be known by him. This is God's will in our lives. Without God, our lives lack all vitality. Augustine put it best when he said, "O Lord you have made us for yourself and our hearts will not rest until they rest in thee." We yearn for God before all else. The Psalmist puts it beautifully when he writes, "As the deer pants for streams of water, so my soul pants for you, O God. My soul thirsts for God, for the living God. When can I go and meet with God?" (Psalm 42: 1-2)

The bitter truth is that we run from the living God. We close our ears or we fill our lives with worthless noise because there is a very real part of each of us that does not want to hear the Lord. We are deeply afraid of listening to God's voice as it calls us to surrender totally to him and to trust him with our lives. Quite simply, we like being in control, or, to put it more bluntly, you and I would rather be God than trust God. And so, we close our ears and more importantly our hearts to God's voice spoken deep within.

Thankfully, God is not easily put off. He continues to speak, calling us to listen, to be attentive to him. He asks only that we trust him enough to sit with him, that we might know him as he knows us and embrace his will in our lives.

"Be still and know that I am God." These are God's words uttered to each of us personally, inviting us to an ever-deeper relationship with the Lord. God wants to bless us with his words and presence. For our part, we must create a quiet place in our lives so that we can hear God's words spoken to us. You and I must take time daily to be with the Lord in quiet and prayer.

Jesus was very intentional about solitude. True, Jesus ministered to the multitudes and was caught up in the noise and chaos which are so much a part of the human condition. However, the Gospels tell of another no less important side of Jesus' life. Jesus was a person who knew the importance of silence. He was constantly going off by himself or with small groups of disciples into solitude, there to pray and reflect in the stillness. Jesus needed to be in his Father's presence often and he invited all his followers to do likewise.

Health leader urges care for all

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

Quality medical care for all beneficiaries and healthier lifestyles that prevent illness and injury top the list of concerns of DoD's new health leader.

Although she said the overriding mission of military medicine is readiness, Dr. Sue Bailey added she's committed to delivering quality care to all beneficiaries.

"We've got a commitment to the quality of the health care that is provided to the 8 million people who depend on us," Bailey said. "Our service members need to be ready and fit to defend the nation, and they need to know that their families at home are taken care of while they're gone. And we have a huge and growing population of retirees who are looking for — and deserve — quality health care from us."

Bailey, who became assistant secretary of defense for health affairs in May, said the military health system is at a crossroads that gives leaders a chance to "look at where we've been and where we're going."

"There's been a lot of nostalgia for the way health care used to be," she said. "My dad worked on a B-17 base (in Rapid City, S.D.) during World War II. At the time, the sole purpose of the medical support was to keep those airplanes flying — keep those pilots healthy. If there were extra medical provisions, family members then could come out to the base to be taken care of."

In the ensuing decades, family members and retirees gained routine access to the same health care as service members.

But with downsizing in the 1980's and 1990's came fewer and smaller medical facilities and sharply reduced numbers of health care providers. To continue meeting both peacetime and readiness health care requirements, DoD launched TRICARE in 1992. The managed-care program became fully implemented this summer.

"Today, we are committed to providing top quality health care to all service members, as well as their families and all those who have served and retired from military careers," Bailey said. She gives TRICARE high marks for the choices it offers beneficiaries.

"We have in our system greater choice than most Americans have in their managed care programs," she said. "People who receive health care through their work — the majority of Americans — currently have two choices, a preferred provider option (patients choose physicians from an approved list) or a health maintenance organization. Most other managed-care programs have dropped their fee-for-service option, but TRICARE provides the flexibility of all three."

Although timely access to health care isn't perfect in TRICARE, it's on a par with civilian programs and getting better, Bailey said. "We would like to be answering the phone quicker, making the appointment quicker, having people seen quicker," she said.

One way of improving patients' health care access is to reduce the demands placed on the medical system, the assistant secretary said. Bailey is especially keen on improving the overall health of service members and their families.

She cited two new DoD initiatives, "Put Prevention into Practice" and a patient survey called Health Enrollment Assessment Review, as ways DoD is striving to create a healthier population. Both measures are geared toward identifying and reducing alcohol abuse, smoking and accidental injury, and promoting physical fitness. She said the initiatives combine education and awareness with counseling, behavioral and fitness programs and will be available to all military beneficiaries.

But physicians, too, need a new outlook, Bailey said. "They need to focus on preventive health — not just write prescriptions for antibiotics or do therapeutic interventions, but sit down with their patients and discuss the kinds of things they can do to prevent sickness and disease."

Bailey oversees defense health care policy and believes such policy must include input from providers in the field. For that reason, she's spending as much time as possible visiting hospitals and medics throughout the country.

"I am very interested in knowing how the policies that we create and refine here are implemented," she said. "I also need to see and hear what's going on, what the issues are, so it's very important for me to go out and talk to the people who receive the care and the people who provide the care."

For example, a recent trip to Naval Air Station Jacksonville, Fla., gave her reason to hope DoD can improve retiree care.

"I was very impressed that the hospital there doesn't turn away anyone, including retirees over 65," she said.

Retirees 65 and older currently fall under Medicare rules and aren't qualified for care under TRICARE. DoD is working to change this rule, but most military hospitals and clinics in the meantime provide only limited, if any, health care to Medicare-eligible patients.

"If they're doing it, it can be done," Bailey said. "Is there something unique about the Jacksonville experience? Is it something we're going to be able to do elsewhere, given the growing numbers of older beneficiaries in DoD who require more services than our younger population? It's an issue that I will focus on." That includes keeping close contact with Jacksonville, she said.

Another of Bailey's early trips found her aboard a Trident submarine. The visit helped crystallize her role as the principal medical adviser to the defense secretary.

"I walked through the tiny compartments of that submarine, and looked at the faces and talked to the sailors, and spoke with the independent duty corpsman responsible for the health of those 150 people," she said. "I realized — as I always do when I travel to the facilities and see who's out there — this is what it's all about."

Bureau cautions consumers of door-to-door meat sellers

Better Business Bureau

Door-to door meat sellers are very popular this time of the year. Some companies can offer very competitive prices and the convenience of home delivery. But, the Better Business Bureau warns consumers to investigate before you buy. There are reputable companies. However, not all have the consumer's best interests in mind; nor do they sell quality products.

Before buying meat and poultry in quantity from a door-to-door dealer, become familiar with the company and the dealer.

• Ask for literature and take plenty of time to read it. Reputable companies will have a local sales office with a published price list that includes the address and phone number of the company. Contact your Better Business Bureau for a reliability report on the company.

• Ask to see a retail permit. In most states, salespersons are required to have a state license or permit to sell products door-to-door. Ask to see the salesperson's license to sell.

• Check the product for grading and inspection information. Know the difference between meat grading and meat inspection. Inspection of meat and poultry by the USDA is mandatory, grading is not. Companies must pay to have their meat graded.

Common grades include prime, choice, select, standard and commercial for beef and grade A or lower for poultry. Be wary of the terms "restaurant quality" or "restaurant style." These descriptions have nothing to do with the quality of the meat.

Understand the different cuts of meats. Know which cut of meat or poultry you are buying. Check the label for proper identification for the cut of meat or poultry you are buying.

Beware of any dealer who wants the customer to purchase bulk quantities of meat and poultry that are not properly labeled. USDA and state inspected products are required to give information about the product on the label. On raw products, the species, the cut, the net weight, the ingredients statement, and the safe handling statement are required.

Pay only with a check made out to the company, not an individual. Never pay with cash.

If the customer decides they don't want to purchase the product, the Federal Trade Commission Cooling-Off Rule gives three days to cancel purchases that are made in the home or at a location that is not the permanent place of business or local address of the seller.

Rookie phenomenon Se Ri Pak will join such veterans as Annika Sorenstam, Dottie Pepper, Liselotte Neuman, Pat Bradley and Nancy Lopez.

Soldiers, family members and Fort Benning Department of the Army civilians will be admitted free on Thursday and Friday of the event. Tournament officials are also looking for volunteers to drive the players back and forth to the tournament site.

Volunteers will be rewarded with a free round of golf at the Robert Trent Jones golf course.

For more information, call the public affairs office at 545-2211.

Grappling with PT

Fitness School promotes combatives training

Ed Thomas
Troy State University — Fort Benning

It is not yet mainstream, but hand-to-hand combat is steadily fighting its way back into the physical training (PT) arena. As the 21st Century PT doctrine is reshaped, the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) is determined to give combatives training the respect it deserves.

Today's renewed interest in combatives is a contrast to the relatively insignificant role they have played in Army PT for the last several decades. Twenty-five years ago, the Army discontinued bayonet and hand-to-hand training.

"There were few complaints when hand-to-hand was discontinued in the 1970s, but the tide began to change again in the early 1980s," Palkoska said. "Bayonet training was revived, but with no one system of unarmed self-defense being taught, commanders were on their own."

"A well developed hand-to-hand program adds more combat relevance to PT," said USAPFS Chief of Doctrine Frank Palkoska. "Martial arts are pervasive in American society, and many of our Soldiers already have martial arts experience and expertise. We owe it to our Soldiers and the Army to teach combatives, and the enthusiasm level is already high."

In his 1987 book entitled Surviving on the Battlefield: A Handbook to Military Arts, Robert K. Spears noted that the Infantry School discontinued combatives training Army-wide because of accidental deaths due to pugil-stick training and the Army's politically-based decision to emphasize the technological skills of its Soldiers rather than their ability to kill.

Spears also mentioned an unreported but pervasive opinion among Soldiers at the grass roots level that the hand-to-hand doctrine was weak and ineffective.

Spears noted that units in Korea, Hawaii and the 82nd Airborne employed Tae Kwon Do. Many in the Special Forces community studied a system developed by the late Michael Echanis. Soldiers at Fort Hood tried some basic Aikido through a contract with Sportsmind Corporation. The ranger community modified and used the doctrine outlined in FM 21-150 Combatives.

By the mid-1980s, the number of American Soldiers holding black belts in martial arts had swelled into the thousands. Today, martial arts are more pervasive than ever.

"Martial arts can be divided into three basic categories," said Steve Van Camp, USAPFS instructor and writer. "Close range is grappling, medium range is kicking and striking, and weapons include any extension of the human body."

Grappling can include takedowns, throws, chokes, joint locks, and numerous pinning or submission holds.

"Grappling has emerged as one of the most popular forms and can be used to immobilize, injure, or even kill an opponent," said Van Camp.

"Grappling is an awesome conditioner," said USAPFS Commandant Col. Stephen Cellucci. "A 150-pound Soldier will expend approximately 820 calories per hour grappling. Judo and karate burn almost as much. Combatives build speed, stamina, endurance, flexibility, agility and tenacity."

Cellucci also explained the integral relationship between martial arts and PT.

"Soldiers are more apt to dedicate themselves to mastering PT skills if they can apply them to something practical" Cellucci said. "Learning a forward roll, for instance, makes more sense to a Soldier if he or she realizes how it can be used in fighting or maneuvering on the battlefield. A forward roll is the first step in learning to fall safely and proper falling skills are needed to safely learn throws."

"The key to good combatives training is the drills," Van Camp said. "Smart training is more cooperative than it is competitive. Overemphasis on competition leads to unnecessary injuries and poor skill acquisition."

Ed Thomas

Luis Escalante, Company C, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, demonstrates a takedown called the fireman's carry.

It is not unusual, Van Camp said, to do hundreds of controlled repetitions of a single technique during a training session.

"Precision, control and speed will make the difference in real life situations," he said.

Troy State University's Fitness Leadership program offers a variety of combatives courses including close range, medium range and weapons. For more information, call 685-9555.

USAMU score major victories in recent matches

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) have scored some major victories in the past few weeks.

The following results are just some of their recent accomplishments:

USAMU action shooter Jay Christy won the title of Georgia State Champion and Julie A. Goloski won the title of Women's Georgia State Champion Aug. 2 at the Georgia State Championships in Atlanta.

Joseph A. Buffa won the Skeet Match and Anthony D. Naatjes was third at the Wolf Creek Skeet Match Aug. 1 in Atlanta.

International rifle shooter David A. Johnson won the Any Sight Three-Position Match and Troy Bassham won the Iron Sight Three-Position Match as well as the Overall Three-Position National Championship from July 23 to 31 at the National Smallbore Rifle Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio. The USAMU won both the Three-Position Iron Sight and the Three-Position Any Sight team matches.

International rifle shooter Thomas A. Tama won the Gold Medal in the Prone 50-Meter Free Rifle Prone Championship (English Match) and tied the world record with a score of 101.9 points from July 16 to 29 in Barcelona, Spain; he also earned an Olympic quota slot for the United States. USAMU won the Gold Medal in the Prone 50-Meter World Team Championship; the team members were Tamas, Glenn A. Dubis and Lance S. Hopper. Wanda R. Jewell, U.S. Army Reservist, who as a civilian is the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Support Officer, brought home a team Silver Medal in the Women's 3x20 Sport Rifle Match. James T. Graves won the Bronze Medal in Skeet and a U.S. Olympic quota slot.

Buffa also won the Skeet Match at the NSSA International World Skeet Match on July 26 in Chicago.

USARSA Soldier coaches team to victory

U.S. Army School of the Americas

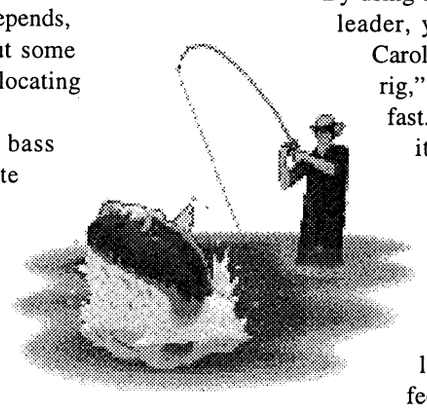
Reynaldo Morales celebrated July 23 after the Columbus Pioneers came from behind to beat Western Macon 6-5 in extra innings, crowning them Georgia's Girl's Little League Fast Pitch State Champions in the 11-12 year-old age bracket.

"I knew they could do it if they just kept their heads in the game," said Morales, NCOIC of the Command Group section of the U.S. Army School of the Americas and one of the coaches of the championship team.

He said the girls won all four games at South Commons Field in Columbus during the Georgia tournament.

Morales and the rest of the coaches, including Manager LaMon Brannon, left July 31 with the team to Paris, Tenn., for the Division II Championships.

The championship tournament ends Wednesday.



"Hopefully we can continue our winning streak," he said. "No matter what, I'm very proud of the team."

Fisherman wants lure to "find" bass

D. Hegal and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

If any bass fisherman could have just one wish granted, chances are it would be for a lure that "finds" bass.

"Actually," said professional bass tournament angler Larry Nixon, "there are certain lures available that do find bass. Much depends, of course, on how you fish them, but some lures are definitely better suited for locating bass than others."

Nixon, a winner of 13 national bass tournaments, said one of the favorite fish-finding lures among the tournament pros is a swimming, vibrating, imitation minnow.

"There's just something about this type of lure that draws bass to it," Nixon said. "I don't believe it is any single factor, but rather a combination of how the lure looks, vibrates and sounds. Basically, all you do with these lures is cast them out and wind them back in.

"It's one of those last-ditch lures, too, when it's late in the day and you still need to catch some fish for a full limit. We just start running a shoreline and casting and winding as fast as we can."

Nixon also likes to use diving crank baits as fish-finding lures, although he admits they aren't quite as effective as the vibrating imitation minnows.

"The whole idea behind a fish-finding lure is that you can use it to cover a lot of water quickly and efficiently," the pro said. "The lures are best used with a fairly fast retrieve and they work different depths.

"Diving crank baits can be used this way, but the deeper plugs are tiring to retrieve cast after cast, and sometimes the best retrieve with them is a slow one. Still, in the hands of a skillful crank baits angler, they'll definitely find bass."

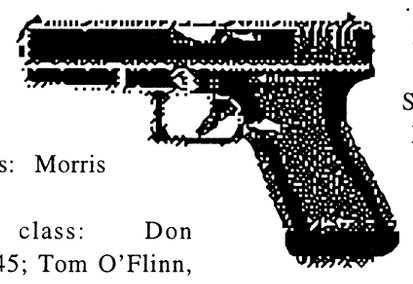
Another lure many pros have started to rely on more and more, Nixon said, is a plastic lizard or worm on a Carolina rig.

"By using a lighter sinker and a shorter leader, you can turn a deep water Carolina rig into a shallow water rig," Nixon said, "and still fish it fast. You can rig it weedless so it works well in cover, and just the slightest rod tip movement makes the lure dart and swim erratically.

"Carolina rigs are definitely effective because while you're looking for bass, you can feel the sinker working along the bottom so it tells you what type of cover you're in. The lure looks pretty natural out away from the sinker, too, which is why bass are attracted to it."

Some anglers use top-water buzz baits to find bass, especially when fishing in acres of flooded timber and heavy brush.

"One of the things a buzz bait seems to do is 'call' bass to it, whether they actually strike or not," the Arkansas pro said. "It makes a lot of noise so bass definitely hear it and swim out to investigate.



"One of the things I really like to do with a buzz bait is make several casts through timber with it, then follow with a plastic worm or jig into the very same spot. It's amazing how many times that lure will get a hit even when the buzz bait didn't."

RFPI lends hand to advance technology

The Advanced Concept Technology Demonstration (ACTD) ended this week with the Soldier remaining the most crucial element of any future battle system designed for the light Infantry.

The demonstration of new weapons, sensors and intelligence processing systems was designed to test a collection of equipment known as the Rapid Force Projection Initiative (RFPI), a battle system designed to add lethality and survivability to early entry light Infantry forces.

During the three-week exercise, the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky., as the experimental force was outfitted with some of the latest battlefield technology. The 101st Abn. Div. (AA) was supplemented with two new XVIII Airborne Corps units stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., Company A, 511th Parachute Infantry Regiment (Enhanced Fiber Optic Guided Missile) and 3rd Battalion, 27th Field Artillery (High Mobility Artillery Rocket System).

The opposing force (OPFOR) was made up of Soldiers of the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), Fort Stewart, Ga. The 29th Infantry Regiment and 988th Military Police Company , both of Fort Benning and the 3rd U.S. Infantry Regiment (The Old Guard), Fort Myer, Va. also added to the OPFOR.

With unmanned aerial vehicles combing the skies, ultrasensitive sensors plotting enemy and friendly icons on computers and rapid deployable rocket systems knocking out tanks, the exercise may have often seemed more focused on the machines and not on the Soldiers. Most leaders, however, said the Soldier is still the most critical part of the operating system.

"You can have all of the best sensors and the longest shooters in the world, but it's still going to come down to guys in foxholes shooting at targets to win the fight," said Col. Tim Bosse, deputy director of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, Fort Benning. Once all of the data from this exercise is analyzed, he said, any equipment selected for fielding will have been operated and approved by a Soldier testing the equipment in field conditions.

"It's not just a technician in a laboratory that says 'this sensor works great,'" Bosse said. "It's a sergeant in the field saying 'this sensor does what the technician in the laboratory said it would and I like it.' Or, 'this thing doesn't work as it was advertised.' The warfighters get to vote on it, which is a unique way to look at acquisition."

The old reliable field artillery weapon, the M198 towed 155mm Howitzer, was improved with an on-board Digital Fire Control System, which made the job of acquiring and destroying targets quicker for the Soldiers of Battery C, 1st Battalion, 377th Field Artillery, 101st Abn. Div. (AA).

"It's easier to spot the enemy and plot targets," said Spec. Jerry Clark. His missions included engaging both anti-armor and anti-personnel targets. "It's a lot quicker to get rounds down range. There are some little software glitches, but otherwise it has been working all right. They just need to work out the bugs."

Clark said he had very little computer knowledge before being assigned the new equipment, but the system was easy to learn. While he was confident that his unit is one of the best at laying rounds, he said the new equipment made his team even more efficient.

"We're definitely much quicker getting the job done, shooting rounds downrange for the Infantry."

Private 1st Class Chris O'Reilly ran one of the new weapons system, the Enhanced Fiber Optic Guided Missile, a missile system on a HMMWV chassis. O'Reilly, a TOW gunner by specialty, said his training transferred into this new weapon system.

"This weapon is by far more technical and superior," O'Reilly said, comparing the system to his old weapon. "There's more precision and longer distance. We have had a lot of virtual kills."

O'Reilly said he would receive a mission on a target and design a flight path for his missile. Once the missile was fired, another operator in another location would take over the missile and complete the mission in a simulated environment.

The team destroyed simulated armored personnel carriers, tanks and other vehicles.

O'Reilly said he was a computer program designer before joining the Army and that it is exciting to help develop the computer-based weapons technology of the RFPI.

"The contractors (of the systems) have asked us questions. We recommend things and they usually make it happen. So it makes it easier on us and easier on them."

The Light Digital TOC (LDTOC) was the major command and control element of the RFPI. Within the LDTOC, information from sensors and other intelligence gathering equipment was assessed and used to defend against the OPFOR.

Spec. Thomas Sayre, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 502nd Infantry, worked with the LDTOC as an operator of Army regulation governs wear of Tattoos, piercings

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Soldiers in and out of uniform are now prohibited from displaying pierced body parts while on military installations worldwide, except for female troops with pierced earrings.

The prohibition on piercing is among several changes in Army Regulation 670-1, "Wear and Appearance of Army Uniforms and Insignia," which took effect Aug. 6, said Sgt. Maj. Larry L. Strickland, the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel's (DCSPER) senior enlisted person.

Other 670-1 changes involve the wearing of tattoos, to include the prohibition of certain types of tattoos; the wearing of backpacks and shoulder bags, conditions of wear of the Physical Fitness and Battle Dress Uniforms and fingernail polish.

"[Army Regulation] 670-1 was six years old, and, as with any regulation, there is a point in time for updates," Strickland said. "One of the things that came from the MACOM command sergeants major ... was a request from the field (for) more specificity in 670-1 for clarity so that they wouldn't have to make (so many) judgement calls (about uniform and appearance issues)."

Pertaining to body piercing, the DCSPER message reads: "No attaching, affixing, or displaying objects, articles, jewelry or ornamentation to or through the skin (is authorized) while in uniform, in civilian clothes while on duty, or in civilian clothes off duty on any military installation or places under military control."

According to Strickland, the uniform and appearance changes "weren't made in a vacuum." Commanders, noncommissioned officers and other enlisted Soldiers in the field, young and old, formed process action teams to discuss the proposed changes and provide input to the Department of the Army.

The actual recommendation that went to the DCSPER (Lt. Gen. Frederick E. Vollrath) was that males (Soldiers) be prohibited from wearing earrings and other body piercing on and off duty, on and off post," Strickland said. "When it got to the DCSPER, he tempered that (recommendation)."

To prohibit Soldiers from wearing pierced earrings or displaying other pierced body parts when off-duty, off-post and out of uniform would be a policy that "wasn't enforceable," Strickland said.

Female Soldiers are authorized to wear pierced earrings on Army posts while off duty and may still wear approved pierced earrings while in uniform, said Master Sgt. Debra Wylie, the Uniform Policies Officer within the Army's Office of the DCSPER.

Strickland said Soldiers have a military image to project to the public, an image that can clash against "pop culture" embraced by young civilians. Inappropriate tattoos, pierced body parts, multi-hue-

Post receives new garrison commander

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Garrison Commander Col. Byron D. Greene relinquished command Aug. 7 to Col. John Mitchell on York Field.

Greene, who served as Garrison Commander for the past two years, will continue to serve the Fort Benning community as he steps into the role of post Inspector General.

Greene was thanked by Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst for playing a significant role in Fort Benning being named the best large installation in the world.

"I have had the pleasure to work with the most professional staff and unit while at Fort Benning," Greene said.

Greene also thanked the community for being supportive while he was in command.

During his speech, Greene welcomed Mitchell, who previously served as the post's Inspector General.

"I am thrilled to be working at Fort Benning where I started my career in the Army 25 years ago," Mitchell said.

Mitchell's previous assignments include tours with the 1st Infantry Division at Fort Riley, Kan., 3rd U.S. Infantry (The Old Guard), Fort Myer, Va., the 24th Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga., the 2nd Infantry Division in the Republic of Korea in addition to two tours with the 1st Ranger Battalion.

Commissioned in 1973, Mitchell has completed the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, the U.S. Army Command and Staff College, the Armed Forces Command and Staff College and the U.S. Army War College.

Mitchell holds a bachelor's degree in English from Auburn University and a master's degree in personnel management from Central Michigan University.

Mitchell and his wife Margery Sue have two daughters, Jennifer and Katherine, who are currently cadets at the U.S. Military Academy and the U.S. Air Force Academy.

Stress can cause bouts of anxiety

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Stress affects everyone. I don't care if you're a hermit or a stockbroker on Wall Street; everyone encounters some sort of stress almost daily.

I never thought of myself as having stress, because there's nothing bad enough in my life to give me stress. But as I stop to think about it, it's the little things that affect me. They heap the stress on until I feel like my head is going to blow up.

Take the incident that happened to me last week, for example. My husband and I went to the Shoppette for some junk food. I bought a fudge nut brownie. Well, the next day I saw the brownie wrapper on the kitchen counter. "That jerk!" I thought. "He ate my brownie!" I was steaming. I bought that brownie for me! So I started forming all kinds of ideas in my head. I was going to start-marking my name on the food, food I bought just for me. Like we were bickering roommates fighting over whose food was whose.

Of course, as soon as I saw my husband, I immediately accused him of eating my brownie. He vehemently denied it, and being so mad, I didn't want to believe him. It wasn't until he swore on our marriage that I really had to stop and think. Maybe I did eat it, and am entering senility very early. The point is, I stressed out about that for almost a whole day — just over a brownie.

A better example of my stress happened on this very day and I'm just waiting to finish this so I can jump in a hot bath with a book and then throw on my pajamas.

My husband had (the operative word is had) a four-day pass for reenlisting recently. Today was the last day of his pass and he was going to watch my very hyper twelve-year-old brother who is visiting us this week. This worked out well, because I had to go to work.

To make a long story short, my husband was alerted at 4 a.m. So much for his day off. Now I find out he won't be home for a couple of days. Yeah, it's his job, but sometimes I think I'm being smart and planning things when I know in reality they'll never happen. It's inevitable that he'll get called into work the second I make some sort of plan. That causes stress too. I never know if he'll be here for my birthday, his birthday, our anniversary, etc.

I think acknowledging my stress actually helps me to deal with it. I know that in two weeks my husband will be gone for a month. Instead of stressing out about it, I am doing things now to ensure my stress level won't skyrocket when he's gone. If you know you're going to have stress in the future, do something now, if possible, to try to lessen it later. If stress comes upon you suddenly, do anything you can to take your mind off it.

I have a magnet from my family support group, provided by the Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program, with 101 ways to cope with stress. They include: keep a journal, stop saying negative things to yourself, look for the silver lining and read a poem, along with 97 other ways.

For me, I find the hot bath and book the most relaxing. But now, it's time for Jeopardy, another great stress reliever, so the bath will have to wait.

People should use stress to their advantage

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

When I went home on leave last week, I observed something that upset me. As I watched my mother's dog carry on with life, I became jealous of the fact that this creature had absolutely no stress at all. The hardest thing this dog had to deal with was deciding which part of it's body it needed to scratch next.

I find it funny that I could get angry over something as dumb as that, but it goes to show you how much stress can affect us.

Stress has always been my enemy. Not only does my mind suffer, but also my body. I can't count the number of times I went to the doctor only to find out my illnesses were related to stress. That in itself is stressful.

Stress is usually the answer to all those mysterious problems people have. If the doctor can't explain why you're swelled up like a pumpkin or why you've been constipated for a month they tell you it's because of stress. Usually there's nothing you can do about it either, which makes it even worse.

Almost everything we do, both on the job and in our personal lives involves a certain amount of stress.

Everybody has his own kind of stresses and way of dealing with them.

Some people have no problem handling stress. These people can take anything that is thrown at them, and barely ever freak out. You would swear they are on helium because they never let anything get them down.

I both hate and admire this kind of person.

I have always been very high strung and stress is something that is as familiar as breathing to me. My first experience with stress was probably on my trip through the birth canal. Even then I know I was worried that I wasn't dressed for the occasion or that I would get lost on the way. I guess it's been all down hill from there.

It's funny that even though I know I am a highly stressed person I still decided to join the Army. I mean, where can the pressure get any tougher?

Not only that, but I picked the only MOS that guarantees you'll have to buy a years supply of antacid when you sign up.

So now, I not only have the daily stresses of my job, but also the obligation to fulfill my Soldiering duties as well.

This leads me to imagine what my life would be like with absolutely no stress at all. I wonder how it would feel to be completely carefree with no worries, obligations or pressures. My biggest dilemma would be having to decide between the Laverne and Shirley reunion special or the Facts of Life marathon.

Of course it all seems fine and dandy in my head, but when I really take time to think about it, life would be boring with absolutely no stress at all. I guess picturing myself as my mother's overweight rat terrier put things into perspective for me.

Even though stress stinks, most of the time it's what keeps us going. Many times we have control over how much we let stress affect us.

We can be our own superheroes and use stress for good or evil. We can let it be one of the things that drives us to work harder and rise above the rest or we can let it beat us down.

I think these are some of the greatest things I've learned since I've been in the Army and I guess that's why I don't mind sacrificing a little of my stomach lining for the cause.

Of course there will always be those times when stress gets the best of us, but that's only natural. We can only take so much and when this happens the best thing to do is find some kind of release.

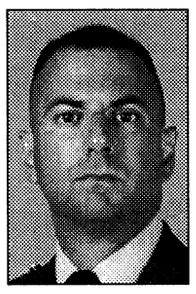
I found that clearing my head and making up new identities for myself helps calm me down and humming Yanni tunes also helps.

There are also other things such as running, digging ditches, cliff diving or maybe just taking a hot shower that can help relieve stress.

If everyone found several ways to relieve stress in a safe and productive way things just might be a little more peaceful.

Lottery may answer Army finance woes

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs NCOIC



commentary

Lately, I've been spending a lot of time trying to figure out how to spend my $161.5 million. This is my fantasy money or my "what if" cash, the loot that would have been mine if I played the Powerball lottery.

This is the same lottery won by the "Lucky 13," the Ohio working men who pooled their money to win the big check.

Of course, if I had won a piece of that action, we would have to call our group the "Fortunate 14" or something like that.

Anyway, what would I do with such a big pile of green? I wouldn't quit my job, because I enjoy this life too much. And regardless of the amount of money a person has, a big medical problem might come up and wipe out your bank account. There's nothing like semi-free health care. I would probably donate about 10 percent of my winnings to charitable organizations or worthy causes.

I think my first act would be to pay for a mobile team of auto repair persons to travel throughout Columbus to fix every drivers turn signals. Maybe it's the humidity, but turn signals seem to burn out frequently around here. Yeah, right.

I would also pay to have all of the yield signs enlarged about five times their normal size with an explanation of what to do when a driver comes up to a yield sign. The directions would be something like "Don't stop! Slow down and merge into traffic."

I would spend money lobbying to have Veteran's Parkway rezoned so adult entertainment businesses would have to move about 200 meters off the road away from view.

As a donation to Fort Benning, I would hire a team of engineers to replace the obstacles along the fitness trail beside the golf course.

The fitness trail is a great asset for those who want to get a good over all workout in a little bit of time, but the wood in some of the obstacles is rotting away, the course needs new signs and the running path itself needs maintenance.

There's a great collection of artillery and armor pieces outside the National Infantry Museum but there aren't many signs explaining what they are or the signs have long faded way. Another freebee from my big win would be new signs with detailed explanations of what each piece of equipment is and where it came from. I'm sure there's enough veterans around here who might help with the background information.

I would donate a bunch of vacuum cleaners to the Soldiers living in the barracks. I would also hire a team of roofers to permanently fix the drips in the barracks' ceilings.

I would also pay to have the bleachers at the Gowdy Field ball park repaired and painted. I hate to see a good facility erode away like that.

OK, I think I might have hit upon a way for the military to pay for quality of life issues, to make up for money diverted to finance such operations as the mission in Bosnia. Fort Benning can play the lottery, with each service member having a one-dollar allotment go toward the purchase of a ticket. With so many tickets in the pool, we're bound to hit it big. The money we win can go into a quality of life program used to finance such things as painting the barracks and buying softballs.

Of course, this is all probably illegal, but desperate times call for desperate lottery ticket buying.

Motorcycle safety

Students prepare to complete maneuvering drills Sunday during a basic motorcycle safety class offered through the Georgia Motorcycle Foundation. The foundation offers monthly basic and experienced safety courses on Fort Benning. One of the classes are required in order to register motorcycles on post. The next basic course, which is three days long, will be held Sept. 11-13 and the next experienced course is scheduled for Sept. 5. Both classes are offered free to Soldiers, family members and civilian employees. For more information on the classes, call 545-5043.

RFPI: Exercise comes to end

several intelligence processing systems. One system tracked friendly forces and the other tracked the enemy. The two forces are then meshed, similar to map overlays, and a commander is able to get a good picture of the battlefield, the enemy as red icons and the friendly forces as blue icons.

An Infantryman by specialty, Sayre answered the call for Soldiers who had knowledge of radio operations and some degree of computer literacy.

Though his workplace is in the back of an air-conditioned, modified HMMWV, he said he has been in the field more now with the RFPI program than when he was a regular Infantryman.

"I'm in an air-conditioned cab here, but we're in and out of the field constantly, putting up the TOC and digging in. It's a lot more work than I thought it would be," Sayre said.

Sayre said he tries not to depersonalize his job and always remembers the icons on the screen represent Soldiers in the field.

"I try not to picture people as little blue icons on the screen," Sayre said. "People are people. Icons are icons. We're not playing a game here. Sometimes it might look like that. This is real life."

The RFPI battle system posed new challenges to the OPFOR, who in this scenario role-played a heavy armor force.

Staff Sgt. Barry Robinson, an OPFOR tank commander from Fort Stewart, said the long range weapons and sensors of the RFPI made it tougher for a heavy armor unit to take on the light Infantry .

"In a long-range fight, they have the capability to kill us," Robinson said. "I'm used to fighting force on force like at the NTC (National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.)."

The new equipment factored in largely when the OPFOR made a run to take out the Tactical Operations Center (TOC) Robinson said. The OPFOR used quick rushes to the objective, trying to use shock effect to off balance the force.

"It stopped a lot of us. We had nine tanks and only three of them made it," Robinson said. "Most tanks were 'god kills,' someone in virtual reality using 'high-speed' equipment to kill us."

The RFPI demonstration illustrated the need for battle commanders to become more familiar with the weapons and the intelligence gathering systems of the digitized battlefield, said Maj. Gen. Robert T. Clark, 101st Abn. Div. (AA) commander. His division will keep and continue to test the RFPI systems for the next two years.

"I believe we have a way to go before we are up to speed in the training mode to prepare our commanders for this kind of environment," Clark said. A battle commander has much more information to sift through and quicker decisions to make based on that information.

"We have to start in the school house," Clark said. "We can get at that through constructive simulation, through digital decision making drills."

Such drills and training would originate in the Infantry school, Clark said, but units would have to be able to train at their home stations with equipment organic to that unit.

"The digital battlefield brings a leader far more information in a compressed amount of time than he ever had to deal with before," Clark said. "It's a faster decision making cycle than we ever had before."

POLICY: regulation prohibits piercings

dyed or "sculpted" hair designs and other personal appearance fads, he said, are just as out of place in today's Army as "duck-tail" haircuts were verboten in the '50s and prophet-length hair during the '60s and '70s.

"We keep in mind that we are a uniformed service," Strickland said. "There is an expectation, in fact it is written in 670-1, about the requirement for us to maintain a Soldierly appearance ... whether or not you are in uniform or civilian clothes.

The 670-1 update also prohibits "visible tattoos or brands on the neck, face or head," according to the DCSPER message. The message also says "tattoos on other areas of the body that are prejudicial to good order and discipline are prohibited." Additionally, "any type of tattoo or brand that is visible while wearing a Class A uniform and detracts from a Soldierly appearance is prohibited," according to the DCSPER message.

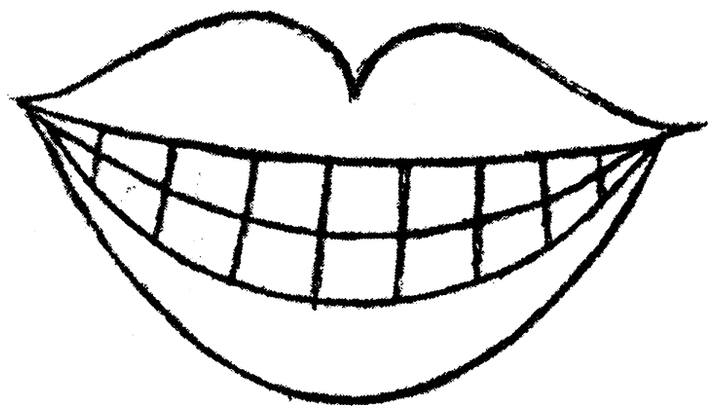
Any person with a tattoo on the head, neck or face is disqualified from enlistment or appointment (to officer, warrant officer, or admission to Officer Candidate School), Shaffery said. Out of about each 100 tattoos reviewed by recruiters, "we deny seven or eight," he said.

Not all 670-1 changes are restrictive, Strickland said. Soldiers may now carry commercial rucksacks, shoulder bags, backpacks, gym bags and like articles over the shoulder while in uniform or on a motorcycle, he said. The articles, however, must be black, with no logos.

The Battle Dress Uniform (BDU) is now authorized for wear off post, unless local commanders publish an exception to policy, according to the DCSPER message. However, Soldiers are prohibited from wearing BDUs in establishments that primarily serve alcohol. BDUs are not authorized for air travel unless Soldiers are taking part in a unit deployment and the mode of transport is for exclusive military use.

Soldiers may now wear the Physical Fitness Uniform (PFU) on and off duty when they are engaged in physical training on and off military installations when authorized by commanders, according to the DCSPER message. The PFU shirt is now to be worn inside the trunks. The PFU may also be worn in transit between the Soldier's quarters and duty station. Commanders determine PFU wear policy on their installations, according to the message.

Female Soldiers may wear lipstick and nail polish with all uniforms, Wylie said, as long as the color is conservative. Wild shades of lipstick and nail polish such as white, gold, purple and blue can't be worn while in uniform, she said.



The hair policy under 670-1 for male and female Soldiers remains the same, Wylie said.

"We haven't prohibited (all) tattoos. A Soldier can still have a tattoo, as long as it is appropriate and not visible in Class A uniform or on the face, neck or scalp. You will find Soldiers who tomorrow morning in PT formation will obviously have tattoos that are exposed, not covered by the PFU. We have not objected to that. The only objection is having tattoos that are visible when wearing the Class A uniform.

"It's also our responsibility to ensure that the Soldiers we're bringing into the Army understand the standards of the organization they are joining. This all goes back to our Army core values. There are standards that have to be maintained," he said.

Phase III field exercise completes training

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

More than 650 National Guard Officer Candidate School (OCS) candidates were put to the test this summer as they completed OCS Phase III training at Fort Benning.

From June 13 through Aug. 21, the candidates, who came from more than 35 states and the territory of Puerto Rico, have rotated through post for the final, two-week phase of OCS.

While the guidance and criteria for Phase III has remained the same, this is the first year National Guard units have combined in two locations to complete the phase, said Maj. Walter Dyky, VIP coordinator for Phase III of OCS.

Dyky explained that all state OCS facilities attended Phase III at either Fort Benning or Fort Lewis, Wash., this year, instead of completing the phase on their own just as Phases I and II are done.

While Fort Benning provided the training area, each guard rotation was required to bring their own cadre including tactical officers and NCOs.

Maj. Joel Potts, a rotational commander from the Oklahoma National Guard, said Fort Benning was an obvious choice as a location to conduct the training.

"Fort Benning is home of the Infantry. Where else would you train tactics more professionally — no where," he said.

Potts added that the training areas available on post offered the candidates some of the most valuable training possible.

"Phase III is comprised of four major events," he said. "The first is the Leadership Reaction Course and the course here is outstanding."

In addition to the leadership course, the candidates also complete a confidence course, tactical leadership course and four-day field training exercise during their stay.

While all three phases of OCS are important, Officer Candidate Cris Marcum said Phase III is where everything they have learned comes together.

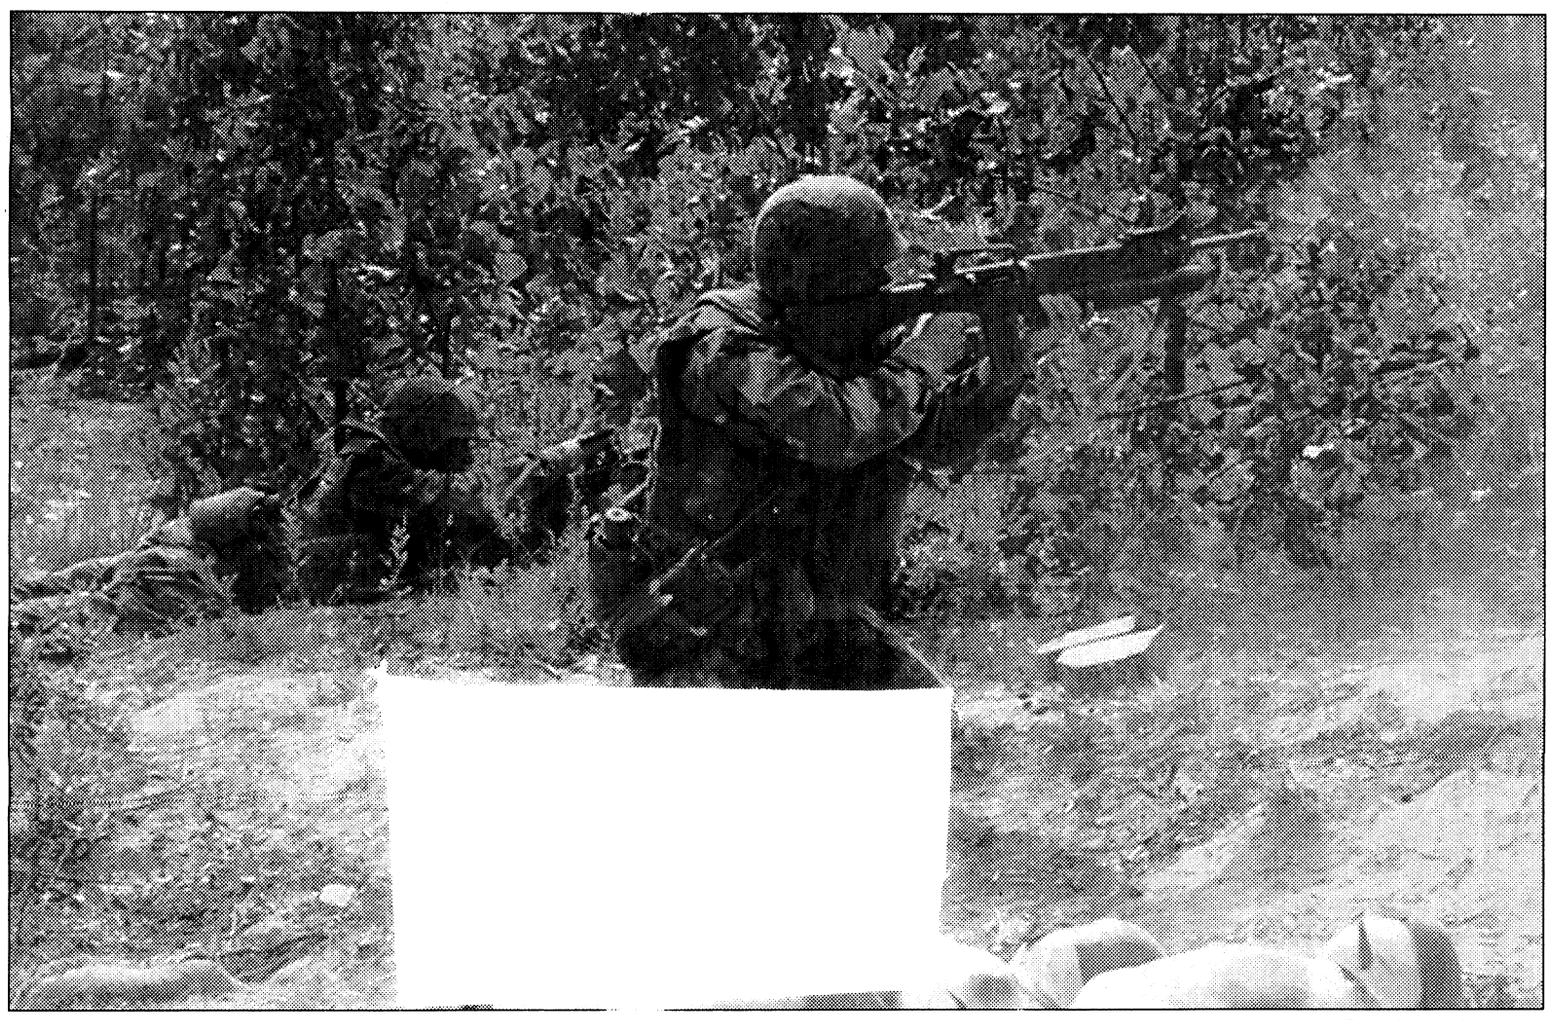
A candidate reapplies camouflage Aug. 6 during a field training exercise which was conducted as part of OCS Phase III training at a Fort Benning training area.



"This is what Phases I and II have been leading us up to," said Officer Candidate Cris Marcum "We've been out here performing the things they've been teaching us for the past months. It's all starting to come together now."

In addition to giving candidates the opportunity to execute what they have already learned, Potts said leadership ability is the key.

"This is where we really learn if they have what it takes to be a leader," he said. "They may not know tactics as a lieutenant or captain would. We are looking to see if they make good decisions and communicate with their Soldiers."

While no decision has been made yet on whether Phase III will permanently be held at Fort Benning, Potts said the candidates weren't the only ones who gained from the experience.

"This was the first time like this and I think we all learned a lot during the rotation," he said. "The training is only as good as those who manage it. We can now only strive to make it better."

Infantry Soldiers wage war on Cactus Range

The yellow smoke smelled of sulfur as it clouded the air. The squad of dismounted Soldiers maneuvered their way through the enemy trench, securing the area and suppressing all hostile forces.

When the threat of anti-tank fire was out of the way, the dismounted troop gave the green light and the team of Bradley Fighting Vehicles (BFV) advanced.

Although this was just a training operation on troop synchronization, squads from Company C, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), faced what was described by Lt. Col. Bob Pricone, commander, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), as one of the biggest challenges in mounted and dismounted training.

Soldiers maneuvered and coordinated their fighting strategies using both mounted and dismounted Soldiers in the first Table XII operation of the year.

The Soldiers conducted training on Cactus Range from July 15 through Aug 7.

During this phase of training, Soldiers were required to conduct a variety of tasks.

From hasty breach techniques, reporting, react to contact, fire distribution and trench clearing drills, Soldiers considered each obstacle to be a real combat situation, Pricone said.

Of the tasks the dismounted Soldiers faced, the trench clearing task was described by Pricone as one of the most important.

"The trench clearing is really important," Pricone said. "A lot of fratricide and deaths occur while Soldiers are clearing a trench."

"This squad did really well in the trench," Pricone said.

"This is what Infantry is all about," he continued "This is where all the training comes together. These Soldiers love the live-fire operations and then to combine it with the BFV, it's a great challenge."

This is one of the only opportunities for dismounted and mounted Soldiers to practice coordinating combat tactics with each other during a live-fire operation, said 1st Lt. Mike Lindsey, battalion adjutant.

"Quality training is the one of the most important assets. We have to ensure we are combat ready and able to defend our country at all times," said 2nd Lt. Terrance B. Glover, platoon leader Co. C., 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.).

Known as the "Can Do" battalion, Soldiers and the leaders are always focused for any mission and ready to accomplish it, Pricone said.

"Even with the heat, the Soldiers have been extremely motivated," Pricone said. "All the leaders and Soldiers are doing really well."

The Soldiers expressed their excitement with the exercise.

"This is really exciting. I am able to see how the vehicles work with the dismounts," said Pfc. Ryan Van Dewalder, Co. C, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.). "This is my first Table XII."

After the training operation was complete, the squads were required to do an after action review.

"It is important the Soldiers to be able to evaluate what they did well, and what could be improved on and why," Pricone said.

All the training the Soldiers are participating in will prepare them for an upcoming will be a rotation through the National Training Center in Fort Irwin Calif., in October, Pricone said.

Units test new aircraft detection devices

Army News Service

The largest National Guard training exercise ever held in Virginia took place at Fort Pickett, Va., in July, bringing together units from the 29th Infantry Division in a top-to-bottom test of Infantry operations.

The Division Maneuver Exercise, dubbed Operation Chindit, brought together units from Virginia, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut and the District of Columbia, testing their skills from the staff level down to individual Soldier combat tactics.

"We strove to achieve multi-echelon training that involved every Soldier," said Maj. Gen. Carroll D. Childers, 29th Infantry Division commander. "The exercise challenged them to re-address their skills, caused them to be imaginative and innovative, encouraged them to take prudent risks in being innovative and gave them an opportunity to demonstrate leadership and teamwork at an unprecedented level."

29th Infantry Division Public Affairs Officer Maj. Carl N. Grant III said, "Chindit was significant for our Soldiers because it allowed them to experience where they fit in a Corps-level operation."

In the Chindit scenario, the 29th Infantry Division was deployed to the island of Marcala to assist the fictitious 80th Airborne Division. Tasked with defending the local U.S. military installation against takeover by the Marcalan military, units from the 29th were able to plan and train in a continuum that flowed from a single operations order.

The exercise began with the insertion of troops from the 29th Infantry Division's 1st and 3rd Brigades by Blackhawk helicopters into strategic landing zones on the island.

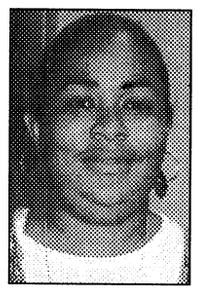
As the scenario unfolded over the next several days, Company C, 1st Battalion, 116th Infantry got an intelligence report that the "enemy" was holding a main road intersection in their area.

The Soldiers quickly prepared an attack on "Objective Coolidge," as division and brigade dubbed the opposing force's position. Objective Coolidge consisted of an M-113 armored personnel carrier and a squad of Soldiers belonging to the 1st of the 41st Marcalan Infantry.

"This is an enemy security outpost," said Capt. John Epperly, commander, Company C. "We want to take it out and take control of this major intersection." The intersection was a main artery in the scenario and controlling it would ensure the flow of nessesary items to the units in the field.

Epperly explained that this was the unit's first objective after coming into country. When the Soldiers were unloaded at the airfield, they immediately had to start movement to the objective. Usually the Soldiers have some down time to prepare for the move, according to the commander. But in this situation they had to "hit the ground running." The Soldiers quickly moved their squads to overtake the objective and secure the roadway against further enemy occupation.

Providing essential air support to the 116th Infantry in this scenario were soldiers from 3 Battalion, 111th Air Defense Artillery in Portsmouth, Va.



"We have people all over the countryside (Fort Pickett) on different missions," said Maj. Douglas Gagnon, battalion executive officer. "They are supporting the maneuver elements and the task force, and are providing air defense coverage to the airfield, fuel depots, supply depots and any other resources critical to our efforts. We are the ADA 'umbrella of protection' for these units."

The Stinger weapons are equipped with electronic devices that permit crews to identify aircraft. Capt. Alex Bengtson, Battery C commander, explained both military and civilian aircraft carry boxes that contain encrypted information, which is decoded by the Stinger weapons. From this information, crews can identify the aircraft as known or unknown. With unknowns, the teams use standard operating procedures to identify the craft by sight and make the determination to fire.

"The weapon contains an infrared, heat-seeking missile, so it's going to go right to the engine or exhaust system and cripple the aircraft," said Bengtson.

Chaplains graduate from training program

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

The U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain Training Program graduated six chaplains Aug 6 at the Infantry Center Chapel.

With the Army of today being a much more married Army, a much more mature Army than in years past, we see more Soldiers facing relationship problems, said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst during the program's graduation ceremony.

The purpose of the program is to give extra training to chaplains so they are better prepared to deal with family problems that require outside intervention, said Dr. Thomas E. Harrison, dean of the school of education.

Chaplains must be selected to attend the 15-month program which is offered once a year through Columbus State University. Chaplains who graduate from the program leave with a master's degree in science, specializing in marriage counseling.

"Soldiers and their families can come to us with any problem that they cannot find a solution to themselves." said Chaplain (Maj.) Jerry Powell, one of the program's graduates.

With the pressures of deployment and relocation, Soldiers and their families face, the chaplains will be able to service the military families better than before, said Chaplain (Col.) William J. De Leo.

"You could compare the training we received with any extra schooling professionals such as doctors go through," Powell said. "This program makes us better counselors, just as their training makes them better doctors."

After graduation, chaplains will be able to make an immediate contribution to the Army, helping families in need at their next duty station.

The graduating class of Aug. 1998 are:

Chaplain (Maj.) Jack Aupke, Fort Meade, Md.,

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Chavarria, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.,

Chaplain (Maj.) Stephen Fry, Fort Lewis, Wash.,

Chaplain (Maj.) Michael Payne, Stuttgart, Germany,

Chaplain (Maj.) Jerry Powell, Fort Bragg, NC,

Chaplain (Maj.) Scott Roney, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

Jobs opportunities available

Army Career and Alumni Program

"Many separating Soldiers find opportunities, good pay, benefits and chances for advancement in the manufacturing and production industry," said Chick Eagle, a Fort Benning ACAP counselor. "In the local area you can find jobs in spinning mills and clothes production, battery, automotive parts and small engine manufacturing, jet engine components, printing production, and many more."

"Soldiers have many of the skills and the experience needed by the manufacturing companies in the Columbus area as well as around the country. "Dedication to on-time mission accomplishment and strong supervision and management make our Soldiers well qualified to begin second careers in manufacturing. Soldiers often begin working on manufacturing or production lines and rise quickly to higher level supervisory positions based on their desire, ability and leadership," Eagle said..

"Manufacturing companies seem to offer excellent pay and benefits packages depending on the industry, location and degree of skilled workforce. After an initial waiting period, employees receive medical and dental programs, 401K and profit sharing retirement savings investment plans and life insurance options as well. A good benefits package can add as much as 25 percent to the salary. Manufacturing companies will offer a good benefits package to stay competitive and attract top workers, like separating Soldiers, into their work teams," Eagle said.

For more information, separating Soldiers should visit the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

First Steps Program

Parents receive a helping hand with newborns

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland

Rebecca Phalan (right), volunteer coordinator with the First Steps program, talks to Heidi DuPont with newborn son Austin James.

Most parents can probably testify that after the birth of a baby, there is a mix of emotions. From joy and excitement to fear and uncertainty, it is almost impossible to tell what the future holds.

For mothers who give birth at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), there is a helping hand ready to ease some of the nervousness that goes along with bringing home that tiny bundle.

The Family Advocacy First Steps Program has been working for ten years to provide parents with support both in and out of the hospital.

According to Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, First Steps is designed to educate parents by giving them the resources they need to feel more confident with their new baby.

Welch said volunteers visit mothers armed with a tote-bag of goodies.

She said the bag contains a variety of educational materials along with a Baby-Go-to-Sleep tape and a First Steps Calendar, which outlines the baby's developmental stage over the months.

Volunteers also make follow-up calls to the mothers to help with any questions they might have and to make sure everything is going all right.

Welch said parents can choose whether or not they wish to receive help from the program.

"Parents are not forced to utilize our services," Welch said. "Sometimes they may not want to talk to you, but if they take our tote-bag at least they have everything they need at their fingertips."

Welch said the program is aimed at first time parents, but is offered to everyone.

She said the program really benefits first time parents because there are some things new parents may not know.

"We can really help new moms with any questions or troubles they might be having," Welch said. "We can also help them find all the resources they have available to them such as the Women, Infant and Children Program (WIC)."

First Steps is also a prevention program that can identify parents who may need help. It can reach parents before they become too discouraged or stressed out, Welch said.

"I think the First Steps Program is one of the best prevention programs that we have for parents," Welch said. "It's a friendly service that lets people know there is someone out there who will listen to them and be there when there is a concern."

Heidi DuPont just gave birth and thought it was a really good idea to have a program that can help mothers.

"It's great they have a program that can help parents out with problems," DuPont said. "I feel better knowing there's something there that can guide me."

Welch explained that the First Steps Program is completely dependent upon volunteers.

Currently the program has 11 full-time volunteers, but those numbers fluctuate often because volunteers are continually moving.

Volunteers can choose how they would like to contribute to the program. They can decide if they would like to make ward visits to the mothers, follow-up phone calls or help put the tote-bags together.

Rebecca Phalan, volunteer coordinator for the First Steps Program, believes the program is critical in keeping parents informed and educated.

Phalan said it feels great to be there for not only the parents but also the child.

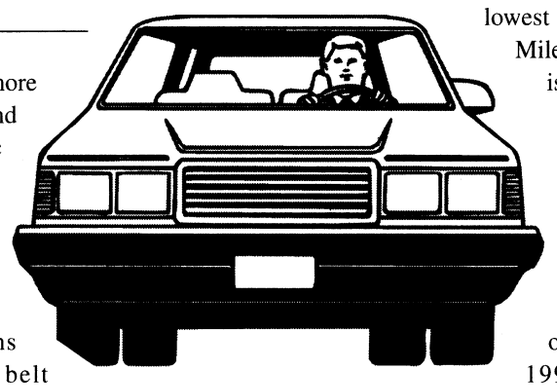
"Children are our future and by helping parents get off to a good start, we are in turn helping the child," Phalan said. "A lot of time parenting is information. Children are often abused because parents do not have the right information, like the only way a baby can communicate is by crying."

She added that it is important for parents to know there is someone there to see them through.

"I think it is vital that every new parent has somebody who supports them and listens without judging or criticizing," Phalan said.

Welch said that one of the things that works well with the volunteers is the fact that many of them are military spouses.

"I think it helps that we have so many volunteers that are military wives and mothers because they have gone through some of the things these mothers are going through, and they can relate to them," Welch said.



She said everyone gets a lot out of volunteering because it is such a loving program and it can be a neat experience working with the mothers and babies.

"I've never known anyone who has worked in this program and hasn't loved it," Welch said. "Who wouldn't love to see those tiny babies."

For more information, or to volunteer for the First Steps Program, call the First Steps office at 544-2020.

Stricter laws lower highway death rate

Georgia Department of Public Safety

Drivers in Georgia traveled more miles than ever during 1997 and that translated to more traffic crashes on Georgia roads, according to 1997 traffic crash data released recently by Georgia Public Safety Commissioner Col. Sid Miles.

The data also showed signs that Georgia's strict seat belt enforcement efforts and the state's new teenage driving law has had a positive effect on the overall traffic picture.

Georgia finished 1997 with 1,584 traffic fatalities on state roads, an increase of two fatalities from 1996. This is the smallest increase in traffic deaths ever. Miles attributed the rise in fatalities, in part, to a sharp increase in the number of pedestrian collisions across Georgia.

"In 1996, there were 159 fatal pedestrian wrecks in the state and in 1997 there were 184," Miles said.

Traffic crashes rose above the 300,000 mark for the first time ever with 38 percent of the 301,767 wrecks occurring on state highways. This was followed with 26 percent on county roads, 26 percent on city streets and 10 percent on the state's interstate system. Traffic fatalities followed a similar trend with 771 people killed in wrecks on state highways, 440 on county roads, 205 in interstate wrecks and 168 in wrecks on city streets.

Last year, the estimated motor vehicle miles traveled also reached the highest point ever at almost seventy billion. But despite the increase in travel and the increase in the number of traffic crashes, the fatal accident and death rates per one hundred million miles traveled both declined.

"The fatal accident rate reached 2.0 which is the lowest we have seen in Georgia," Miles said. "The 2.3 death rate is a point we have achieved only three times in recent history."

Another decline noted in the traffic statistics was in the number of alcohol-related crashes on the roads. The number of collisions fell to 9,357 in 1997 marking the lowest number this decade. There were also fewer alcohol-related injuries and 15 fewer fatalities.

Indications also show the strict seat belt enforcement by Georgia law enforcement officers is having a positive effect on traffic fatalities. The core crash data, which excludes train, pedestrian and bicycles wrecks, showed the first decline since 1992 in both fatal wrecks and the number of fatalities.

"Despite more vehicles and more drivers on the roads who are traveling more miles, the decline in the core data is an indication that the increase in seat belt usage across the state is paying off," Miles said. "And this data from just five months of heavy enforcement."

Encouraging news also concerning the teenage and Adult Driver Responsibility Act that took effect July 1, 1997. Traffic crash data shows few drivers in the 16-20 year old age group died in traffic crashes last year. Miles said 205 young people died in traffic crashes during 1997 compared with 262 the year before.

"I am encouraged to see the increase in safety equipment use by this age group. There is a consistent increase over the past few years."

As of July 15, Georgia recorded 730 fatalities so far this year, slightly lower than the number at this time last year.

Schools offer program for gifted children

Fort Benning school administration

Fort Benning schools offer a self-contained gifted program at Dexter Elementary School for students in grades 3-5. The program is based on curriculum that emphasizes higher thinking skills, creative problem solving skills, development of a strong self concept, aesthetic awareness and the development of positive interpersonal relations.

At Faith Middle School, gifted students in grades 6-8 are provided accelerated academic instruction by regular classroom teachers. In addition, children go to a resource teacher for enrichment activities.

Students must qualify in three of four categories to include ability, achievement, grades or creativity before enrolling the student. Parents with children who are interested in participating in this program must bring the most recent achievement scores, ability scores and a report card to Dexter or Faith Schools. Students already qualified in the State of Georgia will be entered in the gifted program without further testing.

For more information, call Kathy Einhorn at 545-8254.

Organisms cause common infections

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Fungus infections are caused by organisms that commonly multiply and spread on the skin, hair or nails. The two most common types are called candida and tinea. Some people refer to the candida infections as "yeast infections."

The disease is named for the part of the body infected such as "tinea pedis." Pedis is Latin for foot. Other common fungus infections include:

- •jock itch (tinea cruris)
- •ringworm on scalp (tinea capitis)
- •ringworm on body (tinea corporis)
- •nail fungus (tinea unguium)
- •female yeast infection (vaginal candidiasis)
- •thrush (oral candidiasis or diaper candidiasis)

Fungus infections are itchy and red. The surface can become white and wet. Tineas tend to spread out in a circle and look like a ring. Some people think it appears that a worm is under the skin, hence the name ringworm. However, there is no worm there. In some cases, if tinea is growing on the scalp, the area of skin can become bald.

When nails are infected, they may become thickened, turn white or yellow and crumbly. The skin around the nail can become red and swollen.

One out of every five people will experience a fungus infection. Fungus lives on damp surfaces like the floors of showers and public gyms. It lives on combs, hats and on hairstyling devices. Fungus infections are spread on the hands from one person to another. Some infections are even carried through pets.

Fungal infections are more likely to affect a person when the immune system is low from illnesses. After taking antibiotics, the natural bacteria of the body that fights fungus are reduced and fungus infections are more likely.

Fungus infections are best prevented by washing hands thoroughly, avoiding bare feet in public areas, avoiding sharing personal items that touch the body and allowing moist areas of the body to dry.

Over-the-counter remedies are available for treatment of early infections. Many of the medications are anti-fungal creams, shampoos and powders applied to the area and include the names nystatin, clotrimazole, miconazole and tolnaftate.

Fungus infections can be difficult to treat and may require prescription oral medications for long periods of time. Annals of Internal Medicine showed that women prone to yeast infections in the genital area have significantly fewer infections when they eat yogurt containing live active cultures.

IRA accounts provide retirement funds

Georgia Society of CPAs

Virtually anyone under the age of 70 can open an Individual Retirement Account (IRA). The only stipulation is that the account holder have an earned income. An earned income is income from wages, tips, alimony, sales commissions and self-employment. Some reasons an IRA should be opened include:

•IRA accounts are easy to open. They can be started by most banks, brokerage houses or trust companies. Funds can also generally be rolled over from other qualified retirement plans into IRAs without any tax ramifications.

•Tax-deferred compounding of interest can make investments grow faster. Any amount set aside in an IRA earn interest tax-deferred until the time of withdrawal. Since income tax is not paid, earnings generally grow faster than if invested in taxable instruments. The account holder may also be subject to a lower tax rate on the earnings if they withdraw the money at retirement, when the holder is more likely to be in a lower tax bracket.

•IRA holders may qualify for a tax deduction. Some taxpayers also may deduct their IRA contributions directly from their income for the year. The account holder qualifies for the deduction if they are active participants in an employer maintained retirement plan. If the person is covered by a plan, an income test determines how much of your IRA contribution is deductible. Married couples filing jointly can still claim a full deduction of up to $4,000 per year if their adjusted gross income (AGI) is less than $40,000. Single taxpayers can claim a full deduction if their income is below $25,000. The new tax law raises those limits by $10,000 for couples and $5,000 for singles in 1998.

Partial deductions are also allowed for singles with an income between $25,000 and $34,999 or married couples filing jointly with an income between $40,000 and $49,999. For every $5 over the ceilings of $25,000 and $40,000, you lose $1 in deductions. No deduction is allowed for an IRA contribution if the holder is covered by a retirement plan and their account exceeds $50,000 if married or $35,000 if single.

The deductibility of your IRA contribution will not be affected by whether the individual's spouse is an active participant in an employer's retirement plan, unless the couple has an income above $150,000.

•Account holders can structure IRA withdrawals to meet their financial needs. Generally, they can withdraw funds without incurring penalties once they reach age 59 and a half. At that time, they can opt to take money out in a lump sum or withdraw it as needed. If account holders have saved substantial amounts in their IRA, they should be aware that the 15 percent excise tax on excess distributions from IRAs and other qualified plans has been suspended through 1999. Under the prior law, you would have faced a 15 percent excise tax on withdrawals of more than $160,000 in 1997.

An option for those who need to tap into their IRA prior to reaching age 59 is to withdraw the money in the form of an annuity, that is, periodic distributions made at specific intervals. The amount of the annuity payment is based on the person's life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of the account holder and their beneficiary.

•IRA holders can make penalty-free hardship withdrawals such as to pay qualified medical expenses that exceed seven point five percent of the person's adjusted gross income without incurring the 10 percent penalty. In addition, unemployed workers who have been receiving unemployment benefits under federal or state law for at least 12 weeks may make penalty free IRA withdrawals to the extent of qualified medical insurance premiums paid during the year. First-time home buyers can also make penalty free withdrawals as will certain taxpayers withdrawing funds for qualified higher education costs.

In addition to these advantages, CPAs urge taxpayers to remember that they must rely on their own retirement savings to fund their golden years, and that an IRA is one of many vehicles to do this.

Q. I see ads on television about businesses that will give me credit even though my credit history is spotty. What should I know about these businesses before I sign anything?

A. You must be careful when dealing with businesses that target people with troubled credit histories. There is a booming industry that has developed, and it is called "subprime lending." Subprime lenders are businesses that give credit to people with spotty, or "subprime" credit histories. These lenders use persuasive methods to encourage consumers to sign agreements. For instance, they often use well-known sports figures in their commercials. This technique makes the lender appear trustworthy to consumers who need loans.

Subprime lenders will offer you money if you have bad credit, but they won't explain all the possible results to you, the consumer. Let's look at two examples, subprime mortgages and car loans that show how these businesses make a profit:

If you are low on money, but own your own home, you may decide to borrow money with your home as collateral. You are a perfect target for subprime lenders. One way in which subprime lenders can gain access to your home is through home-improvement loans. For instance, one of these lenders might loan you money to repair your home, based on the value of your home, rather than your ability to pay the monthly payment. If you're not paying attention to the details when you sign, then you could end up with a payment that you cannot afford. If you can't pay your obligation, the lender can take action to foreclose on your home.

Another good example is car-title lending. By now, everyone has noticed the signs around Fort Benning that ask you to pawn your title and keep your car. These signs fail to mention that car-title pawn businesses can charge high monthly fees. If you cannot make the payments, they will take your car.

Here are some tops for avoiding subprime lending problems:

•Always seek out all possible sources for a loan.

•For home equity loans, try the nonprofit Neighborhood Assistance Corporation of America at (888) 302-NACA. They provide home-lending programs at reasonable rates.

•Make sure that you understand every financial charge in your loan agreement and that you have a reasonable payment schedule with reasonable interest rates and fees.

•Never sign a document with blank spaces.

•For home-improvement contracts, plan your repairs in advance and shop around for a contractor to do the work. Also, shop around for financing, rather than having the contractor set-up financing for you.

•Under the Truth in Lending Act, consumers who enter into certain home equity loans have three days to rescind the contract. However, don't enter into a contract relying on rescission rights. You should be cautious about signing the contract in the first place.

•Make an appointment with the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate with questions about contracts and financing arrangements, preferably before you sign a contract.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning has a population of more than 50,000 people which ranks it as a medium size city.

Like many cities across the United States, Fort Benning's contractors pick up and dispose of garbage and trash and recyclable items.

To ensure maximum efficiency of the curbside recycling pick-up program, the installation's contract is written so that the contractor is to pick up recyclable items only that are placed in brown recycling containers provided to each housing resident.

Beginning Sept. 14, the contractor will not sort through unacceptable, recyclable items placed in containers.

A recycling hotline is available at 545-2108 for residents to obtain information on recyclable items.

A comprehensive curbside recycling pamphlet also is available to housing residents.

MACH Construction notice

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers will install and test a new fire suppression system for Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) Monday through Aug. 21. The installation and testing of this equipment will not impact any of the services provided by MACH.

The Fire Department, Directorate of Public Safety, in conjunction with the West Georgia Area Office, Corps of Engineers, will manage the installation and testing process to ensure all health and safety guidelines are followed.

For more information, call Ken Bright or Harold Hartman at 545-3138.

AUSA raffle kicks off — The Chattahoochee — Fort Benning chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army kicked off its second annual car raffle.

Chapter members will sell raffle tickets for $1 each. The winner gets a 1998 Chevrolet S-10 pickup truck from Bill Heard.

AUSA chapter president Jerry White said the goal of the raffle is to sell enough tickets to send 50 Soldiers to the national convention from Oct. 12-14 in Washington D.C.

The drawing will be held at the annual fish fry at the Officers' Club Sept. 17.

For more information, call 545-3273.

Activities sign-up set — The Officers' Wives' Club (OWC) Fall Membership and Activities Sign-Up will be held 6 to 8 p.m. Aug. 27 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. Interested persons can sign up for the following classes: Spanish, computer, quilting, watercolor painting, bridge, stitching, bunco, cake decorating, tennis, golf and much more.

The OWC School of Performing Arts will also conduct a sign-up for children's dance, piano and gymnastic lessons.

In addition, the following local agencies will have representatives available: Enlisted Wives' Club, Columbus State and Troy State Universities, Daughters of the U.S. Army, ACS, AFTB, Youth Services, Vladimir Arts, Tot Town, Red Cross, Boy Scouts, Girls Scouts and many more.

For more information, call 689-1314.

OWC accepts welfare requests — The Officers' Wives' Club accepts welfare requests from private, non-profit organizations. To make a request for an organization, submit a request to the OWC Board by Sept. 1. The following information must be included with the request:

- Amount of money requested
- Total amount of money needed
- Specific purpose of money requested
- Fund raising effort
- Other organizations you are requesting funds from
- Number of military personnel or families affected
- Name and phone number of organizations point of contact

Submit requests to:

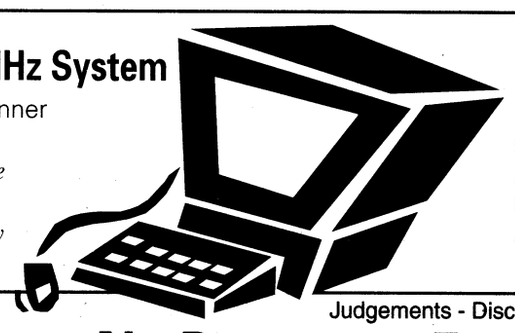
Hawaii requires microchip for pets — Hawaii requires all dogs and cats that enter the state to have an electronic microchip implant (issued by the state itself). Additionally, there is now an option for a 30-day quarantine (the only current option is 120-day quarantine) if several specific pre-requirements are met well in advance. If you have pets and anticipate a PCS to Hawaii within 6-12 months, call Veterinary Service at 545-4444 or 545-5690 for complete information at the earliest opportunity.

Casting company seeks extras — Cynthia F. Stillwell Casting is currently seeking extras for an upcoming film based on Alex Haley's last memoir.

Cast members will be paid a minimum of $66 a day and will be fed.

For more information, call (770) 599-4060.

Columbus offers free bus rides—The Columbus Health Department in collaboration with the Columbus Metra Bus System and Muscogee County School District offer free bus passes to the Columbus Health Department for children who need immunizations, school certificates, immunization records, hearing, vision and dental exams and have transportation problems.



Passes can be picked up from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Columbus Roberts Center at 539 Brown Avenue.

The health department will be open 8 a.m. until 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday and Aug. 24-26. The prices for immunizations will be $8 for a single dose and $10 for multiple antigens. The maximum amount for immunizations is $24.

For more information, call General Clinic at 321-6230.

Mary sacrifices to be with son

Phil Reilly
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Feast of the Assumption of Mary, observed Saturday, celebrates Mary's passage to heaven at the end of her life, a divine recognition of her fidelity and her role as the mother of the son of God.

reflections

Pope Pius XII defined the doctrine of the Assumption as a dogma of faith in the Catholic Church, on Nov. 1, 1950.

The scriptural basis for this belief is more indirect than for the dogmas of the Immaculate Conception, the virginity and holiness of Mary. It developed gradually out of the Catholic Church's life of prayer, Biblical reflection and sacraments. The general concept of "assumption" (taking up) is Biblical. The Hebrew scripture describes the assumption of Elijah (II Kings 2) and Jewish tradition supplies for Moses, Isaiah and other prophets.

The idea that Mary has been assumed is connected to her having stood in the presence of God, through the angel of the annunciation, through the Holy Spirit's descending to her and through her life with Jesus. But the principal theological reason for the assumption, as for all the other mysteries of Mary, is that she is the mother of Jesus, who is the son of God. Because of that fact, she was a virgin mother and was exempt from death, but accepted it in order to be, again, one with her divine son.

TRICARE services cover most school immunizations

TRICARE Clinical Preventive Services

Those lazy, hazy summer days are flying by, and school will start again soon. Now is the time to begin preparations for the children's return to school, and that includes planning for required school immunizations.

Each year, school children entering specified grades are required to have immunizations at the start of the school year. While immunization requirements may vary slightly from state to state, most of these immunizations will be covered by TRICARE under the Clinical Preventive Services benefit. Covered immunizations include diptheria, pertussis and tetanus (DPT), measles, mumps, chicken pox, rubella, polio and hepatitis B vaccines.

As a TRICARE Clinical Preventive Services benefit, these immunizations are available to all TRICARE beneficiaries in age-appropriate doses and at specified age intervals.

For TRICARE Prime Beneficiaries

The following guidelines apply for immunizations given as part of the TRICARE Prime Clinical Preventive Services Benefit:

•They are available to all Prime enrollees.

•They do not require an authorization.

•If performed by a network provider, they do not require a referral.

•If performed by a non-network provider, a referral is required.

•The immunizations must be administered in a physician's office.

If the patient goes to the doctor for the immunizations only, no copayment will be required at the time of service.

For TRICARE Extra and Standard Beneficiaries

•There is no preauthorization required.

•There may be cost shares associated with individual CHAMPUS services if they are the only service performed and completed in the physician's office.

The child's school should notify parents if the child is due to receive immunizations. If parents are notified, they should make an appointment right away with the child's doctor for the required immunizations, plus any other preventive services that may be due under the Clinical Preventive Services benefit.

For more information about the TRICARE Clinical Preventive Service, call (800) 444-5445.

BBB accepts, resolves complaints

Columbus Better Business Bureau

In a marketplace where billions of sales take place daily, some errors and misunderstandings are bound to occur. Familiarity with how the Better Business Bureau (BBB) accepts, processes and resolves complaints can be helpful to consumers who seek assistance in resolving disputes with businesses.

What the BBB tells consumers with complaints:

•Contact the company that sold the product or performed the service. Calmly and accurately describe the problem and what action is desired.

•Keep a record of efforts to resolve the problem, including names, dates and copies of correspondence. When writing to the company, describe the problem, what has been done so far to try to resolve it and the solution that is required. Allow reasonable time for the person contacted to satisfy the request.

•Contact the company's headquarters if the problem cannot be resolved at a local level. Send a letter of complaint to the company president, including your name, address, home or work phone number and account number, if applicable. Make the letter brief and to the point. Describe what has been done to try to resolve the problem and include copies of all related documents. Be reasonable, not angry or threatening in the letter. Send the letter by registered mail so there is proof that it was received and who signed for it.

•If ample time has been given to a company to resolve the problem and the complaint is still not satisfied, call the BBB if the complaint involves a marketplace activity. Consumers can also file a complaint online through the BBB website (www.bbb.org).

What happens when the BBB accepts a complaint:

•Complainants will be asked to provide name, address and phone number; describe the problem; and state what the company should do to resolve the situation. The BBB may request copies of receipts, warranties or other documentation.

•The BBB will act as a neutral third party to help the consumer and the company come to a satisfactory resolution of the problem. The consumer complaint will be forwarded to the company involved for a response.

•Because most business firms are concerned about satisfying their customers, complaints generally are resolved to the customer's satisfaction. In many cases, BBB dispute resolution, including mediation and arbitration, may be available to help resolve the dispute.

•Occasionally, the BBB will be unable to obtain cooperation from the company. Any pattern of unanswered or unresolved complaints will become a part of the BBB's report on that business firm. Contact the BBB for a reliability report on a business or company before making a major purchasing decision.

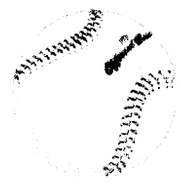
Rifle club conducts match — The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club will conduct a tactical rifle match from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Categories for the match will include Competitor, Bolt Action Precision and Semi-Auto Precision. Entry fee is $15 for preregistration or $20 the day of the match.

For more information, call 689-3371.

Volleyball tourney set — A sand volleyball tournament is scheduled for Aug. 29-30 behind Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

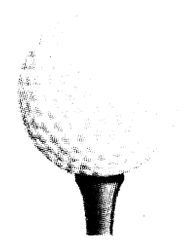
Teams should consist of five players (allowing one as a substitute). All players should be active duty military, family members, Department of Defense civilian employees or military retirees. Sign-up for the tournament will begin at 9 a.m. Aug. 29 and will end at 9:30 a.m.



For more information, call 545-5777.

Youth Services holds registration — Youth Services will hold registration for soccer, football and cheerleading from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. through Thursday at Building 1056.

Soccer sign-up is for children 4 to 15. Football and cheerleading is open to children 6-15.



For more information, call 545-3070.

EOO plans women's softball tourney — The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office, in coordination with the Sports Branch, Directorate of Community Activities, will host a Women's Equality Day Softball Tournament Aug. 22 at Gowdy Field.

The tournament is open to active duty females, retirees, family members 18 years and older and Department of Defense employees. Registration deadline is today.

For more information, call the EOO office at 545-3197.

Association sponsors tourney — The Ladies Professional Golf Association sponsors its Tournament of Champions at the Grand National Golf Course in Opelika Oct. 5 to 11.

Rookie phenomenon Se Ri Pak will join such veterans as Annika Sorenstam, Dottie Pepper, Liselotte Neuman, Pat Bradley and Nancy Lopez.

Soldiers, family members and Fort Benning Department of the Army civilians will be admitted free on Thursday and Friday of the event. Tournament officials seek volunteers to drive the players back and forth to the tournament site.

Volunteers will receive a free round of golf at the Robert Trent Jones golf course.

For more information, call the public affairs office at 545-2211.

U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

Walking plays important role in tactical operations

Ed Thomas
Troy State University — Fort Benning

Running still dominates the cardiovascular phase of most unit physical training (PT) programs, but the logic of walking is steadily gaining acceptance.

According to the Aerobics and Fitness Association of America (AFAA), 70 million people in the United States walk regularly. It is America's oldest and most popular fitness activity.

"Walking also plays an important role in tactical operations," said U. S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) Instructor and Writer Steve Van Camp. "Being able to run five miles does not always translate into the capacity to march twenty or more miles carrying a ruck and other equipment."

Often dismissed in the past as too easy to consider for serious PT, walking has gained new respect as recent research confirms its capacity to improve the body's ability to consume oxygen during exertion, increase heart and lung efficiency, burn calories, improve muscle tone and lower blood pressure. A 150-pound adult walking at 4 mph will burn around 350 calories per hour while avoiding the joint stress associated with jogging.

Walking can be divided into several categories. Race walkers usually employ the Olympic form. Speed walkers walk fast without using weights or the Olympic race walking form. Fitness walkers may walk fast or slow for health and fitness. There are also volkswalkers, hikers, backpackers, trekkers and bush walkers.

"The category that is probably most relevant to Army PT is power walking," said USAPFS Commandant Col. Stephen Cellucci. "Power walkers walk fast and often wear or carry weights."

Hand-held weights are commonly one to six pounds. Some can be worn as gloves and allow the hands to stay relaxed. Light ankle weights can also be used in addition to weight vests worn or attached to the body.

"A good weight vest will allow for a balanced front and back weight distribution," said USAPFS Training Support Officer Capt. Brenda Hughey. "They are worn close to the body and keep the load close to the center of gravity. It is also wise to choose a vest that allows for addition and reduction of weight. Some vests are adjustable from twenty to sixty or more pounds. There are also vests that are flat enough to be worn comfortably during the day under clothing "

"Good power walking posture and gait are essential," said USAPFS Physical Therapist Capt. Danny McMillian. "Keep the head erect, chin parallel to the ground, back straight, abdomen flat and toes pointed straight ahead."

It is also important, he added, to push off with the rear foot, as flatfooted walking is inefficient and unhealthy.

"In other words, land on the heel of the front foot and roll forward to drive off the ball of the rear," McMillian explained. "Take comfortable strides, swing the arms in a natural arc with the elbow back, look ahead and breathe naturally."

Dr. James Rippe of the University of Massachusetts has designed a one-mile walk test that evaluates aerobic fitness levels. Such tests help walkers choose the right pace and build a smart power walking program.

Improvements are made by gradually increasing duration and intensity.

"Walk at a brisk rate that allows you enough breath to carry on a conversation or even whistle," McMillian said.

"Increased walking speed will not burn significantly more calories, but it will increase heart rate and, more importantly, from a tactical perspective, save time," Hughey said.

"All Soldiers should be conditioned to walk quickly for long distances carrying a moderate to heavy load," Van Camp said. "Power walking is aimed in that direction, and it deserves a place in PT. It is a challenging, low impact activity that will pay dividends if and when a unit has to cover ground the old fashioned way."

For more information about weighted vests, hand and ankle weights or power walking courses, contact Troy State University Department of Kinesiology and Health Promotion at 685-9555.

USAMU team dominates interservice championships

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Rifle Team dominated the 37th annual Interservice Rifle Championship at Quantico, Va., July 22-28, winning 21 of a possible 36 individual awards.

More than 100 shooters from the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines, Coast Guard Reserves, National Guard and cadets competed in the interservice competition hosted by the Marine Corps Combat Development Command.

Emil Praslick III won the Interservice Individual Championship, followed by Grant L. Singley in second place and Kevin B. McMahon in third.

"This is my first year on the team, so it is obviously a big thrill for me," Praslick said. "I think that I just made fewer mistakes than the others. There were so many great shooters here, I feel that it could have been anyone's day.

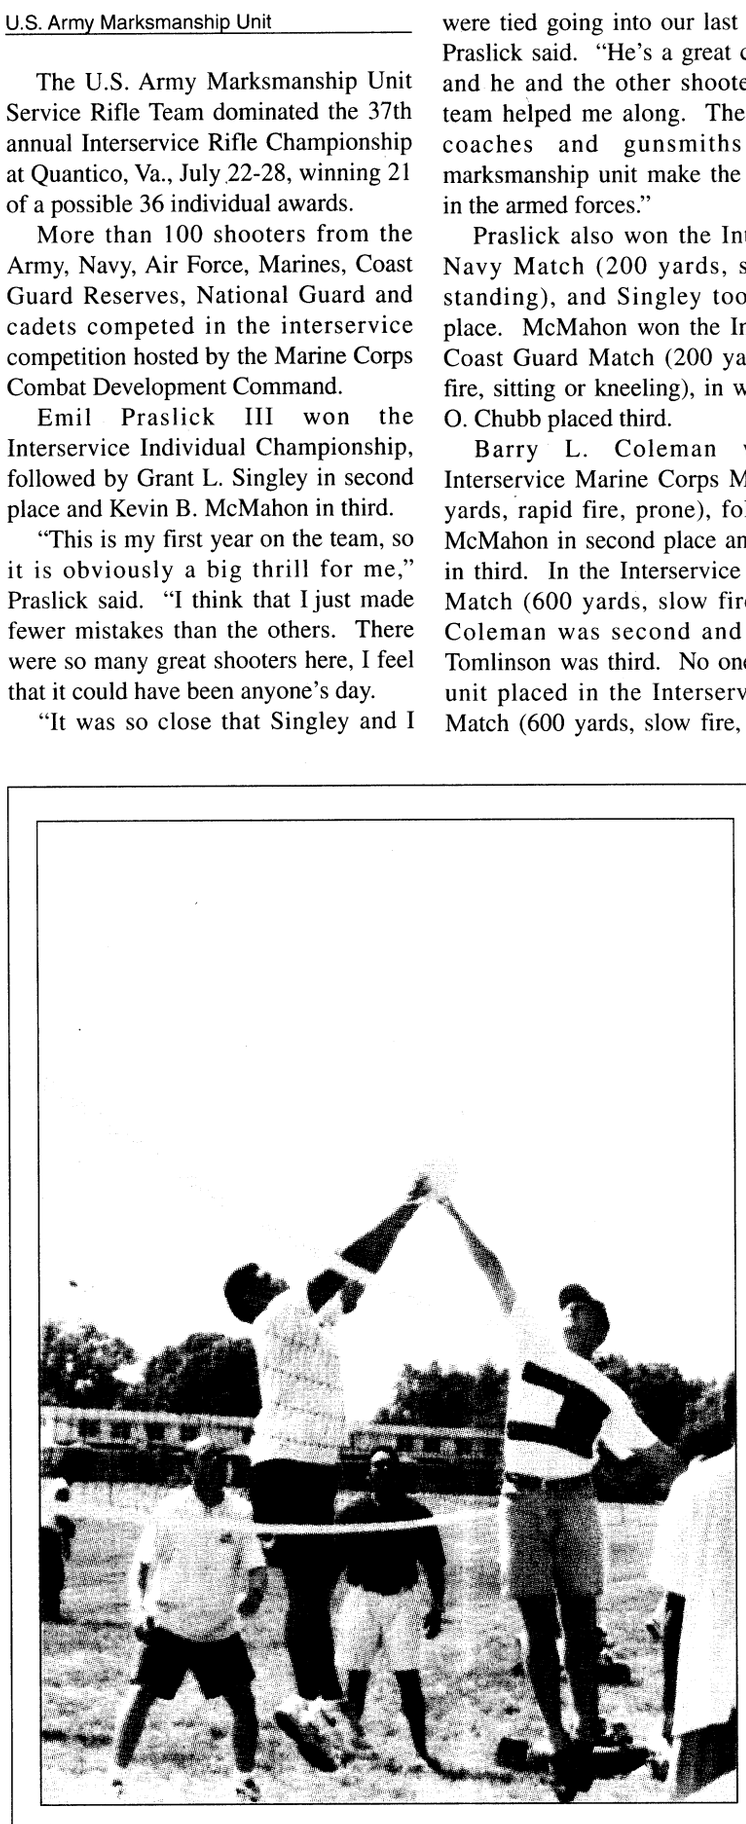
"It was so close that Singley and I were tied going into our last 20 shots," Praslick said. "He's a great competitor and he and the other shooters on my team helped me along. The shooters, coaches and gunsmiths of the marksmanship unit make the best team in the armed forces."

Praslick also won the Interservice Navy Match (200 yards, slow fire, standing), and Singley took second place. McMahon won the Interservice Coast Guard Match (200 yards, rapid fire, sitting or kneeling), in which John O. Chubb placed third.

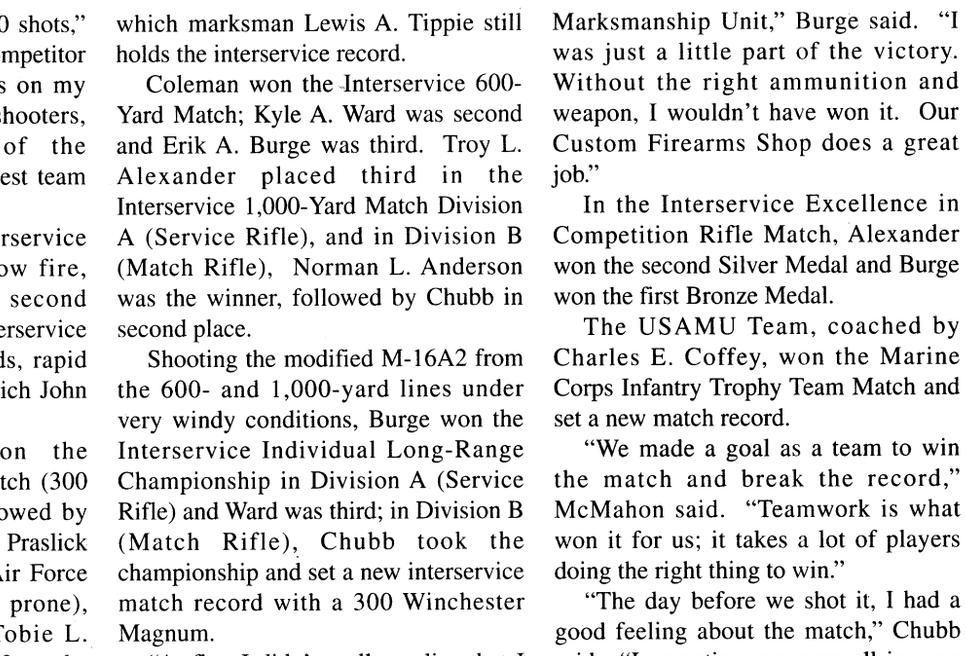
Barry L. Coleman won the Interservice Marine Corps Match (300 yards, rapid fire, prone), followed by McMahon in second place and Praslick in third. In the Interservice Air Force Match (600 yards, slow fire, prone), Coleman was second and Tobie L. Tomlinson was third. No one from the unit placed in the Interservice Army Match (600 yards, slow fire, prone), in which marksman Lewis A. Tippie still holds the interservice record.

Coleman won the Interservice 600-Yard Match; Kyle A. Ward was second and Erik A. Burge was third. Troy L. Alexander placed third in the Interservice 1,000-Yard Match Division A (Service Rifle), and in Division B (Match Rifle), Norman L. Anderson was the winner, followed by Chubb in second place.

Shooting the modified M-16A2 from the 600- and 1,000-yard lines under very windy conditions, Burge won the Interservice Individual Long-Range Championship in Division A (Service Rifle) and Ward was third; in Division B (Match Rifle), Chubb took the championship and set a new interservice match record with a 300 Winchester Magnum.



"At first I didn't really realize that I had won, but then I was very proud to bring the award home for the Army Marksmanship Unit," Burge said. "I was just a little part of the victory. Without the right ammunition and weapon, I wouldn't have won it. Our Custom Firearms Shop does a great job."



In the Interservice Excellence in Competition Rifle Match, Alexander won the second Silver Medal and Burge won the first Bronze Medal.

The USAMU Team, coached by Charles E. Coffey, won the Marine Corps Infantry Trophy Team Match and set a new match record.

"We made a goal as a team to win the match and break the record," McMahon said. "Teamwork is what won it for us; it takes a lot of players doing the right thing to win."

"The day before we shot it, I had a good feeling about the match," Chubb said. "In practice, we were all in sync and we all had good zeroes. And Coffey did a great job in coaching."

Summer fun

During a volleyball game, Soldiers (left) from 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment fight to get the ball over the net. Above, a Soldier tries to keep the soccer ball from one of his opponents. The sports activities were held as part of the battalion's organizational day Aug. 7. More than 200 Soldiers and family members turned out for the event which also included horseshoes, softball and a Military Police working dog demonstration.

Welcome Home

608th Soldiers return from Operation Joint Forge

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

The 608th Ordnance Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), welcomed 41 Soldiers back from Taszar, Hungary last week at the Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

The Soldiers, who left in early fall of 1997, were deployed in support of Operation Joint Forge, a stabilization force (SFOR) mission in Bosnia, which was recently extended indefinitely.

Although each Soldier performed different individual tasks, the overall mission in Hungary was to receive, issue, store and transport ammunition to SFOR troops in Bosnia.

The Soldiers were on call and available to work seven days a week, 24 hours a day.

"When a unit came in, the Soldiers would receive their turn in or issue equipment even if it was two in the morning," said 1st Sgt. Alexander R. Sumlin, 608th Ord. Co., who remained at Fort Benning.

One Soldier explained his daily activities.

"I made sure the ammunition was secure in the vehicles before transportation. It had to be stacked tightly so the ammunition would not shift," said Pvt. Troy Betts, 608th Ord. Co.

Now that their time in Hungary has come to an end, the Soldiers returned to where the mission first began — Fort Benning. Soldiers from the company were present at the gym to welcome them back to Fort Benning.

"We are happy to see them come home. Their absence put somewhat of a strain on our mission here at Fort Benning," Sumlin said. "Although we completed our duties with the Soldiers deployed, it was somewhat difficult performing our day to day tasks with 68 Soldiers away."

The Soldiers received good reviews by their superiors on the quality of the work they completed.

"I have heard only good things about the performance of the Soldiers while they conducted their duties overseas," Sumlin said.

"They have done a great job in Hungary," said Capt. Nathan Hunsinger, commander of the 608th Ord. Co. "We are happy to have them back."

Family members waited on the bleachers for the Soldiers to be released after Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst thanked the troops for a job well done.

"I feel great knowing he is finally home," said Noemi Ramos, sister of one of the Soldiers. "We used to spend a lot of quality time together, but he has been gone since October. It was really hard, especially around the holidays."

"Now we will be able to spend some time together with him being back home," she said.

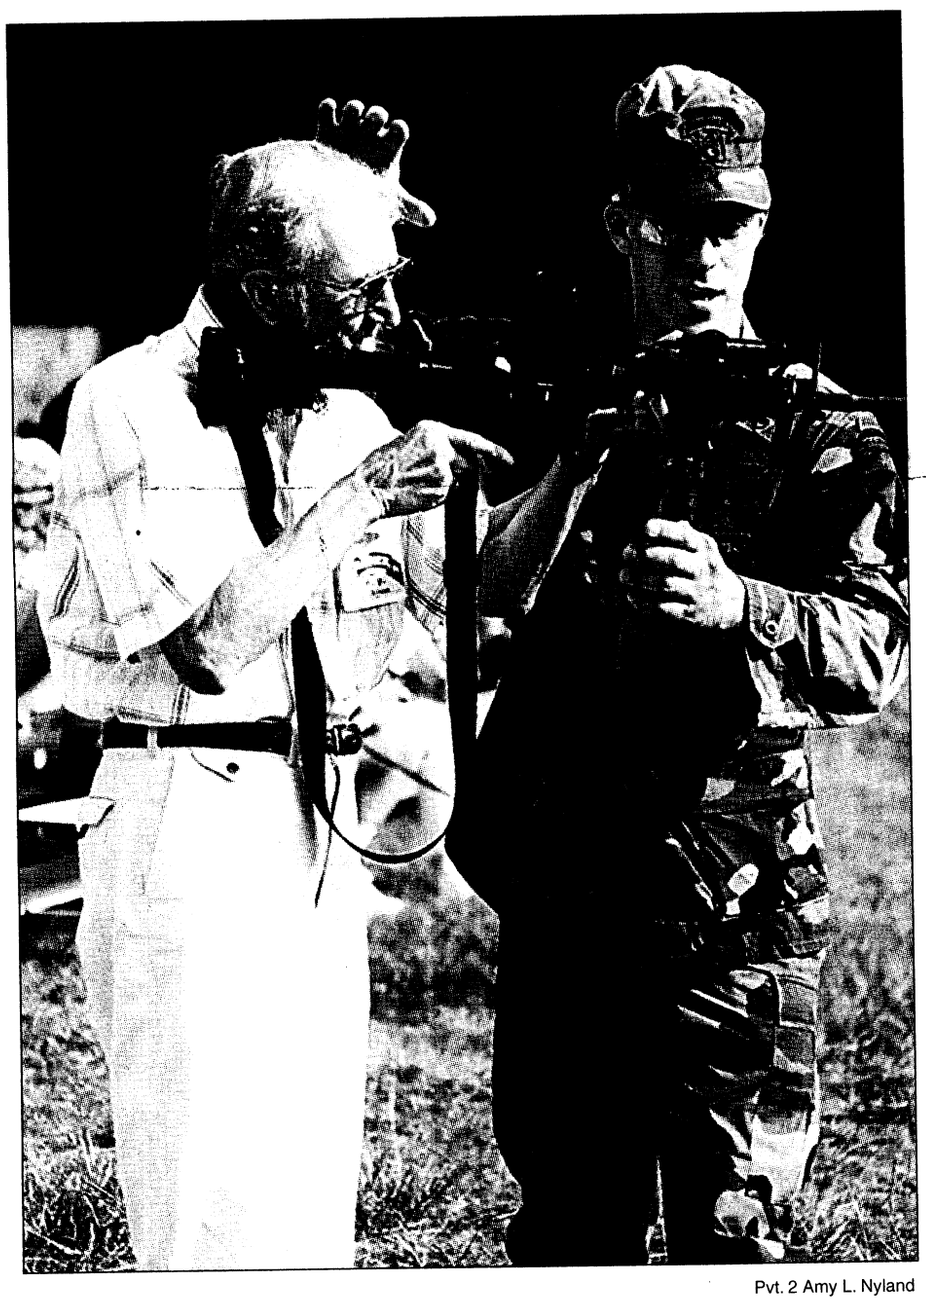
Although it was not physically possible for the Soldiers to be with their families, they did have the opportunity to phone loved-ones and see how things were back home.

"My husband called us about two to three times a week," said Annette McFadden. "He rarely mentioned their mission. He was more concerned about what we were doing, and we were always glad to hear from him."

Staff Sgt. Randolph McFadden, a platoon sergeant with the company, was also able to see his son walk and talk for the first time on his return.

"When my husband left, our son was only about a year old. He was only crawling then," said his wife. "Now he can walk and talk.

The Soldiers greeted their loved-ones with hugs and long awaited hellos in the center of the gymnasium after their release.



"It feels great to be home," McFadden said. "I will be able to enjoy the holidays with my family this year."

Some cried as they embraced following what Hunsinger referred to as an untraditionally long deployment.

Of the 68 originally deployed, 23 will follow in these Soldiers' footsteps in September.

"We have 23 Soldiers who have remained in Hungary to take care of the units' remaining duties," Hunsinger said. "Then they will return home also."

Rendezvous

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland

Staff Sgt. Jason Beal, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, teaches former ranger Michael G. Zifcak how to operate one of the weapons used during a demonstration Wednesday at Farnsworth Range.

The demonstration was held as part of the Ranger Rendezvous, which began Wednesday and ends today.

More than 1,000 former and current rangers participated in the festivities which included various weapons and tactics demonstrations.

Ten former rangers were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame Thursday during a ceremony at the Ranger Memorial.

Women's committee hosts 'employee week' workshops

Federal Women's Program Committee

The Federal Employees' Week, sponsored by the Fort Benning Federal Women's Program Committee, will host workshops 9 to 11 a.m. Monday through Friday in Infantry Hall, Classroom 9.

According to Winnie Torain, Federal Women's Program Manager , "The week is designed to help all employees and not just women with employment related issues that are important to them. The workshops are designed to provide both personal and professional development."

Practical Suggestions for Healthy Living, set for Monday, is a workshop aimed at encouraging proper nutrition, exercise and weight control. Capt. Colleen Burns, Chief, Nutrition Care Division, Martin Army Community Hospital, will facilitate the workshop. "A healthy employee is a more productive employee. Everyone is encouraged to participate in this session," Torain said.

Marketing Your Skills Successfully is a workshop designed to arm employees with steps on how to prepare a resume. Workshop attendees will learn how to market employment experiences and describe skills and abilities, on Tuesday. Harold Ericksen, Army Career Alumni Program (ACAP), Office of the Adjutant General will be the facilitator for the workshop.

Lions, Tigers and Fears: Personal Protection is the workshop set for Wednesday. The seminar is designed to heighten awareness of one's environment for safety, self-defense and personal protection. Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, Military Police Activity, will facilitate this workshop.

The Money Mystique and Financial Planning session is set for Thursday. Workshop participants can explore the reasons for budgeting and saving money. Participants can discuss how to get assistance for financial planning. Ann Pratcher, Army Community Services, Directorate of Community Activities will facilitate this workshop.

The role of the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center, a workshop designed to help civilian employees identify the differences between the role of Civilian Personnel Advisory Center (CPAC) and Civilian Personnel Operating Center (CPOC) will be held Friday. Stephanie Carpenter from the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center will facilitate this workshop.

"Federal Employees' Week workshops offer a "win-win" situation for both employees and management," Torain explained. Due to Department of Defense budget cuts, training dollars are scarce.

"All workshop facilitators are professionals within their respective areas of expertise. Since they are also employed at Fort Benning, their training services are offered free to the government," Torain explained.

All Soldiers to receive anthrax vaccine

Army News Service

Over the next several years, the Army will vaccinate every Soldier against anthrax, currently considered to be the top biological warfare threat to the U.S. military.

Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen recently directed the military to proceed with the previously publicized plan to vaccinate all active duty personnel and selected reserves with the anthrax vaccine.

"It would be irresponsible to jeopardize Soldiers' lives when we know there is a real threat, and we have a safe vaccine," said Army Surgeon General Lt. Gen. Ronald R. Blanck.

Rear Adm. Michael Cowan, deputy director for medical readiness at the Joint Staff, called anthrax "the poor man's atomic bomb" and said the vaccination would take the weapon out of an aggressor's arsenal. Cowan added that anthrax is nearly always fatal after exposure.

While Fort Benning troops who deployed to high-threat areas of the Middle East earlier this year have already begun the series of Anthrax immunizations, remaining Soldiers on post will begin receiving the vaccination.

"We have already started with FORSCOM (U.S. Forces Command) and other units likely to deploy," said Maj. William Corr, preventive medicine OIC for Martin Army Community Hospital. "We are currently working on a schedule to rotate units in for the immunization. Our overall plan is to vaccinate every Soldier on post within the next three to four years."

The federal Food and Drug Administration licensed the anthrax vaccine in 1970 and has safely administered it to veterinarians, laboratory workers and livestock handlers for almost 30 years.

It contains no living or dead anthrax organisms; it is a sterile product made from a strain of the anthrax organism that does not cause disease.

The vaccination program is a series of six shots administered over an 18-month period. Annual boosters of the vaccine are needed to maintain immunity.

Because it takes 18 months to administer the full round of shots, and because of personnel turnover and mobility, the Army estimates a seven- to eight-year period to vaccinate all personnel.

The immunizations are mandatory for all military personnel except for those who are:

- Under 18 or over 65 years-of-age;
- Pregnant;
- HIV-positive;
- Have a history of severe adverse reaction to the anthrax vaccine.

All 16 Soldiers who have refused getting the shots to date have received nonjudicial punishment.

"We consider service members getting the shot in the same way we tell them to wear their helmets," said Cowan, who added that DoD is currently looking at vaccinations against other possible agents.

"Our overarching policy is, if we recognize a threat and a safe vaccine exists to combat it, then we should use it," he said.

For more information on DoD's immunization program, visit these Worldwide Web sites: www.defenselink.mil/other_info/protection.html or www.armymedicine.army.mil.

WOMEN'S EQUALITY DAY

Pioneers provide inspiration to achieve

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

After taking a look around at today's society, it is hard to believe that once upon a time women had about the same, if not less rights as the household pet.

commentary

I still remember spazzing out in sixth grade history class when we learned that one clever piece of American legislation actually said women had no property rights and could not even enter into business ventures. I thought it was a joke, but the sad thing is, it wasn't.

An even sadder fact is that it took more than 70 years after the beginning of the women's rights movement for women to be granted the right to vote. That's pretty hard core. What would have happened if our ancestors would have given up after say 20 years? I don't know what the U.S. would be like now, but I think it would be safe to say I wouldn't be here in an Army uniform.

Although I may occasionally stress out over work and my other responsibilities, I would still take waking up at 5 a.m. every morning to deal with the other insane members of The Bayonet 99.999 percent of the time because this is what I choose to do.

For even having the choice, I thank the Susan B. Anthonys and Elizabeth Cady Stantons who fought for our rights when all the odds were against them.

I cannot even comprehend what it was like for the pioneers of the women's movement.

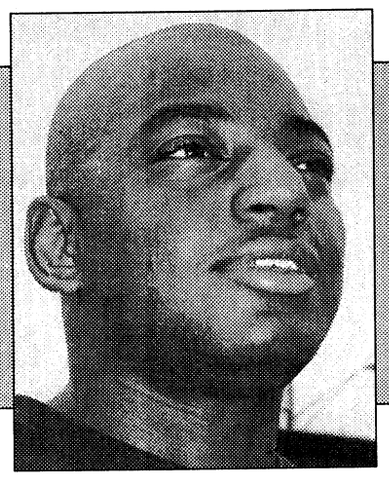
I mean, take a look around — we're everywhere. Women are kicking behinds and taking names. I wouldn't be surprised if one day in the not so far away future, a female type landed herself in the plush, leather chair of the Oval Office (Okay, I'll save that tale for my inaugural address).

While I was growing up, no one ever said I couldn't be an astronaut or join the Army. No matter how ridiculous or far-fetched my ideas were, no one ever said you can't do that because you're a woman — even when I wanted to join the NBA (I used to be a lot taller).

Having received an opportunity to travel to different countries during the four years of my military career, I have witnessed first hand the fact that we should never take anything including our rights for granted.

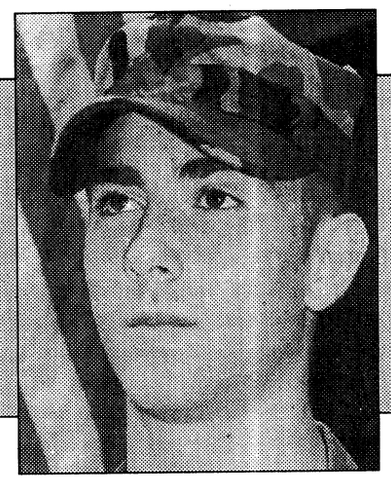
I remember the stares I received from foreign troops who could not believe women were actually allowed in the military.

Men and women are equal here (for the most part), but in some countries, women cannot even go out in public or they have a dress code they must adhere to.



Could you image having to ask permission to go somewhere or not having a choice about what you would be doing for the rest of your life?

While there will always be those ignorant few who still make chauvinistic remarks about females, women today are exploring their career options and being allowed into more fields than ever before.



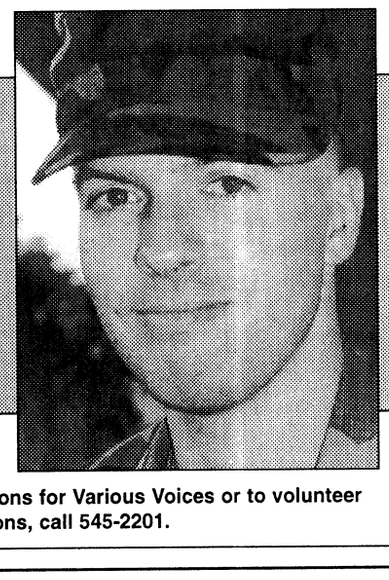
Whenever I feel like I've lived through enough strife for my lifetime, I take a moment to think about those who fought for all those years for equal rights. And we owe it to them to work to our full potential and take advantage of the simple things that they were not able to do 100 years ago like vote.

VARIOUS VOICES

What do you feel is the best accomplishment for equal opportunity?

Spc. Joshua Littles, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "It provides higher opportunities for employment and advancement."

Spc. Jesse Dykman, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. — "Equal opportunity provides the acceptance of independent and strong-willed women."



Bernadette Mckenzie, 10, family member — "The best accomplishment has been to open the military to women."

2nd Lt. Matt Millar, 988th Military Police Company. — "The greatest accomplishment is the right for 18-year-olds to vote."

Donna Lowe, family member, Columbus, — "The biggest accomplishment allowed employment doors to open."

Spc. Sean Campbell, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "An equal pay scale has been the best accomplishment."

Camp director thanks Soldiers for volunteering

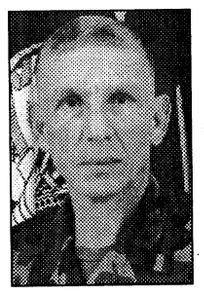
This letter is for all Fort Benning Soldiers who participated in the Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA) "Camp Walk N' Roll" as counselors this past month.

Words cannot begin to express the gratitude we all feel at MDA for the fantastic role each and every one of you fulfilled at the camp last week.

Each child was able to receive the gifts of love, attention, adventure and fun from each and every one of you.

As the director of the camp, my heart just fills with joy as I think back and see the smiles on the kids' faces and all the laughs you all had together.

You truly did become the 'arms and legs' for most of the campers and allowed them to fulfill their summer camp dream.



Again, thank you from myself, Peggy Hood, the MDA staff and MDA nationally.

Now, please get plenty of rest so we can see you all again next year.

And remember ... 'Here, lizard, lizard, lizard ...'

—Joanie Rosenbaum
MDA Camp Director

Nation celebrates Equality Day, recognizes women's efforts

This year, Women's Equality Day celebrates the 78th Anniversary of the 19th Amendment. The right to vote is a precious privilege which should not be taken lightly. The entire governmental process is enhanced by men and women who cast their votes. Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity for Soldiers and civilians at Fort Benning to acknowledge their responsibilities to vote and to recognize the continuing efforts toward women's equality for all Americans.

From its radical beginning in 1848 during the Women's Rights Conventions in Seneca Falls, the suffrage movement was a long uphill battle for courageous women like Elizabeth Cady Stanton who drafted the Declaration of Sentiments. The declaration listed the legal disadvantages of women and became the catalyst for future Suffrage Conventions.

From 1870 to 1910, there were 480 attempts across the nation to pass legislation, resulting in only 27 state votes, of which only two were successful. Then on Aug. 26, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the 19th Amendment making it constitutional right for women.

It wasn't until Aug. 26, 1973, that the President of the United States designated Women's Equality Day, denoting the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution reminding us of women's continuing efforts toward equality in all spheres of our society.

The 19th Amendment provides everyone a chance to honor the work of Stanton and others who worked so hard to gain the right to vote. By observing this celebration and casting our vote, we ensure that the fight for equality continues.

—Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding General

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller said there should be a range available to fire privately owned weapons. He said a lot of people would prefer not to pay to join a club.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

It was explained that to designate a military range for individuals to fire their weapons, incur the costs to maintain it and provide safety personnel to operate it. With the cutback in funding, this would be a luxury the installation presently could not afford. The post did have a skeet range open for about a year, but because of very low usage, it was closed. The caller was informed that the Rifle & Pistol Club offers non-member two free half-days each year for zeroing their weapons before hunting season opens.

Call: Caller wanted to know why it takes six months to become a child care giver.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

The Director of Family Child Care, explained that background clearances, class time, inspections, etc., were the reasons for the six-month wait. Required personnel will be available to conduct classes and training in FY 99.

Call: A parent said she was informed that School Age Services would no longer provide breakfast and a snack for the children attending the day care centers when school resumes.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

The School Age Services (SAS) Coordinator informed the caller that the notice she had received concerning the end of the food program in SAS was premature. She said that several proposals were presented to the Command Group regarding SAS fees and changes. However, no decisions have been made. A breakfast program will be offered. When changes are approved, SAS personnel will notify parents.

Soldiers volunteer for MDA camp

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For the 62 Soldiers from Fort Benning who volunteered to spend Aug. 8-14 as counselors at the Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA) Camp in Atlanta, the experience may have made them thankful for many of the small things in life.

Whether it's walking, skipping, playing or just enjoying the beauty of the outdoors, Soldiers got a chance to see life through the eyes of a child who may not have experienced any of those in his or her lifetime.

The Soldiers from Fort Benning, along with a group of civilians from various parts of Georgia, showed 110 campers with Muscular Dystrophy the time of their lives and discovered the benefits of being there for someone else.

According to Spc. Michael Bieller, president of Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers (BOSS) and volunteer coordinator, many of the Soldiers didn't know what they were getting themselves into when they volunteered.

Most of the children who attended the camp had severe forms of Muscular Dystrophy and presently may not live past young adulthood, Bieller said.

Counselors were there to meet the needs of the campers, to help them with everything from dressing and feeding to bathing.

"This was a one of a kind experience," Bieller said. "It definitely helped open a lot of people's eyes. I think it made them grateful that they have two legs to walk on and they have the ability to do whatever they want."

The counselors found out in a hurry that even though there were special circumstances to deal with, the daily adventures of a normal summer camp still applied. From horseback riding and boating to archery and fishing, the children experienced every aspect of what a summer camp should be.

As part of the festivities, counselors and campers also donned their creative coats and performed in a talent show and hula contest.

Bieller said the main objective was to just show the kids a fun time, to let them experience things they have never or may never again get the chance to experience.

"It doesn't matter how we did it," Bieller said. "I held a bow and arrow for a boy while someone pulled back his wheelchair and he squeezed the trigger. That was the whole idea, to give these kids an opportunity to do something they never thought they could do."

Bieller said the camp was a great time for Soldiers because they were able to share so much with the children, but also receive something in return.

"I think each individual really got something out of this," Bieller said. "Everyone bonded as a family and it didn't matter if you were male or female, everyone was there for a purpose."

"Everyone made a friend and there were a lot of tears when we left," he said.

Sgt. Dan Wilkinson, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, said volunteering for the camp was an experience he will never forget.

Wilkinson said he thinks the camp helped change everyone's perspectives.

"If you think you have problems, you find out fast that you have none compared to what these children have to go through," Wilkinson said. "I think a lot of us have come back changed people. I don't think anyone of us will be ashamed to be associated with someone who is handicapped. I know I definitely have much more respect for those individuals."

Wilkinson said he still keeps in contact with his campers through letters and thinks it's great that he could be there for a child.

"It was such an upbeat experience knowing that I helped make a child's life a little happier," Wilkinson said.

According to Bieller, Fort Benning Soldiers have been volunteering at the camp for the past two years.

"Numerous people have said that the Soldiers did great," Bieller said. "I think it reflects well on Fort Benning when Soldiers are willing to volunteer and make an impact on someone else's life."

Equality Day luncheon set

Equal Opportunity Office

"A Story of Past Voices...Future Journey," is the theme for the Women's Equality Day luncheon at 11:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Fort Benning Officer's Club.

Retired Brig. Gen. Wilma L. Vaught, United States Air Force, will be the guest speaker.

Tickets for the luncheon cost $6.25 and may be purchased from committee members, brigade equal opportunity advisors or the Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office. Ticket deadline is July 24. For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Ernest Jett at 545-3197 or 545-6665.

Vaught is the President of the Women In Military Service for America Memorial Foundation, Inc. During her last military assignment, she served as Commander, U.S. Military Entrance Processing Command, North Chicago, Ill., where she served from June 1982 until her retirement in August, 1985.

Vaught earned a bachelor of science degree from the University of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana and earned a Master of Business Administration degree, from the University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa. She also received a Honorary Doctorate of Public Affairs from Columbia College, S.C., in 1991.

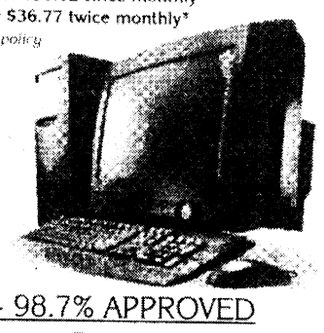
She served as Chairperson of the NATO women in the Allied Forces Committee from 1983 to 1985 and was the senior female military representative to the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the services from 1982 to 1985.

Her numerous military decorations and awards include both the Defense and Air Force Distinguished Service Medals, Air Force Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Joint Service Commendation Medal, Air Force Commendation Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, as well as several unit and service awards.

in memoriam

Lt. Col. Horst Langer, German Liaison Officer to the U.S. Army Infantry School, died Aug. 13 afternoon as a result of a parachute accident.

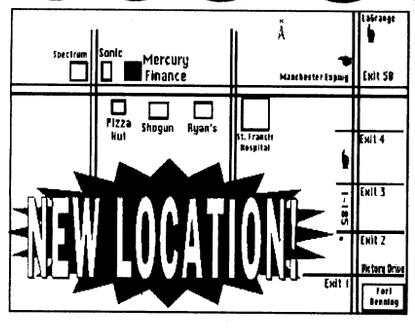
The 46-year-old officer was making a routine jump from a UH60 Blackhawk helicopter with Pathfinder School students when the accident occurred. Langer was not a student, but was jumping to maintain proficiency.



Witnesses said that after exiting the aircraft, Langer drifted towards a woodline, landing in a tree. While trying to climb down, a branch broke and he fell to the ground, some 25 to 30 feet. He was rushed to Martin Army Community Hospital by helicopter medevac and died shortly afterwards.

The accident occurred shortly after 2 p.m. on Arkman Drop Zone located in the southeast section of Fort Benning.

Langer had served in the German Army since 1971. He is survived by his wife Rosemarie and three children.



Pvt. Robert J. Weckesser died at 3 p.m. Aug 1. in Grady Memorial Hospital, Atlanta. The cause of death was a lightning strike which occurred July 30. During the last few days of his life, Weckesser was surrounded by his family and loved ones. A memorial service was held Aug. 5 at the Regimental Chapel on Sand Hill to honor him. His remains were laid to rest in Arlington National Cemetery the following day. He was a member of Company B, 1st Battalion, 12th Infantry Regiment on Sand Hill. The remainder of the training cycle will be dedicated in his memory.

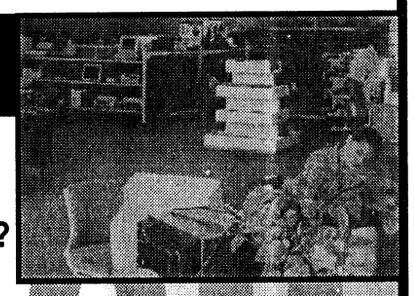
Soldiers should record experiences

Army Career and Alumni Program

Transitioning Soldiers may need to document military experiences, qualifications, work history, training, education and achievements as they enter the civilian job market. Preparation of a resume is a routine method for a job seeker to present his or her professional history to potential employers.

According to Chick Eagle, Army Career and Alumni Program Counselor, one very convenient source available, free of charge, to help with translating military occupational skills (MOS) for resume preparation is the DD Form 2586, Verification of Military Experience and Training (VMET).

The Department of Defense issues a DD Form 2586 VMET report to each separating Soldier.



The VMET report is created from automated Army records on file and includes military job assignments, training programs with recommended college credits and civilian job titles that relate to specific MOSs.

Separating Soldiers should automatically receive the VMET report no later than 120 days before the separation or retirement date. It is recommended that each separating Soldier call the VMET office to check the status of the automatic system as early as possible during transition. In order to make sure the report will be sent to the correct address and in a timely manner, it is a good idea to contact the VMET office to confirm the mailing address. CONUS based Army personnel can reach the VMET office at (800) 258-VMET.

"Soldiers who have received their VMET report are encouraged to bring it to ACAP pre-separation briefings, workshops and counseling sessions. This useful tool is provided to separating Soldiers as an entitlement that can help in the transition back to the civilian workforce," Eagle said.

To inquire about the VMET and other ACAP services, visit the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Video offers tips for promotion

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Staff sergeants who want to earn another 'rocker' under their chevrons, senior noncommissioned officers or Soldiers of any rank, should know about an Army video tape.

The video, "Understanding the Centralized Promotion Process," sponsored by the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel (DCSPER) is available at Army visual information libraries in the continental U.S. and overseas.

By checking out and watching the 17-minute video, Army personnel officials said troops can discover how members of Department of the Army centralized promotion boards select Soldiers to become senior NCOs.

The video features Maj. Gen. Arthur T. Dean, who was DCSPER's Director of Military Personnel Management at the time the video was made, and Sgt. Maj. Larry L. Strickland, the DCSPER sergeant major.

"After discussions with a number of sergeants major and reading several of their trip reports, it has become evident to me that one of the most misunderstood areas of the Army's Enlisted Personnel Management System is the centralized promotion process," Strickland said on the video. "This video is intended to eliminate this misunderstanding.

"The video explains the steps that precede the convening of a promotion board, what occurs when individual panel members consider your record, and how selection lists are approved and published," he said.

Best-qualified and fully qualified enlisted Soldiers who compete for senior NCOs rank under the centralized system are promoted according to how many vacancies the Army has at the time, Strickland said. Those vacancies fluctuate according to budget, mission requirements, and other factors, he said.

The U.S. Total Army Personnel Command determines how many Soldiers are needed for each military occupational specialty to fill future needs, and recommends the number of promotions needed in each skill to replace losses, according to the video.

Army schools, such as the U.S. Army Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga., and the Armor School at Fort Knox, Ky., submit personnel data to PERSCOM analysts, who use the information to arrive at the select objective, or target promotion numbers for each MOS, according to the video.

USARSA selects honorees

U.S. Army School of the Americas

Lt. Col. Jorge Celiz of the Peruvian Army, was selected as the Officer Instructor of the Quarter for the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Celiz, a 19-year veteran of the Peruvian military, has been working with the school's Department of Joint and Combined Operations since February 1997. He is currently a Division Tactics Instructor.

Sharing honors with Celiz is 1st Sgt. Oscar Mendoza, who was selected as the school's NCO Instructor of the Quarter.

Mendoza is a 16-year veteran of the El Salvadoran Army and has been with USARSA's Company B since January 1997. He is currently a Special Operations instructor.

Silver Wings soar during military exposition

Sgt. Susanne Aspley
Bayonet correspondent

In a display of competence and skill, the paratroopers of Fort Benning's command exhibition parachute team, the Silver Wings, brought out the oohs and aahs of the crowd.

The eight-member team recently traveled north to Minneapolis to participate in the annual Minnesota Military Expo held at Fort Snelling, Minn.

Rich in Civil War history and now headquarters to the 88th Reserve Support Command (RSC), Minnesota annually celebrates the nation's military accomplishments and capabilities by inviting the public to see a wide range of exhibitions.

Staff Sgt. Tommy Sullivan, an airborne instructor with the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, has been on the team for three years and said an important mission of the Silver Wings is to show young people in the crowd the opportunities found in today's Army.

"We also support the DARE program, which attempts to keep kids away from drugs," he said. "The kids see that they can get their thrills in the Army, instead of doing drugs."

During each of the team's four demonstrations over the weekend, the six parachutists boarded a Chinook helicopter and floated to a height of about 12,000 feet. Sgt. 1st Class Craig Colberg, liaison NCO for the airborne battalion, remained on the ground to narrate and answer questions throughout the event.

Sgt. Celia Elliot, an airborne instructor and team rigger, was responsible for ground control. Throughout the performance, her mission was to keep in constant radio contact with the helicopter pilot to coordinate the jump. According to Elliot, safety is always the highest priority.

According to Colberg, 10 to 12 seconds after exiting the aircraft, the jumpers reach terminal velocity. At this point, he said they fall at a rate of 125 mph or 175 feet per second.

After breaking into a 'stack out' position, the team each deployed their Infantry blue canopies and sailed to the ground. Colberg said the stack formation allows each jumper to land and move out of the way of the next jumper to land in the target area.

Colberg also explained to the audience that the parachutes the team use are extremely maneuverable.

For every one foot the canopy descends in altitude, it will move forward three feet, he said. Nicknamed the 'square', the chute enables the jumper precise and controlled landing in the target area.

Sgt. 1st Class Peter Cullbreath, an airborne instructor, has been with the team for five of his 18 years in the service. He explained that all members were selected for this additional duty.

"We are like a big family now," he said.

Staff Sgt. Talmadge Hunter has been on the team for nearly two years and said he would like to continue to serve on the team.

"People read a lot about what is wrong with the Army. So by doing these demonstrations, we show the positive side."

Soldiers rise to challenge during RFPI

1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

Even though the Rapid Force Projection Initiative (RFPI) brought more than 1,800 Soldiers from installations across the U.S. to Fort Benning, the post's own 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment played a central role as the exercise's opposing force (OPFOR).

While the unit is known for operating Bradley Fighting Vehicles (BFV) and training mechanized Infantry Soldiers, the Pioneer Battalion took to the field from July 27 through Aug. 8 as a Soviet-style mechanized battalion.

During the exercise, the battalion took on elements of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) from Fort Campbell, Ky., in both virtual and live force-on-force exercises.

"The RFPI was a great opportunity for 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. to train on both individual and leader skills as well as collective tasks, which is training that we normally don't get to do within our school support mission," said Maj. John Hannah, the battalion's executive officer. "In the period of about one and a half months, we have created a functioning task force that included 28 Bradleys (BFVs) and the entire 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. chain of command." Hannah said the force also included Soldiers from 4th Platoon of the 988th Military Police Company and tank elements from Troop A, 3rd Squadron, 7th Cavalry, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

Throughout the course of the exercise, the Soldiers of 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. faced numerous challenges.

"We had many concerns leading into the RFPI," noted Captain Dave Taylor, the battalion's operations officer. "Our primary concern was bringing together elements that had not worked together previously in a safe and organized manner," he said.

Other challenges the unit faced included dusty conditions that gave gave Soldiers zero visibility during movements and night operations.

"Essentially, we moved our unit the equivalent of the mileage typically put in during a rotation at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., without injury or accident," Taylor observed.

Throughout the course of the exercise, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. Soldiers impressed leaders from across Fort Benning as well as visiting leaders for their aggressiveness, professionalism, and motivation.

"I think everyone was a little surprised that we brought everyone together so quickly as a team," stated Lt. Col. Jerry Reyes, the battalion's commander. "I know the quality of our leaders and Soldiers, and I knew that we could rise to the task."

Reyes also noted, "We had great teamwork and support from the MPs and the 3rd Sqd., 7th Cav. (Fort Stewart). We couldn't have completed the mission without them."

Engineers upgrade roads, restore Good Hope

63rd Eng. Co., 36th Eng. Grp.

From July 24-31, 1st Platoon, 63rd Engineer Company (CSE) upgraded two and a half miles of Good Hope Road from Jamestown Road to Blue Ridge Road.

The platoon moved more than 1,400 tons of blast rock and more than 300 tons of dirt to upgrade the road.

According to Sgt. 1st Class David Poindexter, 1st platoon, 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), before the platoon upgraded the road, it was totally unpassable by wheeled traffic.

"There were two- to-three-foot ruts in the road and one culvert was totally exposed from the road surface," Poindexter said.

Within two days, the platoon had made the road accessible to traffic and had fixed the culvert. It took another two days to reestablish drainage and compact the road.

When the road was complete, Poindexter said the platoon saved Fort Benning more than $38,000.

In the future, Good Hope Road will be used as the major entrance and exit to Arkman Drop Zone.

Helicopter crews receive aid from town residents

Staff Sgt. Wayne V. Hall
MDW News Service

Serving in the Army sometimes takes Soldiers to faraway places where few others travel.

For a group of Soldiers from Company C, 12th Aviation Battalion, their assignment recently took them to a place not-so-far away, but somewhat off the beaten path.

Two of the unit's UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters were on a return flight from a mission in Norfolk, Va., on July 21, when one of the helicopters experienced trouble somewhere over Middlesex County.

"We were flying home when a chip light went off," said crew chief Spc. Richard R. Doermann. "The appropriate emergency procedure is to set the helicopter down as soon as possible."

As fate would have it, the closest place to set the aircraft down turned out to be a soybean field, about three miles outside of Urbanna, near the intersection of Virginia routes 33 and 629, an area known as Cook's Corner.

Shortly after the helicopters landed, they were met by the property owner John Gayle Anderton who, as the crew recalled, was more concerned with the safety of the crew than his crops.

Much like any small, rural American community, news travels quite rapidly, and it wasn't long before the helicopters' presence began attracting the attention of the local townspeople.

Nestled along the Chesapeake Bay, Urbanna is not a major city. Some would consider it small for a town.

The community is rural, and its surrounding communities are home to some 9,000 full-time residents and a lot of retired military, according to Tom Hardin, editor of the Southside Sentinel , the local newspaper.

By late afternoon, the crew had determined that the impending by-pass button had popped and that the helicopter would need a new filter before it could make the journey home, according to Doermann.

Since they didn't have another filter, or the tools required to replace it, the second helicopter continued onto Davidson Army Airfield, from where it would be able to launch a maintenance recovery operation. Additionally, this meant the crew would be spending the night on the ground.

"If you're going to have to make a precautionary landing, that's the place to go. The people were super," said Chief Warrant Officer 4 Chuck Berry. "I've had to make numerous PL's, but never in a place with this kind of hospitality.

"People kept coming up and offering us the use of their cellular phones. They would just say the same thing: 'If you need my phone, here it is just leave it with the sheriff when you leave,'" Berry said.

"The hospitality was amazing," said Chief Warrant Officer 2 Joe Callaway. "If you were to land here in the city, people wouldn't give a hoot compared to a smaller community, where people have hospitality.

"There is still some real American hospitality, it reminds you of what you're actually out here for," Callaway said. "Hopefully, we've left a good impression on their lives and helped them to respect the military and understand what we're here for."

"It was late in the evening, I was off work but had come back to the office to do some work. Someone came into the office and said that a helicopter had gone down in the Cook's Corner area, and someone asked for the Sheriff to come down," recalled Weldon Dandridge, Middlesex County Sheriff.

"That evening, the Sheriff's dispatcher was overwhelmed with calls about the helicopter. A lot of people were curious, some even passed by on their way home from work, and brought their kids back later to see the helicopter," Dandridge added.

"I wouldn't be surprised if all 500 people from the town were out there to see the helicopter," said Doermann, adding that in his two years in the Army he has never experienced anything like this. "Everybody was great. The kids were really excited, and they loved getting inside the helicopter."

The sheriff's office assisted the crew every way it could, whether it was providing transportation, ice and water or assisting with a roving patrol overnight to ensure that the helicopter was OK.

A maintenance team arrived the next day, and much to the crew's surprise, the Middlesex County Correctional Facility sent out ice, water and food to help the Soldiers while they readied the aircraft for takeoff.

"One of the older people who stopped by said that during World War II, a flight of six Corsairs set down in the very same soybean field.

"The people were all great, they didn't have to do anything, but they did," Berry said. "One local convenience store even sent free coffee."

They say that all good things must come to an end. Around 2:30 p.m. July 22, the helicopter lifted off and headed back to its home at Davidson Army Airfield.

Soldiers often fondly recall their tours and visits to faraway places. However, this experience has shown a few that it's not exactly where you go or how long you stay, but the people and experience you take away with you that matter.

"This is something that I'll remember for a long time," said Doermann, adding that he and other members of the crew may even go back and visit someday. This time on purpose.

Army medics provide aid to bombing victims

Harry Noyes
Army News Service

Army Medical Department personnel were among the international team of rescuers and healers that leaped into action to help local agencies cope with casualties from the Aug. 7 bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Nairobi, Kenya.

The bombing killed some 250 people, including a dozen Americans, and wounded more than 1,600. Despite response from Kenyan medical personnel, Soldiers and ordinary citizens who labored to help victims, the disaster's scope far exceeded the capacity of Nairobi's rescue and trauma treatment facilities.

Within an hour U.S. Army physicians and Medical Service Corps officers had rushed to the bombing scene from the U.S. Army Medical Research Unit-Kenya, a Walter Reed Army Institute of Research laboratory located three miles from the embassy.

For the next five days, research unit personnel provided 24-hour-a-day support to rescue, treatment and recovery efforts.

They provided primary care for U.S. and Kenyan casualties on the scene; triaged and stabilized U.S. patients for evacuation; assisted in coordination between the embassy and relief flights; searched local hospital wards for U.S. casualties; and helped coordinate medical-support priorities with Kenyan medical officials as well as performing mortuary services and other post mortem duties.

Most of the American victims were transported to Landstuhl, near Kaiserslautern, Germany, which is the largest U.S. military medical facility in Europe and the only one that is a full-service hospital. Commanded by Col. Robert C. Harvey, it is run by the Army, with Air Force and Navy personnel also assigned.

Only two special blood drives were conducted. Landstuhl did a collection that drew 150 Kaiserslautern-area service members volunteering to donate. Walter Reed sent technicians to collect blood at the Department of State from 158 volunteers eager to do something for their colleagues evacuated from Africa.

Army medics turned over the blood to Nairobi medical authorities and helped the local facilities work through a huge backlog of surgical cases.

A simultaneous bombing, at the U.S. embassy in Dar-es-Salaam, Tanzania, caused fewer casualties and no American deathes. It did not necessitate an Army Medical Department response.

Construction establishes bypass

A temporary bypass will be constructed at two locations on Fort Benning to permit the construction of a new 36-inch diameter sanitary sewer line across Jecelin Rd. near Lawson Army Airfield and Dixie Rd. near the sewage treatment plant.

The bypass will consist of a ramped earthen embankment. This work is part of the on-going Ranger Barracks Complex construction.

For more information, call Mike Graham, project engineer, Corps of Engineer at 545-1982.

DoD facilities remove sexually explicit materials from shelves

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Military retail services will no longer sell sexually explicit magazines, videotapes and audio tapes.

In June, the Supreme Court upheld the 1996 Military Honor and Decency Act by refusing to review an appeal of a lower court ruling. The law requires the Department of Defense (DoD) to remove all sexually explicit materials sold or rented by the exchange services, commissaries and U.S. Navy ships stores.

On July 1, Frank Rush, acting assistant secretary of defense for force management, signed DoD Instruction 4105.70, "Sale or Rental of Sexually Explicit Material on DoD Property." The instruction defines sexually explicit material as "material, the dominant theme of which is the depiction or description of nudity, including sexual or excretory activities or organs in a lascivious way."

Under the instruction, the eight-member Resale Activities Board of Review met Aug. 13 for the first time.

Lt. Col. Tom Begines, a Pentagon spokesman, said board members asked the exchanges to provide materials for review that might be affected by the new law. The board will announce findings later this year.

"Once the board determines that a particular item is sexually explicit, it will be removed and not offered for sale or rent," Begines said. "If the board determines that several issues of the same periodical are sexually explicit, the publication will not be sold in DoD retail activities." Video and audio tapes the board determines to be sexually explicit will be permanently removed from DoD retail stores, he said.

Craft bazaar seeks vendors — The Officers' Wives Club's annual craft bazaar seeks craft vendors to participate in the Benning Bazaar from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nov. 14 at Infantry Hall.

For information, call Kelly Kreis at 653-9919 to request a crafter contract. The deadline for contracts is Oct.15.

Family Advocacy seeks volunteers — The Family Advocacy First Steps Program seeks volunteers to work with Fort Benning's parents of newborns.

Various responsibilities include making ward visits to mothers at the hospital and follow-up calls after they leave the hospital with their babies.

For more information or to volunteer, call the First Steps office at 544-2020.

Pharmacy phone-in system gets $15,000 upgrade — The phone-in refill system has received an upgrade and it is no longer necessary to wait for the recording. If calling from a touch-tone phone, it will instruct customers to press one. This enables customers to bypass the remaining recorded message and begin refill requests immediately. The number for the Pharmacy Phone-In Refill System is 544-1352.

For information, call pharmacy services at 544-4497 or 544-4771.

Activities sign-up set — The Officers' Wives' Club (OWC) Fall Membership and Activities Sign-Up will be held 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. Interested persons can sign up for the following classes: Spanish, computer, quilting, watercolor painting, bridge, stitching, bunco, cake decorating, tennis, golf and much more.

The OWC School of Performing Arts will also conduct a sign-up for children's dance, piano and gymnastic lessons.

In addition, the following local agencies will have representatives available: Enlisted Wives' Club, Columbus State and Troy State Universities, Daughters of the U.S. Army, ACS, AFTB, Youth Services, Vladimir Arts, Tot Town, Red Cross, Boy Scouts, Girls Scouts and many more.

For more information, call 689-1314.

MACH conducts school screenings — School screenings are held in the Martin Army Community Hospital's Eyes, Ears Nose and Throat clinic every Wednesday.

Appointments can be made by calling 544-3041 or 544-3042.

Every child who enters the Georgia school system for the first time is required to have a certificate stating they have had a vision, hearing and dental screening.

Training Support Center relocates — The Training Support Center has relocated to Building 130 and will have an Open House from 8:30 to 11 a.m. today. This is an open invitation to everyone to come and see what is available.

Parents can help ease first day jitters

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The first day of school can be a rewarding experience for both parents and students, but it can also be a time of apprehension. There are many ways parents can ease both their own and their children's worries for the first day of school and every day after that.

"The best thing to do is to talk to children in a positive way about school," said Glenn Hughes, principal of Stowers Elementary. "Let them know what fun they'll have at school and your expectations for them for the year."

One way that administrators can help is to give the child and parent a tour of the school when they register. A technique that exists now to help parents is a new parent orientation the Friday after school starts.

"The parent orientation helps parents know the school and it lets them know they are an active and vital part of their child's education," Hughes said.

Teachers also do their part to help ease a child's fears.

"The teachers prepare the classroom for the first day. The child will see his name on their desks, their cubbies and also their nametag displayed. They might also have a birthday board with each child's birthday posted.

Teachers might also give new students a "buddy", someone who shows them around and eats lunch with them. The teachers do a lot to make the students feel comfortable," Hughes explained.

At Stowers, Hughes said the Parent Teacher Organization gives each child a welcome kit.

The first day resource people are in the hallways to help students if they need it. Hughes and vice-principal Mike Starrett stand at the entrance of the school and welcome students and parents.

Although Hughes works with elementary-age children, he also has tips for older children.

"Visit the school ahead of time, so you'll be able to find out what rooms your classes are in, which will alleviate the worry on the first day," Hughes said.

Hughes recommends preparing children the night before the first day.

"Let them take part in everything. Let them help lay out their clothes, make sure they get a good night's rest, have their book bag ready and make sure they have a good breakfast in the morning.

Establish a morning routine and on the first day, give yourself and your child a few extra minutes."

Because the children are military dependents, many are going to a new school this year.

"We are a military community, so the teachers let the students share their experiences and their individual activities, so the students can learn about each other," Hughes said.

There is also a counselor available for the students who have a tougher time making the transition into the school year. Ultimately, Hughes said he wants both parents and students to feel comfortable.

"It is a warm, friendly and safe environment," Hughes said.

More than 300 people attended the event which included such activities as a water balloon toss, watermelon eating contest, games, prizes and free food.
"This is the first time in four years that we have had all ages together at the same time for the block party. The outside vendors and WCGQ 107.3 FM added to the success this year," said Justine Boone, recreational assistant for YS.

OWC Thrift Shop

Bargain hounds hunt for deals at post store

Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

For those people who are antique collectors, bargain hounds or just low on cash, the Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club (OWC) Thrift Shop is an alternative to sifting through junk at the local resale store.

Run by consignment format, the OWC Thrift Shop offers customers a variety of items that include furniture, clothing, kitchen items, fitness equipment and everything in between.

Most volunteers at the thrift shop feel the bargains offered there are especially beneficial to new arrivals at Fort Benning.

"People with new houses need furniture and this is a great place to come," said Lori Lane, OWC Thrift Shop manager

"You can get really good buys on furniture here," said Mindy Swank, volunteer coordinator.

Frequent shopper Spc. Audelia Avila, 608th Ordinance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) just gave birth and while shopping on maternity leave, was able to buy a crib for her new baby.

"I just bought a crib for $50 that looks new," Avila said, "I thought that was a pretty good deal."

Though the shop is packed with enough furniture to furnish a few small houses, both Swank and Lane said quality, not quantity, is a priority among the volunteers at the shop.

"We try to keep quality, unbroken, undamaged items in the thrift shop," Lane said.

Family member Donna Faulkner, said the thrift shop is an ideal place to shop for back-to-school needs.

"I can get Levi's here for five to seven dollars, at the department stores, they cost thirty dollars," Faulkner said. "They look just as new here."

This discriminating approach to resale is what sets the OWC Thrift Shop apart from other military thrift shops, Swank said.

"We are trying to set the standard higher for military thrift shops, we wouldn't accept anything that we wouldn't buy," Swank said.

"People bring things in because they just don't need them anymore, not because they are junk," said Nancy Howle, OWC president.

In addition to the bargains, Lane said the secret to the shop's success is the convenience not found at most resale stores.

"We are not a department store, but we are trying to achieve the department store look and convenience," Lane said. "You walk in and you know where everything is because it is labeled."

Aside from having the convenience of labeled departments and dressing rooms, the thrift shop also accepts Mastercard, Visa, checks and cash.

Convenience, said the volunteers, wasn't the only reason to feel good about shopping and consigning at the thrift store.

When an item is sold, the consignor receives 75 percent of the price they set. The remaining 25 percent goes to the OWC Welfare Fund, money the OWC donates to the Fort Benning community, some of which goes to a scholarship fund for military families.

"The customers help themselves when they shop here and they also help the community," Howle said.

The OWC Thrift Shop is open 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesdays, Thursdays and the first and third Fridays of every month.

"We try to open the store once a month on a Friday night to help accommodate people who work during the day," Swank said. "We are currently trying to see if we can do that on a more regular basis."

To get around the shop's hours, most customers recommend shopping while on a lunch break or waiting until scheduled time off.

For information about volunteering, consigning or the shop, call Mindy Swank at 687-4830.

Anger Control

Program prevents violence through peaceful solutions

Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

When the trials of everyday life and the pressures of work become crises out of control, civilians and military personnel alike sometimes have trouble dealing with issues of anger on their own.

According to Yvonne Wilbanks, civilian program coordinator for Civilian Counseling Service (CCS), a large factor that may be the culprit, which can plague relationships with negative expressions of anger are problems at work.

"When people have difficulties at work, it is possible they may also get mad quickly at home," Wilbanks said.

Problems at work, such as downsizing or possible deployment are out of an employees control, Wilbanks said.

"If people would put their energy into controlling what they can control instead controlling a loved one, there would be fewer problems with anger in the home," she said.

For those military personnel and Department of Defense employees who have problems dealing with anger, help comes in the form of Fort Benning's anger management class. For DoD employees, the class is available through CCS. Military personnel can contact Social Services in Soldiers' Plaza.

Unfortunately, many who attend the anger management courses at Social Services are there by mandate.

When a report of domestic violence is sent to Social Services, usually by the military police, the family involved is required to attend anger management classes.

Recognizing their problem with anger, according to Debra Howell of the Family Advocacy Program, is the first step in regaining control of one's emotions.

"We try to get them to think about their anger and recognize signs of anger when they happen," Howell said. "When they learn to do this, they can better manage their emotions."

"This class teaches ways to successfully deal with anger," said Lt.Col. Reginald Pugh, chief of Social Work Services, "However they deal with anger, they need to make sure how they react will better the situation instead of making it worse."

Instead of acting on emotions, Pugh suggested taking time to calm down.

"Give yourself time to get your thoughts together before you react," Pugh said.

Pugh also advises confronting the people who caused the anger.

"Confront people, but be careful," Pugh said. "Tell the person they made you mad instead of calling names or making accusations."

What some people may not understand, Wilbanks said, is that anger is a normal emotion.

"Anger is not a problem," Wilbanks said. "However, if anger is expressed negatively, then it becomes a problem."

Pugh explained that negative expressions of anger are destructive to a family and especially the individual.

"If you don't control anger, it will control you."

State announces higher ACT scores

Georgia Department of Education

State Superintendent of Schools Linda Schrenko announced today that for the sixth consecutive year high school seniors who have taken more than the required core courses score higher on the ACT college entrance exam, an indicator of academic performance at the freshman college level.

"ACT results are good news, particularly when you consider that we increased graduation standards in February 1997 to require students to take more advanced courses," Schrenko said .

The test typically identifies skills students learn in high school courses which ultimately determine their performance in college courses. Students who meet or exceed the core curriculum tend to outperform those who do not.

Current graduation requirements for Georgia's college bound students include four units of math, four units of English, three units of science, three units of social studies, two units of foreign language, four electives, one health and physical education unit and one other credit in either computer science, fine arts or foreign language.

The ACT is scored on a scale of one to 36, on which one is lowest and 36 is highest.

In Georgia, graduating high school seniors who took less than four years of English scored 18.7 against a 19.4 national average. Georgia's students who took five course in English scored 20.7 against a national average of 21.6.

When taking five courses in math, including calculus, Georgia's students scored 24.2 against a 24.5 national average. In Georgia, graduating high school seniors who took less than three years of math scored 16.0 in math against a 17.2 national average.

Average composite scores for Georgia's 12,287 graduates who took the test remained unchanged from the prior year and were less than one point off the national average which also remained unchanged; 20.2 in Georgia versus 21.0 nationally.

Schrenko added, "Our schools must continue to ensure the availability of advanced course offerings and our students must begin entering the advanced course pipeline earlier in their education. I have supported this trend by making provisions for the state to pay for our students to take advanced placement (AP) exams. By demonstrating their mastery of critical subject areas, our students may earn credit toward entry-level college courses."

State graduation requirements established in 1997 allow students to earn graduation credit for eighth-grade courses, like Algebra 1, which are taught to meet the content requirements of the ninth-grade curriculum.

"ACT results clearly support initiatives to increase academic standards. I remain committed to this long-term process, and I am pleased that while we fine tune the rigors of our academic standards, scores continue to improve."

"Raising the bar earlier in the child's education will clearly lead to significant advancement for Georgia's students," Schrenko concluded.

BBB suggests research before buying

The Better Business Bureau

Thinking of purchasing a pager or cellular phone? Perhaps interested persons would like to subscribe to pay-per-view, get Internet access, maybe buy a fax machine or get caller ID for the home. The cost of these products or services should be considered. Modern technology services offer many advantages to consumers, but consumers should first make sure they can afford them.

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) suggest doing research. The BBB says to stop and think about how much each service costs. For instance, surfing the Internet can be loads of fun, but the $20 paid in access fees can quickly add up to a huge fee annually. Before deciding to sign up for an Internet service, the BBB suggests considering if it's worth it.

The BBB, along with the National Foundation for Consumer Credit, offers the following tips for consumers who already have or are interested in purchasing or subscribing to some of these products or services:

•Shop around for the best prices. Rates and prices may vary from one retailer or provider to another. Pick the service plan that best suits your usage patterns. Oftentimes, paging companies will offer a variety of plan options: local vs. nationwide coverage, toll-free paging, number of free pages per month, etc. Cellular companies offer a variety of rate packages based on peak or off peak usage.

•Budget carefully. Determine the monthly amount available for these types of expenses. If money is not available in the budget, reconsider the expense or reduce spending on other times to free up the money.

•Avoid adding to debt. Many of these services offer to bill directly to a credit card. If credit card balances are paid each month, then that's not a problem. If not, then consider that these expenses may quickly add up to a large balance on the credit card.

•Use the cellular phone wisely. Keep conversations short and eliminate unnecessary calls. A local, one-minute call can cost significantly more on a cellular phone than if the call was made from a home or office telephone or pay phone.

•Check for hidden fees. Installation, monthly hardware rental fees and cancellation fees can mount up. Often, providers offer an incentive discount for signing up, but the real rate starts a few months later. Know what the total costs will be before making a financial commitment.

•Evaluate the services periodically, at least every six months. If usage patterns have changed, another rate plan may be better. The same applies for other technologies.

Doctor offers tips for pregnancy

Dr, Monique Matuskowitz
Martin Army Community Hospital

Many women do not make changes in their diet until they become pregnant; the wiser choice is to make changes before pregnancy. Modifications to diet can help a woman conceive if she is having difficulties. A weight loss or gain will moderate the amount of fat one carries and may dictate how hormones respond. This, in turn, may allow a pregnancy to occur.

In addition, the best time to supplement with prenatal vitamins is before a pregnancy. The baby will form most of his nervous system in the first few weeks of pregnancy, often before the first obstetrics visit. Important vitamins, like folic acid, should be in the mother's diet before she conceives. These are essential for normal spine and nervous development.

Contact a primary care doctor when planning a pregnancy in order to get started on prenatal vitamins.

However, if you are past that stage, the vitamins are still important for normal growth and development. The mother needs extra nutrients, too. Without maternal supplementation, the baby may use up all of the mother's reserved stores.

Nausea and vomiting may be another concern for pregnant women. Some tricks that might help you:

•Keep dry crackers or plain toast at bedside, eat some before getting out of bed.

•Avoid liquids at mealtimes, take them 30-60 minutes before eating.

•Never brush teeth with regular toothpaste first thing in the morning. The flavors may initiate nausea. Wait until later or try just baking soda.

•Sometimes food odors cause nausea. Consider eating cold foods like pasta salad or chicken salad or go for a walk while someone else prepares strongly flavored foods. Eat in an area away from the food smells.

•Do not lie flat or recline for at least two hours after eating. The tendency for heartburn decreases after two hours.

•Sometimes loose clothing or some fresh air can help.

•Eat salty foods and avoid overly sweet foods, especially if vomiting occurs.

•Sip liquids slowly through a straw.

•Avoid strong flavored coffees or their brewing smells.

Refresher checking account maintenance workshops are offered on the first and third Wednesday of each month in the conference room of Army Community Service, Building 2643; they are mandatory for anyone who has a dishonored check.

To register for the Checking Account Maintenance Workshop or to request a class, call 545-7517 or 545-4043.

MACH and SJA offer Advanced Directive classes — The Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) Hospital Department of Family Practice and the Staff Judge Advocate office offers an Advance Directives class. The class allows participants to make their wishes known in writing in case the time comes when they cannot express their desires.

The two-hour program provides an education session with an attorney and physician; the attorneys then help participants develop documents for personal and medical records.

For more information, call 544-3065.

Chaplain Family Life Ministry offers counseling — The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center offers counseling services for active duty Soldiers, retirees, families and Department of the Army civilians.

Services offered include marriage and family counseling, parenting training, divorce care and grief counseling and communication skills. Other programs offered are designed to strengthen marriages and families and help those facing crises. In some circumstances, childcare can be provided.

Specific group programs include: the parenting class, STEP (Systematic Training for Effective Parenting), which provides a practical approach to raising children. The class is from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Mondays.

PREP is a program designed for married couples to help them communicate effectively and work as a team to solve conflicts. The class is held 7 to 8:30 p.m. Wednesdays.

Divorce Care is a support group conducted by people who understand the pain of divorce. This program is offered from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Mondays.

For more information, call 545-1760.

Smoking cessation program available — Martin Army Community Hospital will offer four free smoking cessation sessions for I.D. card holders.

Nicotine replacement will be available (patch or gum).

To sign up for the lunch-hour program, call 544-1255.

Recruiters to visit ACAP — Recruiters from the following companies will visit the Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) Center:

•MS Carriers, a trucking company, will visit the ACAP Center from 9 a.m. to noon Tuesday. Representatives will recruit over-the -road drivers.

•Bob Davis Pontiac from Atlanta will recruit sales representatives, mechanics, administration, reception and cashiers from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday.

•Columbus Foundry will recruit foundry production workers and electrical and hydraulic technicians from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m Wednesday. Columbus Foundry is a local company that makes heavy iron automotive parts for the automotive industry and offers benefits and promotion potential.

The Polk County Florida Sheriff's Department will visit the ACAP Center from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Sept. 14. Polk County is located between Tampa and Orlando, Fla. They will recruit separating Soldiers for positions as deputy sheriff, correction officers and 911 emergency dispatchers.

The ACAP Center is located in Building 2634, Soldiers' Plaza.

Relationships remain backbone of society

Chaplain (Capt.) Alonzo A. Ford
13th Corps Support Battalion

Relationships are the mainstay of the community, the backbone of society. Yet, too often we take others for granted. I want to share with you five things I believe will create healthy and happy relationships.

reflections

The first thing is caring. Caring is that emotion that seeks the well being of others. Caring provides an atmosphere where growth can occur. It's easy to find the weak points in a spouse or friend, but it's healthy, for both of, to look for ways to encourage and support them.

The second thing is communication. Open and truthful communication allows freedom for both the speaker and receiver to share their feelings, fears, frustrations and fantasies. Conversations must not be judgmental, condescending or vulgar. Communication must also carry the atmosphere of caring — words can hurt — so keep them soft and sweet.

The third thing is commitment. How did you feel the last time someone other than your parents said that they were committed to you, your goals and your aspirations? It's encouraging and powerfully lifting when you are sure that your relationship is forever. Say it often and not just during times of intimacy.

The fourth thing is conflict resolution. Learn to fight fair. There are classes that instruct in proper techniques for resolving conflicts.

Many community classes help couples understand relationship development. Classes like effective listening, problem solving, anger management, effective planning, goal setting, etc., provide adequate assistance for couples and friends. Problems can be resolved without anger, violence or deep frustrations. Consult with a chaplain for additional help.

The fifth thing is community and church or spiritual development. We are and will always be near and around people. You can learn to develop relationships with peers and friends. Support and encourage each other in your goals in life.

Developing spirituality is as much a part of life as eating. Human beings are three-fold in nature: spiritual, physical and mental — or better, spirit, body and soul. Each requires a healthy diet to survive the elements of nature. Religious activities for the spirit, food for the body and education for the mind are necessary for abundant life.

DPW implements pollution plan

Directorate of Public Works

Chemicals can harm health, kill wildlife and destroy valuable natural resources. The Environmental Management Division (EMD) of the Directorate of Public Works has a staff of experts to assist in preventing chemicals from being released into the environment.

The DPW staff is in the process of implementing a Pollution Prevention Plan. This plan is expected to reduce the amount of hazardous waste generated by 50 percent before 1999.

Currently, more than 300,000 pounds of hazardous waste are generated per year. The ultimate goal is to reduce this number to zero. Here are some hints that will help to achieve this goal.

Buy only latex paints instead of oil-based. Oil-based paints are flammable and are regulated upon disposal. On the other hand, latex paints are water based, clean up easily and pose few hazards.

Buy only the chemicals needed and no more. Too often, consumers purchase more chemicals than needed. In most cases, disposal of even a small quantity of chemicals can cost hundreds of dollars. Approximately 85 percent of the hazardous waste that is disposed of is a result of purchasing more chemicals than is needed.

Avoid buying aerosol cans. They contain propellents that are flammable and contribute to air pollution. Instead, buy products with hand-pumps.

For chemicals that are no longer used, if someone else can use the product, give it to them. Otherwise, take the time to dispose of chemicals properly.

Make sure that all containers are labeled properly and completely. At work sites, maintain a file of the material safety data sheets for all chemicals used.

Chemicals should be used for their intended purpose. Never pour excess chemicals down the drain just because it is easier; this is illegal.

Keep containers closed. Keep them out of the reach of children. Remember, open containers result in air pollution.

There are methods to reduce chemicals around the home.

Replace glass cleaner with a mixture of one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice in one quart of water. Spray on and use newspaper to wipe dry.

Replace mothballs with cedar chops, lavender flowers, rosemary, mint or white peppercorns.

Replace furniture polish with one teaspoon of lemon juice in one pint of mineral or vegetable oil.

If storing a homemade mixture, make sure it is properly labeled and do not store it in a container that may be mistaken for food or beverage.

When preparing alternatives, mix only what is needed for the job at hand and mix in a clean container.

For more information, call your unit's environmental coordinator or the DPW environmental staff at 545-4766.

For questions or topics to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist. 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWC (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Employee 'does the right thing'

Jennifer Wilson
Army News Service

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.— What would you do if you found $9,000 on the side of the road? Would you "do the right thing" and turn it in?

For most people, that situation would test their values. Army employee Bill McKendry, a senior mechanic for the Corps of Engineers, was recently put to the test, and he passed with flying colors.

On the evening of July 16, as McKendry was leaving the Table Rock Powerhouse, run by the Army Corps of Engineers in Branson, Mo., he noticed that a car with California plates was still parked inside the security fence.

"I'm usually the first one in, and when I came in the gate at 6 a.m., I noticed a box off to the side of the road just inside the security gate," McKendry said. "I figured it was just some trash that the janitor dropped, and just went on inside."

Around 8 a.m., McKendry had to pick up a Corps vehicle in town that had been repaired. When he pulled back in the gate and parked the vehicle, he had to walk past the box, which was still in the same place on the road.

"I decided to pick it up and see if it really was trash," McKendry said. "When I reached down, I noticed the top of the box wasn't on very tight, and I could see inside. It didn't look like trash"

McKendry opened the box to investigate closer, and he got the surprise of his life.

"Laying right on top was a canvas bag with a bank emblem on the top of it," he said. "The first thing I did was look around; I kept thinking this was like a Candid Camera trick."

McKendry found three plain envelopes inside. Two were slit open, and as he reached inside one, he could see the stack of bills was about an inch thick.

"I thought of what the poor person who lost the money was going through. Then I thought, who in the world would be carrying around that much money?"

Concerned that the money might have been from a robbery or a drug deal, Jones called the sheriff to report the find.

"While the sheriff was on his way, we looked through the rest of the box and found a book of checks with a name and a Los Angeles address on them," McKendry said.

That's when McKendry remembered the car with California tags. He checked the powerhouse's visitor log and found the same name, Kathern Lewis, listed in the book. The tour guide remembered the lady, her boyfriend and her son, but she also remembered they said they were on their way to North Carolina.

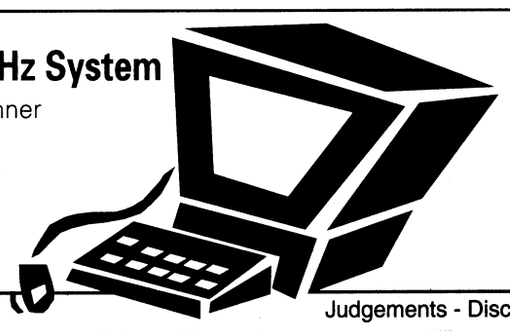
The sheriff verified Lewis' identity and checked the car's plates before returning the money to Lewis.

The couple and their 10-year-old son had left the powerhouse the evening before and spent some time in Branson before heading for Nashville.

They were almost in Nashville when they realized that the box was missing. The couple was on their way to North Carolina from California so Lewis' son, Aaron Berry, could see a specialist. The money was for a medical operation for Berry and for the family's vacation.

"She offered me a reward, but I didn't want to take it," McKendry said. "I just told her to be happy that it fell somewhere safe."

McKendry said that he was never tempted to keep the money.



"It wasn't my money. I didn't work for it, and I didn't need to keep it. I feel real good about what I did, and I'm glad I could help them."

Jones said that he is not surprised at all with McKendry's good deed.

"Bill really is the kind of guy who would give you the shirt off his back, and I don't doubt for a moment that the thought of keeping any of the money even crossed his mind. You've heard the saying, 'He's just plain old good people.' That pretty much sums him up."

U.S. ARMY MARKSMANSHIP UNIT

Pistol shooter takes aim at international competitions

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU PUblic Affairs Office

An Army pistol shooter has become the first woman ever to win a majority of the U.S. Practical Shooting Association Area Championships in the U.S.

Julie A. Goloski, a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) Action Shooting Team, has become one of the best female international practical shooters in America by winning some major championships recently. The Army military policewoman is only 21 years old but is already considered to be one of the top women action pistol shooters in the country.

More than 20,000 American shooters in the International Practical Shooting Confederation compete not only in the U.S., but also with IPSC shooters in more than 60 countries.

So far this year, Goloski has won the Women's Division in the Areas 1, 3, 4, and 6 Championships, as well as being the top woman shooter at the Single Stack Classic, Panama National and Georgia State Championships. She also won the New Female Shooter Division, placed second in the Military Shooter Division and was fourth overall in the New Competitor Division at the Bianchi Cup.

"Never has a single female shooter dominated the U.S. Practical Shooting Association Area Championships," said Jay Christy, Goloski's USAMU action shooting teammate. "Out of the eight areas, she entered five and won four. She's the shooter to beat this year."

Goloski

Goloski, who started shooting in 1991 with her father Peter Goloski, joined the Army right after graduating from Mynderse Academy of Seneca Falls, N.Y., in 1995. After she completed Basic Training and Military Police School, she joined the USAMU's Action Shooting Team.

She had only been an Army marksman for a short while when she won the Tennessee Women's State Championship in 1996. In 1997, Goloski won the Women's Division Competition at the Rio Salado Desert Classic and was the Class C winner at the U.S. Practical Shooting Association Limited Nationals. She was also the second best female shooter in four area championships, as well as the west Coast Championships, the Florida Invitational and the Georgia and Alabama State Championships.

"I've seen a lot of growth in her over the last two years," said USAMU Action Shooting Team Coach Ray Arrendondo. "When she came here, she was a good shooter, but now she's an excellent shooter working toward becoming the Women's National Champion."

"I'm doing better this year than last year because of experience," Goloski said. "I'm also using state-of-the-art equipment, different training techniques and a lot of physical training including weightlifting and stretching exercises."

"Goloski is one of the most highly motivated individuals I've had the pleasure of working with," Arrendondo said. "She never gives up regardless of the adversities she's had to deal with. She displays a relentless pursuit of excellence, striving to improve her speed and accuracy."

Goloski was featured on MTV's Prime Time show in 1997 and has regularly appeared on the American Shooter show on ESPN and TNN and the Action Shooters show on the Outdoor Channel.

"There are only a very few women her age who can shoot as well as she does and I expect to see her keep improving," Arrendondo said. "The chances are very good that she'll be the Women's National Champion this year."

Goloski is now training for the European Championships to be conducted in Crete, Greece, Sept. 7-12, where IPSC will be a demo sport at the 2004 Olympics. Then it's off to the Limited Nationals in Barry, Ill., Sept. 13-20, and the Open Nationals in Las Vegas, Nev., Oct. 18-25, where she hopes to earn the title of Women's National Champion.

"The Army has allowed me to train the amount of time necessary to become the champion," Goloski said. "It gives me great pride to wear Army colors when I compete."

USAPFS 'bends over backwards' for fitness

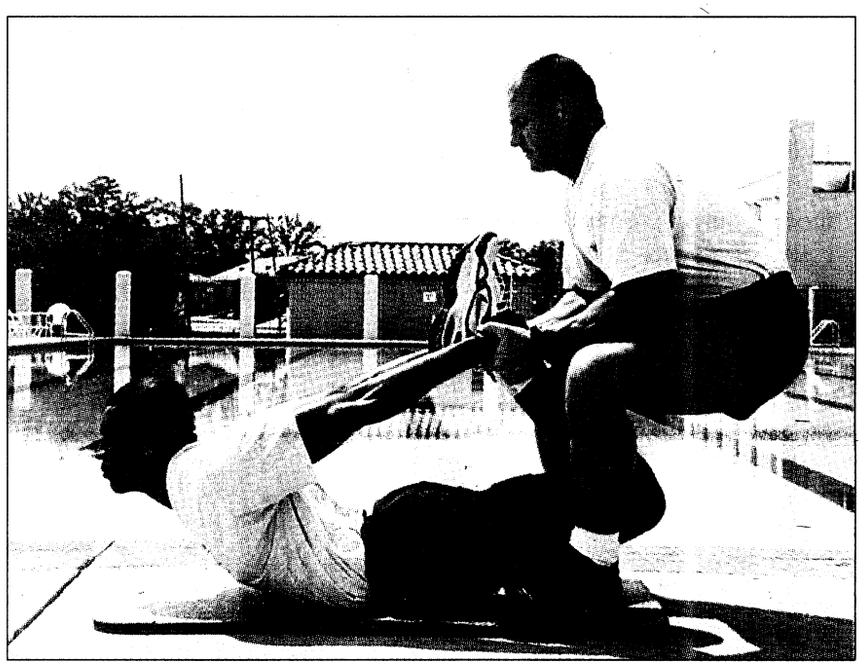
Ed Thomas
Troy State University — Fort Benning

Stretching and flexibility training have been gaining respect and popularity since the 1980s, but some experts still warn that bending backward (extension) can be dangerous and should be avoided.

Others counter that extension is essential for total fitness. Most physical training systems are still dominated by flexion (bending forward), but extension is steadily gaining acceptance.

Advocates of extension argue that it compensates for the negative and often debilitating structural changes that occur over the years as one chronically assumes a flexed posture in work, play and rest. Constant flexion (sitting, bending forward etc.) leads to rounded shoulders, humped back, forward neck and numerous other postural deformities that are associated with a myriad of illnesses and a general loss of movement potential.

"Current Army physical training (PT) doctrine includes relatively little extension," said Steve Van Camp, instructor and writer at the The U. S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS). "We employ partial extension like an overhead reach with a slight backward bend which does not place the body far enough back to include the vital areas of the thighs and hips. We are reviewing this issue, but Soldiers must also keep in mind that unless extension is done rationally, injuries might and probably will occur."



Experts generally agree that the human body is theoretically designed to bend backward. This capacity separates us from primates and contributes to our upright (bipedal) posture. At its core, the debate over extension often leads to the concern that many people are too inflexible or clumsy to extend properly.

"Extension is an essential posture," Van Camp said. "But we do warn that it should be done gradually with care and attention to detail, since the affected muscles may be weak or stiff from non-use. Years of chronic flexion lead to a major postural debt that must be repaid gradually." Rational extension, Van Camp added, cannot be done without a fully engaged mind.

"When you bend backward, each of the spinal segments is immobilized," said Frank Palkoska, USAPFS chief of doctrine. "This directional shift of pressure on the spinal discs and the vertebrae allows for needed physiological and structural differences."

Palkoska also noted that when bending backward, for instance, from a kneeling position, the thigh muscles often seem tense and tight. Running, walking and bending forward have tensed these muscles. Care and caution must be taken as one moves toward complete extension, which means bending backward until the body is at least bowed.

Dr. R.M. Martin, a pioneer in modern therapeutic exercise, has said "Complete extension practiced with complete flexion aids the spine to become properly positioned for balance. Equally, it strengthens the muscles which do the balancing. It is the equalization of tone produced by these exercises that brings about the balance between the antagonistic muscle groups."

Ed Thomas

U.S. Army Physical Fitness School cadre members Kevin Murphy and Kenroy Taylor demonstrate a partner-assisted extension exercise.

"Every joint should be moved through its full and safe range of motion," said USAPFS Commandant Col. Stephen Cellucci. "The joints of the spine are no exception. For the spine to gain its maximum mobility, it must be trained and developed in both complete extension and complete flexion. Our challenge is to teach Soldiers how to do it safely."

A healthy spine supported by equilibrium between the antagonistic muscle groups will permit the spine to achieve its maximum lengthening and shortening for optimal physiological function, Cellucci added.

This will help correct the tendency toward swayback or round shoulders, and these corrections in turn will make it possible for Soldiers to better perform both simple and complex motor skills, he said.

"When muscles are in a condition of constant stretch, they are unable to be strengthened," Van Camp said. "Their stretch-reflex will weaken, causing an inability to contract against their antagonists. Constant flexion without compensatory extension is a recipe for muscular imbalance and impaired performance."

For more information concerning extension, call Van Camp at 545-6336.

Lady golfers conduct championship tourney

Fort Benning Ladies Golf Association

The Fort Benning Ladies Golf Association 1998 Club Championship Tournament was held Aug. 10-11 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The tournament championship went to Liz Butler. Runner up was Ellen Phipps. Mavis Hill took low net while Helen Harper walked away with second low net.

In the second flight, Jean Sharp took first while Marion Beck took low net and Nina Green took second low net.

During the third flight, Glenis Myers took first. Lydia Langdon took low net and Bobby Kersey took second low net.

The association's next tournament is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. Sept. 1 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The tournament is open to all ladies with an established handicap.

Gift certificates will be awarded to winners in the different categories.

For more information, call the course's pro shop at 687-1940.

Community should take measures to ensure safety

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

The bombings of the U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania two weeks ago provided yet another deadly reminder that terrorist activity can occur at any time and place.

While Fort Benning recently began exercising additional security measures around post, Al Harvey, acting director of Threat and Security, said community members can do their part to ensure safety by taking certain protective measures.

Harvey said one thing both military and civilian personnel can watch out for is suspicious individuals.

"This may be someone who is carrying some type of container or package that looks out of place. It could also be someone taking photos of places you don't normally take photos of or taking them at a strange time of day," he said.

Harvey added that a suspicious individual can also be someone walking very slowly along fence lines or buildings as if pacing or counting steps to measure distance.

"All of these are things should key you as being suspicious and may warrant reporting."

In addition to suspicious characters, Harvey said community members should also be on the lookout for unidentified vehicles in housing areas, parking lots and other areas.

"Watch for vehicles parked in a suspicious manner or where they shouldn't be parked or vehicles left unattended for a long period of time," he said. "Repeated vehicle drive-bys for no apparent reason may also warrant reporting."

Another item individuals should be aware of is abandoned containers. Harvey said any item left out of place or placed noticeably unattended should arouse suspicion.

"Bottom line is anything that looks out of the ordinary should set some alarms off or make you think something may not be right," he said. "Usually, if you think it's not right, than it's probably not and may warrant some type of reporting."

Harvey said Soldiers who witness a suspicious act or person should notify their supervisor or the Military Police at 545-5222.

While abandoned containers and suspicious automobiles and personnel should alert community members, Harvey added that terrorists could also send explosive devices and other hazards through the mail.

Harvey said certain indicators of suspicious mail include improper spelling of common names, places, or titles; generic or incorrect titles; leaks, stains, or protruding wires, string, tape; no return address or nonsensical return address or foreign writing, addresses or postage.

"Excess postage on small packages indicates the object was not weighed by the Post Office," he said. "Normally, a bomber does not want to mail a parcel over the counter and deal face-to-face with a window clerk."

If anyone suspects a package may be a hazard, Harvey said the best precaution is to isolate the parcel, evacuate the immediate area and call the MPs or local police department.

"The first line of defense is to know what to look for," he said. "When in doubt, it's better to be safe than sorry."

Although Fort Benning community members may have had to wait an extra few minutes to get onto post this past week, Harvey said security measures taken should not be viewed as an inconvenience.

"(The measures) are a means of protecting structures, areas and most of all — individuals," he said. "Terrorists play for keeps. (The checkpoints and protective measures) are means to ensure that we continue to be a hard target, and protect the force and entire community."

Hall of Fame

Rangers join ranks of elite group

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

More than 400 rangers, family members and friends gathered at the Ranger Memorial Aug. 20 to watch 10 rangers join the ranks of an elite group of men and become immortalized in history as the newest additions to the Ranger Hall of Fame.

According to Maj. Buck James, public affairs officer for the 75th Ranger Regiment, the Hall of Fame was created to honor outstanding rangers across the entire spectrum of ranger service.

"It helps to preserve the spirit and contributions of rangers from past to present," he said.

James said the rangers who are inducted into the Hall of Fame are the men who helped create ranger history.

"These are the men who not by their words, but by their actions, helped build the modern day Ranger Regiment," James said. "If you read the biographies of the men who have been inducted, you will see they are absolutely phenomenal people. These guys endured the privation, hardships and horrors of combat. To see them, you would never know it because they are true, quiet professionals."

The ceremony had an emotional opening as groups of veteran rangers from former conflicts marched down the memorial walkway together carrying their representative flags.

Guest speaker Maj. Gen. David L. Grange commented on the importance of the ranger veterans and the impact they've had on history.

"For us rangers on active duty today, we can never forget who earned those awards we wear on our chest and the battle streamers that hang from our colors," Grange said. "Ranger veterans have set the standard for us to live by. When a ranger leader says follow me — rangers follow."

As the announcer began to introduce the inductees, the crowd seemed to settle into an awed silence as stories of heroics and lists of awards spilled from the rangers' biographies.

One by one the newly inducted rangers and those accepting on behalf of another ranger humbly came forward and received the medallions. Most said a few words of thanks and graciously went on their way, while a few took a couple minutes to reflect on being a ranger.

"The Army out of all the services, I am convinced, is a service to which special operations is most completely a part of," said retired Brig. Gen. Richard J. Eaton. "There is a permanence among rangers and it is never going to go away. In this chaotic, anarchic world, we know rangers are the best thing we've got going."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Wilton White said that being inducted was a great honor, but also a very emotional time.

White said coming together with all of the rangers helped bring back a lot of memories.

He said it is important for the rangers to get together to keep a camaraderie between the older and younger generations.

"It's all about being together," White said. "Even if you don't know the individual, you know what he stands for and that's a big thing about being a ranger. Once you are a ranger you are always a ranger no matter what you do or where you go."

Post Scouts celebrate 75 years of service

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

For generations, the sons of America have taken part in a tradition which places emphasis on values and aims its efforts at turning young men into responsible, self-sufficient adults.

Fort Benning's Boy Scouts Of America Troop 27, which is the oldest troop in the area, celebrated this tradition Aug. 21 during the troop's 75th anniversary ceremony on Sand Hill.

The ceremony began with the retreat of the flag by members of the troop.

Council members from as early as 1957 came to recognize the troop and share memories of an organization that helped turn them into the men they are today.

"We (the troop) did things that were important to us," said Cortez Lawrence, a scout since 1957, as he reflected on the positive experiences he had as a scout. "Scouting meant a lot to me."

"Without scouting, I probably would not have enjoyed growing up," said Retired Col. Bo Terry, a scout since 1959. "It gave me something to do other than sit around the house when I was a boy."

Presently Troop 27 has 18 members who have the same chance to have fun experiencing a variety of activities that can take them off the beaten path just as Terry did years ago.

"We must keep the outing in scouting," Terry said. " If it is not fun, it is not worth doing."

One of the troop's recent adventures took them to Providence Canyon.

"We went hiking to earn a merit badge," said scout Robert Nethken, son of Command Sgt. Maj. David Nethken, Ranger Training Brigade. "We had to hike three miles with 22 pounds on our back. It was a lot of fun."

Scouts also take part in activities such as archery, swimming and learning life-saving techniques, but the scouts go beyond adventure and contribute to the community providing services to help others in need.

Pvt. Nicole M. Graham

The scouts of Troup fold the flag during the anniversary celebration Aug. 21.

"The troop recently held a food drive to help Fort Benning's food locker, they collected books for Martin Army Community Hospital and more than 300 pairs of eyeglasses were collected for donation," said Frank Dewalt, Troop 27 scoutmaster.

One project in particular the troop is proud of is the restoration of the cemetery next to Love Dental Clinic.

"The cemetery would have probably been discarded or torn down, but the scouts weeded and mowed the lawn and painted the fence around the cemetery," Dewalt said.

Back to school

Community should watch out for children

Regis Beighley
USAIC Safety Office

Schools are open and children are at large. Many of them are very young and total strangers to the proper procedures they must follow to deal with traffic and walk across streets.

commentary

Everything humanly possible must be done to ensure the safety of our children as they cross streets and highways on their way to or from school.

With the opening of school, many children will be on their own for the first time in traffic.

Previously, they have been almost entirely under the guidance and protection of someone at home. Now, they must rely largely on their own knowledge of safety to protect them from dangers which plague our streets and highways despite the utmost care and caution on the part of motorists.

I feel sure that every person who drives in or near schools abides by all traffic rules that regulate the legal speed in school areas. However, speeds even as low as 10 or 15 mph may prove to be unsafe, particularly when some children decide to cross against the slow-moving traffic. There is no speed, no matter how low, that is safe unless all parties concerned — motorist and child alike — are willing to abide by current rules and regulations.

The safety of school children is undoubtedly the most important safety issue.

In spite of early home training and daily instructions in the schools about safety, the actions of the average child are not always predictable.

At times, they are apt to forget some of the rules learned about protecting themselves in traffic. This usually happens when children are together or when they are pre-occupied with something.

Parents have the responsibility of cautioning their children about their behavior and explaining to them that it is easier for them to get out of the way of a car than it is for the driver to avoid them or even to stop.

Children should not be expected to accept full responsibility for their safety, they must be repeatedly cautioned about the dangers of traffic and be reminded that they will not always be near a school patrol or policeman who will look out for them.

Children must be taught to give the motorist a break just as they expect the motorist to give them a break.

Much is said about protecting our wildlife; now, we should say, let's protect our childlife. Children are important to the future and we cannot afford to lose any of them!

Organization thanks units for fundraisers

Thanks to all units who have held fundraisers for Santa's Castle in 1998.

I just want to remind units which plan events for Santa's Castle to remember that no fundraisers can be held during the Combined Federal Campaign (CFC).

This year's CFC is scheduled for 25 Sept. 25 through Nov. 6.

If you have questions or need additional information, contact Santa's Castle at 685-4422 or myself at 653-0381.

Thanks for helping us take care of Soldiers!

CG thanks community for patience, courtesy in response to measures

Last week, the United States of America launched retaliatory strikes against targets in Afghanistan and Sudan. This was a powerful message of our Nation's resolve and intolerance for acts of terrorism.

Subsequently, Fort Benning, like other Defense and U.S. Government installations and facilities, was asked to review force protection plans, policies and procedures. Our review resulted in a phased plan to provide for increased security awareness and physical security for those who live, train and work at Fort Benning.

Thank you for your patience and courtesy in responding to the increased security measures. Our Military Police, who do a great job everyday, are pulling double shifts to help us get this one right. Please thank them for the great job and their discipline and professionalism.

As our plan matures, we will likely make some changes to traffic and parking patterns in certain areas. Certain access roads may be closed permanently. Others may be closed after normal hours. Entrances to certain buildings may be similarly affected. Emphasis on the requirement to register POVs and contractor vehicles will continue.

My apologies for any inconvenience. My thanks and appreciation for your patience and support. My assurance that we will do all that we can to ensure that Fort Benning is a great place and a safe place for Soldiers, families, civilian employees, retirees and visitors.

Hooah!

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding General

P.S.
To the Directorate of Public Safety and our Military police ... Thanks!

CG welcomes kids back to school, encourages parents to get involved

Another school year is here and I am pleased about the opportunities we have to strengthen the bonds between the schools, the command, the community and our Fort Benning families.

At Fort Benning, we are fortunate to have a Department of Defense school system. This is especially important to our children as more than one half of our families relocate each year. Our Fort Benning school system is uniquely qualified to help children make the difficult transition to a new community, a new school and new friends.

Our schools are rated among the best in Georgia and have won many accolades.

The success of our schools is due to two things: the quality of teachers and administrators and the involvement of our parents. As a parent, you are a vital link to a child's education. I urge you to become involved in the school your child or children attend — whether on or off-post.

What you do today to help provide your child a quality education will determine, to a large extent, the future success your child will enjoy. There are many areas where parents are encouraged to become involved, and are in fact, desperately needed, to ensure we maintain high standards and offer a quality education.

I have tremendous pride in our schools. I am confident that, by working together as a team, the possibilities for our children are unlimited. Let me assure you the superintendent, Dr. Dell McMullen, her staff and faculty and the Fort Benning school boards are committed to providing the very best education possible for our children. Now it's time to get busy and get involved!

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding General

P.S.
School's in, please watch out for our children and drive safely.

Post pays tribute to TRADOC commander during ceremony

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

A retreat ceremony in honor of General William W. Hartzog, Commanding General of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command was held Monday at Infantry Hall.

Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst paid tribute to who he referred to as a great Infantryman and thanked him for honoring Fort Benning with his visit.

During the ceremony, Hartzog's wife Roberta, was awarded the Shield of Sparta.

"In his heart, Gen. Hartzog has a love for Fort Benning," Ernst said.

Hartzog was stationed at Fort Benning for nine of the 35 years he spent serving his country.

During this time, Hartzog said he has had a love for the Infantry School.

"I was exposed to people who could extend themselves and be all they could be," Hartzog said. "There is no shortage of courage at Fort Benning."

Hartzog referred to the Iron Mike statue which appeared to overlook the ceremony.

"It is a statue, but it is so much more than that. It is a love affair I have had with a way of life," Hartzog said. "We all are in some way, shape or form Infantrymen."

Hartzog credited Fort Benning with being the Army installation where he learned standards, purity and courage.'

"When I first heard the poem, 'I am the Infantry,' I was standing where the airborne school is now. It was then I began to understand what it was all about," Hartzog said. We all are Iron Mikes."

"It is about the spirit, going forward, instead of backward," he continued.

TRADOC Commander since 1994, Hartzog is looking to retirement although he is not sure what he and his family will do afterwards.

"I am not sure what visiting as a retiree will feel like, but I am about to find out," Hartzog said.

Program allows Soldiers to apply for disability benefits earlier

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

A pilot program being conducted on Fort Benning allows separating Soldiers to apply for disability up to six months before their discharge date.

According to Peggy C. Morris, military services coordinator, Fort Benning along with eight other posts are currently conducting the yearlong test program.

Morris said the pilot program is a tremendous benefit for Soldiers who would normally file for disability on or after their separation date.

"If we can start the process of filing for disability before separation, it becomes a great advantage for the Soldier," Morris said. "The Soldier will be able to learn sooner if they are eligible for disability, what their disability rating is and what other benefits they may qualify for."

In order to be considered for the program, Morris said Soldiers must have no more than 180 days left before separation and no less than 90.

She said Soldiers who are ETSing, retiring or are being medically discharged may qualify for the pilot program. Chaptering Soldiers with quick releases do not qualify for the program because there is not enough time to process them.

Because it is a pilot program. there are strict guidelines. Morris said Soldiers must have a complete copy of all medical records to be able to apply in the pilot program. Soldiers will be scheduled for a physical examination and those who miss their appointment will not have the chance to reschedule. Their claims will be processed under the current guidelines after separation.

Morris said it is important for Soldiers who are currently at the six month mark to find out if they qualify for the program, before it is too late.

"It is critical for Soldiers to go to the Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) as close to six months before separation as possible in order to take advantage of this program," Morris said. "If they come in here and they have 89 days remaining, they've just missed the mark and they do not qualify for the pilot program."

Morris said if units cannot release a Soldier for the full, three-day ACAP program, Soldiers can receive the Veterans Affairs portion only to find out more about the project by attending the first day of ACAP.

"Not everyone qualifies for the program, but if Soldiers come to the ACAP class and find out about the program early, they will have everything they need to prepare themselves for their separation date," Morris said.

For more information, call the VA office at 545-4887 or to be scheduled for ACAP call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Rangers celebrate legacy during rendezvous

Pvt. 2 Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Thousands of rangers from almost every major conflict since World War II together with present day rangers, spent a week celebrating a legacy of brotherhood during this year's Ranger Rendezvous held Aug. 18-21.

According to Maj. Buck James, public affairs officer for the 75th Ranger Regiment, the Ranger Rendezvous is a time for rangers to get together and not only honor those inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame, but all of the alumni of the Ranger Regiment.

The Ranger Rendezvous included a series of events that took ranger alumni through everything from weapons and tactics demonstrations to ceremonies, barbeques and banquets. One of the final destinations and the capstone of the rendezvous was the induction of 10 men into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

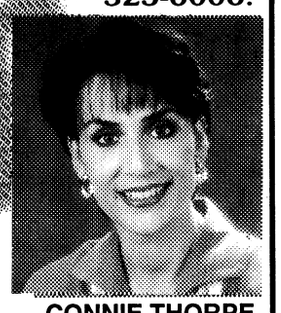
The Ranger Rendezvous is held every year at Fort Benning, but every two years, the celebration includes ranger battalions from throughout the U.S.

Even though this year's rendezvous wasn't as big as the year before, rangers young and old agreed it was a wonderful opportunity to come together and celebrate a long history.

"I think it's good for all of us to come together like this," said Retired Sgt. Maj. Warren (Bing) Evans. "Ours is a rich heritage. I think because of the type of organization we have it, just does a lot of good to look back on what we started. It's also good for the younger generation to get a look at history."

"This is a tremendous motivation for the young Soldiers," James added. "These guys (ranger alumni) are, or either become personal heroes for these young rangers. The rangers meet these men who have overcome tremendous obstacles and they see potential in themselves for greater service to their country."

Staff Sgt. William Miller, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt., said that being able to meet the men who helped create ranger history and set the ranger standards was a great privilege.



"I felt honored just to be able to meet these men," Miller said. "They are a true inspiration to us rangers. They definitely help keep that fire burning for us."

James said that when they see rangers young and old who have sacrificed and continue to sacrifice, they find what they are looking for in them.

"America can be extremely proud of their rangers," James said. "And that's exactly what they are — they are their rangers."

Scouts:

The hard work and dedication the scouts demonstrate through their projects may bring them a step closer to the concept behind scouting which is to build character and strong moral values.

"What the scouts are learning is a necessary ethic," said Post Commanding Gen. Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

The scout oath outlines the type of person a scout should strive to be in youth and adulthood. They pledge on their honor to do their best to god and country, to help others keep physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight. They also pledge to obey the scout law.

"Live up to the scout oath and you will be successful," Ernst said.

The troop has been able to continue in their efforts for the past 75 years due to the support received from the post and those who have contributed their time to shape young minds.

We receive sponsors from all around post, said Lynn Parker, committee chairperson. "Fort Benning has really backed the troop."

"It is fantastic that the troop has lasted so long," Dewalt said. "Good scoutmasters and the committee have helped keep the troop alive."

With continued support, Troop 27 may be able to continue to provide young boys with an outlet to learn and grow into what was described by Terry as better citizens.

"Our youth is our future," Terry said.

Soldiers prepare to demolish the 80-foot tall silo to make way for new barracks.

Soldiers place the explosive devices against the silo.

Explosives topple century-old silo

Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet

A turn of the century cement silo was reduced to a pile of rubble Aug. 19 after it was blasted away by 64 blocks of C-4, explosives which totaled 80 lbs.

C-4 is a plastic explosive and the most common explosive compound used in the military, according to Spc. Michael Berry, 789th Ordinance Company, Explosive Ordinance Disposal (EOD).

The silo was taken down to make way for the construction of the ranger barracks complex, scheduled to be completed late 2000.

According to Dr. Chris Hamilton, Fort Benning's cultural resource manager, it was decided by the Georgia State Historical Preservation Office that the silo had no historical value. "The structure was no longer within the context of what we consider a historical structure," Hamilton said.

As a result, the Georgia State Historical Society gave the green light to demolish it.

Called on by the Army Corps of Engineers, Soldiers from the 789th Ord. Co., (EOD) and 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment worked together in a joint training operation to bring the silo down.

"The EOD guys worked to prepare the charges and the rangers attached the C-4 bricks to the silo," said Capt. Bob Kaiser, engineer for the 75th Ranger Regt.

Capt. Paul Whitmer, 789th Ord. Co., EOD, said planning and precision was a key factor in demolishing the structure.

"The silo needed to be dropped fairly precisely," Whitmer said. "There were drainage tiles we installed behind the structure and we have to make sure we didn't crush those."

In order to bring down the silo and avoid damaging the drainage tiles, Soldiers had to implement a fracture charge concept to safely destroy it.

"We placed the explosives a good distance apart and used the shock waves to take down the concrete," said Staff Sgt. John Wear, Co. A, 3rd Bn, 75th Ranger Regt. "We tried to notch it as if we were cutting down a tree."

At precisely 6 p.m., warning sirens rang out, signaling the destruction of the silo. After the smoke cleared, the towering structure was reduced to a pile of broken concrete.

With the silo gone and the barracks project ready to continue without obstacle, Wear said he is anxiously anticipating the completion of the new barracks.

"It will be great to get the new barracks built,"Wear said.

Engineers make roads passable

1st Lt. Mona Penister
63rd Engineer Company

To prepare for disaster relief missions, 2nd Platoon, 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), recently conducted an eight day field training exercise (FTX).

The situation surrounding the FTX called for the platoon to support an emergency relief operation in upgrading a 2.2 mile section of the road that was destroyed during a hurricane.

The platoon's mission was to upgrade Plymouth Road from the intersection of Red Diamond Road to the intersection of Underwood Road. The area of operation had large washouts due to erosion and was impassable in wheeled vehicles.

The platoon received an alert July 31 to begin the deployment phase of the mission.

After an accountability formation held at company headquarters, 29 Soldiers of 2nd Platoon rolled out with 26 different pieces of combat support equipment.

Once the base camp was established, the Soldiers were ready to begin Phase II.

The Construction Phase, which comprised most of the exercise, consisted of 12-hour workdays and on occasion called for some equipment operators to work through the night.

In addition to filling the washouts along Plymouth Road, the platoon's improvement efforts also included installing five culverts along the road to correct drainage problems. To complete these missions, the platoon used more than 130 cubic yards of soil to fill the washouts and more than 308 cubic yards of rock which was placed around the culverts.

Spc. Andrew Prater, a member of 3rd Squad, said the FTX was very realistic and beneficial. He said he gained many hours of experience in dozer operations during the experience.

Upon completion of the mission, the platoon returned to garrison the evening of Aug. 7 and began clearing equipment. Once all vehicles were placed back on line and weapons were turned in, a formation was held.

The 63rd Eng. Co. (CSE) has been called upon in the past to assist with clean up of hurricanes Opal and Andrew.

"It is important for Soldiers in this company to maintain a high state of proficiency, especially now," said company commander Capt. Robert Carr. "They may be called on again during this hurricane season."

The winners of the Soldier and NCO of the Quarter for the Third Quarter were announced during a luncheon at the Main NCO Club Aug 19.

Pfc. Michael Randolph, Bradley Fighting Vehicle gunner with Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was chosen as Soldier of the Quarter and Sgt. Eddie Wright, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), was awarded NCO of the Quarter honors.

"These nominees represent the very best of Fort Benning," said host Sgt. 1st Class Keith Harney, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

"Randolph is a fine Soldier," said Staff Sgt. Michael Ehrhart, Randolf's operations NCOIC. "He is a hard worker who never complains and retains all knowledge he is taught."

"Sgt. Wright is an outstanding NCO," said 1st Sgt. Charley Peterson, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regt., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech). "He strives to be the best and trains his section to be the best as well."

After the winners were announced, they received a certificate of achievement from Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

The third quarter winners were also awarded an array of gifts sponsored by 4-n-1 Restaurant, AAFES, AUSA, CB&T, Express Boot Repair, Louie Louie Bakery-Deli, Geico, Ranger Joe's, 1st Union Bank, Gayfers, Military Benefits Association, McCoy Environment, NCOA, Pioneer Military Lending, Sam's Club, TIC, UAFA, U.S. Calvary, USPA, B+B Beverage and

Resume service aids Soldiers

Army Career and Alumni Program

"The Defense Outplacement and Referral System (DORS) is an innovative tool that transitioning Soldiers can use to get their names in front of employers across the country and overseas," said Chick Eagle, counselor with the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

DORS is a computerized on-line resume service for private sector employers. By dialing a "1-800-" number, employers can receive copies of mini-resumes entered by separating Soldiers and spouses whose skills and training match the employer's needs. The system also allows Public and Community Service (PACS) employers to receive the same information. Non-profit, public and community service organizations such as schools, hospitals, social services and law enforcement agencies use the PACS registry.

The preparation and transmission of a Soldier's mini-resume is accomplished as a part of Job Assistance Counseling services available through ACAP. Soldiers can receive individual training and assistance on how to complete the electronically transmitted resume. The preformatted computer program requires name, address and phone data, job and location preferences, a summary of job skills and experience and the precise date when the separating Soldier is available to start a new job.

"The system really works. Employers request resumes from the DoD Transition Assistance Office in California and then call or write Soldiers to see if they are interested in working for them. Transitioning Soldiers have told us that they were called by a company recruiter that they did not know, but the company received their mini-resume. This is a valuable tool for job seekers and we recommend that each transitioning Soldier take advantage of this unique service," Eagle said.

Job assistance is provided by an interested separating Soldier and his or her spouse as part of the ACAP menu of services. For information, visit the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

PMO recovers lost property

The Fort Benning Provost Marshall Office is currently in possession of 15 bicycles that were either found or recovered by Military Police at various locations on post. Items such as wallets, clothing and cellular phones can be recovered at the Property office. In accordance with DoD Regulation 4160.21-M, property found on this installation is subject to disposal after 45 days. Property that is not claimed will be turned over to the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office on Sept. 10. Items not claimed prior to this date will be subject to disposal. Persons who have lost items can contact the Property Custodian at 545-3041 or 545-5915 for information.

Traffic restrictions on Burr Street

Vehicular traffic on Burr Street is restricted to residents and guests. Signs prohibiting through traffic are posted on Burr Street at Ingersol and Edwards Streets. Initial enforcement of these signs by military police is aimed at informing motorists and enlisting voluntary compliance. Future enforcement will include issuing citations for personnel using Burr Street as a thruway.

For more information, call Law Enforcement Operations, Directorate of Public Safety at 545-4376.

Humanitarian Service Medal available

The award of the Humanitarian Service Medal has been approved for Soldiers assigned to Joint Task Force Kenya and the SOCCENT Humanitarian Assistance Survey Team who provided humanitarian assistance in Operation Noble Response during Jan. 21 to March 25, 1998.

The award has been approved for Soldiers assigned to The Indonesian Forest Fire Relief Operation, who provided humanitarian assistance during Oct. 17 to Dec. 4, 1997.

For persons who feel they qualify for the Humanitarian Service Medal, submit a DA Form 4187 with supporting documentation of eligibility through the chain of command for the 0-6 commander's approval. If approved, call the servicing MILPO section for an appointment to have the award posted to the records.

For enlisted assigned to the 3rd Brigade or 36th Engineer Group, call 544-2542. All other Soldiers should call 545-5648 for an appointment.

CID offers reward

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command (CID) offers a reward of $500 for information pertaining to the arrest and conviction of person(s) responsible for the theft of miscellaneous government equipment valued at more than $5,000 from Building 4555, Shop 16 between 3:15 p.m. July 27 and 5:45 a.m. July 28.

CID also offers a reward of $300 for information pertaining to the arrest and conviction of person(s) responsible for the theft of a U.S. government-owned notebook computer from Building 2833, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 75th Ranger Regiment between 4:15 a.m. and 12:40 p.m. July 20.

The assistance of the local community is requested in an effort to identify and apprehend the perpetrator(s). Anyone with information concerning these incidents should contact Special Agent William Pagels at 545-5222. The identity of anyone providing information will remain in the strictest confidence.

Construction establishes bypass

A temporary bypass will be constructed at two locations on Fort Benning to permit the construction of a new 36-inch diameter sanitary sewer line across Jecelin Rd. near Lawson Army Airfield and Dixie Rd. near the sewage treatment plant.

The bypass will consist of a ramped earthen embankment. This work is part of the on-going Ranger Barracks Complex construction.

For more information, call Mike Graham, project engineer, Corps of Engineers at 545-1982.

Soldiers need appointments

Peak moving season is here. Soldiers who have their reassignment orders should call the transportation office at 545-3156 to make an appointment for shipment or storage of household goods to avoid delays. Ten copies of orders are required.

For more information, call Linda Kelley at 545-6010.

Vincennes University seminar set

Soldiers may earn an associate degree by taking a one semester hour weekend seminar offered by Vincennes University.

Classes will be held from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.on Saturday and Sunday in Infantry Hall. Subjects and classrooms will be announced.

For more information, call the Army Education Center, Building 2601 at 545-4863.

Heritage month activities set

The U.S. Army Infantry Center's Equal Opportunity Office and the Hispanic Heritage Month Committee plans a luncheon for Sept. 15. A guest speaker is planned. Volunteers are needed to perform folklore dances for the program.

For information, call Sgt. 1st Class Victor Wynn or Master Sgt. Jose Morales at 545-6665.

Hispanic Heritage month will be observed from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15.

crime briefs

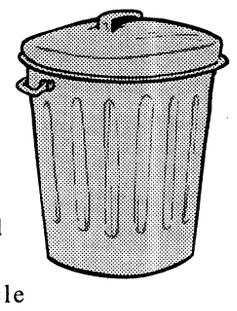
Criminal Investigation Division

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning military police blotters. Some entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of the guilt or innocence of any person.

•Hot Topic: This week's hot topic concerns speeding in the housing areas. School is now back in session. When driving at the posted speed limit, drivers will have time to react to children or objects entering the street unexpectadly. All drivers are encouraged to obey the posted speed limits and help make our streets safer.

•A Senior NCO was apprehended on a felony warrant by the civil authorities. He was charged with the sale of a controlled substance (cocaine).

•While on CQ duty, a corporal obtained a Soldier's wallet. Later that evening, the CQ proceeded to a local ATM machine and withdrew $120 by using the ATM card in the lost wallet. The corporal was charged with larceny of private property.



•While driving, a private reached down to pick up his pet snake, diverting his attention from the roadway and causing him to veer to the right. His vehicle struck a legally parked and unattended vehicle. Further investigation revealed the private did not have a driver's license. He was charged with inattentive driving and driving without a license.

Catholics 'echo' word of God as catechists

Phil Reilly
USAIC Chaplains Office

On Sept. 20, Catholic Churches throughout the country will celebrate Catechetical Sunday. On this day, all involved in Confraternity of Christian Doctrine (CCD) programs will be commissioned as catechists. The word "catechist" is rooted in the Greek word "katechesis" which means to resound or to echo. Catechists are those who echo the Word of God in CCD programs.

The first society of Christian doctrine was established in Rome under Pius IV during the time of the Council of Trent (1545-1563). It was an organization formed to provide religious education for adults and children who had never taken part in any formal catechesis. Pope Pius X (1903-1914) was a strong advocate for the renewal and extension of the confraternity. In 1905, he mandated the establishment of CCD in every parish to counteract the decline in religious knowledge and to provide religious education for children attending public schools.

In the U.S., Edwin V. O'Hara, bishop of the Kansas City-St. Joseph Diocese and organizer of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, was a zealous supporter of CCD. He served as chairman of the episcopal committee of the CCD and established the National Center at the Catholic University of America in 1935.

CCD is most widely known for providing religious instruction to elementary school children who do not attend Catholic schools, but it actually includes catechesis at all stages of life and is involved with correspondence courses, high school and college sessions and adult theological education. A decree of Vatican Council II reaffirmed the direction of Pius X, and today, the CCD in the U.S. has become the "basic cell of catechetical activity."

Catechesis involves four inter-related tasks: to proclaim the gospel message; to build up the community; to lead to prayer and worship; and to promote peace and justice. These four tasks are based on Catholic Church documents such as: The Decree on the Pastoral Office of the Bishops on the Church (1965); The Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults (RCIA) in 1972; the Apolistic Exhortaton of Pope John Paul II: Catechesis in Our Time (1977); the revised Code of Canon Law (1983) and the revised General Catechetical Directory (1997).

Fort Benning offers variety of religious opportunities

Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain's Office

September is observed in the U.S. Army as Religious Education month. Although many Protestants think of religious education as Sunday School for children, there are other religious education opportunities for all age groups.

At Fort Benning, we have "P.A.R.T.Y.," a children's group which meets two Saturdays per month, and includes Bible study, games, recreation, music and refreshments. There are children's choirs, periodic confirmation classes and study classes for the national competition known as "Wordfest."

Women at Fort Benning enjoy the Bible study and fellowship derived from the Protestant Women of the Chapel.

For Soldiers, there are unit Bible studies conducted by unit chaplains, small group Bible studies and home Bible studies conducted by lay personnel as well as chaplains.

For all ages, the chief source of religious education is the home. No class that meets once per week, for one or two hours, can be expected to provide the strong religious education that should be provided in the home.

The first reference we find in the Bible, pertaining to religious education of children, other than God's instructions to individuals, is in the Book of Exodus, God told Moses, "When in the future your child asks you, 'What does this mean?' you shall answer, ... " Ex. 13:14. This instruction places the responsibility of religious education squarely on the parent.

The first programs leading to our modern religious education in Protestant churches, originated in England in the late eighteenth century.

In Gloucester in 1780, Robert Raikes opened a "Sabbath School" to educate poor children who were compelled to work in the mills during the week and who, therefore, were unable to attend public schools. By the time of Rakkes death in 1811, there were thousands of Sabbath Schools in England. His concept of Sabbath Schools, came to the United States in 1785 and grew rapidly. As the need for secular education in the Sabbath Schools declined, religious education replaced it.

For persons who do not participate in a religious education program at Fort Benning, interested persons are invited and encouraged to do so.

For more information about programs, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Fort Benning Schools

Superintendent welcomes new year

Dr. Dell McMullen
Superintendent of Fort Benning Schools

The new millennium will demand a highly educated workforce. In fact, the very future of our country and our national security rests on a workforce that can think creatively and solve problems. As educators, we have a citizen's obligation to ensure that students are taught how to solve problems and think creatively.

First, we must determine the skills that the child of today will need to successfully compete. We know that he will likely have seven to 10 careers in his lifetime. Are we willing to do whatever it takes to meet his needs? If we are, we must first commit all our energies to teach him to read, write and solve problems.

We saw great strides in reading during last year's Terra Nova scores and in the writing program and we have cause for celebration. But if we lose one child because we did not use all our energies to explore every avenue in teaching him or her how to read and write, that is one child too many.

Second, we must be sure every child can use the technology. Last year, I spent time with every teacher in our school system discussing how technology is being used in our classrooms. I saw outstanding examples in the integration of technology and we should all feel a tremendous sense of pride as we consider the progress we have made in the PC Labs, the Discourse Labs and within classrooms as children used the technology to facilitate their learning. We have made great strides, but we must be sure that every child in every classroom has these equal opportunities.

Third, we must be sure that every single parent is involved. There is no longer any reason to question the impact of parent involvement. The research is clear. We must make sure our parents know they are welcome and their ideas will be heard. We want parents in our classrooms, in our cafeterias, in our media centers, on our playgrounds, helping with supervision, with curriculum and helping us make decisions. The Fort Benning command solidly supports parent involvement.

Lt. Col. Steven Eldridge will serve as the command representative to work with us together to strengthen our School Home Partnership.

Clearly, teaching is at the heart of education, and the single most important action we can take to improve our schools is to strengthen teaching. It's not about budget, though surely we must have things; it's not about mobility rate, though surely our children move often in their young lives; it's not about inside influences, though surely we must compete with the fast-paced world our children live in. It's about us, each one of us individually, and how committed we are to making a difference.

Our theme for School Year 98-99 is "DoDEA: Linking Students to Future Success." As one of the school systems that comprise the Department of Defense Education Activity, the Fort Benning Schools have a unique opportunity that our sister schools in the state do not share.

Working alongside our command, our parents and our colleagues, we can directly impact on our national defense as we improve the quality of life for the families of our nation's Soldiers.

As our Soldiers are asked to do more with less and deploy to potentially dangerous situations all over the world, we can expect nothing less of ourselves. We must add value to the quality of life on this post if we are to continue to educate the children of Fort Benning Soldiers.

profile

McMullen

Dr. Dell W. McMullen began her classroom career in 1973 as a fifth- and sixth-grade math and science teacher in Columbus, Ga. While continuing her career, McMullen received her Master's of Education degree from Columbus College, her Specialist in Education from Georgia State University and her Doctorate in Education from Auburn University, Ala.

McMullen served as coordinator for the Health Improvement Program for the Muscogee County School District and as assistant principal at Blanchard Elementary School in Columbus, prior to coming on board with the Fort Benning Schools as principal for Loyd Elementary in 1988. She was selected as assistant superintendent in 1990 and was appointed Fort Benning Schools Superintendent in 1994.

McMullen's awards include Girls Scouts' Woman of Achievement, 1993; Soroptimist Club's Woman of Distinction, 1995; and the Mayor's Distinguished Citizen Award for outstanding achievement in education and civic leadership, 1995. She was a member of the 1992-1993 Leadership Columbus Class.

McMullen's community interests are exhibited through her involvement and service on the Boy Scouts of America Board of Directors; The Family Center Board of Directors; the Co-Reform P-16 Council, Columbus Bank and Trust Military Advisory Board; the Civilian Military Council; the Columbus Literate Community Board; and the Columbus Downtown Rotary Club.

McMullen is married to Dr. Ray McMullen, Superintendent of the Fort Campbell Dependents' Schools, Fort Campbell, Ky.

Principals highlight goals at Fort Benning schools

Fort Benning Schools

Another school year has begun at Fort Benning and there are many new faces, both in the student body and the administration. The principals of each school would like to welcome students and parents alike and offer a short introduction to their schools and themselves.

Stowers

Hughes

Freddie Stowers Elementary School is located off First Cavalry Division Road on Stowers Drive.

"Excitement has been building since the introduction of the new Language Arts curriculum materials. Scholastic Literacy Place is the name of our new Language Arts series. The educational staff is very excited about the new adoption and is anxiously being trained on the utilization of the new materials," said Principal Glenn Hughes.

"Technology will continue to be a curriculum focus at Stowers. Students will utilize both the PC lab and the Discourse Learning Lab for instructional purposes. As students continue to utilize the state of the art technology tools, they will be prepared for our technological society," Hughes said.

The character building programs already in place will be enhanced with the addition of the Giraffe Program. This program is designed to recognize those people that stick their neck out for others.

"Recognizing people who exhibit concern for others will encourage good citizenship and quality interpersonal relationships which our children need today," Hughes said.

"The beginning of school is a very exciting time for educators," Hughes said. "To see the excitement in the eyes of a child at the beginning of school is uplifting. We, as educators, need to capture those twinkles in the eye and keep the children excited and challenged throughout the year. Education is the best profession in the world. The very foundation for a child's life is set first by their parents," Hughes also said.

Hughes begins his fifth year as principal of Freddie Stowers School. He has ten years teaching experience and nine years in administration.

Hughes holds a bachelor's degree in elementary education; a master's degree in elementary education and administration from Columbus State University and an educational specialist's degree in administration from Troy State University.

Dexter

Rogers

"Working together toward tomorrow" is the mission of staff, students and parents of Dexter Elementary School. Dexter School, located on Yeager Avenue on Main Post, serves students in grades Pre-K through 5th, and is also the site for the program for gifted education for grades three through five.

"We are excited about the start of this new school year," said Principal Vicki Rogers. "Research tells us that parent involvement is a critical element in determining student achievement, positive attitudes toward school, self-esteem and overall school effectiveness. We want the education of our children to be a joint effort of all stakeholders — parent, staff and students."

Rogers, principal of Dexter School since 1990, was named the Department of Defense Education Activity's "Principal of the Year" in 1997. In addition to her current position, her experience in the field of education includes Curriculum Coordinator for Fort Benning Schools, as well as experience in public education as a Teacher Assessment Specialist for the Georgia Department of Education and a classroom teacher.

Rogers earned her Specialist in Educational Administration degree from the University of Georgia and also holds master's and bachelor's degrees in education.

Rogers, a graduate of the 1997 Leadership Columbus Class, volunteers time to the Youth Leadership Columbus Class, comprised of selected local area high school students. Rogers also serves on the Board of Directors of the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts and is the sponsor for Cub Scout Pack 27, led by Cubmaster John Fairey.

"We are excited about the start of this new school year," Rogers said. "Research tells us that parent involvement is a critical element in determining student achievement, positive attitudes toward school, self-esteem and overall school effectiveness. We want the education of our children to be a joint effort of all stakeholders — parent, staff and students."

Buses install cameras for safety

Donna Ford
Director of Support Service

School bus surveillance cameras have been ordered for all buses. Cameras will help provide a safe and pleasant atmosphere on the school bus. School bus rules have been given to parents at registration to discuss the importance of safety with the children. The following rules are posted on the buses:

- The bus driver can assign seats;
- No profanity and profane gestures;
- No fighting and name calling;
- Keep hands and head inside the bus;
- Remain seated;
- Do not eat or drink on the bus — keep the bus clean;
- Do not destroy property;
- Be courteous; and
- Conversation aboard the bus must be kept at a normal speaking level.

Schools continue technology advancements

Jerry Christy
Director of Technology

Seamless integration of technology throughout the curriculum is the goal of Fort Benning schools.

To reach that goal, a number of steps have been taken in recent months to enhance the learning experiences available to students via Instructional Technology. Currently, each of the Fort Benning schools houses at least one computer providing access to the Internet. In compliance with Department of Defense Education Activity (DoDEA) regulations, every student is required to sign a Student Computer and Internet Access Agreement stating that they understand the conditions under which the equipment and service are provided and agree to comply with these standards.

As funding becomes available, Internet access will be delivered to media centers and classrooms to further facilitate the needs of learners. The wealth and variety of information resources available through the electronic media are rapidly establishing a presence in virtually every learning environment. No longer is Instructional Technology seen as the realm of the math and science departments. Not only are language and social studies teachers discovering the value of "mining" the Internet for resources, but art, music, physical education and other specialists are jumping aboard as well. Of course, the major beneficiaries of this excitement are the children and all indications are that things will only get better in the days ahead.

The Discourse Electronic classrooms in each of the Fort Benning schools will once again be hotbeds of learning activity in the new school year. In the Discourse classroom each student has a keyboard which also has a four-line display area where students can see what they are typing. These keyboards, known as Studycoms, are connected to the teacher's desktop computer. As students respond to questions or offer ideas their individual responses are displayed on the teacher's monitor in real-time.

Teachers can also display student responses on large-screen television monitor for further discussion, save all of the students' work, print hard copies, and even use the Discourse system to prepare reports of students' progress. In addition, the Discourse system can be used to collect and graph survey data and interface with multimedia equipment for classroom presentation. The real strength of the Discourse system is its ability to allow every student to be fully involved in classroom activities which the which the teacher can monitor and direct based on the level of understanding demonstrated.

As part of a continuing effort to improve the features and service of the Discourse system, Discourse Technologies, Inc. has asked the Fort Benning schools to partner with them in the development of direct links between the Discourse system and existing curriculum. In this partnership Discourse Technologies, Inc. will provide consultative services to teachers and administrators at Fort Benning in designing curriculum connections in all disciplines which will then be implemented in our schools. Pioneering these connections will benefit our students by truly making the Discourse experience seamless technology integration in their learning environment. We look forward to beginning this work and maximizing our utilization of this powerful technology which has proven to be extremely popular with our students and faculty.

Again this year we anticipate learning opportunities as Fort Benning students use telecommunications to connect with students in Micronesia, France, Japan and other countries through the programs of World School-Japan. In October, members of World School-Japan (an independent educational organization funded solely by corporate and private donations) will visit the islands of Yap State, Federated States of Micronesia for the purpose of providing opportunities for students to learn from and with each other. In previous years students in each of the participating countries have discovered cultural similarities and differences which they have discussed on-line. The strength of the World School-Japan offerings is the ease with which the projects can be woven into existing curriculum — the project does not become an "add on" to regular studies. Teachers are able to incorporate the on-line learning into math lessons, writing activities, social studies topics, etc.

DoDEA has established a site on the World Wide Web (www.odedodea.edu) to serve the clientele of stateside and overseas schools. Information available at the site includes: DoDEA mission, strategic plan, organizational structure, school locations, School-Home Partnership, Special Education services, Early Childhood programs, resources for the military family, web sites and e-mail addresses, presidential technology initiative, alumni references, student writings and more.

Benning improves schools

Donna Ford
Director of Support Services

There are several repair and maintenance projects recently completed, in progress or completion is expected soon. At Dexter Elementary School, standing seam metal roof should be completed by Sunday. Loyd School, White School, Wilson School, McBride School and Wilson School have completed their standing seam metal roofs. Funding for Faith Middle School to receive a new standing seam metal roof is anticipated in the near future.

A construction project underway at Faith Middle School is a new heating and air-conditioning system. Completion of this project is anticipated by the end of August. This past year 10 classrooms were added to Faith and they are presently in use.

A project is now funded for the renovation of Wilson and the construction is projected to start around Jan. 1, 1999. Classroom trailers will be leased and located behind Wilson for use while this project is being completed. The renovation will replace millwork in classrooms and offices, chalkboards, tack boards, doors, heating and air-conditioning system, lighting, exterior windows, upgrade of the electrical and fire alarm system and a Local Area Network (LAN) system for technology.

Recently approved for Faith, Stowers, White, Loyd and McBride is a LAN system, and all will undergo electrical upgrades as well. Dexter's renovation is projected for school year 1999-2000 to include a LAN system.

Schools offer various programs

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools, which consist of six elementary schools and one middle school, provide a wide variety of experiences for students and are committed to offering top quality programs for children who reside on post. Educational programs are designed to serve the unique needs of military families while remaining comparable to programs offered in Georgia schools. Special emphasis is placed upon accepting children at their current achievement levels and challenging them to progress as much as possible while they are attending the Fort Benning Schools.

Pre-Kindergarten — The Fort Benning Schools offer a half-day Pre-K program to children who reside on post and who will be four years old on or before Sept. 1, 1998. Pre-K teachers utilize a student-centered approach and encourage children to develop their abilities as they work in areas that focus on computer skills, art activities, creative play and academic readiness.

Special education — Special education programs for children with disabilities are available in the Fort Benning Schools for ages 3-4 and for children in grades Pre-K through 8. Parents who are concerned about their child's educational performance should contact their child's classroom teacher. Parents of preschoolers who live on post may refer directly to the Office of Special Education at 545-5520.

Gifted Program—Fort Benning Schools' program for gifted students is based on curriculum that emphasizes higher level thinking skills, creative problem solving skills, development of a strong self concept, aesthetic awareness and the development of positive interpersonal relations. Students in grades 3-5 are served in a self-contained program at Dexter School. At Faith Middle School, gifted students in grades sixth through eighth are provided accelerated academic instruction by regular classroom teachers. In addition, students will be provided a resource teacher of the gifted for enrichment activities.

English-as-a-second language — The English-As-A-Second Language program is designed to assist students whose native language is not English. Students are served at Faith Middle School and White Elementary School. Students in Pre-K and kindergarten are served within their home school in the regular classroom.

School Health Program —Registered nurses and nursing assistants serve as part of school faculties in the Fort Benning Schools. Each school houses a clinic staffed by school personnel prepared to administer first aid and handle medical emergencies and illness. Vision and hearing screenings are conducted each year for all students. Scoliosis screenings are scheduled for grades fourth through eighth.

Counseling program — Fort Benning Schools have a counseling program in each school. Counselors provide group guidance, individual counseling and consultation with teachers, students and parents. School counselors have an opportunity to meet with the students in each school for group lessons in self-understanding, expressing ideas, interpersonal relations, rights and responsibilities, decision making, motivation and problem solving. Teachers, individual students or parents can schedule referrals for school counseling services.

Principals: educators offer parents insight to post schools

White

Archer

Fort Benning's Edward A.White School is the home of the Lions. White is proud to be guided by their school mascot, "Eddie the Lion," who represents good citizenship, strong academic achievement, high self esteem and exceptional effort. Through an academically challenging curriculum, teachers provide a quality education to students of all levels. The highly skilled and respected staff conducts careful planning and assessment to ensure the needs of individual students are met. The school and community works together to build upon and improve the high quality of education provided to students.

Parents have a chance to become involved in the daily program as well as special curricular events and PTO programs. Volunteers are an active and welcome part of the school and parents are important partners in the educational process.

White is located on First Division Road and serves pre-kindergarten through fifth-grade students who reside in the north and center main post areas and fourth- and fifth-grades from McGraw Manor.

Dr. Judy Archer serves for the third year as the principal of White Elementary School. She earned her doctorate degree in Educational Administration and Instructional Supervision from the University of Kentucky. Prior to serving as principal, Archer served as Curriculum Coordinator with the Fort Benning Schools for six years. She has experience as an assistant superintendent and worked with the Georgia Department of Education. She believes that all children can learn, achieve and have a successful school experience when parents and the school work together.

Loyd

Mabry

The students of Loyd School begin the 1998-1999 school year with a high level academic skills and expectations from the entire school community said Principal Debra Mabry.

Through the Framework Process, an initiative to assist in the improvement of student achievement, the DoDEA (Department of Defense Education Activity) School Improvement Institute in Washington, provided extensive training for parents, teachers and administrators for the implementation of instructional change, in preparing students for the 21st century.

Through the school improvement process, teachers examine current programs, and celebrate those that work well, exploring literature on change, and abandon the outdated and embrace the new learning techniques and programs.

Parental involvement is steadily increasing at Loyd. This year's SHP (School Home Partnership) program and the PTO will continue to bring the community together through strategies that will enhance communication among faculty and families. The entire community touches the lives of these children, so as stake holders, SHP and PTO are not options, but a necessity. We will strengthen our current programs through a five-part initiative to include:

•Co-communicators — consistent two-way learning between the school and the student

•Co-supporters — school and home activities that promote student achievement

•Co-Learners — students, parents, school learning together

•Co-Teachers — involving parents in planning activities

•Co-Advocates, advisors, decision-makers — parents and educators as partners in problem solving and decision making to promote student learning

"It is in every one of us within this school community to link our students to future successes," Mabry said.

For parent participation information, call 544-3432.

McBride

Hicks

Morris R. McBride School is located at 700 Custer Road. It serves Pre-K through third grade students who live in McGraw Manor.

A "Sharing of Success" program has been added to the McBride monthly programs. It features a guest speaker talking to students about ways to become successful. After-school club meetings are also available to students who want to participate in school-related activities. These clubs include a school newspaper and a technology and math club.

The McBride staff believes in educating all students with quality curriculum resulting in high levels of academic performance. Teachers' goals include student mastery of core skills and exhibition of positive social-emotional behaviors and attitudes. The school is organized in accordance with the belief that all students can learn essential skills and the students themselves have adopted the slogan "I can and I will do my very best."

The McBride staff also believes that parent participation has a very positive impact on student achievement. Parents are encouraged to take an active interest in their child's school. This can be done by volunteering for classroom and school activities, participating in the Parent Teacher Organization and visiting the school to observe how the school functions. Parents are needed to volunteer in the library, computer lab and classrooms. Parents are encouraged to make reservations to eat lunch with their children whenever their schedules make it possible (call the school office).

Del Hicks is in his tenth year as principal of McBride School. Hicks holds a bachelor's degree and a master's degree from Northern Illinois University and an educational specialist's degree from Troy State University.

Faith

Wilson

Gail Wilson, Director of Staff Development, will serve as Interim Principal at Faith School. During her 19-year-career with the Fort Benning Schools, Wilson has been a classroom teacher, middle school assistant principal and elementary school principal. She holds a master's degree in education from Columbus State University and an educational specialist's degree from West Georgia College.

Technology at Faith Middle School has exploded in the past year, and 1998-1999 promises to be no different. Students and teachers will have access to a wide variety of technology that includes everything from composing digital music to Internet access.

Faith operates a Discourse lab which allows teachers to present a lesson in any curriculum via a computer terminal which then allows the students to respond to any part of the lesson, either individually or as an entire class, via individual keyboards called studycoms. Responses can be chosen by the teacher and displayed (anonymously or by name) for the class to view and discuss. This system also ensures that every student gets to answer every question, but allows the shy student to answer without fear of being incorrect or embarrassed.

The new PC lab provides students with multimedia computers that are used for creating instructional posters, PowerPoint slide presentations complete with animation and word processing applications. Data base, spreadsheet and Internet research through the Fort Benning server. Students and teachers enjoy the Data Projection room where they can present multimedia creations, participate in live teleconferencing or learn from educational laser discs.

Digital cameras and scanners are used by Language Arts classes to create books to present to kindergartners. MIDI software allows music students to create digitally processed music through computers and keyboards. Video cameras and 35 millimeter cameras have been a staple for many years for students to create slide shows on anything of interest.

Teachers, students and staff look forward to another technology-filled year at Faith. With the combination of technology available and the creativity and enthusiasm for incorporating technology into Faith's curriculum, children at Faith will, indeed "explore the outer limits."

Wilson

Parker

Wilson Elementary School serves children and families of the Indianhead Terrace housing area. Located at 112 Lavoie Avenue, it is home of the "Wilson Wildcats" with an enrollment of approximately 425 students from Pre-K through fifth grade.

Students have daily exposure to computers in the classroom, a networked multimedia PC lab and the media center. Students create their own projects using the Internet, digital cameras, video and CD Roms.

Parents can find up-to-date information at any time of the day by accessing the Wilson web site at http://www.mindspring.com/wilsones/Wilson_School.html.

Parental involvement is vital to student success. Wilson School encourages volunteers to support school programs in many ways.

Wilson will sponsor a Parent Volunteer Night on Sept. 3. Parents are encouraged to come to this session to meet teachers, find out about the variety of opportunities and programs available and sign up as volunteers.

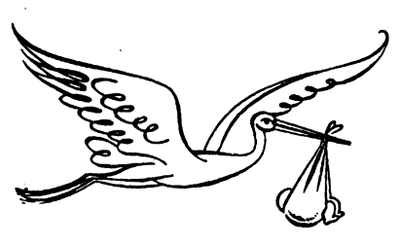
Phyllis Parker begins her ninth year as principal at Wilson School. Prior to coming to Wilson, she was a classroom teacher and an assistant principal in the Fort Benning School System. Parker holds a bachelor's degree from Albany State University, a master's degree from Valdosta State University and an educational specialist's degree from Troy State University. Parker is a graduate of Leadership Columbus and remains active in the Youth Leadership program. She is also a graduate of the Principal's Center at the Harvard Graduate School of Education.

"At Wilson, we believe that our children are our most valued and treasured resource," Parker said. "We've dedicated ourselves to providing them with the best education possible."

Fort Benning School menus offer nutritious

Gwynn Maddox
Director of Food Service

Fort Benning Schools offer nutritious meals every day. Meals are available to all students at regular, reduced or free price.



School menus promote good nutrition for growing children and follow through with well balanced meals that limit fat, cholesterol, sugar and sodium. That's why items are baked instead of fried and why whole grain breads and lowfat products are so plentiful on the menu. Studies confirm that children who eat right have a better chance to succeed in school.

Studies on the time between breakfast and the beginning of the school day indicate the shorter the elapsed time, the better the performance of the student. So participation in the breakfast program in schools where breakfast is offered is encouraged. Breakfast is served at Loyd, McBride, Stowers and Wilson schools.

The lunch menu provides approximately one third of the Recommended Daily Allowance for children as specified by the National Research Council and National Academy of Sciences and limits fat to 30 percent of total calorie intake. Special attention to food preferences is considered in planning enjoyable meals.

The Fort Benning Schools offer reduced or free meals to eligible children because of our participation in the federally assisted National School Lunchroom Program. Eligibility is determined following guidelines established by the Georgia Department of Education and includes factors such as number of people who live in the household and income of the household. The parent or sponsor can fill out an application, which may be picked up at any cafeteria (Dexter, Faith, Loyd, McBride, Stowers, White and Wilson) or at the Administration Offices on Custer Road. The cost for full price breakfast is $.60 and lunch $1. Reduced prices are breakfast for $.30 and lunch $.60.

Schools provide special education program

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

When the words "special education" are heard, most people would probably think of children in wheelchairs, unable to do anything for themselves. That stereotype has long since been forgotten in schools around the country, especially Fort Benning schools.

In the Fort Benning schools, special education incorporates students who are learning impaired, emotionally impaired, communication impaired, physically impaired and developmentally delayed.

The goal of special education, said Tommye Woods, director of special education, is to mesh these students into the regular classroom.

"We hope that you would go into a classroom and have a hard time trying to find the special education student," Woods said.

The special education program consists of 22 staff members. There are six speech and language pathologists, 14 special education teachers and two preschool special education teachers. Two of the special education teaching slots are to be filled this upcoming school year.

"Special education services and speech services are available in all seven schools," Woods said. "We try to serve the children as much as possible in their home schools."

"As you can imagine, many, many kids transfer in from other places and that's quite a challenge to accommodate," Woods went on to explain. "All of the children have a label or category — they have to do that in order to make them eligible for services."

How they go on to serve the students is very individualized. Each student has an Individual Education Program, which is a plan specifically for that student.

"What we're trying to do is not immediately move that child towards special education; that isn't the goal — the goal is can we accommodate that child without ever having to put the label on them," Woods said.

For instance, if a child is having a great deal of difficulty with reading, and the teacher hasn't seen a lot of progress, first the teacher might send them to remedial reading. If that child is still having difficulty, the teacher might call a team together.

At that point, the child's vision and hearing will be tested to rule that out as the cause of the problem. They will then look at the strategies that the teacher is using, because that strategy might work for every other student but that student. The teacher is equipped with a strategy notebook and can try different strategies to see if they can find one that works for that student.

If that does not solve the problem, the student is then referred for educational and psychoeducational testing after meeting with parents. After the testing, the parent comes back and the test results are discussed.

"From there, we ask, then what can we do?" Woods explained. "Because we tested doesn't automatically mean the student is eligible. A lot of times what it does is give us more strategies, we learn a little more about the child."

The next step is how to deliver that service. It may be checking with the child every week to monitoring them in the classroom to having them in a self-contained model, where the student needs to spend most of their time in special education.

"The goal is not to see how many students we can put in special education — the goal is how many students we can make successful in the regular classroom," Woods said.

Rather than pull the students from their classroom, there are co-teachers, especially at Faith Middle School, which consists of a regular classroom teacher and a special education teacher. The beauty of it, Woods said, that after working with the special education teacher, the regular classroom teacher picks up different strategies to further use in the classroom.

"The regular teacher may be lecturing and the special education teacher is jotting down salient points. Planning is critical for both teachers," Woods said.

For preschoolers, the special education takes place directly in the classroom. The occupational therapist, physical therapist and speech pathologist come directly into the classroom.

"For three- and four-year-olds, their natural environment is play. While the child is playing, the speech pathologist will be working on vocabulary while the child is engaged in play. What we do in special education has to relate back to regular education," Woods explained.

For this school year, Woods said the goals are more inclusive teaching and more technology.

The ultimate goal, though, is to provide the special education students the services they need while trying as much as possible to keep them within the mainstream of the school, so they are no different than any other student.

DoD Schools emphasize home-school partnership

Staff Sgt. Alicia K. Borlik
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The doors to Department of Defense Dependents Schools are open wide — to students and parents, said Lillian Gonzalez, director of the Department of Defense Education Activity.

In response to recent concerns voiced by parents, Gonzalez said the education activity is re-emphasizing the importance of the school-home partnership — cooperation between parents and educators.

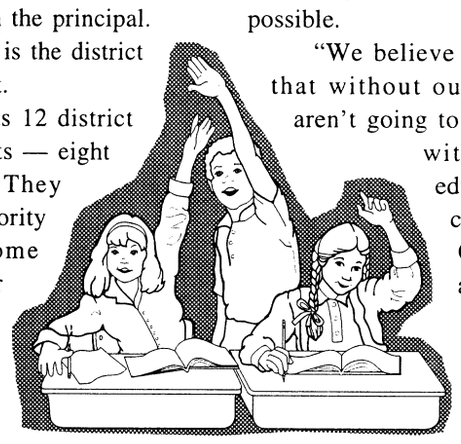
Parents say they don't feel they have enough information, Gonzalez said. "One of the major thrusts this year is to make sure that they are fully informed."

Increasing parental involvement has been an ongoing DoD education goal for three years. "I think we've made progress. We have opened up more avenues to our parents than we ever had," she said.

While attending recent parents meetings in Europe, however, Gonzalez was disheartened to learn that DoD schools were not as open with information as she wants them to be.

"My focus, commitment, to parents is that we will open up every single door, and they will have access to everything necessary for them to make the kinds of decisions we want them to make about the education of our children," she emphasized.

The first doors to open are those to the schools themselves. "We are asking our principals to conduct meetings so (parents) can see information used to make decisions about staffing, budget and resources in schools," she said.



Parents in Europe recently raised concerns about teacher to student ratios and the number of teachers in subjects such as music and art — why they might have a teacher for one subject but not the other.

Part of the parent involvement process is sharing information such as how positions are allocated, Gonzalez said.

Unfortunately, she said, some information wasn't communicated to the broader community — for instance, parents sometimes weren't told how school faculties were assigned.

Gonzalez also wants to make sure concerned parents know the communications channels. There was a feeling, she said, that no one was around at local levels to hear their concerns.

Parents with an issue related to a child's education should start with the teacher, she explained. If the issue cannot be resolved at the classroom level, then it should be raised with the principal. The next step is the district superintendent.

"DoDDS has 12 district superintendents — eight in Europe. They have the authority to make some decisions for that district," Gonzalez said. "If it's ... an area issue, there is an area superintendent that deals with all the Europe issues, for example."

Gonzalez promised that the names and phone numbers of these individuals will be made available to all parents. "We have to make sure our parents understand where they can go for assistance."

There will always be issues that can't be resolved, she admitted, but the point is to start raising them at the local level.

"If parents think they have nowhere to go past the classroom except to (DoD Dependents Schools)headquarters, just the time involved can be frustrating," she said. "We want them to get the response as quickly as possible.

"We believe very strongly that without our parents we aren't going to be successful with the education of our children," Gonzalez added.

"We want to make sure they are involved in their children's education and involved with us in the decision-making process.

She encouraged parents to visit the schools and participate in the school advisory committee.

"We want them to help us teach our children. We do want them to come and help us learn about our children. We value their input," she said.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school:

•Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.

•Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.

•Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

WHAT MAKES SPECIAL FORCES SO SPECIAL?

Picture yourself as a member of a Special Forces "A Team," a dynamic 12-man unit with real-world missions across the globe.

Yours is a unique brotherhood. You belong to a tight-knit group of men of the highest mental and physical caliber. And you receive specialized training, tough challenges and the prestige that comes with wearing the green beret.

If you are currently serving in the Army or have prior service in special operations, you could be the man we need for the Army's Special Forces.

A Special Forces recruiting team will visit your installation in the next few weeks. Go ahead. Find out what makes Special Forces so special.

Equality Day

Benning women battle for softball title

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

In celebration of Women's Equality Day, the post Equal Opportunity Office sponsored a Women's Equality Day Softball Tournament Saturday.

Although only one team stepped onto Gowdy Field to participate, the tournament was still held as the 20-plus member team of Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, divided into two teams and played each other.

"We just thought we'd try something different," said Sgt. 1st Class Ernest Jett, post EO advisor. "There are always holding male sports tournaments so we decided to try women's softball hoping we would get better participation."

The team, which was composed of Co. A Soldiers and a handful of civilian employees and family members, was broken down into Top's Cats, coached by 1st Sgt. Joseph Young, and the Commander's Crew, coached by Capt. William Snider, the company's commander.

In the first game of the tournament, the bats of Top's Cats were on fire as they belted in 26 runs during the three-inning game. Despite a late rally by the Crew, Top's Cats claimed victory 26-8.

Snider's team vowed to fight back as the commander's group took to the plate at the start of the second game. In a fierce battle of pitching and batting skills, both teams vied for the lead throughout the game. It wasn't until the final inning when Top's Cats clawed their way back to take the second game 21-20.

While the participation level wasn't quite what Jett had expected, he said he was happy with those who had showed up to play.

"At first it seemed like a lot of people didn't want to play. After we got out there and started playing, I think everyone had a good time though," said Top's Cats player Roselyn Ho Ching.

Young, who was responsible for gathering his company's softball team, said he saw the tournament as a way to recognize the females in his company and those who work around post.

"That was their day. If they remember nothing else about their time here, they will remember that day."

Once the game was finished, spectators and participants were treated to chicken, hotdogs and hamburgers compliments of the volunteer chefs.

In addition to thanking the participants, Young said he would also like to thank the individuals and businesses that sponsored the event.

FTU offers trainees a second chance

ITB unit helps Soldiers recover from injury, meet standards

Ed Thomas
Troy State University — Fort Benning

The 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade, Fitness Training Unit (FTU) at Sand Hill reconditions injured trainees and conditions those who fail to meet minimum physical fitness (PT) standards when they arrive for training.

For the injured or physically unprepared trainees who pass through the FTU, it is an intense and demanding experience that is as much mental as physical.

"Many of the trainees who come to the FTU are first in need of mental toughness," said FTU Commandant Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Bonham. "They often arrive here with poor self-esteem and low personal expectations. Our initial task is to help them change their minds. Only then can we help them transform their bodies."

Injured trainees are assigned to Staff Sgt. Raul Munoz. Like other NCOs selected for FTU duty, Munoz is fit and motivated with more than a year of experience "on the trail" as a drill sergeant.

"Every injured trainee's situation is different, and our task is to recondition and prepare them to avoid other injuries if and when they return to training," he said. "While they're here at the FTU, we help them heal themselves, lose or gain weight, improve their running form and military bearing, develop good eating habits and improve their general motor skills. We also encourage them to learn more about PT once they leave the FTU."

The trainee reconditioning program is a team effort between the FTU cadre and the Physical Therapy Department at Winder Clinic, Munoz said.

"Physical Therapist Capt. David Meyer advises me of the trainee's injury and recommends a specific exercise prescription. Meyer visits the FTU once a week, and we review each trainee's progress."

Lower extremity stress-related injuries are common, Munoz said.

Pvt. Roger Tabares is recovering from a fractured heel. "I'll soon be ready to train again, and I'll always remember Drill Sergeant Munoz and the rehab team," he said. "They motivate us to improve and to believe in ourselves and each other."

While the injured mend themselves through exercise, those who fail their initial PT test spend hours each day squeezing out one more push-up, sit-up or a few less seconds on the one-mile run.

Staff Sgt. Derrick Smith explained that new recruits are required to do a minimum of 13 push-ups, 25 sit-ups and run a mile in nine minutes or less. Those who fail one or more of the events are sent to the FTU.

"For some men, going on to basic training comes down to a few repetitions or seconds," said Smith. "Most trainees are here because they failed the push-up event or could not meet the run standard."

Mornings at the FTU are dedicated to 90 minutes of cardiovascular training. Afternoons include 90 minutes of either push-up or sit-up improvement drills.

"We normally have only three weeks to condition the physically deficient trainee," said Smith. Reconditioning can take longer, and we will do everything possible to help those willing to make the total commitment."

U. S. Army Physical Fitness School Chief of Doctrine Frank Palkoska calls FTU duty one of the toughest and most important fitness-related missions in the Army.

"The FTU drill sergeant has to be a personal trainer, therapist and motivator," he said. "Every trainee salvaged by the FTU makes the Army stronger and more prepared."

Palkoska noted that the nation's youth are fatter and less fit than ever before.

He said the lessons being learned at the FTU will pay dividends if and when a national crisis requires the Army to quickly transform many young civilians into Soldiers.

"The FTU could well help us through the future," he said. "Every drill sergeant who has served in the FTU deserves credit for helping to build the concept."

Ed Thomas

Trainees at the Fitness Training Unit execute a back extension between sets of push-ups during a training session. Each day, the FTU dedicates more than 90 minutes to cardiovascular training and 90 minutes to push-up and sit-up improvement.
