Fort Benning — The Land and The People

It's been a few months since the distribution of the popular history book, Fort Benning-The Land and The People, was completed. All evidence indicates that the book is a resounding success. The book is extremely well written and produced in both hard and soft covers.

Written by Sharyn Kane and Richard Keeton under contract with the National Park Service for Fort Benning, the book looks at the total history of human occupation of the military reservation. Beginning with the earliest Native Americans, through colonization by people of European and African extraction, and culminating with the tenure of the U.S. Army, Fort Benning has witnessed great events and common daily community life for over 10,000 years. It is a sketch of the broad scope of social and occasionally unsocial activity in the region that the book is designed to illustrate.

The impetus for writing the book came from a suggestion by John Ehrenhard and John Jameson of the National Park Service and the commitment of Fort Benning to perform as a good steward of its cultural resources. Discussions between the park service and Fort Benning in late 1994 found that cultural resource management program improvement was needed in public education and awareness about cultural resources on post. After all, even at that time, there were about 1,000 known archeological sites on the installation and well over 500 historical buildings within the Main Post Historic District.

While few people realized these valuable resources were present, much less their extent, it wasn't a simple static description of archeological sites and buildings that was needed. In isolation, archeological sites and buildings are meaningless; it is their association with people and human events that makes them the subject of our interest and worthy of our conservation efforts.

Jesus provides inspiration

Chaplain (Capt.) James Blount
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

I greatly question the wisdom of setting up a role model other than Jesus Christ for our children, ourselves or anyone else. Yet we regularly tell our kids to look up to this person or be that; then when they fall from their exalted position, and you can be sure that they will, we are so shocked and disappointed.

reflections

We ask ourselves, "Who in the world these days can we trust to be a role model for our children?"

We are desperately searching for that one person who says the right thing and then backs it up with the way he lives his life. We are desperately searching for someone who will be faithful to us and our children. That person is Jesus Christ, the son of God. He is always faithful. He is the same yesterday, today and forever. He always speaks and does what is righteous.

He, and he alone, is the one who can be trusted to be the role model for our children. What would Jesus say? What would Jesus do? These are the questions that our kids should ask themselves, and we should be there with Bible in hand to help them answer these questions.

Of course, prayer should be a vital part of this process as we ask God to enlighten us.

We must never be fooled by those who would set themselves up as role models claiming to have all the answers and know the truth, and we must never put another person in that position. We must never set someone up as a model of goodness and righteousness. All of it would be a lie and deception. There is no one good and righteous but God, and he alone has all the answers and the truth. How hurtful, then, it must be for God to see us holding others up as role models for our children when he had his son bear the sins of the whole world, past, present and future, for our children.

It is Jesus Christ who gives eternal life. Jesus Christ must be our role model and our children's role model. What in the world are we doing putting others above Christ? By doing so, what are we teaching our kids? Read John 10:1-18.

Ministries help families through crises

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries

In her book, Traits of a Healthy Family, Dolores Curran identifies traits which healthy families seem to have.

Her research showed that healthy families:

- •communicate and listen;
- •affirm and support one another;
- •teach respect for others;
- •develop a sense of trust;
- •exhibit a sense of shared responsibility;
- •teach a sense of right and wrong;
- •respect the privacy of one another;
- •value service to others;
- •foster family time and conversation;
- •share leisure time; and
- •admit and seek help for problems.

Probably the most challenging trait is the last because "if the family was so healthy, why seek out help for a problem?" That is exactly what makes healthy families healthy.

Admitting that there are problems that go beyond their present ability to resolve without outside intervention does not devote weakness.

Let me ask you this question: If you were to break your leg or one of your family members were to do so, would you not seek out medical attention? Not to do so would not only be wrong, but it would be way less than an intelligent decision.

Why then is it wrong to seek out professional help when your family is experiencing a situation that is wreaking havoc in your family? It does not make much sense does it?

The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center exists to help you and your family through those crises every family incurs. Those who do, have found seeking out pastoral care can and does set their family back on the road to family wellness.

All hunters born on or after Jan. 1, 1961 must attend an approved hunter safety course if they wish to hunt on Fort Benning or in the state of Georgia.

For more information, call Harley Chase at 545-4812.

Bowling centers hold tourney — Fort Benning Bowling Centers are conducting a 9 Pin No-Tap Doubles Tournament through Nov. 30.

For more information, call tournament chairman Bill Kagee at 545-4736.

Post opens disc golf course — Fort Benning now has a disc golf course. During this game, players throw a disc from a concrete tee area. Wherever the disc comes to rest, players throw again from that spot. To make their "putt," players throw the disc into a metal target. The player with the fewest number of strokes wins.

Golf discs are now available at Outdoor Recreation, Rental and Storage, in Building 1707.

The course is located at Russ Pond and there is no charge to use the course. The rules of the game are posted at the practice area.

Soldiers search for ultimate physique

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet acting editor

Many people work out regularly and watch their diet in an effort to improve the way their bodies look, but two Fort Benning Soldiers are going to the extreme in their quest for the ultimate physique.

Although servicemembers have an obligation to stay physically fit, Roland Huff and Patricia Tudor are taking fitness to a new level as they enter the realm of competitive bodybuilding.

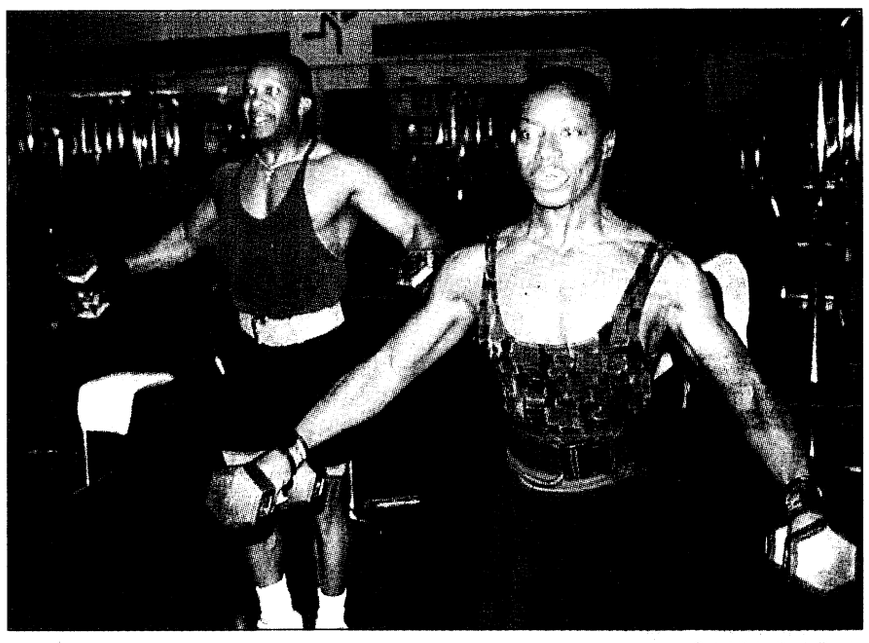
Although small in stature, five-foot, four-inch Huff and four-foot, 11-inch Tudor towered over their competitors as they captured the Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning titles of the 1998 Fort Benning Bodybuilding Championships last month.

For Huff, a fitness instructor at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS), and Tudor, a platoon sergeant with the 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), bodybuilding not only allows them to show off their chiseled features, but improve their overall health and well-being.

"One of the main reasons I got into to bodybuilding is for health reasons," said 35-year-old Huff, who has been bodybuilding for about four years. "Bodybuilding is so much more than working out. You have to watch your diet and pretty much cut out all of the things that are bad for you."

Tudor, a self-proclaimed junk food addict, said the diet aspect is perhaps the hardest part of getting into ready for a competition.

"Weightlifting is the easy part. Diet and discipline are definitely the hard parts," she said. "There are times when you want to splurge, but you have to tell yourself that you can't. There are also times when you want to quit, but you can't."



In addition to restricting their diet, Tudor and Huff also try to spend as much time in the gym as possible.

Besides morning physical training (PT) with their units, the two often conduct additional workout sessions two to three times a day up to six days a week.

"Sometimes it's more than that and sometimes it's less depending on if we're in training for a competition," 30-year-old Tudor said.

Despite the demands of bodybuilding, Huff and Tudor insist that the sport is worth the effort.

"It's all worth it, especially after a competition when someone comes up to you and asks you how you got started," Huff said. "That's one of the best things about bodybuilding — you can definitely see the results of the work you put into it."

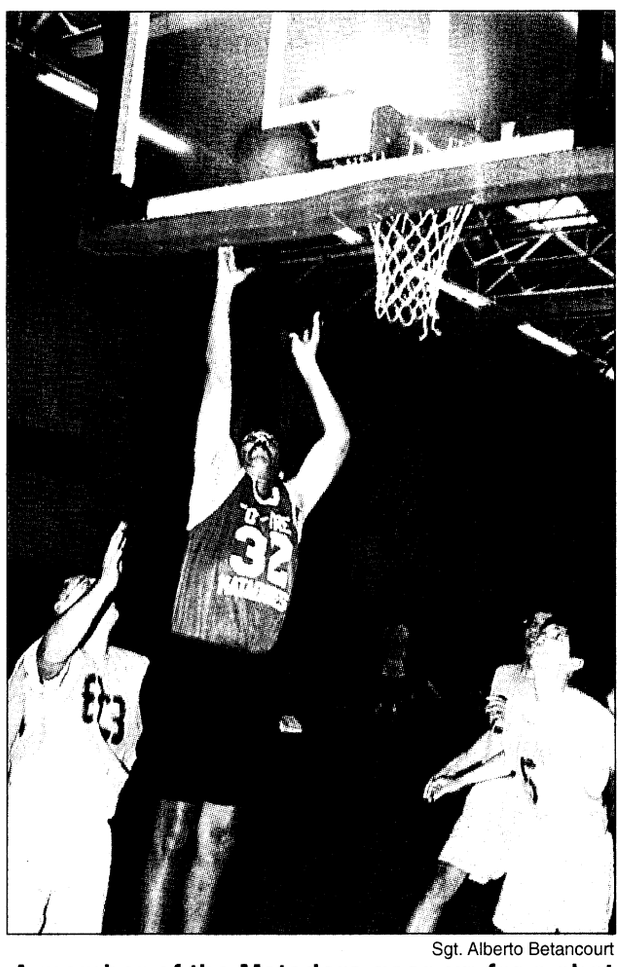
Patricia Tudor and Roland Huff complete dumb bell raises during a recent workout session in Infantry Hall's Fitness Center.



While the Fort Benning competition rewarded Huff and Tudor for their efforts, both said they still have a long way to go.

"Competitive bodybuilders are never happy with their bodies regardless," Huff said. "We are constantly coming up with ways we can improve our bodies and improve our fitness level."

While the ultimate physique may keep both bodybuilding, Tudor, who has won 13 titles including last year's Fort Benning title in the year-and-a-half she's been bodybuilding, said her goal is to work towards the Junior Nationals, which is the step before the professional level.

"I've still got a lot of work to do, but maybe one day I'll get there," she said. "And if I don't, I will know in my heart I

Students plow past faculty

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt

A member of the Matadors goes up for a shot during a basketball game Saturday at Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

While the NBA remained idle, basketball action sizzled inside Audie Murphy Fitness Center Saturday.

With each team having two victories and the Commander's Trophy on the line, the Matadors from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Officer Course, plowed past the Instructors of the school's Department of Joint and Combined Operations, 46-20.

"I couldn't think of a better way of ending my tenure as course director, than having my student's victory today and winning the Commander's Trophy," said Roger Barros, course director, USARSA, CGSOC.

Early jitters plagued both sides with air balls and erratic passing.

But when the nervous cloud cleared, the Matadors' Jeff "Shake" Baker, christened the game with a couple from the line for an early 2-0 lead.

Baker's points cleared the path for a 15-0 Matadors' run.

Frustrated with the strangling defense applied on them, the Instructors were not allowed inside the paint and were forced to shoot from outside the perimeter. Time and time again, Baker, who dominated underneath, came up with the ball, keeping the Matadors in control of the game.

After almost 10 minutes of no points, Robert Mendoza finally removed the goose egg for the Instructors with a bucket, still trailing 15-2.

The Matadors continued their on-slaught with excellent ball handling by Roberto Ramirez and Jose "Piper" Pibernus, extending their lead 32-10 at the half.

Despite the Matadors' committing 20 fouls throughout the game, the Instructors could not capitalize.

Perhaps it was the crowd, who was overwhelmingly in support of the Matadors, that made it difficult for the Instructors to shoot accurately from the floor or the line.

One of the crowd favorites was Homer Harkins, who battled hard underneath and was subject to several fouls. Each time he went to the line, every fan stood, stomped their feet and yelled out causing a deafening noise which distracted him. Harkins managed to sink a couple, but the Instructors still trailed 39-14.

The Instructors managed, behind Harkins and Mendoza, to close the gap by the half 40-20.

However, the Matadors pressed-on, adding three more buckets for the 46-20 victory.

"We only practiced a week," said Baker as his teammates ran around the court holding the Commander's Trophy high in the air. "This was a good team effort. Good passing and good defense equals victory. The Instructors played hard."

As the crowd celebrated with the victorious Matadors, the Instructors watched with their heads held high.

"Even though we lost, we accomplished a lot of sportsmanship," Mendoza said. "That's what it's all about."

Runners celebrate Native American Month during race

People from across Fort Benning gathered Nov. 6 to participate in the Native American 5K run. The run, which stretched from the corner of Ingersoll and Vibbert, around the Mini Mall, to Dexter School and ending at Doughboy Stadium, was held in honor of Native American History Month.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Billy Carmichael, equal opportunity adviser for the Infantry Training Brigade, the run was held to honor Native Americans because they "have contributed a great deal to our nation."

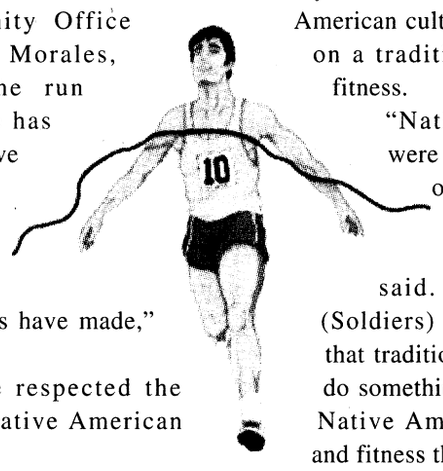
"They have participated in every military conflict the U.S. has been involved in," Carmichael said. "It is very important that we honor Native Americans and the diversity in our country."

Honoring diversity and keeping Native American heritage alive seemed to be important in the eyes of the runners.

"Knowledge of the culture is declining," said Glenn Svebek, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "We are losing the culture and people need to be aware of their roots because it strengthens family values."

Equal Opportunity Office NCOIC, Jose Morales, participated in the run because he said he has always admired Native American culture.

"I have always respected the contributions that the Native Americans have made," Morales said.



Morales said he respected the resiliency of the Native American culture.

"They were moved from their land during The Trail of Tears westward to land that they couldn't raise any crops on. Even then, they were still able to live off the land," Morales said.

Both Morales and Carmichael agreed it was important to celebrate one's ancestry to keep the heritage alive and the legacy going.

"We are trying to celebrate the culture the Native Americans have brought forward to this great country of ours," Carmichael said.

Carmichael said the run was not only celebrating Native American culture, but carrying on a tradition of physical fitness.

"Native Americans were the first warriors on this continent," Carmichael said. "Since we (Soldiers) are carrying on that tradition, we wanted to do something that promotes Native American heritage and fitness therein."

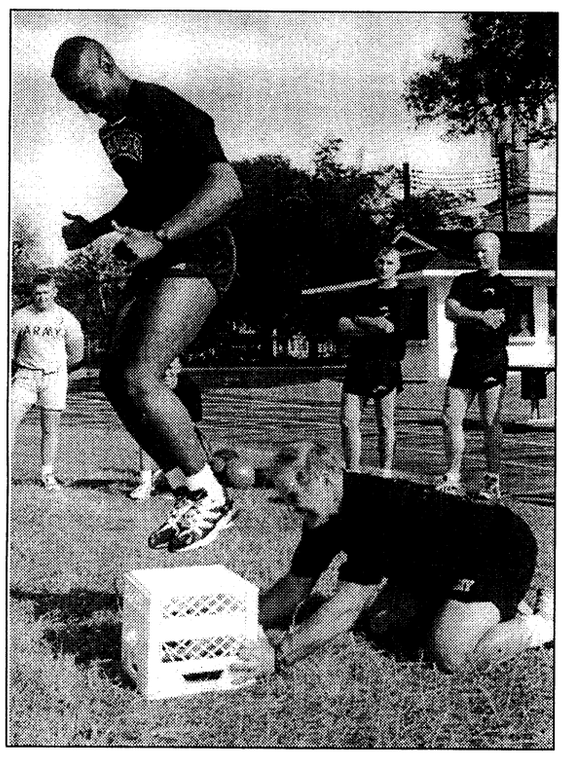
Bulls coach hosts fitness workshop

Ed Thomas, Ed.D.
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) recently hosted a physical training workshop led by Al Vermeil, the strength and conditioning coach for the Chicago Bulls.

Approximately 30 Soldiers attended the three-hour session held at Doughboy Stadium Nov. 4.

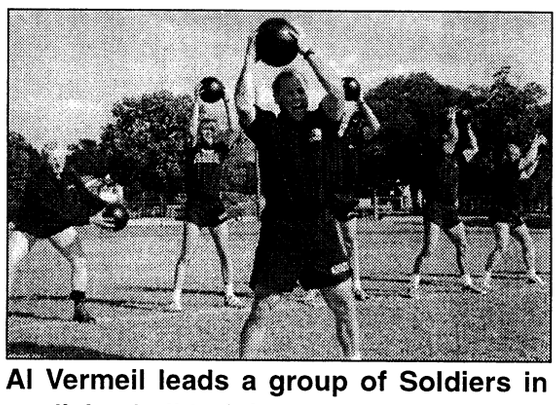
Vermeil is the only coach to have a World Championship ring from the National Football League and the National Basketball Association. He was the strength and conditioning coach for the San Francisco 49ers when they won the Super Bowl in 1982 and has been conditioning the Bulls since 1985.



"For over three decades, Coach Vermeil has been helping novice and world-class male and female athletes become stronger, faster and more agile while avoiding injuries. We can apply many of his low-tech principles and methods to mass training, and they fit into our vision for tomorrow's physical training (PT)," said USAPFS Chief of Doctrine Frank Palkoska. "His assessments are simple and his physical training techniques are ingenious."

Vermeil began the workshop by stressing the importance of good posture and identification of structural deficiencies that impair performance and lead to injuries. "First we build core balance and strength to protect the spine. Lower and upper body development follows, with attention to stabilization, basic motor skills, and finally, explosive power. The tools we use are simple, inexpensive and often exportable to the field," he said.

Several Soldiers volunteered to be analyzed. Vermeil pinpointed their previous lingering injuries and predicted further problems for those with structural deficiencies that, he explained, might be corrected through proper physical reconditioning.



"We use low-tech high payoff tools like medicine balls," Vermeil said. "In the field, you can use sandbags, rocks or other expedient objects, but it's important to use the ball in garrison to develop proper technique. In the beginning, it's all about precision. Poorly executed training will impede progress or even lead to regress. Sound basic PT will lead to mastery of motor skills like climbing, jumping, running and so on. Motor skills can then be adapted to battlefield requirements."

"Successful world-class practitioners like Coach Vermeil were not consulted when the current PT doctrine was developed in the early 1980s," said Steve VanCamp, Instructional Systems Specialist at the USAPFS. "Back then theorists holding terminal degrees but often lacking real world experience in human performance led the way. Only in the last few years, since the USAPFS moved closer to the Infantry, have we begun to retool PT doctrine for the battlefield. As we develop a more sophisticated definition of battle-focused PT, experts like Coach Vermeil will be of great value."

Al Vermeil leads a group of Soldiers in medicine ball training.

"In many ways, the physical skills required of athletes are those required of Soldiers," said USAPFS Physical Therapist Capt. Danny McMillian. "Yet most Army PT demands very little movement skill. If we can make PT more motor skills intensive, Soldiers will be better prepared for the types of physical tasks required for real-world missions."

"The idea of progressing from mechanically efficient physical training to motor skills, and applying it all to the METL is long overdue," said Capt. Mitch Watkins, a workshop participant. "It sounds quite a bit like post-WWII doctrine, and I've always wondered how our current PT became so unsophisticated. As an Infantry officer, I deeply appreciate the efforts of the Fitness School to reshape physical training for the battlefield."

"Physical readiness is a serious national security issue," Vermeil said. "The average young American has bad posture, extremely weak core strength and very poor motor skills. Even the world-class athletes I'm asked to analyze are often malformed. I'm honored that the Fitness School has called on me for input. If anybody can rationally frame the problem and formulate a workable plan to solve it, I believe it is the Army Fitness School team."

"We're determined to do just that," said USAPFS Commandant Col. Steve Cellucci. "It is reassuring to know that people like Coach Vermeil agree with our direction and are willing to contribute to the effort."

USARSA to hold debate during protest

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Those who want to close the U.S. Army School of Americas (USARSA) and the general public alike are being invited to attend a debate in the North Hall of the Columbus Iron Works tomorrow from noon to 2 p.m.

Bus transportation for protestors will depart from the protest site at 11:30 a.m. and return about 2:30 p.m.

Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant of USARSA, will be on hand to debate leaders from the SOA Watch. He will also answer questions posed to him from the floor.

Post commander, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst said that since SOA Watch leadership is encouraging protestors to break the law and suffer the consequences, they should hear both sides in order to make an intelligent, rational decision before engaging in an illegal act which could lead to a fine or imprisonment.

Key military and political leaders, including General Charles Wilhelm, the Commander-in-Chief of U.S. Southern Command, and Retired General Barry McCaffrey, our nation's "Drug Czar," have stated that they need USARSA to carry out national policies in Latin America. Both have gone on record noting that if USARSA did not exist, "we would have to invent one."

USARSA mission is to provide doctrinally sound, relevant military education and training to the nations of Latin America, while promoting democratic values and respect for human rights, and fostering cooperation among the multinational military forces.

•Every course taught at USARSA includes human rights training.

•USARSA emphasizes civilian control of the military.

•Students are able to experience first-hand (and take home) an appreciation of U.S. culture and the American way of life.

USARSA has undergone significant change since the end of the Cold War. With the change in the National Strategy from Containment to Engagement and Enlargement, the School's curriculum has shifted and now includes courses in civil-military operations, peace operations, counterdrug operations, resource management, border observation, democratic sustainment, humanitarian demining, medical assistance and human rights train-the-trainer.

Because all courses at USARSA are taught in Spanish, USARSA is able to reach a much broader Latin American audience (to include officers, NCOs, enlisted Soldiers, police and civilians) than at other U.S. military schools (where students must speak English to attend).

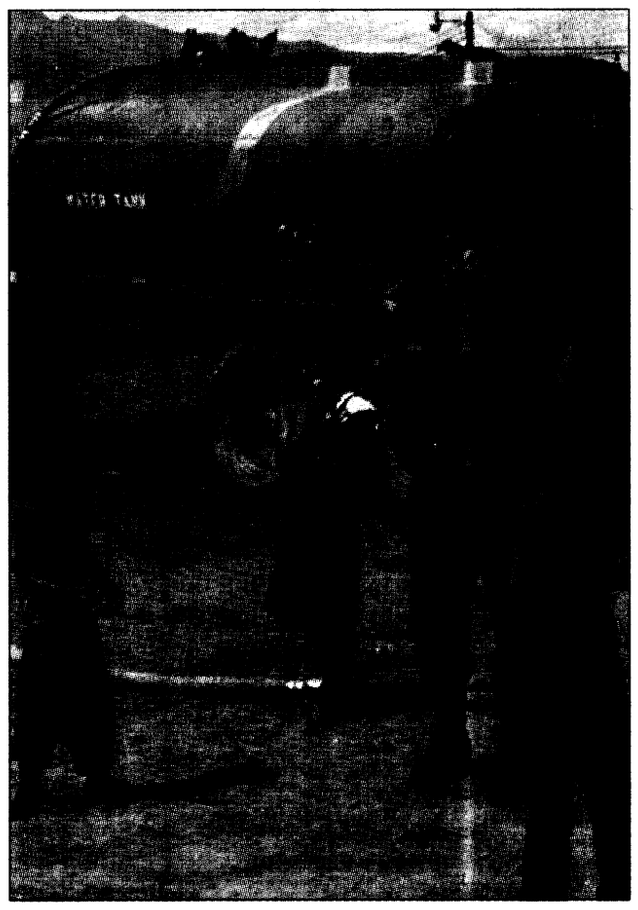
USARSA teaches a broad spectrum of courses (54 total) in three general categories: professional military education, functional, and technical.

This includes courses in piloting and maintaining helicopters. Because of Latin America's poor infrastructure and geography, helicopters are one of the most critical assets in supporting counternarcotics operations.

The majority of the students who attend USARSA now come from Mexico and the Andean Ridge countries (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru), key countries in this nation's war on drugs.

USARSA has been in existence for over 50 years and has graduated more than 58,000 students. Only a very small percentage of those students have ever been linked to human rights violations. Torture is not taught at USARSA and never was.

Human rights training at USARSA is more comprehensive than human rights training at any other U.S. military school. This instruction is given to all students, whether present for two weeks or 49 weeks.



USARSA has an open door policy and has actively sought to engage human rights organizations in constructive dialogue.

In June, 1997, the School hosted a visit by representatives from a number of non-governmental organizations to include representatives from the InterAmerican Commission of Human Rights, Organization of American States; InterAmerican Institute of Human Rights; Central American Legislative Committee for Human Rights; Guatemalan Archbishop's Office of Human Rights; Myrna Mack Foundation; GAM (Mutual Support Group); and CONAVIGUA (National Coordinators' Office for Guatemalan Widows).

The U.S. Embassies in 15 of the foreign countries that have sent students to USARSA reported on the number of achievements of graduates. Examples of some of these statements which appeared in the January 1998 Certification Report of the U.S. Army School of the Americas signed by the Secretary of Defense:

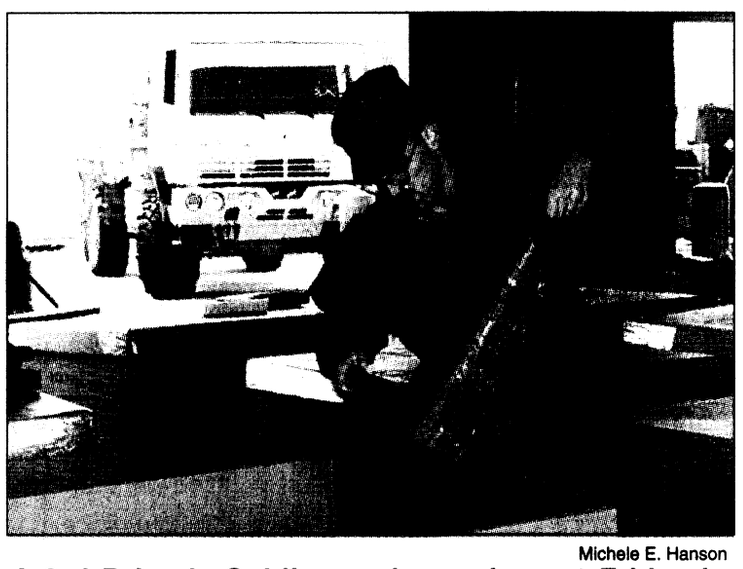
3rd Brigade unit remains on hold

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©



The latest confrontation with Iraq last week when Saddam Hussein banned weapons inspections by United Nations personnel, did not surprise 200 Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). However, their alert and possible redeployment to the Persian Gulf did.

The two companies designated for deployment to the Persian Gulf returned to Fort Benning last July, after spending nearly five months in the Gulf.

Soldiers received word about the possible deployment Nov. 12 and spent Nov. 13 through Sunday diligently packing personal equipment as well as preparing unit equipment for shipment to Fort Stewart, Ga.

"The Soldiers remain highly motivated and their morale and professionalism are great," said 1st Lt. Stuart McCall, intelligence officer, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). "They understand when you join the Army, this is part of it and they are very willing to do what needs to be done to accomplish this mission or future missions."

"Training and being tasked for a real world mission is an outstanding way to gain the experience I need to be a successful Soldier," said Pvt. Joey Hightower, tanker, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. "I will learn more in a week preparing and participating in a mission like this than my entire learning experience so far in the Army."

Michele E. Hanson

A 3rd Brigade Soldier packs equipment Friday in preparation for a possible deployment to the Middle East.

On Monday, the deployment plans were frozen for Gulf-bound troops, which included the units from Fort Benning. Servicemembers who deployed will remain where they are. Units that have not deployed will stay in the U. S. but remain on a high state of alert.

"Every field exercise or deployment we participate in is a benefit as far as experience," said Sgt. Osvaldo Rivera, tank commander, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 69th Inf. Regt. "Bottom line is we are a rapid deployment unit and we will complete the mission any time we are called for."

CFC reaches $500,000 goal

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

For the first time in four years, Fort Benning's Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) reached its $500,000 goal. As of Wednesday, the fund totaled $515,000.

The campaign, which started out on a slow note, came alive during the last week as units started turning in between $40,000 to $50,000 in donations a day, said Mike Moore, installation CFC manager.

"We did a lot of the pre-campaigning around post to publicize CFC. People were geared up more for this campaign than previously," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. "A lot of people are due credit for the success of this event. I really want to thank the commanders, directors and everyone who had a hand in helping us surpass our goal. I especially want to thank the Infantry Training Brigade. They really helped make this campaign such a success."

Soldiers, post employees and other servicemembers were given the opportunity to give what they could to local and national organizations through CFC.

"I gave to the CFC because I feel it is the right thing to do. I did it because I believe in helping others," said Staff Sgt. Mark Clark, U.S. Army School of the Americas. "It also helps keep the 'selfless service' value renewed."

Although the overall campaign was a success, Walls said they did not receive as many contributions for the "Communities that Care" portion of the campaign.

This portion of the campaign consisted of all the 9000 series organizations who are in the Fort Benning and Columbus area, such as the American Red Cross and the Boys' and Girls' Clubs.

Out of the total donations, the CFC collected approximately $74,000 for the organizations in this series, Walls said.

After all of the paperwork is finished, Fort Benning's contributions will be combined with the total donations collected from local federal organizations. Moore said this may take Fort Benning's total over $600,000 for this year's campaign.

Fort Benning community members Kathy Anderson and Lisa Landers (above, left) check out angel ornaments made by 11-year-old Hannah Sifers during the Officers' Wives Club Craft Bazaar Saturday at Infantry Hall. Victoria White (above, right), daughter of Christi and Sgt. Lovit White of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), decorates a gingerbread cookie with help from Kathy Kerchief, daughter of Margaret and Lt. Col. Karl Kerchief of the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity (MEDDAC).

All proceeds from the bazaar went to the OWC Welfare Fund. The Welfare Fund benefits such organizations as Martin Army Community Hospital, Fort Benning schools and Army Community Service programs.

Trail of Tears inspires limitless goals

Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

Heritage is what makes all of us different. Endless combinations and countless possibilities of racial, ethnic and religious backgrounds help add more individuality than just the color of one's eyes or hair.

commentary

While growing up, my father, who is one-quarter Choctaw, stressed the importance of individuality and pride in one's heritage. Since we lived in Oklahoma City, a name that means "Land of the Redman," it was easy to identify with my Native American ancestry.

No, my father doesn't exactly look like actor Graham Greene in Dances with Wolves, and we didn't hold pow-wows in our front yard. He did however, teach me an appreciation for the Native American religion and way of life.

My father taught me our ancestors believed God existed in every element of the earth, and while he didn't host any pow-wows, my father did take me to a few.

I greatly appreciate my heritage, but I don't believe one's ancestors can be appreciated without knowing the hardships they endured.

My people lived in the forests of Georgia and Alabama for hundreds of years and had their land stolen from them. The government seized their land and forced them to leave their homes. If they didn't leave, they were killed.

The ones who did leave marched the Trail of Tears — a 1,000 mile march to a flat, dry part of the country designated as Indian Territory. They were then placed on these reservations to live.

Knowing my ancestors overcame great obstacles just to be considered human also gives me reasons to celebrate them.

Oklahoma's biggest cultural event is a week-long festival called, "Red Earth." All week, Native Americans compete in dance competitions and sing ceremonial songs while proudly displaying their ceremonial dress.

Things like "Red Earth" and other cultural history celebrations are a testament to how different cultures survived through centuries of oppression.

Hardships, though, are not to be dwelt on. Just as our ancestors did, we should use the hardships we experience to make us stronger.

If a woman my age, with children, can march herself 1,000 miles across the country during the harshest conditions of winter and start a new life with nothing but her family, the possibilities of what I can accomplish are limitless.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The post needs a place for hunters to zero their weapons at the beginning of hunting season.

The Directorate of Community Activities' response is: As a courtesy, the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club offers non-members two free half-days each year for zeroing their weapons before hunting season opens. On these days, the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit provides team scopes to zero rifles and volunteer their time. Unfortunately, if you, as a non-member, miss these two days, you must pay the $35 fee. The fee is actually a membership and insurance fee for E5s and above. The fee for E4s and below is $25.

The fee entitles you to zero your weapon and gives you unlimited usage of the range. Other benefits of membership include two competitive events per month with low entry fees, a yearly GSSF (Glock) Match, four national level weekend training and certification events a year, to include "Advanced Pistol" and "Ladies Only" marksmanship and shooting equipment at dealer cost plus 10 percent.

Native Americans assist in America's freedom

In recognition of Native Americans and Alaskan Natives and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the period of Nov. 1 through Nov. 30 has been proclaimed "Native American Heritage Month" by Public Law 102.188, March 1992. The theme for this year is "Native American Heritage, Living With Pride and Dignity."

All Americans, regardless of their heritage, have gained from Native Americans and their ancestors. Native Americans have served their country not only in every conflict since the Civil War, but also as artists, scholars and scientists. They have made contributions in agriculture, medicine, art and government. Today Native Americans continue to contribute immensely in the pursuit of America's national goals and in the quest for freedom and opportunity. Their diversity throughout history serves as a model for all Americans.

November not only offers an increase in national awareness of the history and contributions of Native Americans, but it also offers Native Americans serving in the armed services an opportunity to celebrate and share their heritage. I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and the surrounding community to participate in this observance through the planned activities of units, staffs, directorates and other agencies.

Watch out!

A group of U.S. Army School of the Americas' supporters stand in the midst of SOA Watch protestors during last year's protest. Leaders of SOA Watch, the group opposed to the existence of the USARSA, will be gathering at Fort Benning's main entrance on Benning Blvd. Saturday and Sunday for a vigil and memorial service.

SOA Watch leaders estimate there will be some 5,000 protestors on hand. Because of the number of people gathering at the entrance, Soldiers and family members are advised to use Lumpkin Road or I-185 to access to and from post from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Nations gather for conference

U.S. Army School of Americas

Armies of 20 nations gathered here this week to discuss higher military education initiatives during the Training and Military Education Conference held at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

Sponsored by the U.S. Army Chief of Staff, Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, the conference is one of a series of meetings of the Conference of American Armies.

During the four-day event, delegates discussed issues affecting training strategies, with a focus on distance learning initiatives and the impact of other military operations on professional training to include humanitarian missions.

"To be successful in the globalizing world, Soldiers must be immersed in a permanent process of learning," said Brig. Gen. Luis M. Rodriguez Martinez of the Dominican Republic and permanent executive secretary of the conference.

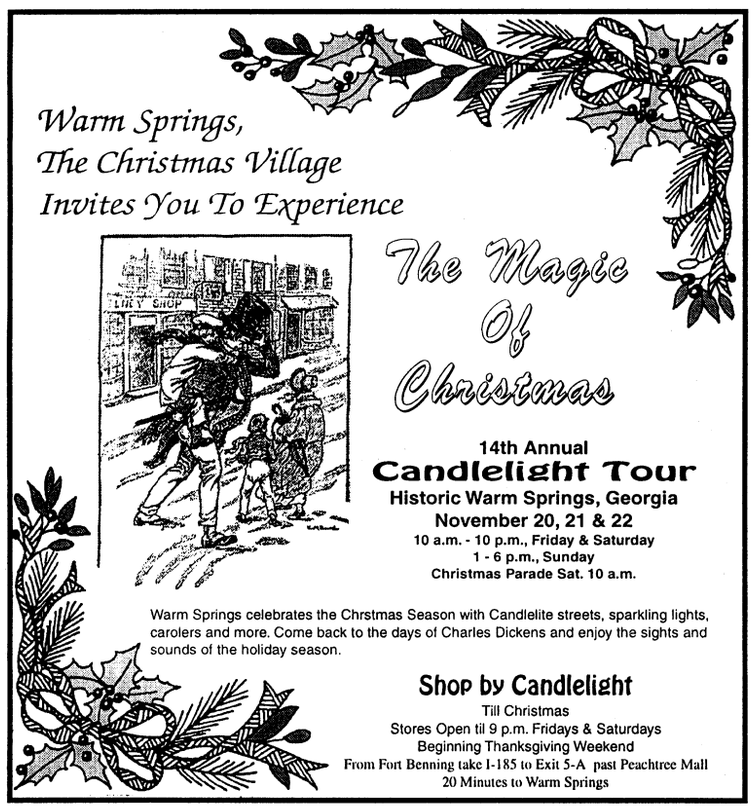
Member armies participating in the conference included Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Chile, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Peru, U.S., Uruguay and Venezuela. Additionally, armies from Antigua-Barbuda, Jamaica and Mexico attended as observers.

Host of the conference Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst remarked during the opening ceremony Monday that he was pleased to see the gathering of military leaders mobilizing resources to meet the needs of the Inter-American system, and also proud of their heroic efforts in providing humanitarian assistance to Central America in the wake of Hurricane Mitch.

Other topics discussed by the delegates included human resources for the 21st century and the use of computer and technological support systems in training and education.

"The development of Soldiers today has shaped their efforts and led to their comprehension of their individual and collective promise to create a democratic environment," Martinez said.

DoD switches travel card provider



Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Effective Nov. 30, NationsBank will replace American Express as the Department of Defense (DoD) provider for the Travel Charge Card. More than 2,600 current American Express cardholders at Fort Benning will receive, by mail, a NationsBank VISA, which will become active Nov. 30.

"It is important during the transition period, Nov. 29-30, for travelers to carry both the American Express card and the NationsBank card," said Bobby N. King, chief of the accounting services division at Fort Benning. "If a Soldier begins temporary duty on Nov. 28 and ends on Dec. 1, the hotel charges from Nov. 28 and 29 will be charged to the American Express card and the charges from Nov. 30 through Dec. 1 will be charged to the NationsBank VISA card."

According to King, the new credit card provider NationsBank acquired the four-year contract when the American Express contract expired. From the user standpoint, all other aspects of the card will be handled the same. DoD recipients of the NationsBank VISA need to sign the agreement that comes with the card to ensure activation of their VISA.

"The travel charge card program enables the Army to improve cash management, reduce administrative costs and meet the customer service needs of travelers," King added. "Under NationsBank, the travel charge card program will become even better."

ACAP helps prepare Soldiers for civilian life

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) was established by the U.S. Army to assist Soldiers, families and civil service employees with successful transitions from the active Army to the Army Alumni.

Since its inception in October 1991, Soldiers and family members have used ACAP's transition and job assistance services to start new careers and adjust to changes in location and situation.

"One of the first steps in the transition process is establishing a job objective which requires an honest assessment of skills, training and experience as they apply for civilian employment," said Debbie Henshaw, ACAP counselor. "If a direct relation between the Soldier's MOS and civilian occupation exists, then the objective is clear."

Once the Soldier has found a prospective position, there may be obstacles which must be overcome. Soldiers may run into positions which are not open or require civilian certification. If civilian certification is required, additional education might be needed.

If additional education is required, the Soldier's financial situation must then be evaluated to see if the Soldier may be able to delay the position for school. The Soldier may also see if it is possible to become certified before separation from the Army.

"The ACAP Center has assisted thousands of Soldiers with transition planning a full year or just days from separation," Henshaw said.

It will become increasingly more important to plan for transition when the Soldier wants employment in an area outside his MOS, Henshaw said.

Soldiers who need the ACAP Center's assistance can attend a three-day briefing. ETS briefings are scheduled for Nov. 30 through Dec. 2 and Dec. 14 through Dec. 16. There will also be a three-day retirement briefing Dec. 7 through 9.

ACAP counselors meet with Soldiers and spouses to provide individualized transition assistance and referrals. Additional job search assistance, counseling and access to computer applications are available in the ACAP Center.

For more information, call or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza, or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Let's get ready to rumble

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

When a Soldier confronts his enemy "up close and personal," the winner of this meeting will surely be the one who reacts first with as much deadly force as possible. This relationship might be broken down into a simple mathematical equation: a Soldier with a mission must use a greater force to eliminate an enemy threat.

Ranger School is where some of this modern math is taught to those who fight battles on a personal level. The school is where Rangers learn to be aggressive and to use their warrior skills to be a lethal weapon system.

Instilling and harnessing that essential aggressiveness is perhaps most visible in the boxing portion of the school's hand-to-hand instruction.

"Boxing is probably the sport that best represents what a Ranger needs to be," said Capt. John Hanson, an instructor with the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade. Hanson wrote the school's boxing program of instruction (POI). In gathering background information for the instruction, Hanson and other Rangers studied the program at the U.S. Army Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.

"Boxing is a perfect tool to teach Rangers what can and does happen in close, hand-to-hand combat," Hanson explained. "A Ranger needs to operate under duress and be in outstanding physical condition. The Ranger has to implement simple battle drills, like striking blows, punches and covers. You're actually defending yourself out there."

Early on, the Rangers are taught rifle bayonet assault techniques. The students then complete several progressive classes in hand-to-hand combat before the boxing instruction. The Rangers learn the typical boxing techniques, jabs; upper cuts and blocking methods; skills that may be considered boxing battle drills. All of this instruction is applied on a final morning of boxing bouts of Ranger against fellow Ranger.

In a bout, two students box for only one 15-second round in a ring 12 feet by 12 feet. The small ring forces the Rangers to confront each other, but the short round prevents the Rangers from boxing long enough to cause any serious injuries.

"We're trying to build aggressiveness within the student," said Staff Sgt. Jay Carter, a Ranger instructor who helped create the boxing POI. "That's why we have the small ring, so they have no other option but to actually get in and take part."

Instead of pairing boxers by weight, the students are paired by height, Carter said. Students are medically screened to identify injuries that would exclude them from boxing, such as a prior head injury. Students with prior boxing experience are matched to avoid imbalanced bouts.

Prior to pairing off and entering the ring, the Ranger students are given a short "smoke session," a series of exercises including push-ups and flutter kicks.

"The smoke session is designed to do two things," Hanson said. "We warm the Ranger student up so he doesn't pull or rip a muscle. We do a lot of upper body stuff to put them at a level of fatigue so in theory, a student won't really 'crank' a punch on someone."

Safety is a key concern, so continuous medical checks are done throughout the boxing.

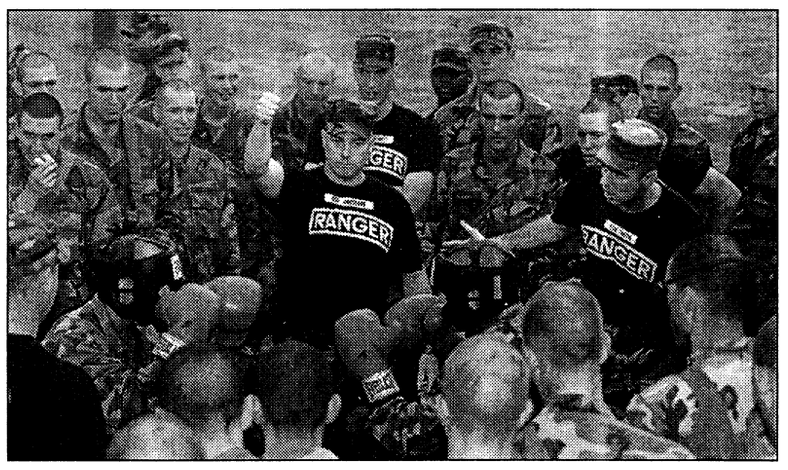
A 15-second bout may seem short, but it's long enough to give a student a taste of what it's like to confront an enemy with no weapons but two fists, some hand-to-hand techniques and a student's individual aggressiveness.

Ranger student John Gianelloni said he boxed pretty well for his first time in the ring.

"I loved boxing — it cleared out the cobwebs," Gianelloni said. Like many students, the Soldier wanted to box several more rounds but the training is only designed to give the students an idea of what it's like to fight an opponent.

"Battle drills seem mundane after doing it 10 or 12 times, like entering a trench. This gives you a fresh perspective. It makes you work faster and harder to take action," he said. Gianelloni said he initially had some anxiety before entering the ring but the boxing forced him to be aggressive.

Ranger student Robert Heber said the time of the bouts could be increased and that the training helped ready him for the ring.

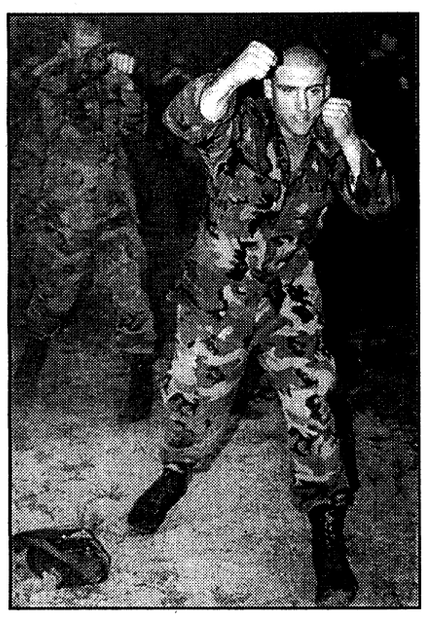


"We were trained up to do this and we were actually able to execute the training," Heber said. "It's always fun to execute, instead of train, train, train and then nothing."

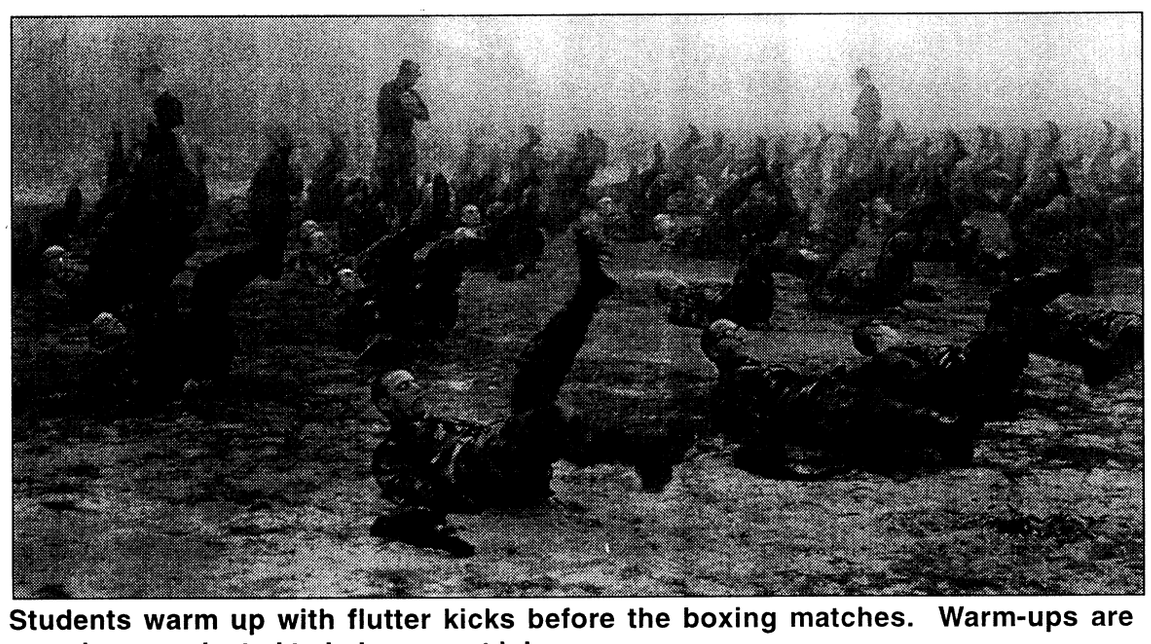
While the Rangers have incorporated more technology into their mission, Rangers will always need to have essential hand-to-hand fighting skills, said Lt. Col. Eric Hutchings, 4th RTBn. commander.

"Recent military experience in Mogadishu (Somalia) illustrated that a lot of engagements are at point blank," Hutchings said. "We had a cunning enemy that was smart enough to draw us into the close confines of his home turf. We can expect our opponents in the future to get us into the urban areas, trenchlines and bunkers. It negates the technical superiority of our weapons systems. It forces us to come to grips on a man-to-man basis."

Rangers are equally taught how to give and receive a punch, Hutchings said. Soldiers currently entering military service of this era may not have had much experience fighting. In the short duration of the hand-to-hand classes, a Ranger can't be turned into a professional boxer, he said, but the instruction helps to develop aggressiveness.



"It's a gruesome, awesome business," Hutchings said. "Unfortunately, in the occupation we have chosen, we're going to see the enemy at point-blank range. If we work in the trenchline, we're going to run full steam into the enemy and we need to win that fight."



Ranger instructor Staff Sgt. Christopher W. Jaussaud gives the go-ahead for a match to begin.

Ranger students practice boxing moves before entering the ring.

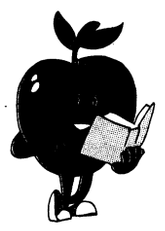
School Home Partnership involves community

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians can use an hour of their workday once a week to do something that can have long-term effects — help shape a future generation.

By a presidential proclamation issued a year ago, Department of Defense Education Activity (DODEA) schools are participating in the School Home Partnership (SHP) program which allows Soldiers to volunteer an hour and Department of Defense (DoD) civilians 59 minutes a week in a DODEA school or local elementary or secondary school.



"Our most precious resource is our children," said Lt. Col. Steven Eldridge, Director of Threat and Security and command representative for the program. "To raise a child right, it takes a community. This is our input to help raise children correctly."

Many parents already volunteer time each week at their children's school, but SHP gives schools the chance to determine what their needs are so volunteers can best be matched to the task, Eldridge said.

White Elementary has co-coordinators who specialize in matching needs to volunteers' gifts, said Dr. Judy Archer, White Elementary principal.

Volunteers in the Pre-K through second grade computer lab, for example, are trained, then assigned to regular groups of children. They also get copies of lesson plans, so they are "co-teachers," according to Archer.

"They're trained right alongside the teachers in new instructional methodology and are introduced to new programs," Archer said. "Volunteers are really extended faculty and staff. They interact with specific children throughout the year."

Archer said she has seen a connection with students who had high grades and whose parents who are consistently involved. For parents who cannot be at school, she said, teachers often send "work" home for them to complete for an upcoming school activity.

McBride's Reading Challenge provides just such an opportunity for at-home involvement in SHP. From Aug. 25 through April 5, 1999, McBride families are being asked to turn off their television sets for 30 to 40 minutes per night and spend time reading and discussing the stories together.

Loyd Elementary School just began a program in October as part of SHP. Its focus is on reading, which Debra Mabry, Loyd principal, says is fundamental to all other academic disciplines.

"We believe reading is the basic foundation for mastering other areas," Mabry said. "If a child is doing poorly on a test, we believe reading is the key."

The program's goal, Mabry said, is for volunteers to become reading mentors to small groups as well as individual children by reading to the children and having them read to the volunteers.

"We want reading to come alive because language and reading are parts of everyday environment," Mabry said.

While a few DoD civilians have inquired about volunteering at Loyd, Mabry said some Soldier parents and volunteers spend more than an hour a week, often spending post training holidays at the school.

While SHP stresses parental involvement, the benefits of being directly involved in the classroom are invaluable to anyone willing to give the time, Mabry said.

"As people who pay taxes, (they) need to be involved," Mabry said. "When people are in the classroom seeing what's going on, they'll take more pride in what they're paying for."

Kathy Einhorn, director of Curriculum and School Home Partnership District Key Communicator, agreed. She believes those who don't have children often hesitate to get involved in SHP. But the level of involvement on everyone's part eventually will have widespread consequences.

"It helps show them the importance of supporting schools," Einhorn said. "If these children don't learn, they're the ones who will be in the workforce someday and the ones who will be contributing to the Social Security system."

"It's critical to prepare them to be a highly-educated, world-class workforce," she said. "Unlike our experience, these students will compete with students from around the world throughout their careers."

The SHP, she said, can provide a window into the schools and can increase parental and community understanding of the high level of expectations and standards.

"This is where the community can have an impact on what goes on in schools," Einhorn said. "Their contributions in all aspects of the educational system are invaluable and welcome."

Chiropractic clinic

Adjustments set Soldiers straight

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

Occupying a corner of Winder Health Clinic is a medical service that helps one Fort Benning Soldier get up each morning and simply walk around.

That Soldier told his co-worker, Chief Warrant Officer 4 Jerry Manning, a competitive runner and cyclist who was feeling the effects of sports injuries, about the chiropractic care he received at Winder. Now Manning, a Soldier with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 11th Infantry Regiment, can't say enough about the benefits of this method of pain treatment, about which some people are skeptical.

"The staff is great to talk to and the doctors know what they are doing," Manning said. "I'm really impressed with the expertise and level of service provided for the Soldier here."

"This is an incredible opportunity for the Soldier to have access to chiropractic care without going off post and paying big bucks," he said.

Like many patients who visit the clinic, however, Manning didn't know the service was available until his friend recommended it, although it has been on post since 1995, according to James Williams, D.C., and Jerry Van Der Heyden, D.C., the treating chiropractors at the clinic.

"We still get patients who say, 'I didn't know you were here,'" Williams said.

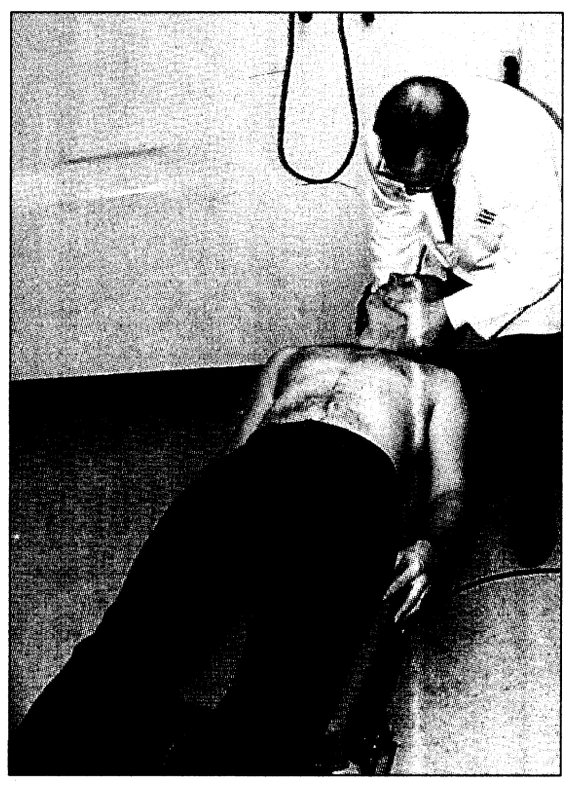
The service actually is a test called Chiropractic Health Care Demonstration Program (CHCDP), set up by the Department of Defense at Congress's direction to evaluate the feasibility and advisability of offering chiropractic care at military treatment facilities. The program began in 1995 and was scheduled to run three years.

Williams, who has 11 years of active Army service and a Special Forces background, believes chiropractic service in the armed forces is a necessity that is long overdue.

"Based on what we do, we believe chiropractic care is especially important on a military post because of the activities of Soldiers — their assignments, the physical demand placed on their bodies," Williams said.

What chiropractors do for Soldiers or anyone else is focus on the spine, which can get out of line as a result of overexertion or trauma, such as a bad parachute landing fall. When that happens, it can set off a physiological and chemical chain of events that leads to neck and back pain.

When an area of the spine isn't moving correctly, the vertebrae can become inflamed, eventually interfering with nerve impulses traveling to other parts of the body and causing problems in those areas.



By manipulating the spine and soft tissues to relieve pressure on the nerves, a chiropractor can restore movement to the spine and function and to the affected area without drugs or surgery, Williams said.

Patients must be referred to the clinic by their primary care physician or other health care provider, or they can ask their provider to send them for chiropractic care. Under the terms of the CHCDP, though, patients must be 18 years or older and pregnant women may not receive chiropractic treatment.

The staff does a complete workup on each patient, including a consultation, and orthopedic and neurological exam. They also determine whether X-rays and lab work are needed.

In addition to working on the spine, chiropractic treatment also includes attention to nutrition and sometimes involves physical therapy, Williams said. However, he and Van Der Heyden said their role is not to move in on other areas of health care.

"(Healthcare) services often overlap because we have to incorporate them at that moment in the treatment process," Williams said. "We feel very much that we're complimentary to the whole health care field. It's a team effort."

Sgt. 1st Class Dennis Smith, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, receives chiropractic treatment from Dr. James Williams.

The test period has been extended through September 30, 1999, when the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs) will prepare a report for Congress based on information gathered from those who have participated in the program.

The doctors hope the report is convincing enough to make chiropractic care in the armed services a permanent fixture.

"We're getting a lot of people well here who never knew about chiropractic care," Van Der Heyden said.

The clinic is open from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Myths fog understanding of HIV, AIDS

Patrice Cathright
Martin Army Community Hospital

Statistics project that by the year 2000, every person will know someone with Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) or Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS). The disease AIDS has become a prominent health issue in the 1990s.

It is a primary concern not only for those in health services, but for all whose lives are touched daily by anyone that can potentially be at risk. This includes our adolescents and youth.

We must ensure that all in our community are fully informed about the seriousness of our rising numbers of HIV cases, teenage pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases (STDs). In addition, we must be knowledgeable about how HIV and other STDs are passed on and how to prevent the spread of infection.

Let's test your knowledge — what is your HIV IQ?

True or False

•AIDS is a disease of "gay" men only.

False. It's not who you are, but what you do that puts you at risk.

•You can catch HIV by being near someone.

False. HIV is transmitted primarily by direct contact with infected body fluids — blood, semen or vaginal fluids.

•The virus that causes AIDS may lead to cancer and other illnesses.

True

•There is no cure for AIDS.

True. There are many combination drug therapies that offer improved quality of life and longer life expectancy.

•People with HIV infection can pass it to another person only after they are diagnosed with AIDS.

False. The virus can be passed from one person to another soon after exposure — even prior to the HIV antibody test confirmation.

•There is no need to worry about HIV infection unless someone close to you becomes infected.

False. It is estimated that more than a million Americans are infected with HIV; many are unaware.

•Latex condoms offer 100 percent protection from getting HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases.

False. Abstinence is your only 100 percent protective measure — however, latex condoms used correctly are your best defense for those who are sexually active. There is no safe sex.

•Education is an important defense to protect against AIDS.

True. There are handouts and visual aids available for all age groups. Educate before it's too late.

•If you're 55 years or older, there is no need to worry about HIV infection.

False. HIV infection can strike at any age — according to the Center for Disease Control (CDC), from June 1981-Dec. 1996, there have been almost 32,000 reported cases of AIDS in persons over 55.

•AIDS is the leading cause of death for adults 25-44.

True. Because it may take several years for HIV infection to become symptomatic, many adults contracted the virus at a much younger age.

Number correct:

0-3 Quick! Get educated now!

4-6 Getting better, but help is needed.

7-8 Not bad

9-10 Very good, keep informed!

A mandatory testing program for all active duty Soldiers began in February 1986. The armed forces are proud to be leaders in HIV testing of employees. Current Army policy mandates testing at least every two years. Some units may require testing more often. Normally, Department of Defense civilians are not mandated for testing unless it is required by a host country.

HIV tests are offered for employees with possible occupational exposure to HIV. Any other health care beneficiary can obtain an HIV test by contacting their healthcare provider. Active duty Soldiers can be tested at Martin Army Community Hospital laboratory from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday (excluding holidays). Results can be accessed in the individual medical record in seven to 10 working days.

HIV tests are mandatory for servicemembers within six months prior to an overseas assignment; that does not apply to family members.

Community Health Nursing offers ongoing HIV and AIDS Awareness classes to meet the yearly requirement for active duty Soldiers and Department of Defense civilians. We can also help with providing literature and counseling.

ask the judge

1st Lt. R. Brian Bohlen
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. A Soldier friend of mine got in some legal trouble last summer. I don't know the details, but I think he hit his girlfriend. He ended up pleading guilty to misdemeanor battery and is now on probation. When his chain of command found out, they immediately took away his sidearm and he can't go to the range with us anymore. If he can't shoot, will he be able to stay in the military? Tell me judge, what's going to happen to this guy?

A. Your friend needs immediate legal assistance because the threat to his military career is serious. Your friend's conviction for a misdemeanor battery arising from a domestic dispute (includes spouse and spouse, boyfriend and girlfriend and parent and child) triggered the application of a federal 1996 amendment to the Gun Control Act of 1968 called the Lautenberg Amendment. The Lautenberg Amendment makes it a felony for your friend to own, receive or use a firearm or ammunition. The term "firearm" under the Lautenberg Amendment includes all Army-issue and privately-owned firearms and ammunition. It does not apply to major weapons systems or crew-served weapons (tanks, missiles, aircraft, etc.)

The ban on your friend's ability to carry a firearm is permanent. In other words, your friend may not handle any firearm during his lifetime unless the law is changed. The Lautenberg Amendment is also retroactive. This means that even if your friend had been convicted of a misdemeanor domestic offense 20 years ago, he would still be permanently barred from carrying a firearm after the statute became effective in 1996.

Since the use of firearms is part of the backbone of military service, your friend's military career is in serious jeopardy as a result of his conviction. Therefore, I would strongly advise him and any other servicemember with a pending domestic criminal charge or a prior domestic violence conviction to seek immediate legal counsel. The worst thing a person can do who has a prior Lautenberg conviction is to ignore it. Ignoring a prior misdemeanor domestic conviction on your record and then handling a firearm means you are committing a felony and are subject to federal prosecution.

The legal assistance office at Fort Benning offers discreet and confidential counseling for servicemembers with a potential Lautenberg Amendment problem. We'll discuss your situation with you and give you the facts for weighing your options. The office phone number is 545-3281 and appointments can be made at 8 a.m.

Soldiers volunteer to honor vets

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet correspondent

As citizens across the country took time Nov. 11 to pay homage to those who have served in America's armed forces, Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 29nd Infantry Regiment were working to ensure that the pride of veterans past would remain strong as today's military continues to serve proudly worldwide.

Eighteen members of Companies B and C donned LCEs, Kevlars and high technology battlefield equipment to bring the technology of today's Army to veterans, servicemembers and families attending Georgia War Veterans Home's Veterans Day Celebration in Milledgeville, Ga.

"Our participation was part of a joint effort between Robins Air Force Base, local Junior ROTC cadets and military cadets from Georgia Military Institute to bring today's military to the public," said 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. Commander Lt. Col. Gordon B. Davis. "The combined effort allowed the approximate 400 veterans at the home and others in attendance to view first hand the U.S. military and the advancements that have made it the best in the world."

More than 2,000 people filtered past the static display set up by 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. Soldiers featuring the Army's newest technology in war fighting equipment, according to Davis.

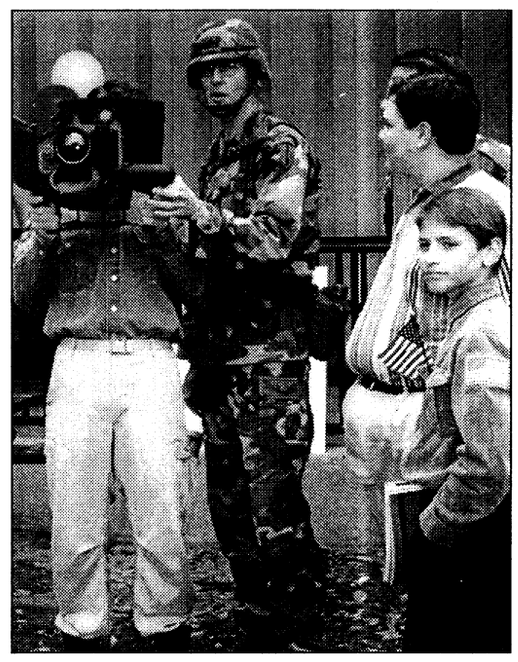
Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment show visitors various weapon systems and optics.



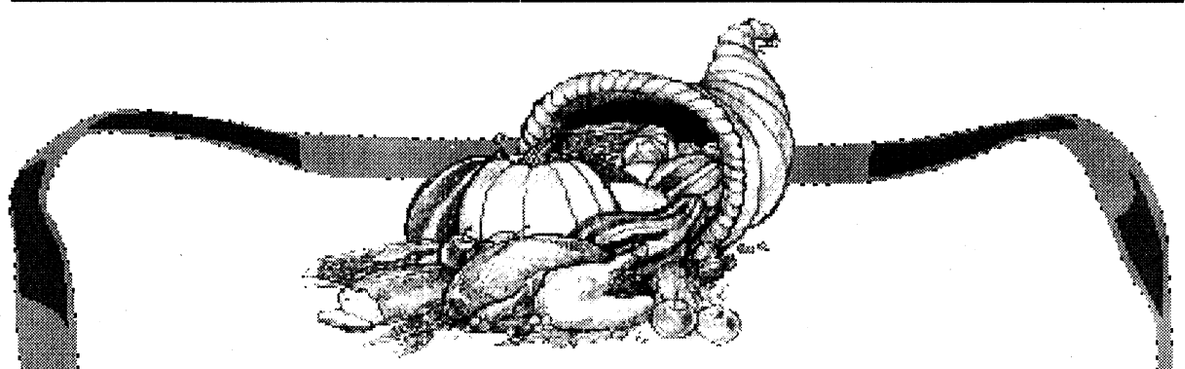
"We had everything on display from 9mm handguns to the M-24 sniper weapons system," said ceremony volunteer Pvt. Alfred D. Martinez, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "The variety made for a lot of great interaction."

That interaction, according to Martinez, included everyone from pre-school students to grandparents.

"It was a great opportunity for the kids to come and see grandpa and at the same time see and explore our equipment," Martinez said. "The expressions on their little faces made it all worth it."

Whether it was the faces of the children or the opportunity to give veterans a chance to see the modern art of warfare, the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.'s motivation earned them the thanks of the home's staff and the opportunity for a return visit next year.

"We are all very enthusiastic about the possibility for a return visit," Davis commented. "I'm sure the Soldiers evolved will jump at the chance to take part in a bigger and better operation next fall."



Sgt. Daniel Duval, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., talks a civilian through the firing procedures of the Javelin.

Setting the record straight, Mc Donald Manor not McDaniel

Over time, McDonald has inadvertently undergone a name change. While a street in the housing area was named McDaniel Street, the housing area was originally memorialized as McDonald Manor. DPW has replaced the sign and is now in the process of ensuring that everyone is aware of the American hero for whom McDonald Manor is named. In 1973, the Non-Commissioned Officers Housing Area bordered on the north by 10th Division Road, on the east by Clark Road and on the west by Gillespie Loop was named in memory of Pfc. Phill G. McDonald, 1st Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 4th Infantry Division. McDonald was awarded the Medal of Honor for actions near Kontum, Republic of South Viet Nam, in June of 1968. In memorializing areas like McDonald Manor, we and future generations have a daily reminder of our Soldiers who paid the ultimate price in the defense of our nation. So as you drive around the installation, take time to stop and read the memorial plaques about Soldiers like McDonald who answer the call of their nation.

If you have any questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

did you know

Where does the term "a feather in your cap" originate?

It comes from the ancient custom of placing a feather in a Soldier's cap for every enemy killed.

Why are aircraft storage building called "hangars" when planes don't actually hang in them?

The word comes from the 16th century French "angar," which is an open shed for storing plows and similar objects. The French term is derived from the Latin "angarium" for "shed" or "stable."

Who were the original "free lancers?"

Medieval knights who owed allegiance only to themselves and anyone willing to pay for their military services — their "lances."

VFW offers free calling cards to Soldiers, vets

Army News Service

Soldiers, other service members and hospitalized veterans can "reach out and touch someone" for free, thanks to a Veterans of Foreign Wars calling-card program.

"Operation Uplink," now in its third year is operated by the VFW "because we feel service men and women need some form of appreciation," said VFW Special Programs and Projects Manager Joanne Dickerson.

"To date, we've distributed 133,000 "Uplink" cards (to service members and veterans) worldwide," Dickerson said. "This represents about 43,000 hours of free call time."

"Uplink" cards guarantee a minimum of 10 minutes of free talking time from domestic or overseas points of origin, Dickerson said. The cards are available at no charge or obligation to all service members and veterans enrolled in Veterans Affairs hospitals.

Service members often have "Uplink" phone cards in their pockets as they're being deployed to places like Bosnia, according to Dickerson.

"As soon as we find out military are being deployed, we get the cards to them as they're boarding the plane so that they can call home," she said.

The calling cards are available through VFW's national headquarters, but state and local VFW posts and ladies' auxiliaries are "encouraged to distribute them at VA hospitals or military bases, regardless of branch of service," Dickerson said.

VFW ladies' auxiliaries, she said, accomplish the lion's share of calling card distribution efforts.

"The program is funded through donations: individual, VFW post, auxiliary and corporate," Dickerson said. "We accept all donations ... In most instances, we'll select a military installation (to distribute cards), but that is up to individual installation commanders, although we've never been refused. We also pass out cards at VA hospitals.

Service members and veterans can also order "Operation Uplink" calling cards by e-mailing Dickerson at dickerson@vfw.org. Cards can also be ordered by accessing the VFW website at www.vfw.org.

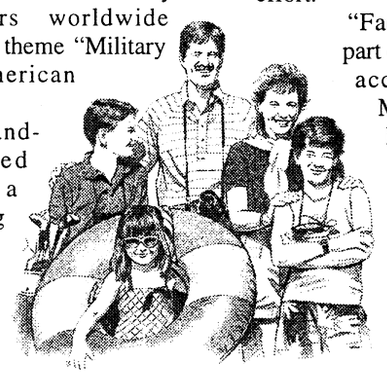
America gives thanks to military families Nov. 22-29

American Forces Press Service

Mom or Dad may wear the uniform, but as every military family member may know, spouses and children serve the nation as well.

President Clinton recently hailed military families and America will soon honor their unique service during Military Family Week, Nov. 22-29. The president called on American families across the nation to give special thanks during this holiday season for the service and sacrifice of America's men and women in uniform and their families.



"Americans owe a profound debt of gratitude to our military families," Clinton said in his 1998 military family message.

Military family members' love and support strengthens the nation's armed forces who serve across the nation and around the world, "defending America's freedom, promoting our values and carrying out vital humanitarian and peacekeeping missions," the president said.

Throughout the years, he noted, military families have had to endure weeks, months and sometimes years of separation from loved ones.

"Hillary and I think of all those who will still be apart at this holiday season, and we rejoice with those who have been reunited after lengthy separations."

As part of the celebration, the Armed Forces YMCA and GEICO Direct distributed a poster and other materials in October to military family centers worldwide highlighting the theme "Military Families - American Success."

The blue-and-white-bordered poster features a colorful drawing by 9-year-old Kimberlee Fowler, daughter of Army Sgt. 1st Class Christopher and Christina Pacheco Fowler. Fowler is assigned to Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

Kimberlee is a fourth-grade student at the Department of Defense Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School.

Kimberlee's depiction of her family was one of about 2,000 elementary school children's entries to an art contest sponsored by the Armed Services YMCA and GEICO Direct. Andersen Consulting, sponsor of the Vincent van Gogh art exhibit currently on display at the National Gallery, awarded Kimberlee a $5,000 Savings Bond and hosted the Fowlers to a weekend in Washington for her winning effort.

"Families are a critical part of the DoD mission," according to Gail McGinn, the Pentagon's principal director for personnel support, families and education.

Military Family Week provides an opportunity to say thank you, she said in a recent interview. Pentagon leaders know it's not easy being a military family, she noted.

Separations due to deployments, new assignments, schooling and other duties have always been an issue for military families. "Military families have to be able to sustain themselves when the military member is away," McGinn said.

"Military spouses take on a lot of responsibility for managing the household over and above what they would do when their spouse is there."

Pentagon leaders have recognized the fact that when a servicemember decides to stay in the military, it is a family decision, McGinn said. As a result, the Defense Department has initiated programs aimed at helping military family members deal with the particular stresses of military life. These include spouse employment and relocation services.

"Overall, there's been a general recognition that families are part of the team and that we've got to build support structures for our families so they can support us in our very important mission," McGinn said.

Admittedly, military life has its drawbacks, McGinn said, but being part of the military community also has its rewards.

"We have done some good work in the last few years in improving and upgrading programs and facilities for our military families," she said. "We've worked very hard at building military communities that are safe and that offer community services."

DoD's child care system has been recognized as one of the best in the country, McGinn said, and DoD has an excellent school system for families overseas.

Much work is currently being done to improve physical fitness centers, she added.

A secondary reward of being a military family member is less tangible, but nonetheless, very real, said McGinn, whose father and husband are both retired Soldiers.

"As a military family member myself, I know you make lifelong friends and you belong to a community of people that is there with you for your whole life. When you're not a member of a military community, you miss that."

Military Family Week is designed to give commanders, installations and military families themselves a chance to recognize the importance of the military family, McGinn said.

"Servicemembers work long hours, there are after-school activities, spouses often work — it's a good opportunity to take time out of their very busy schedules and celebrate the moment with their families," she advised.

"When you see the sign that says 'Military Family Week,' take a moment and think about how precious a family really is."

Pentagon recognizes Native Americans

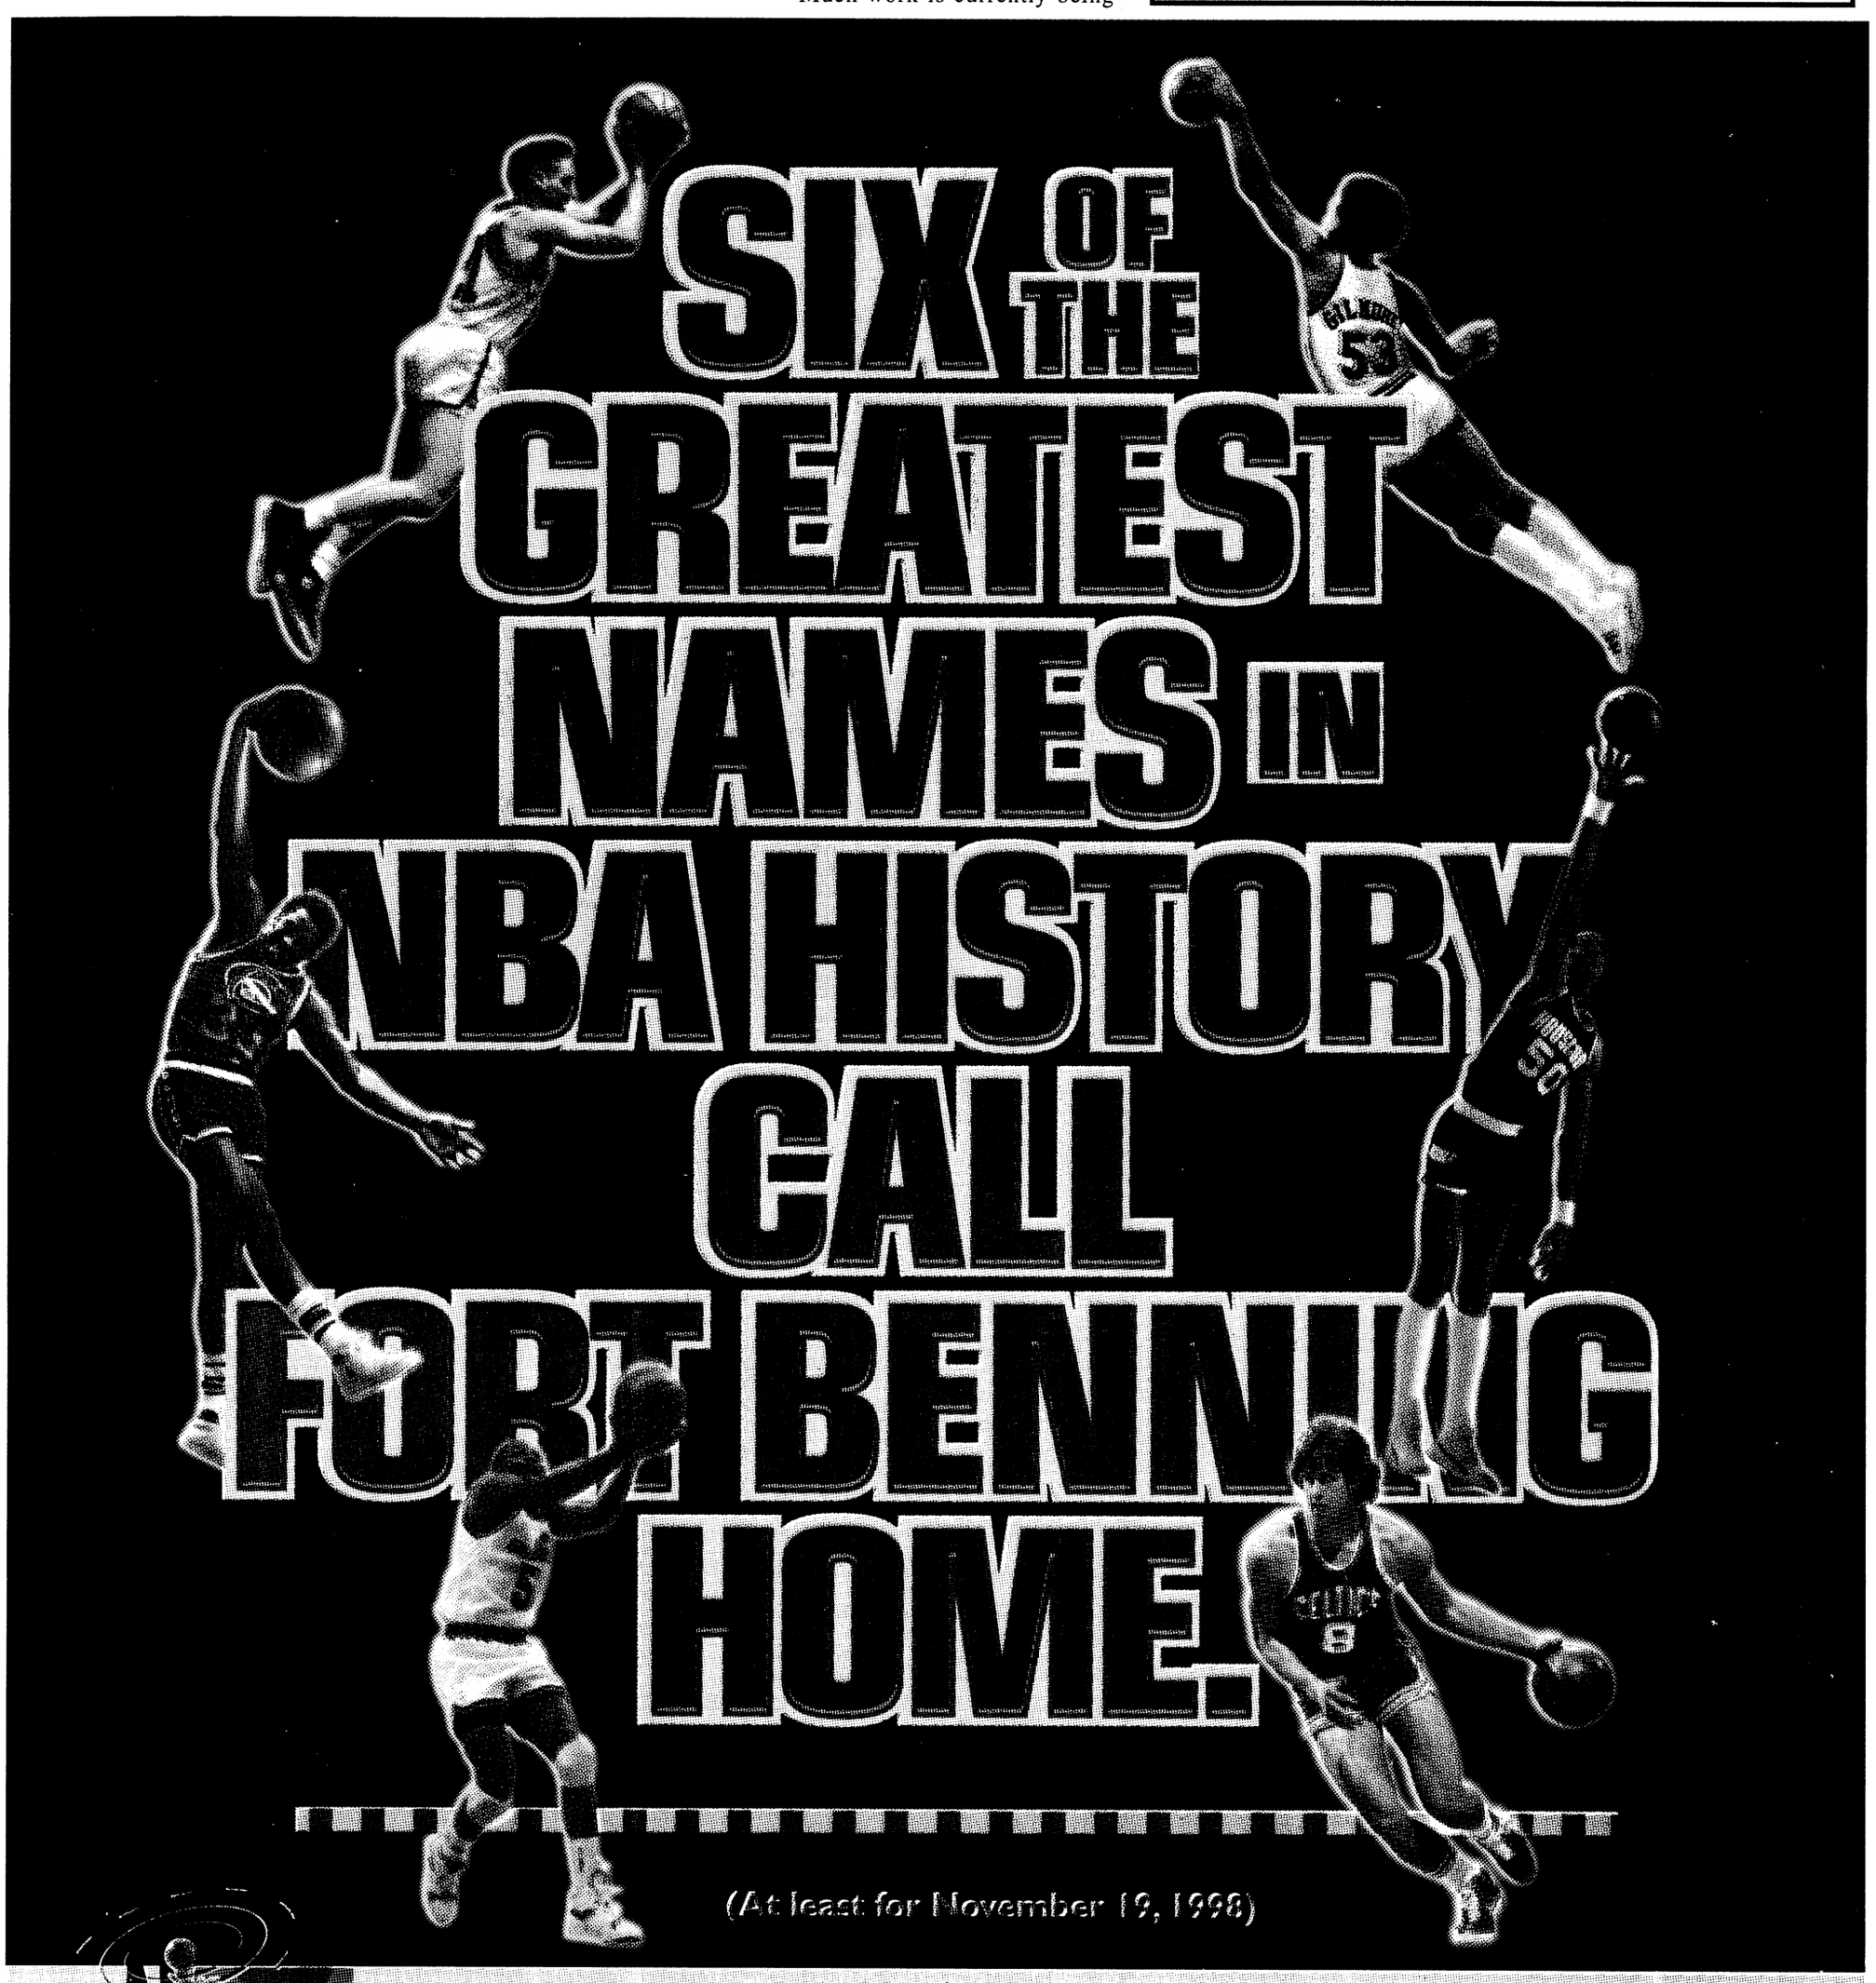
American Forces Press Service

After more than 223 years of fighting America's wars, Native Americans finally got their due Nov. 10 during the Pentagon's first ceremony recognizing their military service contributions.

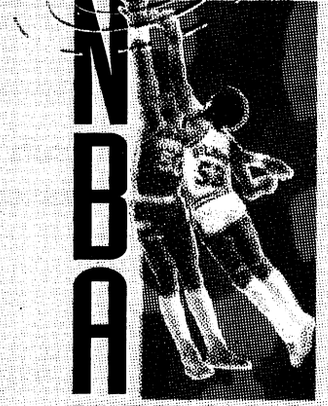
In his remarks on the service and sacrifice of American native veterans, Deputy Secretary of Defense John J. Hamre said, "recognition of American Indians and Native Alaskan veterans is long overdue."

"American Indians have served in all of our nation's wars, and theirs is a path of honor," Hamre told the standing room only crowd in the Pentagon auditorium.

"Yours is a path of true warriors, of those who choose to fight for higher purposes and for the glory of a nation," Hamre told the Native Americans. "And yours is a path of communal respect for those who served under arms so long, so well and so humbly."



The ceremony, in honor of Veterans Day and Native American Indian Heritage Month, was hosted by David R. Oliver, Jr., principal deputy undersecretary of defense for acquisition and technology. It featured ceremonial songs and dances by military veterans from the Sitka Tribe of Alaska and a performance by the Cedartree Singers and Dancers from the Eastern Band of the Cherokee (North Carolina).



A special tribute was given to the Navajo code talkers, who played a key role with the Marine Corps in the Pacific Theatre of operations during World War II.

The ceremony follows the Oct. 21 release of a new DoD policy statement that provides guidance to DoD components on addressing tribal concerns related to protected resources, rights and Indian land.

The policy establishes a foundation for developing and strengthening relationships with tribal nations in addition to enhancing an understanding and cooperation between tribal nations and the Department of Defense.

Other featured speakers during the ceremony included Lynn Cutler, deputy assistant to the president for American Indian and Native Alaskan affairs, and Roger "Red Hawk" Bucholz, a decorated Vietnam veteran and member of the Mdewankanton Band of the Santee Tribe of the Dakota Nation.

Experiences enlighten people

Chaplain (Capt.) Steve Bounds

Psalm 91: 1-4. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will always say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God, in him I will trust. Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence. He shall cover thee with his feather, and under his wings shalt thou trust; his truth shall be thy shield and buckler."

reflections

As a small child, I always felt safe and secure whenever I was with my father. I knew that as long as he was near he would protect me from any danger. He was an ex-Marine and also had done some professional boxing. He was a blue collar shipyard worker who provided for the needs of his family. I never worried about the economy. I knew he would always be there when I needed him.

I remember one day when I was around six or seven years old riding my older brother's Quarter horse. It was the fastest horse in the community. The horse suddenly went into a full gallop. The speed was more than I could control as a small child. My father drove in front of the horse and caught his reigns. His pants were torn and his leg was scraped and bruised, but I was safe. That was all that mattered to him. This selfless act of courage no doubt saved my life.

In much the same way, we can have peace in the storm of life. God is our shelter. On the Gulf coast there are numerous hurricanes and tropical storms. The local communities will designate sturdy buildings as storm shelters. These are places of escape when the storms are expected to be more violent than regular homes can withstand. Our God is such a shelter in the storms of life.

He will stretch his wing and shelter us in his feathers. He will be our protection from danger. I heard the story about a lady who heard a sermon on Psalm 19. As she drove home from church, a man jumped into her car and told her to drive. Naturally, she was terrified at what was happening. However, she began to take comfort in the message of this Psalm. She was so frightened that she could only remember one word from the passage. She began to repeat it over and over. Quietly at first, but as her confidence grew, so did the volume of her recitation, "feathers ... Feathers ... Feathers ... FEATHERS ... FEATHERS." The man finally ordered her to stop the car. He got out and said, "Lady, you're crazy." God had protected her.

I don't recommend this as a regular method of protecting yourself from criminals.

God did use an unusual method in this unusual circumstance. God does expect us to use good judgment. Let us take comfort in the quiet assurance that God is our shelter. He is our fortress. He is our safe hiding place. We are under his wing. Let us remain close to the Lord and enjoy his safety and peace.

Center helps with family problems

Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Back in the early Spring of 1989 there was a popular song by the English group, Mike and the Mechanics, entitled In the Living Years. It was the story of a young man whose father suddenly died and the young man realizes that it was now too late to say all the things he really wanted to say to his father. The premise of the song was, now is the time to finally communicate to those most important to you. I remember the song so vividly because in March of 1989 my own father died.

The main cause of marital conflict is unfinished business with parents, where one partner feels the other is more committed to his or her family of origin than to each other. Don't wait for your parents to take the lead. It is up to you to take the initiative in deciding how you want life to be with them. On the day James Dobson married, his mother presented a small gift to her new daughter-in-law, Shirley. Contained within were two strings cut from an apron belonging to James' mother. The message was loud and clear. Shirley Dobson commented about that event, "I knew in that moment my in-laws were going to stay out of our business."

Couples who live out their marriage through their own set of parents will never attain the level of maturity their marriage requires. Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can educate you on how you can resolve unfinished business with your parents.

USAMU shooter aims for 2000 Olympic Games

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

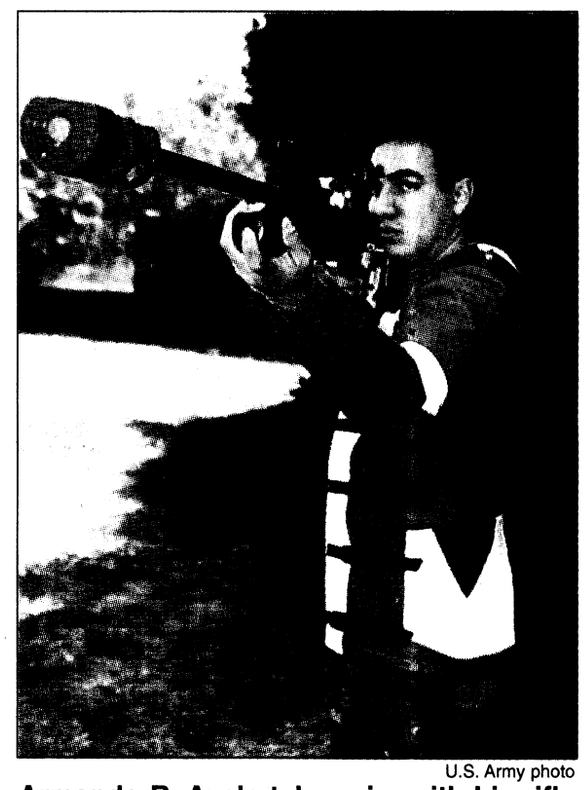
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit running target shooter Armando R. Ayala may have pretty good aim, and right now he is aiming for the year 2000. Ayala hopes to represent the U.S. in the Sydney, Australia, Olympic Games.

Representing the Army team, Ayala shoots 10-meter, 30+30 and Mixed Run Courses using .22 caliber rifles for 50-meter events and .177 caliber air rifles with scopes for 10-meter events; all courses are fired while the target is moving. The 10-meter 30+30 is the only Olympic event; the other events are shot in interservice, national and international competitions. As a member of the U.S. Running Target Team, which he has made for the last three years, he also represents the U.S. in international competitions.

Winning the World Championship Selection Matches at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., in March and at Fort Benning in April, he made the U.S. World Championship Team and competed in the World Championships in Barcelona, Spain, in July.

Ayala also qualified to shoot in three World Cups in May in Guatemala, Munich and Milan, in which more than 50 countries and 6,000 athletes participated. Ayala met his individual qualifying standard for Olympic participation at the 2000 Games in Sydney, Australia, at the World Cups, which also offered nations the opportunity to win country quotas for the 2000 Olympic Games.

He also placed second in the country in the first of two U.S. Team Selection Matches for the 1999 Pan American Games at Fort Benning in September. The second Pan Am Selection Match will be in April in Atlanta. The top two shooters will make the U.S. Team, which will compete in the Pan Am Games in Winnipeg, Canada in July.



The Pan Am Games, which is conducted every four years, is one of four big international matches-along with the Olympics, World Championships and the Campeonato de Tiro De las Americas (CAT Games)-where shooters can win medals and set world records. The 1999 Pan AM Games is also the last opportunity for nations to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympic Games.

"I have improved a lot recently," Ayala said. "I have new equipment and a new outlook. I am also more confident."

"Armando is considered to be of the top three running target shooters in the country and has achieved a great deal in his first few years of running target competition," USAMU Running Target Coach Troy A. Lawton said.

"The training I received at the Marksmanship Unit is world class and second to none. The support from the gunsmiths is exceptional," Ayala said. "I am also still using the training techniques I learned when I went to China in 1997; that trip was a real eye-opener where I learned a different form of discipline from the 1996 Olympic Gold and Silver Medalist."

Raised in El Paso, Texas, Ayala graduated from El Paso High School in 1990 and continued his education in criminal justice through the University of Texas at El Paso. Ayala enlisted in the Army in 1994. Following his completion of basic and Infantry training at the 54th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning, he was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in February 1995.

Demonstrators invade Fort Benning

More than 4,000 people from around the U.S. gathered at Fort Benning's main entrance this weekend to protest the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

About 2,000 of the protestors risked arrest and marched onto post Sunday in a funeral-like procession. Last year, 601 protestors crossed the line and several of those received six months in prison for previous violations.

This year, however, Department of Defense police officers escorted the offenders to buses which transported them to Rigdon Park about a mile off post where they were released.

While Benning Blvd. was lined with several thousands of protestors toting signs and banners voicing opposition towards USARSA, one group of visitors showed its support of the school.

Despite being outnumbered by those against the school, retired Maj. Ray Lopez, a former USARSA instructor and executive director of the School of the Americas Support Group, Inc., took to the streets with a handful of other supporters to try and educate the protestors on the organization he used to work for.

"The protestors who came to the demonstration fall under a wide spectrum of categories," said Lopez. "We've got those who are totally against the school and don't want to know the whole truth. We've got those who are just against the military all together. The bulk of people, though, are really concerned about human rights violations, but don't have all the information. That's why we're out here."

Lopez said he received a good response from most of the protestors and said a few even asked him to come and speak to their schools or organizations.

"I was really encouraged to hear people ask questions and ask to hear the other side," he said. "The school is something our country can be proud of. I can't just stand by and let people stain its reputation."

During a press conference Sunday, USARSA Commandant Col. Glenn Weidner said he thought it was unfortunate that the organizers of the day's events saw fit to induce well-meaning American citizens to violate the law on behalf of a false premise.

"The U.S. Army School of the Americas does not teach criminal conduct as alleged by SOA Watch," he said. "(The school) exists to improve the performance of Latin American militaries as institutions accountable to the elected democratic governments of the region."

Members of the School of Americas Support Group, Inc., hand out information to some of the protestors.

Weidner added that in order to meet the unique requirements of the region, the school includes more training in democratic principles and respect for human rights than any other U.S. Army school.

"Attacking the school for the abuses which are truly a product of home grown factors is not only unjust, if successful is more likely to aggravate the condition of those whom they

Soldiers return from NTC

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

More than 2,500 Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) and elements from the 36th Engineer Group (construction) returned home recently from a four-week deployment at the National Training Center (NTC) in Fort Irwin, Calif.

After preparing all summer with such events as Hammer and Marne Focus the Soldiers said goodbye to Fort Benning Oct. 23 and headed to NTC to tackle new terrain and intensive training on the desert sands of California.

While at NTC the Soldiers spent 14 consecutive days conducting continuous force-on-force battles and live-fire exercises.

Maj. Roger L. MacDonald, 3rd Brigade operations officer, said that while NTC focused on recurring lessons such as the execution of basic offensive and defensive missions, with the help of other units, the brigade encountered some new lessons.

He said the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment and 2nd Battalion, 10th Aviation Regiment out of Fort Drum, N.Y., assisted the brigade in integrating and employing light Infantry and Army aviation assets.

"Both of these elements brought with them increased capabilities and challenges for the 3rd Bde. With the increased combat power of the light Infantry and aviation assets, the 3rd Bde. had to increase its mission-load to give the opposing force a fighting chance," MacDonald said.

MacDonald added that for the first time in more than three years the rotation incorporated two complete night missions and a brigade night live-fire defense.

He said the brigade executed the high risk training events in a safe manner which exemplifies the high state of readiness and confidence within the brigade.

According to Maj. Tom Desrosier, operations officer, 1st Bn. 15th Inf. Regt., one of the major challenges the brigade had to overcome while at NTC were the night operations.

He said the amount of time in which they conducted the exercises coupled with the desert terrain opposed to the wooded terrain of Fort Benning increased the difficulty of the night operation.

He said the Soldiers had to come to grips with the vastness of the terrain and adjust many of their maneuvering operations to the openness of the desert.

Despite the challenges, Desrosier said the brigade was able to maintain a high operational readiness rate and maneuver extremely well.

Desrosier added that the Soldiers remained motivated through the entire rotation which helped make the mission a success.

"The number one comment we heard while we were at NTC was that the Soldiers had a high level of motivation and positive attitudes," Desrosier said. "Without the motivation and positive attitude, we wouldn't have had the level of success that we did."

The work still isn't over for the brigade as they continue the turn-in process for the more than 450 vehicles that were drew for the rotation.

MacDonald said their goal is to complete vehicle turn-in prior to the Thanksgiving holiday.

For holiday hours Fort Benning facilities will be open Thursday and Friday, see page B-2.

Post waits for results from state competition

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

Eleven examiners and one representative from the Georgia Oglethorpe Award wrapped up a six-day visit to post Friday, but they left no clue whether Fort Benning will be a winner when the award is announced sometime in February.

While winning the state-level quality award would be a first for Fort Benning, the real benefit lies in a feedback report the Oglethorpe panel will give Fort Benning early next year.

"The feedback report we will receive in the January or February 1999 timeframe will list our strengths and opportunities for improvement," said Pat Porter, management analyst for the Quality Management Division.

Fort Benning is competing in the government category of the award, but Porter said the competition is not really against other organizations.

"It's more a means of measuring, with an eye toward improvement, how Fort Benning is doing on customer satisfaction, service quality and productivity — all criteria of the 1998 Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award, which is the basis for the Oglethorpe Award," she said.

During their visit Nov. 15-20, the Oglethorpe panel held roundtable discussions with key Fort Benning leaders to verify and clarify the information Fort Benning submitted in its application packet. The team also interviewed a good cross-section of military and civilian employees, Porter said.

The examiners gave no feedback, but the visit went well, Porter said.

"The feedback from Fort Benning personnel about the visit is that the team asked pertinent questions and participation was great," she said.

Porter said the Oglethorpe award is the highest level of state recognition for performance and excellence that a Georgia organization can receive.

Soldier finds holiday meaning on price tag

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

It was recently brought to my attention that I had invested too much time thinking about what I was going to do to make Thanksgiving special for my family and my in-laws this year.

commentary

This being the first Thanksgiving we will spend together, I wanted to go all out and make this holiday a memorable one for us.

So, I ventured out to the grocery store to take care of some of the shopping before the big rush.

I entered the store prepared to buy the best of everything. Not only was I going to make the best darn Thanksgiving dinner, I was going to impress my mother-in-law with the quality of ingredients I selected.

I was going to buy the sweetest sweet potatoes, the biggest butternut squash, the best pecans for my pecan pie and the biggest, plumpest, juiciest turkey I could find.

As I started to gather up some of the products on my list I began to stretch my budget thinner and thinner. I could not believe how quickly $10 became $20 then $30 and pretty soon I had only $15 left and a ton of things still on my list.

I started cutting out things, putting things back and picking out cheaper items so I would be able to get everything.

I then decided after revamping the contents of my shopping cart to pick out the turkey.

As I entered the frozen meat section of the store, I began deciding on which brand of turkey to choose from.

When I decided on the brand I thought looked the best, I picked up one of the plump birds and casually turned it over to see what the damage would be. To my surprise, this turkey would have taken half of my grocery money to buy.

I then placed the turkey down and continued to pick up other turkeys to find one more in my price range.

I slowly went deeper and deeper into shock as I was having a hard time finding a turkey that was less that $20.

I decided to try another brand after picking up every turkey of the first brand. To my disappointment, every brand I checked seemed to be ridiculously overpriced.

Now, I have never shopped for a turkey before, so I do not know if they are normally this expensive, but the whole experience made me stop and think about the entire holiday concept.

The holidays were meant for families to gather together and enjoy the time the have to spend with one another. My need to impress those closest to me almost made me forget this.

So as I walked out of the store with my somewhat overpriced, underfed turkey, I found my reason for celebrating Thanksgiving this year.

I will be thankful for my family, friends, health and for the financial ability to buy a turkey.

Community deserves thanks for courtesy, professionalism

To the members of the Fort Benning and Columbus community, I would like to express my gratitude and praise for your professionalism, dedication and especially your courtesy this weekend in handling the protest against the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

This effort would not have been as successful without the support of such agencies as the Military Police, Directorate of Logistics, Columbus police and city leaders.

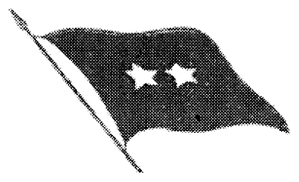
I'm especially proud of our Uniformed Civilian and Military Police, Public Affairs, USARSA personnel and Directorate of Logistics bus drivers who had the responsibility of moving more than 2,400 trespassers. You took on this task and, as expected, executed it flawlessly with expertise and patience.

While sometimes inconvenient, these protests serve to remind us the right to voice an opinion in peaceful assembly is guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution which we are sworn to safeguard.

Unfortunately, many of those who advocate closure of the U.S. Army School of Americas decided to violate federal law as part of this protest and we were forced to take action. Once again, our military and Department of Defense Police acted in a manner which elicited praise from protestors. Perhaps the best example of what we stand for is reflected in our actions ... if this is true, we provided a valuable lesson to all who watched.

I also want to commend Columbus businesses and area residences for patiently handling the inconvenience and disruption of this demonstration. Their cooperation and proven unselfish support in such times is what makes our tri-community great. I also want to thank the Columbus Police Department for their assistance and professionalism.

The U.S. Army School of the Americas will continue to do its job — train Soldiers from Latin American nations in order to promote military cooperation and enhance democratic ideals. USARSA is a U.S. Army school; run to U.S. Army standards, by us, Soldiers.



For 223 years Soldiers have protected the freedom of this and other lands, defending all that our Constitution embodies with their lives and their blood. Today, Soldiers are engaged all over the world to make it better and to give freedom a chance. USARSA does that here.

Hooah!

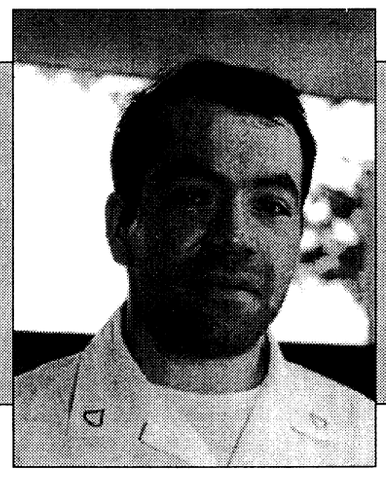
Give thanks for Soldiers at posts around world

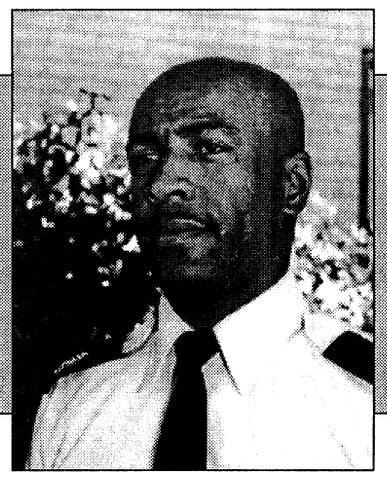
The celebration of Thanksgiving is older than our nation. In homes, in public gatherings and on military installations around the world, Soldiers and their families will gather to give thanks for the blessings of the past year, and to pray for continued security and prosperity in the year to come. As we celebrate Thanksgiving 1998, we must include in our thoughts and prayers those Soldiers deployed around the world and their families here at home.

Holidays away from home are nothing new to the American Soldier; from that first bitter winter at Valley Forge until today, American men and women have spent countless holidays away from homes and families, as they defend the frontiers of freedom. Across our great nation, an empty seat at the table continues to symbolize our citizens' commitment to freedom and its defense. Our prayers of thanksgiving for the past year's bounty are joined with expressions of gratitude for the spirit of self-sacrifice and patriotism that has long compelled Americans from all walks of life to step forward when they are needed and to place themselves — often at great peril — where they can best serve the cause of freedom.



For over three-quarters of a century Fort Benning has been home to Infantrymen and their families, and has served as a secure support base while Soldiers have gone forth to fight and win our nation's wars. As the home of the Infantry, Fort Benning has also offered hope to the oppressed, for throughout most of this century the American Infantryman has shared the burden and hardships of preserving freedom around the world. During this 1998 Thanksgiving Holiday season, join me in giving thanks for our nation and for the men and women who are hard at work at posts around the world ensuring a bright tomorrow.

We have much to be thankful for. We live in a great nation, the role model for freedom and democracy in the world. We should also give thanks for our parents, families and friends. We share in the bounty of our great country and the industry of her people, for that we should also give thanks. Finally for those who sacrificed to make America great, we give thanks.



— Maj. Gen. Carl. F. Ernst

USARSA strengthens democracies in hemisphere

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of Americas

Employing more than 50 years of academic experience in providing U.S. allies the most professional, relevant training programs possible, the U.S Army School of the Americas (USARSA) continues preparing for the future by strengthening the recently emerging democracies in the hemisphere.

"USARSA realized that with the change in U.S. foreign policy from containment of communism to engagement and enlargement in the early '90s, our curriculum needed to evolve to match that particular strategy," said Joe Leuer, USARSA's training developer.

Leuer said that the International Military Education and Training (IMET) funds, which are used to bring foreign military personnel and security personnel to the U.S. to train alongside U.S. personnel and those of other countries, gave birth to the Expanded IMET Program.

He said Expanded IMET is a sub-category of IMET which specifically targets courses providing instruction in human rights, civilian control of the military, democratization of society, Military Justice and defense and resource management.

Consequently, the school developed or modified several courses to meet Expanded IMET requirements including the Command and General Staff Officer Course, the Democratic Sustainment Course, a Civilian-Military Operations Course and the Resource Management Course.

He added there were other courses being considered for Expanded IMET by the Defense Security Cooperation Agency, which is responsible to the Secretary of Defense for Security Assistance.

"We've seen an upward trend in attendance in our Expanded IMET courses and the courses that came about in the evolution of our curriculum from the Cold War to Engagement and Enlargement for the new century," he said. "We're seeing that because we are a tool of U.S. foreign policy and we want to support that foreign policy."

With 32 courses offered here at Fort Benning and 20 courses offered at Fort Rucker, Ala., through the Helicopter School Battalion (HSB), USARSA possesses one of the finest educational facilities in the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, Leuer said.

Organized under a model which promotes its principle training vectors taught in U.S. service schools — joint and combined operations, operations other than war, leadership development and resource management — the courses at USARSA are broken down into technical, professional military education and functional areas.

A training battalion and one academic department presents all instruction, except for the Instructor Training and Computer Literacy Courses. A third training department, the HSB, provides initial and advanced helicopter flight instruction in Spanish. In addition, HSB offers helicopter maintenance training at Fort Eustis, Va.

The professional military education courses are centered around providing educational gates which professional military personnel must pass in order to become a qualified officer or NCO at various levels.

"These are key gates in which a military individual must pass in order not only to attain rank, but attain knowledge to be able to continue with their profession at a higher level," Leuer said..

Finally, the functional courses are specifically tied to foreign policy objectives, such as the Humanitarian Demining Course and the Counterdrug Operations Course.

Leuer emphasized the school makes sure that all the courses incorporate human rights training.

"We ensure that all our students leave with a solid understanding of how professional military forces function within the human rights dynamics," he said.

According to David Mize, USARSA's director of support, funding for the school comes from two major sources, the Army Operations and Maintenance Army Budget (OMA) and Security Assistance funds, which includes allocation for IMET and Expanded IMET.

He said between the two, the school gets a budget of approximately $4 million a year used for civilian salaries, supplies, equipment and many other course-related expenses.

Mize also said that under the Security Assistance fund, which was about $1.268 million this year, monies are also drawn from International Narcotics and Law Enforcement allocations.

"This provides funds for countries to send students to courses dealing with counter-narcotics," Mize said.

USARSA had approximately 800 students this year and expects to have close to that number in 1999.

Transitioning Soldiers should research careers

Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

Transitioning from the military may be a life-changing event which may require a definitive plan.

Putting a transition plan together may include career exploration. Some Soldiers may not want to continue doing what they do in the military, and a way to explore different occupations and related information is on the Internet, said Guy Smith, Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) counselor.

Researching careers and occupations may be accessed by clicking on to the Fort Benning ACAP home page. From the home page Soldiers may select to go into the Related Links and Information which will take them into Riley's Guide-Research for Career Tips and Options.

Soldiers may find the following information through the Riley's Guide:

•Type and nature of work, salary guidelines and training requirements for hundreds of occupations

•Thousands of job and occupational descriptions from the Bureau of Labor Statistics

•Occupational and educational preparation programs

•Ideas on types of jobs performed with specific college degrees

•Links to hundreds of career and college planning resources on the Web

•Self assessment resources and career choice guides

•Apprenticeships, professional organizations, unions, labor interest organizations and trade associations

•Labor market information by state and salary surveys

•Information regarding growth and decline in various industries

•Articles from The Wall Street Journal, Employment Review Magazine and National Business Employment Weekly

•Profit and non profit business directories

•Business rankings

•Stock market and financial reports

•Links to U.S. and worldwide chambers of commerce

•Cost of living and demographic information

"Making a career choice is an important part of the transition process for Soldiers," Smith said. "Knowledge is power, and the more knowledge Soldiers have about making the right career choice, the more empowered they become throughout the transition."

For more information, call the ACAP center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Soldiers may access the ACAP Home Page at www.benning.army.mil.fbhome/ACAP/acapweb1.html.

AER provides financial assistance

Army Emergency Relief

Soldiers with college-age children often wonder how they can afford education costs. Many people don't realize that part of the answer may be found from Army Emergency Relief (AER).

The AER provides financial assistance through scholarships. This relatively little-known resource can make college possible for many people. To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students must be enrolled, accepted or pending acceptance as a full-time student for the entire academic year .

Scholarships are available through AER. To be eligible a student must be: unmarried, a U.S. citizen or permanent U.S. resident, under the age of 22 on June 1, preceding the beginning of the school year for which the scholarship is requested and an authorized dependent of an active duty, retired or deceased Soldier. Scholarships are awarded based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishment.

Students who are awarded scholarships must reapply each year. Students must be in good academic standing, with a minimum cumulative GPA of 2.0 to receive scholarships. The application is simple. By requiring students to reapply each year, AER can monitor the progress they are making.

Students must submit a family financial analysis and essay describing their goals and accomplishments. Applications must be submitted by March 1 for the upcoming academic year. Initial applications and request forms will be available Nov. 1 for the school year 1999-00, at AER, located in Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Applications can also be accessed via website: http/www.aerhq.org. Letters to students are mailed in mid-May, from AER informing them whether they have been awarded a scholarship, and if so, how much money they will receive.

29th Inf. Regt. Soldiers compete in quarterly skills competition

Special to the Bayonet©

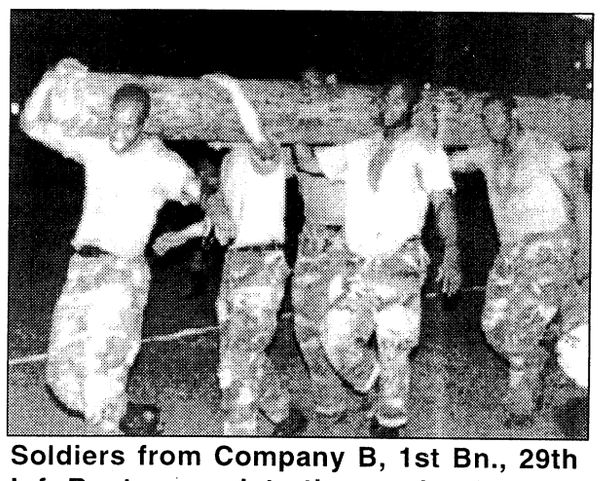
It was no ordinary day for the forty Soldiers selected to compete in the fifth Pioneer Challenge held by 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Standing in thick fog, long before sunrise, four 10-man squads donned their rucksacks and embarked on a physical and mental quest to become reigning champions of the Pioneer Challenge.

The 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Reg. "Pioneers" began preparation for the challenge several months before the actual competition. More than twenty Soldiers from each of the four companies competed against each other to earn a slot on their company's squad. The commander and first sergeants decide who will form the squad for the actual challenge.

"The Pioneer Challenge is a company effort, with the entire company coming together in a unique effort between NCOs and their Soldiers to produce this elite squad," said Lt. Col. Jerardo Reyes, commander, 1st. Bn. 29th Inf. Regt.

Reyes, who developed the Pioneer Challenge, said the eight events conducted for the challenge change from competition to competition. Some of the events are designed to prepare the Soldiers for the Expert Infantryman's Badge (EIB) in March such as the 12-mile road march and six EIB tasks. Other events are directly related to the normal responsibilities of 1st Bn., including the use of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle. Job specific events for this challenge include conducting preventive maintenance checks and services on the Bradley, manually traversing the turret of the Bradley 360 degrees for time and a Humvee push.



Training for the challenge becomes the sole responsibility of the squad leader. The squad leader chooses the duration, frequency and type of training to maximize his squad's performance and decides how to utilize the Soldiers' strengths and weaknesses on each event.

"Because we are a training support unit, the preparation for the Pioneer Challenge becomes a major training event," said Capt. Patrick Brundidge, Company B, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "The Soldiers really enjoy the train-up and the competition which allows them to build cohesion and participate in squad type training."

"It is an outstanding competition and it is great to see highly motivated Soldiers come out here to compete and win," said Command Sergeant Maj. Joe Bradley, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "The Pioneer Challenge is definitely a challenge and it tests the squad's ability to work and function as a team."

"I tried out for the competition because I like a challenge and like training," said Spc. Latanya Woolfolk, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st. Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "I am proud to have earned a spot on our company's squad. The training has helped me as a Soldier as well as increased my endurance."

The 10-man squad from Co. A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. was the overall winner of the Pioneer Challenge with 64 points. Squad leader Staff Sgt. Jason Winckoff led squad members Sgt. Brian Kiefer, Sgt. Joffre Celleri, Pvt. Brian Herman, Pfc. Christopher Sharpe, Pvt. 1st Class Adam Morton, Pfc. Jerriande Wheeler, Spc. John Eaker, Spc. Christopher Champion and Pfc. Jason Hazelton to victory. The squad from Co. C took second with a close 61 points, Co. B earned third place with 57 points and HHC placed fourth with 42 points.

Soldiers from Company B, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., complete the combat log run which was part of the PT challenge and the last event of the competition.

Bayonet staff writer

Fort Pickett Va., — After leaving Fort Benning Nov. 10 to spend two weeks at Fort Pickett Va., the Rangers of the 3rd Battalion 75th Ranger Regiment were never without a lack of action.

During their time at Fort Pickett, each of the companies rotated through three modules of training — platoon-level live fires, marksmanship and Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT).

While the dawn of each day had the Rangers waking to face another objective, it was the live-fire exercises which enabled them do quite possibly what they look forward to the most — shoot live rounds in a realistic combat setting.

There were two main live-fire exercises the Rangers tackled before leaving Fort Pickett. They are the platoon live-fire raid and the mounted live-fire movement to contact, which utilizes the Ranger Special Operations Vehicles (RSOV).

Each platoon conducted at least six iterations of the two different exercises. During each of the exercises the Rangers completed two practice blank fires, then moved on to the live fire which had them shooting hundreds of live rounds down range. What may have made it more difficult is the fact that while three of the scenarios were being done during the day, three iterations also took place at night.

According to 1st Lt. John Dyke, Company A platoon leader, the live-fire platoon raid is one of the most challenging live fires the Rangers execute.

The raid consists of an assault element and support element working together to secure an objective. The support element provides suppressive fire while the assaulting element actually moves to and secures the objective. All of this is done while continuous live rounds are being launched within meters of the Rangers.

Cpl. Robert Benedict a team leader in Company A, said what makes the raid harder than most live fires is the fact that so many different components need to come together to ensure a successful mission.

"You have to get all your moving parts working," Benedict said. "Instead of separate pieces in different directions we have to come together and work as one."

He said the live fires are exciting but can be dangerous, which is why they practice first with blank fires.

"The blank fires help us identify what we need to work on before we actually go through the live fire," Benedict said. "Sometimes it can get pretty hairy during the live fires. Especially when you can see the live rounds moving. Some can get as close as 15 meters."

Although the live fires contain an element of danger, the Rangers help ensure individual safety with hours of planning and coordinating the elements of the live fire such as range set-up and specific fire fans for each weapon system.

It is at the RSOV range where the Rangers encountered more of the heavier weapons and employed fire and maneuver tactics while mounted and dismounted. The exercise involved two RSOVs moving down range together. While one provided a base of fire, the other maneuvered into position and engaged the targets.

Dyke said the Rangers use everything from 50 Calibers, Gustofvs and Mark 19s to the Rangers' organic weapons of M-4s to M-203s.

During just one iteration, Dyke said, a Ranger will expend approximately 300 rounds. In a day a platoon may go through anywhere from 12,000 to 15,000 rounds.

According to Dyke, almost all of the live-fire practices are done essentially to build up to the final product of a night live-fire operation.

"We as Rangers say we can fight at night better than most anyone else," Dyke said. "We say we don't need white light to illuminate the targets, that we can do everything within the Infra Red spectrum. By actually doing this and training for it we gain an advantage over the enemy, which is why we concentrate a lot on the night live fire."

To help assist them in their night battle all Rangers were outfitted with night vision goggles. They also had lasers on their weapons which act as designators and aiming devices.

Pfc. William McGinnis, Company A, said all of the elements that were incorporated into the live fires help build every Ranger's confidence.

"One thing I'm definitely gaining by doing the live fires is confidence," McGinnis said. "Confidence that I can accomplish a bigger personal feat."

McGinnis said live fires are the best thing they can do to simulate real combat.

"It's almost exactly like real-life," McGinnis said. "We could go to war any day and if we were just practicing with blanks all the time we would have no idea as to the kind of damage we could cause. By doing the live fires, we understand what we are dealing with and learn how to better control it. It is the closest we will ever get to going to war."

Housing areas schedule fall clean up

Installation Community Life Office

The Post Cantonment and Housing area clean up is scheduled for Monday through Dec. 4.

To make clean up a little easier for post residents, the Directorate of Public Works (DPW) has made pine straw, lime and fertilizer available at the U-Do-It Center, Building 385. For more information, call 545-4207.

DPW reminds residents that a new ordinance effective March 1, 1997 requires all yard waste be disposed of in a durable, covered plastic container, or DPW approved paper bags before placing by curbside for pick up. Approved bags are available at the U-Do-It Center.

Area coordinators and Community Life NCOs have made inspections and issued deficiency reports this week. All those issued reports must correct the deficiencies by Dec. 2. For more information, call the Community Life NCOIC for your housing area or Master Sgt. LaFleur at the Installation Community Life Office at 545-2910.

DPW issues guidelines for housing area residents

Residents are responsible for the areas immediately adjacent to their government quarters, such as lawns, shrubbery, curbing and driveways. This area extends to the surrounding streets and halfway to adjacent quarters, but not to exceed 150 feet. Sponsors occupying government quarters are directly responsible for the police of these areas and will accomplish the following:

•Mow and edge grass — edging walkways and curbs by digging V-shaped ditches adjacent to the pavement is not authorized. Edging grooves should not exceed one-inch in width and be adjacent to the pavement. Placing gravel or stone adjacent to the pavement is not authorized.

•Prune and trim shrubbery.

•Remove trash, litter and leaves from lawn areas. Raking of leaves, litter, etc. into streets is not authorized. Yard waste should be placed in durable plastic containers (with lid) or DPW-approved paper bags and placed curbside for pick up.

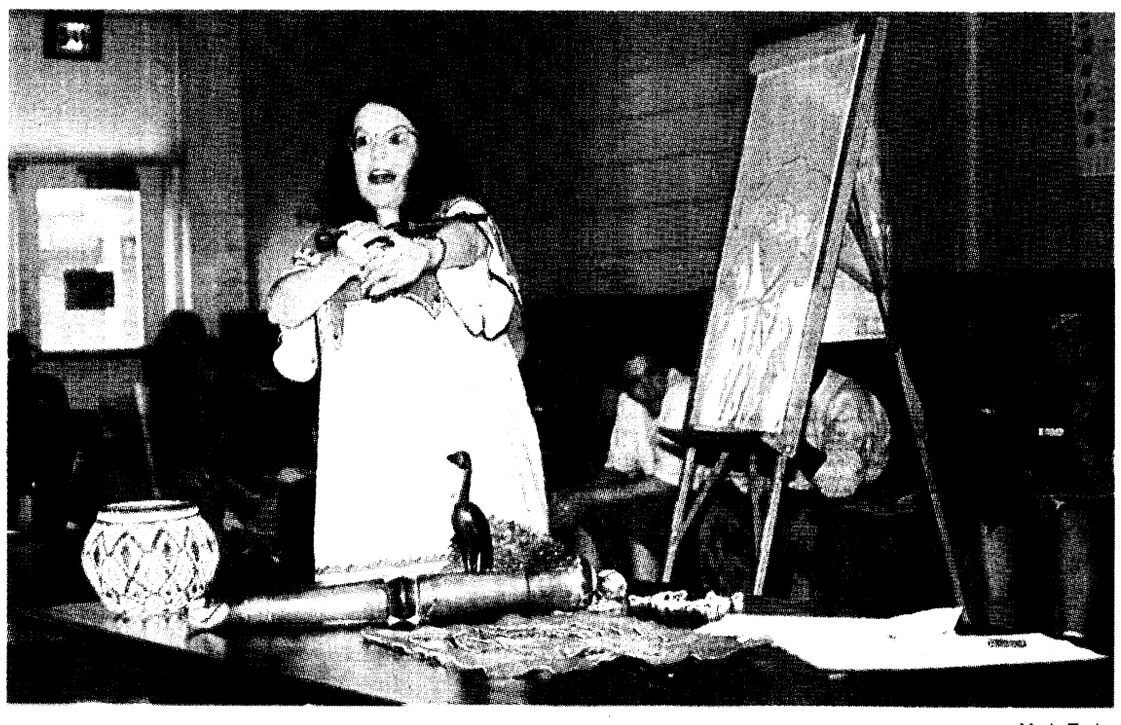
•Sweep sidewalks and hard surface areas.

•Remove debris from road curbing and drains.

•Remove vines and other vegetation from buildings and fences.

•Maintain existing approved fencing, to include cleaning, painting and the repair or replacement of broken or missing items.

•Eliminate unsightly storage of household items such as barbecue grills, bicycles and toys.



Refuse pick-up procedures for those who need to dispose of trash and refuse will be as follows:

•Household refuse such as baby diapers, food waste and household batteries will be placed in sealed plastic garbage bags or covered trash cans. Recycle items will be placed in recycle bins. Containers should be placed curbside in front of the quarters no later than 7:30 a.m. Washers, dryers and other non-refrigerant bulk items may be placed at curbside with household refuse. Residents should call Glenn Todd, Directorate of Public Works at 545-2117 to arrange pick-up of refrigerant items.

•Yard waste will not be picked up Nov. 30 due to the Thanksgiving Holiday. Yard waste must still be removed, properly bagged and placed at curbside prior to inspections on Dec. 2. Regular yard waste pick-up will resume Dec. 7.

•Residents who need to dispose of used oil or scrap metal should utilize the Oil Recycle Point in Building 4000. The Oil Recycle Point is located in Harmony Church and open 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

For more information, call Walter Nichols, Directorate of Public Works at 545-1007.

Jacqueline McGee, a seventh-grade Language Arts teacher at Faith Middle School, shows a group of seventh-grade students a medicine stick used by men in one of the Indian tribes of Panama during healing rituals.

McGee's presentation was part of a student-led program held Friday celebrating Native American Heritage Month (NAHM) Faith students participated in activities all week in observance of NAHM.

McBride celebrates Book Week

Halloween is over, but on Nov. 18, Madeline, Goldilocks, the Cat in the Hat and many other storybook characters paraded in and out of classrooms at McBride Elementary School as part of the National Book Week celebration.

Students, parents and faculty dressed as their favorite storybook character in order to spark an interest in reading.

National Book Week began in 1919 and is a week set aside each year in November to promote the interest of young people in reading good books.

The Children's Book Council in New York City formulates a new theme each year and a corresponding poster to help promote Book Week. The first poster was designed in 1921 and urged more books in the home. Since then, parents, teachers, librarians, publishers, editors and authors have joined in the annual effort to stimulate reading by children.

"Reading about a character and becoming that character offers a real challenge to the imagination," said Dell Hicks, principal at McBride.

"As the children see the storybook characters come to life they become interested in other books to read."

Nancy Gordy, a pre-kindergarten teacher at McBride who dressed as a character from her favorite book Piggie Pie, said dressing up as a storybook character becomes a great opportunity for the students to share books they have read and books their parents have read to them.

"Piggie Pie is a great fairy tale for children because the wonderful illustrations of the pigs hiding really brings the story out," Gordy added.

"The character parade along with Book Week has created such an interest that children began coming to the library two weeks ahead looking for books with characters they could dress up as," said Mitzi Crow, media specialist at McBride. "This event is always a great time and I'll guarantee that tomorrow the students will come to the library searching for books they were exposed to today."

Faith offers tours to community

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

For those who are 30-something and above, public school looks quite different than 20 or 30 years ago.

Computer labs and some new courses were just a couple of the reasons Faith Middle School students gave tours of the school to Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians during National Education Week.

"It helps them see how school has changed since they were students," said Anuarite Mubangu, a sixth-grader at Faith and one of the tour guides.

She and Kari Eldridge, an eighth-grader, were one of several pairs of students chosen by the faculty to lead groups through the school and explain the use of new technology, extracurricular activities and other aspects of Faith.

Lt. Col.(P) Anthony Cucolo, U.S Army Infantry School, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate and president of Faith's Parent-Teacher Organization, said the tours were particularly targeted toward commanders, command sergeants major, directors and chaplains.

"Since Faith is the only middle school on post, there is a good chance they deal with family members who have children at Faith," Cucolo said. "It was a chance for people who handle family support issues to go through the school and associate names with faces for those times when family issues arise."

Meeting the staff and watching students at work in an industrial arts class or doing Spanish drills gave more than an image, said Gerald Madler, a counselor at Faith.

"They know a little bit more about what goes on here," Madler said. "It gives them a point of contact."

It also showed off the quality of students at Faith and sent a message to the students themselves, Cucolo said.

"Students know when an outsider is there," he said. "If the kids see community leaders coming, they feel Faith is important to the community and that they're a part of something bigger."

School board meets, reports on director's Antarctica journey

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning School Board held its monthly meeting Monday. The new business included a report on the evaluation of the Department of Defense Domestic Dependent Elementary and Secondary Schools (DDESS) Administrative Alignment and an update on the World School Antarctica trip.

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools, started the meeting with a summary of the evaluation of the DDESS Alignment.

The alignment consisted of consolidating the administration of the DDESS schools in Alabama, South Carolina and Virginia.

The overall goal was to eliminate the duplicate cost of maintaining and operating separate full-staffed central offices for each district.

A break from the business was taken to recognize Staff Sgt. Dennis McClung, a school board member last year who represented McBride Elementary. McClung was presented a plaque from Col. Randy Buck, school board president.

"I personally enjoyed working with him last year," Buck said.

"I really learned a lot," McClung said. "Thank you to the school board and Dr. McMullen for giving me the chance to serve."

An update on the director of technology, Jerry Christy, and his World School Antarctica trip was then given by Alice Skinner, administrative technologist.

"Jerry left here Friday morning for Miami," Skinner said. "They then flew to South America and Jerry thought they would be able to rest up a little. However, their guide, Will Steger, a famous explorer, took them on a five-and-a-half-hour trek in the Andes.

"They then boarded the ship and sailed at 8:30 p.m. Sunday. As for Fort Benning students, they are being provided an up-to-the-moment update. We will soon test the technology and hopefully be able to have an on-line chat Monday."

"We are really committed to bringing real-life, real-time learning to the students," McMullen said. "This is an excellent example."

McMullen then gave the superintendent's report.

"November has been a special month in the schools as we celebrated American Education Week Nov. 16-20. Our theme 'Linking Students to Future Success' was reflected in a display at Infantry Hall, a family supper at Loyd, choral and band concerts at Faith, the dedication of a painting at White School to celebrate the life of Pearl Brakonecke, principal at White for many years, Lunch and Learn at Dexter, Noon Time Topics at Stowers and student-led tours at Faith."

Finally, McMullen explained that due to the treaty between the U.S. and Panama, the Department of Defense schools in Panama will close in June 1999. As a result of that closing, the Department of Defense Education Activity school systems were invited to send a representative to Panama last month to select items for use in their schools. Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent, represented Fort Benning.

"We feel really good about that trip," McMullen said. "We expect the additional supplies and equipment early next school year."

There will be no school board meeting for the month of December.

Routine exams detect cancer

Lt. Col. Adolfina M. Polk
U.S. Army Dental Activity

Each year, approximately 27,000 Americans learn they have oral cancer.

Routine self-examinations of the mouth can help detect signs of this life-threatening disease and significantly improve chances of successful treatment.

The mouth provides easy visual access for early detection of pre-cancerous and cancerous changes. Because these changes can be painless, people may be unaware of their existence. By the time a diagnosis is made, however, about 50 percent of oral cancers have already spread from the primary site to the lymph nodes.

People can examine their mouths regularly using a hand mirror to explore every area of it, along with the gums, lips and tongue.

Many oral cancers begin as changes in the mucous membrane, the lining of the mouth. These changes can be caused by such things as chronic irritation from ill-fitting dentures or from excessive use of tobacco products or alcohol. Watch for such signs as recurring sore areas, lumps, masses, white patches or new growths.

Statistics show that cigarette smokers face four times the risk of death from oral cancer than non-smokers do. Heavy drinkers also have increased risk of developing oral cancer. Habitual use of smokeless tobacco has been strongly linked to oral cancer as well. A five-fold increase in the incidence of oral cancer is predicted within the next 30 to 40 years. Much of this predicted increase is believed to be due to the enormous increase in smokeless tobacco consumption among pre-teens in recent years.

If any of the following warning signs of oral cancer are present, the dental staff urges an immediate visit to the dentist:

•White, smooth or scaly patches in the mouth or on the lips;

•Swelling or lumps in the mouth or on the neck, lips or tongue;

•Numbness, burning or pain in the mouth or throat without apparent cause; and •Difficulty or abnormality in speaking or swallowing.

If the dentist notices any of these signs, samples of the tissue in question will be taken for microscopic examination by a pathologist. If the examination indicates the tissue is not cancerous but could become so, the dentist will work with to remove the cause of irritation immediately. If the irritation is due to poorly fitting dentures, they should be repaired or replaced. If the irritation is a result of alcohol consumption, smoking or smokeless tobacco use, these habits should be given up.

Regular dental examinations and routine self-examinations at home can help protect everyone from this life-threatening disease.

Q. The other day a salesperson called my home and told me I was randomly selected to participate in their promotion. The salesperson stated that if I participated in the promotion, I would be able to receive subscriptions to 10 magazines at a very low cost. He further stated that all I had to do was give him my checking account number so that they could verify my identity and take the very low payment out of my checking account. Should I participate?

A. Participating in the promotion is up to you. However, agreeing to their payment method could be a bad decision. There is a new payment method called "Demand Draft" which is legal, but very dangerous. It works like this: You give the merchant your checking account number. The merchant, using your initial authorization, takes the money or monthly payment from the account without needing your signature every time he withdraws money from your account. The process appears very convenient. However, you can imagine that it can cost you dearly if the merchant is not honest.

Furthermore, never give your checking account number, or any other vital information, over the phone. One of the current scams involves someone calling you to notify you that you have won a prize. The caller indicates that a credit card number and expiration date is required before you claim your prize. Within weeks, you notice unauthorized charges on your credit card and you never receive the prize. The law does protect you from unauthorized charges after the payment of an initial fee of $50. However, you are out the $50 and you've spent lots of time disputing the unauthorized charges.

Good credit is a valuable asset and must be protected. Be wary of all phone calls and mail offers indicating that you have been selected to receive a special promotion or prize. In the majority of those situations, you've been selected as the next victim of a scam. If you have been made a victim, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to speak with an attorney. We will explore the legal options with you to ascertain whether your damages can be minimized.

There will be no yard waste pick up Monday, but in support of the Installation's Fall Clean-up Week there will be a yard waste pick-up Wednesday.

There will be no refuse, trash, garbage or recycle pick ups on Thursday. The affected areas are Bouton Heights, Upper Davis Hill, Iron Triangle, Rainbow Avenue and White Elephants.

Residents in these areas will have their refuse, trash, garbage and recycle items pick up Monday.

Refuse, trash, garbage and recycle collection in the remaining Family Housing Areas for today and Friday will be picked up as normally scheduled. For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

Leaf and Pine Needle Pick-up Schedule

Family Housing recently purchased a "leaf vacuum truck" to remove leaves and pine needles throughout Family Housing. This truck will begin service Monday using the schedule shown at right.

For convenience, periodic updates on schedule changes will be in The Bayonet's DPW Information Corner "Essayons" column through February 1999.

Residents are requested to place leaves and pine needles free of limbs and other debris within five feet of curb by 6 p.m. on the evening prior to the truck being in the area.

Leaves are not to be placed in the street or where they will block the storm drainage system.

For more information, call Bill Bunt at 545-3725.

Directorate of Public Works

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their residence in celebration of the season. Doing so may require prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation. Holiday decorations need to conform to the following requirements in the family housing area:

Exterior

•Roofs must have no decorations, lighted or unlighted. The installation of these decorations may be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

•Decorations may be affixed to walls, underside of eaves and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations to a residence use the smallest possible fasteners. Use only Underwriter's Laboratory electrical decorations.

Interior

•Do not overload electrical circuits inside a residence.

Barracks

•Exterior lighting is not permitted in the barracks.

•Do not overload electrical circuits or leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning in the barracks.

Administrative areas

•Non-electric decorations will be used in office and operational facilities throughout the installation.

Be judicious in family housing and barracks areas when using electrical decorations.

In family housing do not turn on the outside electrical decorations until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight. Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow residents to enjoy the season.

Safety tips

•Check lights for frayed wires, damaged sockets or cracked insulation before use.

•Avoid fire by keeping natural trees well watered and extension cords and lights away from the water.

•Keep tree unplugged when not at home.

•Avoid short-circuiting from rain by covering outdoor plugs and connector joints.

•Use a ground fault circuit interrupter on each circuit.

•Do not use more than one extension cord per outlet.

•Never decorate trees with candles.

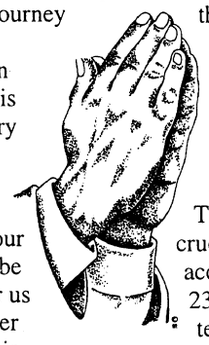
Chaplain (Capt.) Scott M. Bullock
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment



I don't know what I would do if I did not have holidays to look forward to. It is so refreshing to see the fine print and realize I will have some time off work to relax, catch up on home essentials or visit with family on these special occasions.

reflections

Now Thanksgiving is already here. I trust you and your family will make this Thanksgiving holiday a memorable event at your home. One way you can do this is by establishing some family traditions. Some Thanksgiving traditions will never vanish, like turkey and football. For Christian believers there are far more important family traditions to consider.

How about you? What significance does Thanksgiving have in your home? I am convinced that knowing Thanksgiving's true heritage, God's great provision and Bible teachings will help us have a special holiday.

First, Thanksgiving has a tremendous heritage for us today. We often think Thanksgiving simply began with the Pilgrims and American Indians at their first harvest in 1621. But Thanksgiving has its roots as far back as the earliest history of western civilization. The Old Testament Jews observed a festival of thanks in the Feast Of Tabernacles according to Leviticus 23:34-44. This was an eight-day feast set aside after harvest to offer thanks for good crops and God's present provision in addition to recalling God's help during the wilderness journey from Egypt.

One tradition we can establish in our homes is compiling a good library of history books that turn our attention to the sacrifices and hardships suffered by our forefathers. May they be a constant reminder for us and provoke us to render thanks to God from their mighty example.

Second, God's great blessings must motivate us to hold a special significance for this Thanksgiving season. Creation itself evidences God's provision on our behalf. Psalm 19:1 says "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork." Just look around. All the beauty you see in nature was created by God. But God also evidenced himself to us in a special way through his one and only son, Jesus Christ. You see, Jesus Christ is the ultimate reason we all ought to be thankful. God demonstrated his love for all humanity through the cross of Christ. Romans 5:8 proclaims, "God demonstrated his love for us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."

When we speak of the blessings of God at Thanksgiving, we must be mindful of the greatest reason to offer thanks, and that is God's provision of salvation from our own sin or imperfections. Thanksgiving was more meaningful to me when I discovered God's gift of eternal life by God's grace through faith in Jesus Christ. Only when we keep the cross at the forefront of our Thanksgiving holiday will we realize how much we truly have to be thankful for. So how can we remind ourselves about this? How about setting some time aside each Thanksgiving to read the crucifixion and resurrection account from the gospel of Luke 23-24? This would make a terrific family tradition establishing the proper attitude of gratitude in our homes.

Finally, the Bible commands us to be thankful. As Christian believers, we do not have the option to decide whether or not we will feel like being grateful. Thanksgiving must never be based solely on an emotion but on God's objective teaching. St. Paul said it this way in Philippians 4:11, "I have learned in whatsoever condition I am, to be content." Well, that is easier said than done, isn't it? It is so easy to look around at what everybody else has and what we do not have and think "I'm pretty desperate."

Here's another tradition to consider: how about taking 15-30 minutes as a family before your big dinner to recall the rich goodness of God and to say a direct word of thanks to those friends and family God has blessed you with. May we then realize that Thanksgiving can truly be an everyday holiday.

Advent reminds us to be alert for God's arrival

Chaplain (Maj.) Ruben D. Colon
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Be on guard! Be alert! You do not know when the time will come. It's like a man going away; he leaves his house and puts his servants in charge, each with his assigned task and tells the one at the door to keep watch.

He keeps watch because you do not know when the owner of the house will come back — whether in the evening, midnight, when the rooster crows or at dawn. If he comes suddenly, do not let him find you sleeping. What I say to you, I say to everyone. "Watch!" Mark 13:33-37 NIV.

We were on a flight home after months of deployment. The plane was filled to capacity and all the military personnel on board sat back for a flight that was to last roughly 36 hours. After an hour into our flight, I noticed one Soldier who for the whole flight kept going to one particular window and looking out, then glancing at his watch. After a while, it occurred to me that there were two kinds of responses occurring in anticipation of our return home. While he was watching, I was only waiting.

Advent is the period just before Christmas. It invites us to a similar active response. Do we watch or merely wait for Christmas? Advent calls us to take courage and allows us to hope in a truly faithful way.

In Advent "watching" implies a readiness, where waiting connotes something of a relaxed atmosphere. Waiting implies a sense that maybe we would be diverted to another conflict and never get home. To do so is like giving up on all the hopes and promises the Christ child comes to bring us at Christmas.

To conclude, Advent is really a reminder to all believers that God has come into our world through the Christ child and also a reminder that we need to be on alert for his appearance in our lives. The joyous experience of his salvation for all people is like counting on someone who will always be with you. That Soldier in the above illustration knew that his family was there for him. He anticipated the passion and desire of his arrival and reunion with his family, much like what we anticipate in the arrival of the Lord Christ. Once again, God has come to us, and keeps coming.

During Advent, be an active watcher rather than a passive waiter. It is a season of vigil, during which Christians actively anticipate the coming of the Messiah. Just as the shepherds and the wise men and all those who were finally led to the manger, we can declare "Blessed be the Lord," and "Glory to God in the highest and peace to men of good will."

Fort Benning community members got their chance to put up their best shots against former National Basketball Association (NBA) stars Thursday as part of AT&T's NBA Heroes of the Hardcourt basketball tour.

Five former NBA standouts including six-time NBA All-star Artis Gilmore and Hall of Famer Bill Sharmen participated in the tour, which also made stops at Forts Gordon and Stewart, Ga.

"We are here to celebrate with the military and their family members," said Gilmore. "This is something very special — to share (our talents) and be a part of the activities here."

Sharmen added that he was thrilled to have been asked to take part in the tour.

"Events such as these are my way of using my basketball talents to provide entertainment to the hard-working men and women helping to defend our country," he said.

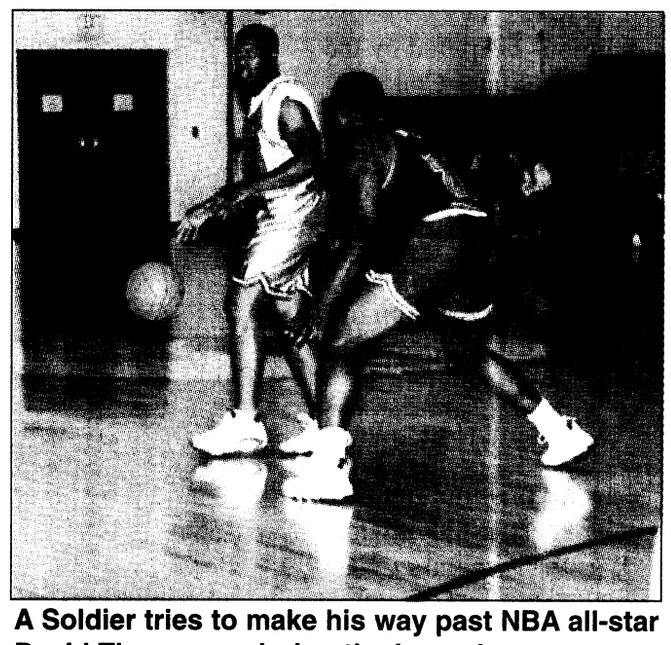
More than 300 people showed up at the Main Post Exchange for the autograph session with Gilmore, Sharmen, former Denver Nugget guard and Hall of Famer Davis Thompson, former Detroit Piston Darrell Walker and Boston Celtic Scott Wedman.

In addition to a two-hour autograph session at the Main Post Exchange, the NBA heroes also conducted a youth basketball clinic at Audie Murphy Fitness Center where they worked with youngsters on basics such as dribbling, lay ups and good sportsmanship.

"I learned how to play better," said 8-year-old RaiShaun Bennett. "My favorite part was when we practiced shooting."

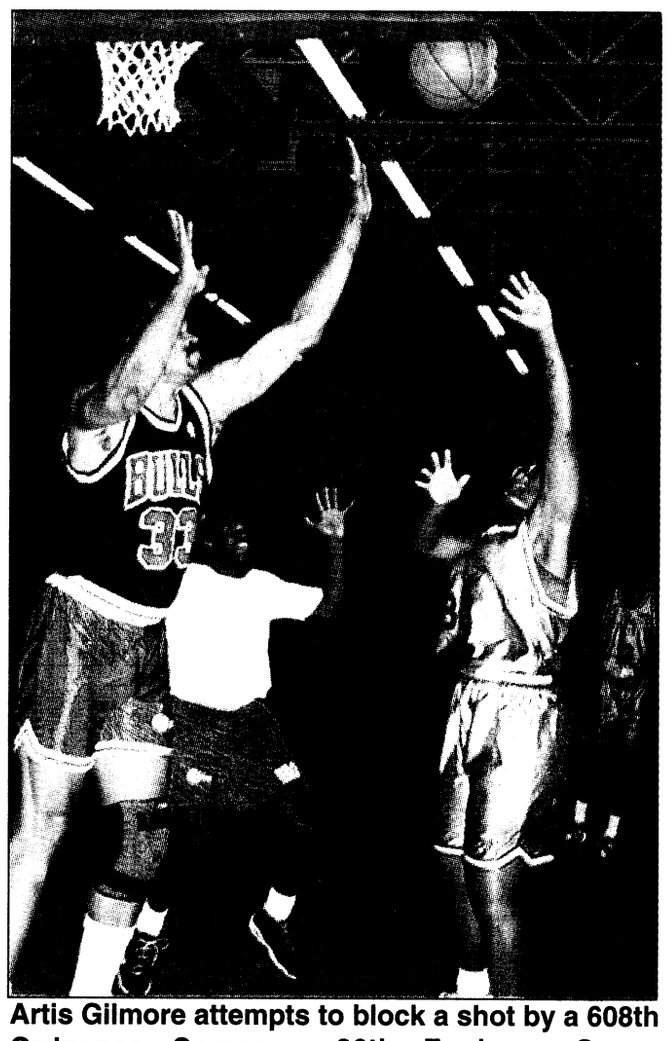
Bennett said the clinic was fun although he admitted he wasn't quite sure who his teachers were.

During the "legends" game, the NBA stars joined forces with Soldiers from the Infantry Training Brigade to take on another team comprised of Soldiers mainly from the 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction).



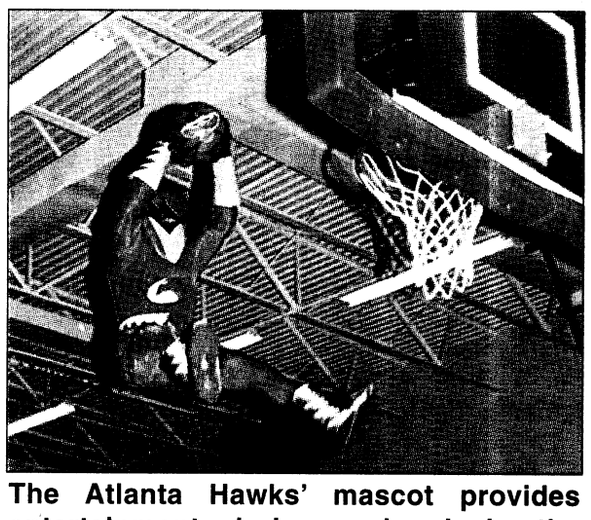
Although the ITB team may have had a slight advantage with their pro teammates, the 608th team put up a fight, but lost 52-36 after the 20 minutes of play.

"It doesn't matter how old they get; they just get stronger with age," said Sammie O'Neal, a player from the 608th Ord. Co. "It was great to have them here and play just to have fun."

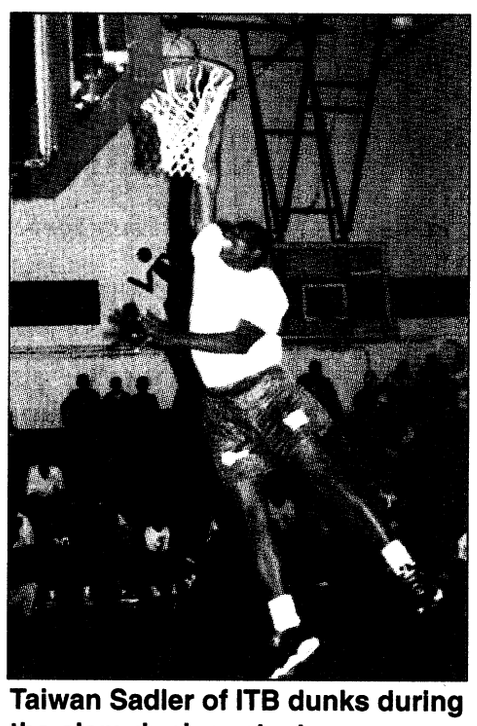


Besides the legends game, the festivities also included three-point and slam dunk contests.

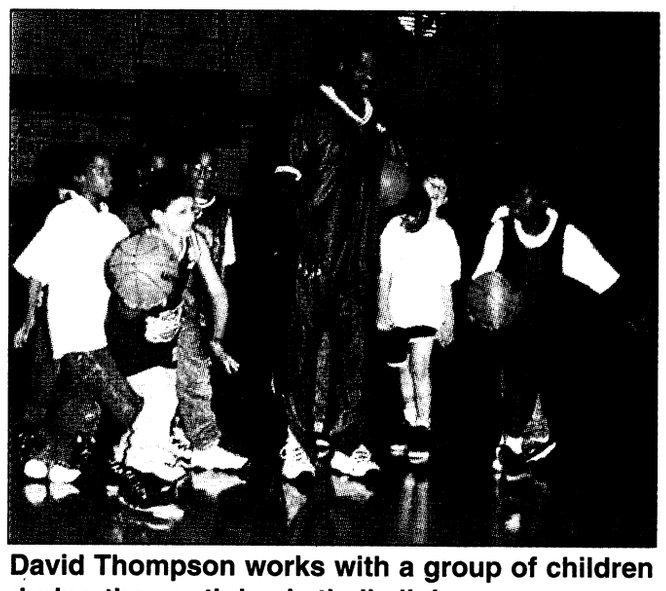
Brandon Sykes, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, won the three-point competition after beating former Boston Celtic Scott Wedman in a shootout.



Taiwan Sadler and Joel Benefiel, both of ITB, tied for first place in the slam dunk contest, which was judged by three Fort Benning community members.



A Soldier tries to make his way past NBA all-star David Thompson during the legends game.



Artis Gilmore attempts to block a shot by a 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) Soldier.

David Thompson works with a group of children during the youth basketball clinic.

Studies to determine cost-cutting measures

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning was notified by the Department of the Army that Commercial Activities (A-76) studies of the Directorate of Information Management and the Training Support Center will begin in fiscal year 1999.

Imposed by Congressional cost-cutting directives, the studies will determine whether it is more economical to contract out or to retain in-house job performance, by conducting detailed cost comparison analyses of each activity.

These studies will consider a total of 107 current positions. They are projected for completion within two years of the studies' actual start dates.

A decision to convert from in-house to a commercial source will be considered only after the cost comparison study has been completed.

For more information, call the Public Affairs Office at 545-2237 or 545-2236.

QUEST

Leaders gather for quality conference

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

More than 50 of Fort Benning's top leaders joined the commanding general at the Uchee Creek Lodge Monday and Tuesday for the semi-annual Senior Quality Executive Steering Team (QUEST) conference.

Commanders and directors were able to take time from the rigors of their day to day activities to concentrate on improvements they wanted to make in Fort Benning's eight key mission essential processes. These processes are Infantry training, Infantry doctrine, Infantry future, quality of life, purchasing, human resources, communication automation and power projection.

According to QUEST facilitator Steven Chittum, the goal of QUEST was to bring decision makers together to devise ways to measure performance and success within these key processes.

Chittum said everyone worked in teams and after they developed and refined their ideas they briefed the commanding general on why they selected the measures and how they plan to track them.

Chittum mentioned that holding QUEST is important because all of the leaders are working together to improve Fort Benning.

"The biggest thing is that everyone is involved," Chittum said. "All the leaders are having an input. They are able to voice their opinions and concerns and also share their ideas on how to make Fort Benning better."

Jim Brinson, Adjutant General, said not only did they look at how well things are being done and how to measure success, but how they plan to prove those measurements.

Brinson said the commanders also evaluated how each key mission essential process affected the other.

For example, he said human resources supports all of the other key processes. "In order to be successful, we have to ensure the right people with the right skills at the right place and time," Brinson said.

Furthermore, Brinson said the conference introduced newer team members to how things are done here in order to build a stronger team.

Motivational speaker and Corporate Executive of SYNOVUS Financial Corporation, Jim Blanchard echoed these sentiments in his opening remarks to the group.

"The simple unadorned truth, the common thread that runs through units who are continually successful beyond their expectations in every instance, compared to those who are just mediocre is how you treat folks," Blanchard said. "I think that is just as true in the U.S. Army as it is in the SYNOVUS Financial Corporation to the Presbyterian Church.

"If you really want to rally the troops, if you really want to execute policy and want everybody to pitch in and give it their all, there's no substitute for people feeling like they are part of a good deed," Blanchard said. "People need to feel that they are on the inside, not on the outside looking in."

Soldiers join relief efforts

Air Force Tech. Sgt. John Willoughby, 301st Air Squadron, Travis Air Force Base, Calif., guides a UH-60 air ambulance aboard a C-5 Galaxy.

Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) shuffled onto aircraft this week to take part in the Army's hurricane relief efforts in Central America, joining the nearly 6,000 troops already in the region.

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) deployed more than 70 Soldiers this week while additional Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Eng. Grp. (Construction) are scheduled to depart next week to the assist in the humanitarian effort, which will aid the storm-tattered countries that were nearly destroyed in October when Hurricane Mitch tore through Honduras, El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua.

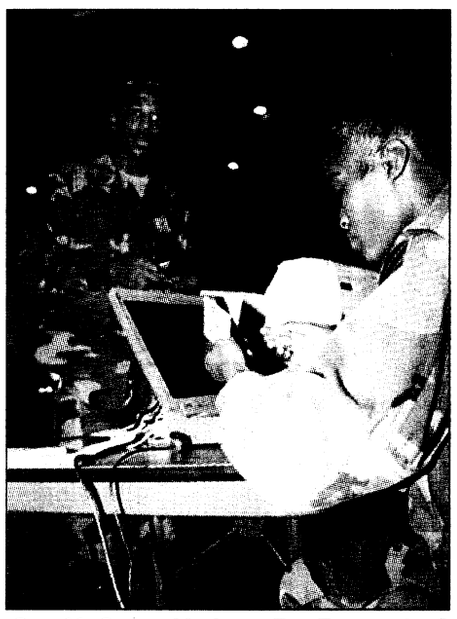
Lt. Col. Wendell L. Taylor, 36th Eng. Grp.'s deputy commander, said by Dec. 10, nearly 300 36th Eng. Grp. Soldiers will be in the region.

According to Maj. Vincent C. Carnazza, 498th commander, the deployment, which is scheduled to conclude on or about Feb. 15 of next year, will be a challenging opportunity for the Soldiers involved.

"The deployment affords these Soldiers a chance to do what they signed up to do," Carnazza said. "Every MOS will be challenged; it will allow them to execute and prove how good they really are."

498th Soldiers will get that opportunity as they will be tasked with providing 24-hour medical evacuation (MEDEVAC) support for civilians and military members in the four-country region.

"Some of our maintenance personnel, equipment and medical supplies were flown out early this week," Carnazza said. "We should be up and able to perform our mission within 36 to 48 hours from the arrival of our last flight of personnel."



The final flight of 498th personnel is slated for departure from Lawson Army Airfield late Saturday.

The final departure of personnel finalizes a two-week preparation for what was initially marked as a state-side deployment.

"Initially, we were simply going to provide MEDEVAC coverage for Fort Stewart (Ga.) and Fort Bragg (N.C.) units deployed to Central America, " Carnazza said. "But, that plan was dropped, and we were called the (Nov.) 14th and told the operation in the area would require our assistance."

Since that call, Soldiers of the 498th have been working around the clock to prepare the extensive amount of equipment needed to perform 24-hour MEDEVAC service.

"All of our people have performed outstanding these past two weeks," he said. "They have pulled together and completed the mission when the pressure was really on."

Vandal damages historic building

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A 55-year-old woman was charged with criminal trespass, damage of government property and unlawful entry after defacing the U.S. Army School of Americas on Thanksgiving Day.

Willa Elam, of Palm Bay, Florida, illegally entered the School's building sometime during the evening. She was discovered in one of the offices about 11 p.m. by the School's Charge of Quarters.

An inspection of the building revealed the suspect wrote anti-U.S. Army School of Americas slogans on the walls. These were similar to the slogans on the signs used by protesters this past weekend. The suspect identified herself as a professional activist and told Military Police she attended Sunday's protest rally.

Post officials believe damage to the historic building will amount to tens of thousands of dollars.

She was issued a summons by the Military Police to appear in Federal Court at a later date when she will be asked to enter a plea.

Faith Middle School will conduct its annual Faith Holiday Race Saturday. For more information, see page C-1.

Post celebrates Native American heritage during luncheon

Maria Taylor
Bayonet Correspondent

Freeman Owle, a member of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians and guest speaker for the Native American Heritage Luncheon Nov. 25, spoke little about the Trail of Tears.

He seemed to enjoy more telling stories that described the advantages of his heritage, like the one about his college classmates who struggled to learn botany.

"They were teaching the bark of the trees and the leaves of the trees, and these young gentlemen were really laboring trying to learn all these things," Owle said. "I had learned (all of these things) by the time I was ten."

The month of November is designated "Native American Heritage Month," and Owle's remarks focused not only on the contributions of Native Americans in every conflict since the Civil War but also on the appreciation of Cherokee life and how it relates to life today in areas such as self-concept, respect for others and appreciation for the earth.

Sgt. 1st Class Billy W. Carmichael, Equal Opportunity Advisor for the Infantry Training Brigade, said every ethnic group is part of what we call "Americans" and have given something to benefit everyone.

"Native Americans introduced numerous agricultural benefits — many foods that are a regular part of our diet, medicinal remedies, game-gathering techniques," Carmichael said.

"They have an inherent ability to live off the land without harming the land. They consciously keep the ecosystem balanced."

After 14 years of teaching school on the Cherokee Reservation, Owle now lectures to groups throughout the eastern U.S. on Cherokee history, legends and culture.

Whether in answer to a question from the audience or part of his formal remarks, Owle wove together stories from his own heritage illustrating his belief that regardless of past injustices to Native Americans, they seek to work for the good of all, in the Army or any area of life.

"We have barriers we must see beyond," Owle said, recounting the story of how he taught one of his former sixth-grade classes to respect a fellow classmate who had a heart condition and couldn't play a simple game of kickball. After making them include her in a game and let her make a home run, he said, the children's reward was seeing in her a boost of self-confidence.

"They gave her something, and it didn't cost them anything," Owle said.

Owle related a costlier kind of giving by Cherokees he knew who gave their lives in World Wars I and II, even when he said Native Americans weren't American citizens.

"We've been there, and we will continue to be there," Owle said. "We're citizens and we'll pay our part."

Owle said that while Native Americans feel the government has in the past not acted in their best interest, events such as World War II were in the best interest of all who live in America.

"I remember looking up in the skies after WWII and seeing airplanes flying overhead and realizing that blood was shed so we would not be conquered," Owle said.

"Many of my relatives died in the war. We so believed in America and so wanted to be a part."

Several of those attending the luncheon said they enjoyed Owle's presentation because of their own Native American heritage.

"Hearing stories and history from someone who knows the culture is really enjoyable," said Sgt. Steve Keaton, Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade, who had relatives of Indian ancestry.

"We have Native Americans who know the government may have done wrong in the past, but they still come and serve," Keaton said. "It would be easy to sit back and blame the government. A lot of Native Americans don't do that."

"We are all brothers and sisters, and we're all part of the military," Owle said. "The Cherokees are great warriors."

Army family shares pride, values

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

When the editor first asked me to write a commentary about loyalty, I immediately thought, 'What am I, a dog?' For some reason, I associate dogs with loyalty. But then I got to thinking, maybe she means something different, like loyalty to something else. And then I got it.

commentary

Loyalty is one of the seven Army values, and even though I'm not in the Army, I am an Army spouse and loyalty is a large part of my life.

My first loyalty, of course, falls with my husband. I took my marriage vows very seriously, still do and always will.

Because I have that sort of loyalty to my husband, in the same way I have loyalty to his unit. I think this is a normal thing among military spouses, to have a pride in their spouse and in what they do. The first pride comes from knowing my husband is part of the men and women who protect our country. The second part is the loyalty to his unit. I take great pride in being a Ranger wife, and anyone who talks to me can hear my fierce loyalty to both my husband, his fellow Rangers and the entire unit.

If you want to keep going, in that way I have loyalty to the entire U.S. Army and our country.

Now, I still do think of dogs and their loyalty, only because my two dogs are very loyal and only want to please us. Dogs are different in that way from humans, but it all runs along the same vein.

I've always been a very loyal person for as long as I can remember. Being a good New England girl, I've always been loyal to my teams the Celtics, Patriots and Bruins.

I would have to say my biggest loyalty, besides my husband, is with my friends and family.

Although my brother is in Massachusetts, I tell him 'If anyone gives you trouble, tell them your older sister is going to come up there and take care of it.'

No, I'm not a big advocate of violence, but nobody messes with my friends or family, especially my mom or brother. Whatever they need, I try to do my best to help.

If I hear a friend being talked about, I immediately step up and say something, because I don't take stuff like that lightly.

All in all, loyalty is a part of my everyday life and I believe it's something that should be a part of everyone's life, everyday. Loyalty can only be a good thing.

Loyalty seen in everyday activities

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (IOBC)

When asked about loyalty, some people might answer that they are loyal to a certain automobile manufacturer or a certain television show. They are probably confusing loyalty with favoritism. Loyalty is something deeper than Ford versus Chevy or 60 Minutes versus 20/20.

commentary

Loyalty to the nation is perhaps the best known example. A citizen answering the call to arms is familiar to all of us. From Lincoln's 90-day volunteers, who enlisted to preserve the Union, to those who believed "right or wrong, my country needs me," and answered the call in Vietnam, Americans demonstrated loyalty to their nation.

Yet there are other, more personal loyalties that many of us have been inculcated with. In the weeks and days before my grandmother and mother died of cancer, my family and I maintained a constant vigil.

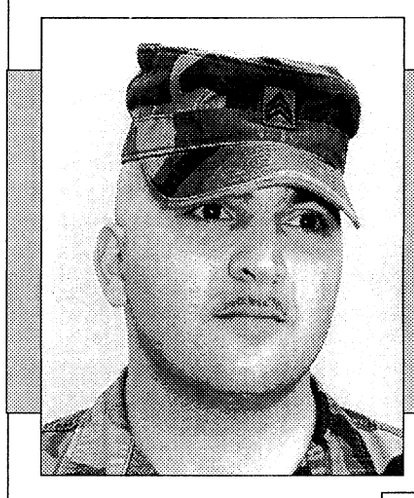
As hard as it was for us to watch our loved ones slowly waste away, surrounded constantly by death, there was never any thought of abandoning them at the time of their deaths. So we remembered the good times, we laughed and we cried. But we were there until the end.

A more common form of family loyalty can be found in Army wives. Next to combat veterans, career Army wives have perhaps the deepest loyalties to someone they are not related to by blood. They put up with the odd, long hours, strange vocabulary and the occasional vivid, fitful dreams. They are called upon to help with homework and balance the checkbook when Soldiers are away, and must offer an explanation when dad isn't there for a music recital.

In addition to the normal duties required to run a family, these wives must live with the knowledge that their Soldier may be called and put in harms way at a moment's notice. Just ask a widow of the battle in Mogadishu.

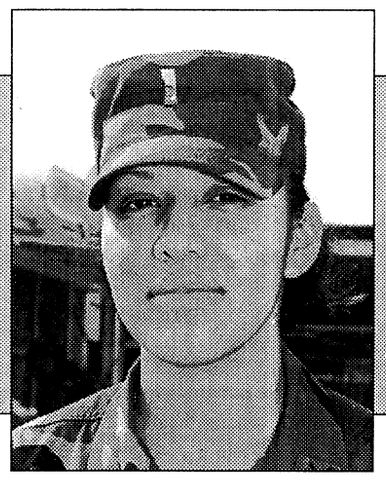
All of us have friends, but how many of those friends would we risk our lives for? How many of those friends would we give our last $50 to and the shirt off our backs? My best friend back home was with me through six years of college, two deaths, my wedding and a house fire.

He offered me blood, sweat and tears and the shirt off his back. And what did he ask in return? Nothing but my continued loyalty as his friend.



When I was in the National Guard, my platoon had a squad leader who was a combat veteran of Somalia. It was through him that I learned about Soldiers who re-enlisted rather than leave their friends on the verge of combat. Soldiers who disobeyed their doctors' instructions so they could join their buddies in combat. Men who cradled their best friends in their arms as they died.

It was about this same time that I read about the 1965 battle of Ia Drang Valley. As their unit prepared for what was to be the bloodiest battle since the Korean War, some Soldiers of the 1st Cavalry Division were only days away from the end of their enlistment. Although they were offered, even encouraged to stay behind on that fateful November morning, they chose to remain at the side of their friends, their comrades-in-arms. Several of these short-timers would return home, side-by-side with their friends in identical flag-draped coffins.



More than anything else, it is loyalty to family and friends that motivates us. Be it a needy friend, a sick family member, a fellow Soldier or a fiancee who is expecting a phone call from a war zone, loyalty is what drives us and guides us through our lives.

of celebrating Christmas hundreds of miles away from family and loved ones.

"We encouraged all of our Soldiers to do what they felt needed to be done whether it was shopping or celebrating early," he said. "We want their minds to be focused on the mission at hand, and if an early Christmas celebration would help, that's what we advised."

Spc. Chris E. Dryden, an aircraft maintenance specialist with the 498th was one of those that celebrated the holidays early this year; however, Dryden said the deployment's mission brings with it the true meaning of the holidays.

"My wife and I did celebrate Christmas early this year, but we both know that these kind of things can happen," he said. "The people down there have nothing, their families have been lost and all of their possessions are gone. We are going to help them get back on their feet and get their lives back to normal. It's an opportunity for us to give the greatest Christmas gift anyone could offer."

For Pfc. Sandra M. Hornsby, a communications specialist with the 498th, this deployment marks the first Christmas season she will spend away from her two children.

"I have just prepared for the worst," she said. "I am excited about the opportunity to do my part in the mission, but I will always be thinking of my kids back home"

As a single parent of two, Hornsby said she faced the most difficult challenge she has ever been faced with — telling her 3-year-old daughter and her 4 -year-old son that Mommy wouldn't be home this Christmas.

"It is hard for them to understand," she said. "All I can tell them is that I am going to the jungle to help people build stuff and get better. They just don't understand why they can't go."

Although Hornsby and the 70 other 498th personnel will soon be in the scorching sun of Central America, Fort Benning's medical evacuation needs will not be affected by the cut in manpower.

Carnazza said that the same world-class MEDEVAC service Fort Benning expects from the 498th will not lack while they are assisting in Central America.

"We have left three crews and six aircraft behind to provide service for the area," he said. "Residents of Fort Benning will not experience any loss of service while we are performing our mission in Central America."

MOH recipient fights last battle

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Army Medal of Honor recipient retired Master Sgt. Roy P. Benavidez died Nov. 29 at Brooke Army Medical Center, San Antonio. He was 63.

Benavidez, who'd been ill for some months, succumbed to respiratory failure and other ailments, said his friend, retired Army Master Sgt. Charlie Hoffman.

"Roy was a Soldier to be emulated by those wearing the uniform, and an example of a self-made person. He was born poor," said Hoffman, the president of Chapter 15, Special Forces Association, headquartered in San Antonio. "He was a role model to many young Hispanics and made a lot of public appearances at schools.

"Roy told young Hispanic teenagers they could make it to the top. A school was named after him in Houston a couple of years ago," he said.

Thirty years ago in Vietnam Benavidez had challenged death and won. On May 2, 1968 then-Staff Sergeant Benavidez would "distinguished himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty." In spite of more than two-dozen debilitating wounds, he helped save the lives of eight of his Special Forces comrades during helicopter evacuations during a firefight with North Vietnamese regular forces west of Loc Ninh.

Benavidez

After the firefight Benavidez was so mauled after receiving a broken jaw and 37 bullet and bayonet puncture wounds in combat with the enemy, that his commanding officer thought he wouldn't live long enough to receive a Medal of Honor. The commanding officer reasoned that Benavidez would probably live to receive the Distinguished Service Medal (DSM), since that medal required less time and paperwork to obtain.

Benavidez received the DSM from Gen. William C. Westmoreland for his actions near Loc Ninh. However, years later, Westmoreland learned more particulars of Benavidez's heroics, and in 1981, the medal was upgraded to a Medal of Honor. Benavidez received his Medal of Honor that year from then-President Ronald Reagan in a White House ceremony.

The U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) named the U.S. Army's first Spanish-speaking NCO academy after Benavidez. The academy was activated this July.

"A great Soldier, who demonstrated one of the greatest Army values, has passed away," said Command Sgt. Maj. Ricardo Layne of USARSA. "As command sergeant major of USARSA, I had an opportunity to meet that great Soldier. We will all miss him very much."

Of Mexican and Yaqui Indian ancestry, Benavidez later co-authored a book about his life, Medal of Honor — A Vietnam Warrior's Story.

Benavidez was one of 239 Americans who received Medals of Honor for their service in Vietnam. To date, 4,121 Medals of Honor have been authorized, with Army personnel receiving the majority.

Benavidez was buried Thursday at the Fort Sam Houston National Cemetery and received full military honors. A wife and three daughters survive him.

Rangers get down to business during two-week deployment

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

After spending two weeks getting down in the dirt at Fort Pickett, Va., the Rangers of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment packed it up Nov. 21 and headed home just in time for Thanksgiving.

More than 400 Rangers made the trek to Fort Pickett Nov. 10 to conduct training upon Virginia's unfamiliar terrain.

Perhaps one of the biggest clues that the Rangers meant business while at Fort Pickett were the seven flat-bed trucks loaded with equipment that was used during the deployment.

Everything from the most basic of supplies right up to Ranger Special Operations Vehicles (RSOVs) and light-tracked vehicles called Weasles were part of the extensive arsenal.

While at Fort Pickett, each of the companies spent three days rotating through marksmanship training, platoon level live-fire exercises and Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT) missions.

Hundreds of thousands of rounds and 20 ranges later, the Rangers are most likely ready to face any challenge that may arise.

According to Lt. Col. Daniel Allyn, commander of the 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., the Rangers received superb realistic combat training during their time at Fort Pickett.

Allyn said the training was enhanced by utilizing almost every weapons system in the Ranger's arsenal, to include RSOVs and anti-tank gunnery.

He said there was a lot of focus on the live-fire raid. Because each platoon conducted a blank and live-fire portion of the exercise during day and night, the battalion was trained to a much higher proficiency level.

He added that conducting the live fires at night was challenging, but the Rangers were able to continually improve and execute successful missions.

"There were some significant gains made along the way," Allyn said.

"Overcoming the challenge of fighting at night completely under the infra-red spectrum and their success in doing so will be something they will take back with them. Lessons learned in that process are going to be integrated into upcoming training to ensure we don't lose the ground we've gained while we were there," he said.

Allyn added that the marksmanship and MOUT training modules of the deployment were also very successful.

The Rangers were able to spend time conducting marksmanship on a variety of ranges using a wide spectrum of weaponry. All of this helped increase marksmanship scores, Allyn said.

He also added that room and building clearing and movement and assault on the MOUT sight were some of the most valuable training the Rangers received, since that is one of their primary tasks in a combat environment.

"Overall, we had a great deployment," Allyn said. "We were able to achieve all of our training objectives and everyone is at a higher combat readiness level than before we left."

Sgt. Brian Morneault, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, said the deployment to Fort Pickett was excellent training, especially for the newer Rangers.

He said it gave all of the Rangers a chance to witness the violence of action and experience a real wartime setting.

"It was a really successful deployment," Morneault said. "I think we have all learned a lot and are more proficient at our jobs."

IOBC spends day at range

Spc. Michael J. Brock
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's (USAMU) Service Rifle shooters took their skills in marksmanship training to the future leaders of the Army last week when they instructed students in the Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC).

"A few weeks ago we did a training clinic for the IOBC cadre," said Sgt. 1st Class Rand D. Bentson, Service Rifle shooter and instructor. "They liked the training so much that they asked us to help them out with the Basic Rifle Marksmanship portion of the course."

"It started with the cycle break back in October," recalled Capt. Townley Hedrick, 4th platoon trainer, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, IOBC.

"The USAMU instructors came in and taught us everything and showed us the NOPTEL system," he continued.

The NOPTEL system is an electronic shooting system using lasers and prisms along with computers to tell the shooters how they are holding their rifle, where the shot hits on the target and the follow through of the shot.

"We wanted to use the NOPTEL system with the students," Hedrick said. "So we asked the instructors to come back and teach some of the instruction blocks."

The USAMU Soldiers taught three of the six instruction blocks including the fundamentals of shooting positions and the training aids station which included the NOPTEL system.

"We also brought the NOPTEL system out to the range to show its versatility," Bentson said. "We let them use the NOPTEL system while live firing at the same time."

Out of the 140 students trained, almost all of them have seen some sort of improvement, Bentson added.

"So far, it has really helped me out by improving my shot group," said student 2nd Lt. Charles Smith. "My shot group went from about two and a half inches down to quarter size."

"We taught the student what to look for in a problem and then how to fix the problem," Bentson said.

"Everyone that I have talked to has had nothing but praise for the training that we have received," Smith added. "We will see how it all pays off when we go qualify."

2nd Lt. Jason Vukovich
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Creeping forward through the undergrowth, a point man scans left, right and to his front. He furrows his brow half in concentration, half because the late November warmth is building up a sweat. All at once to his front, the enemy pops into view and begins to fire. The point man drops behind a tree, brings his rifle to bear and engages the enemy. The fight is on.

Last week, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) conducted operations in the offense as part of the field training Infantry lieutenants receive during the course, which includes about eight weeks of field training and eight weeks of classroom instruction.

Offense is deemed perhaps one of the most important exercises new lieutenants participate in because of the overall mission of the Infantry — to close in and destroy the enemy.

To practice this, the company conducted a mission at Fort Benning's Ware Range.

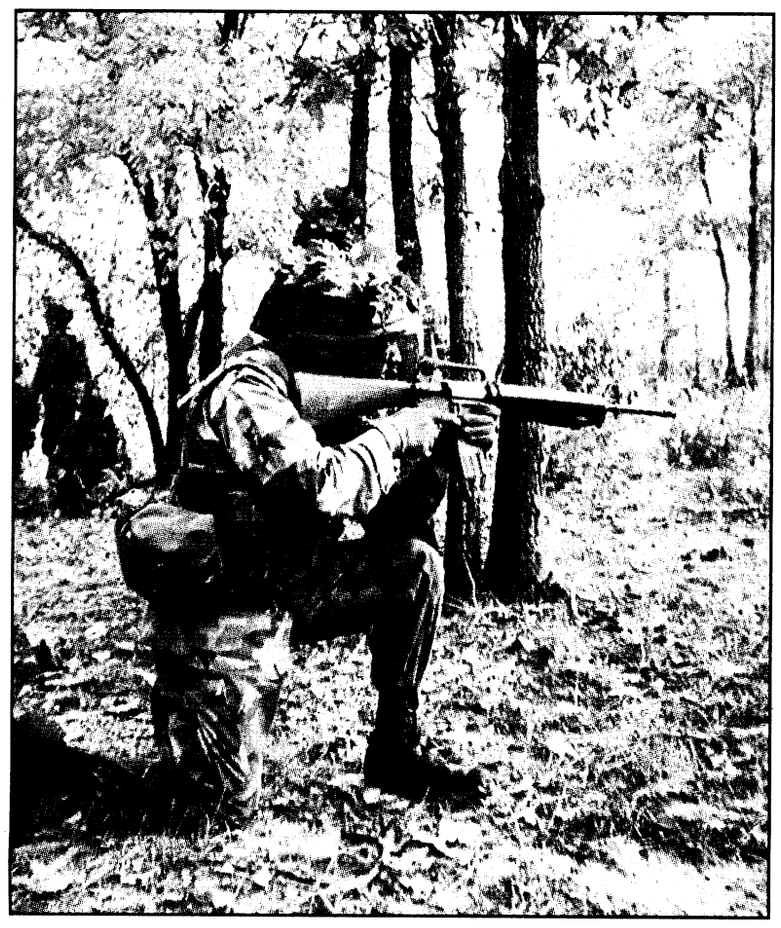
There, the students conducted platoon-size missions ranging from an attack of a trenchline, ambushing a small convoy, to raiding a mortar position.

All of these missions and the classroom training culminated in a platoon movement to contact live fire.

"Live fires are really what we are all about. When live rounds are loaded, it makes the training all that more intense and real. You begin to see training as rehearsal for combat," said 2nd Lt. Robert Simmons, IOBC student.

Although the execution of missions is the most visible aspect of the field training exercise (FTX),. the planning and preparation process is essential for soon-to-be rifle platoon leaders.

"Coordinating actions and backwards planning are the biggest skills that we practice in the build up to actually going out and hitting targets. They are also the hardest to pull off, especially when snags like rain, darkness and enemy operations get in the way," said 2nd Lt. Jay Watkins, IOBC student.



"Our jobs as leaders is to put out the plan and guidance for our troops and coordinate the battle. The Soldiers and NCOs really are the ones who pull it off," he continued.

Adversity reared its head in the form of not so favorable weather while Co. B was out. Sleep and time were rare.

All of these conditions provided added stress which supporting units and the opposing force (OPFOR) capitalized on to give added realism.

OPFOR was even included on live fires and placed after the objectives were secured to simulate enemy prisoners and casualties. Co. B fought through it with a vengeance.

"Training in the field is why we are here," Simmons added. "The more IOBC gives new lieutenants a chance to learn here, the better we can apply what we learn later on when it counts."

A Soldier prepares equipment to deploy to Central America to assist in a humanitarian mission. Soldiers have been on alert since Nov. 9.

Engineers assist clean-up mission

63rd Engineer Company

Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) loaded their equipment on rail cars last weekend and sent their equipment to Beaumont, Texas.

From Beaumont, the equipment will be loaded on ships to sail to Puerto Corinto, Nicaragua, where Soldiers of the 63rd will pick it up with it on or about Thursday.

Central America was devastated during Hurricane Mitch last month. Thousands have been left homeless without food, potable water or medical services and relief efforts have been slow due to impassable roads.

The 63rd has been tasked to help reopen major arteries in Nicaragua so that food, water and medicine can be transported to those in need.

"Missing Christmas will be difficult, but knowing we will be helping so many people out there who are less fortunate will make it much easier," remarked Spc. Steven Lovell.

The company was put on alert Nov. 9. They then began to prepare for possible deployment to Central America.

Since the alert, the company has been busy preparing equipment for transport, qualifying at the range, conducting required medical processing and drawing needed supplies.

"We've worked hard for the past two weeks, but we are ready now to go build roads," said 1st Platoon Sergeant Sgt. 1st Class David Poindexter.

The company will deploy with enough supplies, food and water for fifteen days, since logistical support will be unreliable initially.

"Now that our equipment and supplies are loaded we have time to relax and spend Thanksgiving with our families," said Company Commander Capt. Robert Carr.

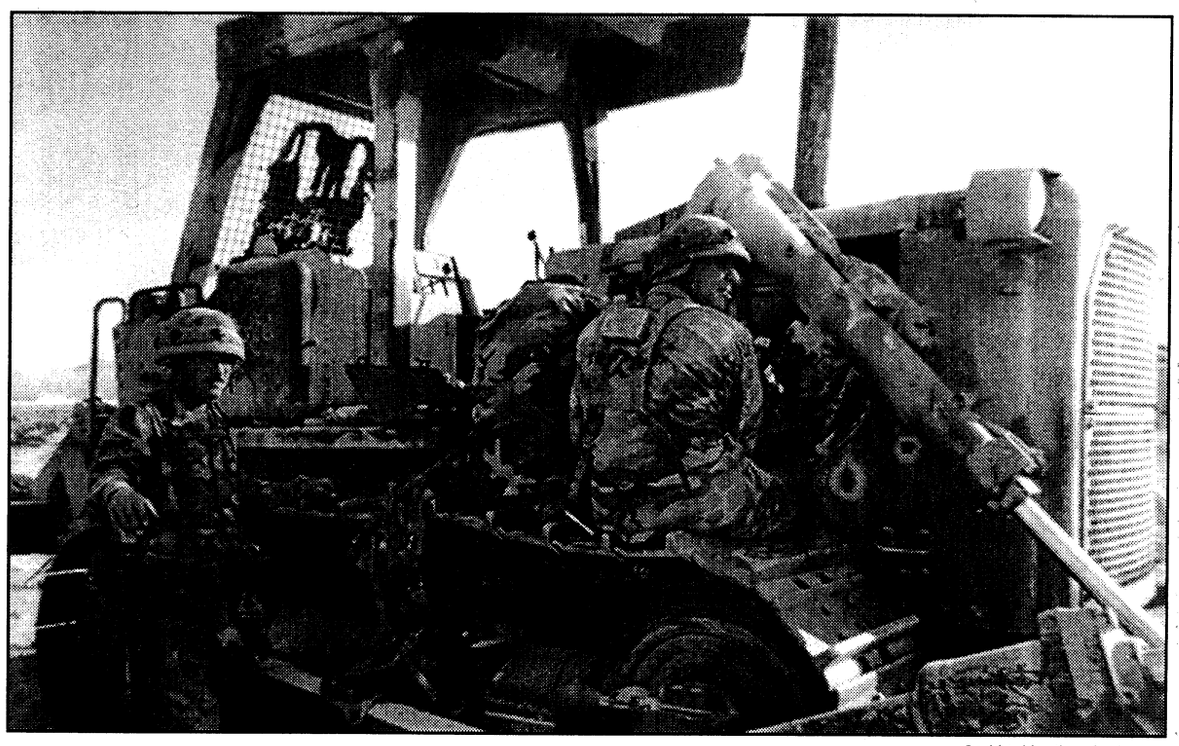
Then hopefully we can bring an early Christmas to some families in Nicaragua," Carr continued.

The company is expected to re-deploy on or about Feb. 15 after being relieved by reserve forces.

Soldiers conduct maintenance training

2nd Lt. Heather Andrews
63rd Engineer Company

Eighteen Soldiers of 3rd Platoon, 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) recently returned from more than three weeks of training at the National Training Center (NTC), Fort Irwin, Calif.



Deploying as a Combat Support Equipment Platoon attachment to the 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), they provided assets that enabled the 3rd Brigade Combat Team to wage defensive battles against the opposing force.

With four D-7 Dozers and two Small Emplacement Excavators (SEEs), the group dug more than 50 fighting positions for M-1 and M-2 tanks, and more than 20 individual and crew — served fighting positions for dismounted Soldiers.

"It is a great feeling when you pull up to a staked-out position for a M-1," said Pvt.1 Travis York. "You can tell by the look on the tankers' faces how glad they are to see that dozer arrive and began to dig."

An observer controller (OC) was directly assigned to the CSE platoon to train and provide input. This was a key element that made the NTC rotation so beneficial to the Soldiers.

Morale was increased by receiving positive input and guidance from an outside source. One OC stated that he was "impressed by the number of defilades that were constructed to standard; a percentage much higher than a typical rotation." This is significant due to the fact that the dozers these Soldiers were operating were old versions of the D-7 dozers they had been trained on.

2nd Lt. Heather Andrews

A maintenance team, led by Staff Sgt. Michael Morris, repairs a dead lined dozer. Soldiers were able to complete work on older model equipment while they were training at the National Training Center.

"It was a challenge, but an unforgettable experience," said Pvt. 1 Christopher Duran.

The effort of a four-man mechanic team, headed by Staff Sgt. Michael Morris, ensured that the equipment was properly maintained and mission capable to their best abilities.

During the three weeks, the 18 Soldiers' morale remained high, productivity never wavered and true team evolved from this exercises, according to Morris.

"I have never seen a more cohesive group. It really made for an enjoyable rotation," Morris said. "This deployment was the culmination of more than three months of training and the outcome was a success. The dig team was pulled back from Fort Irwin a week early in order to integrate back into the 63rd Eng. Co. in preparation for a real-world humanitarian mission in Central America.

"The next mission will be very different from the combat mission just completed," Morris said.

"However, the same ingredients will bring success to this upcoming mission; high morale, teamwork and safety," Morris continued.

Korean graduates hold reunion

Capt. Lee Stafki
Secretary General Staff

In 1953, after suffering a defeat along the Naktong River Perimeter, the Republic of South Korea (ROK) sent several groups of its officers to the U.S. Army Infantry School (USAIS) for six months to learn tactics and leadership.

Chief of Staff General Paik knew these skills were lacking in his Army so after the officers returned, they were reassigned to field units or military schools and put their newly-learned trades to use.

The fourth class to graduate from the USAIS formed an association named Saminhoe, which means fourth America group.

The association's slogan was "Helping others is the foundation of happiness." The group has met two or more times a year for the past 45 years. It is dedicated to strengthening the tie between the U.S. Army and the ROK as well as assisting other military and civilian organizations.

Members of the group include Woon Yong Kim, deputy chairman of the International Olympic Committee; retired Lt. Gen. Gun Young Lee, former Third ROK Army commander; Young Chan Kwon, president of Gun Kook University; retired Brig. Gen. Chang Sik Yang, National Parliamentary member and Kyung Seok Park, chairman of Military Commentator's League.

A general meeting of the association was held Sept. 17 at the Defense Hall in Yongsan, South Korea, in celebration of the 45th anniversary of the graduation of the first class from USAIS.

More than 80 officers and their wives attended the event.

Prior to the event, the group attempted to find an Army officer who had assisted all four groups during their training at Fort Benning.

The Saminhoe learned that retired Maj. Dahlstrom passed away a few years ago. An article appeared in The Bayonet April 8, 1983, about the officer and his efforts.

ACAP Center holds employer day

Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program welcomes employers with job openings to come and participate in the employer day programs.

Recruiters from a variety of industries frequent the ACAP Center because they have found that separating Soldiers have the training, technical and managerial skills, a solid work history and a clean background that businesses look for, said Harold Ericksen, ACAP manager.

Upcoming employer days can be found in The Bayonet each week, in flyers sent to each unit on post, by checking the ACAP Bulletin Board in Infantry Hall outside Classroom 30 and by visiting the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

When attending an employer day in the ACAP Center, Soldiers need to come prepared to complete applications and interviews.

Some employers conduct formal informational briefings and then schedule follow-up interviews.

Some employers conduct informational briefings, complete applications and conduct interviews within the same day.

Whatever the employer's application process, Soldiers can obtain updated information regarding the job market by attending employer days in the ACAP Center.

Clinton signs law to improve vet benefits

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

President Clinton signed a new law this month improving veterans' benefits and programs.

The Veterans Programs Enhancement Act of 1998 expresses the nation's continued gratitude to America's veterans, the president said after signing the legislation Nov. 11.

"This nation owes no greater debt of gratitude than to our veterans, particularly those who have suffered disability or who made the supreme sacrifice while defending our freedoms," Clinton said.

Under the new bill, about 2.3 million disabled veterans and 300,000 surviving family members of military men and women whose deaths were service-related will get a 1.3 percent increase in compensation payments starting Dec. 1. Veterans receiving military pensions and Social Security recipients will also receive the same pay increase, Clinton noted.

The bill extends the existing authority for providing priority health care to Gulf War veterans through Dec. 31, 2001. Outreach efforts are enhanced and the public's access to federally sponsored research is broadened under the new legislation.

The bill also bolsters efforts by the Department of Defense, Veterans Affairs (VA), and Health and Human Services to study and treat Gulf War veterans' illnesses in a "scientifically sound and effective manner," Clinton said.

The bill expands veterans options for on-the-job training programs and for meeting requirements for Montgomery G.I. Bill benefits. It also reinforces and expands veteran's rights under the Uniformed Services Employment and Re-employment Rights Act to return to a civilian job after military service.

Pensions paid to Medal of Honor recipients will increase from $400 to $600 a month. Veterans with terminal illnesses will now be allowed to receive part of their life insurance benefits as "living benefits" to help meet medical and living expenses during their time of special need.

One provision of the bill restructures and streamlines VA housing loan operations. Another provides new VA scholarships for professionals recruited for certain hard-to-fill healthcare positions. The bill also expands a variety of benefits affecting memorial affairs, housing, construction and facilities matters.

Faith Middle School receives new principals

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Faith Middle School underwent many new projects this summer, but not one as big as getting a new vice principal and starting a search for a new principal.

Rose Brooks, the new vice principal of Faith, started the school year right along with the students.

Brooks, originally from Kentucky, came from West Point, N.Y., because of a move with her husband, now an instructor at the U.S. Army School of Americas.

"I've found the community to be very welcoming," Brooks said. "The students are wonderful — they are very interested in learning and very eager to be at school."

Brooks has been an educator for 21 years, including a math teacher, a counselor, a fourth-grade teacher, with Child Development Services and the Education Center for the military. This is her first administrative position.

"I'm looking forward to working more closely with students, parents and the staff, to work collaboratively with everyone for the benefit of the students," Brooks said. "My door is open to everyone — I'm here to work to serve the student's needs."

Working right alongside Brooks is brand-new Faith principal Dr. Tom Dignan.

Dignan started at Faith Monday, after returning to the U.S. after 27 years abroad at Department of Defense (DoD) schools in Japan, Philippines and Germany.

Dignan left Baumholder, Germany after working the whole school day Nov. 24 and arrived in the U.S. the next day.

Dignan has been an educator for 30 years, and this is his third principalship, with the other two at Bitburg and Baumholder, Germany.

Dignan, originally from Washington, D.C., said he decided to come back to the U.S. because of the opportunity to continue as a principal, the opportunity to be in the U.S.,which is closer to family, and the opportunity to continue in a DoD school.

"I was overseas for 27 years and now I'm closer to family and I can do what I love to do," Dignan said.

In his first week on post and at Faith, Dignan said he has felt very welcome.

"The welcome in the school and the community has been tremendous," Dignan said. "I can see why this is the Army Community of Excellence. It only took about a day to see why the community cares about schools and people on Fort Benning.

About his first week at school, Dignan said it's been a hectic but pleasant experience.

"The atmosphere is very positive, the students are friendly and polite and the faculty and staff are wonderful."

As for parents, Dignan said they are welcome to call him at any time.

"The school is here for the parents — they are welcome in school anytime — I'm here to work with them. I hope to bring my 30 years of experience to make a really good school even better."

Program offers advice to help with financial woes

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Easy credit and lack of knowledge on interest rates may contribute to the financial burden some Soldiers face.

ACS's Consumer Affairs Financial Assistance Program (CAFAP) is geared toward helping Soldiers and family members get a handle on their finances.

CAFAP is available to offer residents assistance, information and education in consumer issues, financial planning, family budgeting and debt management for those who are having financial difficulty, getting ready to buy a home or separating from the military.

"We find 99.9 percent of all the people we see do not have a budget," said Patti Herron, budget counselor. "When someone does not have a budget, they tend to incur debt and over extend themselves financially. When they come into the center, we sit down and help them make out a budget and get them on the right track for financial security."

Soldiers may be required to attend a checking account maintenance class if they have been writing 'bad checks', said Anne Pratcher, program manager.

Spc. Michael Martino, Company D, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) said he was encouraged to go when he first arrived at Fort Benning.

"The class gave me a better understanding on the importance of balancing my checkbook," Martino said. "The class is very beneficial to new Soldiers, and I would encourage units to send Soldiers who are experiencing budget problems."

Counselors may see three to five Soldiers a day, addressing their individual financial concerns.

"A Soldier may come into the office under the impression they are getting a good deal with their $175 car payment. Now this may seem like a good deal monthly but, a three-year loan at this price on an older car really is not that good of a deal," Herron said. "Some loans may charge 30 to 40 percent interest and others may require a consumer to pay the remainder of the interest owed if the item is paid off early."

According to Herron, the majority of debt could of been avoided if the consumer had done a little comparison shopping and watched the interest rates.

"Most people do not know that a consumer may request a interest rate reduction from their credit card company," Herron said. "Some consumers may see a full percent difference just by requesting this."

Consumers may also stay out of trouble by planning and saving for major purchases ahead of time.

"If a consumer starts shopping and saving for the holidays months ahead of time. Consumers are less likely to find themselves in debt," Herron said.

It is also important when making out a family budget that people put money into a savings account, Herron said

"A family should have approximately three to six months of pay set aside in case of an emergency," Herron said.

Budget intake orientations are offered at 8:30 a.m. Monday mornings in which individuals fill out a budget packet and then make an appointment for personal financial assessments.

"This intake session is the first step to getting a handle on finances," Pratcher said. "Classes on credit management, investments, insurance and financial planning for deployment are also offered to units on request."

Soldiers and family members may receive information on the CAFAP by calling Anne Pratcher at 545-7517.

Students don teacher hats for week

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

An experiment in teaching netted toys for some needy children and a greater appreciation of teachers for four Faith Middle School students.

Ashley Davis, Josh Colberg, Darnell Love and Darian Bradburn were selected by their classmates to be teachers for a week in Mrs. Shaw's two industrial arts classes.

"I wanted to see who the kids really respected, who they trusted," Mrs. Shaw said of giving the students a try at teaching class.

The four eighth-graders not only led the class in an airplane assembly line project; they experienced first-hand all the other responsibilities that go with teaching, too.

"We got to grade [the students] and they graded us," Love said.

The students also worked with students who don't speak English, with the help of an interpreter.

The hardest part, though, Bradburn said, was having to "discipline" their friends.

"If someone acted up, we had to make them go out of the room for awhile, like 'time out,'" he said.

"I don't have a lot of patience and when you tell them not to talk and they turn around and talk – now I know how Ms. Shaw feels," Davis said.

But the week's experiment also produced a dozen leftover model airplanes which Mrs. Shaw suggested be given to the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women.

All 50 students voted in favor, and on Friday, Shurree Arett, child advocate for the shelter, came to Faith and picked them up.

"Children who come to the shelter often become attached to a certain toy and want to take it with them when they leave," Arett said. "Especially with the holidays coming on, we're glad for the donations."

All four of the student teachers said the best thing about "teaching" was the good feeling they got from helping other students learn. Giving a little bit of Christmas to children who may not have one made them think about helping from another angle.

"We have a lot of stuff," said Davis. "They don't have anything since they have to leave everything (behind)."

... a community service from Martin Army Community Hospital

Diabetes appears as two types

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Diabetes is one of the most common causes of illness and death in the U.S. People who have diabetes have too much sugar circulating in the blood stream. This high sugar causes damage throughout the body.

There are two ways that a person can become a diabetic. The two ways cause either Type I or Type II diabetes.

Type I diabetes is caused by a change in the immune system and the pancreas stops making insulin. This is the most common way very young people become diabetics. They must take insulin shots to live.

The second type is called Type II diabetes. This is the most common type.

This type runs in families and usually starts in adulthood. Having a lot of body fat increases the risk for Type II diabetes. In Type II diabetes, the body can make insulin, but the insulin doesn't work properly. Some of these Type II diabetics can lose body fat and return to normal blood sugar. Many Type II diabetics can take pills to help them lower the blood sugar. Other Type II diabetics must take insulin shots to get enough insulin.

Both types of diabetes can increase a persons risk for heart disease, blindness, kidney failure, amputation and infection. The more a diabetic can keep the blood sugar at a normal level, the lower the risk for these problems.

Sixteen million American have diabetes, yet nearly half do not know it. These numbers come from research which studies risk factors. Risk factors for diabetes include obesity and family history of diabetes. We also know that minorities such as African-Americans, Hispanics, Asian-Americans, Native Americans and Pacific Islanders have a higher risk for developing diabetes.

Many studies show people can lower the risk of developing the most common type of diabetes (Type II) by exercising regularly and losing weight.

One study at Washington University in St. Louis showed the extra inches of fat a person has around the waistline, the bigger the risk of developing Type II diabetes.

Signs of diabetes include:

- unquenchable thirst
- frequent urination
- lack of energy
- blurry vision that comes and goes
- sudden unexplained weight loss

If a person has these signs, blood tests can be done to look for high blood sugar.

Much exciting research is being done in the world of diabetes. In 1995, the American Diabetes Association changed the ways diabetes is diagnosed.

This allowed people at risk to be identified earlier in the diabetes illness.

Other research includes studies of inhaled insulin which may someday replace the shots. Insulin pills to trick the antibodies which attack the cells in Type I diabetics are also being researched. Machines that shine a light into the finger or into the eye instead of requiring a drop of blood are in the early stages of study.

While about two percent of the government medical research money goes to finding a cure for diabetes, much research money is raised by friends and families of diabetics. To learn more about diabetes and the searches for cures and treatments, call (800)DIABETES (800)342-2383) or search the world wide web at www.diabetes.org.

Q. Recently I left my car at a mechanic's shop for repairs. The repairs took about a week and when I went to pick up my car, I discovered that it had been broken into and the radio stolen. What can I do about this? Is the shop liable?

A. When a car is left with a mechanic under these circumstances, you and the mechanic have entered into what is know as a bailment. You have bailed your property to the mechanic, which gives rise to certain duties on the mechanic's part with respect to the care and safekeeping of the vehicle.

Generally speaking, a person in receipt of bailed property is required to use "ordinary care and diligence" in keeping the property safe and secure while in his or her possession.

The definition of "ordinary care and diligence" is based on what a reasonable person would do or not do under the same circumstances. Thus, the duty of care will vary depending on the circumstances of each case. For example, if you, as the mechanic, know from experience that the area in which the shop is located is subject to a lot of vandalism and theft, you probably would take more precautions to protect property than someone located in an area of low crime. However, bear in mind that no one can absolutely guarantee that theft or vandalism won't occur. All one can do is take reasonable precautions.

Before leaving valuable property in the care of another, it would be wise to inquire about the measures which will be taken to secure the item. Be aware that some shops will attempt to limit their liability by placing a disclaimer on work orders or other paperwork associated with the repair. You should ask about the shop's policy on covering loss from theft of vandalism. If you don't like what you hear, consider taking your vehicle elsewhere.

If it is possible to remove valuable property from your vehicle before leaving it, do so. If a theft does occur, make sure that a police report is made. Sometimes, the theft is an inside job, and you will want to know if a police investigation bears this out. Theft by an employee of the shop is not the "ordinary care and diligence" to which you are entitled.

If you have questions concerning this, contact the Legal Assistance Division and make an appointment to meet with an attorney. The phone number is 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Installation Christmas decoration guidelines

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their residence in celebration of the season. In the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation, holiday decorations need to conform to the following in family housing areas:

•Roofs must have no decorations, lighted or unlighted. Installing these decorations may be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

•Decorations may be affixed to walls, undersides of eaves and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations to a residence use the smallest possible fasteners.

•Use only Underwriters Laboratory electrical decorations.

•Do not overload electrical circuits inside a residence.

•Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

•Exterior lighting is not permitted in the barracks.

•Do not overload electrical circuits or leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning in the barracks.

•Non-electric decorations will be used in office and operational facilities throughout the installation.

In family housing do not turn on the outside electrical decorations until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight. Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow residents to enjoy the season.

There are also a few safety tips residents may want to follow.

•If purchasing a light set, make sure it has been approved by the Underwriters Laboratories. Also, make sure to get the right set; indoor for indoor use, outdoor for outdoor use.

•Do not overload an electrical circuit.

•Check lights for frayed wires, damaged sockets or cracked insulation before use.

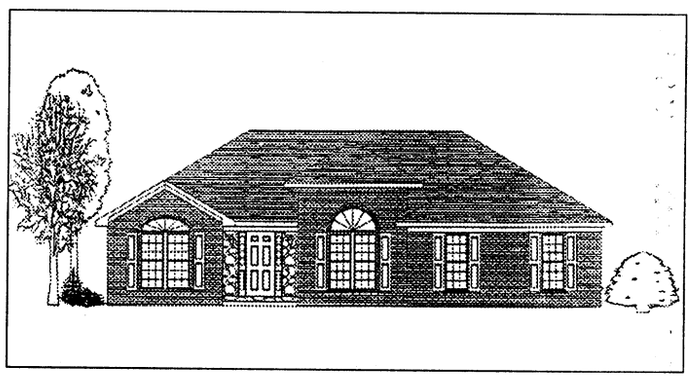
•Avoid fire by keeping natural trees well watered and extension cords and lights away from the water.

•Keep lights unplugged when not at home.

•Avoid short-circuiting from rain by covering outdoor plugs and connector joints.

•Use a ground fault circuit interrupter on each circuit.

•Do not use more than one extension cord per outlet.



•Buy a fresh tree.

•Never decorate trees with candles.

CAN'T•CAN DO

It's too complicated. Let's look at it from a different angle.
We don't have the resources. Necessity is the mother of invention.
It will never work. We'll give it a try.
There's not enough time. We'll re-evaluate some priorities.
We already tried it. We learned from the experience.
It's a waste of money. The investment will be worth it.

Feast originates from holy birth

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert M. Santry
Infantry Training Brigade

Christians grasp God's plan for salvation by looking backwards using resurrection glasses. Historic Christians, for example, understand the reference in Genesis 3:15 "her offspring will crush your head, and you will bite their heel" as a reference to Mary, the mother of Jesus. Mary shares a role with Jesus in the salvation of humanity. Satan is not amused. St. John the Evangelist tells us in the Apocalypse, "the dragon was furious with the woman and went off to fight against the rest of her descendants, all those who obey God's commandments and are faithful to the truth revealed by Jesus."

reflections

The protoevangelon (first announcement of salvation) first speaks of the evil one seducing the woman and tricking her into sin (disobedience to God). The woman ends up defeating the evil one (crushing the head) by an act of obedience to God: "Fiat (yes). Be it done onto me as you say."

How does the woman crush the serpent's head? The obedient woman (Mary, the mother of Jesus) says yes to the heavenly father (I am the handmaid of the Lord), conceives Jesus in her womb and provides the first New Testament tabernacle for the presence of the Lord. Mary's obedience absolves Eve's disobedience as Jesus' obedience redeems Adam's rebellion. The Obedient One without sin is born from the womb of the Blessed Mother.

Now we begin to understand God's historic and slavic action of preparing the Blessed Mother for her role as the Theotokos (God-bearer; so defined at the council of Ephesus). Joaquin and Anne conceived Mary without original sin. God preserved Mary from the state of original sin in order to use her as the repository of the Divine Savior. Why did God do this? Houses or public sites are cleansed and beautified before the the arrival of important dignitaries. Jesus' father prepared the future home and public shrine before his son was conceived in the womb of Mary.

The name given this event is immaculate conception. The Catholic Church observes this feast annually on Dec 8. The feast originated in the 7th century (feats of the Conception of Mary by St. Anne). Pope Clement XI, in "Commissi Nobis," established this solemnity for the entire Church in 1708. Pope Pius IX defined the dogma of the Immaculate Conception on Dec. 8, 1854.

The Immaculate Conception is not a deception. God executed a means of reversing Adam's disobedience by sending his son into the world. God conceived his son in the womb of Mary of Nazareth. God spared the Immaculate Virgin the condition of original sin. God the Father conceived his daughter immaculately in the womb of St. Anne.

Family rules reflect family values

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Family Life Ministries

"Well you may be the First Sergeant in Bravo Company, but I'm not one of your privates. I am seventeen years old now and I think the rules around here need to change!" Sound familiar?

Just like society at large, families need to have rules. If not, then chaos reigns supreme. For the most part family rules reflect that family's values. Adults set the final rules for the family. George Daub, founder of Family Wellness Associates, said, "Often situations that are hard to handle are because we have two or more values in conflict. We struggle as we try to remain true to all of them in any particular situation."

Those values we bring to our family are usually those we grew up with in our family of origin. The trouble is one spouse's values may not necessarily reflect those of the other. It then becomes paramount that both parents develop a value system for their own family, a system that is not only spoken of but also lived out daily in their own lives.

Daub goes on to say, "Parents need to know their values, they need to speak from them as they crop up in everyday situations and they need to practice them. This is particularly true in the area of sex and drugs. If you preach abstinence to your teen and drink to excess yourself, your message is drink."

The task of making family rules is not an easy task; however, the adult parent has a lot more life experiences to draw upon than a child does. If you leave the task of making rules up to your children, be prepared for disaster.

As children grow older it becomes very important that they be included in the rule-making process. While I don't approve of the attitude of the fictitious17-year-old at the beginning of this article, I do see a lot of truth in what he said. When your child was 6 the rules were rather straight forward: you can play in the yard. At 17 the rules need to change as the needs change. By including your older children in the rules-making process you will soon discover them to be much more cooperative.

There are times when families get stuck in this area and need some outside resource to turn to. For more information, contact the FLC at 545-1760.

More than 90 golfers loaded up their clubs and headed to the Follow Me Golf Course Nov. 24 to participate in the Association of the U.S. Army's (AUSA) Fall Golf Tournament.

The tournament, which was a four-ball scramble, enticed 23 teams to come out and hit the green for some friendly competition.

In a close game, the four-man team of Charlie Bynum, Joe Lesniak, Mike Anderson and Ambrose Lesniak was able to beat out the competition with a score of 62 and secure first place in the tournament.

Right on their tails in second place with a score of 63, was the team of Mike Bettez, Ralph Jackson, Folke Ahlquist and Paul Stodgehill.

Third place went to the foursome of Eddie Gunn, Tim Arett, Robert Willis and Kathy Dunn with a score of 65.

According to Dick Nurnburg, AUSA executive director, the semi-annual tournament is a Soldier support event that helps raise funds to support AUSA, but more importantly gives everyone a chance to get out and have some fun.

Nurnburg said the tournament helped raise around $2,000 dollars for AUSA which will end up going back to the Soldiers.

"We had a really good turnout," Nurnburg said. "The reason for holding these tournaments is to publicize AUSA and let people know we are here to support the Soldiers. It also gives everyone an afternoon of fun to relax from the stress of everyday military life."

Almost everyone agreed that their reason for participating in the tournament was to help support AUSA, but with blue skies and warm weather the golfing probably couldn't have gotten any better.

"We are here to support AUSA," said competitor Bob Hobbs. "Of course, we like to golf, but supporting AUSA is the reason most of us are out here playing today."

"Just look at the day," said competitor Richard Marks. "I don't think it could get any better than this."

With the help of a list of sponsors who made the tournament possible, everything from trips to Florida and weekend stays at the Hilton to golf clubs and hams were given away as prizes.

Nurnburg said there were also games and drawings and everyone received a prize.

"The weather was great and everybody had a great time," Nurnburg said. "Everybody came away with something. Even the last place team received hams, so in a sense everyone was a winner."

Sponsors of the tournament were United Cities Gas, Basecom, Brown and Root, Cable Vision Industries, Department Landscaping, USPA&IRA, Patriot Loan, Laser Check, Army Enlisted Association, GEICO Insurance, Army Marksmanship Unit, Pioneer Loan, Sergeant Majors Association, Noncommissioned Officers Association, TIC Credit Union, First Union and Valley Firm.

Soldier, wife team win pistol championships

Sgt. Nelson Mumma Jr.
USASOC Public Affairs Office

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — They are international champions and they are married. They have pistol shooting to thank for both.

Merle and Sharon Edington recently won the 1998 Master's International Pistol Championship in Barry, Ill. Merle, a marksmanship instructor with Company D, 2nd Battalion, 1st Special Warfare Training Group (Airborne), fired his way to the overall title, setting a world-record by hitting 42 of 45 targets in the long-range event. Meanwhile, Sharon won the ladies division.

"This is the first time a couple has ever won a major championship at the same time," Sharon, 35, explained. "We feel pretty lucky to be able to do this together."

The couple met during a pistol shooting competition in South Carolina. At the time, Merle was stationed at Fort Jackson, S.C., and Sharon was living in Columbia, S.C., where she grew up. Sharon had been competing for several years, but it was Merles first contest.

A malfunction in Sharon's pistol that day turned out to be one of the best mishaps of their lives.

"I actually had a jam in my gun," Sharon said. "He (Merle) walked up and started to tell me what was wrong with it. I was kind of annoyed because I thought, 'He just started shooting so how does he know what's wrong with my gun?'"

Although neither of them initially liked the other, they eventually became shooting partners and close friends.

It wasn't until the national finals the next year, though, that they started getting serious about one another.

Fittingly, perhaps, their wedding coincided with a competition. About an hour after Sharon won the 1993 National Pistol Championship and Merle came in third, the Edingtons were married. A reception followed at a lodge on a firing range in Reno, Nev.

For the Edingtons, pistol shooting is not only a passion, but a profitable business. Both shooters are sponsored by companies like Colt, Bianci, Hornady and C-More. They are also part-owners of an indoor range and gun shop in Columbus.

Army golfers get chance to play with pros

C. Tyler Jones
Army News Service

Two of the Army's best golfers recently got the opportunity of a lifetime when they were teamed with a professional golfer and played the same course John Huston played enroute to winning the 1998 National Car Rental Golf Classic at Walt Disney World Resort in Orlando, Fla.

Sean Gallagher and Julie Stolzer qualified to play in the Challenge Pro-Am by winning the open divisions of the all-Army men's and women's championships in August at Fort Jackson, S.C.

During the pro-am, the players were not just trying to win the one-best-ball-format tournament as a team, but they were playing individually to beat the score Huston had on each hole of the Magnolia Course on the final round of play.

Gallagher and Stolzer, teamed with another amateur golfer and professional golfer Esteban Toledo from Mexico, finished nine under par in a tie for sixth place out of 18 teams.

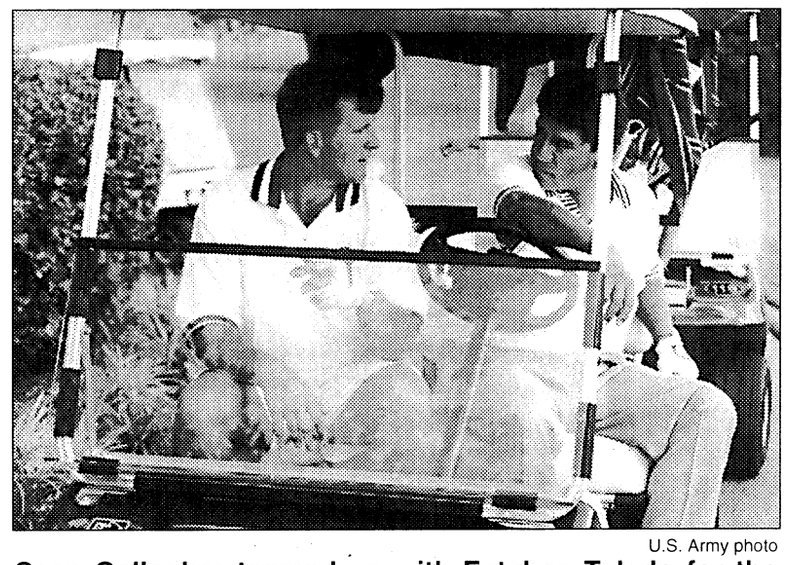
Gallagher, a scratch golfer stationed at Hunter Army Air Field in Savannah, Ga., has been playing golf since he was 5. He said the house he grew up in in Houston, Texas, was beside a golf-course driving range, and he was constantly on the range hitting balls.

After all these years of playing, the 30-year-old Soldier said he still has the fever for the game. "I love golf. It is by far my favorite thing to do," he said.

Gallagher, whose time in service will end in February, said he wanted to use the experience of playing with a professional to see if he has what it takes to one day make the tour. Although he was not satisfied with his overall performance, he played competitively with the pro and beat him on a few holes.

After consistently outdriving Toledo off the tee, the professional said, "If I had a drive like Sean's, I could probably win some tournaments."

Gallagher said he would like to one day come back and play in the tournament again as a professional teamed with amateurs.



The Army's other representative also has aspirations of making the professional tour. Stolzer, a reservist residing in Durham, N.C., has been playing golf about 10 years and playing seriously for two and a half years. She said this was the third year she competed in the all-Army tournament. Two years ago she came in second. This year she beat her closest competitor by 23 strokes.

The marathoner and triathaloner said she usually excels in any sport she attempts. While on active duty Stolzer said she performed more than 100 pushups, 100 situps and did her run in under 12 minutes on most of her physical training tests. She said she thrives on competition.

As the only woman competing in the pro-am, Stolzer said she was not intimidated by playing against an all-male field. She said she is used to competing against men.

The 33-year-old reservist, who receives golf lessons from the same professional who tutored Michael Jordan, said a lot of times when she goes to a course to play, she is paired up with men. She said when they realize they will be playing with a woman, they get upset, but all that changes in a hurry when she asks if they would mind if she played off the same tees they use.

Stolzer said after she outdrives one or two of them, they do not act like it is such a big deal to be playing with a woman, and they stop complaining.

Sean Gallagher teamed up with Esteban Toledo for the tournament.

Although she likes competing against others, she said she thrives on competing against herself. Like running, golf provides an outlet for that.

"I like that golf is an individual sport and a challenge within yourself. You don't have to rely on other people. It's you against Old Lady Par,'" she said.

Stolzer said being at the tournament was great, because she got to see how focused and mentally tough professional golfers are. She said she especially liked the challenge of playing the same course with the same pin placement the pros played.

The 10 handicapper said it is her goal to return next year to play in the tournament with a lower handicap.

Although she will continue to work on her golf game, the University of South Florida graduate recently put in a packet to become an officer. She said she hopes to pin on some gold bars in the next few months and make the LPGA tour in the next few years.

Best large Army installation in the United States

Vol. 56 No. 47 | Published in the interest of the Fort Benning, Ga., community | Friday, December 11, 1998

Cost-cutting survey to begin

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning was notified by the Department of the Army that Commercial Activities (a-76) studies of the Directorate of Information Management (DOIM) and the Training Support Center (TSC) will begin in fiscal year 1999.

Fort Benning, one of 17 installations undergoing this survey, will have 107 post positions evaluated.

Imposed by Congressional cost-cutting directives, the studies will determine whether it's more economical to contract out, or to retain in-house job performance by conducting detailed cost companies analysis of each activity.

"This study is designed to determine if it would be more financially efficient to operate the functions of the Training Support Center and the Directorate of Information Management by outside contractors," said Garrison Commander Col. John M. Mitchell.

DOIM provides various services to include post computer support, management of local area networks, telephone service and other means of communication. TSC, among other things, provides all post graphic and visual needs for training.

At the present time, none of the jobs are threatened by these studies, Mitchell said. The employees have been notified and will be involved in the process to alleviate any concerns they may have about their jobs.

Fort Benning is no stranger to this survey, having engaged in similar studies since the 1980's, Mitchell said.

"Our workforce is the key to our success. These employees know more about their jobs and the functions they fulfill than any contractor could," Mitchell said. "We have a good sense for the mission and we believe we have the expertise to develop a winning bid."

With a responsibility to the public to look at how Fort Benning conducts business, it is important to make it the most cost effective as it can be, Mitchell said. It is also important to be sensitive to the workers who are in these organizations.

The workers will be included in the studies as members from the divisions will be selected to work with contractors to evaluate and come up with the best possible solutions.

"We stand a real good chance at beating out any outside contractors. This is just another opportunity to prove ourselves as the best Army installation," Mitchell said.

The survey is expected to take two years of study and then a year in which to receive bids from outside contractors. These bids will then be evaluated against the projected cost from the government to determine the most economical and efficient way to do business, Mitchell said.

Operation Holiday

Post to kick-off festivities

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning in conjunction with the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA) will kick off Operation Holiday at 3 p.m. Dec. 18 at the Government Center in Columbus.

Scheduled to speak at the opening ceremony are Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters and Phenix City Mayor Peggy Martin. Fort Benning's Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore and Congressman Mac Collins will also be on hand for the ceremony.

According to Dick Nurnberg, the executive director of AUSA's Chattahoochee Valley Chapter, Operation Holiday is a two-week, annual event that provides activities for those Soldiers who are away from their families this holiday season.

Operation Holiday, which lasts through Jan. 2, first began in 1980 at the request of the Commanding General of Fort Benning. It was originally designed for basic trainees but was changed to provide activities for all single Soldiers and unaccompanied married Soldiers who are away from their families over the holidays, Nurnberg said.

Off-post activities for the program's participants include the Delta Airlines Holiday Classic at the Georgia Dome, Dec. 19; a Cottonmouths game against Fayetteville Dec. 22; Cottonmouths game against Huntsville Dec. 26; Cottonmouths game against Macon Dec. 29; a night at the Hollywood connection Dec. 30 and Cottonmouths game against Huntsville Dec. 31.

On-post activities sponsored by the Directorate of Community Activities include Bingo at the Sand Hill NCO Club, a bowling tournament Dec. 21-22 at the Main Post Bowling Center, a table tennis tournament Dec. 23 and pool tournament Dec. 27 at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

For more information on the activities scheduled during the two-week operation, call 545-5641.

Santa's Castle builds holiday happiness

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Fighting back tears, Janine Hutchings, advisor for Santa's Castle, recalls stories of children doing without at Christmas and how such stories became the driving force behind the making of a program that has supported thousands of children since its inception in 1986.

"I became involved with Santa's Castle in 1986 after baby-sitting my friend's two children," Hutchings said. "Christmas was nearing and I asked the children what Santa was bringing them this year and they said Santa wasn't coming to their house this year."

Feeling devastated, Hutchings realized there was a true need for a program such as Santa's Castle.

Santa's Castle was planned and created by engineer wives in 1986 and the name itself was derived from the engineer symbol — a castle.

The private, non-profit, all-volunteer organization provides toys for children of military parents stationed at Fort Benning who would not be able to purchase toys for Christmas because of financial difficulties.

"Providing gifts for under the tree, so children will not suffer at Christmas, is the goal of our program," said Lori Simmons, inventory manager at Santa's Castle.

This holiday season, Santa's Castle will provide gifts for 500 families reaching more than 1,000 children. Each registered child will receive three toys and an age-appropriate puzzle. Every child's name is entered in a large toy lotto, which includes items worth over $50, such as, bikes and five Christmas trees with all the trimmings. In addition, each family receives a game, required batteries and wrapping paper.

In order to provide toys to families experiencing severe financial difficulty, a briefing is held with unit commanders and first sergeants in September of each year to begin a referral process. The commanders then have the task of determining if the unit has any Soldiers that meet the criteria. Selected Soldiers are then accepted into the Santa's Castle program.

"We have never declined anyone selected by the units," Simmons said. "Donations from organizations, units, merchants, civilians and Soldiers are very generous and have provided more than 5,000 toys this year."

According to Simmons, the cost equates to about $35 per child which brought the budget to a little over $35,000 this year. Santa's Castle volunteers hold fund raisers throughout the year, but the majority of funds and donations come from Fort Benning units holding fund raisers such as bowl-a-thons, bake sales and toy drives.

Volunteers work year round collecting funds, shopping, taking off price tags and making sure all items are inventoried. However, this year volunteers helped transition from a total donation of used toys to an entire stock of brand new toys.

"We use to take old toys and fix them up but we only take new toys now," Hutchings said. "New toys cost more money, but in the long run are better for the children."

During the holiday season, volunteers attend an elf briefing and then assist the "shoppers" as they select the toys for their children. Parents come by appointment during the first two weeks in December and the elves stay busy escorting six families through the castle every 30 minutes.

"The entire Fort Benning community gets involved with Santa's Castle and the real spirit of giving comes alive," said Hutchings. "Without all the support, programs like this would not be able to help families in dire need brighten their children's lives at Christmas."

For more information on Santa's Castle, call 685-4422.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center's Infantry Band will conduct its annual Christmas concert at 7 p.m. Sunday at the Sand Hill Theater.

Hurricane: Engineer company joins Central American relief efforts

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

While the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), flies high to protect Soldiers and civilians in Central America, another company from the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) will be planted firmly on the ground doing what it takes to get one of Central America's main arteries pumping again.

One hundred and fifty Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) will board planes Monday to make the trek to Nicaragua and join in hurricane relief efforts. The Soldiers will do their part in aiding the storm torn regions by rebuilding roads and helping with clean up, but more importantly getting the Pan American Highway, one of Central America's main highways back up to speed.

The Soldiers will leave only a handful in the rear along with a nearly empty motorpool. Around 130 pieces of equipment such as dumptrucks, graders and scrapers were rail loaded and sent to Bueamont, Texas. The equipment will make its final voyage to Central America by boat to be used by the Soldiers.

According to Capt. Robert Carr, commander of the 63rd Eng. Co., the Soldiers will be in Central America through Christmas and are scheduled to return in mid February.

Carr said even though the Soldiers will be missing out on Christmas, they will be helping to bring a little bit of Christmas to the people of Central America. He mentioned that by opening central America's roads, desperately needed medical and food supplies will be able to reach the people.

"It hit the Soldiers kind of hard initially when we told them we were going down there," Carr said. "After we talked about how many people were affected by the disaster the Soldiers realized the importance for us being there."

Spc. Cesar Beltran, 63rd Eng. Co., said although they will be gone during the holiday season it will be a fulfilling deployment for everyone because they are helping those who need it most.

"Even though we are missing out on the holidays it's going to be a good deployment," Beltran said. "It will be something else just to see how happy the people will be that we are there helping them. It will be kind of like we are going in as heroes."

A 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) rail loads one of the many trucks sent to Nicaragua.

Sgt. 1st Class Tony Atkins said the mission in Nicaragua represents the true meaning of Christmas.

"When you think of Christmas you think of a time of giving," Atkins said. "These people will be getting the best of the 63rd family. I'm not saying that we are happy to leave our families, but these people are in need. It's Christmas for them too and we are going there to make that possible as best as we can."

Atkins said the whole mission will be a new and exciting experience.

"Anytime you go some place new there's going to be something exciting about it," Atkins said. "I'm just looking forward to seeing a new place and meeting new

Action movies shed light on values

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

When I was young (not that I'm old now), my little brothers used to make me watch those action flicks where Arnold Schwartzenegger or Sylvester Stallone would defeat hundreds of enemy troops single-handedly.

commentary

OK, so they didn't make me. I admit it; I liked the movies, too. They may have been a tad unrealistic, but the thought of one man putting his life on the line to save others always kept me plastered to the screen. To this day, the thought of Arnold running through a forest carrying a small country on his back or a half-naked Stallone spraying bullets at the 300 million enemy soldiers, still brings tears to my eyes.

Although most of those movies were completely fictitious and even the droplets of sweat and dirt which adhered to the actors' bodies were fake, I always wondered if I would be able to overcome my fears and do the right thing if I was placed in a similar situation.

So Sly and Arnold may not provide an accurate depiction of what one may encounter, but what about the real heroes who have distinguished themselves through some courageous act?

Being in the military, I almost immediately think of the 4,121 Medal of Honor awardees and countless others who have been placed in a combat situation. Take retired Master Sgt. Roy Benavidez for example. Benavidez, who recently passed away, helped save the lives of eight Special Forces Soldiers during a firefight in Vietnam. This would serve as an accomplishment alone, but the fact that he suffered 37 bullet and bayonet puncture wounds during the rescue makes his story quite amazing.

While Benavidez's story as well as other veterans' heroic tales are truly inspiring, courage is not something that is needed solely during conflicts with the enemy.

Courage is also something that could come in handy when you need to stand up against something you know is wrong or to overcome a phobia like that fear of heights or hairless cats.

So, some things may stand out more than others, but each is important nonetheless. What could be terribly horrifying for one person may be a walk in the park for another.

I always used to hate giving blood — still do. Just thinking about it, gives me the chills. I would get so nervous, I'd be on the floor before they even break out the needle. You'd think that would stop after the gazillionth time, but it doesn't. I guess I'm just weird like that. No matter how great my fear though, I'd never let it stop me from helping someone if I could.

Whenever we were asked to give blood, co-workers would always volunteer to escort me so they could watch me squirm. Sure, I was uncomfortable and really didn't want to be there. But when it was all over, I felt like I had just conquered the world.

OK, so it's not like I gave up a kidney or anything, but one small step for me is ... well, it's probably a really small step for someone else — I'm pretty short.

Military life demands personal courage

Sgt. Adam Nash
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

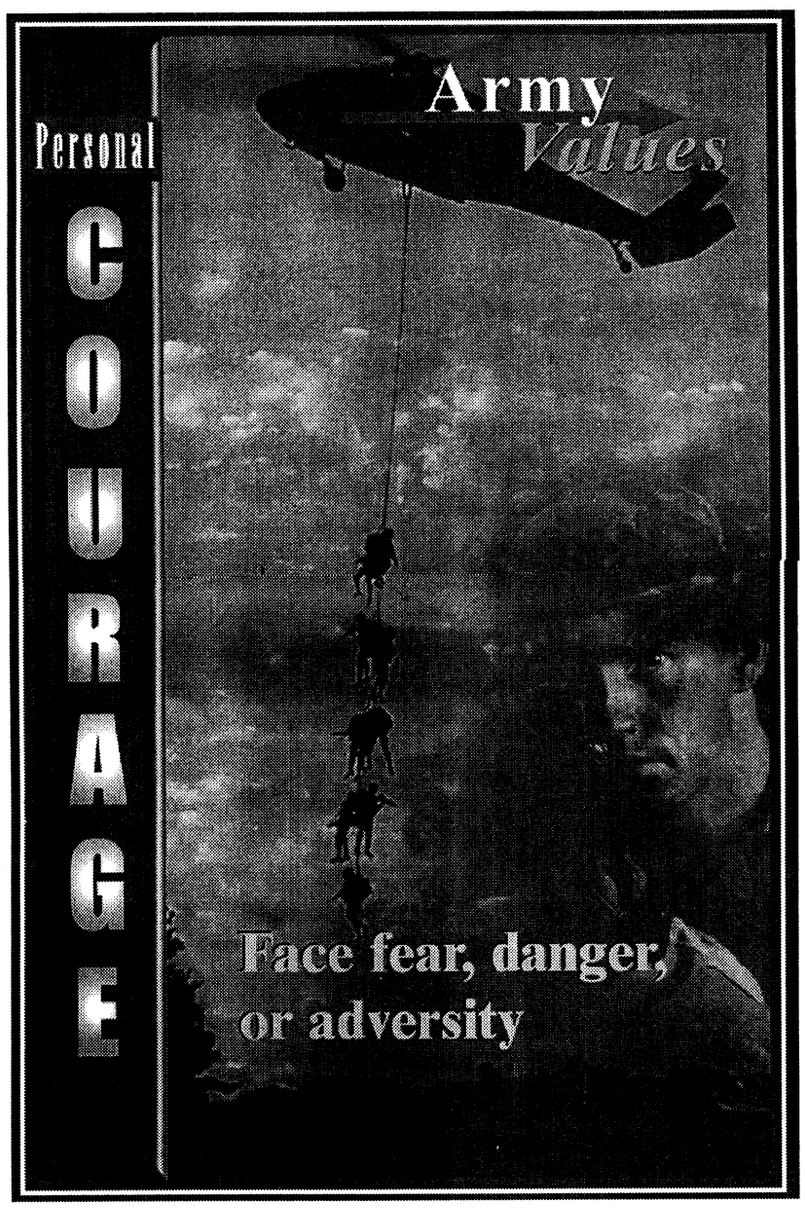
Personal courage is a large part of military life. Not only for the Soldier, but also for their spouses and loved ones. Military life not only demands personal courage, but also understanding, patience, love and most of all — respect.

commentary

All of the above make up personal courage. What is it though? Personal courage is in the heart of everyone associated with the military. Some family members might have to have more personal courage than others, but nonetheless, they all have it.

Personal courage is the strength people possess to help them through the day. If I am on deployment, I must have this to concentrate on my job and not worry about my wife. My wife must also possess personal courage to help her through her day.

Personal courage not only applies to those on deployments but to individuals on a daily basis. One must have personal courage to stand up for what he believes in and not cower down when looked upon negatively. If you are at work and a problem surfaces that is your fault, it takes personal courage to stand up and say "It is my fault—I did it," rather than just pass the buck and pawn it off on someone else.



When I was in Ranger School, I had to use personal courage almost every day.

First of all, Ranger School is 62 days long. That is a long time to be away from loved ones. In no way am I stating it is as bad as a having a loved one in Korea. I had to use personal courage to keep my mind on the mission — getting my tab. It was one of the most important goals in my life, and it would set the rest of my military career. If I did not give my all every day, I was assured failure.

On the flip side of that my wife had to use personal courage while I was away. She had to make it through the day with no one home when she returned from work. She had to rely totally on friends to support her through everyday trials and tragedies.

Throughout my life there have been many individuals who I have looked upon as holders of great personal courage — someone who I knew could make it through any situation. Perhaps the best example is my mom. She raised two children by herself. Sacrifice after sacrifice, she showed my brother and me that you need respect for yourself and to be brave of heart to take on the challenges of life. I look to her for personal courage even today when I face difficult decisions.

No matter what situation you are in, no matter where you work, it takes personal courage to be successful, understanding and lead a productive life.

people. I know the mission itself is going to be remembered for a long time."

The company received the news they would deploy to Central America in October and were scheduled to leave around Thanksgiving. However, the date was pushed back and the Soldiers had the opportunity to celebrate an early Christmas and get plenty of family time.

Carr said the deployment comes after spending eight months at one of the most rigorous training paces the company has ever experienced.

He said the company was continually building roads and spending time in the field and he feels the Soldiers are more prepared than they could ever be to perform the mission in Nicaragua.

"There has only been about two weeks in the last eight months where we haven't had Soldiers in the field or constructing roads," Carr said. "The Soldiers are mentally, physically and emotionally ready to go. I'm confident that we will be successful."

Atkins said he definitely feels prepared for the mission. He said the last field exercise the company conducted was a disaster relief mission that had his unit raising and re-establishing a road, which is exactly what they will be doing in Nicaragua.

"We are all ready to go and help in any way we can," Atkins said. "It will pretty much be a routine mission only on a larger scale."

After spending time in Central America, Carr said the Soldiers will learn many lessons. He said they will better understand the importance of working as a team and what it means to take care of one another. He also added that they will probably better appreciate everything they have here in the states after witnessing the poverty in Central America.

"The Soldiers are definitely going to get a lot of personal validation out of this," Carr said.

"They are going to understand the importance of having a cohesive team and what it means to focus on one specific mission. But also how important it is to look to your left and look to your right and take care of each other," he added.

ITB shares mission with reserve unit

1st Brigade, 84th Infantry Division

Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) and the 1st Brigade, 84th Infantry Division (Institutional Training), a reserve unit out of Livonia, Mich., share a common mission of training incoming Soldiers to be Infantrymen.

ITB, presently commanded by Col. Abraham J. Turner, and the 1st Brigade, commanded by Col. William C. Kirkland, ensure the message of seamless integration of forces is preached and practiced throughout their commands.

This is perhaps especially evident during the two-week annual training (AT) rotations when the 1st Brigade, 84th Div.. sends its drill sergeants from units located throughout Michigan and Indiana for two-week increments to support ITB training requirements.

During the training rotations, reserve and active component drill sergeants work side by side or totally displace an ITB company cadre member, in a cooperative effort to train incoming Soldiers to be Infantrymen.

"We have a superb cadre, both active and reserve, which make this possible. Through their tireless efforts, (the ITB battalions and 1st Brigade battalions) along with the civilian work force, work to bond the two brigades," said Kirkland.

Kirkland said for the most part there is no discernible difference in reserve and active component drill sergeants other than their uniform patches.

"To this end, I am excited about the actual seamless integration of Active and Reserve component Soldiers," he said. "In my 23 years of service, I have witnessed poor duty performance when the two components do not embrace each other as equal partners in the accomplishment of a mission. I am proud to say that an excellent active and reserve relationship exists at Fort Benning."

Kirkland attributes the brigades' relationship to Turner's highly charged leadership style.

"I'm sure there are instances of exceptional cooperation between the two components in other units," he said. "However, there is none quite like the working relationship between the ITB and the 1st Bde., 84th Div."

Kirkland said he also shares Turner's vision of an indispensable active and reserve relationship, which produces highly motivated and capable Infantry Soldiers.

"His vision, and mine, focuses on partnership of active and reserve components in guaranteeing military capability through demanding excellence in training and leader development."

While the ITB is set to change command Wednesday, Kirkland said he intends to keep the brigades' close relationship.

"He leaves a rich legacy for incoming commander Col. John F. Schorsch Jr. He, without question, will keep the ITB moving into the 21st Century," Kirkland said. "We will do nothing that diverts from our ultimate focus on supporting combat readiness of the Infantry force."

To show their appreciation to Turner, Commanding General of the 84th Div., Brig. Gen. Robert W. Smith III, has arranged to make Turner an honorary member of the 84th Div. during his change of command Wednesday.

"This is a highly prestigious award, which few have received. In Colonel Turner's case, this award is richly deserved," Kirkland said. "His efforts are much appreciated and won't be forgotten."

New APFT standards to take affect Feb. 1

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer approved implementation of the new Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT) standards for Feb. 1, 1999. A message signed Dec. 7 by Director of Training Brig. Gen. James J. Lovelace informed commanders to proceed with the new APFT standards.

The new standards were originally scheduled for Army-wide implementation Oct. 1, but were delayed. Sgt. Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall said he believes Soldiers will do well on the revamped test.

"The delayed implementation had nothing to do with whether or not Soldiers (in the field) were ready (for the new test)," Hall said. "I expect scores to drop 4-6 points, but the bottom line is: the NCO Corps is ready for the new standards and has been all along."

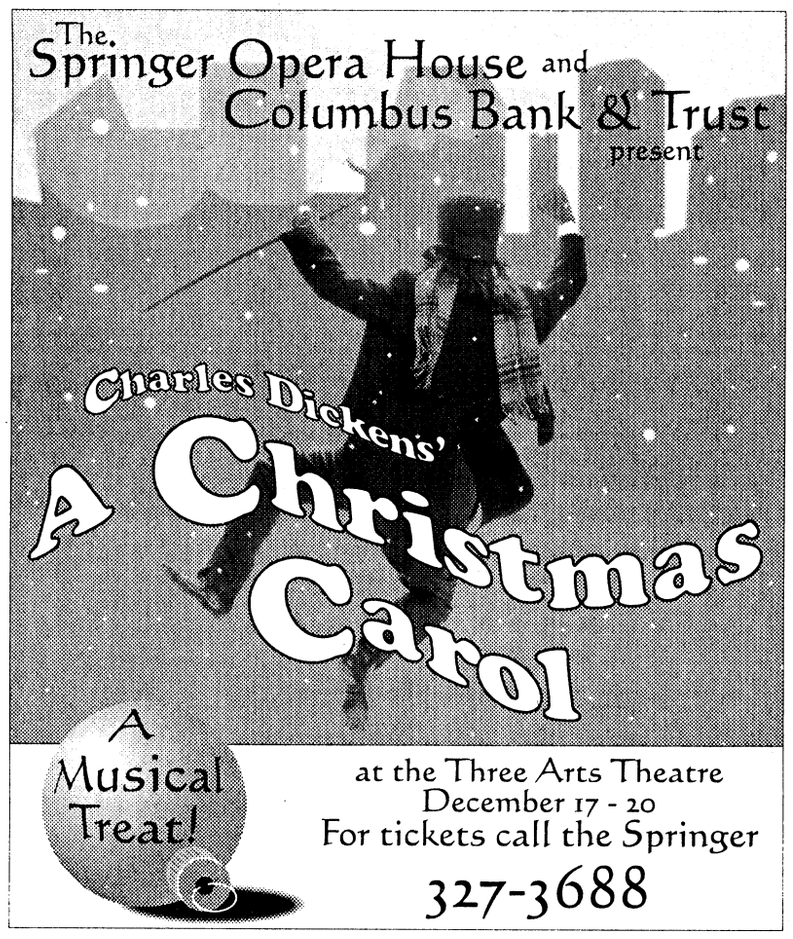
Hall said one reason for the delay was because new APFT scoring cards had not been printed and a larger reason was that Department of the Army leadership had not received input from major commanders offering feedback on the new standards.

The new cards have been printed and shipped to distribution centers and should be ready for pickup by units now, said Maj. John A. Hughes with the Deputy Chief of Staff Operations and Plans, Institutional Training Division. The cards have been sent to Army Reserve, state adjutant generals for the National Guard and to active-component installations both in the United States and overseas.

The current physical fitness standards have been in effect since the 1980s. The test used now was developed and adopted in 1984. In 1992, Training and Doctrine Command began reviewing the APFT to see if it was valid for the Army.

"This is the result of a five-year study," said Col. Stephen Cellucci, commandant of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School. The old test standards didn't enable men and women to be evaluated fairly, Cellucci said. The new standards address this issue, he said, as they were derived through scientific methods.

"The new standards are, overall, tougher for both men and women; we had to establish equity for men and women of all age groups," Cellucci said. "Now, you have equal points for equal effort."



The new APFT adds three additional age groups: 52-56; 57-61; and 62 plus, Cellucci said. The previous test's most senior category was age 51, which, he said, raised unrealistic fitness expectations for older Soldiers.

Career Army officers and NCOs, Cellucci said, are scoring well beyond the Army average APFT score.

The average scores for the new APFT "should be around 238," Cellucci said, which is close to today's average. Starting Feb. 1, Soldiers who want to earn a fitness badge will need to score 270 total points — 90 per event — instead of the 290 points now required. Cellucci said that 90 points per event should be equal to an "A" or excellence.

Soldiers who wish to keep their fitness badges will need to revalidate them at each test, Cellucci said.

"Today's Soldiers are in the best shape ever," he added.

Award recognizes outstanding service

Lt. Col. Gordon B. Davis, Jr.
Catholic Chapel Pastoral President

The Fort Benning Catholic Parish awarded this year's John J. Makovec Award during the 11:30 a.m. mass Dec. 6 at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

The award, in memory of Master Sgt. John J. Makovec, 1899-1976, goes to those individuals who distinguish themselves through outstanding service to the Fort Benning Catholic Community.

Makovec served in the armies of three countries and fought on opposing sides in successive World Wars before retiring at Fort Benning.

During his retirement years, he devoted himself to the service of the Fort Benning Catholic Parish and its priests.

Living in the house of the parish priests until his death, he dedicated every day to the maintenance and improvement of the parish grounds and to serving the needs of the Catholic community and its chaplains.

While at Fort Benning, he developed a life-long friendship with Philip Gage Jr., son of a former assistant commandant. In 1977, retired Lt. Col. Philip Gage Jr. created a trust fund in memory of Makovec.

Funds from this trust are used each year for presentation of the John J. Makovec awards.

This years recipients were Lt. Col. Michael and Maj. Patricia Boatner, Andrea Banasiak, Nerida Morales, retired Maj. Freddy and Maria Sanchez and Nilsa Rodriguez.

The recipients have dedicated between two and eight years of continuous service to the Fort Benning Catholic Community leading, organizing and supporting a wide variety of religious activities and programs.

The Parish commended the awardees for their outstanding contributions by presenting them with an engraved Bible and engraving their names on the Makovec Award Plaque.

This plaque hangs permanently in the Chapel Vestibule.

Airmen aim high during competition

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

Four airmen from Fort Benning's 17th Air Support Operations Squadron recently competed in and took first and third places in the Lightning Challenge, an annual skills competition for Tactical Air Command and Control (TACC) specialists at Hurlburt Field, Fla.

The two-man team of Staff Sgt. Sean O'Neill and Senior Airman Jason Quesenberry beat out 32 other teams from around the Air Force for the top spot. Staff Sgt. Kenneth Lindsey and Senior Airman Jarrod Welsh finished third in the competition, which was held in the beginning of November.

During the four-day competition, the teams received scores for completing numerous events including job knowledge tests, obstacle courses, land navigation tests and ruck marches.

"There was really no rest time between the events. It was both physically and mentally demanding," Quesenberry said.

He said the Air Force competition was modeled after the Army's Best Ranger competition and competitors didn't know what task was ahead until they reached the station.

"Not knowing what was ahead was probably the toughest part of the competition," Quesenberry said. "By our fourth ruck march, we were pretty tired. We didn't know how long the march was going to be or what we were going to have to do next."

Although the teams finished in two of the top spots, Quesenberry said he wasn't sure how his team would do at the competition.

"We were confident, but we weren't sure exactly what to expect," he said. "Only one of us had competed in the competition before."

O'Neill, who is aligned with the 75th Ranger Regiment, added that the training he has received at Fort Benning prepared him for what he faced during the competition.

In order for the Fort Benning airmen to make it to the world-wide competition, they first had to attend a qualifier at Fort Drum, N.Y., in October. The top five teams at that event were then allowed to advance to the Lightning Challenge.

TACC specialists are responsible for integrating air power into the fire support and maneuver plans of supported ground commanders. The airmen are aligned and permanently stationed with the U.S. Army and usually spend their entire careers on Army installations.

Senior Officer Candidates (OC) of Class 501-98, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS), conducted their community project just in time for the holidays.

Each OCS class completes a class community project during their senior phase, this class decided to pitch in at Santa's Castle and do something to help the local community get into the holiday spirit.

Candidates arrived at Santa's Castle and assisted in many different ways.

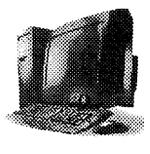
Santa's Castle received a face lift, courtesy of the officer candidates who cleaned the Kandle Drive facility from the inside out.

The officer candidates also assisted with the decoration and prop placement and with the inventory and toy assembly.

According to OC Matthew James, this project was beneficial mostly because of who it helped.

"There are a lot of families in the Fort Benning community who need a little help during the holiday season," James said.

"Organizations like Santa's Castle are a real service to the community," he continued.



Santa's Castle is a non-profit organization that provides toys at Christmas for children of Fort Benning Soldiers who are having financial difficulties.

Class 501-98 is set to graduate Wednesday.

Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Dennis J. Reimer and Sergeant Major of the Army Robert E. Hall will proclaim Dec. 16 Army Family Team Building Day" (AFTB) at a Pentagon ceremony.

The purpose of "Army Family Team Building Day" is to celebrate four years of AFTB success and recognize more than 2,200 volunteers who have contributed countless hours to the program and trained more than 200,000 Soldiers and family members.

AFTB is a family training and readiness program that provides participants with an understanding of Army culture and the skills and resources they need to become self-reliant, self-sufficient members of the military community.

"AFTB helps to educate military family members about military life-styles," said Scherrice Brannon, program coordinator for AFTB. "It is a program designed for family members by family members to teach them Army culture and give them the skills they need for independence and self-sufficiency."

The three-level training program is sequential. In the Level I class (family members with 0-5 years experience), participants learn terms and acronyms, military culture and expectations, what their entitlements are and what resources are available in the military community.

Level I classes will be offered on the third Wednesday of each month beginning in January. Level II begins February and level III will be offered in March.

Graduates from the fall level I, II and III classes are: Melissa Evans, Stephanie Storck, Karen Fowler, Carla Foster, Jennifer Grobe and Freddie Pitre.

Tar Wars

Program reaches kids early

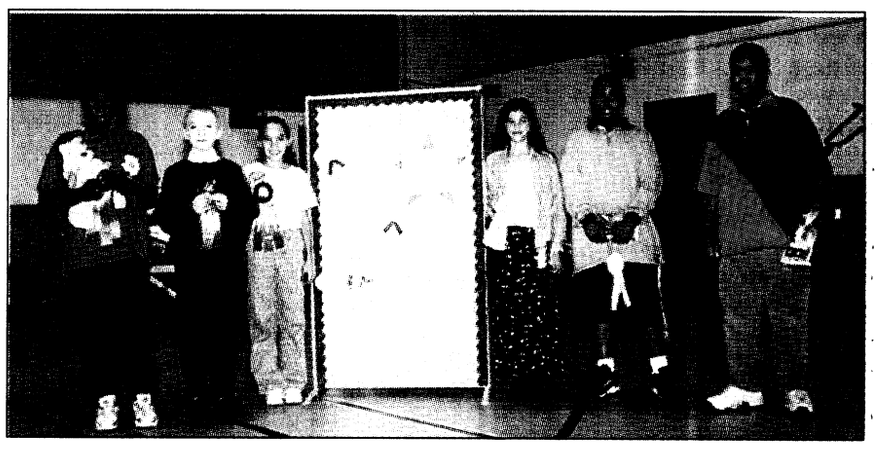
Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

How many reasons are there to quit smoking?

According to Stowers Elementary fifth-grade student Chris Galloway, there are three or at least that's all that made his first place poster in this year's Tar Wars Poster Contest.

The contest aimed at local fifth-grade students is the final step in a 45-minute course that is hoped to keep kids smoke-free and proud.

"I was so happy when they called my name," Galloway said as he recalled what it was like when the program's director announced his name as this year's top poster artist. "All I could say was, 'Oh my gosh!' I was so excited."



Galloway earned this year's Tar Wars title with his crayon-colored poster that listed some of the things he would miss if he were to die from a smoke-related disease. Appearing on Galloway's list were homeruns, touchdowns, three-pointers and graduation.

Dr. (Capt.) Ted Anselmi, one of the 13 physicians at Martin Army Community Hospital who participated in the Tar Wars program as an instructor, said the homeruns and touchdowns mentioned on Galloway's poster are things people would miss if they were to succumb to a smoke-related disease and is positive proof the Tar Wars course is successful.

"We try to get to the students before they start (smoking)," Anselmi said. "It is a lot easier to get through to them at this age than it is a couple of years down the road. At this age they are still real receptive to ideas."

The program, which is part of a nationwide campaign sponsored by the American Academy of Family Practice, brings the dangers of smoking to students through the use of hands-on experiments and presentations.

"We show the kids the damage smoke can do to their body and to their life," Anselmi said. "We even have the kids breathe through plastic straws to show them what it would be like to live with emphysema."

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Students from Stowers Elementary who placed in the Tar Wars Poster Contest stand with ribbons and winning posters.

It is those types of practical teaching aids that really get through to the students, said David Murray, a fifth-grade science teacher at Stowers Elementary.

"The physicians are able to focus the students on the influences that get them to start the habit and then make sure they have the facts not to start," Murray said. "It educates the students and puts the ball in their court."

This year, the Tar Wars program also awarded five other students for the poster-drawing efforts that sang the song of praise for staying smoke-free.

Katy M. Williams, a Stowers student, placed second in the post-wide competition followed by another Stowers student, Andre Rivera, who finished third.

Honorable mentions in the contest included Madeline Flores, a Dexter Elementary student, Tyrone Valentine and James Shaw, both students at Stowers.

All six awardees received more than the bragging rights of being outstanding artists, they also received gifts donated from the Post Exchange including a boom box, CD players and videotapes.

Galloway's first-place poster will advance to take part in the national Tar Wars poster contest.

Cameras on board

System keeps students safe

When school lets out for the day, hundreds of children flee from schools across Fort Benning and head straight for a school bus. But how does a bus driver handle a bus full of rambunctious children and drive safety at the same time?

The Fort Benning School System's solution was the purchase of 32 surveillance cameras designed for public transportation that are now onboard every school bus.

The surveillance cameras, Silent Witness Mobile Video Systems, record and display audio and video signals, time and date, and the status of the vehicle warning signals.

"The onboard cameras protect not only the children but also the school bus driver and monitor as well," said Juanita Curtis, bus monitor at Fort Benning. "The system allows parents to observe a child's behavior while traveling to and from school if we are having a disciplinary problem."

Ron Maxwell, professional bus driver for the past 22 years said, the system checks the students, but also checks the driver's abilities with safety indicators displayed on the VCR tape such as when the driver activates the amber caution lights

School saves pennies to make Christmas special

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

When Santa Claus pulls out his list this year, the students of Wilson Elementary School are sure to stand out. After spending months gathering pennies, the students were able to turn small change into big hope for some deserving Fort Benning children.

According to Parent Teacher Organization (PTO) President Laura Walker, the students raised more than $1,000 to help benefit Santa's Castle.

Walker said the penny drive began around the beginning of the school year and when it ended Oct. 29, everything from coffee cans and plastic baggies to milk cartons were filled to the brim with pennies. After five days of counting and rolling, more than 2,000 roles of pennies were loaded onto a truck and turned into the bank.

The bulk of the pennies were raised between Oct. 26 and 29 during what the school deemed Penny Week, Walker said. The school helped motivate the children to bring in the pennies by giving them a little extra incentive. If they raised $100 in that week alone, principal Phyllis Parker would have to wear her pajamas to school.

The children not only met that goal but exceeded it and Parker came to school Oct. 29 sporting her night attire accentuated by furry slippers.

Walker said Oct. 29 was also a day of celebration for the children. Those who brought the most pennies were crowned royalty. The boy and girl who raised the most pennies overall were named the king and queen of pennies and the student from each class who raised the most was named a prince or princess. First-grader Jasmine Holmon received the honor of being named the supreme queen of pennies when she hauled in 18 pounds of pennies which totaled approximately $30.

Michelle Allen's second-grade class came out on top as the class who raised the most money. Their total penny donation added up to around $95.

"The students did a wonderful job and I am very proud of them," Allen said. "Even though a penny doesn't sound like much, it adds up to a lot and some children are going to have a nice Christmas because of what the students have done."

Second-grader Anthony Darnell, 8, was crowned prince of his class and said it makes him happy to be able to give other children a chance to have a special Christmas.

"I just wanted to help other kids that don't have any presents," Darnell said. "It makes me happy to know they will have a good Christmas."

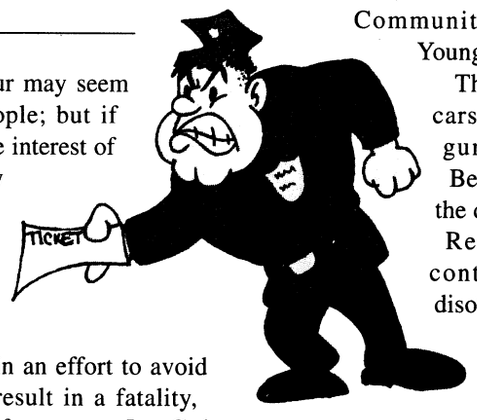
Allen said she was able to incorporate the penny drive into her social studies lesson plan. She said it was a perfect way for her to demonstrate the importance of community and neighbors.

"It became a learning process for the children," Allen said. "I just emphasized the importance of sharing and how this was going to be helping children in our community."

Walker said the penny drive was a great way for the children to make a difference and since it was such a small amount, the easiest way for them to give.

"We just wanted to teach them about how good it feels to make a difference in someone else's life," Walker said. "We also wanted to stress the importance of community service. Besides all kids are enthusiastic about Christmas and little do they know that in a way they are helping themselves. Who knows what children will end up benefiting from Santa's Castle."

The thrill of the penny drive didn't end Oct. 29 though. On Monday, the students gathered outside to watch as the check for $1,150 was presented to Linda Ernst on behalf of Santa's Castle.



Ernst congratulated the children and told them they had done something extraordinary.

"You all did something tremendous," Ernst said. "Because of what you have done, 32 children will receive new toys this year, where as they wouldn't of gotten anything at all. Everyone deserves a pat on the back."

FAMILY HOUSING

MPs warn drivers of speeding

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Fifteen miles per hour may seem a bit slow to some people; but if that limit is posted in the interest of safety, it probably becomes more reasonable.

Throughout family housing areas the 15 mile per hour (mph) speed limit is imposed in an effort to avoid accidents, which may result in a fatality, said Chief of Law Enforcement Lt. Col. Ronald Jones.

This is also the reason why drivers are required to travel 15 mph on Main Post during physical training (PT) hours, otherwise known as Operation Slow Down, Jones said.

The military police (MPs) have issued more than 400 tickets over the past year in housing areas alone. Despite the number of tickets issued, the MPs still receive complaints of residents speeding through the housing areas.

"My biggest concern as a parent is that a child will be playing outside and a car will end up hitting them because they were going too fast and could not stop," said Sgt. Gentry Davis, Bradley Instruction Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "It is not too much to ask residents to follow the speed limit while they are in the housing areas."

Because of parking situations in some housing areas, drivers may not be able to see small children behind cars who are about to cross the street or run after a ball. Some residents feel a car traveling 15 mph should have sufficient time to react to these types of situations, said McGraw Manor Community Life Mayor Linda Young.

The MPs have 15 patrol cars equipped with radar guns which patrol Fort Benning every minute of the day.

Residents who continually get caught disobeying the law receive fines. Drivers who receive repeated fines may lose their post driving privilege.

"We issue more than twice the amount of traffic citations than the city of Columbus," Jones said. "If we clock a driver at 16 mph in a housing area, we can pull them over."

Because the speed limit is lower than usual in the housing areas, an illusion of excessive speed is created even when drivers are simply travelling a few miles over the limit. However, the military police rarely clock drivers moving more than 24 mph in housing areas," Jones said,

Although 16 and 17 mph may seem slow, 15 is still the posted limit, and residents report certain times of the day as being the biggest problem for them.

"People who are running late to work, physical training, lunch or are just eager to get home will drive through the housing area where I live going over the limit," Young said. "Fifteen mph should be fast enough when going through these housing areas."

Jones added that it is important for drivers to adhere to the posted speed limit to ensure the safety to people on post. It is also equally important for parents to remind their children not to play in the street, he said.

Fire Prevention Week

Contest stresses safety

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

Eight Fort Benning children were announced the winners in "The Great Escape" poster contest held during Fire Prevention Week October 4-10 for children in grades K-8. But every child and their families were winners in this contest, according to fire protection officer Hollis Brown, who coordinated the event.

"It re-emphasizes to the children and their families the importance of knowing how to get out of their home in an emergency," Brown said.

The contest was sponsored by the National Fire Protection Association, and the first place winners from participating fire departments across the country have been submitted for a drawing for the grand prize — a trip to Disney World.

With support and encouragement from Col. Thomas Cain, Directorate of Public Safety, and Fire Chief Arthur Simmons, the Fort Benning Fire Department was able to expand on the national program by awarding cash prizes to the top three overall winners and the first-place winners in each grade.

"It was such a great program for the children to be involved in, and that's why we went above and beyond," Brown said.

The contest was more than just a child's artwork on posterboard. Children devised their own plans for getting their families out of the home in case of a fire. They drew their "escape routes" on a form designed with a grid for showing the layout of the child's home and their own "great escape."

The child's family was required to practice the plan. The parents then signed the form, verifying that the child had developed and executed the plan.

DeAndre Murphy, a second-grader at Loyd Elementary, won first place overall and received $333 and a trip to Destin, Fla., for his family. Antoine Laury, a fifth-grader at Wilson Elementary won second place overall and received $125. Eric L. Smith, a first-grader from Loyd, won third place overall and received $75.

Brown collected donations from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, TIC Credit Union, Association of the U.S. Army and Burger King. The Fort Benning Fire Fighters Association provided the remaining contribution.

Brown said he hopes to make the contest an annual event.

"This is one way we can get the family involved," Brown said. "There's nothing in post regulations that says residents of Fort Benning must practice a fire drill in their homes."

According to Brown, the number of deaths per day due to house fires is on the decline.

"It's on a downhill spiral, mostly due to education on fire safety," Brown said. "It used to be about 14 people a day. Now it's down to 12."

The number of deaths from home fires, he added, is measured more by the season rather than a particular cause.

Christmas is one of the most hazardous times of year in terms of fires starting in the home, especially when multiple extension cords are used for lights.

U.S. Army Infantry Center regulations say extensions cords must be no longer than nine feet and can only serve one appliance.

Cold weather is another red-flag time of year, with more electric heaters in use, Brown said, but summer has its share of fire hazards, too.

Improper storage of flammable liquids or pool chemicals can lead to unusual but deadly accidents.

Fire prevention measures, Brown said, should never be taken lightly.

"We are always trying to look ahead to keep Fort Benning residents safe from fire-related tragedies," Brown said. "When you hear the sirens go by, sometimes it's too late."

Buses: Install videos

in preparation to stop. The recording enables a driver to focus on his driving and deal with disciplinary problems after safely delivering the children home.

"I no longer have to continuously look back to see what is going on in the back of the bus," he said. "I can review the tape after completing my route and determine if there was any disciplinary issues and what child was involved."

Maxwell's bus route includes transporting more than 70 passengers, mainly pre-kindergarten and kindergarten children and has recently assigned seats to help with the identification process if needed.

Curtis, a bus monitor on Maxwell's school bus said assigning seats to each child is beneficial especially for younger children.

"The loading and unloading is easier and faster with seat assignments because the kids know exactly where to go," she said.

According to Donna Ford, support services specialist for the Fort Benning Schools, the cameras are for safety but also help guide conduct reports for discipline problems.

Children who have disciplinary problems are handled several different ways depending on the frequency and severity of the incident. The first step to deal with discipline problems is a verbal warning followed up by a write-up if the child continues the behavior. Behavior improvement forms are issued for minor violations such as name calling or jumping from seat to seat. The driver or monitor initiates this form and the student writes what they did wrong and how they are going to correct the situation.

A parent notification form is used when a child becomes a repeated offender. Drivers ask for parent support in correcting the problem by sending the form home with the child. The parents are notified by telephone and told of the problem. Parents then have 48 hours to return the form or the issue goes directly to a principal form, which is the last corrective action taken.

A tape of the behavior is sent along with the principal form to be viewed by the student's principal or assistant principal.

"If a child has done something bad enough, the issue will go directly to the principal and the tapes provide a clear and accurate account of the incident," said Robert Ouimette, contract manager of Taylor Motors, Fort Benning's school transportation service. "Problems are resolved quickly with the video tapes and disciplinary procedures are dramatically shortened."

"There are just a few children who make it bad for others and the camera system has aided in the reduction of conduct problems, which make the bus rides more pleasant for everyone," Ford said. "Bus drivers have a great responsibility and the cameras aid the safe delivery of our children to and from school."

Rabbi answers holiday question

Chaplain (Col.) David Zalis
U.S Army Infantry Center Chaplains Office

What is Hanukkah? What is Christmas? Although I can only address the first question, I will leave it to my esteemed Protestant and Catholic Chaplains to answer the second.

reflections

What is Hanukkah? First the short and accurate answer followed by my own exposition. The Talmud asks precisely this question and answers it as follows: "The Rabbis taught on the 25th day of the month of Kislev begins the days of Hanukkah when the Greeks entered the holy temple in Jerusalem, instituted idol worship and defiled all the oils that were used in the temple service. When the House of the Hashmoneans (the Macabbees) overcame and defeated the Greeks, they entered the temple and searched for pure oil but only found one small jug of oil sealed by the high priest with enough oil for one day. A miracle occurred, and the oil burned for eight days until new and pure oil could be prepared. Because of this, the Rabbis established eight days of rejoicing."

That was the short and accurate answer. However, what is the meaning of the word Hanukkah? The word translates into English as "dedication" and is found many times in the Bible. Just one example from Numbers 7, verse 84, "This was the dedication (Hanukkah) offering of the altar."

Now for our Hebrew lesson. Hebrew is not a difficult language as basically all Hebrew words can be derived from about 400 roots. Look at the root of Hanukkah, it is the letters Het-Nun-Chav. These letters are also the root of another word, Hinuch, again Het-Nun-Chav. What does Hinuch mean? Hinuch translates as Education. Even in the English language, these words — "dedication and education" sound and appear alike. I would offer my opinion that one follows the other; namely, education leads to dedication. One might also say that dedication leads to education.

Now, one also has the long answer to, "What is Hanukkah?" Hanukkah teaches us the importance of dedication and education. Fort Benning, the premier Army installation, practices the meaning of the word. The Infantry Center with its Basic and Advanced Infantry Officer Course, OCS, Basic and Advanced Noncommisioned Officer Course, the Ranger Training Battalion, Airborne School, School of the Americas and the Infantry Training Brigade are the primary sources of education and dedication for the U.S. Army.

Education and dedication are values that people can and must use in their daily lives, both personal and religious.

On second thought, maybe I have answered to some degree the second question, "What is Christmas?"

Marriage requires more than a 'feeling'

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life ministries Center

I had been an Army Chaplain for exactly one month when a young couple burst into my office and proclaimed to me, "We want to get married!"

"When?" I asked. "Like right now!" They answered happily.

When asked why they wanted to get married, they answered with a funny look, "That's a dumb question. We're in loooooove!"

Upon further questioning of the love-stricken couple, I found the two 18-year-old privates had only known each other for two weeks, one was being stationed in Korea, while the other in Germany.

Needless to say, there was not a wedding for them that day.

Thankfully, this young couple soon realized that love is more than just a feeling of mutual attraction; love is something you do. Many people get married because of a good feeling, but that soon wears off. Marriage is risky business, and those couples who succeed are those who really work at keeping their relationship alive and vibrant.

Marriage is like a fire. There are two essential elements for a fire to keep burning after the initial spark sets the log ablaze; additional fuel and oxygen. I see the fuel as being each spouse, near enough to keep each other warm, yet far enough to give each other breathing room. The oxygen is the thing each spouse does for the other to show his or her love. They are the daily acts of appreciation and affection you give to your spouse.

Growing together and in love is what love is all about. At the Family Life Center, there are professionals who care. For more information, call 545-1760.

Runners take on fog, humidity during annual event

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

More than 370 runners from Fort Benning, Alabama and Georgia took on fog, warm temperatures and humidity Saturday morning to take part in Faith Middle School's 20th annual Holiday Race.

According to race coordinator Susan Emerson, the stint of spring-like weather that graced Fort Benning Saturday set the stage for a regime of runners totaling more than years prior.

"This was the best turn-out for the race in years," Emerson said. "Without a doubt, the weather really helped us out this year."

The forecast of a sunny day and a high temperature in the 70's might have lured runners to the race, but the sweat and pain upon the face of racer John Detro, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), showed otherwise.

"It looked like we were going to have a pretty good day for the race," Detro said after he completed and won both the two-mile and the five-mile race. "But, as soon as I began the two-mile, I could tell that the humidity and mist out here were really going to take a toll on me."

That toll, however, was short-lived, according to Detro who calls himself the oldest first lieutenant in the Army.

"I began to grow accustomed to the conditions during the two-mile and felt a little better during my second race," he said.

Detro, a competitor in this year's Army 10-miler race in Washington D.C. and avid race competitor, said he planned on running the five-mile race for training, but was constantly reminded of his first-place standing as he was being closely trailed by Smith Station's second-place competitor, tenth-grader Matt Tillman.

"Tillman did an excellent job," Detro commented after the race. "He has a great running career in front of him if he continues to work at it."

Working hard is what earned Faith Middle School seventh-grader Amy Meresca, a first-place finish in both the two-mile and five-mile event in the overall female categories of competition.

"I had a decent race," said the 12-year-old, who began her running career five years ago. "I really just ran the races to see if I could do it after taking some time off to spend with my dad."

Meresca, who moved to Fort Benning only months ago, said she will return next year to compete and hopefully make a three-race sweep of all of the races.

"I'll definitely be back again next year to compete," she said. "But next year, I'll be faster and ready to compete in all three (one-mile, two-mile and five-mile) races."

Faith Race organizers have already begun preparing for next year's event, which is slated for the first Saturday in December, 1999.

Listed below are this year's Faith race top three finishers in each category.

Fort Benning Soldiers build hope in Central America

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

The 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) has now moved into its forward operating bases where it will begin its mission of clearing and repairing the roads in Nicaragua that were destroyed during the devastating blow Hurricane Mitch visited on this country.

The 63rd now joins Joint Task Force Build Hope, a joint service collection of Soldiers, sailors and airmen from across the U. S. here to help the people of this country return to its way of life.

Soldiers of the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) who have been in country since mid-November chiefly man the task force. Task Force Commander for this mission is Col. Al Rasper, who oversees the force of approximately 1,800.

Perhaps the most critical for Nicaragua is to have complete travel on its roads. By task force and Nicaraguan government estimates, 40 bridges were destroyed, 23 bridges damaged and about 1,500 kilometers of road were damaged.

In some areas, mud completely washed away any recognizable features of what was once the major thoroughfare for trade and personal travel.

There are 35 cities that have become isolated without road access.

With no access to the markets, farmers are unable to transport such national trade as coffee beans, bananas and other such gross national product crops which represent dollars and potentially the country's long-term stability, Rasper said.

The reestablishing of these vital links will also help speed-up the immediate assistance needed in some of the more remote areas. This hurricane caused 2,260 deaths and displaced 868,000 civilians.

The two projects for the 63rd will include road improvements. In repairing the roads, the engineers will install culverts to assist water run-off during the rainy season. The 1st Platoon is located in Esteli, while the rest of the company is working in Jinotega.

The 498th Air Ambulance of Fort Benning is also assisting this mission by providing three helicopters each in the countries of El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua. While the primary mission of the 498th is to provide medical evacuation for U.S. forces, they remain on standby to provide 24-hour medevac wherever needed in the theater of this humanitarian assistance mission.

Early planning has the engineering mission completed by Feb. 1, 1999. However, the forces from Fort Benning will still have the long process of cleaning and loading their equipment.

Former chairman speaks at graduation

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Officer Candidate Class 501-98 received some words of wisdom and a vote of confidence from a former chairman of the joint chiefs of staff during their graduation ceremony held Dec. 16 in Marshall Auditorium.

Retired Gen. John Shalikashvili made the trek to Fort Benning to speak before nearly 100 candidates after receiving an invitation from a former sergeant major of the Army's son and graduating officer candidate.

Newly commissioned 2nd Lt. Ryan Kidd, Retired Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard A. Kidd's son, not only invited Shalikashvili to speak at his graduation, but also received the honor of having the former chairman commission him as well.

Shalikashvili who is an OCS graduate told the officers that it was a pleasure to be able to attend the graduation and thanked Kidd for the invitation.

"As an old OCS graduate it is indeed a very special treat for me to be here. I guess I have my young friend to thank," Shalikashvili said. "Thank-you very much for the invitation to come here. That's the kind of initiative that will get you many places."

Shalikashvili began his speech by telling the officers that he understands how tough OCS is and how he almost didn't make it through the first day.

"When the lights went out that first night, I slipped out to find someone and tell them, there had been a terrible mistake made and to send me back to my old unit," Shalikashvili said. "And would you believe I couldn't find a soul?"

He said he returned to bed that night, woke to face another day and thanks God he didn't find anyone that night.

"Well I cannot tell you how often I have thanked God that he made it such that evening that I would not see a TAC officer. Because I didn't, because I returned to my bunk and because I went through (OCS), I have had 39 incredible years wearing our nation's uniform and a life I wouldn't trade for anything," he added.

Along with stories about his early days as a new lieutenant, Shalikashvili told the officers about a sergeant who helped him develop the qualities he feels are most important in an officer — competence, caring and character.

Shalikashvili also told the officers they have an advantage because they were Soldiers before becoming officers. He added that it was important for them to never forget how the world looks through the eyes of a Soldier because if they do they will lose that advantage.

After finishing his speech and personally congratulating each of the new officers, Shalikashvili made his way to the OCS arches where he swore in Kidd beside his mother and father.

"It feels terrific to be able to come out and commission Lieutenant Kidd," Shalikashvili said." "I went through this 39 years ago and it gave me an opportunity to live a life that has been the most exciting I could ever imagine and the most rewarding."

"If I had one wish for all of them, (graduates) it would be that they could end up with the fulfilling, rewarding and happy life as I was blessed with after being commissioned."

ITB receives new commander

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The U.S. Army Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) held a change of command Wednesday on Wetherby Field.

Col. Abraham J. Turner relinquished command to Col. John "Rusty" Schorsch in what was referred to by Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst as a bittersweet event.

"We are losing a great commander who has put his fingerprints on every Soldier who has come through the Infantry Training Brigade," Ernst said. "The training is tougher and the standards are higher because of Col. Abraham Turner."

Turner described his best accomplishments as the reconstruction of ITB.

"We have raised the standards with a seven-day revised field training exercise, additional special weapons training, additional road marches and values training," Turner said.

Turner, who led by example according to Ernst, was always there leading, coaching, and tutoring Soldiers.

"I like seeing the look of pride on Soldiers' faces as they march past me during pass and review during a graduation," Turner said. "I have learned in my time here that the drill sergeants are the best Noncommissioned officers and these young Soldiers are great American citizens who come to the Army with the intent to be all they can be."

Turner leaves the Brigade he commanded for the past two years to take over a position at the Pentagon where he will oversee war plans.

"I am really looking forward to working with the other branches of service," Turner said.

Resource management director retires after 31 years

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

He wipes the dust from one of his many awards as he gently slides it into a moving box among all of the others he has accumulated throughout his three decades of service. The stacking and packing is a process that is familiar to the veteran, but this time the awards and the decorations that have earned him his position as one of Fort Benning's top civilians are not being forwarded to another post or duty location. They are being forwarded home where he will join the ranks of a different force — retirees.

Dave Flo, director of resource management, will walk out of his corner office at Building 66 for the final time this week, leaving behind him the memories and the comraderie that he has acquired throughout his colorful 31-year career with the Army that has taken him from his position as a first lieutenant during the Vietnam era to one of Fort Benning's top civilians today.

"It's been a great 31 years," Flo said as his broad smile seemed to echo the fact. "I couldn't have asked for anything better than to be associated with the finest organization anyone could ever hope to be associated with, the United States Army."

That association began nearly three decades ago, a time when many of America's youth were fleeing from the military as the conflict in Vietnam continued.

"I was drafted, and I knew it was my time to serve," Flo said about his military beginnings in 1965. "I went to Officer Candidate School and was commissioned to serve three years as a quartermaster lieutenant."

Flo

But that three years quickly turned into nearly 30 for the man who left active-duty in 1968 to persue a college degree at the University of Montana and just couldn't stay away from the institution he had served.

"It was after I earned my degree that I decided to return to the Army, but this time I chose a different route where I could use my skills as a civilian rather than a Soldier."

Presidio, Calif., was first on the list of the many assignments Flo would encounter during the next 25 years of service he logged before arriving here to serve as the DRM director.

Ever since his arrival in 1985, Flo has been tasked with the duties of upper-level management in the resource management office here, abiding by the leadership techniques instilled in him during his time as an officer.

"I make sure my people have the access and the resources available to complete the job," he said. "It's just like taking care of Soldiers, they come first."

Putting others first is paramount to resource management, according to Flo; however, it has progressively gotten harder during the past decade.

"We try to make the resources available to the different departments here to help the community, but with all of the cutbacks and downsizing it's a tough and frustrating job."

"In the past decade we've seen a 43 percent decrease in manpower, and a drastic shortage of fundage from the government. It's hard to put people first when we have to tell them they can't paint something that needs it because the funds aren't available."

"Those are the things that make this job hard," he commented. "Maybe the next guy will be able to do a better job."

According to Bobby King, chief of accounting services division and Flo's fellow co-worker, Flo's replacement will have a tough act to follow.

"Mr. Flo is a great guy to work for," King said. "He understands the importance of a healthy family life and doesn't micro-mange the office. He gives us what we need, and leaves us alone. He will certainly be missed."

As for future plans for Flo, he said he has a list of honey-do chores around the house, but no real plans as of yet.

"I would like to possibly teach civics, and really show the kids of today what the military is really all about," he said. "I don't know what I'll do. I guess only time will tell."

Separation keeps Christmas spirit alive

Bayonet staff writer

In merely a week I will find myself wearing nothing but wrapping paper and mistletoe, doing a dance around the Christmas tree, singing yuletides of happiness and more. Of course, I could probably avoid the whole wrapping paper and mistletoe incident this year if my grandma decides that one bottle of rum is plenty for the egg nog.

commentary

But in all seriousness, Christmas is just around the corner and before we know it the day we spend months anticipating and agonizing over will be here and gone, leaving us exhausted and probably relieved.

Like most people, I believe Christmas should be a time of happiness; a time when families get together to gorge themselves on delicious food, drink lots of traditional holiday beverages, be merry and share with one another. Christmas is a time to see those relatives that you live a thousand miles away from, lovingly get on each others' nerves and then appreciate the reason why you live so far away. But more importantly, it's just a time to be close to the people you love the most.

Of course, this is what I believe, but that doesn't mean that's how things are.

With everything from gift buying to travel arrangements, Christmas can sometimes feel more like a chore than a holiday. I feel ashamed to admit this, but I'm pretty sure that thousands of others share my sentiments.

Don't get me wrong though, the last thing I want to do is preach about the true meaning of Christmas. There's no point in me wasting my breath about how it's become so commercial and superficial, because we've all heard it before and are secure enough to acknowledge this fact.

What I decided to do instead is reflect on what it was that made Christmas so great for me when I was a child. I wanted to remember the anxious feeling I got on Christmas Eve and how I couldn't sleep that night because I was convinced the next day was magical.

As I thought about it I realized that even as a little girl, Christmas was never really about the candy or presents. Yeah, they were nice, but I'm convinced that even if I had never received a single present, Christmas would have still been just as exciting.

You see, when you are a child, Christmas is something that is mysterious and fun. There are hundreds of stories about Santa Claus, reindeer, elves and the great North Pole. There are songs and parties and games. There are trips and plans to see relatives. Best of all there are two entire weeks from school to bug your parents and find new ways to get in trouble.

When Christmas finally came it was always more than just tearing into a couple of presents. It was about proudly handing your mother a lopsided popsicle bird house that took you weeks to construct. It was waddling outside beneath 25 layers of clothing to play with your favorite cousins for hours in the snow. It was sitting in your grandpa's lap while he told you stories about when he was a child and how the best present he ever received was a chance to come to America.

As I thought about these things I wondered why all of this changed as I started to grow up. I'll never be sure if I changed because the world was changing or because all of the magic and mystery surrounding Christmas was slowly revealed to me. All I know is as the years went by Christmas became less and less about the little things and more and more about how much I could get out of it.

This year, however, things will be different. There won't be a big present waiting for me under the tree and I'm happy to say I could care less. My present is the chance to go home and see my family. To run up to my mom and hug the stuffing out of her. To be close to the ones I love. But beyond that, I received the gift of appreciation for Christmas and its meaning.

After taking the time to reflect on the meaning of Christmas, I think I finally understand that the magic I felt as a child really never ended. I just had to want to find it again.

So this year don't expect me to be sitting around watching the game on television, I have plans of another kind. I'm going to tell those darn Christmas stories. I'm going to make some cheesy gifts. I'm going to bundle up like the good ol' days and play outside in the snow. Then when I get tired, I'm going to come inside curl up next to my grandpa and ask him to tell me a story.

Soldiers know, pay price of peace

During the holiday season, we often hear "peace on earth" in songs and see these words printed on greeting cards. Those of you in America's Army know the high cost of peace. Throughout our long and proud 223-year history, our Soldiers have been asked to pay that price so that others may enjoy the benefits of peace. Our Army's determination, our readiness, and our unique ability to go where we are needed, when we are needed, are the best guarantees of peace that exist in the world today.

Whether you serve our nation on active duty, in the Army Reserve, in the Army National Guard, or as an Army civilian, you are a vital part of the Total Force. You are a continuing source of hope for freedom-loving people around the globe and have helped bring peace throughout the world. At this time, more than 20,000 of you are deployed in over 80 countries, including more than 7,000 in Bosnia, where you are helping to keep peace in that troubled region.

You personify the Army core values, which are the defining characteristics of the American Soldier: Loyalty, Duty, Respect, Selfless-Service, Honor, Integrity, and Personal Courage. Values are your credentials, just as you are the nation's credentials, both at home and around the globe. To those of you serving the nation far from home this holiday season, as well as to you serving within our country's borders, we say 'thank you' for your contributions and sacrifices.

Our nation is blessed with a tradition of religious freedom and tolerance, reflected today in our acceptance of and respect for the wide diversity of religions and cultures in our nation. May each of you enjoy a meaningful and joyous holiday season according to the tradition that you and your family hold dear. We wish all of you and your families a happy, safe, healthy, and peaceful New Year in 1999, as we begin the countdown to the new millennium.

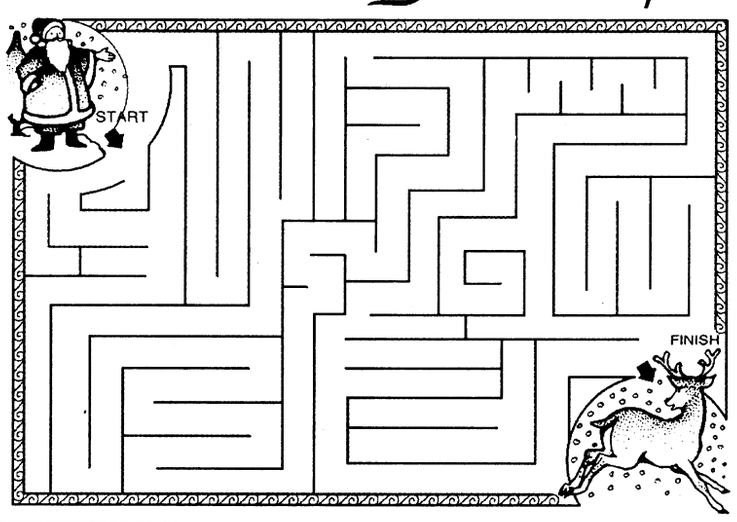
Remember those not home for holidays

I am delighted to extend my best wishes to the entire United States Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning community during this 1998 holiday season. As we pause to celebrate Christmas, Chanukah and the New Year with family and friends, our hearts are filled with emotion. Family traditions and religious roots affirm our unique identities and define who we are as individuals, as a community, and as a nation.



As you celebrate these festive occasions, we urge you to remember those around you who are unable to share fully in the joys of this season because of hardship or family separation. Our world is not at peace. In widely diverse settings around the world, our Soldiers stand watch in harms way defending the values of the American people.

The coming new year affords the opportunity to highlight the successes of 1998 and, thanks to your efforts, Fort Benning has had many. We want to commend each of you personally for your outstanding dedication and service. We are extremely proud of our Soldiers, our families and our civilian employees who worked so hard to make Fort Benning the best of the best again. The new year will present new challenges and opportunities to demonstrate our excellence. I look forward to serving with you and pray that God will bless you in the year to come.

"This is the first time I have been assigned to the pentagon. It is going to be a challenge."

Now, the ITB will change into the hands of a man who was described by Ernst as being exactly what the brigade needs to follow in Turners footsteps.

Schorsch attended the Combined Arms Services Staff School, Ranger School, Infantry Mortar Platoon Leaders' Course, the Armed Forces Staff College and the Naval War College, and holds a Masters Degree in National Security Affairs.

Schorsch has served with the 172nd Light Infantry Brigade at Fort Richardson, Alaska; the 3rd Basic Training Brigade at Fort Dix, New Jersey; the 5th Infantry Division at Fort Polk, Louisiana; the Joint Staff (J-7) in Washington, D.C.; the President's Staff in the White House and the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

He has been awarded the Defense Superior Service Medal, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Army Meritorious Service Medal and the Army Commendation Medal. He has also been awarded the Expert Infantryman's Badge, Master Parachutist Wings and the Ranger Tab.

Although Schorsch was a man of few words during the ceremony, he took to the podium and commented on how well the troops looked.

Schorsch also got right down to business and made his first command decision as the new commander of the Infantry Training Brigade.

Schorsch ordered the drill sergeants to march their Soldiers off of the field, declaring it a training holiday, so they may go back to the barracks and pack for their Christmas leave.

Schorsch comes to Fort Benning accompanied by his wife Deborah.

ITB troops get two-week holiday break

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The hustle and bustle of the holiday season continued early this morning as nearly 3,000 Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) Soldiers left Fort Benning for the two-week holiday break known as "Exodus."

The exodus began today and lasts until Jan. 2. It has conducted for the past 21 years, except for during Desert Storm and Desert Shield when it was canceled.

According to Capt. Ross Coffey, commander of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, ITB, the majority of the Soldiers loaded onto 56 buses and headed for the Hartsfield International Airport in Atlanta beginning at 1:30 a.m. today, but some also opted to head home by bus or privately-owned-vehicle.

While the holiday period may be a break for the trainees, ITB battalions have each been tasked with a different responsibility to ensure the movement goes smoothly.

The 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt. is responsible for the Soldiers who are leaving post. The battalion supervised the shipment of buses to Atlanta and also coordinated transportation for the more than 400 Soldiers who needed to reach the Columbus airport or bus terminal.

Soldiers who don't go home for the holidays will stay at the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. The battalion will provide billeting and mess for all ITB Soldiers who remain on Fort Benning.

The 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment is responsible for controlling the Atlanta airport operation. The battalion has tasked nearly 50 drill sergeants to patrol the airport to assist Soldiers with their travel arrangements.

Since Fort Benning has command and control of the total military movement through Hartsfield International Airport, the 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. will also be on hand to assist more than 8,000 Soldiers from other installations who pass through the airport.

The 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt. is the return battalion and is responsible for inprocessing all Soldiers back into the brigade.

Staff Sgt. William Flaherty, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt. operations NCOIC, said the battalion must account for all Soldiers as they return.

Loaded 45

Program takes drunk drivers off roads

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Bayonet staff writer

A routine drive down the highway could suddenly turn into tragedy when one person decides to play the odds and drive while under the influence of alcohol.

Fort Benning is currently conducting a program that is designed to deal with drunk drivers and take them off the roads.

The program is referred to as "Loaded 45" and has been conducted for more than two and a half years on post as members of the military police (MPs) work to ensure safety of those out and about during the holidays.

"The Loaded 45 program posts extra patrols around Fort Benning during the 45 days encompassing Thanksgiving and New Years," said Lt. Col. Ronald G. Jones, Chief of Law Enforcement. "These patrols have one purpose in life. That purpose is to take drunk drivers off the roads."

Due to the extra attention, there have been no fatal traffic accidents on Fort Benning in the last two and a half years, Jones said.

This year's program was activated Nov. 20 and since then, the MPs have stopped 54 drunk drivers with the help of the Loaded 45 task force.

"We are doing our part to remove drunk drivers off the roads," Jones said.

So, do the MPs consider this program and the extra man hours to be successful in the war against drinking and driving?

"That would all depend on how you measure success," Jones said. "If we do not lose anyone to a drunk driver, we have been successful."

The program is only one of many ways drivers may stay a little safer this holiday.

The MPs will be adding more checkpoint sites to the 15 they already conduct as Soldiers prepare for the new year.

"If someone is traveling through Fort Benning, they will run into a checkpoint," Jones said.

However, Jones said Soldiers will have nothing to worry about if they stay out from behind the wheel if they have been drinking.

While the MPs are doing their part to keep the streets safe, another organization called SafetyCab is doing its part.

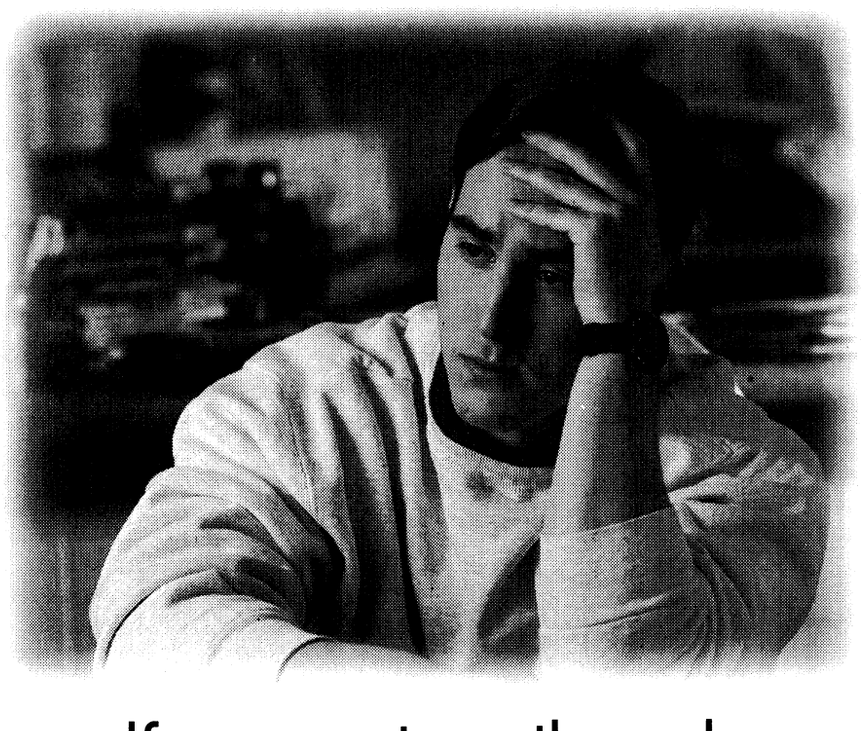
SafetyCab is an organization made up of volunteer cab drivers who will pick up those who need a ride home, free of charge. SafetyCab is available until Jan. 1 from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m.

Those who need a ride may call 660-6069 for a free ride home courtesy of the taxi drivers at SafetyCab.

People may not realize how little it actually takes to become legally drunk, according to Regis Beighley, Infantry Branch Safety Office manager. A 170-pound male typically would have to consume more than four drinks in one hour on an empty stomach. A 135-pound female would typically have to consume three drinks in the same timeframe, Beighley said.

For those who do not realize or chose to ignore the fact they may be drunk, severe consequences may follow them if they are caught.

"In U.S. Magistrate's Court on a first offense of DUI, an individual faces a minimum fine of $325 and a maximum term of imprisonment of 12 month," said Capt. Stephen Payne, Trial Counsel and Special Assistant U.S. Attorney, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.



Although each case is evaluated on its own merits, individuals may also face administrative action such as a letter of reprimand and suspension of post driving privileges, Payne said.

Imprisonment may be the least of someone's problems when they chose to drink and drive. Knowing that they contributed to the loss of a life could haunt them more than any punishment could.

"Please do not drink and drive," Jones said. "Fort Benning and Columbus are filled with people who would testify that if they could go back and change what they had done, they would not have chosen to drink and drive.

"Ending someone's life is something you will live with for the rest of your life."

Ceremony honors post's best Soldier, NCO of '98

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The NCO and Soldier of the Year were honored during a ceremony Tuesday in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

The guest speaker for the event was Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk, commandant of the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy.

Monk spoke of the rigors of the competition and the meaning of quality in which the nominees for the honor of Soldier and NCO of the Year have portrayed in their fields.

Sgt. Ian B. Kidd, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion was named NCO of the Year for 1998. Spc. Michael L. Randolph, Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment earned the tittle of Soldier of the Year for 1998.

These Soldiers represent all of the Soldiers and NCOs who live and work on Fort Benning, said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

"I really did not expect to win," Randolph said. "The other Soldiers I was competing against were tough."

"It is outstanding that Randolph received this honor," said Commander Capt. Patrick M. Mitchell, Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "He has put in a lot of time and effort and is very deserving of the award. It would not surprise me to see him as a sergeant major someday. There is absolutely no limit to what he can accomplish."

"I thank my unit for all their support. This is a fantastic way to train Soldiers and give them a way to achieve and prepare for promotion boards," Kidd said.

Kidd, assigned to the 4th Ranger Training Battalion for the past year as the resource manager for operations, was originally nominated by his platoon sergeant for Soldier of the month.

"Sergeant Kidd is an outstanding Soldier, we need 50,000 more Sgt. Kidds in the Army," said Sergeant. 1st Class Galen House, battalion operations sergeant. "Sergeant Kidd had been with us for the past year, and I wish we could have him in the shop for a while. He is a Soldier who needs little or no supervision. He is motivated and very thorough."

Kidd would like to continue to train Soldiers so they may have their chance to win this honor upon his return to his unit, he said.

"I would like to eventually try other military schools and see how far I can go in my career," Kidd said.

Various sponsors supported the event. Among these sponsors were 4-n-One Restaurant, Army Air Force Exchange Service, AUSA, B&B Beverage; Anheuser Busch, Columbus Bank & Trust, Columbus Chamber of Commerce, Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, Dillards & Dillards Fine Jewelry, Express Boot Repair, First Union Bank, Freeway Ford, GEICO Insurance, Louie Louie's, McCoy Environmental Technician, Military Benefit Association, Names & Frames, Noncommissioned Officers' Association, Pioneer Military Lending, Ranger Joe's, Sam's Club, Sergeants Major Association, TIC Federal Credit Union, US Calvary, USPA & IRA and United Armed Forces Association.

The commander-in-chief of U.S. Southern Command(USSOCOM), Gen. Charles E. Wilhelm, was the guest speaker of a U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) graduation ceremony Thursday.

Wilhem addressed the 51 graduates of the Command and General Staff Course, the premier course offered at USARSA and is equivalent to the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Graduates included 23 U.S. students representing the Army and Air Force and 28 students representing 10 Latin American countries.

The course educates mid-level military officers to serve as commanders and principal staff officers in large military units. The academic content is oriented to the university and post-graduate level of instruction. A significant portion of the course emphasizes current roles and missions for professional militaries in democratic societies, as well as international standards for human rights.

Wilhelm has commanded USSOCOM since September 1997.

USSOCOM defense responsibilities include Central and South America, the Caribbean Sea and its island nation to include Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, the waters surrounding them and the Gulf of Mexico.

Fort Benning recognizes top instructors

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

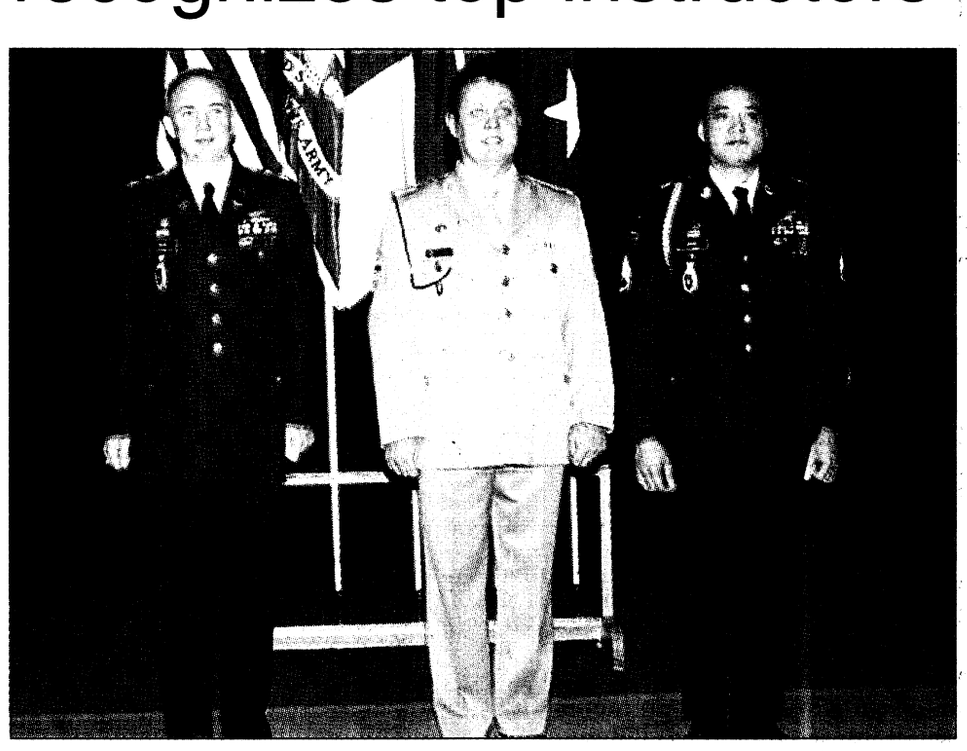
Three of Fort Benning's top instructors stood proudly in front of family, friends and students Dec. 9 in Infantry Hall when they were honored as the U.S. Infantry School's Instructors of the Year.

Capt. Frank W. Tate, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate (CATD), was honored as the top officer instructor, Sgt. Maj. David J. Allen, CATD, took the senior non-commissioned officer honor and Staff Sgt. Ramon M. Dang, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was recognized as the junior NCO Instructor of the Year.

Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst took the floor and commented on the prestige that surrounds those who are instructors at the Infantry School. He reminisced about his early days as an Infantry officer and how being an instructor will always be something he is most proud of.

"I have always admired and envied the instructors here at the Infantry School," Ernst said. "I liked being one and I consider myself still to be one. When it all boils down and someone asks me what it was I did during my career, one of the things that is always going to be at the forefront of what I'm most proud of, is that I was an instructor at the U.S. Army Infantry School."



Ernst thanked the instructors and their families for all that they do and said he is proud of what they have accomplished.

"You are what we are all about here at Fort Benning," Ernst said. "To you and what you've accomplished, what you stand for and the professionalism you represent, you make me very, very proud. Also to you and your families, thank-you for what you do for the Army."

Tate, who is an Aviation Instructor and branch representative, said he received the news that he won while teaching a group of colonels in the Pre-command Course.

"When I found out I won I was relieved," Tate said. "The board process was very rigorous and the competition was strong. I'm proud just to be mentioned with the other instructors that I was up against."

Tate said he believes one of the keys to being a good instructor is enthusiasm and a love for teaching.

"The key is to enjoy teaching," Tate said. "It's not just having the knowledge or proficiency and subject matter, but you have to actually enjoy standing up in front of students and seeing that light come on when they get what you're talking about."

After teaching American tactics and doctrine for two years at Fort Benning, perhaps the sweetest victory came to Allen, who is an Australian Army exchange representative and the first foreigner to be named Instructor of the Year.

Allen said he is enjoying himself at Fort Benning and was surprised to find out he had won. He said he's glad that he has been able to represent his unit and his Army so well.

"It feels good to win something like this because I'm representing my Army," Allen said. "Because of the faith they put in me by choosing me to come here, in some small way I feel I've sort of repaid that."

Allen said winning is not only a plus for his Army but it also reflects well on Fort Benning.

"It's good for me, it's good for my Army and it's also good for Fort Benning," Allen said. "I think it says a lot about Fort Benning that I was judged impartially and given a fair shot at winning."

He also added that he enjoys teaching and he plans to continually improve his teaching methods.

Just as Tate had received the news about winning Instructor of Year while he was teaching so did this year's junior NCO winner.

Dang, a master gunner instructor said he was excited when he found out he won. He said he knew he had to do it for both himself and the unit.

"It had been awhile since my battalion had won so I gave it all I had," Dang said. "It's definitely exciting. It feels good to not only win this for myself, but my unit as well," he added.

Dang said it takes a lot to be an instructor, but one of the biggest things is integrity.

"You definitely have to have good integrity to be an instructor," Ramon said. "You are going to have a lot of guys coming to you who you knew back as a private and think you are going to do them a favor. But it all comes down to being a good teacher and doing the right thing."

All honorees received Army Commendation Medals and USAIS plaques. They were also awarded gifts from the Chattahoochee Valley Chapters of the Association of the U.S. Army and Non-commissioned Officers Association.

Private helps keep peace in Bosnia

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

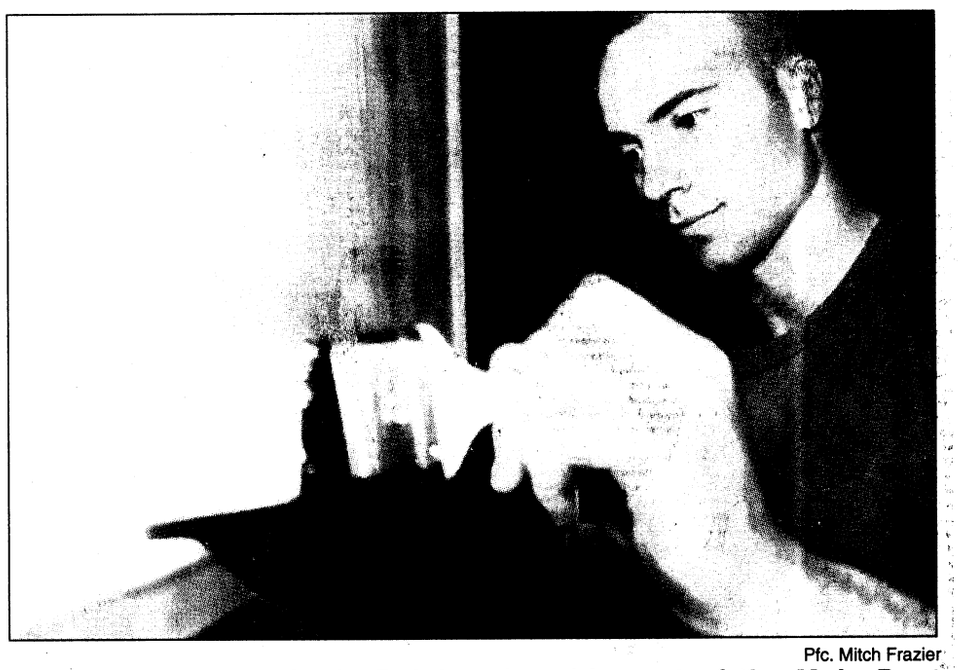
A 1st Cavalry Division Soldier on duty in Bosnia-Herzegovina kept a cool head to help keep the peace.

Pfc. Jarred H. King, a 20-year-old artillery observer, was confronted Dec. 2 by a group of excited Serbian militia who demanded that he surrender his weapon. The Serbs were angered by the arrest that day of one of their leaders, Gen. Radlislav Krstic, for alleged war crimes.

Displaying maturity beyond his years, King refused to comply with the Serbs' demands or respond to their threats, Army officials said. Seeing that they couldn't provoke King, the Serbs eventually lost interest.

King, who hails from Columbia, Miss., received the Army Achievement Medal for professional conduct the next day from Maj. Gen. Kevin P. Byrnes, the 1st Cavalry Division's commanding general who is in Bosnia with his troops.

King is a shy, "shucks that was nothing" type of Soldier, Byrnes said.



"He said he was never more scared in his life, but he knew he was a member of the greatest Army in world, and that if he just maintained his composure, acted professionally, he'd get through it. (Soldiers like King are) a tribute to the NCO leaders who mold them," Byrnes said.

King's judgement during the confrontation with the Serbs "was outstanding," according to the 1st Cavalry Division commander.

"(King) knew precisely how to handle himself," Byrnes said. "This is what (being) an American Soldier today is all about."

Word of King's conduct has reached senior Army leaders in the Pentagon.

"This is just the latest example of Soldiers on the ground making a difference," said Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer. "Pfc. King is a great representative of the high quality, disciplined young men and women we have in the Army today and a product of good training.

Candidates complete project

Officer Candidate Roy McIntyre
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Undetered by sore feet and tired legs, 30 officer candidates of OCS class 1-99 volunteered Saturday to repaint Fort Benning's Main Post Catholic Church.

Limping and sore from the previous day's 12-mile road march, the volunteers set up scaffolding, extension ladders and painting equipment, supplied by the church.

Awash in a veritable sea of dropclothes, the candidates began working to cover the walls and ceiling with a fresh coat of paint.

By lunch time, nearly the entire interior of the church had been painted and the candidates had accomplished some ground maintenance work as well.

When the much anticipated break time arrived, the church provided lunch for the 30 workers. Following lunch, the candidates finished painting, broke down the scaffolding and cleaned up. By 2 p.m., the last drop had been brushed on and the last pew replaced.

According to Officer Candidate Eduardo Larumbe, one of the event's organizers, the group worked well as a team to ensure the job was completed. — the OCS way. Standards — No Compromise!

IOBC class completes final training exercise

2nd Lt. Robert Campbell
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11 Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) completed its last field exercise during the week of Dec. 7-10.

During this culmination exercise, lieutenants conducted company level operations which included air assaults, company attack, movement to contact, ambushes and operation in urban terrain. This exercise was the first time during the 16-week course that lieutenants experienced how a platoon operates within a company.

The exercise began Monday morning with an air assault from Lawson Army Air Field to a landing zone five kilometers east of Rowan Hill. Co. B then conducted an attack on Rowan Hill, where other members of the company were set up to defend. After a successful attack, the chain of command implemented troop leading procedures to begin the next mission.

At 7 a.m. Tuesday morning, the company began a movement-to-contact mission throughout the day. Individual platoons received enemy contact and continued to push the enemy west towards McKenna Mout Site (Military Operations in Urban Terrain), the enemy's stronghold. After successful daylight operations, platoons established ambush positions along read networks in order to prevent the enemy from retreating towards their stronghold.

After platoons initiated their ambushes, the platoons moved to a pick-up zone around 2 a.m. and were airlifted out of the area to prepare for the last big push of the operation, a company attack on McKenna MOUT site. While the company chain of command prepared and issued plans for the attack, 1st Platoon, Company B prepared to defend McKenna MOUT site.

The morning of Dec. 10, the company conducted an air assault into a landing zone near the MOUT site. The attack began with a smoke preparation of the objective.

"The smoke is so thick that I can not tell where the attack is coming from," said 2nd Lt. Keith Burns, a member of 1st Platoon.

Little did Burns know, that Company B's first objective was the exact room he was defending, and he soon became one of the first casualties of the battle.

Both sides incurred "casualties" during this operation, but the enemy force was defeated after 50 minutes of fighting to gain control of four buildings.

The Infantry Officer Basic Course class of 6-98 has completed its final field exercise as students and is now ready to face the challenges that they will see in their assigned units.

Wood was required to evaluate Scott and make the proper medical decisions about how to treat him based on his condition.

Lifesaving Rangers keep others in fighting condition

The weapons they carry on their shoulders are what they use to keep themselves alive, but what they carry in their minds and on their backs is what they will use to keep their buddies alive. Through thick and thin, bullets and bombs, they stand in the midst of it all, making sure that if a Ranger is wounded, he will have the best possible chance of returning home again.

Of the 16 medics who are part of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, 11 are paramedic-qualified, all are Pre-Hospital Life Support Instructors, Basic Life Support Instructors and Advanced Cardiac Life Support qualified.

For them, there is no line between being a Ranger or being a medic. Their job requires them to be fluid in medical operations, but also to have the know-how to get down and dirty and fight beside the elite of the Army.

"Our focus and mission is to engage the enemy, we just happen to be medics," said Staff Sgt. Douglas Griffith, senior medic for Headquarters and Headquarters Company. "For us, our shooting skills and tactical knowledge is just as important as helping the wounded Ranger."

Griffith said the amount of real-life training the medics receive is one thing that sets them a-part from many other unit's medics.

When a Ranger medic heads to the field, on his Load Bearing Vest alone he has the capacity to treat one severely injured trauma patient. That doesn't include the other 60-to-80 pounds of gear that accompanies him on the missions. While he is with the Rangers, he will perform the Rangers mission and may also encounter a few of his own. It is not unusual for a fellow Ranger to be picked out to act as a casualty and placed directly on the objective. Outfitted with simulated wounds and physical impairments, the medic must treat the casualty as a real life or death situation. He is required to keep up with the mission as well as stabilize the casualty.

The training doesn't stop there. During down time, while a platoon waits to conduct an operation, a medic may be pulled aside to run through specially designed scenarios called trauma lanes. Once again the medic will evaluate and administer proper medical care to a mulaged or made up casualty.

Pfc. Robert Wood, platoon medic for Company C, said Ranger medics have a higher standard of training, which is always being incorporated into the missions.

"It's a continual process," Wood said. "It is never-ending. There is always something for us to do or train for."

Wood said being a medic is a lot of work, but worthwhile when he helps make a difference.

"I like taking care of the guys," Wood said. "Once you've been around for a while and they start calling you Doc, then you know they're comfortable with you and trust you. They know you're there to take care of them."

Griffith said both the combat and medical training the medics receive on a day-to-day basis is among the best in the Army.

"We are getting the best of both worlds," Griffith said. "Not only do we get to practice with our M-4s and M-9s or get to shoot on a night range using our Night Vision Goggles, but we are also receiving the best medical training there is."

To help maximize their training the medics use six different dummy body parts and one complete dummy, called Terry Trauma, to do everything from artificial resuscitation to setting up an Intravenous line (IV).

The Ranger medics also use some of the newest advances in medical technology as well as develop and help test this technology. The medics are currently helping develop a critical care unit that attaches to the standard litter. The unit will include oxygen, a vital signs monitor and a respirator all incorporated into a smaller package.

According to Spc. Nathan Wulf, Medical Training and Operations NCO, Ranger medics are among the best in the Army. Wulf attributes this to the higher level of training and experience they receive.

"I'd say hands down Ranger medics are on the same level with some of the best DoD medics out there," Wulf said. "Ranger medics incorporate a great amount of training that employs a lot of the Advanced Trauma Life Support (ATLS) techniques into a field environment."

He said anytime a medic learns something new, everything is done to help make that a part of the training.

"We'll learn something new and sit around and discuss it and try to figure out how we are going to incorporate that into our training," Wulf said. "I suppose that's one of the biggest differences between the Rangers and anyone else."

Along with the standard missions and combat operations the medics must also be fully trained and prepared to address the medical issues of infant patients to elderly patients.

"If our mission requires us to go into a foreign country and extract American citizens, then it is our duty to provide medical coverage regardless of whether they are an infant or 70-years old," Griffith said. "It definitely broadens the spectrum of medical care for us and causes us to be a lot sharper. It's easy to just concentrate on healthy males between the ages of 18 and 20-years old, but when you get into geriatrics you are going to need different knowledge and equipment."

With everything the Ranger medics do, most would probably assume it ends there — but it doesn't. Once everything is said and done, it is still the medics responsibility to ensure the entire battalion is trained to incorporate basic life saving techniques into even the most routine missions. This is achieved by training the Rangers with trauma lanes and Combat Life Saver courses.

From the very moment the Rangers wake up, right down to the last mission of the day, the medics are there, both conducting the missions and training to be the best tactical medical care givers in the Army.

"When and if there is a real world situation, the medics are going to be down range with the bullets flying over head," Wulf said. "Sure the main assaulting force will be a platoon of Rangers, but right with them is going to be that medic who's ready to do what he has to do."

Appalachian journey

Candidates test their mountain skills

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

CAMP FRANK D. MERRILL, Ga. — Thousands of travelers annually flock to the rolling foothills here to enjoy the slow-paced lifestyle that can only be found courtesy of Mother Nature and the nearby Appalachian Mountains, but for the approximately 2,500 Ranger candidates who make their way through here every year, this is no relaxing vacation paradise.

This is U.S. Army Ranger School, mountain phase, and the next 21 days will be unlike any they have experienced prior to their stay here.

"This is where the Ranger candidates are really put to the test," said Ranger Instructor Sgt. 1st Class James J. Ryan, 5th Ranger Training Battalion (RTB). "These candidates have already experienced the first phase of Ranger school at Fort Benning. They are tired, hungry and now they have to do something they have never done before — learn to fight and win in a mountainous environment."

Learning to fight and win is stressed throughout this exercise. The longest phase of the 61-day adventure that will take candidates across three states. They will venture through swamps, mountains, and forests to earn the right to wear the black beret, signifying Army's elite warrior, the Ranger.

"From day one, we teach the candidates to operate in a mountainous environment," said 5th RTB Commander, Lt. Col. Alfred E. Dochnal. "It is all part of their introduction to Camp Merrill and the Ranger Mountaineering Course."

That introduction drops candidates four hours from Camp Merrill via helicopter in part of a scenario that Dochnal said simulates the entrance of Rangers into a foreign country.

"The candidates face OPFOR (opposition forces) throughout the scenario and the 21-day mountain phase that are similar to those they would see in a real-world mission," he said.

"They are always there," said Ranger Candidate, 2nd Lt. Corbett F. McCallum, as he spoke in disbelief about the OPFOR and their ability to navigate the difficult mountainous terrain. "From the first day drop to the last mountain patrol, they were always there challenging our skills and leadership."

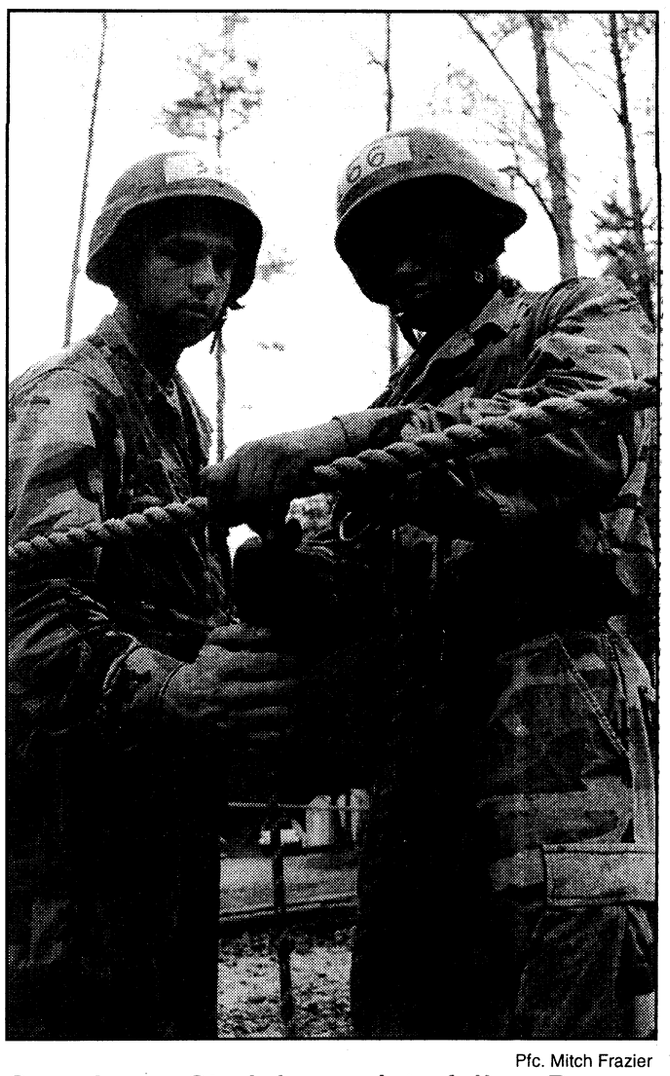
Once arriving in camp, candidates are briefed by the 5th RTB cadre and are evaluated on their infiltration techniques. They are evaluated medically to ensure that they are still able to continue through the course that will probably force them farther into sleep deprivation and longing for the end of the aches and pains of living in the field.

"This is where the wheel meets the road," Ryan said. "The candidates know that once they make it through here they will make it through Florida (swamp phase) and become one of the Rangers."

Making it through can be difficult for students both mentally and physically as in any Army school. According to Ranger candidate, Sgt 1st Class Thomas E. Sanchez, who began mountaineering instruction earlier this month, the stresses here are unlike any other.

"We are starting to run on empty," he said. "The mountainous terrain is difficult and adds a challenge that we have never faced before."

Those effects continue as Soldiers endure through the 21-day phase that will conclude with a graded field training exercise that takes the soon-to-be-Rangers through combat mountain patrols, rappelling and attempts at avoiding the ever-present OPFOR.



"By the end of the training cycle, these Soldiers are smarter and more combat-ready than they have ever been," said Master Sgt. Gregory S. Baker, Ranger instructor, 5th RTB. "We have tested them in not only climbing the mountain, but in fighting in this challenging terrain as well."

"When the Soldiers leave Camp Merrill, they are ready to fight and win in any theater that offers the challenge of mountainous terrain," Baker said.

Once these warriors complete their training here, these candidates are nearing completion of the 61-day trek that will make them Ranger-qualified.

"We know it's close," said one student about the nearing the grand finale of Ranger school. "But we never look to far ahead. You never know what could happen tomorrow."

Always alert. Always ready and never looking ahead too far ahead. This is instilled in the candidates from their first day here and serves as a foundation to build upon as they continue through training and eventually become one of the elite, a U.S. Army Ranger.

Tot Town

Center offers fun and learning for 'little bodies'

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Little bodies moving swiftly from one activity to another and the sound of laughter echoing from rooms is a daily event at the Tot Town Child Development Center (Tot Town).

The center was established more than 40 years ago by the Daughters of the United States Army (DUSA), as a service project to the community. With DUSA's retirement in 1995, Tot Town became part of the Fort Benning Child Development Services Program and continues to provide hourly and full-time day care.

"Tot Town is aimed at serving the needs of civilian and military members of the Fort Benning community by providing a safe, fun and educational place for their children," said Leda Brown, director of Tot Town. "Soldiers and families are able to complete their missions without worrying about their children."

The center is accredited by the National Academy of Early Childhood Programs and became re-accredited Monday for another three years. This means that Tot Town provides age appropriate activities for all ages and developmental levels, Brown added.

Along with receiving accreditation, staff development and training is a crucial factor in the quality of daycare offered at Fort Benning. Program assistants (caregivers) are in study programs designed to help them in encouraging the children to develop physically, socially, cognitively, communicatively and creatively.

"Military daycares are a cut above the rest", Brown said. "We offer a professional staff who receives more training then off-post centers, lower child-to-staff ratios and a trainer on site."

According to Brown, the trainer keeps track of each staff member's training modules, tests and ensures the staff is able to apply what they have learned with the children. Staff members complete 34 hours of training during their first 18 months and 24 training hours during each additional year.

Tracey Herbin, family member who uses the hourly program at Tot Town, said she was completely impressed with the staff on one of her visits to the center.

"The staff was sitting with the children at lunch and having conversations with them all, as if they were grown," Herbin said. "The children enjoy the staff members and they treat the children with respect."

Jean Andrews, employed at Tot Town for the last 13 years, works because she thoroughly enjoys being a caregiver for babies.

"I have always loved working with babies because babies and I get along great," Andrews said. "Taking care of small children is a big responsibility but very rewarding."

A special children's New Years Eve party will be held Dec. 31 from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. at a flat rate of $17 for children six weeks to 12-years-old.

"The kids had a blast last year, making their own noise makers, party hats and participating in many activities offered throughout the night," Brown said. "This is an exciting, special program that is a lot of fun for the children."

Tot town provides hourly care for more than 2,000 enrolled children and currently has full time slots available for any family seeking childcare. For information regarding enrollment, registration, availability or special programs call 689-8698 or 689-8772.

INVENTORS

Project gives students chance to shine

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Move over Thomas Edison, there's a new batch of inventors in town and they are proving that some pretty big ideas can come from the young as well as the old.

The inventors are third-graders from White Elementary School who were tasked to solve a problem by inventing something new to help make life easier. The students threw on their thinking caps and ended up hauling in more than 40 different inventions.

The children unveiled their creations at school Dec. 11, and both faculty and fellow students got the chance to see the third-grader's creativity shine.

"I knew the inventions were going to be good, but when the children started bringing them in, I was overjoyed," said third-grade teacher Cynthia K. Hill. "I couldn't believe how incredible the inventions were, and they were all so different. Not one of the kids had the same idea."

Hill said both her class and another third-grade class were assigned the project and given four weeks to complete it. After it was all said and done, everything from a recycled bird house and lollipop saver to a beauty organizer and medicine cookies were part of the invention collection.

For Clara Kirk, her creativeness was inspired by her two cats. Kirk's Cat-O-Matic helps cat owners to be stress free when they go out of town. A simple box that has brushes attached to the opening allows furry critters to groom themselves if need be.

"This invention is great for if you want to go on a vacation and you can't get anyone to come and brush your cat," Kirk said. "The cat could just comb itself!"

Steven Honore's invention consisted of a simple piece of decorated styrofoam and a plastic cup, but has a more than simple purpose.

His lollipop saver guarantee's "to keep all those lollipops that you end up throwing away, nice and juicy for another day."

"I got the idea because my mom buys lots of lollipops and I never get to finish them," Honore´ said. "I always put them on the table and they end up getting dog hair on them and it's really gross. This keeps them safe so I can eat them later."

According to Hill, the idea for the science project evolved from a new program called Literature Place. The program is divided into units and the one that her class had been concentrating on was problem solving. The class read stories about problem solving and one in particular about a girl the students age who invented something that was marketed in real life. They discussed ideas for inventions and talked about how famous scientists and inventors came up with their ideas.

Hill said, she assigned the project as a science assignment and tied it in with the literature program.

"We talked about the process of coming up with an idea and trying it out," Hill said. "We also talked about how your first idea may not always work and you may have to start all over or take an idea and change it around."

Hill said the children were required to do research and keep a log detailing the progression of their projects. She said parents were allowed to help, but the bulk of the work had to be done by the students.

Hill mentioned that almost every child has it in them to create something new and interesting.

"I think children are surprised at what they can do when they actually sit down and let their creativity take over," Hill said. "This was an excellent project because the children did just that."

The seventh-grade chorus from Faith Middle School performs a song during the musical, December in Our Town, Dec. 10 and Dec. 11 at Faith.

Faith drama students joined the seventh and eighth grade choirs and the beginning and advanced bands performed a variety songs in celebration of the upcoming holidays. The musical, written by Roger Emerson, takes place in a small town and demonstrates the many different ways in which people of different cultures and religions celebrate the holidays. More than 100 students participated in the musical celebration.

Capt. Paula Harrison
Legal Assistance Division

Q. I recently bought a computer, and I love surfing the Internet. I have noticed that there are advertisements to buy things online. I might buy some of my Christmas presents online, but I want to know if that is a safe thing to do.

A. The Internet can be a great buying tool for consumers. With a click of a mouse, you can buy all kinds of merchandise, at any time of the day or night. Sometimes you can find real bargains. However, precautions are necessary to secure your money and personal information.

First, make sure you use a secure browser. A browser is the software you use to navigate the Internet. Your computer probably came with a browser already installed. The browser that you use should comply with industry security standards, such as Secure Sockets Layer (SSL) or Secure Electronic Transaction (SET). These methods encrypt or scramble the purchase information you send over the Internet.

Second, shop with companies that are familiar to you. Anyone can advertise merchandise online. If you want to buy from a merchant that you are unfamiliar with, ask them to mail you a catalog and documentation of their refund and return policy.

Third, if you pay by credit card, you receive certain protections. For instance, you are protected under the Fair Credit Billing Act. You can dispute charges under certain circumstances and temporarily withhold payment while it is being investigated. Notice of these billing rights should be on your credit card bill. Also, consumers are usually held responsible for only $50 for the unauthorized use of their credit card.

Another law that offers protection for consumers is the federal Mail or Telephone Order Merchandise Rule, and it covers orders made over the Internet. This means that merchandise must be delivered within 30 days, unless stated otherwise. If there are delays the company must notify you.

Finally, the issue of privacy on the Internet deserves some special attention. Make sure you keep your password private. It is best to make your password a mix of numbers, letters and symbols. Also, do not disclose personal information on the Internet, such as your address, telephone number, Social Security number or e-mail address unless you know who is collecting the information and why they are collecting it and how it is being used.

You should also check privacy policies. Many times this is posted on a company's Web site. The policy should disclose what information is being collected and how that information is being used. If you can not find an explanation of the policy, send an e-mail or written message requesting that the policy be posted.

Many companies will give you a choice about how your personal information is used. These companies let you "opt-out" of having personal information used or shared with other companies. This information should be contained in the privacy policy. Some additional resources are listed below:

•Call For Action, Inc. offers information on consumer protection and mediation services at www.callforaction.org and 5272 River Road, Suite 300, Bethesda, Md, 20816; (301) 657-8260.

•The Direct Marketing Association is a trade association of various companies involved in direct and database marketing. The Direct Marketing Association's Mail Order Action Line can act as an intermediary between consumers and companies to resolve disputes. See consumer@the-dma.org, or write to: 1111 19th Street, NW, Suite 1100, Washington, D.C. 20036.

•The Federal Trade Commission's Bureau of Consumer Protection can be contacted for helpful consumer protection information on a variety of topics, or to file a complaint against a particular company at : Consumer Resource Center, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C. 20580; (202) FTC-HELP or TDD: (202)326-2502.

If you have any further questions about your rights as a consumer on the Internet, make and appointment to speak with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Lice transmitted by prolonged head-to-head contact

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Lice move slowly and need body heat to survive. They are most commonly found at the scalp and can be transmitted by prolonged head-to-head contact. Head contact of children during play is most frequent source of infestation. Lice can survive off a human host for up to 48 hours.

The most frequently affected are girls aged seven to 12. Any person who has had close contact with an infested person can become infested.

The infested person will often have no symptoms for several weeks because the eggs the female louse lays take seven to 10 days to hatch. The most common location for laying the eggs is at the back of the scalp. These eggs are called "nits" and are stuck to the hair shaft with a substance very much like glue. Because of this, the most important factor in preventing the spread of lice is the use of a fine-toothed comb to remove nits from the hair before they have a chance to hatch. Items such as the electric "Robi" comb are designed to kill lice with electricity but do not remove nits.

Cleaning contaminated items such as sheets, towels, combs, headphones, upholstery and clothing is important. Twenty minutes in the dryer and a dishwasher both provide effective options for killing lice on items.

Chemical insecticides are applied to kill lice. Permethrin (Nix, Elimite) is safer than lindane (Kwell) for infants, young children and pregnant women. Lindane is more easily absorbed into the body and is more likely to be toxic. No chemical is completely effective because either the lice are resistant to the drug or because the nits have not been completely removed through combing.

After treatment, the area should be carefully checked daily for cure. The areas should be retreated in 7-10 days if not cured.

Hints help keep children safe

Patrice Cathright
Community Health Nursing

The holidays are here and people have begun purchasing gifts for children. Before people venture out to buy Christmas toys, one should make sure they are prepared to make wise choices to keep children safe.

The average family spends a sizable portion of their budget on Christmas toys. Do not let clever advertising be the basis for a choice. The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) warns gift givers to keep safety in mind when choosing toys for young children. In 1996, CPSC received reports of 13 toy related deaths and more than 140,000 children who were treated in hospital emergency rooms for toy related injuries.

There are some helpful hints to help consumers choose appropriate toys this holiday season and all year round.

•Be a label reader. Look for labels that give age recommendations and use them.

•Always remember that toys for older siblings may pose a hazard for younger sisters or brothers.

•Do not purchase electric toys with heating elements for children under eight.

•All children under eight should avoid toys with sharp edges and points.

•Toys and toy safety should go hand in hand. For instance, if someone buys a bike, give a helmet with instructions to always use it when riding.

•Test toys for other potential hazards such as loud sound effects, exposed electrical parts or propelled objects such as darts.

•Always supervise children during play time.

•Inspect toys regularly to make sure they still meet safety standards.

•Store toys in a safe place and insist children do so always. This will also help to avoid a "parent accident".

Toy safety is a year-round job. It is worth it to protect children from injury or death.

Parents mistakenly administer wrong dosages

Mark S. Mandell
Consumer News

While it was safety concerns that led to child-proof caps on medicine bottles, it turns out that it's sometimes parents who unwittingly present a hazard when dispensing doses to children.

A recent study involving 100 caregivers who brought children to the Emergency Department of Egleston Children's Hospital in Atlanta proves this fact. When asked in a mock trial to choose the correct child-dosage of the over-the-counter medication acetaminophen (Tylenol) and measure it correctly, only 30 percent succeeded.

The ramifications of such unawareness are significant in light of the fact that more than 17 million children each year are taken to emergency rooms with fever-related illnesses.

The researchers found that parents were taking their children to the emergency room because they could not get their children's fevers to come down — not a surprising fact considering the study's result. Once the proper dose of acetaminophen was administered, the children's fevers usually would subside.

Why is it that parents have such difficult administering the proper dosages of over-the-counter children's medicines?

There are a number of major concerns. For one, the dosages of most medicines are based on the child's weight — something, it appears, most parents really don't know. What's more, most parents don't even read the labels on their children's medicines.

Child health specialists also note that measuring devices for liquid medicines can be confusing for parents because they're not uniformly sized. While a medicine label may call call for dispensation by a standard-sized teaspoon, many parents mistakenly measure medicines with household teaspoons, which vary in size, or even with tablespoons.

According to Dr. Harold Simon, a physician involved in the Egleston study, "a teaspoon out of your kitchen drawer ranges anywhere from 4 to 6 cc's," while physicians consider a standard teaspoon 5 cc's.

But parents aren't solely to blame for improper dosing.

Drug makers are being scrutinized for using tiny print and hard-to-understand wording. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is currently reviewing the labeling and dosing instructions for children's pain and fever medications.

FDA reviews paint a sobering picture of the prevalence of improper dosing.

The FDA found that in 1996, the American Association of Poison Control Centers reported 31, 499 cases of overexposure to acetaminophen in children under age six.

But child-care specialists also note that over-the-counter medication is generally safe even if a dose or two is mishandled and that acetaminophen is one of the safest medications available. In addition, when parents err, they most often do so on the side of caution. In the Egleston study, the vast majority of the caregivers measured too little rather than too much medicine.

"Read the fine print and measure our children's medicine accurately," the study warned. "It is essential in ensuring the child's safety."

Buying groceries with card become quicker

Tim Ford
Army News Service

Buying groceries with a credit card at the commissary is becoming just as quick and reliable as at commercial stores.

The Defense Commissary Agency and Defense Information Systems Agency developed a new system called the Direct Commercial Data Line Backup. More than 20 stores use it. All stateside commissaries should be connected by June 1999 and overseas commissaries by July 1999.

Most commissaries transmit credit card transactions over the information system agency's nonwarfighter data network. Commissaries are among that network's larger customers.

"Our primary network at times can't respond within the seconds required to complete a commercial credit card transaction," said commissary agency spokeswoman Rose Parkes. "That led to credit card downtimes and customer waits of up to several minutes — an eternity in the fast-paced world of commissary checkouts."

The two defense agencies tested backups and chose the one that worked best, she said. Deployment began after testing showed insignificant downtimes at six commissaries that had previously reported the most problems.

"This really is a win-win solution," Parkes said. "Our customers get commercial quality credit card support, and DeCA continues to support an important part of our national defense communications infrastructure."

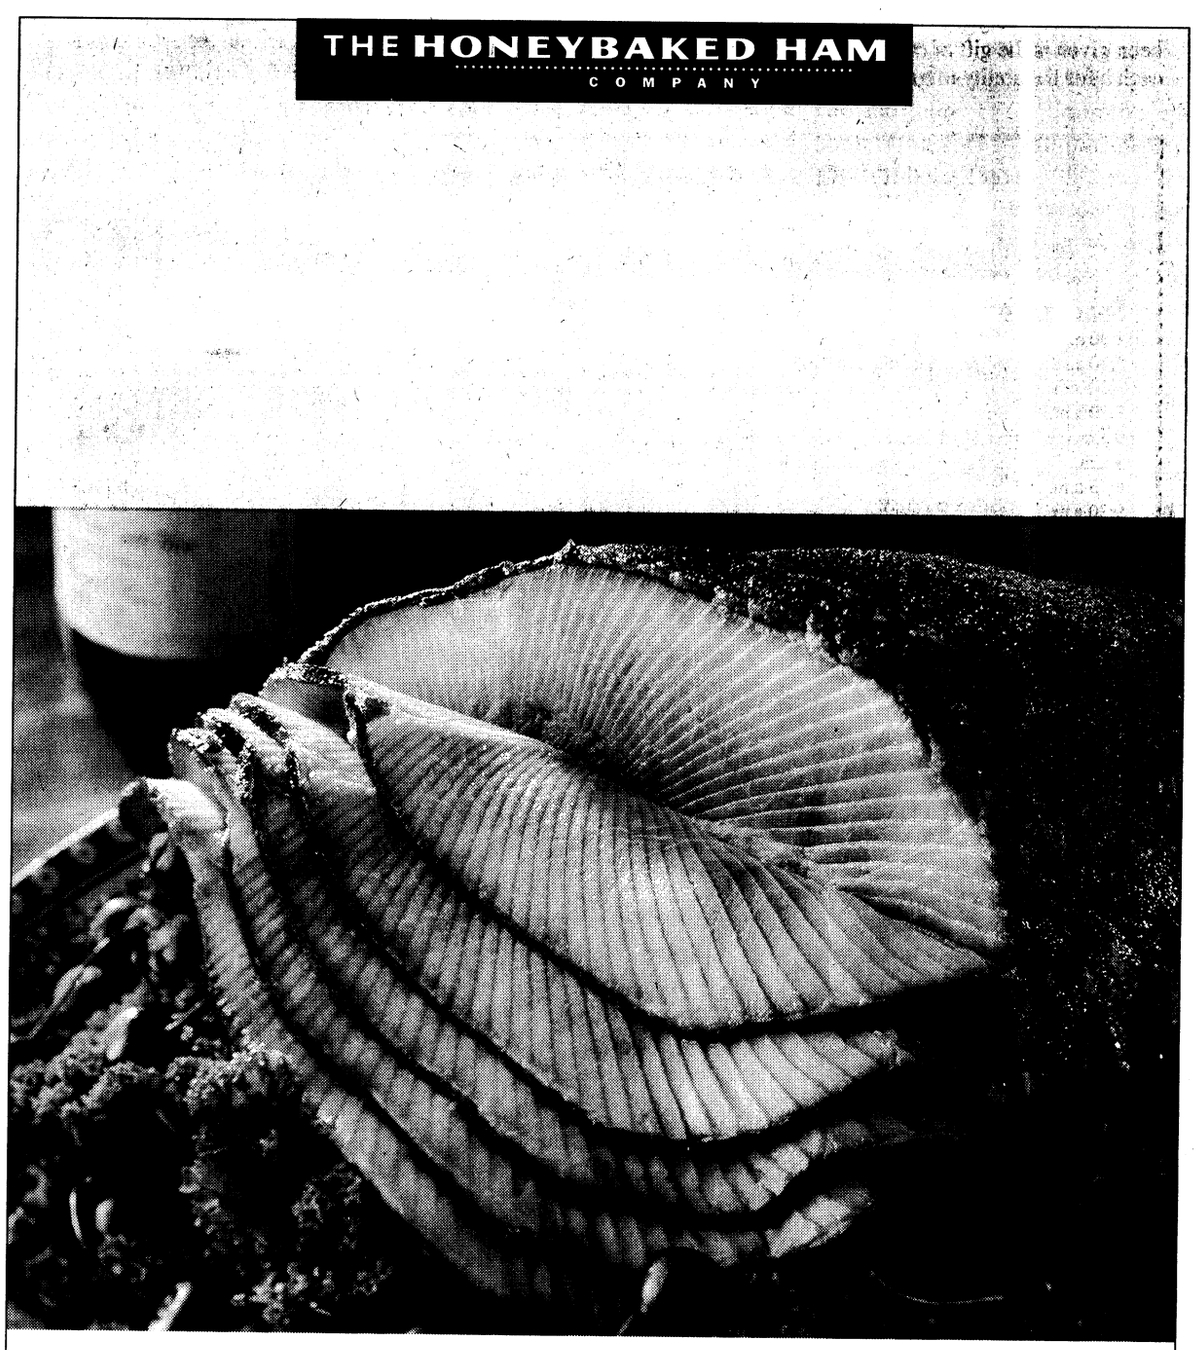
TRICARE tests senior health care access

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

SAN ANTONIO, Texas — A test here to see if military hospitals can deliver cost-effective health care to thousands of retirees over age 65 has netted some 10,000 participants.



"We're about two months into TRICARE Senior Prime, which allows us to get away from space-available care to space-required care for our elderly patients," said Army Dr. (Brig. Gen.) Harold Timboe, commander of Brooke Army Medical Center. This ensures better access to health care for a large segment of the Brooke patient population, he said. "The ones who signed up now have a designated primary care manager and guaranteed access to care."

In the past, military hospitals couldn't afford to staff for or treat senior retirees. Medicare funds the seniors' health care and, by law, couldn't reimburse the military's expenses.

The Health Care Finance Administration, the federal agency that administers Medicare, will reimburse Senior Prime demonstration sites for care they provide Medicare-eligible retirees. Under the plan, reimbursements to DoD can't diminish the already strained Medicare Trust Fund, and participating DoD hospitals must spend their own money before Medicare reimbursement kicks in.

Brooke and its cross-town Air Force partner, Wilford Hall Medical Center, are co-participants in the Senior Prime test. The demonstration also has begun, or will shortly, at Keesler Air Force Base, Miss.; Fort Sill, Okla.; Sheppard Air Force Base, Texas; Fort Carson, Colo.; Air Force Academy, Colo.; Naval Medical Center San Diego; and Dover Air Force Base, Del.

If the test is successful, the program is expected to eventually become available to military retirees everywhere.

Holidays time to remember faith

Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan
Main Post Catholic Chapel

Just thinking about the Christmas holiday season creates an excitement and warmth in our hearts. It seems there is magic in this season that touches countless hearts year after year. Catching a Christmas carol on the radio, seeing images of Santa Claus, the sight of blinking holiday lights or the taste of a favorite holiday food have a power about them that help knit together the scattered pieces of our lives and to sooth our wounds.

reflections

For Christian people, this season is about God's faith in us. The tradition of our protestant neighbors, for example, places great emphasis on the role of faith in bringing salvation to the believer. This season represents the mystery of God's belief in us.

Yes, God so believed in us, our fortune and our potential that he chose to send his son to be one of us. God, the great master of all the universe, chose to send his son as a child, born in a humble stable and laid upon the straw of a manger in Bethlehem. He sent his son to show the way to a kingdom of peace and justice.

Sometimes we wonder if God has forgotten us as we look around us in the world. We see the tragedies of war, genocide, hatred, civil disturbances, sweeping poverty and famine. We see the tragedy of ethnic strife tearing nations apart in the Balkans and in Africa. Two thousand years after he came to bring us peace, we seem to have turned a deaf ear to the compliment of his faith. We almost seem to be determined to prove him wrong.

He is persistent; he never relents. God sends us this holy season each year to gently yet powerfully remind us of his faith in us and what we can be. For the magic of this season is revealed through our motion out of ourselves in giving to others. For whenever we set aside our own self concern and try to touch the heart of another in love, a spark of the divine is kindled here upon this earth. God becomes man in us again — Emmanuel. With millions of those sparks igniting together during this season, the warm glow of God's light illuminates our world again, brightly and warmly. Christmas is not just a memory of God's coming in past history, but an actual representation of that miraculous event in our own place and time. God is with us again today.

God has not forgotten us. The spark of his goodness lives on in our hearts. When we open those hearts each year with the combined light, what we share warms us all, and once again reminds us of the miracle of his trust in us. Some day, we will get it right and the light of this season will burn brightly throughout the year. He will lead us to see that his faith in us is not misplaced.

Let us find comfort in the miracle of this season and his good news that the kingdom of God is at hand.

Trust tops list of Christmas gifts

Chaplain (Capt.) Mark Diddle
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment

The Christmas season is upon us, and our thoughts have turned to Christmas trees, decorations, travel and, of course, presents. Soon it will be Christmas morning. Everyone will run into the room filled with presents that were placed the night before. The brightest, prettiest or the biggest package must contain the best present for Christmas. That present will be held for last when the moment when it is opened can be savored.

What would you consider to be the greatest gift that you have ever received? Some may remember that cherished baby doll that was your constant companion and confident. Others may remember getting a shiny red bicycle as a child. Each of us could probably tell our own story about our most treasured gift.

One treasured gift we have all been given is the gift of trust. We each have the ability to trust others and ourselves.

Trust seems to come naturally to a child. Anyone watching the play between a parent and a child can see the very deep level of trust. Have you ever seen a child stand on a step or a stool and launch themselves off into the arms of their parents? They have no worry or doubt that they will be caught. It does not appear that a small child could have learned this trust so fast and so deep, yet there it is there and it is demonstrated over and over. Trust really seems to be a gift that is given.

As we grow up, though, things seem to change. Someone breaks our trust and decay our willingness to trust others. Sometimes we lose trust because we realize we cannot even trust ourselves like we thought.

We each become responsible for either building up someone's trust or nibbling away at it. New recruits enter the military trusting that their cadre will train them to perform their duties . At home, we place trust in our families and neighbors for support. We have the ability to defend the gift of trust we have received. The lack of trust for others or ourselves also becomes a lack of trust in God. Ultimately, our trust belongs in God who alone is completely trustworthy. The scriptures are filled with passages encouraging us to place our trust with him as in Psalm 31:14, "But as for me, I trust in Thee, O Lord, I say, Thou art my God."

Community teams up for Jog

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers and civilians teamed up Dec. 10, taking to the streets of Fort Benning to get a running start on the hectic holiday season with the third annual running of the Jingle Bell Jog.

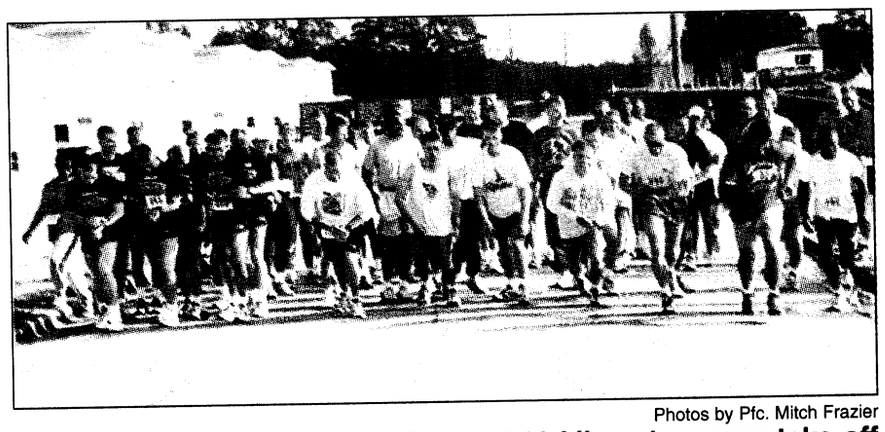
Nearly 60 runners turned out for the five-kilometer and 10-kilometer races that began near 36th Engineer Group Headquarters and took participants by Lawson Army Airfield and back to the start line.

The event, organized by the 13th Corps Support Battalion (CSB), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) was successful in raising more than $150 for the Fort Benning charity, Santa's Castle, but had hoped to log more participants in the festive fun-run.

"We were pleased with the over-all turnout of participants," said 1st Lt. Ronnard Green, 13th CSB executive officer. "But we really were hoping for more units to allow their personnel to take part in the competition."

According to Green, the race was held on a weekend in prior years, but race organizers felt that by hosting the race on a weekday, more military members would be available to participate in the annual event.

"We welcome the civilian participation we have had," Green said. "This year, we were just trying something different to get some more military members to participate."



The 13th CSB plans to hold the race again next year; however, no plans have yet been made on the day or date of the event.

This years Jingle Jog winners are listed below.

Association names shooter of year

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

An international rifle shooter with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit has been named Shooter of the Year. Thomas A. Tamas was named the 1998 Army Marksmanship Unit Association Shooter of the Year.

The Columbus native won the Gold Medal in the Prone Match at the World Cup Final in Zurich, Switzerland, Oct. 16. Tamas, a bona fide world champion, got to the World Cup Final by winning the Gold Medal in the 50-Meter Free Rifle Prone Championship (English Match) and tying the world record at the World Shooting Championships in Barcelona, Spain, in July.

Besides earning the title of World Champion, the 33-year-old also earned an Olympic quota slot for the U.S. in the 2000 Olympics. Tamas was also a member of the three-man U.S. Shooting Team that won the Gold Medal in the Prone 50-Meter World Team Championship. There were 100 countries and 1,800 shooters competing in the World Championships.

Raised in Columbus, Tamas joined the Army in 1986. He served with the Marksmanship Unit for seven years and then was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 506th Infantry Regiment in Korea before returning to Fort Benning.

Tamas, who started shooting in 1978 with the Fort Benning Junior Rifle Team, has numerous marksmanship accomplishments. Besides being a 1992 Olympian, he was a 1997 Championship of the Americas and World Military Championships Team Member and the 1997 300-Meter Free Rifle Prone National Champion. He was a 1995 Pan American Games Gold Medalist as well as the 50-Meter Free Rifle Prone National Champion and Prone and Three-Position Metallic Aggregate National Champion.

In 1991, he was a four-time Gold Medal winner and Bronze Medal winner at the Pan American Games. He won a Gold Medal and set a national record in 300-Meter Prone in Switzerland and won Silver and Bronze Medals at the World Shooting Championships in 1990.

Experts offer advice for choosing handguns

Feature Outdoors

With a growing number of states adopting legislation that allows citizens to carry concealed weapons, more people are enrolling in firearm training and safety classes.

While the crime prevention benefits of concealed carry permits is widely debated, one fact is clear: more people than ever before now know how to safely handle firearms and they have discovered the sport of recreational shooting.

Selecting a handgun that's right for you, whether it's for personal protection or to take to the range on weekends, requires some time and consideration.

Experts suggest you consider these basic questions before visiting a dealer:

•What is the primary intended use of the handgun? For personal protection and concealed carry? Home security and an occasional trip to the local range? Small or large game hunting?

•What type of handgun is most comfortable? Revolvers have long been a popular choice with recreational shooters because they are simple to operate, highly reliable and relatively inexpensive. Pistols gained acceptance as law enforcement agencies transitioned from revolvers to pistols and recreational shooters followed suit, discovering along the way that quality crafted pistols are reliable and fun to shoot.

•What is the best caliber?

The caliber, or diameter of the bullet, should fit your primary intended use. Recreational shooters who will be putting a lot of rounds down range should consider ammunition cost and availability of reloading components. Hunters will want to match the caliber to the game they intend to pursue.

Ammunition manufacturers have developed defense rounds for most popular handgun calibers and your local dealer should be able to recommend several options to fit your needs. One of America's favorite calibers is the venerable .45 ACP. This rugged yet affordable pistol packs a lot of value into a compact package.

Regardless of the type or caliber of gun you choose, experts recommend that you:

•Deal with a knowledgeable, reputable retailer.

•Purchase a high-quality handgun that is backed by a lifetime service policy to ensure years of safe, reliable service.

•Familiarize yourself with applicable local and state laws.

•Store your handgun securely and secure the ammunition separately.

Georgia has a concealed carry law; however, Fort Benning is a federal installation and does not honor the concealed carry permit.

For more information on the concealed carry law, contact the local police.

Shooter aims for Olympic Gold

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shotgun shooter James Todd Graves is working toward the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia.

Shotgun shooter James Todd Graves of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) has been to the Olympics twice, but the coveted Gold Medal has eluded him. Now, Graves is focusing on not only going to the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia, but also winning it all for the United States.

"In 1992, I was proud to be the first shooter ever to make the Olympic Team in Trap and Skeet. Although I didn't win, I was overwhelmed with pride to be at that level," Graves said. "In 1996, I was excited to shoot on my home turf at the Atlanta Games in Atlanta; it was a learning experience that will definitely help me in 2000."

Graves started shooting when he was just a small boy growing up in Laurel, Miss., with his father, James and mother, Tommie. One day when he was 10 years old, he and his father saw a group of people shooting a trap tournament in a field near their home. At his youngster's request, Mr. Graves let little Todd shoot in the match. When the little boy took third place, little did he know it would start him in a career that would make him a two-time Olympian, an international Gold-Medal winner and the 1997 Army and USA Shooting Athlete of the Year. (USA Shooting is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.)

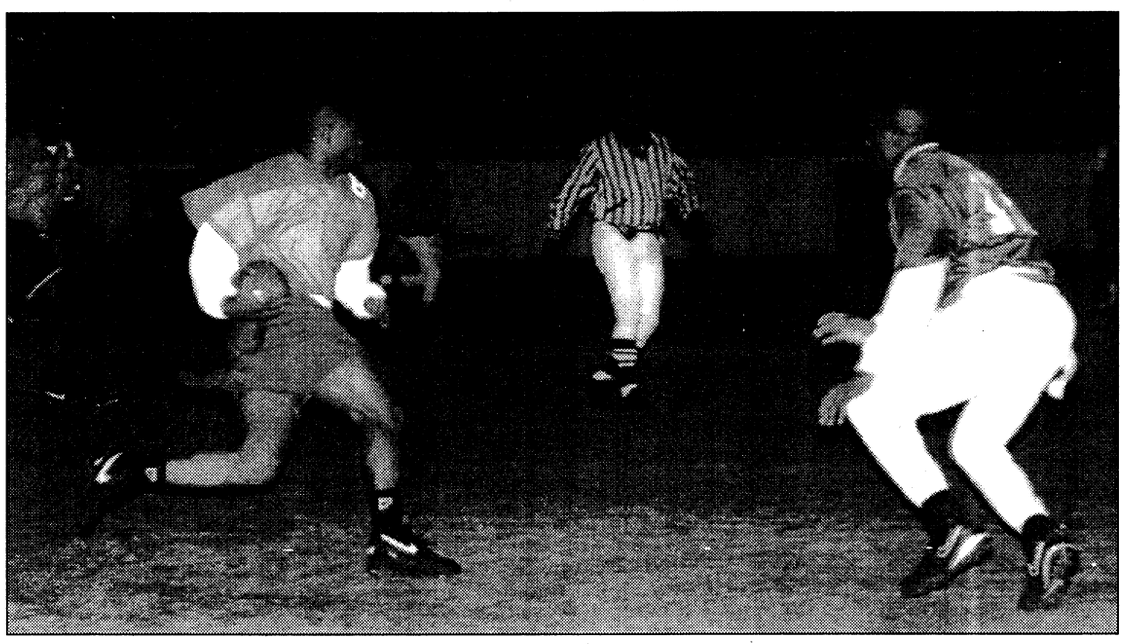
Graves went on to coach trap shooting and had an off-shore rigger job after he graduated from West Jones High School of Laurel in 1982. Because of his shooting ability, he made a name for himself in the shotgun shooting community. After he beat one of the USAMU shooters at his father's gun club, he was approached by the marksmanship unit about joining the Army. One day, he missed the boat to his off-shore rigger job. He decided it was fate and left his rigger's position behind to join the Army's elite shooting team.

USAMU shotgun shooter Theresa E. DeWitt, who was the 1996 Armed Forces Female Athlete of the Year and a 1996 Olympian in double trap, said that she is amazed that Graves shoots all three Olympic shotgun sports — skeet, trap and double trap — and has won medals in all three.

"I can't imagine having to shoot all three well," DeWitt said. "It's draining enough to put 100 percent into one sport. But when you have to put forth 300 percent effort for three sports, that's an incredible achievement."

According to USAMU trap shooter Bret E. Erickson, Graves is the best skeet shooter in the country and one of the top three in the world. Erickson and Graves, who both competed in the 1992 and 1996 Olympics, have been shooting with USAMU for more than a decade together and are best friends.

"We're all like one big happy family here," Graves said. "I feel like I owe everything to my Mom and Dad who got me started, my coach Burl Branham who contributes a lot to my success, Bret who's always there for me when something goes wrong, my wife Tracy who is very supportive and the Army, which gets most of the credit.



"If it wasn't for the Army, I couldn't have accomplished what I have," Graves continued. "I'm proud to wear the green uniform. It would have been really hard to make it to the Olympics without the Army."

"Todd is one of the best international shotgun shooters in the world, and he's also a good Soldier," Branham said. "At one time or another, he has beaten the best in the world — all the Olympic Medalists — so his chances of winning at the Olympics are very good."

"In training, I'm shooting 10,000 pairs of targets on Post 4 — the one that took me out of medal contention in 1996," Graves said. "Ascension to perfection is an ongoing struggle, but I'm going in the right direction."

Graves enlisted in the Army in January 1984 and was assigned to USAMU.

The 35-year-old Infantryman said he's going to stay in the Army "as long as they let me."

Gardens offers fly-fishing challenge

Callaway Gardens

Anxious anglers look no further, Callaway Gardens has a way to cast winter blues away.

Fishermen will find the addition of more than 500 pounds of Rainbow Trout to the resort's Wren Lake an exciting fly-fishing challenge to the South Georgia park.

"This is the fourth year we've stocked the lake with trout and each year has been very successful," said Carter Nelson, fly fishing manager. "Both the stream and lake experiences should be a thrill for any angler. And because these are cold water fish, we are able to catch them on even the coldest days, even if it snows."

Those seeking relief from that cold may find it on one of the parks many ponds and 12 lakes.

The park's 175-acre Mountain Creek Lake ranks as one of the best locations for fishing in the Southeast and offers anglers another opportunity to test their fly-fishing skills.

The lake has topped the list of favorite fishing spots among frantic fishermen since being stocked in 1952 and through annual fertilization and constant care, the lake has remained one of the finest.

An excellent fly fishing program designed especially for Callaway Gardens, provides a great experience for the beginning angler as well as the professional fly-fisherman. The program includes private casting lessons, group instruction and guided fly-fishing experiences led by Callaway Gardens' own fly-fishing expert staff.

Callaway makes it easy to fish, making everything from tackle bags and rods and reels, available to the weekend warrior. Boats and professional guides are also available for fish-seekers.

For more information, to arrange a fishing excursion, call Callaway Gardens at (800) CALLAWAY.

Successful anglers start with search

David Hegel and Steve Price
Johnson® & Evenrude® Outboards

When professional bass tournament angler Guy Eaker looks for bass, he first looks for a place those bass might be, a spot he calls a "confidence area."

"When we're practicing for a tournament and looking for bass, we don't have time to cover the entire 75,000 or even 100,000 acres of the lake," explained Eaker, a veteran competitor.

"Instead, we look for a small part of the lake that has all the right ingredients that we personally want to fish," he said.

"That's our 'confidence area,' and it may be where we spend the entire tournament," he added. "It might be an entire tributary creek or perhaps only a small portion of the tributary, but basically it has everything the rest of the lake has, only it's contained in a much smaller area."

Eaker begins his confidence area search by first studying a good lake map. A detailed map will show stump fields, flooded timber, the shoreline configuration, underwater humps and roadbeds, and of course, depth variations. Eaker likes maps that have a contour interval of five feet because they show the most detail.

"Three of the main things I think about when I'm searching for a confidence area are water clarity, vegetation, and the lake's history of producing fish," the pro said. "On a clear water lake, for example, I'll search the far upper end because that water will more off-color so the bass will be more shallow.

"If the lake is filled with vegetation, then I have to look for something different within the vegetation itself. This might be stumps, a creek channel, or major lake points," Eaker said.

"Finally, I pay close attention to the quality of the fishery itself. If the lake has a history of producing low catches, then I'll look for an area that has the heaviest cover available, because that area will be the most attractive to bass. If the lake produces a lot of bass, then I'll investigate the spots where those bass historically come from."

Another thing Eaker does when searching for a confidence area is look for a place that allows him to use his favorite lure, a spinnerbait. This is important because of the confidence he has in the lure.

"As tournament fishing becomes more competitive, I think it's important to at least consider choosing an area that allows me to fish the way I want to fish," Eaker said. "I think I perform better if I'm fishing water with my favorite lure or technique."

After marking prospective areas on his map, Eaker then locates them by boat on the water and starts fishing. Some, of course, get eliminated, but others produce enough fish to become true confidence areas, and if they don't, they at least show him the type of water he can look for to find another spot just like it.
