I can imagine, only after placing myself in a hypothetical situation, why women stay. If my husband began abusive behavior after 16 years of marriage and three kids, I would more than likely leave (part of me would hope counseling could fix the problem) because this behavior and environment would be detrimental to me and my children. Amazingly, the thought of leaving disturbed me not because I shouldn't leave but because of how hard it would be to actually close the door on my current life.

All of my adult life has been spent raising kids and being a military spouse.

Although I have a bachelor's degree, I have worked only sparingly and do not have a career to provide for my children. Separating would mean breaking up the family, removing the children from their father during the worst conditions and temporarily placing our broken family into poverty. The hardships would be numerous — but mustering the courage to take the first step would end the abusive cycle and make life better for me and my family.

As I said, that's a hypothetical situation. But one thing I didn't take into account when conjuring that up is that I am a military spouse. Military spouses are extremely fortunate because there is help available. Numerous supportive and rehabilitative services are offered throughout the Army. Fort Benning's Family Advocacy Program has been recognized as one of the best and has long-standing programs (Child Advocacy, Victim's Advocacy) that place special emphasis on domestic violence prevention and intervention. Respite Care, Parent Education and the First Steps Program promote family wellness by providing prevention and educational programs.

I have been fortunate in many ways, but there are many who are not as fortunate. As a community we can be nonjudgmental toward the abuser and the abused. We can speak out against domestic violence and be a friend if needed, because nothing good ever comes from abusive treatment.

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller said he is a single Soldier who works only a half block from the OCS Dining Facility. He said he was turned away from the OCS DFAC and told he could not eat lunch there. He said his DFAC is about half a mile away from where he works.

The Directorate of Logisitc's Response: The Commanding General has an open door policy for all authorized personnel allowing them the use of any dining facility when they are away from their normally assigned Dining Facility. DFAC supervisors were informed of this policy and appropriate action was taken to ensure that Soldiers were not turned away again. In addition, a memorandum identifying this open door policy is being placed in all headcounters' instruction books in each operational dining facility. The open door policy was explained to the caller, and he was reassured that he would be able to continue dining at the OCS Dining Facility, which was closer to his duty station.

Call: The caller said in the mornings when she leaves Davis Hill, she has to wait at least five to 10 minutes to turn right because of drivers that are waiting to turn left. She said there is a traffic sign that says no left turn from 7 to 8 a.m., but drivers are not complying with it.

The Department of Public Safety's Response: The caller was contacted and her concern was the intersection where 1st Cavalry Division Road intersects onto 1st Division Road. It was explained that the MPs will focus on that particular intersection whenever patrols are available to do so, especially between the hours of 7:30 to 8:30 a.m., which the caller stated was the most frequent times when the no-left-turn violations occurred. Efforts will be made to curb the problem.

Call: The caller said she has been trying to get playground 11, Custer Terrace, cleaned up since June. The caller said she has talked to Custer Terrace Community Life on several occasions. She said it is an endangerment to children, there is broken glass, boards and poison oak.

The Directorate of Public Works' Response: DPW Customer Service Representative spoke with the caller and the Community Life NCO for Custer Terrace and Upatoi. The Family Housing Maintenance supervisor checked the playground equipment and determined it was all operational and needed neither repair nor removal. A service order was placed for DPW Grounds Maintenance Section to trim the wood line as necessary to improve visibility or accessibility of the playground area, as well as to determine the extent of spraying necessary to control poison ivy, etc. The caller expressed the opinion that this playground is poorly situated and that it might even be removed, since it was not frequently used. DPW Housing Maintenance supervisor will raise this issue with the Family Housing Division for possible action. The caller was also advised that the cleanup of playgrounds and disposal of trash and debris is the responsibility of the residents.

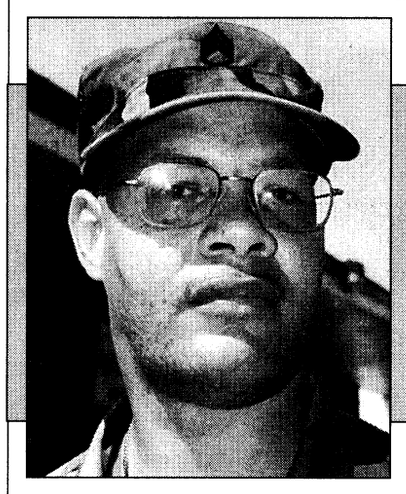
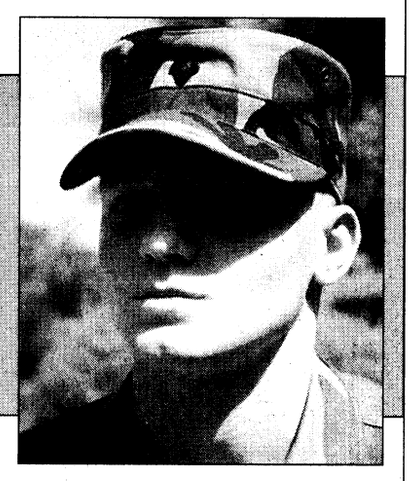
VARIOUS VOICES



How do you think we can help prevent domestic violence in our communities?

Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Davies, 2145th Garrison Support Unit — "Just being a chaplain we are required to report domestic violence and child abuse, but if you know it is happening you should report it. Also be observant."

Pfc. Jessica Vlickey, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "You can help prevent domestic violence by being aware of what's going on and not looking away when an incident happens. I guess just paying more attention "



Staff Sgt. Forrest Garrett, 88th Military Police Company — "We need more education. We need to be better informed on how to solve problems within families.."

Elizabeth Salvi, family member — "Neighbors need to interact with one another and be aware of what's going on around them. Also get involved with family support groups. Family support is really helpful."

Spc. Paul Jenkins, B Company, 1st Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C. — "We need more prevention classes such as anger management or others that the Family Advocacy offers."

Spc. Chris Watson, 88th Military Police Company — "I think education is the key. We need to make people aware that it's a cycle. People don't realize that it doesn't get better without help. Both parties need education and counseling"

New officer re-enlists mother

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Getting commissioned was extra special for 2nd Lt. Julie Bresciani, a Soldier at the Officer Candidate School, because it allowed her to live out two of her dreams.

The first of was getting commissioned as a Signal Corps officer during a ceremony in front of Infantry Hall Sept. 23. What made it special was that her mother, Command Sgt. Maj. Debra Smith, was there to pin on her gold bars.

Many Soldiers have experienced a loved one pinning on their rank, but Bresciani took her commissioning one step further by turning around and then re-enlisting her mother.

Bresciani said the experience was one of great emotion that she had been waiting for since she was accepted into the school July 1998.

She said having her mom there made her special day one to remember.

"I was so happy," she said with a smile. "I can't even describe it. I just tried not to cry because she's a very emotional person too. I just can't describe it."

"If she hadn't of been there, it wouldn't have had the same impact on me," said Bresciani.

Smith, the command sergeant major for the Defense Language Institute, Foreign Language Center, Presidio of Monterey, Calif., said she was so proud of her daughter that she was nervous about pinning her rank on.

"I was shaking like a leaf and couldn't pin her rank on properly," Smith said. "I was so proud of her accomplishment and dedication to military tradition that I was grinning like a Cheshire cat."

"You always want to see your children go a step or two further than you've gone. I couldn't have been happier," Smith said.

Smith said she was so proud that CSM stood for more than command sergeant major during the ceremony.

"I've been called a lot of things as a command sergeant major, but on Julie's day, CSM stood for cheerful, smiley mom," she said.

Bresciani said she felt great being able to re-enlist her mother immediately after getting her commission.

"It was cool. I don't think that's something that happens very often, and to be able to do it for someone I really respect, like my mom, is really special," said Bresciani.

Bresciani added it felt a little strange though immediately outranking her mom.

"Especially now that I'm an officer, I was like, 'Wait a minute now, I'm over her now. It's just not right,' " she said.

Smith said having her daughter perform her last re-enlistment was something she'll never forget.

"This was my sixth and final re-enlistment. It was the highlight of my 26-year career," said Smith. "I've done a little research and there has never been a situation where a daughter re-enlisted her mother in the history of the Army. I think it's a little piece of Army history."

Psychological Operations unit processes through CRC

Reserve Soldiers prepare for deployment to Kosovo

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

For the next nine months, Maj. Dominic Giordano will be in the newspaper business. But there probably won't be car ads, comic strips or Dear Abby in his publication.

Giordano and the other reservists from the 15th Psychological Operations Battalion, 2nd Psychological Operations Group, out of Cleveland, Ohio, will be printing a weekly paper designed to promote peace in Kosovo.

The unit processed through the Conus Replacement Center at Fort Benning in late September on their way to Operation Joint Guardian. Their mission is to facilitate the peacekeeping operations in accordance with the United Nations' resolution, Giordano said.

"Our job will be to convey the theme of NATO as a peacekeeping force and to spread the message of ceasing the violence."

His particular section will put together newspapers in the native Serbian and Albanian languages that communicate NATO's themes.

But he prefers that the word propaganda not be used to describe their product.

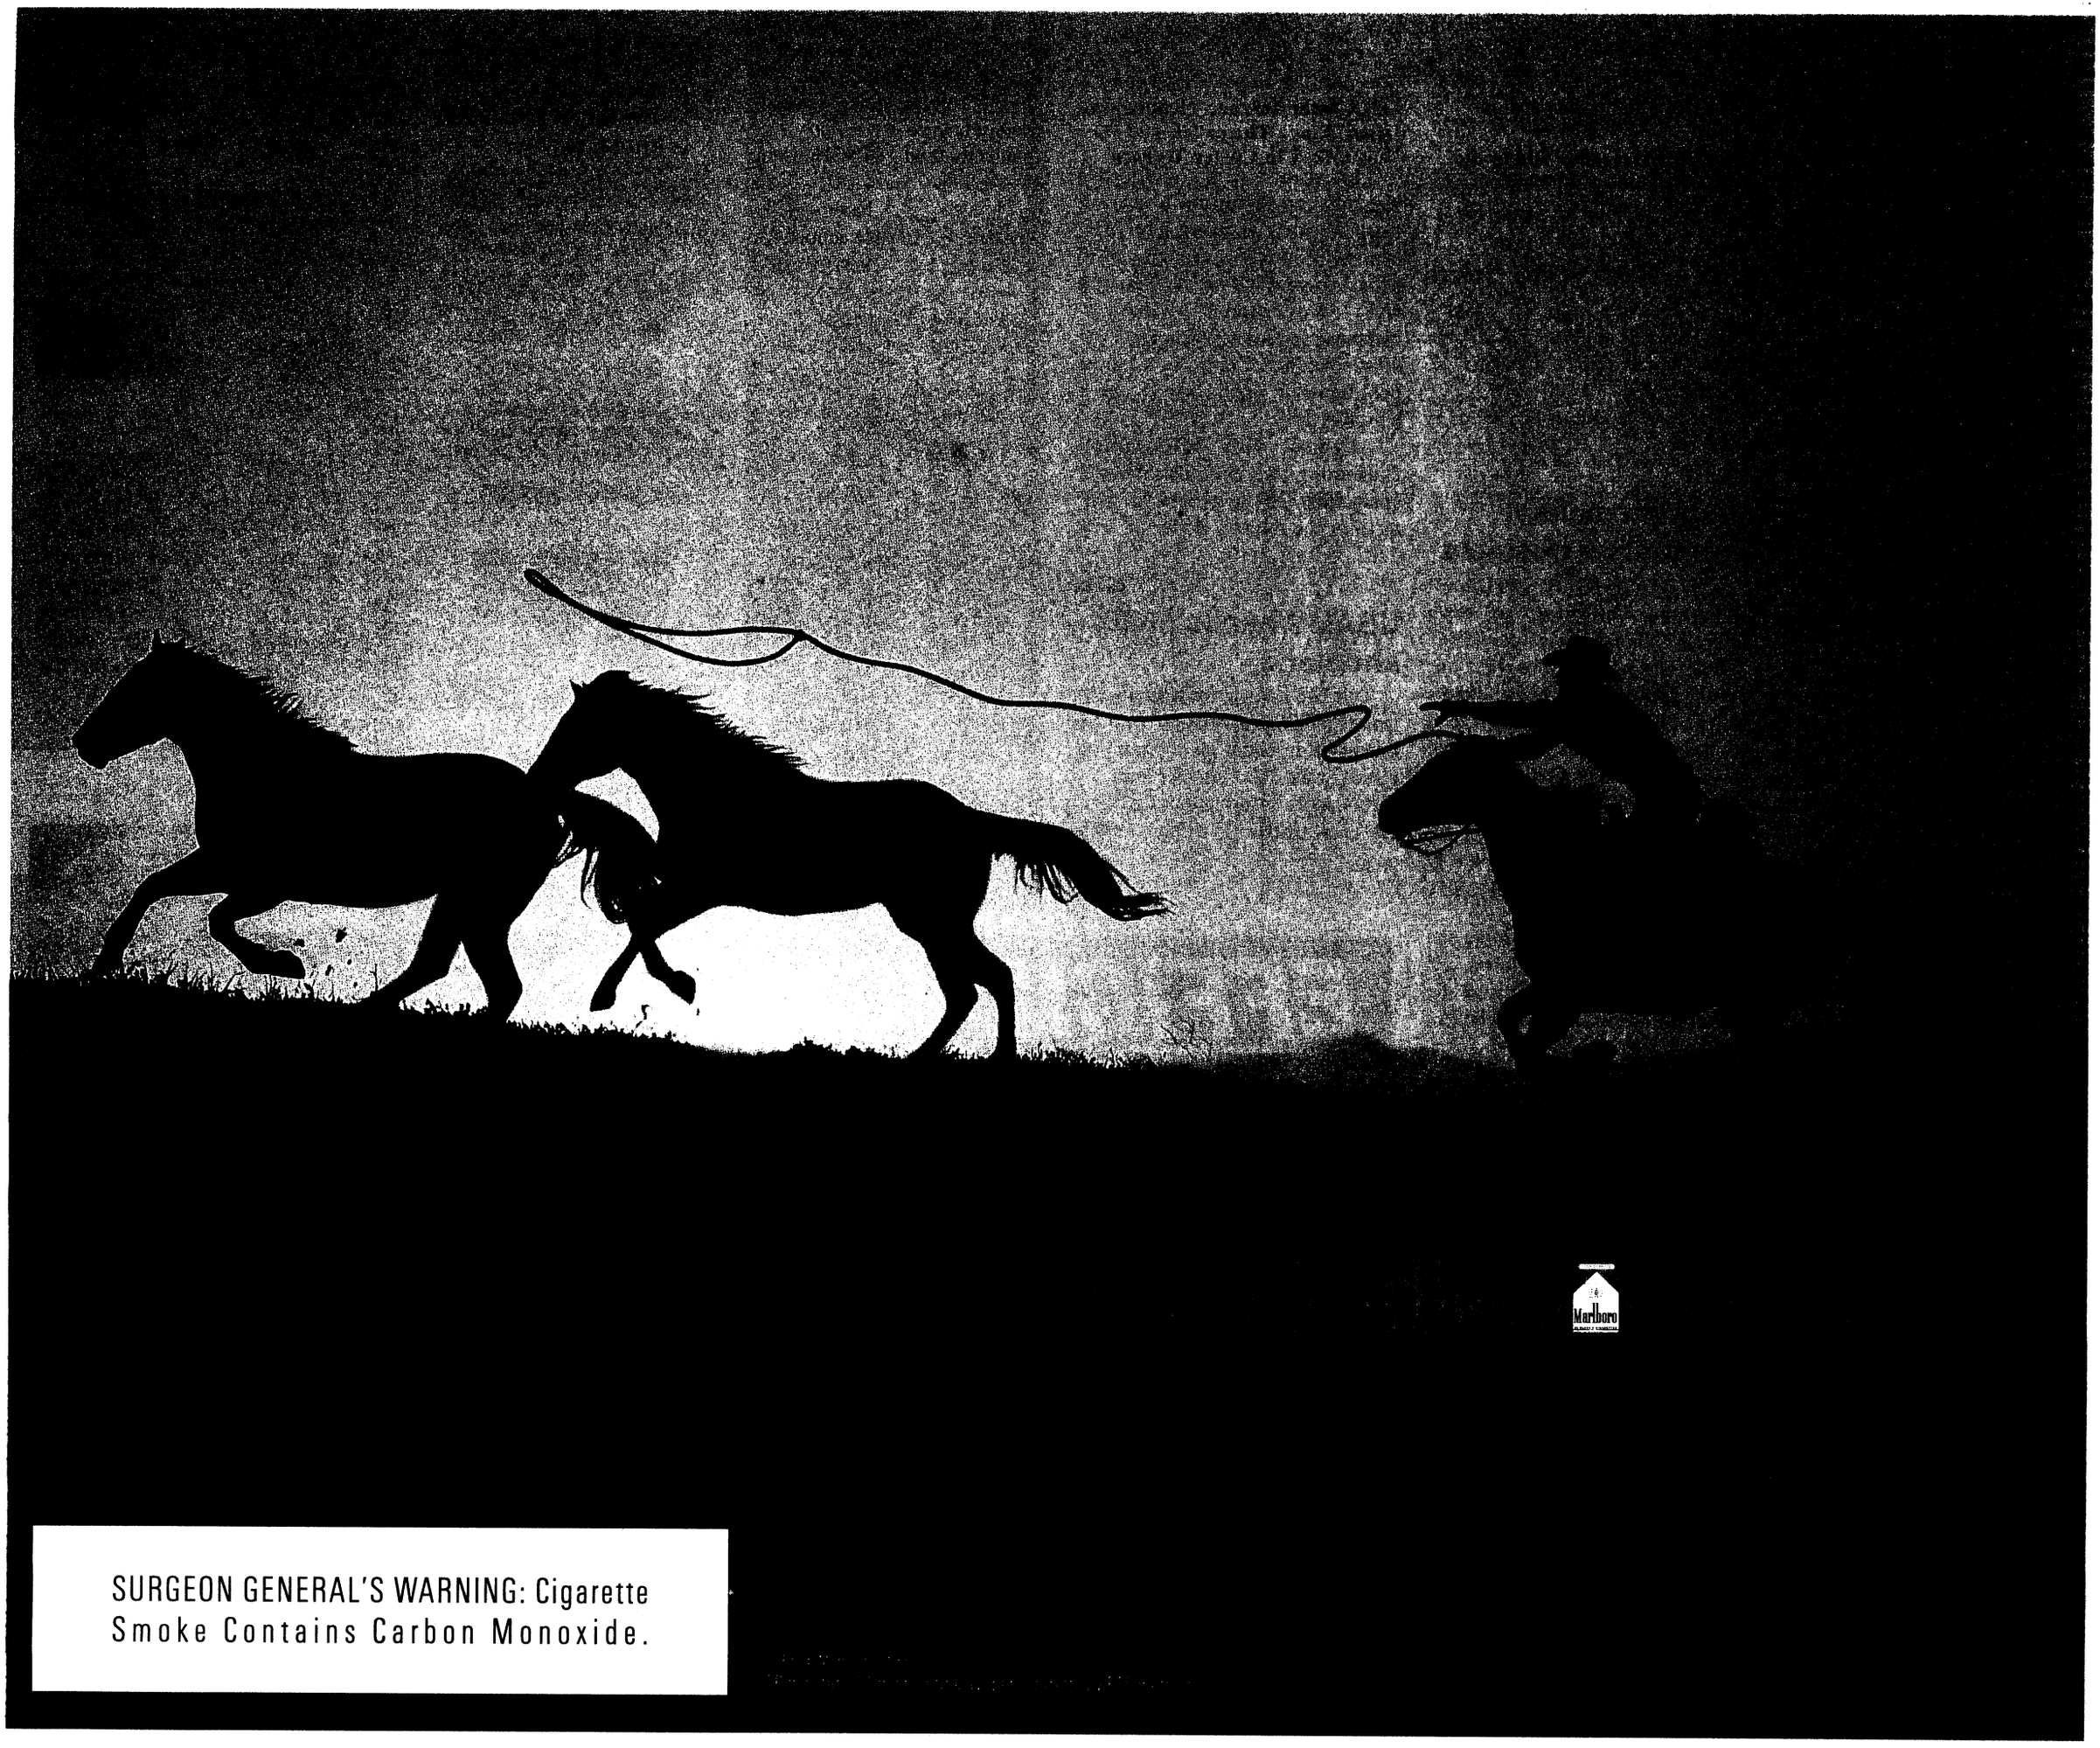
"Propaganda suggests negativity. We are not trying to trick them. We present a positive message," Giordano said.

"We are not a conquering Army. We are a peacekeeping force, and our basic message is the violence has to stop before there will be any return to normalcy."

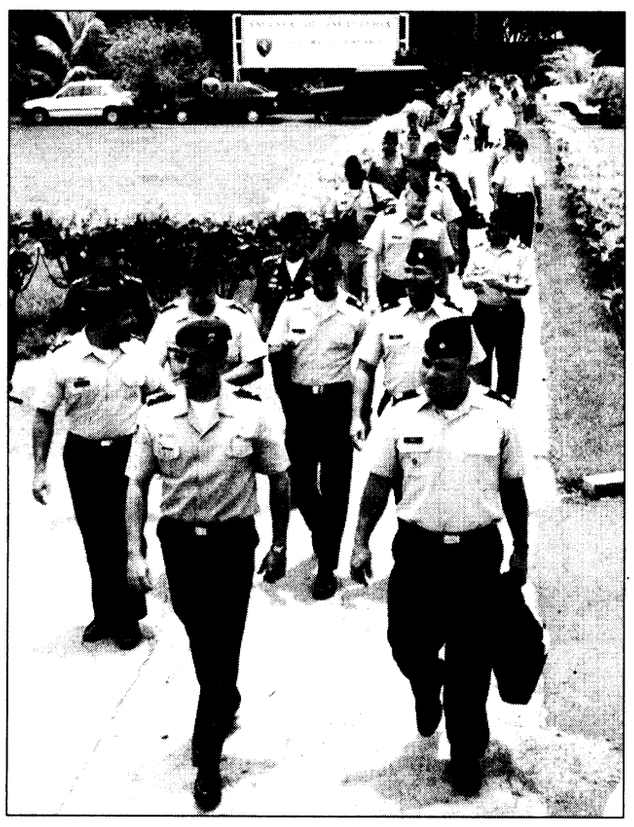
The Ohio reservists have been called up to replace an active duty unit, and they spent seven days at Fort Benning for deployment operations. During the week, they underwent medical processing, Soldier readiness training, driver's training for Europe, weapons qualification, theater-specific and individual readiness training, according to Maj. Lynn Locklear, executive officer for the CRC.

Four members of the unit dropped by the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office to check out desktop publishing procedures at The Bayonet Sept. 28.

"We discussed the fundamentals of newsletters, to include headlines, column widths, and packaging their stories in modules," explained Master Sgt. Tracy L. Tanner, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs NCOIC.



"I also showed them one desktop publishing software version. We didn't have a lot of time, but I hope they have a better understanding of what will be required of them."



That morning part of the contingent flew to Kosovo. The remaining Soldiers left the next day for Fort Bragg and 30 days of additional training before joining their unit.

Linguists and cultural experts at Fort Bragg will ensure the newspapers provide the right message to the people of Kosovo. Through the "Reachback" program, information will be e-mailed to Fort Bragg's 3rd Dissemination Battalion, which will publish the papers in North Carolina. Planes from Pope Air Force Base will deliver the finished product to Kosovo where tactical psyops teams will distribute the papers to the citizens.

Some stories will be on where citizens can go for medical care and on families searching for missing loved ones.

"Because the area is so war-torn, our immediate mission will be to help these people get their lives back to normal," Giordano said.

USARSA students travel to Central America

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Sixty students attending the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Officer Course recently journeyed through Central America.

The students, who represent 13 countries with different cultures and historical traditions, visited Costa Rica, Guatemala and El Salvador.

The objective was to participate in cross-cultural events, to see how democracy has made a positive impact on their governments, militaries and societies, and how the emphasis on and respect for human rights has been placed as the foundation of their social, political and economic progress, according to Lt. Col. Eric Mendoza, a student from Guatemala.

"In Costa Rica, we had the opportunity to visit several institutions," said Mendoza. "Among them was the University of Peace located just outside the capital of San Jose.

The discussions and exchange of ideas were quite enlightening. Although the idea of demilitarizing the region was not generally accepted by our group, the directors and guest speakers of the university did share some very unique and interesting ideas for solving future regional hostilities."

Mendoza said most of the ideas shared by the directors and guest speakers were based on the fact that Costa Rica does not have a military force. Instead, they have a national police force which has contributed to the country's stability and neutrality.

"The visit to the Interamerican Institute for Human Rights demonstrated to us the concern and great zeal with which the Costa Rican government implements its political policies with respect to the importance of Human Rights," he said.

In Guatemala City, students visited the Polytechnic Military Academy, which forms and commissions officers as does the U. S. Military Academy at West Point. They also received briefings on the functions and goals of The Institute of Military Studies which provides technical and educational courses to officers at the university level.

After the successful completion of these courses, officers are awarded a university degree.

The core curriculum for both of these military institutes is the emphasis on military roles in democracy and ultimate respect for human rights, which Mendoza said, is evident in the professionalism displayed by all of their officers. Of particular interest was the progress made in implementing the peace agreement that brought to close a decades-old civil war in Guatemala.

The last stop of the visit was El Salvador.

"We all agreed that it was the best host nation reception of all," said Mendoza. Although El Salvador is still emerging from the consequences of past internal conflicts, Mendoza said the students saw great progress towards economic, political and social stability.

He said they received briefings from top military leaders explaining their great advances in civil-military relations and the emphasis on democratic values throughout their political and military systems. The students also visited El Salvador's equivalent to USARSA's Command and General Staff Officer Course.

"It was indeed surprising to see how well automated and structured they maintained this institution," he said.

Mendoza said they truly enjoyed the warm and hospitable receptions throughout their visit to these three countries of Central America. All of their objectives and expectations were met.

"This trip also enriched our cultural knowledge with a few visits to local archeological sites, cultural centers and areas rich in folklore," he said. "Undoubtedly, a most memorable experience of a lifetime."

Fort Benning schedules Retiree Open House

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The interaction between military retirees and young Soldiers just starting their stint in the service is beneficial to both groups, according to Friede McDonald, retirement services officer at Fort Benning.

For that reason, the 17th annual Retiree Open House Oct. 15 includes breakfast with basic trainees at Sand Hill and a One Station Unit Training graduation ceremony.

Retirees like to see the troops, said McDonald, who coordinated the open house.

"They really enjoy talking with the young Soldiers, sharing war stories and seeing what today's Army is doing."

The military recognizes how important retirees are to its mission, McDonald said.

The older generation can help motivate and encourage the younger one, which is vital in helping the services recruit and retain young people. The Army, Navy and Air Force are struggling to meet recruitment quotas and to hold on to the young men and women already in uniform.

"Since the military benefits have changed, young people now don't see the service as a career," McDonald said. "There is no longevity."

Those gradual cuts in medical and retirement benefits have upset some retirees to the point that many may not recommend military service to anyone. So programs like the open house are offered through the Retirement Services Office to assist and inform retirees concerning their rights and entitlements.

The Retirement Services Office serves 82 counties in three states and about 500 retirees from Georgia, Alabama and Florida are expected to visit the post during the open house.

The day starts with registration at the Officers' Club at 6:30 a.m. After breakfast and the graduation ceremony, the group will return to the club for lunch and a briefing on Fort Benning and the year 2018, the 100th anniversary of the post.

A county fair that includes agencies such as Social Security, Tricare and Veterans Affairs will start in the club at 12:30 p.m. Representatives from Rep. Sanford Bishop's and Sen. Max Cleland's offices will be on hand.

Agencies across post will open their doors to retirees during the day. Appointments will not be required at the ID Card section, casualty and legal assistance offices. Active duty and their family members should try to avoid doing business at these offices that day, McDonald said.

"This is the one day out of the year set aside for the retirees."

Martin Army Community Hospital will hold a health and dental fair in the Main Exchange mall starting at 12:30 p.m. Dental, vision, glaucoma, cholesterol and blood pressure screenings will be given, as well as flu shots.

From 2 to 4 p.m. the Retiree Council will hold its quarterly meeting in the club.

"All retirees are invited to attend the meeting to see what the council is all about," McDonald said.

At 4:30 p.m. retirees are invited to attend Bosses Night at the NCO Club on Sightseeing Road. If you are a member of any NCO club, you will be admitted free. For others, the cost is $5.

The Soldiers' Show will start at 7 p.m. at the Sand Hill Theater. The show is free with open seating to start at 6 p.m.

If you have not pre-registered for the open house, call the Retirement Services Office at 545-2715 or 545-2541, or you may just show up at the club that day. However, only people who pre-registered will be eligible for prize giveaways.

Pond: Cleanup continues

consists of three phases.

The first phase of the project is now underway and entails clearing out more than 20-years worth of overgrowth, dirt and mud from in and around the pond, Hughes said.

According to Capt. Jacqueline Davis, commander of the 63rd Engineer Co., the engineers are tackling the first phase by supplying an array of heavy equipment to include bulldozers, five- and 20-ton dump trucks.

Davis said her company began clearing out the debris early last week and should take no more than two weeks to complete the job.

To emphasize just how much work is involved with cleaning out the pond, Davis explained that in just one day alone they hauled out more than 25 loads of dirt using the 20-ton dump trucks. She added that the 63rd Engineer Co. will continue to assist the effort throughout the next two phases.

Once phase one is complete, plans for phase two include creating nature and bike trails all around the pond, Hughes said. Phase three will consist of making a number of different upgrades and improvements such as supplying grills, picnic tables and restoring the old pavilion near the pond.

He said there still aren't any definite plans for what else the project may entail or how long it will take to complete, but the hope is to have things wrapped up by the end of spring.

"Hopefully, once we're done we will have a usable recreation area that Soldiers and families can use and come down to catch some fish," Hughes said.

He mentioned there has even been some consideration for turning the pond into a pay catfish pond where the community can go and pay by the pound to catch edible fish.

Illness: Team addresses questions

that have been established specifically for Gulf War illness concerns.

• Share information with the general public about what has been found with investigations and studies that have been conducted thus far.

• Address questions and concerns surrounding Gulf War illness.

During the team's visit, Wilkerson said they will present manned displays throughout Fort Benning, conduct a series of informational briefings and also hold a Town Hall meeting — all of which are open to the public.

The Town Hall meeting, which will be held at 7 p.m. Nov. 4 will give the audience a chance to voice their concerns and ask specific questions, he added.

Appropriately, one of the main questions Wilkerson said they run across is why veterans are sick.

"One of the frustrating things is most people want to know why veterans are sick and we are constantly trying to address that. Thus far we have not found what we call a 'smoking gun' ... a single cause. We can more address what is not a cause of Gulf War illnesses."

Wilkerson mentioned that there were close to 700,000 participants in the Gulf War and currently there are only 120,000 participants who are currently enrolled in the two medical programs available for Gulf War illness.

"Intuitively we feel there are more sick veterans out there, so one of the messages we are trying to transmit when we go around to these installations is that if you are experiencing symptoms and are eligible for one of these two programs you need to sign up."

The most important thing is that people come to the briefings and meetings and get the correct information, he said.

"We are in an information age, but too often people get misinformation from such things as the internet. So we provide them an alternate where they can get information we have learned."

JRTC: 3rd brigade units begin rotation

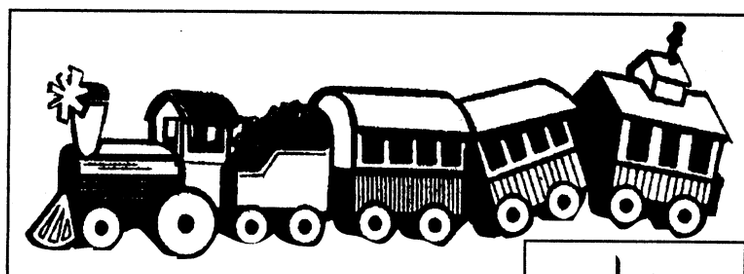
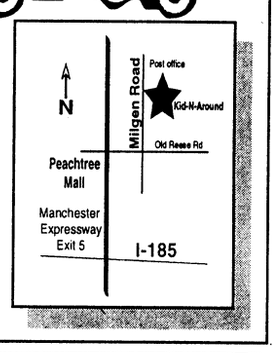
within the realm of occurrence in today's world," he said. "And just like in actual combat, we will have to work together and communicate efficiently to win."

The scenario, according to Granger, sets the Marne Soldiers and the paratroopers in a fictional country facing a pair of opposition forces that have taken over a city.Their mission will be to halt the opposing clash and restore peace.

"This is the perfect timing for the training exercise," Granger said. "The brigade will be assuming the DRB (Division Readiness Brigade) mission in the next few months, and this is sure to help with our readiness proficiency."

The personnel were not the only ones Louisiana-bound for the 21-day deployment Saturday. The brigade sent 15 vehicles on the C-17 aircraft along with the troops.





"It was tough getting them all ready to move," said Pfc. John Cady, B Co., 1st Bat., 15th Inf. Regt., who left on the same plane with his vehicle for his first deployment. "I am looking forward to this though. I think all of our hard work will pay off."

That payoff, Granger and the rest of the 1-15 cadre hope, will come in the form of a more combat ready force when they return from the forests of Fort Polk.

Rangers return from deployment

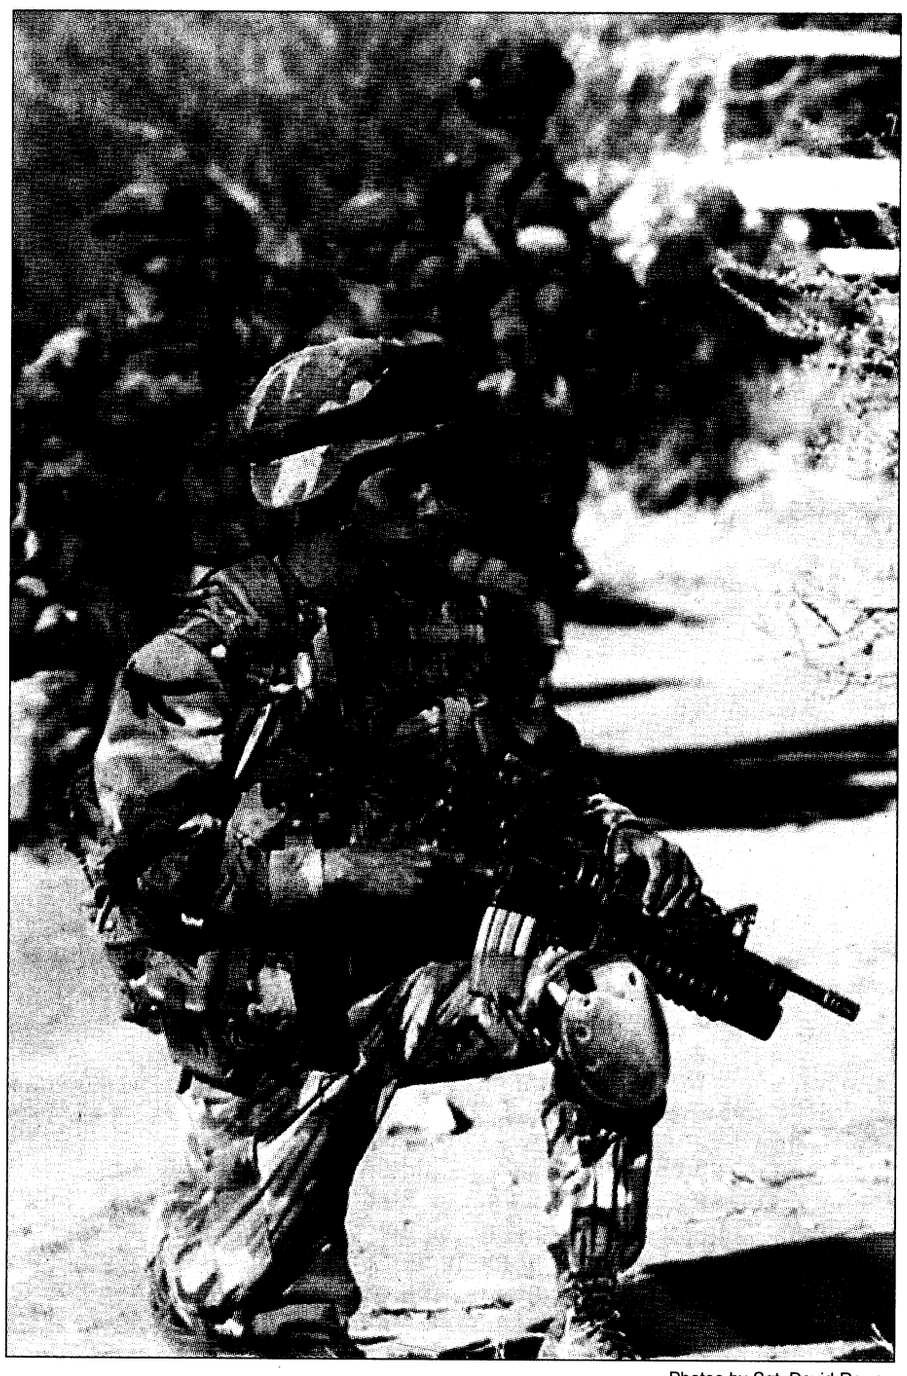
Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Rangers from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, returned Sept. 16-17 after spending a month participating in two separate exercises overseas.

While a majority of the Rangers spent the whole month participating in a training exercise in Germany, A Company and elements of Headquarters and Headquarters Company spent the first six days of the deployment in Botswana, Africa. While in Botswana, the Rangers executed a series of platoon live-fire raids known as Operation Flintlock.

"It was an excellent experience to hit an objective that we had never seen before in an environment that none of us knew," said Staff Sgt. Richard Anderson, a squad leader in A Company.

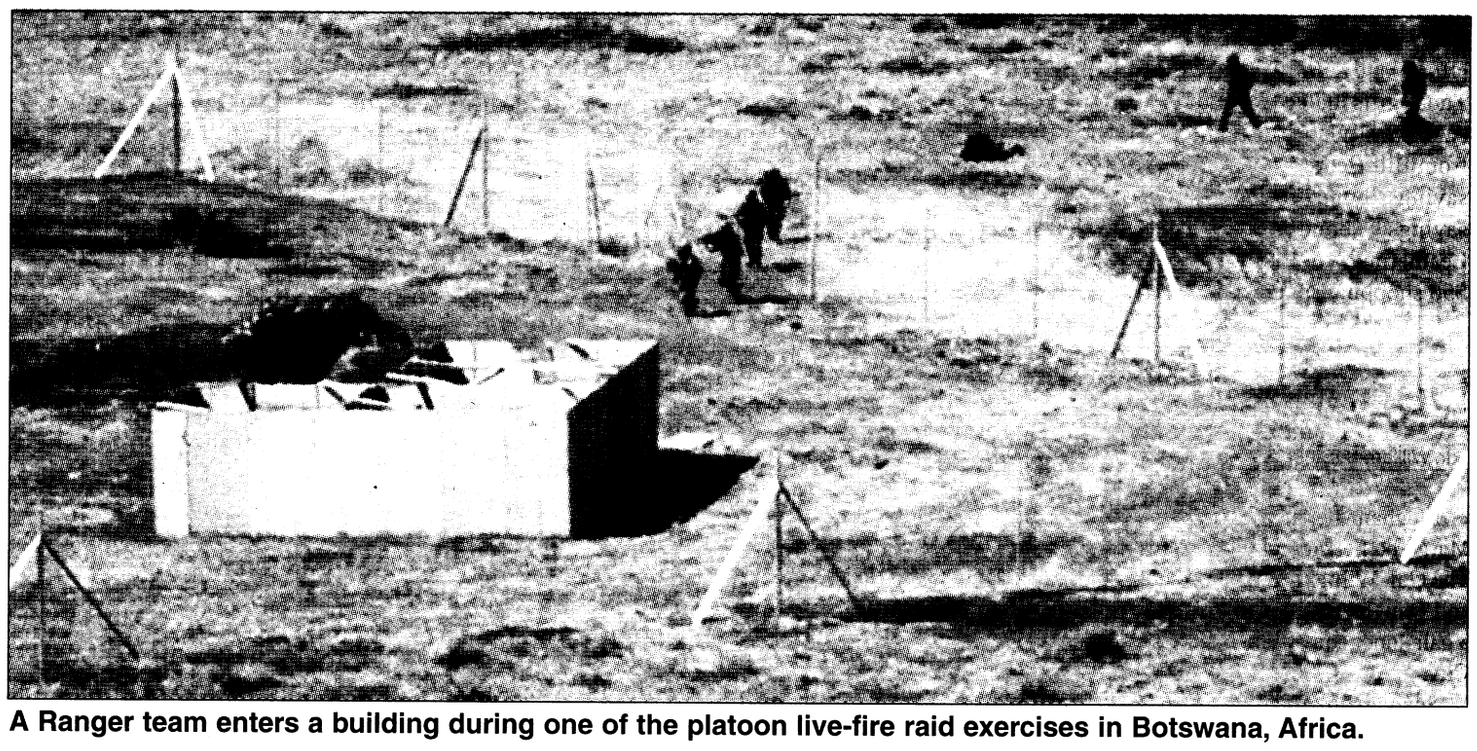
"As soon as we got to the country, we were sending rounds down range right away as if it were the real thing — combat," said Sgt. Jeff Ladau, a team leader.



Upon completion of the mission in Africa, the A Co. Rangers joined their comrades in Germany for Operation Centurion Crusader. The operation consisted of a company live-fire raid in Bamburg, Germany, and an attack on a mock village with a U.S. opposing force defending it.

"The enemy was good but the Rangers took the objective as if it were something they do every day," said Sgt. Todd Sheilds, a team leader in C Company. Alongside the Rangers, fighting to liberate the imaginary citizens of the town, was a platoon of German paratroopers who joined them for the training.

The German Soldiers also accompanied the Rangers in a wing exchange after a series of Airborne assaults onto Spike Drop Zone. During this mission, the Germans and Americans switched rolls as student, teacher and jumpmaster.



"As a student of history, I recognized the significance of working and training with the German Army," said Chaplain (Capt.) Bill Harrison. "It was a memorable experience to jump with them onto their soil in peace time."

Closing the deployment, the Rangers were allowed some rest and relaxation in Munich, Frankfurt and the other surrounding German towns. "The German culture is so simple and beautiful; it was a great opportunity to experience people and a country that is so different," said Capt. John Dyke, 3rd Battalion's public affairs officer.

Training helps ITB company learn to use Army values

Capt. James Brownlee
C Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry

Quick! Can you name the seven Army values? Can you give a definition and relate it to a personal experience? You may not be able to, but rest assured that the newest members of the Infantry can. Loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage — these values will never be easy to forget for the recent Infantry graduates of C Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade. A few weeks ago C Co. completed their final requirements for graduation, and one particular requirement was to complete the Bayonet Quest.

The Bayonet Quest combines Infantry One Station Unit Training tasks, values training and various Infantry battle drills.

The FTX provides a tremendous opportunity for values training reinforcement during Infantry OSUT, said Lt. Col. Michael J. Barron, commander of 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt. The seven Army values, when aligned with the battle drills in FM 7-8, greatly facilitate not only team building and unit cohesion, but also furthers the individual Soldier's ability to comprehend and actually see first hand just what is being taught.

Values training is scheduled and taught within the first week of OSUT. Each value has its own videotape that explains the purpose for each value. Values training is not limited to just the classroom. Throughout the cycle numerous opportunities arise that facilitate the strengthening of the Soldiers' values. Trips to the museum are taken within the cycle as well as readings of Medal of Honor recipient biographies.

"We stress values training every day in all that we do, whether it's reinforcing the value of personal courage by rappelling from the top of a 60-foot tower, to reinforcing personal courage by crossing a rope bridge in the pitch of night, our values training is consistent throughout the cycle," said Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Moon, the senior drill sergeant for the company.

To combine all seven values into the FTX, the company had to think of just how they were going to tie each value into the events scheduled throughout the weeklong exercise, while not losing the focus on the rigor and intensity. "Some of the values were down right easy to plan for, while others needed a bit of imagination and ingenuity to plainly get the point across. We wanted to set a standard or at least build a good foundation for stressing all seven values while in the FTX environment," said Staff Sgt. Michael Heckathorn, senior drill sergeant for first platoon,

The plan to stress the importance of loyalty came on line with a battle drill to knock out a bunker. During the simulated squad tactical exercise, Soldiers encounter a bunker and in the process of trying to kill the enemy, who was securely established inside, one of their squad members would either be killed or wounded. Therefore, the remaining squad members must display the value of loyalty and recover the wounded man while under fire.

"We thought it was going to be pretty easy to accomplish this mission, but when we actually got to the bunker all hell broke lose. We really didn't think that our team leader would get killed and our radioman was down, too," said Pvt. Lee Brown from Charleston, S.C. "We had to low crawl about 75 feet and then come up from the back of the bunker just to get a shot at the enemy inside. We thought we had them all and began to pull our team leader out of the line of fire when another guy in the bunker opened up on us. After the exercise, we sat down in a group and talked about loyalty. It pretty much all came together and made sense after that."

During the FTX, the company was required to conduct a night infiltration on Young's Range.

"Reinforcing and enhancing the seven Army values during our FTX would be easy. Our hard part was to find the right scenario to fit the activity being preformed at that particular time," said 1st Sgt. Carlos Garcia. "It was during this time we came up with the motto 'do less better,' which simply means that we focused our attention on the basics while remaining within the guidelines laid out in FM 7-8. Doing this also helped with the enhancement of the values training that was to taking place throughout our weeklong FTX."

Barron said, "The success that C Company had while completing the very first Bayonet Quest, has firmly established a foundation for the values enhancement while in the FTX. Their foundation can and will facilitate a building process throughout the Infantry Training Brigade. This accomplishment has laid a cornerstone of high standards that can only be built upon by other OSUT companies in the near future."

"When we combine OSUT tasks with FM 7-8 we open new paths that continuously illustrate different scenarios. With each new path and scenario created we have an opportunity to stress one of the seven Army values. I believe that values training during Infantry OSUT needed reinforcing, and the final FTX provided that opportunity," said Barron.

13th CSB completes readiness exercise

Unit tests its deployment capabilities

13th Corps Support Battalion

Picture it ...

The year — 1999; the time — O'dark 30. The balloon has gone up. You get a call saying your unit must deploy all equipment and personnel in 72 hours. Could you do it?

The 13th Corps Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), proved they could.

Last week, Soldiers all across the 13th CSB, took part in a weeklong deployment exercise, which culminated in a 100-percent roll out of the unit's equipment. The DEPEX is a training exercise that gives commanders a "snapshot" in time of just how ready their personnel and equipment are, should they be ordered to deploy now. The 13th CSB, which includes Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 104th Transportation Company, 598th Maintenance Company and 608th Ordnance Company, executed the N-hour deployment sequence and to standard.

The DEPEX kicked off Sept. 24 with the receipt of a simulated deployment order. All units immediately began to inspect and marshal the equipment that had been identified to move by air. The air-load equipment was rigorously inspected for cleanliness, leaks, and maintenance faults. Maintenance inspectors from each company collaborated to conduct a joint inspection using the same checklists and standards used by Air Force loadmasters.

"This DEPEX gave us an opportunity to identify shortcomings on the vehicles, prior to air-load, i.e. leaks and lifting shackles," said Master Sgt. Sammy Tarver, Inspection Team NCOIC from the battalion maintenance section. He also explained that supervisors must be pro-active on daily equipment preventive maintenance checks and services, so problems won't arise when it is time to deploy.

Next, the equipment that was identified to move by sea was also marshaled and sent through various inspections. Upon completion of inspections, units convoyed their equipment on a 62-mile route.

Unit movement officers played a major role in the DEPEX, working countless hours to make sure every aspect of the exercise went as planned. Chief Warrant Officer Thaddous Kelly, the 608th Ordnance UMO said, "The exercise gave our company a chance to identify and correct shortcomings within the company's unit movement plan."

Soldiers felt the exercise gave them a chance to do their war-time job. Spc. Derrick Tarver, a truck driver from the 361st TTD, said he got a chance to take initiative in doing his job. "This exercise gave us an opportunity to do our jobs, moving the equipment, without having to wait for constant guidance."

The DEPEX also gave commanders a glimpse of Soldier deployment readiness. The battalion staff inspected each Soldier's deployment packet to determine if they were personally ready to deploy. 1st Lt. Gertha Cook, the HHD acting commander, said it was important that Soldier Readiness Packets were intact. Soldiers with families must have a Family Care Plan. If they do not, they are non-deployable. This would result in low unit-readiness percentages. Therefore, it is imperative for leaders to make sure Soldiers and their families are prepared."

What was unique about the exercise was that the units not only participated in the DEPEX, but also continued to support the installation, tending to maintenance, repair parts, ammunition and transportation support.

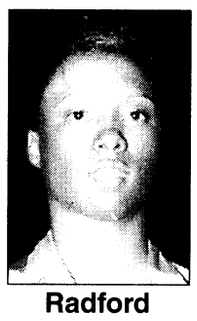
Sgt. Raymond Voorees checks voltage of a transmission sending unit during the deployment exe rcise, which began Sept.24.

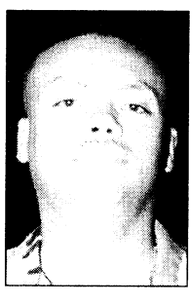
"Our mission did not stop. Not only did we exercise our alert sequence until roughly 9 p.m. daily, we also issued bullets at the ammunition supply point and supported the installation when called upon," said Capt. Nathan Hunsinger.

Once the exercise was over, vehicles were parked back in their motor pool areas, and Soldiers headed home to kiss their spouses and kids.

Lt. Col. Anthony Swain, the battalion commander, commented, "This is our job. We must be able to deploy and do our mission, so we have to make sure we are prepared in all areas, equipment, personnel, etc." He continued, "This exercise gave us a good idea of where we stand. I am very proud of the Soldiers and their hard work."

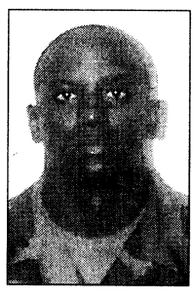


Post honors top NCO, Soldier



Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's top two Soldiers of the final quarter of 1999 were not only treated to lunch at the Main NCO Club Sept. 29 but were showered with gifts as well as the post's top brass and local merchants rewarded the outstanding Soldiers.



Spc. Eugenia Radford, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, took home the honors as the top Soldier, and Sgt. Anthony Gray, B Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., took home the accolade for top NCO.

Both Gray and Radford received Army Commendation Medals for their efforts and gifts from local merchants. Those gifts include: a coupon book from AAFES, a plaque and Florida vacation from Bill Heard Chevrolet, a plaque and savings bond from AUSA, a $100 savings bond from CB&T, a Leatherman tool from Ranger Joes, a $50 shopping spree from Dillards, a $50 savings bond from 1st Union Bank, a plaque and $50 savings bond from Geico, a $25 check from McCoy Environment, a plaque from NCOA, a $100 savings bond from Pioneer Military Lending, a $25 from Sergeants Major Association, a $100 savings bond from South Trust Bank, a free boot resole from Express Boot Repair, a cool bag and gym bag from Sprint Barracks Phone Service, a $25 check from TIC credit union, a $50 gift certificate from U.S. Calvary, a $50 coupon book from USPA and a $25 savings bond from the Ledger-Enquirer.

Dependent wins scholarship

Cdr. William S. Stuhr Scholarship Fund

Ferriter

Meghan Ferriter, daughter of Col. Michael and Margaret Ferriter of Fort Benning, has been awarded The Cdr. William S. Stuhr Scholarship for Military Sons and Daughters. The awards were presented Sept. 17 at a gala luncheon at The Union League Club in New York City.

Scholarships totaling $90,000 were awarded to five sons and daughters of the five Armed Services covering four years in college. As the daughter of an Army career family, Meghan attended high school in three states and graduated from Bedford High in Massachusetts in the top five percent of her class with a 4.14 GPA. She was actively involved in the National Honor Society, National Beta Club, French, Latin and Art Clubs. She has been the recipient of many awards including National Merit Scholar and Georgia Certificate of Merit. Meghan is attending Davidson College in North Carolina, majoring in psychology and anthropology.

The Stuhr Scholarship Fund currently has 20 previous winners studying at 15 universities in 12 states, with three out of four on their Deans' Lists. The number of benefactors, patrons and sponsors — corporations, foundations and private citizens — has grown to 56 since 1982. The Fund has embarked on the creation of a $1,000,000 endowment fund to ensure scholarships in perpetuity while also increasing awards for our military families daughters and sons.

Ranger team takes first at Canadian sniper competition

Duo defeats snipers in 11-event contest of marksman skills

Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Staff Sgt. Kevin Humphres and Sgt. Jason St. John of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment won the Canadian International Sniper Competition held Sept. 10-17.

The duo beat out 15 other teams from Norway, Australia, Canada, as well as the U.S. Marine Corps Sniper School, to take the top spot in the 11-event competition, which tested the snipers' skills in unknown distance events, snap and moving targets, urban shooting field craft.

While the Rangers placed first overall as a team, Humphres was also named the overall shooter of the event, and St. John took third place.

"My spotter was on top of it — I couldn't have done it alone. It was a super challenging course of fire," Humphres said. He also said that the Canadians were professional and gracious hosts. St. John agreed. "The competition was thorough, well thought out, and tested every aspect of the sniper profession."

Humphres, who currently works as sniper squad leader in the 3rd Battalion's Sniper Platoon, recently finished shooting for U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle Team this summer. USAMU has been working closely with the Ranger snipers to perfect current sniper training doctrine.

St. John works as a sniper team leader and just graduated from the Marine Scout Sniper Course as the "top gun" of his class.

"The Ranger snipers have been a key operational element since the formation of the battalions," he said, "and have steadily developed marksmanship techniques and equipment to the highest standard."

According to Capt. John Dyke, public affairs officer for the 3rd Battalion, Ranger snipers were only recently assigned to rifle companies.

In 1998, the Ranger battalions were reorganized to include a battalion-level sniper platoon and a mortar platoon, Dyke said.

The Ranger snipers now work in the battalion headquarters company to better support multiple battalion and company missions.

Dyke also added that the U.S. Army Infantry Center and USAMU have been instrumental in helping the Rangers consolidate their Snipers and increase their level of proficiency over the last year.

Typically, snipers operate in teams of two to three Rangers attached to the rifle companies. The snipers are experts in camouflage, stalking techniques, patrolling, marksmanship, and Ranger fieldcraft.

Capt. Louis Zeisman, Headquarters and Headquarters Company commander, said the snipers are an outstanding group of motivated Rangers who possess a great talent.

"They're the best shots in the battalion," he said.

"You definitely don't want those guys shooting at you," added Sgt. 1st Class Lindsay Bunch, the sniper platoon sergeant.

Danish Soldiers learn lessons in life, comradeship during Ranger School

Master Sgt. John K. Farley
Ranger Training Brigade

Recently the Ranger Training Brigade hosted two former graduates from Denmark who were doing a documentary about their Ranger School experience.

One wanted to be a teacher; the other wanted just to survive Ranger School. Both were extremely successful, and the lessons of life and comradeship learned in Ranger School have made them the leaders they are today in both the military and civilian community.

The two lifelong friends, former Capt. Carsten Morch and Sgt. Maj. Bjarne S. Christiansen, knew little of each other prior to arriving at Fort Benning, but they both had a lot in common. They were both members of the Danish Army elite Special Operations unit, the Jaeger Corps, and both were to become famous celebrities in Denmark; they were Ranger buddies.

"It was terrible. They (Ranger instructors) were always yelling at us. We never had enough to eat or sleep. I asked B.S. (Christiansen) to break my arm in two places just so I could go back home," recalled Morch, the Distinguished Honor Graduate of class 6-78.

First he stayed because of the commitment he had to his friend, and then he learned, as all Ranger graduates do, a little bit about himself. Morch learned that not only did he have a talent for leadership, but that he would excel in developing that newfound ability in others. With seven companies in Scandinavia, companies in China and South Africa, Morch is the director of CMK as a motivation speaker. "I can talk the dead alive," Morch said. He operates his executive training program under his patented "Extreme Management" concept.

"I will take a group of executives or businessmen, give them a seemingly impossible task to perform under adverse conditions, with clear guidance on how I want it accomplished and when it will be accomplished."

Sound familiar? Christian is a 26-year veteran of the elite 60-man Jaeger Corps and said his accomplishment shows that he is a Soldiers' Soldier. The Danish royal family entrusted him to teach the crown prince to skydive. Christian won the Jaeger competition (equivalent to Fort Benning's Best Ranger) six years straight, when no man had won it two consecutive years before. "Wherever I go in the world and meet other Rangers, we have an instant bond and comradeship. We know what we can expect from each other. I have an instant friend that I can trust," Christian explained about the camaraderie found in the Rangers. "I went with Ranger Morch and helped him set up his program — and will help him from time to time when I'm on holiday."

As friends often do, these two Ranger buddies have drifted apart since Morch's departure from the army in 1986. "I have only seen Morch maybe five time since he got out of the Jaeger Corps. But after only one second it is as if we have never left, and we are still there."

White celebrates diversity year round

Proud parents, in military uniforms or traditional dress, paraded in front of White Elementary School students carrying flags from their respective home countries. The children watched in awe as the parade of flags made its review. All in all, 13 countries from the Americas were represented during the talent show opening ceremonies held Oct. 1.

Families from different countries brought a piece of their culture to share with students during a weeklong Hispanic heritage celebration that culminated with a talent show. Parents shared song, dance, stories and food with the students and staff throughout the week. However, White Elementary School doesn't just celebrate diversity during special occasions, but makes multicultural education part of their daily regime as Fort Benning's only English as a Second Language School.

"Today, when educators talk about multicultural education, White School is very fortunate," said Dr. Judy Archer, principal of White Elementary School. "We don't have a few students from one or two countries, but approximately a third of our students speak eight different languages and represent 26 different nationalities."

Archer said diversity is the norm at White School and doesn't particularly care for the term "melting pot" which, implies the watering down of cultures and making them one.

"I'd rather refer to us as a tossed salad or a Crayola Crayon pack because diversity is valued here — all of the cultures brought to us by the students enrich our total educational program," she said.

Foreign students and their parents, according to Archer, offer an invaluable educational opportunity that simply cannot be learned from a textbook.

"The families are proud of their heritage and love to share their culture with others. This sharing of cultures helps to build mutual respect and sets seeds for international understanding," Archer said.

Hedy Velez, coordinator for Hispanic Heritage Month and nurse assistant, translates for White School and believes the school has a marvelous system.

"This school is integrated with bilingual assistants and teachers who are trained in second language techniques — within two months the children are able to speak English," she said.

Although most of the international students enter school speaking little to no English, Archer believes all children speak the international language of play, which bridges communication gaps and helps the children assimilate into their new environment.

"When children sit across from each other, the cultural differences seem to disappear — in terms of promoting understanding, tolerance and respect to diversity you can't beat just being friends with someone," Archer said.

"We provide a support system within the school, and on a daily basis we find ways to show respect for the cross cultural contributions made by our students."

Commissary aids in letter writing contest

Special to the Bayonet©

A small collection box located at the Commissary identification desk has a unique purpose. No it's not for collecting coupons as one might think, but collecting "Letters to the Front."

Letters placed in this box have one thing in common. They will all read "Dear Service Member, I just wanted to say thanks for ... " and will be submitted to the worldwide letter-writing contest Letters to the Front.

Commissaries worldwide are gathering letters of appreciation for U.S. troops stationed overseas. Dropping a letter into the box will not only enter you into the contest, but the letter will be forwarded to an American service member stationed overseas.

The idea for a letter contest was sparked while the theatrical show Letter to the Front, toured military bases overseas. Show director-writer Robert Rector said that following the performances many troops thanked the cast members for not forgetting them.

"It really touched us," he said. "It occurred to us that there was no reason we, as a nation, couldn't have an ongoing letter-writing campaign for our troops."

Participants must write a letter on 8 1/2 x 11 piece of paper, in 100 words or less beginning with "Dear Service Member, I just wanted to say thanks for ..." and attach a completed entry located at the collection box. The letter must be legible and will be judged on sincerity of content.

"The letters will be judged on sincerity —

When asked what elements make a good teacher, Dexter Elementary School teacher Cy Dietrich pauses. "Creativity, spontaneity, energetic, caring ... oh, and very imaginative!" As a music educator on Fort Benning for 21 years, it seems as though the 1999 Teacher of the Year doesn't realize he has described himself.

"I feel I am just a representative of all the teachers for this year. Every teacher is the best that there can be as long as their students are learning what is taught."

Dietrich, who is originally from Ephrata, Penn., actually made his way in to music through the Army when he was selected by the general of 3rd Brigade in Germany to lead the "Marne Men" glee club and band in the 1950s. When he eventually left the Army, he began teaching 40 years ago in 1960.

Today, he teaches music to Pre-K through fifth grade, as well as directing WDEX, a weekly, half-hour television show, put on by fifth-graders. He also has been a professor for 19 years at Troy State University, teaching music history. Out of school, Dietrich enjoys racquetball and directing his church choir.

Dietrich

Vicki Rogers, principal of Dexter Elementary, only has praise for Dietrich.

"He is amazing! He has so much to offer everyone —the kids, parents and the staff. And his teaching collaborates with what the children are learning in their classes, so it makes it more meaningful."

Randi Hinkley, a fifth-grader at Dexter agreed on a different level. "I like music class a lot. Mr. Dietrich is nice and he makes up really silly games to play."

With no sign of retirement in sight, Dietrich gets up every morning looking forward to his day of school with a positive, cheerful attitude. "My only wish is that the parents would get more involved. The children need their support to succeed."

As he digs around the back of the room for a "fire hose" for the kindergarten lesson, he stops for a moment. " I have so much fun with these kids. I just love teaching."

Soldier show comes to Benning

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

A night of music and fun is on the menu as the U.S. Army Soldier Show makes its stop at Fort Benning Oct. 15.

The show, which begins at 7 p.m. at the Sand Hill Theater, is all about having a good time, according to Sally Ghent, administrative officer for Community Recreation.

"This is the 15th time the show has been to Fort Benning, and it's always great entertainment," said Ghent. "There's a lot of talent there — it makes you appreciate what talent we have in the Army. Everybody enjoy it."

The show is performed by active duty Soldiers, and new cast members are selected each year.

Hopeful cast and crew submit application packages that include videotapes, biographies, photographs and letters of recommendation from their commanders.

Once selected, the Soldiers are assigned on orders to the Community and Family Support Center, Army Entertainment Division for 179 days. The Soldier Show is operated as a deployable military detachment under the leadership of the Army Entertainment Division first sergeant.

Soldiers in the show have to learn choreography. They also memorize more than 50 songs ranging from current country, R&B, rap and rock chart-toppers to Broadway tunes, movie themes, oldies, soul, and patriotic songs combined in solos, duets, group and high-energy, fast-paced production numbers that make up the show.

Last year, cast members performed 115 shows at 78 locations. The show is free, and tickets aren't required to enter the theater. Cameras and video recorders aren't allowed in during the performance.

For more information about the show, call Sally Ghent at 545-1948.

Energy conservation frees funds

Penny O'Connor
Directorate of Public Works

October is Energy Awareness Month. It's a perfect time to develop good energy saving habits. If energy is conserved in offices and homes, funds are freed for essentials. There are so many small ways to make the savings mount up.

In the office: Turn the lights off in unused meeting rooms and offices. When working late, use desk lighting instead of lighting up the entire office. Be sure lights are turned off whenever the office will be empty.

Office equipment gobbles up energy and generates a lot of heat, which makes for higher cooling costs during warm weather. Turn off computer and monitors when leaving work; turn copiers and printers off at night and on weekends. Enable the power management feature on all office equipment, such as computers, monitors, copiers or printers.

When replacing equipment, make sure it has Energy Star™ power management features. Don't buy big monitors unless they are really needed. (A 17-inch monitor uses 35 percent more power than a 14"-inch monitor does.)

In the home: On average, each dollar spent on electricity divides up: 52 percent for heating and cooling, 24 percent for water heating and 24 percent for small appliances, lighting and entertainment equipment. Some families may find it easiest to tackle one area to start with, and then work on others.

Cutting heating costs: Clean and replace heating and cooling system filters every month. Make sure all furniture, draperies, doors or other obstacles do not block vents and return air registers. If the heater doesn't seem to work as efficiently as identical quarters in another building nearby, call in a service order to have attic insulation checked.

During winter, dress a little more warmly and set the thermostat down to 68 degrees or less. Leave draperies open on sunny days to absorb the sun's heat. Close them on the shaded side of the house and at night. Use an electric blanket at night rather than heating the entire house all night long.

Cutting hot water consumption: Call a service order in to have dripping and leaking faucets fixed. Turn down the water heater thermostat to 140 degrees or 120 degrees if not using a dishwasher. Don't let the water run, close the sink drain when shaving. This can save gallons of hot water.

Stoppering the sink or using a dishpan when washing dishes by hand can save up to 30 gallons of water per meal. Load dishwashers properly and operate only when full. Don't use too much soap. Use the more efficient energy-saving cycles when appropriate, choosing the shortest washing cycle that will clean the dishes. Running full loads and selecting the proper cycle also applies to clothes washing. In addition, cold water cleans many fabrics as well as warm water does; check clothing care labels for suggested water temperature to use. Run dishwashers, clothes washers, dryers, and any other power hungry appliance during off-peak hours, in the evenings during summer for example.

Run dryers at the correct temperature: Excessive heat can damage some fabrics. Separate loads into heavyweight and lightweight items; lightweight articles can be dried in less time. Clean the lint filter after every use to maximize the airflow and efficiency. Keep dryer vents free of lint. A clogged vent can waste energy and may also be a fire hazard. Dry loads of clothes immediately after one another while the dryer is already warm. Remove clothes from the dryer promptly and hang carefully to avoid ironing.

Saving energy in the kitchen: Save time and energy by preparing the entire meal in the oven (helps warm the house in cool weather too). Use a slow cooker or crockpot to make single-dish meals. Use the microwave oven, small electric frying pan, grill or toaster oven instead of the oven. They'll use less power and generate less heat during summer than the stove's oven or broiler.

Turn off the lights when leaving a room: Use fluorescent instead of incandescent bulbs; they give off five times the light for the same amount of energy, and last 10 to 15 times longer than regular bulbs. Lamps with three-way switches give you the flexibility to turn light levels up or down as needed.

Energy dollars at home or in the office can go down the drain or out the door or can be saved and spent on a host of other things that are badly needed and wanted.

Road construction

Notice of restriction to single lane traffic on Lumpkin Ave. and full road closure on Bjornstadt Street as part of the Whole Neighborhood Revitalization Project in Area 17 (White Elephants): today through Oct. 15, traffic will be restricted to one northbound lane on Lumpkin Road between Yeager and Running avenues. Southbound lanes will not be affected. For more information, call Jeff Hill at 545-3138 or Don Moore at 545-1818 or visit him in Building 6, Room 412.

Oct. 18-22, there will be a full road closure on Bjornstadt Street between Yeager and Running avenues for the installation of curb inlets. For more information, call Richard English or Moore at 545-1818.

Columbus Day garbage schedules

There will be no yard waste picked up in Family Housing Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pick up is Oct. 18.

There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups on Monday. Port, Kawamura, Fernandez streets, and Indianhead Terrace areas normally scheduled for pick-up on Monday, will be picked up Tuesday. Refuse and recycle collection in Family Housing for Tuesday through Oct. 15 will be picked up as normally scheduled.

For more information, call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4232.

Columbus Day Holiday Schedule for the Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center

In observance of Columbus Day, the Self Help Center, including the Loan Equipment Section and Venetian Blind and Shade Shop, will be closed Oct. 9-11. The Self Help Center will reopen for business Oct. 12 at 8:30 a.m. For more information, call Dr. William C. Shirley at 545-1121.

ask the judge

Carolyn E. Moller
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Will a divorce from my spouse affect my credit?

A: Yes. First and foremost a divorce decree has no impact on responsibility obligations in regard to the payment of joint debts created as a result of the marriage. This is true even if the divorce decree specifically makes your spouse responsible for the payment of the debt.

Typically, a divorce decree will determine who is responsible for debts acquired as a result of the marriage and will state that the responsible party will indemnify and hold the non-responsible party harmless from adverse action as a result of that debt responsibility. However, the divorce decree will not absolve either party from their respective promises made to the creditor at the time the credit was established.

What does that mean for each spouse? Your credit rating may be jeopardized if your spouse fails to make required payments on time. This means the creditor can report your spouse's late payments on your credit report even though the divorce decree gave payment responsibility to your spouse. During the divorce negotiations, it is important that you send in at least the minimum payment on each account, even if you do not end up with the ultimate responsibility for payment on the debt. Missed payments will also be posted to each spouse's credit report and can remain on the report for up to seven years.

If your spouse fails to pay the debt, the creditor still has the legal right to collect the unpaid amounts from you. If this happens, you will have to pay the creditor, then you may pursue your spouse in an independent lawsuit to collect those sums you paid on their behalf.

If your spouse declares bankruptcy, again, the creditors may seek payment from you since you will still have the obligation to pay the debt. In cases of bankruptcy, however, you may not be able to collect those sums paid on behalf of your spouse, unless, the divorce decree states that joint debts are non-dischargeable in bankruptcy. All of this may affect your ability to obtain credit in your name in the future. With some planning, however, you can protect your credit rating.

First, get a copy of your credit report so you can see exactly what credit and or debt is listed in your joint names. Second, contact all of your joint creditors and close those joint accounts. Third, transfer account balances from joint accounts to individual accounts of the spouse who will be responsible for the debt.

You may still have a legal responsibility to pay existing balances unless the creditor agrees to release you from the debt. If the creditor does agree to release you from responsibility, obtain such release in writing.

Another avenue might be for each spouse to obtain a consolidation loan in their individual name, then both spouses use the money to pay off joint marital debt. This will resolve the joint responsibility problem and protect your credit rating.

It's happening at Loyd Middle School ...

PTO: Loyd Elementary School says farewell to dedicated volunteer

Shelly Moore
Loyd Elementary School

This December will mark the end of four years of service to the students and faculty of Loyd School by our dedicated PTO president, Rosalind Ortega.

Her tireless efforts over these four years have enhanced the quality of education for hundreds of students.

Roz, as she is fondly called, is originally from Philadelphia, Penn. She is married to Staff Sgt. Evert Ortega and is the mother of two Loyd students, Adam-a fourth-grader in Mrs. Smith's class, and Justin, a pre-K student in Mrs. Walker's class. She and her family will be leaving Fort Benning to move to Puerto Rico.

"I've always thought Loyd School is a great school, the teachers are so kind to the children, and the school provides a good atmosphere for the children to learn," Ortega said. "I hope the parents will rally behind the future PTO officers and offer their support for the fund raisers and volunteer efforts. I'd like to see a lot of our annual events continue and grow to become even better attended and supported."

During her four-year tenure as PTO president, Roz has initiated a lot of successful fund-raising activities to provide financial support to the school. Parents and children look forward to events such as the annual Family Night Out, Holiday Craft Fair, Skate Nights and the Santa Holiday Shop.

"Mrs. Ortega is an energetic, focused go-getter," said Debra Mabry, principal of Loyd School. "She is extremely focused and goal-oriented."

At the present time, Ortega is using her focus and energy on the current fund raisers — the Fall Festival scheduled for Oct. 16 and the Family Supper Night Nov. 16. A recent candle sales fund raiser just netted $2,700, and the profits from the Yard Sale are still being counted.

When Ortega isn't expending all her energy on her PTO duties, she loves to watch and play football with her children. The few minutes she manages to find to relax are spent reading. Katherine Walker, School-Home Partnership chairperson, said, "Roz has been a blessing to our school. No request for help has been too hard or too time consuming. Her dedication to our school's endeavors has been outstanding and has benefited the school immensely. She will be missed."

Loyd aims to raise scores

Shelly Moore
Loyd Elementary School

The Reading and Language Arts Committee of Loyd School consists of seven faculty members to include: our media specialist, a special education teacher and five regular education teachers in varying grade levels K-4.

For the 1998-1999 school year we have selected raising student achievement in reading and language arts through identification of reading strategies and by evaluating and extending meaning as our focus.

Our work began in the fall by identifying the students in the lowest quartile to receive reading support services from our literacy teacher.

Students identified in the 25-40 percent also receive support as slots are available. Second through fifth-grade teachers administered a placement test to students using our new language arts materials from Scholastic.

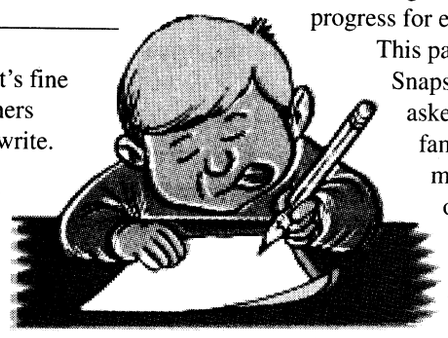
The teachers received in-service training during preplanning to prepare for implementation of our new language arts series Literacy Place. Once materials arrived, teachers began using Literacy Place as the foundation of our reading, language arts program. To ensure successful implementation of the new materials, common planning times were established for grade levels.

Teacher study groups were established to research and discuss research-based strategies to enhance student achievement.

Several teachers attended a Best Reading Strategies Conference and presented information in a faculty meeting for those not attending. Dr. Mary Howard was hired to provide in-service training on effective reading practices for the entire faculty.

To accommodate Benchmark 3.1, students are enrolled in success maker technology programs. This individualization provides students with skill reinforcement and challenge. Gains reports provide students, teachers and parents with data concerning individual student achievement.

The use of writing portfolios was established to assist in monitoring our students' growth. Quarterly samples are rubric scored and kept in student portfolios. Students in third through fifth grade participated in a three day system-wide writing assessment. Ongoing progress is also monitored by use of Literacy Place testing materials. A Yearlong Student Summary Sheet is used to record individual student data such as placement test summary, unit tests, spelling tests, vocabulary tests and end-of-the-year reading and writing assessment. This record becomes part of a student's cumulative record.



Benchmark 3.1 also requested funds to provide academic field experiences for our students. We believe this critical exposure to the arts is essential in promoting academic growth to our students. At this time, the funding has been frozen in Washington. It is our intention to pursue enrichment opportunities for the students at Loyd School.

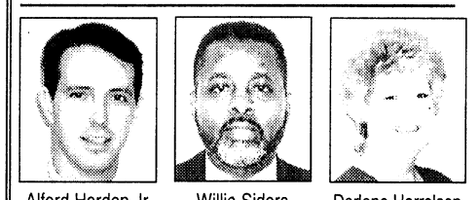
The benchmark committee 3.1 at Loyd School is working to support the areas of Reading and Language Arts. Through the implementation of Literacy Place teachers provide reading instructional strategies developed to support student gains. Our school improvement plan includes teacher training and enrichment opportunities for our students.

Students refine writing skills

Shelly Moore
Loyd Elementary School

In an effort to further the student's fine pieces and writing ability, teachers continue to encourage them to write. As I pondered a way to make writing exciting for my students, I thought of the idea of having an author's chair. The chair is only utilized for the students to share their published work.

Each week we try to do a whole piece of communication. Currently, we have about three narratives in our composition books. The students are being taught how to assess their own progress for each phase of the writing process.



This past week we worked on a Snapshot Story. The students were asked to write a story based on a family photo or one clipped from a magazine. The story could be real or fictional but should tell where the photo was taken, who is in it and what was happening at that time.

Students shared their snapshot stories with the class. Each experienced the opportunity of telling his or her story while sitting in the author's chair.

Columbus Day celebrates discovery

Chaplain (Capt.) Terry E. Romine
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment

Out of pride for their native son, the Italian population of New York City organized the first celebration of the discovery of America Oct. 12, 1866. The next year, more Italian organizations in other cities held banquets, parades and dances on that date. In 1869, when Italians of San Francisco celebrated Oct. 12, they called it Columbus Day.

In 1905, Colorado became the first state to observe a Columbus Day. Over the next few decades the other states followed. In 1937, President Franklin D. Roosevelt proclaimed every Oct. 12 as Columbus Day. Since 1971, it has been celebrated on the second Monday in October. The preceding paragraphs give a brief history of the holiday we celebrate as Columbus Day. Any reason to celebrate seems to be enough for most of us.

Have you ever wondered why we celebrate Columbus Day?

reflections

We celebrate the discovery of America. Yes, it is true people lived here when Columbus arrived. In fact, people had been living on this continent for centuries. We celebrate this discovery because of the change that event brought about on this continent and around the world. Some of the changes, for some people may not have been positive ones, but there is no denying the changes came.

We celebrate the fact that eventually the country that grew out of that discovery now offers true religious liberty. This country offers a constitutional right to free exercise of religion.

For me, that liberty is one of the most important reasons to celebrate. That liberty gives me the right to my beliefs and at the same time allows those who believe differently to live alongside of me in freedom. That is a large part of what makes America, America.

It takes approximately 1,000 volunteers to assist the Convoy of Hope team in this outreach. If you would like to volunteer, call me at 545-2050 or 545-7777. Also, there will be a meeting for volunteers tonight at Evangel Temple located at 5350 Veterans Parkway at Airport Thruway.

Jesus said, "For I was hungry, and you gave Me something to eat; I was thirsty, and you gave Me drink; I was a stranger, and you invited me in ... I tell you the truth, whatever you did for the least of these brothers of mine you did for me."

Please, don't pass up this opportunity to be a blessing to someone who could use the help. Don't be like the religious hypocrites who passed the injured man and did nothing. Instead be like the Samaritan who gave from his substance to minister to one in need. You'll never regret it. Will you help or will you pass on by?

Organization reaches needy children

Non-profit group gives groceries, hope

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

During the past year I've touched on many issues facing military families, from raising children to fighting fair with your spouse. This week I want to change gears somewhat and share with you from my heart a ministry that has grabbed my attention like very few have. It is the Convoy of Hope.

The Convoy of Hope is a non-profit organization that works trans-denominationally with local churches and other helping agencies in sponsoring a one-day event to reach needy children and their friends. Free groceries are distributed, health and dental screenings and job fairs are organized. Haircuts, lunch and games for children are provided. Each recipient is treated as the guest of honor.

Rupel

Since its inception in 1995, God has used the Convoy of Hope to:

- Mobilize more than 60,000 volunteers.
- Provide millions of dollars in food, clothing and medical supplies to needy children and their families.
- Distribute hundreds of thousands of Bibles.

The Convoy of Hope visits Columbus Saturday. There are more than 30 churches involved in this outreach as well as medical and dental teams and other local helping agencies. This is a real opportunity for you to put your words into action by reaching out to the needy among us.

Seeking help reduces risks of leaving violence

Becky Welch
Family Advocacy Program

Why do battered women feel trapped? Simply, because they are often trapped. That doesn't necessarily mean that there's no way out. However, there are many obstacles to achieving safety or to ending a relationship with a violent partner, and the choices women confront are not risk-free.

Risks of seeking help or deciding to leave:

Physical Violence and Psychological Harm

• Risk of escalated threats and physical violence, resulting in harm to victim, children, friends or family.

• Risk that batterer will follow through on suicide threats and harm himself.

• Risk of continued harassment, stalking and verbal and emotional attacks, especially if batterer has ongoing contact (such as during court ordered visitation).

• Risk of serious physical and or death.

Children

• Continued risk to children of emotional and physical harm; possibility of increased risks to children if batterer has unsupervised visitation.

• Risk of losing children of parental kidnapping or as the result of a legal custody decision.

• Risk of negative impact on children as a result of "breaking up the family."

Financial

• Risk of reduced standard of living — possible loss of home, possessions, neighborhood.

• Risk of losing income or job — may lose partner's income, may have to quit a job in order to relocate or to fulfill the responsibilities of single parenthood, may be prevented from working because of threats and harassment.

Relationship

• Risk of losing partner, losing the relationship.

• Risk of losing help with children, transportation, household.

• For elderly women or women with disabilities, risk of losing caretaker.

Responses from others

• Risk of not being believed or taken seriously, being blamed, being pressured to do something she's not ready or able to do.

• Risk of being judged as a bad wife, partner or mother.

• Risk of being pressured to maintain the relationship based on religious and or cultural beliefs or because the children "need a father."

• Risk that actions of "helpers" may increase danger.

Under the best of circumstances, it is difficult to end a relationship with an intimate partner. Love, family, shared memories and a sense of commitment are bonds that are hard to break.

Battered women face the additional risks of physical, emotional and psychological harm. In addition, many battered women want the violence to stop, but they don't want the relationship to end.

Seeking help, getting an order of protection or deciding to leave only makes sense to a woman when, on balance, it reduces the overall risks that she and her children have to deal with.

There are risks attached to every decision a battered woman makes.

Safety planning is the process of evaluating the risks and benefits of different options and identifying the ways to reduce the risks.

For more information about domestic abuse, call Rebecca Welch or Theresa Sanchez at Family Advocacy at 544-3344. To contact a shelter, call 297-4401 in Phenix City or 324-3850 in Columbus.

Contest: Soldiers receive thanks through letters

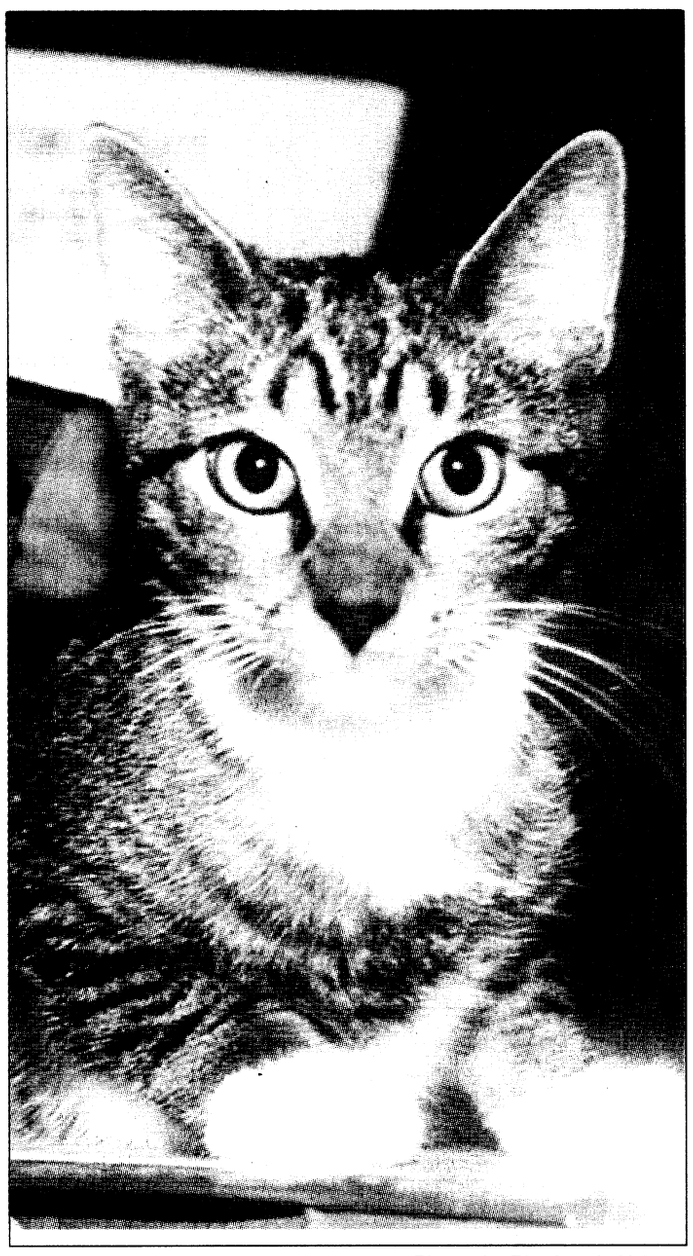
basically how well someone expresses their thanks, said Marsha Roberts, producer of Letters to the Front. "The judges are looking for letters that are from the heart. Our instructions to the judges were 'Choose a letter that you would have liked to receive when you were stationed far from home.'"

Winners will be judged in three categories: under 12, ages 12-18, and 19 and above. Local and regional winners, in each category, will be announced by Dec. 15. The winning letters will automatically advance to the worldwide contest. Three grand prizes will be awarded: the 12 and under and 12-18 age category winners will receive $3,000 scholarship funds, and the adult winner will receive a computer system valued at $3,000. Grand-Prize winning letters will be posted on the Web during the first week of January.

"The big payoff is when the contest is over and all the letters are sent to our troops stationed overseas," Roberts said. "As far as goodwill is concerned, everyone's a winner. We are very excited about getting lots of letters of appreciation to service members reminding them they are not forgotten."



The Letters to the Front Contest runs through Veteran's Day (Nov. 11).

Persons without access to the commissary can send their entries to: Letters to the Front Contest, 6595 Roswell Road, Suite 661, Atlanta, GA 30328.

Boxing coach adds accolade to trophy case

Basheer Abdullah wins Olympic developmental coach of the year

Tim Hipps
Military District of Washington

WASHINGTON — Basheer Abdullah has returned respectability to U.S. Army boxing since taking over three years ago as All-Army head coach of the World Class Athlete boxing program at Fort Carson, Colo.

Abdullah, 36, was honored Sept. 18, as the sport's 1999 Olympic Developmental Coach of the Year by the U.S. Olympic Committee during a black-tie gala awards ceremony at the Ronald Reagan International Trade Center in Washington, D.C.

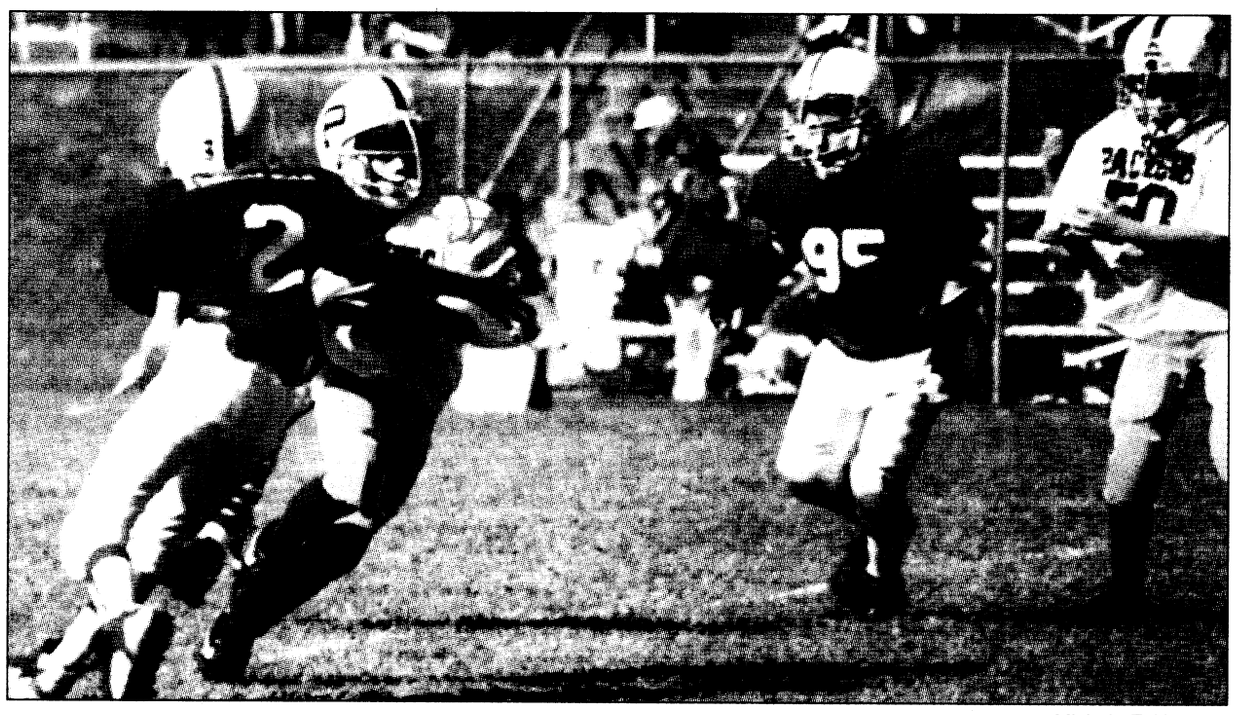
"This is an honor to be able to represent so many people and organizations, to represent the United States Army, my family, USA Boxing, my athletes, my wife," Abdullah said. "It's just a wonderful feeling. I can't describe the feelings I have. It's just a great honor."

For the second time in three years, Tom Mustin, of Tacoma, Wash., was named boxing's National Coach of the Year by the USOC. A 31-year coaching veteran, Mustin spent much of the past two working with Abdullah.

"I think he's a great coach," Mustin said. "We've been working on some new stuff getting ready to compete against the world in computerized scoring. We've been together for two years now. The boxers are getting an understanding of what we're trying to do and what we need to do to score against the computer and be able to win some of these world-type matches and tournaments."

Two years ago, U.S. boxers floundered against international competition, finishing dead last in the World Championships with zero fighters advancing beyond the second round.

"The U.S. was kind of down in 1997," Mustin admitted. "The rest of the world was ahead of us in computer scoring. The pitfalls were to stay off the ropes, stay out of the corners, keep your hands up, don't allow cheap scores, be able to step around and score. You still have to be strong because those guys will push you around, but the key to computer scoring is not to give away cheap points and understand that jabs and body shots don't count. Mostly it's right hands and hooks to the head. You have to know how to use the body shots and jabs to set those punches up."



"So we knew we had to do something to change everything around. We studied tapes and put a different training program together, and it's turned out to be successful. Some of the guys thought it was a fluke, and we couldn't repeat it. But we built on it and did even better last year."

Six years ago, flyweight boxer Byron Moore came to a personal crossroad at Fort Bragg, N.C., which drew him out of but not far from the boxing ring.

"I made the transition out of boxing into Islam," Basheer explained of his turbulent 1993 when he changed his name from Byron Moore to Basheer Abdullah. "And I was getting ready to go back into my unit to Soldier a little bit when they offered me this opportunity as an All-Army coach. It all happened very quickly."

At the time, he wasn't really sure what

In the zone

Christopher Cain (1), son of Staff Sgt. Rob Harris, B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, breaks through the Colts defensive line scoring his third touchdown of the day. Cain, a running back for the Northeast Packers, is one of many Fort Benning youth playing in the Columbus Football League. Cain led the Packers as they dominated the game offensively shutting down the Colts 19-0.

what he wanted to do.

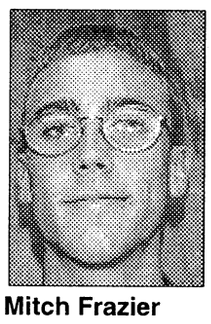
"I was dealing with a lot," he admitted. "I could've taken a chance and put my emphasis on trying to make the 1996 Olympic Team. But with all the changes at Fort Bragg, especially with the coaching staff and their different philosophy, and with me studying the religion of Islam, which took up a lot of my time, I was unable to adapt."

With Islam his new religion, Abdullah, 55-9 as a flyweight (112 pounds), began working as an assistant for boxing coach James Grant at Fort Bragg. Shortly thereafter, Grant fired Abdullah.

"I was honest with him," Abdullah explained of his dismissal. "I didn't agree with the philosophy of his assistant coach. I was the No. 3 guy, but I felt like his other assistant was more of a weightlifting coach. His philosophy didn't complement boxing, and we got into it. I tried to explain to coach Grant that this guy had different personalities when he was around and away from the ring. But coach Grant wouldn't listen to me."

It wasn't long before coach Anthony Bradley recruited Abdullah to work with the Army World Class Athlete program under coach Jesse Ravello. Abdullah now works with 17 boxers at Fort Carson, Colo., where he landed two years ago.

"The World Class Athlete Program has reformed to where we have a balance between our military careers and our athletic careers," Abdullah said of the boxers' training regimen.



"We actually are a unit now, with a first sergeant and a commander on board as a detachment. We have Soldiering time. We do military training once a week, every Thursday. NCOs are required to do give classes, and we have our CTT (Common Task Testing) training. We also go to school. We're required to take three college classes per year.

"So the standards are high. We're not just coming down there and boxing like we did in the past. We have to stay current in our (military occupational specialties). We're all seeking degrees now, so we have goals to reach. That pushes the athletes to give a little bit more. If they aren't meeting their benchmarks, they are subject to be released from the program."

The bottom line for the program is to develop boxers who can compete on national and international levels; putting as many Army boxers on the U.S. Olympic team as possible is the ultimate dream.

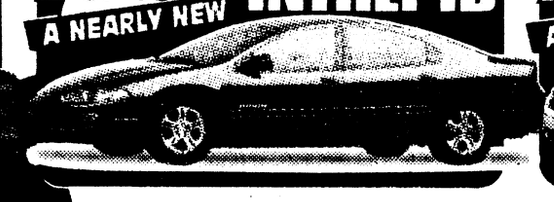
TRADE UP TO A NEARLY NEW CAR!

"On average, the value of a new car plummets 28% in the first week after its sale."
-HARVARD BUSINESS REVIEW

"Detroit is trying to put the brakes on sales of low-mileage, nearly new cars from rental fleets. Consumers have been snapping up the cars as bargain-priced alternatives to expensive new models."
-Wall Street Journal



"...the used rental won't even be that old. In some cases, it may even be the current model year and it will seldom be older than one and half years. So, while the neighbors will think it's a new car - someone else has already eaten the worst of the depreciation."
-MOTOR TREND

TOP 10 REASONS TO BUY AT BUDGET

1. A new car depreciates 32% in the first year, most of which is in the first 24 hours.
2. Rental cars are the #1 cars retailed in the U.S.A.
3. Why pay the difference if you can't tell the difference?
4. BUDGET has up to a 100,000 mile new car service contract available.
5. All cars at BUDGET are sold with the remainder of factory warranty and 100% 30 day / 1,000 mile warranty.
6. Every BUDGET vehicle must pass a 102 point inspection.
7. Every BUDGET vehicle has "Gold Seal" paint protectorant.
8. Complimentary membership in the cross country motor club.
9. BUDGET has "on the spot" financing available.
10. BUDGET gladly accepts trade-ins.

SO WHY PAY THE DIFFERENCE IF YOU CAN'T TELL THE DIFFERENCE?

Plus You can trade for pre-owned vehicles at Budget!

Changes coming: Caldera says

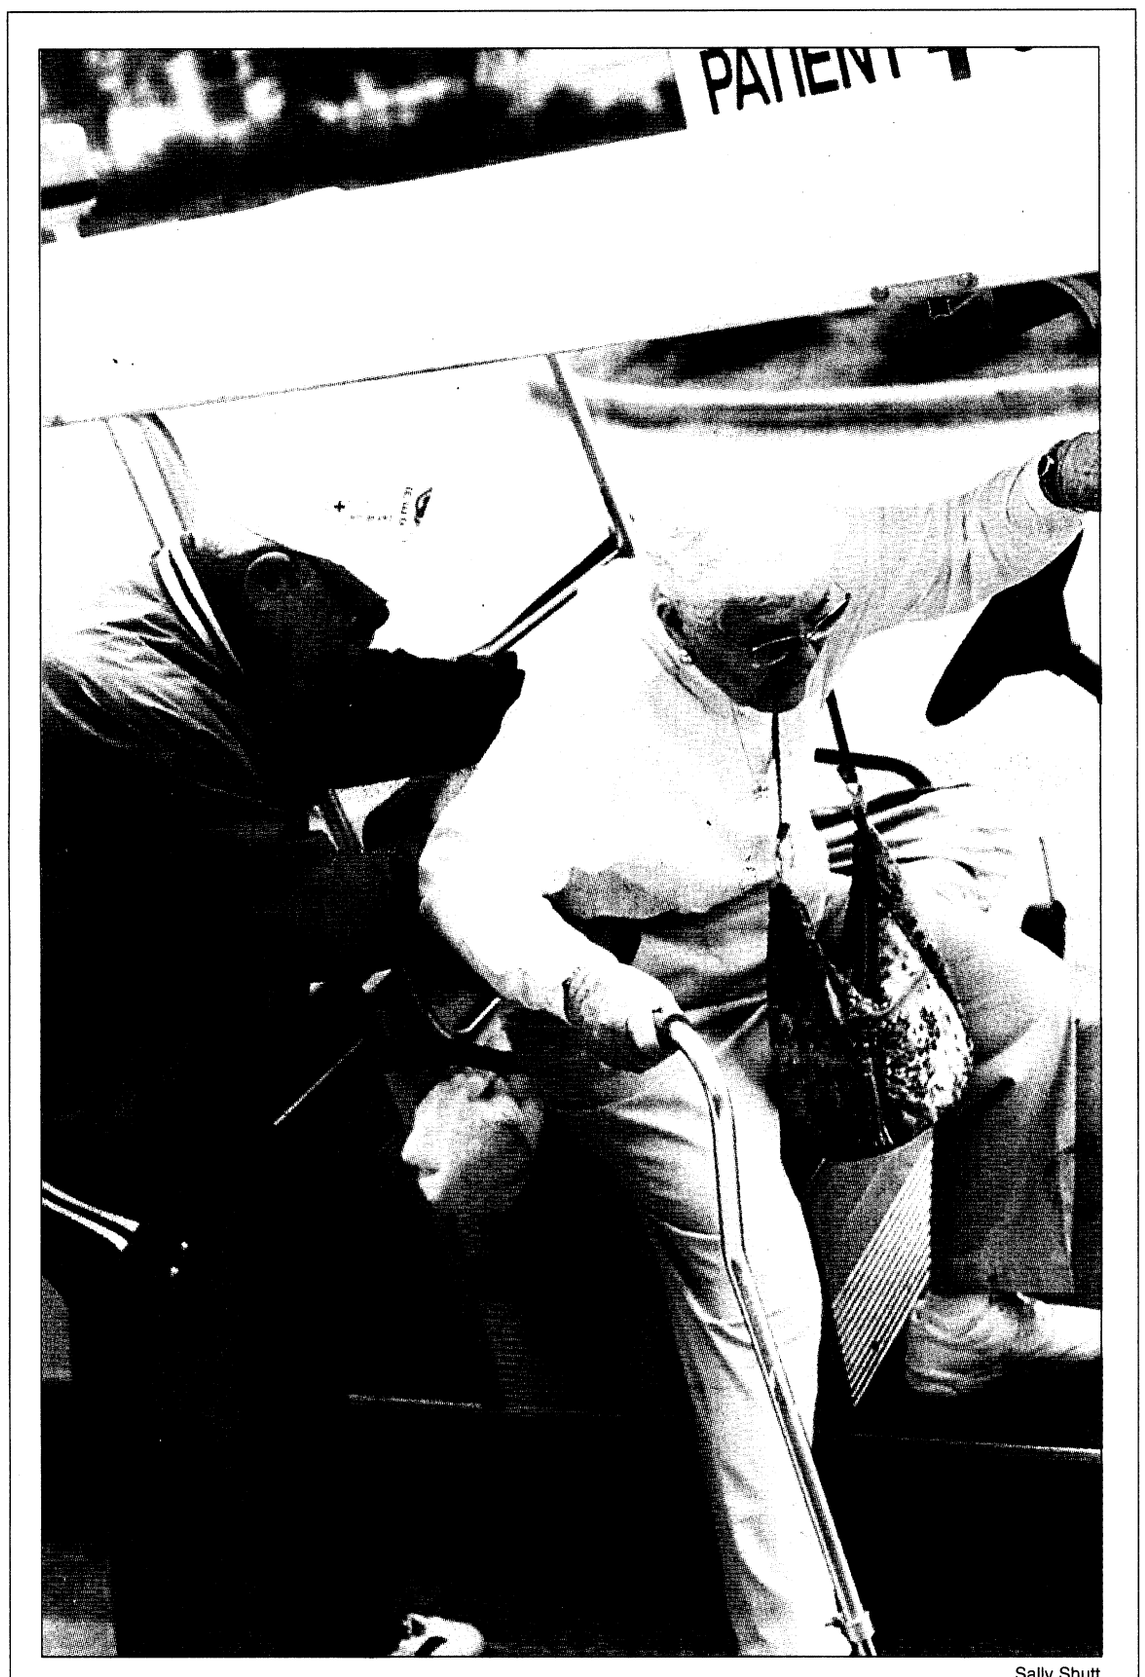
Brigades need to deploy quicker for world demands

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army needs to deploy quicker and change to meet new threats, Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera told a standing-room only crowd as he officially opened the Association of the U.S. Army's annual meeting Monday.

Caldera said change is needed so the Army can respond quickly to the changing world, meet the needs of the nation, to fight and win wars and face new challenges — terrorism threats, drug trafficking and weapons of mass destruction.

"Change is never easy. Change is difficult. It is threatening," Caldera told the AUSA members and said the Army stands at a crossroads to be prepared for humanitarian missions as well as for battle.



"We are committed to change," Caldera said. "We are committed to making the Army the force of choice for the nation."

Stating that change for the Army means a restructuring of the force, Caldera said, "We must be a full-spectrum force in which every unit is capable of contributing along every point of the spectrum from humanitarian assistance to high-intensity conflict."

In response to the view that the Army's heavy divisions are too slow, Caldera said, "The new timetables of this new world dictate that to be the relevant force of choice for the nation for emergency response, for deterrence by putting soldiers on the ground or for warfighting, we have to get there faster."

The secretary stopped short of outlining any restructuring changes but said the Army's Chief of Staff, Gen. Eric K. Shinseki, is a leader of tremendous ability who will lead the Army in its change.

He said Shinseki would unveil the Army's vision Tuesday during the annual meeting and said, "It is a bold vision. It is a new direction for a great Army. It is the right vision for America."

Retirees vital to local volunteering efforts

Emma Nelson sat on a cement bench outside Martin Army Community Hospital last week waiting for the patient shuttle to take her to her car. With the help of her walker and Roy Brooks, the shuttle driver, Nelson — who prefers to be called "Gussie"— boarded the modified golf cart and said, "I can't say enough good things about the shuttle."

Mattie L. Roberson climbed into a seat behind Nelson. At age 87, her knees aren't what they used to be.

"I ride now that I've gotten older," Roberson said.

And they are not alone. Two shuttles run in four-hour morning and afternoon shifts on weekdays throughout the Martin Army parking lots, and Brooks estimated that about 160 people catch rides during each four-hour period. His wife, Reva, pilots the other cart on Tuesday mornings.

The couple started volunteering about three years ago when the program started.

"I was in the Army for 35 years," Brooks, a retired colonel, said. "Now I'm giving back to the community."

The Red Cross program has 12 regular drivers, most of whom are retired military, and they could use more. One man drives three times a week.

Most of the passengers have heart problems, leg injuries or are mothers with small children, Brooks said.

"I enjoy driving very much because you can help someone who needs help," he added.

"This is a real satisfying job. The people with bad hearts or bad legs really appreciate a ride in and out. They wouldn't make it in without a ride."

Post prepares for ACOE visit

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For the last seven years Fort Benning has jumped into the quality ring and taken home the Chief of Staff, Army Communities of Excellence Award for Installation Excellence. This year proves no different as Fort Benning gears up to defend its title and go for win number eight.

It was recently announced Fort Benning is in the running for the 2000 ACOE Award and will receive an on-site visit from a Department of the Army ACOE evaluation team within the January to February time frame, said Sara Hodges, chief of the Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management.

During their visit, a five to six person evaluation team will spend approximately one week on Fort Benning visiting different agencies and organizations verifying information that was presented in Fort Benning's self assessment packet. The packet, which was submitted Aug. 16 is based on Army Performance Improvement Criteria and is broken down into seven categories. The categories are leadership, strategic planning, customer and market focus, information analysis, human resource focus, process management and business resolve.

It is important for everyone to be aware the evaluation team will be coming to Fort Benning and also have a heads up about the type of questions that will be asked, such as "what do you do, why do you do it, how well do you do it and how can you do it better," she said.

Hodges mentioned Fort Benning is competing against three Training and Doctrine Command installations, three Forces Command installations and a number of other Major Command, Reserve and National Guard installations as well.

She said she believes there is a great chance Fort Benning will win again because each year brings greater improvements.

"We have a great team of people here that all depend on each other," Hodges said. "The desire is there for continuous improvement and everyone is working toward that."

USAMU transfers ownership to USAREC

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

While the battle to gain new combatants to fill the ranks of today's Army has become an increasingly difficult task for recruiters, a group of Fort Benning Soldiers are taking aim to change that.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit assumed the recruiting nameplate Friday when the unit was transferred from the Combined Family Support Center to the U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

Although the transfer brings a new flag and unit patch to the world-class shooters that call the USAMU home, Brig. Gen. Billy Cooper, USAREC, said those are the only changes the Army's top gunners will face during and after the transition.

"Even though you changed patches and unit crests today, your primary mission is and always will be shooting to win," he said as he addressed the troops during the transfer ceremony. "Your professional image and credibility make you a recruiter just by nature."

That credibility is proven, he said, during the many travels the marksmanship unit makes annually throughout both the continental United States and throughout the world as well.

"It is the virtue of your travels that make you all great recruiters," he said. "Every time you go before a crowd and compete, you are initiating contacts that could turn into possible contracts."

While those competitions will remain the focus for the marksmen of the unit, Cooper said the recruitment designation does allow the unit to be more involved in the recruiting program.

Organized sports makes winners

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

During the past few years I have watched my son get sacked repeatedly in football and get up determined to succeed. I have seen my middle child struggle, at first, on an all-boy soccer team but blossom into a competitive forward under their challenge. And I have witnessed my teen-age daughter master her fear after crashing into a 4-inch wide balance beam headfirst. Yet through all the challenges and pain there is triumph — not necessarily in the win, but in the life lessons inadvertently learned while playing organized sports.

I believe as an athletic trainer, coach and parent that the benefits of participating in sports far outweigh the hardships a child may endure.

Organized sports teach many lessons — lessons that will carry over from childhood into their adult lives.

Positive interaction between people is a life lesson learned by children starting with the first practice and is most prevalent in team sports. No one likes a "me first" person. This holds true in sports and in life.

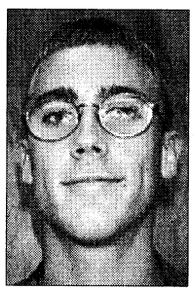
Each child comes to a team with different strengths and experiences, but each is still an individual. These individualists, with practice and time, will either learn to work together with the others and transform into a team, or the team will ultimately fail. Children learn quickly that they must be cooperative, courteous and respectful in order to be accepted as part of the team. Players learn to conform for the sake of the mission whether they personally like their teammates or not.

In addition to learning teamwork, organized sports teach discipline and commitment. Parent support and consistency directly affects how the child grasps the true meaning of these words. Occasionally one of our three extremely sports-minded children "doesn't feel like going to practice." Unless the child is sick, our answer is consistent and unwavering, "You made the choice to play and regardless of how you feel on this particular day you have made a commitment not only to yourself but also to your coach and team." Well, some parents will say to that "What if the child has a lot of homework?" Homework is not a reason to skip out on a commitment; however, it presents an opportunity for the child to learn another life lesson, time management. In general, parents who do not support the child's commitment by letting them skip practice or not getting them to practice are teaching the child a standard — that it's okay to quit on commitments.

Participation in sports also accentuates a healthy life-style and is the primary way to introduce the concept of physical fitness to children.

There is nothing better for a child's growing body than proper nutrition and exercise. Children who participate in sports develop healthier life style attitudes and feel good about themselves. When healthier adults lead active lives, there is less illness, a better self-image and more positive life experiences.

Children involved in sports experience "real-world challenges." They learn to overcome hardships and how to accept success or defeat gracefully.



These life-lessons learned from organized sports can help prepare children for competition in business and between co-workers in our highly competitive society.

Although a few overzealous coaches and obsessive parents give sports at a young age a negative hue, for the most part, playing organized sports is healthy for children and just plain fun.

Y2K craziness is just a bunch of hype

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

You can't walk into any store or open any magazine today without seeing something about the coming of the new millennium

What a bunch of hype!

I mean let's not kid ourselves. All of these computer programs "designed" to make your computer Y2K compliant and these books telling you how you can be safe when the clock strikes midnight are nothing more than corporate America's way of making a buck. As a matter of fact, I bet the entrepreneur who first thought of this millennium scheme is laughing all the way to the bank every time one of those pseudo-help articles are scanned on the check-out counter.

You know I wonder how much revenue this whole scare-a-thon has turned for those big-wigs since this scam started. Gee ... if we could only raise half the money for a worthwhile cause just think where we would be.

The big Y2K problem is a little scary though. I know, I have no clue how my computer works, or if it will crash when the calendar rolls over to 2000. The big businesses know this and prey upon us of little cyber-sense. But I am not going to fall prey to their Orson Wells-type hype.

If you remember, Wells did the radio spiel about alien invaders taking over Earth, and a whole bunch of people believed him.

You know why they believed him? Because people have never seen space invaders, and they had no reason not to believe him. Sounds kind of like what is going on now with the whole Y2K thing, huh?

I guess this shouldn't really surprise us any. I mean think about it. None of us have ever lived through a millennium change before. And even if we had, although that rates in the possibility range of zero to none, there weren't computers around during the last big change to worry about. So we are a little like those who believed the space invader story. I think it is called blind faith, isn't it?

Now some people think this whole millennium thing is even bigger than the computer crashings. They think the world, as we know it will, come to an end.

Now let's think about that, shall we?

How in the heck would you come up with that logic? There are no big signs that the it's the end of the world as we know it, although that was a line in a R.E.M. song I remember. Some of these loons say the signs of imminent danger are all apparent.

They say there are big fires here and floods over there, people dying of plagues here and people being born addicts over there. All of which they call signs of the coming of the end. Ya know, they do have a point. But when has all of that not been true.

There are always going to be people dying, and there are always going to be fires and floods. Let's not kid ourselves, this has nothing to do with the millennium change.

So now I have pretty much run down all of the Chicken Littles that think the sky is going to fall when the calendar changes, I guess it may be time for me to just come out and say it.

It will not matter.

That is right. When the calendar changes, nothing will be different except it may seem a little weird to write '00 when you jot down the date. There's not going to be any mass invasion by some millennium bug, and there is not going to be any more death and destruction than there normally is on a typical New Year's Eve.

And if you are looking for advice on how to handle the big change, here is some you can take to the bank. Well, not really. If you do they may just look at you and laugh. Any way here it goes.

Enjoy yourself, and when the home computer crashes, call tech support. You won't be the only one on the line.

And if you still don't believe me and want to call and order a program to solve your Y2K problem, be sure to give me a call as soon as you finish calling in your order.

I have some ocean front property in Arizona I can make you a great deal on.

How to get your news in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

We get a lot of feedback from readers, and we appreciate your letters, story ideas and comments. We appreciate the positive comments, and we do our best to address the negative ones.

As Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, we are dedicated to giving you the most complete coverage possible. In order to do this, we rely on members of our audience to keep us informed about their units' or directorates' activities.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Also, you may leave stories, film, photos for publication in The Bayonet's drop box located in the Information Office, Room 111, Infantry Hall, Building 4. The deadline for items left in the drop box is noon Friday, also.

Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road if desired. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

Stringers

Stringers are people belonging to various units who write about and take photos of unit activities for The Bayonet.

Without stringers, our coverage of unit activities would be decreased. Unit commanders who would like to arrange for a stringer should call The Bayonet's command information officer at 545-2201.

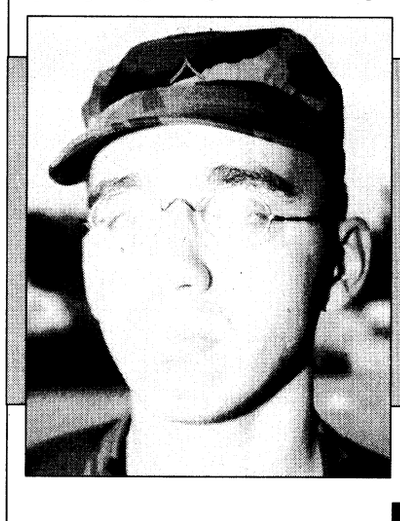
Letters

The Bayonet welcomes letters to the editor and readers' responses to the paper's content. Letters may be typed, or handwritten, and must include name and telephone number.

Our policy is to staff letters to the appropriate directorate or activity and to run their response at the same time we run your letter.

Also, names may be withheld upon request; however, in order for your letter to be considered for publication, you must include your name and daytime telephone number. Letters received without the author's name and telephone number will not be published. We reserve the right to edit all letters.

Complaints



If you have a complaint, question or comment about The Bayonet, call the editor at 545-2201.

Address

We are located in Infantry Hall, Room 606. Our mailing address is: The Bayonet, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905. Our fax number is 682-0095, and the e-mail address is: fbbayonet@mindspring.com.

Infantry Band swings into action

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

From marching in ceremonies on post to playing swing music at Callaway Gardens' Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival, the U.S. Army Infantry Center band performs about 450 jobs a year. (That number doesn't include the funerals where buglers from the band play taps.)

Chief Warrant Officer Paul Clark is the bandmaster — and, because this is an Army unit, the company commander.

"We are just like other Soldiers," Clark said. "We get up and do physical training, and then we come to work at 8:30 a.m. We have a weekly training schedule that has to be worked around all of our musical commitments.

"I'm just like any other person who wears a green suit — who's a support person — I'm a Soldier first, but I also play a horn."

Spc. David Federico, a drummer, recited the questions other Soldiers ask when they discover he is in the band.

"Is that all you do? Do you have to do PT? Do you know how to shoot weapons?"

Sgt. 1st Class George Barrett has answered all the same questions.

"A lot of people are surprised we know so much about Soldiering," Barrett, a trumpet player, said. "If something does happen and we have to go, we are Soldiers first and then musicians. We know all the basic Soldier tasks and skills we need to know."

While the Army has trained the band members in how to be Soldiers, their musical skills were already in place before they joined the service.

"The Army band is the only job that requires you to be proficient before you join," Clark said.

Staff Sgt. Jennifer Grundy, the daughter of a high school band director, plays oboe, bassoon and viola. She was majoring in music education in college when she started to question her career choice.

"I was really worn out from all the education courses," she said. "I realized I could go in the Army and get paid to play music."

That was 13 years ago, and Grundy still enjoys her job, especially at Fort Benning with its large number of graduation ceremonies. The band plays every Thursday and Friday morning for the Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade graduations.

"I like the fact that I know every Thursday and Friday what I am going to be doing," Grundy said.

The 37-member unit has seven different performance groups — ceremonial or marching, concert, jazz, Dixieland and, woodwind quintet, brass quintet and jazz combo.

All 37 members perform in the marching and concert bands. Rehearsal time has been added to their schedule in preparation for a Christmas concert planned in December.

The 17-member jazz band recently regrouped after a two-year absence.

"We didn't have a bass player or a guitar player, and without those two we can't have a jazz band," Clark said.

The band's first priority is to support Fort Benning, then the community. Requests come in from as far away as Florida and the band must decide whether or not they can support the function according to Army regulations, and if so, what performance group best suits the occasion. The band always performs in uniform.

Charles L. Butler
Members of the Infantry Band perform during a recent change of command ceremony on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

"We are representing Fort Benning and the Army through our music," Clark said.

The band also supports recruiting efforts.

"We are doing this more and more as the Army has fallen short on recruiting," Clark explained. "Recruiters need gimmicks to get into the schools, and they can use us to do that."

If the band is performing before the whole student body, then the jazz band might play. However, if the performance is for music students, the brass combo will go. A recruiter is always on hand to answer any questions about joining.

Clark shares with young musicians that being in the Army band is a good deal.

"I tell them that in the Army— even though you have to do PT, cut your hair and train a lot — you get to play your instrument, and that's a good job."

Fort Benning's Jazz Band will play Saturday at 3 p.m. during the Arts on the River celebration sponsored by the Columbus Artists' Guild. The festival, running from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m. at 10th Street and Bay Avenue on the Riverwalk.

Army couples share more than love of music while in the band

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The specifics vary, but the stories of six Fort Benning Soldiers sound surprisingly similar. A love of music and a chance to play and get paid prompted them to join the Army Band program and eventually find another love, their spouses.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center's band is home to three married couples. (A fourth pair is expected to arrive soon from another post.)

Spc. Vannessa and Sgt. 1st Class George Barrett met at Fort Hood, Texas, and have been married three years. The couple and their two-year-old son welcomed the latest addition, another boy, to the family Sept. 9.

When she returns from maternity leave in a few weeks, Vannessa rejoins the concert and marching bands as a flutist. George plays trumpet in those bands, as well as the jazz band. He is also in charge of the band's bugler team.

"Everywhere I've been there has always been a married couple in the band," George Barrett said.

"And I've attended my share of band weddings," added Staff Sgt. Robert Grundy, one of two drum majors for the band. The other is his wife, Staff Sgt. Jennifer Grundy.

"In the band, the band knows the band," he said.

The Gundys met at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and have been married eight years. In addition to their duties in the marching and concert bands, Jennifer plays the oboe in the woodwind quintet and trio. Robert plays the clarinet in the Dixieland band and alto sax in the jazz band.

Larger installations like Fort Hood have two bands, allowing spouses to be in different units. For that reason, band couples often request assignment to Fort Hood or to the Army School of Music in Norfolk, Va.

At posts with only one band, spouses are prohibited from serving together in the same musical section (for example, woodwinds) or performance groups. This alleviates chain of command problems.

"We are in different groups, and we don't work in the same office," Robert Grundy said.

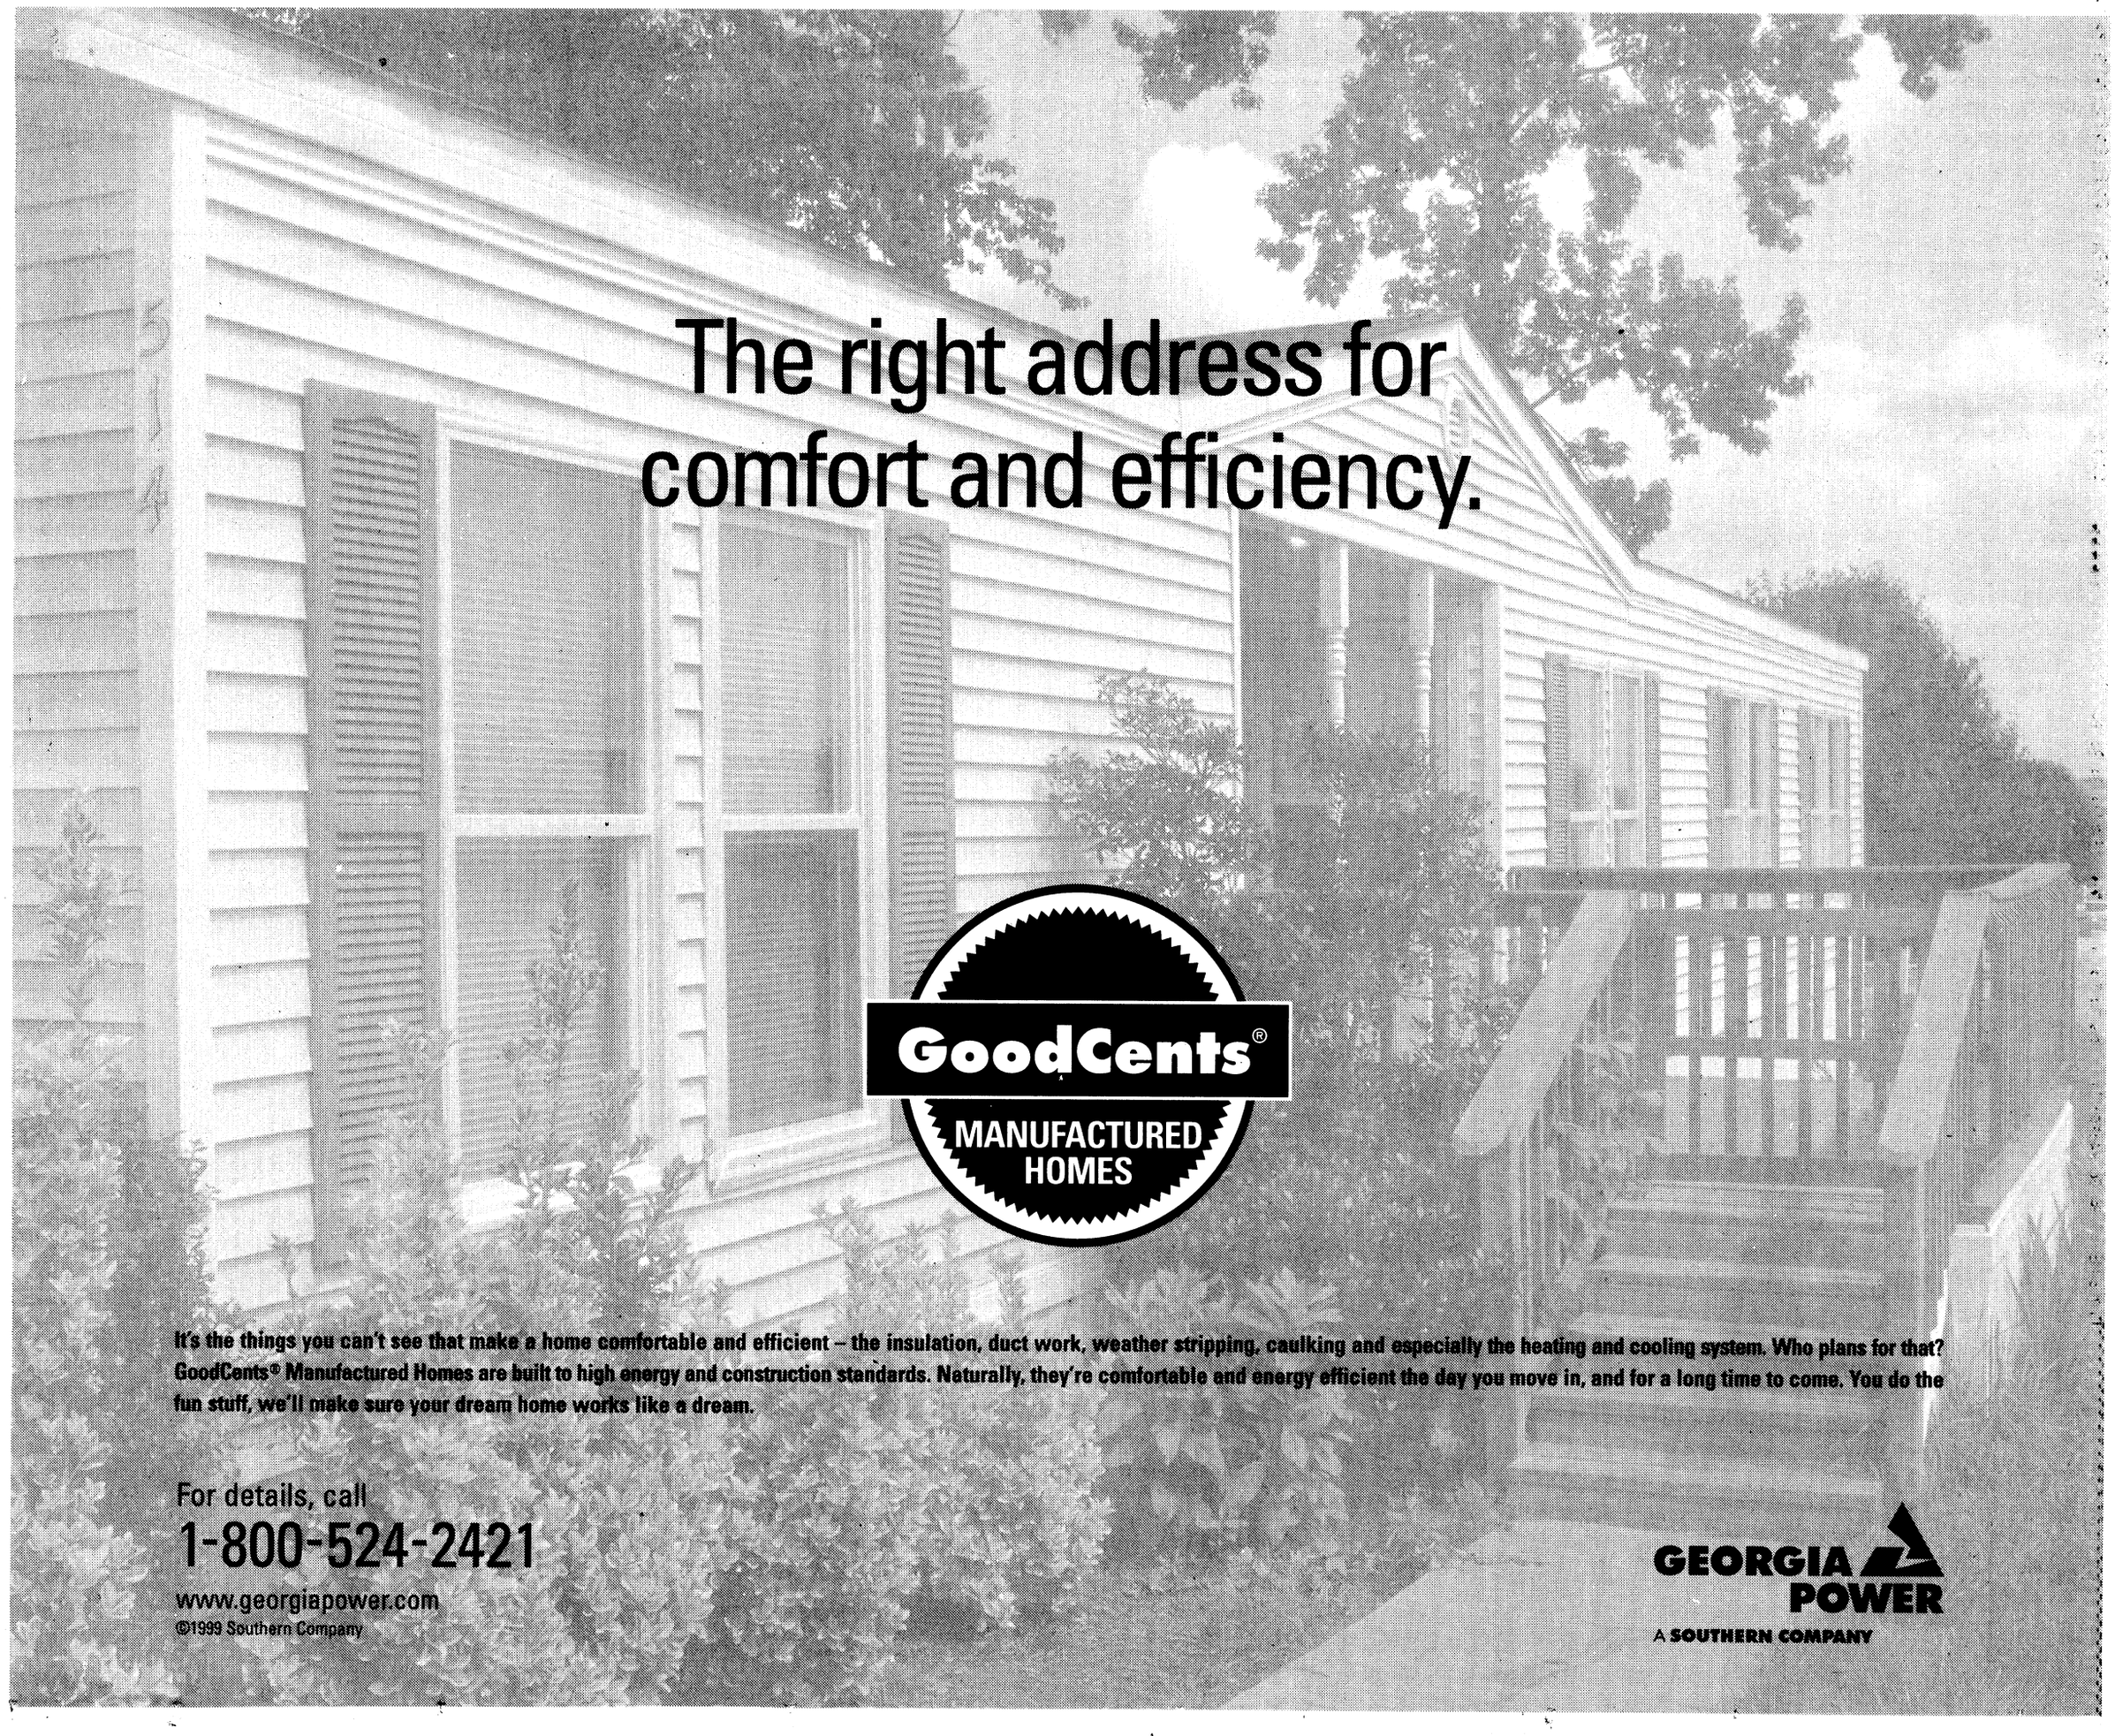
Spcs. Hollie and David Federico are the newlyweds in the band. They will celebrate their first anniversary in November. She plays trombone; he is a drummer.

Both started playing instruments in elementary school and participated in high school bands.

"I knew about military bands, and then a recruiter called and wouldn't stop until I joined," she said.

"I thought it was a great opportunity to play my trombone all the time."

"If you had seen me in high school, you would never have thought I would have joined the Army," David said. "I had hair down my back."



After performing several times a week, not to mention hours and hours of rehearsal, these musicians still take their work home.

"We used to live in an apartment, but we decided to buy a house so I could practice at home on the drums," David said.

Music in the home is a given with these families. Jennifer Grundy's father was a high school band director, and three of his five children are Army band musicians. The Grundys' three daughters haven't started music lessons yet, but they love to sing.

Any questions people might have about how the couples handle spending so much time together are dismissed by the Soldiers.

"I can talk about work on the way home and he understands exactly where I am coming from," Jennifer Grundy said.

International military students participate in tour

Capt. Daniel A. Fickel
International Student Training Detachment

Thirteen international military students from nine countries participated in a Southeastern U.S. Information Program Tour.

The students, training in the Infantry Officer Basic Course 6-99, visited various culturally and historically significant sites in Montgomery, Birmingham and Atlanta from Sept. 13-16.

The tour provided students with an opportunity to examine U.S. government institutions, the judicial system and ethnic, minority, and civil rights issues.

The students stopped at the Civil Rights Memorial in Montgomery, where a black granite obelisk records milestones of the Civil Rights Movement. The monument served as a powerful reminder of how far America has come with civil rights and of the sacrifices so many made for today's freedoms.

> "The prison was too clean to be true. I really noticed the waxed concrete floors and the clean prison uniforms."
> — 1st Lt. Rageh Gharzeddeen
> International Student Training Detachment

"I learned more about the civil rights movement and Martin Luther King Jr., and that was probably the most important thing for me overall," said 2nd Lt. Vahur Joesalu of the Estonian Army. "I really didn't know much about the movement before."

At the Carter Museum and Library, the students gained an additional perspective on the campaign for civil and human rights around the world.

Capt. Ismail Al-Farah, from Jordan, pointed out an exhibit in the museum displaying a gift presented to the Carters from the people of Jordan.

President and Rosalynn Carter spent years campaigning for peace and human rights around the world, and the museum's exhibits held special significance for the Middle-Eastern students whose countries still abide by President Carter's Camp David Peace Accords.

"Presidents Carter and Clinton are my favorite American presidents," said Jordanian 1st Lt. Suliman Ashraf. "I saw the special gift the people of Jordan gave to the president."

The last stop of the tour was at the Jackson Diagnostic and Classification Center, a maximum security prison where the Georgia Department of Corrections evaluates new prisoners, holds selected prisoners for the course of their sentence and secures and executes death-row inmates.

John Harper, a special assistant to the warden, spoke extensively on prisoner's rights as the students walked among the prisoners, reviewed prison policies, and even took the students to see Georgia's electric chair.

"The tour was very good," said 1st Lt. Rageh Gharzeddeen, from Lebanon, "and (Harper) answered all of our questions. It was the most exciting part of the tour for me."

Gharzeddeen said he was surprised by the prisoners' excellent treatment and discipline, and the prison's cleanliness.

"The prison was too clean to be true. I really noticed the waxed concrete floors and the clean prison uniforms."

The Southeastern Tour for IOBC Class 6-99 provided the international military students the opportunity to see a new side of America's history and culture.

Each student took away a new appreciation for the Civil Rights Movement in the United States, learned how American institutions work for peace and defend human rights around the world, and saw a particular reflection of American society through the prison system.

"I had a great time," said Joesalu, "and I learned a lot about America."

The trip highlighted elements of American society the international students might not normally see during their demanding IOBC training regimen, and it greatly enhanced their appreciation and understanding for the American way of life.

Volunteers: Retirees give time back to community retiree volunteers who are making a difference in the community.

Lori Lane, Thrift Shop manager, has 12 retirees who work each of the 10 days a month the store is open.

"I could not run this operation without the volunteers," she said. Their duties include consigning and tagging items, typing information into the computers and helping decorate the shop.

Lester O'Riley, 80, has volunteered for the last 16 years. He has built cabinets and display shelves, and if an item doesn't quite work, he has been known to repair it.

He retired from the Army after 22 years and then worked 17 years as a civil servant at the Army Education Center. It was his wife, Ruth, a thrift shop volunteer, who got him started working in the store.

"We both feel obligated to give something back to the community," O'Riley said.

All across the country military retirees are participating in volunteer programs benefiting the military community.

Friede McDonald, Fort Benning's Retirement Services Officer, clipped a newspaper article about 40 retirees in Big Bend, Fla., who run a prescription service for area residents living 125 miles away from the nearest military installation, Tyndall Air Force Base near Panama City, Fla.

The 10-year-old program — the volunteer program of the year at the base — serves 1,700 military veterans and their spouses. Prescriptions are called into the local armory, typed into a computer, and once a week someone drives to the Tyndall pharmacy to pick up the medications. People can pick up their refills at the armory and save themselves a long drive to Panama City.

"This is what our area retirees near Tallahassee are doing on a volunteer basis," McDonald said.

"Retirees are very vital to the military community."

About 500 retirees are expected on post today for Fort Benning's 17th annual Retiree Open House. They will have a chance to hear updated information on their benefits during a country fair at the Officers' Club from 12:30-2 p.m.

Appointments for retirees will not be required at many agencies including the ID card section and legal assistance. Martin Army Community Hospital is sponsoring a health fair in the Main Exchange mall from 12:30-2 p.m. Dental, vision, glaucoma, cholesterol and blood pressure screenings will be given, as well as flu shots.

USAMU: Trades patches

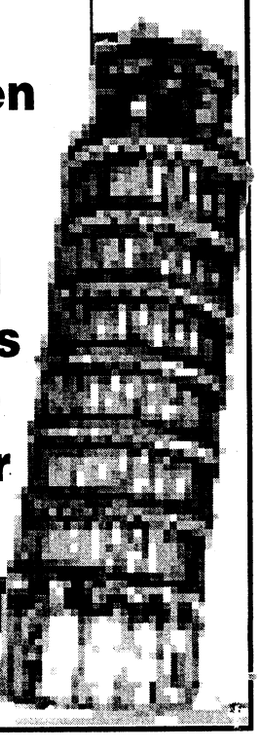
"Previously, the unit worked with us as much as possible," he said. "But many times, the funding wasn't there. Now the unit falls under recruiting command, we can build the TDY costs into our annual budget."



Appearances courtesy of the recruiting command-funded TDY will allow the new shooting recruiters to boost recruiting in any region they compete in, he said.

"The USAMU has a great story to tell and by being part of recruiting command, we can make that story heard nation-wide," he said.

AG commander speaks at Hispanic Heritage Luncheon

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

"A Vision for the 21st Century" was the theme of the annual Hispanic Heritage Month luncheon held at the Officer's Club Oct. 6.

"During Hispanic Heritage Month we reflect on a history of a people who were a part of this land long before the birth of the U.S.," said Sgt. 1st Class Sylvia J. Contreres, equal opportunity advisor for the 36th Engineer Group (Construction), during the opening remarks. "Like many cultures, Hispanic Americans have a rich history and great diversity — this diversity has brought variety and richness for America and has strengthened our national character with invaluable perspectives, experiences and values."

Lopez-Fix

Guest speaker, Lt. Col. Debra Lopez-Fix, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade commander, spoke to 250 luncheon guests about the contributions and sacrifices of Hispanic Americans and how they overcame adversity while establishing a tradition of dedicated service to the nation.

"A visible reminder of how far we have come is evident in my birthplace, Elgin, Texas, where during World War II Hispanic American sacrifices were often unheralded and unrecognized by their own countrymen," Fix said.

She said her grandparents and relatives were buried in a cemetery on the outskirts of town, which included Soldiers who were denied burial in the town cemetery because of the color of their skin.

"As late as the Korean War Soldiers killed in action were still being buried in segregated cemeteries across the country."

Fix talked about a small Midwestern town in Illinois where 22 families living on the same street sent 57 of their sons off to battlefields around the world during WWII.

"The street was renamed Hero Street," she said. "The Department of Defense stated that this street contributed more men to the Armed Forces during WWII, Korea and Vietnam than any other area of this size in the U.S."

In her closing remarks, Fix said that as we approach the new millennium remember what brought Hispanic Americans through the last century and " ... strive to make dreams a reality for our children."

Rangers compete for title

Sgt. 1st Class Ron Link
Ranger Training Brigade

In the tradition of the Best Ranger Competition, the Ranger Training Brigade conducted a four-day competition Oct. 5-8 to determine which support element would get the bragging rights as Best Ranger Support Element.

The Ranger Support Elements have the unique mission of acting as the opposing force in each phase of Ranger School.

"This competition builds esprit de corps throughout the brigade, as well as within each camp's RSE platoon," said Master Sgt. Jed Hawkland, the NCOIC of the Best RSE contest.

"This was basically a come-as-you-are competition," said Staff Sgt. Michael Watson, the platoon sergeant of the 17 men competing from Ranger School's Mountain Camp. Watson said that because of mission requirements supporting Ranger School, "we had very little opportunity to train up specifically for this."

The lack of competition-specific training didn't seem to hurt the two squads from Camp Merrill, though. The mountain RSE team placed first in grenades, knot tying, radio operations, weapons assembly, the 12-mile road march and the Darby Queen obstacle course.

The squads from 6th Ranger Training Battalion in Florida had a disadvantage in that this is the first time they competed in the competition. "Last year, our guys were involved in a bad traffic accident on the way up to Fort Benning. There were some severe injuries among our team members and we weren't able to compete," said 1st Lt. Thomas Vorpahl, platoon leader of the Florida camp team.

Despite their lack of experience, the swamp RSE took first place in the mystery event, which was creating a squad sector sketch, and they placed second in the bayonet assault course, grenades and the Darby Queen obstacle course.

The overall winner of the 1999 Best RSE Competition was the 4th RTB for the second year in a row. They took first place in the APFT, the 5-mile run, bayonet assault course and land navigation. The Fort Benning team also scored highest at Malone 18, the only automated moving target rifle range in the Army. Although 5th RTB won more events, 4th RTB accumulated 505 total points, outscoring the competition by a margin of 34 points.

"This competition is designed to bring all of our RSE platoons together, much like the annual Ranger Rendezvous," said Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, Ranger Training Brigade sergeant major. "These Soldiers have given 100 percent and then some. Every one of them gave their very best, fighting on to complete the ranger mission."

The second annual Fred M. Shepherd RSE Competition brought squads together from the three Ranger camps located at Camp Rogers on Fort Benning, Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., and Camp Rudder at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., to Camp Rogers to compete for the trophy named in honor of retired Sgt. Maj. Fred Shepherd, a three time recipient of the Combat Infantryman's Badge and member of the Ranger Hall of Fame.

Ranger Training Brigade medics earn coveted badge

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For four medics from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, Friday marked a day of relief and celebration as each stepped forward to be pinned with a badge that would set them apart from their peers — the Expert Field Medical Badge.

After three weeks of training and testing in the 75th Ranger Regiment's EFMB course at Hunter Army Airfield in Savannah, Ga., Spc. Jansen York, Spc. Kevin Vidal, Sgt. Shane Waite and Staff Sgt. Michael Holloway can now say they are among the best medics in the Army.

The EFMB course, which is both physically and mentally demanding requires a medic to learn and test on a number of Soldier and medical skills, according to Waite.

Along with these skills, medics are tested on a variety of grueling tasks to include an emergency medical training lane with moulaged victims, a 12-mile road march in three hours, day and night land navigation courses, patrols and a litter obstacle course. They are also required to take a written exam.

But what sets the course apart is the fact that there are no second chances. Simply one "no-go" in any event means a medic can kiss the badge goodbye.

Because the course was operated by the 75th Ranger Regiment, it incorporated ranger-style training and was much more intense, Waite said. He commented that the litter obstacle course was one of the hardest parts of the class for him.

"The litter obstacle course was a smoker because you did it right after the patrol," Waite said. "At that point you had been up for about 24 to 30 hours straight, and you had been walking all night long in water up to your chest. You have your ruck on and you're all wet. When you get there, you have to drag a litter with a 150-pound guy all over Hunter Army Air Field. Then you have to do the litter obstacle course, so it definitely was a smoker."

Waite, who has been to the EFMB course two times before, said it is a great feeling to finally have his badge.

"Wherever you go, everyone knows you have it and right away they look at you and know you are a high-speed medic."

For York, one of the benefits of attending the course with three of his buddies was the support and extra push they were able to give one another.

"It always helps when you have friends from your unit to help pull you through if you are sucking on a road march or something," York said. "They say, 'Keep going' or, 'we're going to make fun of you when we get home.'"

For Sgt. 1st Class Mark Rasdall, platoon sergeant, it was just as exciting for him to see all four of his Soldiers successfully complete the course and return as full-fledged EFMB wearers, as it was for them to get it.

"To send four Soldiers, or regardless of how many you send (to the EFMB course) and have them all graduate, it's a really great feeling because it's rare to get a 100-percent success rate at the EFMB," Rasdall said. "It just says a lot about the train-up they received and the training their leaders provided them."

Rasdall said this is the first time he has sent a group of Soldiers to the EFMB course and had a 100 percent success rate.

He said for them to come back with the EFMB demonstrates to their unit and fellow Soldiers' self confidence and competence in their job.

"It's about being 'top doc,'" Rasdall said. "It just means you are one of the best in your field."

Center prepares personnel for deployments around world

Maj. Elizabeth S. Henderson
CONUS Replacement Center

Since December 1995, the CONUS Replacement Center has been the last stop for many who are on their way to Germany, Italy, United Kingdom, Spain, Bosnia, Croatia, the Former Republic of Yugoslavia, Hungary, Kuwait and other countries.

One unit from Rochester, Minn., preparing for an overseas flight is the 79th Military Police Company (Combat Support) in support of Operation Joint Guard.

Currently preparing to deploy to Germany to perform community law enforcement duties, 110 Soldiers of the 79th MP Co. are proud to again answer the call to active duty.

"We are ready to go and eager to do what we can to support the U.S. Army Europe assets that are busy with commitments throughout the Balkans," said Capt. Jason Hogie, commander of the 79th MP Co.

"Our Soldiers embrace opportunities such as this," said Hogie. "We take great pride in our mission and the proud history of our organization."

Since its participation in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, elements of this unit have been deployed to Japan in support of Exercise Yama Sakura Guatemala for Exercise Fuertes Caminos North and to Bahrain in support of Operation Inherent Fury.

Activated at Fort Meade, Md., Aug. 5, 1917 as part of the 79th MP Co.'s Division, the company is one of the oldest MP units in the Army, serving in World War I as well as the European Theater in World War II.

In recognition of its proud service at Normandy and the ensuing allied drive across France and into the heart of Nazi Germany, the unit was awarded two French Croix de Guerres with palm, the French Croix de Guerre Fourragere and the Meritorious Unit Commendation. The 79th was awarded with its second Meritorious Unit Commendation at the end of the Gulf War in 1991.

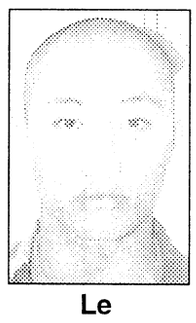
Benning holds seminar

Capt. Matthew M. Lyons
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Fort Benning Leadership Seminar is a pre-command course designed to prepare company-grade officer spouses for their role as a commander's spouse.

The seminar offers leadership tools to the participants to aid them in their role as the commander's spouse. It also demonstrates the type of personal interaction the spouse will have with Soldiers and their spouses in the unit.

It is not a 'how-to' guide for family support groups but does offer information that is useful in managing a family support group. Topics covered during the seminar include group dynamics, values, effective communication, situational leadership, conflict resolution, coping with trauma, stress and FSG management. The topics are covered in large group lectures and small group discussions. The co-presidents of the seminar are Mary Ellen Keene and Melissa Helmick, and it is conducted approximately four times during the year. The seminar focuses on wives from the Infantry Captain's Career Course, the Infantry Officer Basic Course and permanent party company-grade spouses.



The seminar has been conducted at Fort Benning since 1984 and draws much of its material from the pre-command spouse course conducted at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., for battalion and brigade command.

The next seminar is from 9 a.m. to noon Oct. 25-29. On the fourth day of the seminar, Lt. Col. Gary N. Daniel, commander of 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, conducts a briefing on officer career development. The Leadership Seminar is conducted at Building 75. Enrollment forms are provided during ICCC and IOBC orientation briefing and are disseminated throughout post for permanent party personnel.

For more information on the Leadership Seminar, call Mary Ellen Keene at 685-2266 or Melissa Helmick at 687-8583.

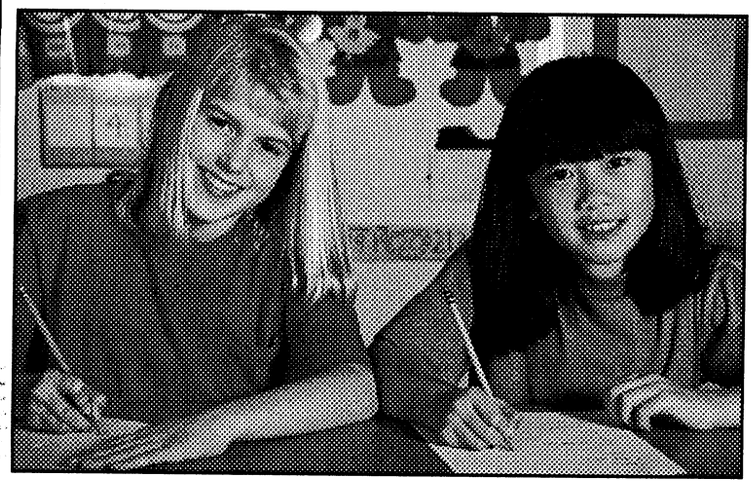
Army Career and Alumni Program

The primary role of the Army Career and Alumni Program is to satisfy public law that mandates Soldiers receive preseparation counseling in order to fully understand the benefits they have earned as a result of serving in the military.



All Soldiers are required to receive preseparation counseling between 90 and 180 days prior to separation or retirement from the military. This is accomplished during the three-day ACAP preseparation process.

Public law also mandates that Soldiers complete and sign DD Form 2648, the Preseparation Checklist, which outlines how to put together an individual transition plan, the effects of a career change, employment assistance, relocation assistance, education and training, health and life insurance, finances, reserve affiliation, and VA disability.

The signed checklist documents compliance with public law and must be filed in each separating Soldier's permanent personnel records prior to clearing Fort Benning.

DoD students top charts in testing

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

According to a recent press release from the Department of Defense Education Activity, DoD domestic school students topped the charts in the 1998 National Assessment of Educational Progress Test on writing.

DDESS scored 160 while the nationwide average was 148. Georgia scored 146 and Alabama scored 144.

The school system also had the highest percentage of students in the nation scoring in the "Advanced" category of the exam.

Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum and assessment for Fort Benning Schools, said the scores just prove that installations schools are up to the challenge of providing top-notch education.

"I think that our students and teachers are working at a high level of instruction for higher order thinking skills and that makes a difference in how they test," said Einhorn.

While numbers for Fort Benning schools are not available, Einhorn said she was confident that the students did well.

She added, she was pleased with the number of Fort Benning students testing in the higher levels.

"We had six percent test at the advanced level and 31 at the proficient level, compared to one percent in the advanced level and 24 percent in the proficient level in Georgia," said Einhorn.

DDESS minority students also performed exceptionally well, according to the release.

Eighth-grade African-American students ranked first when compared to their peers across the nation. DDESS African American students scored 150 points, in comparison to the 130-point national average and four points above the top state scores for Texas. Georgia scored 132 and Alabama scored 130.

Eighth-grade Hispanic students scored first place with 153 points as compared to their peers nationwide of 129. Virginia, the top scoring state earned 146 points. Georgia and Alabama both scored 125.

The National Assessment of Educational Progress is the only test of academic performance administered nationally, and this 1998 test is the first of its kind to access writing ability.

Army Soldier Show has long history

Harriet E. Rice
Community and Family Support Center

The modern Army Soldier Show originated in 1983 as an outgrowth of several Soldier shows existing in various Army commands with Soldier talent selected from world-wide competition. In 1998, the Army celebrated the 80th anniversary of the debut of the first Army Soldier Show in 1918 and the 15th anniversary of the modern version.

The motto, mission and philosophy of the show were established during World War I by Sgt. Israel Beilin (Irving Berlin): "Entertainment for the Soldier, by the Soldier." The first Army Soldier Show, Yip Yip Yaphank, conceived and directed by Sgt. Irving Berlin, appeared on Broadway in 1918.

The Army Soldier Show was reincarnated during World War II on Broadway under the title This is the Army, written, directed and produced by Irving Berlin.

Cast and crew were all members of U.S Army Special Services Company. The 1943 film version featured a military cast starring Ronald Reagan, Gene Kelly and Joe Lewis.

The modern U.S. Army Soldier Show tours the continental United States and one overseas command each year, alternating between Korea and Europe.

The 1998 cast traveled more than 20,000 miles by bus and air, performing 115 shows at 78 locations in 22 states, Germany, Belgium, Italy as well as for troops in Bosnia for more audiences totaling more than 100,000.

New cast members are selected each year. Aspiring cast and crew submit application packages that include videotapes, biographies, photographs, and letters of recommendation from their commanders. Soldiers must have an outstanding record in their units as well as demonstrate musicality, movement, stage presence, and versatility.

In addition to learning choreography, performers memorize more than 50 songs ranging from current country, R&B, rap and rock chart-toppers to Broadway tunes, movie themes, oldies, soul, and patriotic songs combined in solos, duets, group and high-energy, fast-paced production numbers that make up the show.

This year the cast will stage 119 performances in 24 states and 63 locations, including seven Army posts in the Republic of Korea.

The Soldier Show is not funded with taxpayer dollars, but with nonappropriated funds or "Soldier dollars" generated from business programs of morale, welfare and recreation and with generous corporate sponsorships.

Fort Benning will get its own taste of the Soldier show when it makes a stop at the Sand Hill Theater at 7 p.m. tonight.

The show is free, and tickets aren't required to enter the theater. Cameras and video recorders aren't allowed in during the performance.

For more information about the show, call 545-1248.

Meeting benefits community

Spc. Michael Maddox

On an installation the size of Fort Benning, it can sometimes be tough knowing where to go to get information when you need it.

That is unless you stop by the Fort Benning Newcomer's Orientation briefing sponsored by Army Community Services the second Friday of each month at 8:45 a.m.

The orientation, which is held at Building 359, provides a great opportunity for Soldiers and family members to get face to face with post organizations, according to Marsha Collins, relocation program manager at Army Community Services.

"It's basically for newcomers to familiarize them with post services and facilities," she said. "If they are new to this installation, it's a good way to find out about post at a one-stop shop."

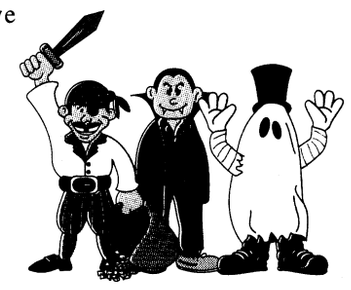
Collins said there are many reasons Soldiers and family members should stop by the briefings.

"They get all of the information, and especially, if they've had problems, they would have a face and name to take care of them," Collins explained. "They also have an opportunity to meet new people just like them and that helps when you're new. Maybe they'll make a new friend."

"It's just a good place to come whether you're new to the Army or new to Fort Benning," she added.

Some units have their own orientation, but usually the units focus on their mission and what the commander expects, said Collins. "They really don't provide all of the information about the services on post and to get all of those folks there."

"Our briefing is good to get information when you come in because then when your spouse is deployed or on a field exercise, then you'll know everything," she said. "You'll have a packet of information that you hold on to and reference it later."



The orientation for November is planned for an evening to attempt to get better participation, said Collins.

"The garrison commander wants to see if we have more attendance by having it at night, so we're going to try it next month," she said. "We're just trying to figure out a better way to serve our population here at Fort Benning."

Collins said child care is available during the briefing, but only with prior registration the week before. For more information about the briefings or to register for the next briefing, call ACS at 545-4043.

Post outlines rules for safe, fun Halloween

Directorate of Public Safety

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 30 (the only day "trick or treating" is permitted).

Children under 13 years old are allowed to trick or treat. An older person (14 years or older) must accompany pre-school children.

Limit trick or treating only to the housing area in which the participants reside, and approach only residences with lighted entry ways.

Children should wear light-colored, fire resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or glow spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

Wear masks or head coverings that do not restrict vision. Use colorful facial makeup as much as possible.

Pet owners need to take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

Children should carry flashlights after dark. If a child carries a pumpkin, it should be lit with a battery device, not a candle.

Children should never eat anything until you have inspected the treats. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes trick or treating.

Nicotine replacement will be available (patch or gum).

To sign up for the lunch-hour program, call 544-1255.

MACH and SJA offers Advanced Directive class — The Martin Army Community Hospital Department of Family Practice and the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate offers an Advanced Directives class. The class allows participants to make their wishes known in writing in case the time comes when they cannot express their desires.

The two-hour program provides an education session with an attorney and physician; the attorneys then help participants develop documents for personal and medical records.

For more information, call 544-3065.

Strays stay at Vet Clinic — Animals impounded at the Fort Benning kennel facility may be released by calling either the Military Police at 545-5222 or Veterinary Service at 545-4444 or 545-5690 during normal business hours, 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Circumstances requiring release at times other than regular business hours should be coordinated through Veterinary Service.

An impoundment fee of $5 per day for each animal will be assessed for the days an animal remains in the stray facility. Animals not claimed by an owner within three working days become property of the U.S. government and may be adopted by a new owner or euthanized as circumstances dictate.

For more information, call 545-4444 or 545-5690.

Divorce and separation briefings set — The Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, conducts briefings for those who request an appointment to discuss divorce or separation issues. After the briefing, an attorney will answer questions and set up appointments.

The briefings will take place at 9 a.m. Mondays at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5. Reservations are required.

For more information, call 545-3281.

Army Community Service answers PCS questions — If you are moving to another installation and need information about schools, shopping, medical, dental or housing, the Standard Installation Exchange Service can answer most of your questions.

For more information, call ACS at 545-4043 or stop by Building 2624 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Red Cross offers training — Red Cross Health and Safety provides training and certification in the following areas: Community First Aid and Safety, CPR and First Aid-Adults, CPR for the Professional, Pet CPR, Lifeguard Training, Babysitting for Teens and HIV and AIDS.

Instructor Trainer certification is also available in CPR, lifeguarding, HIV and AIDS, and babysitting.

Domestic violence strikes in all sectors of society

Rebecca S. Welch
Army Family Advocacy Program

In this country, a woman is more likely to be assaulted, injured, raped or killed by a male partner than by any other type of assailant.

Domestic violence is believed to be the most common yet least reported crime in our nation. An estimated three to four million American women are beaten each year by their husbands or partners.

The U.S. Surgeon General has identified domestic violence as a major health problem to women. Wife beating results in more injuries that require medical treatment than rape, auto accidents and muggings combined. Each year, more than 1,000 women — or about four women per day — are killed by their husbands or partners.

Domestic violence is indeed a serious national problem that affects not only individual victims, but the entire community as well.

Domestic violence occurs among all sectors of society. It happens to people of all racial, economic and religious groups. However, low-income battered women are more likely to seek assistance from public agencies, such as shelters and hospital emergency rooms, because they have fewer private resources than middle- and upper-income women. Therefore, they are more likely to be counted in official reporting statistics.

In about five percent of reported domestic assaults, the offender is the male victim's wife or female partner. It is known that women generally resort to physical violence in self-defense. Also, it is known that men who batter deny and minimize their acts of violence. Moreover, males commit more than 80 percent of violent crimes that occur outside the home. Why would women be so violent in the home, yet generally peaceful outside of it?

Welch

No one wants to be emotionally or physically abused by her partner. Staying in the relationship has much more to do with emotional ties, traditional values about marriage and parenthood, fear, money or the lack of it and religion.

Choosing not to leave an abusive partner does not mean that you are stupid, weak or naive. It does not mean that you are asking for anything, except to have a loving, fulfilling relationship with someone you care about and chose as a partner.

Actually, many women do leave their abusers. In one study of 205 battered women, more than 50 percent had left the relationship. Moreover, we will never know about the countless number of divorced women who choose not to identify abuse as the reason they ended their marriages.

Battered women, in general, do not passively endure physical abuse, but actively seek assistance in ending the violence from a variety of sources, including police, lawyers, health care personnel, family members and the clergy.

Frequently, it is the failure of these individuals and systems to provide adequate support that traps women in violent relationships. A study of more than 6,000 battered women in Texas found that, on average, the women had contacted five different sources of help prior to leaving the home and becoming residents of battered women's shelters.

Certainly, many battered women also suffer in silence. These women endure physical abuse for a variety of reasons:

• A battered woman frequently faces the most physical danger when she attempts to leave. She may be threatened with violence and death or attacked if she tries to flee. She fears for her safety, her children's safety and the safety of those who help her.

• For many women, leaving may not be an alternative. There may be nowhere to go and little or no resources in the community to help battered women.

• Because of religious, cultural or socially learned beliefs, a woman may feel that it is her duty to keep the marriage together at all costs.

• Many women want the violence, not the relationship, to end. They may take many steps to try to stop the abuse; leaving the home may be their last resort.

• Some women will endure physical and emotional abuse to keep the family together for the children's sake. Very often, it is when the violence is directed at her children that she will take them and leave. More than half of the children whose mothers are battered are victims of physical abuse.

• A woman may be financially dependent on her husband. She will probably face severe economic hardship is she chooses to support herself and her children on her own.

Battered women's shelters are not "band-aid" solutions to domestic violence, but important life-saving responses to the problem, just as ambulances and hospital emergency rooms respond to medical crises. Shelters are a critical component of the community's efforts to ensure the safety and protection of victims. Making available safe havens for battered women and their children is essential to ensure such protection, particularly for low-income women who may lack the resources to find safety elsewhere.

Shelters not only offer women refuge, but other essential supportive services, including legal, economic, housing and medical advocacy, court accompaniment, employment and job training assistance, support groups for residents and nonresidents, and child care and special children's counseling programs.

Beyond performing crisis intervention and providing essential victim services, shelters are important grassroots efforts towards effecting the social change that is necessary to prevent and ultimately end domestic violence. For example, advocates for battered women, working through shelter programs, have worked to pass important state and federal legislation on domestic violence.

In addition, shelters also are focal points for educating the community about critical issues, training of law enforcement and other professionals who often confront domestic violence in their work and for establishing and monitoring counseling and education programs for abusers.

The Family Advocacy Program contracts with the Russell County shelter and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women to provide a 24-hour residential facility or temporary accommodation to ensure there is a safe, temporary place to stay, with emotional and material support to victims of spouse abuse and their children.

The shelters also offer counseling, transportation and community services, including legal, medical and financial help to spouses. Individuals may call the Phenix City shelter directly at 297-4401 or the Columbus Alliance at 324-3850 for placement.

Directorate of Public Works Information Corner

Residents receive water report

Penny R. O'Connor
Directorate of Public Works

In 1996, Congress amended the Safe Drinking Water Act and added a provision requiring all community water systems to deliver an annual Water Quality Report to their consumers.

Water suppliers, states and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency are all working to educate consumers about the sources and quality of drinking water, and to increase public involvement in decisions about it.

In compliance with the EPA's directives, all water customers on Fort Benning will receive a copy of the Fort Benning WQR in the mail. All reports will be mailed by Tuesday. In addition, the WQR will be posted at Community Life Centers and other locations on Fort Benning. It may also be obtained at www.benning.army.mil/EMD/index.html.

The WQR will include a description of the water source, a table listing the detected contaminants and associated health effects, and biological organisms and associated health effects. The information will be presented in a format that includes a section defining all technical terms and abbreviations.

This report will help consumers to make informed choices concerning their health and that of their families, and will help them understand the challenges of delivering safe drinking water to consumers.

Please take advantage of the information that the WQR will provide.

For more information, call Dan Hudson, DPW Water Treatment Plant supervisor, at 545-4477 or 545-7063 or Joe Wilkins, DPW Environmental Programs, at 545-2400.

Tricare has remote program

Humana Military Healthcare Services

In some cases, active duty service members have stateside duty assignments far from the traditional health care support network of military hospitals and clinics.

To help expand the healthcare services available to active duty service members with remote assignments, the Department of Defense has recently implemented the Tricare Prime Remote program.

As of Oct. 1, the Tricare Prime Remote program is available to ADSMs under full time orders who live and work more than 50 miles from a military treatment facility or approved clinic.

Enrollment

ADSMs who are eligible must enroll in Tricare Prime Remote by filling out and submitting a Tricare Prime Remote application form. Enrollment information is available through your unit commander. ADSMs residing in Tricare Regions 3 and 4 who have not yet enrolled may check their eligibility and request enrollment information by calling toll free (877) 249-9179 or visiting the Tricare Prime Remote web page at www.tricare.osd.mil/remote

Since this program is exclusively for active duty service members at this time, active duty family members will continue to be covered under the Tricare Prime, Extra or Standard program.

Benefits and Guidelines

Benefits are similar to TRICARE Prime, except that there are no cost-shares, co-payments, or deductibles for ADSMs. Enrollees also have no cost access to network pharmacies.

ADSMs enrolled in TRICARE Prime Remote are assigned Primary Care Managers (PCMs) and referred to network providers, when they are available. However, if there are no PCMs or network providers in the area, the ADSMs are free to use any authorized TRICARE providers.

The Health Care Finder (877-249-9179) can help Tricare Prime Remote members select an appropriate provider and authorize care.

As in Tricare Prime, referrals for non-emergency specialty and hospital care for Tricare Prime Remote beneficiaries must be authorized in advance by contacting the Health Care Finder at (877) 249-9179. The Health Care Finder will need to coordinate with the Service Point of Contact (a designated military healthcare specialist) before making the authorization.

Health care services not normally included in the Tricare Prime benefit may be authorized if the health care is specifically required to maintain the ADSM's fitness for duty or retention on active duty.

Tricare is a Department of Defense program offered by Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

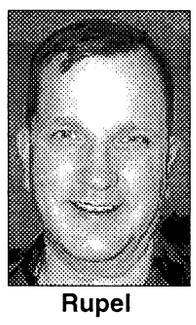
Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries



It usually takes only a few months for a couple to discover that "true marriages are made in heaven" is a fantasy.

Now this should not surprise you, yet many couples become dissatisfied in their marital relationship because of fantasy. It can be a simple thing from "Why does she squeeze the toothpaste from the middle of the tube?" to "All he wants to do is work, work, work!" And "When he does get home he's too tired to spend any time with me!"

It is important to note here that marriage itself is set in creation. In Genesis 1:27, we read: "And God created man in his own image, in the image of God he created him; male and female he created them." Then the author of Genesis goes on to write in Chapter 2:24: "For this cause a man shall leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and they shall become one flesh."

So God is for marriage. He encourages marriage. In fact, marriage is the only way God accepts a man and woman living together. Marriage is much more than just an agreement to stay together until the love goes away. It is a covenant between a man, a woman and God whereby marriage becomes a full response to God's creative activity.

Marriage is also marked by faithfulness to one another. It is difficult being faithful in all walks of life.

Rupel

We've all had friends who have turned their backs on us or have experienced a business deal go bad because one of the partners breaks the faith.

However, in many marriages struggling for survival, there seems no better way than to break the marriage covenant and separate. How sad. How tragic. For I know of no greater pain in a marriage relationship than to have it end in divorce.

Faithfulness holds marriages together. But what happens when that faithfulness is broken? Pain — a pain so great that healing becomes very difficult. I have yet to meet a couple who enters marriage with the idea of being unfaithful. The couple makes the commitment to be faithful to one another.

The marriage vow itself declares: "For as much as (the groom), and (the bride) have consented together in holy matrimony, and have witnessed before God and this company, and have given their sacred pledge, their faithfulness, each to the other."

This is no simple pledge and God takes it very seriously. So seriously he commits himself in that commitment. Even in the midst of failure, God is still with the couple.

It has been my experience that couples who make God an active part of their marriage do much better in their relationship. For them, getting married is a definite step of faith. It is, "... for better for worse, for richer for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love, cherish, and obey, till death do us part, according to God's holy ordinance; and thereto I give you my promise."

This faith is anchored in the simple word love. A love that is "... patient ... kind ... not envious ... not self-seeking ... not easily angered ... keeps no record of wrongs." A love that "... does not delight in evil but rejoices with the truth." It is a love that "... always protects, always trusts, always hopes, always perseveres."

It was Harry and Ruth's 50th wedding anniversary. Their two sons, their wives and children were home to celebrate this momentous occasion. Ruth had insisted on cooking a huge dinner in spite of her sons protesting that they wanted to do something special. Ruth replied, "Being married to your father for 50 years, now that is something special!"

Finally the day of the celebration arrived. Ruth had made a wonderful meal and she was with the love of her life and her family. As they sat down, ready to eat, Harry bowed his head to give thanks. As he prayed and thanked God for 50 years of marriage, Ruth suddenly slumped over in her chair ... dead of a massive heart attack.

Three days later Harry buried his helpmate of 50 years. As the sun was setting, he suddenly announced to his boys that he wanted to go to the cemetery and visit his wife's grave. "But Dad!" one of his son's protested, "It's getting late and dark outside."

"Then bring a flashlight!" replied Harry.

Standing there by Ruth's grave, Harry wrapped an arm around each son and drew them close to him and said, "It's been a good day sons. We can go home now." And then the old man said something so incredible that is shocked both sons. "It ended just the way I wanted it to. She died first." One of Harry's sons incredulously asked, "What in the world do you mean by that, Pop?"

Harry, with tears streaming down his cheeks, whispered his reply, "Your mother has been spared the grief, hurt and sorrow that I'm experiencing this day."

That my friend is a love that came about through 50 years of acting on a commitment made on Harry and Ruth's marriage day. It is the difference between compassion and passion.

If your marriage is more passion than compassion I urge you to seek out some assistance.

Rain no challenge for 10-milers

Washington man runs to a 48:21 10-Miler victory

Spc. Bradley A. Rhen
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The cold, steady rain that fell on the nation's capital Sunday morning was no problem for Chris Graff who led more than 11,000 runners in the 15th annual Army 10-Miler. Many of the runners, in fact, said they welcomed the "inclement"weather that kept their bodies cool during the race.

A blast from a 105 mm Howitzer signaled the official start of the race and Teddy R. Mitchell jumped out to an early lead. Several runners jockeyed for the top position until the lead group reached the Watergate complex along the banks of the Potomac.

Eight minutes into the race, Graff of the Reebok Enclave team then pulled away and never looked back. The 24-year-old Washington, D.C., resident was not seriously challenged for the rest of the run and was the overall winner with a time of 48:21.

Two-time defending champion Dan Browne of the Army World Class Athlete Program finished second with a time of 49:05. The West Point graduate still holds the race record with a time of 47:44, which he set in 1997.

Graff, who finished third last year, said the other runners erred by allowing him to pull away so early and not trying to keep up with him.

"They made a mistake by letting me go and I intended to make them pay for it," he said after the race.

Graff stuck to his word, winning the race by over 40 seconds.

Andre Williams of Arlington, Va., placed third with a time of 49:17, followed by Shawn Found of Boulder, Colo., at 49:22, and Christian Fogarazzo of Arlington at 49:39.

On the women's side, last year's winner Alisa Harvey of Manasas, Va., defended her title with a winning time of 57:47.

The 34-year-old said she intended to sit off a strong runner, but then moved ahead of the other women around the four-mile mark. As it turned out, Harvey was the strongest woman of the day, finishing over a minute ahead of the next woman.

Bea Marie Altieri of Columbia, Md., finished second with a time of 58:56, followed by Janice Addison of Columbia, S.C., who finished at one hour flat.

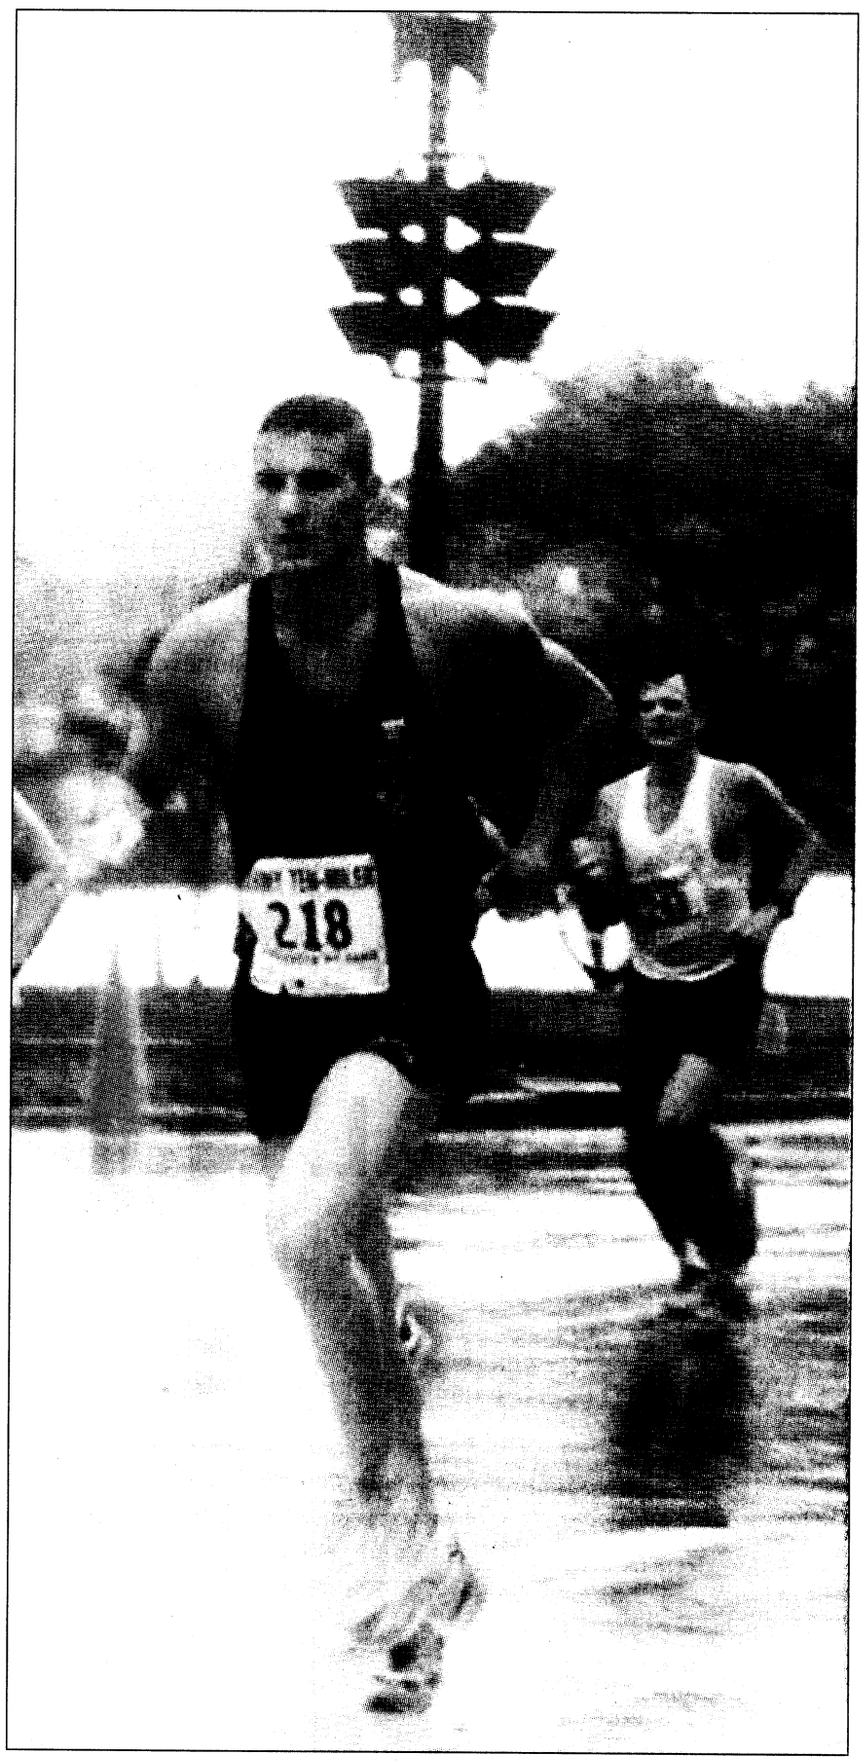
Harvey said the fact the race is so close to her home makes it especially sweet to win.

"I love running in D.C.," Harvey said. "It's right here at home, and it's always nice when the winner is from here because the race is so big."

Though not affiliated with the military, Harvey said she enjoyed the atmosphere created by all the service members competing in the race as well as the hundreds of volunteers who lined the streets to hand out water.

"It's kind of neat running with the military guys," she said. "They're all cheering you on, yelling things like 'good job ma'am.'"

The top finishers in the masters division were Sammy Ngatia of Fort Carson, Colo., who was the top male with a time of 50:46, and Patti Shull of Ashburn, Va., who was the top female with a time of 1:06:23.



Seven wheelchair racers were registered for the race, but only Holly Koester of Cleveland braved the elements Sunday. Koester, who was the only wheelchair finisher last year, finished the race with a time of 1:15:07.

In all, 16,000 runners were registered for the race, but apparently the bad weather convinced some of them to stay home as only 11,456 showed up. Still, this year's race topped last year's mark of 11,109 entrants.

The Army 10-Miler is America's largest 10-mile race and is recognized by Runner's World Magazine as one of the top 100 races in the country, officials said. The race is presented by the Association of the U.S. Army and is produced by the U.S. Army Military District of Washington.

For more information and race results, visit the Army Ten-Miler Web site at www.armytenmiler.com.

Army falls in vow for women's soccer crown

Army News Service

The Air Force edged out Army, 2-1, during the first game of the evening for the Women's Armed Forces Soccer Championship Oct. 8.

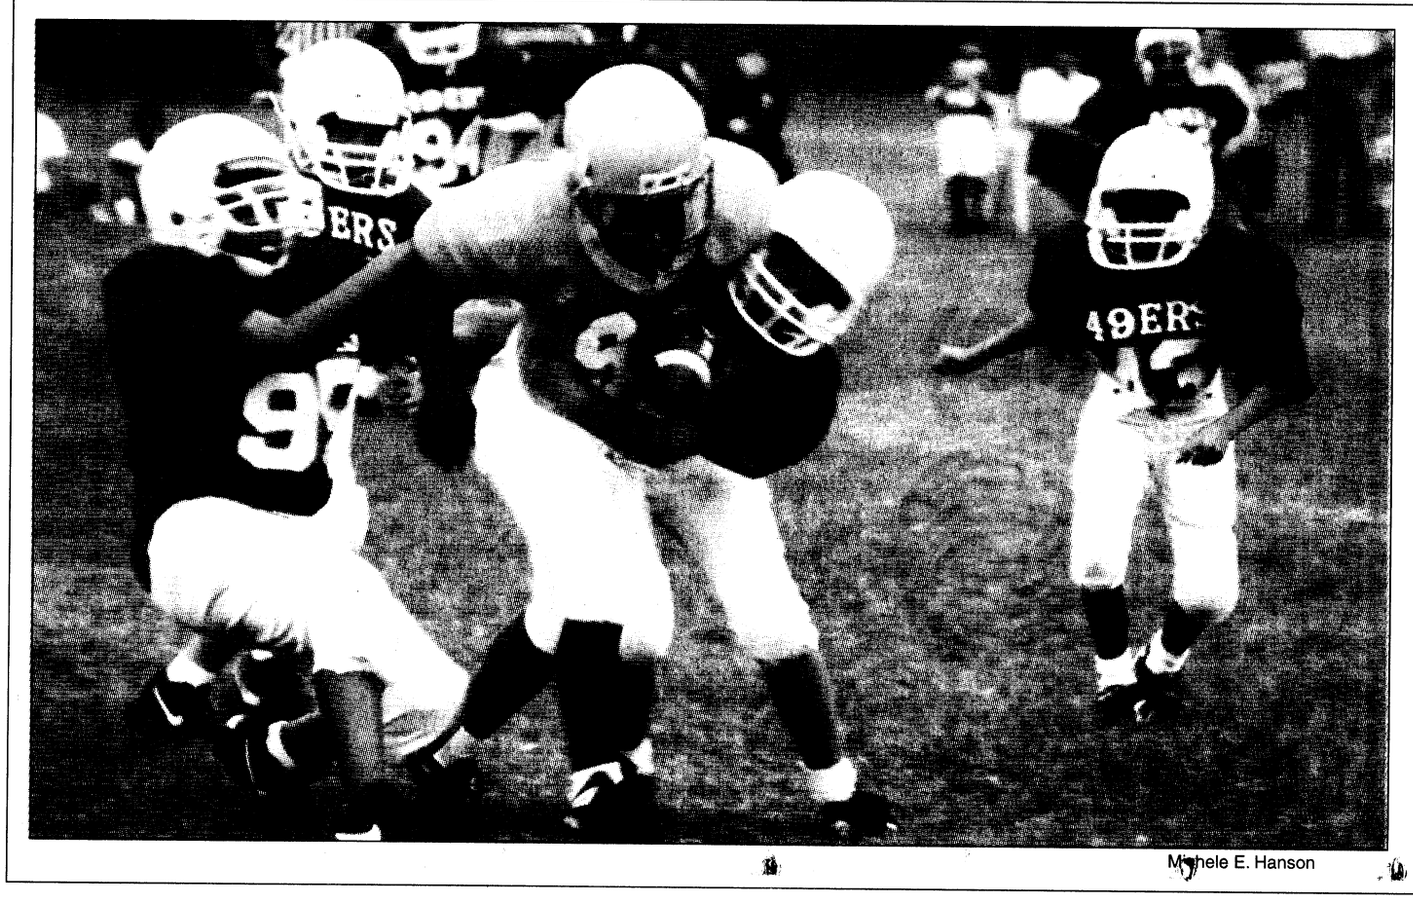
The first score was a solid goal 6 minutes into the game by Sherri Dabis, Fairbanks, Alaska, assisted by Kate Marshell, Fort Benning. Army led at the half 1-0.

Twenty-three minutes into the second half, Air Force tied it up. The last goal to win it for the Air Force came with 7 minutes left on the clock. Despite several shots on goal by the Army, they failed to score.

The second game of the evening, the Navy blanked the Marines 1-0.

The finals games took place Oct. 9, and the first game of the day between the Air Force and the Marines was scoreless at the half. The Air Force scored mid-way in the second half to defeat the Marines 1-0.

During the second game, with the mud flying, Army topped Navy 3-2.



Navy led with the first goal of the game midway in the first half but, Amy Massaglia, Fort Hood, shook the net high right with a goal from 23 yards out to tie it up at the half.

Navy scored on a corner early in the second half to lead 2-1. Sherri Dabis, Fort Benning, answered Navy on a breakaway to tie it up 2-2. With 16 minutes left in the game, Marshell scored the winning goal from inside.

Great saves by goalie Krista Bonino, Fort Campbell, were aided by defenders Catherin Gaffigan, Fort Lee, Heather Andrews, Fort Benning, and Gretchen Meier, Fort Huachuca, to preserve the Army victory 3-2 over Navy in the final game of the 1999 Women's Armed Forces Championship.

Sherrilyn Dabis, Fort Benning; Gretchen Meier, Fort Huachuca, and Kate Marshell, Fort Benning, were presented Armed Forces All Star Coins during closing ceremonies in recognition of their outstanding play during the championship.

The Army Team was recognized at the closing ceremonies as the tournament runner-up with silver armed forces medals.

Army PAL team wins medals

Victories set Soldiers for Olympic trials

Harriet Rice
Community and Family Support Center

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Three members of the U.S. Army World Class Athlete Program medaled at the Police Athletic League National Championships in Orlando, Fla. This September event was an important qualifier for the upcoming Olympic Trials.

Olanda Anderson, Deandry Abron and James Webb finished with gold, silver and bronze medals in two weight classes.

Anderson took gold in the 178-pound weight division; that win earned Anderson a berth at the U.S. Olympic Trials in February 2000. He defeated current world champion Michael Simms in the preliminary rounds.

A South Carolina native Anderson is the 1999 Armed Forces Boxing Champion looking at his second trip to Olympic qualifying: he was a contender at the 1996 Olympic trials.

Currently training at Fort Carson, Colo., Anderson is the second member of the Army Boxing team to qualify for the Olympic Trials. John Medina, at 112 pounds, won the 1999 U.S. Challenge, qualifying him for the Olympic Trials and a chance to represent the U.S. at the 2000 Summer Games in Sydney, Australia.

Deandry Abron went up against teammate and sparring partner Anderson in the 178-pound gold medal bout and came away with the silver.

Abron, formerly a high school varsity football player in Youngstown, Ohio, is new to the sport of boxing. He competed at 201-pounds, but had more success in the lower weight division.

A military police investigator by occupation, this is Abron's first year training and competing with the Army's World Class Athlete Program.

The bronze medal went to James Webb, who was one of more than 70 fighters in the 147-pound weight division. Webb, from Columbia, Tenn., battled in bouts for six days until he was bested by the current Golden Gloves Champion Dante Craig.

Webb was named USA Boxing's outstanding athlete of the month in April 1999 after dominating fights against Russian boxers in international competition.

"Webb was by far the most impressive U.S. performance in international dual competition so far in 1999," USA Boxing writers commented.

Webb also won his division in both state and regional Golden Gloves tournaments this year before netting the championships at the PAL competition..

The Army boxing team, coached by Basheer Abdullah, received the 2nd place 'Best Team' trophy for their performance throughout the Police Athletic League competition.

Coach Abdullah was honored in September by the U.S. Olympic Committee at a Washington, D.C., ceremony, having been selected by the USOC as Developmental Coach of the Year for boxing.

Eastern Connector Feasibility Study
Georgia Department of Transportation to Hold Public Information Meeting to Solicit Community Input Regarding the Eastern Connector Feasibility Study

The Georgia Department of Transportation will hold a Public Information Meeting to solicit comments regarding the development of alternative corridors for an Eastern Connector from US 27 southeast of Columbus. The purpose of the meeting is to present the alternative corridors that have been identified and to involve local residents in the process of identifying public concerns and preferences. The meeting will provide interested citizens with the opportunity to be involved in the planning process.

The meeting will be held from 5:30 P.M. to 7:00 P.M on Monday, October 18, 1999 in the Plaza of the Columbus Government Center, 100 Tenth St, Columbus, GA. Members of the project team will display information on the project alternatives and talk with citizens one-on-one.

Written comments will be received for a two week period following the meeting and should be addressed to:

Marta V. Rosen
State Transportation Planning Administrator
Georgia Department of Transportation

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Loans: Lender loosens its requirements for car buyers who need money now. Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest? If you answered " yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you are pre-approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self-employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge - "how much you qualify for". Credit manager Kevin Thompson or his assistant, Jim Stallings can be reached at 322-8888 ext 144 or ext 145. Open 7 days a week.

NOW THRU MONDAY OCT 11, 1999 ONLY! LIMITED TIME!

OUR LENDERS HAVE THROWN CAUTION TO THE WIND!

BEEN TURNED DOWN? DIDN'T THINK YOU QUALIFIED?

PUBLIC NOTICE! NOW THRU MONDAY ONLY!

YOU ARE AUTOMATICALLY APPROVED! ON A BRAND NEW CHEVY!

JUST MEET THE FOLLOWING CONDITIONS:

1. YOU HAVE A JOB (NO QUALIFICATIONS FOR TIME ON JOB)
2. NO GMAC REPOSSESSION OR LOSS (OTHER REPOS OR LOSS O.K.)
3. BANKRUPTCY O.K. IF DISCHARGED (PROOF REQUIRED)
4. FORCLOSURES OR BAD CREDIT O.K.

Schools open doors for tour

Were calculators the closest your elementary school came to having computers in the classroom?

When was the last time you rode a yellow school bus or scoured the offerings in a school library?

Fort Benning Schools invite the community — active-duty Soldiers, civilians, business people and retirees — to go back to school Oct. 28 and see for themselves how today's children are being prepared for the future.

"We hope to have the community members view first-hand the opportunities we are giving our children to prepare them for a global economy in the 21st century," Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools, said.

The tour is part of a national initiative "America Goes Back To School" designed to improve education through community involvement. American students must be prepared for an increasingly global job market.

Historic Riverside receives facelift

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Riverside — the historic home to Fort Benning's Commanding Generals — is out of surgery and breathing new life.

The facelift on the 90-year-old house started around Thanksgiving last year. Although some work is still ongoing, Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne and his wife, Marion, were able to move in after he assumed command of the post in September.

The Le Moynes are the latest in a long line of command teams, dating back almost 80 years, who have called Riverside home. A large plaque hangs in the front hallway listing the names of each commanding general. Omar Bradley was a brigadier general when he lived there in 1941.

During his last 10 months as commanding general, Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst and his wife, Linda, lived in Marshall House, the post's quarters for distinguished visitors, to facilitate the restoration of Riverside. Removal of exterior lead paint during the renovation made it impossible for them to live in Riverside.

Although her husband is an Infantryman, Marion Le Moyne had never seen the mansion before.

"My friends who saw the house recently all commented on how white it looked," she said. "I didn't realize what they meant until I saw the pictures."

The pictures belong to the Housing Office, and they show how faded and gray the frame house had turned over the years.

Ken Hankins, chief of the housing division, has heard similar comments about the bright blue tin roof.

"People ask why we painted it Infantry blue. Well, it had been that way all along, but they didn't notice it because it had faded," Hankins said.

The renovation was originally expected to take six months.

The exterior was stripped by hand to the bare wood — yellow-heart pine — and repainted.

Sections of flooring were replaced inside and on the porches, and the wood used had to match that found in the rest of the house. All of the interior pine floors were refinished.

Arthur Bussey, a Columbus businessman, built the house in 1909 as a summer home for his family and named it Riverside. The house and property were part of the acreage the government acquired in 1918 when the Infantry School moved from Fort Sill, Okla., to Columbus. Graduation exercises were held on the front lawn until 1923.

Sally Shutt

Historic Riverside — home to the post's commanding general.

The Historic Columbus Foundation nominated the house for a spot on the National Register of Historic Sites in 1971.

"Tens of thousands of Soldiers have received their first impression of the U.S. Army and Fort Benning by the sight of this gracious old mansion as they arrive on post," the foundation stated in its nomination papers. Riverside was placed on the register in July 1971.

"We view this house as a treasure," Le Moyne said. "It's an unusual opportunity to get to live in a house like this."

The two-story house sits on 12 acres and has 6,000 square feet of living space — 9,000 square feet if you include the basement and wraparound porches on both levels. There are five bedrooms, three bathrooms and five fireplaces, only one of which works.

The interior walls are made of tongue and groove woodwork, and heavy beams support the high ceilings. French doors open from the downstairs rooms to the porch.

Former Ranger shares experiences in book

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Charles "Ace" Parker never knew he would someday be inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame. In fact, before he was drafted into the Army during World War II, he had only planned on being a doctor.

He doesn't regret being drafted though. He's the first one to tell you his experience as an officer and a Ranger made him who he is today.

Parker, a former captain, said his time as a Ranger began shortly after he entered the service.

"I was in the 98th Division when I first got in," he explained. "We had a guy with one leg an inch and half longer than the other, in the Infantry where your feet are supposed to be the most reliable means of getting around. We had another guy who was night blind. There had to be a guy on either side of him to keep him from falling into ravines or running into a tree.

Parker

"I was thinking, 'I just don't want to be in an outfit like this,'" Parker said. "The Rangers were recruiting, and there was a poster and one for the paratroopers. I thought I would go with whoever got to me first, and the Rangers got me first."

"I've been forever grateful. I think the rangers were a hell of a lot better than the paratroopers," Parker added.

Parker, who is 80, said being a Ranger prepared him for his 57-month-long military career. During that career, Parker has seen a lot. He said one of the moments he would never forget was when his unit hit Omaha Beach.

"We landed on Omaha Beach, and I got the whole company assembled. A German sniper shot my sniper and a lieutenant from E Company," he said. "I thought my sniper would live and the lieutenant wouldn't because his brains were out.

"We didn't know my sniper had been hit at an angle, and it hit his spine. He died," he explained. "By the time I got to the first rendezvous point, I only had 23 men."

Parker said that he felt lucky making it out of the war without being wounded.

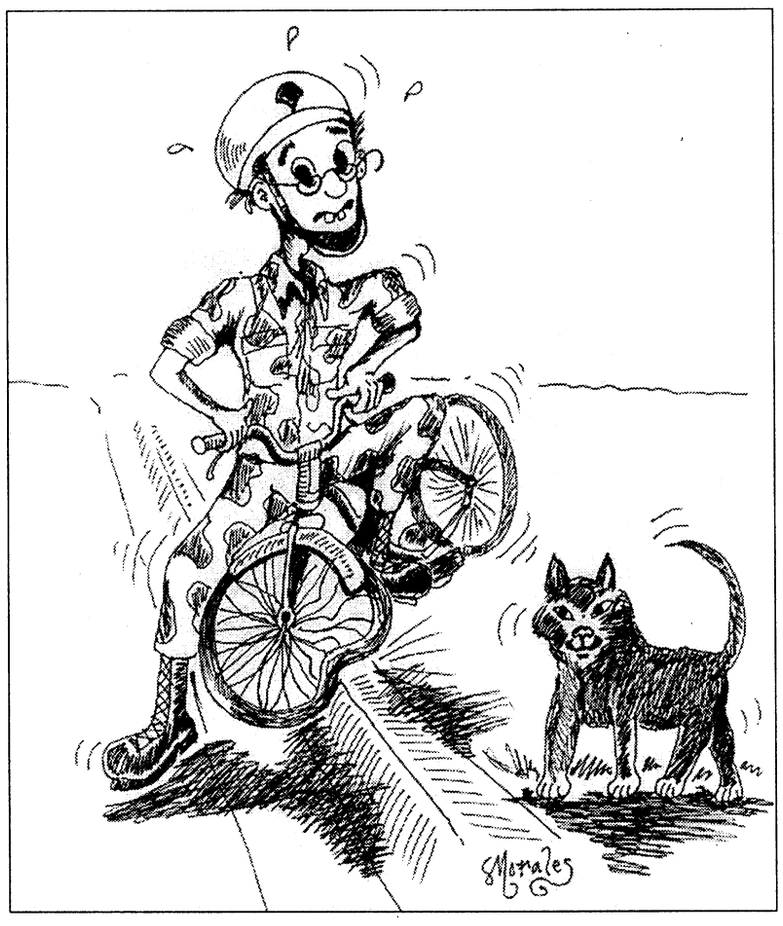
Post plans for traffic delays

Monica Manganaro
USAIC Public Affairs Office



Post residents and employees can expect some delays in traffic Monday through Wednesday due to a post wide Force Protection Exercise.

Most exercise procedures will go unnoticed; however, the number of traffic checkpoints will increase from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Post officials say this exercise is just one of many contingency plans the post puts into practice throughout the year.

Don't lose your head, wear a helmet

Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Bike helmets make my head sweat. If I fall off my bike, I'm going to land on my side, not my head.

Bike helmets are for sissies.

I've ridden a bike since I was a kid and never fell off.

These are excuses for not wearing bike helmets. They come from adults. Unfortunately adults who think this way also think it's unnecessary for their kids to wear helmets.

They're so close to the ground anyway, they won't get hurt when they fall.

Well I never wore a bike helmet either, but when I came to Fort Benning it was made clear that if I wanted to ride a bike on post I'd better have a helmet. So I went out and bought one. And now I wear it every time I get on a bike.

Thank goodness.

The other day I was doing my "alternative PT." It consisted of bike sprints. On my final sprint I went tearing around a corner — no headlight (well, I had a headlight, but was conserving the batteries so I didn't have it turned on) and no glasses — so I was practically on top of the black cat before I saw it.

And then it was too late. Hit the cat, hit the deck.

I gimped back home with abrasions up and down my left and back sides, and as I ate breakfast I contemplated how I was going to clean all my wounds, especially since my shoulder was really hurting, and it was hard to move my arm.

Then I had a revelation — Emergency room.

The folks at the ER cleaned me up, sent me out for X-rays and sure enough, I had a broken collarbone and a broken rib. Then the doc asked if I'd landed on my head.

I told him I didn't know, but that I had a helmet on when I crashed. A CAT (how ironic) scan was ordered up.

After a few days of healing, I finally felt well enough to inspect my bike. Handle bars and pedals were scratched up a little, but nothing major. Then I noticed my helmet — big chunk taken out of the side along with a crack. "Hmmm, coulda been my head," I mused.

So if you're thinking, "I'll never need a bike helmet," you may be right. But then again ... you just never know.

Oh yeah, I think I'll turn my light on when riding in the dark from now on, too.

Fort Benning schools teach children values

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

commentary

Every once in a while I am amazed by what the Fort Benning schools teach our children. In this case — generosity.

About two weeks ago my second-grader brought a note home concerning an ARK. This ark was not Biblical but instead an acronym for Act of Random Kindness. This ARK, I discovered, is a project of the Dexter Elementary K-Club, which is a citizenship club where students practice kindness. Their latest project is organizing donations to help the flood victims of Hurricane Floyd in North Carolina.

The recipients of their kindness were the children in Lenoir County who suffered great losses because of the floods. Cy Dietrich, the K-Club's sponsor and Fort Benning's Teacher of the Year, saw an opportunity to help.

I have to admit to not reading the note right away. The first I heard of the ARK was while shopping at the Commissary. My daughter said, "Mom we need to get some canned food for the ARK." And she started putting canned goods into the cart.

Like many people I have a food budget — so my first concern was having the money to cover what she put in the cart and the second was how were we going to carry heavy cans out to the car? (I like the 15 items or less line — we shop weekly.) Jessie explained what the food was for, and we compromised by buying some canned food and some easier to carry, lighter pasta and rice products.

On our second trip to the Commissary it was paper products and household supplies in addition to the canned foods. Jessie had even written the list for our shopping excursion.

I finally looked at the note and found out that the club was hoping to fill the ARK (actually a trailer) with:

- clothing, to include new underwear and socks,
- non-perishable food,
- diapers and baby clothes , and
- paper products and household supplies.

A couple of days later Jess wanted to buy school supplies to fill the nearly 900 backpacks Dietrich bought for the North Carolinian students. I told a co-worker about the project, and she brought in a backpack filled with school supplies.

When I asked my daughter what she thought about the project she said she liked being able to help other children who didn't have what she has. Then she told me about the ARK in Dexter's front hall, which is where her and many other children's tooth-fairy money and piggy bank money went — not for the newest toy at the dollar store but to help kids they don't know in another state.

These K-Club students are making a difference for the children in Lenoir County, N.C. Make a Difference Day is Saturday. Many people who are affiliated with Fort Benning are participating in many different projects from picking up trash along the Chattahoochee River to building homes with Habitat for Humanity or mentoring school children in community schools.

What are you doing to make a difference?

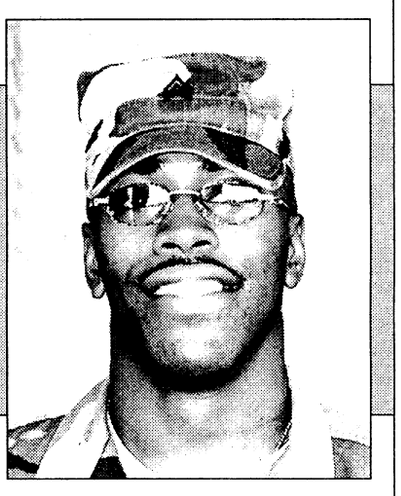
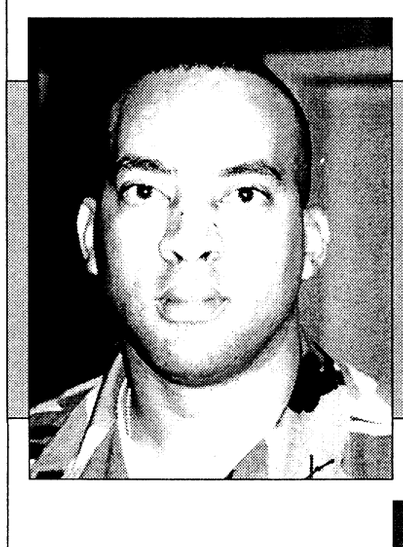
Why is it important to wear a helmet when riding a bike?



Pfc. Joseph Bass, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "It's important because you don't want to find yourself in an accident, so you want to be as safe as you can."



Spc. Robert Strieff, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think it's good for kids, but if you're over 18, you shouldn't have to wear a helmet. I don't have kids, but they should wear one to be safe."

Pvt. Robert Stowell, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade — "It's important for little kids. When I have kids, I'm going to worry more about it."

Sgt. Charles Dixon, B Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "When you're out there, you've got to be aware of what's going on. You could be hit at any time."

1st Lt. Blair Sawyer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I think it's important due to the amount of traffic on post and to protect the cyclists."

Spc. Inita Green, Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It's important, especially for children because they may get hit by a car if they aren't wearing reflectors and a helmet."

Museum prepares exhibit for War Dogs

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Something always bothered Jesse Mendez when he visited the National Infantry Museum. There wasn't an exhibit telling the story of brave war dogs. Dogs like York, a German Shepherd who saved thousands of lives in Korea and is buried in Fort Benning's pet cemetery in an unmarked grave.

Or dogs like the ones Mendez helped train to serve in Southeast Asia. After three tours in Vietnam, Mendez was the chief instructor at Fort Benning's 26th Scout Dog Platoon.

Mendez spoke to Frank Hanner, the museum's director, and through their efforts and those of the museum's staff an exhibit will open Oct. 29 at 2 p.m.

Mendez retired from the Army in 1969 and lives in Columbus. He will attend the ceremony, and afterward a demonstration in front of the museum by Fort Benning's Military Working Dog Platoon.

"Fort Benning played a crucial role in the training of scout dog units for service in the Vietnam War," Hanner said. Fort Benning and Fort Gordon, Ga., were the primary training centers during the war. The scout dog courses lasted 12 weeks for the dogs and their handlers.

Scout dogs detected enemy movement, booby traps, land mines, base camps and searched tunnels.

"They have been neglected and not given the credit they deserve," Mendez said.

"We had 22 scout dog platoons in the Army. They served with every line unit over there, and there was a scout dog platoon with each battalion."

The platoon was deactivated in 1972, and the Army did away with the program. It was replaced by the military working dog program. Now all military working dogs receive their combat arms training at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas.

The exhibit also includes typical items the dogs would uncover in Southeast Asia, including pungie stakes and homemade gas masks.

"Not only did they find these types of things, but at night they ensured the American Soldiers were not ambushed," Hanner said.

"Had it not been for these dogs, the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington would have a lot more names engraved on it."

One exhibit case contains items about Mendez and his dog.

"His name was Pal, and his brand number was X296. They had a brand number just like our Social Security number," Mendez said

Man and dog were discharged from the service on the same day, and Pal lived with Mendez another 10 years.

In 1975, as U.S. troops left Vietnam, only 200 dogs returned home out of 7,000 dogs belonging to the different services, Mendez said.

"They were left to a fate that was not justified," Mendez said. In a combat zone dogs can be declared surplus equipment and left behind.

"When they pulled out in 1975, everyone was in a hurry to save their butts. They had to leave the dogs in their kennels or tied to a stake. You had a choice of euthanizing them or turning them over to the Vietnamese."

The exhibit looks back at the history of dogs through their use today as military police working dogs.

Canines have been used in war dating back to first recorded history.

"Pictures on cave walls show men with weapons standing beside dogs," Hanner said.

Historians agree that the Spanish conquest of part of the New World was accomplished by men, horses and dogs, in that order.

At the onset of World War I, Germany had 50,000 dogs trained and ready for combat. But the U.S. failed to establish a canine unit until World War II during which about 25,000 dogs served.

The exhibit includes moving stories of families who volunteered their dogs for service during WWII.

"What those so-called dumb animals will do for people is amazing. They willingly gave their lives unselfishly and without thought," Becky Pennington, museum secretary, said. She typed and displayed all the captions in the exhibit. "It was very emotional putting this exhibit together."

Remember proper gear; promote bike safety

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

In combat, Soldiers want to be well camouflaged to make sure enemy Soldiers never know they're there.

One time when they may not want to do such a good job of blending in though is when they're riding a bike in uniform.

According to Regis Beighley, Safety Manager for the Infantry Branch Safety Office, there have been several complaints recently of Soldiers riding bikes without the proper safety equipment.

"We've had some people report that they were concerned about bicycle riders," he said. "Early in the morning when it's dark or even foggy, they may not have on the proper clothes so that they can be seen when they are mixing with traffic.

"Especially if you're a Soldier wearing the kind of clothes made to camouflage you. So you don't want to be in traffic only wearing your BDUs," Beighley explained.

According to Policy Memo 93-18, bike riders in areas of 35-miles per hour or greater must wear highly visible reflective vests and protective helmets.

Bikes should also be equipped with reflectors on the front and rear. Bicycles ridden at night must have headlights and tail lights which are visible from 300 feet away.

The memo also states that bicyclers on post must obey Georgia state laws.

Those include:

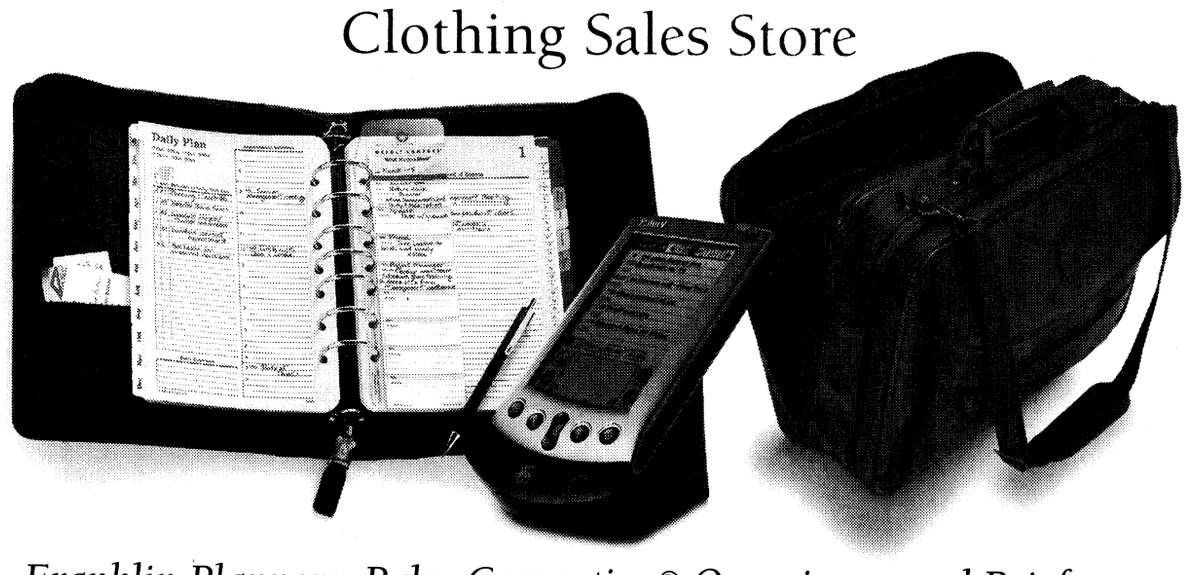
Children under 16 must wear helmets.

Children between the ages of 1 and 4 must be in a passenger seat for bike riders, and infants under 1 are prohibited from riding on a bike.

There must be a passenger seat for everyone riding a bike. Riding on the handle bars is prohibited.

Following the rules can keep riders out of a bad situation, said Beighley.

"The key thing to remember is that you have very little protection when you're riding a bicycle," he said. "When you're in a car, you've got tons of steel around you. If you get in an accident on a bicycle, there's not much to protect you from hitting the road, a tree or having a vehicle run you over."



"You can't stop an 18-wheeler if it comes up on the curb and hits you. You're the one who's going to get hurt," he added. Along with the obvious dangers involved in not being prepared, bike riders can face other dilemmas, said Beighley.

"There are civil penalties by the state of Georgia, and there are penalties post can imply upon you," he said. "Georgia is just a fine. It's mainly an education law where they try to get people to wear helmets and to educate them for their own good."

"On post, like if you break any post rules, you can lose your on-post privileges," Beighley added. "Enforcement isn't the key, it's an education law to tell people this is a serious thing and that you can get hurt if you don't protect yourself."

More information about bike safety or the post regulations are available by calling the Infantry Branch Safety Office at 545-7900 or by checking out the office's link on the Fort Benning home page at www.benning.army.mil.

Nieces write book about WWII Ranger 'Ace'

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

> "It's a story about World War II — probably one that has never been told before."
> — Marcia Moen
> Author

Margo Heinen and Marcia Moen, twins from Minnesota, always enjoyed listening to war stories from their uncle, Charles "Ace" Parker. But it wasn't until recently that they decided others might enjoy hearing them, too.

So the two decided to write a book honoring their uncle, titled Reflections of Courage on D-Day & the Days That Followed: A Personal Account of Ranger "Ace" Parker.

The book tells a story for anyone who enjoys World War II history, said Moen.

"It's a story about World War II – probably one that's never been told before," she said. "It's a story that's told like a story, it's not a documentation or a historical work. But it is a story about one man and his movement through each mission.

"Then other people fit in to that story. It's one that an average person, who's never been in the military, can actually understand," said Moen.

She added, the story just came together naturally.

"We were at our house in August of 1998. We knew that our uncle was going to be inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame," she said. "At that time, there was also a gathering of relatives, and we were sitting outside. Then all of the sudden he started telling us these stories. Then he told a story that none of us had heard."

"The story in particular was that they were in a garage, sleeping overnight in a small, French community. It was just his headquarters group so there were five or six of them," Moen explained. "Then all of the sudden, in the middle of the night, he woke up in a panic. He knew that they needed to get out of this garage."

"He got everyone awake even though he didn't know why he was doing it. Just after he got them out, two shells came in and the garage was blown to smithereens," she said. "That story, when Margo and I heard it, we decided then we were going to write this story, there must be more stories. This was just unbelievable."

From there, the pair decided it was time to do interviews and research.

"I had called up Chuck and began taking notes on it, but it was too overwhelming for just one person to do so Marsha and I began to do it as a group effort," said Heinen. "It was a big project, but it needed to be told."

"I would interview his men and anyone who was connected to him in the war effort, and then Marcia did the interviewing of Ace," said Moen.

"I would go over then on my lunch hour from work, and I had Thursdays off so I would go over to see Chuck for three or four hours," said Heinen. "In the beginning it was all fresh, all new. He was explaining what a company, a battalion was."

"Then the little tidbits would come out right as I would be getting ready to leave," she added. "He would think of something and start talking about it. It would be a story that I'd never heard before. One story after another, it was pretty unbelievable stuff to tell you the truth."

Moen said the research provided a chance for Parker to relive some good memories and reunite with old friends.

"He would give me names, and I would look them up. I was getting these great stories from his men," she said. "It would be so unbelievable that we had actually found some of his men that he had lost touch with. The whole year was a good one for him because it was filled with one exciting thing after another," Moen added.

Something else that added character to the book was tons of documentation saved by Parker, said Moen.

"We also found a whole bunch of his letters, that made the book more interesting, too," she explained. "He had kept all of his papers from the war, his orders, pictures, everything; it was a real gold mine of information."

The book is available at Barnes and Nobles across the state, but the twins are also currently working to get the book carried on post.

Parker: Remembers WWII experiences in nieces book

submachine gun where a bullet hit the receiver and ruined it. All I had left was a carbine. I didn't like it so I took an M-1, which I carried for the rest of the war. It carried a hell of a fine bullet."

Parker's experience as a Ranger hasn't just earned him a spot in the Ranger Hall of Fame in 1998, but has also now been published in a book, Reflections of Courage on D-Day and the Days That Followed: A Personal Account of Ranger "Ace" Parker.

Having a book written about his war experiences never occurred to Parker. He said it came about thanks to his nieces, Marcia Moen and Margo Heinen.

"I never talked about the war because I figured no one was interested," said Parker. "I was over at my niece's house on a nice, sunny day. Someone asked me, so I told them about the only extrasensory experience I ever had."

"That got them thinking, and they came over and wanted to know if they could interview me," he added. "That's how it came about."

Besides being the subject of the book, Parker said he also took on a role as editor.

"I edited every page. I rearranged chapters. They had started out with my life before the war, and I told them if people ran into that, they would just put the book down," he said. "So I told them they had to bring up a real action thing."

"Later when they get hooked, then they'll read about where the hell I came from and how I established leadership," added Parker.

Being the subject of a book is an honor, but being inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame was also a moving experience, Parker said.

"I was just very, very proud to be inducted. There's only 115 people in the Hall of Fame, and it starts off with Roger's Rangers from the Revolutionary War," he said.

Those first Rangers set the example, according to Parker.

"Roger's Rangers had 19 rules and every one of them is just as practical today," he said. "Like never ford a river in the same place as when you first crossed; never bivouac before dark because then they'll know where you are; when you're marching, always scout out each side and front and back of where you are so they can't surprise you. Everyone of them is just a jewel."

Parker said he hopes the book about his life does well. "There's a tremendous surge of interest in the World War II era right now," he said. "It's like a fever in this country learning about the greatest war this country has ever been in or the world has been in."

He added, that it will hopefully teach others some of the lessons he has learned in combat.

"I've learned that you've got to depend on the people around you," Parker said. "What keeps you as a leader is pride, and you don't dare fail.

"Responsibility is important because you're responsible for the men," he added. "I was very stingy with the men. I always figured there was another way so when I gave orders to take something, we always did it the safest way."

"If we were crossing a field in daylight and there were a bunch of wounded out there already, I would think 'Okay, we'll do it after dark,'" he said.

"The other element of leadership is letting them know that you care," Parker said. "They have to know that they can trust you. They have to know you're competent in your job. My Rangers, all of them, they knew that I knew what I was doing."

School: Opens doors to community for tour as part of national initiative

Family, business and community involvement in education can make a significant difference in setting up today's children for success in the future.

A Yellow Bird school bus will load in front of Infantry Hall starting at 8:45 a.m. and return to the building by 11:30 a.m. Dexter and Stowers Elementary Schools will open their doors for the tour; educators, parents and students will act as tour guides.

At Dexter, student ambassadors will greet the visitors and share with them what they do every day, said Principal Vicki Rodgers.

"We need to teach children to communicate well, problem-solve and to use technology, in order to prepare them for a global job market in the 21st century," Rodgers said.

Parents are usually well acquainted with the schools through open houses and volunteer programs; therefore, the idea behind this tour is to bring other members of the community into the schools, according to Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development.

"Our focus is to bring in folks who might not have children in the schools. Our schools are very good, and we would like to show off some of our programs," Wilson said.

Space is limited to 35 participants. Call Wilson at 545-8271 by 4 p.m. Monday to register.

The interior walls are made of tongue and groove woodwork, and heavy beams support the high ceilings. French doors open from the downstairs rooms to the porch.

The front of the house faces Lumpkin Road, although it is often photographed showing the longer facade facing Vibbert Avenue. The front entry hall is wide and the wall lined with historical photographs, including those of the Bussey family.

Entertaining takes place downstairs in the spacious library, music, living and dining rooms.

"They call this room the music room, but John and I are not musicians, so we don't have a piano," Le Moyne said.

Gifts from distinguished visitors and past residents hang on the walls. Many of the furnishings on the lower level belong with the house, including a huge dining room table that can seat 22. The Le Moynes took out five of the leaves, reducing the capacity to 12.

Another personal touch is a large hand-tooled brown leather map of South America hanging prominently in the library. Maj. Gen. Le Moyne purchased it years ago as a souvenir during a trip to the continent.

Riverside's last big renovation was in 1983 when asbestos was removed, central heating and air conditioning installed, and the house rewired. Each year $25,000 is allotted for operational maintenance, one-third of which goes toward utilities, Hankins said.

When Lt. Gen. John Hendrix lived at Riverside (1994-1996) he wrote a letter to the Training and Doctrine Command and Department of Army stating that the house needed extensive repairs the operational fund could not cover.

Hankins recalled the letter.

"The state historical preservation office folks were telling us we were in trouble if we let it collapse, but there was no way to maintain this house for $25,000 a year.

"General Hendrix told them we either needed to fix it, or we needed to tear it down," Hankins said.

The letter made its way to Congress, which approved funding for the renovation in 1997. The contract was awarded to Harmon Construction of Macon in 1998.

Now it's business as usual at the Fort Benning landmark with dinners and receptions on the schedule.

"I've been told by the protocol office to expect anywhere from 1,800 to 3,000 people a year," Le Moyne said.

WWII unit to dedicate monument Monday

Nearly 50 World War II veterans and family members will travel from Hawaii to join other comrades on Sacrifice Field to dedicate a monument to the 100th Infantry Battalion at 11 a.m. Monday.

An all-volunteer unit, the battalion was predominantly made up of Americans of Japanese ancestry at a time when thousands of Americans like them were confined to internment camps solely on the basis of race.

After 21 months of combat, the unit had earned three Presidential Unit Citations and its veterans had earned a Congressional Medal of Honor, 24 Distinguished Service Crosses, 147 Silver Stars and 2,173 Bronze Stars.

Dining facility tries for Connelly Award

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

For the second year in a row the 36th Engineer Group Dining Facility is a finalist in the Philip A. Connelly Awards Program for Excellence in Army Food Service.

Oct. 14 was an important day for Chief Warrant Officer Georgene Pipkins, the food service officer, and her staff of 52 — 40 cooks and 12 assistants.

A three-member committee from the competition arrived at 5:45 a.m. to begin almost eight hours of evaluation. They looked at 11 different criteria including dining area, equipment, food preparation and quality, troop acceptability, appearance and attitude of food service personnel.

The facility is one of six across the U.S and around the world competing in the small dining facilities category, those that serve 200 or fewer Soldiers at each meal.

The U.S. Army Quartermaster Center and School, Fort Lee, Va., and the International Food Service Executives Association are the co-sponsors of the 31-year-old Connelly program.

An evaluation committee comprised of one civilian from IFSEA and two QMC&S military representatives visits each of the six finalists in a particular category. The five categories are active Army small dining facility, active Army large dining facility, active Army field kitchens, Army Reserve units and National Guard units.

Each committee chooses a winner and runner-up from their category, and the Department of Army announcement is made by Feb. 1.

Last year's winner in the small category was Pipkins' former dining facility in Tae Gu, Korea, and she is confident the 36th Engineer facility will be the winner this year, she said.

The staff started planning for the team visit months ago by planning the menu, which included turkey, fish, baked chicken and cordon bleu.

"Once a week we would practice that menu," Pipkins said. "For the last two weeks, we prepared it twice a week, on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Practice makes perfect."

Team member Chief Warrant Officer Samuel P. Galloway has 37 years in the Army, and he recalled the days when such a varied menu in an Army dining facility didn't exist.

"I still remember the days when you might have corned beef or liver. Wow, what a change," Galloway said. "We've come from no choices to multiple-entree selections, short-order and even take-out."

"I've had to change with it (food service). This is exciting work, and you continue to learn."

The other members of Galloway's team are Sgt. Maj. Loyd O. Taylor, a veteran of 27 years in Army food service, and Anthony C. Mauro, who has volunteered his time to be a member of the committee. He is a professor of food service administration and restaurant management at Erie Community College, in Williamsville, N.Y.

After the lunch hour, the team presented the cooks a plaque from the Connelly program during a formation ceremony. They also presented the 36th Engineer Command Group a token of appreciation for its support.

Post opens new training facility

Close Combat Tactical Trainer provides alternative to field

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

With budget cuts an everyday concern, commanders and their units must find options that allow them to stay trained and ready.

One way Fort Benning units can achieve this goal a little easier is to use the training simulators at the Close Combat Tactical Trainer facility.

The facility offers more than 30 simulators for Infantry weapons and vehicles. Support elements like Tactical Operations Centers and Supporting Operations Centers are also available.

The CCTT provides an alternative to field exercises for several reasons, said Randy Craven, future operations officer for the CCTT. One of those reasons is available training hours.

"Commanders have a certain number of operational hours they can put on their vehicles, and they have been reduced once again," said Craven. "Like in 3rd Brigade, they've been reduced from four companies per battalion to three effective Oct. 1," he said.

"They've still got their operational hours based upon three companies per battalion, and they'll have to split those up between four companies until the books catch up," added Craven.

The unit can then save on operational hours by training in simulations.

"This system allows them to come in before they go out and conduct actual field training," he said. "It allows them to practice platoon-level standard operating procedures, getting down their movement techniques."

"It allows them to do that at no cost to the unit and a very low expense because they're not expending a lot of fuel in their actual vehicles or the wear and tear," Craven added. "They can come in here and practice all of those standard operation procedures at a very minimal cost of operating a simulator."

The CCTT tries to make the simulations as real as possible for Soldiers, but Craven admitted it's best used for training reinforcement.

"The simulation was never designed to replace actual field training but to enhance it by allowing them to practice those techniques before actually going out to the field," he said.

"They can engage a realistic opposing force while they're maneuvering out there in tactical scenarios," he added. "They have an unlimited supply of being able to fire their weapon systems. They can fire all of the bullets that they need to rehearse and practice."

Staff Sgt. Paul Klink, from the Noncommissioned Officer Academy, said the simulations are realistic.

"This is about as close as you can get to the real thing without actually going to the field," he said. "This is the best simulation I've ever been in. This is awesome, and I'm totally impressed by this system. It's just like the field, except you don't get wet."

Sgt. 1st Class Randolph Graves, from the Noncommissioned Officer Academy, said the training provided several advantages over field training.

"This training is pretty good. I think we get better quality training here because we don't have to deal with maintenance problems and things like that," said Graves.

Another advantage to using the CCTT facility is the ability to conduct after action reviews, said Craven.

"The AAR capability of our system is quite extensive," he explained. "At the AAR workstation, there is a bank of radios to communicate with the unit in training. While the unit is conducting the tactical scenario, a recording can also be made."

"We capture the video and audio portion for later review. So we never have a case of someone saying they didn't hear a radio message — it's all captured so you can monitor the communication during a scenario," Craven said. "We capture that to a disk cassette, and we can also transfer it to a video tape if the unit supplies one."

Units who are interested in using the CCTT should submit a written request to Headquarters, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, Simulations Center, Attn: Pete Bush, U.S. Army Infantry Center, Fort Benning, GA 31905 no later than 90 days prior to the requested training dates.

For more information about scheduling training, call Bush at 545-5942.

Capt. James Brownlee
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

Usually during the first few weeks of One Station Unit Training, Soldiers become acquainted with battle buddies, drill sergeants and the rest of the cadre. Not so for the Soldiers of C Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment. These Soldiers were about to conquer the Cobra Challenge.

The Cobra Challenge is a competition geared toward building team and squad cohesion, as well as building individual confidence.

The challenge was simple — get the squad through each event with all of the assigned equipment and personnel to receive points.

The events are a one-mile litter carry, an obstacle course, a confidence course, another one-mile run, a five minute pushup contest, another one-mile run, a five minute sit-up contest, a two minute dip contest, a two minute pull-up contest, a 2-1/2 ton truck push, followed by a squad tug-of-war.

"We wanted to set the company up for success early. During this competition it's usually the shy Soldier who sees his window of opportunity to lead, and he takes control of the squad. He gets things accomplished where sometimes the Soldier the drill sergeant put in charge might not," said 1st Sgt. Carlos Garcia.

The squads were issued a litter, an ammo can filled with sand, and a rubber M-16A2. There was also a standard packing list and complete instructions written and posted within the company.

Soldiers immediately went over the instructions that were posted and realized that to accomplish this mission they would have to pay strict attention to detail and draw on the strengths of their combined squad members.

"At first we didn't know what was going on. All we knew is that we're in some kind of challenge and that we had to finish with everyone and everything assigned," said Pvt. Arnold Bogerty from Atlantic City, N.J. "We began to really get pumped up and excited because we we're ready and waiting for our training to begin. I mean this is why we are here, to become Infantry Soldiers."

Anticipation and excitement electrified the company area when the 16 teams consisting of 12 men each were given their marching orders to proceed to the start line for the beginning of their first phase, the litter and obstacle course run.

After the obstacle course, one member from each squad was chosen to reassemble an M-16A2 within two minutes.

After that, it was straight to the confidence course and then on a one-mile squad run to the company's PT field. Once the Soldiers arrived at the PT field they began the push-up event.

> — Pvt. Richard Allen
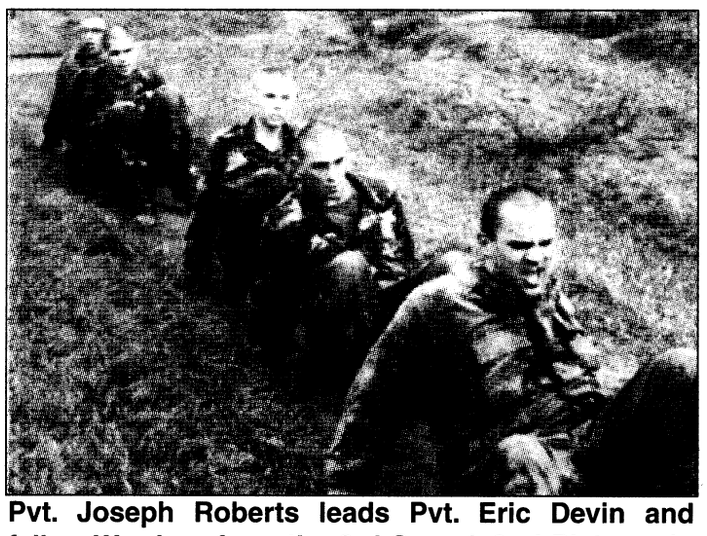
> C Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

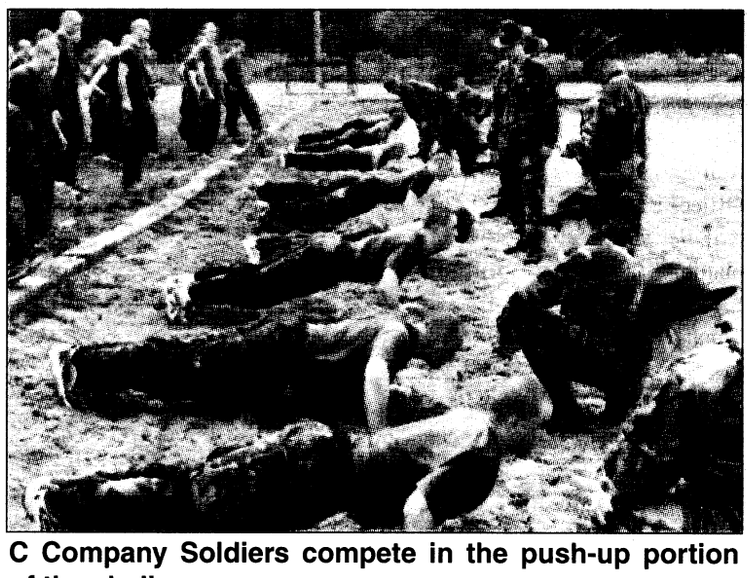
The final leg of the challenge was a one-mile run back to Gammon Field. When the entire squad arrived, they went straight into the rest of the events.

"This was way hooah! Our whole squad pulled together and did great! We just kept motivating each other and helping each other out. It was all a team effort. We all drew on each other's strengths and helped each other out. We used to have a problem with authority in our squad, but we now realize that someone has to be in charge. To get things done we gotta work together," said Pvt. Richard Allen form Citrus Heights, Calif.



All in all, the main focus of training and having fun while building teamwork and esprit de corps was accomplished.

"Our squad was at each others' throats!" said Pvt. Justin Daigle from East Hartford, Conn. "We were sick of each other, and the cycle had not even begun yet. However, when it all came down to it we pulled together and accomplished each event by drawing from the combined strength of our squad."



"Having this challenge at the beginning of the cycle helps build team work and unit cohesion," said Staff Sgt. Victor Baez, a drill sergeant with 3rd Platoon.

"This challenge is scaled back from the real challenge held at the end of the cycle for a lot of good reasons; however, it still gets the point across to the Soldiers. They are here for 14 weeks, and they had better learn early on how to work together as a team. The more they work together than apart, the smoother it will be for them to transition from civilian to Soldier."

The overall winners of the Cobra Challenge was the first squad, third platoon Terminators. The 3rd Squad from 2nd Platoon Warriors placed second, followed by the 4th Platoon Wolverines and the 1st Platoon Mad Dogs, coming in to round out the field. The winners enjoyed an afternoon pass on Sand Hill."

Trainees become Soldiers with ...

Cold Steel ceremony

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The early morning sky wasn't dark enough to hide the pain on the faces of the Soldiers from E Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment Oct. 6 as they made their way in from an event they will never forget.

It was the final road march of basic training, and for the 200-plus men — the miles they logged together were the last miles they would log as trainees.

It was shortly after 5 a.m. when the Soldiers rounded the final corner of the multi-mile march, and the miles showed on the faces of the young Soldiers.

Those miles and pain melted quickly though as the fire they gathered around warmed their faces in the brisk Georgia morning.

It was the light at the end of the tunnel for these men who had pushed themselves to the limits for the past eight weeks of training, and now, with the fire roaring and the rock music blaring, these men had accomplished their goal — they had become U.S. Army Soldiers.

The fire and the music are all a part of what Lt. Col. Edward Daly, commander, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, calls a Cold Steel ceremony.

"The ceremony is the marking of the transition of these young men from trainees to Soldiers," said the battalion's top officer after the ceremony. "This is just a way for us to mark that transition with something special that they will never forget."

Those unforgettable memories were courtesy of a fireside narration that began as battalion cadre hammered a piece of cold steel representing the molding the new Soldiers had undergone during their training.

The hammering of the steel continued as cadre spoke of the different steps it took to get the Soldiers to the point of becoming Soldiers.

"The ceremony is something everyone out here sees in the morning as they are doing PT, and it serves as a motivator for not only our Soldiers but for all of the troops," he said. "It gives them something to look forward to at the end of the cycle."

The ceremony that is laden with inspirational readings and music, ranging from Garth Brooks to heavy metal, not only serves as a morale booster and marks the end of the training for the Soldiers, it also is the first time these Soldiers are given the U.S. insignia found on the Class A uniform.

"This is when these young men are recognized as Soldiers," he said. "And this is for many of them a moment they will never forget."

For many of the Soldiers the moment not only noted the end of the training, but it marked the beginning of a new step in their career.

"This is a great ceremony, and I've looked forward to it all cycle," said trainee Spc. Robert Hawkins at the end of the ceremony. "But now we all need to look ahead to what AIT (advanced individual training) is going to bring us and what it is we will have to do to get through it."

Lieutenants complete FTX

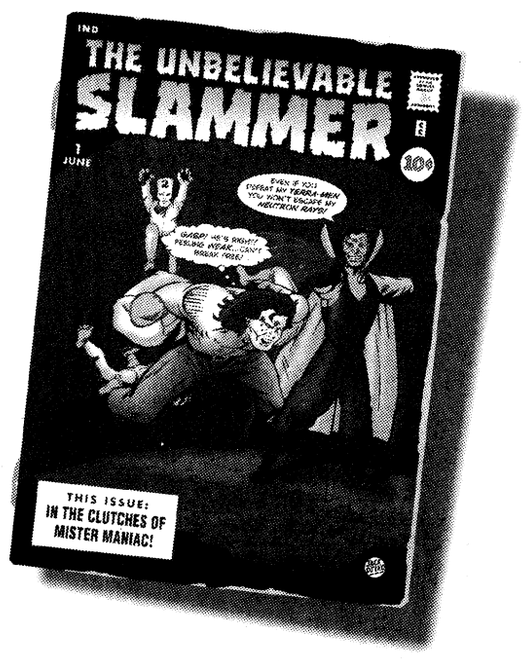
Staff Sgt. James P. Bernholz
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

With a combination of 14 weeks of Infantry training, 70 pounds of equipment and a torrential downpour, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, began its culmination exercise.

Fourteen weeks ago, 189 second lieutenants reported for Infantry Officer Basic Course 5-99 in hopes of becoming qualified Infantry platoon leaders.

Each officer underwent extensive marksmanship, navigational, and leadership training. For several weeks, the Soldiers received instruction on small unit operations, emplacement of support and combat multipliers, as well as platoon operations to include two platoon maneuver live fires.

The company FTX is a culmination of all training the students of IOBC 5-99 have received packed into a four-day continual operation. The fast-paced exercise is designed to test the students in leadership positions, focusing on their respective abilities to react and think on their feet. With a student of the Infantry Captain's Career Course acting as company commander, the students of A Co. were placed in leadership positions ranging from team leader to platoon leader, as well as executive officer and first sergeant.



As the tactical scenario changed from one mission to the next, the platoon leadership also changed. This gave the officers the opportunity to assume different positions of responsibility.

"This method enables the future platoon leaders to experience firsthand what effect changes have on the smaller elements of the Infantry platoon," said Maj. Matthew Coleman, A Co. commander. "It is a lesson in what it is like to be in the shoes of those they will lead."

The exercise began Sept. 17 with a warning order. Three days later, the platoon chain of command issued equipment, rations, and conducted pre-combat inspections. The platoons then marched to Lawson Army Airfield to issue the operation order, additional equipment, and ammunition. After rehearsals and backbriefs, the students assumed pickup zone posture to await the arrival of the aircraft.

The following three days consisted of a night movement to a first-light military operations on urban terrain attack, a four-kilometer search and attack, ambushes, air movements, and a company attack on a fortified trenchline.

"Every leader must know what it's like to be the led," said 1st Sgt. Brent Mitchell, A Co. "When you're cold, wet, tired and confused, that's when you look to your leader for guidance."

For the record, high-tech professionals are not the pocket-protector-wearing, comic-book-hoarding, wish-I-was-a-Druid, haven't-had-a-date-since-I-took-my-cousin-to-the-prom geeks you think they are.

But that part about making lots of money?
That's entirely true.

Dexter K-Club sends aid to children

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Hurricane Floyd is a distant memory for most Fort Benning residents, but in flood-ridden North Carolina, remnants of Floyd linger on. This devastating act of nature became the driving force behind the creation of the "ARK" project, which stands for "act of random kindness," and is the motto of Dexter Elementary School's K-Club.

Each year, K-Club sponsor Cy Dietrich, searches for a project for the K-Club to participate in. When he learned of the wide-spread damage caused by Hurricane Floyd, he placed a call to a friend in North Carolina. Shortly after he was told 868 school-aged children in the Lenoir County School District were directly impacted by the rising waters.

Dietrich said the schools in Lenoir County were not damaged, but many of the students and staff homes suffered great loss during the flooding.

The K-Club decided to send a care package. Eventually, the care package was big enough to fill a 15-foot truck, which departed for North Carolina Oct. 17.

The 15-foot ARK was packed with school backpacks — 870 backpacks to be exact — all filled with items including school supplies, toothbrushes, toothpaste, soap and bath towels. And stuffed into every pack was a letter from a Dexter student to a Lenoir County student.

"It is really nice to help someone in need," said Afton Cissell, fifth-grade student at Dexter. "Hopefully we can help make life a little better for those kids. It would be neat if some of the kids became pen pals with us."

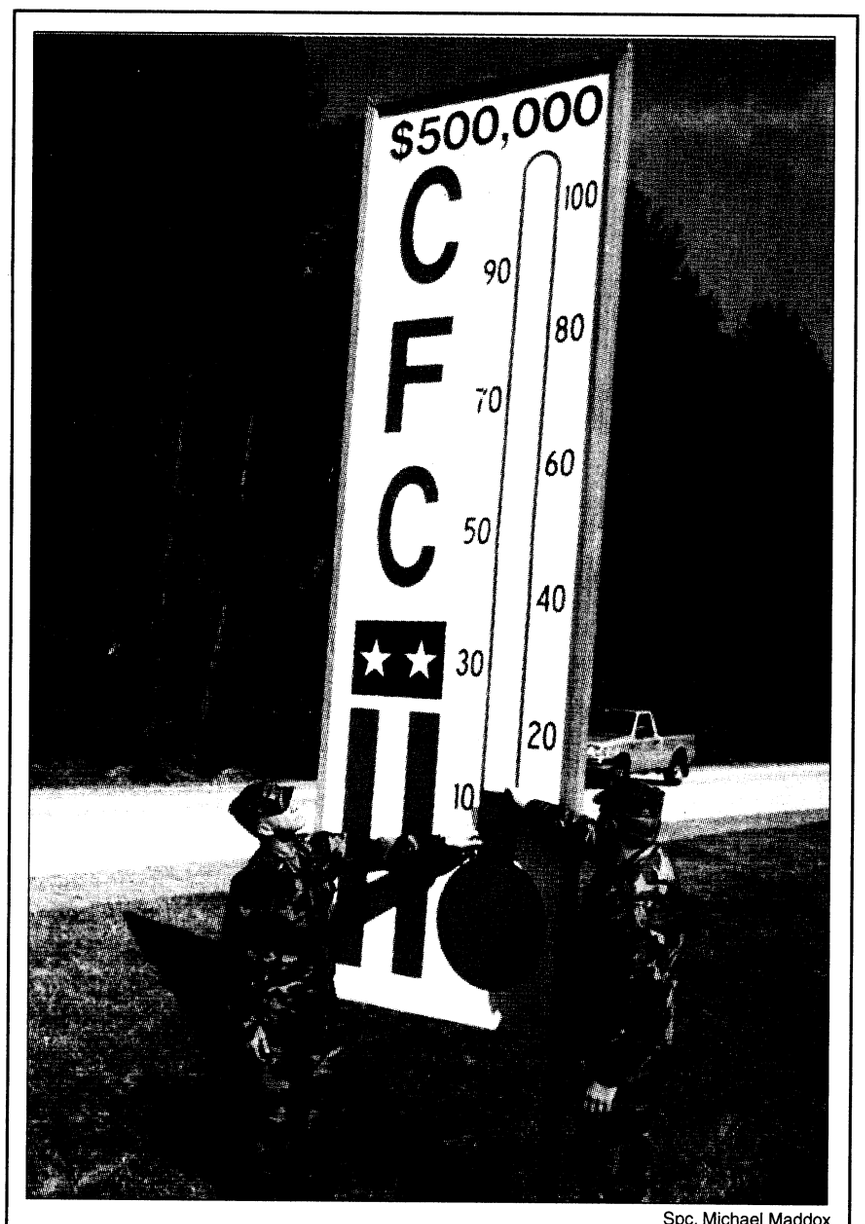
Along with the backpacks, Dexter sent $1,200 worth of cleaning supplies, clothing, diapers, baby clothes and non-perishable food items.

"Many of the children in this flood area are still in shelters with their families, so we wanted to send items that could help fill a need," Dietrich said. "We even purchased 200 dozen undergarments and socks because the children received plenty of outerwear donations but were in need of undergarments."

All together the staff, students and volunteers purchased and gathered more than $12,000 worth of needed supplies for the children of Lenoir County.

"I believe the money will come," he said. "But what this project has done for those in need and those who have contributed is worth a great deal more."

Students at Dexter are participating in contests, fundraisers and are actively seeking donations to help cover the cost of the ARK. Each week the children collect change in the classrooms and dump the change into a miniature ARK located in front of the school's office.



One day while volunteers were packing up the ARK a young girl tapped Dietrich on the shoulder and held up $2.

"She told me that her mom gave her money for the movies and instead of buying popcorn and a drink she saved the money for the ARK," Dietrich said.

"Amazing things have happened, and everyone is pitching in. If kindness can make life better or easier for a child, then the K-Club and this year's project was well worth the effort."

The ARK project will not stop with the single shipment of goods Dietrich said. The K-Club has made plans for future projects at Thanksgiving and at Christmas.

"He (Dietrich) is an amazingly creative and talented individual who always gives so much to this school and his community," said Vicki Rogers, principal at Dexter. "The ARK project is phenomenal, not only is he developing the talents of our children through his visual and performing arts program, he is also teaching the values of caring, giving and service."

Fifth-, sixth-graders learn chemistry lessons

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

While disappearing water, bright fire balls and melting cups may seem to be acts straight out of a magic show, fifth- and sixth-grade students at White Elementary School found out that these things were actually a lesson in learning. The students got a taste of this learning during a chemistry show Oct. 13.

The show, which was put on by Lynn Larsen, regional coordinator for the Georgia Youth Science and Technology Center, featured eight different chemistry experiments.

According to Larsen, the reason for the experiments is to show students that learning can be fun.

"This (chemistry show) just gives a different perspective of the way things happen, and it gives them the interest and insight they need to begin with," Larsen said.

Larsen explained each of the experiments directly related to a scientific property, and almost all of them were created from household products. To test this, Larsen had a small mound of powder she applied fire to, but nothing happened. She then took a blow torch and proceeded to blow the powder through the fire, which resulted in a gigantic fire-ball.

It was apparent that not only the fireball but all of the other experiments struck a chord in the students. After each one was finished, hands immediately flew up in the air. The room was filled with excited chatter, and everyone questioned just how Larsen had done it.

"It was awesome," remarked fourth-grader Gerome Anthony about the show. "It's just cool the way everything works."

Anthony said his favorite part was when Larsen added two chemicals together inside a plastic bag. The chemicals created an exothermic reaction, which caused the bag to fill up with air until it finally popped open from the pressure. Anthony added that he is anxious to do more experiments and learn as much as he can about science.

It was exactly this kind of response Evelyn Braman, enrichment teacher and chemistry show coordinator, had hoped for. She said the show demonstrated that science is all around the children and that experiments can even be conducted in the home with everyday products, which is extremely important to the children.

"I think it's the seeing and doing," Braman said. "Reading it out of a book is great, but it's just not enough. They need to be able to see and do it themselves, because when they are actively engaged that's when the greatest learning takes place."

However, it isn't just learning the science, Braman said, it's actually knowing how to apply it that is extremely beneficial to the children. She said it is crucial for children to learn critical thinking and problem solving skills because that is something that will be needed later on in life.

"The business community says that even though children are book smart, they are not work smart ... they don't know how to apply what they've learned. We want the children to gain knowledge and then apply it, and that's what we try to give them — a practical setting for that application."

Signs of batterers, battered explained

Rebecca S. Welch
Family Advocacy Program

Violence is passed on from one generation to the next in homes where battering takes place. Children first learn about the adult world from their families. What are your children learning if you are a battered woman? They could be learning that violence in the home is a way to deal with conflict.

In homes where domestic violence occurs, children are at high risk of suffering physical abuse themselves. Regardless of whether children are physically abused, the emotional effects of witnessing domestic violence are similar to the psychological trauma associated with being a victim of child abuse.

And the abuse doesn't stop there. Children in homes where domestic violence occurs are physically abused or seriously neglected at a rate of 1500 percent higher than the national average of cases reported in the general population.

Children may "indirectly" receive injuries when household items are thrown or weapons are used. An infant may be injured if being held by his or her mother when the batterer strikes out.

Additionally, children from violent homes have higher risks of alcohol and drug abuse and juvenile delinquency.

Possible signs of a batterer:

• A batterer is often extremely jealous and possessive.

• A batterer's anger is frequently disproportionate to the problem that arises.

Welch

• The batterer's anger is often displaced and exaggerated, with the objects of violence often small animals and property as well as family members.

• The batterer often describes the alcohol abuse as the cause of the battering.

• The batterer blames the battered woman for the violence and the alcohol and other drug abuse.

• The batterer has ineffectively dealt with her or his abuse as a child.

• The batterer has hit or been abusive with a partner in the past.

• Possible signs of a battered woman:

• She is frightened of her partner's temper.

• She is often compliant in order not to excite the batterer.

• She apologizes for her partner's behavior.

• She drinks heavily or uses other drugs to cope with the violent situation.

• She has visible bruises, or other temporary or permanent injuries without appropriate explanation.

Possible signs of an abused or neglected child:

• The child has unexplained bruises and welts, burns, fractures or lacerations or abrasions to mouth, lips, gums or external genitalia.

• The child is wary of adult contacts.

• The child has a preoccupation with themes of conflict.

• The child hides or withdraws from adults.

• The child experiences behavioral extremes including aggressiveness or withdrawal.

• The child is frightened of parents, afraid to go home or reports injury by parents.

• The child demonstrates violence to dolls or animals.

Abuse is scary. Physical abuse includes actions like being hit. But did you know that lots of other things can be abuse?

Have you ever been • Threatened

• Humiliated in public

• Continually criticized

• Called derogatory names

Have you ever had your thoughts and feelings continually ignored or had valuable property destroyed.

These are all forms of abuse. You may not be beaten, but if you have ever experienced any of these, you are abused. There really isn't a "better" or "worse" form of abuse.

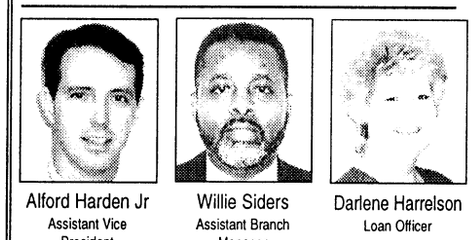
If you, or someone you know, is involved in a domestic violence situation, please call for help. The violence rarely stops without outside intervention. For more information, call the Family Advocacy Program at 545-3344.

Shelters also offer counseling, transportation and community services, including legal, medical and financial help to spouses. Individuals may call the Phenix City shelter directly at 297-4401 or the Columbus Alliance at 324-3850 for placement.

Abused speak out

"My kids and I spent so many nights in the car. About once a week, I'd put the kids in the car and drive off to avoid a beating. It seems crazy now, but for a while it was a way of life."

Jean S., former battered woman



"He beat me because dinner wasn't ready when he came home, so I made sure it was on the table at the minute he came through the door. He threw the food on the floor and beat me anyway."

Paula M., former victim

Yard waste program needs residents help

Walter Nichols
Directorate of Public Works

The leaves are beginning to show the first faint signs of changing color; a few have already fallen. Football is king. Halloween is only a week away.

Those first falling leaves are a wake-up call to plan ahead for fall clean up. With a little foresight and organization one can make sure all the tools and supplies needed to do the job are handy. Check the condition of rakes and lawn and garden equipment. Family housing residents, visit Directorate of Public Work's U-Do-It Self Help Center, Building 385 and pick up some paper yard waste bags.

Once all necessary supplies and tools are gathered, take advantage of good weather.

When cleaning up the leaves and yard debris be sure to recycle them.

Family Housing yard waste pickups will be affected by the holidays. Check upcoming issues of the Benning Bulletin or The Bayonet for schedule changes for all the upcoming holidays.

In order for our curbside collection program to ensure proper service to the Army family, everyone needs to do their part to help make it a success.

Following a few simple guidelines will do this:

Allowable items for collection:

Yard waste collected may consist of grass clippings, leaves, or tree limbs and yard waste less than three feet long.

Do not place soil, rocks, sod, garbage, household items or other trash in yard waste containers. Containers and bundles of yard waste that contain any prohibited items will not be picked up.

Containers, sizes, weights permitted:

The preferred container is a durable plastic or metal waste container clearly marked "yard waste only." Special paper yard waste bags, available at DPW's U-Do-It Self Help Center, Building 385, may also be used (do not use plastic bags).

Containers and bags should be used only for leaves and grass clippings. Limbs, trimmings and other yard waste should be tied in bundles, not placed in bags.

These bundles must be less than three feet long. All bags, containers and bundles must weigh less than 50 pounds. Containers and bundles of yard waste that are too heavy, or yard waste put out in other than permitted containers, will not be picked up.

Where and when:

Family Housing occupants should put yard waste at curbside by 7:30 a.m. Monday.

Units and activities:

Fort Benning's Yard Waste Composting Operation has moved to Building 4000, in Harmony Church, on Old Cusseta Road. Units and activities that have yard waste (leaves, grass clippings and limbs) should deliver the material to the above location between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. weekdays.

The state of Georgia Solid Waste Regulations prohibit disposal of yard waste in municipal landfills.

Do not place yard waste in garbage containers or brown dumpsters; this would be a violation of state law.

All yard wastes collected at Building 4000 and in the weekly Family housing pick ups are shredded, composted and used in landscaping projects on post.

This represents twofold savings for the community — reduced costs for landscaping materials as well as for waste disposal.

For questions, comments or suggestions, please call Walter Nichols, solid waste program manager at 545-1007.

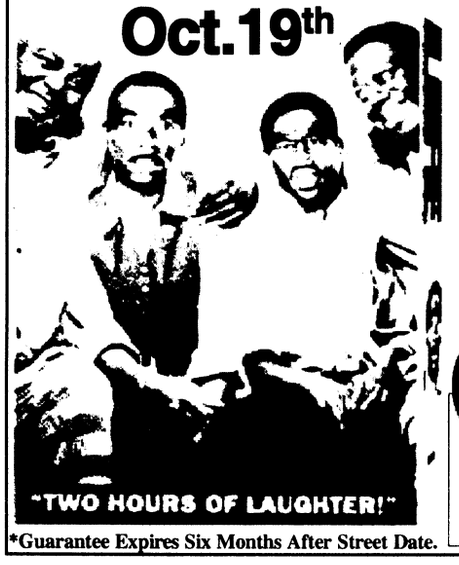
Veterans Day yard waste and schedule:

There will be no yard waste picked up in Family Housing Nov. 15. The next scheduled yard waste pick up is Nov. 22.

There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups Nov. 11. Areas normally scheduled for pick-up on Thursday will be picked up Nov. 15. Refuse and recycle collection in Family Housing for Nov. 8, 9, 10 and 12 will be picked up as normally scheduled.

For more information, call DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4232

Veterans Day holiday schedule for the Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center:



In observance of Veterans Day Nov. 11, the Self Help Center, including the Loan Equipment Section and Venetian Blind & Shade Shop, will be closed Nov. 11. The Self Help Center will reopen for business on Nov. 12 at 8:30 a.m.

For additional information call Dr. William C. Shirley at 545-1121.

Soul of nation sum of individual characters

Change hearts or suffer deficit of soul

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Sam Nunn, former Georgia Senator, said, "Our problems in America today are primarily problems of the heart. The soul of our nation is the sum of our individual characters. Yes, we must balance the federal budget, and there are a lot of other things we need to do at the federal level, but unless we change our hearts we will still have a deficit of the soul."

Integrity. How often have you heard that word tossed around? But what does it imply? Morality? Honesty? A House subcommittee estimated that one out of every three working Americans alters their educational or career credentials in order to get hired for a job.

A survey done by the New York Times found that 91 percent of the American populace lie regularly. And when you put this number up against 45 percent of Americans who say they are "born-again" Christians you begin to seriously doubt if integrity remains an important virtue in our society.

Reverend Theodore Hesburgh, former president of the University of Notre Dame said, "To the extent family life is disintegrating, kids are not being taught values about lying, cheating and stealing."

Paul Harvey tells the story of a young New York City school student who turned in a purse she had found, complete with $1,000 in cash.

Not a single school official congratulated her for her honesty. One of her teachers explained, "If I come from a position of what is right and wrong, then I am no longer their counselor." I'm just a country kid from Indiana and we have a word for such nonsense — hogwash.

Rupel

A million men gather in our nation's capital and are decried as being right-wing religious zealots simply because they committed themselves to such things as spiritual, moral, ethical and sexual purity; building strong marriages and families through love, protection and biblical values; and to reaching beyond racial and denominational barriers to demonstrate the power of biblical unity.

In this world of relativism, there seems to be no right or wrong, no black or white but just shades of gray. But let me say that if we are to survive as a nation we must return to the godly values upon which it was founded.

Listen to what our Congress proclaimed in 1787: Religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind ... shall forever be encouraged. (Northwest ordinance, Article 3)

Richard Dortch in his book, Losing it All & Finding Yourself, outlines four profound principles that will help you in keeping your integrity intact:

First, integrity involves our relationship to one another and our relationship to God. Put your hearts under a microscope and examine how integrity works in you. Always be people of honesty. There is no room for lies.

Second, anyone can lose his or her integrity. Without constant diligence to the little things in life, your integrity can quickly slip through your hands.

Third, integrity involves the wholeness of our inner person — our heart, mind and will. When our integrity is intact, nothing divides the wholeness of who we are and what we are about. To be hones, you have to be honest.

Fourth, integrity can be regained. King David said, "Let integrity and uprightness protect me, because my hope is in you." Spoken by the man who committed adultery, fathered two illegitimate children and had a man murdered. But David admitted his mistakes and sought God's forgiveness and God restored David to right standing with Him. Learn to admit your mistakes, seek forgiveness, and start living again.

I close with this statement from Col. Fred V. Cherry, who spent seven-and-a-half years as a POW in North Vietnam: "We must develop leaders with unwavering character, integrity, honesty, moral character and love. Young Americans, have faith, set your goals high, and aspire to be the best that you can be. Build your foundation on the values that have made great men, women and nations."

Erik Meyer and Kelley Maresca, White Elementary students, work on a geography project during a recent hands-on experiment.

White Elementary students discover geography with hands-on experiments

Shelly Moore and Dennis Gnas
White Elementary School

Fourth-grade students made some discoveries recently about how the world works. Using science lab equipment from the Fort Benning Schools Mobile Science Van, the students constructed solar watches, built mountain ranges in sand, measured magnetic forces, examined insects and looked for diamonds and other rocks and minerals in Kimberlite soil from a real diamond mine.

Using a wide-screen microscope to examine the crystals, Kristina Daniels was enthusiastic when she remarked that "This is fun and interesting." Meanwhile, at another microscope, Angel Coleman exclaimed, "Look what I got," while she brought into focus the head of a mosquito, some 80 times larger than normal.

Mike McGaha, Kenneth Dixon and Kayla Maine all made solar watches. The watches allowed the students to observe the Earth's rotation around the sun.

These types of activities can make understanding how the world works easier. Kevin Toliver, learned how much force is needed to break a magnet's supposedly weak force.

And from the sandbox, Garland Robinson yelled out to Roosevelt Bush, "We need more water." Soon, the Sierra Nevada, the Appalachian and Rocky Mountains, appeared, all built from sand.

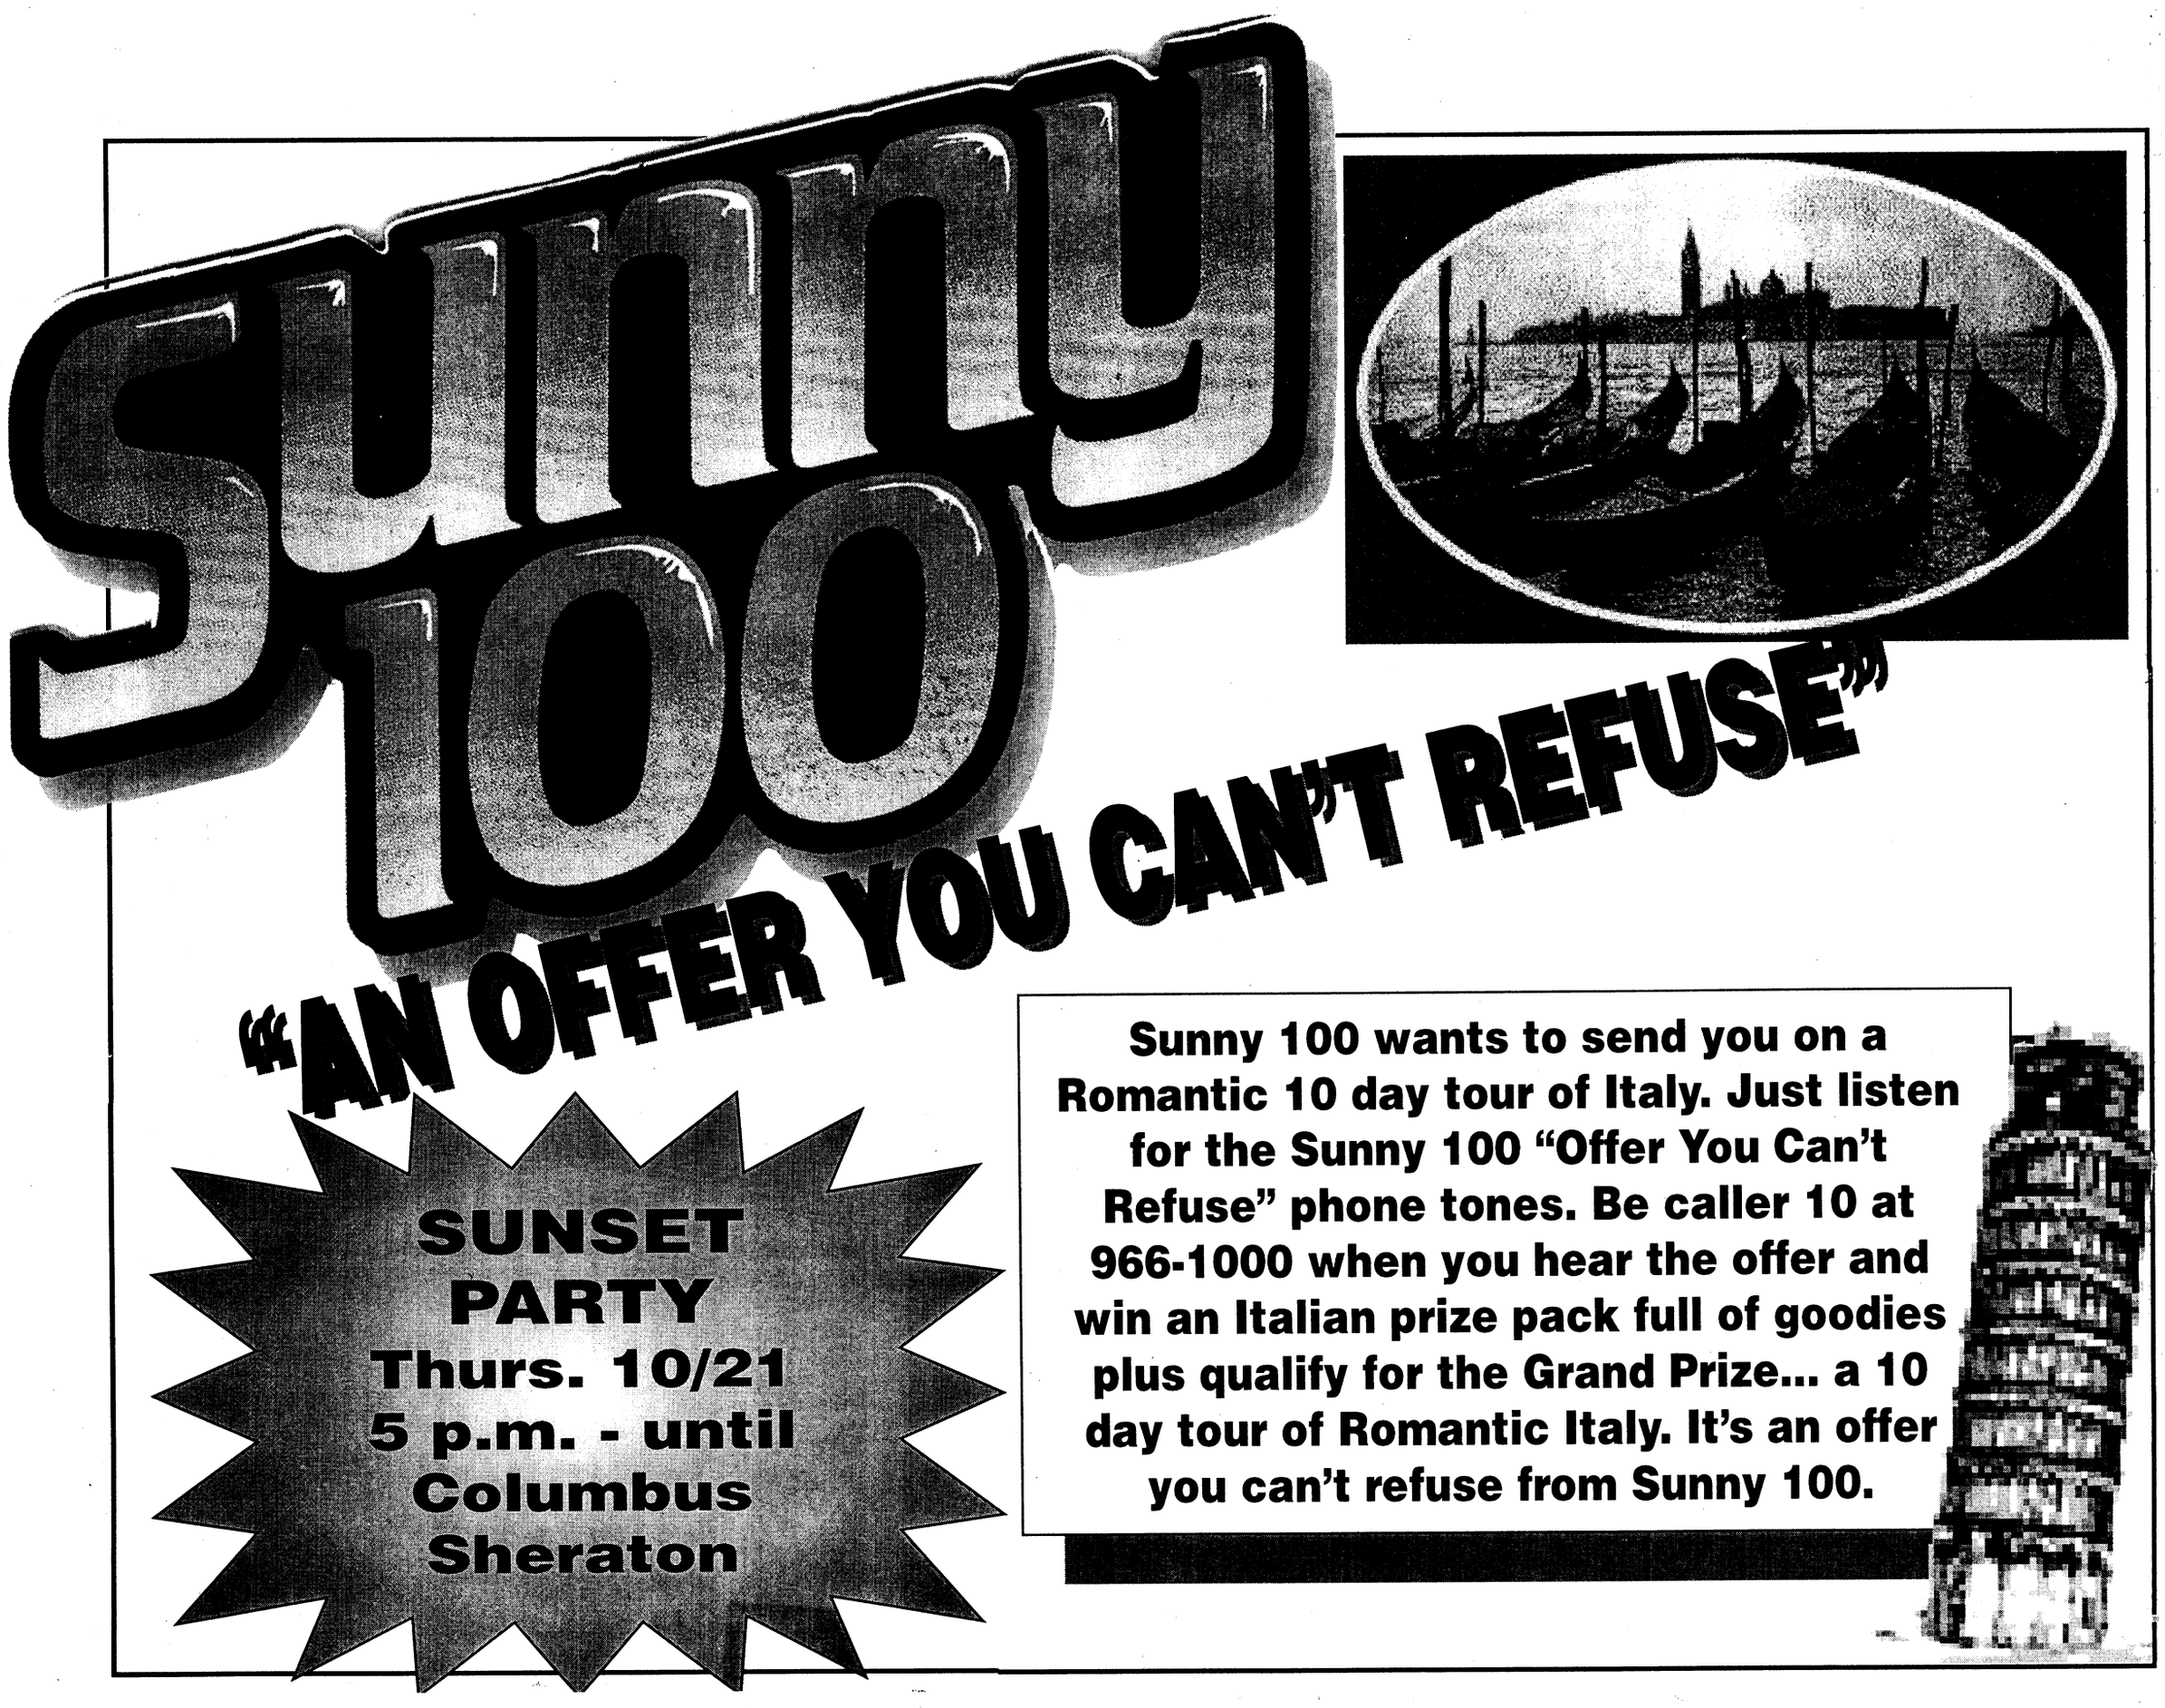
Third-graders build timeline

Cynthia Hill
White Elementary School

Third-graders at E.A. White participated in Literacy Place (our reading series) Workshop where they created Milestone charts to recall important events in their lives. By reflecting on past history, each student identified what is unique about his or her life. Then, as students compared their own milestones to those of their classmates, they recognized the experiences that were unique to each of them and the experiences they shared with others. This workshop gave students a chance to reflect on their past and feel pride in their progress. Each milestone chart was creative and different. Children used real photographs, tangible objects and many other interesting items to display on their charts.

They were great. This was an exceptional unit, which tied in neatly with their study of the history and past of the Indians in Social Studies.

Kids plot child's travels



Ana Smith
White Elementary School

Gabriel Federico-Matthews, traveled to 14 states to experience the U.S. before returning to Australia. One of Gabriel's assignments for school was to keep a travel log of his journey.

He also sent a postcard from each point of interest he visited, written as a "Where am I?"

Students plotted his journey on a U.S. map and read about and researched many of the wonders Gabriel viewed.

Gabriel is a member of Ms. A. Smith and P. Tate's fifth-grade team at White Elementary School.

We need a home

A 1-year-old male Manx cat and a 3-year-old male Dalmatian dog are just a few of the animals available at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic.

Many more are in need of a good home. Pet owners are required to pay for initial vaccination procedure costs, which can be anywhere from $8 to $40.

Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

Benning names best bodies

Zumwalt, Huff take top honors as body building champs

Bayonet Correspondent

Fort Benning held its 16th annual Body Building Open Championship at the Main NCO Club Saturday, and welcomed local body builders to compete in several categories, including the coveted Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning title.

Vigorous planning and coordinating with on- and off-post sponsors gave the show's coordinator and project manager LuLu Mitchenor, a run for her money.

Mitchenor, who has been running the show for the past three years, said the event continues to get more exciting every year.

"This show gives me job satisfaction. I have developed a close relationship with some of the competitors, because they have come back each year. "People don't realize the work that goes into putting a show like this together; it's a lot of work, but I love it," she said.

Her statement was abruptly cut short by the yells of an audience member.

"Hey, that guy has abs that look like fish gills."

The "fish gills" the man was referring to belonged to Phillip Davis, who was entertaining the judges with a very muscular and vein-popping routine. He would eventually go on to win the Men's Heavyweight Division title.

The contest, which played host to both military and civilian contestants, consisted of two parts.

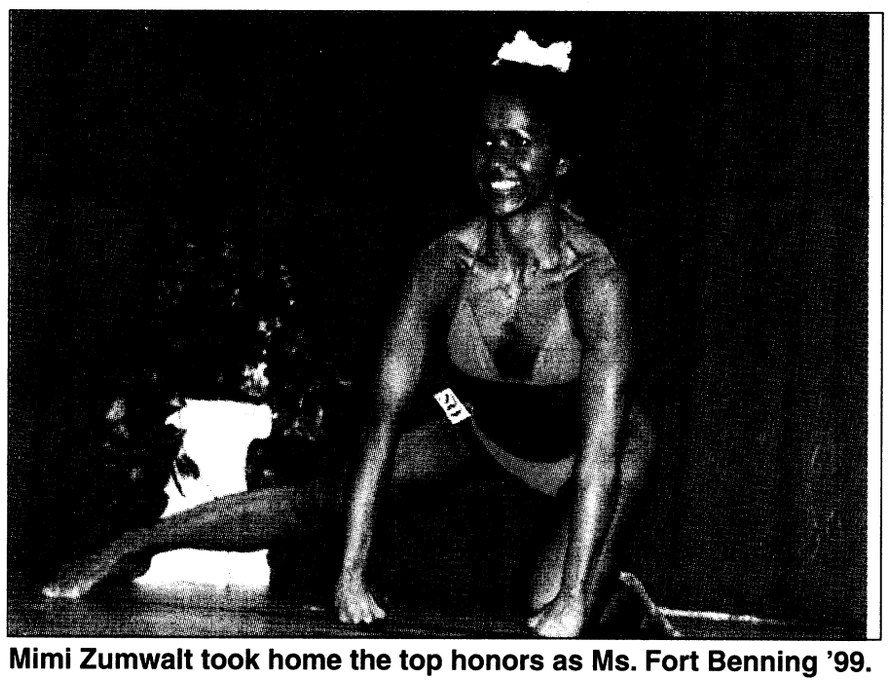
The pre-show gave judges a first glance and up-close look at each contestant.

While the evening show was a more in-depth peer at each contestant, it involved routines performed to powerhouse music, which sent the crowd cheering.

The second phase of the competition also gave the judges a final glance at the competitors, before they made their final decisions.

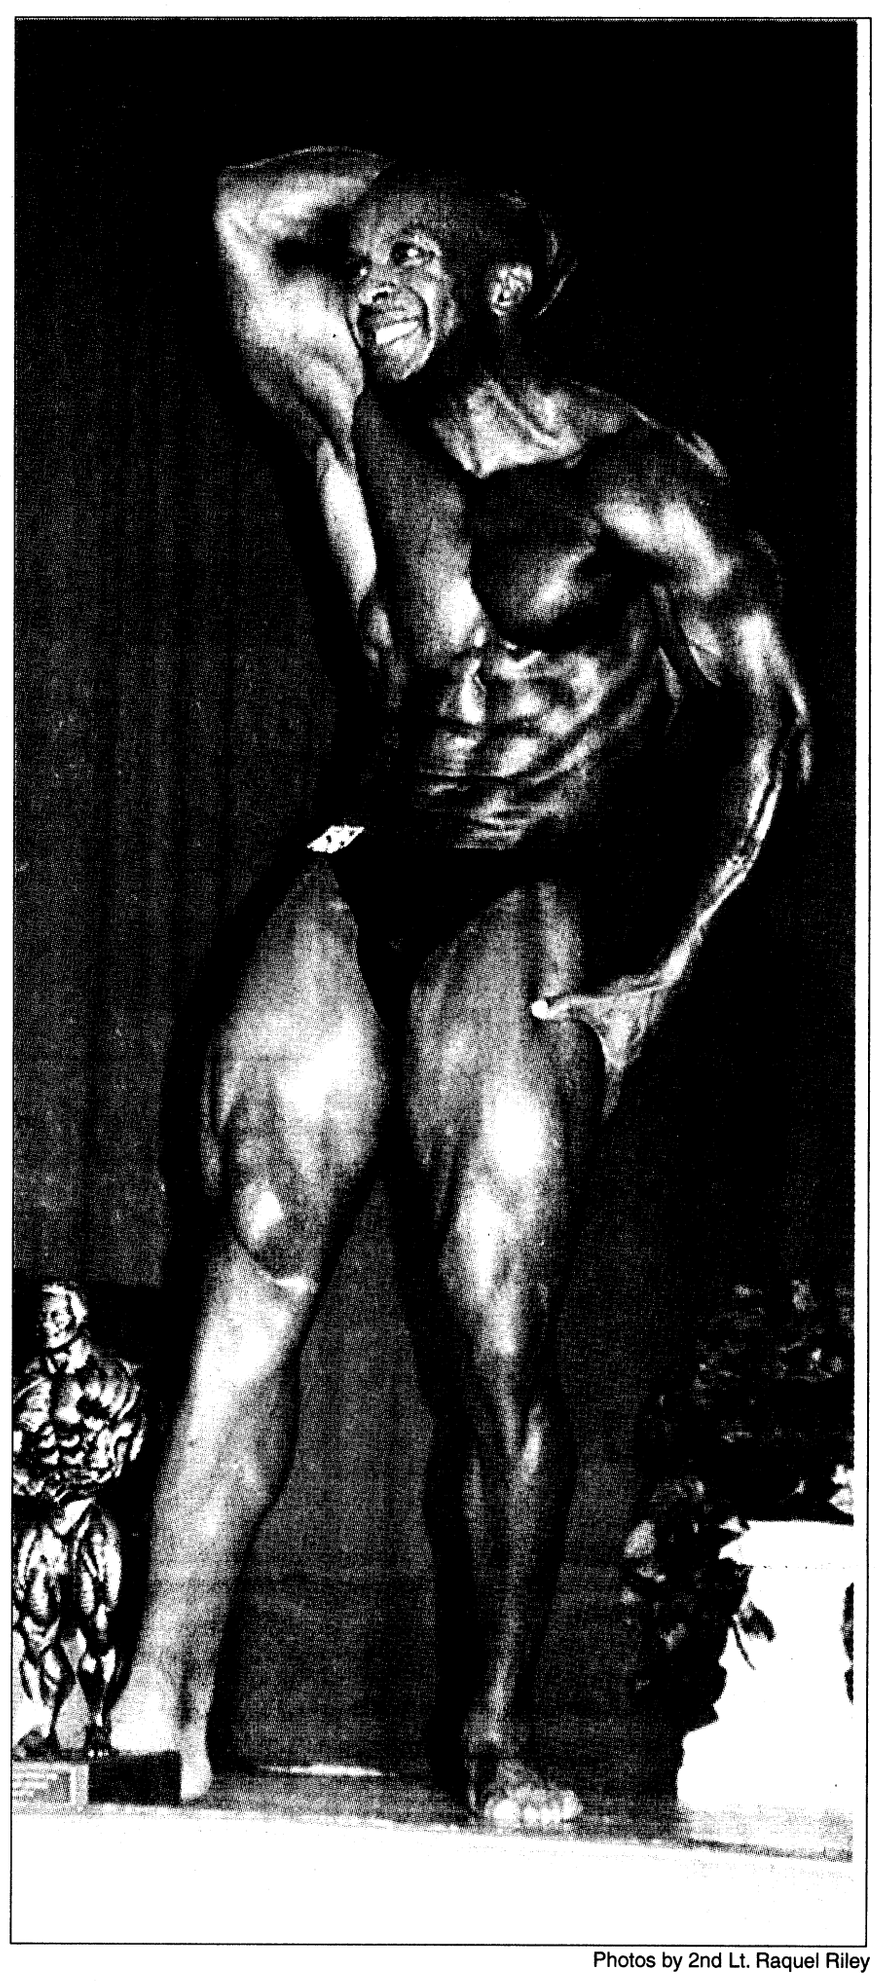
"When we look at each competitor, we look for their overall body condition, symmetry and muscle conditioning," said judge, Howard "Max" Mullen, a trainer from Fort McPherson, Ga.

At a glance, the time and effort each competitor put into the event was obvious. Mimi Zumwalt, who took home this year's Ms. Fort Benning title, competed in the contest after having a child only months before the first presentation.



"I wanted to prove to people that you can still get in shape after having two children," said the orthopedic surgeon at Martin Army Community Hospital. "I also had to show my aerobics students and my patients it could be done."

Other contestants' excitement was going through their empty stomachs. "I need food," said Norman Nelson, a contender for the Men's Middleweight Division title and maintenance technician from Columbus who lost 20 pounds for the show. "I haven't eaten since yesterday," he said.



So what makes a winning body?

Most of the contestants agreed the right diet is one of the biggest keys to competition success.

Local Soldiers score second at Army 10-miler

Fort Benning's active-duty mixed team came in second in their category in the Army 10-Miler Oct. 10 in Washington, D.C. They were only 34 seconds behind the top finishers from 8th Army in Korea.

The six-member team will present their trophy to Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne, post commanding general, early next month, according to Andrew Snoddy, Fort Benning's sports director.

Mixed team members were: Maureen August, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group; Kerryn Davidson, Army Physical Fitness School; Lucas Harvey, HHC 6th Ranger Training Battalion; Gary Newman, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity; Christopher Rizzo, B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment; and Curtis Southern, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Ranger Training Brigade.

The team's top female and fastest three runners finished the 10-mile event with a combined team time of 3 hours, 58 minutes and 50 seconds.

The post's other team finished sixth in their division, active-duty masters men. Masters are over 40 years of age.

The masters team members were: Stanley Doyle, A Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.; Michael Ferriter, commander of 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.; Frank Helmick, commander, Ranger Training Brigade; Jerry Manning, HHC, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.; Kenneth McDonald, HHC, 1st Bn; 29th Inf. Regt.

The combined time for their top four runners was 4 hours, 23 minutes and 5 seconds.

More than 11,000 runners — 51 from the Fort Benning and Columbus area — participated in the race.

Fort Benning's team members were sent on temporary duty to the event and stayed in the capital for four days.

Young athletes take flag football season by storm

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

The 49ers hammered their way past the Vikings 13-6 during the first 6- to 8-year-old flag football game Saturday.

The 49ers clean execution of plays, along with blazing running speed, proved to be too much for the Vikings defense during the first half of the game.

Early in the first half, 49er Diontrae' Hogan ran to the corner and slipped by the Vikings defense for a gain of 25 yards and the first touchdown of the game. The extra point attempt was incomplete leaving the score at 6-0.

The first Viking offensive possession saw three consecutive false-start penalties leaving them well short of a first down. Although the team practices to prevent this type of penalty, miscues such as these did not surprise Coach

CHAMPS: Post body builders score titles

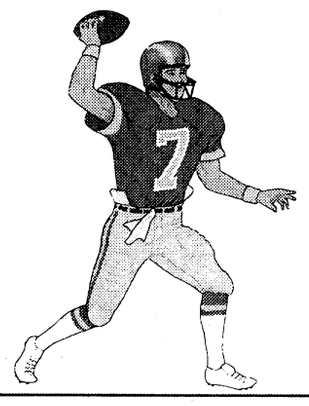
Foods with high protein and less fat not only improve muscle strength but build energy levels beyond their normal level, said Roland Huff, the competitor who swept this year's competition winning four awards.

"I did a split routine in which I worked cardiovascular in the morning, for lunch I worked two body parts, then in the evening, I focused on one body part," said the two-time Mr. Fort Benning.

He also noted having a good work-out partner is essential in winning the event.



Both Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning, who are required to be active-duty personnel, will not only have their hard bodies displayed on posters in gyms around post, but will receive a year membership from a local health club.

The final results from the women's competition left Zumwalt earning the title as the lightweight women's champion, and Cicely K. Brown taking home the honors of the heavyweight women's category and overall winner.

In the men's category, the final results left Huff taking home the honors as the lightweight men's competitor, the master's division champion and the overall champion.

Nestor Gomez took home the trophy for middleweight competitor as well as the accolade for the best poser.

FLAG: Youth Services athletes log gridiron victories

Michael Watkins.

"It is always a challenge to coach a game, because the kids are so young and seem to go in unplanned direction," Watkins said.

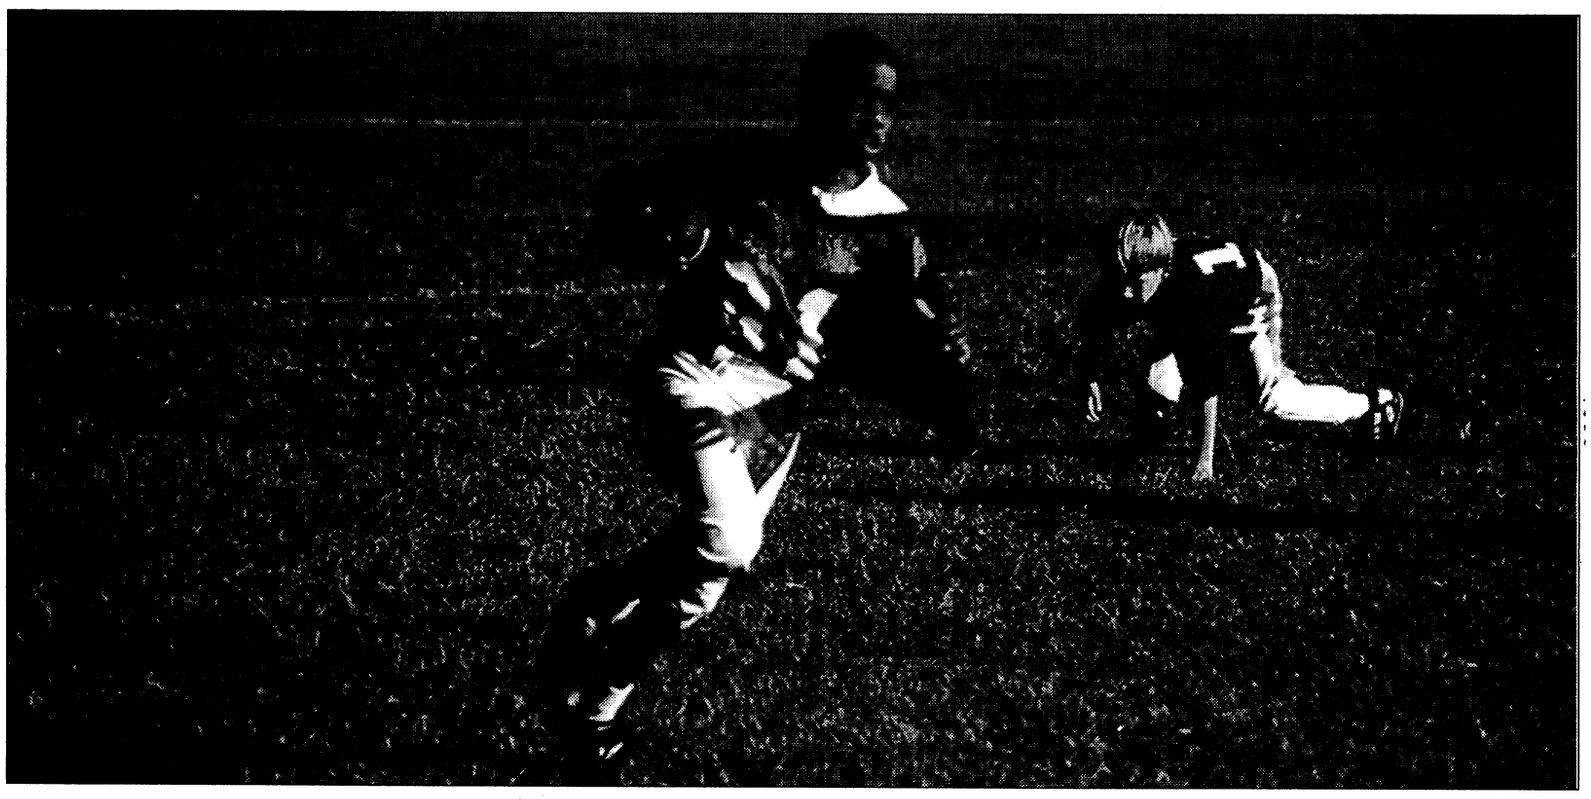
After a time out the Vikings regrouped, and quarterback Stephan Williams gained five yards on a quarterback keeper but remained just inches shy of a first down.

With a minute left in the first half of play, 49er quarterback Harry Hampton, found a hole and scored the second touchdown of the game.

The Vikings defense had a solid performance in the second half. Sacks by Anthony Tygant, Austin Smith, Durrell Thomas and Brendan Fox kept the 49ers scoreless throughout the back half.

Along with a sparked defense the Vikings offense came alive in the second half of play.

Running back, Shaquille Shaw, ran for several first downs and on the third attempt blasted through the 49ers defense for the only Viking touchdown of the game.



During the Vikings' final offensive possession, Crosby Adams ran for two first downs but was unable to convert the runs to scores and get the needed touchdowns to win the game.

Although the Vikings lost their second game of the season, Williams who plays quarterback and several other positions, said he loves to play football because he likes to pull flags and work together with his teammates.

"The best part about playing is being able to run with the ball," Williams said. "But no matter where I play, football is always fun."

The young football athletes will continue play Saturday at 9 a.m.

For more information on game times and locations, call Linda Laine at Youth Services at 545-3070.

Soldier scores senior men's champion biathle world title

Carson's Senior out-swims, out-runs 25 competitors for national division title

Harriet E. Rice
Community and Family Support Center

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — There's a new title-holder in a new world championship sport and he's a Soldier.

The sport is called biathle (buy-athel) because it involves two disciplines: running and swimming.

The Soldier is Army World Class Athlete Chad Senior, who won the elite senior men's championships at the 1st Biathle World Championships Oct. 9 in the Principality of Monaco, under the auspices of the Union Internationale de Pentathlon Moderne.

Biathle competitors run 1500 meters, swim 200 meters, then run another 1500 meters. The event was held under brilliant blue skies at the Mediterranean Port of Hercules. The running course was a segment of road better known as part of the Formula 1 Grand Prix of Monaco racing circuit.

Senior won by 15 seconds in a field of 26. A total of 300 youngsters and adults from 20 nations competed in four divisions: master, youth, junior and elite (senior). It was, literally, a painful victory.

"I was sitting with my dad eating breakfast thinking 'I'm sitting here in Monaco about to take part in what's probably going to be the most painful event of my life and hopefully the biggest win,'" Senior recalled in an interview from Fort Carson, Colo., where he is assigned to the World Championship Athletic Program detachment. "It definitely hurt. It was the most painful experience of my life."

The Fort Myers, Fla., native went to describe why. "(The event) is long enough and short enough that you have to gun it the whole way. It's a lot different than just a 3K run or 10K because you can get into a rhythm. There it was all out. The first 1500 was hard; the swim was exceptionally hard, and then the last 1500 obviously didn't feel too good."

It was a thrill and an honor to receive the gold medal from Monaco's crown prince. His Serene Highness Crown Prince Albert of Monaco is an athlete, patron of the sport, and honorary president of UIPM.

"The biathle is the basis of modern pentathlon, and although it has been practiced for 50 years, it has never been organized at the world championship level," Albert said.

Senior, who is also a modern pentathlete, clocked a winning time of 10:21:49, besting Mark Muller, Republic of South Africa, and Christophe Ruer, France. "I told myself I needed to be first going into the swim and because of that I had to take the run out harder than I was initially planning to, just to set myself up in that first (swim) position," said the 24-year-old, a graduate of George Washington University where he was a champion swimmer. "I think because I come from a swimming background, I'm able to deal with fatigue a little better than most people."

His coaches in Colorado Springs and the Army knew he had this championship in him. "Being a favorite for the first time in my career was definitely something unusual for me. I felt the pressure from that a little bit," he said.

While the biathle title was an individual win, Senior is already a team winner in another multiple-sport event. "The sport I do is (modern) pentathlon, and I have a long way to go before I'm the best at that. It's the shooting, fencing and riding I have trouble with." However, his particular skills helped the four-man U.S. Armed Forces Modern Pentathlon team win the gold medal in Poland at the Conseil Internationale du Sport Militaire Modern Pentathlon Championship in August.

With his eyes on the prize at the 2000 Summer Games in Sydney, Australia, what Senior really wants is modern pentathlon gold. "(Biathle) is neat and if the sport grows, it will be neat to have won the first (world championship)," he said.

"But I would trade it in a heartbeat to be the world champion in a regular pentathlon."

New! No Aviation Limitations

MBA's Level Term II Life Insurance Offers Full Benefits to Aviators

Until now, aviators seeking life insurance often faced limitations and reduced benefits. Now, MBA's Level Term II Life Insurance Plan covers flyers — with no aviation restrictions — at the same affordable premiums offered to other MBA members.

And that's just one of the exceptional benefits you'll discover when you check out MBA's expanded Level Term II Life Insurance Plan. Here are more great reasons why MBA's benefits soar above the competition:

- $10,000 Emergency Death Benefit. Just increased! This sum is paid swiftly to the designated beneficiary upon the death of a member, subject to request and verification. New!
- Waiver of Premium for Officially Declared POW/MIA. MBA is among the first to offer this compassionate benefit. New!
- Continuous Coverage Up to Age 70. Premiums increase only twice — at ages 51 and 61.
- Family Life Insurance Coverage. Purchase up to $250,000 for yourself ... and your dependent spouse. Spousal coverage available for as little as a few extra dollars a month. Plus, you get up to $12,500 of coverage for each dependent child at no additional cost.
- No War Clause. Life insurance benefits remain payable even when death is caused by an act of war.
- Living Benefit. Receive up to 25% of your coverage while you're still living. This benefit reduces financial worries should you suffer with a terminal illness.

Exclusion: Suicide occurring within first two years of coverage.

Great benefits ... at competitive rates!

MBA monthly non-smoker premium per $50,000 unit

AGE	PREMIUM
Under 51	$ 3.75
51-60	17.50
61-69	32.50

Eastern Connector Feasibility Study
Georgia Department of Transportation to Hold Public Information Meeting to Solicit Community Input Regarding the Eastern Connector Feasibility Study

The Georgia Department of Transportation will hold a Public Information Meeting to solicit comments regarding the development of alternative corridors for an Eastern Connector from US 27 southeast of Columbus. The purpose of the meeting is to present the alternative corridors that have been identified and to involve local residents in the process of identifying public concerns and preferences. The meeting will provide interested citizens with the opportunity to be involved in the planning process.

The meeting will be held from 5:30 P.M. to 7:00 P.M on Monday, October 18, 1999 in the Plaza of the Columbus Government Center, 100 Tenth St, Columbus, GA. Members of the project team will display information on the project alternatives and talk with citizens one-on-one.

Written comments will be received for a two week period following the meeting and should be addressed to:

Joe Muramatsu and Don Matsuda bless the new monument Monday.

100th Inf Soldiers dedicate monument

Sally Shutt

The bright morning sun warmed the crisp fall air and beamed down on three granite stones at Sacrifice Field Monday.

Like a black mirror, the glossy granite reflected the faces of the World War II veterans whose mettle the words etched in the stonework honor.

"To the 3,147 men of the 100th Infantry Battalion who asked only for the right to be called Americans, not Japanese-Americans, a right they so richly earned."

Twenty-four veterans from the unit — nine from Hawaii — traveled to Fort Benning with their family members for the dedication Monday of the $35,000 monument and the opening of an exhibit featuring the battalion at the National Infantry Museum.

One of the most decorated units in the Army, the 100th was predominantly made up of Americans of Japanese ancestry during a time when thousands of Americans like them were confined to internment camps.

In the course of preparing for war and battling the enemy in Europe, they also fought racial prejudice and questions of their allegiance.

"Each of us knew we were to do our duty, and we silenced suspicion with Purple Hearts," said Joe Muramatsu, president of Club 100, the battalion's veterans group.

After 21 months of combat, the unit became one of the most decorated in the Army. For every Soldier, there was an average of at least two medals presented. Nearly every member of the 100th was awarded at least one Purple Heart — earning it the name "the Purple Heart Battalion."

The monument joins those from other units on Sacrifice Field.

This one, however, received a Hawaiian blessing during the ceremony. Muramatsu and fellow veteran Don Matsuda waved leaves brought from the islands and sprinkled water on each of the three stones.

"It symbolizes the Father, Son and Holy Ghost," Muramatsu said. "It's a ritual to chase away evil spirits."

Recalling that the battalion was born during the worst of times, Muramatsu said, "Those who pass by this monument will remember not only the 100th, but the sacrifice of all American Soldiers to preserve our nation."

Edward Ikuma, 80, was awarded two Purple

Post plans for Y2K

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

With the dawning of the new millennium only months away, the question of what will really happen when the calendar turns over is looming in the minds of Americans nationwide.

While there are the few individuals stocking massive amounts of food and water in underground storage centers, Larry Lalka from Fort Benning's Directorate of Information Management's Y2K task force said those worrying about making the millennium change need not worry.

"The post and the Army began tackling the problem more than three years ago," Lalka said. "And after thousands of dollars spent and a lot of long nights the Army will be ready for the change."

At the heart of the Y2K problem worldwide is the practice of using two digits to represent the date when processing information on computer terminals.

Dates abbreviated such as 1999 with two digits don't presently pose a problem. However, the problem begins when the 21st century arrives and the abbreviated date becomes a computer-stopping '00, something many computers were not built to handle.

The process of making Fort Benning's computers Y2K literate is the task that Lalka and his counterparts throughout the Department of Defense have been aggressively pursuing for the past three years.

And now after hours of hard work that process has become as close to reality as it has ever been.

The process of making one of the largest Army installations Y2K compliant began in 1996 when the installation assessed the post's entire computer-controlled infrastructure and named the systems that were a priority to be revamped.

Once those systems were targeted for an overhaul or replacement, DOIM began making the changes to the systems to allow Tricare — don't let the name fool you.

The Army's medical program and dental plan may share the same name, but the two are completely different; and Soldiers need to be reminded that enrolling in one does not enroll family members in the other.

"This is not one-stop shopping," Cathy Hatfield, Community Health dental hygienist, U.S. Army Dental Activity, said.

"We have folks who go out and run up dental bills thinking that because they are enrolled in Tricare Prime they are covered. I receive phone calls from people frantic that they have huge bills."

To enroll in the Tricare Active Duty Family Member Dental Plan, the Soldier must go to his or her Personnel and Administration Center and complete DD Form 2494 or DD Form 2494-1. That information is entered into the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System and sent to United Concordia so claims can be processed.

If enrolled in the dental plan, a deduction will appear on the Soldier's monthly leave and earnings statement. Therefore, before scheduling a dental appointment, check the LES to verify that the deduction occurred.

"It takes a good 45 days for this to be activated," Hatfield said.

There are two types of enrollment: single and family. The Halloween gives more than scares

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

It is that time of year again when everyone dresses up like ghosts and goblins and goes around to mooch free candy from all of the nice people in the world. Yep, it's time for Halloween.

If the seemingly endless store shelves full of candy or the thousands of racks of plastic costumes weren't enough to remind you of yet another horrific greeting-card-company created holiday, quite possibly a good scare will get you into the spirit of giving to the hordes of ghouls that are sure to find their way to your doorstep on Halloween.

I got my scare and a welcome to the season the other night when I went out to the opening night of the Jaycees haunted house in Columbus (notice the apparent plug for the haunted house — hey, they let me in free and fed me. I gotta do what I gotta do). Let me tell you, I have never been much into the whole haunted house thing, but this one was great.

Just like any other self-respecting man, I won't admit to being scared. But I think you, too, will leave a little shakier than when you entered. And not only will this place leave you in the Halloween spirit, but the money it costs to get in is going to a good cause — the Jaycees. So it is a win-win situation really.

The whole experience left me thinking of all of those years I went trick-or-treating. Whoever made this holiday had to be a kid. I mean what other day in the entire year can you go around scaring people and beg candy from complete strangers. And to boot, you get to dress up in clothes that mom and dad would never let you be seen in, in public. It is a great day really.

Ya know it is a pretty good day for adults too, now that I think about it. When else can you give someone something as small as a piece of candy and they think you are giving them the world.

I'll never forget the first time I was allowed to be the official candy-giver-outer at home. You may laugh, but this was a big step for me because, I was the man when it came to giving out candy. I was a whole 10, I think, when first given the task, but ya know it was almost more fun giving out the candy then it was getting it. Just seeing all of the costumes and the smiles on the little kids' faces made it worth it.

You know maybe that is a lesson that could be applied more today. Perhaps that is why all of those people volunteer at places like the haunted house. You know I just got it, ya know the whole thing about it is better to give than receive. That is absolutely right.

So this Halloween when you are bombarded by a thousand little ghosts and goblins, try not to think about how many there are and how much the candy cost you. Try to see that joy in their eyes when you give them the candy. Trust me, if you do that, this will be the best psuedo-holiday ever.

Soldier receives thanks for hard work

Sgt. Adam Nash
6rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

If you watch enough TV, then you might have seen the new Army recruiting commercial where an individual says something to the effect of, "Thank you for protecting our freedom." You almost get the feeling they are sincere about what they are saying. I experienced this for myself recently.

While traveling back to Fort Benning from a school, I ran into quite a bit of trouble with the travel agency that handles the reservations and such. I left the school early, and my itinerary had to be changed.

I missed my original flight due to a mix up with the tickets. The young guy named John at the ticket counter was trying everything he could to get me on a flight home. I was amazed that he was doing this with so many other customers behind me. His reason was, "I am going to bust my butt to get you on a flight home. It is the least I can do for you guys (military)."

Seeing the questionable look on my face, he said, "I appreciate what you guys do for us, so it is the least I can do." I was thrilled that somebody was actually treating me with respect.

In my four short years of military service, the only thank you or any type of gratitude that I have received is from my parents. They go out of their way to say that they are proud of what I do and that they think it is the right thing to do. But I think that is the unconditional love and support that family members give to their children. This man was going out of his way by putting other customers on the side to help me.

Although he did not get me out on a flight that night, he made reservations at a local hotel and drove me there. He also booked me on the first flight home the next day. He was just a run-of-the mill guy who went out of his way to show some appreciation to just one of thousands of military personnel. The following day I made it home without any other problems.

I would just like people to know that there are individuals out there who do appreciate what we do and support us. There are still Americans who believe in us. In John's case he did all he could do to help me out. That makes me believe more in why I am in the Army and who I am fighting for.

Mayor recognizes hard work

Hooray! This fall was our "first kick at the can" in organizing the Post-wide Yard Sale event! The Community Life Mayors' Association worked hard to spread the word out to residents.

Unfortunately, a publishing error was made with the participants' addresses at the Montgomery branch of The Bayonet. Despite this obstacle, the Post-wide Yard Sale was a success.

The residents I spoke with on that day were satisfied with the turnout of customers. Some residents expressed their disappointment with the addresses not being published and hoped it would not happen in the spring.

The Community Life Mayors' Association wishes to express their appreciation to The Bayonet for placing the compiled addresses in the Ledger-Enquirer on the day of the yard sale. I personally wish to thank the members of the Mayors' Association for their effort and assistance. Last, but not certainly least, I wish to thank all the residents who participated in the Post Wide Yard Sale.

— Donna Delgado
President, Community Life Mayors' Association

Ranges in violation of safety

There are gross violations of safety on the ranges at Fort Benning. The past few years I have not seen any military vehicles on the firing ranges, only privately owned vehicles. This is the failure of officers and NCOs to practice leadership.

There is no control of the troops from the company area to the range and back to the company area. There should be mandatory regulations to prohibit privately owned vehicles on all ranges.

The present situation is that a Soldier will pick up live rounds, then get scared, then throw the live round away. Some child will pick up the round to play with, it will explode, and the child will be injured or killed while playing with it.

The advantage of proper leadership will give the military drivers experience in convoy driving. This will give junior officers and NCOs experience in leadership.

— Ret. Sgt. 1st Class Chester A. Bush
Fort Mitchell

Range division response:

USAIC Reg 210-4, Range and Terrain Regulation, dated Feb. 27 1999 authorizes POVs to be parked in designated locations only. No POVs are permitted on the firing ranges or down range. I believe the vehicles that Mr. Bush thinks are POVs are in fact the GSA vehicles that are issued to units by DOL.

Reference to Soldiers picking up ammo — USAIC Reg 210-4, para 2-7 & 2-8, OIC and Range Safety Officer duties identifies range operational procedures including appropriate ammunition accountability and instructions to include the amnesty program.

My observations are that units using ranges do use military vehicles when they are available; however, most school house trainers do not have access to military type vehicles and must rely on GSA vehicles and or POVs to get to and from the training sites.

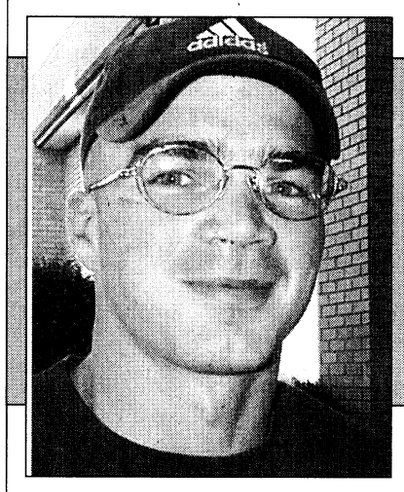
— Frank Harris
Range Division, Department of Transportation

Audience member appreciates Soldier Show

On Oct. 15, I attended "The 1999 U.S. Army Soldier Show: A Tribute to America's Heroes." Every year, Soldiers from around the world try out for this event, and there are only so many who actually make it. If you are selected, you travel around the world to all the Army bases to perform. Right now, you may be asking yourself what they actually perform, and the answer is a mix of song and dance.

When I was informed that I would be having a family night and would be going to see the performance, I was both unhappy and excited. I was unhappy because I wanted to go out and be with my friends, but then I was excited because I love seeing performances. However, when I actually got to the Sand Hill Theater, I realized it was going to be very enjoyable because there were many people filling in the rows, most of whom had probably seen it before.

When the singers and dancers came out, I wasn't quite sure what the show was going to be about. Then they started out with a dance number that related to the Kosovo crisis, so I assumed that it was going to relate to American history. I was definitely wrong. The show did include parts about American history, but there were also numbers that showed the evolution of American dancing and music, and other related subjects. My favorite part was when they were imitating singers such as The Backstreet Boys, Britney Spears, Michael Jackson and others. They were hilarious.



"The 1999 U.S. Army Soldier Show" was altogether a very pleasing production. Next year, I surely look forward to see what changes have been made.

Post celebrates Red Ribbon Week

608th Ordnance Company

The Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program kicked off the annual Red Ribbon Week Oct. 22-29. A breakfast and red ribbon cutting ceremony was held at the Officers Club Oct. 22 to mark the beginning of a week-long drug and alcohol abuse awareness event.

This year's theme is "Get Real — Real Drug Free."

"We want to spread the word to the community and educate people on abuse," said Sgt. 1st Class Cornell Swanier, the ADAPCP education coordinator. He said that one of the program's missions is to educate abusers and teach them to help themselves. "A substance abuser has to help himself or herself because their abuse not only hurts themselves, it hurts others around them as well."

Celeste Lee, initiated the breakfast with a rendition of the Whitney Houston song The Greatest Love of All. She performed the song with teenagers and children gathered around her, bringing tears to some audience members.

Col. Gene A. DeWulf, commander of the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) was the guest speaker at the packed-house breakfast. His speech emphasized a key component in a substance abuser's life.

"There can be no recovery if a abuser can't accept his problem," DeWulf said. He then directed attention to all leaders gathered. "The chain of command must get involved earlier. We don't need to wait for a crisis before we help an abuser."

The event concluded with the red ribbon cutting ceremony, performed by Col. John M. Mitchell, garrison commander, and children from the audience. The audience members were then allowed to take parts of the ribbon to hang around their mailboxes, trees and light poles representing this week's special occasion.

Military and civilians from the surrounding areas came to support the event. ROTC students from Shaw and Hardaway High schools attended the breakfast as well as students from local junior high schools. Kenyeeta Brooks, a seventh-grader at South Gerard Junior High School, felt the breakfast was beneficial to her. She said drug and alcohol abuse is a big problem in the community, and she tries to educate her friends by telling them the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse. "I tell my friends to don't do drugs, because they are bad for you."

Survivors rededicate monument

Reunion unites survivors of S.S. Leopoldville on Sacrifice Field and they add the names of Soldiers who were later killed in action

Sgt. Lori Smith
Assistant Editor

Nineteen-year-old Pvt. 1st Class Vincent Codianni, a proud Browning automatic rifleman, lay awake in his bunk.

He was listening to fellow Soldiers sing Christmas carols when he heard a noise and felt a jolt. Suddenly, he was ordered on deck.

Codianni was one of 2,235 American Soldiers aboard the former Belgian luxury liner, S.S. Leopoldville, now being used to transport troops on Christmas Eve 1944, when the was torpedoed by the U-486 German submarine. The men from the 262nd and 264th Regiments of the 66th Infantry Division were five-and a-half miles from their destination off Cherbourg, France, when the ship was hit.

The Belgian crew, including the captain, quickly left the ship using all the lifeboats. The U.S. Soldiers were left on board to fend for themselves; one of those Soldiers was Codianni.

Codianni and a group of men were ordered by their sergeant to go to the end of the luxury liner's deck where windows would protect them from the bitter cold. But as the ship began to sink, the windows became a death trap. Codianni said he used his entrenching tool to break through the glass and free himself into the icy water.

He was a strong swimmer, but he grew weak in the icy water fighting the raging 15-foot waves. "You couldn't swim — it just pushed you." But, like others in the water — he fought fiercely. He grabbed hold of whatever he could "I knew if I closed my eyes, I would die."

Codianni saw a light and as weak as he was, raised his hand. A 15-year-old French boy in a tug boat pulled him to safety.

Two-and-a-half hours later, the Leopoldville would sink and take with it the lives of 763 American Soldiers.

Codianni was hospitalized for two weeks before returning to the line. He was traumatized. "The shock was so great, I couldn't go home."

Codianni was the only one, of nearly 20 men whom he huddled with on the ship's deck, who survived.

Even today, he can recall the men's names who stood with him before the ship went down.

Codianni is now a resident of Waturbury, Conn. He made a vow not to forget the men who were aboard the ship that night — those who died and those who would later be killed in action fighting the Germans. And, over a half century later, he has kept that promise.

A monument on Sacrifice Field, honoring his fallen comrades of the Leopoldville was dedicated in 1997.

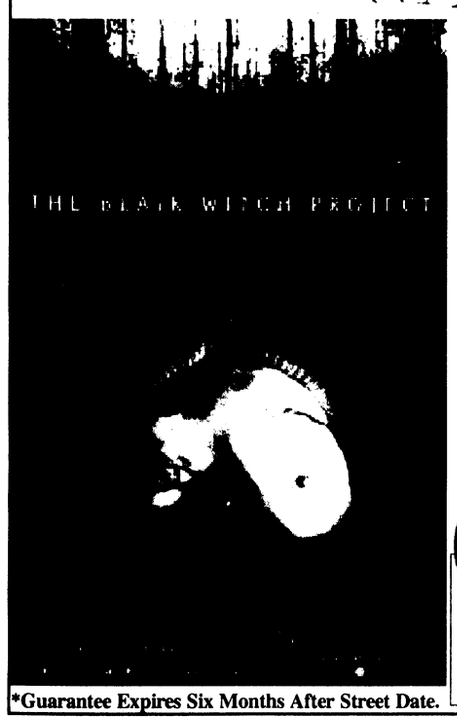
According to Frank Hanner, director of Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum, Codianni was the driving force behind a survivors' reunion held in Columbus Oct. 21 through Sunday.

Hanner said the ceremony was held to honor the Soldiers aboard the S.S. Leopoldville who perished that night and those who were aboard but later killed in action.

Approximately 200 people attended a ceremony for the rededication of the S.S. Leopoldville monument on Sacrifice Field Oct. 22 where a new plaque was unveiled honoring those Infantry Soldiers who had survived the tragedy but were later killed in action.

Sgt. Lori Smith

Vincent Codianni stands in front of the S.S. Leopoldville Monument on Sacrifice Field. He was one of the survivors.



According to a monument committee member, Codianni was the only survivor who could be found to attend the ceremony.

"I am happy that we have this monument built here," Codianni said. "And, I'm happy everybody came. It is worth more than money can buy."

A member of the post's command exhibition parachute team, the Silver Wings, lands in front of graduates of an airborne class.

Silver Wings support community with jumps

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

It's shortly after 5 p.m. on a sunny Friday evening as Staff Sgt. Greg Windmiller jumps into his car after finishing a long day instructing Ranger students. Like so many of his peers, he, too, should be heading home to make plans for the weekend off, but not Windmiller. He is heading back to work — only this time no paycheck comes with it.

Windmiller is on his way to meet the other 11 volunteer demonstration jumpers who make up the post's command exhibition parachute team, the Silver Wings.

The team members will spend this weekend like they have so many others, traveling from demonstration site to demonstration site telling their story in hopes of entertaining, as well as giving a boost to the Army's recruiting program.

But when Monday morning rolls around, all of the high-flying demonstrations will be put on hold as Windmiller goes back to instructing Ranger students and the rest of the team continues their jobs.

> "We are all volunteers who are simply doing what we love and donating our time to the Army."
> — Staff Sgt. Dan Leavitt
> Silver Wings team member

"It is a little tough sometimes to deal with working through the weekends without a day off," he said after a demonstration jump Friday. "But this is what I love to do, and that makes it worth it."

That love is what Staff Sgt. Dan Leavitt, team leader of the Silver Wings, said keeps the team going as they make more than 150 demonstration jumps annually.

"Everyone here loves what they are doing; that is why they are here," Leavitt said. "We are all volunteers who are simply doing what we love and donating our time to the Army."

It is that passion that fueled all of the 12 team members to begin volunteering on the team initially.

Before becoming a member of the elite parachute demonstration team, every member of the team must undergo a rigorous 30-day training evaluation by the team leader who encompasses every aspect of the demonstration.

During those 30 days, the perspective Silver wing jumpers must attend all training jumps, learn how to pack their own parachute, rig both smoke canisters and flag displays and perform all aspects of the ground crew including the demonstration narration.

"It is a challenge to learn everything at first," Leavitt said, "especially if you have never had any experience jumping like this before."

Although the challenge is one that could try any paratrooper, no one has yet to be released from the team because of failing to pass the 30-day assessment period.

"All of the people who have dropped out, have done it on their own," he said. "They find out how hard it really is to hold down two jobs and manage to be committed to both of them."

That commitment has to be complete as it shows through on every aspect of the show, Leavitt said.

"You have to be 100 percent committed to this to make it work at every level," he said. "By being a part of the team, we put ourselves on the parade field every time we put on our jumpsuits."

The group does draw quite a bit of attention when making an appearance at any location, and for that reason he said the team must be professional while in the sky or on the ground.

"We are the voice and the appearance of the Army when we are demonstrating, " he said. "We are not just the Silver Wings, we are Fort Benning, and we are the Army."

While it takes a high level of professionalism to accomplish the high-flying, high-profile mission the Silver Wings handle; Leavitt said it is one that all of the team members have a passion for and do well.

Leavitt encourages prospective NCOs who would like to become demonstration jumpers to call him at the group's headquarters at 545-1423.

Soldiers benefit from AUSA convention

USARSA speaks out at annual AUSA meeting

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

More than 25,000 Soldiers, Army civilians, retirees, defense industry representatives, business people and scholars attended the Association of the U.S. Army's annual meeting in Washington, D.C., Oct. 12-14.

Several Soldiers from the U.S. Army School of the Americas were part of the three-day meeting held at the Marriott Wardman Park and Omni Shoreham Hotels.

"This was a great opportunity for us, as Soldiers and members of USARSA, to learn more about the Army and to share information about our school," said Staff Sgt. Cesar Liriano, USARSA's Noncommissioned Officer of the Year.

Liriano, along with Cpl. Karla Illingsworth, USARSA's Soldier of the Year, and Cpl. Ana Alas, got the opportunity to hear senior leaders speak and feel the immensity of the annual meeting.

"Going to the convention gave me the opportunity to share with others the great things USARSA does," said Alas. "I was very surprised to see how many Soldiers really don't understand what the school really does."

Alas said by the time the convention was over, she felt confident that many people understood USARSA's mission a little better.

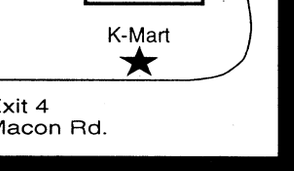
"Having a display at the convention really helped," said Illingsworth. "Having the information on the school readily available allowed us to explain our mission easier."

All three Soldiers agreed that the convention gave USARSA a much needed exposure, as well as helping each of them gain a better understanding of how big the Army organization truly is.

"It was truly amazing to speak to people about the school and have them say, 'Wow, I had no idea that you guys were really part of the Army,'" said Liriano. "I think we answered a lot of questions and cleared up a whole lot of misconceptions many people had about our school."

Some of the key leaders the USARSA Soldiers met were Secretary of the Army, Louis Caldera; Army Chief of Staff, Gen. Erik Shinseki; Sergeant Major of the Army, Robert Hall; Assistant Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Lt. Gen. David Ohle; Deputy Chief of Staff for Intelligence, Lt. Gen. Claudia Kennedy and the former Army Chief of Staff, retired Gen. Gordon Sullivan, who is the president of AUSA.

The Soldiers also visited the over 150 defense industry exhibits in both hotels which showcased technology and equipment integral to the "Army of Tomorrow."



"Being in our nation's capitol was a great experience. We got to visit the White House during its 207th birthday and ate cake on the lawn. We also visited several other historical sites, including the Lincoln Memorial and the Korean War Memorial. I hope USARSA continues to attend the AUSA meeting and allow other Soldiers to experience what we did," he said.

them to run after the century slipped by.

"There has been a lot of effort in getting the post ready for the millennium change," said Paul Yates director for Fort Benning's DOIM. "Throughout the last three years we have sorted through the hype and overhauled the mission-critical systems on Fort Benning so when the calendar changes, the post will continue to run efficiently."

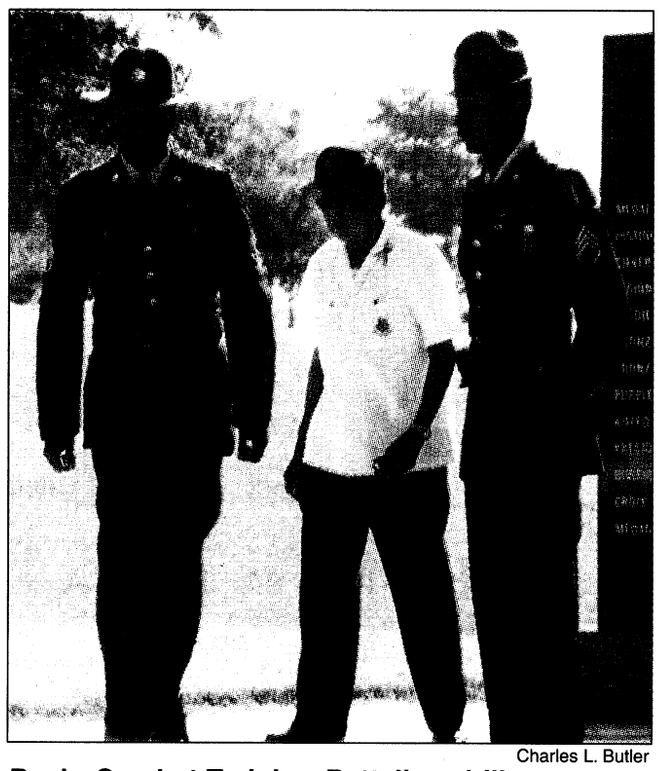
While Yates and Lalka agree the post will continue to maintain all basic services during the millennium change, there may be small problems associated with the change in the date.

"Some people at home are going to see their personal computers not able to comprehend the year 2000 date," Yates said. "But when all the computer is used for is playing games, checking e-mail and writing letters, is the date really that important."

Although the problem offers no quick fix, Yates did note the simple way to get around the Y2K problem on a non-date essential PC, was to simply set the date back a couple of years.

"I have a PC at home that my boy plays games on," he said with a smile. "To this day the date has never been right, or the time has never been correct, and that hasn't seemed to stop him yet from using it."

While the date change may only be a possible fix for home users, Fort Benning's numerous systems will see changes that are more technically in-depth and also at a bigger price tag.



A press release issued by the DoD said the proposed cost for the project of making the entire DoD Y2K ready would end up costing more than $2 billion.

That cost will be shown effective the night of the millennium change, Yates said.

"In case anyone would have an emergency during the change, the post has developed a plan of action just in case," he said. "Both the DOIM and the Directorate of Public works will have hotline numbers to call in case of an emergency during the change just in case of a problem."

Those hotline numbers are:
•DPW — 545-2135.

"For the average person, this isn't going to be a big deal," he said. "But that is because all of us have been working behind the scenes to ensure the transition process is as smooth as possible."

100th: Reunites for memorial

Hearts and a Bronze Star during his service in the 100th Infantry.

"It's a great honor to be a member of the original 100th Infantry," he said.

Ikuma joined the unit in June 1942 and was sent to Wisconsin for training before being shipped to North Africa. He served in seven campaigns in Italy and France.

His son, Gary, joined him for the trip to Georgia. The younger Ikuma, a retired Navy captain, was the keynote speaker during a luncheon at the Officers' Club following the dedication. He discussed what his father and the other men in the unit endured and how that affected his life.

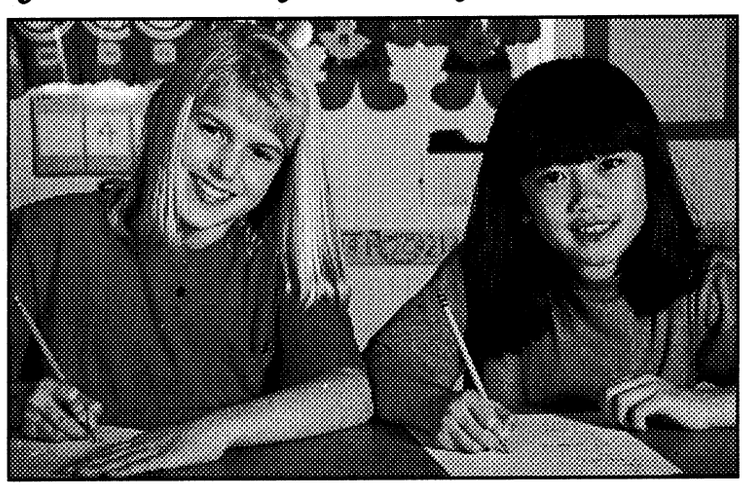
"The stories of what they went through inspired me to go, not into the Army, but into the Navy. In World War II no one of Japanese ancestry could serve in the Navy," the retired Navy officer said.

"He and his friends never thought they would make it through the experience," he said. "One of the proudest things I can say is my father served in the 100th."

Like Ikuma, many others have been inspired. Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. Eric Shinseki's uncle served in the 100th. And astronaut Ellison S. Onizuka of Hawaii took a replica of the battalion's flag into space on his first shuttle flight in 1985. The flag orbited earth 48 times. Onizuka died in the Challenger explosion two years later.

Today the 100th members who still live in Hawaii see each other often, some even daily. They are still formed into companies and hold company meetings, Gary Ikuma said.

The idea to build the monument was conceived by the late Col. William S. Pye, who served as a lieutenant and platoon leader with the 100th. His widow, Peggy, traveled from San Antonio, Texas, to attend the ceremony.



"My husband always said that as long as he was in the Army, these were the finest Soldiers he ever worked with," she said.

Gulf War team to visit post, host town hall meetings

Outreach team arrives Tuesday for briefings

Austin Camacho
Gulf War Illnesses Public Affairs Office

WASHINGTON — An outreach team from the Office of the Special Assistant for Gulf War Illnesses arrives Tuesday at Fort Benning to begin its three-day briefing schedule for active duty Soldiers, Gulf War veterans and family members.

The outreach is part of a program to military installations across the United States initiated in 1998 by Bernard Rostker, the special assistant. It provides Rostker and his team with the opportunity to listen to the concerns of veterans, service members and their families and to communicate how the Department of Defense is applying lessons learned from the Gulf War. Since the program began, the team has met with more than 51,000 Gulf War veterans, service members, family members and the public.

During the November outreach visit the team will hold a series of information briefings. Briefing topics include investigation results on reported chemical or biological warfare events and potential environmental exposures, DoD's force health protection efforts and resources available to Gulf War veterans and their families.

Troop briefings will be held during the business day. Family member briefings, which are also open to the public, will be held on post in the evenings. In addition, veterans will be briefed at American Legion Post #35 Tuesday and American Legion Post #267 Wednesday , both at 7 pm. Briefings will also be presented to local civic groups.

Bernard Rostker will preside at the town hall meeting in Infantry Hall at Fort Benning from 7 to 9 p.m. Thursday. The town hall meeting is a public forum designed to meet with Gulf War veterans, family members and concerned citizens, to listen to their concerns and provide feedback on how the Pentagon is applying lessons learned from the Gulf War.

For more information, contact the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office at 545-2236.

The schedule is as follows:

- 9 a.m. Tuesday at Marshall Auditorium there will be a leadership briefing.
- 4 p.m. Tuesday at Marshall Auditorium there will be a briefing for the 11th Infantry Regiment.
- 7 p.m. Tuesday at the American Legion Post 35 there will be a VSO briefing.
- 9 a.m. Wednesday at 901 Front Avenue, Columbus, there will be a Chamber of Commerce brief.
- 4 p.m. Wednesday at Marshall Auditorium for a general troop briefing.
- 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Chattahoochee Valley Veteran Center there will be a VSO Briefing.
- 7 p.m. Wednesday at Marshall Auditorium there will a family member briefing.
- Noon Thursday at Martin Army Community Hospital there will be a medical briefing.
- 1:30 p.m. Thursday at Pratt Hall, U.S. Army School of the Americas, there will be a faculty briefing.
- 2 p.m. Thursday at Sightseeing Road Chapel there will be a briefing for 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division.
- 3 p.m. Thursday in Ball Conference Room, MACH, there will be an NCOPD.
- 7 p.m. Thursday in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

single option costs $8.53 a month and is for sponsors who are enrolling only one family member. The family plan covers two or more family members and costs $21.33 a month.

Active duty members are not eligible for the FMDP. They will be seen in one of the four dental clinics on post. Reserve, guard and retired members and their families are also ineligible.

Other points to remember:

• A Soldier must have at least 24 months remaining in the military in order to enroll.

• Be sure that ID cards are current. If they have expired, the family member must be re-enrolled and wait the 45 days before they are covered.

• Verify that DEERS has up-to-date information on each family member.

"If they add a new family member, they must go back to their PAC office and get them listed," Hatfield said.

To get a list of participating dentists in the area, drop by the Tricare Health Benefits Advisors' office at Martin Army Community Hospital, Building 9204, Stairwell D, or by Love Dental Clinic on Sante Fe Road.

Hatfield explained the difference between participating dentists and accepting dentists.

Participating dentists agree to stick to the prices established by United Concordia for specific services. Accepting dentists will file the claim, but the family member has to pay the difference between what United Concordia will pay and what the dentist charges.

"We suggest you work from the list of participating dentists in order to avoid paying extra," she said.

For more information call United Concordia at 1 (800) 866-8499 or check out the web site at www.ucci.com.

Benning BOSS program nets win at conference

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

A conference late last month brought more than 1,000 of the Army's top single Soldiers together in a forum slated to improve the lives of the Army's highest population — the single Soldier.

And now nearly a month after Fort Benning's triad of Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers representatives returned from the trip, the impact and lessons learned at the conference have already begun to pay off for the single Soldiers of Fort Benning.

Spc. Tina Fontaine, post BOSS president, Michelle Young, BOSS Morale Welfare and Recreation advisor and Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Graham, post garrison sergeant major, represented the post at the world-wide BOSS conference Sept. 13-17.

It was those five days of training and brain storming that have spurred new ideas and possible programs in the post's all ready active BOSS program, Fontaine said.

"There were a lot of good ideas we heard up there and a lot of them we hope to use with our program," Fontaine said. "The ideas and education we got up there were great."

> "We have a great program. And after seeing all the other programs, it is apparent that Fort Benning's single Soldiers have some of the best programs in the Army."
> — Spc. Tina Fontaine
> Fort Benning BOSS president

Although Fontaine said she didn't want to give away any of the new programs in fear of losing the element of surprise, she did say that the programs would be an attractive addition to the post's program.

In addition to those new ideas and possible programs, Fontaine and her entourage also brought home another accolade to add to the Fort Benning trophy case.

The triad brought back to Benning honors as one of the world-wide conference's top event organizers.

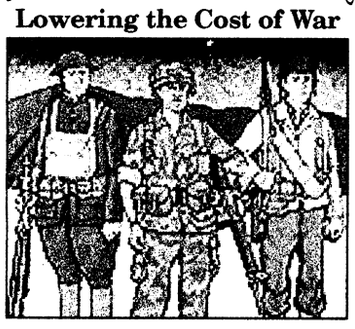
The three snagged the award for their efforts in last year's Asian Pacific Islander Month Luau, an event that she said brought more than 5,000 of Fort Benning's Soldiers to Uchee Creek for the event.

"We have a great program," Fontaine said. "And after seeing all of the other programs, it is apparent that Fort Benning's single Soldiers have some of the best programs in the Army."

During the five-day program that brought BOSS representatives together from throughout the Army, attendees not only gained knowledge from each other and traded ideas on BOSS programs, but the groups also received instruction from some of the Army's top NCOs and officers.

The attendees heard from speakers ranging from the sergeant major of the Army to Gen. John G. Meyer Jr., Chief of Army Public Affairs.

"There were a lot of ideas spurred by the conference," said conference attendee Michele Young. "The open format allows a free exchange of information that will benefit the Army's single Soldiers."



Young, the BOSS program's MWR advisor here, said she didn't want to divulge too much information on what the BOSS program may have in store for the program as it reaches the next millennium. But she also said as the calendar rolls over, there will be more exciting opportunities coming for the single Soldiers of today's Army.

Staff Sgt. Robert Moore and his 3-year-old partner Solo, run through the canine obstacle course Tuesday. The course, located near Harmony Church, is designed to give both the dog and the handler a practical education in how to overcome difficult obstacles that the two may encounter in the field.

Petra, a 4 year-old Belgium Malinois military police working dog, is one of the 16 military police working dogs assigned to Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Safety.

Military police working dogs train for success

Canine cops keep top post safe, secure

Story and photos by Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

It's raining, the wind is blowing and the temperature has dropped more than 10 degrees in the last hour, as Sgt. William Moore and his 6-year-old partner Tomba make their way through the darkened roads of a post housing area.

The rain-drenched duo are cold, and their frigid night has just begun as the Soldier and canine crime-fighting combo works its way through the streets of Fort Benning hoping to stop crime before it starts.

The two are a part of the 18 person, 16 canine force that makes up Fort Benning's canine military working dog platoon, and the pro-active patrol they are on is something they and their comrades do on a nightly basis to keep the best Army installation safe and secure.

For the past year, Moore and his four-legged partner have been patrolling the streets of Fort Benning, trusting in one another's ability to keep the other out of harms way.

"He's not just a dog to me; he's my partner," Moore said as he and Tomba made their way through a training course Tuesday. "He would do anything it takes to keep me safe, and I would do the same for him."

That bond began to develop when Moore returned from the 12-week military working-dog handler school at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas when he and the German shepherd were paired and began to train together.

"The dog and the handler are just like any other team," said Staff Sgt. John Lang, kennelmaster and military police working dog platoon sergeant. "When we initially pair up the team, they have to get used to each other and build a working relationship."

However, the relationship that develops between the dog and the handler, according to Lang, is one unlike any other partner relationship found in the military police corps.

"The dog and the handler are an unusual partner combination," Lang said. "They are best of friends, and they both trust in each other 100 percent."

That trust is a must, Moore said, as he and Tomba team up to patrol the streets of Fort Benning as well as provide support with Tomba's additional skill of explosive detection.

"The explosive detection support sends us all over the country in support of various VIP visits as well as the service we provide here," Moore said.

The military began harnessing the keen senses of canines for detection and force protection uses during the Vietnam conflict.

Throughout the past 30 years, the uses for canine's have evolved from using the canine cops as tunnel dogs to highly sensitive narcotic and explosive detection tools, as well as force protection.

"During the last three months the dogs have been involved in making six felony arrests, stopping numerous snatch-and-grabs, and countless break-ins," Lang said of Fort Benning's canine-cop teams. In addition, he pointed out, "It is hard to put a number on the total amount of crimes the dogs prevented since their presence is a deterrent alone."

That crime prevention power comes at the business end of a canine jaw that can pack more than 600 to 1,000 pounds per square inch of bad guy biting power and running speeds that compare to the likes of track stars, Lang commented.

"These dogs are tough," he said. "They are one of the best crime fighting tools the military has. They are loud, aggressive and are loyal to the end. There is not a one of these dogs that wouldn't take a bullet for its handler.

"They truly are the best partner an MP could ever have."

Not only are these animals the best partner law enforcement could have, Lang said, but they are the best weapon as well.

"These dogs are the only bullets you can call back," he said. "You can send one down range and if the bad guy stops, the dog will, too.

"What other weapon can do that?"

While the dog provides additional safety and a lethal weapon for the police personnel, Moore said his dog is more than just a crime-fighting tool.

"Tomba is like one of my children," he said. "He's more than just a partner — I trust him with my life. I know if I ever get stuck and am in trouble, he's going to take care of me, and I would do the same for him if the situation ever arises."

Editor's note: Be sure to pick up The Bayonet next week for complete coverage of the opening of the working dogs exhibit slated for 2 p.m. today at the National Infantry Museum.

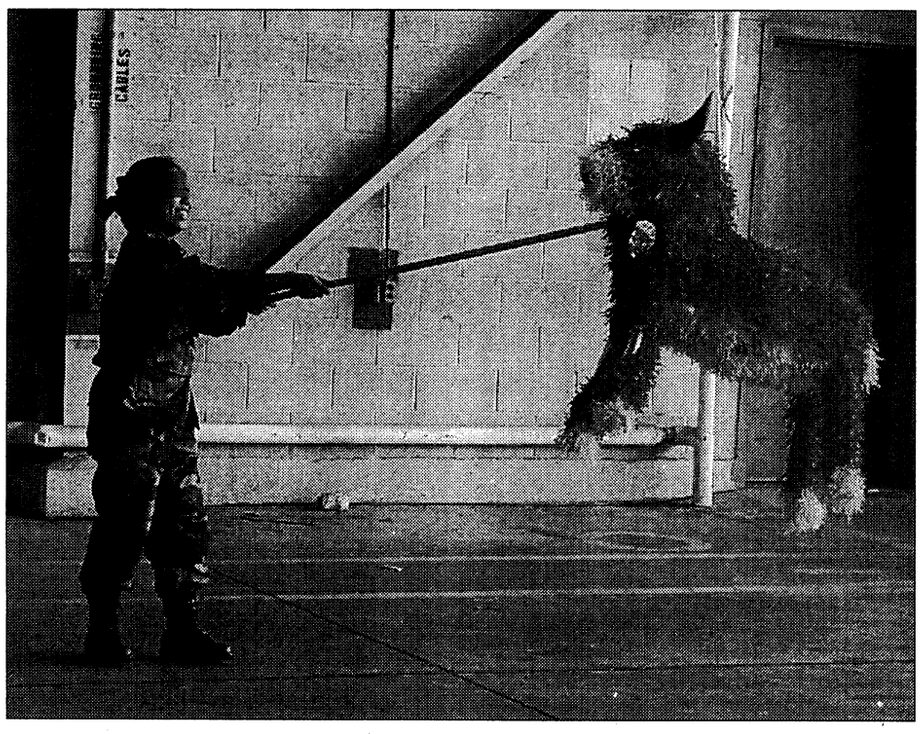
Staff Sgt. Brian Stammeyer and his partner, 4-year-old German shepherd Ex, search an area Tuesday as part of the terrorism exercise the post participated in this week.



Spc. Sean Nowikicki and his canine counterpart, Petra, search an automobile for narcotics.

Ex relaxes with a cold drink of water after working on a bomb detection call earlier this week. Not only is Ex used for patrol, but he is also qualified in explosive detection.

"Spouses of separating Soldiers are reminded and encouraged to participate in ACAP transition services and events," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services Manager.

"It is recommended that spouses begin at the same starting point as their sponsor by attending the three-day ACAP separation benefits and services briefings and transition workshops. Spouses of retiring Soldiers should attend to fully understand survivor benefit plan options," Wight said.

The ACAP presentation program and workshops begin Monday at 8:30 a.m. in Infantry Hall every week that does not have a holiday. Presentations are modified for retiring service members and spouses the second week of the month. Call the ACAP Center at 545-2308/2309 to confirm dates and times.

The second day of the three-day ACAP presentation details the requirements for a successful job search. Spouses of separating Soldiers who have never entered the job market or who want to re-enter the work force will find this workshop as beneficial as it is to the service member.

Individual counseling sessions are also available for spouses at the ACAP center in Soldiers Plaza, Building 2634. Individual job or career counseling for spouses help identify and assess employment skills, establish goals, and identify potential employment opportunities.

Separating Army families are provided many services to assist with transition back to civilian life and the civilian job market. Spouses interested in finding out more about their ACAP job assistance benefit can call the Fort Benning ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Pumpkin patch brings smiles

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

McBride students grinned from ear-to-ear when they first laid eyes on the pumpkin patch. Most of the students, who thought pumpkins came from grocery stores, had never seen pumpkins actually growing from plants. This exposure to a new experience is just what Nancy Gordy had in mind when she became the sponsor for McBride's Horticulture Club last year

"I grew up on a farm — gardening is something I love to do, and I wanted to share that with the children," Gordy said. "Most military children have never lived on or near a farm and are excited about growing plants."

Although little pumpkins were growing in the school's garden when the children started back this fall, students who participated in the H-Club last spring planted and maintained a garden that yielded, broccoli, lettuce, potatoes, onions, carrots and radishes.

Throughout the year, more than 25 H-Club members learned about; why and where seeds come from, how to grow plants and the effects insects have on plants such as the role bumblebees play in the pollination process.

Survivor, agencies attend gathering

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A survivor of family violence, the woman stood at the podium Oct. 20, tears in her eyes, and read from her journal.

"Dear God, I'm having trouble praying, so I'm going to write to you. Why me?"

Other excerpts followed.

"There are so many people and so many questions."

The "people" were medical, law enforcement, social agency and military personnel.

Two years later after writing those words, she spoke to similar professionals at Fort Benning's Victim-Witness Assistance Conference detailing her experiences and offering personal insight into how they could better do their jobs.

"The first few days are the most important. How you deal with a family during those days can make or break the case," she said.

"You are there to listen and give help. You are not there to tell them (the victims) what you would have done. If you don't know the answers, find the other resources and refer them to the professionals."

To the commanders and first sergeants in the audience, the survivor added, "You have to take an accusation seriously."

The event, sponsored by the Judge Advocate General and Fort Benning's Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, attracted more than 80 attendees, including active duty and civilians. It was part of the Army's goal to revitalize and create more interest in victim programs, according to Maj. Margaret Baines, manager of the Army's victim-witness program, Office of the Judge Advocate General, Washington, D.C.

Baines encouraged attendees to network with the various agencies represented at the conference. Chaplains, medical personnel from Martin Army Community Hospital and agents from Fort Benning's Criminal Investigation Division attended, as well as civilians from the Muscogee County courts system and the U.S. Attorney's office in Montgomery, Ala.

Baines introduced Cenneta Gunn, Fort Benning's victim-witness liaison. Gunn holds a dual job in the office of the Staff Judge Advocate; she is also a claims examiner.

The survivor who spoke was Gunn's first case after being

Trick or Treat

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Saturday (the only day "trick or treating" is permitted).

• Children under 13 years old are allowed to "trick or treat." An older person (14 years or older) must accompany pre-school children.

• Limit "trick or treating" only to the housing area in which the participants reside, and approach only residences with lighted entry ways.

• Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

• Wear masks or head coverings that do not restrict vision. Use colorful facial makeup as much as possible.

• Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

• Ensure children carry flashlights after dark. If a child carries a pumpkin, it should be lit with a battery device, not a candle.

• Never let your child eat anything until you have inspected the treats. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes "trick or treating."

DPW prepares for bulk leaf pickup

Directorate of Public Works

DPW is planning for bulk leaf pick-up with its special vacuum truck. DPW expects to begin these pick-ups in late November or early December. Until that time, put out bundles of yard waste or leaves in paper bags (available at the Self Help Store, Building 385) or durable containers for the regular Monday leaf and waste pickups. Once the vacuum truck is running, leaves in one big pile at the curb for pick-up.

The new bulk leaf pick-up schedule will be published next month in The Bayonet.

DPW plans minimal staffing levels Nov. 8

DPW will hold a Town Hall Meeting for all employees from 2 to 4:30 p.m. Nov. 8. Shop staffing levels will be minimal to allow as many DPW personnel as possible to participate. The DPW Work Reception Section will coordinate all services and emergency response. To call in a service order or report an emergency, call the Work Order Desk at 545-2135.

For more information, call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, at 545-2117

Veterans Day Schedules: Yard waste, refuse and recycle collection

There will be no yard waste picked up in Family Housing Nov.15. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be Nov. 22. There will be no refuse or recycle pickups Nov. 11. Children help clean 'Hooch

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

National Make a Difference Day was Saturday and both children and adults made a difference along the shores of the Chattahoochee River and in Columbus and Fort Benning while taking part in the local Clean the 'Hooch campaign.

Environmental clubs from Dexter, Faith and White schools participated in the day's activities along with more than 3,000 other volunteers who picked up paper, aluminum cans, plastic products and other bits of unwanted trash from the shores of the Chattahoochee and other locations.

Jim Phillips, with the Chattahoochee RiverKeepers, said this was the most successful of previous clean-up attempts not only because of the number of volunteers but because it encompassed four counties in an effort to protect the environment.

"This year, because of the number of volunteers, we expanded the clean-up area to include school campuses and local parks," said Gloria Weston-Smart, executive director with Keep Columbus Beautiful.

Dexter third-grader Caitee Britt was excited about picking up trash along the stream that runs past Infantry Hall and through Stewart-Watson fields before emptying into the Upatoi.

"I want to help the 'Hooch," she said. "I like it. I like the Earth, and I want to keep it clean." Caitee's twin sister Carree, brother Reece, 2-year-old sister Chloee and mom, Cindy, helped her in removing the trash from the stream bed.

"Mostly what we are teaching the children is awareness," said Dexter first-grade teacher Linda Turner in explaining the amount of trash accumulated. The children segregated and tallied the types of trash found.

Although the Dexter volunteers found little, Faith students who were picking up near Uchee Creek found plenty.

"We found more than 174 beer bottles," said eighth-grader Michael Doud. "There were so many of them we didn't have enough time to pick them all up."

However, the Faith volunteers weren't alone in picking up the Uchee area.

Employees of the Directorate of Public Works, and Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry, 13th Combat Support Battalion and 63rd Engineer Company started with the clean-up project Oct. 22. More than 60 Soldiers and civilians picked up trash in the areas near Eddy Bridge, Engineers' Landing and Uchee Creek Marina.

Using gloves, rakes, chains and boats the DPW crew picked up more than 7 tons of garbage that included the normal type of trash plus tires, furniture and two washing machines, a motorcycle helmet and 19 different car parts, according to Polly Gustafson who works in the environmental branch of the Directorate of Public Works.

"Our group used the boats to off-load people along the beaches to pick up the trash," said Gustafson. "We cleaned up 2 and 1/2 miles along the westside of the river.

"The best part of the day for me was introducing a new environment to some of the volunteers who had never been on a boat or on the river," she said.

John Brent, chief of the DPW Environmental Branch said the organization participated in picking up the river because it was the right thing to do.

"This was a good opportunity to help not only Fort Benning but the area where we live. We are hoping this will become an annual event for DPW," Brent said.

This was the fifth year for an organized clean-up, according to Weston-Smart, with the most volunteers.

After spending the morning picking up garbage, the volunteers picked up a free T-shirt, water bottle and lunch at Golden Park. Students from Dexter sang a song written by Fort Benning's Teacher of the Year, Cy Dietrich.

The River's Alive
by Cy Dietrich

Chorus:
The River's alive and well,
How can anyone tell,
The fish are alive and the water is clean,
We picked up the trash, it's a beautiful scene,
The river's alive and well.

Verse:
I like to fish for a spell,
But I can't stand the terrible smell!
The people who go there, it seems like they don't care,
Look, and it's not hard to tell.
Let's give it a sweep with our broom,
So each person can have lots of room,
It takes lots of cash just to pick up the trash,
Clean up is never too soon.

Q: I am in debt way over my head! I don't know how I can possibly pay off all of my debts. When is bankruptcy an option? How does it work? What are the differences between Chapter 7 and 13 bankruptcies?

A: Some people who file for bankruptcy are credit abusers or are financially irresponsible. But, average-working families can find themselves in financial trouble too. The sudden, unexpected loss of a job, medical bills, a divorce or even a natural disaster can quickly wipe out one's life savings. Therefore, for many, bankruptcy offers a second financial life.

Bankruptcy provides a mechanism by which many, but not all, debts can be discharged or wiped out. This forever precludes creditors from attempting to collect on the debts. As the U.S. Supreme Court stated, the purpose of the discharge is to provide the debtor with a "new opportunity in life and a clear field for future effort unhampered by the pressure and discouragement of preexisting debt." In other words, the bankruptcy laws provide individuals with a clean slate, free of the stress and depression that results from being only one step ahead of a debt collector.

The Bankruptcy Code is divided into several chapters and each chapter governs a particular type of bankruptcy. The two most common chapters for consumers are Chapter 7 and 13.

A Chapter 7 bankruptcy is sometimes called a "straight" bankruptcy. Once the petition is filed, a bankruptcy estate is created out of all the debtor's property. Theoretically, the bankruptcy court now owns all of the debtor's pre-Petition property and a court-appointed trustee may sell the property to pay off the debts. Some property may not be sold because the law allows for several "exemptions" — both on the federal and state levels. The court-appointed trustee decides whether to allow or disallow an exemption.

Any non-exempt property will be sold, the proceeds will be divided among the creditors and the remaining debt will be discharged.

Some debtors could pay for their debts if they had more time, and the Chapter 13 bankruptcy is designed for them. Chapter 13 allows the court to establish a realistic repayment schedule that allows the debtor time to repay his or her debts over a period of three to five years. Also, as an incentive to file for Chapter 13, the law provides that more types of debts are dischargeable here than in a Chapter 7.

Bankruptcy is not an easy way to avoid paying debts. A bankruptcy filing is a federal court proceeding that will remain on your credit report for 10 years, hence the nickname "10-year mistake." Some or most of your property may be sold to satisfy your debts. Certain debts are non-dischargeable, including debts for child support or alimony, some taxes, some student loans, fines imposed for DWI, DUI, etc. And, bankruptcy may affect your ability to qualify for credit, or may result in any credit that you do receive being at a higher rate.

The decision to file for bankruptcy should be carefully considered. Weigh your alternatives such as negotiation with creditors, consolidation loans, debt counseling, etc. The Army Community Service office provides debt counseling, debt liquidation, financial counseling, financial management and consumer education. Conference: Help for victims, family

Gunn's first case after being appointed as the victim liaison.

"I'm a support group for the victims," Gunn said. "I do anything they need me to do. I'm the liaison between them and the attorneys. I attend the trials with them. Usually they are nervous wrecks, and I try to keep them calm."

About 95 percent of her clients are women, Gunn said. In 1998, she worked with 104 crime victims and 15 witnesses.

"I definitely feel that my office is a safe haven. What they tell me is confidential. They can call me when they can't call anyone else," she said.

Gunn works in the office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5, on Vibbert Avenue. Her phone number is 545-1633.

The H-club met weekly and began with classroom lessons followed by the completion of hands-on experiments in the garden. An activity that really excited the children, according to Gordy, was the lima bean experiment in which the children placed lima beans into clear plastic bags and decided how to take care of the beans.

"The club members learned valuable lessons about what works and what doesn't when it comes to growing seedlings," Gordy said. "By trial and error the kids learned if they added too much water to their seed it rotted and without enough water the seed wouldn't grow."

Third grade student Chris Mullins said his favorite thing about being in the H-Club was learning about plants and planting the garden. "It was great to see something grow from the little seeds and when we dug up the potatoes, I couldn't believe there was real potatoes under all that dirt!"

An end of the year celebration was held after the students picked the vegetables from the garden and prepared them for a feast — a salad feast that is.

Gordy said that the neat thing about the party was that the children, who didn't think they like salad, saw other kids eating salad, and in no time everyone was eating salad.

"I hope to start another spring garden with different plants — plants native to the South. But no matter what we plant, being able to see the children working with plants and digging in the garden is a great experience for the children and myself."

'Mean' parents teach children by example

Chaplain Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

A year ago, someone somewhere handed me a letter entitled "The Meanest Mother in the World" written by an unknown author. I would like to take a few editorial liberties and rewrite this letter and entitle it "The Meanest Parents in the World."

I had the meanest parents in the world. While the other kids went without breakfast, I had to have cereal, eggs or toast. My mom believed in making me a wholesome lunch instead of grabbing a Coke and a candy bar from the vending machine. As you can guess, my dinner was different from other kids' too.

My parents insisted on knowing where we were at all times. You'd think we were on a chain gang. They wanted to know who our friends were and insisted on meeting any new ones. If we said we were going to be gone one hour, it had better not be one hour and five minutes.

Rupel

I'm ashamed to admit it but my parents actually spanked us. Not once, but each time we had a mind of our own and did as we pleased. Dad called it woodshed psychology. Can you imagine actually spanking a child simply because he or she disobeyed? Now you can see how mean my parents really were.

One thing though, my dad never spanked us when he was mad. I remember talking back to my mother one time in the presence of my dad (big mistake) and he said, "Son, I'm so mad at you right now that I am afraid that I would hurt you if I were to spank you! So, tomorrow morning when I get up for work (5 a.m.) I'll come to your room and wake you, and then spank you."

I didn't sleep a wink that night.

My parents made us work. I bet they broke every child-labor law in existence. We had to wash dishes, make our beds, mow the lawn and take out the trash. I think they lay awake at night thinking of things to make us do in order to make our lives miserable.

When it came time for us to start dating at age 16 my parents insisted on meeting our dates. "No boy is coming to my house honking his horn to get my daughter," Mom would say. And to top it off, my parents insisted that we be in by 11 p.m. until we were 18.

As the years rolled by, first one then the other of us was put to shame.

We were graduated from high school. With our parents behind us, talking, spanking and demanding respect, none of us was allowed the pleasure of being a drop out.

My parents failed miserably at being parents. Out of five children two are ministers, one a college professor, one a painting contractor and the one girl is a nurse married to a minister. The oldest boy served in the Army and did a tour of duty in Vietnam.

And whom do we blame for the terrible way we turned out? You're right, our mean parents. Look at all the things we missed. We never got to use drugs or alcohol, never got to skip class or participate in a million and one other things our friends did. They forced us to grow up into God-fearing, educated, honest adults.

Using this as a background, I am trying to raise my children the same way. I stand a little taller and I am filled with pride when my children call me mean.

Observance celebrates saints contributions

Chaplain Michael J. Neufeld
USAIC Chaplains Office

Monday is an important day for many Christians the world over. It is All Saints Day, which is a major feast in the Roman Catholic Church as well as in the churches of the worldwide Anglican Communion, of which my denomination, the Episcopal Church U.S.A., is a member.

All Saints Day is most often understood as a celebration of the many heroes of the Christian faith throughout history, whose lives were marked by a zeal, a commitment and a faith far beyond that of the average believer.

The Communion of Saints is filled with countless spiritual "overachievers" who gave all in the service of their Lord and Savior.

There were men like Lawrence, a Roman Deacon, who chose a rather slow and horrible death over renouncing his faith. Lawrence was slowly roasted over a grid iron. Even at the point of death, his faith never wavered. In fact, Lawrence kept a sense of humor even in the midst of such suffering. His dying words were "Turn me over, I'm done on one side." There were women like Mother Theresa, a modern Christian hero whose faith in Christ led her to live among the sick and dying in one of the poorest cities in our world, Calcutta, India.

It is important that we recall the great contributions of those great men and women who have come before us. Their radical commitment calls us to be more to love God and our neighbor in radical, unselfish ways. We remember these great Christians on All Saints Day.

And yet, this great feast of the Church has a deeper meaning for us who are Christians. Sainthood is not a matter of achieving greatness. Great men and women of faith like Lawrence, Mother Theresa, Martin Luther, John Wesley and Catherine of Sienna did not work their way into sainthood. Likewise, you and I will never accomplish sainthood no matter how much we might try.

The wonderful truth is that you and I, who are the Lord's own, are saints. This is our dignity as sons and daughters of the living God. We have done little to earn or deserve this. It is a pure gift given by our loving Father in Heaven. The message to us on All Saints Day is simple — know that you are a saint right here and now.

Such a realization is not a reason for boasting. Rather, it challenges us to live into the dignity which is ours in Christ. Knowing who we are in God's eyes can free us to live lives of powerful witness. We are Saints, so let's live like Saints.

Stowers celebrates alphabet with carnival

Children, parents take part in activity

Julie Pelletier
Stowers School

In celebration of the alphabet, Stowers Elementary recently held a "Carnival of Letters." Kindergarten children and their parents were invited for an hour of learning activities involving the alphabet.

After a general overview of our present-day alphabet, presented by Millie Harris, students and parents rotated through the centers of learning. Stowers staff members and a fourth or fifth grade Golden Stallion volunteered their own time to host one of the centers. Seven different centers consisting of a kinesthetic center in which activities beginning with the letters of the alphabet were set to music, the reading of alphabet stories and several hands-on activities were created to give students an opportunity to see, hear, and do things with letters.

These activities were geared toward Kindergarten students, as learning the alphabet is one of the primary goals of the Kindergarten curriculum. Parents were invited to participate to give them an opportunity to be involved in their children's education and take with them some activities to do at home in hopes of reinforcing what goes on in school.

The culminating event of the carnival of letters was eating alphabet cookies prepared by Stowers Education Aides as students and parents departed.

Parents participate in Stowers' Noontime Topics program

Mike Starrett
Stowers School

It seems difficult enough for some children to imagine their parents in school, but imagine them in your school — to learn! That is exactly what happens at Stowers School during its Noontime Topics.

In the school's efforts to involve parents as co-learners in their child's education, Stowers presents Noontime Topics. This is a program that presents current information on programs and curriculum of the Fort Benning Schools. This month's topic covered critical thinking skills and was presented by Fort Benning Schools Director of Curriculum, Kathy Einhorn.

Einhorn first challenged parents with a math problem similar to what their children face daily in the classroom. Parents worked individually and then in groups to solve the problem. After the brief problem-solving session, Einhorn gave parents some pointers on creating critical thinkers.

"Have your children pose their own questions and predict their own answers in all subject areas as well as test their own ideas on others," said Einhorn.

Einhorn went on to relay the Fort Benning Schools' goal of creating self-directed learners. "Those are students who set their own purpose for learning something, use appropriate skills to reach that goal and decide on their own how to integrate this newfound knowledge into their lives."

Parents had questions on how to develop those critical thinking skills in their children. Mrs. Einhorn presented several options from using the internet to access critical thinking activities, purchasing software from companies like EdMark, the Learning Company and Broderbund, to playing board games with their children like checkers, chess, Stratego, Risk and Boggle.

"Some Internet sites like scholastic (HYPERLINK http://www.scholastic.com www.scholastic.com) and eduplace (HYPERLINK http://www.eduplace.com www.eduplace.com) also provide connections to Literacy Place, Fort Benning's current language arts program and free resources and activities for parents, teachers, and children."

Finally Einhorn stressed how important reading in the home is to a child's language development. "When reading out loud to children, pick books that are two grade levels above where they are now. This will stimulate higher level vocabulary and give children a greater knowledge base to work from when trying to think critically."

Dolphins top Cardinals, 12-6

Special to the Bayonet©

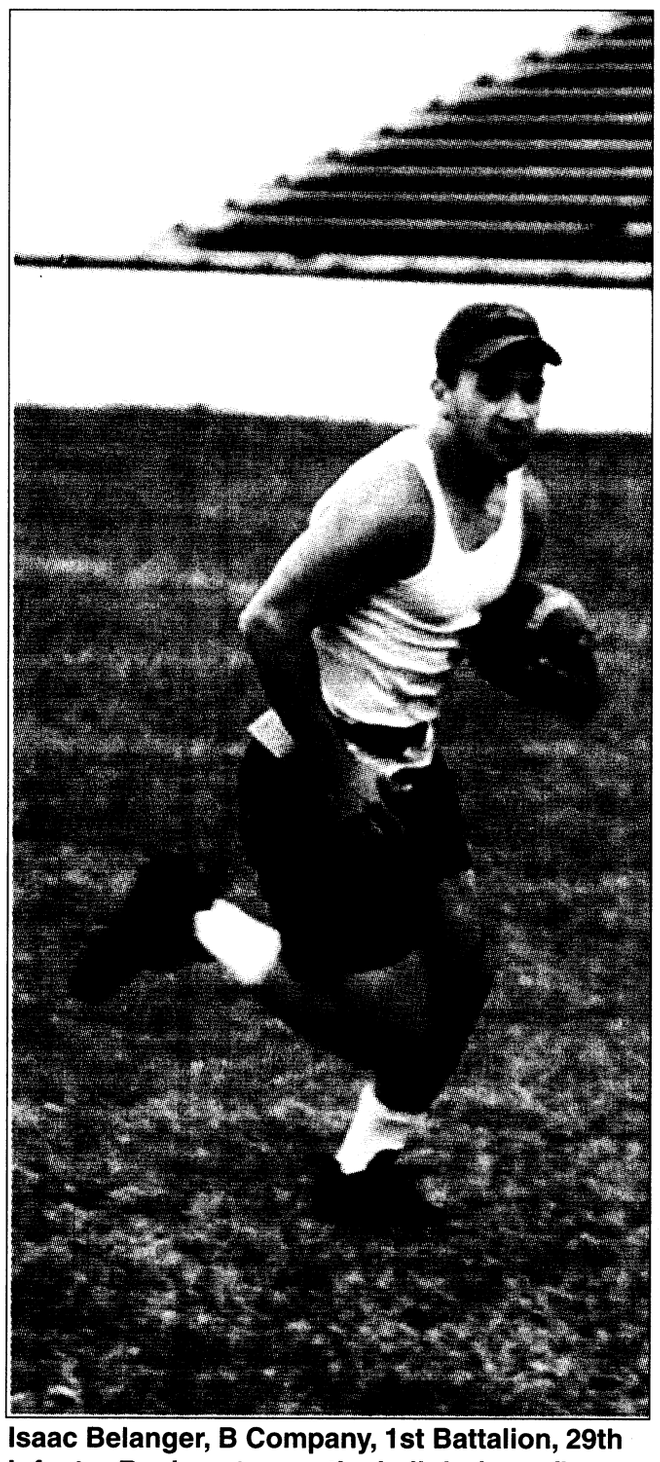
The game remained scoreless during the first quarter of the 11-to 12-year-old tackle football game held Saturday at Blue Field. The Dolphins capitalized on the absence of Robert Penn, the undefeated Cardinals quarterback, and handed the Cardinals their first loss of the year, 12-6.

As if the absence of Penn was not a big enough challenge, the Cardinals were hurt late in the first half by the loss of their second-string quarterback William Mackey, who left the game with a possible broken thumb.

Dolphin's quarterback, 11-year-old JaCee Lawary, ran for 10 yards early in the second quarter and began a drive that would end with running back Xavier Shaw blasting into the endzone for the first touchdown of the game.

The Cardinals stopped the Dolphins extra-point attempt and forced two turnovers but were unable to get on the board leaving the halftime score at 6-0.

The third quarter opened with a 48-yard return by the Dolphin's special teams.



Lawary, who totaled more than 130-yards of combined rushing and passing yards throughout the game, ran the kickoff down to the Cardinals 20 but failed to score.

The Cardinals came back in the fourth quarter when third-string quarterback Mathew Larsen connected with Ryan McNeil on a 45-yard touchdown pass, but the Dolphins regained the lead late in the fourth quarter and remained on top until the end.

The Dolphins last offensive drive saw Lawary complete three consecutive passes, which resulted in their second touchdown of the game. Lawary found receiver Xavier Shaw twice, for 22 yards and Jorge Hazquez, who completed the final 12-yard reception, in the endzone.

Lawary, who had a banner day, said at the end of the game that everybody on the team played hard and was very motivated for the game.

"I feel good about the win and hope we can do it again next week," he said.

Soldiers take to Doughboy for flag football competition

Sgt. Lori Smith
Assistant. Editor

Soldiers from B Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment gathered at Doughboy Stadium stretched out and got ready to play their third flag football game of the season.

Unfortunately, the opposing team, Bradley Instructor Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf Regt., was a "no show." This brought B Company to 3-0 for the season.

The forfeited game for B Company is one of many on post since the season began, said Fred Woods, sports specialist, Community Recreation Division. Participation is down this year, he said, but he attributes that to a busy training schedule. "Training has a priority, and we try to work around it."

Woods said Fort Benning's intramural programs are designed to build esprit de corps. Woods said flag football is just one way units build morale.

"Rivalry is good," said Woods. And, "Flag football is good, healthy competition."

Christopher Moore (44) races to the ball during a 4-to 5-year old soccer match against the Ninjas Saturday. The soccer action will continue this weekend as Youth Services will play host to additional soccer games. The games begin at 9 a.m. on French Field near the Infantry Museum.

FOOTBALL: Soldiers kick it

And Markika Allen, B Co. team coach, said that his football team is ready to compete.

"The team's running game is in top form this year." He and his players are hoping it will be good enough to take them to the post championship.

Allen didn't view the forfeited game as a total loss. It just gave them another chance to practice their passing game.

"Most of the guys here are looking for a championship," but ultimately, he said, they play for the love of the game. "We're just out here to have fun."

For Allen and others who share a love for the game, this is often the only chance they have to play organized football. Fort Benning does not have a post team.

The league is comprised of 35 teams that play in three different locations.

The Audie Murphy league plays on Engineer Field, Briant Wells League is in Doughboy Stadium and Kelley Hill teams can be seen at Essebagger Field. Flag football games can be seen on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays

Intramural flag football season began Sept. 22 and should wrap up by Nov. 30. Tournament play is expected to run Nov. 30 through Dec. 10.

For more information on flag football, call Woods at 545-4726.

Soldiers to appear in recruiting TV ads

The home of the Infantry has gone Hollywood.

Fort Benning was recently chosen as the site for upcoming commercials to be aired later this year. The Army decided to update its "Be All You Can Be" message with more modernized and eye-catching advertisements.

The U.S. Army advertisement agency, Young and Rubican, who collaborated with the Morton Jankel Zander Motion Picture Film Company, began filming segments for three different commercials last week.

Katherine Burke, account executive for Young and Rubican, said that each commercial would have a different message. The first is directed to employers, showing them how the military prepares people for the civilian work force.

The second commercial is geared toward prospective college students, emphasizing how the military prepares someone for college.

The third commercial, according to Burke, is the most interesting. "It is geared to showing off all the hooah stuff the Army has to offer, like the Special Forces and Ranger (training)."

The excitement for this hooah training shows in Burke's eyes as a Soldier wears the wind beneath his feet on the 250-foot airborne tower.

This excitement is what makes it necessary for the Soldiers assisting the film crew to keep a close watch on them.

"They get excited, and we have to make sure they are careful not to get hurt," said Maj. Keith Robinson, executive officer of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment. He hopes the airborne footage will heighten interest in civilian and Soldiers to become airborne.

Fort Benning was a chosen site for the commercials because of "its high-tech assets and outstanding military life," said Conrad Curry, chief of Production Control and Advertising Director, the U.S. Army Recruiting Command liaison for the project. Many Soldiers were glad to get a chance to represent the Army. After completing a landing to "satisfaction," Pfc. Patrick Coleman, airborne trainee, couldn't have been happier. His excitement wasn't just about his jump, but about being on television. He said he saw commercials in his recruiting station and thought they were hooah.

"I'm excited about the whole thing," he gleamed. "Hopefully, I will get the chance to be a poster boy for the Army."

DPW preparations for Y2K tested, work

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

This is the second part in an eight part series on Fort Benning's preparations for the problems associated with the year 2000.

Although it will be nearly two months before the world will make the leap into the new year, all of Fort Benning's automated systems have already made the jump into the next millennium, or they did for at least a couple of minutes.

The premature jump to the new millennium was a test, according to Mark Fincher, Y2K project officer, Directorate of Public Works, to ensure all of Fort Benning's water, electrical and sewer systems would still work when the date changed from 1999 to 2000.

While the date change seems virtually meaningless to non-computer-based systems, it could affect computer systems that read the date in a two number abbreviation, according to Fincher and other Y2K reports.

That new year abbreviation, '00, could send older systems to a quick halt since the aging systems were not originally designed to compute the change in date to the new millennium. However, according to Fincher, that is no longer a concern for the beneficiaries of Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Works.

"The post, including DPW, began tackling the problems associated with Y2K back in '97," Fincher said. "And the tests we ran on our mission-critical machines proved that DPW is ready for the change."

The test Fincher spearheaded involved evaluating which DPW systems were computer-based and then resetting the clock on the identified systems so they would prematurely reach 2000.

"By setting the clocks ahead on those systems, we could see which systems would fail and which would not when the year changed," he said. "And the residents of Fort Benning can be assured that the change in the year will not affect the services we provide."

The Directorate of Public Works provides post residents and employees with services including power, sewer and water, and while Fincher said he could not guarantee service at any time, including the welcoming of Y2K, he said whatever happens DPW will be ready.

"There will be someone on call throughout New Year's Eve and New Years Day to handle any problems that may arise," he said. "There will also be a maintenance crew ready to be dispatched if they would be

Exercise proves post's terrorism readiness

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning residents can sleep safe tonight according to new information released after last weeks post-wide force protection and anti-terrorism exercise.

The exercise, which took the post through numerous threat levels, bomb threats and a mass casualty exercise, tested the emergency response plans of the entire post's response teams, according to Capt. Andrew Sullivan, chief of plans, Plans and Mobilization Division, Directorate of Operations and Training.

"This is the first time we have ever taken on this large of a force protection exercise," Sullivan said after the finale of the exercise. "In the past, we have always focused on one piece of the force protection puzzle, but this time we put it all together to see how it would work."

That vision of how it would all work began Oct. 25 as Sullivan and the rest of the post's force protection gurus began fielding exercise-created intelligence and gearing up for what Sullivan called the first "real day" of the exercise.

The first day of the exercise involved another first for the post as the Directorate of Public Safety took on the challenge of securing Main Post in accordance with the threat assessment made Oct. 25.

"DPS began the task of securing main post after we took a look at threats we had received Monday and determined that is where the biggest threat was," he said. "Units from around post also began securing their areas as well."

As Fort Benning law enforcement officials began establishing checkpoints and securing the area, Sullivan and other emergency operations officials began fielding bomb threats.

As the sun came up the morning of Oct. 27, the tension did as well.

Now with the threat level the highest the post has ever seen and all units securing their areas, Sullivan and the other security officials were left to try to prepare for anything that could possibly happen.

And everything that could

CFC officially ends; contributions welcome

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The Combined Federal Campaign ends today.

Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said although the campaign is scheduled to end today, the campaign will continue to accept donations for several weeks.

The campaign is still going strong, and has had a lot of support, he said.

Walls added that there are more than 800 organizations to contribute money to. The organizations found in the donation form with the 9000 code benefits both Fort Benning and the local community.

"It is important to try to keep the money local," he said.

"We're not there yet," he said. "We really need everyone involved and to help close out this year's CFC campaign."

The Bayonet seeks writers for the up-coming "Gift of Giving" supplement. See B-1 for more information.

commentary

A few weeks ago, an unpronounceable virus left me temporarily unable to open one eye and squinting out the other. As a courtesy to other drivers (if you're one of them, you're welcome) I left the driving to my significant other, which is how I found myself outside Infantry Hall waiting for a ride at a time of day usually left only to the Soldiers on flag detail.

The detail took down and folded the state flags first, handling each with great care and then moving on to the Stars and Stripes itself. The cannon was fired and the bugle sounded. The Soldiers snapped to attention and saluted just the way the manual describes. They did a great job. Their dignified conduct conveyed respect.

I wish I could say the same for some of the rest of the folks in the immediate vicinity. Drivers in earshot of the music drove on.

Runners on the track kept running. A visitor at the Ranger Memorial kept searching the bricks that line the walk. One person, less than 50 feet from the flag detail, sat, disinterested in her parked car.

It spun my already frazzled brain synapses into hyperdrive. What should I do? I know you're supposed to stand at attention facing the flag, with your right hand over your heart. Should I sound off at the guy at the memorial, "HEY! They're sounding retreat here! You're not supposed to be walking around like that!" Should I go over to the woman parked in her car and tell her to get out? I opted for standing at attention facing the flag, with my right hand over my heart and wondering why they weren't.

This was not the first time I have seen people either at a loss or completely ignorant of basic courtesies that we should render the flag. Is it because they don't know what to do and opt for doing nothing?

If you are a Soldier reading this, feel free to substitute "salute" for "stand at attention facing the flag, with your right hand over your heart" when reading the rest of the story.

It's really not that complicated. When the flag is being raised, being lowered or passing in review, stand at attention facing the flag, with your right hand over your heart. When the national anthem is played, stand at attention facing the flag, with your right hand over your heart. (If no flag is displayed face toward the music as if a flag were displayed there.) When reciting the Pledge of Allegiance, stand at attention facing the flag, with your right hand over your heart. If you're a headgear-wearing male, stand at attention facing the flag, take off your hat and hold it at your left shoulder, which would put your right hand over your heart.

If your memory is not what it used to be, how's this for a hint? If the Soldiers are saluting, that's your cue to stand at attention facing the flag, with your right hand over your heart.

It's more complicated if you're driving. You'll need to pull over, stop and get out, before you stand at attention facing the flag, with your right hand over your heart.

I recently had the privilege of remaking the acquaintance of some WW II veterans. Oct. 26 it was my privilege to meet more when veterans of the 100th Infantry Battalion ("The Purple Heart Battalion") dedicated their monument on Sacrifice Field. Like Soldiers before them, like Soldiers since, these veterans sacrificed a lot for the same flag that some people won't afford the simple courtesy of standing for.

At the memorial dedication the colors were presented and the Star Spangled Banner was played. I stood humbly with veterans old enough to be my grandfather. We stood at attention facing the flag, with our right hands over our hearts.

I read somewhere that the flag, our flag, represents a living country and should be considered a living entity. That would make it 222 years old, an elder, by anybody's definition, but still strong, proud and deserving of respect.

When you show respect for the flag by standing at attention facing it, with your right hand over your heart, you are also paying tribute to the people who have helped keep it flying for more than 200 years. You are commemorating their sacrifices. You are saying, "Thank you."

Is it really asking too much to please stand at attention facing the flag, with your right hand over your heart?

Soldiers surprise brother with display

Jim Turnbull
Army News Service

Four weeks ago my brother, Bruce Turnbull, died in Germany. Bruce was a first sergeant in the U.S. Army, and that's what I want to talk about. Bruce is survived by his wife and his 11-year-old son, our mother, another brother and a gaggle of nephews and their wives.

I didn't get it right away. We flew to Germany for the funeral. The next day the family filled up three station wagons, and we were driven to the training base near Nurnberg. Led by a military police vehicle, we slowly moved through the string-straight streets of the base. Each time we passed a group of Soldiers, they snapped to attention and saluted. Conversation in the vehicles slowed, then it stopped altogether. We moved around a great sweeping curve, and the parade ground stretched before us.

Then I got it. Six hundred twenty men and women of the U.S. Army stood, at solemn attention, in immaculate uniforms, platoon after platoon, seemingly as far as the eye could see. This was not our world.

This was the holy world of 1st Sgt. Bruce Turnbull, 1st Battalion, 4th Infantry Division, U.S. Army. And the Soldiers had come to say farewell to their own.

Bruce looked like a poster for today's Army. He was six-foot-one, tanned and about 180 pounds. We all loved him. He was easy to love. He had a sense of humor that seemed to make him irresistible to young people. Give a party that included several generations and time would find Bruce in the kitchen with every young man and young woman under the age of 30 in the kitchen with him. The Army recognized this, and they recognized it early. But that isn't what I want to talk about.

Bruce got the youngest Soldiers; he got the hard cases, the lonely kids and the lost souls who, seemingly, didn't have anywhere else to go. They went to Bruce. They went to 1st Sgt. Turnbull. He got officers, too. There wasn't a Christmas or a Thanksgiving we'd call, wherever he was stationed, when there wasn't some new, gawky-as-a-chicken, second lieutenant from West Point or Virginia Military Institute or Texas Christian University or the Big Ten, as part of the gathering around the table. Bruce got two of my sons, too, at a time when they needed something and somebody. They got the U.S. Army and they got 'Sergeant' Turnbull. They are different and better men because of it.

But that isn't what I want to talk about.

What I want to talk about is that, for one week in Germany, we were honored by seeing the inside workings of the finest and most feared fighting force that this world has seen, the best guarantee of peace the world has. This was not Hollywood. This was real. The discipline was conditioned. The pride was worn like polished steel.

Let me tell you about that pride. Bruce's senior officer, Capt. Bryan Puckett, knows it best. Puckett is, essentially, the "enemy." Puckett's unit is the target for every scalp-hunting American regiment that the Army chooses to send against them for "battle-condition seasoning." Tucked away in Eastern Germany, near the Czech border, Puckett and his men take on all comers. Sure, they know the territory, but they face-off against some pretty smart officers and men who want to beat the home team so bad that they can taste it.

Bruce was with the home team. Puckett sets the pace with a mandate given him by General Casey with a couple of twists added by Colonel Townes. Puckett is aided and abetted by the ever-present Lieutenant Huhtanen. When we last checked, the score stood at Puckett's Home Team 37 — The Rest 0.

I want to tell you how the Army chose to honor my brother. We are not at war right now and Soldiers, unless they are in your family, are not particularly high on the interest level, but they are out there. They are out there in the tens of thousands in Germany, Japan, Korea, Africa, in France and the United Kingdom. They are out in places you have never even heard of or couldn't find on the map. We know when they fight in major engagements, but sometimes they fight in nasty little skirmishes that the world doesn't hear about. And sometimes they die.

When Soldiers die, the U.S. Army honors its dead. We didn't know that a few weeks ago, because, I guess, we didn't have to know that. On the parade ground in Germany, 1st Sgt. Turnbull's battalion stood at attention, pennants lowered; wrapped in a silence all the more powerful because it came from no shouted command. It came from a deep respect. Then the details of his military life were read out by his commanding officers and his fellow sergeants.

Mute testimony to his service was provided by his highly polished (always highly polished) combat boots, his down-facing rifle with bayonet mounted, his dog tags on the trigger guard, his black beret on the butt of the rifle. There was the final roll call. Four companies singing out that they were present and accounted for. The fifth had been my brother's company. His name was shouted two times. There was no answer. The third time his full name and rank were barked out for all to hear — 1st Sgt. Bruce Turnbull. The silence was louder than any thunder.

There was a 21 gun salute. Then the awesome finality of "Taps." First Sergeant Turnbull's decorations were given to his wife and to his mother. There were many. Wife and mother were each given U.S. flags, which had been draped over Bruce's coffin.

There was more, much more. There was insurance for his widow, education for his child, moving expenses and a list of benefits that only the family and the Army will ever know. I tell you this because I want you to know these things.

My brother was a Soldier. He was a superb Soldier, and he had the recognition of his men and his officers and his government to prove it. But even if he had not been a superb Soldier, he was a Soldier of the U.S. Army. I suddenly want you to know, with all the passion of a country preacher, that our military forces take care of our country, and our country takes care of its fighting men and women. I want you to know that, and I want you to take comfort from that, and honor.

With the thousand-yard stare, Captain Puckett said it: "We're Soldiers. It's what we do!"

Editor's note: Shortly after returning from his brother's funeral, Jim Turnbull wrote a commentary similar to this one which appeared in the Chicago Tribune Sept. 19. Copied from the newspaper's Web site, the original commentary has since been exchanged among Soldiers and Army families worldwide. When contacted about republishing it in Army newspapers, he asked to write this separate commentary instead to express his feelings and gratitude directly to a military audience.

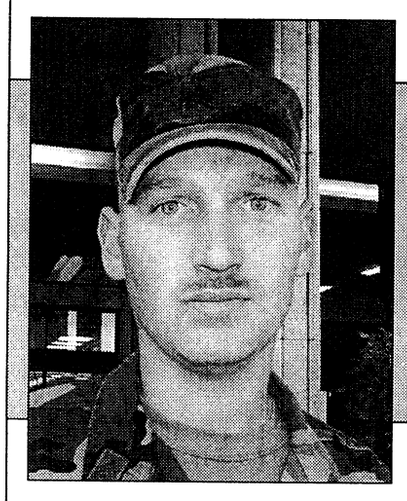
How do you show your patriotism?

Sgt. 1st Class Connie Rounds, C Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry — "I show my patriotism by being on time for work; by stopping my car prior to retreat and reveille and showing the proper courtesy to the flag; and by pressing my uniform and shining my boots."



Spc. Monique Capo, D Detachment, 3rd Service and Support Battery — "I show my patriotism every day by wearing my uniform every day. I like my job and I look forward to work. I try to help out as much as possible. I have a little yellow ribbon in support of the Soldiers downrange."

Staff Sgt. Michael Bennett, C Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "I show my patriotism by working every day."

Gwen Victory, family member — "I vote. That is the way I show my patriotism."

Sgt. Claud Miller, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry — "If I am in my car and hear reveille or retreat, I get out. If I am in uniform, I salute."

Rhonda Kearse, family member — "I show my patriotism by participating in things on post like the 4th of July celebration. I like to get my family involved."

Bugle call stirs emotions

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Taps. It's a bugle call that stirs emotions like no other, and it will be heard numerous times Thursday as America honors its fallen during Veteran's Day observances.

Sgt. 1st Class George Barrett has played bugle calls his entire 16-year career.

"As a trumpet player, it is part of your job," Barrett said. The NCOIC of the U.S. Army Infantry Center Band's bugle team, he and seven other musicians perform at ceremonies, dinners and other occasions where bugle calls are traditional. But military funerals are by far the most moving.

"The family will hear the rifle fire, and then you play taps and they get really emotional," Barrett said. "We can hear that. We get shaky sometimes because we can hear their grief."

Taps is the last call of the day, and plays at 11 p.m. at Fort Benning. It signals that all unauthorized lights are to be extinguished and is played at the completion of all military funeral services.

The team averages about 250 funerals a year and 50 memorial services for veterans, active duty and retired military, Barrett said.

The NCOIC wears a beeper so that the Casualty Assistance office can reach him to schedule buglers. Sometimes they must play at two services a day.

The job can be very sad, but Barrett said he feels a lot of satisfaction from playing taps for fallen Soldiers.

"I feel a lot of pride for the Soldier who passed away," he said. "We are proud to blow those taps because he or she deserved that honor. And the families will come up to us and thank us for being there."

In addition to taps, Barrett and the other buglers are required to know all 24 current U.S. Army bugle calls.

"The Army has a bugle call for almost everything we do," he said.

During the War of 1812, the Army shifted from fifes and drums to bugles sounding out signals. The bugler was located at the side of his commander.

First call starts the day at 5:45 a.m., followed by assembly at 5:55 a.m. and reveille at 5:59:43, which signals troops to awaken and accompanies the raising of the national colors.

Molly Ramsey doesn't play a bugle, and she's not a Soldier, but she knows the different calls and what they signal. She teaches a class through Army Family Team Building entitled "Military Terms, Acronyms, Customs and Courtesies."

Ramsey, master trainer and on-site coordinator, plays a tape of all the calls and discusses flag protocol, during part of the 45-minute session.

"A lot of spouses are confused with retreat and reveille, and what their responsibilities are when they hear them," she said.

Retreat signals the end of the official day and sounds at 5:29:28, followed by to the colors. When retreat is sounded, Soldiers are to stand at attention and show honor to the flag as it is lowered.

"We recommend that they (family members) stand quietly and in the same direction as their Soldier, because he or she will be turned toward the flag," Ramsey said.

As for putting your hand over your heart, Ramsey said, "Personally, I put my hand over my heart because I am pledging my loyalty to my country."

Ramsey pointed out that bugle calls sometimes become just extra noise in an already busy day. "I try to pause and think of the traditions behind them," she said.

"To hear taps played at a cemetery gives me goose bumps."

Soldier appears on Letterman

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A Soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit was David Letterman's first guest on the Late Show that aired Oct. 29. USAMU running target shooter Spc. Armando R. Ayala got to tape the show with Letterman Oct. 28 at the CBS studios in New York City.

The "Late Show with David Letterman" invited the U.S. Army to send an award-winning marksman to appear on the show. The intention was for the Soldier to be interviewed by Letterman and to fire a paint pellet gun at a 47 1/2 foot by 6 foot billboard of Letterman's face on Broadway outside the studio.

"Having your big, ugly face sticking out like that in the middle of New York City is pretty embarrassing. So we decided we'd have a guy take care of this for us," Letterman said on the show in his introduction of Ayala.

After the introduction, Ayala strode across the stage to the rhythm of the Mission Impossible Theme to shake hands with the late night talk show host. During the interview, Ayala informed Letterman of his status as an Army marksman and of his recent victories in competition to a great response of applause from the audience. Letterman then asked Ayala to take care of the billboard for him and Ayala ran out of the studio and onto the streets of New York, where he proceeded to shoot paint balls at the billboard.

"It was really exciting and a great experience being on the show," Ayala said. "I'm glad I got to represent the Army and the Army Marksmanship Unit on national television."

Ayala was only on the show for 5 minutes but spent many hours beforehand rehearsing and practicing firing the paint gun.

"I wish I would have had more time on the show to say more about the Army, but my time was short and I had to stick to the script," Ayala said. "It was really great though; everyone on the Letterman crew was extremely helpful and professional."

Ayala was recently named as the Running Target Shooter of the Year by USA Shooting, the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

veterans day observances

Veterans Day observances are scheduled throughout the area. Here's a quick rundown on events.

• The Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park Committee and the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus are presenting a Pre-Veterans Day Celebration for area citizens at 10:45 a.m. Saturday at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park on the corner of Lawyers Lane and Buena Vista Road.

The public is invited, and donations for the upkeep of the park are welcomed. For information call 687-5357 or 321-9596.

• The Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Gold Star Wives will erect the Avenue of Flags down Victory Drive on Nov. 6 at 8 a.m.

"Gold Star Wives lost their husbands either in combat or as a result of his military service. We fly the flags to honor all veterans of all wars," Wanda Funderburk, president of the chapter, said.

• An awards ceremony honoring Frank G. Lumpkin Jr. hosted by the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 665 at 1824 Victory Dr., starts at noon Nov. 10

Lumpkin, a World War II veteran, has been a tremendous supporter of Fort Benning and recently donated the money needed to restore seven buildings for a World War II Company Street on post. Mayor Bobby Peters will proclaim Nov. 10 "Frank G. Lumpkin Jr. Day."

• The public is invited to attend a Veterans Day observance at 11 a.m. Nov. 11 in the Woodruff Auditorium of the National Infantry Museum. The ceremony is sponsored by the 555th Parachute Infantry Association.

• The tri-community of Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning invite the public to attend a Veterans Day ceremony 11 a.m.Nov. 11 at the Columbus Consolidated Government Plaza area on 10th St. In the case of inclement weather, the ceremony will take place in the South Hall of the Trade and Convention Center.

Post officials take tour of Columbus

Lori Smith
Assistant editor

Sixty-five brigade and battalion commanders, senior NCOS and their spouses participated in Leadership Benning Oct. 27 in an effort to strengthen ties between the Fort Benning, Phenix City and Columbus communities.

Leadership Benning is an annual event designed to familiarize Soldiers in command positions with the tri-community area and its' leaders, said Chuck Walls, Fort Benning garrison manager.

"We take one day to familiarize them with the cultural, governmental, educational and business communities," said Jim Irvin, volunteer co-chairmen for Military Affairs Committee, Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

Participants were given a tour of places that represented these four areas including the Columbus Government Center, the Coca-Cola Space Science Center, the Springer Opera House, Phenix City Chamber of Commerce and the Downtown Magnet School.

"The purpose is to get the new leadership more familiar with what is outside the front gate," said Walls. Many of a commander's Soldiers and family members live in Columbus and Phenix City.

"I thought it was outstanding ... It should be a prerequisite for all commanders and their spouses early in their tenure here," said Lt. Col. Eric D. Hutchings, deputy commander, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Hutchings, who has been at Fort Benning for three years, said this was the first time he was able to attend. "I wish I would have gone sooner."

War dog ceremony recognizes heroes

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

John C. Burnham knows the truth behind the saying: A dog is man's best friend.

Burnham, a retired master sergeant, left behind his best friend — a German shepherd named Clipper — in Vietnam.

"I didn't know how to say goodbye to my best friend, so I looked into Clipper's eyes and gave him one last bear hug. Afterwards, I turned and walked away with the bitter and sad knowledge that Vietnam would become my dog's final resting place."

The passage is quoted from Burnham's new book, Dog Tags of Courage. The author, who lives in Fairfax, Va., is traveling around the country telling the story of 4,000 forgotten war heroes — dogs enlisted by the various branches of the military to serve in Southeast Asia.

Burnham visited Fort Benning Oct. 29 for the opening of the War Dogs exhibit at the National Infantry Museum. He spoke during the ceremony, telling about his years in Vietnam as a dog handler and the courageous four-footed Soldiers who served with him and saved thousands of lives.

"When one of the dogs went down in Vietnam, it was like losing a fellow Soldier," Burnham said.

Unlike their human handlers, the "dogs had no rotation date out of there," he said. At the end of the war, the Army classified them as surplus equipment and left them behind.

A large crowd attended the opening including basic trainees from Sand Hill and children out of school for a teacher-work day.

After the speeches, dogs and handlers from Fort Benning's Military Working Dogs Platoon gave a demonstration on what today's dogs are trained to do.

"This is the only place in the country with an exhibit this extensive," Jesse Mendez of Columbus said. Mendez, chief instructor at Fort Benning's 26th Scout Dog Platoon during the war, was one of the driving forces behind the exhibit.

"Frank Hanner (museum director) and his staff deserve all the credit. They have done an excellent job."

The exhibit includes a video of the documentary War Dogs playing on a television. Burham, a member of the Vietnam Dog Handlers Association, was interviewed for that documentary.

He also served as a technical advisor on Dogs with Jobs, a documentary on Public Television that will air this winter.

Interest in war dogs has skyrocketed since War Dogs aired on the Discovery Channel. There are several web sites, including www.war-dogs.com and www.vd haonline.org.

Burnham's Dog Tags of Courage took eight years to write and was published in September. He has been busy touring to promote it.

"I think the public has healed in the way that they don't look at Vietnam veterans as the bad guy anymore," Burnham said. "And a lot of Vietnam veterans have had time to heal."

It's obvious Burnham is a dog lover, without even speaking to him. His clothing is a dead giveaway. His shirt features an embroidered German shepherd and his belt sports metal canines.

Staff Sgt. Johnny Lang, kennel master of the Military Working Dogs Platoon, is another fan of dogs.

"Everyone loves dogs," Lang said. "But no one knew what went on in Vietnam and now they do. This exhibit brings a tear to my eye."

Exercise: Tests possibilities, reactions possibly happen did.

Shortly after morning, the emergency center received a notification that a car bomb had exploded near the Wynnsong theater, "wounding" more than 28 people, and leaving Sullivan and his crew to figure out how to handle the situation.

"The car bomb incident proved to be a vital training tool for not only the DPS people, but MEDDAC (U.S. Army Medical Department Activity) as well," he said.

While the car bomb incident was the culminating exercise of the exercise, Sullivan said the events behind the scenes were far from finished.

"After the scenarios we had to go back and review what we did well and what we could work on for next time," he said. "However, this being only the first exercise of this caliber we have ever done, I think we did pretty well."

That thought, Sullivan said, is backed by the performance of all the participating units and the open lines of communication that were essential to the success of the exercise.

"Fort Benning is a safe place and we are ready for whatever might come our way," Sullivan said. "There are some things we need to work on way but I am very happy with the things turned out."

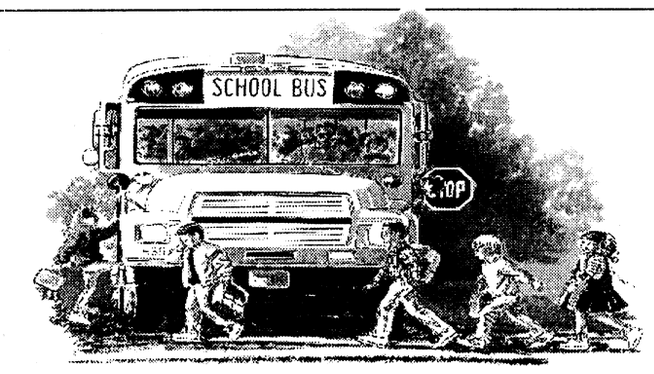
needed."

Although Fincher and other Fort Benning officials don't foresee any Y2K associated problems, Fincher said the post has tackled major DPW problems in the past and will rely on those assets if needed.

"The post has experienced major losses of power and basic services in the past when hurricanes have blown through the area," he said. "And DPW responded quickly and restored those services in a matter of hours."

For those Soldiers and their family members who live in the post housing areas and are not covered under DPW's blanket of service, Fincher said all of the civilian energy authorities have also done their part in assuring their customers' service well into the next millennium.



"The civilian energy authorities were the first ones to introduce me to the Y2K issue in 1996," he said. "So I put complete faith in a group that began tackling the issue more than three years ago."

Fincher and his DPW counterparts will be on-call during the changing of the year. To reach DPW during the year transfer, residents can call the special Y2K hotline at 545-2135.

USARSA hosts 9th Latin American conference

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Civilian and military speakers from Latin America and the United States will engage the topic "National Security Paradigms for the Western Hemisphere in the 21st Century," during the U.S. Army School of the Americas' 9th Latin American Conference inside Ridgway Hall, Monday through Wednesday.

This comes at a critical time when the Organization of American States is negotiating the existence of a permanent regional security apparatus similar to the Security Council of the United Nations, said Dr. Russell Ramsey, a professor of Latin American studies at USARSA.

The current OAS machinery for security discussions is the Inter-american Defense Board, advisory only is its powers, and often staffed by officers who are previously graduated from USARSA.The invited speakers will address USARSA's 1999 Command and General Staff College resident class which combines 60 Majors and lieutenant colonels from 11 Latin American countries and the U.S.

There will also be selected school faculty and visitors from public and private entities who have an interest or a role in the quality of life in Latin America.

The eight previous conferences have featured academic, government, and other public affairs speakers on topics ranging from human rights, the Drug War to Peacekeeping Operations.

Soldiers contribute to successful blood drive

Cassandra Wyatt
Fort Benning Red Cross

Just outside of Atlanta, a six-car pile-up has left an elderly woman, a small baby, and pregnant mother in critical condition. Doctors know they are in desperate need of blood. Meanwhile, Soldiers in Fort Benning are busy, saving their lives.

Hundreds of Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, march to the training room at Hanson Barracks. Within minutes, they shared the life-giving fluid flowing in their veins. Afterwards, the donors stocked up on punch and cookies, while the blood is sent for processing. This blood will be sent to the very hospital the car crash victims utilized. There, it will perform its ultimate duty, saving lives.

"It is estimated that for every unit of blood drawn, about three lives are saved," said Alphonsa Oliver, the American Red Cross station manager.

Oct. 3 marked Fort Benning's most successful blood drive this year — with more than 330 Soldiers from A and B Companies, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, donating their time to give blood. Over all, 329 units of blood were sent to hospitals and healthcare facilities across South Carolina, Florida and Georgia. We can be proud that Soldiers have already saved 987 lives, Oliver said.

The American Red Cross Blood Services' Southern Region supplies more than 200 hospitals and healthcare facilities.

By the end of the year, the post is expected to provide almost 2,500 pints of blood. That's more than half of their entire supply.

Soldiers prepare to enter a building at McKenna MOUT Oct. 20.

A Soldier helps a squad member into a second-story window at McKenna MOUT.

LTs tackle MOUT training

Officers learn modern warfare at McKenna

2nd Lt. Kristofer Kvam
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers from B Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, engaged in a two-day field training exercise at the McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain training site, Oct. 19-21.

For many of these new lieutenants, it was their first opportunity to train for urban operations.

B Company started the exercise in small four-member teams to learn the fundamentals of MOUT.

They later trained in squad-size and larger units to understand how to work as a team in MOUT. The second day involved a platoon attack on several buildings occupied by an opposing force.

"There is a lot to think about in this environment; these lieutenants are making a lot of mistakes, but they are learning from them and adapting quickly," said Capt. Jim Hewitt, the platoon trainer for 3rd platoon.

The training was both exciting and challenging for the lieutenants. MOUT is fast-paced and requires a high degree of concentration, he said.

In addition to clearing rooms and buildings, B Company learned how to enter buildings from the second story.

The officer and senior NCO cadre members trained the Infantry Officer Basic Course students during the exercise.

Prior-enlisted lieutenants and some international students shared their experience and knowledge of this fast-paced urban warfare with their fellow students.

They were also fortunate to see a unit of the Ranger Training Brigade give a demonstration of its room-clearing techniques and equipment at the site.

The lieutenants enjoyed the two days of MOUT training and wanted more training in urban operations, he said.

Most agreed with 2nd Lt. Rio Miner when he said, "I really enjoyed it, and I believe that this training is going to be very valuable to me once I become a platoon leader because of the type of mission our Army participates in."

B Company will use their MOUT training during their culmination FTX the following week.

The final FTX of the IOBC will test all the skills the lieutenants learn during the first 15 weeks of training.

After graduation the lieutenants will attend the Airborne and Ranger courses and report to their first assignments.

Defense phase of training takes lieutenants to field

Capt. Jim Young
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

B Company, 2nd Battalion, 11 Infantry Regiment completed the platoon defense phase during the 11th week of the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

The company conducted a sector defense centered on the intersection of Box Spring Road and Red Diamond Road with the mission of defeating a mechanized Infantry attack.

The new lieutenants took on the troops of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, acting as the opposing forces. The OPFOR brought six Bradley Fighting Vehicles and 30 Infantrymen to the fight, more than a match for the lightly armed lieutenants.

The environment gave B Co. a wet welcome on the first night in the form of two hours of solid rain.

Nevertheless, the lieutenants occupied the defensive sectors in the dark and began security patrols to keep the enemy at bay.

The next morning, the new Infantry officers were greeted with Georgia humidity and heat as the sun brought on heat-category 5 by the afternoon.

Despite the surprisingly hot weather, the platoons immediately went to work digging defensive fighting positions and learning about the leader tasks involved with building a defense.

The company dug the positions to standard, chest deep and with 18 inches of overhead cover, as taught to them by their cadre.

"The changing weather conditions just added to the realism of the training," said 2nd Lt. Rob Shaw.

The students showed a sense of urgency by completing the positions before enemy "division reconnaissance" entered into sector.

"We knew we only had 48 hours to compete the defense and be postured for the attack," said 2nd Lt. Dave Anders. "The short time for preparation forced us to push the time envelope."

Sledgehammer enemy elements worked themselves around the company perimeter that night, testing and harassing each platoon.

The early hours of the next morning, the perimeters came alive as the OPFOR reconnaissance elements probed the wire attempting to clear the way for the mechanized onslaught. The well-rehearsed defense let loose with illumination flares and small-arms fire to keep the enemy at a distance.

The field training exercise culminated with a final attack by the OPFOR mechanized unit on the platoon sectors. Each platoon had to meet the success criteria of destroying two enemy BMP armored vehicles in their given sector.

"Overall the lieutenants fared the elements and the OPFOR well. They were successful in their mission and have a better appreciation for the difficulty and complexity of planning and executing a defense," said Capt. Jim Hewitt, primary instructor.

3rd ID trains with its Egyptian namesake

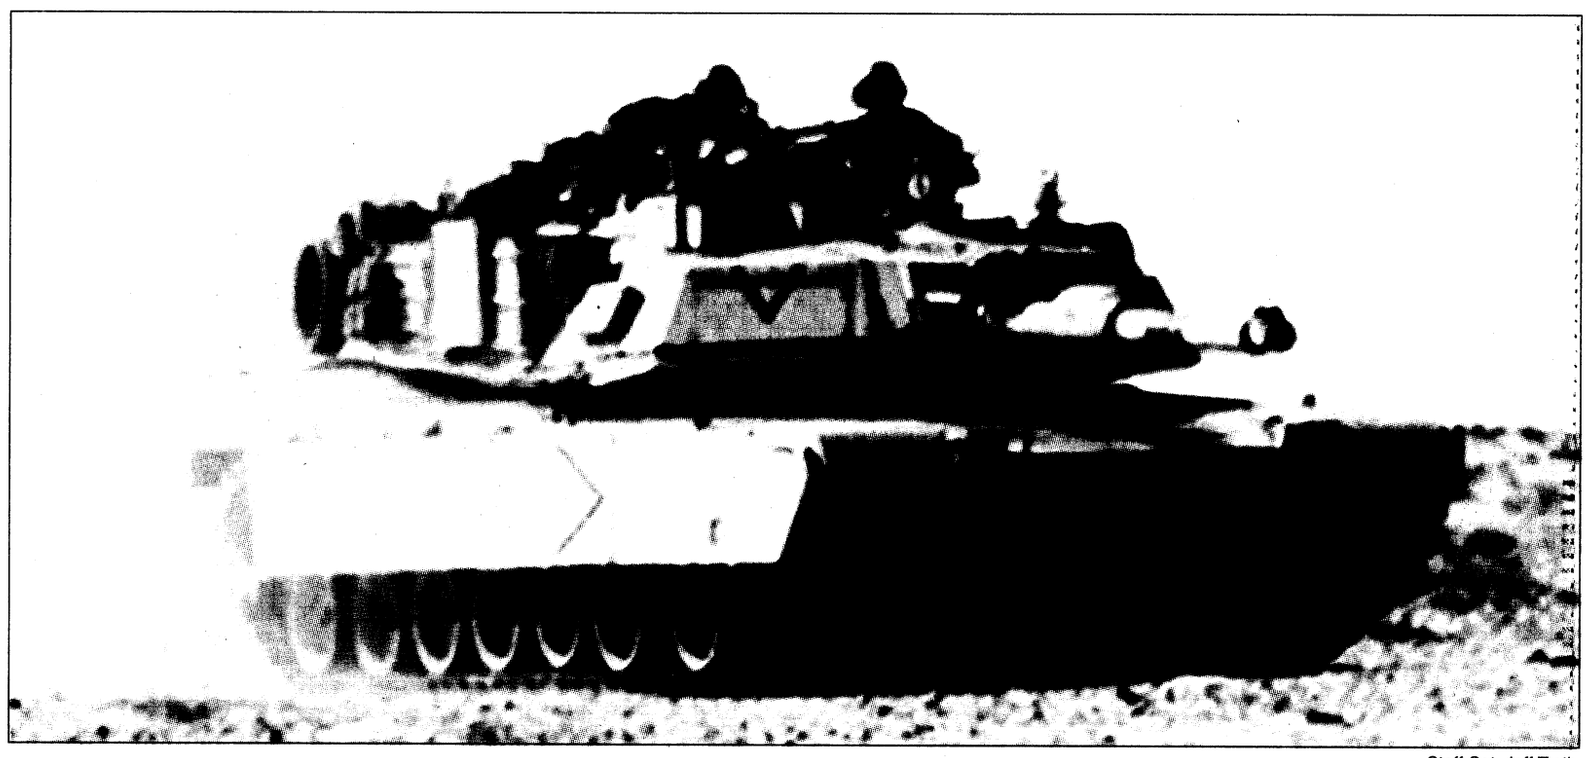
Staff Sgt. Jeff Troth
Third U.S. Army PAO

MUBARAK MILITARY CITY, Egypt — Soldiers from the United States and Egypt joined forces and then split up for a force-on-force exercise. The U.S. 3rd Infantry Division (Mech.) and the Egyptian 3rd Infantry Division formed two opposing forces, with Soldiers from each country on both the defending and attacking forces.

This unusual set up was created to give the Soldiers a better understanding of their foreign counterparts.

The two divisions are part of more than 50,000 troops from 11 countries participating in Exercise Bright Star 1999-2000. Bright Star is a joint/combined, computer-aided command-post exercise, and a tactical air, ground, naval and special operations forces field training exercise.

The meeting of the two 3rd Infantry Divisions was just one in a series of field training exercises designed to reinforce coalition staff coordination and to test leaders' abilities to command and control a multinational military force. The exercise is intended to give military forces at all levels a chance to strengthen military relationships and gain experience in operating with coalition counterparts.



Besides being a learning tool for the troops in the field, the Oct. 19 "battle" served as a demonstration of the Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System for Egyptian officers. The Egyptian military has only had the MILES gear in its inventory since 1998.

MILES gear, which the U.S. military has used for several years, helps to promote realistic force-on-force training by placing a transmitter on weapon systems. The transmitter emits a laser beam each time a blank round is fired.

The beam produced by the MILES transmitter is an eye-safe pulse of coded infrared energy that is picked up by the MILES sensors worn by individuals or arrayed on battlefield equipment. The encoded signal replicates the probability of hit and probability of kill factors of the various weapons used in the combat exercise.

"Kills" and near misses are registered by a distinctive audio tone from the receiver. To silence the audio tone, a key in the Soldier's transmitter is placed in the receiver. Removing the key from the transmitter makes the weapon non-operational.

"MILES is a good way to assess exercises and training," said Maj. Gen. Gmal Adu Elnor, commander of the Egyptian Tactical Training Center. He added that it allows for a quick and accurate account of battlefield losses.

Staff Sgt. Jeff Troth

A Blue Force tank kicks up dust as it crossed the desert battlefield to engage the attacking Red Force.

"This type of training allows one commander to learn what not to do again," said Maj. General Michael T. Gaw, director of U.S. Forces for Bright Star, "while the other commander learns what to capitalize on."

Gaw said he expected all the commanders and Soldiers involved in this force-on-force engagement will be replaying the battle in their minds for many days. "They will look back and say, 'What could I have done differently?'"

If the Soldiers ask those sorts of questions, then the training has served its purpose. Gaw said it is the responsibility of the military leadership to ensure that the training requirements are tough.

"When we ask our commanders to do difficult things, we are giving them the best training possible," Gaw said. "This causes fewer injuries in the field and more victories on the battleground."

In this "battle" the win went to the defenders who triumphantly repelled their attackers. But, according to Gaw, these military lessons were not the most significant accomplishment of the day.

"The most important thing that we have learned here is to respect each other."

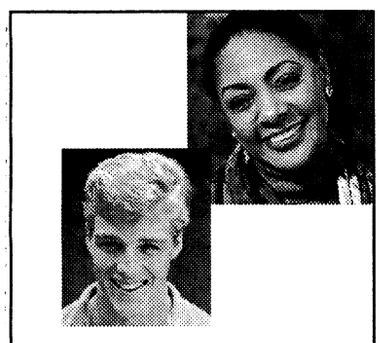
Army Career and Alumni Program



An expert on transitioning from military to civilian employment will be at Infantry Hall, Classroom 30 from 9:30 a.m. to noon Nov. 16 to talk with officers, NCOs and spouses.

Jerry Crews, deputy director of The Officer placement Service for the Retired Officer Association will speak on preparing for a second career.

In his free, 2.5-hour presentation, Crews introduces the audience to the realities of the competition in the civilian job market; the perceptions civilian employers have of military personnel; a plan for the job search; tips for strengthening the resume; networking plans; and preparing for and conducting a successful interview, salary negotiations and benefit packages.

"The lecture is presented annually at more than 200 U.S. military bases worldwide. It is up-to-date, hard-hitting, and sharply focused," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services Manager.

Military members and their spouses are invited to attend the free lecture. While there, they may ask questions and will also receive a free copy of the publication, Marketing Yourself for a Second Career. For more information, call the Fort Benning ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Red Cross offers courses — The American Red Cross will offer the following courses in November:

- Community CPR and First Aid, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 13
- Babysitting, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 20.

For questions on location or cost call Joyce Stratton at 545-5194.

ACS offers classes — Army Community Service provides financial and consumer education classes through the Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program. Classes are provided to units, family support groups and other organizations.

Refresher checking account maintenance workshops are offered on the first and third Wednesday of each month in the conference room of Army Community Service, Building 2643; they are mandatory for anyone who has a dishonored check.

To register for the Checking Account Maintenance Workshop or to request a class, call 545-7517 or 545-4043.

Alcoholics Anonymous provides support — The Fort Benning Alcoholics Anonymous group meets at 7 p.m. every Monday, Thursday and Saturday. The meetings held on Saturdays are open to members of Alcoholics Anonymous only.

Meetings are conducted in the basement of the Directorate of Community Activities, Building 241 next to the National Infantry Museum. Individuals interested in attending meetings can use the rear entrance to the building.

For more information, call 545-4993 or 545-1138.

MACH and SJA offers Advanced Directive class — The Martin Army Community Hospital Department of Family Practice and the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate offers an Advanced Directives class. The class allows participants to make their wishes known in writing in case the time comes when they cannot express their desires.

The two-hour program provides an education session with an attorney and physician; the attorneys then help participants develop documents for personal and medical records.

For more information, call 544-3065.

ACS answers PCS questions — If you are moving to another installation and need information about schools, shopping, medical, dental or housing, the Standard Installation Exchange Service can answer most of your questions.

For more information, call ACS at 545-4043 or stop by Building 2624 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Divorce and separation briefings set — The Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, conducts briefings for those who request an appointment to discuss divorce or separation issues. After the briefing, an attorney will answer questions and set up appointments.

The briefings will take place at 9 a.m. Mondays at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5. Reservations are required

For more information, call 545-3281.

OWC craft bazaar set for Saturday

Special to the Bayonet©

As soon as the leaves start turning colors, area craft shows fill the weekends leading up to the holiday season.

Jennifer Leavitt, an Army spouse, has spent the last six weeks setting up booths at various area craft shows from Peachtree City to Andersonville, Pine Mountain and Macon.

Saturday she joins 50 other vendors from the Columbus-Fort Benning area who will sell their wares at the Officers' Wives' Club Benning Bazaar in Infantry Hall, Building 4, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Leavitt's specialty is wood works. Her booth will feature snowmen, Americana items and houses.

"I cut all the wood myself and will personalize the items," she said Monday while putting the finishing touches on a snowman family. She has recruited friend Shelly Holladay to work at the booth.

Leavitt started her craft business, Jenn's Country Creations, last year because it allows her to stay home with her 7-year-old daughter and 6-year-old son.

Leavitt's business partner, Jolene Herczeg, is also an Army spouse. She makes floral wreaths and large wooden reindeer to put outside.

Hand-hooked rugs, dried floral arrangements, children's clothing, jewelry and assorted Christmas items are just a few of the other offerings on Saturday, according to bazaar chairperson Jennifer Kemp.

Kemp and her co-chair, Karen Powers, have appeared on local radio stations Rooster 106 and Sunny 100 promoting the bazaar in hopes of attracting people outside Fort Benning.

"We really tried to reach out to Columbus because we wanted people to know that the scholarships and welfare funds go back into the community and reach off post," Kemp said.

Proceeds from the event go to benefit the OWC scholarship and community welfare funds. Last quarter, $21,000 was given to local agencies including the Boy Scouts and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women, Kemp said.

If shopping makes you hungry, hot dogs, baked goods, soft drinks and flavored coffees will be on sale.

Santa is expected to visit around 11 a.m. and eat lunch in the food court with the children.

For the second year, the OWC Board commissioned Ann Bingham, a former president of the club, and Karen Cook, a former member, to make a queen-size "opportunity" quilt. The star log cabin quilt is red, white and blue. It was machine-pieced and hand-quilted.

Admission is a $1 donation at the door.

Children create crafts

Jody DeLong
Bayonet correspondent

"It's the thought that counts!" and "Tis the season to be jolly" are right around the corner, and this is the opportunity to put that thought into action.

For the past two weeks, students at White Elementary school have been working hard during their fine-arts classes creating a variety of beautiful holiday crafts.

Janie Pride, visual performing arts specialist for White Elementary School, and Parent Teacher Organization volunteer coordinator, Melissa Helmick, have undertaken the organization and creation of this project in order to raise funds for the school.

The idea was developed this summer in order to help the classes, kindergarten through fifth grade, raise money for the school, Pride said. The project provides the students with an opportunity to have a little holiday fun with the art program and at the same time give back something to the school.

"The money they make comes back to the school and will be divided among the classes. Individual teachers will be able to say what they would like done with their portion," said one of the PTO volunteers helping with the craft project.

With the help of PTO volunteers designated for each class, telephone calls were made from the classrooms inviting parents to donate items for the crafts as well as their time to help with this project.

"We have had about 26 to 28 parents volunteer their time to help with the crafts," Helmick said, reviewing a list of parent volunteers.

Supplement to feature gift of giving

Master Sgt. Tracy Tanner
USAIC Public Affairs NCOIC

Plans for a special supplement to the Dec. 3 issue of The Bayonet are underway. The insert will be called "The Gift of Giving," and in it you, The Bayonet readers, will become the writers.

This special issue was inspired by Faye Jones, the spouse of a retired Army master sergeant. She and her husband have experienced the joy of giving to others. Jones' retelling of one of her favorite memories when her family sacrificed their Christmas dinner to ensure a less-fortunate family enjoyed the holidays is an inspiration. Please see The Angel Story at the right.

But the Jones family isn't alone in their generosity. Military families, as a whole, are some of the most generous in the world. That's where you come in. Please tell the Fort Benning community about your favorite memory that involved helping someone less fortunate. Use "The Angel Story" as your inspiration, and help inspire others to give.

All members of the Fort Benning community are welcome to submit stories. Stories should be limited to 500 words. The Bayonet staff will choose the best entries to be highlighted in "The Gift of Giving" supplement. All entries must be turned in to The Bayonet by Nov. 19. They can be dropped off in The Bayonet office in Infantry Hall, Room 606, or mailed to: The Bayonet, The Tradition of Giving, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning GA 31905 or e-mailed to tannert@benning.army.mil.

"The Angel Story"

One of our best Christmas memories occurred during the trying time when Brooks was stationed away from our family in Fort Drum, N.Y. Our family was emotionally and financially stressed by the separation.

Brooks was home on leave, and we were delivering a Christmas food basket to a needy family in our area for our church. When we arrived at the tiny apartment two days before Christmas, there was no evidence of tree, decorations or presents. A single mom lived there with her sister, who was also a single parent. Two little tikes were so excited about the small gaily-wrapped gifts that were part of the basket.

The little tow-head boy asked, "Is that for me, Mama?" There was such distress on the young mother's face when she answered him after reading the tags, "No, these are for your cousins." She was fighting back tears as she asked us if we knew if someone else was to deliver her family's basket. She and her sister both had submitted their names.

We assured her that we would try to find out when we went back home, but we knew there had been some sort of mix-up because we had picked up the last basket. We could not reach anyone. All the people in charge were out doing their own last-minute preparations. We had yet to buy the food for our own Christmas dinner.

We had only $30 left to buy our turkey dinner, but the tiny voice haunted us both, "Is that for me, Mama?" We called all our teen-agers together and explained the situation to them. Would they mind if we took our turkey dinner money and bought gifts for that family? They were all for it. We could make something out of what was in the pantry.

A few toys were left on the shelves at the toy store. After they were wrapped, we went back to the apartment. The little one answered the door and shouted to his mother, "Mama, It's the angels. They're back!" God filled our hearts with such inexpressible joy and love with those words. I still fill to overflowing whenever I remember that tiny angel. We floated home in awe at the miracle God had given us.

The miracle did not stop there. We received a phone call that evening from a friend at church. She had gotten an extra turkey for free, and she wanted to know if we wanted it.

Is God good or what!

— Faye Jones

Board meets to discuss current issues

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Fort Benning School Board met Oct. 25 at Stowers Elementary School.

New business included a presentation on communication strategies that support parental participation by Glenn Hughes, Stowers principal, and Dr. Tom Dignan, principal at Faith Middle School.

Both principals told the board members that home-school communication is important and for that reason the schools use a communication envelope to send home important information and homework assignments. Because communication is key in the learning process, both listed the different ways the schools communicate. Those include a daily staff bulletin, monthly newsletter, e-mails, parent-teacher conferences, handbooks and the school calendar. One problem encountered by Dignan was after getting the information home, parents often don't respond to the information.

"The goal is to share information. We mailed the school handbook and calendar to the homes of our students to ensure the parents received them. The handbook has valuable information including the school rules. Some parents didn't read the information and then their children are the ones who get in trouble for breaking the rules."

Next board members learned how Wilson schoolteacher Margaret Koger teaches critical thinking skills in her classes. She explained several different projects in which her students are involved. Third-graders are involved in the Butterfly Project where butterflies were categorized and then released.

Other projects for the school include students walking across Fort Benning,and students producing a video of the virtual zoo where they are also required to write a research report complete with documentation.

These projects are part of a "curriculum that triggers critical and creative thinking and makes independent thinkers," Kroger said.

In the second part of the critical thinking presentation, Kathy Einhorn told board members that part of critical thinking is eliminating irrelevant information. She then gave the board members a math problem that had extraneous information that third- and fourth-graders have to sift through to arrive at the correct answer.

Einhorn explained to the board members that one thing the first Terra Nova results showed was that Fort Benning students "fell down in the areas of problem solving and reasoning and math communication — some of the higher level thinking skills. Now the schools have refocused on teaching those skills," she said, "because these skills underlie everything these kids are going to need to know how to do in the 21st century."

After concluding the information on critical thinking, she reviewed the results of the Department of Defense writing assessment and told the board that Fort Benning students were doing well.

Next on the agenda was a summary of Col. Randy Buck's, who is the school board president, trip to Italy as part of the Advisory Council on Dependents' Education. He told board members the reason for the trip was to evaluate, make recommendations and identify innovative programs overseas.

The next to the last item on the agenda was the Consolidated Income Statement for the School Lunchroom fund. Gwyn Maddox, director of child nutrition, said the fund was operating at below the optimum cash reserve level. Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent, explained that the optimum level was $150,000 because the fund equity should be able to cover operating costs for three months, which are approximately $50,000 a month. At issue is whether or not school lunch prices should be raised and by what amount or if manpower is at the appropriate strength. A regular part-time employee makes about $11,000 a year. Maddox provided school districts food service comparisons, labor cost comparisons, breakfast program financial data and meal price study for the board members. But the information was for discussion purposes only, to help document the gradual but consistent loss of revenue. She didn't have a recommendation for the board members at the time, but the school board president asked that she have one for the next board meeting.

The final item on the agenda was the superintendent's report. Dr. Dell McMullen spoke briefly on Washington's support of the school repair and maintenance projects, and that the Wilson School renovation is going well; the America Goes Back to School initiative from the U.S. Department of Education bus tour of Fort Benning schools; The Bayonet article on the ARK and Fort Benning's Teacher of the Year, Cy Dietrich who was honored at the command Retreat Ceremony. McMullen also said Earnestine Ezekiel, a kindergarten teacher at Dexter Elementary was honored at the Georgia Association for Young Children's annual meeting. She received the Fan Brooke Award. Another teacher to be honored in Savannah, Ga., at the Georgia Art Educators annual meeting in November is Gloria Loar, the art teacher at Faith Middle School. She is the recipient of the state Award of Excellence for her work with youth. In addition, Georgia received national recognition because of her work.

"The holiday ornaments will be on display and for sale at the Officers' Wives' Club Benning Bazaar. We've already had parents and other people asking if they could buy them before the bazaar," said Robin Schafer, PTO volunteer.

Helmick and Pride developed the craft ideas during the summer. Craft items for sale will include holiday ornaments, note cards, gift bags, gift tins decorated as angels, snowmen, penguins, beaded wreath ornaments and a variety of angels and Santa pins.

The actual craft time took place over the course of four art classes in a two-week period. "This is the first time we've ever done anything like this," said Carolyn Phillips, media coordinator and teacher at White Elementary.

The PTO volunteers will have all the White school craft items set up for sale at the Benning Bazaar Saturday beginning at 9 a.m., inside the entrance of Infantry Hall, Pride said.

Some of the crafts are already on display in the lobby of the school to encourage people to shop at the bazaar.

Students at White Elementary school said they are hoping interested shoppers will want to buy their crafts, making their holiday fundraiser a huge success.

Marriage requires devotion, sacrificial love

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

In his book, Romancing the Home, Ed Young wrote, "Couples who are successfully married all agree that marriage is not a 50-50 proposition. Unless each partner intends to give 100 percent regardless of a mate's performance, a marriage is crippled from the start.

As a husband I am to love my wife with no strings attached. I am to love her sacrificially. In fact, the Bible injunction is, "Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her ..."

Rupel

Sacrificial love ... what a concept! But what is sacrificial love and why sacrificial love? Quoting again from Romancing the Home, "Sacrificial love is not giving-in love. That would be cheaper. It is giving-up love. Sacrificial, giving-up love is love that is willing to go to any length to provide for the well-being of the beloved. A man should count the cost before he marries to determine whether or not he is willing to pay the price of being a real husband — but after he marries, he is to stop counting. Because whatever cost it takes to rightly love his wife is what he has promised to give, regardless of the cost."

Men need to be men when it comes to marriage.

Too many husbands think of their wives as some sort of surrogate mother. Feed me, clothe me, take care of me. I have something to say to husbands like this: Grow up!

In the marriage vows the bride and groom promise to love, comfort and honor one another. Sacrificial love bestows honor on the beloved.

This means not putting each other down. I know of no worse thing a husband or wife can do than to cut down their spouse in public or private.

There is the old saying, "Sticks and stones may break my bones but words will never harm me." The truth is, words do carry a lot of impact and name calling can and does cause much harm.

God has placed great value in your spouse. Gary Smalley has said, "Honor is a reflex of the heart toward one who is deeply treasured." Would your spouse know by your word and deed that you honor them? Treasure them?

Do you know how you can find out how your spouse wants to be honored? Simply ask them.

They know. It may well surprise you that it isn't all that difficult a thing to accomplish.

So what are you waiting for? Ask.

God has a design for marriage. It's sort of like a road map that if followed will lead us in the direction we need to go.

The journey of a thousand miles begins with the husband saying, "I know a short cut!"

In marriage there are no short cuts, only a proven path outlined in God's word.

If you are lost along your marital journey, the Family Life Center may be the place to come and find new direction.

Call the Center at 545-2050 or 545-7777 and get some information that may set you on the right path.

Americans blessed by those who have served

Chaplain (Maj.) Ronald Smith
Brigade Chaplain, Infantry Training Brigade

In his best English, and my worst Spanish, the words still echo. "You are blessed to be a U.S. veteran." These words were spoken to me by a Nicaraguan officer this past year in Nicaragua. We were discussing our uniforms, and he had inquired about my combat patch. He further explained that he too was a veteran, a Sandinista. He had seen war and misery, but he could not be proud. His broken English was clear, his eyes alive as he spoke those sobering words. It was his dream to be a U.S. veteran.

How could he say that we are blessed? Some do not share his opinion. Some are bitter, some paralyzed by war, some relive the haunting memories of combat on a daily basis.

Despite the individual pain and plight, they are the proud and often overlooked veterans of our nation's wars. We can only answer by comparing the freedoms, the blessings and the rewards our nation has reaped because of the enormous sacrifice of our veterans.

We are truly blessed to live in a nation that enjoys life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. How can we say we are not blessed through their enormous sacrifice?

Would it be appropriate to complain about sore knees while talking to a person with no feet? What citizen of our nation would cry about having to pay taxes while standing at the grave site of one who has given his life for his country? We are blessed by the sacrifices of those who have served. It is about sacrifice, and what is gained.

The eternal God humbled himself and became a man who lived and died for us. He became the servant of servants. What right do we have then to complain when He asks us to serve one another? Join me as we pray this prayer on Veteran's Day:

Father God, and Lord of our ancestors, as we look back across our nation's history on this Veteran's Day, help us recognize the dedication of those who served our Armed Forces past and present. Help us to make their sacrifices for freedom a guide in our daily duties. May we uphold the high standards they set, and enable us to do our best each day. Amen

Wilson students gain practical knowledge of local agriculture.

Students learn past thru gardening

Youth improve critical thinking skill with hands-on education

Wilson Elementary School

What do the fifth-grade curriculum, critical thinking skills and cotton have in common?

Just ask the student's in Roger King's Achieving Curricular Excellence classes at Wilson School. Students in ACE are learning firsthand about the hardships associated with picking cotton, while at the same time using the experience to develop higher order-thinking skills.

First planted last year by fifth-graders, the cotton crop is now mature and being harvested by Wilson students in grades three through five.

However, the ACE classes are doing much more than just picking the cotton.

King gave each class background lessons on the importance of cotton in the Old South.

The issue of slavery was tied into these lessons as well. Next students got a taste of just how difficult the task of picking the crop by hand actually is.

Students worked diligently to pick cotton then extracted the seeds for future crops. The lesson was further integrated into the curriculum in a math exercise where students estimated the number of seeds needed in order to plant next year's crop.

Language arts were also tied into the lesson through a variety of writing activities about the experience.

Students were enthusiastic about the activities, but most agreed that Eli Whitney's cotton gin was a wonderful invention.

"Picking cotton is hard work, especially when it's hot," commented fifth-grader Revisia Lister. "I did enjoy the activities because it was fun to learn about cotton and how it grows, but I am glad I don't have to do it all the time."

King said she plans to coordinate more ACE activities around his garden which also has a crop of peanuts, squash and pumpkins.

Wilson third-graders plan for fun with teamwork

Wilson Elementary School

Geri Beer's third-graders at Wilson School have big plans. While studying a unit in language arts that focused on teamwork and planning, students were able to find out firsthand how important detailed planning and collaboration are in the work place.

The language arts unit began with a video that featured a construction site. Numerous times during the video, the point was about the importance of planning in any project. Fueled by the students' interest, Beer invited two guest speakers to talk further with her class.

Interior designer Tara Hutchins, a certified kitchen designer, visited the class and emphasized the importance of teamwork in her profession. Hutchins explained how working with various architects and clients could be challenging, making teamwork and planning important.

During her visit, Hutchins shared some of her architectural plans with the students. She also gave the class a lesson on drafting and taught them to draw using proper perspective.

Randy Dewberry, site manager for the renovation project at Wilson School, also visited Beer's third-grade class. Dewberry delighted the students with updates about the renovation of the school. Students were enthusiastic about the floor plan the manager distributed and the class had many questions about the status of their school's renovation.

"When will we be back in the building?" was the number one question asked by the students. Dewberry was able to explain about delays due to weather and other extenuating circumstances and show the students the necessity of having an alternate plan to prevent further delays.

Both speakers were able to tie in the theme of teamwork and planning to the students' curriculum.

"Any time you can bring in real life examples for the students, the subject matter becomes more meaningful," Beer commented. "There is also a much better chance that the students will remember what they've learned."

Cooperation and planning now have new meaning for the eager third-graders. Comments like, "I'll need to go to Plan B if this doesn't work," and "We've got to work together to get this done," can be heard throughout the class.

Kids have high-tech teacher

Wilson Elementary School

After weeks of searching, scanning, uploading, downloading, composing and animating, the first research projects created by the enrichment students at Wilson School were recently completed.

Students learned essential research skills doing safe Internet searches, using multiple references and documenting sources.

Students also learned to use the available technology the school has to offer including a flat bed scanner, digital camera and Adobe and PowerPoint computer software.

The creative projects were presented to parents in a presentation the children dubbed a "PowerPoint Extravaganza." Children completed a fully animated slide show, which showcased their research findings. The shows played continuously on computers as parents moved from station to station viewing the students' work. An added feature of the presentation included refreshments planned and prepared by the students.

"Using PowerPoint to make a slide show was fun," said fifth-grade Enrichment student Rhiannon Pegan. "Scanning pictures is easy and using the Internet to help with research is a great way to find information."

Students from second to fifth grade participated in the project.

Students will continue to use the tools they mastered during this project as they select other subjects to research throughout the year.

School's technology program earns praise

Wilson Elementary School

The technology-infused curriculum at Wilson School was recognized as one of the best in the world earlier this year.

The North Central Regional Educational Laboratory selected Wilson as one of five schools to be featured at the Department of Defense Education Activity Technology Institute in Leesburg, Va., in August.

Featured with Wilson were Aviano High School, Aviano, Italy; Brentwood Elementary School, Des Plaines, Ill.; Hanau American High School, Hanau, Germany; and Seeds University Elementary School, UCLA, Westwood, Cal.

Five Wilson staff members presented information about the school's technology program. Included on the panel were Phyllis Parker, principal, Michelle Allen, teacher, Melanie Keating, educational technologist, Margaret Koger, teacher and Dr. Wanda Person, media specialist.

The primary emphasis of the technology institute was effective staff development. Wilson was selected for inclusion as a featured school because the exceptional quality of its professional training program. This program includes the collaborative method which was initiated at Wilson in the 1997-98 school year.

Using this method, the educational technologist and media specialist meet weekly with grade-level teachers to discuss resource needs and technology possibilities. These planning sessions allow the media specialist and educational technologist to identify training needs as well as to provide technology support for the classroom teachers.

Another important aspect of Wilson's professional development program which was highlighted at the conference were biweekly classes conducted by the educational technologist.

These classes ensure teachers attain a high level of proficiency with the software applications available through the school as well as with the use of equipment such as digital cameras, scanners and other technology hardware.

Presenters emphasized the focus of Wilson's professional development program has always been to provide the best learning opportunities possible for students.

"The Wilson faculty," Koger explained to the institute participants, "shares the same vision — we teach children. With that in mind, we want to do the best we can; and part of our staff development is to use the best tools we can to teach children."

Soldier trio takes on Ironman

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Michele E. Hanson

Kevin Petit (left) and Brian Eifler logged more than 200 miles of biking combined and six hours each of running on weekends in preparation for the Ironman triathlon Saturday.

Brian Eifler, Kevin Petit and Michael Foster began training last March for an adventure of a lifetime and a challenge few would ever undertake.

They will join more than 1,700 racers from around the globe Saturday in one of the most grueling and demanding events in the world of sports — the Ironman triathlon-Florida.

The inaugural Ironman Florida is one of only 13 sanctioned Ironman races in the world and is the first qualifier for the 2000 World Championship.

The race consists of three legs begining with a 2.4-mile swim in the Gulf of Mexico, followed by a 112-mile bike ride and finishes with a complete marathon (26.2 miles) on the streets of Panama City Beach Saturday.

So why would any person want to race in an Ironman? The answer was simple for Petit, operations officer for 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"I am obsessed with finding the limits of my human endurance," Petit said. "I try to find my limits every week — this race is an event in itself that will undoubtedly test those limits."

The trio participated regularly in sprint and middle distance races throughout Georgia and Florida and competed in local triathlons. But with the announcement of the first Ironman-Florida late in 1998, they realized a dream could come true. Because of the Florida location, and its close proximity to Fort Benning, the three triathletes could face the ultimate challenge by competing in the mother of all triathlons — the Ironman.

"Nothing is tougher than the training we had to do in order to prepare ourselves for such a significant event," said Eifler, assistant operations officer, 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

And the sacrifices, according to Eifler, were endless while preparing for such a race. The aspiring triathletes followed specific programs designed for people who work. They swam long distance during the week, rode bikes to and from work and ran or biked at least an hour whenever time allowed.

Michael Foster, C Co., 3rd Ranger Bn., said he did not have the time to do as much long distance training as he would have liked. "I am not competing against the other competitors but competing to be better than myself," he said.

Eifler and Petit said the sacrifices did not end with the training. The amount of time spent training led to a great deal of family sacrifice as well.

On the weekends, when most people spend time with family and friends, the triathletes would run anywhere from two to four hours and bike 90 to 120 miles.

"We are already in the Army and do not work 'normal hours'," Eifler said feeling a bit guilty. "Then when I am home, instead of spending time with the family, I end up doing something for myself — training for the Ironman."

But Sherrie Eifler, wife and supporter of her husband, said she is excited about the upcoming Ironman and hopes all the training will pay off, making the sacrifices away from family worth it.

"He began training when I was pregnant with our second child," she said. "Now we have a three-month-old and a three-year-old, and in order to spend time with us, he (Brian) gets up on the weekends at 5 a.m. to finish his training early."

The three Soldiers agreed after months of training not only physically but also mentally and spiritually, the Ironman Triathlon is going to "zap" them and cause pain unlike any other before.

But each of the three athletes has a goal, regardless of the pain and amount of sacrifice. Their goal is to finish one of the world's greatest sporting events and be able to say, "I finished the Ironman."

"I expect to finish the race, but no matter what happens, it is an honor to have an opportunity like this," Eifler said. "Somehow I will come to grips with the pain after biking 112 miles and the cramps at 13 miles. That will be the time I will need to dig deep down inside and continue — pushing myself, not to race the others, but to race myself."

Airborne cadre compete for more than fun

Y. Abbadakka

Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, dig in and pull during the tug-of-war contest held as part of the 507th Olympic Day Oct. 22.

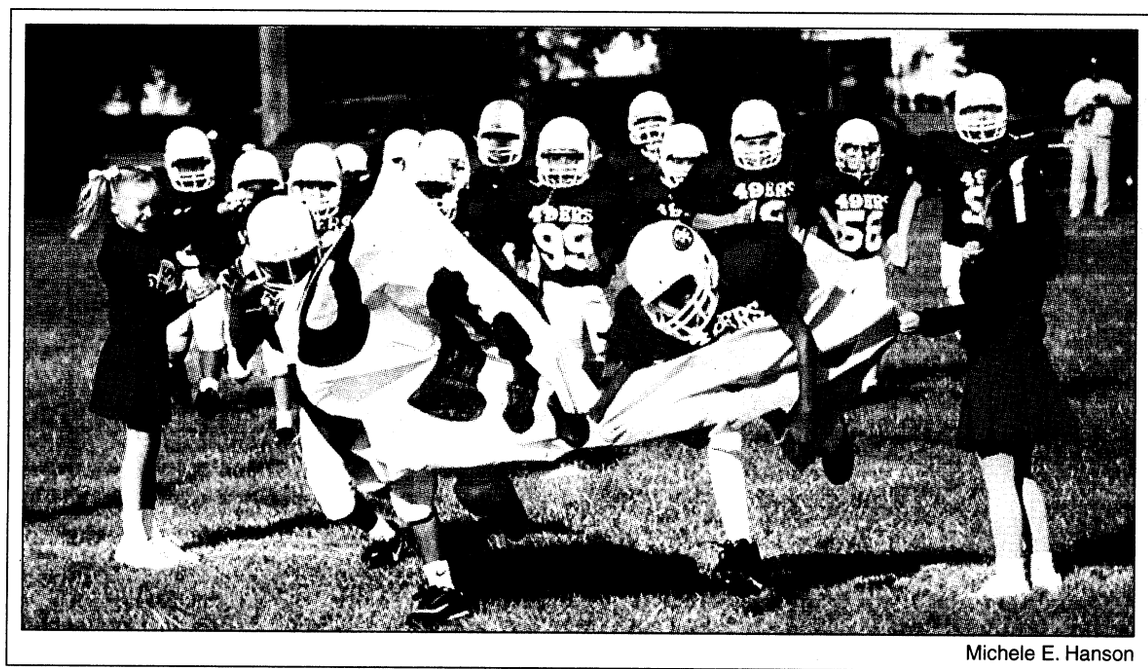
The 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, gathered at Eubanks Field Oct. 22 for a special event. An event held for the first time since 1998 — the 507th Olympics. Six companies stood in formation eager to begin the competition that would ultimately decide, after competing in six company events, which unit would earn the title of champion.



The 507th Olympics was held to foster esprit de corps among the cadre and their families and, according to Lt. Col. Brian Stephenson, battalion commander, the nature of the unit's mission (Airborne School) keeps the battalion compartmentalized.

"With each company running its own class there are few opportunities for the companies to work with each other and get to know one another," Stephenson said. "Our mission is also very regimented without much variety. This type of team competition adds a new dimension to being part of the battalion."

Stephenson said that teamwork in any unit results from cohesion, and cohesion just doesn't happen by itself. "Cohesion requires activities that bring Soldiers together in the quest for a common goal — in this case that common goal was to play hard and win," he said.

And play hard, they did. Soldiers participated in volleyball, soccer, basketball, tug of war, the stakebed push and the favorite event of the day flickerball.

Bustin' through

The 9- to 10-year-old 49ers, coached by Terrence Moore, break through the opening ceremony banner held by the 49er cheerleaders before their fourth game of the season Saturday. The 49ers battled the Chargers in a strong defensive game that stumped both offenses for the entire game. Neither team was able to score resulting in a draw.

The Jets defeated the Cowboys during the second 9- to 10-year-old game, 14-8.

Football games are held Saturdays at Green Field starting at 9 a.m. Flag football will hold two games tonight at Doughboy Stadium begining at 6 p.m. For information, call Youth Services at 545-3070.

OLYMPICS: Soldiers compete in games

push and the favorite event of the day flickerball. Flickerball resembles American football. D Co. mastered flickerball and dominated C Co. earning first place.

"Much of our success was due to the competitive spirit of the company," said 1st Sgt. Mike Clemens, D Co., 1st Bn., 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt. "It also gave them an opportunity to compete head-to-head with instructors from other companies."

D Co. also went on to win volleyball and the stakebed push, which required 10-person teams to push a truck along a designated course as fast as possible using one member as a driver.

First place wins in soccer and basketball went to E Co., while Headquarters and Headquarters Co. was crowned as the tug-of-war champs.

Capt. Scott Noon, E Co. commander, said Soldiers are naturally competitive, and any time you can provide a break from the normal routine it inspires and benefits the unit.

"We provide parachute support for all the Airborne units on Fort Benning, and we pack a lot of parachutes — we had a lot of young Soldiers who were fired up about the competition and happy about taking a break from packing to compete against the other units," Noon said.

Teams were awarded points for each event and received points for first through fourth place. As a result, D Co. and E Co. received 15 points becoming co-champions of the 1999 507th Olympics. The winning teams were awarded a camouflage streamer for their company guidon.

"Our job in the Army is to win on the battlefield," said Capt. John Hanson, commander, D Co., 1st Bn., 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt. "Any activity that brings a battalion together is great, especially when it fosters competitive spirit."

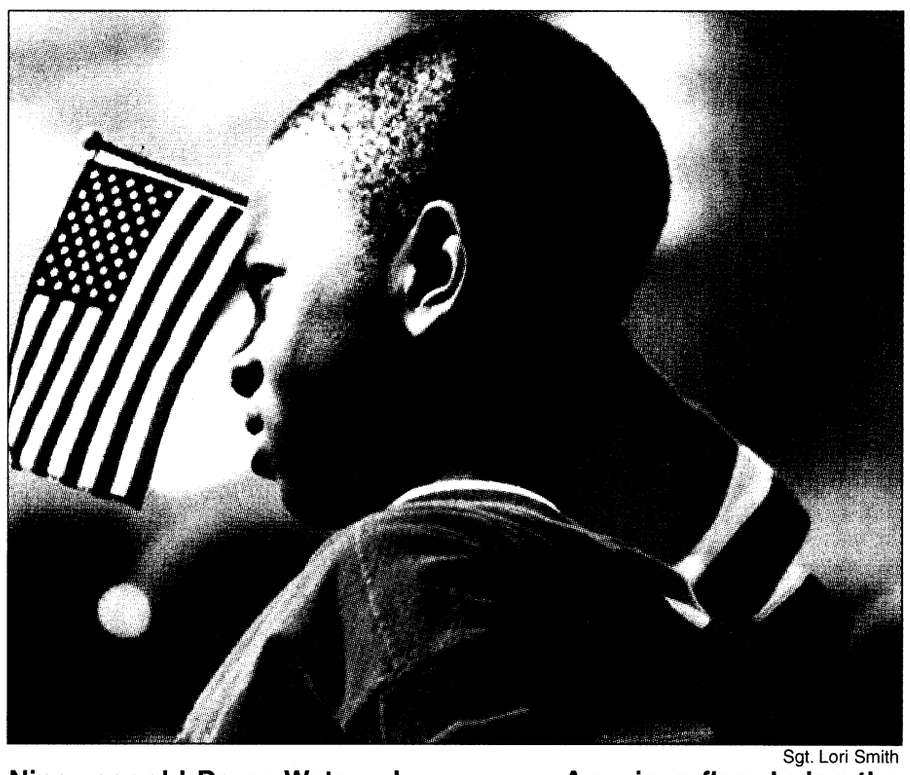
Post prepares for SOA Watch protest

Richard McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Post officials are once again making final preparations for the annual U.S. Army School of Americas protest scheduled for Nov. 19-22.

While the anti-USARSA group, SOA Watch, promises 10,000 people at the Fort Benning front gate, Col. Tom Cain, director of public safety is taking it in stride. "We are prepared to handle whatever actions the protestors select."



Cain's crew will be busy on several fronts from taking protestors into custody to processing them for possible judicial action at a later date. Meanwhile the directors of logistics and public works are preparing to do their part in providing everything from buses to porta-potties.

The post has several courses of action for dealing with the protestors. Which course of action officials execute depends upon the actions of the protestors, according to Cain. Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander, will make the final decision.

In the past protestors have been processed and for first time offenders, presented letters barring them from post. Repeat offenders were issued citations, which resulted in court dates.

Last year, the protestors were loaded on buses, which took them to Rigdon Park in South Columbus where they were left with a warning from the post chief of staff not to come back on post. They didn't.

For most people living and working at Fort Benning, it will be business as usual although they may notice a step up in the number of random traffic stops and additional military police patrols. Travel on and off post could be slowed for those using Benning Road and if the protestors cross the line Sunday afternoon as they have in the past. Benning Road will be closed at the Custer Road intersection for safety reasons.

Ceremonies remember veterans

Sgt. Lori Smith
Assistant editor

One hundred nineteen American flags lined the corner of Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park in Columbus where Soldiers and community members gathered for a Pre-Veterans Day celebration Saturday.

The number of flags represented the service members who entered the armed forces from Columbus and who were later killed in Vietnam, said Lonnie Jackson, co-chairman of Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park Committee.

But, said Jackson, this is a day to honor all those who have served.

Around 100 guests of the event, gathered around the Vietnam Veterans Memorial wall where the 119 native Columbus service members' names are inscribed.

Those who were at the ceremony waved small American flags as speakers from various organizations thanked all veterans from all wars for sacrifices made.

"I thought they did a great job of recognizing the Vietnam veterans, as well as all veterans," said Command Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Graham, Fort Benning garrison sergeant major.

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Phillip A. Liparoto, said Veterans Day brings back memories of the time he spent serving in WWII, the Korean War and Vietnam.

Hopeful foster parents face challenges

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Ginny Taylor and her husband owned their own home in Clarksville, Tenn., while he was stationed at nearby Fort Campbell, Ky.

As foster parents, the couple welcomed eight children into that home at different times over the last two years.

"We would take in children on a short-term or emergency basis," Taylor said.

Foster care is a state program that provides temporary substitute homes for children whose families cannot provide a safe and nurturing environment for them. The Georgia Department of Human Resources' Division of Family and Children Services administers the program here.

Six months ago when the couple and their son moved to Fort Benning, Taylor started doing research on becoming a foster parent in Georgia.

She encountered a roadblock she had not expected.

The Taylors live in post housing. If they choose to pursue being foster parents again, not only will they have to meet all the requirements established by the state, they will also have to request, in writing, approval from the housing office and the installation commander allowing a non-family member to reside in their quarters.

Fort Benning's Housing Office receives about one request a year from residents wishing to take in foster children, according to Ron Smith, chief of family housing. The answer is generally no.

Smith and attorney Anne Norfolk, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, cite Army Housing Management Regulation 210-50-3.17. It states that additional bedrooms are not authorized to accommodate non-family members.

Housing is provided to Soldiers and their family members. Those who live on post voluntarily forfeit their housing allowance. The size of the quarters (the number of bedrooms) is based on the number of family members.

"We max out the number of bedrooms per family, and we max out the number of kids in a bedroom," Smith said. "So in most situations, you don't have an empty bedroom sitting there."

The housing chief added, "The primary source of housing for military families is the private sector. Quarters are a privilege for Soldiers and their immediate family members."

Fort Benning has about 4,000 quarters that supplement what is available in the Columbus-Phenix City area.

The housing regulation also states that "approved occupancy should be equitable for all Soldiers and not adversely impact on the health, safety, morale or welfare of the installation."

Liability is another issue that concerns Fort Benning, Smith said.

"Just the fact that you are bringing more people into housing brings up the liability issue," he said. "Anytime a guest is allowed to stay in quarters, we are liable for them. At any time, a claim can be filed against the government."

"That's where the whole health and safety factor in the housing regulation comes into play," Norfolk added.

Foster children who are not military dependents cannot receive any military benefits or privileges and cannot be seen at Martin Army Community Hospital, shop at the Post Exchange, participate in Youth Services programs or attend Fort Benning Schools.

"We evaluate them (the requests) on an individual basis," Smith said. "There is no blanket installation policy. But, these are the factors we have to look at, and these factors generally militate against approval of foster-parent applications."

Of course, military families off post are free to be foster

Keep aggressive dogs at home

commentary

In country music sensation Chad Brock's latest hit single, Lightning Does the Work, he points out things that many people fear, despite the fact that those things cannot cause harm. He sings of thunder, which aside from the frightening, rumbling noises can't hurt a flea. No one's ever come to harm from it. But the lightning that accompanies it — now that's another story.

Then, there's the gun. Of course you need a bullet to harm someone with a gun. A good butt stroke could cause a nice bump on someone's head, but for the most part, when someone's waving around a pistol, it's the bullet you don't see that should be causing the trepidation. I've never heard anyone scream, "He's got a bullet," but that's sure enough what you need to be afraid of.

"It ain't the growl, it ain't the bark," sings Chad, bringing up other fear-causing actions that can't harm, "it's the bite that hurts," he croons on, referring to man's best friend.

Thunder. A gun. A growling, barking dog.

All of these things by themselves are harmless, but they still bring fear to many. They make the heart beat faster. Palms get sweaty. And, in some cases, panic sets in.

At the last Mayor's meeting, the fact that one of these actions was making our school children uncomfortable was addressed.

It seems that some parents, when picking up their children from school, are accompanied by their dogs. According to one resident, these aren't little dogs, either. Rottweiler was one of the breeds mentioned. The McBride-area mayor said reports are that these dogs are out of control, tugging at their leashes and barking loudly.

Obviously, this causes fear for many of the children.

An easy enough fix. "Tell them to stop bringing their pets to the school yard," I thought.

Unfortunately, there is no Fort Benning regulation that prohibits pets on the school grounds. However, Col. John M. Mitchell, the garrison commander, doesn't think a regulation is needed. "You don't have to write a policy or law to do something that makes sense," Mitchell said. He told the military police in attendance at the meeting to be aware of this problem. He said that the MPs who patrol the school grounds every day can order dog owners with aggressive barking dogs to remove the pets immediately.

He's absolutely correct in enforcing what should be a common sense courtesy to others. But should the MPs have to be put in a position of approaching an out-of-control dog's owner and asking him or her to vacate the premises?

It's common sense, folks.

If you can't handle your dog, what do you suppose the 5-, 6-, 7- or 8-year-old children seeing you are thinking? Do you think they're scared? They may have heard the song, but their little hearts are probably still beating faster when they hear the barks and growls of a dog wanting to be free of its leash.

It still seems like a common sense thing to me. Point blank, leave your dogs at home.

Native Americans contribute greatly

In recognition of Native Americans, Alaskan Natives and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, Nov. 1-30 was proclaimed "National Native American Indian Heritage Month" by Public Law 102.188 in March 1992.

The theme for this year is "Wisdom of the Sacred Circles; Living, Learning, and Giving Back."

All Americans, regardless of their heritage, have gained from Native Americans and their ancestors. Native Americans have served their country not only in every conflict, but also as artists, scholars, and scientists. They have made great contributions in agriculture, medicine, art and government. Today Native Americans continue to contribute immensely in the pursuit of America's national goals and in the quest for freedom and opportunity. Their diversity throughout history serves as a model for all Americans.

November not only offers an increase in national awareness of the history and contributions of Native Americans but it also offers Native Americans serving in the Armed Services an opportunity to celebrate and share their heritage.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and the surrounding community to participate in this observance through the planned activities of units, staffs, directorates and other agencies.

Maj. Gen. John M. LeMoyne
Commanding General

History proves Indians worthy of recognition

Col. Mitch Poodry
Dismounted BattleSpace Battle Lab

The U.S. Army has designated November as Native American Awareness Month in recognition of the contributions made by Native Americans.

Comprising only one percent of the population, Native Americans certainly are not one of the more active or predominant minority groups in the country. However, they have always been active participants when it comes to supporting this nation's armed forces.

The Native American population was around 5 million at the time the first whites arrived from Europe. By 1890, their numbers were about 250,000. During that same time period, the white population had gone from zero to 75 million.

Native Americans have fought on the side of the U.S. since before there was a United States and have fought in every conflict since. In our war for independence, the Iroquois nation played a vital role. Benjamin Franklin used the Iroquois Confederacy's laws as the basis for drafting the Constitution. Each tribe was its own governing body. Mohawks and Senecas, two of the six tribes of the Iroquois Confederacy, fought on opposite sides. Mohawks sided with the British and Senecas fought on the side of the colonists.

During the War Between the States, tribes came from as far away as the Oklahoma Territory in semi-organized brigades to fight, with units again ending up on opposite sides. During the first major conflict off American soil, the Spanish American War, Native Americans were in the ranks.

During the World War I more than 17,000 volunteered. This was nearly 25 percent of the adult male Indian population at the time. WWII saw an equally impressive response.

Navajos won acclaim in the South Pacific as Marine Corps' Code Talkers, speaking in their native tongue over the radios and totally confusing the Japanese who were trying to decipher the messages.

A Pima Indian named Ira Hayes was one of the Marines that help raise the flag on Mount Surubachi on Iwo Jima.

The Army used Cheyenne native speakers in Europe but on a much smaller scale.

Perhaps the period with the most notoriety for Native Americans is the period of the taming of the American west, generally in the 1870s-1890s. During this period, the U.S. Army and Plains tribes were fighting each other from the Rio Grande to Canada.

Although the U.S. Army had used American Indians throughout its history as scouts, that practice was especially useful in the West where vast distances and the maneuverability of most of the confrontational tribes significantly challenged the cavalry and infantry units.

In fact, more than 20 Indian scouts were awarded the Medal of Honor for their actions against "hostiles" in the western campaigns. It also, unfortunately, involved the betrayal of certain tribes that were allies to the Army. A classic example was the use of Apaches to catch an Apache.

Nelson Miles relieved George Crook in April 1886 in the Arizona Territory. Like Crook, Miles continued to use Chiricahua Apaches as scouts to eventually track down Geronimo and 20 other warriors and their families after they had eluded more than 5,000 Soldiers for more than 5 months. Geronimo's small band surrendered to Miles in August 1886. They were arrested, put on a train and sent to a prison at Fort Marion, Fla. The 60 Apache scouts that were employed by the U.S. Army were also arrested, treated as criminals and also sent to Florida. Crook protested this action but got no response and the betrayed scouts spent 26 years as prisoners of war.

My last observation would be one of education and general awareness of Native American history. Native Americans, and specifically the various tribes, have their own view of history. It is usually much different than what is depicted in most school history books or depicted by Hollywood movies, if it is told at all.

Native Americans today are continuing to embrace their rich heritage and are willing to share that history with their fellow citizens.

Couple finds joy during post visit

Please accept our thanks for the reception given to the 66th Division. Panther survivors of the Leopoldville disaster on Dec. 24, 1944. We have twice been honored to visit Fort Benning and have been treated royally both times.

I especially want to acknowledge the young Soldiers who took part in the "I am the Infantry" performance. They were fantastic. It was a complete surprise when they moved. Please convey our thanks.

My husband of 58 years is former Tech. Sgt. Walter Brown, Company F, 262nd Regt., 66th Div. He lost his whole platoon when 153 men of Company F were instantly killed as the torpedo went through the compartment they slept in. He had left 30 seconds before. Captain Hal F. Crain of Company F is honored in your museum.

Again many thanks for a memorable time.

Santa's Castle ready for busy season

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Imagine being a parent, a Soldier stationed at Fort Benning, and not able to afford Christmas gifts for your children. This is not a pleasant thought — yet a reality for approximately 500 families last year. These families received help because of Santa's Castle, a non-profit organization that provides toys to military families in need.

With the help of the chain of command, chaplains, Army Community Services and the Red Cross, Soldiers who need help in providing toys for their children are identified, said Lori Simmons, director of Santa's Castle.

"Sometimes we never know who needs help and often Soldiers don't want to ask for help — that is when we depend on the chain of command because a first sergeant can identify the Soldiers whose children would benefit from the organization," she said.

"Our only guideline for helping is any child who wouldn't have toys without us." Last year 1,201 children received new toys and this year's goal is toys for 1,500 children or 600 families. Each child receives three toys from varying price ranges. To support a child's Christmas, it costs between $40 and $50.

Santa's Castle accepts both monetary and new toy donations. This is the third year Santa's Castle accepts only new toys or monetary donations, Simmons said.

"We used to accept used toys in good condition, but getting the toys ready for shelf took a lot of the volunteers' time and children get better quality toys now."

The organization is sponsored through private donations, unit fund-raisers, the Officers' Wives and Enlisted Wives clubs, the Chaplains Fund, community schools and various veterans organizations.

Last year Wilson schoolchildren donated $1,250 they collected from a penny drive. "The goal was $100 for each grade level. We were hoping to raise about $600 for Santa's Castle but the jars kept filling and before we knew it we had more than $1,000. We had grocery bags filled with rolled pennies," Phyllis Parker, Wilson principal, said. "First-grader Jasmine Holman was named the Queen of Pennies because she brought in 18 pounds of them.

"This was our way of helping the children learn about giving," Parker said.

"Parents want to teach their children the value of giving so often they sponsor a same-age child and let their children pick out the toys for the less fortunate child," Simmons said.

Santa's Castle works year round to provide for Soldiers' children. Shopping for the toys occurs in the summer and fall when prices are best, Simmons said.

This year's goal is to help 300 more children or 100 more families than last year, said Chaplain (Capt.) James W. Blount, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment.

He said a lot of people don't realize that 100 percent of the money that is raised goes to buy toys. The people who work at Santa's Castle are volunteers not getting paid.

With the Oct. 31 application deadline past, he said all emergency applications are chaplain referred.

Soldiers shop from Nov. 29 through Dec. 10, after which only emergencies are handled. Simmons said one year on Christmas Eve a family's home burned down. Because of donations Santa's Castle was able to help provide new toys for the children.

"It is a huge goal, but a simple idea — to provide children with toys for Christmas," Simmons said.

Santa's Castle is open from 9 a.m. to noon Monday, Wednesday and Friday February through December and is located in Custer Terrace in Building 2682. The phone number is 685-4422.

Deer create hazardous driving conditions

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

With winter approaching, the Department of Natural Resources warned drivers last week that the likelihood of hitting a deer in Georgia is on the increase.

Early-morning motorists on Fort Benning are accustomed to seeing the four-legged creatures on the Follow Me Golf Course or along the edge of the woods.

And they should be extra cautious this month, the peak of the breeding season, according to Pete Swiderek, fish and wildlife supervisor with the Natural Resource Management Branch.

Erratic behavior is the norm during mating season, which extends from October to December.

"A buck after a doe is a single-minded deer," Swiderek said. "The regular rules go out the window because of the breeding season."

Last year more than 49,000 accidents between deer and vehicles occurred in Georgia. Muscogee and Harris counties are two of the top 10 counties in the state for deer-vehicle accidents, the report by the state's DNR said.

On Fort Benning there have been 24 deer-vehicle accidents in the last six months, according to Lt Col. Terry Kelley, chief of the Law Enforcement Division, Directorate of Public Safety. No one has been seriously injured.

"I've had two deer jump out in front of me going to and from work in the last couple of months," Kelley said.

Deer on Fort Benning are moving the most when people are coming to work — the early morning hours, said Randy Harris, safety specialist, Infantry Branch Safety Office.

"At daybreak they are moving from their feeding areas back to where they spend their days, in the deep woods," Harris said.

The deer also move in early evening and at night to the feeding areas.

Harris has seen a lot of deer between Martin Army Community Hospital and the riding stables on Marne Road. Other hot spots on post include the Follow Me Golf Course and the stretch of road from Highway 185 into Main Post.

"But, you can see deer just about anywhere on Fort Benning at any time," Harris said.

When you spot a deer, slow down and drive defensively, Harris added. "Especially if you have seen one cross in front of you. There is probably one following right behind it."

Swiderek, the wildlife specialist, said that deer in the cantonment areas, where hunting is prohibited, have become accustomed to being in close association with people and often move during daylight hours.

"They also feed along the side of the road," he said.

Deer have caused more roadway deaths than any other animal, Harley Chase, safety specialist, Infantry Branch Safety Office, said.

Drivers often have to make a split-second decision of whether to hit the deer or to swerve. If you swerve to the right to avoid the deer, you will run off the road and may hit a tree or light pole. If you swerve to the left, you may go into on-coming traffic or off the other side of the road.

"It's never easy to hit a deer, but if they have to make that decision, we recommend that they brace themselves and get a good grip on the steering wheel," Chase said.

ACS Food Locker helps Soldiers with holiday turkeys

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

It's turkey time again, and Army Community Services is doing their part to make sure there's one on every table during the holiday season.

On Monday, 400 turkeys will be given to unit representatives from across post so they can be given out to Soldiers who might need a little help filling up the holiday table.

Donating turkeys to the units for use in holiday baskets is all in the spirit of the season, said Alfonso Deane, Food Locker supervisor. He added the program aims to brighten up the holidays for those who may be having financial difficulties.

"We feel that some Soldiers for various reasons may not have financial means to provide for themselves or the family," he said. "We provide turkeys to ensure that each Soldier and family member enjoys and shares the holiday season."

Deane said donations from the Soldier and Family Support Association, the Army Community Service Support Fund, the Officers' and Enlisted Wives' clubs make the turkey donations possible.

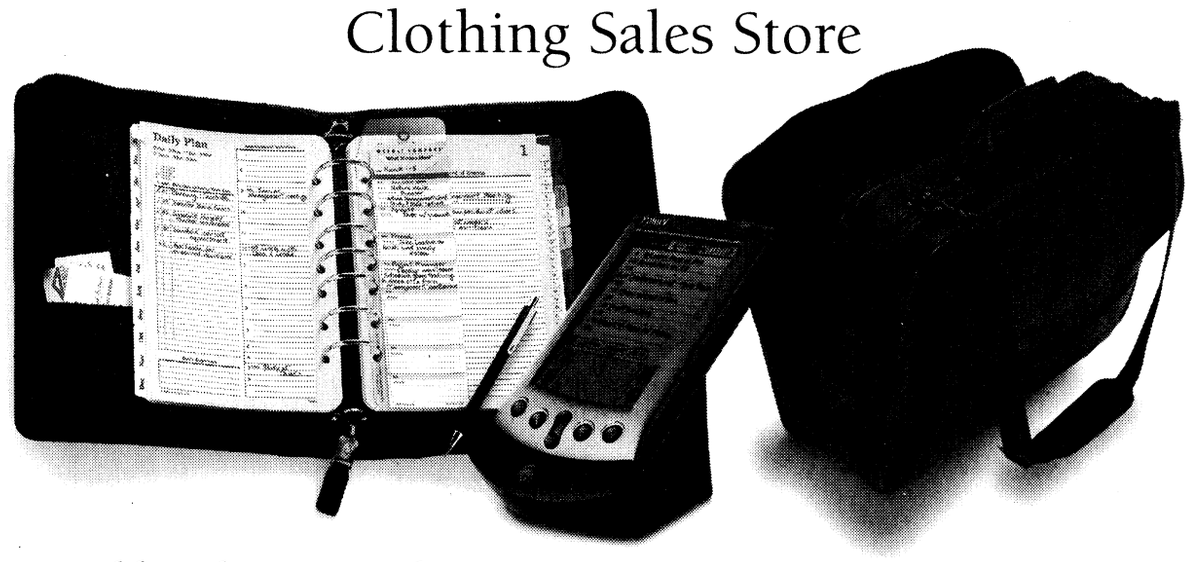
"I think we are very fortunate to have those organizations provide us the money," he said.

While ACS provides the turkey, Deane said units actually collect the canned goods needed to round out holiday baskets.

Units also choose which Soldiers are in the most need of help, but ACS provides them with some suggested criteria.

"We provide the major subordinate commands with a memorandum with all of the criteria they should use in selecting the most needy Soldiers," Deane explained. "In that criteria, we identify a grade structure that should be considered, from E-1 to E-6.

"In identifying the most needy Soldier, we also suggest they see if the person is experiencing financial hardship," he said. "Another criteria to be used is if the Soldier has a large family and they are the only one providing financial support."



"We're not telling them they have to use that, we're just putting it out there," said Deane.

Soldiers in need any time of the year can get help from the Food Locker. The locker provides those in need with two days worth of food. Much of the food in the locker comes from donations from organizations across post.

Those in need can go through their chain of command or by contacting ACS.

For more information about the turkey program or the Food Locker, call 545-4485 or 545-2536.

Pay leaves families strapped

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — When $20 is all you've got left after expenses at the end of the month, life is tough. Ask any E- 3 with a spouse and a couple of toddlers.

For many of the military's 613,000 E-1 to E-4 junior enlisted service members — especially the 172,000 who are married — making ends meet is a penny-pinching undertaking. Housing and moving costs, car payments, auto insurance and repair bills, plus child care fees leave many young military families financially strapped.

"We have people who are falling through the cracks," said DoD's Victor Vasquez. "We'd like to see what we can do to increase the discretionary income that families have." The new deputy assistant defense secretary for personnel support, families and education has proposed a variety of approaches to help fill the gap for the military's young families.

Junior enlisted paychecks only stretch so far. When the largest pay raise since 1981 goes into effect Jan. 1, an E- 1 fresh from basic training will earn $930.30 a month and an E-4 with two years' service will earn $1,312.80.

Pay table reforms scheduled for July will include further increases of up to 5.5 percent to 75 percent of the military's enlisted members and 53 percent of the officers.

These will primarily affect mid-level career service members, but certain E-3s and E-4s will also see pay jumps.

Vasquez and military and civilian quality of life advocates met here in early October to discuss ways to ease financial pressures on junior enlisted service members. Their Junior Enlisted Financial Plan Meeting was the first step in a process that may ultimately involve several other federal agencies and organizations.

> "An E-1 to E-4 would typically spend almost $1,000 to move and would be authorized a reimbursement of $250 to $300."
> — Tony Jurney
> Deputy director, Pentagon's Quality of Life Office

Starting this fall, Vasquez added, DoD officials plan to hold regional forums throughout the country to discuss junior enlisted service members' financial issues with installation commanders and other local military and civilian officials.

Tony Jurney, deputy director of the Pentagon's Quality of Life Office, said E-1s to E-4s make up about 55 percent of the enlisted force. In a 1997 Rand study, he said, about half the junior enlisted surveyed said they have occasional financial difficulties. Some said bill collectors have pressured them, others have pawned valuables, and still others said they have fallen behind in their rent or mortgage.

A number of factors contribute to these financial troubles, Jurney noted. Junior enlisted service members are young, aged 17 to 26. They tend to marry earlier and have children earlier than civilian counterparts. They tend to be inexperienced about financial matters and therefore fall easy prey to predatory businesses.

Frequent deployments, separation from extended families and frequent moves drain the resources of all military families, but especially junior ones, Jurney said. Junior enlisted generally move three times in the first 18 months of service. Moreover, when they move, they also lose spouse employment.

The fiscal 2000 Authorization Act approved the payment of temporary living expenses to enlisted service members moving to their first duty station. Previously, they were not entitled that to such payments.

"An E-1 to E-4 would typically spend almost $1,000 to move and would only be authorized a reimbursement of $250 to $300," Jurney continued. "They had to pay the rest out of their own pockets or go into debt."

The military offers a variety of family support programs including child development, youth and family centers, as well as spouse employment and family advocacy programs, but officials say even more needs to be done. Jurney appealed to the interagency and private industry panel members for input.

"We've identified areas we think we can change, with your help, that would assist service members and provide them with more discretionary income," he told the panelists.

These areas include reducing the cost of financing, leasing and insuring automobiles; reducing out-of-pocket moving costs; improving financial training for service members and their spouses; and exploring the concept of housing cooperatives as a way to provide affordable housing.

"Since a second income is almost essential in any household, we want to improve spouse employment opportunities," Jurney said. Initiatives include training with private industry and the development of more educational opportunities.

Another initiative is the Portable Entrepreneur Program for spouses interested in self-employment. DoD Office of Family Policy and Small Business Association officials started pilot demonstrations in San Diego and in Norfolk, Va., two years ago and call them overwhelming successes.

DoD's quality of life advocates also want to put a spotlight on the unsavory off-base business practices. Some service members fall into debt dealing with high-interest check-cashing firms. Retired Navy Adm. Jerry Johnson of the Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society said he knew of cases where service members would write a $460 check to get $400 cash.

He said service members also pay astronomical interest on title loans and told of an E-6 who fell behind one month on his mortgage and took out a $1,700 title loan against a $6,000 car. That loan ended up costing $7,480 in interest over 20 months, Johnson said.

The military is working with the Federal Trade Commission's Consumer Protection Bureau to identify fraudulent business practices. Army and the Marine Corps law enforcement authorities are already online with Consumer Sentinel, the bureau's secure Web site listing complaints against businesses. The bureau is working to bring the Air Force, Navy and Coast Guard into the fold.

The Consumer Protection Bureau has a toll free hot line — 877-FTC HELP — for people to report fraud or other unsavory business practices. An Internet complaint form is also available at http://www.ftc.gov>www.ftc.gov.

Veterans Day remembers service

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

What exactly is Veterans Day? To many people it is just a day off of work or school. For countless veterans of war it is a day that brings remembrance to those who they have served with.

Veterans Day began as Armistice Day, and it was set aside for the Soldiers who died in WWI.

Armistice Day stood for the armistice that was signed on the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month bringing the hostilities of WWI to an end, said Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum.

The armistice was signed in 1918, but the first Armistice Day was recognized Nov. 11, 1926.

After WWII and the Korean War, veterans groups lobbied congress to come up with a holiday to remember their dead and wounded, he said.

Nov. 11, 1954, was the first Veterans Day, and it honored all men and women who had ever fought and died for the United States.

Several Veterans Day observances have already taken place. Last Saturday the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park Committee and the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus presented a Pre-Veterans Day celebration at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park

Also on Saturday the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Gold Star Wives erected the Avenue of Flags down Victory Drive.

The Avenue of Flags is displayed for one week surrounding veterans day.

"It is to honor all the veterans of all wars America has been involved in," said Wanda Funderburk, president of the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Gold Star Wives.

"Like a little kid, I still get a kick every time I drive down Victory Drive and see the flags fly," she said.

Thursday was the 45th Veterans Day recognized. Flags were flown, fallen friends were visited and service members of all branches of the military were thanked for their efforts and services rendered.

Children: Need homes

parents and accept children into their homes.

"We need as many families as we can get," Brenda Sams, social services administrator with Muscogee County's DFCS, said. The county DFCS staff recruits foster parents for its area.

The number of families who are willing to foster in general — to take children other than those of a relative — is about 55 in Muscogee County, Sams said.

"We would like to have at least double that many," she said.

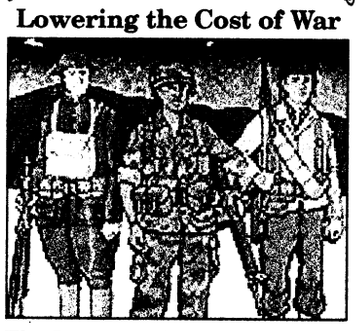
"We believe the children who need out-of-home placement because of abuse or neglect belong to the entire community," Sams said.

"We would like to see the community as a whole respond to the needs of these children by considering being foster parents."

Foster parents provide only temporary care for children.

"Our primary objective is to have the child reunited with a family member or relative," Sams said.

However, reunification with family is not always the best option for some children and they become available for adoption. In those cases, foster parents often adopt the child. In fact, foster parents account for more than 80 percent of DFCS adoptions, according to the Georgia Department of Human Resources fact sheet.



Prospective foster parents must complete 30 hours of Model Approach to Partnership in Parenting training. They also receive a physical exam, drug screening and criminal records check.

If off post and interested in being a foster parent, contact Richard Sciulli, resource development worker in Muscogee County, at 649-1350; in Chattahoochee County, call Gwenetta Echols at 989-3681.

Rattler bite leaves Ranger on brink of death

Sgt. 1st Class Ron Link
Ranger Training Brigade

"I just got tagged!" With that startled cry, Sgt. 1st Class Greg Foster leaped into a series of actions that saved the life of Staff Sgt. Mike Wester Sept. 18, when a 5-foot timber rattle snake struck at the U.S. Army Ranger Training Camp in Florida.

The Ranger instructors had just completed a demonstration with live snakes and were moving the snakes from their transport boxes back into their cages. Wester opened the timber rattler's box when it uncharacteristically struck upward toward the open lid, delivering a life-threatening dose of venom directly into a vein on the back of his right hand.

"It was four or five seconds before I realized that he had actually hit me," said Wester. "At first it felt like a little pin prick, but it began bleeding, and within a few seconds, it started burning."

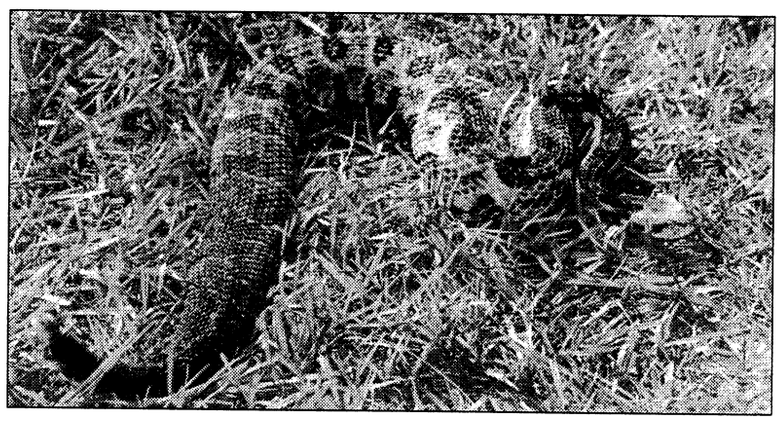
Snakes have an anticoagulant in their bites that keep blood from clotting at the bite site, and Wester's hand bled freely.

As soon as Foster realized that his partner had been bitten, he immediately grabbed the snakebite kit and within 30 seconds of the bite, the Sawyer Extractor was applied.

The Sawyer Extractor is a device that resembles a large syringe with a suction cup instead of a needle. It applies a heavy suction directly over the bite and draws venom out of the wound. This removed a significant amount of venom from Wester's hand, thus preventing possibly greater damage to the tissue of the hand.

The vast majority of venomous snakebites occur in muscle tissue, and although harmful, rarely life threatening. But not this time. The snake's fang penetrated a vein and the venom went directly into Wester's bloodstream and began flowing throughout his body.

Foster realized that it would take longer for a medevac helicopter to arrive than for him to drive to the Eglin Air Force Base hospital, especially since the helicopter would have to conduct a cold start up. Both men got into Foster's truck and sped toward the hospital. It was during the high-speed trip to the hospital that the drama began.



As the venom began to take effect, Wester felt the burning pain creep up his arm and into his elbow joint. Soon, the neurotoxins in the timber rattlesnake's venom caused his muscles to begin twitching. This rapidly degenerated into complete loss of control of his muscles.

The Sawyer Extractor was knocked off by Wester's convulsions. Foster had to reach down and pick it up off the floor and reapply the extractor several times during the trip, while continuing to maintain control of the vehicle.

Wester's vision then faded out as the venom took greater hold of his body. Soon shock set in and vomiting began. Through all of this, Wester was aware of what was happening.

"I knew what was going on, but I just couldn't control anything. My arms were completely out of my control."

Foster now faced a very serious situation. Driving his truck as quickly as he could to maintain control, he tried to treat for shock as best as he could within the confines of a pick up truck cab by loosening restrictive clothing.

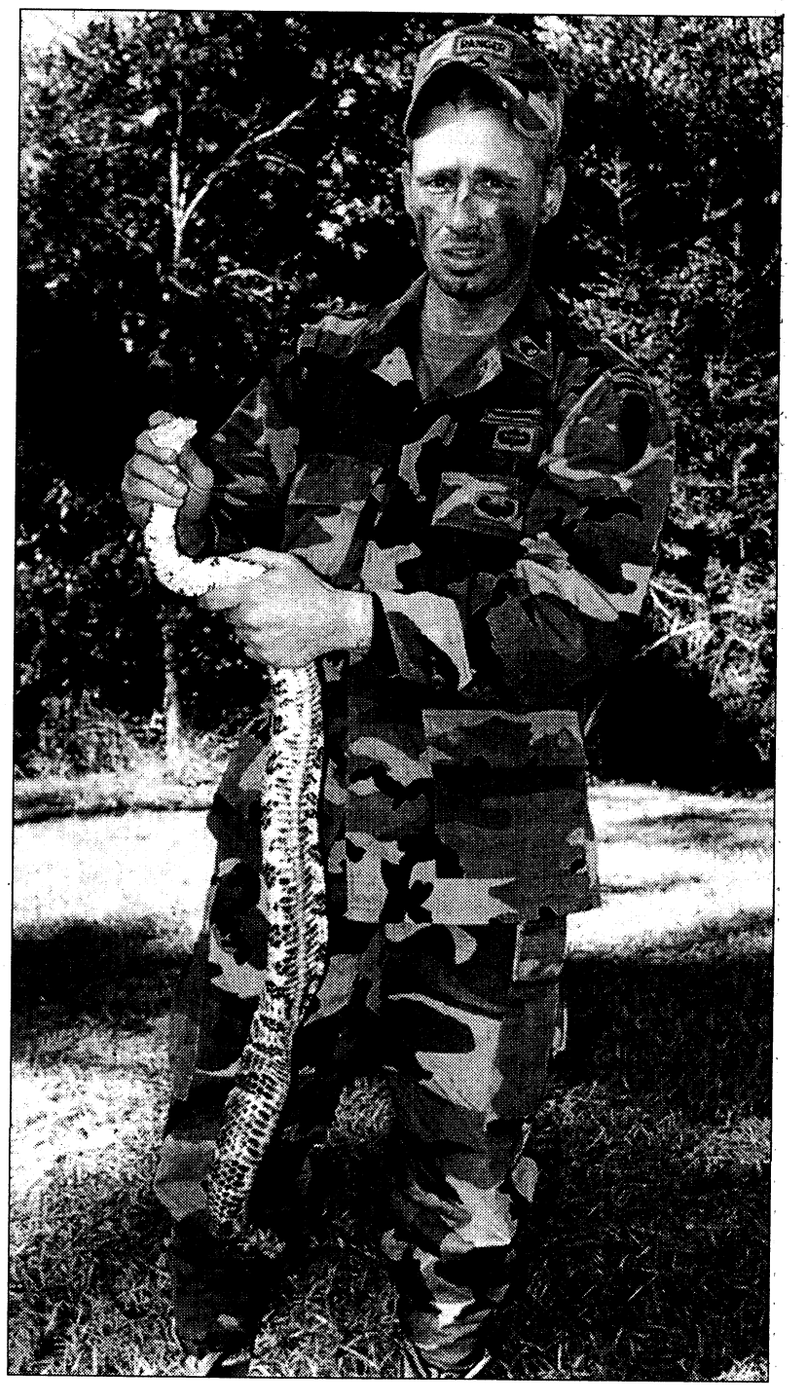
A timber rattler snake makes his way through the grass.

When Wester began vomiting, not only did Foster have to reapply the Sawyer extractor, but he was now having to maintain an open and clear airway for Wester, who experienced labored breathing and faded in and out of consciousness.

Foster completed what was normally a 25-minute drive in 16 minutes, at least four minutes faster than the medevac helicopter could have made the trip, according to a hospital source. By this time, Wester had completely lost consciousness.

"I ran into the emergency room and told them I had a snakebite victim in the truck, and they asked if I needed a wheelchair. I told them I needed a gurney," said Foster. "As they looked at each other with confusion, not understanding the seriousness of the situation, I simply ran back outside and carried him into the hospital."



Shortly after his arrival at the hospital, Wester stopped breathing. Fortunately, the hospital personnel were prepared to deal with snakebite victims. The week before they had treated another victim who had been bitten by a Pygmy Rattlesnake.

Command Sgt. Maj. Gail Ernst, 6th Ranger Training Brigade, said that this was the most severe snakebite case they had ever seen at the Eglin AFB Hospital.

Normally, when anti-venom is required for a snakebite victim, 10 to 15 vials of the anti-venom is required. Wester's case was so severe that 40 vials were needed to save his life.

He remained in intensive care for two days, then spent two extra days in the hospital before he was released.

True to Ranger form, two weeks later Wester was back at work, training Ranger students in patrolling the Florida swamps, and handling the very same snake that nearly killed him. He harbors no ill will toward the snake that was only doing what is natural to it.

Staff Sgt. Mike Wester, 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, shows off the 5-foot timber rattler snake that nearly claimed his life Sept. 18.

OCS grooms leaders of new millennium

Soldiers learn skills needed for leadership

Officer Candidate Clara Crow-Chase
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Army's first officers of the 21st century are being groomed for commissioning. On Sept. 13, A Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, opened its doors to Class 5-99, the final class of the millennium.

Roughly 75 percent of the 118 candidates of 5-99 are prior service within the Army, while the remainder are either prior service from other branches or fall into a category known as college option. In either case, these officer candidates represent all branches of the Army, Army National Guard and Army Reserve.

During the initial weeks of the course, the candidates completed a combat water survival course, obstacle course, confidence obstacle course, leadership reaction course, combined arms classes, land navigation and foot marches. These events contribute to the development of confidence, basic skills and leadership among officer candidates.

The leadership reaction course is the first indicator of a candidate's leadership potential. Candidates are evaluated on their ability to lead a squad through multiple challenges.

"It was helpful in that it built team cohesion," said Officer Candidate Monica Krause. "At the same time it gave us all an idea of where we stood in terms of leadership ability."

While the leadership reaction course covered leadership and teamwork, the confidence obstacle course and combat water survival test served as a confidence builder for many candidates.

Those with a fear of heights or a fear of water faced high obstacles and swimming challenges that served to test courage and confidence in the face of one's adversity.

Officer Candidate Valerie Lay said she learned that she could do things she had previously thought impossible.

"I was not sure that I would be able to swim with full gear and a weapon, but it really proved to me that determination will go a long way."

The first week of October presented one of the greatest challenges of OCS, land navigation. The candidates practiced dead reckoning, map reading, terrain association, night navigation and day land navigation.

The final test was held at Yankee North Land Navigation Site.

"It is essential that young lieutenants are grounded in the fundamentals," said Capt. Ronnie Preston, A Company commander, as candidates worked through a series of rugged land navigation exercises. "Land navigation skills are essential for the leaders on the modern battlefield."

After a rigorous week of training, officer candidates were challenged with a Land Navigation Test to satisfy course graduation requirements.

Upholding OCS traditions, on Oct. 22 Class 5-99 held its mid-cycle picnic at Uchee Creek. The event was organized and ran by officer candidates.

"It was a great time," said Officer Candidate James Bowie. "After weeks of tough training, we were able to relax a little, have some good food and enjoy a weekend at the mid-point of our cycle."

The picnic marked the halfway point in the cycle and candidates earned their first pass.

It is customary for OCS to lose candidates within the first few weeks of training. A Company was no exception. By the end of week four Class 5-99 had dwindled from 118 to 110 candidates.

The remaining candidates now head into the homestretch of the course, which includes a 12-mile march, squad tactical exercises, platoon tactical exercises, academic testing, the Dining-In and the OCS Formal.

BCTB officers take trip back in history

1st Lt. Gerardo L. Lebron
Basic Combat Training Brigade

The officers from the Basic Combat Training Brigade took some time to conduct an officer professional development at the Andersonville National Historic Site at Andersonville, Ga., Oct. 27.

The Andersonville National Historic site, northeast of Americus, Ga., is a 495-acre site consisting of the National Prisoner of War Museum, The Andersonville National Cemetery, and the prison site.

The tour started with an orientation film that gave insight on what it can be like to be a prisoner of war. The movie showed how Andersonville was during the civil war and includes interviews from POWs from World War II and as recent as the Gulf War.

Following the movie, National Park Ranger Alan Marsh took the group on a tour of the park. Marsh answered the questions of the BCTB officers. Capt. Eduardo Santiago, the brigade S-4 said, "This OPD gave me time to reflect on how freedom does have a price and the importance to maintain it."

After the tour, the officers went to the National Prisoner of War museum and examined some of the exhibits. This gave them an overall understanding of being a prisoner of war.

Capt. Stuart Horsted, the brigade assistant S-3 said, "I was moved by the discussion of the two WWII POWs inside the museum. They took the time to answer my question and gladly shared their experience with me."

"You can spend the whole day looking at the exhibits and listening to the veterans' stories. You will learn more from them than reading a book about it," said Horsted's friend Capt. Leif Klokkevold.

Once the tour was over, the officers headed back to Sand Hill to reflect on what they saw and continue to train and prepare the new Soldiers for today's Army and tomorrow's battles.

Benning teacher wins association's highest award

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

A Fort Benning Elementary teacher received the highest award the Georgia Association on Young Children gives during the GAYC's annual conference Oct. 8 in Duluth, Ga.

Earnestine Ezekiel who teaches kindergarten at Dexter Elementary was presented the Fan Brooke Award.

The award is given to an individual who has contributed to improving early childhood education at the local level, has shown innovation and commitment on a continuing basis, is active in the community and shows leadership, according to a GAYC brochure.

Ezekiel

The GAYC is a non-profit professional organization that promotes quality early care and education for young children and is affiliated with the Southern Early Childhood Association and the National Association for the Education of Young Children.

Dexter principal, Vicki Rogers, said Ezekiel's commitment to early childhood education is the reason why she was the recipient of the Fan Brooke Award.

"Mrs. Ezekiel is a dedicated professional who has been in the business of educating children for the past 35 years. She is committed to early childhood education and has a vast knowledge and understanding of developmentally appropriate practices. We are very proud of her accomplishments," Rogers said.

> "I am a steward of the award — for those of us who believe that all kids can learn, that all kids are important and that all kids have the right to be happy."
> — Earnestine Ezekiel

Her influence extends beyond Dexter to the Department of Defense Education Activity, said Kathy Einhorn, Fort Benning Schools director of curriculum. Ezekiel serves on DoDEA's Early Childhood Task Force, where she is really involved in developing standards for the DoDEA system.

Einhorn said Ezekiel was the only stateside representative on the committee that was selected to work on the Early Childhood Standards Board.

"She's an incredible lady," Einhorn said.

Ezekiel said she wrote a poem that was published by the National Library of Poetry as a motivator many years ago and still today quotes from it:

A Teacher's Guide

Lord, help me to understand
The children that I teach
Help me to be profoundly aware
Of every pitter patter of their feet.
Lord, help me always to greet
Each with a smile sincere and complete,
This is vital whatever I teach
For it is deep within that I must reach.

Lord, as I work with them,
Help me be forever discreet.
Help me to remember, that the lives that I mold,
Are not just tarnishing pieces of silver,
But precious particles of gold.

— Earnestine Abron Ezekiel

In summing up the Fan Brooke Award, she said, "I am a steward of the award — for those of us who believe that all kids can learn, that all kids are important and that all kids have the right to be happy."

AER provides scholarships

Army Emergency Relief

Active duty Soldiers and Army retirees with college or university-bound children often wonder how they can afford the education cost. Many people don't realize that part of the answer may be found from AER. The Maj. Gen. James Ursano Scholarship Fund, administered by AER, is a secondary mission to help Army families with the cost of undergraduate level education, post secondary vocational training and preparation for acceptance by service academies for their dependent children.

Scholarship Program Eligibility. Applicant must be:

- Dependent children, step-children or legally adopted children of Soldiers on active duty, retired or deceased while on active duty or after retirement.
- Must be registered in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment System.
- Unmarried for entire academic year.
- U.S. citizen or permanent U.S. resident.
- Under the age of 22 on June 1, 2000 based on 2000-2001 academic year.

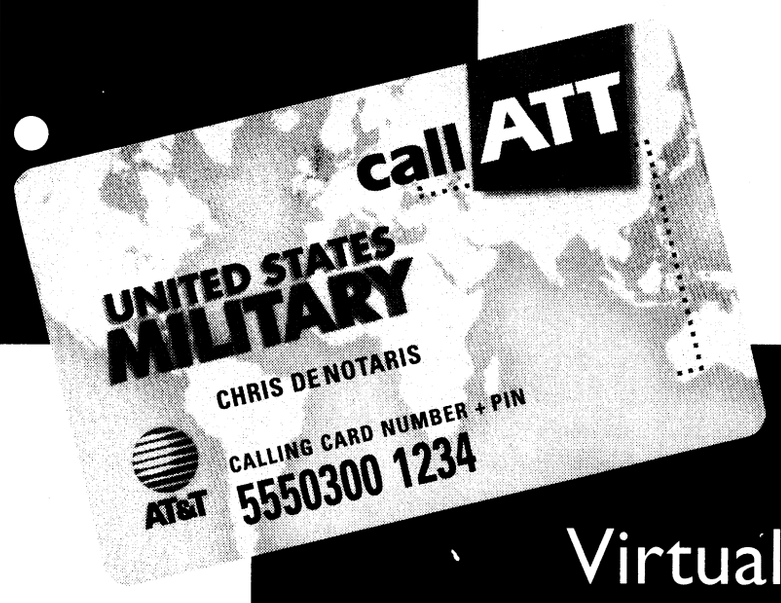
All eligible persons are encouraged to apply.

AER Scholarships:

- Applicant must be enrolled, accepted or pending acceptance as a full-time dependent student for the entire academic year in post-secondary educational institutions approved by the U.S. Department of Education for Title IV funds.
- Scholarship applicants must maintain at least a cumulative 2.0 grade point average on a 4.0 grading scale for funds to be awarded or disbursed.

Scholarship Applications:

- Order form (AER 9R) for applications is available for pickup at the installation AER office, Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Forms will be available until supplies have been exhausted.
- The actual application is also available by mail from HQ AER through March 2000 for the 2000-2001 academic year.
- Applications may also be printed from our web site www.aerhq.com through March 2000.
- Completed applications with supporting documents must be mailed to HQ AER and postmarked not later than March 1, 2000.
- To be considered, the scholarship application must be complete, accurate and contain all required documents.
- New applications must be submitted for each academic year.



For additional information regarding the AER scholarship program, contact the installation AER Office at 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Army Career and Alumni Program

As the unemployment rate approaches four percent for the nation it means that almost everyone capable of working has a job. This situation means that employers are in competition for high quality personnel such as separating Soldiers, Department of Army civilians and family members to fill vacancies.

People still need to work hard in the job search to get the best possible job when leaving the Army. A successful job search requires knowing yourself first, knowing how to market yourself second, and how to find and pursue the right job third. "The ACAP Preseparation Program and services are readily available to assist transitioning personnel with the various stages of the job search," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services manager.

The first and perhaps the hardest thing to do in preparation for the job search is to decide on the next career path or job objective. Separating personnel will find it valuable to discuss their skills, abilities, and plans with family, friends and career planning professionals in the ACAP Center or the Department of Labor. Finding the right job is made much easier if the job goal is clear and the job seeker clearly understands what it takes to reach the goal.

Second, marketing yourself is nothing more than selling an employer on your qualifications and convincing him or her to take a chance and hire you. Job assistance professionals encourage job seekers to prepare a sales brochure called a resume that describes in a very positive fashion the skills, abilities, education and training, and work experience relevant to the job objective. Assisting Soldiers with resume preparation and other sales strategies and techniques is also part of ACAP.

Third, ACAP offers training and automated systems to make it easier to find the jobs that are available and to target the positions and businesses that offer the best opportunities. Computer systems, in the ACAP Center, are available for job listings, Internet access and resume posting, individual company and industry research and more.

Special programs and events offer added advantage for separating personnel. The annual visit by Jerry Crews, deputy director of the Placement Service for the Retired Officer Association, will be at Infantry Hall, Classroom 30 from 9:30 a.m. to noon Tuesday, to talk with officers, non-commissioned officers and spouses on marketing yourself for a second career.

Grange retires after 30 years

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

After nearly 30 years of service, one of the Army's most decorated top officer's retired his Army career at a monument he helped build.

In front of a standing-room only crowd of more than 100 well wishers at the Ranger Memorial Oct. 29, Maj. Gen. David L. Grange accepted his retirement papers paying tribute to all of those who had helped him throughout his career.

Grange began his Army career in 1969 when he graduated from North Georgia Military College earning his commission and the right to his first assignment as a reconnaissance platoon leader with the 2nd Battalion, 505th Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division.

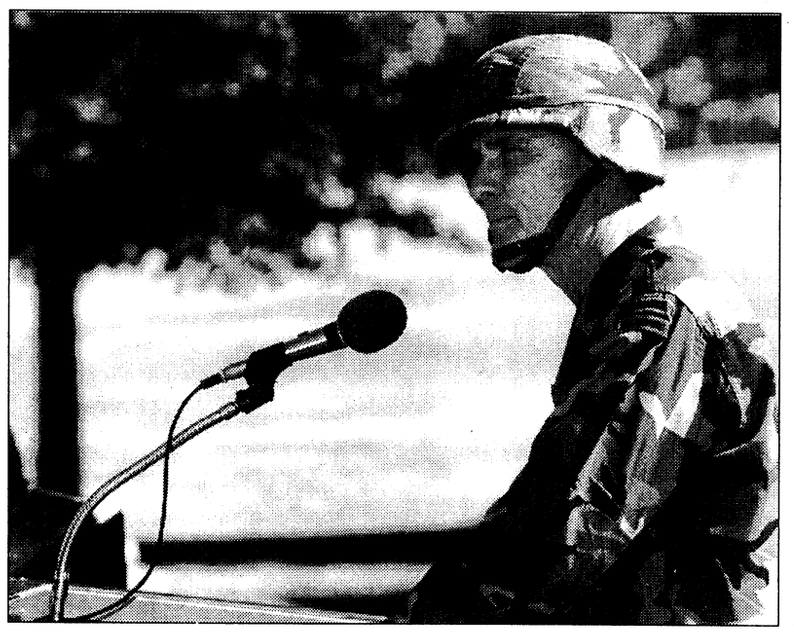
His time at Fort Bragg, N.C., was short-lived, however. In 1970, he was sent to Vietnam as a rifle platoon leader with the 101st Airborne Division. While in the country, Grange also served as a reconnaissance platoon leader with L Company, 75th Ranger, Regiment.

Grange also scored a second tour in Vietnam as a reconnaissance advisor to the 81st Airborne Ranger Group.

After serving the two tours, Grange accepted a slot in the states as an executive officer and then commander of the HALO and Scuba Detachments of the 3rd Battalion, 5th Special Forces Group.

After a trip to flight school in 1974, Grange was assigned to the 101st Airborne Division where he served as Flight Platoon Commander of the 158th Aviation Battalion. During his stint of service at Fort Campbell, Ky., he also served as a rifle company commander and an operations officer.

A trip to Fort Benning for the Infantry Officer's Advanced Course in 1978, was the next step for Grange. Upon graduation, he served as the battalion adjutant, Ranger company commander and battalion special operations liaison officer in the 75th Ranger Regiment.



In 1981 he traveled overseas to the British SAS course.

After serving a brief tour at the Marine Corps staff college as a squadron commander and operations officer, Grange went on to command a battalion in Korea.

In 1989, Grange returned to the states to serve as a special operations officer with the special operations command in Washington enroute to the National War College.

Upon completion of the war college, he was assigned to Fort Bragg as the deputy commander of the 2nd Special Forces Operations Detachment where he commanded a task force during Operation Desert Storm.

Shortly after his return from the desert he was assigned to the 75th Ranger Regiment where he took command.

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Grange says farewell during his retirement speech.

In 1995 Grange took a position at the Pentagon as deputy director and then director of the Army Operations, Readiness and Mobilization.

After a two-year stint of service at the Pentagon, Grange took command of Task Force Eagle in Bosnia and has commanded the Big Red One since August 1997.

"This great way of life I would not have traded for anything," Grange said during his farewell speech. "I hope that I learned the right to have worn those patches of the 82nd All American, the 101st, the 2ID Second to None, the 3rd ID Rock of the Marne, the Big Red One, the Ranger regiment and the U.S. Special Operations Command."

While Grange said he will be leaving the ranks of the active duty Soldiers physically, he said he will never forget them in his mind.

"I will never forget the feeling of watching a coffin draped in the American flag being carried down the ramp of a C-130 even though I may be a civilian."

That love for service and love for country, Grange said will continue throughout his life.

"I will always love our Army, and I will always stand by for recall when required by my country."

No matter where they send you, you'll never have to kiss us good-bye.

NATO names next commander

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The North Atlantic Treaty Organization announced Nov. 3 U.S. Air Force Gen. Joseph W. Ralston will be its next supreme allied commander Europe.

Ralston, vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, is the nation's No. 2 military officer. He will succeed Army Gen. Wesley Clark when his NATO appointment becomes effective in May 2000. Ralston will also assume command of U.S. European Command in Stuttgart, Germany. The Senate confirmed this appointment Oct. 29.

Ralston told the Senate Armed Services Committee during Oct. 27 confirmation hearings that military challenges in Europe include bolstering NATO's defenses. He said he would encourage the allies to increase defense budgets and spend on the "right things to increase NATO's combat capability."

During Operation Allied Force, Ralston noted, the allies' lack of secure communications equipment forced all to "drop back to the lowest common denominator and operate on an unsecured net."

As a result, the Serbs could intercept communications and the risk to NATO air crews increased.

"We need to keep the NATO alliance focused on what the threats are and have them adequately prepare for those threats," he said.

Russia, which still has many nuclear warheads, remains a concern to the general: "I believe we ought to do everything we can to ensure that Russia does not become a failed state."

"On the U.S. side," Ralston said, "we've got to maintain our readiness." The United States must be cognizant of its operations and personnel tempos and must focus on improving members' and their families' quality of life in the European theater, he stressed.

"That has been neglected somewhat in the past. We need to do a better job of making sure that we give them the quality of life that they deserve," he said.

Born in Kentucky and raised in Ohio, Ralston entered the Air Force in 1965 through the Reserve Officer Training Corps program.

His career includes commands at squadron, wing, numbered air force and major command levels as well as a variety of staff and management assignments.

He also has held a variety of positions related to planning and acquisition.

Prior to becoming vice chairman in March 1996, Ralston served as commander of the Air Combat Command at Langley Air Force Base, Va. A command pilot with more than 2,500 flying hours, including 147 combat missions during the Vietnam War, he holds a master's degree in personnel management from Central Michigan University.

Clark headed U.S. Southern Command for a year before taking the helm of European Command in July 1997 and becoming supreme allied commander Europe. He was due to leave the position in July 2000 after serving an initial two-year term and a one-year extension.

Defense Secretary William S. Cohen elected to cut Clark's extension short by a few months, to retain Ralston, who was slated to retire Feb. 29. By regulation, Ralston could only be kept on active duty for 60 days without assuming another command.

President Clinton wrote to NATO Secretary-General George Robertson requesting Clark's release from the NATO assignment. The alliance agreed "with great regret" to release Clark, according to a Nov. 3 NATO press release.

Members of NATO's Defense Planning Committee, on behalf of the 19 allied nations' governments, expressed gratitude for Clark's distinguished service.

Screenings keep children healthy

Faith Middle School transforms into medical mini-clinic

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Something a little different has been happening at Faith Middle School. The gym was transformed into a mini-aid station this week. During the children's gym class the middle schoolers have been getting screened for a variety of health problems.

The children are being screened with parental consent for sight, hearing and dental problems as well as a curvature of the spinal cord, known as scoliosis, said Cheryl Hamilton, Faith Middle School nurse.

There are close to 700 children who are being screened for these health problems by volunteers from Martin Army Community Hospital.

Parents have been volunteering their time too, Hamilton said. They have been running the in- and out-processing table.

Children who are enrolled in school are checked annually for their vision, hearing and dental all throughout their education, while only fourth through eighth-graders are checked for scoliosis, she said.

"It is a wonderful thing that comes back to us," Hamilton said referring to corrections that are made from the screening's detection.

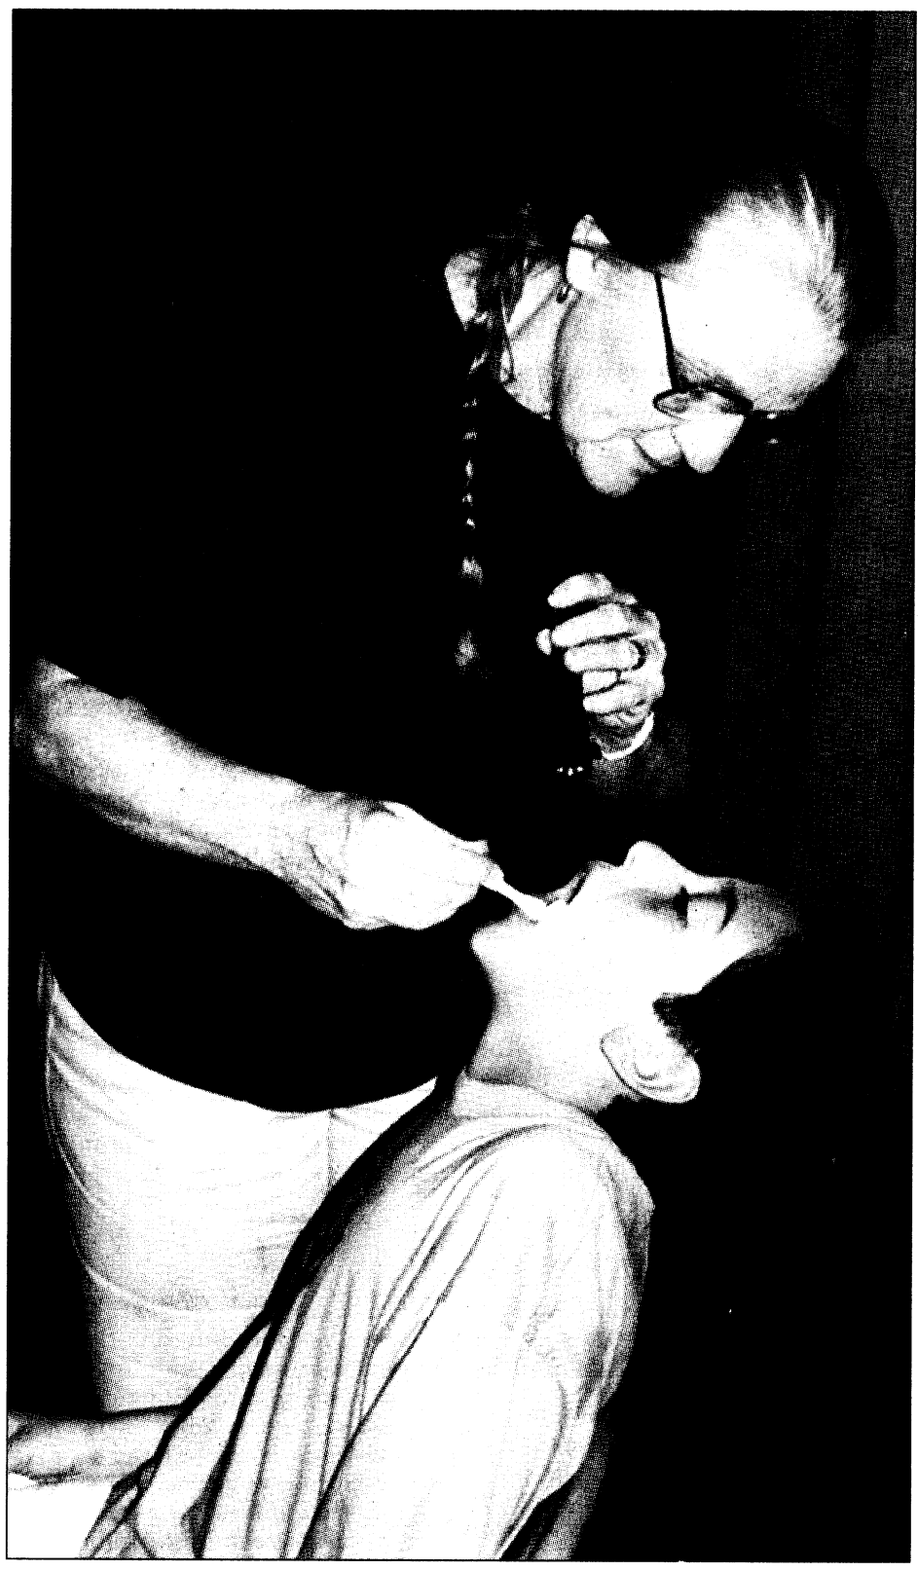
"When a possible problem is detected, a letter is sent to the child's parents referring them to a doctor for further diagnosis," Hamilton said.

She then follows up with a phone call and a request for a doctor's documentation of the test results to go in the child's school health record, she said.

However, she said, the screening results stay only in the child's school record, and they are not placed in the hospital's record.

"This is a great program and a way to see many children," said Tom Dignan, Faith Middle School principal.

"We are taking care of the children's health needs in a timely and efficient manner," Dignan said.



Their vision and hearing is really the key to their learning, he said. We want them to learn as well as possible and volunteers are a key element to make this screening work.

"We will definitely be asking for more volunteers for next year's screening," he said.

Teachers are really good at spotting problems with the children, such as their vision and hearing, and immediately bring the issue up to me, Hamilton said.

One example of a problem is the children disrupting the class, and this actually sometimes is caused by a health problem, such as vision, hearing, or even dental. she said.

The greatest number of health problems that children have are problems found at school, and in health screenings, and these school screenings can make the difference in a child's ability to learn, she said.

Golden Stallions work for others, lead peers

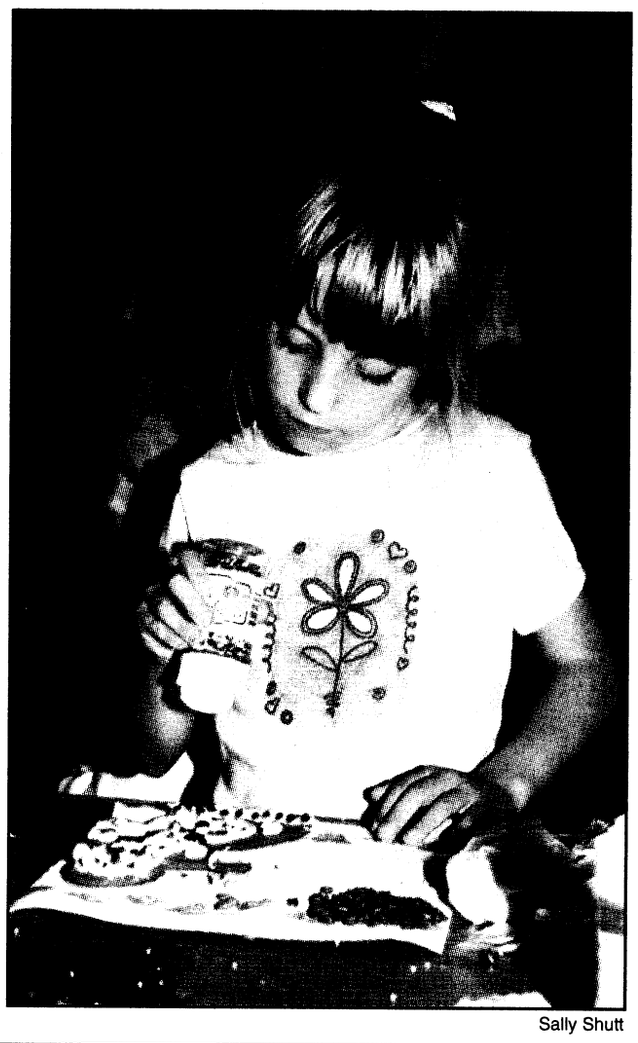
"It makes me feel good inside to help people in need," said Kristina Parmigiani after loading food into the Valley Rescue Mission truck. Parmigiani, a fourth-grade student at Stowers Elementary School, helped to collect food as part of a service project taken on by the Golden Stallions. The students who make up the Golden Stallions are young leaders who are willing to take on extra responsibilities at school and in their community.

The members, more than 60 fourth- and fifth-grade students, received recommendations from teachers and were voted into the Golden Stallions.

Shortly after their induction, the students embarked on a food-collecting project for the Valley Rescue Mission's empty coffers. During the month of October, The Golden Stallions collected more than 400 perishable foods, baby supplies, baby food, and additional items that would benefit families in need.

The Golden Stallion's mission, according to school counselor Sherry Dignan, is to teach leadership skills to children who have shown they are ready to accept the responsibilities of leadership.



"The Golden Stallions have proven themselves as leaders — not just in academics but citizenship as well," Dignan said. "They are also the volunteers of the school, and whenever we need help we call on them." Writing and sending cards to nursing homes, escorting new students, performing flag duty and shelving books in the library are a few of the tasks completed by the young leaders. Duties are rotated monthly, and the outgoing students teach the new shift what the job consists of.

The food drive was the first of several service projects that the Golden Stallions plan on holding. A similar drive at Christmas will be held, but instead of collecting food they will gather toys for the children of families in need.

"We want the students to look at surface projects and things they can do that will benefit the community," said Glenn Hughes, principal at Stowers.

He said the one thing they try to teach all the students is to reach out to others in need and Assistant principle Mike Starrett agreed.

"Anything our students do that benefits the community, whether it be on Fort Benning or in Columbus, will help to instill good citizenship and good leadership qualities in the children," Starrett said. "This project was just another demonstration of what great kids we have at Stowers."

Rylleigh Harstad, 6, decorates a gingerbread man Saturday at the Officers' Wives' Club Benning Bazaar in Infantry Hall. Rylleigh is the daughter of Spc. Lars and Cheryl Harstad, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

Spouses from the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity and the U.S. Army Dental Activity baked almost 500 gingerbread men to sell. They raised more than $600, which they donated to the OWC Welfare Fund.

More than 1,100 people shopped at the bazaar, helping the OWC raise more than $7,000 for its welfare and scholarship fund, almost $1,000 more than last year's event. The money goes to help local charitable and post agencies.

The Bayonet seeks stories for "Gift of Giving"

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The Bayonet is planning a supplement in its Dec. 3 issue entitled "The Gift of Giving," and we would like to receive heart-warming stories from the community.

Readers can submit stories of their favorite memories of helping others during the holiday season. All members of the Fort Benning community are welcome to submit stories of no more than 500 words.

Children are encouraged to participate. Age groups will be 5-7, 8-11, 12-15, and 16 and older. The winners from each age group will be published.

The Bayonet staff will select the best entries, and they will be published in the "The Gift of Giving" supplement. Deadline for entries is Nov. 19.

They can be dropped off at The Bayonet office in Infantry Hall, Room 606, or mailed to: The Bayonet, "The Gift of Giving," Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, GA., 31905 or e-mailed to tannert@benning.army.mil.

Elementary students grow fall garden

Children reap benefits of hands-on activity

Owen Ditchfield
White Elementary School

While most people watch their vegetable gardens shrivel with the first freezing weather of November, students at E. A. White Elementary School are just getting started on a fall garden. Since the plot was tilled and fertilized a few weeks ago vegetables and seeds have been planted just in time for recent rains.

Ten students from first through fifth grades are participating in this enrichment activity, led by Evelyn Braman, and already the excitement is growing as the beginning gardeners see their efforts resulting in lush, green lettuce, brussel sprouts, onions, carrots and broccoli. First the students learned about the importance of the soil having the correct Ph factor and other nutrients. After the tilling, an amazing amount of grass, weeds and rocks had to be removed.

"It's hard work, but it will be worth it when everyone is eating their salad," said Claire Kirk.

Another concern is that deer can smell these green leafy vegetables from a great distance, and tend to be attracted to food that is so good for them.

The solution is a spray that tastes terrible, but can be washed off easily after harvest.

These new gardeners have learned that some crops can grow right up to the first hard freeze, usually in January, and then it's time to start planning the spring garden.

money matters

2nd Lt. Merle W. Campbell
Bayonet correspondent

Financial duress often becomes a major issue for people, especially during the upcoming holiday season. However, there is hope. In this fast paced, high-tech age of the Internet and cellular phone, many people overlook the one simple step that will enable them to obtain a grasp on their finances — developing a budget. Developing and adhering to a written budget is the most effective way to monitor cash flow and reduce financial pressure.

To begin the process of formulating a budget it is first necessary to categorize and list all monthly income and expense items on a sheet of paper or spreadsheet. Separate the paper into two columns. In the left column of the sheet list all sources and amounts of monthly income. In the right column list all of the categorized monthly expenses, and their estimated amounts. Add the income and expense columns and write down their totals. The next step is to subtract the total in the expense column from the total in the income column. Place this figure at the bottom of the sheet and underline it twice. The underlined figure represents the amount of monthly discretionary income, if any, that is left over after expenses are paid. This figure serves as a good indicator of current financial position.

Campbell

The overall goal of the budgeting process is to raise this bottom line figure and provide additional discretionary income. Often times this can be to meet a specified goal, like saving extra money for the holidays, or just simply increase in the current level of savings and investment. To raise this bottom line figure it is necessary to carefully examine each item that has been categorized and listed in the expense column. During the examination process try and identify those expenses that can be either reduced or eliminated. For example, the amount of income spent on credit card debt can be reduced, in the long run,by reducing the amount of interest that is accrued by maintaining a large credit card balance. This can be accomplished by paying more than the minimum monthly credit card payment, even if it is only a few dollars more. To find the additional income required to make larger credit card payments, try reducing another expense category, like entertainment. Additionally, utilizing coupons and purchasing merchandise on sale can assist in lowering expenditures on food and disposable goods.

Overall, developing a budget is the most effective way to organize and manage cash flow. Once a comfortable budget has been designed, and budgetary goals identified, it is important to adhere to the budget in order for it to be effective. Periodically reviewing and updating the budget ensures that it is being adhered to. Often times operation within budgetary constraints proves to be the most arduous step in the process. However, once a soldier budget is designed and adhered to, increased financial stability is not far behind.

Campbell holds a bachelor's degree in finance and a minor in accounting from the University of Oklahoma. He is currently working toward a masters in business administration from the University of Phoenix.

ACAP highlights upcoming events — The Army Career and Alumni Program's calendar of upcoming events for job seekers is as follows:

• There is a briefing on marketing yourself for a second career Monday in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall.

• The Small Business Administration will present a breifing on how to start a small business 2-4 p.m., Nov. 18.

For more information, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

OWC welcomes new instructors — The Fort Benning Officers' Wives Club is pleased to announce the arrival of two new instructors — Amy Uptgraft, who will teach drama and Cecelia Hayes, who will teach Spanish. The OWC School of Performing Arts also includes gymnastics, ballet, tap, jazz and piano lessons.

For more information, call LeAnn Volesky, OWC activities coordinator at 682-7890.

Red Cross offers assistance — For Soldiers who need to reach family in a time of need, the American Red Cross Armed Forces Emergency Service Center is available 24 hours a day around the world. Soldiers can call toll-free at (877) 272-7337.

MACH and SJA offers Advanced Directive class — The Martin Army Community Hospital Department of Family Practice and the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate offers an Advanced Directives class. The class allows participants to make their wishes known in writing in case the time comes when they cannot express their desires.

The two-hour program provides an education session with an attorney and physician; the attorneys then help participants develop documents for personal and medical records.

For more information, call 544-3065.

Strays stay at Vet Clinic — Animals impounded at the Fort Benning kennel facility may be released by calling either the Military Police at 545-5222 or Veterinary Service at 545-4444 or 545-5690 during normal business hours, 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Circumstances requiring release at times other than regular business hours should be coordinated through Veterinary Service.

An impoundment fee of $5 per day for each animal will be assessed for the days an animal remains in the stray facility.

Animals not claimed by an owner within three working days become property of the U.S. government and may be adopted by a new owner or euthanized as circumstances dictate.

For more information, call 545-4444 or 545-5690.

Divorce and separation briefings set — The Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, conducts briefings for those who request an appointment to discuss divorce or separation issues. After the briefing, an attorney will answer questions and set up appointments.

The briefings will take place at 9 a.m. Mondays at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5. Reservations are required.

For more information, call 545-3281.

Army Community Service answers PCS questions — If you are moving to another installation and need information about schools, shopping, medical and dental services or housing, the Standard Installation Exchange Service can answer most of your questions.

For more information, call ACS at 545-4043 or stop by Building 2624 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Library has new story time — The Sayers Library Preschool Story Time is now being held from 11 a.m. to noon every Tuesday. All preschoolers are welcome.

The library staff is proud to present a new storyteller, Carol Contarino. Contarino donates her time through the Red Cross and plans to explore many exciting books.

The library staff is currently looking for volunteers to enhance the story time program with arts and crafts.

For more information or to volunteer, call 545-7141.

Office publishes rules for yard sales — The Community Life Office provides rules for yard sales.

•Yard sales are authorized for Saturday, Sunday and federal holidays only.

•Signs advertising the yard sale cannot be placed prior to the day of the sale and must be removed the same day.

•Signs will not be placed on telephone or utility poles, trees, street signs, fences or buildings.

•Yard sales will not begin before 8 a.m. and end no later than 6 p.m.

•Displays of property for sale must not appear unsightly. Any unsold items must be cleared away from the area and properly disposed of upon conclusion of the sale.

•Yard sales are not a business venture.

•Yard sales will not interfere with the normal flow of traffic or cause a safety hazard.

For more information, call the Community Life Office at 545-3069.

OWC consigns handmade crafts — The Officers' Wives' Club will consign handmade crafts at their Craft Corner in the OWC Thrift Shop. Consignors will receive 85 percent of the sale price (OWC retains 15 percent of the commission).

There are no registration or withdrawal fees for craft consignors, but they must have a Military ID card.

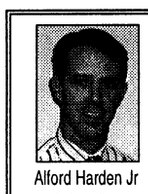
For more information, call the OWC Thrift Shop at 687-4830 or stop by the Thrift Shop.

Red Cross offers training — Red Cross Health and Safety provides training and certification in the following areas: Community First Aid and Safety, CPR and First Aid-Adults, CPR for the Professional, Pet CPR, Lifeguard Training, Babysitting for Teens and HIV and AIDS.

Instructor Trainer certification is also available in CPR, lifeguarding, HIV and AIDS and babysitting.

For more information, call Joyce Stratton at 545-5194.

Red Cross offers HIV classes — The Red Cross Fort Benning Station offers HIV and AIDS classes.



Interested persons should call the office at 545-5194.

The next scheduled class is pending on the number of requests for class.

Recycling facility wins state award

Penny O'Connor
Directorate of Public Works

The Fort Benning Material Recycling Facility won the State of Georgia Federal Facility Recycling Award in 1999.

For the past five consecutive years, the total amount sent to landfills by Fort Benning has decreased. During the last three months Fort Benning increased the amount of cardboard recycled by more than 20 percent. In October alone 300 tons of cardboard were recycled and sold for $96 per ton.

Employees at the Recycling Center urge everyone to continue improving on these achievements. One way is to join people all over the country Monday for America Recycles Day. America Recycles Day has an information packed web site on the Internet at www.americarecyclesday.org.

Join in online and fill out a pledge form to buy more recycled-content products, to increase recycling efforts at home or work, or even to come up with an original idea for a recycling-related effort. Everyone who pledges automatically enters the contest to win a "green" dream home as well.

In addition, families of children who enter will be eligible to win a trip for four to Walt Disney World Resorts, including hotel accommodations, theme park passes and airline tickets; or win 25 computers, to be donated to the school of the winner's choice, plus a computer for the winner.

Deadline for receiving entries is Nov. 20. (A Soldier at Fort Hood was the 1997 dream home winner. He is about to take possession of his new home in Copperas Grove, Texas.)

Who knows, the 1999 winner could be a Fort Benning Soldier or family member.

The Recycling Center welcomes individuals or groups of 20 or less to come out and see recycling in action.

Mondays are slow days but Tuesdays through Fridays visitors see the employees processing items dropped off at the center or picked up in family housing areas or from dumpsters.

Simply call ahead to ensure an escort will be available. For tour arrangements or information on recycling or America Recycles Day, call Walter Nichols, Solid Waste Program Manager, Environmental Branch at 544-6142.

Notices

DPW recently completed an Environmental Assessment and Finding of no Significant Impact for improvements to Fryar Parachute Drop Zone.

The EA evaluated the effects associated with the construction of the DZ safety improvements and the operation of the improved DZ on soils, vegetation, water and air quality, wildlife, protected species, migratory birds, socioeconomics, environmental justice, cultural resources, noise and hazardous materials management.

The EA and FNSI for the proposed action are completed and available to the public for a review period of 30 days starting from the first day of publication in accordance with part 1501.4 (e)(1) of Title 40 of the Code of Federal Regulations and Army Regulation 200-2. These documents are available at the Chattahoochee Valley Community College Library and Sayers Memorial Library.

Anyone wishing to comment on the proposed action or wishing to request additional information must write to the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Management Division (Attention: Mr. Patrick Chauvey), Fort Benning, GA 31905-5122.

PeaceMakers help protect Dexter students

Bammie Cofield
Dexter Elementary School

Greeting and walking younger children to their classrooms in the mornings, promoting safety practices and helping resolve conflict are a few of the duties of The Safety Patrol PeaceMakers at Dexter School.

The PeaceMakers are fifth-grade students selected by their teachers for their interest, attitude towards others, dependability and scholastic standing. The primary aims of the patrols are:

- to help protect children from accidents on their way to and from school;
- to help children develop sound safety habits;
- to foster qualities of leadership and good citizenship in patrol members; and
- to serve as peace makers by using conflict resolution skills.

PeaceMakers patrols will be officially inducted by Sgt. Bruce Robinson of the Columbus Police Department at Dexter School 9 a.m. Monday. This year's safety patrol PeaceMakers are:

Jason Cathell	Kerie Bal	Elizabeth Nelson
Danielle Dingle	Lindsey Sheppard	Zachary Johnson
Jessica Dudley	Meggan Bond	Ashley Rousseau
Jon Ring	Emmett Blount	Ronnie Sullivan
John Lusk	Brian Watts	Nicole Brodie
Brandon Mitchell	Patrick Herold	Joshua Alsup

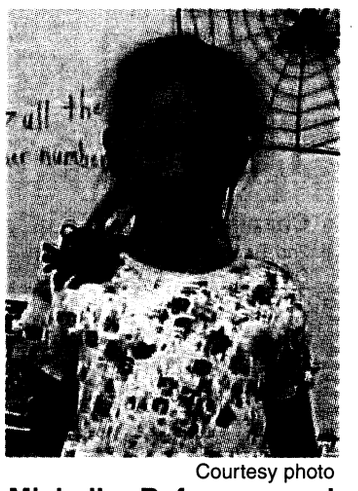
Second-graders learn about spiders

Children's book helps students study arthropods



Cy Deitrich
Dexter Elementary

Laura Feagin's second-grade class at Dexter Elementary School does not suffer from arachnophobia, but instead have found spiders to be very interesting little arthropods.

Students have just completed a unit on spiders. Charlotte's Web, the children's story by E. B. White, was the fiber that caught the students' attention and spun their intellect into a learning experience.

As part of a study course, Feagin designed the crawly unit to teach the class about spiders. Students went to a variety of websites for both research and games and activities related to the topic of spiders. A host of books, filmstrips, art, music, and Discis Books from the media center and the Mobile Science Lab provided educational strands that led to the web's center. The children were responsible for an information log, story maps and class management and self assessment rubrics as they encountered different skills at each of the unit's seven learning centers. At one of the centers, each child created a spider using a black button, black pipe cleaners and tiny roly-poly eyes. The most delicious center was where children could eat their own spider.

Fortunately, students used a hamburger bun, peanut butter and jelly, pretzel stick legs and raisin eyes to create the spider.

Students go 'high tech' to explore candies

Joyce Flatt
Dexter Elementary School

Do you know why there are more red and yellow M&Ms in a package than any other color? First-grade students in the Enrichment Program at Dexter do. The students went "high tech" last week as they explored the complexities of M&M candy. The students used the candy to help develop math and critical thinking skills. The school's Education Technologist, Joyce Flatt, taught the lesson. Students estimated the number of candies in the bags, counted, sorted and created several different types of tables and graphs. They used graph paper to create bar graphs, Unifix cubes to create three dimensional graphs, and the computer to create a table, a circle graph and a bar graph. They also enjoyed the candy at the end of the lesson As a follow-up, the students visited the M&M candy web site (www.m-ms.com) and submitted questions via e-mail to the company concerning how the candy was packaged and how the colors of the candy were chosen. The next day, the students received an e-mail from the company. The answer ... the colors were chosen by conducting consumer preference tests. The colors chosen pleased the greatest number of people and created the most attractive overall effect.

Marriage needs forgiveness

Chaplain (Capt.) Tim D. Smith
2nd Bn., 69th Armor, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div.

There is nothing more relieving than being forgiven when you've done someone wrong. It may not have even been intentional, but there is just something about having a clear conscience and an open line of communication.

More often than I care to admit, my wife and I have arguments. We fight over the same things as other couples. Whether it is buying something the other thinks is unnecessary or not planning enough time in advance to get to a scheduled appointment.

When the arguments are ended, within the marriage relationship, most of the time one or the other is hurt, or perhaps even both. There must be a willingness for at least one of the parties to say they are sorry. It doesn't even matter if the one apologizing is the innocent person.

I often share this illustration with couples who think they want to get married. Imagine two automobiles approaching each other at opposite directions, one a Ford and the other a Chevrolet. Both are traveling at 60 miles per hour. When they finally crash head on, out of the twisted pile of steel, plastic and rubber comes a beautiful Mercedes-Benz.

That's the way marriage is. Two people come together with all their upbringings, expectations and self-centeredness and out pops a beautiful marriage, well sort of.

Two people must be willing to work at a marriage. Both the husband and the wife must be willing to forgive and offer the olive branch of peace, for the sake of the marriage.

God has forgiven us if we humbly go to him in prayer and ask for forgiveness with a sorrowful heart. In Psalm 51, we learn that ultimately all sin and wrong doings are against God. The Lord said if you do not forgive each other, God will not forgive you.

In the book of St. Matthew 6:14-15, it reads, "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." It is important that peace, joy and harmony remain and thrive in a relationship. Forgiveness is one of the great keys to a happy and successful marriage.

Worry causes number of problems

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Someone has said, "I'd be worried if I didn't have something to worry about!" For many this is much too true a statement.

Anxiety and worry are common causes of poor emotional and even physical health. A person can worry so much as to cause ulcers. When a person is so caught up in the troubles of this world, there is unhappiness which leads to hours if not days of discouragement.

Worry has little to do with the present, it is almost exclusively concerned with past mistakes or future problems. Whatever it may be. financial problems, past failures, nagging health problems, whenever your thoughts are dominated with worry you cannot enjoy the present.

How much do you worry? How you answer this question will determine in large part how you live today. John Haggai, in his book, How to Win over Worry, writes that "Worry divides the feelings, therefore convictions are shallow and changeable. Worry divides the faculty of judging, therefore attitudes and decisions are often unjust. These decisions lead to damage and grief. Worry divides the determinative faculty, therefore plans, and purposes, if not 'scrapped' altogether, are not fulfilled with persistence."

Worry clouds your ability to make right decisions. You cannot think straight. It's as though you are in a battle, and you are. The Greeks described worry as "opposing forces at work to tear a person apart." Problems are not the problem. The problem is worry.

So then, how can you win over worry? For me the Bible provides the answer. Jesus said, "... Do not worry about your life ... Who of you by worrying can add a single hour to his life? ... So do not worry, saying 'What shall we eat?' or 'What shall we drink?' or 'What shall we wear?'... your heavenly Father knows that you need them. But seek first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things will be given to you as well. Therefore do not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will worry about itself." (Matthew 6:31-34)

Rupel

In his book, Communication: Key to Your Marriage, H. Norman Wright outlines biblical principals for overcoming worry. Using a portion of the Apostle Paul's letter to the Philippians as a jumping off point, let me share some of Dr. Wright's insights.

"Don't worry about anything, instead, pray about everything; tell God your needs and don't forget to thank him for his answers. If you do this you will ... keep your thoughts and your hearts quiet and at rest as you trust in Christ Jesus." (Philippians 4:6,7)

Number one: "Don't try to face your troubles on your own. You can turn to God and ... trust Him for help. Depend on His power and strength to get you through."

Number two: "Remember you have a choice of who 'runs the ranch.' Do your thoughts control you or do you control your thoughts?... do worries take over and begin dictating your mood ...? Get busy thinking about something else. With God's help choose not to worry."

Number three: "Concentrate on reality. Face up to the actual situation and tell God your needs."

Number four: "Be honest with yourself and accept your problems. Honestly evaluate your feelings. Define your problems. And then '... trust him (God), too, for each day's problems.' Thank God for His answer ... even if you don't see a way out just at the moment."

Number five: "Focus on the solution rather than on the problem ... reach out to Him (God), depending on His help and guidance, to use the resources available to us and find workable solutions to our troubles."

Number six: "Accept what can't be changed." The Apostle Paul faced an unknown problem in his life and three times he asked God to remove the problem and God did not. Instead, God told Paul that his grace would suffice.

"If the Bible is true — and it is true — fear, worrying and anxiety actually question the trustworthiness of God. Then apparently we are saying, 'God, you are not speaking the truth.' In other words, 'You are lying.' These words were spoken by Corrie ten Boom, a Dutch woman whose entire family was murdered by the Nazis during World War II and she herself survived the horrors of the infamous Ravensbruck Nazi concentration camp.

If worry has you in its grasp, let me offer you hope. That hope is found in the man Jesus Christ. For many, worry is such a daily occurrence that you see no way out. Help can be found at the Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center. For more information, call at 545-2050 or 545-7777.

Chargers, Cowboys battle it out on field

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

The game remained scoreless as the Chargers and Cowboys lined up for the second quarter. The Chargers defense was strong throughout the first quarter with Justin Christy and Everette Portis making sacks and touchdown saving tackles. And even though Charger runningback Nubian Ames carried the ball for two first-downs and recovered a fumble in the first quarter, the Chargers were unable to score. Both teams were plagued by penalties and turnovers hindering all offensive drives in the first quarter.

During the second quarter, the Chargers fired up defensively with linebacker Joshua McWherter sacking Cowboy quarterback Jakarri Johnson twice. The sacks, however, didn't dampen the Cowboys offensive spirit. Jakarri ran for 30 yards and a touchdown on two consecutive quarterback keeper plays, which resulted in the first touchdown of the game. The Cowboys' two-point conversion attempt was unsuccessful leaving the score at 6-0.

Charger hopes were raised in the third quarter when Alex Williams forced a fumble and recovered the ball in Cowboy territory. Ames took advantage of the turnover by running 23 yards to the Cowboys two-yard line setting the Chargers up for a first-and-goal touchdown attempt. Quarterback Julio Lopez busted through the Cowboys defensive line for the only Charger touchdown of the day. The score was tied at the third quarter whistle 6-6.

In the fourth quarter, with less than a minute left, the Chargers set up the go-ahead Cowboy touchdown when quarterback Julio Lopez threw the ball to the intended receiver but Cowboy cornerback Terrell Tyson intercepted the ball. After cutting back and snatching the ball from the Charger wide receiver, Tyson turned on the jets and headed straight for the end zone. The Cowboys extra point attempt failed and after the kickoff the Chargers ran out of time. At the final whistle, the Cowboys were on top 12-6.

After the game, Tyson said he was excited about the interception late in the fourth quarter that sealed the win for the Cowboys.

"I was happy about the interception because the game was tied and time was running out fast," Tyson said. "And when I caught the ball I had nothing but the end zone on my mind."

James Poe, Cowboys head coach, said they won the game because his team played a good, hard football game and fought from whistle to whistle. "I am proud of the team because they showed what they were made of today."

Army marksman receives bid as shooter of year

U.S. Olympic Committee selects Tamas for honor

Paula J Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

An international rifle shooter with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit has been named shooter of the year. Thomas A. Tamas, USAMU international rifle shooter, was selected as the 1999 USA Shooting International Shooter of the Year, and the U.S. Olympic Committee Shooter of the Year. USA Shooting of 1 Olympic Plaza, Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

A native of Columbus, Tamas won Gold Medals in the Prone Rifle Match at the World Cup Finals in 1998 and 1999. Tamas, the current Prone Rifle World champion, won the the Gold Medal in the 50-Meter Free Rifle Prone Championship and tying the world record at the World Shooting championships in Barcelona, Spain, in 1998. Besides earning the title of World Champion, he also earned an Olympic quota slot for the United States in the 2000 Olympics.

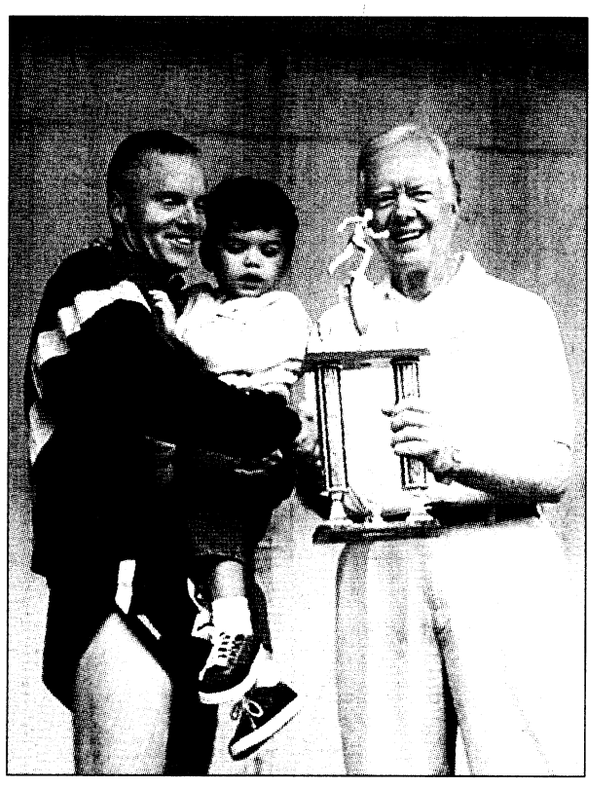
Tamas was also a member of the three-man U.S. Shooting Team that won the Gold Medal in the Prone 50-Meter World Team Championship. There were 100 countries and 1,800 shooters competing in the World Championships.

Also this year, Tamas won the Free Rifle Prone National Championship as well as the Rocky Mountain Championship and brought home two Team Gold Medals in 300-Meter Standard Rifle Three Position and Military Rapid Fire from CISM.

"I was surprised when I heard I won," Tamas said, "because so many other rifle shooters right here at the Marksmanship Unit shot so well this year, like Capt. (Glen) Dubis who won at the Atlanta World Cup and got an Olympic quota slot and Ken Johnson who shot well in the Pan-American Games."

But Tamas attributed his winning the title to bringing home the Gold from the two World Cup Finals.

The odds are against you in winning the World Cup Finals two years in a row," Tamas said. "The World Cup Finals are almost like being in the Olympics-there's the same caliber of talent, all the top shooters in the world.



"But, none of this could be possible," he added, "without the support of the Army and the great training I get at the Army Marksmanship Unit."

Tamas is now training to make the 2000 Olympic Team. The first Olympic selection match for Men's Prone Rifle will be conducted at Fort Benning April 29 and 30.

Raised in Columbus, Tamas graduated from Kendrick High School in 1983 and joined the Army in 1986. He was assigned to the Army Marksmanship Unit after completing Basic and Infantry Training at Fort Benning.

He served with the Marksmanship Unit for seven years before being assigned to the 1st Battalion, 506th Infantry Regiment, in Korea in 1992 after competing in the Olympics. After his overseas tour, Tamas returned to Fort Benning and the Army Marksmanship Unit in 1993. The 35-year old is a graduate of the Primary Leadership Development Course, Instructor Training Course, Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course and Combat Lifesavers Course, all which he attended at Fort Benning.

When John Detro visited his alma mater back in September, he ran with the cross country team and finished seventh, good enough to qualify for the varsity squad.

Not bad for a 37-year-old competing with a team ranked seventh in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics. But, it's what you would expect from a four-time track and field All-American.

Detro, a physician's assistant with the 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was on campus Sept. 25 at Siena Heights University in Adrian, Mich., because he was being inducted into the athletic department's Hall of Fame.

Tim Bauer, Siena's cross country and track coach, has known Detro for 20 years. He recruited the runner from Luna Pier, Mich., out of high school.

"He has that competitive desire and a huge heart. John just refused to lose," Bauer said.

"He knew he was a good runner in high school, and he worked as hard as any runner I've seen."

Detro was a true student athlete. He was a four-time track All-American and four-time academic All-American, Bauer said.

His family — wife, Moraima, and three children, Xaviera, Jose and Anthony — traveled from Fort Benning for the ceremony last month. About 30 of his relatives, former coaches from junior and senior high and college also attended.

He still holds four records at Siena Heights — steeplechase (8 minutes, 58.3 seconds), 5,000-meter outdoor (14:31), 2-mile indoor (9:06) and 8-kilometer cross country (24:41).

He has participated in the World Military Cross Country Championships three times, and in 1998 won the over-35 division 5,000-meter race at the State Games of Georgia and qualified for the National Games.

However, he was in the field during the national competition and couldn't compete.

Detro started running at age 12, but it wasn't his sport of choice. His father was a professional boxer, and to the boy, boxing and wrestling were more appealing than track.

Shooter: Soldier wins annual award

Tamas, who started shooting in 1978 with the Fort Benning Junior Rifle Team, has numerous marksmanship accomplishments. Besides being a 1992 Olympian, he was a 1997 Championship of the Americas and World Military Championships Team Member and the 1997 300-Meter Free Rifle Prone National Champion. He was a 1995 Pan America Games Gold Medalist, the 50-Meter Free Rifle Prone National Champion and Prone and Three-Position Metallic Aggregate National Champion.

In 1991, he was a four-time Gold Medal winner and Bronze Medal winner at the Pan American Games. He won a Gold Medal and set a national record in 300-Meter Prone in Switzerland and won Silver and Bronze medals at the World shooting championship in 1990. In 1989, he was the International Prone and Three-and Four-Position Champion.

Hall of Fame: Runner hopes to tackle Ranger School

"He wouldn't let me box until I could run four miles," Detro said.

That year, Detro ran the mile in 4:56.

"After that my dad wouldn't let me box anymore," he said. "I had found my sport, but it wasn't the one I wanted at the time."

Detro ran in the Army 10-miler in October in Washington, D.C. He was part of a team from the 75th Ranger Regiment.

He finished in 56 minutes, about 3 minutes short of his goal, he said.

Still, he was the second fastest runner from Fort Benning. Christopher Rizzo finished in 53:42.

"My last good year was 1995, since then I really don't think I have the same focus," Detro said.

Detro has decided to focus on being an age-group runner. "I can't win all the open runs any more," he said.

He is also starting to focus on a different kind of endeavor. In February, Detro will turn 38. He plans to leave for Ranger School the next month.

"Some of the guys think I am crazy," he said. "This is something I've always wanted to do, but I didn't think I would be this late doing it."

He is trying to focus on gaining weight and training for the three-month-long course.

"I'm thinking my running will help," he said. "There will be a point where you want to quit and in running a race there is a point where you want to quit.

"You just have to keep pushing for the finish."

Coach Bauer agreed.

"If any sport would prepare you for something like that, cross-country will do that. You are putting in 15 to 17 miles a day.

Bauer added, "I feel pretty secure in our country knowing that John Detro is on our side."

CARLTON or SHIRLEY BRUTON

June 30, 1999

Dear MR. Wood,

A Couple of Weeks ago We Came To your Place of business With What We Thought Was A TRANSMISSION Problem. We Were expecting To maybe even have To have you so into The TRANSMISSION at aN expensive repair bill. When you drove The Car + Told us it was a Fuse We were so relieved! When you didn't even charge us a dime we were even more surprised. As we Left We looked at The Cards you gave us + we began To see. We were dealing With a Christian. How Wonderful To Know There Are Still People Like you IN This World of doubt + mistrust. We have Told everyone We Know about This incident. We were Stranded Away From home. you could have TAKEN Advantage of us + We wouldn't even have Known. THANK you so much For your Kindness.

Sincerely
Shirley + Carlton Bruton

Area gears up for protest

Post expects more than 10,000 USARSA opponents this weekend

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

There is no room at the inn this weekend in Columbus or Phenix City.

That's because more than 10,000 opponents of the U.S. Army School of the Americas are expected to flock to Fort Benning's Stonegate for a protest against the school.

"Protest organizers are calling for the largest turnout ever," said Col. Thomas Cain, Fort Benning's Provost Marshal. "And we are going to be there to ensure that safety is maintained for all people involved."

Opposition for the U.S. Army School of the Americas began in 1989 when school opponents made accusations implicating USARSA-trained Soldiers in the murder of six Jesuit priests and two women in El Salvador.

This year's protest marks the 10- year anniversary of that accused slaying.

"U.S. Army School of the Americas has never taught torture, rape or murder," said Nicolas Britto, the official spokesperson for the school. "USARSA teaches U.S. Army doctrine and operates within Department of Defense policy."

While Cain and other post officials declined to give the security plan for the 10th consecutive protest, he said those who cross onto post could land themselves in jail.

"Fort Benning prohibits all partisan political activities," Cain said. "In compliance with the commanding general, the post must remain open to react to those individual protesters who violate that proclamation of remaining nonpartisan."

During last year's protest, USARSA opponents who proceeded to enter post were loaded onto buses and later taken to a local park and released.

This year, Cain said, that is not an option he is considering.

"In the past, we have established a processing center on post where the violators were logged, and if they were a repeat offender they were arrested," he said. "I think the violators this year could see something along those lines if they do decide to cross onto post."

In 1997, 612 protesters decided to walk onto post and found themselves in police custody.

Among those arrested were priests, nuns and college students. Thirty of those, all repeat offenders, were sentenced to six months in federal prison for criminal trespass.

While logging those arrests was necessary to maintain a nonpartisan environment on the post, Cain said it did put an additional strain on both the military police resources

Soldiers to benefit from penny tax passage

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Ben Franklin said a penny saved is a penny earned.

But Columbus-area voters disagreed earlier this month as they approved tacking on a 1 percent sales tax to the local tax base.

More than 40 percent of the area's registered voters went to polling locations Nov. 2 to give their nod for the extra penny on the dollar tax that will raise nearly $260 million dollars for the local community, according to Carmen Cavezza, Columbus city manager.

"The new tax will fund 19 local projects that will benefit the entire community," Cavezza said. "But the best part is local residents will not actually see the addition of the tax because it replaces another 1 percent special tax that took effect in '93."

> "The best part is local residents will not actually see the addition of the tax because it replaces another 1 percent special tax that took effect in '93."
> — Carmen Cavezza
> Columbus city manager

That tax, Cavezza said, raised enough funds to build the new Civic Center, construct the Riverwalk, build the South Commons Sports complex and other projects around the Columbus area.

While those ambitious projects were paid for by the '93 tax, Cavezza said he and his team of planners have another long list of projects to tackle with the funds from the newly approved tax which will take effect in June.

Among those projects slated to be accomplished with the new tax that Cavezza projects to raise nearly $26 million a year is constructing a new Olympic swimming pool, extending the Riverwalk north and a battery of improvements to the Oxbow Meadows Park in south Columbus.

Also on the project list, according to Cavezza, is the addition of a trolley system to the Columbus area. The proposed shuttle would transport people between the Civic Center to the Columbus Trade and Convention Center and the downtown Columbus State University campus.

So how will the residents of Fort Benning be affected by the new tax? Cavezza said the Soldiers and civilians will not feel the pinch of the new penny per dollar tax at all.

"The residents of Fort Benning will not feel the pressure of the new tax at all," he said. "There will be no change in the seven cents on the dollar rate in June. The old tax that began in '93 will end, and the new one will begin.

"There will be no change to the price residents pay for goods," he said. "The only thing residents will notice is the product of the new tax in the form of all the additions to the community."

Emergency services ready to respond to new millennium

New communications equipment makes DPS Y2K compliant

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

This is the third part in an eight-part series on Fort Benning's preparations for the problems associated with the year 2000.

When the year 2000 finds its way to the calendars of residents across the world, the mystery surrounding the new millennium madness will be over.

But what can local residents expect during the year 2000 transition process?

Uninterrupted service, that is what Col. Thomas Cain, Fort Benning's provost marshal, said post residents can expect from their law enforcement personnel.

"We have updated all of our communication, alarm and computer-aided dispatch systems to be Y2K compliant so there will be no interruption in service," he said. "The residents of Fort Benning will not experience any change in the law enforcement services we provide to the post."

Cain, along with the other 350 military police personnel assigned to Fort Benning, began preparing for the move to the new millennium more than a year ago.

But according to Cain, that planning process is just now beginning to materialize in the emergency 911 communication center located at the provost marshal's office on Main Post.

Within the past week, the center upgraded both of its antiquated computer-controlled communications

commentary

It's easier to believe a priest than a man in an Army uniform. But that doesn't mean that we should.

Fort Benning is the home of the U.S. Army School of the Americas. The school originated in Panama in 1946 to provide military training to Latin American nations. As part of the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty, the school was relocated to the Army post in Georgia. U.S. embassies in 21 Central and South American countries select students and send them to the school for courses to train Latin American military and police forces. Courses range from two weeks to nearly a year. Maryknoll priest Roy Bourgeois and his "School of the Americas Watch" organization call it a school for assassins.

During the last 10 years, Bourgeois has worked to shut down the school, blaming it for teaching Latin Americans how to commit human rights abuses. The accusations are horrific: Graduates commit massacres and lead bloody coups; they slaughter innocents and clergy; and they rape, torture and mutilate. Churches and other organizations across the country have jumped on the anti-School of the Americas bandwagon, mailing letters to legislators and marshaling contingents of placard-carrying demonstrators.

This seems like an irresistible cause. Murder and mayhem are bad. Anti-militaristic clergy must be good. But in this case, it may be a mistake to automatically assume the good guys are the ones wearing the Roman collars.

Bourgeois and other detractors use church publications and Internet sites to denounce the school. Accusations, some of them markedly bizarre, like hints of Army-sponsored chambers where torture techniques are perfected, are presented as unquestioned truth, often without the benefit of names, dates and facts to back them up. Asking for proof from clergy seems somehow bad-mannered, so few media and taxpayers have looked for corroboration.

In perhaps the only balanced and investigative coverage of this issue, Wayne Partridge's 1997 series of articles in the Columbus Ledger Enquirer revealed that Bourgeois SOA Watch did not comply with city, state and federal laws.

The SOA Watch then had an annual budget of $114,000 but had never registered with the IRS or Georgia's secretary of state, as required by national and state law. Nor had the organization obtained a business license to sell the $20,000 worth of videos and books it distributes annually. Though Maryknoll pays Bourgeois' living expenses, it names SOA Watch as an independent, non-Maryknoll project, which does not fall under tax exemptions for religious organizations.

No one accuses Bourgeois of getting rich. The priest lives simply in a modest apartment across the street from Fort Benning, dedicated to a cause he firmly believes is just. Politicized by his own four-year tour as a Navy officer in Vietnam (where he earned a Purple Heart during a Viet Cong attack in Saigon), Bourgeois entered the seminary and became active in 1970s protests against the government.

When Archbishop Oscar Amullo Romero was killed while celebrating mass in El Salvador in 1983, Bourgeois claimed two of the soldiers involved had attended the school 16 and 11 years earlier. For which classes and for how long, he doesn't say. (Some courses are focused on topics as benign as radio operations and are merely weeks long, which seems like blaming a technical college for the political actions of its machinist graduates years later.)

Bourgeois' flawed reasoning is based on guilt-by-association, claiming that if students behaved badly years after graduation, those actions must have been inspired by the school. He is objecting to what he asserts was taught 27 and 32 years ago. He is protesting a school that no longer exists. After Romero's death, Bourgeois impersonated a U.S. Army officer, trespassed onto a base to broadcast Romero's final sermon, and was convicted of striking a Soldier.

After the November 1989 slaying of six Catholic priests, their housekeeper and her daughter by Salvadoran soldiers, Bourgeois began a series of annual November protests against the school.

He has splashed his own blood on school walls, chained school doors shut, and reenacted the slaying inside Fort Benning with "gunmen" carrying cardboard weapons.

There are two curiosities about the protest Bourgeois leads against the School of the Americas.

One is that many of the respected organizations that support him seem to have done so blindly, without objectively examining the facts. In a survey of interdenominational churches listed on a recent letter to Congress protesting the school, not one of the churches interviewed had ever contacted or visited the school. When asked, school officials say that visits from the church leadership are rare. The USARSA chaplain, New York native Maj. Ruben Colon Jr., ruefully admits that his own Lutheran church's national leadership has denounced the school while ignoring his invitations to visit the campus. The rare organization that does investigate may discover a compelling case for the opposition.

One New York state Catholic church declined to automatically fall in line with local Catholic leadership organizing against the school, instead inviting both pro- and anti-school speakers to address the church board. The board concluded: "We are unable to support the position which advocates the closing of the School of the Americas. It is our assertion that there is a need for the training offered by the SOA."

A recent visit to the school by representatives of five Midwestern Lutheran colleges changed the minds of both students and staff, who resolved to ask harder questions of the anti-SOA movement when they returned home.

The other curiosity about the USARSA debate is that detractors (Bourgeois being the noisiest among them) are protesting in a time warp. Incensed over events that occurred 10 and 16 years ago, which may or may not be linked to curriculum, they call for closing the school today — certainly a case of shutting the barn door after the cow is long gone. Detractors call the school secretive, yet it stands in the open, clearly labeled and accessible to the public. Detractors claim the school teaches torture, but course catalogs, distributed without protest by staff, list nothing of the kind. Detractors claim they blew the whistle on torture textbooks used at the school.

The school management admits that 26 pages of three manuals used in one 1960s course were objectionable, and they removed these manuals of their own volition eight years ago. The school library, like any other federal library, is open to the public, and its shelves include information both for and against U.S. foreign policy. Critics link 300 of the school's 60,000 graduates over the last 50 years to human rights violations.

The school says only 20 have been tried and convicted by their nation's judicial systems.

Is USARSA the best tool for educating the militaries of Latin America and for fostering democracy? Maybe, maybe not. Should the United States spend $3.6 million annually to train Latin American military and police forces? Maybe, maybe not. Those are calls we each must make after consulting our conscience and the facts.

The school is funded by tax dollars, and carries out portions of U.S. foreign policy, so citizens should watchdog its actions, and the school should be accountable to questions from any taxpayer.

But we ought not to blindly accept the often incorrect accusations of Bourgeois and his followers. The assassinations of clergy that so offend him offended us all. The human rights abuses of the past must not be forgotten, and must guide us in our decision making around human rights issues. But the knee-jerk hatred and indictment of those in uniform is misplaced grief, and is a far cry from carefully reasoned and responsible action.

Editor's note: Pamela Hill Nettleton is a freelance writer living in Minneapolis. In April, she met with anti-School of the Americas protesters, and then visited the U.S. Army School of the Americas at Fort Benning. Printed with the permission of the author.

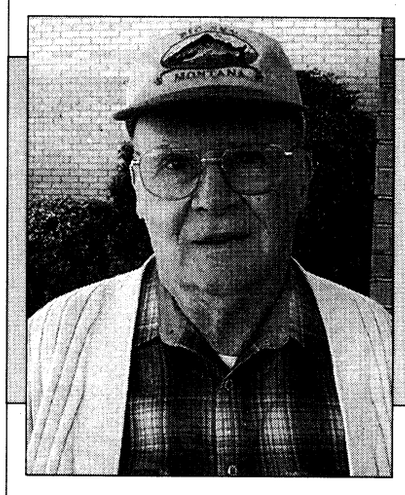
U.S. Army School of the Americas: at a glance

What: U. S. Army School of the Americas

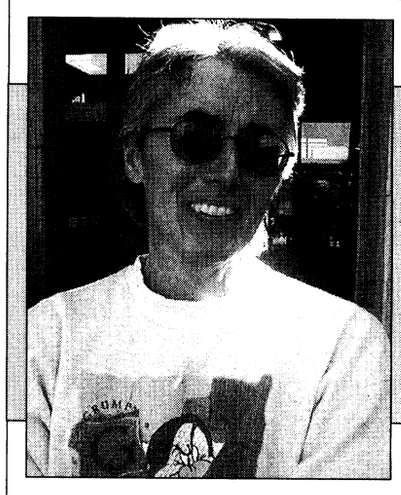


When: Founded in Panama in 1946; moved to Fort Benning in 1984.

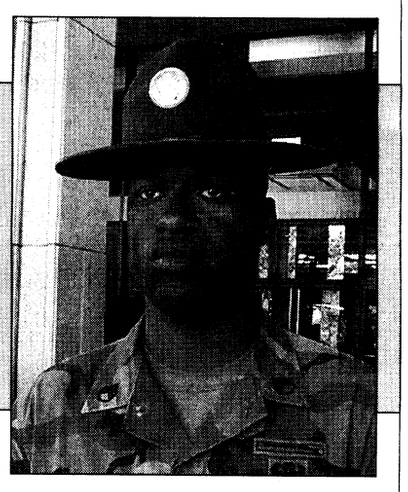
Purpose: To teach U.S. Army doctrine in accordance with Department of Defense regulations. More than 20 Central and South American countries select students to attend courses that train Latin American military and police forces. Courses range from two weeks to nearly a year.

Protest: Each November, the School of the America's Watch demonstrates against the school.

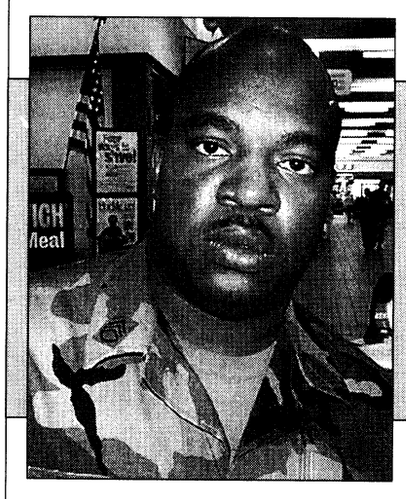
VARIOUS VOICES



How do you feel about the SOA Watch protest held here every year?



Retired Sgt. 1st. Class Walter Donaldson, Columbus — "I take the protesters side in a way because the troops we train go back to their country and use the training inappropriately."



2nd Lt. Jessie Kazda, CONUS Replacement Center — "We sure could use the money that goes to their training for ourselves"

Master Sgt. Lee King, CONUS Replacement Center — "With so many things wrong in this country I think they could find something better to protest about."

Staff Sgt. Lawrence Jordan, B Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry, Basic Combat Training Brigade — "We train other Soldiers that use the training against others in an inappropriate manner, and that is not right."

Staff Sgt. Gerald Fambro, CONUS Replacement Center NCOIC — "We train officers from countries that sometimes fight us. We should disband this program and use the money for ourselves."

Lynda McDonald, family member — "It stinks! People shouldn't be protesting at Fort Benning, they should be putting their energy toward something that is really needed."

Soldiers provide service to community

Being in the Army is about helping people. However, when most people think of the Army helping people, they picture American Soldiers in far away lands helping those less fortunate. At a time when the news is full of stories of Soldiers helping out in places ranging from the Balkans to South America, the Soldiers of B Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, have found a way to help out closer to home. In the local community, lieutenants going through the Infantry Officers' Basic Course contribute to the local area by tutoring "at risk" youth at a local elementary school.

Every Saturday at Eastway Elementary School, lieutenants take time to tutor students ranging from kindergarten through eighth grade in subjects like math, English and social studies. When asked what he got out of the program, 2nd Lt. Kevin Agness, from Seattle, Wash., said that it was a learning experience. Second Lt. Todd Balog from Houston, Texas, felt the program was a "Great opportunity to help the surrounding community."

These officers provide one-on-one instruction to students in two-hour sessions. By volunteering, these officers exercise a degree of social responsibility to their newly adopted community in Columbus. Lt. David Anders from Vacaville, Calif., summed it up best when he said, "Educating young people is a responsibility of all citizens."

Tutoring goes on every Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon at Eastway Elementary School. For more information about volunteering, call 697-5357.

11-year-old wants letters

I am a big Army fan and wear military clothing and equipment every day. The only reference I have to the Army is my father, who went to Camp Gordon when he was 20 and stayed in the Army for four years, traveling to Germany and back, 14 days on the water at a time.

I would like to have Soldiers write me about their experiences and stories from the Army. I am only 11 now, but plan to join the Army as soon as I can, if my weight doesn't stop me. Look for Pvt. James H. Wilson in about seven or eight years. I will be very grateful for Soldiers' letters. Even if you can't give me writing from Soldiers, please give me a notice.

I am a true fan of the Army.

Army Secretary busts two-star general to colonel

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera ordered Nov. 16 that Maj. Gen. John J. Maher III be reduced two grades and retired in the grade of colonel.

At an Article 15, Uniform Code of Military Justice hearing in Forrest Park, Ga., on Sept. 29, Lt. Gen. John M. Riggs, commander, First U.S. Army, found that Maher engaged in conduct unbecoming an officer by having improper sexual relationships with the wives of two military subordinate officers, and attempted to engage in conduct unbecoming an officer by attempting to have an improper personal relationship with an enlisted Soldier.

Riggs imposed the maximum forfeiture allowed by Article 15, one-half month's pay per month for two months ($8,632), and a punitive letter of reprimand.

Maher

"Although this incident represents a failure to uphold and honor the loyalty and trust that must exist in relationships between superiors and subordinates, it is not reflective of the quality of leadership in the Army," said Caldera. "Day in and day out the vast majority of the Army's senior leaders provide exceptional and caring leadership to our service men and women serving in very difficult and dangerous conditions around the world.

"The two-grade reduction from major general to colonel should send a very clear, strong signal that there is no place in the Army for this behavior," said Caldera.

When there is evidence of misconduct during a commissioned officer's active duty career, a Service secretary can establish the retired grade of the officer to be the highest grade at which the officer served satisfactorily — which can be a lower grade than the grade in which the officer was serving prior to retirement.

Maher submitted his retirement request in September after having served on the Pentagon's Joint Staff as vice director of operations. Caldera then directed the appointment of an Army Grade Determination Review Board on Oct. 1, to make a recommendation as to the grade in which Maher would be retired. After considering the recommendations of the board and the Chief of Staff of the Army, Caldera directed that Maher be retired in the grade of colonel.

As a result of Caldera's decision, Maher's retirement pay as a colonel will be $1406.13 less per month than it would have been had he retired as a major general. Maher's conduct was a serious breach of the trust that must exist between an Army commander and his subordinates.

Protest: Costs post more than dollars as well as a financial burden on the post.

"This is an expensive operation on both the physical and financial level," Cain said. "While we don't have to pay our Soldiers overtime, we do have to understand the additional hours they are required to work during this event is taxing.

"But the physical strain is not the only problem we face," he said. "We have to pay our civilian officers additional funds as well as all of the other civilian personnel involved for working after normal duty hours.

"It is certainly not business as normal," he added.

Although it will not be business as normal, Cain said all points of access will remain open to traffic during the protest; however, there may be some traffic congestion associated with the traffic check points that are already in operation around post.

In addition to the 350 military law enforcement personnel assigned to Fort Benning, 20 personnel from the 2145th Garrison Support Reserve unit will also be on hand to assist with the additional law enforcement need during the protest.

"I hope that beyond the inconveniences of the check points the demonstration is virtually invisible to the Soldiers, family and civilian employees that live and work on Fort Benning," Cain said.

Editor's note: Be sure to pick up next week's edition of The Bayonet for complete coverage of the USARSA demonstration.

Y2K: MPs ready for the New Year

terminals to new state-of-the-art terminals that will not only remain functional after the new year, but also give dispatchers more on-screen information while controlling the post's emergency radio traffic.

"The new terminals give the dispatcher the ability to monitor multiple channels while logging all calls on an on-screen display that provides a visual account of the radio traffic even if the dispatcher is busy and cannot get to the call," Cain said. "This gives both the MP on the street and the dispatcher a guaranteed means of communication at even the busiest of times."

The new renovations and additions to the communication center are not the only upgrade the post's top law enforcer has made to make the Directorate of Public Safety Y2K compliant.

Modifications and upgrades to the military police personnel's mobile radios and base station radios have also been completed in order to keep the post's law enforcement agency in operation after the new year.

As far as law enforcement itself, Cain said he doesn't see any major enforcement problems associated with the new year. However, that doesn't mean that military police won't have an eye out for possible new millennium mayhem makers.

"I don't foresee any major enforcement problems during the transition to the new year," he said. "But Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Safety will have a watchful eye for any one who may try to take advantage of the Y2K mystery and blame their actions on the impending Y2K bug."

Cain also noted that while he doesn't believe the Y2K bug will have a direct effect on enforcement, he said the new year always brings with it an increase in alcohol-related offenses.

"All of Fort Benning's military police will be participating in an increased DUI (driving under the influence) enforcement campaign during the new year holiday," he said. "I think that is where we will see most of our arrests come from during the new year transition."

Although the outcome of the transition is still uncertain, Cain assured that no matter what the product of the Y2K situation, Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Safety will be ready.

Recall alerts consumers

Consumer Safety Product Safety Commission

In cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Safety Product Safety Commission, Shine International Trading Company, Inc., of Flushing, N.Y., is recalling about 2.4 million cigarette lighters. The lighters' child-resistant mechanisms fail to meet the requirements of the Consumer Product Safety Act. Young children could ignite the lighters, presenting fire and burn hazards.

Additionally, the lighters can leak fuel and remain on after consumers have used them, which also presents fire and burn hazards.

The lighters being recalled are non-refillable, oval-tube-shaped, with a transparent solid-colored (red, green, yellow, orange or purple) plastic body and a metal top. The lighters measure about three and a quarter inches high and one inch wide. "SHINE" is imprinted into the metal top and "Made in China" are written on the label. The lighters operate with a roll and a press type of ignition mechanism to produce a flame. Small stores and souvenir shops nationwide sold these lighters from August 1998 through July 1999 for about $1.

Consumers should stop using these lighters immediately and return them to the store where purchased for a full refund. For more information, call Shine International Trading Company, Inc., toll-free at (888) 491-6676 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

CPSC, Universal Candle Co., of China, is voluntarily recalling about 21,000 Halloween pumpkin tealight candles sold at Bath and Body Works. The candles burn with a high flame, presenting fire and burn hazards to consumers.

A Bath and Body Works store received one report of a candle generating a high flame. No injuries have been reported. The recalled tealight candle has an orange pumpkin face with yellow eyes, nose and mouth and a green stem. Purple outlines the features on the pumpkin face. The wick is placed above the pumpkin's nose. The candle is contained in an aluminum base. A label on the base of the candle reads in part, "Specially made in China for Bath and Body Works." Bath and Body Works stores nationwide sold the candles throughout September 1999 for about $1.

Although Halloween is over, consumers should stop using the candles immediately and return the candles to any Bath and Body Works store for a full refund and a $10 gift certificate per customer.

For more information, consumers should call Bath and Body Works toll free at (800) 395-1001 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Teacher receives honor

T-shirt art project gains national recognition for Faith school, state

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet correspondant

Faith Middle School art teacher Gloria Loar was presented the State Award of Excellence at the annual Georgia Art Educators Association convention in Savannah Nov. 13. The award honors Loar's outstanding contribution to art education during Youth Art Month in March 1999.

Throughout the month, the Columbus Museum exhibited the selected works of student artists from middle schools throughout the area. Loar commemorated the event for each of her students by designing T-shirts depicting their individual artwork.

The Georgia Art Educators Association Youth Art Month Committee recognized Loar for her project and submitted their appraisal to the National Art Education Association. The state of Georgia received national recognition on behalf of Loar's contribution.

Loar has taught art in elementary, middle school and high school for 14 years. She has been teaching at Faith Middle School for the past 12 years. When her husband accepted a job transfer to Atlanta six years ago, Loar chose to continue working in the school system she had come to love. She and her husband now live in Peachtree City, and she commutes three hoursdaily to and from Fort Benning.

"The whole atmosphere here, from day one, has been great. I've gotten so much support from the superintendent on down. They realize the significance of the arts program," Loar said

Initially hoping to teach art at an elementary school on Fort Benning, Loar was apprehensive about working with middle schoolers when the former superintendent requested she consider the position at Faith.

"After I started working here, I thanked him every time I saw him. I love this grade level. They are so uninhibited. They're still having fun with their work," Loar said.

Dr. Thomas Dignan, Faith Middle School principal, feels Loar is an asset to the well-developed arts program.

"We need to recognize the good works our teachers do," Dignan said. "We're real proud of what our students are accomplishing. Ms. Loar is the catalyst behind that."

According to Dignan, Loar's program is designed to introduce student to all kinds of art.

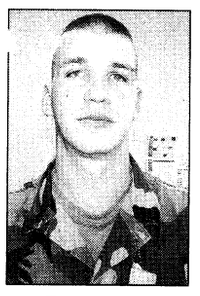
"The whole middle school concept is to expose students to a variety of areas and ideas. Her program gives students a good background in all areas of art, well beyond drawing," Dignan said.

The artwork of ninth-grader Madison Kniskern was among those selected to be displayed at the Columbus Museum last March.

"It was neat to see your artwork there on display where other people could see it," said Kniskern. The two-year art student was pleased, but not surprised, to hear about the award bestowed on her former teacher. Loar, however, described her own reaction differently.

"I was surprised, shocked and pleased. You work hard and sometimes feel unappreciated. Things like this make you realize that you are appreciated," Loar said.

If her students' opinions are any indication, the art teacher never goes unappreciated.



"Ms. Loar makes art fun. She encourages us to strive for better," said eighth-grader Kimberly Hernandez.

Loar is one of 675 members of the Georgia Art Educators Association, making it the second largest state organization of its kind in the nation. The association will once again focus national attention on education next March in observance of Youth Arts Month.

CPOC receives recognition with award

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The first Southeast Region Partnership Award was presented Nov. 3 during the Civilian Personnel Operations Center and Civilian Personnel Advisory Center Fall Workshop.

Headquarters of Training and Doctrine Command, Civilian Personnel Directorate, received the award for outstanding achievement in strengthening and improving regional civilian personnel services, said Anne Alston, administration officer of the Civilian Personnel Operations Center.

"There are a lot of handoffs that go on (within the different Southeast organizations involved) and if any of it doesn't go promptly, or runs into obstacles, then people complain about the process not working," said Jane Wilson, deputy director of the Southeast CPOC. "Headquarters TRADOC was the organization that did everything possible to make things run smoothly."

"Some of the achievements were addressing installation concerns with CPOC and CPOC management agency, which generated a number of improvements and ensuring that changes and ideas were shared in TRADOC CPACs as well as many others," Alston said.

The award recognizes the Southeast activity division that made an all out effort to make the partnership work, and it was to market positive feedback within the partnership, she said. This region includes Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Puerto Rico.

Even though the Fort Benning CPOC didn't win, in a sense it did because it is a TRADOC element and it is going to be recognized and publicized with the award being won by TRADOC headquarters, she said.

"Hopefully next year we will receive more nominations for this award, and get more people involved," she said.

"I think probably more than any other major command in the Army, they've (TRADOC headquarters) really done a lot to sponsor training and to do things to really help their personal advisory center at the installation level ... and that helps us all do more with less people involved," Wilson said.

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Department of Defense has opened a new Job Search Internet site to help separating personnel and veterans.

The site address is: http://DOD.JOBSEARCH.ORG

This new Internet site offers assistance with job listings, career planning, and resume posting services to separating and separated military personnel.

Employers can also post new job opportunities through the site and get the announcements to a larger military population.

The Fort Benning ACAP Center staff has been using this job search tool since it was activated Oct. 1.

"It is a user friendly site and may be accessed from home computers or on ACAP Center terminals during the job search process," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services manager.

The Internet has become a valuable tool for job seekers in and out of the military, he said. Separating Soldiers needing assistance with Internet job searching can get help at the ACAP Center. Trained and experienced job assistance counselors are available for scheduled appointments. Appointments can include computer assistance and Internet instruction.

"Web sites such as the DoD Job Search were developed to give Soldiers the extra edge they have earned," Wight said.

Another job assistance tool on the Internet is the Fort Benning ACAP Center web site that has been on-line since June 1998 and has been visited more than 20,000 times.

The ACAP URL address is: http://www.benning.army.mil/fbhome/ACAP/acapweb1.html

This site can be accessed directly or through a link from the Fort Benning home page. The local ACAP site has recently been updated to include a link for easy access to the DoD Job Search location.

For more information, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit its web site at: http://www.benning.army.mil/fbhome/ACAP/acapweb1.html.

608th Ordinance Soldiers take on training

Life-saving skills evaluated during week-long exercise

1st Lt. Raquel Riley
608th Ordinance Company

The combat lifesaver had to make a choice. There in front of her, only a few yards away, lay a dying Soldier. Only a few hundred feet away the enemy — waited patiently.

She had to make a decision — save the Soldier and risk getting killed, herself, or leave the Soldier and take cover away from the enemy.

This was just one of the many tasks evaluated in a recent training exercise conducted by the 608th Ordnance Company, task organized to 13th Corp Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

The mission essential task list of "Force Protection" was the focus of the grueling week-long training exercise broken down into three phases that would culminate into an all-out platoon-level attack with the opposing forces.

During the first phase of the exercise, Soldiers had to properly occupy a field site using an advance quartering party to sweep the area for Nuclear, Biological, Chemical contamination and possible enemy troops.

After receiving commendable remarks from the evaluator, NCOIC Staff Sgt. Tyrone Davis, said, "I knew they would do well in the evaluation. They worked really hard during the rehearsals, and it paid off."

Normally, Soldiers follow a tactical standard operating procedure for the priorities of work upon occupation of a new site. However, a rainstorm detoured their plans. Soldiers had to battle digging muddy foxholes, squandering for daylight, and keeping somewhat dry, all at the same time.

Keeping the Soldiers motivated was a task Staff Sgt. Carla Glover took on without a shrug. "Hey, we train to standard, not to time and definitely not to weather."

1st Lt. Raquel Riley

Pvt. Alisa Alexander, a combat lifesaver for the 608th Ordnance Company, gives first aid to Pfc. Samuel Decker as evaluators look on during a week-long training exercise "Force Protection."

Once the defense was set up to standard, the war-games started. Reports of enemy personnel seen in the area flooded the radios.

Soldiers defending the area were evaluated on how well they could detect the enemy using night-vision goggles and their response if the enemy tried to make any advances into the perimeter.

During the next phase of the exercise, Soldiers were evaluated on NBC procedures. Soldiers were attacked with CS gas and had to protect themselves from the chemical agent and decontaminate themselves and their equipment once they vacated the area.

Pfc. James Sears said, "The training put us in a real-life situation, where we had to follow through an operational decontamination line as if we were really attacked."

The first encounter with the enemy followed. As if on cue, enemy Soldiers breached the defended area but couldn't advance because friendly Soldiers killed them off or quickly captured them.

Pfc. Adam Snider, who played one of the OPFOR, was impressed with the procedures once he was captured.

"I was captured, detained, my weapon was taken and my person searched for contraband. I was then escorted to a POW holding area and watched at gunpoint," he said.

When asked how he would have felt if it had been real-life situation, a solemn look immediately came across his face.

"I would have felt demoralized, because my freedom had been taken. You don't know how important your freedom is until it's gone," he said.

During the attack, the commander of the 36th Engineer Group, Col. Gene Dewulf, arrived on the scene to observe training. After watching a combat lifesaver risk her life to help a wounded Soldier, he gave some pertinent guidance on first-aid techniques that could be used to help a fallen Soldier.

The 608th is an ammunition company, so the next phase was all too familiar to many of the Soldiers. They were to convoy to a specified destination and drop off ammunition.

At first glance, many Soldiers didn't feel this particular operation was geared towards force protection. However, the Soldiers changed their attitude during the convoy to the drop-off point, when snipers started firing at their vehicles.

Disoriented leaders called in reports of shots fired, as they tried to maneuver away from the sniper as quickly as possible. Upon the arrival at the drop off site, Soldiers encountered enemy all around their supposed "secured" site. Shots were fired, the enemy was captured, and the mission was accomplished.

The last phase of operation came when the other enemy forces found out about the capture of their fellow comrades. An all-out war struck late in the evening, when the OPFOR breached the friendly territory and killed off many of their rivals.

However, with the sharp skills and quick reflexes of the friendlies, the enemy was quickly overcome once again, by the defending Soldiers.

Prior to redeployment, Soldiers trained on issues such as consideration of others and equal opportunity training. They said they felt the training was beneficial and gave them a better insight on their rights as well as the right of others.

Trainees on target during live fire

Capt. Samuel Morgan
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

The sun begins to rise over the horizon, slowly illuminating the rolling terrain. On the right, a dug-in and well-camouflaged .50 caliber machine gun position becomes apparent. On the left, a MK-19 (40mm) automatic grenade launcher gunner waits patiently as he peers through his sights into the engagement area. A TOW-mounted and .50 caliber mounted humvee also wait in entrenched positions.

The Soldiers manning these weapon systems strain against the light, scanning their sectors for enemy activity. The radio crackles, shattering the silence: "Charlie six, this OP-1, we have one tank and four APCs crossing Phase Line Green into Engagement Area "Patriot," direction 5800 mils, distance 1800 meters. Request permission to call for fire on TRP-1 and TRP-2, over."

"Roger, contact Mortar-1 for fire mission. Keep me informed of the situation, out."

"Mortar-1, this is OP-1, fire for effect, TRP-1 and 2, over."

The commander radios his mounted TOWs and .50 caliber machine gun into position from their hide sit. Enemy tanks enter the engagement area.

Suddenly, a loud crack: the TOW missile is thrusted from its launch tube and flies 1800 meters making "steel on steel" contact with an enemy tank.

To the north, Soldiers drop mortar rounds in the tubes of their 81mm guns. Twenty-five seconds later, the crunch of multiple explosions reverberate throughout the impact area.

The Soldiers manning the .50 caliber machine guns lay down well-placed bursts, answered by the MK-19. Forty millimeter grenades thump into the enemy's light-skinned vehicles. A few minutes later, this well-designed defense destroys the enemy and prepares for its next mission.

"Charlie six, this is OP-1, one tank and four APCs destroyed."

What makes this engagement different from every other engagement in war? This one was executed right here at Coolidge Range on Fort Benning with Initial Entry Training Soldiers manning the weapon systems and observing, for the first time, the effects these weapons have in the engagement area. More importantly, these new Soldiers get to see how the Infantry and its different military occupational specialties work together as a team.

"It all happened so fast. I knew that we were going to drop rounds, but I didn't expect what happened," said Pvt. Roman Ortega, a mortarman for C Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

"The commander called on the radio, and we all reacted as a team to kill the enemy. It was awesome, working with the other MOS in the company," he said.

The "Patriots" are charged with the mission of training all mortarmen, TOW missile gunners, DRAGON missile gunners and mechanized Infantrymen in the Army.

"The live-fire exercise allows the Soldiers to participate and observe the devastating effects of combining Infantry weapon systems," said Sgt. 1st Class Johnny Fuller, the platoon sergeant for the TOW platoon.

These Soldiers graduate Infantry one station unit training and then report to C Co., 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. for two additional weeks of heavy weapons training. The company is manned by the most senior drill sergeants in the Infantry Training Brigade.

"The Heavy Weapons Company has two weeks to prepare these Soldiers to execute the mission of their particular MOS. Due to the current operational tempo in the Army, new Infantrymen need to depart Sand Hill with a profound respect for the Infantry and a clear understanding of how to operate as a member of a section, squad, or team," said Capt. Mark Trott, Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 2nd Bn., 58th Inf.

"The majority of the Soldiers graduating from the company stated that they felt very prepared to execute their mission," said 1st Sgt. Roberto Romero, C Co., 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. "Soldiers request to fire more live rounds in every class that we conduct in the unit," he added.

Soldiers now graduate with the knowledge of how indirect fire, direct fire and missile flight work together.

"The LFX was a kicker," said Pvt. Michael Banville, the class "Top Gun" for the 11H training. "Shooting the TOW missile was a rush, a once in a lifetime experience," he said.

Coupled with advanced physical training, the heavy weapons Infantrymen are better trained, more physically fit and more mentally prepared than their predecessors. The C Co. Soldier lives the Patriot Battalion Triad of Excellence: Physical Training, Shooting and Tactical Training.

This produces a Soldier more capable to deploy successfully anywhere immediately upon signing into his unit, and with the same results as today's live fire exercise:

"Enemy Destroyed."

Being chaplain assistant more than Sunday service

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Other Soldiers may think a chaplain's assistant works only on Sundays, unlocking the doors and putting the chapel back together after a service.

Spc. Austin House has heard the comments before and laughs.

"Some think we just pass out the cookies at the chapel," said House, chaplain's assistant at the Ranger Training Brigade. "We don't even have a chapel out here."

House is Chaplain (Capt.) David Baum's assistant. As the Unit Ministry Team for the Army's Ranger School, the two men are modern-day circuit riders traveling from Camps Rogers and Darby at Fort Benning to Camp Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., and Camp Rudder, at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla. They serve students in the different phases of the school. A service is held about every eight days during the different phases of the course, so they visit Rudder or Merrill each week, sometimes hitting both camps if needed.

Monday House and Baum made the 500-mile roundtrip to the 6th Ranger Training Battalion in Florida for a service. They left at noon and returned at midnight.

The assistant is responsible for setting up for the services and promoting them to the troops.

"Every day is Sunday when you go to the field," Staff Sgt. Warren Cotton said. "We hold services whenever we have an opportunity." Cotton is the NCOIC for the chaplain's office of the 3rd Infantry Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

But, an assistant's job involves more than scheduling worship services. The unit ministry team must focus on taking care of the people in the unit.

For Baum and House that means the Ranger instructors, their families and the 2,000 students who go through the school each year.

> "I really believe that God is working through me and the chaplain."
> — Spc. Austin House
> Chaplain assistant, Ranger Training Brigade

"We don't have access to the students like you would have to Soldiers in a normal unit," Baum said. "That's the nature of the training."

Cotton is the assistant to Chaplain (Maj.) David Norvell, brigade chaplain. They lead a group of seven ministry teams.

"The issues that a unit ministry team deals with depends on the make-up and mission of the unit," Norvell said.

The brigade faces frequent deployments and has a high number of married Soldiers causing the unit ministry teams to focus on family issues.

An important aspect of the assistant's job is talking with the troops, many who would not approach a chaplain with a problem but who feel comfortable talking to a fellow enlisted Soldier.

"They may see the chaplain as an officer or a 'holy man,' but they are willing to talk to an assistant," Norvell said. "Often he will get more information from a Soldier than I can."

Kelly Hill has a chapel and hosts several events during the week including Bible studies and Family Readiness Group meetings. The assistants are there to provide needed support from opening the facility until the last person leaves.

"We have some late hours, and you can expect to give up one or two weekends a month," Cotton said.

Other duties include maintaining the ministry team's vehicle, screening calls and scheduling appointments with the chaplain for marriage, grief and personal counseling.

The ministry team deploys with the unit, and Norvell and Cotton will deploy to Fort Stewart for the Marne Focus Exercise in January and to the National Training Center in April.

"We try to accommodate all faiths in the field or out," Cotton said. That may involve providing a place to worship or certain foods like kosher items.

"Unit ministry teams are in the Army for the key reason that we allow Soldiers to have religious freedom and the right to worship as they see fit," Norvell added.

Cotton has been asked if his job as a chaplain's assistant is special duty. It's not; it's an actual MOS.

He and House attended the Chaplain's Assistant School at Fort Jackson, S.C., for the MOS 71-M.

Cotton selected the MOS six years ago. He said he finds the job very satisfying.

"I like helping out Soldiers, not only with their religious needs but supporting them in anything they may need," he said.

"I'm there to be a listening ear and to give them advice on ways to get through it (the problem), so they can get out and finish their mission."

House sees his job as a wonderful opportunity.

"I am here to help the chaplain out," House said. "But, I also see it as a ministry opportunity. I really believe that God is working through me and the chaplain."

Army seeks more Catholic chaplains

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army is launching several initiatives to address a shortage of active-duty Catholic chaplains.

Currently, the Army has 98 active-duty priests, a third of its requirement, said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) David Kenehan, a Catholic military priest and recruiting and retention specialist who works within the Pentagon's Office of the Army Chief of Chaplains.

To meet Catholic Soldiers' religious needs according to demographic requirements, the Army requires 225 more Catholic chaplains, said Kenehan, who noted the Army recruits about 70 chaplains a year from all denominations; a total of 1,300 Army chaplains are now on active duty.

"The First Amendment to the Constitution guarantees that all Americans may freely practice their religion. The U.S. Army Chaplaincy exists to guarantee that all Soldiers have the right to worship. The fact that we only have one third of the Catholic priests that we need means Catholic Soldiers are sometimes not able to exercise their religious freedom; they are not always able to receive the sacraments of their church, simply because we don't have enough priests," said Kenehan. Chaplain (Maj. Gen.) G. T. Gunhus, a Lutheran pastor who took over as the Army's new chief of chaplains in July, has committed himself and his organization to finding a solution to the shortage.

"I have determined that the keystone mission of my tenure as Army Chief of Chaplains is the successful recruitment of shortage denomination clergy, and, in particular, Roman Catholic priests into the Chaplaincy," said Gunhus in a recent memorandum. "I have established a new directorate in my office ... the Directorate of Ministry Initiatives will concentrate its efforts on developing all conceivable plans to accomplish this recruiting mission."

The new directorate, approved by the Army Secretariat and Vice Chief of Staff Gen. Jack Keane, has one colonel, four lieutenant colonels and a sergeant first class as its administrative noncommissioned officer, said Kenehan.

Gunhus has been working with Archbishop Edwin O'Brien, the Catholic Archbishop for the Military Services, USA, to find a solution to the Army's priest shortage, said Kenehan. O'Brien endorses all Catholic priests for military service in the Army, Air Force and Navy.

"Priests must first receive Archbishop O'Brien's endorsement, then they may apply for appointment as a military chaplain," said Kenehan. An Army Accessions' Board then examines the applications approved by O'Brien and either accepts or rejects them.

One of the issues facing the Army in its search for more priests is that for 30 years the Catholic Church in the U.S. has not been able to ordain enough priests to keep pace with attrition, said Kenehan.

"The Army isn't getting the number of priests it needs primarily because there is a critical shortage of Catholic priests throughout the United States," said Kenehan. "No one can provide a definitive reason why this is occurring."

However, he added, between 1968 and 1974 there was a 250-percent drop in Catholic seminary enrollments; only just in the past year have seminary enrollments ceased to decline.

Gunhus and O'Brien are convinced that Soldiers with prior military service will provide the bulk of the new priests the Army needs in the foreseeable future, said Kenehan.

For example, he said, over the past three years, 10 former Soldiers came back in the Army as Catholic priests.

"They got out of the military, studied for the priesthood and came back in," said Kenehan. "We believe there are more people out there just like them."

Kenehan said O'Brien and Gunhus are jointly sponsoring a special Vocation Sunday throughout the Army Nov. 21. The word vocation, he said, is derived from Latin, meaning, "to call," as to the ministry.

O'Brien has produced a video, "Never Far From Home," in eight- and 22-minute versions, which points out the importance of military priests to the Army and the military community, said Kenehan. The eight-minute version will be shown Nov. 21 at every mass around the military, stateside and overseas. The Chief of Chaplains is going to Fort Belvoir, Va., to present the video.

"People will be asked to sign pew cards promising to pray daily for vocations and to put down names of anyone they know who might want to become an Army priest," said Kenehan.

Additionally, any congregation member interested in becoming a Catholic chaplain can write his name, address, and phone number on the pew card, said Kenehan. Someone from O'Brien's office will contact those interested in becoming Army priests.

"Every chaplain in the Army is supporting this," said Kenehan, who noted O'Brien is going to visit the U.S. Military Academy at West Point Nov. 21 to preach and show the video. Fourteen people from the Chief of Chaplains' office, he said, are scheduled to deploy to various Army installations across the country for Vocation Sunday, which will be observed overseas, as well.

Chaplain (Brig. Gen.) James Spivey, the senior chaplain in the Army Reserve, and Chaplain (Brig. Gen.) Victor Langford, the senior Army National Guard Chaplain, will also participate in Vocation Sunday activities, said Kenehan.

While the Army Chief of Chaplains' Directorate of Ministry Initiatives will continue to interface with Catholic dioceses and religious orders across the country in the search for more priests to serve in the military, said Kenehan, it is felt that the Army must make greater efforts "to grow its own priests" from its own ranks and military families.

"It's a major, major undertaking. If we are going to start to turn the corner on this issue, we will have to do it primarily with our own people. Soldiers and the members of soldiers' families are going to have to accept the Lord's call to the priesthood and the Army Chaplaincy. The solution lies within our own Army Catholic communities," he concluded.

Ranger Team Writes Devotions

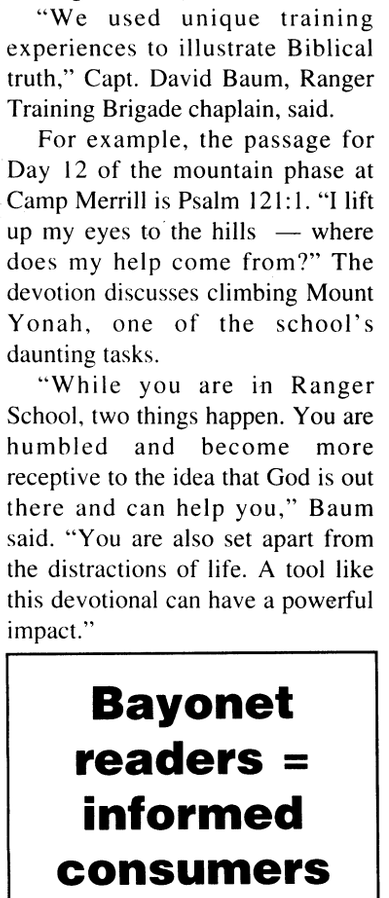
Rangers lead the way.

Ranger students must hear that expression hundreds of times as they strive to earn the coveted tab.

A small book of devotions called The Way is designed specifically to encourage them on their journey.

Each Ranger student is offered a copy of The Way at the beginning of the 62-day course.

This spring a seven-person team wrote and edited the 62 devotions, one for each day. Modeled after Our Daily Bread, the book features scripture passages and examples relating to the school.



"We used unique training experiences to illustrate Biblical truth," Capt. David Baum, Ranger Training Brigade chaplain, said.

For example, the passage for Day 12 of the mountain phase at Camp Merrill is Psalm 121:1. "I lift up my eyes to the hills — where does my help come from?" The devotion discusses climbing Mount Yonah, one of the school's daunting tasks.

"While you are in Ranger School, two things happen. You are humbled and become more receptive to the idea that God is out there and can help you," Baum said. "You are also set apart from the distractions of life. A tool like this devotional can have a powerful impact."

German play group keeps culture alive

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Sabine Anderson knows from experience how hard it is to move to a foreign country. Now the Army spouse wants to help other German women at Fort Benning by forming a children's educational group — a play group for German-speaking youngsters.

The group, about 10 mothers and 10 children, meets weekly in different homes on post. The children range in age from newborns to 4 years.

Anderson wants to reach more German spouses and invite them to join. She is also searching for a permanent meeting place.

"There is a great need among the younger wives who have younger children. It's very difficult when you first move; it's a real culture shock," Anderson said.

"They don't know where to turn."

The group allows the women and children to get out of their homes once a week and network.

"I was clinging to anyone who was German," Anderson recalled.

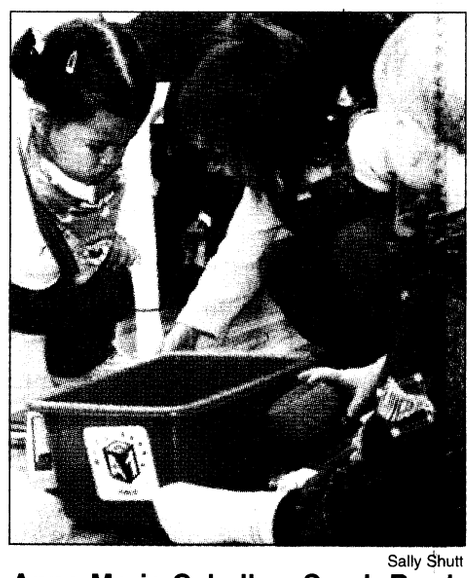
Anderson spent the first 20 years of her life in Bremen, Germany. "You never had to introduce yourself to someone," Anderson said. "Everyone knew everyone."

Anderson left that comfort zone 13 years ago when she married a Soldier and moved to the United States.

"In Germany, I had not been taught to make friends quickly," she said. "I had to learn to extend myself."

Anderson participated in a large German support group at Fort Bragg before moving to Fort Benning.

Although she is here for only one year while her husband attends the Chaplains Family Life Course, she wants to get the play group up and going.



"I feel that I have to try," she said.

Dani Burd joined the group Wednesday. Her children are ages 2 and 8.

"I think it's a good chance for my daughter to practice her German since we are going over (to Germany) in August," Burd said.

"My oldest is fluent, but my youngest isn't."

If interested in joining the play group, call Anderson at 689-9730 or e-mail MatSabine@aol.com or hijinxd@mindspring.com.

Heading home for the holidays

Staff Sgt. Elbert Clark, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, replaces a friend's car engine at the Auto Skills Center, Fort Benning, in preparation for holiday travel.

For travelers heading to colder climates, the Auto Skills Center suggests winterizing vehicles. Suggestions include:

- Checking belts, hoses and tire pressure
- Topping off all fluids
- Keeping a blanket and first aid kit in vehicle
- Making sure there is a sufficient amount of windshield wiper fluid, not water, in dispenser.

All military and Department of Defense identification holders wanting to winterize their vehicles can rent a bay for a nominal fee at The Auto Skills Center. For more information, call 545-2337

Smokeout participants call it quits

Nurses educate kids, promote good habits

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

On this day last year, nine million people tried it out. Over 89,000 people said they did it less in the days that followed. Thousands of volunteers helped save lives. They all had one common goal — to keep from smoking for at least one day.

"The Great American Smokeout is held every year on the third Thursday of November," said Carmen Ramos, a nurse with community health nursing.

"What we are are doing for our Soldiers is an adoption program, where someone will encourage the Soldier not to smoke for the entire day," she said. "After that, if they complete the mission, their commander gives them a certificate."

Although the smokeout is featured toward smokers, the American Cancer Society is trying to get the message out to all tobacco users to stop using their choice tobacco.

"We (community health nursing) want people to know that tobacco causes cancer-causing diseases, like emphysema, lung, throat and mouth cancer," Ramos said.

Community Health Nursing is reaching out to people of all ages. Monday through Wednesday Ramos and "Octopuff" Lorine Jackson, a licensed practical nurse from the health promotion center, visited Fort Benning's schools. Thursday they traveled to the main Post Exchange and set up a booth to get the word out that all tobacco products are equally bad and everybody is affected.

Monday morning Ramos and Jackson started getting the word out at Patch Pre-school to educate the children on the dangers of smoking.

"Even the 3- and 4-year-old children are able to comprehend the message we are getting across," Ramos said.

"I am amazed on what the children know about smoking," said Pat Finely, director of Patch Pre-school.

"I have heard some children scold their parents about the dangers of smoking," she said.

"I am really pleased with this program, because the younger we get the message to the children that smoking is bad, the better," Finely added.

Tobacco smoke contains over 4,000 chemical compounds including 43 different cancer-causing substances, according to an American Cancer Society booklet. Some of the compounds include acetone, cyanide, formaldehyde, wood alcohol and tar.

The chemical compounds in tobacco smoke could remove fingernail polish, preserve a frog for a biology class, make gasoline and pave a road all at the same time.

With almost 40,000 people dying every year from diseases caused by tobacco, and 3,000 teens lighting up for the first time every day, there seems little hope for people who are trying to kick their tobacco habit.

The ACS gives these tobacco quitting tips:

- Remind yourself of your reasons for quitting and say them 10 times before going to bed each night.
- Reach out to family members and other smokers to join you in quitting smoking.
- To cope with cravings, take slow deep breaths; drink a lot of water throughout the day, especially during a craving; do something that will get your mind off of your craving; and delay reaching for your tobacco because the craving will pass.
- Remove items that trigger you to want to smoke, such as matches and lighters.
- Break your cigarettes in half and clean out your ash trays.
- Eat slowly at meals, and leave the table immediately after eating
- Exercise, such as running and swimming.

To learn more about the Great American Smokeout, or to get more information on kicking the tobacco habit call 1-800-ACS-2345 or visit the ACS web site at www.cancer.org.

With holidays fast approaching, families will be planning big Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Years dinners and parties. Baking and eating turkeys, hams, pies, cakes and a host of other delicious items will be high on everyone's agenda. No one looks forward to the cleanup; but fortunately for Fort Benning families, Directorate of Public Works began replacing old stoves about a year ago, with new ones containing self-cleaning ovens. Old stoves are being replaced on a case-by-case basis throughout housing areas.

Families that already have one of these new self-cleaning ovens are in luck — no more scrubbing and scrubbing with caustic chemical cleaners. However, self-cleaning doesn't mean no-cleaning. Only the oven is self-cleaning, and it requires some pre-cleaning with soap and hot water. Oven cleaning products or oven protective coatings should never be used on self-cleaning ovens. Frequent and regular use of the self-cleaning cycle eliminates the messy labor of cleaning older stoves. The self-cleaning oven cleans itself with high temperatures, which eliminate soil completely or reduce it to a fine powdered ash that is easily wiped away with a damp cloth.

The best source of information on the care and use of self-cleaning stoves is the owner's manual, which the DPW urges all users to read and consult before using the oven or its self-cleaning cycle. To recap a few important tips concerning the self-cleaning feature:

• As with any appliance, do not leave children unattended in the area while it is in use. The outside of the range can become hot to the touch.

• Before cleaning any part of the stove, turn off all controls and wait until the stove is cool.

• Wear rubber gloves when precleaning or wiping out the oven.

• Hand clean the oven and frame, and the door surface using hot soapy water, but do not clean or remove the door gasket. Any cleaning or rubbing of the gasket could damage the tight seal essential for operation.

• Remove spills and heavy soiling as soon as possible after cooking, especially grease or spills with a high acid or sugar content (such as milk, tomatoes, pie filling, and sauerkraut). If necessary, cover difficult spots with an ammonia-soaked paper towel for 30 to 40 minutes. Rinse with clean water and damp cloth, then scrub with a soap-filled scouring pad. Rinse and wipe dry. The self-cleaning cycle will take care of the rest.

Use the self-cleaning cycle frequently before the oven becomes heavily soiled. Once a month is recommended to start. Some cooks may find they need to clean the over more frequently, others can go longer between cleanings.

When done regularly, the amount of hand cleaning needed is kept to a minimum.

Oven racks may be cleaned in the self-cleaning cycle, but be sure to remove all pans, utensils and foil from the oven. They cannot withstand the high cleaning temperatures.

Dig out the owner's guide and follow its instructions to prepare for a safe, hassle free holiday season. For more information, call Family Housing Branch at 545-7312.

money matters

2nd Lt. Merle Campbell
Bayonet correspondent

Campbell

Most people now understand the basic intricacies of formulating and adhering to a personal budget. The personal budget serves as the foundation that must be set in order to advance a level in financial sophistication.

A solid financial structure encompasses many aspects of financial planning and organization and can be used to accomplish various financial goals. These goals can range in complexity from planning for retirement to funding a child's college education.

The process of building a financial structure begins with the residual cash flow from a well-formulated budget. The use of this residual cash flow is important to accomplishing financial objectives.

For this reason it is very important to contend with the budget surplus carefully. At the end of each month this surplus should be routed into a savings account.

Setting aside money at the end of each month, no matter how small the amount, is one of the most important aspects of personal finance. In a savings account it's ideal to build and regulate a balance of roughly one to two months salary. This money is placed into a savings account to be held in the event of a contingency or unforeseen emergency.

Additionally, a small amount of investment income can be earned on this balance (average savings accounts can yield anywhere from 1 to 2.5 percent). Once the prescribed savings account balance has been established, it is time to progress to the next level of planning.

Cash flow beyond that of savings should be directed back into the budgeting process. It is now time to work on alleviating high levels of debt, like credit cards and personal loans. Although, a certain amount of debt is inevitable, over the long term it is beneficial to lower exposure to high levels of debt and interest payments.

For example, take a credit card that has an interest rate of 20 percent. This is the rate of interest that is accrued on the outstanding account balance.

If the credit card is not paid off, this would be the scenario. For example, a credit card balance of $2,000 — over a period of a year could amount to more than $400, not including various administrative and annual fees.

If this account were to be paid off, as opposed to carrying a high balance over a long period of time, it would be the equivalent of earning a 20-percent rate of return on an investment.

Once high levels of debt have been eliminated it is necessary to readjust the initial budget. At this point there should be an increase in cash flow due to the fact that much of the underlying debt expense has been eliminated.

Although, building a substantial savings account and paying down high levels of debt will not happen over night, these steps are necessary to establish the framework for a solid financial structure.

Once the framework is constructed, money will be available for use in other finance activities, like investing, which will be covered at a later date.

Commissary sends children to college with scholarship

Commissary Public Affairs office

The commissary is saluting military families in November, and military shoppers can save money and help send a deserving son or daughter to college — just by shopping.

Sons or daughters of Army, Navy, Marines, Air Force and Coast Guard active and reserve service members can receive a scholarship commitment of $4,500 from the Cdr. William S. Stuhr Scholarship Fund.

This scholarship promotion offers commissary customers exceptionally low prices and high value coupons on name-brand products, and each participating manufacturer donates 25 cents per case to the Stuhr Scholarship Fund.

The Cdr. William S. Stuhr Scholarship Fund was established in 1965 and has since provided over $300,000 in merit scholarships to 165 students.

It currently has a commitment of $90,000 to assist 20 winners studying at 15 Universities in 12 states.

Applications must be submitted by the end of February.

Perspective students must be high school seniors, be in the top 10 percent of their class and show evidence of leadership and community involvement.

Applications can be obtained by enclosing a self-addressed envelope to the Executive Director, CDR Stuhr Scholarship Fund, 1200 Fifth Avenue, Suite 9-D, New York, New York, 1009.

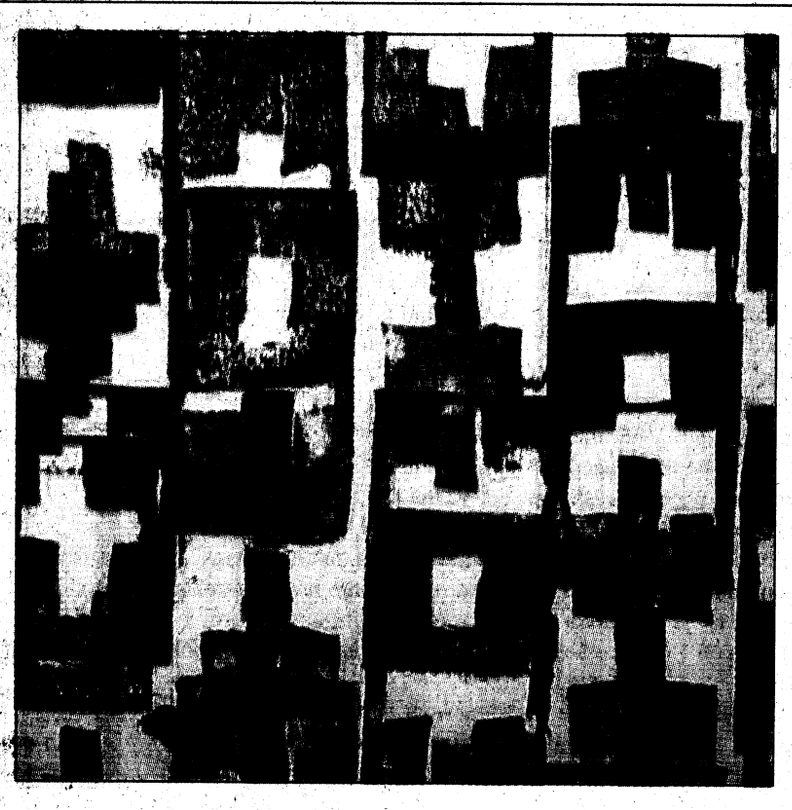
Jamestown established in 1607

Chris Janssen
Faith Middle School

On May 14 ,1607, the Virginia Royal Charter established the city of Jamestown in honor of King James the first. When Captain John Smith came here with 500 settlers, the Algonquians almost immediately attacked them.

During the first two years John Smith was their leader. But when winter came in the third year he left. After he left, of the 500 settlers only 50 survived. They were thinking of leaving, but when Lord De La Ware and his supply ships came and brought the settlers back on their feet they changed their minds. When Pocahontas married John Rolfe, there was a long time of peace between the settlers and the Indians on the island.

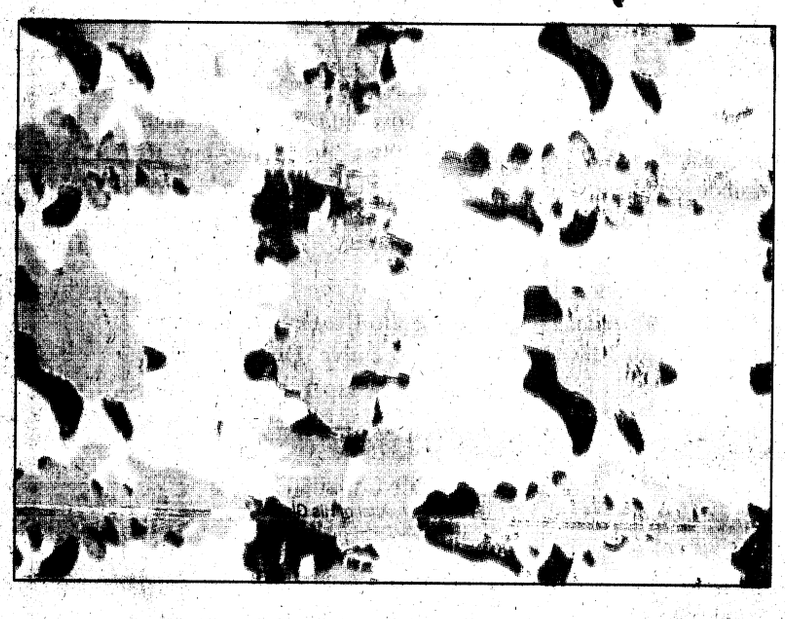
Pocahontas' real name Matoaka



Tanisha Johnson
Faith Middle School

Pocahontas' real name was Matoaka. "Pocahontas" was her childhood nickname.

Pocahontas was born in 1595. About May 1607 was when she first saw the white man. The one she liked most was John Smith. John Smith was leading an expedition in December. John Smith was hurt very bad by a gunpowder explosion. Later on, a man by the name of Captain Samuel Argall kidnapped Pocahontas. When Pocahontas met John Rolfe she fell in love with him and he fell in love with her. They went to London together and she became his wife, but before that she changed her name to Rebecca and she became a Christian.



If she hadn't done so, John Rolfe would have not married Pocahontas. Later on, as she lived with John Rolfe, Pocahontas got pneumonia and in March in the year of 1617 Pocahontas died on the ship that was to take her back home to visit her tribe. She died at the age of 22 years old. The last words she had to say were "All must die. 'Tis enough that the child liveth."

Editor's Note — Language Arts students were asked to research the Jamestown colony and Pocahontas, using various web sites. If families are interested in learning about the real Pocahontas, these links are informative:

Peacock!

Peacock! Peacock!
So beautiful and bright
Where do you get all those eyes?
Can you see through them
or are they just there?
Do you fly around all day or do you
Just walk?
Why are your feathers shaped like a fan?
Couldn't they be square or round?
Peacock! Peacock! So beautiful and bright

Trees

Tall, green, brown, trees
Holding on to Earth for dear life.
They give us food and air of which we eat and breath.
Children play under them and are filled with laughter and joy.
Beautiful trees

Eagle

Eagle, Eagle, why is your head so white?
Your feathers are brown like the bark of a tree.
You have wings to help you fly through the air.
Why is it that your beak is so sharp?
Why are your claws so sharp?
Why do people call you America's mascot?
Would it be that you're so beautiful and graceful?
You glide through the air with such pride.
Your focused eyes help you catch Sunday night's dinner.
Whose creative hands could have put this beautiful creature together?
Eagle, Eagle, one of God's greatest creations.

I Am ...

I am Mackie Cucolo.
I frolic and dance
Through the night,
Casting spells,
The moon my only light.

I run fast down a mat,
Near the end I do a flip.
Then I run back and go again,
Hoping that I never trip

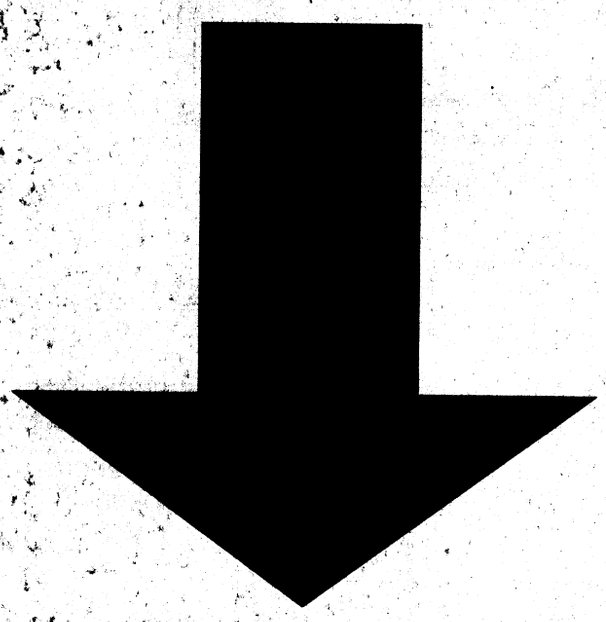
The ball is hit,
A line drive to me.
I catch it on first
Making the final out I see

I simply jump
And I'm in outer space.
Floating with the stars
As I fly past a comet.

I scramble up trees
Like a small monkey.
Climbing up higher and higher
As if trying to flee.

I solve my problems
By drinking hot cocoa.
The steam surround me,
Spelling out the answer.

I like jalepenos
And anything that's hot.
They tickle my tastebuds,
Anything cold does not.



An astronaut I'd like to be,
Or a professional gymnast.
Either would fit me well you know
For ...
I am Mackie Cucolo.

Budgeting helps couples discern between wants, needs

Couples seeking American dream often get caught in money trap nightmare

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Ministries Center

Gary and Amanda were pursuing the American dream of owning their own home. They found their dream house and although it was a little more than they could afford they decided to go ahead. Besides, Amanda could always go back to work.

They soon discovered buying a home also meant having to furnish it. It was so easy to buy now and pay later. Too easy. Before long, they found themselves in deep debt. Gary had to take on a second job to help pay off their mounting bills, and Amanda took to working overtime.

Then the unexpected happened; Amanda found herself pregnant. Their first child was born and Amanda wanted to stay at home and raise their newborn daughter but finances would not allow her to. Having a child and paying for her care was expensive. There was never enough money and soon Gary and Amanda found themselves arguing almost every day over money. The American dream was quickly becoming a nightmare for this couple. They were caught in a money trap and could not get out.

This story is far too familiar to couples I work with. In fact, money is the number one issue couples argue about. In his book, Romancing the Home, Ed Young wrote, "The Bible says more about money than it does about heaven or hell combined, and amazingly relevant principles regarding money management, stewardship and budgeting." When we begin to realize that whatever we own is not ours but in truth belongs to God, then I believe we can start the road to financial responsibility. God expects us to be good stewards of what He provides to us. We need to learn that there is a difference between a want and a need. While Gary and Amanda needed a place to live, they let their wants take precedence over their needs. The result, financial problems which in turn produced other problems.

John Wesley said, "Make all you can! Save all you can! Give all you can!" Couples can meet these three admonitions if they make a budget they can live with. Quoting Ed Young again, "Drawing up a budget can teach couples a great deal about how they view money and requires them to establish financial goals at the outset." Budgeting also helps couples discern between needs, wants and desires. Most couples get themselves into trouble when they put wants and desires ahead of needs. You may want a BMW but need a Tercel. Learn to know the difference.

God expects us to be good stewards of what He has given us. Do not fall into the trap of putting your wants ahead of your needs. Be faithful to use wisely what God has given you.

Give thanks every day

Chaplain (Capt.) Daren Waters Sr.
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

I have come to a conclusion over the years that one of the easiest things to do in life is complain. In the midst of our pursuit of life, liberty and happiness, a disappointment frequently adjoins us in the process. Now, we have the perfect opportunity to express feelings of pain, dissatisfaction or resentment. Often times our complaints are valid, but if we are not careful, we can succumb to a state of continual whining about how unfair life is.

I am grateful today for those who decided many years ago to start a yearly tradition of Thanksgiving the fourth Thursday of November.

Thanksgiving, which is simply an act of giving thanks or an expression of gratitude, offers to America at least once a year the opportunity to reflect and be mindful of what God has provided for us. Throughout the word of God are scriptures pertaining to patriarchs and matriarchs who understood the necessity of giving thanks to God for God's goodness and mercy.

I Thessalonians 5:18 tells us to "Give thanks in all circumstances; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus for you."

It is this constant attitude of thanks that sets for us all a model to live by. How will you spend this Thanksgiving holiday? Will this be a time of food, fellowship and fun when no one stops to render thanks?

Although Thanksgiving may only come around once a year, every day should be a day of thanks and honor to God. A number of us will travel near and far to be with the ones we love. As we bear down on the turkey, ham, peach cobbler, etc., let us pause to give thanks to God and thanks to each other for meeting our needs. When our hearts are filled with thanks and gratitude, there is very little space for complaining.

Johnson, Goloski win coveted athlete of year

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit PAO

Two U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Soldiers have been named as the 1999 U.S. Army Athletes of the Year.

Kenneth A. Johnson, a USAMU international rifle shooter, and Julie A. Goloski, a member of the USAMU Action Shooting Team, have won the titles of Army Athletes of the Year for 1999, the Army Sports Office announced Nov. 9.

Johnson, the 1999 Army Male Athlete of the Year, won two Gold Medals and two U.S. Olympic quota slots in the Air Rifle and Three-Position Rifle Matches at the Pan-American Games, conducted in Winnipeg, Canada, this summer. He also won Gold Medals in Air Rifle in the Masters de France and Interservice Championships, as well as winning the Gold Medal in 300-Meter Three-Position and the Silver Medal in 300-Meter Prone at the National Championships this year.

Goloski

Raised in Marshfield, Mass., Johnson graduated from Marshfield High School in 1987. He continued his education at Clarkson University, N.Y., where he was a three-time All-American, and graduated in 1991 with a bachelor's degree in both engineering and psychology.

Johnson

Johnson, who started shooting competitively in 1983, joined the Army in August 1992. After he graduated from Basic Training at Fort Jackson, S.C., and Generator Repair School at Fort Belvoir, Va., he was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in January 1993.

The 30-year-old, who will celebrate his 31st birthday Wednesday has numerous marksmanship accomplishments including being a 1998 World Championship Team member, alternate member of the 1996 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team, a three-time 1995 Pan-American Games Gold Medalist, two-time National Air Rifle Champion, a National Three-Position and 300-Meter Prone Champion and an Air and Free Rifle National Record Holder.

"For many years, Ken has been one of the best international rifle shooters in the country, and this year was no exception," said Bill Krilling, USAMU international rifle coach . "He is one of the most dedicated international rifle shooters when it comes to training and preparing for matches. Although he competes against 10 former Olympians and three world-record holders on a daily basis, his skill and composure lead him to victory

Aim for win

Story and photos by Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Any Soldier knows that good marksmanship is important in his profession. In fact, one day it may save his life. But imagine trying to put 10 shots through the same hole at 300 yards while 10 other rifles are being fired along the firing line.

That was the objective Sunday at English Range for 29 members of the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club who shot in the Tactical Rifle Match.

Competitors had 20 minutes to fire 10 rounds at an 8-inch target at 300 yards, and then 10 rounds at a 5.5-inch target at 200 yards. The next challenge was to shoot five rounds at a 3-inch target at 100 yards.

The majority of the shooters shot in the bolt action precision class, which consisted of any heavy barrel rifle.

"These shoots are a lot of fun and are a challenge for everyone out here from the beginner to the advanced shooter."

Doughboy game set for Dec.4

Competition gives kids opportunity to play under lights

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Excited 9- to 10-year-old division "head bangers" will don helmets, shoulder pads and competitive spirit for the inaugural Youth Services Football Doughboy Bowl at 9 a.m. Dec. 4, at Doughboy Stadium.

The Doughboy Bowl festivities include a single elimination play-off schedule that kicks off in the morning prior to the championship night game. The top two play-off teams will advance to the championship game hoping to earn the title of 1999 Doughboy football champions.

Coaches of the 9- to 10-year-old teams, according to Dori Wagner, YS child and youth program director, came up with the idea to hold play-offs and a championship Doughboy Bowl early in the season. "They wanted to do something different and special for the players at the end of the season," she said.

Wagner said in order to set up a play-off schedule a draw will be held in order to determine game times and contenders.

"No matter what the draw determines, participating in the bowl will be a good time not only for players but their families as well," he said.

"The Doughboy Bowl is a new idea that benefits the kids," Wagner said. "It will provide for good healthy competition and a great ending to their football season."

For more game information, call Youth Services at 545-3070.

QB carries 49ers past Steeler defense for win

Penalty-plagued first half stops Steelers, 49ers score 30

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Dominated is how the Steelers felt as the 49ers secured a win during the second 7- to 8-year-old flag football game 30-0.

The game appeared to be evenly matched in the first quarter with both teams moving the ball. Penalties and miscues by the Steelers and the 49ers resulted in a scoreless first quarter. After the slow start, the 49ers started up their engines and went into high gear.

The increase in the 49ers offensive tempo took the Steelers by surprise during the second quarter.

Clayton Stevens, 49er running back, and Harry Hampton, quarterback, ran for 8 yards apiece and a first down. Darren McCray wasted no time finding the endzone with a 25-yard touchdown run on the next play.

Michele E. Hanson
49ers quarterback Harry Hampton prepares to throw down field during a flag football game against the Steelers Saturday.

The Steelers responded offensively when newly assigned quarterback Deone Patterson connected with Jake Durham for a 20-yard reception. Patterson moved the ball deep into 49er territory running to their 3-yard line, but the speed and strength of the 49er defense stopped them short.

With two minutes left in the half, the 49ers led another offensive attack. Hampton lofted the ball 10-yards to receiver Montrell Crawford who was tackled near the goal. On third down and goal Hampton took charge and broke into the endzone for the second touchdown of the game. The 49ers earned two points on the conversion shutting the Steelers down in the first half 14-0.

The 49ers opening second half drive was stopped by the Steelers defense allowing their offense a chance to get on the board. Steeler Connor McClure gained 2 yards on a sweep and Patterson gained 18 yards on a quarterback keeper but the Steeler offense remained stumped.

The 49ers were relentless scoring again in the third quarter when McCray ran 35 yards for his second touch down of the game.

At the end of the third quarter the 49ers defense sacked the Steelers quarterback for a safety making the score 22-0.

On the fourth quarter kick-off return Hampton ran the ball 55 yards for his second touchdown and the fourth 49er touchdown of the game.

Despite the Steelers valiant effort at the final whistle, the 49ers had added another safety and earned a shutout 30-0.

matches in which he competes."

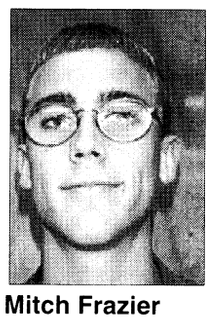
Johnson volunteers his time in training junior international rifle shooters as well as training high school and state junior Olympic shooters. He and his wife, Nancy, who is also a world-class international rifle shooter and a former Olympian, live in Phenix City, Ala.

Goloski, the 1999 Army Female Athlete of the Year, is this year's Women's World Speed Shooting Champion, as well as the current Open and Limited U.S. Practical Shooting Association Women's National Champion.

Although she is only 22 years old, Goloski became the first woman ever to win seven out of eight of the USPSA Area Championships in the United States, breaking the previous record she set last year when she became the first woman to win the majority of the area championships.

She was also this year's Military Division Gold Medalist and Female Silver Medalist at the Bianchi Cup, as well as winning Gold Medals at the Single Stack Classic, Kentucky State Championships, and the Golden Gate and Aware Invitationals.

Goloski, who started shooting in 1991, joined the Army right after graduating from Mynderse Academy of Seneca Falls, N.Y., in 1995. After she completed Basic Training and Military Police School, she joined the USAMU's Action Shooting Team.



"Through her determination, hard work and dedication, Julie has become the best female action shooter in the nation, as demonstrated by her many achievements this year," said USAMU Action Pistol Team Coach Ray Arredondo. "She won nearly every match in which she competed, something no other American female action shooter has ever done. She also keeps informed of the latest trends and developments to ensure that she is on the cutting edge of technology in her sport."

When she's not competing, Goloski trains U.S. Army Rangers in pistol shooting to prepare them for the annual Best Ranger Competition, as well as doing numerous public appearances and media interviews to assist the Army's recruiting mission.

She is single and lives in Columbus.

Local shooters compete in pistol match

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

A single shot rang out from a pistol followed by two others in rapid succession. Less than a second later, another three shots were fired followed by a symphony of gun shots. As the smell of burnt gunpowder filled the air, deep bellowing large-caliber pistols roared while small semi-automatic pistols spat their staccato shots at their targets. The song of fire and lead slowed down to an occasional series of single, double and triple shots. "All clear!"

The first round of the International Defensive Pistol Association shoot, held Saturday at the Rifle and Pistol Club at English Range, was complete, and the shooters and scorer moved down range to the variety of targets to check out the accuracy of the shooting.

Three stages were constructed at ranges of 10 to 40 yards.

One stage was started while sitting in a chair with a pistol fully loaded on a table directly in front of the shooter. At the sound of the electronic timer, the signal to start, the shooter would rise from the chair, pick up his pistol and shoot five cardboard cutouts with a mozambique, two shots to the center part of the body and one to the head.

The first 10-round magazine was shot freestyle and the second magazine was shot with the shooters strong hand, the hand he was most comfortable with.

The second stage may have been most difficult. At the timer's tone, the shooter laid down and shot two rounds at each cutout placed at 40 yards. Then the shooter had to knock down five metal knockdown targets at 40 yards, which frustrated some of the competitors.

The third and final stage the shooter had to shoot one knockdown target and three cardboard cutouts with a mozambique. He then had to drop his magazine and run to another barrel, insert another magazine then shoot another knockdown target that would activate a swinging target that the shooter would have to hit twice to end his time.

The event was timed and penalties were given for shots that fell outside the eight-inch kill zone.

While the shooter worked as fast as possible, he wanted to be as accurate and safe as possible.

The Rifle and Pistol Club was established here in 1951, and it has been at its present location since April of 1992, said Jim Graham, assistant manager of the Rifle and Pistol Club.

"It was started to promote safe and appropriate recreational use of privately owned firearms," Graham said.

The top shooters in the stock service class, a pistol that has had no modifications and in 9mm, were Charlie Exum, Johnathan Moore and Don Schleicher.

The enhanced service, single action pistols chambered for the .40 caliber winner was Jim Wisyanski.

The winner of the custom pistol class, a stock pistol in 10mm or .45 caliber, was Jim Chrissman.

English range is open for Rifle and Pistol Club members Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from noon to dark.

Saturdays it is open from 8 a.m. till 5 p.m., and on Sundays it is open from noon till 5 p.m. The range is closed on Mondays, Wednesdays and holidays.

Shooters: Gunnners log win

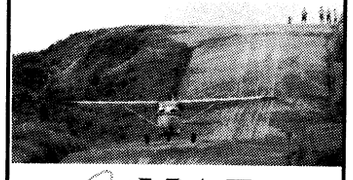
"These shoots are a lot of fun," said Dan Williams, a shooter in the competitor and the semi-auto precision classes.

"The shoots can be very challenging, especially when the shoot throws a challenge in the way such as the club providing all the ammo," he said.

"By not having the ammunition that has been fine tuned to your rifle, every little flaw that the shooter makes is magnified greatly with the unfamiliar ammo," he said. "That way the best shooters are the ones who win."

The matches sometimes are taken to ranges in Alabama where targets are taken as far out as 1,000 yards.



That target is a 10-inch one, he added.

Williams won the semi-auto precision class. Shane Waldon was the winner of the professional class, which was a rifle chambered for .308 or .223 calibers using commercial ammunition.

Lane Rickman shot a near perfect score to win the competitor class, and John R. Green won the bolt-action sporter class. Lindsay Bunch won the bolt-action precision class.

The rifle shoot is held every month. The next one should be in mid-December.

WHAT MAKES SPECIAL FORCES SO SPECIAL?

Picture yourself as a member of a Special Forces "A Team," a dynamic 12-man unit with real-world missions across the globe.

Yours is a unique brotherhood. You belong to a tight-knit group of men of the highest mental and physical caliber. And you receive specialized training, tough challenges and the prestige that comes with wearing the green beret.

If you are currently serving in the Army or have prior service in special operations, you could be the man we need for the Army's Special Forces.

A Special Forces recruiting team will visit your installation in the next few weeks. Go ahead. Find out what makes Special Forces so special.

One More Bridge to Cross

Lowering the Cost of War

The Last Hundred Yards author takes exciting look into past battles through the eyes of enemy infantrymen. Trends in their highly deceptive technique reveal safer individual/small-unit skills for U.S. soldiers. There's a more effective & fun way to train. SOMETIMES EVEN TOUGH GUYS NEED SOMETHING TENDER.

We know you're tough enough to eat nails. Though we assume you'd rather not. That's why at Logan's we make our USDA choice, grain fed steaks as tender and juicy as possible. And we serve them with your choice of a side item, a free salad and our homemade yeast rolls. It's an all out seige on your taste buds.

USARSA opponents trespass

65 protesters detained, face prosecution

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

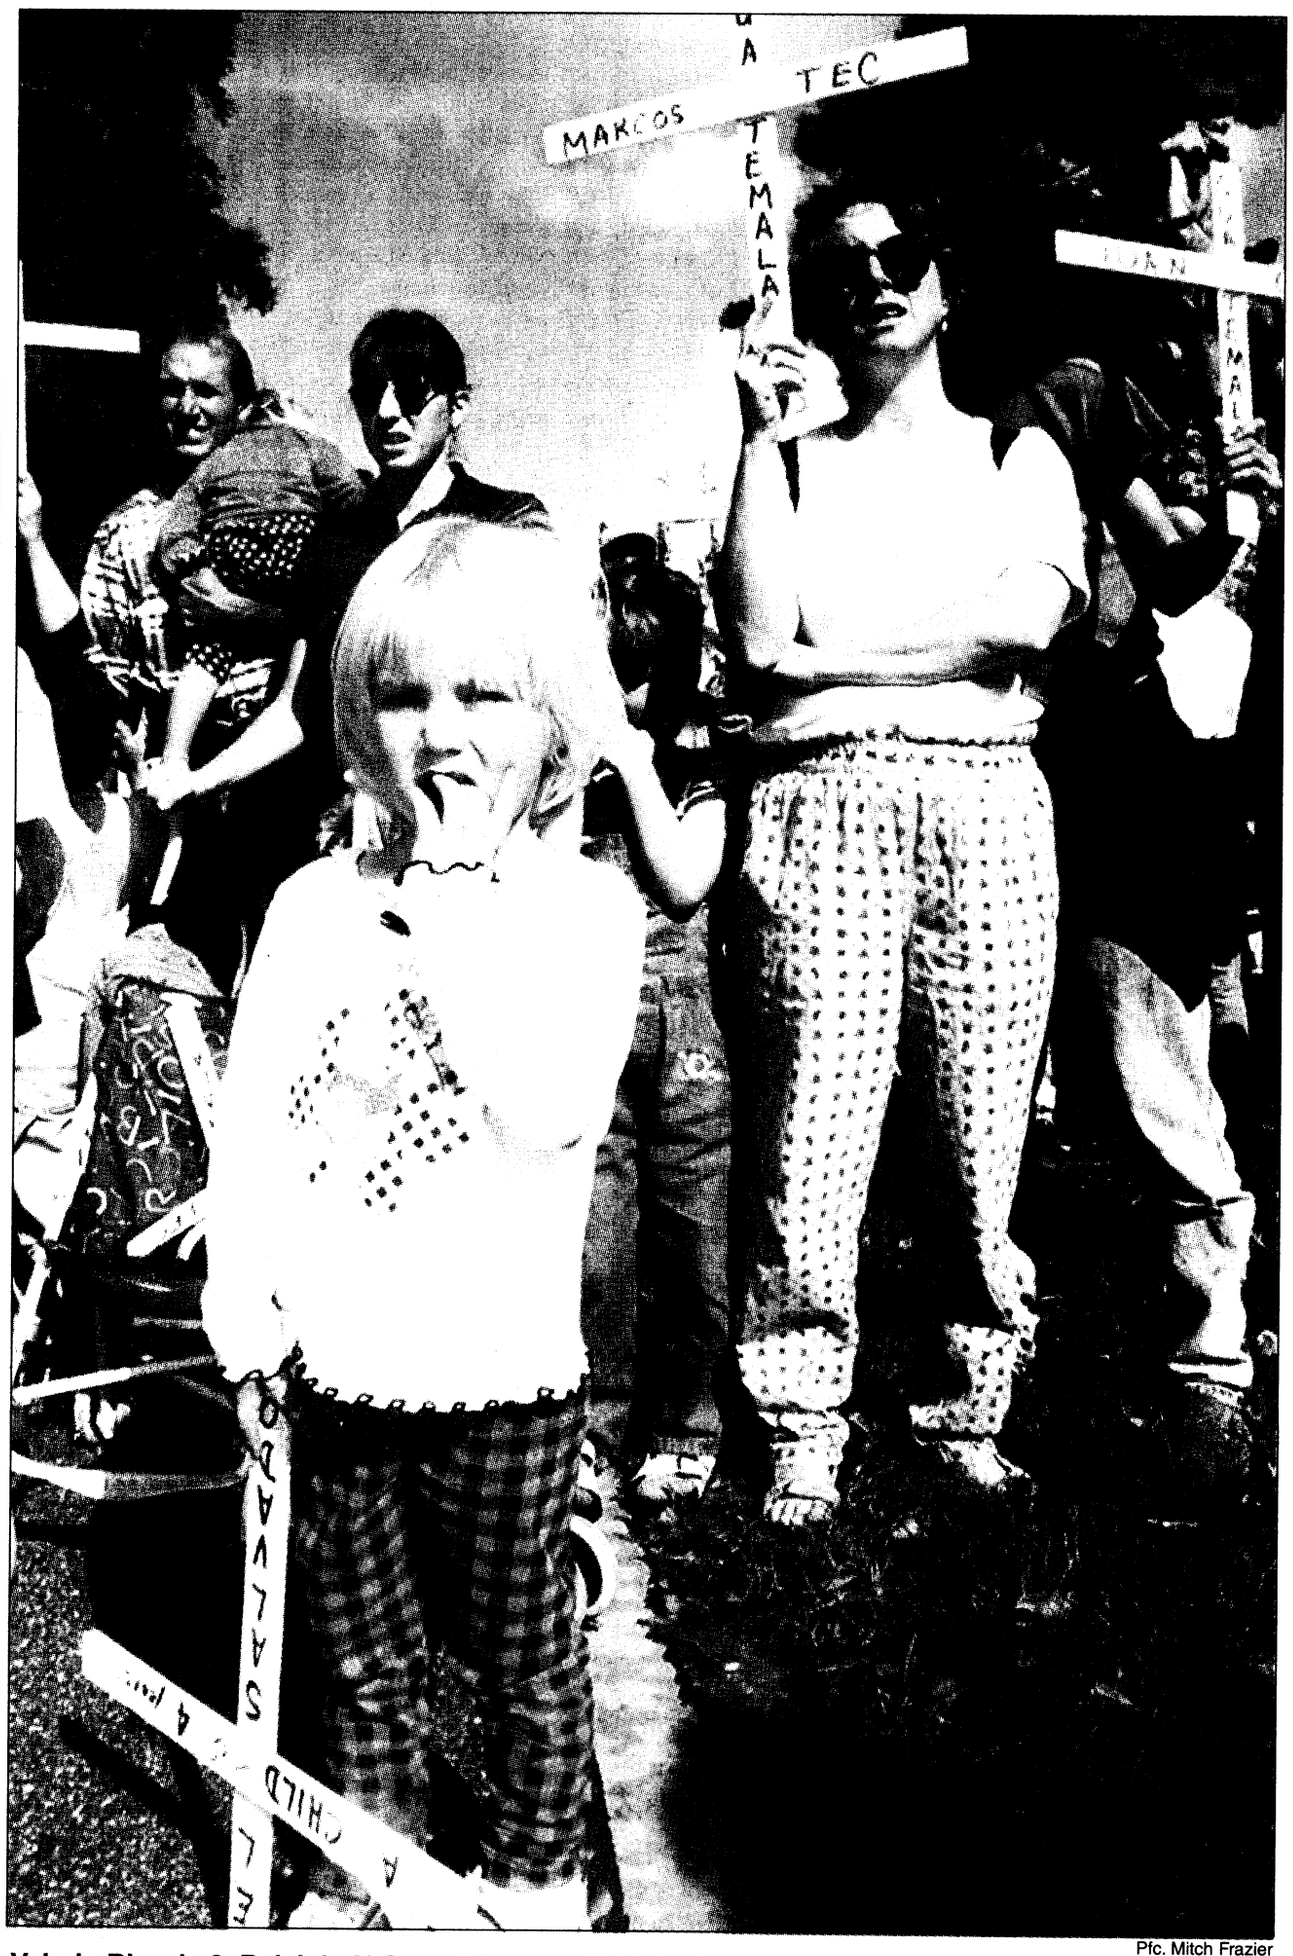
After three days of singing, chanting and showing disdain for the U.S. Army School of the America's, 3,100 protesters crossed onto federal property Sunday.

Led by 54 coffin-carrying protesters dressed in funeral cloaks and white "death masks," the protesters crossed onto post shortly after noon defying military orders to stay off the federal installation.

The march came to a standstill after the group walked nearly a half mile onto post and were met by Department of Defense police officers who were waiting to put the protesters on buses and transport them to a nearby Columbus park for release.

However, as the coffin-carriers came within yards of police lines, they pulled bottles of red paint from their cloaks, poured it on both themselves and the coffins they were carrying and laid down on the pavement as if they were dead.

Although the act was planned among only those who were in the front, it brought the procession to a standstill and took some work on the part of the protest organizers and military police to get them moving again.



A handful of protesters were still resisting getting onto the buses at the end of the day and had to be physically moved to the buses.

By 7 p.m. Sunday all protesters had either walked off the installation or were transported off by buses.

Sixty-five people, mostly those who carried the coffins at the front of the protest procession, were taken to Lawson Army Airfield and processed for criminal trespass — they were fingerprinted, photographed and issued a letter barring them from post for three years, according to Col. Thomas Cain, Fort Benning's top law enforcement official.

Of those 65 protesters detained, Cain said 23 had been previously banned from the installation and were issued a summons to appear before a federal magistrate to face charges of criminal trespass, resisting arrest and failure to comply with the bar from entering. He also noted one of those detained will face a charge of damage to government property after pouring paint on her hands and placing them on the road.

CFC wraps up successful campaign

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

The Combined Federal Campaign is wrapping up with donations well exceeding the $500,000 goal.

Donations totalled $560,000, which is more than $20,000 over last year's donations.

"Soldiers' caring spirit and team effort is what made the campaign such a huge success," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. He added, the goal couldn't have been met if the Soldiers didn't take the time to pledge.

"This is a good cause and there are so many charities you can give to if you flip through that catalog," he said. "Obviously a lot of people looked through that catalog and gave to their favorite charities."

Those charities included some local organizations, said Walls.

"This year we stressed the 9000 code, which keeps the money in the local community to include Fort Benning," he said. "It goes to things like Girls Inc., Big Brothers and Big Sisters, the Battered Wives' Shelter, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts or Red Cross — they provide a great wealth of services for our community. Some of that money will stay at Benning; some will go downtown. About $80,000 was collected for the local agencies.

"I was pretty pleased that enough people are concerned about the community they live in to give to 9000," Walls added. "It speaks a lot about the Soldiers here on the installation. We really have some good Soldiers here who believe in doing the right thing and helping charities out."

Walls went on to thank community members for all of their hard work and dedication in meeting this year's goal.

"I want to thank everyone who had a part in it — all of the units, the directorates, everybody," said Walls. "We had an absolutely, unqualified successful campaign this year — I mean just great. We literally hit the $500,000 mark, which was our goal, within six weeks. I'd just like to thank everyone for doing such a great job."

Walls added, he especially appreciated the emphasis on the campaign from Fort Benning's post Command

Army to release FAIR list soon, posts on web

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A list of commercial functions and activities performed by more than 221,000 Army civilians will be released to the public soon via the Internet.

The Federal Activities Inventory Reform Act of 1998 requires each federal agency to make available to the public annually a list of functions judged to be "not inherently governmental." Under the FAIR Act, officials said, these functions are considered to be commercial rather than governmental in nature, so some of them may be subject to commercial outsourcing.

DoD's first FAIR list is scheduled to go public later this year after the Office of Management and Budget notice of availability appears in the Federal Register. The list will then be available at public libraries in the Washington, D.C., area and will be posted on a FAIRNET web site.

The FAIRNET web site will contain a separate page for the Army inventory, said Dr. John Anderson, the Army official at the Pentagon responsible for the Army FAIR list.

A large portion of the Army's civilian jobs — about 84 percent — had to be included on the FAIR list, Anderson said, in light of the legal definition for "inherently governmental." He said this term refers to positions which involve, among other things, interpreting and executing the laws "so as to bind the United States to take or not take some action."

In addition, Anderson said just because a job is "not inherently governmental" does not mean that it would be in the "best interest" of the Army to contract it out. In fact, he said about 80,000 of the jobs on the list are exempt from cost comparison requirements or outsourcing because many of the functions are considered by the Army to be "core capabilities."

"The decision as to which commercial functions represent 'core capabilities,' and thus should be retained in-house, remains with the agency head," according to an OMB statement in the June 24 Federal Register.

The FAIR inventory will summarize civilian work by activity/function code, geographic location and the OMB reason

Thanksgiving Day, a national holiday in the U.S., is celebrated today in many different ways. Some people think of Thanksgiving as a day for great chow and traditional football games while others take great care in following traditions — traditions that began during early colonial times in New England.

Thanksgiving Day commemorates the harvest reaped by the Plymouth Colony in 1621. After the Plymouth colonists completed the first harvest, Gov. William Bradford proclaimed a day of thanksgiving and prayer, shared by all the colonists and neighboring Native Americans. This is a story told to us since childhood but how it became a national holiday is not so known.

In 1623, during a drought, a day of fasting and prayer was changed to a day of thanksgiving because it began to rain during the prayers. Gradually, the custom of annually celebrating thanksgiving after the harvest prevailed in New England.

Thanksgiving remained a custom until the American Revolution when the Continental Congress suggested that it become a yearly day of national thanksgiving. But more than 160 years passed before President George Washington proclaimed Nov. 26, 1789 as the first national Thanksgiving Day.

New York State adopted Thanksgiving Day as an annual custom in 1817 and by the middle of the 19th century many other states had done the same. President Abraham Lincoln revived the custom Oct. 3, 1863, by appointing a national Thanksgiving Day and set aside the last Thursday of November to commemorate the feast given by the Pilgrims, colonists and members of the Wampanoag people in 1621. Lincoln acted in part because of a plea from 74-year-old Sarah Josepha Hale who had campaigned since 1846 for Thanksgiving observances. By 1852 she had persuaded people to celebrate Thanksgiving on the same day in 30 of the 32 states, in consulates abroad and aboard U.S. ships on foreign waters.

And believe it or not, Thanksgiving Day observances were held Nov. 23, 1939, which was the fourth Thursday in November instead of the last one, when Federated Department Stores' chief, Fred Lazarus Jr., persuaded President Franklin D. Roosevelt that a longer Christmas shopping season would help the economy.

Finally, after more than 200 years since the first thanksgiving feast, Congress decreed that Thanksgiving should fall on the fourth Thursday in November and since that time it has. So if you sit down to a customary turkey dinner tomorrow, remember to give thanks to God for harvest and health as the Pilgrims did and thank all the people who helped make this day a national holiday. A holiday that gives most of us the weekend off to celebrate a tradition that is a unique part of American history and a chance to relax with friends and family.

Thanksgiving time to remember bounty

While we all remember the Pilgrims sharing a meal with the Native Americans of the 1600s, Thanksgiving did not officially become a national celebration until Abraham Lincoln's administration. It continues to this day and is a great time to consciously take time and give thanks to God for all that has meaning in our lives.

Holidays in the Army often mean Soldiers training or deploying away from home and family. Our Army has Soldiers deployed in more than 100 countries during this holiday season. It started at Valley Forge in the late 1700s and has not stopped since. Today our Soldiers are in harm's way protecting American interests and providing a stabilizing force for human rights and peace throughout our world. Today's Soldiers represent the most capable fighting force the world has ever seen and at the same time the most compassionate, respecting the dignity of human life.

Since 1918, Fort Benning has been the home of the Infantry and Army families. The history of Fort Benning has seen legendary leaders training Soldiers for both combat and peace. Family members have, and continue to play a significant role in the support of our Army and their Soldiers.

We have much to be thankful for. We live in a great nation, the role model for freedom and democracy in the world. We should also give thanks for our parents, our families and our friends. We share in the bounty of a great country and the industry of her people. For that we should also give thanks.

And finally, for those who made the ultimate sacrifice to make America great, we give thanks.

Happy Thanksgiving.

Commanding General appreciates community CFC support

I want to take this opportunity to tell everyone how very pleased we are with our successful Combined Federal Campaign this year. This is the first year we made our goal — $500,000 this year — in the 6-week campaign period and we are now at $560,000 and still climbing.

From a more important standpoint, it is pleasing and impressive that we have so many people in our military community — Soldiers, families, civilians and retirees, who care enough to give to such worthy causes. We can take satisfaction from the fact that we are helping others less fortunate than ourselves.

Additionally, through your generosity more than $80,000 was donated directly to the Fort Benning and the local communities account. This money will go directly to helping Soldiers and their families, both here on the installation and downtown where almost half of our families live.

It says a lot about someone who knows that their true worth is not measured by how much they can possess, but rather by how much of themselves they give. Again, I am extremely proud to be part of a community such as ours. Thank you for your part in making this year's campaign such a tremendous success.

Family member expresses pride in sacrifices military children contribute

What is giving? Is it giving away a turkey to the less fortunate on Thanksgiving? Or is it giving away your clothes to the homeless instead of discarding them? It is both. Although it can be translated many other ways, like things that people like me do involuntarily every day. Yet it means so much for so many. What I am talking about is military children. Every few years or so we are pulled away from our friends and home and sent off. It hurts, but it's for the good of our country.

Every day there is someone hurt because they either found out that they're moving, or their friend is! People always say it's a bad thing, but what about the hidden honor that is in it? We make a sacrifice every day, sacrifice things that civilians will never know the feeling of. We give up going to the same school district, or going to school with the same people. We don't have a place to call "home." We don't live in the same surrounding area. Also, being in different houses and not having much of a choice of where you're off to next!

Along with all those heartbreaking things, there is also dignity. If it were not for children like us that learn to adapt, there may be no Army, or the land of the free. There are so many people in this country that have lived in the same place their whole life and don't intend on leaving. Not us, we know that every day when we wake up that we are sacrificing a "normal" childhood for one with more adventure. We are giving up for "freedom!"

I was born in the Army. I am being raised in the Army, and will leave the house while my parents are still in the Army. I know of no other lifestyle. Although I do know that even if I am not fighting in wars or going off to foreign countries, I am still doing my part in keeping this country safe and free. That is how I sacrifice or give to other people

Family contributions acknowledged

During the week of Nov. 21-28, our nation acknowledges the special demands that military life imposes on the families of those who serve in uniform. This recognition is well deserved and comes at a high price. Family members endure numerous moves, the long working hours of loved ones, and frequent separations — partings that often include the risk of death or capture at the hands of an enemy.

Moreover, they often do this far from their extended families.

Our spouses and children bear these burdens out of a sense of patriotism as strong as those of us in the military. In doing so, they provide a source of strength and contribute to making America's military the best in the world.

We simply could not achieve this high level of excellence without safe, secure happy and productive military families.

This week provides an opportunity to acknowledge the personal sacrifices that take place every day within out local military communities and to thank our families for supporting us as well as their dedicated service to our nation.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff and I join every American in paying tribute to America's military families for all that they have done and continue to do for our country. Their support of our nation's service members makes a difference for America and the world.

May God bless you and your family, and may God bless America.

Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff

ACS appreciates military families

The Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program wants to remind everyone that Military Family Week is celebrated during the Thanksgiving holiday period. We would like to take the time to express our appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices that are made by service members and their families in our community.

We often overlook opportunities to express our appreciation to those who make a special contribution. To amend that oversight, we take this opportunity to salute all military families.

Military families, who live in our community — both on post and off —are separated from their own hometowns and friends. They are also frequently separated from each other because of military duties.

We, as civilians, should value and commend every Soldier's contribution and celebrate during this week.

SOA Watch activists' agenda needs a closer look

Robert Meacham
Freelance writer

Protesters converged on Fort Benning last weekend to demonstrate their opposition to the U.S. Army School of the Americas. The demonstrators want to close USARSA because they claim it is responsible for human rights violations committed by some of its graduates in Latin America.

The protesters talked about many examples of criminal activity from Mexico to Argentina, but the small Central American country of El Salvador was the crux of their focus. This month marks the anniversary of the slaying of six Jesuit priests Nov. 16, 1989.

The demonstrators cited additional cases and claimed that the school's training of the armed forces of El Salvador was responsible for the majority of civilian deaths during that country's 1979 to 1992 guerrilla war.

However, an examination of certain facts regarding El Salvador could cause one to be wary of the information provided by the organizers of the demonstration.

Many Salvadoran journalists, editors, church leaders and common citizens said flatly that the communist guerrilla insurgency was responsible for the vast majority of civilian deaths in El Salvador.

The armed forces, on the other hand, saved El Salvador from a Marxist government such as seen in Cuba where one strongman has systematically repressed political dissent during 40 years of uninterrupted dictatorship.

Today, a democratically elected civilian administrator governs El Salvador, with former rebels occupying posts in the executive and legislative branches.

The organizations behind the protest at Fort Benning seem to be very reluctant to criticize any human rights abuse committed by leftists groups whether it is the Sandinistas in Nicaragua, the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front in El Salvador, the Revolutionary Armed Forces (FARC) of Columbia, the National Liberation Army of Bolivia (ELN) or Castro's government in Cuba.

Perhaps a few examples of terrorism in El Salvador (certain events ignored by the SOA-Watch demonstrators) will lend some perspective to the overall picture of the tragedies faced by the Salvadoran people.

On May 23, 1989, the communist guerrillas of El Salvador machine-gunned a microbus because it traveled during a guerrilla-ordered transportation strike. Nine passengers were killed and six others were seriously wounded. All the victims were of the peasant class or of the lower middle-class.

On October 19, 1989, Ana Isabel Casanova, the daughter of Col. Oscar Casanova was shot to death as she left her home. The leftists murdered the popular young woman because her father was a member of the army. This crime was neither the first nor the last committed against family members of the military.

Mere privates and even the president of the republic faced crimes committed against members of their families by the communist insurgents and their foreign-born operatives.

Universities should be open to diverse ideas but the extreme left dominated the National University of El Salvador for decades. Finally a group of intellectuals banded together to rescue the school from being little more than a safe haven for communist cell groups.

The anti-Communist leader was Francisco Peccorini, 72, who was an ex-Jesuit but still very much a Catholic.

Peccorini spoke out loudly against communist misuses of the church and a similar misuse of the National University. The communists assassinated him on his way to give an interview at Channel Two.

Peccorini's colleague, Miguel Castellanos, was an ex-commandante of the FMLN. He defected from the communists after becoming disillusioned with the lies and brutality. He provided information linking the "Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador's" medical mission with military activity of the communists.

Castellanos was machine-gunned in downtown San Salvador. Two other young activists, Bobby Chacon and Gabriel Payes, who served on Peccorini's committee, were also assassinated by the FMLN.

On a quiet evening in June 1985, four off-duty U.S. Marines were seated in the sidewalk cafe section of the Mediterranee Restaurant. The Marines were not part of the advisor group to El Salvador, but were simply assigned to guard the embassy.

Communist commandos machine-gunned the Marines and everyone around them killing the four servicemen and nine others.

The Marine murders in the Zona Rosa Massacre were celebrated on the guerrillas' "We Shall Overcome" radio station.

The clandestine radio service also bragged about other horrid murders committed by FMLN operatives. In contrast, the government of El Salvador never bragged in official communiques about any of the excesses of its harried soldiers.

It is interesting that the protesters who base their condemnations of USARSA on the United Nations Truth Commission Report on the War never mention that the same report cites and condemns the criminal abuses ordered and abetted by the principal leaders of the communist insurgency, including the cold-blooded murders of rural mayors and two captured U.S. Army aviators.

Salvadoran soldiers generally fought well, kept their tempers and received wide support from the peasant class as their human rights record improved steadily during the 1980s. That improvement was largely, if not entirely, due to U.S. training and assistance. It is a great injustice that the sacrifices of the Salvadoran military are libeled and slandered.

Perhaps the protesters really have another agenda in attacking the USARSA. Perhaps their real concern is not with the peasants of Latin America at all, but with continuing the revolution.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller said it is becoming increasingly impossible for the handicapped to shop at the Commissary because there are only four shopping carts for the handicapped on the inventory and only two or three are in working order at any given time. Caller suggests something be done to correct the situation.

Commissary's response: The Commissary officer informed the caller that all four shopping carts were now back in service and told him the DeCA is working to acquire two more carts. The caller was also informed that the handicapped can start shopping at 8:30 a.m. before the Commissary opens.

Call: Caller suggested the Housing Office make a separate housing list according to housing areas requested. He said other installations have used this procedure and more residents are satisfied when they get quarters in the area they want.

Directorate of Public Works' response: The Family Housing chief said Soldiers are given a housing appointment by the AG as part of their inprocessing at Fort Benning.

At this appointment, Soldiers who are interested in living on post can apply for government quarters. If Soldiers are familiar with post and want to request a specific housing area, their application will be annotated. Later, when they become familiar with Benning and they want to request a specific area, their application can be annotated after notifying the Housing Office.

Once they reach the top of their respective housing waiting list, quarters in the area they selected will be offered to them if quarters are available. If quarters are not available there, then they must accept or reject the quarters offered. Every day that a unit remains vacant costs the installation in rent. In summary to maintain the waiting lists that would be required for all of our housing areas, it would not be feasible.

Call: Caller said the trees at the ranges and York PT field have been permitted to grow to such length that visibility of traffic signs and direction signs is limited.

Directorate of Public Works' response: DPW personnel trimmed trees and brush partially obscuring road signs on Dixie Road as specified by the caller in a conversation. The caller was assured that any future problems of this nature could be handled very easily with a call to the Work Order Desk (545-2135) to put in a Service Order detailing the exact nature and location of the problem.

A protester wearing a white "death mask" and funeral cloak is one of 54 high-risk protesters who illegally led a group of more than 3,000 USARSA opponents onto post Sunday. Organizers predicted they would have 100 high-risk protesters on hand.

More than 3,000 children, adults, priests and elderly people made their way onto post shortly after noon Sunday as part of the 10th annual USARSA protest.

Protest: Opponents converge on post

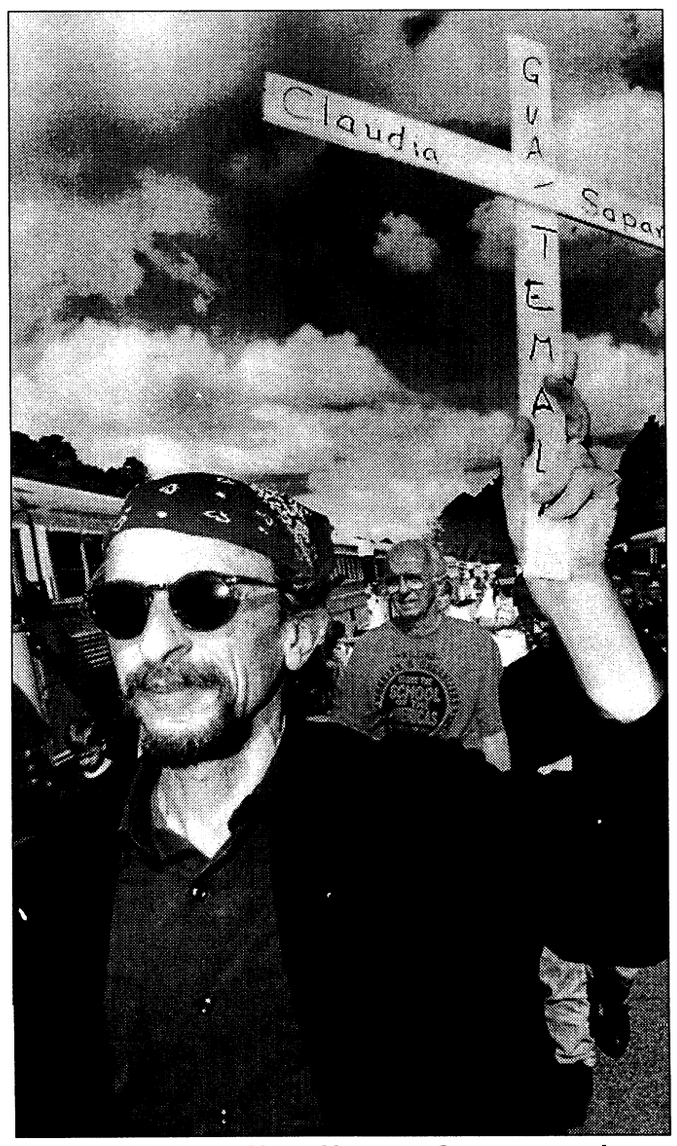
In the past, those charges have sent protesters to federal prison, facing sentences of up to six months and fines, said Rich McDowell, post public affairs officer.

While only 3,100 of the protesters crossed onto post, more than 7,500 USARSA opponents lined Fort Benning Drive to show their support for the closure of the school during the three-day protest, which began Friday. Organizers had predicted there would be as many as 12,000 protesters at the demostration.

The crowd of closure supporters included a diverse cross-section of America's population, including 8-month-old children, elderly war veterans in wheel chairs and numerous religious officials.

The protest marks 10 years of opposition for the school that began after USARSA opponents claimed USARSA-trained Soldiers murdered six Jesuit priests and two women in El Salvador.



"The U.S. Army School of the Americas has never taught torture, rape or murder," said Nicolas Britto, the offical spokesperson for the school.

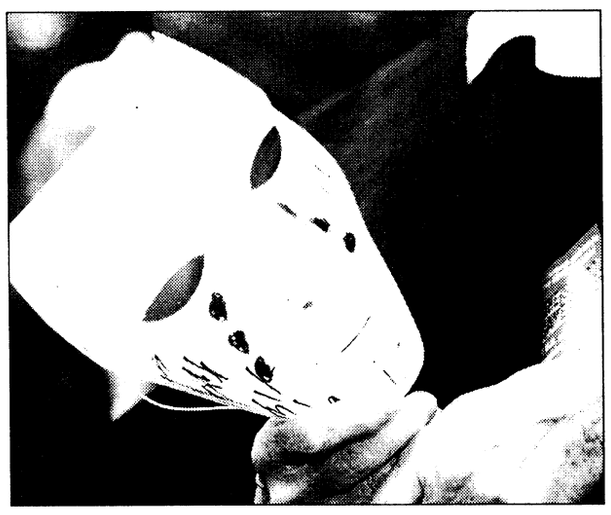
"USARSA teaches U.S. Army doctrine and operates within Department of Defense policy."

Since the school began operation in Panama in 1946, the school has trained more than 61,000 officers, cadets and Soldiers from 23 Latin American countries.



The school moved to Fort Benning in 1984, and has continued to teach Spanish-speaking Soldiers ever since.

Post celebrates diversity with Pow Wow

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

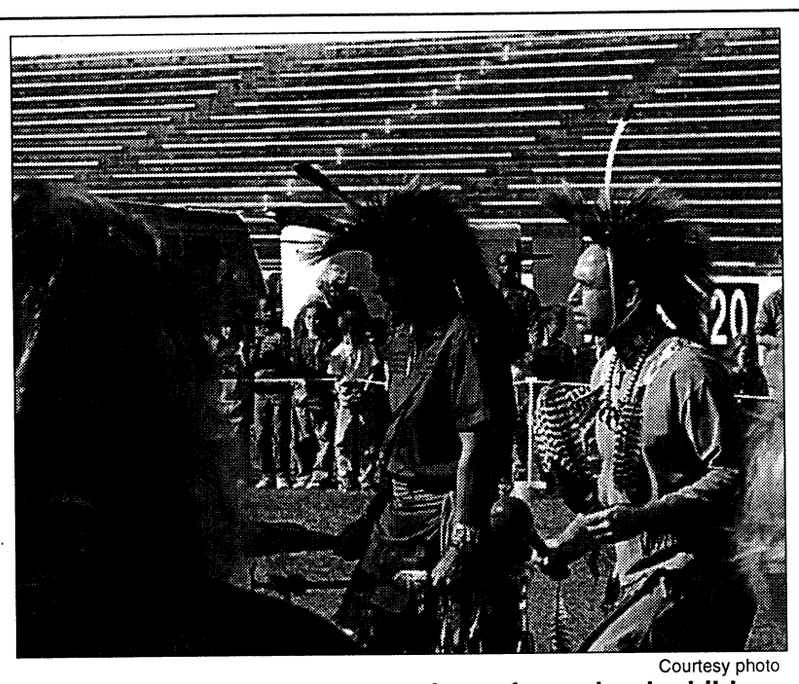
"Wilder! Get your stuff and come with me," shouted a voice from outside.

"We ran to my hooch, I grabbed my ruck and he grabbed it from me. "You don't need this, you don't need that." By the time he was done, my ruck was empty," said retired sergeant Tommy Wilder, A Company, 1st Battalion, 99th Light Infantry Brigade.

"You'll get everything you need at the base camp," the unknown man said.

"With that he turned around and started to leave, but he stopped and asked me, 'What was your name again? Well never mind, you probably won't be alive long enough for me to know you.' With that he turned around again and ran off," Wilder said.

"Who is this guy?" he asked himself.



That day was the beginning of his 12-month tour of duty with the 1-99th in Vietnam, he said. Nine of those months I was point man for our unit because they found out I was Native American, Wilder said.

Part Cherokee, part Creek Wilder explained himself as the judge, jury and executioner while walking point.

"If I didn't react immediately, people died," he said.

He was there, so was Ruth Davis.

Davis, a Cherokee from North Carolina is a dancer. In fact, her whole family dances traditional Native American dances.

Native American dancers perform for school children during the fourth annual Native American Heritage Month and Pow Wow Thursday.

The Davis family, Wilder and many other people of all nationalities gathered at Doughboy Stadium for the Fourth Annual Native American Heritage Month and Pow Wow Thursday.

The day's event included a 5k run, dancing, singing and food tasting. The food, traditional Native American food, consisted of fry bread and buffalo stew.

"I am really glad that we are being recognized. It seems that all other cultures are being recognized except the Native Americans, and now that we are included it is nice," Davis said.

The Pow Wow, a gathering of people, was explained as similar to actual Pow Wows.

There were displays of Native American tools, weapons, charms and items for sale.

Davis sold dreamcatchers, a hoop with an interesting pattern woven inside, they were believed to ward off evil spirits.

Spc. Martinique Swift, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 317th Engineer Battalion, a member of the United Houma Nations said, "I am really glad they are doing this to recognize that we are still here and that we are still making history."

Although Swift has been at Fort Benning for the last four years, this was the first time she attended the Pow Wow.

"I have missed out on the last four, and now that I am here, I am really excited," she said.

"We have our heroes who I would like to see recognized, like Martin Luther King Day," Davis said.

Heroes, dancers, mothers, fathers, sons and daughters of all nations share the common bond that is celebrated in November. They are Native Americans, and they are here to stay.

'Mr. C' remembered fondly

Monica Manganaro
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Those who ate frequently in Infantry Hall's cafeteria knew the older man behind the counter as "Mr. C." Others, who occasionally ate there knew him as the man with the smile. For 34 years, Nathan Carter cheerfully served Soldiers and civilians, taking special requests and remembering orders for the breakfast and lunchtime crowd.

For his regulars, there was never any surprise. "He'd see them coming and knew what they wanted," his sister Bertha Turner said. "All he'd talk about was the customers."

He started working for the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, initially as a busser, then a counter attendant and later as head cook. In June 1995, Carter retired, but after only a week away, he returned to work part-time. He wanted to be around the people who meant so much to him, his sister said.

Linda Metcalf, longtime friend and customer, remembered Carter as a special man who continued serving because he loved his job and cared about the people he served. "He felt a loyalty to the people at Benning," she said. "Some of his customers were his extended family."

On Nov. 15, Carter died at the Medical Center after battling cancer at the age of 56. A native of Columbus, Carter graduated from William H. Spencer High School in 1961. He was a member of Friendship Baptist Church and was an active member of the VIP Choir and Choir #2.

He is survived by his father, Lee Anthony, his sister, a brother, Jerome Dyser of Columbus and brother, Jimmy Anthony of Atlanta, and the many devoted friends and customers who remember him fondly for the care he showed over the years and for his smile.

Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen and all of the command sergeant majors in the units. They are the ones we owe our success to.

"I know he (Sgt. Maj. Vereen) took a personal interest in making sure we achieved our goal," said Walls. "He worked from his end to make sure he got with the other command sergeants major to get this campaign through. He was key to making sure we met our goal."

Besides meeting the goal, donations are still being dropped off at the CFC office, according to Walls.

"We still have units who are bringing in money," he said. "I finally had to send out an SOS to let them know I love the help, but I have to let the staff go soon, so please send in the last of your money."

Donations can still be turned into the CFC office at the First Union Bank until Tuesday. After that, they can be turned into the Garrison Commander's Office.

List: Publishes A-76 jobs

code. Just over 100 different functions are listed, Anderson said, including those performed by about 24,000 civil works employees.

OMB reason codes on the inventory will specify whether functions are subject to contracting or have been excluded from competition by reason of law, treaty or international obligation. Each function will have one of six different reason codes provided by OMB.

The FAIRNET Web page will also outline procedures by which a business or individual can challenge or appeal the listings.

In addition, a separate Army web site http://www.asamra.army.pentagon.mil/FAIR will contain narrative definitions of the activity and function codes and caveats for interpreting the data.

Anderson explained that even if a function is coded as being contractible, that doesn't necessarily mean it will be outsourced or even considered for outsourcing. But he said some of the jobs will be reviewed to determine the most efficient method of performing the work — by an in-house workforce or by contract.

During the Defense Quadrenial Review, the Army agreed to review 73,000 positions under A-76 competitions or through other methods over the next five years.

About 6,000 of those positions are military, officials said, and the rest are civilian.

Strategic Sourcing initiatives such as the Business Process Review can help the Army meet its QDR goal, officials said. Under BPR, studies are conducted to determine the most efficient method using a government workforce.

Currently the Army is studying more than 39,000 positions for competition with commercial sources. These reviews are often referred to as A-76 studies because of OMB Circular A-76 that outlines procedures for competing jobs.

Once an Army function or activity is selected for A-76 competition, the Army organization is required to first develop a performance work statement and then issue a request for contract offers for performing the work.

Soldiers return from Egypt

Sgt. 1st Class James Merkel
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division PAO

The fanfare of a military ceremony was overshadowed only by the tearful joy of family members as Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade Combat Team recently returned to their Fort Benning home. After an 18-hour flight, the Soldiers returned from a successful 30-day deployment to Egypt in support of Bright Star 1999-2000.

Bright Star is a training exercise involving many nations. It is designed to train military interoperability, assist in training Soldiers and leaders on coalition operations and promote understanding through military-to-military contact.

The Sledgehammer Soldiers trained alongside foreign Soldiers, testing equipment and tactics in force-on-force engagements.

"It was a good experience," said Sgt. James Light of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment. "We conducted a joint live-fire exercise, and maneuver training with the British, French and Egyptians."

Pvt. Anthony Miller, B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry, called the deployment, "interesting," and was happy to have trained with other nation's armies. "The safety standards are very different," Miller said.

Pfc. Jake Richards, also with B Company, said the Egyptian Army was "wide open," and "They really look up to the United States Army. We are what they want to be. They have a lot of respect for us."

The 3rd BCT, part of the Army's rapid deployment corps, conducts real-world exercises as part of its mission. The brigade has deployed forces to Southwest Asia for training and under emergency conditions as deterrence to aggression.

Highlighted by flexibility and the ability to deploy an armored shock force in "packages," the brigade is well-equipped and trained to handle any contingency, and prides itself in its ability to conduct rapid movement to trouble spots around the world and accomplish the mission specified.

After a few well deserved days off, the Soldiers will gear up for new training challenges in anticipation of the brigade's assumption of division ready brigade duties.,

2nd-29th Pioneers share Veterans Day with former Soldiers

Maj. Arthur Tulak
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Seventeen Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment "Pioneers!" traveled to Milledgeville, Ga., on Veterans Day to support the town's annual celebrations in honor of Georgia Veterans. Ceremonies, speeches, and demonstrations were held at the Georgia War Veterans' Home, where over 450 disabled Georgia veterans are in residence.

The 2nd. Bn., 29th Inf., Soldiers executed a familiar mission of demonstrating the latest in Infantry weapons, including the newest anti-armor weapon, the Javelin, the newest sniper rifles, and the latest in machine gun and rifle optics.

The Soldiers represented Fort Benning and were the only active-duty unit at the ceremonies where they answered many questions from veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam on U.S. Army's modern weapon systems. Staff Sgt. Gary Baker of B Co., an expert on anti-tank weapons received a historical perspective on the roots of the modern TOW system by talking to veterans who had used the 106 recoilless rifle in the Korean War.

"The veterans were impressed with the TOW's target acquisition system, which they said 'would have saved lives' had such technology been available to them," Baker said.

> "It made me proud to be in the military and especially proud to be in the Infantry. To serve as honorably as these veterans is the best I could hope for."
> — Staff Sgt. Joe Cortez
> B Co., 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The most eager and inquisitive participants were the young cadets from the Georgia Military College Corps of Cadets also located in Milledgeville. The highlight of the unit demonstration for the cadets was Staff Sgt. Ronald Lane in his "ghillie suit" displaying the ultimate in camouflage and demonstrating the M-24 and XM-107 sniper rifles. The celebration at the Georgia War Veterans' Home was an opportunity for the veterans to see how far Infantry weapons systems have come, and for the Pioneer Soldiers to see their roots in the veterans who served before.

Staff Sgt. Paul Overstreet, from D Co., said, "The guys from Korea were very interested in the workings of the mortar rounds and mortar system, having been on the receiving end of mortar fire during the war." The veterans enjoyed having their photograph taken with the Soldiers and sharing "war stories" with a receptive audience. Commenting on his participation in the Veteran's Day celebrations at the Georgia War Veterans' Home Staff Sgt. Joe Cortez, of B Co., said, "It made me proud to be in the military and especially proud to be in the Infantry. To serve as honorably as these veterans is the best I could hope for." The Pioneer Soldiers came away with a greater appreciation and respect for the sacrifices made by four generations of veterans from World War II, the Korean War, Vietnam, and even veterans from World War I, all represented at the home. Ray Masneri, the veterans' home executive director, thanked the Soldiers for their performance, which honored the veterans and contributed significantly to the quality of the event.

Col. Carter Ham, 29th Infantry Regiment Commander, commended these Soldiers for their volunteer spirit and professionalism.

Earning instructor award takes extra effort while training new Rangers

1st Sgt. Dana Cooper
B Company, Ranger Training Battalion

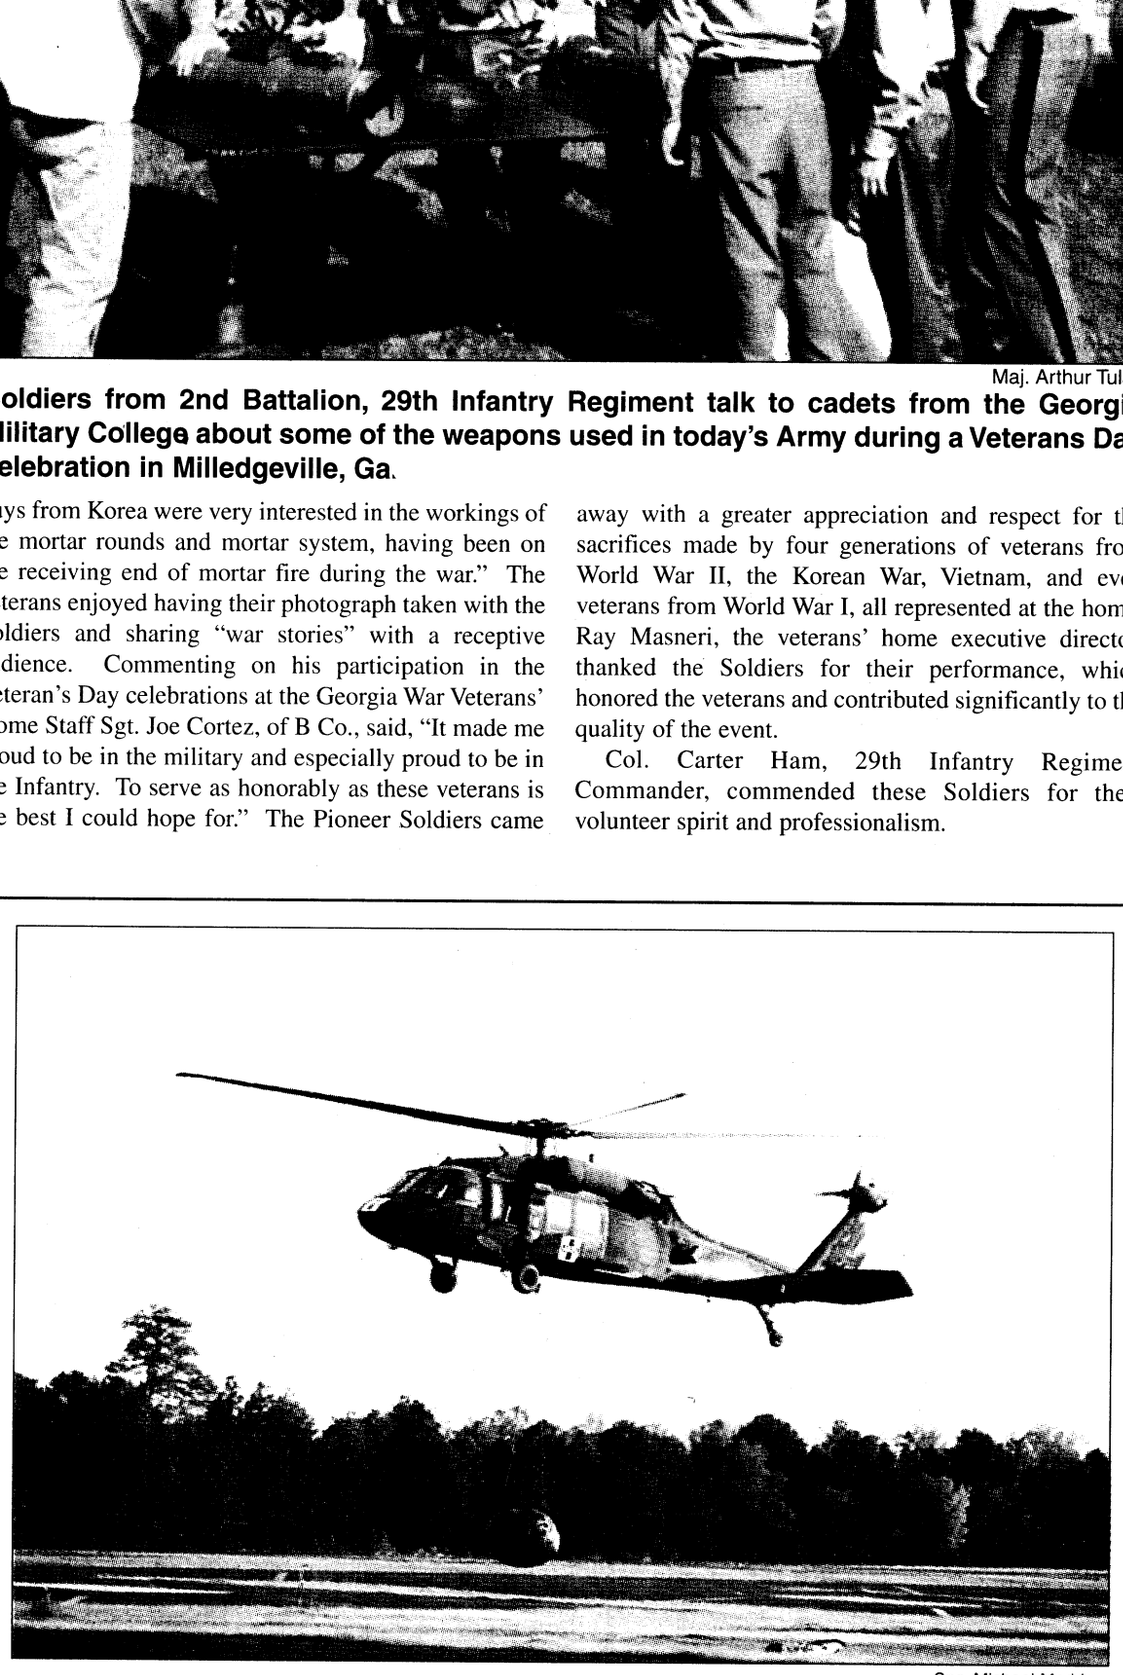
Staff Sgt. Eric Freeborg was recently named the Instructor of the Cycle for Ranger Class 9-99.

Freeborg received the award for his work as an instructor for the Time Management and Patrol Base classes for class 9-99.

He was mentioned in many of the student critiques as providing the Ranger students with valuable information that allowed them to pass their patrols.

The biggest challenge Freeborg faces as a Ranger instructor is trying to produce the transition from subordinate to leader in students.

Students arrive at Ranger School highly successful, motivated Soldiers who have always had a clear definition of what success is.



They've all had leaders who have told them exactly what was expected of them and as long as they were diligent in completing their tasks to a high standard, they would be successful.

In Ranger school, that is turned around and students are required to determine what tasks will make their subordinates successful as well as the overall mission. This can be a painful process for the Ranger student — he will often try to reject the process necessary to be a good leader.

Instead, he will attempt to find the magical technique, procedure or template that will allow him to be successful without the thought processes that are required.

This is where the challenge of the instructor lies — to influence the students to use a process of inspect, analyze and decide based on his book knowledge of patrolling without handcuffing himself to it.

When he does start to use this process, he will understand many of his conclusions will not be good ones, and try to push himself in the right direction without allowing him to rationalize poor decisions. In many cases, it allows him to see the results of poor decisions without setting himself up for complete failure. This can be a tricky line to walk but overall a gratifying job for instructors.

Field team competes for Connelly award

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Cooking for more than 100 Soldiers under the best of conditions is a big job; cooking a tasty meal in the field for that many deserves praise — especially if an apple pie was baked.

The Headquarters and Headquarters Company Dining Facility field team from 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), is one of the best in the Army for field food service.

Nov. 17 the team competed for top honors in the Army. A winner and runner-up will be announced in January.

A three-member committee from the Philip A. Connelly Awards Program for Excellence in Army Food Service visited the field site. The U.S. Army Quartermaster Center and School, Fort Lee, Va., and the International Food Service Executive Association are the co-sponsors of the 31-year-old Connelly program.

The brigade was judged on its ability to set up a tactical field feeding site at Kelley Hill and on the quality of the lunch meal prepared. The menu featured fried chicken, roast beef, fried cabbage, green beans, rice pilaf, apple cobbler and chocolate brownies.

A committee comprised of one civilian from IFSEA and two QMC&S military representatives evaluates each of the finalists in the field kitchen category.

"Cooking under field conditions is difficult," Chief Warrant Officer Rufus Montgomery, a Connelly evaluator, said. "It takes some imagination. Cooking in garrison is much easier than in the field."

The brigade team fed 115 Soldiers, about twice as many as the other teams in the field competition, Montgomery said.

"This unit has taken the initiative to serve 115," he said.

Chief Warrant Officer Jacob Dingle and Master Sgt. Timothy Crawshaw were the supervisors for the 3rd Brigade participants.

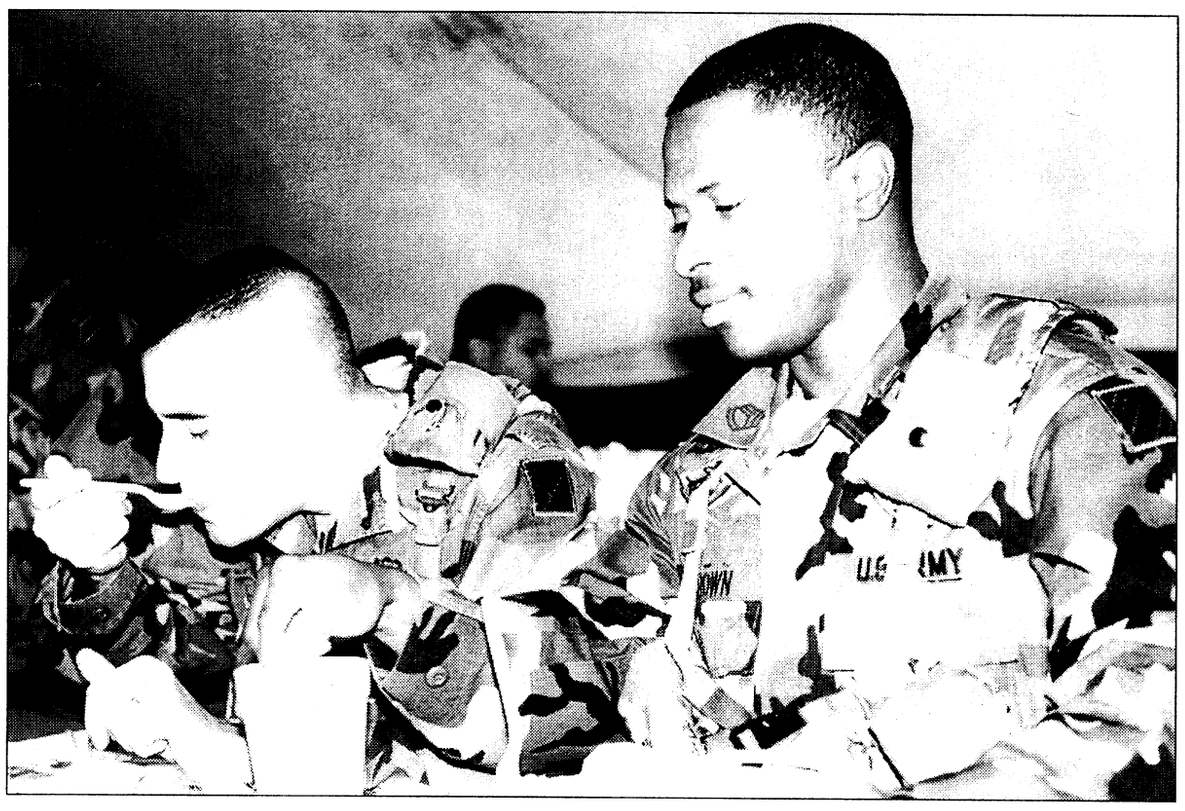
Dingle said the brigade chose to serve more people "so that more of our command group personnel could have a chance to come out and see the event. And it also demonstrates my cooks' abilities to cook in large quantities."

The field team had practiced the menu since July.

"This is the Super Bowl of cooking," he said. "You can't do any better than this."

This is the third time Dingle has been associated with a Connelly competition. He was a runner-up in 1994 at Fort Knox, Ky., and three years ago in Korea.

"I've been a bridesmaid twice," he said under the dining tent.



Crawshaw was confident the brigade had done well.

"When you put great chow with the mission of a maneuver brigade, you are the best in the Army," he said. "I feel that in January, we will be the one selected."

Montgomery, one of the Army's top food advisors, also pointed out that "units like 3rd Brigade have a real mission. They are just back from Bright Star and in January they will go to Fort Stewart."

The brigade team consisted of: Staff Sgt. John McBride, Sgt. Olen Winningham, Spc. Paul Meigs, Spc. Michael Johnson, Pfc. Wilena Martin and Pvt. Shelton Cypress.

Sgt. Maj. Tom Munson, U.S. Army QMC&S, and Leo Slay, IFSEA, were the other two members of the Connelly Awards evaluation team. They will have visited seven field mess sites before the competition ends in December.

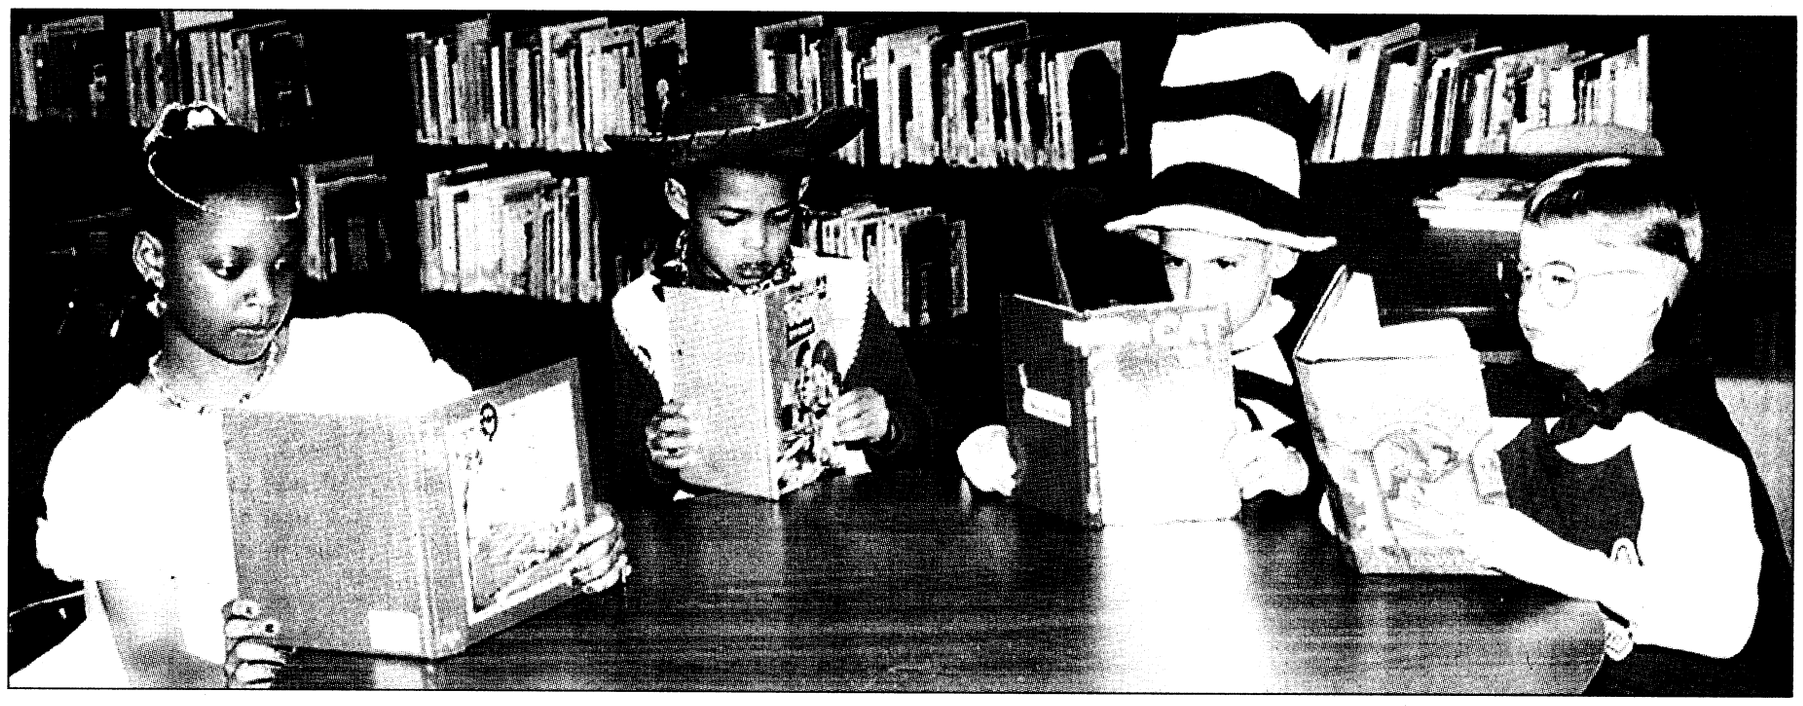
AFTB celebrates five years of helping — Army Family Team Building will host its annual luncheon Dec. 14 at the Officers' Club from 11:30 a.m. until 1 p.m. Everyone is invited to attend. Cecelia Abrams will be the guest speaker. She is the wife of Gen. John N. Abrams, TRADOC commander.

Cost of the luncheon is $7.50 per person, paid in advance.

Reservations will be accepted through Dec. 7. For more information or to make a reservation, call 545-2794.

AER available at active military branches — Soldiers needing Army Emergency Relief financial assistance outside an Army vicinity, may seek assistance through an aid society office at another active military branch office. This includes Air Force Aid Society, Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society or Coast Guard Mutual Assistance. If none of these are available Soldiers may seek assistance though any American Red Cross Chapter. For more information, call 545-4043.

Survival class offered to new moms and dads — The Family Advocacy First Steps program will sponsor a survival class for new moms and dads from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Dec. 7 on the second floor in the Regimental Conference Room, Martin Army Community Hospital.



Topics will include proper nutrition for mom and baby, sleep deprivation, fussy infants, stress, family maintenance and coping strategies. First Steps volunteers will be available to share ideas for crucial adjustments when a baby enters the family. Newborns are also invited to attend. For more information, call 544-2020.

Hospital announces closures — Beginning today the main entrance to Martin Army Community Hospital will be closed. All patients need to enter MACH via the Pharmacy or Emergency entrance. The Patient Affairs Liaison Office will be temporarily located in Room 5 of the OB/GYN clinic.

A temporary information booth will be located in the Pharmacy area to assist with directions. Patients seeking information about consults should either go to the second floor and use the 2A stairwell which will bring them back to the first floor Command Suite area and Patient appointments, Benefits and Referrals office or enter through the old ER area and go through Room 151 to the Consult Coordinator Area. For more information, call the MACH Information Desk at 544-2041.

Dental Clinics announce closures— Only Solomon Dental Clinic, Building 3255, Sand Hill, will be open Friday. Dental emergencies will be treated at the clinic from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. For more information, call 544-2118.

Commissary announces holiday hours — The Commissary will be closed Thursday and Friday in observance of Thanksgiving Day. The Commissary will reopen 9 a.m. Saturday.

Children bring storybook characters to life

Pippi Longstockings, Cinderella and the Cat in the Hat visited the McBride Elementary School media center Nov. 17. Sure, these characters live in the pages of the books lining the shelves of the center, but on this particular day, walking, talking and giggling versions of the storybook characters entered the doors.

Students at McBride dressed as their favorite characters in celebration of National Children's Book Week Nov. 15-21.

Established in 1919 to honor authors of children's literature, National Children's Book Week is designed to promote reading in the home. This year's theme was "Plant a seed — read."

Mitzi Crow, McBride's media specialist, explained the week's history.

"Up until that time (1919) the so-called children's 'classics' were considered so because there weren't that many books written specifically for children to choose from," Crow said.

A big boom in children's publishing occurred in 1963 with the publication of Where the Wild Things Are by Maurice Sendak.

"It was phenomenal. You were no longer seeing just watered-down versions of adult stories," Crow said.

Participation among students and staff was high for the event. Special guests, including school administrators, parents and grandparents, were invited to read to different classes and talk with the students about their favorite books.

"Last year the guests read books and introduced new characters to the children," Crow said. "The library was swamped with children wanting the books with those characters."

First-grader Victor Sanchez dressed as Huckleberry Finn.

"It's my favorite book character because he does funny stuff in the book. He goes on adventures, and he has a rip in his pants," Sanchez said.

The newest character to hit the children's book market, Harry Potter, made an appearance at McBride. Connor Zalenski, wearing wire-framed glasses and a red cape, explained that he himself hadn't read the books featuring Harry.

"But my mom reads them to me," he said, holding up a thick volume.

Crow smiled. Librarians like to hear those words.

Wilson students collect food for ACS program

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

First-graders at Wilson Elementary School collected more than 200 cans of food in one week for the Army Community Service emergency food basket program.

Al Deane, supervisor of the ACS Emergency Food Locker, dropped by the school Friday afternoon and spoke to the children during a brief assembly outside.

"What you have done here is tremendous," he said. "This food will go to help Soldiers and their families who need help with their Thanksgiving or holiday meals."

After thanking the children, Deane and Spc. Jason Hall loaded the bags into a red pick-up, almost filling the back of the government vehicle.

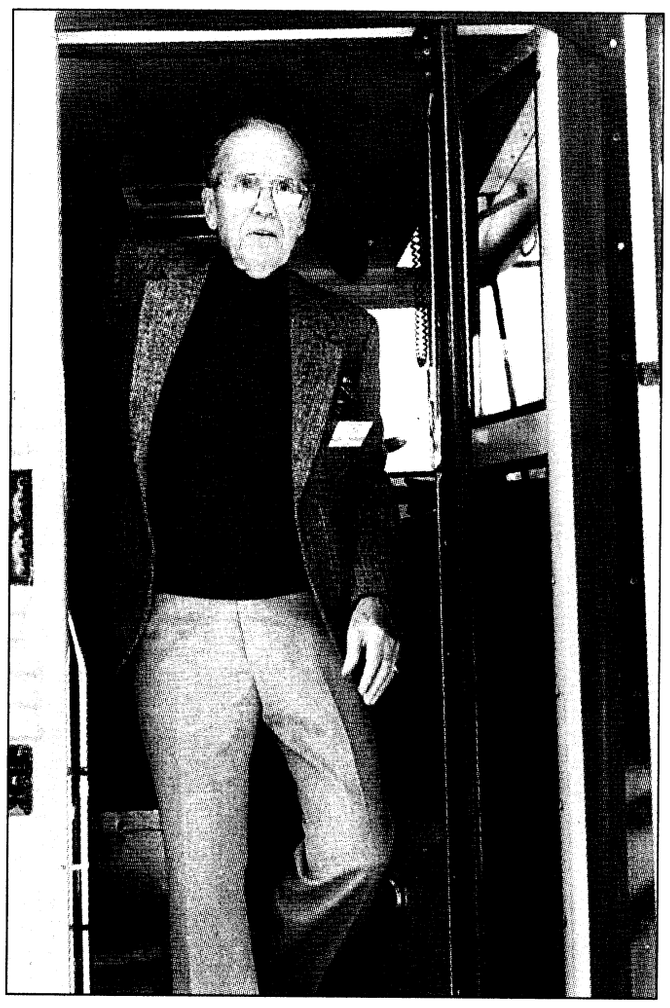
One little boy approached Deane and said, "I'm real proud of myself."

That feeling was evident in other first-graders.

Tyler Gibson liked the project "because it helps people," he said.

Classmate Cristina Cunningham added, "So they will have a nice Thanksgiving."

At the beginning of the food drive, their teacher, Jennifer Ragan, explained to the children where the food would go and that there would be a friendly competition between the three classes to see who would bring in the most.



"They asked, 'What do I win?' I told them they win by knowing that they are helping someone else," Ragan said.

Teacher Carol Hare said that each of the 63 first-graders was asked to bring in at least one food item during last week.

"We wanted to teach the children to be a part of the community and to help each other," Hare said.

"We knew that the food was going here on Fort Benning, and we wanted the children to have the experience of giving and sharing," fellow teacher Bonnie Cyfers said.

"It was a lesson for everyone involved."

Fort Benning community members tour Dexter and Stowers Elementary Schools to experience high-tech learning

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Times are changing, and Fort Benning's school system is doing its best to prepare students for the world of tomorrow.

Friday members of the Fort Benning community were given a first-hand look at how post schools use the latest technology to teach the basics. Textbooks are still fixtures in the classrooms, but computers have taken up permanent residence beside them.

Just this fall the schools added 400 computers system-wide, Dell McMullen, schools superintendent, said.

The tour was part of a national initiative "America Goes Back to School," designed to improve education through community involvement. Representatives from post agencies, former educators, civilians and school officials spent more than two hours learning how two elementary schools —Dexter and Stowers — have implemented technology into their curriculum.

Dr. Richard Coss retired as Fort Benning Schools superintendent in 1983. He and his wife decided to spend the morning back in school.

"Computers were just coming in when I retired," Coss said.

Dexter was the first stop on the tour. Guests visited the WDEX studio where teacher Cy Dietrich and a group of fifth-graders produce a weekly television broadcast that informs students of upcoming events. Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander and schools' officer, agreed to be interviewed by a student.

Of course, teachers still read books to children, but with the help of a CD-ROM and an In Focus projector favorite childhood books come to life before their eyes. In a pre-K class, Green Eggs and Ham played on a large screen.

Teacher Peggy Gindville told the tour that the class has its own web page where the children display their work.

"Parents and you all can go to it," Gindville said. "We would love for you all to see our website."

The web address is www.threesquires.com/gindville.htm.

A yellow school bus carried the group to Stowers, and Mitchell reminded the passengers that today's buses have video cameras onboard.

"Forewarned is forearmed. I don't want to drop anyone off at the principal's office," he said.

Principal Glen Hughes took the group to the Stowers computer lab where a fifth-grade class worked at 30 terminals.

"They have the most current information at the touch of their fingers," Hughes said.

A relic from the past still sits in the library. The drawers of the card catalog are empty, but the cabinet makes a great table for a Thanksgiving display. To find out if the library has a book, students use the computers that have replaced the card catalog.

First-grade teacher Miriam Aiken explained how her students use the Internet to learn about the rest of the country. The class is e-mailing people from different

Elementary teacher continues to learn through art

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

On the board in Audrey Leanza's art class it's written, "We do not stop playing because we grow old, we grow old because we stop playing."

The Wilson Elementary teacher lives by that motto each day. Leanza, who's been teaching at Fort Benning for 11 years, said that state of mind is what makes her enjoy her job so much.

"My job is just fun," she said. "Where else can you do something you like every day and get paid for it? It's like being a big kid. I get paid to play."

Leanza said teaching arts to children reminds her of her days when she used to teach other subjects.

"I used to teach reading and math. I would tell the kids that when they finished their reading and math, we would have time for art," she explained. "It's kind of like I did all of my reading and math for five years and now I get to have art every day all day long.

Leanza

"I get to color little things, to make little things; I get to paint and draw every single day all day long, and I get to do it with kids," said Leanza.

The New York native said she first got interested in art as a child.

"Ever since I was a kid, from first grade on, I've loved art," she said. "We grew up with my father, pretty much from the time we were growing up in Queens, I remember him bringing us to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and the different museums."

"I can remember from when I was little, looking up and having him pick me up to look at paintings from the Met. I just grew up around it," Leanza added.

She said she didn't originally decide to teach school even though she had a degree from Saint Rose College in New York.

"I worked as a photojournalist for the Arts Council in New York. I was a single parent and photojournalism was getting to the point where I had to go away on assignment for extended periods of time," Leanza said. "That's why I switched to teaching." She had originally gone to college to teach.

She added, choosing to teach art has helped her continue to learn.

"You can do the same thing each year for four or five years, then one kid will do a different spin on it. It's great because that's the whole idea about art," Leanza said.

"It's one of those places where you can make mistakes and it's not considered detrimental. This is a good thing."

"It's from those mistakes that you learn new concepts," she said. "What a place to come to where you're encouraged to error," Leanza added with a smile.

While it's okay to make errors, Leanza's students must be doing something right.

She had four children place in the Steeplechase Art Competition, a local art contest, Nov. 4.

Pamela Brooks placed first, R.J. Arellano placed second, Gustavo Contreros and Edmund Gonzalez placed third in thier age groups.

Leanza has also taught the past two first place Army worldwide winners of the YMCA Family Poster Contest.

Leanza said she was happy for her students because she likes to see them succeed.

Besides teaching, Leanza also shows and sells some of her own folk art at galleries in Tennessee, California and North Carolina.

She said it's nice to have her work enjoyed by others, but it's not the same as teaching.

"It's kind of fun, but you don't have the kids," Leanza said.

"I like teaching, it's fun. It's more than that to me. Especially when I have kids that might be having a hard time in academic areas, some of them excel in art, it's just amazing what they can do," she added.

Leanza said she plans to continue teaching and getting her works out in the community, but she added she hasn't set her future in concrete yet.

"When you have plans, you're aiming yourself toward one goal; it's kind of like driving on the interstate. You're not taking all of the back roads," she said.

"I work better without a plan. Some of the best projects we've done were last-minute kind of things. As long as you have a general idea, you can work around it."

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their residence in celebration of the season. Doing so requires prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation. Holiday decorations will conform to the following:

Exterior

• Roofs — No decorations, lighted or unlighted are allowed on roofs. Installation can be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

• Elsewhere — Decorations may be affixed to walls, the underside of eaves, and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations to your residence, use the smallest possible fasteners (staples are a good device). Use only Underwriter's Laboratory (UL) electrical decorations.

• Interior.— Do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

• Barracks — Exterior lighting is not permitted. In the interior, do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while lighted.

• Administrative Areas — Non-electric decorations will be used in office and operational facilities throughout the installation.

Given our ever-diminishing funding resources, energy conservation is important. Be judicious in family housing and barrack areas when using electrical decorations. In Family Housing do not turn on outside electrical decorations until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight. Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow everyone to enjoy the holiday season.

Holiday safety tips

Today's Christmas lights use energy efficiently and still provide enough light output to brighten the season but be ever mindful of safety. Here are some safety tips that will hopefully make this a safer holiday period:

• If you're purchasing a light set, make sure it has been approved by Underwriters Laboratories. Also, make sure you get the right set for indoor use, outdoor, or both.

• Do not overload your electrical circuit. Maximum capacity of 15-amp circuit is 1,800 watts and a 20-amp circuit is 2,400 watts. You can determine this by simply checking your breaker or fuse controlling the circuit. To compute your holiday lighting load, multiply the number of bulbs by the number of watts per bulb. Be sure to include house lamps, appliances, and other electrical equipment on the same circuit.

• Before you decorate, check light for frayed wires, damaged sockets or cracked insulation. If you find defects, replace the entire set.

• Hot bulbs can ignite dry branches. Avoid fire by keeping your natural tree well watered and keeping extension cords and light sets away from the water. Light the tree when you are at home and awake to enjoy it. Always unplug your Christmas tree when you're not at home.

• Keep a fire extinguisher handy.

• Avoid short-circuiting from rain by covering outdoor plugs and connector joints with plastic wrap and sealing the ends with electrical tape.

• For outdoor lighting, use a ground-fault circuit interrupter on each circuit. If current leaks through frayed or damaged wires, the interrupter shuts it off. Interrupters cost about $7 to $10.

• Don't use more than one extension cord per outlet, and never hide cords under carpets or rugs.

• If you buy a cut tree ensure that it is fresh. If the needles are already falling off, the tree is too dry and it should not be purchased. Leave your tree outside until you are ready to decorate. It is a good idea to trim at least a one-inch piece from the bottom of the tree. This increases the tree's ability to absorb water. Keep your live tree watered. Trees commonly use up to, depending on size, a gallon of water every day.

Never use candles to decorate a Christmas tree, and keep Christmas trees away from fireplaces, radiators, heating registers and space heaters.

Keep a working smoke detector in the room above your Christmas tree. Consider purchasing a "tree-detector." This is a smoke/heat detector that looks like a Christmas ornament that actually hangs in the tree.

Remember holly, mistletoe and poinsettias are all poi sonous plants to people and pets. Be careful of ornaments and decorations that include ribbons or garlands that can easily become snagged on a passing child. This alone could cause a full-sized tree to fall on a child.

School 'picks up tabs'

McBride gathers aluminum soda tops to benefit Ronald McDonald House

Penny Wilson
McBride Elementary School

McBride Elementary School is "picking up the tab." Pull tabs from the tops of aluminum cans, that is.

On Oct. 1, the school kicked off its participation in the Ronald McDonald House Pop Tab Recycling Program. Families, students, and staff members of McBride Elementary School are saving the pull tabs from the tops of aluminum cans.

These tabs will be recycled by the Ronald McDonald House and the money will be used to offset the monthly utility bills of the facility.

Located in Columbus, the Ronald McDonald House of West Georgia serves as a "home away from home" for families of children hospitalized or undergoing outpatient treatment in the Columbus-Phenix City, Fort Benning area. It is a place for families to break away from the hospital environment, have the support of other families and ease some of the stress associated with a child's illness.

School projects such as this help enhance school pride. This recycling project also lends itself to many curriculum connections.

Teachers are using the pull tab program as an aid in their teaching of recycling. Math objectives are also being covered as teachers use the pull tabs during lessons on weighing, measuring, graphing, estimating, adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing.

McBride Elementary School will continue to collect pull tabs until May 2000. Any individuals, offices, groups or organizations that wish to participate in this recycling program are welcome to begin collecting the tabs. Tabs may be brought to the office of McBride Elementary School.

Keep it beautiful

Cassandra Sharon and Jonny Wise, pre-K students at McBride Elementary School, gather together a stack of old phone books as part of the Keep Columbus Beautiful telephone book recycling efforts. Students participated in the effort by bringing in their old telephone books. The books were counted and turned in as part of the Gateway Schools program.

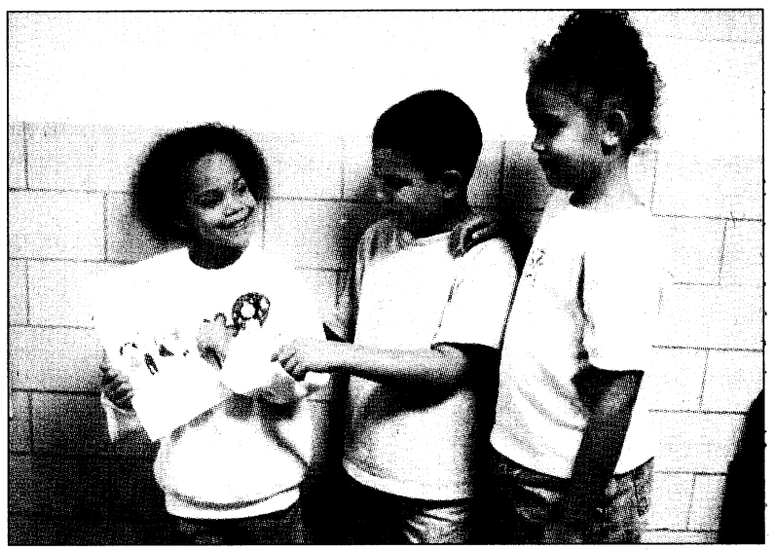
Students design school shirt

Carla Jackson
McBride Elementary School

This year the Parent Teacher Organization decided to have a "design a T-shirt" contest for the school shirts. Each teacher was asked to submit two entries from their classroom. They were placed in the main entrance where everyone could vote on them.

The winner was Brianna Jackson who is a kindergarten student in Tippi Ford's class.



Wanting to incorporate the T-shirts into Pride Week meant making sure each child received a T-shirt.

The PTO then began the task of contacting local businesses for donations. Thanks to all their support every child received a free T-shirt during Pride Week.

Every day of Pride Week represented a different thing such as crazy-sock day, box-top day and blue day.

On Tuesday, each child was asked to bring in a non-perishable food which was donated to the Valley Rescue Mission.

The T-shirt donations were given by the following community businesses: Dominos, Target, Sheraton Inn of Columbus, Howard Johnson Express Inn, Denny's Enterprise, U.S. Cavalry, Taco Bell, Motel 6 of Columbus and Kissin' 99.3.

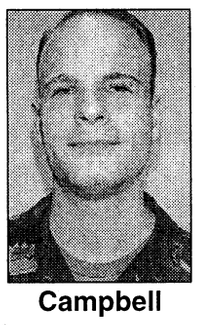
money matters

2nd Lt. Merle Campbell
Bayonet correspondent

Once an individual savings program has been initiated one must be careful not to carry too much cash in a savings account.



Due to the low interest rates that are offered on savings accounts, it can be costly not to have excess money invested in higher yielding instruments. For this reason excess cash should be put to work through investing.

Investing, in essence, is the process of taking money and using it to create additional value or cash flow. When most people think of investing their first thoughts are of the stock market.

However, there are countless investment vehicles out there that can be used for satisfying the needs of an investor. In addition, there are numerous techniques and methods for investing. And, despite popular belief, there is no single investment or method that works for everyone.

Successful investing is dependent upon the individual and their unique set of preferences and objectives. Some of the key factors involved in selecting an investment are: individual risk tolerance, investment horizon and investment objectives.

Individual risk tolerance involves the inherent amount of risk that an individual is willing to endure in pursuit of an investment return. The fundamental risk is losing some or all of the capital that has been invested. However, the investment community rewards risk taking in most instances. Higher risk investments often times offer an investment return that is much greater than that of lower risk investments.

Campbell

The rationale behind this is investors want to be compensated for placing their hard-earned money at risk. Some people are more risk tolerant than others and endure higher levels of risk in pursuit of higher investment gains.

Other individuals are intrinsically risk averse and are content with lower yielding investments. The goal is to find a level of risk that is tolerable, while simultaneously satisfying investment objectives.

Investment horizon is another factor that should be considered in the investment process. Investment horizon deals principally with the time frame that one wants to invest. This time frame can vary from short to long term. Different individuals have different time horizons.

For example, some people may want to begin the process of planning for retirement, while others may focus on short term goals like increasing cash flow. An investor may also configure multiple time horizons into their planning. Different investments are available for virtually any time horizon an individual may possess.

Investment objectives are another factor of investing. When investing, it is necessary to have a specified goal to work toward. This goal can range from investing to accumulate a large sum of cash to live off of during retirement, or it can be to have a steady supplemental income stream. Whatever the case may be, it is fundamental to identify objectives before selecting an investment option. Principally, different types of investments exist to satisfy different objectives. Matching the appropriate objective and investment are crucial to developing a successful investment plan.

Overall, there are numerous factors that should be taken into consideration when formulating an investment plan. Principally, individual risk tolerances, investment horizon and investment objectives should be examined prior to investing. Once identified, these factors will prove beneficial in developing an individual investment plan.

Campbell has a Bachelor's in finance and a minor in accounting from Oklahoma State University. He is presently working on a master's in business administration from the University of Phoenix.

ask the judge

Jane M. Winand
Chief, Legal Assistance Division

Q. I'm about to buy a car and I want to know my rights. My friend said that I can sign a contract to buy a car and then take it back to the dealer if I don't want it. She said something about having three days to change my mind and return the car. Is this true?

A. We get that question frequently here at the Legal Assistance Office. Many people think that the three-day cooling off period applies to cars bought at car dealerships. It doesn't. The three-day cooling off period for terminating or canceling contracts is a federal law that applies to certain types of contracts. The rule grants a buyer the right to cancel consumer purchase contract for up to three business days following a door-to-door sale. This typically involves buying items from a seller at a place other than the seller's permanent place of business. A good example of this is the vacuum cleaner salesman that goes door-to-door hawing his wares.

The cancellation must be in writing and placed in the mail before midnight of the third day after the sale. It is advisable to send the cancellation by certified mail as proof that it was sent within the requisite time. The seller is required to provide the buyer with a cancellation form. However, if the form is not provided, you may send a cancellation notice that you write yourself.

Please note that if you go to the seller's place of business, such as a car dealership, the three-day rule does not apply. Even a tent sale, a common practice of car dealers, is considered the dealer's permanent place of business and the rule will not apply.

If you buy the car and then decide not to keep it, you have several options One option is to find a buyer for the vehicle. It is imperative that this new purchaser get his own car loan so that you can pay off your loan. Occasionally, a car owner is desperate and transfers the car to a purchaser with the "understanding" that the purchaser will make the car payments each month. Unfortunately, if the purchaser misses a payment or two, and they often do, the original car owner is still responsible for the loan. The loan company will still expect payment from the original owner even though he gave possession of the vehicle to the new purchaser.

Another option is to voluntarily surrender the vehicle to the loan company. The company takes possession, cleans up the vehicle and resells it. The proceeds from the sale will be credited to the amount still owed on the loan. However, repossessed cars are typically sold at an auction, and the sale prices are not very high. Consequently, there is often a deficiency balance in the proceeds from the sale do not fully pay off the car loan. The original owner is responsible for the payment of the loan balance, even though he or she no longer has the vehicle.

As an example, you still owe $15,000 on the car loan when the vehicle is repossessed and the car is sold for $10,000. You must pay the loan company the difference of $5,000. If you fail to pay this amount, the loan company can file a suit against you and also place the default on your credit report. Even if you do pay, the voluntary repossession still goes on your credit report and will have a negative impact on your credit worthiness.

The bottom line is that you should give a contract serious thought before you sign it. If you feel pressured, don't sign. The time to ask questions is before you sign the contract to buy the car. If you have questions about a contract, you can call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to speak with an attorney.

"It's nice to know that the kids are going to be online with the changing of times. I look at school as an industry itself. School kids will have to compete with other children for jobs in the future."

Hollis Brown visits schools often in his role as fire protection specialist with the Directorate of Public Safety, and he checked a few alarms as he walked down the hallways Friday.

"I was so impressed," he said after the tour.

"It's amazing what students have at their fingertips these days. I can see why the schools on post win so many awards."

Include God for successful marriage

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Ministries Center

It was the perfect marriage. The young couple had everything they needed to enjoy life to its fullest. It was a marriage free from worry, stress and turmoil. But something happened to this couple that caused them to grow apart. Now in place of marital bliss there was open hostility. You know them. Their names? Adam and Eve.

For the most part, the vast majority of married couples desire closeness in their marital relationship. They do not want someone to fight with on a regular basis. Yet the fact remains that more than 50 percent of all marriages fail and end in divorce. I believe that most marriages could be not only reconciled but could thrive if the "essential ingredient" were present in the marriage.

Ed Young, in his book Romancing the Home, wrote, "Horizontal relationships — relationships between people — are crippled at the outset unless the vertical relationship — relationship between each person and God — is in place."

Rupel

Young wrote, "... no matter how brilliant the partners, no matter how strong their love, no matter how committed they are to their union, the odds against a marriage even surviving 'in name only' is little more than a 50-50 proposition without some serious help."

Let me make this observation, a marriage without God as an integral part is crippled before the words "I do" are ever spoken. It's kind of like throwing a deck of cards into the air hoping each card lands face up, in stacks by suit and in numerical order. It (pardon the English) ain't gonna happen!

It all boils down to sin and selfishness. The founders of Christian Prevention and Relationship Program point out this about marriage, "... a marriage brings together two imperfectly motivated people who strongly — and somewhat selfishly — desire intimacy and the other good things of life but who fear being hurt." The trouble is we do hurt each other because of our self-protective, selfish natures. How then can couples avoid doing possible irreparable damage to each other's spirit?

"When we confess our sin, turn from our sin, and invite Jesus Christ to come into our life, our vertical relationship with Him is permanently and perfectly established," Ed Young said. While this is no guarantee that troubled marriage will reconcile, it is to me the only sure path a couple can rely on for hope of reconciliation.

If you find your marriage is in trouble, let me give you hope. It is found in God and God alone. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can point you in the right direction if you are experiencing marital difficulty. It simply begins with a call to the Center at 545-2050. If you try God you will not be disappointed.

Season offers opportunity for Thanksgiving blessings

Chaplain (Maj.) Steven L. Berry
Regimental Chaplain, 75th Ranger Regiment

If I had to choose from among all the seasons, I would confess that autumn is my favorite time of the year. The cool, brisk mornings certainly bring a welcome respite from the oppressive heat and humidity of summer. Fall signals a new opportunity for me to recover my favorite sweaters and jackets from their off-season storage places. The deep, rich colors in nature — red, orange, brown, yellow — seem to speak a certain warmth of their own, despite the occasional "frost on the pumpkin."

At our house, a crisp autumn evening is the green light for hot cocoa and a blaze in the fireplace.

Fall is a season of reflection and remembering for me. With ease my mind's eye can visualize memories of autumns past: the sights and smells of the hardwood and pine in my boyhood home in East Texas; my grandmother in her kitchen cooking stews, soups and her special desserts; reporting to Fort Bragg as my first active duty assignment; the birth of my children; saying good-byes to friends and comrades. While this list is obviously very personal, it seems to me that perhaps autumn in particular might call us all to reflect collectively on certain of God's blessings, which we all enjoy.

Only a few days ago, we lowered our flags and joined in Veterans Day ceremonies remembering the selfless service of devoted uniformed Americans who have preceded us. Without doubt, we would be remiss had we failed to reflect on these gallant heroes, both living and dead, whose sacrifices in the most adverse circumstances of battle have secured liberty for untold numbers. Let us reflect on their work, and let that reflection give rise to renewed admiration and appreciation for those who, at great personal cost, shunned indolence and indifference and held the line against despotism and oppression.

Additionally, the Thanksgiving season must surely compel America — you and me and those like us — to remember that God has "shed His grace on thee."

It appears to me that Thanksgiving embodies all that it means to be an American. It reminds us that God has been so faithful. Thanksgiving seems to focus, as a prelude to independence, on the dependence that the Pilgrims found as fundamental to their survival while they hacked out a home in the American wilderness; a dependence that we so desperately need to recognize in these days. Reflecting on Thanksgiving causes me to want to declare with Lee Greenwood "I'm proud to be an American."

Nehemiah called on the ancient Hebrews to remember Gods great redemptive acts performed in their behalf. The prophet rehearsed for the people of Israel the blessings, which stood in testimony to God's goodness toward them: the good creation; the deliverance from bondage; the commandments; provisions during the wandering; preservation during exile; restoration to the land.

Ezra sounded a similar clarion call for the people to reflect on and gain strength from the faithfulness of God. From antiquity, Ezra's plea to reflect, to remember and to honor God and give thanks remains a profound word for us today.

I have spoken with some folks who are already longing for spring. It does seem that spring leads us to think about renewal and restoration.

However, perhaps we first need to reflect and remember. Join me in thankful reflection during this autumn season, and give heed to William Bradford as, more than 350 years ago, he enjoined those at Plymouth Rock to "render thanksgiving to ye Almighty God for all His blessings."

Faith moves holiday race — The Faith Middle School Holiday race, usually held the first Saturday of December, has been tentatively scheduled for a Spring race.

The proposed date for the race is April 8.

More information and registration details will be released closer to the date of the race.

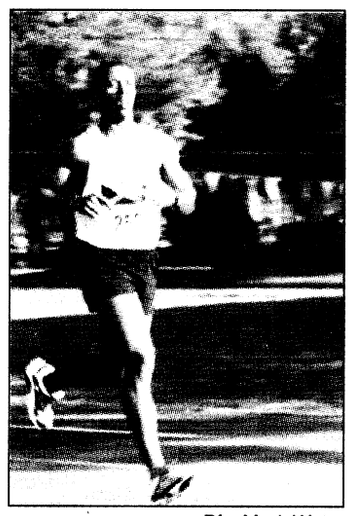
Race organizers are presently accepting ideas and suggestions for the spring race.

For more information or to submit ideas, call Susan Emerson at 545-5524.

Briant Wells opens for recreational swim — The Briant Wells Pool is open from 1 to 8 p.m. Tuesdays through Thursdays for recreational swimming. For more information, call 545-5709.

YS announces field rules — Youth Services sports fields are designated and maintained for use by family members, ages 6 to 18.

All use by units or adult groups is prohibited. Pets and parking on the fields are also prohibited.



Under certain circumstances, approval to use YS fields can be requested by submitting a memorandum to the Directorate of Community Activities. For more information, call Linda Laine at 545-3070.

Group seeks bowlers — The Tuesday Nite mixed league bowlers are currently seeking men, women and couples to bowl in their league. For more information, call 324-4431 or stop by Peach Bowl to sign up for the league.

Bowling centers field teams — The Mall and Main Post Bowling Centers invite local bowlers to sign up for league play. The league competitions will begin next weekend. To sign up, call either bowling center at 544-2233 or 545-4272.

More than 30 athletes compete in post Pow Wow 5K run

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

More that 30 participants of all ages, and one Army band competed in the fourth annual Native American Heritage Month 5K run.

There were four categories for runners to race in; boys 12 and younger, girls 12 and younger, men and women.

In the men's category, Gary Newman, from the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, preventative medicine, won with a time of 17:37. Donald Taylor, MEDDAC, finished second running the course in 17:49. Keith Maresca, 17th Air Support Operation Squadron, finished third in 17:57.

In the women's category, Debra Fix, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion, won with a time of 23:13.

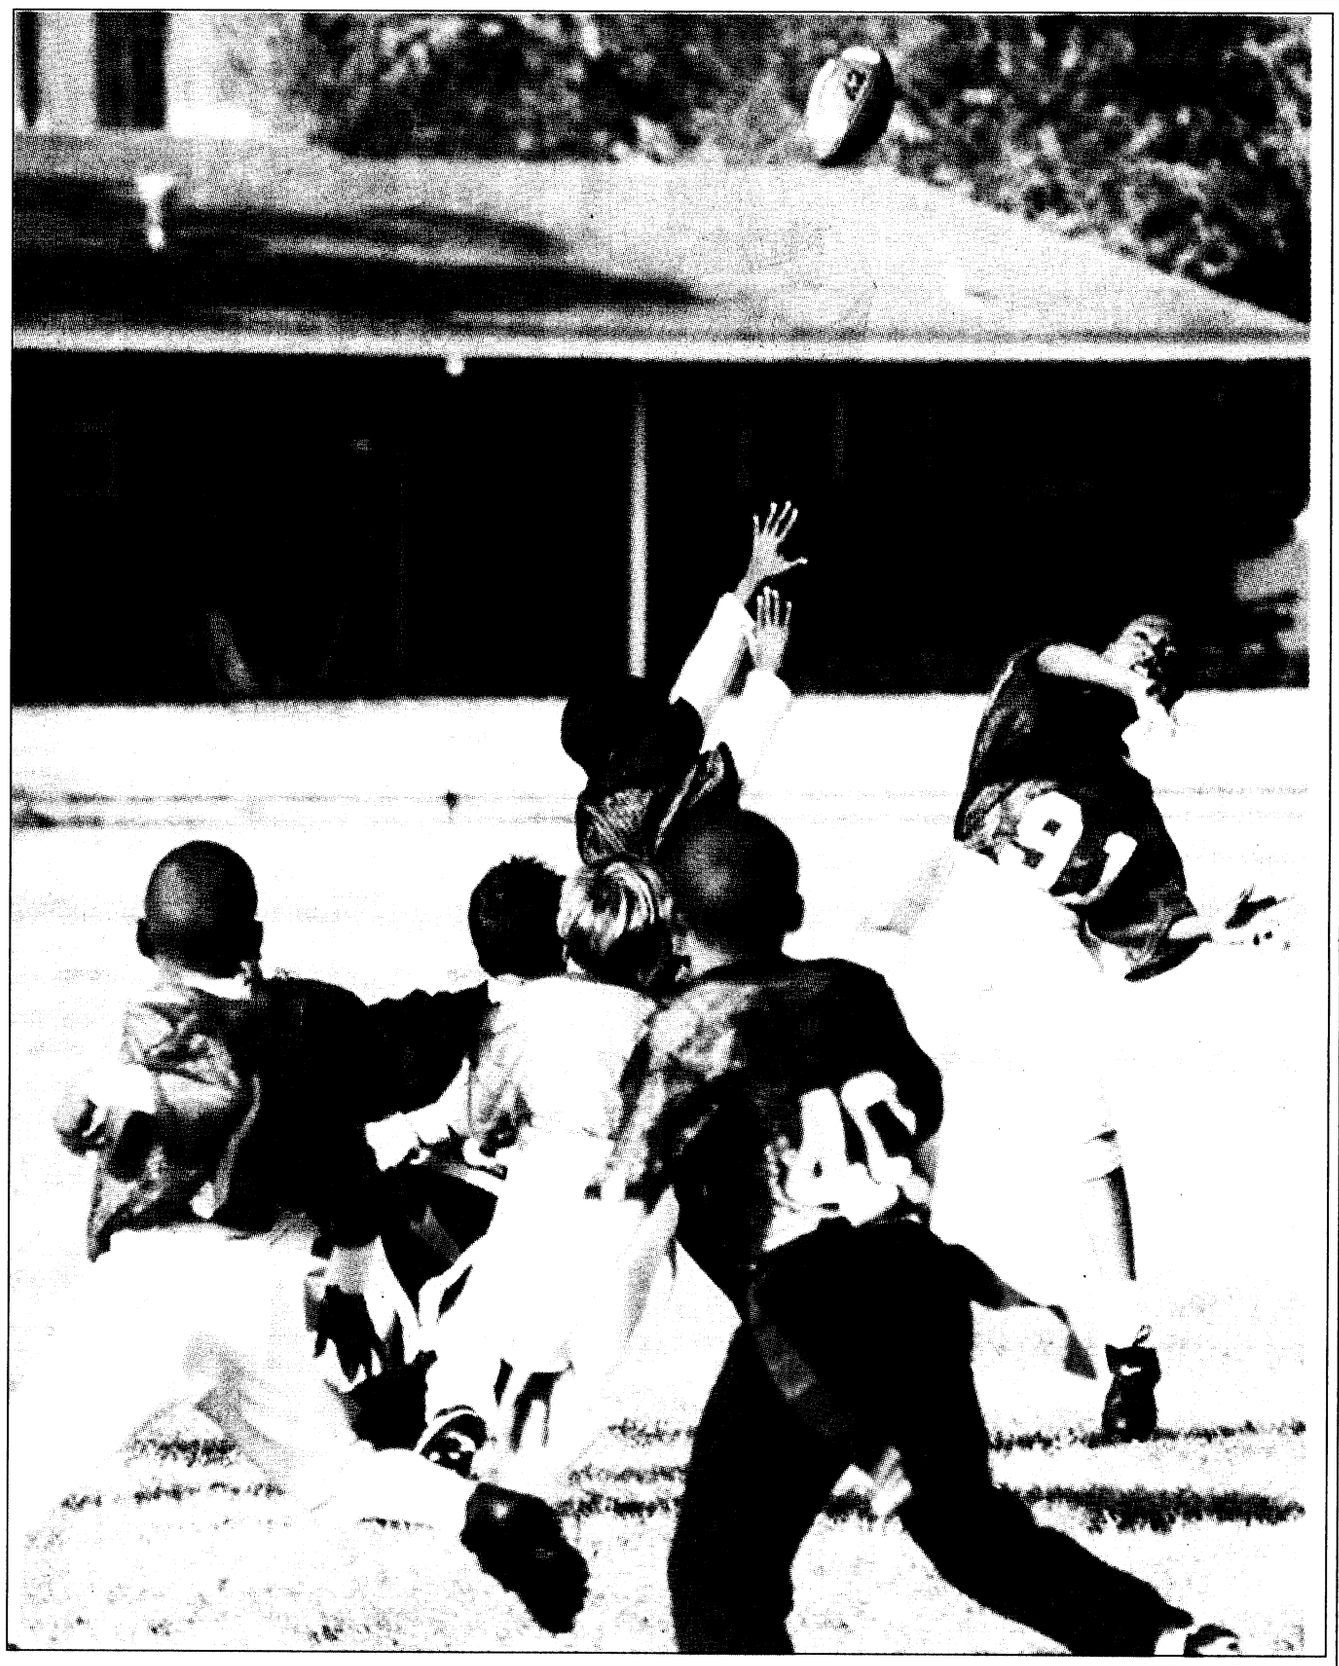
Tamara Powell, HHC, 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion, finished a close second in 23:14. Amy Wagner took third place with a time of 25:25.

For the boys 12 and younger, 12-year-old Brian Coronado came in first with a time of 22:14.

Kelley Maresca, who is 9 years old, finished second in 24:35. Josh McWhertor, who is 10 years old, took third in 26:24.

For the girls 12 and younger 8-year-old, Dwealianne won the race in 35:46, while in traditional Native American clothes and moccasins.

Seven-year-old Annabell Garcia finished second in 37:58. The youngest competitor, 6-year-old Cristina Cunningham, finished third running the 5K course in 41:30.



Not all the competitors ran to place for the best time.

There were father-son teams, mother-daughter teams, and true to Army style, the 283rd Army Band ran in formation singing cadence as they ran the route all showing support for Native Americans across the nation.

Bulldogs fly past Vikings

Dogs rough start ends in 30-12 win

Shaquile Shaw, Viking's quarterback, throws a pass during the 7- to 8-year old Youth services flag football game Saturday. Although the pass was complete, Shaw and the rest of the Vikings were unable to stop the Bulldog defense and fell to the dogs, 30-12.

A mobile offense and solid defense led the Bulldogs to a victory over the Vikings during the first 7- to 8-year-old flag football game held Saturday.

The Bulldogs who love to point at other teams and say they are better — are better. On the opening kickoff Bulldog DeAndre Murphy grabbed the ball and glided passed the Vikings entire defense running for 55 yards and the first touchdown of the game.

The Vikings were stopped on their first possession giving the Bulldogs another chance early in the game to score. Bulldog running back, Demetruis Boulware, ran for 40 yards on his first carry and Murphy finished the job when he found the endzone's right corner for his second touchdown of the game. Quarterback Jorden Goodman ran for the extra point shutting, the Vikings out at the end of the first quarter 13-0.

But the Vikings had a little something for the Bulldogs on the second quarter opening drive. Crosby Adams swept right for 12-yards and earned a Vikings first down. Then quarterback Shaquille Shaw directed a fake reverse to the left side, ran for 40 yards and a Vikings touchdown.

Viking Brendon Fox, penetrated the Bulldogs offensive line and stopped their drive short when he caught Goodman behind the line of scrimmage on a fourth down. The Vikings wasted no time finding the endzone when Adams evaded several tackles with a series of twists and fancy footwork.

The Bulldogs went to the air on their next drive. On fourth and long, Goodman connected with receiver Raishawn Bennett for a 20-yard reception and a 40-yard run for the third Viking touchdown. Goodman made the extra point after busting into the endzone. With seconds left in the half Bulldog Gregoire Thomas earned a safety and at the whistle the score was 23-12.

The Bulldogs continued to dominate offensively during the second half and capitalized on an interception made by Boulware. Boulware ran 20 yards after the interception and found the endzone for the fourth Bulldog touchdown.

The Vikings defense sparked momentarily on the Bulldogs next drive when Fox broke up a first down attempt by putting pressure on the Bulldog's backfield and Adams making a touchdown saving tackle.

Well into the fourth quarter, the Vikings earned a needed first down on a roughing the passer penalty and attempted to move the ball into Bulldog territory but the Bulldog's defense was relentless.

After stopping the Vikings the Bulldogs ran a reverse and Murphy made the final touchdown of the game.

The Vikings earned an A+ for effort and the Bulldogs earned the victory 35-12.

One More Bridge to Cross

Lowering the Cost of War

The Last Hundred Yards author takes exciting look into past battles through the eyes of enemy infantrymen. Trends in their highly deceptive technique reveal safer individual/small-unit skills for U.S. soldiers. There's a more effective & fun way to train. Change The way the World ages.
Alterra, the largest operator of private assisted living health care residences, with 450 locations in 28 states, has opened over 100 new residences in the last year—and we haven't stopped yet! We're looking for top-notch health care professionals to join our team. We have the following opportunities available in Michigan, Ohio, Minnesota, Indiana, and Wisconsin:
Residence Directors - RN/LPN
Proactively guide overall operations for one of our residences. Your varied role will encompass direct oversight of all managers including staff development, budget control, and the enhancement of optimal workflow. Requires: BS/BA plus 1-2 years of experience with health care residence direction and Alzheimer's/dementia care. May consider RNs and LPNs with the right combination of clinical and supervisory experience.
Health Care Coordinators - RN
Supervise/administer nursing care and clinical support staff; facilitate in-house ancillary services; and monitor the physical, psychological, and social needs of residents. Requires: current RN license, experience working with geriatric populations and Alzheimer's/dementia, and 2 years of management experience.
Resident Care Coordinators - LPN
Handle many of the administrative components of our caregiving. You will monitor resident care staff performance, coordinate HR-related issues, handle scheduling, perform daily/monthly safety checks, and communicate resident's condition changes. You will also share call duties and provide clinical support as needed. Requires: 1-2 years of related experience, supervisory and training experience, and familiarity with Windows 95.
Caregivers
Respond to patient calls/needs and assist with daily personal care, meals, and transportation of residents. Related experience preferred.
Help Alterra change the way the world ages—with dignity and comfort! If you would like to explore these opportunities, as well as those available in areas across the country, please forward your resume to: Alterra, HR Dept./EH, 450 N. Sunnyslope Road, Suite 300, Brookfield, WI 53005. Fax: (414) 938-3204. Ph: (800) 236-3454 ext. 5286. E-mail: employment@assisted.com EOE, M/F/D/V.

Post steps up DUI enforcement

Loaded 45 keeps fatality rates down

Sgt. David Rose gives a field sobriety test to an impaired motorist after making a traffic stop on I-185. The stop is part of an increased effort by military police to take impaired drivers off the road during the holidays.

The fatality rate on America's highways was lower than projected this past holiday weekend, and military police officials are working to keep that trend continuing throughout the rest of the year.

'Loaded 45' is the increased effort by military police to keep Fort Benning's roads safe during the 45 days of the holiday season that officially began Thanksgiving Day and will run through Jan. 4, according to Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, law enforcement division, provost marshal's office.

"During this time of year there are more people on the roadways and unfortunately, that equates to more alcohol-related accidents," Kelley said. "Loaded 45 is part of our aggressive patrolling campaign to take impaired and dangerous drivers off the road."

While Kelley declined to give the total number of military police involved in the driving-under-the-influence detection effort, he said there will be additional patrols that focus entirely on combing the streets of post to find dangerous and impaired drivers.

"Especially this time of year, people are going to go out and have a few drinks to celebrate the season," he said. "We aren't asking you not to drink; we are asking if you do drink, not to drive."

In Georgia the blood-alcohol content for being considered legally intoxicated is .08 percent, and according to Kelley, many holiday party goers may not realize they are above the limit.

"Alcohol affects different people different ways," he said. "We have seen people in here that had a BAC of nearly three times the legal limit and the only apparent signs of intoxication was the odor of alcohol and a slight decline in motor skills.

MP's dedication keeps post safe

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Assist. Protect. Defend.

It's the motto of the U.S. Army Military Police Corps — a motto that came alive Nov. 21 when more than 3,000 U.S. Army School of the America's protesters illegally marched onto post, and military police personnel were there to keep the peace.

More than 350 law enforcement personnel from Fort Benning's military police companies and Department of Defense police logged hundreds of hours during the three-day protest against the school to ensure the safety of both the protesters and the residents of Fort Benning.

But the three-day protection effort wasn't the first time these enforcers logged outrageous hours to ensure the safety of those who live, work and play on post.

"We have one of the few jobs in the Army that require us to have personnel working 24-hours a day, seven days a week," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, law enforcement division, provost marshal's office. "While logging all of those hours can be tough on all of us, the job satisfaction we get from doing this makes it all worth it."

Master Sgt. David Jones, who has logged nearly 20 years in the military police corps, said he came in like many young military police personnel thinking he was going to get the experience and get out. But he said there is something about being an MP that means so much more than just being a cop.

"We are cops sure, we enforce the laws, but it goes way beyond that," he said. "We are Soldiers first, and the camaraderie we share goes further than you'll find anywhere else.

> "These guys and gals sacrifice their own personal time and give up time with their families to keep Fort Benning safe."
> — Lt. Col. Terry Kelley
> Chief, law enforcement division

"I guess that is why I have done this for almost 20 years now," he said.

While Jones and Kelley agreed the job took the knowledge of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, post regulations and state and federal laws, it takes more than just the knowledge of the laws to be a successful military police person.

"An MP has to be a medic, a lawyer, a friend, a mediator and a counselor to be successful," he said. "People expect it from us, and that is what we have to do."

Going above and beyond those things that MPs are expected to do is what Kelley said makes military police the best in the law enforcement field.

"There is always a story of an MP, who is off-duty, stopping to help someone change a tire on his way home or somehow assisting someone in need, not because they have to, but because they want to.

"It is what being an MP is all about," Kelley said.

While the sense of unselfish service and devotion to duty is always on the minds of the men and women who wear the MP brassard, Kelley said sometimes it is hard to maintain that solid sense of devotion.

"We are the people who are often seen as the bad guy, thought harshly of until someone needs our protection or help," he said. "It is a little discouraging sometimes, when all you hear are the negatives, but it is the intangibles that make the job worth doing — the thank you notes and letters, a pat on the back or just a smile on the face of a parent when you have helped them or their child — that makes this all worth it."

For many of these law enforcement professionals, that worth has come at a price.

"These guys and gals sacrifice their own personal time and give up time with their families to keep Fort Benning safe," Kelley said. "But they know that if they would ever need anything, whether it be day or night, they can call one of their partners and they would be there for them.

"The military police corps is more than just a corps — it's an extended family," he said.

Aviation officials say skies will be Y2K friendly

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

This is the fifth part in an eight-part series on Fort Benning's preparations for the problems associated with the year 2000.

With the new decade approaching faster than holiday shoppers after the last Pokemon toy, merchants and business people world-wide are less than a month away from the dawning of the year 2000, a year they fear may bring the computer-based business world to a standstill.

While the rest of the world is left scrambling to find the solution for the new year mystery, Fort Benning officials have been researching and planning for the event for nearly three years. And according to the post's top aviation technology official, Fort Benning's computer-controlled airspace will be safe after the big ball drops in Times Square.

"All of our microprocessor-controlled equipment is the only element of our operation that will be affected by the year 2000, since it is the only equipment that is date and day dependent," said Paul Brown, an electronics technician at Lawson Army Airfield and Fort Benning's aviation Y2K coordinator. "All of that equipment has been updated and will be ready to function once the clock strikes midnight Dec. 31."

The problem that many computers will have once the new year hits calendars around the world is the inability to read the date. Many computers read the date as a two-digit abbreviation, but when the new year arrives that number sequence will be '00 — a binary code that will send many computers to end all computing operations.

Post leaders gather for QUEST conference at Uchee

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Leaders from across post gathered at Uchee Creek Lodge Tuesday and Wednesday for the Commanding General's Quality Executive Steering Team Offsite Conference.

During the conference, 55 senior leaders including commanders, directors and staff officers, got together as a part of their individual strategic planning processes, said Pat Porter, senior management analyst for the Quality Management Division.

"During the conference, they went back and reviewed Fort Benning's mission, goals, objectives," she said. "They did that to revalidate them and make changes as necessary."

As a part of that process, the leaders were briefed by members of key process teams and key support process teams, said Sara Hodges, chief of the Quality Management Division.

"Briefings from them included their status on where they are in their key process teams and what they're doing," Hodges explained.

Hodges added, the leaders were also given a training session on what the Army Performance Improvement Criteria system is by Col. John Latimer, Fort Benning's chief of staff and facilitator for the conference.

All of the briefings and training the leaders participated in helps focus the quality of services on post, said Hodges. That quality will be looked at in January when the post undergoes its next Department of the Army Army Community of Excellence site visit and evaluation.

Latimer said he hopes the conference participants gained a better understanding of the total Army quality picture.

"I want them to understand that the real value of the Army Community of Excellence process is that it makes us look at ourselves, evaluate where we are and where we want to go," he said. "It makes us better as an installation and as our part of the Army."

Proposed holiday celebrates sharing time with family

commentary

Happy Christmas. Happy Hanukkah. Happy New Years. Happy St. Patrick's Day. Happy Easter. Happy Mothers Day. Happy Fathers Day. Happy, happy, happy, happy, happy everything!

Alright, does that cover them all? It seems like every month we have some holiday we are supposed to be happy about. And don't forget all those other lovely days where you are supposed to show someone you care, like bosses day or secretary day, or hug your hairdresser day, or I've never had a cavity day.

It's too bad that all this caring and happiness usually comes at the expense of our bank accounts. "You don't have to care, just buy them something and they'll never know the difference." Wouldn't it be better if businesses just saved us the song and dance and used this as their attention grabber?

I know that this is the holiday season, and I'm supposed to be full of cheer and good will toward my fellow people, but I just can't seem to find it. Not when I open the newspaper and see "Holiday shopping up 64 percent." And especially not when I flip through the channels and have some commercial telling me that my mother will love me better than everyone else if only I would buy her the better baker bread maker.

It's everywhere. You can't turn around without being blasted with the notion that the only way to show you care is by buying lots and lots of gifts — big expensive gifts. And the bigger and more expensive the presents are, the more the recipient will love you once they get it.

I just don't know anymore. I want to believe that when we celebrate Christmas it's about the essence of the holiday and not about how many presents can fit under one tree. But it seems with each passing year I come to realize that Christmas as a kid and Christmas as an adult are two completely different things.

No longer do I get that surge of excitement when Christmas is a few days away, only a sense of dread that I haven't finished my shopping and I'm already a few hundred in the hole. Is this how it's supposed to be? If so, I think I'll go back to being if that's OK.

The thing is I don't know who to blame — if anyone. I mean people are just trying to do what they feel is best. When little Tommy swears up and down he will die if he doesn't get the newest Pokemon video game for Christmas, mom or dad may actually visualize the tragic death of their son after he's finished opening his presents and finds he didn't get what he wanted. All parents are trying to do is give their kids the best Christmas ever by making their wishes come true, even if it means taking out a second mortgage.

When I realized there was no where to place the blame and no way to stop the downward spiral of holiday commercialism I came up with my own idea. Why not create a new "special day" to add to the gagillion already out there. Only this special day would be like no other. This would be a day corporate America could never touch. A day where you wouldn't find yourself racing to the store at the last minute in hopes of finding a suitable card and batch of wilted flowers.

It's called the Thank Goodness I Can Show You I Care Without Buying You Something Day.

I know it sounds impossible to have a special day where you don't have to dish out the green, but follow me on this one. See, I figured this day would be a day where you celebrate everyone you love, by actually showing them. Instead of spending the money on them, you have to spend the time on them. This isn't your average over-priced, commercial-ridden holiday; it's a real holiday with a real meaning.

Instead of asking someone what they want, you have to think about something they would really enjoy and plan it out all without the help of Washington, Lincoln, Jackson and Grant. Sound difficult?

Wouldn't it be nice to start showing our children that money doesn't buy their happiness. That it's possible to show someone how much you love and appreciate them without dishing out the bucks. That, quite possibly, someone's time and affection is worth more than something off the shelf.

Who knows, maybe Thank Goodness I Can Show You I Care Without Buying You Something Day would end up spilling over into other holidays or even become an everyday thing. Maybe we could even bring back some of that old fashioned spirit to some of the other holidays. It's a nice thought isn't it?

The thing is, I haven't come up with a set date yet for when we could celebrate TGICSYICWBYS Day, so until I do, I encourage everyone to give it a whirl. I mean what could it hurt. And besides, once you recover from your New Year's festivities and you've paid your first payment on the credit card bill, what could be a better holiday to celebrate.

Holiday season awareness provides more enjoyable days for all except crooks

Staff Sgt. Jeffrey Cassell
Directorate of Public Safety

The holiday season is upon us. This holiday season, don't let the spirit of giving lull you into giving burglars, muggers and pickpockets a better chance to do their dirty work.

Crooks love the holidays as much as everyone else, but they love this time chiefly because it's an opportune time to commit crime.

The situation is more ripe than other times of the year for pilferage crimes; homes jam-packed with glittering gifts, stores, malls and downtown streets teeming with unsuspecting shoppers.

People are stressed out rushing around and are careless as they look for last minute gifts, trying to get everything done. It's enough to make a crook giddy with holiday joy for all opportunities presented.

Last year during the holiday season, there were 67 reported larcenies of private property.

This year, you can avoid being one of the new statistics by following the following crime prevention tips.

• When out shopping never carry large amounts of cash.

• If you place packages and other valuables in your car while shopping, make sure they are out of sight.

• Never store presents in your outside storage shed.

• Make sure that all bikes are registered and secured by a lock and chain and brought in th hours of darkness.

By following these crime prevention tips, you and your family will enjoy a safe holiday.

Leopoldville survivors remembered

I am writing to thank the men and women of Fort Benning for helping to make the recent commemoration of the Leopoldville Disaster a very special occasion.

Although Senate business prevented me from attending the activities, I understand that that Soldiers and civilians of the Fort Benning Garrison could not have been more accommodating hosts. Our veterans were thrilled by the VIP treatment they received during their visit to the post. They were particularly honored by your personal participation in the ceremonies. As you may know, my uncle, Pfc. Allan Dorgan, died on the Leopoldville. Thus, I can assure that the commemoration meant a great deal to the remaining survivors and to the families of the victims. They have finally received the recognition and honor they deserve.

Senator Byron L. Dorgan

Silver Wings performance exceptional

On Nov. 6, 1999, the Fort Benning Command Exhibition Parachute Team, the Silver Wings, performed at Georgia Southern University's Paulson Stadium prior to a football game.

The professionalism, winning attitude and crowd appeal that the team provided was nothing short of exceptional. The Southern Boosters alumni, students and fans all owe a debt of gratitude for allowing the group to perform.

I assure you that we were extremely impressed with the team's skills as well as the positive role model the Silver Wings set. They truly are ambassadors for the United States Military.

Parachute team steals show; crowd in awe

I am sure you are aware the Command Exhibition Parachute Team performed at our Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival this past Labor Day weekend, and they stole the show. Their performance was outstanding, and the crowd loved seeing them. They put on a fine demonstration and really made us proud to see such an exciting spectacle.

We had over 18,000 people attend our festival so we consider it extremely successful and will repeat it next year. I look forward to working with you again as we plan for the 2000 event.

Medal of Honor awarded after 27 years

On March 16, 1966 in the humid depths of Vietnam, a hero was born. While under heavy fire from North Vietnamese forces, Sgt. Alfred Rascon faced grim odds. Loss of his M-60 gunner and many key members of his platoon had all but ensured the death of every man Rascon had led into the jungle that fateful day. Yet Rascon would not allow that to happen. Using his own body he shielded wounded members of his force from potentially fatal grenade and weapons fire. After suffering multiple wounds, including a shrapnel injury which would split one side of his face open, Rascon would crawl through intense fire and impossible odds to retrieve the M-60 which would save his men's lives.

Even after the heated conflict, Rascon refused treatment until each of his men had been evacuated.

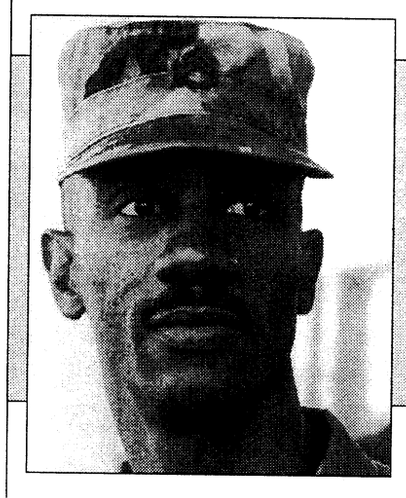
Finally, after 27 years Rascon will finally receive recognition for his magnanimous acts of courage and selfless service.

Within two years Rascon is expected to be awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor.

And his reaction? "I was their medic ... that was my job." No images of glory, no overriding sense of patriotism, only duty. For there are only a few times we can be told the textbook definitions of Loyalty, Duty, Respect, Selfless Service, Honor, Integrity and Personal Courage before we must each begin to realize what these values truly mean.

We have not been trained to march gallantly into enemy fire singing hymns of praise to our republic. We have been taught to creep and crawl through mud, barbed wire and pain to find our enemy and kill him. Not because it is the noble or glorious thing to do, but because we are the Infantry, and that is our job.

Over the last 13 weeks we have each undergone changes. The soft and fallible substance we were has been refined and tempered into a sharp and ready tool. When the day comes that we are called to served our country I know each of us will have the skills to overcome pain and personal suffering to do our duty. Now we must go face new challenges with an open mind and a ready hand. We must apply values training to our lives, but living them in what we do and how we do it.



Like Rascon we must do. So that in the battlefields of the 21st century we can each stand and proudly say: "I am the Infantry, follow me."

Woodpecker target of conservation effort

Refuse reduces animal habitat erosion problems

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Glass collected is ground and used in erosion control.

When Fort Benning residents place their yard waste and recyclables out by the curb each week they probably have little idea that some of those items are being used to help the red-cockaded woodpecker.

Soil conservationists on post are taking ground glass, wooden pallets and yard waste and using them for ground cover in training areas such as A.O. Green, a bivouac training site.

The goal is to reduce erosion in the red-cockaded woodpecker foraging areas on post, thus saving pine trees that are homes for the endangered birds.

A Jeopardy Biological Opinion in 1994 mandated that erosion control practices be implemented in the red-cockaded woodpecker habitat, Gary Hollon, soil conservationist, Natural Resources Management Branch, Directorate of Public Works, said.

The roots of pine trees in the A.O. Green area were exposed due to heavy foot traffic, which cannot be halted in an Infantry training site. Therefore, the conservationists have found ways to prevent erosion and save the post money on materials at the same time.

"That's how using the recyclables came about for us," Hollon said. "We used mulch created from the recycled materials, added it to top soil, and put it around the trees to keep them from dying."

Grass was planted to stabilize the soil in sections at A.O. Green that are not used heavily, and Hollon put up signs Monday asking Soldiers to keep off the grass.

Hollon started using recyclables from post in conservation projects about a year ago.

"Fort Benning has an interservice support agreement. The U.S. Department of Agriculture's Natural Resources Conservation Service provides service to Fort Benning and the post reimburses them for their work."

When Caren Eubanks, conservationist with the U.S.D.A.'s NRCS, visits the Material Recovery Facility at Fort Benning it's "like going to the mall," she said.

"Every time I come out here to the recycling center, I see something new."

In all, Eubanks estimated that the post saved $7,000 by using materials it already had available rather than purchasing them from the civilian sector.

At the A.O. Green site, the conservationists used geoweb — a black rubber accordian material — and filled it with ground glass which was processed at the recycling center — instead of sand. The glass is ground so finely that it is smooth and will not cut.

The geoweb and ground glass resembled a thick mat filled with sand. It was placed under the roof of a shed to prevent erosion from roof run off.

The geoweb was left over from Desert Storm and was used at no cost.

Railroad ties from tracks that have been moved on post were used in other areas as erosion control.

Georgia Power had cleared trees and brush for power lines and some of that waste was ground with the wooden pallets to create mulch.

What was used from the recycle center equaled 320-cubic yards of ground pallets and yard waste. If top soil and mulch had been purchased, it would have cost $6,400, Eubanks said.

The ground glass and geoweb saved the post $371, Eubanks said, and the railroad ties, about $150.

Walter Nichols, solid waste program manager for the Directorate of Public Works, is glad to see the materials being used because it reduces the amount of waste that goes to off-post landfills.

"All this stuff out here is for Fort Benning to use," Nichols said.

"It might not be making money, but it is saving money and helping the environment."

Gulf war vets:

Field sanitation feedback needed for study

Austin Camocho
OASD to Secretary of Defense for Gulf War Illnesses

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense Office of the Special Assistant for Gulf War Illnesses is asking U.S. Army Gulf War veterans who served as field sanitation team members during the war to provide eyewitness accounting of potential environmental exposures. Investigators are seeking information from Army troops who served in Bahrain and Saudi Arabia during Operations Desert Shield and Storm and in Iraq and Kuwait during Operation Desert Storm in a search for potential linkages between environmental exposures and the illnesses that some veterans are experiencing.

"We really don't know a lot about what the Army field sanitation teams did and what they saw during the war. Their observations could have an impact on a variety of investigations," said a member of the environmental occupational exposure division.

Aside from hostile fire, the principal threats to force readiness are naturally occurring diseases and illnesses caused by environmental exposures. For example, hot and cold weather injuries, insects, pesticides, unpurified water, vehicle exhausts and other potentially hazardous elements prevalent in a deployment area can be real threats to troops. The responsibility to minimize those threats rests with the unit commander.

A field sanitation team's key responsibility is to advise and assist the unit commander in reducing unit disease and non-battle injury. Ultimately, the success or failure of a military operation can rest upon effective preventive medicine measures within operational units.

"The field sanitation team becomes the eyes and ears of the commander," said Col. Frank O'Donnell, M.D., director of medical outreach and issues for the special assistant's office.

"The team's attentiveness to the water and food supply, waste disposal and insect control is important to the mission because it impacts the effectiveness of the unit," he said.

Investigators in the Gulf War illnesses environmental division have had difficulty in obtaining feedback from Gulf War field sanitation personnel because this function is normally an additional duty and cannot be identified by occupational specialty codes. They request individuals call the special assistant's office toll-free number at (800) 497-6261 to report their observations. Topics under investigation include food-service sanitation, water supplies, waste disposal practices, control of insects, medical threats associated with heat and cold during the war and team training.

This effort is part of a Department of Defense initiative to ensure that veterans' accounts of their Gulf War experiences are incorporated into investigations. To date, the office has published 14 case narratives, two environmental exposure reports and two information papers.

The Defense Department expects to use many of the findings and lessons learned from the Gulf War to implement changes to future DoD policy and doctrine that will increase readiness and improve service members' survivability in future deployments.

POLICE: Halt DUI

"But, conversely, we have seen people who were legally impaired after only a few drinks," he said. "That is why it is so important for those who drink not to drive. It is hard for many people to tell just how impaired they really are."

Since the increased enforcement effort kicked off last week, 25 motorists have been arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol and two have been arrested for driving under the influence of drugs.

More than one million motorists were injured in impaired driver related crashes in 1995, according to a Mothers Against Drunk Driving report. Of those, 17,000 were fatally injured as a result of drunk driving accidents during that year.

The Army-wide Loaded 45 program focuses on education as well as enforcement, according to Kelley. The increased visibility of the DUI detection patrols coupled with the alcohol education campaign, Kelley hopes is enough to steer the DUI statistics away from those who work, live and play at Fort Benning.

"The best thing for drivers to do during the holiday season is stay sober and drive defensively," Kelley said. "It's everyone's responsibility who drives to make this holiday season a safe and happy one for everyone."

Contractor rewires Fort Benning lights

Street lights are being rewired on post to ensure that they are all working properly.

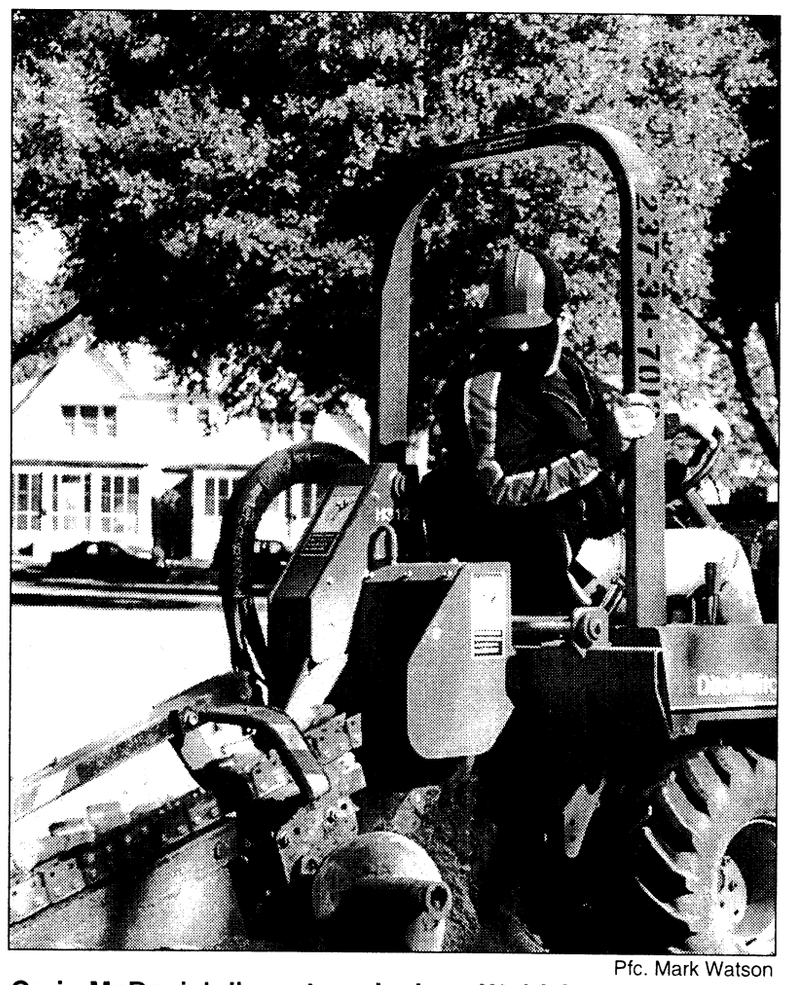
Sky Line Electric received the contract to lay new wire and then hook up the lights.

Some of the lights had burned out, had bad wiring or other electrical problems that needed attention.

Jim Welch, owner of Sky Line Electric said the job could be an ongoing project.

"Within several months, 80 percent of the problem lights could be fixed," he said.

The most recent is on Wold Avenue and Lumpkin Road. Crews have been digging a trench with a tractor, laying new wire, and replacing ballasts and other damaged electronics, said Jory Garnto, electrician for Sky Line Electric.



"We are getting all the lights back to a good working order, so the post will be lit again," he said.

Flint Energy took over the care of the street lights June 1 of this year, said Penny O'Connor, DPW office automation customer service clerk.

"Flint Energy (the company that contracted Sky Line Electric to revamp the street lighting system) has been doing a wonderful job of bringing the (lights) back up to a good working order," Welch said

"We have an upcoming project in Sand Hill to replace the wire of the lights there and should be starting within a week," he added.

Welch said, "We put out traffic cones to warn people, but we want the public to notice our workers and to treat the area like a school zone so no one is injured."

ment failure at Fort Benning's Lawson Army Airfield is one that Brown said is out of the question.

"We have taken all of the guidance passed down from both the Army Training and Doctrine Command and the Department of the Army to ensure the airfield continues operation the same high quality of operation it is now after the new year," he said. "We have worked with Federal Aviation officials to make sure all of our shared systems are in compliance with the Y2K standards and will be functioning after the new year."

While Brown said according to federal officials all of the FAA systems appear to be ready for the new year, and said the holiday airways as far as he could tell would be safe for those flying to and from their Christmas and New Years destinations.

"The FAA and the airlines have known about the Y2K problem for years and have worked very diligently," Brown said. "So they should be ready for the new year. The FAA has prepared us very well for the new year. The only problem travellers may see is from the airlines themselves."

While problems may plague the airlines, Brown said Fort Benning's systems are ready.

"We have taken every measure and inspected every system to ensure nothing stops or ends when the new year rolls around," he said. "But just in case, I will be in here at 6 a.m. making sure every thing is in order.

"It's just another day," he said. "I really don't forsee any problems."

Officer candidates learn about selfless service from former U.S. President Jimmy Carter

Officer Candidate Green Chandler
B Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt.

A group of candidates from Officer Candidates School recently witnessed a living piece of American history.

Eighty-eight candidates and 15 family members from B Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, visited the Maranatha Baptist Church in Plains, Ga., Nov. 14, for a prayer lesson taught by former U.S. President Jimmy Carter.

Basic Officer Candidate Harold Lynn said he was honored to attend the lesson.

"Anytime you can give leaders of America's fighting force a chance to see a piece of history, it's very memorable," Lynn said.

Although Lynn was surprised to be sitting in such a small church with a former president, he said he was impressed by Carter's ability to make everyone comfortable.

"It was good to see how down to earth he was," Lynn said. "He really has his priorities together in terms of God and country."

The lesson is a regular weekly service that Carter provides for the church, which is usually swelled beyond capacity with more than 90 percent visitors. Carter's lesson focused on reassessing individual values as the end of the millennium nears.

"How do we gage our success?" Carter said. "If I have a good job, a new car — if I'm President of the United States — does that make me successful?"

> "President Carter taught us that it's important to try to make an impact in life that affects others, not just yourself."
> —Capt. Floyd Sheldon
> B Company commander

Carter also spoke about his mission at the Carter Center and the challenge of working with various religious groups throughout the world to reach common goals.

Basic OC Richard Towner said Carter's lesson was especially pertinent to Class 1-00 because they will be the first commissioned Army officers of the year 2000. He said Carter's examples of lessons learned in the 20th century will be beneficial for the "Leaders of the Millennium," the class motto.

"Some things we need to start fresh on," Towner said. "But it's also important to apply the lessons that we've learned to our own way of thinking so that we don't make the same mistakes again."

Capt. Floyd Sheldon, commander of B Company, said the main benefit for the Soldiers who attended the lesson was to learn from a living example about a key Army value: selfless service.

"President Carter taught us that it's important to try to make an impact in life that affects others, not just yourself," Sheldon said.

Basic OC Shawn Morton, who attended the meeting with his wife Luette, son Julian and daughter Tyra, said he was surprised when Carter approached them after the lesson.

"He just walked straight up to us and said 'Do you want to take a picture?' " Morton said.

Although Morton's children are too young to know who they were taking a picture with, Morton said he will make sure that they never forget the moment.

"It's (picture) definitely going on the mantle at home," Morton said.

Sheldon said he was pleased 97 percent of the class voluntarily attended the lesson, and he plans to make it a regular event for future classes.

Army outlines phases of No Gun Ri review; webpage, toll-free number aid effort

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — As part of the Army's ongoing effort to conduct a full and comprehensive review of the No Gun Ri bridge incident, the Secretary of the Army, Louis Caldera, has approved a four phase plan that will ultimately lead to a written report for public release.

The approved plan incorporates the following phases: Phase I — Preparation; Phase II — Research and Interviews; Phase III — Review and Analysis; and Phase IV — Final Report.

"Your task is to ensure that the review is thorough and pursues every reasonable lead to enable us to determine the facts as quickly and accurately as possible," Caldera wrote in the directive to Lt. Gen. Michael Ackerman, the Army's Inspector General and head of the IG Review Team charged with implementing the plan.

"Though the review process is complex, our charter is relatively simple: To determine the facts of what happened at the No Gun Ri bridge, no matter where they may lead, and to cooperate fully with our counterparts from the Republic of Korea" Ackerman said.

Work has been underway on the Plan's first two phases since late September, and formal bilateral coordination with the Republic of Korea commenced with the recent trip to Korea by Ackerman and members of the IG Review Team.

To further its review, the Army has established a web site and a toll free telephone number to enable those with information about the No Gun Ri bridge incident to provide it directly to the Army's Office of the Inspector General. "The web site and toll free phone number are excellent avenues for Korean War veterans and others to tell us what they know," Ackerman said.

All persons with information on the No Gun Ri bridge incident, especially Korean War veterans who served with the 1st Cavalry Division in late July 1950, are encouraged to use the web site and toll-free number to communicate with the review team.

The toll-free phone number is 1-877-379-5595. This line is staffed from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Eastern Standard Time, Monday-Friday. Callers can leave a recorded message after hours, and the call will be returned the next business day. Callers can also use this number to fax information 24 hours a day.

To get to the No Gun Ri web site, click the No Gun Ri link on the Army homepage (www.army.mil). In addition, information can be e-mailed directly to the Office of the Inspector General through this link.

Information can also be mailed to: Department of the Army, Office of the Inspector General, Attn: No Gun Ri Review, 1700 Army Pentagon, Washington, DC 20310-1700.

The IG Review Team's efforts will culminate in a final written report that the Secretary of the Army will forward to the Secretary of Defense for approval and public release. During the course of the review, the IG Review Team will report to Patrick T. Henry, Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs, whom Caldera appointed as his senior representative to oversee the Team's efforts.

Henry also serves as the Secretary's representative on the Department of Defense Steering Group for this matter appointed by the Secretary of Defense, William Cohen. The Steering Group is coordinating the work of the review and ensuring that the full resources of the entire Department are brought to bear on the complex issues raised by the No Gun Ri bridge incident.

Additionally, Cohen has invited the assistance of eight outside experts, who are providing advice and guidance on the review.

Soldiers compete in company boxing tournament

Story and photos by Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

With the theme song of the Rocky movies playing in the background, Soldiers of A Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Training Brigade, entered their sawdust pit, formed a human ring and began a company boxing meet.

Shortly after noon Nov. 24, the company semi-finals began. There were three rounds for each bout lasting a long 30 seconds.

Five weight classes were created to keep the boxers on somewhat of the same weight level.

First and second platoons boxed each other, while third and fourth platoons went head to head making 10 matches in all.

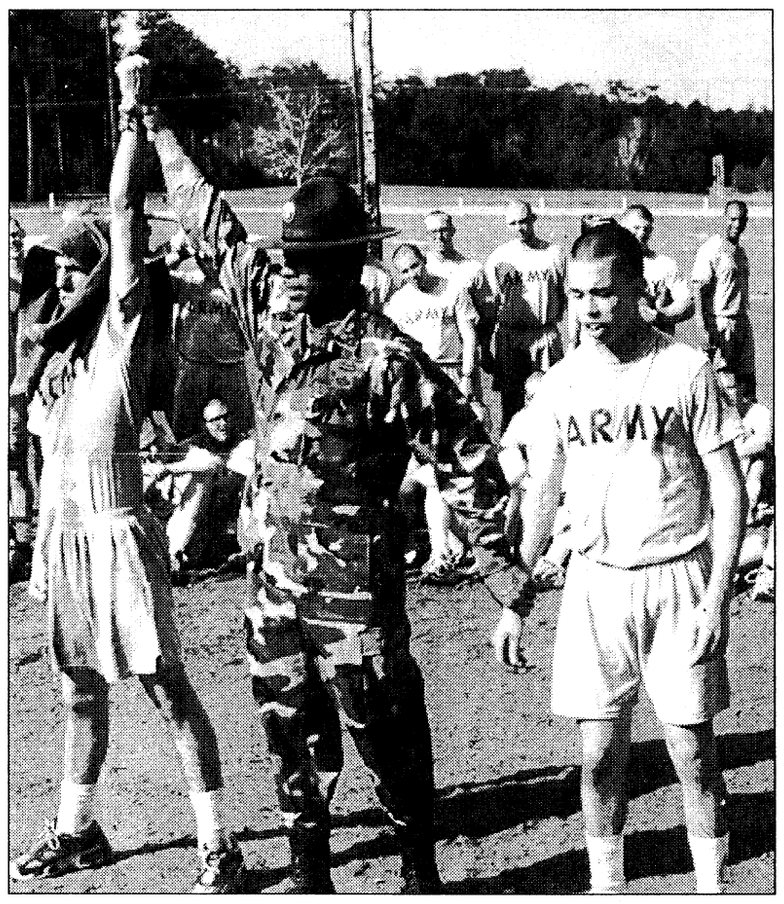
"The boxing match was held to help build the warrior spirit," said Capt. Tito Villanueva, commanding officer of A Company.

Although separate from the trainees' hand-to-hand combat training, some of the boxers believed it to be a second part of hand-to-hand training.

"I used some of the skills I learned in hand-to-hand combat training, like the hook and jab, in the matches," said Pvt. Arnett Bodin, winner of the 170-pound-and-up class. Although some training was given to the boxers, they didn't fight in the same manner as seen on television.

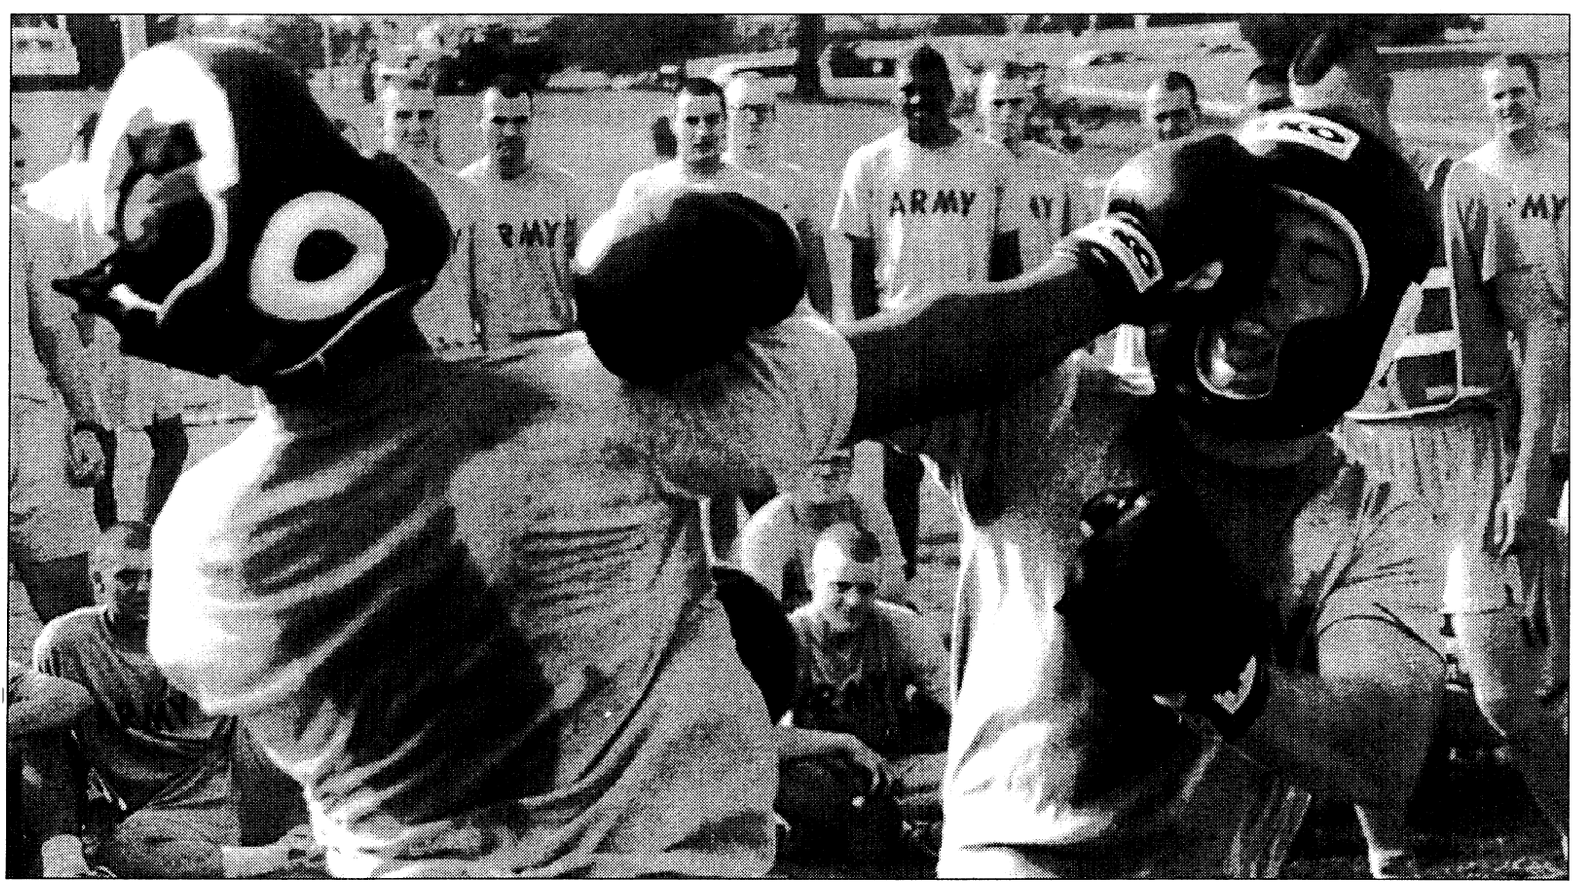
"I got my lip busted open in the match that was more like a brawl rather than a fight," said Pvt. Jon Kelley.

"We are trained to fight as a team, but sometimes we need our individual strength, and I think that the boxing brought out our self confidence," said Spc. Matt Hayes.



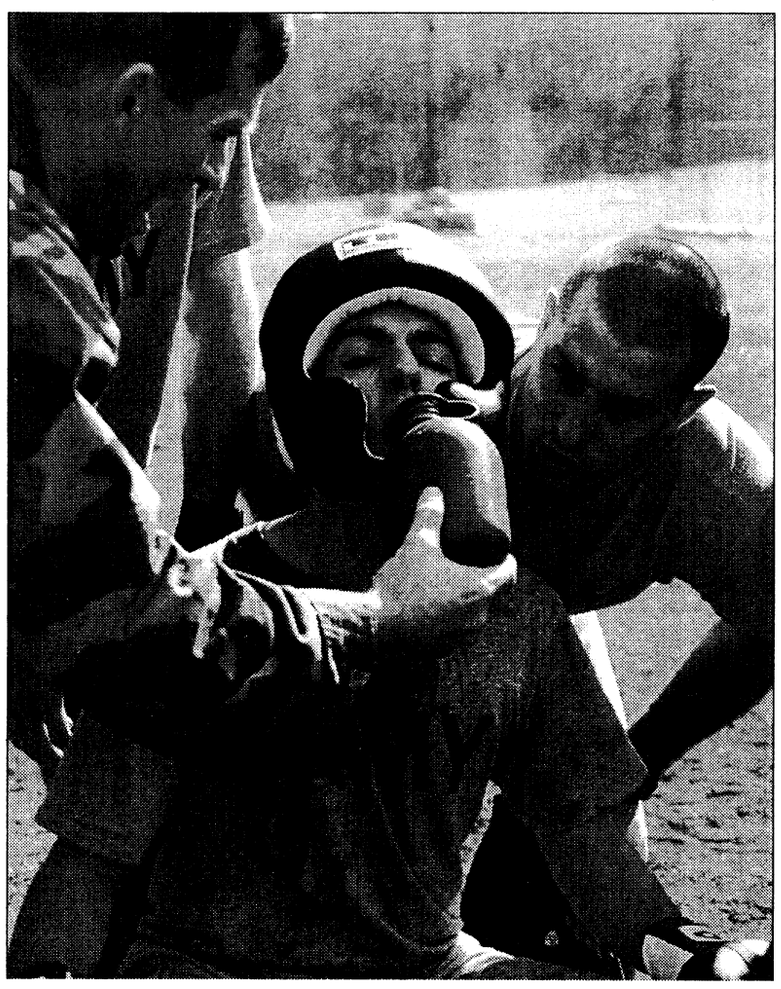
"The drill sergeants from each platoon assessed their Soldiers and then selected one for each of the five weight classes. Those Soldiers were given more instructions on boxing by one of the drill sergeants who actually boxed for the U.S. All Army Team," Villanueva said referring to Staff Sgt. Jeffery Pannell.

"The Soldiers were really aggressive, but no serious injuries were caused. There was only one private who got a sore shoulder, and there were a few bloody noses," he said.



"It was a fun afternoon that built unity among the Soldiers and gave them something different to do," he added.

Pvt. Ocy Moore, 150-170-pound winner said, "There were no grudges caused from the fight. It was just a good time for everyone." The boxing was just one part of the Soldiers' training.



"If not for the drill sergeants, none of the training would be successful. They have a high standard of training that makes their Soldiers successful," said Villanueva.

Staff Sgt. Jeffery Pannell names Pvt. Bryan Shockey the winner as his opponent, Pvt. Brandon Morse, watches.

OCS candidates learn new combative techniques

Officer Candidate Green Chandler
B Company, 3rd Bn. (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt.

For the past decade the Army has referenced FM 21-150 for its standard hand-to-hand combatives training. That may be about to change.

B Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment is one of a few units at Fort Benning that has recently adopted a combatives program based on Brazilian Jujitsu. Jujitsu is a style of combat that was popularized by Royce Gracie and the Ultimate Fighting Championship, a multi-discipline, submission fighting tournament.

Intermediate Officer Candidate Jason Biel has been teaching this style of combatives to Class 1-00 for six weeks. He said the Jujitsu style of combatives was first introduced in the 75th Ranger Regiment and is currently in draft form.

He said he thinks it's superior to the old hand-to-hand combatives in FM 21-150 because it involves more realistic moves, which can be learned in less time.

"The old hand-to-hand has a lot of 'high-end moves.' It had things that you had to practice a lot if you expect to use," Biel said

An example of this is the cross-hoc take-down, Biel said.

"If you try to execute this move in a real fight, it's probably not going to work," he explained. "But it's one of the most popular moves for martial arts experts because they're professionals."

> "We want Soldiers who have the willingness to close the distance and bring the fight to the enemy. History shows us that those who bring the fight are the ones who win."
> — Officer Candidate Jason Biel
> B Co., 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

1st Sgt. Emmet Maunakea, B Co., agreed that the Jujitsu style is more beneficial because it works on several soldierly skills such as physical toughness, controlled aggression and agility.

He said Class 1-00 is learning the drills fast and showing improvement.

"It's helped a lot of the females. Many have done well against males and it has built up their confidence," Maunakea said.

Basic Officer Candidate Janet Thomas said she has learned a lot from the combatives training and could imagine using the training in a real situation.

"Even if you don't remember everything, if you drill enough, some key things are likely to come to you," Thomas said.

Maunakea said he thinks the program should be adopted by more units outside of special operations, but Army leaders have to be willing to change. He added, a unit's level of physical fitness should first be assessed to avoid injury.

"The average OCS candidate is a very physically fit person, so it's less of a factor," Maunakea said. "But there's some tough moves, and units have to understand that the possibility of injury is there."

Although Jujitsu style is often used in the Ultimate Fighting Championships, Biel said what he teaches is completely different from any sort of "no holds barred" competition. He said the training is geared toward realistic maneuvers in realistic situations.

"Most fights go to the ground pretty quick," Biel said. "That's why we want to teach practical moves based on leverage."

Biel said the overall goal of the training is to develop the individual's physical confidence that will lead to victory on the battlefield.

"The end state is that we want Soldiers who have the willingness to close the distance and bring the fight to the enemy," Biel said. "History shows us that those who bring the fight are the ones who win."

RTB visits Japanese Ranger School

Lt. Col. Keith P. Antonia
5th Ranger Training Battalion

At the request of U.S. Army Japan, the Ranger Training Brigade sent a seven-man team of commanders and sergeants major to observe Japanese Fuji Ranger School training Nov. 11-19.

The Japanese Ranger School was formed in 1957 when Fort Benning sent Ranger instructors to Japan to establish a training course that would focus on anti-guerrilla operations. In 1958, the school started its first cycle.

Since that time, there has been no documented record of continued relationships between Fort Benning, the RTB, or any other U.S. Infantry unit. Based on previous Japanese guidelines, the school had been limited in growth, scope of mission, and training.

However, revised guidelines were approved by the Japanese Diet this past summer allowing the Japanese Ground Self-Defense Force to dramatically expand the scope of its operations.

This allowed the JGSDF Ground Staff Office to request support under U.S. Army Japan's Observer Exchange Program to review training at the Fuji Ranger School.

The purpose of the visit was to re-establish a relationship with the U.S. Army Ranger School, provide feedback to the Japanese Ranger School on their training and operations, and establish communication with the RTB to enhance future Japanese Ranger school training and growth.

To accomplish these objectives, the RTB team observed four missions conducted by the Japanese Ranger school during their field training exercise. These missions consisted of raids, an ambush, and a fire support exercise.

At the end of each mission, the Rangers discussed the operation with their Japanese counterparts and exchanged ideas on tactics, techniques, and procedures.

Generally, the Japanese Ranger course is very similar to the U.S. Army course. The objectives for the school are nearly identical to the objectives of the U.S. course.

The physical and mental stress for the Japanese Ranger student is very similar to the U.S. Army Ranger student experience. Their planning, troop leading procedures, rehearsals, reconnaissance, and actions on the objective are all very similar to our own tactics, techniques and procedures.

Their after actions review process is a mirror image of the U.S. Army process.

In addition, the focus of their Ranger instructors was the same as the U.S. Army Ranger instructor: teach, coach, mentor, then evaluate.

The RTB's Observer Exchange team's mission was a great success. Both U.S. and Japanese Ranger cadre benefitted from the exchange.

0PLDC waivers available to promotable Soldiers deployed outside U.S.

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Specialists who are deployed outside the continental United States are eligible to receive a promotion provided they meet the requirements.

Primary Leadership Development Course waivers will be granted to fully qualified Soldiers who can not attend PLDC because of operational deployment, according to a new Army policy.

"In the past Soldiers who have met the cutoff score, but were deployed to areas outside the U.S., where they could not attend PLDC, were not allowed to be promoted," said Sgt. 1st Class Ellen Talley, NCOIC of Promotions and Actions, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"Now if a Soldier has met the cutoff score, and they are fully qualified, they are promoted," she said.

The term "fully qualified" means that the Soldier meets the cutoff score, does not have a temporary medical profile and meets the height and weight standards of Army Regulation 600-9.

"Once the Soldier is promoted, it is their chain of command's responsibility to get them to PLDC as soon as possible," she said.

This wavier does not apply to Soldiers who are on training missions inside the CONUS to NTC or JRTC.

The wavier will be in effect until Nov. 30, 2001.

Army chief of staff devises recruiting strategy to meet goals

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Recruiting is so crucial to manning the Army that Army Chief of Staff Eric K. Shinseki has devised an eight-part plan to ensure this fiscal year's recruiting goals are met.

The Army missed last fiscal year's recruiting goal of 74,500 by 6,300 recruits, but did make its Congressionally mandated end strength because of strong retention. The Army has set a target of 80,000 recruits for fiscal year 2000.

Shinseki said recruiting is the number one mission on his essential task list.

Recently, Assistant Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Maj. Gen. Timothy Maude, discussed the recruiting portion of a message Shinseki sent out to commanders. The message not only pinpointed strategy for recruiting, but also outlined a plan to restructure the Army to bring the force up to 100 percent.

"We have accepted, as a standard from the Chief of Staff on down, that recruiting is the number one priority for all Soldiers. All Soldiers have a responsibility to be engaged in helping recruit the force," Maude said.

For example, Maude said Soldiers should be talking to business leaders, talking to school principles. "We ought to be engaged in our local communities at the local high schools, helping recruiting command do its job."

Excluding a few new strategies, much of the recruiting package is a continuation of what the Army is doing now, Maude said

"We will continue automation enhancements to make the recruiter and the chain of command more efficient," Maude said. That includes continuing with Army Recruiting Information Support System, which saves recruiters and applicants time by using a laptop in the home of a potential recruit to fill out paperwork and to file electronically.

The implementation of the Hometown Recruiter Assistance Program and the Corporal Recruiter Program this year have been regarded as successful and will continue, Maude said. He said the Army is committed to making the recruiting force younger in order to better target America's youth.

The hometown recruiting program allows Soldiers, who graduate from advanced individual training, to go back home for a period of up to 30 days. While in their hometown they talk at high schools and are helpful in keeping delayed-entry recruits on track with enlistment plans.

Maude said plans call for adding corporal recruiters to the program over the next three years. The first 200 corporal recruiters graduated this summer from a six-week course at the Army Recruiting and Retention School at Fort Jackson, S.C. Maude said 200 corporals will be added this fiscal year, and depending on evaluation results, 200 could be added each year for the next three years.

Maude said the deputy chief of staff for personnel, Lt. Gen. David Ohle, is working a study on how recruiters are selected and trained. That study should be finished by mid-December.

"We want to ensure we are selecting the right kind of recruiter and that we are providing them with the proper tools for recruiting," Maude said.

As a result of last year's recruiter restationing studies, recruiters will be repositioned in the market place by the second quarter.

"We will be moving recruiters from one place to another so they are bettered postured to work the market," Maude explained.

Another study will then be done to validate the adjustment, he said, and any other adjustments needed will be performed by the fourth quarter.

"Army Recruiting is also pursuing a Partnership with Industry," Maude said. The package the Army is presenting to businesses includes an agreement giving young soldiers a pre-agreed service entry date with specific businesses or corporations before going into the Army.

The Army is currently working with Ford Motor Company, General Electric and General Dynamics.

"The Army represents a great supplier of a disciplined, trained workforce of high values to America Industry, and it is in the industry's best interest for young people to go into the Army, before they go to work for them," Maude said.

The last initiative to the recruiting program is the GED+ and the College First programs, which Maude said, will open new recruiting markets. Those programs are on hold until the Secretary of Defense approves them.

Continuing as part of the recruiting plan for fiscal year 2000 will be the bonus program. The Army has just increased enlistment bonuses from $12,000 to $20,000 and has combined the Army College Fund with enlistment bonuses.

RTB dedicates memorial

Sgt. 1st Class Ron Link
Ranger Training Brigade

A memorial dedicated to Ranger students who were killed during Ranger school was formally unveiled by the Ranger Training Brigade in a somber ceremony in front of brigade headquarters Nov. 23.

Twenty-nine names are listed on a bronze plaque affixed to a block of granite. They are grouped according to the phase of training they were undergoing when they died. The first Ranger School fatality occurred in April 1955, and the monument is complete with all other fatalities to date, including the four most recent students who perished in the Florida swamps in February 1995.

The 29 names on the memorial stand in mute testimony to the extremely rigorous and high-risk nature of Ranger Training.

The memorial, with a large bronze Ranger tab adorning the top of the rock, was formally dedicated in a small ceremony that included a heartfelt prayer by Chaplain (Capt.) Dave Baum, and brief speeches by Col. Frank Helmick, brigade commander, and Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, brigade sergeant major.

"These men deserve no less honor than those who have died in combat," said Kelso, the Ranger Training Brigade command sergeant major. "They gave their lives in the pursuit of the toughest training in the U.S. Army, to join the ranks of the best combat leaders in the world, to become Rangers."

The unveiling of the memorial coincided with the Brigade's recognition of the anniversary of its establishment.

Since October 1951, it had been known as the Ranger Department. In November 1987, after reorganization and restructuring, the Ranger Training Brigade was formed.

Georgia offers class of 2000 two military scholarships; deadline for award Jan. 3

Georgia Student Finance Commission

Georgia's Class of 2000 high school graduates interested in a military career may wish to pursue two scholarship programs offered by the Georgia Student Finance Commission, GSFC Executive Director Glenn Newsome said.

The scholarships are funded by the General Assembly and are designed for graduates "who are interested in a first-class education as they prepare to serve in America's armed forces," Newsome said.

The two scholarships are:

• The four-year North Georgia College and State University Military Scholarship. The application deadline is Jan. 3, 2000.

• The two-year Georgia Military College State Service Scholarship. The application deadline is Feb. 1, 2000.

Both scholarships cover full tuition costs, fees, housing, meals, books and supplies.

Both programs offer 33 scholarships — three from Georgia's 11 Congressional Districts — and require a commitment upon graduation of service in the Georgia National Guard.

To be considered for a Georgia Military Scholarship a student must be nominated by a member of the General Assembly who represents a district within the U.S. Congressional district where the applicant resides.

Award of the military scholarship at North Georgia College and State University in Dahlonega also requires:

• A 3.0 grade point average upon graduation from high school, and a 1010 combined SAT score (minimum score of 480 on verbal and 440 on the Math section).

• Successfully meeting the mental and physical health standards required for enlistment in the Georgia National Guard.

Additional eligibility criteria for the scholarship at the Georgia Military College in Milledgeville include:

• A 2.5 grade point average upon high school graduation and a combined 800 score on the SAT.

• Meeting the mental and physical health standards required for enlistment in the Georgia National Guard.

For more details and Georgia Military Scholarship applications, students may write the Georgia Student Finance Commission at 2082 East Exchange Place, Grants and Scholarship Division, Suite 100, Tucker, GA 30084; or call (770) 724-9040.

The speed limit on most post roads is 15 mph from 6 to 7:30 a.m.

Organizations receive funds

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Department of Defense-authorized private organizations — to include enlisted, noncommissioned officer and officer spouses' clubs — that provide military families with innovative support may be eligible to receive extra funding through a Fisher House-sponsored program.

Five organizations will be recognized for developing innovative programs to improve the quality of life and support of military families in their military communities, according to retired Army Col. James Weiskopf, a spokesman for Fisher House.

The non-profit Fisher House Foundation Inc. has 26 houses located at military and Veterans Affairs medical centers across the country, which help 6,000 families annually.

One award each will be given to an organization that supports the Army, Marines, Navy, Air Force, or Coast Guard, said Weiskopf.

The organization judged to have the most innovative program would receive a check for $10,000. The other four organizations will receive $5,000 each.

In an open letter to members of the military and their families, Arnold Fisher, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Fisher House Foundation Inc., announced a partnership of Newman's Own, Fisher House, and the Military Times. Newman's Own provides the funding; Fisher House provides the program administration; and the MilitaryTimes World War II Navy veteran and actor Paul Newman has donated more than $100 million for educational and charitable purposes since 1982, when he began selling Newman's Own products. Newman's Own products were first introduced into the military commissary system in 1997, said Weiskopf.

To be eligible, the organization submitting the plan must be a private organization as defined in Department of Defense Instruction 1000.15.

The deadline for applications is March 15, 2000. Copies of the application and other information can be obtained on the worldwide web at http://www.militarycity.com/communityaward, or by calling the Fisher House Foundation at (888) 294-8560.

Army Career and Alumni Program

Separating Soldiers are required to receive briefings, information, and assistance as necessary to take full advantage of their benefits and entitlements.

This process should begin with the three-day Army Career and Alumni Program preseparation and transition assistance sessions and be followed with individual counseling sessions as necessary with service providers and ACAP Center counselors.

The three-day program of briefings and workshops is currently presented in one of the classroom's in Infantry Hall by ACAP Center personnel, Georgia Department of Labor, a local veteran employment representative, and Fort Benning service providers including representatives from Retirement Services, Veterans Affairs, Transition, Finance, and Tricare.

"Successful participation in this program empowers Soldiers and their families to begin transitioning to civilian life with greater knowledge and confidence," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services Manager.

Because there are major differences in the benefits available to retirees, special sessions are held to address retirement issues and are not appropriate for those separating on ETS dates or other types of separations by non-retirees.

Fort Benning schools to increase lunch prices

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Children who pay full price for meals served in Fort Benning schools will have to carry extra change starting Jan. 3 — the first day back to school after the holiday break.

The Fort Benning School Board voted Nov. 22 to increase meal prices for full-paying students and adults. It's the first increase in meal prices in five years. The free and reduced-price programs will remain unaffected.

Student lunches will increase from $1 to $1.25; breakfasts will go from 60 cents to 70 cents. Adults will pay $2.50 for lunch instead of $2 and $1.25 for breakfast rather than $1.10.

Parents will receive a letter in the mail this week explaining the price increase. Students will take home the same letter the week before the holiday break reminding everyone of the change.

The schools lunchroom fund has steadily declined, and Gwyn Maddox, director of Child Nutrition, presented the issue to the board at several monthly meetings.

Increased costs for labor, food and supplies — and a decreasing amount of surplus commodities received from the U.S. Department of Agriculture — contributed to the losses.

The schools delayed increasing prices as long as possible, according to Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent.

"We waited to be absolutely sure that a price increase was necessary," Skinner said. Other options were tried in an effort to increase the lunchroom fund. Kitchen operations were consolidated; the system went from seven working kitchens to two. Meals are prepared at Faith Middle and Stowers Elementary schools and transported to the other five schools.

"This allowed us to decrease personnel and operating costs, but now there are no other alternatives," Skinner said.

Maddox consulted other Department of Defense schools and compared their costs to Fort Benning. For lunch, Fort Rucker, Ala., charges $1.25; Fort Bragg, N.C., $1.20; and Camp Lejeune, N.C., $1.30.

'Living' the Martha Stewart dream

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

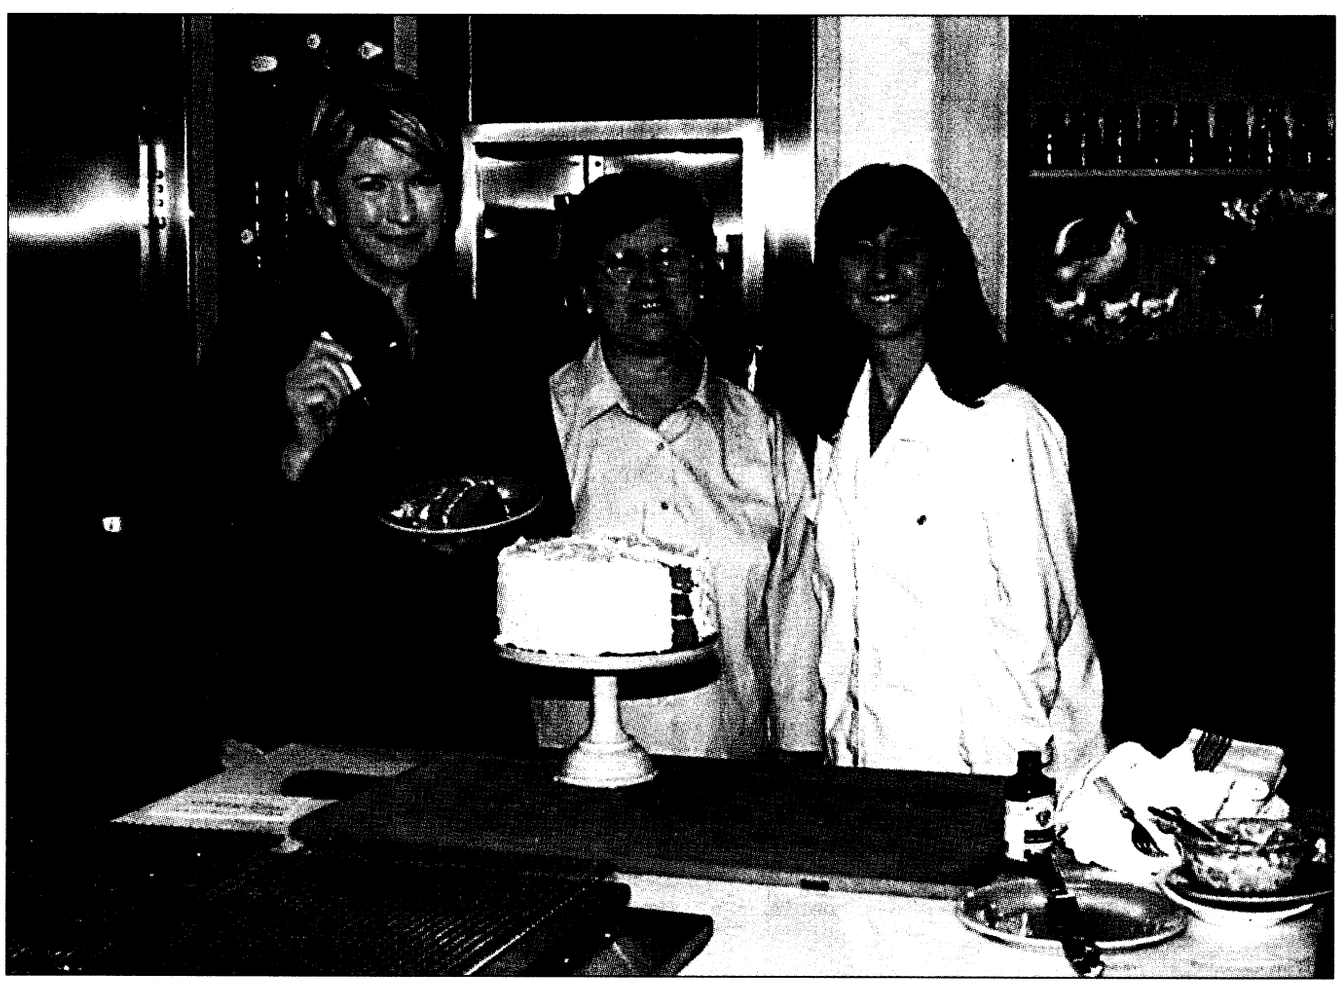
It's probably every cook's dream (or nightmare, depending on your culinary skills). Martha Stewart wants you to travel to Westport, Conn., and bake a cake with her on prime-time television.

Rachel Cheatwood, a bus driver at Fort Benning's Sand Hill, lived out that dream before Thanksgiving during a 24-hour whirlwind trip to Stewart's studios in Connecticut.

Next week, she will share her recipe for red velvet cake with a national television audience during a segment on Stewart's holiday special. "The Family Tree: Home for the Holidays" airs Wednesday at 8 p.m. on CBS. The one-hour show will feature holiday crafts, decorating tips and entertaining ideas.

Cheatwood is well known in her community of White Plains, Ala., for the delicious cakes and other goodies she makes in her home. Of the 14 cakes she baked over the Thanksgiving holiday, 10 were red velvet.

Cheatwood owes her shot on national television to her nephew, Josh Barrett, a make-up artist in New York.



Six weeks ago, Barrett was fixing Stewart's hair and makeup. While he worked, the two talked only of his aunt's red velvet cake. Before leaving, Stewart told the young man she'd be in touch.

That night Barrett called his aunt, but she just laughed at the thought. However, a few days later, a producer for Stewart's show Martha Stewart Living called.

"She asked me if I would come and be on the show," Cheatwood said.

"My nephew is responsible for all of this."

Cheatwood and her daughter, Jackie Humphries, flew out of Atlanta Nov. 23 for Westport, where Stewart lives and tapes her shows. They stayed in the Westport Inn and met Stewart the next morning at her studio.

Courtesy photo

Cheatwood's first duty was to bake a cake in the test kitchen. The producers had called her weeks in advance and stocked up on the ingredients, including White Lily self-rising flour.

"I told them I had to have White Lily flour," Cheatwood said.

The eggs were from Stewarts' chickens, Cheatwood added. She has about 30 on her estate.

The recipe will be on the www.marthastewart.com web site for two weeks after the show airs, Cheatwood said.

"I've had the recipe a lot of years, and everyone says no one's tastes like mine," she said.

The cake turned out perfect, Cheatwood said, and she wasn't at all nervous during the experience. Thanks in part to Stewart.

"She was great and so nice," Cheatwood said. "She was very down to earth, an every day person. She was just as common as we are."

Expecting only to prepare her special cake, Cheatwood was surprised when Stewart asked her if there were other things she bakes.

"I told her I cook biscuits, and she said she couldn't let me escape without making some," she said.

Cheatwood made the biscuits with her fingers in the test kitchen, put them in the oven and then moved to the set where a segment on biscuits was taped.

"They were perfect. I did it just like I was at home," she said.

Cheatwood's daughter captured everything on videotape and shot photographs. She's already given her mother the album and typed up captions for each shot.

After the taping, the women were treated to a tour of Stewart's home and gardens located about 20 minutes from the studio.

"We even saw her tool shed. I told Jackie it looks about like ours," Cheatwood said.

Upon their return 24 hours later, their family was waiting.

"They put out the carpet for me to walk on," Cheatwood said.

Monday when she returned to work at Sand Hill, fellow drivers looked at her photo album and congratulated her.

"She did a good job," bus driver Donnie Ruff said. "We are real proud of her."

Cheatwood was a bus driver at Fort McClellan, Ala., for 14 years until it closed. She decided to transfer to Fort Benning in March and work toward retirement. During the week she lives with a friend in Phenix City and travels home to White Plains every weekend.

"They have been wonderful to me here," she said Monday during a break from driving. "They really look out for me."

Soldiers give thanks by helping others

Officer Candidate Green Chandler
B Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment

After six weeks of intense training at Officer Candidate School, a group of candidates spent their first day off duty exercising a key Army value: selfless service.

Officer Candidate Tom Handy was among the 20 candidates from B Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, Class 1-00 who volunteered to serve Thanksgiving dinner at the 2nd Avenue Salvation Army in Columbus.

"Just because we get a day off doesn't mean we should just go do what we want," Handy said. "Other people have it a lot rougher than us and Thanksgiving is a time to remember that."

Despite the rainy evening, more than 100 people showed up for the traditional Thanksgiving dinner, which was served by officer candidates and civilian volunteers.

Many of the candidates like Ken Toothman were far from family this Thanksgiving and saw volunteering as an opportunity to be around other families. Toothman said seeing other candidates meet loved ones earlier made him think of his wife and daughter in Italy.

"I was kind of in the dumps earlier in the day, but when we got to the Salvation Army the whole experience made me feel better," Toothman said.

After dinner Toothman met Rufus and Geneva Mallory of Columbus, a couple he had served. Mr. Mallory told about his family connections to the military and Fort Benning and asked Toothman about the rank structure at OCS. After their conversation the Mallorys thanked Toothman and the other candidates for serving the meals.

"It was the best meal of the day," Mr. Mallory said.

Robert C. Ivey Jr. of Columbus, another diner, said he was surprised to see the candidates serving meals, but he thought it was a good idea.

"It's good for the military to see what the community is like first-hand," Ivey said.

Allen Turvin, shelter manager at the Salvation Army and coordinator of the event said he was pleased to have the candidates help out because he could count on them to show up and do good work.

"They're very respectful and courteous and thy just jump right in saying, 'What can I do?'"

Although other Fort Benning units have worked with the Salvation Army, Turvin said this was the first time in his 22 years with the Salvation Army that an OCS class has helped them serve Thanksgiving dinner.

The idea for Class 1-00 to help out came from Officer Candidate Charles Romero, who started volunteering to serve Thanksgiving meals while stationed at Fort Bragg three years ago. Romero said he hopes Class 1-00, which will produce the first commissioned officers of the year 2000, will start an OCS tradition for the next century by serving Frozen pipes aren't just an inconvenience. An average of a quarter-million families have their homes ruined and their lives disrupted each winter ... all because of water pipes that freeze and burst.

By taking a few simple precautions, you can save yourself the mess, money and aggravation frozen pipes cause. Here are a few simple steps to prevent frozen pipes:

• Call in service orders to identify pipes that are not insulated:

Exposed pipes are most susceptible to freezing.

• Ask your preventive maintenance mechanic to seal leaks that allow cold air inside, near where pipes are located. Look for air leaks around electrical wiring, dryer vents and pipes.

• Disconnect garden hoses. Connected hoses are a major cause of exterior faucets freezing.

• Close exterior laundry room doors.

• In sustained sub-freezing weather, let water drip slowly from inside faucets (steady drip).

• If you're away, set your thermostat to no lower than 55 degrees.

• Open cabinet doors under sinks adjacent to outside walls.

• Ask a friend or neighbor to check your quarters daily during periods when temperatures are below 32 degrees.

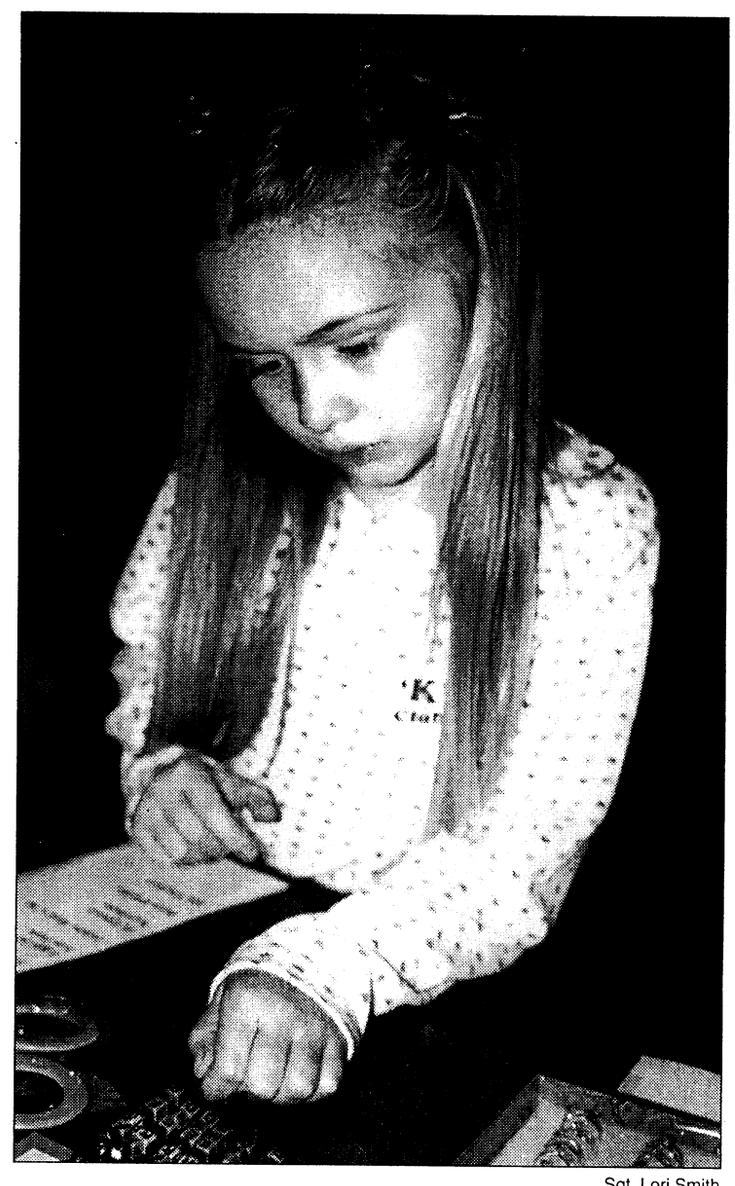
• Cut water off at your cut-off valve.

Knowing where to shut off the water to your residence is also important, so take the time now to familiarize yourself with its location.

Over the Christmas holidays in 1984, Fort Benning had over 1,000 families that had water damage from frozen water pipes.

This damage ranged from minor to everything these residents owned, including personal items that could not be replaced. So if you have no idea where the shut-off valve is located, ask your area preventive maintenance mechanic for assistance.

Then in December when the outside temperature is 15 degrees and you get up ready for that hot shower and you find your water will not come on, you'll know to do the following:



• Turn off your main shut-off valve. It's a good idea to apply an oil or lubricant, such as WD-40, to the cut-off valve before operating to prevent the valve from breaking.

• Call DPW Work Order Section (545-2135) or residents of Davis Hill, Bouton Heights and Perkins Place and McGraw Manor call BSI Work Order Section (689-5400), immediately.

• A reminder for all you "Tim the Tool Time Folks," never try to thaw water pipes with a torch or open flame.

Hopefully, these hints will help you avoid any damage from frozen water pipes this winter. If you have questions give us a call at 545-2118.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations specialist at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Q. Help! It seems like every other day I am receiving unsolicited credit card offers and other advertisements. What can I do to stop this unwanted junk mail?

A. Many people enjoy junk mail because they receive free catalogs, sale notices, money-saving coupons and free trial offers for new products and services, all while using the convenience of shopping from home.

Additionally, the credit card offers allow consumers to obtain credit at a reduced rate without completing a lengthy form since the credit is usually pre-approved. This allows the consumer to select the most attractive rates and features that meet their individualized needs.

Some consumers, however, see these direct marketing concepts as a nuisance. Consumers wonder how they ever got on the mailing list in the first place. There are three main ways of getting on a direct marketing mailing list. First, magazines, credit card companies, clubs and organizations, charities, manufacturers and retailers make their subscriber, customer, members and donor lists available to other businesses for a rental fee. Second, there are compilers that purchase information from various sources in the public and private sector to compile databases for specific marketing purposes. Third, credit bureaus provide prescreened lists of credit-worthy consumers to credit companies just so they can offer their credit card opportunities to the masses.

Now that you know how you got on the list, what can you do to get off the list?

Write or telephone one of the three major credit reporting systems, Experian, Equifax and Trans Union, and request to be placed on the "opt out" list, meaning you want to opt out of prescreened credit card solicitations.

Your opt-out request will be passed on by the company you contact to the other two major credit reporting companies.

Another way to get off the direct marketing mailing list is to write to the Direct Marketing Association, and request that your name be removed from their mailing lists. Direct Marketing Association tracks consumers who prefer not to receive such solicitations. Unfortunately you must send a separate written request in order to be removed from the mail solicitation list and the telephone solicitation list. The requests may be sent to the following addresses:

Mail Preference Service
Direct Marketing Association
Post Office Box 9008
Farmingdale, NY 11735

Telephone Preference Service
Direct Marketing Association
Post Office Box 9014
Farmingdale, NY 11735

The bad news, however, is that this request will only remove you from the Direct Marketing Association list for a period of three years, then once again your name will appear on the rolls. Once you make your request, it should take approximately three months before you see a reduction in the direct marketing solicitations.

Note, however, that opting out will not stop direct marketing solicitations from local merchants, religious and charitable organizations, professional and alumni associations, politicians and those solicitations marked "occupant" or "resident." Rather, you must write to each of these organizations individually in order to be removed from their respective mailing lists.

If you need additional information on this topic, the Legal Assistance Office has handouts with the addresses of the major credit reporting companies. You can come by Building 5 located on Vibbert Avenue anytime between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday to pick up this information.

• ACS Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program office needs clerical volunteers. Commitment and confidentiality are required. For more information, call 545-7517 or 4043.

Volunteer where and when you want. Some agencies provide paid childcare, offer job training and education. For more information, call 545-3016.

Thanksgiving: Officer candidates donate time

Thanks giving every year.

"Hopefully the candidates here can look back and say 'I was one of the candidates who served the first Thanksgiving dinner at the Salvation Army," Romero said.

Lt. Col. David Osborne, commander of 3rd Bn., said he would like to see OCS continue volunteering and spoke with Salvation Army officials about plans for involvement with future projects like Christmas toy and food distribution.

After the candidates helped pack up the chairs and tables. Osborne applauded their efforts with a short speech as they responded with "Hooahs" all around.

"There is no better way to reinforce selfless service than through an act like this," Osborne said.

Hanukkah celebrates miracle of light

Randy Kranepuhl
Jewish lay leader

"It was a miracle! It was a miracle!" Perhaps we remember these two identical lines from the musical Fiddler on the Roof in which the poor tailor actually realizes something as seemingly inconsequential as the love of Tevye's daughter.

But this was a small-scale miracle (although still extremely important, especially to the tailor) compared to the miracles of this upcoming holiday season.

Miracles. For Christians, it is the miracle of the birth of Jesus.

Miracles. For the Jewish people, it is the miracle that made all other subsequent miracles (and possibly that of Christianity) possible. It is the miracle of Hanukkah, the Festival of Lights, the commemoration of the victory of the Jewish people over impossible odds against anti-God forces of the Seleucid King.

When Alexander the Great died, his three most powerful generals divided the empire between themselves. Seleucid chose Syria and the surrounding region as his piece.

For many years, the Seleucids were enlightened and tolerant. They were so tolerant that many Jews chose to give up their own identity to "fit in" with the intoxicating Greek culture. In 167 BC, however, Antiochus Epiphanes changed all that.

He saw the war clouds of the expanding Roman Empire and decided he could not fight off Rome's legions with a heterogeneous polyglot of different peoples.

To make his empire stronger and more united, he would insist that all subject peoples (to include the Jews, at that time) become totally hellenized. All subject peoples would worship him and he would forbid, on penalty of death, the practice of any circumcision of all males as commanded in the Bible.

At a place in Israel called Modiin, a troop of Seleucid's soldiers came to enforce the new rules. They set up an altar and insisted the local Jews sacrifice a pig, cook it and eat it. One of the locals, a totally assimilated and hellenized individual, took a knife to sacrifice the pig as ordered.

A local member of the Jewish priestly family, Matathias, had more than enough. In a fit of rage at this godless act, Matathias killed the sycophant, and the other Jews who were loyal to their religion killed the Seleucid soldiers.

So began a rebellion that would restore Judaism to Israel.

Matathias and his five sons took to the hills and the people rallied to them. Three major battles, as well minor battles, were fought against tremendously unfavorable odds.

Finally, the war that began as a struggle for religious freedom added the dimension of one for national independence.

The Jews realized that without their freedom, they would never be safe to worship God as the Torah dictated.

After the years of war, one of Matathias' sons, Judah the Maccebee (Judah the Hammer), retook Jerusalem from the Seleucids. When the Jews took the Temple, they saw a terrible scene of desecration.

Immediately, the clean up began and when all was in order, the Jews sought to rekindle the lights in the Temple.

They could not find enough pure oil. There was only enough for one day and the process to make more would take eight days, but here God provided another miracle.

The oil that was enough for only one day burned for eight. This is why Jews everywhere have the "Festival of Light" or Hanukkah.

To commemorate this miracle, every year on the 25th of the month of Kislev we say the shehekhyanu ... "Blessed are you oh Lord our God, King of the Universe, for giving us life, for sustaining us, and for helping us to reach this moment."

Jews tend to be a very thankful people. And we proceed to light the candles on our Menorahs for eight nights. Our children play games with the dreidel, a kind of spinning top, and exchange gifts.

But the true importance is not the dreidel, not the exchange of gifts, nor the celebration of great military victory. The true importance of Hanukkah is the truth that holds true today, that all peoples should have the freedom to worship their faith without interference from any other people or government, so long as they practice the tolerance they themselves need.

It is the lesson that faith in God can take us through the worst of times. It is the knowledge that God will help those who are right in his eyes.

"Not by strength but by the power of the Lord," are the words, which have carried good people through the centuries and will carry all good people though the coming millennium.

Shalom!

God wants you to love yourself

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Rupel

Love yourself. This sounds like a pretty arrogant, self-centered statement. However, using the words of Jesus, "Love your neighbor as yourself," let me explain why loving yourself is important.

Richard W. Dortch in his book, Losing it All, and Finding Yourself, has this to say about loving yourself, "How you love yourself reveals how you will love your family, associates and neighbors.

"Loving yourself brings into focus your uniqueness. Think of it: millions of souls have never been — and will never be — duplicated exactly.

You are an original, fashioned precisely the way God designed you."

In my counseling, many people reveal that they do not like themselves, let alone love themselves. They suffer from incredibly low self-esteem. They go to great lengths in seeking the approval of others. Yet in the end they continue to depreciate their own worth.

This is sad and is not God's way.

Let me share some valuable principles from Dortch's book that may set you on the path of loving yourself God's way.

• Learn to establish your presence.

Know that God has a specific plan for your life and this is possible without becoming brash or conceited. Know who you are in God. When you are yourself people will know that a person who walks with God is in their presence.

• Believe you are God's person.

If you know God has called and assigned you to a particular job, you can be content without trying to force yourself or your will upon others.

• Know that God's kind of success is available to desire his best.

Discover your full potential as a child of God and be willing to pay the price to achieve the best.

• Contribute something.

View yourself as being able to do something for people, for the Kingdom of God or where you work. Have a servant's heart.

• Accept full responsibility for being what you are.

Don't alibi. You cannot wallow in past mistakes and failures.

• Strive for the best, but don't be a hypocrite.

Learn from those around you, but don't try to imitate them. Be yourself as you are spiritually directed.

• Study people who are leaders and learn from them.

• Develop a passion for excellence.

Focus on your area of concern and become an expert through study, discipline and experience.

• Be disciplined — in body, soul and spirit.

• Keep it simple.

Have a livable lifestyle. Don't compete with your neighbor.

• Tell the truth, only and always.

• Don't quit.

It is wrong (maybe even sinful) to do less than your best. Never, never, never give up. Keep moving forward. God will help you to create answers to your problems and needs. God's creative genius is yours for the asking.

At the Family Life Center our mission is to assist you in finding solutions to your problems. While we cannot solve your problems, we can give you the tools to enable you to do so. If you want to learn how to overcome low self-esteem, the Family Life Center is here to help. Give the Center a call at 545-2050 to set up an appointment. It may be one of the best phone calls you will ever make.

Courtesy photo

Lauren Coakley works on imitation leather as part of a Native American research project for Loyd Elementary School's enrichment program.

Third, fourth and fifth graders in the Enrichment program at Loyd Elementary School use technology to discover tribes

Loyd Elementary School

The third-, fourth- and fifth-grade students of the enrichment program at Loyd have been researching Native Americans during the month of November. Steve Pate, enrichment teacher at Loyd assigned students the task of "discovering" Native Americans once again. Students were allowed to select a group of Native Americans they were particularly interested in learning more about. They were to become experts on topics relating to their tribe. The students looked for information about the customs, traditions, religions, home styles, art work, food and legends of the tribe they selected. They then were asked to present what they had learned to an audience of students.

The class decided to create a PowerPoint presentation. First, skills had to be learned on the computer in order to present the knowledge that had been gained. Laurie Nesbitt, computer technologist at the school, instructed students on how to create a PowerPoint presentation. Nesbitt searched the Internet for sites that were related to Native Americans. She also taught, via Pate, how to scan pictures, create slides and present the information in a unique manner.

After all of the facts had been gathered, the hard task of streamlining the information into a flowing PowerPoint presentation was undertaken. Fifth-grader Tim Tasse was the computer whiz of the group.

Tasse was very patient explaining the process numerous times (to the teacher mostly). Grade levels worked together in co-operative groups deciding on which facts would be the most interesting to the entire school.

The final task of the class was to select an art project from the ideas gained from researching the tribes. Some students made games, other totem poles, many selected pottery. The fourth-grade made "imitation" leather for shields, paintings and teepees.

The students have their work on display in the school lobby for the next week.

School to improve services

Faculty and staff
Loyd Elementary School

Under the leadership of Col. John C. Latimer, Chief of Staff USAIC, the Fort Benning School System attended Customer Service Training. In order to provide excellent customer service to our Loyd School community, the Loyd parents have been asked to complete a customer satisfaction survey. This survey will be used to identify our strengths and weaknesses so that we may improve our relationship with our school community.

Children make the grade

Loyd Elementary School

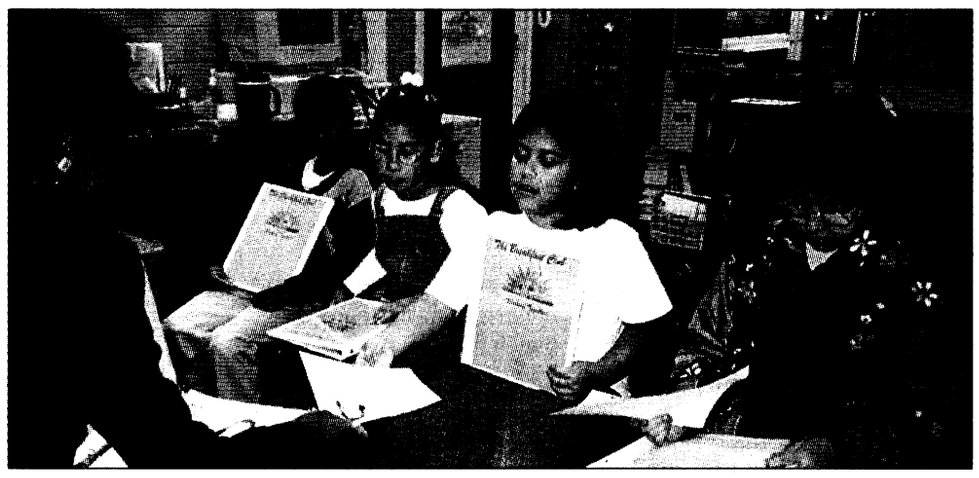
Leonard Gant, third-grade teacher, would like to recognize seven students from his class who made the Principal's List during the first grading period of this school year.

"I appreciate the hard work of all of my students. It is evident that our teacher-student-parent partnership is working greatly," said Gant.

"This is the first of many honors, and I expect more of my students to make the Principal's List in the future," he said.

Congratulations to Loyd Elementary school students: Trenton Brown, Terry Hemingway, Patrick Manges, Brittany Pittel, Jordan Schroeder, Michael Tatum and Estavan Zamora.

Keep up the good work!



College students share arts

Margery Williams
Loyd Elementary School

The production of The Velveteen Rabbit, sponsored by our PTO was presented to the Loyd School student body Nov. 18. The Columbus State University Theater Department explored issues of love and sacrifice as this story told of a toy rabbit that became real through the love of the boy. The cast included five talented theater majors: Gerald Gibson, Joanna Poole, Wes Stanfield, Jennifer Todd and Melissa Walker and the help of several puppets.

The purpose of our students attending this production was to:

- Experience the joy of watching a story come alive;
- Develop standards of good taste;
- Develop an appreciation for the arts and the theater

Getting together

Ruth Doughty, school counselor, uses morning breakfast time to schedule small group sessions with the students at Loyd Elementary School. During these eight-week sessions, students meet to discuss techniques for working together and getting along with peers. Student issues are very real and are taken seriously through the use of strategies, role-playing and living by the golden rule. The group currently meets twice a week.

Chow, chow, chow

A male chow mix puppy and a short hair kitten are just a few of the animals available at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic. Many more are in need of a good home. Pet owners are required to pay for initial vaccination procedure costs, which can be anywhere from $10 to $30. The clinic is open 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m, Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

Free computer offers are on the rise

Better Business Bureau warns people to research free PC offers

Better Business Bureau

Ads for free personal computers are popping up on the Internet and in newspapers across the country.

The offers are sometimes tempting and some consumers are rushing to sign on the dotted line. But are these PCs really free?

Although there are some legitimate offers, there are also some scams and the BBB advises consumers to use caution.

To decide which offer is best for you, the Better Business Bureau of West Georgia, Southwest Georgia and East Alabama suggests you do some research first.

• Find out what the offer includes. Don't assume that the term "PC" includes peripherals. It may only mean the hard drive. Components such as monitor, keyboard, mouse, modem, printers or speakers could cost extra.

• What are the requirements to participate in the offer? Some offers require you to provide mounds of personal information about yourself. Ask the company about the use of your personal information data and how it will be protected.

• Ask for written documentation of the deal and its details. If you don't receive such documentation, be wary.

• If you are required to sign up with a particular Internet service provider, find out how many years of service you must purchase and at what cost.

• Know what the total cost is and all restrictions or requirements.

• Is the PC new or refurbished? A new computer might have some of the latest technology, but don't assume that it does. On the other hand, a refurbished unit might have features that fit your needs just fine.

• Inquire about service and support. Is there a toll-free number for tech support? Are you limited on how much support you'll get? Is there a warranty on the PC? What are the terms and conditions? Can you call for local service, or take it to a local store, or must you return it to a manufacturer or seller for repairs or maintenance?

• What if you want to change your Internet service while your agreement is in effect? Will you have to keep paying for the service even if you're not using it? Will you be able to get a refund?

Along with the tips provided by the Better Business Bureau, Ann Pratcher, program manager for consumer affairs and financial assistant program manager, said there are several things Soldiers should remember.

"If it seems to good to be true, it probably is," she said. "You need to research deals that sound too good."

Pratcher also added, Soldiers should read all contracts before signing and never sign a contract with blank spaces.

"Only what's written on the contract counts, not what a sales person tells you. You need to make sure everything is in writing," Pratcher said.

Soldiers who think they may have been taken by an scam can contact Consumer Affairs at 545-4043. They can also contact the Staff Judge Advocate at 545-3281.

money matters

2nd Lt. Merle Campbell
Bayonet correspondent

Campbell

Before proceeding with an individual investment plan it's necessary to have a basic understanding of the various investment vehicles that are available. There are numerous investments out there capable of satisfying virtually any investment criteria. These investments vary in their complexity and sophistication. However, one of the easiest to understand and use of these investments is stock, common stock in particular. Stocks have become increasingly popular in the last few years in part to the large expansion of the Internet and on-line securities trading. The Internet has basically enabled anyone with a computer to purchase stocks for a small fee. This phenomenon has produced a society entrenched on watching the stock market and trading securities.

In essence, a stock is a certificate of ownership in a corporation. Stocks are purchased and traded in units referred to as shares. Corporations issue shares of stock to raise capital for operations and various related financing activities.Each share of stock that is purchased represents a proportionate ownership interest in a particular company. For example, fictitious corporation XYZ has 10,000 common shares outstanding (the number of shares in the hands of the public and institutions). If an individual owned 500 shares of XYZ, that individual would have a resulting five percent ownership interest in the company.

Owning stock comes with many benefits. First of all, an individual is afforded the opportunity to vote in a company's annual meeting. The annual meeting is where many corporate issues and decisions are voted on for the year. Most company's allow one vote per share of stock. Owning 500 shares of stock provides 500 votes. In addition, most companies pay what is referred to as a dividend. A dividend is essentially a proportionate distribution of a company's earnings to shareholders. The amount and timing of this payout varies by company and is usually decided by the corporation's board of directors. However, the company may wish to retain its earnings for use internally, as opposed to paying them out. The company may retain earnings to fund internal operations like an expansion or research development project.

These and many other items related to a company's stock are discussed in the prospectus. A prospectus is basically a manual outlining many aspects of the corporation's internal health. A prospectus contains a lot of the information that is important for an individual investor to make an informed investment decision. The information in a prospectus can give valuable insight into the current financial position of the company, any internal problems or pending litigation against the company, and dividend policies. Before purchasing stock in a company, it's always wise to first read a prospectus. Prospectuses can be obtained by writing the company and requesting one, and in many cases can be obtained on-line.

Hoop hype begins on post

Youth Services sets winter basketball season

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 250 young basketball players will take to the court when Youth Services winter basketball season opens next week.

Having an array of new coaches along with a great turnout, according to Dorrie Wagner, a child and youth recreation assistant at YS, will add to the excitement this year's YS hardcourt basketball action.

"New coaches always bring fresh new ideas with them and they share those ideas with the kids," she said.

"Having such a great turn out of kids and coaches this year allowed the basketball organizers to fill 20 full teams who will be ready for head-to-head competition in January."

For the first time in years, all but six players were skill assessed to determine basic basketball skill levels such as dribbling, shooting, free throws and passing.

Those assessed players were assigned a number between one and five for each skill tested. Their scores were averaged, and the outcome was a skill assessment number that was used in the basketball draw held Nov. 20.

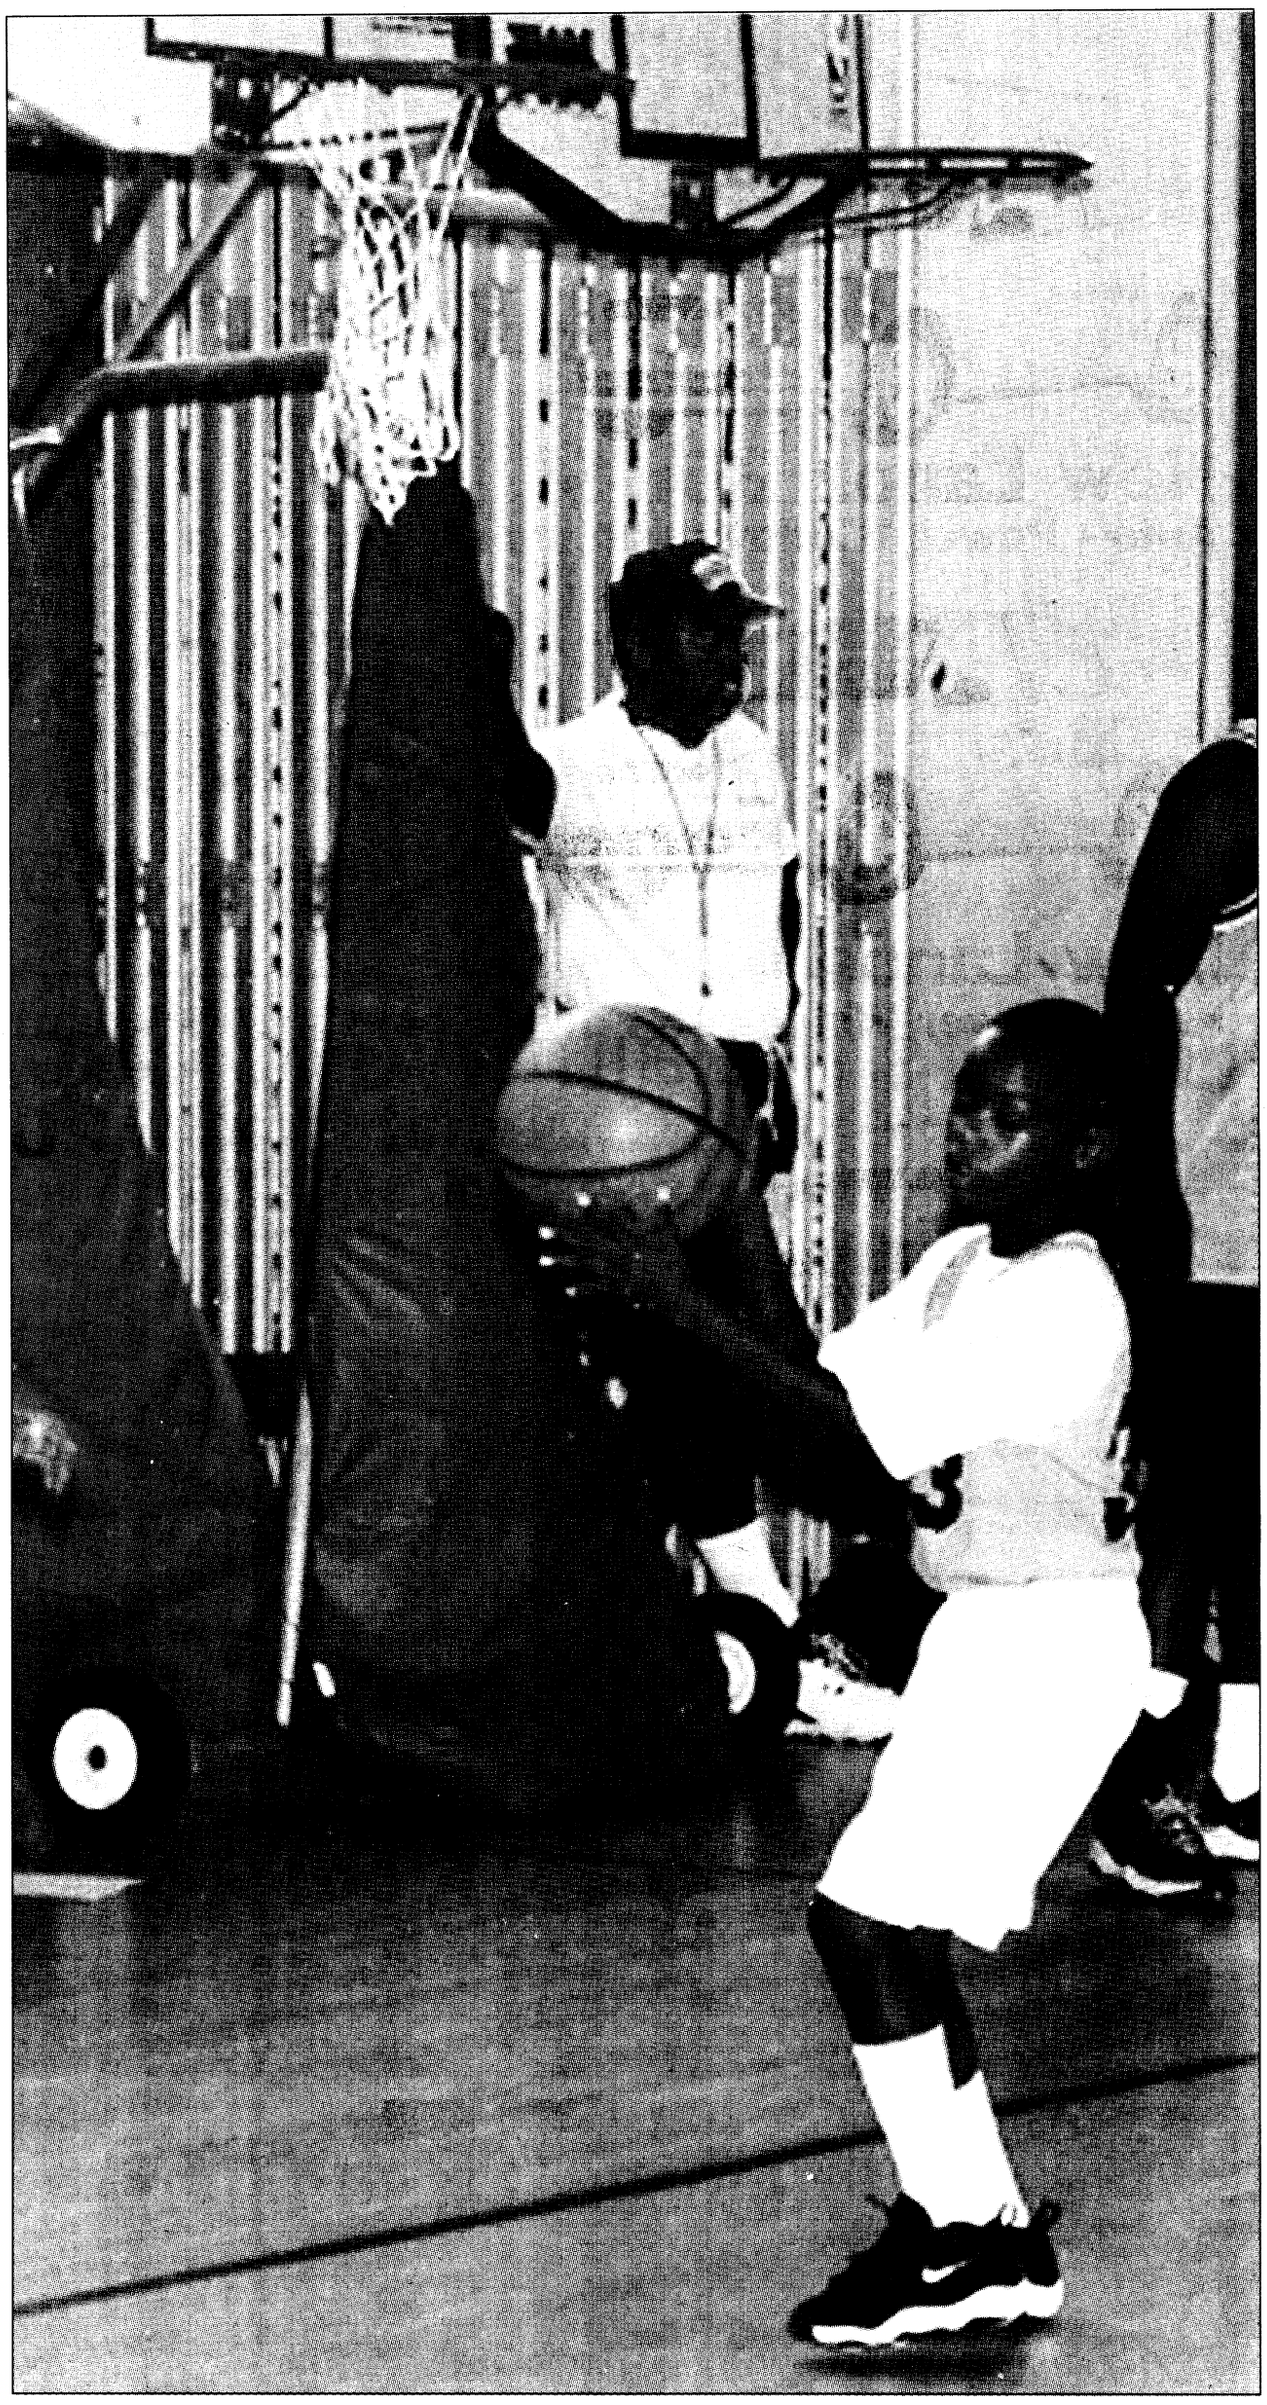
Wagner said the success or failure of the skills testing assessment could make or break what kind of season the kids as well as the teams will have.

"Without the assigned skills assessment numbers, the coaches would have had no idea who could play ball and who could not," she said. "While drawing players, skill assessment allowed for the even distribution of five-member teams pairing those who are the most skilled with those players who have never played before."

In addition to successful skills testing, a volunteer sports commissioner position was created this year. The new commissioner, according to Wagner, will act as a liaison between the YS staff and the coaches.

The new position was filled earlier this year by Alvin Howard, a football referee and self-proclaimed sports enthusiast.

Howard was at Youth Services to monitor the player selection draw. Howard was also responsible for the coaches clinics held earlier in the week. He said that clinic was held and designed to refresh the coaches on the basics of basketball and help the coaches become better at what they do — coaching.



A look at the rules was also included in the clinic. Something Howard said he thought was very important.

"The do's and don'ts of the basketball season was covered at the clinic," Howard said. "Coaches were encouraged to focus on teaching children the skills they need to be successful in basketball and not to just focus on winning."

Basketball games will be held on Saturdays beginning at 8:30 a.m. in January and will run through the end of February.

Team rosters along with practice times are posted on the YS gymnasium outside doors.

For information, call Dorrie Wagner or Linda Laine at 545-3070.

USAMU goes on the road to train the trainer

Four top guns travel to Fort Sill to teach marksmanship skills

Spc. Kevin Henderson
Fort Sill Cannoneer

FORT SILL, Okla. — NCOs from the 17th Field Artillery Brigade, Fort Sill, Okla., were ready to learn nearly a month ago when the pros from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit came in ready to teach.

NCOs from the 3rd Battalion, 18th Field Artillery; 5th Battalion, 3rd Field Artillery and 1st Battalion, 12th Field Artillery trained to improve their rifle marksmanship skills. Their goal was to become better trainers for their Soldiers. They got a little help from some of the best marksman in the world — the USAMU.

"Our mission (while) at Fort Sill is to conduct a train the trainer mission," said Charles Coffey, a coach and instructor with the USAMU. "We're trying to get junior and senior NCOs trained so they can go out and train (Soldiers) to be trainers."

The visiting USAMU instructor team was made up of Coffey, an instructor and NCOIC of the service rifle team; Norman Anderson, instructor for USAMU; William Cale, instructor for USAMU and Elijah Hoover, also an instructor with the USAMU.

Coffey said the USAMU members, when they are not preparing for a competition, travel to share their skills with other Soldiers in the field.

The classes began Nov. 2 with the fundamentals of marksmanship.

The class learned about and how to teach others about sight alignment, trigger control, correct methods of holding the and firing the M-16 A2 service rifle, breathing and learning about each Soldiers dominant eye, Coffey said.

"Your dominant eye is the eye that kind of takes charge,' said Anderson. "If you are right-handed and find that you're left-eye dominant, the correct thing to do would be to shoot left handed."

> "... the training is very effective. I'm getting information I've never had before."
> — Sgt. Michael Speede
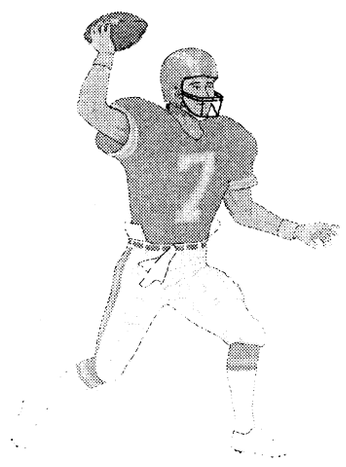
> A Battery,
> 1st Battalion, 12th FA

The NCOs were ready for the second step Nov. 3 — positioning.

The class covered three main areas — hands-on training, using the Noptel laser and shooting pistols, Coffey said.

"I think the training is very effective. I'm getting a lot of information that I've never had before," said Sgt. Michael Speede, A Battery, 1st Battalion, 12th Field Artillery.

During the hands-on training portion the NCOs worked outside to strengthen their unsupported firing positions and improve their aiming control.



Next, they practiced aim and trigger techniques with 9 mm Beretta service pistols. Later, they fired air pistols at paper targets.

The training culminated Nov. 4 with a live-fire at North RETS Range.

The team gave the NCOs advice about grouping and zeroing. In the morning, they fired M-16 A2s. After lunch they fired the 9 mm service pistol.

"This is pretty good training," said Staff Sgt. Antonio castro, Headquarters, Headquarters battery, 3rd Battalion, 18th Field Artillery.

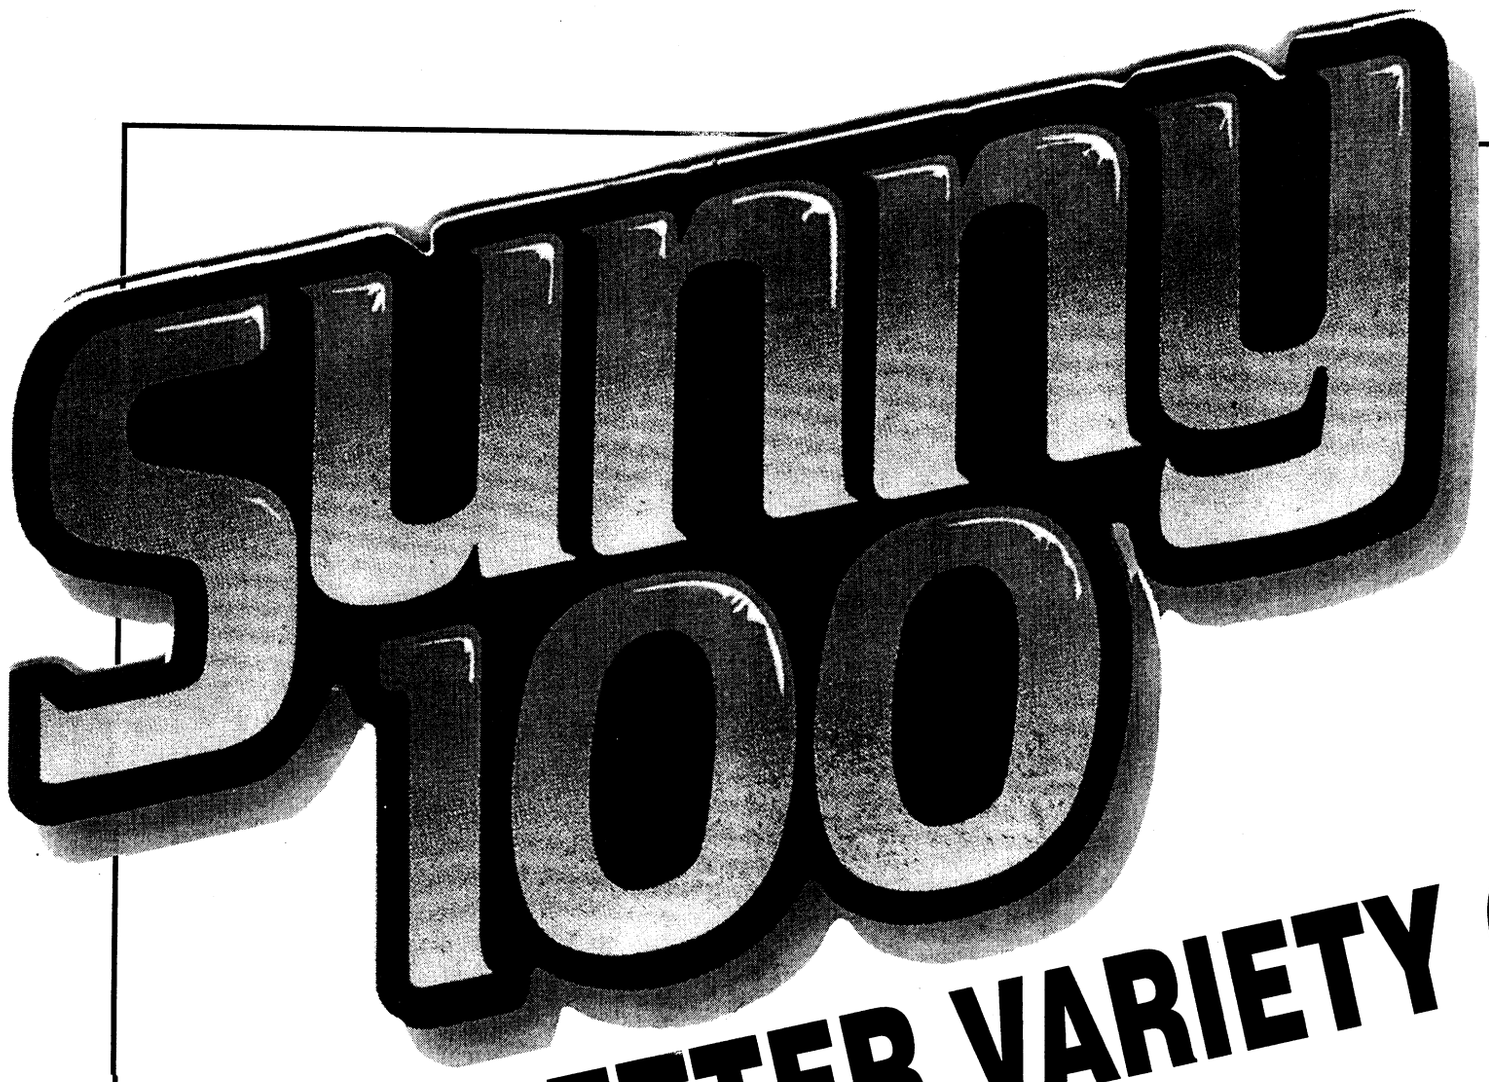
Soldiers reclaim World Cup bobsled team berths

Master Sgt. Bob Haskell
Virginia National Guard Public Affairs Bureau

LILLEHAMMER, Norway — Four U.S. Army Soldiers, including three from the reserve components, have reclaimed berths on the U.S. bobsled team that began their eight-event World Cup season in Lillehammer, Norway, Nov. 22. The first round of international races took place Nov. 26 and 27.

The 13-man team led by Assistant Coach Greg Sand, spent Thanksgiving week at the site of the 1994 Winter Olympics striving to improve on its fifth-place finishes in the two-man and four-man divisions during last February's world championships at Cortina, Italy.

The four Soldiers, all seasoned athletes, are a cross section of the total force. One belongs to the active Army, two belong to the Army National Guard, and one belongs to the Army Reserve.



They are Army Reserve Garrett Hines, 30, from Atlanta, Ga.; Utah Army Guard Steve Holcomb, 19, from Salt Lake City; Virginia Army Guard; Mike Kohn, 27, from Chantilly, Va.; and active Army Doug Sharp, 29, from Jeffersonville, Ind.

The four bobsledders belong to the Army's World Class Athlete Program and are assigned to the National Guard Sports Regional Training Center in Colchester, Vt. They are pushers who give the sleek sleds weighing up to 1,389-pounds a running start down icy tracks and jump aboard for twisting, turning runs reaching 80-90 mph.

The mission of the Army's World Class Athlete Program, established in 1994, is to "support and guide nationally ranked Soldier-athletes to compete and succeed in international competitions including the Olympic Games, while maintaining military careers and promoting the U.S. Army to the world."

"It is the only way to pursue my Olympic dreams without having to worry about financial problems," said Sharp, a licensed chiropractor and a pole-vaulter who was an assistant track coach at the University of Louisville before joining the Army.

They qualified for this winter's USA team during October's final two weekends at the national trials at Park City, Utah.

National Lender Agrees To New Vehicle Loans For Individuals With Bad Credit!

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of reliable transportation.

COLUMBUS,GA. Kevin Thompson, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Including Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

A National Lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of reliable transportation.

In the past, second and third chance vehicle financing was available primarily on older used vehicles which, in many instances needed monthly, if not weekly maintenance. Vehicles that in some cases wouldn't even continue to function for the full term of the Installment Contract. But all that is about to change.

Good people who have had rough times can now purchase brand new cars, trucks, sport utility vehicles and family vans and enjoy the reliability of a brand new vehicle while reestablishing their good credit.

You simply pick out the new vehicle from Bill Heard's massive inventory and take over payments directly from the bank. Instead of coming out of your pocket with any cash you may indeed find yourself receiving a cash signing bonus of thousands upon thousands of dollars just in time for the holidays. Those would be in the form of cash rebates and any cash you may desire on trade equity, if any.

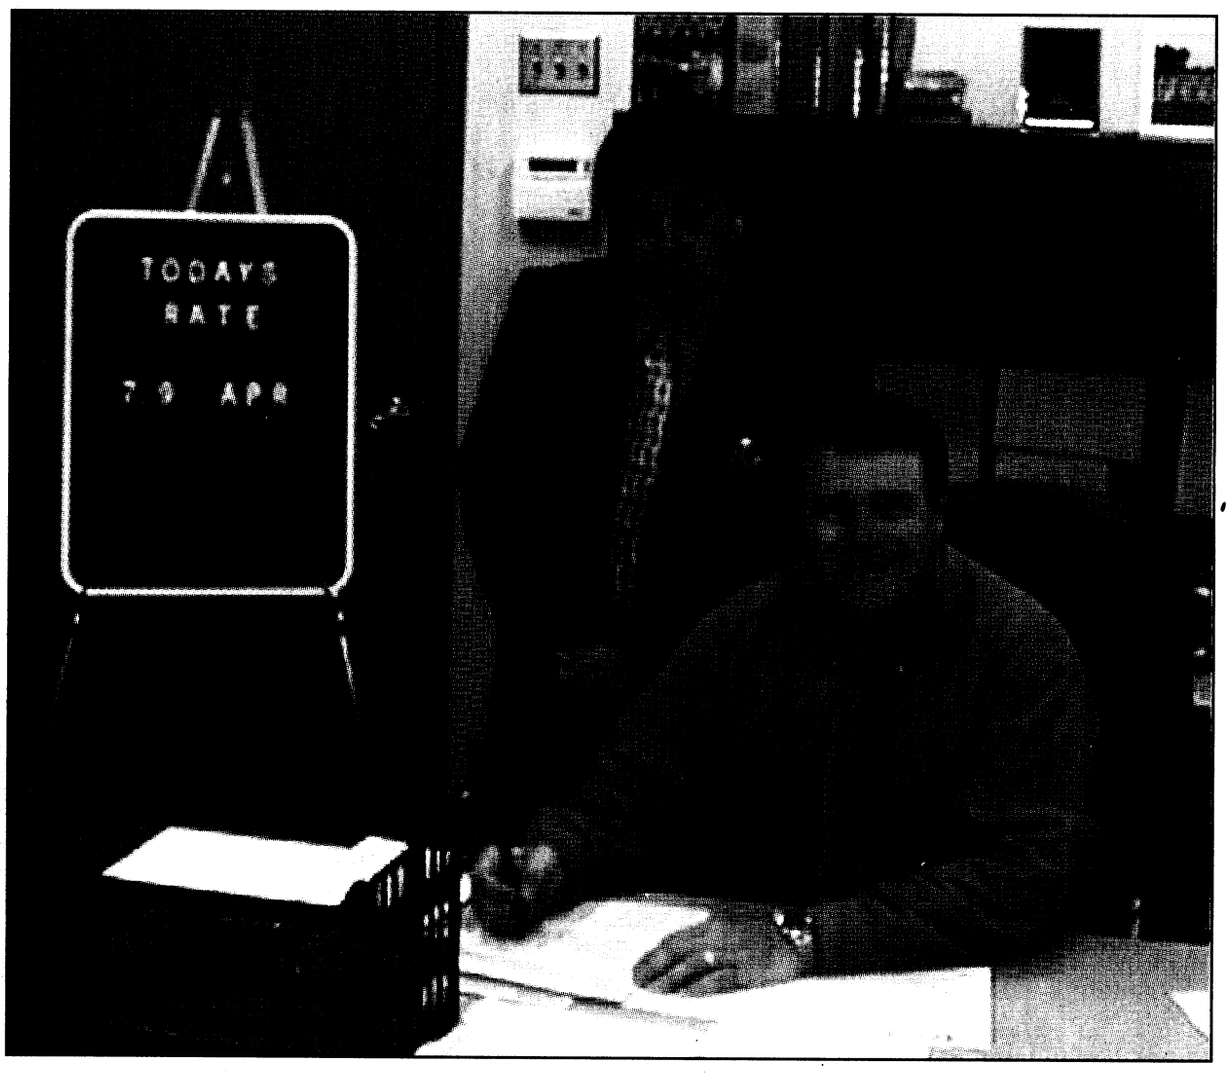
If you find yourself "stuck" with a vehicle you absolutely abhor probably the result of having to deal with a used note-lot out of desperation, we can in most cases break you free of that undesirable vehicle and pay it off regardless of what you paid for it and in several notable instances we have actually put people in new vehicles at a substantially less monthly obligation than they presently have.

Lenders will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expwy.—Today through the end of December.

Best of all, new vehicle financing may be offered to those who would not normally qualify for such an arrangement at rates that banks often reserve for their blue chip clients.

Quoting Thompson, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing."

Jim Stallings, Representing the dealership, has arranged for unbelievably competitive payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the impending holiday season.



When pressed for an example of the new models available under this Pilot Program, Stallings replied, "Well, there is virtually no limit to the possibilities. Brand new Silverados, Suburbans, Tahoes, Blazers, even Venture Family Vans, 2000 Impalas, the all new 2000 Monte Carlo's, Cavaliers, Camaros, Malibus.

If Chevrolet builds it, it qualifies for this special and unique financing opportunity. Many people who felt that their options were limited to a Buy-Here-Pay-Here situation or an older used car are incredibly excited to learn that they can provide their family the safety, dependability, and reliability of a brand new automobile covered by General Motors new car Warranty and Roadside Assistance Program. This offer may be for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle".

Quoting Thompson, "When word of this arrangement was leaked, we worried that our existing inventory would not stand up to the certain demand that it would generate. I was so concerned that I arranged for an additional two hundred and twenty new Chevrolets to be delivered to the dealership from two different overstocked Chevrolet dealers in Atlanta. This additional inventory has our total availability at nearly one thousand new Chevrolets, but I would advise every potential buyer to shop as soon as possible to insure a good selection, because when the floodgate opens, I don't think that even one thousand chevrolets are enough to cover demand.

You may shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much you may borrow by calling Mr. Stallings or Mr. Thompson at 706-322-8888, out-of-town 800-868-1585.

"Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

Angela Malcom free-lance interviewer, speaks with loan officer Kevin Thompson and his assistant Jim Stallings who will be on hand granting "high risk" loans at rates generally reserved for blue chip clients!

Trainees to leave for the holidays

More than 5,500 Soldiers say good-bye to Sand Hill for the Christmas season

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 5,500 Soldiers from the Infantry Training Brigade and the Basic Combat Training Brigade will start their Christmas Exodus leave Dec. 17.

Most will travel on 40 chartered buses to Atlanta's Hartsfield International Airport where they will board flights home. The buses start running at 1 a.m. Dec. 18.

Scott Heidrich, senior agent for Carlson Wagonlit travel agency, said that about 4,000 trainees have made airline reservations. Some faraway destinations include Guam, Europe, South America, Mexico and Puerto Rico.

Fort Benning's trainees will join almost 8,000 others from Fort Gordon, Ga., and Fort Jackson, S.C., also on Exodus.

Soldiers with closer destinations will leave Sand Hill Dec. 17, traveling by Greyhound bus or with family or friends.

Between 15 and 20 Soldiers from the ITB have elected to remain at Fort Benning and not take leave, according to Capt. Erik Rockne, assistant brigade operations officer for ITB.

"If any of them change their mind, we will afford them the opportunity, if they want to go home, to go on leave," Rockne said.

Over at BCTB, fewer than 15 Soldiers have made plans to stay behind, said Master Sgt. Louis Tinsley.

The Soldiers who remain on post will work half-day schedules and activities are planned for afternoons and evenings, Tinsley said.

To cover the expense of tickets, Soldiers who entered the service after Nov. 1, received advanced pay. This will be repaid in four increments at mid-month and end-of-month for December and January.

NCOs from 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry, will be in Atlanta to assist Soldiers. Twenty drill sergeants from BCTB will also be on hand.

Soldiers taking Exodus leave are set to return Jan. 3, except those traveling to Puerto Rico to celebrate Three Kings Day. They will return the evening of Jan. 7.

Government retailer says PX is Y2K ready

More than 1 billion spent to keep AAFES running after Y2K

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

This is the seventh part in an eight-part series on Fort Benning's preparations for the problems associated with the year 2000.

With savings incentives and the promise of quicker check-out times, many holiday shoppers have opted to use their credit cards instead of greenbacks this holiday season.

But with the threat of potential Y2K chaos, that trend has some shoppers picking paper instead of plastic at the checkout line this holiday season.

The credit card machines have been working overtime at Fort Benning's only retail outlet, the Army and Air Force Post Exchange, as the lines continue to grow longer and longer as the Christmas holiday nears.

Holiday shopper Thomas Miller said he was a little leery on using his credit card this holiday season because he was unsure what would happen to his credit after the new year.

"Post Exchange shoppers can rest at ease as we head into the year 2000," said Luke Knittig, an AAFES corporate spokesperson. "We have systematically evaluated all of our equipment and have had an entire team of folks working since last year to make sure we are Y2K compliant."

That compliancy cost the multi-billion dollar operation more than a million dollars, according to Knittig, a cost he said not only incorporated the Y2K compliance but updated the corporations computer systems as well.

The problem AAFES and many other computer users fear once the new year hits calendars is the inability to read the date. Older computers read the date as a two-digit code; however, when the new year hits, the code will become 00 — a binary code that sends computers to a complete computing stop.

That stoppage, according to Knittig, is one that will not affect either the store's credit program, DPP (Delayed Payment Program) or the corporation's payroll system.

"I feel confident that all the precautions are in place to make sure all of our systems continue to run after the new year," he said. "I also feel confident that the vendors from which we buy our goods will continue to be in operation after the new year."

Local PX officials declined to give their store-unique preparations for Y2K, but Knittig assured shoppers the PX will continue to serve the Fort Benning community long after the year 2000.

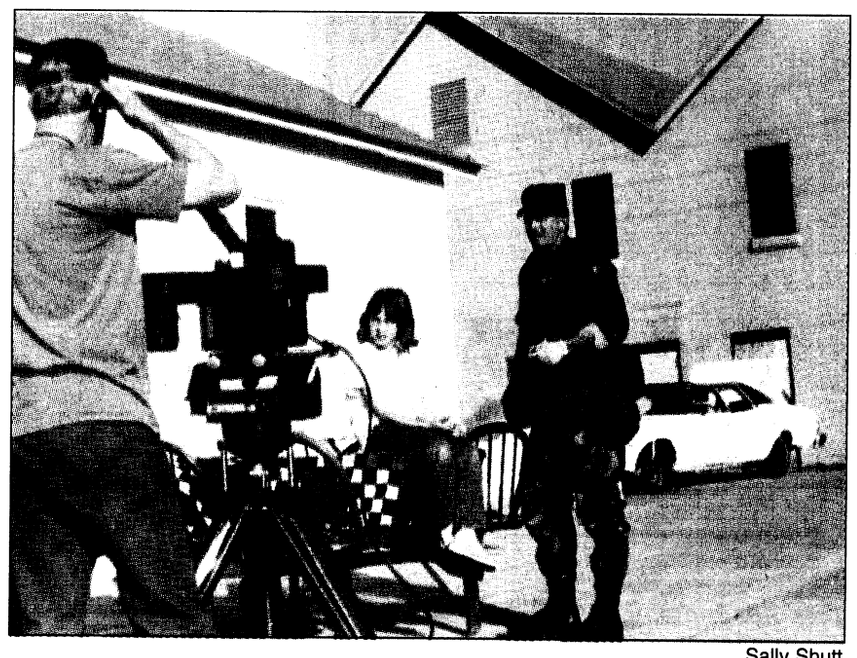
Film crews produce USASOC film at McKenna

New movie will be featured at military museum in N.C.

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A production company from Atlanta shot film footage at Fort Benning's McKenna MOUT site last week. Rangers staged a mock raid; civil affairs Soldiers aided injured children; and psychological operations troops passed out comic books warning the children of the dangers of land mines.

To see all this action, you will have to visit the U.S. Army Airborne and Special Operations Museum in downtown Fayetteville, N.C. The $22.5 million museum is scheduled to open Aug. 16 — National Airborne Day.



The museum's foundation commissioned Vista-Dome Simulation Corp. to design, manufacture and install a VISTASCOPE 8/35 theater projection and VISTASONIC digital sound system in the museum.

The company is producing a 25-minute film to be shown on the 250-seat theater's three-story high screen. It will be the museum's signature film, Bob Wells, production coordinator, said.

The crew from Vista-dome visited Fort Benning Nov. 30 through Dec. 2. In addition to the signature film, they were also working on a four-minute film for the museum's 24-seat motion simulator designed to pitch, roll and yaw.

Audiences will feel they are participating directly in the rigorous training and operations of U.S. Airborne Special Operations units. There will be low-level

Holiday tips ease traveling woes

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Traveling and holidays go hand in hand — like putting marshmallows in a cup of hot chocolate or prowling the parking lot of Peachtree Mall for a parking spot on a Saturday in December.

Before I offer any holiday traveling tips, let me present my qualifications to write on the subject.

Growing up in North Carolina, with all of my extended family living in the same region, the idea of traveling during Christmas was foreign. Ah, but that changed almost the minute I agreed to marry a Soldier.

I was 25-years-old and had been engaged two weeks when I boarded my first airplane on the way to meet his family in Kentucky. I'm still not sure if the nerves were from flying for the first time or from the idea of facing my future mother-in-law.

It was the day after Christmas, and it started what has become a family tradition. Christmas just wouldn't be the same without a car trip or plane ride "home."

In the early years (meaning before kids arrived on the scene) there was the question of whose home do we visit — his or mine? This is where your ability to negotiate is called into question.

The first year we opted to hit them both, North Carolina and Kentucky.

My husband was stationed at the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Camp Rudder, Fla. It ended up being a tour of the southeast from the inside of a Chevy Cavalier.

Wiser, the next year we tried alternating Thanksgiving with one family, Christmas with the other. Twelve years later, we go with whatever seems feasible.

With a 6-year-old and a 9-year-old, we've decided to spend Christmas morning in our own home, wherever that may be.

If we can make it the next day to one of the grandparents, then we do.

Tip No. 1: Avoid the guilt trips. The roads go both ways, and maybe this is the year your relatives should travel to see you.

Tip No. 2: If you are flying, accept that there will be crowds, delays and crying babies. It's the additional price you pay for getting to your destination so quickly.

We've flown from California and Hawaii with small children and endured our share of rolled eyes, stares and even gruff comments.

To help, give each child a backpack full of snacks, games, coloring books and other items to keep them entertained. Make it light enough so that he can carry it himself.

Buy a harness or leash for little ones who wander. Who cares if some woman from Indiana thinks it looks like you're walking a puppy.

Tip No. 3: If you are PCSing over the holidays, survival is key.

We had three back-to-back PCS moves over the Christmas holidays — to Fort Irwin, Calif., Fort Benning and then Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

We chose the Merle Haggard song, "If we make it through December," as our theme song.

Tip No. 4: Remember the first Christmas. The thought of getting into a van with two kids for a 10-hour drive too much for you? Think of Mary and her journey to Bethlehem. She was nine months pregnant and rode a donkey. If the crowds have you discouraged. Recall how Mary delivered her baby in a stable because all the rooms were full. It will help keep things in perspective.

letter

My husband was stationed here in 1993, after a short but wonderful assignment at Fort Ord, Calif., just before it closed its lovely panoramic and historic gates. I hated to leave that post and the Monterey area, but was glad to be headed to Fort Benning. We'd never been assigned here, but had driven from Fort Rucker, Ala., in 1986 for an orthodontic consultation for our eldest son. I remember thinking then, what a great post this must be and, as a bonus, you'd have Columbus for a neighbor. In the years that followed, I've spoken to many Soldiers and spouses who have been to Fort Benning and they are very happy here.

My instincts were right. Since we arrived in the fall of '93 and retired here in spring of '96, I've found very little that I've been unhappy with either on post or in town. I've had to go to Atlanta just once for medical reasons that couldn't be handled at Martin Army Community Hospital or in the local community. Obviously, access to medical care as a retired family is high on one's priority list of must-haves. We are enrolled in Tricare Prime. It's definitely the choice that ensures the best medical coverage as quickly as possible. I certainly advise others to join as well. It provides speedy and only rarely limited service to MACH.

I can't say enough about how much I enjoy using other facilities on post, primarily the Commissary and Post Exchange. We live almost to the Harris County line (to the north for you newcomers) and I shop at the facilities at least once a week. The commissary does save you money on your total bill. I also compare like items and yes, there are stores that can beat out the Commissary on an individual basis, but not on your overall bill.

Using the OWC-run Thrift Shop is another fun and regular activity I try to do when I'm on post.

My husband and I find we don't go to Atlanta that much, but if you like the excitement a big city can offer, Atlanta should suit your needs.

When we do make the 100 mile trip (from North Columbus) it's usually to use the airport or lately to see the (orthodontic-visit) son at Georgia Tech.

That reminds me of another major reason we like the idea of living in Georgia, the wonderful schools and the Hope Scholarship Program. We are lucky in this area to have good schools at all levels. From pre-K through Columbus Tech and Columbus State University, we have something for everyone, including Troy State and Georgia Military Institute on post.

The one thing that has impressed me the most in education here is the number of volunteers that support our schools, some working long hours answering phones and running errands. We are setting a high standard of community involvement for which we can be proud.

The varied educational facilities help to add to the overall cultural events occurring almost constantly in Columbus. Friday's issue of the Columbus Ledger Enquirer (see the To Do section) and the Bayonet's, R&R section, will keep you up to date on what's happening and when. One of our historic local treats is the newly renovated Springer Opera House, don't miss it. We have notable museums and plenty of festivals, fairs and carnivals to tempt every member of the family. If you've never seen anyone kiss a pig, you've come to the right place.

If you're into sports, and who's not these days, try a Columbus Cottonmouths (minor league ice hockey) game. Call ahead or just show up at game time and have an amazingly good time. I had never been exposed to hockey except on television. I can see sports on our television anytime I want and some when I don't want. I was prepared not to like it, but surprised myself (and my husband) by finally being able to follow the puck. That's all it takes to get hooked. Still not convinced it's worth a try? How about the minor league (Cleveland Indians) baseball team, our own Columbus RedStixx in the spring? They are very family oriented making it especially fun for the little ones running the bases after the game. Softball at our Olympic facilities or one of the years-old high school football rivalries is another option. Football is played at Kinnett or Memorial (an historic landmark itself) stadiums on a Friday or Saturday fall evening. You can always try to get tickets to an Auburn University game if you love college ball. Special sporting events, wrestling, for those of you into that, have come to our wonderful new Civic Center, located on Victory Drive and the south end of Veteran's Parkway. Convenient to get to with plenty of parking, the Center offers everything from conventions to circuses to rock concerts. I know you must have heard about the Columbus Riverwalk by now. If you're a walker, or just want a little getaway from a stressful schedule, the Riverwalk extends from Fort Benning to uptown Columbus.

If you want to rent or buy a home, Columbus offers a lot of square footage and acreage for the money.

I assume there are places in the United States that are lower, but if you research a bit, get a good realtor, and be patient, hopefully you'll find a house to make your home.

The cost of living in West Central Georgia, especially when compared with other cities in Georgia, is fairly reasonable. Utilities and taxes also fall into this category.

I do consider our electric bills on the high side in the hot summer months, but this depends on your home size and unit itself.

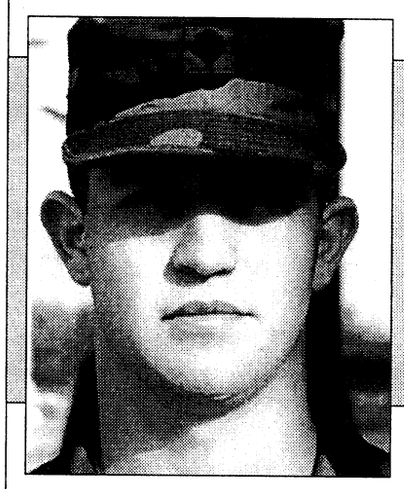
I haven't even begun to talk about the best part of living in our tri-community area, the warm, supportive people who reside along the Chattahoochee River.

As an Army spouse, I've had experiences in other cities where the local community could care less if you became a member or even temporary visitor to their hometown.

I've lived many places where the locals, in fact, resented the military presence. You can imagine how maddening this can be for Soldiers and families alike. Not so here. In fact, the total opposite feeling exists. In six years, I have only run into a few rude individuals, never any that were part of a business or representing something bigger than themselves.

In my daily activities I speak to people all the time and almost everyone responds to my greeting. I feel safe in Columbus and at Fort Benning.

This doesn't mean I'm totally trusting, bad things happen anywhere you live these days.



I believe it's the retired or former Army Soldiers and families, which, combined with the residents of Phenix City and Columbus have made this community a wonderful place to live and raise a family.

If you want to be a part of a community that's growing in the right direction, consider Columbus. You won't be disappointed.

Soldier's art wins drill sergeant's approval

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

There is something extraordinary about Infantry trainee Nathan Durst and drill sergeants say the proof is in the writing on the wall.

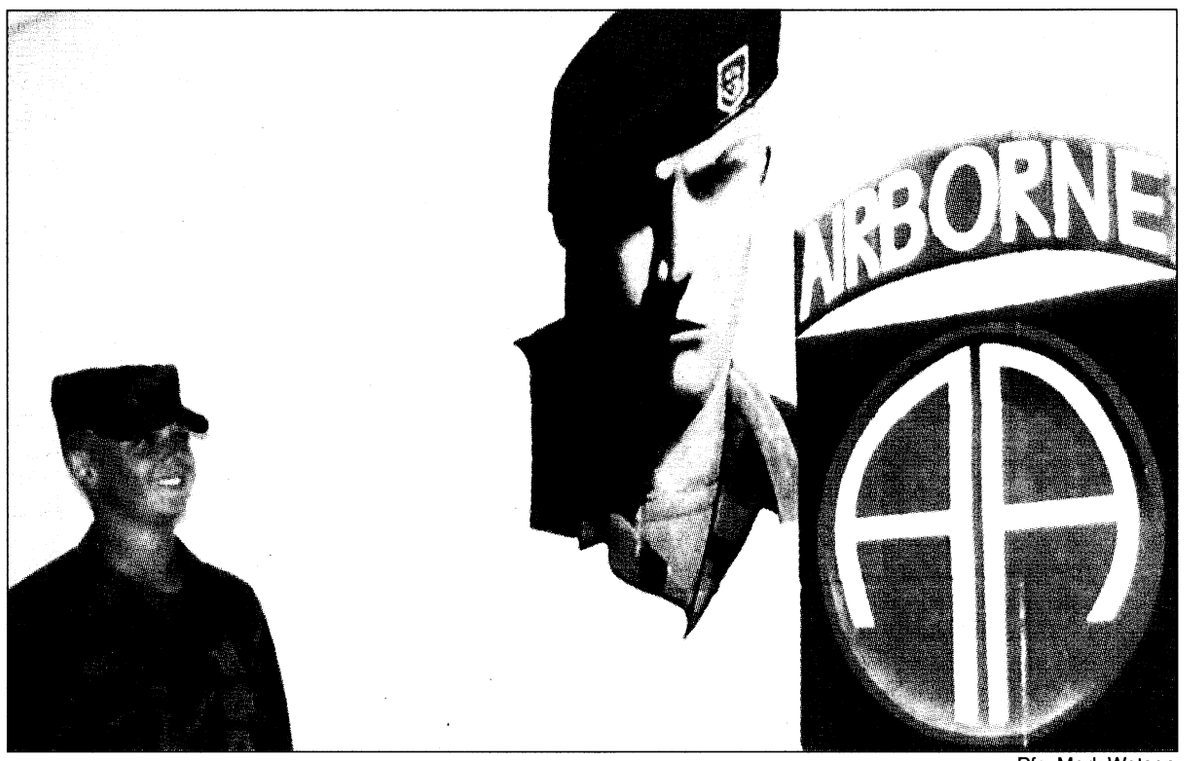
Darst, a 19-year-old Infantry Training Brigade private assigned to A Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry, is a self-proclaimed artist from Jackson, Wyo., who joined the Army for discipline and money for college.

"I had a boring life with no motivation or discipline, and I knew I wouldn't make it through college like that, so I joined the Army," Darst said.

Darst's artistic talent was discovered when Staff Sgt. Michael Tucker, a drill sergeant for A Co. 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. asked for volunteers among the company who thought they could do a painting for him. Darst along with six others volunteered for the task.

"About seven of us volunteered for the job, but most didn't come to more than the first meeting," Darst said.

Some of Darst's work, including the painting that he volunteered for, can be seen in the battalion's Classroom 1.



"His drawings are so good that he could sell them in magazines for a ton of money," said Tucker.

"I have had people want me to do drawings for them. They will come up to me, and tell me they would give me $10 for a drawing to be used for a tattoo. The thing is, I don't really like to sell my work," he said.

"If he wasn't in training and was able to sell his work, he would be able to make a heck of a living," Tucker said.

"I feel that I can do a better job on all my work, so why should people pay for things that I could have done better on," Darst said.

"I always liked drawing. It is something I am good at. I didn't have any special classes on drawing, just the typical classes that everyone is taught in elementary school, junior high and high school," he said. Darst has been drawing since an early age."My first drawing was of a clown when I was in pre-school ... I didn't start painting until I was in high school," he said. Darst has been drawing ever since then.

Pfc. Mark Watson

Pvt. Nathan E. Darst, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry, stands near the painting he did in the battalion area.

"I don't have much free time here, but when I do I like to draw," he said.

Darst, who wants to go to college and major in computer science, said he enjoys writing software as much if not more than drawing. To get the motivation to do well in college, he joined the Army for a term of service, he added.

"The Army is something that I want to do now. If I like it I will stick with it for a while, but it isn't something that I want to do for the rest of my life," he said.

Following in the footsteps of his dad and grandpa, Darst joined to serve his country and to gain discipline.

"My dad is really proud of me for joining, and my mom is now supportive of my decision. At first she wasn't too happy, though," Darst said.

Durst said his time in basic training has provided him with many great memories.

"The first three weeks were really tough, and I don't remember much of that time. We did a lot of (physical training) then. We had (basic rifle marksmanship) for a couple of weeks, and our boxing match was really fun. We do lots of road marches, and we have been on a couple of bivouacs," he said.

"We got our first pass on Thanksgiving, and I got to go to a movie after I shot expert in BRM," he said. Christmas Exodus starts the afternoon of Dec. 17, and it ends Jan. 3.

"I will be going home on the 18th, and I am really looking forward to seeing my family again," he said.

Scottish writer visits area for background research on techno thriller

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Terry Houston always sets his sights high. Last year, he decided to bump off the Queen of England and is now making plans to lead an invasion into Fort Benning.

Houston's not the leader of a militant group though, he's a Scottish author.

In his last book, The Wounded Stone, he killed off the queen and her prime minister.

He's currently on post gathering information for a new book tentatively called, Cyber Warriors, in which Fort Benning will be the site of a cyber invasion into the United States.

"I'm researching a techno-thriller, which I want to base around Fort Benning and the surrounding community," Houston explained. "The idea is that I want to put the whole area under threat from a foreign power both in the civilian community and the military.

Houston

"It'll be a cocktail of bloodthirsty acts of terrorism using a mix of high technology," he said. "It's a plot of an attack of the United States aimed at humiliating the country. It's a plot that's been 10 years in the making, so they're very well organized."

Houston said he thinks what will make the book interesting is that it could happen.

"The thing about a techno-thriller is that it has to be feasible. It's just a yarn, but it should not be out of the bounds of probability," Houston said. "I believe that cyber-terrorism will be the next theater of war."

Because of its geographical position, the United States has been spared from incursions by its enemies, said Houston. He added, those ground rules would no longer apply in cyberspace.

"A small nation has as much clout on that turf as major nation — they're on a level playing field," he added. "If you've got a mad-dog dictator or something, then you could get a situation where they could cause a considerable disruption of any county that relies heavily on technology."

Houston said having his imaginary terrorists attack the Fort Benning community was no coincidence.

"I wanted to base it here because of Fort Benning's reputation as the premier training facility in the world," Houston said. "I've also wanted to come to Georgia. It's been one of the places in the (United) States I've always wanted to see. I thought I could combine a little business with pleasure here."

During his two-week visit to the post, Houston has been out and about trying to get a feel for the area.

"I've been out to Columbus and Phenix City locales to get a little color of the area," he said.

"Every book is driven by the device which creates the situation that you wish to achieve. I've definitely got that on post here," Houston added. "When you're writing a book, you're looking for certain events which are the keys on which it turns. It becomes a challenge of inventiveness.

"Just with general meetings I've had with people, I've picked up plenty of color and a better feel for the post that I couldn't have gotten just by accessing the website," he said. "I've become aware of more of the areas that the post is involved in and it gives me more ways of solving the problem of getting from A to B when I'm writing."

Houston heads back to his home of Paisley, Scotland, just outside Glasgow, this week. He said it should take about a year to finish writing before it will hit stores.

Fort Benning recognizes Soldier, NCO of Year

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The post Soldier and Non-Commissioned Officer of the Year awards were awarded Tuesday at the Main NCO Club.

Staff Sgt. Barry Brown, B Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, Basic Combat Training Brigade, won NCO of the Year, and Cpl. Jeffery Frye, A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Division, won Soldier of the Year.

The awards where presented by Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, Deputy Commanding General, and Command Sgt Maj. Mack Vereen, post sergeant major.

"This is outstanding, I feel like I just won the Superbowl," said Brown.

Frye

To earn the title of NCO of the Year, Brown had to go in front of several selection boards ranging from battalion to regiment and then to post wide.

"I went to my sergeant major and told him that I wanted to go to the board ... and was chosen for my performance in front of the board," said Brown.

Frye said he had to attend six different boards to earn the title of Soldier of the Month.

Brown

"I was really stressed during the boards. Now it is very rewarding to earn this title," he said.

Frye credits his success to good study habits formed while in college.

Both Brown and Frye were very happy they won their titles after facing several boards and competing against other outstanding Soldiers.

"I am glad that I wasn't on the board to select these Soldiers because all the nominees were outstanding," said Eaton.

Guest speaker retired Col. Greg Camp said earlier this year Time Magazine voted the American GI as the most influential person this century.

Although "GI" is a term that is not politically correct to the Army now, he said "It is the GI that makes America. Although the GI hasn't always been the term, the Doughboys, Yanks, Buffalo Soldiers and Jonnie Rebs have been the backbone of America."

He said, "Remember that it is the American Soldier that made the U.S. what it is today."

The Soldiers received money from McCoy Environment, Pioneer Military Lending, the Sergeant Major's Association, TIC, TCI and USPA; savings bonds and gift certificates from AUSA, CB&T, Chamber of Commerce, Dillards and Dillards Fine Jewelry, 1st Union Bank, Geico, South Trust Bank, Louie Louie's, AAFES and The Ledger Enquirer; watches from NCOA, Geico and U.S. Calvary; plaques from Bill Heard Auto, AUSA, Geico, NCOA and UAFA; hockey tickets from Bill Heard Auto, trips from AUSA and MWR, a GPS from Ranger Joes, a pen set from 1st Union Bank, two CD carriers, two cooler bags and two calling cards from Sprint Phone Barracks Center, shirts from TIC, coupons and two class A uniforms from AAFES and Saint Maurice trophies from Names and Frames.

helicopter flying, a parachute jump, jungle scenes and waterborne shots.

Other locations for filming include Fort Bragg, N.C., Key West, Fla., and Fort Stewart, Ga.

Fort Benning was selected as a site because of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and the post's McKenna MOUT site.

"We wanted to use a MOUT facility, one that replicates a real town or village. This was the perfect facility for us to use," Carol Darby, media chief for the U.S. Army Special Operations Command, said.

Also on hand were two still photographers and a video crew from the U.S. Army Special Operations Command. "They are here filming stock footage for our archives," Darby said.

Fifteen Rangers from A Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, participated in filming for the new film.

"I had a blast," Sgt. Tyson Larimore, A Co., 3rd Battalion, said of his two days of film work.

Larimore took part in a helicopter ride and a mock raid to rescue a hostage.

The crew finished filming Dec. 2 and left for Fort Stewart and additional filming with the Rangers of 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Soldiers from Fort Bragg's 96th Civil Affairs Battalion traveled from North Carolina to film a segment showing their role in special operations.

The operational tempo for civil affairs is extremely high.

"We are one of the most deployed units in the military," Capt. Bob Jones said.

"A Civil Affairs detachment is always with a unit when it deploys to an area; when a maneuver unit goes in, we go with them," Sgt. 1st Class Tony Duncan said.

"We put our fingerprint on the ground and then we wait until the reserves show up," Sgt. 1st Class Randall Smith said.

Civil Affairs Soldiers are the bridge between the military sector and the civilians in the region.

Three children from Fort Benning worked with Duncan, Smith and Jones. The girls — Jessica Egan, Casey and Meredith Shutt — were given medical assistance.

The girls also filmed a scene with psychological operations Soldiers from Fort Bragg who gave them comic books written in Spanish and designed to teach them about land mines.

"They teach children what not to pick up and what to do if you see something suspicious," Darby said.

The girls agreed that checking out of school early to help with the film was fun. For their hard work, they were allowed to keep the comic books.

post briefs

Rangers to hold ceremony

The 75th Ranger Regiment will host a 10th anniversary ceremony for "Operation Just Cause" Thursday and again Dec. 17.

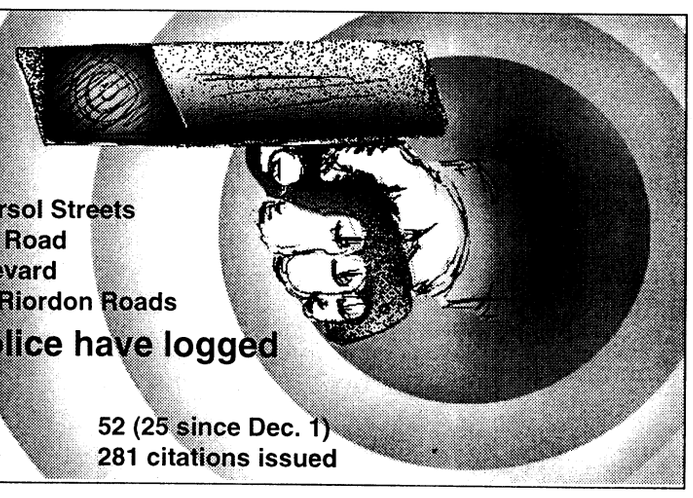
Events will include a Ranger operations brief at 2 p.m. at Infantry Hall, Classroom 22, a No Host Social at the Fort Benning Golf Course Banquet Room ($5 cover at door and cash bar) at 6 p.m. Thursday and Dec. 17 includes an airborne operation at 10 a.m. at Fryar Drop Zone (Attendees on jump status are invited to jump — all others are invited to observe), a barbecue lunch at noon at the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Dining Facility with a Ranger Display, a 2 p.m. ceremony with Lt. Gen. William F. Kernan as guest speaker at Ranger Memorial followed by a photo opportunity.

DPW announces road closure

There will be a temporary street closure on Lexington Street between Dixie Road and Buildings 2881 and 2882 from Monday through Dec. 17.

The purpose of this street closure will be to construct and install new storm drainage pipe and storm inlet.

This work will also block access from Lexington Street into the parking lot adjacent to Buildings 2881 and 2884



Access will still be available to the company operations facilities and the barracks area through the parking lot of Building 2885.

USARSA CGSOC graduates today

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Officer Course will be held in Pratt Hall inside historic Ridgway Hall today at 1:1 a.m.

The guest speaker for the graduation ceremony will be Lt. Gen. Lawson W. Magruder III, Deputy Commanding General and Chief of Staff of U.S. Army Forces Command. For more graduation information, call the school at 545-2576.

3rd Battalion Ranger wins USASOC Soldier of the Year

Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

The U.S. Army Special Operations Command has selected a Fort Benning Soldier as their Soldier of the Year.

Spc. Dale Allen Nelson, a machine gun team leader for A Company, 3rd Ranger Battalion, won the USASOC Soldier of the year board for the fiscal year 2000. The board was Nov. 1-4 at Fort Bragg, N.C.

The board consisted of an Army Physical Fitness Test and a test of wit and knowledge. The Soldiers were judged on their appearance, military bearing, and physical fitness as well as communication skills.

Nelson

"The hardest part of the whole thing was just getting over the anxiety of presenting myself and expressing my thoughts and opinions in front of seven command sergeants major," Nelson said. "They had CSMs to spare sitting on the board — there was the USASOC CSM and one from each of the subordinate special operations units."

Nelson said the questions he asked weren't just yes or no questions but questions requiring his opinion.

"The questions required my opinion on issues like the future of the Army, retention and how I make the Army better. The hardest question was when I was asked what I do personally for the Army every day, I talked on that one for about 10 minutes."

Before Nelson went to Fort Bragg for the Soldier of the Year competition, he had to be selected from a handful of hopefuls from his unit and the regiment.

"It is great to see that this Ranger has the drive and motivation to work hard and excel," said 1st Sgt. Kevin Martin, A Co., 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regiment. "Considering the tremendous operations tempo that comes with being a Ranger, Nelson's success proves he did a lot of work on his own time and still did a great job as a team leader."

Nelson is a well-rounded individual, said Staff Sgt. Glen Smith, Nelson's squad leader. He is also on the Ranger flag football team where he is a starting lineman. His nickname is "Bottlecap". The team is in first place in the post league.Nelson's success at the board did not go unrewarded. He received many prizes for winning. His rewards included a check from USASOC for $1,000, a savings bond for $1,000, a one year membership to Friends of Special Operations, a set of dress blues, a plaque, a $175 gift certificate from AAFES and a plaque and watch from AUSA.

Nelson is PCSing to the 2nd Ranger Battalion at Fort Lewis, Wash., Wednesday.

"He will be missed, guys like him are the reason we are the best," said Sgt. 1st Class Craig Irwin, Nelson's platoon sergeant.

Army Career and Alumni Program

Transitioning Soldiers need to document military experiences, qualifications, work history, training, education and achievements.

Preparation of a resume is the accepted way for a job seeker to present his or her professional history to potential employers. One very convenient source available, free of charge, to help with resume preparation is the DD Form 2586, Verification of Military Experience and Training, said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services manager. The Department of Defense issues each separating Soldier a DD Form 2586, VMET report. Wight explained that because Soldiers have completed numerous military training courses and served in many positions, perhaps too many for some to recall easily for inclusion on resumes, job or college applications. That is what the VMET report is for. It is created from automated records on file and includes military job assignments, training programs with recommended college credits, and civilian job titles that relate to specific MOS.

Separating Soldiers should automatically receive the VMET report no later than 120 days before their separation date. However, because of changes in separation dates, it is recommended that each separating Soldier call the VMET office to check the status of the automatic system. Of particular importance is to update the mailing address in the VMET office to insure it is received in time to be useful. CONUS based Army personnel can call: (800) 258-VMET.

Soldiers who have received their VMET are encouraged to bring it to ACAP preseparation briefings, workshops, and counseling sessions. This useful tool is available to separating Soldiers as a valuable entitlement to help transition back to the civilian workforce, said Wight.

To inquire more about the VMET and other ACAP services or information, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308, 2309 in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Bayonet staff writer

Growing up in a single-parent family of five, Jamal DeSaucsure worked hard to set a good example for his younger brothers and sisters.

When he wasn't working his part-time job to help the family of six, he was there for his younger siblings. He was the man of the house, and he knew if he didn't give his family the love they needed the end result would be tragic.

When it came time for college, that hard work and those strong family ties didn't unravel for the South Carolina native. He continued working to support his family and commuted home every weekend to lend a helping hand around the house.

The only time DeSaucsure didn't come home was when he had to fulfill his Army Reserve commitment as a transportation specialist.

That reserve commitment was enough to spark his interest in joining the regular Army after his graduation from the University of South Carolina with a criminal law and psychology degree.

"I was just looking for a little adventure and a change in lifestyle," he said. "So I enlisted again — only this time in the regular Army and as an Infantryman."

Now serving Uncle Sam full-time, the college grad was assigned to Fort Benning as a driver for the Infantry Training Brigade commander.

It only took the colonel a month or two, DeSaucsure said, before he popped the question.

"So you have a college degree, right, son?" The colonel questioned the then Spc. DeSaucsure.

"Yes sir," he replied.

"So what are you going to do next — OCS, Green to Gold, what?"

That is all it took for DeSaucsure to decide what he wanted to do.

"I knew then I wanted to become an officer," he said. "I had spent my time in reserves and in regular Army, and I knew that I could never be in a position as an enlisted man to make the impacting decisions that an officer could make.

"I knew I needed to do what it takes to reach my new goal — I was going to become an officer," he said.

With the help of the commander, DeSaucsure received and completed his packet for the Army's Green to Gold program, a program that takes high-caliber enlisted Soldiers and sends them back to school to finish their degrees and get a commission as a second lieutenant. (See adjacent story for additional information on the program and qualifications.)

And within months, DeSaucsure was on his way to trading in his subdued specialist rank for a shiny new second lieutenant bar.

That was nearly a year ago when DeSaucsure left active duty to finish his master's degree at Columbus State University and obtain his commission.

Now DeSaucsure, the school's cadet sergeant major, is preparing to go back once again to active duty — only this time it will be as an officer.

"The Green to Gold program was tough," he said. "It took being a full-time leader and the help of my wife Starla to get through it.

"My family was with me throughout the entire way — from when I was growing up in South Carolina to when I left to go for Green to Gold," he said. "I was able to make it through all the tough times thanks to them."

While the difficulties the program places on Soldiers is great, DeSaucsure said, it was entirely worth the sacrifices and hardships to reach his goal of becoming an officer.

"This is a preparation for my career," he said. "There have been many times when it was tough, but I know this is what has to be done for me to reach the level of success I want."

While there is no way to tell how far that level will take him, DeSaucsure said, he has used one motto to get this far and he hopes it will carry him to that desired level — you only encounter obstacles when you take your eyes off the objective.

"Every time in my life I have faced a challenge I have told myself that," he said. "That is how I got through Green to Gold and that is how I will make it through my officer's basic course."

DeSaucsure received his notification that he would be branched as a transportation officer later this year.

Those interested in following in the footsteps of DeSaucsure should contact Capt. Irvin Pete at Columbus State University at 568-2449.

Soldiers can turn stripes into gold bar by finishing school with Green To Gold program

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

It was nearly four years ago when Sgt. David Wilmore decided to turn in his sergeant stripes and get his commission.

The petroleum supply specialist, who had logged nearly four years on active duty, was not yet finished with his active duty commitment, but thanks to the Army ROTC Green to Gold program, he was headed back to school to turn his stripes into a gold second lieutenant's bar.

Annually, hundreds of active-duty Soldiers like Wilmore get the chance to go back to school and earn their commission through the Green to Gold program, according to Capt. Irvin Pete, a ROTC recruiter assigned to Columbus State University.

"The program gives outstanding enlisted Soldiers the opportunity to leave active duty prior to their ETS date and get their degree," Pete said, "and at the same time earn their commission."

The application window for Soldiers to earn their commission via the Green to Gold program is now open.

Interested Soldiers who meet the following requirements should call Pete to schedule an interview at 568-2449.

Green to Gold scholarship requirements:

- A GT score of 110 or higher
- Completed two years of active service
- On active duty as of June 1 the year the scholarship is awarded
- Under the age of 27 June 30 the year when commissioned (may be waiverable for Soldiers who are no older than 30)
- A letter of acceptance from the school the Soldier plans to attend
- Have an SAT score of 920 or an ACT score of 19
- A GPA of at least 2.5 on all college work
- A letter of acceptance from the professor of Military Science
- A letter of recommendation from immediate commander endorsed by the next higher echelon (field grade)
- Applicants must not have more than 10 years time in service
- Submission of scholarship information by March 15.

For more information call the Columbus State Military Science Department at 568-2449.

Transitional brigade develops force from light and heavy elements

Staff Sgt. Nancy Morrison
Fort Knox Public Affairs

Since its conception just a few months ago, it has been termed the Transitional Brigade, the Prototype Medium Weight Brigade, the Medium Weight Brigade, the Prototype Brigade and lately the Initial Brigade.

To overcome the deployability, sustainability, and mobility shortfalls that exist in today's Army, the Army's chief of staff challenged DA leadership to develop a force that will bring together light and heavy forces into a somewhat medium force.

Some sources say that this new brigade will replace the heavy armored force, but Fort Knox Commander Maj. Gen. B.B. Bell, the Army's chief of armor, said that speculation is far from the truth.

However, he did say that even though the heavy forces are vital to today's Army, they might not always be practical. In the future the Army will want platforms that are more lethal and survivable than the current M1 tank, while displaying substantially enhanced deployability, mobility, and sustainability efficiencies.

The Army is hard at work seeking science and technology opportunities that will give it those capabilities in the development of the Future Combat System. Until then, said Bell, the M1 main battle tank will remain the dominant combat platform for major theater of war scenarios.

According to Bell, while the heavy armored force remains the centerpiece of the Army's ability to defend America's interests, today it is not rapidly deployable or sustainable enough to influence developing situations.

Bell added that while the U.S. has the best light Infantry in the world, in many cases light Infantry is not sufficiently armed to be sent out in light but lethal contingencies.

"We spent 50 years in the American Army preparing that battlefield for war with the Russian army," said Bell.

"We reinforced bridges so our most heavy and lethal equipment could seamlessly cross these bridges. We reinforced the roads so that our heaviest and most difficult formations could cross these trails and roads. We pre-positioned supplies and equipment all over the battlefield.

"We brought forward nearly six divisions of pre-positioned equipment and put it in Europe. What we had was a huge force on a prepared battlefield, and we could fall in very quickly and defend Western Europe in depth."

Bell said it all worked fine when there were 50 years to plan and preposition supplies, equipment and materials, and 50 years to build the roads and bridges the way the U.S. wanted them.

> "In this brigade, we want to bring together one likeness of the platforms so that we can begin to dominate our ability to rapidly project the force."
> — Maj. Gen. B.B. Bell
> Fort Knox Commanding General

He said that when the Cold War ended the U.S. began to take on new missions to expand the role of NATO in defending U.S. interests in world areas where America's economic interests were vital to us.

"We noticed pretty quick that this heavy mechanized armor force we created and served us so well had some major drawbacks," said Bell.

"Those major drawbacks were that we didn't have a battlefield that we could prepare for 50 years. We didn't have equipment that was rapidly deployable, because we had pre-positioned equipment. We didn't have supplies forward deployed all over the world. We had none of the benefits of the cold war force, but we still had the cold war force.

"It took six months to get our forces in place to go to war with Iraq during Desert Shield/Desert Storm. Fortunately, we were allowed that time. There were many in those days that said, 'What if we hadn't?' What would have become of America's interests and American battlefield capability if we had to fight after one month? Or two weeks?

"We've had several scrapes since then. We've had Bosnia and Kosovo, which told us a lot about how difficult it was to move these heavy formations, supplies. and reinforcements rapidly."

Bell said what the U.S. wants is a medium-sized force that can be rapidly deployed into areas that are designated as small-scale contingencies where America's interests are at risk.

The U.S., he said, needs a rapid deployment capability to reach places, get in quick, stabilize the environment, and resolve a conflict before it escalates into a major theater of war.

Bell said that officials see the medium brigade being used in areas where small scale contingencies crop up and where the terrain is complex and distinguished by an abundance of urban areas.

The medium weight brigade is a basic mounted Infantry formation which has a large number of Infantry. It will be supported by direct fire gun systems so that it can assault an enemy in dug-in positions and win convincingly, Bell added.

He said the concept is that the Infantry rides in Infantry carriers to a final assault position where its Soldiers then would do a dismounted assault against a pre-determined objective.

The Infantry will have support by its own carrier vehicles featuring light gun capability. Those will be followed by heavy large-caliber cannon fire that would normally be present when Infantry is assaulting. That, Bell said, is a mobile gun system platoon. Bell also said that there are four battlefield categories that tend to dominate the medium brigade.

"There is the Infantry carrier, the mobile gun system, an anti-tank guided missile platform vehicle to shoot long-range anti-tank missile fires at tank formations that may intrude on the battlefield area, and perhaps the most important platform in the brigade is the Recce (Reconnaissance, Communication and Electronics) vehicle platform," he said.

Bell pointed out that one of the reasons the Army has such difficulty deploying its mechanized and armored brigades is that the tanks, Bradleys, artillery pieces, rocket launchers, and recovery vehicles are very heavy.

Because of the way the Army has its current brigades organized, and given they were optimized to already be on the ground before a war starts, the Army was not too concerned about the logistics that came out of the brigades, because it had pre-positioned all those supplies.

"In this brigade we want to bring together one likeness of the platforms so that we can begin to dominate our ability to rapidly project the force," Bell said. "We will do that by setting a perimeter that all the vehicles in the brigade must be able to individually fit on a C-130 aircraft.

"If we go with these light vehicles, you'll see that we will be able to deploy, at a minimum, three of these platforms and a maximum of six on one C-17 or C-5.

"If we can achieve a common platform requirement so that the track or wheels, suspension drive train, automotive characteristics, etc. are all identical across those dominant platforms, that in itself lowers the logistics details, thus decreasing dramatically the logistics supplies that must flow simultaneously with the force."

Bell said that allows the Army to improve its deployment and sustainability capabilities, while at the same time constructing a highly proficient combat force.

"We recognize that there are scenarios where the medium weight brigade may have to deploy with other heavy formations into other major theaters of war," Bell said. "If that is the case, the plan is, before deployment, to augment these brigades with heavier equipment and to give them some of the classical materiel, in an augmentation sense, that you would find in a regular heavy brigade today."

Civilians see mortars up close during training

2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. hosts explosive event

Ken Jones
Mortar New Equipment Training Team

A three-day training program for civilians who work in the material development programs supporting U.S. Army mortar programs took place Nov. 16-19. D Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment hosted the event.

The Mortar New Equipment Training Team arranged for the group to receive a tailored version of the 120 mm mortar new equipment training as well as other mortar training.

The purpose of the training was to give material developers an opportunity to see first-hand, in a hands-on training mode, how the systems they develop are used by Soldiers in the field.

During the first day of training, an overview was given on the characteristics, capabilities of the 60 mm, 81 mm, and 120 mm mortar. This was followed by hands-on familiarization on the M-16 Plotting Board, M-23 Mortar Ballistic Computer and battlefield scenarios.

The day was highlighted by actually putting the civilians in a simulated night environment, allowing them to experience what Soldiers must accomplish in limited visibility with equipment designed by the Mortar product manager and themselves.

The second day the civilians were put in a field environment on Shelton Range, working with the 120 mm mortar ground mounted and carrier version. The group had the opportunity to place the mortars into action and practice mortar gunnery.

The instructors explained how to drop mortar rounds and remove misfires using an inert round, followed with hands-on training by each civilian dropping and removing training rounds while supervised by the instructors.

On day three came the experience of a lifetime. Each civilian had the opportunity to drop a mortar round beginning with the M 880 Short-Range Training Round at Shelton Range.

The group engaged targets, observing it travel the precise distance down range and effectively hitting targets. In the afternoon the group arrived at Red Cloud Range to actually fire the 120 mm mortar high explosive rounds.

The civilians were given safety briefings, unpacked ammo, prepared to fire and on a voluntary basis were given opportunity to fire M 933 HE rounds. The group said it was a lot easier to fire the ground mounted 120 mm opposed to the carrier, which has a small space in the mortar compartment to fire rounds.

When it turned dark the 120 mm illumination round was fired. Darkness turned into light with candlepower provided by the illumination round. The civilians were amazed at the effects that illumination rounds provided on the battlefield.

The training was concluded with the presentation of Certificates of Training for the civilians that participated. The training provided an opportunity for the mortar readiness and sustainment activity personnel to better understand the actual user of mortars, the Infantry (11C) Soldier.

According to Harry Santa, Group Manager, Mortars and Warheads Contracting Group at U.S. Army Tank Automotive Command - Armament Research Development and Engineering Center, "The hands-on mortar training was an outstanding experience. My team of contracting professionals were able to step right into the boots of their true customers.

"We now have a better understanding of the training issues and warfighting issues associated with the deployment of the Mortar systems that we buy right here at Picatinny Arsenal," he added.

James Wejsa, Developmental Project Officer for Mortar Smoke and Illuminating Cartridges, found the training invaluable.

"I personally established some additional POCs that I can go to at the (U.S. Army Infantry Center) when I have questions regarding 'How would the Soldiers do this or like to do this?'" he said.

Participants of the training had different areas of expertise like engineering, development, ammunition, and computer software.

Because of these different backgrounds and work experiences with the mortar systems, they had different experiences on the training ranges.

Rangers get 'gut check' on 30-mile road march

Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Rangers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment stepped off on a 30-mile march Dec. 2.

The Rangers carried full combat loads on the walk and some additional motivational treats known as "pogey bait" to almost any Infantry Soldier.

This event is conducted biannually and is "just another gut check," according to Capt. John Dyke, who completed the march without a blister.

"This is just a way for us to prove our mental and physical toughness," he said.

"The Rangers have always been known for their toughness and physical fitness, but a 30-mile footmarch is something that most regular Soldiers would not even want to try," said Chaplain (Capt.) Bill Harrison, 3rd Ranger Battalion chaplain.

The 30-miler, as it is known to the Rangers, was started in late 1997 when Col. Stan McCrystal, then the commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, said, "Everybody talks about being hard, but we are going to prove it."

During the preparations for the road march, the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Daniel Allyn, offered Rangers an opportunity to avoid the 30-miler by allowing Rangers who were within their re-enlistment window to re-enlist.

Rangers who were in the window did re-enlist that day. But they did it after completing the march.

"Spirits were surprisingly high that day, and every Ranger acted like it was just another day at work," said 1st Sgt. Richard Gatien, Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

Nurse offers toy tips for smart shopping

Yasmin Cathright
Community Health Nursing

How can parents be sure that a toy is safe? It is not always easy to tell. Some safety standards, such as the prohibition of the use of lead paint, are not always apparent to the eye.

Most toys are packed in ways that make it difficult for the purchaser to check. Shoppers should choose toys wisely, keeping in mind the safety tips below:

Toys with small parts: If a toy or toy-part can fit through a cardboard toilet paper roll, avoid them for smaller children. This includes children under the age of three or any child who tends to put things in his or her mouth.

Beware of removable eyes and noses on stuffed toys and dolls. Removable squeakers on squeeze toys, little figures and small pieces that fit into larger toys also pose a choking hazard.

Balloons: Balloons are the leading toy killer. Always supervise children with balloons, inflated or not. Keep balloons away from children under eight. If a balloon bursts while a child is blowing it up, it could be inhaled.

Small balls, marbles and ball-like objects: Children as old as five have choked to death on small balls and marbles as large as 1.75 inches.

Ball-like objects such as round fruit and vegetable toys also pose the same hazards as balls.

Crib toys: Examine crib toys for possible strangulation hazards. Crib gyms (toys that are stretched across the crib) should always be removed from the crib when the baby can get up on hands and knees. Crib toys should not have cords or strings longer than 6 inches.

Strangulation hazards: Strings, cords and necklaces can strangle infants and children.

Projectiles: Can cut skin or blind and deafen a child who is stuck in the eye or ear.

Toys that catapult off handheld launchers can be particularly dangerous.

Sharp points and edges on toys can also puncture, cut or lacerate skin.

Noise: Toy caps, guns, telephones or other noisy toys pose a potential hearing risk. Hearing experts say: "If a toy held to an adult's ear hurts, it is too loud for children."

Toxic art supplies: Arts and crafts must now be labeled for their long-term (chronic) health hazards. Watch out for children's makeup kits that may contain toxins — such as toluene in nail polish.

The holiday season is once again knocking at our door. Shop smart and continue to protect our most precious jewels ... our children.

AFTB celebrates five-year anniversary

Courtney Linn
Army Family Team Building

Army Family Team Building has changed lives. For years, confused Army spouses could only rely on wives' clubs, informal unit networks and stairwell gossip for translations and word-of-mouth schooling in Army culture. It was not unusual to find a spouse who did not know what benefits were available — even something as simple as using the commissary and post exchange. In 1994, from lessons learned in the Gulf War, senior Army leaders sought to fix the problem by creating an educational program, developed for family members by family members, to teach Army culture and give families the skills they need for independence and self-sufficiency. This educational program was AFTB.

The local Army community will gather together for a luncheon celebrating the anniversary of its all-volunteer run AFTB program at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Tuesday. For five years, AFTB has taught subjects, including "Introduction to Military and Civilian Resources" and "Effective Communications," to individual family members of active duty Soldiers, Army Reserve and National Guard and Department of the Army civilians.

"With the increased number of deployments experienced by Soldiers and their families today, AFTB's place in the Army is perhaps more important now than five years ago when it started," said Patty Barron, AFTB program chairman and Army spouse. "Families come to AFTB to learn what benefits and resources the Army offers, what to expect from Army culture, and how to network so they can become part of the larger Army family and have a sense of belonging."

> "... AFTB's place in the Army is perhaps more important now than five years ago when it started."
> — Patty Barron
> AFTB program chairman

AFTB also benefits the overall Army mission. Senior Army leaders recognize that the need for preparedness and self-reliance is not only important to the family members' morale, but also to the readiness of deployed Soldiers who, knowing their families are capable of coping, can focus on their mission — humanitarian, peace-keeping, warfighting or training.

AFTB officially began offering classes at Fort Benning in October 1994. A few months prior, five family members and two Family Support Division employees from Fort Benning traveled to Washington, D.C., for training at AFTB Master Trainers. These trainers then began the program by training 10 instructors and implementing the first classes with these initial volunteers.

Army family members continue to provide the foundation for the program. With the garrison commander and overseeing agencies, volunteer family members design, develop, implement and evaluate the AFTB program. At Fort Benning, 41 volunteers have taught more than 1000 students this year. In addition, each year a few instructors travel away from their families for up to five days to attend master-level training, sponsored by the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

The program has a profound effect on many of its participants. AFTB students often become instructors so that they can help family members like themselves. Comments in course evaluations also reflect AFTB's positive impact.

"At first, I didn't know what the value would be for me and I questioned coming (to the training) at all," wrote one graduate. "I could never have known what I would learn, how I would meet new friends and how I would feel. What I did not know is that this experience would have such a dramatic effect on me and my personal life as a whole."

AFTB offers classes on a regular basis, open to any Soldier (both active and reserve), Department of the Army civilian employee and family member. All classes and course materials are free. There are three levels of AFTB courses that target everyone from newcomers in the Army to emerging leaders in the community. Interested students can enroll in a fourth level to become AFTB instructors.

International students blend in American culture

Celebration turns classmates into friends

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of Americas

Traditional American food, entertainment and fellowship, were all part of the International Friendship Ministries annual Christmas Banquet at the Edgewood Baptist Church, Dec. 3.

Ron Collins, director of the International Friendship Ministries, said the international guests attending the banquet represented over 49 different countries.

He said some were students at Columbus State University and U.S. Army School of the Americas.

"We have three major banquets a year — Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas," said Collins. "These are opportunities for us to share our traditions and our American way of life."

Besides the opportunity of meeting during the banquets, Collins said the ministry offers the international guests a variety of classes, including English as a second language.

"We try to facilitate the involvement of the community to help the international guests meet American families," he said.

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their residence in celebration of the season. Doing so requires prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation. Holiday decorations will conform to the following:

Family Housing

No decorations, lighted or unlighted, are allowed on roofs because the installation can be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

Decorations may be affixed to walls, the underside of eaves, and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations, use the smallest possible fasteners like staples. Use only Underwriter's Laboratory electrical decorations.

Do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Barracks

Exterior lighting is not permitted in the barracks. Inside do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Offices

Nonelectric decorations will be used in office and operational facilities throughout the installation.

Given the ever-diminishing funding resources, energy conservation is important. Be judicious in family housing and barrack areas when using electrical decorations. Do not turn on outside electrical decorations until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight.

Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow everyone to enjoy the holiday season.

For more information, call Glenn Todd with DPW Customer Services at 545-2117.

Holiday Safety Tips

Today's Christmas lights use energy efficiently and still provide enough light to brighten the season but be ever mindful of safety. Here are some safety tips that will hopefully make this a safer holiday period:

• Buy light sets approved by Underwriters Laboratories. Use the right lights for indoor use, outdoor, or both.

• Do not overload the electrical circuits. Maximum capacity of 15 amp circuit is 1,800 watts and a 20 amp circuit is 2,400 watts. Check the breaker or fuse controlling the circuit to determine the amperage. To compute the holiday lighting load, multiply the number of bulbs by the number of watts per bulb. Be sure to include house lamps, appliances, and other electrical equipment on the same circuit.

• Before decorating, check light for frayed wires, damaged sockets or cracked insulation. If there are defects replace the entire set.

• Hot bulbs can ignite dry branches. Avoid fire by keeping natural trees well watered and keeping extension cords and light sets away from the water. Light the tree when at home and awake to enjoy it. Always unplug the Christmas tree when not at home.

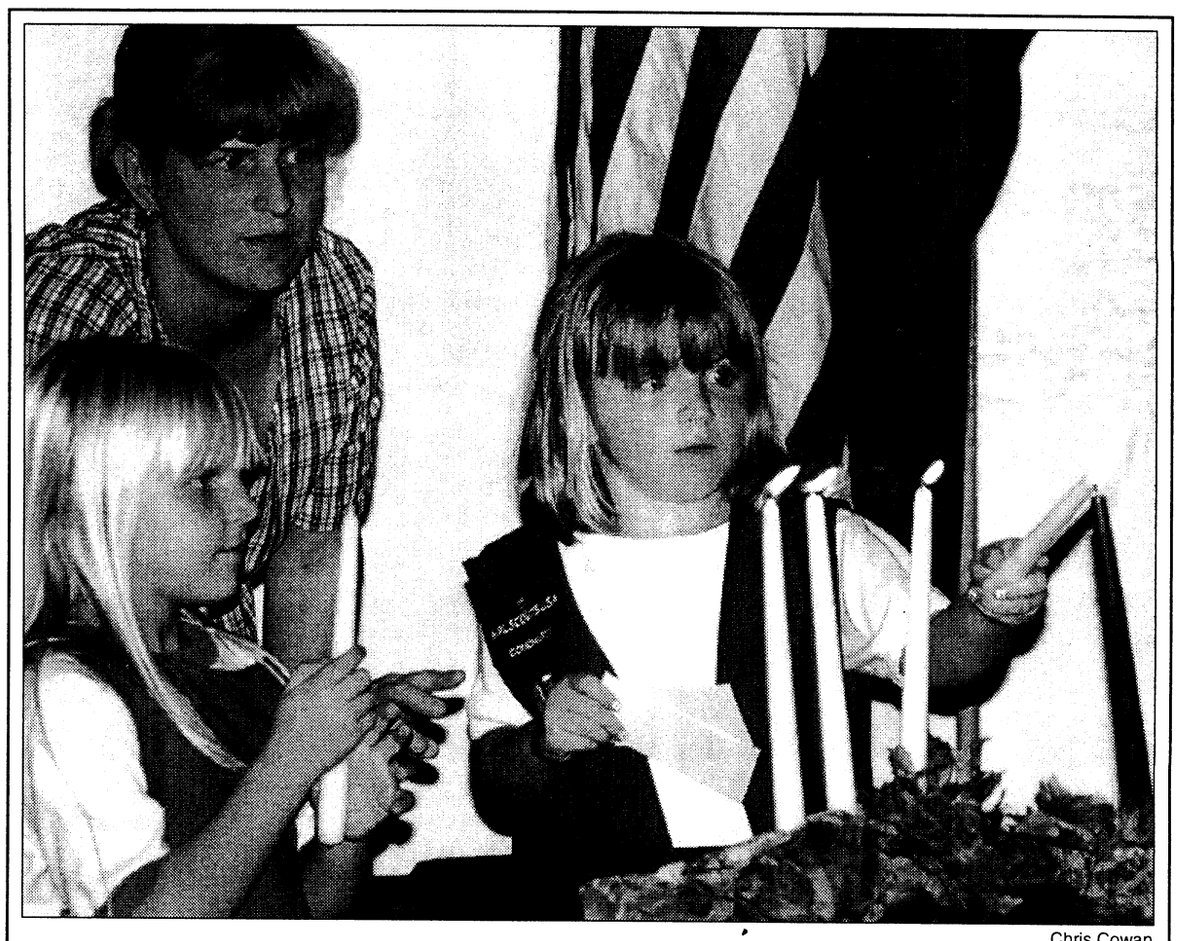
• Keep a fire extinguisher handy.

• Avoid short-circuiting from rain by covering outdoor plugs and connector joints with plastic wrap and sealing the ends with electrical tape.

• For outdoor lighting, use a ground fault circuit interrupter on each circuit. If current leaks through frayed or damaged wires, the interrupter shuts it off. Interrupters cost about $7 to $10.

• Don't use more than one extension cord per outlet, and never hide cords under carpets or rugs.

• Buy a tree that is fresh. If the needles are already falling off, the tree is too dry and it should not be purchased. Leave the tree outside until time to decorate. It is a good idea to trim at least a one inch piece from the bottom of the tree. This increases the tree's ability to absorb water. Keep a live tree watered. Trees commonly use up to, depending on size, a gallon of water every day.



• Never use candles to decorate a Christmas tree.

• Keep Christmas trees away from fireplaces, radiators, heating registers and space heaters.

• Keep a working smoke detector in the room above the Christmas tree. Consider purchasing a "tree-detector." This is a smoke and heat detector that looks like a Christmas ornament that actually hangs in the tree.

• Remember holly, mistletoe and poinsettias are all poisonous plants to people and pets.

• Be careful of ornaments and decorations that include ribbons or garlands that can easily become snagged on a passing child. This alone could cause a full-sized tree to fall on a child.

AAFES offers holiday bonus bucks

Capt. Jennifer Christovich
Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — The Army and Air Force Exchange Service is offering Bonus Bucks to its customers again this holiday season, now through Dec. 24, overseas, and now through Dec. 24, stateside.

Bonus Bucks can be compared to a gift certificate. For every $25 spent, AAFES awards one Bonus Buck that can be used as the cash equivalent in AAFES facilities. They will be issued in main stores and Toylands. Also included are stand alone Power Zones and furniture stores, as well as BXTRAs/PXTRAs.

One new feature this year is that Bonus Bucks can be redeemed on the initiation of new layaways, interim payments on existing layaways, and final payments on existing layaways. The final date for redemption on layaway and direct retail items is Dec. 31.

Customers can use the Bonus Bucks toward the purchase of most items, except gasoline, alcohol, tobacco products, uniform and accessory issue items, or Exchange Catalog and Internet purchases.

Culture: Ministry sponsors banquet

Staff Officer Course, took advantage of the ministries hospitality.

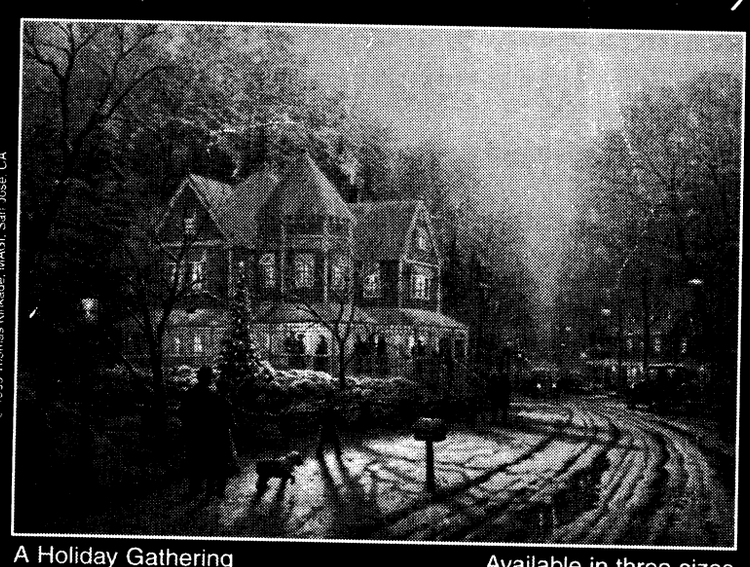
"This experience has been very enriching for my family and me," said Diaz. "Their English course was a tremendous asset. I also benefited tremendously from the many friendships I formed within this great ministry."

Diaz said his family and he attended all three banquets the ministry offered in 1999.

"This is also an enriching experience for the American families, especially those with children," said Collins. "They'll get exposed to another culture and in most cases another language."

According to Collins, statistics show that 80 percent of international students attending schools in the U.S., never get linked with an American family.

"We're trying to do something about that here in Columbus," he said.



Although the ministry currently has many families who sponsor international students, Collins said they can always use more.

He said if anyone is interested in sponsoring an international family or would like to become involved with the ministry, call 653-0097.

Fifth graders at E.A. White Elementary learn to quilt during Native American culture studies.

Students learn art of quilting

Judy Little White Elementary

Some fifth graders at E. A. White Elementary School are learning first hand about the art of quilting. Students in the classes of Judy Little and Mary Jo Judge worked diligently selecting fabric, designing patterns, and learning meticulous stitching.

The study of Native American cultures and frontier development has provided the setting for the thematic unit. Students have studied Native American tribes of the Southwest and Southeast so far.

Quilting is a great learning experience that allows each child to express themselves artistically and creatively. It has also been an excellent exercise in persistence.

The excitement and challenge is expressed best by the students' comments.

Chelsea Kotlowski said, " Its fun to quilt and I've learned something new. You have to sew through more layers than sewing."

"I think it is cool. Quite nice. Relaxing, too," said Michelle Rollinson.

Ray Aguirre said, "I really don't like it but I don't want to do paper work. It keeps you focused on things."

"I like quilting," said Everett Reed." "You can sew and I've never done that before. You can get any color fabric you want."

Eduardo Mendoza added, "I think I like it because I haven't done this before. I can do whatever pattern I choose. You can recreate and learn a new skill."

After carefully reviewing a prospectus, and evaluating the vast amount of information that it contains, the decision is then made to purchase the company's stock. Stocks can be purchased from a full-service investment broker, a discount broker, or over the Internet through an on-line broker.

The fees and commissions charged by the brokerages can vary. The full service brokerages on average charge the highest fees and commissions, while the on-line and discount brokerages often charge the lowest. Full service brokers charge higher fees because they usually offer a multitude of services. Predominately, full service brokers can often offer advice on particular stocks. Discount and on-line brokers charge lower fees and commissions because they usually do not offer advice; they simply offer securities trading capabilities.

When purchasing securities, the proceeds of the sale are not destined for the corporation that issued the stock, they are routed to another investor. The corporation received its proceeds from the investment banks that assisted in underwriting the initial public offering of the company. The financial markets operate in this fashion due to the fact that they are based on an auction and dealer system. This system is designed to connect two parts of a transaction: the buyer and the seller.

At the auction markets, buyers and sellers of securities place orders, through their brokers, that are routed to the floor of the major exchanges. The two primary auction markets are the American Stock Exchange and the New York Stock Exchange. Television networks usually show footage of the NYSE during the financial reports.

Although it appears as if chaos has ensued, the financial markets function quite efficiently. Once the broker's orders are sent to the exchanges they are routed to what is referred to as a specialist. A specialist is essentially a matchmaker between the buyers and sellers of individual stocks. The specialist keeps track of the prices at which a particular stock is being offered, as well as the prices at which buyers are willing to pay. The specialist then tries to closely match the orders of the buyers and sellers. If a match is not found the specialist is obligated to purchase the securities. This system is in place to ensure that the financial markets operate fluidly.

The dealer based system works in much the same way. The primary dealer market is the National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotation system. The NASDAQ is a computerized market where investment brokers can view a securities dealer's transactions.

This enables a broker to choose the best buying (bid price) or selling stock price (ask price) for an individual. Purchasing securities is not as difficult as it may first appear. However, it is always beneficial to gain as much information as possible about stocks before purchasing them, by either doing the research personally, or by consulting a financial professional.

reflections

The Christmas season is a great time to give thanks as we share in the wonders of life, liberty and love.

During the next few days we will be in preparation for the world's greatest holiday — Christmas.

This is the time of year when we gladly share our gifts with family and community. As we plan our gifts, menus, schedules of visits and visitors, we must not forget the reason for the season. God's act of mercy and grace are given through Jesus Christ. Though we celebrate this holiday once a year, God's expressions of love are given throughout the year.

Christmas is a time when we should give thanks to God for his many blessings. Blessings are all too often forgotten in the aftermath of celebration and festivities.

We are a blessed people and our blessings range from our history as Pilgrims and in poverty to wealth and comfortable lives, and all areas in between. We are indeed a blessed people, and should above all else be grateful to God and give thanks.

We should also give thanks to God for those who unselfishly give of themselves for our peace, happiness and well being. We do well to remember them, not for the holiday, but for their gestures of love and acts of kindness.

We should also be thankful for our blessedness as leaders in the world economy. A blessedness that challenges us to be responsible and available to help others. Where poverty, tragedy and oppression appear on the horizon, our blessedness is the catalyst that challenges us to engage them.

Rather than complain because we did not get this or that gift, we are called upon to assist others. Our gifts must include our unselfish desire to aid others in distress.

Wherever the call, whether to foreign lands or downtown in America, we must be ready and willing to aid others as they seek to get them back on their feet. Our motives and efforts are demanded, in part, because we are so blessed.

So, as Christmas comes and we sit down to open our gifts, and to enjoy a grand meal, let us remember to be thankful for the blessings that we received, and be thankful for the blessings that we are fortunate enough to bestow upon others.

Club fires national pistol match

A Tactical Pistol Match was held at the Rifle and Pistol Club at English Range Saturday.

More than 40 shooters participated in the International Defensive Pistol Association format shoot.

IDPA is an association that gives shooters a safe way to become more proficient with pistols that have not been modified to a point that the pistol has become a special competition pistol.

This match consisted of three stages.

Stage one had four targets set about 15 yards out. The object was to double-tap, shooting the target twice, as fast as possible, each target with the shooters strongest hand, then change magazines and double-tap each target with the weak hand.

The strong hand is the hand that is most comfortable to the shooter while the weak hand is the shooters less dominate hand.

The second stage of the event was shot from behind a large plastic barrel. The shooter had to double-tap three targets and knock down six steel knockdown targets.

The final stage was to shoot a steel

"I am excited the team won ... they deserve it. They (49ers) executed the plays like professionals."

— Terrence Moore
49ers head coach

It was football weather and football was definitely in the air. The coaches claimed the sidelines, team competitive spirit heightened and the cheerleaders, dressed in their finest, lined up for the inaugural Doughboy playoffs. The mission — to win and become the first Doughboy Bowl Champions.

Cool temperatures and playoff hopes motivated the 49ers as they banged heads with the Chargers during the first playoff game. Although the Chargers played like warriors they were unable to move the ball offensively against a rock solid 49er defense.

A mobile 49er offense supported by a strong offensive line created holes in the Chargers' defense big enough to find the end zone twice. The 49ers defeated the Chargers 14-0 and advanced to the finals.

The Cowboys escaped with a win over the Jets during the second game of the day 14-12 after the Jets missed both extra point attempts.

Both teams had strong defensive lines that put pressure on the quarterbacks causing miscues and interceptions.

The running game was successful for the Cowboys and the Jets, which earned them two touchdowns each.

With minutes left in the game, the Jets attempted a two-point conversion to tie up the game but fell short allowing the Cowboys to advance to the finals. The championship game was at hand and under the lights at Doughboy Stadium their names were called, one by one.

The Cowboys and the 49ers ran to the field and lined up for the playing of the National Anthem and the start of the championship game. The Cowboys had earned a win and a tie against the 49ers during the regular season but soon found out that the 49ers entered the stadium with winning on their mind.

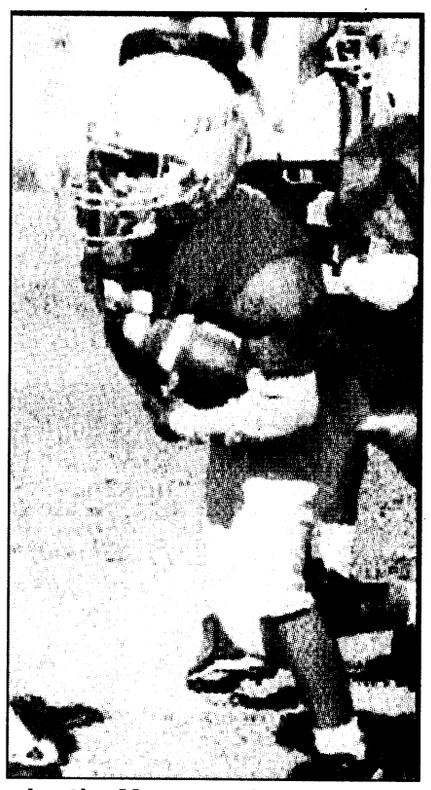
During the first quarter the game was evenly matched, but early in the second quarter 49er Joey Pricone found the end zone on a quarterback keeper. The Cowboys rebounded by stopping the extra point attempt.

On the Cowboys' second drive of the game running back Dewaughn Brackens picked up a needed first down with a 15-yard run. 49ers Robert Nicholas and Trent Bell kept constant pressure on the Cowboys' backfield, and on fourth down Justin Christy punted deep into 49er territory.

Beginning on their 13-yard line, the 49ers offense went to work. Benjamin Fancher ran for 12 yards and picked up a first down. On the next play Johnny Washington turned on the jets and ran around the Cowboys' right end for the second 49er touchdown of the game. Pricone tossed the ball to Washington in the left corner for a successful 2-point conversion and at the half the score was 14-0.

The Cowboy cheerleaders performed a halftime show with music, cheering and dancing to motivate the crowd and their team, but the second half started much like the first.

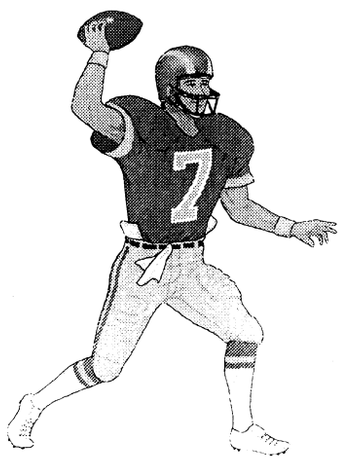
This time 49ers Johnny Washington would become the man at the helm and carry the ball into the end zone on a quarterback keeper.



The 49ers' extra point attempt was spoiled when Brackens, a Cowboys defensive end, blocked the pass.

On their last possession Cowboy Jakarri Johnson found a hole for a needed first down, but the drive was stifled by the 49ers defense.

The 49ers shut the Cowboys down 20-0 and became the 1999 Doughboy Bowl champions.



Terrence Moore, head coach of the 49ers said that the Doughboy Bowl was a great idea because it inspired the kids and was a great way to end the season.

"I am excited that the team won because these kids deserve it — they (49ers) executed the plays like professionals and wanted the win more than the Cowboys," said Terrence Moore, 49ers head coach."

Shooters: Compete for top spot in tactical pistol match

knockdown target that activated a swinging target that could not be shot. The shooter then had to double-tap four targets and knock down a steel target.

Two of each stages were created to keep the shoot to a minimum of time.

Two range officers were at each point to ensure the shooter knew the rules of the stage and to stop any unsafe act.

A wide variety of shooters competed in the match from young inexperienced shooters to very experienced members who compete often.

"I really enjoy the training and the camaraderie with other shooters," said Jim Crissman. Crissman, who served in the 24th Infantry Division in Vietnam started pistol shooting when he was issued one.

"From '76 to '79 I served in Vietnam and began when I was issued a model 1911 (pistol)," Crissman said.

"I shot rifle competitively and I just sort of transitioned to shooting pistol competitively," he said

> "Shooting is something that is enjoyable to me because I am able to get some fresh air and just have a good time."
> — Rosemary Schleicher,
> Shooting competitor

Participating in IDPA matches for the last two years, Crissman said he has improved immensely.

"When I first started I feel I was average and now after two years I feel I am a well above average shooter, ... I gain experience from the different scenarios created," he said after shooting two second places and one 12th place in different classes.

Not all the shooters who now compete were eager to pick up a pistol.

"My husband shoots and urged me to start shooting. I finally caved in, and I have been shooting ever since," said Rosemary Schleicher, a competitor in the Stock Service Class.

Placing 22nd in the Stock Service Class, Schleicher gets more than just fresh air while shooting.

"I think the shoots are really interesting. I have a lot of fun competing with other shooters, I really like shooting a lot," she said. "Shooting is something that is enjoyable to me because I am able to get some fresh air and just have a good time."

HOPE FOR THE HOPELESS

The bible says, "In God the poor have hope." America's rescue missions are a conduit of hope for homeless and poor men, women and children. Hope starts with a hot meal, a comfortable bed, or a clean shirt—but it is much more.

Hope is rehabilitation, education, job training, restored families and changed lives. Every day, over 30,000 souls are touched with the message of hope at a rescue mission.

"In God the poor have hope."

The foremost healthcare facility in Central California
Doctors Medical Center has a great history. Opened in 1962 by local doctors, Doctors Medical Center (DMC) has grown into a 397 -bed hospital with 2,000 employees treating over 80,000 patients each year.) But DMC is more than its history... Doctor's Medical Center has great facilities: The Women and Children's Center, Neonatal Intensive Care Nursery, California Cancer Center, California Neurological Sciences Center, Cardiology Program, Air Med Team Helicopter, Trauma Services, and Emergency Center. But DMC is more than its technology... Doctors Medical Center has a seamless network of hospitals and programs. DMC is the central management site for the McHenry Surgery Center; Tenet Home Health, and a Central Business Office. But DMC is more than its health network... Doctors Medical Center has great people.

ARKANSAS CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL

Caring for Kids and Families... in a Special Place of Care, Love, and Hope

Nurses at Arkansas Children's Children's Hospital thrive on the challenges of providing the highest quality, family-focused care to the most complex patients in the region. As Arkansas' only pediatric health care center and one of the ten largest children's hospitals in the nation, we offer nurses diversity in stimulating practice environments including acute inpatient specialty units, critical care, surgical services, ambulatory and community settings.

We blend a high-tech environment and state-of-the-art equipment with child-friendly touches. Our nurses work with progressive and nationally recognized pediatric medical staff and are fully supported by a wide range of specially trained pediatric ancillary staff. We're the best place for you to practice and learn pediatric nursing.

Opportunities are available in medical/surgical, intensive care, ambulatory care and surgical services.

Arkansas Children's Hospital provides a competitive benefits package, individualized orientation & continuing education in a multidisciplinary teaching environment. We enjoy career ladder opportunities & an environment dedicated to the care of children and their families. Come join our team today!

Repossessed Cars to be Sold

Responsible Parties Needed to Make Payments on Over 200 Bank Repossessions, Lease Terminations and Overage Inventory

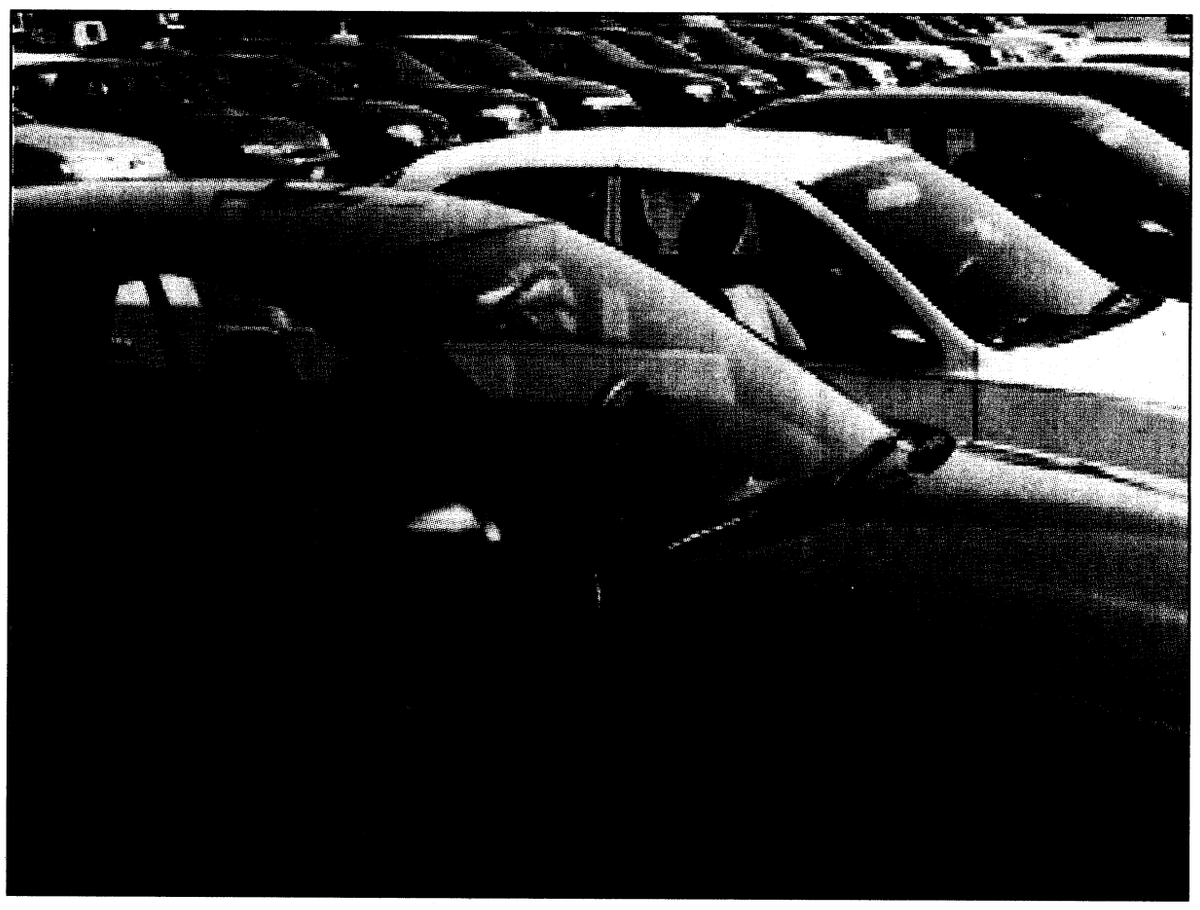
"PAID ADVERTISEMENT"

Columbus, Georgia – Transports of used cars and trucks seem to be arriving daily from across the country. Their cargo is a sore subject for many banks, but all is not gloom and doom.

While these cars often represent huge losses to banks, they are often sought after deals for bargain hunters. But these bargains are often hard, if not next to impossible, to find. Generally, used car dealers buy these vehicles at huge discounts and retail them to the public - often selling these cars and trucks for top dollar.

But that's all about to change. Herschel Saxon, General Manager of Used Car Operations at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has just announced what may be a bargain-hunter's dream.

"The banks asked us to help," he explained. "And I think we can."



"Why buy a repo", you might ask. "Well, for one thing, part of the car has already been paid for," explained Saxton. Plus these vehicles represent an uncollected asset on the bank's books and they are not in the automobile business and are desperate to turn them into money. Also, as you are probably aware, a new vehicle can depreciate thousands upon thousands the minute you drive it out of the showroom door. You take that depreciation, on top of the fact that part of the car has been paid for by someone else, and you have one of the true bargains left these days!

"Today through the end of December, we will sell these vehicles and pass the savings on to our customers."

When pressed for examples, Saxon replied, "Well here's a '96 Dodge Stratus. With a $1 down payment to make the transaction legal, your payments to be taken on would be $69 per month for 72 months or only 9.9% APR and that's with a 20 minute credit approval process. And you add only tax, title and WRA. Or if a truck is your thing, then here's a '95 Silverado Extended Cab for the family, again the $1 down to validate the deal, and start making $175 a month payments for a period of 72 months, with an almost assured credit acceptance by the bank in minutes and an APR of 9.9%. And again you add only tax, title and WRA. Piece of cake. Similar deals on imports like Honda Accord, Civic, luxury cars like Sedan DeVille, Grand Marquis and Impala, trucks like Mazda B2300, Tacoma, in fact here is a '97 Ranger XLT Pickup with a balance due on delivery of less than $6,000. Actually $5920.60. Or merely sign and drive. Yes, assume payments on a new contract with the bank. Ford Explorers, Expeditions, Blazers, Cherokees, Mini-Vans, the list is almost endless. In case you are interested in the quoted examples ask for stock numbers HS 201, HS 202, HS 203.

"This is a bargain-hunter's dream, with customers on a first-come, first-served basis."

Herschel Saxon

An Overview Of Just A Portion Of The Vehicles To Be Selected From.

"The banks want to put these cars and trucks on the road," said Mike Silver, Sales Manager of Bill Heard, "and I think they'll do just about anything to make this sale a success."

All the cars and trucks will be clearly marked on the window with their discounted prices.

"The payments will also be clearly marked," added Saxon, "This should make shopping for these bargains even easier. Customers can espect to find a large selection of vehicles and prices, from top of the line luxury cars, 4x4s, minivans and sport utilities to basic transportation. We have it all!"

Chris Melton, Repossessions Manager, was quoted as saying, "We want everyone to know that this is a first-come-first-served sale. At these prices, the really great buys will go really fast!"

"We're staffing up for this event."

"Trade-ins are not a problem, either. Just bring in your title or payment book, and we'll take care of the rest."

Melton went on to say, "We are confident we can arrange financing for anyone with a job, even if they've had credit problems in the past!"

Saxon said, "We have a little bit of everything to offer. I think if it can be driven, we have one."

Each of these vehicles has been inspected, serviced and is ready to go.

Bill Heard Chevrolet is located at 3615 North Manchester Expressway in Columbus. For more information about this special event, contact Chris Melton at 322-8888, out-of-town 800-868-1585.

State Dept. issues travel warning

Feds say Americans could be target of terrorism during holidays

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The U.S. State Department issued an advisory to travelers earlier this week urging them to use extreme caution when traveling overseas.

The advisory cited credible evidence that terrorists could strike at large holiday gatherings abroad this holiday season.

While government officials said the advisory was not issued to keep travelers from ringing in the new century in other countries, said Felipe Mojica, a force protection educator for Fort Benning's Directorate of Threat and Security, the advisory is just a reminder to those traveling overseas to be careful.

"This is really nothing new for those traveling abroad," Mojica said. "The threat of global terrorism is alive and people have to be careful when they are traveling this holiday season."

The U.S. and the rest of the world were reminded the threat of global terrorism was alive this past August when terrorists bombed embassies in South Africa and Tanzania.

"These guys don't play around," he said. "And they will probably do it again.

"The threat is always going to be there as long as the terrorism war continues," he said.

The 'war' on terrorism is one that America and the rest of the world have been fighting since world terrorist Osama bin Ladin was fingered for the bombing of the barracks complex in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, that killed 19 servicemen.

"The threat still continues," he said. "That is why all military members traveling overseas whether on official or unofficial business receive classes on how to avoid becoming a victim of terrorism."

While those classes help Soldiers identify possible targets and supporters of terrorism, he said the classes are just a foundation for the service members to rely on.

"It is all about common sense," he said. "Just be aware of your surroundings and where you are. It is as simple as that."

Physical terrorism is not the only form of holiday high jinks Mojica said terrorists are likely to attempt this season.

"Cyberterrorism is a very big concern as terrorists grow more technically advanced," he said. "The White House and the Department of Defense have both been hit."

Mojica said with the chaos surrounding Y2K, some terrorists may try to take advantage of the opportunity to hack into a government system and blame it on the Y2K bug.

"There are many assets that are a target for cyberterrorists," he said. "Everything from 911 systems to computer-controlled weapons of mass destruction could be a target for terrorists."

While there is no way to tell what will happen and what terrorists will really do this holiday season, Mojica said the travel advisory and the cyberterrorism warning is not a reason to cancel Christmas travel.

"This is not a reason to cancel travel arrangements," he said. "It is just a reminder that the threat of terrorism is out there."

"He laughed so hard," the 5-foot-2-inch Sellers said.

Look who's laughing now.

Dec. 9 Sellers was named Black Hat of the Year — an award for the best Airborne instructor at the U.S. Army Airborne School. She was presented with a special black hat with gold braid during the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment's holiday jump tower lighting ceremony.

Sellers, the first woman to serve as a master trainer with the 507th Inf., is also the first woman to win the top honor. The Black Hat of the Year competition includes a PT test, jumpmaster personnel inspection test, class presentations and an appearance

Army ready for Y2K

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Army computers are on schedule for year 2000 compliance, with more than 99 percent of systems checked and certified, according to a news release from the Pentagon earlier this week.

With those systems which include the nation's weapons systems and the government finance systems in order for the new year, what can Soldiers and families across the country do to be ready for the coming of a new century?

"Stay calm, that is the best thing people can do during the new year transition," said Larry Lalka, Fort Benning's Y2K information management coordinator. "More than likely people won't even notice a change."

That smooth transition is courtesy of countless hours of work from Lalka and his Y2K cohorts who have ensured Fort Benning's systems are Y2K compliant.

"We began tackling the project almost three years ago," Lalka said. "And now, I think we are ready to go into the new year with little to worry about."

All of Fort Benning's computer-controlled infrastructure has been checked for Y2K readiness. All of the Directorate of Public Works systems including power, water and waste removal have undergone a battery of tests to prove it will continue to run in 2000. Also making the docket for Y2K testing was the civilian contracted public works items in post housing, such as power, cable and telephone service.

"I don't see any problems stemming from any of our necessity items such as water, power and gas," he said. "The only thing I see that could potentially go wrong is an overload of the systems at midnight with everyone trying to check and see if everything is working."

While there are no foreseen failure problems, Lalka said the post has formed a Y2K disaster control center to monitor the situation during the century switch.

"There will be people from every directorate working over the holiday to react to any problem that may come up," he said. "There have also been emergency numbers established for residents to call if they do encounter a problem during

Trainer turns in stripes for gold bar

Black hat gets second chance at O-1 via direct commissioning

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Finally getting that gold bar pinned on after the long, hard road to commissioning is one of the most special days in a new officer's career.

That experience is even more special the second time, according to 2nd Lt. James Long, who has been serving as a black hat for 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry.

Long, who just traded in his staff sergeant rocker for gold, should know. He received his second lieutenant rank for the second time when he was direct commissioned during a ceremony at the Ranger Memorial near Infantry Hall Dec. 10.

Even though it's been seven years in the making, having the bar of gold on his lapel again was well worth the wait, Long said.

The road to being commissioned again began in 1991 when he graduated from Indiana University as an ROTC cadet.

Long

"I finished school, and I got a reserve Infantry commission with reserve duty, I didn't get active," he explained. "I had applied for active duty but didn't get it.

"I came down and completed the Infantry Officer Basic Course in 1992, but then I got home and thought about how I really wanted to be on active duty," Long added. "So I just went to my local recruiter and enlisted."

"I came in the Army as a specialist and was assigned to the 2nd Ranger Battalion, Fort Lewis, Wash. I was an Infantryman out there for four and a half years working all of the jobs up to squad leader," said Long. "Then I came here and began instructing the IOBC as a staff sergeant for two years."

Since then Long has been as instructor at the Airborne School. Long said it was there that the idea for him to regain his commission came up.

"It had come up, just in passing conversation, that I had been a reserve officer before. Pretty much every unit I had been to it had come up," he said. "My battalion commander said 'Hey, let's pursue a direct appointment.' I thought that would be great."

"Working with General (Carl) Ernst and General (John) Le Moyne, and a thousand other people, they put a packet together, found the regulation and did whatever they needed to do," Long added. "We started this in May or June. It finally got approved Nov. 1. So now here I am, through direct appointment, an Infantry second lieutenant, which is what I wanted."

Getting Long's rank back wouldn't have been possible without support of the complete chain of command, Lt. Col. Brian Stephenson, commander of 507th. said.

"It's been an incredible team effort," he said. "This wouldn't have happened if

Soldiers make best of loneliness

Sgt. Lori Smith
Bayonet assistant editor

commentary

Thinking of the holidays gives me a warm fuzzy feeling inside, but that hasn't always been the case. After joining the Army, it took me a while to learn holiday traditions can be special no matter where you are.

Life can be lonely for Soldiers who are new to post, especially for single Soldiers. This empty feeling seems to be magnified during the holidays.

The depressed feelings that come with breaking long-standing family traditions and just plain being alone make the holidays a dreaded occasion.

Growing up, my favorite family tradition was going to my grandma and grandpa's house on Christmas Eve.

My family started this tradition before I was even born. We would feast on a huge meal complete with all the fixings and candy. The highlight was when my aunt would hand out all the presents. All of the kids would tear into them to find the latest toy that was popular that year.

Like many new Soldiers who join the military, I had never missed a Christmas Eve at my grandparents' house or even spent a holiday away from home. That is until I joined the Army and was stationed in Hawaii.

For me, with each passing holiday in Hawaii, it only seemed to get worse. I realized that I would no longer be able to gather with family and friends and feast until I couldn't breathe anymore. I didn't realize, as many young Soldiers don't, how important family, friends and traditions really are.

My new tradition seemed to have become pulling a 24-hour CQ shift with Christmas dinner by myself in the dining facility ... or even better, watching movies in the barracks. I was not impressed with these new military traditions.

Luckily, that all changed for me. Well not the part about having duty on Christmas Day (thanks, Top), but my attitude and the way I look at holidays away from home did.

This is because my platoon sergeant reached out and opened her home to me. She took me in as if I were a part of her family. She fed me a great home-cooked meal, rented movies, played cards and she even let me pass out on her couch, just like I would at my own home. I never felt more at home in Hawaii than I did at her house.

She helped me realize that although I'm separated from my family in Missouri, I still have my extended family in the Army. She taught me that Soldiers pull together and take care of each other because it's the right thing to do. Besides, it can be a lot of fun. I spent every holiday that followed at her house. It was my new family tradition.

As I move on to other Army posts and new places, I hope that I can start new traditions for other Soldiers.

I know that many Army families open their homes to single Soldiers far from home on the holidays and that's just part of what makes the extended Army family special to me and many others.

Decorations shed light on holiday traditions

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Growing up, holiday decorating in our home was pretty much limited to a tree in the den, a wreath with a red bow for the front door and a nativity scene on the mantel.

Granted, it was a live tree that my father and brothers chopped down from the woods, and the wreath was made from the holly found on the farm. A porch light shining down on the wreath was the only outdoor lighting used.

Over the years my mother added a few candles in the windows, but it was still pretty subdued compared to the Vegas-like atmosphere of some of today's lighting extravaganzas.

If you fall into the category of holiday decorators who believe that the more lights the better, then keep reading. I've found a contest for you:

According to a feature on the business wire, Homestore.com (TM) Inc. is inviting consumers everywhere to submit exterior photos of their decorated homes for its "Electric Avenue Holiday Lights" contest.

The prizes couldn't be more appropriate — first place will win a weekend in (where else) Las Vegas; second place gets a year's worth of electricity; and third place will net 25,000 white holiday lights.

If any of the displays look like some I've seen while driving around Columbus, the year's worth of electricity is probably the better gift. There's one house on Airport Thruway between the airport and Moon Road that should consider entering. I just hope pilots trying to land at night don't get confused and think the runway has moved.

Electricity, and the cost of it, has to be a consideration. Off post you foot the bill yourself. On post the government does.

"Given the ever-diminishing funding resources, energy conservation is important," Glenn Todd, from the Directorate of Public Works, said in last week's The Bayonet.

DPW's policy is that exterior lights in family housing should not be turned on until dusk and turned off prior to midnight.

How you decorate your tree is another individual choice that reflects your tastes and traditions. A trend I've noticed over the years is the use of more than one tree.

Today people have several trees throughout their homes, some even have special themes, some only use angels or keep to one color scheme. A close friend, a singer and pianist, decorates her tree with only musical ornaments. The theme for our tree is "Look where we've been and see how we've grown."

We have ornaments from every duty station, ones that reflect that state or region.

Sentimental, we still hang the ones our daughters have made over the years, including the handprint painted on a paper plate.

As for outdoor lighting, I've got the porch light shining down on a wreath with a red bow.

Traditions die hard in my family.

CG extends holiday wishes to Soldiers here, abroad

It is indeed a pleasure to have this opportunity to extend my best wishes to the entire U.S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning community during the 1999 holiday season.

This time of year is charged with meaning as we pause to celebrate Christmas, Hanukkah and the New Year with family and friends.

Our family traditions and religious roots affirm our unique identity and are an important part of who we are as individuals, as a community and as a nation.

As you celebrate these festive occasions, I urge you to remember those around you who are unable to fully share in the joys of this season because of hardship or family separation. Our world is not at peace. There are many troubled areas where our Soldiers stand in harm's way.

As a CONUS Replacement Center, Fort Benning plays an important role in deploying Soldiers in support of critical missions in both war and peace.

The coming new year affords a great opportunity to highlight the successes of 1999.

I am extremely proud of our Soldiers, families and civilian employees who have worked so hard to make Fort Benning the best of the best.

The new year will present more challenges and opportunities to demonstrate our excellence. I look forward to serving with you.

May God bless you in the year to come.

Soldiers contributions reflects 225 years of commitment

As we near the end of the 20th century, we pause to reflect on the remarkable contributions of American Soldiers throughout the years to our nation and to freedom throughout the world. Over 225 years ago, a "shot heard 'round the world" ushered in a new era. That shot sparked a fight for freedom that produced the greatest testament to the human spirit in the history of man — a nation so committed to the blessings of peace, hope, and liberty that it sent its best sons and daughters into harm's way to keep the flame of freedom burning for all mankind.

Preserving liberty has always and will continue to require tremendous personal sacrifice. Like our forefathers, many of whom gave their youthful lives, you are shouldering today's heavy burden as you guard the frontiers of freedom in Korea, Bosnia, Kosovo, East Timor, and in over 60 other countries. Often in harm's way, you are sacrificing the comforts of your own home and the joys of sharing the holiday season with your families to give hope to others around the world.

You are there, because the world is depending on the greatest fighting force on the face of the planet to give every man, woman and child the opportunities Americans take for granted. No matter what the challenges from conflicts to natural disasters — our Army has the capability to quickly restore order and stability. You are there, because we want others to know the joys of freedom, so they will join us in guarding that freedom.

Your nation is profoundly grateful for your service. People the world over are grateful. As you celebrate this holiday season, many deployed far from home, may you find comfort and joy in the hope you bring to the less fortunate and in the light of peace you bring to the world.

We wish you a happy and safe holiday season and a peaceful New Year.

Forgotten widows

now eligible for survivor annuity

Laura Paul
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Surviving spouses of reservists who were members before Oct. 1, 1978 and would have been eligible for retired pay at age 60, if they hadn't died before reaching that age, have been added to those eligible for Annuities for Certain Military Surviving Spouses.

Section 644 of the fiscal year 1998 Department of Defense Authorization Act created a benefit for so-called "forgotten widows," according to Army Retirement Services officials. "Forgotten widows" was the category of surviving spouses who were previously ineligible for a survivor annuity because their retirement-qualified spouses died before having the opportunity to enroll them in either the Survivor Benefit Plan, created in 1972, or the Reserve Component Survivor Benefit Plan, created in 1978.

Creating the ACMSS benefit remedied that situation for the most part. However, the military services went back to Congress to remedy one inequity.

Under the FY 98 DoD Authorization Act, the reserve member's death had to have occurred between Sept. 21, 1972, and Oct. 1, 1978, thereby disqualifying surviving spouses of qualified reserve members who died before 1972.

Under the FY 2000 DoD Authorization Act, the criteria for ACMSS qualification now is that the deceased reserve member:

Must have completed at least 20 qualifying years of service toward retirement, and:

•Must have been married to the applicant on date of death, and;

•Must have died before Oct. 1, 1978.

Criteria for regular retirees' surviving spouses remains "must have died before March 21, 1974."

The Army has notified applicants who were disapproved under the previous law of the change. They must reapply and provide supporting documents. Those who meet the new criteria are encouraged to apply. If the applicant is approved under this law, monthly annuities ($174.76 beginning Dec. 1, 1999) are retroactive to Oct. 1, 1999.

Retirement Services Officer Frieda McDonald can be contacted for applications and assistance. The phone number is 545-2715. The application indicates what documents must be provided and where to send them.

Cohen directs assessment of extent of harassment

Office of Assistant Secretary of Defense

Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen announced Monday that he has directed the Department of Defense Inspector General to initiate an assessment of the environment at representative installations within each military Department with respect to the application of the homosexual conduct policy.

The assessment will include a review of the extent to which the harassment of service members based on perceived or alleged homosexuality may occur.

The extent to which disparaging speech or expression with respect to sexual orientation occurs or is tolerated will also be assessed. Cohen asked to receive the Inspector General's assessment within 90 days.

"As I have previously indicated, I am determined that the policy on homosexual conduct in the military be clearly understood and fairly enforced," Cohen said. "This is critically important, as the effectiveness of the Department's application and enforcement of the policy has a direct relationship to unit cohesion and readiness."

DFAS system should simplify, speed pay changes

New system offers military, DoD civilians capability to make routine changes on the web

Staff Sgt. Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Military and Department of Defense civilian employees and retirees will soon be able to make many routine changes to their official pay accounts whenever they want by phone or via the World Wide Web.

The Defense Finance and Accounting Service is in the process of implementing the Employee/Member Self Service program. DFAS officials project the program will be available for some customers in February.

The officials said defense payroll customers using the round-the-clock Web and phone systems will be able to change their federal income tax withholding, start, stop or change allotments, change their correspondence address and update information for their financial institution electronic fund transfers.

DFAS officials said the self-service program should improve the processing of pay changes by saving time and reducing the current paper trail. Now, customers may have to wait weeks for action because they must visit a finance customer service representative and submit written forms that have to be processed by a string of clerks, they explained.

"Employee/Member Self Service provides an alternative to completing and submitting forms and will provide reliable and accurate information," DFAS project officer Gloria Cranford-Bates said. "Most importantly, E/MSS will be a fast, easy and secure way for customers to update payroll-related transactions at their convenience."

The system will allow customers to make changes nearly instantly on their own. Officials explained that no written confirmation will be received, but members can check changes by re-accessing the system in a week. Changes will also be annotated on the customer's next Leave and Earning Statement.

A personal identification number will control customer access. DFAS plans to mail letters to eligible customers with a temporary PIN they can customize the first time they use the system, officials said. The letter will also give customers the Web site address and the toll-free number to access the system.

The DFAS plan calls for E/MSS to become available in two phases. DFAS representative Cathy Ferguson said letters are being mailed to DoD retirees and surviving annuitants, Marines and civilian employees, the first group of people who will have system access. Soldiers, sailors and airmen will gain access a few months later.

The military services' current telephone systems for their members will eventually be rolled into the DFAS self-service system.

E/MSS Internet transactions will be encrypted using 128-bit encryption and Secure Socket Layer technology, DFAS officials said. This will prevent information from being read by others while being transmitted from the customer's personal computer to the E/MSS Web site. Also for security reasons, officials recommend against using cellular phones to access the system.

Additional information can be obtained on the DFAS Web site at www.dfas.mil.

DFAS plans for Y2K

DoD employees will get paid in year 2000

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

More than 5 million Department of Defense employees depend on the Defense Accounting Service every month to deliver the funds to their banks electronically.

But how will the delivery system fare after weathering the Y2K bug in less than two weeks?

Thomas R. Bloom, DFAS director, said the weathering should be one that will go unnoticed to those who are served by DFAS.

"We are confident that all DoD civilians, military members and retirees will get paid after Jan.1, 2000," Bloom said in an official DFAS news release earlier this month.

That confidence, according to the release, stems from the continuing testing efforts the organization has undertaken throughout the past three years.

"Every software system, program and file in use by DFAS has been logged, categorized, verified for compliance and scheduled for upgrade, modification or replacement as necessary," he said.

Top priority was given during the renovation and upgrade process to the 42 mission critical systems that keep the accounting system functioning year-round, according to Bloom. But, he said, the process didn't stop there.

DFAS is tracking non-mission critical systems and the preparedness of civilian financial institutions to ensure proper fund transfer after the new year, he said.

"They (civilian financial institutions) have assured DFAS that virtually all national banks are making adequate progress in preparing for the year 2000," he said in the release. "DFAS is optimistic the commercial financial organizations will be prepared for Y2K, but if you have your doubts feel free to contact your financial institution directly."

DFAS does not anticipate significant problems associated or disruption to, the normal pay process after the year 2000 arrives, he said.

"We have received assurances from the Federal Reserve bank and the Department of Treasury that the electronic funds transfer system will be operational," he said.

Although Bloom said he foresees no major problems or interruptions, he and his team of Y2K readiness officials have a contingency plan just in case.

"Military and civilian pay contingency plans provide for pre-calculated and staging of electronic fund transfer payments and check print files prior to the end of 1999," he said. "Our plans also include having additional check stock on hand to issue checks for any returned payroll or vendor electronic fund transfers that are unable to be processed by financial institutions experiencing Y2K difficulties."

For additional information on Y2K, contact the Federal Year 2000 Information Center at (888) USA-Y2K from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Eastern Standard time.

the new year transition."

The hotline number for all computer and telecommunications problems is 545-2178, and the number for all water, power and sewage problems is 545-2135.

"I really don't think we are going to see any problems," Lalka said. "If we do see any power outages or loss of telecommunications, it will be comparable to a thunderstorm-created outage."

"It will be something that will be a quick fix," he said.

For those traveling the highways and byways this holiday season, Lalka said there should be no major problems with automatic teller machines or banking. However, he said those traveling in rural areas may see some gas stations without the ability to process credit cards.

"Around here there will be no problems with credit cards or any computer-related items, I don't think," he said. "But you could find some service stations in the rural areas that can't dial the card company to process the order."

Some of those credit card companies are not the only ones that won't be able to fill the order during the new year transition.

The District of Columbia Police Department has asked the district's national guard to assist them in filling the order for additional peace keepers during the huge holiday celebration planned to ring in the new century in the nation's capitol.

An additional 16 states have already asked their states' national guardsmen to be on standby in case they are needed.

'We expect everyone in the Army community to be informed, be prepared, but have a great New Year – celebrate it well," said Miriam F. Browning, a Pentagon spokesperson. "Your Army is prepared and ready to go to Y2K."

Black Hat: Teaches Soldiers

before a board.

Her friends know her as Nancy. But, her mother, who is Thai, calls her by her given name, Varunee. Her American father had a hard time with the pronunciation, so he always called her Nancy.

To the students at Airborne school, Sellers and all the other instructors are called Sergeant Airborne.

"All the Sergeants Airborne (instructors) were happy to see her win. She's the epitome of a Sergeant Airborne. When you have a question, you can go to her," Sgt. 1st Class Tom Yockman, D Co., said.

Military service is a strong tradition in Sellers' family, dating back to the Revolutionary War. Her grandfather was a World War II veteran, and her father served three tours in Vietnam with the Air Force.

The oldest of three daughters, Sellers enlisted in the Army 10 years ago as a combat documentation and production specialist.

She graduated from jump school in 1991 and always wanted to return to Fort Benning as a jump instructor.

"When I saw my first Black Hat, I wanted to be one of them," she said.

"I like their professionalism, the way they carried themselves. They had that sense of knowing everything you could possibly know."

Before she could return, Sellers served with the 4th Psychological Operations Group at Fort Bragg, N.C., and as a drill sergeant in advanced individual training.

In 1997, she arrived at A Co., 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Infantry, and served as an instructor, earning a black hat.

"The idea of the black hat is when a Soldier looks at you, he should think that he wants to be a Sergeant Airborne," Sellers said.

"Being a Sergeant Airborne is more than training Soldiers," she said.

Instead of teaching Soldiers to just jump out of planes and land safely on the ground, she also wants to instill in the students the history and tradition behind being Airborne.

"It means a whole lot more than just wearing a set of wings on your chest," she said.

In November, she moved to Headquarters and Headquarters Company and became a master trainer. Master trainers evaluate instructors, Airborne training and conduct after-action reviews.

Tuesday morning Sellers, one of only three female instructors in the 507th, was conducting JMPIs at McCarthy Hall for the last Airborne class of this century. Fellow instructors offered their congratulations.

> "Being a Sergeant Airborne is more than training Soldiers."
> — Staff Sgt. Nancy Sellers
> Black Hat of the Year

"She has real leadership traits," Staff Sgt. Eugene Kyser, D Co., said.

"This is basically an all-man's world (the 507th), and she's able to do all the things we do."

And the things the guys can't do. Last year, Sellers had her second child.

"During her six-week convalescent leave after her baby was born, she took the time to learn four formal periods of instruction," Capt. Mark Talbot, A Co. commander, said. "To be a Black Hat, you only need to know one."

Sellers likes the fact that the standards for jump school are the same for all students — regardless of gender.

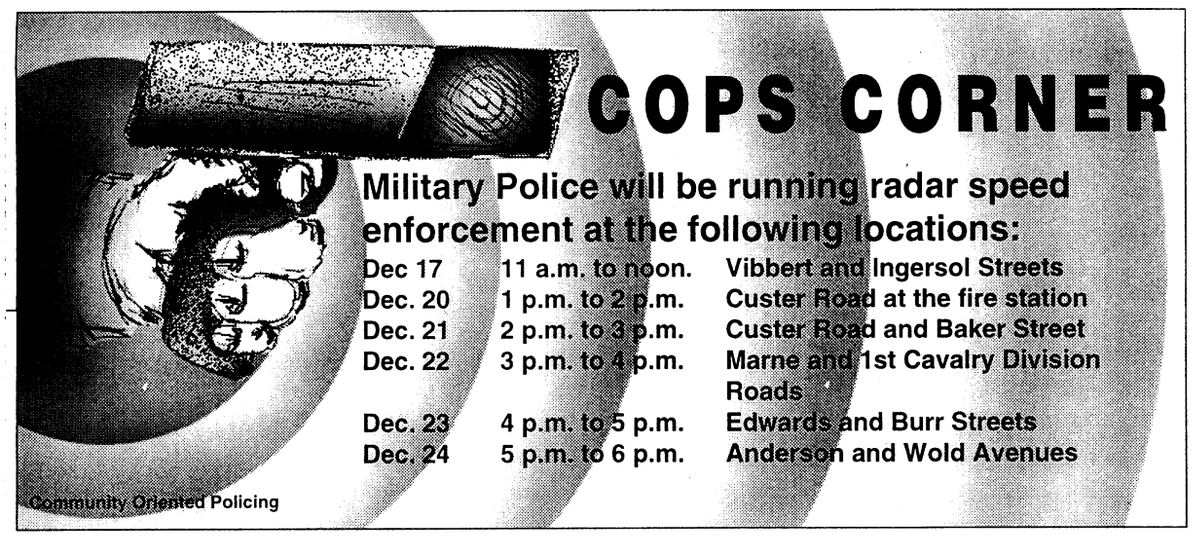
"There is nothing separating the males and the females. The females who make it deserve to make it," she said.

And of her male counterparts, Sellers said, "I am no different from them, and they let me know that when I think I'm getting tired. They always treat me as an equal," she said.

Sellers is married to Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Sellers, C Company, Ranger Training Brigade. They have a seven-year-old daughter, Katie, and a one-year-old son, Joey. She wants to instill in her children, especially her daughter, the idea that they can do anything they set their minds to do. It's something she learned from her father.

"He was very hard and detailed about standards, what you should and should not do; and hopefully, I'll pass that down to my own son and daughter.

"He always said there was nothing I couldn't do," she said.



"I want my daughter to know there is nothing she can't do."

Another pearl of wisdom she learned from her father is: "Try to be good at everything you do. Then don't settle for being good, be the best."

Sellers will leave the Airborne school this summer. Future goals include going to High Altitude, Low Opening school. There are other dreams, like serving in Delta Force support or returning to the 507th as a first sergeant.

"I totally believe you should always try to achieve the next goal," she said.

All Soldiers, Department of the Army civilians and family members deploying or traveling outside the United States are required to receive an anti-terrorism, force protection briefing. The briefings are 2-2:45 p.m. every Wednesday in Building 2605 at Soldiers' Plaza. Children younger than 13 are not allowed to attend. For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Ronald Smith at 545-7081.

High holiday expectations induce stress

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A recent scientific survey conducted by Dateline NBC and Prevention Magazine cited 41 percent of those polled have experienced increased amounts of stress during the Christmas holiday season. More women than men responded that they have a markedly higher degree of stress at this time of year.

Not surprisingly, money, or the lack thereof, is the number one stress inducer listed on the survey. Military families, often already on a tight budget, may find juggling the added expense of gift giving stressful and frustrating.

"I have this theory that my stress level is directly proportional to my credit card limit," said Shannon Coovrey, family member.

A pre-planned budget is the most logical way to ease the burden, but unless one is well-practiced in the art, the best-laid plans will crumble at Christmas.

"I set a limit of five gifts for each of my three children," said Brenda Castro, family member. "They ended up with nine each. But my stress is officially over today. I finished all my shopping."

Shopping early may be the easiest and wisest way to reduce stress, with the added benefit of avoiding the last minute mall crowds. This method also requires discipline, since it may be difficult to resurrect the holiday spirit in the heat of July.

"One year I resolved to buy one present every pay day, beginning in January," Coovrey said. "I didn't always stick to it, but by December I was almost completely done with my shopping."

Finances are not the only source of stress at this time of year.

Unrealistic expectations can lead to disappointment, stress, and ultimately, burn-out. All too often, people greet this season with visions of recreating a Norman Rockwell Christmas. They attempt to relive the ideal Christmases of their youth. Unfortunately, their recollections of past Christmases have become exaggerated and dramatized every year, until they are impossible to duplicate. Trying to script this unrealistic Christmas for themselves and their children is futile and disappointing.

Prevention Magazine recommends lowering expectations and pacing activities to avoid this kind of frustration and burn-out. Be realistic about how many gifts you can afford, how many cookies you can bake and how many parties you can attend.

It helps to keep a calendar of commitments and a list of purchases.

Budgeting time and energy can be as important as budgeting money. Decide, as a family, which functions are important to attend, and which traditions are meaningful and fun.

Military families used to spending holidays with relatives may experience stress, or even depression, during their first Christmas away from home.

"It's hard to define what holiday blues are," said Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel, chief of Family Life Center. "If you talk to a Soldier in a setting where he's away from his family, it is a normal reaction. People who have moved away from loved ones may experience melancholy at this time of year."

Rupel discourages one from equating this type of feeling with the deeper, darker trauma of depression.

"It's a common misconception that depression increases at this time of year. For most people, Christmas brings hope, even for those who are not practicing Christians," Rupel said.

Rupel provides counseling for individuals and families suffering any kind of crisis. He typically handles 10 to 15 cases each week, with no noticeable increase during December.

"Resolving stress-related blues, is not a magical thing," said Rupel. "For some people it is difficult to get there. My goal is to help them see that they have the resources to overcome it."

Rupel feels that individuals with a strong, practicing faith do so much better at this time of year."

While it may be impossible to completely eliminate the stress, there are various ways to reduce its effects.

Exercise, however simple, releases beta-endorphins, the body's natural relaxers, and increases circulation of the blood, easing tension. Even a 10-minute walk can significantly decrease anxiety.

Reducing caffeine and alcohol consumption also helps the body cope naturally with tension. Excessive alcohol intake increases depression. Caffeine raises blood pressure and increases the secretion of adrenaline, causing the heart to beat faster during periods of anxiety.

Simply visiting with friends, listening to soothing music, or soaking in a bubble bath may help one relax amidst the chaos of the Christmas season.

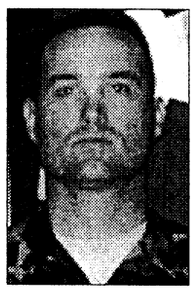
Post names top three trainers for FY99

General honors school's outstanding instructors

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer



The Instructors of the Year awards were held Thursday in Infantry Hall to recognize the three top instructors of fiscal year 1999.

The awards were given to the most outstanding officer, senior enlisted and junior enlisted instructors the U.S. Army Infantry School has to offer.

Gibbs

The Officer Instructor of the Year went to Chaplain (Maj.) Jonathan C. Gibbs III, assigned to the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, USAIS.

Gibbs is the Primary Leadership instructor for students in the Officer Candidate School and Ethics instructor for Infantry Officer Basic and Captains' Career Courses. Gibbs not only is an instructor, but he provides ministry to Fort Benning.

Tygart

The Senior Enlisted Instructor of the Year is Marine Gunnery Sgt. Vincent L. Tygart, D Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, an Airborne Instructor.

The Junior Enlisted Instructor of the Year award went to Sgt. Lester L. Williams, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

He is an instructor and writer for the Infantry Mortar Leader Course.

He has also been selected to test new mortar equipment as a member the New Equipment Training Team.

Williams

"To receive Instructor of the Year the Instructor needs to attend the Instructors Training Course, teach for at least six months, meet the Army standards for height and weight, and then nominated by their command for Instructor of the Quarter. They go to a board and they are evaluated by two independent evaluators from staff education and training," said Elaine M. Livingston, division chief for staff training and education division.

The three instructors of the year were all happy about winning the awards. They all thanked their chain of command for the support shown.

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander, said that it is the instructors who make the Soldiers who they are, and they are greatly appreciated.

Program takes students from behind the books, into business world

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The quest for excellence and quality continued Saturday when 22 students graduated from Fort Benning's inaugural class and received master of science degrees in Quality Systems Management.

The degrees are offered from the National Graduate School of Quality Management in Falmouth, Mass. The one-year program is not only offered at Fort Benning but also Forts Dix, Rucker, Meyer and San Antonio, Texas. Graduates of this program can go to any company in the world and analyze its processes and come up with ways for improvement, said Pat Hunsaker, site administer.

Unlike traditional masters programs and thesis-related course work, this program relates to the real world, said graduate Bill Vignoe, an instructional systems specialist with the Directorate of Operations and Training.

"We had to work with actual companies and organizations and improve the companies' processes," he said. Most masters' programs are classroom-focused, the difference with this program, Vignoe said, is that it is done in the real world with real people and real money involved.

At the end of the first three months, the students were divided into teams to work on process improvement with a specific unit or company. The companies that participated in the program were Aflac and Pratt and Whitney in Columbus, Mead Coated Board Southern Wood Products in Phenix City and the Fort Benning Materials Recovery Facility.

> "We had to work with actual companies and organizations and improve the companies' processes."
> — Bill Vignoe
> Course graduate

Hunsaker said the graduates were required to show tangible improvements, meaning their success was measured in the amount of money the teams saved the companies.

Hunsaker said Aflac had the goal of automating their licensing department and the team went in and looked at the processes that the company used. The team's suggestions decreased cycle time and increased profit for the company. She said the four teams' work produced significant savings for the organizations — $275,000 to $2.2 million.

Two of the Material Recovery Facility goals were to be profitable and to decrease the amount of materials going to the landfill, Hunsaker said.

The team that worked with the MRF mostly tracked data production procedures, said Vignoe who was on that team. No one was monitoring the amount of cardboard that was going into the landfill instead of being recycled.

"$30 a ton adds up quickly," he said. "It was important to get the cardboard to the appropriate market. The cardboard can be sold for $96 a ton and it costs $30 a ton to send it to the landfill."

One of the ways the team tracked whether the cardboard was recycled or not was by driving around and monitoring the recycling dumpsters.

"We found out that some of the dumpsters weren't being used at all and some weren't emptied enough," Vignoe said. The team's recommendations included getting more dumpsters, having them picked up sooner and putting a number on the containers for people to call when the dumpster was full. Another recommendation that was initiated was an awards program to recognize the Fort Benning organizations that participate in the recycling program."

Vignoe said the course was challenging because it required the students to produce tangible results while doing the course.

The next class is in the spring and open to active duty, reserve and National Guard service members, Department of Defense employees and family members. The instructors come from industry, including Baldrige examiners. The students get practical hands-on training during the course that they take back to their organizations and implement it year-round, Hunsaker said. Soldiers earn honor of Audie Murphy

9 inducted into prestigious world-wide NCO club, 6 earn honorary memberships

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from across post were honored during a ceremony in Marshall Auditorium Dec. 10 when they were inducted into the Sgt. Audie Murphy Club.

The Soldiers, who were nominated for the club by fellow Soldiers who they have had a great impact on, were each recognized by being awarded an Army Commendation Medal, a Sgt. Audie Murphy Club medallion, a TRADOC certificate of membership, a membership card, a TRADOC certificate of achievement and a Fort Benning coin.

The inductees were: Sgt. 1st Class Lorraine McRee, Drill Sergeant School, Noncommissioned Officer Academy; Staff Sgt. Aaron Alton, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, NCOA; Staff Sgt. Debra Baker, DSS, NCOA; Staff Sgt. Vondell Brown, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade; Staff Sgt. Luis Escribano, HHD, NCOA; Staff Sgt. Jimmy Russell, 3rd Bn. 47th Inf. Regt., BCTB; Staff Sgt. Jonathan Scholl, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., Infantry Training Brigade; Staff Sgt. Denis Stewart, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., ITB; and Staff Sgt. Anthony Tharpe, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., BCTB.

Several Soldiers were also honored during the ceremony by being named honorary Audie Murphy inductees.

Those inductees were: Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk, HHD, NCOA; Master Sgt. Vickie Dikes, A Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.; Sgt. 1st Class Billy Blackmon, HHC, 75th Ranger Regt.; Sgt. 1st Class Bryan Bevley, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.; Sgt. 1st Class Armond Pringley, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.; and Sgt. Maj. Ruby Proby, A Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Each honorary inductee was honored by receiving a TRADOC certificate of membership, a membership card and a Fort Benning coin.

Honorary inductees who are not Sgt. Morales Club members also received an Audie Murphy medallion.

The inductees were commended by Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen, post command sergeant major, during the ceremony. Vereen spoke to the Soldiers about what he thought made them leaders like Audie Murphy.

"These Soldiers that you see here today have made sacrifices continuously," he said. "They have faced the challenges needed to be as good as their desire to become as Soldiers. They have faced responsibility and accountability to serve humanity and those under their charge."

Vereen went on to challenge the inductees to continue leading the way.

"As Audie Murphy inductees, never let anything stop you. Use your determination to seek out that which is the best part of you," said Vereen. "Use that to face your objectives as Audie Murphy did so many times."

Audie Murphy is known as the most decorated Infantryman.

He served in World War II where he earned a battlefield commission for his courage.

His decorations included every medal for valor that America gives.

After the war, Murphy made a career in films. He wrote the lyrics to 16 country and western songs, and he was also an accomplished poet.

Murphy died in a plane crash in 1971.

USARSA graduates 60 officers

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Capturing an important milestone in their military career, 60 students, representing 13 countries, graduated from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Officer Course Dec. 10.

The 49-week CGSOC, taught by USARSA's Department of Joint and Combined Operations, is attended by students from Latin America and the U.S. It is modeled after the course offered at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and awards full Military Education Level-four credit and Joint Professional Military Education Phase I certification to the U.S. Army and Air Force officers slated each year to attend.

This year's graduating class had 25 U.S. officers, which included 23 Army and two Air Force. The rest of the class consisted of students representing Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela.

Maj. Antonio Vasquez was this year's recipient of the General Matthew B. Ridgway Leadership Award.

"I won the award through a vote from the students and faculty," said Vasquez. "I'm humbled and very honored by this award."

Vasquez explained that all American officers are first selected to attend the CGSOC at Fort Leavenworth.

"I volunteered to attend this course once I was selected to attend Fort Leavenworth," he said. "Every single institution that offers the course awards Military Education Level-four credit and the Joint Professional Military Education Phase I certification."

Lt. Col. Hipolito Luis Izquierdo Garcia of the Venezuelan Army, was the Distinguished Honor Graduate. Lt. Col. Victor Alfonso Tenorio Garcia of the Peruvian Army and Maj. Pedro Miguel Castro Rodriguez of the Venezuelan national guard, were both distinguished graduates. The Physical Fitness Award went to Maj. Francisco Eugenio Del Cid Diaz of the El Salvadoran army. Capt. Percy Zuazo Del Aguila of the Peruvian Navy won the Military Writing Award.

The broad regional focus of the course is enhanced by a guest lecturer program featuring U.S. Ambassadors to Latin America, members of the U.S. Congress, U.S. and Latin American flag-rank officer, and Assistant Secretaries of State and Defense.

The guest speaker for the ceremony was Lt. Gen. Lawson W. Magruder III, deputy commanding general and chief of staff of U.S. Army Forces Command.

"This course allows an officer to exchange ideas with a group of people from different countries," said Vasquez. "The cooperation fostered in this course is tremendous. The friendships formed will be everlasting."

What made you join the Army? I want to protect the American way of life, make sure my loved ones are safe and to give back to my country.

Why were you chosen as honor graduate? I believe I was chosen because I shot expert with the M-16-A2 rifle and M-9 pistol, I was a first time go on the EOC, I got a 295 on the final PT test and I won a board held by the company cadre.

Staff Sgt. Sam C. Yoo
Seoul, Korea.
B Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.
Award: Drill Sergeant of the Cycle.

Yoo

Define your leadership style. I lead by example and I am very direct at the beginning of the cycle, then I allow my style to shift to a more participative one as the Soldiers progress throughout the cycle.

What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant? My greatest motivation comes from seeing the Soldiers meet all the standards for graduation and move on to contribute in Infantry units around the world.

Pvt. David C. Golden
Odessa, Texas
C Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.
Award: Soldier of the Cycle.

What made you join the Army? I joined the Army to serve my country the best way I know how.

Why were you chosen as honor graduate? I believe I was chosen because I did my job.

Post's top cop retires, stays in Columbus

Cain will assume new job with local business

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Instead of focusing on his decorated 29 years of service, Col. Thomas Cain looked at the future as he said good-bye at his retirement ceremony at Infantry Hall Friday.

Cain, who had served as the post's provost marshal for three years, said his retirement will not bring an end to his relationships he has developed during nearly three decades of service, but it will bring an opportunity for he and his family to conquer what he called the final frontier — being civilians.

"This not an end by any means to my relationships I have developed here at Fort Benning," he said during the ceremony Friday. "But it is time for me to move on. There is no time for the boo-hoos of good-byes, just time for me to move into my new job and get settled."

The post's former top cop will continue his law enforcement career at Total Solutions in Columbus as an investigator.

Col. Donald G. Salo Jr., will take Cain's top spot as the provost marshal.

Cain, a native of Burlington, Vermont, began his career in 1970 after graduating from the University of Vermont and earning his commission as a second lieutenant. Originally branched as an Infantry officer, Cain was branch transferred to the military police corps during his initial assignment to the 82nd Airborne Division.

During his stint of service, he has tackled numerous command positions to include commander of the 3rd Military Police Company, 3rd Infantry Division, commander, the Unit U.S. Army Retraining Brigade, and commander of the Fort Eustis and Fort Devens law Enforcement Commands.

Cain will continue to live in the Columbus area with his wife Cynthia and his two children Elizabeth and Justin.

2LT: Earns commission after 7 years of enlisted service

everyone in the chain of command didn't weigh in for Staff Sergeant Long. It was a ground breaking team effort."

Stephenson added, he was glad he could be a part of adding another good officer to the Army.

"He's a model instructor and was an obvious choice to be an officer because he had already done it," he said. "He's a superb professional. It was an easy choice to help him get back what he had already earned."

Long said having the command's support helped tremendously.

"I had researched it myself when I worked at IOBC. I had some people tell me, 'No, it wasn't possible — it couldn't be done,'" he explained. "It turned out that we didn't talk to the right people and get the right people involved. My commanders really wanted to make it happen. They pushed it up for me."

That extra push came in handy since direct commissions aren't an everyday occurrence for Infantrymen, Long said.

"I personally don't know of anyone, besides doctors and dentists, just getting a direct commission," he said. "Everyone I talked to in the Infantry branch said they had never seen someone get a direct commission in the Infantry. It was the first time they had seen it."

Long said regaining his commission was better than he could have ever imagined.

"It's weird. To me it feels a lot better the second time than it did the first time," Long said. "The first time I didn't know what to expect, but now being in the Army for a couple of years knowing what to expect and what to do — I feel more confident with it."

He added, he may have difficulty totally making the transition to lieutenant the second time around.

"The only problem I see is making the transition from being real hands-on as a squad leader versus hands-off as a team leader — giving guidance to the NCO and letting them go with it," Long said. "I think being an NCO will help my relationship with the platoon sergeant and squad leaders.

"I won't give them something totally wacky to do," he said. "I'll be more open to bring suggestions to me so we can work better as team."

Along with his experience as an NCO, Long also has a wide variety of skills learned from completing the Ranger, Jumpmaster, Pathfinder, Sniper schools, IOBC, and master fitness course among others.

Long said he now plans on completing a full 20 years of service.

"I would like to someday return to the Ranger Regiment and be a platoon leader there or any job there. I'd like to be an officer for them," he said. "I just want to be the best I can wherever I go, doing the job that I like. I'd hope to stay in as long as I could."

Long hopes that others might be able to learn from his situation.

"If you're ever in a situation where you need the support of the chain of command, but you don't pursue it, you're really at a loss," he said. "The chain of command, as busy as you may think they are, I would guess 99.9 percent of the time they will say, 'Hey, this guy has a legitimate goal, a problem or wants to have a solution made.'

"If you go to them and present yourself in as professional manner as possible, they'll support you 100 percent. If they don't, I would be totally surprised," Long added. "That's exactly what my chain of command did. They are the ones who made this happen for me.

"They can help you out. Trust and have faith in your chain of command. If you support them, they'll support you," he said.

Long is going to Kelley Hill in January where he hopes to be a platoon leader.

USARSA artillerymen gather to celebrate St. Barbara

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Celebrating a tradition dating back hundreds of years, the U.S. Army School of the Americas' artillerymen gathered at the Officer's Club for an Order of St. Barbara Induction Ceremony Dec. 8.

"The U.S. Army has a program to raise the esprit of the artillery through the tradition of celebrating St. Barbara for many years," said Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant, USARSA. "But we are not unique in that. Many of the armies of the world have similar traditions."

Weidner, who is an artilleryman, said that when he was in Chile, he was invited to join their St. Barbara Regiment, which was the regiment of all retired artillerymen in the Chilean Army.

"It's a veteran's association, but it also celebrates the virtues and traditions of the artillery," he said. "It's kind of typical of what happens in armies all around the world."

Weidner said this celebration was very special as they took advantage of USARSA's multinational environment and shared our Armies tradition with Latin American artillerymen.

During the festivity, eight new members received the St. Barbara Medal and were inducted into the Order of St. Barbara.

There were three American Soldiers; one Bolivian; one Honduran; one Uruguayan and two Venezuelans.

"Getting inducted into the U.S. Army's Order of St. Barbara is a great honor for me," said Col. Juan Parades, a USARSA guest instructor from Venezuela.

"In Venezuela we have our own order, but becoming a member of this order is extra special," he added.

Besides getting inducted into the order, Parades, who will be returning to Venezuela next week, received his awards for being selected USARSA's Officer Instructor of the First Quarter, Fiscal Year 2000.

"These were two wonderful years of camaraderie," he said. "I hope one day I get the privilege of returning to this great school."

Maj. German Rivera, executive officer, USARSA's School Battalion, Maj. Robert Marshall, commander, USARSA's A Co., and Maj. Thomas Yanoschik, commander, USARSA's Headquarters and Headquarters Company, all artillerymen, were instrumental in organizing the special holiday event.

"It's very important for artillerymen to get together, especially when assigned to a non-artillery unit and celebrate St. Barbara," said Marshall. "We look forward to celebrating St. Barbara all year. She is the patron saint for all artillerymen."

Reserve Soldiers add skills, knowledge to training

84th Division drill sergeants train tomorrow's Soldiers

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Most Soldiers who go through basic training get used to a routine of seeing their specific drill sergeants every day of training.

The Soldiers at E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment aren't like most others though. They have to get used to having new drill sergeants every two weeks.

Not only do they get new drill sergeants, they get a whole new chain of command in their company every two weeks.

That's because E Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., is a unit that's run by reserve Soldiers from the 1st Brigade, 84th Division, headquartered in Livonia, Mich.

The Soldiers from the 1st Bde., 84th Div., spend their two weeks of annual training on active duty training Soldiers at Fort Benning running the company and filling drill sergeants slots in the other 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., companies.

This arrangement works out well because it's set up a certain way, said Lt. Col. Dennis Bundy, commander of 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

"They come in for a cycle. Infantry one station unit training trains in 14-week cycles. For each cycle, they send seven companies down," he said.

"They usually come in on a Friday night. We billet them right here in the BEQ where the Soldiers stay," Bundy said. "Then, on Saturday morning every two weeks, I bring the new group in and give them a transitioning in brief about my command philosophy, leadership style and expectations.

"Then at 9 a.m. every two weeks, we go out in front of the battalion and have a change of command with the outgoing and the incoming reserve units," he explained.

Bundy said after the ceremony everything goes back to business as usual with the reserve Soldiers running their own training.

"They perform the same duties as the active duty Soldiers," he said. "If we put them in a platoon and they outrank the active duty drill sergeants, then they're in charge. They come down and do everything we do here.

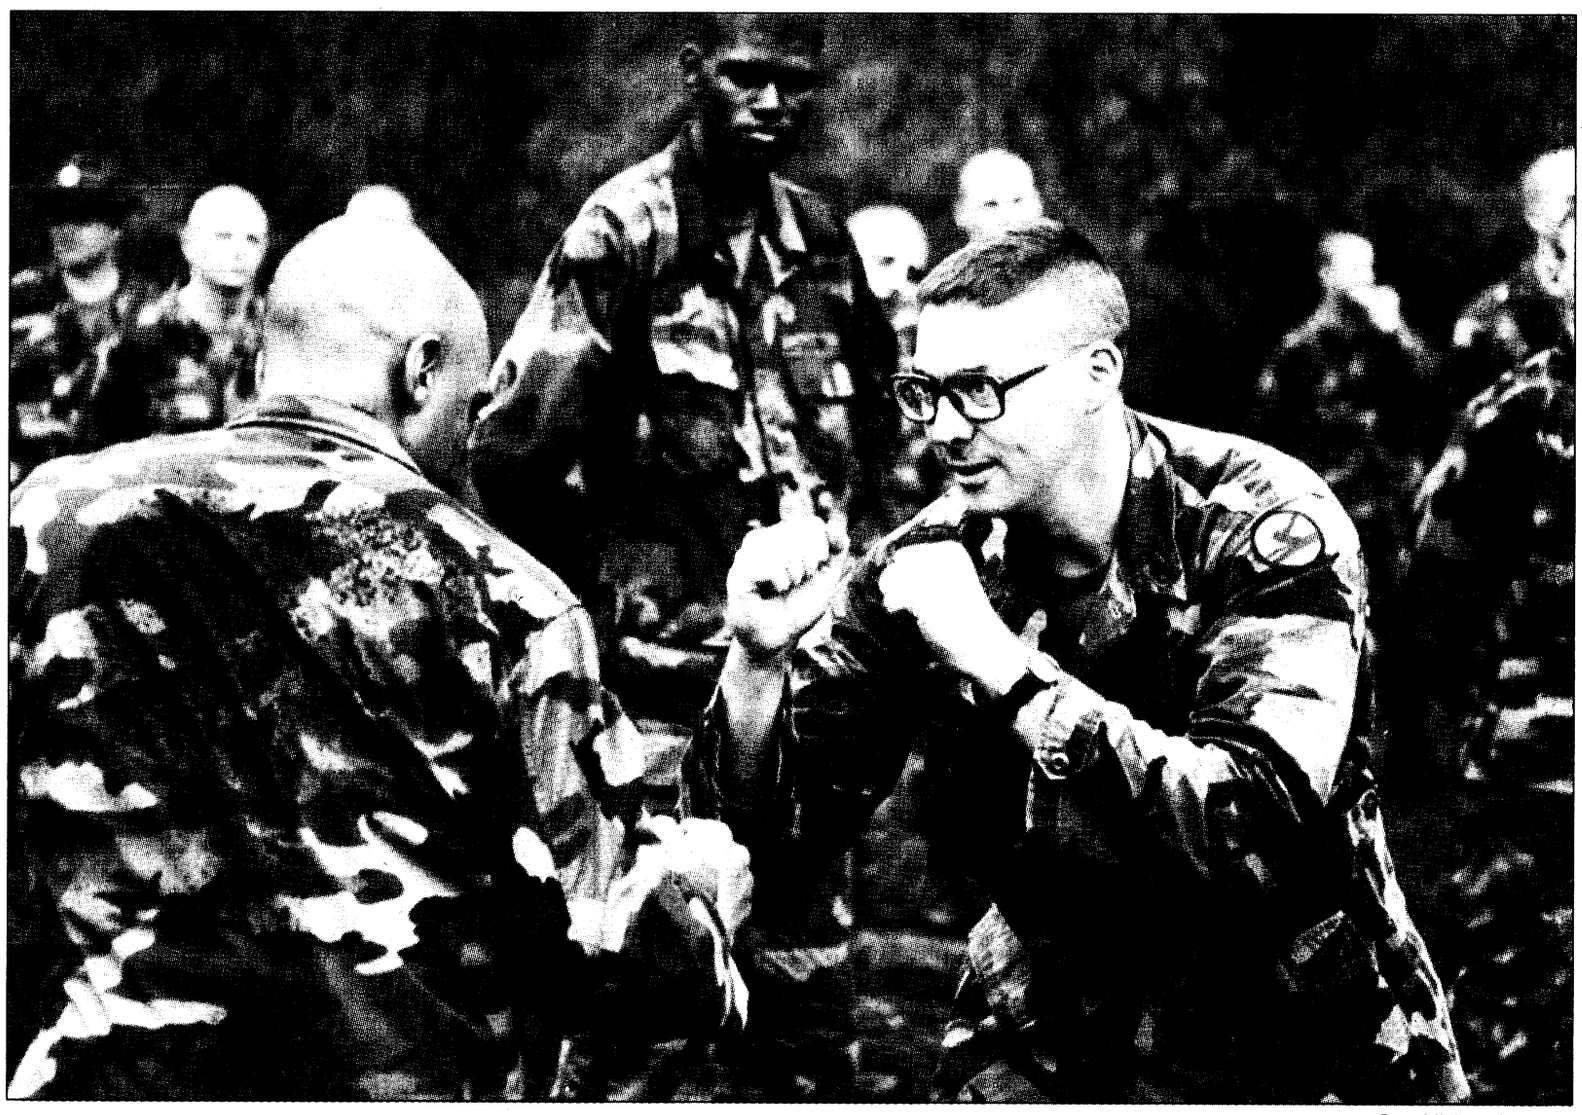
"They even get to plan their own two-week training period. We bring all of the company commanders down here who are going to be here for the cycle about a month or two before it starts," Bundy said. "They have a planning session where they plan out their two-week AT periods and build the cycle plan for the Soldiers to be trained."

All of the work involved really pays off for the reserve Soldiers, said Capt. Darren Antal, E Co. commander, who is also an aircraft dispatcher from Indianapolis, Ind.

"Coming down here is the hands-on and the 'do' portion of our training. You can't get better training than coming down here and getting hands-on — being able to jump right in and go right to it," he said. "It keeps us up to speed so that if we ever get mobilized like we did during Desert Storm, we'll feel comfortable to just come right in and be able to take a company, a battalion or whatever's needed. This is the best training we can get coming down here."

Bundy said fitting right in and running the training is no problem for the 84th Division Soldiers because they come prepared.

"They come down with a company commander, a first sergeant, an executive officer, a training sergeant, a supply sergeant and an armorer and 12 reserve component drill sergeants," he explained. "This company takes over for my active duty headquarters company. My guys serve as observer and controllers and help keep continuity."



Having the active duty Soldiers in the company helps keep things running smoothly for the trainees, said Antal. "They ensure that everything stays pretty close to normal. We always have good drills to work with which is what keeps this company going," he said.

Staff Sgt. James Brannen, an active duty drill sergeant in E Co., said the reservists seem very prepared to make the transition every two weeks.

"It's phenomenal. Two weeks out of the year, these guys show up and hit the ground running. You couldn't ask for better," he said.

Bundy said his unit also provides the reservists with feedback on their performance.

"We write after action reviews for every unit that comes down here and send them to their battalion commander every two weeks," Bundy said. "At the end of the cycle, the ITB commander and I travel up to the brigade headquarters and do an after action review with all of the commanders. We give them feedback on what they need to sustain and what they need to improve upon."

Spc. Michael Maddox

Staff Sgt. Scott Shippy, a reserve drill sergeant from the 84th Division, demonstrates hand-to-hand combat techniques with Soldiers from E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

Having reserve Soldiers run E Co. helps out both the active and reserve forces, according to Bundy.

"The Infantry Training Brigade has a mission to train with reservists from the 1st Brigade, 84th Division. They've got a mobilization mission of conducting Infantry one station unit training just like the Infantry Training Brigade does here," he said. "Their go to war mission is to go down to Fort Benning or wherever the Army needs them to train Infantrymen in time of conflict. That's the reason they come down here and align with us."

Bundy said he thinks the reserves do a good job of meeting and exceeding the standards and setting excellent examples for the active duty Soldiers.

"Their drill sergeants have double, if not triple, the experience of the active component drill sergeants. Some of them have 15 to 20 years on the trail," he said. "Our active drill sergeants only do this for two years. So their drill sergeants bring a wealth of experience down here on how to work with our young Soldiers.

"They also bring positive leadership in terms of knowing what makes this generation of young Soldiers tick, what motivates them, what makes them successful," Bundy added. "You have to remember that they're working with this generation everyday in their civilian jobs. They know this generation of young Soldiers and how to deal with them.

"They teach us that because we are in the Army every day. Sometimes after being in the Army for a while, you get blinders on and forget what's going on outside of the military," said Bundy.

Antal agreed. He thinks having different ideas shared is good for everyone.

"I guess we might see life a little different and not quite so straight forward. I guess we bring in a different perspective on how things are done," he said. "There are always several different ways to get to a point by taking different paths. I think the personnel can learn from each other because of their life experiences."

The active and reserve Soldiers also get to know each other on a personal level, said Brannen.

"We have a pretty good relationship," he said. "We have several police officers down here, my other partner was an investment banker, so I've learned about what they do.

"The sad part is that by the time you can get personable with them, and you're clicking and working without saying a word, unfortunately they've got to go. But you see them next year," Brannen added.

E Co. has also been setting high standards in several other areas, according to Bundy.

"That company has one of the highest graduation rates, not only within my battalion, but within the brigade. They typically graduate more than 90 percent of the Soldiers that start the training," he said.

"There have also been no Soldiers go AWOL within the last 14 months. That hasn't happened in all of my other units. Again, that's due to positive leadership," Bundy said.

"Several weeks ago, E Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., also did very well on a basic rifle marksmanship qualification. They now hold the brigade record for the company qualifying the most number of experts," he said. "They had 27 experts that day. They also had about 70 sharpshooters. At the end of the day, more than 200 Soldiers, all of them, had qualified with their weapons."

Bundy said all of the teamwork and effort leading to the many successes at his battalion is no surprise. "It's really a positive success story — what they do. There's no difference between the reserve drill sergeants and the active — none at all. The only difference is that we wear a different patch. They're a very professional group, and I enjoy working with them."

Tactical training means graduation near for officer candidates

In the first week of November, 108 officer candidates of A Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, trained on the squad tactical lanes of Garnsey Range under the control of the 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Included in this training were a two-night bivouac and 12-mile foot march back to A Co.

According to Officer Candidate Christine Stevens, "Garnsey Range was challenging."

It is composed of 11 lanes, each designed for a different battle drill.

Among these drills are: react to contact and break contact, knock out a bunker, area reconnaissance, enter a building, clear a room, enter and clear a trench and react to an ambush.

These lanes, Stevens said, "provided a more realistic view of warfare and underlined the importance of not losing one's head in stressful situations."

Each candidate was assigned a specific battle drill two weeks prior to the training event to practice and prepare for squad tactical training.

"Share, share, share," said Senior Officer Candidate Chris Landry on the importance of learning from peers.

According to Landry, "We must learn from each other to succeed."

At the conclusion of training at Garnsey Range, the candidates of A Co. agreed that the training had been a very challenging and beneficial experience.

In the words of Officer Candidate Rob Gully, "We learned with each other and from each other, which is a great way to learn and retain knowledge."

From Garnsey the officer candidates of A Co., 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., began preparations for platoon missions at FLX III.

This final hurdle for class 5-99, known as "Capstone" is a culmination of skills trained at OCS.

The officer candidates of A Co. set out for this final field exercise Nov. 15.

For one week the candidates employed all they had learned about tactics and battle drills to conduct attacks, ambushes and raids.

They established patrol bases, conducted reconnaissance and served as the opposing force.

Senior Officer Candidate Russell Berman said Capstone was, "Challenging to say the least."

Officer candidates work their way through smoke, machinegun fire and concertina wire to get through squad tactical lanes at Garnsey Range.

It gave him an opportunity to organize and lead an assault.

He added, "You can sit in a classroom and learn about tactics or you can head for the field and experience it first-hand.

The second choice is far more effective."

The final event of Capstone required that the company break into two elements.

One platoon was designated to defend a battle position near Detrow Hill, while the other three platoons were ordered to attack it.

At 5 a.m. the attacking platoons left their patrol base on Rockwell Hill.

One platoon breached the defenders obstacles while the others assaulted the defensive positions.

In the end, candidates utilized breaching techniques to clear concertina wire, bounded through thick clouds of multicolored smoke and engaged each other with rifle and machine gun fire to take their objective.

Senior Officer Candidate Doug Taylor said of the exercise, "We definitely learned a lot about combat operations at Capstone, our final field exercise at OCS."

Reservists keep CRC deploying troops

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The unit patch that adorns the sleeves of the Soldiers from the 2145th Garrison Support Unit may say Follow Me, but that may be a difficult thing to do if you aren't quick. .

That's because these reservists from Nashville, Tenn., and Jacksonville, Fla., are some of the most called upon citizen-Soldiers in the ranks of the Army.

Their mission is to process their reserve component counterparts who are being deployed overseas, and it all takes place at Fort Benning's CONUS Replacement Center.

The CRC is staffed throughout the year by active-duty servicemembers, but they can only handle individual deployments. When an entire unit deploys, it is the job of the 2145th to scramble enough of their Soldiers to come to Fort Benning to process the element of deploying Soldiers.

That was the mission for the Soldiers of the 2145th this past week when they were called on active duty for the eighth week this year to process 102 Soldiers and Department of Defense employees at the CRC.

"This is why we are in the Army," said Maj. Bill Powell, the deployment's officer in charge. "We are here to do our job and be the best at what it is we do — processing people and getting them ready for real-world missions."

That preparation is something Powell and his 19 Soldiers take great pride in while on active duty, he said.

"These people are wearing flak jackets and kevlars during our training for a reason. They are going into an environment where they could get shot. If we don't train them for what they could face once they get in country, we are not doing our job and are doing them a disservice.

"That is why my people take great pride in what they do," he said. "This is the only time where we really get to do what we train for all year. That is why we are so good at it and take such pride in it."

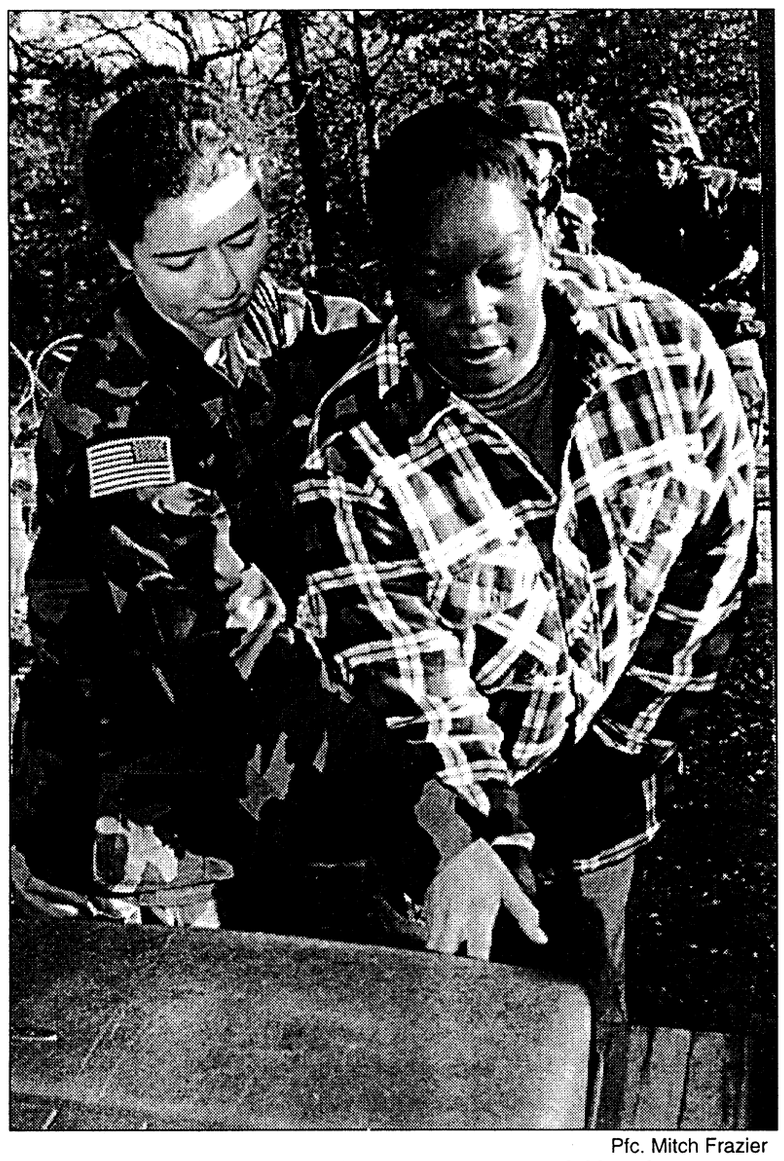
That pride is apparent in everything these reservists do, from teaching classes and mandatory briefings to the preparation of the deploying Soldiers personnel records.

The cycle for the reserve processors begin when the deploying Soldiers arrive at the CRC late Sunday night. After a warm welcome and a short newcomers' briefing, the Soldiers are sent to bed to get up and begin a day of grueling and intensive processing that Powell said is more tedious than strenuous.

The long days filled with operational security briefings and seemingly endless mounds of paperwork continue through the first couple of days while the deployees become acquainted once again with the active-duty lifestyle.

By mid-week deployees are ready to tackle the lanes of region specific training, a group of scenarios slated to teach Soldiers the "dos and don'ts" of operations in a foreign country.

"When these Soldiers leave here they are prepared to handle anything they are going to put up against," said Master Sgt. Heather Hayne, the deployment's NCOIC. "They have had the training and are ready to handle what faces them when they hit the ground in Kosovo or Bosnia or where ever it is they are going."



While Hayne said the Soldiers are prepared to handle the harshness they will soon face, she said the military part of the deployment is not the only thing that is on the minds of many of the troops.

"I have been deployed before over the holidays, and I know it is tough — very tough," she said. "So I try to relate my experiences with them. So they know I understand what they are going through."

The 102 Soldiers deployed without fault this past week, and the Soldiers from the 2145th once again shut the door behind them at the CRC.

It won't be long until these citizen-Soldiers are called upon again though, Hayne said.

Their next projected call back to active duty is January 4.

Silver Wings compete in Black, Gold competition

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The Silver Wings, Fort Benning's Command Exhibition Parachute Team, participated in the Black and Gold Competition sponsored by the U.S. Army Parachute team, the Golden Knights, Nov. 19-21 at the Paul Keith Air Park in Raeford, N.C.

The Silver Wings competed against top military teams including the West Point parachute team, the 82nd Airborne demonstration team, the Green Beret demonstration team, the Canadian Free-Fall team and members of the Golden Knights.

The Black and Gold Competition marked only the second competition that the Silver Wings have participated in the last three years. The first competition in Quincy, Ill., was the U.S. National Sport Accuracy Championship.

Staff Sgt. Greg Windmiller, Silver Wings assistant team leader, won first place capturing the U.S. title for sport accuracy.

In the most recent competition, the Silver Wings brought home 13 medals proving that the team is as good and in some cases, better than the competitors that have logged many more jumps.

"Our team was probably the least experienced team at the competition. Our team has logged between 700 and 800 jumps while some competitors have over 1000 jumps," Windmiller said.

There were three separate events held. The first was the accuracy competition. In this one, the jumper had to land on a 3 centimeter disk. The other events were the four-way and eight-way competitions.

In the four-way competition, the team had 35 seconds to make as many predetermined formations possible.

In the eight-way competition the object was to make one formation the shortest time possible," Windmiller said.

In the competitions there were four rounds or dives.

There were 45 jumpers competing in the Accuracy Competition. The Silver Wings took ninth, 11th and 12th places.

In the four-way competition, 16 teams jumped. One of the Silver Wings teams, which included Leavitt, Windmiller, Marine Gunnery Sgt. James Holt and Sgt. Adam Wheeler, took the silver medal, and in the eight-way, competing against nine teams, they took the bronze.

The eight way team included Lt. Col. Edward Daly, Sgt. 1st Class Robert Swift, Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Ronald Lillibridge, Leavitt, Windmiller, Holt, Wheeler and Sgt. Rich Chandler, a former Silver Wing and currently a Golden Knight.

The Silver Wings' primary mission is to represent the post and the Army, said Staff Sgt. Dan Leavitt, Silver Wings team leader.

A secondary mission for the group is to support recruitment opportunities for the Army.

Making about 300 jumps a year, the Silver Wings have definitely proved they have what it takes to match and beat the level of competition sky-divers from around the country, Windmiller said.

Delanie Doyle stood at the microphone on the stage at Dexter Elementary School's cafetorium Friday morning.

Behind her, a clock ticked down the seconds to the year 2000. Two doves, symbolizing peace, played in a bird cage to the side.

"My wish is that all children everywhere will always have a reason to wear a smile," Doyle, a pre-K student, said.

Fourteen other students followed Doyle and stated the wishes of their classes for the new millennium.

Peace was the overwhelming desire.

"Our wish is that everybody in the world would be nice to each other and share a happy life," kindergartner Jonathan Langsmith said.

The wishes were part of "Making Memories and Molding Minds for the Millennium," a program presented by the school's e-Club, an ecology club for kindergartners and first-graders.

Documents such as photographs, rosters and other papers from each class were placed in a time capsule constructed from PVC pipe. Representatives from each classroom at the school, the staff and principal Vicki Rogers placed items in the capsule.

The compartment was then sealed during the assembly. The student body had voted earlier to leave the capsule untouched in the ground until December 2015.

After the ceremony, parents, faculty and students went outside to a patch of ground located in the school's south

Fort Benning lights up for holidays

Post residents gather for Christmas tree, Menorah Lighting

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Nearly 150 Fort Benning residents gathered the evening of Dec. 10 at the Field of Four Chaplains to celebrate the traditional Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony.

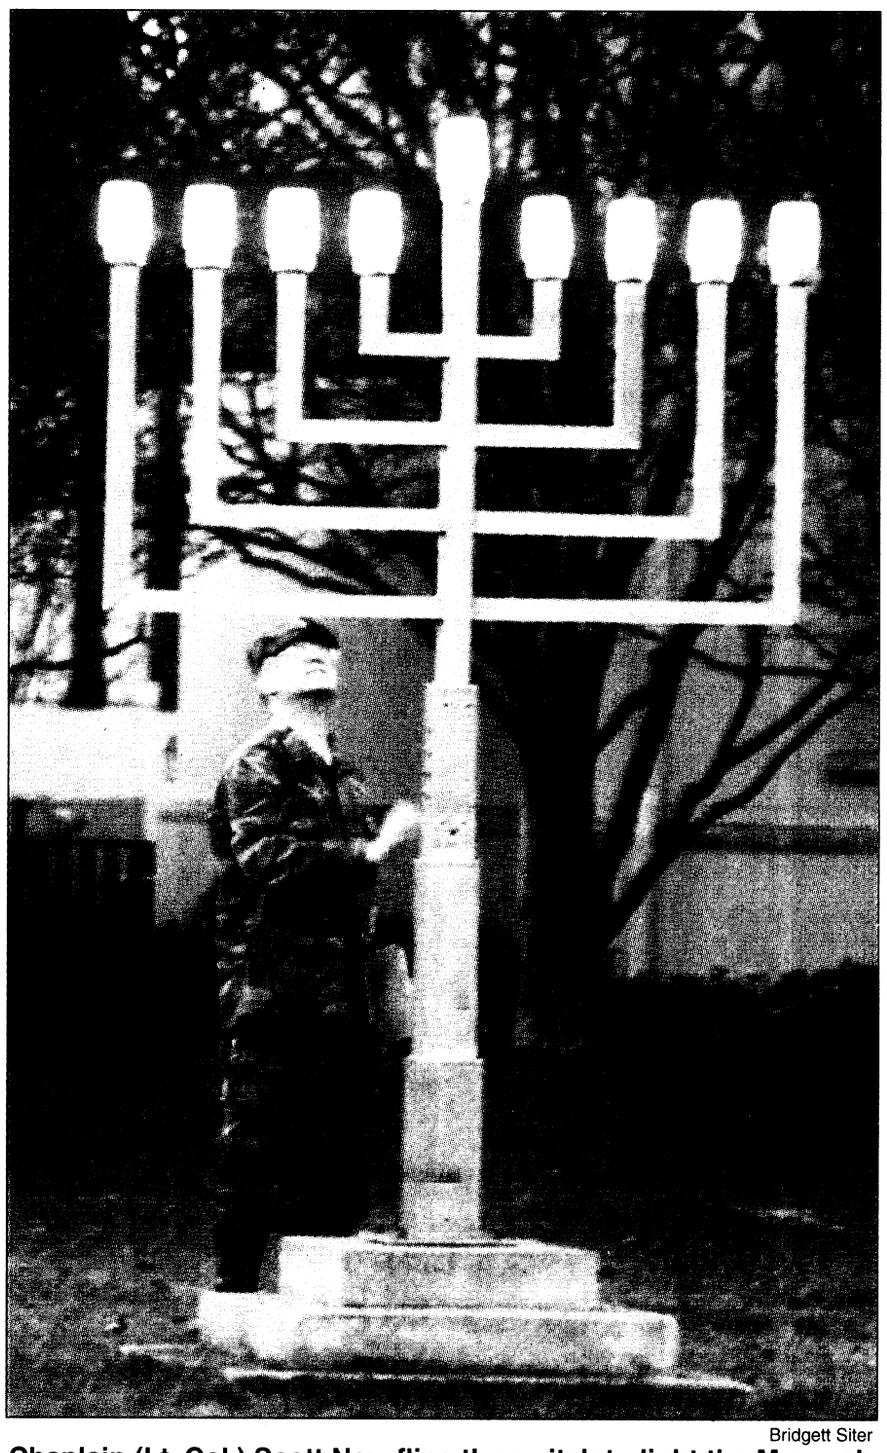
The Infantry Center Band performed various holiday carols before Chaplain (Capt.) Norman Jones welcomed the crowd and delivered the invocation.

Families huddled under blankets and young children perched on the shoulders of adults as the congregation joined together singing old holiday favorites, such as Jingle Bells and O Christmas Tree.

Four-year-old Randi Secules expressed delight at the selection of songs.

"I knew all the words to Jingle Bells, cause we've been practicing in pre-K," Secules said.

Pfc. Michael Fine, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, shared the historical significance of Hanukkah, the Jewish Festival of Lights, before lighting the Menorah, the traditional candelabra that commemorates the Hebrew faith and fight for freedom.



Fine said that the evening was educational for him as well.

"This was a good chance for me to learn about the celebration of Christmas. I'm lacking in my knowledge of Christianity, which actually gets its roots in Judaism, so I really did this for myself," Fine said.

Senior Catholic Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert Santry explained the history and symbolism of the lighting the Christmas tree and Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New introduced the evening's key-note speaker, Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne, Commanding General of Fort Benning.

Le Moyne asked those in attendance to remember the 27,000 Soldiers currently deployed overseas, and the 100,000 Soldiers stationed overseas this Christmas. Le Moyne then assisted Angel Tamayo, 3, and Marielis Hiner, 8, in the lighting of the Christmas tree.

"This evening is significant because it will mark the start of the Christmas season and all that goes with it for these children," Le Moyne said. "Santa Claus is very much alive in the mind of every two-year-old. Thank you children, for the spirit of renewal that you give us at this time every year."

Bridgett Siter

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New flips the switch to light the Menorah at the annual Tree and Menorah Lighting ceremony.

Although Le Moyne has only recently taken command of Fort Benning, it will not be his first Christmas here.

"In 1950, I was in the first grade, and my dad was stationed here," Le Moyne said. "I got a puppy from Santa that year."

The highlight of the evening was a drop-in visit by Santa himself, prompted by a rousing rendition of Santa Claus is Coming to Town. The children lined up for the opportunity to sit on Santa's lap, while the adults were treated to refreshments provided by the Chaplains' Fund.

"Tonight has been a gathering of the people of Fort Benning in celebration of our sacred traditions. Combining them is a symbol of our brotherhood," said Garrison Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan.

Students interview post residents in quest of wisdom

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A select group of students from Wilson Elementary spent nearly four weeks this fall walking across Fort Benning and interviewing residence to gain a better understanding of wisdom and conservation.

The 31 third-, fourth-, and fifth-grade students, all participants of the school's enrichment program, videotaped their project and submitted it to the Fort Benning television station, which aired the video Walking Fort Benning, A Quest for Wisdom, the last week of November.

Working in small groups, the students took several field trips to area neighborhoods, Fort Benning schools, Infantry Hall, and various stores on post asking questions. Among the questions they posed, the students sought to define the word wisdom. They discussed education with principals from each school, and talked about recycling with Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander.

"Their goal was to interview people from all walks of life. They talked to all ages, civilians, retirees, officers, and enlisted," said Dr. Wanda Person, Wilson Elementary media specialist. Person worked closely with the students to help them edit their video.

"These kids have really learned a lot. It was a good opportunity for them to learn interview skills. It was a great experience for them just to sit down and talk to adults," Person said.

Most of the adults they interviewed enjoyed being a part of the video, said fifth-grader Gina Brenes.

"They all liked sharing their favorite school memories and giving advice, but when we asked them the definition of wisdom, they were stumped at first," Brenes said.

The project was inspired by Gregory Michel, an American graduate student at Gakugei University in Tokyo, Japan. Michel is currently walking the entire length of Japan, on a self-imposed "exploration of wisdom," attempting to gain insight into the Japanese practice of harmony with nature.

Michel's journey is being tracked by the World School Network, a coalition of schools worldwide that collaborate on environmental projects.

Wilson Elementary is one of only 57 schools throughout the world participating in this year's project. Their walk across Fort Benning is one of many activities the students have been involved.

AFTB members celebrate 5 years service

Honored guest offers luncheon guests a brief history of the Army wife

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Family life issues have always played a role in the U.S. military, dating all the way back to the days of George Washington and the Continental Army.

Washington didn't call them family members or dependents. The term in those days was camp followers, normally used in a derogatory way.

Cecelia Abrams offered a brief history lesson on the Army wife Tuesday during a luncheon celebrating the fifth anniversary of Army Family Team Building. An Army wife for almost 30 years, she is married to Gen. John N. Abrams, TRADOC commander.

"The Army wife is there day in and day out," Abrams, the TRADOC Family Program Advisor, said. "Because of her can-do spirit, we have and will always have the best force in the world."

Families are force multipliers, Abrams said, but throughout history they have had to struggle for recognition from the nation's military and political leaders.

The first study on military families was conducted in 1890; others followed after each World War.

The message was always the same — families wanted better living conditions and pay, Abrams said.

"And the result was the same. They were told there was no money to do anything."

Today, Army spouses are affecting policy at the very highest level, Abrams said. "From the grass roots all the way to D.C."

The Army Family Action Plan grew out of an Army wife workshop held in Fort Meyer, Va., in the 1970s. Inadequate pay, housing and travel issues were discussed. Military wives also started the National Military Family Association that lobbies for families in the capital.

"Don't sit. We can't sit. We can't say they will take care of us," Abrams said.

About 90 guests attended the luncheon, including AFTB volunteers, active-duty personnel, battalion commanders,

Equity securities, stocks in particular, can often yield high investment returns. However, due to their volatile nature, stocks can also negatively impact the value of an investment portfolio.

For this reason, it is important to limit the potential losses of a portfolio by diversifying into an additional asset class. Debt securities, bonds in particular, can often provide stability to an investment portfolio.

A bond is essentially a loan agreement between two parties, a borrower and a lender. There is a vast selection of bonds for investors to choose from, and they vary greatly in sophistication and complexity.

In the case of corporate bonds, the borrower is a corporation, and the lender is an individual investor. Corporations fund many internal operations and projects by borrowing. Borrowing the needed capital from banks can often times be costly, so a corporation may choose to raise the needed capital by borrowing from investors, through the issuance of bonds.

Bonds have several features that make them unique. Face value (or par value) is the first feature of the bond. This is the amount the holder of the bond will receive from the issuing corporation when the bond matures. The value of the bond varies with the type and class of bond and is usually in $1000 increments. The date at which the bond agreement ends, and the borrower repays the lender, is referred to as the date of maturity.

This time frame also varies based upon the type and class of bond. The next feature is the coupon payment. When an individual purchases a bond they are paid a predetermined fixed payment throughout the life of the bond.

This payment varies with bond type and is usually made on a semi-annual or annual basis.

This payment represents the interest that is paid to compensate an individual for purchasing the bond.

For example, XYZ Corporation is in need of capital to finance a new project.

They decide issuing bonds is the most cost-effective way to raise this capital.

So, they decide to issue a series of $10,000 bonds (face value) that mature in five years (maturity date).

These bonds will pay a coupon payment of $300 semi-annually (twice a year) to the bondholder for the next five years.

When an individual purchases one of these bonds, they would pay $10,000 for the par value bond, and in return they would receive $300 every six months for the next five years.

At the end of the five years, Corporation XYZ repays the individual their $10,000. This produces an investment yield of 6 percent ($600 annually divided by $10,000) for the investor.

This example serves to provide a basic understanding of par value corporate bonds, and is not representative of the numerous factors that encompass all types of bonds.

Depending on investment objectives, bonds can often serve as a valuable addition to an investment portfolio.

Bonds can be purchased from an investment broker, and in many cases from an on-line brokerage.

However, it always beneficial to consult an investment professional before purchasing securities.

Students learn about dangers of tobacco, drugs

MACH partners up with schools to teach drug abuse prevention

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Six fifth-grade students from various Fort Benning elementary schools were honored Dec. 10. for their innovative ideas about educating their peers on tobacco use.

The ceremony took place at White Elementary School, with visiting dignitaries from Martin Army Community Hospital and the Fort Benning school board.

A nation-wide program called Tar Wars, launched in 1988, and implemented in Fort Benning schools five years ago, focuses on discouraging tobacco use through education and community involvement.

Currently three residents from the Family Practice at MACH are responsible for visiting classrooms at each school to speak to students and lead them in a series of exercises designed to underscore the impact of smoking on the body.

The lessons focus on the short-term and long-term effects of tobacco use, the reasons people use tobacco, and the images the tobacco companies use to market their products.

"Part of our community service as physicians in training is to visit these classrooms and instruct the students on the realities of tobacco use," said Capt. Alan Conway, a resident at MACH. "We know that to make any kind of impact, we need to reach them at an impressionable age since the vast majority of smokers begin before the age of 18."

Conway said the students perform such exercises as breathing through straws to simulate the damage of long-term tobacco use.

The program began at the start of the school year and culminated with an annual poster contest in November and the awards ceremony in December.

Students designed the Tar Wars anti-smoking posters, and their teachers selected the finalists to submit to the panel of judges from MACH .

This year's winners were Gina Marie Brenes, who received first place, Wilson Elementary, Brittany Critelli, second place, Wilson Elementary, Papito Rivera, third place, Stowers Elementary, and honorable mentions, Ken Harris, White Elementary, Afton Cissell, Dexter Elementary, and Taylor Franklin-Johnson, Dexter Elementary.

Prizes were provided by the Fort Benning Post Exchange.

The first place poster will be submitted for national judging, which takes place in April at the national meeting of the Uniformed Services Academy of Family Practice in Atlanta. Prizes for national winners range from savings bonds to trips to Disney World.

"I'm happy to see her work go to the national level," said Sgt. 1st Class Ivan Brenes, father of the first place winner said. "Gina put a lot of thought and effort into this. I think she worked on it all night."

Parental participation in the program has been exceptional, according to Conway.

"The parents have such a positive view of this program. They've also put a lot of effort into supporting our goals," Conway said.

Sgt. Leonard Johnson, father of Taylor Franklin-Johnson, agreed with Conway's assessment.

"I think the posters were great and the program is excellent. This anti-smoking campaign is what we have to focus on for the future. This program tells them what to expect if they make the wrong choice to smoke," Johnson said.

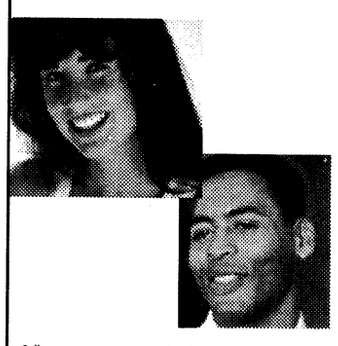
"It was fun to make the posters. I think they attract more kids, attention," said Cissell.

"I made mine in science class and I learned how tobacco can cause disease and destroy the brain."

Robert Skinner, assistant superintendent of Fort Benning schools, was on hand to support the Tar Wars project.

"It's a great idea. We all read the papers. Anything that heightens awareness is worthwhile. Hopefully it carries over into the home," Skinner said.

"We want to send a special thank you to Martin Army Hospital for joining in partnership with our schools to further this cause," Summer added.



Col. Jim Beeson, commander of MACH, reiterated the importance of joining forces with the schools to promote tobacco avoidance.

"These young men and women are the reason we exist. We are privileged to be working with them. If we stop just one from smoking, we are successful," Beeson said.

Although the success of the Tar Wars program is being tracked through a survey currently attempting to gauge it's short-term impact, those directly involved with the project have little doubt that the program is working.

"I have a visceral feeling that we are impacting lives down the road. It is particularly rewarding to be involved in this kind of project," Skinner said.

The Tar Wars program has been implemented in schools in all 50 states and has its anti-tobacco message has reached an estimated 335,000 elementary school students in the past year.

Now that the holidays are upon us, it is a good time to review some security precautions to prevent burglaries, especially since this is a time of year when many people travel away from home. Unfortunately, it is also that time of year when thieves take advantage of opportunities and empty houses. Here are some helpful hints and precautions presented by the Consumer Insurance Guide, www.insure.com/home/burglary.html, that may help to burglar proof your house this season and throughout the year:

• Protect your doors and windows. According to the Hartford Financial Services Group, Inc., approximately one-third of all burglaries occur through an open door or window. Exterior doors should be strong doors made of solid wood or metal that are least one inch thick. Also, the door should fit securely, and the surrounding door frame should be well constructed.

Deadbolt locks offer the best prevention; however, the best lock will not overcome the burden of a weak door or frame. Make sure all of your windows are locked. Consider using a removable bolt to pin the windows shut as an extra safety precaution. Secure sliding glass doors with a removable wooden or metal rod.

• Don't shut your home up tight before you leave. It is best to leave the shades and curtains in their usual positions because to do so otherwise might send an invitation to a burglar that you are not at home.

• Lower the volume on your telephone and answering machine so they cannot be heard outside. Never indicate on your answering machine that you are away from home — to do so is a surefire invitation to a potential burglar.

• Invest in some timers to turn the lights on and off at appropriate times. Also, it is a good idea to leave a radio playing or place a timer on a television in order to create noise as if someone were home.

• Don't let your newspapers gather at the end of your driveway or front door. It is a sure indicator that no one is home. Have a trusted neighbor pick them up or place a stop delivery for the period of time that you are away. Don't forget to put stop delivery on your mail. A full mailbox tells a burglar the house is empty.

• Leave a car in the driveway if possible because it presents the appearance that someone is home.

• Keep the trees and shrubs around doorways and windows trimmed to avoid giving a burglar a place to work undetected. Privacy is the burglar's best accomplice.

• Install motion-sensing lights. It will take away the burglar's ally, privacy, as well as indicate that something may be out of place at your house.

• Remember, burglar's often know the "secret" hiding places for spare keys. Don't make their job easier by providing them with easy entry to your home.

What should you do if your home is burglarized? First, don't touch anything, because there may be fingerprints that may help catch the thief and you do not want to destroy potential evidence. Call the police and make out a detailed report as to what items are missing. Contact your insurance company. Even if you don't own your own home, it is a good idea to have renter's policy.

For the protection provided, such policies are relatively inexpensive, and it is better to have such a policy and never use it, then to need it and wish you did.

Millennium: Buries capsule

parking lot. The park was officially named Millennium Island.

At one end of the island, members of the e-Club planted a flowering white dogwood.

"We hope that as we nurture it and watch it grow, that our love for each other will be as beautiful as the white flowers that will cover its branches in the spring," student Brittany King said.

Then all eyes turned to the capsule as it was dropped into a hole three-feet deep. Club members shoveled dirt atop the capsule, and an engraved marker set in place.

When the capsule is unearthed in 2015, students will be between the ages of 20 and 27 — an age when many may be working toward the peace for which they wished.

AFTB: Reaches families

Department of Army civilians and family members.

Abrams spent Tuesday morning with volunteers learning about Fort Benning's AFTB program. AFTB is an educational program designed by family members for family members that teaches about Army benefits, resources and culture. The goal is to provide families with the skills they need to be independent and self-sufficient.

The free classes are open to Soldiers, their family members and DA civilians.

"This program at Fort Benning is really moving forward," Abrams said after the luncheon. "I've never seen such a focus on including the active-duty service members. We've always been focused on the family members, and for the first time I've seen a really strong viable program that involves the Soldiers.

"This is what it is going to take to keep AFTB viable and to improve the Army as a family place."

Five women __ Winona Aguero, Leann Hoidahl, Chris Hurley, Stacey Salo, and Barbara Singleton — were honored for five years of service with AFTB. Aguero also received an award from the National Military Family Association for her contributions to the program.

Have a safe, happy holiday season.

Students develop leadership

Wilson Elementary School staff

Wilson School's Student Council consists of two representatives elected by their classmates from grades three through five. Students meet weekly to work on various projects. The most recent project of the group was to sponsor a "holiday dessert-fest" with each council member bringing a special dessert to treat teachers and staff members as they moved back into the building.

A major goal of the student council is to instill in students an attitude of leadership and service to others. Student council projects are service oriented. Students have conducted a phone book drive and penny drive with proceeds going to purchase toys for needy children. In addition, when school resumes in January, student council members will be responsible for the school store, which will serve the needs of teachers and students.

Student council members also serve as ambassadors during special events and activities at Wilson School.

"We get to do things for teachers and we learn about sharing and helping. It's important to be in student council because you can make new friends while you are learning and helping," said Estella Square, student council representative from Barbara Summers' fifth grade class.

Media assistants help in school's library

Wilson Elementary School staff

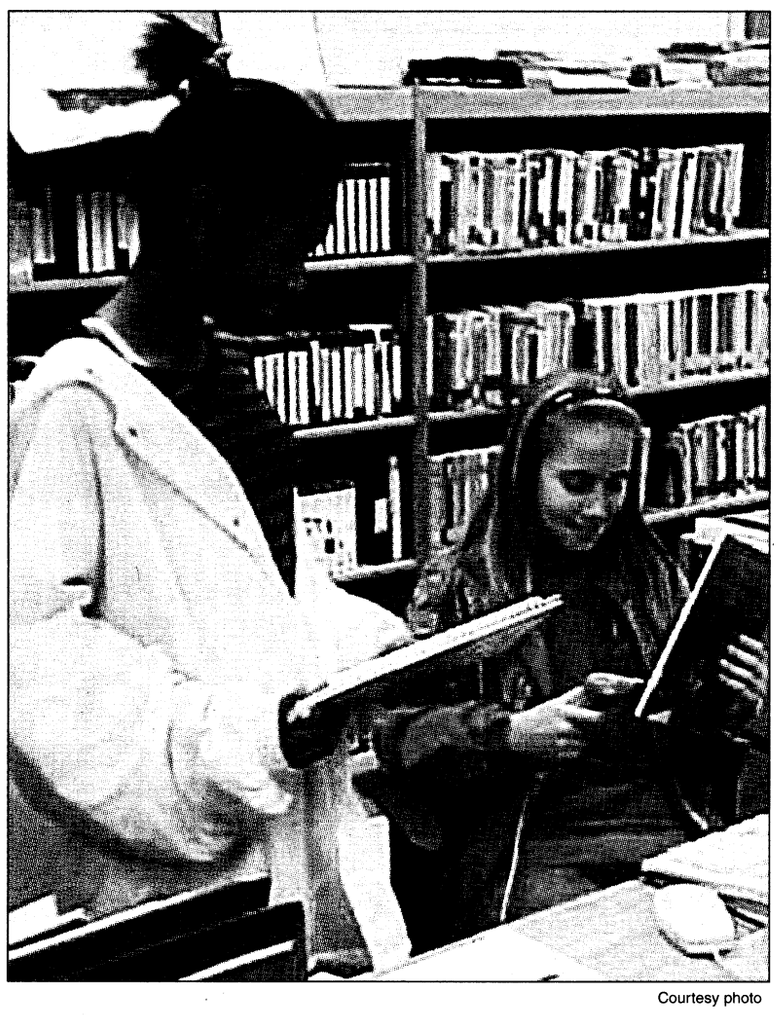
Can't find a book? Get help from fourth-grader Shawn Bennett. See a book in the wrong place on a library shelf? Fourth-grader Maneca Jackson will put it where it belongs.

These students are media assistants and can help you find what you need in the Wilson School media center.

Wilson School's Student Media Assistant program trains students in specialized library skills. Students report for duty before and after school to work with Cheryl Spann, library technician.

Spann has trained 15 fourth- and fifth-grade students in checking books in and out, shelving books correctly, and assisting fellow students in taking Accelerated Reader tests.

Students enjoy the program, even though it's a job that requires careful attention to detail.



Deontre Bennett said, "I like being a media assistant because I like putting up books in alphabetical order and helping people take Accelerated Reader tests."

This sentiment is echoed by Breona Lister, "I can help people and show them where books are so they won't be confused."

"I want to help the children with more than shelving books," Spann said. "I want to teach them good customer service skills, how to respect each other, and how to interact with other students in positive ways. I want to help them to develop a good work ethic at an early age."

It's obvious from student responses that Spann is successful. "We get to help people, and it's fun," said fourth-grader Sarah Davies.

"I like being a media assistant because I can do things for people," fourth-grader Jasmine Coverson said.

Kids take part in photography club

Wilson Elementary School staff

The newly formed Photography Club has students clicking as they take portraits, landscapes, candid shots, and still-life arrangements. "I like photo club because I enjoy learning how to take better pictures and different kinds of pictures," Rhiannon Pegan, fifth-grader, said. "I am looking forward to doing trick photography."

Digital cameras have been used by students for a number of years, but a darkroom was added to the media center during Wilson's recent renovation. Students will begin developing their own black and white photographs when classes resume in the building in January. Until that time, club members are learning the basics of photography including lighting, framing and composition.

Wilson school is moving

Wilson Elementary School staff

We're moving. The renovation of Wilson School is almost complete, and teachers have begun to move their classrooms back into the building.

While finishing touches are being completed, teachers are busy putting up bulletin boards, putting books on shelves, and straightening desks. The Wilson staff has pulled together to move back into the building for a smooth, efficient transition, which has allowed instruction to continue with a minimum of distraction.

Students and teachers alike are very excited about the move.

The renovated building will allow Internet accessibility from each classroom in the school. In addition, a darkroom, additional classrooms, and a kitchen designated for science experiments and cultural studies have been added.

Other improvements include remodeling of the main office, remodeled restroom facilities, and all new lighting in classrooms and hallways.

Visitors to the school will immediately notice the clean lines of new paneling in the hallways.

"Moving from the trailers back into the building has been a hard job; but I'm so proud of the students and teachers who have shown true Wilson spirit and gotten the job done," said Phyllis Parker, Wilson School principal.

Blended families experience unique, seemingly overwhelming challenges

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Rupel

Since 1975 half a million newly blended families are being created every year in the U.S., most as a result of a divorce. Just like any family, there are challenges facing blended ones. One couple who made a blended family made this observation, "Stepfamilies can be good families in which to raise children. They can be good families in which to find personal satisfaction and growth. They can be good families in which to develop close emotional adult relationships." (Visher & Visher in How to Win as a Stepfamily).

Raising children is no easy task, but for parents of a blended family the task can be overwhelming. At this point it is important to define what a blended family is. A blended family is one in which there is an adult couple in the home with at least one of the adults having a child by a previous marriage. In blended families you have people coming together with diverse histories, expectations and customs. All of this change can cause a great deal of confusion.

There are several myths surrounding blended families that I will briefly address here. These myths are discussed at length in a wonderful book written by Elizabeth Einstein and Linda Albert entitled, Strengthening Your Step Family. I highly recommend this book for parents in blended families.

Myth: Stepfamilies should work just like nuclear families.

Reality: The stepfamily is a different kind of family; it cannot operate in the standard traditional way.

Myth: Stepparents are cruel and insensitive.

Reality: Stepparents are human and will make mistakes just like any other parent. Just as there are good and bad parents there are good and bad stepparents.

Myth: A stepfamily is created instantly.

Reality: Becoming a stepfamily is a gradual, long-term process.

Myth: All stepfamily members should and will love one another.

Reality: It takes time to build caring relationships.

Myth: Stepfamilies formed after a death have fewer problems than those formed after a divorce.

Reality: All stepfamilies face difficulties and painful feelings.

Myth: Part-time stepfamilies have it easier than full-time stepfamilies.

Reality: When children live between two homes, both families experience great stress.

Simply put, false expectations that all blended families should end up like the Brady Bunch (sometimes they are more akin to the Ewings) almost always cause sadness and create their own set of problems. Quite often, these expectations can lead to another divorce.

If you are a parent in a blended family and experiencing seemingly overwhelming challenges, call the Family Life Center at 545-2050 or 545-7777 and ask to speak to me in seeking guidance for yourself and your family.

True gift of holidays is from God

Chaplain (Maj.) Jonathan C. Gibbs III
HHC, 1st Bn. 11th Inf. Regt. (CATD)

reflections

The holidays are upon us once again, and with them comes all the busyness that often robs us of the joy the season is supposed to contain. We get frustrated over shopping lists as we try to figure out the perfect gift for everyone. We wait in long cash register lines, knowing that in a few weeks we'll be standing in yet longer lines to return items we really don't need or want. We scramble to get the latest children's toy that is this year's "must-have" item, only to be disappointed with empty shelves. The struggle with packages and jostling crowds gives us little chance to delight in the wonder on our children's faces at the lights and decorations of the mall's "Winter Wonderland." We worry over how all the credit card charges will get paid. We feel tinges of guilt as we get into the spirit of the season by overindulging ourselves with one too many glasses of holiday cheer or one too many slices of pie. In the midst of the busyness of the holidays, how easy it is to forget about Christmas.

The Gospel writer Matthew reminds us that although we tend to complicate our lives unnecessarily at this time of year, the message of Christmas itself is really very simple. "She will bear a Son and you shall call His name Jesus, for it is He who will save His people from their sins."

Our real holiday need is not for more consumer items to briefly enjoy. Nor is it to be swept up in the short-lived feelings of nostalgia over the innocence of childhood dreams or the utopian fantasy of a world at peace with itself on man's terms. Rather, it is for the true peace of heart and of conscience that is promised as a free gift of God's grace to those who place their trust in the Eternal Son sent to be a Savior for the lost and needy sinners that we are.

We celebrate his birth best, not with things and excess, but with faith and humble adoration at the mystery of his incarnation.

Gridiron battle names post's top team

Field hospital's players too tough for artillerymen

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The old pigskin was flying high in the post flag football championships held Dec. 9 at Doughboy Stadium.

The 14th Field Hospital Nitty Lions went head-to-head with B Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Bravo Bulls for the opportunity to call themselves the best flag football team this side of the post.

The Nitty Lions, emerged victorious in an overtime win after a scoreless regular game.

"It was a very tough defensive game ... and it was definitely the hardest game we had played all season," said Joseph L. Williams, coach of the post champs, the Nitty Lions.

"We had a good defense. The game was an all out war," said Luis Gomez, kickoff and punt returner for the Bravo Bulls.

Plagued by penalties, both teams had a strong defense that kept the game scoreless during both halves sending the game to overtime.

"It could have gone either way during overtime," Williams said.

"After an impressive 8-yard catch by Clarence Joseph, Kenneth Petty scored on a two-yard drive on third down," Williams said.

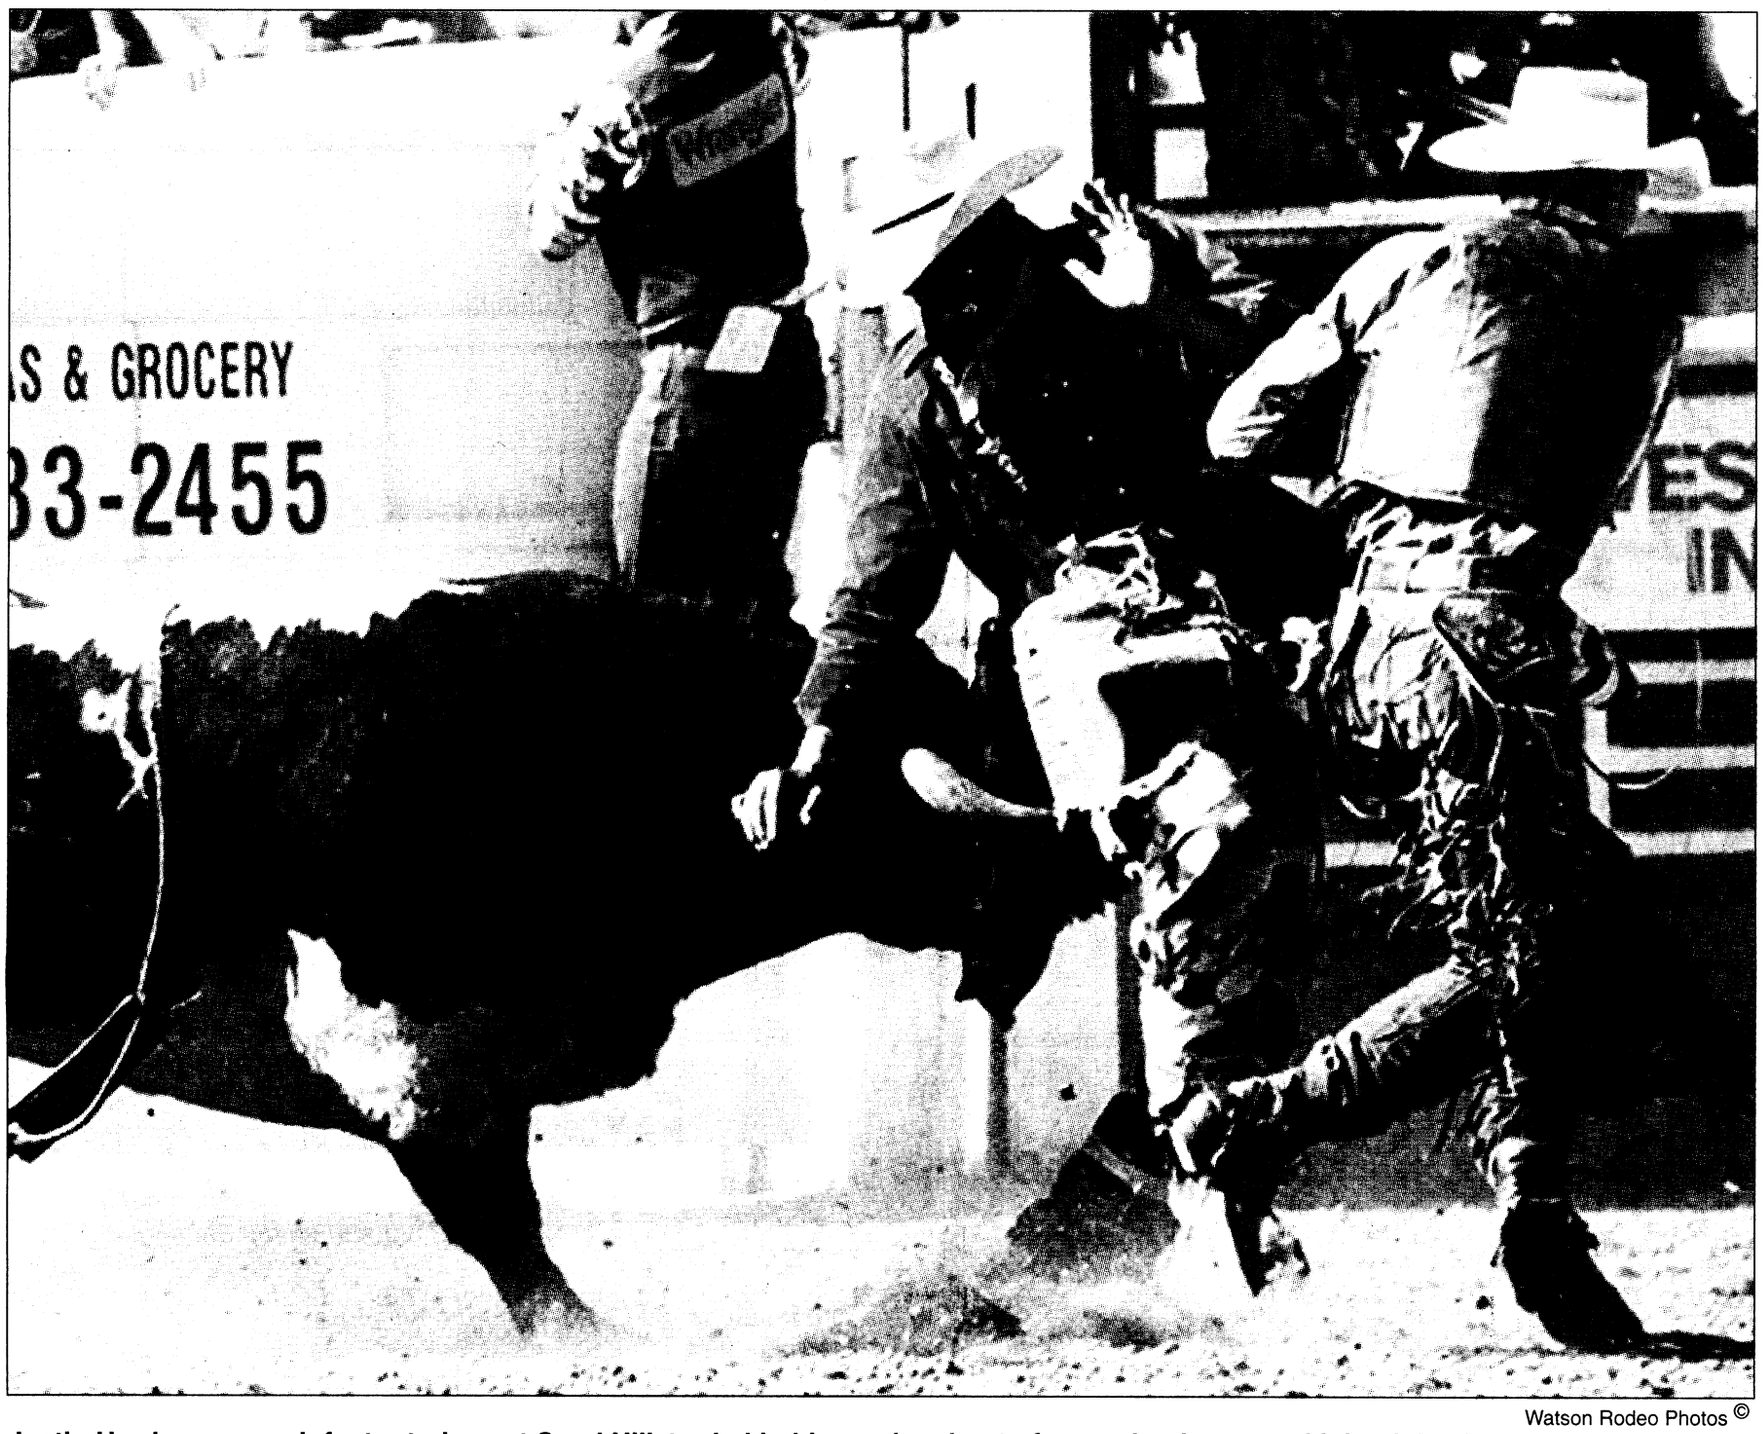
"We got the ball then and ran it twice. We got a clipping penalty and got sent back 10 yards. From the 15-yard line we threw a pass up the left side, but it was intercepted," said Gomez.

Since the interception was in overtime, the game was ended and the Nitty Lions emerged victorious with a final score of 6-0.

The Lions have shut out the last three games they have played, and they have allowed only one touchdown in the last four games.

Returning to the championship game for the second year in a row, but struggling with injuries to key offensive players, the Lions had to turn up the intensity of their defense, with a goal of making it to overtime.

"Because we have been in overtime before, we felt we had an advantage," Williams said.



Having made it to the playoffs for the last three consecutive years, the Bulls were no beginners to the 100-yard battle of the championships.

"They got the better of us. It was a very fair game, and the (referees) made good calls.

"Next year we will come on hard and strong," said Gomez.

Many Soldiers come to Sand Hill telling stories of their past lives, but this Soldier's story is ...

No bull

Justin Hawks, now an Infantry trainee at Sand Hill, traded in his cowboy boots for combat boots and joined the Army in November.

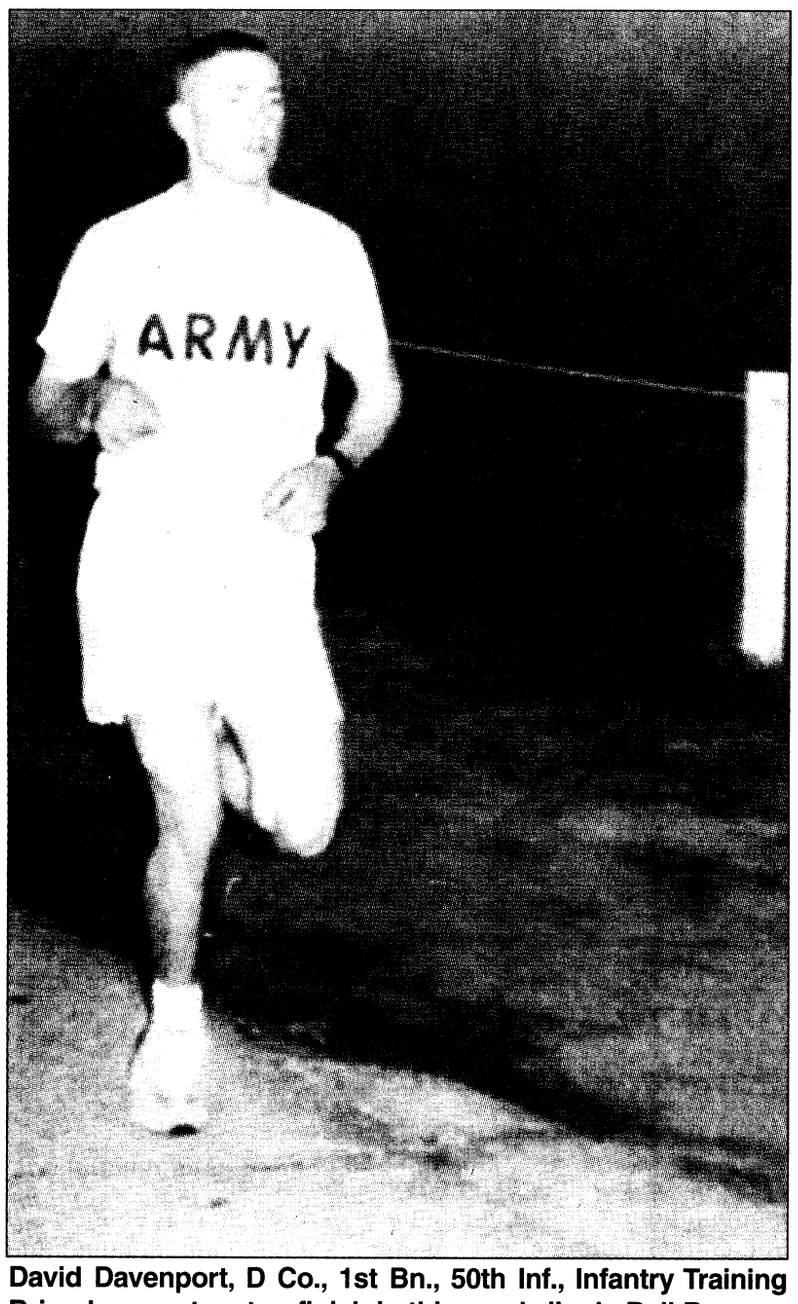
Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

A man steps into a dirt-filled arena dressed in a bright shirt and baggy knee-length shorts held up by suspenders. On the shorts are tied six different colored bandannas. He is wearing a pair of soccer shoes and socks that go all the way up to his knees. His face is painted like a clown's face. He sports a big red nose and a brightly colored wig.

As he walks around the arena, children laugh and point at him. He looks up to them, smiles and waves.

An announcer's voice comes over the public address system telling the spectators the next ride is sure to be an exciting one.

The cowboy straddles a bull in the bucking chute, wraps his rosin coated bull rope around his hand, slides forward and nods his head. The gate opens. The 1,800-pound, dust-covered bull lunges into the arena with the 170-pound cowboy holding on for dear life.



The bull leaps out with all its might. It settles into a tight circle that makes the crowd go wild. Three seconds tick by. A large bell, tied to the bull rope, clangs loudly as the bull bucks harder to get rid of the nuisance from his back.

The crowd rises to its feet to cheer on the cowboy who is making a near perfect ride.

Nearing the end of a long, eight seconds the bull begins to bellow. The crowd is roaring with encouragement, and the announcer is practically yelling into the microphone so it is no longer understandable. Dust is pouring off the bull from his recent role in the bull pen and from the dirt kicked up by the huge beast.

A loud buzzer sounds, marking the end of the eight-second ride. The cowboy reaches for the tail of his rope that once pulled, would free his hand

David Davenport, D Co., 1st Bn., 50th Inf., Infantry Training Brigade, runs to a top finish in this year's jingle Bell Run.

Trainees get a running start on holidays

3,200 Infantry students, cadre and family members gather for Jingle Bell Run

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

With the fog, early morning chill and holiday music blaring from loud speakers, the Christmas spirit was in the air at Sand Hill for the Infantry Training Brigade's Jingle Bell Run.

More than 3,200 runners took off for the 5K run whose proceeds benefit charity.

Trainees, cadre and family members purchased T-shirts decorated with the Grinch wearing a drill sergeant's hat to raise $2,500 for the Soldiers' Ministry Account at ITB.

Chaplain (Maj.) Ron Smith said the money would be used to purchase religious reading material for the Sand Hill Soldiers and to help support the monthly religious concerts.

The Jingle Bell Run's benefit was not only physical, Smith said.

"It was a good spiritual exercise. It was a good way to have fun, the run was relaxed and no one was yelling," he said.

It also helped put the Soldiers in the holiday spirit, said a trainee from Martinsville, Ind.

"This is the first little bit of Christmas I've had since I've been down here," said Bret Bellah, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry. "It makes me want more. I can't wait to get home." Bellah, along with the rest of his company, graduates today.

This run was a real morale booster, said Raul Munoz, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 30th AG Battalion.

Soldiers from Sand Hill's Infantry Training Brigade run to the finish of this year's 5K Jingle Bell Run.

"It was a fun run and a cohesive run all mixed in one," he said. "The cadences were holiday songs, like Jingle Bells.

"The Soldiers were talking about going home for the holidays and wishing each other Merry Christmas during the run," he said.

"We wanted to get the guys in the Christmas spirit before Exodus," said Rusty Schorsch, ITB commander.

"We were going to do PT anyway so this provided us an opportunity to have some fun too." Schorsch dressed as Santa Claus for the run.

The run was the brainchild of the ITB commander, command sergeant major and Drill Sergeant of the Year Martin Celestine.

"This run provided the Soldiers an opportunity to mix with the drill sergeants, the command and the rest of the cadre without being in a formation," Celestine said.

"We hear 'this is not the real Army' a lot. We wanted to show the Soldiers firsthand that the military is about teamwork. We work together, play together and we take care of each other."

The top five male and female finishers were given brigade coins.

The first place male was a trainee, David Davenport from D Co., 1st Bn., 50th Inf. The Houston, Texas, native finished in 16:25. Earlier this fall he came in first for the NCOA Fun Run that raised money for Santa's castle and NCOA.

The first place female was Debra Fix, 30th AG commander. Her time was 22:35.

from the tightly bound rope, but then it happens.

The bull, feeling the shifting weight in its back, immediately spins the opposite direction causing the cowboy to fall off the bull on the opposite side of his hand creating a bind that kept his hand in the rope.

He is hung up to an animal that wants nothing more than to rid itself of the man, and will do so violently.

All of a sudden a bright flash appears from nowhere and leaps onto the bull's back, and with one well-practiced motion pulls the tail of the rope, frees the cowboy's hand, slides off the bull's back and directly in front of the animal.

The bull charges the funny looking man and passes by as the man gracefully sidesteps the animal that could have hit him with the power of a freight train.

In the meantime the cowboy gets to his feet and runs to the safety of the fence.

"Wow! Did you see that bull fighter save that guy?" a child asks his mom.

The bull fighter jogs to the fence to see if the cowboy is OK.

He is thanked and then jogs back to the middle of the arena to protect the next bull rider.

The bull fighter is Justin Hawks, a private in C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Training Brigade.

Hawks, 31, has been fighting bulls for the last 10 years.

"I was at a rodeo when a bull fighter got hurt, so I stepped in, and I have been doing it ever since," Hawks said.

Before fighting bulls, Hawks competed in the saddle bronc competition in rodeos all across America, and gave up bronc riding about seven years ago to concentrate on bull fighting.

"I love bull fighting. I really get satisfaction out of the job when I make a good save and am then thanked by the cowboy. That is worth more than money," he said.

That selfless service taught Hawks about the values the Army is founded upon before joining the service.

Fighting bulls has helped Hawks in other aspects of his training as well.

"I was in great shape before I came in, and I was used to being sore," Hawks said.

Because of his physical condition, he said he is able to keep up with the rigorous Infantry training.

Although he said, there are times when he is still sore.

While Hawks said the pain is worth it, he noted like the Army, bull fighting is not all glory.

> "I love bull fighting. I really get satisfaction out of the job when I make a good save and am then thanked by the cowboy. That is worth more than money."
> — Justin Hawks
> Bull fighter, Infantry trainee

"I have been hurt some. I have had teeth knocked out, been knocked out cold, had concussions and several dislocations," he said. "Fortunately, I haven't broken anything yet."

Like military life, the rodeo way of life is a hard life to live.

Countless hours are spent on the road, traveling from coast to coast, and long periods of time are spent away from families.

"Last year I was on the road about a third of the year," he said earlier this week. "The rodeo has sent me traveling from Vancouver, British Columbia to Washington, D.C., and from Fargo to Houston."

But he said he turned all of that traveling down, because joining the Army has been a goal of Hawks for some time now.

"I felt (joining the Army) was the right thing to do," he said. "I have always wanted to serve my country and the Army was the way for me to do it."

After graduation, Hawks will return home to Montana where he will be attached to the 19th Special Forces National Guard unit in Draper, Utah.

Hawks is slated to graduate ITB Feb. 25. He said he will then attend Airborne school, and will return home to his wife and a son that is due in May.

"I am looking forward to being back with them," he said of his wife and his unborn son, "but this is a life-long goal I have had. I'll be home soon."

USED CARS TO BE SOLD AT

$95.00

Columbus, Ga

Due to overwhelming response & community demand and in time for the holiday season, Herschel Saxon, General Manager for Bill Heard Chevrolet's used car division has just announced plans for a IRS inventory reduction used car and truck Slasher Sale this Thursday thru Sunday with used cars and trucks starting at ninety-five dollars, and up. According to Saxon last weeks inventory reduction & Slasher Sale set all time records by selling over 50% of our used vehicle inventory in record time. Now, record sales from the after Thanksgiving Sale has resulted in an overload of trade-in and lease returns. In the last few months our sales have increased at a tremendous rate. We must reduce the number of cars and trucks in our used car inventory. During the ninety-five dollar sale every used car and truck will be sold for hundreds to thousands below the original price. "Our customers should find these prices to be lower than book value many cases". Here every car and truck is on sale. It's the perfect opportunity to get a good quality used car at the lowest price possible, including cars for only ninety-five dollars. All cars and trucks will be on display at Bill Heard Chevrolet 3615 Manchester Expressway at 9a.m. for pre-registration. Then all vehicles will be opened so that buyers may inspect the vehicles for one hour before the sale begins each day @ 10a.m. Whoever's name is listed first must be present when the prices are reduced on the windshield and will be given first opportunity to purchase the vehicles at the sale price. The innovative approach to selling used vehicles will make it easy and quick for anybody in the market for a good used car or truck at a very low price with no hassle. Used car trade-in buyers will be present to take trade-ins during this sale. We also have bank representatives who will help buyers arrange low-cost financing as low as 3.9% on select models. Our total inventory will be close to 400 used cars and trucks. We want to remind everybody that this is a one time sale only. When our inventory has been reduced, we will remove the sale prices and return to normal operations. Since we are a local business we would like to give back to the community, " We would rather allow the public to buy these vehicles during the holiday season than sell them to total stranger."

Call CHRIS MELTON OR JIM STALLINGS FOR IMMEDIATE CREDIT PRE-APPROVAL 706-322-8888 or 800-868-1585. Date: Thursday thru Sunday opens at 9a.m., Event starts at 10a.m to 9p.m.

For Pre-Approved Credit, enabling you to shop as a cash buyer, ask for Loan Officer Kevin Thompson or Jim Stallings his assistant.
