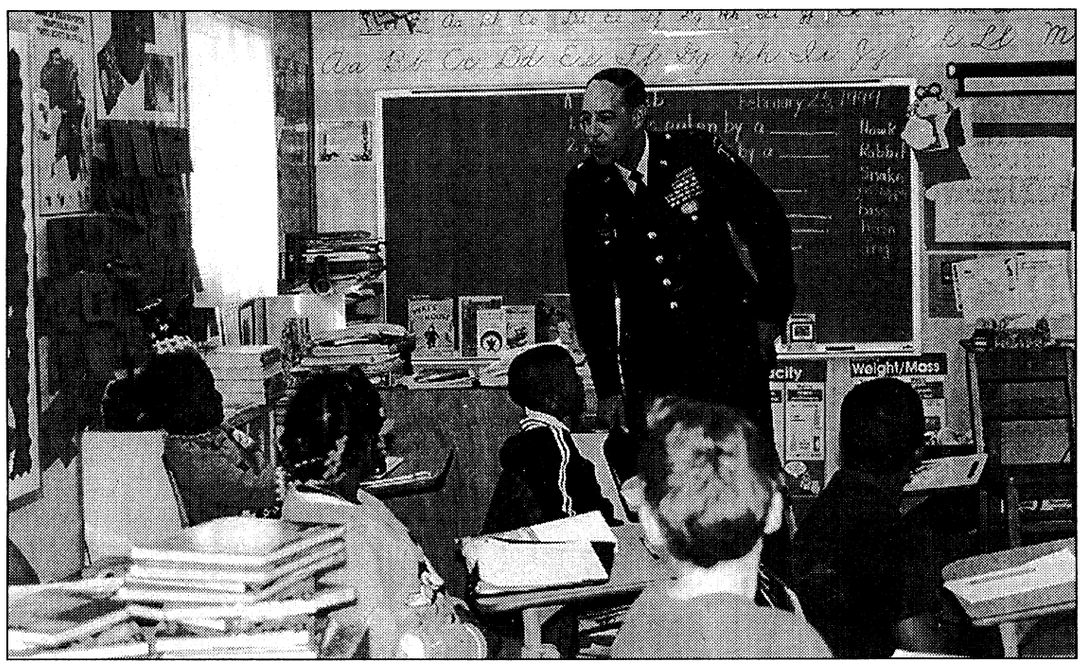
"When Soldiers arrive at a new duty station, their household shipment may not arrive immediately, especially if they are coming from an overseas tour," said Relocation Coordinator Marsha Collins, Army Community Service (ACS). "We offer basic household goods such as pots and pans, dishes, utensils, cribs, irons, coffee pots, toasters, futons, cups and other items to Soldiers who are without when arriving here."



These items are lent out on a 30-day loan period until Soldiers receive their furniture and household items. Once Soldiers receive their household items, they are required to return the borrowed items so the Closet may continue to assist other Soldiers.

Soldiers who do not return items are flagged and cannot clear post without making restitution. Once Soldiers return items or make financial amends, other Soldiers can begin to benefit from the Lending Closet's services.

"The Lending Closet helps a lot of Soldiers out," said one of the Lending Closet helpers Spc. Luis Lopez, ACS. "I have helped around 20 Soldiers already today."

Soldiers who receive assistance from the closet can expect to receive quality items in addition to generosity. All items owned by the Lending Closet are lent out to Soldiers freshly washed and in good condition, sometimes even brand new, Collins said.

Soldiers who have PCSed to Fort Benning can receive assistance from the Lending Closet by visiting Building 2629 in Soldiers' Plaza. Soldiers must bring a copy of their orders and military identification card. A hand receipt will then by issued to the Soldier and they may borrow the items needed.

Animal bites

Pets may strike out when feeling threatened

Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility

In 1998, more than 160 people in the Fort Benning community were involved in animal scratch and bite incidents. Seventy percent of those incidents involved minors. Many cases were "provoked" (the animal felt it was threatened in some way) and could have been prevented.

It is natural for an animal to bite if it feels threatened. "Fear biting" occurs if an animal is approached without warning. Unfamiliar animals in fenced areas, on a chain or wandering loose should not be disturbed.

Disturbing an animal while eating can result in a bite or scratch incident. "Food aggression" is common in all animals because it is a natural instinct to compete for food. It is best to separate the animal from other animals, as well as the family and give it privacy to enjoy its meal. Explain to children that animals can't play while eating.

Do not attempt to separate fighting animals using your hands. A water hose or large stick may be used. If no objects are available, try honking a horn or making loud noises to startle the animals. Do not strike the animals with the objects while attempting to separate them.

Many bite and scratch incidents are simply accidents. When an animal is sleeping and someone steps on his or her tail or falls into them, the animal may react by biting or scratching.

One way to avoid this is to have a certain place in a quiet corner where the animal's bed may be kept. If someone does fall into the animal, move away from the animal and speak in a calm voice, reassuring it and giving it adequate time to wake up before attempting to play or interact with it.

Incidents may also occur when animals have been injured and first aid is attempted. Always use caution when approaching and administering aid to an injured animal. Moving the animal may cause pain and thus provoke the animal to bite. If the animal must be moved, do so gently and slowly, always speaking in a calm, reassuring voice.

The Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility is equipped to provide emergency services to stabilize life or limb threatening situations only, after which the animals will be referred off-installation.

Injured animals should be taken to a civilian veterinary hospital for treatment. The Animal Emergency Center is available after 6 p.m. weekdays, noon on weekends and on national holidays. It is located at 2509 Manchester Expressway (Exit 5B), just beyond B. Merrell's on the right. The phone number is 324-6659.

If a person is bitten or scratched by an animal, they should go to Martin Army Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment and initiation of an Animal Bite Report. Medical authorities should see any scratch that breaks the skin. Initiation of an Animal Bite Report will cause the health status of the animal to be examined by either military veterinary personnel or civilian authorities off post.

Approximately 45 percent of the total recorded bites occurring in 1998 involved animals belonging to Fort Benning residents. All of these animals were seen at the Veterinary Treatment Facility.

For information, call Veterinary Services from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m Monday through Friday. The clinic is closed the last working day of the month for inventory and on federal and installation-directed training holidays.

Veterinary Services is located in Building 265 on 10th Mountain Division Road (next to the Cablevision office on Main Post). Veterinary Service's Adoption and Stray impoundment facility is located nearby.

To schedule an appointment call 545-4444. For safety reasons, children under the age of 12 years are not allowed in the clinic or to be left outside unattended.

To have a stray animal apprehended call the Military Police at 545-5222 and an Animal Control Officer will be dispatched. Residents of Columbus should call the Muscogee County Animal Control at 571-4930 or 561-8602.

Controlled burnings assist growth

Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning is on fire! At least that's what many post residents or people in the tri-community area probably think when they see the woodlands burning around Fort Benning.

The Directorate of Public Works conducts prescribed burns from January through August each year. The purpose of these burns is to help maintain and restore the natural habitat of the Red-Cockaded Woodpecker (RCW), an endangered species which only lives in the mature pine forests of the southeastern U.S. Fort Benning received a directive from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in 1994 to burn each training compartment every three-years to help promote the habitat of the RCW. Currently, there are 187 active RCW groups or clusters on Fort Benning.

The ideal tree for the RCW to excavate its home, which is called a cavity, is the longleaf pine. At one time, there were more the 90 million acres of longleaf pine in the southeast. Now there are approximately three million. Our primary objective is to restore the longleaf pine ecosystem on Fort Benning. The decline of the ecosystem is why the RCW is an endangered species, as well as some other species that rely on similar habitat.

Logging in the late 1800s and early 1900s is one of the main reasons the longleaf has declined. Trees were harvested and not replanted. A lack of fire is another reason for the loss of habitat. This ecosystem needs periodic fires to stay healthy. The longleaf pine ia a very fire resistant species, which is why it is a better home for the woodpecker than other pine species.

Although burning occurs January through August, in order to meet the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service three-year burn rotation requirement, the best time to burn is during the early growing season, from mid-March to May. At this time of the year, the trees have the rest of the growing season to recover and manufacture food for their dormant period. Also, burning during this period controls the understory and competing vegetation. The fuel load is reduced every time burnings take place. In addition, burning the understory also opens burning on a regular basis, making it difficult for Soldiers to train in those areas.

Now that we are in a three year rotation of growing season burns, the installation's military training areas have been improved. The occurrence of wildfires has also been reduced. Fires do not burn as intensely or get as large because the fuel is not there as it was in the past. The result is a safer training environment.

Our goal is to burn 25,000 acres of pine and pine hardwood stands per year. A checkerboard pattern is utilized when burning stands in order to enhance biological diversity. Our prescribed burns are controlled by natural boundaries such as creeks and roads. Firebreaks are plowed only if necessary. Ecosystems need periodic fire in order to stay healthy. Prescribed burning during spring and summer growing season best mimics the natural fire season, during which lightning is the primary ignition source.

Ultimately, everyone benefits because prescribed burning maintains and restores the longleaf pine ecosystem, improves access for training and recreation and reduces the amount of fuel on the ground, which in turn reduces the risk of a catastrophic wild fire.

Raining cats and dogs

A 1-year-old female cat, two male and one female mixed puppies and Star, a 3-year-old labrador mix, are just a few of the animals now available for adoption at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic. Star, who recently gave birth to nine puppies, needs a home now that all of her puppies have been adopted.

The clinic recently changed the adoption cost. Now, pet owners only pay for initial vaccination and procedure costs, which could be any where from $11 to $40. Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

Eat right

National Nutrition Month takes fresh look at nutrition

Capt. Wendy Larson
Martin Army Community Hospital

National Nutrition Month is an annual event sponsored by the American Dietetic Association. Each March registered dietitians, health promotion managers and dining halls relish this spotlight to sing the praises of healthy eating. This year's theme is "Take a Fresh Look at Nutrition."

This is a great opportunity to re-think your views on good nutrition. "Take a Fresh Look" isn't just a plea to enjoy fresh fruits and vegetables. It's an opportunity to seize the power that a healthy eating plan provides.

Most people view "good nutrition" as the newest antioxidants, the miracle diets promising to restore youth or boring and tasteless meals. They see it as timing of meals, avoiding all the "bad" foods or eating the right food combinations to maximize thermogenesis.

Good nutrition becomes the newest research study covered by the evening news. Unfortunately, the simple views of good nutrition — the basics of healthy eating every day — gets a great big yawn. It's not snappy — it's not quick — and it's certainly no miracle. Good food is one of the simple pleasures left in life that isn't immoral or illegal!

Good nutrition is not about tofu and bean curd. Good nutrition is not synonymous with dieting, starvation or feeling deprived of favorite foods. It's not about guilt or willpower. It's not just carrot sticks, apples and oatmeal. And it certainly is not a bottle of multivitamins in the medicine cabinet.

Take a step back from all the hype. In this hectic, fast-paced society, wouldn't it be nice to simplify something? I invite all of you to do just that and get back to the basics of good nutrition. Stop searching for the best "diet," that one savior to all eating woes. Stop spending hard-earned cash on the newest craze and hottest fads.

The fresh look says that good nutrition is nothing more than feeding your body the energy, vitamins and minerals needed to stay healthy. It's everything in moderation and lots of variety. Simple, right?

Good nutrition only becomes complicated when you emphasize "barriers" to eating healthy. Barriers is the politically correct term — they're excuses when you get right down to it.

Barrier One: "I can't keep up with what is healthy and what isn't."

Today margarine is better than butter — tomorrow it's not. Does coffee raise cholesterol or not?

Yes, you have a point. Consumers are confused. All food seems to cause some kind of cancer. Today eggs are okay, tomorrow they're bad again.

There is very exciting research going on with antioxidants and herbal medicines and designer drugs. But it's going to be several years before actual recommendations are made. You won't go wrong, however, if you rely on basics like Dietary Guidelines for Americans and the Food Guide Pyramid. Those guidelines have not changed. Kind of like a white oxford shirt. Fads come and go, but you won't go wrong with the basics.

Barrier Two: "Eating healthy is more expensive."

It can be if you buy mangos in Michigan in the middle of winter. Gourmet, organic specialty stores or "fat free" designer foods will be more expensive. But healthy eating doesn't have to be costly. Take a typical grocery store receipt. Total the cost of the chips and the sodas and convenience foods and all the extra "treats." Surprised? How much money do you spend in restaurants? The bottom line here is personal choice. The basis of healthy eating includes lots of carbohydrates — breads, pasta, beans and rice. All of these things are very inexpensive. A healthy eating plan uses less meat, sweets, fats and extras. Eating less of anything will always be cheaper (that's a law of economics, I didn't make it up).

Of course there are more barriers, or so claimed, to eating right. With change comes some challenges. This too, is a natural law. You can either use these challenges as excuses or take a fresher approach — your choice. And it's so easy.

Freshen up and get back to the basics. Eat fruit for a snack or dessert. Drink water. Eat slowly and really enjoy each bite — not just the quantity. Eat breakfast. Use the salt shaker less. Drink water. Use meat as a side dish. Have seconds on vegetables. Drink your milk. Buy fewer "treats." Enjoy a rich dessert once in awhile — not every night. Serve a salad with pizza. Use less sugar. Use whole grain breads. Listen to your body — stop eating when you're full. Savor the flavors of fruit in season and home-grown tomatoes — there's nothing quite like it.

Good nutrition and healthy eating should be exciting. It gives you power, it gives you energy, it may add years to your life. It's just the right thing to do. It doesn't have to be complicated, it doesn't have to be expensive. And yes, you can still eat pizza. So come on ... join us in celebrating National Nutrition Month. Take a fresh look at nutrition.

Medical disorder plagues one in 10 adults

Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

Everyone gets the blues now and then. We all may experience temporary feelings of sadness as a reaction to disappointments or even intense grief in response to situations such as the loss of a loved one. These normal responses should not be confused with depression.

Depression is a medical disorder (just like diabetes, high blood pressure or heart disease that affects your thoughts, feelings, physical health and behaviors).

Research from the National Institute of Mental Health has shown that in the U.S. one in 10 adults experiences depression each year. Children can also experience significant occurrences of depression.

The good news is that depression is a treatable illness. Symptoms can be alleviated and

Causes of depression

Depression can be caused by many things, including family history and genetics, medical illnesses, drugs and alcohol, other psychiatric conditions or a combination of several factors. In some people, depression occurs even when life is going well.

One of the most important things to remember about depression is that it is not a weakness. It is a medical condition.

Symptoms of depression

A depressed person experiences several symptoms nearly every day that last for at least two weeks.

Among the most common are: persistent sadness and depressed mood, loss of interest of pleasure in activities once enjoyed, sleep disturbances (sleeping too much or too little), difficulty concentrating, remembering and making decreased energy, feelings of guilt and or hopelessness and physical symptoms such as headaches, digestive problems and chronic pain that do not respond to treatment.

Diagnostic evaluation and treatment

Too often people do not get help for their depression because they don't recognize the symptoms, have trouble asking for help, blame themselves or don't know treatment is available. A physical and psychological evaluation may be necessary to determine whether you have depression and to identify the contributing factors.

It is important to realize that feelings of being worthless and helpless are part of the depression. They will fade as treatment begins to take effect.

There are a variety of treatment methods available including medication, psychotherapy or a

Heart yields more than life

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Roggia
Director Chief of Chaplains Family Life Training Program

Dr. Russell Nelson, an internationally recognized heart surgeon and church leader, describes the human heart as a pump so magnificent that its power is almost beyond our comprehension.

reflections

He explained, "To control the direction of the flow of blood within it, there are four important valves, pliable as a parachute and delicate as a silk scarf. They open and close more than 100,000 times a day, over 36 million times a year. Yet unless altered by disease, they are so rugged that they can stand this kind or wear indefinitely.

Each day the heart pumps enough fluid to fill a 2,000 gallon tank while consuming only about four watts of energy, less than that used by a small light bulb. All this power is condensed in this faithful pump, the size of one's fist."

The energy that empowers the heart is the breath of life — a gift that only God can give. Having received this gift, it is ours to care for and enjoy. Medical studies have shown a link between marital dissatisfaction and heart disease. Men who placed an inordinate emphasis on their work and therefore neglected their wives and families were more likely to develop subsequent cardiac problems. The lesson is simple but as serious as a heart attack.

Just as the absence of love has the power to break our hearts, the power of love communicated heart to heart has the power to mend a broken one. Proverbs tells us that it is a merry heart that makes a cheerful countenance, and that the merry heart doeth good like a medicine. An expression of love could be just the medicine someone you know needs. Share the breath of life and your hearts will be filled with joy and peace.

Troubled couples should seek help

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

We all have the power to make choices in our beliefs, our attitudes and our actions. It is all in what we will or will not do. This is a lot of power we possess and one that can easily be misused. However, as we begin to acknowledge this power, we can begin to move into deeper and more meaningful relationships.

Many individuals deny this power with a weak "I can't" when in reality they are really saying, "I choose not to" or "I don't want to." In both responses, it comes down to a matter of the will.

Are you familiar with the acronym OBE (overcome by events)? In a marriage, you will not be able to control every circumstance that comes your way. There are times when you are going to be OBE. Circumstances will often take over but they need not overcome your attitude. Life can often be unfair. We can be dealt a lousy hand, but like a good poker player, we have to learn to play the cards we are dealt.

If problems in your marriage become overwhelming, you can either choose to concentrate on the problems or begin to search out solutions to them. This is where you and your spouse may need to seek outside help. It would be a foolish person who did seek out medical help for a broken leg, yet that same person will not seek assistance when facing marital difficulties.

Let me say this to you who are in the midst of seemingly insurmountable difficulties in your marriage: Choose to believe that you and your spouse can overcome your difficulties and choose to seek outside help if you are stuck in your problems. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is here to assist you. For more information, call 545-1760. Choose to do something good for your marriage.

What's happening at Faith Middle School ...

Students prepare for assessment

Faith Middle School

From April 21-23, all eighth-grade students at Faith Middle School will take a writing assessment test. This test will be administered to eighth-graders in all Department of Defense Education Activity schools, both state side and overseas. This month Faith's eighth-graders took a practice test which was evaluated by trained parent volunteers as well as language arts teachers at Faith. Below is the writing prompt students were given as well as sample papers that received scores indicating commendable or exceptional achievement.

Writing Situation

Think about a task you do well. Think of the items you need to do this task and the steps you must follow to complete it. Organize the things you must do to complete this task so you can explain it clearly to your friend.

Directions for Writing

Write an essay explaining how you perform a task that you do well. Include information about the things you need and the steps you follow. Include enough information so that the reader could do the task almost as well as you.

To rake leaves as well as I do, you must follow all of these instructions. This is the easiest and quickest way to rake leaves. Trust me, I have learned the hard way.

First of all, you must make sure to have all of your implements. You need a rake, gloves, some bags and some time. All of these things are important to perform your task well.

After you have made sure that you have all your tools, you can start raking the leaves into piles. This is the most laborious part of your task, and whenever I rake the leaves into piles, I take short breaks to rest. Depending on how large your yard is and how many leaves there are, you may need to work for quite a while.

Rake the leaves into one pile and then go to another area of the yard and repeat this process.

Once your whole yard is covered with piles of leaves, you may put those leaves into the bags. It does not matter if you use paper or plastic, and don't forget to put on gloves! The gloves are to prevent you from getting dirty and from getting bitten by insects.

After all the leaves are put into bags, there still might be some left that have strayed from the piles. If there are, repeat the whole process if absolutely necessary.

As you can see my friend, raking leaves is not as easy as it seems.

However, if you follow these simple instructions, you will not have a difficult time performing this task. Now that you know how, I hope you'll enjoy endless fun-filled minutes of raking as much as I do.

Principal's luncheon honors excellence

Natasha Bennett

Faith Middle School

A Principal's Luncheon was recently held at Faith Middle School.

Thirty students whose hard work and dedication earned them straight As for the second quarter grading period attended the function.

Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore was the guest speaker for this luncheon. Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools, Dr. Tom Dignan, principal, and Rose Brooks, assistant principal of Faith School were also in attendance to honor these hard-working students.

A special lunch was served consisting of chicken cordon bleu. The dessert was double chocolate cake with whipped cream and a cherry on top. The food was arranged on "real" blue china reminiscent of a fancy restaurant.

Patti Jones, eighth-grade social studies teacher, and Cindy Givens, media specialist, served as waitresses for the luncheon. After lunch, the students received certificates for their outstanding academic achievement, had their picture taken and were able to have a personal interview with their honored guests.

Seventh-grader Leishvennette Figueroa said, "It is a great honor to be able to be on the principal's list and to attend this wonderful luncheon. I'll work hard again next quarter."

The Punishment of Zeronis and Zeret

Sixth-grader shares writing assignment

Annie Finney

Faith Middle School

Zeronis and Zeret were brother and sister who lived in ancient Greece.

Zeronis was very handsome and had short golden hair. He was also selfish and pitied no one but himself.

"I don't have time to pity the common people," he often said. He was strong but never fought for anyone but himself.

"Why should I fight for others when they can fight for themselves?" he asked. Besides, he said, "Greece has men in its army; let them fight."

Zeret, his sister, was pretty and wise. She had soft, silky skin and rosy cheeks. She was a beauty to behold. She spent many hours brushing her long hair and putting on make-up, but she didn't need it. Like her brother, she was pitiless and selfish. Zeret kept her wisdom to herself and considered others dumb and uneducated.

"Why should I teach others when they have brains and can learn and think for themselves?" she asked.

Meanwhile, Athena and Hera watched the two with shame for they had created these two selfish people.

"We gave them wonderful gifts of beauty, strength and wisdom and they have not used them to help others," Hera said.

"We need to ask the Fates to punish them," Athena said.

The next day, the two goddesses traveled to the underworld to talk to the Fates. They told the Fates about Zeronis and Zeret's lack of pity and their selfishness.

The Fates agreed that the two would be punished, but that their actions would bring it upon themselves.

"Their acts will punish themselves because they think ugly things and say ugly things to others," the Fates said.

The next day, Zeronis and Zeret awoke as usual and looked in their mirrors.

"Oh, my goodness! Who are those ugly people staring at us? They are very old, unattractive and do not belong in our presence," Zeronis said.

"Zeronis," Zeret said, "those people are us! My hair is brittle and knotted."

My lovely skin is now rough and covered with scars," she said. "I believe that the gods have punished us."

"But, why me? You are the spoiled brat who prized yourself above me and everyone else!" Zeronis said. And, with that accusation, they started to argue bitterly.

Suddenly, Athena and Hera appeared before the brother and sister.

"You have brought this punishment upon yourselves. You have had selfish, ugly thoughts since you were old enough to form thoughts. You have spoken ugly and hurtful things to others around you which has caused them shame and has hurt their pride," Athena said.

"And, we had hope that you would have used your gifts of strength and wisdom to help others, but you failed us and yourselves. Now you will suffer for being thoughtless of others. You will have many, many years to live among the people you insulted," Hera said.

As Zeronis and Zeret stood before the goddesses, they began to speak, but couldn't. They realized they would not be given the last word to ones mightier than they. Slowly, the goddesses faded away leaving the two mortals behind to accept being equal to everyone around them.

The lesson — we should be nice to everyone, and use our gifts wisely and

CSU hosts softball invitational — The Columbus State University Cougars softball team will slam into spring collegiate sports action today through Sunday at the South Commons Complex as they play host to the CSU softball invitational.

For more information, call 568-2029.

8th Annual Sporting Clays Classic to shoot Saturday — The American Cancer Society and Total Systems Services present the 8th annual Sporting Clays Classic beginning at 8 a.m. Saturday.

The tourney takes shooters through ten stations shooting at clay pigeons. The man or women with the most hits wins.

The tourney will be held at Buckland Farms in Juniper.

For directions or for more information, call 322-3484.

CSU Baseball swings into season Saturday — The Columbus Cougars Baseball team will attempt to fly past the North Florida Ospry's this weekend as they play host to visitors from the south Saturday.

The game is scheduled to begin at 1 p.m.

For more information, call CSU at 327-3688.

Hospital Foundation hosts golf tournament — The West Central Georgia Regional Hospital Foundation, Inc., is sponsoring a Four-Person Scramble (with handicap) Golf Tournament at 1 p.m. May 8 at Bull Creek Golf Course.

Entry fee for the charitable tournament is $55 per person and is required by April 30.

Team prizes for first, second and third place finishers will be awarded as well as door prizes.

Fore more information or to register a team, call Ron Buchanan at 565-4046 or Suzy Waddell at 568-5155.

Hunt Club offers riding lessons — The Fort Benning Hunt Club offers English riding lessons. The lessons, which focus on dressage and jumping, are offered for beginners or advanced riders. Riders must be at least 5 years old.

For more information, call Andrea Pitts at 689-3945.

Hawks host appreciation day — The Atlanta Hawks will hold a Fort Benning Military Appreciation Day Saturday. Military members can get $5 ticket vouchers for the 7:30 p.m. game against the Milwaukee Bucs at the Georgia Dome.

For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Billy Carmichael at 544-9656.

Post opens disc golf course — Fort Benning now has a disc golf course. During this game, players throw a disc from a concrete tee area. Wherever the disc comes to rest, players throw again from that spot. To make their "putt", players throw the disc into a metal target. The player with the fewest number of strokes wins.

Golf discs are now available at Outdoor Recreation, Rental and Storage, in Building 1707.

The course is located at Russ Pond and there is no charge to use the course. The rules of the game are posted at the practice area.

For more information, call 545-5777.

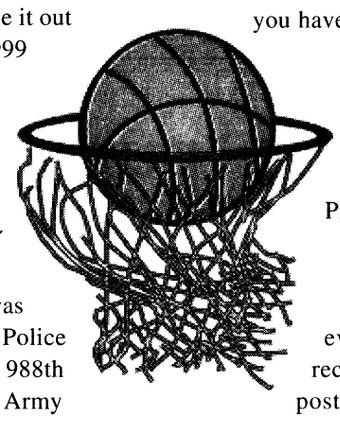
MPs compete for title

Fort Jackson takes top spot in tourney

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

Military policemen (MPs) from posts across the southeast gathered at Fort Benning's Briant Wells Field House this past weekend to battle it out on the basketball court during the 1999 Pig Bowl.

By the end of the two-day, double elimination tournament, the team from Fort Jackson, S.C., prevailed after they defeated Fort McPherson, Ga., in the championship game 49-35.



The Fort Benning team, which was comprised of MPs from the Military Police Activity including Soldiers from the 988th Military Police Company and U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company, came in fourth out of the field of six. Other posts that participated included Forts Gordon and McPherson, Ga., Forts Rucker and McClellan, Ala, and Fort Jackson.

The Benning team started the tournament by winning their first game 41-32 over Fort Gordon. They gained their first loss, however, when they battled Fort McPherson and lost 56-48. Their second loss, which put them out of contention, came from the team they beat in the tournament opener as Fort Gordon drove past Fort Benning 57-48.

Fort Jackson on the other hand, won by forfeit once and cruised past Fort McPherson twice to take the top spot of the tournament.

According to Jesse Butler, physical security inspector for Fort Benning's Military Police Activity and Pig Bowl coordinator, the purpose behind the tournament was to bring fellow MPs together and build on our teamwork.

"This was a chance to see some people you haven't seen in years," he said.

Butler said the Pig Bowl originated in Germany and Fort Benning decided to start up the competition when Command Sgt. Maj. Michael White, Provost Marshal sergeant major, suggested Fort Benning host one on post.

"It was a lot of work getting everything together, but we received a lot of support from the posts which participated," Butler said.

While this was Fort Benning's first MP basketball tournament, the post also played host to another Pig Bowl last fall when the MPs challenged other posts to a flag football dual.

"We decided to try something different this time. Since it's basketball season, we thought we'd get a lot of participation this way and we did," Butler said.

Butler said next year's Pig Bowl will be held at Fort Jackson since who ever wins the tournament will play host the following year.

Female gunner joins ranks of USAMU

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The men of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) who make up the National Championship Service Rifle Team got a new fellow shooter March 1 — Julie A. Nielson.

When Nielson started target practice with her father, Spencer Nielson, at the age of 13, she wasn't thinking about career choices, but that's what it lead to, she said. She practiced diligently with her father and enjoyed the competition so much that at 14 she went to the Juniper National Rifle Association National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio and has attended ever since.

Now at age 18, she recalls that match and said she remembers seeing the USAMU shooters and noticing their level of expertise and professionalism.

"That was the first match where I had an opportunity to see the marksmanship unit," she said. "I was so impressed that I would watched them at every match I would try to learn from them."

All of that watching and learning paid off for Nielson at the 1998 National Matches last summer when she achieved master qualification and finished fourth overall out of 150 shooters in the Expert Class.

Nielson

Her luck continued to pay off for the then high school senior at the national match when she found out the USAMU Soldiers who she had looked to for advice for the past four years, were now looking to her as a perspective member of one of the finest shooting teams in the world — the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

"I had actually been considering finding out more about the unit when the coach talked to me about it," she said. "Of course, he couldn't promise me anything and steered me towards a local recruiter."

With that quick trip to the local U.S. Army Recruiting Station in Provo, Utah, out of the way, Nielson said her dream of a shooting career came true.

"This was an opportunity for me to shoot with the best team anywhere in the world and make a career out of what I love to do most — shooting," she said. "Even though I had a number of opportunities to go shoot at colleges after high school, I knew the marksmanship unit was my best choice ,because it gave me the opportunity to go to college as well as all of the discipline that the Army has."

Nielson, formerly a resident of Oak City, Utah, graduated from Delta High School of Delta, Utah, in 1998. She joined the Army in September and received an Expert Rifle Badge in Basic Training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. The 18-year-old was then assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Rifle Team.

"I thought the training was actually pretty fun," she said. "I was just worried that the six-month break would effect my shooting ability."

Although she hasn't had a chance to put those skills to test in a formal competition, she said she had a chance to train with the unit for the first time this week.

"Being out here on the range with the team for only a week has already brought me to a level better than I have ever been," she said.

Nielson will get a chance to test her skills this weekend as the USAMU plays host to the Peach State Regional Match.

"I don't really have any expectations for the competition Saturday since I have only been back shooting for a week," she said. "But I will do my best to improve and finish on top."

As for long term goals, Neilson said that no matter where her four-year enlistment takes her, she has one goal in mind — to become Service Rifle Champion.

"I have a long way to go before I get there, and it is going to take a while, but I am going to give it everything I have."

Play ball!

The sound of cracking bats and referees' whistles will be heard around Fort Benning this weekend as Youth Services spring sports season kicks off Saturday at 9 a.m. More than 400 children signed up to compete on 36 different baseball and soccer teams in the spring season which concludes May 15. Baseball games are slated to be held on various fields around the post while all soccer games will be held on Main Post's French Field.

Team prepares for season

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The Bolivian-American Huskies Kory Chuymas soccer team is hoping for a successful season after last year's undefeated season.

As a new season arrives, the 1998 first Huskies generation strategies of God, tough training, great victories and teamwork will be implemented within a new team of young blood players.

Coach Ronald Hurtado de Mendoza, electrical system engineer with the 221st MIBN in the Georgia Army National Guard will continue to lead the way to victory as he has volunteered for his second season as coach of the team.

Although Hurtado will be training a new team, his hopes of victory are still focused on helping these 6- to 8-year-olds.

"I hope to achieve mental and physical top performance at home, on the field and in school for the players of the team," Hurtado said. "I believe that the children are the key for progress and a good leader can set them for excellence."

Hurtado said he is a firm believer that with a little fine tuning of the regulations at the Youth Center Bolivian-American Huskies Kory Chuymas Soccer Team, they can build a team that is able to compete successfully against any military or civilian institution.

With hopes and dreams of one day playing with a professional team, Hurtado will instill his own skills to help lead to another successful season.

Bragg hosts perimeter challenge

Fort Bragg Public Affairs Office

Registration has begun for the second annual 55-mile Perimeter Challenge which will be held April 23-25 at Fort Bragg, N.C. The race is co-sponsored by the 18th Field Artillery Brigade and Fort Bragg's Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

The Perimeter Challenge is a 55-mile adventure race through Fort Bragg, N.C., home of the United States Army Airborne and Special Operations Forces Soldiers.

Anyone can enter, but not everyone will finish. Last year, 69 teams of five competitors began Fort Bragg's version of the Eco Challenge; 314 competitors crossed the finish line. Those who will be successful this year will have to meet six grueling challenges:

Obstacle Course — Range 85 is Fort Bragg's Air Assault Obstacle Course, and it has several elements to challenge you. Rappel off a 40-foot tower, attempt the Confidence Climb, the Weaver, the Belly Buster and others.

Forced Ruck — Hike 22 miles over Fort Bragg's rugged terrain with 20 pounds on your back.

Lake Crossing — Negotiate a prescribed route across Lake McArthur in canoes.

Land Navigation — Traverse the North Carolina backwoods using a map, a compass and your wits.

Litter carry — Haul a 90-pound dummy artillery round on a military stretcher two miles.

Run — Run, walk or crawl 20 miles to the finish line. You'll know you've made it when you see two crossed Howitzers.

The 18th Field Artillery motto is "Tough, Proud, Disciplined." Competitors will have to be all three to finish the race. Prizes will be awarded to the top three male, female and co-ed teams.

Entries are being accepted on a first-come, first-serve basis. The non-refundable fee is $125 per team and includes a T-shirt as well as a pre-race "carbo load" dinner on April 23.

Can you meet the 1999 Perimeter Challenge? To enter, call (910) 432-7470 or (910) 432-7472.

Army boxers "pumped" to win national title

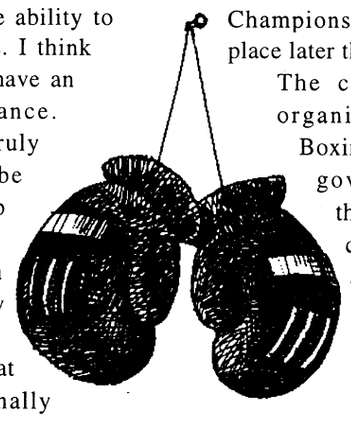
Harriet Rice
Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Fifteen Army boxers are among 250 of the top Olympic-style boxers in the U.S. competing at the March 8-13 1999 Everlast U.S. Championships in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Of the 15, seven are double winners in their weight classes, having taken titles both at the All-Army and Armed Forces Championships held in February. Twelve soldiers are members of the Army's World Class Athlete Program based at Fort Carson, Colo.

Top fighters to watch are nationally ranked Olanda Anderson (178 lbs.), John Medina (112 lbs.), Yamar Resto (156 lbs.), Corey Bernard (139 lbs) and Stanley McClain (201 lbs.)

Number two-ranked light heavyweight Anderson battled the number three-ranked Air Force Joseph Pastorello, outpointing him for the Armed Forces title. "It was tough this year. I've got to pick it up a notch if I want to defend my national title," Anderson said.



Flyweight Medina picked up his fifth Armed Forces title this year. "Every time it's different, whether it's my first time or last time. We've got to step up to another level, not stay in just one place. We're getting better after every match," said the number two-ranked Fontana, Calif. native.

Head Coach Byron Moore is highly optimistic. "All members of the team have the ability to make the semi-finals. I think Bernard is going to have an excellent performance. He's young, but I truly believe he can be ranked in the top three in his weight class," said Moore in a pre-event interview from Fort Carson.

A key factor is that Army boxers are finally accustomed to the new computerized scoring system now used in the U.S. In the past, boxers could whip up a fast combination that looked pretty and scored points, but really didn't hurt anyone, Moore said. Not so anymore.

"Two judges have to identify a scoring blow within a second in order to register it as a point. The white portion of the glove has to hit the scoring area from the waist up to the headgear in the front of the face to be a scoring blow — and the punches have to have some 'oompf' behind them," he explained.

This year's national championships could go a long way in determining the Olympic team for the 2000 Olympic Games. The top four finishers at this year's tournament will advance to the U.S. Challenge, a trial event for both the Pan American Games and the World Championship which take place later this year.

The competition is organized by USA Boxing, the national governing body that sanctions the championships along with the Colorado Association of USA Boxing. Preliminary bouts will be held at the Olympic Training Center. Semi-final and final rounds were held March 11 and 13 at Colorado College. Selected fights will air (tape delay) on ESPN with dates and times to be announced.

The Army World Class Athlete Program provides accomplished Soldier-athletes the training, coaching and opportunity to compete at national and international levels on their way to qualifying for the Olympic team. Always "Soldiers first," the athletes must maintain their military skills and attend college in addition to their pursuing their sports goals. If called upon, they will deploy.

"All the athletes are top contenders. We're very excited, and the Soldiers are very motivated. Our goal for the U.S. Championship this year is to win the team title. We're looking forward to it," said Moore

USAMU scores victories during recent matches

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) have recently scored some major victories.

The following results are some of their accomplishments:

During the Wolf Creek Monthly Tournament March 13-14 in Atlanta, USAMU international pistol shooter Steven M. King outshot 34 shooters to win the 10-Meter Air Pistol Match followed by Travis A. Jorgenson in second place. Rhonda L. Bright won the 25-Meter Sport Pistol Match and international rifle shooter Eric A. Uptagrafft won the 10-Meter Air Rifle Match. Carl W. Trompeter II placed third in the 25-Meter Rapid Fire Pistol Match.

Shotgun shooter Joseph D. Buffa won the Skeet Match during the Zone 3 Skeet Championships on Fort Benning March 12-14. Shawn Dulohery was second and James T. Graves was third.

During the Maple Leaf Tournament March 4 in Los Angeles, Calif., USAMU shotgun shooter Matthew T. DePuydt outshot 21 competitors to win the Men's Double Trap Match. In the Women's Double Trap Match, Tonia L. McFadden came in third to winner Kim Rhode, who was the 1996 Olympic Women's Double Trap Gold Medal Winner, and Ellie Shad, who finished second. Michael T. Brantley finished second in the Trap Match.

America's Promise: Build Our Next Generation Of Leaders

Young people are getting the support they need, thanks to a nationwide organization spearheaded by General Colin Powell.

"The entertainment industry has such an incredible power to influence the lives of our youth," Gen. Powell said. "I would encourage each of you to help us deliver these positive messages and teach our youth that there is a better life for them."

Nancy Josephson, President of the Hollywood Radio and Television Society and Co-President of ICM, announced that the industry will get involved in America's Promise, The Alliance for Youth.

America's Promise, a national movement led by General Powell, is dedicated to mobilizing the nation to ensure our children and youth have the resources they need to help become successful adults:

- An ongoing relationship with a caring adult;
- Safe places and structured activities during non-school hours;
- A healthy start;
- A marketable skill through effective education; and
- An opportunity to give back through community service.

Thousands of corporations, nonprofit organizations, philanthropic foundations, service providers, communities and national, state and local governments, have joined the nationwide crusade to build our next generation of leaders.

For general information on America's Promise, you can call 1-888-55-YOUTH. To join the organization as an official commitment maker, call 1-800-365-0153. You can also visit their website at http://www.americaspromise.org.

Family Safety: Posting, Planning, Practicing

(NAPSA)-In 1997, more than 6,500 children under the age of 14 died from unintentional injuries or poisoning.* Tragically, many of these deaths might have been avoided.

Education and extensive safety planning can make a big difference in preventing injury or worse. Here are a few safety tips from the American Red Cross and TLC (The Learning Channel) to help children and families prevent, prepare for and respond to everyday emergencies:

- Know how to call for help. Post emergency numbers by every phone.
- Remove hazards from your house or lock them up. Place medicines and cleaners out of reach and label them "poison." Check lamp and appliance wires so they don't start fires.
- Change a few simple behaviors to keep your home risk-free. Don't run your car engine in the garage to avoid the buildup of carbon monoxide gas. Install smoke detectors on every floor, especially near bedrooms, and change batteries two times each year.
- Plan ahead for possible emergencies. Have a backpack nearby with supplies such as water, dried and canned food, change of clothing, blankets, battery-powered radio, first-aid kit, credit cards and cash. Make sure everyone knows how to turn off water, gas and electricity.
- Rehearse emergency action plans. Practice using the fire extinguisher and show everyone where it's kept. Have a fire escape plan (two routes for each room) and practice it.
- Take a basic first aid and CPR class.

Look for these and other safety tips from the American Red Cross and TLC as part of the nationwide TLC Safety Heroes campaign. TLC is working with American Red Cross chapters to raise children's safety awareness by distributing safety tips and information into homes and schools throughout the country.

For additional information on TLC Safety Heroes and upcoming shows, call 1-888-404-5969.

Preserving The Nation's Treasured History

The Star-Spangled Banner as seen in the Boston Navy Yard in 1873.

(NAPSA)-Here's news that's bound to raise a red-white and blue-flag: A major thrust has been made to preserve the "Star-Spangled Banner" and the nation's Charters of Freedom-the Declaration of Independence, Constitution and Bill of Rights.

The Pew Charitable Trusts joined First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton earlier this year in a White House briefing to announce this program.

The flag that inspired our national anthem, and the founding documents housed at the National Archives, more than 200 years old, are in need of up-to-date preservation efforts to help make sure they will last into the next century and beyond.

"As the country approaches the new millennium, we want to make sure that the blueprints of democracy and this grand, tattered old flag are safe," said Rebecca W. Rimel, president of the Pew Charitable Trusts. "These are American touchstones and we are proud to offer our help to protect them from the ravages of time."

She added: "With historic Philadelphia as our home-and Independence Hall the birthplace of the Declaration of Independence-it is particularly fitting that the Trusts celebrate their 50th year with this gift to the nation that will guarantee the future of these irreplaceable national artifacts."

The Trusts are granting $5 million to the Smithsonian Institution for the $18 million Star Spangled Banner project. Other significant support comes from Polo Ralph Lauren and a Congressional appropriation.

The Star-Spangled Banner, the 30-by-34-foot flag sewn by a Baltimore widow, is housed at the National Museum of American History in Washington. This flag was flying over Fort McHenry in Baltimore on the morning of Sept. 13, 1814 and inspired Francis Scott Key to pen the words to our national anthem.

The Smithsonian will place it in an on-site glass-enclosed conservation laboratory where it can be cleaned and treated before being reinstalled.

The public will be able to see the banner during the conservation process.

The plan to develop enclosures for the Charters includes a grant of $800,000 from the Trusts to the Foundation for the National Archives and $1.32 million from the federal government.

The Pew Charitable Trusts, among the nation's largest philanthropies, support nonprofit activities in the areas of culture, education, the environment, health and human services, public policy and religion.

Expert gives advice on window treatments

Topped by playful scalloped cornices, Hunter Douglas window shades in a dark color and linen-like texture add coziness to this breakfast nook.

(NAPSA)-You can take advantage of this window of opportunity to learn the art of selecting window treatments.

Consider this advice from experts at Hunter Douglas:

• Space: First, look at the window space itself, then the area surrounding it and, finally, the entire room. To visually expand a window or room, choose soft, light or cool colors. Another hint: Coordinate the window treatments with the wall color because low contrasts keep the eye moving around the room. Reverse the technique to make the window or room appear smaller and cozier by using dark, warm colors and high contrast between the window and wall.

• Line: Vertical lines add height and dignity to a room, creating a formal atmosphere and drawing the eye upwards. Vertical lines can also add height and importance to patio doors and other types of windows. Vertical blinds in one of the many fashionable choices available from Hunter Douglas or Luminette Privacy Sheers®-a treatment that combines a sheer face fabric and adjustable fabric vanes-are good options here.

Horizontal lines are usually considered less formal. However, certain horizontally oriented treatments such as Country Woods® wood blinds and Silhouette® window shadings, a unique combination blind and shade with a sheer look, as well as pleated or Duette® honeycomb shades in silk-like fabrics can be quite formal and elegant. Also, using valances and other decorative overtreatments can add height and formality to any horizontal window covering.

Curved lines on windows have a softening effect. Treatments with curves include swags, tapered valances, balloon shades and Vignette® window shadings from Hunter Douglas.

• Form: Window fashions may also be used to alter and improve existing window shapes. For example, considering rectangles are generally more attractive than squares, a treatment can be installed outside the window opening and above any molding to lengthen the look of the window.

• Color: This is the most important element in a room when it comes to setting a mood. It is also what drives many decorating decisions. A good rule of thumb when combining colors in a room is to let the primary color be featured in up to 75 percent of the room, your secondary color about 15 to 20 percent, and your third color about 10 percent. The primary color is usually in the floor and/or wallcoverings since they take up the most area.

• Texture: More and more interesting textures are being introduced every day. Visual texture-a material's roughness or smoothness-is the most important consideration. Using several levels of complementary textures adds variety and maintains interest.

Additional information about window treatments is available by calling 1-800-937-STYLE or by visiting the Web site at www.hunterdouglas.com.

Marvelous Easter Almond Muffins

(NAPSA)-A wonderful way to celebrate Easter and the return of spring is by serving a seasonal brunch for friends and family.

An easy-to-prepare brunch can feature such favorite foods as quiche, ham, fruit, bagels and some mouthwateringly marvelous almond muffins made with delicious Imperial® Spread.

This tasty spread can add a crowning touch to family meals, whether it's used to make cookies, brownies or simply spread on toast. King for cooking and baking, Imperial Spread has a smooth consistent quality and rich buttery taste that will make your family feel like royalty.

Almond Muffins - 12 muffins

3	cups all-purpose flour
1	Tbsp. baking powder
1/2	tsp. baking soda
1/2	tsp. salt
1/2	cup (1 stick) Imperial® Spread, softened
3/4	cup PLUS 1 Tbsp. sugar
2	eggs, room temperature
1-1/3	cups buttermilk, room temperature
1/4	tsp. almond extract
1/2	cup sliced almonds with skins

Preheat oven to 375°. Grease 12-cup muffin pan or line with paper cupcake liners; set aside.

In medium bowl, combine flour, baking powder, baking soda and salt until blended; set aside.

In large bowl, with electric mixer, beat Imperial Spread and 3/4 cup sugar until light and fluffy, about 5 minutes. Beat in eggs until well blended. With mixer on low, alternately beat in flour mixture and buttermilk with almond extract, beginning and ending with flour mixture, just until blended.

Evenly spoon batter into prepared pan. Sprinkle tops with remaining 1 Tbsp. sugar and almonds.

Bake 30 minutes or until toothpick inserted in centers comes out clean and tops are lightly browned. On wire rack, cool 10 minutes; remove from pan and serve warm or cool completely.

The right spread can add flavor fit for royalty to your family's baking and cooking.

Children: Visual Perception

Occupational therapy can help children overcome difficulties with visual perception.

(NAPSA)-For many children who have difficulty learning, the problem may be visual rather than mental.

A child with poor visual perception can have difficulty with the activities of daily living, school tasks and play.

Common symptoms include:

• Difficulty copying from the board, or completing tasks within the time allotted;

• Difficulty remembering what was read;

• Complaints or history of headaches, dizziness, watery eyes, or nausea after reading; and

• Avoidance of reading and writing activities, or fatiguing easily when reading.

One treatment option is occupational therapy. Practitioners can work with children experiencing visuoperception difficulties, and can refer them to optometrists or ophthalmologists for further visual examination, if warranted.

Occupational therapy for children experiencing learning problems is available in schools through the federal Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. Occupational therapy is also a covered service in many insurance plans.

For more information, or to locate an occupational therapist in your community, call the American Occupational Therapy Association at 1-800-668-8255, or visit the website at www.aota.org.

Benning accepts Oglethorpe Award

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

A sea of miniature American flags and cheers from the crowd flooded the Evergreen Conference Center at Stone Mountain, Ga., March 18 as Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst stepped up to the stage to accept the 1998 Georgia Oglethorpe Award from Gov. Roy Barnes at the Second Georgia Oglethorpe Annual Conference and Awards Banquet.

The presentation of the award came only two days after it was announced that Fort Benning had pulled off another victory, winning the Communities of Excellence Commander-in-Chief's Award (CINC) for the fourth time in five years.

Being forced to sit out of last year's CINC award, due to a rule literally called the "Benning Rule," Fort Benning went looking for another playing field to help keep itself finely tuned and on its toes, according to Ernst.

That other playing field ended up being a whole new ball game and the Oglethorpe became Fort Benning's first entrance into a state award process.

The awards program began with a speech by keynote speaker Barnes. In congratulating Fort Benning on its excellence, he admitted that he had once been an MP in the Army. He said he was always told the Infantry was the heart and soul of the Army.

"Since 1918, Fort Benning has been the home of the world's finest Soldiers, civilian employees, retirees and volunteers," Barnes said. "Winning this award is really the norm for Fort Benning. So, tonight it's only proper that we recognize Fort Benning for all that they do for all of us."

Even Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer helped make the event a little more special by sending a personal letter congratulating Fort Benning on its achievement. His letter remarked that, "This achievement is recognition of our outstanding command and its commitment to the pursuit of excellence."

When Ernst made his way to the stage to accept the award, he immediately dedicated it to Sarah McLaney, chief of the Quality Management Division, Department of Resource Management.

"Every once in a while, you have to go out of your way to recognize something that is truly special," Ernst said. "In this case, Sarah works in our quality office. She's the kind of person who will come in and say 'OK boss you have to do this. We have to compete in the Oglethorpe award.'"

Ernst went on to say that despite illness, McLaney helped bring home not only the Oglethorpe, but the CINC as well. "Sarah, this award is truly yours," he added.

Ernst made a point to explain the real reason Fort Benning wins so many awards. He attributed it to a strong community partnership and a great team of teams.

Women's History Month

AG speaks during celebration

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The 60th Adjutant General of the U.S. Army came to Fort Benning to put her "stamp" on those who gathered at the Officers' Club Tuesday for the Women's History Month Luncheon celebration.

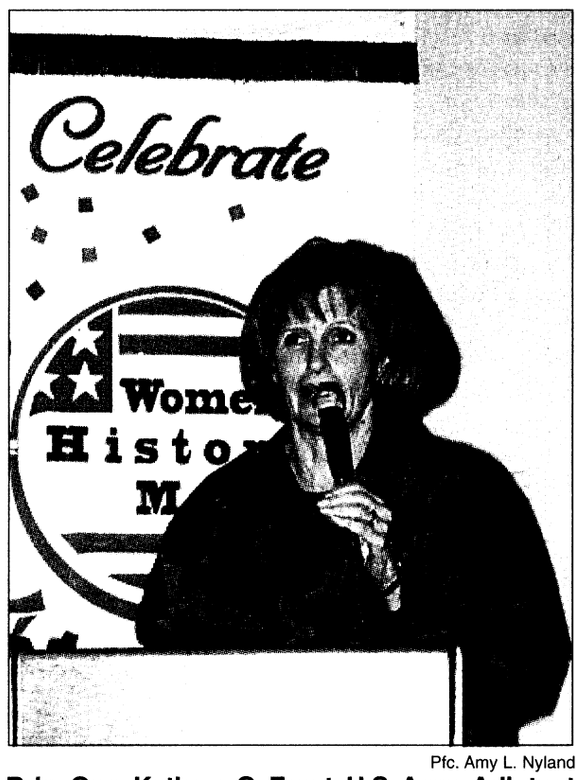
"Women, putting their stamp on America!" is the theme for Women's History Month and Brig. Gen. Kathryn G. Frost made the trek from Washington D.C. to speak about how she believes every woman can put her stamp or mark on America.

Before Frost gave her speech, Orchid Bradley, daughter of Sgt. Maj. Joe L. Bradley, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, brought the audience to their feet with a rendition of the song, Wind Beneath My Wings and Sgt. 1st Class Evelyn J. Thomas, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Inf. Regt., recited the poem Phenomenal Woman.

When Frost took the podium, she told the audience she was thrilled to be the guest speaker and even happier to be back at Fort Benning. She said that from 1977 to 1980 she served at Fort Benning and it was a "magnificent experience."

Frost jumped right into talking about women and their impact on history. Women such as Helen Keller who was blind, mute and deaf, but rose above her handicaps to become a powerful spokeswoman for the disabled. She went on to say that hundreds and thousands of women have and will continue to make an impact on history.

There are five characteristics, Frost said she believes can be a guide to help all women leave their mark on America. Their characteristics are: competence, courage, communication, commitment and character. Frost told everyone that competence is crucial and that women should continually educate themselves.



"In order to succeed and in order to put our stamp on America, we must continue to train," Frost said. "I always told my command that failure to train is training to fail."

She also said that moral courage and the willingness to "take the harder right, rather than the easier wrong," along with open communication and a strong character are also essential.

"Be proud to be a woman and be proud of everything that being a woman means in your life," Frost said. "

She ended by stressing the fact that women have come a long way and that the future can only bring more progress.

"We entered this century fighting for the right to vote and we got that right early on," she said. "There is a very real chance, politics aside, that we will leave this century possibly voting for a woman for president. Now that's progress!"

USARSA students set foundation for future NCOs

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Although small in numbers, the 11 graduating students of the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) Roy Benavidez NCO Academy, are building on the future of the Latin American armed forces.

The students representing Argentina and Colombia, attended the five-week NCO Officer Training Management Course and were the first class to graduate from the academy March 12.

According to Staff Sgt. Anthony Lugo, course director, the students learned how to plan and conduct unit training; to be trainers at the platoon, company and staff level and to conduct skill qualification testing.

"The students used a series of practical exercises throughout the course where they planned, conducted and evaluated individual and collective training," Lugo said.

Sgt. 1st Class Juan Carrizosa, first sergeant for the academy, said the students did a tremendous job on their final project which culminated everything they had learned during the five weeks at USARSA.

"They had to develop a long-range and short-range training calendar based on quarterly and annual training guidance," Carrizosa said. "This is something they can take back to their country and implement immediately into their units."

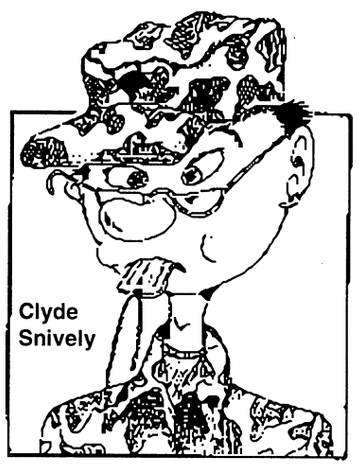
The inauguration of the academy last July was USARSA's Command Sgt. Maj. Ricardo Layne's first step in setting the foundation for training Latin American NCOs and setting a foundation for something great for the future of that hemisphere.

"The leadership of Latin America understands that we are the best Army in the world because of our NCO Corps," Layne said. "By sending students to our academy, they understand that this is the best way to develop their NCO Corps and their Army."

Layne said he feels confident these first graduating students will be ambassadors of the great training they received and will encourage more students to attend in the future.

He said inaugurating the academy was the first step — promoting it to the senior NCOs of Latin America is the second.

During USARSA's 1999 Latin American and U.S. Senior NCO Conference (SNOC) scheduled for July 18-23, Layne will have the opportunity to establish the forum for Latin American NCOs to exchange ideas regarding the roles, missions and standards of a NCO Corps. The conference will also serve to provide the opportunity to discuss the structure and development of the Professional Military Education System and its importance in producing a professional NCO Corps.



Layne, who will be retiring Nov. 1 after 30 years of service said, "I've put a little block of sand in the institution of knowledge toward the Soldier of Latin America."

The next course for the academy begins May 10 with 17 students representing Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador and Peru attending the NCO Professional Development Course, a combination of the Primary Leadership Development Course and the Basic NCO Course.

Take responsibility, don't litter

Clyde Snively
Bayonet correspondent

commentary

Do we believe the trash we see lying on the ground is going to grow legs and jump into a trash can?

Maybe it's just that we're too lazy or irresponsible to pick up a piece of paper or some discarded fast food wrapper, believing that someone else will do it for us.

And you'd be right. There are others out there who will do it for us.

Those others are fellow Soldiers assigned the extra duty of police call.

Every day, rain or shine, freezing or piping hot, an NCO and Soldier depart from each of the 12 Major Subordinate Commands at 7 a.m. to begin their day of police call.

Often, by the time they finish, they have to start over again because slobs just don't get it.

What are people thinking when they litter hallways and roadways?

How can a Soldier do this? They are causing work for another Soldier and oh, by the way, they too may end up on police call.

Not counting the innumerable Soldiers who do the police call around the various buildings, the roving police call uses 36 Soldiers, every day of the week, every week of the month.

That's one Infantry platoon, a third of a company, out of action every day of the year.

There is a solution to this.

First, take responsibility. Act with reason. Do not throw the trash out of the window of your car or pickup truck. Wait until you get home and you can put it in the trash can.

Knowing there will always be slobs, who believe in their American right to pollute, the next course of action, is to call these people on it.

"Excuse me, but I think you dropped something." You'll probably be ignored, or even yelled at. This happened to a civilian in Infantry Hall who saw a man drop his gum wrapper.

She corrected him and ended up with a tongue-lashing. No, he didn't pick it up either. She did.

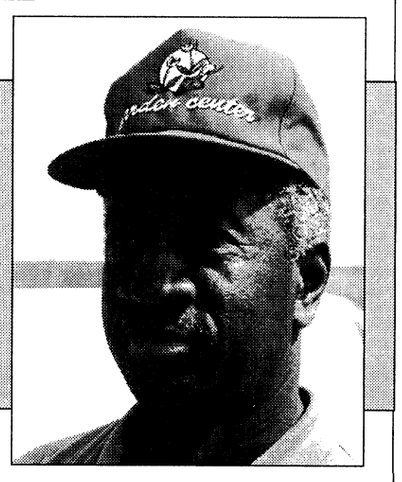
A waste of time on her part? Not necessarily. Maybe the next time he's ready to use the floor as his trash bin, he'll think about it first and decide to wait until he finds a proper trash receptacle.

And that brings us to the next course of action. Accept the fact that not everyone is as conscientious as you and pick it up yourself.

It's sad that a few parents raised so many slobs.

But hopefully more raised sons and daughters who take pride in their surroundings and are not above a little physical exertion called bending at the hip who will bend down to pickup the litter.

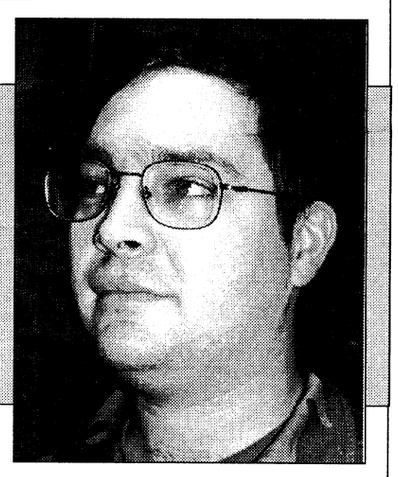
To coin a phrase: "A man never stood so tall as he who stooped to pick up another's trash."



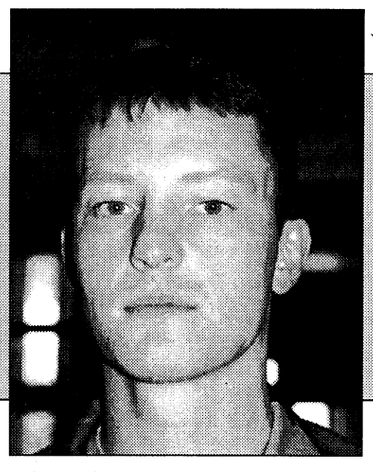
VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think the punishment for littering should be?

Spc. Angelina Sanchez, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "I think people who litter should be forced to perform community service."



David Lockett, AAFES employee — "People who get caught littering should do community service for their first offense."



Capt. Todd Sabala, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "$300 seems fair for littering."

Spc. Raymond Ashby, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "In Florida, the fine is $1,000 for littering. We should come up with a set amount of money and increase it with each offense."

Helga Siders, family member — "People who are caught littering should be forced to do a trash service to the community. After all, someone needs to pick it up."

1st Lt. Tim Dunnigan, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think they should pay around $300 because it is high enough to hurt but not too high to break them."

Child Abuse Prevention Month

April observance increases awareness

Family Advocacy Program

April is Child Abuse Prevention Month. More than three million children are reported abused or neglected each year and three children die each day as a result of maltreatment. Everyone in the community has a role to play in prevention.

Since 1893, when April was designated Child Abuse Prevention Month, communities across the country have used this month-long observance to increase awareness of child abuse and its prevention. It is a time when individuals, schools, businesses, hospitals, religious organizations and social service agencies join forces in the battle against child abuse.

Child maltreatment is one of society's oldest, most insidious problems. Recognizing that everyone can participate in efforts to eliminate this serious threat to children, communities across the country are stepping forward to promote the message that child abuse can and must be prevented.

The National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse offers the following suggestions about ways to help prevent child maltreatment in your community.

Help parents in your community by:

•Establishing a parent support group. Plan a regular time when parents can get together to talk about and find solutions to parenting challenges.

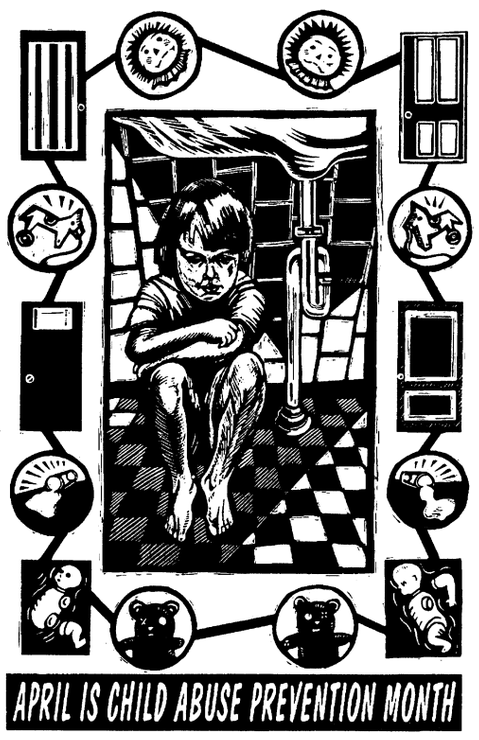
•If you know a parent under stress, offer him or her a break. Take care of the children for a while so the parent can relax.

•Organizing regular playgroups so children and parents can all benefit.

When you see abuse in public:

•Strike up a conversation with the adult to direct the parent's attention away from the child. Say something comforting like "It looks like it's been a long day for both of you."

•Praise the child and parent at the first opportunity.



•Divert the child's attention (if misbehaving) by talking to the child.

You can examine your own parenting practices by:

•Recognizing that you are the most important person in your children's lives. What you say to them and how you treat them determine how they feel about themselves. Offer them honest praise at every opportunity.

•When you're feeling troubled or lonely and when pressures build up, don't lash out at your child. Stop and take a deep breath. Remember you are the adult. Close your eyes and pretend you're hearing what your child is about to hear.

•If you think you need help, you're not alone. Being a parent isn't easy for anyone and sometimes it's very hard. Take the first step. Reach out for help. Check your community's resources for a child abuse or crisis hotline, parenting group or family service agency.

Report suspected abuse or neglect.

•To report suspected maltreatment, call the Social Work Service office at 545-1661.

•For further information on child abuse prevention, call Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager, or Theresa Sanchez, Family Advocacy Program Assistant at 545-3344.

Sgt. Damon Thornton, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, rides along the Follow Me Fitness Trail recently.

The fitness trail, located at the intersection of 1st Division Road and Dixie Road, was recently improved with money earned through the Army Communities of Excellence program.

Among the repairs, the trail was graded to a new width of seven feet, which provides access to emergency and maintenance vehicles.

After more than 1,400 tons of gravel were spread along the trail, the two-mile course is now ready for hikers, bikers and fitness buffs.

Exchange alters guest policy

Pvt. 2 Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Visitors signing into Fort Benning's Post Exchange (PX) may have to spend a little more time in line, according to the store's general manager Gary Greene.

The line is a result of an addition to the guest sign-in policy that allows active-duty servicemembers, retirees, Department of Defense civilians and other authorized ID cardholders PX patrons to sign in family members.

"We have just made the policy a little more thorough," Greene said about the new system that requires sponsors signing in guests to supply an address and phone number of the sponsor.

Previously, those desiring PX access for non-ID cardholders were required to only supply the sponsoring person's name and the name of the guest, but since the initial policy's inception nearly two years ago, the need for a reform has been one that has loomed in the recent past.

"Under the old system, we had no immediate way to track the sponsor if their guest was involved in any misconduct," he said. "They would leave the guest to roam freely in the store and when the guest got into trouble we were left with only a name."

With the new system that requires the sponsor to list their unit and phone number or home address, Greene said the problem of being left with only a name will be a problem no more.

"We want to make sure that when servicemembers of ID-cardholders sign someone into the facility, they know they are fully responsible for the actions of their guests," Greene said. "This new system ensures that by giving us a direct means of reaching them if their guest were to engage in misconduct."

If a guest were to engage in misconduct, the sponsor's exchange privileges would be suspended for a period of at least six months with a possible additional suspension pending on the length of time it takes the sponsor to report to the ID card section to obtain an overstamped ID card, according to a policy letter distributed by Fort Benning Adjutant General James E. Brinson.

"The level of misconduct we see here is significantly lower than other retailers," Greene said. "We are just trying to ensure that these benefits we offer will continue to be available to the community."

QUOTE ME

The primary reason for the existence of all the U.S. Armed Forces is to provide the military power to deter war. Should deterrence fail for reasons beyond our control, then these forces must be able to fight and win. There is no cheap way to do this. There also is no second prize in the business of war today, nor will there ever be.

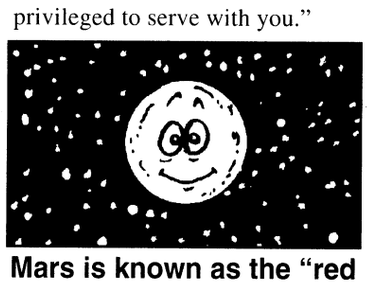
everyday does an awful lot with an awful little, in terms of resources."

He went on to say that Soldiers are the center of that team of teams and the reason Fort Benning exists.



"They (Soldiers) are at freedom's frontier tonight, as they have been every night for the last 224 years," Ernst said. "So I would be remised if I didn't brag about what we do for our Army, for you and for our nation. That is what Fort Benning is all about. It's preparing the U.S. Army with Soldiers who pass through our place to do whatever the nation calls. They are the centerpiece, they are the reason we exist and the entire team rallies around that centerpiece."

"To the team at Fort Benning, I thank you very much for what you did to get us here," Ernst added. "I'm very, very proud to be a member of that team and I'm privileged to serve with you."

MOUT site leads Army systems testing

Pvt. 2 Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

As they marched toward the rally point and prepared to make a raid on a small rural town, two Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., keyed in their Soldier-integrated laser system, employed their intelligence-gathering remote control Unmanned Aerial Vehicle (UAV) and loaded their modified M-16 service rifles with a non-lethal round that will assist the two in clearing the multiple rooms of the village's 15 buildings.

Although this technology sounds like something straight from the weapons chest of a comic book super-hero, this weaponry is already in use by Soldiers on Fort Benning as part of an experimental joint venture between the Army and the Marine Corps to find a better way to tackle the problems forces are finding as they conduct Military Operations in Urban Terrain (MOUT).

"We are discovering valuable information on the fieldability of multiple Soldier systems that will assist Soldiers across the service as they move into the next millennium of warfare," said Maj. Lee Offen, operations officer for the Division III, Dismounted Battle Space Battlelab.

This period of discovery, according to Offen, began in late 1997 when Fort Benning's McKenna MOUT site was tasked with participating in the joint-service MOUT Advanced Concept Technology Demonstration (ACTD). Since October of '97, Fort Benning has taken the lead in the experimental research leveraging on-going military technologies and exploiting commercial and government off-the-shelf technologies to meet the user requirements.

"We are able to test new equipment and then using our after actions review equipment and talking to the participating Soldiers, we can make recommendations to put the item on the acquisition list. That after actions review system is one of the keys in making this site the best in the Army," according to Systems Analyst for the Battlelab, Thomas Funk, and one that makes the acquisition testing much easier to review in multiple formats with absolutely no scenario intervention.

"When the program was designed, it was designed to be as close to real as possible so the test would more accurately reflect what the equipment would do in the field," Funk said. "That is why there are no observers or evaluators on the ground here logging the action as it unfolds. It is logged digitally via more than 50 cameras located both inside and outside of the site's buildings."

As the cameras record the information in both audio and video, the data is sent to the communications center via a high-speed fiber optic connection. There, Funk said, the data is processed into a video format, a two-dimensional format and a three-dimensional format. Each one of the different formats offer the system evaluator or the Soldier himself to see his action in multiple ways, each of which has its own benefit, he said. The video gives them a view they're familiar with and allows Soldiers to hear what and how they issued commands or how the weapon sounded when it was fired. The 2-D view allows them to track not only their movement, but the path of the rounds they have fired as well.

This view along with the 3-D view uses a tracking beacon the Soldier wears, one that is mounted on his weapon and multiple beacons located throughout the site's buildings. The 3-D view operates on the same principle, but instead of giving a flat map, it gives a virtual view of the site and allows the evaluator to "fly" around and see what each Soldier saw at the time of the action.

Discovering go-to-war equipment is key to the success of the program, Offen said, and has so far been very successful.

"We have been able to research a variety of equipment that within a matter of a few short years will be available to the Army at large," he said. "We have tested everything from knee and elbow pads to slings and discovered which one was the best for MOUT."

Offen said that as more and more equipment is researched, some of the current Army inventory has come up on top as the best equipment that is available. "We have found that some of the items we already use daily are the best we can buy."

With all of this new equipment and technology being researched, Offen said, we hope to make it available to units around the Army after the two-year test period.

Although the program reflects the most up-to-date research for the Army, the Battlelab also offers a great training aid for units desiring to enhance their MOUT skills as well, Funk said.

"We invite units to come out here and use the site," he said. "They will not find a better place to train for MOUT, especially one that has the capability for an after actions review like we can produce here."

Units from around the ranks of the Army and Department of Defense have taken advantage of the site including Ranger Battalions, 101st Airborne, 82nd Airborne, 10th Mountain Division, U.S. Customs, Internal Revenue Service, a variety of SWAT teams and local law enforcement.

"All units have to do is request the site just like any other range," he said. "We welcome the units to train here because we offer an opportunity for them to take part in realistic training unlike any they can experience anywhere else."

ITB welcomes back oldest Soldier

USAIC Public Affairs

On a spring-like day last week, three companies of Infantrymen paraded before proud parents, brothers, sisters and girl friends who drove, bussed or flew in from as faraway as Washington and Minnesota to as near as Alabama.

They came to see their Soldiers of Companies, A and C, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment and A Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, graduate from Infantry One Station Unit Training.

But unlike others, they heard one of the graduating Soldiers, Pfc. Shawn Kemmer, of A Co., 1st Bn, 19th Inf. sing the National Anthem and they saw Lt.Col. Dennis Bundy, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. commander make a special presentation to Ralph "Doc" Widener.

Doc, as he's known to everyone, fought as an Infantryman on Omaha Beach with the Big Red One.

In 1986, Doc came to Fort Benning to write a book about basic training.

Discovering he wouldn't be able to write a decent book without going through the rigors of basic, he asked the battalion commander for permission to do so. Permission was granted and at an age when most Americans are drawing retirement pay, Doc became the oldest basic training Soldier.

He was so moved by the experience that he established the Audie Murphy award on behalf of his fellow Texan.

That began his return trips to Fort Benning to present the award to the top soldiers in each platoon of what eventually evolved into C Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regiment.

The award is unique in that Soldiers vote on their top choice. The award consists of a plaque and a savings bond and a lunch at the Four Winds Café where the Soldiers chow down on the famous Ranger burgers.

As recognition for his contribution to the ITB, Bundy presented him with a certificate of appreciation a "Rock Steady" coffee mug and sweat shirt. ITB Command Sgt. Maj. James Burnette presented him a coin on behalf of the brigade's noncommissioned officers.

Doc expects to be back in August when another C Company, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. graduates.

OSUT changes increase training challenges

1st Lt. David S. Eaton
Co. E., 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt. ITB

The Army's One Station Unit Training (OSUT) is taking on several new approaches toward training Infantrymen.

Under the direction of Col. John Schorsch, the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) training philosophy is changing into a more combat unit oriented environment of increased rigor and intensity. The brigade focuses on three fundamental areas, physical fitness, shooting and operating as a member of a fire-team. In the area of physical fitness, the brigade has concentrated on ability group runs, multiple interations of the obstacle and confidence courses and faster foot marches with heavier loads. After new Soldiers are given their first Army Physical Fitness Test, the company places them into running ability groups based on their run times. This program allows the drill sergeants more flexibility in challenging their Soldiers during the physical training periods based on their performance.Soldiers attempt these courses not once but many times during their training. Each attempt at a higher speed and with differing challenges to increase Soldier dexterity and build agility. Additionally, foot marches are becoming more difficult. During non-Program-of-Instruction directed marches, the Soldiers are weighted down with heavier rucksacks and marched at faster speeds. The Brigade's intent is to prepare each Soldier for the wight carried by the typical ammo-bearer or assistant gunner. In the area of rifle marksman ship, the brigade has implemented numerous changes. For example, during the initial marksmanship training of fundamentals and zeroing and grouping, Soldiers are now being trained exclusively by their drill sergeants with help from a team from the 29th Infantry Regiment. This will allow Soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment and the ITB to establish a habitual relationship to encourage "ownership" of marksmanship training.

In special weapons, training is focusing on the responsibilities of an assistant gunner within a machine gun team. Test companies within the Brigade are giving more detailed instructions on the machine gun range card and crew drills associated with the M-60 and M240B machine guns.OSUT Soldiers receive training on night vision and laser targeting devices and their employment. Different units within the brigade are experimenting with different scenarios.The goal is to develop a training evolution for our Initial Entry Training Soldiers that offers more than just familiarization with the equipment.

Lastly, the brigade is changing its philosophy to reflect the current threat level and mission that face today's Infantry units. Companies focus on training in Military Operations in Urban Terrain which consist of fire team level live fire exercises and squad level movement across terrain at night.

Since coming to command of the ITB, Schorsch has brought many ideas and training opportunities to the brigade. It is these ideas and initiatives that will produce a better Infantry Soldier for today's Army.

volunteers – light the way

Name: Sgt. Barbara J. Horne
Volunteer Job Title: Volunteer Family Support Group Leader
Volunteer Organizations: Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment
Why do you volunteer?
I volunteer because when I first came to Fort Benning, both the military and the area were new to my daughter and myself. There were a few people to assist us in our transition, and without their help, I would not have completed my tour of service. I feel helping is my way of expressing my appreciation.
What do you like most about volunteering? I love it when a plan comes together and you get a good feeling knowing I played a role in it.
What others have to say about your contributions: "Sergeant Horne is a very dedicated individual. She has a genuine care for her unit and her fellow Soldiers. She is either leading or directing in every function that we have. She never gives up even when she does not get the support from others that she would like to get."

— Sgt. Chris Hancock

ACAP gives visibility to Soldiers, recruiters

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) Center has effectively used employer days over the past few years to meet employer needs and to give greater visibility to transitioning Soldiers.

"While we continue to support and participate in large job fairs, these regularly scheduled employer days are often more responsive to the needs of employers. When employers indicate they have immediate job openings, we invite them to come in and participate in this popular and successful program," said Harold Ericksen, ACAP manager.

Recruiters in a variety of industries frequent the ACAP Center because they have found what we already know and that is separating Soldiers make outstanding employees in any industry, Ericksen said.

"We hear this over and over when employers visit the ACAP Center. Soldiers have training, technical and managerial skills, a solid work history and a clean background check to mention a few reasons why businesses send recruiters to Fort Benning," Ericksen said.

When attending an employer day in the ACAP Center, come prepared to complete applications and interview. Some employers conduct formal informational briefings and then set follow-up interviews. On the other hand, some employers conduct informational briefings, complete applications and conduct interviews within the same day. Whatever the employer's application process, Soldiers can obtain updated information regarding the job market by attending employer days in the ACAP Center.

Upcoming employer days can be found in The Bayonet each week, in flyers sent to each unit on post, by checking the ACAP Bulletin Board in Infantry Hall outside Classroom 30 and by visiting the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

For more information about local ACAP services and employer days, visit the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 or call 545-2308 or 545 2309.

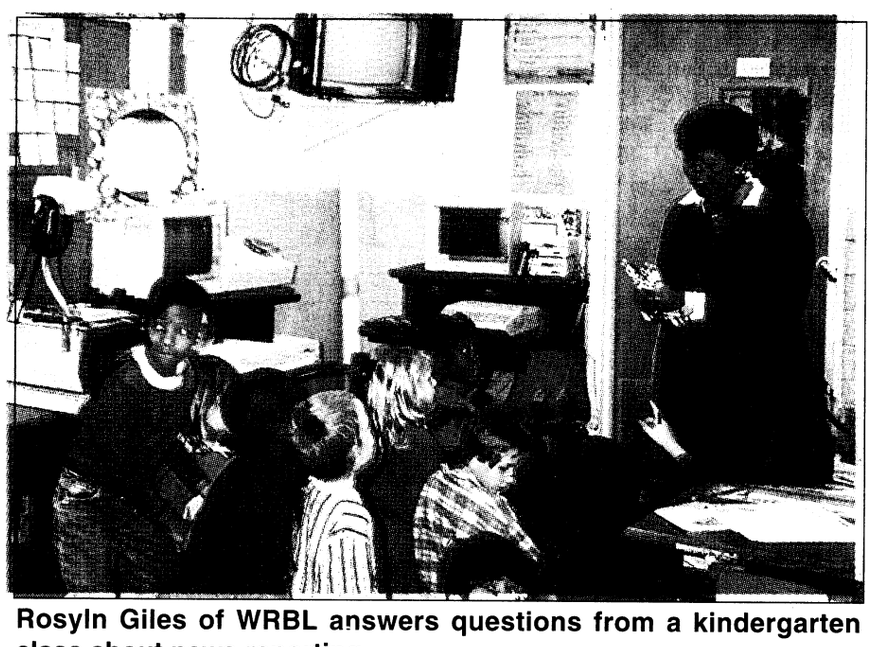
Black History Month

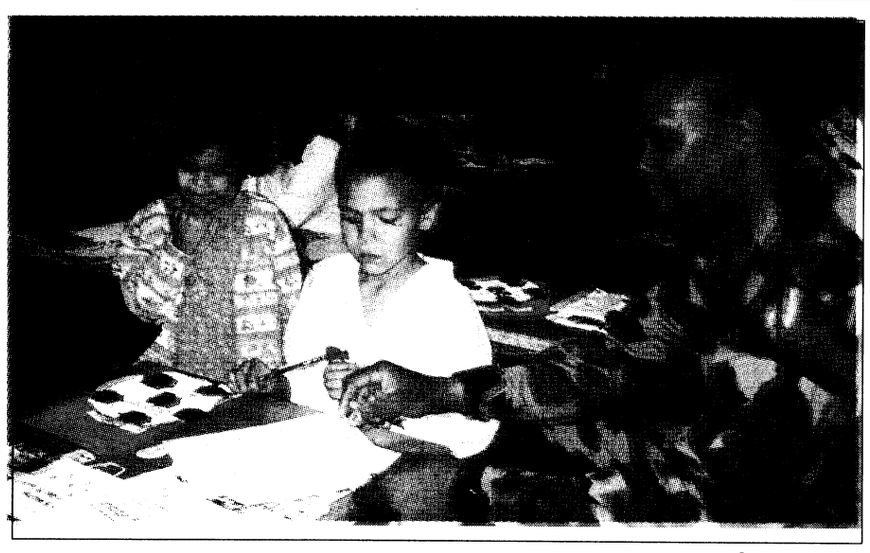
Students celebrate



Loyd Elementary School

Loyd Elementary School celebrated Black History Month by bringing role models from the Columbus-Phenix City area to share with students a legacy of achievement.

Some of the leaders who participated were Roslyn Giles, a news reporter and anchor for WRBL, Lt. Col. Omer McCants, a retired aviator and Kenneth Croos, president and CEO of the Metro Columbus Urban League.



Other guests included Isaiah Hugley, deputy city manager of Columbus and Tim Woodson, Fort Benning School Budget Manager.

The leaders came together to inspire students to always do their best and to become the best. Students, who ranged from ages 6 to 11, were very attentive as the speakers shared their words of wisdom.

Time to tackle cleaning projects

Mark S. Mandell
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

The signs are unmistakable — rising temperatures, budding flowers, sprouting weeds. Yes, it's time to once again venture outside and tackle those spring cleaning projects around our homes.

Many of us look forward to working in our gardens and sprucing up the yard. Unfortunately, hundreds of thousands of injuries occur each year as a result of mishaps related to gasoline and electric lawn and garden tools and lawnmowers.

That's why Underwriters Laboratories (UL), an independent, not-for-profit product safety testing and certification organization, recently announced its "Spring Into Safety" campaign. Its goal is to remind consumers that, while spring cleaning projects are important and can be enjoyable for the whole family, there are certain simple precautions that should always be taken.

"We realize that many consumers suffer injuries from lawn and garden equipment — injuries that could be prevented by incorporating a quick safety check into their seasonal routine," said John Drengenberg, UL's Consumer Affairs manager. 'Spring Into Safety' provides safety checklists and potential hazards to avoid as families prepare their homes for the warmer months."

The safety experts at UL offer the following tips when operating tools this spring:

Lawn mower safety

More than 70,000 people are treated annually in hospital emergency rooms for lawn mower injuries — casualties of burns, thrown objects, falls, dismemberment and electric shock. Here's how to avoid becoming a statistic.

•Read the owner's manual thoroughly before operating your mower. Learn the controls well enough to stop the machine quickly in an emergency.

•If your mower uses gasoline, make sure to fill it outside, using a funnel to prevent spills. Stay away from possible ignition sources. Always start the mower outdoors and never in closed areas, such as a closed garage, shed or basement, where suffocating carbon monoxide can collect.

•Electrically powered lawn mowers should not be used on wet grass. Use an extension cord designed for outdoor use. Make sure power cords are not frayed and are kept well away from the cutting blades.

•Make sure all safety guards are in place and keep the mower's blades sharp. If you do hit a foreign object or have a mower malfunction, remember to turn off the mower and disconnect the power cord before inspecting for damage.

The Endurance story, from the man who lived it.

The loss of the ship Endurance—trapped and crushed by the relentless pressure of the Antarctic ice—turned Ernest Shackleton's 1914 polar expedition into an exercise in sheer survival. This is his story in his own words — a classic in the literature of exploration.

"A rousing read."

Policy affects enlisted Soldiers attending leadership courses

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Enlisted troops attending leadership courses and schools now have two tries to pass the Army Physical Fitness Test.

The new policy took effect Feb. 1 in conjunction with the Armywide implementation of new physical training standards, said Maj. John A. Hughes, a training officer in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations. Under the old policy, Hughes said, Soldiers who took and failed the APFT once were sent back to their units.

Taking the APFT is now a graduation requirement instead of an entrance requirement for enlisted Soldiers attending leadership courses, according to Command Sgt. Maj. John Beck, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's command sergeant major.

"(Taking the APFT) is (now) like any other academic requirement Soldiers are required to meet (in order to) graduate from a course," Beck said. "Whereas, if you fail (a test) once, you are given an opportunity to re-take that test.

"When taking the APFT was an enrollment requirement, and this was most-often at PLDC (Primary Leadership Development Course), there was no record of Soldiers even getting into the school. Now, taking the APFT becomes part of a Soldier's record while attending leadership schools."

Under the old policy, PT-challenged Soldiers or NCOs could attend a leadership course or school more than once, Beck said. This situation, he said, essentially provided a "pass" for out-of-shape Soldiers, and unintentionally discriminated against those Soldiers physically prepared to take the course. Additionally, the Army was spending money to send the same Soldiers to the same school twice.

"Before, you'd have some Soldiers taking a PT test at the Basic Noncommissioned Officers' Course (BNCOC), fail it, and be returned to their units. Nothing (at the unit level) would happen and they'd be back at BNCOC six month's later," Beck said.

According to an ODCSOPS message, the new policy affects enlisted Soldiers attending the following leadership courses and schools:

- Primary Leadership Development Course;
- Basic Non-commissioned Officer Course;
- Advanced Non-commissioned Officer Course;
- Phase I Common Leader Training (for reserve component BNCOC/ANCOC);
- Battle Staff NCO Course;
- First Sergeant Course;
- Non-resident Sergeants Major Course;
- Warrant Officer Candidate School;
- Warrant Officer Advanced Course;
- Warrant Officer Staff Course, and;
- Officer Candidate School.

The policy change requires Soldiers attending the above courses to take the APFT within 72 hours of enrollment, according to the message. If the Soldier fails the initial APFT, then the Soldier will be provided one retest, not earlier than three days after the initial APFT or later than 10 days, during the academic portion of the course.

Soldiers attending other professional development courses not mentioned above, in either a permanent-change-of-station (PCS) or temporary duty (TDY) status, and any other resident course eight weeks or longer, must pass the APFT to graduate.

Beck acknowledged that some Soldiers attending leadership courses and schools in the past might have been at a disadvantage under the old, one-test APFT policy. For example, he said, Soldiers stationed in far-flung locales like Korea who take basic or advanced NCO courses in the States most likely would be weary from travel, and therefore need some time to rest up for an APFT or be allowed to re-test at a later date.

"I would like to think that we're not going to put Soldiers in a situation where they are subject to failure ... we want to train and prepare our NCOs to be successful," Beck said. "If you fly somebody halfway around the world and then make them take a PT test within eight hours of getting off the airplane ... I mean, it is just common sense."

Today's Army NCO Corps is "the best-ever," said Beck, who entered the Army in 1969.

"The NCOs we are producing today are better in the tactical and technical application of their skills than those 30 years ago," Beck said. "I think we're putting out a good (NCO) product; not that we can't always refine our methods of developing leaders."

Today's NCOs are also in good physical shape, Beck said. Any concerns that the recently adopted upgraded APFT standards might be harder to meet or "max," will soon dissipate, he said.

"When I came into the Army, we were doing a five-event PT test," Beck said. "When we changed to the three-event PT test, which I think was in the early '80s, a lot of the Army said 'There go our PT standards.'

"I think our fitness level as an Army improved when we went from a five-event to a three-event PT test. But, all you have to do with Soldiers is explain the standard ... they'll learn it and will perform at the standard. So, I don't see the new PT standards as any sort of issue, at all.

"In three year's time, or less, everybody will be used to the new standards," he concluded.

Health fair

Screenings help prevent medical problems

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Blood pressure, vision and dental screening were all part of the U.S. Army School of the Americas' (USARSA) Health Fair, March 4-5, inside Building 35.

According to Carmen Ramos, Fort Benning Community Health Nurse, the event was sponsored through her department in coordination with the post's Health Promotions Center.

Ramos said the purpose of the Health Fair was to identify any health problems that existed in the past and prevent any from happening in the future.

We are preventive medicine primarily, she said. If anything is found, we refer the person to their Troop Medical Clinic (TMC), who would then refer them to a specialist.

The two-day event was split with the USARSA students, guest instructors and Soldiers getting screened on the first day and the spouses on the second day.

Besides the routine screenings — nutritional, social and child care advise was available, along with a load of health educational material.

"This is a very good thing for USARSA personnel," said Maj. Alidio Naime, a Command and General Staff Officer Course (CGSOC) student from the Venezuelan army. "This was an opportunity to gather valuable information to better our health."

Dolores Cherry, counseling psychologist with the post's Social Work Services, said the fair was very important for the spouses because most of them have no idea what services are available for them and their families on post.

"This is very important for us," said Cloda Ocando, wife of Lt. Col. Douglas Ocando, a CGSOC student from Venezuela. "The Health Fair gave us the information we would need in case a health problem arises. That information is very reassuring."

Ocando also said the information she received was essential because she learned many new preventive ways to deal with health and social crisis.

"This was a tremendous benefit for us," she said. "We appreciate it and thank all the representatives coordinating and working the fair."

New program helps families deal with loss

Michelle Harvey
Special to Bayonet©

The death of an infant may be one of the most devastating situations a family can endure.

Losing a baby due to miscarriage, ectopic pregnancy, stillborn or Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS) can lead to feelings of grief and guilt among the families involved.

In order to provide support and encouragement for these grieving families in the Fort Benning community, Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) now offers the Infant Bereavement Program.

Since January, the support group meets at 7 to 8:30 p.m. every other Monday in the hospital's chapel for eight sessions, and gives families the opportunity to learn and talk about their painful experience.

In order to bring closure and understanding to the families in need, the group discuss topics like grief, changes within the family unit, healing and learning how to cope with the loss of a child.

"Only 20 percent of families who suffered a significant loss actually seek out a support group," said Kathi Derse, founder and coordinator of the bereavement program.

"But support groups are here to bring families together with the common grief, so they will know there are others who are going through the same experience," she said.

The group will also provide counseling sessions for individuals and their families through phone and home visits.

In remembrance of the infants, the group will host a "Celebration of Life" candlelight service at 7 p.m. May 10 in the hospital's chapel. Family members, including children and friends are encouraged to attend for support.

Derse, who is married to Maj. Theodore Derse, a physician at Fort Benning, has three children and knows what these families are going through first-hand.

After losing her son Andrew when he was two months old several years ago, she knows there are not many places where military families can receive support after the loss of a baby.

"When Andrew died, we knew of nobody who had experienced a death of a child before, especially of an infant," Derse said. "And it is hard to find help in the military community because these families don't have sufficient support systems of friends because they move frequently," she said.

Through her personal experience, she hopes to help other military families who are dealing with such a loss through this program.

"Andrew's life and death changed my life. I was not prepared for his death," Derse said.

"Because of what I went through, it is my hope that I can help other families by providing a program where people are willing to reach out to those who have lost a child," she said.

Tuberculosis continues to pose threat

Ely Melendez
Community Health Nurse, Martin Army Community Hospital

Tuberculosis (TB) was a leading cause of death in urban Africa and Europe in the late 19th century and early 20th century. Before drug therapy became available in the 1940s and 1950s, treatment consisted of bed rest in open air and isolation of the patient from the rest of the community.

Since 1985, there has been a resurgence of TB. It continues to be a threat to all military and civilian communities throughout the United States. An estimated 10 million people in this country are already infected with Tubercle Bacilli.

The number of TB cases have increased by 20 percent from 1985 to 1992. Persons at highest risk of acquiring infection with the germ of Tubercle Bacilli are close contacts with undiagnosed or untreated pulmonary TB, HIV or AIDS. Other factors include: immigrants from endemic for TB, homeless, poverty, drug abuse, noncompliance with the INH treatment (which can lead to the development of drug resistant TB).

The risk of developing an active disease is much greater in certain groups such as: those with HIV infection, renal failure, diabetes, post gastrectomy, malignancy, other immunosuppresive diseases and young children (less than two-years-old).

What is TB?

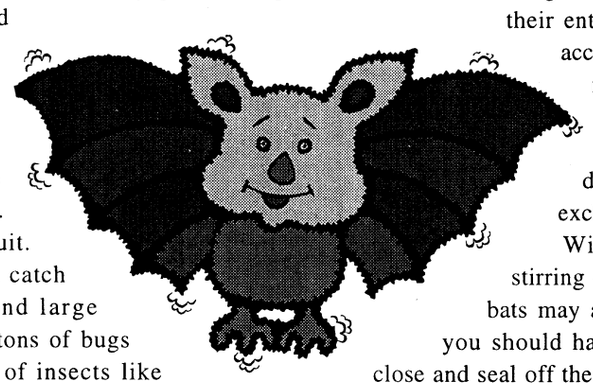
TB is a disease that affects the lungs and is spread from person to person through the air. The germ is put into the air when an infected person coughs, sneezes, laugh or sings. When a person repeatedly breathes air contaminated by an infectious patient, they may become infected with the tubercle bacillus. TB can also affect other parts of the body.

Techniques that reduce the number of airborne droplet nuclei are effective in preventing the transmission of TB. Covering of the mouth and nose with tissue when coughing or sneezing will reduce the number of organisms excreted into the air.

It is important to understand the difference between being infected with the germ of TB and having TB disease. Someone who is infected with TB has the TB germ in their body. This is called infection. The body is able to fight the germ to stop them from growing and the germ becomes inactive, but they remain alive in the body and can become active later. Many people who have TB infection never develop TB disease. General symptoms of active TB include fatigue, loss of appetite, weight loss, productive prolonged cough. TB infection have no symptoms, don't feel sick and cannot spread the germ to others.

How can I tell if I have TB?

First, get a TB skin test and follow the medical guidelines. If you are a servicemember, you can go to the Immunization clinic, TMC's, Primary Care Provider or the Health Department to receive a skin test.



The treatment for TB depends on whether a person has TB disease or only TB infection. A person who has become infected with TB, but does not have TB disease, may be given preventive therapy. Preventive therapy aims to keep dormant germs that are not doing any damage right now, but could break out later. If a doctor decides a person should have preventive therapy, the usual prescription is a daily dose of INH for six months to a year.

Bats can be beneficial to humans

Directorate of Public Works

Bats are the Rodney Dangerfield of wildlife; they get "no respect" and bad press to boot. Bats are indeed one of the most misunderstood and least appreciated animal species. This is unfortunate because bats are actually quite beneficial to humans.

For starters, there are no bats in the United States which feed on blood. Rather, "our" bats eat insects and fruit. Speaking of insects, a single bat can catch more than 1,200 insects an hour and large colonies of bats can eat hundreds of tons of bugs weekly. Bats prey on vast numbers of insects like mosquitoes, which spread human disease as well as agricultural pests that cost farmers and foresters billions of dollars annually. They are beneficial, gentle and not aggressive, preferring just to be left alone.

The colony dwelling species common in our area have a safer track record than dogs and other family pets. We should always use common sense in dealing with bats and other wild animals. They can carry disease, so adults and children should leave bats alone, just as we learn to leave bees, fire ants and unfamiliar dogs alone.

Despite the benefits bats provide, they come in conflict with humans when they try to set up housekeeping too close to us. While some species of bats use loose tree bark, bridges and abandoned structures for shelter, others (especially females about to give birth) find human dwellings much more attractive. Single story structures rarely make a good home for bats, since unlike birds, they must drop from about 14 feet high to begin flight.

Bats frequently use several types of buildings on Fort Benning for shelter and raising their young. The Spanish-style clay tile roofs of many older structures such as the cuatrels and some housing units can provide shelter for bats between the tiles and the solid roof. They rarely cause a conflict by entering living spaces, but may sometimes find a way into attics through cracks and loose boards. These spaces provide shelter from the temperature extremes since the heating and cooling in the living areas below act to moderate attic temperatures.

When bats manage to establish a colony inside buildings, the sound and odor they produce can become offensive to people. When this happens on Fort Benning, the Natural Resource Branch (NRB) "steps up to the bat." State law protects the bats as a "non-game" species; they may not be indiscriminately killed or harmed. NRB contracts out and coordinates exclusion of the unwanted visitors. Exclusion is the term used for the process of professionally and legally removing bats from a space for the safety of humans and bats alike. This can only be accomplished during certain times of the year.

Bats have a high degree of site fidelity, using the same roost site their entire life. They can be quite determined to gain access after they have been excluded. Bats are not rodents and do not chew holes in buildings, but a dime /size hole is all they need to enter a structure. For these reasons, it can be a difficult and long-term project to successfully exclude bats once they have established residence.

With the arrival of warm weather, the bats are stirring on Fort Benning. NRB knows some individual bats may accidentally find their way into living areas. If you should have an unexpected visitor, don't panic, simply close and seal off the room if possible and call the DPW NRB at 544-7319, 545-6206 or 545-6120 during the hours of 7:45 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. Monday through Friday. On weekends and after office hours call the MP desk at 545-5222, 545-5223 or 545-5224.

Family housing yard waste pick up to change

The vacuum truck will pick up leaves in Family Housing following the current schedule through April 2. Post wide, everyone has done a great job of raking and disposing of the huge volume of leaves and yard-waste, but now the leaves of fall are nearly history. DPW will review and revise the schedule based on changed conditions. Please check future issues of the Bayonet and Benning Bulletin for changes in the vacuum truck schedule.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, at 545-2117 or write to Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA, 31905.

Disability program helps active duty

Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

The Program for Persons with Disabilities (PFPWD) provides financial assistance to active duty personnel with severely disabled children or spouses who require intense, specialized care or equipment. Program benefits may be granted to beneficiaries with a diagnosis of moderate to severe retardation or serious physical disability.

The program provides for specialized institutional care, training or rehabilitation when the required services are not available from public institutions or agencies. It does not cover homemakers, sitters or companions, home modifications or special education for conditions such as dyslexia or hyperactivity (except in cases when the individual meets the criteria for mental disability.)

Under PFPWD, the sponsor pays a minimal initial share of the monthly cost, according to his or her pay grade, and the government pays an amount not to exceed $1,000 per month. If more than one person in the family qualifies for the program, TRICARE will pay all allowable cost for the additional disabled family members.

Authorization must be obtained in advance for all PFPWD services and all services must be medically necessary. Occupational therapy, speech therapy and physical therapy requires a written treatment plan. The authorization must be re-evaluated every six to twelve months to ensure that the specified treatment is effective and that the client is making progress under the program.

For more information about the PFPWD, call Humana Military Healthcare Services Disability Coordinator at (800) 333-4040.

Raining cats and dogs

A male 9-month-old shepherd mix and and a year-old mixed breed dog whose puppies appeared in last week's edition of The Bayonet are two of the animals at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic who need a loving home.

The clinic recently changed the adoption cost. Now, pet owners only pay for initial vaccination and procedure costs, which range from $11 to $40. Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

FAP: Advocates see opportunity rather than obstacles

Family Advocacy Program

What is advocacy?

When we speak up or write in support of a cause we believe in or are in opposition to, we are advocating or engaging in the practice of advocacy.

Anyone willing to challenge the system when it doesn't work, work for laws and policies that do work and be a voice for others, particularly those who can't speak for themselves is an advocate.

Above all, advocacy is a frame of mind — not just a job title, occupation or role in life. Whether it involves a single individual or a group, advocates see opportunities where others see obstacles.

Why advocate for children?

A common tenet of most communities is the moral obligation to speak out for those who have difficulty speaking effectively for themselves. Among those who most need and deserve our advocacy are children and families in need.

How do you advocate?

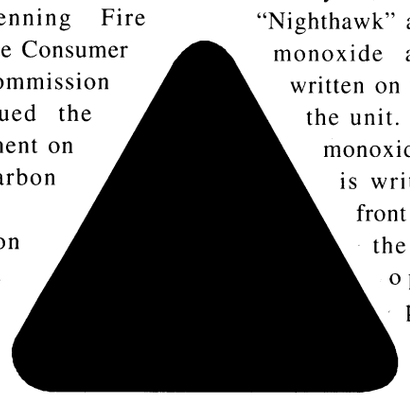
Advocacy is most effective when it is a collective effort through which people with conflicting values and goals try to overcome their differences and work together for common ends. Each part of the community — medical, civic, educational, legal, religious, charities and human services agencies — has a role to play.

For further information on child abuse prevention on child abuse prevention, call Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager or Theresa Sanchez, Family Advocacy Program Assistant, at 545-3344.

CPSC recalls poison gas alarms

Fort Benning Fire Department

The Fort Benning Fire Department and the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) has issued the following advisement on the recall of carbon monoxide alarms.



In cooperation with the CPSC, Kidde Safety of Mebane, N.C., is voluntarily recalling about one million carbon monoxide alarms including 650,000 Nighthawks and 350,000 Lifesavers.

The Lifesaver models could alarm late or not at all and the Nighthawk models could alarm late. These alarms are used to detect carbon monoxide (CO), a colorless, odorless gas leaking from burning appliances. When they don't work, consumers can be unknowingly exposed to hazardous levels of CO and suffer injury or death.

The CO detectors are not issued to family members at Fort Benning, however, some families have purchased CO detectors. The Fort Benning Fire Department, Fire Prevention Office lists the models to be concerned about. They are:

•Lifesaver models included in this recall are models 9CO-1 and 9CO-1C manufactured between June 1, 1997 and Jan. 31, 1998. The manufacturing date is on the back on the unit as the first six numbers in the serial number located above the UPC code.

Consumers can participate in the recall in one of two direct ways. Visit the Kidde Safety recall web site at www.nhawk.com and follow the instructions or call Kidde Safety toll-free (888) 543-3346 between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday through Sunday to identify whether their alarms are involved in the recall. If so, consumers will be sent a post-paid envelope to return the alarm. Lifesaver models will be repaired, and Nighthawk models will be inspected and tested, and repaired if needed.

Kidde Safety has informed CPC that consumers will receive alarms back within 30 days. All returned alarms will be recertified to UL-2034.

For more information, call Hollis Brown, Fire Prevention Officer, at 545-9235.

Carolyn E. Moller
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q. Due to marital problems, my spouse and I are contemplating a separation or divorce, and we are confused as to the types of custody available to us in regard to our children.

A. In Georgia, the legislature has set forth four types of custody situations that may be considered by the court in regard to the placement of children: sole custody, joint legal custody, joint physical custody and joint custody.

Sole custody means that one parent has been awarded permanent custody of the child pursuant to a court order, subject to the visitation of the noncustodial parent. This means that the custodial parent has the right and authority, as well as the responsibility, to make all major decisions affecting the child, which includes, but is not limited to, health care, education and religious training.

On the other hand, joint legal custody means that both parents have equal rights and responsibility in regard to the making major decisions that affect the welfare of the child. When joint legal custody is awarded, the court must also indicate which parent is the primary physical custodian of the child and which parent is the secondary custodian. Usually, the secondary physical custodian only has the right of visitation. Additionally, the court will designate which parent has final decision making authority for those times when the parties cannot agree on a decision that affects the child. If such designation is not made pursuant to a court order or the settlement agreement between the parties is silent as to final decision making power, then the parent who has physical custody of the minor child has the final decision making authority.

Joint physical custody is defined as a shared living arrangement such that the child has equal time and contact with both parents. However, it has been my experience that judges in this judicial circuit, which includes Muscogee County and Chattahoochee County, tend to frown on such arrangements and make such awards sparingly.

Joint custody can mean joint legal custody, joint physical custody or a combination of both. It is the public policy of the State of Georgia to encourage the relationship between parent and child, and the fact that the parties are divorcing each other does not mean that the parent is divorcing their child and should not be involved in their lives. Note, however, the court awarding joint legal custody, either legal and or physical, does not necessarily mean that there will not be an award of child support from one parent to the other.

When both parents are deemed fit and proper, and are able to provide equally for the child, then joint legal custody must be considered by the court. That does not mean, however, that the court will automatically award joint legal custody because the court must always take into consideration the best interests of the child. In this judicial circuit, the judge typically awards joint legal custody if it is requested; however, rarely awards joint physical custody of the child because usually such arrangements do not work.

BBB asks security questions

Better Business Bureau

Whether your business is large or small, it has the need for security in one form or the other. And, if you are like most business owners today, you have made a substantial investment in your company.

So what's the best way to protect it? To begin with, evaluate your current building security. The Better Business Bureau recommends considering the following questions in assessing how secure your business is:

•Do you have lights in all entrances? Are the lights protected from vandals and thieves?

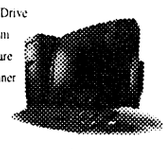
•If you have fences or walls, is it possible to get over or under them? Are they in good condition? Are gates left unsecured?

•Is employee parking separate from parking for the general public? How close to the building is it? Is there enough lighting?

•Are your address numbers legible and visible from the street?

•Can doors be pried open? Are they solid in construction? Do they have reliable dead bolts? Are your closing procedures listed and uniform?

•Are your windows secured with screw locks, pins or sturdy cranks? Are there drapes or blinds that prevent would-be thieves from seeing inside your property?



•Have your employees been trained in crime awareness and prevention?

•Do you have a foolproof system to keep track of key distribution? Do you know how many copies have been made?

•Are your trash bins enclosed and locked?

•Are your loading docks well marked and secure?

•Do you have an alarm system and a prominent sign announcing that fact?

Jews to observe Passover

Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplains Office

Because of its extraordinary historical significance, the Jewish service of Passover is held in the home and has come to serve as a wonderful link between many Christians and Jews.

reflections

More and more churches are inviting rabbis to come and teach about the origins and significance of the Seder and to have their own commemorative Seders. Over the centuries, many Gentiles have been guests in the home of a Jewish family during the Seder meal.

This meal is laden with many layers of meaning. Every food item, every prayer that is said and every song that is sung is symbolic of a religious and historical meaning.

The book that is used to narrate the Seder is called the Haggadah (the Telling). Interestingly, one thing that is not discussed is the actual story itself. That is, the story of the exodus of a group of slaves from Egyptian bondage.

Throughout the Bible, there are accounts of God telling the Jews to keep the Passover and of their keeping it. Of course, the Passover originated when the Jews were captives of the Egyptians and God was about to deliver them.

God told the Jews specific things to do to prepare for the time when the angel would pass over each house, and the first born of houses that did not have blood sprinkled on the door posts would be killed.

This was the last plague before Pharaoh let the Jews leave Egypt. God also told the Jews the kind of meal they should eat that night and even how they were to be dressed while they were eating the meal.

After this night of the first Passover, the slaves were allowed to leave Egypt. Not all slaves were Hebrews. Exodus tells about the mixed multitudes of people who escaped with the Hebrews into the Sinai Peninsula (Exodus 12:38).

Passover begins Wednesday with the most festive and famous meal in all human history — the Seder.

Some of the Gospel writers report that this was the last meal Jesus ate. It has been written about in thousands of texts and painted into hundreds of paintings called "The Last Supper."

Easter Sunrise Service set

USAIC Chaplains Office

The Fort Benning Easter Sunrise Service will be held at Doughboy Stadium, 7 p.m. Easter Sunday morning, April 4. Dr. Ronald E. King, Ph.D., will be the guest minister.

King is Executive Director and CEO at the Pastoral Institute in Columbus. He is a native of Donalsonville, Ga. He holds an A.B. Degree from Mercer University, the M.Div., Th.M., and Ph.D. degrees from Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky., He has served as visiting lecturer at Indiana University and Georgia State University and as an adjunct professor at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

King is a fellow in the American Association of Pastoral Counselors and an approved supervisor in the American Association of Marriage and Family Therapists. He is currently Chairman of the Board of the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, President of Downtown Rotary and has served several terms as Deacon at the First Baptist Church in Columbus.

The Easter Sunrise Service will also feature the choirs of both The Infantry Center Chapel and the Sightseeing Road Protestant Gospel Chapel. A free continental breakfast will follow at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex located across the street from Doughboy Stadium. All Fort Benning Sunday Services will be held as usual.

Passion Week leads to Easter

Chaplain (Capt.) Terry Romine
2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., ITB

As we approach Easter, we should consider a couple of other occasions as well. The week leading up to Easter is called "Passion Week."

Passion Week begins the Sunday prior to Easter, which is Palm Sunday. This day is a celebration of the arrival of Jesus in Jerusalem, not in a chariot or wearing a crown, carrying a scepter and riding a white horse.

He arrived in a humble manner, but the people hailed him as King of the Jews. In the tradition of another Jewish holiday, Feast of the Tabernacles, they placed palm branches in the road as Jesus entered the city and said, "Hosanna to the son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the lord; Hosanna in the highest."

Matthew 21:9 — Only a few days would pass before many of these same people would be crying out, "Crucify Him!"

Jesus was entering Jerusalem at this time with the knowledge that he would go to the cross.

We celebrate Palm Sunday because Jesus came willingly to what he knew would be his death on behalf of all mankind.

After preaching, healing and teaching during this week, on Thursday night Jesus and his disciples celebrate Passover. After Jesus and his disciples had completed their Passover meal and Jesus had instructed the disciples on what we now call "Communion," they sang a song and went out into the Garden of Gethsemane.

Spanish Catholic Worship available — A Catholic Mass is celebrated in Spanish weekly, on Sundays at 1 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel, at the corner of Vibbert Avenue and Sigerfoos Road.

Palm Sunday Masses — Palm Sunday Masses will be celebrated at the Main Post Catholic Chapel 5 p.m. on Saturday.

All services will begin on the lawn behind the chapel, with the Blessing of the Palms and continue with a solemn procession into the chapel.

During the service the passion of Christ from the Gospel of Matthew will be proclaimed. The offering on Palm Sunday will be received for the annual "Rice Bowl" offering to benefit the needy through Catholic Relief Services.

Catholic Youth Group — The Catholic Youth Group will meet at 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

For more information, call Dianne Heckathorn at 687-7148.

Catholic Pastoral Council — The Catholic Pastoral Council will hold its April meeting at 7 p.m. on Monday in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Business and programs for the next quarter will be discussed. Everyone is welcome.

Lenten Services — The Wednesday night Lenten film and pot blessing suppers will conclude this Wednesday with the 6 p.m. service and supper at the Infantry Center Chapel.

Protestant Youth of the Chapel — Senior High Youth of the Chapel meet at 4 to 6 p.m. every Sunday at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Chaplain Dave Baum and his wife will lead the group.

All senior high students are invited.

Runners complete Navy Marathon

1st Lt. John Foster
Co. A, 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

Eight runners from Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) took on the 26.2 miles of the Blue Angel Navy Marathon in Pensacola, Fla., Feb. 27.

The "Apache eight," Carl Lamonica, John Foster, Brian Sullivan, Anders Foster, Arden Cannon, Darrel Bolton, Oscar Gonzalez and Dan Wilson joined approximately 1,200 other runners, both civilian and military.

"I was happy to see so many other people there share the experience with us," Sullivan admitted.

All the runners faced an 11-mile loop inside the Pensacola Naval Air Station followed by a small bridge leading to the outskirts of Pensacola. At mile 14, runners charged up another steep grade leading them into the downtown area. After looping the downtown area, the runners passed mile 18 and retraced their steps back to Pensacola.

Anders Foster remarked, "Seeing downtown was nice, but it was where I really began to feel the miles."

A small hill at mile 24 turned large legs into weary ones, but returned the marathoners to the final stretch to the Naval Station.

Lamonica relived passing the entrance to the Air Station, "My legs were cramped and I was really hurting coming back on to the base, but I couldn't stop knowing the finish was so close."

Volunteers at the final water station of mile 25 inspired the runners to a strong finish. Finally, a right turn led the runners along the side of the gulf coast and the finish was in sight. Despite cramps, blisters and exhaustion, all the Apache marathoners persevered. Runners who crossed the finish line after 26.2 miles received medals declaring them as official finishers of the Blue Angel Navy Marathon.

"I am extremely proud of all the guys who just attempted this run," gasped Wilson after learning that all eight of the Apache runners completed the marathon within the time limit.

"Considering our preparation for the event was significantly reduced by the CALFEX (combined arms live fire exercise), a deployment exercise, and our training schedule in general, to have everyone finish is awesome!" Arden Cannon said.

After hearing of their marathoner's success in Pensacola, other members of the company were inspired to plan towards another festival of pain in an April adventure race in North Carolina.

Wilson summed up the trip, "With the lack of preparation, just to show up took enormous courage. These guys have showed the words 'I can't' are not part of the Infantryman's vocabulary."

USAMU shooter wins first junior Olympic medal

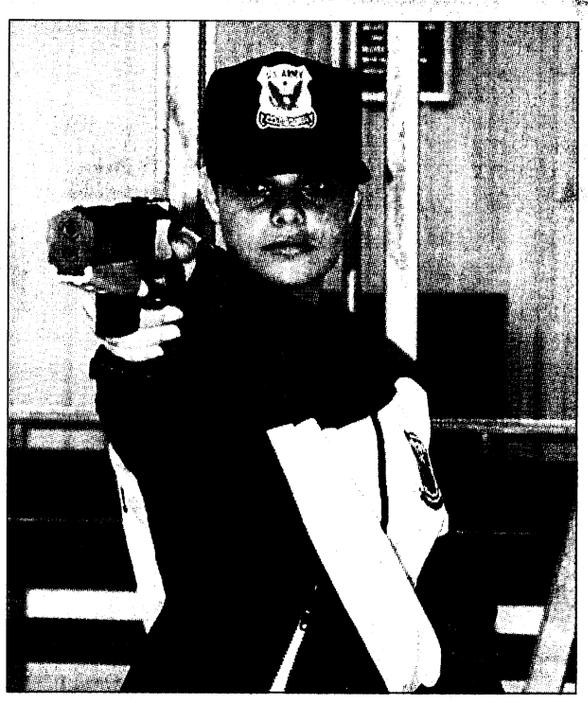
Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit international pistol shooter won her first junior Olympic medal this week.

Renee D. Cunningham brought home the Bronze Medal in the Woman's Sport Pistol Match at the 1999 Junior Olympics, conducted at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., March 14.

"This was a good experience, but I want to do more," she said after she donned the medal. "I want to be the best and win at the international level."

The 19-year-old started shooting international pistol in 1995 and has since claimed numerous marksmanship accomplishments. Not only was she the 1996 National Junior Air Champions, Cunningham netted two California State Air Pistol Championships.



At the World Championship Team Selection Matches last year, the top shooter scored a Bronze in the Junior Women's Sport Pistol Match and the right to participate on the team of the U.S. World Championship Junior Women's Pistol Team, allowing her to compete at the 1998 World Shooting Championships in Barcelona, Spain.

The Escondido, Calif. native was introduced to the sport of shooting by her parents and first learned to shoot at a club in Poway, Calif. She joined the Army after graduating from Orange Glen High School of Escondido in 1997, where she played the drums in the marching band and competed on the swim team. She said she enlisted because the Army offered her opportunities she couldn't get elsewhere.

"I love being in the Army and being a member of the Army Shooting Team," Cunningham said. "We have great coaches, first-class equipment and an outstanding firearms shop. I know joining the Army is the best decision I have ever made."

Cunningham graduated from Basic Training at Fort Jackson, S.C., where she received the High Basic Rifle Marksmanship Award. She was assigned to the Army Marksmanship Unit International Pistol Team Feb. 25, 1998 after completing Multichannel Communications Systems Operator and Maintainer Course at Fort Gordon.

Cunningham said her goal is to qualify for the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia and an Olympic Gold in 2004.

USARSA Students cruise past Instructors 4-0

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Eliminating their opponents in midfield play combined with good passing, helped the Students of the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Officer Course, cruise past the Instructors of the school's Department of Joint and Combined Operations, 4-0 in soccer action Saturday.

Both sides began the game testing each other's defensive and offensive prowess.

However, it didn't take long for the Students to realize that their passing attack combined with midfield defense would eliminate the Instructors' game.

Utilizing the field, Fernando Acosta passed to an open Fredy Diaz, who faked with his right then scored with a blazing left kick for the Students' early 1-0 lead.

Although they couldn't penetrate the Students' defense, Lima Racine, Rafael Gonzalez and Marco Garcia-Franco, managed to squeak by several times with scoring attempts for the Instructors. The half ended with the Students leading 1-0.

Diaz stung the Instructors again early in the second half with his second goal of the game, extending the Students lead 2-0.

Several minutes later, Alejandro Sosa floated the ball over an extended Pedro Orona, goalie for the Instructors, for another Students' score, leading 3-0.

Not long after Sosa's goal, Acosta, who had been instrumental the entire game, slammed the ball past Orona for the Students' 4-0 lead.

"When I got the ball, I saw that their defense was open," said Acosta. "I didn't hesitate and made the goal."

Percy Zuazo, coach for the Students, was very proud of his team's accomplishments.

"I believe that it was more of desire to beat the Instructors than talent that helped us win," Zuazo said. "We were very committed to our practice sessions."

The victory gives the Students an early lead towards the Commander's Trophy. Both teams will meet several times this year in different sporting events to determine who will hold the bragging rights and keep the trophy.

"We have a surprise for them in softball and volleyball," Zuazo said.

Fishing tour announces tourneys

AnglerSport

AnglerSport, Inc., has announced site locations for their newest team-format bass fishing circuit, the Bass Champions tour that will air nationally via The Outdoor Channel.

There will be more than $500,000 in cash and prizes including ten 21-foot fully rigged Hawk Bass Boats given away at each stop on the tour.

AnglerSport began its television coverage of tournaments last year at the 1998 Bass Champions Team Challenge in Gadsden, Ala. This 30-minute show was the beginning of a brand new television series to help promote not only Bass Champions' brand, but to help promote the sport of team-format tournament bass fishing.

The 1999 Bass Champions Tour will consist of two regions, the Central Region and the Eastern Region. Each of the tournaments in each region will consist of two-day events. The Central Region's tournaments will take place in Arkansas and Missouri. The Eastern Region's tournaments will be held in Virginia, South Carolina, Alabama and Georgia.

The kick-off of the Central Region of the Bass Champions Tour begins May 14-15 on Bull Shoals Lake in Bull Shoals, Ark. The kick-off of the Eastern Region of the tour begins June 18-19 on Kerr Reservoir in South Hill, Va.

Both the Central and the Eastern Regions will conduct five tournaments. Each of these events will consist of three practice days and two tournament days on Friday and Saturday.

Events in the Eastern Region will include:

•June 18-19, Kerr Reservoir, South Hill, Va.,

•Aug. 27-28, Lake Neely Henry, Gadsden, Ala.,

•Sept. 17-28, Lake Guntersville, Scottsboro, Ala., and •Oct. 1-2, Lake Seminole, Bainbridge, Ga.

The top 30 qualifying teams per region after each of the tour's regional events will qualify for the year-end Bass Champions Team Challenge, one of the nation's largest tournaments with a purse of more than $250,000.

For more information, call AnglerSport, Inc., at (334) 974-2600 or e-mail the company at basschampions@anglersport.com.

Live Oak Jujutsu
Jujutsu is using throws, joint reversals, choke holds, take downs and holds, preventing take downs and breaking lose from holds, and striking when engaged in hand-to-hand, hand-to-weapon, or weapon-to-weapon combat. It employs all the hand-to-hand skills and not just blocking, punching and kicking. Learn the realities between sports martial arts and true hand-to-hand. Jujutsu is ideal for people who want realistic combat skills!

Jujutsu is now available and is being taught in Columbus by Duke Meade who lived and trained in Japan for 13 years. He offers many styles of Japanese Jujutsu as well as Chinese grappling.

FACTS & FIGURES

Travel Habits

(NAPSA)-This year more business travelers are expected to take to the roads, rails and skies then ever and for longer. According to a recent survey by the Air Travel Card of 400 corporate travel managers, 35 percent expect the majority of business travelers, in their respective companies, to take more than 10 business trips in 1999.

"While the number of business trips is on the increase, so is the length of these trips," said Rob Volmer, manager of corporate communications for the Air Travel Card. "Of the individuals we surveyed, 75 percent said that their average business trip lasts three days; that's up from two days in our 1997 survey."

Other survey findings include:

- 39 percent of business travelers regularly fly internationally, while 61 percent travel only domestically.
- 54 percent use travel agents to make travel arrangements, while 46 percent prefer to make their own travel arrangements.
- 47 percent said that on average they get less than a day's notice for an upcoming business trip, while 46 percent said that they get at least three days notice.

Air Travel Card is the corporate travel payment system issued by over 25 airlines worldwide. The card is accepted by over 200 airlines around the globe. For more information on the Air Travel Card or to participate in their online travel survey visit airtravelcard.com.

The greatest number of points scored in a single college football game was 222. All the points were scored by Georgia Tech in a 1916 game against Cumberland College of Lebanon, Tennessee. There were 32 touchdowns and 30 points after touchdowns.

Post plans Easter Sunrise Service

USAIC Chaplains Office

The Fort Benning Easter Sunrise Service will be held at 7 a.m. Doughboy Stadium, Easter Sunday morning. Dr. Ronald E. King, Ph.D., will be the guest minister.

King is Executive Director and CEO at the Pastoral Institute in Columbus. He is a native of Donalsonville, Ga. He holds an A.B. Degree from Mercer University, the M.Div., Th.M., and Ph.D. degrees from Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky. He has served as visiting lecturer at Indiana University and Georgia State University and as an adjunct professor at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

King is a fellow in the American Association of Pastoral Counselors and an approved supervisor in the American Association of Marriage and Family Therapists. He is currently Chairman of the Board of the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, President of Downtown Rotary and has served several terms as Deacon at the First Baptist Church in Columbus.

King

The Easter Sunrise Service will also feature the choirs of both The Infantry Center Chapel and the Sightseeing Road Protestant Gospel Chapel. A free continental breakfast will follow at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex located across the street from Doughboy Stadium. All Fort Benning Sunday services will be held as usual.

BCTB welcomes new battalion

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Basic Combat Training Brigade (BCTB) will welcome another battalion to Sand Hill during an activation ceremony at 9 a.m. Wednesday in front of Roush Barracks, Building 3210.

The 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, will join the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment in training Soldiers from more than 160 MOSs.

Lt. Col. Edward B. Daly will take command of the battalion, which will begin training May 10. Prior to his assignment to the BCTB, Daly served as the Joint Special Operations Officer for J-7, United States Atlantic Command.

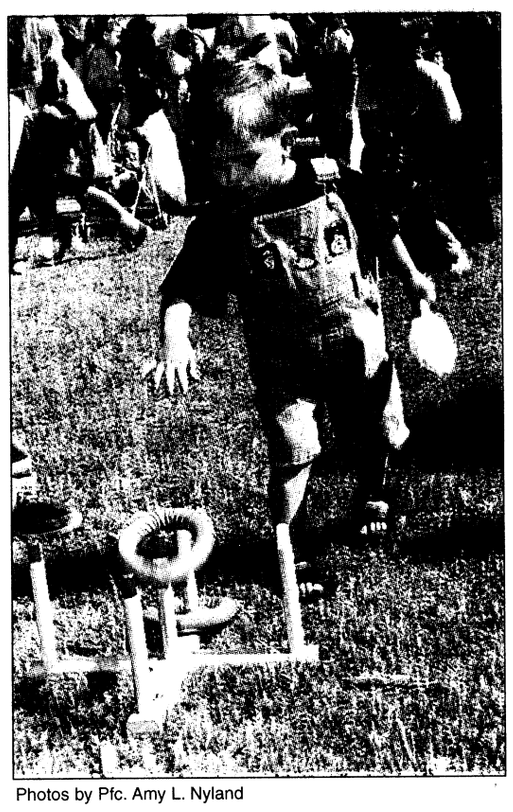
More than 50 Soldiers have been assigned to Fort Benning to serve as cadre for the new battalion, which will train 2,400 initial entry Soldiers during the remainder of 1999.

At full capacity, the BCTB will increase the number of Soldiers going through initial training at Fort Benning by about 5, 500 this year.

DON'T FORGET TO TURN YOUR CLOCKS FORWARD ONE HOUR SATURDAY NIGHT

Speed limit changes

USAIC Public Affairs Office



Don't be caught off guard if you plan to venture down Benning Boulevard. In order to increase safety standards on Fort Benning roads and comply with Georgia Code, the speed limit was reduced from 50 mph to 45 mph effective Thursday.

According to Chief of Administration and Civil Law, Bernard Pfeiffer, "Decreasing the speed limit is a result of safety concerns for people travelling on the road."

It is also the result of coming into compliance with Georgia code 40-6-183 (d), which states that the difference between adjacent limits shall not be more than 10 mph, except for reductions for the school speed zone.

Pfeiffer noted that the speed limit is 35 mph on post and 35 mph right at the city limit, the old 50 mph speed limit didn't comply with Georgia Code.

The ring toss was just one of many games and different attractions available at the Easter Egg Hunt this year. Children were also able to take train and fire engine rides, play in the astro jump, get their faces painted and meet the Easter Bunny and "Paws," the Georgia Pride Professional Women's Fast Pitch mascot.

Community recognizes Medal of Honor winners

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Two members of the tri-community were honored during the National Medal of Honor Day "Remember our Armed Forces Heroes" ceremony held March 25 at the Columbus Government Center.

Retired Col. Robert B. Nett and Retired Maj. Freeman V. Horner are among the more than 3,400 distinguished men and one woman who hold the esteemed title as Medal of Honor recipients. Only 159 of them are alive today, nine of whom are living in the general area.

The ceremony was held as part of National Medal of Honor Day and brought out a number of Columbus' top officials along with plenty of Soldiers, retired military, friends and family. Everyone gathered to pay respect to all Medal of Honor recipients who accomplished feats which immortalized them as heroes forever.

An important centerpiece of the ceremony was missing, however, when due to illness, Horner was unable to take part in the celebration.

Fort Benning supported the event with a color guard from the Ranger Training Brigade and Garrison Commander Col. John Mitchell represented Fort Benning.

"It's a privilege to be here with you today to represent Fort Benning," Mitchell said. "It's a grand occasion and most fitting event to take a moment to honor our greatest war heroes."

Mitchell took time to name a few other Medal of Honor recipients and talked about what they represent to the Soldiers.

"Clearly the Army values of selfless service, duty and personal courage are exemplified by the men we honor today," Mitchell said. "Thank you for inviting Fort Benning to be a part of this important ceremony."

Probably almost as impressive as the honorees themselves was the guest speaker for the ceremony — Retired Col. Ralph Puckett. Not only is Puckett a 1992 inductee in the Ranger Hall of Fame, he also holds two awards of the Army's second highest award for gallantry, the Distinguished Service Cross.

Puckett wasted no time in attributing the success of his military career.

"I'd have to say anything that I've ever accomplished in my military career was the result of the support of which I received from the many outstanding young men who supported me along the way," Puckett said.

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

As a color guard from the Ranger Training Brigade stands by, Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters presents retired Col. Robert B. Nett with a proclamation.

Puckett went on to say that everything he had ever done in all the instances combined doesn't come close to equaling what Nett and Horner did to earn the Baby adds to summer memories

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

When I was six, what I most looked forward to in the summer was, of course, no school. I also loved the warm days, riding my bike and spending my nights chasing fireflies with my best friends next door. Now, almost 19 years later, I have gone from those easy, lazy days of summer to being a grown-up.

commentary

This summer, the last of the 1900s, I will be having my first child.

To say I am looking forward to having my baby is an understatement. I have wanted a baby since the moment I got my first baby doll. At about age 16, I had my life planned. I would finish high school, go to college, get married immediately following college and instantly start popping out the kids.

Well, anyone else who has ever planned their life knows what happens. The only thing I did do was finish high school and go to college.

I met my husband when I was 21 and he was 18. He was leaving for the Army in two months, yet I still dated him, got engaged less than six months later, and was married 13 months after we started dating. But wait a minute — we were married, yes, but he was only 19, and in no way ready to be a father. There went my plans!

So I told him, "I have always been ready for kids, but I know you're not. I don't want you to feel any pressure from me, so when you feel ready, just let me know." Now, here we are, married two and a half years, and having a baby in June.

I think a card my mom sent us said it best. It was a card with a letter from the baby on the front, and it said,

Dear Mommy and Daddy, even though I haven't been born yet, I can hardly wait to see you and cuddle with you and play with all the baby gifts. But in the meantime, just know that I already love you and know you'll make great parents. Love, Your Baby.

Well, that made me cry for about a month straight.

I had looked forward to being pregnant, because I have always heard every woman say how they loved being pregnant!

Okay, strike me with lightning now, but I really don't enjoy being pregnant.

The first three months were the worst. I slipped by with no morning sickness, but the constant feeling of weakness and faintness wasn't very cool either. I can honestly say the only part I love is feeling my baby kick me, and seeing my husband's face light up when he feels his boy kicking.

We both know that this is a major life-changing event, and the Nash household will never be the same. We have first-time grandparents on both sides, all impatiently counting the days until their grandson is born and they can spoil him rotten. Then we have our dogs, who are looking forward to when he is big and they can run around the yard with him, and watch over him while he sleeps.

Yes, my days of running wild and catching fireflies are long gone, but in a few short years, they will start all over again. This time it will be my husband, my son and me out running around.

Force health protection keeps Soldiers well

Lt. Gen. Ronald R. Blanck
U.S. Army Medical Command

Force health protection puts the Army Medical Department motto "To conserve the fighting strength" into words that resonate in today's line Army.

commentary

Today's Army is concerned about "force protection." That means any security measures to protect units against attack. Nowadays, when so many peacekeeping and nation-building missions don't involve face-to-face enemies, the only attacks may be ones that come from behind, from terrorists, rioters — and environmental hazards like disease.

In a way, this is an ironic return to the past. Throughout history, until World War II, military medical losses always overshadowed combat losses. Today — not because we have regressed medically, but because we have become so good at minimizing combat casualties — medical issues often return to the fore front.

Today, health perils are again perceived as real threats to hinder a mission; upset the media and public and spawn damaging long-term controversies, as with Persian Gulf illnesses.

"Force health protection" reminds line leaders that Army medicine exists to safeguard their units against those threats.

Those words remind us, too. Vital as our other services are — family member and retiree care, humanitarian aid at home and abroad, research — our defining role is keeping the Soldier on the job.

Moreover, the new terminology hints at how to do this. Since we suffer few combat and accident injuries and our troops are healthy, curing patients plays a small role in force protection. The real need is for prevention.

This includes general health promotion, such as anti-smoking efforts. But it also includes specific measures against identified threats on each deployment, such as endemic diseases and parasites, toxic pollutants, biological-warfare agents, etc.

To cope better, we continue to beef up prevention resources. Creation of the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine (CHPPM) five years ago was a giant step. Today CHPPM leads our force-health-protection efforts.

Efforts range from the traditional vaccinations to such innovations as the Deployment Environmental Surveillance Program (DESP).

DESP is a tool to: assess environmental hazards; help commanders, medics and troops cope with them; and archive the data so that we can investigate delayed health problems.

Technology promises better individual health records and fast analysis of patterns that impact force health protection. From Personal Information Carriers that store information on a chip worn like a dog tag, to a global database, a seamless web of retrievable and usable data will track exposures, interventions, risk factors, etc.

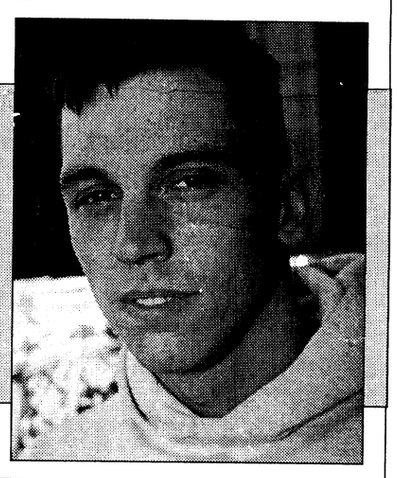
I'm proud to say, we're good at this. Troops in Bosnia are sick less than stateside forces.

But we must not become complacent. Nature often shocks us with new perils — unprincipled human foes would eagerly exploit laxness with biological weapons.

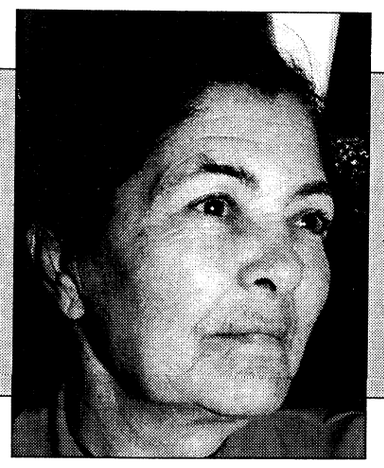
"Force health protection" gives us the concept to prevent this. Our robust preventive-medicine organizations give us the tools. But only eternal vigilance can give us assurance of fully protecting the health of our forces.

VARIOUS VOICES

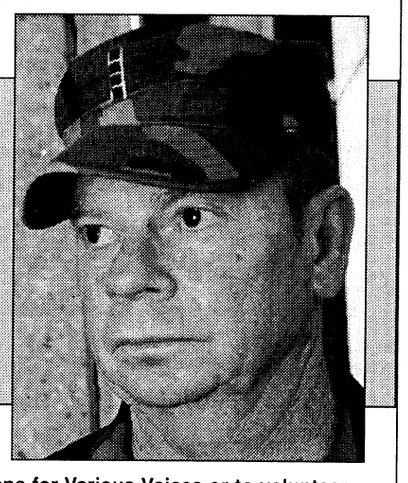
What are you looking forward to this summer?



Patricia Kendrick, family member — "I am looking forward to the sales and celebrating the 4th of July."



Tremetta Doleman, Commissary bagger— "I am looking forward to my trip to Six Flags and enjoying the sun and warm weather."



Faye Riccinto, Columbus — "I cannot wait to get out and enjoy the picnics and spend time in the mountains."

Pfc. Daniel Sperr, Company B, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I want to relax in the sun and start my life with my new wife."

Fulnaz Salley, AAFES — "I am looking forward to spending some time inside away from the hot weather."

Chief Warrant Officer Roy Crawford, U.S. Army Logistic Assistance Office — "I am looking forward to working outdoors in the warm weather."

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The mailman does not stop at our quarters unless he has something to deliver. We sometimes have bills or letters to go out and we must then drop them off at one of the mail drops.

Directorate of Information Management's response: The U.S. Postal Service has a nation-wide policy in effect that does not require mail carriers to pick up mail unless they have mail to deliver. This is because of the mail carrier's required time schedule. However, if the mail box is located at curb-side, the carrier usually will pick up mail.

If the box is located on the quarters, the mail carrier normally will not stop unless there is a delivery to be made. In this case, it is up to the mailer to deposit their outgoing mail at any drop box.

A formal complaint can be made by completing a Customer Complaint Card at the Fort Benning Post Office Branch.

Call: I am concerned that I may not be able to get into the upcoming Defensive Driving Class (DDC) and will not be able to ride my motorcycle to work until the next class, which I think is about 120 days.

Directorate of Logistics's response: Motorcycle DDC classes are conducted by the Georgia State Patrol on post at no cost to Soldiers twice a month from March through November, but not during December through February. The Georgia State Patrol does conduct the course at other locations in the state but at a cost to the Soldier.

A schedule of these courses will be forwarded to the Transportation Office.

According to the Infantry Branch Safety Office AR 385-55 and USAIC Reg 190-5, registration of a motorcycle for operation on the installation cannot be effected until the individual has completed the Motorcycle Defensive Driving Course.

Do you ever wonder?

The terms D-day and H-hour are used for the day and hour on which a combat attack or operation is to be initiated. They designate the day and hour of the operation when the day and hour have not yet been determined, or where secrecy is essential.

The letters are derived from the words for which they stand, "D" for day of the invasion and "H" for the hour operations actually begin.

There is but one D-day and one H-hour for all units participating in a given operation. It is unnecessary to state that H-hour is on D-day.

The earliest use of these terms by the Army that the Center of Military History has been able to find was during WWI. In Field Order Number 9, First Army, American Expeditionary Forces, dated Sept. 7, 1918: "The First Army will attack at H-hour on D-day with the object of forcing the evacuation of the St. Mihiel Salient."

D-day for the invasion of Normandy was set for June 6, 1944, and that date has been popularly referred to by the short title "D-day."

Soldiers can access finance information over telephone

Army News Service

Soldiers have a way to access pay information from anywhere in the world via touch-tone telephone, at any time of day.

An automated Interactive Voice Response System (IVRS), implemented last year by the Defense Finance and Accounting Service (DFAS) — Indianapolis Center, enables U.S. Army active-duty, reserve, and National Guard members to access pay information from the master military pay account 24-hours-a-day, seven-days-a-week, said Michael A. Plozay, DFAS-Indianapolis public affairs official.

Service members just call the IVRS at (317) 510-0299 or DSN 699-0299, officials said. The system goes through a series of questions that enable the caller, using a touch-tone telephone, to establish a secure, confidential personal identification number, or PIN. The PIN is known only to the caller and is required to access pay data each time the service member places a call.

Once the PIN is validated, service members can access pay information regarding Direct Deposit information for mid- and end-of-month pay, allotments and bonds, tax information and debt and leave information, DFAS officials said.

The IVRS system also provides generic information on frequently asked questions such as non-receipt of allotments, information on bonds in safekeeping, reporting procedures for lost or stolen bonds, inquiries regarding estimated earnings for purposes of civilian retirement and direct access to a bond specialist.

While IVRS is a convenient, easy way to obtain pay information, service members are encouraged to contact their finance office as the primary channel for resolving pay issues and obtaining information, according to DFAS officials.

Reservists, National Guard members, and separatees seeking pay information are encouraged to call the customer service line at (317) 510-2800 or DSN 699-2800. Retirees should call (800) 321-1080 and annuitants should call (800) 435-3396.

prestigious award. "They stand above all others," he added. "They are members of a very small, select group."

Nett and Horner are like the mythical heroes depicted in childhood stories. They single handedly attacked numerically superior forces while fighting from fortified positions. They were outnumbered many times over, Puckett said.

Puckett described how Nett, a lieutenant at the time, overcame the Japanese even though he was wounded and stayed with his command until the objective was secured. And how Horner, then a sergeant, rushed into the teeth of concentrated fire using a sub-machine gun and grenades to destroy several enemy machine gun positions.

"For one moment in time, Col. Nett and Maj. Horner were all they could be. They were as great as any Soldier could ever be," Puckett said.

When Nett stood up to give a few remarks, he told the audience he was lucky to be able to share this moment with everyone. He allowed everyone a glimpse of the past when he revealed his thoughts during that fateful moment when he went above and beyond the call of duty.

"As I prepared for this attack and as I prayed to the almighty, I reminisced all I was taught at Fort Benning and said 'I hope to God I can do it,'" Nett said.

He also thanked everyone he s served with and especially those who instructed him and gave him the know-how to do what he did.

"I thank God for helping me and letting me live. I thank the people who helped me get where I was, and I am honored that I got the opportunity to lead and accomplish this fine mission. Thank you all from the bottom of my heart," Nett said.

On the day the rest of the nation commemorates Columbus Day, the citizens of Berkeley, California, celebrate Indigenous People's Day, in honor of those living in America before Columbus.

ITB takes on new combat training philosophy

Pvt.2 Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

No one knows what tomorrow will bring, but a new training philosophy adopted by the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) is trying to overcome that obstacle and prepare Initial Entry Soldiers for whatever that indefinite fate my have in store.

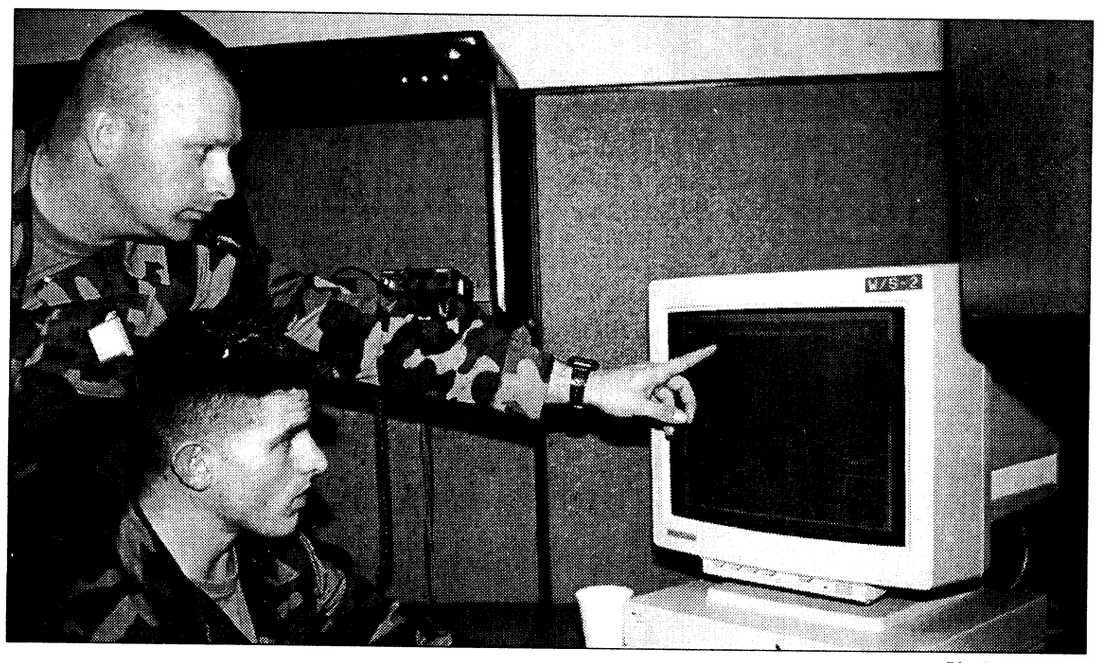
The new training philosophy, according to ITB Commander Col. John Schorsch, reflects a more combat oriented training environment that not only increases the intensity of ITB training, but brings a more realistic feel to the training new Soldiers receive.

"The brigade's new initiative to bring more realistic training to the ground warrior of tomorrow focuses on three fundamental areas of Soldierization," Schorsch said. "Those areas include physical fitness, shooting and operating as a member of a fire-team."

Once these fundamental objectives are met, he said, the Infantryman will be ready to assume his duties as part of a highly deployable multi-mission Army. The brigade has concentrated on ability group runs, multiple interaction of the obstacle course and confidence courses and faster foot marches with heavier loads to improve their physical training schedule, Schorsch said. After new Soldiers are given their first Army Physical Fitness Test, the company places them into running ability groups based on their run times. This program allows the drill sergeants to challenge the Soldiers during the physical training periods based on their performance.

Schorsch said that an added emphasis has been placed on the obstacle and confidence courses as well. Soldiers tackle these courses not once, but many times during their training, each time attempting to finish at a higher speeds and differing challenges to increase their dexterity and build agility.

The brigade has implemented numerous challenges. in their basic rifle marksmanship training as well. During the initial marksmanship training, the Soldiers are not being trained exclusively by their drill sergeants but with additional help form the 29th Infantry Regiment. This allows the Soldiers form the 29th Inf. Regt. and ITB to establish a habitual relationship to encourage "ownership" of marksmanship training. Special weapons training now focuses on the responsibility of and assistant gunner and other team members within a machine gun team. Test companies within the brigade are giving more detailed instructions on the machine gun range and crew drills are associated with the M-60 and M240B machine guns. Soldiers now receive training on night vision and laser targeting devices and learn the proper procedure for engaging targets during limited visibility.



"The goal is to develop a training evolution for the Initial Entry Training Soldier that offers more than just familiarization with the equipment," he said. "Our aim is to prepare each Soldier for the duties he may face in the future."

"The brigade is changing its philosophy to reflect the current level and number of missions that face today's Infantry units. Companies focus on training in military Operations in Urban Terrain, fire team level fire exercises and squad level movement across at night," he said. "It is all in order to produce a better Soldier."

Computer assists leadership training

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

You don't have to worry about breaking out that ammo stick or packing up an assortment of heavy equipment if your next mission has you heading to the Janus Combat Simulation facility. All you'll need is a rock solid plan, a little bit of "brain candy" and a good chair and you should be ready to take on the enemy.

As a part of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, the Janus facility allows Soldiers to fight their battle on an entirely different kind of terrain — the computer screen. The lab has 16 computer stations where Soldiers get busy honing their leadership skills and tackling the digital enemy.

Janus is a simulation that trains leaders in combat leader tasks, either prior to going to the field or when the unit returns and finds they are deficient in critical areas, according to George Mabry, site manager for the Janus facility.

Janus puts the power of leadership into the hands of the individual Soldier and gives them a taste of leading an element into battle without going to the field.

Primarily meant to train the school side of Fort Benning such as the Basic and Advanced Noncommissioned Officers' Courses, Officer Candidate School and Infantry Officer Basic and Infantry Career Captains Courses, Janus also caters to TOE (Training Organization and Equipment) units such as 3rd Brigade, Mabry said.

"A course uses it (Janus) basically to train their students. For TOE units, it's a way to galvanize their team to a specific training focus that they want," Mabry said.

Mabry explained that the process of Janus begins before the Soldiers even sets foot in the facility. First, a course instructor or NCO decides what training objectives he wants met and what the focus of the exercise is. They decide everything from who the opposing force will be right down to each individual Soldier's weapons system.

"There can be up to six sides in a simulation," Mabry said. "In other words, we can have the Bosnians, Serbs, Croats, Muslims, NATO and civilian forces and they could all have a free-for-all or they could choose up and have coalitions. Whatever the unit wants, we work for them. They (instructors or NCOs) normally develop the plan and give us the order. We develop the scenario and the Soldiers execute it," Mabry said.

Sgt. 1st Class William Graham, senior 11M BNCOC instructor, said that after a plan is made and the scenario is established, the students receive a full-blown operational order (OPORD). When they get to Janus, they are given a briefing and then set loose.

Each of the stations represent a different element such as a squad, platoon or company and the Soldiers must communicate back and forth over a radio system, just as in a real battle.

In each station an "interactor" or Janus computer controller operates the computer for the Soldier while he leads his element. This is done to save time and also allows the Soldiers to concentrate on the mission, Mabry said.

Graham said although Janus is not a replacement for going to the field it's a great way for Soldiers to practice their leadership skills in a cost effective way.

"This definitely doesn't replace going to the field. It helps you refine your leader skills like communication and sending reports, because a lot of times a leader doesn't see everything that's happening on a battlefield. He has to picture the battle in his mind from the things he hears over the radio."

"This is just an introduction to computerized simulations to help enhance cost effectiveness," he added.

BNCOC Student Sgt. Dean Kershaw said the simulation gave him a greater idea about what a squad and platoon leader go through on the battlefield and how communication is vital to the mission.

"You learn just how important it is for squad leaders to interrupt information that comes in through the radio and be able to send out good information," Kershaw said "The radio is the squad leader's most important piece of equipment and this helps hone radio skills."

One advantage Janus has over the field is the fact that Soldiers are able to get a peek at the "whole" picture, Mabry said.

"A squad leader in the woods sees only probably part of his squad, and as he attacks as part of the company and hits the objective, he has a narrow view. It's like looking through a toilet paper roll, he just sees a small area of the battle," Mabry said. "During the video replay AAR (after action review) he can see how he contributed to the whole battle or how his actions didn't contribute. They get to see the picture most of them will never get to see."

"It doesn't cover all leadership tasks, just the critical ones," Mabry said. "This helps get them to a higher level so when they go to the field they aren't wasting Soldier's time or precious resources."

OCs become Civil War POW's

Officer Candidate Frank Tedeschi
Officer Candidate School

Officer Candidate School (OCS) Class 2-99 marked their course mid-point with an officer professional development trip to Andersonville national historical site and the traditional OCS Mid-Cycle Picnic last week.

Andersonville, Ga., was the site of the largest Confederate Prison Camp during the Civil War; a place where more than 13,000 Union troops died out of the 45,000 imprisoned there. The historic site now contains memorials to those Union Soldiers and houses the National Prisoner of War (POW) Museum.

The POW Museum honors POWs from all American conflicts and has the mission of telling their story.

Recorded POW testimonials from average American Soldiers and a few high-profile ones, such as Arizona Senator John McCain and Admiral James Stockdale are finely interweaved in an emotional documentary narrated by General Colin Powell, and is featured in the museum's viewing room. OCS Class 2-99 visited this historical site to reinforce intensive classroom instruction in military leadership and ethics.

Many Officer Candidates (OCs) were visibly moved by the museum's exhibits and the tour of the prison camp.

OC David Spencer remarked that "although the lessons we learned in class were quite effective, sometimes it takes actually being at the scene to make history come alive." Spencer, a former drill sergeant at Redstone Arsenal, added that just being at Andersonville was "a sobering experience for any Soldier."

OC Ray Delucio, a former signal support sergeant, echoed Spencer's comments, saying that the trip to Andersonville "served as a reminder of why we fight and why we, as Americans, have the belief systems that we do."

The trip to Andersonville had the dual purpose of educating future Army leaders and introducing them to the OPD concept. This was also the purpose of the Class Mid-Cycle Picnic.

The picnic, held at Uchee Creek Campground, included food, games and camaraderie for the candidates in a setting far removed from the normal, high-stress OCS daily grind. Amid all the usual signs of a unit event such as a hot barbecue pit, balloons and colored signs was a piece of ground set aside for a pie-throwing fundraiser.

Candidates bid for a chance to see their cadre "enveloped" with the effects of the "massing" and concentration of well-aimed pie-throwing at the heads of a few of their most "favorite" TAC Officers. It was harmless and good-natured fun that was, as was said, "for a good cause" the Class 2-99 student fund.

Class 2-99 will now head for the field to put all their training to use in the five-day "Capstone" field problem. Capstone is the culmination of all previous field and classroom training for OCs with the emphasis on continuous operations at the platoon level.

When they return from the field, Class 2-99 will undergo a command inspection that will determine if they will enter their final stage of pre-commissioning, OCS Senior Phase. The four-week Senior Phase reinforces past training but focuses on the transition from the enlisted to officer ranks.

Army tests earth-friendly ammunition

American Forces Press Service

Some range NCOs talk about "slinging lead down range." In the future they'll have to talk about "slinging tungsten and tin." That's because the Army is producing environmentally friendly ammunition.

Researchers at the Army's Armament Research, Development and Engineering Center at Picatinny Arsenal, N.J., developed the 5.56 mm bullets, which have a tungsten-tin core sheathed in copper. Current rounds use lead cores.

Don't let "environmentally friendly" fool you: The new rounds proved slightly more accurate than the lead versions during testing, officials said. The new rounds are ballistically and visibly identical to the old and require no special handling.

Alaskan National Guardsmen recently finished qualifying using the new rounds. "There was no difference in the performance of the rounds concerning shot groups or functioning of the weapon," said Army Maj. Gary Curtiss, operations officer with the 1st Battalion, 297th Infantry.

Although the Alaskan range fire was just a test for these new "green rounds," Fort Benning's Small Arms Division Chief, Maj. Robert E. Fletcher said Soldiers firing at Fort Benning ranges in the near future may get a chance to follow in their northern counterparts footsteps.

"We are vigorously pursuing using these new environmentally friendly rounds on our ranges at Fort Benning," Fletcher said. "The Alaskan test fire was part of an initiative to find out if these new rounds work as well as they are supposed to, and to work the bugs out of of them."

"We have to ensure, completely, that these new rounds are not only safe to the environment but safe for our Infantryman as well," he said. "These rounds have to be just as accurate and just as lethal as the current 5.56 (mm) before we make the transition."

The idea is to reduce lead in the environment. The heavy metal and its chemical compounds are poisonous. Even small doses can cause irreversible brain damage if ingested or breathed.

"There's no problem now, but there could be," Arnold said. "Why not look ahead, anticipate problems and solve them before they start?"

Arnold said the concern is indoor ranges, such as those used regularly by the reserve components. He said many indoor ranges have been closed. While lead contamination is part of the total picture, general health concerns about the vapors, residues and other pollutants created by firing rounds plays a larger role in closing the indoor ranges.

"Still, lead is toxic and if we can get rid of even the small chance of breathing lead, we should," Arnold said.

"There isn't really a down side to it, "Arnold said.

The Family Support Group of the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, and the Chaplain's Fund sponsored a Valentine's Banquet on Feb. 5. The event was held in the Banquet Room of the Howard Johnson's Inn in Downtown Columbus. The banquet featured a dinner, relationship building speech and dancing.

Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Dennis D. Bundy, pleased with the turn out, said he knows the importance of families and was pleased with the active Family Support Group at 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

Infantry Training Brigade Commander Col. Rusty Schorsch, Post Chaplain and Guest Speaker for the evening Col. William Deleo and Infantry Training Brigade Chaplain Lt. Col. Robert Santry showed for the event as special guests accompanied by their wives.

Deleo spoke on how to build great relationships in marriage and in life buy giving a four-point message.

First, invest time with loved ones — this should be quality time away from the distraction of modern life. Secondly, couples and families should make an effort to travel together. Also, remember to touch the ones we love, a hug a day can be invaluable in showing love and finally, talk to one another.

Once upon a time, there lived a family — a mom, a dad, a sister and a brother.

The dad went away to a job in California. The mom was at a meeting. And the brother was baby sitting the sister named Kathy.

Kathy loved spring because in spring she loved to plant flowers. Kathy put on her raincoat and went outside. She planted six sunflowers. But they never grew.

Two weeks went by and all Kathy heard was her brother always saying, "Flowers are dumb. They can't play with you so why plant them?"

She would just say, you'll see; they'll grow. I just have to sing to them and she did sing to them. The next day, she saw six beautiful sunflowers outside.

"I told you they would grow," said Kathy.

"Yeah, yeah," her brother said.

MACH upgrades system

Martin Army Community Hospital will offer limited services April 10 because the automated Composite Health Care System will be upgraded from noon April 10 until 8 a.m. April 11.

Several areas within the hospital including the Emergency Room (ER), Pharmacy, Radiology, Pathology and Patient Appointments will be affected, resulting in minimal services. Pharmacy Services will close at 11:30 a.m. April 10 and re-open for business at 8 a.m. April 12. The ER will only facilitate life-threatening emergencies at this time.

For more information, call 544-2041.

Recruiting team conducts briefings

Jim Fenis, chief of the 8th U.S. Army Civilian Recruiting Office will conduct three recruiting briefings for employment opportunities in Korea at 9 a.m., 1 p.m. and 3 p.m. April 13 in Classroom 25 of Infantry Hall.

Briefings will cover application procedures for current and projected vacancies, information regarding overseas allowance and entitlements, various duty locations and living conditions. Recruitment is primarily for professional, technical and management positions in grades GS-9 and higher.

Reservations are required. To reserve a space, call the recruiting office at (206)764-3821 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Thursday or send an e-mail to jim.fenis@usace.army.mil.

TRADOC IG visits

The Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) Inspector General (IG) will conduct an assistance visit to Fort Benning April 12-16.

As part of this visit, members of the TRADOC team will conduct two Inspector General Action Request (IGAR) sessions. These sessions provide an opportunity for Army personnel, Department of the Army civilians, family members and retirees seeking a chance to bring matters and issues of concern to the TRADOC IG.

The IGAR sessions are scheduled for noon to 1 p.m. April 13 in Classroom 7 of Infantry Hall and noon to 1 p.m. April 14 in Classroom 5 of Infantry Hall.

Feline frenzy

Spectators flock to Youth Services to catch glimpse of champion cats

Special to the Bayonet©

Spectators poured into Youth Services (YS) to see cats, cats and more cats. Cats with long hair, short hair or no hair at all, with or without tails, large and small, colored red, blue, mackerel, smoke, classic, spotted, ticked, tortie and torbie, were carefully prepped and on display during the Georgia Cats (GA Cats) championship and household cat show.

The event was a feline beauty contest for many of the country's finest pedigreed and mixed breed cats and was presented by GA Cats, a club affiliated with the International Cat Association (TICA). TICA is the world's largest genetic registry of purebred and household pet cats and shows are held in the U.S., Canada, Japan, Europe, Mexico and South America. TICA honors the highest scoring pedigree cats, kittens, alters (spayed or neutered), household pet kittens (HHPK) and household cats (HHPC) with regional and international awards.

Twelve judges in six judging rings, over a two-day period, judged more than 150 cats in the YS ballroom.

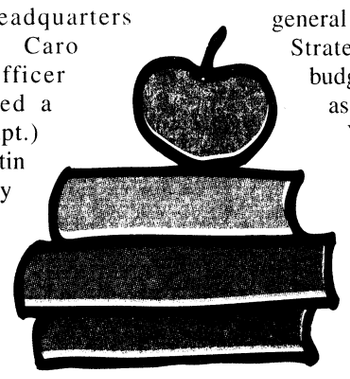
According to Liz Flynn, vice president of GA Cats, TICA recognizes 40 breeds of cat to include Cornish Rex, Sphynx, Norwegian Forest, Persian, Maine Coon and Russian Blue. Judges undergo extensive training and testing before they are licensed so they are knowledgeable about all the breeds and the standard requirements for each one.

"When a judge is handling a cat, he is evaluating how well that cat fits the standard of its particular breed," Flynn said. "Household pets are evaluated solely on condition, grooming, disposition and the judge's subjective opinion on what constitutes a beautiful cat."

Competition is structured like a pyramid. At the bottom of the pyramid is the classification of the entries (kittens, adults, alters, HHPK and HHPC).

The next level is color. All cats of the same breed, division and color compete against each other. Judges award the top five best cats at this level. Each breed of cat is then judged by division (all black Maine Coon cats) and the best three are awarded ribbons. Once the judge has selected the first through third best of each division, he will select the first best through third best of breed.

The finals begin when the judge finishes judging all cats within a particular classification (all kittens regardless of breed). The top 10 overall best cats are awarded ribbons in each classification and earn points toward being a champion cat. Less than one percent of the cats registered in TICA ever achieve the title of Supreme Grand Champion.



"Finals are important to exhibitors, whether the final is 10th best cat or best cat," said Bill Rahm, retired military and owner of Indiana Jones a Quadruple Grand Champion Maine Coon Cat. "Indy is a special cat and he enjoys every minute of competition — he is well on his way to becoming a Supreme Grand Champion."

Board discusses plans for upcoming years

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning School Board held their March meeting Monday. Among topics discussed were Teacher of the Year and the Strategic Planning Process for the years 2001-2006.

First, Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent, introduced fifth-grade Stowers student Chris Galloway, 12, son of Heather and Sgt. 1st Class Robert Wilhoite, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy, who received a certificate from Dr. (Capt.) Edwin Anselmi from Martin Army Community Hospital for his third-place nationwide winning poster in the Tars Wars national competition. Galloway will also receive a savings bond. Tar Wars is designed to teach students the dangers of smoking.

Next, Dr. Wanda Person, media specialist from Wilson Elementary and Fort Benning Schools Teacher of the Year, told those present about her experiences as Teacher of the Year.

"I had many excellent teachers throughout elementary school," Person said. "But the one who was my inspiration to become a teacher was Mattie Belle Smith, my sixth-grade teacher."

She went on to say how she kept in touch with Smith until Smith died about 18 months ago.

Person said it was an honor to be nominated by her peers as Teacher of the Year.

"Recognition for any teacher is recognition for every teacher," Person said. "It's an honor to work among colleagues who inspire us."

Before teachers can earn the honor as Teacher of the Year, they are first nominated at the school level by their peers. Then applicants must fill out a "fairly lengthy application," according to Person.

"The application was a lot of soul searching. It's a tool for professional growth."

The Teachers of the Year were given an in-depth tour of the Department of Defense Education Activity Headquarters in Washington D.C. They were presented trophies at a dinner and were given an executive tour of the Pentagon.

The next order of business was a general briefing by McMullen on the Strategic Planning Process, then a budget update by Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent and Tim Woodson, budget officer, followed by a consolidated income statement of the school lunchroom fund for February from Gwyn Maddox.

To end the meeting, McMullen gave the Superintendent's Report.

"The community enjoyed a number of special events during March," McMullen said. "These included Toast and Topics at White, Math Mentors at Loyd, a celebration honoring Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company who served with the humanitarian relief effort mission in Nicaragua and a spring musical program at Dexter."

McMullen also had high praise for Dexter Elementary's e-Club.

"Dexter's e-Club won first place at state in the Educational Initiatives Category for Keep Georgia Beautiful. Sponsored by Earnestine Ezekiel and Ann Horn, kindergarten teachers at Dexter, these children have made a great impact on the community. Thanks to the support of the Officers' Wives' Club and the Garrison Commander's office, 32 children and their parents attended the celebration in Atlanta. Governor Roy Barnes gave our children special recognition."

McMullen also said she was very pleased with the increase in volunteer hours and actual volunteers in the schools.

The next school board meeting will be held in April.

Hair raising

Adam Weinbaum (right), physical education teacher at Stowers Elementary School, grimaces as principal Glenn Hughes shaves off his hair March 24.

In an effort to motivate students to participate in the Faith Holiday Race, Weinbaum made a bet with the children that if enough came out to the race to earn a participation trophy, he would shave his head in front of the entire school. More than 70 students showed up, making it the first time Stowers received a trophy for the race.

Teachers and students who placed in the race also got the chance to take a chunk out of Weinbaum's hair before it was shaved.

National bird calls Fort Benning home

Monika J. Dey
Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning, Home of the Infantry, is also home to our national bird.

The bald eagle was adopted as our national bird in 1782. At that time, it was estimated that there were between 25,000 and 75,000 nesting bald eagles in the lower 48 states.

Habitat destruction, indiscriminate shooting and pesticide contamination led to their decline. The widespread use of the chemical DDT (a bio-accumulating pesticide) interfered with proper formation of the eggshells of nesting birds of prey causing the eggshells to be too thin. The eggshells would break before they could hatch.

As early as 1940, conservation of this magnificent bird of prey became became a national issue. Congress passed the Bald Eagle Protection Act in 1940, and the species was declared an endangered species in 1967.

The banning of the chemical DDT in conjunction with captive breeding, protection and the phase-out of lead shots have resulted in dramatic increases in the number of breeding pairs. The status of the bald eagle was changed to federally threatened in June of 1995. Continued increases in bald eagle numbers may soon lead to federal de-listing. The eagle is still listed as endangered by the state of Georgia, which has 32 nesting pairs.

Bald eagles are brown as immature adults and acquire the white head and tail at about 4-5 years of age. They nest during the winter with incubation commencing in late December or early January. Both adults take turns incubating the eggs for about 35 days and the young learn to fly in about three months. The young eagles will spend about a month learning to fish and hunt with the adults before they all migrate north in June.

Bald eagles are primarily fish and carrion eaters, but they will catch turtles, ducks, rodents and snakes. Adult females may weigh up to 14 pounds and have a wingspan of up to eight feet. Males weigh seven to 10 pounds and have wingspans about six and a half feet. The pair mate for life and lay one clutch of two or three eggs each year and usually raise one or two young. Their huge nests may reach 10 feet in diameter and weigh up to 2,000 pounds since the adults add to the nest each season.

Fort Benning's pair of bald eagles has successfully hatched and raised at least one offspring each year for the past six years. The pair constructed a new nest in 1995 and 1996 that is closer to the river, and they have raised two eaglets each year since then. The nest is monitored weekly during the nesting season to document incubation, hatching and successful fledgling. There are restrictions to hunting and training in the areas around the nest to ensure Fort Benning complies with regulatory requirements of the endangered species recovery plan. Fort Benning also participates in the Mid-Winter Eagle Survey, reporting results to the Georgia Department of Natural Resources. They report the data to the national coordinator.

There are two eaglets in the nest this year again, and they look healthy and vigorous so far. The nest is so large that it usually takes a month or so to see the young eagles and determine how many there are. When they are first seen they are still in downy feathers with lighter feathers on their heads and they look like they have "buzz-cuts." As they grow, they lose the downy feathers and their flight feathers come in. They can sometimes be seen sitting at the edge of the nest, exercising their wings in preparation for their first flight. Like any airborne trainee, they are awkward and appear apprehensive as they prepare for their first leap out of the safety of the nest. Landing is also a critical skill to young eagles. Their first landings are usually not very graceful, but in a very short time they exhibit skillful takeoffs and landings.

The eagle was important to the Native American culture, and they respected this large bird of prey. The eagle is all that remains of the image portrayed in the artist's rendition of Uchee Town. Uchee Town was a vast encampment that existed in the 1780s on the banks of the Chattahoochee River on the Alabama side of Fort Benning. Bald eagles can still be spotted over this area today from December to June. We hope that more eagles will find Fort Benning a safe place to raise their young in the future.

As the Home of the Infantry and Airborne School, Fort Benning is honored to protect the symbol of our country, the bald eagle.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Certification constitutes authorized child care

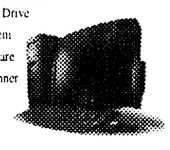
Directorate of Community Activities, Child Development Services

Are you providing or using unauthorized child care?

There is often confusion about what constitutes unauthorized child care in Army quarters. Anyone providing child care in quarters for more than 10 child hours per week on a regular basis is doing unauthorized care, even if no payment is made. Uncertified child care in quarters could result in the loss of post housing.

Individuals who are certified as Family Child Care providers go through a process that begins with a background clearance check on all family members over the age of 12. They attend 30 hours of training and must be certified in First Aid and CPR. Their quarters are inspected by personnel from safety, fire prevention and preventive medicine. After they are approved to keep children, their homes are monitored regularly by Family Child Care staff to ensure that nutritional standards, educational programs, administrative procedures and safety features are maintained. Ongoing training hours are also required. Certified child care providers are authorized to keep up to six children (two under two years), including their own who are under eight years.

Becoming a Family Child Care provider is a lengthy process, but parents can be assured that their child will receive excellent care by a trained professional in a safe, nurturing and stimulating home environment. Their homes can be identified by the Family Child Care symbol, a yellow sign with a rainbow.



Family Child Care providers are needed in all areas, but especially in McGraw Manor, Indianhead Terrace and on Main Post. The next orientation will be in April.

To get more information on becoming a Family Child Care provider or to obtain names of the providers who have openings, call the Family Child Care office at 544-1623 or 687-4038.

Everybody loves to trash teenagers, right?
Maybe they don't realize that we do care. That we can make a difference. Get involved in Crime Prevention. Clean up parks. Teach younger kids. Start a school or neighborhood watch. And help make your community safer and better for everyone. Together, we can prove them wrong by doing something right.

Smoke detector hints can help save lives

Fort Benning Fire Department

It's the time of year when the time changes and it is also time to change those batteries in your smoke detectors. The Director of Public Safety, Col. Thomas Cain, the Post Fire Chief, Arthur Simmons, and the Fort Benning Fire Department recommend to change those batteries Monday. This will ensure a fresh battery and a workable smoke detector.

The Fort Benning Fire Department has teamed up with Burger King and the Army and Air Force Exchange System (AAFES) to promote changing the batteries in your smoke detectors on Monday with a display booth at the Fort Benning Main Mall. The booth will be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and will offer a card for a free order of french fries at Burger King with every battery turned in and the purchase of a new one at AAFES.

Years of real life experience show that installing smoke detectors cuts your risk of dying in a home fire almost in half. A smoke detector is your first line of defense.

Remember, most people who die in home fires are not in the room where the fire starts. Smoke detectors alert you to a developing fire and allows you time to escape. Smoke detectors should be installed on every level of your home to include the basement. Smoke detectors should also be installed outside each sleeping area. The Fort Benning Fire Department recommends that you sleep with the bedroom doors closed to slow the spread of smoke and fumes during a fire.

Test your smoke detector at least once each month and clean them at least twice a year when you change your batteries. Use a vacuum cleaner to remove dust and cobwebs that can degrade the sensitivity of the detector. Never paint any part of a smoke detector.

For more information on smoke detector maintenance, contact any Post Fire Station or the Fire Prevention Office at 545-9235.

Abuse of legal substances is rising

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Recently, a lot of public attention has been brought to the abuse of common household chemicals as inhalants. This abuse has become especially popular among children and adolescents.

Items of abuse include spray cans of paint, hair spray, furniture polish and insecticides. In fact, the propellant gas in almost every spray can is abused.

The small cylinders of nitrous oxide called "whippits" used for whip cream are among the propellants inhaled.

Non-spray items such as gasoline, butane for lighters, adhesives and degreasers are also inhaled.

The danger in most of these inhalants is that they create a low oxygen environment in the brain, sometimes resulting in loss of consciousness or brain damage. These chemicals can collect in poisonous amounts in the brain, liver, kidneys and heart.

An estimated 500 people per year die suddenly from the abnormalities caused in the heart alone.

The accessibility by children and teens to legal and over-the-counter items such as these and others has lead to a growing surge of substance abuse for recreation.

Many consider herbal remedies harmless, yet chemicals such as ephedra and guarana are being purchased and consumed in large volumes for a high. Unfortunately, these items can raise blood pressure and heart rates to dangerously high levels.

The prescription medication, Ritalin, for Attention-Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) has gained popularity as a street drug for recreational use.

A recent teen drug abuse survey found that by eighth grade 50 percent of children have used alcohol, 14 percent have used marijuana and 13 percent have used inhalants. A separate study found that one in five adolescents have used inhalants by the eighth grade.

Parents are often concerned, but uncertain about how to approach the problem of substance abuse. The advice promoted by most respected drug abuse counselors and several child psychologists is that parents should bring up the topic in an educational fashion as often as possible. This is also the method promoted by the group, Drug Free America.

Techniques suggested are enforcing to children the benefits of good health and the disadvantages of substance abuse beginning at a very young age.

The website, www.drugfreeamerica.org, offers information on how to recognize signs a child is involved in substance abuse. The site also gives suggestions for young people on how to handle situations where substance abuse is being promoted by peers.

"Stay a Nite or Stay Forever" ®

Triduum begins today

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert M. Santry
Infantry Training Brigade

Just what is the connection between Good Friday and Easter? As far as religious affairs, we tend to think linearly and compartmentally.

reflections

Each special day in our civil year is recognized in a singular fashion without reference to the year, to the past or to the present. Jan. 1 is an exception. The Roman God Janus is two-headed: one head looks forward; the other looks backward. On Dec. 31, calendars are tossed out, the media publishes an account of newsmaking events for the year, and party gatherers sing Auld Lang Syne at midnight.

However, religious or sacred thinkers manage time in cycles, seasons and in integrated wholes. Take Good Friday and Easter, for example. The thinking about Good Friday begins at Advent. We anticipate Christ's coming (birth) to serve, suffer and to die. The Christ Child King is born among us as one who will ascend the throne and the cross. Events between Christmas Day and the beginning of Lent prepare us for this. Jesus' popularity gradually turns into open hostility. The Lenten season provides us with the final drama. Jesus enters Jerusalem victoriously on Palm and Passion Sunday and faces defeat by Friday.

Lent officially ends on Wednesday evening prior to Maundy Thursday. The Easter Triduum (three-day recognition) begins on Thursday evening. Jesus celebrates Passover, which incidentally was his "Last Supper" with his disciples, faces betrayal and arrest. Events are set in motion for his conviction, scourging, crowning with thorns and crucifixion.

An apparent failure of his mission turns into victory with the discovery of the empty tomb on Sunday morning. The first visitors to the tomb — Mary Magdalene, John and Peter — witness the empty sepulchre. Jesus appears first to Mary Magdalene on Easter morning. Jesus appears to 10 of his disciples on Easter evening; (Thomas is absent.)

The Triduum commemorates the Easter event in total. This is an example of sacred or religious understanding of time, events, preparations and fulfillments. Christ has died, Christ is risen, Christ will come again ... chants the ancient church. Christians sing jubilantly "Alleluia. He is risen. He is risen indeed. Alleluia."

Use God to grow from experiences

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain, Family Life Ministries Center

It was early on a Saturday morning when the call came. I was at Fort Sill, Okla., attending a two-week long Command General Staff College course. I knew my youngest sister was dying, yet the call from my wife hit me hard. Joyce was only 39 and left behind a husband and a 10-year-old daughter.

Being a chaplain, I have had to minister to many grieving people, but now I was facing my own grief.

C.S. Lewis wrote after the death of his wife these words, "No one ever told me that grief felt so much like fear. I am not afraid, but the sensation is like being afraid. The same fluttering in the stomach, the same restlessness, the yawning. I keep on swallowing ... I dread the moments when the house is empty. If only they would talk to one another and not to me."

Beneath all of my grief, beyond all my tears, bargaining, anger and dashed hope came a simple three-letter word echoing like a gunshot in a canyon ... why? I did not then nor do I now possess the wisdom nor the great spiritual insight to fully, let alone adequately, answer that question.

Let me say that you are not alone in asking why, such a simple little question but one so difficult if not impossible to answer.

Daniel E. Johnson in his book, When You Ask Why, quotes Richard C. Halverson as saying, "It may be difficult to explain how a God of love could allow the terrible agony, suffering and tragedy in the world, but it is infinitely more difficult to explain these facts of life and leave God out of the picture."

Pain and grief are a part of life. We can either let the pain and grief engulf us or we can allow God to use these experiences to grow in grace and character. Dr. Robert R. Carkhuff wrote this in his book, The Art of Helping, "We are born with the potential to grow — no more, no less! Those of us who learn to actualize this potential will know lives of untold fullness and excitement. We will develop growth responses that will enable us to go anywhere and do anything.

"Those of us who do not learn to actualize this potential will know lives of waste and tragedy. The choice is ours."

Next week, I will offer readers of this article some practical guidelines that may help in processing grief. In the meantime, let me say that it is okay to ask God "Why?" Quoting from Johnson once again, "Far from discouraging our probing, He encourages us in the quest: 'Come now, let us reason together,' He says."

chapel notes

Spanish Catholic Worship available — A Catholic Mass is celebrated in Spanish weekly, on Sundays at 1 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel, at the corner of Vibbert Avenue and Sigerfoos Road.

Sunday School meets — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at White School from 9:30 until 10:30 a.m. There are classes for students 2 years of age through adults. Everyone is invited. Child watchcare for children younger than 2, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel. If you need a ride to Sunday School, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Stomach Club meets monthly — The Catholic congregation's Stomach Club will hold a meeting at 7 p.m on April 10 at Ezell's Restaurant, 4100 Warm Springs Road. All parishioners automatically belong to the Club and are welcome to come and bring friends. Each month the club selects a different restaurant to gather and enjoy dinner following the Saturday evening mass.

Chapel conducts meetings — Senior High Youth of the Chapel meet at 4 to 6 p.m. every Sunday at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Chaplain Dave Baum and his wife will lead the group.

All senior high students are invited.

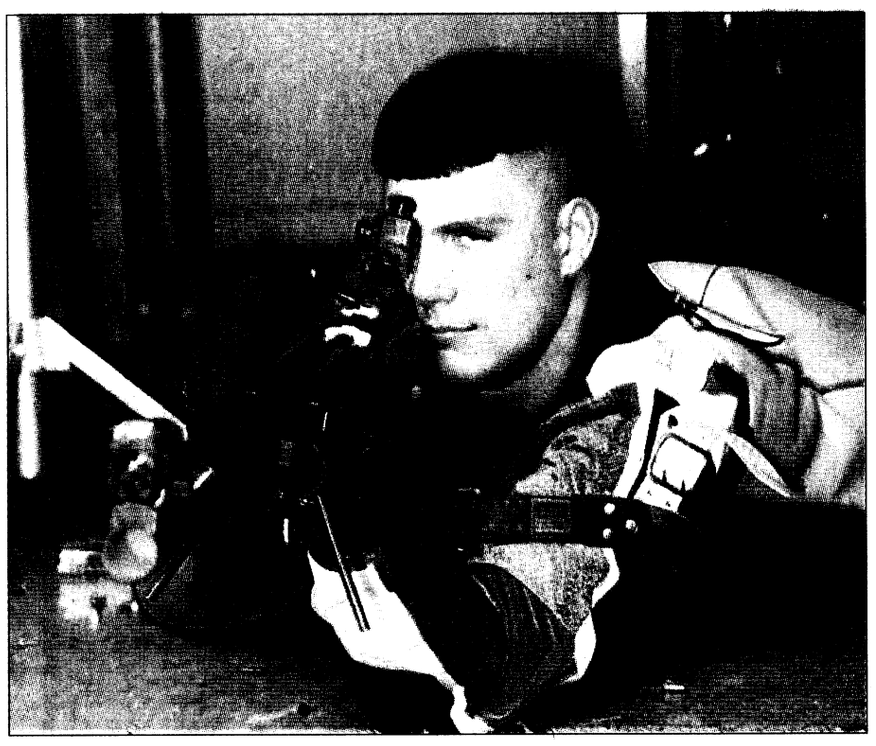
Top shooter grabs Gold in Germany

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit



An international rifle shooter with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) triumphed over the world's best to win the Gold Medal in the Masters European Air Rifle Cup in Dortmund, Germany March 20.

The winner, Jason A. Parker, who is also the current air rifle world record holder, was one of eight elite rifle athletes invited to compete.

The event, which was held in conjunction with the 15th annual Sportland Cup, was designed especially for television audiences and featured a modified event program. Each air rifle was fitted with a system that enabled viewers to watch the aiming movements during each shot and five cameras filmed each competitor to provide an intimate insight into the sport of international air rifle competition.

The Masters European Air Rifle Cup will be broadcast throughout Europe on Eurosport April 26. It may be picked up later in the U.S. on one of the sports-oriented cable television channels.

Parker broke two world records and won two World Cup Gold Medals and one Silver Medal in 1998, becoming the first American air rifle shooter to win three World Cup Medals in a single season. He was selected as the 1998 U.S. Olympic Committee Shooter of the Year and the 1998 USA Shooting International Rifle Shooter of the Year.

USAMU shooter Jason A. Parker recently netted a Gold Medal at the Masters European Air Rifle Cup in Dortmund, Germany.

At only 24 years old, Parker, who has been shooting with the USAMU for two years, had a great year in 1998. Not only was he a member of the U.S. World Championship Shooting Team, but he also earned his International Distinguished Badge and was featured in Sports Illustrated's Faces in the Crowd column in June. As the reigning world-record holder, he is a favorite to make the 2000 Olympic Team.

Raised in Omaha, Parker graduated from Bryan High School of Omaha in 1992. In 1996, he received a degree in psychology from Xavier University of Cincinnati, Ohio, where he won team Gold Medals in prone and air rifle, a Team Silver Medal and individual Bronze Medal in three-position at the 1994 Junior World Championships and was at the 1995 and 1994 Junior Olympic Air Rifle Champion.

Parker enlisted in the Army in January 1997. After completing Basic and Infantry Training, he was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in April 1997.

In 1997, he won individual and team Gold Medals at the Championship of the Americas in Buenos Aires and placed second in Air Rifle at the National Championships.

Olympian retires after 47 years of service

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Lawrence K. "Red" Mosely, a training specialist with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU), has distinguished himself as a Soldier, competitive marksman and federal civil servant for the last 47 years.

On March 27, that illustrious career came to an end as he retired from civil service.

Affectionately known as "Red" because of his hair color, Mosely was the oldest Olympian working at Fort Benning. He was the custodian for the U.S. Army Excellence in Competition Awards Program, the operations officer for the annual Small Arms Firing School at the National Matches and automation information systems manager at the USAMU from May 1983 to March 1999.

"I've enjoyed everything I've done, both military and civilian, over the years," Mosely said. "I especially enjoyed working at the Marksmanship Unit."

Mosely said that he plans to travel and visit relatives and try to catch up on some work around the house that he and his family have not been able to do because of his busy job.

A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., the Columbus resident graduated from the New York City School of Industrial Arts in 1950 and received an associate of arts degree in business administration from Columbus State University in 1983.

Mosely

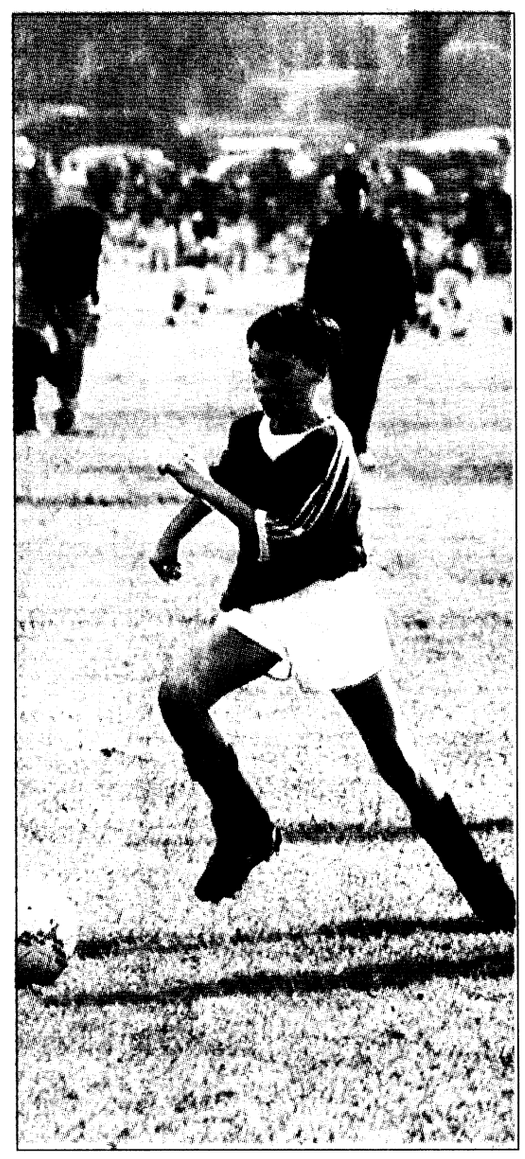
He served in the Army from 1952 until 1979 when he retired from military service as a command sergeant major.

He was assigned to the Marksmanship Unit Pistol Branch from 1958 to 1962 and again from 1965 to 1968, serving both times as an instructor and shooter. Then in 1970 he served the unit again when he became officer in charge of the branch until 1973. He also served as the Committee Group sergeant major with Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade during the congressionally mandated One Station Unit Training test for initial Infantry Training, as well as serving as the brigade operations sergeant major with the 2nd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, in Korea, and as the brigade intelligence sergeant with the 2nd Brigade, 1st Infantry Division, in Vietnam.

His military awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, Air Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Army of Occupation Medal (Germany), two National Defense Service Medals, Vietnam Service Medal, Republic of Vietnam Campaign Ribbon, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal, Combat Infantry Badge, Aircraft Crewman Badge, U.S. International Distinguished Badge, U.S. Army Distinguished Pistol Badge and the President's Hundred Tab.

Mosely started shooting in 1952 and has numerous marksmanship accomplishments including being a 1960 Olympian, winning a Gold and Silver Medal at the 1963 Pan American Games as well as being the Grand Pistol Champion and the winner of three Gold Medals at the 1958 Military Olympics in Athens, Greece. He was the 1966 Interservice Rapid Fire Pistol Champion and set an interservice record in rapid fire pistol in 1964.

In 1996, he proudly ran the Olympic Torch down Victory Drive in Columbus as a huge crowd lined the streets and cheered for him.



He was also the statistical officer for the 1992 Military Olympics, the 1978 Pistol Team manager at the 42nd World Shooting Championships, the 1971 Pistol Team manager for the Pan American Games and the team adjutant for the 1970 Military Olympics.

He and his wife, Trudy, live in Columbus and have two children, Ellen and Ernest, and two grandchildren, Casey and Cory.

"I felt privileged to be associated with so many world-class shooters over my career with the Marksmanship Unit," Mosely said. "I'll miss the day-to-day contact with them; they're the best."

Mosely said he plans to enjoy being retired, but he will do some volunteer work with the Army Marksmanship Unit Association.

Kickin' into spring

The Hurricanes soccer team (above) were one of many teams that kicked off the Spring sports Youth Services season on March 20 at French Field. More than 100 children took part in the opening day festivities that enlisted 15 soccer teams and a number of baseball teams.

The Youth Services Spring sports season will resume action April 10 after taking a week off for the Easter holiday.

Maintain fluid level to prevent dehydration

Feature Outdoors

When mountain biking, hiking, backpacking and cycle touring, many people expose themselves to a danger that never crosses their minds — dehydration.

And, you do not have to be in a desert wasteland or marooned at sea to experience it. Dehydration can occur five miles from your home if you are not prepared.

Because your body is 60 percent fluid, most of the metabolic energy production essential for outdoor fun and recreation requires water. That's why it is important to maintain optimum body fluid level when you are active outdoors.

Just a four percent fluid depletion can reduce your aerobic work capacity by almost 50 percent. As you ride, hike or climb, your fluid level steadily declines because of sweating and muscle use. If not replaced, the liquid loss leads to dehydration. Symptoms include: lack of sweat, dry mouth, chills, severe fatigue, nausea, muscle cramps and in extreme cases, heat stroke.

The answer for an increasing number of active people is to carry a compact water purifier and refill their water bottle at a convenient stream or public faucet. Weighing less than a pound, a water purifier eliminates all microorganisms and ensures the water is safe to drink.

Some water purifiers weigh only 12 ounces and can produce up to one quart of water per minute with a simple pumping action, like that of a bicycle pump. If you are thirsty while cycling or hiking and the nearest water source is a pond or stream, a water purifier will quickly eliminate any dangerous microorganisms, filter out suspended sediments and produce safe, good tasting water. Unlike slow-acting iodine tablets which leave a strong iodine taste in the water, a water purifier quickly produces safe water that is much more palatable and appealing to drink.

A water purifier is a good investment for all outdoor enthusiasts. For example, a cyclist loses one to two quarts of water cycling at a moderate pace for three hours on a typical 80-degree day. But cyclists may not feel thirsty or sweaty, even though their bodies are rapidly losing fluids. A good rule of thumb is to drink three to four glasses of water before heading out and drink a standard size bottle of water for each hour of cycling, or four to eight ounces every 15 to 30 minutes.

It is almost impossible to drink too much water when active. Remember, thirst is not a reliable signal that dehydration is setting in, so drink water steadily and make sure it is safe by using a water purifier.

Ladies association announces winners

Fort Benning Ladies Golf Association

The 1999 Fort Benning Ladies Golf Association (FBLGA) Match Play Tournament was held March 3 at the Follow Me Golf Tournament.

1st Flight champion — Mary Henderson
1st Flight runner-up — Jean Sharp
1st Flight consolation — Mavis Hill
2nd Flight champion — Bobbie Keirsey
2nd Flight runner-up — Peggy Jones
2nd Flight consolation — Glenice Myers

A luncheon was held in the clubhouse dining room following the event.

The FBLGA would like to thank everyone who participated in the tournament.

Course gives results

Follow Me Golf Course

Fourteen couples participated in this year's St. Patrick's Day Couples Tournament March 14.

A sit down dinner was served after play in the Follow Me Golf Course Ballroom. After dinner, prizes were awarded to the winners.

First place winners were Dave Flo, Marcia Flo, Dan Mims and Robin Mims who scored a 54. The team took home $40.

Second place finishers were Greg Dunn, Kathy Dunn, Rich McDowell and Hedy McDowell who scored a 55. The second place team took home $30.

The team of Bill Stewart, Sharon Stewart, Jim Armstrong and Pat Armstrong took third with a score of 55.

Closest to hole winners for the tournament were Sharon Stewart on Hole 7 and Dave Flo on Hole 13.

The next Couples Tournament is scheduled for May 2 on the Lakeside Course.

Shriners NEWS & NOTES

Hospitals Aid Children

(NAPSA)-Across the nation and in Canada, Shriners Hospitals for Children are helping youngsters in need to live healthier and not be afraid to dream.

They do this by offering excellent, no-cost medical care to children with orthopaedic problems or burn injuries.

Since 1922, Shriners Hospitals have provided care to about 600,000 children. Known as experts in pediatric burn care, Shriners focuses much of today's research on improving the quality of life of burn survivors. Here are some tips to help prevent burns:

• Keep children away from electrical ranges, ovens, grills and heaters.

• Don't allow cords to dangle from countertops where young children may tug on them and pull a hot appliance off.

• Buy and use only child-resistant lighters. Teach children the dangers of playing with fire.

There are 22 Shriners Hospitals for Children. To refer a child to Shriners Hospitals, call toll-free 1-800-237-5055 in the U.S. or 1-800-361-7256 in Canada.

Carnival

Jonathon Ott, 4, Fort Benning, takes some time to enjoy the second annual Spring Break Carnival Tuesday evening. The carnival, which is located at the intersection of Ingersoll Street and Yeager Avenue, opened Tuesday and will run through Saturday. Gates are scheduled to open at 1 p.m. today and Saturday and will stay open until 11 p.m. both nights. Carnival-goers can enjoy Family Day activities Saturday with a $10 wristband that will allow for unlimited rides on all of the carnival attractions from 1 to 6 p.m.

Senator visits Fort Benning

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

As part of an annual endeavor to visit major installations in the state of Georgia, Sen. Paul Coverdell made his way to Fort Benning April 2 to speak with Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst about issues affecting Soldiers and the post.

Fort Benning was the fourth and final stop before Coverdell gets back to work Monday taking on budget and appropriation matters, which he said is all relevant to issues of health and well-being for military members.

"I'm visiting with commanders, just listening to what their view of the circumstances on post are, if there are any peculiar problems the delegation needs to be aware of and what kinds of priorities in terms of legislative matters there are," Coverdell said.

Along with legislative matters, Coverdell was also concerned with Soldier morale issues.

"Over the last several years, there was a general worry that morale has not been everything we wanted it to be and that re-enlistments were down," Coverdell said. "Personally I think it's had to do with the fact that it hasn't been high priority for the administration, but I think that's changed. World events ought to wake everybody up."

He said it is the world events in Kosovo that are alerting the country to the fact that we are living in a dangerous world and that we need our defense to be "strong, in good spirits and ready to do the kind of job we ask them to do.

"I haven't met any American, whether they were a general or running a fast food shop, that isn't very attentive to the events and somewhat mindful of how unpredictable things are at the moment, and how difficult a situation this is, not only for our country, but the world in general."

Although Coverdell concentrated on the issue in Kosovo he still took time to congratulate Fort Benning on its recent accomplishments and also give his opinion on why he thinks Fort Benning is so successful.

"It's unbelievable," he said about Fort Benning winning the Oglethorpe and Army Communities of Excellence Awards. "It's obviously a function of leadership and the Soldiers here."

He went on to say it is Fort Benning's legacy of dedication that makes it so great. "People are proud to be associated with Fort Benning and it demonstrates itself in those awards. This is a first class place. They (Fort Benning) demand excellence and are proud to deliver it."

Campaign extends

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In an effort to reach its proposed goal of $160,000 the Army Emergency Relief (AER) has extended its campaign until May 7.

"Due to military commitments, contribution turn-ins have been made slowly, so AER has extended its campaign to allow people more time to make their donations," said Al Deane, AER officer.

Since its start AER has helped more than 2.5 million people. In 1998 Fort Benning's AER office provided more than $700,000 to eligible persons for such things as mortgage, rent, food, utilities, essential travel expenses in regards to emergency leave, emergency transportation and major vehicle repairs.

Deane encourages Soldiers to contribute, because they never know if one day they may be in a situation that requires AER's assistance.

"This is a Soldiers' organization; no one knows when something may happen and it is good to be able to come to the AER center when in financial need," Deane said.

Learning center helps Soldiers upgrade computer skills

Michelle Harvey
Special to the Bayonet©

As the age of technology dawns into a new millennium, Fort Benning now has access to interactive courseware that can better provide the educational needs of the community.

Since October 1998, Soldiers and Department of Army Civilians (DACs) can receive more than 800 courses, which can help them upgrade their computer skills and complete certification preparations.

They can also receive college credit through distant learning courses offered through the Internet.

Through the Army-wide purchase of this system, people can gain access to these courses by using a Web Browser on their computer from their home, office or the learning centers in every Army installation in the U.S. and overseas.

"It alleviates lots of TDY (temporary duty) costs because you can get the education online," said Mike Hodge, educational specialist for the Army Learning Center in Infantry Hall.

"It eliminates the actual Soldier from missing any training because they can get it on their own computer at home, or at the Army Learning Center in Infantry Hall," he said.

Besides upgrading computer skills and receiving certification for different programs, Soldiers are able to study online in order to raise their General Technical Scores.

"This will also save Soldiers from having to attend Functional Academic Skills Training (FAST) which is usually four weeks long, four hours a day," Hodge said.

"Through this system, Soldiers can get online training through a computer for two days a week or so. It will take up less of their time from their command," he said.

Not only can a person study for college entrance exams like the SAT, GRE or the GMAT online, the system gives Soldiers and DACs the opportunity to earn associate, bachelor and master degrees from any college or university across the U.S. and abroad that offers distant learning courses through the Internet.

"They can even continue to work for their degree from a college they may have attended at another installation, providing the institution offers distant learning," Hodge said.

In order to gain access to the courseware, eligible Soldiers and civilians will have to register at the CBT Master Web from a military address site at www.armycbt.jcci.gov/armycbt.

Once you are registered and get a student password, you will be provided full access to the program and unlimited lessons.

So far, more than 10,000 students have registered for the courses offered through the program, at a rate of 400 to 500 people throughout the Army population a day.

"I'm trying to update my computer skills through the system because I have to be knowledgeable about the computer in order to help those who come to the center," said Spc. Timmy Anderson, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who works for the Army Learning Center.

For more information about the courseware, call the Army Learning Center at 545-7677. The center is located in Donovan Library in Infantry Hall.

DoD modifies anthrax program

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Servicemembers, Department of Defense (DoD) emergency essential civilian employees and contractors must now receive anthrax vaccinations if they spend any time in one of 10 high-threat areas, the Pentagon announced March 31. Previously, only DoD personnel who were deploying for more than 30 days to a high-threat area had to start the six-shot vaccine series.

The modification to the anthrax vaccination immunization program is effective immediately.

The Joint Staff identified high-threat areas as Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Jordan, Yemen, Korea and Israel.

Officials said DoD initially set the 30-day threshold to help get the immunization program established and to make sure there were enough vaccine stocks on hand. Top priority went to those personnel already at high risk. Shots started in March 1998 with personnel in Southwest Asia. Since then, the program has matured and vaccine stockpiles have been built to support all military service demands, even with the elimination of the 30-day threshold.

The program modification will provide protection to U.S. personnel from the moment they arrive in theater. Since the effectiveness of the vaccine increases with each vaccination, the goal is for personnel to receive three vaccinations prior to deployment. If even one vaccination prior to deployment is not possible, vaccine stocks are available in the high-threat areas to immediately begin providing the shot series.

Personnel in fly-over or standby teams are not included in the program modification.

The program change is not expected to significantly increase demand for the vaccine. About 250,000 U.S.

Everyone benefits from volunteering

Jill Sanders Crider
Installation Volunteer Coordinator

commentary

Since coming to Fort Benning two years ago, I've met some extraordinary people. They go far beyond what's required of them because something motivates them to try and make their community a better place to live. You never hear them say, "Not my job," but instead often hear them ask, "How can I help?"

To show the community's appreciation, I've seen a lot of awards presented, a lot of hands shaken and a lot of backs patted. But no awards are more richly deserved than the ones to be presented at the Commanding General's Volunteer Recognition and Appreciation Reception at 4 p.m Wednesday at the Officers' Club. On that day we all get to personally and publicly thank volunteers that have contributed so much to the quality of life in our community.

At least two people benefit every time someone volunteers: the one who helps and the one who is helped. Youth programs, support groups and Red Cross services are just a few examples of critical community activities that might cease if the volunteers who organize and run them decided to quit or insisted upon being paid.

With the demand for community services running as high as ever, but with few people to fill jobs, volunteers are more valuable than ever. The "typical Fort Benning volunteer" averages more than 60 volunteer hours a year — that's twice the national average.

Recipients of the Volunteers of Excellence awards are people and groups nominated by organizations they serve for community-wide recognition and they represent more than the 2,600 volunteers currently on our rolls.

You'll find them throughout the chapel and the units, in the OWC Thrift Shop, in scouting and schools, where parental and community support have never been more critical. Families whose holidays are brighter because of Santa's Castle owe thanks to our volunteers.

Together Fort Benning volunteers donated close to 160,000 hours over 1998 which saved the community close to $2 million. Their contributions are immeasurable. I encourage each member of this community, Soldier and civilian, retiree and family member to attend the Appreciation Reception on Wednesday and join us in recognizing these outstanding individuals.

Others who contribute to our quality of life do so quietly, and prefer not to be in the spotlight. Let me assure them that they are every bit as valuable to the community. They may remain anonymous, but you'll know them when you hear them ask, "How can I help?"

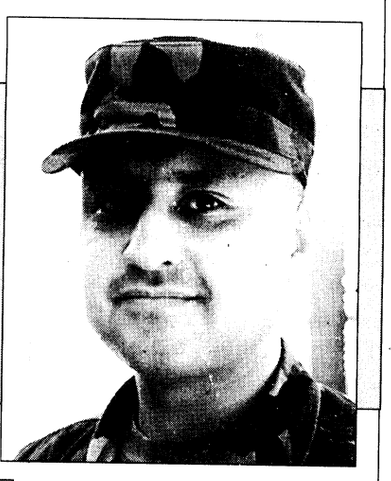
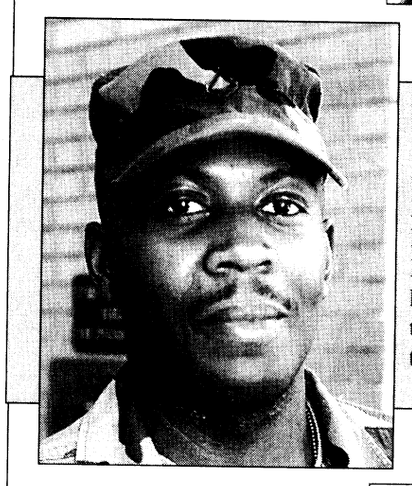
VARIOUS VOICES

Why is it important for people to volunteer?



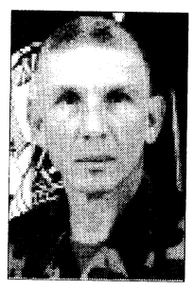
Maura Noonan, family member — "Volunteering gives everyone a good experience to learn from one another."



Master Sgt. Jerry Gaines, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "It gives military dependents an opportunity to get out of the house and experience the community."

Sharon Martz, school teacher — "There are an awful lot of things that wouldn't get done if we didn't have volunteers."

Sgt. Rodolfo Bahuma, U.S. Army School of the Americas — "If you help it will come back to you; what goes around comes around."



Pfc. Robert Kinnon, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mech.)— "It helps everyone from the kids to the parents in making a better tomorrow."

Sheryl Dixon, family member — "I like to volunteer because helping others gives me a great feeling."

Observance reminds man of inhumanity

Every year the annual Holocaust Observance is a stark reminder of "man's inhumanity to man."

A visit to Dachau, Bergen-Belsen or Auschwitz is enough to convince you of mankind's inclination to do evil. Not only were six million Jews killed in the madness which engulfed Europe during the Nazi era, but mentally and physically handicapped persons, partisans and other "enemies of the Reich" were also killed.

Untold additional millions were killed in the Soviet Union under Stalin and by the communists in Cambodia and China during the Cold War for political, religious or ideological reasons.

When we stop to remember this ugly past, we must make a commitment to ensure such atrocities do not continue to happen. The deployment of U.S. forces to the "former Yugoslavia" shows our commitment to supporting peace and has restrained the killing in that area for a time. America is a "melting pot" containing people from almost every ethnic, religious and cultural background from around the world. We represent a wonderful diversity in our nation.

Let us commit ourselves to treating each other with dignity and respect. May our diversity be our advantage, not an obstacle, and may we be a shining example of harmony and peace to persons of all nations. We must remind ourselves of such inhumanity in order to prevent such for occurring.

Leaders declare 'Volunteer Week'

Whereas: volunteering of time and resources traditionally has been, and continues to be, an elemental part of the essence and tradition of our country and is essential to its spirit and vitality; and

Whereas: we are a nation of people who thrive on helping others as well as ourselves to a better life; and

Whereas: our nation is in a time of diminishing natural and technological resources, and a time when people realize that government agencies cannot provide every service necessary to build a better environment; and

Whereas: volunteerism is increasingly recognized as an important partner in government and industry; and

Whereas: volunteerism is as vital, fulfilling and enriching to the participants as to the recipients of the service and should be encouraged for its benefits to the community; and

Whereas: it is important for all of us to recognize our responsibilities and to follow the example of these volunteers by giving of ourselves for the betterment of all; and

Whereas: it is fitting to set aside a special week in tribute to the dedicated people who make our community a better place in which to live, work and learn;

Now, therefore, as representatives of our tri-city area, and in conjunction with National Volunteer Week, we do hereby proclaim April 14-21 as "Volunteer Week" in our respective communities, urging all citizens to recognize the valuable work done by volunteers, to participate in appropriate observances, and to assume their duty as citizens of the United States by becoming involved in their community as volunteers.

Charles H. Thornton, formerly a division chief with the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, was posthumously awarded the Army Government Civilian Tester of the Year award for 1999 by the National Defense Industrial Association at a recent ceremony in Las Vegas, Nev.

The nomination process began last fall when Thornton's name was submitted for his accomplishments in expanding experimentation for dismounted Soldiers. As a leading expert on Soldier issues, Thornton made contributions in Operations in Urban Terrain (MOUT), Combat Identification (CID), Own The Night (OTN), Soldier Power, Non-lethal Technology, Line of Sight Anti-Tank (LOSAT), and Force XXI Land Warrior Programs. He was also the force behind the development and expansion of the McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain test facility, which is Training and Doctrine Command's premier laboratory for shaping how the dismounted Soldier conducts warfare.

Thornton's son, James H. Thornton, Jr. received the award for his father.

Welcome

Fort Benning's newest battalion commander, Lt. Col Edward B. Daly took command of the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade (BCTB), during an activation ceremony Wednesday morning. The activation marked the addition of the second battalion to be brought on line as part of the BCTB initiative that began earlier this year.

The introduction of Daly and the new battalion will make Fort Benning one of the largest initial entry training locations Armywide. Daly said he expects to train more than 2,500 Soldiers annually in the new battalion.

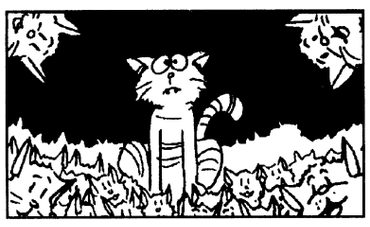
service members and DoD civilians will be inoculated in 1999; the number includes personnel affected by the new policy. About 31,000 to be vaccinated this year are reserve component members.

On March 9, Secretary of Defense William Cohen explained to U.S. airmen at a Kuwaiti air base that he made the decision to implement the immunization program because "I would be derelict in my duties sending you out in an environment in which you weren't properly protected."



"The sole reason for this program authorized by the secretary of defense is force protection," said Pentagon spokesman Navy Capt. Mike Doubleday during a recent news conference. "The shots are a medical measure designed to protect members of the U.S. military who may at some time be deployed to a theater where anthrax is a threat."

Doubleday said DoD began studying protecting service members from anthrax in the early 1990s. DoD is using the same vaccine that livestock workers and others at risk in the civilian sphere have received since the Food and Drug Administration approved it nearly 30 years ago. The FDA has been monitoring DoD's program, and DoD itself performs supplemental tests to guarantee continued quality and safety.

To date 218,000 service members received about 616,000 shots of the vaccine. Fewer than 200 have refused the shots — less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the force, said Doubleday.

DoD considers the refusal to comply with the anthrax immunization program as a lawful order violation that not only endangers an individual's health, but also places the unit and mission at risk.

Because refusing the shots is disobeying a direct and lawful order, said Doubleday, those who refuse are subject to administrative and disciplinary actions.

Airmen provide link between services

Pvt. 2 Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Communication — it is the vital link between forces on the ground and air power overhead, and all too often, it can mean the difference between a battlefield victory and a defeat.

Fort Benning Soldiers like those preparing deploy to Kuwait as part of the continued force in the region can count on that communication to be there every time they get on the radio, courtesy of Fort Benning's 17th Air Support Operations Squadron (ASOS).

The 56 airmen who fill the ranks of the 17th ASOS are tasked with the dual mission of being both a high-caliber, well-educated airman and a combat-ready Soldier. This unique mission takes them to the front lines of combat with such units as the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment and Soldiers from Fort Benning's 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) to provide the link between ground troops and the aircraft overhead.

They are Air Force combat controllers and their job is to go to the front lines, establish a multi-channel radio link to allow free-flowing communications between Army commanders on the ground, aircraft pilots in the air and information and intelligence from command headquarters and continue to remain with their Army counterparts.

"We deploy with the Army and go with them to the front anywhere around the world," said ASOS Commander Lt. Col. Keith Meresca. "We have everyone from forward controllers to support people that provide services that bring the Air Force mission and the Army together."

Master Sgt. Harry Oliver said that interservice relationship will be put to the test in the coming weeks as members of the ASOS's Flight A will head to Kuwait with Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment.

"The airmen of Flight A will deploy with the Soldiers to Kuwait in support of the current operations in the region," he said. "They will be out there supporting the air to ground missions in the area."

Meresca said the deployment of Flight A with the Soldiers of 3rd Brigade is only one of the recent deployments the Air Force personnel here have been tasked with.

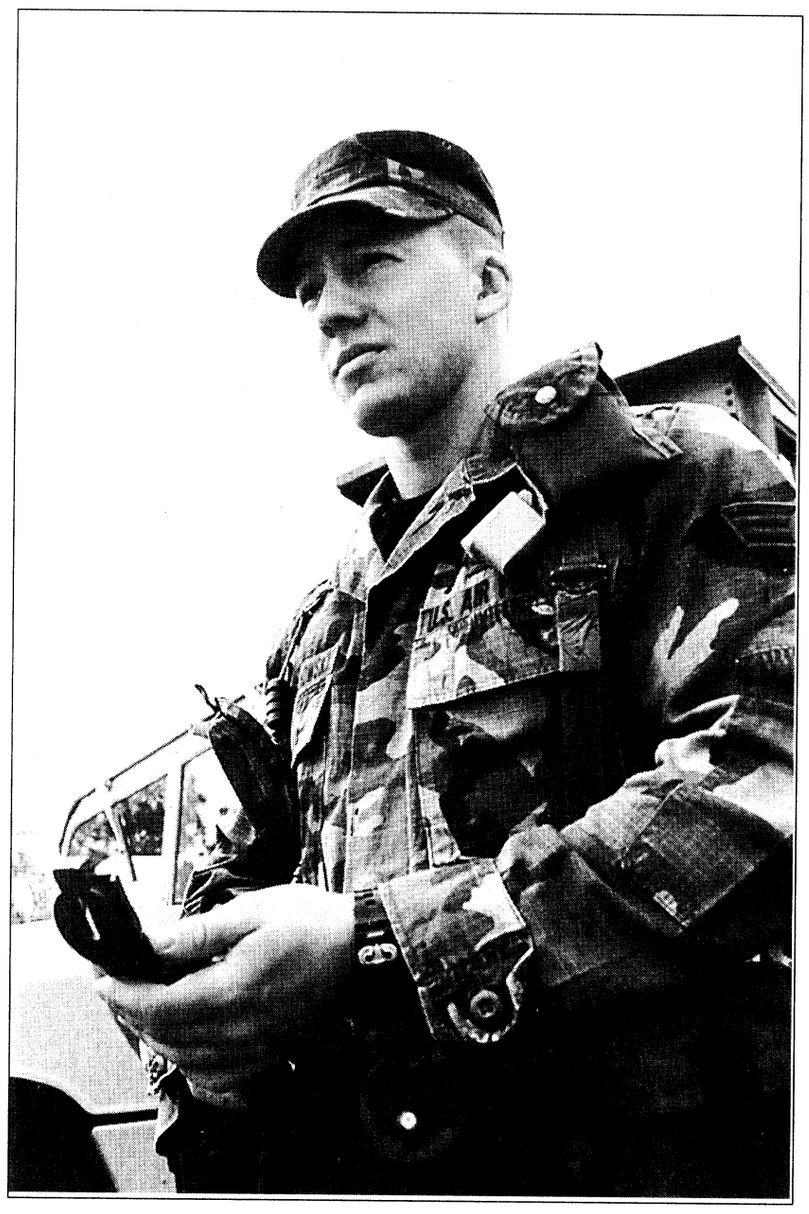
He said the deployments like the one this month that took airmen from Flight B with the Rangers from 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt. are commonplace to the airmen of the 17th ASOS.

"Our guys are constantly going to the field or on training missions," Meresca said during a training exercise Tuesday. "If our guys aren't gone somewhere, we are doing things like this."

The training exercise this week put airmen of Flight A in a scenario that enlisted their air controlling skills in an air strike against enemy tanks at Concord Range.

"Exercises like this allow the airmen to use their skills of mapping and radio procedures," Oliver said. "It just keeps everything fresh in the minds of everyone."

Refreshers like these are only part of the constant training the Fort Benning Air Force personnel are required to take part in.



"We have to be able to not only to do our job well, but we also have to be proficient enough in the Army skills to be attached to their units," Oliver said. "That is the reason why we not only take our own Air Force physical fitness test, but we have to take the Army's as well."

"It is all part of our job and our close relationship with the Army," he added.

Although the relationship is a close one and places airmen and Soldiers on the same team, Meresca said the relationship is one that sees no service boundaries.

"When we go to the field, it isn't Air Force and Army, it is one team," he said. "We cannot do our job without them and they cannot do their job without us."

"It is a great relationship that benefits us both," he said.

Senior Airmen Joseph Wojciechowski shoots an azimuth to the convoy of tanks on a nearby hill during the exercise. The coordinates he reads will be relayed on to the pilots circling nearby to point them towards the intended target for a bombing mission.

OCS candidates complete courses

Officer Candidate Joseph Dzvonik
Officer Candidate School

On Feb. 21, enlisted Soldiers and warrant officers from Army posts around the world came together to form Officer Candidate School (OCS) Class 3-99, taking their first step toward a commission as officers. Although a few Soldiers have fallen to the side since commencement, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Battalion remains 102 candidates strong. Actually, the head count is 103 considering the eternal enrollment of Officer Candidate (OC) Barkthalemew Juniper Woody, affectionately known to all as "Woody." Woody is a 25-pound former railroad tie that can be seen accompanying the Co. A candidates during their early morning and late evening runs, as well as afternoon marches to class at Infantry Hall. Woody's purpose is to remind candidates of the importance of accountability, representing a Soldier that sometimes needs to be carried.

During the punishing week, candidates completed a series of seemingly non-stop physical challenges to include the combat obstacle and confidence courses, a combat water swim test, a five-mile road march to a leadership reaction course, in addition to two PT sessions a day. The second week was occupied mostly by classes on a variety of military subjects and in-processing, but was followed up by a weekend of land navigation practice at a densely-vegetated Kilbourne Range and yet another five-mile road march.

Traditionally, the first month at OCS is punctuated by a commander's inspection. This inspection affords Basic Officer Candidates an opportunity to "phase-up" and become Intermediate Officer Candidates. This upgrade would, of course, allow the candidates to enjoy more privileges. The inspection included evaluation of the battalion area, poking and prodding at TA-50, inspection of Class A's, candidate's room and testing individual required knowledge. The proverbial sigh of relief was heard quite loudly as Class 3-99 passed the inspection on their first attempt. After several hours of scrutiny, the commander authorized candidates to wear their blue ascots, a proud indication of their intermediate status.

The commander's inspection during the weekend of March 20-21 immediately followed one of the most challenging events during the OCS cycle — land navigation. Candidates spent nearly a week at Yankee North Range honing their navigation skills and being abused by vegetation. Finally, individual candidates were expected to plot and located five of the nine points during the day and two of the five points at night on the Yankee South Range. Although all were beaten and bruised by the brush, and "Woody" was temporarily misplaced, 86 percent of the class successfully navigated the site on their attempt. The land navigation event marks one of the largest hurdles in an OC's path to commission.

The first weekend of April consists of much planning and competition for the candidates. Next weekend, candidates will celebrate seven weeks of training at the Mid-Cycle picnic, held at the Fort Benning NCO Academy and a trip to the National Prisoner of War Memorial at Andersonville. While planning out these events, candidates compete for slots in the Joint Military Athletic Competition (JMAC) occurring April 23-24. JMAC compares the physical fitness, basketball and volleyball skills of Army personnel with other military branches. Squad stakes, a major component of the "OCS Challenge" an interplatoon occurring throughout the OCS cycle, also takes place during the first April weekend. However, amid all the planning, competing and daily activities comprising the busy OC's life, all candidates stay focused on graduation day for May 27, and saying farewell to Woody.

What satisfaction do you get from being a drill sergeant?
The NCOs in my previous units that were former drill sergeants always seemed to be a cut above the rest. I enjoy observing privates developing pride in themselves and their units, especially when they accomplish difficult tasks.
Future goals:
I want to go to Ranger School, achieve honor graduate at ANCOC and maintain the faith of my fellow drill sergeants and NCOs.

Capstone culminates intensive training

Officer Candidate Frank Tedeschi
Officer Candidate School

The busy Officer Candidates (OC) from Officer Candidate School (OCS) class 2-99 completed their "Capstone" field problem last week and have now entered their Senior Phase. The OCS Senior Status Review saw the class officially become Senior Officer Candidates on Tuesday. This week's other events such as the Branch Pinning Ceremony, Senior Status Review and the OCS Dining-In tonight, signify Class 2-99 is fast approaching graduation.

The Capstone field problem is the culmination of two months of intensive classroom and practical instruction in the rudiments of Infantry tactics and battle drills, basic Soldier skills and leadership at the squad and platoon level. OCS, regardless of their branch, assume key leadership positions at a moments notice and are expected to employ the Troop Leading Procedures to accomplish their assigned mission. For many OCs, this is the first time they have ever "fought" as Infantry and it provided remarkable insight for all.

"It was hard to visualize these operations from just an operation order," said OC Tara Bessard, a former unmanned aerial vehicle operator at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

"I realize now, how critical the rehearsal process is," Bessard said as she emphasized a new respect for the Infantryman's job.

Although a good number of enlisted Infantryman are OCs in Class 2-99, most did not have the experience of planning operations at the platoon level. OC Joseph Schwankhaus, formerly a staff sergeant at Fort Campbell, Ky., did. Schwankhaus, therefore, was an easy choice to plan a company-level attack slated to be the Armageddon-like finale on Capstone's final day.

"Writing a company operation order was not that much more difficult than doing one at the platoon level, it's just on a larger scale," remarked Schwankhaus. "My biggest problem was relinquishing command to the platoon leaders; it was really strange not to be directly involved with a platoon, but it was an invaluable experience."

Schwankhaus' attack ultimately failed against a well dug-in opposing force, led by OC Chris Hoback, another Fort Campbell Soldier. However, the attack was favorably critiqued by Capt. Peter Wisti, commander of Company B, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"Candidate Schwankhaus executed a complex offensive operation that many seasoned Infantry officers would have had trouble completing. It was an outstanding effort," Wisti said.

OC Hoback reiterated that the rehearsal process was pivotal to his success on the "battlefield."

"The fact that my platoon stayed so mission-focused in the face of the constant skirmishes with the enemy reconnaissance elements, prior to the main battle, is a testament to the motivation level here at OCS, regardless of any candidate's background," Hoback said.

Hoback's assessment was shared by OC Derek Denny, yet another Fort Campbell staff sergeant. "I was impressed by my fellow students' determination and motivation. It's a good thing to see some of the combat support Soldiers lay in an ambush line for two hours with temperatures dipping below 40 degrees; they need to know what the Soldiers they support go through," Denny said.

With Capstone finally over, Class 2-99 is now ready to assume the privileges of its senior status. OCs have already met all graduation requirements and the emphasis now shifts to the smooth transition from enlisted Soldiers into competent junior officers.

Class 2-99 will graduate April 29. The newly-commissioned second lieutenants will attend their branch's Officer Basic Course before reporting to their first duty assignment later this year.

Benning honors top Soldier, NCO

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Some of Fort Benning's top Soldiers turned out to the Main NCO Club April 1 for the Soldier and NCO of the Quarter awards ceremony for the second quarter.

Eight units were represented as their Soldiers waited to find out if they would walk away with the honor.

The nominees were as follows:

•36th Engineer Group (Construction) — Pfc. Teresa Rosevear and Sgt. Roger Raber

•29th Infantry Regiment — Spc. Melia Irzarry and Sgt. Jason Johnson;

•Ranger Training Brigade — Spc. Johnnie Blakely and Sgt. John Morgan;

•Infantry Training Brigade — Sgt. Beofra Butler;

•11th Infantry Regiment — Spc. Freida Bradshaw and Sgt. Michael Kane;

•U.S. Army School of the Americas — Spc. Karla Illingsworth;

•U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company and 988th Military Police Company — Spc. Cynthia Cooper and Staff Sgt. Sylvester Jeffrey; and •3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division — Spc. Edwin Delacruz and Sgt. Roger Kouba.

Although, all Soldiers may have been deserving of the award, Spc. Cynthia Cooper, 988th Military Police Company, and Sgt. Beofra Butler, Infantry Training Brigade, walked away with the honors.

Cooper said, "I am glad to see all the hard work pay off."

Also awaiting acceptance to Officer Candidate School, Cooper was described by 988th Military Police Company Commander Capt. Mark Sheehan as a self-starter and natural motivator.

"She is a perfect example of what we want in our young leaders," Sheehan said. "We are proud of her accomplishments."

And for Butler, this is just one of many boards she hopes to win.

"It feels great to win, I have been studying for this for so long," Butler said.

Butler plans to continue her road of success. Her next goal will be to tackle the Audie Murphy Board.

Not only did the two winners leave the ceremony with the satisfaction of their accomplishments, they were also presented with various gifts from the following sponsors.

The Army Air Force Exchange Service; B&B Beverage Co.; CB&T; AUSA; Express Boot Repair; Louie Louie's; Ranger Joes; GEICO; 1st Union Bank; Dillard's Fine Jewelry Department; McCoy Environment; NCOA; Pioneer Military Lending; Sam's Club; Sergeant Major Association; TIC; United Armed Forces Association; U.S. Calvary; USPA and the Columbus Ledger Enquirer.

A year of firsts

BCTB continues to make history every day

Basic Combat Training Brigade

The activation of the Basic Combat Training Brigade (BCTB) Jan. 14 set the conditions for a year full of firsts. Recently, the "COLD STEEL" brigade marked history with the promotion of its first enlisted Soldiers from within its ranks.

The "firsts" include Staff Sgt. Timothy G. Speece and Staff Sgt. Brian K. Carrigan, both of Company D, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, who were promoted to sergeant first class March 1. The following day, Pvt. 2 Shaun Witcher was promoted to private first class and Pfc. Rachel Pierce was promoted to specialist.

At the ceremony, Headquarters Support Company Commander Capt. Preston T. Howard Jr. commended the two for their outstanding performance, remarking how deserving they were of this distinction as "firsts."

Witcher remarked how thankful he was for all the support he receives from his peers and supervisors in helping him in his duties as the brigade commander's driver, while Pierce spoke of broadening her career as an OCS candidate.

The BCTB conducted another "first" in the brigade's history when it held it's inaugural Leadership and Spiritual Fitness Breakfast March 30. The event, hosted by the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, included music by BCTB Chaplain Capt. David Giammona and singing by Celeste Lee.

The key speaker was Training and Doctrine Command Chaplain Colonel Calvin H. Sydnor III, who spoke of focusing on the present and how what one is doing today is most important.

According to a brigade official, this is never more true as the BCTB continues to make history each day, with a one-day-at-a-time attitude as it prepares tomorrow's warriors.

Don't forget, newcomers can get information about the BCTB by calling the hotline at 544-BCTB or checking the Fort Benning webpage at http://www.benning.army.mil.

Venezuelan Soldiers celebrate Infantry Day

Capt. Reinaldo Centeno Mena
U.S. Army Infantry School

On Sunday, Venezuela celebrates Infantry Day. The origin of the Infantry in Venezuela is directly tied to the nation's history; Bolivar, Paez, Urdaneta and Zamora, among others, were the original Infantry Soldiers, strategists and creators of the new Republic in Venezuela. In the same way as other nations of the world, our Infantry advances in step with technology, perhaps the most important element of maneuver within war, in which command and leadership have a determining role.

Within all combat scenarios the Infantry Soldier will be ever present as an indication of impressive combat power. The Venezuelan Army's morals and professional reserve for its nation, stands ever present, highly trained and ready to be used when the laws of the nation so order.

Our Army and our Infantry have breached our borders in order to give the precious gift of liberty to other countries such as Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, Panama and Colombia. We also have participated in peacekeeping operations in Nicaragua and now we are an example for other Latin American countries, and now they too partake in the "Bolivia 2000 Initiative," a true plan in support of other government agencies with the sole goal of reaching the greatest developmental achievements in health, education, housing and other social aspects of the country.

1st Lt. Noel E. Martinez
Venezuelan Army

During the Venezuelan Independence War, there were so many battles that influenced the course of history in South America and of course, the world.

However, there is on a special page, a singular moment in which a magnificent and decisive act took place. That memorable act was the Battle of San Felix (city located in the former Province of Guyana, named today Bolivar Sate, Venezuela).

Two Armies decided to destroy their enemy, defending their ideals. On one side, the Spanish Army — "Los Realistas," directed by Gen. La Torre, fighting to preserve the Spanish dominion over almost the whole American continent, oppressing the native people and stealing all they could from our land, to please the royalty. On the other side, the Venezuelan army — "Los Patriatas," commanded by Gen. Piar, fighting for our people, their right to live and the will to give their descendants real freedom and their own country.

Despite the fact that there were about 600 men on horses, they did not actually play a key role in the outcome of this dispute. The Infantry decided. It was a combat lance to lance, bayonet to bayonet, rifle to rifle, but above all, man to man.

The great fighting spirit and will for freedom of the Los Patriotas made them win the battle. Los Realistas, completely diminished, ran away. After San Felix, the Venezuelan Army would never lose again, and later received the name, "Ejercito Libertador" (Liberator Army). The Venezuelan Army commanded by Gen. Simon Bolivar crossed over Los Andes Mountains to fight and win, gaining the independence of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Panama (Panama was still a part of Colombia).

The decisive and unique role of the Infantry in this episode, as well as the pride, courage and will of all the glorious Infantrymen who fought that battle are the reason for having chosen Sunday as the day of the Venezuelan Infantry Branch.

DoD offers chance to give gift of life

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Imagine finding out you have been stricken with a disease that will kill you unless a specific medical procedure can be done. Now, imagine this procedure can only be done if a donor who matches you can be found to give you the gift of life.

More than 450 people associated with the Department of Defense (DoD) have had to face this situation over the past year when they were diagnosed with leukemia, aplastic anemia, types of cancer and other fatal blood diseases and began the search for a bone marrow donor.

The DoD offers a route for people to join the registry and become possible bone marrow donors in order to help the 5,000 to 10,000 Americans who are in need of a transplant each year.

In order to complement the National Marrow Donor Program, Public Law 101-302 of May 25, 1990, the Bill Young Marrow Program was established. Now military personnel, dependents, DoD civilian personnel, members of the Coast Guard, National Guard and Reserves will be offered the chance to apply voluntarily for acceptance as potential bone marrow donors and possibly help out an individual in need, according to the Assistant Secretary Of Defense.

Those who want to be a potential donor can visit their local drive to take the first step in the donation process. This step tests the individuals Human Leukocyte Antigen (HLA) type. HLA is the protein that surrounds the white blood cells and is used in determining if a donor is a preliminary match. The information gathered through this test is then coded and placed on the National Registry where it remains until the donors 61st birthday.

"Most people never hear from us once they have given blood," said Randy Morgan, Bill Young Marrow Donor Center's recruitment specialist. "If a person is found to be a possible match, they then go through more in-depth screening."

When a potential donor is found to be a preliminary match, they begin an estimated six to 12 weeks of secondary testing. This stage includes an extensive educational session to explain the entire marrow donation process, a complete physical examination and one to two units of blood will also be drawn for transfusion back into the patient after the procedure, according to the Bill Young Marrow Donor Center.

"The procedures are not an overnight process, it can take a few months in emergency situations," Morgan said.

However, before someone can begin to register to donate they must take the first step in giving the initial blood. In order for potential donors to do this, there must be a local drive.

Any installation can sponsor a registration drive by calling (800) MARROW3. Units may also call to find out how they can host a drive.

"I would strongly encourage anyone who thinks they may want to offer the gift of life to someone to register," Morgan said. "They may be the only person who could help someone if they would just register to donate."

For some patients a donor may never be found and but for others a chance of finding a donor can be one in a million. Individuals who are on the registry may be their only hope for a healthy life.

MCBRIDE ELEMENTARY

AM excites students

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Is it possible for kids to be excited about learning math? If you ask the kids at McBride Elementary School about their new math program the overwhelming response is "math is terrific!" How has McBride created such excitement for math? By investing in a new teaching tool called Accelerated Math (AM).

The recent purchase of AM was prompted by the overwhelming success of Accelerated Reader, a reading program used by children in schools throughout the U.S. AM is a computer program designed to increase student performance in math while creating an exciting learning atmosphere. The math program is a teaching tool that places the power of technology into managing and monitoring day-to-day classroom tasks. AM keeps track of the kind of math problems each student is working on, how well the student understands the problems and what difficulties he or she is having.

"I like AM because when you work on something and get it wrong the computer tells you," said Shawanda Lewis, third-grade student at McBride. "Then it lets me practice the problem again."

According to Jean Batey, education technologist, AM allows students to work at their own pace. Students print activity sheets, which correspond to their particular level and then complete the math activity sheet along with an answer scan sheet. After scanning the answers, the computer generates results and the next worksheet, which is customized to meet the needs of the child.

Teen Discovery

Youth gather to tackle teen issues

Pvt. 2 Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The teen years are a time of transition that develop a child into an adult, but with all of today's influences, that development period is growing shorter and adulthood is being thrust upon America's youth at an earlier age.

Nearly 20 Fort Benning teens got away from those daily influences March 26-28 to discuss the effects of and ways to solve the problems that many of them create.

"We are taking these kids out of their normal environments and allowing them to make new friends and talk about the things that effect them," said Quinn Thorne, teen development coordinator of Fort Benning's Youth Services as she prepared for a class at 1999's Teen Discovery at Uchee Creek. "We are giving them an open forum to discuss the things they feel need to be better at Youth Services."

The open discussion is part of the Teen Discovery program which is a world-wide Department of Defense initiative that enlists the assistance of military dependents to bring the issues that effect them and their peers to the attention of local and national command.

"Although our focus is improving the program through teen feedback, we aren't all work and no play," she said. "We have found that much of the feedback and personal growth of the teens come when they are doing hands-on projects."

"They seem to almost forget about everything else and just let themselves slip into what they are doing. That is when we get to the heart of what is going on," she said.

The participants in this year's Teen Discovery got a chance to experience hands-on training at the work end of a compass and a camp shovel as they took to the woods near Uchee Creek to learn the ins and outs of camping basics.

"This was the first time I have ever been camping and I absolutely loved it," said Teen Discovery participant, 16-year-old Josephine Dixon.

Although she said the experience was one that was both challenging and enjoyable, she said it was a great learning experience for not only her but the other 18 participants as well.

"We were trying to put the tent up and it was like everyone was pulling different ways and having trouble. But when we started working together as a team, we were able to put it up."

That type of cohesion is what Thorne said she hoped to establish with the hands-on camping project that also included a one-mile land navigation trail and a period of instruction that established the fundamentals of first aid and camping knowledge.

The camping project followed an early rise for the Teen Discovery students who awoke at 5:30 a.m. Saturday morning to lend a hand to the annual Easter egg hunt.

"I actually enjoyed hiding the eggs and helping out with the egg hunt," said 17-year-old James Taylor, who acted as a leader and advisor for the weekend getaway. "But without a doubt, the camping project was the best part of the day."

The 19-member group took to the lodge of Uchee Creek after the camping project Saturday afternoon to attend classes on various teen topics including teen pregnancy and drug abuse.

"We wanted to give them an opportunity to talk in a comfortable environment about issues they are facing everyday," Thorne said. "This was one of them."

Participants were also given a chance to voice their thoughts on both Friday and Saturday night at a round table discussion that Thorne said was organized to point out three areas of focus for the teens in the future.

"We heard everything from better food at school to a drug rehabilitation program for Fort Benning teens," she said. "We have made a list of the programs and now we just have to make them happen."

Making those improvements reality, Thorne said, will be a cooperative effort between the teens that attended the weekend program and the program's administration.

"All of the participants in the program signed a paper before taking part in this weekend that obligated them to be an active role in the program in the future," Thorne said. "In return, we gave them this weekend free of charge."

"I think these teens have really gotten something out of the weekend and are ready to jump right in and help with the Youth Services' program," Thorne commented. "I think they are all excited about being a part of the program."

Trees provide wide range of products

Dan Milburn
Directorate of Public Works

We all remember climbing trees in our youth. As we have grown, we found that forests provide adventure, romance and serenity. In school, we learned that trees provide us with lumber, paper products, syrups and rosins.

Trees do furnish these things, but they also provide us with many other benefits that are not as well known. Trees provide us with a wide range of products, jobs and human benefits.

The major products associated with trees are a variety of wood, lumber and paper products. The average person uses about 749 pounds of paper every year and wood is used in 95 percent of all houses built. This means the average person uses the equivalent of one 100-foot tall, 16-inch diameter tree every year for their wood and paper needs. These are not the only products produced.

Trees are also used to make medicines, food additives, clothing and sporting items. Willow trees are used in the making of aspirin and artificial limbs. Scientists are testing the bark of trees trying to find a cure for cancer. Some dietary supplements come from trees such as Gingko. Rayon is made from tree fibers. Trees are also used in making rosins and cleaners, such as turpentine.

In sports, trees are also helping us. Baseball bats come from white ash. Dogwood trees and persimmon trees are used to produce golf club heads. Walnut trees are used in gunstocks and the nut husks from the trees are used to polish and clean spent bullet shell casings for reloading. Trees help manufacture smokeless gunpowder. The product line does not stop here. Posts, tool-handles, toys and wheels are all made with wood.

Of course, trees must be cut to provide us with all these products. In order to ensure trees are available for future needs, the forests must be replanted. Many new forests are created each year by the planting of approximately 1.4 billion seedlings by industry and private landowners. So where do these seedlings come from?

Nurserymen grow the seedlings from seed collected from superior trees created by scientists that have spent many years testing, cross pollinating and grafting. Work spent in this field has allowed us to create trees that grow faster, straighter and are more fire, drought and disease resistant.

These improvements made in tree genetics have helped foresters and land managers in growing quality trees in healthy forests. In managing forests, foresters and forest technicians use many silviculture tools such as herbicide applications, prescribed burning and timber harvest operations all with the goal of maintaining healthy, productive trees. The harvest operations are planned and administered by foresters, but conducted by loggers. The logging crews cut the trees and prepare them for their specific destination.

Hauling the trees from the woods to the mill is how most people relate to logging. Dodging log trucks on the roads is a common occurrence for everyone in our area. Once at the mill, chemical engineers are turning trees into pulp and then paper for use in many different products.

Other engineers are helping produce wood building materials such as posts, two by fours and plywood. And the workforces support required to make all these things happen, including sale of the final product, is never ending — mechanics, machinist, equipment operators, secretaries, computer operators, etc. As you can see, jobs in forestry are very diverse and large in numbers. In fact, forest industry is ranked among the top 10 employers in 40 out of 50 states.

Trees can also provide many benefits without being harvested. Three well-placed mature trees around a house can reduce air-conditioning costs by 10 to 50 percent. In addition, trees and other landscaping can increase property values by 5 to 10 percent. Trees will also help with pollution and the greenhouse effect. One mature tree can absorb approximately 13 pounds of carbon dioxide and replace it with 1.07 tons of oxygen. Individual or small groups of trees give us financial and environmental gains, but what about the forest?

The forest provides for a place to relax, to get away from the noise of town or to just be part of nature. Foresters do not manage only for timber production, but also for recreation.

There are 737 million acres of forestland in the U.S. Parks, wildlife refuges and other preserves span 166 million acres. These parks and refuges are managed just as public and private forests are except a place to camp, hike, fish or just visit. Yellow Stone National Park and Grand Teton National Park are two of the most visited parks in the country. People flock to these destinations year round and for this reason some people find these areas too noisy or crowded and would like more seclusion. The National Wilderness Preservation covers an additional 104 million acres.

These areas are for those who wish to leave the modern age behind for a little while. Vehicles and other modern conveniences are not allowed in these places.

Trees provide us with so many things; we should respect and appreciate their magic. Even though we have about three percent more forest land now than we did in 1920, the heavy population growth of the future will require more land to build on and fewer areas to grow trees. This means a larger demand will be placed on the nation's forests in the future.

Advancements made in science and technologies will enable us to use the trees more efficiently, but good stewardship of the land is essential and the key to our future generations having the same job, product, aesthetic and recreational opportunities that we have enjoyed.

Foresters can not do this by themselves. We still need everyone to do his or her part to help the environment, so this Arbor Day and Earth Day go out and do something environmentally friendly. And remember "A healthy forest is no accident."

4H honors two area students

Columbus 4H Council

Two Fort Benning students were recently recognized for their 4H achievements at the District Project Achievement Competition (DPA) in Eatonton Ga., and the Annual Columbus 4H Awards Program. Jamycheal Gambles of Dexter Elementary School won 1st Place in his project (Sports and Outdoor Recreation) at DPA and was recognized as dedicated 4H'er of the year at the Annual Awards Program.

Tamara Wilson of Stowers Elementary also won first place at DPA in her project (Wildlife) and was recognized as Outstanding Cloverleaf Girl 4-H'er of the year. Both Jamycheal and Tamara were also recognized for their entries in the Valley Ag Fair (Hamilton) and the Central GA Fair (Cordele). They collectively won 20 blue ribbons and more than $100 in cash prizes.

reports generated by the learning information system and can intervene by quickly diagnosing problems and helping with specific difficulties," said Del Hicks, principal of McBride. "There is also a parent information report which can be sent home or used for parent-teacher conferences. The report provides information such as: mastered objectives, working objectives and percent accuracy on practice, test and review."

"AM is an excellent way for me to meet the individual needs of my students," said Penny Wilson, third-grade teacher at McBride. "The program provides feedback on students' performance and teachers can easily identify the objectives where students need reinforcement and where mastery has occurred."

Wilson said the feedback provided by the program is important but just as important is that the students truly enjoy and look forward to using AM each day.

"AM has made me feel good about math and I've learned a lot of new things," said third-grader Cassandra Monfee. "I am glad we have AM."

Family Advocacy Program

Hints help people recognize abuse

Family Advocacy Program

Since 1983 Child Abuse Prevention Month has become institutionalized nationwide. The month of April has been established as the time of year when organizations, businesses, hospitals, schools, religious organizations and social service agencies join forces to promote public awareness of child abuse and its prevention.

Every individual in the Fort Benning area has a special role to play in improving the welfare of our children. Whether or not you work directly with children, by combining your unique skills with a general knowledge of child abuse issues, you too can make a difference in the life of a child. Education and public awareness is the key to prevention.

The Family Advocacy Program hopes that people will find the following information valuable and will join in helping the prevention of child abuse and neglect.

What is child abuse?

The term "child abuse" can be defined as any behavior directed toward a child by a parent, guardian, caregiver, other family member or other adult that endangers or impairs a child's physical or emotional health and development. Child abuse includes four major categories: physical abuse, sexual abuse, emotional abuse and neglect.

What are signs of possible physical abuse?

•Unexplained injuries, especially those located on parts of the body not usually affected by normal childhood activities. For example eyes, mouth, back, thighs, buttocks, genital areas, etc.

•Repeated injuries such as bruises, welts or burns, especially those where the shape of an object used to produce them is visible.

•Unexplained fractures.

•Denial on the part of parents that anything is wrong, unlikely explanations for the child's injuries, delay in obtaining medical care or inadequate care given, injuries which occur with increasing frequency or severity.

What about child neglect?

Child neglect is the continued failure to provide a child with necessary care and protection including adequate shelter, food, clothing, medical care, etc. Children left without appropriate supervision, especially young children, for extended periods of time are included in child neglect.

•Child appears poorly nourished or inadequately clothed.

•Child appears consistently tired or listless and always seems as though no one cares. Attendance at school may be inconsistent.

•Child evidences a consistent lack of good hygiene or an obsession with cleanliness.

•Child shows evidence that medical needs are not being met.

What is emotional abuse?

Emotional abuse is the most difficult form of child abuse to verify. It includes both verbal assaults and the withholding of positive emotional support. Although the scars may be invisible to the naked eye, emotional abuse wounds the spirit, frequently leaving its marks for a lifetime. Victims of emotional child abuse are "hit" everyday with the power of words which are demeaning, shaming, threatening, blaming, intimidating, unfairly critical or sarcastic in nature.

The child displays behavior that is extreme, for example, may be involved in a pattern of lying, stealing, fighting or is overly aggressive, acts out inappropriately.

•Child may appear defensive, shy or overly dependent.

•Child may be verbally abusive to others by using the same language and demeaning terms he or she has experienced.

What about sexual abuse and its effects on children?

Incest, sexual molestation, rape, sodomy, child pornography, exhibitionism and exploitation are terms most often used when describing child sexual abuse. Those who sexually victimize children suffer from an emotional or psychological dysfunction, usually as a result of their own previous sexual victimization.

They often have severe sexual problems and difficulty relating to adults. Many are adults with whom the child is familiar, and they may repeatedly abuse the same child. An adult who is a stranger to the child will often abuse that child only once but will continue to abuse other children.

The abuse can be:

•non-physical — for example, indecent exposure, obscene phone calls or "peeping toms";

•physical — including genital or oral stimulation, fondling and intercourse; and •violent abuse — rape and other forms of sexually violent behavior.

A single seemingly minor incident, for example, indecent exposure, fondling or an obscene phone call, may cause temporary emotional disturbances such as embarrassment, fear, confusion, guilt, anxiety and a distrust of adults or strangers.

A more severe incident, for example incest, rape, sodomy, exposure to pornographic activity or other forms of sexual violence, may have a lasting effect on the child.

Behavioral problems such as withdrawal, difficulty at school, aggression, running away, nightmares, extreme depression or anxiety may result.

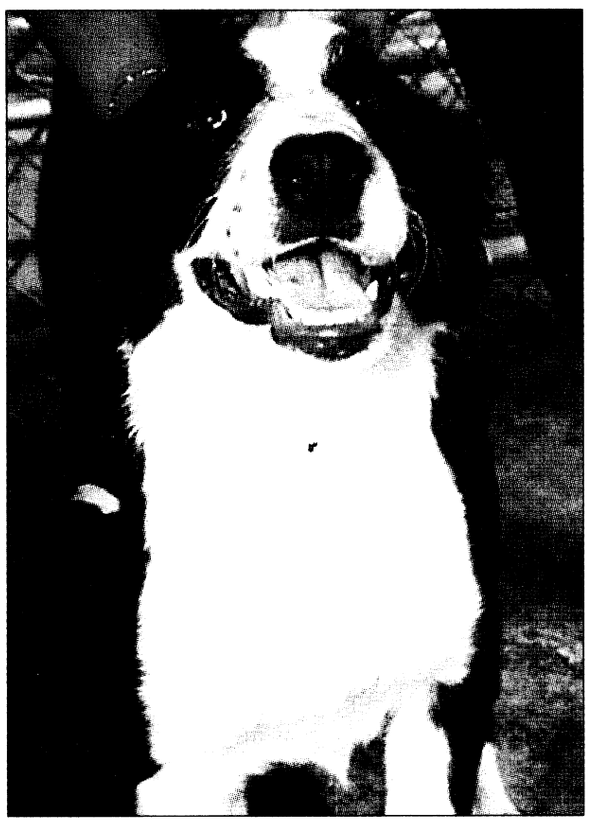
Physical signs of sexual abuse may include genital swelling, cuts or bruises, venereal disease, pregnancy, etc. Symptoms resulting from emotional harm often do not surface until adulthood.

What to do if you discover a child has been sexually abused?

First and foremost do not deny the problem. Believe what the child tells you no matter how unbelievable it sounds.

Control your emotions. Fear and anger on your part are natural reactions but may be frightening to the child. Let the child know that your feelings are not directed at him or her.

Never blame, punish or embarrass the child. Reassure the child that he or she is safe and that it was right to tell you. Let the child ask questions, and then provide answers that can be understood.



Find out as much as possible about the events leading up to, during and after the incident. But ... do so delicately. If the molester was a stranger get a description of the face, clothes, location, car, etc.•Immediately contact a physician for treatment of physical injuries and the police to report the abuse. Provide them with as much information as possible to better ensure their appropriate intervention.

Remember

•Keeping children safe is the responsibility of everyone. The more we know about the problem of child abuse the more we can do to prevent it. We all must do our part.

This information has been provided to you by the Family Advocacy Program and the National Council on Child Abuse and Family Violence.

"Doggonit"

A 6-month-old male Australian Shepherd and 6-month-old female mixed breed dog are just a few of the animals now available for adoption at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic. There are many more in need of good homes.

The clinic has changed the adoption cost and now, pet owners only pay for initial vaccination and procedure costs, which could be any where from $11 to $40. Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

The Irish water spaniel is sometimes called the clown of the dog family.

The minimum pool depth required for international water polo matches is six feet.

Autism affects half a million people

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Medical Center

April is National Autism Awareness Month. Autism is a developmental disability that affects the brain function. It is usually first noticed in early childhood by about age 3.

Autism affects as many as one in 500 individuals. It is four times more common in boys than girls and is unrelated to race, family educational or financial situation.

Children and adults with autism typically have difficulties in verbal and non-verbal communication, social interactions and leisure or play activities. The disorder makes it hard for them to communicate with others and relate to the outside world.

More than one half million people in the U.S. today have some form of autism. It is the third most common developmental disability and is more common than Down's Syndrome. Yet the majority of the public are still unaware of how autism affects people and how to work effectively them.

Autism is often referred to as a spectrum disorder because the symptoms and characteristics of autism can present themselves in a wide variety of combinations, from mild to severe. Although autism is defined by a certain set of behaviors, children and adults can exhibit any combination of the behaviors in any degree of severity. Two people with autism may be completely different in behavior.

Several autism-related disorders are grouped under the broad heading "Pervasive Developmental Disorder" or PDD. Most professionals will agree that there is no standard "type" or "typical" person with autism.

Medical researchers are exploring different explanations for the various forms of autism. Although one specific cause of autism is not known, current research links autism to biological or neurological differences in the brain. In some families there appears to be a pattern of autism or related disabilities, which suggests there may be a genetic basis to the disorder, although at this time no one gene has been directly linked to autism.

Several older theories about the cause of autism have been now proven false. Autism is not a mental illness. Children with autism are not unruly kids, who choose not to behave. Autism is not caused by bad parenting. Furthermore, no known psychological factors in the development of the child have been shown to cause autism.

There are no medical tests for diagnosing autism. An accurate diagnosis must be based on observations of the child's communication, behavior and developmental levels. Children with autism often appear relatively normal in their development until the age of 24-30 months, when parents may notice delays in language, play or social interaction.

The following areas are among those which may be affected by autism:

•Communication: language develops slowly or not at all; use of words without attaching the usual meaning to them; communicates with gestures instead of words; short attention spans.

•Social interaction: spends time alone rather than with others; shows little interest in making friends; less responsible to social cues such as eye contact or smiles.

•Sensory impairment: unusual reactions to physical sensations such as being overly sensitive to touch or under-responsive to pain; sight, hearing, touch, pain, smell, taste may be affected to a lesser or greater degree.

•Play: lack of spontaneous or imaginative play; does not imitate others actions; doesn't initiate pretend games.

•Behaviors: may be overactive or very passive; repetitive movements such as rocking or hand flapping; continuously focus on a topic; apparent lack of common sense; may be aggressive or self mutilate.

There are great differences among people with autism. Some individuals mildly affected may exhibit only slight delays in language and greater challenges with social interactions. They may have average or above average verbal, memory or spatial skills but find it difficult to be imaginative or join in a game of softball with their friends. Others more severely affected may need greater assistance in handling day to day activities like crossing the street or making a purchase.

Contrary to popular understanding, many children and adults with autism make eye contact, show affection, smile and laugh and show a variety of other emotions, but in varying degrees. The autism may affect their range of responses and make it more difficult to control how their body and mind react. They live normal life spans and the behaviors associated with autism may change or disappear over time.

Some adults with autism live and work independently in the community, while others depend on the support of family and professionals.

Adults with autism can benefit from vocational training to provide them with the skills needed for obtaining jobs, in addition to social and recreational programs. Adults with autism may live in a variety of residential settings, ranging from independent home or apartments to group homes, supervised apartment settings, living with other family members to more structured residential care.

With appropriate intervention, many of the autism behaviors can be positively changed, even to the point that the child or adult may appear to the untrained person to no longer have autism. The majority of children and adults will, however, continue to exhibit some symptoms of autism to some degree throughout their entire lives.

Experience has shown that individuals with autism respond well to a highly structured, specialized education and behavior modification program. Readers can learn more about autism at www.autism-society.orgs or by calling (800)-3AUTISM.

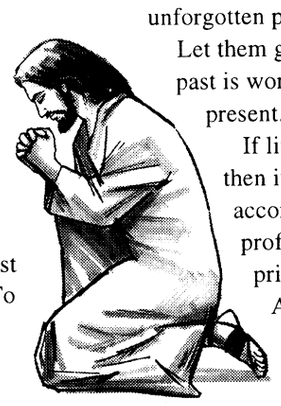
Relationships hinge on forgiveness

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) William C. Shelnutt, IX
Pastor, Infantry Center Chapel



Several years ago, I began teaching a course called "Life Management." It was based on the discovery that a large number of people exist in a life heaped with regrets over past mistakes or worries about future situations instead of living vibrant, vigorous lives.

Robust and active living

requires a sense of forgiveness. From my clinical background, I recognized that one of the greatest healers known to humanity is forgiveness.

You can not live life without being hurt, but that is no excuse to build a wall around yourself. If you are alive, you are a target for hurt. Life is bombarded daily with hurtful happenings. Forgiveness may potentially be the greatest healer. The cycle of hurt is caused by holding things against ourselves and others. To be unforgiving means someone must pay, and too often our own bodies pay the price plus an exorbitant interest. Internalized hurt always demands a painful (pay-in-full) payment. Some people would rather have the righteousness of their vindictiveness than be healthy. That's their choice. If you want health, wealth and happiness, you can't afford the luxury of lugging around all those unforgiven, unforgotten past events.

Let them go. Nothing in the past is worth polluting your present.

If life is important to you, then it must be realigned in accordance with the most profound and freeing principle of the Bible.

All of our relationships hinge on this life-sustaining essential.

Holding any form of unforgiveness, whether toward ourselves, others or God, will eventually erode the very essence of that which we eagerly pursue (life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness). Give it a try. Give yourself some life. Forgive and live!

Marital conflict can be good

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Conflict is inevitable when two people live closely together. Too often, as the case may be, married couples see conflict as something to avoid. The truth is marital conflict can be a good thing.

Gary Smalley, noted speaker and author, has this to say about marital conflict, "Conflict in marriage can be the door to a deeper and more meaningful intimacy in a couple's marriage relationship."

I see marital conflict serving the same purpose of a pressure relief valve found on a water heater. The pressure relief valve allows excess pressure to be released that otherwise, if not let go, would cause the water heater to blow up. Unresolved issues in marriage just don't go away, they build up until there is an explosion that can destroy a marriage.

However, as in anything, there are rules for fair conflict. Here are some that may be of benefit:

•Learn to express your feelings accurately.

•Speak for yourself using "I" statements. Instead of "You make me angry," say "I feel angry."

•No name calling.

•Don't resort to cold silence.

•Listen to what your spouse is saying.

•Repeat back what your spouse said to ensure you heard correctly.

•If things get heated, call a time out to allow tempers to subside.

You may want to choose a conflict between you and your spouse that you would like to discuss using the rules listed here. There may be times though when you and your spouse get "stuck" and need some outside help. The For Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center may be the answer. Contact the center at 545-1760 for more information. In the meantime, happy and fruitful conflict!

Ice dream

Third-grade students at McBride School enjoyed eating ice-cream in the school cafeteria late last month. The McBride Parent Teacher Organization sponsored an ice-cream social for first through third-grade students. The social was held to celebrate the ending of the Terra Nova Test. The Terra Nova is a week-long test that evaluates student proficiency in reading, math, science and social studies.

CPAs answer tax questions

Georgia Society of CPAs

If you have some last-minute questions about filing your tax return, you're not alone. To help alleviate some of your tax-related anxiety, here are some common questions and answers from the Georgia Society of CPAs.

•My tax return won't be ready until April 15. What's the best way to get it to the IRS?

Use the U.S. Postal System. As long as your return is postmarked on April 15th, it will be deemed filed on time.

You may also use specifically designated delivery services, such as Federal Express, Airborne Express, DHL Worldwide Express and United Parcel Service. You also have the option of filing it electronically, but to do so you must have a computer, modem and the right tax preparation software or hire a CPA who can file it for you.

•How do I get an extension to file my tax return?

All you need to do is file Form 4868 to obtain an automatic extension to Aug. 16, 1999, eliminating late-filing penalties. However, you'll still need to include any taxes you owe with your request for an extension.

•What if I can't pay the balance of my taxes by April 15?

If you can show undue hardship, complete and mail Form 1127 on or before April 15 to extend the time of payment for up to six months. Your application must be accompanied by evidence supporting undue hardship, a statement of assets and liabilities, and receipts and disbursements for three months prior to the original due date of the return.

If you don't think you'll be able to pay off your outstanding tax bill in full within six months, you can file Form 9465 to request an installment agreement. However, you will be charged interest on your outstanding tax balance.

As an alternative, you may want to consider getting a loan from a family member, friend or bank.

•If the IRS finds that I made a mistake and paid too little tax, will I be subject to any penalties?

That depends on the mistake. You may have to pay an accuracy-related penalty if you underpaid your taxes because of negligence or disregard of rules or regulations or because you substantially understated your income. In the eyes of the IRS, the underpayment is substantial if it is more than 10 percent of the tax required to be shown on the return or $5,000. The accuracy-related penalty is equal to 20 percent of the underpayment.

•If I overpaid my taxes in error, how can I get a refund?

Simply file an amended return and either request a refund or apply all or part of your overpayment on your original return to your estimated taxes. If you choose to get a refund, it will be mailed to you separately from any refund indicated on your original return.

•How much time do I have to amend my return?

In general, you have three years after the original timely return was due or filed, or two years from the date the tax was paid, whichever is later. Generally, failure to file an amended return within this time frame prevents you from receiving a tax refund, no matter how valid your claim.

In the bestselling book, The Seven Habits of Highly Effective People, by Steven Covey, the author uses a distillation of his readings and experiences to help the reader become a more effective person in business and other areas of life. The success of the book led to several copycat titles, such as The Seven Habits of Really Good Housekeepers and other even less memorable efforts.

Not to be outdone, the Legal Assistance Office has seen a need to assist new consumers to consider several important rules when thinking of making a financial decision on making a purchase of consumer goods. We call these rules The Seven Rules for Really Savvy Consumers. With apologies to Mr. Covey, we reproduce them here for your consideration.

•Rule one: Use the two-day tag team rule.

This rule requires that husband and wife agree on any purchase above an amount agreed to in advance, say $100. A purchase over the agreed amount must be approved by both husband and wife or the deal is passed.

Further, no proposed purchase can be made until the day after the visiting the seller's place of business. This rule helps prevent impulse purchases and promotes family teamwork on finances.

Failure to use this rule may lead to a "Nag Team" marriage, where both parties complain about the other's spending habits. Think about any deal overnight and after consultation with your significant other.

•Rule two: Get it in writing.

Oral, exaggerated promises made by a salesperson are called "puffing," and are used in many types of sales. They are not illegal, but neither are they necessarily true. A statement that a used car is "a cream puff, driven only on Sundays by a retired schoolteacher" may encourage you to buy the car, but it will not be legally binding unless it is a part of the written contract you must sign when you buy.

More often than not, a used vehicle is sold "as is," with very limited or nonexistent warranties. If a promise is not in writing, it is not legally enforceable in most cases.

•Rule three: Read it or weep. Contracts may be no fun to read, but the best way to protect yourself in any transaction is to read the written promises made to you, ask questions about them, and demand answers you can understand. Beware when a salesperson says that a point "will be taken care of later," because it is not enforceable when it is not in the contract. The savvy buyer will read information on the product or service before coming in to negotiate a purchase, and then read the contract before signing. Once a deal is signed, it is usually done. Remember, it is your money, and you have a right to understand all of the terms in the contract.

•Rule four: Read it and keep. A consumer advocate, attorney, troop commander or the Better Business Bureau can do little or nothing to help a person who cannot present any evidence supporting the facts of a transaction. The client may insist that he or she paid a bill collector in full, but can produce no receipt, check or other payment record. A consumer who orders by mail, and does not retain paperwork containing the address of the company, cannot be helped. Be sure that you keep paperwork on all major transactions or anytime you are unfamiliar with the company.

•Rule five: Just say no. This seems obvious, but there is no legal requirement that you sign a contract to purchase goods or services. Sales techniques often seek to establish a sense of obligation in the consumer to buy something, because of all the trouble the salesperson has gone to explaining the product or service. Don't fall for it! Salespersons are trained professionals, and you should try to be a professional buyer. When in doubt, walk away and buy another day.

•Rule six: Avoid the free lunch. Consumers approached with really neat deals should ask themselves two questions before becoming too excited. First, is this proposal too good to be true? If so, it probably is. Secondly, why me? If this is such an outstanding opportunity, there are several friends of the seller who would be ahead of you in line for the deal. Frankly, you are perhaps the most gullible person the salesman can find at the moment.

•Rule seven: The 3-C rule; complain, complain, complain.

You may or may not be able to get specific relief by complaining, since it may depend upon how well you have followed other rules. It is still worthwhile to let the company, the Better Business Bureau and industry trade groups know how you feel about your treatment, because the cumulative effect of your complaints and of other consumers can change future treatment of others.

These common-sense suggestions can help you be a more savvy consumer. For information or assistance in consumer matters, you can consult the Legal Assistance Office in Building 5.

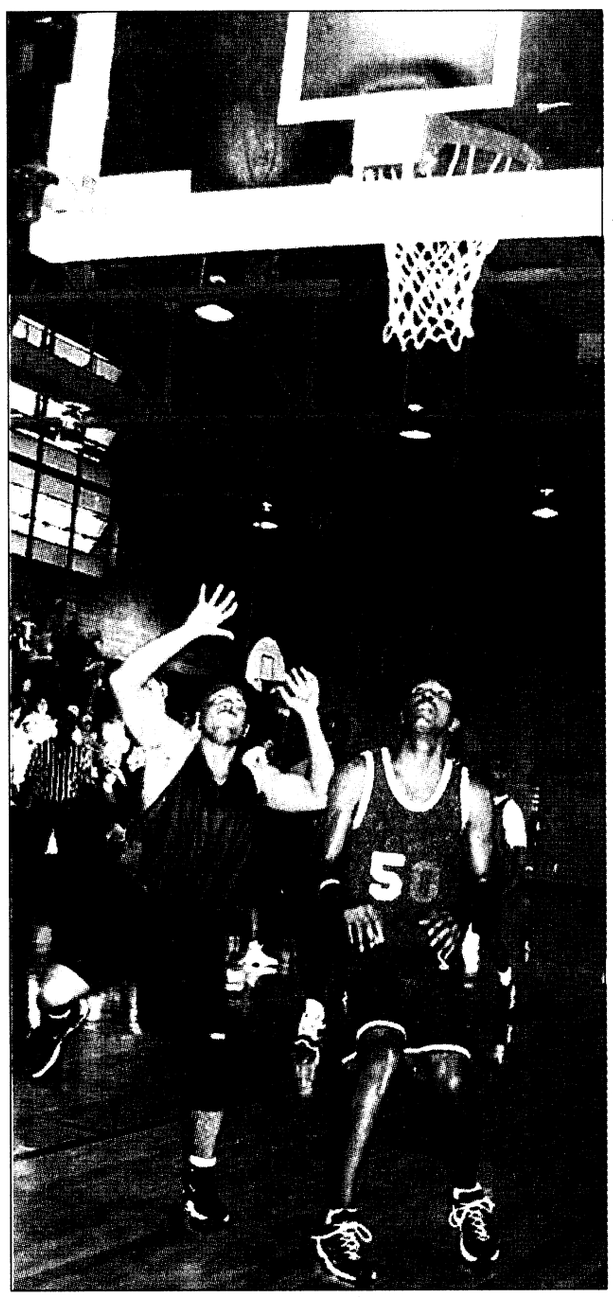
203rd topples ITB for title

Company A takes top spot in b-ball tourney

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's basketball season came to an end April 1 as the top two teams battled it out on the court during the 1999 U.S. Army Infantry Center Intramural Basketball Championships at Briant Wells Fitness Center.

When the buzzer sounded signaling the end of the 40-minute championship game, Company A, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) had toppled the Headquarters Service Company-30th Adjutant General Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade, team 63-54.



Although the 203rd team took home the top trophy, the ITB team dominated most of the first half, taking an early lead in the opening minutes. 203rd shot back quickly, however, and managed to take a two point lead by halftime. The ITB team came within four points in the final minutes, but never regained the lead as Co. A went on to claim victory.

Two other 3rd Bde. teams fought for the third place slot in a consolation game which preceded the championship game.

Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment came out on top against Battery C, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment for third place.

The teams earned the chance to play each other for the top spots after a week-long tournament which began with 16 teams from the USAIC league.

According to Carol Gearheart, the intramural coordinator for the Directorate of Community Activities' Sports Office, the 16 teams were selected out of 41 teams which participated in the USAIC league according to the number of teams which finished in their league and their win and loss record during the two-month regular season.

Shooters gun for games

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit are gearing up for the last 1999 Pan American Games U.S. Team Selection Match to be conducted April 24 at the Wolf Creek Shooting Complex where the 1996 Olympics were held in Atlanta.

The Pan American Games, which is conducted every four years, is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and the Campeonato de Tiro des las Americas (CAT Games) — where shooters can win medals and set world records. The 1999 Pan American Games is also the last opportunity for nations to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

The 41 USAMU international shooters, who are part of the Wold Class Athlete Program, will be vying for a limited number of slots on the team to represent the United States at the 1999 Pan Am Games in Winipeg, Canada, July 23 to August 8, where 5,000 athletes from the Western Hemisphere will compete. Shooters form the International Riffle, International Pistol, Running Target and Shotgun Teams will have to be one of the top two finishers in their discipline to make the 34-person U.S. Shooting Team, which will compete against hundreds of shooters from dozens of other countries.

The International Pistol shooters will be competing Sunday through April 17 in the Rapid Fire, Air Pistol, Free Pistol and Sport Pistol matches. USAMU shooters Rhonda L. Bright and Daryl L. Szarneski are two of the current leaders in the race for the Pan Am Pistol Team slots.

International Rifle Team members will be striving for slots in Air Rifle, Free Rifle and Smallbore Three-Position today through Sunday. Stephen C. Golf, Michael E. Anit, David A. Johnson, Glenn A. Dubois, Kenneth A Johnson and Jason Parker are leading the pack in the Pan Am Rifle Team competition.

In the U.S. Shotgun Team competition, shooters Theresa E. DeWitt, Joseph D. Buffs ad Joetta R. Demment are ahead. The Shotgunners will compete in Skeet, Trap and Double Trap April 15 though April 24.

USAMU running target shooter Armando R. Ayala is in contention for one of only two slots in 10-meter 30+30, which will be decided this weekend.

Rangers test new physical training

Ed Thomas
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) recently joined forces with the 75th Ranger Regiment to test some of the new physical training (PT) concepts being developed for the year 2000 revision of FM 21-20 Physical Training.

Throughout the month of February, 15 Rangers and four USAPFS Doctrine Division cadre trained with a variety of hand-held items including dumbbells, jump ropes, medicine balls, walking sticks and war clubs. Inversion boots, calisthenics, posture analysis, alternative assessments, climbing and numerous other topics were included in the 120-hour hands-on course.

"The Ranger Combat Physical Fitness course was a major move forward in reshaping PT doctrine for the 21st Century," said USAPFS Chief of Doctrine Frank Palkoska.

Moving the USAPFS from Fort Benjamin Harrison to Fort Benning was the first step in retooling doctrine for the battlefield.

"Our partnership with the Rangers will insure that we keep our mind on the real purpose of PT, which is to prepare Soldiers to fight and win in combat," Palkoska noted. "The current doctrine was created in the early 1980's with little or no attention to previous Army PT systems."

"It lacks the progression, variety and precision needed to train Soldiers for the faster and more lethal battlefields of the 21st Century," he said. "We had to go back to pre-1980's doctrine to find the future," said

USAPFS Instructional Systems Specialist Steve Van Camp said, "The PT that emerged out of WWII and the Korean War has much to offer, and doctrine from the late 1800's and early 1900's is also rich with practical innovations still relevant for tomorrow's combat Soldier."

Modern Army PT began when Lt. Col. Herman J. Koehler was appointed to teach gymnastics and physical culture at West Point Military Academy in 1885. Koehler was a second-generation German and a master of a warrior-based system of physical training dating back to the early 1880's.

"Koehler's system became doctrine in 1892, but it faded after he retired in 1923," said Palkoska. "The Army chose a more relaxed emphasis on sports and games over combat-oriented PT, and it took WWII to move back toward serious training. By the early 1950's, gains made in combat-oriented PT doctrine after the war were lost as sports and games again emerged supreme."

Rangers demonstrate alternating arm-leg hanging drills earlier this week using inversion boots.

Lessons learned during the Korean War produced a 1957 revision of the FM 21-20 that emphasized posture, physical fitness testing, body structure and function, and other basic subjects geared to train soft draftees to minimum standards. The Vietnam War brought tough if not smarter training. By the mid-1970's it was clear to Army leaders that Soldiers were not fit enough, and the early 1980's marked the beginning of a major change in PT doctrine.

"When the dust settled in the mid-1980's, the doctrine looked quite a bit more civilian," said USAPFS Sgt. Maj. James Schumacher. "Since then, we have been taking a health club approach to PT, and commanders are calling for a return to battle-focussed training. The doctrine we envision will take the best from the past and combine it with sound innovations from the present."

Mass dumbbell training promotes muscular endurance, medicine balls develop explosive power, sticks are used for flexibility training and war club drills keep the shoulder girdle healthy and mobile. These drills, along with calisthenics and stretching exercises were used in the past to prepare Soldiers for more complicated motor skills like leaping, climbing, squatting, crawling, throwing, striking and kicking.

"The war clubs and stick training were developed in India thousands of years ago," said Palkoska. "The Ancient Greek warriors used dumbbells and weighted balls. The origins of inverted exercise are lost to antiquity, as are calisthenics and stretching exercises."

"The challenge now is to rebuild these and other effective PT concepts and develop a training system that will allow all Soldiers an opportunity to safely learn them," VanCamp said. "The Rangers have helped us immeasurably to test the new doctrine. We all came away with a deep appreciation of past doctrine and a new determination to make the best of it come alive again."

Guest trainer Dr. Maung Gyi instructs a Ranger in the use of the walking stick for flexibility.

Army sweeps men's slalom

Paulette Freese
Army News Service

Stowe, Vt. — A Chinook pilot, a West Point cadet, and an aviation company operations officer swept the men's Armed Forces Giant Slalom Championship held here March 4.

Despite poor snow conditions, rain and dense fog, Capt. Grant Haugen, Cadet Adam Heppe and 1st Lt. William Taylor finished first, second, and third out of 11 male skiers representing the Army, Air Force and Marine Corps.

Haugen, who captured the giant slalom gold medal, is stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky. where he pilots Chinook helicopters. The Colorado native grew up in Telluride and was a ski racer throughout high school and his four years at the University of Nevada, in Reno. As a National Collegiate Ski Association racer, Haugen finished the 1988 season with national rankings of 10th place in the downhill and a 9th place in the Super G.

Since his piloting job doesn't allow for many training opportunities on the snow, Haugen cross trains and works out to keep himself in top physical condition. He said he hit the slopes only twice in December and skied just one practice run the day before the race.

Together with the military's top two women skiers, Air Force lst Lts. Staci Pannel and Jennifer Rollins, the three men join 20 military biathletes who make up the armed forces ski team that will representing the U.S. at the Winter Consiel International du Sport Militaire championships scheduled for March 19-26 in Lillehammer, Norway.

Haugen is no newcomer to the CISM Games, having won a place on the 1998 CISM team. Although he is not looking forward to leaving his wife Stephanie and their newborn baby, Haugen said he anticipates making his mark at the CISM competition along with teammates Taylor from Ft. Wainwright, Alaska, and Heppe, who attends the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.

Hero cashes in on own name

Sgt. William Wilczewski
Fort Knox Public Affairs Office

Say it ain't so, Joe!

Those words came to mind when Street and Smith's Sports Business Journal correspondent Pete Williams indicated that a chink may have been found in the armor of one of America's greatest sports heroes.

commentary

Williams claimed in the March 15-21 issue that Joe DiMaggio, the legendary New York Yankee who died March 8 at age 84, was the first athlete to make autograph signing a business deal.

Not to take anything away from the Yankee Clipper as a player, but boy was I disappointed to read about his off-the-field business escapades.

According to Williams, in the early 1980s, as the market for sports memorabilia exploded, Joltin' Joe became the first player to command an appearance fee equal to $5 per signature.

At his final public signing, last June in Atlantic City, N.J., show promoters were charging fans $150 to have DiMaggio autograph a ball, and $175 for a photo, according to Williams.

Not exactly a new concept, but isn't it bad enough that ticket and sports paraphernalia prices have gone through the roof in recent years?

Now I have to take a hammer to my piggy bank for an overpaid athlete's lousy John Hancock.

Hell, I sign my name every day, and haven't seen one red cent come from it.

Granted, I'm no legendary anything, but how hard is it to scribble your name on a piece of paper for an admiring fan?

Maybe we as fans should reevaluate our priorities, if the "superstars" are lacking theirs.

I'm sure baseball was intended as a game for having fun, but I guess when greed rears its ugly head, even our society's simplest values can be corrupted.

In today's sports entertainment industry, which is infested with overinflated egos and pocketbooks, this sort of thing is commonplace and, quite frankly, expected.

But hearing that ol' No. 5 was the trailblazer for this avalanche of narcissism almost broke my pinstriped heart.

Furthermore, Stephen Hisler, who promoted shows involving DiMaggio from 1985 to 1998, told Williams, "The demand for his signature went consistently up," and apparently DiMaggio took advantage of it.

Williams wrote that Morris Engelberg, DiMaggio's longtime attorney, aided him in shrewdly marketing his autograph, earning millions of dollars and raising the bar for other active and retired athletes to make lucrative incomes traveling the card show circuit.

DiMaggio even went so far as to sign a $3.5 million annual contract with Score Board Inc., a New Jersey-based firm that sold his autographed baseballs for $349 through catalogs and QVC — the home shopping network.

So the next time you run across superstar athlete X at a game or the airport, you might wanna make sure you have enough in your bank account before you ask him to doodle his name on your hot dog wrapper.

Open scoring may not be answer

Fort Knox Public Affairs Office

The smoke hasn't quite cleared from the towering Lewis-Holyfield inferno.

And the debates concerning the modifications that "should" take place within the professional boxing industry still continue — at least for those who are optimistic enough to think that the sport still has a future.

commentary

WBC welterweight champion Oscar DeLaHoya may have been the first person to make a noticeable wave in this vast ocean of uncertainty.

According to Associated Press writer Tim Dahlberg, DeLaHoya and promoter Bob Arum are pushing the Nevada Athletic Commission to allow scoring of the three ringside judges to be posted in the arena at Mandalay Bay when DeLaHoya defends his title against Oba Carr May 22.

Arum has also asked the Nevada commission to allow open scoring on a trial basis for the May 8 super bantamweight title fight between WBC champion Erik Morales and Wayne McCullough.

According to Dahlberg, commissioners plan to meet sometime next month to consider the request, although some expressed reservations about a variety of scenarios that could occur under open scoring.

I would have to agree with those reservations.

As horrific as the "Melee at Madison" was, I have to side in favor of the traditional scoring system.

After all, isn't half the fun holding your breath during that moment of truth when the ring announcer reveals the decision?

Sure, when the decision is as warped as it was March 13, the public has a right to be up in arms, and the fighters involved have a substantial bone to pick. But isn't it with the quality of the judging, not the system?

And if you think politics has its slimy hands wrapped around the neck of professional boxing now, what do you think is gonna happen if the "safeguard" of open scoring is put into effect?

Arums said of open scoring, citing the March 13 fight, "What happened in New York was a travesty. And no one learned until the fight was over that a crime had been committed. I say let's watch the crime as it's occurring."

And how true those words may become if open scoring is put into effect.

With the new system, we may as well forget about any investigations of Machiavellian activity, because we were watching the crime as it happened, but what could we do to stop it?

Hell, what could Lewis have done?

Could he have protested and gone on strike after the fifth round — which Eugenia Williams awarded to Holyfield after being outpunched 43-11 — if the round-by-round tallies were displayed on a big scoreboard in the Garden?

That sounds like a great plan. (Yeah, right!)

If we can't take the judges' word for it after the fight, what makes us think we can take their word for it round by round?

Remember, the best magic tricks are performed right in front of your eyes, making them more difficult to dispute.

There is also the possibility that it would alter the quality of action in the ring, particularly in the later rounds.

DeLaHoya told Dahlberg, "I always close the show. The fans always remember the last few rounds, and that is where I want to dominate. Even if I'm ahead 15 points, I'm going to go out there and try to knock a guy out. My style isn't to survive. It's to go out there and fight."

That sounds good, but can DeLaHoya speak for all prizefighters?

DeLaHoya continued, "Maybe the ones who lose will be the judges who are being paid off."

Or just maybe a scoreboard would make it easier for judges (and combatants) to fulfill solicited outcomes?

Pedaling Towards A Cure For Diabetes

To help prevent and cure diabetes, many Americans are signing up for the Tour de Cure, the American Diabetes Association's annual cycling event.

(NAPSA)-From the sunny coast of San Diego to the historic sites of New England, and even in Anchorage, Alaska, Americans will be strapping on their helmets this spring to ride for a cure for diabetes! The seventh leading cause of death in the United States, diabetes is a serious disease that threatens the lives of nearly 16 million Americans. Chances are, a friend or family member or even you, will be diagnosed with diabetes at some point in your lifetime; you might even know someone already. So shouldn't you do something to help stop this disease right now?

Maybe you ride your bike ten miles a day; maybe you ride it once a week; maybe it has been sitting in your garage waiting for you to ride it. In any case, here is a chance for you to ride your bike towards a cure for a disease that affects nearly 16 million people.

By signing up to participate in the American Diabetes Association's annual cycling event, Tour de Cure, you can help to support the Association's mission to prevent and cure diabetes and to improve the lives of all people with diabetes. All you need is a bike, a phone, and desire to help. You will join more than 25,000 people in almost 100 sites across the country, all with that same desire. You will also have a day of fun and exercise in the process!

Unfortunately, many of the symptoms of diabetes go unnoticed, which is why more than 5 million Americans with diabetes have not been diagnosed. By raising public awareness, The American Diabetes Association strives for earlier diagnosis to help prevent such severe complications as blindness, kidney failure, strokes and lower-limb amputation.

Diabetes is not just an unfortunate lifestyle change for the millions of Americans who must deal with it every day, but it also has a devastating effect on our entire society. This disease costs our American healthcare system nearly $98 billion every year based on the total health care costs incurred by people with diabetes. By supporting critical research in the ongoing search for a cure, you can help the Association's efforts in fighting this battle. National Tour de Cure Sponsors include: Weetabix and Grainfield's cereals, People Magazine, Bicycling Magazine, The Bicycle Council and Yahoo!

To learn how you can get involved in this exciting event, call the American Diabetes Association at 1-800-TOUR-888 (1-800-868-8888) or register online at www.diabetes.org/tour.

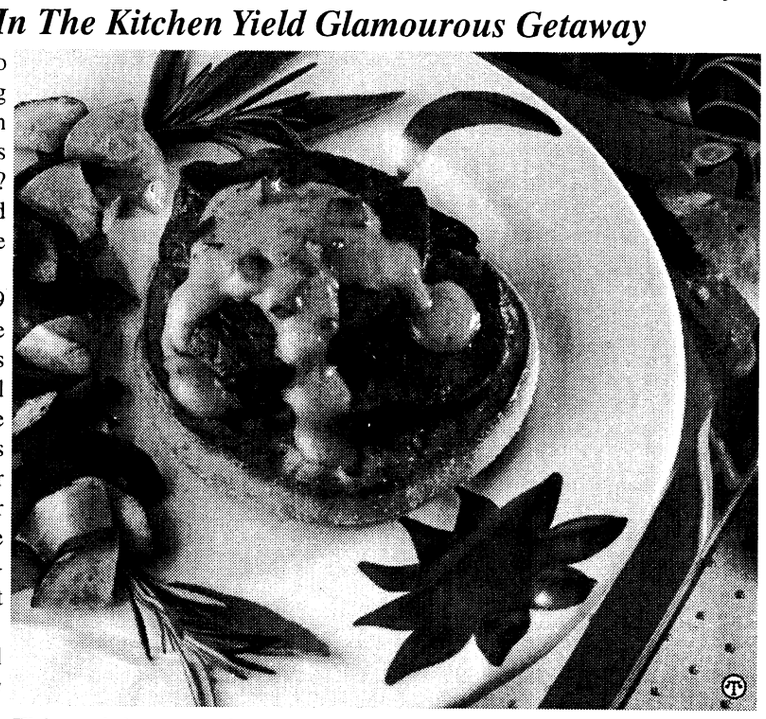
Bays English Muffins 1999 "Great Escape" Recipe Contest: Creativity And Ingenuity In The Kitchen Yield Glamourous Getaway

(NAPSA)-Do you spend too much time in the kitchen worrying about meals instead of engaging in more rewarding pursuits-such as planning a well-deserved vacation? With a little ingenuity you could be on your way to a dream escape to London, Paris and Rome.

The Bays English Muffins 1999 "Great Escape" National Recipe Contest challenges cooks across the country to submit an original recipe of no more than five ingredients (not including Bays English Muffins, salt, pepper or water). The recipe can be for anything from a breakfast favorite to your own prescription for a last-minute meal. All recipes must include Bays English Muffins.



One Grand Prize Winner will receive an unforgettable 10-day Great Escape for two to London, Paris and Rome. Visit the Bays Web site at www.bays.com for more detailed information on the contest Grand Prize.

Recipes will be judged by a panel of food experts on the basis of taste, appearance, imagination, practicality, appropriateness for an English muffin and must meet the "Great Escape" criteria of calling for five or fewer ingredients.

Six finalists will be notified by mail after May 15, 1999 and flown to Chicago on June 3, 1999 for final recipe preparation and judging on June 4, 1999. The trip to Chicago includes round trip airfare, if applicable, from the airport nearest the finalists' home, single hotel accommodations for two nights and some meals. All other expenses not identified (including gratuities) are solely the finalists' responsibility.

The first place winner and one guest will be flown to London, Paris and Rome. The trip includes round trip coach airfare, deluxe accommodations and $500 spending money.

The second place winner will receive a Compaq™ Presario 5050 personal computer. The third place winner will receive Hartmann™ "Intensity" luggage, and the fourth place winner will receive a Panasonic™ 13" TV/VCR combination. One fifth and sixth place winner will each receive a $100 Aveda™ gift certificate and one case of Bays English Muffins. Thirty runners-up will each receive a gift package of Bays English Muffins and a Bays chef's apron.

This quick entree for two features a prepared sauce and ready-to-mix ingredients for an elegant, no-fuss meal.

How to Enter

To enter the Bays English Muffins "Great Escape" Recipe Contest, send your original "Great Escape" recipe that uses one or more Bays English Muffins to: Bays "Great Escape" Recipe Contest, 225 W. Ohio Street, Suite 600, Chicago, IL 60610.

You may submit more than one recipe, but each should be mailed separately along with your name, address and a daytime phone number, plus one proof of purchase from a package of Bays English Muffins. Recipes must be submitted on a 8-1/2" x 11" sheet of paper. All entries must be received by March 31, 1999.

Each contest entry becomes the property of Bays Corporation and will not be returned. Arizona, Florida, Maryland and Vermont residents need not submit proof of purchase. Void where prohibited. Open to U.S. residents ages 18 and older. Subject to complete official rules. Official rules available by writing to Bays "Great Escape" Recipe Contest at the above address, calling 1/800 FOR-BAYS, or by visiting the Bays Web site at www.bays.com.

Beef Tenderloin for Two

1/3 cup prepared Bearnaise sauce
2 tablespoons sun-dried (or fresh) tomatoes, finely chopped
2 Bays English Muffins, lightly toasted
1 clove garlic, lightly crushed
2 8-oz beef tenderloins
Salt and pepper to taste
1/2 teaspoon savory leaves, crushed

Sauce: Mix Bearnaise sauce with tomatoes; set aside. Rub toasted muffin halves with garlic cloves; set aside.

Tenderloins: Slice tenderloin steaks in two slices each. Season to taste. Saute in butter for three minutes per side for rare and four minutes per side for medium. Place two steak slices on each muffin half. Top with sauce.

newsworthy trends

Fifty-Plussers and Computers

(NAPSA)-In what's becoming a surprisingly common ritual, seniors, or "50-plussers" are joining the computer savvy, connecting to friends and loved ones via the Internet and in the process reentering a social and information pipeline that in many cases has long since vanished from their lives. The reasons?

Organizations for older adults, such as the American Society for Aging (ASA) and the American Association of Retired People (AARP), are making a concerted effort to bring the many benefits of high technology to their memberships. Also, large companies like IBM are now marketing directly to this group, often working with organizations to provide hardware, software and education to their members.

"There is an entire generation of Americans that did not have the opportunity to learn about computers in school or use them in the workplace," says Rai Cockfield, Vice President, IBM Market Development. "Now they have the time and the resources to get connected."

According to a 1998 survey published by SeniorNet, which has computer-trained more than 100,000 50-plussers through 140 specialized "learning centers" across the country, 40 percent of all those between 50 and 75 years of age own computers, and fully 53 percent of college graduates above the age of 50 own one. With one baby boomer reaching that milestone every seven seconds, there's a prime market for those entering the prime of their lives.

It's becoming much easier for 50-plussers to get online, thanks to organizations like SeniorNet. The agency began in 1986 as a research project at the University of San Francisco, whose goal was to determine whether older adults could adapt to technology and whether they'd even be interested. The answers, overwhelmingly, were Yes and Yes.

IBM is even helping to bridge the generation gap. Because many 50-plussers use computers to relate to their grandchildren, the company offers discounted packages of 10 children's software titles. "The idea is for grandparents and grandchildren to discover the fun and educational value of computers together," says IBM's Cockfield.

"There is an entire generation of Americans that did not have opportunity to learn about computers in school or use them in workplace,"

Notes Jim Emerman, associate executive director of the ASA: "One thing IBM has done is demonstrate its commitment to this market. The more that technology companies recognize and promote the use of technology among older adults, the more likely it is this group will become adopters."

Aside from communication and learning, Emerman says that many 50-plussers use computers to contribute to society. "Many older adults don't want to stop working, they want to remain productive either for the satisfaction or because they have to. Obviously, using a computer is pretty critical these days for most employment opportunities."

The following resources are available for 50-plussers who would like to "get connected":

- SeniorNet-Provides older adults education for and access to comp technology at more than 140 Lear Centers nationwide, and offers c services on its Web site. 121 Second S 7th Floor, San Francisco, CA 94105. site: http://www.seniornet.com; Ph 800-747-6848.
- ibm.com/businesscenter-Il small business Web site which conta host of valuable information on techn and small business issues, plus lin other useful Web sites. Web http//www. ibm.com/businesscenter.

MEMORIAL DAY

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
The soldier's last tattoo!
No more on life's parade shall meet
The brave and fallen few.
On Fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead.

—Theodore O'Hara

IT'S QUITE THE DOUBLE-EDGE SWORD. VOLVO'S CONTINUED COMMITMENT TO SAFETY MAKES THE 1999 VOLVO V70 WAGON PERHAPS THE SAFEST POSSIBLE VEHICLE FOR YOUR CHILDREN. BUT THAT MEANS MORE THAN A FEW PARENTS WILL ASK YOU TO TRANSPORT THEIRS. SO WHILE FOUR AIR BAGS, A HIGH-STRENGTH STEEL SAFETY CAGE AND VOLVO'S PATENTED SIDE IMPACT PROTECTION SYSTEM MAY BRING PEACE OF MIND, THE CONSTANT FLOW OF HYPERCHARGED YOUNGSTERS MAY NOT. DRIVE SAFELY.

3rd Brigade Soldiers leave for Kuwait

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

More than 1,200 Soldiers donned their Kevlars, threw on their rucksacks and boarded Kuwait-bound airplanes this week to take part in a four-month deployment to the area in support of a current training force in in the region.

The Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), will assume the responsibility of operating one of the largest training forces in the Middle East as part of Operation Intrinsic Action.

"Out initial task is to draw our prepostioned equipment at Camp Doha," said Lt. Col. Bob Pricone, Task Force 1-15 commander. "When we finish drawing our equipment, we will move out and begin our live-fire training from our tactical assembly area in the desert."

The area will be ground-zero for the four-month deployment, Pricone said, and will be one of two sites for the implementation of the second phase of the deployment.

"Our second phase of the deployment involves force protection and stabilization for all of the troops assigned to the region," he said. "Not only do we want to ensure their physical safety but their health as well."

Health of the troops is a big concern for Pricone, who said the sweltering desert heat and scorching winds could easily take down Soldiers if they are not careful.

Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment board a Kuwait-bound plane Monday.

"It is hotter and windier there than what our people are accustomed to," he said. "We have to ensure that all steps are taken to ensure their safety."

Spc. Jason Barwick, 274th Movement Control Team, said all of the precautions have been made by the chain of command and the force is ready to move out.

"We are operating at full speed," he said. "We have taken care of all of the precautions and paperwork. Now it is time for me to go do what I signed up to do."

Barwick, who said this is his first deployment, believes that even though he has never experienced anything like this before, it will be something he will always remember.

"I am looking forward to going and doing my job in a real-world mission," he said. "I am just ready to get over there and get to work."

As Barwick and others boarded the plane that would shuttle them to the sun and sand of Kuwait during the next 24 hours of plane ride, the anticipation of what to expect was high.

"I really don't know what to expect," said Kuwait-bound Pfc. David Hundley. "We have been briefed, but now it is time to see what will happen."

"We have some of the best troops in the Army going on this mission, and some of the best leaders," Pricone said. "Everyone can be confident that our Soldiers will do their best and return safely."

OCS Hall of Fame

School set to induct 62 during ceremony today in Infantry Hall

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

The Officer Candidate School (OCS) will induct 62 new members into its Hall of Fame at 11 a.m. today in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

The honorees are all OCS graduates who distinguished themselves in military or civilian pursuits, said Capt. Rick Crowther, project officer for the 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS).

"This is the highest honor that OCS can bestow upon its graduates," Crowther said. "It's definitely a high point in the career of an officer."

Lt. Gen. John M. McDuffie, director of Logistics, Joint Staff, Pentagon, is scheduled to be the guest speaker during the induction ceremony.

This year's inductees include Vernon J. Baker, a Medal of Honor awardee, and John C. Von Kaenel, a member of the first graduating class of OCS.

For a complete list of inductees, see A-4.

This year marks the 41st anniversary of the beginning of the OCS Hall of Fame. Since its start, more than 1,900 graduates have been inducted into the Hall of Fame, including former senator Bob Dole and former Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger.

The OCS Hall of Fame, which is housed in Wigle Hall, was established not only to honor past graduates, but to provide motivation and incentive for OCS candidates.

Each year a board of officers from the U. S. Army Infantry Center convenes to review nomination packets.

To be eligible for the Hall of Fame, OCS graduates must have graduated from Fort Benning's OCS course or ground school at Fort Riley, Kan.

The nominees must also have accomplished one of the following: attained the rank of colonel while on active duty or in a reserve component, awarded the Medal of Honor, been elected or appointed to an office of prominence in national or state government or been recognized or recommended by the commandant of the Infantry School for outstanding service.

In addition to inducting members into the Hall of Fame, the Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award will also be presented during the 11 a.m. ceremony in Infantry Hall.

2nd Lt. Dennis W. Terry is the 47th recipient of the award which honors the outstanding OCS Infantry graduate of the previous year.

Named for Capt. Robert P. Patterson, the award was instituted in 1952 on his death. Patterson earned the Distinguished Service Cross, Silver Star and the Purple Heart during World War I and later served as Judge on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and as Secretary of War during the Truman administration.

PDP allows veterans to apply for benefits early

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For almost a year now Fort Benning has participated in a pilot program that allows separating Soldiers to apply for disability up to six months before their discharge date. May 1 marks the one year anniversary of the Pre-Discharge Program (PDP) that gives Soldiers with disabilities a head start on their future away from the Army.

The program allows Soldiers who are ETSing, retiring or being medically discharged to find out if they are eligible for disability, what their disability rating is and other benefits they qualify for much faster than under the regular system. This is a tremendous advantage to the Soldier, said Peggy Morris, military services coordinator for the Atlanta Veterans Affairs Regional Office.

In order to be considered for the program, Soldiers must have no more than 180 days left before separation and no less than 90. Morris said that is why it's important for Soldiers to find if they qualify by applying before their six month mark. Soldiers seven months from their discharge date are encouraged to attend Army Career and Alumni (ACAP) briefings to find out more about the Veterans Affairs (VA) program. This way they can come to VA prepared to apply at the six month mark, she said.

"We have some veterans who are very happy campers about the program because they have had success in finding out what their eligibility would be either prior to or within weeks of separation," Morris said.

Because it is a pilot program, she said there are strict guidelines and Soldiers must have a complete copy of all medical records to be able to apply for the program. Soldiers will then be scheduled by VA for a physical examination.

ACAP Center Manager Harold Ericksen said there are three primary advantages to knowing in advance whether you qualify for disability or not.

First, Soldiers can find out if they are eligible for a VA program called Vocational Rehabilitation, which helps people with physical disabilities to retrain. Knowing in advance what your disability rating is will also help a Soldier find out if

Automobiles contribute to pollution

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

I was astonished the other day when I learned that the average non-smoking-American's lungs are brown from all the pollution in the air.

commentary

Although this may come as a shock to health fanatics, it is no surprise to me after learning about the amount of pollution that is pumped into the air every day.

Let's put aside all the industries that pump out poisonous gas into the atmosphere and look at what people do to cause pollution.

Every day, most Americans will slide behind the wheel of their car without realizing the devastating effect this is having on the atmosphere.

Every time we start our vehicles engines, we are dumping dangerous fumes into our atmosphere. Driving a car is the leading cause of pollution, according to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

Cars release hydrocarbons, nitrogen oxides and carbon monoxide which can cause everything from water quality problems to permanent lung damage, acid rain and even cancer. Motor vehicles also emit large amounts of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, which has the potential to trap the Earth's heat and cause global warming, according to the U.S. Environmental Health Center.

In fact, as much as 90 percent of the carbon monoxide in the air we breathe in a city is due to motor vehicles. The EPA attributes as many as 1,500 cases of cancer in the country each year to several pollutants emitted from cars.

These pollutants are a result of the fuel combustion process when cars are started and driven and when fuel evaporation takes place. Experts at U.S. Environmental Health Center said this happens when outside temperatures on hot, sunny days cause a car's fuel to evaporate. The hot engine and exhaust system of a running car causes the fuel to become heated; the car is shut off and remains hot enough to cause fuel to evaporate and during refueling the gasoline vapors escape into the air from the gas tank and the nozzle.

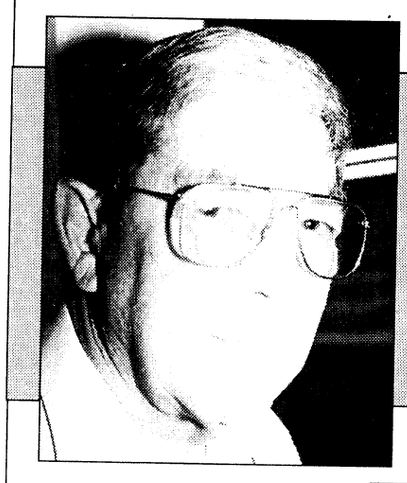
Most pollutants come during the "cold start" phase, which is the first few minutes it takes for a car to warm up.

Although pollution control measures have reduced emissions per car over the past 20 years, Americans have doubled the time they spend in their cars which has resulted in higher levels of pollutants.

So, what can people do to reduce the amount of pollutants being released into the air?

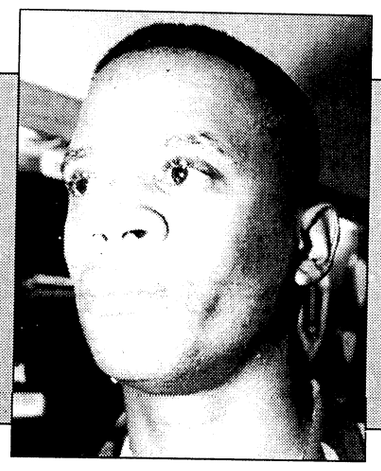
Carpool: This could be the biggest reducer of pollutants. As many as six car trips could be eliminated just by asking three friends if they would like to hitch a ride to the office.

Ride a bike to work: Not only will this help reduce air pollutants, riders will also experience increased health benefits.



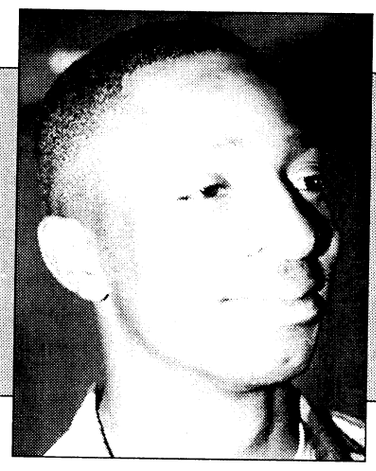
Go slow: The U.S. Environmental Health Center recommends traveling between 35 and 45 miles per hour to help reduce emission since traveling at higher speeds results in higher emissions.

Maintain your vehicle: Cars that are neglected can pollute the air worse than well-maintained cars. Having vehicles inspected regularly, fixing air conditioning and exhaust leaks may help decrease pollutants. If a problem does occur, seek the help of a mechanic in order to keep cars prime and the air quality excellent.

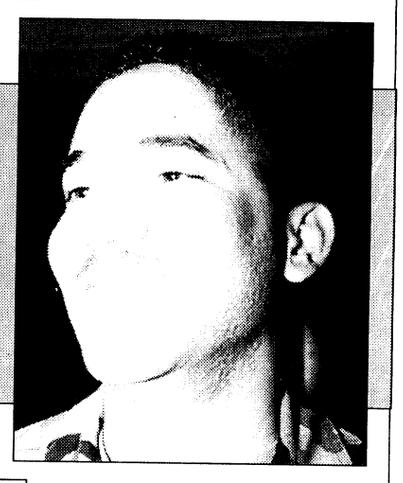


Just following a few simple steps may improve the quality of the air we breath now and the air our children breath tomorrow. We may be able to live without our cars, but we cannot live without air.

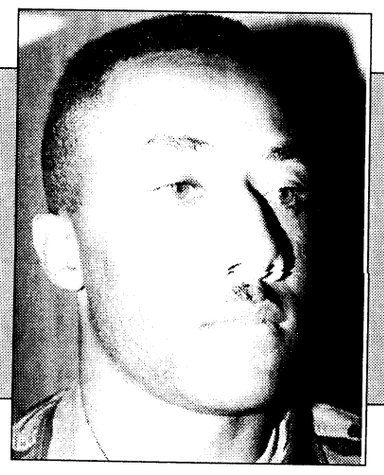
VARIOUS VOICES



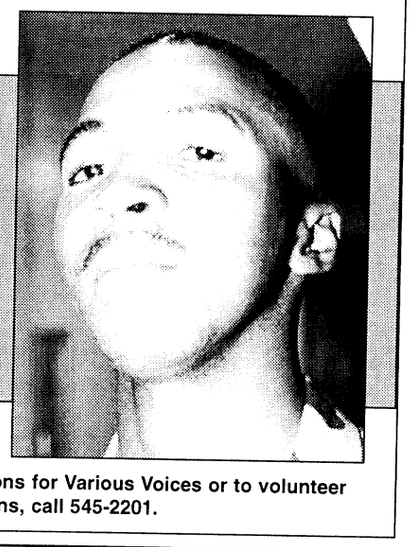
If there was one thing in the world you could change what would it be?



Richard Harrsion, Directorate of Transportation — "I would like to see the common disdain for our environment change. It seems as though so many people don't care any more. They don't realize that what they are doing now can be very detrimental to all living things in the future."

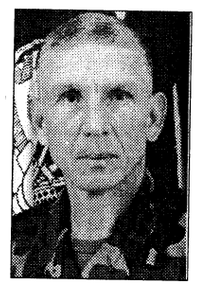


Sgt. 1st Class Steven Edwards, ANCOC student — "I would like to see more public busses and public transportation. It is obvious that in places like L.A. that not only are the number of vehicles on the roadway causing traffic jams, but look at the air."



Pvt. Derrick Gardner, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I would like to see more people choosing to ride bikes and other means of transportation other than motor vehicles that pollute the air we breathe."

Spc. Wascar Diaz, Battery B., 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I think it would be nice if there was worldwide peace. Without peace, everything else is not what it was meant to be."



Staff Sgt. Jessie Ruffen, Battery B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, Regiment, 3rd Bde, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.) — "I think the world would be a better place if we had a better trash collection system. A good, clean world is a healthy world."

Spc. Benjamin Carter, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "The world would be a much better place if we did not have nuclear weapons. The manufacturing process is polluting, and if they are exploded, they kill everything including the environment."

Volunteers make post better place to live

Volunteers make Fort Benning a better place to live and work. Volunteers are one of the reasons Fort Benning continues to be the best installation in the U.S. Army.

Wednesday I accepted a symbolic check for nearly $2 million on behalf of the 2,605 volunteers who donated 156,566 hours of their time to our post.

Without volunteers family support groups would flounder; the Red Cross would not be able to conduct blood drives; library books might not get put back in the right places; there would be no tours of the National Infantry Museum; patients at Martin Army Community Hospital would see a degradation in service; there would be no Thrift Shop providing quality goods at low prices, not to mention scholarships for our children.

Volunteers are literally all over Fort Benning and helping in our local communities. We could not operate this great installation without their generosity, dedication and sacrifice.

We began recognizing our volunteers' efforts with a reception Wednesday afternoon. Monday is officially "Appreciate-your-Volunteers Day," So if you have volunteers helping to hold your organization together, please thank them. Put up banners, signs, take them to lunch, throw a party.

Let them know how much they mean to you and to us all.

Volunteers again, thanks for giving of your time and talent and for all the great work you do.

USARSA celebrates Interamericanism

Col. Glenn Weidner
Commandant, U.S. Army School of the Americas

This is a very special time as we celebrate the typical friendship and camaraderie that exists at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

On April 14, we commemorated "Interamericanism" — that spirit of international cooperation established by the Charter of the Organization of American States (OAS), ratified in Bogota, Colombia in 1948. This document resulted from a long series of meetings held by the representatives of the countries of the hemisphere, during which discussions were held regarding ways to prevent conflicts, promote friendly relations, and foster cooperation in the areas of security, trade, justice, and social development.

Today, the OAS serves as an important forum for Inter-American cooperation, as it sets up specialized departments dedicated to all those areas of interest common to the various members. Presently, the range of activities conducted by the OAS is so vast that it is easy to forget the original impetus of the long series of meetings that spawned the organization--the issue of security.

Through its commitments over a 51-year period to the peaceful resolution of conflicts, collective security, confidence-building measures, joint efforts in peace operations, demining operations, and disaster-relief activities, the Inter-American system has served to sustain a hemisphere that has not experienced any large-scale international wars. When we consider the contemporary situation of the other continents, we can take much satisfaction in our success in fostering friendly relations between our respective governments.

The School of the Americas and each one of its students has contributed much to this phenomenon. For almost 53 years, the most prominent representatives of the military organizations of the hemisphere have collaborated in raising individual and collective professional standards while nurturing personal relationships that have served to facilitate conflict resolution and to counter threats to the security and well-being of our respective countries.

Everyone at USARSA should feel extremely proud of the role that you play in this shared task. As we consider the coming century and visualize what the future holds for our hemisphere, we can see a shimmering light on the horizon. There is a convergence of interests, which is unprecedented in history, that leads to greater cooperation among all sectors of our respective societies. Economic and technological advances beyond imagination promote similar progress in the social arena. However, this vision of the future will depend on a security environment within a constitutional state that is fundamental to democracy. The armed forces and the forces of law and order will play an intricate part in this process.

School organization thanks volunteers

Since this week is Volunteer Appreciation Week here on Fort Benning, I would like to take this opportunity to make our community aware of the outstanding volunteers we have here at Wilson.

Our Wilson parent helpers give of their time and of their hearts. They realize that our mobile military kids need and want to belong somewhere and they want that place to be Wilson Elementary School. Our volunteers work to make sure that Wilson kids have the little "extras" that make their school an exciting place to be. Because of volunteers' support we have collected money for Santa's Castle, chowed down at Popcorn Wednesdays, learn with Partners in Print, had fun in the sun with our Spring Fling and boogied the night away at our Family Valentine Dance, among many other things. So many of our classrooms benefit from having a parent volunteer in the room. As you can see, we are tremendously fortunate to have such superior volunteers.

I want to let the Wilson Elementary School volunteers know how much I have learned from them and how grateful I am for their support. You all make Wilson the best elementary school here on Fort Benning.

Soldiers transforms building to chapel

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Six months ago Building 2766 was a warehouse for supplies, miscellaneous items and old junk, but today it is the new 11th Infantry Regiment Regimental Chapel.

The building was transformed from a storage building to a chapel over the last four months with the help of Spec. Basilio Reyes, the 11th Inf. Regt. chaplains assistant.

According to Chaplain (Capt.) Kip McKee, 11th Inf. Regt. Chaplain, the chapel was relocated from Building 2767 to Building 2766 during the re-designation and reconfiguration of several installation buildings.

"The new building was a mess," McKee said. "Old stuff was piled literally to the ceiling but that did not deter Reyes from successfully completing the project."

Reyes

Renovations included removing the old pea green shag carpet and replacing it, the addition of two new offices with drop ceilings, painting the entire building inside and out, installing new blinds and the completion of many other small projects.

"I was amazed at the condition of the new chapel when I first saw it," Reyes said. "It was a giant task but I received a great deal of support from my chain of command, DPW and the assigned detail. I could not have done it without all of their support and encouragement."

Reyes was presented his first award, an Army Commendation Medal from Col. Victor Bero, 11th Inf. Regt. commander, during a ceremony held in the newly renovated chapel on April 5.

"Reyes was the 'go-to guy' and the constant throughout the entire project," Bero said. "He is a trusted Soldier and trust is a valuable thing between a Soldier and his chain of command."

Bero said the renovations were necessary because the building was an embarrassment to the Army.

"This is where young Soldiers come not only to worship but to have quiet before jumping out of airplanes — it was important to have a nice place to go and renovating the chapel was the right thing to do," Bero added.

Services continued throughout the renovations for more than 150 Soldiers, retirees and family members.

"There is still some detail work to finish up but the chapel looks nice and I am proud of it," Reyes said.

VA: Program helps

they are eligible for many other training programs such as the Job Partnership Training Act. Lastly, it gives Soldiers additional VA points towards federal and some state employment opportunity.

"This program can give Soldiers a six to 12 month head start in finding out training opportunities and what programs they qualify for," Ericksen said.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen said he received his disability notice within 30 days after retirement which is a far cry from the normal six months after discharge.

"When you first retire, you have enough things to deal with," Van Allen said. "This is just one big headache out of the way. The program is so easy, you couldn't ask for a simpler system."

However, even with a simple system and host of benefits, Morris said they aren't getting the kind of turn-out they would like. She said an average of 175 Soldiers separate from Fort Benning each month that may benefit from the program. The Fort Benning VA office is only receiving about 45 claims per month.

"Soldiers need to understand that a disability to VA may be different from what most Soldiers think," Morris said. "A disability could be an injury, illness or disease diagnosed or treated in service. That doesn't mean you are ready for the nursing home. You don't have to be disabled to the point of never going to work again. It just means you have a condition that may be recognized and a recognizable condition means you could have eligibility for benefits."

Seafood fresh from the Gulf

By Chris Russell

As Good Friday approaches a lot of people throughout Columbus and the Valley discover great fresh seafood on their tables for lunch and dinner.

Whether you are celebrating the Easter holidays with a special seafood dinner or just happen to be in the mood for a great meal that may include fresh grouper, snapper, shrimp, or catfish, the place to find it fresh and ready to take home is at Big Tom's Seafood located at 4403 17th Avenue in Columbus.

Each week Big Tom's Seafood brings up some of the freshest catches from the Gulf of Mexico. Crab, grouper, shrimp, lobster, amber jack, oysters, catfish snapper, it's all available. Whether it's fried, boiled or grilled it doesn't really seem to matter. The one thing Big Tom's in Panama City we began to see so many Columbus residents come through our market ordering fresh seafood to take home that we decided that we should open another Big Tom's Columbus."

The Crews wanted to offer a seafood market in their home town where area residents would have access to the fresh catches of the Gulf without having to make the trip to Florida.

Not only can you find great fresh seafood at Big Tom's, but if you're looking for a great take-out lunch that includes oyster and shrimp po' boy sandwiches, Big Tom's delivers fresh, hot and tasty.

Big Tom's also offers cooking classes that teach others how to cook that fresh catch of the day. Theses classes stay booked, so call in advance if you're interested.

Post honors Soldiers, civilians

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

March 9 marked a morning of celebration at the Officers' Club when a barrage of Soldiers and civilians were awarded for various achievements and contributions during the Commanding General's Two-Star Excellence Breakfast.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst recapped Fort Benning's recent achievements by emphasizing that every award Fort Benning receives is the result of people such as those who were being honored.

"I'm very proud of you and what you do," Ernst said. "It's a privilege to be associated with this great team. To you goes all the credit for what's on that sign coming into Fort Benning. All those awards and recognition is accredited by the folks in this room and those who preceded them."

"It's not about the signs, it's not the trophies, it's how you and I feel about this place we call Fort Benning," Ernst said. "And that's the reason we have to get it right. If you don't believe it every day, it doesn't make a difference what's on the sign. Fort Benning has got to be a great place for Soldiers. It has to be a great place for everybody else who calls it home. All of this great team of teams."

Those who were awarded during the breakfast include:

1st Lt. Curtis Sawyer from the Infantry Training Brigade received the Volunteer of the Quarter award.

Fort Benning and the NCO Officer Academy turned out to pay their respects to a fallen comrade, retired Sgt. 1st Class Mark T. Henninger who died last week.

Henninger was memorialized at a service in Marshall Auditorium April 9, followed by internment of his ashes at the Fort Benning cemetery.

Henninger served in the Army for 21 years, beginning his career at Fort Benning in 1978. He would return to Fort Benning to attend Drill Sergeant School and serve as a drill sergeant from June 1983 to June 1985.

Henninger once again returned to Fort Benning in 1996, this time to serve with the NCO Academy as chief of training. His final assignment was with the Army Research Institute at Fort Benning.

Former NCO Academy Commandant Willie Wells told the Marshall Auditorium assemblage that Henninger was someone who could always be relied on.

"If Mark was in charge, I could relax," he said.

Henninger is survived by his wife, Gloria; three sons, Thomas, Derek and Richard; two daughters, Debra and Nancee.

Soldiers undergo NBC training

1st Lt. Joseph R. Sowers
Company D, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

Company D, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, began transforming civilians into Soldiers March 30 at Brittin Range. Units from the Infantry Training Brigade introduced young trainees to Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (NBC) tasks during the second full week of One Station Unit Training (OSUT).

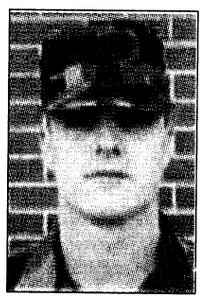
The trainees of Co. D strapped on their Load Carrying Equipment (LCE) for their first taste of combat focused training. Training for the first week focuses on drill and ceremony, Army values and general knowledge.

While on Brittin Range, Soldiers learned to protect themselves from NBC injury or contamination with Mission-Oriented Protective Posture gear. During round-robin training, cadre introduced the trainees to M9 detector paper, M291 decontaminating kit and many techniques and procedures for combating an NBC environment.

"NBC training is highly critical training for these Soldiers due to the real world threat of encountering an NBC environment whether it is in a militarized or unmilitarized situation," said Drill Sergeant Staff Sgt. Charles Hunt, who also performs the duties as Company D NBC NCO.

"This period of training forces the Soldier to function properly in a nuclear, biological or chemical environment," said 1st Sgt. Theodore Kotson. "He leaves here confident in his equipment, as well."

Realistic NBC training develops Soldiers capable of accomplishing their Infantry mission in any environment, he added.



Much more lies ahead for the Soldiers of Co. D — they will rappel later this week and begin Basic Rifle Marksmanship the following week.

If weather permits, the following areas will be affected: A-9, A-14, A-17, C-2, D-12, D-17, J-5, K-8, K-14, K-17, O-1, O-4, O-9, O-13, T-3, U-4, X-2 and X-4.

Personnel proposing to use areas for recreational purposes must vacate areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily. Units using ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris including pinestraw, leaves and trash from around structures.

For more information, call 544-7075.

PERSCOM announces OCS board

A recent message from the U.S. Army Personnel Command (PERSCOM) announced the next Officer Candidate School (OCS) selection board has been scheduled for Sept. 20-24.

Cutoff date for application to arrive at PERSCOM is Aug. 20. No exceptions.

The Adjutant General (AG) Personnel Operations and Services Division (POSD) has set up a local board to accommodate our population for DA's September board.

The local board is scheduled for June 21-25; applications must arrive in POSD no later than May 31. The earliest POSD will accept applications is May 10. No exceptions.

The point of contact for administrative support and application checklist is Verna Clemons at 545-3341, 545-4702.

Lieutenants learn drills

2nd Lt. Vance Fleming
Co. B, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

The squad of lieutenants moved over the dried leaves and fallen branches as they tried to avoid detection by the enemy. Soldiers dropped to the ground and took cover behind trees as they heard the boom of gunfire. The squad leader then moved to the front of the formation, looking for the enemy's position.

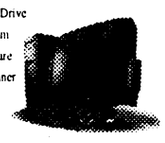
These events did not take place in a far off land, but rather in the foliage of Fort Benning's Garnsey Range. Lieutenants of the Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment performed missions and tasks that will occur on the battlefield upon which they may one day fight.

"Training on battle drills is essential," said Sgt. 1st Class Edwin Nieves, platoon trainer, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. "This training will help the future leaders learn how to prepare platoon-size elements for combat."

Battle drills include such tasks as clearing trenches, knocking out bunkers, reconnaissance and reacting to enemy contact. To make the training as realistic as possible, opposing forces (OPFOR) act as the enemy and utilize the tactics of forces opposed to the U.S.

"Squad lanes teach us many things about troops. One of the most important lessons is how difficult event the simplest task becomes once your element is in contact," said 2nd Lt. Devin Braun, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

After each lieutenant leads a mission, the entire operation is evaluated in an after action Review (AAR). The leader gets feedback on things that were done well and not so well. The benefits of this is information that comes from peers, OPFOR, evaluators and platoon trainers like Nieves.



"The AAR allows the students to understand how to improve as needed and sustain the skills each performed well," Nieves.

Spc. Albert Parr, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) folds one of the physical training shirts he collected to be given to AIDS-stricken children who will attend the upcoming AIDS camp.

AIDS camp

Soldier gathers T-shirts for children

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The sun had just slipped behind the horizon as Spc. Albert Parr sat in a Columbus restaurant enjoying an evening meal. As the 21-year-old relaxed over his evening feast, he began to have a conversation with a woman sitting nearby. Little did he know the conversation he was having would start a relationship that would lend a hand to a prospective 200 AIDS-stricken children.

The woman was Nancy Beam, the special events coordinator for the Columbus chapter of Salvation Army, and the talk was about a project she had started for an upcoming AIDS camp to help children either infected or affected by AIDS.

"I told Parr about the camp and how neat it would be to have the Army get involved with the project," Beam said. "That is all I had to do from there."

Beam, who is married to an active-duty servicemember, said that when Parr told her he would get back to her when he could find a way for them to get involved, she assumed she would never hear from him again.

"When he called, it kind of caught me off guard," she said. "And when he had told me what he had done I was even more surprised."

Parr said after speaking to Beam the night before, he thought, "what would be cooler than for all of the kids to have an PT (physical training) shirt to wear?" So that is what the combat engineer assigned to 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, did.

By the time Parr called Beam, only 24 hours had passed and he had already put his idea into motion and acquired nearly 20 old PT shirts.

"I just wanted to make it happen," said Parr, who has been volunteering in the area for more than three years. "It is like I told the guys, these kids have nothing, most of them come form single homes where there is no role model. If we can make them happy by doing this, let's do it."

Since that day months ago when Parr first began his shirt gathering campaign, he and seven other servicemembers have gathered more than 50 shirts, but Parr said the present shirt total is not enough.

Parr said he remains optimistic about the success of the collection campaign even though he will be leaving Fort Benning in May, nearly two months before the August 6 camp in Jasper, Ga.

"There are a lot of good people that are working on this with me," Parr said. "I am confident that the collection will go on even after I leave for my next duty station in Germany."

One of those volunteers, Pfc. Kimberly L. Isler, confirmed Parr's hopes.

"I will follow this thing through until it's done," Isler said. "These kids are in need of our help. They deal with things we can never imagine. These kids deal with sickness every day. If this makes things a little brighter for them, I am happy to do it."

"We just want to help the kids," said Sgt. Jason Crain. "I know if it was my daughter in the situation, I would want someone to help us."

Currently, Parr is 150 shirts short of his 200 total goal. Both the Salvation Army and Parr ask that anyone with old PT shirts that are not ripped to please forward them to their unit chaplain or to Parr at the 317th Eng. Bn.

FAMILY LIFE MINISTRIES

Abuse victims get help

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

It could begin as a simple flash. An image or smell, or perhaps even the recollection of a touch. It might not stop there.

In time, a flood of memories could come rushing back and unmask a terrible secret about the past, revealing that someone did something to you which may have affected your whole life and will continue to do so unless you receive help.

It is estimated that one in three women are survivors of child sexual abuse. For women on Fort Benning who are victims of this kind of abuse, help is available. That help is in the form of the Childhood Sexual Abuse Support Group offered by the Chaplains Family Life Ministries.

The program is designed to help people who have been traumatized by sexual abuse to recover from their trauma. By coming together with others who have had similar experiences in a safe and comfortable environment, survivors can learn to overcome their pain and get rid of it, according to Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Roggia, director of the Chaplains' Family Life Training Program.

For more than 10 years the program has been offered on and off on a quarterly basis. This quarter's support group consists of nine sessions that are held each Tuesday from 11 a.m. to noon. Although the first group meeting was held April 6, it is still not too late to become involved, Roggia said.

He went on to explain that meeting as a group lets survivors know there are others out there who are experiencing the same kind of pain they are. It also helps them get in touch with their inner child, "and learn to love comfort and nurture that child," thus beginning the healing process.

Of course, before a survivor can get help and begin that healing process, they must first recognize the symptoms of sexual abuse.

Bonnie Matyas, a counseling intern at the Chaplain Family Life Ministries and group leader, said often times women in their thirties will begin to remember childhood abuse in the form of flashbacks or dreams. She said there are many other distinct and recognizable symptoms of sexual abuse that persist throughout a victim's life.

Things such as pulling away from intimate relationships, nightmares, being easily frightened by particular smells or touches, low self esteem and difficulty expressing themselves name a few.

She said any of these could be a red alert to the possibility of sexual abuse and it's very important to realize this and receive help.

"I can pretty much guarantee that if there is someone who is questioning whether it happened or not, it probably did," Matyas said. "And to come in and deal with it early gives more time for healing."

Roggia emphasized that the program is completely confidential and no one is forced to talk about their experiences unless they choose to.

"The key thing we want people out there to know is that the group is safe and confidential and it is not a place where victims will be traumatized again," Roggia said. "In fact the first part of the session is aimed at providing educational information to the participants. During the second half they talk about what they learned from the first half and how it applies to their life."

It is ultimately the talking and sharing however, that can help develop strong bonds between the members of the group, Matyas said. "A bi-product of this group is that members often become close and leave as a tight group of friends."

If someone isn't comfortable with the thought of being part of a group, Roggia said they are also willing to talk to that person one on one.

In most cases getting help can heal a person in more ways than one. Many women find they are more outgoing, more verbal, less afraid of their bodies, less scared for their children and more confident in themselves after being in the group, according to Roggia.

He mentioned that the program has a great success rate, which is partly due to the fact that most of the women who come to the group are those who really want to get better.

"It takes a tremendous amount of courage for people to come and seek help," Roggia said. Facing the truth is the most important part of the healing process.

There is still time to join the support group. The next session is Tuesday. For more information, call 545-1760, 545-5301 or 545-2017.

Michele E. Hanson

FCC offers alternative to traditional day care

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Patty Pickett, family member and Fort Benning resident, crawls out of bed at 5:15 a.m. to begin a long workday doing what most people probably would never consider doing.

More than 12 years ago, with three small children of her own, Pickett began a career that would allow her an opportunity to stay home with her children while earning a small livelihood. She turned her home into a Family Child Care (FCC) home and has provided care for children on a full-time basis ever since.

FCC is child care provided by a family member who is a certified caregiver occupying government quarters. The goal is to provide the best possible care for children in a safe, caring environment, which develops the children socially, emotionally, physically and intellectually. FCC is a cost effective program that benefits parents as well as providers.

"As a FCC provider I have the advantage of working at home and I am available for my own children if they need me," Pickett said. "Being at home with my children was very important especially when they were babies — I also wanted to work, so I decided to work at home."

According to Judy Cobb, director of Family Child Care FCC providers "take up the slack" with cutbacks and center closings. Children on the waiting list in need of care can be placed with a FCC provider. However, many people prefer the flexibility and the familiar home environment of FCC to traditional child care in a center.

"FCC homes offer multi-age settings, a smaller group size, flexible operating hours and a full range of services including full day, part day, hourly and extended child care," Cobb said. "Most important is that FCC homes are a safe learning environment for children. Becoming a provider is a lengthy process which includes background checks, home inspections, family interviews and 30 hours of classroom instruction — all aimed at keeping children safe."

Cobb said attending a FCC orientation is the first step in becoming a provider. Participants are usually young mothers who want to stay at home with their children and earn money.

"During the orientation I explain that it is important you like caring for children because providing child care is a difficult job that will never make you rich," she added. "Although child care is a tough job, it is an important job that can be very gratifying."

Currently, Fort Benning has 26 FCC providers but is authorized 65 and is actively seeking FCC providers for all areas especially McGraw Manor, Indianhead Terrace and Main Post.

For information on becoming a FCC provider or to obtain names of providers with openings, call the FCC office at 544-1623 or 687-4038.

Army Family Team Building

Battalion finishes Level One program

1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

The Army Family Team Building (AFTB) program is alive and well in the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) thanks to an all out effort by Soldiers and their families. More than 130 family members were certified in the Level One program at the Kelley Hill Truscott Center March 9. The 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Bob Pricone, was extremely pleased with the popularity and reception of the program.

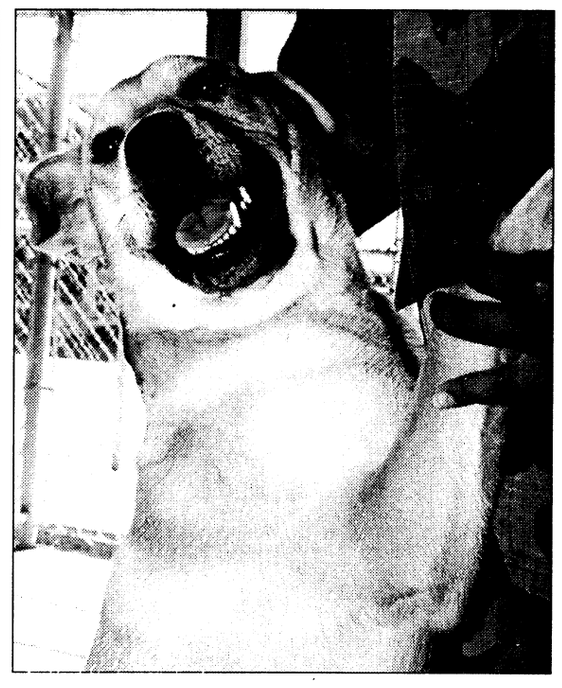
"We had received a lot of interest from family members," said Adjutant 1st Lt. Mike Lindsey. "So, to ensure that we allowed the program an opportunity to succeed, we treated it like one of our normal training events. We scheduled it on our training calendar well in advance, and built some "down time," around it so the Soldiers would be able to go home and take care of the kids, while the spouse could attend unimpeded.

"One of the favorite pastimes for Army spouses is to get together with one another and talk about the Army. We were able to couple that with an opportunity for wives to take a break from the kids, and it turned out to be a recipe for success," Lindsey said.

The Level One training conducted by Patty Barron and her staff gave a brief orientation to Army life, or "Army 101" as some have called it. It is usually an eight hour course that gives the spouses a lot of information dealing with such things as the basic chain of command structure to an explanation of the pomp and circumstance of a formal military event.

Not only was it an extremely valuable introduction to Army life for new spouses, but even spouses with many years of Army life learned a great deal. A large number of spouses are looking forward to continuing on in the training levels of AFTB, in which they will go more in depth on Army issues and even become certified to teach the classes.

The participation and the comments that came from the wives at the conclusion showed the leadership of the "can do" battalion and the degree in which the spouses want to be involved in the Army.



"It was a refreshing experience to see such a degree of participation," said Maj. Rick Baillergeon, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. "We have always had a strong family support group in our unit, and this shows that these wives want to continue their involvement throughout their husband's career."

The AFTB committee of Fort Benning provided a tremendous amount of support to ensure the program's success.

"For these ladies to give of their free time at night, to come to Kelley Hill to help Soldiers and their families, speaks volumes for their own commitment, and that of the Fort Benning community, to a great Army program," Pricone said.

Without hesitation, the families of 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. strongly recommend all of Fort Benning take advantage of such a tremendous opportunity to strengthen the Army family.

Cute and cuddly

A 4-month-old female chow mix and adult female yellow lab mix are a few of the animals available for adoption at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic and in need of a good home.

The clinic changed its adoption cost. Now, pet owners only pay for initial vaccination and procedure costs, which could be any where from $11 to $40. Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

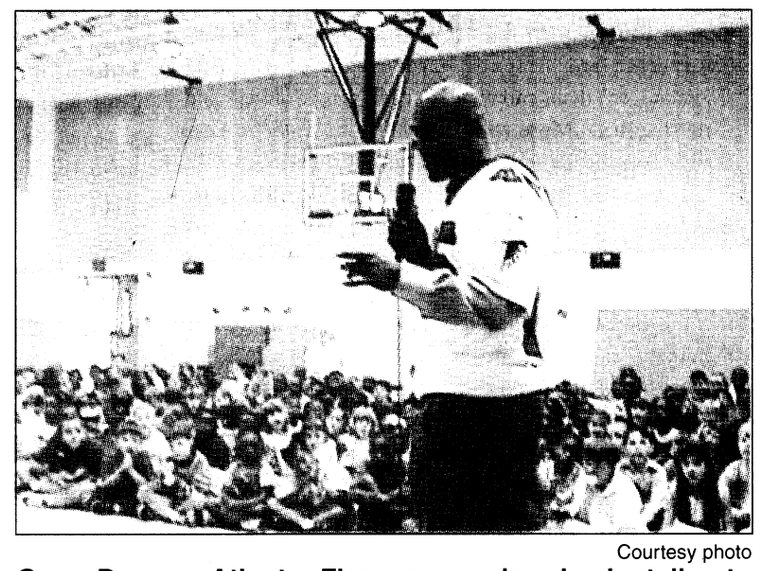
Stowers celebrates Month of Military Child with visit from football

Mike Starrett
Stowers Elementary School

The month of April is the Month of the Military Child and Stowers Elementary School found a unique way to honor its students.

Atlanta Falcons running back and special teams player Gary Downs spent time with students and staff Wednesday telling his story of success. The connection Downs has with each Stowers' student is that he too grew up in the military.

Downs spoke to students for 30 minutes on his life as a military dependent living overseas, in other states and at Fort Benning.



"Growing up in Germany and here at Fort Benning, I worked hard to keep my grades up and was inducted into the National Honor Society," Downs said. "I also didn't get into fights or follow other students who were involved with drugs or sex."

Downs is a 1990 graduate of Spencer High School in Columbus where many Fort Benning dependents attend. Downs' other accomplishments include being named to the All-ACC (Atlantic Coast Conference) academic honor roll while attending North Carolina State University. Downs was also named to the first team All-ACC and third Team All America during his senior year at NC State.

Downs now has a personal mission to establish scholarships at schools in the Columbus area through his charity, Hometown Heroes. His organization will help bring sponsors on board as well as entice other athletes to appear at fundraising events for the scholarships.

Students and teachers alike had wonderful things to say about Downs' speech. PTO President Cynthia Calix commented on how impressed she was with his level headedness and how he connected his life to his family's. He pointed out that what he did as a military dependent affected his entire family and the children connected with that.

Principal Glenn Hughes said Downs provided very encouraging and inspirational remarks to the students. The life experiences that he shared were very pertinent to the Month of the Military Child activities. Downs stressed to the children that academics, friendships and family life was very important to being a military child.

Chaplain shares peaceful solutions

Chaplain (Col.) William J. DeLeo
USAIC Staff Chaplain

I know you've been noticing the weather. How can you miss late winter or early summer? In the summer, we complain about it being too hot and in the winter we wonder how long it will take to get to summer.

reflections

The first day of winter and the first day of summer seem to be days that don't mean anything really. And how about Ground Hog Day? Have you ever noticed that how long winter really is doesn't seem to have too much to do with that furry little friend seeing his or her shadow that cold day in February?

I think more than the weather, it has to do with our being satisfied. There is a new weight control diet out there that suggests we overeat because we're not satisfied with our lives. Ouch! We're always on the go, got to be doing something, got to have the television going, all 100 channels at once if we could, got to have the stereo blasting as loud as possible. We're not at peace with ourselves. That must be the underlying reality of humanity.

Oddly enough there is a solution, but usually we don't want to hear about it. I mean, we're satisfied with the way things are no matter how dissatisfied we really are. There is comfort in our dissatisfaction, isn't there? But the solution does seem to be spiritual ... something going on deep inside ourselves to the place where no one knows who we are. Sometimes not even we know who we are! The founder, savior and leader of the Christian faith said it well, "The peace I have to give to you the world cannot give it ..." John 14:27.

I have found it to be so and I sleep like a rock — the sweet peace that only God gives. It's there, it's easy to get and very easy to hold on to. And we won't even miss all our dissatisfactions!

Parents should prepare children for divorce

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Divorce is never the best option, however, it is sometimes unavoidable. The question is what does divorce do to the kids? Plenty! Sometimes it's devastating with some children going off the deep end acting out their hurt in antisocial behavior.

While there is no good way to prepare children for divorce there are some steps that can help a divorcing couple minimize the unsettling experience of divorce for themselves and their children.

•Prepare children carefully. The news of a divorce is not something easily told to children. However, the more preparation of what you are going to say to your children and how you present the news will go a long way in helping children through the most difficult situation.

•Be sensitive to the needs of each child. Divorce is not easy on any child regardless of their age. Each age group has its own unique set of needs and problems. In all you do, consider the unique, individual needs of each child. Try to keep other changes to a minimum. Moving to a new town, going to a new school or leaving familiar surroundings can do more harm than good.

•Provide reassurance. Children need a lot of reassurance, now and in the future, about your love and care for them. Make it clear to children, they are not the cause for divorce and regardless of what comes about they still have two parents who love them.

•Give a lot of affection and loving care. Children of divorce need to experience parental compassion. When they do, time will heal their wounds much more quickly.

•Be patient. There will be times when you feel you are not getting through to your children; don't throw in the towel. This calls for much patience and perseverance on your part.

•Listen to your children. Children of divorce have fears that they need to share with you. Give them the time and opportunity to tell them to you. You may not be able to solve all their problems (you don't have to) but by showing that you do understand their fears, they become emotionally stronger.

There may be times when you need outside assistance in helping you and your children cope with the trauma of divorce. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center may be just the place to help. For more information, call 545-1760.

Environment quality requires planning

Patrick Chauvey and Melissa Kendrick
Directorate of Public Works

The federal government has specific legal responsibilities concerning the maintenance of environment quality that currently involves a variety of planning and assessment steps.

For example, the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (NEPA) requires agencies, including the U.S. Army, to ensure that every proposed action be assessed with regard to its potential effect on the natural, cultural and human environment.

Although routine, day-to-day activities are often categorically excluded from some of these legal requirements, most major actions are subject to complex documentation reports. Regardless of the scope, every proposed action, large or small, is required to receive a specific level of environmental consideration and proper documentation prior to any commitment of funds. If mitigation measures are identified as part of an environmental assessment, these measures must be funded before the proposed action can be approved and subsequently implemented.

No matter how bureaucratic this process sounds, it is instrumental in preventing potential negative environmental impacts. Furthermore, it is a manager's (or commander's) best tool regarding environmental compliance.

Environmental laws and regulations are numerous, complex and often confusing to individuals not directly involved with the environmental regulatory process. However, failure to comply with environmental laws often carry fines and deliberate environmental violations may result in prison terms.

It is vital to open and maintain lines of communication and to acquaint the public of their need to understand these issues. This communication lies at the heart of what is best for both the public and the environment.

Environmental assessments for major actions are often costly and time consuming. Therefore, it is advisable to start early and budget for them. The environmental documentation process follows established formats and specific procedures. The preparation of such documents is often contracted out to specialized firms, due to time and budget constraints, although some federal agencies are able to provide this specialized service at a more reasonable cost.

Currently, Fort Benning is involved in the coordination, preparation and review of approximately 20 environmental major actions. In addition, approximately 1,000 minor and routine actions are assessed and documented through Records of Environmental Consideration (FB-144s) each year.

Recently, TRADOC headquarters recognized the Directorate of Public Works environmental staff for producing the best environmental assessment in a decade. Although the "quality and presentation" of the document was cited as the main reason for bestowing this honor, it is the savings in time and money realized through this achievement that was most valuable to the installation.

Coordination with the environmental program managers and NEPA coordinators working with the DPW is a vital procedure, which will continue to benefit both Fort Benning and the people who live and work here.

For more information on the NEPA or FB-144 process, stop by Building 6, Room 310, or call Patrick Chauvey at 545-4211 or Melissa Kendrick at 545-2128.

See the Hawks for $5 — The Atlanta Hawks professional basketball team is offering Fort Benning Soldiers a chance to see an NBA game at 7:30 p.m. April 30 in Atlanta for $5.

The Hawks will take on the Indiana Pacers during the late April game.

Tickets are available at any Shopette or Class Six Store.

Goodwill sponsors golf tournament — Goodwill, an agency of United Way, is sponsoring the 11th Annual John B. Amos Memorial Goodwill Industries Golf Tournament.

The Four Ball Scramble is set for Thursday at the Follow Me Golf Course. The tourney will be in a shotgun start format and will begin at 8 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Entry fee is $400 per team and includes riding carts, range balls, lunch and drinks before, during and after play and green fees. Enter early for preference of tee time.

Prizes for first through ninth place will be given along with special prizes.

There are also hole-in-one, closest to the hole contests and drawings with prizes that include two roundtrip tickets anywhere in the U.S. and a 1999 Ford.

For more information, call Goodwill Industries at 324-4366.

Hospital Foundation hosts golf tournament — The West Central Georgia Regional Hospital Foundation, Inc., is sponsoring a Four-Person Scramble (with handicap) Golf Tournament at 1 p.m. May 8 at the Bull Creek Golf Course.

Entry fee for the charitable tournament is $55 per person and is required by April 30.

Team prizes for first, second and third place finishers will be awarded as well as door prizes.

For more information or to register a team, call Ron Buchanan at 565-4046 or Suzy Waddell at 568-5155.

Marietta gets Atlanta active — The Georgia Games will host their second annual Get Active Atlanta festival from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on May 8th at Centennial Olympic Park.

The festival will begin with a 5K road race presented by Reebok at 8:30 a.m. The run-walk will begin and end at the park and all participants will receive a T-shirt for participating in the event.

For more information or to register for the race-walk, call the Georgia Games headquarters at 770-528-3580 or visit their we site at www.georgiagames.org.

American Lung Association offers golf privilege cards — The American Lung Association of Georgia is offering its 1999 "Lung Card" Golf Privilege Card.

The $25 card offers free or reduced green fees at more than 600 golf courses in the southeast, 100 of which are located in Georgia.

Buy three Golf Privilege Cards and receive a fourth card free.

To purchase a 1999 Golf Privilege Card call (800) LUNG-USA or visit the American Lung Association at 4570 Reese Road in Columbus.

Hunt Club offers riding lessons — The Fort Benning Hunt Club offers English riding lessons.

The lessons, which focus on dressage and jumping, are offered for beginners or advanced riders.

Riders must be at least 5 years old.

For more information, call Andrea Pitts at 689-3945.

Shooters set sights on Pan Am games

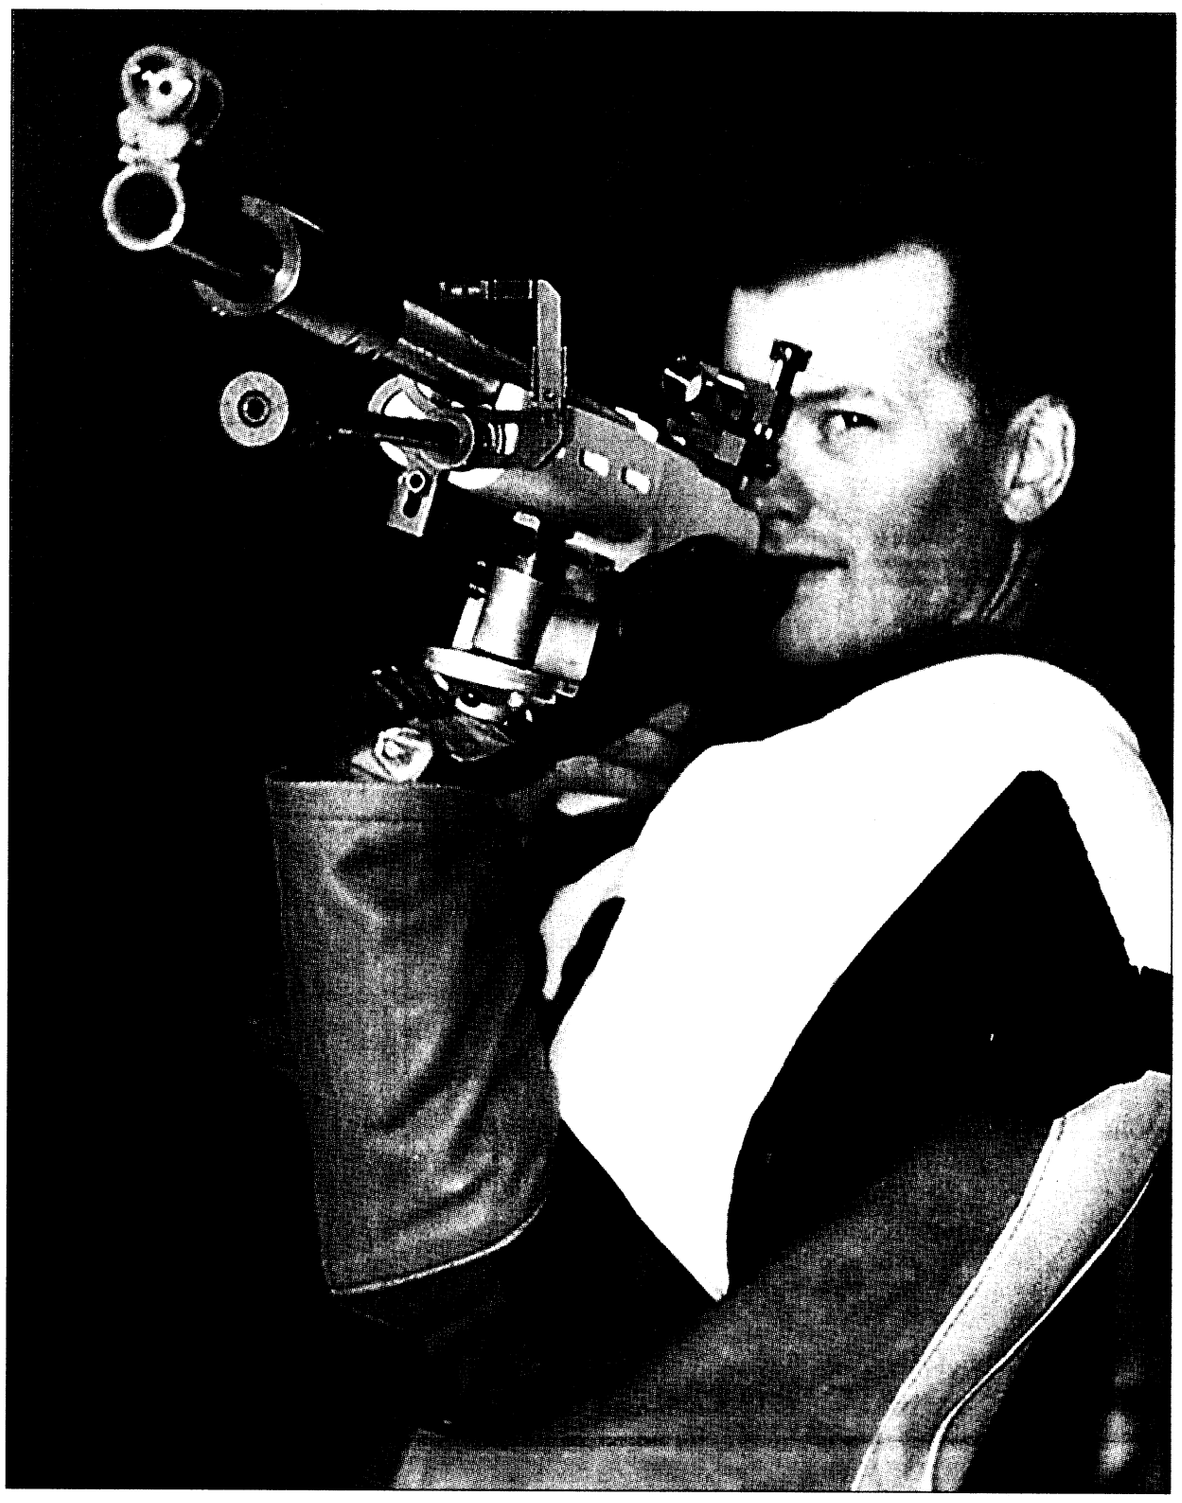
Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Three Soldiers of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have won slots on the U.S. Shooting Team that will compete at the 1999 Pan American Games.

USAMU international rifle shooter Jason A. Parker won the Gold Medal and Kenneth A. Johnson took the Silver Medal in the Air Rifle Match April 9 and 10 and were selected to the U.S. Pan Am Team. Troy A. Bassham received the Bronze Medal in that match. Glenn A. Dubis finished second making the team, while Thomas Tamas finished with third in the Free Rifle Prone Match April 12. Dubis also won the Gold Medal and Johnson took the Silver Medal and won two more Pan Am Team slots in the Smallbore Three-position Match April 14.

Armando R. Ayala received the Gold Medal and won a running target slot in 10-Meter 30+30 match that was held April 10 and 11.

The last of two 1999 Pan American Games U.S. Team Selection Matches are being conducted through April 24 at the Wolf Creek Shooting Complex, where the 1996 Olympics were held in Atlanta. The first of the two U.S. Team Selection Matches was hosted by the USAMU at Fort Benning's Pool Range Sept. 25 to 30.



Johnson won two out of three rifle matches — the Air Rifle and Three-Position — at the first Pan Am Selection Match; Parker was second and Stephen C. Goff was third in the first Air Rifle Selection Match. Ayala received the Silver Medal in the first Running Target Selection Match.

The Pan Am Games, which are conducted every four years, is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and the Campeonato de Tiro des las Americas (CAT Games) — where shooters can win medals and set world records. The 1999 Pan Am Games is also the last opportunity for nations to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

The 41 USAMU international shooters, who are part of the World Class Athlete Program, will be vying for a limited number of slots on the team to represent the U.S. at the 1999 Pan Am Games in Winnipeg, Canada, July 23 to Aug. 8, where 5,000 athletes from the Western Hemisphere will compete. Shooters from the USAMU International Rifle, International Pistol, Running Target and Shotgun Teams have to be one of the two top finishers in their discipline to make the 34-person U.S. Shooting Team, which will compete against hundreds of shooters from dozens of other countries.

The International Pistol shooters are competing through April 17 in the Rapid Fire, Air Pistol, Free Pistol and Sport Pistol Matches. USAMU shooters Rhonda L. Bright and Daryl L. Szarenski are two of the current leaders in the race for the Pan Am Pistol Team slots.

In the U.S. Shotgun Team competition, USAMU shooters Theresa E. DeWitt, Joseph D. Buffa and Joetta R. Dement are ahead. The shotgunners will compete in Skeet, Trap and Double Trap April 15 to 24.

USAMU international rifle shooter Kenneth Johnson took the silver in a qualifying match for the 1999 Pan Am Games. He will join three other Soldiers at the games.

Tourney, race highlight Law Day activities

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Fort Benning will hold its annual Law Day festivities this year beginning April 23. But law learners beware, there is more to this celebration than law books and gavels.

This year's week of festivities will include both a 5K race and a golf tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The athletic events scheduled throughout the week are aimed at a much broader audience than the classroom visits and periods of law instruction that will be given to area middle schoolers throughout the week, according to Staff Sgt. Walter Nesbitt, legal assistance NCOIC.

"Although the instruction in the classroom and the experiences during the mock trails are very important parts of learning the legal system, these sporting events are different," Nesbitt said. "They give everyone a chance to get involved and get to know the lawyers."

Area athletes will get their first opportunity to get familiar with the legal specialists on April 30 when they take to the rolling hills of Follow Me Golf Course for the Law Day Golf Tournament.

The tournament, which is slated to tee off at 1:30 p.m., will begin on the course's Pineside in a shot-gun start format and will be played as a scramble.

For more information about how to form a team for the tourney or to register a team, call 545-4291.

If golfing isn't on the list of possibilities, area runners have an opportunity to test their skills.

Registration for the 5K race will begin at 8 a.m. May 1 in front of Stilwell Field across from the post office.

The race will take runners by the Airborne Towers, the movie theater and around Doughboy Stadium. The 3.1-mile race will circle back to the startline for the finish.

The fastest male and the fastest female runners will receive awards as well as 57 other runners in their respective age groups.

Pre-registration for the event is currently being accepted.

For more information or to receive a registration packet, call 545-2181.

Law Day is a national celebration that allows individuals an opportunity to become educated about the opportunities and principles of the legal system and the functions of legal assistance.

Soccer kids

More than 200 young athletes are participating in Youth Services sports this spring. Youth soccer action takes place on French Field beginning at 9 a.m. Saturday mornings.

For more information on Youth Services soccer or any Youth Services event, call 545-3070.

Singer to shoot with USAMU

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will meet actress and country music legend Barbara Mandrell Wednesday at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Center in Atlanta while they are participating in the 1999 Pan American Selection Matches.

Mandrell is scheduled to arrive at Wolf Creek at noon and will receive an overview of the 17 Olympic shooting events. She will then go to shoot international pistol, rifle and running target with a little help from members of the Army Marksmanship Unit and USA Shooting, the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the U.S.

An avid shooter herself, Mandrell will be made an honorary member of the USA Shooting Team during a ceremony set for 2:30 p.m. in which the USA Shooting will present a team uniform and limited edition pistol to the singer at the open to the public ceremony.

Before leaving Wolf Creek at 6 p.m., Mandrell will shoot skeet with members of the U.S. Skeet Team, including USAMU shooters James Graves, Shawn Dulohery, Joseph Buffa and Anthony Naatjes.

For more information about the match, call the USAMU public affairs office at 545-[illegible]436.

Pharmacy

MANAGING PHARMACIST

Your desire for expanded responsibility. . .

. . .makes this opportunity with the Avera McKennan system in NW Iowa, an ideal career choice. You would manage the Pharmacy Services for two rural Iowa Community Hospitals, plan, organize and direct functions and activities; as well as compound and dispense medications; counsel patients; make recommendations to physicians; and provide drug information and formal consultations to all appropriate staff.

Working with the Avera McKennan Department of Pharmacy, you would develop pharmacy personnel and oversee pharmacy services. Some responsibilities may include pharmacy computer system functions, establishment of department goals and objectives and standards of performance, and the interpretation and development of policies and procedures.

This opportunity requires a B.S. in Pharmacy and Iowa licensure or eligibility. At least one year of hospital or retail pharmacy experience, including supervisory experience, is preferred. Strong interpersonal, organizational and problem solving skills are necessary.

We believe you will enjoy the practice environment in these communities, where our Christian philosophy is reflected in a spirit of caring that binds our people closely together to achieve objectives. We offer a competitive salary and complete benefits. For consideration, please forward your resume to: Avera McKennan, Human Resources, 800 E. 21st St., Sioux Falls, SD 57117-5045; Call: (605)322-7850; TDD:605-322-7865;

Paratroopers young, old gather for festival

Paratroopers young and old gathered at the Airborne Walk April 15 during the 22nd Annual Airborne Awards Festival to celebrate another year in airborne history and to honor all those who have made the airborne legacy great.

The ceremony kicked-off with an Airborne 5000 demonstration where participants were able to witness Fort Benning's exhibition parachute team, the Silver Wings, streak across the sky before watching demonstrations on the three phases of airborne training, which included Soldiers jumping from the 34-foot towers and a dummy test of the 250-foot towers.

After the demonstration, festival-goers made their way to the Airborne Walk to listen as a list of speakers talked about the impact paratroopers have had on history.

"Today we honor the American paratrooper whose story is almost unbelievable," said 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment Commander Lt. Col. Brian Stephenson. "Just two years after its initial conception, the expansion of the airborne forces literally exploded. The brave men who formed these units were not only pioneers of new and dangerous forms of warfare, but they also bore all the tradition which we uphold today. You, the paratrooper, changed our Army forever and made our nation great."

U.S. Army Infantry Center Chief of Staff Col. John Latimer thanked past paratroopers for the traditions and standards that are employed today.

"Fort Benning welcomes you here anytime," Latimer said. "We love to have you come back because you are indeed our history. What you saw before you today were young paratroopers who are your legacy. We appreciate what you do for us. We appreciate what you've done for us from a historical vantage point, and we appreciate what you have and continue to do for our nation."

Lt. Gen. William F. Kernan, commanding general of the XVIII Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg, N.C., was this year's guest speaker and spared no expense in his dedication of the newest addition to the Airborne memorial. The XVIII Airborne Corps "Sky Dragons" monument became the 27th monument to be added to the parachutist badge-shaped walkways.

"In every major contingency since the corps was founded in 1942, elements of the XVIII Airborne Corps have participated," Kernan said. "And as a force of choice for those contingency operations, it's safe to assume that when America dials 911 that phone rings at Fort Bragg."

"As we dedicate the XVIII Airborne monument, let us reflect for a moment on the contribution of all paratroopers past and present and remind ourselves that previously they held our nation's destiny in their hands."

For one of those paratroopers, former sergeant and 1943 graduate of Airborne School, Ralph C. Wilson, the trip from his hometown of Roseville, Ga., to Fort Benning was more than just a chance to relive some history. It was a way to come together with his "brothers."

Wilson said he has been coming to the festival for 10 years and does so to see old friends and meet new ones.

"It feels good to uphold the airborne tradition and that airborne spirit," Wilson said. "It kind of recharges my batteries to be around others of the airborne community."

In his fifth year of attendance at the festival, former specialist Andy Forrester said that being airborne is a brotherhood that stretches across all nationalities.

"No matter where you go, paratroopers from that country have been thrown out of planes so it's kind of like a kinship. We definitely have respect for each other," Forrester said.

Post honors volunteers during ceremony

Post residents who offered their free time to Fort Benning organizations were honored at the Officers' Club April 14 during the Volunteers-Light the Way Recognition and Appreciation Ceremony.

These volunteers allow programs such as family support groups, Officers' Wives' Club Thrift Shop and many other organizations able to provide services to the community.

"Anywhere you go on Fort Benning there are volunteers helping out. Fort Benning could not run without volunteers," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

This year, there was a never before 85 nominations for 1999 Volunteers of Excellence awards, said Linda Ernst, wife of the commanding general.

A total of 26 Soldiers, family members and organizations were awarded the 1999 Volunteers of Excellence award for the countless hours of selfless service they donated.

"Volunteers have contributed so much to our community," said Jill Sanders Crider, Installation Volunteer Coordinator. "Family Support Groups, youth programs, Red Cross and many other organizations that would cease if volunteers decided to quit or insisted pay."

In fact, more than 1.9 million manpower dollars were saved on Fort Benning in 1998 thanks to the 2,605 volunteers who donated their time, Crider said.

Volunteers such as award recipient Wendy Adams, who spends her free time with the Red Cross said, she volunteers because it gives her greater rewards than a paid job could.

"Volunteering helps your country, people and gives a sense of camaraderie," Adams said.

Other volunteers such as 1st Lt. Curtis Sawyer, who volunteered as a Sunday School teacher at Sand Hills Regimental Chapel, said when he learned of the need for a Sunday School teacher he was willing to help.

"It was good for me to be able to talk to the Soldiers during Bible study. Basic training is a hard time for a Soldier and I could relate to them," Sawyer said.

Whatever the organization or the reason may be, volunteers gave more than 159,000 hours back to the community.

"If this is the best post, we should have the best volunteers," Linda Ernst said. "You are the people who give the priceless commodity of time. You are the ones who make it happen here. You are the best."

Hot weather may bring danger

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

It is that time of year again.

Yes, it is summer in the south and as the mercury begins to rise in thermometers around Fort Benning, post officials urge Soldiers and family members venturing outdoors to take some simple precautions to ensure that this trip outside will not be their last.

In a policy letter released late last week, Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst pointed out the hazards of the Georgia summer heat and the potential danger that it can pose to the entire Fort Benning community.

"Fort Benning's environment can be hazardous to Soldiers and employees involved in strenuous outdoor activities," he said in the letter. "Heat injuries are a special concern, for they present a high risk of fatality if the body temperature soars out of control."

Injuries and fatalities at the hand of the sweltering heat are not something new to Fort Benning or any other training location in the Army. In 1993, 83 Soldiers Army-wide suffered from heat injuries during training, but that number is on the decline,

Gettin' chicky with it

Parents, teachers and students at Loyd Elementary School do the Chicken Dance during Loyd's 40th birthday celebration Tuesday. Along with dancing and games, the children also participated in a mock candle lighting ceremony and parade of hats where they displayed the different styles of birthday hats from each grade.

People have right to dip, harm selves

Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Why is it, in the freest country in the world, someone is always trying to take away our God-given rights to do harm to ourselves?

commentary

First the safety-nazis decided seat belts were the answer to surviving auto wrecks and the next thing you know 49 states have laws making it mandatory to buckle up.

If that weren't bad enough, 47 states enacted motorcycle helmet laws.

And do you know why? Do you think it's because state lawmakers think seat belts and helmets make us safer?

No, they don't. But the states are being bullied by the federal government, which threatens to take away the states' highway funds.

Hey, aren't we talking about my life and limbs here? If I disdain safety equipment, so what's it to you? And don't give me that stuff about society suffers because society has to pay my medical bills. So what, we pay for a bunch of other unnecessary stuff all the time like public education.

You make parents pay for their kids to go to school and the parents will make sure their kids study and that schools perform ... that's a topic for another day.

The latest infringement on my rights to do harm to myself comes with all these places that ban smoking. Want to feel like an outcast, just try lighting up in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Look, I'm going to die anyway, so why can't I enjoy my life by smoking? Well, obviously I can't, so I turned to smokeless tobacco. You know the stuff — dip, chaw, snuff.

Now the health nuts are after us chewers.

The only person who is going to suffer from chewing is the chewer. Okay, so your gums rot and your teeth fall out or cancer eats away at the lining of your cheeks and slowly turns your tongue into blackened gelatin.

What's the chance of that happening? I'm just a young guy. Not going to happen to me.

Convince you that smokeless tobacco is the way to go? Well, before you rush out and buy your Red Man, Skoal or Copenhagen, let me acquaint you with a few rules.

•Never spit into the wind.

•Remember to roll the window of your pickup down before trying to spit on the convertible attempting to pass you.

•Always remember which can has the Coke and which doesn't.

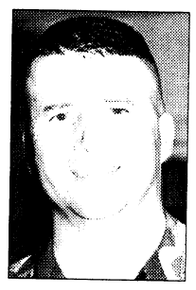
•Make sure your wad is at the back of your mouth before kissing the new love of your life (unless she dips too).

•Never cram a fresh chew into your mouth just before briefing your commander.

•Pay for your chew. The PX has surveillance cameras aimed at the snuff shelf.

Follow these simple rules and you'll enjoy a long life of addiction to nicotine, just like smokers ... well, maybe not a long life, but hey, we gotta do what we gotta do.

Smokeless tobacco crusade receives support



Col. Richard Rowe
29th Infantry Regiment

I support the chain of command's effort lead by our great U.S. Army Infantry Center Command Sergeant Major to ask our instructors, leaders and students to eliminate smokeless tobacco products from the classroom environment.

commentary

Actually, I was surprised to learn that this was not already the rule. And not just because of the many health and leadership reasons.

Professional classrooms need to set a standard. Instructors and Soldiers must exhibit professional bearing and appearance at all times. When you are communicating and learning, a chaw or wad just does not seem right. It is distracting to the eye. It can be repulsive to some. For some, it just gets in the way of sending and receiving communications, particularly in a classroom or conference room setting.

While a chew of tobacco or a big mouthful of sunflower seeds or a cheekful of gum make great sense to me when you are patrolling right field on a hot summer evening or kicking the dirt in Warrior Valley during a Team Breach LFX, I always outlaw chewing and spitting in the Tactical Operations Center. During my service as an Iron Major with the outstanding 10th Mountain Division, I learned this the hard way when one of my all star captains knocked over his amply-filled spit cup, thus robustly covering repulsively and disgustingly the Tactical Operations Centers operations journal and orders file. Not a good deal, although I kind of smile about the incident now that it is 12 years past.

Recently, I checked up on a couple of schools also at Fort Benning. It seems that White Elementary School also does not allow either the teachers or students to chew in class. Good deal and a great example for our outstanding Small Group Instructors and the tremendous students of the Infantry Captains Career Course as well as the rest of our world class school house.

During my recent life as a Seminar Leader at the School of Advanced Military Studies, we did not chew, spit or dribble in seminar.

So in my opinion, I think that the chain of command is exactly on track to take the chewing and spitting out of the classroom in the Infantry School.

did you ever wonder?

USAIC Public Affairs office

So you think MREs are bad? In the Army's early days, Soldiers were distributed a basic ration that was usually based on some form of salted meat and flour. Civil War Soldiers often converted their flour rations into something called "hard tack" or "hardtack." Today's Civil War re-enactors often make hardtack to add to the authenticity of their performances. If you would like to try it for yourself (the hardtack, not the re-enacting), here are several recipes.

The simplest uses six parts of flour to one part of water. Mix the flour and water, knead and roll out thin and bake until hard.

Another simple, but more complicated recipe calls for two cups of flour, one-half cup of buttermilk, two tablespoons of vegetable oil and enough salt to taste. Mix the dry ingredients, add the buttermilk and "just enough" water to make a thin dough. Roll the dough out thin and bake at 450 degrees for about 15 minutes or to "tooth-breaking" quality.

Still another version, which will make one ration of 10 crackers, requires three cups of flour, one and a half teaspoons of baking soda and one and a half teaspoons of salt water mixed together to form a workable dough which is rolled thin and cut into three inch by three inch squares. The dough should not pull away as it is cut. With a nail or another sharp object, punch about a dozen holes into each square. Bake at 375 degrees for about 50 minutes (you're not baking cookies, you are basically removing the water from the crackers). The bottom of the squares should turn light brown or "brownish." Remove from the oven and cool. The squares should get very hard.

Any hardtack baking will require some experimentation on your part. The bottom line is that your final product should be a nice, hard slab of flour.

For more information about hard tack, visit your local library or check out the 87th Regulars Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry page at http://yourpage.blazenet.net/ghkain/HardTack.htm.

Ex-POWs thank post for support

The Ex-American Prisoners of War wish to thank the people of Fort Benning who responded so nicely to our Daisy Presentations. Many of our citizens know the money donated goes to charities such as the American Red Cross, Damascus Way, Camp Joy and many other worthwhile organizations.

We also want to thank the Cub Scouts and the Boy Scouts who helped us to distribute these Daisies.

Our chapter of the Ex-POW's want it known that our thoughts and prayers go out to the three men captured in our present NATO obligation. We pray for their well being and their early return.

Again, many thanks to the people of Fort Benning for their help.

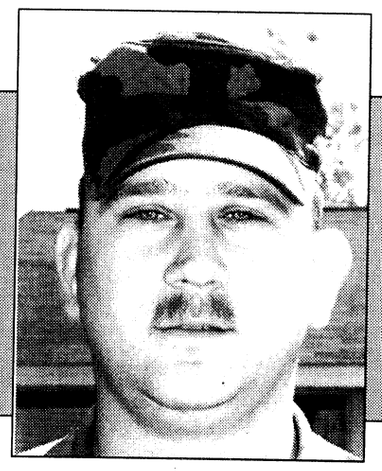
VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think about the proposed ban on smokeless tobacco in government buildings?



Sgt. Michael Mikolon, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company, — "I think banning smokeless tobacco in government buildings is wrong because it does not affect anyone else like smoking does."

Staff Sgt. Ken Roy Taylor, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think it is good because not only is it unsanitary, it is bad for the person's health and causes disease."

Rachal Wortham, Columbus Bank and Trust — "I don't know. It doesn't bother me now."

Sgt. Matt King, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police — "Smoking was banned because of the effects on others. There are no secondary effects with dip."

Sgt. Roger Scott, Basic Non Commissioned Officers Course — "As long as people keep it clean, it is their personal choice."

Paratrooper takes 1998 Patterson Award

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Bragg, N.C., paratrooper assigned to the 82nd Airborne Division took home the honors of being named the Army's finest 1998 Officer Candidate School graduate last week.

2nd Lt. Dennis W. Terry was awarded the 1999 Patterson Award in a ceremony April 16 that not only honored the outstanding contributions of the leaders of today, but paid homage to leaders of the past.

"It's a pretty big honor to be put in the same category as these guys," Terry said before the Hall of Fame and Patterson Award presentation ceremony. "I know the quality of the people that have received the award in the past, and I will do my best to maintain that."

Prior to trading in his sergeant stripes for the single golden lieutenant bar that now adorns his collar, Terry served in every possible duty slot for an Infantryman, including mechanized, motorized, air assault, airborne and drill sergeant.

"I have had quite a bit of experience as an NCO leading and training Soldiers," he said. "That is already paying off now as a lieutenant.

"My guys know that I know what they are going through. I think they respect that."

As this year's Patterson Award winner, this father of two received an engraved 9mm Beretta handgun, a place on the Patterson wall in OCS's Wigle Hall and a monetary award of $2,300, but he said all of the awards and accolades are not what the honor means.

Terry

"This is the highest award that any OCS graduate can get," he said. "It is something everyone tries for and wants, and after many years of hard work and devotion, it is mine.

"You always hope all of your hard work will eventually pay off," he said. "Well, it has came to that point in my life that it has."

Looking back on the transformation process that took Terry from the enlisted ranks to the officer corps, the elite officer said his decision to make the transformation reality was one that evolved after reassessing his career goals and his projected amount of command influence.

"When I first became an NCO, my goal was to be a sergeant major in 18 years, but I realized that with the current promotion rate and where I was at the time, my goal was unobtainable," he said. "I was left to decide what to do and when after talking to my executive officer who had just gotten back from OCS, I knew that becoming an officer would give me that opportunity to have the command influence I wanted."

That decision to make the transformation, Terry said, came to him while serving as an Infantryman in '97.

"I looked at this as an opportunity that would allow me to be more involved in the decisions that effect the Soldiers," he said.

The Patterson Award is not the first award the seasoned veteran has been awarded. In his past 15 years of service, he has accumulated 2 Meritorious Service Medals, 18 Army Achievement Medals, the Humanitarian Service Medal, a Ranger tab, an Expert Infantryman's Badge and is an Audie Murphy recipient. Terry has also been inducted into the Order of St. Maurice.

So what is next for this highly decorated Soldier?

"In the near future, I want to command a company," said the 34-year-old 2nd lieutenant. "But my long-term goal is to get command of a battalion."

Terry is presently serving as a platoon leader in the 3rd Battalion, 504th Infantry Regiment (Airborne), Fort Bragg.

FAP offers parents, caregivers tips

Family Advocacy Program

April is Child Abuse Prevention Month. The Fort Benning Family Advocacy Program offers some tips on child care.

The following are some things parents should expect from providers:

•Ongoing communication, open access to the home or center and frequent updates on your child's progress;

•Loving care, responsiveness, stimulation and attention to building your child's self-esteem;

•A safe and healthy environment;

•Honesty. Caregivers should share information about problems or accidents. The should pay taxes and meet all legal requirements;

•Acceptance of your wishes on matters such as discipline, seat belt and car seat usage, TV watching, food, toilet training, smoking, etc;

•Advance notice of changes such as hours or cost. You should have between a month and six weeks notice if a caregiver can no longer care for your child;

•Support for your family. Caregivers should not be critical of your family's lifestyle or values and should not be involved in family disputes. They should respect your religious beliefs and cultural background;

•Acceptance of you as the most important person in your child's life. Advice should be offered in a non-critical way;

•Assurance that everyone in contact with your child is trustworthy, properly trained and continuously supervised. This includes caregivers' friends and relatives, custodial help, transportation workers and visitors; and

•No surprises. Your child-care provider shouldn't suddenly announce that her teenage daughter will be watching your children three afternoons per week, nor should a favorite day-care teacher disappear without explanation.

The following are somethings providers should expect from parents:

•Open communication. You should clearly explain your wishes and provide information on problems, on changes at home and about your child's routine, activities and preferences;

•Agreement on terms and arrangements (fees, hours, etc.) in writing;

•Honesty and trust. Show your trust by asking questions and not jumping to conclusions when you have a concern;

•Advance notice. Provide a month to six weeks notice of changes in your child-care plans;

•Consistency. Pick up your child on time and follow through on agreements. If you are to supply diapers or other items, bring them before they are needed;

•Healthy children. Agree in advance about when you can and cannot bring a sick child;

•Payment on time. Your caregiver provides for his or her family with this income;

•Respect your caregiver as a professional. Taking care of children is his or her profession and a demanding job. Value your caregiver because he or she is an important person in your child's life;

•Understanding and support for your child's feelings toward his or her caregiver; and

•No surprises. Caregivers don't like surprises any more than parents do. Caregivers should know ahead of time about changes in your child care needs and about your concerns.

For further information on child abuse, call Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, or Theresa Sanchez, assistant, at 545-3344.

Heat: Proper water intake prevents dehydration

according to Department of Army (DA) officials.

"While the numbers are coming down, the causes are staying the same," he said.

Those causes, according to Martin Army Community Hospital's chief of Preventive Medicine Services Maj. William P. Corr, are all too often the result of dehydration.

"The heat injuries we see here are mostly the result of individuals not observing the work-rest standards and the fluid replacement guidelines set forth by the Army Surgeon General," he said. "We also see some injuries resulting from individuals who have not acclimated to the warm, humid weather of the area."

Corr said that although the human body maintains a constant body temperature, the high temperatures here usually take two weeks for an average person to get used to. He also cited lack of physical fitness as a factor that can increase the risks of becoming a heat injury.

The thousands of prospective Soldiers beginning the rigorous process of militarization and becoming physically fit at Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade are some of the individuals at the greatest risk of developing a heat injury; however, drill sergeant Staff Sgt. Jason L. Bartlett, Company E, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, said initial entry Soldiers are watched closely to ensure they don't fall victim to the heat.

"All of the Soldiers are required to use rally cards," he said. "These cards force the privates to make sure their battle buddy is drinking water by requiring their buddy to sign the card every time they drink a canteen full of water."

Bartlett said even though they require the new Soldiers to drink water, they limit the intake in accordance with the guidelines issued by the Training and Doctrine Command.

"Over-hydration can be just as dangerous as dehydration," he said. "Just a couple of years ago we had a Soldier die because he thought he was doing the right thing by drinking a lot of water, but instead he ended up doing more damage. We ensure that over-hydration doesn't occur."

According to the Army Surgeon General Col. Stephen D. Gibbs, water intake should not exceed 1.5 quarts per hour and no more than 12 quarts daily.

For more information on heat injury prevention, call the Preventive Medicine Center of Martin Army Community Hospital at 545-1144.

Battle Boar

3rd Bde. unit conducts squad competition

1st Lt. Christopher Wells
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

As the sun heated the morning air, 14 Infantry squads from the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), began the first of nine events that would subject them to hours of sleeplessness, miles of unbroken terrain and days of physical demands. These "Mech-Warriors" came to prove a point, that they were ready to challenge each other and test their mettle.

The battalion began its first annual "Battle Boar Squad Competition," to promote "esprit de corps" and hone the Infantry skills of their mechanized Infantry squads.

The four-day competition started on April 6 and concluded April 9. Each squad was required to train and compete with their assigned squad. These were the men, if called upon, that would deploy and fight together.

Maj. Harry Tunnell, battalion operations officer, said the competition is designed to test the physical and mental toughness of each squad and their ability to work together as a team. He said performing basic Infantry tasks when hot, hungry and out of energy is difficult but very realistic.

"After the competition, we will review after action review comments from the competitors and perhaps change a few things next year," he said. "But the initial feedback from the squads is positive. Perhaps we could expand it to include other units willing to take on the challenge. Any takers?"

Day one of the "Battle Boar Squad Competition" began with a wake-up at 5 a.m. Competitors were briefed on the rules of the competition and started with an Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT). After a quick change of clothes and a fast breakfast, the squads moved out to conduct an advanced day and night land navigation course. Before the night ended each squad would travel a distance no less than 10 miles.

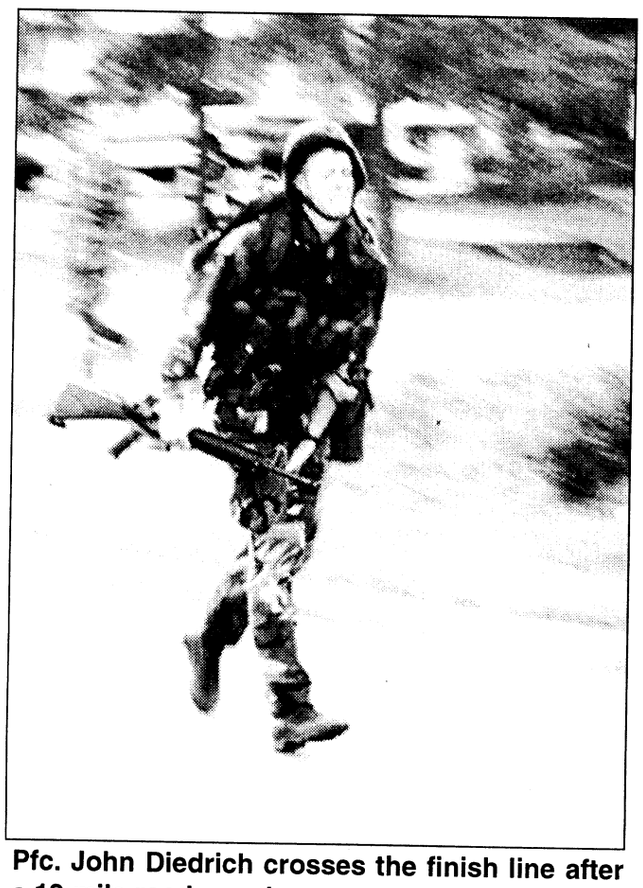
Day two consisted of squads racing through the Infantry Obstacle Course, located on Sand Hill. This task was followed by a 1.8-mile litter carry race. The teams carried two .50 caliber spare barrels, two cases of MREs, a wool blanket and one full five-gallon water jug. Upon completing the race, squads ran through the Sand Hill Bayonet Assault Course, a timed event.

Day three pushed each Soldier's mental and technical abilities to the limit as each Soldier tested his knowledge of Infantry tasks through a written examination. The test covered categories such as the maximum and effective ranges of various weapons systems, friendly and enemy; how to write and use a five paragraph operations order, using the doctrine format and a variety of basic buddy aid questions. The day's events ended as the squads conducted rehearsals in preparation for a night combat patrol that concluded with each team having to conduct a live fire ambush at Fort Benning's Ware Range.

Day four began as the teams received a 4 a.m. rousing by the battalion's top NCO, Command Sgt. Maj. Julian Kellman. With a few words support, Kellman briefed his troops on the competition's final event. Each squad had to endure a 12-mile tactical road march. If any member of the squad failed to stay with his group, the whole team would be disqualified. The road march took the Soldiers from Ware Range back to Kelley Hill. Once back at "Battle Base" the squads received Super Supper Breakfast, consisting of but not limited to prime steak and eggs.

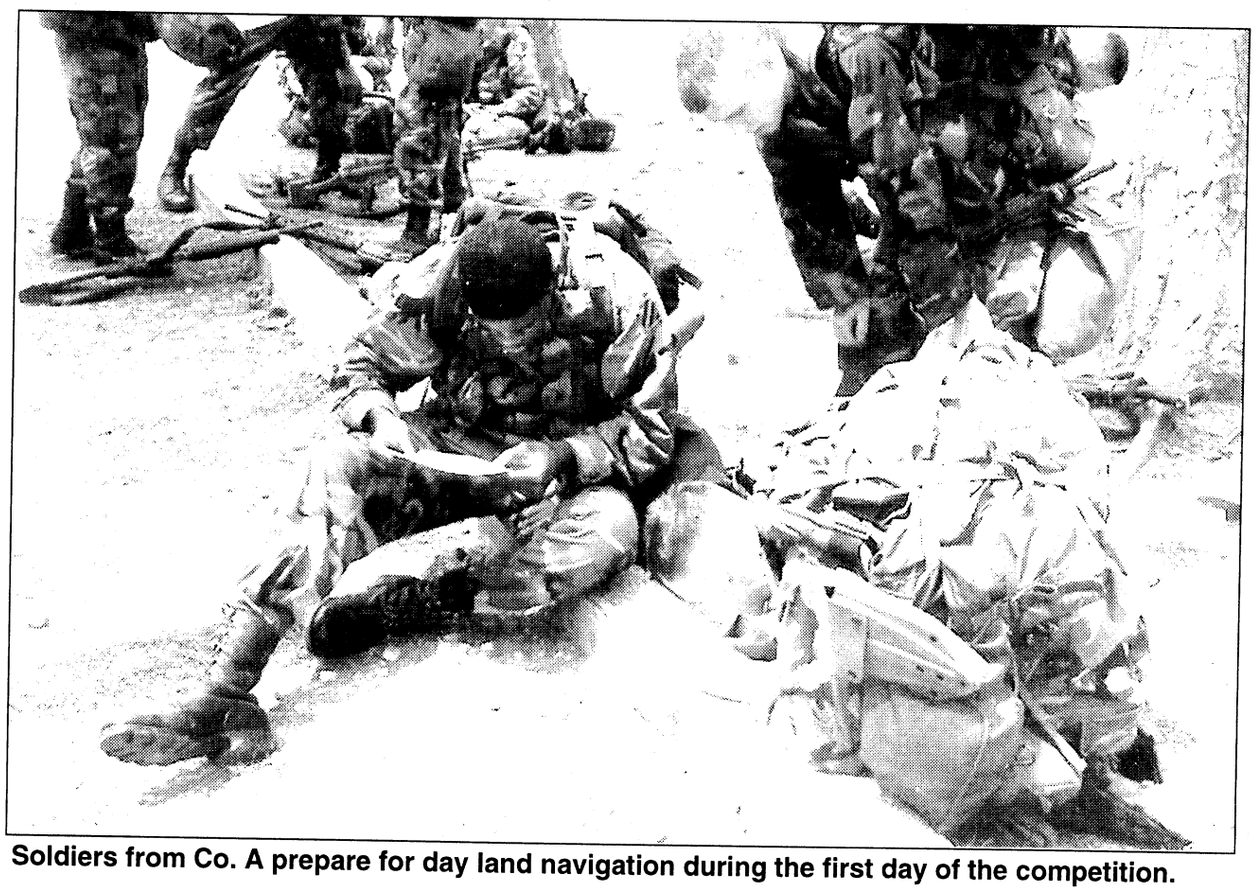
The competition concluded with an awards ceremony held at Britt Field, which is named in honor of fallen Medal of Honor winner 1st Lt. Maurice Britt. In all there were nine Army Achievement Medals, nine 3rd Brigade coins, 18 Certificates of Achievement, 18 battalion coins and 20 Army Physical Fitness patches awarded to the competitors. Honors for the competition were as follows: Third place was 1st Squad, 1st Platoon, Company B. Second place went to 1st Squad, 3rd Platoon, Company B. First place honors went to 1st Squad, 2nd Platoon, Company A.

Special honors went to Staff Sgt. Ramond Rojas and Pfc. Seth McLaws for high scores on the APFT.



When asked what he thought of the competition, Rojas said, "This is some of the toughest training I've had to do, especially when you're in charge."

McLaws agreed. "This is the kind of training that made me want to join the Army in the first place," he said.



Next year, the battalion expects to add a few more events that will increase the competitive nature of the gathering. The battlion's next major event is its semi-annual Level II Gunnery, a training exercise that will test each squad's ability to fight, in conjunction with, their Bradley Fighting Vehicles.

Sgt. Steven Mullen, Co. A., performs a backcrawl to avoid razor wire during an obstacle.

Pfc. John Diedrich crosses the finish line after a 12-mile road march.

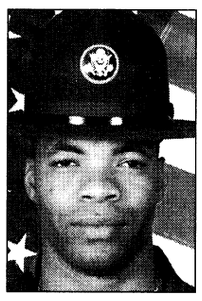
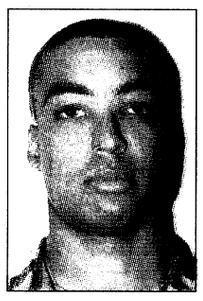
Define your style of leadership.
Authoritative. I explain to the Soldier what he has to do and how long he has to do it. I give him what he needs and supervise to ensure it is done correctly.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant?
Helping and guiding the Soldier in the right direction, giving him the keys to success, ensuring they know they have a purpose in this Army and they have to perform at a certain level always, no matter what the conditions are, gives me satisfaction.



Name:
Pvt. Scott D. Broadnax
Award or recognition:
Soldier of the Cycle
What encouraged you to join the Army?
My recruiter painted the picture and told me the things I could accomplish. I put it together and started to move forward.
Why were you chosen as Soldier of the Cycle?
I paid close attention to details and followed the Army values.



Name:
Sgt. 1st Class Rodney Stephens
Award or recognition:
Drill Sergeant of the Cycle
Unit or activity: Company B, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant?
Serving with Soldiers later in my career and having made an impact that displays a positive leader carrying on with their military career based on the basics I taught them.

Name:
Spc. Phillip Castillo
Award or recognition:
Soldier of the Cycle
What encouraged you to join the Army?
I joined the Army in hopes of some day competing in the Olympic Games. This dream is slowly becoming a reality as a representative of the World Class Athlete Program within the Army. I also joined the Infantry for the mere challenge and personal growth.
Why were you chosen as Soldier of Cycle?
I tried everyday to do my best. I took plenty of notes and demonstrated the ability to lead a platoon from point A to B. I did this with enthusiasm and high energy, that's how I became recognized by my peers as Soldier of the Cycle.

Name:
Staff Sgt. William E. Mason
Award or recognition:
Drill Sergeant of the Cycle
Unit or activity: Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade
Define your style of leadership.
As a leader I prefer a hard, but fair type of leadership style in order to accomplish the mission.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant?
When Soldiers walk across the parade field, standing tall and abreast each other, knowing that these 14 weeks of training were well deserved, then that's when the satisfaction of being a drill sergeant comes into play.

Name:
Pfc. Carlos Ray Heard
Award or recognition:
Soldier of the Cycle
What encouraged you to join the Army?
I joined the Army so that I could do my part to insure that my children and my future grandchildren could live in a free country where education and opportunity are readily available as they were for me. Pride in my country and a willingness to serve her interests were motivators for my enlistment in the Army.
Why were you chosen as Soldier of the Cycle
I was chosen as Soldier of the Cycle due to the fact that I stood out in front of my peers when it came time to accomplish all assigned tasks.

Candidates celebrate school's history

Officer Candidate Joseph Dzvonik
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Officer Candidates (OC) from Officer Candidate School (OCS) Class 3-99 visited the National Prisoner of War (POW) Memorial at Andersonville, Ga., April 19.

Located about 70 miles southeast of Fort Benning, this 495-acre park establishes a reminder of the brutality humans are sometimes capable of inflicting on each other. Nearly 45,000 Union Soldiers were held prisoner in the shelterless 26.5 acre area during the last 14 months of the Civil War.

It did not go without notice that OCS Class 3-99's trip occurred at a time when three American Soldiers were currently being held as prisoners in Kosovo.

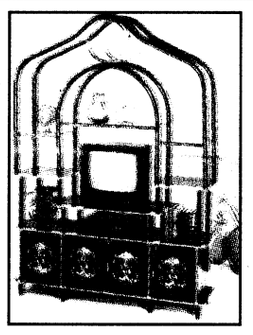
"As you watch 'Echoes of Captivity,' allow it to demonstrate the importance of survival, evasion, resistance and escape (SERE) training and, also think of our Soldiers being held in Kosovo now," said Lt. Col. Paul Roberts, a military history instructor at the Combined Arms and Tactics Department (CATD). "We must wonder if they will be treated in accordance with the Geneva Convention since we are not officially in a war; Kosovo may claim, therefore, they are not officially prisoners of war. We can only pray."

Following their trip to Andersonville, OCs celebrated the completion of seven of 14 weeks of training with the traditional mid-cycle picnic. The picnic, held at the Fort Benning NCO Academy on April 10, consisted of a barbecue, volleyball and entertainment for children. The picnic also afforded OCs the opportunity to spend time with their families, with some candidates having spouses travel to Fort Benning from as far away as Germany, Holland and California.

It was back to business the next day as candidates said goodbye to their families, packed their rucksacks and headed to the field April 11. OCs spent the first half of this week executing basic Infantry maneuvers. In addition to these exercises, 23 OCs spent their mornings in the field running seven to nine miles a day in BDUs and running shoes as preparation for the 5th Ranger Training Brigade 15K and 30K running competitions to be held in Dahlonega, Ga. in mid-May.

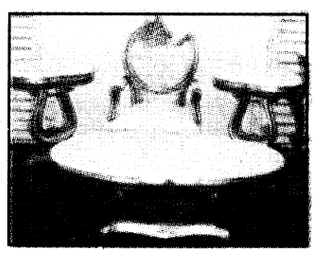
This week of training was followed by a weekend that may be perhaps the most memorable weekend of the cycle for the candidates. OCS graduates from the last 58 years returned to Fort Benning for the annual Hall of Fame induction ceremony. Sixty-two OCS graduates, some from as far back as the very first OCS class completed in 1941, joined the current 1,937 members who have their photographs and bibliographies filed at Building 2769, Wigle Hall, the OCS Hall of Fame.

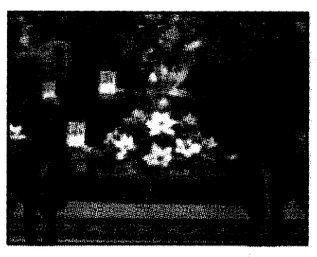
At a formal dinner held at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center April 17, Retired Lt. Gen. James R. Hall commented that the reason the OCS standards have never been compromised is due to the Department of the Army (DA) selection process.

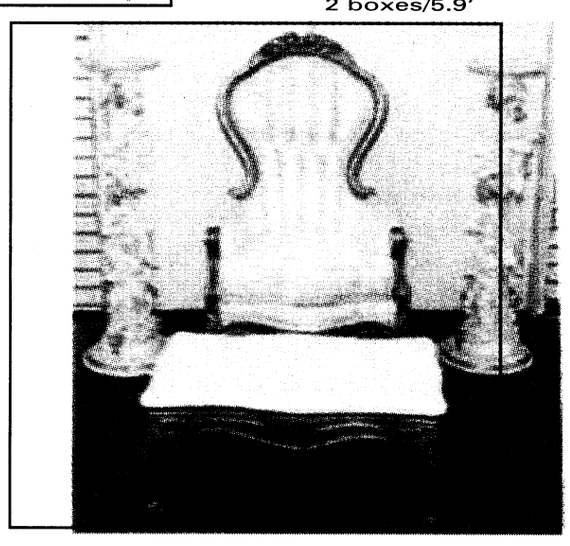


"DA selects less than 50 percent of the applications for OCS every year, and of those selected, many still don't complete the training because of the strict evaluation process here," Hall said. "It is the continuous evaluation process, from the very first to the very last day that allows the high standards to continue."

Lt. Col. Bruce Anderson, the current 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry commander, used the evening as an opportunity to express how OCS demonstrates the success of the "Total Army" working together.







One comment by OCS Hall of Fame inductee and OCS Alumni Association Vice-President Maj. Clarence E. Mosley to Anderson at the alumni dinner Saturday night summarized how pleased the alumni are with the current standards. Mosley said "The candidates here are so outstanding, it seems as though they were handpicked to be here tonight."

Anderson replied, "They're all this good."

Troy State's SHRM holds luncheon

Troy State University

On March 5, the Troy State-Fort Benning Student Chapter of the Society of Human Resources Management (SHRM) held a networking luncheon in conjunction with their quarterly meeting at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Dr. Ron Robinson, director of the chapter and Dean of the Human Resources Management Department, chaired the panel. The panel consisted of established corporate-level human resources professionals Don Cooper of Swift Textile, Janet Baker of AFLAC and Dennis Cook of Blue Cross and Blue Shield.

The distinguished panelists, all of whom are graduates of the Master of Human Resources Management Program at Troy State University, Fort Benning, provided insight into the field of HRM and discussed their entrance into and advancement within the field. Afterwards they answered questions from the floor.

The meeting ended with presentations of plaques to the guest panelists by the president and vice president of the student chapter of the SHRM, Marianne Dixon and Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk.

The panelist fulfilled a duty of all Troy State University graduates, which is to pull current students forward and to give back to the Alma Mater and the community. The "Once a Trojan Always a Trojan" spirit was alive and well.

This is an example of Troy State University-Fort Benning and the Student Chapter of SHRM providing quality education and making positive contributions to the Human Resources Management community.

For more information regarding membership in the Student Chapter of SHRM, call Robinson at the Troy State Graduate Office, extension 689-4744.

Thank you

1st Lt. Curtis Sawyer, who volunteered as a Sunday School teacher at Sand Hill's Regimental Chapel, receives a Certificate of Appreciation from Commanding General Maj. Gen Carl F. and Linda Ernst at the 1999 Volunteers —Light the Way Recognition and Appreciation ceremony April 14.

Twenty-six community members were honored for the hours of volunteer time they gave to organizations of Fort Benning.

AUSA queen nominees

Aguilar

Name: Spc. Suhai E. Aguilar
Hometown: Panama
Unit: 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment
What is your job? Operations clerk
Why do you want to be the AUSA queen? I want to be queen because it will be a nice and fun experience. You get to do different things and meet a lot of new people.
What would winning mean to you? Winning will mean a lot to me. It would give me a chance to represent this outstanding association, and give me an opportunity to inform people about AUSA and what it does.

Butler

Name: Sgt. Beofra K. Butler
Hometown: Hinesville, Ga.
Unit: Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade
What is your job? Administration NCO
Why do you want to be the AUSA queen? I won last year and enjoyed representing this chapter so much that I wanted to keep the title for another year. I also wanted ITB to continue the winning streak — post NCO of quarter and track and field champions.
What would winning mean to you? Winning the title again would be a personal goal for me.

Chaffin

Name: Pvt. 2 Christy L. Chaffin
Hometown: Gainesville, Fla.
Unit: 14th Field Hospital, 36th Engineer Group (Construction)
What is your job? Legal specialist
Why do you want to be the AUSA queen? I want to be queen because I want to represent my unit well and I know that I could that.
What would winning mean to you? I would be able to have new experiences and meet lots of people that I otherwise wouldn't meet.

Robertson

Name: Pfc. Sonya Robertson
Hometown: Queens, N.Y.
Unit: 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division
What is your job? Petroleum supply specialist
Why do you want to be the AUSA queen? The reason I would want to be AUSA queen is I want to be a part of helping and supporting fellow Soldiers.
What would winning mean to you? Winning to me would be a blessing. It would help me to carry out one of the things I was put on this planet for — showing others how easy it is to give.

Watson

Name: Staff Sgt. Cheryl D. Watson
Hometown: Augusta, Ga.
Unit: Basic Combat Training Brigade
What is your job? Schools NCO
Why do you want to be the AUSA queen? The reason I would want to be AUSA queen is because I am in a newly-established brigade and I would be the first person to win and set the standards for others to follow.
What would winning mean to you?
Winning would be a great honor for me and my brigade.

Army needs NCOs

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

The Army is changing personnel policies to enable more Soldiers to sew on sergeant and staff sergeant's stripes.

The Army needs more sergeants and NCOs at all grades to replace departing Soldiers on a "one-for-one" basis in a post-drawdown, steady-state Army, said Sgt. Maj. William T. Hursh, the enlisted promotions sergeant major in the Pentagon's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

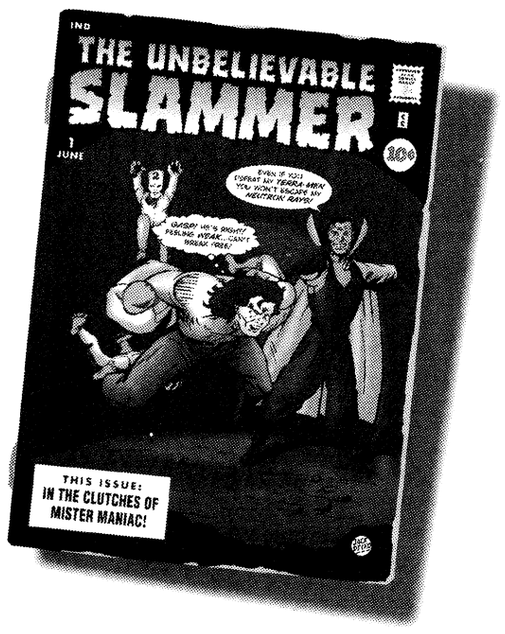
Only 1,000 Soldiers will be promoted to sergeant in May, Hursh said. In comparison, he said, 2,500 promotions to sergeant were made each month in March and April.

"The reason May promotions declined is because there currently aren't enough Soldiers on the sergeant promotion standing list in the numbers of military occupational specialties needed," Hursh said. "In May, we're projected to have 3,300 sergeant vacancies in 70 MOSs, because there aren't enough eligible Soldiers on the promotion list.

"Basically, if Soldiers in these MOSs had been 'boarded' and on the promotion standing list, they would have been promoted."

Starting June 1, the promotion score waiting time for sergeant will be cut from 90 to 60 days, Hursh said. Another June 1 personnel policy change affecting about 1,400 soldiers will facilitate staff sergeant promotions, he said.

Between May and September this year, Hursh said, the Army expects to promote 10,000 Soldiers to sergeant. "If Soldiers are placed on the sergeants' promotion standing list in April, they can now compete for promotion on June 1 instead of July 1," he said.



"We're also putting out a change allowing sergeants to be conditionally promoted to staff sergeant — contingent on their completing the Basic Noncommissioned Officers' Course within one year or as scheduled by PERSCOM (U.S. Total Army Personnel Command)," Hursh said.

Under previous policy, he said, sergeants had to complete BNCOC prior to promotion to staff sergeant.

Both of these policy changes should increase sergeant and staff sergeant promotions and "have a very positive impact on NCO readiness," Hursh said.

Through 1996, Hursh said, about a third of the eligible specialist and corporal populations were consistently on the sergeant's promotion list at a given time. Today, he said, that population has declined to about 17 percent; when at the same time, the population of specialists ineligible for promotion due to bars to reenlistment, "flags" and so forth, declined from 16 percent in 1996 to 12 percent in 1999.

"You have more eligible specialists and corporals, but we're taking a smaller population ... in today's post-drawdown force ... and trying to get them on sergeant's promotion lists," Hursh said.

For the record, high-tech professionals are not the pocket-protector-wearing, comic-book-hoarding, wish-I-was-a-Druid, haven't-had-a-date-since-I-took-my-cousin-to-the-prom geeks you think they are.

But that part about making lots of money?
That's entirely true.

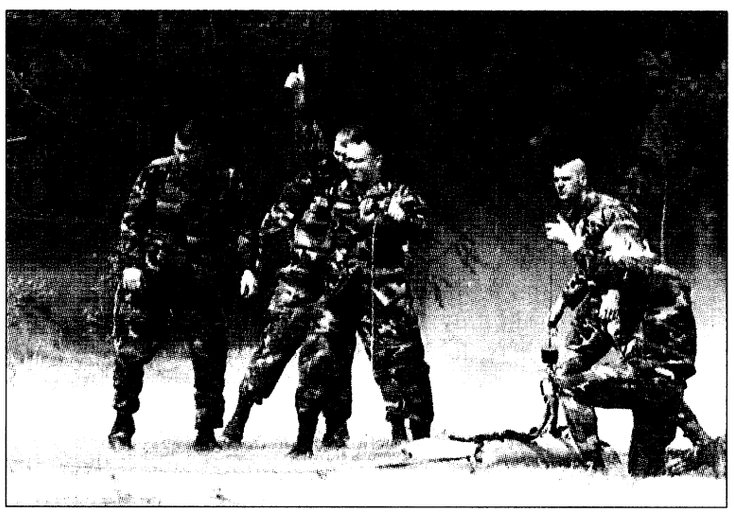
Braving 80 mile per hour winds, debris, trees and dead limbs, Soldiers from 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade practiced air medical evacuations of casualties with a flight crew from the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) hovering above.

Primary instructors and medical platoon members of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th RTBn participated in quarterly Skedco and hoist operation training April 15. The training included instruction on MEDEVAC requests, hoist training, Skedco operations and practical exercises evacuating casualties to a hovering helicopter utilizing Skedco-hoist procedures.



According to Staff Sgt. Michael Holloway, medical platoon sergeant with 4th RTBn, a Skedco is a piece of equipment used either in water or on land to evacuate a casualty in the event a helicopter can't land or the patient is too severely injured to be carried out on a litter.

"Becoming familiar with this equipment and procedure is valuable especially when a casualty is located in an area or terrain that is not feasible for a ground ambulance," Holloway said. "This type of realistic training benefits both primary instructors and battalion medics, who are usually first on the scene."

Participant Staff Sgt. Michael Stockdale, HHC, 4th RTBn, was on the ground for a casualty evacuation last year and knows the benefits of a practical exercise such as this.

"If a Ranger or a long range surveillance leaders course student goes down in rough terrain and we cannot extract him by vehicle it is essential to know hoist operations," Stockdale said. "The exercise prepares instructors for actual events and shows them what the conditions are like under a helicopter while extracting a casualty."

Hoist operations not only benefit the Soldiers working on the ground but also allows the flight crew to practice the mission they are assigned to do (Air Ambulance). The 489th Med. Co. supports several sites in Florida and Georgia for the RTB and train as often as possible.

Staff Sgt. Andrew Streed, Company D, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, signals the aircraft with a thumbs up indicating that the patient is ready to be extracted.

"Supporting the Ranger Training Brigade allows us to practice our mission and gives the entire crew practical training such as running the hoist and loading the patient," said Chief Warrant Officer Calvin Howell, pilot in command.

Howell said the difficulty of a casualty evacuation depends on environmental conditions, winds and visibility, but missions at night while wearing goggles are the most difficult. Practicing prepares the medics for an evacuation from a confined area where a number of things can happen while hovering at tree top level.

"The benefits of landing in an open area greatly outweigh a wooded extraction because it limits the risks of further injuring the patient and damaging the aircraft," he said.

Spc. Steven Stevenyers, flight medic with 498th Med. Co., said safety is the number one factor and 'hands on training' is the best way to prepare for future missions.

"It is important for Soldiers to know proper evacuation procedures because the life of a fellow Soldier is in their hands. Things can go wrong and Soldiers need to understand how to deal with problems that arise in order to increase the casualty's chances of recovery and sometimes survival."

MACH commander receives honor

Martin Army Community Hospital

Col. Lester Martinez-Lopez, commander of Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), was among a group of U.S. Army doctors that were recently published in the April 1999 edition of Military Medicine. The article "Dengue among United Nations Mission in Haiti personnel, 1995: Implications for Preventive Medicine," addresses cases of dengue fever that military personnel contracted during the Operation Uphold Democracy deployment to Haiti (1994-1997).

Martinez-Lopez has been the commander of MACH since May 1998. He graduated medical school in 1978 from the School of Medicine at the University of Puerto Rico and completed his master's degree in Public Health from John Hopkins University in 1983.

Army needs recruiters

Kathleen Welker
Army News Service

To infuse youth into the recruiting effort, U.S. Army Recruiting Command (USAREC) will begin a pilot program using young, single, first-term Soldiers as recruiters for a period of 12 months.

Up to 200 corporals will begin arriving at recruiting stations around Aug. 1, according to USAREC officials. All Soldiers who are selected for this program must be volunteers from the Continental United States or overseas Table of Organization and Equipment units who meet the basic recruiter qualifications found in AR 601-1.

Soldiers serving with a unit in an unaccompanied (married without spouse at duty station) status are not eligible for this program, officials said. Following six weeks of training at the Army Recruiter Course, Fort Jackson, S.C., all Soldiers in this program must have sufficient time in service remaining to complete a 12-month tour with USAREC, followed by an additional 12 months in their initial unit of assignment.

The first colonel in the chain of command will play a key role in this program, officials said, by interviewing and selecting Soldiers who best represent the Army and can tell the Army story among their civilian peers. USAREC is also seeking female Soldiers and Soldiers of Hispanic or Asian-Pacific ethnic origin as a means of penetrating growing recruiting markets.

Volunteers for this program will be screened by PERSCOM after recommendation from the chain of command is received, officials said.

Interested Soldiers are encouraged to contact their PERSCOM assignments' managers.

Request goes to president

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

A call-up request for U.S. reserve forces to support Operation Allied Force in Europe will soon go to the president, Pentagon officials said April 19.

Officials also said the emergency supplemental bill to fund ongoing U.S. participation in the strikes against Serbia is set at $6 billion and is on its way to Congress for approval. The supplemental bill will fund ongoing strikes, humanitarian aid and some mission expenses incurred during Operation Desert Fox.

The supplemental bill is something of a readiness safety net. Once approved, the services will no longer have to pay for the Allied Force mission by taking from funds that are used to maintain overall military readiness.

Air Force Maj. Gen. Charles Wald, vice director for strategic plans and policy with the Joint Staff, said the humanitarian effort is going well. Some 54 nations are now involved with feeding and housing the Kosovar Albanians. Eleven countries have started taking in the refugees.

This support is coming at a crucial time as over 24,000 Kosovar Albanians crossed into Albania and Macedonia according to the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR). Wald said the UNHCR estimates that 150,000 to 200,000 more refugees could cross the borders by Saturday. Allied Force pilots continued to hammer Serbia and Serb forces in Kosovo. NATO officials said more than 8,500 sorties have been flown to date and NATO continues to degrade Milosevic's capability to wage war.

NATO firepower will soon increase with the addition of U.S. Army Apache helicopters. The Apaches are due to arrive in Tirana April 20. U.S. officials said Gen. Wesley Clark, the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, would make the final decision on when the tank-killer choppers would enter combat.

While Army and Air Force engineers have worked nonstop to prepare the airfield at Tirana for the Apaches, the conditions are still primitive. Wald showed pictures of military trucks mired in mud at the airfield site. He said engineers are still placing aluminum mats at the site.

The introduction of the Apaches into the operation is part of a larger buildup of military firepower. The Pentagon is currently working on a request from Clark for 300 additional aircraft.

Additional Soldiers eligible for re-enlistment bonuses

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

About 5,000 active-duty Soldiers now scheduled to leave the Army by Sept. 30 will be eligible for a newly announced Selective Re-enlistment Bonus program.

Set to take effect April 14, the new program offers bonus payments, averaging $2,000 to $7,000, to specialists, sergeants, staff sergeants and some junior sergeants first class in 133 military occupational specialties (MOSs) or skill levels, said Sgt. Maj. Jerome L. Pionk, enlisted retention sergeant major, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"The new program offers re-enlistment bonuses to Soldiers who do not currently receive a bonus in their current MOS or skill level, provided they have an ETS (expiration term of service) in Fiscal Year 1999," Pionk said. "There are some restrictions. Certain over-strength MOSs will not offer bonuses."

The new program affects about 5,000 Soldiers, Pionk said. The Army currently pays re-enlistment bonuses to Soldiers in 131 specialties at various skill levels.

The amount of bonus money is calculated according to a formula and "will vary according to a Soldier's MOS and rank at time of re-enlistment," Pionk said.

All Soldiers who opt for the new program, Pionk said, will be required to re-enlist for at least three years of service. A two-year enlistment, he said, won't qualify a Soldier for the new re-enlistment bonus.

The new re-enlistment bonus program affects Soldiers within two zones of consideration, Pionk said. Soldiers in Zone A have between 21 months to six years of service and may receive a bonus, on average, of $2,000, he said, and Zone B Soldiers, with six to 10 years of service, may average $7,000 in bonus money. A Soldier's rank and length of re-enlistment term have a great effect on the bonus amount.

Total re-enlistment bonus money may not exceed $20,000, Pionk said, with all bonuses subject to taxation, except in designated combat zones.

The Army is using about $5 million to fund the new bonus program, which is a "one-time-shot" affair, Pionk said. The need to replace Soldiers on a "one-for-one" basis, and a lean recruiting environment is causing the Army to seek ways to keep more Soldiers in uniform, he said.

"Re-enlistments are actually going pretty good this year," Pionk said. "Our real problem, though, is that recruiting in the 'front door' has been relatively short. The Army is projected to come in at anywhere from 474,000 to 478,000 Soldiers (this Fiscal Year), when our (end strength) target is 480,000 Soldiers.

"To (help) offset any recruiting shortages, we're offering the new re-enlistment program to Soldiers who are 'sitting on the fence' trying to make up their minds (about re-enlistment). If a little extra money will put them over, then we'd like to keep them.

"We don't anticipate having this (new re-enlistment bonus program) money for next year," he said.

Soldiers should contact their career counselors for full details, Pionk said.

Loyd celebrates forty years of education

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Polka dotted and multi-colored party hats, clowns with buckets of candy and the echoes of hundreds of children singing Happy Birthday filled the playing field next to Loyd Elementary School Tuesday in celebration of a moment in history.

That moment in history was the 40th birthday of the school and also the birthday of the man whom its named for — 2nd Lt. Frank R. Loyd Jr. Born April 20, 1928, Loyd was an Infantry officer who made the ultimate sacrifice. Loyd gave his life during the Korean War and was awarded the second highest award for heroism, the Distinguished Service Cross.

In honor of Loyd and the school's beginning, students and faculty made their way to the field to celebrate the event in true birthday fashion. A couple of clowns made their rounds providing sugary treats and entertainment. Besides a mock candle lighting ceremony, everyone got busy showing off their birthday hats during the parade of hats and shaking their "tail feathers" with a go-through of the Chicken Song.

All of the fun and games not only gave the kids a chance to escape from an afternoon of class, but also probably taught them the importance of history and the people who make it.

"This is an important occasion because we are celebrating Loyd who gave his life in war and the dedication of this school to him," said fifth-grader Justin Morehead.

Morehead remarked the celebration was more than just a party.

"The little kids probably think this is just a birthday party, but to the older ones it's a landmark in history for when the school was built and who its named for," he said. "It's neat to be a part of it."

Fifth-grade teacher Cathy Ross agreed that it is exciting for the students to be a part of Loyd's history making.

"The best part for the students is being able to make history, because we estimated that the next celebration will be in 2050 and by then they will be quite a bit older," Ross said. "This is definitely a once in a lifetime opportunity for them and I think they appreciate that."

Another important piece of Loyd history was also one of the honorees during the ceremony. First-grade teacher Jane O'Hearn received a rose and a round of cheers for her commitment to the school for the last 40 years. She has been teaching with the school since it was built in 1959.

"I'm just proud to be here. It doesn't seem like it's been 40 years," O'Hearn said.

O'Hearn said Loyd was the fourth school to be built on Fort Benning and is home to kindergarten through fifth-grade students. Although the school's make-up hasn't changed much over the years, she said it is a special place because everyone is involved.

"As far as this school goes there are no cliques within the faculty," O'Hearn said.

Post schools go online to help PCSing Soldiers

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning newcomers no longer need to register their children into an unfamiliar school system, thanks to efforts from the Fort Benning School System and modern technology, PCSing Soldiers can make the transition a little easier when school issues are involved. New additions to the community can now take a peek into their children's educational future on any of the seven post schools' web pages.

Parents can log on to the web page to find information on anything from student registration to general information on each school. Parents can also learn the principal's name, schools address and a point of contact number for more information.

"This is one-stop shopping for parents who are not familiar with Fort Bennings" School System," said Alice Skinner, Fort Benning School System administrative technician.

"When the project was initially started two years ago, the purpose was to get information out to the public and to help PCSing Soldiers register their children for school. Now as time has gone on, we found out how much people want information on our schools and the the web page offers that," said Elaine Perkins, Fort Benning School System computer assistant.

"Parents have an interest in what their children are doing in school and the excitement the students have shown over the web pages is incredible," Perkins said.

Although all schools have a minimum of a web page, others schools such as Faith and Wilson have developed multiple pages with links to student work and curriculum in which curious parents and students-to-be may browse students' and teachers' educational efforts.

"It has been easy to get schools in on the project. Their eagerness continues to be contagious," Perkins said.

Not only has the the excitement for the web project grown, students' excitement for their work also has as well thanks to a growing audience.

"Students write better knowing their work is going to go on to the web and they enjoy this wider audience," said Jerry Christy, Fort Benning School System technology director. "The schools have received good feedback from parents."

Christy said parents are also eagerly waiting for the websites to post class assignments, although this request is not presently available, future goals are being developed to expand on what is available now.

Christy said the school system would like to see the pages as interactive as possible. Parents would be able to address issues and concerns via e-mail, students could develop their own websites to serve as portfolios of their work, registration forms, important events and possibly even class assignments may be available on the sites in the future.

Creativity is also one goal the schools will address in coming years, Christy said. The schools will transform informational website and become a window for parents' curiosity and also showcase students efforts.

"We want to make people wonder what our schools are up to so they may become regular visitors. We also want to show them what wonderful things kids can do," Christy said.

For those who would like to check out Fort Bennings' schools' websites and student work, log on to www.fortbenning.army.mil.

ISTD: Foreign students benefit from civilian sponsors

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

There is a company in the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment that is unlike any other. Even though it operates as a normal company would, there is one undeniable thing that sets it apart — the fact that its 76 members come from 67 different countries.

In a year's time, Company D (International Student Detachment), 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., could see more than 400 different faces from 119 different countries. Acting as their "home away from home," the International Student Detachment (ISTD) does more than just process these students, they introduce them to the American way of life.

The reason international students come to Fort Benning through the ISTD is to receive training at one of the U.S. Army Infantry Center schools, according to Maj. Dennis Wince, ISTD commander. This could be anything from Ranger, Airborne or Pathfinder School to the Basic and Advanced Infantry and Noncommissioned Officers' Courses.

The students who attend these courses teach American officers and NCOs about their culture and help increase inoperability between their nation and the U.S. But, most importantly, Wince said the students learn about American culture and the American Army.

"This is the goal that goes even a bit deeper than that," Wince said, referring to the importance of international students learning about American ideals. "Coming here teaches them about American values, democracy, free enterprise and human rights. This is important because a lot of these Soldiers go on to be leaders of their Army or even their countries."

Much of this teaching comes from an array of activities and opportunities for learning the nine person organization presents to the students. Things such as tours of the surrounding area, involvement in ceremonies and social events, trips to various cities and tours of companies and museums are all vital to helping the students learn about the different aspects of the American system.

Although teaching these students about the "American way" is one of the goals, Wince stressed they in no way push the ideas on them. "No one proclaims that one country is better than another," he said. "We just show them how we do things, so if they want to go back and make changes or conduct themselves in a similar manner they are free to do that."

He added that the biggest thing is for students to leave with a good feeling about the U.S. so they will remain friends and allies.

One of the ways for students to get a good taste of American life is to actually experience it, courtesy of a civilian sponsor, said Mary Renteria, ISTD information program officer.

Although each student has a military sponsor that volunteers their time and effort to help them with their courses, it is not the same as inviting them into the home and allowing them to experience an American home life and family, she said.

Currently the ISTD has a number of civilian sponsors from the Columbus area and Renteria mentioned that they would like to try and get greater sponsorship from Fort Benning families.

She went on to say that often times international students have misconceptions about American families because of the high divorce rate. But once they actually get in the home and see that a typical family is a lot likes theirs, it helps to dispel those notions.

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Maj. Dennis Wince, commander of the International Student Detachment, conducts an in-briefing for foreign students during their second day at the company.

"These students love sharing their culture," Renteria said. "They miss their tables, enjoy ours and love showing off the wonderful things from their culture. So not only do they learn something from the American families, but the American families learn a great deal from them too."

Retired Col. Wallace Veaudry, is a member of the East Columbus Rotary Club and invites international students to club meetings once a month. He said this sponsorship gives students a chance to get out in the community and learn more about it.

"It's good for the individuals we sponsor because they get to meet one on one with people, ask questions and find out about the community," Veaudry said.

He said it isn't just the students who benefit, however those who sponsor a student get the advantage of learning about a whole new culture without having to travel.

Wince pointed out that being a civilian sponsor isn't like a high school foreign student sponsor program. The international student doesn't move into the home. It just means a family can involve the students by inviting them over for dinner or to the movies or something along those lines. A sponsor can be involved as much or as little as they like.

There are also no language or cost barriers because all students who go through ISTD can speak English and provide their own money, Renteria remarked.

"I can't tell you how exciting it is to be a sponsor and what a wonderful opportunity it is to have a student come into your home," Renteria said. "And it doesn't have to cost a thing."

For more information about becoming a sponsor, call 545-1815.

Environmental actions improve planet

Directorate of Public Works

Everyone wants to protect the environment, however many people think their actions cannot make a difference. Nothing is further from the truth. Collectively, everyone's actions can make the planet a better, or worse, place to live. Environmental protection begins with you. Here are some things that you can do:

•Plant a tree! Trees filter carbon monoxide and other pollutants from the air, produce clean oxygen and provide a habitat for animals. They can also help reduce your cooling bill in the summer by reducing the amount of sun falling on your house.

•Use an old-fashioned reel lawn mower instead of a gas or electric one, especially for small lawns. You will get a healthy workout, and you will not have to burn gasoline. In addition, leave grass clippings in place and they will rot and fertilize the lawn.

•Don't use a gallon of gasoline to buy a gallon of milk. Plan your trips and errands to make the most productive use of the fuel you burn. Carpool if you can. Avoid making many small trips in your car. Automobile exhaust is one of the major causes of global warming as well as urban pollution.

•Shop thrift stores and salvage yards instead of buying things new. You will save money by buying a slightly used item while helping to save our natural resources.

•Try raising worms! Put shredded moist newspaper and vegetable scraps in a small plastic bin. Add worms to this and you have an instant composting operation. The worms will eat the scraps, leaving brown compost that can be used in flowerbeds or other gardening application.

•Go batty! Use a bat box to attract one of nature's best bug killers instead of spraying. Select a box made from recycled materials. Today, everything from plastic lumber to carpeting is made from recycled products. These products are often considerably cheaper than those made from virgin materials. Product labels will often tell you if the product was made from recycled materials.

•Buy latex paint instead of oil-based paints. Latex paints are water-based, release fewer vapors into the air, and clean up with soap and water. Oil-based paints on the other hand require petroleum-based solvents for cleanup and result in the release of harmful vapors into the atmosphere.

•Share magazines and books with friends. Rather than everyone buying his or her own copies, pass a copy around to share.

•Be creative! There are thousands of other ways to protect the environment. It takes your skill and creativity to unlock the secrets to making our planet a better place to live.

Comments and Questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Capt. Paula Harrison
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I've heard that a new regulation is coming out about relationships between enlisted Soldiers and officers. My girlfriend is thinking about going to Officer Candidate School (OCS). Right now we are both sergeants. How will this affect our relationship?

A. There has been an addition to Army Regulation 600-20 (AR 600-20), effective March 2, 1999, which governs the Army's policy on fraternization. The most controversial addition is the part concerning intimate relationships between enlisted Soldiers and officers. The term "officers" includes both warrant and commissioned officers, unless otherwise specified. The regulation applies to relationships between Army personnel and between Army personnel and personnel of other military services.

In the past, AR 600-20 focused on whether a relationship created an appearance of partiality and unfairness. In other words, the U.S. Army's primary concern was whether a relationship between Soldiers of different rank negatively impacted the chain of command and mission. Additionally, remedial measures for many such improper relationships were not punitive in nature. Fraternization existed if the improper relationship existed between an enlisted Soldier and an officer (subject to some expansion in later cases).

The addition to AR 600-20 creates an outright prohibition on relationships between enlisted Soldiers and officers under most conditions. The prohibition includes dating, shared living accommodations (other than those required for a military mission) and intimate or sexual relationships. However, there are important exceptions.

First, marriages between enlisted Soldiers and officers prior to March 2, 1999 are safe. Thankfully, the Army will not require that you divorce. Second, AR 600-20 allows the continuation of relationships between officers and enlisted Soldiers that started before March 2, 1999, as long as those relationships end in termination or marriage by March 1, 2000. If the relationship continues after March 1, 2000, outside of marriage, then that relationship is in violation of the regulation.

Third, the regulation does not prohibit relationships that become non-compliant due to a change in status. Unfortunately, this does not apply to your situation. The draft of the new DA Pamphlet 600-35 (still subject to change) makes clear that the change in status exception applies to married couples. For instance, if two enlisted Soldiers are married, and one decides to attend OCS, the relationship still complies with the regulation. However, if the Soldiers are dating, the relationship will no longer comply with the regulation.

Fourth, the regulation allows officer and enlisted relationships between and with members of the U.S. Army Reserve and National Guard, if not on active duty (other than annual training), and the relationship was established primarily on a civilian acquaintanceship.

There are other important changes to AR 600-20 involving relationships between Soldiers of different rank, trainee and permanent party relationships, recruit and recruiter relationships and ongoing business relationships between officers and enlisted Soldiers. Most importantly, punitive measures have been added to AR 600-20 paragraph 4-16. Violations of the sections discussed in this article may be prosecuted under the provisions of Article 92, Uniform Code of Military Justice (as a violation of a lawful general regulation). However, commanders may use the normal range of measures to handle improper relationships, from counseling to courts martial.

If you have any further questions about how to comply with the new AR 600-20 and DA Pamphlet 600-35, make an appointment at the Legal Assistance Division to speak with a Legal Assistance Attorney. The telephone number of the Legal Assistance Division is 545-3281.

The Martin Army Medical Mentor

... a community service from Martin Army Community Hospital

Low immunization rate poses threat

1st Lt. Sonja Finley
Martin Army Community Hospital

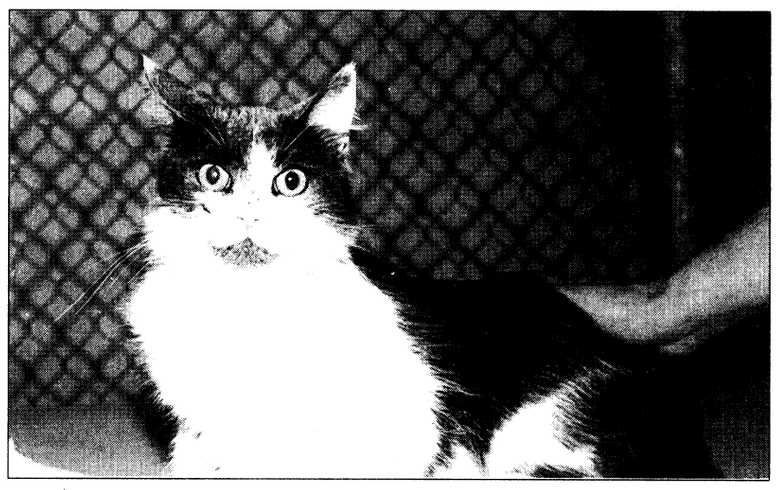
Immunization rates in our country are far too low, posing a threat to the health of our children. Approximately 25 percent of children under 2 years of age in the U.S. are not properly immunized. This can lead to potentially deadly diseases such as measles, whooping cough and diphtheria.

The good news is that more children in the past few years have been vaccinated than ever before. This is due in large part to the efforts of thousands of individuals throughout our community. Anyone who brings their child to Martin Army Community Hospital knows that we diligently keep our children's immunizations up to date.

Community efforts are needed to reach the goal of immunizing at least 90 percent of America's 2-year-olds by the year 2000. National Infant Immunization Week, April 18-24, highlights the role we all play in raising infant immunization rates across the country.

Presently, the greatest challenges facing infant immunization revolve around the public perception that we do not have a childhood immunization problem in this country.

Prior to widespread immunizations in the U.S., infectious diseases killed or disabled thousands of children each year. The measles epidemic of 1989-91 affected more than 55,000 people: 11,000 were hospitalized and more than 120 died. A major cause of the measles epidemic was the failure to vaccinate children on time at 12 to 15 months of age according to the Center for Disease Control.



By the year 2000, the goal of the Childhood Immunization Initiative is to have at least 90 percent of all children immunized by 2 years of age with the recommended vaccine series. This series includes four doses of diphtheria, tetanus and pertussis (DTP) vaccine, three doses of polio vaccine, and one dose of measles, mumps and rubella (MMR) vaccine.

All 50 states and the District of Columbia have immunization requirements for children entering daycare and school. There are no such laws ensuring that children are up to date on their shots by age 2. However, Army Regulations require children to be up to date on childhood immunizations to enroll in post childcare services.

Catch-up vaccinations can be given if the child did not get the vaccinations at the recommended times. Delays in starting immunizations result in less protection against disease.

To learn more about immunization including schedules, you can call your primary care manager, clinic, immunizations clinic or community health nursing at 545-4041.

For more information about immunizations at the Columbus Health Department, call 321-6200.

Pets galore

A 2-year-old Beagle mix and a 2-year-old domestic long hair cat are just a few of the animals available for adoption at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic.

Pet owners pay for initial vaccination and procedure costs, which could be any where from $11 to $40.

Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

What's happening at White Elementary School

Third graders help save planet

Cynthia Hill
E.A. White Elementary School

What can kids do to help save the planet? Plenty! Just ask students at E.A. White Elementary School.

Thanks to third graders at White, students and parents have a much better understanding of what they can do to help save our planet and its resources. These students have applied a little "kid power" to the problems the community faces in cleaning up the environment.

On Thursday, Earth Day, the third-graders performed an inspirational and educational one-act musical revue, "Project Rescue: Save the Planet." This was a well-researched look into saving the planet as seen through the eyes of animals on land, sea and air.

Through rhyming dialogue and creative characterizations, the animals along with other characters, taught a group of young children on a picnic the three R's of ecology — recycle, replenish and respect.

An endangered human was also on hand to demonstrate the effects of polluting the earth. Song lyrics contained such concepts as toxic waste, acid rain, global warming and deforestation. Now the students are helping spread the environmental awareness in their school and to parents through this performance.

For more than a month, third-grade students have been learning about environmental concerns and ways to address these concerns by learning the lines and songs in the play. While working on the lines and songs, the students have learned valuable lessons and the importance of taking care of our land, air and sea.

Cynthia Hill

Third-grade students at White Elementary School pose for a photo after putting on their educational one-act musical review "Project Rescue; Save the Planet." The review gave a look into saving the planet as seen through the eyes of animals on land, sea and air.

Students are doing group research projects in class on the concepts presented in the play. Upon completion of the research, the students will make a "teaching poster" that they will share with other students to teach them more about the concepts presented in the play.

Students have also pledged to take action at home and around the community. Students have written action plans that outline what they will do to help save water and reduce pollution. Journals will be kept for the children to specify what they did each day to conserve. Action plans, journals and results will be shared at the end of the study.

Wouldn't we all like to make the world a better place? Well, White third graders have helped to spread a kind of positive epidemic that is sure to foster a better understanding and a special love for the planet.

Students participate in River Network

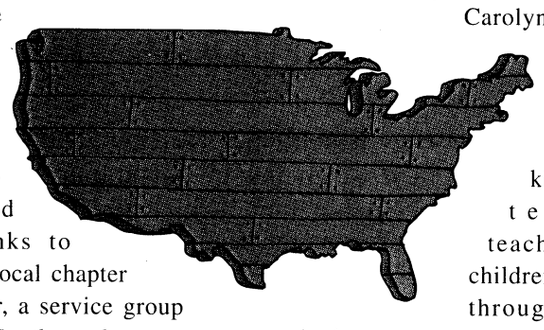
E.A.White Elementary School

"Once a River Kid, always a River Kid" is the motto that can be heard echoing through the classrooms at E.A. White Elementary School.

The fifth-grade students in Dorothy Hyder and Evelyn Braman's classes belong to the River Kids Network. This is the only active River Kids group on Fort Benning.

Dee Shore, a Columbus teacher, is the originator and coordinator. The River Kids Network is a student-oriented river awareness project focusing on the pollution problems of Georgia's waterways, especially the Chattahoochee River.

The major goals of this project are to help students develop a sense of pride, awareness and appreciation for their environment.



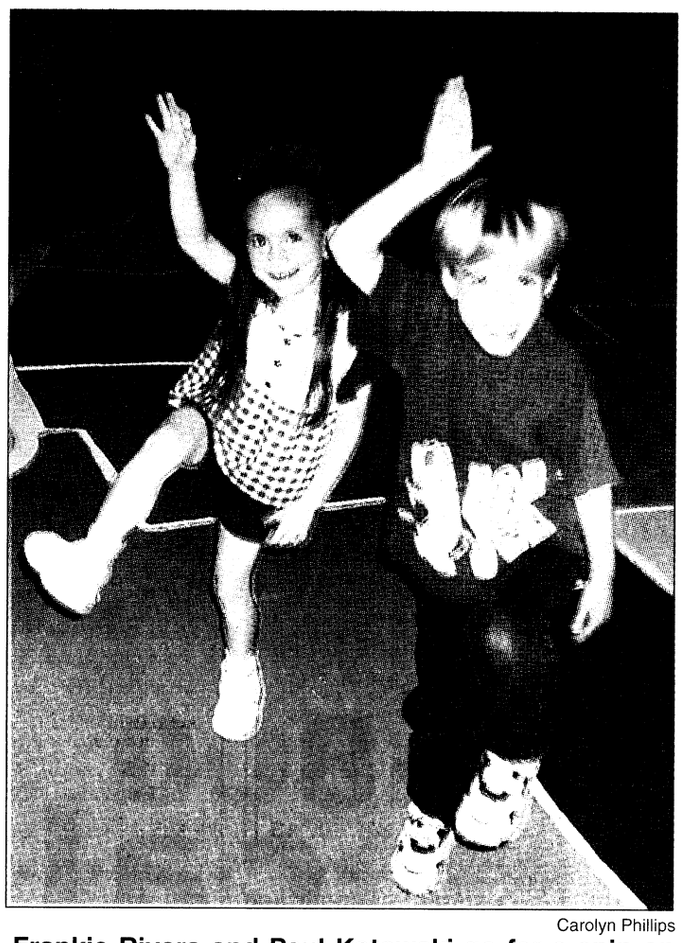
The students conduct monthly visual and chemical assessments of the adopted creek near the school. The biological team also conducts three assessments to determine the types of macro invertebrates living in the water. This information tells the students how "healthy" the creek water is. The results are interpreted and conclusions drawn. This information is sent to local and state officials. All the schools participating are registered with Georgia's Adopt-A-Stream Program. Sharing the collected data with Georgia's Adopt-A-Stream shows the seriousness of this project and the effort to help save and protect the waterways of Georgia.

The students also participate in "Help the Hooch" Day by cleaning up Russ Pond. The students regularly clean up their school playground. This program is expanding rapidly. Last year only one classroom participated and this year we have two classes participating in the program. It is hoped that soon all the students at White will be River Kids.

Elementary students travel around country

Owen Ditchfield
E.A. White Elementary School

Students at White Elementary School won't have to leave campus to travel around the U.S thanks to efforts of the local chapter of The Pioneer, a service group of retired Bell South employees.



The school now has a large, color map of the U.S. painted on the floor of the multi-purpose room. The project required painting the states different colors. White School parents helped and followed up with second coats and a sealer.

Teachers are excited about this large scale, because children learn better when they can involve their whole body in learning and that is what happens when learning about the states by moving around them.

Carolyn Phillips, a kindergarten teacher, teaches her children the states through song, recitation, state names on flash cards, coloring maps and contests.

"Now, I have one more way of helping the children with this unit," Phillips said. "Many people underestimate what young children can learn and every year my kindergartners can recite the states, read state names and locate on a map, every state in the United States."

Frankie Rivera and Paul Kotowski go for a spin on the map in White Elementary School.

HINTS FOR HOMEOWNERS

Gardening Tips To Cultivate

(NAPSA)-Your garden can be lovelier to look at when your garden plants get more air. Simply put, garden plants look and feel better from the increased oxygen and moisture that they can absorb after the soil around them is cultivated.

"Soil that has been broken up not only takes in more air, it also takes in moisture that might otherwise run off; so it's important to loosen the soil on a regular basis," says Web Thompson, a garden expert with the company that markets the Garden Claw tool. "Proper aeration and watering promotes deeper rooting and healthier plants and grass."

"Cultivating with the Garden Claw tool, or tilling with a Garden Weasel product, also stimulates the microbes in the soil, creating a natural enzymatic action to help keep the dirt itself healthier," Thompson added.

When asked about the use of spring-time advertising to promote his company's garden tools, Thompson said, "Some people laugh a little when they see our TV commercials for Garden Claw or Garden Weasel, but let me assure you that despite some novelty in the names of the tools, the tools themselves are made to some of the highest manufacturing standards in the world, and the ads act as a notice to gardeners, who have been pent up all winter, that it's time to go out and enjoy their favorite hobby once again."

The Garden Claw requires only a simple half turn to loosen and aerate all kinds of soil, uproot weeds, or blend in fertilizers and peat moss. The device can also serve as a compost mixer or hole digger.

Word of God can offer assurance

Chaplain (Capt.) Daren Waters Sr.
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Battalion

"What's the use?" is a question raised by one who has been trying to get a much needed promotion and it does not come to fruition.

reflections

It is a question raised by couples in troubled marriages. Many who are concerned with issues on hunger, politics, racism, sexism and classism toil with this question. Often, it is asked by persons who wrestle with the age-old adage, "If at first you don't succeed, then try and try again." Certainly, a majority of us have pondered this question at some point in our lives.

In times like these, the Word of God can offer assurance of God's grace and abiding presence. Throughout the Bible are numerous accounts of persons who have encountered this question: "What's the use?" One in particular is the prophet Elijah (I Kings 19). His plight ranged from the mountain top experience of the supernatural power of God on Carmel to the valley experience of depression under a juniper tree. He wanted God to take his life. He felt that he was alone and the only one who had not bowed to Baal. His complaints and frustrations were ever before God. In Elijah's valley, God sends a ministering angel to comfort and strengthen him for his journey. Elijah was reassured that he was not the only one who had not bowed to Baal.

Like Elijah and others in the Bible, God seemed at his best when others were at their worst. Often the situations looked hopeless, but God in his infinite wisdom cared for his people. The Lord reassured the Israelites with these words: "I know the plans that I have for you, declares the Lord, plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you hope and a future." (Jer. 29:11)

God is at his best when we are at our worst. Are you under the juniper tree of discouragement today? Be encouraged! Know that God has a plan for your life, plans to prosper you, not harm you.

Center can help fix marital problems

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

The story is told about a young man who, while hiking along the rim of a canyon, loses his footing and suddenly finds himself falling to a certain death. As he falls, he desperately reaches out toward the face of the canyon wall and catches hold of an old, gnarly tree. As he hangs there he calls out, "Is there anybody up there that can help me?"

"Yes, I can," comes the reply.

"Who are you?" asks the desperate young man.

"God!" comes the response.

"What do you want me to do?" pleads the young man.

"Let go!" answers God.

Whereupon the young man says, "Is there anybody else up there?"

There are many couples who marriages are in the same precarious position as the young man in this story. The couple is just hanging on by the skin of their teeth, their marriage is headed for disaster, they cry out for help and when help is offered they decide to just hang on and hope for the best.

How willing are both spouses to do whatever it takes to make their relationship better? Not simply doing what they want for themselves. Too often I hear one spouse say something like this about the other spouse: "He needs fixing before this relationship will ever get better!" In the vast majority of cases it will always take both spouses working together to bring reconciliation in a marriage. If both spouses are not willing to do it, then you've got a lot of trouble.

The result of doing nothing in a troubled marital relationship is to let that relationship die. Once a relationship is dead it is never going to come back to life. Have you ever tried giving CPR to a dead body?

Maybe you and your spouse are just hanging on, your marriage is in trouble and you're calling out for help. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is here to assist you. Before letting go and having your marriage end, why not give the center a call at 545-1760.

THANKS BAYONET

BILL HEARD CHEVROLET

World's Largest Chevy Retailer

DATE: April 15, 1999

TO: The Advertiser Company, printer of The Bayonet

RE: THANKS!!

Just a quick meme to let you know how much I appreciate the additional sales Bayonet advertising has generated for Bill Heard Chevrolet.

Being the world's largest Chevrolet retailer, and having a reputation of quality service to our customers before, during and after each sale is critical to the continued growth and success of Bill Heard Chevrolet. Our reputation, though, means nothing to all the new arrivals at Fort Benning if they don't even know we're here. And that's where The Bayonet plays such an important role in getting our message to Fort Benning.

Our consistent presence in The Bayonet for the past year has produced a significant increase in our military business. We see the results of our ads in The Bayonet every day as soldiers and civilians come to the dealership with a copy of our ad in hand, asking to see a particular car that is in the ad, or inquiring about our special military financing for all ranks. They know before they even get here that we're here to serve them.

Again, many thanks for helping us get our message out to Fort Benning.

Bill Heard, III
President

A three-day rugby tournament hosted by the Columbus, Fort Benning Rugby Football Club will feature more than 50 teams competing in the U.S. MIlitary Rugby Club Championships.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Football Club will host more than 50 rugby teams competing in the U.S. Military Rugby Club Championships at Columbus' Woodruff Farm Sports Complex April 30 through May 2.

Military teams from all over the world and from every branch of the services will take to the fields of the complex to participate in the three-day tournament to establish who is the best of the best in the ranks of America's forces both stateside and abroad.

The tournament will be divided among two categories; the seven-player teams, Rugby 7's and the 15-player teams, the Rugby 15's. The battle for the Rugby 7's title will begin at 10:30 a.m. April 30. Rugby 15's competition for the crown will begin at 8 a.m. on May 1 and 2.

Men are not the only ones that will don the equipment in the battle for the year's bragging rights to the best team in the world. Four women's teams are also slated to participate in the competition.

Although the official opening ceremony is not until 4:30 p.m. on April 30, spectators are still invited to come watch the first game of rugby at 10:30 that morning.

Following the opening ceremony, the American Combined Services Rugby Team will play an exhibition match against the British Royal Air Force Select Rugby Team.

For more information on the tournament or to get tickets for the event, call the Fort Benning Rugby Club at 323-8148.

Fun on waterways can turn deadly

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

When a group of Soldiers left the dock at Uchee Creek Campground and Marina in May 1997, they never imagined that their return would be on such a solemn note.

To them it was just another day on the water as they began indulging in the deadly mix of alcohol and boating. However, it was this mix which ultimately led to the death of one of the Soldiers when he was fatally injured after falling from the boat.

Unfortunately, it is too late to save this Soldier; however, there are guidelines and regulations in effect so those who boat, swim, fish or partake in any other water activity can remain safe.

"Over the past few years, the overwhelming majority of boating accidents on the Chattahoochee have been alcohol related," said Safety Manager Regis Beighley, Directorate of Public Safety. "The Georgia Boat Safety Act makes it unlawful for any person to operate a boat under the influence (BUI) of alcohol or drugs. When a boater has been found to have a blood alcohol concentration level of .08 or greater, they will then face BUI charges."

Those who are caught on a BUI charge can have a variety of penalties to face.

Boaters can face the minimum penalty of the loss of their boat operation privileges for up to a year for a first-time conviction up to the maximum penalty of either a $1,000 fine, 12 months imprisonment or both. Soldiers may also face reprimand at unit level.

Boating becomes dangerous due to effects alcohol has on a person. Everything from balance, vision, reaction time, decreased coordination and judgement is effected with as little as .05 percent blood alcohol concentration, according to the Georgia Department of Natural Resources. As little as two beers can bring someone who weighs 180 pounds to this level.

When a boater goes over this .05 level, he is considered impaired. Once this happens, the task of operating a boat becomes a dangerous mission and the chance for accidents is greatly increased. The drivers may become dizzy and may not be able to focus well. Trips and falls which can occur with dizziness which may be minor on shore can be deadly in the middle of the river, according to Beighley.

However, accidents and penalties can be avoided when drivers choose to boat safely and use common sense.

"Boaters who are planning to spend a day "behind the wheel" should steer clear of alcohol. Operating a boat is just as complicated as driving a car, although many people who would not drink and drive will operate a boat while under the influence, Beighley said.

Beighley added that it is also important for those who want to operate a boat to attend a boating safety class.

Uchee Creek Campground and Marina offers boater safety courses to anyone interested. For more information on boater safety courses, call 545-4053.

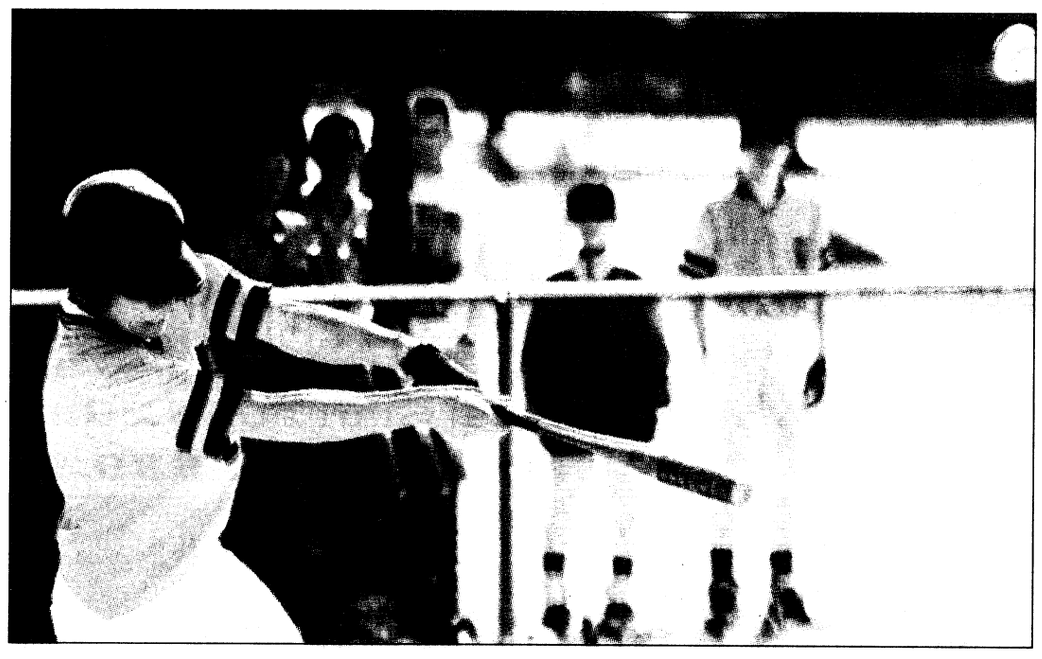
OUTDOOR RECREATION

Adventure found in parks

Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites

Outdoorsy-types looking for adventure can find it at Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites. Several nearby state parks offer excellent camping, hiking and canoeing options.



Taking a camping trip is an ideal way to enjoy outdoor adventure while also taking it easy. Florence Marina State Park, located in Omaha, is a great place to turn for comfortable lakeside camping, complete with hot showers, picnic tables and fire pits.

Almost every state park has hiking trails perfect for soaking up Georgia's natural beauty. Providence Canyon State Park in Lumpkin, Ga., is known as "Georgia's Little Grand Canyon." The park features back country and nature trails that are suitable for beginning hikers or experienced backpackers.

Attracting canoers, kayakers and rafters, Thomaston's Sprewell Bluff State Park is located on the white waters of the Flint River and is one of Georgia's newest state parks.

Other nearby state parks and historic sites that offer great outdoor adventure include F.D. Roosevelt and High Falls state parks. Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites are owned by citizens of Georgia and are operated by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources.

For more information, call (800) 864-7275, extension 416 or visit www.gastateparks.org.

Many years ago in England, pub frequenters had a whistle baked into the rim or handle of their ceramic cups. When they needed a refill, they used the whistle to get some service. "Wet your whistle," is the phrase inspired by this practice.

Organization answers thrift savings plan questions

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

Twice a year, federal civilian employees can begin or change deposits into their Thrift Savings Plan (TSP) account. "Open season" (May 15-July 31 and Nov. 15-Jan. 31) presents a palette of choices but almost always raises questions about the investment options.

Following are some commonly asked questions and answers about the Thrift Savings Plan that may help you make informed investment decisions. Before electing or changing Thrift Savings allotments, however, consult your local civilian personnel office.

Information and forms also are available on the Internet at the http://www.tsp.gov/>Thrift Savings Plan Web site.

What is the Thrift Savings Plan?

The TSP is a tax-deferred savings plan for federal employees. Comparable to plans offered by private employers, the TSP offers participants tax-deferred advantages similar in many ways to those of individual retirement accounts.

How useful is the Thrift Savings Plan web site in helping me determine how and how much to invest in it?

The Thrift Savings Plan web site provides complete details on the plan, available investment funds and how to borrow against your account balance. A "what if" calculator helps you determine what your investments could earn over a given period of time at any rate of return you assign.

You can download forms to elect or change participation in the plan. You'll have to print them, fill them out and take them to your personnel office for processing, though.

Finally, TSP administrators assign each participant a Personal Identification Number. If you don't like the one they give you, you can ask for a custom one at the web site. If you don't know your number, check a block at the site and it will be sent to you. Using your number at the site, you can access your personal TSP account and review your current balance, check the loan amount available to you and the current loan interest rate, review the status of any outstanding loan request and request, change or cancel an interfund transfer.

Who is eligible to participate?

All federal employees.

What are the basic rules for contributing?

•Civil Service Retirement System employees may contribute up to five percent of their basic pay each pay period.

•Federal Employee Retirement System (FERS) employees may contribute up to 10 percent of their basic pay each pay period to the TSP, as long as the annual total does not exceed annually adjusted Internal Revenue Service limits.

•All contributions must be made through payroll deductions.

Contributions from other sources, such as personal savings, aren't permitted. You also can't transfer money to the TSP from an individual retirement account or any other retirement plan.

•You may contribute either a percentage of your basic pay each pay period or a fixed dollar amount.

•Elections are made during an open season to start, change or allocate TSP contributions. Although you may submit election forms anytime during an open season, contributions won't begin until the first full pay period that falls within the election period.

Who is entitled to agency contributions?

Only FERS employees. Agency contributions are not deducted from your pay nor do they increase your pay for income tax or Social Security purposes.

First, when you become eligible to participate in the TSP, your agency will open a TSP account for you and automatically contribute one percent of your basic pay for each pay period. You will receive these contributions whether or not you contribute your own money.

Second, when you contribute to your TSP account, your agency makes matching contributions in addition to the automatic one percent. Matches apply to the first five percent of pay you contribute each pay period — dollar for dollar for the first three percent and 50 cents on the dollar for the next 2 percent.

Although FERS employees may contribute up to 10 percent of their basic salary each pay period, agency contributions stop after the first five percent. However, contributions above five percent still provide before-tax savings and tax-deferred earnings.

Who pays administrative costs of operating the TSP?

The plan's major expenses include development and operating costs of the record keeper's computer system and printing and mailing publications and participant statements. There are two sources: forfeiture of noninvested agency automatic contributions and earnings on participant and agency contributions. FERS employees who leave federal service before they are vested in the TSP forfeit the one percent automatic agency contributions and earnings on those contributions.

Accrued administrative expenses, after forfeitures, are deducted from the earnings of the investment funds. Participants bear all investment management fees of the C stock fund and F bond fund.

The effect of net administrative expenses (after forfeitures) on the rates of return of the three funds is measured by the expense ratio of each fund. The monthly expense ratio is the total monthly administrative expenses charged to each fund, divided by the average fund balance during that month.

How do I change the way my existing account balance is invested?

If you want to change the way money already in your account is invested in the three TSP funds, you must submit an interfund transfer request form (TSP-30) to the TSP Service Office.

However, it's more efficient and faster to make changes over the ThriftLine.

Choices you make on the election form (TSP-1) to allocate contributions only apply to future contributions to your account.

What is the ThriftLine?

The ThriftLine, (504) 255-8777, can be used anytime with a touch- tone phone. The line offers monthly rates of return for the three TSP funds as well as the most recent 12-month return rates.

If you are a TSP participant, you also can use the ThriftLine to obtain information about your account. In addition, if you have ever invested in the C or F funds, you can use the ThriftLine to change how much you allocate to each fund. If you have contributed your own money to the account and are still a federal employee, the ThriftLine can tell you how much you may be eligible to borrow and the current interest rate for TSP loans.

To use this automated service, you'll need your Social Security number and TSP personal identification number, included in welcoming letters to new contributors.

Changes make TRICARE system easier

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

Good news for patients and participating civilian physicians: TRICARE is getting simpler.

The TRICARE Management Activity began implementing changes in February that will make it easier, and cheaper in many cases, for Military Health System beneficiaries to get health care.

Many of the changes also will make TRICARE participation more attractive to physicians, according to a senior health policy analyst here.

"What these changes have done is eliminate a lot of the fine print in TRICARE coverage," said Air Force Lt. Col. Kathy Larkin. "We have been very committed to protecting our beneficiaries and eliminating confusion for our providers."

Larkin described some of the changes, explaining how the system worked before and after the changes were made or will work after the changes are implemented. These improvements include:

•Balance Billing for Specialty Care

One of these changes affects how much enrollees in TRICARE Prime, the military health system's managed care option (standard for active duty service members), must pay for authorized care from a civilian specialist who is not in the TRICARE network. Until things changed in March, patients were responsible for any costs over the "balance billing limit" of 115 percent of the CHAMPUS "maximum allowable charge" — the most that old plan would have paid participating providers for a specific service.

"When TRICARE Prime enrollees follow the rules by getting authorization for specialty care, they will only pay their co- pay rate," Larkin said. "If the specialist isn't in the TRICARE network and charges more, the managed care support contractor for that region will pay the difference."

Co-pays are $6 for family members of active duty service members E-4 and below; and $12 for family members of active duty service members E-5 and above and retirees and their family members.

•Balance Billing Limits for Nonprofessional Services

A second change applies limits to balance billing for ambulance companies and clinical laboratories and other noninstitutional, nonprofessional providers.

"An ambulance company can charge anything it wants," Larkin said. The new balance billing provision protects Prime enrollees, but TRICARE Standard users could get stuck with a big bill. "If we said the ambulance ride was worth $100 and the company charged $1,000, legally that beneficiary was responsible for the $900 difference," she said. "Now, we've applied a 115 percent limit." So in her example above, TRICARE would pay the $100 minus the beneficiary's cost share, and the beneficiary would pay the remaining $15.

•Increased Maximum Allowable Charges

TRICARE identified 62 medical procedures for which the CHAMPUS Maximum Allowable Charge was lower than the Medicare fee schedule amount. This was a disincentive for civilian physicians, Larkin said. TRICARE increased the maximum allowable charges to match Medicare fees for all 62 procedures Feb. 1.

•Single Payment for Ancillary Services

Before March, civilian medical professionals' bills often included multiple additional charges for blood work, throat cultures, X-rays and other lab services. Often, each of the different labs would bill separately and expect to apply the beneficiary's co-payment to its bill.

"The co-payment might be applied two or three times, even if the beneficiary didn't even go anywhere but the doctor's office," Larkin said. TRICARE eliminated co-payments for these ancillary services, so there's no question about whether a co-payment should be applied.

•Automatic Renewal of Prime Enrollment

Enrollment in TRICARE Prime is for 12 months. In the past, enrollees had to fill out forms to continue in the Prime program. Otherwise, TRICARE assumed they wanted out and the enrollment would expire after the 12th month.

"You had to do something to stay enrolled," Larkin said. "Now, you will be automatically continued unless you do something."

This applies primarily to active duty family members who aren't charged enrollment fees. Retirees have to pay for their renewal.

However, TRICARE plans to implement a monthly payment schedule for retirees, with electronic funds transfers or retiree allotments. "That would just click right along" until retired beneficiaries voluntarily disenroll, Larkin said.

•Claims Appeal Process for Providers

TRICARE requires contractors to use ClaimCheck software to detect incorrect billing by providers. Some providers didn't like the software and wanted TRICARE to develop a review process. Congress required TRICARE to establish an appeals mechanism.

"We've put a notice in the Federal Register, notifying the public that we do, in fact, have a review and appeal mechanism currently in place and that we're working toward streamlining that," Larkin said. "I think this demonstrates that we listen to provider concerns and try to address them."

• Alternative Optometry Benefits

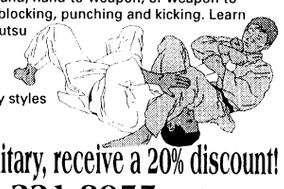
TRICARE wants to streamline the optometry benefit. Active duty family members currently get an annual eye exam benefit in TRICARE Standard and Extra, and periodic exams in Prime. Retirees in Prime also get the periodic benefit but receive no optometry benefits under Standard or Extra.

"We need to simplify the benefit, and we're working on how best to do that," Larkin said.

• Medical Necessity Review for Outpatient Procedures

TRICARE decides whether 17 different outpatient procedures are necessary before it authorizes beneficiaries to have them done – even when they have other health insurance that pays before TRICARE.

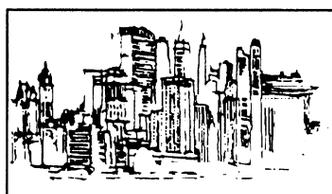
When people used TRICARE as a second payer, the medical office manager had to obtain separate reviews and authorizations from both the primary insurer and TRICARE, Larkin said.



"While we still want to pay for medically necessary care, we can look at it retrospectively," she said. "We just want to make our program easier to use, and less complicated for the civilians out there who are trying to work with us."

A number of other changes have already simplified TRICARE programs, Larkin said. TRICARE now is available worldwide, and Prime enrollees can transfer their enrollments when they move to a new region. The claims process has been simplified, a major incentive for civilian practitioners to join TRICARE networks.

Live Oak Jujutsu



Jujutsu is using throws, joint reversals, choke holds, take downs and holds, preventing take downs and breaking lose from holds, and striking when engaged in hand-to-hand, hand-to-weapon, or weapon-to-weapon combat. Drug-Resistant Bugs Are Fighting Back!

Treatments That Once Killed Bacterial Germs Work Less Often

(NAPSA)-Each year, over 100 million antibiotics are prescribed in the United States, and experts estimate that 20 to 50 percent are unnecessary. Antibiotics kill bacteria, but never kill viruses. Taking an antibiotic for infections caused by a virus, such as cold, cough, or flu, does nothing to help you feel better. In fact, it can cause you to be at risk for an "antibiotic-resistant infection" with germs that may be hard or impossible to kill.

Julien Chang was a healthy six-month-old child when he started attending a Georgia day care center. On his fourth day, he developed a bacterial ear infection. "The ear infections were non-stop for six months despite treatment with a number of antibiotics," said Julien's mother, Tammy. After about 25 doctor's office visits and hundreds of dollars in prescriptions, she finally had to resort to surgery to place tubes in her son's ears. According to Dr. Mitchell Cohen of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, "Julien's is a common story-recurring infections leading to more and costlier antibiotics. The more we use antibiotics, the more we are seeing resistance. Unnecessary antibiotic use is only making the problem worse faster. Once bacteria become resistant to antibiotics they can spread to others." In some parts of the U.S. twenty-five percent of Streptococcus pneumoniae, the bacteria that cause almost half of ear infections in the United States, are resistant to penicillin.

"We are concerned that more and more people will have resistant infections as these organisms continue to spread," said Dr. Scott Dowell, chair of CDC's Drug-Resistant Streptococcus pneumoniae Therapeutic Working Group. "What is clear is that children and adults who are repeatedly exposed to antibiotics are at highest risk."

You can protect yourself from antibiotic-resistant infection by taking antibiotics only when they are truly needed. To learn more about antibiotic resistance, visit the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention web site at: www.

Post gears up for competition

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Within a week, Rangers from across the U.S. Army will make their way to Fort Benning to battle it out in hopes of becoming the next "Best Ranger" during the 17th annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition May 7-10.

The competition, which is open to anyone who is Airborne-Ranger qualified, will feature approximately 42 two-man teams from various units Army wide. All of the teams will take to the Harmony Church training ground to tackle an array of different events that will push their minds and bodies beyond the limit, said Master Sgt. Gary Boyer, Ranger Training Brigade civil and military liaison NCO.

By the time the three-day competition is over, those teams who have stuck it out will have completed everything from the usual road march, weapons qualification and obstacle course, to some not-so-common events such as the slide for life and helocast swim. Although the competitors have some idea about the kinds of challenges that lie ahead, they do not know the exact events until the day of the competition, Boyer said. This is so Rangers who have competed before will not have too much of an advantage over new ones, he added.

Even though there is only one team that can claim the title of "Best Ranger," Boyer explained that it is a feat in itself just to finish the competition. He said last year only 24 teams out of the 40 finished all of the events.

Lt. Col. Clarence K. K. Chinn, commander of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, said the competition is a significant event because it "showcases some of the Army's best small unit leaders executing military tasks required on today's battlefield."

He described the competition as a grueling three-day event that demands military skill and physical endurance from each competitor.

"Although many of the Army's best small unit leaders will compete, only a select few will actually complete the competition, which is a test of strength, will and endurance," Chinn said. "The reward for most competitors is the accomplishment itself of finishing the Best Ranger Competition, since less than half of those who start will finish the competition."

The Best Ranger Competition is named after retired Lt. Gen. David E. Grange Jr., a former Ranger instructor, Ranger department director and also former commanding general of Fort Benning.

Grange was referred to as a "great Soldier-patriot," by Chairborne Ranger Dick Leandri, the man who named the competition after him. Boyer agreed that it was fitting to name the competition after Grange because "he is a great American and a great Ranger."

For more information on the events, see page A-3.

Yard sale set for Saturday

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Come one, come all — PCSing, ETSing or Soldiers who just have too much stuff — it is that time of year to empty out those closets and let your lost treasures become someone elsé's find during Fort Benning's bi-annual Post-wide Yard Sale.

With no permits required, residents can sell anything from furniture, household goods, clothing, toys, books or anything within reason (sorry, no weapon sales), between 8 a.m. and 2 p.m. Saturday.

This year's Post-wide Yard Sale has been publicized in local newspapers off post in order to bring more buyers to the Fort Benning sales, said Capt. Jeff Dirkse, special assistant to Garrison Commander's office.

"This is a great opportunity for residents to clean out their closets and profit from decades of excess items that have been collecting dust," Dirkse said.

Residents can increase their selling luck by posting signs to individual yard sales so on and off post buyers can locate sales around the housing areas with ease. However, signs must be taken down within one hour following the end of each sale.

Sales must be displayed in a neat and orderly fashion and in a location easily seen and accessible from the street.

After the sale The Officers' Wives' Club Thrift Shop will open its doors to accept donations of any unsold items from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m at the rear of the building. Volunteers will be on hand to accept the items.

Only clean, working items will be accepted for donations.

Caution: Officials alert community of severe weather

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

When Hurricane Opal slammed into Florida's Gulf coast in 1996, Floridians were not the only ones to feel the brunt of the storm's high winds, torrential downpours and dangerous lightning. Fort Benning residents felt the force of the storm as well.

Luckily for the Soldiers and civilians on Fort Benning, the post only sustained minor damages and no one was injured thanks to the work of Fort Benning's Directorate of Threat and Security and Fort Benning's Weather Station manned by Air Force personnel assigned to the 17th Air Support Operations Squadron.

The destruction Opal left behind has since disappeared, but the lessons learned and the quick response of the two organizations still remain and serve as protocol for proper procedure to take during inclimate weather.

"The key to preventing injuries and losses during inclimate weather is education," Al Harvey, the acting director of Fort Benning's Directorate of Threat and Security said earlier this week. "During times like the Opal strike in '96, we have people calling to ensure they are doing the right thing and understanding the sirens correctly."

"People need to review their weather protection plans and make sure what they are doing is proper and timely, so their minds won't be clouded by the chaos during the storm," he added.

The storm sirens that sound the warning for tornado activity in the area are a final result of interorganizational cooperation

Fort Benning celebrates Law Day

Capt. Stephen Payne
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Saturday marks the 41st annual celebration of Law Day. Across the nation this week, American citizens have celebrated Law Day by participating in events designed to help people appreciate the constitutional form of government and the liberty it secures.

Since the founding of this country, the law has endeavored to protect the freedoms and rights that citizens hold so dear: to speak, to exercise their religion, to ask the government to right wrong, to bear arms, to own property, to be treated fairly by the judicial system, to vote and many others. These blessings of liberty are so important that many men and women have been willing to enter the military and other services to protect them — even die for them.

The idea for Law Day began in 1957 with Charles S. Rhyne, a Washington D.C. attorney who was then president of the American Bar Association. He envisioned a special day to celebrate the legal system, and the celebration has grown ever since. In 1958, to strengthen the heritage of liberty, justice and equality under law, President Eisenhower established Law Day USA. By joint resolution in 1961, Congress officially designated May 1 for the annual celebration.

Lt. Col. Dana Chipman, Deputy Staff Judge Advocate, talks to students at Faith Middle School about the legal process.

Although May 1 is still the official date, Law Day USA has evolved across the country into a week-long event. Each year federal, state and local organizations, including law enforcement and bar associations, businesses, schools and other civic groups, plan and produce thousands of programs to promote understanding of the rule of law in society and the constitutional democracy in which people live.

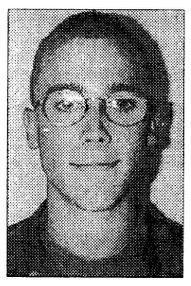
Fort Benning always makes a strong contribution to the tradition of celebrating Law Day. Whether it's in the form of mock trials at Faith Middle School, art and essay contests for the students of Fort Benning schools, a reenactment of the trial of Captain Henry Wirz, the commander of the Andersonville prison, a luncheon, or a golf tournament — Fort Benning offers a Law Day activity for everyone.

As this week draws to a close and the official celebration ends, reflect on the many freedoms and rights that the law protects. ◆

Forced service lowers morale, motivation

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The green suit I don every morning is something I take pride in and something I expect others to do the same. I am an American Soldier, and I chose to sign on that dotted line to serve my country. I chose to take the challenge and be part of the best Army in the world, and I enjoy that.



commentary

I enjoy the company of others who I now sit alongside, working day in and day out because I know they chose to do the same. They chose to serve and do it every day with the same invigorating sense of pride that I have every morning when the alarm clock sings its wake-up tune.

Unfortunately, this sense of pride and cohesion among proud volunteer Soldiers is facing a challenge it hasn't seen in nearly 30 years.

The challenge is the draft, and if many Americans would have their way, the days of an all-volunteer Army would be a thing of the past and the days of pulling numbers from a hat to see who would fill the boots of tomorrow's Soldier would be reincarnated.

Now, as I look back on the history of this great Army, I see the 60s and early 70s when morale was low, where Soldier satisfaction with the Army was low and where retention was an even bigger problem than it is today. Ironically, this same time period is the time when the draft was in full effect, and even more unbelievable some people who are presently trying to rectify present problems with retention want to revert back to this way of selecting America's Soldiers.

On the surface, the idea of bringing everyone into the Army, or any branch of service for that matter, sounds like a relatively good idea. A day doesn't go by that someone somewhere doesn't say, "What that kid needs is some discipline and some direction. The (insert branch of service here) did it for me. I just think they should make all of these young kids do the same thing. I had to do. Then they wouldn't act that way."

Perhaps this would have been a good argument, but if you look at what it means to force people to do something they don't want to, you begin to realize that this could never be a good argument.

All this theory does is send America's bad boys to the Army for some round-hat-wearing drill sergeant to instill in them conformity for 15 weeks or however long their training is, and then send them off to another part of the world where he or she is destined to slip back into their old routine of not-so-appropriate behavior.

The Soldiers of today's Army are different from the Army of say 20 years ago. Today's Soldiers are highly educated and highly motivated individuals who have not chosen to serve Uncle Sam as a way out of jail or to escape problems, but instead today's Soldiers serve for a more personal reason. They serve because they want to.

This is why the Army is what it is today. Even though recruitment is getting more and more difficult, the Army still manages to find skilled citizens who desire to make themselves Soldiers. These people want to join the ranks of the finest Army. They aren't required to sign the line. They do it because it is what they want to and just like anything else a person wants to do, they will do it to the best of their ability because they are doing what they like.

If the draft is reinstated, will everyone including those forced to sign the line, maintain the high standards and high morale of today's Army? Will the Army continue to be a cohesive combat-ready force?

There is no way to answer these questions without reinstatement actually taking place, but I think the precedence the draft has left from the Vietnam era answers the question for us.

Day celebrates freedom

Whereas May 1 is Law Day USA in the United States of America, and

Whereas, the United States of America has been the citadel of individual liberty and a beacon of hope and opportunity for more than 200 years to many millions who have sought our shores, and;

Whereas, the foundation of individual freedom and liberty is the body of law that governs us;

Whereas, the Constitution of the United States of America and the Bill of Rights are the heart of that body of law, which guarantees us many freedoms — including, among others, freedom of religious belief, freedom to have and hold property inviolate, freedom of assembly, freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of petition and due process of the law, and;

Whereas, this year marks the 41st annual nationwide observance of Law Day, and the Congress of the United States and the president by official proclamation have set aside May 1 as a special day for recognition of the place of law in American life, and;

Now, therefore, I, as Commanding General of Fort Benning, do hereby designate May 1, as Law Day USA and call upon all Soldiers, civilian employees, military retirees and family members to commemorate the role of law in our lives.

Veteran thanks NCO for generosity

Last week, my folks were at Fort Benning visiting us. My dad, a 1946 U.S. Military Academy graduate who completed two tours at Fort Benning, was at the mini-mall area with my wife when he spotted an NCO with an instructor's badge. He pointed at the badge and asked the NCO where he could buy one. The NCO replied, "You can't. You have to be trained and on orders as an instructor here. My dad then said, "Oh, OK ... I used to have one, 50 years ago ... but I lost it." At which time, without hesitation, the NCO took off his badge and gave it to my father. My dad adamantly refused, but the NCO insisted saying, "It's OK — you earned it."

Goes without saying, my old man got misty-eyed, thanked him — and failed to get the sergeant's name. All I got was the description: "he's a big guy." I wish I could properly thank him. My dad is very proud and grateful to have his badge again.

Senior NCO reflects on standards, traditions

Command Sgt. Maj. Ricardo Layne
U.S. Army School of the Americas

As I draw close to 30 years of service to this great Army and nation, I leave feeling good because I was given the opportunity to make a difference. I also know I'm leaving things better than they were when I arrived as a young recruit 29 years ago at Fort Jackson, S.C.

commentary

Looking back over my years in the military, it is clear that the evolution of the non-commissioned officer's (NCO) role has been gradual and at times uneven. Most pronounced, in the last 20 years, changes have come in response to a changing society, technological innovations and new military tactics.

The passage to a modern, professional identity for the NCO Corps was not always smooth, as the Army leadership and doctrine kept pace with these developments. But the Army has never lacked for reformers and planners to point the way — even if progress in some areas was long delayed.

Today, NCOs are considered among the ranks of "professionals." They can advance in rank through the career educational system and enjoy the benefits of centralized career management. They now sit on promotion boards chaired by general officers, and stand (symbolically) alongside every commanding officer, from platoon leaders to the Chief of Staff of the Army. The way has been long — but a better Army has been the result.

It takes character to be a leader. As a leader I clearly understood that "leaders were Soldiers first." Understanding your subordinates, sharing their concerns, feeling their pain and understanding their pride are all very important elements of being a leader.

I would like to offer the following thoughts to NCOs, to help them cope with failures in their Soldiers and themselves. First, accept it. Everyone fails on a regular basis. This doesn't mean excuse or ignore failure. This means expect, understand and use failure as a developmental tool. Every senior NCO serving today has made his or her share of mistakes. We didn't reach our positions because we were "super sergeants." We got here with a lot of help. Our leaders allowed us to make our mistakes and learn from them.

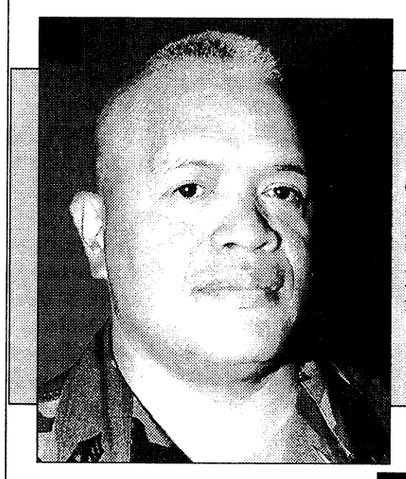
To the officers, NCOs, Soldiers and civilians of the U.S. Army School of the Americas — keep in mind that this is the best Army in the world. We have a lot to be proud of.

Initially, I said I was "given the opportunity to make a difference." That difference was the opportunity to serve as the Command Sergeant Major of USARSA and to help shape the NCO Corps of Latin America. What a tremendous gift.

It was a great pleasure for me to be involved and assist in the development of the Army's first Non-Commissioned Officer's Academy for Latin America. I'm confident I leave this academy with the proper Soldiers, tools, resources, attitude, motivation, knowledge and the proper leadership to make it succeed.

This academy has already motivated many Latin American countries to change their NCO structure and follow our NCO Education System. I anticipate with the upcoming Latin American and U.S. Senior NCO Conference July 18-23, where the Sergeant Major of the Army and the Command Sergeants Major of the Training and Doctrine Command, Combined Arms, Southern Command and the U.S. Army Infantry Center, will be present, we will be able to further exchange ideas regarding the roles, missions and standards of an NCO Corps. We also intend to continue discussing the structure and development of the Professional Military Education System and its importance in producing a professional NCO Corps.

Two important character traits allowed me success in my military career — pride and commitment. Pride filled with self-esteem, arising from the accomplishments and association with the Army and my profession of arms, and the commitment to instill that same pride in the many Soldiers I trained and took care of throughout my career.



Where else can you find a person who spends 30 years of his life in a profession sworn to support, defend and if needed, sacrifice his life for the foundation of our freedom — the Constitution?

I am extremely proud to have served in this great Army. I have accomplished something no one could ever take away from me. No matter what happens to me the rest of my life, I will always look back, take pride and comfort in remembering that I am an Infantry Soldier.

Editor's Note: Layne's retirement ceremony will be held at 9 a.m. May 27 in front of Ridgway Hall.

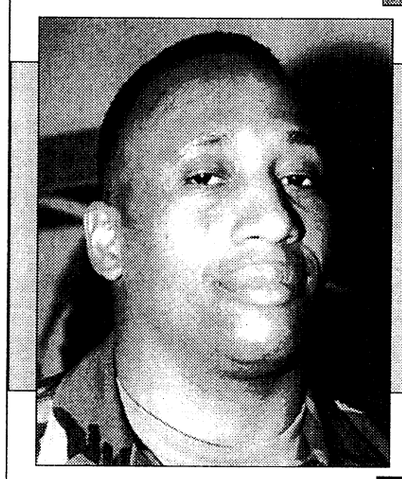
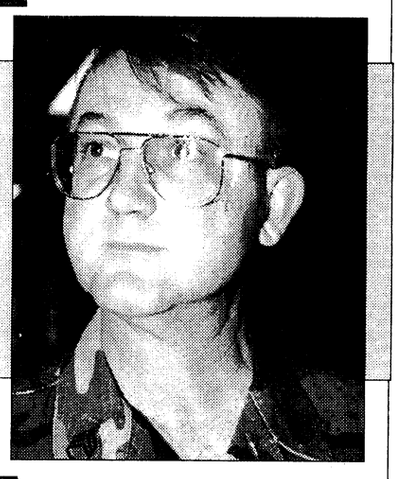
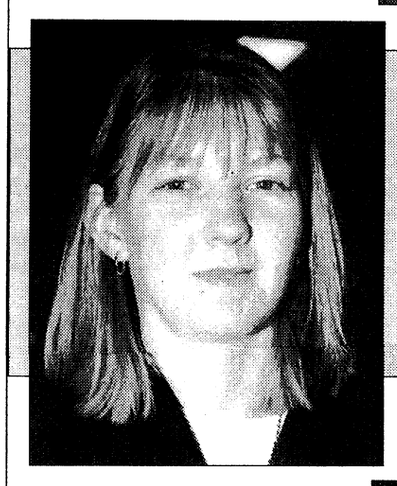
VARIOUS VOICES



Should the U.S. government bring back the draft?



1st Sgt. John Kamai, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Yes. With everything going on right now I think they should bring it back because it is good for America's youth to get a taste of the military."



Malinda Kearns, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab — "Yes, because it would keep young kids off the street and give them something to do besides sit on their butts. It would teach them a little responsibility."

Sgt. 1st Class Morris Jones, Advanced Noncommissioned Officer's Course — "Yes, because people have an obligation to their country and the fact is right now our country is short Soldiers. We need to get our force back up to standard so we can easily defend ourselves."

Staff Sgt. Dan Wilkinson, Co. A, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "Yes. Every high school or college graduate should be required to serve for two years. It would help bring back patriotism to our country and also allow them to accomplish something at a young age."

Jennifer Christian, Directorate of Logistics — "No, because I think it should be a voluntary thing. You are more devoted to the cause if you go in on your own."

Lt. Col. Sara Faye Anderson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Yes, because with the number of increased missions and the downsizing I think it's the responsibility of American youth to participate in the military again."

Overhydration

Drinking too much water may be dangerous

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Die from drinking too much water? Two years ago an Infantry Training Brigade Soldier died from overhydration. Although proper fluid replacement is one of the most essential elements in heat injury prevention, it is possible to drink too much water.

"Heat injury is a bigger threat than overhydration," said Maj. William A. Corr, Martin Army Community Hospital's chief of Preventive Medicine Services. "All Soldiers are encouraged to maintain an adequate fluid intake and follow work and rest cycles to prevent heat injuries. However, drinking too much water has a number of negative effects and can lead to overhydration."

According to Corr, the consumption of excess water dilutes the salts in the body's blood stream, particularly sodium. The low sodium level causes the cells to absorb water in order to maintain an even concentration of sodium inside the cells as compared to outside the cells.

"This water absorption causes cells to swell, and in the skull, it results in increased pressure on the brain resulting in headaches, convulsions and sometimes death," Corr said. "Identifying overhydration is difficult because the symptoms are very similar to heat exhaustion."

Common symptoms of overhydration include confusion, nausea, dizziness, headache, slurred speech and fatigue. Characteristics that distinguish overhydration from heat exhaustion are repeated vomiting, seizures, high output of clear urine and a history of drinking more than two quarts of water per hour.

Corr said heat exhaustion cases typically recover within 60 minutes. "If a casualty shows no response to treatment within 30 minutes of cooling and hydration, or is improving but has not returned to baseline after one hour of hydration, the casualty needs to be evacuated to the nearest medical facility."

In order to prevent overhydration in Soldiers, the Army revised the fluid replacement guidelines in 1998 as the result of a Training and Doctrine Command Soldier's death and other instances of Soldier hospitalization during 1997.

Characteristics that place a person at higher risk for overhydration include race, the type of training and drinking more than two quarts of water per hour, however, following fluid replacement guidelines is the best prevention for overhydration.

"A quart of water per hour is sufficient, even in heat category 5. Never drink more than one and a half quarts per hour and do not exceed 12 quarts daily," Corr added.

Anyone with questions concerning fluid replacement guidelines, heat injury prevention or training call, Preventive Medicine at 545-1444 or 545-1445.

Post EO office wins DA award

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

In March, the Department of the Army (DA) introduced a new program designed to identify significant contributions made by Equal Opportunity Offices (EOO) Armywide.

The Fort Benning office was designated as the outstanding EOO of the quarter and received the first DA Human Resources Directorate Commemorative Coin for professional achievement and superior performance of duty.

Director of Human Resources Brig. Gen. Clayton E. Melton, stated in a congratulations letter that the Fort Benning EOO has a proud record of past accomplishments and will meet all future challenges.

"My pride in your achievements is only exceeded by my pride in you as an Army organization," Melton stated.

More than 50 offices throughout the Army submitted documentation addressing four specified areas; training, community service, staff assisted visits and the conduction of ethnic observances. The submitted paperwork included accomplishments in each of the four areas for the past quarter.

"The equal opportunity mission is an important and vital part of the overall success of the entire Army organization and this instillation," said Sgt. 1st Class Alonzo Baldwin. "What we do is top priority as far as supporting Soldiers, their families and the communities they live and work in."

According to Master Sgt. Jose Morales, NCOIC of the EOO, many accomplishments were achieved in the last quarter but the staff continues this trend throughout the year. "The equal opportunity advisers (EOA) are dedicated to the EO mission," he said.

In the area of training, the EOO conducts six leadership courses per year, conducts the commander and first sergeant orientation course and conducts five Consideration of Others facilitation courses which generates more than 100 facilitators for various units on Fort Benning.

Michele E. Hanson

Members of Fort Benning's Equal Opportunity Office include Sgt. 1st Class Tim Mikesell, Sgt. 1st Class Ernest Jett, Sgt. 1st Class Lynne A. James, Master Sgt. Jose Morales and Sgt 1st Class Donald Richards.

Morales said the EOAs are active in the area of community service and visit area schools to provide positive role models for children who may come from disadvantaged families. They also provide facilitation and training to the Mayor's Commission on Diversity in Columbus.

Baldwin said he never thought much of EO before he became an EOA, but has since learned educating Soldiers on the importance of EO is what will allow them to complete their missions without distraction, problems and differences blocking the way.

"If one piece of the puzzle doesn't fit or is not right, then the puzzle will never get finished — EO is the piece of the puzzle that people want to ignore but ultimately is the most important one."

Weather:

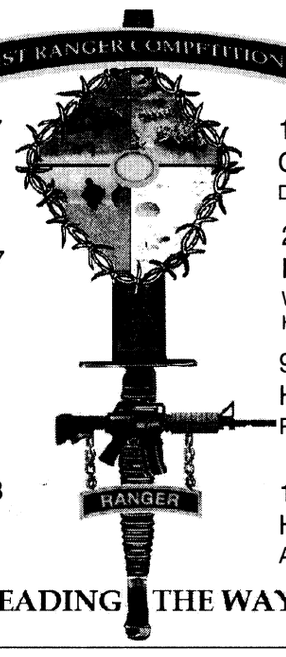
cooperation that begins with the airmen at Fort Benning's weather station located at Lawson Army Airfield.

"When weather observers at the weather station have either sighted or their radar has indicated a tornado, the post staff duty officer (SDO) is notified via the post's AWDS (Automated Weather Data System)," he said. "The SDO then sounds the siren and the Code Black is issued."

During a Code Black condition, residents should take cover on the first floor of a building in an interior room, according to post Safety Manager Regis Beighley.

"If there is no building around, Soldiers and family members should seek shelter in the lowest possible position in a ditch or in a culvert," he said. "No matter where you are during a storm, keep low and beware of flying debris."



Tornado activity is not the only weather condition Fort Benning residents should be aware of. Southern Georgia is also prone to severe thunderstorms and high winds.

"We issue Code Reds and Code Ambers in the same fashion as the Code Black, but there is no siren for either of these weather alerts," Harvey said.

A Code Red is a severe weather warning that is issued when conditions are favorable for the formation of severe thunderstorms or the effects of severe thunderstorms.

A Code Amber is issued when the potential for tornado or severe weather is present.

Junior ROTC cadets from the Hardaway Black Team attempt to cross an obstacle during the search and rescue event of the Leaders Challenge Competition Saturday.

A Red Team member from Carver High School struggles to pull himself across the rope bridge while rushing to complete the obstacle course during the competition.

JROTC

Cadets invade Sand Hill for annual competition

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Sand Hill was invaded by a different kind of warrior Saturday as Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps (JROTC) cadets from the Muscogee County School District gathered at "Infantry country" to tackle the fifth annual Leaders Challenge Competition. Nearly 20 teams from seven high schools turned out to run, jump, crawl and climb their way to number one.

The Leaders Challenge is a physically and mentally demanding competition that promotes many values such as leadership, teamwork, professionalism, fitness and competency, said retired Sgt. Maj. Talmage Glover, sergeant major of JROTC headquarters and operations and training NCO.

Each team is comprised of five members, with at least one female. The teams perform in five different events which are all timed, he said.

"The main thing this competition teaches them is how to work as a team," Talmage said. "It instills in them a need to learn to work together to survive."

The teenagers must be fit and able to sustain a long day of strenuous activities to do well in the competition, he added.

Being physically fit paid off for the high schoolers when they took to Weatherby Field for the first event of the day — a physical training test.

After jump starting their bodies with a one-mile run, push-ups and sit-ups, the cadets headed to the obstacle and confidence courses for the next three activities.

Rotating between these three events, the obstacle course, search and rescue and one rope bridge, the team members found out first hand the importance of teamwork and the effects gruelling physical demands can have on the body.

"It was pretty rough, but you just have to get through it with motivation and teamwork," said 10th-grader Benitez Paige after finishing search and rescue, an event that requires a group to transport a 50-pound barrel and additional equipment to a designated area while negotiating a number of different obstacles.

This is Paige's second year participating in the competition and he said he does so because it is fun and challenging.

"This is something different to do after school instead of getting into trouble," Paige said. "I like the teamwork and leadership. This is something that mentally and physically prepares me for the task of joining the Navy."

The part of the competition that requires a lot of practice and is often the most difficult is the one-rope bridge, said retired Lt. Col. Jerry Wall, senior Army instructor at Kendrick High School. During this event, teams had to secure a single rope bridge across a ravine and get the members of their team from one side to the other swiftly and safely.

"Everything must be executed properly otherwise the event is terminated and a team is disqualified," Wall said. "It is all in timing and getting it just right."

He remarked most of the cadets who compete in Leaders Challenge are in great shape, highly motivated and are more apt to join a military service down the road.

"Some of these teams have been training since the beginning of the year," Wall said. "Many of the kids who compete have a greater motivation and intent on joining a military service. These are the kids who are on the drill team, rifle team and leader challenge teams. Anything you come up with they will raise their hand to be apart of."

Lakisha Jones, a ninth-grader at Carver High School and member of one of the all-girls team said her team had been training for the competition since January, sometimes up to nine hours a week.

She said her team wanted to come out and show everyone they can compete just as hard as any other team.

"We think an all-girls team is just as good as a mostly boy team, so we decided to come out and show everybody just what we can do," Jones said.

She added her personal reason for deciding to compete is the fact she loves a good competition and the Leaders Challenge is definitely that.

Once the teams finished rotating through the three events they had only one last thing to face before finding out which team would come out on top — the two-mile road march and run.

Wall said winning first place in this competition is a huge achievement for the students because it undoubtedly means they were better than everyone else.

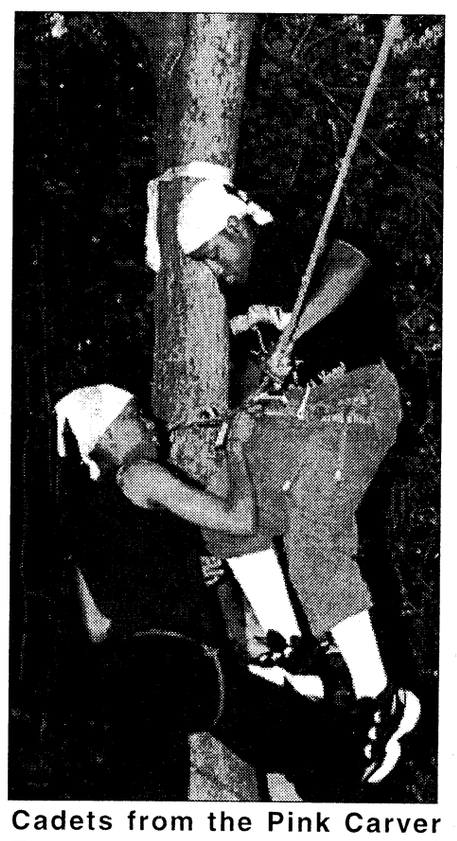
"It's one of the bigger trophies you can get because there is hardly any subjective scoring to it," Wall said. "Everything is a timed event. In the Drill Team, for example, there is subjective opinion to who is better, but in this competition there is no doubt if you are better than everyone else."

First place in the competition went to the Carver High School Blue Team.

Team members were Rafeal Bentancourt, Alfanzo Carter, Patrick Adams, Darryl Ivey and Tarryn Holyfield.

Second place went to the Carver High Gold Team and third place went to the Carver White Team.

Out of the three female teams the Columbus Orange Team came out on top.



Retired Lt. Col. Bob Rasch explains the rules for the one rope bridge event to the Pink Carver team.

A member from the Hardaway Black Team crawls through a tunnel during the obstacle course event of the competition. Teams were required to complete 10 obstacles.

After rushing through the finish line of the search and rescue event of the Leaders' Challenge competition, JROTC cadets from the Yellow Hardaway Team take a moment to catch their breath.

DS makes lasting impression

Lauren E. Orrok
30th Adjutant Genera (Reception) Bn.

It's dark outside and before him stretches a sea of faces. All hues, shapes and sizes are present. Some have the wide-open eyes of fear of failure. Some have the half-open eyes of the bone tired. Some have the slit-open eyes of the defiant. All have the look of wonder about the unknown. These are the faces of the Initial Entry Trainee.

This is the nightly scene set before Sgt. 1st Class Hazel D. Lewis. His is the last face they see as civilians and the first face they see to begin their transition to Soldiers. Lewis must epitomize the role of the drill sergeant, setting the standard for those drill sergeants who follow. His 11 years on active duty assigned to Infantry units in Germany, Hawaii, Fort Drum, N.Y. and Fort Benning, added to the two years "on the trail" as a drill sergeant instructor uniquely qualify him for this position.

Some of these men are here for basic training only and some are here for One Station Unit Training for the Infantry series MOS.

Lewis

After welcoming them to the first day of the rest of their lives, all are immediately changed by Lewis when he instills proper military appearance by directing that they shave all facial hair. He then explains those items that new Soldiers are strictly forbidden to possess. Each new Soldier is then instructed to go to the Amnesty Room to deposit those items they have in their possession. An alibi trip follows for those who were undecided about whether to follow those instructions. Each new Soldier is then issued their winter and summer physical fitness uniforms, fed and assigned a bunk where they will sleep an exhausted sleep for a couple of hours before their reception station drill sergeants greet them for the first time.

Two of these new Soldiers, Pvt. Joshua Walker from Los Angeles, Calif., and Pvt. Eric J. Richmond of Pennsaudken, NJ, said Lewis immediately created a team environment.

"Drill Sergeant Lewis put forth a professional attitude but did no allow any slack," Walker said.

Lewis defines his style of leadership as leading by example.

"It gives me satisfaction and a warm feeling inside when I see the Soldiers that I initialized march across the graduation field," he said.

Lewis best stated his enormous responsibilities himself when he said, "I'm the first drill sergeant and noncommissioned officer that the receptees see which makes it a golden opportunity to set a good example and to leave a lasting impression."

Lewis, his wife Charlina and his three sons, Donell, Antwan and Tevin are scheduled to transfer to Fort Campbell, Ky., in August 1999.

Unit thanks volunteers

36th Engineer Group (Construction)

The 36th Engineer Group (Construction) recently recognized 25 volunteers at a dinner April 23 in the Warrior Inn Dining Facility.

Col. A. Allen Rasper, the 36th Eng. Group commander, wanted to personally thank the Soldiers and spouses for their efforts to improve the quality of life of Soldiers and their families in the Fort Benning community.

The dining facility was decorated with flowers and candles while background music provided by Staff Sgt. Michael Chipman created the atmosphere of an elegant restaurant.

After expressing his gratitude to the volunteers, Rasper presented each awardee with a certificate of appreciation and a marble commander's excellence plaque.

ACAP center offers job search training

Stacey Vigil
Army Career and Alumni Program

There is only one chance to make a good first impression.

"First impressions are not just made in formal interview situations. They are made in more casual settings such as job fairs and Employer Days as well," said Diane Ermi, ACAP counselor.

Separating Soldiers should dress for success at all times. It is important to remember that a casual meeting with an acquaintance can result in a referral for a opening.

Potential employers will notice dress and get an impression immediately about a potential employee's commitment to the job search.

Recruiters, potential employers and others are not impressed by a job seeker who is not committed enough to dress in a neat manner which is appropriate for the situation.

ACAP Center counselors offer job search training which includes how to make a positive first impression through proper dress and articulation of skills.

Transitioning Soldiers will have the opportunity to find out more information on the rules of job search during the required ACAP briefing and in individual sessions with their ACAP counselor.

For more information about this and other job search topics, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or visit our office at Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Clinton nominates new chief

Army News Service

The White House announced today that President Clinton has nominated Gen. Eric K. Shinseki to serve as the Army's 34th chief of staff.

Assuming confirmation by the Senate Armed Services Committee, Shinseki is slated to become chief of staff on June 21. He is currently serving as the Army's vice chief of staff.

"I am both honored and humbled for the privilege of continuing to serve the nation and its Army as chief of staff," Shinseki said. "I am also grateful for the vote of confidence on the part of the president, the secretary of Defense and the secretary of the Army," said Shinseki. "The Army faces many challenges, but it remains the premier land combat force in the world today. I am confident that the Soldiers and civilians of today's Army will meet those challenges head-on, and we will continue being prepared to fight and win the nation's wars as well as any other requirements short of war."

In his new position, Shinseki will perform the diverse duties of chief of staff as set forth in Title 10 of the U.S. Constitution, including ensuring the Army provides trained and ready forces to the nine U.S. combatant commands, presiding over the Army Staff and serving as a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"General Shinseki is a great choice for chief. I was proud to recommend him to President Clinton," said Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera. "He is an outstanding leader and role model for the great young men and women who selflessly serve our nation as Soldiers every day, all over the world. I look forward to working with him as the Army marches into the next century."

Shinseki

Shinseki was born in Lihue on the island of Kauai, Hawaii, on Nov. 28, 1942. He graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., in 1965 with a Bachelor of Science Degree in Engineering. He also holds a Master of Arts Degree in English Literature from Duke University. Shinseki's military education includes the Armor Officer Advanced Course, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and the National War College.

Since his commissioning more than 33 years ago, Shinseki has served in command and staff assignments of increasing responsibility in both the Continental U.S. and overseas, including combat tours with the 9th and 25th Infantry Divisions in the Republic of Vietnam. He has served in Hawaii at Schofield Barracks with Headquarters, U.S. Army Hawaii, and at Fort Shafter with Headquarters, U.S. Army-Pacific. Shinseki also taught English at the United States Military Academy.

Shinseki will replace Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, who has served as Army Chief of Staff since June 20, 1995, and is retiring from the Army after 37 years on active duty. The normal tour length for a service chief is four years.

Army astronaut continues to soar

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

The Army's only woman astronaut said she joined the Army back in 1981 "to fly."

For more than 17 years now, Lt. Col. Nancy J. Currie has done just that. She has flown Army helicopters, fixed-wing aircraft, and participated in NASA space shuttle missions in 1993, 1995 and late last year.

Army astronauts are part of the Acquisition Corps, said Currie. There are currently five Army astronauts. Currie became an astronaut in 1990, noting she had "no problem at all" being the sole Army woman astronaut, the only woman on her last space flight in December, or the only female rotary-wing flight instructor in her unit at an aviation training post in Alabama. She has piloted Huey, Kiowa, Cobra and Blackhawk helicopters and has also flown U-21 fixed wing aircraft.

Currie is currently stationed at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, where she is chief of the robotics branch within the Astronaut Office. She said she worked at the Space Center for three years as a flight simulation engineer on NASA's Shuttle Training Aircraft before she was selected for the astronaut program.

Although she has hurtled through space three times, the U.S. Army Astronaut still has her "boots on the ground."

"I'm still a Soldier," said Currie. "I feel very fortunate to be in the position I am, and I have the Army to thank for it."

Post schedules sale — This year's post-wide yard sale will be held from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday. No permits will be required.

Following the sale, the Officers' Wives' Club Thrift Shop will be open to receive donations for anything that doesn't go at the sale.

Commissary expands hours — Effective Monday the Fort Benning commissary will be open seven days a week for a total of 76 hours of operation.

The schedule is as follows:
Monday — noon to 9 p.m.
Tuesday — 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Wednesday — 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Thursday — 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Friday — 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Saturday — 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.
Sunday — 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The commissary will continue to be open every Tuesday after a Monday holiday.

Family Support Group hosts skate party — The 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Family Support Group will host a "Skate Party" from 6:30 to 9 p.m. Tuesday at the Lambert Skate Center on Milgen Road.

Parents are welcome to drop their children off or skate along. The cost of the skate party is $4 per child. Children may also need spending money for refreshments.

Parents must have their children picked up by 9 p.m. All military families are invited.

For more information, call 687-1915 or 689-1314.

FAP recognizes Military Spouse Day — The Family Advocacy Program (FAP) wants to remind everyone that Military Spouse Day is celebrated May 14.

To show appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices that are made by military spouses in the community, FAP will give out a tote bag to each military spouse and have a display set up from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. May 14 at Building 2624. The display will feature educational materials on parenting, building better relationships, blended families and other topics.

For more information on Military Spouse Day, call Rebecca S. Welch at 545-3344.

Colonial Day

Students recreate history, learn new skills

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Students from Wilson Elementary School's fourth grade were taken back in time on a field trip to the days of the Red Coats and Minutemen April 22.

Although the Revolutionary period was centuries ago, teachers, volunteers and students pulled together to recreate a colonial village as part of the students' Colonial Day lesson.

According to fourth-grade teacher Kirven Boyce, what started out as a discussion during a meeting quickly became Colonial Day. Students spent the day not only learning old-fashioned techniques that were once a way of life, but were also given the chance to experience the revolutionary way of life first hand.

Students gathered around learning stations in which volunteers and teachers gave lessons on a variety of different skills students may have needed in order to live during these historic times. Students learned how to create pottery on a wheel, quilt, churn butter and live the life of a revolutionary Soldier. Students were also given the opportunity to experience lessons in a one-room school house and see a real blacksmith at work.

No matter what station students were at, the lessons were made enjoyable and entertaining to all.

Fourth-grade student Rhiannon Pegan said she enjoyed being given the chance to make whistles and pots at the pottery learning station.

Other students, such as fourth-grader Ashley Capp, were just looking forward to reaping the sweet rewards of education.

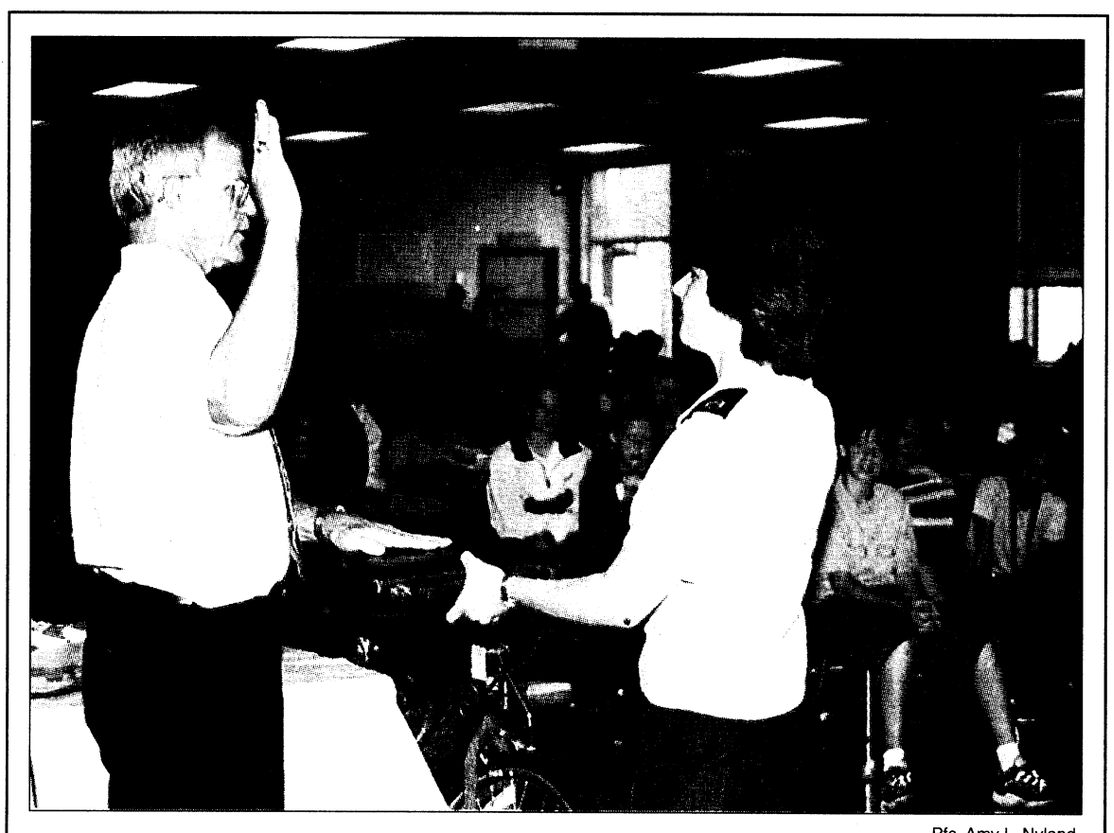
"I am looking forward to making ice-cream and eating it," Capp said.

No matter which activity the students preferred, all seemed to enjoy the lesson.

"Every student was so involved in each one of the activities. There was such a positive response and it was so much fun," Boyce said.

Students showed up for school that day donning aprons, bonnets and knickers ready to live the life of a colonial resident. Some parents even joined in on the learning process.

"I think this lesson is perfect for children," said Remonia Nelms, mother of fourth-grader Jazmine Nelms. "Rather than reading about the events, the students are getting the total learning experience."



"Lessons are so much more memorable and also give better memories when they are hands on," Boyce said.

These memories were also made possible thanks to all the volunteers who helped make Colonial Day a success and to the effort of the fourth grade, Boyce said. It was a team effort and everyone worked well together.

Although this was the first-ever Colonial Day at Wilson, Boyce said they are already making plans for next year's Colonial Day.

Faith Middle School Principal Tom Dignan is sworn in as a witness by Staff Sgt. Brenda Hain, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate (SJA), during a mock trial held at Faith April 23.

The trial was presented by SJA in honor of Law Day, which is Saturday. The purpose of the mock trial was to teach the middle-schoolers about the legal process and show them how a real-life court trial works. Different members from SJA acted as the prosecuting attorney, defense attorney, defendant, bailiff, witness and judge.

Board considers creative camp pilot program

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning School Board convened on Monday for its regular monthly meeting, but at this meeting everyone who was present received a special treat from a group of students from Faith Middle School.

Prior to the performance, Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools, acknowledged the students and teachers that make up the Odyssey of the Mind Team (OM), and the fact that they recently won first place in the state competition. Next, the team will travel to Knoxville, Tenn., for the national competition.

The OM team, consisting of students Kari Eldridge, Laura Rose, Jaxon Lee, Michael Driggers, Kyle Malone, Ashley Kotwal, Chris Herold and coaches Anne Trawick and Cindy Givens, then treated attendees to their award-winning skit. After the skit, McMullen gave the students, Trawick and Givens certificates of achievement for their victory.

Next, Dr. Judy Archer, principal of White Elementary School, gave school board members a presentation which asked them to consider a pilot program for students this summer at White. It is a Fine Arts program and creativity camp called "Imagine That!" for White Elementary students. Sponsored by the Parent-Teacher Organization the camp would encompass eight days in July and there would also be a tuition. The school board members will vote on this telephonically.

Improper footwear promotes injury

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Many of the foot complaints people bring to the doctor's office are related to improper footwear. Footwear that is either too small in the area called the toe box or with inadequate arch and cushion support results in the majority of shoe-related problems.

Some of the more common foot problems that can be made worse by improper footwear are as follows:

•Plantar fasciitis is often described as pain at the bottom of the foot, usually in the heel but sometimes extending to the arch of the foot. The pain is usually sharp or burning and is worse when first putting weight onto the feet at the beginning of the day. The causes include recent increase in weight bearing activity such as starting a walking program, prolonged time standing or a recent weight gain. Providing a good arch and cushion support in some of these situations may prevent further strain and allow healing to the muscles, tendons and ligaments located along the arch of the foot.

•Bunions are a deformity of the bones which make up the joint leading to the big toe. The friction and pressure of a tight toebox will lead to pain at this joint. Also, wearing a shoe with a high heel will force the weight of the body forward onto the toes, leading to more pressure and pain. High heel shoes with narrow toes are a leading cause of bunion pain.

•Corns and calluses are thickened areas of skin located where the shoe rubs against bony areas of the foot. These areas may become painful or may dry and crack. The first step in treatment is to stop wearing the tight shoes which makes the pain worse.

•Blisters are also caused by friction and pressure from the skin rubbing at bony areas against the shoe. Research has been done by many branches of the armed forces and the findings include a change in the approach to material selection for socks. Socks made from acrylic are least associated with blister formation followed by nylon, then wool and cotton. Cotton is the fabric most associated with blister formation. Because Soldiers and many athletes need the addition of moisture protection provided by cotton or wool, blends combining acrylic or nylon with wool or cotton may provide the best solution for sock selection.

•Plantar warts are painful areas at the bottom of the foot caused by a virus. The virus invades the skin through tiny cracks in the skin. Walking barefoot on contaminated areas such as floors, showers and sidewalks exposes the foot to the virus. Protective foot devices such as shower shoes in public areas helps prevent the spread of this virus.

•Athletes foot is a fungal infection which grows best in wet, warm areas. The best prevention and treatment includes keeping the feet dry and well ventilated. If shoes and socks must be worn, both should be dry. Cotton and wool are sock fabrics which may allow the foot to remain dry.

MACH Briefs

•The Fort Benning Inspector Generals Office (IG) is providing another avenue for beneficiaries who have complaints about TRICARE. The IG staff has received training to facilitate issue resolution should a Soldier have complaints about TRICARE. The IG's office and Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) are working jointly to provide information and resolve issues for any servicemember.

Questions or complaints can be addressed to the MACH Patient Affairs Liaison at 544-1817 (7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.) or the IG office at 545-5611 or 545-7211.

•MACH offers an After Hours Clinic to accommodate patients with acute minor illnesses. The clinic hours are from 5:30 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Patients can call 544-3082 or 544-3081 for same day appointments. Currently 15 appointments are available on a daily basis. Well baby and well woman appointments are not available at the After Hours Clinic.

Life threatening emergencies should utilize the Emergency Room.

•MACH also offers an automated telephone line to get information about TRICARE, to leave a message for your Primary Care Manager, cancel scheduled appointments and hear hours of operation for clinics.

The number is 544-CARE.

•MACH will offer limited allergy services beginning Thursday. An intermin immunotherapy clinic will open on the ninth floor of the hospital. The clinic will operate from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and 1:30 to 4 p.m.

All allergy immunizations will be provided in the main Family Practice Clinic effective Monday.

The Department of Family Practice and Community Medicine will be assuming the local allergy medical directorship and oversight on Saturday. At that time the immunotherapy clinic will relocate to Winder Health Clinic.

For more information, call 544-1267.

Forests home to variety of wildlife

Beau Dudley
Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning forestland is home to a wide variety of birds and mammals. These animals depend on trees to provide food, safe nesting sites in the form of cavities and platforms, roosting and denning sites, hunting perches, display stations and foraging sites.

From the time they sprout until the time they die and decompose, trees provide food for wildlife. Newly emerging trees and saplings provide a source of green foliage and buds during the spring and summer months. Game animals like deer, squirrels, wood ducks and turkeys depend on acorns or nuts, produced by trees such as water oaks, white oaks and hickory to provide them with the majority of their diet through the winter months.

Seeds from longleaf pines and beech trees provide food for a variety of small mammals, songbirds and bobwhite quail. Insects and other invertebrates inhabiting the bark and upper canopy of the trees constitute the bulk of the diet of many species of birds, such as the brown-headed nuthatch and brown creeper. Along wetland areas, beavers girdle trees, eventually gnawing them until they fall. Then they consume the cambium, a layer between the bark and the inner wood and use the rest of the tree for lodge and dam construction. The pond that results from the dam construction provides habitat for waterfowl, wading birds, otters and other wildlife.

Forest management practices, Army training and wildlife management activities have created a patchwork of habitat and generated lots of forest edge, which enhances habitat for wildlife.

Hardwood bottoms and drains along creeks provide squirrels and wood ducks with ample cavities to den and nest in. The old growth pine timber is home to one of Fort Benning's endangered species, the red-cockaded woodpecker (RCW). RCWs excavate their cavities exclusively in these trees in order to provide themselves with a safe nesting site.

Dead or dying trees are of enormous value to wildlife. A standing dead tree, known as a snag, can remain in place for decades. Not all snags are equally attractive to all species of wildlife. Some birds require a minimum diameter before they will use a snag.

Smaller trees come down sooner, but even they can last for several years. Lightning, windstorms, fire, fungal disease and insect infestation are common causes of tree injuries and mortality. The primary "colonizers" of dead trees and snags are insects and fungi. You might be surprised to find out they are essential to all the other wildlife species that depend on or make use of cavities. The insects and fungi help carry out the long process of decomposition. By softening the wood, they make it easier for birds and mammals to gain access. Insects like millipedes, mites, earwigs, beetles, spiders, ants and even earthworms attract woodpeckers and other forest-dwelling animals that, in their search for food, excavate holes or cavities. These holes or cavities later become nesting sites and dens for other birds and small mammals. In winter, these cavities provide the necessary incubation to protect these birds and animals from the cold.

Like snags, downed trees provide shelter and denning sites for not only birds and mammals, but reptiles and amphibians as well. For small animals, such as squirrels and chipmunks, the logs provide easy routes through the forest. Predators such as foxes and bobcats, often den under fallen trees, taking advantage of the solid overhead cover.

Finally as the log rots away, it releases nutrients back into the soil and becomes a nursery for new trees taking root, starting the cycle over again. Forest renewal is insured and the cycle of life continues.

Board: Discusses

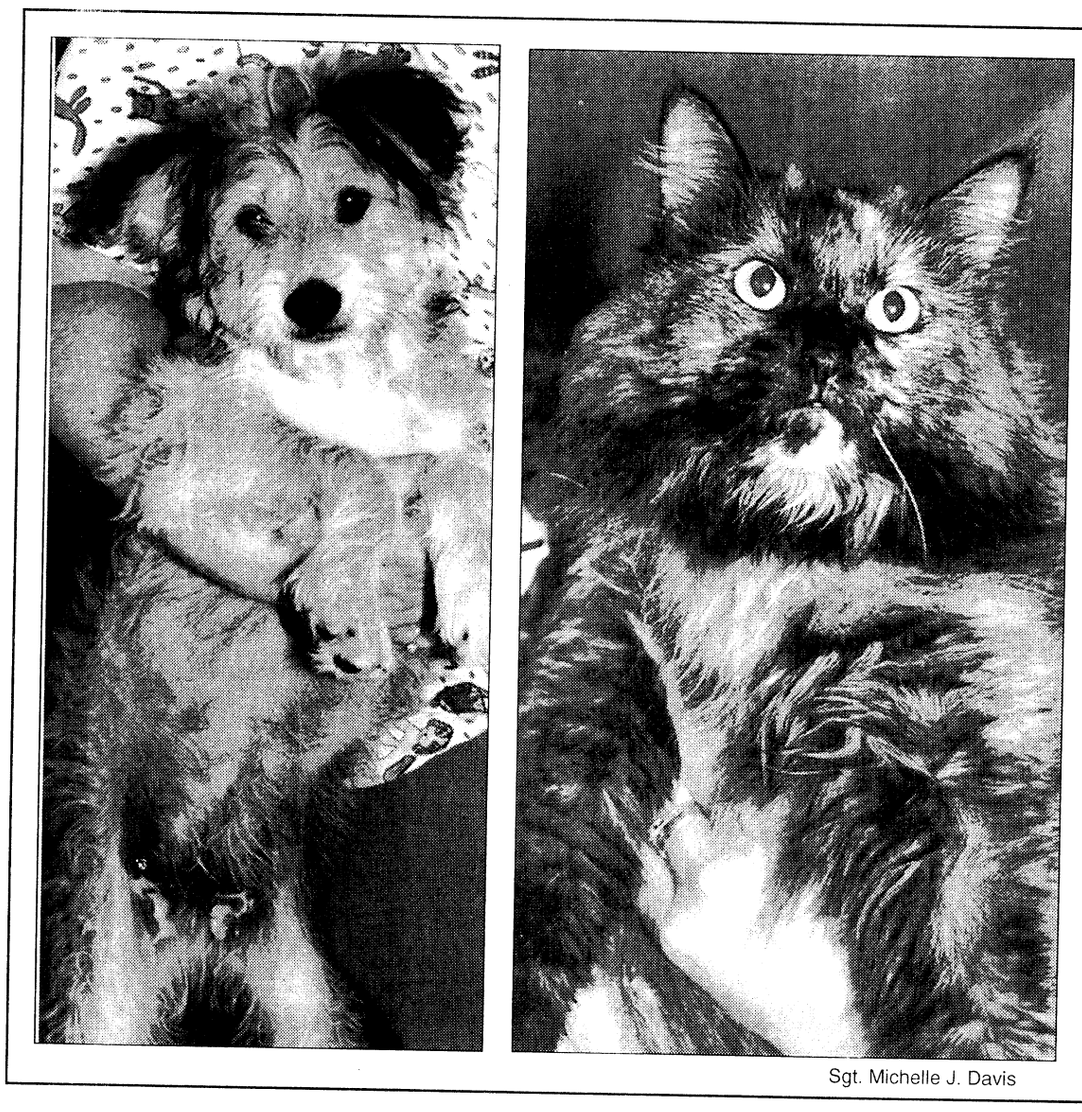
and first-grade teacher Mel Valliant from White Elementary School gave a presentation on their use of the multi-age classroom program, which combines two different grades working symbiotically.



"We teach the children, not the grade level," Proctor said.

Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent, gave board members a copy of the proposed calendar for the 1999-2000 school year. Fort Benning tries to align it's calendar as closely to Muscogee County's calendar for parents who might have children in both school systems, Skinner said. Board members will vote telephonically for the proposed school calendar.

McMullen closed the April meeting with the superintendent's report, which included the information that registration for school year 1999-2000 for returning students will be in May this year rather than August.

"We believe this will be more convenient for parents, and will also help us plan better," McMullen said.

The next school board meeting will be in May.

ask the judge

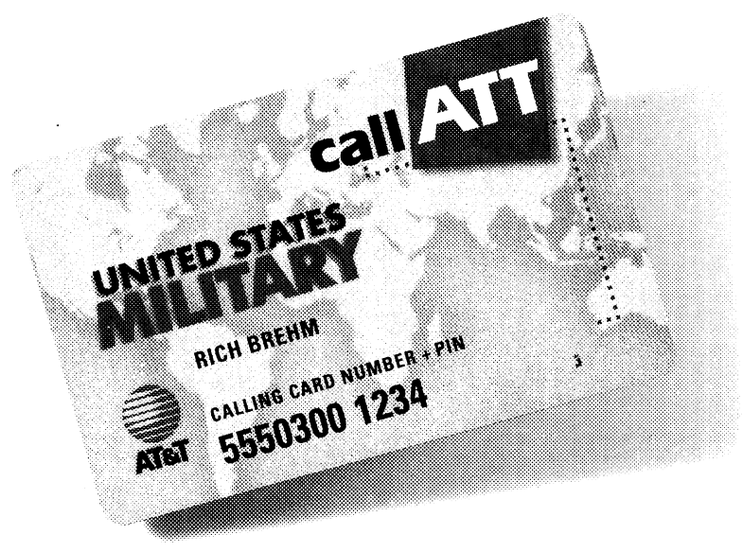
Capt. Paula Harrison
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I am a Soldier stationed here at Fort Benning and last weekend I got a DUI on post. I didn't drink that much, or so I thought. I blew into a Breathalyzer, and it registered .08. I thought the limit in Georgia was .1. Will my state of residence find out? What will be the impact on my Army career? I just need to know some general information.

A. We all hear safety briefings warning us not to drink and drive. However, many of us don't consider ourselves to be "drunk drivers," so we don't pay the briefing much attention. It's important for all Soldiers and family members to know exactly what a "drunk driver" is under Georgia law.

The focus of Georgia law is on whether you're less safe to drive. If you have a blood alcohol level of .1 or more, you are less safe to drive. However, if you are between .08 and .1, then you are still presumed less safe to drive. You may even be convicted of driving under the influence (DUI) if your level is below .08, if the government can prove through additional evidence that you are less safe to drive. If you are under 21, the limit is .02, so although you may not feel drunk, you are less safe to drive as far as Georgia's concerned.

You don't need to be weaving all over the road to catch the attention of an MP. Most DUI's start with a routine traffic stop. An MP can detect signs that you have been drinking, even if you don't think anyone can tell. Your speech may sound just a little slurred, or you and your friends may smell like alcohol. If the MP suspects you have been drinking, he or she will most likely request you to perform a Field Sobriety Test. Test results could be further evidence against you. Ultimately, of course, this all leads to the Breathalyzer test, which records the amount of alcohol in your system.



More and more Soldiers are coming to the Legal Assistance Office for advice on DUI convictions. Our advice for DUI's is not the kind of advice that a Soldier wants to hear. A General Officer Memorandum (GOMOR) Reprimand is automatic in DUI cases, as soon as your name appears on the blotter. You may submit a rebuttal on your behalf, but that usually will not stop the filing of the GOMOR. Other adverse actions may be taken against a Soldier who is convicted of DUI, such as reduction in grade and even separation from the Army.

The Legal Assistance Division is not the only place a Soldier will visit if charged with DUI. All DUIs are heard at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, in the Magistrate's Court, in front of a federal magistrate (since Fort Benning is federal property.) The Army will not provide you with an attorney for DUIs, because it's not a military offense, even though it can harm your career. If you want an attorney, you will have to hire a civilian attorney, which will not be cheap.

There are negative consequences in the civilian world as well. Your home state is notified, and that state might suspend your license, pursuant to that state's laws. The DUI will go on your driving record, even though it occurred on post.

The bottom line is that you may be a "drunk driver" under Georgia law, and not even know it. The negative consequences of DUI, both in and out of the military, are too serious to risk. Be smart and be safe.

If you have questions about legal issues related to drinking and driving, you can make an appointment to speak with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Division. The telephone number is 545-3281.

Butterfly project

Wilson Elementary undergoes metamorphosis

Wilson Elementary School

Just like a butterfly, Wilson Elementary School is undergoing a complete metamorphosis and the school's environmental action venture known as "The Butterfly Project" is just one example of the many changes taking place at the school. The project, currently in its second year, began as an outgrowth of an international Internet project. It is designed to increase the awareness of environmental concerns as well as to focus on the beautification of the school campus and the surrounding housing area.

Wilson School is undergoing a major renovation which is expected to be completed by the year 2000. With the move to the portable classrooms, the Butterfly Project has taken on a new light. Fourteen trailers now rest on what was a softball field just a few short months ago. Students, parents and staff members are working diligently to turn this temporary school environment into a well-landscaped campus where both teaching and learning are evident.

Classrooms from pre-K to fifth grade are participating in the project. Students have planted a variety of perennials and annuals along with trees and shrubs. They have designed flower boxes, tilled soil and planted vegetables. Fifth-graders have even planted cotton and peanuts to correlate with their study of southern states. Each classroom's "yard" is a unique reflection of the class it represents.

The metamorphosis of the school campus along with the renovation of the school building is just another reason why Wilson School is an exciting place to learn.

This month, Wilson Elementary School's staff spotlight is on Cheryl D. Spann, one of the newest members of the Wilson family. Spann joined the school just a few months ago as a library technician, but her style and contributions are already evident. Spann was born in Chicago and now lives on post with her husband.

Helping to start the student assistant program in the media center was one of the first things Spann did upon her arrival in early January. Along with media specialist and Fort Benning Teacher of the Year Dr. Wanda Person, Spann trains students in fourth- and fifth-grades to work in the media center.

Creating displays and decorating the media center are other contributions Spann has made. Each month, the library is transformed with a timely theme that both decorates and teaches.

"These displays aren't just to improve the look of the media center. They are also to educate."

Spann said she loves working at Wilson.

Students participate in reading club

Wilson Elementary School

The Wishbone Reading Club is a special club for third-grade students. This club was created so that students could meet with other children who love to read. The club is named for the "little dog with a big imagination," who is the star of the Wishbone PBS television series.

Students in the club believe it is important to read because you can learn more from a book than from television.

Kazue Takemoto, a club member from Darlene Baker's class, designed a special Wishbone flag for the club.

She said, "A book gives more information than television. TV makes things happen really fast to fit into a 30-minute program. With a book you can get information, and if you miss something while you're reading you can go back and look at the book again."

Sarah Bavies, Gerri Beer's class agrees with Kazue and said, "Reading can take you anywhere in your mind."

Takemoto said that Amelia Bedelia is her favorite book because, "Amelia tries to do things right but she always does the opposite. Funny things happen when she makes mistakes."

National Prayer Day set for Thursday

Donna Lindsey
National Day of Prayer coordinator

On Thursday, more than 20,000 prayer events are expected to take place across our nation, coordinated by 40,000 volunteers. Millions of Americans will participate.

reflections

These observances will occur in churches, schools, courthouses, prisons and a variety of other locations. Of course, one of the most visible gatherings will be held at the U.S. Capitol Building in Washington, D.C., where the National Day of Prayer Task Force will hold a prayer gathering in the Connon House Office Building. The occasion is the 48th annual National Day of Prayer.

The theme of 1999 is "Light the Nation ... with Prayer" and is based on Matthew 5:14-15 (NIV), where we read: "You are the light of the world. A city on a hill cannot be hidden. Neither do people light a lamp and put it under a bowl. Instead, they put it on its stand and it gives light to everyone in the house."

Our prayers can change the course of history, if people of faith join together on the National Day of Prayer. Our prayers will have a powerful impact on our country.

On May 5, 1988, the 100th Congress of the U.S. passed a bill, signed by President Ronald Reagan, to provide for setting aside the first Thursday in May as the date on which the National Day of Prayer is celebrated.

Although the annual event was established by an act of Congress and President Truman in 1952, it did not begin to gain momentum until a specific day was set aside to observe it. Now, 11 years after President Reagan's amendment, participation in the National Day of Prayer continues to grow and become a vital part of our American Heritage.

Please join us for the National Day of Prayer observance at noon on Thursday at the Phenix Amphitheater. For more information, call (334) 298-7010.

Forgiveness key to happiness, life

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

The year was 1945. The place was Ravensbruck, one of Hitler's extermination camps. In that camp was a young Dutch woman by the name of Corrie ten Boom. Her crime? Hiding Jews from Hitler's Storm Troopers in occupied Netherlands.

Corrie would survive the horrors of Ravensbruck because of a clerical error. She was to be executed but her file was "accidentally" stamped paroled. What kept Corrie alive during her horrible ordeal was deep, abiding faith and trust in God. She would spend the rest of her life traveling the world and sharing her story and faith.

One day shortly after the end of World War II, Corrie was speaking to a group of Germans in occupied Germany. At the end of her message, she noticed a man making his way towards her. She recognized him as one of the most brutal guards from Ravensbruck and all the horrors of that place came rushing back into her mind.

The former guard reached Corrie and told her of his conversion to Christianity, about his experiencing the love of God and his marvelous forgiveness. He held out his hand and said, "Miss ten Boom, can you forgive me?" Corrie says this about that moment in time. "I thought I had forgiven but everything within me wanted to lash out at that man. My sister Betsey died a horrible death in that place and he was to blame for her death. I hated him. I wanted to hurt him." "Father," Corrie prayed, "I cannot forgive this man. I will not forgive this man." In those few moments following this prayer, Corrie distinctly recalled God saying this to her, "Then Corrie, how can you expect me to forgive you?"

Corrie knew what she had to do. She clasped that man's outstretched hand and forgave him. In that moment, she felt a genuine love fill her very being, a love that could only come from her heavenly Father.

Forgiveness is a common theme in the lives of many couples whose marriage is in trouble. An unforgiving heart is a cancer destroying any chance of reconciliation in relationships, especially marriages. Unforgiveness is a huge wall that stands between many a couple. They build walls to keep the pain out and end up cementing the hurt in.

If this sounds like your marriage, then you and your spouse may need some outside help to address unhealthy issues in your marriage relationship. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is a place where you can find that help. For more information, give the center a call at 545-1760.

Law Day celebrates religious freedom

Lt. Col. Dana Chipman
Deputy Staff Judge Advocate

Each year on May 1, we celebrate Law Day. Our theme this year is "Celebrate Your Freedom." One of the great guarantees of the constitutional experiment we have been conducting for more than 200 years is that of our freedom to worship as we choose. The Bill of Rights — set forth to establish individual liberties — gave full meaning to the independence Americans earned on the battlefield. The First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States includes the following language: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

We discuss this excerpt from the First Amendment in terms of two components: the "establishment" clause and the "free exercise" clause. About the establishment clause, Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black wrote: "The establishment of the religion clause of the First Amendment means at least this: Neither a state nor the federal government can set up a church. The First Amendment has erected a wall between church and state. That wall must be kept high and impregnable. We could not approve the slightest breach." (Everson vs. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1 1947).

What about the free exercise clause? As Americans, we have the constitutional right to exercise our religious beliefs without governmental interference. As individuals, we are free to follow the dictates of our own conscience. Simply put, we are free to exercise the choice to follow God. The wall erected by our sins has already been breached. Jesus Christ bore our guilt on the cross and offers us new life. The grace of God, freely given, allows us to choose to repent of our sins, receive Jesus as our savior and thereby receive the gift of eternal life. As we celebrate our freedom, realize that true freedom occurs not when we live the way we want to, but when we live within Christ's laws and enjoy the benefits of that choice. (Galatians 5:13-26).

In that act, we draw on the power of Christ for the strength to face life's troubles. Dr. Victor Frankl, an Austrian psychiatrist imprisoned in Auschwitz in WWII, wrote that "everything can be taken from a man but one thing: the last of the human freedoms — to choose one's attitude in any given set of circumstances." The apostle Paul wrote, "I have learned to be content, whatever the circumstances ... I can do everything through him (Christ) who gives me strength." (Phillippians 4:11-13).

Celebrate your freedom to worship a risen Christ.

JMAC

Army OCs take home title

OC Joseph Dzvonik
Officer Candidate School

It was an idea that started in the wind: a few Marine Drill Instructors (DIs) at the Navy Officer Candidate School (OCS) bragging about how their Officer Candidates (OCs) were better trained than the Air Force Candidates. Eventually, after all the talking, a time and a place had been set.

In April 1994, Navy and Air Force Officer Candidates went head-to-head for the first time in a variety of athletic events at the Naval Aviation Schools Command (NASC), located in Pensacola, Fla., home of the Blue Angels and the Navy OCS. The overall winner of these events, it was decided, would have in their possession, as a symbol of their supremacy, a MARK-5 practice bomb.

Since then, this OCS interservice rivalry has grown into what is now known as JMAC — the Joint Military Athletic Competition. The Army OCS was invited to attend JMAC for the first time in April 1998 at Maxwell Air Force Base, Montgomery, Ala., home of the Air Force Officer Training School (OTS). It was an invitation the Air Force and the Navy probably regret sending. The JMAC held marked the Army's third consecutive participation and, yes, third win.

On Saturday, Army and Air Force OCs traveled south to join the Navy in Pensacola for another opportunity to represent their services in what U.S. Army Infantry School Commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst referred to in his opening ceremony remarks as "The quest for the bomb." A total of 40 Army OCs from both Companies A and B, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, participated in 10 of the 11 scheduled events, the 11th event, a 4 X 400 meter relay would be used as a tiebreaker, but was not necessary.

As the late-morning sun humidity began to combine into sweltering heat, the 3-mile run event began. Army OCs Kent Solheim and Daryl Breitbach finished the run in 16:38 and 16:48 respectively, with OC Babette Lindsey being the first female to cross the line at 22:36. Their combined times gave the Army first place for this, the first event. The other nine events included: the Super Physical Readiness Test (SPRT), where one competitor performs push-ups, pull-ups, sit-ups and a 1.5 mile run; a male and female Navy Physical Readiness Test (NPRT), which is the same as the SPRT, with each event performed by a different competitor, a 3-person 1.5-mile relay, volleyball, 3-on-3 basketball, two person seat carry, stretcher carry and tug-of-war. The Army placed first in the 3-mile run, the female NPRT, 3-on-3 basketball and stretcher carry events. The only event the Army placed third was the relay.

Despite not winning the total SPRT, Army Officer Candidate Joseph Burkhardt's performance during the 1.5 mile run amazed all who watched as he finished nearly an entire .5 mile lap ahead of the other two competitors. Another noteworthy performance came from OC Casandra Clemons during the volleyball game. She had played AA division volleyball in college and later professionally in the East Coast League. Throughout the sets, her spikes, serves and saves made it clear that she was the kind of player the Air Force and the Navy wanted to avoid dealing with at the net. The Army 3-on-3 team consisted of OCs Michelle Nhambure, Donald Petree and James Langdon who clearly dominated the series with their outstanding work.

Teamwork is what the entire event represents. In his opening remarks, Ernst stated, "... while the future of the U.S. military involves themselves in healthy competition here today, all the Armed Services are working together in Kosovo. The important concept to learn here today is teamwork. It is the idea of a Joint Team that keeps the United States great."

The Army victory this season has much more meaning than just bringing back the bomb. OCS Classes 2-99 and 3-99 have dedicated this victory to the memory of 2nd Lt. Kelly Hall. Hall was a graduate of OCS class 3-98 and was the officer candidate coach of the first Army JMAC team. He died tragically last November at the age of 32 during a training flight when his Beechcraft twin-engine plane, a surveillance plane, crashed southeast of Witzberg, Germany. Prior to attending OCS, Hall was an Aviation Chief Warrant Officer 2 with more than 14 years in the Army and is survived by his wife Shelly and their five children. When presented with the challenge of creating and training an Army OCS JMAC team a year ago, Class 3-98 Student Council President Dennis Terry, knew Hall was the man for the job.

"His professionalism, enthusiasm and leadership were remarkable," said Capt. Richard Crowther, one of Hall's TAC officers while at OCS. "I'm sure those are the reasons Terry chose him to be the JMAC coach."

Hall's wife Sherry remembers how proud he was of the whole JMAC experience.

"He was one of those guys who was good at everything he did. He was a pole-vaulter, football player, runner ... he was even great at bowling," she recalled. "He was so proud of what his OCS class accomplished at JMAC. I remember him talking about it all the time."

This year, the Army intends to build a special encasement for the JMAC trophy, dedicated completely to Hall. The encasement will let all future Army OCs know who first brought "the Bomb" to Fort Benning.

Benning prepares for Military Appreciation Week

Directorate of Community Activities

Military Appreciation Week is scheduled for May 10-14.

More than 12 separate events are scheduled during the week's activities including everything from volleyball to bowling.

Each event falls under a specific cup for which the winners in each event will collect a certain amount of points.

The three cups include:
*Commander's Trophy,
Follow Me Cup and
Benning Team Cup.
The list of events are as follows:

Sports Activities

Beach Volleyball, 8:30 a.m., May 10-11, Finals, 8:30 a.m. May 11.

Open to all personnel.

Each sub-chapter can enter at least one team. Eliminations will be conducted May 10-11 with the final series on May 11. Competition begins each day at 8:30 a.m. Tournament structure depends on number of entries. Match is one game played to 30 points and a point is awarded on every serve.

Shooters share skills with star

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

She didn't sing, dance or play the guitar, but country music legend Barbara Mandrell won over three more fans Wednesday in Atlanta.

Three Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) met Mandrell April 21 at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Center in Atlanta while they were participating in the 1999 Pan American Games Selection Matches.

Mandrell arrived at Wolf Creek at noon and received an overview of the 17 Olympic shooting events. She then got to shoot international pistol, rifle and shotgun with a little help from members of USAMU and USA Shooting, the national governing body for the Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

USAMU international pistol shooters Renee D. Cunningham and Eric G Daniels, along with international rifle shooter Jason A. Parker provided the training to Mandrell.

Her experience started with Daniels who showed her how to shoot rapid fire pistol.

"I was impressed that someone with her celebrity status took the time to give us her support and backing," Daniels said. "Personally, it was an honor to meet her, because I grew up watching her TV show."

Mandrell then got to observe Parker, who holds the world record in air rifle, practicing on the air rifle range.

"He's so cool; he's really amazing." Mandrell said of Parker, who showed her his techniques before giving her some shooting instruction. "I thought air guns were wimpy, not very challenging," Mandrell said. "But it's amazingly difficult, I had no idea. I was overwhelmed by it."

Parker said he thought Mandrell's visit to the Olympic Shooting Center was great.

"Meeting her was very exciting, and she was a nice lady," Parker said. "I think it's great that she's supporting the Olympic Shooters."

Parker added that although he was not familiar with Mandrell's music, he was going to buy on of her CDs now that he has met her.

When the singer met Cunningham, they discovered they were from the same area of California.

Cunningham is from Escondido and Mandrell said she graduated from Oceanside High School about 20 minutes away.

"Holy moly, your great," Mandrell said to Cunningham after watching her shoot air pistol.

"I was really honored to meet Barbara Mandrell and show her what I do at the Marksmanship Unit," Cunningham said. "She was so nice."

Mandrell, who ended her meeting with Cunningham with a big hug, commented that it was also an honor for her to meet the shooters.

"You are all so gracious. Thanks to you all, I got to see how hard you work to be good at this," Mandrell said. "It takes discipline and dedication. Anybody would be thrilled to meet you all."

An avid shooter herself, Mandrell was made an honorary member of the USA Shooting Team during a ceremony that afternoon in which the USA Shooting presented a team uniform and limited edition pistol to the singer.

Mandrell commented that she was surprised and thrilled when she found out that shooting was the third largest event in participation of countries in the Olympics.

"This is the best family sport; shooting knows no age or gender," Mandrell said. "I encourage all of you to sing the praises of the shooting sports and of the good, talented and caring people who are great Americans who love this sport, their country and their fellow human beings."

"I love it when I can stand there with my grown son, grown daughter, 13-year-old son and my husband and say 'We love to shoot; it's a great family sport."

ESPN show features USAMU Soldiers

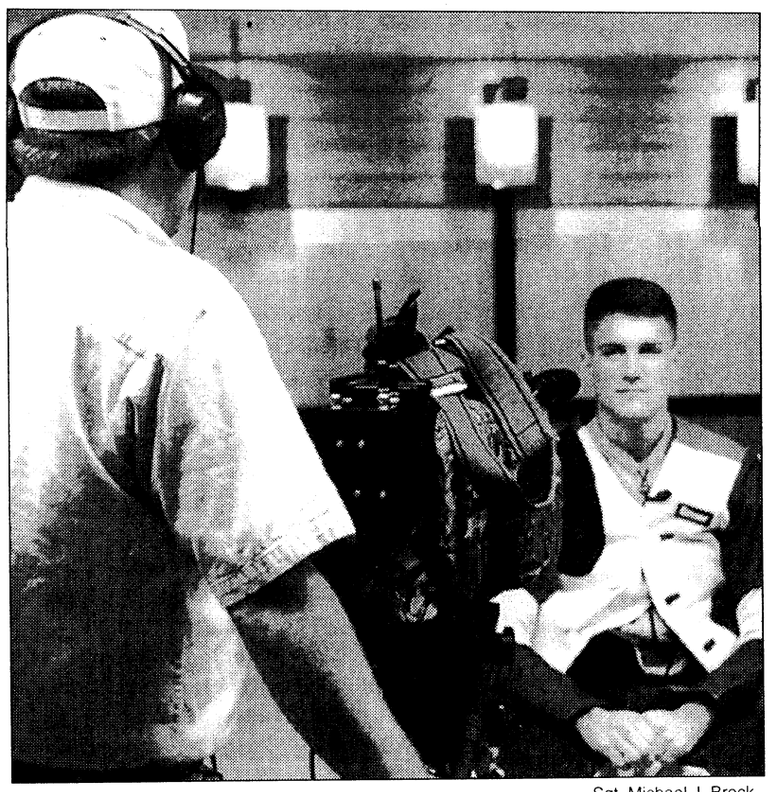
Sgt. Michael J. Brock
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Two Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will be featured on ESPN's Shooting Sports show between July and September.

The show, which airs at 7:30 a.m. will feature Armando R. Ayala and Jason A. Parker who distinguished themselves by winning their individual events at the Pan-American selection matches to earn the chance to go to the Pan-American games in Canada this year.

"This is my third time being interviewed for television this year," Parker said. "I still get nervous talking in front of a camera or large crowds."

The two Soldiers did not have a lot of time to prepare for the interviews, Parker said.



"I was called at home Saturday or Sunday and told to be in Atlanta Monday morning with all my gear for an ESPN interview," Parker said.

Parker said he was nervous to start out with, but Terry Boeder, associate producer for ESPN Outdoors was helpful in getting him to relax and talk about shooting air guns.

"We wanted to do something different than talk about shotguns," Boeder said. "When most people hear about shooting sports, they automatically think about shotgun. There are so many other shooting sports out there that no one ever hears about."

ESPN's original plan was to cover the shooting events at the Pan-American games on Thursday and decided to do some shows on the shooters who will be at the games instead," Boeder said. "So I called up USA Shooting and found ut about the selection matches and was down in Atlanta the next day."

Parker answered questions on how to train with an air rifle to what it is like being a world class shooter and world record holder.

Sgt. Michael J. Brock

Jason A. Parker of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is interviewed by Terry Boeder of ESPN Outdoors April 19 at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Center in Atlanta for an upcoming television show.

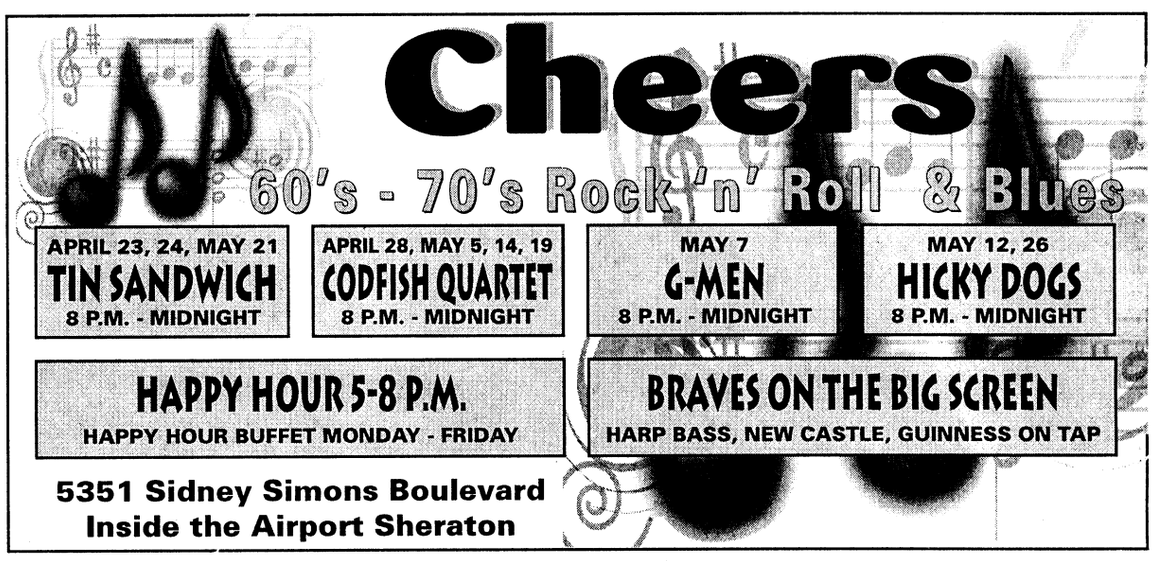
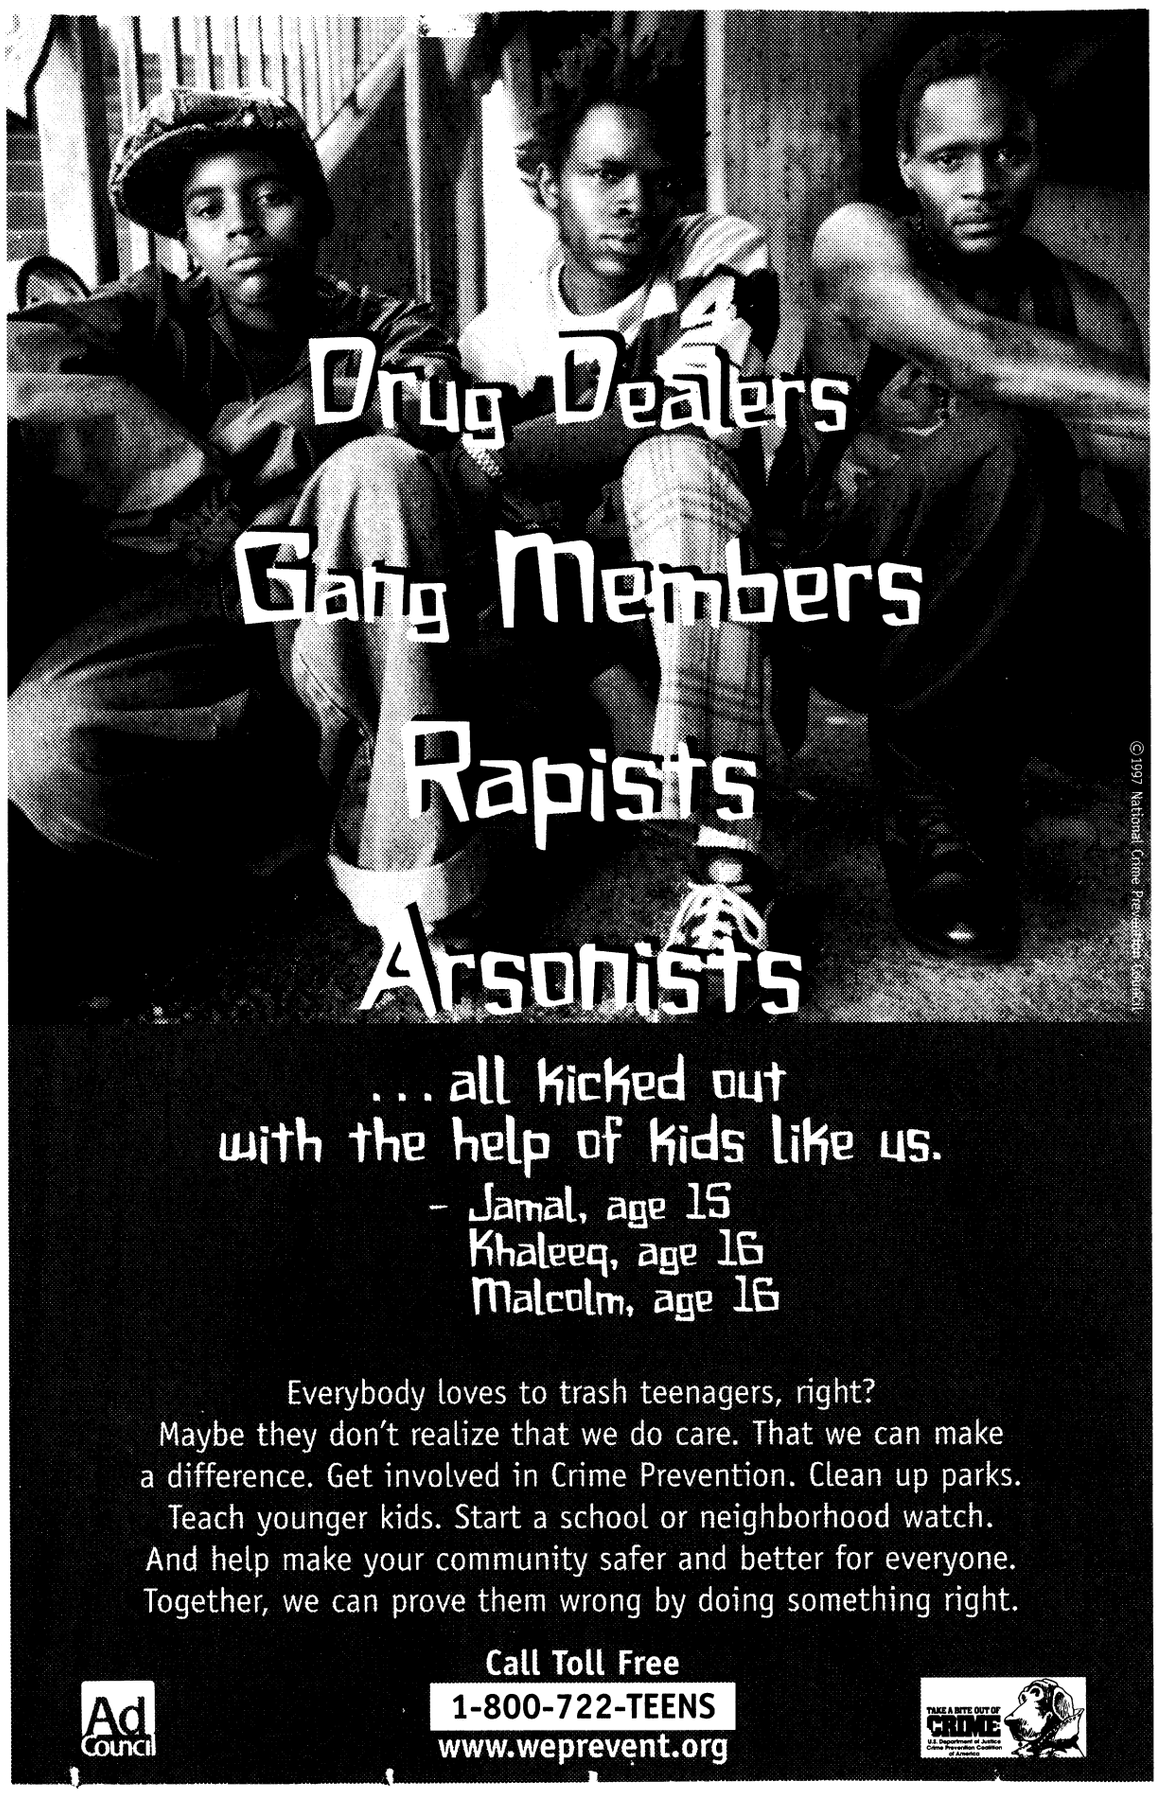
Parks offer affordable adventure

Georgia State Parks

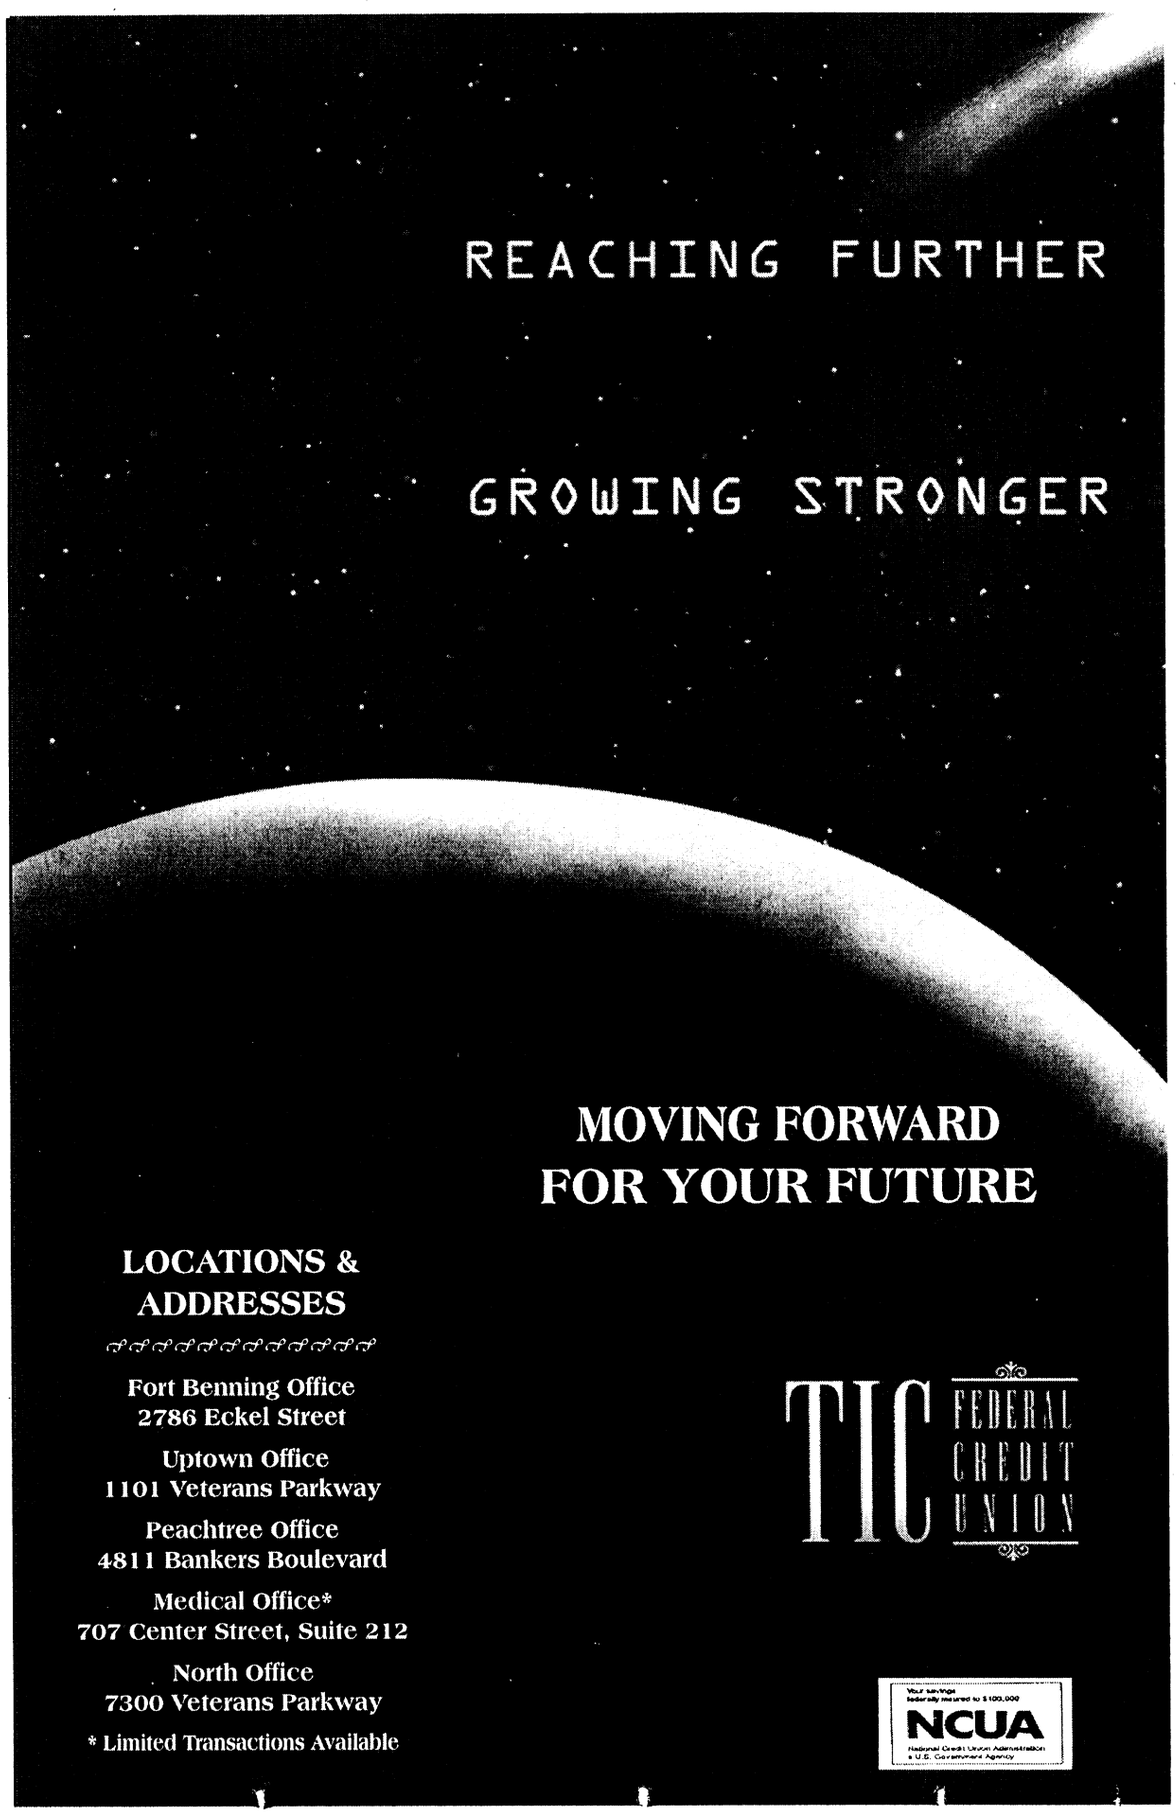
Looking for an affordable family adventure? Georgia's state parks and historic sites have the answer.



Most state parks offer camping experiences that create a lifetime of memories — and they're very inexpensive.



Nearby state parks such as Franklin D. Roosevelt in Pine Mountain and Florence Marina in Omaha feature comfortable campgrounds complete with clean rest rooms, hot showers, picnic tables and fire rings on each site.



If "roughing" it is not the preference, many state parks offer the privacy and comfort of fully-equipped cottages and hotel-style lodges. Either way, the kids have a great time while parents take it easy.

Other nearby state parks that offer excellent camping options include High Falls and Indian Springs state parks. Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites are owned by the citizens of Georgia and are operated by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources.

Live Oak Jujutsu
Jujutsu is using throws, joint reversals, choke holds, take downs and holds, preventing take downs and breaking lose from holds, and striking when engaged in hand-to-hand, hand-to-weapon, or weapon-to-weapon combat. It employs all the hand-to-hand skills and not just blocking, punching and kicking. Learn the realities between sports martial arts and true hand-to-hand. Jujutsu is ideal for people who want realistic combat skills!

Jujutsu is now available and is being taught in Columbus by Duke Meade who lived and trained in Japan for 13 years. He offers many styles of Japanese Jujutsu as well as Chinese grappling.

Bomb threats

Military Police train daily for emergencies

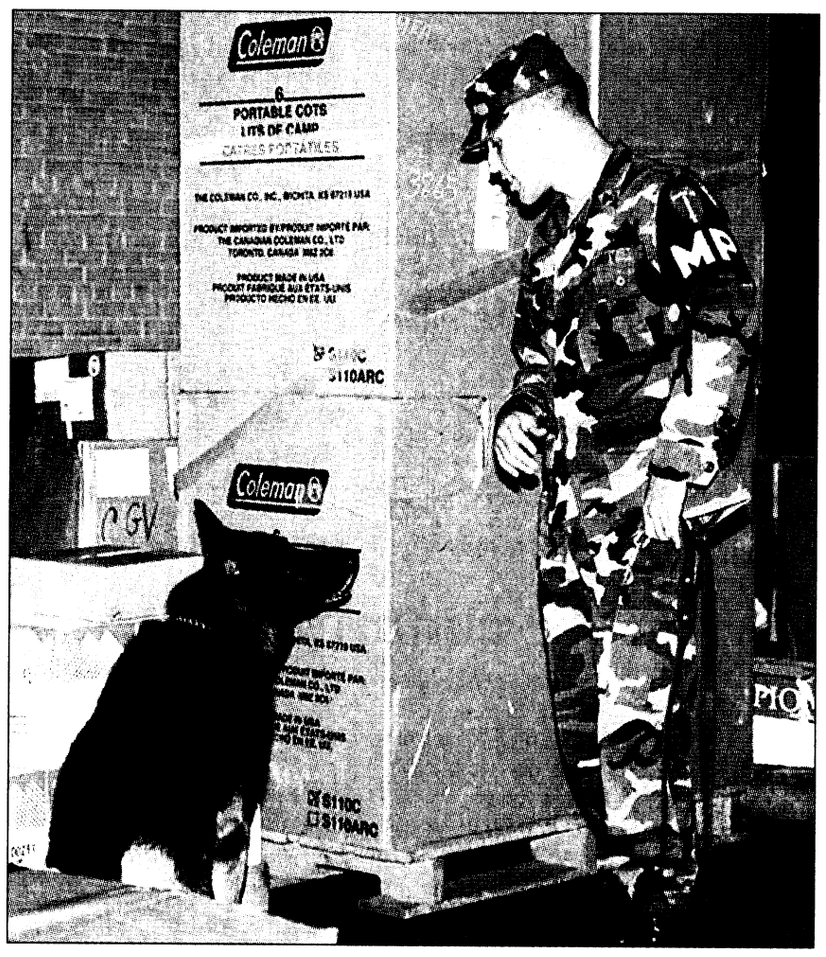
Six-year-old Tomba sniffs high and low in a methodical pattern searching for the smell of explosives. With a sense of smell 1,000 times greater than humans, dogs play an important role assisting Military Police during bomb threats.



"A bomb threat is a basic task that all MPs are trained and equipped to handle," said 1st Lt. Benjamin Ratterree, chief of law enforcement operations. "It is an immediate action drill for MPs, like knocking out a bunker; we are trained to respond to bomb threats."

According to the NCOIC of the Law Enforcement Division, Master Sgt. David Jones, patrolmen begin training for emergencies on their first shift at Fort Benning.

"All MPs begin with on-the-job training regardless of rank or experience," Jones said. "New Soldiers are assigned to partners who show them all areas identified as vulnerable areas on Fort Benning."

Jones said all training is ongoing with a random practical exercise completed during each shift or three times a day. "When the desk sergeant calls the mission, the patrols know by designated sections who should respond and exactly where to go," he added.

During an actual bomb threat, the MPs secure the building, control traffic and pedestrian movement and obtain initial information. After securing the area, search teams which include explosive detection dogs begin their mission.

Michele E. Hanson

Sgt. William Moore, dog handler, and his dog Tomba complete a practical exercise using C4 and detonation cord hidden in a cardboard box.

"Once the building is clear we take in the bomb dogs," said Sgt. William Moore, dog handler. "Every dog handler has his own style when working with his dog. I let my dog go in on his own to scan the area to see if he can detect the bomb on his own. Bomb dogs will search on their own but it is the handler's job to insure the search is being performed to standard."

Explosive dogs respond not from what they see but what they smell. They are trained to detect different

Post takes threats seriously

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

After recent bomb threats at the Fort Benning Commissary, post officials are stepping up awareness on the repercussions and punishment associated with bomb threats and bomb hoaxes. A "threat" is an expressed present determination or intent to kill, injure or intimidate a person or to destroy certain property now or in the future. Bomb threats are a felony under U.S. and Georgia law and can carry a punishment to include a substantial term of imprisonment.

Under Article 134 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, the maximum punishment for a bomb threat and bomb hoax includes a dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances and confinement for five years. A civilian who engages in this type of misconduct could face similar punishment. For example, according to Lt. Col. Dana Chipman, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, the Official Code of Georgia contains two offenses — terroristic threats and acts and transmitting a false alarm, for which one could face a term of imprisonment between one and five years. Administrative action could also occur.

"Any civilian involved in misconduct on Fort Benning will initially receive either an ejection order telling the individual what he or she has been charged with, and or a show cause letter which could result in one's exclusion from the installation," said Sheila Hand, installation hearing officer. "The period of exclusion ranges from one year to a permanent exclusion depending on the severity of the offense."

Post celebrates Asian-Pacific Heritage Month

"Celebrating Our Legacy" was the theme of the annual Asian and Pacific-Islander Heritage Month luncheon held Tuesday at the Officer's Club.

"Asian-Pacific Islanders have immeasurably enriched the quality and character of this country in every field of endeavor, in public and private sectors alike," said Master Sgt. Jose R. Morales, NCOIC of the equal opportunity office in his opening remarks. "Theirs is a history of proud accomplishments and their contributions to this nation's defense are unparalleled."

Guest speaker, Maj. Gen. James H. Mukoyama Jr., a retired Army Reserve officer and president of the National Japanese American Memorial Foundation, spoke to 250 luncheon guests about the legacy of Japanese Americans, the tragic events that occurred during World War II and how they have overcome adversity.

Mukoyama

"In 1913, Alien Land Laws were passed prohibiting Japanese people from owning property. Also, in 1924, they were barred from becoming naturalized citizens — thus the historical stage was set for the tragic events of WWII set in motion by the infamous attack on Pearl Harbor," Mukoyama said.

"Presidential Executive Order 9066 permitted the Secretary of War to evacuate all people of Japanese ancestry from their West Coast homes including American citizens."

Mukoyama said that 117,000 Japanese were told to pack two bags and then were herded into trucks and buses. They eventually ended up in relocation camps in desert areas. "Make no mistake, these camps were your basic, no thrills concentration camps with barbed-wire fences and towers manned with machine guns facing in not out. Yet in the midst of all this, Japanese Americans remained loyal to their country."

"When called upon by Army recruiters, the Japanese Americans responded in overwhelming numbers for their country's call to arms and made up units that became the most decorated units for their size and length of service in the history of the United States," he said. "The results of their sacrifice was the resounding confirmation of the unquestionable loyalty of Japanese Americans."

After the conclusion of WWII, Japanese Americans concentrated on rebuilding their lives, he added.

In his closing remarks, Mukoyama said although they had every right to be bitter they chose instead to simulate into our society.

"They succeeded through education and hard work, and unlocked the doors to equal opportunity previously closed to them."

Reg outlines advertising guidelines

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Before you make a deal with the neighborhood tattoo parlor or used car dealership to appear in some "high-speed" ad, you better think twice about putting on those BDUs or Army dress uniform.

According to the Joint Ethic Regulation (JER) DoD5500.7-R, "Endorsement of a non-Federal entity, event, product, service or enterprise may be neither stated nor implied by Department of Defense (DoD) or DoD employees in their official capacities and titles, positions or organization names may not be used to suggest official endorsement or preferential treatment of any non-federal entity."

Appearing in commercial advertisements while in Army uniform could be constructed as misuse of public office for private gain, said Capt. Todd Milliard, Administrative Law

Time capsules provide link to generations

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

When I was in sixth-grade our teacher had a brilliant idea for us to make a time capsule. The year was 1990 and I was 12-years-old. Considering this was the time in my life when I was falling head first into puberty and complete hormonal unbalance, I'm surprised I even remember a fairly insignificant event (or so I thought) such as this.

commentary

What amazes me the most about this recollection is the fact that the only thing I remember putting in the capsule was the smallest and most insignificant part of it — a movie review for Kindergarten Cop. This is probably a good indicator of how much I really cared at the time.

I would have to say it's the events in Kosovo that triggered my memory of the time capsule. Back in 1990, just as we were putting the capsule in the ground, outside the overly-thick walls of my pre-teen life, things were heating up in the Middle East. Eventually when the war started I was barely conscious of the fact.

Of course, now that I have successfully overcome my troubled and angst-filled days as a teenager, I care more about what's going on around me, rather than how high I can get my hair or how tight I can roll my jeans.

I believe it is my age, and the fact that I'm a Soldier, that has me thinking about the things that are going on in the world. It also has made me realize just how delicate and fragile the world is.

What's scary is the fact that if something does happen one day and the world is partially or even completely destroyed, there may be no link to what was going on in 1999 ... or to me. Or even if we are still thriving, bigger and better than ever, I wonder what kind of insight I could give people hundreds of years down the road if they were to dig up a little something I left behind.

That's where the time capsule comes in.

I mean, today, when we find the remains of a dinosaur or something that represents the past, it is exhilarating. Can you imagine what it would be like if our prehistoric ancestors had taken time off from clubbing their mates and chasing wild game to put together a little something for us? What kinds of things could we learn if we were to dig up a box full of prehistoric trinkets courtesy of a bushy haired caveman named Gork?

It's that idea too, that led me to becoming more interested in the entire time capsule thing. It also made me wonder what in the heck I would put in a time capsule if I decided to make one.

The fact is, the possibilities are endless.

From one perspective, I could look at it as if the world had just started over.

In this case I would make it a priority to briefly describe certain essential items such as fire, wheels, soap and indoor plumbing.

I wouldn't give away too many other things, because inevitably the information I supplied could lead to history repeating itself and I definitely wouldn't want to be responsible for that.

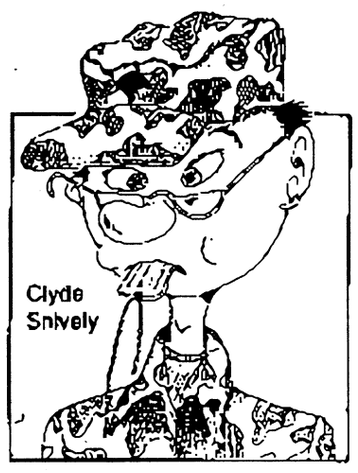
On the other hand, I could fill my time capsule with the thought in mind that we will be a highly advanced civilization, far beyond my wildest imagination.

In that case I would write a letter describing myself and what the world was like in 1999. I would put in plenty of newspaper articles, magazine clippings and statistics that depicted the 90s. Other little things I would put in there would be CDs, computer disks and chips, recipes, a bag of gummi bears and probably a brush.

Most importantly, I would include things that may not be around in the future, if we don't start shaping up. Things like a vial of fresh water, a bunch of different kinds of flowers, grass clippings, sand, a feather and maybe even a picture of a beautiful sky.

The main thing is for people of the 21st Century and beyond to get a taste and feel of the ancient folks who dominated the 20th Century. Not only that, but a time capsule is also a great way to say goodbye to 1999 in my own (or yours) weird little way.

Loud music can annoy other community members



Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Playing the bass in your four-wheeled boom boxes loud enough to knock the Hubble Telescope out of orbit might make you feel good, but the rest of us would like to listen to our own music.

Well, I don't care what type of music or noise you prefer, just don't let it spill out of your car.

Most communities have ordinances that govern noise. Columbus has one and Fort Benning has one. The Fort Penning regulation says that if your noise can be heard more than 15 feet away, it's too loud and the Military Police (MP) can confiscate your car and smash all of your speakers as you stand by helplessly and watch.

Well not really, that's just wishful thinking on my part. But if an MP came up to you and said, "you're in violation of the post noise ordinance, please turn down the volume," you should comply.

If, however, you decide, "what the heck can he do," and ignore him, then you're in violation of a regulation that tells you to obey MPs and in violation of the post regulation that tells you to put a lid on your noise.

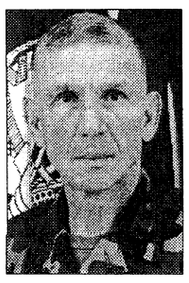
And we all know what can happen under a punitive regulation, which this one is, if we're cited by the MPs. We can end up with a date with our commanders.

If you are a teen, you could end up in front of the garrison sergeant major who will take appropriate corrective action. Read that, you'll be doing special work projects to help you learn to obey people in authority.

If you are not a Soldier and not a youngster, but a spouse and insist on violating the reg you could be invited to move off post where you can test your freedom to make noise.

Never having been in a car that actually reverberates, I can't tell you from first hand experience the effects all this noise has on the human body. So, I looked it up on the Internet.

I first learned the obvious that a person who spends a lot of time around noise will soon lose his or her hearing.



Also, there is scientific research that proves that sound waves of that magnitude coursing through your body actually break down your vital organs. It causes your heart to skip beats as it tries to adjust and get into sync with the sounds, the liver secretes excess amounts of bile, which ooze into your blood system and causes your skin to turn green.

The synapses in your brain are disrupted, affecting both long term and short term memory and can even cause the onset of St. Vitus' dance.

The kidneys break down and can no longer clean all that evil stuff out of your body and, well you get the picture, being too close to excess sounds ain't good for you. So give your body a break and give the rest of us a break, keep the noise down.

By the way, this same regulation applies to the portable radio you take with you on post picnics or carry on an evening stroll through the housing area. If it can be heard from 15 feet away, it's too loud.

Asian, Pacific Americans continue to contribute

The month of May is proclaimed "Asian and Pacific American Heritage Month," in recognition of Asian and Pacific Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity. The theme for this year's observance is "Celebrating Our Legacy."

There are more than 10 million Americans who trace their ancestry to Asia or the Pacific Islands. They have immeasurably enriched the quality and character of this county in every field of endeavor, in public and private sectors alike. Theirs is a history of proud accomplishments and numerous contributions to the arts, science, commerce and the armed forces of the United States. Their contributions to the nation's defense are unparalleled. The 442d Regimental Combat Team and the 100th Infantry Battalion significantly contributed to the ultimate victory in Europe during World War II through unmatched gallantry and courage on the battlefield.

Soldiers in those two units received 18, 143 individual decorations for valor, making the 100th Infantry Battalion and the 442d Regimental Combat Team "the most decorated units for their size and length of service in the history of the United States." Today, Asian and Pacific Americans continue to contribute to the defense of our nation and the pursuit for world peace.

The month of May fosters an increase in national awareness of the history and contributions of Asian and Pacific Americans, and inspires a renewed sense of pride. I encourage everyone to enjoy activities here at Fort Benning during the "Asian and Pacific American Heritage Month."

Family warns community about inhalants after son's death

My son Jason would have been 20 years old May 24. Instead of picking out clothes and buying him a cake for his birthday, I was buying clothes and a casket for him to be buried in.

Jason died April 6 due to an inhalant spray, a regular household air freshener. They call it huffing. Kids think they are getting an instant high, and they get an instant death.

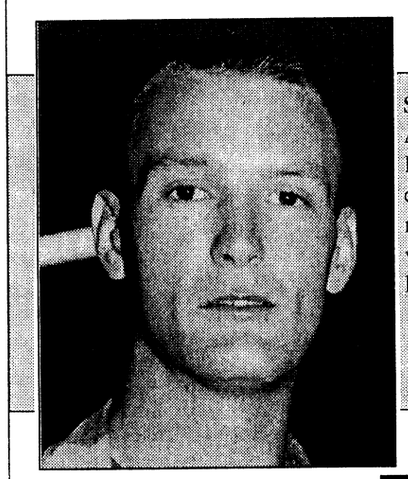
We, as parents, drill our children about all the illegal drugs, but these inhalants are kept in the home and can be purchased — things such as aerosol cans including air freshener, hair spray, cooking spray and spray paint.

Jason was a great son with an education and good job. He was purchasing things for his own place. He had his whole life ahead of him, but it was taken away in an instant.

With Mother's Day and Father's Day approaching, the most beautiful gift we receive is the gift of our children. I have two other beautiful children, both girls — Heather, 23, and Ashley, 9. Jason was our only son and his death is a great loss to us and to anyone who knew him.

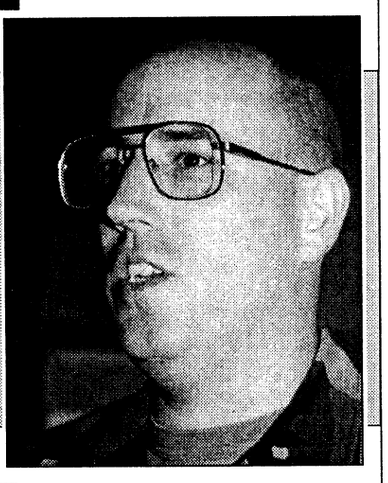
His sisters, father and myself want to be able to educate children, especially parents that your child can be gone in an instant.

So, the only other gift we can give Jason for his birthday is to try and speak out on this, and hope you as parents and guardians listen.



Please help me give this gift to Jason — the gift of life for someone else. Jason is in God's hands and will always be in our hearts.

We love you Jason. Happy Birthday.



— Mom, Dad, Heather and Ashley

USARSA supports humanitarian seminar

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of Americas

Supporting the Commander-in-Chief of U.S. Southern Command (USSOCOM), Gen. Charles E. Wilhelm's engagement strategy throughout Latin America, three members of the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) attended a Humanitarian Assistance and Disaster Relief seminar in Miami, March 17 through 26.

According to Lt. Col. Richard Sheppard, chief of Civil Military Studies, USARSA, Department of Joint and Combined Operations, the week-long seminar allowed the regional, national and international disaster organizations to brief the more than 200 representatives from 42 countries representing Central and South America and the Caribbean on how their organization responds to disaster emergency situations and what role USSOCOM can play with future disasters. All the organizations present at the seminar had missions tailored towards preventing and responding to natural disasters.

"The recent onslaught of hurricanes in the past few years have devastated the region," Sheppard said. "The presenters have a lot of experience and were able to share what they've learned, both good and bad."

Sheppard said the number of casualties mentioned at the seminar because of these disasters was overwhelming. With Hurricane Mitch alone, he said over 9,000 people died and thousands were left homeless.

However, he said there were also good numbers, like the thousands of people who were saved by the cooperative efforts of international and regional disaster relief agencies. The seminar also covered flood and earthquake emergency relief.

"With the military shifting its focus to peacekeeping operations and humanitarian assistance, this seminar was very helpful in strengthening civil-military relationships," he said. "This positive relationship helps bolster democratic processes."

Sheppard, who was accompanied by Lt. Col. Eduardo Mendoza from El Salvador and Maj. Alfieri Lameda from Venezuela, said USARSA's role was to form the After-Action Team.

He said prior to going to Miami, USSOCOM had sent him all the presentations intended to be used during the seminar, allowing his team to summarize all the lessons learned prior to getting to the event.

"This enabled the seminar director to focus on the crucial topics of each presenter," Sheppard said.

He said besides preparing Wilhelm's closing comments, the USARSA team came up with panel discussion questions and became subject matter experts.

Sheppard said at the end of the seminar, the director told the attendees that USARSA offered courses in Peacekeeping Operations, Democratic Sustainment, Civil-Military Operations and Resource Management.

"This was just one of the many seminars and exercises that USARSA participates with USSOCOM," he said. "We participate in all exercises involving engagement in the region."

Sheppard recently returned from Jamaica where he attended the Final Planning Conference for a Peacekeeping Operation Seminar that will be held there Aug. 23 through 28.

Crowd cheers POWs release from Serbs

Army News Service

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, Germany — After 32 days of captivity in Yugoslavia, three 1st Infantry Division Soldiers arrived back in Germany Sunday to an awaiting crowd of cheering supporters.

The three former prisoners of war (POWs) disembarked from a C-9 "Nightingale" medevac aircraft at Ramstein Air Base late Sunday afternoon. They were escorted down the plane's ramp by the 1st Infantry Division Commander, Maj. Gen. David Grange, as a screaming crowd waved small U.S. flags.

Earlier that day, the POWs had been released from Belgrade, Yugoslavia, into the hands of a religious delegation headed by the Rev. Jesse Jackson and U.S. Congressman Rod Blagojevich, a Serbian-American from Illinois. The group traveled overland from Belgrade into Croatia and then boarded a plane to Ramstein.

The former POWs — Staff Sgt. Christopher J. Stone, Staff Sgt. Andrew A. Ramirez and Spc. Steven M. Gonzales — were all taken to Landstuhl Regional Medical Center. There the Soldiers rested and recuperated, officials said, as they waited for family members to arrive from the U.S.

One Soldier lost 10 pounds while in captivity, a medical authority said. All three Soldiers showed evidence of minor injuries, such as cuts and bruises sustained while in captivity. Officials said the bruises were not the same ones seen on CNN in a clip taken from a Serbian television report following the Soldiers' capture.

The three Soldiers were serving with B Troop, 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry Regiment on patrol near the Macedonia-Yugoslav border when taken hostage March 31. They were patrolling in a High-Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle, and after being separated from the rest of their convoy, they had radioed that they were being fired upon and requested assistance. By the time friendly forces arrived, the three Soldiers were nowhere to be found. Further details of the capture have not yet been released.

Ramirez, 24, is a seven-year Army veteran from Los Angeles. Stone, 25, is an eight-year veteran from Smiths Creek, Mich.; and; Gonzales, 21, is a three-year veteran from Huntsville, Texas. Families of the three Soldiers to arrived in Germany early this week.

At Ramstein, the three Soldiers had greeted the cheering crowd, walked briskly over to a waiting Black Hawk helicopter, waved to the Rev. Jesse Jackson and his delegation of religious leaders and then flew off to Landstuhl.

Jackson told the crowd that the release of the POWs was made possible by the almighty who "put feet on faith." He said members of his delegation, hesitant to cross behind the Yugoslav border, chose faith over fear.

Editor's Note: Compiled in part from a radio report by U.S. Army Europe's Diana Dawa, who was on the ground at Ramstein.

Military paperwork safe from Y2K

Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

If you've been wondering whether the Year 2000 computer problem could suddenly erase your very existence as a servicemember at the stroke of midnight on Dec. 31, then worry no more.

Department of Defense (DoD) officials said the services are making steady and strong progress in fixing computer systems that manage and store personnel files. Indeed, the Marine Corps and the Air Force personnel files systems are already Y2K-compliant, according to Norma St. Claire, director of Joint Requirements and Integration for the Office of the Undersecretary of Personnel and Readiness.

That's good news, because every personnel action processed on you is stored in those files. From enlistment papers to promotion orders, from training records to awards, from re- enlistment to changes of duty station — it's all there.

"The Marine Corps and Air Force systems have been tested, fielded, verified as Y2K-compliant and are working today," St. Claire said. "The Navy and Army are making steady progress and are expected to have all their systems ready by the end of September. They both have ambitious and aggressive fielding schedules for updating software and replacing existing systems that cannot be fixed."

The Year 2000 problem, nicknamed "Y2K," refers to the past computer industry practice of writing years with just two digits — 1999 would be "99." Because of this digital shorthand, some computer systems on Jan. 1, 2000, might treat "00" as "1900" or just shut down all together. Almost any computer system may be vulnerable and needs to be checked and then, if necessary, fixed to handle the year change or replaced. A computer system that recognizes the year 2000 date and processes data correctly is called "compliant."

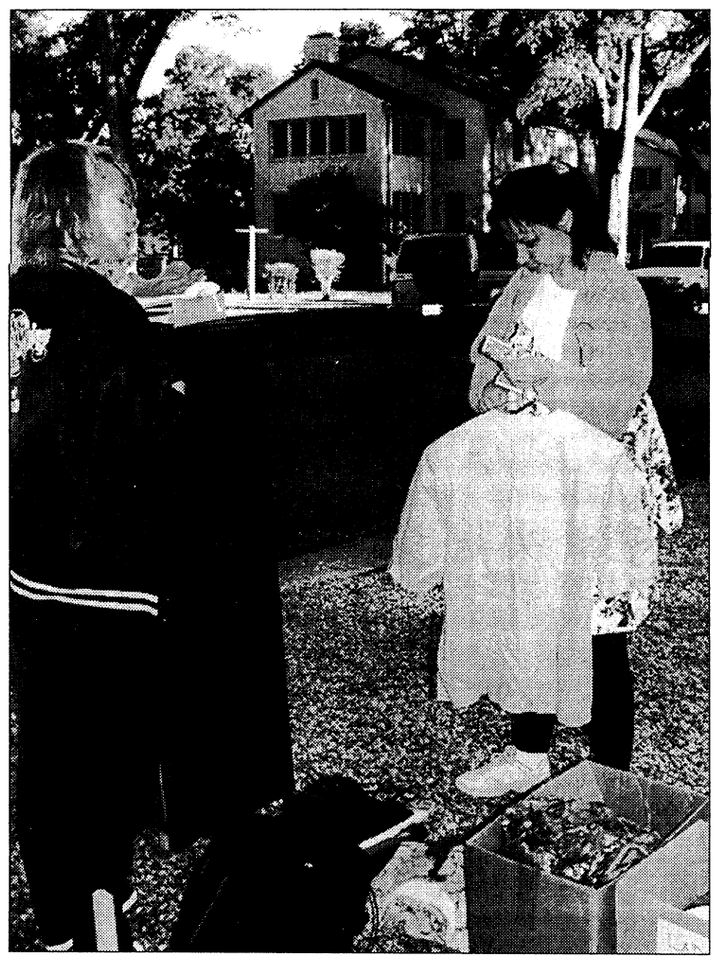
In addition to fixing current systems, the services all have back-up data should any unexpected Y2K glitches occur, according to Mike Monteleone, St. Claire's information technology chief and Y2K manager.

"All the services regularly and routinely back-up their data on off-line storage systems," Monteleone said. "This is done not just because of Y2K, but for any number of problems that could occur, such as electrical outages from storms that may corrupt or delete existing files." An example of "off-line" storage is copying all the files in a system onto a CD-ROM. That way, in case parts of, or an entire system should fail, the files can still be retrieved and reinstalled.

While both St. Claire and Monteleone are confident all services will have their personnel systems ready for the Year 2000, what remains uncertain at this point is processing of personnel actions late into the year. Both DoD and the services are considering either accelerating or delaying certain personnel actions beginning in December.

Among those that could be included are re-enlistments and extensions, awards, separations, retirements and discharges, promotions, training, transfers and nonessential travel.

"DoD and the services are considering it, but no decisions have been made at this time," St. Claire said. "There's no easy answer to this one. It's just something we're going to have to monitor throughout the year."



St. Claire said DoD is considering such action to try to reduce the paperwork and stress on the entire system, since personnel actions often require actions by a host of other agencies. For example, promotions automatically prompt pay changes, and the Defense Finance and Accounting Service has already recommended minimizing pay changes in the month of December.

There are also factors beyond the control of the services, Monteleone said. "If power failures occur because of Y2K, regardless of whether your system works, without electricity, you'll have to process personnel actions manually, and that will just slow things down." The good news, he added, is that personnel actions normally slow down in December anyway.

"Usually a large portion of personnel are off during the holidays and incoming transactions are substantially less," he said. "It's not like the first week of June, when you've got many people changing duty stations."

Y2K or not, however, St. Claire said it's important for service members to maintain copies of important documents in their files, such as promotion orders, awards and training.

"It just makes good sense to have those kinds of records in hand in case you need them," she said.

Motorcyclists must wear correct uniform, gear

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Many Soldiers rely on motorcycles as their main source of transportation, others may just enjoy that Sunday ride. Whatever the case may be, Soldiers need to be aware of post safety regulations so they can continue to enjoy the open road.

In the attempt to reduce the number of injuries and accidents motorcyclists encounter, Army Regulation 385-55 outlines the correct uniform Soldiers must wear while operating a motorcycle.

On or off post, when riding a motorcycle, Soldiers must wear proper eye protection, headgear, full-fingered gloves, long pants and shirt or jacket along with a road guard vest to help insure their safety.

The proper uniform helps Soldiers remain safe in various ways. According to Safety Manager Regis Beighley, when a Soldier is in the proper uniform, any injuries from concussion to road burn can be prevented.

"When Soldiers wear their reflective vest, drivers can see them during poor visibility hours," Beighley said. "It is also important for Soldiers to wear helmets, because an injury to the head can easily be fatal."

In fact, the injury rate for motorcyclists are 15 times higher than those who drive conventional vehicles, Beighley said.

Since 1994, there have been a total of 19 vehicle fatalities involving Soldiers from Fort Benning. Two of these have been motorcycle accidents.

"This is a relatively high rate when you compare how many cars to motorcycles there are," Beighley said.

Soldiers who are caught riding a motorcycle without wearing the proper uniform can be subject to punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Soldiers can either face a monetary punishment imposed by the military police or the Soldier can face punishment on the company level.

What may seem like a hassle and inconvenience could very well save a Soldier money, extra duty time or even a life.

Fort Benning's Department of Public Safety (DPS) said they are also conducting random checks on motorcycles in post parking lots.

On April 28, DPS issued 13 tickets to drivers that did not have the proper registration and safety courses required by AR 385-55. DPS also inspects for defective equipment.

Soldiers' motorcycles are also checked when they pass through the military police check points, according to Beighley.

Soldiers may want to take the proper precautions in order to stay safe, stay out of trouble and continue to enjoy the open road.

Commanders emphasize safety

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

Installation commanders throughout Training and Doctrine Command will conduct safety "standdown" days before Memorial Day weekend to kick off summer safety programs.

"Historically, accidents increase with the higher training tempo and recreational activities of the summer season," said Gen. John N. Abrams, TRADOC commander, who ordered the safety stand-down days.

"Nothing we do in peacetime is worth the cost of someone's life," he said.

Abrams pointed out that throughout the Army the single most common cause of fatalities is vehicle accidents. For fiscal year 1999 through April 10, 15 Soldiers in TRADOC had been killed in vehicle accidents. Only one of the accidents involved an Army motor vehicle.

Standdown day programs at installations will include displays and presentations stressing safety not only in driving, but in the home, gardening, swimming, boating and other summer activities.

Commanders are expected to test their medical response plans to simulated training and work-related accidents.

Abrams said he wants commanders and supervisors at every level to emphasize safety and risk management before the Memorial Day holiday, which traditionally marks the beginning of summer holidays.

"I want every Soldier and civilian employee to receive a pre-holiday safety briefing before they depart for the long weekend," he said. "Our Soldiers will follow your leadership. Don't let them down."

A Soldier from the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, negotiates the tunnel during the obstacle course.

Team members pushes themselves to finish the five-mile run event in record time. The Soldiers logged more than 15 miles throughout the door.

The Georgia heat and humidity began to take a toll on the Challenge seekers by the end of the five-mile run. Soldiers beat the heat by hydrating after each event.

Pioneer Challenge

Event challenges Soldiers mentally, physically

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The grass was still wet with dew when 40 Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, began an endeavor known to them only as the Pioneer Challenge, an event that within the next 10 hours would push their bodies further than they ever have before.

The Pioneer Challenge is a series of eight grueling events that challenges the battalion's best Soldiers both mentally and physically, according to Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Jerardo Reyes.

"The Pioneer Challenge is something I began when I took command two years ago to give the Soldiers a chance to do some things they don't usually get a chance to do," he said. "The squad challenge also gives them a chance to work as a team and develop leadership in a field type environment."

The Pioneer Challenge, named after the battalion motto, the 'Pioneers,' puts 10 Soldiers from each of the battalion's four companies in competition to earn the top score in each of the day's eight events and hopefully finish with the best score.

The first scored event, the Army Physical Fitness Test, challenged Soldiers to the three standard events, the two-mile run, push-ups and sit-ups. That challenge, however, proved to be a foreshadowing of the way the rest of the day's events went as Soldiers from Company C swept all three of the test's events.

After a quick rest, the Soldier teams were off and running again. This time it wasn't a PT test, it was a jaunt around the many roads of Sand Hill. Co. C's team once again was the first to cross the finish line earning yet another first place finish and 10 points bringing their total for the day to 22.

The barbed wire crawl and the wall climb of Sand Hill's obstacle course were the next challenges of the day, but as Co. C Soldiers slipped and slid around the course their score did the same. The Headquarters and Headquarters Company team netted their first 10-score for the day by nudging out their Co. C counterparts.

It was time for another run after the obstacle course was completed and this time it was a five-miler. Coming off their obstacle course win, the Headquarters team was looking to make a comeback after being toppled during the first two events. But after finishing more than two minutes after the Co. C team, their rebound seemed to be short-lived — that is until the Co. C team was cited with a five-second penalty.

The HHC team now had two event wins under their belts and as they took to the marksmanship range, they were sitting well within striking distance of claiming another event win and first place, but the Soldiers from Co. A had a different plan.

The Co. A Soldiers finished with first place in the rifle range event, with the Co. C team slipping to a third-place finish and the HHC team falling all the way to a fourth-place finish.

After spending some time on the range, it was time for the Soldiers to hit the streets again, but luckily for the Soldiers, this time it was a road march instead of a run.

Hoping to redeem themselves during the eight-mile event, the Soldiers from the HHC team took advantage of the warm, sunny afternoon, earning a first place finish and getting yet another step closer to taking a first-place finish in the event.

The RB-15 boat race was the next event of the day and as the Soldiers took to the water of Victory Pond, the hours of marching, running and jumping began to tax the Soldiers.

The spring heat and humidity didn't seem to phase the Co. B team though, as they finished the event in first place, sinking the hopes of HHC team's first-place finish.

The litter carry wrapped up the day's challenge and the Soldiers from Co. C snagged the first-place finish in the event and secured themselves the bragging rights to the Pioneer Challenge.

"This is something these guys can really stick their chests out about and be proud of," said Squad Leader Staff Sgt. George Danzar. "They worked together as a team and that teamwork is what wins competitions."

What does winning a challenge like this mean to these 10 proud Soldiers?

According to Reyes, it is simple.

"It is bragging rights until the next competition," he said. "It means that hard work and dedication over the past five months has paid off for 10 of our finest Soldiers in the battalion."

The RB-15 boat race was one of the final challenges in this competition that took the 40 Soldiers from Sand Hill to Victory Pond.

The Dawgs of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, continued on their march towards the Infantry blue cord and graduation as the trainees completed an eight-hour block of instruction on Land Mine Warfare April 29.

Drill sergeants, along with instructors from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, taught the Soldiers to employ and recover an M-18A1 Claymore mine, install and remove the M-21 antitank mine, locate mines by visual means, perform self-extraction from a minefield and identify unexploded ordnance hazards.

With this many tasks, the objective of each Soldiers demonstrating proficiency with the M-18A1 and M-21 mines can seem to be a very daunting task for the cadre.

"Not every Soldier will be an expert when they complete training, but they will be much more knowledgeable of the munitions that they will have to utilize at sometime during their military careers," said Staff Sgt. Charley Kania.

Pvt. Craig Campagna said he feels very confident that he can employ the M-18A1 Claymore mine if ever ordered to due so.

Army Career and Alumni Program, Transition Assistance Office, Building 2617, 545-4892 or 545-4913; or Family Member Employment Assistance Program, Building 2624, 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Telephone interviews offer leg up to job seekers

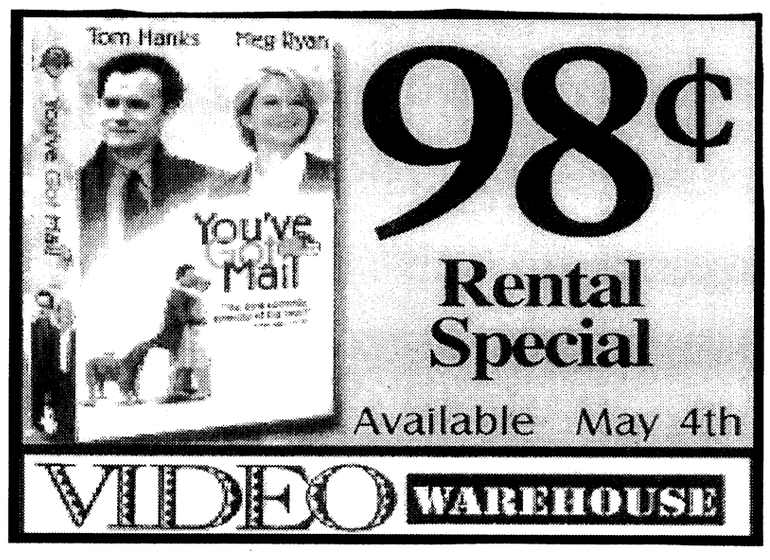
Army Career and Alumni Program

Telephone interviews are becoming common screening tools for employers. It is necessary for transitioning Soldiers to present themselves in a positive manner before proceeding to a face-to-face interview.

"The success or failure of this initial screening often depends on the time the potential employee has spent preparing for the interview," said Stacey Vigil, Army Career and Alumni Association.

A telephone interview gives the transitioning Soldier the unique opportunity to have notes on accomplishments, resume, research on the potential employer and questions for the interviewer in front of him or her during the process. This allows an individual to give clear, concise accounts of accomplishments for each position presented on a resume. He or she should also be prepared to discuss how this experience will add value to the potential employer's work force.

In addition to being well-prepared, the interviewee must remember to call on time, demonstrate clear goals and present oneself as a problem solver. As the interview comes to a close the transitioning Soldier will want to ask what the next step will be. It is also important to have all of the names, job titles and a mailing address for the interviewers so a thank you note can be mailed within 24 hours of the interview.



If one follows these rules, the process should be less stressful and the potential employee can present himself or herself with confidence and enthusiasm.

For more information, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

What's happening at Faith Middle School

Parents bring workplaces to students

Faith Middle School

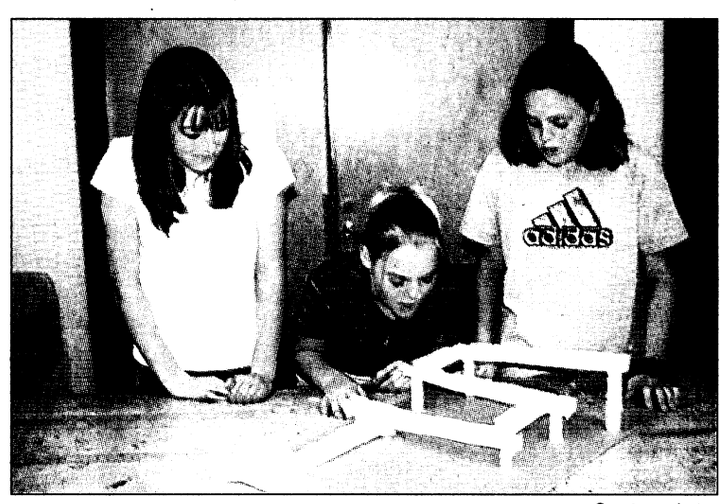
You've all heard of students visiting their parents' workplaces for a day, but have you heard of the parents' workplaces visiting the students?

For students of Faith Middle School's E Team, this idea became a reality April 29. If you were anywhere near the school's campus, you would have seen all types of occupational equipment flowing in and out of Faith School throughout the day.

In observance of the Month of the Military Child, the team's parents brought the tools of their trade to school and provided the students with some very insightful hands-on activities, all activities and how they work together to support the military mission at Fort Benning.

Prior to the day of presentations, the students spent time surfing the Internet researching careers of interest to them.

The parents' presentations covered a wide range of topics, from military intelligence and weapons of the future to missions of such organizations as the Rangers and Air Force at Fort Benning. Eager students found invigorating excitement as they tried their hands at such tasks as logistical record keeping, automotive maintenance, soil sampling and basic surveying. Several parents shared interesting accounts of their military tours to such places as Korea, Panama, Sri Lanka, Alaska and the Gulf region. Students and teachers also shared travel experiences. On the day of the presentations, the entire team wore t-shirts that represented places where they had lived or visited.



The team celebrated the entire week as Student Appreciation Week. Other activities for the week included Team and School Spirit Days.

The following parents were presented with certificates of appreciation for their participation: Anthony Johnson, Martin Figueroa, Marc Butterfield, Keith Maresca, Robert Shafer, Anthony Morish, Mark Walder, Kevin Connell, Frederick Culbreth, James Dawson, Eric Panther and James Bennett.

Students complete industrial arts project

C.J. Pegan and Veronica Coranado
Faith Middle School

For the past five school days in Anne Shaw's industrial arts class, eighth-grade students from fourth and eighth periods worked as engineers to construct a device that would control the fall of a marble. It would end up looking something like a roller coaster.

In an article in the December 1997 issue of Tech Directions, it states the guidelines of the activity. "Working in teams of two or three, design and construct a trail or chute that will control the fall of a marble. The marble must start on one corner of the base change direction at least three times, and end up on any other corner. The system should include some type of mechanical machine." The basic objective is for the marble to take the longest possible time traveling from one corner to another.

There were 17 groups participating in the event. Justin Tygart, Giancarlo Santana and Michael Caseres' group for example had a swirl design implemented into their coaster. Although the children were not supposed to interfere with the flow of the marble, a design by Michael Driggers, Adam Roggia and Brittany Burress required the team to blow on the marble. Their design involved rolling their marble into a square stockade, then blowing it around until they had the highest time. It was fun to watch, simple and interesting but difficult to calculate an official time due to its unique design.

On April 20, the first annual Faith School Marble Carnival was held. Every group received a box of Crackerjacks and ran their marble coasters.

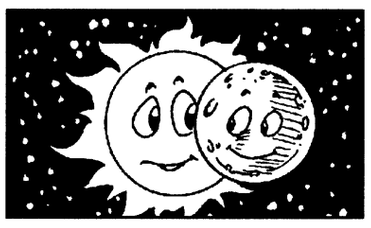
What's happening at Dexter Elementary School

During April, the Month of the Military Child, some Dexter first and second graders had comments to share about their experiences.

"I like being a military child and do you know why I do? Because you get to move and meet new friends everywhere. I have been to Kansas, Fort Stewart, Ga. and Fort Benning."
— Jasmine Moore, 7

"I like being a military child and do you know why I do? Because I don't have to go to the hospital. My dad is a doctor! He works at Martin Army Hospital. I have lived in Maine, California, Florida and Tennessee."
— Alicia Kirby, 7

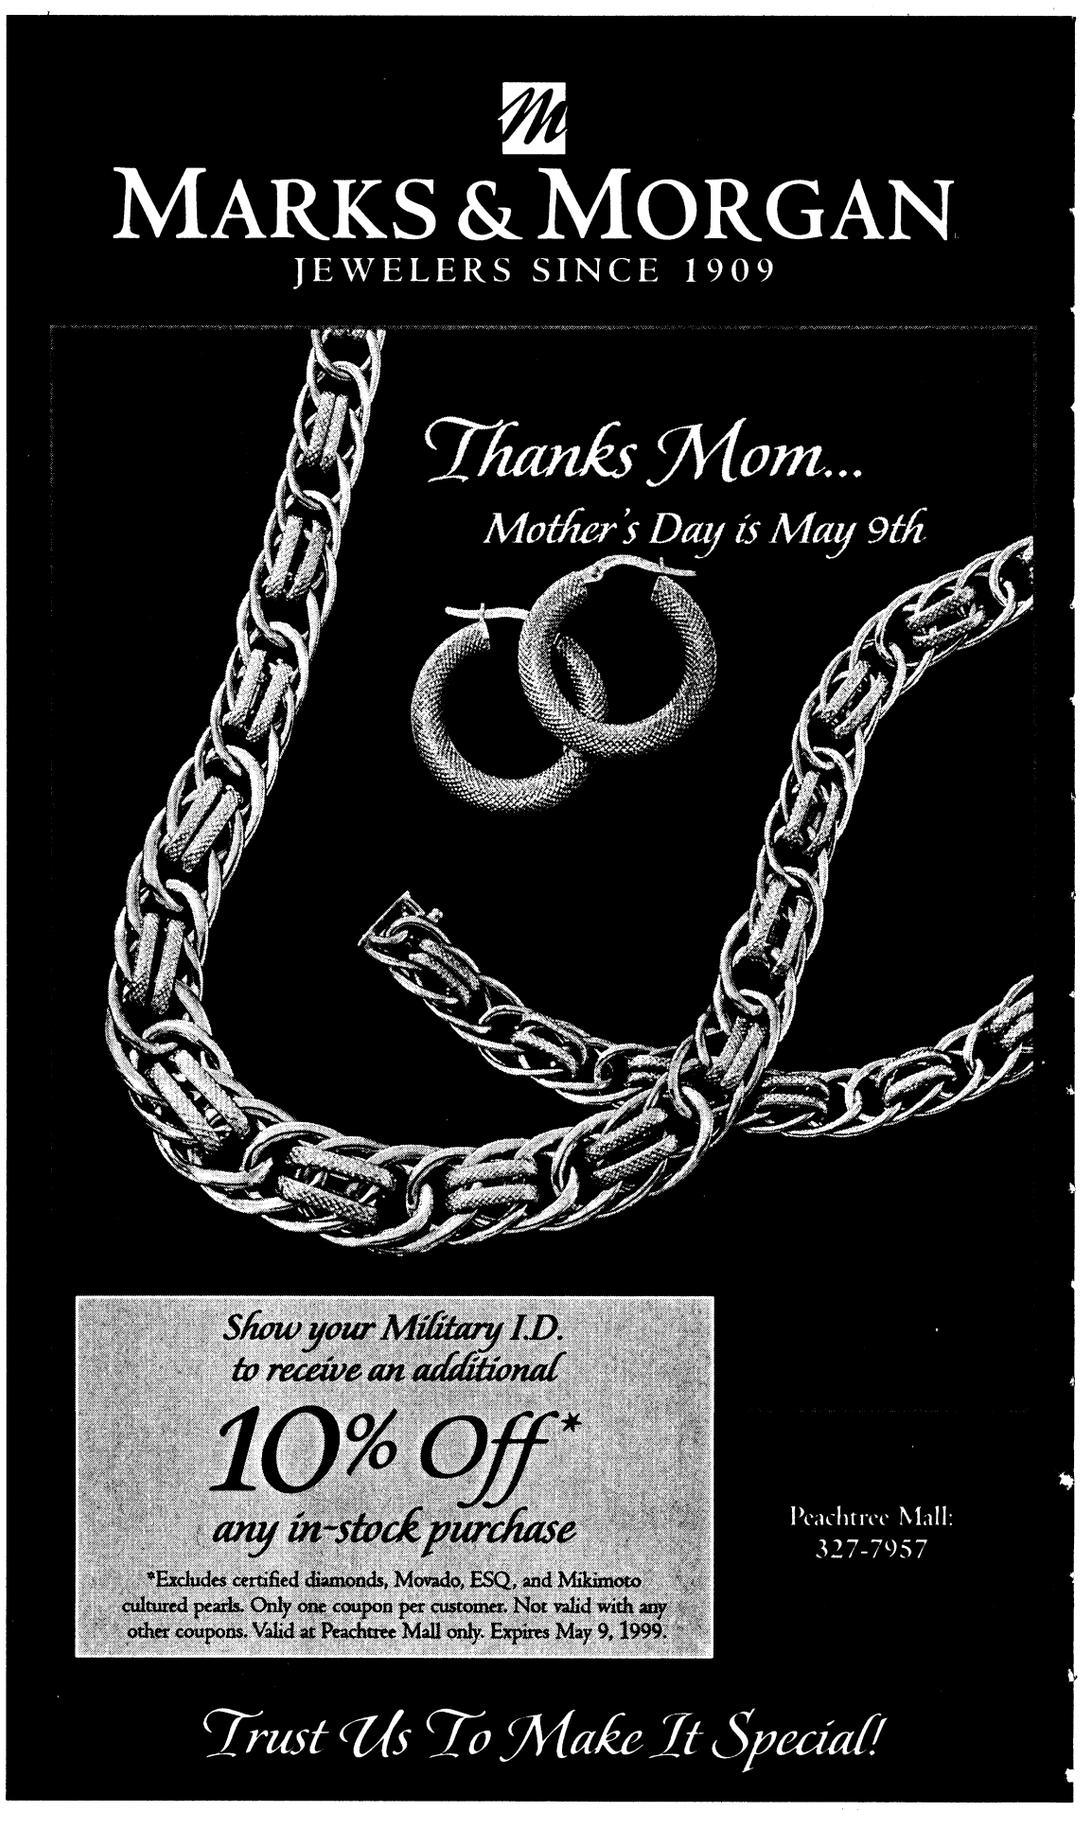
"What I like about being a military child is going all over the country. I moved from Arizona to Fort Stewart, Ga., and then to Fort Benning."
— Jimmy Ramage, 8



"I like being a military child because we get to go to many different places. And some of the places are cool, like Kentucky, Maryland and Fort Hood, Texas."
— Mei-Sean Lee, 8

"I like being a military child because I can go places where I've never been before. I have lived in Fort Hood, Texas, Germany, North Carolina, Fort Carson, Colo. and Fort Benning. My dad got to be the clown at Dexter's Family Night Picnic."
— Hannah Krug, 8

"I like being a military child because I get to go to Dexter School where I can use the computer lab. Our computers have lots of games on them, like Kid Pix, Wiggle Works and Keymates. We also can use CD's like Thinkin' Things and 1, 2, and 3."
— Mac McDonald, 8



The next total solar eclipse viewable in the U.S. won't occur until Aug. 21, 2017. Its path of totality will stretch from Oregon to South Carolina.

The commissary will continue to be open every Tuesday after a Monday holiday.

FAP recognizes Military Spouse Day — The Family Advocacy Program (FAP) wants to remind everyone that Military Spouse Day will be celebrated May 14.

To show appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices that are made by military spouses in the community, FAP will give a tote bag to each military spouse and have a display set up from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. May 14 at Building 2624. The display will feature educational materials on parenting, building better relationships, blended families and other topics.

For more information on Military Spouse Day, call Rebecca S. Welch at 545-3344.

Schools invite parents to scoring conference — All parents who attended the January training in Writing Assessment for Elementary Students are invited to the scoring conference from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday in the Fort Benning Schools' Central Office training room.

Call Kathy Einhorn at 545-8254 by Monday if you plan to attend.

Society holds meeting — The Society of American Military Engineers will hold their May meeting at 11:30 a.m. May 20 at the Officers' Club for pre-meeting socializing and lunch. Wendell Brown, founder and owner of Lightspeech Data Links in Columbus, will present a program on security issues.

For more information, call 545-5141.

Girl Scouts celebrate Mothers Day — The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts will be hosting a mother-daughter celebration from 8:30 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. Saturday. Some of the events include ping pong, volleyball, basketball, talent show, karaoke and arts and crafts. The event is open to girls 5 to 17-years-old and their moms. There is a $7 charge which covers event and Girl Scout registration.

ACS program helps make PCSing easier

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

Although moving has always been a part of military life, the idea of PCSing can raise a lot of questions about the new duty station and home. Soldiers may wonder about the new housing, medical facilities or even the school system. However, with the Army Community Service (ACS) and the Standard Installation Topic Exchange Service (SITES), Soldiers can find out all about their new home before they even clear post.

In 1988, the Department of the Army held a family symposium where it was determined that families needed more information about specific posts before they relocated. As a result, the Army created the RAIS (Relocation Automated Information System) database which provided information on Army installations. A few years later the Department of Defense took the idea even further and created a system called SITES that combined information for all branches of military service.

The SITES system is a computerized database of information pertaining to military installations worldwide. Posts from Fort Lewis, Washington to Baumholder, Germany are hooked up to the system.

Once Soldiers find out where they will be moving, SITES can provide all sorts of information about the new base. Information on the military and local communities, employment opportunities and even find phone numbers for key support services such as billeting and transportation can be accessed.

Since information is updated regularly through relocation programs on individual installations, Soldiers may even be able to get information on housing availability and school calendars.

There are a variety of ways that this information can be accessed. The first way is to stop by ACS and request a SITES booklet for the future installation. It only takes a few minutes, but if the Soldier does not have much time the information can be mailed. SITES can also be accessed via the Internet at www.dmdc.osd.mil/sites. Finally, if a Soldier prefers a hands-on approach but does not have a home computer, they may check out the post library where have a special terminal is set up with a CD-ROM version of SITES.

In addition to offering access to the SITES system, ACS can also help plan a driving route between Fort Benning and the new assignment. If stationed overseas, a video presentation about the new destination can be viewed.

Manager Marsha Collins said "PCSing in or out, ACS has lots of information for the Soldier."

For more information about the SITES system or about other services offered by ACS, call 545-4043 or stop by Building 2624 from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday.

SJA , MPs co-host Fort Benning's first Law Day Run

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

"We couldn't have asked for a better day — it is a great day to race," said Lt. Col. Dana Chipman, deputy Staff Judge Advocate (SJA), moments before the kick off of the first Law Day run.

More than 70 participants and the 988th Military Police Company raced in the Law Day Run in celebration of Law Day. National Law Day was established on May 1 1958 by President Eisenhower to celebrate the American justice system and the many privileges that U.S. citizens possess.

"The main purpose of the fun run was to get the community involved in the celebration of Law Day and to recognize things people normally take for granted such as a fair judicial system," said Capt. Tamara Herdener, Trial Counsel at SJA. "Law Day incorporated many events but the run was one of the biggest events."

The 5K, or 3.1-mile run, was co-sponsored by SJA and the Military Police and began on Vibbert Ave. at 9:00 a.m. May 1. The route took runners in front of the Airborne Towers, towards Infantry Hall, around Doughboy Stadium and back to the start line.

Overall female winner, 13-year-old Amy Maresca, started running five years ago and thought the race would be fun.

"Running is something I really love to do and the exercise keeps me in great shape," she said. "I enjoy running and run in the jogging club at Faith Middle School."

John Detro, overall male winner, said his goal is to beat the young guys as long as he can.

"This race was ideal because being a Ranger makes it hard for me to travel to races and it cost a lot less than other races around the area."

Michele E. Hanson

A group of competitors take off at the start of the 5K Saturday during the Law Day Run.

Participants were divided into nine age groups with awards presented to the top three winners in each age group.

The overall male winner was:
John Detro, 16.01
The overall female winner was:
Amy Maresca, 20.02
The 1st place winners in the age groups were:

Ages under 12 — Kyle Maresca, Anuarite Mubangu
Ages 16 to18 — Jason Sanchez, Cathy Roggia
Ages 19 to 24 — Curtis Garcia, Maureen August
Ages 25 to 29 — Max Boswell, Jenny Cogbill
Ages 30 to 34 — Brian Eiffer, Elizabeth Limon
Ages 35 to 39 — Roy Isusi, Shirley Hawkins
Ages 40 to 44 — Keith Maresca, Stacey Salo
Ages 45 to 49 — Gregory Rucker
Ages 50 and over — Bill Husley, Charlenne Boyett

Faith team heads for world finals

Faith Middle School

The Faith Middle School Odyssey of the Mind team won the Georgia creative problem-solving competition April 17 in all three areas: long-term, spontaneous and style.

The team will next compete in Knoxville, Tenn., during the Odyssey of the Mind (OM) World Finals May 27-30.

Odyssey of the Mind is an international program for students from kindergarten to college age that challenges them to solve problems creatively.

The Faith team is made up of one seventh-grade student, Christopher Herold and six eighth-grade students, Michael Driggers, Kari Eldridge, Ashley Kotwald, Jaxon Lee, Kyle Malone and Laura Rose. Coaches are Anne Trawick and Cindy Givens.

The problem that they entered was "O, My Fair Shakespeare." The team's presentation had to include several criteria including a script that correlated to a scene from one of Shakespeare's plays, a humorous character, original music and lyrics, a technical element, historic setting, 10 lines from a Shakespeare play and a poster advertising the play. The cost limitation for the project was $100, therefore creating the need to use materials creatively. The time limit was eight minutes.

Commission reports wildfire average

Jack M. Greenlee
Directorate of Public Works

Most people remember (and would just as soon forget) a weather pattern called El Nino. This weather pattern wreaked havoc across the country from the West Coast to the East Coast. Some of the devastation included mudslides in California, flooding of the Mississippi River from Minnesota to Louisiana and entrenched low-pressure systems, Beryl and Alberto, in Georgia that eventually flooded Albany. El Nino was caused by warmer than normal ocean currents in the Pacific compounded by a southern jet stream.

For those of you who have been watching the weather, like farmers and those involved in fire fighting, you are probably aware of the dry conditions, not to mention the pollen that was in and on everything a couple of weeks ago. Many people have read or heard about the fires occurring across Florida, "The Sunshine State" (an appropriate name under the circumstances).

More than 2,500 fires have occurred across Florida with the largest fire being the Everglades fire. As of April 22, this fire alone has burned more than 161,000 acres. The smoke from these fires was so bad that Alligator Alley (I-75) had to be closed. Georgia Forestry Commission personnel had been placed on alert to help the Florida fire fighters.

The number and severity of fires are the result of a weather pattern called La Nina, the sister of El Nino. La Nina's weather pattern is marked by lack of rain, just the opposite of El Nino's. The La Nina phenomenon is caused by cooler than normal waters storm system's track from west to east across the northern portion of the U.S. Some may have noticed on the news that the Midwest and Northeast are getting all the rain while the South is drier than normal.

The Georgia Forestry Commission reported that its five-year average for wild fires is at its highest. As of April 22, the state responded to 1,012 wildfires that burned more than 10,000 acres. The causes of these wildfires were debris burning, barbecue grills and campfires. Although Fort Benning has not been located in the area of severe fire weather, it is in a very high fire danger category. Here at Fort Benning, Natural Resource Management Branch fire fighters responded to 83 fires, which burned 1,768 acres of woodland and range areas. All counties to the south of Fort Benning have been placed in a severe fire weather category.

Fort Benning had only 1.29 inches of rainfall in the month of April. For the year, Lawson Field reported a total of 11.58 inches of rain, which is considerably lower than our normal average rainfall of 18.48 inches, leaving a deficit of 6.9 inches as of April 30.

When traveling to a weekend or vacation getaway, park or recreation area, keep the fire danger in mind. Make sure campfires are contained and dead out (cold to the touch) before leaving. Also, after chowing down on all those barbecued favorites make sure the charcoal briquettes are out before dumping your grill. Thanks for doing your part in preventing a wildfire.

DPW plans organization day

DPW will conduct its Organization Day activities from 11:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday. The Self Help Store will close at 11 a.m. Thursday and re-open May 14 at 8:30 a.m. Shop staffing levels will be minimal to allow as many DPW employees as possible to participate in th activities. The DPW Work Reception Section will coordinate all services and emergency responses. To call in a service order or report an emergency, call the Work Order desk at 545-2135.

Safety tips help prevent accidents

Regis Beighley
Directorate of Public Safety

Every year, more than 50,000 adults and children are treated at hospital emergency rooms for injuries associated with power lawn mowers. Probably three times that many people are injured, but fortunately not seriously enough to require professional medical attention. The extra care that you take when mowing grass whether at home or on the job is certainly worthwhile when you consider some of the alternatives.

What's the cause? Serious lawn mower accidents are caused by objects picked up and thrown by mowers; riding type mowers tipping over when used on steep slopes; garden tractors or riding mowers used in reverse and running over or into innocent victims; and contact with the lawn mower blade when clearing grass from the discharge chute or adjusting the machine before the blades have fully stopped.

Victims of hedge trimmer accidents are most often hurt while changing hand position with the trimmer still running, operating the trimmer with only one hand or trying to hold the cord away from the blade.

Don't let accidents cloud the spring and summer days ahead. Instead, follow the safe rules outlined below:

•When buying a power mower, make sure it has a rear guard to protect hands and feet from blades and a downward-aimed discharge chute so debris is less likely to hit anyone nearby.

•Before mowing, rake up wires, cans, rocks, twigs or other litter cluttering the lawn.

•Don't ever cut a wet lawn, since grass often clogs the discharge chute tempting you to clear it with the machine running.

•Always turn off the mower and disconnect the spark plug wire or electric plug before unclogging or adjusting the machine. Even a slight rotation of the blade could start the engine.

•Never refuel a mower while it is running or the engine is hot.

•Mow across slopes if using a walk-behind mower. With a riding type mower, drive up and down slopes for stability.

•If using an electric mower, take care not to run over the cord.

•Push, don't pull, a hand mower.

•Don't smoke near a power mower or near gasoline.

•Use a three-wire extension cord with three-pronged plugs.

•Never clean or adjust the trimmer while it is plugged in.

•Periodically check the cord for cuts, cracks or breaks in insulation. If you must repair the cord, use only recommended electrical tape, available at any hardware store.

•Keep the children and others out of the working area.

•Don't rush the work. Hurrying heightens the risk of getting injured.

Group offers car seat tips

Mark S. Mandell
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

How many times have you made a quick trip in your neighborhood and observed an infant or small child standing in the back seat of a moving car, or worse, sitting on an adult's lap in the vehicle's front seat? Probably a few times at least.

Most parents, of course, know the dangers of not securing a newborn or child in a car seat, and most states now require children to be properly buckled up. However, until recently, few people understood that children placed in car seats were still at extreme risk in the event of a motor vehicle accident.

That's because as many as 85 percent of parents install and use seats incorrectly, according to a comprehensive study released in February by the National Safe Kids Campaign. The group, which analyzed 17,500 installed child car seats over 17 months, found that a majority of parents or caregivers made two or more mistakes in installing and using car seats. The campaign's findings included the following:

•63 percent of the installed car seats were not secured tightly enough. When a car seat is loose, a child can hit his or her head if the car seat bounces in an accident. Parents should not be able to move an installed car seat more than one inch from side to side;

•33 percent of children were restrained with loose harness straps, which could allow a child to be ejected in a crash;

•20 percent of the children were in seats with improperly routed harness straps; and

•11 percent of infants less than a year old and weighing less than 20 pounds were observed riding in a forward-facing position rather than facing the rear of the car. Safety experts strongly recommend that all infants less than a year old and weighing less than 20 pounds ride in a rear-facing position. Because their neck muscles are not sufficiently developed, they could be critically injured in a crash if they are facing forward.

Nearly one-third of the 604 children under age 5 who were killed as occupants in motor vehicles in 1997 were in safety seats, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA). NHTSA also estimates that, in the same year, about 30,000 infants and children were injured riding in car seats.

However, parents should not have to shoulder all, or even most, of the blame for improper car seat installation.

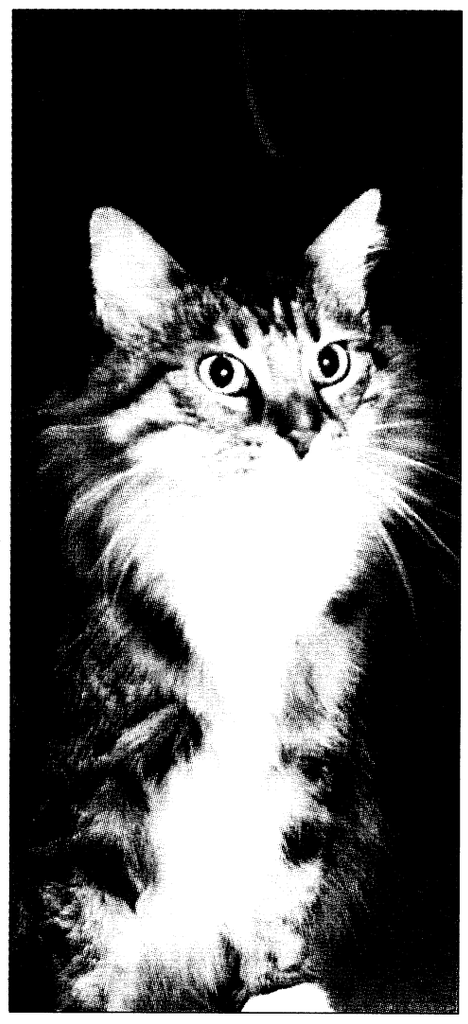
With more than 100 models of car seats and more than 300 models models of passenger vehicles with a range of safety-belt systems available, it's no wonder that proper installation is difficult.

In an attempt to solve this problem, NHTSA announced plans in December for a universal system for installing car seats. The plan combines aspects of Canadian and European systems that employ three dedicated anchors on rear passenger seats of new cars to hold car seats firmly in place.

Given the variety of car seats and vehicle belting systems, the National Safe Kids Campaign and other safety groups offer the following tips for proper installation and safety.

•Read the car seat instruction manual as well as your motor vehicle owner's manual for directions on proper installation. Some vehicles require attachments, such as a locking clip, to secure a car seat.

•Only buy a child safety seat with a certification label that shows it meets or exceeds Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard (FMVSS) 213.



•Babies should be placed in car seats facing the back of the car until they are one year old and 20 pounds. The safest position for the car seat, if it can be properly secured, is the center of the back seat.

•The straps on the child safety seat must be snug enough so that only one finger can fit between the belt and the child.

These are by no means the only safety tips for proper car seat installation.

Additional information and tips can be obtained from the following sources: National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, (800) 424-9393, www.nhtsa.dot.gov; National Safe Kids Campaign, (800) 441-1888, www.safekids.org; and SafetyBeltSafe U.S.A., (800) 745-SAFE, www.carseat.org.

BBB

Organization advises consumers to do homework

Better Business Bureau

A lot of information is circulating about possible technical disturbances in the year 2000. The Year 2000 problem, also known as Y2K, appears in computer systems programmed to recognize dates with two digits instead of four. These applications will be unable to determine whether a year is 2000 or 1900, causing system failure or incorrect results.

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) advises consumers and businesses to do some homework before deciding on solutions to any Y2K problems.

If you are concerned about your computer, be aware that the Y2K problem is manageable if you take time to correct it. Act now to ensure all hardware and software is Y2K compliant. Most computers built after 1995 are Y2K compliant. Compliance means that your computer is programmed to advance to the date 2000. If your computer isn't Y2K compliant, however, you may have to make some changes to the computer. Contact your PC supplier or manufacturer or talk to a computer consultant about the problem and possible solutions. Also, if you have appliances or other equipment that may be affected by Y2K problems contact the manufacturer of the product and ask questions before buying new appliances or equipment.

The Y2K problem also has the ingredients that make it ripe for fraud opportunities. The BBB cautions consumers and businesses to be aware of possible scams that are expected to pop up once the millennium hits, such as:

•Opportunists looking for investors to finance phony Y2K solutions.

•Consultants or businesses selling services or software that don't fix Y2K problems as promised.

•Solution providers pitching miracle Y2K solutions at prices that sound too good to be true.

•Exorbitant prices being charged for services and so-called "survival supplies" (for example bottled water, candles, communication devices, canned foods, "guaranteed" access to fuel, etc.).

•Claims that software, hardware or electronics are Y2K compliant when they are not.

Information about Y2K issues, which addresses common problems and some realistic solutions, are available from a multitude of sources. The FTC offers a free telephone number for consumers to call with questions about Y2K. The number is (888) USA-A-Y2K.

National campaign focuses on preventing teen pregnancy

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

The U.S. has the highest teen pregnancy and birth rates in the western industrialized world and Georgia has the third highest rate in the nation. Eight out of 10 teen pregnancies last year were unintended and eight of 10 pregnant teens are not married.

May is National Teen Pregnancy Prevention Month. The Teen Health Center, a branch of the Columbus Health Department, has planned a month of teen educational and recreational activities to address this problem. Each week in May, the Teen Center will sponsor events under the topics of abstinence, parent and community involvement, the role of the teen male and youth development. The Teen Center phone number is 321-0619.

Year-round patient education and health service with a focus on unwanted teen pregnancy prevention is provided free of charge to all teens at the center.

Parents who believe they cannot talk to their teens about sex should reconsider. A Princeton University study found that 70 percent of teens stated they wanted to hear more about sex from their parents. The study found that when asked why teenage girls have babies, three out of four teenagers said lack of communication between a girl and her parents is a reason. Tips for parents who wish to keep the lines of communication open include avoiding criticism, sarcasm and learning to listen to teens with respect without interrupting.

Teenagers who abstain from sex primarily say having sex is against their moral or religious values. A University of Minnesota study found that teens who have a strong relationship with their parents are also more likely to abstain. Teens of both sexes said that the most common reason girls have sex is because the boyfriend wants them to.

Recommendations from the Bureau For At-Risk Youth for preventing unwanted teen pregnancy include teaching teens self-respect, assertiveness training and advising teens to avoid high pressure situations and settings such as unsupervised parties.

MACH Briefs

•The Fort Benning Inspector General's Office (IG) is providing another avenue for beneficiaries who have complaints about TRICARE. The IG staff has received training to facilitate issue resolution should a Soldier have complaints about TRICARE. The IG's office and Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) are working jointly to provide information and resolve issues for any servicemember.

Questions or complaints can be addressed to the MACH Patient Affairs Liaison at 544-1817 (7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.) or the IG office at 545-5611 or 545-7211.

•MACH offers an After Hours Clinic to accommodate patients with acute minor illnesses. The clinic hours are from 5:30 to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Patients can call 544-3082 or 544-3081 for same day appointments. Currently 15 appointments are available on a daily basis. Well baby and well woman appointments are not available at the After Hours Clinic.

Life threatening emergencies should utilize the Emergency Room.

•MACH also offers an automated telephone line to get information about TRICARE, to leave a message for your Primary Care Manager, cancel scheduled appointments and hear hours of operation for clinics.

The number is 544-CARE.

•MACH offers limited allergy services. An interim immunotherapy clinic will open on the ninth floor of the hospital. The clinic will operate from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and 1:30 to 4 p.m.

All allergy immunizations will be provided in the main Family Practice Clinic effective Monday.

The Department of Family Practice and Community Medicine will be assuming the local allergy medical directorship on Saturday. At that time the immunotherapy clinic will relocate to Winder Health Clinic.

For more information, call 544-1267.

Mother prepares child for world

Chaplain (Capt.) Robert Mckee
11th Infantry Regiment

One of our greatest blessings is to have a godly mother. We form a bond with our mothers literally from the moment of conception.

reflections

God has blessed women with the sacred duty of bringing his most precious creation into his world. While God forms our very beings, our mothers carry us in their wombs until we can face the world on our own.

As we enter the world as helpless infants, our mothers tend to our every need. When we grow older, we turn to mom to make us feel better when we are sick and to listen to our problems when no one else will. Most of us know that mom will be there for us regardless of the situation. Our mothers truly want the best for us. Unfortunately, our mothers are only human and they cannot always be there for us. Therefore, a mother must prepare her child to face the world on his or her own.

As a mother prepares her child to face the world, she encounters the great challenge of raising a godly child in a society that is drifting away from God and into sin. A good mother knows that the only one we can always count on is God. God can always help us and he truly wants the best for us. God knows us completely. The Psalmist writes, "O Lord, you have searched me and you know me. You know when I sit and when I rise; you perceive my thoughts form afar. You discern my going out and my lying down; you are familiar with all my ways. Before a word is on my tongue you know it completely, O Lord." — Psalm 139:1-4

Yes, God knows us completely! If we put our trust in God, he will be there to care for us when no one else will. We can turn to God in our time of need and he will always be faithful to help us. God loves you and wants you to know that he truly cares for you. What you must do is to put your full faith and trust into God's hands and let him guide your life and provide for your needs — he will.

On this Mother's Day, honor your mother and put your faith and trust in the Lord. God will bless you as you serve him. Always remember that God loves you.

Abused may conceal presence of violence

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

It is estimated that every 15 seconds a woman is battered. Every year, domestic violence results in almost 100,000 days of hospitalizations, almost 30,000 emergency department visits and almost 40,000 visits to a physician. In 1994, approximately 3,140,000 cases of child mistreatment were reported to child protective services. That same year, an estimated 1,271 children died as a result of abuse or neglect.

The toll on victims of domestic violence is staggering. Robert Davis, former director of the National Institute of Justice said, "Only recently have people come to realize that victims experience crisis reactions similar to those experienced by victims of war, natural disasters and catastrophic illness." And domestic violence is a crime.

The most important first step we need to recognize is domestic violence exists with greater frequency than we may have assumed, even within the military community. The battered woman is in your workplace, however, she or her abuser may attempt to conceal that presence. There are children in your housing areas who are witnessing or enduring violence in their quarters on a regular basis.

Too often I hear supervisors of abusers say, "But sergeant ... is a good Soldier." My reply is, "A Soldier who abuses his or her spouse or child is not a good Soldier." Domestic violence is a crime and must not be tolerated. Those who protect the abuser should realize by doing so they enable the abuser to continue his or her abusing.

You may have an adult friend who you suspect is being abused. Ask questions. The abused person will rarely announce they are being battered. Be direct and ask the person, "Are you in danger?" "Do you fear for your safety? Your children's safety?" Listen to your friend and try to understand their situation.

Believe the abused person. The battered person will normally minimize the extent of the abuse. By simply owning up to the truth, the victim is taking a giant leap forward in bringing it to an end and finding help. Encourage your friend to seek help while remembering it is not your responsibility to rescue the person. All suspected child abuse or neglect should be reported to the proper authorities.

It is important to note that you not confront the abuser. Clinical experience suggests that confrontation with abusers by untrained professionals may endanger victims and should be avoided at all cost.

Help can be found for the abused and the abuser. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is a good place to begin. For more information, call 545-1760.

Graduation represents new freedom

Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan
Main Post Catholic Chapel

May is the month of graduations. Families across America either have someone or know someone who is completing high school or college.

The event of a graduation is an emotionally powerful one for both the student and his family. For the student it is a joyful time. It marks the completion of much hard work and in many cases, it represents new freedom as he departs from home. He is excited for all the world seems to lay at his feet.

For the parents, it is a somewhat more difficult time. They realize with the departure of their children that they are no longer needed as much as before. They see the departure of a son or a daughter as an unwelcomed reminder of their increasing age. Life in many ways has passed them by and they wonder what the future holds. It is not unusual to see tears at a graduation, tears of joy and tears of loss.

The Ascension of Jesus was a similar event. The disciples and followers of Jesus had grown to love and respect him deeply in the three years that they had worked together proclaiming the Kingdom. When he was brutally executed, their hearts were torn apart.

Huddled together, three days later, they were astonished and overjoyed to see him, risen and standing before them. But now he was leaving again. Why?

Like a timid child nudged out of the "nest" by wise parents, Jesus knew that he had to leave so that the greatest miracle of his ministry could happen, the coming of his spirit. He truly loved his followers. By leaving, he cracked open their spiritual shells so that they might emerge to discover their wings in his Kingdom as true sons and daughters of the Father.

His ascension was the key and the final chapter of God's great plan of salvation.

Directorate of Community Activities

The Fort Benning Morale, Welfare and Recreation will feature specials in honor of Military Spouse Appreciation Day. All specials require presentation of ID, must be accompanied by sponsor, with the exception of the Family Advocacy Program and will be limited to May 14 only.

The following represents components of the promotion:

•"Bring Your Spouse to Lunch Today" will be featured at the Officers' Club and the Golf Course Snack Bar. Any military spouse accompanied by their sponsor will receive 25 percent off a lunch entree of their choice.

•The Follow Me Golf Course and the Fort Benning Bowling Centers will offer a complimentary 18-hole greens fee and a complimentary game of bowling to any military spouse with presentation of ID.

•The Automotive Skills Center will offer an oil, lube and filter change for all military spouses for the special rate of $15.

•The Family Advocacy Program will give a tote bag to each military spouse and have a display set up at Building 2624 from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. with educational materials on parenting, building better relationships, blended families and other topics.

For more information on Military Spouse Day, call Rebecca Welch at 545-3344.

Scouts learn bicycle safety

Fort Benning Cub Scout Pack 27

More than 40 cub scouts of Pack 27 participated in a jointly hosted bicycle rodeo Saturday in the White Elementary School parking lot.

During the event, hosted by Boy Scout Troop 2 and Pack 27, cub scouts learned about bicycle safety, had their bicycles inspected for mechanical condition, rode their bicycles through a confidence course and practiced throwing newspapers from moving bicycles.

"The rodeo was designed to teach safety and bicycle skills before the summer bicycling season," said Cubmaster Maj. J.D. Fairey.

Lt. Col. Bill Kirk, a parent volunteer, added, "The boys and parents had a great time and are better prepared to have a safe summer."

For more information on cub scouting on Fort Benning, call the Cubmaster at 687-7710.

Choosing reliable, proper care for child can be confusing

Mark S. Mandell
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

One of the hardest and most important decisions for any parent to make is whether to put a child under the care of others. And with so many parents finding themselves needing to work these days to make ends meet, the question often becomes, "How can I be certain the caregiver or day care I choose is good care?"

Choosing reliable and proper care for your child can indeed by confusing.

Thankfully, there are a number of available resources that provide parents with a road map to navigate the child care dilemma.

According to the National Network for Child Care (NNCC), an Internet resource that unites the child care expertise of the nation's leading universities "good child care requires three important things: one, a caregiver who provides your child with care and guidance and who works with you and your family to make sure that your child grows and learns in the best way possible; two, a setting that keeps your child safe and healthy; and three, activities that are suited to your child's stage of growth and that help the child develop mentally, physically, socially and emotionally."

The NNCC suggests parents consider the following questions when choosing child care:

•What type of caregiver is best for your child?

According to the NNCC, a good caretaker should be well-trained and warm and loving toward children. It advises "whether your child is an infant, toddler, preschooler or school-ager, the caretaker should encourage the child's interests and stimulate the child to explore and discover new things." Make sure when interviewing caregivers to find out about their training and experience, as well as their outlook on child rearing and discipline.

•Are the facilities safe and healthy?

Check the setting you select is suitable for your child — no matter whether you choose in-home care, family child care or day care center care. All games, toys and furniture should be in good repair and appropriate for the children. And make sure the number of children in the group is small enough so that your child receives the individual attention he or she needs.

•What will it cost?

It is important to research the costs of the different kinds of child care available in your area (including the cost of transportation to and from the child care setting), as well as any local, state or federal financial assistance you may be qualified to receive for child care.

According to the NNCC, there are three main types of child care arrangement: In-home care, family care and center-based care. They can be summarized as follows:

•In-home care. This type of caregiver either comes to, or lives in, your home, and can be a relative, friend or someone you hire. In-home care is an attractive, less-costly option if you have a number of children requiring care, or a child that needs special care because of physical, mental or emotional problems.

•Family child care. The NNCC explains this kind of care "is provided in the home of the caregiver, who is often a mother with children of her own," with only a few children being cared for at any one time. This may be an appealing option if you are a single parent raising a child alone, or have only one or two children needing care.

•Center-based care. Child care centers (which includes nursery schools, preschools and parent cooperatives) are established centers where children are cared for in a group setting away from their homes. One benefit of care centers is that they often have organized programs of activities to help your children learn. It is important to first examine the center's facilities, staff qualifications and staff and child ratio.

Though one type of care arrangement may appear best for your child, the NNCC stresses that "any kind of child care can be good if the care provides the warmth, supervision and individual attention your child needs," and adds that it is quite normal to want to use more than one kind of care for your children — "for example, in-home care for your infant and center-based care for your preschooler."

Book offers care tips

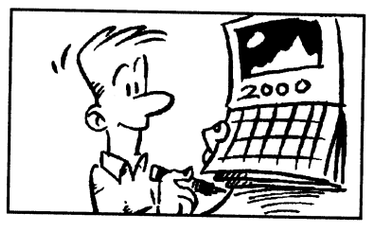
Georgia Department of Human Resources

"Growing Smart and Healthy Babies," a handbook of tips for helping young children get a good start in life, is being distributed to all daycare providers who are regulated by the Georgia Department of Human Resources (DHR) Office of Regulatory Services, Child Care Licensing Section (CCLS).

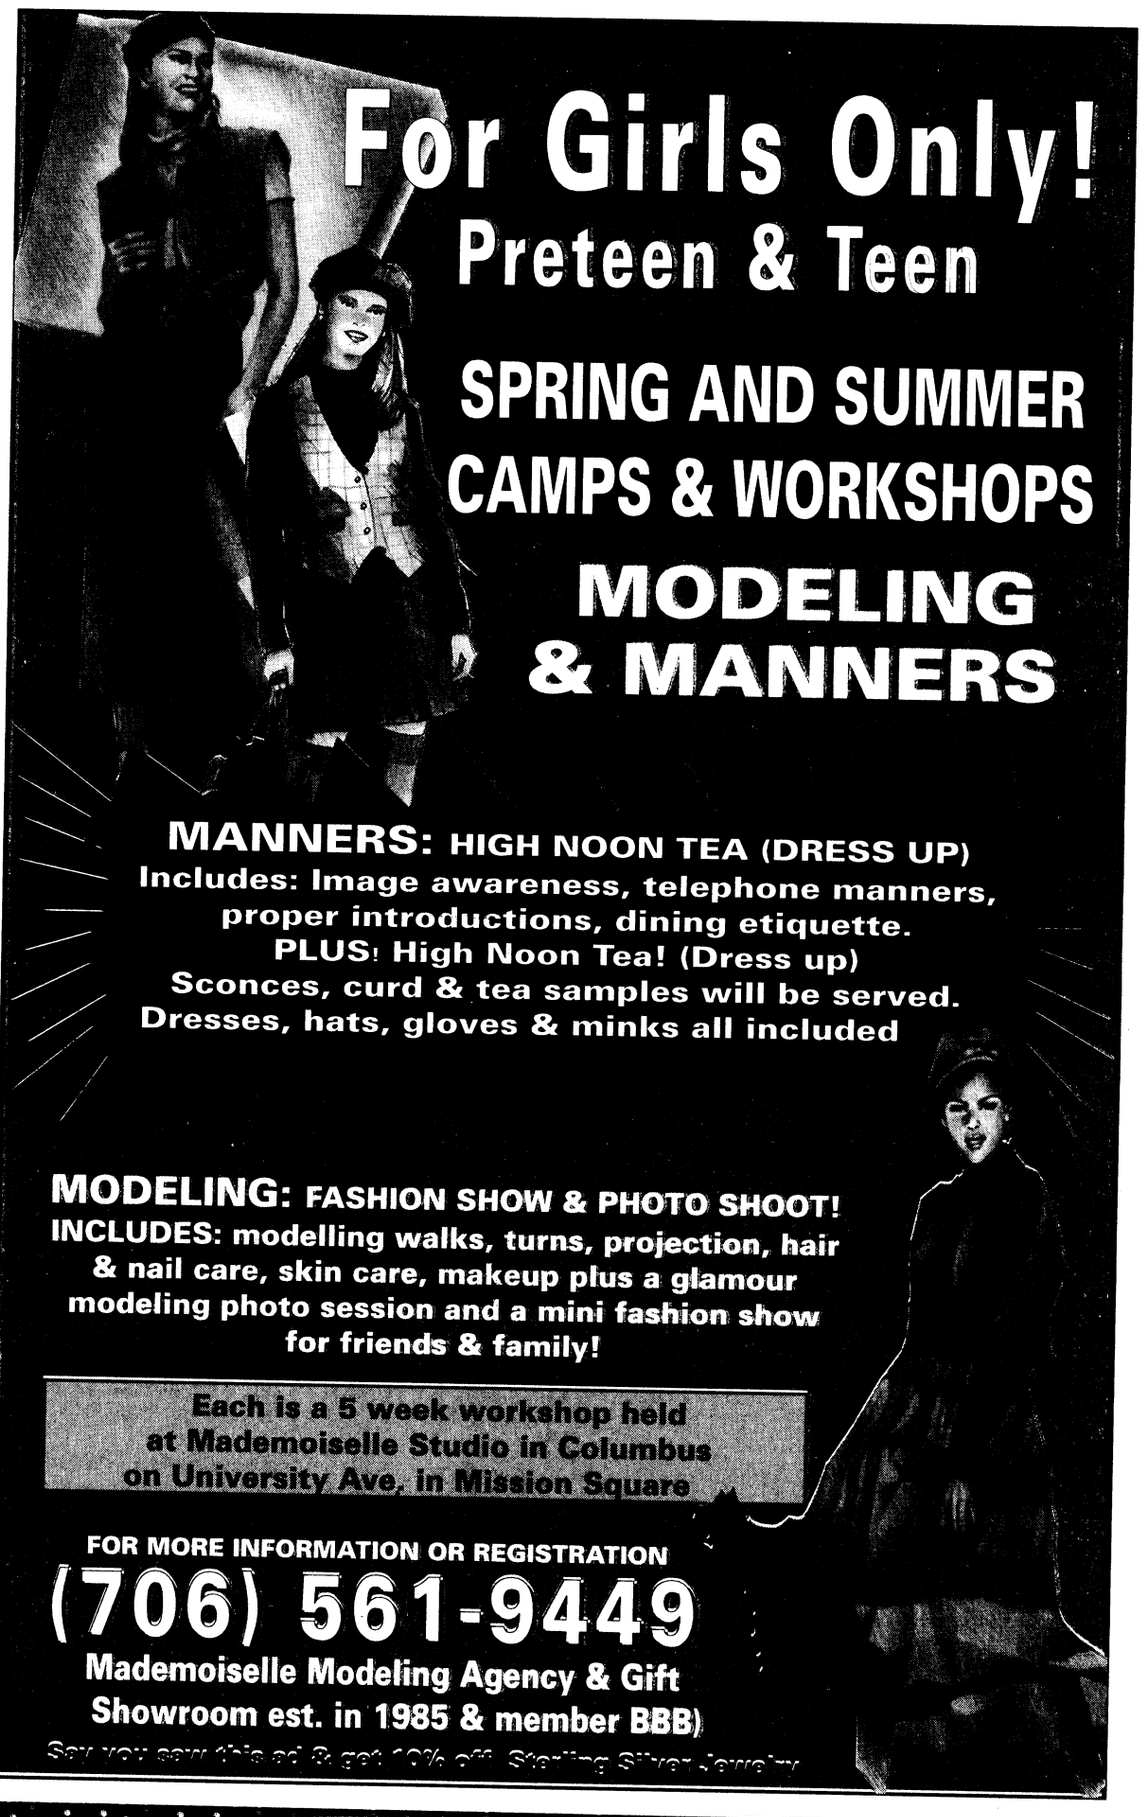
"The book provides guidelines to help child care professionals promote mental, physical, social and emotional development in infants and toddlers," said Jo Cato, CCLS director. "It's based on research on early brain development that has been done in the past few years. The guidelines are voluntary and not required for a daycare license or registration. However, we are encouraging everyone who takes care of children professionally to become familiar with the learning goals and to use some of the suggested activities and materials. Parents can also use the handbook to help them in selecting day care for their child."

Sample tips offered in the handbook:

•Children under 1-year-old will imitate sounds others make and start distinguishing words. Talk, sing and read to them every day. Expand sounds, maintain eye contact and use gestures as well words to communicate. (Language skills)

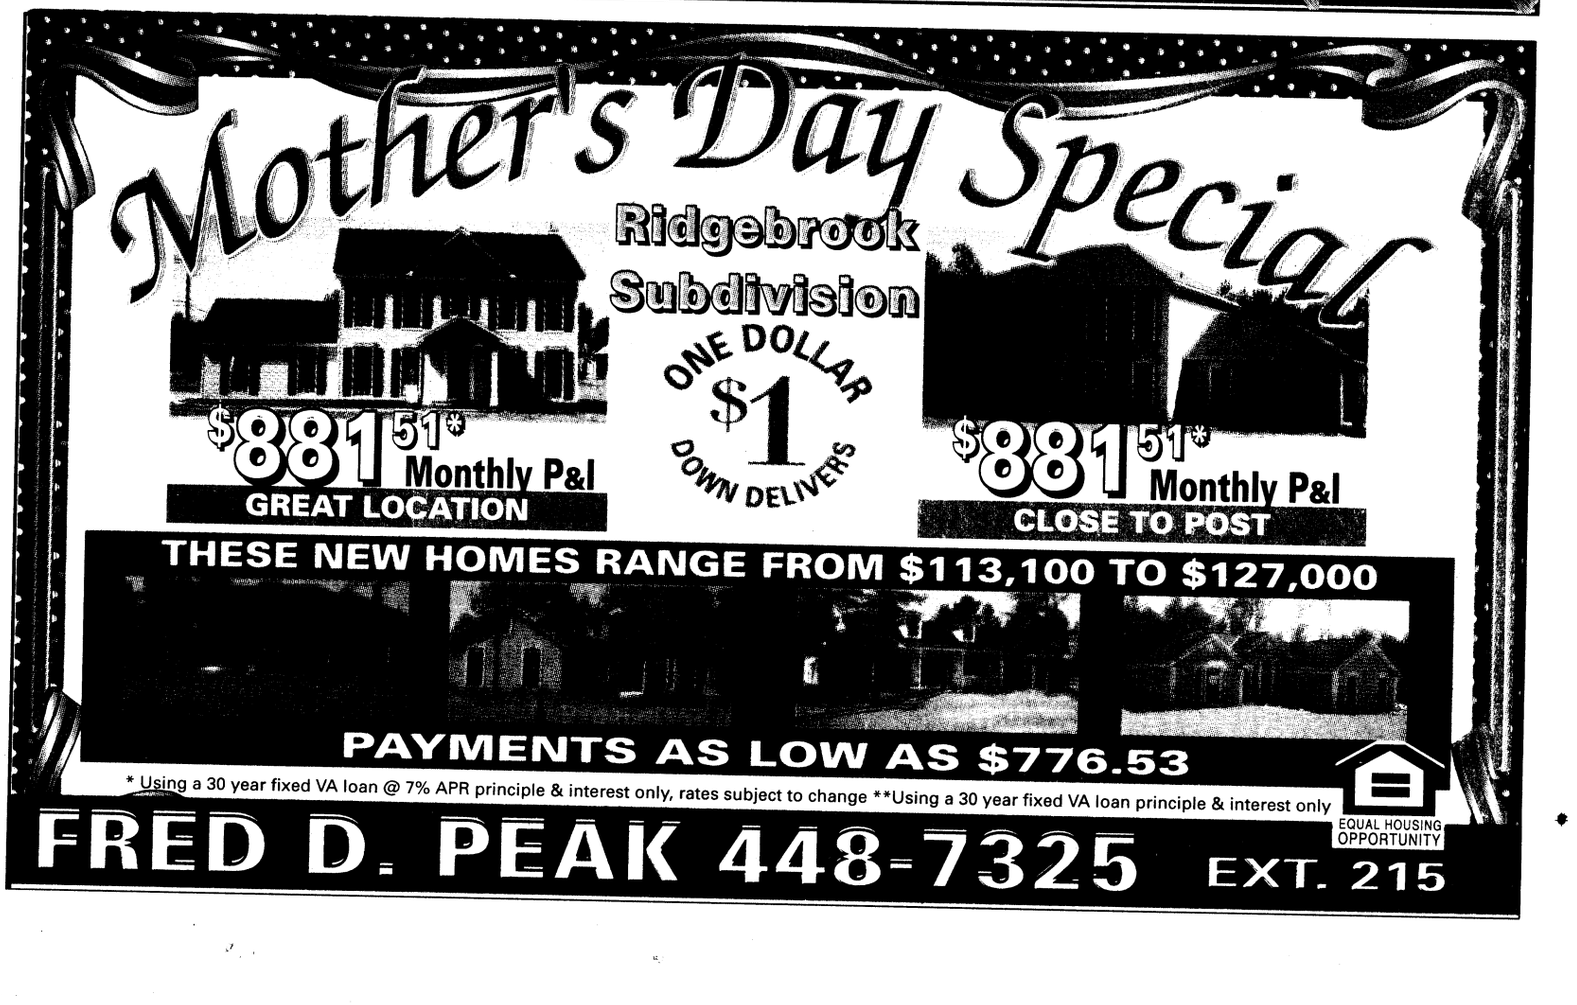


•Children 1 to 2-years-old can hold pencils or crayons to scribble. Help them develop hand and eye coordination by providing finger paints, crayons and large markers. (Physical development)



•From 2 to 3-years-old, children focus less on pictures in a book and more on images created in their own mind. Ask them to guess what will come next in a story, and to picture things that have happened in the past or might happen in the future. (Cognitive skills and thinking)

•After 3-years-old, children can learn to take turns and share, but may have difficulty. Provide opportunities for children to play together and negotiate social conflicts, such as dramatic play and play with blocks. (Social and emotional development)



To obtain a copy of "Growing Smart and Healthy Babies," contact the Child Care Licensing Section, DHR Office of Regulatory Services, Two Peachtree Street NW, Room 32.458, Atlanta, GA., 30303 or call (404) 657-5562.

To correct the calendar over the centuries, years ending in "00" are not leap years unless the first two digits are divisible by 4. Therefore, the year 2000 is a leap year, but 1900 and 2100 are not.

Demolition derby

During the U.S. Rugby National Military Championships this past weekend, 14 men's teams from around the armed forces and four women's teams battled it out at the Woodruff Farm Soccer Complex in Columbus for the chance to take home the top spot.

After two days of tournament play, the ruggers from Camp Pendleton came out on top as the overall champs. The Air Force select team took first in the open category.

1/507th nets post volleyball title

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

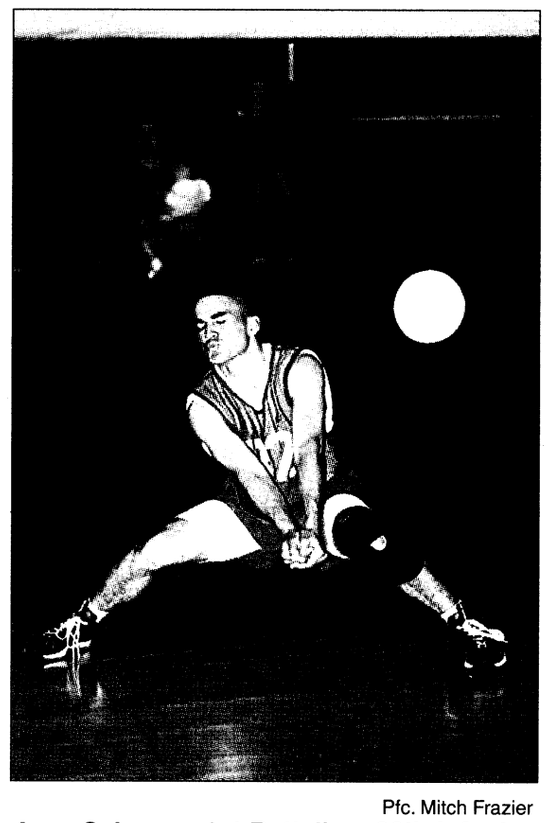
Rebounding from a loss the night before at the hand of Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, paratroopers from Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Regiment, bounced back to win the post volleyball championship April 29.

"These guys gave us a real challenge," said Co. E team member John Garand. "They came out here and beat us last night, and I guess it was our turn tonight."

That turn came after an opening set that gave Co. E flashbacks of the night before when the HHC team logged the first five points of the game. After a bad volley, Co. E gained control of the court and failed to answer to HHC's run before the ball changed possession again.

A failed volley by HHC sent the ball back to Co. E, but the paratroopers failed to answer to the five-point deficit and only put one on the scoreboard before again sending the ball back to HHC's Norberto Rodriguez, who marked another one up for HHC before sending the ball back to Co. E, who were now trailing by four.

Co. E returned with their own five-point run at the hand of team captain John Garand before losing the ball to Jamie Ojeda who failed to turn the possession into a score. Co. E's Jeremy Moore turned the return possession into another run for the paratroopers, this time with three points before HHC stopped the play with a time-out.



If the uneven scoreboard didn't reveal how the rest of the game would go, the next five plays told the story as Co. E dominated over HHC, sending the Kelley Hill warriors one set behind as the first game wrapped up with Co. E winning by three, 15-12.

The now-proud paratroopers took to the court in the second set and blanked HHC with a 3-0 run to open the set. But the HHC Soldiers weren't giving up. They logged another two points before returning possession to Co. E's Moore who converted for a point and started a 12-3 Co. E run that ended up in the victory circle.

"This is the ultimate accomplishment," Garand said after winning the tournament. "We've been competing in the tournament for a little over a month now, and it's nice to see all of our hard work pay off."

Garand said that while he and some of his teammates are PCSing and will not be able to compete in next year's competition, he knows that his fellow paratroopers will fill the void and try to claim the title again next year.

"It won't be me, but I am sure that Echo will be back out here again winning another Fort Benning title," he added.

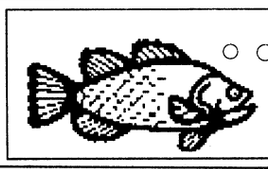
Making Life More Fun

Are Aphrodisiacs Real?



(NAPSA)-"To be loved, be lovable," wrote Ovid, the poet of love, 2,000 years ago.

Over the years, however, many people have tried other methods. That legendary lover, Casanova, for instance believed eating oysters encouraged passion. Vanilla has been used for centuries as a romantic stimulant and some say cloves and nutmeg added to a glass of wine can spice up one's life.

Some swains swear by romantic settings, such as scented candles and soft music. Others find the libido is all in the mind. That is, if they feel sexy, chances are their partner will, too. Many women believe the road to the right mood can be smoothed with the help of a new personal lubricant called Silken Secret. Long lasting and available in comfortable, easy-to-use individual applicators, it can be found at major drug and retail chains.

For a free sample or to learn more call Silken Secret at call 1-800-848-5900 or see www.astroglide.com on the Web.

To set the mood, many say, dine on oysters, fillet of sole, asparagus and vanilla ice cream with chocolate syrup.

Dive Into Marine Magic And Mystery At The Country's Newest World-Class Aquarium

The Aquarium At Moody Gardens Opens June 1999 On Texas' Galveston Island

(NAPSA)-Imagine an under water adventure that allows you to explore the mysteries and beauty of ocean life from the North Pacific to the Antarctic as well as from Australia's Great Barrier Reef to the Caribbean's pristine waters. Now open your eyes and step into The Aquarium at Moody Gardens, the newest world-class aquarium on the North American continent.

Opening June 1999, The Aquarium at Moody Gardens, which holds 1.5 million gallons of water and displays more than 10,000 marine animals, is one of the largest aquariums in the U.S. With 130,000 square feet of incredible exhibits and guest services as well as interactive adventures and educational outreach programs, visitors of all ages will be submersed in the vivid beauty and ornate complexity of the ocean world. Built on two viewing levels, guests will leisurely stroll up and down wide walkways to experience the exhibits from above and below the water's surface.

"We are extremely proud to open The Aquarium at Moody Gardens," says Mike Riley, executive director of Moody Gardens, a natural sciences entertainment and educational complex located a short drive from Houston on the Texas Gulf Coast.

"We are the only aquarium in the U.S. that highlights marine life and the natural habitats of four different oceans around the world. This facility, like our Rainforest Pyramid and Discovery Museum, is dedicated to helping the public understand and respect the precious nature of our Earth and its surroundings. At the same time, The Aquarium at Moody Gardens is a great, relaxing destination for you and your family to have a great time," adds Riley.

Having fun while learning about the ocean's plant and marine life is literally a walk in the park as visitors begin their adventure by entering the North Pacific exhibit. In this section of The Aquarium, amateur oceanographers can observe playful fur seals as they frolic on rocky shores and dive below the surface of the water that is kept a chilly 50 degrees to recreate the creatures' original habitat from Northern California to the Gulf of Alaska.

Guests then will journey to the depths of the Great Barrier Reef and Coral Sea to view a vibrant coral reef and its many colorful marine inhabitants. Here visitors will come face-to-face with more than 200 species of fish, such as angelfish, stingrays and sea urchins.

The next stop on the tour has guests watching King Penguins in a true-to-life display of their native Antarctic habitat. This exhibit, which features underwater panels that showcase the penguin's swimming prowess, recreates the frigid, rocky beaches of the South Georgia Islands, from where these birds were transported before hatching under the supervision of The Aquarium's watchful curatorial staff.

The journey concludes in the Caribbean exhibit, with a breathtaking experience for visitors as they walk through one million gallons of water eye-to-eye with thousands of specimens of marine life. The exhibit provides guests the sense of diving underwater with sharks, reef fishes, snappers, eels, seabasses and other marine creatures.

Moody Gardens offers an array of educational, fun family activities including the Rainforest Pyramid, Discovery Museum, the Imax and Imax "Ridefilm" Theaters, Palm Beach, Colonel Paddlewheeler Boat and the new Moody Gardens Hotel. For more information about The Aquarium at Moody Gardens or an overview of the Moody Gardens campus and its many offerings, call (800) 582-4673 or access www.moodygardens.com.

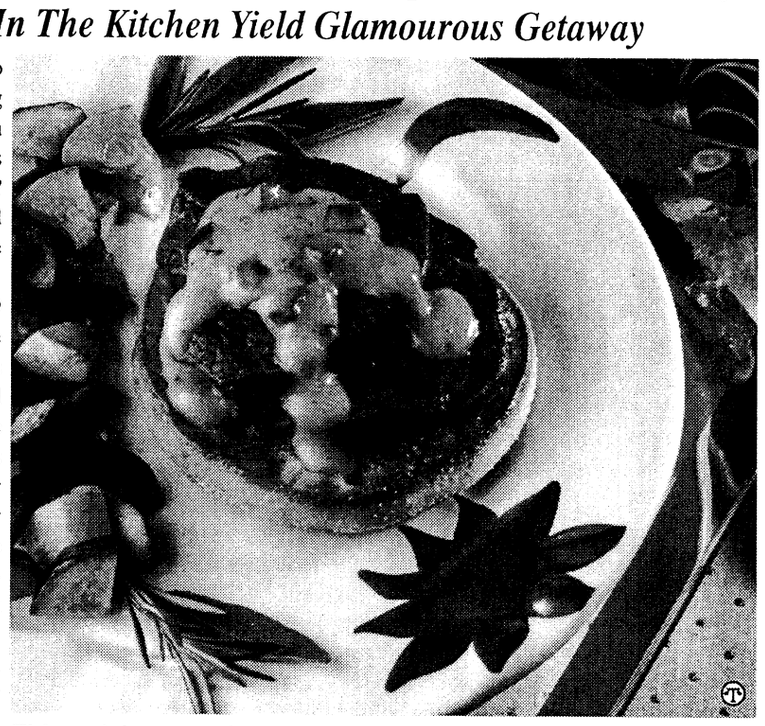
Bays English Muffins 1999 "Great Escape" Recipe Contest: Creativity And Ingenuity In The Kitchen Yield Glamourous Getaway

(NAPSA)-Do you spend too much time in the kitchen worrying about meals instead of engaging in more rewarding pursuits-such as planning a well-deserved vacation? With a little ingenuity you could be on your way to a dream escape to London, Paris and Rome.

The Bays English Muffins 1999 "Great Escape" National Recipe Contest challenges cooks across the country to submit an original recipe of no more than five ingredients (not including Bays English Muffins, salt, pepper or water). The recipe can be for anything from a breakfast favorite to your own prescription for a last-minute meal. All recipes must include Bays English Muffins.



One Grand Prize Winner will receive an unforgettable 10-day Great Escape for two to London, Paris and Rome. Visit the Bays Web site at www.bays.com for more detailed information on the contest Grand Prize.

Recipes will be judged by a panel of food experts on the basis of taste, appearance, imagination, practicality, appropriateness for an English muffin and must meet the "Great Escape" criteria of calling for five or fewer ingredients.

Six finalists will be notified by mail after May 15, 1999 and flown to Chicago on June 3, 1999 for final recipe preparation and judging on June 4, 1999. The trip to Chicago includes round trip airfare, if applicable, from the airport nearest the finalists' home, single hotel accommodations for two nights and some meals. All other expenses not identified (including gratuities) are solely the finalists' responsibility.

The first place winner and one guest will be flown to London, Paris and Rome. The trip includes round trip coach airfare, deluxe accommodations and $500 spending money.

The second place winner will receive a Compaq™ Presario 5050 personal computer. The third place winner will receive Hartmann™ "Intensity" luggage, and the fourth place winner will receive a Panasonic™ 13" TV/VCR combination. One fifth and sixth place winner will each receive a $100 Aveda™ gift certificate and one case of Bays English Muffins. Thirty runners-up will each receive a gift package of Bays English Muffins and a Bays chef's apron.

This quick entree for two features a prepared sauce and ready-to-mix ingredients for an elegant, no-fuss meal.

How to Enter

To enter the Bays English Muffins "Great Escape" Recipe Contest, send your original "Great Escape" recipe that uses one or more Bays English Muffins to: Bays "Great Escape" Recipe Contest, 225 W. Ohio Street, Suite 600, Chicago, IL 60610.

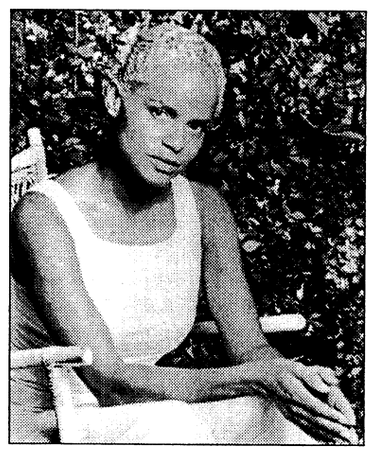
You may submit more than one recipe, but each should be mailed separately along with your name, address and a daytime phone number, plus one proof of purchase from a package of Bays English Muffins. Recipes must be submitted on a 8-1/2" x 11" sheet of paper. All entries must be received by March 31, 1999.

Each contest entry becomes the property of Bays Corporation and will not be returned. Arizona, Florida, Maryland and Vermont residents need not submit proof of purchase. Void where prohibited. Open to U.S. residents ages 18 and older. Subject to complete official rules. Official rules available by writing to Bays "Great Escape" Recipe Contest at the above address, calling 1/800 FOR-BAYS, or by visiting the Bays Web site at www.bays.com.

Beef Tenderloin for Two

1/3 cup prepared Bearnaise sauce
2 tablespoons sun-dried (or fresh) tomatoes, finely chopped
2 Bays English Muffins, lightly toasted
1 clove garlic, lightly crushed
2 8-oz beef tenderloins
Salt and pepper to taste
1/2 teaspoon savory leaves, crushed

Sauce: Mix Bearnaise sauce with tomatoes; set aside. Rub toasted muffin halves with garlic cloves; set aside.



Tenderloins: Slice tenderloin steaks in two slices each. Season to taste. Saute in butter for three minutes per side for rare and four minutes per side for medium. Place two steak slices on each muffin half. Top with sauce.

A Mother For Every Child

(NAPSA)-Victoria Rowell—star of "Diagnosis Murder" and "The Young and the Restless"—is one of TV's busiest actresses. She is also a star for foster children and their parents. Once a foster child herself, Rowell credits her foster family with preparing her for success. "My foster family was loving and strong. That helped me to become a loving and capable adult," says Rowell.

To promote quality and stability in foster care, Rowell is the national spokesperson for Casey Family Services, a private non profit agency helping vulnerable children and families. "I am proud to be part of this effort," says Rowell, "We want to get more caring, committed people involved as long term foster parents and encourage community support for foster families and foster children, especially young adults making the transition from foster care to independent living." For more information about helping children and families in your community, call Casey Family Services at 1-888-799-KIDS.

NEWS OF HEALTH

Disease Prevention Is A Bargain

(NAPSA)-A stitch in time can save not only lives, but can save money for taxpayers.

Public health professionals typically measure their victories by the human illness, injury and deaths they prevent. However, a new report released by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) takes a business yardstick to public health promotion and prevention strategies.

The report, titled "An Ounce of Prevention...What are the Returns?," outlines the cost-effectiveness of 19 public health strategies, such as bicycle helmet laws, colorectal screening and vaccination. It also projects the costs and effects that accrue from each strategy during a person's lifetime.

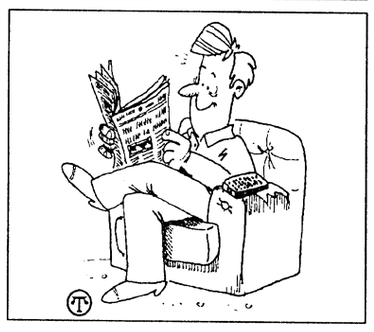
For example bicycle-related head injuries cost $3 billion each year, yet using bicycle helmets reduces the risk of head injury by 85 percent. The measles-mumps-rubella (MMR) vaccine saves $16.34 in medical costs for every $1 spent. Drinking water with the right amount of fluoride is an inexpensive and cost saving way to prevent cavities from forming in teeth, both for adults and children.

"While successful public health interventions are important because of their effectiveness and outcomes, this report demonstrates that many interventions are also cost-effective," said CDC Director Jeffrey Koplan, M.D., M.P.H. "The strategies highlighted in this report provide excellent value for the money invested and some save money. Decision and policy makers in the health care arena will find this a convenient reference tool."

Another example: smoking causes an estimated 420,000 deaths each year. In 1993, estimated medical care costs attributed to smoking totaled $50 billion. Over the course of a lifetime, smokers incur $10,000 more in health care costs than non-smokers.

Cessation rates increase with counseling, literature and nicotine replacement therapy, costing less than $2,000 for every year of life saved.

"An Ounce of Prevention..." is available online at www.cdc.gov/epo/prevent.htm or by calling (404) 639-4334.



A new report outlines the cost-effectiveness of public health strategies, such as the use of bicycle helmets.

Benning picks up ACOE award

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

While a billboard declares Fort Benning's tradition of excellence to those who drive on post, it was announced to the rest of the world last week that the "Home of the Infantry" is truly the best Army installation in the world.

During two formal ceremonies at the Pentagon May 6 and 7, Fort Benning was recognized as the 1999 recipient of the Army Communities of Excellence (ACOE) Chief of Staff of the Army (CSA) Award and Commander-in-Chief's (CINC) Award for Installation Excellence.

The ACOE awards program recognizes those installations that have improved their overall performance and demonstrated excellence in delivering high quality products and services to their customers — the Soldiers, family members, Department of the Army civilians and everyone else who works on, lives on or uses Army installations, according to Maj. Gen. R. L. Van Antwerp, Assistant Chief of Staff for Installation Management.

More than 50 community members from the tri-community including Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst traveled to Washington D.C. to represent the installation as it picked up the CSA award for the seventh consecutive time and CINC award for the fourth time this decade.

"Fort Benning has been blessed with a great team. It's actually a team of teams," Ernst said of the Soldiers, civilian employees, contractors, volunteers, retirees and supporting communities who work together to make the post great.

While the ceremony may have been a time to recognize the winners, Ernst said it was also a symbol of what is truly important — taking care of Soldiers and their families, civilians and retirees.

"That's what our Army is really all about," he said.

During the CINC award ceremony May 7, Fort Benning was honored alongside the top Air Force, Navy, Marine and Defense Logistics Agency installations.

"Today, we salute the best of the best — the finest installations and bases in the United States military," said Deputy Under Secretary of Defense (Installations) Randall Yim. "By their selection, these honorees have proven that they are truly the steel and sword of freedom and the backbone of the American military."

Since Fort Benning will fall victim to the "Benning Rule" next year, which prevents back-to-back CINC victories, Sarah McLaney, chief of the Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management, said the post can only compete for the CSA unless it finds other competitions to enter.

"If there's another award out there to be won, we're going to find out what it is and win it," she said. "I think we have really won it all, but there is still room for improvement."

McLaney said winning awards such as the CINC and Georgia Oglethorpe is wonderful, but the competitions are about more than just adding a few awards to the trophy case.

"It's more about constantly, continually improving every day to be better tomorrow than we are today," she said. "That's what it's really all about."

Best Ranger

Teams gather for grueling 72-hour competition

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet Staff Writer

Less than half of the 43 Ranger teams that began this year's David E. Grange Jr., Best Ranger Competition were able to finish the 72-hour test of physical endurance and mental strength.

The annual competition, named after former Ranger Training Commander, Lt. Gen. David E. Grange Jr. has tested hundreds of Rangers over the past 17 years with three days of running, climbing, swimming and shooting to determine who is the best of the best in America's Army.

This year, those best Ranger honors went to Staff Sgt. Kevin Teran and Staff Sgt. Jim Moran, 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

"It is great to be done, but I can't believe it is already over," said Teran, who finished fifth in last year's competition. "All of our hard work and training really paid off for us this weekend."

The grueling three-day challenge began early Friday morning with a modified physical fitness test that included not only the normal regiment of push-ups and sit-ups but a 6-mile run as well.

"We tried to get out and get in front during the 6-miler because we knew how important it was to set a good pace," said run winner Sgt. John Pugh, 75th Ranger Regiment. "We knew our finish there would determine how the rest of the day and the weekend would go."

That finish catapulted Pugh and his teammate into the next event alongside the 39 remaining teams as they took to the water and obstacles of Ranger Training Brigade's Malvesti Field.

As the first morning turned into afternoon, the list of competitors began to shrink.

"A lot of the people we saw fell out during the foot march because of dehydration and fatigue," Pugh said. "We (he and teammate Sgt. Lee Baumgardner) set a watch and every 30 minutes the alarm would go off and remind us to drink water whether we thought we needed it or not."

"It was just our way of staying hydrated," he added.

The foot march event spanned nearly 17 miles and required the Rangers to battle the pain that had begun to set in on the thirty-some Rangers who were left.

"We went all out in trying to find the points. It was our number one concern," Pugh said. "We didn't think about anything else but what we had to do to finish."

"That was the way we handled the whole thing," he said. "We just took each event at a time and gave it everything we could."

As the Rangers made their way to the finale of the foot march, the hot Georgia sun was already beginning to rise on the second day of the event that had to this point claimed many Best Ranger title-seekers.

After less than 30 minutes of rest, it was once again time for these Rangers to go again, but this time the challenge was not so much physical. For the next event, the Rangers would have to rely on their minds to execute a series of combat tasks in a testing sequence of knot tying, movement to contact, weapons assembly, map reading and

Suspects to be prosecuted

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two suspects have been apprehended for the recent series of bomb threats at Fort Benning.

A civilian employee has been titled for calling in bomb threats to the post Commissary, while a Soldier has been apprehended for a bomb threat on Kelley Hill.

Post officials said they intend to prosecute the suspects to the fullest extent of the law. For the civilian, trial will be in Federal Court and could result ina prison term of five years for each count. The Soldier apprehended faces a general court martial and the possibility of a lengthy prison term.

According to Fort Benning Chief of Staff Col. John Latimer, bomb threats are serious crimes.

"They are more than a simple inconvenience — they are crimes against our Soldiers, their families, our civilian workforce and our community," he said. "They take Military Police away from their other law enforcement duties and cause general disruption in our way of life, and in some cases, they risk the lives of our folks.

"It is our intention to find the people who commit these crimes, arrest them and prosecute them to the fullest extent of the law."

Reserve unit deploys

More than 40 Soldiers from a Fort Benning U.S. Army Reserve unit began a 30-day deployment to El Salvador May 7.

More than 100 additional Soldiers from the 718th Engineer Company, Combat Support Equipment (CSE) are scheduled to depart by June 6 for the second wave of Hurricane Mitch relief efforts, in which the 718th Eng. Co. plans to continue the infrastructure rebuilding efforts.

"Our primary mission while in El Salvador will be to upgrade a 7-mile section of road along the Pacific Coast from El Coco to Agua Fria and rechanneling and rebuilding a dike on the Rio Chilagnguera," said 718th Eng. Co. (CSE) Commander Capt. William S. Schaper.

The construction efforts will not only improve transportation to the area through the improvement to one of the major roads in the area, it will also reroute the Rio Chilagnguera which broke its banks and has killed approximately 200 people.

Debate of TV programming looms

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

I don't think anyone would argue with the fact that TV has become the fruit of life. With the click of a button a mass of action, comedy, suspense and drama can be accessed any second of any day.

commentary

Back in the olden days (which is anytime before 1978 for me), there wasn't the kind of variety we have now. Channels were pretty limited and so was the type of programming. Now, we have the option of thousands of channels at our fingertips. These multitudes of channels feature a million different things intended to suit anyone's fancy, no matter how odd it is.

Growing up, I don't think I was what you would call a TV addict. Yeah, I watched my fair share of He-Man and She-Ra and all of the other cartoons that taught the finer art of how to punch someone's lights out, but I would never spend hours upon hours staring at that colored screen like some kids do today.

I'll have to admit there was one show however, that for some reason I could never seem to get enough of — the Facts of Life. From the time I was 7 until I was about 12 or 13 that was my favorite show. When the Facts of Life came on, the world ceased to exist. It was also a very happy time for my mother because that meant a whole 30 minutes of silence.

Don't ask me why I loved that show, it still remains a mystery to me. All I know is I wanted to be just like Jo. You know, the tough one with the attitude. I used to try to dress like her and act like her because she was, in some warped way, my hero.

Now, before anyone feels compelled to laugh and point at me the next time they see me on the street, I urge you to remember a time when you were equally fanatic as I was about some equally cheesy show. I can bet that almost everyone wished they were one of their favorite characters growing up.

If it wasn't Farah Fawcett and her incredible "wings" or Fonzie with his greasy hair and leather jacket there were an unlimited number of other stars to thank for lots of other dorky trends.

I guess the point I'm trying to get to is that TV influences us whether we realize it or not. When we see something that strikes us the right or wrong way, we soak it in and keep it stored in the back of our minds. This is probably even more true with younger children. Hence the "Jo phase" I went through. Of course this is nothing compared to some of the ridiculous things others have tried emulating from TV and movies.

The debate of the influence of television on America looms large. There are those who blame everything on TV. Then you have the people who don't think there should be any regulation whatsoever and argue that TV doesn't influence anyone.

I stand somewhere in the middle on this one. I don't really believe in regulation, because the fact of the matter is most people are smart and sane enough to not take their program literally. Just because somebody karate-chopped and drop kicked his best friends after watching Power Rangers when he was six, doesn't mean he will do the same when he is 20. And if some grown person decides he is going to go lay in the middle of the street because of something he saw in a movie, then he needs to get his head checked because a few screws may be loose.

Then again, parents shouldn't allow their six-year-old child to watch Friday the 13th or Faces of Death. They should have guidelines about what is appropriate for their child's age and actually care enough to enforce them. If that means sacrificing cable so they can be sure this will happen, then so be it. Parents need to explain to their children the difference between make-believe and real life. Heck, it didn't take me long to figure out that I couldn't have a motorcycle and attend a preppy girls school in New York once my mother explained the reasoning to me.

I have a feeling that the government will soon be cracking down on TV programming. It's sad to think that a few people who do stupid things and won't take care of their children are going to ruin it for the rest of us. We should be able to watch what we want without having this right taken away.

Military celebrates centuries of support

Jill Sanders Crider
Installation Volunteer Coordinator

Today is Military Spouse Appreciation Day which may bring about a few questions as to why we should recognize this special group of our military community.

commentary

Former President Ronald Reagan declared this a special day beginning in 1984, however, milit y spouses have been "on the scen long before that. From "Campfollowers" and "If the Army wanted you to have a wife, they would have issued you one!" to "Uncle Sam's Brides" and now their own special recognition day! The saying, "You've come a long way, baby!" has monumental meaning to this group!

For more than 200 years, military wives have braved wars to tend to their husbands. They have crossed oceans, deserts and plains and survived great personal upheaval all in support of whatever war or conflict or new assignment was put before them. There are accounts of these ladies with Washington's Army at Valley Forge; alongside Confederate and Union Soldiers, and when Horace Greeley said, "Go West young man!" that meant their wives packed up their wagons and went too!

WWI was the first of four major conflicts. During this time, ladies became "waiting wives." When WWII began and many husbands became Soldiers overnight — their ladies (a.k.a. "Rosie the Riveter") took on defense jobs and became the force behind the "war effort." With hostilities in Japan, families were sent home from the Pacific, but there was a report of a master sergeant's wife who was captured in Manila and held in an interment camp. Military wives were also lost at Pearl Harbor alongside their husbands. During the Korean and Vietnam Wars, the wives watched these conflicts being fought by the politicians, while many of their husbands' lives were lost to an unsatisfactory conclusion. During the Cold War, the military began to "socialize" these families into modified role models and in the late '70s and '80s the face of the "typical military spouse" began changing. Studies were conducted and the needs of the families gained great interest.

At times wives fought as bravely and sacrificially as any Soldier. And although the military has experienced great change, the role of the military spouse hasn't ..... they have been and still are expected to be an uncomplaining enlistee, wife or husband, mother or father, social expert, caterer, decorator, athletic coach, tour guide, foreign language expert and exceptional volunteer whenever and wherever they are asked.

So it is with these points in mind, that this special group of people are owed our gratitude and appreciation today. Say thanks to your Family Support Group Leader, take your wife out to lunch today or tell your husband to go play golf, have your kids say a special thank you and make a homemade card expressing their gratitude.

For without them this tapestry of military life we lead would be missing the thread that holds it all together.

Day recognizes military spouses

Being a Soldier is a tough, challenging profession, but being the spouse of a Soldier is probably even more difficult.

Spouses are the ones who hold families together while units are deployed, and in today's Army, units are deployed a lot.

Our spouses are the ones who, more often than not, enroll the kids in school, take them to scouts, re-establish the home at a new duty station, act as volunteers at post activities and many times work to help make ends meet.

Therefore, it is only fitting that we set aside a day to show our spouses how much we appreciate them and the contributions they make every day.

Today is that day. Today is the day to recognize the contributions spouses make to our Army and their families. Today is the day to thank your spouse for standing by you.

Thank your spouse for playing a significant role in helping you be a Soldier in the best Army in the world.

We did not get to be the best military on our own, we had plenty of support from our spouses, who love us, care for us and stand by us.

Spouses, thank you for your love and support during the past year.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller wanted to know why she could sign guests into the Post Exchange, but not the Commissary.

The Commissary response: In accordance with Department of Defense and Department of the Army regulations, not allowing guests to be signed into the Commissary helps ensure that only authorized shoppers have the opportunity to shop. These regulations do not govern AAFES' guest policy.

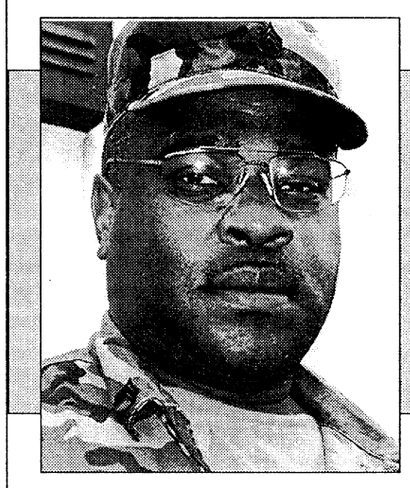
Call: Caller suggests that battling cages open up during the week after school so that little league players can practice.

He said there is always a long line of people waiting to use the batting cages on the weekends and all the fields are taken for practice after school.

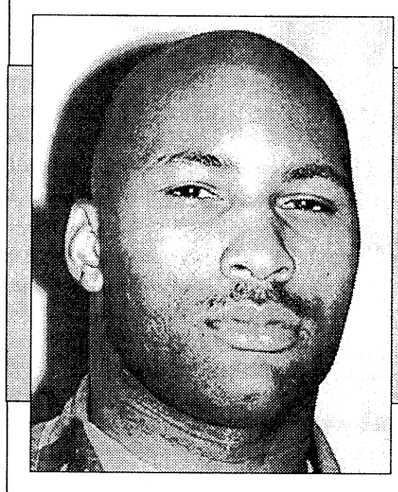


Directorate of Community Activities response: The chief of the Outdoor Recreation Division said the batting cages were closed at the specific times the called tried to use it due to maintenance problems.

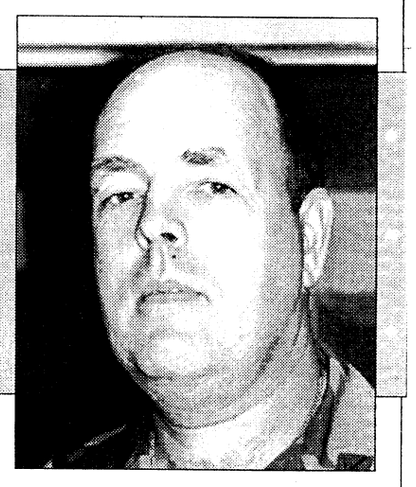
He said the cages require continuous daily maintenance and every effort is used to provide it. Most common problems causing down time are ball jams, balls not fed to hopper properly and loose line tubes.

The caller was given a phone number to call to set a team practice time at his convenience.

VARIOUS VOICES

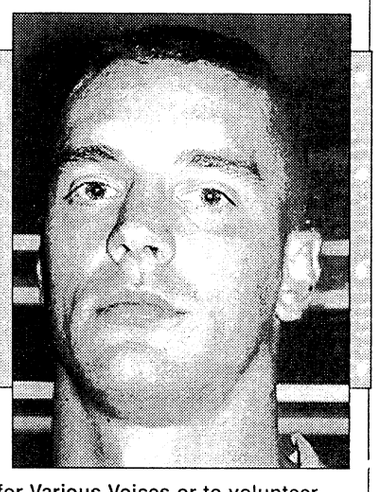


Do you think today's television has a bad influence on children?



Staff Sgt. Maurice Day, 608 Ordinance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) — "Very much so, TV gives children the wrong impression of life.

Julie Bessa, Fort Benning resident — "Yes, I think television is making kids grow up too fast."



Marine Sgt. Todd Nelson, Marine Representative Office — "I think that the more people try to control TV, the more curious they become."

Lt. Col. Kelly Mayes, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "If parents supervise and children watch more educational programs there should not be a negative impact."

Carrie Martin, AAFES — "Yes, TV shows too much violence and bad language."

1st Lt. Sean Cook, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "There is a lot more violence and sexually explicit things on TV. Parents should monitor the programs their children watch."

'Smash and grabs' on the rise

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

As you approach your vehicle, you notice broken glass and realize your high-priced stereo system is missing.

Since the beginning of fiscal year 1999 there have been 78 reports of what law enforcement officials call "Smash and Grabs" on Fort Benning. A smash and grab (SG) is nothing more than criminals gaining access to a vehicle and taking anything and everything they can.

"We are trying to make the community aware of the increase in SGs and inform residents about how to protect their personal property against this type of larceny," said Master Sgt. David Jones, NCOIC of the law enforcement division.

According to Jones, radar detectors, car telephones and stereo equipment are common targets for thieves. "When property of this nature is stolen, it is necessary for owners to provide the police with basic information about the property, which will aid in the investigation and possible recovery of the items," he said.

Fort Benning residents and employees should record all serial numbers of high valued property and permanently mark the property with some type of marking such as, last name, last four digits of your social security number or first initial of your last name along with your last four numbers.

Keeping a record of serial numbers, makes, model numbers and brand names of each item of value in your car and home is the first step residents should take to protect their property.

"Saving receipts will help show proof of ownership, date of purchase and the value of the items," Jones said. "Only 17 percent of the people reporting SGs were able to provide serial numbers. It is extremely difficult if not impossible to recover stolen property without the serial number."

Law enforcement officials said that prevention is the best way to protect your personal property from being stolen. Preventing SGs begins with not storing high value property inside your vehicle while you are away from it or at night when you are asleep.

"Do not advertise your property by driving around with your hi-fi stereo blaring for everyone to hear. This does nothing more than say, 'come steal my stereo,'" Jones added.

The MPs are using aggressive patrolling techniques to combat crime on Fort Benning and to help prevent SGs. If anyone sees suspicious activity in housing or barracks area, notify the MP station immediately by calling 545-5222 or 545-5223.

Deployment: Provides relief

"The river continues to flow through an El Salvador town, and a lot of people are still without power," Schaper said. "We hope our Soldiers will make an impact on the people and improve their living conditions."

"Their is a lot that needs to be done," said 718th Eng. Co. (CSE) 1st Sgt. Marlyn Wilson. "A lot of people have put the Central American hurricane relief efforts on the back burner, but we will be continuing the mission and providing continuity to the area."

Although this tenant unit from Fort Benning may lie in the shadows of the active duty units, they are prepared for the demands of this mission, according to Schaper.

The 718th Eng. Co. (CSE) does not consider themselves to be the average "weekend warriors," Schaper said. All of the Soldiers not only conduct their monthly training exercises, but most will come in during the week after they have finished their regular job to help out projects on post.

The Soldiers remain proficient in their skills by completing projects such as the Fort Benning Archery Range, Kelley Hill tank trails and the landing strip at Mckenna MOUT site. The 718th Eng. Co. also supports the Best Ranger Competition by grating out the hand-to-hand pits and spreading gravel on the Bayonet Assault Course.

"We have always had a real world mission on Fort Benning and now we are facing a real world mission deployment," Schaper said.

The Soldiers said their spirits are high and they are ready to help.

"We are totally prepared for this mission. The unit is together and the troops are qualified for the job," said Sgt. James Simpkins, heavy equipment operator. "We have been training for this mission and have done this stateside, now it is time to do this somewhere else."

The Soldiers loaded a charter bus and took off from Harmony Church and headed to Maxwell Airforce Base, Ala., where they will load a plane and take their hopes and high sprits to help out those who have been pounded by the storm.

11th Regiment makes move to new location

11th Infantry Regiment

After moving out of their headquarters in Building 2749 in 1991, the 11th Infantry Regiment was relocated to Building 76 and then to Building 75. During his command of the 11th Regiment, Col. Victor Bero pledged to move the headquarters to a more suitable location.

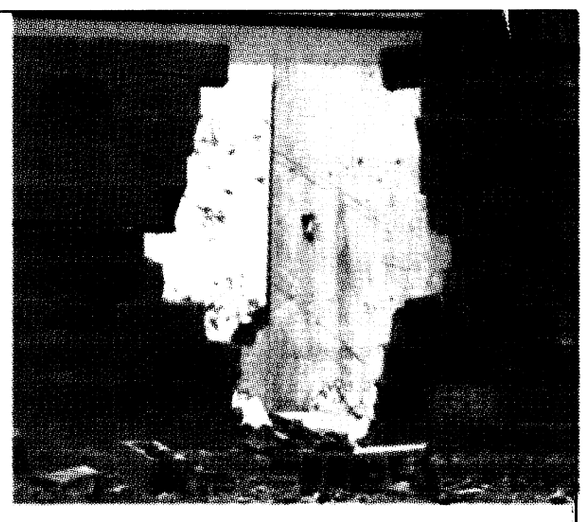
After months of searching for a location large enough to accommodate a regimental headquarters, Bero and the Director of Public Works, Col. Randy Buck, decided to move the regiment back to its old home in Building 2749.

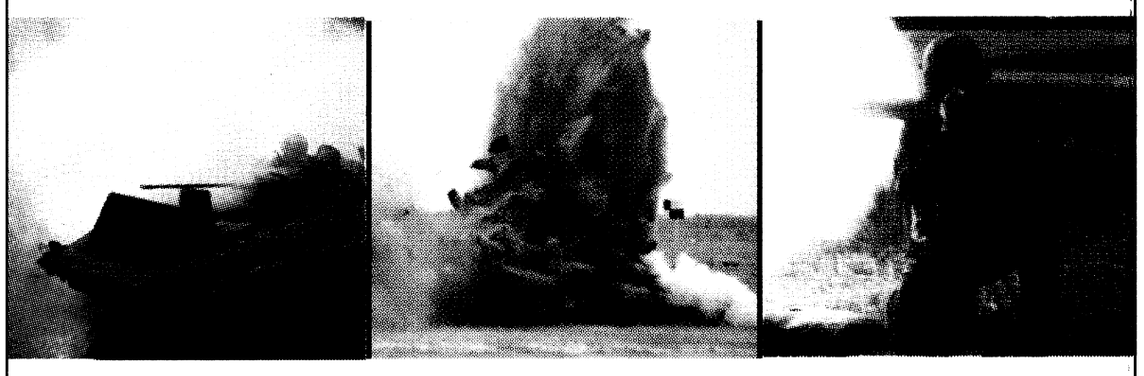
The 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, whose headquarters was presently located in the building had to be moved. Buck offered to fund the move of the 1st Bn., 507 Inf. and limited repairs to Building 3749. With their relocation to Building 2758, the renovation could begin. Building 2749 had not been renovated since the mid-70s and was in need of a major overhaul. The 11th Regiment Executive Officer, Maj. Brett Floro accepted this as a challenge, and the regiment with troop labor would pick up where DPW left off.

What appeared to be an insurmountable task was soon beginning to take shape. Old walls and ceilings were removed and new ones erected. The Regiment S-4, Lorenzo Rehberg and Lt. Michael Artiaga from the 2nd Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt. were charged with the day-to-day supervision of the renovation. Holdovers from the 1st Bn., 507th were soon turned into construction workers. DPW Shop 3 personnel were also there to assist and advise as the project began to take shape.

All electrical and plumbing in the building was either replaced, repaired or reconfigured to match the new design of the building's interior. Bruce Sturchen and the crew from Shop 3 provided a wealth of knowledge and assistance.

As Bero's vision began to take shape, the building began to transform from an old outdated relic into a regimental headquarters. visitors and staff could be proud of. As visitors enter the building, they often expressed amazement at the day to day improvements that had been made.





In this period of limited resources, it takes more effort from units to get things done. The 11th Regt. has demonstrated that a self-help project can succeed if both DPW and the organization work together. The list of those who made this project succeed would fill several pages. Holdovers from the 1st Bn., 507th Inf., provided the majority of the manpower while DPW Shop 3 employees, Bruce Sturchen, Richard Hill, Gary Blume, Billy Travis and Raymond Howell provided the expertise.

Officer Candidates face Capstone challenges

Officer Candidate Joseph Dzvonik
Officer Candidate School

The final hurdle of Officer Candidate School (OCS) Class 3-99 was overcome during the final week of April. There was no time to savor the Army OCS victory at the Joint Military Athletic Competition (JMAC) in Pensacola, Fla., April 24 as officer candidates packed their rucksacks for the final time and headed for Garnsey Range on April 25. This final field exercise, referred to as "Capstone," incorporates all that the OCs have learned concerning leadership and Infantry tactics into a long, nearly sleepless and as it turned out, wet six days in the field.

During the first days of the field problem, OCs performed platoon-size patrolling exercises, established objective rally points (ORPs) and patrol bases and executed offensive and defensive maneuvers. During these activities, leadership positions were in constant flux so as to allow all OCs the opportunity to directly contribute to mission accomplishment at different levels of authority.

The first three missions executed throughout the week were designed to teach OCs all that becomes incorporated into even the simplest of military operations. OCs learned how to receive, interpret, issue and execute operation orders while coordinating communications, rations, munitions, and transportation in an environment of varying weather and terrain and endless clouds of CS gas. The final mission required coordination of three platoons in a final attack of Rockwell Hill, which was defended by only one platoon. The defending platoon leader, OC Tim Rose, formerly a staff sergeant at the 2nd Engineering Battalion, Camp Castle, Korea, used his engineering skills to design and build one of the most impressive defensive perimeters OCS cadre had seen at a Capstone exercise.

"I really had no idea when and where to expect the enemy," explained Rose. "I just tried to build a strong perimeter and something they wouldn't expect."

The student commander of the three attacking platoons, OC Joseph Burkhardt, is one of the few OCs being branched Infantry.

"I knew I had several challenges as the attacking student commander. First, OC Roses' background in engineering made him a formidable opponent. Furthermore, I was also aware of the variety of backgrounds of the Soldiers I was leading. For many, this (OCS) was their first exposure to tactics. So what I did was try and keep it simple and stick to doctrine."

However, the understanding and execution of tactics and battle drills were not the actual purpose of Capstone. "Although we do strive to refine what OCs have learned concerning tactics, our real concern is that they can perform the troop leading procedures," explains Capt. Floyd Sheldon. The troop leading procedures are used in the receiving, interpreting, issuing, refining and execution of orders.

Following an exciting, yet physically demanding week, OCs returned to garrison only to prepare for the battalion commanders' inspection. The inspection included evaluation of the battalion area, poking and prodding at TA-50, candidate's rooms and testing individual required knowledge. The inspection was determined to be successful and OCs only had to wait a few more days before they could enjoy the privileges of Senior Status. The following days included the branching ceremony, where officer representatives of each Army branch pinned the respective branch insignia on each OCs uniform, and the Senior Status Review. The Senior Status Review was held on York Field directly in front of Infantry Hall, where OCs were read the orders instructing them of their new level of duty and responsibility and the privileges due them as Senior OCs. The ceremony authorized OCs to wear the white OCS ascots and blue helmet liners, proud indicators of their new status. The ceremony also served as a reminder that only a few weeks remain before the date of graduation for OCS class 3-99, 27 May 1999.

Behind the scenes Soldiers help reception

Lauren E. Orrok
30th Adjutant General (Reception) Bn.

In an office tucked down one of the many corridors of the 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion work two NCOs who provide a critical link between new Soldiers and the Army. They are Headquarters, United States Army Recruiting Command (USAREC) Liaison NCOs.

Sgt. 1st Class Richard S. Gustafson and Sgt. 1st Class Gordon S. Gallaher have more than 20 years of combined experience in recruiting, including assignments as Station Commanders and Guidance Counselors at Military Entrance Processing Stations (MEPS.)

The primary mission requires both Gustafson and Gallaher to perform "quality control" of enlistment contracts while "detecting unfulfilled, erroneous and fraudulent enlistments of new Soldiers processing through the reception battalion."

The success of the secondary mission depends greatly on the bond formed between the liaisons and those commanders that they advise. Not only are experience and knowledge of recruiting regulations important in this assignment, but the rapport between the liaisons with the reception battalion, the training brigade and recruiting personnel around the world is critical.

The most enjoyable part of their job is running the Hometown Recruiter Assistance Program. This program allows Soldiers who recently graduated from One Station Unit Training or from Advanced Individual Training, to return to their local recruiting station for up to 20 days where they will help recruit others by answering questions about what they have recently experienced.

Gustafson and Gallaher answer vital questions from new Soldiers and commanders within the training brigade. New Soldiers receive a briefing while at the 30th AG Battalion Reception Station and receive their personnel action paperwork while in Basic Training. Eligibility criteria includes being 25 years old or younger, having a high school diploma, being Regular Army, and living within 50 miles of a recruiting station.

Soldiers having questions about their enlistment contacts must go through their drill sergeants to make an appointment. Both Gustafson and Gallaher can be reached at 544-9214 or 687-6929. The fax number is 689-1392.

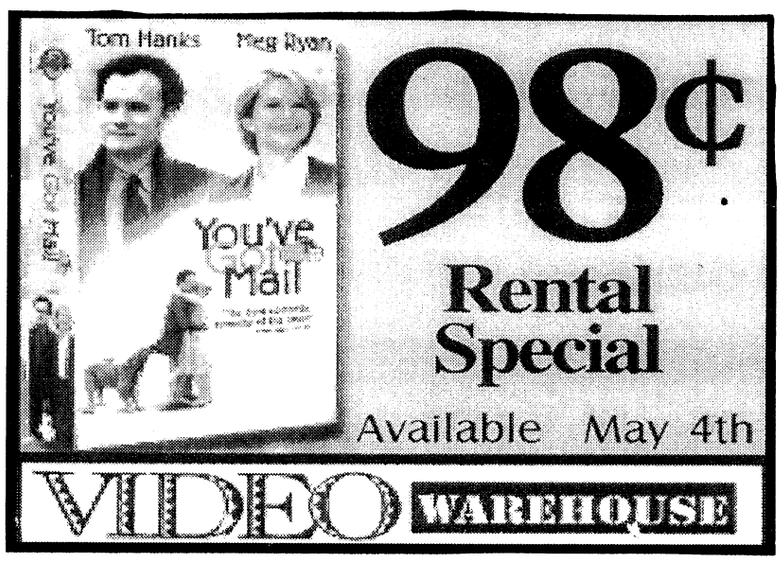
Doctor joins Infantry to fulfill fathers request

1st Lt. Timothy Hudson
2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers cite many reasons for entering the Army. Among the most common reasons are love of country, self improvement and money for college.

For Spc. Michael Calk, an Infantryman in Company C, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, the decision to join the Army came easy and left no room for doubt. A native of San Jose, Calif., this fourth-generation Infantryman promised his dying father he would carry on the family tradition.

"I am the oldest son and I felt it was my responsibility to maintain a proud tradition," said Calk, whose prospects in the civilian world are far from bleak. "It has never entered my mind that I might have made the wrong decision."

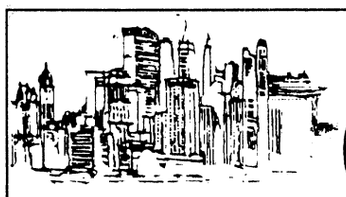


Calk's father, Michael V. Calk, served three tours in Vietnam and was awarded three Purple Hearts. His grandfather was a World War II veteran and his great grandfather served in World War I.

Although he knows he has big shoes to fill, Calk feels he is up to the challenge.

"The training I've received has been great. I feel I am every bit as well trained as my forefathers and I won't let them down."

Calk Sr. died in 1994 of a heart attack. Calk, who was still in college at the time, promised his father as he was dying that he would finish school, establish his business and then join the Army. We know he joined the Army, but did he live up to the rest of his promise? Yes, for Calk is a licensed physician, specializing in cardiac care, who will return to a private practice in California when his Infantry tour is up.



I've found there are three things everybody thinks they can do: star in a movie, write a book and coach a pro football team.

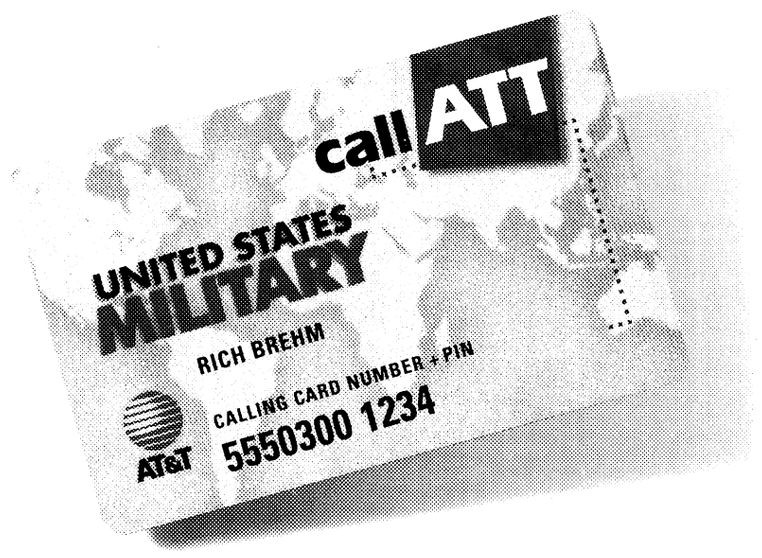
Telephone interviews increasing

Army Career and Alumni Program

Telephone interviews are becoming common screening tools for employers. It is necessary for transitioning Soldiers to present themselves in a positive manner before proceeding to a face-to-face interview.

"The success or failure of this initial screening often depends on the time the potential employee has spent preparing for the interview," said Stacey Vigil, Army Career and Alumni Program.

A telephone interview gives the transitioning Soldier the unique opportunity to have notes on accomplishments, resume, research on the potential employer and questions for the interviewer in front of him or her during the process. This allows an individual to give clear, concise accounts of accomplishments for each position presented on a resume. He or she should also be prepared to discuss how this experience will add value to the potential employer's work force.



In addition to being well-prepared, the interviewee must remember to call on time, demonstrate clear goals and present oneself as a problem solver. As the interview comes to a close the transitioning Soldier will want to ask what the next step will be. It is also important to have all of the names, job titles and a mailing address for the interviewers so a thank you note can be mailed within 24 hours of the interview.

If one follows these rules, the process should be less stressful and the potential employee can present himself or herself with confidence and enthusiasm.

For more information, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Fort Benning duo takes 'Best Ranger' honors

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

After a fifth-place finish in 1998's David L. Grange Jr., Best Ranger competition, Staff Sgt. Kevin Teran told himself he wasn't going to settle for a repeat performance. He wasn't going to stop until he held the coveted Colt pistol in his hand that signifies him as the best of the best. He was going to be the world's Best Ranger, and he was going to do whatever it takes to make that dream come true.

It was only days after last year's grueling three-day test of skill and nerve that the 6-foot Ranger began to transform his goals into reality. He set out to train for what many have called the most demanding three days of their lives.

"And when try-outs came around in January, I was ready to compete and find a partner that would push me and be able to compete ."

Teran found that perfect teammate in fellow Ranger Instructor Staff Sgt. Jim Moran and the two immediately began training for the event under the direction of 1995's Best Ranger winner, Sgt. 1st Class Eric White.

"Once we began training for the event together, we knew that Sergeant White would be able to steer us toward success," Moran said. "He had led a couple of other teams to success, and since he had won the event before, we knew he was the one that would lead us to a victory."

As the two continued to train under the direction of White, both began to see the dream of being named Best Ranger becoming closer to reality.

"To win one of these events, you have to prepare," White said. "You have to be able to know your limits and your way to tackle each event"

"You cannot win one of these things by running someone else's race," he said.

Running someone else's race was the farthest thing from these two Rangers' minds this past weekend as they not only took on the challenge of competing in this year's Best Ranger competition, but conquered the challenge and took home this year's title as the world's best.

"This is great to see a dream like this come true," the two said after being awarded the symbolic Colt pistols.

"I just can't believe it is already over though," Moran said. "We have been working towards this day for a long time. I guess it is just hard to believe it is actually happening."

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis

Sgt. Kevin Teran prepares to fall from the rope after touching the Ranger tab during the water confidence portion of the Best Ranger Competition.

The two began the test of mental and physical fitness on a track that was far from what looked to be first-place potential, scoring an eighth-place finish in the first three events.

It was from that fourth event, the weapons event, that these two Rangers turned the spotlight from the broad base of competitors to themselves with no less than a fifth-place finish in all of the remaining nine events.

"Our goal was to stay at the top of everything," Teran said. "And that is what we tried to do in every event,"

After winning this year's title as the best of the best, Moran and Teran agreed that their 'stay at the top' philosophy worked well for them. When asked if a repeat performance could be seen next year, they both simply smiled and said, "We'll see."

Take precautions to prevent vehicular accidents

Regis P. Beighley
Fort Benning Safety Manager

During the last three fiscal years, a total of 338 Soldiers were killed and 17 suffered permanent disability injuries in privately owned vehicle (POV) accidents. Three Fort Benning Soldiers were killed so far this fiscal year in POV accidents.

The causes of these accidents are not new or different — speeding, alcohol, and fatigue. Use of seat belts in many of these accidents could have saved Soldiers' lives.

It's easy to speed, and drivers often try to justify it — "I'm running late." "I'm driving the same speed as everyone else." "The speed I'm driving isn't that dangerous." "I'm a good driver. I'm in control."

These are poor excuses for a bad habit. Speeding is a factor in approximately 30 percent of all fatal traffic accidents.

When you speed, you take unnecessary risks: the risk of having to repair or replace a wrecked vehicle; the risk of increased auto insurance rates; the risk of points against your driving record; and the risk of being unable to stop before hitting a pedestrian, bicyclist, or road debris — not to mention the risk of injuring or killing yourself, loved ones or others.

You should drive at speeds appropriate to road conditions and the posted speed limit. During rain, fog, snow or congested traffic, the safe speed is well below the posted speed limit.

The faster you drive, the longer distance it takes to stop or swerve to avoid a collision. Your car's occupant protection equipment is less effective as speed increases, resulting in more damage to life and property during a collision.

There are certain times of the day and conditions that heighten the accident risk:

Night driving

Sixty percent of all speed-related fatal accidents occur between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. even though fewer vehicles are on the road.

Part of the reason is that speeding cuts the effectiveness of a vehicle's headlights. Low-beams illuminate 160 feet ahead of the vehicle. At some speeds, a driver may not have enough time and space to spot an obstacle on the road, apply the brakes, and stop.

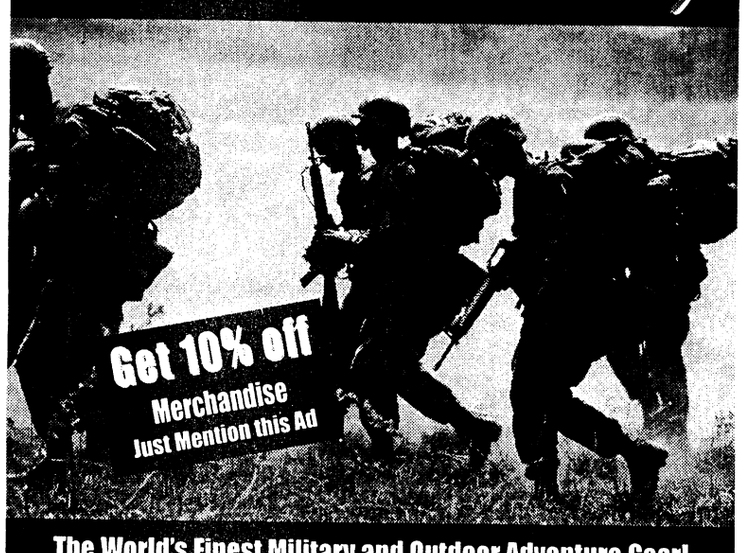
Combinations of speeding, rain, fog, darkness, fatigue, and use of alcohol or other drugs usually push the risk into certain disaster.

Drowsiness

Not only does drowsiness occur at night, but also mid-afternoon or on the way home from a long day's work. Drowsy drivers have difficulty maintaining constant speed and often drive faster unknowingly.

Drowsiness is most likely when driving alone or on long trips, especially on interstate roads. The consumption of alcohol or cold remedies can greatly increase sleepiness.

Wet roads



Any moisture on the road will greatly diminish the vehicle's traction, making it harder to switch lanes, turn, or s

Ranger: 20 teams complete competition

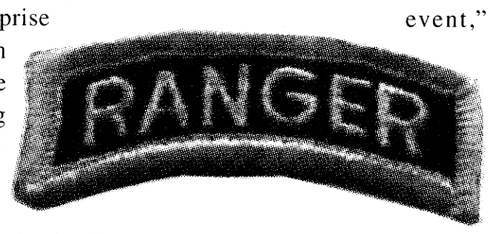
Once completed with the mental challenge of Ranger Stakes, it was back to the physical demands of the competition as Rangers rushed to scurry to the top of the 60-foot tall Prusik tower then rappel down the opposite side. The Rangers then moved on to day two's final event, the night land navigation course.



"By the time we hit the land navigation course we were both pretty wore out," Teran said. "We ended up walking farther and working harder on it (the land navigation course) than we did the road march the night before."

The course took Rangers across more than 20 kilometers of Fort Benning swamps and forests and into the final day of the Best Ranger saga.

The last day of the event began as the Ranger buddy teams moved over, under and through the obstacles of the Ranger Training Brigade's Darby Queen Obstacle Course. The course blasted Rangers from the beginning wall climb to the final sprint of the course.

"We had a couple of bad obstacles, but we were surprised with our finish," Teran said about his team's second-place finish.

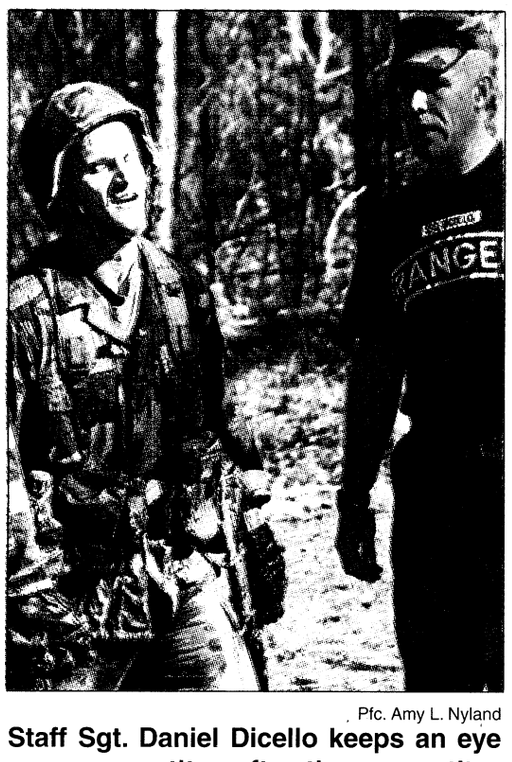
That surprise took them and the remaining teams to the shores of Victory Pond to battle the Ranger water confidence test that takes Rangers to the top of 30-foot tower, across a 12-inch wide plank and a drop to the water below. Then it is off to the 75-foot tower to "slide-for-life" back into the water they just emerged from.

The slide wasn't the last time the Rangers took a dip in the water Sunday. They had to helocast with full combat gear into the pond and swim to the far shore nearly 400 meters away.

The final event, the 2.7-mile buddy run, was the only event that remained for the 20 teams that had ventured this far in the competition, but the three-day test was still far from over.

"Those last two miles were the hardest two miles of the whole event," said Pugh after the three-day event. "We are just ready for some rest."

Although the two earned a third-place finish, Pugh said they were a little disappointed.



Everyone from retired Rangers to Rangers presently serving on active-duty turned out to watch the annual event including retired Lt. Gen. Grange, who the event is named after.

"As in every year, the competition here is absolutely wonderful," Grange said after the event. "When you sit and scan the competition here, you are looking at the best of the best. These men all have something to be proud of."

"Anyone who crosses that finish-line is a winner," he added. "Whether they were the last place finisher or the first place winner, when these guys go home tonight and reflect upon what they have done, they will astound themselves I'm sure."

Although the event is named after the retired general who left Fort Benning in 1983, it actually originated in 1982 when Richard Leandri from the Chairborne Rangers in Clearwater, Fla., offered to provide recognition to the two-man team that most epitomizes the term Ranger. Once established, the event drew its name from former Ranger training commander Grange.

To participate in the Best Ranger competition, military members must be Airborne and Ranger qualified, on hazardous duty orders and be in a unit invited to participate in the competition.

FAP recognizes Military Spouse Day — The Family Advocacy Program (FAP) wants to remind everyone that Military Spouse Day will be celebrated today.

To show appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices that are made by military spouses in the community, FAP will give a tote bag to each military spouse and have a display set up from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today at Building 2624. The display features educational materials on parenting, building better relationships, blended families and other topics.

For more information on Military Spouse Day, call Rebecca S. Welch at 545-3344.

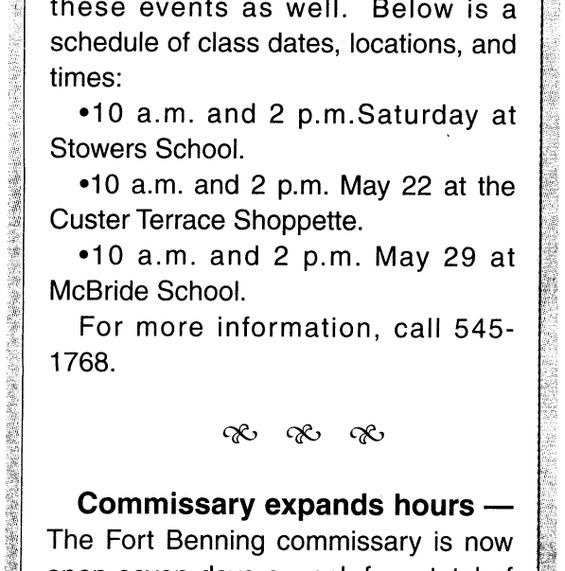
Society holds meeting — The Society of American Military Engineers will hold their May meeting at 11:30 a.m. Thursday at the Officers' Club with pre-meeting socializing and lunch. Wendell Brown, founder and owner of Lightspeech Data Links in Columbus, will present a program on security issues.

For more information, call 545-5141.

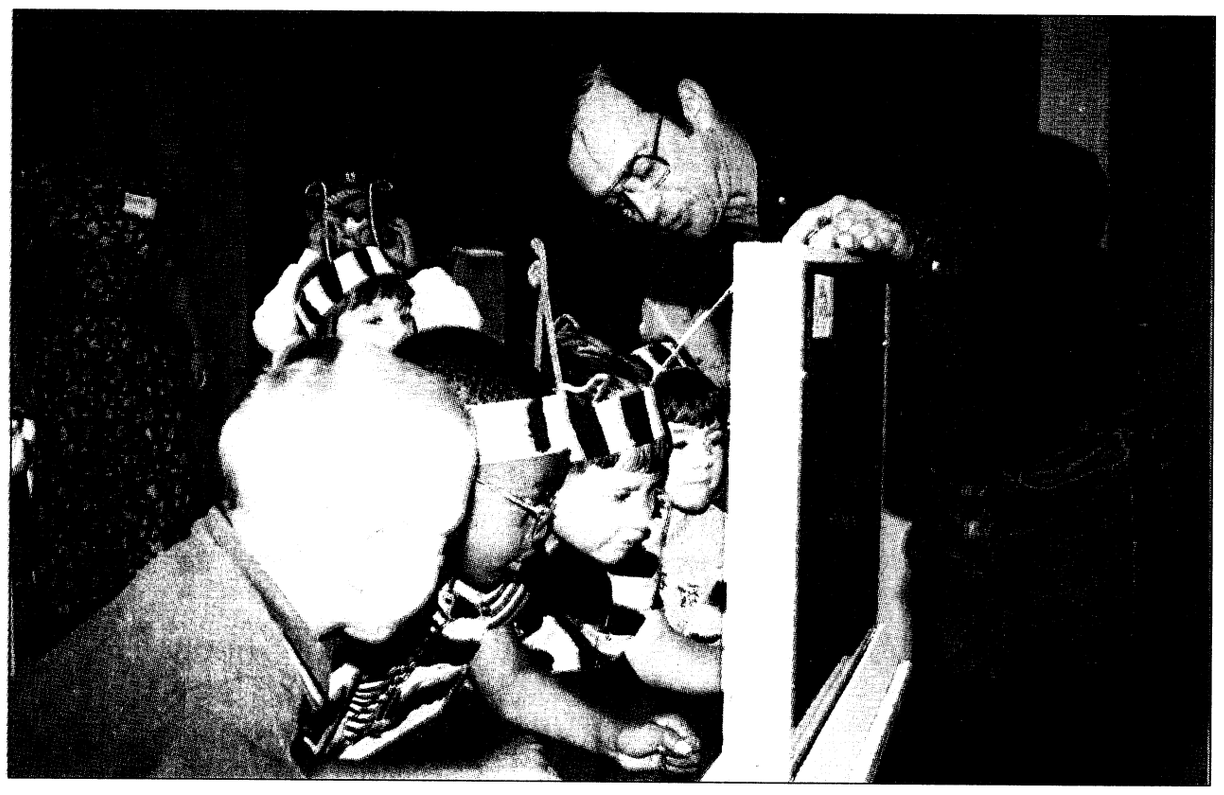
C.O.P.S. conducts safety classes —The Community Oriented Police Squad (C.O.P.S.) is conducting bicycle safety classes for each housing area. These classes will run each Saturday throughout the month of May.

The classes are being conducted in recognition of May being National Bicycle Safety Month. Two classes will be given per day as annotated. Bicycles may be registered on post at these events as well. Below is a schedule of class dates, locations, and times:

•10 a.m. and 2 p.m.Saturday at Stowers School.



•10 a.m. and 2 p.m. May 22 at the Custer Terrace Shoppette.



•10 a.m. and 2 p.m. May 29 at McBride School.

For more information, call 545-1768.

Commissary expands hours — The Fort Benning commissary is now open seven days a week for a total of 76 hours of operation.

The schedule is as follows:
Monday — noon to 9 p.m.
Tuesday — 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Wednesday — 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Thursday — 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Friday — 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Saturday — 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.
Sunday — 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Busy as a bee

Students in Pam Young's kindergarten class at McBride Elementary School gather around a portable bee-hive to get a glimpse of some bees while local Beekeeper Jim Ellis points to the honey comb.

Ellis came out to the school to teach the kindergarten students about bees as part of their insect study. He talked about the different kinds of bees, how they make honey and how beekeepers harvest the honey. He also mentioned that because the process of making honey involves special enzymes in the bees stomach, it is impossible for humans to make honey without bees.

Young's class also made yellow and black striped vests and antennas in honor of the buzzy insects.

MWR celebrates spouses

Morale, Welfare and Recreation

The Fort Benning Morale, Welfare and Recreation (MWR) will feature specials in honor of "Military Spouse Appreciation Day." All specials will require presentation of ID, and accompaniment by sponsor and are limited to today.

• "Bring your Spouse to Lunch Today" will be featured at the Officers' Club, Follow Me Golf Course snack bar and Reggie's Beverage Company. Any military spouse accompanied by their sponsor, with presentation of ID will receive a 25 percent complimentary discounted lunch entree of less or equal value to that purchased by their sponsor.

•The Follow Me Golf Course and the Fort Benning Bowling Centers will offer a complimentary 18-hole greens fee and or a complimentary game of bowling to any military spouse with presentation of ID.

•The Automotive Skills Center will offer an oil, lube and filter change for all military spouses for the special rate of $15, regularly $19.99.

For additional information on Military Spouse Appreciation Day, call Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager at 545-3344.

GOLDEN APPLE

Teacher wins award

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

A little bit of "lights, camera and action," came to Tippi Ford's kindergarten class at McBride Elementary School when a crew from WRBL Channel 3 came out to honor her as the week's Golden Apple Award recipient Monday.

Amidst the chatter of little voices and pitter patter of feet, Ford was interviewed and presented the Golden Apple by WRBL Reporter Mary Hughes.

Hughes said the Golden Apple recognizes outstanding teachers in the WRBL viewing area and showcases a teacher each week on the Wednesday broadcast. At the end of the school year, Ford will also be able to attend a banquet which honors all of that year's Golden Apple recipients.

"The biggest reason we do this is to recognize teachers who might not otherwise get recognized for their efforts in the classroom," Hughes said.

She explained that they get more than a hundred nominations during the school year and each week they carefully choose a new teacher. Most often they make their choices based on something that jumps out at them in the nomination letter. In Ford's case, it was the fact that her students are reading at a first grade-level and the amount of dedication she has to her job, Hughes said.

For Brenda Baxter, a secretary at McBride, it was Ford's dedication to her son that caused her to write the letter of nomination to the station.

Baxter said her son was having some difficulty with his reading and Ford jumped right in, not only tutoring her son for free, but also showing her tips to help him along the way. It didn't take long for her son to catch up and now he is on the honor roll, she said.

"She is an excellent teacher," Baxter said. "On a scale from one to 100 she's a 200. I've never run across a teacher like her before. I've never met a teacher who puts as much personal time into their job and is as dedicated as she is. She deserves more than a Golden Apple, but this was the best I could do."

Ford said she was surprised to find out that she had won such an award.

"I was shocked," Ford said. "I thought, 'how could I win, I haven't entered anything?' I didn't have any earthly idea that I had even been entered. And then Brenda told me that she had nominated me."

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Tippi Ford points to words in a poem as one of her kindergarten students recites them back to her over a microphone. Ford's students read a series of poems each morning.

A native of Georgia, Ford has been teaching for 23 years and has been at Fort Benning for 15.

She went on to say that she is extremely flattered that someone thought she was doing a good job and took the time to recognize her.

Ford attributes her success in the classroom to the fact that she loves to teach.

"I love working with the children and trying to instill in them feelings of success," she said. "To me that's my most important job — to make the children feel successful and good about themselves."

Currently, Ford has a 100 percent literacy rate among the students in her class and every morning the children gather around to listen to one another read a selection of poems over a microphone.

"I have high expectations of my children and in turn hope this will be instilled in them so it carries over and they will have high expectations of themselves down the road."

Recycling program offers various rewards

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Over the past few years, post residents have supported Fort Benning's recycling program allowing the post to meet and exceed the installation's recycling goals.

"When I first began working here in 1995, the residents were recycling at around 40 percent. Now, we are up to 72 percent, which is five points above the national average," said Recycling Program Manager Tom Moore.

In order to maximize effectiveness, residents need to be sure only acceptable items are included in their recycling bin.

All of the following items can be placed in the recycling bins:

•Aluminum cans;

•Plastic food and beverage containers with the number one or two recycling chasing arrow code;

•Glass food and beverage containers;

•Paper products — newspaper; magazines; bags; unwanted mail; newspaper flyers; office and school paper; and non-corrugated paperboard boxes (flattened);

•Steel and tin cans;

•Corrugated cardboard;

•Furniture and large household appliances; and

When putting these items out, they also need to be properly separated and prepared for pick-up.

Aluminum and steel cans should have all food removed and rinsed; glass containers should have the lids removed and should be rinsed; paper items should be bundled or placed in a brown paper bag and placed along side the bin; cardboard needs to be flattened and placed along side the bin and plastics should be be rinsed, flattened in the bin with the caps removed.

It is important for those who are recycling to make sure that they follow these guidelines for various health and safety reasons.

According to Moore, not only are bottle tops not recyclable but if not removed, they become projectiles when crushed and can pose a safety hazard to the recycle center employees.

Items such as tissue, napkins, bandages, diapers, pet bedding, automobile batteries, liquids, heavy metals, toys or any contaminated items are unacceptable for recycling.

Unacceptable items can not only cause public health problems, they can not be handled by the recycling center.

If there are any unauthorized items placed in the recycle bins, the recycle bin will not be emptied until the next scheduled pick-up after corrections have been made.

With resident's help, the recycle program can offer various rewards back to the Fort Benning Community. Proper recycling not only saves Fort Benning valuable training dollars, it also cuts down on pollution, according to Moore.

"The more items residents recycle, the less that ends up in a landfill," Moore said. "Also, the less garbage thrown away, the less we need to pay to have taken off of post which saves Fort Benning money."

However, residents do not need to wait for Fort Benning's Curbside Recycle Service to pick up their recyclables. Residents may drop off items at the Recycling Collection Centers located at Building 4000 on Harmony Church or at the Main Mall parking lot by the Shoppette.

Residents who need to schedule pick up for refrigerators, freezers and air conditioners, can call 545-2117.

Single Soldiers can also do their part in the recycling crusade by using the blue aluminum recycle bins located around post.

If there is an area on post that does not have a BOSS recycle container but could use one, Soldiers can call 545-7204.

All funds raised by the BOSS containers goes to Fort Benning's Single Soldiers fund.

The Martin Army Medical Mentor

... a community service from Martin Army Community Hospital

Personal preference dictates medical procedure

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Circumcision is one of the oldest operations performed. It may be done for medical reasons such as in cases where a specific problem with the foreskin (prepuce) exists. Most times, however, it is done shortly after birth for family, cultural or religious reasons.

Routine circumcisions were once advocated for all newborn males because the belief was uncircumcised males were more prone to infections. However, the current feeling is that circumcision is not necessary for all baby boys. Most boys will do fine later in life if their foreskins are not removed.

Some males may eventually elect to have a circumcision because of medical reasons such as narrowing at the tip (phimosis), infections (posthitis) or irritation. The foreskin may be a source for urinary tract infections, making circumcision a good idea in boys with any underlying kidney abnormality

There are many misunderstandings about caring for uncircumcised baby boys. Urology specialists do not recommend pulling back on the foreskin to clean and expose the tip of the penis (glans penis) on these young boys.

As the boy gets older, the natural processes of erections and accumulation of old skin remnants between the inner foreskin and glans cause the foreskin to eventually separate from the tip of the penis. By 5-6 years of age, the foreskin should pull back easily, but it is not until puberty that it is necessary for boys to pull the foreskin back daily to clean the penis.

Parents may request circumcision and it is usually only delayed for certain reasons such as; the newborn infant may be too ill, in which case an elective circumcision is done when the infant is well or the infant may have an abnormality of the penis such as hypospadias or chordee, in which case the foreskin should be left in place for use in later reconstructive surgery.

MACH NOTES

Clinic closed to non-Prime enrollment

Martin Army Community Hospital's (MACH) Victory Clinic has reached its maximum enrollment capacity. All Prime patients enrolled to the Victory Clinic will continue to receive their care at the clinic but non-Prime patients will be disenrolled on a one-for-one basis as new Prime patients request assignment to the clinic. Eligible non-Prime patients are encouraged to enroll in TRICARE Prime so they may receive guaranteed appointments and the benefits of TRICARE Prime enrollment. MACH continues to deliver the Prime guarantee as mandated by public law.

For an enrollment application, visit any clinic or call(888) 293-2148.

MACH holds screenings

MACH offers school screenings every other Wednesday morning in the Eyes, Ears, Nose and Throat (EENT) Clinic.

Georgia Law requires completion of a Certificate of Eye, Ear and Dental Examination for every new student enrolling in an off-post school for the first time. For on-post schools, only pre-K and kindergarten students are required this certificate. Children enrolled in a Georgia school last year do not need a new certificate or new screening exam to register for the new school year.

As a service to the community, the school screenings are offered in the clinic and open to all active duty and retired family members who require this service by law.

The hospital encourages parents to schedule their children for the screening as early as possible as space is limited and appointments fill quickly.

Appointments are now available. Call 544-3041 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. Appointments for immunizations can be made separately through the child's Primary Care Clinic.

MACH offers toll-free number

MACH offers a toll-free number, (888) 293-2148. Callers can access a great menu of options to obtain information in addition to contacting Primary Care Managers for appointments and referrals to specialists.

Contact the Health Care Finder Services for assistance in obtaining care and authorization of services, including pre-certification and admission notification. Callers are also able to contact the Beneficiary Information Services for enrollment and general plan information. To obtain medical information or self-care assistance, call the Health Care Information Line.

MACH assumes Alabama clinic

Terry Beckwith
Martin Army Community Hospital

April 12 marked a historic event when Martin Army Community Hospital Commander Col. Lester Martinez-Lopez assumed responsibility for Dear Occupational Health Clinic at Fort McClellan, Ala.

During a ceremony held at Dear Clinic, Anniston Army Depot, Anniston, Ala., Martinez-Lopez assumed responsibility from Col. Ronald Jones, commander of Noble Army Health Clinic.

The Dear Clinic provides occupational health services for Department of the Army civilians at Anniston Army Depot. This assumption was required due to the closure of Fort McClellan, which is scheduled to be completed this year.

Anniston Chemical Agent Disposal Facility was created by Westinghouse Anniston to destroy 661,529 weapons in the Anniston stockpile containing 2,253 tons of nerve and mustard agents. Anniston is one of eight sites in the continental U.S. storing chemical weapons. The demolition project will employ 698 personnel over the course of five or six years.

Notice of Telephone Number Change

Effective June 1, residents in Davis Hill and Bouton Heights, Perkins Place and McGraw Manor will call 689-5400 for all maintenance and repair needs. This includes repair of kitchen appliances (refrigerators, stoves, garbage disposals, vent hoods and fire suppression systems). Residents in all other Family Housing areas will call 689-5400 for kitchen appliance repair while continuing to call 545-2135 for all other maintenance needs.

For more information, call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Power outage on Rainbow Avenue

An electrical power outage is scheduled from 8 a.m. to noon May 23. This will affect the Rainbow Avenue housing area, the museum and all of the other buildings around the museum. The reason for the outage is to repair underground high voltage electrical wires damaged by a storm-caused drain cave-in at the Baltzell Electrical Substation. For more information, call Ron Smith, Housing Division, 545-2988.

DPW plans minimal staffing levels May 27

DPW will hold a Town Hall Meeting for all employees from 8:30 to 10 a.m. May 27 in conjunction with the Safety Stand-Down Day. The Self-Help Store will be closed the morning of May 27, and reopen at 12:30 p.m. Shop staffing levels will be minimal to allow as many DPW personnel as possible to participate.

The DPW Work Reception Section will coordinate all services and emergency response. To call in a service order or report an emergency, call the Work Order Desk at 545-2135. For more information, call Glenn Todd at 545-2117.

Memorial Day Schedules

Yard Waste: There will be no yard waste pick-up in Family Housing May 31. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be June 7.

Refuse and Recycle Schedule: There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups May 31. Port, Kawamura, Fernandez Streets, and Indianhead Terrace areas normally scheduled for pick-up May 31, will be picked up on June 1. Refuse and recycle collection in Family Housing for June 1-4 will be picked up as normally scheduled. For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

Memorial Day Holiday Schedule for the Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center

In observance of Memorial Day May 31, the Self Help Center, including the Loan Equipment Section and Venetian Blind & Shade Shop, will be closed May 29-31. The Self Help Center will reopen for business on June 1 at 8:30 a.m. For more information, call Dr. William C. Shirley at 545-1121.

Comments and Questions

Heart is way to spiritual growth

Reverend Pat Cote
USAIC Chaplains Office

There is a secret to spiritual growth that I want to let you in on. The secret is that although we may know something in our heads, it does little good until we know in our hearts.

reflections

Most truths never make it to our hearts though, because we hear them in our heads but are too proud to change. "Hey, that was a good sermon. Those people really needed that." We know lots of friends who should apply the gospel to their lives, but the subtlety of pride causes us to believe that it is really important for us to live out. Like a mule, a stubborn person is one who will not do what he or she knows is best.

This prevailing attitude reminds me of a Dear Abby column I read last year. It told of a young man from a wealthy family who was about to graduate from high school. It was custom in that affluent neighborhood for the parents to give the graduate an automobile. Bill and his father had spent months looking at car., The week before graduation, they found the perfect car. Bill was certain that the car would be his on graduation night. Imagine his disappointment when on the eve of his graduation, Bill's father handed him a gift-wrapped Bible. Bill was so angry that he threw the Bible down and stormed out of the house. He and his father never saw each other again.

It was the news of his father's death that brought Bill home again. As he sat going through his father's possessions that he was to inherit, he came across the Bible his father had given him years before. Brushing away the dust, he opened it and found a cashier's check dated the day of his graduation — the exact amount of the car they had chosen together.

Pride definitely pollutes. It pollutes our relationships, our perspectives, our potential and our spiritual lives. We need to realize that even the trials and testings we experience are often the wrappings of more valuable gifts that God has in store for us. Taken at face value, they often represent what we do not want. Yet, if we will only dare open them and approach them in an attitude of humility, we will find that God has exceeded our expectations.

The best self-help advice we have available is found in James 4:6-10: "God opposes the proud but gives grace to the humble. Therefore submit to God ... Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord and he will lift you up."

chapel notes

Sunday school meets — Fort Benning Sunday School meets from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. every Sunday at Edward A. White Elementary School on First Division Road. There are classes for students 2 years of age through adult. Everyone is invited.

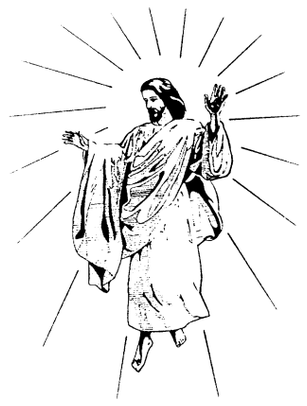
Childcare for children younger than 2, whose parents are attending or teaching Sunday School, is provided at the Infantry Center Chapel.

If you need a ride to Sunday School, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715 to schedule a bus to pick you up.

Bishop to visit — Bishop Francis Roque will visit the Catholic community at the Main Post Catholic Chapel this weekend. Bishop Roque is a former U.S. Army Chaplain and is the Auxiliary Bishop of the Archdiocese for the Military Services.

He will lead the congregation in worship and confirm 10 high school students and four adults on Saturday at 5 p.m. Mass at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

The bishop will be the honored guest at the monthly meeting of the "Stomach Club" at Capone's Restaurant, 5935 Veterans Parkway at 7:30 p.m. Saturday.



Chapel holds pre-baptism — There will be a pre-baptism class at 1 p.m. Sunday at the Custer Terrace Chapel. The class is for parents who plan to have their child baptized in the Catholic Church. This is the first of a three session cycle.

For more information or to register, call 545-5508.

Center offers parents help, encouragement

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries

My heart ached along with a distraught couple as they poured out their hearts during a counseling session. Their 17-year-old daughter had informed them the night before that she was pregnant.

The weeping mother sobbed, "If I ever get my hands on the boy who did this to my little girl, I'll teach him a lesson about responsibility!" Unfortunately, Angie had no idea who the father was.

This scene is played out far too often and many a parent berates him or herself for the mistakes of a child. Parents, whether to the benefit or detriment, are the primary source of influence on their child.

The Crosby, Stills and Nash song Teach Your Children Well has much truth to it, but what does a couple to do when they have been good parents, having taught their children well and yet their child makes some life-changing mistake or even becomes overtly rebellious?

I believe there is help. Parents you are not alone in this challenge of raising children. May I suggest that you seek out those in the helping community that are there to help you in these times. Chaplains, family counselors, school counselors, family and friends can offer troubled parents a wealth of understanding, encouragement, guidance and practical help.

The following months I spent with Angie and her parents in counseling were a challenge. However, I witnessed a family come together in the midst of a trial instead of being torn apart because they decided to reach out to those who were willing to help them.

Maybe you need some help in becoming a more effective parent. The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can help. For more information, give the center a call at 545-1760.

Race registration will start at 6 a.m. the morning of the race. The 30K will begin at 7 a.m. with the 15K set to begin at 8:15 a.m.

The races will be conducted in conjunction with the battalion's annual open house event.

For more information, call 864-3367, ext. 177 or (770) 920-2881.

Field house offers free aerobics classes — Free aerobics classes to all ID cardholders are offered at 5 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays at Briant Wells Field House. The classes will include kickboxing, high and low impact aerobics, resistance training and step aerobics. Correct shoes should be worn to avoid any foot injuries and a water bottle is also recommended.

For more information, call Sgt. Lenora Gogins-Watkins at 545-6823 or Sgt. Brian Whittaker at 544-9970.

Association offers golf cards — The American Lung Association of Georgia is offering its 1999 "Lung Card" Golf Privilege Card.

The $25 card offers free or reduced green fees at more than 600 golf courses in the southeast, 100 of which are located in Georgia.

To purchase a 1999 Golf Privilege Card call (800) LUNG-USA or visit the American Lung Association at 4570 Reese Road in Columbus.

Hunt Club offers riding lessons — The Fort Benning Hunt Club offers English riding lessons.

The lessons, which focus on dressage and jumping, are offered for beginners or advanced riders. Riders must be at least 5 years old.

For more information, call Andrea Pitts at 689-3945.

Camp seeks local talent — Final registration is now open for the Ten Star All-Star Basketball Camp. Boys and girls ages 10 to 18 are eligible. Players are selected by invitation only. Past participants include: Michael Jordan, Tim Duncan, Jerry Stackhouse, Grant Hill, Christian Laettner, Antawn Jamison, Vince Carter and Steve Wojciechowski.

Camp locations are Atlanta, Ga., Raleigh, N.C. and Mobile, Ala. Scholarships are possible for the most advanced players.

USAMU Soldiers dominate championship

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) and members of the U.S. Marine Corps dominated the Interservice Pistol Championships conducted at Phillips Range May 7-9.

USMC's Jason Meidinger won the Standard Pistol Match, followed by USAMU's Daryl L. Szarenski in second place and USAMU's Steven M. King in third.

Meidinger also won the Center Fire Match, in which King was second and USMC's Robert Imm was third.

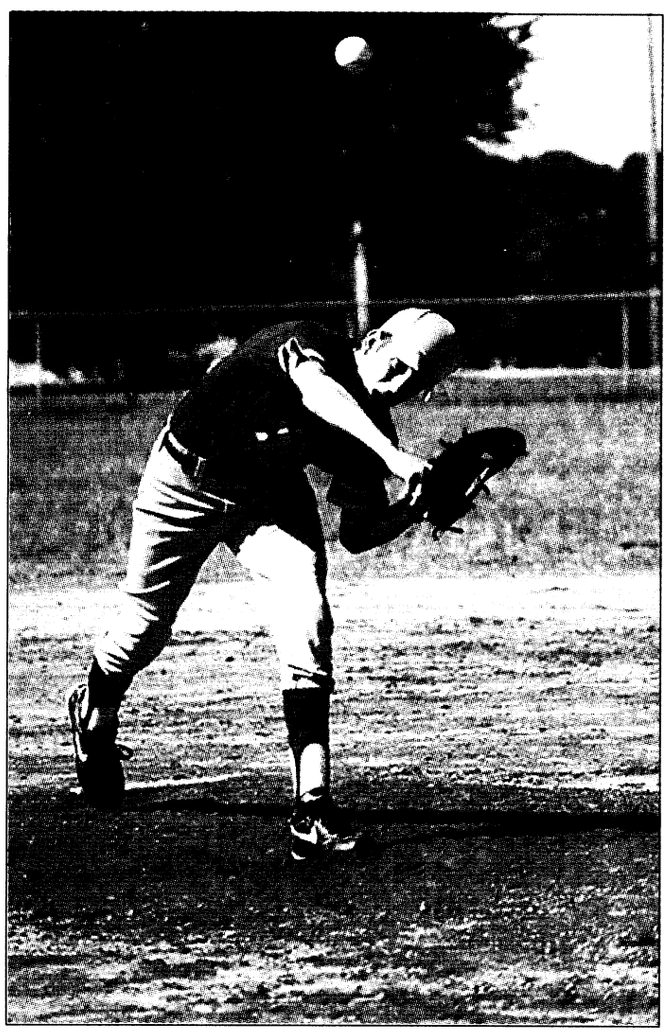
In the Free Pistol Match, Meidinger was the winner, Szarenski finished second place and USAMU's Travis A. Jorgenson was third.

Szarenski won the Men's Air Pistol Match; Meidinger took second place and King was third.

USAMU shooters Terry S. Bradley and Jorgenson took first and second place respectively in the Rapid Fire Pistol Match.

Selected to the Men's International Pistol Team were: U.S. Army Reservist Terrance Anderson, U.S. Air Force's Donald Shea and David Vondrak and U.S. Marine Corps Jason Meidinger and John Ennis.

The men will compete in an international style 25-meter center fire course of fire.



Selected to this year's women's International Pistol Team were: USAMU's Rhonda L. Bright, U.S. Marine Corps' Roxane Conrad and U.S. Air Force's Barbara Shae.

Military marksmanship teams from more than 80 nations will send their best 5,000 athletes in 19 sports to compete at the 1999 CISM Championships which will be held Aug. 8-20 in Zagreb, Croatia.

Trojan pitcher Chris Strickland throws a strike and 4-year-olds battle for the ball on French Field during Youth Services' spring sports last Saturday. Strickland and his Trojan teammates will battle behind the bat again this weekend, the last weekend of the spring sports season. Soccer players will also call the season closed after Saturday's games held on French Field.

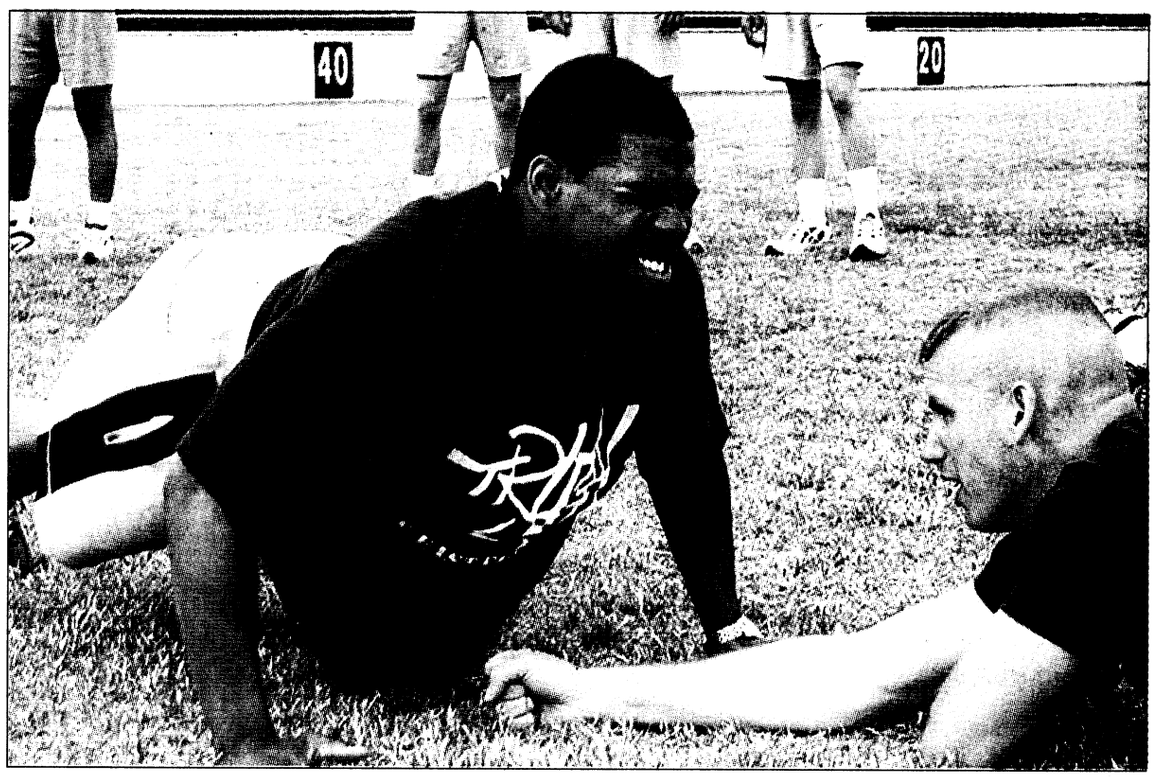
Appreciation week wraps up today

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

After a week packed full of sporting events, Military Appreciation Week will conclude after the "Burn the General Run" at 9 a.m. today.

Soldiers, units and employees turned out to celebrate the contribution of servicemembers and to compete against others in everything from beach volleyball to basketball and bench press throughout the week of events.

Soldiers took advantage of the opportunity to show off their athletic ability and their unit pride during the week's many scheduled activities.



"It is good we have a week to appreciate Soldiers," said 100 meter run participant April Johnson, U.S. Army School of the Americas. "This helps Soldiers build cohesion with each other and their units."

With more than 12 events to choose from, almost any Soldier could participate in an event that appealed to them.

Now with today being the final day of events, Soldiers may not have a better way to wrap up the week of events but with a run three-mile run.

The "Burn the General" run is open to all personnel and will begin and end by York Field.

The Post Commanding General will kick off the run, starting 30 meters in front of the participants. Members of the Infantry Training Brigade will run with the General, carrying the two-star flag. This will keep runners informed of his location.

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

A 63rd Engineer Group (Construction) Soldier tries to push out another repetition during the "Fit to Win" Competition Wednesday.

The object of the run is to beat the general through the three-mile course.

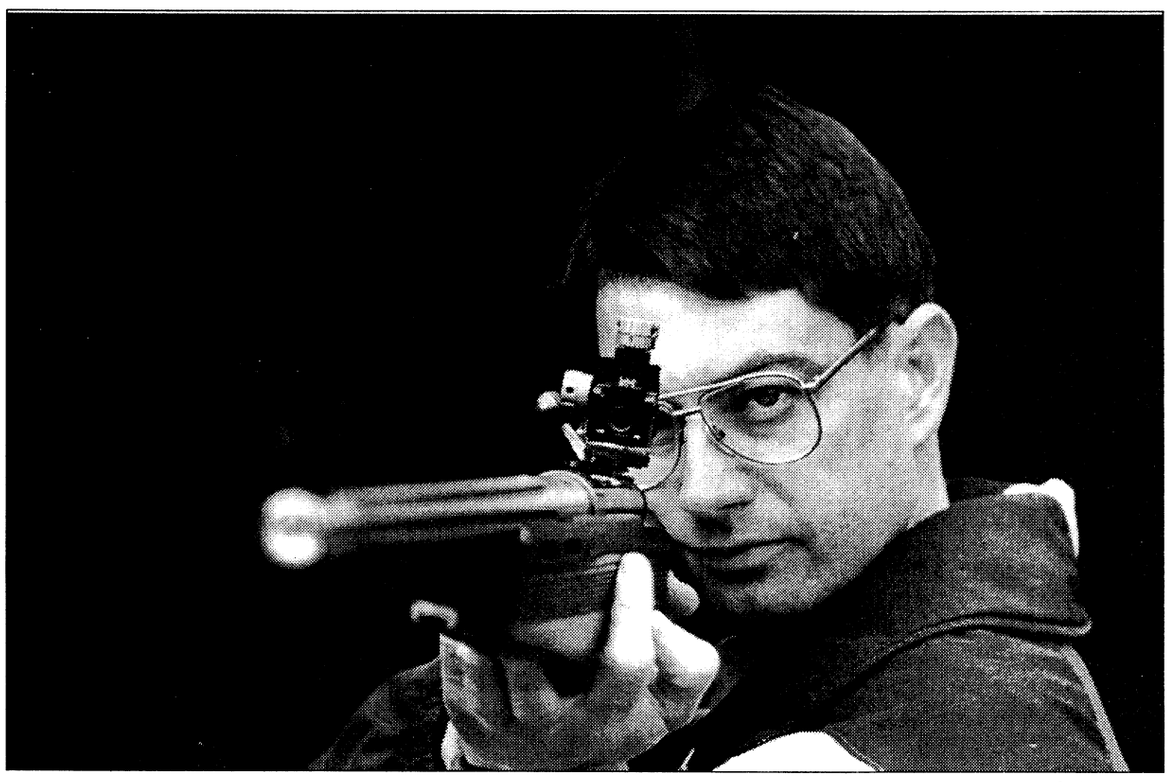
Each runner will receive a certificate at the finish.

Those who would like to participate in the "Burn the General" Run must register from 8 to 9 a.m. on York Field near the starting line.

Soldiers earn slots on team

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit hosted the 1999 CISM Shooting Team Selection Matches at Philips and Pool Ranges May 3-9, and 16 military men and women were selected to the U.S. Shooting Team.



The seven Soldiers, four airmen, three Marines and two Army Reservists will represent the United States at the 1999 Consiel International du Sports Militaire (CISM) — known as the World Military Championships or military Olympics — in Croatia in August.

Named to the 1999 Men's CISM International Rifle Team were: Stephen C. Goff, Glenn A. Dubis, Thomas A. Tamas, Troy A. Bassham and Robert E. Harbison, all of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU). They will shoot an international style 300-meter center fire Army rifle course of fire.

U.S. Army Reservist Wanda R. Jewell, Air Force's Deena L. Wigger and USAMU's Kimberly N. Howe won slots on the Women's International Rifle Team, which shoots the 50-meter Olympic-style standard rifle course of fire.

Rhonda L Bright of USAMU won the Sport Pistol Match with Marine Roxanne Conrad in second place and U.S. Army Reservist Elizabeth Callahan in third.

Conrad won the Women's Air Pistol Match, in which Callahan was second and Bright finished third.

USAMU's Stephen Goff will head to Croatia in August alongside other teammembers to take part in the 1999 CISM championships.

The USAMU Team of King, Sarzinksi and Jorgenson won the Men's Air Pistol, Men's Standard Pistol and Men's Free Pistol Team marches and finished second in the Center Fire Team Match to the USMC Team made up of Meidinger, Imm and John Ennis.

The team will compete in the competition in August.

Airmen net national volleyball title

John Okonski
Armed Forces Information Service

The 1999 Armed Forces Men's Volleyball Championships held May 4-7 at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, produced a new champion in an unexpected way — an Army victory over Navy lifted Air Force to its third title in four years.

The Air Force squad, which previously held the crown in 1997 and1996, ended the round-robin tourney with a 5-1 record. Navy placed second at 4-2 while Army finished 3-3. The Marines held on to last place with a 0-6 mark.

"Defense, defense, defense," noted Malu Sagiao, Air Force coach from Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif., as the vital ingredient to the Air Force victory. "It was a matter of adjusting. We changed our defensive and blocking strategy to find the right combination."

Indeed, when the Air Force spikers played their first match May 5 against the veteran Navy crew, things didn't go well at all.

The seamen cruised in the first two games and easily controlled an error-prone Air Force squad, 15-6 and 15-1."From the beginning of the match, we couldn't get a consistent lineup," said George Egan, assistant Air Force coach. "We kept on changing our lineup to see which one would finally pull things together."

It appeared to work in Game 3. Air Force sank Navy 15-8 by reeling off 12 straight points with key defensive plays. That momentum carried into Game 4 as Air Force tied the match, 15-7.

Air Force, though, couldn't keep the afterburners flaming in the fifth and deciding game. Under rally scoring rules, Navy took a quick 4-0 lead and never looked back as they prevailed, 15-7.

In the final match of Day 1, a more experienced Air Force squad faced an unexpectedly tough Army team. The battle raged two hours as the teams split wins in the first four games. However, the Air Force finally closed out the rally match, 15-10.

Day 2 contests opened with Army taking on Navy. In what proved to be a pivotal match, a determined Army team fought Navy for 2 and one-half hours before losing in four games.

"We knew the Army would be tough," said Steve Murray, assistant Navy coach assigned to the USS Bataan, Norfolk, Va. "After our win over the Air Force the day before, we didn't want to think beyond our next match against the Army." That thinking was on target, but the grueling and tiring marathon match would take its toll on Navy later in the day.

Air Force spikers, meanwhile, came back from Day 1's disappointing loss to Navy. They quickly dispatched the Marines in three straight games.

The anticipated marquee rematch on Day 2 between Air Force and Navy proved as exciting as their first contest. This time, however, Air Force was energized by having beaten the Marines.

Air Force scored the first four points of Game 1 and took it, 15-12. Navy came back in Game 2, 15-9, with Air Force taking Game 3, 15-12. Scoring in Game 4 went back and forth as both teams fought hard for each point. The Texas heat slowly drained the energy from both teams.

Friday's competition had Army playing back-to-back matches against Air Force and Navy. Despite having lost to both teams earlier, the Army's strong play both times was a confidence builder. If Army could pull off two wins, a three-way tie loomed large.

The first crucial match for Army against Air Force started out as planned — almost. Air Force's win over Navy, though, also boosted their competitiveness.

A charged-up Air Force team prevailed in a tight first game, 16-14, and then halted the Army altogether, 15-7 and 15-6.

Unfortunately for Navy, time ran out. Injuries had torpedoed the ship and the Army scuttled it quickly in three straight, 15-11,15-12 and 15-12. The Army win left the Air Force alone on top.

ARMY QUOTES

As to the enemies of freedom, to those who are potential adversaries, they will be reminded that peace is the highest aspiration of the American people. We will negotiate for it, sacrifice for it; we will not surrender for it—now or ever.

— Ronald Reagan, Inaugural Address, 20 Jan 81

Post transfers ownership of electric utilities system

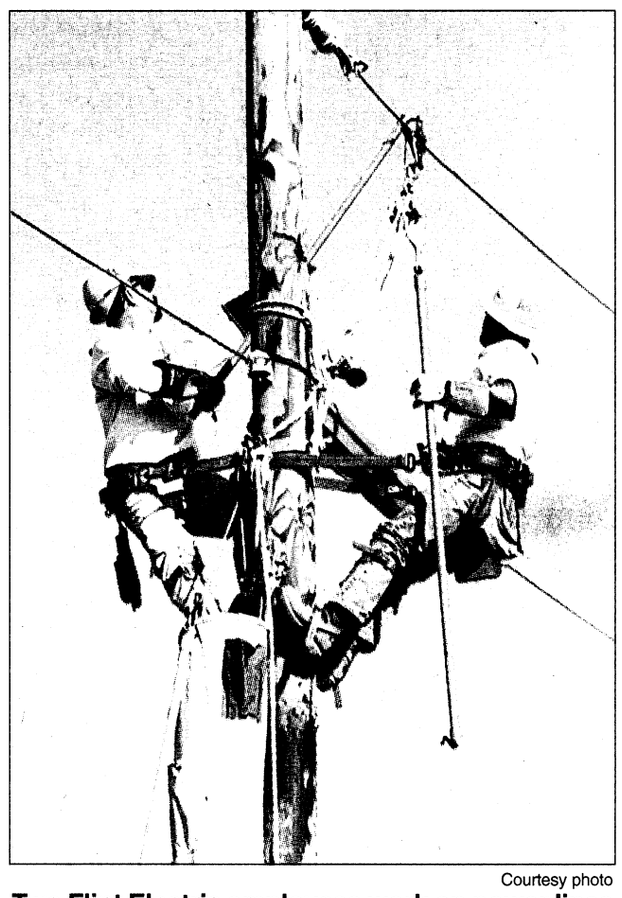
Directorate of Public Works

In response to Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen's initiative to privatize a majority of military utility systems by 2003, Fort Benning leads the way in the first wave of U.S. Army installations to initiate and complete the utility privatization process.

On Tuesday, Fort Benning will transfer ownership, operation and maintenance of its electric utility distribution system to Flint Electric, a division of Flint Energies. Flint Electric is one of four electric utilities that submitted project bids. Its selection marks the completion of a process begun in 1994 at the highest levels of government.

Privatization projects like this are a result of spending priority changes with the Department of Defense.

"This will be a seamless transition," said Col. Randy Buck, director of Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Works (DPW). "You will see Flint Electric vehicles where once you saw DPW utility vehicles. This is a sound business decision for DPW, Fort Benning and the U.S. Army. Flint Electric can operate and maintain our electric utility infrastructure more economically and with state-of-the-art technology while we focus on services more in keeping with our primary mission, training Soldiers."



Fort Benning has experienced privatization on a limited scale for almost 40 years. The Custer Terrace family housing area, home to about 745 families, is currently served by Georgia Power, which has owned and maintained the electrical system in that area since 1958 and also the United Cities Gas Co., which owns and maintains the natural gas system there as well. These smaller scale privatizations provide a model for future close interaction between Fort Benning and Flint Electric. To facilitate this relationship and better serve Fort Benning's needs, Flint Electric will build an office on Main Post.

Flint Electric is not a newcomer to military operations. The company already serves power needs to Fort Benning's Camp Darby with personnel from its Upatoi, Ga., office. Robins Air Force Base also hired Flint Electric several years ago to perform environmental compliance testing of some of its electric distribution assets.

Flint has sufficient capacity to purchase, upgrade, expand, maintain and operate Fort Benning's system. The 62-year-old corporation has sustained an annual growth of 12 to 15 million dollars in physical plant assets. Flint Electric receives no government subsidies through low interest loans or other programs. Therefore, taking over Fort Benning's electric utility operations provides a true savings to the government and U.S. Army.

In Georgia, generation companies lease capacity and jointly own Georgia's power plants. At this time, Fort Benning will continue to purchase its power from Georgia

Benning participates in study

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning and the Muscogee County School District teamed up to take part in a study that has them one step closer to tackling many of the challenges that high school students who are members of military families face.

In what is deemed the Secondary Education Transition Study (SETS), Army and high school educational systems are working together to further understand and respond to the educational needs of these high school students. Fort Benning is one of nine military installations and Department of Defense activities worldwide participating in the study which began earlier this month and is expected to finish sometime in December 2000.

"The major reason for this study is to take a look at the challenges high school students from military families face as a result of moving," said Gail Wilson, director of staff development for Fort Benning Schools and action researcher for SETS. "The study is designed to really get a feel for these challenges and find a way to address them."

She went on to say that it is amazing the number of obstacles high school students face when they move during their high school career. Unlike Soldiers, who have many absolutes as they transition from post to post, students must deal with all kinds of uncertainties. Different school systems often have different graduation standards, class rankings and grade-point averages. All of this can present challenges as students prepare to meet graduation requirements and apply for college scholarships.

McChrystal

Col. Stanley A. McChrystal, regimental commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, was one of 37 colonels Defense Secretary William Cohen nominated for promotion to brigadier general.

"I feel that nothing is accomplished individually in the Army," McChrystal said. "Anything for which I am recognized belongs to the professionals I have been so fortunate to work with throughout my career. I hope that they all can take true and justified pride in it."

His commands include a company in the 24th Mechanized Division at Fort Stewart and a company of Rangers in the 3rd Ranger Battalion at Fort Benning. He commanded the 2nd Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment at Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 2nd Ranger Battalion at Fort Lewis, Wash.

Prior to assuming command of the regiment he was a National Security Fellow at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

In addition to his bachelor's degree from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, New York, he holds a masters degree in Strategic Studies from the U.S. Naval War College and in International Relations from Salve Regina College.

He and his wife Anne have one son, Sam. They live at Fort Benning.

Rangers from the Ranger Training Brigade (top right) show the crowd some hand-to-hand combat techniques during the Rangers-In-Action demonstration. Spectators (right) watch as Silverwings make their descent from 4,000 feet.

During the one-day event, the 5th RTBn, which is responsible for the Mountain Phase of Ranger School, opens the camp's doors to the public and invites community members to take a sneak peak at the training Soldiers receive there in addition to viewing some of the equipment and techniques used by Rangers everywhere. In addition to the Rangers-In-Action demonstration, the open house festivities also included display booths, equipment demonstrations and the Mountain Ranger Run.

Nation remembers holiday's true meaning

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Memorial Day? Yeah, sure, that's the weekend of my birthday. For a lot of people, it means a three-day reprieve from work. For some, it's the start of the summer season, and for the socialites it's that time to break out the matching white shoes and purse.

commentary

This Memorial Day, though, I'm hoping that everyone will take a break from the cookout or the yard work to remember what the holiday is really about.

Memorial Day, also called Decoration Day, was first observed in 1868 and came to be because of the placing of flowers on the graves of Confederate and Union Soldiers. There are many stories, though, including one that the holiday was started by Union Soldiers' wives decorating the graves of their husbands.

So, who will I be remembering this Memorial Day? Thanks to my year and half at The Bayonet, I have learned a lot about the military, including a lot of military history — history that most people don't know about, mostly because of classified documents.

One of the assignments I will always remember was the dedication of a monument on Sacrifice Field in November of 1997. The monument is for the 802 Soldiers of the 66th Infantry Division who perished at sea Christmas Eve of 1944. On that night, 2,235 Soldiers were crossing the English Channel aboard the S.S. Leopoldville, a Belgian troop ship, as reinforcements for the Battle of the Bulge. The ship was torpedoed by a German U-Boat and sunk.

During the dedication, Vincent Codianni, one of the driving forces behind the monument and the realization of it, got up to speak. He talked about that night, about coming into consciousness in the cold, dark waters and realizing that he had lost both of his front teeth and that his tongue was split right down the middle. Codianni was quoted as saying "I came right up and I thought my head was going to explode. Hot water was coming out of my ears and all around me were bodies and guys were screaming."

What he said next I will never forget, and typifies exactly what Memorial Day is all about: "This monument fulfills the promise that I made. I promised myself that our buddies and their sacrifices would not be forgotten."

Codianni spent more than 50 years fulfilling his promise to his buddies, the promise to eternalize their memory, and to make sure that no one would forget what those 802 young men, mostly 18- and 19-year-olds, gave their lives for.

So this Memorial Day, take a minute to remember someone you knew who sacrificed his or her life for our country, or take a walk around Sacrifice Field and look at each of the monuments, but ultimately, keep the Soldiers who have given so much in your memories.

Memorial Day honors fallen comrades

Butch Miller
The American Legion

Memorial Day is the day we remember and honor those who lost their lives fighting for our nation.

commentary

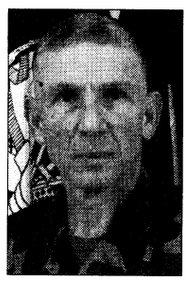
The men and women we remember on Memorial Day demonstrated the highest form of faith in the triumph of good over evil. Just as they had a mission, we, too, have a mission — to teach the young people of today to respect America's values.

History teaches us that our faith in freedom — readily backed up by our resolve to defend freedom — has made America and the world a better place. Today, 179 of the world's sovereign states elect their lawmakers. That means the earth is covered by democracy in greater proportion than water; it's covered by 93 percent democracy. Cleary, those who made the supreme sacrifice for freedom did so for a victorious cause.

History teaches us that the world will never run out of threats to freedom. Hitler is no more. We won the Cold War. But our world must contend with Milosevic in Kosovo and Hussein in Iraq. Future generations may be called upon again to sacrifice for freedom.

I often tell others about Danny Flynn, a young Marine. His story helps me reaffirm a young person's faith in the perseverance of a free people.

Pfc. Danny Flynn drove a personnel carrier during Vietnam. He had been in country for 19 days when he volunteered to take a sick buddy's tour of duty. On that fateful night, May 25, 1968, a Cambodian rocket killed Flynn. He was 20 years old.



Flynn was a native of Kings Park, N.Y. He was buried with full military honors there. He was awarded the Purple Heart posthumously and a Kings Park baseball field was named in his honor. But the most important tribute to Flynn is carried out by a local middle school. They keep hope alive by teaching young people how important Memorial Day is.

Every year, fifth and sixth graders write letters to Flynn's mother. Through the battlefield death of Danny Flynn, new generations learn about patriotic values. Their notes to Flynn's mother are short, but poignant. "When I say the Pledge of Allegiance, I will remember Danny Flynn," wrote one student. "Bringing the books to Kings Park Library will help me focus on the sacrifice Danny Flynn made for me," reflected another.

The children of that middle school wouldn't understand Memorial Day if someone hadn't taught them that freedom isn't free. They continue to learn that America's fallen heroes expressed their faith in democracy by committing the most selfless act of all.

Each of us must instill in young people the importance of Memorial Day. If we do, America's faith in freedom, justice and democracy will remain intact. So, too, will the blanket of freedom that our honored dead bequeathed to us.

Nation pauses to thank Soldiers

Memorial Day is the day our nation pauses to give thanks to the noble heroes who served our country in peace and war. Those of us in the armed forces especially appreciate what it means to fight for freedom and to make the ultimate sacrifice.

Our nation's freedom was purchased by the blood of our fallen comrades. Nearly every generation since has had to guarantee freedom and democracy with their blood, here and around the world.

Those serving today continue to put their lives on the line in a world that is still a dangerous place. At the threshold of the 21st century, there are those who oppress and enslave the weak, murder those of another group or culture and eschew the ideals of democracy.

Most of you will have four, richly deserved days off this weekend. Please take a few moments to reflect on the lives of the men and women who went before you, and those who are currently serving in harm's way in places like Kuwait and the Balkans.

Above all, be safe in any activity in which you participate, be it driving to visit friends and relatives, swimming, boating or just enjoying time off here at home.

Again, thanks for all you do, everyday, for our great nation and may God bless our fallen comrades with a Soldier's rest.

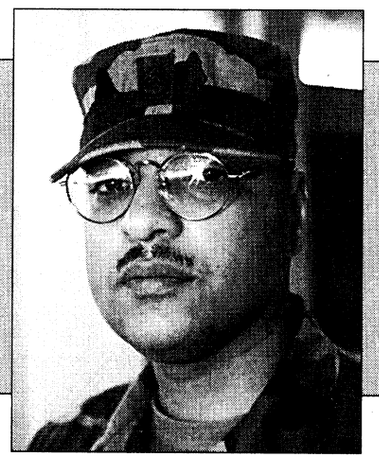
Call: Caller said there needed to be a range available to fire and practice privately owned weapons. He said a lot of people would prefer not to pay to join a club.



Directorate of Community Activities response: It was explained that to designate a military range for individuals to fire their weapons would incur the costs to maintain it and provide safety personnel to run. With the cutback in funding, this would be a luxury the installation presently could not afford. The post did have a skeet range open for about a year, but because of very low usage it was closed.

The caller was also informed that the Rifle and Pistol Club offers non-members two free half-days each year for zeroing their weapons before hunting season opens.

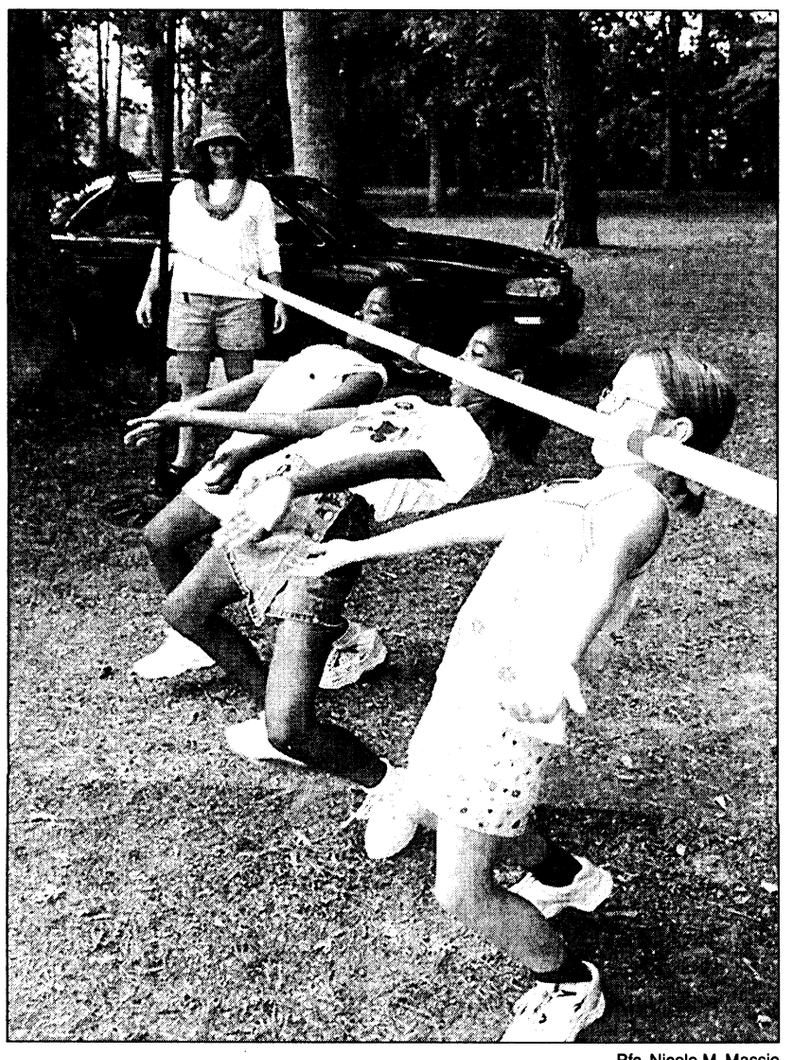
OWC sponsors 5K race



USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Officer's Wives' Club has joined with CB&T and the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer in sponsoring the first running of the Home Run. The Home Run is a 5 kilometer run or walk that will be held June 5. The race will begin and finish at historic Golden Park at 8:30 a.m. The profits from the race will benefit the Valley Rescue Mission and the House of Mercy.

All race participants will receive a t-shirt, drinks, snacks and a packet of goodies. Three radio stations and two bands will participate in the pre and post race activities. For the first time in a local race in Columbus, there will be a special prize category for the first three male and female military members to finish the race.

Additionally, there will be prizes for the top three finishers overall, male and female, as well as in the Master's category (over 40). Also, there will be trophies for the top three males and females in age groups beginning with 14 and under and each 5 year bracket from 15 years to 60 years of age.

This race is already shaping up to be a classic event in the area and race organizers are looking forward to hosting Soldiers and their family members at this inagural event. Several of the members of the race committee were on hand to pass out entry's at this year's Burn the General Run. Interested persons may obtain an entry form for $10 today at any CB&T branch. You may also register the day of the event for $12.

DPW: Company takes over service

Power, its current supplier. Flint Electric is also a Touchstone Energy Partner, the largest unified electric utility network in the U.S., with more than 500 partners that deliver energy solutions to more than 14 million customers every day.

To date, Flint Electric serves more than 60,000 meters with 5,000 miles of distribution line, 35 substations and 18,000 street, security and parking lights. Flint will make Fort Benning's 44,000 volt, 557-mile distribution system and seven substations network part of its existing distribution system. With privatization, Fort Benning benefits from technology such as Supervisory Control and Data Acquisition (SCADA), which monitors power distribution, a 24-hour system operations center and an automated power outage reporting system.

"We will ensure that Fort Benning, the 21,000 military personnel, their 20,000 dependents, the 6,500 civilian employees working on post and the 43,000 area retirees who are served by post facilities receive safe, reliable electric service," said Flint Electric President and CEO Joe Cade.

"We want to invest and become an active part of the Fort Benning community," Cade said. "We are known for our community efforts in our current service area, and we want to have the same reputation at Fort Benning,"

After Tuesday, when Flint assumes responsibility for Fort Benning's electrical system, DPW will remain the point of contact for all service matters pertaining to electricity. For problems with electrical service, residents will continue to call the DPW Service Order Desk at 545-2135.

Privatization of Fort Benning's electrical system does have one down side — seven DPW employee positions are being eliminated.

All in all, this privatization undertaking is vital to Fort Benning's future. Over time, the installation will realize better electrical service, even in the face of an ever-tightening budget.

SETS: Study continues

(MCEC), which developed and will eventually evaluate the study, are in the process of interviewing 12th-grade students at seven high schools in Columbus.

Until June they will be concentrating on 12th graders, parents and school administrators. Next fall when school resumes, they will again begin the interview process, but this time the interviews will involve students in grades nine through 12. These interviews will help researchers identify different problems that students, parents and administrators who were involved in a transition had to deal with and also practices by schools which were found to be beneficial.

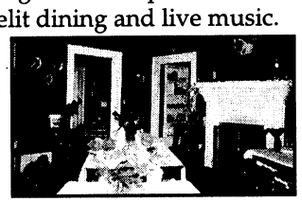
Once the study is finished, all of the findings are compiled and sent to MCEC to be evaluated.

"Not only do we want to identify what challenges students face, but we also want to find those practices which are already in place that are making the transition process smoother," Wilson said. "This will have a tremendous impact on military high school students. When we find these best practices, they will be published for other schools to consider implementing."

Jeanette Kirby, SETS researcher from the Muscogee County School District, said although it is early in the study, she has high hopes about its success and said everyone is excited about it.

"It is going very well. Everyone is quite receptive and all of the school's administration and parents have been interested," Kirby said. "They really see that there is a need to study this and find out what can be done. In the end I think there will be a lot of good suggestions coming from our schools and other schools that are doing special things to help make everything easier."

So far she said the biggest problems they have found with transitions is matching classes, credits and graduation requirements. However, she remarked that the schools are already working very hard to be flexible and allow transitioning students the same advantages as others.



In the end, the study will have tremendous advantages for both schools and installations, Kirby said.

She remarked that installations will have a better partnership with high schools and there will be less stress for transitioning military families.

"It's really just a move by the Army to do more for families," Kirby said. "The Army knows it's important to find ways to take care of families and education is a huge part of that."

OWC awards scholarships

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club (OWC) held its annual scholarship awards presentation May 19 during a luncheon at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Ten individuals received awards ranging from $500 to $2,000 and $11,500 was presented in total. The OWC raised money for the scholarship fund through activities such as the Thrift Store, 1998 Christmas Bazaar and through Ways and Means income.

USPA and IRA also helped the scholarship fund by donating a $1,000 scholarship. This is something that USPA and IRA has been doing in the Fort Benning community for the past 16 years.

This year's winner was Eileen Austin. Austin, who is graduating from Harris Country High School, will be attending Columbus State University and pursuing a nursing degree. Austin said this scholarship is important because "I am going into the dorms, and if it wasn't for this I don't know how I would be getting into the dorms."

A unique award, the Commander Mary T. Hall Scholarship, was awarded this year to Victoria Smith. Smith will be attending Columbus State University this fall and is graduating from Pacelli High School.

That fact makes this scholarship particularly special since Hall is an alumnus of Pacelli and of Columbus College which is now Columbus State University.

Anyone who is a member of OWC or the Enlisted Wives' Club or whose mother is a member of either club was eligible to apply for the scholarships. Applications were due on March 19 and 24 people applied. Candidates received notification of the awards on April 5.

"We had outstanding candidates this year. I think it was very successful," according to scholarship committee chairperson Karen Chipman.

A panel of five OWC members was entrusted with the difficult task of selecting the 10 successful candidates. The names of the individual applicants were unknown to the panel. Each application was evaluated on academics, leadership, activities, community involvement, an essay and SAT scores when applicable. Five graduating seniors were selected along with five continuing education students.

According to Chipman "OWC supports education and we want the community to know that it is an important part of what we do. We raise money so that we can put the money back into the community in the form of scholarships."

For some of the recipients the fact that the scholarship had a connection to the military community was special. "It comes kind of from my dad since he is in the military and I like that about it," said Rodriguez, whose father, Chief Warrant Officer 4 Felix Rodriguez is part of the Aviation Division at Fort Benning. Rodriguez, who has already completed three years of undergraduate work at Columbus State University, will begin a pharmacy program at the University of Georgia this fall.

OWC scholarships have been a part of the Fort Benning community for many years and no doubt will continue to be.

"It has always been an OWC thing to support the scholarship fund," Linda Ernst said.

At the same luncheon where these scholarships were presented the OWC welcomed a new board, and it is very likely they will soon start planning for next years scholarships.

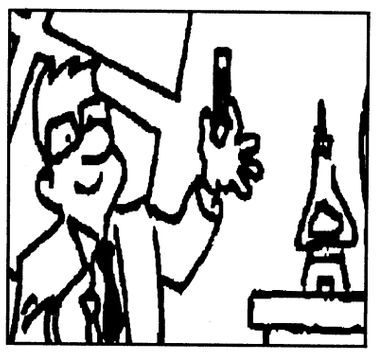
Naval officer repays club after 35 years

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Officer's Wives' Club (OWC) presented a special scholarship during its annual awards luncheon on May 19 as a result of the generosity of a former scholarship beneficiary. Retired U.S. Navy Commander Mary T. Hall received a $500 scholarship from OWC 25 years ago when she graduated from Pacelli High School in 1974.

This year Hall chose to be the benefactor and sent a check to the Fort Benning OWC scholarship fund. In response to this gesture Linda Ernst, said "I thought it was wonderful that the commander sent $500 to us and wanted to repay her scholarship."



According to Hall, the $500 that she received in 1974 paid for a large part of her undergraduate degree at then Columbus College (now Columbus State University.) That scholarship helped Hall to not only finish her undergraduate degree, but to go on and complete a law degree at the University of Georgia in 1978.

In the spring of 1979, Hall became an active duty Navy JAG officer. During her career in the military, Hall became the Navy's first female JAG officer to receive PCS orders to sea duty. She also earned her LL.M. degree from The Judge Advocate General's School of the Army in 1988. Hall opted for early retirement from the Navy in 1996, and is currently practicing military law in Virginia.

The Commander Mary T. Hall Scholarship turned out to be especially significant as the recipient, Victoria Smith, is also graduating from Pacelli High School. Not only that, but she is planning on attending Columbus State University this fall. By donating this scholarship Hall has enabled another young woman to begin to achieve her educational goals.

Ranger battalion receives new senior enlisted Soldier

Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

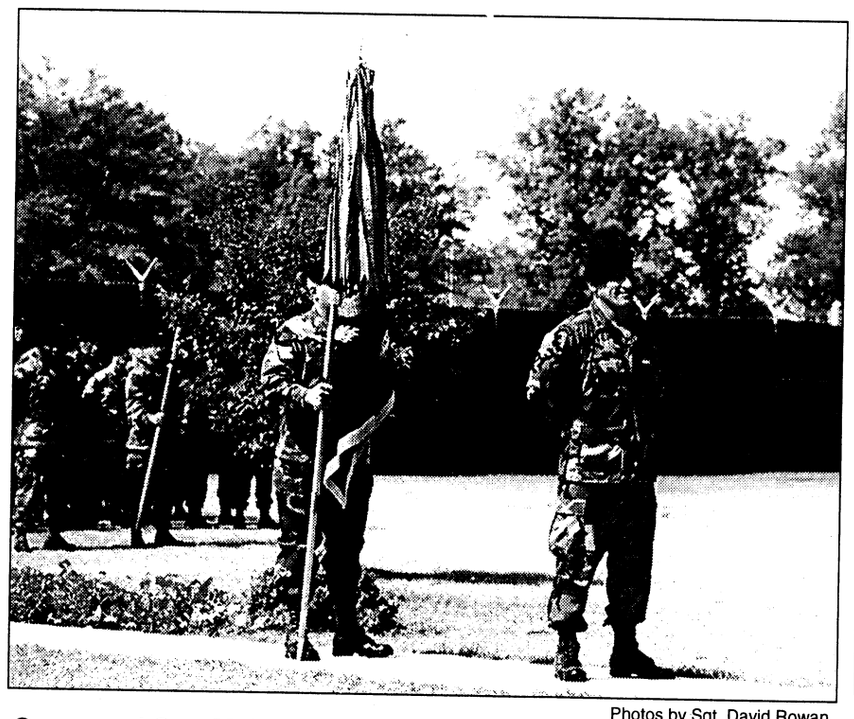
The 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment said their goodbyes to Command Sgt. Maj. Ralph R. Beam, who had been the battalion's command sergeant major since February 1995, during a change of responsibility ceremony May 21.

Command Sgt. Maj. Kevin P. Connell is now at the helm of one of the U.S. Army's elite light Infantry fighting forces as the battalion's senior enlisted Soldier.

After spending more than four years with the battalion, Beam said it was time to move on.

"Hey, it's time for me to fly," he simply said during the ceremony.

Beam, who has been in the Army for 23 years, is headed to Camp Doha, Kuwait to assume duties as the JTF-ARCENT Command Sergeant Major.



Connell has served with various Ranger, light Infantry and Special Operations units, and comes to the battalion after serving with the 75th Ranger Regiment as operations sergeant major.

Connell said he is very excited to have the opportunity to serve with the battalion.

"There is no greater honor than to serve with a such a close, but professional unit," he said.

Connell is accompanied by his wife Rene and three children, Michele, Jennifer and Kevin.

The command sergeant major is responsible for carrying out policies and standards of the performance, training, appearance and conduct of enlisted Soldiers.

Sergeant promotions to double

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Services

Sergeant promotions from the June list will double those made in May, as part of ongoing Army efforts to maintain noncommissioned officer strength.

The Army needs more sergeants and NCOs at all grades — to replace departing Soldiers on a "one-for-one" basis in a post-drawdown, steady-state Army, said Sgt. Maj. William T. Hursh, the enlisted promotions sergeant major in the Pentagon's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

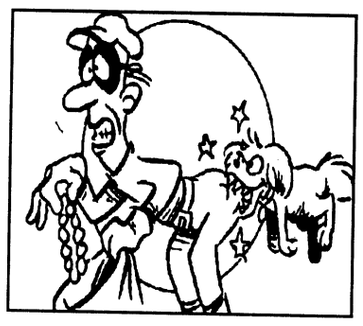
"The promotion opportunities to sergeant are excellent, but Soldiers must be on the sergeant promotion list to be promoted," said Hursh, who noted 2,055 Soldiers were selected to make sergeant from the June promotion list, while 1,000 troops were tabbed for three stripes in May.

The June NCO promotion list also features 40 new sergeants major, 175 master sergeants, 500 sergeants first class and 800 staff sergeants, said Hursh. The Army recently changed enlisted personnel policy, he said, to facilitate the promotion of sergeants.

Corporals receive lateral appointments from specialist rank with no corresponding increase in pay, according to Hursh.

Effective June 1, the promotion score waiting time for sergeant was reduced from 90 days to 60 days, Hursh said. This change has already affected sergeant promotions.

"It is important for soldiers to get on the sergeant promotion standing list — 1,500 of the 2,055 June 1 sergeant promotions went to Soldiers who were boarded in March and April," he said.



Sergeants are especially needed in certain military occupational specialties, known as STAR MOSs, said Hursh. The program is called STAR because asterisks were used to identify those MOSs on U.S. Total Army Personnel Command lists.

STAR MOSs, said Hursh, received more than 1,000 of the promotions to sergeant on the June list.

Correspondingly, he said, the number of STAR MOSs which need sergeants declined from 70 in May to 61 in June.

Hursh said the Army envisions 3,000 possible promotions to sergeant in July — if eligible Soldiers in the MOSs needed are on the sergeant promotion list. In March and April, 2,500 Soldiers were promoted to sergeant each month.

"Commanders need to place eligible Soldiers on the sergeant promotion list and eligible Soldiers need to prepare themselves for board appearance," he said. "Sergeants are grown by the units through training, mentoring and leadership."

Rangers undergo testing for coveted skills badge

Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

The 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment recently hosted the training and testing of the Expert Infantryman's Badge (EIB) from May 3-20.

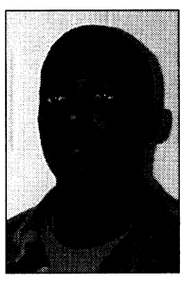
During the qualification, 243 Rangers from the battalion and 38 additional Soldiers from the Ranger Training Brigade (RTB) attempted to earn the badge.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Michael Higgerson, a platoon sergeant, EIB qualification is an arduous week of completing basic Infantry tasks to an articulate standard set forth by U.S. Army Infantry Center Pamphlet 350-6 and the unit's EIB committee, which is made up of the command sergeant major and first sergeants.

In order to qualify for the EIB, Rangers had to successfully complete numerous tasks including map reading, day and night land navigation and a 12-mile footmarch.

By the end of the week-long testing period, 230 Rangers from the 3rd Bn. and 28 Soldiers from RTB had earned the coveted badge.

Of those who went out for the badge, 95 percent of the 3rd Bn. Rangers had qualified.



"This is one of the highest battalion percentages we've ever had," said 1st Sgt. Richard Gatien, Headquarters and Headquarters Company first sergeant.

While individuals who qualified were able to pin on the EIB, companies with a 60 percent or higher qualification rate were awarded an EIB streamer for the company guidon. Each of the battalion's four companies surpassed the 60-percent goal by far with each having at least a 90-percent pass rate.

During the EIB awards ceremony May 21, Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Daniel Allyn expressed his pride in the battalion's accomplishment.

Fort Benning named its 20th Drill Sergeant of the Year Tuesday during a ceremony held in Marshall Auditorium.

Staff Sgt. Martin S. Celestine Jr., 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, edged out Basic Combat Training Brigade's Staff Sgt. Anthony V. Jones in this year's battle for the title of Fort Benning's best drill sergeant.

"A drill sergeant is one of the most visible and most prestigious jobs in the Army," said Command Sgt. Maj. George R. Monk, Henry Caro NCO Academy and Drill Sergeant School sergeant major, during his opening remarks. "They have the ultimate responsibility of training tomorrow's Soldiers with fierce courage. These two are proud to serve and not only meet the standard but exceed it daily."

Exceeding the standard is something that is not uncommon to either of these two NCOs as they have both competed and won at battalion and brigade-level competitions to even be a part of this contest.

"This actually is the finale of four months of preparation," Celestine said after being named best. "But it is not even close to being over."

The process continues for the eight-year Army veteran as he begins to study for the Army Training and Doctrine Command's Best Drill Sergeant competition. It is slated to be held June 14 at Fort Monroe, Va.

When asked what it was like to be named the post's best, Celestine smiled humbly and said, "Just because I won this doesn't mean I am the best," he said. "I got an opportunity to compete and win the award. There are any number of drill sergeants out there that could easily fill my shoes, but I am happy I earned the title."

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Post Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen presents Staff Sgt. Martin S. Celestine with an Army Commendation Medal during the Drill Sergeant of the Year ceremony Tuesday.

Celestine said above all he attributes his success as a drill to a desire that stems all the way back to when he was in basic training.

"I always thought it would be neat to be macho and tough like I saw my drill sergeant being in basic, but what really made that goal a reality was my peers, the drill sergeants that surround me who every day give 110 percent," he added.

"I'll never forget 1st Sgt. Perkins at my old unit in Germany who convinced me to turn in my packet to become a drill sergeant," he said. "He knew what was good for me, and I'll never forget that."

"NCO's taking care of other Soldiers, that is what it is about and that is something these men show daily," Monk said. "We are very proud of them."

Monk was not the only one in attendance who expressed his pride for the Infantryman named the best. More than 15 local businesses sponsored the event and donated thousands of dollars in money and prizes to each of the participants.

The two also netted a couple of Army awards during the ceremony as well. Celestine took home an Army Commendation Medal and an Order of the Saint Maurice, while Jones received an Army Achievement Medal.

"I'm going to take the next couple of days off, and then it's back to the books," Celestine said after claiming the title. "I have to be ready for the TRADOC competition next month."

13th CSB receives commander

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The 13th Corps Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) welcomed a new commander last week.

Lt. Col Anthony Swain received command of the battalion from outgoing commander Lt. Col. Michael G. Batez in a ceremony held on York Field May 20.

"I could not have been more proud to serve in your ranks," he said to the Soldiers who stood in formation in front of him. "Thank you for your dedication, professionalism and loyalty. It has been a ride."

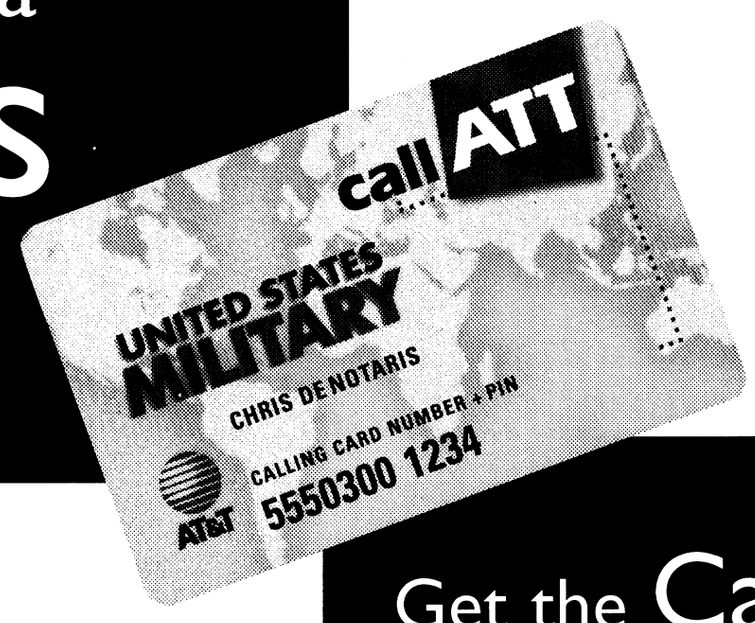
That ride has taken Batez through two National Training Center deployments, a company minus and a platoon minus deployment to Hungary and Kuwait, deployments to Nicaragua and various deployments in support of the 75th Ranger Regiment and 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, all with the support of his wife Hollie and daughter Eryn.

"No commander can ever hope to be marginally successful without a great supporting cast," he said. "I have been blessed with that here."

That cast welcomed new commander Swain back into the battalion in which he served nearly 18 years before as a lieutenant.

"It just doesn't get any better than this for many reasons," Swain said. "Command of a battalion is reason enough, but there is more. Commanding a battalion in which I served as a young lieutenant 18 years past is something special."

Pfc. Mitch Frazier



Lt. Col. Anthony Swain receives the guidon from 36th Engineer Group Commander Col. Allen Rasper during the change of command.

"Here I am surrounded by great communities, family and old friends and the promise of new ones," he said. "I am grateful to the Soldiers, NCOs and officers I have served with that has made this opportunity for me possible."

Swain is joined by his wife Inell, and his two sons Stephen and Marcus.

Trainee carries on tradition

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Pvt. Keith McGarvie, Company D, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, practices getting into the prone fighting position.

"I have always wanted to serve my country," said Pvt. Keith McGarvie, Company D, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade. As eight generations before him, he will carry on a family tradition when he marches across the parade field today to become a full-fledged Infantryman.

It was 81 years ago when McGarvie's great-great-grandfather, then a corporal with the 328th Infantry Regiment, 82nd Division, single-handedly took out 35 enemy machine guns, killed more than 20 enemy Soldiers and captured 128 German Soldiers and four officers during the battle of the Argonne Forest Oct. 18, 1918. These heroic actions earned him a promotion and not only the Medal of Honor and Distinguished Service Cross, but a row of foreign medals as well. His name was Sgt. Alvin York.

McGarvie was not a stranger to the military. Growing up on posts like Fort Jackson, S.C., and having other relatives who were in the service familiarized him with military life, however, McGarvie said he did not find out about the acts his great-great-grandfather completed during World War I until high school.

"My grandmother always used to talk about him when I was little. She had all of these black and white movies of him, but I really did not know about the extent of what he did until I started talking about joining (the Army) and inquiring about him in history class," McGarvie said. "When I found out all about him, I thought it was pretty hooah."

Even though he had always wanted to join the Army, he said, the knowledge of his great-great grandfather inspired him.

Although McGarvie said it came as no surprise to his family that he would become a Soldier, the news of York's great-great-grandson in One Station Unit Training was a surprise.

"I thought it was an honor to have York's great-great-grandson as a trainee," said Sgt. 1st Class Nathaniel Coakley, drill sergeant with Co. D., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. An admirer of York's legend, he said he has even used York as an example while training Soldiers.

"Sergeant York fought regardless of his beliefs and did what had to be done," Coakley said. "I see some of the qualities I have read about in Sergeant York in his great-great-grandson."

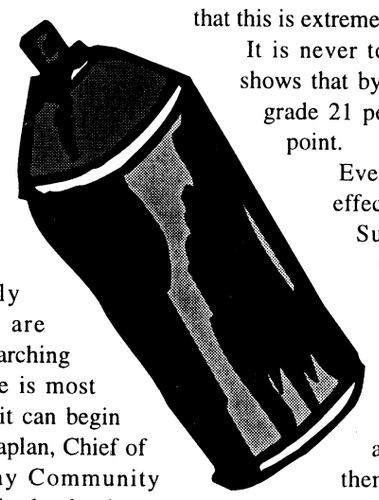
Coakley said he has seen the drive and determination that has been said York possessed.

However, McGarvie said he would never compare himself to his great-great-grandfather. He just wants to be the best anti-tank Infantryman he can be, and that he believes what makes someone great is all in the training.

"I've been trained by some of the greatest 11-series instructors there are, just as my great-great-grandfather had been when he joined the Army," McGarvie said. "If I was given a chance to go to war, I would do my best, just as he did."

Now on graduation day, he has reached what may be the first of many goals in his military career. McGarvie will now return to his National Guard unit in Pennsylvania where he plans to take advantage of his Montgomery GI Bill and eventually become an officer.

McGarvie said he and his family will visit the National Infantry Museum where they will recapture York's memory.



This memory has been preserved at the front of Infantry Hall where the Iron Mike statue faces a field named in his honor.

Inhalants

Abuse poses deadly threat to children

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

Inhalant abuse, commonly referred to as "sniffing," "huffing" or "bagging" is not a new problem in the U.S. but one that all too often has deadly consequences. According to the National Institute on Drug Awareness (NIDA), "inhalants are breathable chemical vapors that produce psychoactive (mind altering) effects." Many common household products can be classified as inhalants such as paint thinner, typewriter correction fluid, butane, aerosols and even hairspray.

Because inhalants are readily available and inexpensive they are attractive to preteens and teenagers searching for an illicit "high." "Inhalant abuse is most common in 13-15 year olds although it can begin as young as 6-8 years," said Dr. Joe Kaplan, Chief of Emergency Medicine, Martin Army Community Hospital. "Statistically, all the research clearly shows that inhalant abuse is a huge problem in every community, and there are no racial or socioeconomic boundaries."

This makes inhalant abuse not only a hard problem to combat, but an extremely dangerous one as well. Especially since as Kaplan warned "first time users can die."

It is difficult to determine the extent of a local problem, however, since medical personnel rarely see people with symptoms that clearly indicate inhalant abuse. "Inhalant abuse is out there; it is just not coming into the Emergency Department." Kaplan said. "The only way that we would probably see inhalers is when they come in with side effects. They either get their high and their long term liver or kidney failure etc., or they die right there on the scene."

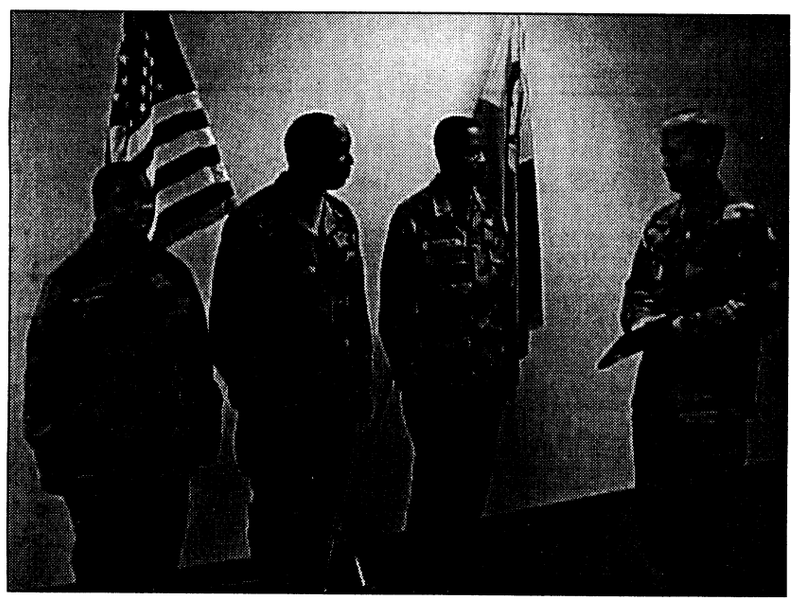
Not only can inhalant abuse be deadly, it can create a variety of serious medical problems.

"Although they do not seem like something that we are used to thinking of as drugs of abuse and dangerous drugs, inhalants are some of the most dangerous drugs. They are probably more dangerous than most street drugs out there," Kaplan said. Prolonged inhalant abuse can lead to kidney damage, liver damage, damage to the central nervous system, even brain damage.

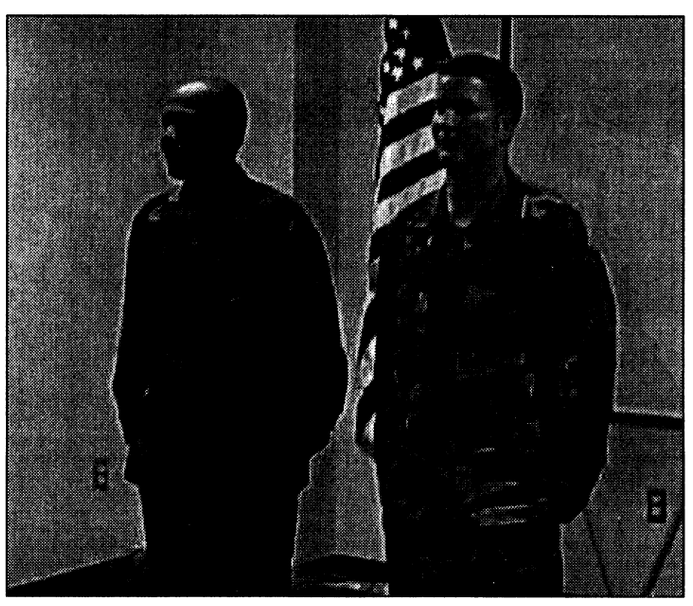
It is even possible become addicted to these drugs according to Kaplan, and "there have been withdrawal cases noted in people who use inhalants."

Addiction and the resulting medical risks are not the only things to be concerned about however. "Inhalants are the doorway to harder drugs," warned Kaplan, "Parents need to really sit down and talk to their kids about this and start early. They need to let them know that this is extremely dangerous."

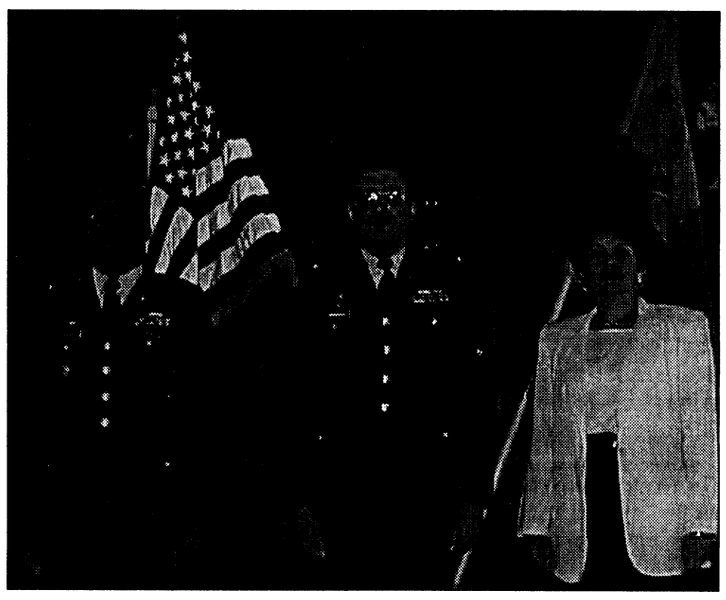
It is never too early either, as NIDA research shows that by the time children reach the eighth grade 21 percent have tried inhalants at some point.



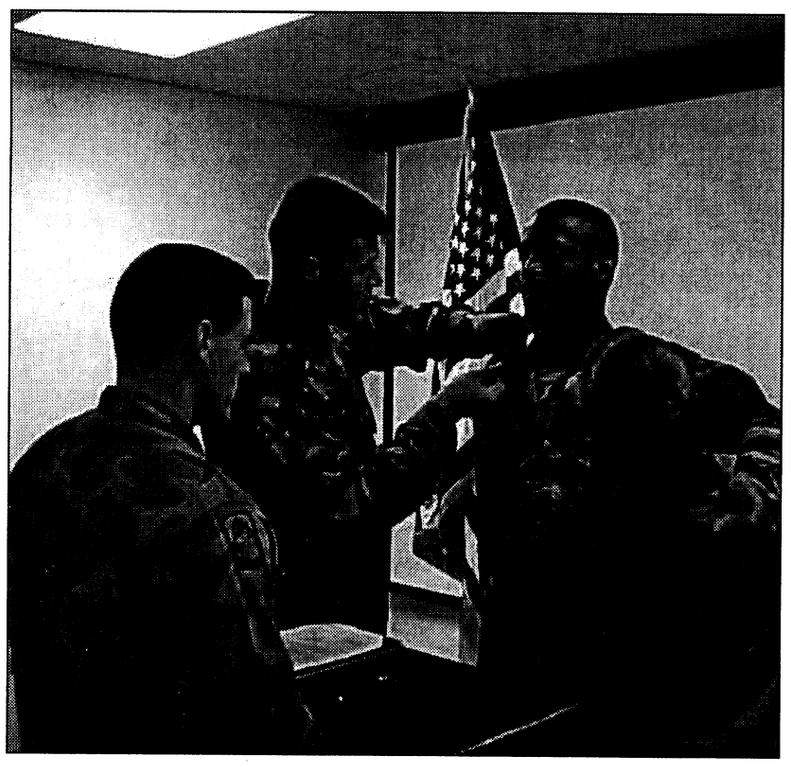
Even more frightening than long-term effects, and an equally serious threat, is Sudden Sniffing Death Syndrome. One of the effects of inhaling can be a sensitization of the heart to chemicals that the body naturally produces such as adrenaline. Often after inhaling people will feel fearful or agitated and physically exert themselves in some way. When this happens the body naturally increases the adrenaline level and the individual can actually overdose on adrenaline causing the heart to stop and the victim to die instantly.



Although it is impossible to keep children away from all substances that could be abused through inhaling, parents and teachers can watch for warning signs. Kaplan said these signs may include "sniffer's nose," or lesions around the nose, abnormal behavior such as lack of inhibition or confusion, trouble walking or poor coordination, problems chewing or with facial muscles, presence of spray paint on mouth or on clothes, whiteness around nose from chemicals or finding unusual items in children's possession. Kaplan added "It is extremely hard to identify this, and there is no clear screening or testing method."



If you suspect anyone of using inhalants, a good first step towards helping them is to call the National Inhalant Prevention Coalition at (800) 269-4239, Kaplan suggested.



"Parents need to talk to their children. It has been clearly documented that children actually do listen to their parents when they talk about serious issues like this. The earlier parents get involved with their kids on this the better they are," Kaplan said.

For more information about inhalants and inhalant abuse contact the NIDA website at www.nih.nida.gov.

USAMU to rededicate Easley Range

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) will rededicate Easley Range Thursday afternoon in a ceremony on Dixie Road.

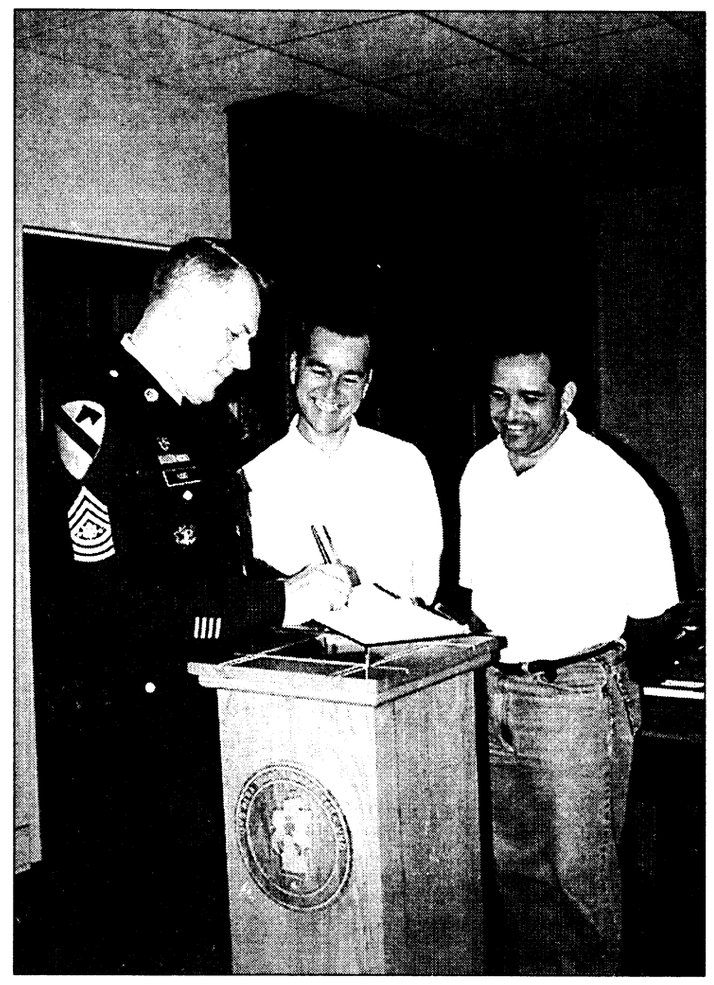
Easley Range is named for the late Brig. Gen. Claudius Miller "Speck" Easley, who began his career in rifle marksmanship by competing in the National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, in 1910. The Infantry School dedicated Easley Range March 26, 1951, in honor of Easley's contributions to the development and improvement of small arms marksmanship. The range is being rededicated to unveil a portrait of the late general and cut the ribbon on the new USAMU Service Rifle Team range building, which was constructed this year.

The ceremony's guest speaker will be retired Col. Robert B. Nett, a World War II Medal of Honor recipient and Columbus resident. Easley's only child, retired Lt. Col. Claudius M. Easley Jr. and U.S. Rep. Mac Collins of Georgia also plan to attend the ceremony.

After Nett's remarks, the Easley family will unveil a portrait of Easley painted by U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit graphic artist Charles R. Pagan. The portrait was done from the last photograph taken of him in Okinawa just hours before he was killed in action in 1945.

Easley was born in Thorp Spring, Texas, July 11, 1891, the eldest son of Claudia Miller and Alexander Campbell Easley. At the age of 4, he moved with his family to Waco, Texas, where he grew up and was graduated from Waco High School in 1911. While in high school, he enlisted in the Texas National Guard and began a career in rifle marksmanship by competing in the National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, in 1910. He was commissioned on his 21st birthday.

He received a bachelor of science degree in architectural engineering from the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas in 1916. Upon graduation, he went at once into active service with the Texas National Guard on the Mexican border until he was commissioned in the regular Army in 1917. It was while serving on the border that he met his future wife, Inez Wickline of Woodville, Texas. They were married in 1917 in Kansas City, Mo., and had one son.



Between World Wars I and II, Easley was a member of the first Infantry Officers Basic Course of the newly established Infantry School in 1919. He also graduated from the Infantry Officers Advanced Course, the Command and General Staff College and the Army War College. He served with the 37th Infantry Regiment on the Mexican Border and at Fort Wayne, Mich.; the 31st Infantry in Manila, Philippines; the 4th Infantry at Fort George Wright, Wash.; and the 30th Infantry at the Presidio of San Francisco, Calif.

He was an instructor in the Infantry School Weapons section from 1930 to 1934, was the commander of the Los Angeles District of the Civilian Conservation Corps from 1936 to 1938, was the captain of the Infantry Rifle and Pistol Teams from 1937 to 1939 and served on the War Department's General Staff from 1940 to 1942.

Easley took command of the 325th Infantry Regiment of the 82nd Infantry Division soon after the United States' entry into World War II. He left that unit to become the assistant division commander of the 96th Infantry Division at the time of its activation in August 1942 at Camp Adair, Ore. The division gained the nickname the "Deadeyes" because of the high level of marksmanship it achieved through the training directed by Easley. He then went to the Pacific Theater of Operations with the division in the summer of 1944.

For exceptionally meritorious conduct, Easley was awarded the Legion of Merit at the close of the Leyte Campaign during which he had been wounded by sniper fire and was awarded the Purple Heart. In May 1945, he was awarded the Silver Star for gallantry in action in Okinawa. On June 19, 1945, he was killed in action while directing fire on the last enemy position on the island.

Members of the Easley family, who will attend the ceremony, will unveil the portrait, at which time Easley will address the crowd. He and his family will then cut the ribbon officially rededicating Easley Range, after which a first-shot ceremony and Service Rifle Team shooting demonstration will take place.

Prevention council offers home security tips

Mark S. Mandell
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

It's a sad fact, but these days virtually no one is immune to crime.

According to the National Crime Prevention Council (NCPC), one out of 10 homes will be burglarized this year, and almost half of all completed residential burglaries involve thieves simply breezing through unlocked doors or windows. This danger becomes even more terrifying when family members encounter these intruders.

But the odds can be changed, according to the NCPC. "It takes a combination of personal safety and self-defense techniques," advised the NCPC, "coupled with a commitment to working with neighbors, friends and colleagues at work to build safer and better communities."

The NCPC web site offers the following home security tips to better protect you and your family:

Locks and doors

•Make sure that every external door has a solid, well-installed dead bolt lock. Key locks alone are not enough.

•To secure sliding doors, either install locks or put a broomstick or dowel in the inside track to jam the door.

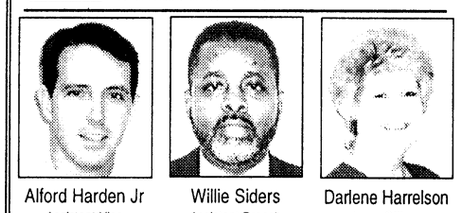
Also, to prevent the door from being lifted off the track, drill a hole through the slide door frame and the fixed frame, then insert a pin.

•Always lock double-hung windows with key locks, or drill a small hole into a 45 degree angle between the inner and outer frames, then insert a nail that can be removed. Put grilles or grates over basement windows.

•Make sure to re-key the locks when you move into a new house or apartment, and give an extra key to a neighbor you trust — don't hide it around the outside of your home, where it can be discovered.

•All outside doors should be metal or solid wood. Install a peephole or wide angle viewer in all entry doors so you can see who is outside without opening the door.

Check the outside



•Bright lights keep thieves away. Install outside lights and keep them on at night.

•Don't give burglars easy access to your home — cut back tree limbs that can be used to climb to an upper-level window.

•When traveling, use timers that will turn lights on and off in different areas of your house throughout the evening and create the illusion that you're at home.

•Make a list of your valuables, complete with serial numbers and descriptions. Photos of these items also can be helpful in the event they're stolen.

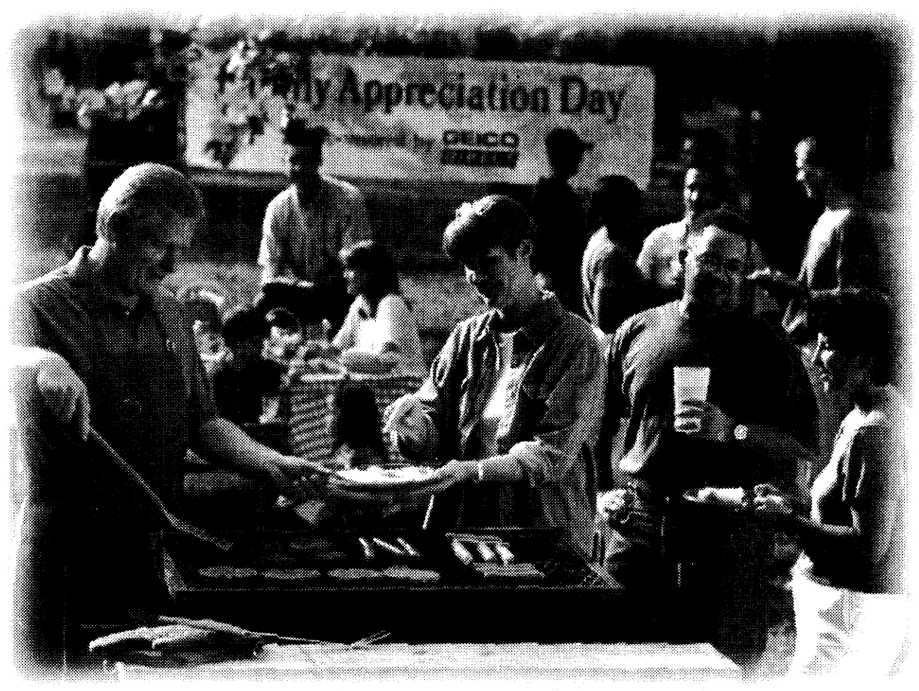
SERVICE INTERRUPTION NOTICE:
ATTENTION AT&T CUSTOMERS CALLING THE U.S. FROM KUWAIT

Recently the Kuwaiti Ministry of Communications began blocking calls originating in Kuwait using the home country direct access numbers of American telephone carriers, including AT&T. As a result, we expect that customers in Kuwait will experience difficulty or be unable to access the AT&T network by dialing the AT&T Direct® Service access code. While it is possible to make calls to the U.S. by placing calls through Kuwaiti operators, we must caution customers that the cost may be higher compared to what customers are accustomed to paying using AT&T Direct Service.

Calls Placed From Camp Doha Remain Unaffected

AT&T customers will still be able to place calls and pay regular AT&T rates by using the military payphones at Camp Doha. Below we have listed the cost per minute for calls to the United States placed from Camp Doha using an AT&T direct-billed Calling Card with a special savings plan:



AT&T Global Military Saver Plus℠	$1.38 per minute
AT&T One Rate℠ Global	$1.41 per minute
AT&T Global Prepaid Card	$1.50 per minute

AT&T is using its resources, including those in government, military and diplomatic channels, to get service restored as quickly as possible. In the meantime, we urge customers to make all calling card, credit card and prepaid card calls using the phones at Camp Doha. We apologize for any inconvenience this situation may cause our customers and hope to have service restored very soon.

Please Pass The Word

Please pass the word to family and friends who may be affected by this situation. And feel free to duplicate this information and post it for the benefit of all military personnel who would benefit from explanation of this situation.

What's happening at White Elementary School

White Elementary students learn lessons with ice cream

White Elementary School

Rae Meriaux's second-grade class and Ann Lucas' first grade class at White Elementary School had a "delightfully delicious" time collaborating and implementing a unit about ice cream with their students.

Students had a chilling time working in cooperative groups writing and illustrating their own stories and poems related to the ice cream theme. In the computer lab, Meriaux's and Lucas' students used the Ultimate Writing Center to publish their stories and poems. Children designed their own ice cream cone paper bag puppets and used their imaginations to create stories.

Did you know that during World War I, ice cream got its first official endorsement from the Army as a "morale food?" This is just one of the facts and part of the rich history that the students learned from exploring numerous web sites about America's favorite dessert.

Scoops of adjectives, verbs, compound words and story starters were used to design and create a multi-flavored gigantic ice cream cone which decorates their pod. Tasty compound cones and frosty banana splits were also added to the decor.

Learning math was made "doubly delicious" as children integrated the math skills of measuring, graphing and using fractions into making ice cream. The children created graphs indicating their favorite flavors of ice cream. Ice cream recipes were used to develop the understanding of fractions and measurements.

A tasty dish of science was added by observing, comparing and measuring. The children observed the changes of liquids to solids, they compared the temperature of ice with and without salt using Celsius thermometers.

Is it chocolate or vanilla? In a culminating activity, the children gathered to make luscious homemade ice cream. The children combined ingredients into a small plastic bag then placed the smaller bag into a larger plastic bag containing ice and salt. Shake, shake, shake was the name of the game as children shook the bags to make the scrumptious chocolate or vanilla ice cream.

All spoons were lifted to a "super-scooper" day!

Classes offer tutoring

White Elementary School

Barbara Proctor's kindergarten and Mel Vaillant's first grade class focus on flexible age and ability grouping as these two classrooms join the rest of White Elementary School in helping with the transition for the military child facing many different moves and teachers. Transitioning students often have two different classroom teachers in one school year.

First graders have the opportunity throughout the year to assist kindergarten students with curriculum projects. Peer tutoring in both classrooms continues to be an effective learning tool for all involved.

Students moving from kindergarten to first grade have already formed a relationship with their first grade teacher if they choose to be in her classroom the following year. At the request of a parent, siblings can also take advantage of being next door to each other. Parents can volunteer in both classrooms which helps the pressure of giving equal time to all siblings.

Gateway Award

Columbus names Dexter as top school for environmental actions

A school-wide, year-long focus on ecology, recycling and campus beautification earned Dexter Elementary School top honors at the seventh annual Keep Columbus Beautiful Awards Banquet held May 20 in the dining hall at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center.

The Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission selected Dexter as the 1999 Gateway School of the Year from 28 participating schools throughout the Columbus area.

The award was based on a calendar of events that included a big ecology project each month. Throughout the school year, Dexter students belonging to one of three ecology clubs, created a litter patrol and conducted litter-free events, planned and participated in campus beautification and recycled telephone books, paper and aluminum cans. The students also participated in the Help the Hooch River Cleanup, the Peachy Clean-Great American Cleanup and celebrated Arbor Day and Earth Day.

"Each project completed by our students focused on making our community a cleaner and more beautiful place to live," said Linda Turner, first-grade teacher and sponsor of the fifth grade Green Thumbs at Dexter. "The students begin learning the importance of protecting the earth and conserving her limited possessions beginning in the kindergarten with the ecology club (e-Club)."

According to Earnestine Ezekiel, e-Club sponsor, the kindergarten e-Club meets weekly to recycle newspaper and plastics and are responsible for the Campus Watch litter patrols.

"We are extremely proud of the e-club members who recently received first place in the state for their ecology projects this year at the Keep Georgia Beautiful Awards Luncheon."

E-Club member Brittany Bergquist said that on Fridays they pick up the litter all around the school, bundle newspapers and sometimes plant flowers. "It is fun to help out, especially planting the flowers," she said.

Terri Bond, sponsor for the third and fourth grade Earth Watchers Club hoped the students would learn to take a personal interest in helping the earth. "The Earth Watchers participated in many projects this year like studying water pollution, recycling white paper and aluminum cans and activities that promoted earth stewardship."

The fifth-grade students were actively involved as members of the Green Thumbs and remained busy caring for the campus green house, growing and planting flowers for use in landscaping and beautification projects and implementing Gateway School projects.

"All the children enter the clubs with different expectations. Some kids like to work with plants while others like to do community service, but no matter what the expectation is, the children learn to be responsible for the earth, and they are excited about their accomplishments," Turner added.

For the past two years, Dexter has prepared raised gardens and flower beds in the courtyard area, created a butterfly habitat for the Monarch Butterflies raised by first grade students and has involved all students in their ecology movement.

"Being named Gateway School of the Year is a special honor for us because it represents a school wide focus on ecology and earth stewardship," said Vicki Rogers, principal at Dexter. "Whether it was participation in the recycling of phone books or anti-litter campaigns, each grade level contributed in some way and we are very proud!"

Stowers celebrates America

The second annual "Celebrate America" performance took place at Stowers Elementary School May 18 in spite of a threatening thunderstorm.

This year's theme was "A Salute to the 50 States" and children from pre-kindergarten through fifth grade participated in an evening of song and dance. Almost all of Stower's 640 students played a role in the event while hundreds of friends and family members snapped pictures, clapped their hands and laughed as the children entertained them.

The pre-kindergarten students, dressed as sunflowers, represented Florida and shared their version of You Are My Sunshine. Kindergarten students gave the crowd a taste of the islands as they performed a traditional Hawaiian hula dance, and first graders were full of glamour as they represented New York. The second grade was decked out in cowboy boots and 10-gallon hats offering a warm Texas welcome, while the third, fourth and fifth graders brought a bit of Louisiana Mardi-Gras to Georgia.

Throughout the evening, the school choir filled out the performance with songs highlighting more of the 50 states. They were supported by smaller ensembles that delighted the audience with highlights of California surfing and Motown greatness. An old-fashioned square dance helped represent Oklahoma, and a graceful Tennessee Waltz illustrated the southern charm of that state.

One high point of the evening was when five young boys, fully outfitted with wigs and bell-bottom pants, portrayed the Jackson Five. Not only did the children sing, but they also danced and strummed toy guitars.

Third-grader Mack Clemmons, who played the part of Michael Jackson, said it was a good experience. "I have never performed in a group with other people in front of everybody," Clemmons said.

The "Celebrate America" program was originally the idea of Principal Glenn Hughes, but the entire performance was designed and organized by music teacher Lorri Blanchard.

Marni Magowan-Otjen

Kindergarten students from Stowers perform a Hawaiian hula dance during the school's second annual "Celebrate America" performance held May 28. All grades dressed up to represent different states and also participated in song and dance.

"I hope that the students have gained an appreciation for the states we discussed and what each state has to offer. I really wanted it to be a learning experience for them because they travel." said Blanchard when asked what she wanted her students to gain from this experience.

The states chosen represented either a specific region of the country or are states that the children might visit in the southeast, according to Blanchard.

The preparations for this program began in February and necessitated a great deal of hard work from everyone especially Blanchard.

"There was a lot of self sacrifice on the part of Ms. Blanchard to make sure that the show came together," said Sterratt. Blanchard meets with the choir only two days a week and all the other students only one day a week.

Fundraising events, including dances, were held to raise the approximately $2,000 that was necessary to put on this production. Everything from Mardi-Gras beads to formal gowns for the Tennessee Waltz had to be bought or made.

"We had lots of help from parents and a lot of volunteers making costumes and putting things together," said Hughes. "The reaction to the performance by parents was clearly positive."

"I think it went really well — we were in for a treat. I am amazed at the talent the kids have." said Janice Gutierrez, whose daughter Katelyn is in the first grade.

"She (Katelyn) overcame her shyness and really enjoyed it. She learned a lot about performing in front of people." Gutierrez also added that performances like these have a positive impact as they "help to make the community aware of the different schools and what they have going on."

The evening culminated as raindrops started to fall with Hughes singing Proud to be an American from the roof of the school building flanked by Uncle Sam and the Statue of Liberty. The children joined in singing and waving red, white and blue flags.

"We really want the military personnel and the families to know that we understand and we support them in their job; we appreciate them and everything that they do putting their lives on the line fighting for our freedom. Every program that we do is dedicated to them," said Blanchard. The "Celebrate America" program is intentionally planned close to Memorial Day.

In the end, Sterratt estimates that more than 1,000 people took part in the evening celebration. According to Sterratt, this will continue to be an annual event at Stowers elementary.

While there was obviously a tremendous amount of work involved with this program Blanchard is already looking forward to doing it again next year.

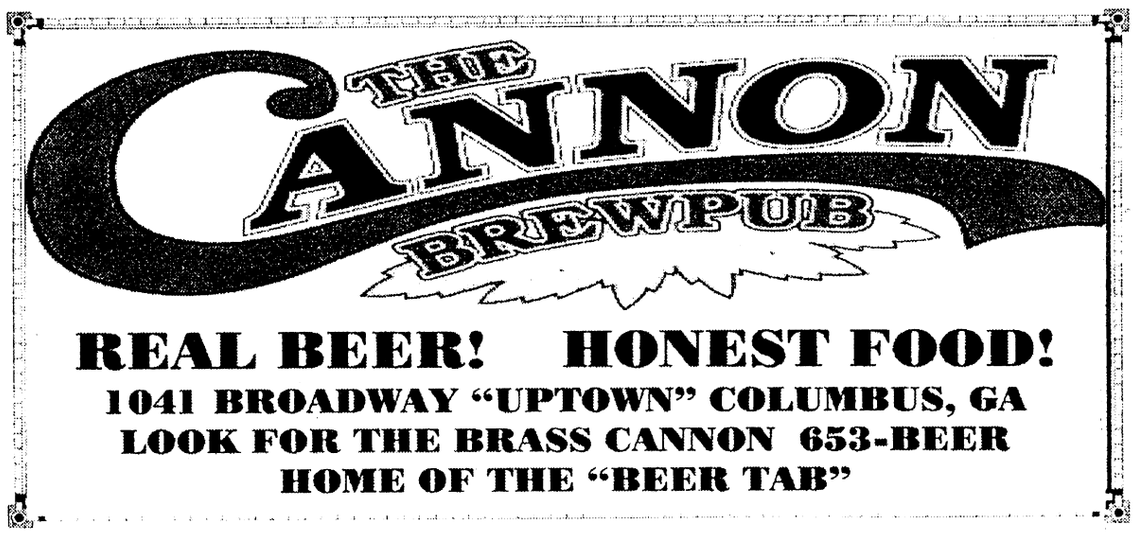
MACH incorporates TRIAGE system



Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) is very pleased to announce Central TRIAGE. Central TRIAGE is a patient classification system that was incorporated into MACH's current operations on May 17. It is located in an area near the Family Practice Clinic.

All patients that call (888) 293-2148 or 544-CARE are evaluated at the Central TRIAGE desk and then classified for care. Walk-in patients are also evaluated at the Central TRIAGE desk. If emergent care is not necessary, patients are sent to see their Primary Care Manager first. A same day appointment can be scheduled by calling 544-3052, in person or with the Central TRIAGE desk nurse. If a routine appointment is needed, the Central TRIAGE nurse will direct the patient to an appointment clerk.

Central TRIAGE is an additional service being offered to our patients and is not intended to replace our acute care phone system for family members. Emergent care patients will be directed to the Emergency Room for immediate attention.

Over the past several years, Fort Benning has been a leader in recycling in order to preserve our environment for future generations. Fort Benning recently won first place in the Reduce, Reuse, Recycle category of the 1999 Keep Georgia Beautiful Awards Program, for making significant contributions to improve Georgia's environment.

A key component of Fort Benning's success is the active participation of Soldiers and family members in the recycle and yard waste program. From 1996 through 1998 your efforts have resulted in an impressive 92,000 tons of material recycled rather than disposed of in the landfill. The annual quantity of material disposed of by landfill has steadily decreased from an all-time recorded high of 48,000 tons in 1993 to a low of 15,600 tons in 1998.

Each Monday, there is a special pick-up for yard waste in the family housing areas. Leaves, grass clippings, vines and small branches less than two inches in diameter and less than three feet long may be put in a plastic or metal durable container (preferred) or in a paper leaf bag and set out for pick-up. Please be sure that no other trash or garbage is included in the yard waste bags or containers.

Bags can be obtained at the Self Help Store. The use of these bags and containers has greatly improved the efficiency of this labor-intensive environmental initiative.

An alternative to raking and bagging your grass clipping is to simply use a mulching mower. This way you save your back and return all those valuable nutrients to the soil. Grass clippings are 85 percent water and return 20 percent of their nitrogen to the soil to feed your lawn's root system. When mowing you should always use the "one-third rule"; mow often enough to cut no more than one-third of your grass's height at any one mowing. Lawn care experts recommend setting your mower to maintain your grass at a height of three to four inches, especially during the hot dry summer months. Taller lawns resist drought and can crowd out and compete with weeds better. Keep your mower blade sharpened, and always cut your grass when it is dry. Most of all be safe and remember these basic safety precautions:

- •Read all operating instructions;
- •Keep your mower well maintained;
- •Dress properly for the job: sturdy shoes, long pants and no loose jewelry;
- •Store gas in an approved container and away from your house;
- •Clear the area to be mowed of items like rocks and children's toys;
- •Keep hands and feet away from moving parts;
- •Never leave your mower running unattended; and
- •Never fill your gas tank with the mower running.

If you have questions about the installation's yard waste recycling program, call Walter Nicholes at 545-1007.

Traffic restrictions

Beginning Monday through June 4, Yeager Avenue will be closed for through traffic between Lumpkin Road and Bjornstad Street (access will be maintained to family housing.)

Restriction is to single lane traffic on Lumpkin Road between Yeager Avenue and Running Avenue.

Temporary road closure and restriction to single lane traffic are required to permit the construction of new curb inlets for the sanitary sewer system and utility crossings. The closure and restriction will be indicated by Type III barricades. This work is part of the ongoing Whole Neighborhood Revitalization (Area 17) Project construction by the Savannah District Corps of Engineers.

For more information, call Jeff Hill at 545-3138.

Correction

Community Life is currently distributing Spring Clean-Up flyers throughout family housing areas. The flyers mistakenly state that "Residents may pick up bedding plants, pine straw ... at the U-Do-It Center ...." The U-Do-It Center no longer has any plants. Bedding plants are a seasonal item of limited availability and will not be reordered again this year. The U-Do-It Center orders and stocks pine straw, lime and fertilizer, as well as DPW approved paper bags for yard waste year round. These items will continue to be available for residents' use throughout the year. We regret any inconvenience or misunderstanding this may have caused. For more information, call Glenn Todd at 545-2117.

Memorial Day Holiday Schedule for the Self Help (U-Do-It) Center

In observance of Memorial Day, the Self Help Center, including the Loan Equipment Section and Venetian Blind and Shade Shop, will be closed on Saturday through Monday. The Self Help Center will reopen for business at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday. For more information, call Dr. William C. Shirley at 545-1121.

Memorial Day Schedules: Yard Waste and Refuse and Recycle Collection

There will be no yard waste pick-up in family housing on Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pick-up will be on June 7.

Refuse and recycle collection in family housing for Tuesday through June 4 will be picked up as normally scheduled. For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

Notice of Telephone Number Change

Effective Monday, residents in Davis Hill and Bouton Heights, Perkins Place and McGraw Manor will call 689-5400 for all maintenance and repair needs. This includes repair of kitchen appliances (i.e. refrigerators, stoves, garbage disposals, vent hoods and fire suppression systems.) Residents in all other family housing areas will call 689-5400 for kitchen appliance repair while continuing to call 545-2135 for all other maintenance needs.

BBB offers consumer web site hints

Better Business Bureau

The Internet has become a new frontier for marketers and advertisers. Research shows that more than 25 percent of U.S. retailers have sales web sites. And, by 2001, an estimated $300 billion in commerce will be conducted on the Internet.

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) offers the following tips to help build consumer trust in your web site.

•Include a profile of your business at the web site. Provide information on your physical location, address and telephone number and the names of the business owners.

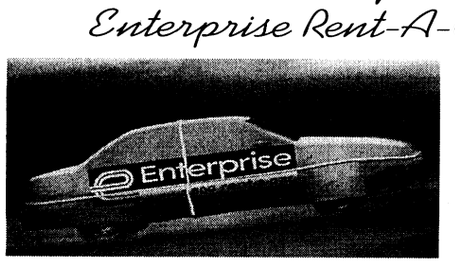
•Successful sites look professional, are easy to read and navigate and work flawlessly. Broken links can destroy the trust of consumers

•Consider qualifying for a meaningful third party seal of approval from a credible organization like BBB OnLine.

•Adhere to ethical advertising practices online. Be sure your advertisements are truthful and accurate.

•Provide details on your customer service and return policy.

•Protect shoppers' payment information. Use a secure payment protocol program.



•Respond promptly and fairly to any complaints that may arise.

Tinnitus can indicate hearing loss

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Tinnitus, also referred to as "ringing in the ears" or head noise, is a very common and annoying occurrence. It may be intermittent or constant in character, mild or severe in intensity and can vary from a low roar to a high-pitched type of sound.

Tinnitus is really a symptom and not a disease. Most often, disorders of the inner ear are the cause.

Some of the hair cells, which convert sound into nerve impulses, may be damaged, resulting in a faulty connection between the inner ear and the hearing nerve. If some of the hair cells are actually destroyed, this can also result in tinnitus, since the fibers of the hearing nerve may continue to discharge spontaneously and cause a sound to be heard.

There are many causes of tinnitus:

Outer ear causes

Obstruction of the external ear canal, such as wax, foreign bodies and swelling may produce eardrum pressure which is transmitted across the middle ear to the inner ear and hearing nerve, where it is interpreted as noise. Changes in the blood vessels in the skin of the ear canal or eardrum may produce a pulsating type of hearing nerve irritation or tinnitus.

Middle ear causes

A middle ear disturbance may result in head noise. Such conditions include swelling of the lining membranes of the middle ear due to allergy, infection and injury. Fluid from allergy or infection may accumulate in the middle ear chamber with resultant disturbing sensations being relayed to the inner ear and the auditory nerve pathways.

Conditions which produce partial or complete immobility of the middle ear bones such as infection, injury, arthritis and otosclerosis (a hereditary type of hearing loss) may also cause tinnitus.

The most likely explanation of the tinnitus accompanying middle ear disorders is that outside sounds are prevented from entering the inner ear (referred to as "conductive" hearing loss), yet the inner ear itself remains very sensitive to internal "body sounds."

Pressure sensations, similar to the feeling when changing altitude in a plane, can be due to a temporary obstruction of the eustachian tube. The eustachian tube drains the middle ear. This imbalance of pressure between the middle ear chamber and the external atmosphere may be transmitted to the inner ear as an irritating stimulation to the hearing nerve pathways.

Inner ear causes

The hair cells of the inner ear are the most delicate structures of the hearing mechanism. The tiny cells which serve to transform fluid waves into nerve impulses like little electrical transducers.

The slightest swelling or interference with these delicate cells from any cause can produce irritation and impairment of function. This may occur from a variety of causes, such as infection, hereditary degeneration, systemic disease, sudden exposure to a blast intensity of sound, prolonged exposure to high sound levels in susceptible persons, certain drugs to which the patient may be sensitive, aging or tiny changes in blood vessels. These circulation changes occur most often in older persons when the thread-like blood vessels near the inner ear begin to harden and thicken.

Brain causes

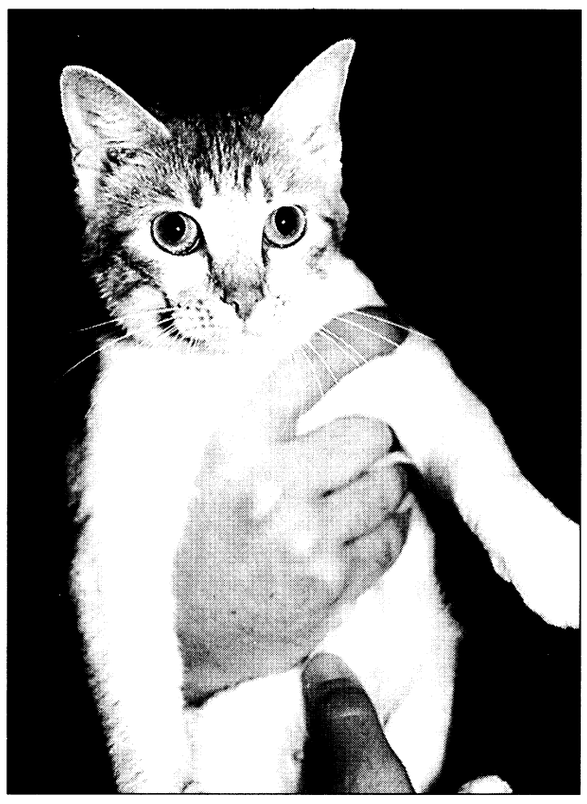
Any disturbance, whether due to swelling, pressure or interference with circulation may occasionally involve one or more of the hearing pathways to the brain. In most of these instances, the symptoms are localized to the one ear and other symptoms and signs develop which aid the doctor in determining the cause and location of the disturbance.

If a hearing loss coexists with tinnitus, the severity of the head noise does not predict the future course of the hearing impairment. Hearing impairment often occurs without the presence of tinnitus and vice versa.

If no cause for the head noise can be found, the following suggestions may be helpful:

•Attempt to obtain adequate rest and avoid becoming overly fatigued.

•Avoid the use of nerve stimulants such as those found in coffee (caffeine) and tobacco (nicotine).



•Tinnitus is usually more marked at bedtime, when surroundings become quiet. Any noise in the room, such as a loud ticking clock or a cassette deck which turns off after you are asleep will serve to mask (cover up) the irritating head noises and make them much less annoying. Bedside noisemakers that can be adjusted to various tones and intensities are available from specialty retail stores.

•If your hearing loss is severe enough to require the use of a hearing aid, this will probably also reduce your tinnitus by bringing in outside sounds that mask the tinnitus. Your doctor may recommend a hearing aid evaluation to determine whether an aid would help you.

Some patients who are particularly bothered by tinnitus may be candidates for masking devices.

Masking devices cover up the tinnitus by introducing external sounds or electrical stimulation. Some patients obtain relief only when the device is worn, while others find that tinnitus is reduced for a period of hours after the device is removed.

Patients who experience depression or anxiety with the tinnitus should report these changes to their doctors.

Uniqueness can be double-edged sword

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

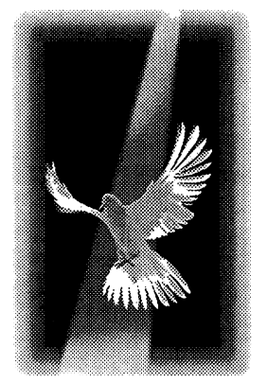
Part of our uniqueness as a human being is our ability to communicate with each other verbally. However, this uniqueness can be a double-edged sword. This is because we can be so easily misunderstood as well as misunderstanding. Our attaching a meaning to the words we use further complicates communication.

reflections

As adults we are thrust into contact with other adults whose lives and experiences have taught them words and definitions which don't match our own. Bring this problem of unmatched meanings into a marriage relationship and you've got unbounded potential for misunderstanding.

Understanding words though will not resolve marital conflict. Attitudes, feelings and beliefs behind the words turn out to be more important than the words themselves. Truly effective communication begins with self-respect. When we don't feel good about ourselves, we can't be open and honest with those close to us. This can lead us to find fault in our spouse to cover up our own inadequacies.

Self-respect helps us to accept and respect others. Let's face it, no one is perfect and it is far too easy to find faults in others. In the marriage relationship this can easily lead to destructive marital conflict. Accusing and blaming are real communication killers. They put the person who is the object of the accusation and blame on the defensive. Often counter-accusations are hurled back at the accuser. This is not communication. It is war.



There is a better way and the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can help you learn effective marital communication.

For more information, call the center at 545-1760.

Movie reveals spirit of heroes

Chaplain (Capt.) William C. Harrison
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

There is a captivating scene toward the end of the movie, Saving Private Ryan, where Capt. Miller (Tom Hanks), as he is dying grabs Ryan, pulls him in close and with his dying breath tells him to live out his life in such a way that earns the sacrifices that were made on his behalf.

On this Memorial Day, I am reminded of many of our nations heroes that that have paid the ultimate sacrifice on our behalf to insure the freedom that we enjoy. Soldiers like Master Sgt. Gary Gordon and Sgt. 1st Class Randall Shughart, who distinguished themselves in 1993 by rescuing downed helicopter pilots in Somalia.

How about the heroes of Vietnam, like Sgt. 1st Class William M. Bryant, who fought valiantly in March of 1969? Are we deserving of those sacrifices?

Have you ever lived your life in such a way that our posthumously decorated veterans can look down on us with pride and say, "Yes it was worth it, and I would do it again if given the chance?"

As a nation, have we earned the great sacrifices made by our founding fathers to give us the rich spiritual heritage on which this nation was founded? Do you recall the first thing the Pilgrims did upon reaching this new land of freedom?

They knelt down together to pray and thank God for brining them safely to this land of opportunity. On this historic landmark, there now sits a statue of a figure representing a man of faith. This statue stands proudly overlooking the shore — an open Bible in one, and the index finger of his other hand lifted heavenward to God.

The inscription reads, "Law, Morality, Freedom and Education." It has been said that the strength of a nation is measured by the character of its people. How strong a nation are we today?

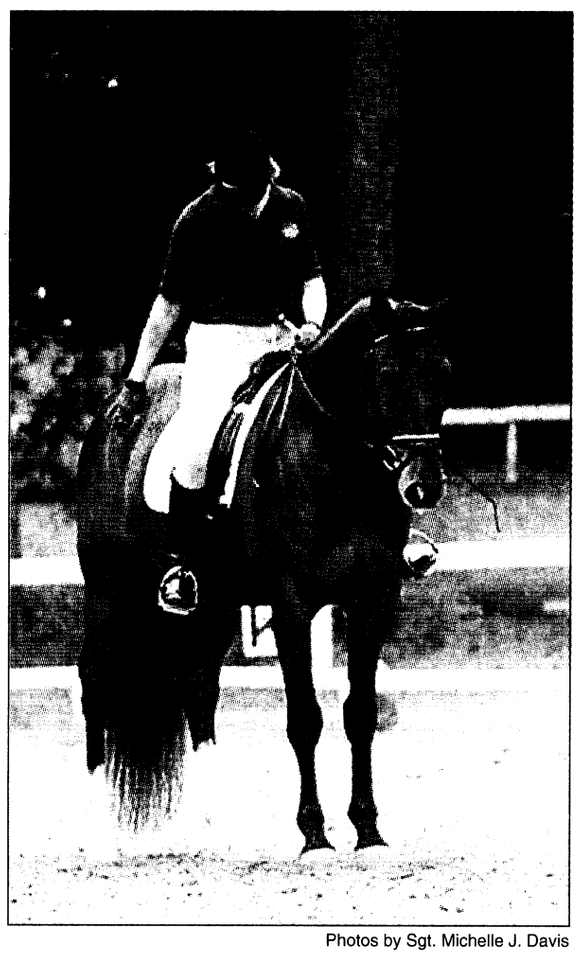
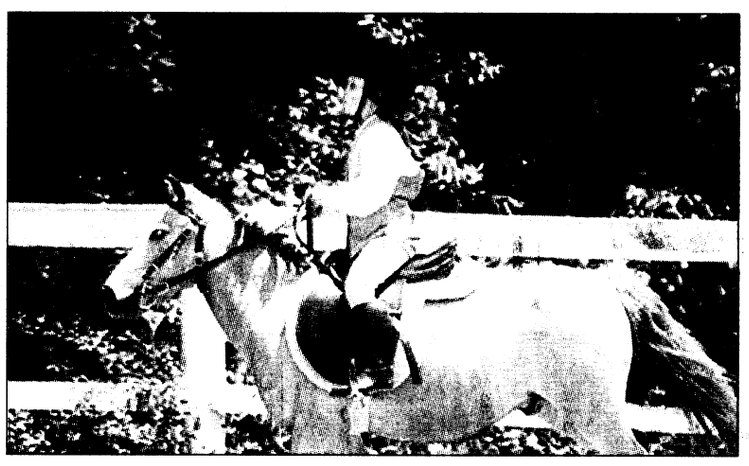
Running enthusiasts from around Georgia and neighboring states flocked to Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., Saturday to take part in the 5th Ranger Training Battalion's third annual Mountain Ranger Run.

The run challenged it's participants during a 15K or 30K jog up and down paths through the Chattahoochee National Forest.

"This is one of the best races I've been to in Georgia," said John Detro, a physician's assistant with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. Detro, who tackled the course last year, returned this year with five other Soldiers from the Ranger battalion to compete as a team. The team, which came in first place, consisted of Detro, Max Boswell, Mark Crawford, Brian Eifler, Curtis Garcia and Martin Lawing.



"It was a real good course," added Crawford. "But I think everyone had trouble with that last hill."



In addition to the 3rd Ranger Bn. team and numerous competitors from the 5th RTBn., four teams from Fort Benning's Officer Candidate School competed in the 15K as well.

"We had heard about the race and wanted to do it because it was something different and fun," said Officer Candidate Joseph Burkhardt.

Burkhardt added that this was one of the OCs last chances to do something as a team because Class 3-99 graduated Thursday. One of the OCS teams ended up taking third place out the eight teams which participated.

The Mountain Ranger Run was held in conjunction with the 5th Ranger Training Battalion's annual Open House.

Fort Benning celebrates heritage month during luau

Fort Benning Soldiers and family members gathered at Uchee Creek Campground and Marina to celebrate Asian and Pacific Islander Heritage Month Friday with Fort Benning's first Luau.

Sponsored by Fort Benning's Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers (BOSS), 29th Infantry Regiment, Equal Opportunity Office (EOO) and Morale, Welfare and Recreation (MWR), post residents were given the opportunity to celebrate this month's heritage in a unique way.

What began as an idea on how to observe Asian and Pacific Islander Heritage Month from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment soon blossomed into an event which was celebrated by more than 3,000 Fort Benning residents, according to Skip Davis, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"The idea was to do something that would include not just our Soldiers but the family members as well," Davis said. "Each month a unit sponsors the ethnic heritage of the month, normally it is with a breakfast or a luncheon, but the unit wanted to do something different."

Residents turned out and participated in competitions, viewed demonstrations and sampled food from the Pacific.

"I went to the Luau because it sounded like it would be fun and it was something different to do and it was great," said Christopher Crowley, Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Soldiers and community members could be seen racing across the Chattahoochee River during the canoe races and falling into a pit of mud during the tug of war competitions. Other competitions such as javelin throws, bed races and various other activities were also held.

"The canoe race was great," said Michael Cochran, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "It was nice to get out of the room and have something to go and do."

The winners for the Luau competitions were:
Carol Kai bed race — Outlaw Medics
Tug of War — Bravo 4 Snipers
Canoe races — The Last Minute Team
Spear throwing — The Shirts

And for those who were not in the mood for competition, karaoke, martial arts demonstrations and Tahitian Hula Dancing were also offered.

After a day in the sun, participants sampled dishes such as Kalua Pig, Lomi Lomi Salmon, Samoan Chop Suey, Pork Adobo and Cananen.

The food was good and the entertainment was great. I am looking forward to it being held next year," Crowley said.

"It was important for Soldiers and community members to honor Asian and Pacific Islander Heritage so they may be aware of the beauty within other cultures," said Tina Fountaine, BOSS president. "We would like to see this become an annual event."

And with the Asian and Pacific Islander cultures being so diverse, Davis said, there are so many different avenues of the Asian and Pacific Islander culture in which the Luau could showcase.
