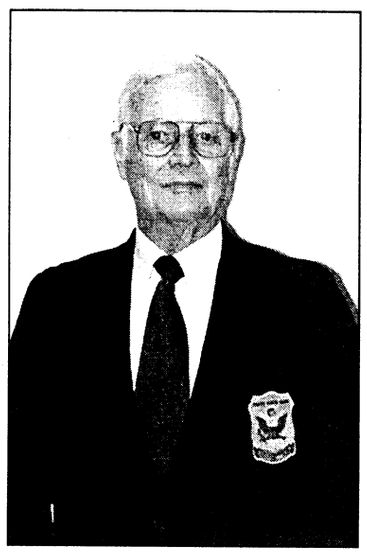
Bill Krilling will be a member of the Equipment Control Committee and Rifle Jury at the Games in Sydney, Australia, in September 2000.

He has been a member of the International Shooting Sport Federation Rifle Committee since 1981, an Olympic Jury Member in 1984, 1988, 1992 and 1996, a World Team Jury Member in 1986, 1990, 1994 and 1998, and a Jury Member for eight World Cups and three World Cup Finals. Krilling was the U.S. Olympic Committee Shooting Coach of the Year and one of the finalists in the USOC National Coach of the Year Competition last year.

"You get known around the world when you officiate at the World Championships, Pan Am Games and World Cups," Krilling said. "I must be doing a good job if they keep voting me back in."

As part of the Equipment Control Committee, Krilling will check each shooter's equipment and clothing at the Olympics to ensure they meet regulations, and as a Rifle Jury member, he will check shooters to make sure their positions are legal. During the competition, he will see that all regulations are being followed according to the rules.



A retired master sergeant and highly decorated war veteran, Krilling is also a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Hall of Fame.

The Buffalo Lake, Minn., native joined the Army in 1946 and attended Basic Training at Fort Knox, Ky. He served in the 1st Arctic Test Detachment at Fort Churchill, Canada, from 1947 to 1949 then attended Communications School at Fort Belvoir, Va., where he started shooting with the post team.

In 1950, he took part in the nuclear detonation test at Eniwetok Atoll. He then returned to Fort Belvoir as a communications instructor and continued to shoot on the post team and with the U.S. National Team.

Shooting for the Military District of Washington, he competed in the 1952 National Championships at Fort Benning. He was sent to Korea and became one of the Army's youngest master sergeants at the age of 25. In 1953, he again returned to Fort Belvoir as a weapons instructor, shot on the post team and made the All-Army Team in 1954.

In 1955, he was assigned to Germany and served in Ethiopia with the Military Advisor Group in 1957. In 1958, he became a member of the U.S. Army Europe Rifle Team and made the All-Army Team; he was also on the record breaking national championship service rifle team and won the title of the World's Best Shooter at the Conseil International du Sport Militaire — the World Military Olympics known as CISM.

Krilling

In 1959, he was assigned as a shooter and instructor at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit; there he won a team Gold Medal and individual Silver Medal at the 1963 Pan American Games and won an individual Bronze Medal and a team Gold Medal at the 1966 World Shooting Championships. In 1967, he served a combat tour in Vietnam as an advisor to a Vietnamese Infantry battalion.

In 1968, he returned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit as a shooter, instructor and coach. He served in the Army 24 years and retired in 1971. From 1971 to 1973, he trained SWAT teams with the National Sheriffs Association and coached the Mexican National Shooting Team.

Krilling again joined the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in May 1973 as the coach of the International Rifle Team. He has also acted as the U.S. National Team coach from 1981 to 1986 and has served in several different capacities for both the U.S. Team and the International Shooting Union.

A decorated war veteran, Krilling received the Distinguished Service Cross, a Bronze Star and the Purple Heart for his heroism during the Korean War, and was awarded the Vietnamese Gallantry Cross with silver star and Bronze Star for his actions during the Vietnam War.

Krilling, who has been shooting since 1952, has won six national championship titles. He set a national record firing a perfect score of 3,200 points on the National Rifle Association outdoor prone course of fire, which had been in existence for 50 years before a perfect score was ever fired. He won four Gold Medals, one Silver Medal and two Bronze Medals in international competitions and was a member of two world-record setting teams.

Ten-miler, AUSA host shirt contest

Association of the U.S. Army

The Army 10-Miler, presented by the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA), is conducting a T-shirt design contest for the 1999 race.

Any person, age 12 or over, is invited to enter artwork design(s) for the race's official T-shirt. Designs will be judged by an official Army Ten-Miler committee and the winning entry will receive $1,000, and the winning design will be printed on all 1999 Army 10-Miler runner and volunteer T-shirts.

The deadline for entry is June 15, 1999.

Submit design entries to: Army 10-Miler T-shirt Design Contest, 103 Third Ave., Building 48, Fort McNair, DC 20319-5058.

Each entry must include the artist's name, address and daytime phone number.

The Army 10-Miler is America's largest 10-mile race, attracting over 15,000 civilian and military runners from around the world. Known for its esprit de corps, runner support and scenic course, the race is recognized as one of the top 100 races in America.

Produced by the U.S. Army Military District of Washington, the 15th running of the Army 10-Miler Oct. 10 will start and end at the Pentagon.

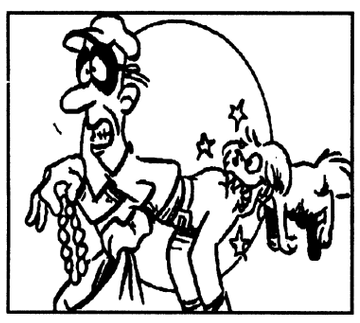
The T-shirt contest is open to persons ages 12 and over, except for employees of the Army 10-Miler, the U.S. Army Military District of Washington Command Group, the MDW Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, the Association of the U.S. Army and their immediate families.

Designs will be judged by a committee made up of representatives of the Army 10-Miler staff, the U.S. Army, sponsors and runners.

Designs should measure 12 inches x 12 inches and may include up to six colors.

Designs must be in one of the following mediums: color markers, paint, color pencils, ink or computer graphic in an EPS file format with specified fonts. Clip art is not allowed.

Designs should include, but are not limited to, one or more of the following elements: national capital landmarks and monuments, patriotic themes, running, the Army.



Designs must include the race title "15th Annual Army 10-Miler Presented by AUSA" and the race date and location: October 10, 1999, Washington, D.C. The phrase "Army 10-Miler" should be at least two inches high.

Designs must be submitted on unlined white paper or illustration board. Color copies of original designs will be accepted. All designs must be original.

Entry deadline is June 15. Entries postmarked on June 15 will be accepted. Submit design entries to: Army 10-Miler, 103 Third Ave., Building 48, Fort McNair, DC 20319-5058.

OCs run through final weekend

OC Joseph Dzvonik
Officer Candidate School

During their last weekend as Officer Candidates, 22 officer candidates (OCs) traveled to Dahlonega, Ga., to participate in the 5th Ranger Training Battalion 15 K Mountain Ranger Run. OCS comprised four of the eight total teams participating in the event and OCS Team A placed third overall.

The OCs prepared for this event for nearly half the cycle by conducting special physical training each morning. Many mornings OCs found themselves running up and down "Big Cardiac Hill" eight times or running seven to 10 miles.

"I was pleased by the overall performance of our teams," said OC Kent Solheim. "Many of the candidates improved greatly due to our training every morning and that is really what this was about."

Many of the OCs stayed around to enjoy the Open House events that showcased what happens during the 5th RTBn's Mountain Phase.

Organizers slate ten-miler

Sgt. 1st Class Connie Dickey
Army News Services

The 15th Annual Army 10-Miler — America's largest 10-mile race for nine consecutive years —will be run at 8 a.m., Oct. 10, at the Pentagon where the start and finish lines will be established.

AUSA and Army officials recently signed an agreement making the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA) the race's presenting sponsor.

"AUSA has been a partner with the Army in running this race since 1986, when 1,806 runners and 85 teams participated in this great Army athletic competition," said retired Lt. Gen. Tom Rhame, the Association's vice president for membership and meetings.

"With AUSA, the Army's professional association, as the presenting sponsor," said Paul Banta, the race's coordinator, "We will make this great race even better for the Soldier and civilian runners who come from around the world to participate in this premier Army athletic event," he added.

Rated as one of the top 100 races in the country by Runner's World magazine, the Army 10-Miler will be held the day before the opening of the AUSA's 45th Annual Meeting Oct. 11-13 at the Washington Marriott Wardman Park Hotel and the Omni Shoreham Hotel.

More than 14,000 runners participated in the 1998 race, with a record-breaking 11,471 crossing the finish line. There were 626 teams, breaking another race record.

This year, "race officials have set a 16,000-runner cap on the race," said Jim Vandak, assistant race coordinator. "This will allow the runners to finish the race in the time allotted for the course to be open."

Officials are planning to use the same race course as last year with only slight modifications to accommodate construction sites in the District of Columbia.

Runners will cross the Arlington Memorial Bridge into Washington, pass by the Lincoln, Korean War, Roosevelt and Jefferson Memorials, the State Department, Kennedy Center, Smithsonian Institution, the Capitol, Washington Monument, Bureau of Printing and Engraving and then return to the Pentagon and the finish line.

Banta said that to provide a smoother start with the expected number of runners, officials are planning a split start, using all lanes of Route 27.

Following the 1998 race, a representative sampling of runners was surveyed and the overwhelming majority recommended that the race use ChampionChip scoring technology at the finish line.

Banta said, "We listened to our runners after last year's race, and this year, each participant will have a chip affixed to his or her shoe, bar coded for that runner. When the runner crosses the finish line, antennae embedded in mats read the chip, transmitting the time and the runner's identification to the computer. This system can process 1,000 runners a minute and will eliminate congestion at the finish."

The Army 10-Miler web site is located at: www.armytenmiler.com.

There is a $25 registration fee that must be submitted or postmarked by Sept. 18 for all runners.

A team will consist of no more than eight and no less than four runners. A team's time will be based on the combined average of the tea"s best four running times.

For information, write to: Army 10-Miler, 103 Third Ave., Building 48, Fort McNair, Washington, DC 20319-5058.

More Families Choose Resorts To Feel At Home Away From Home

(NAPSA)-By getting not only the comforts of a hotel, but also the convenience of home, more and more families are choosing condominium resorts for vacations.

Condominiums can be a home away from home with spacious living areas, separate bedrooms, private balconies and fully-equipped kitchens for preparing snacks or meals anytime. Daily maid service is often included.

Many people look for places with warm atmospheres, as well as temperatures.

One place that's blooming in popularity for resorts is Hawaii with its blue waters, aromatic flowers and relaxed atmosphere.

The average length of stay in Hawaii was 8.63 days in 1998, a nearly three percent increase from the year before.

While the number of people who plan to stay in condos dropped 2.7 percent, to 1,355,140 people in 1998 from 1,393,260 the year before, many people are becoming condo converts.

Hawaii's leader in condominium resort vacations is Aston Hotels & Resorts. Aston has five condominium resorts on Oahu, eight on Maui, three on the Big Island and four on Kauai, for a total of 20 condominium properties to choose from.

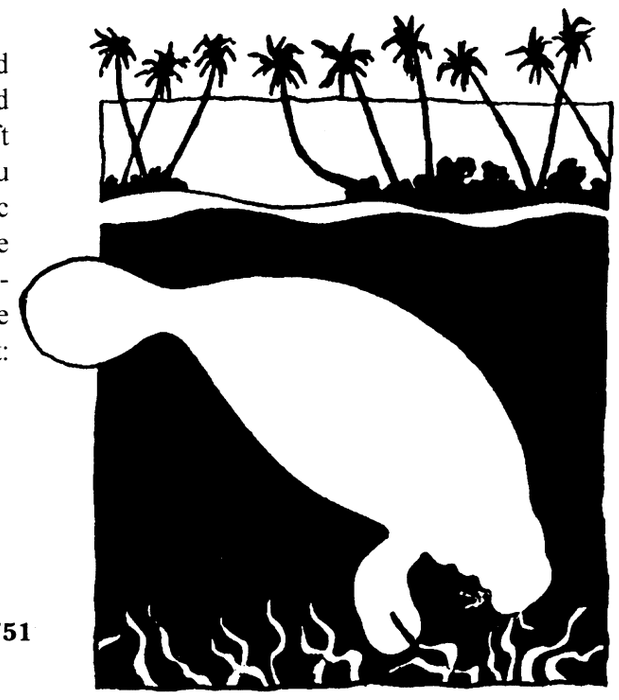
Most suites feature separate bedrooms, balconies, kitchens, washers and dryers and a host of recreational facilities such as free tennis, swimming pools and jet spas.

Many people want the comforts of home, with the luxuries of a hotel, while on vacation. They are turning to condominium resorts in such exotic places as Hawaii.

With world-famous beaches and championship golf courses just steps away from most Aston condominium resorts, guests can enjoy many of their favorite leisure activities. In addition, all resorts are near shopping areas and popular visitor attractions.

Several Aston condominium resorts have repeatedly received the American Automobile Association's prestigious Diamond Awards for their spacious accommodations and extra amenities.

Aston is also known as being "kid friendly." All guests, age 17 and under, who use existing bedding stay at no additional charge to their guest party. This is valid at most Hawaii properties.



Camp Kaanapali is offered year-round for youngsters, Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m., at Aston Kaanapali Shores on Maui. Supervised activities include educational nature walks, Hawaiian crafts, storytelling and hula lessons. An initial one-time registration cost of $10 includes a camp T-shirt and keiki (child) button. Morning and afternoon sessions are available at $5 per day (limit of six hours per week per child). Optional lunch is $5 per day. Children of registered guests who are 5 to 10 years old may participate.

More information about Aston, which has been in business for more than 50 years, is available by visiting the Web site at http://www.aston-hotels.com or by calling (800) 92-ASTON (800-922-7866). Aston's TDD telephone number is (800) 441-2344.

Technology Tips

(NAPSA)-Watch out for the "new-technology" money trap! Purchasing a "pizza-sized" satellite dish might be of real benefit for television fans who are beyond the reach of cable or broadcast signals. But be careful. It will cost you. Because the technology is improving so rapidly, buying today can mean buying again tomorrow. Just think of the 8-track tape players, Beta VCR's and CB radios gathering dust in garages nationwide!

First, today's satellite systems aren't compatible. That means certain programming packages only come with certain dishes. For instance, you can't buy the big sports package offered with one dish and combine it with the low-priced entertainment package offered with a different dish. Second, the equipment keeps changing. New satellite boxes are already on the market that offer more and better features than the ones sold last year. And cable systems are starting to offer "digital" service all over the country, and they take the technology risk, not you. So, before you spend a lot of money, you might want to wait for the marketing "wars" to end to see which technology is the "winner."

NWFA Offers Cleaning Tips For Wood Flooring

(NAPSA)-One of the most important, yet often overlooked, features of the home to include on every cleaning checklist is flooring-especially wood flooring. These quick tips from the National Wood Flooring Association should help homeowners maintain the beauty of wood floors for generations to come.

- Be sure to sweep floors at least once a week with a soft bristle broom or vacuum to remove surface dust and dirt.
- Never wet-mop a wood floor due to the damage and discoloration that standing water can cause.
- Place doormats at all entrances to capture much of the harmful dirt before it reaches the hardwood floor. Shake out, wash or vacuum mats frequently.
- Always know the type of finish on the wood floor and follow the manufacturer's recommendations for proper care and cleaning.
- Place floor protector pads, soft felt or some other protective material on the bottoms of furniture legs or fixture contact points.

The NWFA also offers wood flooring information through its consumer hotline (500) 443-WOOD. For 25 cents a minute, a wood flooring expert can address any aspect of maintaining, refinishing and installing wood floors, as well as furnish a list of member professionals in your area. On-line users can view the NWFA's World Wide Web home page featuring the latest information on wood flooring. The Web address is www.woodfloors.org.

Memorial Day

Post pays tribute during ceremonies

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Servicemembers and their families paid tribute to those who gave their lives in support of the country during a Memorial Day ceremony held at the post cemetery May 28.

Post Commanding General Maj. General Carl F. Ernst and Infantry Center Staff Chaplain Col. William J. De Leo addressed the Soldiers and family members who gathered to pay respect to those who served before them and paid the ultimate price.

"We stand here in the acknowledgment of the sacrifices others have made on our behalf," De Leo said during the invocation. "Today we acknowledge our debt to those patriots, both men and women of courage and valor, who have walked before us."

"May we never forget their ultimate sacrifices as we pledge ourselves to remember those who rest here," he added.

More than 1.1 million Americans made the ultimate sacrifice, Ernst said emphasizing the importance of remembering those fallen Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines not only on Memorial Day but every day.

"This is a day when we recognize the sacrifices of those who gave their lives so that this nation could be born and remain free," Ernst said. "Memorial Day is a time for Americans to reconnect with their history and the core values of our nation by honoring those who gave their lives so the idea and embodiment of our Constitution might be forever."

Concerns about body-building supplement rise

Capt. Danny McMillian
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

Among the most frequently asked questions instructors from the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) hear while conducting the Master Fitness Trainer Course is "Does creatine work?" Creatine is the star of the body-building supplements industry. Increasingly, Soldiers are taking the product to gain weight and perform better.

"This is a hot issue now, with concern by everyone from the Commanding General to the Soldiers who are considering taking the supplement," said Col. Steven Cellucci, USAPFS commandant.

Creatine is a naturally occurring, energy-producing substance made by the body from amino acids. Creatine is also consumed in the diet from animal sources. In muscle, creatine serves to replenish energy-producing molecules, though it too is soon depleted with continuous, intense exercise.

Creatine supplementation can maximize the body's ability to store creatine. Of concern, though, is the correct dosage and quality of the product.

Just as with medicine, more is not always better and could be harmful. A medical journal recently reported a case of kidney failure in a young male who took a loading dosage of creatine (normally about 20g for four to five days) for an entire month. Though no direct cause was established, eyebrows were raised. Of additional concern is the fact that nutritional supplements are not federally regulated and can vary in content among brands, leaving the buyer to beware.

Creatine has two primary short-term effects. First, body mass normally increases. Initially, this is thought to be related to the fact that creatine promotes water retention in muscle cells. With sustained use, body mass increases may be related to increased muscle mass. Second, increases are normally seen in

BCTB welcomes 2-47 during ceremony

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Basic Combat Training Brigade (BCTB) welcomed another battalion to Sand Hill during an activation ceremony Wednesday.

The 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, will join the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment and the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, in training Soldiers from more than 160 MOSs.

Lt. Col. Mike Burns took command of the battalion, which will begin training within two weeks. Prior to his assignment to the BCTB, Burns served in many capacities including the Regimental S-3 of the 3rd Battalion, 9th Infantry Regiment, Fort Ord, Calif., commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 9th Infantry Regiment, where he participated in Operation "Just Cause" in Panama.

After serving in Panama, Burns traveled to Fort Benning where he instructed at the Infantry Officer Basic Course. Burns has also served in Hawaii prior to returning to Fort Benning to assume command.

More than 50 Soldiers were assigned to the battalion to serve as cadre and train 2,400 initial entry Soldiers during the remainder of 1999.

At full capacity, the BCTB will increase the number of Soldiers going through initial training at Fort Benning by about 5, 500 this year.

Up and running

Sgt. Maurice Houssel, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507 Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, is hoisted up one of the 250-foot jump towers Wednesday.

The towers, which were dormant for nearly three years, recently reopened for use as part of the Airborne training program.

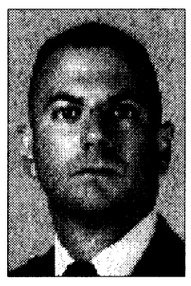
Uniform regulation needs fine tuning

Master Sgt. Larry Lane
Bayonet Correspondent

My boots are not so "highly shined" that the Military Police can use them at the checkpoints to inspect the undercarriage of vehicles. My uniform is not starched so heavily and pressed so hard that my trousers can stand in formation for me.

commentary



I'm no slacker, no "rag bag." I make the standard, but I'll never make the recruiting poster and that's okay with me. Anyway, I think the celebrity status would go to my head.

I've never understood the rationale of taking a Battle Dress Uniform and trying to turn it into something a palace guard should wear. I own two suits – one green and one gray – and that's enough for me. If I can avoid wearing either of them, I'm happy.

I like going to the field, where the mud is earned honestly and no one questions a concertina wire hole in a uniform, no one to say, "Hey, Soldier, that uniform is unserviceable."

I would rather have my boots covered in frozen mud, slushing through a Bosnian cornfield, than become a victim to the "uniform and fashion police," those senior Soldiers who hang outside gyms and classrooms waiting to share their knowledge on how to wear the uniform.

The uniform cops are extremely important because they keep us all in check by helping the Soldiers "project a military image that leaves no doubt that they live by a common military standard and are responsible to military order and discipline," as reads AR 670-1 Wear and Appearance of Army Uniforms and Insignia. The uniform cop has a tough job and not everyone is cut out for this duty.

As an added check and balance, the uniform cops are in constant competition with the "new troop on the block," that Soldier who will stretch and push the regulation as far as one can.

That new troop will try different haircuts, sunglasses, fingernail polish color and just about anything to assert his or her freedom. The uniform cop and the new troop have an aged and honored relationship which only serves to better the regulation through stress-testing the details.

Despite what some think, the uniform regulation has plenty of loop holes and areas so nonspecific that local regulations have to be published to outline where and when we may wear our uniform. Wearing identification tags during physical training makes sense and one would think the regulation would cover that, but it doesn't.

I have been told it is against the regulation to shave one's head bald, but I've never been able to find a mention of this in the regulation. I'm already half bald, why not finish the job?

What is considered an extreme or faddish hair style? A "high and tight" may seem okay on Fort Benning but extreme or faddish in a Pentagon office.

Some say a high and tight is extreme for a woman, but I haven't found an entry that addresses how short a woman's hair can be, only how long. (Disclaimer: female Soldiers do not use this as authority to shave your heads.)

I'm still waiting for someone to determine a proper length of fingernails for male and female Soldiers other than "not to interfere with performance of duty, detract from the military image or present a safety hazard."

. A master sergeant gave me good advice by saying if there is any question on hair or fingernail length, have the Soldier don and clear his protective mask. Another option is to have a Soldier perform immediate action on a weapon.

The best thing about any Army regulation these days is that it can be found on the Internet, hence, updated easily without the need to hold up changes waiting for a paper copy of the publication. If the highest level of the uniform cops can decide on a fingernail length today, the change can be incorporated immediately.

The electronic version of the AR 670-1 is also searchable, so you can type in a subject and quickly pull up the reference. For those with an office internet connection, the address is: http//books.army.mil/cgi-bin/bookmgr/BOOKS/R670_1/CCONTENTS.

Soldiers often say "it's how you interpret the reg," which is a signal for me that this regulation still needs some fine-tuning. However, there is assistance at the Pentagon to help with interpretation. Master Sgt. Debra Wylie is the Uniform Policy Officer for the Human Resources Directorate, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. You can either call DSN 225-6361 or e-mail her at Wyliede@hqda.army.mil.

I'm not asking for more restrictions, just more guidance. If I'm given the authority to be a uniform cop and give "on the spot" corrections, I need the "ammo," the words with an authority attached.

One final plug: if you think you are the shining example of how to wear the Army uniform, Soldiers magazine is still searching for a male and female candidate for its annual poster.

If you make the cut, you'll be the Soldier posted on barracks walls throughout the Army for the next year. If you want more information, contact Staff Sgt. John Valceanu at DSN 656-4504 or e-mail him at soldiers@belvoir.army.mil.

Military spouses hold toughest tasks in service

Spc. Casondra Brewster
MDW News Service

Walk on any military installation and you're bound to see a woman proudly wearing a shirt embossed with the words: "Army (or insert your service here) Wife, the toughest job in the Army."

commentary

I agree. I could have worn that shirt in the not-too-distant past. I spent many moons alone while my husband served overseas. I paid the high telephone bills and gave myself a writer blister composing the hundreds of letters and handled every crisis family life offers — hospital runs with the kids, the washing machine and car that break down on the same day or the vicious cycle of making ends meet on a junior Soldier's pay — with little or no support from anyone else.

However, today, my husband and I have reversed roles. I am on active duty, and he now has the hardest job — "Army Husband."

I am not knocking military wives, but you do have it a little easier. You have thousands of counterparts to relate to no matter where your travels take you. Attend the many and wonderful family support networks offered on your military installation, such as the Soldier and Family Support Center here on Fort Belvoir, and you'll find groups of wives sharing war stories about their lives as they are affected by their husbands' careers. To find a male spouse among these groups is rare.

Granted, in both military and civilian communities, the number of "stay-at-home dads" is increasing. However, they are still a minority.

To his credit, he held his own and talked with the participating moms about sibling interaction, child development and the ups and downs of toilet training. Yet, it was obvious from the look on his face that he was feeling a little shy and unsure because he was "the man in no-man's land."

And to the group's credit, the members welcomed him with friendly and nonjudgmental arms and even gave him a compliment or two on being a "Mr. Mom."

Now when we decided to do this job reversal (and let me tell you, being a stay-at-home parent is truly a job), our family and friends had some doubts about the "social ramifications" that our lifestyle might create for us. I recall my father, who now is a staunch supporter of our decision, asking if my spouse had considered the flak he might get from more traditional and conservative circles for his newly acquired role. I remember a friend asking if that was going to diminish my son's view of his father for not being the main bread winner.

If anything, we've grown stronger as a family, and my son and daughter now see that life is not divided between men's work and women's work. Mom can wear BDUs and wash dishes while Dad can change a diaper and fix the car.

All Soldiers need to seriously realize and consider all the things our spouses — male or female — do so we can "be all we can be."

However, we really need to go beyond just one day. We need to be constantly aware — daily, and make note of it. Most importantly we need to verbalize that awareness to our spouses.

This doesn't mean we need to lavish them with expensive gifts (although I know of this sweet Gibson Les Paul guitar a certain spouse would love to receive), but an unexpected "thank you," a small sweet kiss, or a good bear hug goes miles and miles.

Take time to thank your spouse, who truly has the toughest job in the military.

I would hasten to add that commanders and NCOs should perhaps take some time to thank their Soldiers' spouses. I know my boots would never be polished correctly without the ever-vigilant eye of my husband, who, notably, is right 98.2 percent of the time.

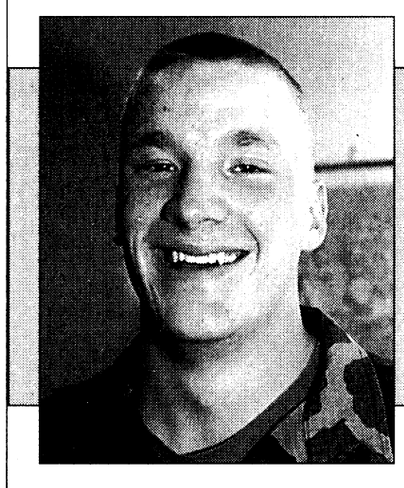
Patient thankful for generosity

I just wanted to send out a personal "thank you" to not one or two, but three of Martin Army Community Hospital personnel who saved my bacon a few weeks ago.

First, I had to swallow my pride for having left my keys in the ignition of my running car. I used to laugh at people who did such a thing.

I spoke with Shirley West, a very patient, knowledgeable young lady at the information desk. She called engineering and managed to get a message to Mr. Pinn, who came to my rescue by getting me into my car — refusing a tip and stating it only took a second to help me and that it was a pleasure to be of service.

It wasn't until after he left that I realized my battery was dead. After speaking to several persons (in fact I even tried yelling with a hoarse throat about jumper cables which I could not find in my car), a gentleman came over and told me, "I'm parked all the way over there. I have to get my truck, so don't move, don't go anywhere, stay right there." Of course, he was joking since it was obvious that my car was not about to start. Bill Blakely, Chief Safety Manager, even set the cables for me. My car started right away, allowing me to drive home. Oh yeah, he also would not accept money from me for his time and work.



Being in the disabled parking lot, I didn't expect much. Yet, the lord blessed me with three of Fort Benning's finest. They all possessed plenty of knowledge, friendliness and an apparent joy of going the extra mile to help someone.

Organization honors Fort Benning employee

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

One of Fort Benning's own was among seven women honored May 26 at the Columbus Country Club for their outstanding accomplishments and contributions to the community.

Family Advocacy Program (FAP) Manager Rebecca Welch was selected by the Soroptimist International of Columbus, Georgia, Inc. to be the recipient of the Woman of Distinction Award for 1999 in Human Rights and Status of Women.

The organization, which is the world's largest service organization for executive and professional women, takes time each year to recognize women from throughout the tri-community who demonstrated exemplary character and integrity and made significant contributions within the community for at least 10 years.

The news of the award came as a surprise for Welch who said she didn't find out she was chosen until a week before the ceremony. She said it was overwhelming when it finally hit her.

"I am honored to be the recipient of the award this year because there are so many deserving people out there who really work to help others," Welch said. "I'm floating on cloud nine and still can't believe it because when you look at Phenix City, Russell County, Fort Benning and all of Columbus ... to be the one to get the award — I'm just shocked to realize a group of this magnitude would have selected me."

A native of Greenville, Ala., Welch has been working with the Fort Benning FAP for 11 years. Her job as FAP manager has her overseeing a post-wide child and spouse abuse prevention program. It also means she is responsible for all FAP training and programs.

For Welch, the award follows years of working to help prevent domestic violence. After her arrival at Fort Benning and the establishment of a post prevention program, she quickly saw a need for prevention services in the surrounding communities. Since then, she has brought together key community representatives to work on abuse issues, helped develop a child advocacy center in Columbus and was a key element in the organization of a child abuse training conference that became a yearly event.

Fort Benning School's Superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen works closely with Welch and said she was delighted to find out about the award.

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Fort Benning Family Advocacy Program Manager Rebecca Welch poses with the plaque she received during the May 26 awards ceremony.

She went on to say that Welch is a wonderful advocate for families and is most deserving of the recognition.

"In the schools we can always count on Miss Welch to do everything possible to support programs for children whether it's providing child abuse training, drug education classes or free materials for parents, teachers and counselors."

Welch explained that the dedication she has to her job comes from the joy she experiences from helping people. She added that nothing feels better than knowing you made a difference in someone's life, whether that be a child or a parent.

"I take great pride in my work," Welch said. "When I look at children I think of them as one of the greatest gifts anyone could ever receive and I deal with abuse cases as if that child could have been mine. You have to really care about human life to do this job. The rewards come when a spouse or child says thank you and is able to start a new life without violence being involved."

Memorial:

After addressing the assembly of military personnel and family members, Ernst and De Leo placed a wreath on the grave of the Unknown Soldier honoring all of the unnamed Soldiers who have fallen in battle.

"All of these casualties were loved. They had hopes and joys, and they had aspirations," Ernst said. "They had friends, buddies and families. Each was a loss to their families, their communities, their units and the nation."

"We'll never know what they could have done if they lived out their lives," he added. "We will only know that because they gave their lives our nation lives."

Fallen Soldiers and other servicemembers mortally wounded in action were honored on post throughout the three-day weekend with ceremonies wrapping up Monday at the Infantry Training Brigade where more than 1,400 Soldiers participated in a ceremony outside of the brigade's headquarters.

In addition to the ITB Soldiers, veterans from World War II, the Korean War and Vietnam as well as three former Prisoners of War participated in the ceremony.

Creatine: Studies being conducted strength, power, single and repetitive sprints and work performed during multiple high-intensity efforts.

For example, repeated sets of resistance training exercises would probably be enhanced by creatine. However, endurance activities would not be expected to improve with creatine supplementation since they are using an energy pathway that does not rely on creatine for performance. Many Soldiers have reported decreased performance on distance runs, which they felt was due to the extra body weight brought on by creatine.

There are currently no direct cause-and-effect relationships between creatine use and negative side effects. Among concerns, however, is the worry that creatine supplementation could adversely affect performance during sustained operations in a hot, humid environment since more of a given level of body water could be in the muscle cells rather than circulating where it can be used for body cooling.

Dr. Phillip Holmes, a Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) physician who is conducting on-going research to determine if creatine supplementation increases risk of heat injury, thought there may be a correlation.

"There very well could be an increased risk for heat injuries, with some individuals more susceptible than others," he said.

According to Dr. Karen Kerle, director of Clinical Research at MACH, "We just have to wait for the results of studies like Dr. Holmes' and others being conducted on Soldiers before we can clearly state the risk."

Kerle advised to increase water consumption while taking creatine, especially during the loading phase.

Results from two of the studies should be available by the end of the year.

"Bottom line: we at the USAPFS don't recommend creatine use for Soldiers. This is especially true for endurance-related activities (example: road marches or other continuous operations) in hot weather," Cellucci said. "However, if you choose to use creatine, be sure to take the following measure as a minimum: notify your chain of command of your usage, ensure adequate hydration (see fluid replacement guidelines for warm weather training per USAIC REG 40-14), do not exceed recommended dosages (20g daily for four to five days followed by 5g daily maintenance dosage) and last but not least, reevaluate your reasons for taking supplements in the first place."

HCFA offers special enrollment period for dual eligibles

Health Care Financing Administration

The Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) is offering a special enrollment period for Medicare Part B, to persons under age 65 who are both TRICARE-eligible and Medicare-eligible because of disability, but who have not yet enrolled in Medicare Part B.

If you're eligible, you may enroll at any time during May, June and July. Your Medicare Part B coverage will begin July 1.

The Part B premium for 1999 is $45.50 per month, plus any applicable surcharge. But, it's important to be aware that, if you became eligible for Medicare Part A because of disability on or after July 1, 1992, through June 30, 1999, and if you enroll in Part B during this special enrollment period, you will not be required to pay a surcharge or penalty payment for not having enrolled in Part B earlier.

If you became eligible for Medicare Part A before July 1, 1992, you'll pay a reduced surcharge, because the months beginning with July 1992 through June 1999 won't be counted in determining the amount of the surcharge you pay.

If you don't enroll in Part B during this special period, you can only enroll during the regular enrollment period that occurs from Jan. 1 through March 31 each year. Part B coverage will then begin on July 1 of the year in which you enroll. The Part B premium will be increased 10 percent for each full 12-month period that you were not enrolled in Part B after you first became eligible.

If you enroll in Part B during this special enrollment period and stay enrolled, your TRICARE eligibility will continue until you become 65. If you don't enroll in Part B during this special period, your TRICARE eligibility will end June 30, 1999.

If you enroll in Part B, TRICARE will become "last payer" for your health care costs on the date that Part B becomes effective until you reach age 65. You'll remain eligible for care at uniformed services medical facilities, on a space-available basis.

If you enroll-or reenroll-in Medicare Part B, your Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS) record will need to be updated. The easiest way to do this is to take a copy of your notice from the Social Security Administration (SSA) showing your entitlement to Part B, or your new Medicare card showing your Part A and Part B entitlement dates, to the nearest military ID card issuing office. If this isn't possible, mail a copy of the documentation to the following address:

DMDC Support Office (ATTN: CA)
DOD Center-Monterey Bay
400 Gigling Road
Seaside, CA 93955-6771

This action will assist in updating your DEERS record to reflect your current benefits and will facilitate claims processing by TRICARE contractors. Be sure to include your Social Security Number on all correspondence.

If you have questions about your benefits or your DEERS record, or if you need other assistance, call DEERS toll-free, at (800) 334-4162 (California only); (800) 527-5602 (Alaska and Hawaii only); or (800) 538-9552 (all other states). Hours of operation are from 6 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. (Pacific Time), Monday through Friday (except for federal holidays).

If you have any questions about enrolling in Medicare Part B, call SSA toll-free, at (800) 772-1213. Or, visit any Social Security office.

Domestic violence conviction could end Soldiers' careers

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Soldiers who have been convicted in court of domestic violence — unless such a conviction can be expunged — may see their military careers come to an end, under a recent Army personnel policy change that stems from a 1996 federal law.

All Soldiers with a known conviction of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence — or Soldiers whom commanders have reasonable cause to believe they have such a conviction — are non-deployable for missions that require the possession of firearms or ammunition, according to a Department of the Army message dated May 21.

The new policy means that any past, present or future domestic violence court convictions may jeopardize the careers of officers and enlisted Soldiers, said Maj. Doug Carr, a staff officer within the Pentagon's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel (ODCSPER).

There is no "grandfather" clause under the new policy, Carr said, which became effective May 21.

Carr said the policy change covers all Soldiers — active, reserve and National Guard — but will affect "a very small percentage" of the total Army.

"All Soldiers having qualifying misdemeanor convictions for domestic violence under the Lautenberg Amendment are not allowed to possess or handle firearms or ammunition, so this affects them in their capacity within the military to handle a weapon," Carr said. "In fact, the interim Army guidance, put out Jan. 15, 1998, prescribed that commanders would identify these soldiers, to ensure that they did not have possession of privately owned firearms and ammunition or have access to any firearms and ammunition.

"That meant they could not qualify at a (military firing) range, and had to be assigned to positions which did not allow them to have access to a weapon."

In September 1996, Sen. Frank R. Lautenberg (D-N.J.) sponsored an amendment to the Gun Control Act of 1968, which prohibited individuals convicted of misdemeanor crimes of domestic violence from owning and possessing firearms and ammunition, according to ODCSPER documents. Effective Sept. 30, 1996, it became a felony for individuals convicted of misdemeanor crimes of domestic violence to ship, transport, possess or receive firearms or ammunition. It is also a felony to transfer firearms or ammunition to individuals who have such a conviction.

Government agencies, including the Department of the Army and other armed services, are not exempt from the Lautenberg Amendment, Carr said. The Department of Defense (DoD) issued interim guidance Oct. 22, 1997, which outlined steps to ensure DoD personnel do not issue government and privately owned firearms or ammunition to persons whom they know or have reasonable cause to believe have been convicted of misdemeanor crime of domestic violence.

To date, Carr said, the Army has been in compliance with the Lautenberg Amendment. However, he said, with the greatest impacts of the law affecting personnel reassignments and reenlistments, the Army determined it was necessary to specifically address Lautenberg Amendment-related personnel issues, while awaiting additional Office of the Secretary of Defense guidance.

According to the May 21 message, which provided guidance on deployment eligibility, assignment and reporting of Soldiers affected by the Lautenberg Amendment, "a Soldier is non-deployable for missions that require firearms and ammunition, and should be assigned, if feasible, to TDA (non-tactical) units," Carr said.

However, Carr said, all Soldiers, regardless of the type of assignment, are required to undergo periodic weapons qualification. All Soldiers could also be required to take up arms in time of war.

"The implication is Soldiers with records of domestic violence who cannot qualify at military shooting ranges cannot be promoted," Carr said. Nor could such Soldiers handle firearms in wartime, he said.

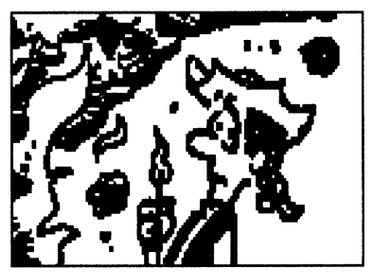
Those enlisted Soldiers who have been convicted of domestic violence will be barred from reenlistment, said Carr, but will be provided an opportunity to clear the record.

"They are not allowed to reenlist, but they may be allowed to extend for one year," he said. "This is to give them the opportunity to get any domestic violence convictions expunged from the record.

"If they're unable to do this, the year gives them a little time to prepare for transition out of the military."

Carr said the domestic violence policy also applies to Army officers.

"(Officers) would also be nondeployable for missions, since they would be prohibited from having access to firearms or ammunition," he said.



Both officers and enlisted Soldiers affected by the new policy will be eligible to apply for a discharge from the Army.

Under existing policy, Carr said civilians with court convictions of domestic violence are not eligible to join the Army, whether in an enlisted or officer capacity.

The Lautenberg Amendment has also had an impact on armed agencies outside DoD, Carr said. On April 16, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit reversed its earlier decision that held the Lautenberg Amendment unconstitutional as it applies to government entities, such as police departments. The Fraternal Order of Police, an association of law enforcement officers, had filed suit to contest the Lautenberg Amendment's affect on District of Columbia police officers. Under Lautenberg, police officers — who are required to handle firearms and ammunition, like Soldiers — would be subject to losing their jobs if found convicted of misdemeanor crime of domestic violence.

The court held that the Lautenberg Amendment does not deny equal protection guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment, does not deny due process by unnecessarily burdening the right to bear arms under the Second Amendment, is within congressional authority to regulate interstate commerce and does not infringe powers reserved to the States under the Tenth Amendment, according to ODCSPER documents.

This is the first case involving the Lautenberg Amendment to be examined by a Federal Circuit Court of Appeals, according to ODCSPER documents.

Staff sergeant initiative gets 'green light'

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

More sergeants will sew on staff sergeant's chevrons thanks to a personnel policy change signed May 27 by Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera.

Under the new policy, effective June 1, qualified sergeants can be conditionally promoted to staff sergeant without first graduating from the Basic Noncommissioned Officers' Course (BNCOC), said Sgt. Maj. William T. Hursh, the enlisted promotions sergeant major in the Pentagon's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"This policy change should result in 1,400 additional staff sergeant promotions on June 1; those promotions will represent Soldiers whose promotions were delayed previously (because they hadn't yet attended BNCOC)," Hursh said. "Several hundred extra staff sergeant promotions will probably be made each month, since sergeants won't have to first attend BNCOC (to be promoted to staff sergeant)."

According to Hursh, about 2,200 Soldiers will now receive promotions to staff sergeant effective June 1. Those promotions, he said, include 800 Soldiers who had already attended BNCOC.

However, sergeants who are conditionally promoted to staff sergeant will still need to graduate from BNCOC, or lose their "rockers," Hursh said.

"The promotions are contingent upon Soldiers completing BNCOC within one year or as scheduled by PERSCOM (U.S. Total Army Personnel Command)," he said.

Under previous policy, Hursh said, sergeants had to complete BNCOC prior to promotion to staff sergeant.

The new staff sergeant promotion policy is part of Army initiatives to obtain more NCOs, Hursh said, who noted the Army needs more sergeants and NCOs at all grades to replace departing Soldiers on a "one-for-one" basis in a post-drawdown, steady-state Army.

"The new policy benefits those sergeants who lose pay and date-of-rank seniority while waiting for promotion due to delays in attending BNCOC," Hursh said. "It also helps Army readiness by providing us staff sergeants when we need them, in positions where we need them.

"This is a very important NCO rank, because staff sergeants fill critical positions such as drill sergeant, recruiter, instructors, and squad leaders," he said.

QUOTE ME

The primary reason for the existence of all the U.S. Armed Forces is to provide the military power to deter war. Should deterrence fail for reasons beyond our control, then these forces must be able to fight and win. There is no cheap way to do this. There also is no second prize in the business of war today, nor will there ever be.

— General George H. Decker

Memorial serves as reminder

Staff Sgt. Patrick Vazquez
U.S. Army School of Americas

It's a bright, sunny day in Washington D.C., and lots of people — children, parents, Soldiers in uniform — are walking around the park, right in the center of town. Many stop to look at the statue of three young Soldiers whose sad and tired faces are a faithful reflection of the event they represent and of the eternal spiritual rest that they, our brothers, finally received.

A black marble wall, full of names, is decorated with flowers, flags, letters, unit patches and photos. Thousands of names have been engraved in marble, and an overwhelming silence strikes visitors when approaching the monument. Visitors look patiently for the name of a relative, a friend, an acquaintance. The Vietnam Veterans Memorial is the monument's official name and it lists everyone who died or disappeared in the conflict.

Vietnam, a small peninsula in Southeast Asia, is an eternal grave for our troops. In 1959, we sustained the first casualty, and in 1975 the last one. Overall, more than 60,000 Soldiers gave their lives for a democracy that never quite materialized. It was the longest conflict in American history, and it is considered by many the most hateful war ever.

The monument to our veterans was built in 1982, almost 10 years after the most decisive war ever.

It was a peaceful night when Jan, a Vietnam veteran, woke up scared and sweating, something he and his wife had become used to. He had been dreaming about events he had lived through in the war. Apparently there is a link between our dreams and the voices of those we fought side to side with but who never made it back.

Jan could not believe that even in 1979 the government had done nothing to honor the war veterans. He decided it was time to do it himself, and started compiling a list of all men and women reported as missing in action. He called on Americans to send donations in, and within a few months, money started coming from large corporations, war veterans, their families and friends.

Media coverage was so intense that when Jan asked Congress to build a monument in Washington D.C.'s Mall, Congress approved it. A contest was undertaken to select the monument's design, and Congress only asked that all those missing in action be listed on the monument. Over 1,500 designs were received and they were numbered so that the judges could not see the author's name when evaluating and voting on the entries. All voted for design 1,026. Who was the artist? Someone famous? No. Just a college student who drafted his entry as a course assignment. And she had received a "B" grade. Maya Ying Lin, a Chinese national, was not very familiar with the war since she was so little when the conflict reached its peak. She visited the memorial site and tried to figure out what the relatives and friends of the veterans would feel like. She then tried to picture the black wall as symbolizing a forbidden dark zone where no mortal being could be allowed.

But another problem came up: many veterans disliked the idea of a black wall: they wanted a monument like the one dedicated to the memory of the World War II veterans. By 1982 construction of the wall and the statue got under way. The black marble was brought from India; then it was polished, cut and stenciled with over 60,000 names.

Inauguration day was set for Nov. 13, 1982, Veterans Day — a day Jan Scruggs and all other war veterans had looked forward to. Thousands of them converged on Washington D.C., some coming on wheel chairs, dressed in uniform and carrying pictures and letters received from loved ones who now could rest in peace. There was a parade with marching bands, and, when the participants finally reached the memorial site, they all gathered around the speakers. Some 150,000 people heard speeches and then moved to the wall. Everyone, tears running down their cheeks, looked for a relative's name. Names are sequenced according to their date of death or when turned out missing. Many would kiss and touch the walls the way they would a loved one — in total silence. It was as if a huge abyss had finally been bridged and you could go into another dimension, one that would be there for centuries to come, thanks to the monument.

The number of people visiting the wall increases every year, particularly on Veteran's Day. You can still find pictures, letters and other mementoes left by visitors. A wife left a letter with a photo of her son with the following inscription: "I wanted you to see how handsome your son turned out to be ... I miss you ... love forever ... your wife."

The wall is helping heal the wounds of war. It unites the citizenry, it is a source of historic data for our young, and it reminds people that in war there are no winners, only losers.

1-10 receives new commander

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The "redlegs" of the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) bid farewell to their commander during a change of command ceremony held May 26 on Dickman Field.

Lt. Col. Ernest J. Herold III assumed command from Lt. Col. Thomas G. Torrance, who will continue his ride at Fort Benning as the Chief of Combined Arms and Leadership Division for the U.S. Army Infantry School.

"It is with great pride and sense of accomplishment that I pass the guidon to Lt. Col. E.J. Herold," said Torrance during his farewell remarks. "This is a great unit that has accomplished many missions over the past two years. And I am awed by the fact that no matter how tough the task, the Soldiers of this battalion accomplished their mission."

Torrance went on to account a number of different stories about Soldiers he had encountered during his career and how they impacted him. He also gave an extra special thanks to his family for their support, love and understanding before officially welcoming the new commander.

"E.J. and Catherine, you have joined a great team. Congratulations and god speed as you rejoin the Marne express," he said.

For Herold the "Marne express" is nothing new; he already spent time as a Field Intelligence Officer for the 3rd Brigade at Fort Stewart, Ga.

"I consider it a privilege to take command of such fine Soldiers, and look forward to the opportunity to prove daily that their confidence will be safely placed in me," Herold said.

He thanked all the Soldiers, NCOs and fellow officers who have helped him along the way and told everyone to "hold on, were boarding the Marne express and the ride will be fast and exciting."

Outgoing Commander Lt. Col. Thomas Torrance receives the guidon from Battalion Sergeant Major Command Sgt. Maj. Ronnie Porter during the change of command ceremony.

Originally from Norwalk, Conn., Herold was a 1981 graduate from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, New York. He later received a master's degree of Science in Foreign Service from Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.

Some of his military education includes graduating the Field Artillery Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, the Cannon Battery Officer Course, the Lance Officer Course, the Combined Arms and Services Staff School, the Defense Language Institute, the French Army Staff College and the French Joint Staff College.

Herold's first assignment had him serving with the 82nd Airborne Division Artillery as Fire Support Team Chief. Other assignments included commander of the 83rd U.S. Army Field Artillery Detachment in Montabaur, Germany, artillery group adjutant and group logistics officer for the 557th U.S. Army Artillery Group in HerbornSeelback, Germany and executive officer and deputy fire support coordinator for the 1st Battalion, 9th Field Artillery.

His list of awards and decorations include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Army Achievement Medal, National Defense Service Medal, Armed Forces Service Medal, the UN Mission in Haiti medal and the German Honor Cross in Bronze. He has also received the Joint Meritorious Unit Award, the Ranger Tab, Master Parachutist Badge and the Joint Staff Identification Badge.

Board appearances indicate willingness

Marshall B. Wilkins
MDW News Service

Soldiers everywhere have the opportunity to receive recognition, gain experience and take a step toward pinning on sergeant stripes by appearing before boards.

Each company or battalion-level board a junior enlisted Soldier attends helps establish a track record. Present and future squad leaders and supervisors look at that record.

A board appearance indicates a Soldier's positive attitude, willingness to excel and desire to climb the promotion ladder.

Within much of the Army, Soldiers who are successful at the company board go on to compete before battalion level NCO and Soldier of the Quarter boards.

Winners at the battalion level advance to installation level competition. NCOs and Soldiers who come out on top at each installation earn the right to compete at the Army level.

Preparation is the key for Soldiers who want to have positive results when they go before a board, experienced NCOs advised.

One method of preparation Soldiers are warned away from is the purchase and use of study guides.

"Study guides are misused because some Soldiers buy them and use them as their only source of information," said Command Sgt. Maj. James D. Pendry, installation command sergeant major for Fort Myer, Va. "The study guides I have seen are primarily questions and answers. That's why Soldiers shouldn't use them as their only source of information. Soldiers should focus on using the actual references in manuals and participate in practice boards at the unit level."

FM 21-20 Physical Fitness Training, FM 22-5 Drill and Ceremony, FM 22-100 Military Leadership, FM 22-101 Leadership Counseling, FM 22-102 Soldier-Team Building and AR 670-1 Wear and Appearance of the Uniform contain information that should be common knowledge to Soldiers.

Board attendees should be very familiar with the chain of command, customs and courtesies of the Army and the histories of their unit, command and installation.

NCOs and Soldiers who go before boards should be aware of current events. Pendry said Soldiers should be able to discuss current events issues, not just answer questions about today's headlines.

Television news programs, radio news and newspapers are good sources of current events. Soldiers should use these sources on a daily basis instead of waiting until they're scheduled to appear before a board.

Ample news coverage is provided by National Public Radio, FM 88.5 and Congressional Satellite Public Affairs Network radio, FM 90.1. CSPAN airs NATO, state department, Pentagon and White House press briefings on weekdays.

Soldiers and NCOs can be successful when they appear before boards,and increase their promotion potential at the same time by ensuring they prepare themselves in the proper manner ahead of time.

For more information, call 544-8166.

Range to be dedicated today

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) will rededicate Easley Range today during a ceremony on Dixie Road.

Easley Range is named for the late Brig. Gen. Claudius Miller "Speck" Easley, who began his career in rifle marksmanship by competing in the National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, in 1910.

For more information on the rededication, call 545-5179.

Troy State offers degree program

Troy State University at Fort Benning offers a unique program designed specifically for units. The program is a "Special College Course Program" available to units and Soldiers that have difficulty finding the time to take college courses during traditional hours. This program allows units to select courses, time and location (usually in the battalion area).

Troy State will assist the unit through every phase of the operation from start to completion of the course. Commanders and first sergeants can now plan for education on the training schedule and help Soldiers obtain promotion points and get started on a college degree.

For more information, call 685-9555.

Infantry Hoedown set

The 1999 Infantry Country Hoedown is scheduled for 5:30 p.m. Wednesday at Hangar 2492 at Lawson Army Airfield. Ticket price for the event is $17 and dress attire is casual.

All guests desiring to attend should contact 2nd Lt. Paul Ewald at 545-7033.

Association offers scholarship

The Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Retired Officers Association (CVC TROA) is sponsoring a new, one-year undergraduate scholarship to Troy State University at Fort Benning.

The scholarship is for this forthcoming academic year beginning Aug. 2 and is offered to all active duty or retired military personnel. In addition, members of the immediate family are encouraged to apply. The scholarship will cover tuition for a full-time student for the entire year and CVC TROA will donate part of the cost of the required textbooks.

Applicants must write a letter to the CVC TROA Scholarship Committee member James Kvicala, 3748 Winkfield Place, Columbus, GA 31909.

For more information, call 689-0098 or stop by Building 2614, Soldiers' Plaza.

Deadline for submission of letter is July 10.

Planning ensures smooth pet moves

Capt. Marisa Gerth
MDW News Service

Every year around this time, military families begin the move to their next duty site. For those families, this can be a very hectic and stressful time. The same can be said for their pets.

Owners need to plan ahead for travel arrangements for all family pets. All animals will need a health certificate within 10 to 14 days of travel.

If you are going overseas, there are specific requirements for each country for pets. Check with the country's consulate or your post veterinary clinic for guidance.

In general, the rabies vaccine must be given less than a year before departure but greater than 30 days out. Most animals are on the three-year rabies schedule and will need to be boostered before the move.

Those families going to Hawaii now have the option of a three-month quarantine or 30-day quarantine period. There are specific requirements that must be met to be eligible for the 30-day quarantine, and planning for those requirements must be made before four months out. Pet owners going to Hawaii should call the state for information on the microchip and blood testing as soon as they receive orders.

Some animals have a difficult time traveling and become stressed. Veterinarians do not recommend using tranquilizers in these animals for three reasons: The tranquilizers can predispose your pet to injury as the carrier is moved about; the animals are not monitored and can have adverse reactions to the drugs used; and most importantly, they are unable to control their body temperatures which can fluctuate dramatically during transport.

See your veterinarian if you have any questions about the health of your pet during travel.

Finally, there is a dark side to the PCS moves. At Fort Benning, as is the case at other Army installations, several animals are found abandoned in the quarters or on post and brought to the stray facility. The post veterinary clinic does its best to find them new homes, but sometimes there aren't enough homes available.

If you cannot bring your pets with you, please make arrangements to find your pet a new home or take it to a local shelter. Our pets are domesticated and cannot survive on their own in the wild.

For more information, call the Post Veterinary Clinic at 545-4444.

Bridge building

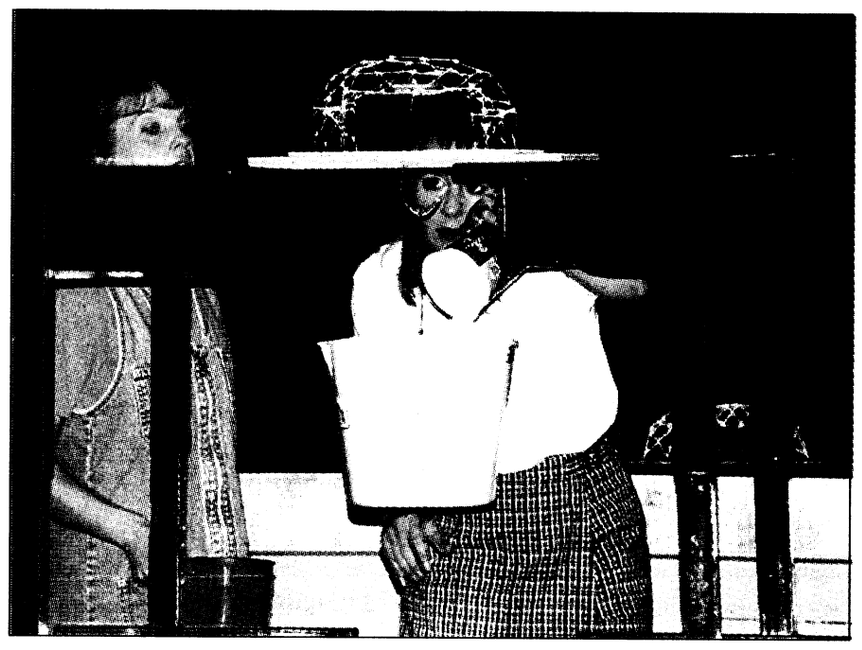
Project enhances math skills

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Bridge building teams from Dexter Elementary School worked diligently to construct bridges that, when put to the final test, would win by holding more weight than the others. Under the watchful eye of fourth-grade teacher Marjory Brasfield, 20 four-man teams, carefully planned and created bridges for the 1999 Brasfield Bridge-Off held May 25.

The bridge building teams formed companies that consisted of an architect, accountant, project manager and carpenter. Each team member had specific responsibilities as they worked together to accomplish a common goal of building the strongest toothpick bridge while staying within their budget.

"The bridge building simulation requires students to apply skills using arithmetic calculations and geometry to design, plan and build scale model bridges within a specific budget," Brasfield said.



The fourth- and fifth-grade students began the bridge project by studying many different kinds of bridges and finding the geometrical shapes incorporated in many different kinds of bridges.

"The students perform stress tests on different geometric forms to find out which shapes are the strongest," she said. "They also learn to identify stress points and what geometrical shapes can handle the most force."

The next step is preparing the architects from each company to design their bridge on graph paper within certain predetermined limits. "The architects work with parent volunteers and parent engineers to gain the knowledge necessary to successfully design a bridge. Once the architect designs the bridge the companies meet to work out their budgets and determine how many pieces of lumber (toothpicks) are needed," Brasfield added.

According to Brasfield, each company began with $1,550,000 and had to pay $500,000 for land, $10,000 for each toothpick and $850 for welding material per day for at least 10 days of building. The budget also included a minimum of four audits at $2000 each and a final inspection and approval for competition fee of $5000. When the company's budget and plans are approved, they begin doing business with the I Saw Lumber Company.

"Success is gauged on a daily basis as to how well each company works together to achieve its goals for that day, from balance sheets to the logs kept by the project managers. Since the jobs are interrelated it takes a great deal of cooperative effort on the part of the students."

Michele E. Hanson

Susan Cissell (left) watches Lori Moriarity add sand to a bucket suspended from a toothpick bridge during the 1999 Brasfield Bridge-Off held at Dexter Elementary School on May 25. Twenty fourth- and fifth-grade teams entered the competition.

Upon completion, the bridges are judged by engineers for the best design and construction and are tested against each other in a weight competition to see which bridge is strongest.

"This year all fourth- and fifth-grade students participated in the bridge competition which resulted in 20 teams. This type of project required a great deal of work and would not have been possible without the support from parent volunteers who were in the classroom every day," Brasfield said. "I couldn't have done it with out them."

Bridge Champion (23 pounds) was awarded to R.A.F.K. Bridge Busters, Inc. — Architect-Kristen Anderson; Project Manager-Felicia Moore; Accountant-Richard Smith; and Carpenter-Andi McGlown.

Outstanding Architect — Patrick Herold (4th grade)
Outstanding Carpenter — Cassie Janssen (4th grade)
Outstanding Project Manager — Alicia Refer (5th grade)
Outstanding Accountant — Paola Cordero (5th grade)

White School holds field day

Dr. Judy Archer held her head high as she walked gracefully around the school decked out in yellow pajamas and slippers. Archer, principal of White Elementary School, kept her promise made to the students last September by wearing her pajamas during annual Field Day held May 28.

"The focus of Field Day is on family unity and family fun," Archer said. "There are far more parents here then staff and that's the way we like it. The children are the winners in the whole situation."

More than 400 fathers and their children participated in Donuts with Dad which started at 8 a.m. The Parent Teacher Organization (PTO) sponsored the donut get together because many children never get the chance to eat breakfast with their fathers.

"We had a great turn out for Donuts with Dad and it was worth the effort," said Michelle Ringler, vice president of the PTO. "It was great to see so many dads enjoying time with their children."

Soldiers from the 4th Ranger Training Battalion kicked off field day by instructing the children on the benefits of physical training (PT).

"We came here to have fun with the kids and teach them about why physical fitness is important in maintaining good health," said Sgt. 1st Class Wade Kirkpatrick, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th RTBn.

The Soldiers conducted a PT challenge for 20 of the top physically fit children to find the top three Ironmen and Wonderwomen in the PT competition. The competition included timed and graded push-ups, sit-ups and a fifth of a mile run.

A full day of age appropriate events followed the opening assembly. Students participated in races, contests and relays throughout the day but the highlight for many children was the "kissing of the pig."

According to Ringler many fundraisers are held annually but the children enjoy the Penny War Competition the most. Each class begins collecting pennies in September of each year. The teacher of the class that collects the most pennies kisses a pig during field day. "This year the children exceeded our goal and collected $1,700 worth of pennies. Because they exceeded the goal, the principal promised to wear her pajamas to school."

Evelyn Braman, fifth-grade teacher at White, said her class won the Penny War by collecting $471 worth of pennies but it was a battle all year between several classes. "It was wonderful how the children worked together all year to win the penny war. I am proud of their accomplishments and proud to kiss the pig."

Ironmen winners:

First place; Floyd Smith followed by Edward Scott and Gary Robinson.

Wonderwomen winners:

First place: Natasha Hall followed by Sarah O' Neill and Miriam Berry.

School board holds meeting

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning School Board gathered Tuesday for its regular monthly meeting.

At the beginning of the meeting, Superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen recognized educational sponsors Earnestine Ezekiel, Linda Turner and Terri Bond along with students Erica Barton and Justin Christy of Dexter Elementary School with Certificates of Achievements for their contributions in making Dexter the Keep Columbus Beautiful Gateway School of the Year. Lt. Col. Steve Eldridge was also recognized for his contributions as command representative for the Fort Benning's School Home Partnership.

After the presentation, Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum gave an overview of the Fort Benning School Systems Standardized Achievement Test results.

According to Einhorn, all grade levels showed a significant improvement compared to the previous school year.

Following Einhorn, Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent gave an update on the school systems budget and staffing. In which next years school year will include 17 additional positions according to Fort Benning's District Projected Staffing for the school year of 1999 through 2000.

"There is an initiative to get all of the first through third grade classes staffed at a 18 teacher to one student ratio." Skinner said. "All in all we feel the staffing looks good for the next year."

The school board also approved requests to carry over encumbered funds for Faith School, Loyd School, White School's and the Office of Special Education. The board also approved Stowers Elementary School's request for $286.58 of unencumbered funds for prizes for the Accelerated Reader Program.

Fort Benning Schools announced updates on current projects such as the Faith's roof replacement and renovations at Wilson School.

The local project updates are as follows:

•Stowers School has an estimated date for pre-final inspection of June 14 followed by active components to be installed and followed by a final inspection.

•White School's exterior underground conduit and electrical wiring is almost complete. Almost all of the trenches have been filled. The trench which remains unfilled can not be finished until school is out so that the power may be turned off to complete the exterior work.

•Faith School has an estimated date for pre-final of June 22 which will be followed by active components to be installed then a final inspection.

•McBride and Loyd School's electrical work had been started.

•The renovations of Wilson and Faith School's roofs are preceding well.

•The design for maintenance office facility should be competed in July.

The next school board meeting will be held June 21.

Everyday chemicals can harm, kill

Directorate of Public Works

Chemicals we use every day in the home and at work can harm our health, kill wildlife and destroy our valuable natural resources. There are countless ways of using common items from the kitchen pantry to replace the more expensive and potentially dangerous chemicals that crowd the supermarket shelves. To unearth tips and recipes ask your mother or grandmother, do some research at your local library, check in magazines and periodicals geared to the environmentally conscious or go high tech and surf cyber-bookstores to find any one of countless books written on the subject.

Some methods to reduce chemicals around the home:

•Replace glass cleaner with a mixture of one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice in one quart of water. (Recipes for home made glass cleaners vary. Some call for equal parts of vinegar and warm water; others are made with one-half cup ammonia and a gallon of hot water.) Spray on and use newspaper to wipe dry.

•For furniture polish, substitute with one teaspoon of lemon juice in one pint of mineral or vegetable oil. Try this mixture on a hidden spot to be sure it doesn't damage the finish.

•Instead of scouring power, use straight baking soda on a damp sponge. This will not only clean but deodorize too. You can make a "paste" that does double duty as either scouring powder or copper cleaner by adding a little vinegar or lemon juice to table salt and rubbing it in with a damp sponge.

•To keep your oven stain free, try sprinkling salt on fresh spills before the oven has completely cooled. After the oven has completely cooled, scrape the spill off and wash. To clean the oven, use a spray bottle filled with vinegar, spray the oven, sprinkle with baking soda and scrub gently with super fine steel wool (which you can find at a hardware store) or a plastic pot scrubber.

•To remove mineral or lime deposits from chrome fixtures, soak paper towels in white vinegar and place on or around the fixtures, covering the deposit encrusted areas. Leave in place for an hour to overnight, remove the towels and wash with warm, soapy water. Repeat as necessary.

•Instead of using commercial drain cleaners, sprinkle one-half cup baking soda down a drain. Add one-half cup white vinegar and cover with a plate or container lid. Let sit five minutes, and then flush with four to five cups boiling water. (Don't use this method if you've already used a commercial cleaner. The combination could react to produce dangerous fume.)

•If you store a homemade mixture, make sure it is properly labeled and do not store in a container that could be mistaken for a food or beverage.

•When preparing alternatives, mix only what is needed for the job at hand and mix in a clean container.

When you do have to buy and use chemicals, there are ways to minimize their impact on the environment. For instance:

•Buy only latex paints instead of oil-based. Oil-based paints are flammable and are regulated upon disposal. On the other hand, latex paints are water based, clean up easily and pose few hazards.

•Buy only chemicals in the amount you need and no more. Too often, we buy more chemicals than we will ever use. In most cases, disposal of even a small quantity of these chemicals can cost hundreds of dollars. Approximately 85 percent of the hazardous waste that we dispose of, is a result of purchasing more chemicals than we use.

•Never mix household bleach with ammonia, vinegar or toilet bowl cleaner. The combination produces deadly fumes.

•Avoid buying aerosol cans. They contain propellants that are flammable and contribute to air pollution. Instead, buy products with hand-pumps.

•If you do have chemicals that you can no longer use, don't put them in the closet in the hope they will go away. They won't. If someone else can use the product, give it to them. (A new neighbor who's just moved in could probably use a variety of cleaning products.) Otherwise, take the time to dispose of the chemicals properly.

•If you have questions call your unit and activities environmental coordinator or the DPW environmental staff at 545-4766; Family Housing residents can call the DPW environmental staff at 545-4766.

•Make sure that all containers are labeled properly and completely. At work sites, maintain a file of the material safety data sheets for all chemicals you use.

•Chemicals should be used for their intended purpose and used up completely. Never pour excess chemicals down the drain just because it is easy. This is illegal.

•Keep containers closed. Keep them out of the reach children. Remember open containers result in air pollution.

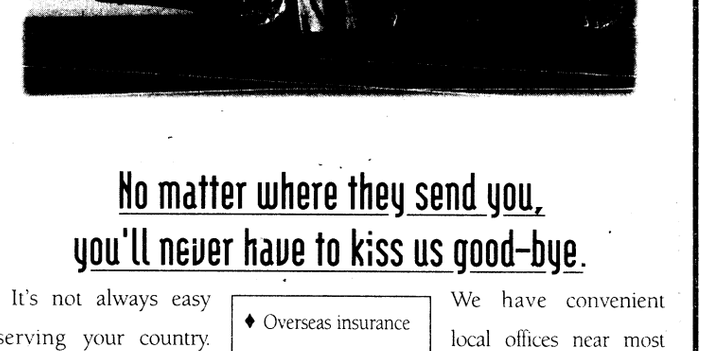
The Environmental Management Division (EMD) of the Directorate of Public Works has a staff of experts to assist us in preventing chemicals from being released into our environment. This staff is in the process of implementing a Pollution Prevention Plan. Currently, we generate over 300,000 pounds of hazardous waste a year. The ultimate goal is to reduce this number to zero! Yes, zero — we can do it, but we need your help. Start today, one small step at a time. If you have questions or need further information, call the environmental staff at 545-4766.

Notice of telephone number change

Residents in Davis Hill and Bouton Heights, Perkins Place and McGraw Manor will now call 689-5400 for all maintenance and repair needs. This includes repair of kitchen appliances (i.e. refrigerators, stoves, garbage disposals, vent hoods and fire suppression systems.) Residents in all other family housing areas will call 689-5400 for kitchen appliance repair while continuing to call 545-2135 for all other maintenance needs.

For more information, call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Correction



Community Life is currently distributing Spring Clean-Up flyers throughout family housing areas. The flyers mistakenly state that "Residents may pick up bedding plants, pine straw, ... at the U-Do-It Center ..." The U-Do-It Center no longer has any plants. Bedding plants area a seasonal item of limited availability and will not be reordered again this year. The U-Do-It Center orders and stocks pine straw, lime and fertilizer, as well as DPW approved paper bags for yard waste, year round. These items will continue to be available for residents' use throughout the year. We regret any inconvenience or misunderstanding this may have caused. For more information, call Glenn Todd at 545-2117.

Bunkbeds present danger

Mark S. Mandell
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

For most children, the top bunk of a bunk bed has been the crowning achievement of pre-adolescence and prime real estate in the ever competitive rivalry between siblings. However, unless the bed has been adequately designed with special safety features, the top bunk can be a very dangerous place for a young child.

Lynn Starks, an Oklahoma City mother, knows this all too well. On April 24, 1997, Lynn found her 3-year-old daughter, Whitney, strangled as a result of her head becoming caught between the mattress and the bed frame of a bunk bed.

It is estimated that an average of 10 children die each year in bunk bed accidents. Those most at risk are children younger than six, who should never be placed in the top bunk. These accidents occur as a result of a child becoming entrapped in the space between the guardrail and the mattress, or wedged between the bed and an adjacent wall. A gap of just a few inches in the bed structure was enough to create the strangulation hazard that took Whitney Starks' young life.

Recently, the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), the federal regulatory agency assigned to protect the public against injuries or deaths associated with consumer products, has launched a national campaign to raise awareness among parents about the danger in the continued use of hazardous products that do not meet current safety standards.

In the case of bunk beds, most of the major manufacturers — roughly 90 percent — comply with voluntary safety standards. But the threat lies with the growing number of smaller, specialty manufacturers and importers of bunk beds, as well as with older, noncomplying beds that have outlived their expected useful life, yet continue to be used by parents. In response, the CPSC is considering changing the current voluntary safety standard on bunk beds to a mandatory rule that would embrace those noncomplying manufacturers.

Though the CPSC routinely issues recalls of products that pose significant threats to consumer safety, it contends that another obstacle that hampers its efforts is getting consumers to act on removing dangerous products. To reduce the risk of your child becoming involved in a bunk bed accident, the CPSC advises:

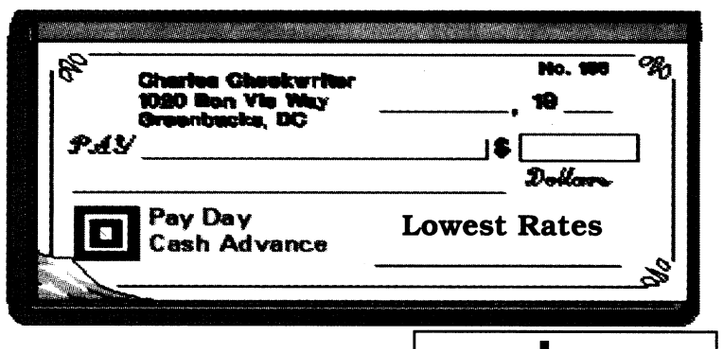
•Close any spaces between the lower edge of the guardrail and upper edge of the bedframe to 3.5 inches or less.



•Place a guardrail next to the wall, on the lower bunk, as well as the upper bunk. This will help reduce the risk of entrapment for children primarily under the age of one.

It is up to us, as parents, to take the time to remove any outdated or inadequate products from our homes that would endanger our children's safety. Those interested in learning more about family safety and what products have been recalled can contact the CPSC via its hotline at (800) 638-2772 or by visiting its web site at www.cpsc.gov.

TRICARE Prime becomes easier

Martin Army Community Hospital

TRICARE Prime annual membership renewal just became easier. In response to many requests, TRICARE has initiated a policy of automatic membership renewal for TRICARE Prime members. Here's how it works.

For active duty family members:

You will receive an automatic renewal explanation letter approximately 30 days before your renewal date.

•If you choose to remain enrolled in Prime — Do nothing. Family members who are currently enrolled will have their membership extended for an additional 12 months (provided they remain eligible for the program). New identification cards will not be issued and no further notice will be provided. You may continue to use your current Prime identification card.

•If you choose to disenroll from Prime — Complete the form enclosed in the renewal letter and return it before your annual renewal date to the address indicated on the form. Humana Military Healthcare Services (HMHS) will disenroll your family from Prime on the last day of your enrollment year. After disenrollment, your coverage will revert to TRICARE Standard. You may recall that TRICARE Standard includes an annual deductible plus higher out-of-pocket cost shares.

For retirees and their family members:

You will receive a renewal letter approximately 30 days before your renewal date.

•If you choose to remain enrolled in Prime — Complete the form enclosed in the renewal letter. Mail the form, along with your annual or quarterly payment, in the envelope provided. Family members who are currently enrolled will have their membership extended for an additional 12 months (provided they remain eligible for the program). New identification cards will not be issued and no further notice will be provided. You may continue to use your current Prime identification card.

•If you choose to disenroll from Prime — Do nothing. HMHS will disenroll your family from Prime on the last day of your enrollment year, and after disenrollment, your coverage will revert to TRICARE Standard. You may recall that TRICARE Standard includes a deductible plus higher out-of-pocket cost shares.

At renewal time, you are encouraged to review your other health insurance records. If you have experienced any change in coverage provided by other group health insurance plans during the past year, please let us know. Maintaining an accurate record can help you avoid unnecessary delays in claims payment.

If you have questions about the re-enrollment process, the TRICARE Program, or other health insurance record update procedures, please call a Beneficiary Services Representative at (800) 444-5445, or stop by your local TRICARE Service Center.

Anyone, including all active duty members, who enrolls in Prime is entitled to receive a copy of the Take Care of Yourself manual. If you have not yet received the manual, you may pick one up at the TRICARE Service Center.

TRICARE is a Department of Defense program offered by Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

MACH streamlines hospital operations

Terry Beckwith
Martin Army Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) is moving forward in streamlining hospital operations to provide better service to both staff and patients that visit us.

According to Maj. J.D. Fairey, Chief of the Health Care Management Department (HMD) formerly Clinical Support Division, "We are striving to maintain quality care and service that our patients have come to expect from MACH."

The new HMD has brought support elements together that used to exist in separate areas and combined them in an organizationally functional location; such as beneficiary services, data services, medical services and the newly formed marketing services. All of these varied services that have contact with patients will be moving locations over the next couple of months and as moves occur, patients will be kept abreast of these changes.

Currently there are 47 dedicated professionals within the newly formed HMD, who will continue to provide Martin Care, Martin Pride and Martin Service.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Treatment focuses on improving

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Beginning in the 1940's, psychiatrists applied various labels to children who were hyperactive and extremely inattentive and impulsive. The name has changed many times and is currently referred to as Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD).

Those who study ADHD have begun to clarify that ADHD involves two sets of symptoms: inattention and a combination of hyperactive and impulsive behaviors.

Most people agree that children are usually more active, distractible and impulsive than adults. And children are more inconsistent, affected by momentary events and dominated by objects in their immediate environment. The younger the children, the less able they are to be aware of their immediate environment, of time or to give priority to future events over more immediate wants. Such behaviors are signs of a problem, however, when children display them significantly more than their peers do.

Some studies have found that boys diagnosed with ADHD outnumber girls with ADHD four to one, possibly because boys are genetically more prone to disorders of the nervous system. The behavior patterns seen in ADHD usually arise between the ages of 3 and 5.

An estimated two to nine and a half percent of all school-age children worldwide have ADHD. Scientists have identified it in every nation and culture they have studied.

Researchers have traditionally viewed ADHD as a problem in the realm of attention but some have suggested that it stems from an inability of the brain to filter competing sensory inputs, such as sights and sounds. Some studies have shown that children with ADHD are less capable of controlling motor responses when anticipating events and are less sensitive to feedback about errors made in those responses.

For example, in a commonly used test of reaction time, children with ADHD are less able than other children to ready themselves to press one of several keys when they see a warning light. They also do not slow down after making mistakes in such tests in order to improve their accuracy.

Special studies over the past decade have indicated particular regions of the brain may function differently in patients with ADHD and thus account for the symptoms of the condition. These findings make sense because the brain areas that are reduced in size in children with ADHD are the very ones that regulate attention. Other studies suggest involvement of the portions of the brain involved in "editing" one's behavior, resisting distractions and regulating motivation.

A University of Colorado study reported that the identical twin of a child who had ADHD is between 11 and 18 times more likely to have ADHD than the other siblings. These findings support the proposal by many doctors that there can be genetic causes for ADHD.

Non-genetic factors that have been linked to ADHD include premature birth, maternal alcohol and tobacco use. Contrary to popular belief, neither dietary factors such as the amount of sugar a child consumes, nor poor child-rearing methods have been consistently shown to contribute to ADHD.

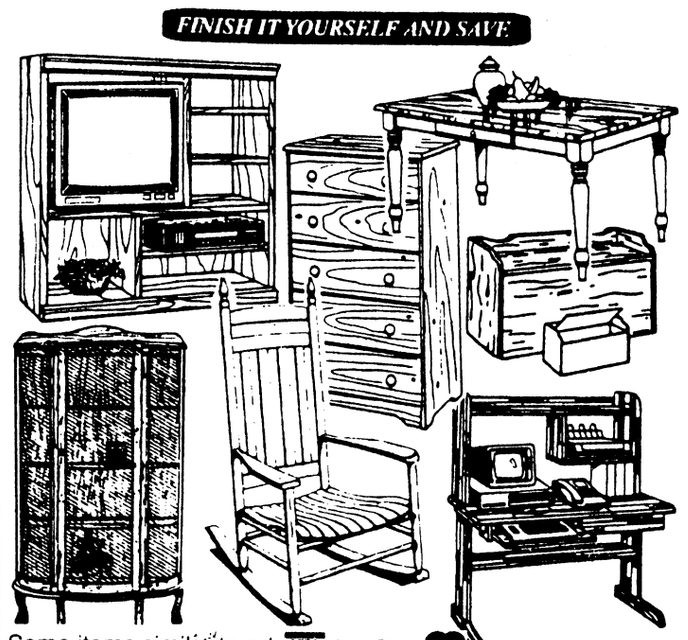
ADHD is a failure of behavioral inhibition and some findings support the theory that a more structured environment may help children with ADHD. Such organization can be an important complement to any drug therapy the children might receive.

Currently children and some adults with ADHD often receive medications such as Ritalin that boost their capacity to inhibit and regulate impulsive behaviors. These drugs act by inhibiting the dopamine transporter, increasing the time that dopamine has to bind to its receptors on other neurons.

Such medications, which despite their inhibitory effects known as psycho-stimulants, have been found to improve the behavior of between 70 and 90 percent of children with ADHD older than 5 years. Children with ADHD who take such medication not only are less impulsive, restless and distractible but are also better able to hold important information in mind, to be more productive academically and to have better self-control. As a result, they tend to be liked better by other children and to experience less punishment for their actions, which improves their self-image.

Some methods of modifying behavior in ADHD involve addressing the positive and negative consequences of a child's actions more frequently than one might in other children. Parents and teachers can aid children with ADHD by anticipating events for them, breaking future tasks down into smaller and more immediate steps and using artificial immediate rewards.

Parents and teachers play a very important role in identifying children with ADHD. Important early steps include teacher rating scales to document the severity of the problem.



MACH brief — Patients assigned to or scheduled to see Jeffrey Rifkin of the MACH Family Practice Clinic are being reassigned and rescheduled as soon as possible. The patients and staff of the Martin Army Community Hospital extend condolences to the Rifkin family on their loss. Dr. Rifkin will be sadly missed.

Faith in God helps ease suffering

Chaplain (Maj.) T. Blake Bowers
Martin Army Community Hospital

Troubles, heartaches, serious illnesses, crippling diseases, unexplained disasters and the like are all part of life. No one likes suffering, yet there is a way to endure suffering.

reflections

A righteous man was home one day when he heard the news that all his crops and livestock had been destroyed or stolen. Not only that, but he learned all 10 of his children had died in the same storm. Having all your possessions destroyed and taken is enough for one person, but throw in the loss of all your children and its overwhelming beyond words. He did the only thing he knew to do. He grieved and fell down to worship the Lord.

First, when suffering comes, grieve. Grieving is a natural response. Our emotions are there for a God-given reason. Some of us feel its taboo for us to cry to express our sad emotions. It's okay to let others see you cry.

Second, when suffering comes, worship. Turn to what you know, what has always sustained you in the past. Job worshipped God on a regular basis and he saw no need to do anything different now. Job's words were "Naked I came from my mothers womb, and naked I will depart. The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away; may the name of the Lord be praised." Job 1:21 (NIV). The worship is not praise for your suffering or your sorrow, but praise that God is God.

Despite the confusion, turmoil and not understanding the present moment, God is still in control. Our praise to God acknowledges that fact. The ability to worship is the beginning of our healing.

When you think it just can't get any worse, something else happens. Job was stricken with painful sores, like boils from the top of his head to the bottom of his feet. His only relief was scratching with broken pottery pieces. Job's wife hit bottom. She asked Job to curse God and just give up on life. Death was a better option for her. Yet Job kept things in perspective.

A third step is to accept what comes your way. That's not always easy. Job said "Shall we accept good from God and not trouble? In all this Job did not sin in what he said," Job 1:10. Blaming only causes more bitterness, sorrow and misery. It does nothing to aid in your healing.

Fourth, keep your integrity. Stay true to who you are. Job chose not to sin. He chose not to blame God. He chose not to let hatred, his own grief or the turnabout in his wife to take away the one thing he was still holding onto — his faith in God.

Suffering is not always easy. Our faith in God and His faithfulness to us makes it possible to endure suffering.

Conflict leads to more conflict

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Conflict! Expect it in every marriage. However, when many couples think about having a disagreement with their spouse it often brings up uncomfortable feelings: yelling, name calling, throwing objects, even hitting. One husband told me, "I avoid conflict at any cost." Avoiding conflict can only lead to more conflict because the issues never get addressed let alone resolved. There are far too many couples who fail to work out their problems just because they are afraid of conflict.

Dr. Howard Markman, director of the University of Denver's Center for Marital and Family Studies, made the observation that husbands are the ones most prone to avoiding conflict. John Grottman stated it this way, "In a sea of conflict, women swim and men sink." The good news is that it does not have to be that way. While you may not always get what you want, you and your spouse can learn ways to be with one another so that you each get most of what you want and need. This may mean facing the possibility of starting a fight.

There are those couples who have learned to fight successfully simply by following some simple rules:

- Listen as well as talk.
- Give and take.
- Look for solutions, not a personal victory.
- Paraphrase what your spouse is telling you to let them know you've heard them correctly.
- Call a time out when things get heated or you become stuck.
- No verbal, emotional or physical abuse.
- Don't let the sun go down on your anger.
- Encourage your spouse to say what he or she wants.

Do not get discouraged when you have a conflict with your spouse; instead keep talking and listening to each other and look for areas of agreement. Above all else don't let conflicts build up, deal with them while they are still small.

If you would like to learn how to communicate effectively with your spouse, contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-2050.

Sunday school meets — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at Edward A. White School on First Division Road from 9:30 until 10:30 a.m. There are classes for students two years of age through adults. Everyone is invited. Child watchcare for children younger than two, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School, is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel. If you need a ride to Sunday School, contact the Religious Education Center, 545-4715, and a bus will be scheduled to pick you up.

Protestant Youth of the Chapel conducts meeting — Senior High Youth of the Chapel meet every Sunday from 4 to 6 p.m. at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Chaplain and Mrs. Dave Baum lead the group. All senior highs are invited.

PWOC — The next meeting of the Protestant Women of the Chapel will be at Custer Terrace Chapel at 9:30 a.m. July 8. All ladies are invited to attend for Bible study, Prayer, praise and fellowship.

Vacation Bible School set — Vacation Bible School will be June 14-18, from 9:30 a.m. until noon at Edward A. White School on First Division Road. There will be classes for four-year-olds through those who have completed middle school or junior high. The theme this year is "We Shine For Jesus." The program will include Bible study, music, recreation, crafts and refreshments.

There will also be two adult classes for parents who bring their children and wish to stay for a class and wait for their children. One adult class will study parenting, and the other will be a marriage enrichment class. Chaplains will teach both of these classes.

Each child is asked to bring one package or box of cookies on the first day of Vacation Bible School. These will be pooled for refreshments for the balance of the week. See this page next week for a bus schedule. Volunteers are still needed in several positions.

Church holds Pre-Marriage Seminar — There will be a pre-marriage seminar at 1 p.m. June 13 at the Custer Terrace Chapel. Attendance at the seminar is required for couples planning to be married in the Catholic Church. To register call 545-5508.

Chapel needs organist - The Fund Custodian is accepting applications for contracts as chapel organist. Qualified organists who are interested in this contract should contact Staff Sgt. Jones in Room 512, Infantry Hall, or call 545-4960.

ask the judge

Capt. Stephanie Sanderson
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My husband was deployed to Kuwait during the first week of April. We did not have a chance to file our taxes before he left. Usually we receive a refund, but if we do owe money this time will we be charged penalties and interest?

The quick answer to your question is no. If you and your husband have a balance due return (when you owe money to the IRS) you will not be charged penalities or interest because your husband is serving in a combat zone. Here's why.

Individuals outside the United States

A taxpayer is allowed an automatic two-month extension (until June 15, 1999) to file a 1998 return and pay any federal income tax due if:

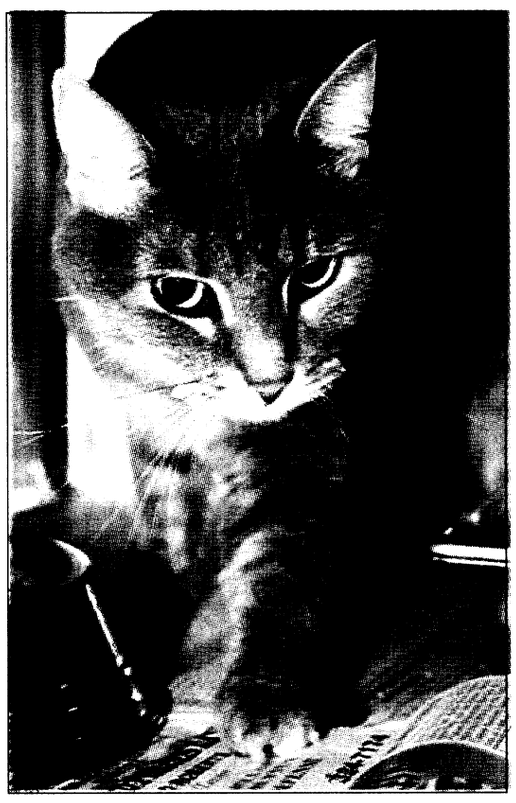
•the taxpayer is a U.S. citizen or resident, and

•on April 15,1999 (the due date of the return, the taxpayer was living outside the U.S. and Puerto Rico and his or her main place of business or post of duty is outside the U.S. and Puerto Rico or the taxpayer is in military or naval service on duty outside the U.S. and Puerto Rico.

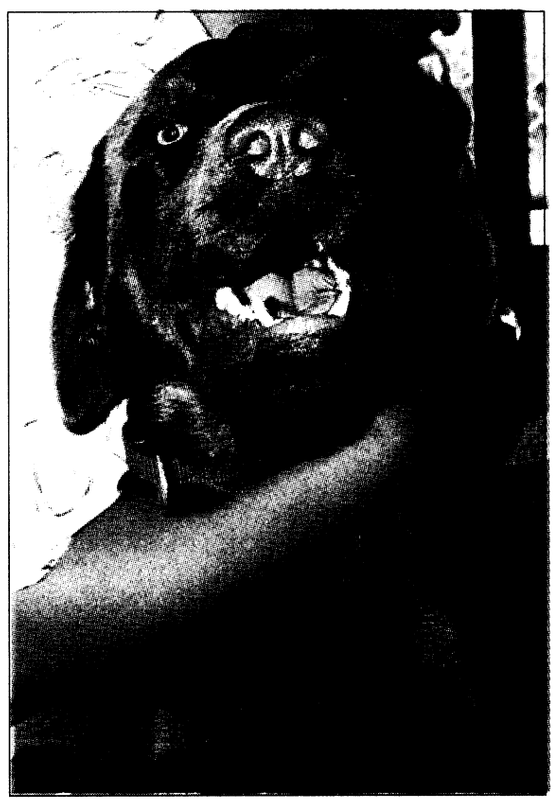
Although the taxpayer is not charged a penalty for paying the tax due after the regular due date, interest will be charged from the regular due date the tax is paid. To receive this automatic extension, the taxpayer must attach a statement to the tax return explaining how he or she qualifies for the extension.

If the taxpayer cannot file his or her tax return within the automatic two-month extension period, they may be able to receive an additional two-month extension. The taxpayer must file Form 4868, Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income tax return, by the end of the automatic extension period (usually June 15, 1999) to receive the additional two-month extension. However, this additional two-month extension of time to file is not an extension of time to pay.

Individuals serving in combat zone



If taxpayer serves in a combat zone or a qualified hazardous duty area, deadlines are also automatically extended. This applies to members of the Armed Forces as well as Red Cross personnel, accredited correspondents and civilians under the direction of the Armed Forces.



Presently there are two combat zones, Desert Storm effective January 17, 1991 and Allied Force effective March 24, 1999 and a qualified hazardous area; Bosnia, Herzegovina, Croatia and Macedonia effective Nov. 21, 1995.

The deadline for filing the tax return is extended for at least 180 days after the later of the last day you are in a combat zone (or the last day the area qualifies as a combat zone), or the last day of any continuous qualified hospitalization for injury from service in the combat zone. (Qualified hospitalization is hospitalization which resulted from an injury received while serving in the combat zone.) In addition to the 180 days, the deadline is also extended by the number of days the taxpayer had left to file when he or she entered the combat zone in December 1999, before the time to take action began, the service member has 180 days, plus three and half months to file.

The deadline extension provision applies filing any income tax return; pay any income tax; filing a claim for credit or refund of any tax; making a qualified IRA contribution, etc. No penalties or interest will be imposed for failure to file a return or pay taxes during the extension period. Moreover, the IRS will pay interest on a refund from the due date of the return if the return is timely filed after applying the deadline extension.

If you have any questions about the information provided in this article or other tax related topics, please contacts the Legal Assistance office at 545-3281 and make an appointment to speak with an attorney.

Mechanic makes All Army team

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

All Army track team member Jason Umberger practices Wednesday.

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The alarm sounds on his watch as he rounds the final turn on the track. He knows that it is time to call this training session over, because in eight short hours he has to get up and do it all again.

The rigorous routine that mixes Soldiering and athletics is one that Jason Umberger lives with daily, and one that has transformed this 20-year-old from a former high school runner to an All Army athletic stand-out.

Umberger, a member of the 1999 All Army Track Team and a mechanic assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, earned his slot on this year's All Army team after devoting every day of his life to training both on and off the track.

"Sometimes I won't get home until 9 or 9:30 at night," Umberger said about his seven-day-a-week training schedule. "With working all day at the motorpool and training out here for the team, I find that sometimes things do come up a little short, but I fit everything in I can."

Doing everything he can is nothing unusual for this track superstar. Ever since he was a small child, Umberger said he has loved to run and has done everything possible to improve his running ability.

"When I was a small kid, I remember how I loved to go fast and just smoke everybody," he said. "I still have that love today. I still love that rush I get from going faster than anyone else."

Faster is a word that many have used to describe the six-foot-tall Bradley Fighting Vehicle mechanic by day and runner by night as he has taken the All Army running circuit by storm.

Umberger logged multiple wins during this year's running schedule with a top-place finish at the premier military running event of the year, the Armed Forces Competition.

"The competition is what we train for all season," he said during practice on Wednesday. "All of the rest of the meets are just practice for this one."

Practice paid off for the seasoned specialist who logged meet wins in events ranging from the 100 meter run to the 400 meter run.

"I was pleased with the finish over the rest of the competition," he said. "All of the hard work and motivation continues to pay."

That hard work, he said, will help to fuel his future plans of transforming the All Army status to World Class.

"I have worked so hard, and everyday I continue to maintain the mental and physical discipline to continue to train, so that one day day, I will be a World Class athlete," he said. "It has been a goal of mine, and I will make that happen."

Although the 1999 season has come to a close, Umberger said he was slated to participate in yet one more running challenge this year.

He will participate in the 1999 International Military games, a series of military athletic competitions among different military organizations worldwide. This year the games will be held in Croatia.

"When deep down you want something, I mean really, really want something, you will work hard to get it," he said. "Becoming a world class athlete is one of those things for me."

Atlanta Falcons address students

Hard work and dedication are the keys to making dreams come true, according to Atlanta Falcons linebacker Jesse Tuggle.

Tuggle and his teammate, running-back Gary Downs, addressed students at Fort Benning's Loyd Elementary School Wednesday during the athletes' visit to Columbus.

According to Tuggle, who has been a Falcon for some 12 years, he desired to be the first in his family to graduate from college. After receiving a diploma from Griffin High School, Tuggle went on to Valdosta State College, where he was recruited by the Falcons as a junior.

Tuggle described attending football camp as a prospective Falcon, where he experienced tremendous competition for a place on the team.

"When it came time for the final cut, I was very nervous about making the team," Tuggle said. "It turned out I was one of only eight lucky linebackers to be picked."

Twelve years later, Tuggle said he is a big believer in goal-setting for success.

"The Falcons haven't done very well in the past and this made me want to work harder and be the best that I could be," Tuggle said. He added the Falcons' successful 1998 season and their trip to the Superbowl were the result of a team whose hard work finally paid off.

"It was a dream come true just to be there," Tuggle said. "Everyone doubted us. They didn't think we could go to the Superbowl. We believed we could. There's no substitution for hard work and no matter what anybody tells you, if you believe in yourself and your abilities, you can do anything."

Tuggle advised the students to keep reaching for their goals and told them to stay in school. He said he returned to Valdosta State after playing football for a few years to receive his diploma, a moment he describes as his greatest achievement.

"Have dreams and have goals," Tuggle said. "To me, a goal is a path. While you go through life, stay on the right paths and they will take you where you want to go. Education is something that nobody can take away from you. It is the key to become and do anything you want to do."

Downs agreed, advising the students to pay attention to their teachers and their parents and to "aspire to dream big."

According to Downs, who graduated from Spencer High School in 1990, returning to his hometown to inspire children is a dream come true.

"I don't get a lot of opportunities to come back, but I think it's important to let the kids know that you can do whatever you want to do," Downs said. "Many pro athletes don't make the time to go back home and show other kids that dreams do come true."

In order to enable hometown athletes to serve their communities, Downs helped to create the HomeTown Heroes Youth Foundation, an organization that works to inspire young people to become productive, contributing members of society.

Joined by athletes from various professional sports, the organization cooperates with public school systems to coordinate motivational speakers and youth development seminars, sponsor post-secondary education scholarship awards and recruit aspiring student athletes for sports camps.

"I believe that current and former professional athletes, because of their celebrity, are in a position to serve the community as mentors to help guide youth over the hurdles of growing up," Downs said. "The mission of HomeTown Heroes is to serve as a resource for the development of young people through community outreach and involvement."

Healthy eating, lifestyle important to overall health

Capt. Kelli M. Metzger
William Beaumont Army Medical Center, Texas

Healthy eating and an active lifestyle are both important to overall health and well being. Many people still have difficulty making changes in their lifestyle, though. Lack of time, willpower, information or energy; cost; taste; and habits are some of the reasons given for not making changes.

Perhaps the first step toward adopting healthy lifestyle behaviors is to assess what you are currently doing. With your eating habits in mind, do you:

•Consider nutrition when making food choices?

•Use the Food Guide Pyramid as a guide for making healthy food choices? (That means consuming 6-11 servings from the grain group, 2-4 servings from the fruit group, 3-5 servings from the vegetable group, 6-8 ounces of meat or meat substitutes, 2-3 servings from the dairy group, and taking sweets, fats, and alcohol in moderation.)

Consider keeping a dietary intake record for a period of three to seven days to give you a better overview of your eating habits. If you decide to do this, write down everything you eat for those days you are recording.

As you think about these areas in your life, let's revisit the Dietary Guidelines Alliance's "It's All About You" campaign messages. Americans are encouraged to:

Be realistic. Make small changes over time in what you eat and the level of activity you do. Give yourself time to develop new habits: don't expect your behavior to change overnight. To satisfy a sweet tooth without the fat, try fruit as a snack rather than cookies, cake or candy. To boost your fiber intake and strive toward the goal of 20-35 grams of fiber per day, switch to a whole-grain bread or cereal. To start decreasing fat in your diet, cut the amount of salad dressing or mayonnaise used by half or switch to a reduced fat version.

Be adventurous. Expand your tastes to include a variety of foods. Choose an entree that is broiled or grilled rather than fried. Strive to eat the number of servings recommended from each food group in the Food Guide Pyramid (recommended number of servings is listed earlier in the article).

Be flexible. Balance what you eat and the physical activity you do over several days. No need to worry about just one meal or one day. Eat a lighter breakfast and lunch to plan for "pizza with the works" for dinner. For healthy meals and snacks on the go, fill a cooler with sandwiches made with lean meats and low-fat toppings, raw vegetables, fresh fruits and skim milk rather than relying on fast food restaurants. When eating at fast food restaurants, order a small burger, roast-beef sandwich, or chicken sandwich, grilled if available, rather than the deluxe version. Also, to cut fast-food meals fat and calories, choose small fries, small milkshake or dessert — not all of them.

Be sensible. Enjoy all foods: just don't overdo it. Enjoy your steak twice as much. Eat half in the restaurant and take the rest home to enjoy the next day. To help control portions at mealtime, place food on a smaller plate than usual. To control snack portions, serve them on a small plate or in a small bowl rather than eating directly from the bag.

Be active. Walk the dog; don't just watch the dog walk. You don't need expensive equipment or health club memberships to exercise — get moving whenever and wherever you can. Keep active around the house: sweep the garage, scrub the floors, vacuum the rugs or trim the shrubs. It all helps you get fit, and the house will look great too. Ask a friend or family member to join you in regular walks, bike rides, in line skating or other activities.

As you think about eating and exercise habits you want to change, remember to be realistic. Just make a change or two at a time, and be patient because new habits take time to develop. Also, a week or two of healthier eating or increased exercise may pass before you see any loss of weight or inches or before you start to feel you have more energy.

The tips provided above are a good place to start, but some people may require more structured guidelines.

Supplements: health or hype?

Spc. Melissa Mallory
Brooke Army Medical Center

What are dietary supplements?

Optimal fitness from protein powders, youth in a bottle, thinner thighs from a rubbing cream, lose 10 pounds in three days. No wonder people turn to dietary supplements with the expectation of instant results. People need little convincing that supplements are important to balance their dietary intake and give them that competitive edge in the sports arena or everyday life.

The definition of a dietary supplement is quite broad because of the Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act of 1994. Dietary supplements include vitamins, minerals, herbs, teas, hormones, amino acids, enzymes, proteins and other botanicals that are considered natural or safe and provide nutrients. Sports drinks, ergogenic aids or performance supplements, herbal teas and bodybuilding supplements also fall under the category of dietary supplements.

People use supplements for various reasons. Here are the three main reasons for their use: People assume that supplements help avoid nutritional deficiencies. Many people do not eat a balanced diet therefore; supplements are viewed as a nutritional insurance and are assumed as safe.

People also take supplements to provide supplements that are only found in trace amounts in foods. For example, chromium is an essential element needed for normal carbohydrate metabolism. Most chromium-stimulated reactionare also insulin dependent. Foods rich in chromium are liver, brewer's yeast, whole grains and nuts. It's been shown that many people do not consume the appropriate amount of chromium through their diets, thus leaving them in a deficient state. Therefore, many people would feel a need to use a chromium supplement even though a balanced diet can supply all the nutrients the human body needs.

The third reason people use supplements is because they believe the concept that the more active you are, the harder you workout, the more you push yourself to the limits ... the more your body needs. If you don't fuel your body with foods for the needed additional nutrients, you must get those nutrients from some form of supplements. This is not an established reason. A balanced diet is the key.

Dietary supplements: reliable or risky?

The fact that millions of Americans take dietary supplements should not be a surprising statement ... the proof is in the billions earned each year by the supplement industry. The problem is that lack of regulation makes it easier for misleading advertising to pull more consumers into the supplement hype. So, How can you be sure the weight-loss pills, herbal tea, protein powder and sports drink you bought, as a health aid, is safe or even necessary?

Regulation of supplements

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) does not approve supplements. The FDA can only get involved if an advertiser or company places a "drug claim" on a supplement label or if the supplement poses potential harm or even death. An example of a drug claim would be making the product look like a cure for cancer or some other life-threatening disease that requires serious medical treatment.

Since the FDA's hands are tied, manufacturers can advertise their product on the radio, television, in magazines, books and on billboards. Basically, they can advertise anywhere as long as no claims are printed on the actual label of the product. Along with this freedom in advertising, the marketer does not have to prove the supplement's safe before it is sold to the public. This leaves the door wide open for even more miraculous claims. If a supplement or ingredient becomes questionable, the responsibility of proof falls into the hands of the FDA. Whether a product is safe is not an issue until the product or one of the ingredients causes harm to its users. Dietary supplements should be treated as drugs.

How can you know if a supplement is safe?

The bottom line when buying dietary supplements is simply "Buyer Beware." Most of these supplements are sold by testimonials and are not based on scientific research. The best source of information on the use of supplements is credible scientific journals; professionals in the science field like botanist, chemists, pharmacologists and other health related fields. A dietitian, as well as your health care provider, can also help you obtain credible information on the use of supplements. Don't rely on the advertising gimmicks that portray a "miracle within a month". Don't fall for the hype, instead, use some common sense. There is no such thing as getting thinner thighs by rubbing cream on them, or finding youth in a bottle. If this were true, nearly everyone would be thin and old age would be an old dream from "yester-year."

Be smart. There are many products that are still being researched while being sold on the shelves. New information surfaces daily, so stay informed.

Get the facts. It's up to you to make good choices with realistic expectations.

Tips help consumers buy proper-fitting shoes

Maj. Joseph J. Molloy
U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy

When buying shoes, be aware of shoe fit and whether you will be wearing the shoe just for exercise or throughout the day.

Remind yourself that feet swell as the day progresses. If you only wear your running shoes in the morning during PT (physical training), purchase shoes in the morning. If you wear them at different times during the day, purchase shoes in the afternoon when feet are larger.

Try on shoes with the socks that you normally wear when exercising or running. These socks may be considerably thicker than the socks you would wear with dress shoes.

However, women who wear heels throughout the day should consider a running shoe with a relatively higher heel to minimize strain on the Achilles tendon.

If you wear arch supports or orthotic devices, try shoes on while wearing these devices. You may require a shoe with a high heel counter to prevent your heel from slipping out of the shoe.

You may also require a larger or wider shoe to accommodate the orthotic device. By removing the innersole provided with the shoes, there may be additional room fit for arch supports or orthotic devices. This should provide a better fit.

With the ball of your foot on a flat surface, you should not be able to raise your heel out of the shoe. The heel should fit firmly without any irritation or rubbing. A good shoe should provide a firm heel counter for maximal support. While holding the shoe, place your thumb and index finger around the heel. Squeeze your fingers together. A sufficiently firm heel counter will prevent your fingers from touching each other.

Furthermore, a good shoe bends where the foot bends (at the ball of the foot).

You should be able to wiggle your toes in the shoe, but the foot shouldn't slip forward or from side to side in the shoe. The ball of the foot should not press firmly upward against the top of the shoe nor outward against the sides of the shoe.

While standing, check the distance between the end of the longest toe — not necessarily the big toe — of each foot and the front of the shoe. The distance should be not less than one half the width of your thumbnail, nor more than the entire width of the thumbnail. However, most people have one foot that is slightly longer than the other. This distance may differ slightly for each foot.

The shoe is too narrow for your foot if the upper (nylon portion) bulges over the sides of the sole. It's too wide if you have more than half a finger's width of space between the side of your foot (at the ball of the foot) and the side of the shoe.

Some national brands make shoes in lettered widths, while others make certain models in narrow, medium and wide widths.

In general, women have narrower feet than men. Also, they have narrower heels relative to the forefoot than men do.

Women require shoes that have narrower heels, a higher arch and a wider toe box.

Furthermore, your size may vary when wearing shoes of different manufacturers or even when wearing different styles made by the same manufacturer. Someone who normally wears size 9 1/2 may wear size 9 or 10 in certain shoe styles. Remember to try shoes on before purchasing.

The Roth IRA: What You Should Know

(NAPSA)-An IRA-Individual Retirement Account-may help you lower your tax bill while you save for your retirement. 1998 saw changes in the regulations that govern Roth IRAs. Here are some facts you should know.

Who was Roth? The Roth IRA is named for U.S. Senator William Roth Jr. of Delaware, who introduced the legislation creating it as part of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1977. Roth IRAs became available to the public in 1998.

How is the Roth IRA different from a Traditional IRA?

Created in 1974, a Traditional IRA is available to anyone under age 701/2 who earns income from full-time or part-time work. Contributions to an IRA account-up to $2,000 a year if you do not participate in a retirement plan-are tax deductible.

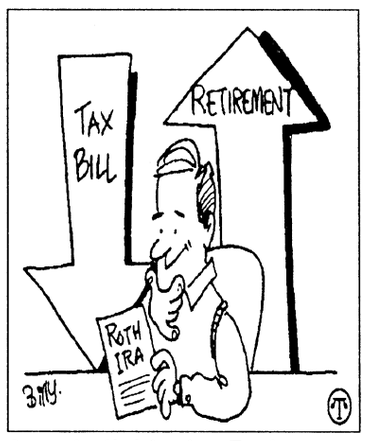
Tax on your earnings from the IRA is deferred. You pay no federal tax on earnings until you start to withdraw money from your IRA.

You can withdraw funds from your traditional IRA account without penalty once you turn 591/2. You must begin withdrawing funds by April 1 of the calendar year after you reach 701/2.

If you take money from your traditional IRA account before you reach 59 1/2, that money is taxed as ordinary income and is subject to a 10 percent penalty on the amount withdrawn.

With the Roth IRA your contributions to the account are not tax deductible, but the earnings based on your contributions are tax free when you withdraw them. The Roth IRA has no age ceiling, and you may contribute up to $2,000 per year.

There are eligibility restrictions to your $2,000 contribution which is phased out if your Adjusted Gross Income (AGI) is between $95,000-$110,000 for single filers and between $150,000-$160,000 for joint filers. No contribution can be made for single filers with an AGI over $110,000 or joint filers with an AGI over $160,000.



You may take funds from a Roth without penalty once you turn 591/2 or for a first time home purchase and you have had the account for at least five years.

Unlike a traditional IRA, you do not have to start withdrawing funds once you reach age 701/2. If you withdraw funds from the account before you reach 591/2 only the earnings will be taxed as ordinary income and will be subject to a 10 percent tax.

However, any withdrawal that comes from your contributions to the account is not subject to tax or penalty.

What are the key changes in the regulations governing the Roth? In 1998 some investors were able to realize tax savings by moving funds they had converted from a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA back to a traditional and then reconverting to a Roth.

In 1999, investors can claim only one re-conversion. From 2000 and after, investors may not reconvert in the same tax year.

An Individual Retirement Account may help you lower your tax bill while you save for your retirement.

With this and other new regulations in place it can be difficult to determine which IRA is best for your personal financial situation. Federated Investors offers a slide rule that compares the Roth and the Traditional IRA based on your personal information such as your age and anticipated tax bracket at retirement. You can call Federated at 1-800-341-7400 and ask for number G01919-04.

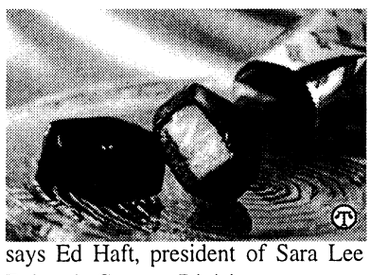
When It Comes To Indulgence, Americans Aren't Skimping



(NAPSA)-Gone are the days of no-fat and no-taste foods. Americans today aren't willing to sacrifice taste for fewer calories and fat.

Unlike the early 90's when the country was into total fat-avoidance, people today want to treat themselves with totally indulgent, high quality foods.

Recent statistics from Roper Research Worldwide show that 54 percent of Americans eat and drink what they want despite nutritional value, 40 percent say they aren't sacrificing taste for lower calories, and one of the top ten most desired indulgences among women is eating special desserts.

Companies like Sara Lee are responding to consumers' desire for indulgence. It's bakery division announces the national introduction of its new cheesecake lines: Cheesecake Bites, a great grab-and-go snack, Cheesecake Singles, a decadent dessert for two; and New York Style Cheesecake, a convenient dessert to serve guests anytime.

"Today, the trend indicates that Americans want to indulge themselves in the best-tasting foods, however, they don't have time with the busy lifestyles they lead. This is why Sara Lee has created a convenient way for people to provide friends, family and themselves with quality tasting desserts-straight from the freezer," says Ed Haft, president of Sara Lee Bakery's Grocery Division.

Even companies like Jenny Craig now profess that healthy eating is about balancing choices and indulging in moderation. Nabisco has added more fat to its low-fat Snackwell's line. Ice-cream and flavored milk producers, such as Dean Foods have seen sales increases as much as 300 percent in some markets, specifically with its new chocolate flavored Milk Chugs.

Cheesecake Bites are available in Chocolate-Dipped Praline Pecan, Toasted Almond Crunch and Chocolate-Dipped Original varieties, individually wrapped in boxes of 10; Cheesecake Singles in Strawberry Drizzle, Caramel Chocolate Pecan and Fudge Brownie Crumble flavors, packaged two per box and New York Style in three full-size flavors of Classic, Chocolate-Chip Cookie Crumble and Mixed Berry Swirl. Bites and Singles retail at approximately $3.79 per package and New York Style Cheesecake retails at $6.49 per package; all are available in the frozen dessert section at retailers nationwide.

Agriculture and the Environment: A Growing Partnership

(NAPSA)-American agriculture is the steward of nearly a billion acres of farm, ranch and private forest land, covering more than 40 percent of the United States. Every day, American farmers and ranchers protect soil, water, and other precious natural resources and successfully address environmental challenges.

To further encourage environmental achievement, a private-public coalition called the Ag-Earth Partnership recognizes the many hard-working people and partnerships. Through year-round activities as well as national and state-level celebrations culminating on each Earth Day, April 22, the partnership pledges a public rededication to building on conservation successes through innovative approaches that conserve natural resources and protect the environment.

In 1999, the Ag-Earth Partnership is honoring:

• At the age of 22, Gail Joseph Phipps, a Converse, Indiana FFA chapter member, has already helped his family adopt conservation practices that saved more than 3200 tons of soil on their 750-acre family farm.

• Frank Depta, a Southern States Cooperative Certified Crop Advisor, is helping farmer members on the Delmarva Peninsula manage poultry litter to enhance crop yields while protecting the Chesapeake Bay.

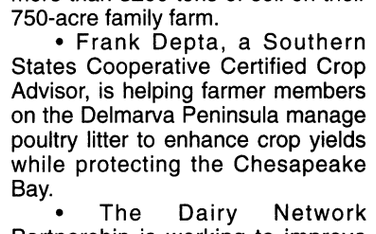
• The Dairy Network Partnership is working to improve environmental quality while enhancing the profitability of Pennsylvania dairy farms.

• Real Christmas trees are finding new lives as mulch for hiking trails, fish habitat and more thanks to the work of farmers like Jim Corliss of Newburgh, Maine.

• Project Alliance in Iowa's Raccoon River watershed includes 30 different organizations that have worked to help 2,500 farmers in adopting best management practices to protect water quality.

• Madison, Wisconsin pork producers Bob and Fred Uphoff lead by example on their 500-acre farm, helping craft new environmental policies now being adopted across the nation.

• Matador Cattle Company of Dillon, Montana nurtures a home to antelope and bald eagles while increasing productivity.



• Lynda and Kirby Beam showcase the value of the American Forest & Paper Association's Sustainable Forestry Initiative on their Savannah, Georgia farm that hosts 99 species of trees.

• In partnership with The Conservation Fund, Cargill employees are volunteering in more than 150 water conservation, education and protection projects in localities like Saginaw, Texas, where at-risk students are provided increased learning opportunities.

• The Mississippi Fish and Wildlife Foundation is demonstrating the compatibility between farming and fishing and wildlife management, planting 622,120 hardwood seedlings in bottomland and providing seed to plant 18,424 acres of food plots for wildlife in 1999.

• Tri Valley Growers' wetlands conservation program includes 312 acres of seasonal wetlands and

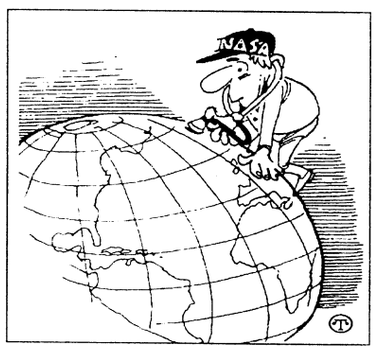
Understanding Our Environment

Down-To-Earth Use For Space Technology

(NAPSA)-If the idea of measuring the vital signs for our environment, our weather, our air, our water and our land use sounds out of this world, it is.

Since its creation in 1958, NASA has been studying the earth and its environment from space. Using NASA satellites, scientists are able to get a better handle on such vital information as hurricane tracking, earthquake analysis, ozone layer measurement, and how human activity affects plant and animal life.



NASA's Earth Science Enterprise is helping us explore our world, the way it works, and the role people play in the future of our planet.

One result of this effort is that a scientist at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center recently received an Exceptional Space Act Award for his invention of a unique way to analyze moving data and images.

The scientist, Dr. Norden Huang explains, "I discovered the Hilbert-Huang Transformation Method by chance, while performing research using conventional methods which are based on linear, stationary assumptions. The world is not stationary and many phenomena studied by scientists are the result of nonlinear processes." Today, Harvard doctors are using Huang's method to study sleep apnea and epileptic seizures.

The patented analysis method is also being used to study climate change, earthquakes, submarine construction, bridge building and the human brain and cardiovascular system, among other things.

You can learn more about this project and all the other ways the space agency works to monitor, understand and preserve the earth from www.earth.nasa.gov on the World Wide Web.

Heads Up: Dr. Norden Huang, a NASA scientist, has devised a way to take the pulse of constantly moving waves-and measure normal blood pressure too.

More than 400 Infantry leaders attended the three-day event which was held in Infantry Hall.

Reservists join ITB team

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

Saturday, 18 cadre members from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, a reserve component of 1st Brigade, 84th Division will arrive at Fort Benning for two weeks of training.

During that time they will train Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) and assume responsibility for new Infantry recruits who are beginning training cycle 99-3.

"The Infantry Training Brigade has a habitual training relationship with the 1st Bde., 84th Div.," according to Lt. Col. Dennis Bundy, commander of 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. "The go-to-war mission of the 1st Bde., 84th Div., is to train Soldiers who are going to become Infantrymen in One Station Unit Training — just like ITB."

Every year the brigade sends its companies to Fort Benning to join 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. for two weeks of active duty training. The headquarters for 1st Bde., 84th Div., is located in Livonia, Mich., and companies are spread out through Michigan and Indiana.

Training cycle 99-3 is a 14-week increment that will see trainees from day one to graduation as Infantrymen. Every two weeks during this cycle, a new company of reservists from 1st Bde., 84th Div. will assume responsibility for Co. E, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

"The reserve company commander and first sergeant are in charge for these two weeks. They are in charge of the training and everything else that goes on and they are held responsible," Bundy said. At the end of the two-week period Bundy evaluates the reserve company's performance and sends a written after action review (AAR) back to that company's battalion commander.

In April, the battalion hosted a Reserve Mobile Training Team and all of the reserve company commanders for cycle 99-3 came to Fort Benning accompanied by a senior NCO. During this time the reservists sat down with the leadership of the battalion and planned what they were going to be doing during their time on Sand Hill. They were then able to return to their companies and prepare their training.

While they are at Fort Benning the reserve companies will work with the permanent active duty leadership of Co. E. According to Capt. Ted Qualls, Co. E commander, there will be some companies that already have experience and will not need a great deal of mentoring, but there will be some for whom much is new. In many ways Qualls will be acting as an observer and controller for the visiting units.

"I know they are in the military just like I am and they are going to take great care of the company." Qualls said. "The first sergeant, the cadre, the eight drill sergeants I have here permanently — we are the continuity factor to make sure that everything is up to standard. For that company commander, this is his time to shine."

The reserve units play an important role in the mission of the 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., according to Bundy. Although the battalion has five companies, it is only permanently manned with enough Soldiers for four.

"I could not do my job in 1-19 without the reservists. They are part of the team. They do a great job and are very professional," Bundy said.

Reserve units from 1st Bde., 84th Div., will continue to cycle through the battalion for the rest of the year. Not only will it welcome seven different companies during training cycle 99-3, but it will also be joined by the battalion staff of 2nd Battalion, 333rd Infantry Regiment, also a reserve component of the 1st Bde., 84th Div.

During the first week that they are at Fort Benning the reserve staff will work directly with their counterparts at the 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., and during the second week they will be directly responsible for the battalion.

This fall, Bundy will travel to headquarters, 1st Bde., 84th Div. and present an AAR concerning all the companies and the battalion staff that have been part of the 1st Bn. 19th Inf. Regt. this summer.

Values training continues

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

They are seven different words, yet together they form the foundation the Army is built upon. They are the Army values — loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage.

It has been more than a year since the Army began teaching Initial Entry Training Soldiers these guiding principles. Oct. 1 marks the one year anniversary that basic combat training was extended to nine weeks, allowing extra time to focus on these seven values along with human relations and physical training.

But, it doesn't stop there. Everything the Soldiers do throughout their training involves Army values and eventually when they go on to their units it will be present there too, said Lt. Col. Dennis Bundy, commander of the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

"The Army values are in everything we do," Bundy said. "From road marches and ranges to counseling and ceremonies, it all relates to the Army values. So, it's not just something we teach them, it's a part of everyday lives."

"We tell them it doesn't stop here and stress to them how important it is to take these values with them for the rest of their lives."

Bundy explained that each week drill sergeants focus on one value. For example, if respect was the value of focus, every day throughout the week the drill sergeant would take time to talk about that value. He may cite incidences of heroism or use vignettes to reinforce it.

Staff Sgt. Dewayne White, a drill sergeant for Company E, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. said after each training event he will pick an Army value that coincides with the training and talk about it. He said his philosophy is, "The more you preach it, the more they will respond."

As far as values training goes, White said it is definitely a good thing to have, especially at the beginning of training.

"A lot of Soldiers don't come here with a set of good values, and to instill something in them is a start," White said. "So many of them come in the Army and all they know about it is what they see on TV. And for them to know that we have these Army values gives them a reason for being here. Then it's not just about doing a job while they are in, it's about much more."

Over the last year, Bundy said he has received a lot of positive feedback about the values training.

"It's great. I do a sensing session with each company at the end of every cycle, where I get to talk to about 15 Soldiers and ask them what they think about the training. Most of them think it's great. In fact I've heard some say they wish they would have learned about these values earlier."

Making values based training mandatory was a great idea, Bundy said, because it shows the Soldiers just how important the values are.

Retired paratrooper brings Airborne legacy to trainees

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

He watches as the final stick of paratroopers leap from the aircraft above Fryar Drop Zone and descend to the ground below, finishing their last jump of Airborne training.

They have done it, and the joy in their eyes remind him of the same joy he had 55 years ago when he completed his final training jump only months before being sent to fight in World War II.

This appearance at the drop zone is not an uncommon one for 73-year-old Charlie Butler to make. In fact, it is not unusual for Butler to be seen even meandering through the hordes of troops on a daily basis laughing and joking with the newest members of what he calls one of the most elite groups in the world, the Airborne community.

"These students are like family — they are like my grandkids," he said while attending a graduation ceremony June 3. "These kids come from all over the United States, and for many of them, this is the first time they have been away from home. I think I help them deal with that. I guess you could say I am like the grandfather."

Butler was awarded for that family-like dedication to the Airborne community during an Airborne graduation ceremony held June 3 on Fryar Field with a Commander's Award for Public Service issued by Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

"I think the wife and I can find some where to put it," he said humbly after the ceremony.

Butler's more than half of a century service to the Airborne community began shortly after his 18th birthday when he was drafted into the ranks of the World War II era Army. Although he knew he would be called upon to serve overseas, little did he know that only days after graduating Airborne School, he would jump into Holland with the 82nd Airborne Division.

"After seeing all of the news reels and such at the movie theaters, I thought I knew what I was facing, but I could have never been prepared for it really," he said.

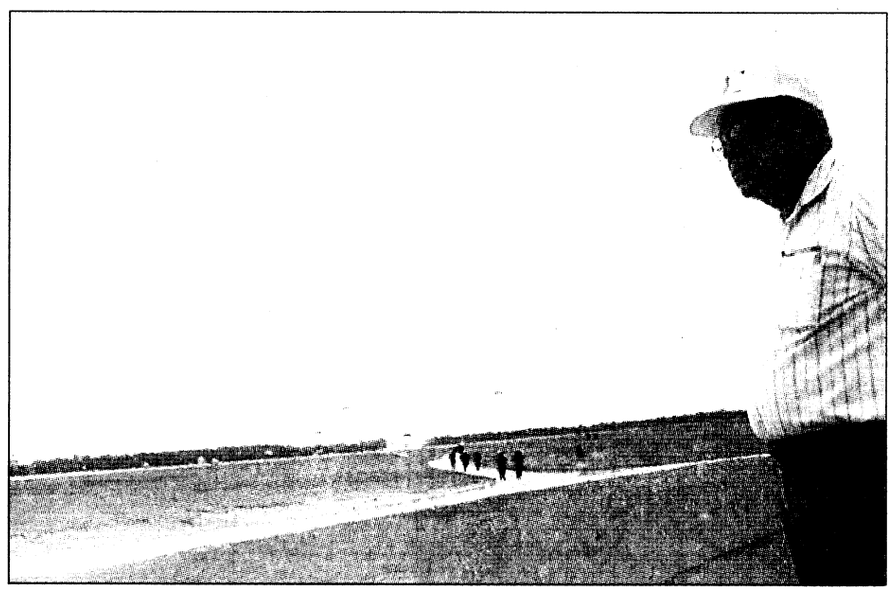
Butler recalled those first couple of hours when he was called upon to jump into Holland on Sunday, September 17, 1944.

"I will never forget when we were on the way in, and I saw a couple of our planes get shot down. I never realized the danger we were in. I guess I was just too ignorant to realize what was really going on."

Butler found himself in the middle of a fire fight and shortly ended up in the nearest aid station after being hit with shrapnel from an anti-aircraft round.

"I was lucky," he said after revealing the scar mark on his forehead. "The shrapnel entered my helmet and bounced around before coming out between my eyes."

"It just broke the skin and bled pretty bad, but all it left really was a scar," he added.



Patched up and cleaned up, Butler returned to the battle with a Purple Heart, a Combat Infantryman's Badge and a combat jump identifier, but he said it wasn't about badges and awards.

"We did it because we had to," he said. "It was expected of us, so that is what we did."

Butler spent 57 days in Holland before moving on to his next deployment.

While assigned to the 82nd Airborne Division, Butler would fight in the battle of the Bulge and throughout many locations around the world, but in his 28 years and one month of service, he said he loves what he is doing now probably the most.

"I love to go and tell the new students the way things used to be and maybe throw in a couple of my war stories just to keep them entertained," he said. "I see a little bit of myself in every one of them." ◆

Family vacations leave lasting impressions

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

"Are we there yet?"
"How much farther?"
If you are like many people this summer, these questions will soon be echoed in the family grocery getter as you take to the highways and byways to find that special great American getaway spot. But is a family getaway really a getaway?

commentary

I've often looked back at my family vacations and wondered how in the world my parents could have possibly called the family vacation a vacation. Don't get me wrong, I had a great time. I got to be spoiled by Grandma and Grandpa, annoy my older sister and stay up until the early hours of morning just to get up and do it all over again the next day.

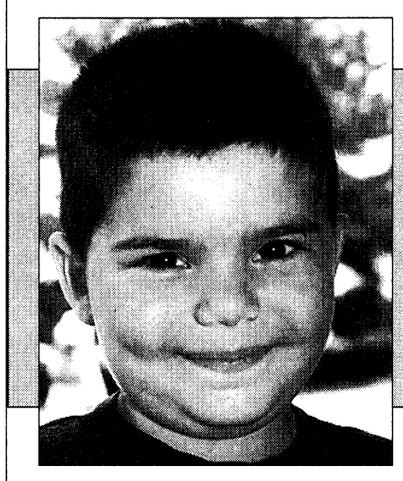
But the question of the reality of this being a vacation doesn't lie on my part, it is my parents that I wonder about. I mean, they are the ones who planned and planned for these things months in advance. They drove all the way from Indiana to Florida with me and my sister in the back seat fighting over whose side of the car we sat on and who got the last chocolate peanut. I mean it had to be the worst 20 hours they could have ever had, yet we made the trek at least once a year.

I'm sure the pain didn't end with the drive. For the next two weeks not only did they have to put up with my sister and me, now they had to put up with Grandma and Grandpa. It may seem a little rude to say they had to "put up" with them. But let's face it, relatives are fun to see for a couple of hours, and then it's time to move on.

Those were some of the best times we ever had as a family. Although there was that constant nit-picking and normal brother-sister things, I can still remember all of the good times we had.

Maybe that is why my parents always liked to go on vacation. They knew that, even though we were having our little spats, one day we would look back on those days with good memories. They were giving up their time and listened to us bicker just so later on we would appreciate the time we spent together.

Moms and dads are like that. They are always willing to put themselves last, put themselves on the bottom of the priority list. I guess it is just recently I came to this realization. Growing up, you seem to think your mom and dad are some of the dumbest people in the world. It seems like they are always telling you to do this or that, be in at a certain time and be sure to be nice to everyone. It seemed like so many rules to follow didn't it?



I realize now that all of those rules, all of that nagging and all of those vacations were for a reason. Their wisdom was way beyond me and is just now beginning to make sense. They did all of those things because they knew in the future I would appreciate them.

It's truly odd that your parents seem to transform from weird to wise almost overnight. I guess those summer vacations were pretty special, and as I hit the road today to go home to see Mom, Dad and my sister I know this is going to be another great summer vacation. I'm just hoping that my sister and I have grown out of that whole nagging thing, but you can't ask for everything, right?

Be safe as you take to the roads and enjoy the company of the family around you as you take off for those summer vacations. Trust me kids, mom and dad do all the things for a reason. And your brother's feet don't really smell that bad. Enjoy!

Make this summer a safe one

Traffic accidents are deadly! Three Fort Benning Soldiers have been killed in traffic accidents this year.

The latest fatality occurred on Victory Drive, when two Soldiers in a car were struck head on by another car traveling approximately 75 mph. The dual air bags in the late model car deployed, but one Soldier, who was not wearing his seat belt, was fatally injured. The other Soldier, who was wearing his seat belt, suffered a broken ankle and various cuts and will be released from the hospital soon. While we cannot be sure the Soldier who was killed would have survived if he had been wearing his seat belt, we do know he would have had a much better chance.

Commanders and directors must emphasize the following to all personnel:

•Drive defensively. The poor driving of others can cause you great expense and pain.

•Drive alertly. Plan your trips so that you always start out well rested. Take frequent breaks while driving (at least one every two hours).

•Obey the speed limit. The speed limit is the top speed for ideal conditions. Adverse weather, increased traffic, road construction and pedestrians require speeds below the limit.

•Always wear your seat belt. If you're not wearing your seat belt, what's holding you back? Remember, air bags only work properly if the seat belt is used.

•Inspect your vehicle. Correct all unsafe conditions.

•Drive like your life depends on it — it does!

We need everyone's help to make this summer a safe one. Be smart, be safe.

Army birthday recognizes Soldiers throughout years

As we approach a new century and a new millennium, we share with the American people great pride in all that America's Army has accomplished throughout its proud history. In celebrating the Army's 224th birthday Monday, we especially recognize each member of the Army team for your selfless service over the past decade.

For the Army, the 21st century really began with the collapse of the Berlin Wall. As the threat of global warfare receded, we accomplished the most successful post-war reorganization in our history, while shaping and maintaining a full-spectrum force. In less than 10 years, our total Army team of active duty Soldiers, Army National Guard, Army Reserve and quality civilian workforce has served in more than 100 countries. From Korea to Kuwait, Somalia to Honduras, the Sinai to Bosnia, you have excelled — responding to international crises, conducting peacekeeping operations and providing humanitarian assistance, noncombatant evacuations and disaster relief.

At this time, we offer special appreciation to our troops in the Balkans, who confront the dark shadows of intolerance and tyranny that trouble that region. Serving with the other branches of our armed forces and our NATO allies to limit further humanitarian disasters, your presence is a beacon of hope to hundreds of thousands of people still denied the light of liberty's torch.

We also offer special gratitude to those of you on the total Army team serving in Central America following last year's disastrous hurricanes. You do more than save lives and rebuild economies. By your example, our neighbors are learning how an Army functions in a democracy. You build good will for our nation close to home.

Throughout the unprecedented challenges and changes we've faced for more than two centuries, there have been two constants — your courageous performance of duty and your steadfast service, both at home and abroad. You continue to uphold the same core values and standards Soldiers have practiced throughout our nation's illustrious past. America's Army has been and continues to be not only the nation's protector at home, but also the standard-bearer of freedom abroad.

On this final Army birthday of the 20th century and the second millennium, we wish all of you on the total Army team a "Happy Birthday," and we offer profound thanks to our Soldiers — the nation's credentials.

Community member thanks Soldier for help

I just wanted to send out a special thank you to Pfc. Ryan Casad of Company B, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), and his wife Michelle for helping me when my car would not start.

This was on May 30 in the Commissary parking lot. It was not only his capable help, but his genuine willing attitude that deeply impressed me.

He deserves recognition for his act of kindness.

Family life center focuses on family, Soldier health

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

"Most people have no idea of the extraordinary pressures that military life places not just on the Soldier, but upon their family as well," said Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel, director of the Chaplains Family Life Center (CFLC).

Rupel said the CFLC goal is to help get families back on track so they are able to nurture one another and grow as a family. CFLC helps couples learn to resolve marriage or family difficulties in a healthy way. "Without guidance unresolved issues can exploded into family violence, domestic violence or lead to the break up of the family."

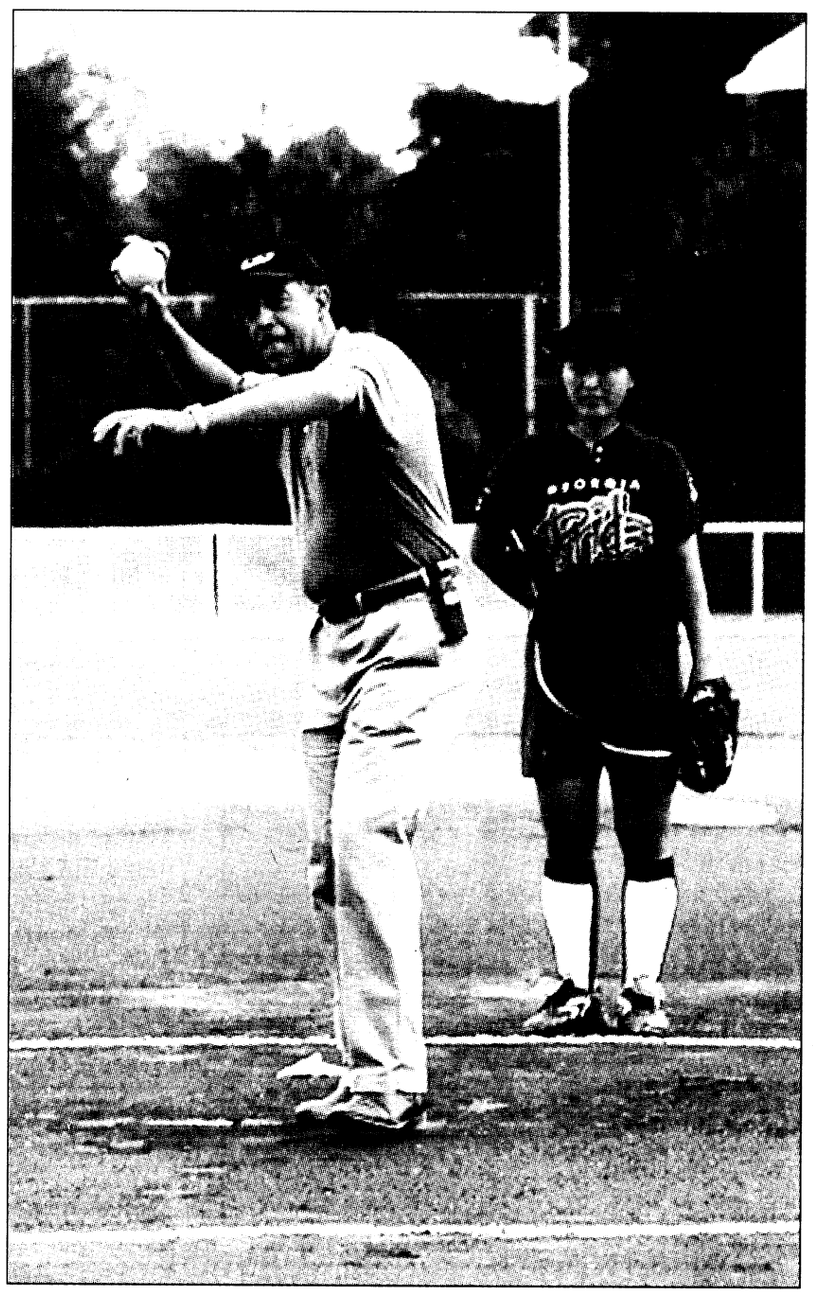
In order to serve families more effectively, the CFLC recently relocated to Building 101 located on the corner of Rauber and Brockman Streets, Main Post. The center is located across from Doughboy Stadium and behind the Infantry Chapel in the Chapel's Annex.

The new facility offers a big classroom that can be used for large groups, conference rooms, a kitchen and a nursery if needed Rupel said. "The new building is more versatile and has more room to do everything we need to do."

According to Rupel, the old facility located at Building 2606 in Soldier's Plaza houses the Chaplain Family Life Training program. Marriage and family counseling will continue in the old location. "Counseling is for couples who have unhealthy family relationships or are experiencing difficulty in their marriage. Counselors try to help their relationships work for them not against them."

"Much of the success depends upon the couple and how much they are willing to work," Rupel said. "As counselors, we facilitate a plan but it is the couples responsibility to find solutions and make it work."

In addition to marriage and family counseling, the new center will offer family education programs designed to help Soldiers and their families. "Services offered are not just for families in chaos, they are also for families who are doing great but want to learn how to do things better in order to benefit the family."



Systematic Training for Effective Parenting is a series of classes for parents who want to learn better parenting skills. The class educates parents on effective ways to handle the everyday ups and downs of raising children.

"There are constructive ways to handle children and other ways that are destructive. No one wants to be harmful for their children so we teach skills that will help in tough situations," Rupel added.

"How to Communicate Effectively" is a program designed to improve communication skills in relationships and throughout life. Other programs sponsored by CFLC focus on family wellness, divorce recovery, marriage enrichment, parenting for single Soldiers and monthly pre-marriage training. A monthly marriage retreat is held on the third Friday of each month at no cost for the couple, and helps couples hone in on communication skills.

Individuals in need of counseling can go directly to CFLC or be referred by unit chaplains, family practice, mental health, commanders, social work or word of mouth. All active duty military, single or married, family members, Department of Defense civilians and retirees can attend programs and counseling free of cost.

Anyone interested in attending a program or for more information, call the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-2050.

FTC warns of scam

Criminal Investigation Division

On May 19, information was received from the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) about a new email and telephone scam. Victims with email accounts on many of the more popular Internet service providers (ISPs), such as America On Line (AOL), Erols, Yahoo, and Hotmail, receive emails titled "Thank You For Your Order."

The text of the email indicates the victim's "order" has been received and his or her credit card billed for a specified amount, generally $300 to $400. A telephone number, (767) 445-1775, is provided for "questions about your order."

Because the victims have not placed any such order, most immediately call the given number without realizing that the 767 area code represents the Caribbean nation of Dominica (the number can be dialed directly, without using the international access code). Instead of a customer service representative, victims reach an extremely graphic pornographic recording. Whether they tried dialing again, or remained on the line, all were charged for an expensive overseas call (about $3 a minute). AOL reported receiving more than 20,000 complaints and AT & T documented at least 2,000 such calls in March 1999 alone.

The FTC, which is investigating the scam, recently obtained a court order freezing the payments to Dominica for these calls and requiring U. S. telephone carriers to refund or credit the charges to their consumers.

For more information, the FTC can be contacted at (202) FTC-HELP ((202) 382-4357) or at www.ftc.gov http://www.ftc.gov>

POWs receive medals

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

The three American Soldiers who were frequently beaten by the Serbs during their March 3 through May 2 captivity received their Purple Heart medals under award guidelines established in the early 1960s.

A significant change to the rules for awarding the Purple Heart was based on Executive Order 11-1016 signed by then-President John F. Kennedy, April 25, 1962. The 1962 change, according to Lt. Col. Dan Gibson, Chief, Military Awards Branch, U.S. Total Army Personnel Command, provided greater latitude in the award of the Purple Heart, enabling award of the medal to service members when Congress didn't declare a formal declaration of war. Gibson's office, located in Alexandria, Va., examines applications for award of the Purple Heart.

The 1962 Executive Order doesn't specifically identify POWs, said Gibson, however, a subsequent Army policy change noted that the Army would consider awarding the medal to former POWs.

"(As a result of Kennedy's Executive Order,) the then-chief of staff of the Army signed-off on a policy change dated Sept. 27, 1962, which allowed award of the Purple Heart to former prisoners of war who were wounded or injured at the hands of their captors," said Gibson.

The Executive Order signed by Kennedy primarily covered former U.S. prisoners of war from the Vietnam Conflict to present, said Gibson. Congress later passed legislation under the 1996 National Defense Authorization Act, which authorized award of the Purple Heart to former prisoners of war, living and dead, wounded or injured by the enemy during captivity prior to April 25, 1962.

Prior to the 1996 Congressional legislation, said Gibson, there was no provision, for example, for award of the Purple Heart to any of the 140,000 U.S. service members who surrendered to Japanese forces in the Philippines during World War II in May 1942.

"Since 1996, we've awarded a number of Purple Hearts to World War II and Korean War vets, who've applied according to their former POW status," said Gibson. "We require supporting documentation, which may include copies of repatriation medical exams, or a witness statement from a cellmate, for example, stating their buddy was abused at hands of captors. We look over statements and supporting documentation, and then confirm entitlement.

"It has to be an injury or wound deliberately caused by captors, not injuries received while on work detail, for example."

Editor's Note: The origin of the Purple Heart can be traced to 1782 when it was a "military merit" badge of purple cloth awarded to enlisted troops in Gen. George Washington's American Revolutionary War Army, according to U.S. Army Center for Military History documents.

The Army revived the award on Feb. 22, 1931, now an enameled purple medal in the shape of a heart featuring Washington's likeness. Again awarded for meritorious military service, criteria for the new medal also stated that "a wound, which necessitates treatment by a medical officer ... received in action with an enemy" would qualify as a meritorious act.

In Executive Order 9277 of Dec. 3, 1942, President Franklin D. Roosevelt extended the use of the Purple Heart to the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard after Dec. 6, 1941. The 1942 order also established a uniform application of standards for the award in the Army and Navy.

President Harry S. Truman, in Executive Order 10409 of Nov. 12, 1952, retroactively extended Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard eligibility for the Purple Heart back to April 5, 1917, to cover World War I.

Current eligibility and conditions for the award are defined in Army Regulation 600-8-22. The Purple Heart is ranked immediately behind the Bronze Star in order of precedence among the personal military awards.

USAMU rededicates range

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A celebration of marksmanship and heroism marked the Easley Range rededication ceremony hosted by the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) June 4.

Easley Range is named for the late Brig. Gen. Claudius Miller Easley, who began his career in rifle marksmanship by competing in the National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, in 1910. The Infantry School dedicated Easley Range March 26, 1951, in honor of Easley's contributions to the development and improvement of small arms marksmanship.

During World War II, Easley became the assistant division commander of the 96th Infantry Division at the time of its activation in August 1942 at Camp Adair, Ore. The division gained the nickname the "Deadeyes" because of the high level of marksmanship it achieved through the training directed by Easley. He then went to the Pacific Theater of Operations with the division in the summer of 1944.

For exceptionally meritorious conduct, Easley was awarded the Legion of Merit at the close of the Leyte Campaign during which he had been wounded by sniper fire and was awarded the Purple Heart. In May 1945, he was awarded the Silver Star for gallantry in action in Okinawa. On June 19, 1945, he was killed in action while directing fire on the last enemy position on the island.

The ceremony's guest speaker was retired Col. Robert B. Nett, a World War II Medal of Honor recipient who also fought on Okinawa.

"As we rededicate this range in honor of General Easley, we have the feeling that the Deadeyes of a famous World War II division have come alive," Nett said. "The name of the division, 96th, was named Deadeyes as a personal tribute to its leaders who trained and lived and fought with the 96th Division from its activation until its assistant division commander's death by Japanese machine gun fire on Okinawa."

"General Easley's famous method of teaching marksmanship has marked the men of the 96th Division ever since they began live firing on the ranges of Camp Adair and the tradition of excellence and firing to kill remain a tribute to this leader of men," Nett said. "Surprise on the battlefield is the event that men and women in combat fear most because surprise means dead Soldiers. And this great general emphasized throughout the training phase of the famous Deadeye Division that we would not be surprised and their combat record spells out this philosophy as its division history. We thank God for a great general like General Easley to lead us in combat.

"And here we are at the foot of training media — marksmanship," Nett continued. "The rifleman and the marksmanship of that rifleman is what counts. We needed marksmen in Okinawa ... and only through good marksmanship could we be here today and talk about it."

Easley thanked USAMU, Fort Benning, the 96th Regional Support Command and Nett for the tribute to his father.

"I know that my father would certainly be very proud and feel honored to have this range rededicated to him almost 50 years after it was first named for him, and I must say I share the pride in him and his accomplishments," Easley said. "The occasion is also an emotional one for me. It brings back so many memories of my father's activities in rifle marksmanship. I think that the range itself symbolizes the long continuity of the spirit of rifle marksmanship combined with the promise for the future for its continued development and future well-being."

Then, Easley cut the ribbon officially rededicating Easley Range. Assisting him were Nett, U.S. Rep. Mac Collins of Georgia; Paul Posl, son of Anthony J. Posl, Easley's driver in World War II who was with him when he died; and Lt. Col. Roger Livingston, public affairs officer of the 96th Regional Support Command, an Army Reserve Unit in Salt Lake City, Utah, which is the 96th Infantry Division reactivated.

Also attending the ceremony were Col. R. Tom Maertens, the son of Col. Kameil Maertens, a member of the 1938 and 1939 All Army Shooting Teams with General Easley, and his sons Lt. Cols. R. Tom Maertens Jr. and Floyd Maertens. Easley was the captain of that team that trained on the Fort Benning range that is now named after him.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, the USAMU Service Rifle Team, lead by Coats Brown, a teammate of Easley, did an Infantry Trophy shooting demonstration, which showcased the talents of the National Service Rifle Championship Team.

5th RTBn receives new commander

Ranger Training Brigade

Lt. Col. Keith P. Antonia assumed command of the 5th Ranger Training Battalion from Lt. Col. Alfred E. Dochnal during a change of command ceremony June 1 at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga.

Dochnal will move to Washington D.C. where he will work as the Infantry Branch Assignments Officer for colonels.

Antonia, who was commissioned in 1981, came to the 5th RTBn after a four-year assignment as senior liaison officer and operations officer for the 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Benning.

His other assignments include tours with the 2nd Battalion, 508 Parachute Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division; 4th Ranger Training Battalion and 1st Ranger Battalion. Antonia's combat experience includes tours in Grenada with the 82nd Airborne Division during Urgent Fury in 1983 and in Panama with the 1st Ranger Battalion during Just Cause.

In addition to graduating the Command and General Staff School, Antonia holds a master's degree from the Naval War College in National Security and Strategic Studies.

Antonia is accompanied by his wife Angela, sons Andrew and Steven and daughter Michelle.

Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) conduct a life-fire exercise recently at Griswold Range.

Engineers conduct live-fire

2nd Lt. Jennifer Retherford
63rd Engineer Company (CSE)

Infantry tactics, battle drills, react to contact, support by fire, assault element — none of these are typically associated with the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction). However, the Soldiers of this horizontal construction unit recently rose to the occasion of this unique challenge.

The 63rd Eng. Co. conducted the unit's first live-fire exercise at the end of April. On the morning of April 26, the line platoons of the company packed up and rolled out to Griswold Range.

After setting up their initial bivouac site, platoon leaders took their Soldiers out for basic Infantry tactics training. Squad leaders trained to lead their squads through a react to contact drill, which included actions on the objective, hand and arm signals and how to report to higher headquarters.

On April 28, 1st Platoon began the first trek through the live-fire lane. Each squad leader issued an operations order and was evaluated on their performance from that point to the end of the mission. Each squad ran the lane three times, first as a dry fire and then with blanks. Finally, the Soldiers executed the lane with live ammunition. After each iteration through the lane, squad leaders conducted after action reviews with their Soldiers to voice lesson learned.

The 63rd Eng. Co. returned from a deployment to Nicaragua in March where they spent two months building and improving roads after Hurricane Mitch. The live-fire training was a change of pace for the construction engineers who were conducting refit operations.

"This training provided the Soldiers with an opportunity to build confidence in themselves and their leadership," said Company Commander Capt. Robert Carr. "The Soldiers learned that they can conduct fire and maneuver with live ammunition. They got a taste of what it means to 'fight as Infantry,' which is every Soldier's secondary MOS."

Old Guard recruiter briefs Soldiers

Lauren E. Orrok
30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception)

After entering Sgt. Daniel Richard's office located in the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), you are immediately struck by a sense of pride in the U.S. Army and the country.

Richard is "The Old Guard" Recruiting Liaison for Fort Benning, and covering the walls are glossy photos of the 3rd Infantry Division specialty units: the U.S. Army Drill Team, the Continental Color Guard, the Old Guard Caisson Platoon and the Guards of Honor at the Tomb of the Unknowns.

Richard does most of his recruiting from the hundreds of new Soldiers processing through the 30th AG Bn.; however, male and female officers, NCOs and junior enlisted Soldiers from 39 MOSs are also being sought.

By first screening the personnel files, he is able to select those who meet these basic prerequisites; regular Army, GT score of at least 110, no permanent profiles, no shaving profiles or facial hair, no civil convictions, no record of back or knee problems, a stable financial background, able to wear contact lenses, volunteer for the assignment and 36 months retainability. All males must be between five-feet, 10 inches and six-feet, four inches while female 95Bs must be between five-feet, eight inches and six-feet, two inches.

Richard briefs and counsels potential members while in the reception battalion about additional expectations placed on them during Initial Entry Training. They have to come through training without restarting, must have no judicial or nonjudicial punishment, score 235 or above on physical fitness test and must have their chain of command's recommendation.

Prior to being selected as "The Old Guard" recruiter for Fort Benning, Richard was a squad leader and a Full Honor Firing Party Commander. He said that being selected as a member of the Army's official ceremonial unit and escort to the president is a great honor.

"Only those who have impeccable military appearance, who are highly motivated and hard working, and who take great pride in their country and themselves are selected to represent the U.S. Army and our country to the world."

For more information on "The Old Guard" check out the website www.mdw.army.mil/oldguard or call Richard at 544-0766.

ITB trainees join ranks of Infantrymen

Capt. Loren Long
Co. E, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

On June 4, 170 new Infantrymen joined the ranks of Infantrymen around the world. In front of more than 400 families, friends and loved ones, the Soldiers of Company E, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, walked across Kanell Field to be deployed around the world from Fort Bragg, N.C., to Korea.

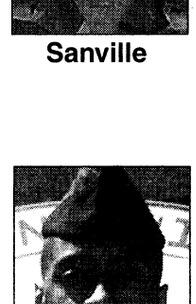
The road to graduation was not easy, however; these Soldiers had to prove proficiency in more than 240 tasks to include basic rifle marksmanship, four phase tests and several road marches.

For 14 weeks, the Soldiers focused on the "triad of excellence" in the Patriot Battalion — shooting, physical training and tactical training. All Soldiers who graduated had to pass the Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT) with at least 60 points in each event, although many Soldiers scored much higher. When they arrived, the company average was only about 136 points, but after 14 weeks of PT, the average increased by 118 points to about 254 points.

In addition to improvements to the APFT, the company also ran the Eagle Run (5 miles in 45 minutes) followed by the Patriot Run (5 miles in 40 minutes).

Rifle marksmanship is the focal point for all Infantrymen. The company spent 14 days learning the fundamentals and practicing them. The endless hours on the ranges paid off at the end when more than 99 percent of the company qualified on the last day. The Soldiers later experienced shooting under duress with a six-mile road march straight on the rifle range for one last qualification during the field training exercise (FTX).

Tactical training came to the forefront of everything these Soldiers did. They began in the crawl phase working on individual techniques and developed from there to the larger collective missions which allowed the cadre to assess not only their individual skills, but introduced them to battle drills and squad-size missions to enforce teamwork and develop leadership. Their tactical training culminated in an eight-day FTX., which consisted of a 12-mile road march to a company defensive battle position. For two days, the Soldiers worked on building buddy team fighting positions. They then spent two days on offensive battle drills. After the six-mile march and marksmanship exercise, the Soldiers went to McKenna Military Operations on Urbananized Terrain site for two more days of training.



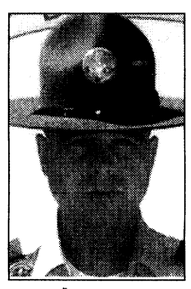
Finally, Co. E executed a 15.5-mile road march with a 300-foot two rope bridge in the middle. At the conclusion of the road march, the Soldiers received their crossed rifles.

Throughout the cycle, the 1st Platoon "Mad Dogs" had a special relationship with a second-grade class from Wink, Texas. One of the trainee's mothers thought it would be nice to have the students write encouraging letters to the Soldiers. The idea blossomed into a full-fledge writing campaign as the Soldiers wrote back to the students. The teacher who attended the June 4 graduation, presented 1st Platoon with a framed poem

Excellence

Name:
Pvt. Ruben E. Pike
Award or recognition:
Soldier of the Cycle
Unit or activity:
Company E, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade
Why did you join the Army?
To see if I could meet the standards. I was sure the Army could help me with life's everyday responsibilities. My wife and little girl are a large role in my joining the military.
Why were you chosen as Soldier of the Cycle?
I believe I was chosen for my motivation. I instilled the requirements the drill sergeants spoke of in my mind, followed orders and followed the Army seven core values at every chance.

Name:
Staff Sgt. Louis Sanville
Award or recognition:
Drill Sergeant of the Cycle
Unit or activity:
Company E, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade
What is your style of leadership?
Hard but fair, which I think makes the Soldiers a better overall person.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant?
Seeing a civilian converted into a Soldier.



Sanville

Name:
Pfc. James W. Carter II
Award or recognition:
Soldier of the Cycle
Unit or activity:
Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade
Why did you join the Army?
I joined the Army because of a desire to serve my country and perform a duty that had to be done.
Why were you chosen as Soldier of the Cycle?
I was chosen as Soldier of the cycle from among stiff competition of my peers based on demonstrated leadership skills during the cycle and grasp of initial entry training knowledge.

Carter

Name:
Sgt. 1st Class Joseph A. James
Award or recognition:
Drill Sergeant of the Cycle
Unit or activity:
Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade
What is your style of leadership?
I use mostly a combination of leadership styles.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant?
I get the most satisfaction from watching the Soldiers excel. The ones that I have watched develop from civilians to proud Infantry

James

Unit takes on Table VIII

Spc. Brian Murphy
4th Public Affairs Detachment

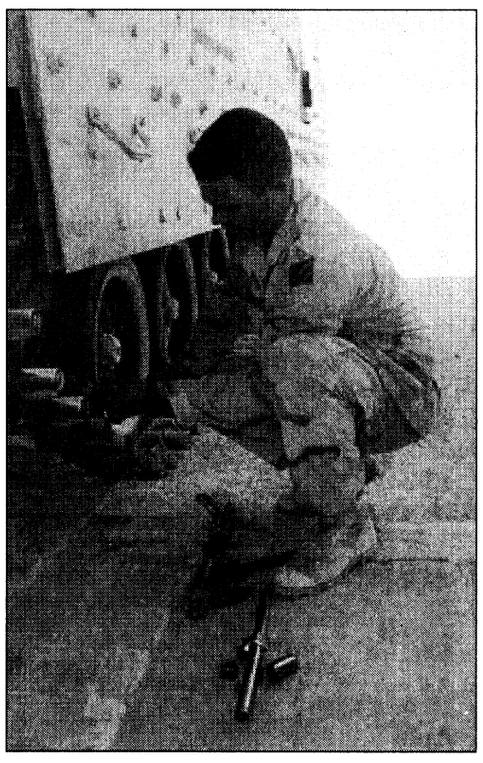
CAMP DOHA, Kuwait — Armed with the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, three-man crews attempted to qualify on one of the Army's most complicated training tables.

The Soldiers from Company C, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) faced one of their toughest challenges in recent memory when they participated in a Bradley Table VIII live-fire exercise at Falcon North Range May 17.

"This is the final crew qualification," said Capt. Brian Reardon, Co. C commander. "By now, these Soldiers have completed all of the other Bradley Tables before this. They must use what they learned from those to be successful."

Reardon's Soldiers agreed.

"This is what makes or breaks a crew," said Sgt. Tiwan Smith, Bradley gunner, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. " "If the crew does well, they earn bragging rights. This is one of the most difficult gunneries we have to qualify."



"I've done this Bradley table twice before in Korea and once at Fort Benning," he said. "Each gunnery is set up a little different, but you still need to do the same things to be successful. The bottom line is — as long as my crew sticks to what we've learned, this will be just another day at the office."

Reardon agreed that the Soldiers who have qualified before on Bradley Table VIII are at an advantage.

"This range is flat compared to the ranges at Fort Benning," Reardon said. "There are less obstacles to deal with, making this an easy range, though. The other day we were out here during a sandstorm. This is a whole different challenge."

During the gunnery, the action isn't only down range. It's also in the "tower."

"The tower is where we maintain control of everything going on during the range," said Staff Sgt. Elmer Morrow, Co. C master gunner. "We give the crews their instructions for each engagement as well as getting the next vehicle ready for their qualification."

Spc. Brian Murphy

Prior to qualifying, Sgt. Wadus Davis, Bradley gunner, conducts maintenance checks on his vehicle.

From the tower, Morrow can listen to the crew communicate during the gunnery, verify if the target has been hit and instruct the crew toward the next goal.

"We do it all in there," he said. "We can break down a crew's entire run. We can tell how they did and how fast they did it."

Before the crews can focus on the range, they must ensure that their equipment is functional by conducting preventive maintenance and services.

"The entire day before the gunnery is devoted to maintenance," Smith said. "We check every inch of the Bradley. If something isn't working right, we need to know before we go out. We look at this training as we would in combat. We wouldn't want to go to combat without our weapons working."

MACH, MEDDAC welcomes new commander

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Martin Army Community Hospital and the entire Fort Benning Medical Department Activity (MEDDAC) said their final farewells to outgoing commander Col. Lester Martinez-Lopez in a change of command ceremony held at the hospital Monday.

Col. James L. Beson assumed command from Martinez-Lopez, who will continue his Army medical career with his upcoming assignment as the surgeon of U.S. Army Forces Command.

"I leave here with mixed emotions," Martinez-Lopez said during his final remarks at the ceremony. "I have new challenges in front of me, and I am honored and humbled. But I am looking forward to continuing to make meaningful contributions to this Army of ours we love so much."

Incoming commander, Beson, noted his pleasure to serve Fort Benning and his promise to continue to uphold the standards and goals Martinez left in his wake.

"My wife and I are proud but very humble by the selection of our ability to lead these Soldiers while serving the Army's premier hospital and post," said the 52-year-old father of one after taking command of MEDDAC. "Soldiers of MEDDAC continue to stand proud and ... are the best."

Beson, a native of Claremore, Okla., has served in a variety of assignments taking him across the country and the world. Prior to being selected to serve at Fort Benning, Beson was the deputy commander for Clinical Services at Womack Army Medical Center, Fort Bragg, N.C.

The 30-year Army veteran has netted many accolades in both the civilian and military medical communities. His awards include certification by the National Board of Osteopathic Examiners and the American Board of Opthamology. He is a fellow of the American Academy of Military Opthamology and a member of the Society of Military Opthamologists, the Association of Military Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons and the American Osteopathy Association.

Benson has not only made a name for himself in the medical communities for his outstanding service to others, but has also earned recognition for his distinguished service as a helicopter pilot during Vietnam. His military awards include the Legion of Merit, the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Bronze Star Medal with V devise, the Purple Heart, the Air Medal with V devise and numeral 34 and the Meritorious Service Medal with 4 oak leaf clusters.

Beson brings with him his wife (Ret.) Lt. Col. Maura K. Naughton.

ACS conducts spouse orientation — The next Spouse Orientation Program will be held at 8:45 a.m. today in Building 359, the FUN Center. Newly-assigned personnel will receive information about the installation's services and facilities.

For more information, call Army Community Service at 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Red Cross offers youth volunteer program — The American Red Cross offers a summer youth volunteer program for kids ages 12 through 18 beginning Monday through Aug. 13. There are opportunities to volunteer at the hospital, water safety, Red Cross office and other locations.

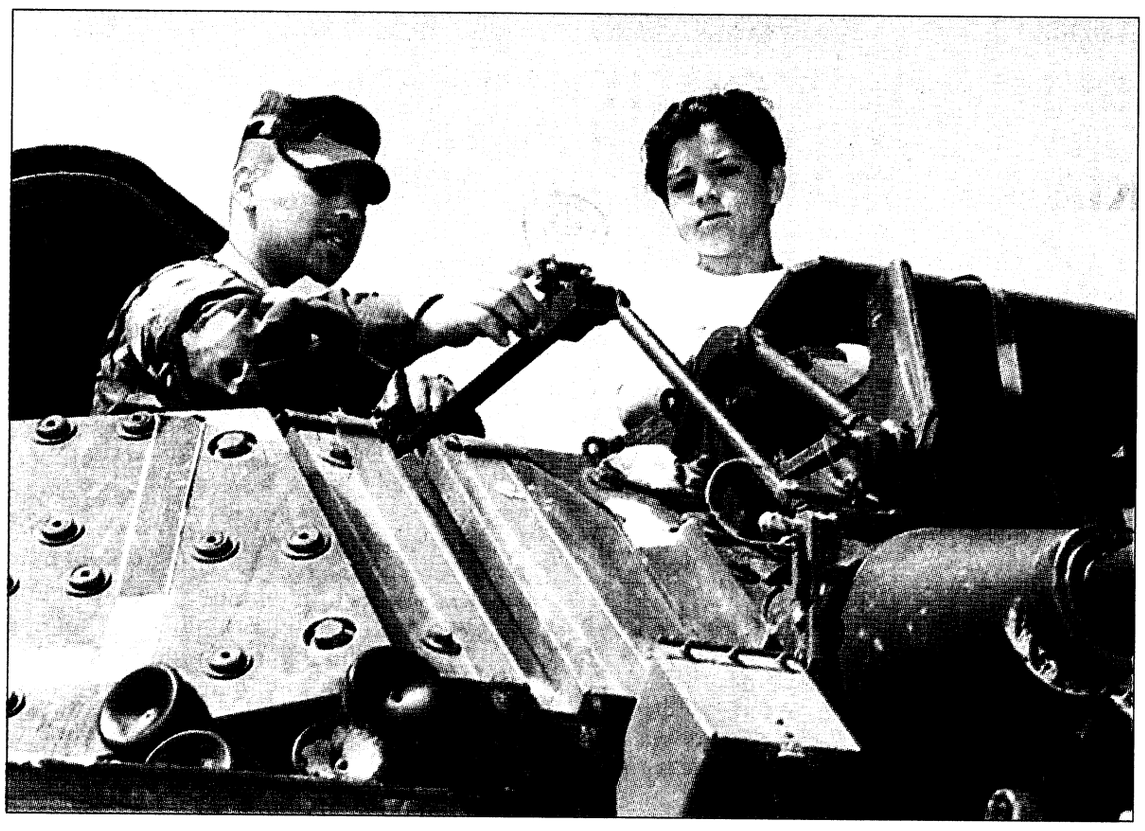
For more information, call 545-5194.

Preschool has openings — Patch Preschool still has openings for the 1999-2000 school year. Children must be 3 years of age by Oct. 1 and fully toilet trained in order to be admitted.

Children must be registered at central registration prior to enrolling. A current LES, shot record, birth certificate and central registration paperwork are needed to enroll.

For more information, call 687-2404.



FAP seeks follow-up callers — The Family Advocacy First Steps Office at Martin Army Community Hospital is seeking women as follow-up phone callers.

Some categories needed by First Steps are mothers who have had premature babies, mothers who have had multiple births, teenage moms and single moms. All women are needed. The basic requirement is they be caring and willing to contact new mothers to give them helpful information, emotional support and referrals to services they need.

If interested, call 544-2020.

Army Community Service answers PCS questions — If you are moving to another installation and need information about schools, shopping, medical, dental or housing, the Standard Installation Exchange Service (SITES) can answer most of your questions.

For more information, call ACS at 545-4043 or stop by Building 2624 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Discovery Day

Students celebrate learning, fun during annual event

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Students at Loyd Elementary School ended the year with a bang as they celebrated learning and fun during the 11th annual Discovery Day held June 4.

For children in grades Pre-K through fifth the day of discovery kicked off early in the morning with demonstrations from local Tae Kwon Do and skate center representatives. Later they were able to cut loose and boogie down to such songs as the Funky Chicken and the Macarena.

The rest of the day was spent exploring the stars in a portable planetarium, taking imaginations for a spin aboard a Blackhawk, Bradley Fighting Vehicle and humvee, learning about water safety, CPR, first aid and much more.

The children also spent time with some nifty visitors. There were Shriners who amazed the children with handy balloon tricks, a local paleontologist and his "mammoth" bones, and a couple of helpful visitors like the Tooth Fairy and Octopuff, the American Lung Association mascot.

"We do Discovery Day for two reasons," said Cathy Joyner, kindergarten teacher and Discovery Day coordinator. "First, we want the kids to know that just because the school year is over they don't have to stop learning. And the second reason is we want the kids to know that what they learn in school is going to help them in their career later on."

What began strictly as a Science day 11 years ago became an instant success, and it wasn't long until the entire community became involved. Over the years the event has evolved into more of a career and safety day, Joyner said. It has also become the climax of the school year and something the children look forward to, she added.

Third-grader Justin Adams, said he participated in Discovery Day last year and couldn't wait for the one this year. He explained that Discovery Day is neat because he gets to learn and play at the same time.

"I really liked being able to climb in all of the trucks," Adams said. "It was also cool seeing the people from Lambert Skate Center show us tricks and tell us how to know if your rollerblades are bad."

Joyner said the event wouldn't have been possible without the great support by volunteers. She went on to say they have never had a problem getting participation because so many people are enthusiastic about the coming to share with the kids.

"Everybody was really excited," Joyner said. "So many people wanted to know what they could do to help out and there were lots of others who donated freebies to give to the kids."

Cathy Hatfield, a Community Health hygienist said she decided to volunteer because Discovery Day is a great educational program and lots of fun for everyone.

"This program really reaches out and touches the children because so many people from the community are coming in for them," Hatfield said. "This year we just wanted to give them a little bit of everything and it has been so much fun."

Fun and learning wasn't the only thing students took away with them, Joyner said. The event also let the children know there are people in the community who care about them.

"A lot of these kids have parents who were or are deployed," Joyner said. "They need to see that people will give up their time to get out here and do this for them. Seeing those guys out there with the vehicles means more to them than just seeing the vehicles."

This concept also works the other way around, she added.

"This day is just as important for the adults," she said. "Knowing that there is a little kid who needs them, it makes them feel important and special."

Dexter School ends year with success story

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

As Dexter Elementary School teachers take a break over the summer, they have time to reflect on the previous year and the school's many accomplishments.

Besides winning several awards for their outstanding contribution to the study of the environment, one heartwarming success story will linger until the school opens its doors for the next session — Lauren Sheppard.

Lauren, the daughter of Lt. Col. Richard Sheppard, chief of the Department of Joint and Combined Operations' Civil Military Studies Division, U.S. Army School of the Americas, has Down's Syndrome. In the past, both Sheppard and his wife Michelle, struggled with other school districts to make sure Lauren received the necessary education fit for their mentally challenged child. However, a combination of an excellent kindergarten teacher, outstanding special education support and a supportive administration, made Lauren's first year at Dexter everything the Sheppard's hoped for.

According to Tommye Woods, director of Fort Benning Schools Student Services, after meeting with the Sheppards at the beginning of the year to discuss Lauren's Individual Education Program (IEP), which described Lauren's current level of performance and where the teachers want the student to be within the next year, they decided to experiment with the Total Inclusion model at Dexter School.

"We had not used this model before with a student with Down's Syndrome — we didn't know," she said.

Wood said the inclusion movement is national and they have moved into it slowly and carefully trying to avoid mistakes along the way. She said the school system always had special education students in the regular classroom with a few exceptions for those students who just couldn't function in a regular classroom because of the need for specialized care.

"Total Inclusion means that all the special services go to the child in the classroom, rather than pulling the child out of the classroom," said Woods. "This was a venture for us at the school, but three things made it work — we have a little girl who's delightful, curious, wants to know and is eager to learn; we have very supportive parents and we have an extremely dedicated educational team in a school that says 'We're here for all kids — and all the kids fit in.'"

One of the key players to the successful integration of Lauren to a "normal" classroom was Earnestine Ezekiel, a 32-year teaching veteran and Lauren's kindergarten teacher.

"From day one, Lauren was just one of my students," said Ezekiel. "I react to her like I would to any of my 22 students."

It is this kind of philosophy that has helped Lauren become more socially adaptive and independently responsible, according to Sheppard.

"All my students have special needs," said Ezekiel. "Meeting their needs is very important to me. Some need more of your time — some need less. You vary your teaching strategies to meet the child's learning capability."

She said she worked with Lauren's special needs on a day-to-day basis, adding that Lauren had adjusted to the classroom environment very well.

"The other children see Lauren for what she is — just another student," said Ezekiel. "They're very socially involved with her. She does everything all the other students do."

She said she studied Lauren's IEP very carefully and planned her long-term, weekly and daily program. These included activities that would help Lauren meet the set goals in the social and academic area.

According to Nicole Leech, special education teacher, it's her job to monitor and modify Lauren's educational progress.

Leech said her job was not very difficult due to Ezekiel's blend of experience and teaching skills.

"She (Ezekiel) knows what's developmentally appropriate," she said. "She knows where the students need to be and where they're going. She can adjust that appropriately for Lauren."

Leech said Lauren surpassed her self-help skills and social involvement and that she met most of her IEP goals.

Sheppard said he's seen Lauren's tremendous progress.

"When Lauren got to Dexter she wasn't potty trained," he said. "After three months with Ms. Ezekiel, she's potty trained and her speaking has improved incredibly."

He also said the other equation is that the children being exposed to Lauren and the inclusion method are forming and shaping ideas and opinions about people who have different limitations.

"Our society has been trying to do this for the last 20 to 30 years," said Sheppard. "Everyone talked about it — sometimes you wondered if we were getting any closer to inclusion. But, when you see a situation like this, it makes me feel that we are getting closer."

Woods recognized that with Lauren, it was a real ground breaker for the school. One which will make it easier for trying something new with the next child.

"The thing that is so wonderful about Lauren's situation is the team effort we had," said Vicki Rogers, principal of Dexter. "I could not be prouder of what I saw between the teachers and parents. She's excelled because of the team effort. Lauren has just blossomed."

Spencer: PTSA receives Certificate of Merit

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

During the Principals and Parent Teacher Association (PTA) Presidents banquet held May 27, the Spencer High School Parent Teacher Student Association (PTSA) received a Certificate of Merit.

Certificates are awarded annually at the end of the academic year to qualifying schools, and are presented by the Georgia PTA. Schools compete not against each other, but against their own past performance.

The Spencer PTSA qualified for this award for a variety of reasons to include an approximate 60 percent increase in membership. Additionally, the organization boasted 100 percent participation on the part of Spencer teachers. The PTSA was also involved in supporting the school during events such as teacher appreciation week and a student honors program.

"It was a very good year for the PTSA and that contributed to the outstanding teamwork that we had. Principal Olivia Rutledge went out of her way to support the PTSA and so did the rest of her staff," said PTSA president Lt. Col. Reginald Pugh.

According to Pugh, there were a number of people who stood out in their contributions to the PTSA. The organization would especially like to thank Col. Richard Rowe, Sgt. 1st Class Clarence Harris, Wanda Jackson, John Crimmel, James Tanksley and Mildred Glaze for all of their assistance and support.

Not only did the end of the academic year mean awards for the Spencer PTSA, but the school was also named as a 1999 Gateway School. This honor is conferred annually by the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission and only two high schools received recognition this year. "Hopefully we can continue the hard work and help to keep our community a clean and beautiful place to live," said Pugh in response to Spencer receiving this award.

The Gateway school program is designed to encourage schools to participate in educational programs and projects that focus on the environment. One of the main projects that Spencer High School conducted this year was the Campus Beautification project. Not only did students and parents help with such things as planting flowers on the school grounds but the community was also involved. This included 140 officers from the Infantry School at Fort Benning.

Achieving these awards took effort and teamwork from everyone associated with Spencer High School and dedicated leadership from the PTSA.

"I would like to thank all the parents, students, teachers and everyone else who supported the PTSA," Pugh said. This was a good way for Spencer High School to finish off the school year.

DEXTER ELEMENTARY

School celebrates end of year

Dexter Elementary School

Herbert J. Dexter School celebrated the completion of an exciting year Monday night in the school auditorium, with the showing of a video yearbook entitled "Soaring Through School Year 1998 - 1999." Many of the interesting school projects, presentations and special events that occurred during the year were highlighted in the video.

There were smiles all around as students and parents recognized themselves on film.

The school family also gathered to thank Kyle Straits for her three-year term as PTO president. Straits was recognized for her dynamic leadership and tireless efforts on behalf of Dexter School. While walking the halls of Dexter almost daily, Straits' bright smile, infectious laugh and incredible enthusiasm touched everyone, students and staff alike.

Children from the first through fifth grades joined Physical Education Teacher, Pam Koon, in signing I'd Like to Teach the World to Sing and dedicated it to Straits. Earlier this spring, Kyle was honored as one of the 1999 "Volunteers of the Year" at Fort Benning's annual Awards Ceremony.

Two memorable events closed out the school year for Dexter students. The school's annual Awards' Day was held on Tuesday.

Students received recognition for service in various activities ranging from conservation to peacemaking, broadcasting to physical fitness. Awards for academic success included the President's Award for Academic Excellence and the Principal's All Stars Awards.

RedStixx Baseball Day was enjoyed that afternoon when children and staff wore baseball caps and shirts to school to meet team members from Columbus' minor league baseball team.

Primary students had lunch with the players, while the RedStixx conducted running, pitching and hitting clinics for the upper grades. Dexter had participated in the "Books for Baseball" reading program initiated by the RedStixx in February. The program encouraged children to read by rewarding them with free baseball tickets for completing their books.

Students aid ground breaking

Spencer High School

Three Spencer High School students participated in the ground breaking of the new Port Columbus Civil War Naval Center.

Kevin White, Jason Patty and Josh Curfiss were part of the ceremony which was highlighted by the firing of a 7-inch Brooke rifled gun. The gun cast in Selma Ala. in 1865 is considered to be one of the most accurate and powerful types made during the war and is one of the two on display at the current museum.

Instead of using shovels for the ground breaking an explosive charge was detonated to simulate a shell fired from the gun. The seven million dollar museum will feature the remains of both the CSS Jackson (ironclad) and the CSS Chattahochee (sail and steam gunboat), a working shipyard, interactive and static displays.

In addition there will be a walk in reproduction of the gun deck of the CSS Albemarle that puts the visitor in an interactive battle with a blockading Union fleet.

For more information on the Port Columbus Civil War Naval Center, call 327-9798 or 324-7334.

Self exams help find cancer

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Men have two oval-shaped testicles and these are found in the scrotum. The function of the testicle is to produce sperm and the male hormone testosterone.

Sperm is produced in the testicle and transported through thousands of tiny tubes into a nearby structure called the epididymis.

The epididymis is a rubbery structure attached to the back of the testicle. Sperm is then transported out of the epididymis through the vas deferens. The sperm travels in the vas deferens through the groin and pelvis then travels out a tube in the penis called the urethra.

Several diseases can effect the testicle and these nearby structures. When pain or a mass develops in the testicle or scrotum, one should be evaluated by a physician to rule out infection or, less commonly, a tumor. In patients where pain persists, despite therapy, an ultrasound may be recommended to look for other causes.

A varicocele is common in young men and more often seen in the left scrotum. It is a dilation of the veins which drain the left testicle. These veins may cause enlargement of the left scrotum and feel like a bag of worms under the skin. In most instances this is harmless, however, it potentially can cause problems with infertility and pain. In these instances, surgery may be offered as treatment.

Occasionally, fluid will develop around the testicle and this condition is known as a hydrocele.

These are common in newborns and usually spontaneously resolve within the first year of life. In the adult, a hydrocele may develop after trauma, infection or in diseases which cause general body swelling. A hydrocele may need to be drained or surgically removed if it causes problems with pain or discomfort.

Torsion of the testicle is a condition where the testicle twists upon itself. When the testicle twists on itself, this will result in blockage of the blood flow to the testicle and ultimately, testicular death.

This phenomenon usually is seen in boys up to age 16 years, however, it can also occur in adults. It presents itself with a sudden onset of excruciating testicular pain. This is considered an emergency because if left untreated for more than 24 hours, the testicle can be permanently damaged. If a patient is seen within a few hours of the onset of pain then the testicle may be surgically untwisted.

Infections in the epididymis are also common. This condition is called epididymitis. Epididymitis may be recurring and cause chronic pain in the scrotum. The usual treatment is antibiotics. In severe cases that do not respond to medication, surgery may be necessary to remove nerves going to the testicle or to actually remove the testicle in an effort to relieve pain.

Cysts are very common on the epididymis. On ultrasound evaluation, these can be differentiated from testicular tumors. No treatment is necessary unless there is persistent pain.

Testicular cancer is the most common malignancy in men between the ages of 15 to 35 years. It, fortunately, is one of the most curable cancers due to early diagnosis, new techniques for treatment and a greater understanding of the nature history of the disease.

The probability that an American white male will get testicular cancer in a lifetime is about 2 out of 1,000. It is less common in black males. Most tumors occur in late adolescence or early adulthood, however, tumors are also seen in infancy and in patients over the age of 60 years.

Testicular cancer does not appear to run in families. Testicular cancer usually occurs in one testicle, however, two to three percent of tumors can occur in both testicles, either simultaneously or at a later date.

Most patients notice a mass, pain or swelling in one testicle. In about 10 percent of patients, new onset pain is a presenting symptom. Because other diseases can cause pain and swelling in the testicles, such as infection, torsion, fluid and hernias, an examination of the scrotum is the most reliable way to evaluate for tumors.

On examination, one feels a mass within the testicle. It is not unusual to have small lumps in the epididymis, however, any unusual mass should be evaluated by physician.

Early detection is important, so monthly self-examination is recommended. Self examination of the testicles is recommended for men just as monthly breast self examination is recommended for women. This is the best done in a warm shower and any suspicious areas examined by a physician.

Post ensures effective response to spills

Felix Seda
Directorate of Public Works

The Fort Benning Installation Spill Contingency Plan (ISCP) and the Spill Prevention Control and Countermeasure Plan (SPCCP) are the tools used to ensure an effective response to potential spills within the installation.

The ISCP provides a coordinated system of response actions to remove or mitigate the effects of accidental spills or discharges. The spill program manager oversees this coordination effort through the Department of Public Safety (DPS) and all units and activities on Fort Benning.

The SPCCP is a site-specific plan used by the units and activities identifying preventive measure for management of hazardous materials and wastes, and the actions to take in case of spills.

DPS and the Fire Department is designated as the Installation On-Scene Coordinator (IOSC) and the Installation Response Team (IRT). The Fire Department and the Hazardous Material (HAZMAT) Team coordinate and provide overall command and direct control and cleanup efforts at the scene of any oil or hazardous substance discharge.

In coordination with the IRT, personnel from DPW and Law Enforcement, EMS, Safety, Martin Army Community Hospital (Preventive Medicine), DPW Environmental Office, Public Affairs and the Directorate of Operations and Training (DOT) are also involved in the effort to assist as part of the incident command and control for all Hazardous Material accidents.

What can you do to help? Installation personnel must report all spill events through E-911 for immediate assistance and response by the IRT. Spill events include any unexpected, unintended, abnormal or unapproved dumping, leaking, drainage or seepage into ground water areas.

The DPW Environmental Management Division provides technical assistance for cleanup procedures, protection of the environment and structures and notifications to off post agencies.

All spills are also reportable to Felix Seda, EPMB spill program manager at Building 6, Room 310, by calling 545-9879 or by faxing at 545-4209.

Units in training areas should report all spills to Range Control at 545-3474 and they will notify the Fire Department and other agencies. Exercises are conducted annually by the installation to test the IRT.

Currently a Process Action Team (PAT) has been established to review and revise the ISCP. The SPCCP will be revised during this year.

Divorcing couples experience losses

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Years ago a world-famous tightrope walker set out to walk a tightrope stretched across Niagara Falls while pushing a wheelbarrow. The day arrived for this most dangerous feat; one little slip would mean the difference between life and death. Just as the performer stepped out onto the tightrope he suddenly turned and asked the crowd, "Do you really think I can do this?" "Yes!" came the crowd. The tightrope walker then looked straight into the eyes of one of the more vocal supporters and said, "Then get into the wheelbarrow."

It's all about trust. Life can be very unfair. Bad things happen to good people while the bad seemingly go along their merry way. When one considers the "unfairness" in our world and how badly people can treat each other, it is no wonder Mark Twain wrote, "At times it does seem a shame that Noah and his family didn't miss the boat."

There is probably no greater act of unfairness then to go through a divorce. The grief one experiences is not only for the loss of a person and the death of dreams for the future, but it is a lost of trust, lost of belief in marriage and often the loss of friends.

Many divorced people never allow themselves to trust another so intimately as the one to which they were once married. Time does not always bring healing; only choosing to forgive and blessing those who have hurt us can bring change.

Maybe you have gone through a divorce and know all about it's emotional ups and downs. Instead of sitting around pondering the inequalities of life and bemoaning the unfairness of it all, God may be saying to you, "get into the wheelbarrow."

If you divorce or are going through the turmoil of a divorce, the Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is here to help you through this most difficult time. Give the center a call at 545-1760 for more information.

Take life one page at a time

Chaplain (Maj.) Steven L. Berry
75th Ranger Regiment

A little girl rushed to the door to greet her father as he was returning from work. "Daddy, look at the big book I got from the library. See Daddy, it has chapters!" she exclaimed.

reflections

Her eyes sparkled with excitement as she presented the hard-bound volume. Taking the thick book from his daughter's hand, the father could plainly see that she was right. It did have chapters and plenty of them. Thinking that his daughter would probably be unable to finish the large book and not wanting her to become disillusioned and discouraged, the man sought to caution her. "Honey," he said. "You have made a super choice, but you may not be able to finish reading such a big book." The child's reply bore an audacity born of innocence. "Daddy," she said. "You read a big book just like you read a little book — one page at a time."

Have you ever found yourself bogged down in the pages of some bulky, slow-moving book, a so-called "classic," only to return it to the shelf without having completed the chore? Frankly, I suspect that most of us would find a suspense-filled, fast-paced novel preferable to some heavy and ponderous, but informative, literary specimen. However, any of us could complete even the most boring, unattractive book if we were to read it one page at a time.

While too precious and brief for me to call it dull and pedestrian, life may not always be as exciting and flashy as we might hope. In those cases, living life "one page at a time" seems to be sensible advice. In Psalm 41:1, David declares how, in his circumstance, he waited patiently for the Lord. Because we so easily equate any notion of waiting patiently with a sort of pitiful inactivity, it may be helpful to understand that this phrase shares its root with an Old Testament word that means "whirling." From the root "whirling" also come the words "dancing," "writhing," spinning" and "churning." Certainly not an inactive state of affairs! While he waited patiently for his circumstance to change, David kept on faithfully performing, perhaps "one page at a time," that which the Lord had given him to do.

Someone might ask, "Where should I wait? I don't want to wait for the Lord in the wrong place." The answer is simple: Wait right where you are. A few years ago, a Soldier whom I know took his son fishing in one of the many creeks that dot the area around Savannah, Georgia. Because the creek banks were very soft due to recent heavy rain, my friend placed his son on a small pile of rocks and instructed him to wait there.

He then walked farther down the creek looking for a suitable place to fish, confident that he had left the boy in a safe spot. Soon he heard his son calling desperately for help. He returned quickly, only to find that the lad had failed to heed his instructions. Instead of staying put, the boy had strayed from his stable perch onto the soft, spongy sand near the water's edge. Now he was buried almost to his waist in the brackish ooze. The boy was relieved when his father lifted him out of the muck and returned him to solid ground (Psalm 41:2). Wait where you are.

Certainly, the life that God has given us is composed of many chapters: some exciting and stimulating; some fragile and full of trials; some tedious and fatiguing. Yet, every facet of life finds meaning as we wait patiently for the Lord, believing that He will sustain us, even while we wait ... "one chapter at a time."

Vacation Bible School set — Vacation Bible School will be Monday through June 18, from 9:30 a.m. until noon at White Elementary School on First Division Road. There will be classes for four-year-olds through those who have completed Middle School. The theme this year is "We Shine For Jesus." The program will include Bible study, music, recreation, crafts and refreshments.

There will also be two adult classes for parents who bring their children and wish to stay for a class and wait for their children. One adult class will study parenting and the other will be a marriage enrichment class. Chaplains will teach both of these classes.

Each child is asked to bring one package of box of cookies on the first day to be pooled and used as refreshments. Bus routes for Vacation Bible School are located in box below chapel notes. Volunteers are still needed in several positions.

Registration can be made in advance by phone at 545-4715 or at late registrations today at White School from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.

Sunday school meets — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at Edward A. White School on First Division Road from 9:30 until 10:30 a.m. There are classes for students two years of age through adults. Everyone is invited. Child watchcare for children younger than two, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School, is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel. If you need a ride to Sunday School, contact the Religious Education Center, 545-4715, and a bus will be scheduled to pick you up.

Marksman fires top American score

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U/S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) Soldier recently did something no American had ever done before. USAMU running target shooter Armando R. Ayala fired the highest score ever shot by an American running target shooter in international competition.

At the world cup in Milan, Italy, May 24-29, Ayala scored 580 points out of a possible 600 and a final score of 95.8. He received a total score of 675.8 out of a possible 709 and finished fourth in the match. The person who received the Bronze Medal scored a 676.9.

"It all came down to the last shot," Ayala said. "I was only about 1.9 points away from winning the Silver Medal and an Olympic quota slot for the United States."

But Ayala did shoot his personal best score, which was well over what is considered to be "world class scores" of 570s.

According to Ayala's coach, Troy Lawton, Ayala also shot a 582 in a recent match at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado earlier this year — only one point off the national record of 583, which Lawton himself holds.

"I'm very excited about this score — 580s will take a medal in the Olympics," Lawton said. "Armando has put in a lot of hard work and long hours to improve his technique — both mental and physical."

"This is the best I've ever done in an international competition," Ayala said. "I'm very excited. The difference is I've been keeping a good shooting diary and maintaining a good shot plan. I started doing it this year and it's helped increase my scores about 1.5 points higher than I averaged last year."

The United States currently has one running target quota slot for the Olympics so far. Ayala still has a chance to win another U.S. Olympic quota slot when he shoots in the Atlanta World Cup June 28 to 30 and in the Pan American Games July 26 to 31.

The Pan Am Games, which is conducted every four years, is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and the Campeonato de Tiro las Americas (CAT Games) — where shooters can win medals and set world records. The 1999 Pan Am Games is also the last opportunity for nations to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympic Games.

Ayala has pretty good aim and right now he's aiming for the year 2000. He hopes to represent the United States in the Sydney, Australia, Olympic Games.

Representing the Army team, Ayala shoots 10-meter, 30+30 and Mixed Run Courses using .22 caliber rifles for 50-meter events and .177 caliber air rifles with scopes for 10-meter events; all courses are fired while the target is moving. The 10-meter 30+30 is the only Olympic event; the others events are shot in interservice, national and international competitions. As a member of the U.S. Running Target Team, which he has made for the last three years, he also represents the United States in international competitions.

"I've improved a lot recently," Ayala said. "I have new equipment and a new outlook. I am now more confident."

"Armando is considered to be of the top three running target shooters in the country and has achieved a great deal in his first few years of running target competition," Lawton said.

Armando R. Ayala recently fired the highest score ever shot by an American running target shooter.

"The training I received at the marksmanship unit is world class and second to none. The support from the gunsmiths is exceptional," Ayala said. "I'm also still using the training techniques I learned when I went to China in 1997, that trip was a real eye-opener where I learned a different form of discipline from the 1996 Olympic Gold and Silver Medalists."

Raised in El Paso, Texas, Ayala enlisted in the Army in 1994. Following his completion of One Station Unit Training with the 54th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning, he was assigned to the Army Marksmanship Unit in February 1995.

He shot his first BB gun when he was 7 years old and took up shooting as a hobby in 1986. He shot international rifle in high school and took up the sport of Running Target in 1995.

In 1997, he won the title of Crossman International Airgun Championships Running Target Grand Champion, as well as winning team. He was also the USA Shooting 1997 National Running Target 50-meter Mixed Champion; USA Shooting of one Olympic Plaza, Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

Soldiers win matches

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Guidelines can prevent bicycling, skating mishaps

Pfc. Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet correspondent

Cyclists, skateboarders and in-line skaters can be seen throughout the streets of Fort Benning at any time during the day. These riders range from small children cruising the streets of housing to adults out on the trails.

"Fort Benning has safety laws that must be observed when participating in outdoor recreational sports," said Regis Beighley, USAIC safety manager.

While on a bicycle, the following rules apply:

•Cyclists must ride in single file only.

•Cyclists must come to a complete stop and yield the right of way when entering a street from an alley, driveway, and when emerging from between parked cars.

•Headphones or earphones will not be worn at any time while riding a bicycle

•Children under the age of four must use special safety seats when being carried as a passenger on a bicycle

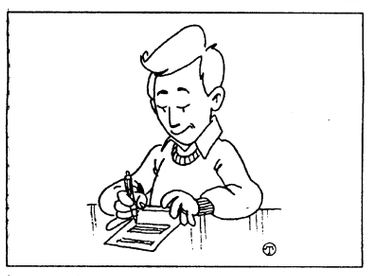
•During the hours of limited visibility, riders must wear reflective clothing or vest, have a white headlight visible from 300 feet, and reflectors mounted front and rear

•Cyclists are required to wear approved safety helmets at all times when riding on Fort Benning

When operating skateboards and roller skates the following laws must be observed:

•Skateboarding or roller skating is not allowed in areas normally reserved for other physical activities such as running tracks and tennis courts.

•When using a facility or are normally used for other purposes, the right of way will be given to patrons using the facility for its intended purposes. Other requirements include keeping to the right of the road with the flow of traffic, keeping in single file and obeying traffic signals.



•Skaters must wear an approved helmet, knee pads, elbow pads and reflective vests.

•In-line skating is not authorized from sundown to sunup.

•Skating is not allowed on any roadway where the posted speed limit exceeds 25 miles per hour. The following roadways are off limits to skaters at all times:

•10th Mountain Division Road
•Dixie Road
•Sightseeing Road from Dixie to Sunshine Road
•Sunshine Road
•Lumpkin Road from Dixie to Custer Road.
•Custer Road from Benning Road to Eisenhower Interchange
•Marne Road

Focusing In On Motion Picture History

(NAPSA)-Film is a medium that has the power to educate, thrill, elate and seduce. Still, more than 100 years after the advent of motion pictures, what movies do best is the purpose for which they were created: entertainment.

Then: The birth of motion pictures can really be attributed to Hannibal W. Goodwin, an American clergyman who developed a transparent, flexible base called celluloid in 1889. This base could hold a coating of film and was tough enough to withstand repeated viewings.

New lenses help cinematographers expand the creative possibilities of filmmaking.

Working with Goodwin's development, Thomas Edison created the kinetoscope, a projector which held 50 feet of film. Within five years, kinetoscope parlors had appeared in New York City, Paris and London.

The director D.W. Griffith, between 1908 and 1913, explored the creative possibilities of camera angles and lighting, and helped usher in new editing techniques. Mack Sennett, in his silent comedies, used trick photography and sharp editing to make hilarious shorts that raced along.

In the early 1930s, shortly after the creation of the Academy Awards, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences began presenting awards to companies and individuals whose technical innovations helped advance the art of filmmaking.

Now: Filmmakers are still exploring the limits of the medium. For example, a new kind of zoom lens makes it possible for cameras to focus more quickly, allowing for greater mobility during filming. As a result, the images achieved are exceptionally sharp, with high resolution and contrast.

This type of "variable prime lens" was used on Arriflex cameras in making the Oscar-winning film Shakespeare in Love and won a 1999 Academy Award of its own.

The Variable Prime Lens earned its creators, the Carl Zeiss Company and Arnold & Richter Cine Technik, a Scientific and Engineering Award. This was the second such Academy Award for the Carl Zeiss Company, which won another in 1987 for a series of high-speed Arriflex lenses.

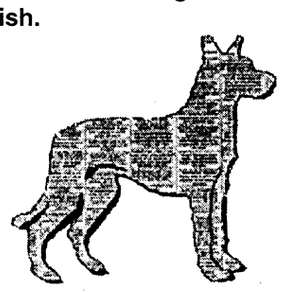
HINTS FOR HOMEMAKERS

Durable Furniture

(NAPSA)-A new way of coating wood for home-office furniture, kitchen cabinets and outdoor grill tables is expected to make these "hard use" products retain their new look longer.

Powder coating, used to protect cars, bicycles and garden equipment against rust and wear, is now available on wood furniture for the home.

According to Rick Lemson, president of Precise CNC Routing, Inc., powder-coated computer desks and children's furniture "can take a beating and retain their good looks much longer than products with traditional surfaces."



What makes the coating so tough, manufacturers say, is the way the powder is fused onto specially treated wood surfaces. First the dry particles get a mild electric charge so they will stick to the pre-treated wood. Then the powder is baked on.

The Powder Coating Institute, the trade association for powder suppliers and equipment manufacturers, has introduced a new "Powder Coated Tough" trademark to help consumers identify products with a powder coating.

For a free color brochure on powder coated products, write to the Powder Coating Institute at 2121 Eisenhower Ave., Ste 401, Alexandria, VA 22314 or visit their website at www.powdercoating.org.

Powder-coated furniture can stand up to wear and tear while maintaining its bright finish.

IT'S THE LAW!

Simple Steps Can Avoid Employment Lawsuits

Author Sheldon I. London.

1. Give your managers and supervisors a crash course in what the federal employment laws are and what they mean.

2. Be sure that new managers and supervisors are briefed on the laws within the first few days of assuming their new responsibilities. The process does not need to be time-consuming and can save hours of corrective action later on.

3. Make training an ongoing process. The laws change and when they do, the new information needs to be made available to each manager.

There are a number of good, inexpensive publications on the market that succinctly explain all the laws and how they can impact on a business. Most are easy to read and easy to understand. One nationally recognized publication is the 1999 edition of How To Comply With Federal Employee Laws, authored by Sheldon I. London. Published by Vizia Enterprises, the softcover book explains all the significant laws and comes with an interactive CD-ROM that can be used in training. More information can be obtained by visiting the publisher's website at www.viziaenterprises.com or by calling 1-800-378-6573.

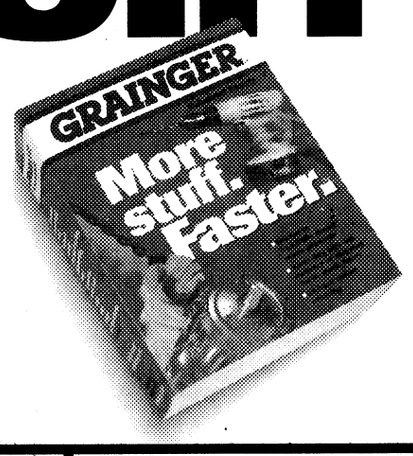
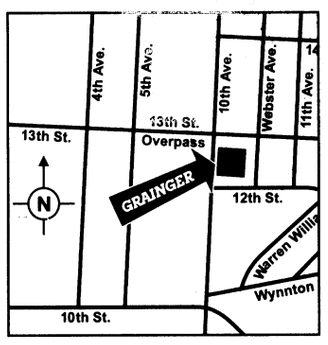
MAKING LIFE MORE FUN

Tahitians Know How To Party



(NAPSA)-Perhaps nowhere in the world are there more festivals than in Tahiti, the most populous island of French Polynesia. In days gone by, festivals were plentiful on this South Pacific island and allowed for a temporary disregard of social barriers. Festival organizers, or "ariois," were chosen from all social classes for their special talents as dancers, singers and storytellers. Arranged into theatrical groups, they traveled from island to island in canoe flotillas entertaining the Polynesian people.



Their descendants, who speak French, continue to perpetuate these folkloric traditions, entertaining visitors as well as the islanders, according to Pleasant Tahitian Holidays. Of all the festivities depicting the local color, the most popular is the "Tiurai" in Papeete, commemorating the capture of the Bastille in Paris in 1789.

For two to three weeks, beginning July 14, all of Polynesia is a giant party, actually outdoing the Parisians. There's a parade, where beauty pageant winners are carried through the streets in canoes, outrigger canoe races in the harbor, javelin-throwing contests and seemingly endless hipwaving Tahitian dancing. Tiurai dance costumes must be put together only with indigenous natural products, such as leaves, fibers, bamboo, shells and flowers.

The Polynesians really know how to throw a party, and the purpose of the festivities is to keep alive these traditions by sharing them with visitors.

Words for a changing Army
CAN'T•CAN DO

We've never done it before. We have the opportunity to be the first.
It's too complicated. Let's look at it from a different angle.
We don't have the resources. Necessity is the mother of invention.
It will never work. We'll give it a try.
There's not enough time. We'll re-evaluate some priorities.
We already tried it. We learned from the experience.
There's no way it'll work. We can make it work.
It's a waste of time. Think of the possibilities.
It's a waste of money. The investment will be worth it.
We don't have the expertise. Let's network with those who do.
It's not the Army way. It could be a better way.
We can't compete. We'll be innovative.
It's good enough. There is always room for improvement.
We don't have enough money. Maybe there's something we can cut.
We're understaffed. We're a lean, mean machine!
We don't have enough room. Temporary space may be an option.
It will never fly. We will never know until we try.
We don't have the equipment. Maybe we can contract it out.
It's not going to get any better. We'll try it one more time.
It can't be done. It's a challenge.
No one communicates. Let's open the channels.
Isn't it time to go home? Days go so quickly around here.
I don't have any idea. I'll come up with some alternatives.
Let somebody else deal with it. I'm ready to learn something new.
We keep changing direction. We're in touch with a changing Army.
It's too radical a change. Let's take a chance.
It takes too long for approval. We'll walk it through the system.
Our customers won't buy it. We'll do better at educating them.
Our post is the wrong size. We're perfect for this project.
It doesn't fit us. We should look at it.
IT'S NOT MY JOB. I'll be glad to take the responsibility.
I can't. I can!

Preventing Blindness

(NAPSA)-Millions of people are at risk of going blind and do not know it. Two leading causes of blindness in the United States are diabetic eye disease and glaucoma.

LIONS EYE HEALTH PROGRAM — LIONS CONQUERING BLINDNESS — SIGHTFIRST

In the early stages of both, there are often no symptoms or pain. Often, vision loss may occur without the affected person realizing it. People at risk for diabetic eye disease include anyone with diabetes or a family history of diabetes. Those at risk for glaucoma include African-Americans over 40, anyone over 60 and everyone with diabetes or a family history of glaucoma.

Fortunately, blindness from both diseases is preventable through early detection and treatment. The Lions Eye Health Program (LEHP) encourages people at risk for eye disease to have a regular dilated pupil examination: once a year for diabetic eye disease and every two years for glaucoma. Funded by a SightFirst grant from the Lions Clubs International Foundation, LEHP is an educational outreach program which enables Lions clubs to have a major impact in their communities by involving members in this important initiative to enlighten others about preventable blindness. For free brochures about glaucoma and diabetic eye disease, please contact LEHP at 1-800-982-0356.

Infantry community honors two with Doughboy award

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Two retired Soldiers who logged nearly 70 years of service combined, were honored in front of Infantry Hall June 3 for their lifelong contributions to the Infantry community.

Retired Gen. William R. Richardson and retired Sgt. Maj. Basil L. Plumley were honored with the 1999 Doughboy Award, an accolade awarded annually to an elite pair of the Army's top Infantrymen.

"I'm deeply honored and very grateful to have been selected for the Doughboy Award for 1999," said Richardson during the ceremony.

Richardson, who retired in 1986 after a 35-year career, served overseas in Japan, Korea, Vietnam and the Canal Zone. He was also responsible for the development of the Army's new AirLand Battle Doctrine, the reorganization of the Army's heavy divisions to meet the demands of a modernized Army.

"As long as I live, two institutions of the U.S. Army will always merit my devotion. One is West Point, where I learned the meaning of duty, honor and country. And the other is the U.S. Army Infantry School at Fort Benning, where I learned about training, fighting skills, leadership, professional confidence and warrior values," he continued. "The Infantry School produces the finest combat leaders who will always be at the forefront of the Army's marvelous school system. And most importantly, it sets the standards for the rest of the Army. To me, this will always be home."

He said he will always be proud to be an Infantryman and he always tried to see that the Infantry got the recognition it deserved.

When it was Plumley's turn to step up to the podium, he shared Richardson's sentiments about receiving the award.

"It's a distinct honor for me to be awarded the Doughboy trophy," he said. "This culminates my time in the Army service. I received this trophy and I take it not for me, but for all the Soldiers in the U.S. Army past, present and future..."

After serving more than 32 years in the Army, Plumley, a Columbus resident, retired in 1974. During his distinguished career, Plumley made five combat jumps including jumps in Sicily, Normandy and North Korea.

The Doughboy Award, a chromed World War I helmet, draws its name from a pre-World War I training site near the Rio Grande in Texas where trainees blanketed in dust were called 'Adobes' by mounted troops. Throughout the training this name was abridged to 'dobies,' and later to 'doughboys.'

Richardson and Plumley join a list of recipients that include Bob Hope, H. Ross Perot, Bill Mauldin, Sen. John Tower, Sen. Bob Dole, Gen. Colin Powell, Gen. Matthew Ridgeway and Gen. Aubrey Newman.

BCTB Soldier saves life of fellow trainee

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Six weeks from now, as Company D, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, prepares to make that trek across the graduation field, there will be one Soldier who sticks out in formation. Standing next to his fellow Soldiers clad in their crisp, but bare Class A's, Spc. Aaron Cain will have one medal upon his chest — an Army Achievement Medal.

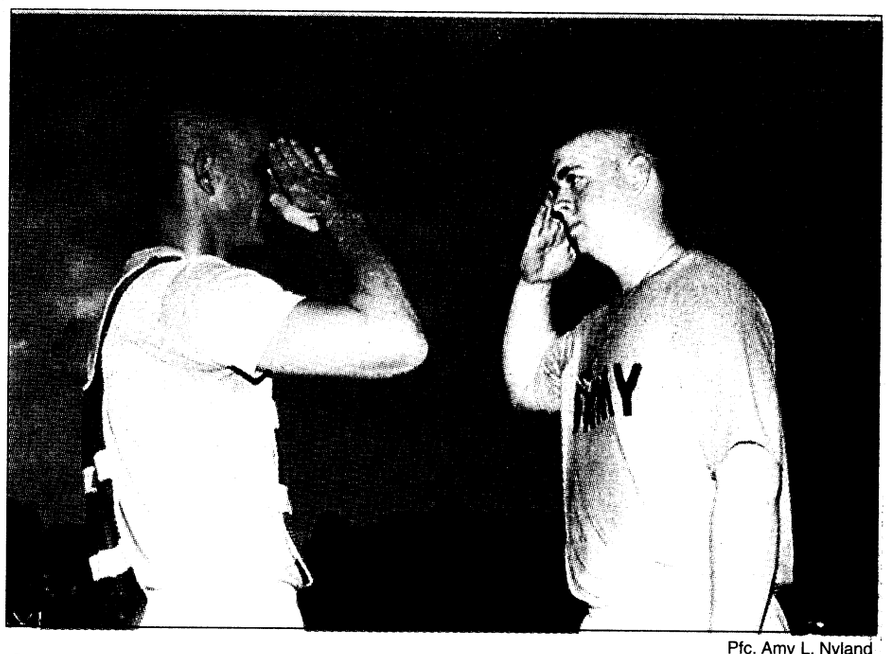
Just graduating basic training is an achievement in itself, but for the 23-year-old Michigan native, knowing he helped save his buddy's life is perhaps his biggest accomplishment of all.

For Cain and the other members of his company what started out as a typical go-through at the mess hall turned into something much more. It was among the "get in and get out" madness that Cain did something that would set him apart from his peers — he saved someone from choking.

"I heard someone say, 'can you breathe, are you choking,'" Cain said. "I looked up and Pvt. Beasley's face was red and he was waving his arms around. I said, 'get him out of the chair,' and I gave him about two or three thrusts and asked him if he could breathe, but he shook his head no. So I gave him about three more and after that he was able to breathe."

Cain said when he first realized what had to be done, he was scared, but that didn't stop him from acting quickly to save the Soldier's life.

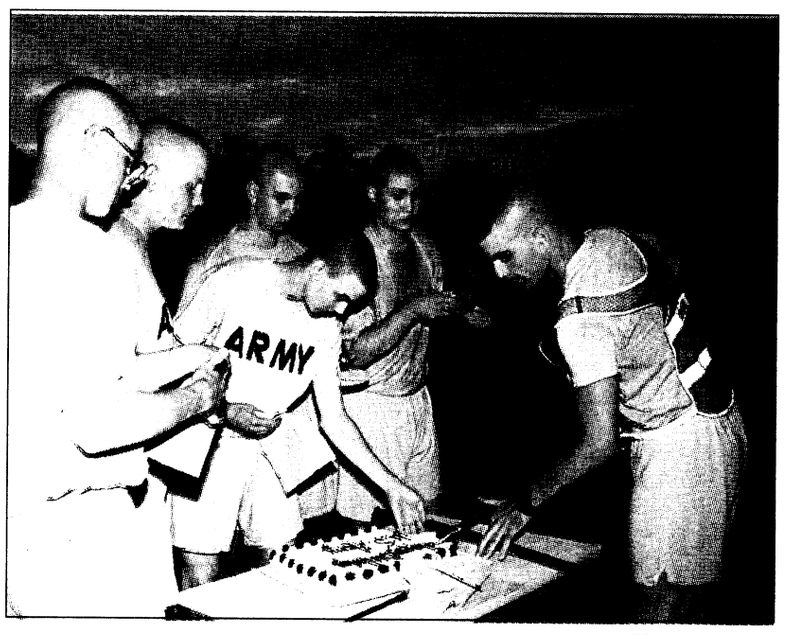
"I had never done the Heimlich before, so at first I was scared, but while it was happening it all went so fast I didn't have time to be really scared until afterwards ... until I realized what would have happened if I couldn't have done it."



Although Cain describes his efforts as in no way heroic, the person he performed the Heimleich maneuver on disagreed.

Pvt. Terry Beasley said he was eating in a hurry when an extra large chunk of food got caught in his throat. He said at first he tried to dislodge it with some water, but when that didn't work he began to get frantic.

"I started slapping the table and the person across from me asked me if I was OK. I told him in body language I was choking," Beasley said. "When Cain found out about it, he came behind me ... I didn't even know it was him. I was just so scared. The only thing going through my mind was this could be the end."



Beasley said he has no idea what would

Initiative may change LRS

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

While leaders from Long Range Surveillance (LRS) units all over the world gathered to address the issues that are facing LRS forces during the 1999 LRS Conference May 11-13, the Ranger Training Brigade was also getting ready to participate in an endeavor which may eventually affect the future of Infantry Brigades Army-wide.

That endeavor began May 17 with the arrival of Company E, 327th Infantry Regiment, Brigade Reconnaissance Detachment, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) from Fort Campbell, Ky. The company came to Fort Benning to attend the LRS Leaders Course which is instructed by Company D, 4th Ranger Training Battalion. What makes this training unique is that Co. E is the first reconnaissance detachment in recent years working at the brigade level, according to Capt. John Anderson, Co. E, 327 Inf. Regt. Commander.

Anderson said the company was formed on a provisional six month-basis from May to December.

He explained that the purpose of the initiative was to create an operational unit that is proficient at collecting intelligence specifically for the brigade level. Over the course of the next six months the company will conduct a strenuous and demanding training regimen where the concept will eventually be validated with a rotation at JRTC in September.

He noted that the biggest reason for having brigade level reconnaissance assets comes from the fact that LRS typically operates at the battalion and division level, which can present some problems to a brigade.

"A LRS detachment works anywhere from 80 to 150 klicks out from the front lines, while scouts at the battalion level work from four to 10 klicks from the battalion," Anderson said. "Anywhere from 10 to 125 kilometers, there is a big gap in reconnaissance and intelligence.

Parents need to believe in their children

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

There is one thing I have recently begun to thank God for, and I think most women can agree — the fact that you can't catch a pregnancy.

commentary

I have to tell you, if that was the case I would probably have popped out at least five kids by now. It's amazing how many pregnant women I know. It seems like every time I turn around someone else is bombarding me with news about the blessed bun in the oven.

Don't get me wrong, I absolutely adore babies and have nothing against pregnant women; it's just with the recent baby boom, my head is spinning.

Lately, with the knowledge that many of my friends are about to become parents I have begun to wonder about different things, like what qualities make a good parent and what kind of parent do I want to be when I finally decide to have a baby?

When I think about how a good parent should be, there is one person who immediately comes to mind — my mother. And I'm not just saying that to make up for my teenage years, it's the truth.

The reason I know she is a good parent isn't because I turned out so darn smart, witty and loveable. It's because I can only hope that I will be able to do as good of a job raising my kids as she has done with me, my brother and the more than 200 others who have called, and continue to call her, "Mom." I can honestly say she is my hero.

You see, for the last 12 years my mom has been a foster parent, raising other people's children. Now that alone may be enough to get her the parent of the century award, but it goes far beyond that.

For her, being a parent isn't something she does, it's who she is. Above and beyond being my counselor, consoler, protector, provider and punisher, she is my best friend and confidant. No matter when I need a shoulder to cry on or an ear to listen, she is there, ready to cry and laugh with me.

There is one thing about my mom though that sets her apart from most other parents and that is the fact that she never judges. No matter what phase I was going through, no matter what friends I brought home and even today no matter how I act or feel she always supports me and never judges me.

When I was nine and wanted to be a professional ball juggler, she told me I could be anything I wanted to be. When I was 12 and wanted to wear shirts that hung down to my knees, she never laughed. When I went through my rebellious teen-age days and brought home friends who looked like they had just knocked off the local convenience store she always gave them a chance. When I was 18 and made the choice to join the Army, she stood behind me 100 percent. And most importantly she always told me she believed in me no matter how far I seemed to go off the beaten path or lose my direction.

She never once lost faith in me ... and believe me I have done some things worthy of a little faith loss. Basically, she put the world in my lap, gave me the confidence to conquer it and has guided, not pushed me every step of the way. She let me be my own person and I knew that no matter who that was, it would be OK. This is the greatest gift she has ever given me.

I realize there are many qualities that a good parent has to have, but believing in your children and not judging them are probably the most important. If your children know they are free to make mistakes without losing your love, then they won't be afraid to let you in their lives. Heck, I tell my mother everything and wouldn't have it any other way. I have no problem letting people know how much she means to me.

She is my rock and my hero and because of the kind of parent she is, I ended up believing in her, in others, but most importantly, in myself.

Father's gardening reflects parenting style

Lt. Col. Rick Thomas
Fort McClellan Public Affairs Office

"How we spend our days is, of course, how we spend our lives."
(Annie Dillard, The Writing Life)

commentary

My father's garden has been sowed and he is already reaping his harvest. I am sure that each plant, whether it be corn, tomato, squash or okra, will get individual attention. I dare say each day every single plant will benefit from his personal touch and care.

Last fall and through the winter, he prepared the garden plot ensuring the soil would be optimum for the plants to flourish. Winter rye prospered in the coldest months. Now, that rye is the source of nutrition for the plants, which began as seeds in his garage.

Every day, he is in his garden weeding, watering and fertilizing. I suspect he even talks to the plants as they grow, although he would never admit it. Since he literally watches them grow, he can probably chart each plant's growth from one day to the next.

Last month, acid rain and wind killed many of my dad's young plants. He suffered along with the cucumber and squash damaged in the storm. However, he immediately planted new seeds and began caring for them.

Beside his garden are two koi pools. (For those who do not know, koi are fish.) Just like his plants, Daddy can tell you when he added which koi, which koi were born in which year and even which two koi were the parents of which young fish. He knows when they are hungry and when the weather is too cold for them to eat. Every now and then, in lieu of their normal food, he provides them a treat of a worm or a cricket, for example.

It is the same care I personally received from this gardener and raiser of koi. When his children needed or need watering, he was and is there. I suspect we all believe we're Dad's favorite. And, I suspect we all are in our own way. I know about the care received by his tomato, corn and okra plants, just like I know how the koi feel.

In Life's Little Instruction Book, H. Jackson Brown, Jr. wrote, "Live so that when your children think of fairness and integrity, they think of you."

I know who I think of. I hope I inherited that character trait from my dad so that one day, my two children, will also think of me.

Happy Fathers' Day to all.

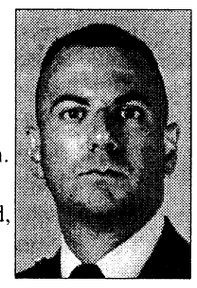
Weight allowances cause trouble for single Soldiers

Master Sgt. Larry Lane
Bayonet correspondent

For those who know me, this next line will come as a surprise: I've decided to get married.

commentary

Shocked? Please don't send congratulatory cards yet. I don't have a fiancee and then I'll have to explain this whole marriage thing to my mom.



This is the deal: I need a wife so I can get more household weight when I move overseas. OK, I know this all sounds so superficial, but I feel more household weight is as valid a reason to get married as others I've heard.

I won't comment on those other reasons, but I do want to point an accusing finger at what I believe is one of those single vs. married inequities (ripoffs) of all times.

I'm single and PCSing to an overseas location. I'll probably be over there for three years and will have to find an apartment.

Here's the number-crunching part of this problem.

As a single senior enlisted Soldier, I'm authorized 1,700 pounds of household weight and the rest either goes into storage or I pay for the extra weight. If married, I'm authorized to ship just about everything I own.

Whether single or married, I'm also authorized a shipment of 500 pounds unaccompanied baggage, a crate of stuff that gets shipped quickly to my destination with the idea I'll immediately need this stuff as soon as I sign into my new company.

OK, back to why I need to get married. I've got a lot of stuff I want to take with me and not have it buried in some dank storage area until I'm done with my tour.

I'm not asking the Army to ship a speedboat or a toolshed, and I don't have a rare animal that needs a three-week quarantine. I mean normal stuff like dressers, beds, futons, books, pots and pans, and other ordinary household furnishings.

The authorities are nice enough to recognize I am an older Soldier with a little bit of rank, so I'm authorized off-post housing. Fantastic. I buy all of the furnishings that make my overpriced apartment a happy home and get penalized later for trying to fill my empty home.

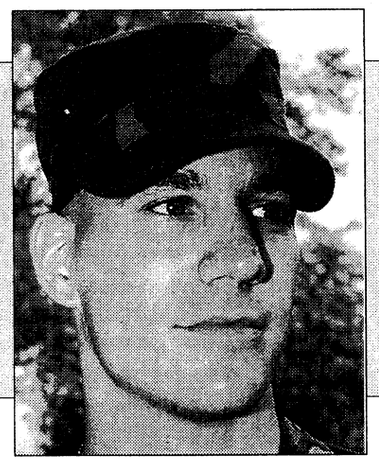
I have to figure the wisest way to spend my 1,700 pounds. Should I ship my futon and store my bed? Which pots and pans do I really need? Should I store the watercolor my mom painted of a street scene we could see from an apartment we shared in Italy?

Here's some more irony. If I don't take something, a desk for example, I'll likely have to buy it over there. This explains why I have three irons and two ironing boards. Of course, I'll have to watch or weigh what I buy overseas because all of that weight will add up and I'll find myself in the same jam coming back to the U.S.

I was given the room to grow and I did just that. I was provided money to rent an apartment with rooms to fill up with furniture and white walls to hang pictures.

The loophole (there's always one) is "professional weight," pounds factored in for what one needs for work but isn't factored into the rest of your weight. Professional weight can mean uniforms, computers, books and whatever else you use for work. That stuff adds up if you're a journalist. The movers were just here and I think my professional weight exceeded my personal weight.

I wonder how much the Army is annually charged for storage and how this might compare to shipping costs? For most Soldiers, the assignments manager likes to share the wealth, that is, have Soldiers serve both overseas and CONUS assignments. This means, if you're single, you may eventually run into my situation.



The lesson is if you're single, get married or live like a mercenary, only acquiring what you can move in the back of a 1994 Jeep Cherokee Sport. Sometimes 75 percent of your worldly possessions will be in a warehouse somewhere.

If I was "King of Shipping," single enlisted troops considered "career Soldiers" would get about 3,500 pounds to work their overseas PCS math. Single senior-enlisted Soldiers don't need as much weight as a married couple, but 1,700 barely meets my needs.

I don't know why the addition of a spouse increases a Soldier's overseas weight allowance from 1,700 pounds to (don't quote me on this) a gazillion pounds, but I personally wouldn't want someone who brought that much baggage into a relationship.

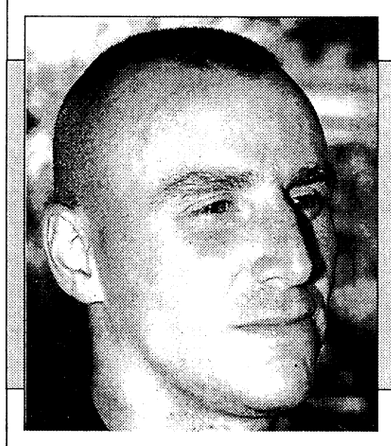
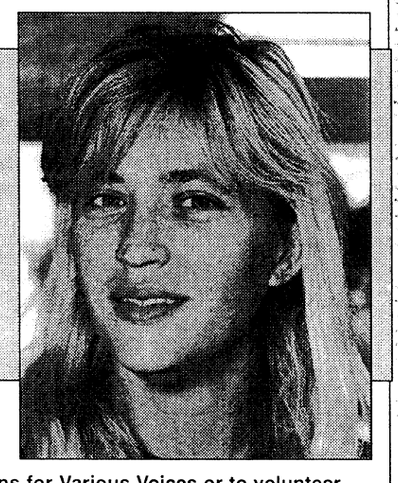
What qualities do you think a good parent should possess?

Pvt. Clifton Mays, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment — "They need to have patience first of all. They need to be understanding and pay attention to their kids. They should be aware at all times of how their kids are feeling just by how they are acting."



Staff Sgt. Vanessa Carr, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think parents should be understanding, consistent across the board and they have to be able to compromise sometimes ... but always be in control."



Brian Hawkins, family member — "They should be nice, intelligent, responsible, proper, patient, understanding and easy to talk to."

Betzaida Volta, family member — "Parents need to have honesty, responsibility and morality!"

Spc. Kevin Kelly, Ranger Indoctrination Program — "Parents need to be available. Not so much that they are always there, but to be able to support and understand their children. They need to lead their children, but also let them be their own person."

Debbie Waller, family member — "Love is the main thing. Love, compassion and understanding. You also have to have lots of patience. Parents need to take time for their children, because they should always come first."

Hero: receives AAM for actions

have happened if Cain hadn't taken charge and performed the life- saving measure.

"When I knew I was going to be OK, I was relieved," Beasley said. "I definitely consider him a hero."

Cain, who had been a nurse for four years before enlisting in the Reserves, said although he had never done the Heimleich before, he is used to having to deal with the same kinds of situations. In fact, his MOS is 91C, licensed practical nurse.

He said he doesn't consider himself a hero, because he just happened to be there at the right time to help.

"I would say a hero is somebody who goes beyond or pushes themselves beyond their means to obtain a goal," Cain said. "It's definitely outstanding to get this award, but I think I was just at the right place at the right time to be able to do something good."

Staff Sgt. Jimmy Russel, drill sergeant for Company D, 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., said Cain is always giving 110 percent, and what he did exemplifies what the Army is all about.

"What Cain did falls under the Army values of discipline and personal courage," Russel said. "Rather than panicking and just calling for a drill sergeant, he took immediate action to save his buddy's life. He demonstrated the skills that we have been teaching these guys. He also helped show his fellow Soldiers the value of paying attention to detail and instructions, because they never know when they may be called upon to save their buddy's life."

On Monday, after the 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt. celebrated the Army's 224th Birthday, Cain was called to the front of the formation to receive his AAM from Battalion Commander, Lt. Col. Edward Daly.

Right now, Cain has his sights on getting through basic training, but as for the future, he plans on helping a lot more people.

"I want to be able get through basic training as fast as I can," he said. "My wife is coming to see me graduate and then I head straight to AIT. I just finished my RN before I came in, but I haven't taken my boards yet. So, ultimately I want to get my bachelor's and my nurse practioner's."

Army chief unveils new flag

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Army News Service

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer today officially unveiled and presented the Sergeant Major of the Army Flag.

Reimer said the flag was an important step for the Army since creating the service's senior enlisted position in 1966. "It is more than a symbol of an office. It recognizes they (NCOs) are key to our future."

Robert E. Hall, Sgt. Maj. of the Army, accepted the flag at the Pentagon ceremony by saying, "I accept for all those NCOs who served and who are serving," and said he felt he is an insignificant person in the Army's scheme, but has the privilege to be the "keeper of the colors." No other service branch senior enlisted has a flag.

Hall said he could talk about the NCO by quoting Ripling, "NCOs are the backbone of the Army," or from a historical standpoint and talk about the Army theme in 1989 which was the "Year of the NCO," and said he could talk about the NCO from Lexington to Concord to Von Steuben and to Yorktown, but said, "some things never change."

He said the day is about all the Soldiers and said "we will continue to strive to do what is right, legally and morally, everyday, and to treat all Soldiers with dignity and respect and to live up to the line from the NCO creed, that, 'No one is more professional than I.'"

The flag, designed by the U.S. Army Institute of Heraldry, was taken from the insignia created in 1966 to distinguish the SMA rank. The flag background is divided diagonally from the upper fly to lower hoist, in scarlet and white, with scarlet uppermost. The insignia of the SMA is centered on the flag with the fringe in yellow, cord and tassels in scarlet and white.

Reimer lauded the tradition of the noncommissioned officer and talked about Jamestown in 1609 when squads, led by NCOs, took turns in providing security for the settlement, up to and beyond the Civil War when NCOs marched up front of the Army's line ensuring the lines were filled when someone was shot. "The leadership skills were enormous then," he said.

He chronicled how the corps adapted to changes in the Army and picked up the most difficult task of training Soldiers and to lead and inspire. "That is the underlining philosophy still," he said, and he said NCOs live the line from the NCO Creed, "No one is more professional than I, every day."

"NCOs work minor miracles turning citizens into Soldiers and ensuring Soldiers survive on the battlefield."

Golden Knights need Soldiers

Army News Service

The U.S. Army Parachute Team, also known as the "Golden Knights," is looking for new members.

Active-duty Soldiers interested in joining the world's premiere military parachute team must submit an application and meet all requirements listed below to attend the team's September-October 1999 assessment and selection program at Fort Bragg, N.C.

All applicants must meet the following prerequisites: The "Golden Knights" is the Army's only official aerial demonstration team. Since its inception in 1959 at Fort Bragg, the men and women of this team have come to be recognized as the Army's ambassadors of goodwill. The team has performed more than 7,500 live aerial demonstrations throughout all 50 states and 46 foreign countries. "Golden Knights" parachutists are among the best in the world; the team has provided 129 national and 23 world champions during 35 years of performing and competing in the name of the U.S. Army.

Applications can be downloaded by first accessing the Army recruiting website at www.goarmy.com. Then, click on "Army Tour" to access the Golden Knights' website.

Applications can also be obtained by contacting the Golden Knights' administration office, (910) 396-4800 or DSN 236-4800.

Applications should be sent to the USAPT Administration Section, U.S. Army Parachute Team, P.O. Box 70126, Fort Bragg, N.C. 28307-0126.

Normally, Golden Knights applications must be received by June 30 each year, however, for this year, the deadline for receipt of applications has been changed to July 10, 1999.

Applicants who are accepted to attend the assessment and selection program will be notified via telephone and mail.

LRS: RTB participates in initiative

This unit was created to fill the void and provide the brigade commander with information necessary to retain the initiative and win on the battlefield."

According to Capt. Mike Viera, Co. D, 4th RTBn commander, the LRS Leader's Course was the stepping stone for the 327th Inf. Regt.

"The mission for the cadre of Company D was to help the unit establish a base in knowledge of field craft and operational technique so they can return to their home station and continue to build upon that base," Viera said.

"They have bent over backwards supporting us and getting this unit on board," Anderson said. "We have personnel with various experience levels ranging in rank from E-2 to O-3 going through the course which is designed for E-5 and above. The men have come a long way. Some have been in the Army less than a year and are now doing operation orders, going out on long range land navigation and working on surveillance sights in close proximity to enemy objectives. This has a lot to due with the excellent training they received from the cadre of Co. D and the effort and hard work the Soldiers have put forth."

Spc. Jason Campbell, Co. E, 327 Inf. Regt., said the training has been tough, but worthwhile.

"The cadre is excellent and I definitely think this unit will go places," Campbell said. "All of us are motivated and ready to do the job."

The company graduated Thursday and have returned to Fort Campbell to keep building on the strong foundation they received from the 4th RTBn. In September all eyes will be on the company as it heads to JRTC to do what it's training for — work as the eyes and ears for the commander of the 327th Inf. Regt., 101st Abn. Div.

The only person to win three consecutive Tony Awards in the same category is composer/lyricist Stephen Sondheim who picked up awards for Best Musical Score for Company (1971), Follies (1972) and A Little Night Music (1973).

29th Inf. Regt. hosts annual live-fire demonstration

29th Infantry Regiment

On June 8, the 29th Infantry Regiment hosted the annual Infantry Conference live-fire demonstration at Fort Benning's Red Cloud Range. The purpose of the day and night demonstration was to provide Infantrymen worldwide an opportunity to observe firsthand the most recent developments in Infantry weapons and skills in a live fire setting.

More than 2,000 Soldiers, family members and civilians watched the Monday rehearsal or the Tuesday execution as Soldiers demonstrated a variety of weapons. Following individual weapons demonstrations and a break, the spectators had an opportunity to see a platoon from Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) conduct a night mechanized Infantry live fire assault.

After the demonstration, many people commented on the overall professionalism and hard work the Soldiers put into this great event.

"Now I know what a Soldier must be prepared to do," commented Jessica Rivera.

Two civilians who had completed their basic training at Fort Benning in 1978 were among the spectators and they commented, "The Infantry has changed a lot; we are definitely a force to be reckoned with." Both of these civilians were M60 Machine Gunners in the 82nd Airborne Division and were most impressed with the Army's newest machine gun — the 240B.

This year's Infantry Conference theme was "One Infantry." As part of the live-fire demonstration, the Infantry Center presented the doctrinal, training and tactical employment of Infantry weapons in the form of a night vision aided live fire demonstration on Red Cloud Range.

The following units and subject matter experts demonstrated weapon systems:

•Advance Infantry Marksmanship, Co. C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Staff Sgt. Brian Cummins

•Sniper Weapons, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., Staff Sgt. James Cork

•Rifle Launched, Dismounted Battle Space Battle Lab (DBBL),, Lt. Col. Jeff Benton

•Entry Munition (Door Buster), Sgt. Joseph Shannon

•60 mm Mortar, Co. D, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., Staff Sgt. Rodney Ford

•M2A3 Demo, BIC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., Staff Sgt. Randall Marks, Bradley Platoon Demonstration

Highlights of the demonstrations included the outstanding shooting by Catherell (the Land Warrior) and the first live-fire demonstration of the Army's recently selected Heavy Sniper Weapon, the Barrett 50 caliber XM107 by Cork and Spc. Keith S. Mangels.

The Army's newest way to say "Hello, I'm coming on in" impressed the crowd, when DBBL's Rifle Launched Entry Munition blasted through a double locked, solid oak door. Shannon reengaged the door just to make sure that the audience understood that the Audie Murphy Company (Co. B, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt.) was on the range.

Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. provided a superb display of marksmanship by rifle and machine guns using the latest combat optics and thermal weapons sights.

The M2A3 Bradley Fighting Vehicle was the first Fort Benning live-fire demonstration of the Army's newest mechanized Infantry vehicle, which is currently being trained and tested with 4th Infantry Division at Fort Hood. The demonstration concluded with a platoon base of fire demonstration by four Bradley Fighting Vehicle crews from 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

The Soldiers of Kelly Hill were also present as part of the demonstration and provided one of the most outstanding platoon live fire demonstrations ever seen on Fort Benning. Soldiers of Co. B, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., conducted a mechanized Infantry platoon live fire assault that included:

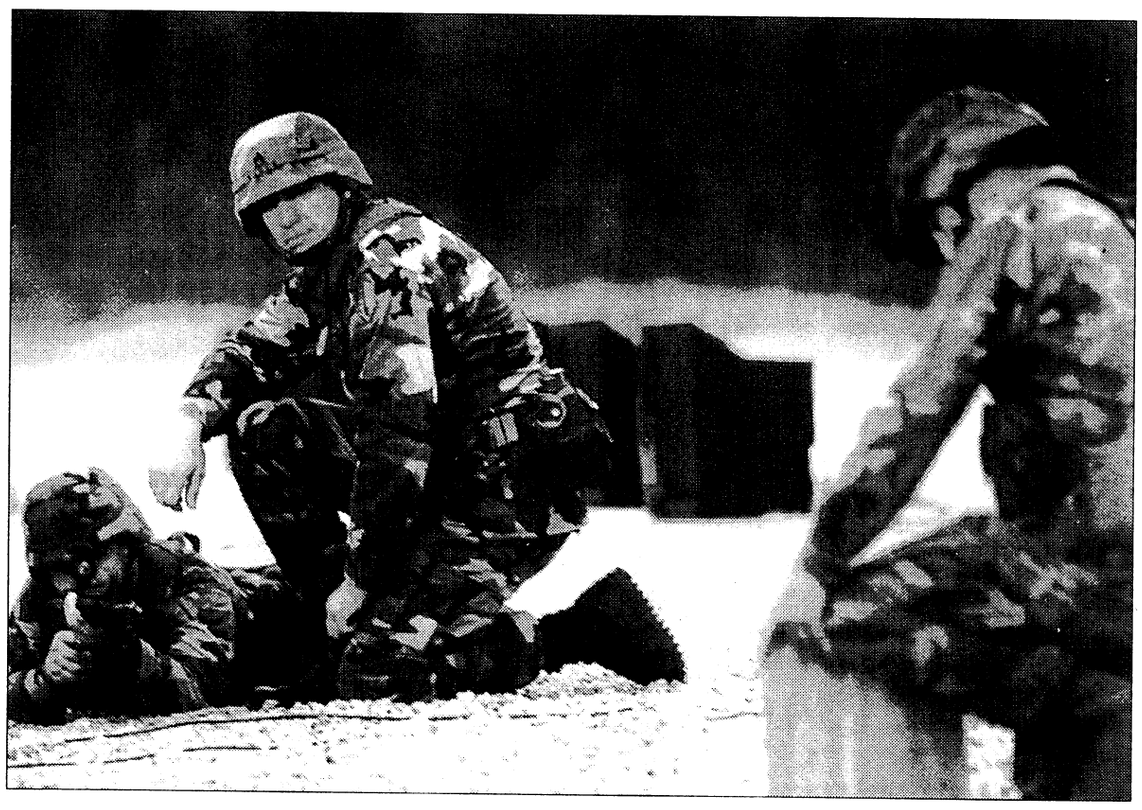
•breaching an obstacle,

•clearing a trench line;

•entering and clearing a building; and

•consolidation and reorganization.

Co. B Commander Capt. Pete Granger and 1st Platoon Leader 1st Lt. Ivy Williams along with Platoon Sergeant Sgt. 1st Class Samuel Simon were commended by Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. The 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. Mortar Platoon Leader 1st Lt. John Spurlock was also commended for the outstanding indirect fire support provided to the platoon live fire.



The platoon deployed its four M2A2 Operation Desert Storm Bradley Fighting Vehicles as a base of fire while three Infantry rifle squads assaulted the trenchline and bunker complex and cleared two buildings on the objective. The assault culminated with the enemy forces destroyed and the objective destroyed.

The ability of the rifle Infantry to deploy the Javelin anti-armor weapon forward on the objective provided the opportunity to live fire this incredible Infantry weapon. On order of the platoon leader, the Javelin gunner (Staff Sgt. Michael Johnson Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.) tracked his target, fired the missile, and began to withdraw with his squad. The Javelin roared from the objective marked by a path of flame. Streaking high above the battlefield, the Javelin identified its target and plunged precisely killing its tank target two kilometers away. Meanwhile, the rifle squads consolidated and moved back to the pick up point to rejoin their Bradley vehicles and continue the attack.

In addition to the presenters, there were an enormous number of unsung heroes who made the Infantry Conference HOTEX a true success. The Soldiers form Co. C, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., provided the backbone along with Co. A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf.Regt. who prepared and set up Red Cloud Range. Their untiring efforts made the beautification and function of Red Cloud Range extremely smooth.

The Fort Benning community stepped up to bat and provided outstanding support in the areas of Range Control (Gary Conners), DPW (Lou Warner), Training Support Center (Jane Preston), Fort Benning Fire Department (Capt. Randall Hill) and Directorate of Public Safety. (Master Sgt. David Jones). The success of this major event would not have been able to happen with out the outstanding support of these agencies. In particular the professionals from the Training Aids Support Center, provided outstanding audio and visual support. Working with the NCOs from 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. and other agencies, the sights and sounds of the live fire were captured and telecast by this crew.

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

During the marksmanship portion of the live-fire, Soldiers demonstrate shooting techniques using the latest in combat optics and thermal weapons sights.

Health center helps Soldiers with emotional problems

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The Infantry Training Brigade has a outlet where Soldiers can turn to if they begin to experience some of the various problems new Soldiers may face. When Soldiers begin experiencing issues ranging from coping to Infantry life, homesickness and even more severe emotional problems, they are referred to the Community Mental Health Clinic on Sand Hill to talk to those who can offer assistance.

"Our purpose is to assist commands to see if Soldiers are a danger to themselves, others or if they are fit for duty," said Sgt. Christina Mitchell, NCOIC of Community Mental Health Clinic on Sand Hill. "Soldiers can go through their chain of command when they are dealing with problems they do not feel comfortable going to their drill sergeants about. We act as a neutral party for the Soldier."

An average of 10 to 15 Soldiers per day receive evaluations at the clinic, according to Mitchell.

Although some of the Soldiers seen at the clinic do not like training and can not handle the stress it includes, the majority of Soldiers who are seen have previous unreported psychiatric problems which become aggravated by the training environment, Mitchell said.

Soldiers who are in a leadership position can assist those who they believe need help by taking the first step and talking to the Soldier.

Drill sergeants need to find out what is going on with a Soldier. They should not be afraid to ask the Soldier if they have had thoughts of harming themselves or others, Mitchell said. However, they need to be referred to the Community Mental Health Clinic if they have thoughts which might pose a danger to the Soldier or others, Mitchell said.

If a Soldier is found to be high risk, they are then referred to Martin Army Community Hospital where they can talk to a doctor and be evaluated further.

Soldiers may also be scheduled for follow-up appointments or be recommended for separation depending on the severity of the problem.

However, in order for a Soldier to be seen at the clinic, they must first go through their chain of command and receive a command referral. Soldiers will not be seen without it.

For more information, call 544-8852.

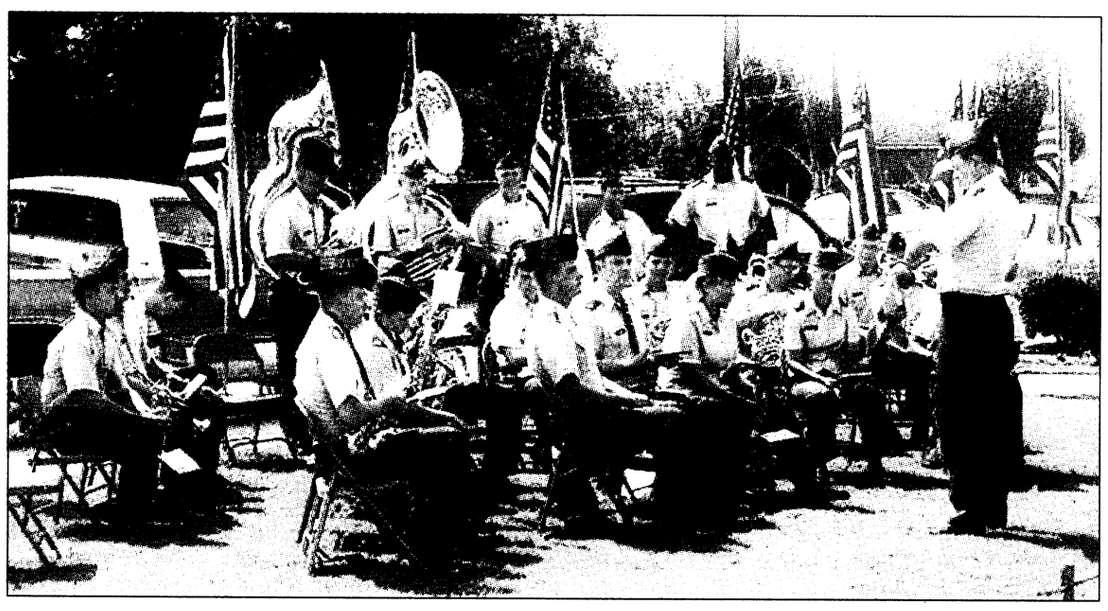
Soldiers from the 11th Infantry Regiment work on renovations to their new regimental headquarters Building 2749.

11th Regt. comes full circle

11th Infantry Regiment



After moving out of their headquarters in Building 2749 in 1991, the 11th Infantry Regiment was relocated to Building 76 and then to Building 75. During his command of the 11th Regiment, Col. Victor Bero pledged to move the headquarters to a more suitable location. After months of searching for a location large enough to accommodate a regimental headquarters, Bero and the Director of Public Works Col. Randy Buck decided to move the Regiment back to its old home in Building 2749. Thus began six months of vigorous and labor filled days preparing the building for its new occupants.

The 1st Battalion, (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment whose headquarters was presently located in the building, had to be moved. Buck offered to fund the move of the unit and limited repairs to Building 2749. With their relocation to Building 2758, the renovation could begin. Building 2749 had not been renovated since the mid-70's and was in need of a major overhaul. 11th Regiment Executive Officer Maj Brett Floro accepted this as a challenge and the regiment, with troop labor, would pick up where DPW left off.

What appeared to be an insurmountable task was soon beginning to take shape. Old walls and ceilings were removed and new ones erected. The Regiment S-4, Lorenzo Rehberg and 1st Lt. Michael Artiaga from the 2nd Battalion, 11th Regiment were charged with the day-to-day supervision of the renovation. Holdovers from the 1st Bn., 507th Inf. were soon turned into construction workers. DPW Shop 3 personnel were also there to assist and advise as the project began to take shape.

As Bero's vision began to take shape, the building began to transform from an old, outdated relic to a modern regimental headquarters. A place visitors and staff would be proud of. As visitors enter the building, they often expressed amazement at the day-to-day improvements that had been made.

In this period of limited resources, it takes more effort from units to get things done. The 11th Regt. has demonstrated that a self-help project can succeed if both DPW and the organization work together. The list of those who made this project succeed would fill several pages. Holdovers from the 1st Bn., 507th Inf. provided the majority of the manpower while DPW Shop 3 employees — Bruce Sturchen, Richard Hill, Gary Blume, Billy Travis and Raymond Howell provided the expertise.

BBB offers limousine advice

Better Business Bureau

Whether you're planning transportation for a wedding, prom or for an important business associate or client, being well informed is the key to having a safe and satisfying ride. To reduce the risk of a no-show, getting poor service or not getting what you expected, the Better Business Bureau (BBB) recommends the following tips before hiring a limousine service provider:

•Check references. Choose an experienced, reputable company with numerous references. If a company can demonstrate that they have successfully operated for many years and has a solid reputation for quality and safety, you are probably in good hands. Contact your BBB for a reliability report. Ask for proof of insurance. Be aware that some limousine service providers insure their vehicles under a personal auto policy, if at all.

Personal auto insurance policies rarely cover the clients who hire the vehicle.

•For service taking you or your party across state lines, check with that state for regulations and compliance. In some states, the vehicle can be stopped and immediately impounded if found not in compliance.

•Seek quality chauffeurs. A professional chauffeur is equally as important to the success of your event as a nice vehicle.

•Get everything in writing. Special occasions, such as birthdays, weddings and proms, commonly require personalized attention to your specific arrangements. The more specific your requirements, the further in advance you should reserve and pay for your limousine.

•Know your rights. Inquire about the company's cancellation policy and get a copy in writing.

Soldiers conduct NBC training in heat of Kuwaiti desert

Spc. Brian Murphy
4th Public Affairs Detachment

CAMP DOHA, Kuwait — There's nothing but sand for as far as the naked eye can see. A lone camel has strayed away from his flock. Slowly, it patrols the area searching for anything resembling food.

This would normally be just another stroll in the desert, if not for the daring souls dressed in full Mission Oriented Protective Posture (MOPP) during a typically hot day in the Kabal May 24.

For the five Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (NBC) Soldiers of Task Force 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry, decontamination training was the task of the day.

"During this training, we are reacting to a chemical attack," said Sgt. Anthony Pope, NBC NCO, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. "The scenario is, we've been hit by a chemical agent. The MOPP suits we're wearing are contaminated. Without exposing ourselves to the chemicals, we need to change into a new suit."

For the situation, the Soldiers work in "buddy teams" of two. Using an M291 decontaminating kit, the first Soldier removes the contamination by rubbing a charcoal-like substance on his "buddy's" protective gloves. Once the gloves are decontaminated, he places them over his voice-mitter box, to allow the Soldiers to communicate with each other.

From there, the Soldier decontaminates from his buddy's hood all the way down to his overboots. The process is very thorough and can take some time to ensure proper decontamination.

According to Pope, he meets with 1st Lt. Sean Reilly, Task Force chemical officer; Pfc. Tammy Sexton, NBC specialist for 203rd Forward Support Battalion; Pvt. 2 Agostino Miraglia, NBC specialist for HHC, 1st Bn., 15th In.; and Pvt. 2 David Bligh, NBC specialist for Company C, 1st Bn., 15th In., at least once every other week to keep the NBC specialists proficient.

Brian Murphy
1st Lt. Sean Riley assists Pvt. 2 Agostino Miraglia with his mask during NBC training in the Kabal.

"This is great training," Pope said. "Most Soldiers know how to react to a chemical environment, but not many Soldiers know what to do if their suit gets contaminated. We teach the subject-matter experts.

"They will go from here and teach their individual companies."

According to Reilly, it's vital that the NBC instructors remain proficient at their job, so each company can be properly trained.

"We don't get to do this type of training very often," Reilly said. "I try and meet with the NBC Soldiers once every other week. We go over different aspects of NBC training. What we're doing today is very important. We have to ensure that the Soldiers who are teaching the classes know the correct procedures."

The training is more effective because in addition to being conducted at the unit's home station, it is also being done in Kuwait, Pope said.

"Soldiers need to be used to wearing their protective suit in the desert," he said. "It may get hot in that suit, but one day it could save their lives."

Guard units begin OCS rotations

Sgt. 1st Class Walter N. Dyky
Officer Candidate School

Look no farther than Fort Benning's Officer Candidate School (OCS) for evidence that the Army National Guard is continuing to expand its relationship with the active Army.

June 12 began the second year of five, two-week rotations for Senior National Guard Officer Candidates (OC) from across the U.S. and Puerto Rico who will complete Phase II before receiving commissions as second lieutenants.

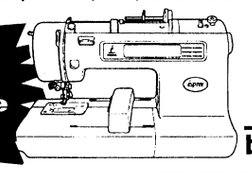
Fort Benning and OCS are the proponent agency for all state OCS programs.

The first rotation which began June 12 consists of 155 candidates, 17 female and 138 male, from 15 states and the District of Columbia. The states represented include Pennsylvania (21 OCs), Rhode Island (5 OCs), New York (34 OCs), Ohio (1 OC), New Jersey (17 OCs), New Hampshire (7 OCs), Nebraska (1 OC), Missouri (1 OC), Maine (1 OC), Maryland (14 OCs), Massachusetts (10 OCs), Delaware (6 OCs), Washington D.C. (6 OCs), West Virginia (4 OCs) and Virginia (17 OCs). Thirteen staff members round out the complement of 169 Soldiers for the first of five rotations.

Inprocessing for Phase III OCS included a review of officer candidate records to insure completeness and accuracy; medical records are screened for previous heat injury incidence or allergic reactions to stinging insects. Prescription eye wear and protective mask inserts are issued when necessary. Squad and platoons were formed and company leadership positions were assigned.

The Leaders Reaction Course, conducted at Dixie Village, is designed as a team building activity, providing candidates with an opportunity to hone their leadership skills while building a cohesive team structure. The troop leading fundamentals are stressed throughout each station with ample time devoted to the after action review process.

The Bolton Confidence Obstacle Course provides candidates with situations that will challenge their individual and collective skills to accomplish their assigned missions. Rotational cadre demonstrate each obstacle and supervise to successful completion. Candidates are encouraged to assist each other to successfully negotiate each obstacle in this non-timed exercise.



The Combat Water Survival activity, conducted at Carrie Pool, familiarizes officer candidates with the procedures to follow should a water obstacle be encountered while in the field. Weak and non-swimmers receive basic swimming instruction and are encouraged to complete all of the survival activities which include: swim with BDU, boots and weapon; blindfold drop from the three-meter board with BDU, boots and weapon and remove equipment under water.

Teach, Advise and Council (TAC) officers from the regions represented form the core leadership nucleus, which ensures that officer candidates are trained in accordance with OCS standards.

This seamless integration of the reserve components into the active duty training environment truly exemplifies the "One Army" concept in action and will ensure a supply of trained leaders well into the 21st century.

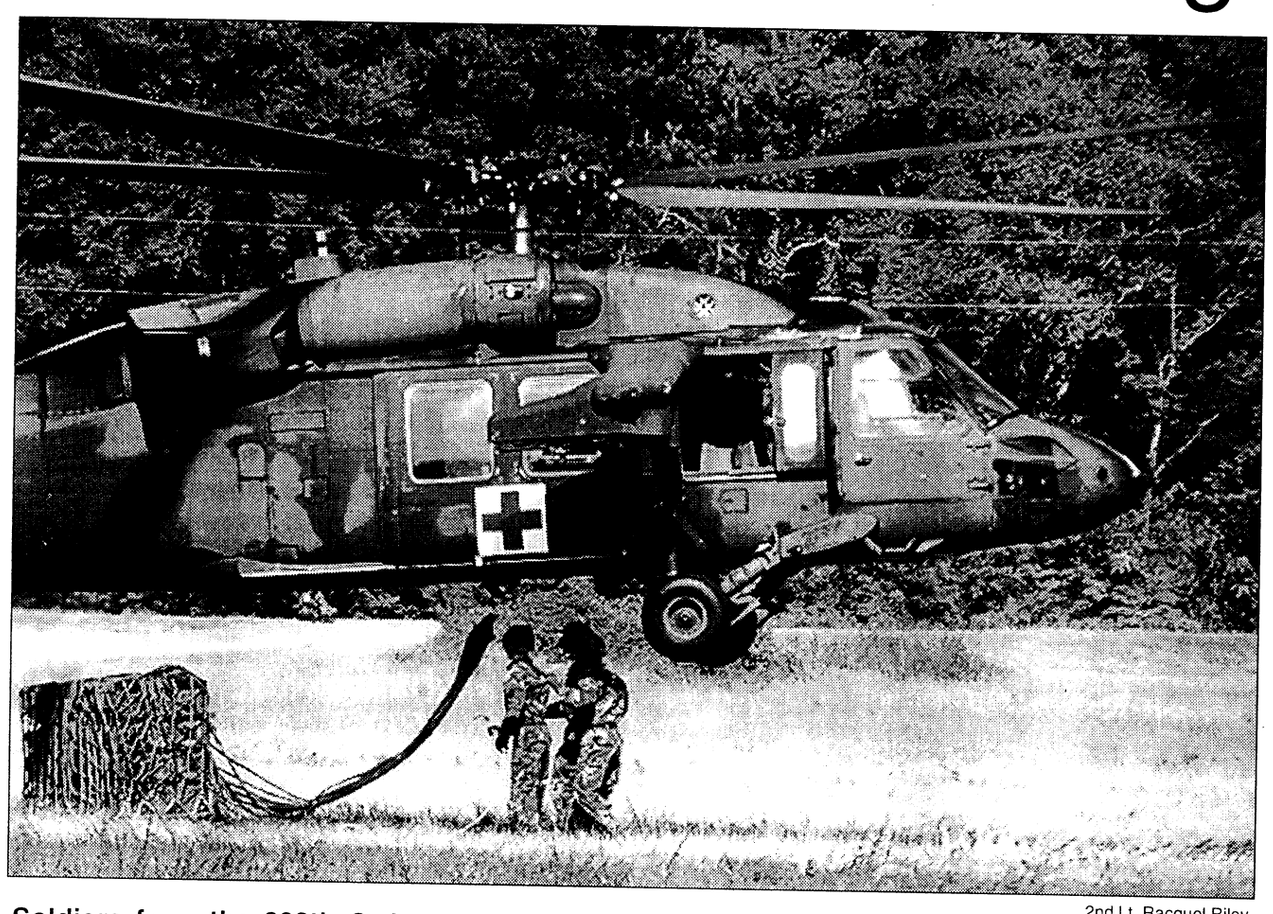
608th completes ammunition training



608th Ordnance Company

The 608th Ordnance Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion, recently completed a week long ammunition training exercise which gave them the opportunity to train up for an upcoming rotation through the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

The company was called by the 1st Corps Support Command, Fort Bragg, N.C., to provide ammunition support to the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment from Fort Polk, La., as part of their Wagon Train II rotation to the desert in August.

A part of the 608th's doctrinal mission is to have the ability to conduct sling load operations in a theater of operations in support of division and non-divisional units. This is a mission the company would typically perform for the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) during war. The sling load operation was conducted jointly with the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance).

The 608th, commanded by Capt. Nate Hunsinger, is task organized to the 13th Corps Support Battalion, which is a 1st COSCOM unit a part of the XVIII Airborne Corps. However, while on Fort Benning, the company and battalion is aligned under the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) and operates the Installation Ammunition Supply Point providing ammunition for more than 100 customers ranging from active duty units to reserve and National Guard units.

Soldiers from the 608th Ordnance Company and 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) prepare to execute a sling load operation recently.

203rd FSB receives new commander

Pfc. Amy L Nyland

203rd Forward Support Battalion Command Sergeant Major Anthony T. Aubain passes the guidon to outgoing commander Lt. Col. James "Mike" Joyner during the change of command ceremony held Wednesday.

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), said their goodbyes to one commander and welcomed another during a change of command ceremony held Wednesday on Dickman Field.

Lt. Col. Jay Poole assumed command from Lt. Col James "Mike" Joyner who will head to Washington D.C. for his next tour.

Before he left, Joyner made sure to say his thanks to everyone who supported him during the two years he spent with the battalion, especially the Soldiers.

"The next and most important group I'd like to thank is the Soldiers of the battalion," Joyner said. "You are the power that makes the battalion run. Everything I asked of you was accomplished in an outstanding manner. Whether it was NTC or Kuwait, where I have 122 Soldiers deployed today, or whether it was preparing for the Marne inspection, you did it better than anyone else did, and I thank you."

Poole told the audience he was excited about joining the Marne team and was ready to lead the Soldiers into the next millennium.

"This is truly a great day in the life of the Poole family," Poole said. "I can't begin to tell you how fortunate and proud that I feel to again be taking command of American Soldiers. And doubly fortunate to be taking command in the Marne division with its great history."

Poole who is a native of Virginia comes to Fort Benning after serving with the U.S. Army Personnel Command as the Quarter Master lieutenant colonel assignment officer and deputy of the Combat Service Support Division. He entered the Army as a Quartermaster second lieutenant in 1982 after receiving a Regular Army commission through the ROTC program. He holds a Bachelors in business administration and a masters in logistics,

Some of Poole's assignments include Class III platoon leader, main supply platoon leader and battalion adjutant, 5th Supply and Transport Battalion, T and E Company Commander, 266th Quartermaster Battalion; and executive officer of the 115th Forward Support Battalion.

Poole has received the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal with four oak leaf clusters , the Army Achievement Medal with three oak leaf clusters and the NATO medal.

Poole and his wife Melanie have three daughters; Candice, Julie and Heather.

Army turns 224

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Senior Army leaders — past and present — saluted the Army's 224th birthday Monday on Fort Myer, Va., and at Arlington National Cemetery.

Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, Sgt. Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall, and former Army chiefs of staff, retired Gen. Bernard W. Rogers and retired Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan celebrated the Army's special birthday ceremony on Whipple Field. Afterward, at nearby Arlington, Caldera, Reimer and Hall placed a ceremonial wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns.

"Today is not only a day to acknowledge the Army birthday, but it is (also) to pause and remember all that have served, and to say 'Thank you,'" said Reimer in his remarks at Fort Myer.

"Today is a day of remembrance and recognition (to) remember the service of heroes ... Soldiers all ... who served and sacrificed so that today we could enjoy the freedom of America, and this ceremony," said Reimer at Fort Myer. "We remember the (Continental) Army, forged in the fires of the Revolution; we remember the Army that gave the last full measure of devotion at Gettysburg; we remember the Army that fought the war to end all wars, over there.

"We remember the Army lead by the greatest generation, who seized the beaches of Normandy 55 years ago ... We also remember the Army that answered the calls in Korea, Vietnam and many other places during the Cold War. And the Army of Just Cause and Desert Storm," he said.

Reimer thanked Rogers and Sullivan for their leadership during their tours as chief of staff. Soldiers dedicated to values and selfless service have made the U.S. Army a success story, said Reimer, who noted that today's globally deployed Army features Soldiers "walking point in lonely, far-off (and) dangerous places, from the Balkans to Korea."

Indeed, Caldera noted that U.S. Soldiers had entered Kosovo the day before.

"American Soldiers ... (are) carrying the torch of liberty and hope into a land in which just a short while ago, the darkness of ethnic cleansing held sway," said Caldera. "As the Soldiers of the 82nd Airborne Division travel through this scarred land dotted with burned villages and freshly dug graves, thousands of ethnic Albanians lined their route, cheering them as they passed, showering them with flowers.

American Soldiers, said Caldera, "have answered the nation's call and selflessly served and sacrificed to protect liberty and freedom on distant shores ... bringing the blessings of peace, hope and freedom to a troubled world."

U.S. sends troops to Kosovo

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Army News Service

Some 1,500 members of the Army's Task Force Hawk have been ordered to Skopje, Macedonia to be among the first Americans to establish a presence in the Kosovo peace implementation force.

Army officials announced an additional 200 Soldiers from U.S. Army Europe's V Corps will join Task Force Hawk and about 1,900 Marines of the 26th Marine Expeditionary Unit to become Task Force Falcon, part of the international security force, called KFOR or Kosovo Force.

Task Force Falcon will eventually total 7,000 U.S. service members, Department of Defense officials said, but the remaining military units for the mission have not yet been identified.

The U.S. element of KFOR will control one of three zones in Kosovo according to a military technical agreement signed June 9 between Yugoslav armed forces representatives and NATO. Kenneth Bacon, DoD spokesman, said the U.S. will be responsible for the eastern part of Kosovo and will probably set up headquarters in the town of Gnjilane. He said Britain and France would control the other two zones.

The peacekeeping mission of KFOR is to establish a secure environment in Kosovo and allow ethnic Albanian Kosovars to return to their homes there, but officials said force protection remains a top priority.

Task Force Hawk is composed of units from the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 2nd Brigade, 1st Armored Division, Baumholder, Germany.

Army officials said elements from the task force include two light Infantry companies, an anti-tank company, engineers, military police, intelligence, signal, civil affairs, medical and explosive ordnance disposal personnel, AH-64 Apache attack helicopters, UH-60 Blackhawks, OH-58 Kiowa Scouts, CH-47 Chinooks, Abrams tanks, Bradley Fighting Vehicles, Paladin howitzers and 105mm artillery pieces.

The Army contingent of Task Force Hawk started moving from Tirana, Albania to Skopje, Macedonia June 9, DoD officials said, and should be in Skopje within 72 hours.

The U.S. element will be part of NATO's Allied Rapid Reaction Corps. An intermediate staging and support base, similar to the U.S. National Support Element in Taszar, Hungary, is being established at Camp Able Sentry in Skopje, Macedonia to supply and support the U.S. soldiers in KFOR.

Editor's Note: Information from this article came from interviews with Army officials, and articles from Task Force Hawk, U.S. Army Europe and the Armed Forces Press Service.

Spike it

A group of children play a game of volleyball during Vacation Bible School held June 14-18 at White Elementary School on First Division Road.

Classes were held for 4-year-olds through those children who have completed middle school. The theme of the Vacation Bible School this year was "We Shine For Jesus," and the program included Bible study, music, recreation crafts and refreshments. There were two adult classes held for parents who brought their children and wished to stay. One adult class studied parenting and the other was a marriage enrichment class.

Registration for 1999-2000 underway

Fort Benning Schools

Planning for the 1999-2000 school year is well underway. In order to improve service and effectively allocate resources, the Fort Benning Schools will hold registration and verification for the next school year in the schools Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. for the month of June.

If children attended the Fort Benning Schools this school year, it will be necessary for parents to verify registration data for next school year by visiting the schools. By participating in this registration and verification, there will be no need for parents to register their child or children in the fall. If children did not attend any Fort Benning Schools this school year, it will be necessary to complete a registration packet, which is available at the schools, to ensure them a place in the fall.

All registrations and verifications will take place at the child's or children's assigned or neighborhood schools. It will be necessary for parents to register at each school if they have children in more than one of the Fort Benning Schools.

Bus schedules will be available at a later date and will be published in The Bayonet. Bus schedules for any specialized transportation needs will be available in August. Forms for free and reduced price lunches will also be available at a later date.

New registration requires the child's Social Security Number and proof of on-post residence. Registration for pre-K and kindergarten requires the child's original birth certificate. Parents of pre-K and kindergarten students will be given information regarding the procedure for securing a Georgia Eye, Ear, Dental and Immunization Certificate at registration. Parents of students in grades one through eight must bring current shot records which will be recorded on Fort Benning School's health forms.

Verification will include: updating basic registration data (i.e. address, phone number, contact information), health and immunization updates, medications, etc. All registrations and verifications require sponsor and spouse to provide a current military ID card.

The Fort Benning Schools also offer a half-day pre-K program for children who reside on post and will be 4 years old on or before Sept. 1, 1999.

Additional Registration and Verification information is available on the Fort Benning School's website at benning.w1.odedodea.edu or by calling 545-7276.

Soldiers donate time to YS Center

1st Lt. Vance E. Nixon
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

In a downsized Army with an increased operational tempo, a Soldier's time is more valuable than ever. Despite these conditions, two Soldiers from Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment are donating their time to benefit Fort Benning children.

Staff Sgt. Lucius Harrington and Pfc. Andre Ramos have been working to improve the operation of the post's Youth Activities Center. Although generations apart in age, they have found a common bond by freely giving of themselves as they set the standard for other Soldiers of all ages to follow.

The Youth Center provides an array of sports programs for all ages including t-ball, basketball, soccer and swimming. During the summer months, the Youth Activities Center offers a variety of field trips to both entertain and educate the children. To ensure the success of the many programs, the center uses as many as 500 volunteers each year.

When Harrington began volunteering his services six weeks ago, he found the storage of nearly 1,000 items of sports equipment in a state of chaos. Using skills he learned from the Army and Marine Corps, Harrington organized and categorized the vast supply of sports equipment at the center.

According to Linda Laine, sports director for the Youth Activities Center, Harrington's time and skills have been of great importance to the center.

"Staff Sgt. Harrington has been a valuable asset to our operations," she said.

Harrington will soon begin to enter the inventory into a computer database ensuring that those who follow him will be able to easily maintain the inventory.

Ramos, who will soon undergo a permanent change of station to Korea, accepted the opportunity to give back to the community that supported him as an Infantry Soldier by helping organize the sports equipment.

Ramos created an accounting system to track when equipment was issued, to whom it was issued and when it was returned. This would assure 100 percent accountability at all times and assign responsibility to those who signed for equipment.

One Soldier at the beginning of his career, another nearing the end — both setting the example for others to follow. The actions of Harrington and Ramos embody the Army value of selfless service as they freely give of themselves for the benefit of the Fort Benning community.

Directorate of Public Works

Community Homefinding, Relocation & Referral Services (CHRRS) is located in Building 2621 in Soldiers' Plaza. You will find a "cheerful" staff to assist you in locating off-post housing. The CHRRS program is available to all military and family members and DoD civilians. The office can assist you in lease agreements, tenant and landlord problems or help you find a place to rent or purchase. Our main priority is locating adequate, affordable, non-discriminatory housing.

If anyone has a vacant house, apartment or mobile home for rent please stop by our office. Just bring a picture of the dwelling and we will help rent it for you. We will also assist you in selling your house. We have a large bulletin board in our lobby, on which we post items for everyone in-processing to Fort Benning to view. Anything listed with our office is made available to everyone.

The CHRRS Office works with the Columbus Board of Realtors, the Columbus Apartment Association and the Staff Judge Advocate Office. The CHRRS staff is actively involved in monthly meeting of the Columbus Apartment Association and special seminars on tenant and landlord, Fair Housing and Georgia laws. This allows the CHRRS Office to act as a mediator to assist in resolving off-post housing problems in a fair and equitable manner.

For more information on the services and programs provided by CHRRS, call 545-3921 or visit the Fort Benning homepage at www.benning.army.mil/Fbhome/. Better yet, just stop by to see us in Building 2621.

PCS planning

The permanent change of station (PCS) peak moving season is here. To ensure a smooth trouble free PCS, stop by the Family Housing Office located in Olson Hall, Building 399 to obtain information and advice that will prevent delays and problems later. Start your PCS planning early. Don't wait until the last minute, when we may not be able to guarantee a termination appointment for the specific date and time you may require.

Clearing government quarters can be easy, set up your mandatory Pre-Termination Inspection 30 to 45 days before you are scheduled to leave the installation. Problems or deficiencies identified at this inspection must be corrected before your Final Termination Inspection. Follow the Pre-termination inspector's instructions and information on the Pre-termination instruction sheet provided at the inspection.

National holidays, organization days and especially installation training holidays will impact installation clearing plans. During these times, although Soldiers complete termination of quarters, the entire out-processing at Soldiers Plaza is closed and installation signatures can not be obtained until the next duty day. Information phone numbers are: Quarters Management Section (Assignments and Terminations) at 545-2990, Inspection Section at 545-7312 and CHRRS at Soldiers' Plaza at 545-3921.

Handbook helps babies get healthy start in life

Georgia Department of Human Resources

"Growing Smart and Healthy Babies," a handbook of tips for helping young children get a good start in life, is being distributed to all daycare providers who are regulated by the Georgia Department of Human Resources (DHR) Office of Regulatory Services, Child Care Licensing Section (CCLS).

"The book provides guidelines to help child care professionals promote mental, physical, social and emotional development in infants and toddlers," said Jo Cato, CCLS director. "It's based on research on early brain development that has been done in the past few years. The guidelines are voluntary and not required for a daycare license or registration. However, we are encouraging everyone who takes care of children professionally to become familiar with the learning goals and to use some of the suggested activities and materials. Parents can also use the handbook to help them in selecting daycare for their child."

Sample tips offered in the handbook:

•Children under 1-year-old will imitate sounds others make and start distinguishing words. Talk, sing and read to them every day. Expand sounds, maintain eye contact and use gestures as well words to communicate. (language skills)

•Children 1 to 2 years of age hold pencils or crayons to scribble. Help them develop hand and eye coordination by providing finger paints, crayons and large markers. (physical development)

•From ages 2 to 3, children focus less on pictures in a book and more on images created in their own mind. Ask them to guess what will come next in a story, and to picture things that have happened in the past or might happen in the future. (cognitive skills and thinking)

•After age 3, children can learn to take turns and share, but may have difficulty. Provide opportunities for children to play together and negotiate social conflicts, such as dramatic play and play with blocks. (social and emotional development)

To obtain a copy of "Growing Smart and Healthy Babies," contact the Child Care Licensing Section, DHR Office of Regulatory Services, Two Peachtree Street NW, Room 32.458, Atlanta, GA, 30303 or call (404) 657-5562.

Vegetarian diet has health benefits

1st Lt. Lori A. Farrer
Nutrition Care Division, Beaumont Army Medical Center, Texas

If someone asked you to give up meat for a week, would you do it? Could you do it?

Most carnivores could not imagine a meal without biting into a piece of tender, juicy flesh; but that is changing. More people are moving in the direction of a diet centered on plants instead of meat.

In fact, so many people call themselves vegetarians the very definition has taken on a liberal meaning.

A true vegetarian is someone who does not eat any meat, fish, poultry, eggs or dairy products. Some may even go to the extreme of eliminating gelatin and honey from their diets. However, you may hear someone say, "I'm a vegetarian" but what they are really trying to say is "I avoid red meat but still eat chicken, fish, eggs, and milk."

So, why the shift towards meatless meals? The number-one reason people become plant eaters is not to protest against animal cruelty or world hunger, but because of health.

Most people became aware of the benefits of a vegetable-based diet almost two decades ago when Dr. Dean Ornish presented evidence of the reversal of heart disease through diet and lifestyle change.

It was during this time that the view of vegetarianism shifted in a new direction. Non-meateaters were criticized less and were no longer associated with the hippie movement of the 1970s. Today, vegetarianism is more popular than it has ever been before, because of what we know about its many health benefits.

You may think of plants as the vitamin and mineral powerhouses, but the fiber in these foods can be just as healthy. Fruits, vegetables and grains are high in both soluble and insoluble fiber, which helps lower your risk of cancer, heart disease, obesity and even diabetes.

For example, let's examine the Seventh-day Adventists. This group strongly encourages a vegetarian diet; and as a result, rates of colorectal cancer in this population are 97 percent less than in the general population.

Researchers attribute this to the high-fiber, low-fat diet associated with non-meateaters. The National Cancer Institute recommends eating 20-35 grams of fiber daily; but most of us are lucky if we get 15 grams a day.

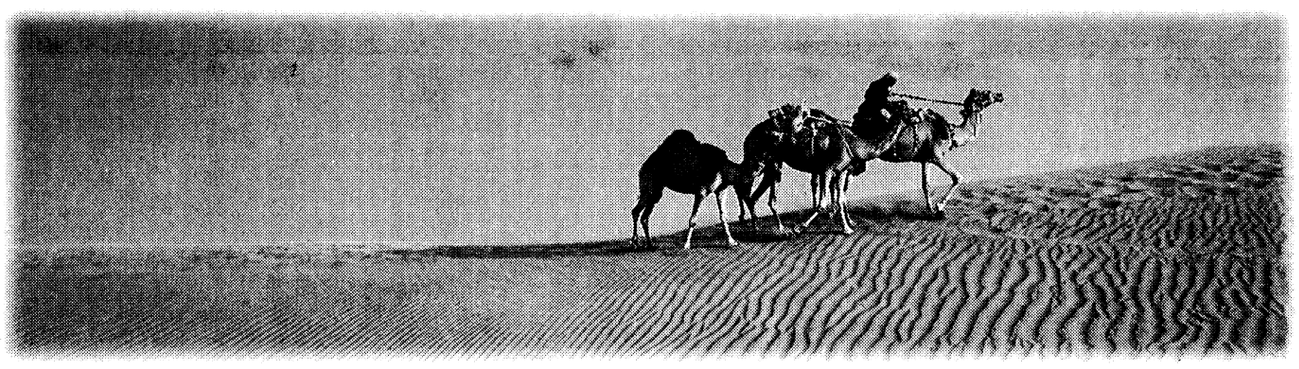
Seventh-day Adventists also have 59 percent less cancer of all kinds. This may be partially due to compounds in plants called "phytochemicals."

For example, men can reduce their risk of prostate cancer by eating foods high in lycopene, such as tomatoes and tomato products.

Women can reduce their risk of breast cancer by consuming foods high in a compound called genesteine, found in soy foods.

Catechin, another phytochemical found in green tea, is related to lower rates of esophageal cancer.

Non-meateaters can also look forward to lower heart disease for many reasons. A vegetarian diet is higher in soluble fiber, which lowers the LDL (low-density lipoprotein) or "bad cholesterol."

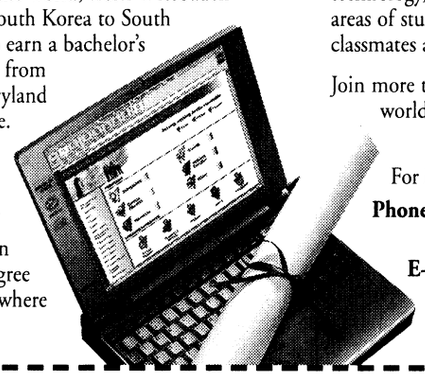


It is also higher in vitamin E and folic acid, both of which have protective effects against heart disease.

Eighty-two percent of the subjects who began exercising and who went on Ornish's plant-based diet —75 percent carbohydrate, 15 percent protein and 10 percent fat —showed a regression or reversal of their heart disease. In fact, many never even needed bypass surgery.

Yet another good reason for opting for meatless entrees is for food-safety purposes. Vegetarians are less likely to put themselves at risk for common food-borne illness such as E. coli (Escerichia coli) and salmonella. And, contrary to popular belief, plants have fewer pesticides than meat.

Still not convinced? Well, you don't have to completely give up the foods you love to reap the benefits of a vegetarian diet.



Substitute 1/3-cup soy flour in recipes for regular flour. Top your morning cereal with fruits and nuts. Try a garden burger occasionally as an alternative to a hamburger. Or try leaving the meat out of your stir-fry and replacing it with fish or tofu. You will be surprised how good you feel for making these subtle changes in your diet.

BBB explains responsibility of loan cosigner

Better Business Bureau

What if you were asked to cosign a loan for a family member or friend?

Before you give your answer, make sure you understand what cosigning involves. Under a Federal Trade Commission rule, creditors are required to give you a notice to help explain your obligations. The cosigner's notice says:

•You are being asked to guarantee a debt. If the borrower doesn't pay the debt, you will have to. Be sure you can afford to pay if you have to, and that you want to accept the responsibility.

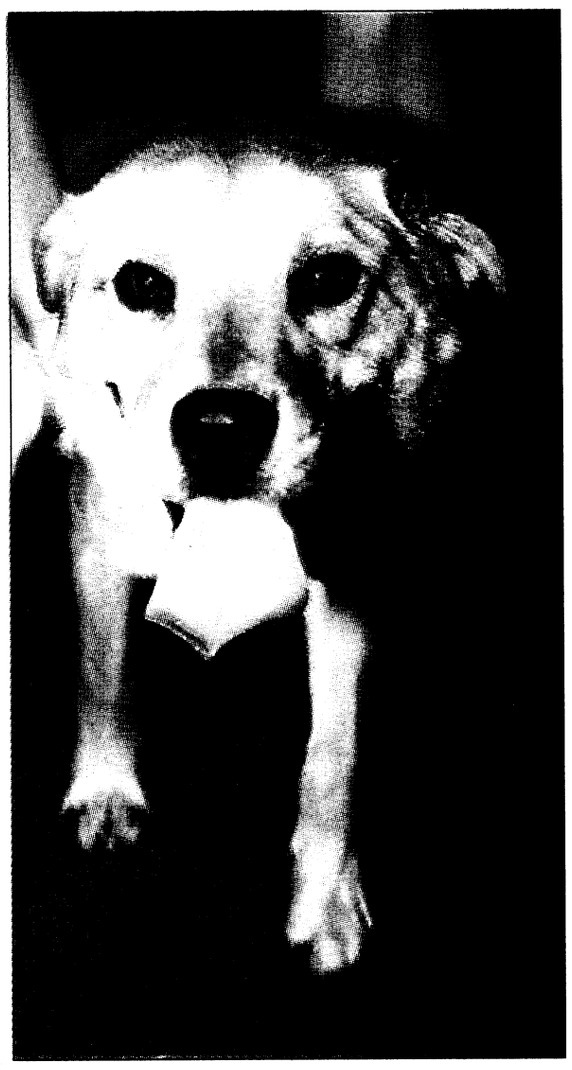
•You may have to pay up to the full amount of the debt if the borrower does not pay. You may also have to pay late fees or collection costs.

•The creditor can collect this debt from you without first trying to collect from the borrower. The creditor can use the same collection methods against you that can be used against the borrower, such as suing you, garnishing your wages, etc. If this debt is ever in default, that fact may become a part of your credit record.

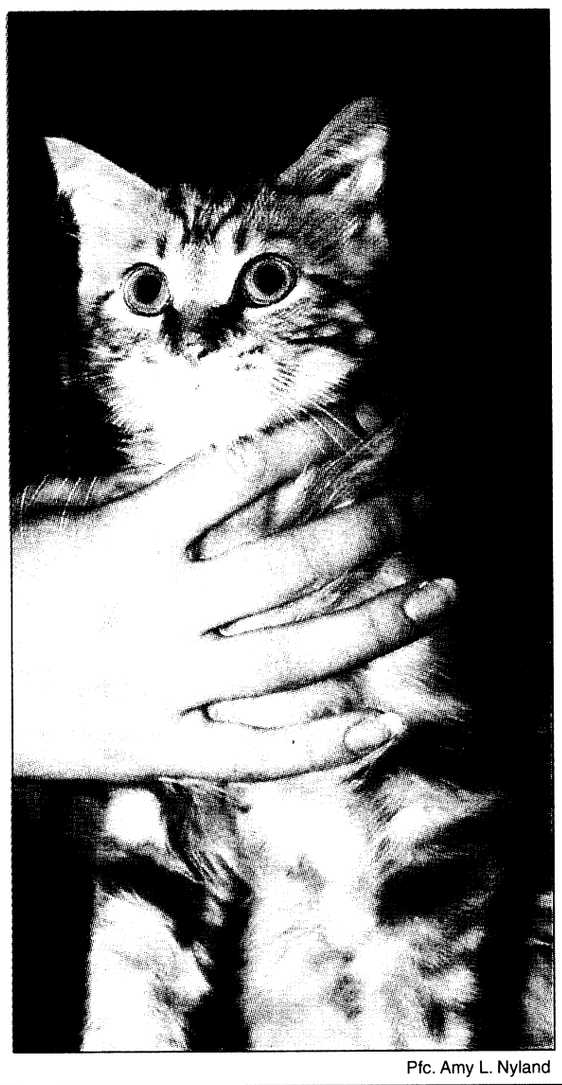
•This notice is not the contract that makes you liable for the debt. (Depending on your state, this may not apply: If state law forbids a creditor from collecting from a cosigner without first trying to collect from the primary debtor, this sentence may be crossed out or omitted on your cosigner notice.)

What are the chances that the borrower will default? Some studies of certain types of lenders show that as many as three out of four cosigners are asked to repay the loan.

Despite the risks, there may be times when you decide to cosign. Perhaps your son or daughter needs a first time loan. The Better Business Bureau, along with the Federal Trade Commission, recommends that you consider the following before you cosign.



•Be sure you can afford to pay the loan. If you are asked to pay and you cannot, you could be sued or your credit rating could be damaged.



•Before you cosign a loan, consider that even if you are not asked to repay the debt, your liability for this loan may keep you from getting other credit you may want or need.

•Before you pledge property, such as your car or home, to secure the loan, make sure you understand the consequences.

•Ask the lender to agree, in writing, to notify you if the borrower misses a payment. This will give you time to deal with the problem or make back payments.

•Obtain copies of important papers, such as the loan contract, the Truth-in-Lending Disclosure Statement, and any warranties if you are cosigning for a purchase. The lender is not required to give you these papers; you may have to get copies from the borrower.

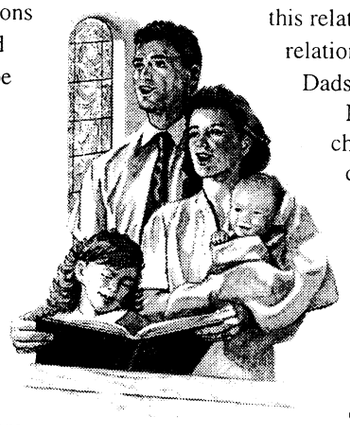
Fathers build, never destroy



Chaplain (Capt.) Mark E. Diddle
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade

During a time that is set aside to honor fathers, we need to look at two questions about dads. Are dads important? And do we need to develop certain characteristics to be a Christian dad?

General Douglas MacArthur, one of our most revered and celebrated warriors, had this to say in answer to the first question:

"By profession I am a Soldier and take pride in that fact. But I am prouder — infinitely prouder — to be a father. A Soldier destroys in order to build; the father only builds, never destroys. The one has the potentiality of death; the other embodies creation and life. And while hordes of death are mighty; the battalions of life are mightier still. It is my hope that my son, when I am gone, will remember me not from the battle, but in the home, repeating with him our simple daily prayer, "Our Father , who art in heaven ..."

MacArthur's words are timeless and point out the importance of dads. The last book of the Old Testament, Malachi, ends talking about the relationship between dads and children (Malachi 4:5-6). Looking back from the New Testament, we know that Jesus was to help restore this relationship. The hope of our future is in the relationship between dads and their children.

Dads are very important.

Now we need to consider what characteristics are important for a Christian dad. In looking at I Thessalonians 2:8-12, Paul provides us a list of characteristics. A Christian dad has a "fond affection for" his children (v8a); a desire for his children (v10); and a desire to build up his children vs. 11-12).

Not all of us are blessed with an earthly father who can show us what a dad should be. However, we have a heavenly Father and he has provided us with his perfect example in his word, of how to be a dad. The office of dad is one of sacred responsibility and trust and it takes a man of character to perform in this office. In order to be able to carry it out, we must all take on the characteristics above.

Sunday school meets — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at Edward A. White School on First Division Road from 9:30 until 10:30 a.m. There are classes for students 2 years of age through adult. Everyone is invited. Child watchcare for children younger than 2, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School, is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel. If you need a ride to Sunday School, contact the Religious Education Center, 545-4715, and a bus will be scheduled to pick you up.

Fund Custodian seeks musician — The Fund Custodian is currently accepting applications for contracts as chapel organist. Qualified organists who are interested in this contract should contact Staff Sgt. Constance Jones in Room 512, Infantry Hall or call 545-4960.

Protestant Youth of the Chapel conducts meeting — Senior High Youth of the Chapel meet every Sunday from 4 to 6 p.m. at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Chaplain and Mrs. Dave Baum lead the group. All senior high students are invited.

Parenting

Children need good role models, leaders

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. "Bud" Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

David Maines in his book, The Rise of ... Antichristism, relates this story that illustrates the need for Godly values being taught in our homes:

A young man in the Army of Alexander the Great had disgraced himself by running from the rabble. Normally this act of cowardice was punishable by death, but in a magnanimous moment of victory, Alexander listened to the pleas of an officer on behalf of the youth and excused him. The young man prostrated himself in shame and gratitude.

Alexander began to walk away, then turned, and almost as an afterthought, asked the boy his name.

"My name is like yours, sir," the youth stammered. "It's Alexander!"

The general was suddenly enraged. He grabbed the young man and yanked him to his feet. "Now hear me," he growled, glaring directly into the young man's eyes. "Either change your ways, or change your name!"

Of many lessons that came out of the tragedy in Littleton, Colo., is the need for parents to become more involved in the lives of their children. What would happen if all parents decided to live radically, assuming full responsibility for educating their children and instilling in them Godly values? Unfortunately this responsibility has been abdicated by far too many parents with devastating results.

Daniel E. Johnson in his book, Aim for the Children, writes this admonition to parents, "... work in concert with like-minded families in (your) community to raise a generation of young people in the fear and admonition of the Lord, teaching them that it is not wrong to be different, then sending them out into the world to reclaim for their children what has been lost by default."

Raising children is the toughest job a parent will ever have. Parents must be leaders, and they must be models. Remember attitudes are caught not taught. If you want your children to do what you do, carry on your values, your sense of right and wrong, you must spend time with them. If you want your children to become Godly then you must be Godly. Allow yourself to get close to your children and allow them to get close to you.

We are in the midst of a battle for the hearts, minds and souls of our children. This battle cannot be won without the help of the Great "Commander-in-Chief," who is the Heavenly Father. We who are part of his family, bear his name. And in the words of Daniel E. Johnson, "Either change your ways or change your name."

For many, parenting is overwhelming and they may needs some outside help. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Center located in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex can help. For more information, give the center a call at 545-20250.

YS holds basketball camp

Special to the Bayonet©

For the past five years, Robert Moore, assistant coach of the Columbus State University (CSU) men's basketball team, has shared his wealth of basketball knowledge and experiences with Fort Benning children during the Youth Services Summer Basketball Camp.

More than 40 children participated in the annual basketball camp held at the Main Post Youth Services Center June 14-18.

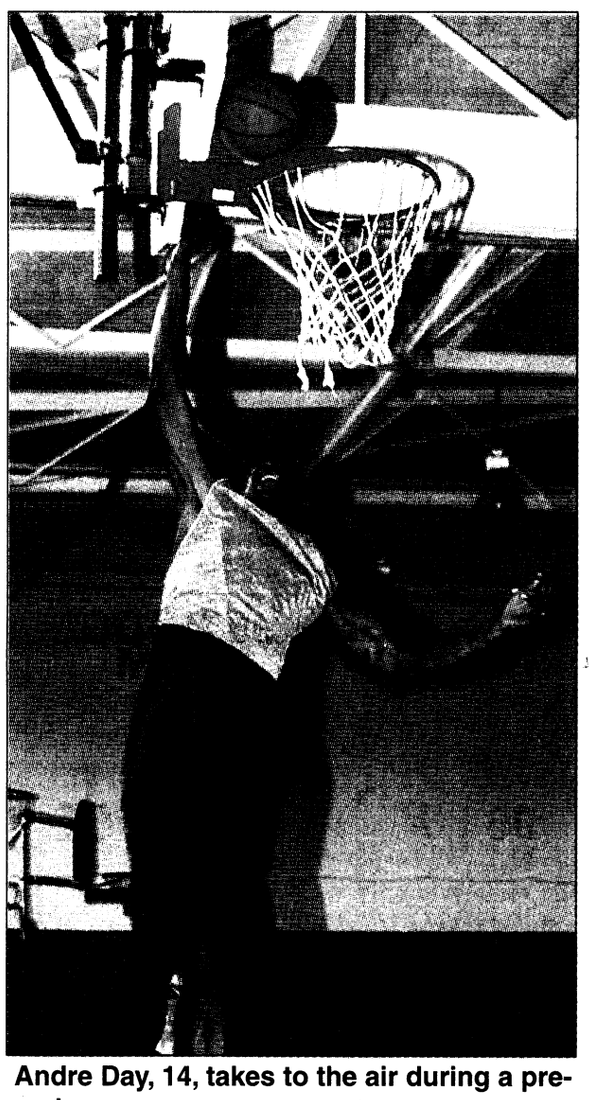
Athletics and coaching were always a part of Moore's life. He was exposed to the benefits of physical fitness and coaching at a very young age and has always enjoyed it.

"My mother was a physical education teacher and my father was a coach. Like my father, I love to coach especially young children," Moore said.

Moore, a member of the National Association of Basketball Coaches, said he started holding the camp at Fort Benning in order to give military children a chance to attend an affordable camp that was close to home. "I wanted to do this camp for the kids and give them the opportunity to learn the basic fundamentals of basketball such as shooting, dribbling and passing, while having fun."

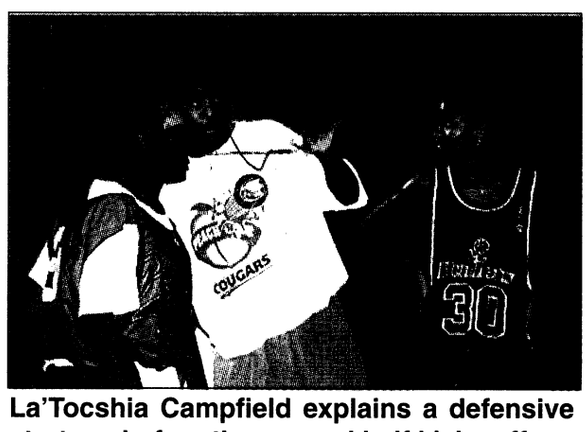
The five-day camp ran from 8:00 a.m. to noon and covered all basic basketball skills using various drills, and allowed the players to participate in numerous scrimmages and team games.

According to La'Tocshia Campfield, assistant coach for the women's basketball team at CSU, individual moves are taught to increase a player's skill level while adding confidence to their game. "I have noticed a big improvement in the players since the first day of camp. I enjoy seeing what skills the players already have and helping them bring their skills to a higher level or acquire new skills."



Defensive and offense individual moves such as passing, cutting and pick-and-roll are taught at the camp along with shooting (correct form), ball handling (cross over, reverse, behind the back) and rebounding (blocking out).

"The level of instruction depends on each child's mastery of basic skills. If the basic skills are good, the instruction is aimed at higher level skills and game play," Campfield said.



Campfield, now in her second year of coaching and entering into graduate school at CSU, said she is hard on herself and watches what she does and how she portrays herself, especially in front of young women athletes.

"Young women today need positive influences they can look up to. In basketball, I am glad for the start-up of the Women's National Basketball Association which is filled with successful women role models."

"I want young athletes to know there are positive ways to lead their lives."

Uncommon sports rules can be confusing

Spc. Brian Murphy
4th Public Affairs Detachment

CAMP DOHA, Kuwait — I've been telling myself for years that there are just some things I wasn't meant to understand.

No longer do I wonder why some individuals cry at movies, listen to elevator music or watch infomercials. No logical explanation could convince me to join the ranks of those people.

Until recently, understanding the game of cricket fell in the same category. For the first time in my life, I couldn't grasp the concept of a sport. It drove me crazy.

Knowing that I will be here for the next few months and that every night when I go home or see the television in the dining facility, cricket will be on,. I had to learn the game.

It frustrated me to think that the game of cricket has been around for more than 500 years and no one I have ever met has a clue how the game is played. So after a little research, I learned;

There are two teams, each with 11 players on the field. They play on a large circular field with a batting area (called a pitch) in the center. At each end of the pitch is a 28-inch high "wicket," consisting of three vertical poles known as "stumps" and two small horizontal sticks called "bails."

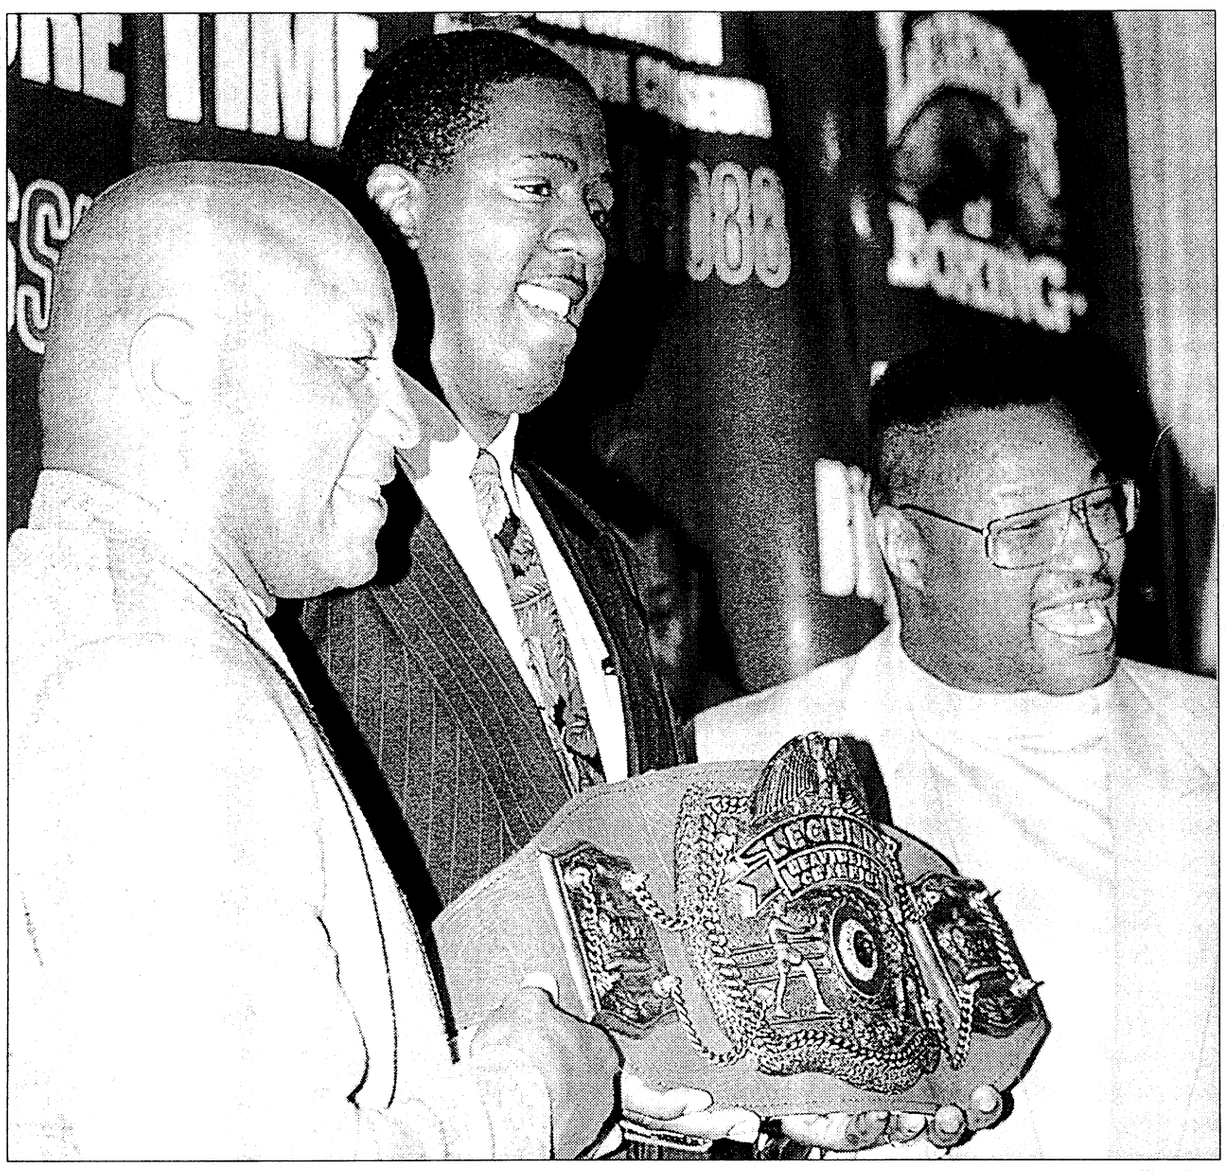
Read that again if you need to. This can get confusing.

All the members of the fielding team are on the field at the same time. Two members of the batting team are on the field, one at each wicket.

One of the fielding-team players, called the bowler, throws the ball from one wicket towards the other. He's trying to hit the wicket that's behind the batsman.

The batter wants to hit the ball to score runs. Kind of like baseball. The first way to score runs is by hitting the ball out of the field. If it leaves the yard without bouncing they earn six points. They get four if it bounces first. The other way to score runs is by hitting the ball within the field and running from one end of the pitch (remember, that's the batting area) to the other. Meanwhile, the other batsman runs in the opposite direction. One run is scored for each length they run (hence the name run).

I hope you're sitting down; this part gets tricky.



The fielding team has four ways to get the batting team out. If the bowler hits the wicket, then the batsman is "bowled." If the batsman hits the ball and it's caught before it touches the ground, then he's "caught." If a fielder hits a wicket with the ball while the batsman are running from one end of the pitch to the other, then the batsman is "run out." Lastly, if the ball hits the batsman when delivered by the bowler, and the umpire judges that it would have hit the wicket if the batsman had not been in the way, then it's called a "LBW" or leg before wicket. All of those cases result in an out.

The fielding team has to get 10 of the 11 batsman out to end the inning. But the batting side's captain may choose to declare the side's inning over at any time.

The games normally last one or two innings. Important matches are two innings. A major cricket match may last five days or longer, and it's normal to see a team score hundreds of runs.

The only part everyone understands for sure is – the team with the most points wins. At least that's universal. Oh wait, in golf the lower score wins.

I'm so confused …

Boxing heavyweight legends reunite to fight for USO

Tim Hipps
Army News Service

Former world heavyweight champions Larry Holmes and James "Bonecrusher" Smith reunited last week to promote their inaugural Legends of Boxing heavyweight title fight to benefit the USO scheduled for tonight at New Crown Coliseum in Fayetteville, N.C.

Holmes (66-6), the "Easton Assassin" who held the world title from 1978 until 1985, successfully defended his championship belt 20 consecutive times, second only to Joe Louis' 25 title defenses. He also stands second only to Rocky Marciano with 48 consecutive victories. His last fight was July 29, 1997, a 10-round victory over Maurice Harris at Madison Square Garden.

"To get a chance to fight a legend like Larry and for it to be for a beautiful belt, I can't wait," said Smith (43-15-1). "I'm looking forward to it. I've been training on a mountaintop for two months in North Carolina — been praying, preaching and sparring every day to get the job done.

"I know Larry used to have a jab. I've prayed that the jab has slowed down."

Holmes and Smith met in an IBF title bout on Nov. 9, 1984, with Holmes prevailing in a 12-round technical knockout.

"I'm glad you're praying," Holmes told Smith. "Because sometimes you ask for something that you don't get. I'm looking forward to fighting you again, and I'm looking forward to beating you again.

"As much older as I've gotten, one thing I've noticed about myself is that I haven't lost but one step. The left hand is still as good as ever, and the right hand is about the same as it always has been. I amaze myself sometimes. It's mind-boggling how I can still get up in the morning and go into the ring."

"I'm ready for the fight," answered Smith, 46. "I wish the fight was next week. After drinking the juice — Bonecrusher's Power Punch — I feel about 10 years younger.

"I have a sore knee because I've been doing a lot of running. But you know what? I saw (New York Knicks center) Patrick Ewing running with braces on his knees, and he said he's hurting from head to toe. But he wants to be champion. I do, too — again. I want to be the first heavyweight champion of the Legends of Boxing."

The fight, scheduled for 12 rounds near Fort Bragg, will be telecast on pay-per-view for $19.95. The undercard features Tim Witherspoon vs. Greg Page and Billy Costello vs. Juan LaPorte.

The Legends of Boxing is being promoted by Cozell McQueen, a 7-foot center on North Carolina State's 1983 NCAA championship basketball team.

Learning More About The Value Of Vitamins And Minerals

(NAPSA)-There's more to enriching your knowledge of vitamins and minerals than just learning your vitamin As, Bs and Cs.

An increasing variety of health benefits are now attributed to a wider range of vitamins and minerals. First, it's important to know the difference.

Vitamins are organic substances necessary for life and essential for the body to function normally. With a few exceptions, vitamins can't be manufactured or synthesized within the body and must be obtained from foods or supplements.

Minerals are naturally occurring elements found in the earth that help the body perform everyday activities. Minerals also can't be manufactured by the body, but are essential to the formation of blood and bone, the maintenance of healthy nerve function and many other vital bodily functions.

Here are several vitamins and minerals and what they do:

Vitamin A is vital to new cell growth and healthy tissue. A is essential for maintaining healthy skin, hair, eyes, teeth and various glands.

Cod Liver Oil is a fatty acid containing essential vitamins A and D. It promotes the maintenance of proper vision and bone strength.

Folic Acid is essential for the manufacture of genetic materials as well as protein metabolism and red blood cell formation.

Niacin is needed by many enzymes to convert food to energy. Niacin helps maintain a healthy digestive tract and nervous system.

Vitamin B-1 promotes and regulates energy use and vital chemical reactions in the brain. It is necessary for normal alertness and concentration.

Zinc is an essential trace mineral that acts to neutralize free radicals, unstable substances in the body which can cause oxidative stress and damage to cells. It's essential for energy metabolism, proper growth and normal reproductive development.

Magnesium is essential for the proper functioning of muscles and nerves and proper bone growth and maintenance.

Getting an A for convenience are new systems of packaging that makes it easier to find the vitamins and minerals you may need.

For example, at Kmart, vitamin and mineral bottles have been redesigned. Customers can now search by color for vitamin E (light green), vitamin A (blue) or minerals such as calcium (red), as indicated by seven different color strips on shelving units as well as the bottles themselves. A bottle of Vita-Smart vitamin B, for example, has an attention-grabbing purple top with "vitamin B" clearly marked on it, and is situated on a shelf lined with a purple marker that reads vitamin B.

Shoppers are further aided by a vitamin description chart, which provides information about every vitamin and herb Kmart sells. For example, the chart lets people know that athletes use bee pollen to increase muscular vigor, lecithin can prevent arterial congestion and selenium promotes cell repair in the lungs.

The Vita-Smart bottle has also been redesigned. It's new square shape makes the bottle easier to grip, an important consideration for senior shoppers.

New packaging is making it easier to find the vitamins you may need.

Although the packaging has changed, the product remains the same and is still priced between $2 and $12.

"More and more people are maximizing their lives through vitamins," said Ron Chomiuk, divisional vice president, Health and Beauty Care. "Whether they're taking vitamins to be healthier or stronger, we hope the new customer-friendly packaging will make them happier."

For more information about Kmart, visit www.kmart.com or call 1-800-866-0086.

How To Avoid Calling Card Theft

(NAPSA)-Calling cards have changed the way Americans use payphones. Gone are the days of digging for change and pay-as-you-go communication. While convenience and simplicity have greatly contributed to the popularity of calling cards among consumers, calling cards have also caught the eye of a new breed of criminal, the "shoulder surfer."

Shoulder surfing occurs when someone illegally obtains calling card and access numbers by literally watching over the shoulder of an unsuspecting calling card user and stealing the number. With the calling card information in possession, criminals can make long-distance or international calls just as if the calling card has been directly given to them.

The majority of shoulder surfing takes place in busy public places like airports, train stations and shopping malls. Large banks of payphones are especially attractive because they allow shoulder surfers close proximity to other callers. Some thieves even use binoculars and video cameras equipped with zoom lenses that enable them to steal calling card information from a distance.

According to Joyce Dorris, director of brand marketing at MCI WorldCom, consumers can protect themselves and their calling card information from shoulder surfers by following a few common sense safety tips:

- Be aware of your surroundings. Pay attention to people loitering around the phone. Shoulder surfers may pretend to be having a conversation on a nearby payphone in order to place themselves in good position to copy down calling card information of unknowing callers.
- Shift positions from side to side while entering your calling card information to avoid a direct line of sight of the keypad from any one location. Covering the keypad with a cupped hand also helps to deter shoulder surfing.
- If you have to recite your calling card information to an operator, speak clearly but quietly in order to prevent anyone from overhearing.
- Treat your calling card as you would a credit card.
- Report lost or stolen cards to your calling card provider as soon as possible.
- Memorize your calling card and PIN so you don't have to pull your card out.
- Review your bills carefully for any questionable charges.

With these simple tips in mind, using your calling card will be safe, simple and convenient.

IT'S A FACT!

Dogs And Old Age: Know The Signs

By Ilana Reisner, DVM, Ph.D, DACVB
Veterinary Behavior Consultant

(NAPS)-Just like human beings, aging dogs experience changes as they grow older.

Here are some fascinating facts about dogs, old age and how man's best friend can be treated:

• What is canine Cognitive Dysfunction Syndrome? It refers to a common age-related decline in cognitive function not wholly attributable to an unrelated medical condition.

• What causes CDS? The exact cause is unknown. However, scientists have found that abnormal changes in the brain affect cognitive behaviors-the mental processes that include memory, learning, awareness and perception.

• What clinical signs indicate that a dog may be suffering from CDS? Signs that dog owners should look for include disorientation; decreased or altered interaction with or responsiveness to family members, including greeting behavior; disturbances of sleep habits; problems performing previously learned behaviors such as loss of house-training; and decreased activity.

• Are there any medications dogs can take to help with CDS, or "old dog syndrome"? A new treatment, Anipryl® (selegiline hydrochloride), recently approved by the Food and Drug Administration, worked to help improve neurotransmitter function in the brains of older dogs with signs of CDS.

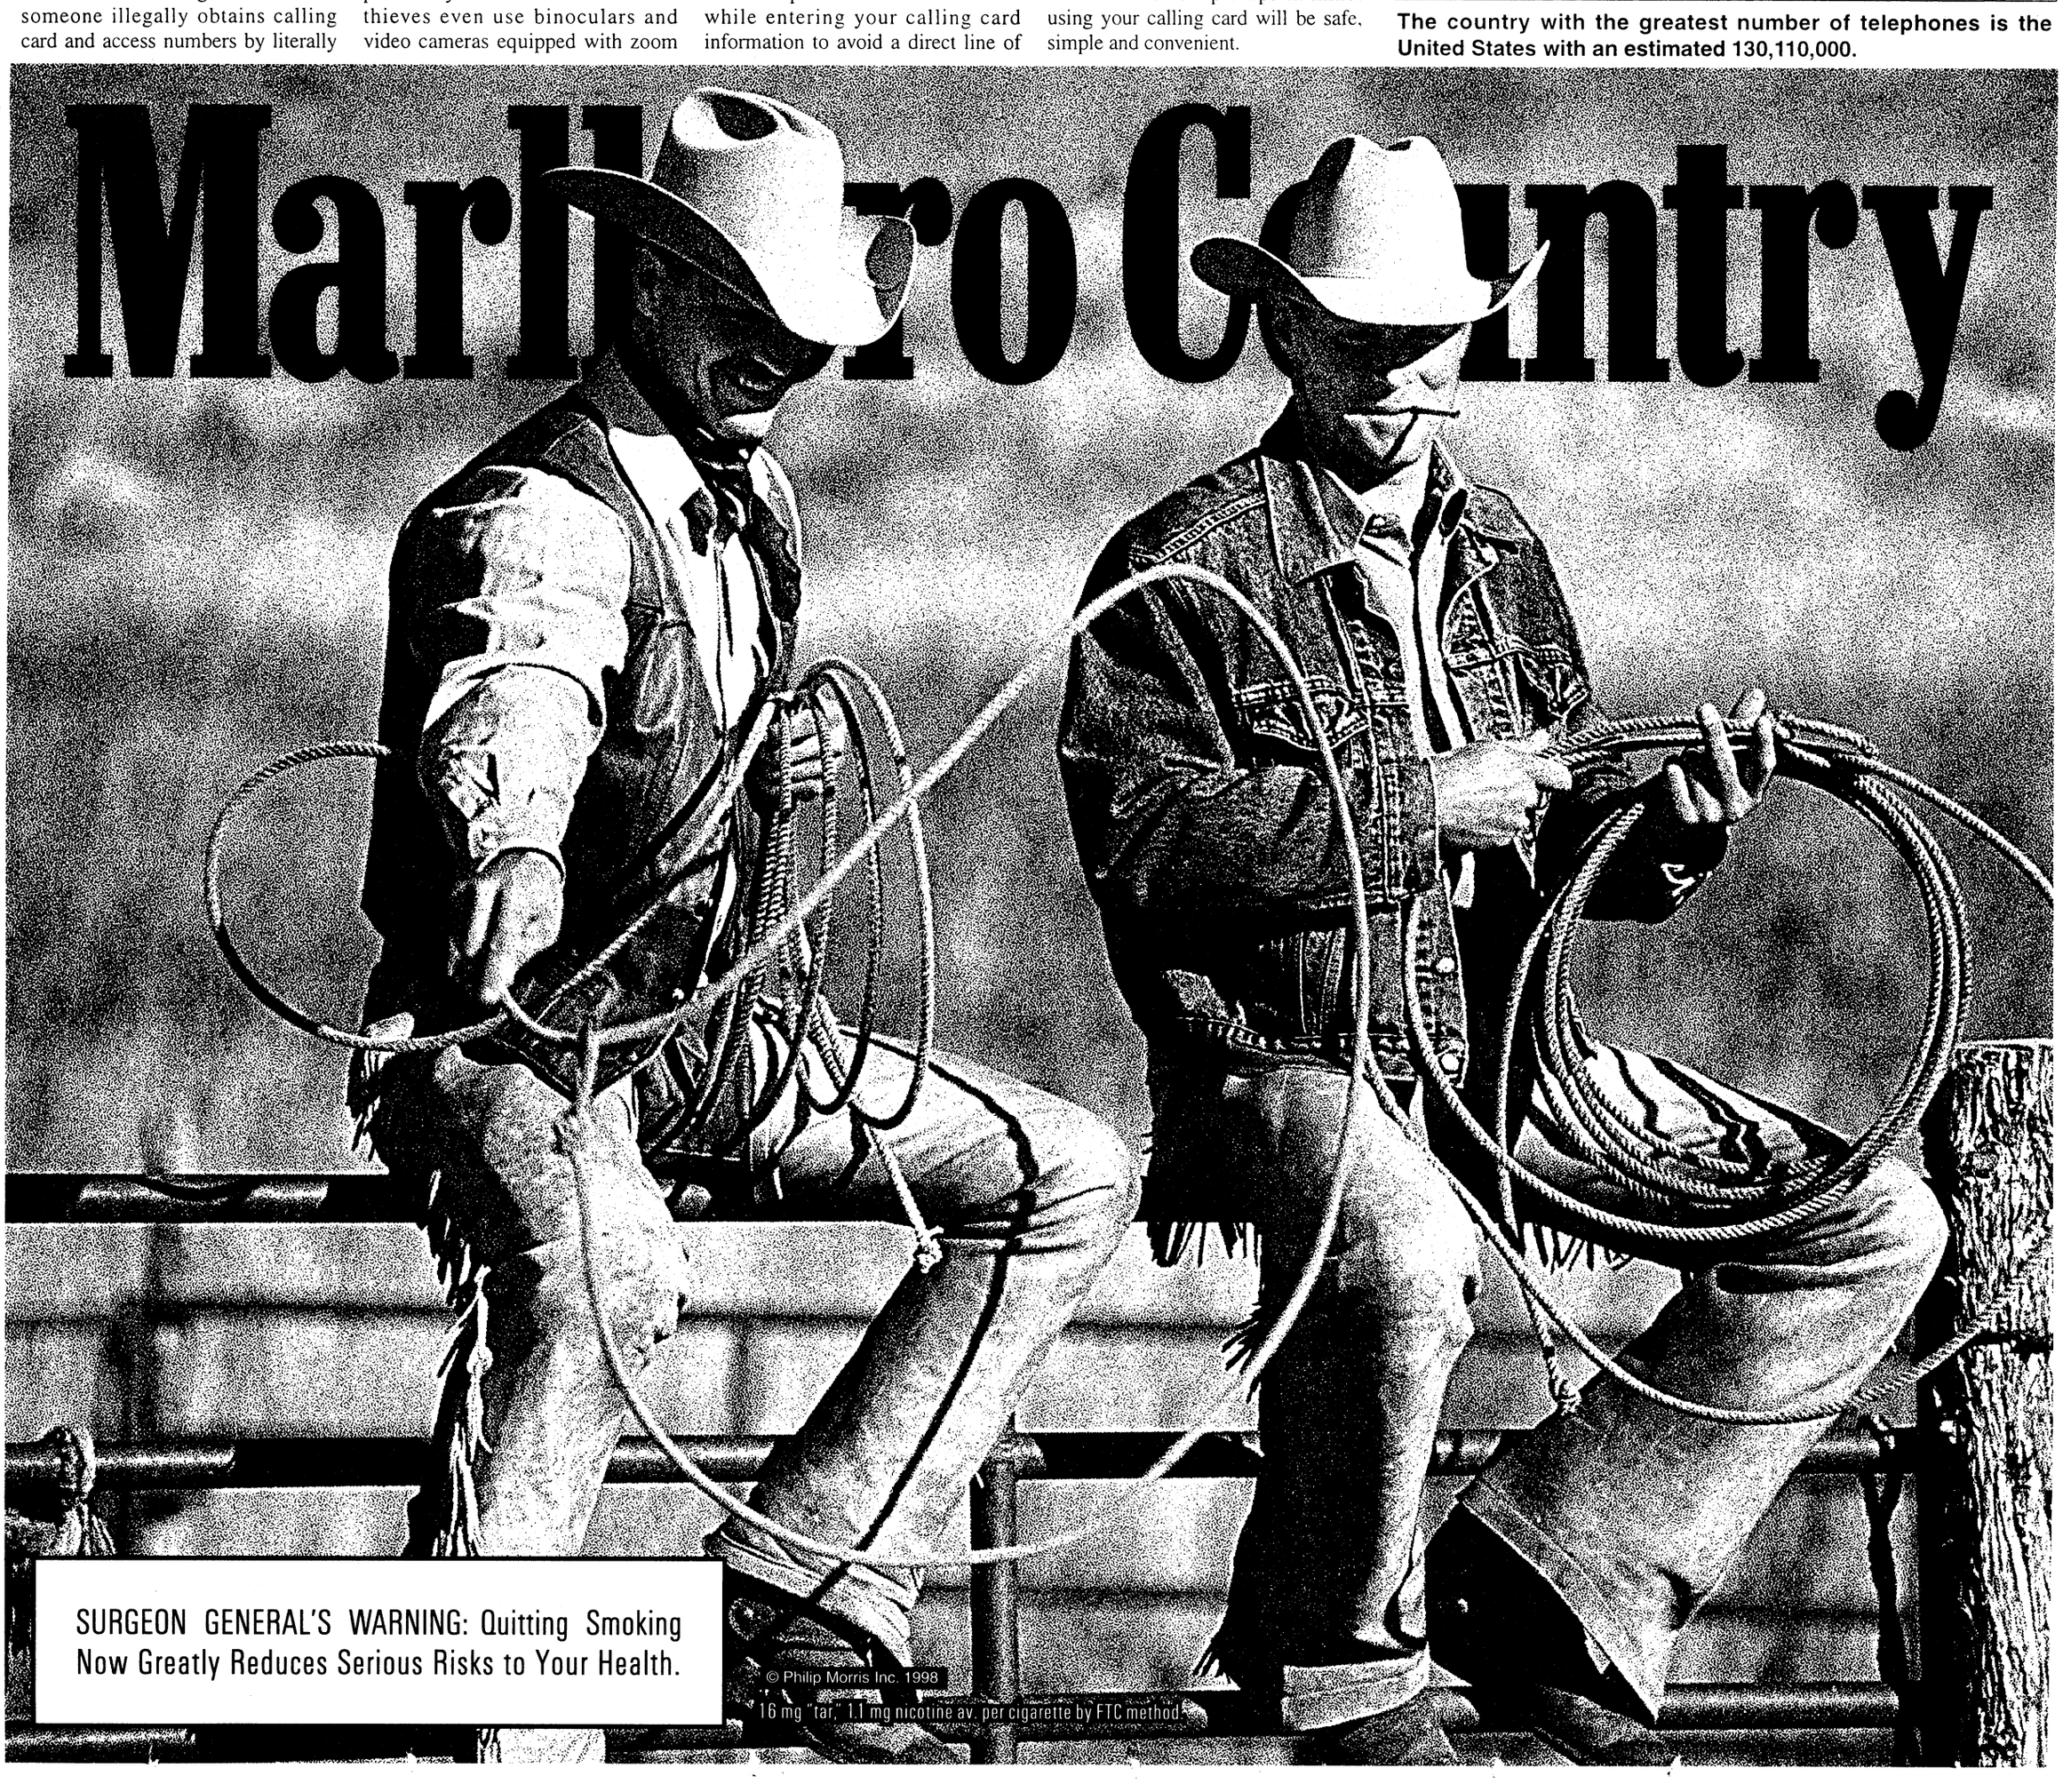
• What studies were done to prove Anipryl's efficacy and safety? Two large-scale studies involving a total of 404 dogs were used to prove the efficacy of Anipryl, from Pfizer Animal Health. In these studies, owners reported that 69 percent to 75 percent of dogs improved in at least one clinical sign after one month of Anipryl therapy.



Pfizer Animal Health is a leader in animal health, with products including pharmaceuticals and feed additives.

For more information about Anipryl, you can ask your veterinarian. You can also visit Pfizer's Web site at www.anipryl.com or call 1-888-Anipryl.

Ilana Reisner is a Veterinary Behavior Consultant specializing in the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of small animal behavior problems.

IT'S THE LAW!

You Are Married...Now What?

(NAPSA)-After you say "I do," there are certain things you should do. While weddings often involve months of preparation and attention to detail, the legal decisions a couple makes after they tie the knot can also have a big impact on their future together.

FreeAdvice.com (www.FreeAdvice.com) gives free and professional legal information to consumers on the internet. The website offers this legal checklist for couples:

§ Change bank accounts, identification and credit cards if you have taken a new name. Notify Social Security, get your driver's license issued, contact your bank and credit card companies and have the passport office issue a new passport with your new name.

§ Fill out new beneficiary forms. If you have life insurance, call your insurance company or agent to request a new beneficiary designation form, complete it promptly and send it to the insurance company. Also file new beneficiary designation forms if you participate in a life insurance or 401(k) program at work or have an IRA. You should do this even if you intend to maintain the same beneficiaries. You will need separate forms for each policy or plan. Then follow up to be sure the new beneficiary forms have all been recorded.

§ Adjust your health insurance. If one or both of you have health insurance, decide now if you want to put all coverage under one plan. In many cases, you may get better coverage and/or save money. Most employer sponsored health insurance plans allow only a short time to add a new spouse.

§ Write a Will. Make a decision now about who you would want to inherit your estate. You may want to protect your children from a prior marriage, or your parents or siblings as well as your spouse. In the event of a tragedy, without a Will your estate would go to those your state's legislature chose for you. (Your wishes would not be honored, and your survivors could be tied up for years in probate court.) And if you already have a Will, make sure you quickly prepare and execute a new one. In most states, your old Will is no longer fully enforceable.

§ Designate "community property." If you already own a home or condo together, you may want to file a new deed and hold it as "tenants by the entirety" or, if you live in Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington or Wisconsin, as "community property."

§ If you have a lot of assets, shared or otherwise, consider a post-nuptial agreement. It may be an unpleasant thought right now, but it is practical, provides peace of mind and can protect you and your assets.

FreeAdvice.com offers easy-to-understand answers to thousands of common legal questions, prepared by attorneys from over 20 leading American law firms, on over 100 legal topics including accidents, business law, divorce, real estate, and suing and being sued. The Web site also describes each state's own unique laws for getting married or divorced.

Search For America's Fast-Acting Heroes Led By "ER" Star Noah Wyle

(NAPSA)-People who have courageously risked their lives for others when a minute mattered most may soon get the recognition they deserve.

An awards program seeks and wants to recognize fast-acting individuals who have made a difference in another person's life.

Noah Wyle, who stars as Dr. John Carter on the television show "ER," will help to honor real-life heroes and heroines.

Five men and women from across the U.S. will be selected by an independent panel of judges who are involved in fields of public service and presented with the "One Minute Maalox Award."

For the second year in a row, Noah Wyle, star of the #1 television show, "ER," is host of the awards program, which will honor the recipients on the "ER" set in Los Angeles. In this dynamic setting, where fast-paced action dramas have touched the hearts and minds of television audiences, the five real-life heroes will receive their much-deserved recognition and award.

"The One Minute Maalox Award calls attention to exceptional people who, in a critical moment, put the lives of others before their own," said Wyle. "Through this awards program, I have met individuals who have performed unbelievable heroic feats and deserve to be nationally recognized."

Maalox will present each of the five recipients with an award of $5,000 and an additional $1,000 to be donated to the charity of their choice. They will also receive an all-expense paid trip to Los Angeles in November.

Through his work on "ER," Wyle's character, Dr. John Carter, regularly teams with actors portraying courageous heroes from physicians and nurses, to paramedics and everyday people.

"With all the negativity we read about everyday in the news, I jumped at the chance to highlight some positive stories and call public attention to men and women, who, though complete strangers to the victims they rescued, never thought twice about putting themselves in harm's way," said Wyle.

"In every town and community throughout the United States there are thousands of people whose heroic actions go unrecognized," said Kathleen Tetrault, senior brand manager of Maalox. "The One Minute Maalox Award is our way of giving something back to society by paying tribute to these fast-acting heroes who've made a difference in the lives of others. Their tenacity and compassion is an inspiration to us all."

Nomination entry forms and information on the campaign is available by writing to the "One Minute Maalox Award," 1562 First Avenue, Suite 296, New York, NY 10028, or by calling 1-888-686-HERO. The deadline for entries is Aug. 15, 1999.

CAR CARE CORNER

Family Driving Safety During The Summer Months

(NAPSA)-Your family's driving patterns can change drastically during the summer months, and tips from the National Automotive Parts Association (NAPA) will help you increase your driving safety.

In many households, the family car becomes the primary transportation for teens taking summer jobs and socializing with friends after work. According to the U.S. Department of Labor, about ten million teens ages 16 to 19 will be in the work force by midsummer. Driving patterns also change for parents with young children, who find themselves making more trips around town for warm-weather activities.

Following is NAPA's summer checklist:

Car Maintenance Tips:

• A family car that's shared with teen drivers should get a brake checkup and an engine performance evaluation.

• Make sure that fluids, wiper blades, tires, belts and hoses, and lights are checked.

Family Safety Tips:

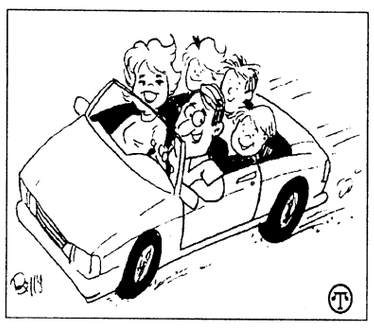
• When traveling with kids, make it a rule to start the car only after everyone is wearing a seat belt and the doors are locked. The excitement of summer fun causes many youngsters to forget about buckling up.

• Keep emergency work numbers, pager numbers and cell phone numbers for mom and/or dad in the glove box for teen drivers.

• Know your teen's commute to work. If your teen has a new summer job, take the time to ride with him/her to the job site to learn about any unusual roadway hazards or other risky situations.

• Talk to your teens about the dangers of aggressive driving and "road rage." Discuss how keeping a safe distance from other cars and allowing extra travel time are two smart tactics for avoiding conflicts with other drivers.

• Teach your teens how to check the tire pressure, the oil and the coolant.



• Keep a tire iron, jack, spare tire, jumper cables, water and a blanket in the trunk.

• Take extra care with shorter teens who may have difficulty driving a family vehicle. Make sure the seat and mirrors can be properly adjusted to fit your teen's height.

Tips for Selecting a Shop:

• Find a repair shop that guarantees both parts and labor through a national warranty program.

• Locate a shop that provides a price estimate for work performed and uses brand name parts, like NAPA parts.

Visit NAPA's Web site at www.NAPAonline.com or call 1-800-LET NAPA for a NAPA AutoCare Center or NAPA AutoCare Collision Center near you.

Scholars who believe that "Mother Goose" was a real person have identified her as the Biblical Queen of Sheba, military leader Charlemagne's mother and Elizabeth Goose, a colonist in Boston.

Friends: A Path To Good Health In Old Age

by Mathy Mezey, RN, EdD, FAAN

(NAPSA)-Friends do more than keep people company. They carry memories and thus help people remember who they are and what they have done.

Research has shown that as people experience illness and loss, it is easy for them to forget what they once achieved and how hard they worked to build their lives.

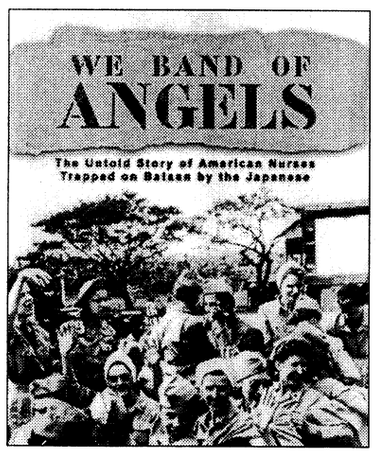
By sharing memories, people can renew a sense of accomplishment and their inventory of well-being. Memories can also help cure the depression and loneliness that comes with illness.

Remembering the past and, in the process, reconstructing old ties and friendships, allows people to use the past as a balm for the present.

Friendships, studies show, not only help our mental health, they can help restore our bodies. People who receive emotional support require less pain medication after surgery, recover at quicker rates and follow doctor's orders more faithfully. Emotional support can help reduce stress and the risk of depression and alcoholism.

In a new book about women in World War II in the Pacific, We Band of Angels (Random House), Dr. Elizabeth Norman talks about the life-long friendships of the heroic Army and Navy nurses who were captured in the Philippines in 1942 by the Japanese. These remarkable women stayed close. Through the years, many of the nurses kept in touch, sharing their memories in letters and telephone calls and at reunions.

The recollections of the nurses are as remarkable now as they were 58 years ago, and part of what makes them so exceptional is the remembering.



There are many ways-phone calls, notes, e-mail-to reconnect with old friends and to meet new ones. Time not only heals old wounds, it makes it easier to roll out the welcome mat.

To meet new friends, you can join a senior organization or start one; attend high school or college reunions to reminisce about the past; go online and start a chat room for seniors; or put together a newsletter with a theme, such as what you did during World War II, hold a photo album party, a homemade photogravure of the past.

No matter how old people get, they don't outgrow their need to stay connected to the people who were part of their lives, their history.

For more information on the importance of staying in touch, visit www.nyu.edu/education/nursing/hartford.institute. Information about Dr. Norman's book is at www.Webandofangels.com.

Dr. Mezey is director of the John A. Hartford Foundation Institute for Geriatric Nursing at the New York University Division of Nursing. The Institute seeks to shape the quality of health care that elderly Americans receive by promoting the importance of nurses with a high level of competency.

Friendship can help improve mental and physical health-especially when people are older.

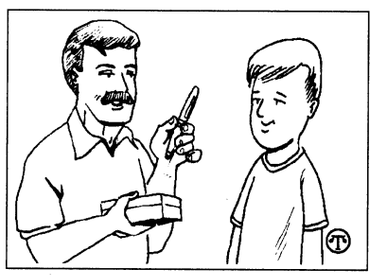
Father's Day Gift Ideas

Penning Your Appreciation Of A Great Guy

(NAPSA)-A time-honored way to show your dad how much you care is to present him with a meaningful gift that reflects his tastes and interests.

In the U.S., Father's Day has been observed since 1910 and traditional gifts include books, shirts, ties and golf accessories. Another popular gift for dad is a fine pen. There are many ways to express appreciation for dad. For example:

Use a fine pen (and your best handwriting) to write a letter or card telling your father just how much he means to you.



Be creative and use a calligraphy pen to draw dad's family tree or a special certificate of appreciation for framing.

If dad is a crossword buff, pair a distinctive pen with a crossword puzzle book. To make it extra special, add a coffee mug and a bag of his favorite coffee beans so he can enjoy a cup of his favorite coffee while pondering his daily puzzle.

For a father who appreciates bird-watching, give him an attractive pen with a journal, a birdwatching book and a pair of binoculars. Or if golf is his hobby, pair the pen with his favorite golf balls and a package of golf tees.

To make this Father's Day a lucky day, present dad with a fine pen, ten blank lottery forms and ten dollars to cover the cost to play.

Is dad style-conscious? This year, the hottest men's fashion accessories are made of stainless steel and pens are no exception. A stylish, stainless steel pen from Parker is a gift that dad will have for years to come. And you can personalize the pen by engraving his initials or a special message.

A pen made of stainless steel can keep dad accessorized with one of this year's hottest trends.

If your father doesn't have a particular hobby, simply pair a unique pen with something you know he can use, such as a pen case, journal, check book case, monogrammed wallet or money clip.

Parker pens are available nationwide. The Parker Sonnet, Insignia, Classic and Jotter are all available in stainless steel. To locate a retailer in your area, call 1-800-BEST-PEN.

Discovering Ageless Africa In Kenya

(NAPSA)-Like no other place on earth, Kenya offers travelers an ageless Africa of sights smells and sounds.

Travelers to Kenya are often stunned by Kenya's one thousand odd species of bird life, the dazzling wealth of marine life around the Coral Reef and the huge colonies of colorful and rare butterflies that can be seen in the gardens and forests. These are only part of the attractions tourists find when visiting Kenya.

A growing number of travelers are experiencing the magic and mystery and the beauty of Africa within the borders of a single African nation: Kenya.

Mombasa, along the eastern seaboard of the Indian Ocean, is fast emerging as an important cruise ship center. Flying safaris to distant wildlife parks and road safaris to nearby parks of Tsavo and Amboseli are easily arranged. Mombasa is also the base for home ported cruise ships which offer cruises to Zanzibar, Mauritius, Seychelles and Madagascar. For more information about travel to Kenya, call the Kenya Tourist Office at 212-486-1300.

Holding Down Insurance Costs

(NAPS)—Consumers can hold down their auto insurance costs by shopping around for the best price and reporting insurance fraud, which boosts insurance rates.

Choosing an insurer which uses competitive auto repair parts in accident repairs also helps. A large competitive market now offers repair parts which cost less than parts from auto makers, meet the same quality standards, and help keep insurance costs lower for consumers.

Seventy percent of the crash repair parts come from the auto makers, the rest from independent manufacturers and used vehicles. Market competition has reduced the price for replacement parts by 25 to 40 percent, depending on the part and the repair involved. Though the price for some auto maker parts has dropped since the introduction of competitive parts, competitive parts still cost less. A Toyota Camry fender that cost $266 from the auto maker in 1994, cost $144 in 1996. An independent manufacturer charged $209 for the same fender in 1994 and $60 in 1996.

"All this is good news for consumers everywhere," says Bill Mayer, GEICO's auto damage assistant vice president. "The savings to them in the form of lower auto insurance costs is estimated at $800 million a year.

The price differences in automobile parts from those made by the original manufacturer compared to a competitive manufacturer surprise many motorists. For example, the hood of a 1995 Plymouth Acclaim would cost $195 from the OEM and $65 from a non-OEM.

"The competitive market for repair parts has forced car companies to keep their prices lower, which directly benefits our customers with lower premiums," says GEICO's Mayer. "We compare it to the savings generic drugs offer with a comparable-quality but lower-cost alternative to name-brand drugs."

But are competitive parts as good as the auto makers' parts? Independent manufacturers guarantee their parts, and some insurers like GEICO guarantee any competitive part used for as long as you own your car.

Fort Benning prepares for Thursday festivities

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

Fort Benning will host its annual Independence Day celebration beginning at 5 p.m. Thursday on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

The festivities will include demonstrations by the Ranger Training Brigade, the Silver Wings parachute team and performances by the Infantry Band and Columbus band Cornbread. The celebration will also include a pageantry of flags and numerous games and rides.

The following is a schedule of events:

5 p.m. to dark — Food, drink, games and rides

6 to 7 p.m. — Cornbread performance

7 to 7:30 p.m. — Ranger demonstration

7:30 to 8 p.m. — Cornbread performance

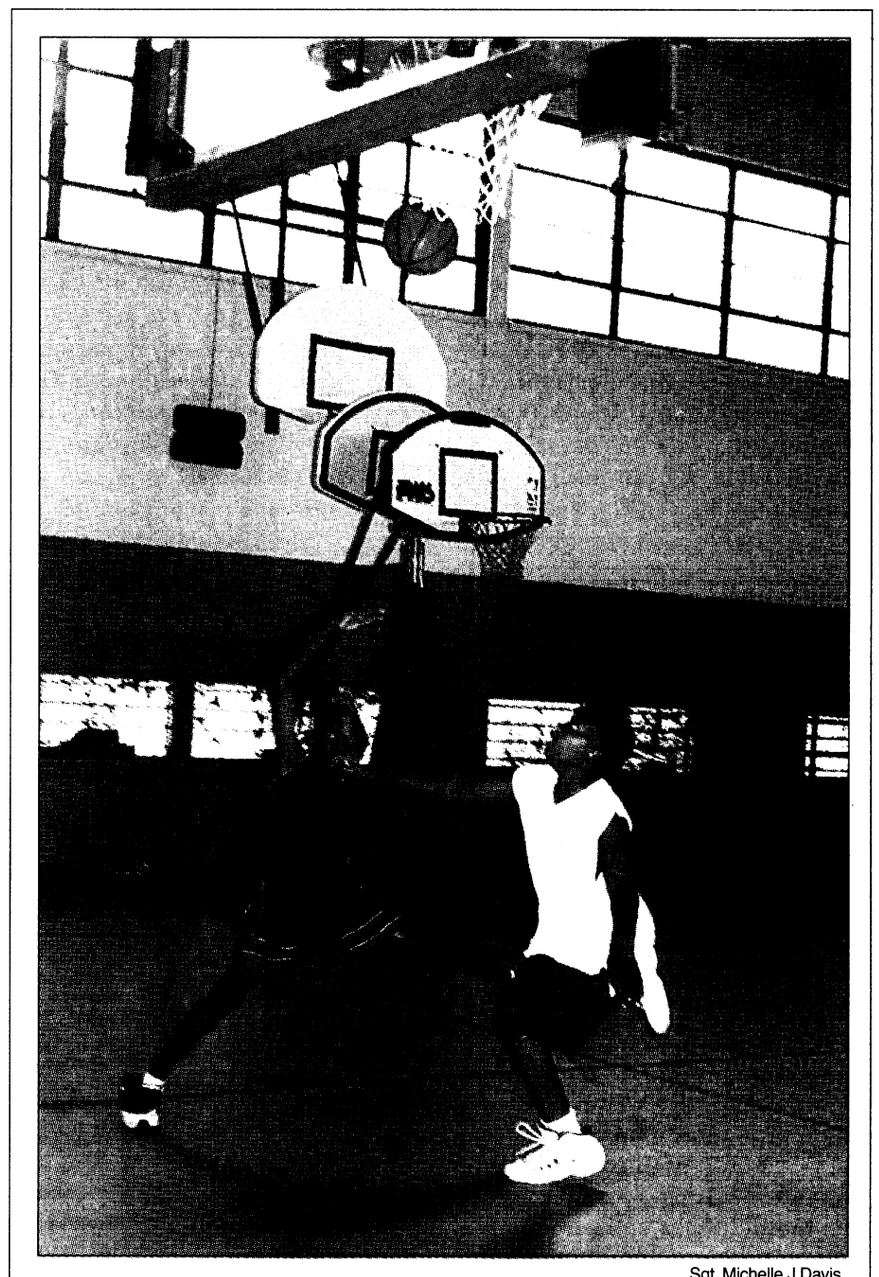
8 to 8:20 p.m. — Silver Wings demonstration

8:20 to 9 p.m. — National Flag pageantry

9 p.m. until 9:54 p.m. — Infantry Band



9:54 p.m. — Fireworks

Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Safety has planned for traffic congestion because of the Independence Day fireworks display.

Beginning at 8:30 p.m., traffic control posts will be in place to facilitate the movement of spectators after the fireworks display.

CID investigates death

Monica Manganaro
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Pvt. Kevin James Anderson, 17, died June 17 after undergoing an assessment fitness test at the Initial Entry Training Inprocessing Unit on Sand Hill.

Anderson, who arrived at Fort Benning June 14, had just completed an assessment physical fitness test. Shortly after the test, Anderson had trouble breathing and passed out. He was taken to Martin Army Community Hospital, where he later died.

The assessment fitness test consists of push-ups, sit-ups and a one-mile run, and is used to determine a trainee's fitness level prior to his assignment in a unit.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Anderson, live in Upper Marlborough, Md.

The Criminal Investigation Division is investigating the death, as is the case whenever a Soldier dies on post. An autopsy was conducted, but was inconclusive.

MPs return after 6-month Saudi deployment

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The temperature was a balmy 120 degrees as Sgt. John Villegas walked to his post nestled on the outskirts of Eskan Village in Saudi Arabia. It was a walk he had made for the past six months, but this would be his last. He and the other nine military police personnel assigned to the area from Fort Benning's 988th Military Police Company were going home.

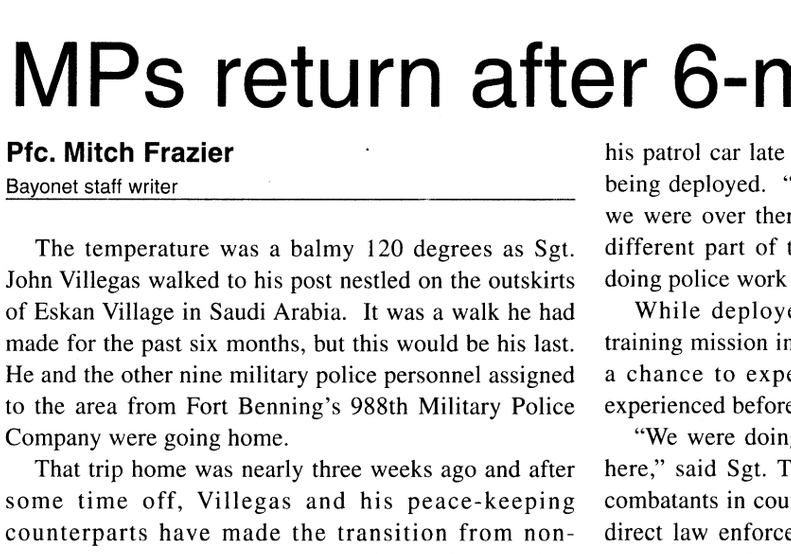
That trip home was nearly three weeks ago and after some time off, Villegas and his peace-keeping counterparts have made the transition from non-combatant peace-keepers to active-duty military police officers. They have traded-in their desert uniforms and once again taken to the roads of Fort Benning to do what they do best — protect and serve.

"It's good to be back," Villegas said as he headed to his patrol car late Monday night for his first shift since being deployed. "I, well, we all had a good time while we were over there with the locals and experiencing a different part of the world, but it is good to be back doing police work here."

While deployed in support of the U.S. military training mission in the region, all 10 of the Soldiers had a chance to experience a job unlike any they had experienced before.

"We were doing things we don't get a chance to do here," said Sgt. Theodore Taylor. "We were all non-combatants in country, and instead of being tasked with direct law enforcement missions, we participated in a more behind-the-scenes manner."

According to both Taylor and Villegas, the task force of 10 was divided among three major functional areas while serving in the village located near Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, that included investigations, security operations and pass identification.



"Most of our guys (eight of the 10) including myself, were in security operations," Taylor noted. "We were responsible for monitoring the security of all of the official vehicular traffic within not only the village but the entire region."

That task, he said, was one that challenged both him and the junior enlisted Soldiers that deployed with him to the region.

"We had to ensure the safety of those who were driving through the region by making enforcement personnel on the ground aware of any suspicious vehicles or any other threat that may arise in the unstable region," Taylor said.

That mission was complicated even more, he said, when the tensions in the area grew during the rash of

CG makes plan to retire

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst announced last week that he would be retiring this year. Ernst said he has no definite plans at this time, nor has a retirement date been set or a replacement named.

Ernst said he has not had a lot of time to think about future plans, but did say he expected to turn over Fort Benning, the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School to his replacement sometime in late August or early September.

Ernst assumed command on July 10, 1996. While the Infantry force dropped from around 55,000 officers and men to 50,000 officers and men during that time, Ernst ensured that Infantry Soldiers were trained and ready.

During his three years at Fort Benning, Ernst put his emphasis on "taking care of Soldiers and their families," quality of life issues being very important to him.

Fort Benning also continued to be recognized as the best Army installation in the world. To that end it was presented two Commander-in-Chiefs awards, three Chief of Staff of the Army awards, the Presidential Quality award and the Oglethorpe award.

Ernst

The 55-year-old Ernst is a native of New Orleans and is a graduate of Louisiana State University where he was commissioned in the Infantry.

Ernst's final tour at Fort Benning was also his fifth tour here, serving previously in the Infantry Officers' Basic and Advanced Courses, as the Director of the Combined Arms and Tactics Department and as Deputy Commanding General and Assistant Commandant of the Infantry School.

He served as an advisor in Vietnam, was the deputy operations officer for the U.S. Army Central Command during Desert Storm and served as the commander of U.S. Forces in Somalia.

He was a battalion and a brigade commander in the 5th Infantry Division at Fort Polk, La. and an assistant division commander of the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Bayonet needs community input

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

When I'm out and about post, I occasionally like to walk up to people and ask them what they think about The Bayonet. I like to hear what people like and even what they don't like about Fort Benning's only authorized newspaper. (OK, so we're the only newspaper.)

commentary

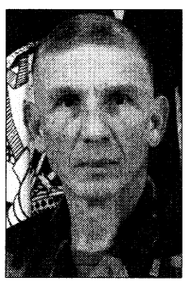
I can take a little constructive criticism, but to my dismay, some haven't picked one up in months and a handful of others didn't even know what it was. How's that for discouraging? Well, at least it's safe to say that you know what The Bayonet is if you're reading this. If you still don't, well ... I'm really in trouble.

Sometimes when I pass by the paper stacks at the Post Exchange or glance at the yellowed papers decorating some post residents' lawns, I wonder how many people actually read The Bayonet. Yet, other times, I am reassured that we have a steady readership when callers swiftly phone in mistakes.

Believe it or not, these calls are actually very helpful. Not only does it show us that someone is out there reading our paper, but we know we are not perfect. If that were the case, I would be preparing to turn my soul over to the devil or be making a heck of a lot more money working for the Chicago Tribune.

If we misspell someone's name or misidentify a Soldier, I hope someone let's us know about it so we can run a correction. (I hope even more that we don't do that, but ...) We always strive to put out the best paper we can. After all, you're what this paper is all about. If it weren't for the 40,000-plus Soldiers, family members, civilian employees and retirees out there, there would be no need for The Bayonet. A world without The Bayonet would be a horrible place.

That's why we also ask for your help in bringing story ideas to our attention. Sometimes we have no clue about things that are going on in the community. If there's a community member out there who's going to try out for the 2000 Olympics, we would like to know about it. If there's a Soldier out there who has an interesting hobby or uncommon one, we would like to know about that too.



I'm not guaranteeing that we will do stories on each and every idea. We are a small staff of three Soldiers and two civilian contract writers and it would be impossible for us to cover everything.

This brings me to another important point. You can submit articles and photos for publication, yes YOU. All articles and photos do not have to be taken by the staff to get in the paper. If you have a story about a recent field exercise or photos from a unit flag football game, bring them by our office. Chances are we'll be able to use them. I'll also mention that we are looking for a part-time civilian staff writer. (Writing experience is required and photography experience would be helpful.)

If you are interested in submitting articles or photos for publication, stop by our office in Room 606 in Infantry Hall or call us at 545-2201. We can also give handouts about what kind of articles and photos we're looking for. Submissions can also be mailed. Our address is: *The Bayone*t, Room 606 Infantry Hall, Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Over the next few months, we also ask for your advice. You may be seeing a few changes in the style and content of the newspaper. If you see something you like (or dislike), please give us a call and let us know.

Stay safe over long holiday

Many families will travel great distances to be with relatives in a traditional renewal of family ties over the holiday. Others may prefer to spend the holiday fishing, boating, swimming or enjoying other outdoor activities such as those available here at Fort Benning.

We must all be alert to the fact that there are many hazards associated with our summertime holiday activities. The accidents which cause the most deaths during this period involve driving and water activities. Ignoring good safety practices costs lives. Fasten seat belts when you are in a vehicle, take frequent rest breaks and always drive sober. Swim only in authorized areas with lifeguards on duty, and for boaters, wear personal flotation devices.

Have fun and enjoy a safe holiday!

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst

Schools ground zero for educational process

Dr. Ed Thomas
Bayonet correspondent

The Columbine High massacre and other recent incidents of school violence are being linked to the media, firearms and the Internet.

commentary

The Columbine killers developed their shooting skills on the same kind of simulated games used by combat Soldiers. They logged on the Internet for their bomb-making instructions. They mentally rehearsed their crime by watching a teenage heartthrob in a full-length movie gun down his fellow students. Finally, charge critics, it was easy for the boys to get firearms and ammunition.

Last April 20, two very troubled youngsters went hunting for athletes and other random enemies.

The media, music, electronic games and our streets are certainly filled with mayhem. For children who crack under the strain of our ultraviolet culture, technology magnifies their killing power. Dysfunctional youth often have the means and intellect to fully utilize the technology force-multipliers adults create for them.

Schools are ground zero of the educational process by which youngsters are led to behave with civility. If education fails, our national productivity and security are threatened. Because schools are central to our national survival, violence in them is especially alarming.

The escalation of school violence has fueled the demand for increased discipline, security and punishment. As we incarcerate more lawbreakers and reshape education to prevent violence, our schools are looking more like prisons, while our prisons are looking less like schools. Little of value can come from this myopic view of cultural and educational reform.

Education has three domains. The cognitive relates to the mind, the affective deals with emotions and the motor domain deals with human movement. Each domain overlaps the others, so the condition of one affects the other two. In his study of violence and the public schools, Dr. Hal Burbach of the University of Virginia's Curry School of Education found that serious chronic juvenile offenders are often clumsy.

Clumsiness is linked to faulty posture and chronic muscular malformations that impair motion and human function. Bad posture and impaired mobility contribute to poor self-esteem and are often associated with a variety of learning disabilities including impulsivity and hyperactivity.

Ill-fitting school furniture is a simple example of those factors within our control that contribute to muscular imbalance associated with postural disorders and poor motor development. Educators spend thousands of dollars on technology and ignore the contorted positions that children are forced to endure for hours each day. We deform our children in the classroom, then we either deprive them of organized and rational motor learning or subject them to useless or even harmful physical education classes often taught by inept coaches or unqualified classroom teachers.

Physical education can be divided into three categories. Pedagogy deals with sports, games, theory and dance. Restorative exercise brings the body towards its optimal state of balance and harmony. Martial arts teach appropriate responses to external aggression.

Restorative and martial arts were sacrificed to the pedagogical in American physical culture generations long ago, and most gym teachers have not a clue about how to teach the missing and vital two-thirds of the physical education formula. More sports, games, theory dance and recreational activities will not solve the problem.

If we do not fix our physical culture, expect more violence as our children become even more deformed and parkinetic.

Editors note: Dr. Thomas is an Instructional Systems Specialist with the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School. He is a Fulbright Scholar and physical educator with more than 25 years of teaching experience at numerous schools including the University of Iowa, Emory University, Northern Illinois University, Upper Iowa University and Troy State University.

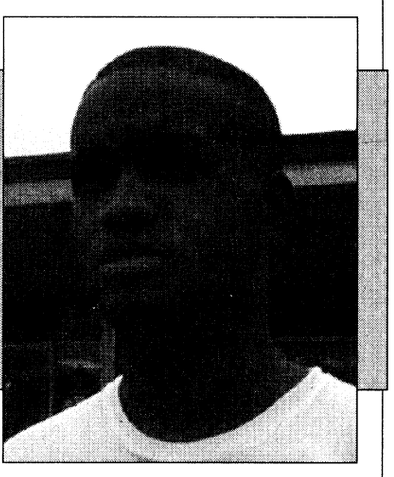
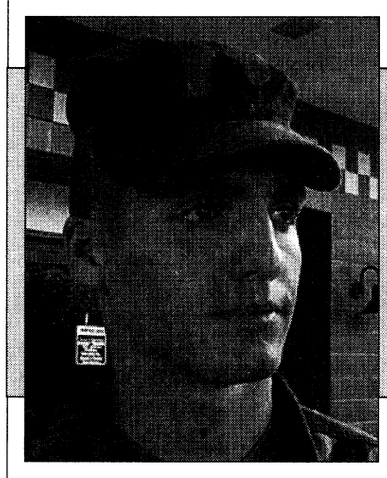
VARIOUS VOICES

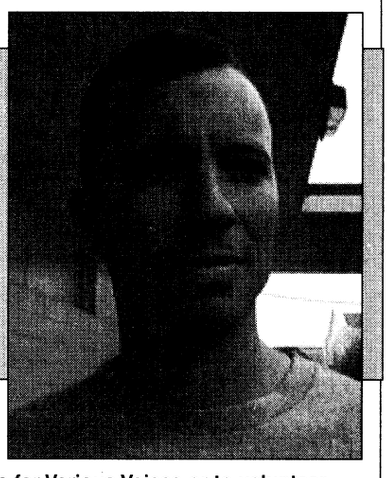
What could the Bayonet do better?



Spc. Tina Fountaine, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It could cover more activities within the tri-community that Soldiers go to, such as sporting and entertainment events."



Spc. Chad Parrott, 988th Military Police Company — "To be perfectly honest, I enjoy it as it is. I see pretty much what I want to see in it."



Sarah Hertig, Joe to Go — "I'd like to see it be a little more focused on units, such as specific articles dedicated to a different unit each week. Other than that I enjoy it and read it every week."

Sgt. Willie Oliver, Company B, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I really have no complaints about it."

Pvt. Luke Throop, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mechanized)— "Maybe it could be a little bigger and cover more world events, like where all the troops are and what's going on with them."

Staff Sgt. Robert Phillipson, Company B, U.S. Army School of the Americas — "I think you guys do a good job overall."

Organizations use symbolic dates to carry out acts

Capt. Jay Griffith
Directorate of Threat and Security

Today marks the third anniversary of the bombing of Khobar towers in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia. On June 25, 1996 a truck loaded with as much as 20,000 pounds of explosives, exploded outside of Khobar Towers, killing 19 U.S. service members and injuring hundreds more. This event again showed how a determined terrorist can achieve his goals.

With the anniversary of the Khobar Towers bombing, it is important to know that terrorist organizations sometime use dates that are symbolic to their cause or their enemy, to carry out terrorist acts. Some significant dates are as follows:

April 19 — In 1993, the end of the Branch Davidian siege near Waco, Texas. In 1995, the bombing in Oklahoma City.

June 25 — In 1950, the start of the Korean War. In 1996 the bombing of Khobar Towers.

July 3 — In 1986, the USS Vincennes shoots down Iran Air Flight 655.

Aug. 2 — In 1990, Iraq invaded Kuwait.

Aug. 19 — In 1969, the first hijacking of a U.S. airliner by Palestinians.

Oct. 23 — In 1983, a group bombed the Marine barracks in Beruit.

Nov. 4 — In 1979, the American Embassy in Iran is seized and 63 are taken hostage.

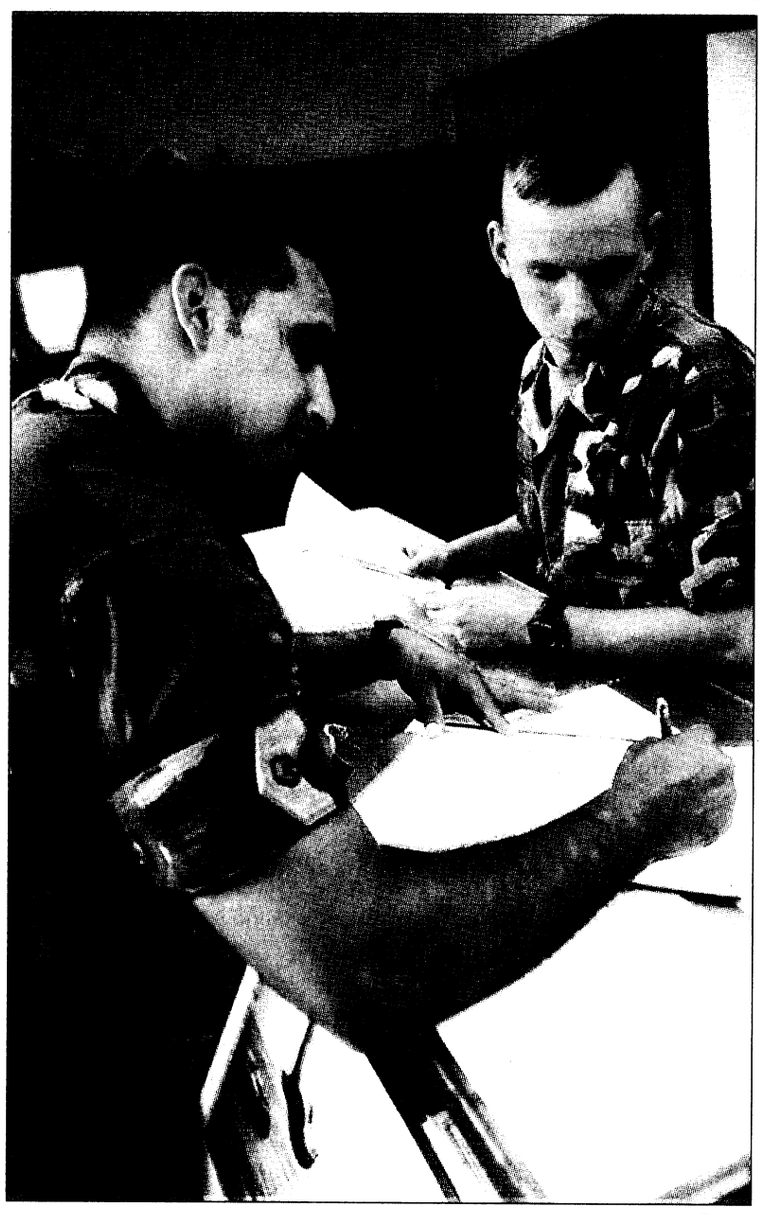
Dec. 21 — In 1988, Pan Am flight 103 is destroyed by a bomb near Lockerbie, Scotland.

The above list is just a short example of the many dates that may be important to certain groups or individuals. Though the events listed above occurred outside the United States, Fort Benning community members cannot consider ourselves immune from terrorism. On June 10, 1999, a taped interview with Usama Bin Ladin was released. In this interview among other claims, Bin Ladin indicated every U.S. male, regardless if he's a Soldier or a taxpayer is a target for his organization. Bin Ladin has been linked to such events as the World Trade Center bombing in 1993, Khobar Towers and the bombing of the U.S. embassies in Nairobi and Tanzania in 1998.

The purpose of terrorism is to use violence or the threat of violence in the pursuit of goals that are generally political, religious or ideological. Terrorist organizations are capable of executing complex, well-planned operations anytime and anywhere. They launch deadly attacks with little or no warning. Potential targets for terrorists meet four general criteria:

•they're vulnerable;
•if attacked there is a high psychological impact;
•they will provide a large amount of publicity; and
•it demonstrates the inability of the government to provide security.

Common targets include prominent individuals and critical facilities. Fort Benning meets the criteria for a potential target.



We are a symbol of national power; a source of arms and ammunition; an open installation; host a variety of prominent national and international figures; and with our status as Best Installation in the World, can be considered a potential target that would add to a terrorists reputation.

QUOTE ME

It is incorrect to think that because outright aggression against the United States is deterred, our principal adversary, the Soviet Union, has just been peacefully minding the store.

— General John L. Piotrowski, Commander, U.S. Space Command

Facility gives troops warm welcome

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Sgt. Adrian Cortez, Co. C, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, signs in Spc. Michael Hogue earlier this week. Hogue is one of 70 Soldiers that processed through the facility this week.

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

If her bloodshot eyes don't tell the story of her long hours and rigorous work schedule inprocessing troops into Fort Benning's ranks, the clock on the wall that reads 3:30 in the morning is certain to give any onlookers an insight into her life.

Spc. Suhai Aquilar is one of 30 Soldiers assigned to Fort Benning's only permanent party replacement center and Department of Defense individual deployment sight that places more than 70 troops daily into the ranks of Fort Benning units, and her all-night shift is not an uncommon one.

Her job like the others assigned to Company C, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment is to ensure that incoming Soldiers not only successfully accomplish inprocessing during their three-to-five day stay — but said what is most important is that the incoming Soldiers are treated with respect as well.

"We are the first stop these people make when they come to Fort Benning," Aguilar said. "We make the first impression, and it is our job to keep that impression good while still being able to get them inprocessed."

The regime of shuffling more than 300 people through the post's replacement facility is one that begins early in the morning for Aguilar and her replacement center cohorts because this is a job that never really has a beginning or an end — it's is a 24-hour a day operation.

"We take new Soldiers in around the clock," noted Co C. Commander Capt. Julie A. Brown. "It is a process that continues no matter what time it is. It is our job to ensure the incoming Soldiers not only have a place to stay, food to eat and are inprocessed correctly, but it is also our job to show these people why we are the best installation in the world."

Brown said her Soldiers overcome the hardships that long hours can sometimes bring on a daily basis because they take pride in what they are doing and work as a team.

"The Soldiers here are great, and every day they do a great job despite the long hours," she said. "We have such a small group and all of them work well together. They do what ever it takes to do their job, and I really think that is what keeps them happy."

A barrage of classes on consideration of others and customer service skills are also a couple of things Brown attributes to the success of the company, but she said the success really belongs to the Soldiers who stay awake at night to ensure that Fort Benning's newest troops are welcomed appropriately.

"The Soldiers are the ones that make this place run," she said. "Without them and their dedication, this place would be nothing."

Although she attributes the success to the Soldiers and their training , she said the recent change in designation from being a detachment to a company has helped the company grow and maintain some continuity.

"The redesignation in November has actually given us some stability," she said. "Instead of us just having people attached, we now have people assigned here by the Department of the Army."

Now the replacement center may have earned a new name, but Co. C will continue to pride itself in being the doorway to the best installation in the world, she said.

TRIVIA

It was the accepted practice in Babylon, 4,000 years ago, that for a month after the wedding, the bride's father would supply his son-in-law with all the mead he could drink. Mead is a honey beer, and because their calendar was lunar based, this period was called the "honey month" or what we know today as the "honeymoon."

3rd Brigade Soldiers compete for award

Master Sgt. Tracy Tanner

Sgt. Olen Winningham serves lunch during this year's Connelly Award competition. Winningham, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, was one of six Soldiers chosen to fill the team which will compete for the Army-wide title.

Sgt 1st Class James Merkel
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mech.)

Set in the woods of Fort Benning just off Dixie Road, Soldiers of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) recently set up a field feeding site, complete with camouflage netting and perimeter guards in fighting positions.

Representing Fort Benning in the annual Connelly Award competition, 3rd Brigade food service Soldiers created the site to simulate feeding under combat conditions.

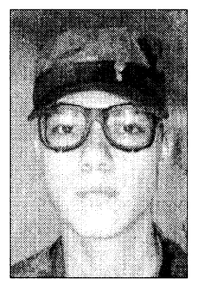
The Connelly Award is a prestigious event recognizing the most outstanding food service provided to Soldiers within the Army.

Teams from throughout the Army compete at levels within the Army, with the winners ending up at the Army-wide level. Food service teams from Korea, Europe, the U.S. Army Forces Command and U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command will be in the running for recognition.

"I think we have a good chance of winning the competition," remarked Master Sgt. Timothy Crawshaw, the 3rd Brigade food service supervisor. "If we win the TRADOC competition, we have a good chance of winning All Army," he said. "We have a strong team, and I know we will do well against the other four teams who will be vying for the Army-level recognition."

Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment took a break from their Sergeants Time training to move through the tactical feeding line and receive their noon meal.

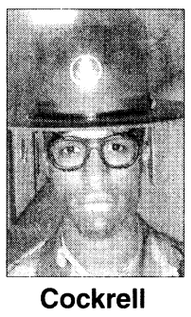
"This food is better than in garrison," said Pvt Russell Wynn of Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion., 10th Field Artillery Regiment, after a hard morning of training. "We get plenty to eat, and the setup looks great."



The meal was a varietal feast. A choice of fried chicken or roast beef as the main course, with green beans, rice or fried cabbage as a side dish. Each Soldier could also choose between chicken or natural pan gravy, onion or cream potato soup, chocolate brownies or apple cobbler, with a fresh garden salad and drinks.

The food service team consists of Soldiers from each of the brigade's battalions.

"This is good experience for a food service specialist," said Pfc. Wileana Martin, a team member. "This setup is typical of what a Soldier would expect to see in the field."



"This is an excellent team," she added. "A lot of hard work with Soldiers from different units, and everyone works very well together. I know we're going to win!"

What made you join the Army? I never was able to fit in with anyone because I couldn't act myself. I joined the Army knowing no one will try to act different, because everyone acts the same for one cause.
Why were you chose as Soldier of the Cycle? I've always been a team player. So what better team to play for than the U.S. Army Infantry.

Officer candidates receive tour of former Confederate prison

Sgt, 1st Class Walter N. Dyky
Officer Candidate School

Andersonville, "... it takes seven of its occupants to make a shadow" (Sgt. David Kennedy, 9th Ohio Cavalry).

Andersonville, or Camp Sumpter as it was officially known, was one of the largest of many Confederate military prisons established during the Civil War.

More than 155 officer candidates from Phase III Officer Candidate School visited the historic complex June 18.

The candidates received a tour of the prison's facilities, which consisted of the national historic cemetery, the prison complex and the recently opened National Prisoners of War Museum.

The prison was built in 1864 after Confederate officials decided to move the large number of Federal prisoners kept in and around Richmond, Va. In addition, the Southern Army needed a place of greater security and a more abundant food supply.

During the 14 months the prison existed, more than 45,000 Union Soldiers were held in the confines of the prison. Of these, almost 13,000 died from disease, poor sanitation, malnutrition, overcrowding or exposure to the elements.

The prison initially covered about 16.5 acres of land enclosed by a 15-foot high stockade of hewn pine logs. Inside, about 19 feet from the wall, was the "deadline," which the prisoners were forbidden to cross upon threat of death.

Flowing through the prison yard was a stream, which supplied water to most of the prison. Eight small earthen forts located around the exterior of the prison were equipped with artillery to quell disturbances within the compound. It was also used to defend against feared Union Calvary attacks.

The first prisoners arrived in Andersonville in February, which was designed to hold 10,000 men, with the population swelling to 32,000 in August 1864.

The deteriorating economic conditions, an inadequate transportation system and the need to concentrate all available resources on its army, the Confederate government was unable to provide adequate housing, food, clothing and medical care to their Federal captives.

These conditions, along with a breakdown in discipline, resulted in suffering and a high mortality rate.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst required the candidates travel to the prison during the OCS Phase III program of instruction to instill "Army Values" into officer candidates based on lessons learned from America's military past.

The training focused on the following three distinct lessons: Ethics of a supervisor, Ethics of a subordinate and Ethics of a peer. The intent of this experience is to instill those ethical values before an officer embarks on a new career, so when faced with such issues, they will have a solid foundation to make responsible ethical and legal decisions. The Fort Benning historian accompanied the candidates to Andersonville where he presented a historic overview of the national cemetery, discussing the roll that the "Raiders" played during the internment of prisoner at Andersonville. An overview of the physical layout and living conditions at the prison was presented and discussed.

The topics of ethics discipline and control were integrated highlights of the presentations.

Candidates were given opportunities to walk the grounds and to explore the prison complex and to view onsite displays. A visit to the National POW Museum completed the staff ride activities to Andersonville.

U.S. aircraft head home

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

More than 300 U.S. aircraft will soon be on their way to home bases in the United States and Europe, Pentagon officials announced Monday, a day after NATO terminated Operation Allied Force. Defense Secretary William S. Cohen authorized U.S. Army Gen. Wesley Clark, Allied Force commander, to begin redeploying the American planes. "Some of the planes and crews, including many reservists, could start returning as early as tomorrow," Cohen said at a Pentagon news briefing. At its height, NATO's air campaign against Yugoslavia involved about 37,500 U.S. service members ashore and afloat, said Pentagon officials. The successful air campaign is now being followed by a NATO-led ground peacekeeping force, Cohen said. "NATO is well on its way of meeting its goals of getting the Serb forces out, getting NATO peacekeepers in and getting the refugees back home."

"Yesterday, NATO announced the Yugoslav army and special police forces had departed Kosovo on the schedule negotiated by NATO," Cohen said. "We estimate about 47,000 Serb troops and nearly 800 tanks, armored personnel carriers and artillery pieces have left Kosovo in the past 11 days."

Cohen and Army Gen. Hugh Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, commended the crews who flew the bombers, fighters and support aircraft for carrying out the most precise air campaign in history.

"All Americans can be justifiably proud of the skill and professionalism of our air crews," Cohen said. "They have helped make air power history."

"From the pilots and air crews to the wrench turners and ordnance handlers, the fuelers on the ground and aboard the Navy ships in the Adriatic, to the soldiers and Marines in Albania and Macedonia and now in Kosovo — both active and reserve — this was truly a one team fight," Shelton said.

The redeployment will take place in two increments, Shelton said. The first, involving 124 aircraft, was expected to start as early as June 22, and was slated to take 10 days to two weeks.

CTT Stakes: Engineer company conducts squad-level competition

1st Lt. William M. Walker
63rd Engineer Company (CSE), 36th Engineer Group

The 63rd Engineer Company (CSE) conducted a Common Task Testing (CTT) Stakes from April 19-24. The unit deployed to the field for a week of squad level training and competition. The whole week revolved around this competition to determine which squad could best navigate to the CTT stations and perform the tasks correctly.

The first sergeant put the "spot light" on the squad leaders and they performed well. "The squad leaders have a golden opportunity to display the quality of training they have conducted and the basic military skills of their Soldiers," said 1st Sgt. Cliff Roddy.

The first part of the week provided the squad leaders an opportunity to train their Soldiers prior to the actual competition. The company conducted an M-16 zero and qualification range and a gas chamber exercise during the first two days. Squad leaders used any "down" time during the day and evening hours to conduct training with their squads. Most of the Soldiers went into the competition prepared to excel.

The CTT Stakes competition required the squad leader to navigate through wooded terrain and guide his or her squad to one of seven CTT stations in a specified time limit. The average distance between stations was three kilometers. The stations were set up in a manner that discouraged the use of roads for movement, it was much closer to dead reckon. "I wanted to set up a course that made it difficult for the squads to use the roads to get from station to station," said Staff Sgt. Chad Lokken, company training NCO. "We want them to build confidence in their terrain association and dead reckoning skills."

At each station, the grader individually tested the squad members in two CTT tasks. The Soldiers received a go or no go, and points were deducted if the squad did not make it to the station in time. The CTT tasks focused primarily on Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (NBC) tasks. "In today's world of NBC terrorism and the prospect of NBC warfare on the modern battlefield, the Soldiers must master these skills to stay alive," explained Staff Sgt. H.L. Wimberly, the unit's NBC NCO. Other activities included maintenance on weapons, FM communications and first aid.

1st Lt. William M. Walker

A squad leader with the 63rd Eng. Co. prepares to move the squad to the next CTT station.

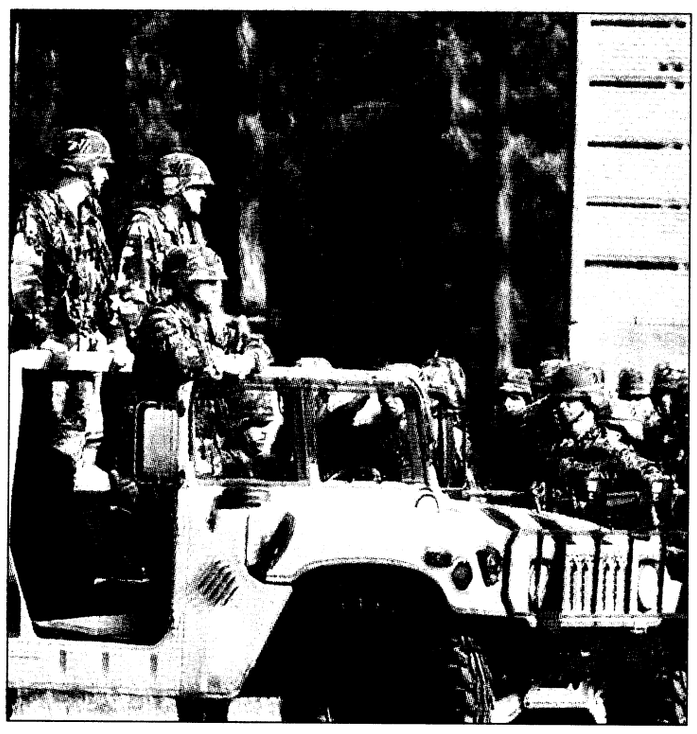
1st Lt. Heather Andrews suggested, "The Soldiers enjoyed this 'break' from the company's normal FTX's. The training gave the Soldiers the chance to get away from their construction equipment and get back to the basics of Soldiering."

"This competition also provided a breeding ground for greater esprit de corps within the squads and platoons," Andrews added. "The squad leaders received the best training of all, in the form of practical leadership experience."

3rd Brigade receives new commander

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

It was a day of good-byes and hellos Tuesday as the Soldiers of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) said farewell to their current brigade commander and welcomed in a new.



Col. Anthony A. Cucolo III, a New York native, replaced Korea-bound Col. John D. Gardner as the Infantry Brigade's top commissioned officer and said he is excited to be a part of such an elite unit.

"Col. Gardner has nurtured and sustained this combat ready outfit for which we can be very proud," Cucolo said as he addressed his Soldiers Tuesday. "I will try to do everything possible to try to hold to that standard to keep this corner of our Army worthy of your great personal sacrifice."

During his 20 years of service, Cucolo has served a variety of assignments to include a pair of company commands in the 1st Cavalry Division, a staff officer in 4th ROTC Region, part of the Army Staff at the Pentagon and U.S. Army Europe. Most recently Cucolo was the Director of the Combined Arms and Tactics Division for the U.S. Army Infantry School.

Throughout those two decades of service, Cucolo has logged education time at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, the Marine Corps Amphibious Warfare School, the Army Command and General Staff College and the Army War College.

Cucolo and his wife Ginger have three children, Tony-Allen, 15, Mackie, 12, and Abigail, 10.

American and allied forces bombing of Iraq during the first few months of this year.

"It was a little scary to be part of that," he said. "But where we were, we didn't really have to worry. We were so far from danger, we didn't even have to carry our protective mask or chemical suit."

While Taylor and his seven fellow Soldiers took part in the security operation, Villegas played a slightly different role as he issued and maintained area security through identification badge control.

"It was my job to ensure that everyone in the village was outfitted with the proper security badge and that all were up to date," he said.

Staff Sgt. Lavander Wilkerson, NCOIC of the deployment, maintained the status of the deployees as well as working a multitude of various jobs at the Provost Marshall's Office.

"It was great — absolutely great," Villegas said about this, his first deployment. "There were so many things there to experience and the money wasn't bad either since we were drawing hazardous duty pay."

Upon returning home, that extra money came in handy for the fresh-from Saudi sergeant as he was welcomed home not only by his fiance, but by his newborn son as well.

"The opportunities over there are outstanding and our people got nothing but compliments on their performance," he said. "Given the chance I would go back."

That chance may come as soon as a year from now for Villegas and his fellow Soldiers as selection for the six-month deployments are limited to U.S. Army Forces Command military police only.

Pioneers welcome commander

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

After two years of commanding the Pioneers of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Lt. Col. Jerardo Reyes said farewell to his Soldiers during a change of command ceremony held June 18 on York Field.

Lt. Col. Keith A. George took command from Reyes, who will head to the U.S. Army School of Americas as the chief of staff.

The emotionally charged Reyes said he is not easily overwhelmed, but that this day was different. He went on to say that his time with the battalion was challenging, but well worth it.

"Before you stand some of the finest Americans this great country has to offer," Reyes said. "They are smart, physically strong, mentally tough and highly motivated. They are your friends, your family and for the last two years they have been my family. I've trained with them, ran with them, inspected them, listened to them, counseled them, I've lost 20 pounds with them, laughed with them, and yes, I've even shed a tear with them. Now I have to bid farewell to them. I hope I have served you well, I hope I have been a worthy commander."

Reyes wished George and his wife Kimberley the best of luck and told them they were inheriting a great team.

"The ride is short, fast and wild at times. Hang on, don't scream too loud and make sure to keep your seat belts on."

Col. Richard Rowe passes the guidon to Lt. Col. Keith A. George during the change of command ceremony June 18.

George

When George stepped up to the podium, he talked about how the 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. is tasked with the awesome responsibility of training and establishing standards for the mechanized Infantryman and how fitting it is that Fort Benning is the home of the Infantry.

"When an Infantryman wants to know how to do a task to accomplish his mission, he should only ask himself this question, 'How did we do this at home, how was I taught to do this at Fort Benning?"

George is originally from Lewisburg, Tenn., and began his military career in 1983 when we was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Infantry from Eastern Kentucky University. He holds a bachelors degree in history from Eastern Kentucky University and a master's degree in education from Tennessee Technological University.

Some of George's earlier assignments included platoon leader for the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry, 9th Infantry Division, Fort Lewis Wash.; commander of Company B, 5th Battalion, 5th Cavalry, 3rd Armored Division, Germany; squadron executive officer for the 1st Squadron, 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, opposing forces at NTC; and joint planner and special staff coordinator between Joint Task Force Six and Federal Law Enforcement Agencies, coordinating DoD support to law enforcement for counterdrug operations at Fort Bliss Tx.

Among his military schools, George has completed the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, Airborne, Ranger, Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle Commander's Course, the Combined Arms and Services Staff School, the Joint and Combined Officer School and the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College.

Some of his awards include the Bronze Star Medal with "V" device, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Army Meritorious Service Medal with one oak leaf cluster, the Army Commendation medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Southwest Asia Service Medal with three bronze stars, the Humanitarian Service Medal, the Valorous Unit Award and the Combat Infantryman Badge.

George and his wife Kimberley have two children, Sarah and Ethan.

Traveling With Your Pet?

Check Ahead For Welcome Signs

(NAPSA)-Planning your summer vacation, but don't want to leave Rover and Kitty home with a pet sitter? You may be pleasantly surprised at some of the vacation spots that are putting out the welcome mat for your four-legged travel companions these days. But, it's still wise to check ahead for destinations that can accommodate your pet when planning your trip.

Do a little research, and you'll find some interesting options that can make your pet's trip, as well as your vacation, a safe and fun-filled event. Pet-friendly accommodations range from camping parks to first-class hotels.

For example, if Chicago is your destination, check out the Ritz Pet Program at the Ritz Carlton, a Four Seasons Hotel. Your pet will receive the Ritz's royal treatment, including a Pet Welcome Gift that includes Iams® Dog or Cat Food, compliments of The Iams Company. Other Ritz special touches for your pet include a pet gourmet room service menu, featuring special Iams pet food selection; a pet corner in the hotel's gift shop, carrying leashes and clothing for cats and dogs; and the Ritz Kennel, offering full grooming services.

If an amusement park is your destination, you may find that some of the larger amusement parks offer special accommodations for your pet while you enjoy the park. That's the case at Paramount's King Island® in Cincinnati, Ohio, where pets spend the day under the watchful eye of pet care specialists in the complimentary Iams-sponsored Pet Day Care Center located just outside the front gate.

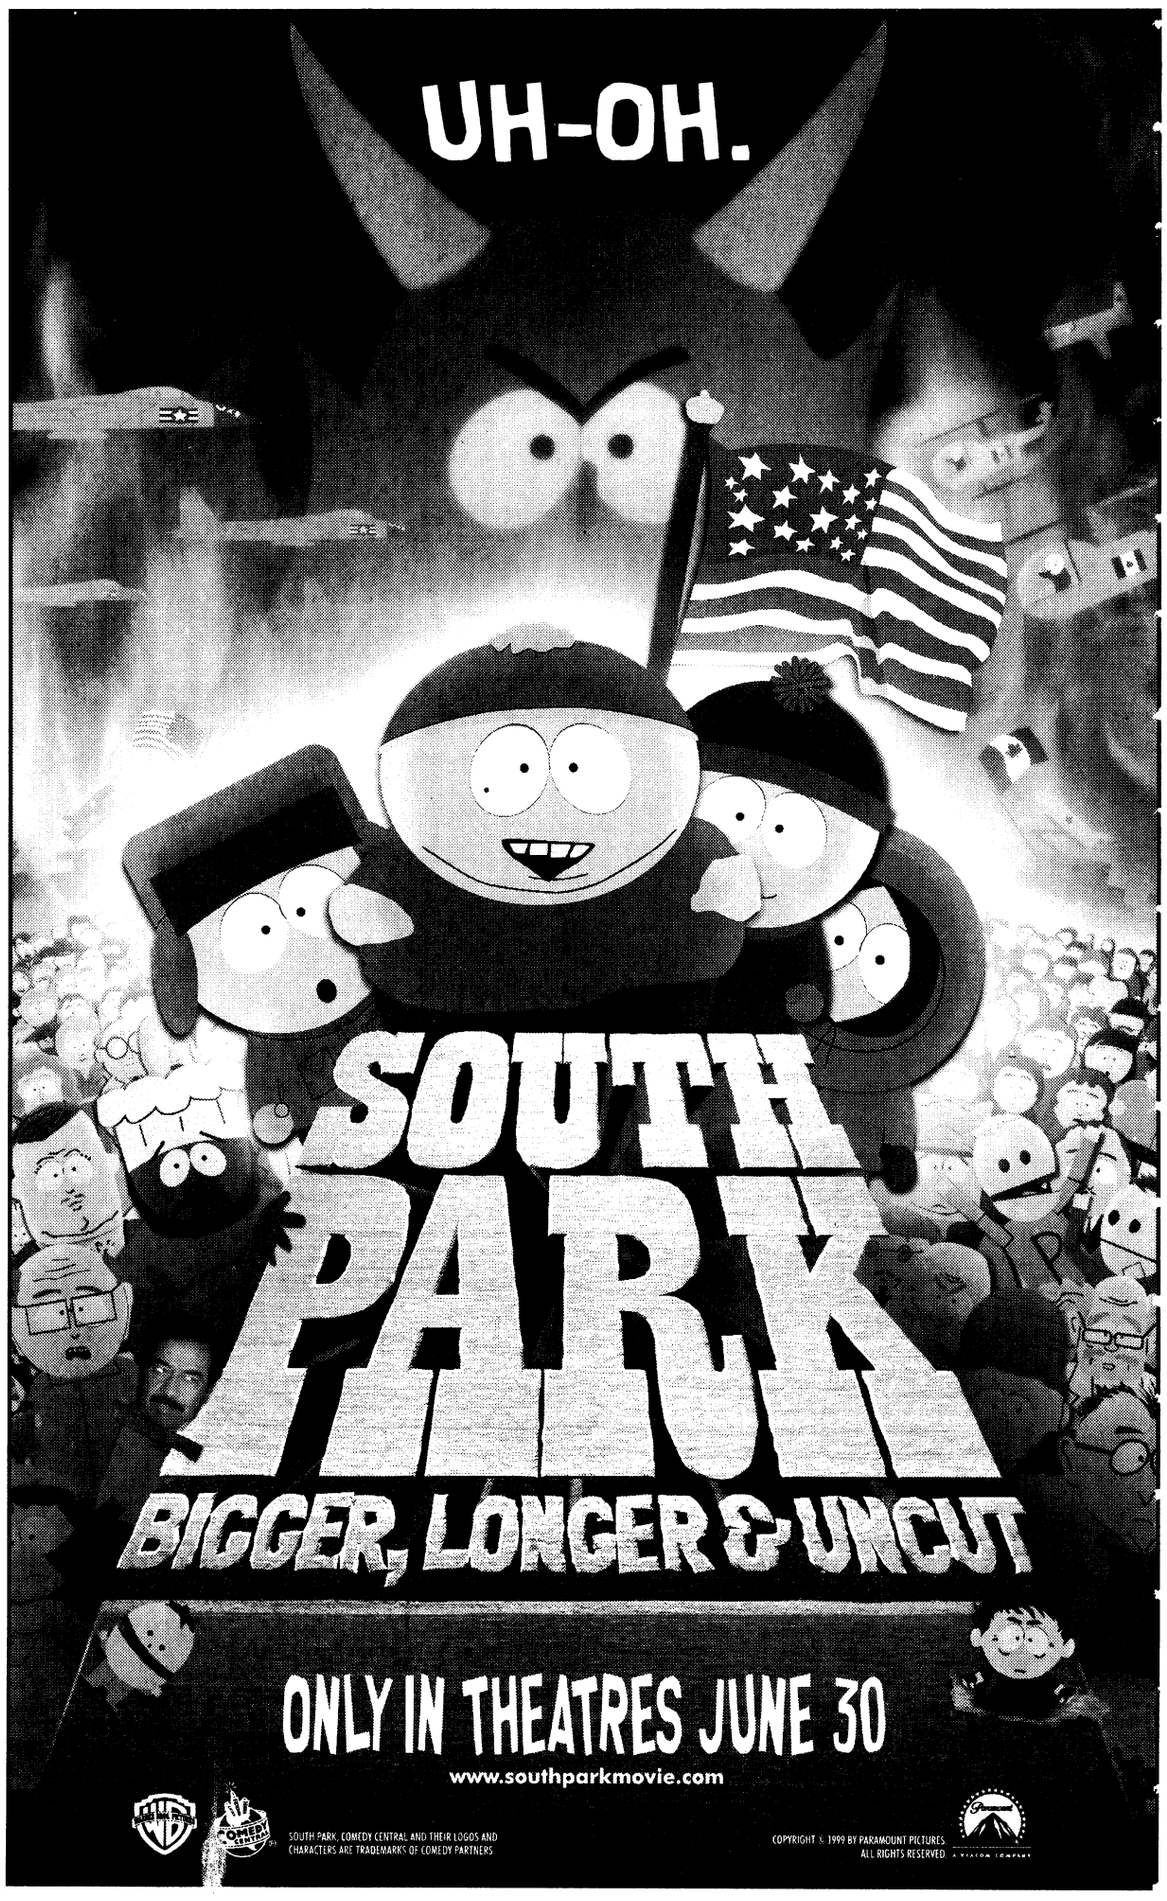
If you're planning a camping trip, be aware that while pets are allowed at many parks, they may be required to be on a leash or crated at all times. Visit the National Park Service's home page on the Internet at www.nps.gov to access national and state park regulations.

Along with arranging accommodations for your traveling pet, Dr. Dan Carey, a veterinarian with The Iams Company, offers the following travel tips to help prepare for a pleasant travel experience.

• Purchase a travel carrier several weeks in advance and gradually acclimate your pet to using it before the trip begins.

• Be certain to purchase a container that complies with the International Air Transport Association and USDA regulations when traveling by air. Make airline reservations early, since some airlines allow only one on-board pet per flight.

• Bring along a note from your veterinarian, signed within 10 days of your trip, stating that your pet is in good health and up to date on immunizations.



• Don't leave your pet in a locked car, even with the windows open. The temperature inside a car can reach up to 160 degrees on hot days.

• Provide plenty of water for your pet and stop often for breaks. A good rule of thumb is a combined drink of water and walk every two hours.

• Keep your pet on a consistent, nutritious diet of premium food while on the road. If your pet is prone to motion sickness, feed smaller amounts of food one or two hours before you travel.

About The Iams Company

For more than 50 years, The Iams Company has been providing world-class quality foods for dogs and cats. For more information on proper pet care and nutrition, call the Iams Pet Professionals toll free at 1-800-863-4267, Monday through Saturday, 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Eastern Standard Time. You can also visit Iams on the Web at www.iams.com.

6th RTBn changes command

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Lt. Col. Mark A. Johnstone assumed command of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion from Lt. Col. William G. Kidd during a ceremony held at Eglin Air Force Base's Camp James E. Rudder Wednesday morning.

A two-year veteran of the command, Kidd, will now head to Korea to take part in a joint task force assignment.

During his 16 years of service, Johnstone has served in a variety of assignments including serving as a platoon leader in the 82nd Airborne Division and a battalion logistics officer in Korea. He has also served as a logistical officer with the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Johnstone, a 1983 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, has netted many military awards to include the Master Parachutist Badge with Bronze Combat Jump Star, the Expert Infantry Badge, the Combat Infantryman Badge and the Ranger Tab.

"I'm honored to be back in a position where I am directly serving Rangers and their families," he said as he addressed his Soldiers Wednesday morning. "It is not often to be given an opportunity to give back to the Ranger community, because it has certainly given so much to me."

Johnston brings with him to the command his wife Elizabeth and his two children Joshua and Rachel.

Clinton Salutes U.S. Allied Troops

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

When war ruptured Bosnia, the world waited too long. When the same ethnic cleansing erupted in Kosovo, NATO allies took action, President Clinton told U.S. and NATO ground and air forces in Europe June 22.

"I hope to the day you die," Clinton said, "You will be proud of being part of a nation and a democratic alliance that believes people should not be killed, uprooted or destroyed because of their race, their ethnic background or the way they worship God."

Returning from the G-8 economic summit in Cologne, Germany, the commander in chief traveled to the Stenkovic refugee camp in the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. He then traveled to Skopje, where he spoke to ground forces now facing the task of securing peace in Kosovo, and to Aviano Air Base, Italy, where he addressed allied air forces who took part in Operation Allied Force.

The 7,000 U.S. and 43,000 international troops destined to take part in NATO Operation Joint Guardian have "a big, big job" ahead of them in Kosovo, Clinton told Soldiers and Marines in Skopje. The security mission is not free of danger or difficulty, he stressed. "There will be some days you wish you were somewhere else."

Unlike the NATO air campaign that employed powerful, precise bombs to destroy, Clinton said, KFOR's success now rides "on your power to build — to be safe while you're doing it — and to protect the ethnic Kosovar Albanians and the ethnic Serbs alike," he said. "As long as they are innocent civilians doing nothing wrong, they're entitled to protection."

The United States is committed to helping people rebuild their lives and communities, "and then to helping Kosov, and all the countries of the region build a brighter, more prosperous future, based on respect for the human rights of all people," Clinton told refugees at Stenkovich. Now that NATO has won the conflict, Clinton said at Aviano, the NATO allies must now win peace by employing the same qualities it took to win the air campaign — determination, patience, discipline and precision. "No one thinks (peace) will take hold without difficulty," he said. "As more and more light is shed on those burned villages and even more mass graves than we dared to imagine, we become more and more appalled by the dark vision of Mr. Milosevic and more and more certain we were right to stop it."

At the Italian base, the president thanked the U.S. and NATO service members of Operation Allied Force "who fought for human dignity and won its cause in Kosovo." The 79-day air campaign proved that "a sustained air campaign under the right conditions can stop an army on the ground," Clinton said. Allied forces flew more than 30,000 sorties, about 9,000 from Aviano, with no combat deaths, and only two planes downed, he noted. "In each case, the pilot (was) recovered; the first in six hours, the second in an hour and a half. That is a truly astonishing record," he said.

The president also recalled the two Army aviators who died in May during a training exercise in Albania — Chief Warrant Officer David A Gibbs, 38, of Ohio, and Chief Warrant Officer Kevin L. eichert, 28, of Wisconsin. Both Soldiers were assigned to C Troop, 6th Squadron, 6th Cavalry Regiment at Illesheim, German. "I want the American people to know that we could have had many more losses but for your skill and courage," he told allied service members. "You have repeatedly put your lives on the line to save the lives of innocent civilians and turn back the tide of ethnic cleansing."

"I know this has been difficult for many of you," he said. "To sleep 10 to a tent, work 12-hour shifts, six days a week. It's hard for a young pilot to leave a wife and two children, going off into uncertain skies. Hard for some of you to spend Father's Day alone, waiting to hear your child's small voice a long way away on a telephone. I want you to know that I am absolutely certain that you are building a better world for your children."

Along with the air crews, Clinton thanked the maintenance crews, weaponeers, air traffic controllers and civilian employees who supported the operation. He cited the 31st Civil Engineers who built a tent city in four days to house more than 2,000 service members deployed to the base. "It's the envy of all the urban planners back home in America," Clinton joked. "There's no crime. Decent sanitation and extremely low unemployment. So many deserve acknowledgment."

The president said he wished he could name the American men and women deployed to Aviano from about 90 bases around America and Europe and the allied crews at the base from Spain, Canada, Portugal and the United Kingdom.

Confessing to getting an adrenaline high from hearing the troops cheer and applaud when he names their units, Clinton went on to thank th troops in the region.

Number of military families continue to increase

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

In the old days, the crusty veteran sergeant might growl at the young recruit longing for his hometown, "Sweetie, if Uncle Sam wanted you to have a wife, he would have issued you one!"

Them days are over, Sarge.

Uncle Sam may not issue wives — or husbands for that matter — but today, most young service members not only have spouses, they also have children. Active duty families include about 500,000 children aged newborn to five years, 430,000 aged 6 to 11, and 293,000 aged 12 to 18.

The number of military families, active-duty mothers and single parents has grown with the advent of the all-volunteer force. About half of today's military families have one or more children below school age. Last year, more than 13,000 military personnel age 21 or younger became parents for the first time.

Few mothers stay home tending hearth and home for they, too, are today's wage earners, contributing a vital share of the family income. So how do babies, bottles and bassinets fit into the military scheme of things? The crusty old sergeant probably never envisioned himself with a teething toddler on each knee. How has the military adapted to care for the youngest members of its community?

Until the 1980s, military child care was underfunded and loosely organized, according to DoD family policy officials. Existing regulations were inconsistently applied, there were no certification systems and little or no oversight.

In the mid-1980s, amid a national wave of child abuse scandals, several cases of abuse at military facilities came to light that led to congressional interest. In 1989, Congress passed the Military Child Care Act, authorizing funding for child development programs.

The legislation set fees for child care centers based on family income and government matches, and it set up subsidies for family child care. It tied caregivers' wages to training requirements and established an accreditation initiative, inspection regime and child abuse prevention and safety procedures. Hot lines were set up to report violations.

In the same year, DoD's inspector general made 53 recommendations to improve military child care. As a result of the new legislation and DoD's internal assessment, the Military Child Development System was reborn. Over the course of the following decade, what was once considered the "ghetto of American child care" became a model for the nation, according to Linda K. Smith, director of the Pentagon's Office of Family Policy.

Today, military child development centers operate at more than 300 locations along with more than 9,900 family child care homes and school-age care Programs. Together, this network constitutes one of the largest employer-sponsored programs of its kind in the country. It provides daily care to more than 200,000 children from ages 4 weeks through 12 years.

Last year, the White House recognized the Military Child Development System as the nation's standard-bearer. Since then, at the behest of no less than President Clinton, government-sponsored and private child care providers have turned to Smith and her staff for guidance. DoD child care experts set up an Internet Web site at http://dticaw.dtic.mil/milchild and national clearing house at 1- 888-237-3040 to share resources, information and support.

While DoD standards technically fall only in the middle range of state standards, Smith said, enforcement makes the difference. "We now are known for quality. You're not going to see a lot of difference whether you go to a center at Fort Meade, Md., or Andrews Air Force Base, Md., or Naval District Washington, D.C.," she said. "You're going to see good programs."

The Military Child Development System has three components: child development centers, in-home family care providers and school-age care programs. All caregivers must meet rigid training, health and safety standards and are subject to unannounced inspections. Caregiver' employment, wages and advancement are tied to training, education and performance.

An 'up or out' policy is designed to create child care professionals. Higher wages are offered to reduce turnover.

Child development centers provide care for children 6 weeks to 12 years of age. Most operate between 6 a.m. and 6:30 p.m., Mondays through Fridays. Nearly 89 percent of the military's centers are accredited by the National Academy of Early Childhood Programs, a division of the National Association for the Education of Young Children. Smith said all DoD centers aim to be fully accredited by 2000.

COMMUNITY

around post

Army Community Service answers PCS questions — If you are moving to another installation and need information about schools, shopping, medical, dental or housing, the Standard Installation Exchange Service (SITES) can answer most of your questions.

For more information, call ACS at 545-4043 or stop by Building 2624 in Soldiers' Plaza.

AUSA conducts raffle — The Chattahoochee Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army has kicked off its third annual truck raffle.

Chapter members will sell raffle tickets for $1 each. The winner gets a 1999 Chevy S-10 pick-up truck from Bill Heard Chevrolet.

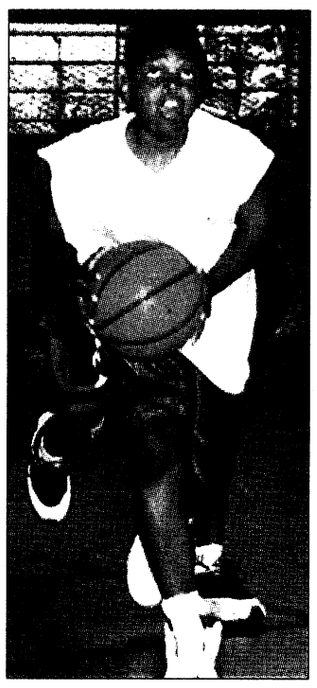
For more information, call 545-3273.

Red Cross offers youth volunteer program — The American Red Cross offers a summer youth volunteer program for kids ages 12 to 18 through Aug. 13. There are opportunities to volunteer at the hospital, water safety, Red Cross office and other locations.

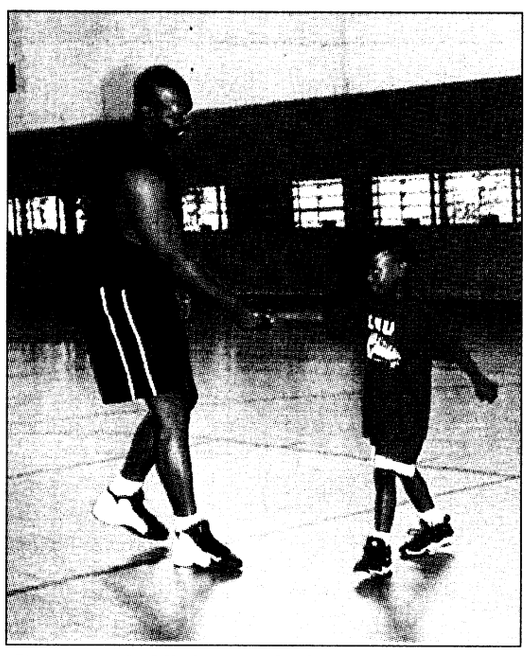
Applications are available at the Red Cross Office Building 2626, Soldiers' Plaza, the Hospital Red Cross Office or the Martin Army Community Hospital Information Desk.

For more information, call 545-5194.

Preschool has openings — Patch Preschool still has openings for the '99 - 2000 school year. Children must be 3 years of age by Oct. 1 and fully toilet-trained in order to be admitted.



Children must be registered at central registration prior to enrolling. A current LES, shot record, birth certificate and central registration paperwork are needed to enroll.



For more information, call 687-2404.

FAP seeks follow-up callers — The Family Advocacy First Steps Office at Martin Army Community Hospital is seeking women as follow-up phone callers.

Some categories needed by First Steps are mothers who have had premature babies or multiple births, teenage moms and single moms. All women are needed. The basic requirement is to be caring and willing to contact new mothers to give them helpful information, emotional support and referrals to services they need.

If interested, call 544-2020.

Annual tourney teams father, son

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis

Fort Benning fathers and sons got a chance to spend some time together while putting their basketball skills to the test Saturday during Youth Services' annual Father and Son 2-on-2 Basketball Tournament.

Nineteen father and son duos took to the court to celebrate Father's Day and battle it out for the title.

"This was a great way to celebrate Father's Day," said Arthur Scott of Company C, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade. Scott, who participated in the tournament with son Arthur Jr., 10, added the two decided to participate in the tournament to have fun and spend some time together.

According to Justine Boone, YS recreation assistant and tournament coordinator, the tournament was held not only to celebrate Father's Day, but to give community members a chance to participate in an activity with their children.

"A lot of times here at the Youth Center, we see the kids without their parents. So we wanted to do something we could get the parents involved in," she said.

Boone added since many fathers spend a lot of time on deployments or in the field, Father's Day was the perfect opportunity to bring everyone together.

"I think the fathers are just honored that their kids asked even them to do this with them," she said.

The tournament, which has been held at YS for the past six years, was broken down into two categories, pre-teen (6- to 12-year-olds) and teen (13- to 18-year-olds).

The winners of the pre-teen category were Roosevelt Vickers and Roosevelt Vickers Jr. The winners of the teen category were Derrick Cruthfield Powell and his father Chris Cruthfield who came to Georgia all the way from Tyler, Texas, to participate in the tournament.

Boone said this year had the biggest turnout yet and she hopes the tournament is something that will be continued in the future.

"At some point in time, the sons are going to be fathers, and they are going to look back at what they did with their fathers. That's what it's really all about — building memories."

MACH offers emergency room guide

Dr. Marshall Eidenberg
Martin Army Community Hospital

With the new Centralized Triage system at Martin Army Community Hospital, not all patients arriving at the hospital expecting to be seen in the Emergency Room (ER) are being seen there. Many patients are given appointments to see their regular doctor later that day or within the next several days.

To make things easier and faster for the patients, the Central Triage staff and ER physicians, the following is offered as a guide on when to and more importantly, when not to go to the ER.

Do not go to the Emergency Room if:

•You have a cold.

•You have a toothache or an earache or a health problem that can wait until you see your regular doctor or dentist.

•You need to get a refill of medication.

•You feel you can't get an appointment with your regular doctor.

•You are trying to get a second opinion, days off or a profile. In general, medical officers working in the ER are not allowed to give profiles or quarters slips except until the next duty day, so as to ensure appropriate follow up.

Do go to the Emergency Room if:

•You have the new onset of bad pain.

•You have bad bleeding.

•You break a bone.

•You have been poisoned.

•You black out or cannot breathe.

•You think you may be having a heart attack or stroke.

If you are not sure if you have an emergency, call 544-CARE (544-2273) to talk with someone at either the Health Care Information line or in Central Triage.

Find out what you need to do. Remember you must go through Centralized Triage to be seen in the Emergency Room. Also remember, the ER sorts patients by the severity of the problem, so you may be referred back to your clinic, or may have to wait if your problem is less severe than someone else's situation.

Using the resources available to you at the appropriate level will allow everyone in our community to receive the care they need where they need it and when they need it.

FORT BENNING SCHOOLS

Registration still underway

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning schools are currently holding registration and verification for the 1999-2000 school year from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday until the end of June..

If children attended the Fort Benning Schools this school year, it will be necessary for parents to verify registration data for the next school year by visiting the schools. By participating in this registration and verification, there will be no need for parents to register their children in the fall. If children did not attend any Fort Benning schools this year, it will be necessary to complete a registration packet which is available at the schools, to ensure them a place in the fall.

All registration and verification will take place at the child's assigned or neighborhood school. It will be necessary for parents to register at each school if they have children in more than one of the Fort Benning Schools.

New registration requires the child's social security number and proof of on-post residence.

Registration for pre-K and kindergarten requires the child's original birth certificate. Parents of pre-K and kindergarten students will be given information regarding the procedure for securing a Georgia Eye, Ear, Dental and Immunization Certificate at registration.

Parents of students in grades one through eight must bring current shot records, which will be recorded on Fort Benning School's health forms.

Verification will include: updating basic registration data (i.e. address, phone numbers, contact information), health and immunization updates, medications, etc.

Additional registration and verification information is available on the Fort Benning School's website at benning.w1.odedodea.edu or by calling 545-7276.

Directorate of Public Works Information Corner "Essayons"

DPW announces road closure

Penny O' Connor
Directorate of Public Works

One lane of Gillespie Road running north from Marchant Street to Barron Street will be closed to traffic Monday through Thursday. Connection of utilities in Building 108 to the existing water and sewage lines on the west side of the building has made this road closure necessary. If you have questions concerning this closure or need more information, call Capt. Adrienne Eckstein, Army Corps of Engineers (ACOE) at 545-1082.

Eckstein, the ACOE project engineer for renovation of Building 108, reports this should be the last major inconvenience necessitated by their work. Both interior and exterior work is on schedule and completion is expected in early fall. This will be good news to the four different agencies to be housed there, including the Criminal Investigation Division and the Logistics Assistance Office, which are currently located in vintage World War II wooden buildings.

Major items still to be done include installation of a sprinkler system, installation of a large air-handler, ceiling and finish work in the interior and stucco work on the exterior. After all exterior work is finished, the grounds surrounding the building will be landscaped and the ugly duckling on Marchant Street will be transformed into a swan.

Notice of change

Residents in Davis Hill and Bouton Heights, Perkins Place and McGraw Manor will call 689-5400 for all maintenance and repair needs. This includes repair of kitchen appliances (i.e. refrigerators, stoves, garbage disposals, vent hoods and fire suppression systems). Residents in all other family housing areas will call 689-5400 for kitchen appliance repair while continuing to call 545-2135 for all other maintenance needs.

For more information call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Holiday refuse, recycle and yard waste schedule

There will be no yard waste picked up in family housing July 5. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be on July 12. There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups July 5. Port, Kawamura, Fernandez Streets and Indianhead Terrace areas normally scheduled for pick-up on July 5 will be picked up on July 6. Refuse and recycle collection in family housing for July 6-9 will be picked up as normal scheduled.

For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

Self Help, U-Do-It Center holiday schedule

In observance of the Fourth of July holiday, the Self Help Center, including the Loan Equipment Section and Venetian Blind & Shade shop will be closed July 3-5. The center will reopen for business July 6 at 8:30 a.m.

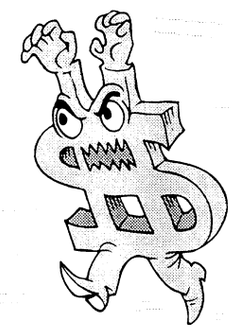
For more information, call Dr. William C. Shirley at 545-1121.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics you would like to be addressed in DPW "Information Corner," please call Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 4009, Attn: ATZB-PW

ask the judge

Capt. R. Brian Bohlen
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate



Q: I got a call yesterday from a nasty smug little man from a collection company who said I owe him money for my past due balance on my cellular phone. The guy keeps threatening that if I don't pay up soon, he's going to call my chain of command and I'll be "bustin' rocks at Leavenworth." Can he really call my commander and get me in trouble?

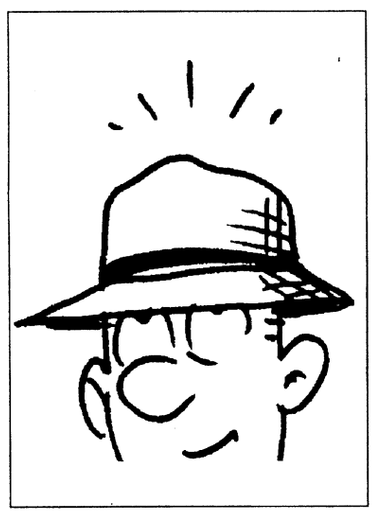
A: To answer your question I have to make one thing totally clear. The status of the person contacting you is extremely important under the law. There is a huge difference in the legal status of a creditor who you originally owed the money and a professional debt collector that was hired by someone else to collect a debt.

It sounds like the person you're dealing with represents a professional debt collection company hired by your phone service. If this is the case, that debt collector may not contact your chain of command or any other third party about this debt unless you authorize this contact in writing or a court order allows such contact. This is federal law under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, Title 15, USC1692.

When the debt collector calls you again let him know that you will sue his company for damages if he calls your commander or any other third party trying to collect this debt. Warning for the wise: You've got the law on your side in argument and you may feel an irresistible urge to rub the debt collector's nose in it. When you feel this urge, stifle it. The debt collector can still do unspeakably nasty things to you and your credit rating if you rile him up.

Now, what if it turns out that this guy calling you about the debts works for your cellular phone company and therefore is considered a creditor? If the caller is a creditor, he may contact your chain of command and get help processing this debt if he follows the Army rules. The Army has rigorous standards noted in AR 600-15, which it holds creditors to in processing application for collection assistance. A phone call from a creditor alone is not going to meet the Army's standards.

In most cases, the creditor will have to provide your commander with a copy of the original contract and all related documentation along with a certificate swearing that the creditor has fully complied with applicable laws concerning the contract. If the creditor fails to comply with the Army requirements listed in AR 600-15, your commander should not take any action against you concerning the debt.



If the creditor does eventually present the Army with all necessary documentation concerning the debt, your commander may interview you concerning the debt.

If the debt has not been brought to the judgement against you in court and you deny that the debt exists or dispute its amount, the Army's role in the matter ends and the creditor must get the debt resolved through the civil court system.

If there is a court judgement against you for the debt or you admit the debt exists and confirm its amount, your commander may then order you to pay the debt. Your failure at that point to make prompt efforts to resolve the debt allows your commander to put you in a world of hurt. Your commander may note your failure on your permanent file, process you for administrative separation, deny your reenlistment or initiate UCMJ action against you.

If you have questions about your rights dealing with a debt collector or creditor, call the Legal Assistance Division, at 545-3281.

Tips help keep people safe from crime

Mark S. Mandell
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

It's a sad fact, but these days virtually no one is immune to crime. According to the National Crime Prevention Council (NCPC), one out of 10 homes will be burglarized this year, and almost half of all completed residential burglaries involve thieves simply breezing through unlocked doors or windows. This danger becomes even more terrifying when family members encounter these intruders.

But the odds can be changed, according to the NCPC. "It takes a combination of personal safety and self-defense techniques," advises the NCPC, "coupled with commitment to working with neighbors, friends and colleagues at world to build safer and better communities."

The NCPC web site offers the following home security tips to better protect you and your family.

Locks and Doors

•Make sure that every external door has a solid, well installed dead bolt lock. Key locks alone are not enough.

•To secure sliding doors, either install locks or put a broomstick or dowel in the inside track to jam the door. Also, to prevent the door from being lifted off the track, drill a hole through slide door frame and fixed frame, then insert a pin.

•Always lock double-hung windows with key locks or drill a small hole into a 45-degree angle between the inner an outer frames, then insert a nail that can be removed. Put grills or grates over basement windows.

•Make sure to re-key the locks when you move to a new house or apartment, and give and extra key to a neighbor you trust — don't hide it around the outside of your home, where it can be discovered.

•All outside doors should be metal or solid wood. Install a peephole or wide angle viewer in all entry doors so you can see who is outside without opening the door.

Check the outside

•Bright lights keep thieves away. Install outside lights and keep them on at night.

•Don't give burglars easy access to your home — cut back tree limbs that can be used to climb to upper-level windows.

•When traveling, use timers that will turn lights on and off in different areas of your house throughout the evening and create the illusion that you are there.

•Make a list of your valuables, complete with serial numbers and descriptions. Photos of these items also can be helpful in the event they're stolen.

Consider an alarm system

•The NCPC believes that alarms can be a good investment, especially if you have many valuables in your home or live an isolated area or one with a history of break-ins. It's best to talk with a number of alarm companies to get a better idea of the level of security your home requires.

•Make sure you thoroughly familiarize yourself with the alarm system, and try not to set off false alarms.

•Other, less-expensive alarm options include sound-detecting sockets that plug into light fixtures and make lights flash when certain noises are detected, and motion-sensing outdoor lights.

Protest your family

•If you come home and find a split screen, broken window or an open door — don't go in. Call the police from a neighbor's house or a pay phone.

•If at night you think you hear someone breaking in, leave safely if you can, then call the police. If you can't leave, lock yourself in a room, with a phone and call the police. If an intruder is in your room, pretend you are asleep.

•Think carefully before buying a gun or keeping dangerous weapons in the house. Guns are responsible for many accidental deaths in the home each year.

The NCPC also advises that families join neighborhood watch groups. If a watch group doesn't exist in your community, you can start one with help from local law enforcement. Also, work with neighbors and local government to organize community clean-ups. The cleaner your neighborhood, the less attractive it is to crime.

The NCPC web site can be found at www.ncpc.org.

TRIVIA

Many years ago in England, pub frequenters had a whistle baked into the rim or handle of their ceramic cups. When they needed a refill, they used the whistle to get some service. "Wet your whistle," is the phrase inspired by this practice.

TRICARE offers line for health advice

Martin Army Community Hospital

Remember, all TRICARE beneficiaries have access to the Health Care Information Line, 1-800-333-3331, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. This toll free number is staffed by registered nurses who can advise callers about minor illnesses and concerns and help them identify more serious problems that may need the attention of a doctor or hospital.

In addition, they can help callers make health care decisions by providing them information about various illnesses and medical procedures.

"I didn't know if my grandson's illness was serious enough for an emergency room visit. The nurse discussed home treatment options and described symptoms that would require a doctor's care. I took my grandson to the doctor the following day."

A caller whose grandson was having symptoms of mild respiratory distress.

"My call was answered very quickly and the nurse gave me helpful information. If I hadn't called, my treatment would have been delayed, increasing the pain and risk of infection."

A called needing emergency room attention.

"This service if helpful because the nurses provide education, assistance and information — and sometimes just reassurance."

A caller who was offered self-care advice

Since Health Care Information Line nurse counselors do not see patients, they do not provide diagnoses, give referrals or authorize medical treatment - nor can they handle TRICARE enrollment or claims-related issues. But they can provide you with valuable health care information.

So the next time you are unsure how to handle an injury or illness, cal the Health Care Information Line for guidance.

TRICARE PRIME Member: If the Health Care Information Line nurse advises you to go to the emergency room, you, or someone calling on your behalf, should contact your Primary Care Manager within 24 hours.

Chaplain shares hopes

Chaplain (Capt.) David Baum
Ranger Training Brigade

This month my daughter will be one year old. Below are some hopes I have for her as she grows up.

reflections

I hope that she grows up to be a person who is not surprised when tragedies like Columbine, Rowanda and Auschwitz happen. The Bible says that in this world we will have trouble (John 16.33). Satan, a murderer, is the ruler of this world (John 16:11). This whole mess needs to be destroyed in a great fire (2Peter 3:7). Why should we be surprised when evil erupts occasionally? We are sitting on an active volcano of sin-infected hellishness. I hope my daughter grows up to recognize there is no status of "practicing" or "unpracticing" Christians. I hope she sees that Christianity is a relationship with God and not a philosophy to try to apply to life (John 14:6). You either know Jesus Christ or you do not. You do not "practice" knowing him or not knowing him.

I hope she grows up to believe that the most important thing in her life after her relationship with God is the church, the body of Jesus Christ (I Corinthians 12:27). I hope she feels betrayed when worship is dead and when preaching is irrelevant. I hope she grieves when the church fails to truly care that people are headed for hell.

I hope she is restless until every believer knows their spiritual gifts and is using them. I hope she yearns to have her life changed by meaningful relationships with Christians. I hope she never allows rank, money, a satisfying career or relationships to seduce her from loving the church.

I lied in my first paragraph. These are not just hopes for my daughter. They are hopes for me as much as for her. Can you pray they might be for you as well?

Trust is key to marriage

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Noted marriage counselor Earnie Larsen has this to say about trust, "The only issue there is in any relationship is trust. Our task is to grow, to become trustworthy so there is more trust in our relationship."

reflections

Marriages die because of no trust. One spouse does not trust the other or neither trusts each other. Communication? Forget about it!

When trust dies, communication dies with it. For too many couples doing what it takes to make the marriage work is not an option.

Instead they choose to get mad, scream, yell and intimidate. It's more of a game than a marriage, it's who can win this argument. Husband 3, wife 2.

Screaming, yelling and intimidation may be a part of a football game, but it has no place in a marriage where a couple is trying to build trust. When I talk about trust with married couples, most think about sexual fidelity. Trust in a marriage goes beyond that. Marital trust is where you really care about your spouse. Trust means proving your love to your spouse in caring, giving ways which count to him or her.

The first step in becoming trustworthy is to look at oneself and ask, "What is there about me that I need to change? What do I need to change in order to become a more trustworthy spouse?" Don't wait on your spouse to change. If each spouse will do this, there is no limit to where their relationship can go, and their love for each other can only grow. However, those who are not honest with themselves and continue to play games with their spouse will end up miserable and most likely in a divorce court.

Maybe you and your spouse need help with communication skills. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center offers couple communication classes. For more information, call the center at 545-2050. The Family Life Center is located in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

chapel notes

PWOC meet — The next meeting of the Protestant Women of the Chapel will be at Custer Terrace Chapel at 9:30 a.m. July 8. All ladies are invited to attend for Bible study, prayer, praise and fellowship.

Sunday School — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at Edward A. White School on 1st Division Road from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. There are classes for students two years old through adults. Everyone is invited. Child care for children younger than two, whose parents are teaching or attending Sunday School, is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel. If you need a ride to Sunday School, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Protestant Youth of the Chapel conducts meeting — Senior High Youth of the Chapel will not meet during the month of June. Beginning July 7, until school begins in the fall, they will meet on Wednesday evenings. For time and place, call Chaplain and Mrs. Dave Baum, who lead the group, at 685-2061. All senior high school students are invited.

Organist needed — The Fund Custodian is accepting applications for contracts as chapel organist. Qualified organists who are interested should contact Staff Sgt. Constance Jones in Room 512, Infantry Hall or call 545-4960.

The first known use of O.K. was in the New York New Era in 1840 as part of a name: The Democratic O.K. Club. O.K. was an abbreviation for Old Kinderhook, a nickname for future U.S. president Martin Van Buren. Kinderhook, New York was Van Buren's birth place.

Benning kicks off softball season

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The summer softball season is in full swing and more than 40 teams have taken to the bat in hopes of becoming this year's best.

The season officially began June 2 and units from around post will battle it out all summer long for a chance at the championship tournament slated for Aug. 23 through Sept. 2.

Teams are separated into four divisions consisting of the Kelley Hill League which has 15 teams, the 36th Engineer Group and Combined League with 10 teams, the Briant Wells League made up of 10 teams and the Sand Hill League with six teams.

At the end of the season which ever teams come out on top from each division will go on to play one another in the post championship tournament, said Carol Gearheart, Fort Benning sports coordinator.

According to Gearheart, games are played at 6 and 7 p.m. all week long on fields throughout post.

Those who want to catch Briant Wells action can find it Monday through Wednesday at Gowdy Field located on Ingersoll Avenue.

The 36th Engineer and Combined League take to Engineer Field located on Way Street Tuesday through Thursday.

Kelley Hill teams go head-to-head Monday through Thursday at Knappenberger Field on Marne Road, and the Sand Hill League plays Tuesday through Thursday at Bennett Field on Highway 280.

Gearheart mentioned that post softball games are great for anyone who wants to get out and enjoy themselves without having to pay a dime.

"It doesn't cost a thing," she said. "This is just something fun people can do with their spare time in the evening."

However, the greater the participation and support within the league, the better the sports office can plan for the following year, she said. A lot of fan support also helps boost the morale of the Soldiers and gives them another reason for coming out to play.

Ten-year softball veteran Angel Miranda, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said he comes out year after year because of a love for the game, but also fun and competition.

He said everyone comes out to enjoy themselves, and he added there's nothing personal about winning or losing, it's just about having fun.

Although it is only the third game into the season, he said his team plans to go all the way.

"We plan to take it all the way to the top," Miranda said. "We'll take care of business until that last out."

Miranda also said that having friends and family come out to see the games is a big motivator.

"When you look out at the bleachers and don't see anyone, it makes you feel like no one cares," Miranda said. "But when you look out there and you see your friends and family it's definitely a huge push."

Shooter earns national title

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Soldier who holds two world records is now able to say he is the best in the country. USAMU international rifle shooter Jason A. Parker won his first national championship June 16.

Although he had set two world records and won a World Cup and the Masters European Air Rifle Cup, he had never won the national championship.

Parker beat 92 other competitors to win the Gold Medal in the USA Shooting Air Rifle National Championships at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Complex in Atlanta, June 16. USA Shooting of 1 Olympic Plaza, Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

"It's nice because I've never won the national championships before," Parker said. "It's always nice to be on top. This gives me a lot of confidence for the upcoming matches and Olympic trials."

Parker has won five Gold Medals in Air Rifle Competition so far this year and is training to compete in the Atlanta World Cup July 1 and the 1999 Pan American Games in Winnipeg, Canada, July 23 to Aug. 8, where 5,000 athletes from the Western Hemisphere will compete against hundreds of shooters from dozens of other countries.

The Pan-Am Games, which is conducted every four years, is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and the Campeonato de Tiro des las Americas (CAT Games) — where shooters can win medals and set world records. The 1999 Pan-Am Games is also the last opportunity for nations to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

Parker recently triumphed over the world's best to win the Gold Medal in the Masters European Air Rifle Cup in Dortmund, Germany. The 24-year-old Soldier was one of eight elite rifle athletes invited to compete.

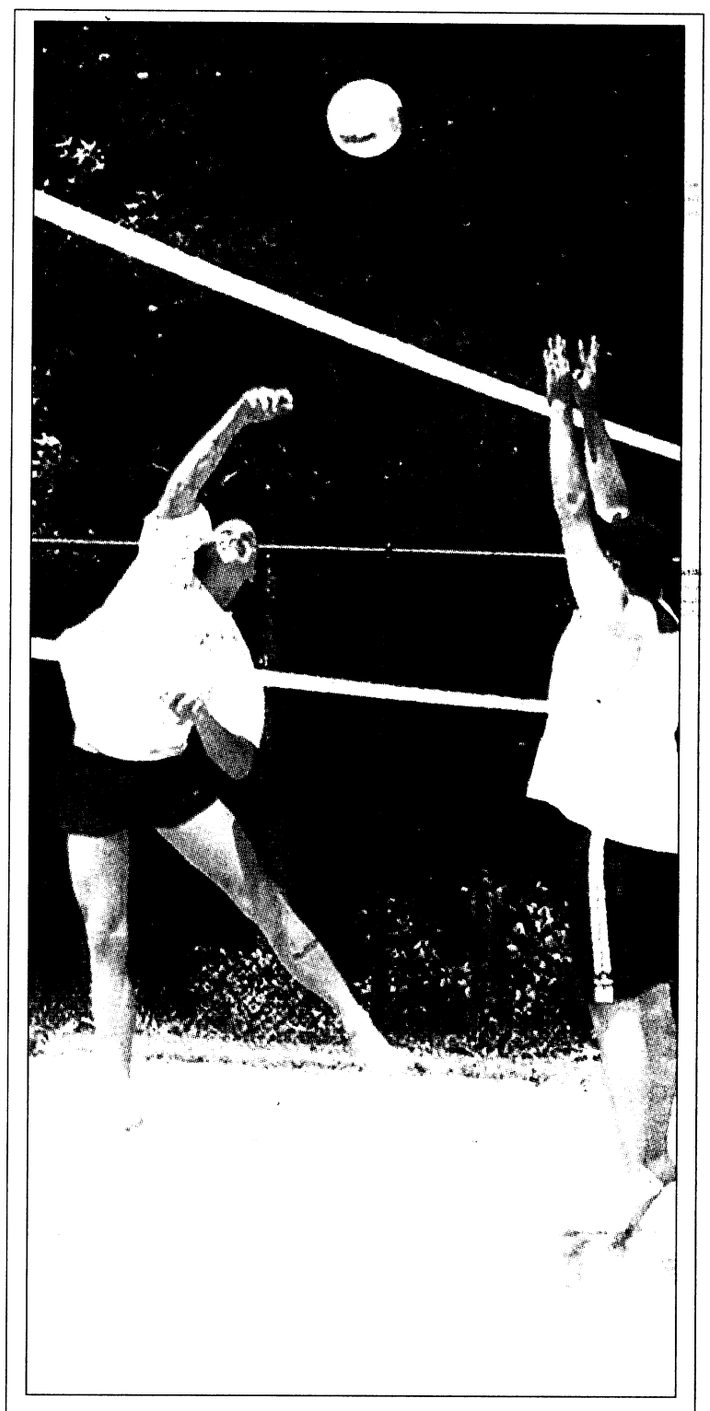
Parker broke two world records and won two World Cup Gold Medals and one Silver Medal in 1998, becoming the first American air rifle shooter to win three World Cup Medals in a single season. He was selected as the 1998 U.S. Olympic Committee Shooter of the Year and 1998 USA Shooting International Rifle Shooter of the Year.

"As the reigning world-record holder, he has an excellent chance of making the 2000 Olympic Team and he has a great military career ahead of him," said USAMU Deputy Commander Robert Aylward.

"I feel like I have a pretty good chance for the Olympics," Parker said. "I'm pretty confident in air rifle, and I'm working on my smallbore to bring it up to the same level."

Parker, who has been shooting with the USAMU for two years, had a great year in 1998. Not only was he a member of the U.S. World Championship Shooting Team, but he also earned his International Distinguished Badge and was featured in Sports Illustrated's Faces in the Crowd Column in June.

Raised in Omaha, Parker graduated from Bryan High School of Omaha in 1992. In 1996, he received a degree in psychology from Xavier University of Cincinnati, Ohio, where he won team Gold Medals in prone and air rifle, a Team Silver Medal and individual Bronze Medal in three-position at the 1994 Junior World Championships, and was the 1995 and 1994 Junior Olympic Air Rifle Champion.



Parker enlisted in the Army in January 1997. After completing Basic and Infantry Training, he was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in April 1997.

In 1997, he won individual and team Gold Medals at the Championship of the Americas in Buenos Aires and placed second in Air Rifle at the National Championships.

Surfin' the net

Competitors in the first annual Sand Volleyball Tournament battled it out at the net Saturday for the 1999 tournament title played at the Kelley Hill Rec Center. The all-day event set five teams in a round-robin competition that by day's end named the Scoobies as the top place finishers. The first-place foursome consisted of Roger Stanford, Al Siering, Sean Berg and Kevin Rojek.

The Fort Benning Sports Branch will conduct a Summer Basketball Tournament July 23-25 at Audie Murphy Fitness Center. A scratch meeting is scheduled for July 21 at 1:30 p.m. For more information, call Fred Woods at 545-1940.

Exercise key to keeping quality of life

Tammy Donaltoe
Z University

Another work day done. Your body is tired, but deep down you know you haven't received the exercise required for a healthy body and mind. Fight the couch's temptation, pick yourself up and get moving because "exercise is like buying life insurance," said Stephen Ames, physical education professor at Radford University.

"Exercise is probably the single, best thing we can do as we seek to improve the quality of our life and longevity. It is in some ways like the fountain of youth," he said. "To do it, dedication and discipline have to be built into our lifestyles regardless of what it takes." Easier said than done you say. That might not be so.

Making exercise convenient for you will make it work Ames said. Start by identifying your needs, wants and goals of exercise and create a routine accordingly. With more demanding schedules than ever, having a routine that fits your lifestyle makes or breaks physical wellness success.

The key is modifying rather than changing your lifestyle. "A simple chore such as walking the dog is just as beneficial for you as it is for you pet," Ames said. "We understand the exercise needs for our dog, but let our needs be forgotten." Or a stroll through the park during lunch with a co-worker may fit your bill. These are low cost exercises that also allow you to enjoy the fresh air and companions.

Benefits of exercise, among others, include longevity, feeling and looking better, flexibility (particularly important for those 45 years and up) and strengthening muscles and bones, according to Ames. It also makes ordinary household tasks and yard work easier, improves athletic ability and endurance to play with children in your life he said. Ultimately, exercise reduces your chances of injury in everyday activities.

"There are many psychological benefits of exercise. Having a goal and accomplishing it feeds upon itself for self-feelings improvement," Ames said "It invigorates and creates energy. You should feel recharged for the afternoon following a lunch hour activity and sleep better because your body is ready to rest."

Ames lengthens the indisputable benefit list with a perspective you may not have considered. These include enjoying the weather, natural scenery, company of a friend or escaping to your own world with a headset. Bundling these kinds of priorities with a complementary exercise outlet will make your routine less overwhelming and more importantly, enjoyable and effective.

"There is a strong psychological part to exercising. If you need a buddy then get one," Ames said. "Most of the time working out at home alone, doesn't work. Millions of unused bicycles and treadmills in America sitting in attics and basements testify to that."

Ames himself has been working out with a group of three to four for the last 20 years. He admits he is not someone who takes the initiative to work out alone.

Beyond the buddy system or lack thereof, finding time for exercise is an obstacle for many. With a recommendation of 20 to 30 minutes of exercise three to five times a week, Ames said even the most time-starved individual can have an attainable exercise regimen. In just 30 minutes, with brisk strides, you can walk two miles and improve your cardiovascular health, overall wellness and tone leg muscles.

"A brisk walk," Ames said, "is one that resembles your pace leaving work for vacation as opposed to your first day back from vacation."

If money concerns are holding you back from joining a gym, Ames said to view a gym membership as an investment that may be saving you in drug prescriptions and doctor visits later.

Ames also recommends incorporating general body toning or weight training three to four times a week if possible. "If you're disciplined and have a focused workout plan, you can do it in 20 minutes," he said. "It's best to work with a professional trainer. A routine can be done at home with sit-ups, push-ups and a variety of other exercises, but it often dies without the social setting." Each exercise for working the legs, abs and arms takes 30 to 40 seconds.

In addition to exercise, Ames reinforces that smoking is detrimental to one's health and a proper diet is essential for a fit body.

"Hit the fruits and vegetables and trade in fatty foods for carbohydrates," he said.

To learn more about wellness and exercise, contact your family physician, local hospital, library, YMCA or recreation program.

USAMU logs recent wins

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories recently. The following results are just some of their accomplishments:

- USA Shooting National Pistol Championships, Atlanta, June 15 to 17 — USAMU international pistol shooter Carl W. Trompeter II brought home the Bronze Medal in the Center Fire Pistol Match and finished fourth in the Rapid Fire Pistol Match.
- USA Shooting National Rifle Championships, June 16 — International rifle shooter Jason A. Parker beat 92 of the country's best shooters to win the Gold Medal in the Air Rifle Match, followed by Kenneth A. Johnson with the Silver Medal and Troy A. Bassham with the Bronze.
- USA Shooting National Trap Championship, June 16 — Shotgun shooter Matthew T. DePuydt beat 1996 Olympic Trap Silver Medalist Josh Lakatos, who took the Silver Medal, to win the Gold Medal in the Men's International Trap Match. Shawn C. Dulohery got the Bronze Medal after missing the Silver Medal by 1 point in the shoot-off. Richard R. Hadden won the Junior Trap Championship.

Shooter hits center, wins national title

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A Soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) has won his first national championship.

USAMU shotgun shooter Matthew T. DePuydt won the Gold Medal in the Trap Match of the USA Shooting National Championships at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Center in Atlanta, June 16. USA Shooting of 1 Olympic Plaza, Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

DePuydt beat 67 other competitors including 1996 Olympic Trap Silver Medalist Josh Lakatos, who came in second in this match. Lakatos got the Silver Medal after he edged out USAMU shooter Shawn C. Dulohery by 1 point in a sudden death shoot-off. USAMU shooter Richard R. Hadden also won the Junior National Trap Championship.

"It feels pretty good to win," DePuydt said, "especially after I was behind the first two days. The leader didn't do well on the last day but I was consistent and got the lead in the finals. This win helps me a lot with my overall confidence but I can't get overconfident."

Earlier this year, DePuydt won a Silver Medal in the Pan American Games Selection Trap Match and was selected to the 1999 U.S. World Shotgun Championship Team. DePuydt, who began shooting in 1990, is now training for the World Championships to be conducted in Finland July 2-11, then he will compete in the Interservice Championships in August.

He was selected to the 1998 U.S. World Cup Team and was the Double Trap Northeast Regional Champion. He took second in the Northeast Regional Trap Championships that year.

DePuydt also competed as a member of the World Championship Junior Double Trap Team and was named to the U.S. Team that competed at the Championships of the Americas in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1997.

He won the Bronze Medal in the World Shotgun Championships Junior Trap Match in 1997 and was a member of the Silver Medal winning U.S. Junior Trap Team. He was also a U.S. World Cup Team member in 1997.

DePuydt was a 1995 Junior Olympic, a National Development Shotgun Team member, a four-time Amateur Trap Association All-American and a five-time Michigan All-State Team member.

Raised in Houghton, Mich., DePuydt graduated from Houghton High School in 1995. He enlisted in the Army in August 1995.

After he graduated with honors from Basic and Infantry Training, he was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in December 1995.

"He's a fine young shooter and will go far," said USAMU Shotgun Team Coach Burl Branham.

Website Provides Free Hospital Ratings

(NAPSA)-A new website can help people get the best possible care, by providing objective performance ratings of virtually every hospital in the United States.

"This will be the first opportunity consumers have had to acquire free, objective data on which hospitals are really the best for specific procedures and diagnoses," said Sarah Loughran, vice president of Healthcare Report Cards, Inc. (HRCI).

The Web site, HealthCareReport Cards.com, is a one-of-a-kind Internet service that rates hospitals the way many newspapers rate movies, on a five-star system. Top-rated hospitals get five stars, with four stars meaning "very good." Three stars equals an average rating, two stars are given for below average care, and one star signifies poor performance.

This information can be quite valuable to consumers, referring physicians and independent, third-party healthcare industries who have long sought an accurate and objective method to compare hospitals and their quality of care. This service provides a means of comparison in an easy-to-understand format.

"It is common knowledge that some hospitals care for a larger number of patients who are more seriously ill than do other hospitals," said Kevin J. Hicks, executive vice president of HRCI. "As a result, comparing raw data is like comparing apples and bananas. Our rating system uses a proprietary model to equalize the severity of illness data for almost every hospital in the country."

The rankings reflect not only the quality of care delivered by a hospital's staff, but also the quality of care given by the physicians involved in the relevant patient cases.

Consumers who access the website will see a series of self-explanatory prompts to help them find the data for the hospitals in the state and city they want to view. For more information, or to find a specific hospital's rating, you can visit the website at www.HealthCare Report Cards.com.

Our Unsung Heroes And Heroines

Cardiologists: The Heart Of The Matter

(NAPSA)-Cardiologists are helping us to live longer and better lives. These medical specialists are making immense progress in the fight against heart disease, which kills more than 700,000 Americans each year.

However, according to experts at Siemens Medical Systems, cardiology is facing the same problems that other medical disciplines have addressed in the past few years: rising pressure to contain costs, falling subsidies at teaching hospitals, increased competition, rising influence of managed care on medication decisions, and declining reimbursements.

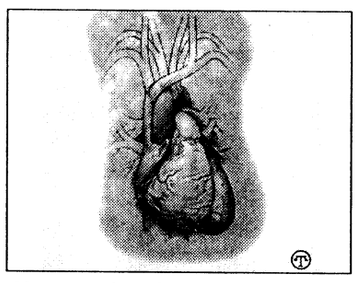
In order to address this trend, cardiologists must do more and do it more efficiently. Fortunately, new technologies are leading the way. Virtually every new imaging system offers faster patient throughput, as well as high-resolution images.

Recent advances in cardiac networking have brought unprecedented efficiency to everything from diagnosis to inventory control.

One of the newest technologies with the potential to diagnose heart disease is Calcium Scoring. This non-invasive procedure scans the heart to determine the amount of calcium deposited within plaques in the coronary arteries.

Calcium deposits in the coronary arteries-the arteries that deliver blood to the heart-can be a prime indicator of heart-disease risk.

Calcium buildup causes a narrowing of the blood vessels which can lead to heart attacks and other cardiac problems.



Aiding the physician in diagnosing such potential risk early on are devices such as the Somatom Plus 4 CT scanner by Siemens Medical Systems, which can indicate the approximate amount of calcium deposits in half a second-literally within beats.

With the help of an ECG unit, the machine knows exactly when the heart is in its resting phase, triggering the scan.

This diagnostic method may soon become the gold standard in cardiac imaging because it provides a measure of cardiac calcification and costs so much less than previously used Electron Beam devices.

If you think you are at risk for heart disease, it may pay to discuss this procedure with your doctor.

To learn more about the latest cardiac technology, visit the website at www.siemens.de/med or call 732-321-3277.

New technology that scans calcium deposits on the heart may help many people live longer, healthier lives.

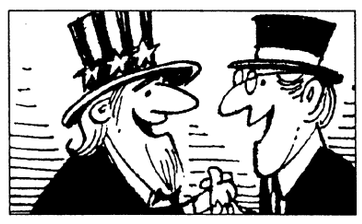
Putting The 'Assistance' Back Into Directory Assistance

(NAPSA)-It used to be that directory assistance was simple: Pick up the phone, dial a few numbers and talk with a friendly operator who would get you the number you were looking for.

But these days, it's a whole new ball game and consumers are confused with the wide variety of choices available for directory assistance. Is it a local listing or long distance? And with all these new area codes, how am I supposed to know? And what if I don't know the city or correct spelling, then what service should I use?

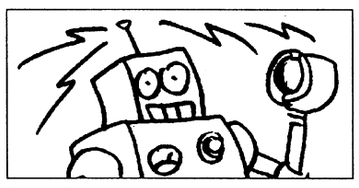
Problems can also arise if the caller needs assistance, and there isn't a person on the other end to help. Fortunately, despite a growing trend toward computerization, there are still some services that give consumers the opportunity to speak with "live" agents who will do all they can to locate the right listing.

With a service like AT&T's "00" INFOSM national directory assistance service, you don't need to know the city or correct spelling-just a general location. "00" INFO uses friendly agents whose sole job is to help consumers find the listing they're looking for. AT&T customers can simply dial "0-0" from home.



"00" INFO is a smart choice for consumers who are looking to track down long-lost friends, or the number of restaurants or yellow page business listings all across the U.S., using only minimal information.

But most of all, customers love the service because of the "personal touch" only real people can provide.



So remember, the next time you need a listing whether its local, long distance or yellow pages-and aren't sure of the name, the city or the spelling, try using a service like AT&T's "00" INFO and see how helpful a real person can be.

Believe it or not, there are still directory assistance services that use live agents-like AT&T's "00" INFO.

Safety And Air Bags

(NAPSA)-More and more people are getting on the road to safety when it comes to seat belts and airbags.

Airbags save lives, but they need to be used in conjunction with seat belts, safety experts say. Here are other safety tips to remember, according to the American Coalition for Traffic Safety:

- Never put a rear-facing infant restraint in the front seat of a vehicle with a front passenger airbag. The child could get hurt when the airbag deploys.
- Restrain children 12 and under in the back seat of the car.
- There should be 10 inches between the center of a driver's breastbone and the steering wheel.
- While airbags can be used just once, safety belts can protect occupants during subsequent collisions. In an accident, you may hit more than one object.

A free brochure about airbag safety is available from Autoliv Inc., which develops and manufactures airbags, seat belts, safety electronics and other safety devices, by writing to: Autoliv, c/o Investor Relations, 1320 Pacific Dr., Auburn Hills, MI 48326.

Technology In Our Lives

New Imaging Technology Plays A Starring Role In Digital Cameras

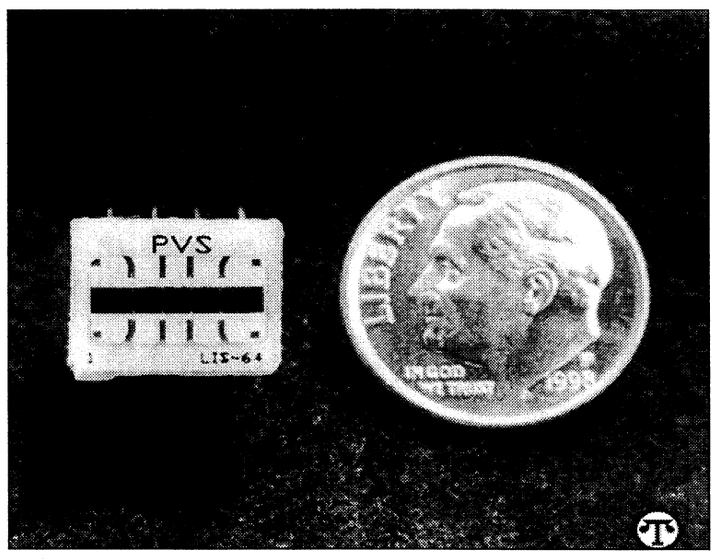
(NAPSA)-Picture this: Now there are new ways to improve the images taken from digital cameras.

A recent breakthrough in Complementary Metal Oxide Semiconductor (CMOS) imaging not only gives the camera more flexibility, but also results in a lower manufacturing cost, as compared to using older Charge-Coupled Device (CCD) technology.

Imagers are a digital camera's equivalent to photographic film. CCD and CMOS imagers are the "eye" of the camera, creating a picture from the activation of thousands of light sensing cells, or pixels.

Currently, CCD imagers are more frequently used. However, CCDs are only made in a few specialized factories and are apparently very expensive to produce. They also need a whole host of supporting circuitry in order to function, which can dramatically increase the overall cost of the system.

In comparison, CMOS imagers can be mass-produced in the same factories that turn out ordinary personal computer (PC) chips, resulting in low manufacturing costs. CMOS chips are also capable of handling multiple functions, do not need support chips and use less power than CCDs.



Until now, the use of CMOS imaging chips has been limited. One of the main design flaws in recent CMOS technology has been the presence of "Fixed Pattern Noise" (FPN), the industry's term for dots and scratches on images. The resulting video appears as if you are looking through a dirty window. The quality of CMOS pictures has therefore been inferior to that of images produced by CCDs, according to Photon Vision Systems (PVS), which recently announced the new imaging breakthrough.

The revolutionary Active Column Sensor (ACS) technology developed by PVS solves this problem. In ACS technology, a unity gain amplifier has been utilized for each pixel. The signal generated at the pixel site remains intact and full strength. With each pixel part of a unity gain amplifier, FPN is eliminated.

The new PVS designed CMOS imagers are, in effect, a single chip camera. This drastically reduces size and power requirements and enables video to go beyond where pricing, size and power have been limitations in the past.

Vision can now be added to products that would have found it too costly or too large in the past. In addition, entirely new products can be created, such as cellular phones which transmit the caller's image or automatic-teller machines that verify identity by scanning the user's fingerprints.

Cost is a huge concern for those who hope to utilize this technology, according to PVS. The new CMOS chips from PVS cost less than $3 each, in contrast to comparable CCD technology which can cost between $25 and $400 each. PVS CMOS technology provides CMOS value with CCD quality.

"We rejected source follower per pixel or what many are calling Active Pixel Sensor (APS) technology 12 years ago, and struggled until we found a simpler, more elegant solution," said Jeffrey Zarnowski, co-founder of PVS LLC.

Surmising the results of the breakthrough, Matthew Pace, co-founder of PVS LLC, said, "Following the trend of the information revolution, vision is the next logical step in the progression. Soon you won't need to type in a password; your computer will recognize your face. Vision in everyday products will become as commonplace as the remote control, and less expensive, thanks to PVS technology."

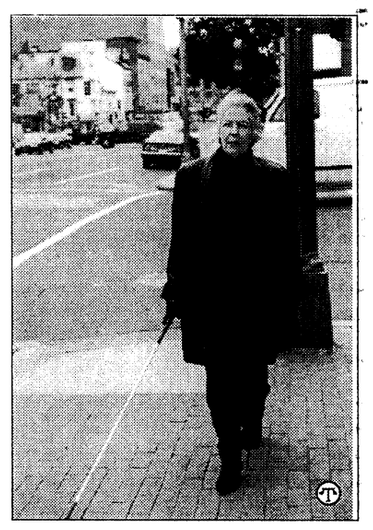
Engineers Pace and Zarnowski formed Photon Vision Systems LLC in 1997. In 1986, they began working together in the research and development of semiconductor electronics at General Electric. They have been successfully designing and producing CMOS sensors since 1990. In addition to developing Active Column Sensor technology, Zarnowski and Pace have filed patents for the world's smallest pixel (2 microns) and the world's fastest video bus (90 MegaHertz), that will allow for a very low cost single port high-end HDTV camera on a chip.

What To Do When You Meet Someone Who Is Blind

(NAPSA)-Just up the street, you notice a woman with a long, white cane standing at a busy intersection. Do you know how to offer assistance?

The boss is showing the company's newest employee around the office. You notice he's being led by a guide dog. Should you pet the dog or not?

With these questions in mind, here are a few helpful tips from the Blinded Veterans Association to use as a guide when you meet a person who is blind.



• Feel free to offer assistance. However, don't become discouraged by a "No, thank you." Sometimes assistance is disorienting and unnecessary.

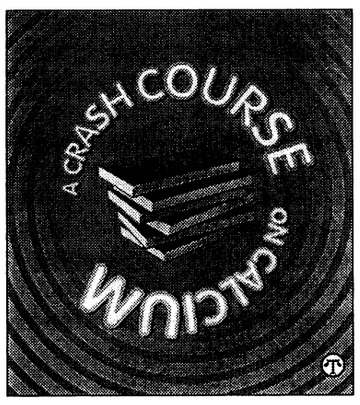
• If your gesture of assistance is accepted, simply offer the person your arm. He or she will grab your arm above the elbow. Walk ahead of the person you're leading and let him or her follow you.

• Immediately greet persons who are blind when they enter a room. This lets them know you're present and ready to assist. If you must leave the room, tell the blind person first. This will eliminate the embarrassing occasion of a person who is blind carrying on a conversation with someone who has already left the room.

• When you address a person who is blind, identify yourself immediately so there's no mystery as to who you are. Also, speak in a natural manner. Don't speak loudly or slowly unless the person also has a hearing impairment.

• No matter how tempting it is, never pet or feed a guide dog. A guide dog is a working animal and is highly trained to safely lead its master. Distracting the dog from this task can prove highly dangerous for both the dog and the person the dog is guiding.

When addressing someone who is blind, identify yourself first so the other person knows who you are.



• Feel free to use words that refer to vision during your conversation with persons who are blind. Words such as "look," "see," "read," and "watch TV" are part of our day-to-day vocabularies.

These tips come from the Blinded Veterans Association (BVA), a nonprofit organization established to promote the welfare of America's blinded veterans. Through donations, BVA helps link veterans to the benefits, services and training they've earned through military service.

More information about BVA is available by writing to: Blinded Veterans Association, 477 H Street, Northwest, Washington, D.C. 20001-2694. You can also call toll-free at 800-669-7079. Or visit BVA's website at www.bva.org.

New Study Shows Milk Mustache Celebrities In The Classroom Get Teens To "Bone Up"

(NAPSA)-A new study shows a classroom campaign is beginning to break through to teenagers who are not drinking their milk. In the battle of the beverages, milk and its nine essential nutrients are being left behind as teens opt for nutrient-limited soft drinks. As teens have doubled or tripled their consumption of soft drinks, they have cut their consumption of milk by more than 40 percent. But now, a milk-mustache packed classroom lesson plan is helping to reverse this trend.

After watching and learning the "A Crash Course on Calcium" video and lesson plan, the number of teens who reported drinking milk every day increased by 11 percent, while the number of teens who reported drinking soft drinks every day dropped. In addition, the number of teens who know how much calcium they need in their daily diets increased fourfold. These numbers are especially important because the teen years offer an important opportunity to build bone mass, and calcium is critical.

Soda's Stranglehold

If teens don't get enough calcium during the teen years, they cannot "catch up" down the road. During the teen years, boys and girls will lay down almost half of the bone that they will develop in a lifetime, so there is a critical window of opportunity. According to a report from the Center for Science in the Public Interest, teenage boys consume an average of two and a half cans of soda per day, while teenage girls drink an average of two cans per day, statistics which suggest many teens may be on their way to a potential bone breakdown.

Teen Calcium Crisis

The majority of American teens are not getting enough calcium in their diets. Nearly nine out of ten teenage girls and almost seven out of ten teenage boys fall short of meeting their daily calcium goal. The National Academy of Sciences has set the recommendation of calcium for teens at 1,300 mg-the equivalent of at least four 8-ounce glasses of milk a day. Milk helps provide growing teens the calcium they need to help reduce the risk of stress fractures now and the bone disease osteoporosis later in life.

"Calcium is a crucial nutrient for teens to get in their bone-building years, especially since 15 percent of adult height is added during the teenage years, says Bess Dawson-Hughes, M.D., professor of medicine and chief of the Calcium and Bone Metabolism Laboratory at the USDA Human Nutrition and Research Center on Aging at Tufts University.

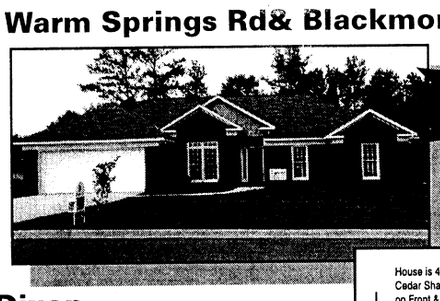
Tips For Helping Teens Become Calcium-Conscious

There are several things parents and teachers can do to help bring these issues home to kids:

• Teachers can call their local dairy council for a free copy of "A Crash Course on Calcium."

• Parents can keep single-serve containers on hand for the family.

• Offer chocolate milk since it has just as many nutrients as unflavored milk.



• Teens can make smoothies, soups and hot cocoa with milk to "sneak" it in all day long.

The "A Crash Course on Calcium" program includes an MTV-style educational video and lesson plan and is free to educators, who can obtain a copy by calling 1-800-WHY-MILK or by visiting the community service section of participating Blockbuster Video stores. For other ideas on how to add more milk into teenage diets, log onto the milk Web site at www.whymilk.com.

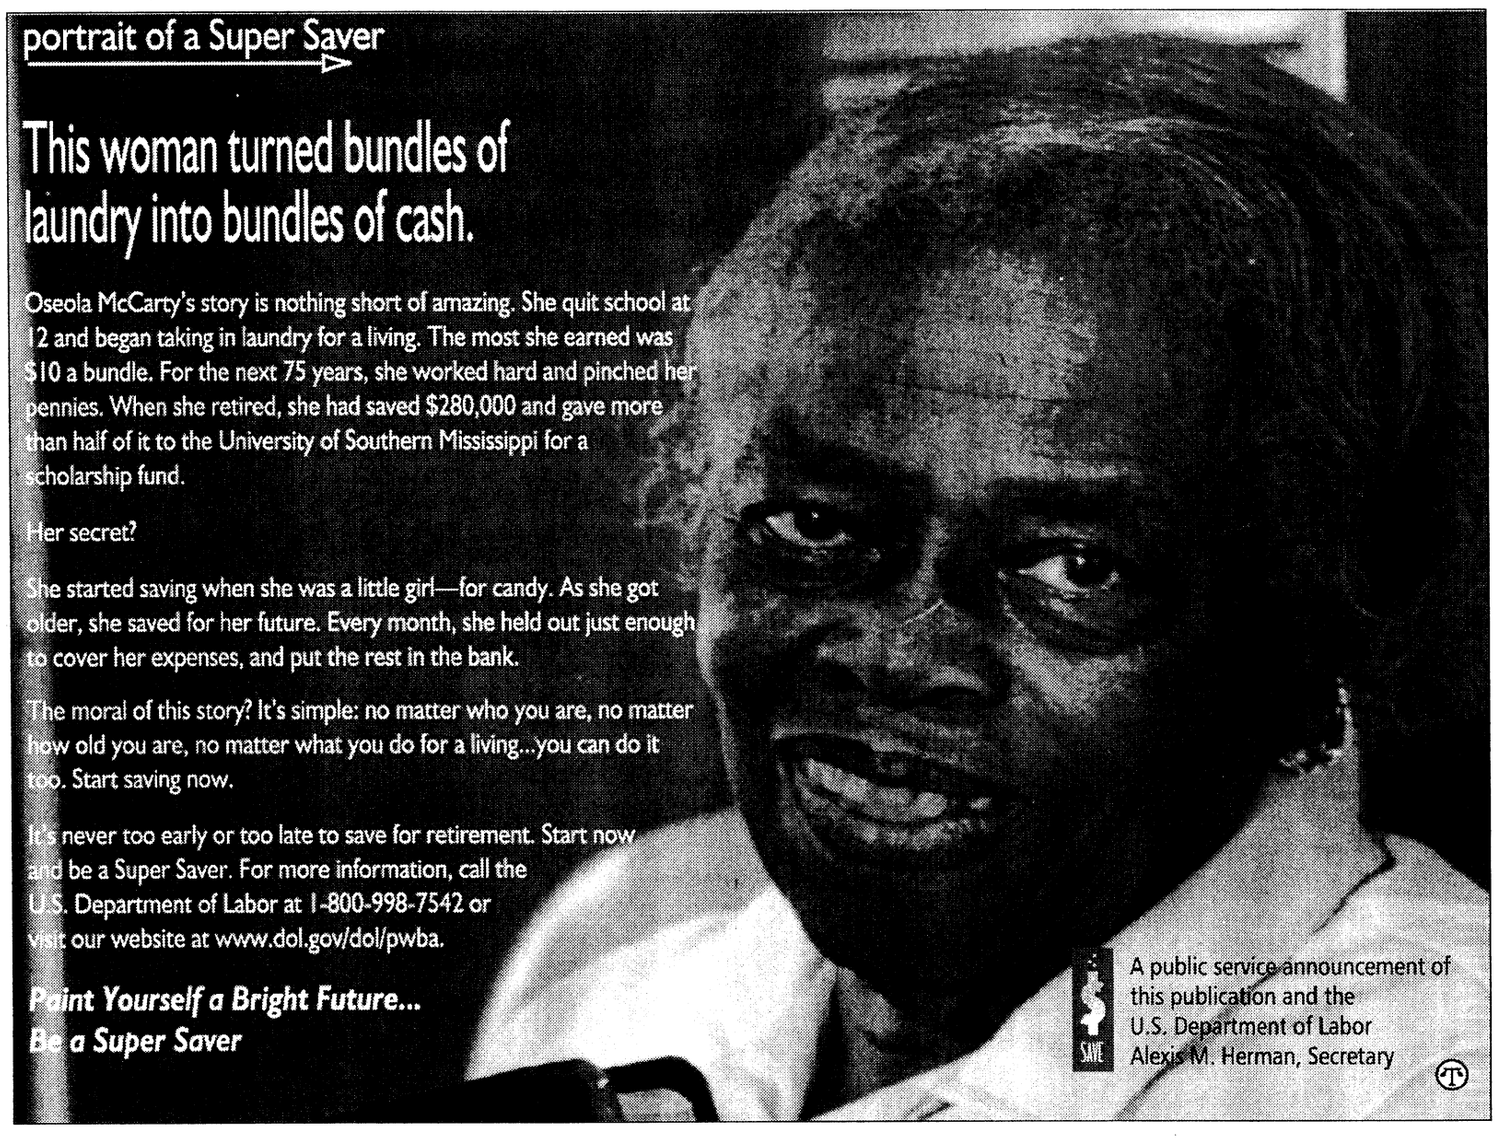
Entertaining 101

(NAPSA)-We all know people who seem to entertain effortlessly. They think nothing of inviting a crowd, spur of the moment, for drinks and hearty finger food or casual dinner-never seem harried or overwhelmed.



However enviable, that kind of relaxed capability is a talent many of us don't share. But with a bit of advance planning, just about anyone can be a successful host...one secret is the judicious use of cheese, a generally popular "convenience" food, to dress up whatever you have on hand.

Mellow, nutty, deliciously creamy classic Jarlsberg, for example-as well as the low fat version, Jarlsberg Lite, which retains most of that rich flavor and smooth texture, melts beautifully too-can turn a simple green salad into a treat. Cut French or Italian bread, sprinkle with garlic and herbs, top pieces with cheese and briefly broil or grill.

Bake leftover ham, chicken or roast beef with a golden "crown," surround it with lots of parsley and cherry tomatoes for an almost instant entree. Pasta is always a quick, reliable side dish...sauce it with a blend of butter and good quality olive oil, season to taste (black pepper adds zip) and toss in cubes of Jarlsberg-heat will make cheese delectably soft.

Use your ingenuity to create simple hors d'oeuvres and snacks galore-one easy trick (healthy too), is wrapping Jarlsberg slices around carrot sticks or other raw vegetables. Both classic and Lite versions complement a variety of foods so, even if you're not Martha Stewart, party giving can be fun rather than scary.

Pointers For Parents

Realistic Attitudes Toward Teen Pregnancy

(NAPSA)-Although strides have been taken in preventing teen pregnancy, California still leads the nation in teen pregnancies.

A new statewide survey about sexuality education and teen pregnancy shows Californians believe that one of the most effective methods for addressing teen pregnancy is to encourage parent-child discussions.

What Can Be Done

Studies show that children can benefit from learning from their parents and other significant family members about family values and core expectations for their sexual and health behaviors.

Here are some suggestions from health experts that can help parents:

- Learn the facts. Many communities offer training or assistance to parents who want to become more informed on the issues. The more educated you are, the better you can help your children make informed decisions.
- Talk with your children early and often. Provide accurate information and education about reproductive health and safety. Encourage them to ask questions; respond with open, honest answers.
- Become informed about what your child or the children in your community are learning in the classroom about sex. Read the materials, view the movies. Don't assume that they are getting all the information they need in school.
- Create an open forum in your family where everyone can freely discuss their opinions. Give your children the opportunity to understand where you stand on issues of sex, relationships and pregnancy.
- Become involved in your children's lives; get to know their boyfriend or girlfriend; participate in school activities. Show that you care what they do and care about what they care about.
- Foster and support responsible decision-making skills. Teach children your values and beliefs. Teens understand their families' values and consider them in developing their own values.

"Ideally children should grow up in an environment where they can develop healthy adolescent sexuality," said Gary Yates, President and CEO of The California Wellness Foundation, which funds a statewide teen pregnancy prevention initiative. "This means they will have the information, self-esteem, role modeling and family support they need to delay becoming sexually active; as well as to avoid pregnancy if they do become sexually active. And all teens, especially those living in poverty, need clear options to early parenting."

To learn more about ways to help prevent teen pregnancy in your community, visit the website at www.letsgetreal.org.

GET REAL! ABOUT TEEN PREGNANCY

A new statewide public education campaign takes a realistic approach to teen pregnancy.

The "Get Real about Teen Pregnancy" public education campaign is funded by a grant from The California Wellness Foundation.

A portion of this information was compiled from the following sources: National Campaign to Prevent Teen Pregnancy, "Ten Tips for Parents to Help Their Children Avoid Teen Pregnancy" and the 1997 Gallagher Lecture, Journal of Adolescent Health, 1998; 22:453-459.

Campaign To Combat Hunger

(NAPSA)-It can happen to anyone. Whether the cause is illness or the unexpected loss of a job, a family may find it hard to pay for food. Hopefully, we won't have to know that hardship, but for those of us that want to help, there is great news. NetGrocer, the nation's leading on-line grocery supercenter, and Second Harvest, the nation's largest charitable hunger-relief organization, have joined forces in a new campaign aimed at fighting hunger. Just as netgrocer.com makes it easy to send care packages to grandparents in Florida or kids away at college, the company now makes it possible to send food directly to a food bank.

A new campaign aimed at fighting hunger is also a practical approach to charitable giving.

The food donation campaign is called "Click to Give," and because of it, every "connected" American will be able to donate food from the comfort of their home or office 24 hours a day. The tax-deductible donation is sent directly to Second Harvest.

How It Works

The "Click to Give" program is a practical approach to charitable giving. According to Fred Horowitz, President and CEO of NetGrocer, whether you want to donate a few items every week or make one or two large donations annually, this program delivers convenience-no errands to run, phone calls to make or checks to write. Just log on www.netgrocer.com and NetGrocer does the rest.

The"Click to Give" program offers easy-to-select packages (between $50 and $375) that feed individuals or families of two, four or six for a day, a week or a month. There are also three baby packages to choose from ($15 to $25). In addition to these food packages, NetGrocer will also have packages that include products for daily living, such as personal care products, medicines and cleaning supplies.

For every donation order placed by customers as part of the "Click to Give" campaign, NetGrocer will donate an additional $5 in product to Second Harvest. Customers participating in the campaign will also receive five percent off their next NetGrocer order.

Comprised of nearly 200 regional food banks that service 50,000 charitable agencies such as soup kitchens, food pantries and Kid Cafes, Second Harvest distributes over one billion pounds of donated food and grocery products to more than 26 million hungry Americans each year.

More information about the program is available by visiting www.netgrocer.com or www.secondharvest.org.

RETIREMENT PLANNING IDEAS Tips To Help You

Understanding Roth IRAs

(NAPSA)-If you are like most American adults, you've heard of the Roth IRA-a retirement savings vehicle. However, a recent Alliance Capital/Harris poll showed that only a small percent of Americans actually opened one in 1998.

Roth IRAs are a great way to save for retirement. Although contributions to a Roth IRA are made on an after-tax basis, qualified distributions are tax-free. That is, Roth IRA holders don't pay taxes on the earnings which accumulate in their account, leading to increased savings at retirement.

Those with Modified Adjusted Gross Income (MAGI) of $100,000 or less may convert their traditional IRA to a Roth IRA. Those who are eligible should speak with their financial advisor or accountant to determine if a conversion makes sense.

"Converting a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA can be well worth the effort for many Americans," said Robert Errico, president of Alliance Fund Distributors (the mutual fund division of Alliance Capital). "A financial advisor can analyze your specific financial situation and walk you through the conversion process if it makes sense to you."

For more information on saving for retirement, you can call Alliance Capital-The Investment Professional's Choice at (800) 227-4618; or visit the firm's World Wide Web site at www.alliance capital.com.

Car Care Tips For The Driving Season

(NAPSA)-Summer is traditionally the heaviest driving season. When drivers take to the road they are often unaware that their vehicles are being exposed to environmental hazards such as the sun, acid rain, dirt, tree sap, tar, air pollution and bird droppings, all which can wreck havoc on a car's exterior. Because these forces of nature are often unavoidable it is important to wash and wax your car on a regular basis to help protect and maintain the exterior's natural brilliance.

Turtle Wax, Inc., the world's leader in car care, suggests the following for summer car care:

• Before waxing, wash your car thoroughly. Scrub off dirt and road grime with a car wash concentrate such as Turtle Wax Zip Wax®. Never use dish washing detergent or household cleaners to wash your car; they can strip wax and dull your car's finish.

• Waxing helps protect a car's finish. Try Turtle Wax Express Shine™ Liquid Car Wax. Simply wipe on and wipe dry. It dries clear and won't leave deposits on your car's surfaces or trim, providing super shine and protection in twenty minutes or less.

• Tires also demand attention. They take the toughest beating and are the hardest surfaces on a car to keep clean. Use Turtle Wax. Tire Wax™, to get clean well dressed tires. Proper tire care can help reduce sidewall cracking caused by aging and exposure to extreme weather conditions.

For more car care tips, inside and out, visit the Turtle Wax® Car Care web site at www.turtlewax.com.

MPs continue operating check points

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The attacks on the foreign embassies abroad nearly one year ago brought the threat of terrorism too close to home for millions of Americans. The threat of being a target of violence was heralded in headlines across the globe, and when it did, Fort Benning's Military Police were prompted to begin protection measures to ensure the safety of the Army's most valuable asset — Soldiers.

Although some experts said the threat factor has decreased exponentially in the past few months, the protection efforts to include roving traffic check points manned by Soldiers from the 988th Military Police Company are still in full swing here.

"The check points give individuals a greater sense of military police presence on post," said 1st Lt. Benjamin E. Ratterree, chief of law enforcement operations, during a checkpoint Tuesday. "We are out there and our presence hopefully will do more than deter individuals who want to come on post and do any type of illegal activity."

Hundreds of people have faced the check points since their inception 11 months ago, but according to the Soldiers who man the points day in and day out, there have not been any incidents as of yet.

"I haven't seen anything out of the ordinary really," said Pfc. John Carmichael as he smiled and recalled a couple of humorous stories. "There haven't been any real problems that I have seen since we began this project. Everyone generally seems pretty happy we are out here doing our job."

Carmichael did note that while there haven't been any direct halts of terrorism or pointed violence, there have been numerous cases in which the road blocks halted an impaired driver.

"We ran across a couple of drunk drivers during the check points and took them off the road," he said. "It is just an added benefit of having us out at the check points."

Carmichael said the biggest thing he and the rest of the company are looking for is a post vehicle registration sticker.

"If the vehicle doesn't have one (post registration sticker) then it is up to us to determine why he or she should be on post," he said. "If they have business on post and their plates, insurance and registration is up to date, then there is no problem."

"These check points aren't designed to inconvenience anyone," Ratterree said. "We are just stopping people who aren't abiding by post policies and displaying a post registration sticker."

According to Ratterree, all vehicles on post should register their vehicles within 10 days after purchase to ensure quick work of the check points around post. He also noted that if registration is unavailable within those 10 days, drivers should still visit the office to obtain a temporary tag to use until the registration is obtainable.

Some changes due in Army wear

Tonya Johnson
Army News Service

Army uniforms will have upcoming changes, and Soldiers will need to replace older uniforms in the future.

There is a new shade in the Army green uniform, in which AG 489 replaces AG 344. "It's a richer, darker green, and it gives the uniform a better appearance," said Master Sgt. Debra Wylie, Uniform Policy Officer for the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

The AG 344 shade will not be allowed for wear after Sept. 30, 1999. Female soldiers are required to have one Class A jacket, two skirts and two slacks of the new uniform, and male Soldiers should have one Class A jacket and two trousers. According to Wylie, the uniform for females will cost $175 and female officers must pay $4.70 extra for the braid conversion kit for their uniform. The uniform will cost enlisted men $165, and male officers $175. Soldiers need to know that the AG 344 and AG 489 can not be mixed and matched.

Wylie noted that the yearly clothing allowance, in which enlisted males received $334.80 and enlisted females received $421.20 for 1999, could help pay for the uniforms or parts of the uniforms that need to be replaced.

As far as Class B uniform changes, there were new changes made in shirts, skirts and slacks for female Soldiers. Female Soldiers can now choose between two shirt styles, a mandatory tuck in shirt, which costs $9.65, and a new overblouse (optional), which costs around $15. Old overblouses cannot be worn after Sept. 30, 1999. The long sleeve version of the tuck-in shirt costs $14.45, according to Wylie.

"The tuck-in shirt is long enough so that the shirt doesn't come out of their pants. The overblouse is designed so that the shirt doesn't come up when a female raises her arm," said Wylie.

Wylie also mentioned that females are required by Oct.1,1999 to purchase a new wrap around neck tab with hook and pile fastener.

New skirts have been designed for wear, making the former A-line skirt unauthorized after Sept. 30, 2002. Wylie is pleased by the change and said, "I've been in the Army for 19 years, and it's the first change I've seen in the skirts and the trousers."

The new skirt has a back zipper, and a kick pleat, which offers a stylish design, yet allows for easier movement. The skirt also has a non-slip waist band, and has two darts on the front and back of the skirt.

"We received good feedback on the skirt. They (female Soldiers) especially liked the kick pleat. In addition, the females, through surveys, wanted the skirts more tapered like the female skirts in the Marines," said Wylie. The new skirt will cost $24.25.

Female Soldiers will also see a change in their slacks. "The new slacks allow for easier alterations and look more tailored," said Wylie. The new slacks, which cost $28.60, will have belt loops, unlike the previous slacks. A one-inch black web belt with a one-eighth inch yellow brass buckle must be worn with the slacks. The belt must be worn so that the tipped end is to the female's right, which is the opposite of the male's belt on their pants. The slacks, which have a mandatory purchase date of Oct. 1, 2002, can be worn without a blouse if the Soldier is wearing a long or short sleeve overblouse.

"We're able to offer female Soldiers more sizes, especially trousers in

Sergeants major take on Airborne training

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Sgt. Maj. Edmond Crivello and West Point Cadet Jennifer Gurski share a laugh before jumping Monday.

It is 6 a.m. as 40 year-old Sgt. Maj. Anthony Johnson dives into the saw dust pit and executes a proper parachute landing fall.

"Satisfactory," barks the looming Airborne instructor, and Johnson recovers. He brushes off the sawdust, and his hands shake. He knows in a couple of hours he will be making the first of five qualifying parachute jumps. He will soon be making that leap of faith he had only dreamed of before.

Johnson, along with two other sergeants major, have taken to the sawdust pits, the 34-foot towers and an array of other training devices used in Airborne training to earn their wings after a combined service stint that spans more than 60 years.

"This isn't for me," Johnson said early Monday afternoon as he waited to make his first jump. "This is for all of my enlisted men. I have been in the Army 22 years, and there is no way I would do this for a personal reason. This is to motivate all of my men."

That motivation began however long before Johnson and his top enlisted counterparts ever left the ground.

"I have seen these sergeants major walking up to Airborne and encouraging them when the Soldiers are really struggling during a training event or nearing that unsatisfactory grade throughout the course," said Capt. Kent Strader, Co. C, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment. "They are always willing to give these kids advice, maybe not so much on the training aspect, but on attitude and motivation."

While Johnson continued to motivate the troops throughout the three-week course, he was not alone in his efforts. Fort Bragg-bound Sgt. Maj. George Pena and Sgt. Maj. Edmond Crivello, Jr., 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, battalion

For most of us the Fourth of July means fireworks, picnics and a long weekend — the beginning of two hot months filled with trips to the beach, watermelon and late nights sitting outside watching the stars. In the midst of all the relaxing and family time, we need to remember that the main event is a birthday party. This year, there will be 223 candles on our nation's cake.

American elementary school students learn that on July 4, 1776, our forefathers signed the Declaration of Independence and the USA was born. Her civilization was founded on progressive ideas of democracy and self-government. Her citizenry was made up of immigrants fleeing persecution or looking for opportunity. Her land was rich in natural resources.

This Fourth of July, as the millennium quickly approaches, there are questions that we may all consider. Upon which ideals is our nation currently operating? Who are America's citizens now? How are we using the natural wonders of this great country today? Are we, as a society, still upholding the principles our founding fathers fought to install?

Two hundred twenty three years is a long time. There have been many bumps in the road to reach the end of this century. America has endured violence not only in the form of civil and world wars but in our streets and in our schools. She has watched friends become enemies and enemies friends, witnessed the eradication of old diseases and the infiltration of new. There have been times of great economic strength and moments of terrible financial hardship.

But through it all, America has remained steadfast and true to the spirit of democracy. There are more nations now than at any other point in history and many of those nations are choosing democratic governments. The U.S. has emerged from the cold war into a unipolar world with all the privileges and responsibilities of a hegemonic power. The nation no longer fights for recognition or survival but exerts leadership in the struggle for humanity.

The U.S. has also become a legitimate melting pot filled with a variety of cultures and ethnic groups. When someone refers to themselves as French or Japanese, that identifier often defines not only their nationality but their ethnicity as well. When we say we are American, that defines primarily our nationality. We may be Italian-American or Korean-American. We may be Catholic, Jewish, Muslim, or Protestant. There is no template for American.

Physically, America has changed dramatically in 223 years. Thanks to adventurers like Lewis and Clark the United States stretches between the two major oceans of the world. Her climates range from a sub-tropical paradise in Hawaii, to a wild arctic desert in Alaska. Everything from dairy farms in Wisconsin, coal mines in Pennsylvania, cornfields in Nebraska, and oil fields in Texas fall within America's embrace.

America today is a stronger and more complete version of the dream that began in 1776. On July 4 her citizens can feel proud of what she represents and of how she has weathered the storms for more than two centuries. The U.S. is not perfect. The country has flaws like everything else in our world, but it is a success story.

America continues to be a beacon of democracy allowing individuals a voice in government. That does not mean that her foreign policy is always right or that her values apply to everyone — but she does not shirk from involvement. America is still a land of immigrants and seekers of religious freedom. That does not mean that her people are always tolerant or open to new ideas — but most try to be. America is bursting with natural resources. That does not mean that all her citizens adequately protect or appreciate them — but many do.

Although the U.S. may not always make the right choices, her basic driving principles are beyond question. Relative to many nations in the world, the U.S. is still a child. America has amazing inherent gifts and will continue to grow and fulfill her promise. All over the world there are examples of art, architecture and natural wonders that are hundreds and thousands of years older than the U.S. But what this country has accomplished in only 223 years is phenomenal, and what it may be capable of over the next two centuries is unfathomable. We can be proud to be American.

Army PT needs reshaping for future

commentary

I noted in my commentary last week that our ultraviolent society offers dysfunctional youths the tools and motivation to destroy themselves and others, but there also seems to be a link between poor motor development and the tendency to self-destruct.

I mentioned that education has three domains. We educate (or miseducate) the body, mind and emotions. Corruption of one domain spills over into the other two. When education malforms the body and produces flawed motor patterns, the mind and emotions also suffer. Finally, I introduced parakinesia, which means "clumsy or unnatural body movements caused by impairment of motor function."

Now consider sensory integration, which is the ability of the central nervous system to organize incoming sensations and then produce an appropriate response. Sensory experience includes such things as touch, body awareness, sight, sound, movement and pull of gravity. Sensory integration creates the foundation for all motor activities. Three systems are primarily involved in the process.

Poor vestibular function is associated with inadequate muscle tone, poor posture and general clumsiness. Vestibular function can be developed and maintained through systematic gymnastics training. I am not referring to modern gymnastics. I mean gymnastics as it was practiced in the early 1900's, before we gutted our gymnasiums and turned them into basketball courts.

The proprioceptive system involves the contraction and stretching of muscles, and the bending and straightening, pulling and compression of joints between bones. This system tells the brain where all of the body parts are situated and what they are doing. It is related to motor planning, posture, muscle tone and body image.

The tactile system controls response to touch, which can be either a warning system that informs the brain of danger or a means to learning and exploration. When these two subsystems are out of balance, touch may cause a disruption in the nervous system.

A few Army movement experts in the early 1980's noticed that sensory integration dysfunction and poor posture was common among Soldiers, but physical readiness training (PRT) doctrine was never modified to correct the problem. Maj. Judith Riggan, an Occupational Therapist at Brooke Army Medical Center wrote to Captain Charles Scoville at the Surgeon General's Task Force on Fitness about this issue in 1983.

"I feel it is imperative that sensory integration theory (at least basic concepts) be introduced to the leaders and instructors of the physical readiness programs," she warned. "I feel they need to be informed that, to date, the Army's priorities have been in the areas of stamina, endurance and strength, as opposed to the more intricate skills of agility, coordination and dexterity. Regretfully, to have a Soldier maximally perform, he should really be able to demonstrate skills in all six areas."

I believe our schools physically miseducate most of our young adults. Poor posture is epidemic, and it is associated with sensory integration dysfunction. Muscular imbalance and bad posture contribute to poor motor skills. This translates into training injuries and diminished battlefield efficiency, as young civilians become Soldiers.

Sensory integration dysfunction is a relatively new term, but poor posture and clumsiness have weakened societies throughout history.

Post needs suggestions for ACOE money

Pat Porter
Directorate of Resource Management

Fort Benning is looking for ways to best spend the $200,000 award money that came with winning the Chief of Staff, Army, Army Communities of Excellence competition last year.

The Army Communities of Excellence Program is more than a competition. It integrates the Army Performance Improvement Criteria, the Army's adaptation of the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award criteria. This assessment focuses on the entire community, with emphasis on internal and external excellence and customer service.

Last year, Fort Benning used the dollars which came with the Army Communities of Excellence Award for projects designed to benefit the Fort Benning community, such as:

- School Age Services Supplies (mats, etc.)
- Picnic tables and new grills
- Playground equipment
- Safety training tapes
- Pressure wash and paint Doughboy Stadium
- BOSS Program initiatives
- Covers for school bus stops
- Fitness Trail
- Chapel upgrade
- Trees, landscaping
- Purchase Self-Help items

We are requesting suggestions from the Fort Benning community for this year's projects. To submit your suggestion, fill out the attached form and submit to the address below.

Cadet receives 56-year-old wings

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

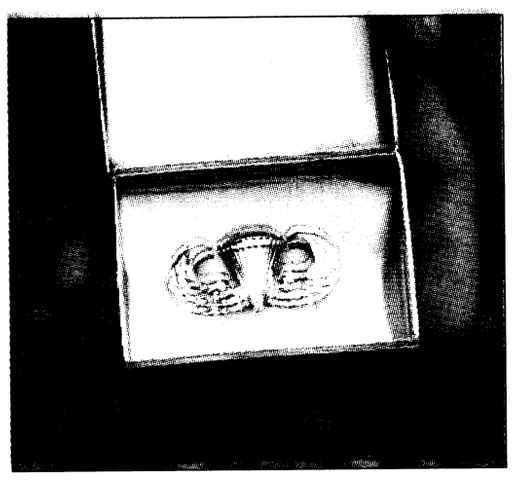
The history of the U.S. paratrooper is long and distinguished. From the hills of Sicily to the sands of the Persian Gulf, the tradition, high standards and dedication of the Airborne has established a combat record of unparalleled skill and courage on the field of battle. This strong Airborne tradition was evident on Fryar Drop Zone June 24 when Cadet Dwight S. Mears from the U.S. Military Academy received his silver wings.

The wings entrusted to Mears were not ordinary wings but wings rich in history and previously owned by four distinguished paratroopers since their original pinning in 1943.

The third recipient of the wings, retired Lt. Col. O.H. Ashley III, said that retired Lt. Gen. William Yarborough a captain in 1943 pinned the wings on 1st Lt. Michael Paulick. Yarborough, a lieutenant in 1941, developed the design for the jump wings still used today and became one of the chief planners of the 509th Parachute Infantry Battalion's England-to-North Africa flight in 1942. Paulick eventually retired as a major general from the Army.

As a motivated private attending Airborne School, Ashley was extremely honored to receive the wings previously worn by two distinguished Airborne officers and veterans of World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

"Twenty-seven days after my 18th birthday in July 1962, Col. Paulick entrusted his wings to me because I was the honor graduate of class number 39, and at the time, the first third-generation military parachutist in the Airborne forces," Ashley said.



According to Ashley, his grandfather O.H. Ashley Sr. received his pilot's license from Orville Wright and completed military jumps while on active duty with the U.S. Army Air Signal Corps from 1919 through 1923. "My father O.H. Ashley Jr. was also Airborne serving with the 2nd Para-Marines from 1943 until 1945."

"The history of these wings seems impressive, but perhaps the most remarkable bearer of these wings was my sister-in-law Martha Odem who was a second lieutenant in the Medical Services Corp when I pinned the jump wings on her in 1982," Ashley said. "She was top notch from the beginning and became the first female Commander of Cadets at the University of Georgia."

After Odem's commission as a nurse, she completed Air Assault school, Airborne School and then was promoted to Captain while stationed in Korea. "In Korea she resigned her commission to become a nun of the Order of Saint Benidict in Norfolk, Neb., and is arguably the only ordained sister in the world who is Airborne qualified," Ashley added.

Mears, a close friend of the family and the fifth recipient of the jump wings, was surprised and honored to receive the historical wings. The wings were entrusted to Mears during his Airborne graduation from Company D, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment and pinned on by the Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Brian Stephenson.

"I hope to live up to the high standards of all the paratroopers who have worn these wings before me," said Mears. "I am now a paratrooper and plan on upholding the strong tradition bestowed upon me with the pinning of these wings."

Guidelines help combat terrorism

Capt. Jay Griffith
Directorate of Threat and Security

Whether you are travelling abroad or locally, there are ways for you to combat terrorism.

Keep a Low Profile

Your dress, conduct and mannerisms should not attract attention.

Make an effort to blend into the local environment. Avoid publicity and don't go out in large groups. Stay away from civil disturbances and demonstrations.

Be Unpredictable

Vary your route to and from work and the time you leave and return home. Vary the way you dress. Don't exercise alone. Don't exercise at the same time and place each day, or on deserted streets or country roads. Let people close to you know where you are going, what you'll be doing, and when you should be back.

Be Very Alert

Watch for anything suspicious or out of place. Don't give personal information over the telephone. If you think you are being followed, go to a predetermined secure area. Immediately report the incident to your force protection officer, military intelligence officer, military police or law enforcement agencies. Some terrorists attempt to strike by using the mail or packages delivered to the home or office, suspicious characteristics to look for include:

•An unusual or unknown place of origin
•No return address
•An excessive amount of postage
•Abnormal or unusual size
•Oily stains on the package
•Wires or strings protruding from or attached to an item
•Incorrect spelling on the packaging label
•Different return address and postmark
•Appearance of foreign style handwriting
•Peculiar odor
•Uneven weight, balance, or shape

Never touch or move a suspicious package or letter. Do not cut tape, strings or other wrappings on a suspect package or immerse a suspected package or letter in water. Either action could cause an explosive device to detonate. Report any suspicious packages or mail to security officials immediately.

Travel Advisories

If you plan on travelling abroad, you should do some research and find out if there are any travel advisories for your intended destination.

The U.S. State Department provides these on their website at http://travel.state.gov/travel_warnings.html

For more information on how to better protect you and your family, the Graphic Training Aid, GTA 19-4-3, "Individual Protective Measures for Personal Security" is available from the Training Support Center.

Vaccine proves to be safe

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

With almost a million shots given, the anthrax immunization is proving to be one of the safest vaccination program on record, said Dr. Sue Bailey, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs.

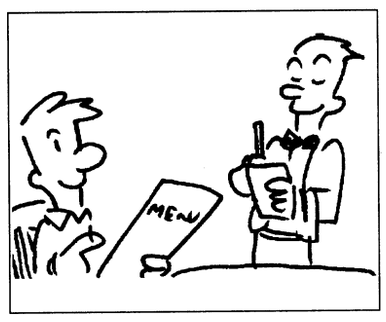
"The vaccine that we are administering to our troops for protection against anthrax is effective and entirely safe," Bailey said during a Pentagon interview.

She said service members are experiencing few serious adverse reactions from the shots. The most recent reports show only 14 reactions were serious enough that the service members had to be off work for 24 hours or more or hospitalized, she said. "Those who had those kinds of reactions have fully recovered," she added.

As of June 16, 935,632 separate shots had been administered. With 102 total reactions reported, including the 14 serious reactions, this means only .01 percent of the shots caused an adverse reaction. "This is a lower rate of reaction than one gets with a (diptheria, pertussis, tetanus) shot administered to children," Bailey said.

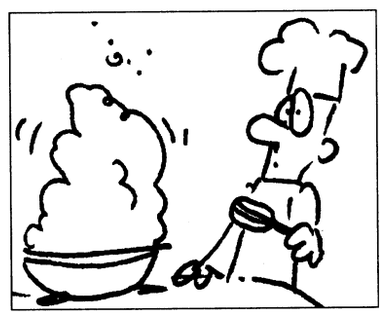
Bailey countered reports that the vaccine was somehow tainted with a substance called squalene. Squalene is a substance that appears naturally in everyone's body, she explained. "You also find it in a lot of beauty products and in some health food products," she said. "But, squalene has never been used in the anthrax immunization vaccine production, and it is not now present."

Following the reports, DoD contracted with a civilian laboratory that tested the vaccine for squalene and "found there is no squalene in the anthrax vaccine we are using," she said.



Bailey said the vaccine DoD uses is effective. "(Anthrax is) so deadly, we don't test humans," she said. "We rely upon non-human primate testing to give us the information about the efficiency of the vaccine. And that shows it to be very effective in protecting against anthrax."

The anthrax vaccine the department uses is licensed by the Food and Drug Administration and has been since 1970, Bailey said. The vaccine stocks have undergone DoD-mandated supplemental testing performed by the manufacturer and overseen by a private, independent firm.



Since 1970, there have been no reports of long-term adverse health effects from the anthrax vaccine. However, DoD continues to study the vaccine. "We have a study underway at the U.S. Army Medical Institute of Infectious Diseases to determine whether individuals who received multiple vaccines, including anthrax, demonstrate any adverse health effects over the long term," Bailey said. DoD has another study underway at Tripler Army Medical Center in Hawaii. A total of 570 medical workers who have received the series are being studied so DoD can get "on-going information that we can project into the future about effects of the anthrax vaccine."

The anthrax vaccination program is a series of six shots stretching over 18 months. DoD started immunizing service members most in danger from anthrax — those in or going to Southwest Asia. In May 1998, Defense Secretary William S. Cohen approved a plan to inoculate all service members against the disease.

"Anthrax is a deadly bacteria," Bailey said. "If you were exposed to weaponized anthrax spores and were not immunized, you would develop symptoms and die. Antibiotics alone cannot save you once you display the symptoms. We feel it is our responsibility to provide for the best protection ... and we do so through the immunization program."

The term restaurant was first used by Boulanger who opened the first establishment of its kind in Paris in 1765.

Fireworks can be dangerous

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

According to the National Center for Injury Prevention and Control (NCIPC), thousands of people are treated every year for injuries caused by fireworks. Most of these injuries occur in July. Many of these injuries are burns, and hands, fingers and eyes are most often affected.

As a result of the dangers inherent to fireworks, the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) reminds residents that fireworks are illegal in the state of Georgia. Consumer fireworks are legal in Alabama and if you choose to enjoy them, the CPSC suggests the following safety tips:

•Never allow children to play with or ignite fireworks.

•Read and follow all warnings and instructions.

•Be sure other people are out of range before lighting fireworks.

•Only light fireworks on a smooth, flat surface away from the house, dry leaves and flammable materials.

•Never try to relight fireworks that have not fully functioned.

•Keep a bucket of water in case of malfunction or fire.

The CPSC also suggests that both individuals and organizations work to promote fireworks safety. This can be done by making others aware of the safety guidelines concerning the use of fireworks. Some simple ways to do this are to post information in public areas, distribute flyers which include safety information or establish fireworks safety exhibits.

For more information about firework safety, contact the National Council on Fireworks Safety website at www.fireworksafety.com, the NCIPC website at www.ede.gov/ncipc or the CPSC website at www.cpsc.gov. By being aware of the dangers of fireworks and following these simple tips everyone can enjoy a safe Independence Day celebration.

Airborne: senior Soldiers inspire

Sergeant Major, were there to not only motivate the troops but each other as well.

"There are some mental challenges here that can be rough at times," Pena said. "These young troops are looking up to you, so you know you have to give everything you've got. That is where we as sergeants major can come together."

"We as senior enlisted leaders are showing some of these ROTC and West Point cadets as well as the young privates that there is more to the Army than just what they have seen at school or in basic training," Crivello said. "We tell them the standard and expect them to maintain it."

While maintaining personal standards and school standards vary, all three of the sergeants major said they had no problem maintaining the standards by taking orders from a subordinate.

"Sergeant Airborne (Airborne Instructor) is a specialist in what he or she does," Johnson said. "When I got here, I knew nothing about the Airborne, so I listened and took all of my commands from the instructor because he was the one who knew what was going on — not me."

As these three senior sergeants walk away from the school today with wings in hand, they agree that the parachute skill identifier is only a small part of what they will take with them.

"The wings are nice, but they aren't the only thing I will take from here," Pena said. "I will also take the professional standards of the black hats and encourage all of my NCOs to follow that standard. Those standards showed in everyone of their classes."

The now Airborne-qualified Pena will move on to Fort Bragg where he will be the command sergeant major of the 407th Forward Support Battalion. Crivello and Johnson will continue to serve at Benning. Johnson serves as the Officer Candidate School Sergeant Major and Crivello remains the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment sergeant major.

CID gets new commander

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Members of the Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division (CID) said farewell to their commander Lt. Col. Donald G. Salo, Jr. as they welcomed in his replacement Lt. Col. James B. Crockett, III during a ceremony held at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Wednesday.

Salo, a two year veteran of Fort Benning's CID, will continue to serve here as he assumes the role as the Deputy Brigade Commander for the Basic Combat Training Brigade on Sand Hill.

Crockett, a native of La Grange, Ga., has served in a variety of leadership positions during his 19 years of service in both the aviation and the military police branches. He has served as a Aviation platoon leader, a company commander and deputy Provost Marshal, 6th Infantry Division, Fort Wainwright, Alaska, Deputy Garrison Commander, 24th Infantry Division and Fort Stewart, Deputy

Crockett

Installation Provost Marshal and S-3 for the Law Enforcement Command. He has also served as the Provost Marshal for the Army Central Command in Kuwait. Prior to taking command of the Criminal Investigation Division here, he served as the Provost Marshal for the 2nd Infantry Division, Korea.

Prior to enlisting in the Army, Crockett earned his Bachelor of Science Degree in Criminal Justice, and after completing his initial training, he attended Officers' Candidate School in 1980.

Crockett has scored numerous awards during his stint of service including the Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal and the National Defense Service Medal.

Crockett is joined in service by his wife Priscilla from Savannah, Ga., and by their two children James, 17, and Cody, 14.

Uniform: Soldiers like changes particular," said Wylie. The new slacks features sizes in petite, regular. tall, juniors, misses and womens.

Expecting Soldiers will see a change in the maternity uniform. The new uniform, according to Wylie, will provide extra comfort and looks better. The new maternity ensemble includes one long sleeve shirt, two short sleeve shirts, one tunic, two slacks and two skirts. The whole ensemble should cost a little over $200. The individual prices are as follows: tunic-$32.95, one pair of pants-$27.95, skirt-$12.70, short sleeve shirt-$19.95 and long sleeve shirt-$10.95.

Male Soldiers will see changes in their long and short sleeve shirts. The new shirts have pleated pockets, a stand-up collar and are made with heavier material, according to Wylie. The short sleeve shirt will cost $10.20, and the long sleeve shirt costs $11. 45. Older shirts cannot be worn after Sept. 30, 1999.

Males and females must also replace their footwear, even though there hasn't been a mandatory possession date set. A smooth toe, black oxford shoe will replace the previous moccasin toe shoe. The new shoes will cost $28.10 for females, and $31.10 for males.

Soldiers will see changes in their outerwear as well. A new unisex cardigan sweater (optional) has replaced the individual male and female black Army cardigan. The new sweaters are 50 percent acrylic 50 percent wool. They can be worn unbuttoned or buttoned indoors, but must be worn buttoned outdoors, except for pregnant Soldiers. The cardigan can be worn cuffed or uncuffed, but cannot be rolled or pushed up above the wrist. The old sweaters cannot be worn after Sept. 30, 2000. The new unisex cardigan sweater costs $39.

A new black all-weather coat, which is double breasted and belted, replaces the unbelted black all-weather coat and interim version double breasted coat. The new coat, which is required for wear by Oct. 1, 2001, will cost $77.45 for females, and $75.65 for males.

Hot Weather Battle Dress Uniforms will receive a new look as well. The Enhanced Hot Weather Battle Dress Uniforms will replace the current HWBDU's. According to Wylie, there will not be a wear out date for the current HWBDU's, and stocks will be used until exhausted. Wylie said that the enhanced HWBDU is made of sturdier material and has less shrinkage when washed. Both BDU uniforms can be mixed and matched.

"Most of the Soldiers liked the new changes. At least 500 people participated in the surveys, if not more," said Wylie.

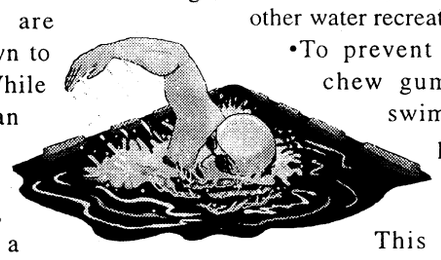
Wylie said suggestions often drive improvements for Army clothing.

"We take suggestions, but it just takes time to implement. We want the Soldiers looking good and feeling good," said Wylie.

She said after suggestions are taken, then prototypes are designed. Soldiers must then be selected to test the product. After their feedback, the information is sent to the Army Uniform Board, which approves or disapproves the changes. If the board approves the change, it will make a recommendation for the Army Chief of Staff's approval or disapproval.

Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, former Army Chief of Staff, approved the new Army uniform policy change June 9.

In general, Wylie likes the new uniform changes, and hopes that other Soldiers will like the new changes.



"The new changes enhance the Soldiers appearance in clothing, and the changes are major improvements in comfort, as well. We're constantly looking to improve the Army uniform through feedback from the Soldiers," she said.

Summer safety

Tips help protect against drowning

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

With daily high temperatures often exceeding 90 degrees and humidity levels in the same range, people are naturally drawn to the water. While swimming can be a fun way to beat the summer heat, it can also be a dangerous activity if not done safely. According to the National Center for Injury Prevention and Control (NCIPC), drownings are one of the major causes of death in the U.S.

Drownings tend to occur most frequently in swimming pools, but lakes, rivers and oceans can also be dangerous. In open water, conditions can change rapidly and unexpectedly causing problems for even strong swimmers. Often the visibility in open water is reduced making it difficult to accurately assess conditions for swimming.

Here are some tips offered by the NCIPC for protecting yourself against drowning:

•Learn to swim.

•Never swim alone or in unsupervised places.

•Check the water depth before entering. The American Red Cross recommends 9 feet as a minimum depth for diving or jumping.

•Know the local weather conditions and forecast before swimming or boating.

•Use Coast Guard approved personal floatation devices (life jackets) when boating regardless of distance to be traveled, size of boat or swimming ability of boaters.

•Never drink alcohol during or immediately before boating or other water recreation.

•To prevent choking never chew gum or eat while swimming diving or playing in the water.

•Learn CPR. This applies particularly to pool owners and water sports enthusiasts.

•Install telephones near residential pools.

It is also particularly important for parents to be aware of the threat that swimming pools and other bodies of water may pose to their children. According to the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), in some areas drowning is actually the leading cause of death in children under 5-years-old. A large percentage of these incidents happen in residential swimming pools when parents are present.

The CPSC recommends that barriers be constructed to prevent children from gaining access to a swimming pool. These may include fences and gates around the pool, alarms on doors leading to the pool area and safety covers for the pool. In the case of an above ground pool, the CPSC suggests that ladders leading to the pool be secured when not in use.

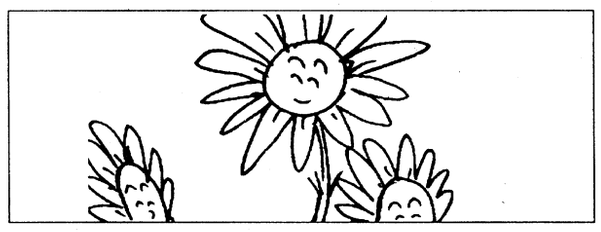
Here are some of the rules offered by CPSC for keeping children safe around pools:

•Instruct babysitters about potential pool hazards to young children and about the use of protective devices, such as door alarms and latches. Emphasize the need for constant supervision.

•Never leave children unsupervised near a pool. During social gatherings at or near a pool. Appoint a "designated watcher" to protect young children from pool accidents. Adults may take turns being the "watcher." When adults become preoccupied children are at risk.

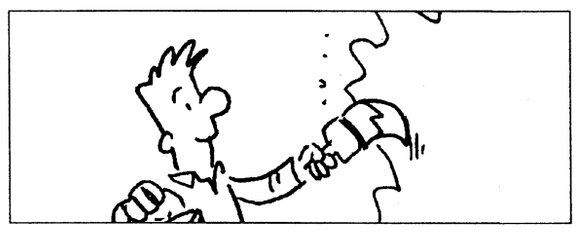
If a child is missing, check the pool first. Seconds count in preventing death or disability. Go to the edge of the pool and scan the entire pool, bottom surface as well as pool area.

•Do not allow a young child in the pool without an adult.



•Do not consider young children drownproof because they have had swimming lessons. Children must be watched closely while swimming.

•Do not use flotation devices as a substitute for supervision.



•Remove toys from in and around the pool when it is not in use. Toys can attract young children to the pool.

•Never prop open the gate to a pool barrier.

For more information on how to protect yourself and your family from drowning, contact the NCIPC website at www.ede.gov/ncipc or the CPSC website at www.cpsc.gov. By following a few basic safety rules and using common sense everyone can enjoy a summer filled with water recreation.

Post remains team of teams

Col. Nolen V. Bivens
Basic Combat Training Brigade

In 1919, the original Fort Benning "Team of Teams" formed up along Macon Road and activated Camp Benning. That vanguard team set the standards for all succeeding teams to make immeasurable contributions to the Total Army's ability to fight and win this nation's wars.

Eighty years later and on the eve of a new millennium, Fort Benning's "team of teams' is once again establishing a new unit. Last year, the Basic Combat Training Brigade (BCTB) did not exist. It came into existence quickly and smoothly thanks to the great teamwork within this organization.

This column is about Fort Benning's "team of teams" concept.

First, the manner in which team members embraced and successfully completed the task of building a new brigade during a time of declining resources is evidence of Fort Benning's commitment to being U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command and Army team members.

According to experts, "teamwork typically involves exchanging supervisory personnel for worker empowerment." For nearly six months, led by the Chief of Staff for the U.S. Army Infantry School, it was an empowered team, composed of two individuals soon to be assigned to the brigade and a core installation staff group, that did both the planning spadework and foundation laying for the brigade's activation. They were able to do this successfully because of the environment of empowerment given to accomplish this task.

During the past six months, the "team of teams" has results that validate its success. Soldiers and civilians of Adjutant General AG facilitated the arrival of some 300 cadre. The Infantry Training Brigade, Infantry School, Resource Management Office and others provided equipment, personnel, cost estimates and wise counsel.

The 30th AG Battalion and other installation support staffs processed 3,657 Soldiers. Directorate of Logistics team members opened dining facilities, drove 2,376 bus and truck miles, issued 82,548 pieces of equipment and delivered 42 transportation assets a year ahead of schedule.

The Directorate of Information Management facilitated the laying of some 23,760 feet of phone lines and computer cable. The Directorate of Public Works assisted 200 family members find homes, graded graduation fields, repaired air conditioners, renovated barracks and repaired and designed physical fitness fields.

All installation staff agencies, guided by the Inspector General, inspected and assisted brigade and battalion staffs in developing staff functions from scratch.

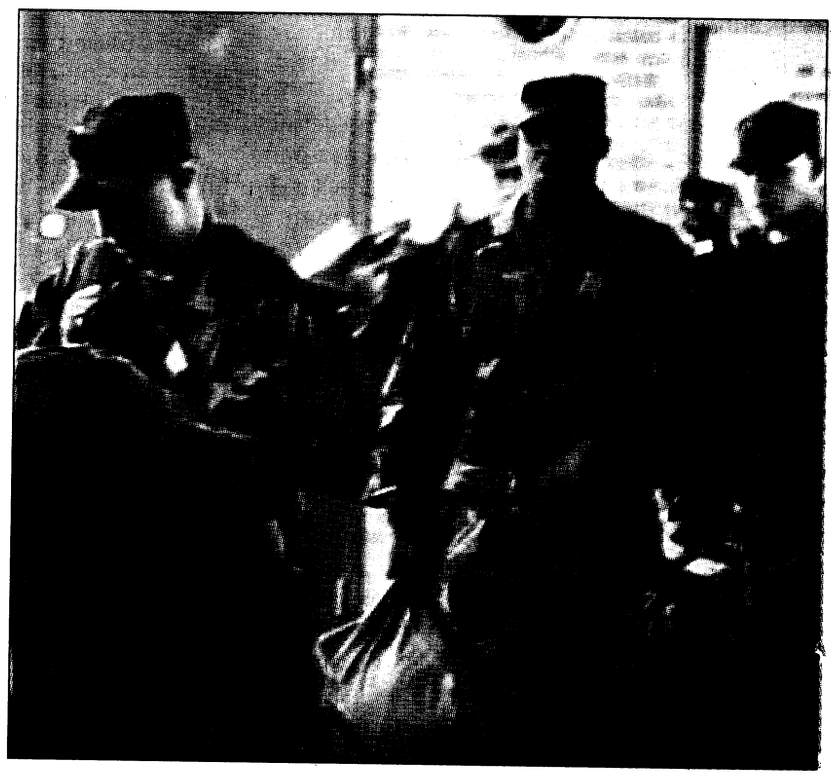
The Directorate of Operations and Training developed range-scheduling procedures. Directorate of Public Safety team members provided traffic control while the Directorate of Threat and Security developed security-screening procedures.

The medical command established battalion aid stations and along with the Dental command team members processed a significant surge of hospital visits and dental examinations.

Three hundred and thirty one permanent cadre and family members received quality welcomes throughout Fort Benning and the tri-communities.

The best feedback though comes from beneficiaries of this great teamwork. "I am glad I can say I graduated from BCT at Fort Benning," are the words one Soldier gave me recently in his "letter to the colonel" at the end of his training. And, in the words of the former Chief of Staff of the Army, this is the most credible evidence of the team's "credential" — for "Soldiers are our credentials."

As the newest member of the team, and on behalf of our cadre, Soldiers who graduate from our training and those still in training, I thank "Team Fort Benning" for our success.



You've done the Army well — Hooah Cold Steel!

Editor's Note: This is the first article in a series of articles The Bayonet will be running from commanders around Fort Benning.

BCTB

Newest addition receives initial fill

Capt. Charles Ray
2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

During the initial fill for 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, trainees grab their gear and prepare to start Basic Combat Training.

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment is one of the newest companies in the Basic Combat Training Brigade and the Army. Since the activation ceremony, June 2, Co. B cadre and drill sergeants have worked extremely hard to build the team.

On June 17, the company received its initial fill of 240 new Soldiers for training.

The Soldiers have completed their first week of training and have started the process of transforming from civilian to Soldier. The transformation from civilian to Soldier is accomplished in a three-phase process during a nine-week cycle.

Co. B is currently in Phase I of training which encompasses weeks one through three and is characterized by an environment of total control.

The company has focused on inculcating the Army's core values, traditions and ethics as well as the development of individual basic combat skills and physical fitness training.

The first week included an introduction to Army Values, Drill and Ceremony, Identification and Wear of the Uniform, Army Heritage and traditions, Physical Fitness Training and numerous other introductory classes.

The road ahead brings many new challenges. Phase II is designated the "Gunfighter" phase and is centered on the development of basic combat skills with special emphasis on weapons proficiency. Basic Rifle Marksmanship training will be the focus during Phase II.

Once the company has completed the Soldierization process and becomes proficient in Rifle Marksmanship, the company will focus and continue to develop and foster the Soldiers understanding of the importance of teamwork.

The cycle culminates with an application of all skills learned to this point with a seventy-two hour field training exercise designed to test each Soldier both mentally and physically. It will require each Soldier to demonstrate their proficiency of basic combat skills in a tactical field environment while operating as part of a team.

Co. B was also selected to participate in Active Component Reserve Component integration training to help train Reserve units in their wartime mission. Members of Co. B, 2nd Bn., 334th Inf. Regt. from the 84th Division from Granite City II, arrived June 19. This unit is the first of several Reserve Component units that will conduct annual training here with Co. B and 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt. The experience and manpower that these reserve units bring has been a tremendous help in establishing a new company.

With the first week behind them, the Soldiers of Co. B are well on their way towards graduation on Aug. 19.

Trainees tackle basic rifle marksmanship

Capt. James E. Brownlee
Co. C, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

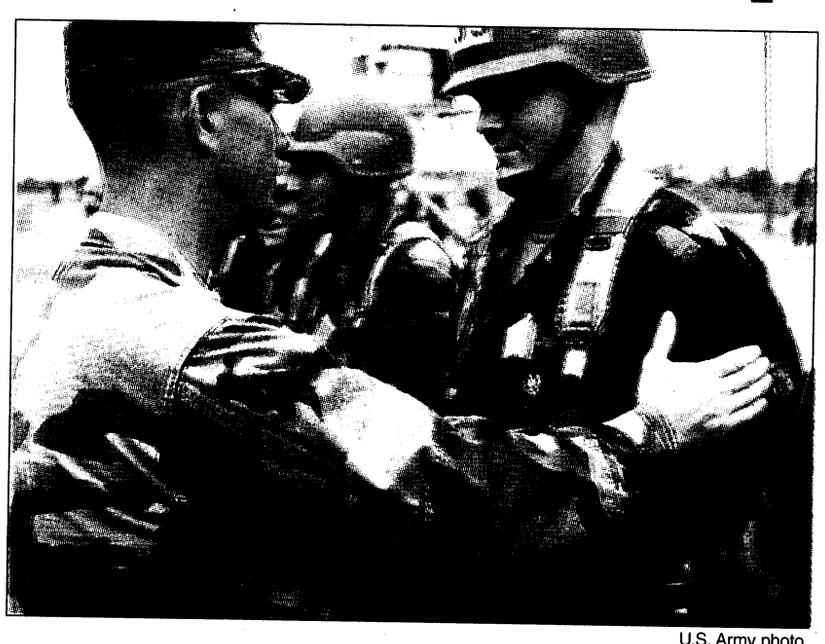
These memorable words echoed through the ears of 189 new Soldiers of Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, June 22. For the past two weeks, the cadre of Co. C, working hand-in-hand with the skilled rifle marksmanship instructors of 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, have put in countless hours teaching the fundamental skills of basic rifle marksmanship (BRM) to a company of privates who were civilians less than one month ago.

When asked about the level of expertise and training these new Soldiers were getting, Sgt. 1st Class Michael Francis, a Soldier with the Michigan National Guard who is currently attached to the 29th Inf. Regt., said the new recruits were taught by some of the best instructors in the Army.

"These drill sergeants really know what they are doing out here," he added.

For this training cycle, the cadre had their work cut out for them as the cycle's marksmanship period happened to fall right into the "dog days" of summer. Temperatures reached 100 degrees Fahrenheit on a daily basis and shade was hard to come by out on the firing line.



The professionalism and dedication to excellence of the cadre shined through.

Sgt. 1st Class Robert Height, also of the Michigan National Guard, said there was a lot of positive training taking place at the range. "Never before have I seen a company take so much time and put so much effort into training. This is definitely going above and beyond the call of duty."

As a result, 189 privates, one month into the Army, became qualified marksman by the end of their BRM period. The company completed their training by qualifying 98 percent of the company in one day with 3rd Platoon, led by Staff Sgt. Anthony Sewer and Staff Sgt. Victor Baez taking honors as the top scoring platoon in the company. However, the expert marksman of the day, who is also from 3rd Platoon was Pvt. Eric Mcpherson, of Silverdale, Wash. He scored 37 out of 40 hits to take top individual honors in the company.

"We really did not do anything different at all, we just took a little more time with each individual Soldier. Teaching and coaching the fundamentals was our biggest concern, said 1st Sgt. Carlos Garcia about his company's approach to BRM. "We also slowed down the pace and tried to take away all of the distracters. We emphasized the basics and built confidence. Our guidance from the commander was to go slow and build the Soldier's confidence one BRM period at a time, and that is exactly what we did."

1st Lt. Jason Barnes, the company executive officer said, "Identifying and eliminating each and every training distracter along with taking and averaging out the variables is close to impossible. However, our goal was to do just that. We took apart and cleaned over 200 20-round magazines, to be used specifically for qualification along with tracking and using the weapons truck on a daily basis. We set the tone of our BRM period early ... calm. What I mean by this is we wanted the Soldiers to feel good about themselves and what they were about to accomplish. We even keep the extra curricular cardiovascular physical fitness sessions to a bare minimum during this phase."

Capt. James Brownlee, Co. C commander, congratulates one of his Soldiers for qualifying expert with the M-16.

"One thing that really helped was our BRM tracking board. It helped us keep track of our weak and not so weak Soldiers throughout our 13-day BRM cycle. At the end of a hot and long day, keeping up with individual Soldiers scores would really have been an extra added stress, not to mention a lot of extra paper work, so what we thought at first was a little overboard on the part of the commander really came in handy at the end of the day," added Staff. Sgt. Michael Heckathron.

Coupled with the break in BRM days, the company bivouacked as much as possible during their intense BRM period. Bivouacking gave Soldiers and trainers the opportunity to stay longer on the range teaching Soldiers to train to standard and not to time. With the longest days of the year falling each schedule, the company took full advantage of the daylight hours. Sometimes working until 7 p.m. and 8 p.m. on the ranges. They did not let chow and transportation affect them at all. This was accomplished by forecasting and planning early in the morning and getting the changes through their battalion training shop, company commander and executive officer.

All in all it was a great two weeks at the ranges for Co. C, However, with basic rifle marksmanship completed it is still going to be a long, hot summer of non-stop Infantry training. If anyone can do it though, the cadre of Co. C certainly can. Next up for the company is the confidence and obstacle courses and then into Individual Tactical Training.

Award: Soldier of the Cycle
What made you join the Army? I joined the Army because I wanted to learn a skill and go places. I am excited about becoming an Ammunition Specialist.
Why were you chose as Soldier of the Cycle? I was selected after I passed a board where they asked me tough questions about my chain of command, end-of-cycle test skills and drill and ceremony.

Name: Staff Sgt. Kirk L. Knockett

Hometown: Baltimore, Maryland
Unit: Company A, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade

Award: Drill Sergeant of the Cycle
Define your leadership style. My style of leadership is direct. I tell my Soldiers what I want done, when I want it done and how I want it done. Then, I closely watch and supervise the task until completion.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill? I get the most satisfaction from seeing the faces of my Soldiers after they have completed a difficult task like a foot march or patrol during the 72-hour field training exercise.

Drill sergeants find themselves living values they teach daily

Jim Caldwell
U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command

Soldiers consistently rated Staff Sgt. Earl Jefferson a '"true believer" and a "model of Army values" in their basic combat training critiques.

Jefferson was a drill sergeant in gender integrated basic combat training at Fort Jackson, S.C. Soldiers get an opportunity to evaluate their leadership and training they undergo at all Training and Doctrine Command training centers.

"If you spend 18-hours a day preaching to them but not living what you preach, they can tell," Jefferson said. "Once Soldiers think a drill sergeant doesn't believe in what he teaches, then that drill sergeant loses his or her power base."

The "preaching" Jefferson refers to is training the seven core Army values — loyalty, duty, respect, selfless sacrifice, honor, integrity and personal courage. Training centers began instituting values-based training in initial entry training — BCT and advanced individual training — in January 1998.

That was before the Army's official start date of October 1, when BCT was expanded from eight to nine weeks. The extra time accommodated values training and more instruction on sexual harassment prevention, protection and reporting.

Jefferson has completed his two-year duty on "the trail" and has been assigned to the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C. He plans to keep preaching values.

"If I'm lucky, I'll be a platoon sergeant and I will make sure values are always a part of what we do," he said.

Department of Defense, Army and TRADOC committees recommended adding values training to BCT and advanced individual training following incidents of sexual misconduct by drill sergeants with trainees in 1996.

Training commanders and sergeants major say since values training began, there have been dramatically fewer cases of vandalism, theft and drinking by Soldiers in training.

Trainees say they see the same reflection of values in their drill sergeants, as well.

"In our sensing sessions with trainees, we have been asking the same questions over the last two years," said Col. Scott Feil, commander of the 1st Armored Brigade, Fort Knox, Ky.

"But when it comes to asking questions about how Soldiers feel about their drill sergeants, the answers have changed. It's not only 'my drill sergeant is going to teach me what I need to know,' it's also 'my drill sergeant is going to take care of me.' 'He demonstrates the Army values.'"

"Soldiers are evaluating their leadership on an additional set of criteria," Feil said.

Noncommissioned officers become drill sergeants either by volunteering for the duty or by being appointed to it. After a two-year tour of duty, they return to their primary specialties with regular units.

Staff Sgt. Martin Celestine thinks that teaching Army values is a strong incentive to live by them. Celestine has been a drill sergeant for a year in Infantry one station unit training, a combination of BCT and military occupational skill training, at Fort Benning. He is also the drill sergeant of the year for 1999 at Fort Benning.

"I wouldn't say that teaching values forces you (to live by them)," he said. "You tell yourself, 'Well, if I'm preaching this, then I should be living within the same guidelines.'"

Celestine said that knowledge of Army values is an important part of the semi-annual drill sergeant certification conducted by commanders and first sergeants at Fort Benning.

"The same values training we give to Soldiers, we go through as a refresher," he said. "Then you're not just up there (in front of trainees) reading the material; you're proficient."

According to Command Sgt. Maj. John Beck, TRADOC command sergeant major, drill sergeants demonstrate his long-held leadership principle.

In addition to traditional Army training, drill sergeants must also demonstrate Army values.

"If you're doing PT in your off-duty time, are you training your Soldiers? Yes," Beck said. "If you come in hung over every day ... If your Soldiers know that you go to church every Sunday, are you training your Soldiers? Yes."

"If we stand up and preach Army values but then not live them, what is that telling Soldiers?" he asked.

Beck believes that values demonstrated by new Soldiers and drill sergeants will help the Army.

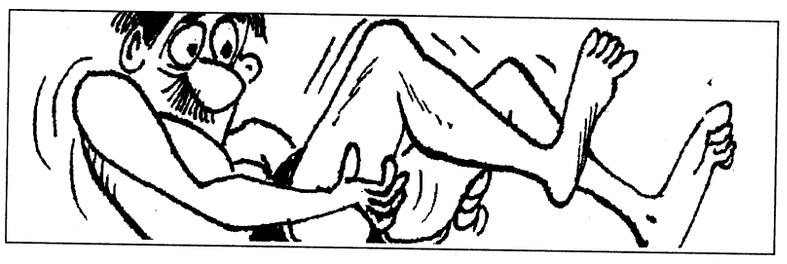
"Your organization is not going to be effective unless Soldiers, from the commander down, live these values. This is going to rig us for success in the execution of our leadership," Beck said.

Co. D graduates 176 Infantrymen

1st Lt. Joseph R. Sowers
Co. D, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

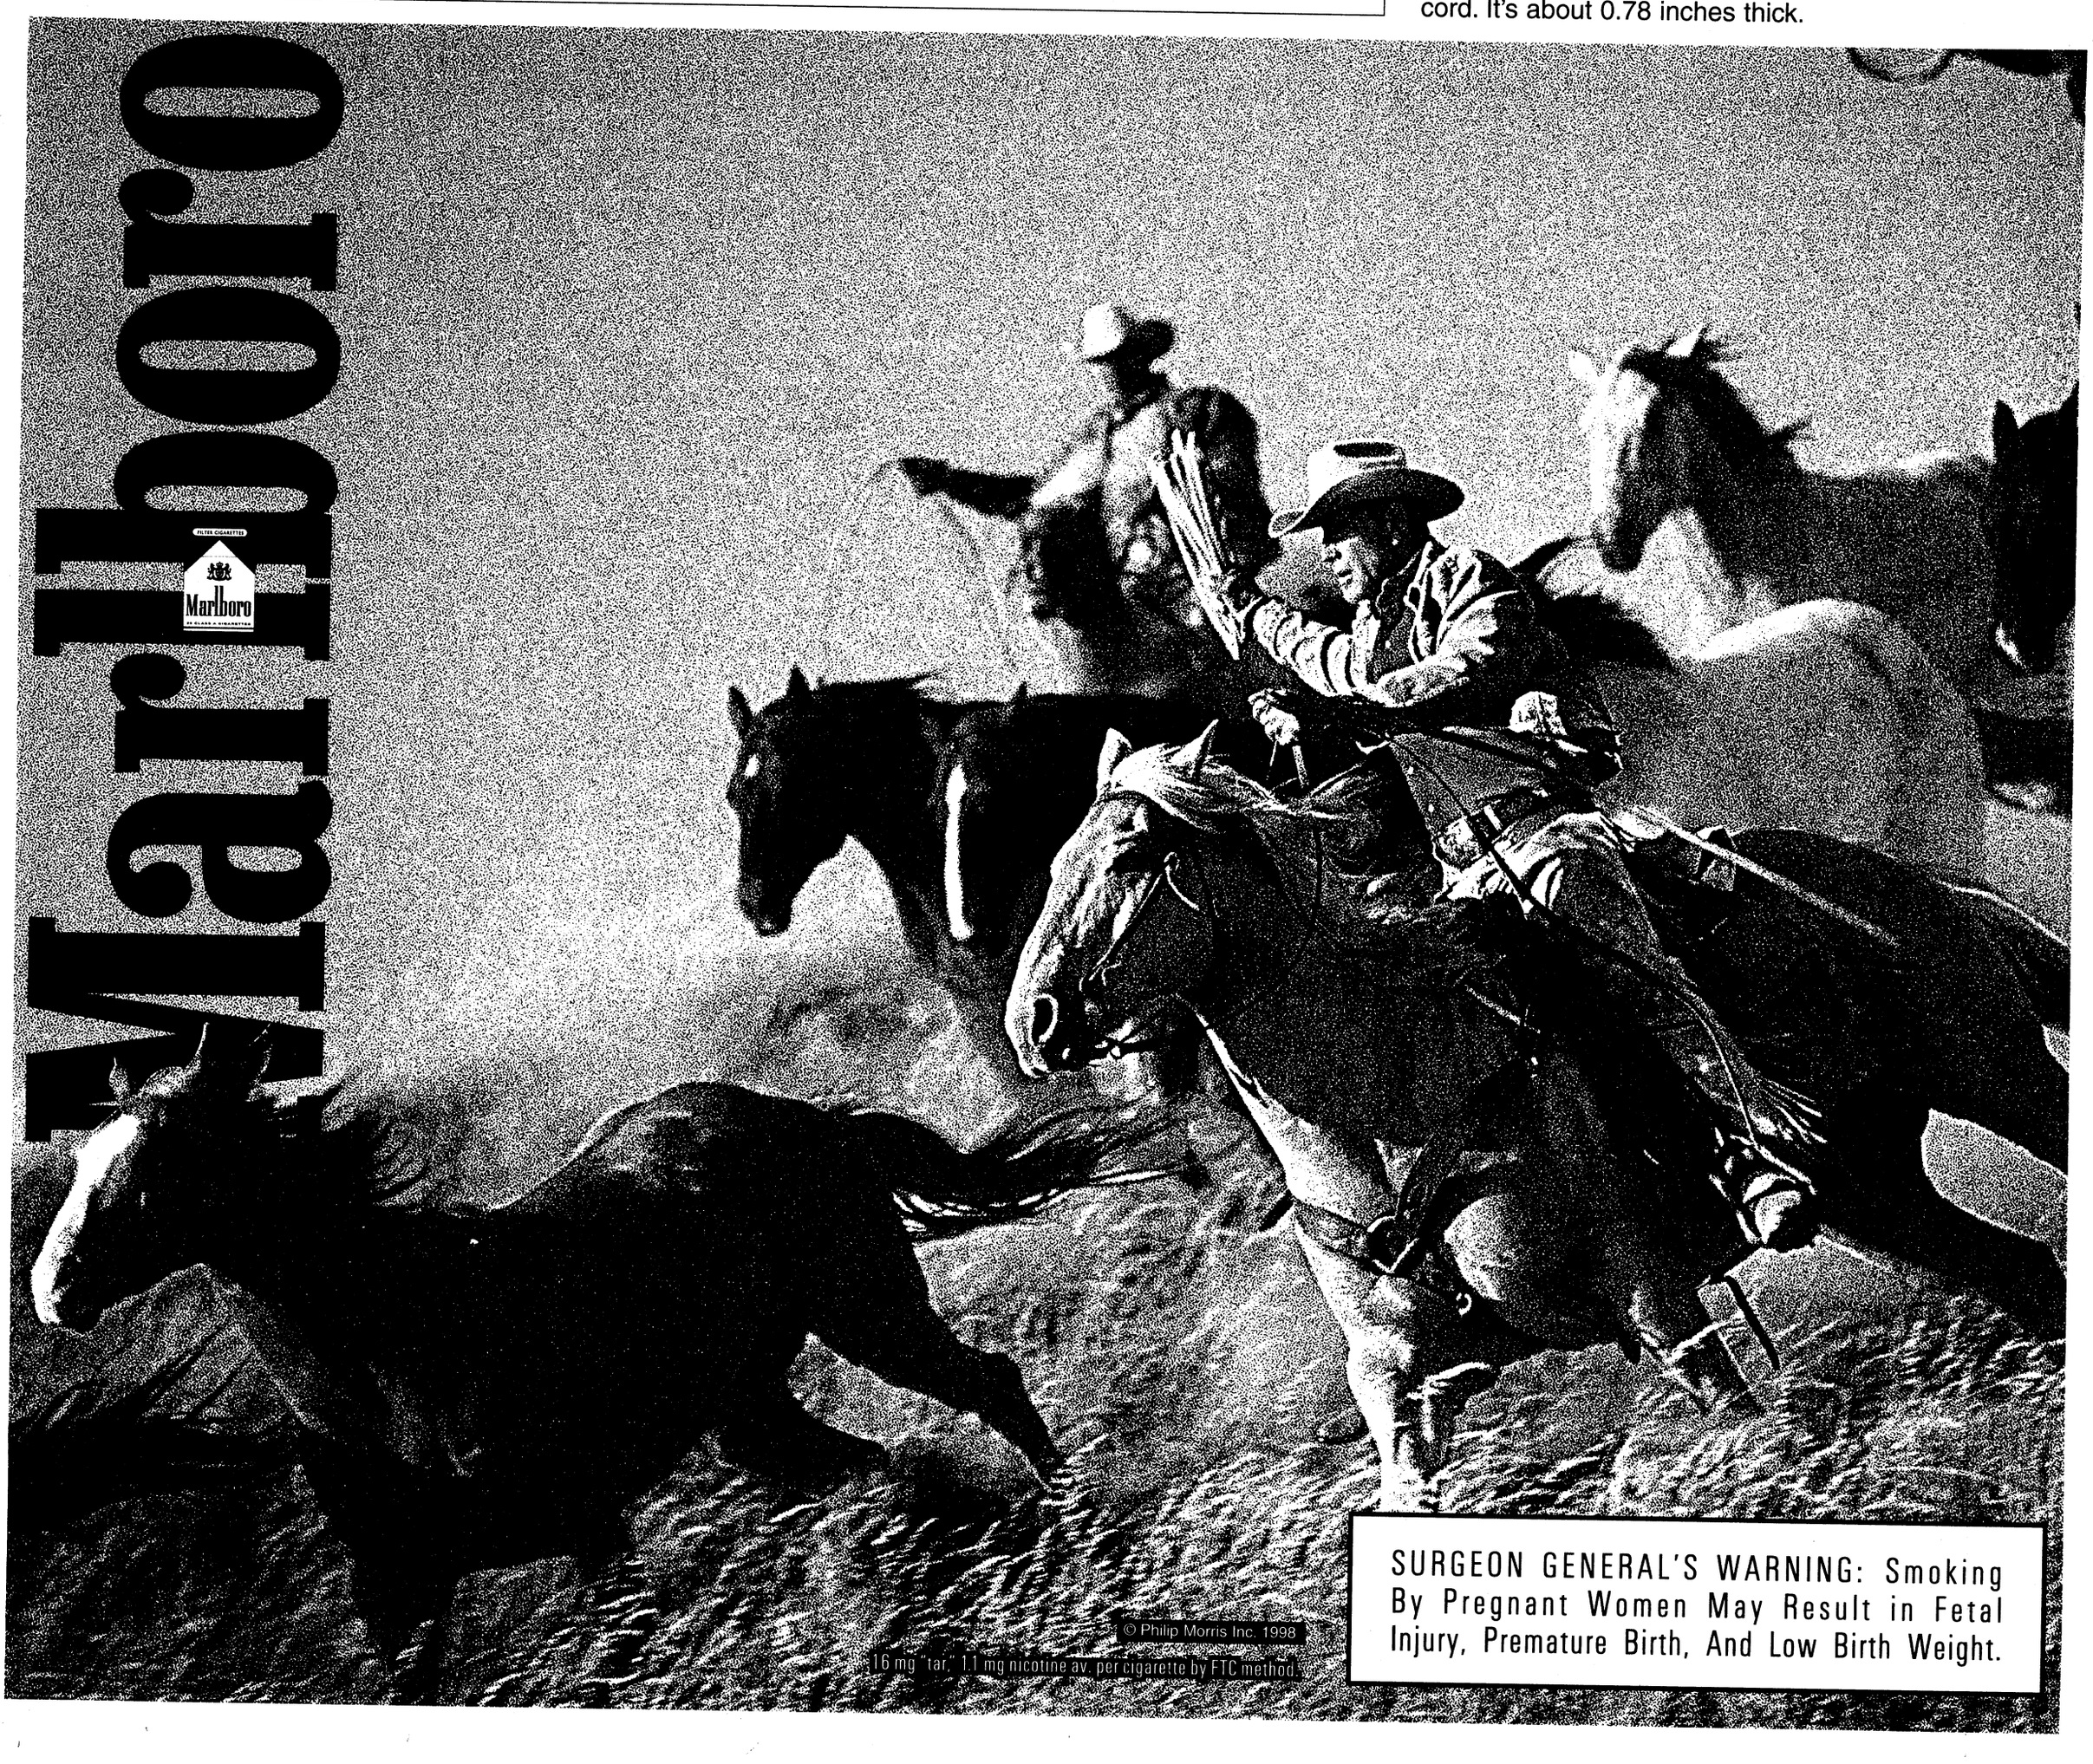
Company D, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, graduated 176 fully-trained Soldiers, ready to take their places in Infantry units around the world June 25. Co. D is one of the many Infantry rifle companies in the Infantry Training Brigade that trains Soldiers according to One Station Unit Training's program of instruction.

Initially, the drill sergeants of Co. D instruct the new trainees on the Army values, customs and heritage and basic drill and ceremony during the initial phase referred to as "total control." Once Soldiers demonstrate their willingness to accept responsibility for their actions, control is gradually relaxed.



After passing into the Gunslinger Phase, the drill sergeants and cadre from 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment instruct the Soldiers on Basic Rifle Marksmanship (BRM). BRM is a major event for all ITB companies. Co. D's goal is to qualify 90 percent of the trainees on their first attempt and attain a company average of 30 hits out of 40 targets.

During the remaining weeks of the 14-week cycle, Soldiers progress through sequential instruction of Individual Movement Techniques and how they apply in an Infantry Fire Team and Squad. By the end of the cycle, Soldiers should be able to move as a member of a fire team and as a member of a squad. Along with movement techniques, the trainees begin their education on many different weapons systems, such as the M204 Grenade Launcher, M249 Squad Automatic Weapon and the M240B Machine Gun.



Drill Sergeant Mark Larocque believed that the trainees were most attentive during this cycle and retained a great deal of the instruction periods.

In an attempt to focus the cadre in the Patriot Battalion, Lt. Col. Jay W. Chambers Jr. developed the Triad of Excellence. The triad is made up of intense physical training, BRM instruction and tactical training.

The Soldiers of Co. D graduated with seven expert riflemen and attained an Army Physical Fitness Test average of slightly under 270. The honor graduate was Pvt. Roger Zimmerman and drill sergeant of the cycle was Sgt. 1st Class Mario D. Cockrell.

Student breaks language barriers

11-year-old dependent proves education has no borders

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Breaking language barriers and cultures, 11-year-old Vanessa Lameda won several top awards and proved that education has no borders.

Vanessa, who is the daughter of Maj. Alfieri Lameda of the Venezuelan Army and guest instructor with the Department of Joint and Combined Operations of the U.S. Army School of the Americas and his wife Mery, attended Waddell Elementary School.

Because of her dedication to her studies, Vanessa was named to the school's Honor Roll and she also received the President's Education Award Program Silver Certificate for outstanding educational improvement in pursuit of academic excellence and maintaining a high grade point average. She was also given the Good Citizenship Award.

Lameda

"We are very proud of our daughter," said Lameda. "This was a great achievement for her since all the studies in Venezuela are in Spanish."

Remarkably, Vanessa and her parents have only been in the United States for five months. However, this short time period did not stop Vanessa from exceeding the standards. As Waddell's school officials said "She's our interpreter for all the other Spanish speaking students who attend our school and whose parents are with the U.S. Army School of the Americas."

"This has been a good year," said Vanessa. "I'm looking forward to the beginning of the next school year. But, I like summer vacation too."

New PT uniform gets approved

The new Physical Fitness Uniform will be available in stores in October 2000.

Tonya Johnson
Army News Service

A new physical training uniform was approved for Soldiers' use by Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, former Army Chief of Staff, on June 9.

"I think it's a great improvement. It's lighter, washes better and looks sharper," said Lt. Col. Steve Pinter, product manager for Enhanced Soldier Systems at Fort Belvoir, Va.

The new PT uniform consists of a five-piece ensemble, which includes a t-shirt, long sleeve shirt, jacket, pants and shorts. The uniform will be issued to new Soldiers in May 2000, and becomes available in military clothing and sales stores in October 2000, according to Master Sgt. Debra Wylie, uniform policy officer for the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Since Dec. 22, 1998, selected units from Fort Drum, N.Y., Fort Jackson, S.C., Fort Benning, Fort Hood, Texas and Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, spent 100 days testing four versions of the new PT uniform. The selected military bases were chosen to test how the uniforms performed under different climatic conditions.

"We asked for units that had a fair mix of male and female Soldiers," said Pinter. The purpose was to make sure that both male and female Soldiers had adequate input on the new PT uniforms.

After listening to many Soldiers' comments, the Army decided on a uniform that is better in wear and appearance, according to Sgt. Maj. Butch Hancock of the Training and Doctrine Command, Systems Manager — Soldiers Office at Fort Benning. This unit is responsible for the testing and application of anything worn, carried or consumed by Soldiers in the Army.

"I think these are great uniforms. The uniforms are much better looking, and you feel better in them. Most Soldiers are pleased with them," said Hancock.

The Army hasn't picked a company to make the new PT uniforms, but according to Pinter, contracts should be awarded in the early fall.

The new uniforms will cost almost double that of the current PT uniforms, which have been issued since 1986. The reasons for the increase in the uniform price include inflation, different material and different design.

"They shouldn't cost any more than a $110," said Hancock. Even though some Soldiers may seem alarmed by the price, when compared to similar civilian outfits, the cost can be anywhere from $180 to $200. "Looking at the price, it seems expensive. But, when compared to Nike or Reebok suits, it actually cost less than civilian wear, said Wylie, who has heard some Soldiers complain about the price.

Hancock notes that several changes have been made of the test versions to reduce the cost of the uniform. They took away the hood since according to Hancock, "that hood was useless." Instead, even though it hasn't been officially decided, a dark blue or black watch cap will be used. Also, some of the reflective material was taken away, and the reflected pin stripe was changed.

There was speculation that there might be an increase in the clothing allowance for Soldiers to help pay for the new uniform, but Hancock said that probably won't happen.

According to Hancock, the t-shirts, which are made with Cool Max material and cotton, won't cling to a person's body. The new jacket and pants are water resistant. There are zippers in the leg, and zippers underneath the arms to let heat escape. "Having zippers under the arm is a nice feature because if Soldiers take off their jackets and put them around their waist while running, then it makes it look like an undisciplined unit." Hancock added that the pants have "a good, fish net liner," and that the shorts don't have a tight waste line like the previous shorts. Both pants and shorts are black, so they won't show dirt or stains.

Hancock is also pleased that the new uniforms offer long sleeved shirts.

"We needed long sleeve shirts for a long time. It's a nice in-between garment because sometimes it's too warm for a Soldier to wear a jacket, yet too cold for them to wear just a short sleeve t-shirt."

The uniform is also easier to wash. Hancock stated that Soldiers can take the uniform in the shower if necessary and rinse the uniform out with soap and water. After letting it air dry for a couple of hours, the uniform should not only be dry, but free of odors. Wylie also mentioned that Soldiers haven't experienced "much shrinkage or discoloration" of the uniform after multiple washings.

Hancock has tried several of the prototypes of the uniform for a couple of years and said, "If taken care of and washed properly, they should last for two- and-a-half to three years. Soldiers have to use common sense when washing these things. All they need to do is follow the laundry instructions on the tags."

Hancock, like most of his colleagues, feels that Soldiers will enjoy wearing and working out in the new PT uniforms.

"The new PT uniform looks better, and performs better than the current PT uniform," Wylie added.

Hackers alter website

Tonya Johnson
Army News Service

Computer hackers altered the Army's website at www.army.mil sometime between 8 p.m. Sunday and 5 a.m. Monday.

Administrators haven't figured out who is responsible for the latest incident involving prominent government agencies. According to reports, hackers have also attacked White House, FBI and NASA web sites recently.

Pentagon workers noticed the altered Army web site early Monday morning, and repaired it within an hour. Hackers had changed the web site by putting white lettering on a black background. There were no images displayed.

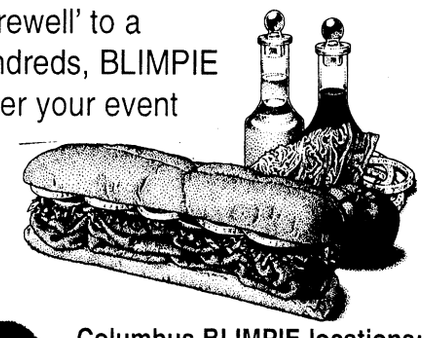
Christopher Unger, web site administrator for the Army Home Page, didn't want to go into detail about what was displayed on the web site since the investigation of who did it is on going.

"I don't want to give them (the hackers) publicity because that's what they're after," he said.

The altered web site announced that the attack "has a purpose ... to settle rumors" about the loosely organized group that claimed responsibility for attacking the White House web page in May. Another hidden message that appeared in the altered page's computer code urged people who saw it to "trust very few people."

Apparently the hackers uploaded to the Army Home Page server through the vulnerable Cold Fusion Application server's "expression evaluator." This tool allows unauthorized users with some knowledge about the Cold Fusion application server to change web pages without getting the proper authorized permission.

The Army is investigating the attack , according to Unger. He also said that military sites are a favorite for hackers.



" Military networks are inviting to hackers because we're a high profile, federal agency," he said.

In order to keep incidents like this from happening again, Unger proposed some suggestions. He would like for more intrusion protection hardware and software for computers, and more training for system administrators.

"Also, in a general sense, it (web operations security checklist) gives them (Army service members) a sense of awareness about Internet security," he said.

BBB offers warns of repair scam

Better Business Bureau

If you have filed for bankruptcy, you may be the target of a credit repair scheme called "file segregation." In this scheme, a credit repair company promises, for a fee, to help you hide your bankruptcy and establish a new credit identity to use when you apply for credit. The problem is, file segregation is illegal.

These dishonest credit repair companies make their pitches in classified ads, on radio and TV and over the Internet. If you pay their fee and sign up for their service, you may be directed to apply for an Employer Identification Number (EIN) from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). Typically, EINs-which resemble Social Security numbers-are used by businesses to report financial information to the IRS and the Social Security Administration.

When you receive your EIN, you will be instructed by the credit repair service to use that number instead of your Social Security number when applying for credit. They will also tell you to use a new mailing address.

To convince you to establish a new credit identity, the credit repair service is likely to make a variety of false claims. These false claims, along with the pitch of getting a new credit identity, should alert you to the possibility of fraud. You'll probably hear:

•Claim 1: You will not be able to credit for 10 years (the period of time bankruptcy information may stay on your credit report). While one may reject your application because of bankruptcy, another may grant you credit shortly after you've filed for bankruptcy.

•Claim 2: The company or "file segregation" program is affiliated with the federal government. The federal government does not support or work with companies that offer such programs.

•Claim 3: The "file segregation" program is legal. It is a federal crime to make any false statements on a loan or credit application, to misrepresent your Social Security number and to obtain an EIN from the IRS under false pretenses. Further, you could be charged with mail or wire fraud if you use the mail or the telephone to apply for credit and provide false information.

If you have a problem with a credit repair company, report the company to your Better Business Bureau.

Army welcomes new chief

Pvt. 2 Jody T. Fahrig
Army News Service

Gen. Eric K. Shinseki was welcomed to his new position as Army chief of staff June 22 at an arrival ceremony on Summerall Field, Fort Myer, Va.

Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera hosted the ceremony, which featured Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen as a guest speaker.

Shinseki, a native of Hawaii, became the Army's 34th Chief of Staff, replacing Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, who retired Monday.

The ceremony included a walk-through inspection of the 3rd U.S. Infantry (The Old Guard) by Shinseki as well as a full pass in review. Also entertaining the audience were The U.S. Army Band "Pershing's Own," and the Old Guard Fife and Drum Corps.

Following the inspection, Caldera welcomed Shinseki to his new position.

"Gen. Shinseki is the chief that will lead the Army into the 21st century, ensuring that — whatever the new century may bring — every day our Soldiers are contributing to keeping America strong," Caldera said.

Caldera also commended President Clinton in choosing Shinseki, saying Shinseki is a soldier whose experience and wisdom are what is needed to lead the Army into the new millennium.

"Gen. Shinseki is a leader of rock-solid integrity," Caldera said. He said the new chief of staff "knows what trained and ready look like from a muddy boots perspective."

Caldera said Shinseki is "a leader who values and honors the contribution that every Soldier has to make." Caldera also emphasized that Shinseki has exemplified the Army values and will include basic family values into the Army of tomorrow.

Cohen praised Shinseki's efforts to maintain peace in the Balkans. Shinseki served in Bosnia last year as commander of the Stabilization Force there.

"Indeed, the peace that Gen. Shinseki helped to make possible in that part of the Balkans instructs us today as we work to bring peace to the rest of the region," Cohen said.

Cohen also recognized Shinseki's earlier Army service and offered his welcome to the new chief of staff.

"Gen. Shinseki, whenever the hour has struck, you've answered America's call with noble action. Today the hour strikes again and the Army is indeed fortunate to have you at the helm. We celebrate your past, we celebrate your promise, confident that the men and women of America's Army, following your example, will always be there as well," Cohen said.

Shinseki thanked all for coming and thanked the Soldiers of the Old Guard.

"They work so hard to make this moment memorable for us,": he said.

"They look good from up here," Shinseki said, standing behind the lectern. "They look better down there."

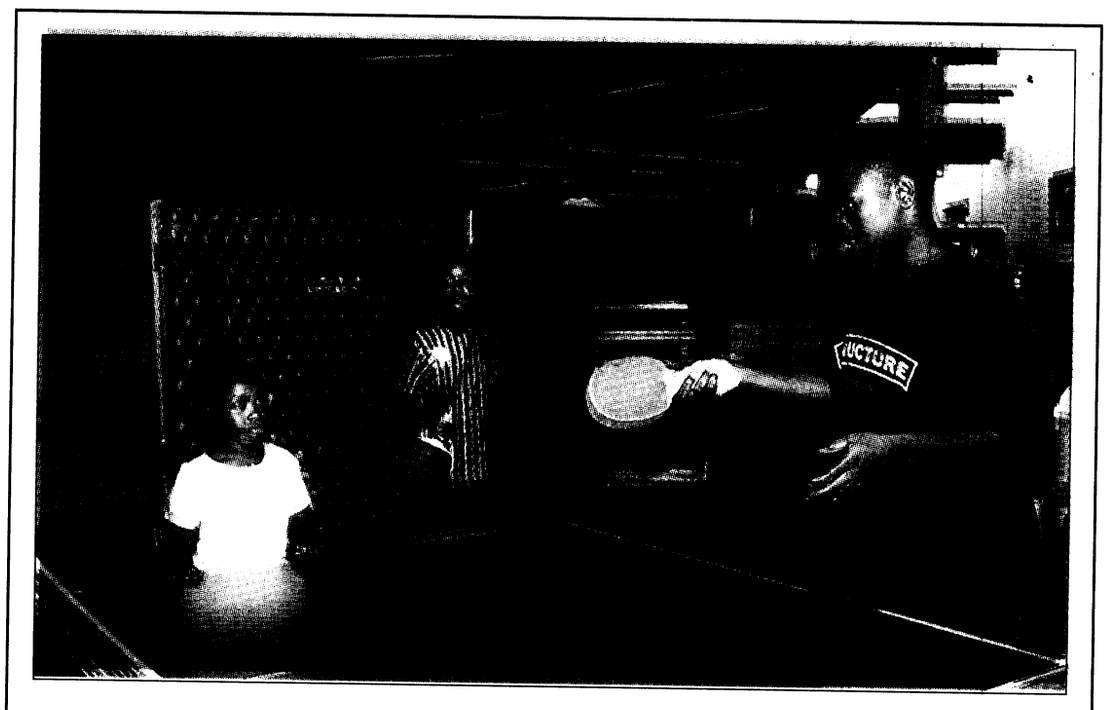
Shinseki recognized past leaders such as Gen. John Pershing and Gen. Creighton Abrams who rebuilt the Army and promised to continue that building process.

"We will build on their legacy by providing the leadership that keeps this Army pre-eminent in land warfare," he said. "We will aspire to be the most esteemed institution in the nation, the most respected army in the world, the most feared ground combat force to those whose actions would threaten the interests of the United States."

"We know we have a non-negotiable contract with the American people to provide a trained and ready Army on demand," Shinseki said.

Shinseki discussed his views on improving Army life for Soldiers and their families, promising health care and educational opportunities to families of deployed Soldiers.

Shinseki also complimented Gen. Reimer's successful measures to integrate the Reserve and National Guard components of the Army.



"Today I declare that we are the Army," Shinseki said. "Totally integrated with a unity of purpose. No longer the Total Army, no longer the one Army. We are the Army," he said, "and we will march into the 21st century as the Army."

Shinseki graduated from West Point in 1965. A Vietnam veteran, he was wounded on two separate occasions.

Shinseki has served as assistant S-1 (personnel) with the XXIV Corps, Vietnam; as an English instructor at West Point; as a Force Integration staff officer at the Pentagon; as commander in chief, U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army, and as commander of the Stabilization Force in Bosnia.

His awards and decorations include the Defense Distinguished Service Medal, the Distinguished Service Medal, the Legion of Merit (with oak leaf cluster), the Bronze Star with "V" Device (with 2 oak leaf clusters), the Purple Heart (with one oak leaf cluster), the Meritorious Service Medal (with two oak leaf clusters) and the Army Achievement Medal.

Shinseki has attended the Armor Officer Advanced Course, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and the National War College. He also has a bachelor's degree from the U.S. Military Academy and master's in English from Duke University in North Carolina.

BBB encourages 'read before you sign'

Better Business Bureau

There are many purchases that require you to sign a contract, such as ordering merchandise from door-to-door salesperson, hiring a contractor for a home improvement project or obtaining a loan. Contracts are legal documents that are designed to protect both the customer and the business involved. A contract allows the business to define, in specific terms, the extent of its obligation for the delivery of a product or service, while committing the consumer to the price to be paid once a product or service is received. It also provides reasonable assurance to the consumer that the product or service will be received for the price and time constraints agreed upon.

Once a contract is signed, it generally cannot be changed or broken unless both parties agree. To protect yourself, the BBB suggests you read and thoroughly understand the contract before you sign. The time to change the agreement by adding or removing conditions that you are willing to agree to, is prior to signing the contract.

The BBB offers the following tips to consider before you sign a contract:

•Be wary of vaguely worded provisions, exclusions or limitations that could later pose a problem.

•Request that confusing or ambiguous statements be either deleted or clarified to your satisfaction.

•Don't be pressured into signing a contract before you're ready. Be sure you understand all terms and conditions.

•Keep a copy of the signed contract. Your copy of the contract is the only proof you have of the conditions of the agreement.

•Make sure that all oral promises are included in the contract. Keep in mind that oral promises are not always legally binding.

•All parts of the contract should be completed before you sign. Never sign a blank contract.

•In some cases, have your contract reviewed by a legal counsel before signing.

James Traylor Jr., a 17-year-old student from Spencer High School, spends his summer vacation volunteering at the Youth Services Recreation Center. Among various duties, Traylor shares his love of art with the children who come to YS.

Volunteer: Spencer student shares time, talent with Benning youth

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

In light of the recent tragedies occurring in high schools throughout the country, there is no doubt that teenagers have been branded with a negative stigma. However, there are those like 17-year-old James Traylor Jr., who are proving day after day that not all teens deserve a bad rap.

Traylor, son of Sarah and Staff Sgt. James Traylor, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), isn't spending his summer vacation working at a local fast food restaurant nor is he spending it hanging around the house playing video games. This soon-to-be Spencer High School senior is doing something that could possibly make a difference in the lives of bundles of young children — he is a volunteer at the Youth Services Center on Fort Benning.

For the last four years Traylor has spent nights after school, weekends and even entire summers lending a hand at the YS Center. Besides the usual jobs of helping out behind the desk, cleaning up and playing with the children, there is one thing he does that gets him noticed — he draws.

"I like to draw things kids can relate to," Traylor said. "If I can draw something people can relate to, then it makes it worthwhile."

Walking down the entrance hall of the YS Center visitors are sure to encounter huge sketches inspired by such video games as Mortal Kombat and Mario Brothers. But drawing isn't his only venture, in fact just this week Traylor began an art class aimed at teaching children the basics of art.

The class which has enlisted close to 10 kids already will be taught Tuesday through Friday at the YS Center and is open to anyone who is interested in learning how to draw better, Traylor said.

He went on to explain that the idea for the class came from all of the attention he receives from his drawings.

"They (kids) always want to know how I draw like I do. And they are always saying things like, 'I want to draw just like you when I get older or will you draw this for me.' I started thinking if they want to to draw like me, maybe I should start an art class."

It didn't take long for his idea to take affect and now Traylor spends his hours as a volunteer and teacher at the center.

"Last year I tutored kids in math and reading, but I had to do what others told me. Now with this class I'm doing my own thing and it's really exciting."

According to Cora Edwards, recreation assistant at YS and friend of Traylor's for the last 10 years, he is setting the example for other teens to follow.

She said he is a good kid who will go on to do great things.

"He's going to go far, especially in his skill, which is his knowledge of drawing," Edwards said. "The kids love him and always want him to draw pictures for them to take home. A lot of them want to be like him. If they take James' example, they will go far."

Six-year-old Vanessa Clemons jokingly described Traylor as crazy. She said he is a very good artist and she hopes maybe one day she can draw as good as him.

"I didn't even know it was him who drew those pictures until a little bit ago," Clemons said referring to the sketches that line the hall. "They are so good. I really like the Mario Bros one. I want to be able to draw like he can."

After four years one may wonder what it is that keeps Traylor coming back to YS. But for him its simple — the environment.

"The kids are great and the staff is nice. I keep coming back because it is just a much better environment than so many other places I've been. It's an easy job and I enjoy doing it."

He said another plus to volunteering for YS is being a friend and confidant to the children.

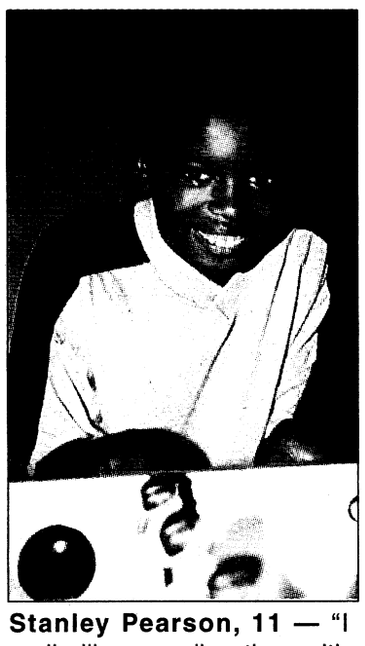
"When I'm around kids, age doesn't matter. They are just like another person to me. And they know when they have problems they can come talk to me. If they are having troubles at home or they have gotten into a fight, I sit down and talk to them. Just to know they are comfortable telling me things is another reason I keep coming back."

He stressed that all teenagers should think about volunteering because there are so many advantages to doing so.

"Volunteering helps prepare you for a real job, it also looks good on your transcripts. There are a lot of good things about volunteering, but mostly it's just good practice."

Traylor said after high school he plans to go to art college and hopefully fulfill his dream of one day drawing cartoons for Disney.

Right now though he is content with just working with the kids and inspiring them to go on and do bigger and better things.



Monique McKnight, 13, sketches a face during Traylor's art class.

voices of summer

Even though 90 degree days and torrential downpours have plagued the summer, Fort Benning children are still out in full force living up every moment of their vacation. With the prospects of Fourth of July on the horizon, the Bayonet waded through swarms of wide-eyed youth to find out what their favorite thing about Independence Day is. This is what some had to say ...

Stanley Pearson, 11 — "I really like spending time with my family ... and of course, the fireworks."

Brandy Fogg, 11 — "I like the different colors from the fireworks and being with my family and friends."

Malcom Carter, 6 — "Shooting fireworks! I like the way they go up in the air and make pretty colors."

Natasha MaKayla Matos, 5 — "I like it when the fireworks go into the sky and 'pops' come out."

Max Ace, 9 — "Our whole family is half-German so we only partially take part in the celebration, but I like that I get to stay up late and watch all of the specials on TV.

Jessica Stevens, 11 — "I like the noise and the colors from the fireworks. I like it when they light up the sky."

Vitamin E helps prevent heart disease

2nd Lt. Heidi Weaver
Brooke Army Medical Center, Texas

Heart disease is a growing concern for the American population today. After all, it is the leading cause of death in men and women.

For years, vitamin E has been rumored to aid in the prevention of heart disease. Studies are now showing this may be true. In a 1996 study of post-menopausal women, vitamin E intake was linked with a reduced risk of death from heart disease. In two 1994 studies of both men and women, those who added vitamin E to their diet had a decreased risk of heart disease. What is the powerful punch behind this essential vitamin?

Vitamin E is an antioxidant. In other words, it helps prevent damage to the body's cells and in this way decreases the risk of heart disease.

As an antioxidant, vitamin E protects against the damage that makes low-density lipoprotein (LDL) the "bad" cholesterol. Oxidized or damaged LDL cholesterol becomes sticky and builds up on artery walls. This leads to clogged arteries, causing heart attacks. Vitamin E may help prevent this damage.

This all sounds great, but where can we get this vitamin?

Currently, the best means to get vitamin E is still through your diet.

Vitamin E is found in many foods, including vegetable oils, salad dressings, nuts, leafy green vegetables, wheat germ, whole grains, seeds and peanut butter.

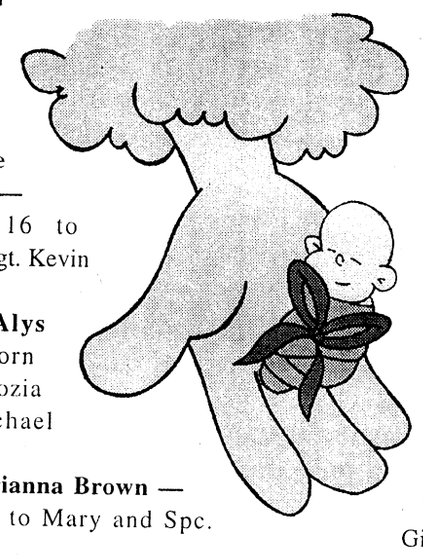
In foods, the best form of vitamin E is alpha-tocopherol. This is the unit the Recommended Daily Allowance (RDA) is based upon.

The RDA for women is 8 milligrams of alpha-tocopherol, while the RDA for men is 10 milligrams of alpha-tocopherol. Consuming a diet between 2,000 and 3,000 calories should provide between seven and 11 mg of alpha-tocopherol, enough to meet the RDA.

However, the average intake for women and older Americans is lower than 2,000 calories, suggesting a supplement may be necessary in addition to a well-balanced diet. New Dietary Reference Intakes (DRI) for vitamin E are being developed and may show an increase in the recommended amount to match the usual intake of about 100 milligrams in research studies.

Vitamin E is a fat-soluble vitamin. This means fat must be present in the diet in order for it to be absorbed. A clinical deficiency or toxicity of this vitamin is rare but can occur. Symptoms of deficiency most often occur in premature babies and individuals who have problems absorbing fat. Symptoms include retina damage, anemia and muscle weakness.

It has not yet been determined if high amounts of vitamin E are necessary to produce the best protective effect against heart disease.



It is important to note that very high doses of vitamin E, usually taken as a supplement, may decrease the efficiency of absorption of vitamin E from the diet and supplement.

High levels of vitamin E have been reported to cause muscle weakness, fatigue, double vision, nausea, diarrhea and gas. High doses can also cause problems with the functions of other fat-soluble vitamins such as A, D and K.

There are dangers in taking too much vitamin E, especially if you are on blood-thinning or anti-clotting drugs. High amounts of vitamin E will increase the action of these drugs, causing serious problems. Always consult a doctor or dietitian before taking a vitamin supplement.

It is important to do everything we can to prevent the occurrence of heart disease. The answer may be in our own kitchen cabinets and refrigerators. My advice: enjoy a wide variety of foods with vitamin E. You may be on your way to a healthier heart — and that's the powerful punch of vitamin E!

BBB explains debit card

Better Business Bureau

In spite of the growing number of consumers using debit cards, many still don't know much about them. With a debit card, also known as a check card, the amount you spend is limited by what you have in your bank account.

Debit cards look like credit cards or ATM (automated teller machine) cards, but operate like cash or a personal check. When you use a debit card, your money is quickly deducted from your checking or savings account.

There are two types of debit transactions, both often housed on the very same card that your bank sends you as a replacement for your old ATM card. The first are online transactions you perform at an ATM. Just put in a personal identification code (PIN) and funds are electronically transferred from your account as you designate. The second are offline transactions: present your card in a store and it is treated like a credit card sale. The money used to pay for the transaction is then deducted from your checking account, usually within a day or two.

According to a survey generated by the National Consumers League, many consumers don't understand their liability limits, and are confused about protections offered by banks and debit card providers.

The Better Business Bureau suggests before you use your debit card, call your bank or issuing institution and ask the following:

•What are my liability limits if my card is lost or stolen?

•Am I charged any fees for using my debit card?

•Is there a cap on how much money I can debit per day? Per month? What are the limits?

•Do I have the same purchase protections with my debit card that I have with a credit card?

•Can I get my photograph on my card?

•If my card is lost or stolen and money is taken out of my account, how soon will it be replenished by the bank?

Q: Help! I received a DUI off post recently, and I need to know the possible punishment and consequences.

A: First and foremost, drinking and driving is a serious offense, and can have far reaching consequences; therefore, it is always advisable to have a designated driver when you go out drinking. A lot of people don't realize how little alcohol is necessary to blow above the legal limit of 0.08 (Georgia's legal limit.) For an average person, 3 to 4 beers is sufficient to make your alcohol concentration above the legal limit.

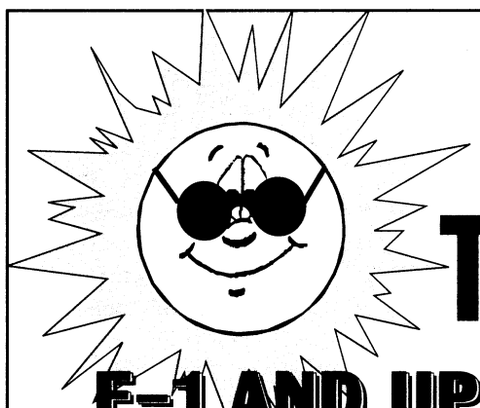
In the event you are charged with drinking under the influence of alcohol, drugs or other intoxicating substances (DUI,) O.C.G.A. 40-6-391 prescribes the following punishment:

A first offense with no prior convictions within the previous five years shall be treated as a misdemeanor with a fine of not less than $300.00 or more than $1,000.00, plus statutory penalties (add approximately twenty percent to the foregoing fine amount.) Further, you are required to complete at least 40 hours of community service. Additionally, the statute prescribes a period of imprisonment in jail of not less than 10 days, nor more than 12 months, all but 24 hours may be suspended by the court at its discretion.

A second conviction within five years shall also be treated as a misdemeanor, however, the fine increases to an amount of not less than $600.00 or more than $1,000.00, plus statutory penalties. The jail time increases to a term of not less than 90 days or more than 12 months, all but 48 hours may be suspended. The community service requirement is increased to 80 hours.

A third conviction within a five year period is considered an aggravated misdemeanor which will result in a fine of not less than $1,000.00 or more than $5,000.00. Also, the statute prescribes a mandatory period of imprisonment of not less than 120 days or more than 12 months, all but 10 days may be suspended at the discretion of the court. Also, the community service requirement increases to 20 days. Additionally, upon the third conviction, the notice of conviction, together with a photograph of the person, will be published in the local newspaper in the county of conviction.

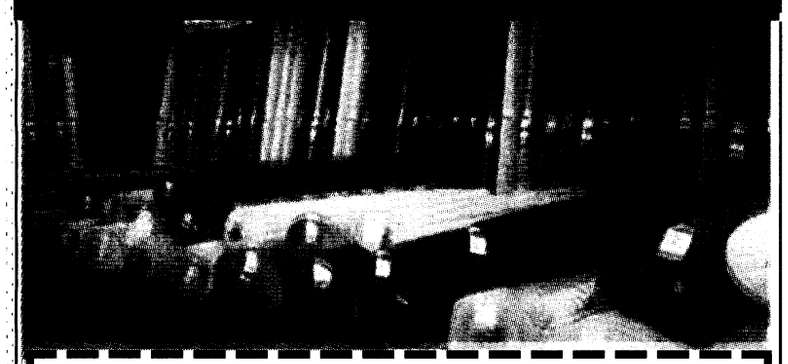
Finally, upon the third conviction within five years, the driver is labeled a habitual driver such that the driver's license is revoked for a period of five years.



In addition to the foregoing, under O.C.G.A. 40-5-63, the driver's license of any person convicted of DUI shall be suspended. Upon the first conviction, the license is suspended for a period of 12 months. Upon the second conviction, the driver's license is suspended for a period of three years and for a period of five years for the third conviction.

For each suspension period, at the end of 120 days the driver may seek reinstatement of the driver's license upon the completion of a DUI Alcohol or Drug Use Risk Reduction Program, as approved by the Department of Human Resources, plus pay a reinstatement fee of $210 to the Department of Public Safety. Even if you do not apply for reinstatement after 120 days, your license will not be reinstated at the end of the suspension period until such time as the foregoing risk reduction program is completed.

Finally, upon the second and subsequent convictions, upon reinstatement, the driver's license shall bear a red stripe indicating a previous conviction for DUI and shall bear such red stripe for a period of seven years. If after seven years there are no more convictions, the driver may apply for a driver's license without a red stripe.



Please note, the foregoing are state court punishments and consequences for DUI and does not reflect any military administrative action that may be taken against the Soldier. Think before you get behind the wheel of a motor vehicle after drinking alcoholic beverages because the price for such action is high indeed.

Post relishes good cone crop

Robert Larimore
Directorate of Public Works

Have you ever noticed the "bananas" growing on the longleaf pine trees? Well, those aren't bananas. They are longleaf pine cones that occur in generous amounts only once every five to seven years.

The cones are the largest of the southern pines, being six to 10 inches long and are light green in color, similar to an unripe banana.

During normal years, there are generally about zero to 25 cones per tree, but this year some trees have as many as 150 cones or more.

Also, past experience indicates that during good years with more cones per tree there is also more seed per cone, approximately 15. This means Fort Benning is having one of its best longleaf seed crops in years and we plan to take full advantage of it.

Since the good cone crop was fist detected approximately 14 months ago during annual strobili (cone) counts, Natural Resources Management Branch personnel have been working diligently to prepare the seed bed to achieve maximum natural regeneration.

During the past two years approximately 50,000 acres of pine and hardwood stands have been prescribed burned. Burning reduces ground cover, which allows the seed to reach mineral soil and germinate. Also, approximately 10,000 acres of timber have been thinned which reduces competition and allows light to penetrate through the canopy to the forest floor promoting growth of the longleaf seedlings.

However, not all areas on Fort Benning have a natural seed source in place, which means artificial methods will have to be used to establish the longleaf.

To assist with artificial methods a seed source is still critical because seedlings have to be nursery grown prior to outplanting. For this reason Fort Benning is planning to collect seed from its own longleaf trees and grow seedlings from them. The advantages of this are that a local genetic seed source will be assured and seedling costs will be cheaper. In fact, we plan to collect enough seed by contract, at no cost to the government to use on Fort Benning over the next five years.

According to Dr. Bill Boyer of the U.S. Forest Service Southern Research Station, Fort Benning has one of the only three known good cone crops in the southeast United States. This means longleaf seed will be in high demand. We plan to take advantage of this opportunity by exchanging longleaf seed for contract services to collect and process the seed.

In other words a contractor will come to Fort Benning, collect cones, and process the seed from the cones, returning a percentage of the seed back to Fort Benning. Fort Benning will pay no money and will get seed to grow seedlings for outplanting during future years.

These good cone years play an important role in perpetuating Fort Benning's initiative to reestablish the longleaf pine ecosystem. With only about 8,000 acres of pine stands that are dominated by longleaf pine, there is a long road ahead to reach our goal of converting most of the 90,000 acres of pine stand that we manage to longleaf dominated stands.

The use of both natural and artificial regeneration will be necessary to achieve this milestone. Longleaf pine, which once was widespread across what is now Fort Benning, is much better suited than other pines to military training needs as well as the ecosystem as a whole. The longleaf pine is much longer lived, more insect and disease resistant and has a greater fire tolerance than other southern pines found on Fort Benning.

There is still longleaf pine scattered across the Fort Benning landscape, but few in numbers. Through continued management activities that promote longleaf pine and continued help from Mother Nature to produce bananas on our longleaf pine trees we see a bright future for Fort Benning's evolving ecosystem.

Notice of change

Residents in Davis Hill and Bouton Heights, Perkins Place and McGraw Manor will call 689-5400 for all maintenance and repair needs. This includes repair of kitchen appliances (i.e. refrigerators, stoves, garbage disposals, vent hoods and fire suppression systems). Residents in all other Family Housing areas will call 689-5400 for kitchen appliance repair while continuing to call 545-2135 for all other maintenance needs.

For more information, call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Holiday refuse, recycle and yard waste schedule

There will be no yard waste picked up in Family Housing Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be on July 12. There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups Monday. Port, Kawamura, Fernandez Streets and Indianhead Terrace areas normally scheduled for pick-up on Monday will be picked up on Tuesday. Refuse and recycle collection in Family Housing for Tuesday through July 9 will be picked up as normal scheduled.

Georgia CPA's give tips for combating 'bug'

Georgia Society of CPAs

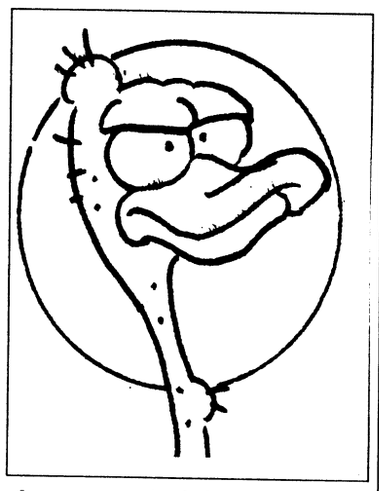
If you've been sitting by, complacently watching companies, government entities and other organizations struggle with addressing the year 2000 technology problem, it's time you took some action of your own. The Georgia Society of CPAs points out that the so-called "millennium bug" — that is, the inability of some computers and computerized systems to correctly recognize dates after 1999 — can impact you directly.

Any computer-generated information you receive can have potential errors — errors that can cost you hundreds or even thousands of dollars. Similarly, if you use computers for your own financial or tax calculations, you also may experience some difficulties. Here are a few preventative measures recommended by CPAs.

•Inventory your home computers. If you purchased computers within the last year or two, chances are the hardware is Y2K compliant. However, it's wisest to check with the vendor to make sure the equipment is compliant so you can avoid malfunctions down the road.

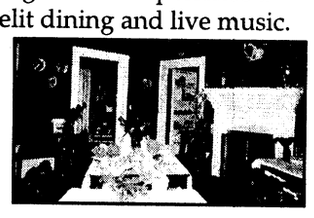
•Check all your software. Take stock of everything from e-mail programs to tax-preparation software to financial management software. Check the manufacturer's web site or contact the company directly to make sure these software programs are Y2K compliant.

•Identify household appliances and equipment with date sensitive information. For example, fax machines, camcorders, cameras and security systems can all rely on electronic date devices. If the equipment is not programmed correctly, you can risk having more than an incorrect date displayed — the equipment may not work at all.



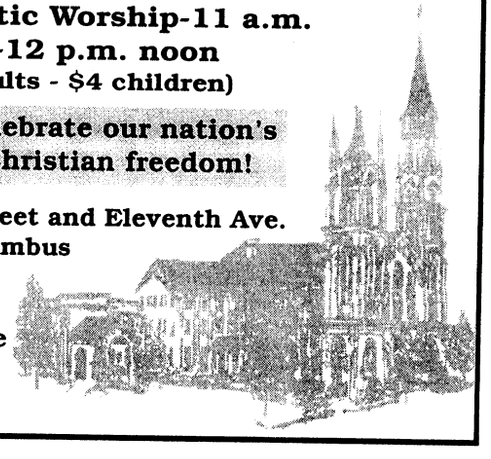
•Track all financial transactions. Be sure you have good records of all your financial transactions, including those conducted through banks, mutual fund and brokerage accounts. Double check them throughout this year and the beginning of the millennium to ensure there are no errors.

•Monitor loan and credit card payments. Keep canceled checks as proof of mortgage payments, car loans and other debt payments. Doing so will help you verify the status of these loans should you have a problem at the turn of the century.

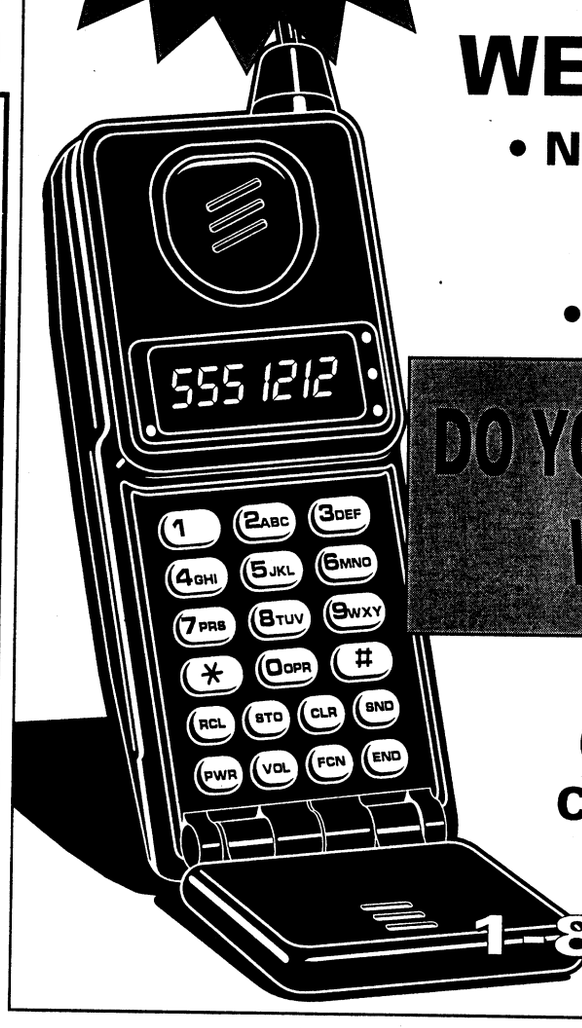


•Save important information on computer disks. If you use your computer to conduct financial transactions or for recordkeeping purposes, be sure to download all this information onto a disk. This is good practice not only in preparation for the millennium, but at all times so you don't risk losing important information.

•Contact your tax and financial providers. Ask them about the steps they have taken to address the year 2000 issue and whether they have ascertained how others they work with, such as stockbrokers and insurance agents, have addressed the issue.



Finally, if you have concerns about how your local government, utility company, telephone provider or even children's school is addressing the year 2000 problem, contact them about your concern.



An ostrich's eye is bigger than its brain.

Holiday celebrates freedom

Chaplain (Col.) William J. DeLeo
USAIC Chaplains Office

The fourth of July is certainly one of the most important dates in the United States' history. We could say it is the most important date, but there are other dates which parallel it in importance, such as the Boston Tea Party and the convening of the First Continental Congress. But on July 4 over 200 years ago, our founding fathers drew a line in the sand declaring our right to self government.

reflections

Even so, we also know that, when asked, some Americans don't know the meaning of the date, or what year the Declaration of Independence was signed. Most U.S. cities don't even have big parades anymore. I still remember waking up early and getting my place on the curbside in my hometown in order not to miss one minute of the parade. A parade that celebrated not just the fourth of July, but the rights that were declared on that date. And that's what we fight to protect. We train and work and deploy so that our strength as a nation remains uncontested in the world. We slip and our rights slip. Not to be strong is to invite weakness. To invite weakness is to fear domination. We don't want domination because we value the rights upon which our nation was founded, and we don't want any of them taken away by anyone.

One of those rights is the right to practice our religious faith as we choose. We may take this for granted, but we know that religious factions are at war with one another in several parts of the world. This right to practice our religious faith also points clearly to the belief in this so strongly that the government considers it the people's responsibility to place Chaplains in the armed forces to continue to guarantee that right to military members.

This holiday weekend, don't simply take the day off, but take a moment to be thankful that our nation stands for. And, yes, pause for a prayer of thanksgiving for those freedoms. When we do this, we do two things. We reaffirm our loyalty to our nation's goals and we reaffirm one of our basic beliefs, that God is. Now, get out there and bask in the freedoms our nation guarantees.

Lack of trust ruins many marriages

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

For many people, marriage simply does not work. In the eyes of some, it is a subtle form of slavery. To children whose lives have been wrecked because of divorcing parents, it is often viewed with fear and anger. For many young people, marriage is outdated, something to be avoided by simply "just living together without all that baggage" it brings.

reflections

Marriages die because of no trust. One spouse does not trust the other or neither trusts each other. Communication? Forget about it!

In answer to the Biblical perspective, "It is not good that men should live alone," thousands would reply, "I would rather be alone than risk marriage." For many, God's word about marriage as an answer to loneliness seems to be fantasy.

Marriage is supposed to be a joyful and good relation. In fact, God intended for marriage to be "very good." However, the "goodness" of marriage has been so distorted that many find it offensive. We seem to never accept God's goodness to us or receive his gifts.

Elizabeth Achtemeier in her book, The Committed Marriage, has this to say about couples whose marriages are floundering, "One thing is certain. God still holds out the gracious invitation to us to take advantage of his mercy. He intended for us to live in a "very good" creation, and we corrupted that goodness. Yet even now he extends to us the possibility of wholeness and joy. Our marital unions can be made good again, our dreadful disruptions can be cured. There is no limit to the inexhaustible working of God's desire for our abundant life."

When a couple make their marriage vows, they are making a commitment to the marriage. However, 50 percent of all marriages end in divorce. For a marriage to be a committed marriage, it needs to be a total commitment. In effect, the couple is saying to each other: "I will be with you, no matter what. I believe that our marriage can work; I want it to work; and I will do my part to make it work."

Is such a commitment possible or should couples only commit themselves to each other as long as they love each other? I believe that such a commitment is possible especially so when the couple is committed to God. When a couple keeps God top priority in their marriage, then there is no problem so great that God is not greater still.

To know the rich blessings marriage can bring, a couple must commit themselves without reservation to each other and to the Lord. Marriage ... who needs it? Those men and women who desire to experience the joy that comes from becoming one, separate yet wonderfully united in gratitude, joy and love.

One quick snap of the trigger in Troy State University's weapons course,and this hands-on education will leave you saying ... something new, you'll be certain that ...

This ain't your average college

David Brigham practices accuracy shooting drills during Troy State's Weapons class held weekly at Fort Benning's English Range. The class gives students a hands-on approach to weapon

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If the day ins and day outs of attending college classes have got you itching to trade in your pencil and paper for something more exciting, Troy State University at Fort Benning may have just what you are looking for.

Among the usual math, science and English classes offered at Troy, there is a class that tosses the books aside and goes for something a little heavier — a 9mm Glock pistol that is.

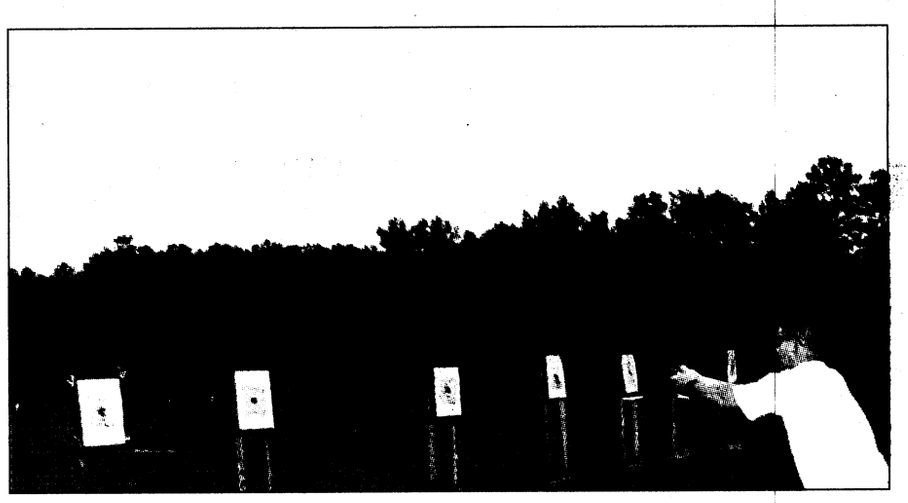
It is the 200 level, 5 semester credit hour Weapons Class. Instructed by Jim Graham, Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club assistant manager, the 40-hour course is a far cry from the usual desk, chair and lecture routine.

The course is taught every term and each Sunday from 8 a.m. to noon students take to English Range to learn how to shoot. There is no wishing and wanting in this class because the very first day out has each of the participants paired with a 9mm ready to take on their target.

Graham said the class revolves around pistol marksmanship, safety and ammunition reloading. Students learn the basics all the way up to some of the more complicated drills.

"This course encompasses everything you can realistically do with a hand gun at an intermediate rate," Graham said. "In plain English, what that means is it teaches you what it takes to defend yourself."

On the first day, students are told to build themselves a target and head out to the range to fire. They can then choose to use a pistol of their own or one of the club's many Glock pistols. No more than 30 minutes into class, they are lined up for the pre-test which times and scores their ability to fire two successive bullets at a target.



However, it is just a pre-test and over the next few hours they learn what they need to know about how to properly fire the weapon. This includes everything from grip and stance to trigger control and sight picture. The next 10 weeks consist of learning new and more difficult things such as rapid reload procedures, roll over prone, double taps and anti-armor drills, Graham explained.

He remarked that although the class moves quite rapidly it is suited for almost anyone — even for those who have never fired a pistol before.

"Everyone is welcome," Graham said. "No one should be afraid to come out, because they will start at step one and ultimately learn how to use a weapon in a safe and effective manner."

This is an especially pertinent skill in

This allows the student a chance to learn from not only his shooting, but learn from his partner's as well.

NCOs defeat officers in Ranger softball game

Fielding error pushes team out in front for 10-9 victory

Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Once again the backbone of 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment showed the officers of the unit who really "leads the way" during the battalion's annual officer versus NCO softball game June 23.

Utilizing the team's speed and power, the Ranger NCOs slid past the officers 10 to 9 in the early evening battle held at Engineer Field.

Despite the onset of rain, the slickened field and limited visibility didn't hold back both teams as they battled for the coveted first-place finish and bragging rights.

One of the officers' guest players, West Point Cadet James Roberts, was disappointed at the officers' finish, but said they just couldn't stop the talented enlisted team.

"I was just really scared out there," he said of the NCOs' heavy hitting power. "I can't wait to get back to New York."

The NCOs contributed their success in part to their coach, Sgt. 1st Class Dennis Smith, who's tireless mentoring and encouragement could be heard throughout the entire game, mostly followed by the word "Cletus."

The officer's team was led by first baseman Lt. Col. Daniel B. Allyn, battalion commander, and coached by Capt. Louis Zeisman, Headquarter and Headquarters Company, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

When asked about the defeat, Zeisman was of few words.

"It was all Lieutenant Cooks' fault," joked Zeisman referring to the home run hit by Sgt. 1st Class Clide Glenn that somehow went through Cook's glove onto the ground.

Glenn, however, was unavailable for comment as he was too busy bragging of his game-winning feat.

In addition to a softball game, the battalion also conducts an officer , NCO game is held annually as well as a football game in the fall and other events throughout the year.

According to 1st Sgt. Richard Gatien, HHC, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., the games are held to promote esprit de core and camaraderie, which are valuable assets to the Rangers both in games like this one and in combat.

Sgt. 1st Class Clide Glenn rounds third base after swatting himself a homerun during the June 23 Ranger Softball battle held at Engineer Field. The NCOs slid past the officers in the annual battle, edging them out by one point, 10 to 9.

Class: College students learn proper weapons techniques for credit

This is an especially pertinent skill in this day and age, Graham added.

"Times are getting worse. I believe they are getting worse from my perspective. I don't think anyone, including women, should be hesitant about coming out here and learning what it takes to defend themselves."

Cassandra Canion, attended last quarters class but still comes out on Sundays to help students and practice her shooting.

"I keep coming back because it is fun and I like helping others, especially the women. I want to help get them acquainted with the weapon. A lot of them are scared or totally against shooting, but it is something they should know so they can protect themselves."

Canion jokingly added that another reason she keeps coming back is so she can get better at shooting than her husband, who is a military policeman.

Of course, learning how to effectively shoot a weapons isn't just about protecting yourself, its also about protecting those around you, Graham said.

"Spraying and praying is so very dangerous. Your kids could be in the next room. Your neighbors are next door. What we push here is that you are legally, morally and ethically responsible for every round you fire."

For anyone who isn't interested in going the college route, there are other ways of learning how to handle a weapon. The rifle and pistol club not only has memberships, but it also sponsors two matches a month, a pistol and rifle match.

Graham mentioned that first time shooters in matches have decreased entry fees and stressed that newcomers are always welcome.

"If someone comes out here and maybe can kind of shoot or can't shoot at all ... it's one on one up at that line," Graham said. "So safety is front loaded. We are very helpful about talking them through. This is probably one of the most 'new person' friendly places that I know of."

To just come out and shoot, however, a person must be a member of the club.

A year membership is $35 for E-5 and above and $25 for E-4 and below. There are also special partial rates for transient Soldiers who will not shoot at the club for the entire year.

Anyone who wants to find out more information about the Weapons Course or the club and what it offers can stop by English Range from 12 to 8 p.m. Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and 12 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Or call the range at 689-3371.

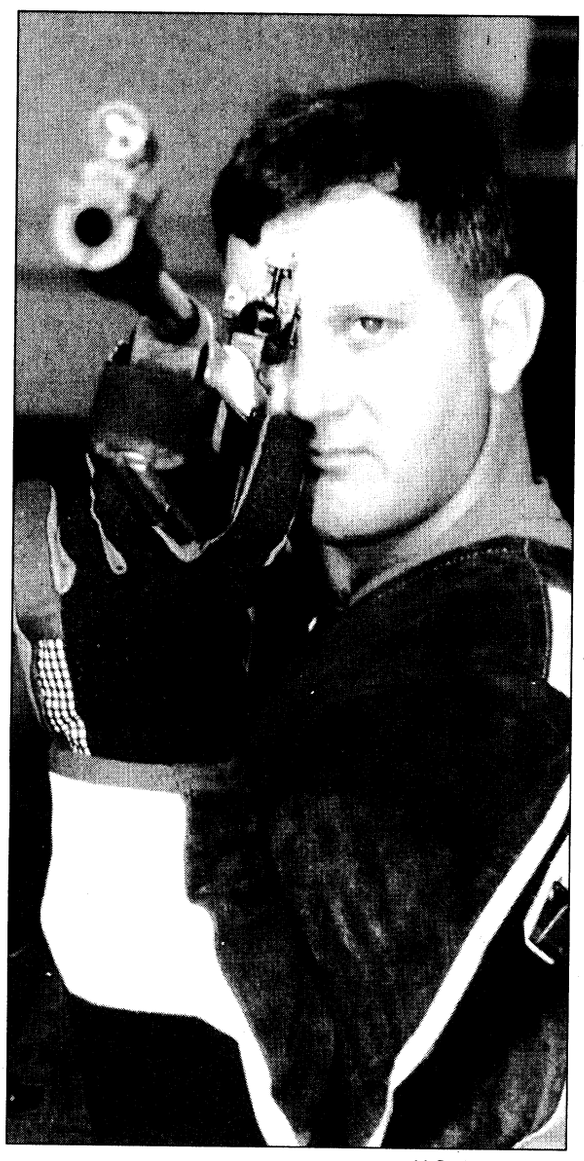
Olympian nabs national shooting championship

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

An international rifle shooter with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) has won a national championship. Glenn A. Dubis beat 78 other competitors to win the Gold Medal in the USA Shooting Men's Smallbore Three Position National Championships at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Complex in Atlanta June 20. USA Shooting of 1 Olympic Plaza Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.



Last year, Dubis won Gold Medals in the Air and Smallbore Prone Rifle matches and a spot on the U.S. World Championship Shooting Team. He also picked up a Gold Medal in the 1998 300-Meter Three Position National Championship and a Silver Medal in the 1998 Air Rifle Championship. The three-time Olympian was also named as the 1997 USA Shooting Male Rifle Shooter of the Year after winning individual and team Gold Medals in the Men's Free Rifle Prone Matches at the Championship of the Americas.

Raised in Bethel Park, Pa., Dubis graduated from Bethel Park High School in 1977 and received a bachelor's degree in agronomy from Pennsylvania State University in 1981. In 1989, he completed a master's degree in sports management at the U.S. Sports Academy in Daphne, Ala. He is the son of David Dubis of Morgantown, W. Va.

Dubis joined the Army in 1982 at which time he started shooting with the USAMU. From 184 to 1985, he was a platoon leader for 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, 197th Infantry.

After completing the Infantry Officers Advanced course in 1985, he came back to the USAMU as a shooter and competed until 1989. In 1989, he attended Combined Arms Services and Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., then returned briefly to the USAMU to serve as the assistant operations and training officer.

Next Dubis received an assignment for Germany where he served as adjutant with the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, 2nd Armor Division. In 1990, he moved to brigade level as the officer in charge of the emergency operations officer. In 1991, Dubis returned to the USAMU as an international rifle shooter.

USAMU international rifle shooter Glenn Dubis scored a national title this month.

He has been awarded the Meritorious Service Medal, three Army Commendations Medals, four Army Achievement Medals, the National Defense Service Medal, the Army Service Ribbon, the Overseas Service Ribbon, the Southwest Asia Medal with three battle stars, the Kuwait Liberation Medal, the President's Hundred Tab and the Distinguished Rifleman Badge.

Dubis, who began shooting in 1975, has numerous marksmanship accomplishments. He is a three-time World Rifle Champion, a five-time World Military Rifle Champion and set or tied six world records. In 1996, he held two slots on the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team in Free Rifle and Air Rifle , he was the World Military Rifle Champion and set a new military and world record.

Dubis won a Gold Medal in Men's 3X20 at the 300-Meter National Championships in 1995 as well as being a member of the Gold Medal winning team in Air Rifle at the Pan American Games.

He also won a Silver Medal in 300-Meter Rapid Fire at the Military World Championships, a Bronze Medal in Ar Rifle at the Pan American Games, a Bronze Medal in Men's 3X40 at the 300-Meter National Championships and took third place in 50-Meter English Rifle in the Interservice International Championships.

In 1994, he was the World Rifle Champion and set a new world record in 300-Meter 3X40. He also won a Gold Medal in Men's Air Rifle at the Pan American Tryouts, Gold Medals in 300-Meter English and Three-Position Rifle a the Interservice International Championships and a Gold Medal in Three-Position Free Rifle at the USA National Shooting Championships.

Dubis was a World Military Championships Team member in 1992, the World Rifle Champion in 300-Meter 3X20 and set a world record in 300-Meter 3X40 standing in 1990.

In 1989, he won a Silver Medal in Three-Position Free Rifle at the Pan American Games and was the World Military Rifle Champion and a member of the 1988 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team, placing fifth in Three-Position Free Rifle.

Dubis was the 1987 World Military Rifle Champion and won a Gold Medal in Three-Position Free Rifle and a Silver in Air Rifle at the Pan American Games.

He set two world records — 300 Meter Free Rifle and 50-Meter Free Rifle kneeling — in 1986 as well as being the World Rifle Champion and placed sixth in Three Position Rifle at the 1984 Olympics.

Nine Soldiers net national titles

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Nine Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) have won 10 national championship titles at the USA Shooting National Championships conducted June 12-23 at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Complex in Atlanta.

3-D Scanner Gives Troops Perfect-Fitting Uniforms

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — With the help of 3-D body scanner technology, scientists and engineers are preparing to step into the future with their clothing and equipment designs.

The 3-D, or Whole Body Digitizer, technology was demonstrated here at the Ronald Reagan International Trade Center during DoD's June 9-11 Electronic Commerce Day activities. More than 600 attendees saw how the process determines uniform sizes of basic training recruits at . The Marines have been testing the machine there for about a year.

Electronic Commerce Day attendees watched as a male model clad in form-fitting olive-drab bicycle shorts stood erect on a platform as a red eye-safe laser scanned him from head to toe. The machine has four scan heads mounted on a nine-foot frame. A laser beam projected around the model's body was reflected into cameras located in each of the scan heads.

Depot clothing officer Bob Padilla said all recruits have to do is wear exercise shorts and step onto a platform — after a 17-second scan, the Whole Body Digitizer has enough information to produce perfect-fitting, custom-made uniforms. In a matter of minutes, the laser data are translated into a 3-D image that can be viewed on a computer screen. The data are printed out in 45 seconds and handed to the recruit to take to the uniform issue point.

"So far, we've scanned more than 1,000 recruits," Padilla noted. "The key is to limit the time it take to manually tape measure the recruits and do tailored alternations so they can spend more time training." While manually measuring a recruit's sleeve length, waist and chest takes less than a minute, the measurements are not as accurate as the 3-D scanner, he said.

Before the advent of the 3-D scanner, time and manpower were wasted because the fitting process began early in boot camp to ensure recruits' dress uniforms would be ready for graduation. Because diet and exercise changed recruits' body shapes, they would often need at least two subsequent fittings and alteration checks.

"The 3-D scanning technology makes it feasible to delay dress uniform issues until after most of the body changes have taken place," Padilla said. Recruits are now scanned a few days before the end of boot camp and their dress uniforms are still ready for graduation day.

Scanning faster is not only faster, but more accurate, he said, and that eliminates the numerous fittings and saves tailoring costs. It's also a morale booster because recruits don't have to spend a lot of time standing in line. For example, he said, "If I have only one person available to measure shirt sizes, the line gets pretty long when you have 350 recruits waiting for service."

Depot money managers estimate the scanning test project has saved more than $5.3 million since it started in May 1998. With the scanner, researchers can collect thousands of human body measurements more quickly and comprehensively than with the manual method, Padilla noted. The data, integrated into the supply system, has allowed the depot to reduce its uniform inventory by more than 50 percent. That has freed thousands of feet of warehouse space for other uses and means fewer people are needed to measure recruits for uniform sizes, he added.

Padilla said depot employees displaced by the scanner are given other jobs or retrained — to operate the scanning equipment.

Using the scanning technology to fit uniforms is just scratching the surface of its capabilities, according to Kathleen Robinette, director of the Computerized Anthropometric Research and Design Lab at the Air Force Research Laboratory, Wright-

Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio. She said the scanner technology has incredible, far-reaching potential for military and industry applications.

In addition to the apparel industry, Robinette said, many uses for the technology will be found in the medical community, automobile industry and the military. Medical applications include using scanner data to produce better artificial limbs, to create garments that promote healing in burn victims, to determine the progress of wound healing, and to study the relationship between body shapes and diseases.

The automobile industry can use scanner data to design better car seats and improve driver and passenger visibility and instrument panel layouts, she said.

Cyberware Inc. of Monterey, Calif., originally developed the scanner in the mid-1980s for the Air Force Research Laboratory for studies of body measurement variations in the general population worldwide. The results will be used to improve hundreds of goods and services — anything a person wears or uses, according to Robinette.

Scientists and engineers at the Army's Soldier Systems Center's laboratory in Natick, Mass., are using the technology to study ways to produce custom-made uniforms and to improve chemical protective equipment and body armor.

100% National Accreditation is DOD's Child Care Goal

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Last fall, the child development center for the Naval District of Washington in Anacostia reached a pinnacle of success. It was accredited by the National Academy of Early Childhood Programs.

Achieving this quality checkmark took teamwork by the center's management, staff and parents, according to Linda Tomlins, child development program administrator. The team did a self-study, rating the center on safety, health, environment, nurturing children, staff training, ratios of caregivers to children and other criteria.

When the team completed making suggested improvements, Tomlins said, "then three validators come in and stay with you for about three days to validate your ratings with what they see."

The academy is the accrediting arm of the National Association for the Education of Young Children. The association, in turn, claims the largest and most widely recognized national, voluntary , professionally sponsored accreditation program for all types of early childhood schools and child care centers.

About 89 percent of all DoD child development centers are nationally accredited. The department aims to reach 100 percent by 2000.

To be accredited, association officials said, early childhood programs voluntarily undergo a comprehensive self-study and must invite an external, professional review that finds them in substantial compliance with association criteria for high-quality early childhood programs. Criteria are aimed at providing a safe and nurturing environment while promoting the physical, social, emotional and intellectual development of young children.

In accredited programs, association officials said, you will see:

Frequent, positive, warm interactions among adults and children.

Planned learning activities appropriate to children's age and development, such as block building, painting, reading stories, dress-up and active outdoor play

Specially trained teachers, effective administration and ongoing, systematic evaluation

Enough adults to respond to individual children.

A healthy and safe environment for children.iRegular communication with parents, who are welcome visitors at all times.

Refugees volunteer as Army translators

by Pvt. Melissa R. Bernazzani

CAMP BONDSTEEL, Kosovo (Army News Service, June 30, 1999) — Out of a Chinook helicopter and onto a field of tall grass, 40 former refugees of Kosovo arrived here June 19, as military interpreters for Task Force Falcon. When the group touched ground, they took a moment of silence in memory for their fallen comrades.

For many it was their first time back in country since the recent fighting began in their homeland. They all volunteered out of the refugee camps to work for the military as interpreters.

"I want to help and the best way is to be a translator for Task Force Falcon," said Valdet Zuzaku an Army translator and a native of Kosovo. "Task Force Falcon is here to help and is against no one."

Like many other recruited interpreters of Albanian descent, Zuzaku is very grateful for NATO peacekeeping efforts in Kosovo.

"Task Force Falcon is doing a great job," Zuzaku said. "They are the only solution for the refugees to settle down in peace."

According to Zuzaku, Task Force Falcon is the Kosovar's last hope for peace, and without NATO's help they would have lost all prospect for a better future in their homeland. "Task Force Falcon is here to help all civilians who lived in Kosovo," said Zuzaku.

All Kosovar translators come from different professional backgrounds. They are currently being placed into different Army units according to their abilities to help Task Force Falcon interact and communicate with the Kosovar population. They range from doctors and chemical engineers to teachers. All are eager to help Task Force Falcon just as they are being helped by the task force's operations.

82nd Airborne soldiers patrol, keep peace in Kosovo

by Pvt. Melissa R. Bernazzani

WASHINGTON (Army News Service, June 30, 1999) - U.S. Army paratroopers are "on point" in the Kosovar city of Vitina and its surrounding towns, patrolling the streets as part of Task Force Falcon's peacekeeping mission.

Soldiers of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., have secured the vital buildings of Vitina, such as the city hall, an Albanian records building, the city museum, hospital, utility building and a former Serbian police station.

"We are here as the police force to exnforce peace," said Capt. Matthew W. McFarlane, Company A's commander. McFarlane's unit is using a former Serbian police station and an office building in Vitina as a sleeping area and command post.

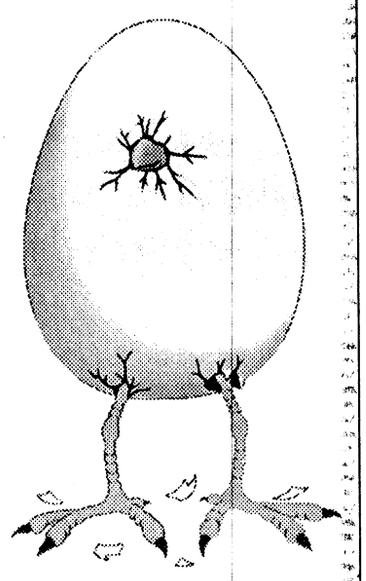
According to McFarlane, his unit's biggest challenge involves dealing with the hatred that exists between some elements of Kosovo's civilian population.

"The Serbians say the Albanians are threatening them, and the Albanians say that the Serbians are the threat," said McFarlane. "We can't be everywhere at once."

The 82nd Airborne soldiers are providing military presence patrols in vehicles or on foot, day and night. As part of their peacekeeping role, McFarland's soldiers have been tasked to find and secure visible threatening forces. However, his troops are not authorized to search civilian homes for weapons.

The patrols gather information about the Kosovo population, which will help in determining potential problems in the troubled Balkan province. The squads inform their chain of command — during and after patrols — of any incidents and unexplained ordnance in the towns, said Staff Sgt. Rafael Rivera, squad leader.

"Presence patrols are to ensure we are upholding the military technical agreement," said Staff Sgt. Juan G. Arreola, airborne infantryman. "We take automatic weapons from anyone ... to secure peace [so] the refugees [can] come home."



Black Hawk helicopters patrol from above containing soldiers who are trained to respond quickly to situations that call for backup troops.

Arreola said Company A's paratroopers "are doing a good job" in Kosovo.

"It's exciting," said Pfc. Joseph M. Kress, airborne infantryman, when describing how it felt to be a part of Task Force Falcon. "We are here to help people's lives get back on track, and make everyone equal."

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Bernazzani is an Army journalist assigned to the 1st Infantry Division public affairs office in support of Task Force Falcon in Kosovo.)

Underwater viewing takes fishing farther

Jeff Exe
Escape to the Outdoors

It's been said by experts in marketing trends, that if you try to look ahead two years to predict what will be the hottest selling item, you'll be wrong; nine times out of 10, it hasn't even been invented yet. In the outdoor world, changes and innovations typically burst onto the scene nearly as unpredictably. There's no doubt the Pocket Fisherman was a popular craze, the Flying Lure had a good run and for the more advanced angler, a device to help select lure colors made quite a few sales.

Not since the development of the sonar depth sounder has a completely new category of outdoor gadgets come around. In the last three years, one innovation has gained the distinct honor of being America's fastest growing sport — underwater viewing.

What exactly is underwater viewing? It's not scuba diving; it's the use of a small underwater camera system that permits you to view the depth of your favorite lake, pond, river or reservoir. Some might say, "I see little fish, big fish, weeds, rocks ... no big deal." This is a common observation, but when the viewer opens their mind to the possibilities, the things you could learn or even discover will amaze you.

Underwater viewing is here to stay. It actually takes the outdoorsman's understanding of the underwater world to advanced levels. Anglers are the first to recognize the advantages of learning more about what's going on under the water's surface. A serious angler would be aware of changes in bottom content because these transition zones often attract fish. Learning to understand the predator and prey relationships can also improve your understanding of how fish move and feed.

You don't have to be an expert angler to learn something new. Schools are just beginning to use the new underwater viewing concept as a teaching aid. Nature Vision's Aqua-Vu II system has been the industry leader in underwater viewing systems primarily because they have successfully addressed the issues of consolidating several electronic elements like the monitor, power supply and long cables into a compact system you can take anywhere.

Available in both color and black-and-white systems, the various underwater viewing systems range in price from $399-$799 depending on their features. Your choice in an underwater viewing system may be effected by the type of water you wish to explore. Color units, for example, are great in saltwater. Many coastal areas boast about their water clarity and superior light penetration. Color cameras require good light penetration for colors to be seen. In nearly all freshwater situations, black-and-white camera permit you to see in low light and even show better contrast in stained waters.

If darkness is a problem, infrared cameras permit you to light up the area in front of the lens. This allows you to view areas under docks, in deeper water, during a cloudy period or when the sun is low in the sky and you simply need more light. All of these options should be considered if you're looking to take part in underwater viewing.

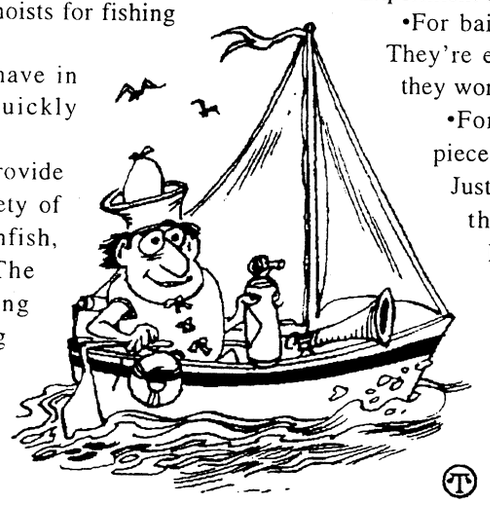
Thousands of avid anglers and underwater viewing fans are spending their days viewing the underwater regions of their favorite waters. Some even like to record what they see on a hand-held camcorder.

"It's very exciting and almost addictive," said Marcy Zenanko of Apple Valley, Minn. "When my husband and I use our Aqua-Vu, we head out on the lake and spend hours just looking around. If I had things my way, we would both have our own units, but then who would drive the boat? Underwater viewing has changed the way I enjoy the lake. It's wonderful."

The latest craze with fans of the sport of underwater viewing is to get together in loosely formed clubs to share their experiences and to head to lakes as a group. They have contests with one another to see who can find the largest school of fish, the biggest bass or the most unusual object. These sportsmen and women record their discoveries and share them at the end of the day.

Underwater viewing may not be an Olympic event any time soon, but it is a sport that is opening minds and increasing the fun everyone can have on the water — without getting wet.

Getting kids interested in fishing may require actually catching fish



Escape to the Outdoors

One of the best ways to get your child hooked on fishing is to make it fun and easy to catch fish. Outfitting your child with inexpensive fishing tackle is easy to do, but knowing where to find plentiful fish is sometimes the greatest challenge.

To put your child onto some great fishing action, look no further than your local lake or reservoir. According to the folks at Midwest Industries, manufacturer of ShoreStation docks and boat hoists, the best place to find plentiful panfish action is under and around docks and boat hoists. The company manufactures a variety of dock systems and accessories, as well as boat hoists for fishing boats and runabouts.

The one thing they all have in common is that they quickly become a haven for panfish.

Docks and boat hoists provide protection and cover a variety of bait fish which attract panfish, bass, catfish and carp. The result is a bounty of fishing opportunities for young anglers.

Since most docks are private property, you must always ask permission to fish from a dock. If you're courteous and respectful of boats and other equipment, you'll be surprised how many people will gladly let your youngster wet a line.

The other option is to fish from a boat. Any boat will work fine — from a rented rower to large bass boat. To find fish, start by casting under and around dock pilings. For even greater success, here are some tips for catching panfish from the dock experts at Midwest Industries:

•Use light tackle. Closed-face spinning rod and reel combos with 6 to 8 pound test line are inexpensive and easy for youngsters to master. Don't forget other essentials a stringer, sunscreen, pocket first-aid kit, nail clippers for cutting line and a small plastic tackle box in which to carry it all.

•Use size 10 to 12 hooks. Longshank hooks are easier to remove from large-mouthed species such as bullheads and catfish. Snelled hooks, those with a short length of leader and a loop already attached, will make life a lot easier for a beginner until he masters more complicated knots.

•For bait, try nightcrawlers or minnows. They're easy to find at any bait shop and they work well for most freshwater fish.

•For sunfish, perch or crappie, use pieces of worm — not the whole worm. Just thread the worm onto the hook so that the entire hook is covered. Place your offering about one foot from the end of the dock. Keep moving from dock to dock until you find a school of fish.

•Cast carefully and be quiet. Panfish might be plentiful and relatively easy to catch, but they can be wary.

•With beginning anglers, the size of the quarry is secondary to numbers. Kids get bored easily unless they catch something, and there's nothing better to shake off a case of restlessness than finding a school of bluegill, perch or crappie.

If you keep it simple and emphasize fun, you child will reap great rewards from his or her fishing experiences. But don't forget about another benefit of introducing your kids to fishing — they day will come a few years from now when they'll take you fishing.

Learn how to handle gun safely before purchasing

Outdoor Recreation

With a growing number of states adopting legislation that allows citizens to carry concealed weapons, more people are enrolling in firearm training and safety classes.

While the crime prevention benefits of concealed carry permits is widely debated, one fact is clear. More people than ever before now know how to safely handle firearms and they have discovered the sport of recreational shooting.

Selecting a handgun that's right for you, whether it's for personal protection or taking to the range on weekends, takes some time and consideration.

Experts suggest you consider these basic questions before visiting an authorized Smith & Wesson dealer:

•What is the primary intended use of the handgun? For personal protection and concealed carry? Home security and an occasional trip to the local range? Small or large game hunting?

•What type of handgun are you most comfortable with? Revolvers have long been a popular choice with recreational shooters because they are simple to operate, highly reliable and relatively inexpensive. Pistols gained acceptance as law enforcement agencies transitioned from revolvers to pistols and recreational shooters followed suit, discovering along the way that quality, crafted pistols are reliable and fun to shoot.

•What is the best caliber?

The caliber or diameter of the bullet should fit your primary intended use. Recreational shooters who will be putting a lot of rounds down range should consider ammunition cost and availability of reloading components. Hunters will want to match the caliber to the game they intend to pursue.

Ammunition manufacturers have developed defense rounds for most popular handgun calibers and your local dealer should be able to recommend several options to fit your need. One of America's favorite calibers is the venerable .45 ACP and one of the more popular .45 ACP pistol is the Smith & Wesson Model 457.

This rugged yet affordable pistol packs a lot of value into a compact package.

Regardless of the type or caliber of gun you choose, experts recommend that you:

•Deal with a knowledgeable, reputable retailer.

•Purchase a high-quality handgun that is backed by a lifetime service policy to ensure years of safe, reliable service.

•Enroll in a certified handgun safety course.

•Familiarize yourself with applicable local and state laws.

•Store your handgun securely and secure the ammunition separately.

Planning Ahead For The Transfer Of Assets

(NAPSA)-Nearly half-49 percent-of Americans have cited procrastination as a key obstacle to legacy planning, or getting records together in preparation for when you're no longer around or able to make decisions. Another 42 percent of Americans believed legacy planning is too time consuming, and 40 percent believed legal and other fees would make the process too costly, according to recent research by the AARP Investment Program from Scudder, the only mutual fund family designed for investors age 50 and older.

"Getting organized for the inevitable, so your loved ones understand what assets you have and can easily handle their transfer, is a task that people often don't want to think about, and one that seems difficult," says Lin Coughlin, Chairperson of the AARP Investment Program from Scudder. "But legacy planning is very important because the assets you pass along often represent your life's work. The good news is that the planning process may not be as difficult or expensive as people think."

Here are a few basic steps to help you get on the right track. They're taken from the AARP Investment Program's guide, Planning Ahead for the Transfer of Assets. It is available free of charge by calling (800) 988-8261.

Create a "legacy file." This involves assembling a list of assets, such as real estate or securities, and their accompanying records and documents. For example, if you include investments in your legacy file, you would simply attach updated financial statements from your brokerage accounts that show stock or bond purchases. For real estate, include purchase and mortgage documents, as well as home repair records, so you can accurately establish any gain when the property is sold.

Be mindful of the ownership status of your assets. Listing the names of accountholders and beneficiaries in the legacy file is very important because the ownership status determines whether assets are directed by the will or not.

Talk to your family about your plans. Make family members aware of the location of your legacy file, and keep them involved as much as possible in the development of this file. That way, you'll feel confident that your family will know where to turn in an emergency. Another way to ensure that your plans will be carried out is to introduce your family to your various advisors. Consider inviting your spouse, partner or an adult child to accompany you when you meet with your accountant or attorney.

Legacy planning should be a priority-especially for people over 50, many of whom have children, grandchildren and even parents who count on them. "By starting with a few basic steps, you do your loved ones a good turn," says Ms. Coughlin.

What's Eating You?

(NAPSA)-Learning more about how to avoid bug bites may help you avoid going buggy. Here are a few ways to avoid being bugged:

• Apply insect repellent with 30 percent DEET.

• Because insects operate by odor, don't use perfumes or heavily scented soaps and shampoos.

• Insects can see your silhouette in dark clothing, so wear light, solid colors. Loose clothing is more difficult for them to penetrate.

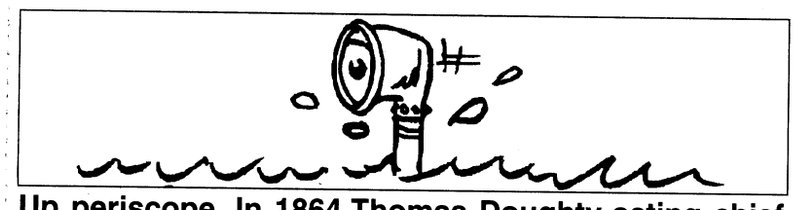
• Wear shoes and socks when hiking or playing in fields.

• Sit on a blanket instead of directly on the ground.

• Keep food covered when eating outdoors.

If you do get bitten, wash the area with soap and water, dry with a soft towel and apply an anti-itch medication, such as Itch-X-available as a gel or spray.

Sold at pharmacies, this product contains two topical anesthetics in a soothing aloe vera base. Avoid topical itch products that contain benzocaine, hydrocortisone or antihistamines which may irritate skin. For a free fact sheet on itching, call 800 324-1880.



To treat the itch left by bug bites and stings choose an anti-itch medication that won't cause additional skin irritation.

TRICARE Moves Toward Population-Based Health Care

By Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

SAN DIEGO – Fresh from a preventive medicine residency at the University of California campus here, Navy Dr. (Capt.) Kathleen Fischer guides an effort to screen the 193,000 Southern California beneficiaries enrolled in TRICARE Prime, DoD's managed health plan. Her goal: Target care where it is needed and intervene in patients' health care when necessary.

For example, in an area where the population is mostly young soldiers in a rugged training environment, there might be a need for greater injury prevention and orthopedics. In a city with a lot of smog or in the high desert, there could be a need for more respiratory therapy. From Fort Irwin in the Southern California desert to Naval Amphibious Base Coronado on the Pacific Ocean coastline, Fischer oversees a plan to reduce preventive diseases and injuries throughout TRICARE Southern California.

By learning the health needs of a specific population, hospitals and clinics can tailor their services to those needs, said Fischer, head of clinical operations for the TRICARE region.

Fischer's residency was a virtual study of managed-care populations. "How do you take care of an enrolled population? The Navy, Army and Air Force have committed people to learning this," she said.

Population health involves clinical preventive services for healthy people and secondary and follow-up preventive care for people who already have diseases, she said. In the past, military medicine focused primarily on providing episodic care; in many cases, it still does. When people are sick – or think they are – they show up at the emergency room or sick call or make an appointment.

"Some people show early, when they don't need help. Some show up late, when a whole lot of damage has been done," Fischer said. "We want to manage those visits and integrate them into the way we do our business."

The idea is to get a bigger bang for the buck. Medics have resource constraints just like most everyone else in DoD. The money saved by preventing disease and managing care can then be spent on improving prevention and treatment programs, Fischer said.

TRICARE Southern California aligned its population health goals with DoD and Department of Veterans Affairs guidelines that focus on conditions that can affect population groups, such as lower back pain, hypertension, tobacco-related illnesses, asthma, diabetes and depression. To learn about population needs, military treatment facilities in the region rely on the Health Enrollment and Risk Survey that new TRICARE Prime enrollees must complete.

"At our [headquarters] level, we're trying to develop other tools, training aids and guidelines to help military treatment facilities determine who needs care and when," Fischer said. "There's a big payoff to targeting people. It may take some time, but when we can target, patients become more vested in their health care."

The toughest groups to reach are adolescents and post- adolescents, a population that includes many young service members and their families, she said. "They think they are healthy and will never be ill and don't have to take preventive measures." Take tobacco use, for example. "Smoking doesn't cause much harm early on but in the long term it causes cancer and heart disease," she said. "We have to get young people thinking about those consequences before they occur."

It's more difficult to assess the health behaviors and needs of military beneficiaries not enrolled in TRICARE Prime, Fischer said. "If you don't know who's out there, it's hard to target," she said. But the region tries to reach everyone. For example, the managed care support contractor for the region, Foundation Health Federal Services Inc., routinely sends information to all beneficiaries in the region, not just Prime enrollees.

"Population health is here to stay," Fischer said. "It affects readiness by making sure service members are in shape. It also includes all other beneficiaries – family members and retirees – in our preventive health efforts."

Civilian health maintenance organizations have taken a population health perspective from the beginning, and Fischer sees it as complementary to TRICARE Prime. But while civilian HMO beneficiaries complain about their health plan's focus on money, Fischer said military people should rest assured that the Prime focus is on good medicine.

Le Moyne selected as Ernst's successor

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Le Moyne

For Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne, being selected to command Fort Benning and the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School is a "humbling experience." "We (he and his family) are very honored by this selection," he said about being named as Ernst's successor.

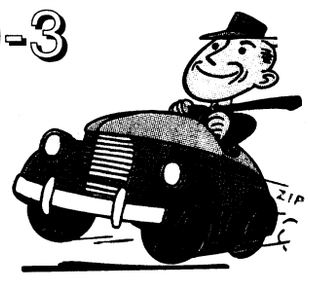
Le Moyne has been coming back and forth to Fort Benning since 1950 when he watched his father's tank battalion train here prior to its deployment overseas.

His military career began as an enlisted man in Special Forces. He returned to the University of Florida, graduating with a Bachelor of Science degree and a commission as an Infantry lieutenant.

He was a Ranger instructor at the Florida Ranger Camp and also served as the operations officer for the 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Lewis, Wash.

Le Moyne has three combat tours. During the Vietnam conflict, he commanded a company in the 25th Infantry Division and was an advisor to a Vietnamese airborne battalion.

He was in Special Operations during Operation Just Cause in Panama and then commanded the 1st Brigade, 24th Infantry Division during that unit's end run to the Euphrates River during Desert Storm.



He is a graduate of the Armor Advanced Course, Marine Corps Staff College, Army War College and the Royal College of Defense Studies, London, England.

Le Moyne's awards include the Combat Infantryman's Badge and Purple Heart.

He is currently serving as the Assistant Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel for the U.S. Army in Washington, D.C., and is set to take command of the post sometime in early September.

Le Moyne and his wife Marion have one son, James.

Former Soldier leads local band

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Dealing with constant deployments, extended field times and the standard miscellaneous military hassles can be a difficult plate to dine on when trying to build a band from the ground up, but that is exactly what three local men did nearly four years ago when they began making Cornbread.

No, it hasn't taken these three bachelors that long to throw together some cornmeal and milk, Cornbread is the name of their band. And according to local radio and sales reports, this toe-tapping trio is selling like hotcakes.

Led by former Ranger Keni Thomas, the band has toured throughout the south opening for such music superstars as Shawn Mullins, Sister Hazel and Ty Herndon, and July 1 the Columbus-based group stopped by Fort Benning's Independence Day festivities to bring their world-class concert to the horde of troops that Thomas was once a part of.

"We just wanted to come out here and play a couple of our songs for the Soldiers," Thomas said during an early afternoon autograph session at the Post Exchange. "These guys deserve some good music, and I think we can help them out on that."

It was Thomas' love of music and his desire to share his music with others that not only brought the once staff sergeant back to Benning, but was also the fire that fueled the band in its beginnings in 1994 while he was still serving on active duty with the 75th Ranger Regiment.

"It was odd really," noted band member Dean Castile on how the band met. "We just kinda came together. There really wasn't anything special. We all loved to play and well ... it just went from there."

As the days and the months seemed to roll by faster than the beat of a rock song, the four grew closer and closer and began noticing that the band they started was more than descent — it was good. Their unique, acoustically driven pop sound was a huge hit in the Southland bar scene, and now that Thomas was out of the Army, they had time to turn this once garage band into a Top 30, chart-topping trio.

"It began in Columbus," Thomas said about the beginning of the band's rise to recordable music. "We were getting to be a recognized name around town, and even scored a couple of openings for our buddy Shawn Mullins when he came to town. And I guess we thought about it, and after we played the bar circuit for a while we decided to put out our own CD."

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Keni Thomas, lead singer for Cornbread, performs July 1 during Fort Benning's Independence Day ceremony.

That CD, Following Ceres, propelled the band to the top of the local music scene, earning them air play on 28 radio stations in Georgia, Alabama and Florida, but the building of the band's backing had only just started.

As the band continued to tour and promote their new album in college towns around the South, the single Angels in the Southland proved to be an angel of types for them as well. Featuring guest pop star, Shawn Mullins, the song took the local charts by storm and even earned the band bragging rights to a spot in the Top 30 on nine

Regulation prohibits blaring music

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If the summer sizzle has got you aching to feel that music in your soul, you may want to consider two things before pumping up the volume on your tunes — courtesy of others and the Military Police.

With the onset of summer and warm weather, it's no wonder people like to drive through the streets with the windows rolled down and their favorite music pumping from the stereo. But — the fact remains; not everyone has the same taste in music, and most people are not to pleased when someone feels the need to share.

There is even a post regulation that prohibits drivers from blaring their music.

U.S. Army Infantry Center regulation 210-5-4-7 states that "playing of radios and electronic sound devices in a motor vehicle which emits sound outside the passenger or driver compartment at a volume which is audible to a person with normal hearing at a distance of 15 feet from the motor vehicle on any public street, public parking area or private driveway on the Fort Benning military reservation is prohibited."

According to Master Sgt. David Jones, NCOIC of the Law Enforcement Division, if the MPs catch someone in violation of this "15-foot policy" there is a possibility for penalties. One of which is punishable under article 92 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Jones said although there has only been one incident so far this year involving the regulation, where the MPs had to step in, that doesn't mean it isn't happening.

He said it is all boils down to courtesy.

"People just need to keep in mind that Soldiers work all different shifts," Jones said. "So while someone is blaring his music, somebody else could be trying to sleep. It's just common courtesy."

Natural born talent isn't the only kind

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Growing up, I wasn't what you would call a bundle of raw talent. If anything, I was the master of tripping over myself and sticking my foot in my mouth.

commentary

When you are very young, talent isn't something that is taken all that seriously. From the ages of about 4 to 7 we consider those who can blow the biggest bubbles and belch the loudest to have a plethora of talent. As we grow however, talent becomes something that is a huge variable in our lives. It is what makes us who we are and distinguishes us from everyone else.

At about the time parents start lining up in droves to sign their children up for such things as pee-wee baseball, hockey, soccer, basketball, dance class and singing lessons, we begin to see who is blessed with certain abilities and who isn't. It doesn't take long before you get a good idea about who will be hitting the sports field, standing in the spotlight or tearing up the world of academics.

Incredibly, I don't think I am included in any of these categories. I've never really had a particular talent that shined above the rest. I'm not blaringly good at sports, yet I can play them just fine. I love to act and sing. But the fact that I can't even open my mouth without having someone tell me I shouldn't quit my day job, is a pretty good clue it's not my destiny. And I'm by no means stupid, but I don't even come close to qualifying for the world of MENSA.

So where does this leave me? I'm guessing this is the point where I'm supposed to get a huge complex because I can't think of any extraordinary talents I possess.

Actually, sometimes I wonder what it would be like to be extremely gifted in one particular area. I know if a magic geenie were to appear one day and grant me three talents, I would have no problem telling him what I wanted.

First and foremost, I would ask to be musically talented. This includes being able to sing, play musical instruments and have an abundance of rhythm. Considering I can't carry a tune in a paper bag and my dancing resembles something between a seizure and fish flopping around, he would have his work cut out for him. I love music, and I admire those who can get up on stage and perform. That is one thing I have always wished I could be able to do. For me the neatest thing in the world would be to get up on stage with an instrument strapped to every part of my body and be able to sing dance and play all at the same time. Then I could travel the world as The One Woman Wonder Band.

With my next wish I would ask for great skill at softball. I love the game, but it seems that I have some trouble when it comes to batting, throwing and catching ... I can't do any of these. It would be neat to actually be able to catch a ball rather than just shield myself from its impending blow. Or get up to the plate and actually feel the crack of the bat rather than just a whoosh as the ball flies by.

Lastly, I would wish for a talent that nobody else possessed. Something along the lines of x-ray vision, healing powers or the ability to fly. Of course those are more like super powers than talents, but since it's my geenie I'll do whatever I want.

One thing I appreciate about my lack of a super duper talent is that I'm good at a bunch of different things. Instead of being tremendous at one thing and horrible at another, I seem to be spread pretty even. Anything I apply myself to I can do.

I know there are probably a lot more people out there just like me. And I'm guessing that some may feel badly about not having that one defining talent. But the fact of the matter is everyone is special in some way. Just because you can't fly through the air like Michael Jordan or sing like Celine Dion doesn't mean you aren't talented. All you have to do is find that one thing you love and are good at and work on it. That's what I did with the writing gig and it hasn't failed me yet.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders. The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller observed Soldiers wearing mixed PT uniforms in the gym.

75th Ranger Regiment response: The caller was informed that the Ranger PT black uniform is a local uniform regulated by local policy. The policy states the PT uniform may be modified or worn for special situations when directed by the chain of command. Wearing just the tops or bottoms is authorized.

Call: Caller said the post needs better boat ramps at the ponds. He said most boat ramps are just drop-offs, and a few dump truck loads of gravel to spread out there would help. The caller also suggested the state restock the ponds regularly.

Directorate of Public Works response: DPW said a game and fish technician has recently started an evaluation of the ponds on post for stocking, fertilizing, weed control, access, etc. Though he has completed fertilizing and liming some ponds, this is an ongoing process and will take time to complete. Buildings and Grounds added that work done on the trails and approaches to the pond areas will be accomplished in the order of priority and as needed for training. The suggestions to have the state restock the ponds is not feasible due to numerous restrictions and requirements imposed by the state in return for such a service.

Call: Caller said they are enrolled in the married couples program, but they have been stationed at different duty stations for more than a year.

Adjutant General and Directorate of Military Personnel response: Couples enrolled in the Married Army Couples Program (MACP) may apply for a permissive assignment to establish joint domicile with the spouse. Being enrolled in MACP only guarantees that Soldiers will be considered for a joint assignment. This cannot always be accomplished due to authorizations at the installation the Soldier wants to be assigned.

History offers map to the future

Dr. Ed Thomas
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

I mentioned last week that sensory integration dysfunction, bad posture and poor motor skills impede combat physical readiness and encourage injuries. The historical, linguistic and sociocultural principles of physical education can help us slay these dragons. This week, I thought you might like to take a look at some history.

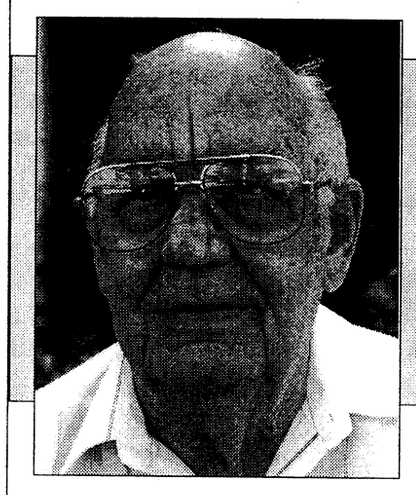
commentary

The past, if wisely considered, is a powerful light we can shine toward the future. Such is the case with physical culture. In the early 1960s, civilian physical educators began drifting toward what is now called the "Discipline Movement." President Kennedy was then calling us "The Soft Americans" and pushing for more emphasis on physical fitness. A New York back doctor named Hans Kraus shook up the Eisenhower administration a few years earlier in the mid-1950s with a study suggesting that American children were remarkably less fit than European youngsters. Kraus called for a return to rational restorative exercise, but physical educators had denounced physical training long ago in the early 1920s, and the profession was not inclined to change course just because the president wanted them to.

The debate in the early 1900s was called "The Battle of the Systems."

Highly developed European warrior-based systems of physical training were popular in America at that time, but they were eventually sacrificed to sports and games. The two most prominent systems were from Germany and Sweden. The U.S. Army adopted the German Turner gymnastics method in the late-1800s when the U.S. Military Academy appointed Herman J. Koehler as Master of the Sword in 1885. He stayed until 1923 and is known as the "Father of Army Physical Training." History reports that the Koehler system was doctrine until the beginning of WWII, but in reality, Koehler's methods began fading soon after he retired in the early 1920s.

WWII forced physical educators to give the proponents of rational physical training a voice and some authority. Many of these fitness advocates like Dr. Arthur Esslinger, Thomas Cureton, and Charles McCloy who were voices in the wilderness before the War, helped the U.S. militaries develop highly sophisticated physical readiness doctrine from 1941 to 1946. After the War, sports and games took hold again, and the doctrine began to slip away. The Korean War caught us again physically unprepared, and the 1957 revision of Army PRT doctrine promised that it would not happen any more. Within a few revisions, the 1957 doctrine had been reduced to much less.



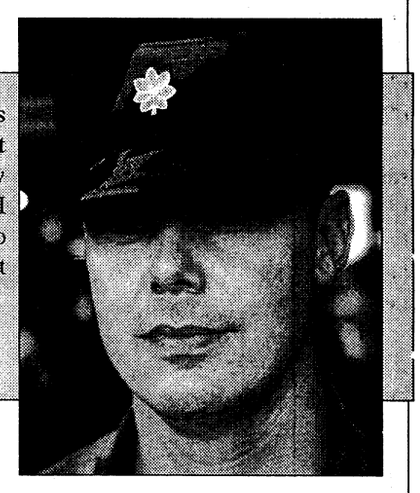
That brings us back to the "Discipline Movement" of the 1960s. President Kennedy's interest in physical fitness made little impact on small college physical education programs. They initially remained fixed on sports and games. Larger universities responded by creating scientific specialties like exercise physiology and biomechanics. Undergraduates were eventually forced to endure heavy doses of the sciences, which made physical educators look smarter and worthy of more than their traditional second-class academic status. Little attention was given to physical training, and even less time was spent on the historical, linguistic or sociocultural roots of the profession.

Poorly screened graduate assistants began instructing physical education skills courses (I started teaching such classes while only a junior at the University of Iowa in 1970). We cranked out majors who often moved poorly and were unprepared to teach others how to move.

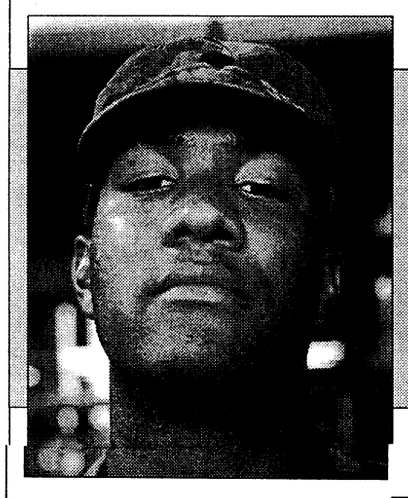
The "fitness boom" of the 1980s eventually gave many of these "physical fitness" experts with impressive academic credentials and little insight into the historical, linguistic sociocultural roots of physical culture a voice. Current Army PRT doctrine was heavily influenced by the civilian physical education sector in the early 1980s. I have always believed that left alone in a room with copies of earlier Army PT manuals, the NCOs and officers I knew as a young Infantry sergeant in the late 1960s could have done a much better job.

VARIOUS VOICES

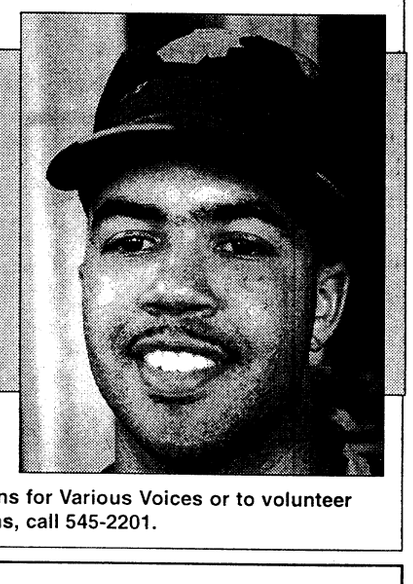
If there is one talent you could have, what would it be?



Retired 1st Sgt. William Brooks — "If I could have a talent it would probably be the ability to play baseball. I am a huge fan, but I just don't have the talent."



Master Sgt. John Carney, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I would like to be a really good golfer. There are so many advantages to knowing how to play the game, plus it is fun. If you are good enough, you can make a lot of money at it."



Lt. Col Fred Edward, Fort Gillem, — "I would like to be a rock and roll star. I have wanted to be one since I was 15, and now that I have a guitar, I am going to try to make that dream come true."

Maj. Bill Mason, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "If I had a talent, I would like it to be the ability to sing. I love music, but I just can't make the music."

Spc. Steven Featherstone, Company C., 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "If I could have a talent, I would say it would have to be the ability to sing or act. Those guys get all the money, fame and women."

Pvt. Tarick Brittingham, Company C., 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I wish I could play the saxophone. It is an instrument that just has so much mood and emotion."

36th Eng. Group gets new commander

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

DeWolf

Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) said farewell to outgoing commander Col. A. Allen Rasper and welcomed in a new during a change of command ceremony held on York Field July 1.

Rasper, who has been assigned to command Base Operations for the 19th TAACOM in Korea, was replaced by Col. Gene A. DeWolf, who comes to Fort Benning after commanding recruiting operations for the state of Georgia in Atlanta.

Prior to serving in Atlanta, DeWolf has tackled many assignments including serving as a platoon leader, executive officer and company commander of the 34th Engineer Battalion, Fort Riley, Kan. He has served as the battalion executive officer for the 559th Engineer Battalion and the brigade training officer for the 130th Engineer Brigade, Honau, Germany.

As Battalion commander of the 46th Engineer Battalion, DeWolf coordinated the relocation of the battalion from Fort Riley to Fort Polk, La. Once at Fort Polk, he was called upon again to lead the battalion, but this time it was to Haiti in support of U.N. operations.

Throughout his 23 years of service, he has accumulated many awards to include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal with five oak leave clusters, the Air Medal, the Humanitarian Service Medal, the Vietnam Service Medal with three campaign stars, the Republic of Vietnam Medal of Honor, 2nd Class, the United Nations Medal and the Aircraft Crewmember and Parachutist Badges.

DeWolf brings with him to Benning his wife Berma and his three children, Charissa, Adriana and Garret.

U.S. and France share strong links

French Liaisons Office

Among the five foreign liaison officers who are posted at the U.S. Army Infantry Center, there is a French Liaison Officer. Although it is not generally known, the French Army has in fact had a liaison officer at Fort Benning since 1954.

The present one is Lt. Col. Vincent Fauvell-Champion who arrived at Fort Benning nearly a year ago. He is number 16 on the long list of French Liaison Officers stationed at the post. He lives on post with his wife Claire and their three French-born children, who are rapidly improving their American-English language skills at school and at home.

Fauvell-Champion is used to living in foreign countries and being involved in international operations. During his military career, he has served in Germany, New Caledonia (South Pacific Ocean), Iraq and Kuwait for the U.N. observation mission after Operation Desert Storm, and Bosnia.

Now happily installed in Georgia, he said, "I have very good working relationships within the LNO's group and, of course, with US military personnel and civilians working on post. I also enjoy meeting from time to time our wonderful civilian sponsors in Columbus who, over the years, have become firm friends with almost all the past French liaison officers at Fort Benning."

When questioned about the French National Day, Fauvell-Champion replied, "The 14th of July is a very popular institution and probably the most important national holiday in France with the Celebration of Bastille Day, commemorating the First French Revolution of 1789 and the universal declaration of the Human Rights."

The Motto of the French Republic is: Freedom, Equality and Fraternity. In many ways, the French Revolution could not have happened on the old continent of Europe without the previous American Revolution in 1776 which took place with the help of French troops led, ironically, by French Aristocrats such as the Marquis de Lafayette and the Count de Rochambeau. Eventually they led the way and later freedom became more than just a dream in France.

"On Bastille Day in France, many festivities take place in Paris and in all towns and cities, big and small alike," said Fauvell-Champion. "There are military parades, fun fairs, fireworks and outdoor balls. However, for me, it is particularly wonderful to be in Paris on that day; it's an incredible sight to see hundreds of people dancing in the streets, in the city squares and on the bridges that cross the Seine River, on the only day of the year when cars are prohibited from the heart of the city!"

On a more serious note, Fauvell-Champion spoke about the historic links of friendship between America and France.

"The links between our two countries are very strong. The first half of the 20th century was very hard for my country which suffered greatly during WWI and WWII. People of my generation who belong to the baby boom era are well aware of the sacrifices of the U.S. and allied troops to win VE Day and VJ Day, bringing back freedom and democracy to the world. But in addition, we remember the positive effects of the famous Marshall Plan which started up the peace and the prosperity of Western Europe."

During the second part of 20th century, France has always proved itself to be a true partner of the U.S. in handling the Cold War and keeping it under control. As a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council, France has always played its diplomatic role, even being ready to deploy troops when necessary. When reading the history books, it is easy to verify that France has always shared the burdens and risks along with its allies.

Some of the most important military operations undertaken by France were in Korea and Indochina during the 50s, Lebanon during the late 70s and the early 80s, Chad against Libya in the mid 80s. In the 90s, France's primary interventions have been in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, Cambodia, Somalia, Bosnia with UNPROFOR and then with NATO where France is leading the Multinational Division-South East.

In addition, from last December until March 1999, France led a NATO Multinational Extraction Force Brigade, ready to intervene to help the OSCE Observers in Kosovo. When NATO decided to strike Serbia, France was the second air power contributor after the U.S. with a total of 100 aircrafts and 1 sea-carrier and a task force of escort ships. At present, a French brigade is in charge of one sector of Kosovo to implement peace along with its allies."

Acccording to Fauvell-Champion, France is not only a permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, it is also a wealthy industrial country and a member of the G7. It is an active partner in science and military technology with the U.S. and has worked on basic research and development in the following sectors: laser technology, sonar technology, high resolution imaging, unmanned undersea vehicles, high-performance transport protocols and in a wide range of other military technology categories. In addition, the U.S. has more than 120 separate Data Exchange Agreement Annexes with France that allow for the reciprocal exchange of defense technology information.

"I hope that, by reading this article, people in Fort Benning will be a little more informed about my country," Fauvell-Champion said.

"But I would also like to take this opportunity to say how much I am enjoying my posting in the United States and particularly being here at the Home of the Infantry. I really appreciate the chance to see the technological approach of the USAIC to equip and train their best Infantrymen with Force XXI and AAN projects. As a bonus, I am able to jump at least once a month, along with the other LNOs, thanks to the 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry Regiment, on Fryar Drop Zone. Leaving the office for a couple of hours is an excellent way to meet the real U.S. Army in the field," he said.

"What sets us apart from other bands is that our touring has built a dedicated fan base and has repeatedly drawn people back into clubs and venues," according to a band member on the Cornbread web site (www.cornbreadmusic.com). "We work hard for our audience both on and off the stage and take pride in our professionalism."

"We love what we do and it totally shows in our music," the site reported.

It was that passion that Thomas said fueled the band's second album release in September, Headspace and Timing, an album that has once again given the band a boost in its quest for stardom.

"It's not really about getting to be a huge star," Thomas said. "It is all about making people happy who listen to our music, and if we can do that, I will be happy. I think the rest of the band will be too."

When asked if stepping up to the Top 40 stature of the band's role model Shawn Mullins was a goal rolling around in the heads of these tune turning trio, Thomas just smiled and said, "We still have a lot of work to do, but you never know."

Although the amplifiers and the stage are long gone from York Field when the band performed during the Independence Day blast, Cornbread connoisseurs can find the trio performing in downtown Tampa at Newks on saturday night and again in Atlanta July 16 at the Dark Horse Tavern.

The following weekend the band will come back to where it all began — to the Columbus hotspot, The Loft, to perform in front of a hometown crowd with their mentor and friend, Shawn Mullins.

Music: loud is out

Of course, this also applies to on-post housing and close quarters living areas such as the barracks. Although there are no regulations that prohibit how loud someone can play their music in these areas, there may still be repercussions for doing so, Jones said.

He went on to explain that while the MPs generally direct all complaints concerning loud music to the Community Life NCOs, if they find there is a reoccurring problem with someone they will address it directly. If that person doesn't comply there is a possibility further actions could be taken.

"People have to remember that their walls aren't that thick and when they turn their music up to the point where they have to yell to be heard, there is something wrong with that picture."

While some would think the music issue stops at home and on the road, it doesn't. Those who are out washing their cars need to keep it down, just as parked cars and anyone who carries around a personal music player needs to, Jones said.

"Some people still think they are in the 80s and carry their boombox down the street. While we haven't had any recent instances, it has happened," he added.

Everyone just needs to be aware of those around them, he said.

"No matter where you're at, if it (music) affects someone else there is a problem. Someone is bound to complain and we (MPs) are going to be the first to hear about it."

Marksmanship

Units put new laser training device to test

Master Sgt. Donald Riley
84th Division (Institutional Training)

The 84th Division (Institutional Training), in cooperation with the Infantry Training Brigade, Director of Training, 29th Infantry Regiment and the Army Research Institute is currently conducting testing of the Beamhit Laser Marksmanship Training System. The testing involves five companies of Infantry One Station Unit Training Initial Entry Training Soldiers (about 1,100 Soldiers from ITB).

The ARI designed test evaluates the relative effectiveness of the LMTS equipment and methodology in the IET environment in comparison with conventional methods (employing the dime-washer exercise, target box exercise, MACS device and Weaponeer device). An initial LMTS pilot test conducted with Soldiers from Company C, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, ITB, enabled the test and evaluation team to refine their training procedures and data collection process.

Two companies will be evaluated while training with the LMTS. Two control companies will be evaluated using conventional training methods. Data collection from each training group will be analyzed by ARI to compare time and ammunition requirements for the grouping and zeroing exercises to determine which method provides the greatest economy of resources.

Record fire scores will also be compared to evaluate the skill transfer from each training method. Cadre from the ITB and 29th Infantry are the primary trainers, augmented by drill sergeants from the 84th Division performing their annual training at Fort Benning.

The Laser Marksmanship Training System is a laser operated rifle fire simulator. The laser transmitter is placed in the Soldier's own M16 rifle and powered with a standard AA alkaline battery.

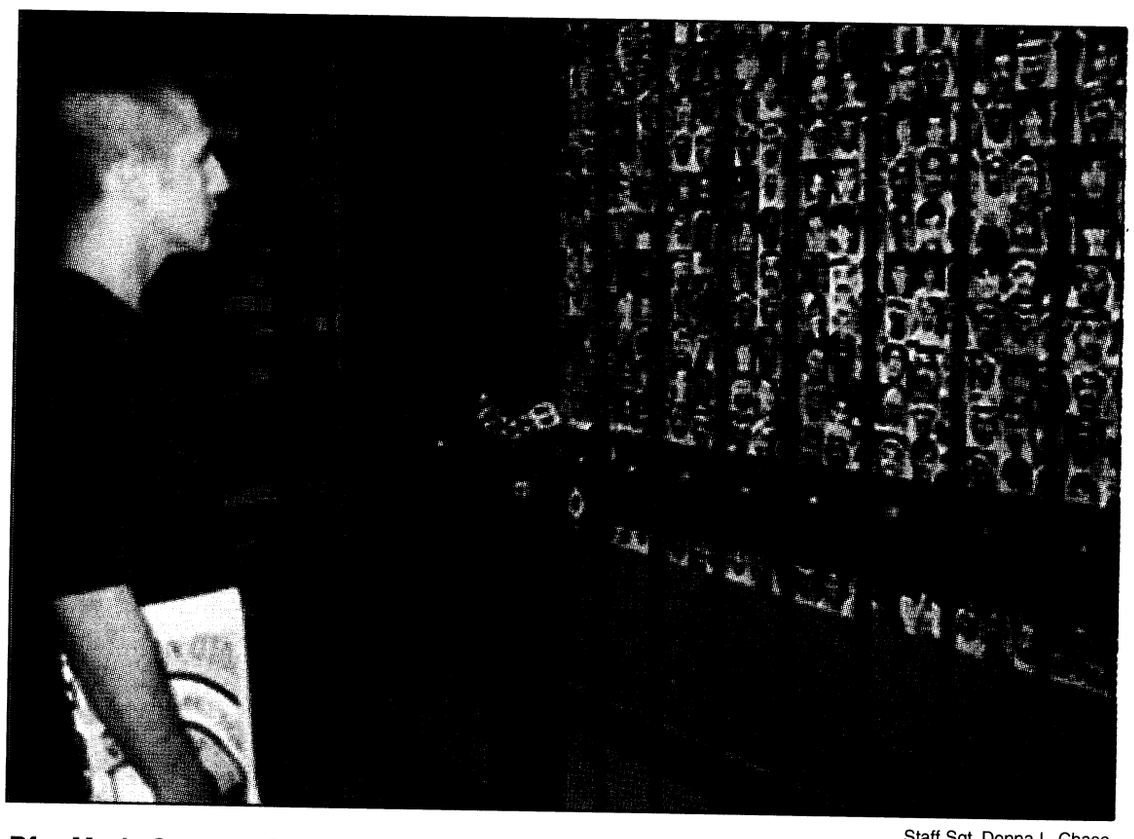
The 130 and 430/460 target systems operate on 115 volts AC and require an indoor or protected outdoor area approximately 25-meter long.

The Soldier trains with his assigned M16 rifle and requires that the integrated act of shooting is applied in the same manner as during live-fire exercises, employing all basic firing positions.

The target displays consist of a scaled 25-meter zero reflective target, a hit/miss target with target mask overlays (130), and a shot location target (430/460 systems) that reports shot locations and grouping to a computer screen and/or printer.

A laptop or desktop PC contains the controls needed to operate the 430/460 target systems; 130 targets are controlled internally.

An important feature of the LMTS laser transmitter is the constant on feature which shows the aiming point, breathing pattern and trigger control for each shot. This is an excellent way to diagnose a Soldier's ability to apply the four fundamentals.



The test will permit the 84th Division to gather valuable information for the Weapons Training Strategy Proof of Principle they are conducting as Marksmanship Executive Agent for the U.S Army Reserve.

Test results will enable them to evaluate the utility of the LMTS as a primary and sustainment training tool for basic rifle marksmanship. Valuable insight will be gained regarding the durability of the LMTS equipment and its ease of use. They will also be able to learn more about instructor skills required to deliver effective training with the system.

This unique opportunity to partner with the proponent for small arms training places the 84th Division one step closer to success in their Weapons Training Strategy Program.

Task Force 1-15 Soldiers visit POW museum

Spc. Courtney Vickery
4th Public Affairs Detachment

Staff Sgt. Donna L. Chase

Pfc. Mark Carner, Heavy Expanded Mobile Tactical Truck driver, Task Force 1-15, looks at hundreds of photographs of Kuwaiti Prisoners of War that are displayed at the POW Museum in Kuwait City.

For many Soldiers of Task Force 1-15, a trip to the Prisoner of War Museum June 13 was an enlightening and unforgettable experience.

For the majority of Soldiers, it was their first trip out of the Kabal since arriving in Kuwait. They were given the chance to understand one of the reasons U.S. Soldiers are in Kuwait today.

In a diwaniya-type setting, several Soldiers sat on the edge of their seats sipping tea and listening intently to their host, Bader Suliman, museum general manager, tell them about his haunting accounts during the occupation of Kuwait.

Suliman told them about the history of Kuwait, the museum and the hardships his people had endured during the war.

"He went into detail about the captured POWs and what is being done to get them back," said Pfc. Christopher Wayne Homan, turret mechanic, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment.

"He told it like it was (occupation of Kuwait by Iraq) and why it's important for the Kuwaitis to find out if their loved ones are still alive," added Homan.

Suliman had the attention of every Soldier in the room while he spoke in detail of the occupation and what the Kuwaitis did to resist the Iraq military. Suliman then took the time to answer the many questions Soldiers had about Kuwait and its people.

"It was nice to communicate with the Kuwaitis. They are all wonderful to talk to," said Homan, a native of Mobile, Ala.

The task force leadership has plans to let every Soldier visit Kuwait City and experience the emotional stories of Suliman and the POW museum before the Soldiers redeploy.

Volunteer title: Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment Family Support Group volunteer
Why do you volunteer? I volunteer my time because I believe it's important to stay informed about my husband's job. My involvement with the Family Support Group shows that I support him, his unit and the families of Co. A, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.
What do you like most about volunteering? I enjoy meeting and making new friends. It's also easier to tolerate separation or other things that come my way knowing that we are in this together. It makes me feel good to participate in such a rewarding group.
What others say about your contribution: Meaghan is a consistently positive influence in the Co. A Support Group. She diligently attends each function, always early to help set-up, and sees each project or event through until the end. She offers her personal time up to be a key caller and helps with the planning of the monthly meetings. In addition, Meaghan has an extraordinary talent of designing and baking cakes. She has graciously donated her time and services on numerous occasions. For all your hard work and dedication, we thank you!

29th Inf. Regt. receives new commander

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

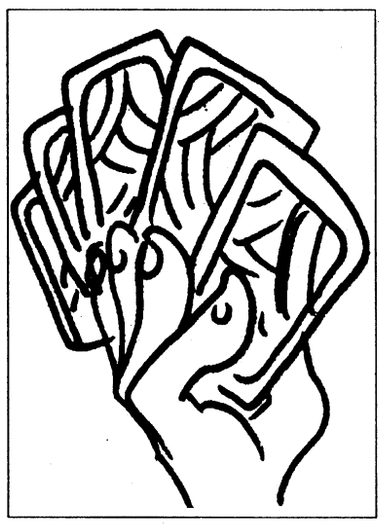
Troops from the 29th Infantry Regiment lined York Field to bid a final farewell to commander Col. Richard J. Rowe Jr. during a change of command ceremony held Monday.

Col. Carter F. Ham received command from Rowe who leaves the regiment after serving 2 years. Rowe's next assignment is as the Chief of Staff for the 2nd Infantry Division, Republic of Korea.

Ham's last assignment was as the G3 and Chief of Staff for the 1st Infantry Division. He previously served on Fort Benning as the executive officer of the Infantry School. He has served in a number of positions in the U.S. and overseas to include training officer for a Basic Combat Training company at Fort Knox, Ky.; assistant inspector general at the National Training Center; commander of the 1st Battalion, 6th Infantry in Vilseck, Germany; and senior task force observer and controller at the Combat Manuever Training Center in Hohenfels, Germany.

Before being commissioned as an officer, Ham served as an enlisted Infantryman in the 82nd Airborne Division. He attended John Carrol University in Cleveland, Ohio, and was commissioned in the Infantry upon graduating as Distinguished Military Graduate in 1976.

Ham earned a Master of Arts in National Security and Strategic Studies from the Naval war College. He is a graduate of the Infantry Officer's Basic, Armor Officer Advanced Course, College of Naval Command and Staff.



His awards include the Ranger Tab and Expert Infantryman Badge, as well as a number of service medals and ribbons.

Ham and his wife Christy have two children, Jennifer and Jonathon.

TRICARE Moves Toward Population-Based Health Care

By Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

SAN DIEGO — Fresh from a preventive medicine residency at the University of California campus here, Navy Dr. (Capt.) Kathleen Fischer guides an effort to screen the 193,000 Southern California beneficiaries enrolled in TRICARE Prime, DoD's managed health plan. Her goal: Target care where it is needed and intervene in patients' health care when necessary.

For example, in an area where the population is mostly young soldiers in a rugged training environment, there might be a need for greater injury prevention and orthopedics. In a city with a lot of smog or in the high desert, there could be a need for more respiratory therapy. From Fort Irwin in the Southern California desert to Naval Amphibious Base Coronado on the Pacific Ocean coastline, Fischer oversees a plan to reduce preventive diseases and injuries throughout TRICARE Southern California.

By learning the health needs of a specific population, hospitals and clinics can tailor their services to those needs, said Fischer, head of clinical operations for the TRICARE region.

Fischer's residency was a virtual study of managed-care populations. "How do you take care of an enrolled population? The Navy, Army and Air Force have committed people to learning this," she said.

Population health involves clinical preventive services for healthy people and secondary and follow-up preventive care for people who already have diseases, she said. In the past, military medicine focused primarily on providing episodic care; in many cases, it still does. When people are sick — or think they are — they show up at the emergency room or sick call or make an appointment.

"Some people show early, when they don't need help. Some show up late, when a whole lot of damage has been done," Fischer said. "We want to manage those visits and integrate them into the way we do our business."

The idea is to get a bigger bang for the buck. Medics have resource constraints just like most everyone else in DoD. The money saved by preventing disease and managing care can then be spent on improving prevention and treatment programs, Fischer said.

TRICARE Southern California aligned its population health goals with DoD and Department of Veterans Affairs guidelines that focus on conditions that can affect population groups, such as lower back pain, hypertension, tobacco-related illnesses, asthma, diabetes and depression. To learn about population needs, military treatment facilities in the region rely on the Health Enrollment and Risk Survey that new TRICARE Prime enrollees must complete.

"At our [headquarters] level, we're trying to develop other tools, training aids and guidelines to help military treatment facilities determine who needs care and when," Fischer said. "There's a big payoff to targeting people. It may take some time, but when we can target, patients become more vested in their health care."

The toughest groups to reach are adolescents and post-adolescents, a population that includes many young service members and their families, she said. "They think they are healthy and will never be ill and don't have to take preventive measures."

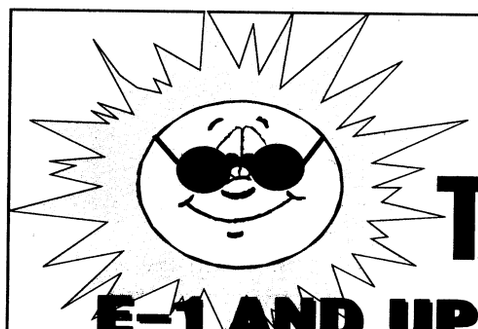
Take tobacco use, for example. "Smoking doesn't cause much harm early on but in the long term it causes cancer and heart disease," she said. "We have to get young people thinking about those consequences before they occur."



It's more difficult to assess the health behaviors and needs of military beneficiaries not enrolled in TRICARE Prime, Fischer said. "If you don't know who's out there, it's hard to target," she said. But the region tries to reach everyone. For example, the managed care support contractor for the region, Foundation Health Federal Services Inc., routinely sends information to all beneficiaries in the region, not just Prime enrollees.

"Population health is here to stay," Fischer said. "It affects readiness by making sure service members are in shape. It also includes all other beneficiaries — family members and retirees — in our preventive health efforts."

Civilian health maintenance organizations have taken a population health perspective from the beginning, and Fischer sees it as complementary to TRICARE Prime. But while civilian HMO beneficiaries complain about their health plan's focus on money, Fischer said military people should rest assured that the Prime focus is on good medicine.

Spouse orientation set — The next Spouse Orientation program will be held at 8:45 a.m. today in Building 359, the FUN Center.

All newly assigned personnel are able to receive information about the installation's services and facilities.

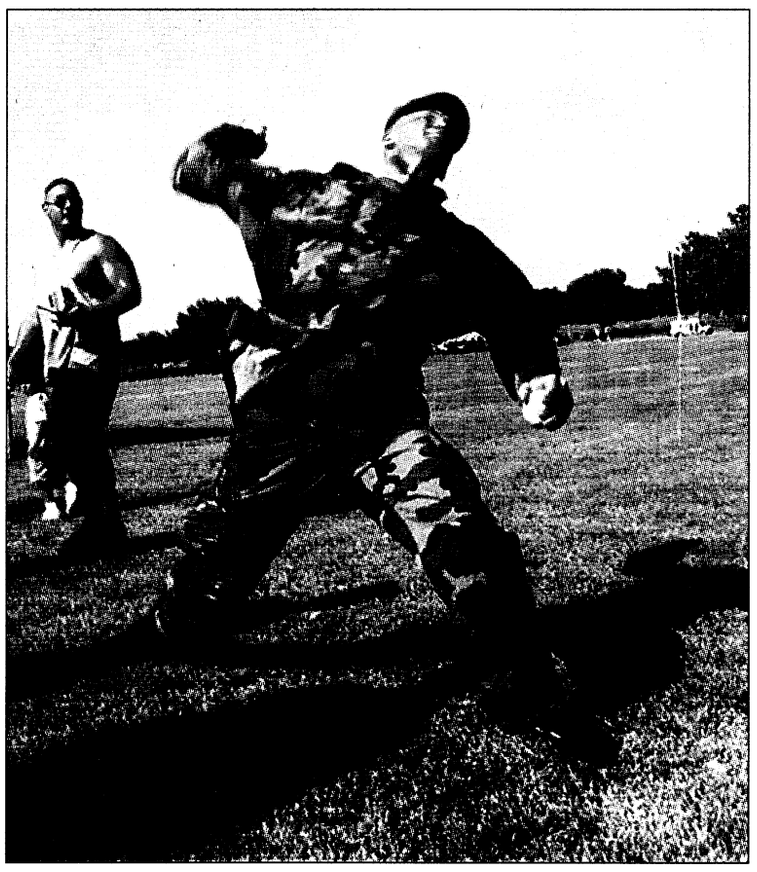
For more information, call Army Community Service at 545-4043 or 545-7517.

International Wives Club holds meeting — The next monthly meeting of the International Wives Club will be held at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in Building 2682.

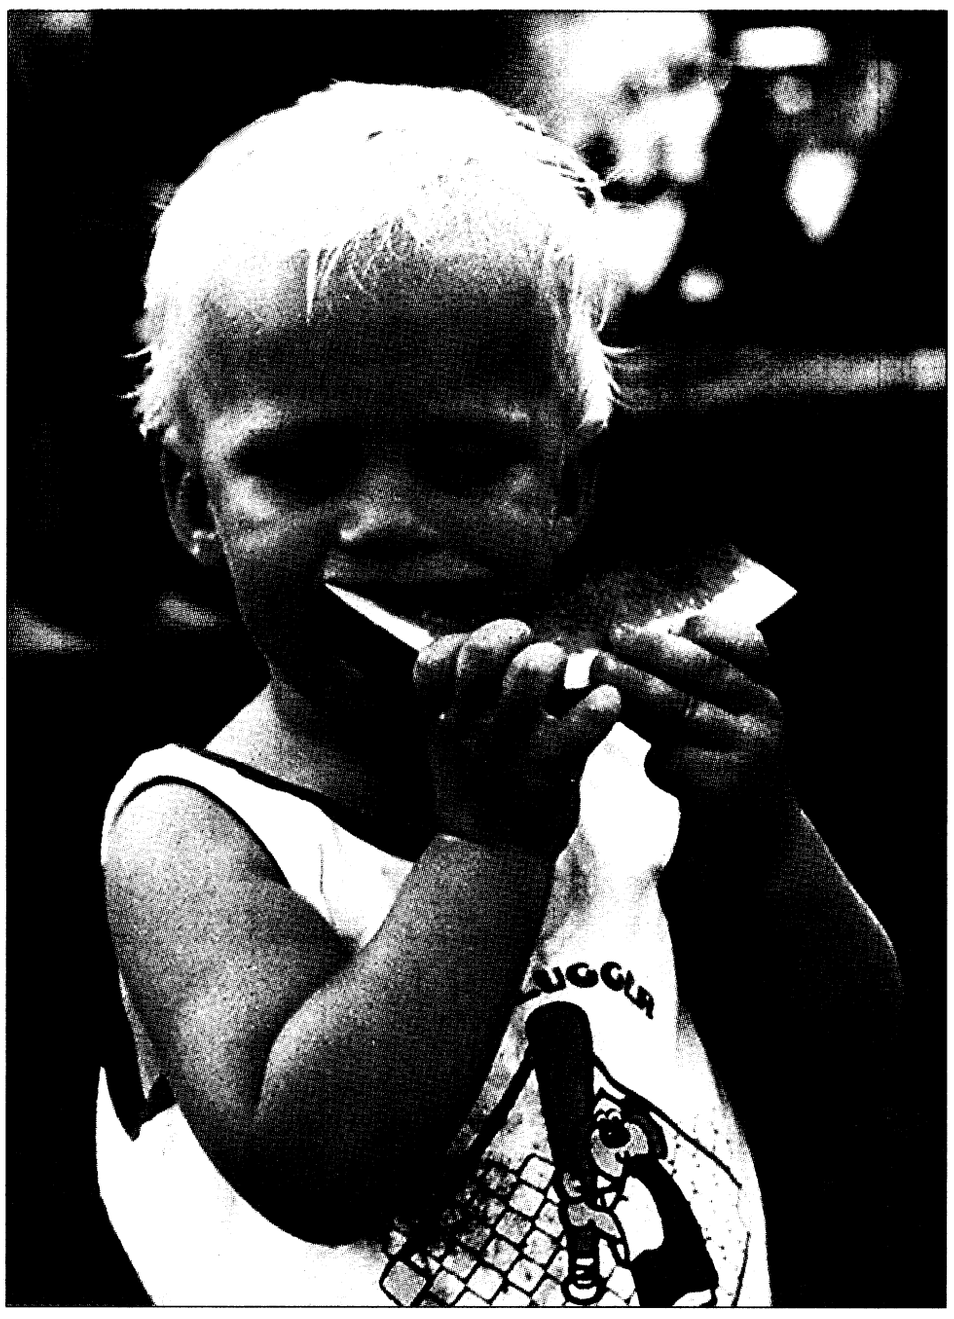
The club meets on a monthly basis and consists of women from different countries who get together and support each other in their new home country — the United States.

For more information, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471.

Academy hosts family day — The Henry Caro NCO Academy will host its annual Family and Friends Day at 10 a.m. Aug 6 at Uchee Creek Campgrounds.



For more information call 1st Sgt. Tavares at 545-2233.



Girl Scout membership kicks off — The Concharty of Girl Scouts is holding its annual Membership Kick-off event from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. July 24 at the Fort Benning FUN Center. The kickoff is for volunteers to get information, training and encouragement for the 1999-2000 Girl Scout program year. Attendees will enjoy refreshments and door prizes as they get acquainted with the Conchart Council staff and share ideas about what's planned for Girl Scouting in the new millennium.

For more information or to register for the 1999-2000 Membership Kickoff, call the Concharty Council office at 327-2646.

Red Cross needs volunteers — Volunteers are needed at the Red Cross office on Main Post, Fort Benning Counseling Center, Martin Army Community Hospital, Veterinary Clinic, Red Cross blood drives and Health and Safety services.

The next basic orientation for Red Cross volunteers who are 18 years or older will be held from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Aug. 3 at Building 2626 Soldiers' Plaza. For more information or to register, call 545-5194.

Child care fees set to increase in fall '99

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

Fees at military child care facilities will increase by about 1.6 percent for the 1999-2000 school year, DoD officials announced June 29.

Depending on their total family income, Department of Defense families will pay $39 to $114 per child per week during the coming school year. This represents a weekly increase of $1 to $3 per child. DoD family policy officials review child care fees annually.

Based on this review, DoD plans to adjust its fees using the inflation rate of 1.6 percent included in the president's fiscal 2000 budget, according to Carolee Van Horn, a Family Policy Office specialist here.

The fee covers only a portion of the actual cost of child care, Van Horn said.

"Regardless of income, all parents receive some subsidy since the government pays a portion of the cost for all," she said.

DoD views child care as critical to overall mission accomplishment, according to Linda Smith, Office of Family Policy director.

"The mobile military lifestyle can be stressful for young families," she explained. "On average, military families move every 2.9 years. They do not have the stability of neighbors or nearby family to help them with child care responsibilities."

Increased deployments and separations make military life even more demanding, Smith said. "By providing child care, we are helping military members balance the competing demands of the military mission and family responsibilities. We strongly believe this contributes to readiness and the retention of a highly skilled work force."

In 1998, Van Horn pointed out, the average DoD weekly fee was $70. For that, a child received up to 10 hours of care, breakfast, lunch and two snacks each day. Nationally, the average weekly fee for comparable center care ranged from $100 for infants to $85 for pre-schoolers.

How much parents pay for military child care is based on the family's total income. This includes all earnings, wages, salaries, tips, long-term disability benefits and voluntary salary deferrals. It also includes service members' combat pay, housing and subsistence allowances, and the value of meals and lodging furnished in-kind to military personnel residing on military installations.

Installation commanders set fees within ranges established by DoD. They can adjust fees within the range based on local cost of living conditions, Van Horn said. Commanders can also use an optional high-cost fee range if qualified child care providers earn higher wages in the local labor market, she added.

Installation child development centers may begin charging the following fees anytime between Aug. 1 and Oct. 1.

Commanders may offer a 20 percent fee discount for each additional child from the same family. Hardship waivers may be granted for families in unique financial circumstances.

Childcare fee chart

BBB: Life insurance serves as integral part of financial strategy

Better Business Bureau

What's your life worth? If you've shopped for life insurance that's probably what you're trying to figure out.

Life insurance can serve as an integral part of your overall financial strategy. Certain life insurance policies can be used for more than death benefit protection, by helping you to achieve your financial goals and adding security to the years you are living.

Choosing a life insurance product is an important decision, but it can be a complicated one. As with any major purchase it is important that you understand your needs and options available to you.

When beginning your search for the right life insurance, first determine how much coverage you'll need and how much you can afford. A professional insurance agent can provide valuable help by explaining how an insurance plan can be arranged to provide needed protection at the least cost.

Next, choose the type of policy that's best for your situation: term or permanent life insurance policies. Term life insurance provides protection for a specific period of time. It pays a benefit if you die during the term. Some term insurance policies can be renewed at the end of a specific period, which could be from one to 20 years. Your premium can be renewed each year (annual renewal term) and the rate increases with each renewal date.

Permanent life insurance policies provide lifelong protection and are known by a variety of names: whole, ordinary, universal, variable and adjustable. These policies offer death benefits and a savings account (also called cash value or cash surrender value) so that if you live, you usually get at least some of and often much more than the amount you spent on your premium. You can get money back either by cashing in the policy or by borrowing against it.

After you've made your decision as to how much and what type of insurance you need, shop around for the best rates. Make sure you fully understand any policy you are considering. If you are uncertain, ask a trusted family member or your attorney to review the policy with you. When you purchase a policy make your check payable to the insurance company not the agent.

Take the time to check on the financial strength of the companies that will have to stand behind the policies you're considering. A number of insurance rating services assess the financial strength of companies. These ratings can be found in your public or business libraries or can be obtained directly from the rating service.

Also, contact your Better Business Bureau of West Georgia, Southwest Georgia and East Alabama for a reliability report on the company.

If you have a complaint about your insurance agent or company, contact the company's customer service department. If you are still dissatisfied, contact your state insurance department or your BBB.

Practice safe sex to stay healthy

Cindy Plank
General Leonard Wood Army Community Hospital

According to the Centers for Disease Control, every year more than 12 million cases of sexually transmitted diseases are reported in the United States, resulting in billions of dollars in preventable health-care spending. Sexually transmitted diseases are particularly severe for women because they may cause few or no symptoms.

Do you know the basics of STDs? Let's take a closer look.

There is only one way to guarantee you'll never get a sexually transmitted disease: never have sex! Limiting your sexual activity to one person your entire life is a close second, provided your partner is also monogamous.

A third line of defense includes avoiding sex with people at risk for carrying STDs and using condoms for protection.

Here are some basic facts about STDs:

- Depending on the infection, STDs can cause serious, long-term problems like infertility, central-nervous-system disorders or death.
- Most STDs can be treated and cured with antibiotics. An exception is AIDS.
- Once you have had a STD, you can get it again. You don't develop immunity once you've been exposed.
- If you suspect you have a STD, see a health-care provider as soon as possible. Your sexual partner should also be contacted and treated.

Many of you have heard the phrase "safe sex." However, many people don't realize that abstinence (having no sex) is the only safe method to avoid infection or transmission of a sexually transmitted disease.

For most adult people, remaining abstinent is not realistic. So if you are sexually active, you can reduce the risk of infection by practicing safer sex methods and being a responsible sex partner.

To reduce your risk of becoming infected:

- Know your partner's sexual history. Be cautious.

  Don't rely on casual sexual partners to tell the truth.
- Maintain a mutually monogamous sexual relationship, meaning sex with only one partner.
- Avoid using intravenous drugs or having sex with partners who use IV drugs.
- Avoid the use of alcohol; it alters your ability to make good decisions.
- Avoid activities in which body fluids are exchanged.
- Always use a latex condom with the spermicide nonoxynol-nine every time you have sex.

Sex can be a normal, healthy and welcome part of life if you learn how to prevent STDs. Safer sex can protect you and your partner.

Remember, "safer sex" does not mean "safe sex." There is still a risk, even if you have protected sex. Understand your risk and be responsible.

An excellent website is www.cdc.gov for educational material, statistical data and treatment guidelines for all types of sexually transmitted diseases.

Fort Benning helps with blood shortage

Alphansa Oliver and Sandy Ethier

As our nation faces a continuous decline of blood donors, Fort Benning is gearing up to increase local blood donations by scheduling three blood drives during July.

The first drive will be sponsored by the 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Brigade, from noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday at Sand Hill in Classroom 1 of Building 3245, Hansen Hall. The goal is 250 pints.

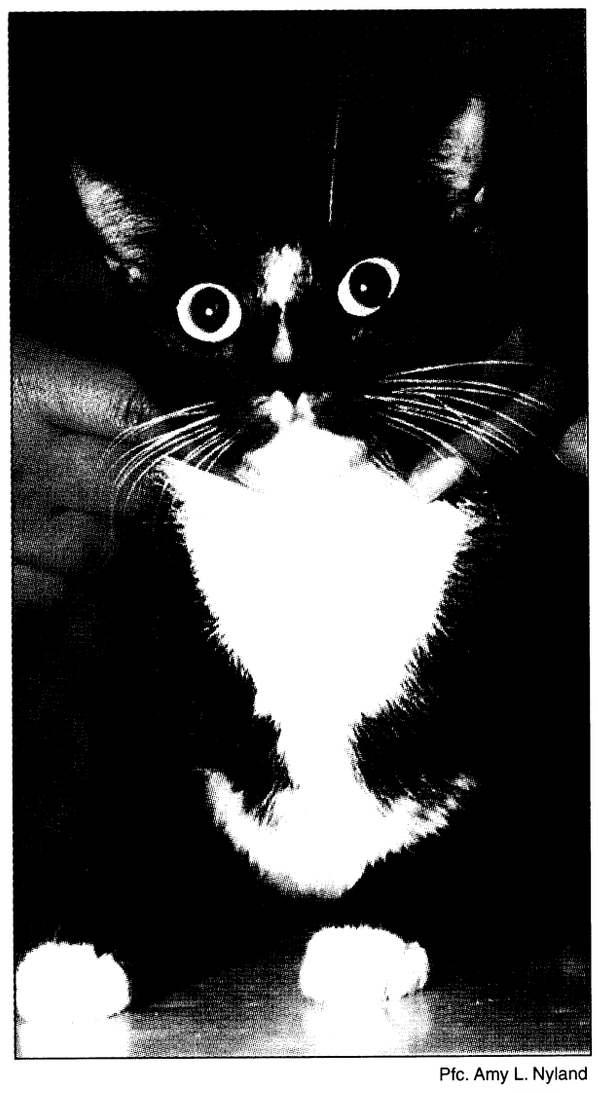
Civilian personnel and military personnel working in and near Infantry Hall are urged to donate July 16 in Classroom 50 of Infantry Hall. Hours of the drive are from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. The goal for this drive is 60 pints.

The Primary Leadership Development Course will be hosting their second drive this year July 21 in the day room of Building 2760 A. This drive is promoted by PLDC 6-99. Goal is 50 pints.

Currently there is a critical shortage of O and B blood types. Red Cross has averaged less than a half day's supply of O negative blood since mid-June. Red Cross requires a three-day supply to keep its hospitals supplied with enough blood to meet patients' needs (O negative is a universal blood type used most frequently during emergencies).

Also, the need for the O and B type blood donors is critical for pediatric hospitals, such as the Medical Center in Columbus, because blood banks in these hospitals require a supply of blood that is only five- to seven-days-old. Fresh blood is better for newborn babies experiencing medical problems.

Nationally, approximately 60 percent of the population is eligible to donate, yet only five percent donate blood. And today fewer of the younger population is joining the rank of blood donors. Unfortunately many of the older, multi-gallon donors are getting older, and more are experiencing health problems and are no longer able to donate.



Your participation in any of these blood drives is appreciated.

However, if giving blood isn't for you, there are other ways to make a difference. The American Red Cross is also in great need of volunteers. There are positions open at the Red Cross Office on Main Post, the Fort Benning Counseling Center, Martin Army Community Hospital, the Veterinary Clinic and at Red Cross blood drives and health and safety services.

For anyone who is interested, the next basic orientation for Red Cross volunteers who are 18 years or older will be from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Aug. 3 at Building 2626 in Soldiers' Plaza.

For more information about how you can get involved and make a difference in someone else's life or to register for the orientation, call 545-5194.

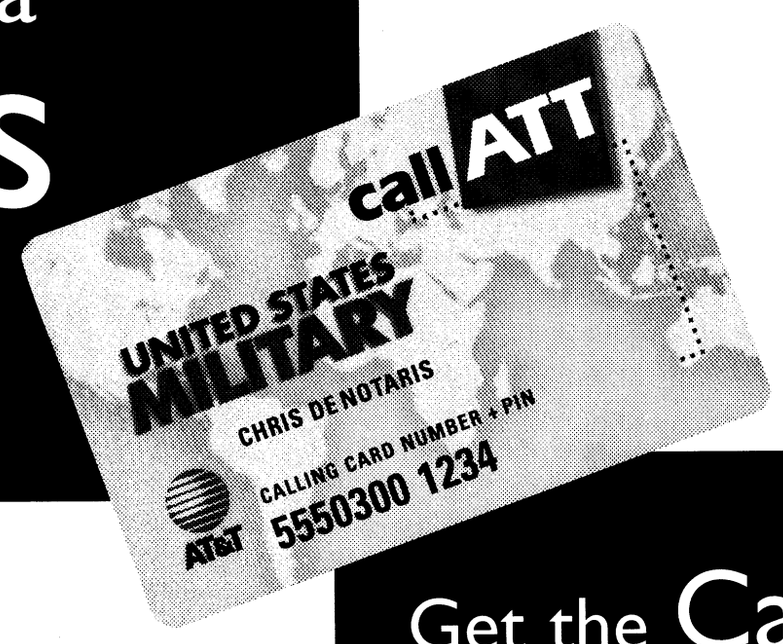
Furry Fun



A 6-month-old female terrier and adult female domestic short haired cat are a few of the animals available at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic. Many more are in need of a good home.

Pet owners are required to pay for initial vaccination and procedure costs, which can be anywhere from $8 to $40.

Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

Pray with persistence for answers

Chaplain (Maj.) Sherman Baker
36th Engineer Group

Your mother was very ill and you fervently prayed that God would heal her. She died. Was your prayer unanswered?

An opening came in your department. All the pieces fit for you to get the job: you were prepared for it; you had paid your dues with the department; it was your time to receive the promotion. You prayed that God would allow you to have that job. But they passed you over and brought in someone from the outside for that position. Was your prayer unanswered?

reflections

You lost the stone out of your ring. It was a ring that had both actual value and sentimental value to you. You prayed that God would help you find it. You never did find the stone. Was your prayer unanswered?

Unanswered prayers are one of the biggest problems that we face as Christians. We believe in prayer; we practice prayer, but it seems that many of our prayers are not answered.

"Why do some prayers go unanswered?" is one of the most frequent questions asked of ministers. Jesus taught us to pray with assurance. When we pray with assurance, we can pray with persistence with three words.

Ask. When we ask of God, we see our need and are willing to make contact with God. We know that we have a need God can meet.

Seek. This indicates that there is some effort on our part along with the request to God. We can pray, "Give us this day our daily bread," but we must still work. We can pray "Thy kingdom come," but we must still witness and preach. Someone has observed that there are three ways that people can cooperate with God, by thinking, working and praying. But each alone does eliminate the others.

Knock. This would imply the persistence that we bring to prayer. But if we keep knocking on God's door in prayer, does this mean that we must badger God before he will answer us? No. But it does indicate that we must be serious in our prayer.

Prayers can be answered in three ways; yes, no and wait awhile. We may need to wait for things to be done on God's schedule. Remember that our prayers are addressed to our heavenly Father. God is our father and he wants the very best for each of us.

Are prayers really unanswered? No, prayers are

God alone fulfills all our needs

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

David and Carol have been married 16 years. David is a successful Army officer just leaving command of a heavy armor unit and on his way to the Army War College. He has far outstripped his peers and will soon be promoted to colonel below the zone, his third straight below-the-zone promotion. The question is not will he make general, it is how many stars will he get?

reflections

With two active teenagers at home Carol is extremely busy running to after-school events, soccer practices, games and ballet lessons. However, she does find time to do extensive volunteer work on post. To outsiders David and Carol are living the American dream, but this dream is turning out to be a nightmare.

David's career is on a fast track to general officer but at the expense of Carol and the children. Sometimes David does not get home until late at night and weekends are often spent catching up with all the work he did not get done during the week.

David says, "It will get better once we get to the War College, and I have more time to spend with you and the kids." "Yeah, right!" comes Carol's response, for she knows he will immerse himself in his studies in order to become the distinguished honor graduate. Second place will never do for David.

While Carol enjoys the benefits of being a wife of a colonel, she is slowly but surely becoming bitter and resentful at its costs. She needs her husband, and her children need their father.

David is a great officer, and Carol is a great wife and mother, but this marriage is headed for disaster if something does not change soon. There is no career that is more important than one's family. What good is it to reach the highest pinnacle of success in any chosen career if it means losing your family in the process? Unfortunately there are far too many couples in the Army like David and Carol, but for them there is hope.

Robert S. McGee, in his book, The Search for Significance, has this to say about a person's search for significance: "Millions of people spend a lifetime searching for love, acceptance and success without understanding the need that compels them. We must understand that this hunger for self-worth is God-given and can only be satisfied by him. Our value is not dependent on our ability to earn the fickle acceptance of people, but rather its true source is the love and acceptance of God. He created us. He alone knows how to fulfill all of our needs."

At the Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, couples can find hope for a troubled marriage. How? By involving God in the healing process for without his intervention and guidance the search for significance leads to a dead-end street. For more information, call the Family Life Center at 545-2050.

Q: As a follow up to last week's question, what type of punishments and consequences can I expect from the military if I receive a DUI, regardless of whether or not it was received on post?

A: In addition to the civilian court-imposed punishments for driving under the influence of alcohol, drugs or other intoxicating substances which includes a monetary fine between $300 and $1,000, plus statutory penalties (usually adds approximately 20 percent to the fine amount), community service and a period of imprisonment in jail, a Soldier can expect the Army to take several administrative actions.

If a person is charged with a DUI on post his or her on-post driving privileges are suspended on the spot. Further, upon conviction of an on-post DUI, the on-post driving privileges will be revoked for a period of not less than 12 months. A person who refuses to submit to a breathalyzer test is also subject to a 12-month mandatory revocation of on-post driving privileges.

If the DUI occurs off post, the Military Police Activity is notified of the DUI charge. Once a lawful conviction is obtained, a telephone call is placed to the Soldier's commander, who in turn sees that the Soldier is escorted to Building 2637 in order to receive and sign the notice revoking the Soldier's on-post driving privileges. This period of revocation is not less than 12 months.

Additionally, all active duty officers and NCOs (corporals and above) are issued a written General Officer Reprimand. The reprimand may be filed in the Soldier's Official Military Personnel File or maintained at the local level.

In addition to the criminal DUI conviction in court, commanders can take further actions that can severely affect a Soldier's rank and potential for military service. These actions include the possibility of an administrative reduction, bar to reenlistment and administrative discharge.

All Soldiers who receive a DUI are required to attend Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Training. The training program is approximately 12 to 14 hours of instruction and education on the dangers involved with alcohol and drug abuse. The class currently meets on Fridays and Mondays.

Additionally, the Soldier will be referred to the ADAPC Counseling Center for an evaluation. The evaluation must be scheduled within 10 days of notification of the DUI charge. It is important to note, each Soldier must receive a letter from program personnel indicating he or she was evaluated and received appropriate education and counseling based on the individual needs before the Soldier is able to get his or her driver's license and post driving privileges back.

The Soldier will have to attend remedial driver training. Currently the Fort Benning DOL Driver Testing Section, located in Building 1369, conducts one advanced driver training session per month. Again this is mandatory attendance for all Soldiers charged with a DUI.

Finally, law enforcement authorities, whether military or civilian notify every driver's licensing bureau of a DUI conviction. State agencies regularly report this same information to the driver's insurance company. These follow-up actions can result in increased insurance rates for many years to come and possible suspension of the Soldiers state driver's license.

Please note, the foregoing are military administrative actions for Soldiers charged with DUI and are in addition to the state court imposed punishment. If you need additional information on this topic, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282 or 545-3281 to make an appointment or come by Building 5 on Friday morning to make an appointment for the following week.

PCSing

Family Housing Branch reminds Soldiers to take action

Marty Gutierrez
Directorate of Public Works

The permanent change of station moving season is here. The Family Housing Branch, DPW, reminds all Soldiers living in government quarters to take action now.

If you will be PCSing this year, two stops are a must for preplanning. One is the Family Housing Office in Olson Hall, Building 399, open 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The other is transportation in Building 280, Transportation Lane.

Personnel in these offices will provide all the handouts, forms, information and advice needed to ensure a smooth trouble-free move. Don't delay, start early. At this time of the year, the volume of Soldiers PCSing is at its highest.

Successful termination of quarters at the Family Housing Office involves the following steps:

•Make an appointment for your mandatory pre-inspection. Thirty to 45 days before you are scheduled to leave the installation, call Quarters Management Section (assignments and terminations) at 545-2990 or stop by in person at the Family Housing Office in Building 399.

•During the pre-inspection, the inspector will walk through your quarters and prepare a pre-inspection sheet detailing problems or deficiencies that must be corrected in order to pass final inspection.

•Make an appointment for your final inspection. Ensure quarters are cleaned to government standards.

•During the final inspection, if occupants fail they must correct deficiencies, pay for any damages and schedule another final inspection.

• Pick up termination paperwork and proceed to Building 2621 to complete out-processing.

DPW Family Housing must serve a large number of Soldiers in a short period of time with a limited work force. Early scheduling will avoid conflicts and delays. Soldiers who wait until the last minute to contact Family Housing may be unable to schedule inspection appointments for the specific days and times that they may require.

Remember that national holidays, organization days and installation training holidays may impact your installation clearing plans. During these times, although soldiers may have completed termination of quarters, the entire out-processing at Soldiers' Plaza is closed. Installation signatures can not be obtained until the next duty day.

For more information, call the Quarters Management Section at 545-2990, Inspection Section at 545-7312 or Community Homefinding Relocation and Referral Services at Soldiers' Plaza at 545-3921.

Government tackles issues of foster care

Mark S. Mandell
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

As part of a national effort to deal with the growing challenge of hundreds of thousands of children lost in limbo in the foster care system, the federal government will soon establish an Internet site containing photographs of, and information about, as many as 100,000 of those children.

The hope is that, by putting a face on the problem, as well as by requiring that the cases of foster children will be expedited by the courts, more children will be matched with permanent, adoptive families. The effort is designed to complement the 1997 Adoption and Safe Families Act, which requires states to speed placement in permanent homes of foster children — many taken from abusive or neglectful parents.

The Clinton administration wants to double the number of foster care adoptions by 2002. "We can use the Internet to promote adoptions while protecting the confidentiality of children and families," President Clinton said.

Technology has given us an important tool, and we should use it."

Trial lawyers are trying to do their part as well. The Association of Trial Lawyers of America has launched "The Lawyers, Challenge for Children" as a part of its long-term "Keep Our Families Safe" program.

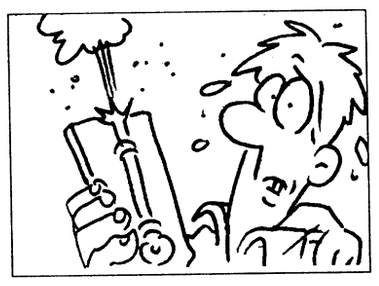
The "Lawyers, Challenge for Children" is a program to provide pro bono, or free legal representation to some of the 500,000 children currently in foster care in the U.S. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services — which is developing the new web site — has reported that the number of foster children nationwide increased by 19 percent from 1990 to 1995. HHS figures from 22 states show the average length of stay in foster care was 34.2 months as of Sept. 30, 1996, and 18 percent of those kids had been in foster care for more than four years.

ATLA is asking each of its members to take on, without fee, at least one case involving the well-being of children.

The kids will thank us for giving them back their childhoods, the judges will thank us for helping relieve the immense backlog of cases and our communities will acquire a better appreciation of the good that trial lawyers do every day.

It is estimated that 100,000 of these children will never be able to return to their birth families. In the past, only a fraction of those kids available for adoption — 20,000 in 1995, 28,000 in 1996 and 31,000 in 1997 — have found new families. In many instances, what stands between these children and a safe, permanent, loving home is a competent trial lawyer who will represent that child in court.

In the absence of a skilled attorney, the child's case often becomes bogged down in a social service system that is overworked and under-resourced and a civil justice system that accommodates everyone but the child. In essence, cases involving children are "processed," not advocated.



These children need and deserve competent counsel willing to advocate for their rights, and particularly for their safety.

It is a question of choices and priorities. We need only take a look at our own children to know what choices have to be made and what priorities need to be set. Whatever other issues we address or causes we undertake, we can never forsake the responsibility of protecting our children.

The "Lawyers Challenge for Children" will recruit and train lawyers to assume the representation of these children and to ensure that each of them is returned home in a timely fashion, if that is appropriate, or adopted by a new family in the event that "reunification" is not in the child's best interest.

ATLA is working closely with the Dave Thomas Foundation and the Dave Thomas Center for Adoption Law at Capital University Law School in Columbus, Ohio, on this important program.

QUOTE ME

With respect to readiness, oftentimes I think we tend to talk about it as a separate proposition. I'm inclined to think that it's a people issue. When you hire competent men and women to practice a profession, they, in fact, want to have the opportunity to exercise the skills and talents that they derive while serving in the military.

Health survey reveals tobacco use still too high

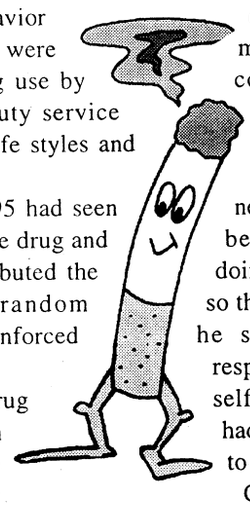
Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

A 1998 survey of health behaviors among active duty service members reveals DoD hasn't cut smoking rates as low as it would like.

Smoking levels dropped just two percentage points from the 32 percent level reported in a similar survey conducted three years earlier. Although DoD medical departments continue to propagate smoking cessation programs, a senior health care leader said the medics can't do it alone.

"I think we really need to involve the entire military community," said John Mazzuchi, deputy assistant secretary of defense for health affairs clinical and program policy.

Tobacco use is just one of many health-related behaviors the survey looked at, but it continues to be one of DoD's top health concerns, particularly from a military readiness perspective.



"Smokers are at sick call more than people who are not smoking," Mazzuchi said. "They're not as physically fit, not as able to do all the physical demands on the job when they smoke cigarettes."

Not all military medical facilities offer proven smoking cessation therapy, such as nicotine patches, Mazzuchi said. He'd like to see that change.

"Literature shows that using nicotine replacement therapy, coupled with counseling, is the best way of getting people to stay off cigarettes," he said. "So DoD is examining very carefully how to make that benefit more uniform across our entire military health care system.

"Almost two-thirds of our smokers say they'd like to quit, but many of them have tried and been unsuccessful. We need to do a better job of helping them."

DoD began conducting the health behavior survey in the early 1980s, when officials were alarmed about allegations of illicit drug use by service members. Since then, active duty service members have been surveyed for their life styles and health habits about every three years.

Mazzuchi said the department by 1995 had seen marked decreases in bad health habits like drug and alcohol abuse and tobacco use. He attributed the success rates to policies such as random urinalysis programs that backed up and enforced abstinence and reduction messages.

The latest survey shows that illicit drug use has dropped from 27.6 percent in 1980 to 2.7 percent in 1998. During the same period, heavy drinking (five or more drinks at least once a week) declined from 20.8 percent to 15.4 percent, and cigarette smoking fell from 51 percent to 29.9 percent.

"The surveys provide DoD with valuable information about why people do what they do, so we can develop measures to help them and tailor our education programs to meet their needs," Mazzuchi said. With the 1998 survey, for example, DoD wanted to learn more about the impact of stress on service members.

"We have found that stress levels in the military are fairly high," he said. "When you look at the reasons for stress, they are related to the operations tempo — deployment and family separation, for example. But the good news is that the coping mechanisms for that stress tend to be constructive things like talking to a friend, making plans, saying a prayer or doing physical fitness."

Past surveys revealed an institutional neglect of women's health issues that has since been rectified, Mazzuchi said. "Women are doing quite well in terms of access to health care, so this time we took a look at men's health issues," he said. "We found that one-third of our respondents said they had conducted a testicular self-examination in the last month, but we also had a third who had never done one. So we need to focus our education efforts there."

Concerning oral health, 90 percent of survey respondents said they'd had a dental examination in the past year, although 16 percent needed dental care before deploying. "We really want to make sure our people are dentally ready," Mazzuchi said. "There was a major push in dental health care about two years ago, and we're seeing the results now. We're very pleased and want to continue to maintain those high levels of health."

Questions about safe sex also appeared on the survey, but only 44 percent of unmarried respondents said they used condoms during sex. "We'd like that number to go up because of our concerns about venereal disease and AIDS, and we need to say that better to our people," he said.

Everything learned from the survey is used to maintain a baseline DoD uses to develop and improve education and intervention programs. He said the department isn't as concerned about actual numbers as it is about trends.

"Since we've done the survey approximately every three years, we can clearly look at trend data," Mazzuchi said. "We're not looking at individual health but at population health. What is the health of our population? Where we have pockets of behavior that isn't healthy, how can we best reach those people and convince them to lead more healthy life styles?

"Our goal is to have our people be conscious of the fact that they control much of their health care destiny," he said. "We do the things we do to protect them because we want a fit fighting force. We want our people to understand that their mission is national security and we are depending on them. The healthier they are, the better they can protect their country."

The complete results of the 1998 survey are on the Military Health System home page at www.tricare.osd.mil, including an 11-page "highlights" section.

Army puts out sexual assault handbook

Sgt. 1st Class Connie Dickey
Army News Service

The Army has published a handbook to help with its sexual assault and rape prevention training. The book, Sexual Assault-Prevention and Response, is being used now by Individual Entry Training units, according to Lt. Col. Dorothy Doyle.

Doyle, who works in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, said 636,000 books have been distributed with the bulk going to Training and Doctrine Command units. "Most have gone out to basic training, OSUT (one station unit training) and drill sergeant schools. Some have gone to U.S. Army Reserve Training Centers and the Army National Guard."

She said the remaining were sent to Army installations where the handbooks can be used during unit training. "Anyone can train the subject using the handbook as a guide," she said.

The handbooks are used to support IET Basic Combat Training Program Of Instruction 21-114, Rape Prevention Training, Doyle said. The handbooks are training tools for the one-hour rape prevention classes. Doyle said soldiers should be handed a handbook when leaving the class.

"The handbook focuses on awareness and prevention. It provides a definition of sexual assault, the Army's policy on the subject, the types and myths of sexual assault and prevention tips. It also details what a victim can do after an attack as well as victims rights."

Doyle said the handbook is the result of sexual misconduct incidents in the fall of 1996. Because of those incidents the Army leadership directed an assessment of the Army's human relations environment. The Human Relations Action Plan assessment found sexual harassment exists throughout the Army and that Army leaders needed to do more on preventing sexual harassment and related issues.

The plan directed Doyle and her counterparts to develop a guide and briefing on rape prevention that could be integrated into IET instructions, she said. A decision was later made to provide copies of the handbook to all Army installations, Army Reserve Training Centers and the Army National Guard.

"We have exhausted our initial supply," Doyle said. But funding is being sought now for an additional supply to be available by the winter of 2000.

The handbook, published by Channing L. Bete Co. is copyrighted, and photo-copying the book is prohibited.

If anyone is having trouble in getting copies of the handbook, they can call Doyle at (703) 697-8991 or DSN 227-8991, or email her at dorothy.doyle@hqda.army.mil.

Organization offers mortgage tips

Georgia Society of CPAs

Are you ready to purchase your first home?

If today's low interest rates are inducing you to buy your first home, the Georgia Society of CPAs suggest you do a little homework before you start gathering paint chips and clipping furniture ads. Here are a few things you need to consider.

Know what you can afford

Most lenders use a two-part qualification ratio to determine how much money you can safely spend on living expenses and mortgage costs: 28/26. What this means is that lenders will generally allow you to spend up to 28 percent of your gross monthly income on housing expenses — principle, interest, homeowner's insurance and taxes. If the down payment that you scrape together amounts to less than 20 percent of the purchase price, your 28 percent allowance also needs to include the cost of purchasing private mortgage insurance (PMI), which protects the lender in case you default.

In terms of the second part of the equation, 26 percent of your gross monthly income is the amount lenders will allow you for a mortgage plus monthly recurring debt, such as your car loans and credit card bills. Normally, only debts that will take more than 10 months to pay off will matter.

Identify your comfort level

The 28/26 qualification ratio establishes the maximum amount you are eligible to be loaned, and lenders will happily lock you into as high a level of debt as you want, using these criteria. However, this number may not be within your comfort zone Take a look at the past year's income and expenses. If you commit the maximum amount to a mortgage, will you have sufficient funds left over to meet expenses for hobbies and activities you enjoy? Are you wiling to forego such activities in order to meet your mortgage commitment?

Make sure you're credit healthy

In order to qualify for a mortgage, you must have a clean credit record for at least two to three years. Even if you think your borrowing history is without blemish, take advantage of federal law and ask to inspect your credit reports; they could contain discrepancies. And remember, you are entitled to request corrections, this process can be time consuming.

Get yourself preapproved

Preapproval means the lender has checked your credit and verified your income and other financial references. You'll get a document that says the lender will give you a mortgage up to a specific amount, as long as the home appraisal justifies the price. This may help you beat a slightly higher bid from someone who does not have a preapproval.

Shop around for your mortgage

Not all mortgages are created equal. Doing a little competitive shopping can definitely save you money. Check newspaper ads and ask for referrals from friends ad co-workers who have recently gone through the process.

Tournament hopes to net local stars — The Fort Benning Sports Branch will host a Summer Basketball Tournament July 23-25 at Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

The roster must consist of no more than 12 members, all from the same unit, and be submitted to Audie Murphy Fitness Center. Registration deadline is July 19.

Rosters will be accepted as first come, first serve, allowing the first 16 teams to participate.

A tournament scratch meeting is scheduled for 1 p.m. July 21 at Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

For more information, call Fred Woods 545-1940.

Office sets race — The Fort Benning Sports Branch in conjunction with the Army Physical Fitness School and the Follow Me Roadrunners will hold a 10-mile road race July 30.

Time and location of the race will be announced at a later date. The event will serve as a qualifying race for the Fort Benning Army 10-Miler team. The Army 10-Miler is the Army's premier sporting event and will be held this year October 10 in Washington D.C.

For more information, call 545-6386 or 544-9595.

Field house offers free aerobics classes — Free aerobics classes to all ID cardholders are offered at 5 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays at Briant Wells Field House. The classes will include kickboxing, high and low impact aerobics, resistance training and step aerobics. Correct shoes should be worn to avoid any foot injuries and a water bottle is also recommended.

For more information, call Sgt. Lenora Gogins-Watkins at 545-6823 or Sgt. Brian Whittaker at 544-9970.

Association offers golf cards — The American Lung Association of Georgia is offering its 1999 "Lung Card" Golf Privilege Card.

The $25 card offers free or reduced green fees at more than 600 golf courses in the southeast, 100 of which are located in Georgia.

To purchase a 1999 Golf Privilege Card, call (800) LUNG-USA or visit the American Lung Association at 4570 Reese Road in Columbus.

Hunt Club offers riding lessons — The Fort Benning Hunt Club offers English riding lessons.

The lessons, which focus on dressage and jumping, are offered for beginners or advanced riders. Riders must be at least 5 years old.

For more information, call Andrea Pitts at 689-3945.

Camp seeks local talent — Final registration is now open for the Ten Star All-Star Basketball Camp. Boys and girls ages 10 to 18 are eligible. Players are selected by invitation only. Past participants include: Michael Jordan, Tim Duncan, Jerry Stackhouse, Grant Hill, Christian Laettner, Antawn Jamison, Vince Carter and Steve Wojciechowski.

Camp locations are Atlanta, Ga., Raleigh, N.C. and Mobile, Ala. Scholarships are possible for the most advanced players.

For an evaluation form, call (704) 372-8610.

For more information, call 545-3070.

USAPFS takes steps toward 21st century

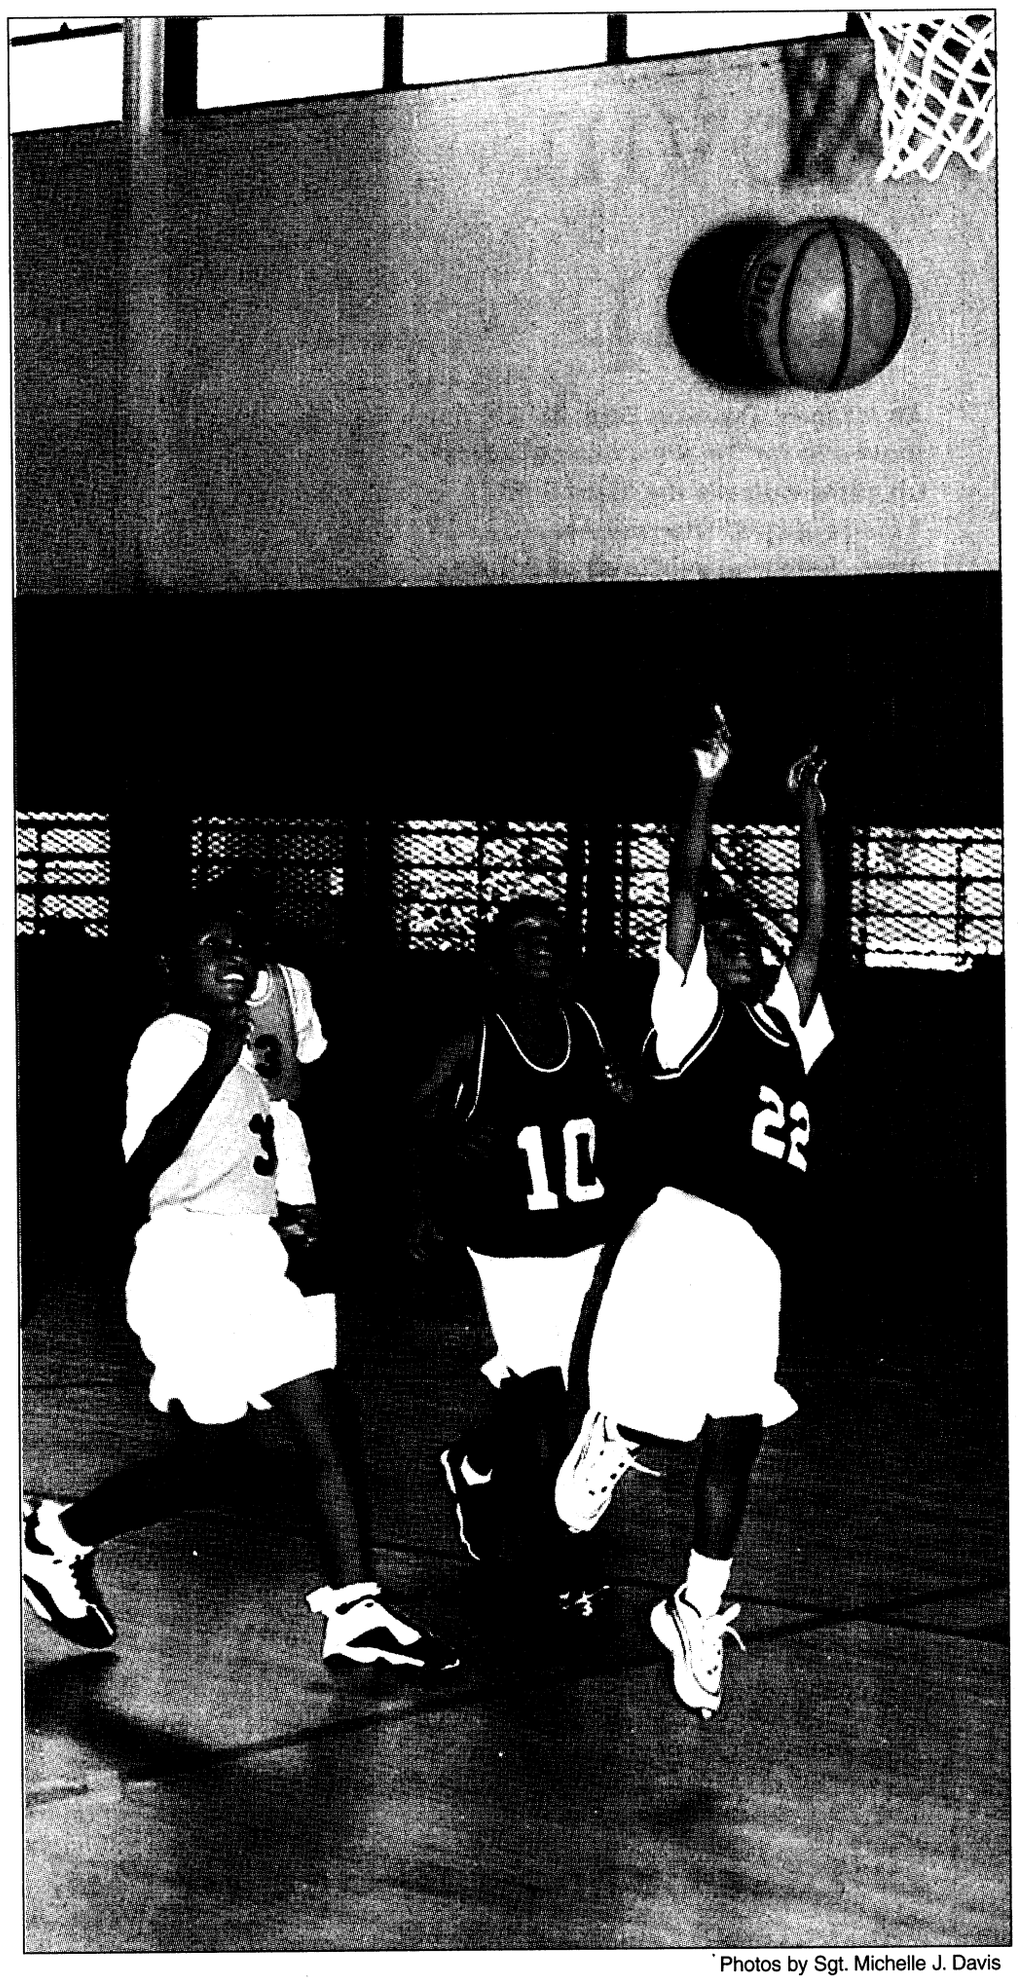
Dr. Ed Thomas
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School moved from the Soldier Support Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., to Fort Benning in 1992. Since then, it has become increasingly clear to Infantry leaders that current physical readiness training doctrine needs to be reshaped for the battlefield. Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst recently ordered the Directorate of Operations and Training and the USAPFS to develop a physical readiness test training circular designed for the 21st Century combat Soldier, and numerous units at Fort Benning are already testing some of the new concepts.

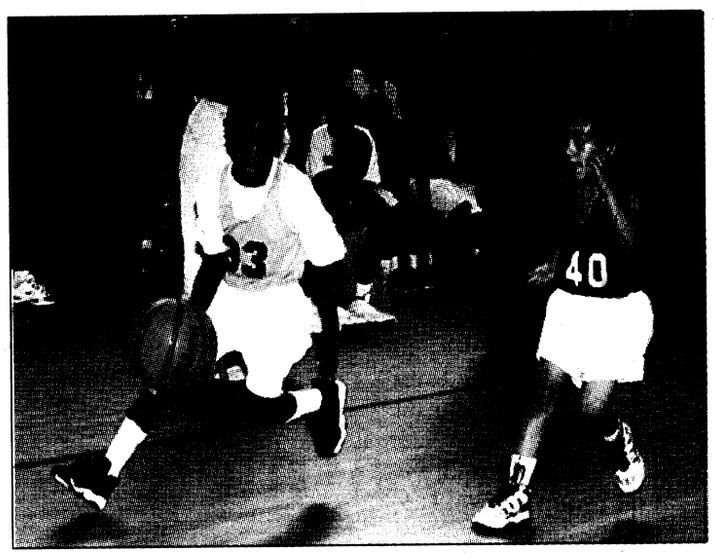
"One of the weak links in our current doctrine is a lack of motor skills training," said Frank Palkoska, USAPFS chief of doctrine. "We cannot get to battlefield physical readiness without filling the gap between physical and combat readiness."

WWII physical training pioneer Dr. Thomas Cureton wrote that motor fitness generally refers to a Soldier's ability to run, jump, dodge, fall, climb, swim, hang, kick, bend, twist, carry, throw, lift heavy loads and endure long hours of continuous and varied physical tasks. Motor skills require a harmonious interaction of the muscular and nervous systems. They include kinesthetic awareness or muscle sense, energy and suppleness of the tissues and joints. Motor fitness also includes balance, agility, strength, power, endurance and flexibility. Highly developed motor skills allow a Soldier to overcome fatigue and reach peak performance.

"Flexibility has to do with a Soldier's ability to move his joints through their full range, and power describes the capacity to release force with a sudden exertion," said Palkoska. "Balance is related to neuromuscular control, agility deals with reactions, strength is connected to exertion of force, and endurance is the ability to continue moving even though fatigued."



"Current PRT doctrine falls far short of the WWII standard in the area of motor skills area," said Steve VanCamp, USAPFS instructional systems specialist. "But we can adjust our course to meet the future."



One of the first steps, VanCamp added, is to begin assessing our current motor abilities.

Numerous motor skills assessments are available, and the USAPFS is inviting commanders at Fort Benning to test their Soldiers.

More than 150 youth take to the court during summer season

Youth from around Fort Benning converged at Main Post's Youth Services building this week to take part in the opening days of summer basketball action. The 6- to-7-year-old players began their season Tuesday night, followed by the 8-to-9 year olds on Wednesday and the 10 to 12 and the 13 to 15 year-olds kicked off their season Thursday night. The play schedule will continue on this same routine throughout the seven-week season.

Counterclockwise from top to bottom, a Sonic dribbles past a member of the Spurs during a basketball game Tuesday. At left, a Spurs team player goes up for a lay-up during the first game of the season for the 6-to-7-year-old league. The Sonics, coached by Gary Hunt, ended up sliding past the Spurs, coached by Geraldo Santiago, 9-3.

Rangers, wife tackle Hi-Tec Challenge

Three teams from the local Ranger community participated in the Hi-Tec Adventure Race June 27.

1st Lt. Brandon Meno
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Rangers from Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, ran, mountain biked and kayaked their way to a top 50 finish in Hi-Tec Sports Adventure Racing Series race held at Fort Yargo State Park near Atlanta June 27.

The race, the third of a 12-race series, is a national competition that challenges athletes to a 5-8 mile trail run, a 12-20 mile mountain bike jaunt, a 1.5-2 mile kayak paddle and a barrage of many other challenges that battle even the most physically fit and test the team's ability to work together, overcome adversity and negotiate the obstacle or task. Adding to the rigorous routine is the uncertainty of not knowing the event order or length until the day of the race.

The Rangers, along with another family member, started the day with a 7.5-mile trail run with a stream crossing at the halfway mark. The run brought the team back to the transition point where the first of the many special tasks were issued. The first one was the 10-foot tire wall.

After climbing the wall, teams had to grab a 7-foot log and carry a team member down to the kayak leg more than 50 meters away with the person carried not touching the ground. Once at the kayak, the team swam out 25 meters to retrieve the kayak paddles. Now with paddles in hand, the team paddled two miles before once again transporting a teammate via the log carry back to the transition point.

It was here that they received their next challenge, orienteering. They were given three points to locate as quickly as possible and when finished, it was time to hit the trails — only this time it would not be on foot, it would be on a mountain bike.

The mountain bike portion of the race took the eight members around a hilly, mud-ridden 7.25 mile track twice.

After making the trek and 6-foot deep stream crossing on the bikes, it was time for another battery of special tests.

School studies updates for physical readiness training

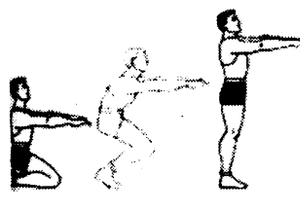
"We are also be interested in the results," Palkoska said. Send them to thomase@benning.army.mil.

Take the Test

Maximum score is 100 points. Twenty points are given for success on the first try and 10 points for success on the second try. Only two attempts are allowed. No points are awarded for two failures.

Frog Stand

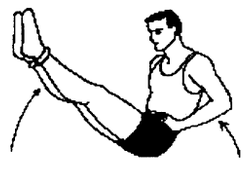


Assume a squatting position, with your palms flat on the floor and your arms between your bent legs so that your elbows are touching your legs just below your knees. Tip forward, put the full weight of your body on your arms and hands, and lift yourself so that your toes are off the floor and your body is balanced on your hands. (as you tip forward, you will find it necessary to rest your legs on your elbows) Hold this balancing position for 20 seconds.

Floor touch

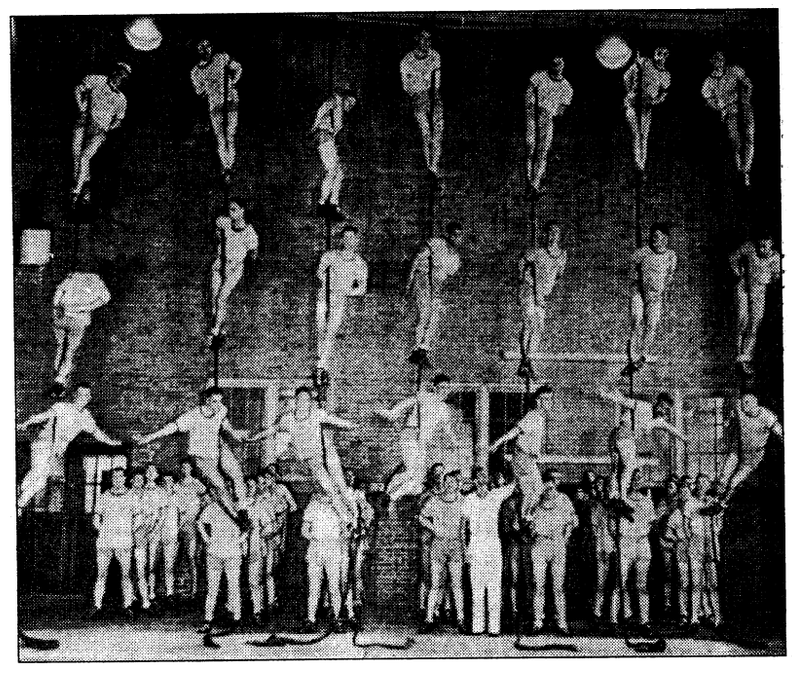
Keeping your legs together and your knees locked, bend at the waist and touch the floor with your fingertips and hold for five seconds without bouncing.

Knee jump



From a kneeling position, with the soles of your feet up and your arms stretched forward from the shoulders, swing arms downward and then back up. Jump to a standing position, and hold your balance. Both feet should come up together.

Buddy lift



Select a partner within ten pounds of your body weight, lift him, and balance him across your shoulders. You should perform the lift within 10 seconds. Your partner should not assist you in any way, especially once you have lifted him to his feet.

V-up

Sit on the floor, with your trunk straight upright, your legs outstretched, your knees stiff, and your hands on your hips. Then lean back so that your legs come off the floor. With your knees remaining rigid, hold the V-position (body and legs approximately 45 degrees for 60 seconds. No points awarded if back or knees bend or hands leave hips.

U.S. Navy photo

WWII combat motor skills training was highly developed and can be applied to today's physical readiness training.

Rangers ride out race

The first required the team to cross a wire obstacle without falling off, similar to a two-rope bridge.

The second test, known as the meatgrinder, required the team to scale a 8-foot spool by climbing a rope and then run to the finish nearly 50 meters away.

The team consisted of Timothy Dines, Lorianne Nichols, Robert Nichols, Brian Ross, Matt Eversmann, Brandon Meno, Steven Maney and Jeremy Waechter.

Military athletes prepare for games

Maj. Suba Saty, USAF
Special to the American Forces Press Service

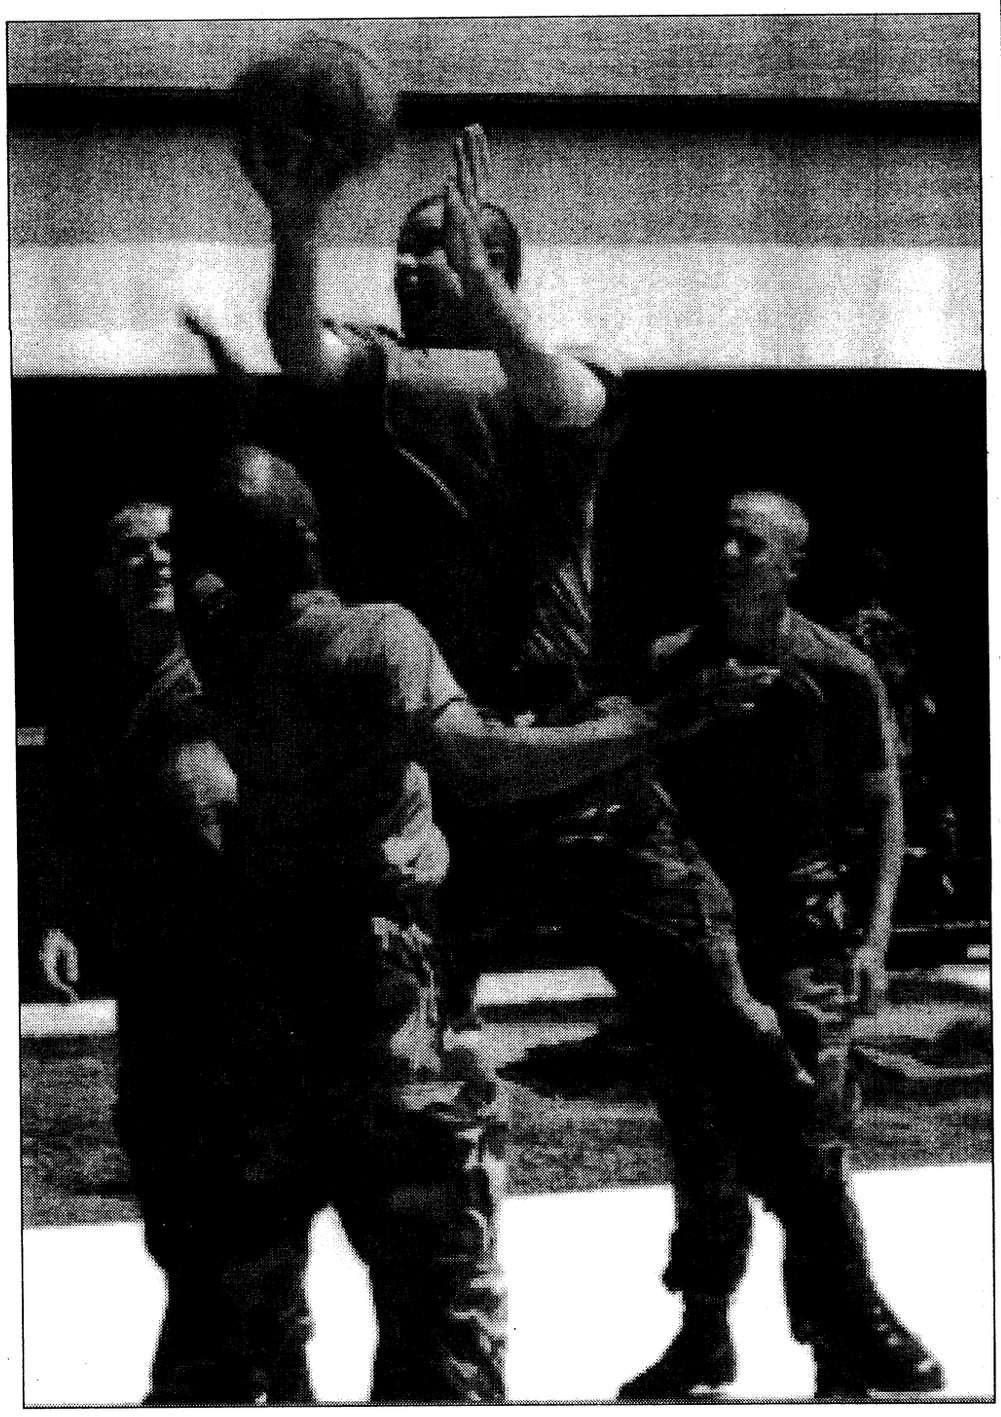
ALEXANDRIA, Va. -- About 400 military athletes and officials are preparing to represent the United States Aug. 5 to 18 in 21sporting events at the 2nd Military World Games in Zagreb,Croatia.

The American athletes hail from all the military branches, including the Coast Guard, and will travel under the auspices of DoD's Armed Forces Sports Council here. Some are members of the Army and Air Force World Class Athlete programs.

The World Games are sponsored by the Conseil International du Sport Militaire [French for International Military Sports Council, and better known as CISM]. The meet's 24 events include the familiar basketball, soccer, swimming, boxing and wrestling, but also unusual competitions, such as orienteering, parachuting, and the unique naval pentathlon, which pits athletes in a series of endurance events on land and water.

Founded in 1948, CISM has a membership of 121 nations. In terms of member nations, it is the world's second largest sporting organization after the International Olympic Committee. Its administrative headquarters is in Brussels, Belgium.

CISM sports championships were scattered all over the world each year in the past and were merged into the all-encompassing Military World Games in 1995. At the first games, in Rome, the United States finished eighth in total medal count among 83 countries. Croatian officials expect 10,000 athletes and officials from nearly 100 countries to attend the Zagreb games.



U.S. officials and those of other countries have expressed concerns about holding the games in the Balkans at this time. CISM President Col. Gianni Gola of Italy recently sent a message to members that said, in part: "I'm convinced that CISM, by organizing these Military World Games in Croatia, will very much contribute to re-establish durable and sensed peace in that region. Today, even more than yesterday, Croatia and CISM have to heartily and seriously prepare this big rendezvous in Zagreb. We will prove that peace and friendship will be the driving forces of the civilized world of tomorrow."

For more information on the World Games, visit the Armed Forces Sports Council Web site at http://dticam.dtic.mil/dodsports/.

Movin' on up

An Infantry Training Brigade Soldier moves in for the shot during a pick-up game outside the Main Post Arcade July 3. The trainees, like many Soldiers, ventured out during the long holiday weekend to enjoy the warm Georgia sunshine and the time off from work.

Check out the Georgia trip supplement on D-3 to find about other things to do around the state. The supplement includes lists of festivities this summer in addition to museums, theaters and other attractions in the area.

TIPS FOR HOMEOWNERS

Know "Burglary Basics" To Help Protect Your Home

(NAPSA)-There are ways to help you feel more at home when you're away on vacation or out of town.

By knowing what burglars look for, you can protect your home. During the warm weather months, many communities will see a 10 to 18 percent increase in burglaries, home safety experts say.

Burglars prefer an empty house. In fact, about 59 percent of burglaries occur during the day, when nobody is home. Burglars encounter a resident in 13 percent of break ins. Burglars also prefer homes that provide extra cover: tall privacy fences, no outdoor lighting, large shrubs and closed blinds.

Statistics show that more than 80 percent of burglars enter a home through the first floor and more than half through the front or back door.

The average loss for a home is about $1,350. The typical burglar will spend less than five minutes in a home and take only what he can find and carry away quickly. This includes jewelry, cash, tools, stereos, televisions, VCRs, and computers.

Here are home protection tips from SecurityLink from Ameritech, which provides a variety of security and fire detection systems to more than 1.2 million homes and businesses:

- Before you go on vacation, create the appearance that someone is home. Use timers on lights and a stereo, keep the grass cut and have a trusted neighbor pick up newspapers and mail.
- Install locks at primary points of entry, especially first-floor doors and windows. Doors should be secured with inch-and-a-half deadbolts. If you've just moved into a new home, check all the locks on windows and doors to make sure they work.
- Keep home electronics out of view from outside your home. Don't keep large sums of cash at home, and consider storing some portable valuables-family heirlooms-in a safe deposit box. Regularly back up computer files.
- Consider a dog or an alarm system-both are effective deterrents because they eliminate the potential for a quick hit.
- Make your home more visible to neighbors. Trim shrubs, open blinds when you're away and install exterior lighting, including lights that are activated with motion detectors.

For more information about home security, call SecurityLink at 800-626-7182.

WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW CAN HURT YOU

by Michael D. Jones

(NAPSA)-Every ticket has its price. As on-line investing and day trading grow in popularity, many novice investors are unaware of a number of factors-from the way they place their buy and sell orders to a brokerage firm's capacity to handle extreme volume or volatility-that can leave them vulnerable to unexpected losses.

Here are a few questions on-line investors should be asking the brokerage firms they do business with. Remember, NASD rules require members to represent the facts concerning a trade-like market quotes-as accurately as possible at all times.

• Types of Orders

As on-line investors and day traders soon learn, not all orders to buy or sell stock are alike. Limit orders, for instance, literally limit the conditions under which a trade will be executed by a brokerage firm-which is at the price requested or better, but only if it's to the investor's advantage. If market conditions have changed since the limit order was placed, it may not get executed at all.

Market orders, on the other hand, have to be executed as soon as they are received. If the price of the stock has moved since the order was placed, the order may end up getting executed at a price significantly different from the one quoted when the order was placed.

On-line investors should ask the trading firm that they are working with what their guidelines are for handling market, limit and other types of orders. How are orders effected by heavy trading volume or volatility?

• Delays

Most on-line investors have come to expect quick executions at prices at or near the quotes displayed on their computer screens.

However, during trading sessions when volume is extremely high, executions of orders may be delayed and the prices quoted may be inaccurate.

On-line investors should ask brokerage firms what provisions they have instituted to handle orders during periods of high volume.

• Access

While on-line trading has made it easier for many people to become investors, remember that during periods of heavy trading volume or internet traffic, investors may find it difficult to access their accounts, have orders executed at the prices they desire, or have customer service issues resolved by account representatives. Ask the firm you deal with to explain its procedures for handling these and other access issues.

Shriners

Reaching New Heights

Arny Ferrando studies muscle loss in burn patients and the elderly at Galveston Shriners Hospital. During the recent Discovery mission. Glenn served as the subject of one of Ferrando's studies.

Galveston Shriners Hospitals for Children researcher Arny Ferrando.

The researcher first submitted his proposed experiment on muscle loss in weightlessness to NASA in 1996. He indicated the proposal did not include a test for someone of Glenn's age, but said tests on the astronaut should add an unexpected dimension to the experiment.

The 41-year-old researcher said he found out his experiment would be part of the Discovery mission when a friend called him and told him to turn on his television. He did, only to find NASA administrator Daniel Goldin announcing Glenn's flight and describing the muscle loss experiment Ferrando had proposed several years earlier.

The experiment seeks to uncover one of the mysteries of weightlessness-why muscle mass deteriorates more quickly in space that on earth. Finding a way to retain muscle strength during spaceflight will be a key to long-duration flights aboard the International Space Station and any future trips to Mars.

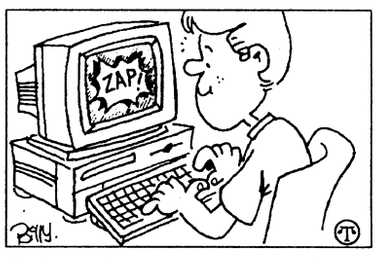
"If you lose lean body mass and strength when you get to Mars, you might be too weak to do anything," Ferrando said. "We're going to add a good bit to existing science. Hopefully, this will point toward a solution."

Ferrando's experiment was one of 80 that were studied on the nine-day flight. Besides his work at the Galveston Shriners burn hospital, Ferrando also works as a medical researcher at the University of Texas Medical Branch.

Non-Violent Games

(NAPSA)-Many parents are finding brain-stimulating alternatives to violent computer games for "tweens" (kids ages 10 and up).

Fortunately, there are now cutting-edge alternatives to choose from, including non-violent games that are fun to play and challenge kids to use their brain power.



A good example is Dr. Brain: Action Reaction, which empowers kids to use their brain vs. brawn. This mind-bending computer game features high-performance game play and realistic 3D graphics without guns, bombs, blood or gore. To overcome obstacles and solve perplexing puzzles, players are required to use geometry, physics, mechanics and logic.

Another feature that sets this game apart from other action games is that players use a "helping hand" device-instead of a weapon-to turn levers, open doors and to move bad guys out of the way.

No one dies in this game. Good guys can only get captured and bad guys can get stunned-with stars and a cartoon-style "Pow!"

In this game players set out to save the world, as they explore environments filled with tricky traps, perilous passages and dangerous doorways in which the brain is their only weapon.

Such game experiences can help tweens develop critical-thinking and problem-solving skills. With this software, up to 16 players can join in the game via the Internet.

Critical thinking and problem solving skills may be developed by playing a challenging game.

The room and capability of an SUV with the functionality of a pickup are combined in the Ford F-150 SuperCrew, automotive experts report.

Sifting through the ashes

Fire Chief Arthur Simmons (left) and Assistant Fire Chief Ray Xuereb look over the damages caused by a fire that swept through building 465 early Sunday morning. Building 465 is the DPW carpentry and maintenance shop used to house carpentry supplies. At this time, investigators are still accessing damage value and the cause for the fire.

Rangers set for reunion

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 2,000 Army Rangers will descend upon Fryar Drop Zone in a mass Airborne operation at 5 p.m. Monday, kicking off Ranger Rendezvous '99.

Rangers from Fort Benning, Hunter Army Airfield, Ga., and Fort Lewis, Wash., will participate in four days of activities beginning Monday and lasting through Thursday. The 75th Ranger Regiment will host this year's Ranger Rendezvous.

The activities continue Tuesday with equipment displays and weapons firing followed by the Ranger Hall of Fame induction ceremony at 7 p.m. at the Ranger Memorial. Fun runs will be held Wednesday beginning at 7 a.m. with 10K, 5K and 1K runs. Hand-to-hand competitions, an obstacle course challenge and other competitions will continue until 5 p.m. with championship bouts at 8 p.m.

The rendezvous will wrap up Thursday at 7 p.m. during the 75th Ranger Regiment change of command ceremony on York Field.

For more on the rendezvous, see the schedule of activities on page A-9.

Post representatives rejuvenate program

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

For many Soldiers, especially young single Soldiers, fronting their chain of command about issues like quality of life, morale and recreation are to say the least, something that ranks up there on the list with going to the dentist and paying bills.

In the late 80s, the Department of the Army became aware of this problem and created a forum of single Soldiers to relay the feelings for Soldiers to the chain of command.

The program was called BOSS, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, and now nearly a decade later, the program is a mainstay at posts world-wide.

Fort Benning's BOSS program, presently spearheaded by President Spc. Tina Fountaine, has served the Soldiers of the post since the program's inception.

Fountaine and BOSS representatives from around the post got a chance this week to rejuvenate the 10-year-old program with a Department of the Army-hosted workshop at the Follow Me Golf Course.

"All organizations face a lull in motivation in the military because there are constant changes in staff and organization due to people moving or getting out of the Army," said Sgt. Maj. Dwight Peters, the sergeant major in charge of BOSS Army-wide. "That is why we are putting on this two-day workshop for the Fort Benning BOSS representatives."

"The post has a great BOSS leader and everyone is real fired up to help out the community and improve the quality of life for Soldiers here," Peters continued. "We are just channeling their energy and ideas and making this forum available so that they can get on the right track."

As Peters guided the 35 Soldiers who will return to their units to help improve life for the single Soldier, he said many of those involved had great ideas but were simply lacking direction on how to put them into action.

Although many of the forum's hours were spent conversing on how to make life better for the single Soldier via better barracks and more recreation opportunities, Peters said that BOSS is more than just an organization that benefits the Soldier — it can benefit the community as well.

"Quite a few of the Soldiers have voiced their desire to organize some form of community service project," he said.

Clinic has hands full with strays, abuse

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

There is an epidemic raging on Fort Benning, but this one doesn't affect the people, its the animals who are suffering.

Each month approximately 50 or more cats and dogs on Fort Benning are denied the privilege of a long and happy life. Not because of some strange disease, but because pet owners don't want to take the responsibility.

Walking up to the Fort Benning Adopt-a-Pet kennels, most are greeted by barks of all range and texture. Lining the cages from front to back, people can find dogs of every breed, color, size and gender. Inside a small room there are bundles of cats and kittens huddled together in tiny cages. Almost all echo each other's meows as they greet passerbys by batting their paws through the cracks in the cage's door.

Although the idea of a family meandering up and down the kennel aisles in search of the perfect furry family addition probably seems happy and hopeful, a grim reality still remains — most of the animals who inhabit the kennels will not live to see another week.

In fact, this week alone, close to 10 animals were put to sleep, bringing the total for the middle of the month up to around 20. It is not unusual for 50 or more animals to be put down in a single month, said Pfc. Lynee Andrews, animal care technician with the Fort Benning Veterinary Services.

With the onset of the summer season and the beginning of the yearly PCS rush, Andrews said something particularly disturbing is going on with Fort Benning pet owners.

Besides the fact that the Veterinary Services is dealing with an abundance of strays being taken from the streets, sometimes as many as 100 a month, there is also a significant number of abandonment, abuse and neglect problems coming through the door as well.

"The summer time is the worst time for us because that's when everyone is PCSing, and a lot of people don't want to pay for the cost of their animals to fly or the cost of quarantine so they just leave them in the quarters when they go," Andrews said. "But those are the kind of things they should have thought about when they got a pet in the first place."

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Pfc. Lynee Andrews walks one of the homeless dogs back to the area where it will be put to sleep.

About six of the dogs currently at the kennel are ones that were abandoned at the quarters. On an average, Andrews said they get about 10 a month.

Not only that but they also have many people just dropping their pets off at the kennel or leaving them on the roadside to get rid of them.

Besides abandonment, she recalled a number of incidents involving simple and severe neglect. One such case concerned a dog whose neck was slit nearly two inches because the owners didn't remove its choker collar when it began to grow. The procedure for removing the collar included cutting it with wire cutters and then peeling the embedded chain from the dog's skin. Luckily the dog was adopted and given another chance at life.

While cases that severe are somewhat rare, simple neglect is more rampant and involves such things as leaving pets unattended when going on vacation, not giving them adequate food and water or not properly picking up feces in the backyard.

Driving etiquette disturbs Soldier

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

It's been almost a year now since I made the big move down to the Southland, but there has been one thing that has really started to get to me lately. I guess you could even say it is a pet peeve of mine. The problem, if you want to call it that, is people just not being friendly on the roadways and highways.

commentary

The problem just doesn't lie here in the heart of home-grown goodness and peach cobbler though, unfortunately, this problem of rudeness on the road is more of an epidemic that is spreading throughout the nation like wildfire.

I didn't realize the problem was alive and well here until driving home from leave almost a month ago. Yep, I have let this frustration build up that long. I was north of Atlanta just cruising along in the car thinking about the week of work that would face me the next morning. You know the deal. And then all of a sudden my mental planning of layouts and stories was instantly replaced with an up-close and personal look at some guy's tailgate as he cut me off. Now, admittingly I was thinking of something else, and yes I had been driving for awhile, but that doesn't give Joe truck driver the right to cut me off, now does it?

OK, I may be just a little biased, but there is no reason for rudeness. Do you think he got where he was going any faster because he cut me off? For that matter, what could be important enough to drive like a madman? He was busy puffing away on a cigarette so maybe he was stressed out and really needed to be somewhere. I bet that was it. He was in a hurry because everything in his life is more important than the rest of the drivers' lives t on the road that day.

If you are sensing just a little sarcasm, you are right. I just cannot tolerate people who have absolutely no concern for the welfare of others and even on a smaller level, a lack of kindness to other people.

It really doesn't make sense to me why people do things like this, and I could probably ramble on about this for hours, but let's not kid ourselves. We have all made driving errors. We have all followed someone too closely or passed someone on a double-yellow line because we were in a hurry, but when it is us doing it, it seems OK. I mean we are in a hurry and everyone else should just move out of our way.

Odd isn't it?

This sounds almost identical to the story I just told you about Joe truck driver, but that guy was a jerk. He cut me off. What right did he have to do that to me of all people?

The right he had to cut me off was the same one we all have when we get in a hurry and drive irresponsibly — not a one. No one has the right to endanger the lives of others for something as meaningless as a couple of minutes.

As you all take to the roads for those final summer vacations, I can guarantee there will be many people on the road just like my friend Joe the truck driver, but don't let yourself fall prey to anger or tension. Once you do, you too will become just like Joe offending and endangering the lives of everyone on the road — including your family.

Be safe this summer and every time you take to the road. Be considerate of others because if you don't, you never know, maybe my next complaint, I mean commentary, will be about you.

If there's one thing I can't stand, it's irresponsible people and believe me, the world is full of them. This may sound a bit harsh, but if you read the pet story on the front page, I'd hope that you would feel as outraged as I feel right now.

commentary

Just to recap — anywhere from 30 to 50 dogs and cats are put to sleep on Fort Benning each month. No, they are not wild animals that were caught digging through neighborhood trash — they were household pets, once a fixture in the homes of military families who lived here.

But, now it's time for the families to move to another station. Rather than deal with the extra hassle of a pet, they dump the pet off at the Veterinary Services facility. Worse yet, some leave the confused animal locked up inside the empty housing unit without food or water, which to me constitutes animal abuse.

I'll at least give credit to those who drop the animals off at the clinic, but I don't think people realize that their pets only have about a 30 percent chance of finding a new family. Sure, cute, little puppies are almost sure to go, but what about the 11-month-old mutt or 4-year-old cat? Most adult animals, frozen with fright, sit in the small cages at the Adopt-A-Pet kennel for a few days before getting a one-way ticket to pet heaven.

I know that I would be distraught if I had to give up my pets (if I had any right now), so I would like to at least think that the decision to turn over an animal is not an easy one. I know that sometimes there are times when you have no other choice than to get rid of the pet, but most times it's just a matter of convenience.

Owning a pet is something that requires commitment and responsibility. The military sometimes hampers our efforts because of deployments and frequent moves. This is nothing new and should have been taken into consideration before running out and bringing home that new furry friend.

OK, so you have a dog and are getting ready to PCS to Hawaii. You can't afford that chunk of change required for quarantine and decide you'll have to find a new family for Fluffy or Fido. Instead of waiting until the day before you leave to take him to the pound, there are many different avenues you can try before resorting to vet services.

As soon as you find out when you are scheduled to PCS, start making plans — is it possible to take the pet with you or must you say good-bye?

Waiting until the last minute is nothing but selfish. You know that once it gets closer to the PCS date, the more busy you'll be. Start looking around for a new home right away — ask friends or family. The Bayonet can even help find a new home for your pet through our classified ads. We offer free ads for military members, their families, retirees and Fort Benning civilian employees.

Some kittens reach out for a new home. Sadly, many homeless animals are put to sleep when no one comes to claim or adopt them.

As military members, who are called upon to move quite a bit during our time in service, we should always keep in mind that it may be easy for us to pick up a new pet wherever we go, but the pet isn't likely to pick up a new family.

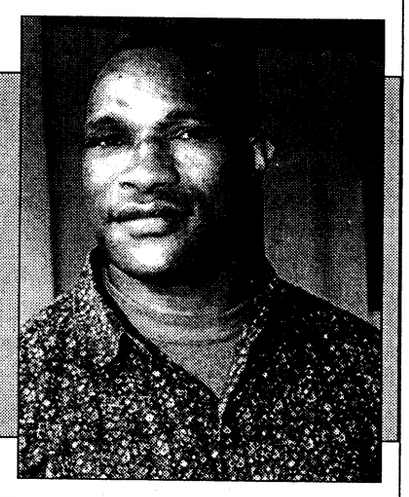
Sometimes, something, someone

Abdul Goldwire

Sometimes in life you find someone you love, someone you hate and someone you will always admire. There will always be somebody that will mean something in your life and that same person will change the way your life was.

There are people coming from all over the world to meet, join and strive for the same reason, to become something they thought they never could be. Survive with the minimum, overcome fears, and fight pain and frustration. But at the end, you will be proud 'cause you know that you became the best that you could be and that my friend counts for a lot. Look back and remember everything you've done because what you have done takes a lot of courage and heart.

Take care my friend and remember that life will give you the best if you give it the best of you.



This is dedicated to all the Soldiers of Kelley Hill especially the Soldiers of support platoon, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, who fight for what is right.

11th Regt. gets new commander

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Family, friends and Soldiers of the 11th Infantry Regiment gathered on York Field to watch as the unit guidon passed from hand to hand signifying the end of one colonel's command and the beginning of another's during a change of command ceremony held July 8.

Col. Victor J. Bero said his goodbyes to the Soldiers of the regiment while Col. Michael Ferriter was officially welcomed in.

After two years of commanding the 11th Regt., Bero leaves Fort Benning for Fort Riley, Kan., where he will assume the duties as the post's chief of staff.

Upon graduation from the Citadel in 1979, Ferriter was commissioned in the Infantry as a second lieutenant. He holds a master's degree from Central Michigan University and recently completed study as a Senior National Defense Fellow, Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts University.

Ferriter is no stranger to Fort Benning. A few of his earlier assignments had him commanding the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment and working as the operations officer for the 75th Ranger Regiment.

He has held troop leadership positions from mechanized rifle platoon leader to battalion commander.

Some of his assignments include tours with the 2nd Battalion, 16th Infantry, 1st Infantry Division; commander of Company C (Airborne), 6th Battalion 327th Infantry in Alaska and the commander of 2nd Battalion, 504th PIR, 82nd Airborne Division.

Some of his military schooling includes graduating the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses and the Command and General Staff College.

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Incoming 11th Regiment Commander Col. Michael Ferriter (left), Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst and outgoing commander Col. Victor J. Bero cross the field during the change of command ceremony July 8.

Ferriter's awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, Meritorious Service Medal with five oak leaf clusters, Joint Commendation Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal, Ranger Tab, Master Parachutist Badge and Expert Infantryman Badge.

He and his wife Margie have four children; Meghan, Mary Whitney, Dan and Paddy.

Terrorists target Americans

Capt. Jay Griffith
Directorate of Threat and Security

Whether or not a certain region is being covered on the evening news, it is important to remember that terrorists target Americans throughout the world and one such place is Columbia. There are two major terrorist organizations operating in Columbia; the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Columbia (FARC) and the National Liberation Army (ELN).

The FARC was established in 1966 as a military wing of the Colombian Communist Party. It is recognized as the largest, best-trained and best-equipped organization in Columbia. The leadership of the FARC is largely composed of disaffected middle and upper class intellectuals, although it recruits from and attempts to appeal to the peasant population.

The FARC's goal is to overthrow the government and the ruling class. It has been anti-U.S. since it was founded.

A U.S. Peace Corps volunteer was kidnapped in 1977, followed by kidnappings of U.S. citizens in 1980 and 1983. The kidnappings and abductions of Americans continued through the 1980's into the 1990's.

American owned businesses such as IBM, Xerox, Coca-Cola and Dole have been subject to bombings. The FARC is known to conduct armed attacks against Colombian political and military targets. Foreign citizens are often targets of FARC kidnappings, and the group has well documented ties to drug cartels.

The ELN also poses a threat to American citizens. Formed in 1963, the ELN is a rural based, anti-U.S., Maoist-Marxist-Leninist guerilla group.

Many of the ELN's operations are focused on the petroleum industry. They have used extortion and bombings against U.S. and other foreign businesses, as well as kidnapping foreign employees and holding them for ransom. The ELN also forces growers of coca and opium poppies to pay protection money and then attacks government organizations that attempt to get rid of those crops.

The FARC and ELN targeted Americans throughout 1998. Seven U.S. citizens were kidnapped. Terrorists also bombed U.S. commercial interests including oil pipelines and small businesses, thus raising the cost of U.S. companies operating in Colombia.

There were a total of 77 pipeline bombings in 1998, one so massive that it killed 71 people, including 28 children.

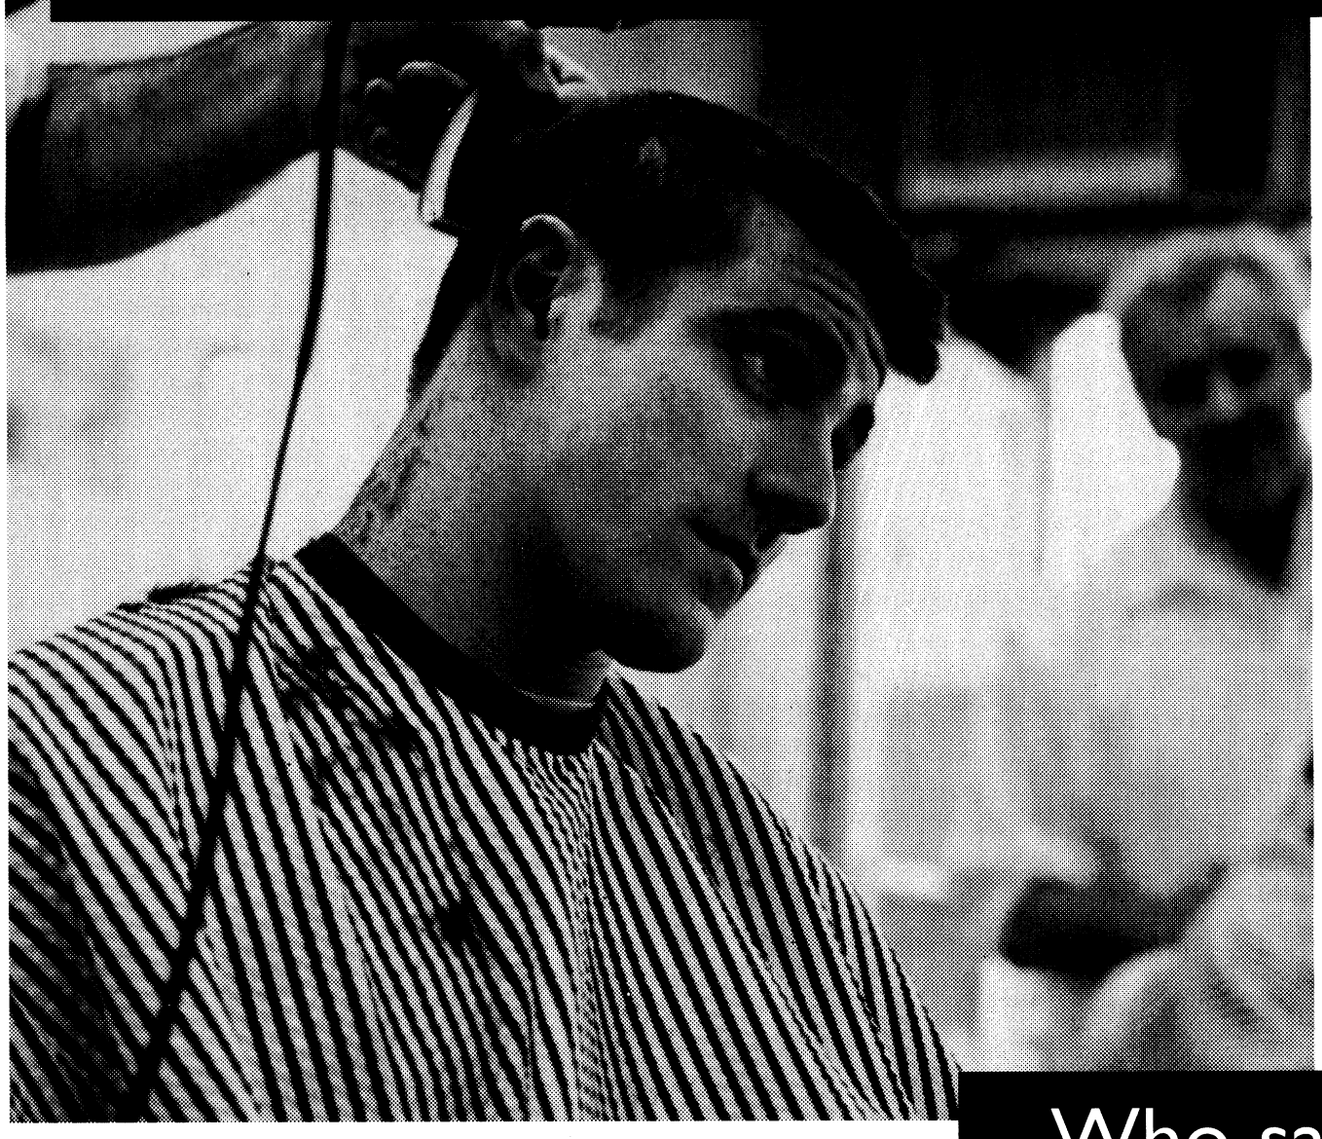
The Ranger Training Brigade and the Georgia Pride are hosting a Military Appreciation Night during the Pride's July 25 softball game at 5 p.m. at the South Commons Softball Complex.

Price of admission is a valid military identification card for Soldiers, family members and retirees.

Staff Sgt. Kevin Teran and Staff Sgt. Jim Moran, winners of the 1999 David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition will throw out the first ball. The Ranger Training Brigade will also provide a color guard and a hand-to-hand combat demonstration prior to the game.



The Georgia Pride, who are slated to take on the Akron Racers July 25, is a professional women's softball team which has just completed a sweep over the first place Tampa Bay Firestix.

ID cards will admit Soldiers, family members and retirees to grandstand seats which normally sell for $4 ($3 for military). A $2 upgrade will get spectators into the box seats and a $3 upgrade will provide admission to the club seats. Club seats are on the lower level behind home plate while the box seats are higher up behind home plate.

Gettin' dirty

Top, an Infantry Training Brigade Soldier low crawls through an obstacle on the Sand Hill Obstacle Course Tuesday afternoon. At right, Staff Sgt. Thomas C. McCloria encourages Pvt. Jorge Macias to push himself during the course. The course was one of only many events the Soldiers endured during the day that Thompson calls, "the hardest day of Basic."

The day began with an Army Physical Fitness Test and was followed by the confidence course. After completing the course and eating lunch, the 200 new Soldiers moved on to tackle the obstacle course shown here. The Soldiers were then given a variety of grass drills to keep motivation and morale high in the intense training environment.

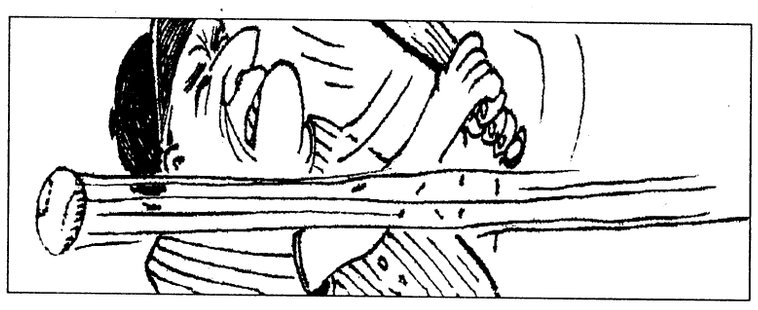
Fort Benning honored its top Soldier and NCO of the third quarter Tuesday at the Main Post NCO Club with a luncheon that awarded these Soldiers with more than $1,500 worth of merchandise and money from local businesses.

Earning this quarter's top honors as the Soldier of the Quarter was 317th Engineer Battalion's Pfc. Cassandra Cox from Headquarter's and Headquarter's Company.

Staff Sgt. Barry Brown, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Training Battalion, took home the quarter's honors as the top NCO of the quarter.



After being awarded a certificate of achievement by post commander, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, the two accepted the barrage of gifts that were awarded for their outstanding performance.

Local business and organization contributing to this quarter's ceremony included Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Columbus Bank and Trust Company, Association of the U.S. Army, Express Boot Repair, Louie Louie's, Ranger Joe's, McCoy Environment, Sam's Club, United Armed Forces Association, Geico, First Union Bank, Military Benefits Association, Dillard's, NCOA, Pioneer Military Lending, Sergeants Major Association, TIC Credit Union, South Trust Bank, Sprint Phone, Bill Heard, U.S. Calvary, USPA and the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer.

BOSS: Reps. to help

"They are not only seeing how they can help themselves but are seeing opportunities to help others."

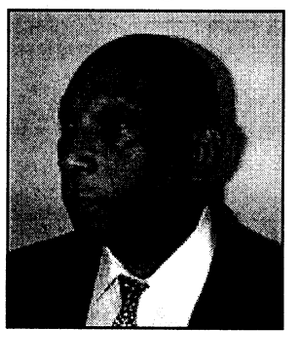
While the debate still lingers on what project will be serviced, Fountaine noted the excitement and energy shown during the conversation will fuel more discussions and planning in the near future.

Single Soldiers were not alone in their BOSS rejuvenation retreat. The Soldiers were joined by the incoming garrison sergeant major, Sgt. Maj. Kenneth R. Graham, Post Command Sergeant Major Mac Vereen, School Sergeant Major, Sergeant Major David Libersat and Garrison Manager Chuck Walls who were all briefed by the committee upon the completion of the workshop on their desires for the near future.

"It is important to know what is going on with our Soldiers, and what I can do to make them content," Graham said. "These are our future leaders and the future of our Army. If they are not happy, we have trouble with retention and recruitment because every one of these people are recruiters. They go home and tell people what the Army is about, and if they are not happy, they let people know it."

"It is the command's job to ensure these Soldiers are content," he added.

After completing the two-day seminar, Fountaine noted that she felt the program was a success.



"The seminar was a great educational experience for both the Soldier and the command," she said. "With the help of the Soldiers and the support of the command this can be the best BOSS program in the Army today."

Words for a changing Army
CAN'T•CAN DO
We've never done it before. We have the opportunity to be the first.
It's too complicated. Let's look at it from a different angle.
We don't have the resources. Necessity is the mother of invention.
It will never work. We'll give it a try.
There's not enough time. We'll re-evaluate some priorities.
We already tried it. We learned from the experience.
There's no way it'll work. We can make it work.
It's a waste of time. Think of the possibilities.
It's a waste of money. The investment will be worth it.
We don't have the expertise. Let's network with those who do.
It's not the Army way. It could be a better way.
We can't compete. We'll be innovative.
It's good enough. There is always room for improvement.
We don't have enough money. Maybe there's something we can cut.
We're understaffed. We're a lean, mean machine!
We don't have enough room. Temporary space may be an option.
It will never fly. We will never know until we try.
We don't have the equipment. Maybe we can contract it out.
It's not going to get any better. We'll try it one more time.
It can't be done. It's a challenge.
No one communicates. Let's open the channels.
Isn't it time to go home? Days go so quickly around here.
I don't have any idea. I'll come up with some alternatives.
Let somebody else deal with it. I'm ready to learn something new.
We keep changing direction. We're in touch with a changing Army.
It's too radical a change. Let's take a chance.
It takes too long for approval. We'll walk it through the system.
Our customers won't buy it. We'll do better at educating them.
Our post is the wrong size. We're perfect for this project.
It doesn't fit us. We should look at it.
IT'S NOT MY JOB. I'll be glad to take the responsibility.
I can't. I can!

MEDDAC welcomes new Troop Commander

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Medical Department Activity Command welcomed new Troop Commander Lt. Col. D. Stephen Carter during a change of command ceremony at Martin Army Community Hospital July 7.

Carter replaced Lt. Col. Thomas G. Fuller who retired after serving in the Army for more than 26 years.

Carter has served in a variety of assignments prior to coming to Benning. He has served as a platoon leader for the 427th Medical Company, Fort Rucker, Ala., Adjutant S-3 and personnel officer, United States Army Medical Center, Europe; Career Management and Assignment Officer, U.S. Total Army Personnel Command, Alexandria, Va.; Chief, Personnel Operations branch and chief, Strength Management Branch, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, U.S. Army Medical Command, Fort Sam Houston, Texas; Troop Commander and Chief, Military Personnel Division, Madigan Army Medical CEnter, Tacoma, Wash.

Carter has accumulated numerous awards during his tenure in the Army. His awards include the Meritorious Service Medal with five oak leaf cluster, the Army Commendation Medal with four oak leaf clusters, the Army Service Ribbon, the Overseas Service Ribbon, the Expert Field Medical Badge, the parachutists badge, the air assault badge and the Army Staff Identification Badge. He is also a recipient of the Order of Military Medical Merit.

Carter brings with him to post his wife Jane and his two sons, 16-year-old Matthew and 12-year-old Benjamen.

91B, 91C MOSs to combine in 2001

Phil Reidinger
Fort Sam Houston Public Affairs Office

On Oct. 1, 2001, the AMEDD debuts a new Military Occupational Skill Code (MOSC), which combines the current 91B and 91C MOSs.

In an AMEDD Center and School "Observer" article titled "MOS91W — Looking Toward the Future," Maj. Gen. James Peake defined the reasoning behind consolidating 91B and 91C.

The development of 91W began in August 1998. Job descriptions and task lists resulted from a combination of MOSC analyses by the AMEDD Personnel Proponency and Combat Development directorates. Training and force structure requirements were derived from results of internal studies such as the Academy of Health Sciences Medical Training 2000 study, the Medical Reengineering Initiative, and evaluations of medical support needed in Force XXI and future Army patterns of operations.

"As I reviewed the products of each of those separate initiatives, it became clear that our current 91B will not meet our future requirements," Peake wrote. He referred to the need to train combat medics to a higher level than ever before for more demanding responsibilities in both TOE and TDA assignments on the battlefield, in evacuation units, and on staffs in intensive and intermediate care wards.

Col. Glen Taplin, assistant deputy commander, Force Integration, noted several factors that led to the development of the 91W MOS such as digital technology, telemedicine, and increased communications capability.

He added, "Operational changes requiring combat medics to operate farther from supporting combat support hospitals or forward support medical companies, longer evacuation legs, more reliance on enroute care combined with improved technology indicated a need to change how the combat medic operates on the battlefield."

With the merger of 91B and 91C, requirements for the current 91C skills, licensed practical nurses, in TDA and TOE units will be coded as requiring a "M6" additional skill identifier for 91W. The current 91C course will be shortened by eight weeks based on obtaining credit for tasks taught in the 91W curriculum.

The 91W course will extend the current 91B length from 10 to 16 weeks. The longer course length is necessitated by an enhanced program of instruction, to include demonstrated proficiency, rather than a familiarization level, in critical medical skills and a requirement to pass the basic EMT certification test as a graduation requirement.

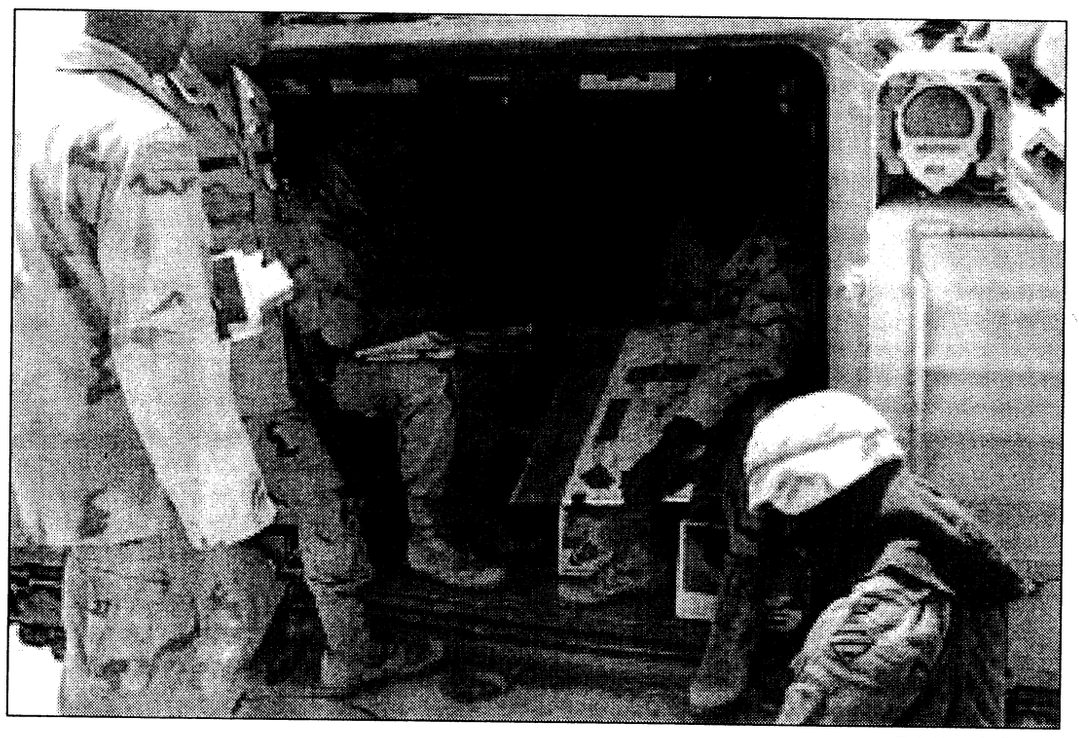
EXERCISE EASTERN ACTION

Task Force 1-15 takes to desert

Sgt. Norinda Rodney
3rd U.S. Army, ARCENT

Blazing sun and sandstorms lay backdrop to one of the most strenuous training exercises in southwest Asia. More than 100 members of Task Force 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry hit the Qatar desert for Exercise Eastern Action June 16.

"Basically, the purpose of the exercise was to practice the U.S. Army's reception, staging, onward movement and integration plan in Qatar," said Lt. Col. Stanton, commander, U.S. Army Central Command — Qatar. "We did this by issuing the prepositioned vehicles (the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, Armored Personnel Carriers and the M88 Recovery Vehicles) to a unit that would use them in combat."



"The second purpose of Eastern Action was to conduct a coalition exercise with the Qatari Army — to work side by side," Stanton added.

Task Force 1-15 Soldiers discovered new things by working with the Qataris.

"Exercise Eastern Action was beneficial to the Qataris and us," said Spc. Mustafa Thompson, Task Force 1-15. "We shared our military culture and training. In return, we learned how they do things."

"I'll always remember how the Qataris react to contact on the battlefield," Thompson continued. "It's similar to the way we react. I think that this type of training helps to reinforce our ability to work well together in battle."

Reacting to fire was not the only skill tested during Eastern Action. Writing operation orders, troop leading procedures, vehicle patrols and personnel dismounts rounded out the training at the ARCENT-Qatar Southern Training Area Range.

Sgt. Norinda Rodney

During a rehearsal run of exercise Eastern Action, 1st Sgt Courtland Pegan and Capt. Elbert Valentine brief Soldiers on their next mission. Exercise Eastern Action was only the second time U.S. Soldiers have held an exercise with Qutari Army.

"We practiced using different types of movement formations for live targets and moving targets with the Qataris," said Pfc. Mauricio Garcia, Task Force 1-15. "We were even given a chance to look at the weapons systems on the Qatari tactical vehicles. All of this was new to us. I think Eastern Action helps both armies work better together."

Both Soldiers agreed that taking the prepositioned equipment out and actually testing it with the Qataris was pretty exciting. They said they'd like to see the exercise occur more often.

"This is only the second time the U.S. Army has ever held an exercise with the Qatari Army," said Stanton. "Our goal is to improve relationships with the Qatari Armed Forces."

Eastern Action was another step in meeting that goal.

Company dukes it out in ring

2nd LT. Paul Voelke
Company A, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

For the first time in the Infantry Training Brigade, Soldiers from Company A, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment participated in two additional periods of hand-to-hand combat instruction that focused on boxing.

The two periods of technique instruction were in addition to the five standard hand-to-hand periods all One Station Unit Training Soldiers receive. These extra periods consisted of instruction on punches, the jab and cross, as well as additional training on the proper fighting stance. The Soldiers learned how to throw each punch separately and then moved into combining the two. They practiced in pairs, squaring off outside of arms reach. As one partner threw a punch, the other slipped the punch.

Following the initial training, the Soldiers participated in a company run and moved into the practical exercise period.

Each trainee then participated in one 15-second round. Aggressiveness and using the proper techniques were paramount to the Soldiers' success. For most, one 15-second round was plenty, but for a few, more followed.

Each platoon selected six Soldiers, one in each of six different weight classes, to represent their platoon in a tournament to decide the company champion. Winners of that bout fought in another 30-second fight to create the champ.

As the rest of the company cheered in the grandstands, the drill sergeants judged the fighters as they battled inside the circle of sandbags. When the dust finally settled, six Soldiers emerged victorious. The winners were:

- flyweight — Pvt. Angle Rios
- lightweight — Pfc. Caleb Nall
- welterweight — Pfc. Joshua C. Clark
- middleweight — Pvt. Ashton Phillips
- light heavyweight — Pvt. Garee Palmer
- heavyweight — Pvt. Luke Margraff.

In addition to the champions of each bout, the Knockout Award was given to Pvt. Patric Trattles.

Overall, the day produced a valuable training event and each Soldier stepped in the ring and performed admirably. In addition to learning techniques during the training, the Soldiers also developed a sense of pride in themselves and their peers.

Reserve unit takes over ITB battalion

Capt. James A. Bender
84th Division

Each year, Army Reserve units from the 1st Brigade, 84th Division conduct training with the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade. This year, Headquarters, 2nd Battalion, 333rd Infantry Regiment from Waterford, Mich., conducted a battalion displacement of Headquarters, 1-19th.

Upon arrival at the 1-19th Battalion headquarters, there was a morning in-briefing, welcomed Lt. Col. Harold A. R. Berloth, battalion commander of 2nd Bat., 333rd Inf. and his staff. Following the briefing, there was a transitional period during which the staffs were introduced to each other. For most of the reserve and many of the active duty Soldiers, this was their first time working in this type of team environment.

The first duty week of this dual training was spent working side by side with the active duty staff, helping the reserve staff get acclimated. The goals of this transition were to get the 2-333 Soldiers acquainted with the work environment, and develop teamwork among the AC and RC Soldiers.

The second week of duty, 2-333 Soldiers took over operations with 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., ITB Soldiers shadowing them in the background. This allowed 2-333 Soldiers the opportunity to experience the full scope of an active duty day.

According to the S-1, 2-333, 1st Lt. Aretha Battle, "the relationship between the reserve and the active duty Soldiers enabled us to successfully accomplish our mission as one team."

The S-1 section's days were filled with lots of exciting opportunities. They assisted 1-19 with NCOERs and OERs, personnel actions, Marks System, awards, mail delivery, publications, legal matters and other additional duties. They also reviewed over 2,000 records within two days for SGLI compliance for the 1st Bnt., 19th Inf. Reg. and 1st Battalion, 50th Inf. Reg., ITB. During this period they were able to use their knowledge as a team to enhance the functions of the S-1 section.

The S-3's primary duties were to oversee training from beginning to end, including coordinating ranges, ammo, dining facilities, field feeding, troop transportation, medical staff for all field events, classrooms, training sites and equipment.

According to the company first sergeant these were easy tasks considering the experience level 2-333 had on board.

The S-4 for 2-333, Capt. Mark C. Pica, stated "this was one of the most challenging annual training missions I have conducted."

His staff upgraded the battalion S-4 computer system's hardware. They also provided the battalion executive officer with automated tracking applications for the annual budget, a company suspense turn-in roster and battalion weekly status reports for the command and staff meeting.

According to Command Sgt. Maj. Leon C. Aaron, and his counterpart Command Sgt. Maj. Larry Keith Morrison, the two-week mission was successful.

Both staffs' ability to integrate into a seamless team was a perfect demonstration of the Total Army concept.

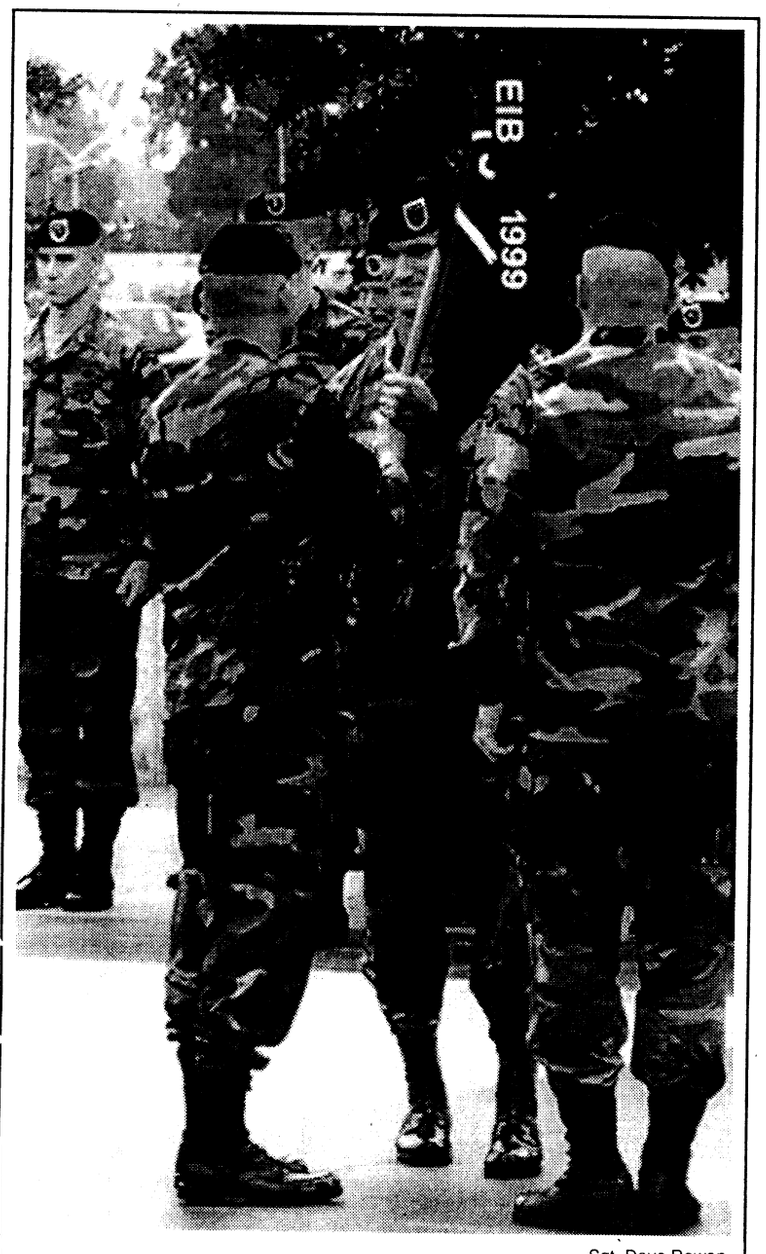
5th RTBn helps honor lost WWII fighter pilot

Sgt. Tony Bass
5th Ranger Training Brigade

A 45-year-old story ended June 12 in a ceremony in Dahlonega, Ga., when family members, local veterans and a color guard from the 5th Ranger Training Battalion gathered to honor World War II veteran Ben Higgins Jr.

On Aug. 18, 1944, a young French woman, Madeline Deschamps, was out doing morning chores at her father's farm near Piencourt, France, when gunshots were heard overhead. She looked up to see an American P38 fighter attacking a German lorry about 150 meters away from her apple orchard.



The plane lost control and crashed near her home. Deschamps and her father ran to pull the pilot from the burning plane. The pilot, Higgins, was killed in the crash. Her father wrapped the fallen pilot in a sheet and hid him in the barn to keep the Germans from finding his body. Two days later, the Allies liberated the town and the French family buried the pilot in a local military cemetery.

The Higgins family was informed their son was killed in combat and the remains were sent home. Upon receipt of the remains, it was evident they were not those of their son. The family established a burial site for their lost son, but never had a ceremony.

Fifty-three years later, a French historian took up the challenge to find the families of several pilots that had been shot down and whose remains were buried in the town of Piencourt. After many weeks of investigation, he located several families of pilots including the Higgins family in Dahlonega.

The historian's persistence answered a question the Higgins family had been seeking for more than 50 years. The military gave the family the option of having their son's remains moved to the U.S. or allow him to remain in France. Afraid of being disappointed, they opted for their son to stay in France. Several of the pilot's relatives traveled to France and meet the young lady, now in her 60s, who was with their son in his last minutes of life.

Now, 55 years later, the young French lady set out across the span of the Atlantic Ocean to be with the Higgins family on Memorial Day to show her respect for their family member and every Soldier who gave his life to liberate France.

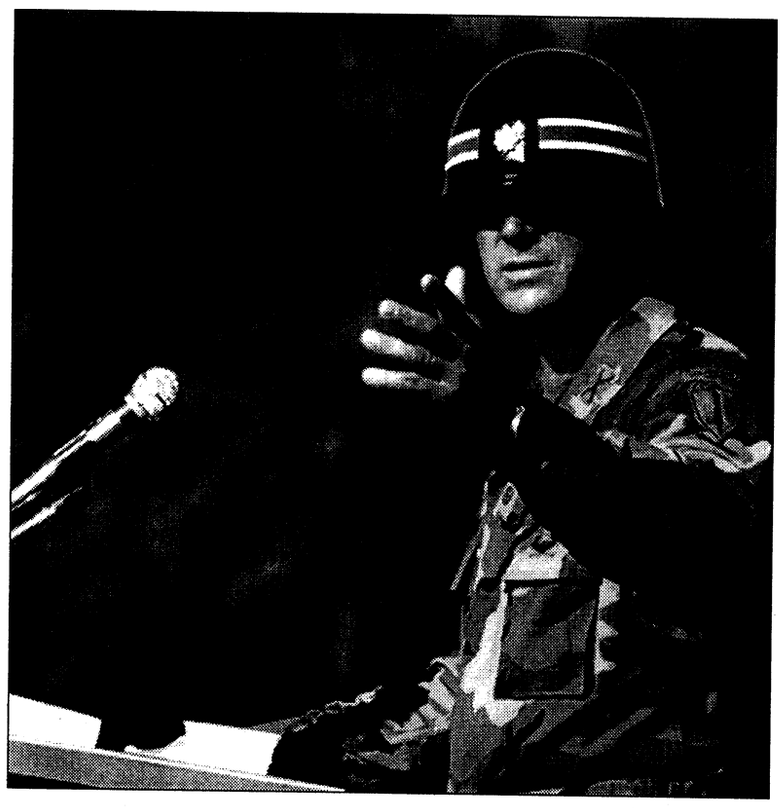
School receives new commander

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The students and cadre of 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Officer Candidate School, said good-bye July 9 to their battalion commander and welcomed in Lt. Col. David C. Osborne as their new.



Osborne replaced Lt. Col. Bruce W. Anderson who will continue his stay in Georgia as he assumes the position as the Deputy Commander for the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) on Kelley Hill.

Osborne has served in a variety of units during his 18 years of service. He has served as a platoon leader, battalion maintenance officer and executive officer of the 3rd Battalion, 187th Infantry Regiment, 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky. He has also served as an assistant S-3 Company Commander and regimental S-3, 3rd U.S. Infantry Division (Old Guard), Washington D.C. He served as the Staff Officer for V Corps G3 Operations, Frankfurt and Heidelberg, Germany.

Prior to coming to Benning, he served as a North Atlantic Treaty Organization Staff Officer in the Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe, Mons, Belgium, with special emphasis on integration of the new member nation's reaction forces.

Osborne has netted several award and accolades during his tenure service to include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal with oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal with five oak leaf clusters, the Army Achievement Medal with seven oak leaf clusters, the Good Conduct Medal, the Armed Forces Service Medal, the UN Medal, the Ranger Tab, the Expert Infantryman's Badge, the parachutists badge and the air assault badge.

Osborne brings with him to post his wife Belinda and his two children, Taylor, 10, and Shelby, 8.

Members of the 283rd Infantry Band warm up before a recent change of command ceremony on Sand Hill.

Infantry Band stays on top

Spc. Hollie Federico and Staff Sgt. Robert E. Grundy
283rd Infantry Band

It's the summer season for the 283rd Infantry Band, which means it's change of command season.

Keeping up with all the training, jobs and ceremonies on post is hard work, but the band stays on top of it all. Sometimes performing two or three ceremonies a day, the Infantry Band always looks and sounds great.

There's more to the Infantry Band than just playing ceremonies, they also perform at festivals and events throughout the southern U.S.

The band participated in Fort Benning's Independence Day celebration providing music for the streamer ceremony followed by a concert before the fireworks.

The celebration was not the only thing that kept the band busy during the recent month. A One Station Unit Training graduation also graced the band's holiday weekend.

This was not the only ceremony that the band was tasked to play during the Fourth of July weekend.

After completing the graduation ceremony, the band loaded up their gear and headed south for warmer weather and yet another Independence Day ceremony in Naples, Fla.

The next day, the band performed in the city's parade in the morning and performed in a public concert that evening.

It was a quick trip back to Fort Benning July 4 as the Dixieland combo set down to perform before the Columbus fireworks display began shortly after nightfall.

According to band officials, the band will continue its hectic schedule of performances until taking what many call a much-needed leave period July 26 through Aug. 9.

Pets: Neglect runs rampant

Even these kinds of neglect can involve penalties, some as stiff as losing on-post housing privileges, Andrews said.

This summer, the kennel has rarely seen a day where the 22 dog cages and 15 cat cages weren't full — most containing at least two or more animals to a cage.

Andrews mentioned that even after they euthanize a batch of animals, it only takes a day or so before the cages are full again.

"It seems if we put 12 down, 12 more come right back in here. They fill up that quickly," she said.

The normal length of time for keeping an animal at the kennel is between three and five days, however lately they have been keeping some for as long as two weeks to be sure it has an adequate chance to be adopted.

Andrews said it's tough seeing all the animals come through the kennels who aren't able to find a good home.

"It does get unbearable sometimes," Andrews said. "Because you do have a heart, and you're going to cry sometimes when you end up putting so many animals down. You have to try not to think about it."

"I just don't get it. People will come in here and want to surrender their dog, and we ask them why they want to. A lot of them will say it's because the animal has been peeing on the carpet. Well, it's a 6-month-old puppy ... potty train your puppy. Take time with your puppy. It's just like a child. People don't understand that a pet is a responsibility just like children are."

When someone surrenders an animal, they need to know that it doesn't mean that the dog or cat will necessarily find another home, Andrews explained. In fact, only about 30 percent of the animals actually get adopted out.

She went on to say that people shouldn't just automatically bring their pet to the kennels either. They can ask around if to see if anyone would be interested in their animal. They can talk to friends, neighbors or people at work. They can even put an ad in the local papers.

For those who are out there searching for a new family addition, Andrews said the Adopt-a-Pet kennels is the right place. Every day all different kinds of dogs and cats are being brought into the kennels, even pure breds. And if someone is looking for a particular kind of dog or cat they can leave their name with the kennels and will be notified if that animal comes in.

"It doesn't make sense to me that there are people who go out and spend $600 on an animal. We get pure breds in all the time. All they have to do is pay for initial vaccinations and that's it."

She said even though her job can be tough sometimes, the reward comes when she sees people doing the right thing.

"It's definitely hard, but it's a very fulfilling job when you get to see people who are actually taking care of their pets and love them. It's also wonderful to see an animal get adopted and go to a good home."

Soldiers teach basic archery to YS members

"Archery has been around since the beginning of time," said Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes during his opening comments to a group of children from Youth Services (YS). "Archery is now one of the fastest growing sports because it is high-tech, relaxing and fun. Shooting a bow is addictive and you will want to shoot again."

Hughes, a Soldier from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, and archery enthusiast was excited about the opportunity to teach kids basic archery knowledge and skills.

"It is a great to instruct kids who have an interest in archery," Hughes said. "Introducing the sport of archery to people gives me an opportunity to help develop the sport."

Archery instruction began in the indoor range where students received a safety brief, a history on the development of the bow, types of bows, types of arrows and basic technique.

"I want to make it perfectly clear that bows of all types are not play toys but weapons that can cause serious injury and death if not handled safely," said Sgt. 1st Class Mark Bartosch from HHC, 4th RTBn who helped instruct the kids. "Compound Bows have the capability to launch an arrow 336 feet per second and technology is getting better every day so you must always handle bows with extreme caution."

Students also received instruction on how to string a Re-curve Bow and were allowed to string the bows they would be using at the archery range.

"Stringing a bow was a lot harder then it looked," said 14-year-old Alexander Taylor who attempted to string his bow several times before he finally succeeded. "It takes practice and strength to get the string on right."

Once the basic instruction was completed the group moved to the outdoor range and while being closely supervised attempted to use their newly acquired skill. Hands shook, fingers became sore, arrows went this way and that, but after 30 minutes the kids were shooting successfully at targets 10 yards down range.

"Learning some basic archery skills was much easier than I thought it would be," said James Traylor participant in the archery class. "It is a sport I never thought about actually doing but now I would like to take it up as a hobby. I will definitely come out here the next time YS holds this class."

TRICARE benefits cover substance abuse treatment

Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

Substance abuse can be devastating, destroying lives and shattering families. But substance abuse can be overcome, with the proper treatment.

Your TRICARE benefit covers treatment for substance abuse, a harmful dependency on drugs, alcohol or prescription medication.

For military families in the southeastern United States, substance abuse treatment, including detoxification, rehabilitation and outpatient care, is provided by the CHOICE Behavioral Health Partnership network of behavioral healthcare providers and cost shared by TRICARE.

Outpatient therapy for substance abuse takes place in a TRICARE approved, facility-based group setting. All substance abuse services must have prior authorization by CHOICE Behavioral Health as medically necessary.

To access the substance abuse benefit, you or your doctor may call CHOICE at (807) 700-8646, any time of the day or night, for the required prior approval and assistance by a licensed Mental Health Care Finder.

Substance abuse treatment may be obtained as a TRICARE benefit up to the following limits:

- Maximum of one rehabilitation per year and three per lifetime.
- Stays for detoxification are limited to seven days. Rehabilitation (inpatient or partial, or a combination of both) is limited to 21 days.
- Detoxification and rehabilitation days count toward yearly limits of 30 days for adults aged 19 and older; 45 days for those 18 and younger.
- Partial hospitalization for substance abuse disorder counts toward the 60-day partial psychiatric hospitalization limit, but not the 30/45 day acute care psychiatric inpatient limit.
- Outpatient care is covered for up to 60 visits over the course of a benefit year.
- Family therapy is covered for up to 15 visits per year.
- Provider may request waiver of benefit limits.

TRICARE is a Department of Defense program offered by Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

TRICARE offers on-line mailing list

TRICARE offers an email address where Soldiers and family members can write for answers to their TRICARE questions. Beneficiaries can also receive information updates electronically.

To be added to the electronic mailing list, just address a message to tricare-on@csdmail.medcom.amedd.army.mil. Do not use a subject on the message and leave the body of the message blank. Once you have joined the on-line mailing list group you will receive electronic copies of news releases concerning policy or rule changes, new benefits etc. In addition you can find TRICARE news and other information about military healthcare on line at www.TRICARE.OSD.MIL.

Dental premium increases

The monthly premium for the TRICARE Family Member Dental Plan (TFMDP) for active duty families will increase Aug. 1. The rate for a single enrollment will go up from $8.09 per month to $8.53. The family enrollment, currently $20 per month will be $21.33.

Active duty service members will see the premium increase reflected in their July 1999 Leave and Earnings Statement. Families who are signed up for the plan by their uniformed sponsors on or after July 1 will be enrolled at the new rate. The monthly premium that active duty service members have deducted from their paychecks represents 40 percent of the total premium cost for the plan. The other 60 percent is paid by the government.

For more information about the dental plan, write to the contractor: United Concordia Companies, Inc., TFMDP Customer Service P.O. Box 898218, Camp Hill, PA 17089-8218. The toll free number is (800) 866-8499.

Pet owners should take precautions on hot days

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals

The hotdogs on the grill won't be the only hot dogs sweltering this summer season. With mercury-popping temperatures forecast in the coming days, we shouldn't forget our canine companions in our efforts to beat the heat. Hot weather can be especially tough on dogs because they can only cool themselves by panting and sweating through their paw pads.

Heat stroke can come on quickly and result in brain damage or death. Watch for symptoms, such as restlessness, excessive thirst, heavy panting, lethargy, lack of appetite, dark tongue, rapid heartbeat, fever, vomiting or lack of coordination. If your dog shows any of these symptoms, get her to shade immediately and call your veterinarian. Lower body temperature gradually by providing water to drink, applying a cold towel or ice pack to the head, neck, chest or by immersing the dog in tepid (not cold) water.

"Every summer we hear about tragedies that could have been prevented," said PETA Cruelty caseworker Daphna Nachminovitch. "Many people don't realize how quickly animals left outside without shade or water or left in hot cars can succumb to the heat."

Prevent heat stroke by taking these precautions:

- Never leave a dog in a parked car. On a 78 degree day, the temperature inside a shaded car is 90 degrees. While a car parked in the sun can reach 160 degrees in minutes. Animals can succumb to heat stroke in just 15 minutes.
- If you see a dog in a car take down the car's color, model, make and license plate number and have the owner paged inside the store or call local humane authorities or police.
- Don't carry your dog in the bed of a pick-up truck. This is always dangerous, but the heat brings the added danger of burning the dog's feet on the hot metal.
- Don't take your dog jogging, expect on cool mornings or evenings and don't force exercise. On long walks, rest often and bring plenty of water. Hot pavement can burn dogs' paws; choose shady, grassy routes.
- Trim heavy-coated dogs' fur, but leave an inch for protection against insects and sunburn. Yes, dogs get sunburned. Keep and eye on areas where hair is thin, like eyelids, ears and nose.
- Keep your dog indoors. If he must stay outside, avoid the hottest part of the day. Provide shade, water and a kiddie pool. Keep drinking water in an anchored bucket or heavy bowl.
- Be on the lookout for chained dogs. Make sure they have food, water and shelter. If you see a dog in distress, contact humane authorities. Give the dog immediate relief by providing water.

Family housing

Expect interruptions in water service

Penny O'Conner
Directorate of Public Works

For the next six months, there will be intermittent interruptions in water service in family housing units in the Lavoie area.

The Directorate of Public Works has contracted with Continental Flooring to install backflow preventor valves in the Lavoie housing area off Indianhead Road. Continental Flooring employees, wearing ID tags, will contact each occupant to schedule a time when water to their residence can be shut off.

Work will be done from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Water will not be turned off earlier than 8 a.m. or no later than 4:30 p.m. Work has already started on Meehan Street.

Current plans are for future installations to progress to Indianhead Road, then Lavoie and Logan Avenues, followed by Derrickson and Bryant Streets within the next two to three months.

Installation of these backflow valves in place of regular water supply valves ensures quality water for occupants' everyday use by preventing backflow.

Backflow or backsiphonage can occur when there is a sudden drop in pressure or stoppage of the water supply, due to nearby fire fighting, repairs or breaks in a water main, hydrant, etc. With such a drop in pressure, the direction of water flowing through the water provider's supply pipes can actually reverse and flow backwards.

Whenever this happens, there is a possibility of fresh water contamination if water is siphoned back far enough into the pipes. Backflow valves are designed to prevent potentially contaminated water from re-entering the system and then flowing out into users' water systems.

A wealth of information related to drinking water and a large number of other environmental issues can be found by clicking on "browse" on the Environmental Protection Agency web page at www. epa.gov. For more information on the valve project, call Tony Riles with DPW's Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Change in schedule

As of July 13, all garbage, recyclable and yard waste from housing units 963 A, B, C, D, E, F, G and H on Dixie Road will no longer be picked up at the curb on Dixie Road. All such items must be placed on the concrete pads adjacent to the parking lots at either end of the building.

For more information, call Glenn Todd at 545-2117.

Comments and Questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" please call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works at Building 6, Room 409, Attn: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

ask the judge

Capt. Stephanie Sanderson
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My parents and I have decided that it would be best if my youngest sister, who is 15, comes to live with me here at Fort Benning. Do I need to have any special documents once we get here? Will she be entitled to any kind of military benefits?

A: You will want to obtain legal guardianship of your sister. Legally, minors are not capable of managing their personal affairs, and require an adult, usually one or both of the natural parents to act on their behalf. Good examples of this are registering the child for school or consenting to medical treatment for the child. However, in order for you to act on your sister's behalf, you must be approved by the appropriate court to act as guardian.

In Columbus and Fort Benning, we usually advise you to apply for and obtain what is called a temporary guardianship, it normally does not require a waiting period, costs less and does not require you to post a bond in order to become the guardian. Although it is called a "temporary" guardianship, it is open-ended, that is it has no expiration date and continues until either the child becomes an adult, the child or guardian moves out of the state of Georgia or until one of the parents of the child decides that they want to have it dissolved. It gives you all the power and authority you need to take care of the child's needs.

The procedure is quite simple. It requires the preparation and filing of a petition for guardianship in the probate court of the county in which you and the child are living. The petition is accompanied by the written consent of at least one of the parents of the child if available. And, if the child involved is 14 years of age or older, the child must also consent to guardianship. If a parent does not consent or cannot be found so that consent can be obtained, you may be required to publish a notice in the newspaper for a period of time (approximately 30 days) before the guardianship can be approved.

The Legal Assistance Office can assist you in preparing all of the paper work you need to file and obtain the guardianship. You will have to pay court costs which range from approximately $80 to $125. Once the guardianship is granted, the probate court will issue a document called "Letters of Guardianship." This is the document that established you have guardianship authority over the child.

As to benefits, a "ward" (that is the minor child under a guardians control) is entitled to a military dependent ID card for commissary and exchange privileges and may be enrolled in DEERS for military health care services.

If you have any questions about the information provided in this article, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 to make an appointment with one of our attorneys.

TRIVIA

The term "the whole 9 yards" came from W.W.II fighter pilots in the Pacific. When arming their airplanes on the ground, the .50 caliber machine gun ammo belts measured exactly 27 feet, before being loaded into the fuselage. If the pilots fired all their ammo at a target, it got "the whole 9 yards."

The first long distance telephone call was placed between Boston and New York City in 1884.

Tips help prevent risk of Lyme disease

Maj. Kevin P. Michaels
Blanchfield Army Community Hospital

People who like to spend time outside during nice weather should be on the lookout for ticks that may cause Lyme disease.

Lyme disease is an infection caused by a kind of bacteria carried by deer ticks. It can be given to animals and people through tick bites. It most commonly occurs in rural and suburban areas in the northeastern and midwestern states, but also is found in other parts of the United States, as well as Europe, Asia and Australia.

The earliest symptom of Lyme disease is a rash, which appears one to 30 days after a tick bite. The rash starts at the site of the tick bite as a small red spot and grows larger. The center may fade, creating a bulls eye or ring appearance. It may burn, hurt, itch or go unnoticed.

Some people with Lyme disease start feeling ill around the time they notice the rash. They may have fever, chills, headaches, stiff neck, fatigue, muscle aches and joint pain.

If Lyme disease is not treated, it can spread to the rest of the body. Late symptoms of the disease include painful, swollen joints and nervous-system problems. The nervous-system problems include trouble concentrating and tingling and numbness in the arms and legs.

The best way to determine Lyme disease is to talk with a primary-care provider about symptoms.

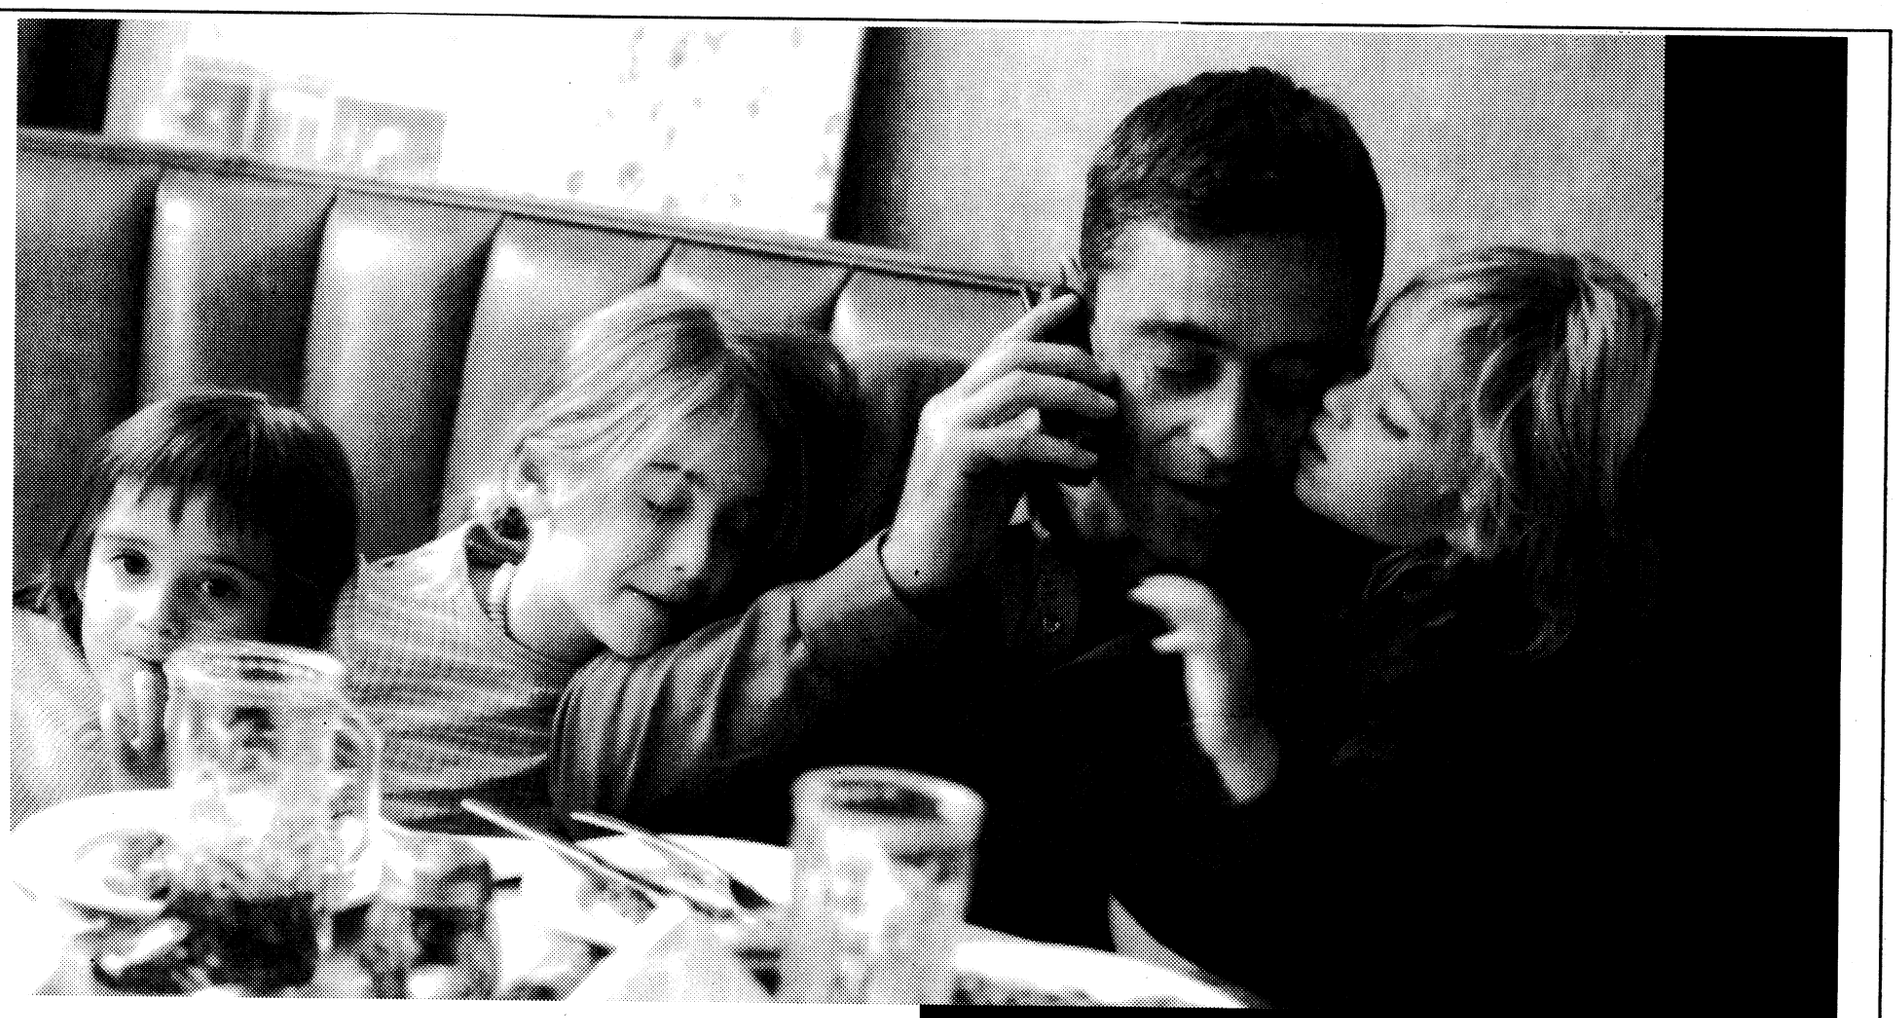
Lyme disease can be treated at any stage with antibiotics. It is extremely important for patients to take all the medicine. If they have problems with the medicine, they should call their primary-care providers.

Not all tick bites require antibiotics, however. An effective way of battling Lyme disease is prevention. Some strategies to help prevent Lyme disease, as well as other tickborne diseases, include:

•wearing light-colored clothing that covers most of the skin.

• tucking pants into socks for added protection.

• using insect repellent containing DEET or permethrin. (Apply DEET sparingly to the skin, according to label instructions. Do not apply it to face and hands of children. Use permethrin only on clothes.)



People at increased risk for exposure to infected ticks should consider Lyme disease vaccination, which includes three injections during a one-year period. The vaccine does not provide protection against other tickborne diseases, like Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, so vaccination is not a substitute for preventive measures.

Also, people in tick-infested areas should check their skin, including scalps, every night for ticks and rashes. You are not likely to get Lyme disease if a tick has been attached to your skin for less than 48 hours.

If a tick is detected, do not panic. Instead, remove it carefully. Using a pair of tweezers, grasp the tick's body as close to your skin as possible and pull on it in a steady, upward motion until the tick comes out. Be careful not to squash it.

If any tick parts remain in the skin, remove them the same way as a splinter. Wash hands and bitten area with soap and water. Do not use the old methods of putting petroleum jelly, nail polish, kerosene or matches on the tick to remove it.

Finally, after the tick is removed, watch the area for the next 30 days for a rash. If a rash develops, see a primary-care provider.

Military life is complicated enough.

Deciding how to call shouldn't be.

BBB advises to chose reliable web service

Better Business Bureau

If your small business is interested in using the Internet to expand its customer base, be sure you choose a reliable web service.

According to the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), some unscrupulous companies, claiming to provide free web design and hosting services are billing small businesses for services that were never authorized and have little value. The bogus charges usually appear on businesses phones bills, an illegal practice known as "cramming" or on fraudulent invoices.

The scam goes like this: the service provider contacts your business offering a free 30-day web site. The caller tells you that you can continue the service for a nominal fee of $25 to $30 a month and you can cancel at any time. Some service providers state that your business will be billed automatically after the 30-day period; others claim that you won't be billed the 30 days unless you tell them you want to continue the service.

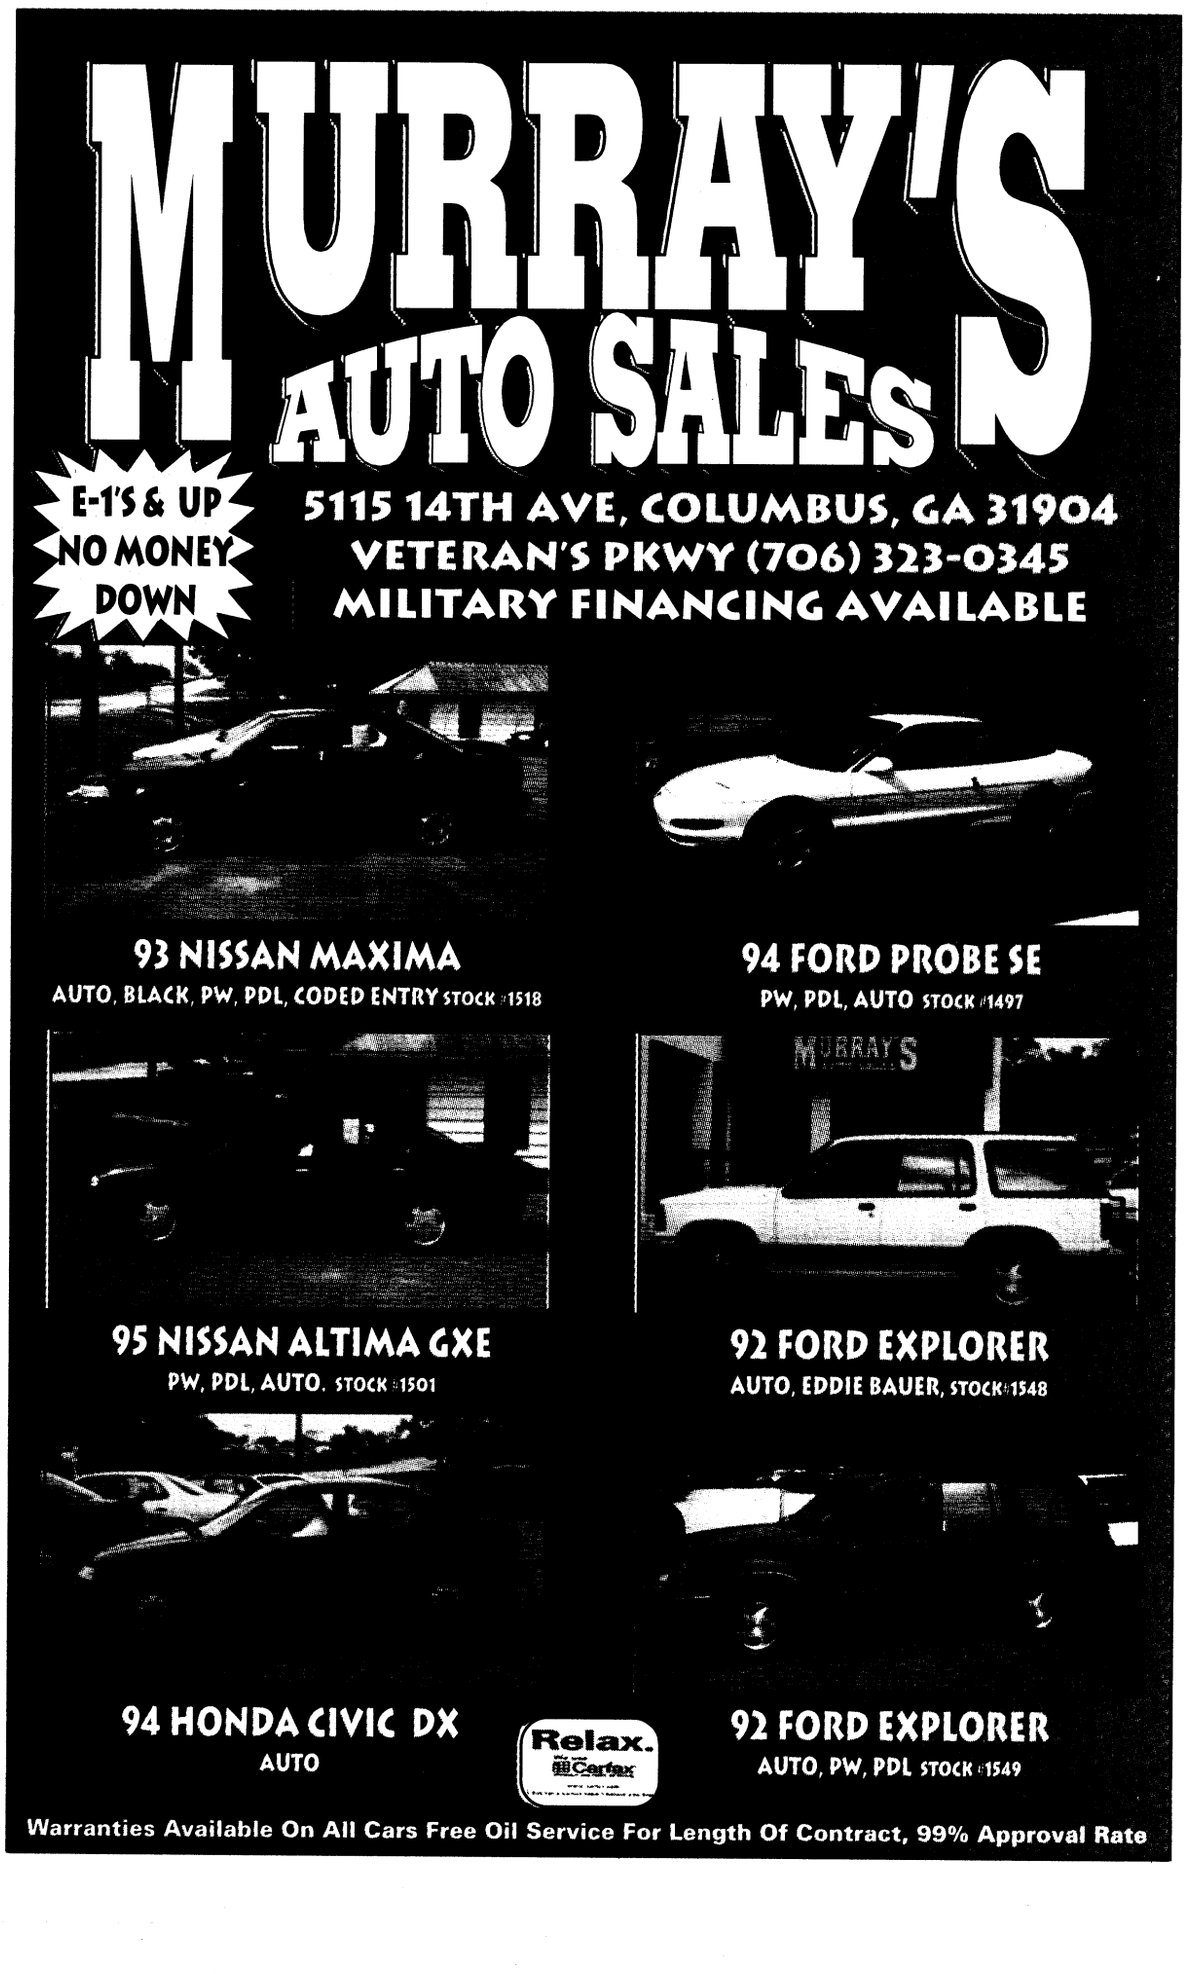
These service providers bill your company whether you authorize the services or tell the provider that you want to cancel. And chances are, you will not receive the promised welcome packet, but you will receive a bill either on your phone bill or as a direct invoice.

The Better Business Bureau and the FTC offer the following tips to avoid losing money to unordered services:

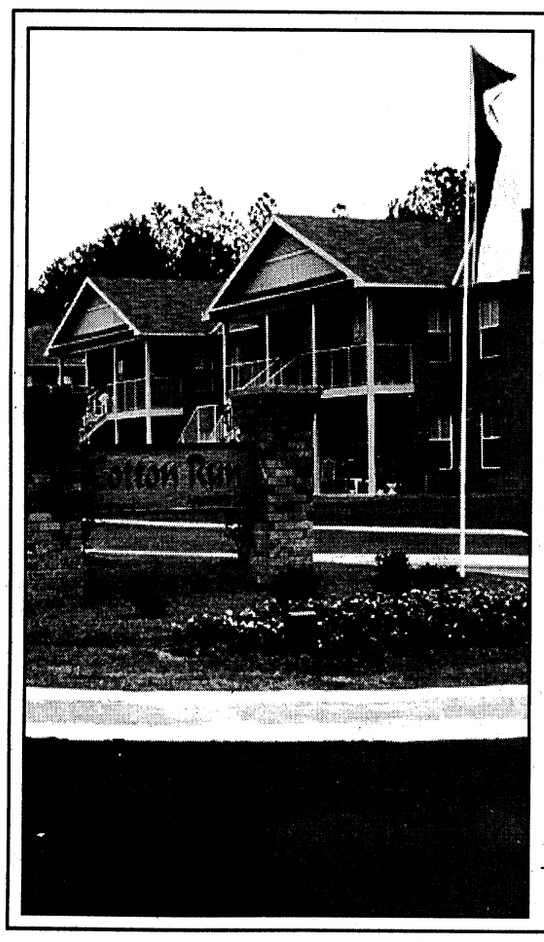
•If you receive bills for services you didn't order, don't pay. The law allows you to treat unordered services as a gift.

•Review your phone bills promptly. Be on the lookout for charges for services you haven't ordered or authorized.

•Assign purchasing to designated staff and document all your purchases.

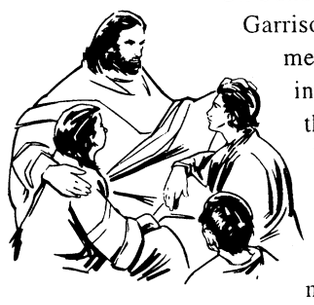


•Train your staff in how to respond to telemarketers. Advise employees who are not authorized to order services to say, "I'm not authorized to place orders. If you want to offer or sell us something you must speak to ..."



•Buy from people you know and trust. Call the BBB if you are skeptical of "cold" or unsolicited calls. Don't succumb to high-pressure sales tactics.

To file a complaint, contact your FTC or your BBB of West Georgia, Southwest Georgia and East Alabama.



Post to establish youth program

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Fort Benning has more than 2,500 junior and senior high school students and no full time chapel youth ministry program and outreach! Now is the time for change. If the moral character of our youth culture is lost, it may be lost by default.

reflections

Military Communities Youth Ministries (Club Beyond) is interested in working with Fort Benning Chapels and parents to meet the moral, ethical and character needs of Fort Benning's youth. But they cannot do it without the monumental help and advice that parents can bring.

Can we as a military community and military parents do anything less than ensure that the character building programs are in place? Because of the Biblical mandate to "train up a child in the way he should go" it is the goal of the Fort Benning Chapel community to initiate a post-wide youth ministry staffed by dedicated full-time youth workers.

On Sunday, the U.S. Army Infantry Center and Garrison Chaplains' offices will host a meeting for all parents and other interested persons wishing to involve themselves in this outreach to Fort Benning's junior and senior high students. The meeting will take place in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex at 4 p.m. This is a must-be-there meeting. We need this ministry and a full-time youth worker. We must act now in order to be ready to begin this October.

If you are interested in this youth ministry, plan now to attend the meeting. No reservation is necessary. For further information, call Rupel at 545-2050. Don't put this off. This is a "regret reduction program" in that we put to practice the programs that will prevent regrets later. Doing it later would be much too late!

Word of God shall stand forever

Chaplain (Capt.) Scott M. Bullock
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, ITB

On a recent Infantry Training Brigade Eagle Run, a familiar cadence rang out where Granny dies, goes to heaven and meets St. Peter at the pearly gate, hoping she's not late. This is a fun cadence when running, but let's say someone demanded proof for that statement.

reflections

How do we know there is a heaven with pearly gates where St. Peter is waiting? How do we even know there is a God? Religious leaders admit that answers to these questions cannot be proven by science. Simply, science is the observation and classification of facts. Religious beliefs can only be held by faith. For the Christian believer, faith must be based on a source of absolute authority. The spiritual authority for matters of faith and ethical living is the Bible.

The Bible is the only written revelation from God. This makes the Bible crucial for Christian believers to read, live and cherish daily. Many view the Bible as excellent literature. But Christians must believe it is more than just good literature. The Bible teaches for itself that it is the word of God. St. Paul wrote in 2 Timothy 3:16 that "all scripture is God-breathed." This means the Bible is not just inspirational, but inspired by God himself when he provided the very words of the Bible.

2 Peter 1;20-21 tells us how God gave us an inspired Bible; "holy men spoke from God as they were carried along by the holy spirit." God used prophets, preachers, kings and other special writers to record not just the ideas, but the very words of the Bible. Orthodox Christianity calls this the Doctrine of Inspiration.

Christians believe by faith that God cannot make mistakes. If God did make mistakes, then he would be less than God, for God is perfect. This faith helps Christians understand that God gave us a perfect Bible because of its perfect author. This Orthodox teaching is called the Doctrine of Inerrancy or Infallibility. Simply, we believe the Bible is without any error or incapable of making any errors in matters of faith. Jesus taught this in John 17:17 when he said, "Thy word is truth." Jesus meant the whole word of God was absolutely true.

Unfortunately, there is a fierce debate in some Christian churches today concerning what Bibles are actually without any error. After all, just walk into your local Christian bookstore and you can find several different Bible versions. Does this mean they are all equally perfect? To answer this question we must understand the Doctrine of Preservation. The Bible teaches that God will not allow the Bible to be destroyed. Throughout history, many have tried to destroy God's word but to no avail. In fact, the Bible still remains the best selling book of world history. Why? Because Matthew 24:35 says, "Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Isaiah 40:8 says, "the grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever."

What a profound hope this is for each Christian believer. We can know today that the Bible we have before us is indeed God's holy word because he promised to preserve it. This must only compel us with excitement to daily read and study the Bible.

Tournament hopes to net local stars — The Fort Benning Sports Branch will host a Summer Basketball Tournament July 23-25 at Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

The roster must consist of no more than 12 members, all from the same unit, and be submitted to Audie Murphy Fitness Center. Registration deadline is Monday.

Rosters will be accepted as first come, first serve, allowing the first 16 teams to participate.

A tournament scratch meeting is scheduled for 1 p.m. Wednesday at Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

For more information, call Fred Woods 545-1940.

Office sets race — The Fort Benning Sports Branch in conjunction with the Army Physical Fitness School and the Follow Me Roadrunners will hold a 10-mile road race July 30.

The race will begin at 6 a.m. at the Audie Murphy Fitness Center with registration beginning at 5 a.m.

The event will serve as a qualifying race for the Fort Benning Army 10-Miler team.

The Army 10-Miler is the Army's premier sporting event and will be held this year October 10 in Washington D.C.

For more information, call 545-6386 or 544-9595.

Gyms offer free aerobics classes — Free aerobics classes to all ID cardholders are offered at 5 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays at Briant Wells Field House. The classes will include kickboxing, high and low impact aerobics, resistance training and step aerobics. Correct shoes should be worn to avoid any foot injuries and a water bottle is also recommended.

For more information, call Sgt. Lenora Gogins-Watkins at 545-6823 or Sgt. Brian Whittaker at 544-9970.

Free aerobics are also offered at Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill. Classes are Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5:30 to 6:45 p.m.

For more information on classes at Santiago Fitness Center, call Gladys Johnson at 544-9595.

Aerobics classes are also now available at the Officers' Club gym. The classes are scheduled for Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings from 9 to 10 a.m. and on Monday and Wednesday evenings from 6 to 7 p.m.

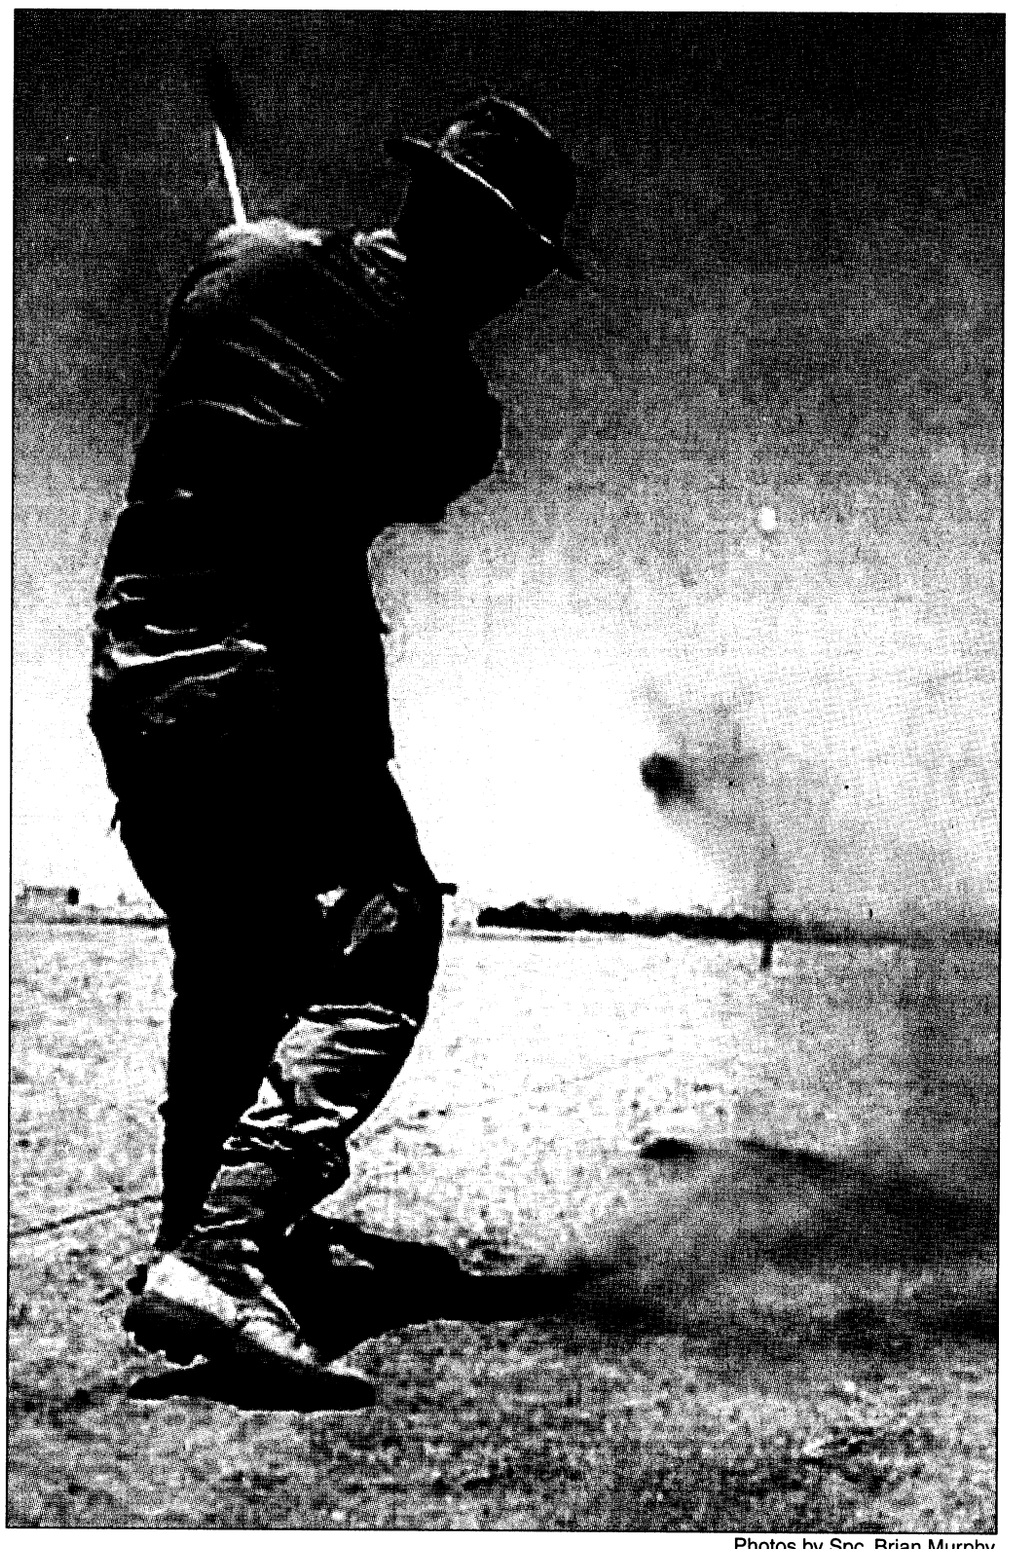
For more information on the classes at the Officers' Club, call 687-0871.

TSU offers new class — Troy State University at Fort Benning will offer a scoped rifle course at English Range July 30 through August 8th.

The class will focus on the skills necessary to make 300-yard precision shots and safely harvest animals in a humane manner.

The class is $60 per person. Ammunition and a scoped rifle .243-caliber or larger is required.

For more information or to register visit Building 2611 in Soldiers Plaza or call Jim Crissman at 563-4133.



Camp seeks local talent — Final registration is now open for the Ten Star All-Star Basketball Camp. Boys and girls ages 10 to 18 are eligible. Players are selected by invitation only. Past participants include: Michael Jordan and Grant Hill.

Camp locations are Atlanta, Ga., Raleigh, N.C. and Mobile, Ala. Scholarships are possible for the most advanced players.

For an evaluation form, call (704) 372-8610.

Sand traps can be a golfer's worst nightmare, and on courses throughout the world they are avoided like the plague. But what happens when sand is all you have to work with?

CAMP DOHA, Kuwait — Pebble Beach, Augusta National, the Pine Valley Golf Club and ... the "Can Do" International Golf Club?

The perfect solution for curing the Task Force golf junkies' blues was created when the "Can Do" course officially opened at the Kabal June 17, coincidentally the first day of the U.S. Open.

"This course was designed out of necessity," said 1st Lt. Mike Lindsey, Task Force battalion adjutant, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry, and course creator. "The hard-core golfers needed something to tide them over until they could return to the states."

According to Lindsey, getting the equipment was easy. After a few phone calls, a large supply of golf clubs, golf balls and carpet squares were donated by the Fort Benning Golf Counsel.

The layout and design of the course was even easier. Instead of the months of hard labor most courses require, the "Can Do" course was completed in just three days.

"We had more than enough land to design the course," he said. "For the rest, we got creative. The flagpoles are pickets and the flags are sandbags. We just used the resources we already had."

The 3,010-yard, nine-hole course, which was named after the Task Force's "Can Do" motto, features narrow fairways, scenic views and lots of sand traps.

The winds are normally a factor. Actually, the winds are always a factor.

"The winds blow predominately in one direction in the desert," Lindsey said. "We purposely designed the course to have some holes going into the wind, some against the wind and a few have cross winds. Some of the holes look easy, but the winds make them much more difficult."

The biggest difference between the "Can Do" course and a standard course is the lack of greens.

"It's impossible to putt in this sand," Lindsey said. "We had to come up with a different concept."

Hence, the creation of the "putting range equalizer." The equalizer consists of two strips of cloth tied to the flagpole. The shorter cloth ranges

Doctor offers news about Army PRT standards

Dr. Ed Thomas
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

Officers and NCOs who have responded to my comments concerning physical readiness training (PRT) generally agree that Army decision-makers should understand the historical, linguistic and sociocultural roots of PRT doctrine, but they also want me to define problems and recommend solutions. Good idea. Consider this.

commentary

I will open the discussion with a few issues and answers. For a more comprehensive look at these and other relevant Army PRT topics, email: thomase@benning.army.mil. I will send you an article titled History of U.S. Army Soldier Physical Fitness. Col. Michael D. Krause wrote it in the early 1990s while he was Deputy Chief of Military History and Deputy Commander of the United States Army Center of Military History. It is a great report full of important Army PRT history that Infantry leaders today should know. I will also email you a monthly PRT update.

Bad News

•Current PRT, as generally executed across the Army, contributes little to progressive motor skill development.

•American youth are generally hypokinetic and parakinetic. Recruits often have bad posture and poorly developed movement patterns not adequately corrected in basic training and AIT.

•The Army Physical Fitness Test drives PRT in many units. Unfortunately, little attention is paid to running gait. Quantity has overwhelmed quality in the push-up and sit-up events.

•The gap between fit and unfit Soldiers is very wide.

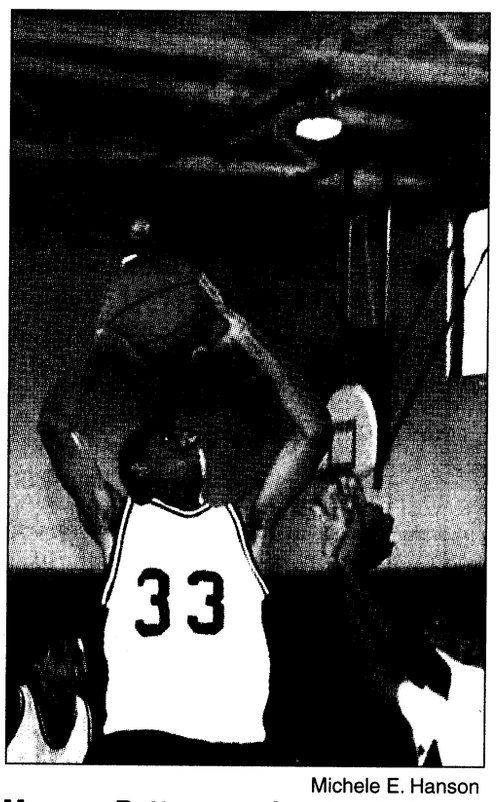
•Distance running dominates many PRT programs.

•Army PRT lacks restorative exercises that compensate for the stress of vigorous and compressive training.

•Combatives have been adrift for decades.

•The Army does not currently appreciate or cultivate the art and science the mass PRT.

•The origins and history of Army PRT have been forgotten.



•Peacetime Army PRT is historically mediocre.

•Americans are growing fatter and less fit.

Good News

The Army developed body mechanics, posture improvement, and motor skills doctrine during WWII and Korea. Lt. Col. Herman J. Koehler, "Father of Army Physical Training" also taught excellent motor skill doctrine while he was Master of the Sword at the U.S. Military Academy from 1885 to 1923. Manuals and other media

Youth take to court in first week of b-ball

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Fans young and old packed the Main Post Youth Services Gym from July 6-8 for the kick off of the summer basketball season. More than 150 eager athletes dribbled, rebounded, shot and blocked during the first week of basketball action.

The Heat was fired up during the first 6- to 7-year-old division game against the 76ers defeating them 8-2. Bruce Millsap, Karissa Jackson, Ryan McDonnell and Ritchie McDonnell tossed in 2 points apiece for the Heat and Jimmie Davis shot for 2 points as the 76ers top scorer.

The Spurs pulled out a victory over the Lakers in the second game by a score of 8-2. Top scorer for the Spurs was Crosby Adams with 6 points and Jeffrey Moore-Sykes contributed 2 points for the Lakers.

In the first game of the 8- to 9-year-old division, the Blue Devils trailed the Heat for most of the game but came back in the final seconds to defeat the Heat 16-14. Twain Buchanan-Scott led the Blue Devils in scoring with 10 points and was assisted by teammate Bobby Kemp who scored 4 points. The Heat's top scorer Travis Lush with 8 points combined with Gunnar Hanson's 4 points for 12, but fell short of the victory.

The Warriors dominated the Sonics during the second game 33-12. Ten points helped Terrance Mister, become the Warrior's top scorer followed by Kahlee Tyler with 7. Teammates, Kevin Toliver and Nicolas Holley scored 3 points each towards the Sonics final score of 12.

In 10- to 12-year-old action, the Miami Heat defeated the Knicks 26-21.

Xavier Shaw with 10 points and Dominique Love with 6 proved to be too much for the Knicks. Knick's top scorer, Eddie Jones contributed 8 of the team's 21 total points.

Despite a gallant effort by the 76ers during the second game, the Spurs came out on top 54-23 in their season opener. Omar Tyler led the scoring for the Spurs with 20 points and teammate Marcus Patterson added 18 points to seal the victory. Lead scorer for the 76ers was Robert Penn who contributed 16 to the team's 23 points.

The Tarheels fell to the Bulldogs in the 13- to 15-year-old division game 20-49. C.G. Hunter led the Bulldogs with 16 points and Donavan Mudayh contributed 10 points toward the victory.

Summer basketball games are played Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday through Aug. 19 and are conducted in the Main Post Youth Services Gym. The 6- to 7- year-old division games are held on Tuesdays; the 8- to 9-year-old division games are held on Wednesdays; and the 10- to 12-year-old division plays Thursdays.

All games begin at 5:30 p.m. The 13- to 15-year-old division plays on Tuesday following the 6- to 7-years-olds and start at 7:40 p.m.

For information about the summer basketball season, call the main gym at 545-3540.

Golf: Course is above par

in size from seven to 10 yards while the larger strip ranges from 15 to 20 yards. If the golfer's approach shot lands within the radius of the long strip, that's a two putt. The golfer earns a one putt if the shot lands within the short strip.

"The equalizer makes the games go by faster," Lindsey said. "Because it gets so hot out here, we wanted to speed up the time it takes to complete a round. And for the guys who can't putt, I guess the equalizer gives them a little better chance."

One of the first Task Force golfers to try out the course was Cpl. Robert Brown, a gunner with Company C, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry.

"I've been playing the game for most of my life," Brown said. "Taking a three-month hiatus does nothing but ruin a golfer's game. I was really excited when I learned they were making a course."

For shots that are on the fairway, Soldiers may use carpet squares. But for those shots that drift away from the fairway, the "honor system" is strongly in effect at the "Can Do" course.

"We can't have officials out on the course making sure every golfer is playing fair," Lindsey said.

"Basically, if you think you're off the fairway and out of bounds, you probably are. In those cases, the golfers wouldn't use the carpet square," he added.

According to Brown, there are a lot of similarities between the "Can Do" course and a traditional course.

"All of the same basic fundamentals are still needed to be successful out here," he said. "Just like anywhere else in the world, if you don't hit good shots, you aren't going to do well."

While the Pro Golf Tour hasn't swung through Kuwait just yet, at least the Task Force Soldiers have a chance to sharpen their game before they return to the states in mid-August.

Veteran competes in Paralympics

Tim Hipps
Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Army veteran Bill Demby, a three-time member of the United States Paralympic Teams, has held national amputee records in the shot put, discus and javelin.

On June 23, he joined nearly 100 members of "America's Olympic Team" to celebrate worldwide Olympic Day on the west steps of the U.S. Capitol Building.

Demby's name doesn't demand the same attention as the likes of Bruce Jenner, Jim Ryun, Evelyn Ashford, Bob Beamon and Madeline Manning-Mims, who were among the crowd of Olympic heroes past, present and future. Yet, his words struck home more effectively than any speaker who approached the podium.

"As a kid growing up on the Eastern Shore of Maryland in a small town called Price, I used to watch the Summer and Winter Games — watching people like Billy Kidd doing the downhill at 70-plus miles an hour on two pieces of board, or Willie Davenport and Billy Mills running in their individual events," Demby said.

By his senior year, Demby was averaging 16 points per game as captain of his high school basketball team.

"I was 5-10, and I could outjump anyone who was 6 foot, 6-2 on a good day," he recalled. "I knew what I wanted to do then. Like millions of young people throughout this country, I wanted the chance to play professional ball, but I also wanted to play in the Olympics."

In 1970, Demby's dream was quashed when he bypassed college because his high-school counselor told him that he wasn't "college material." So he joined the Army. One year later, his days of jumping were done.

"In 1971, there was a guy about 4-feet tall who decided that he wanted me the same height he was," Demby said. "When that rocket hit the truck that I was driving, it amputated my legs, and my dream was taken away."

Demby, 48, of Mitchellville, Md., struggled through many years of pain and suffering, wondering and worrying about what might have been and what was yet to come.

"As time went on," he recalled. "I kept thinking there had to be more to life than just laying around and doing nothing. I got involved in bad things — drugs and alcohol."

Someone introduced Demby to wheelchair basketball, which lured him back onto the winning track. Then he began competing in wheelchair divisions of 10K road races, where he continued to win. He extended his efforts to marathon lengths and was back atop the world again.

"I kept thinking that if I was going to be out here competing, then I needed to have a clean body and mind," Demby recalled. "So slowly, I started getting off the drugs and the alcohol. I couldn't go to a rehab center because that only confirmed what they said about us: Vietnam Vets — alcoholics, drug addicts, viscous people."

"I've been very fortunate to find something as an outlet — sports," Demby declares. "Not only do I compete on the artificial limb, but I go out and speak to schools to inspire not only the disabled but also the able-bodied."

Demby's eyes welled and voice wavered as he continued.

"In 1987, I set new standards for people with disabilities. For many of you, when you think of someone who is disabled, you think of someone who can't do anything. But as it was announced to you, I hold national records for the shot put, javelin and discus that didn't come easy."

A year later, Demby competed in the Paralympic Games in Seoul, Korea, where he struck gold.

Then, Demby faced still another struggle — that of convincing folks that he was an elite athlete.

"We are fighting to be accepted not only by the world, but by the Olympic Committee," Demby said. "I always thought that I was part of the Olympic Games and that I should be sponsored by the Olympic Committee.

"Well, in the Olympic Games of 1996 in Atlanta, that dream came true and we were sponsored by the Olympic Committee completely."

Demby also competed for the U.S. Sitting Volleyball Team at the Summer Games in Atlanta.

Now, Demby has another hurdle to clear — that of putting the Paralympics and Olympic Games on parallel playing fields.

PRT: Infantry ready for training change from these times are still available for reconsideration. Email me if you want to do a simple posture analysis in your unit, and I will send you a test chart with instructions.

Hundreds of motor skill assessments were developed during WWII. America's top physical educators helped create battle-focussed PRT tests for the militaries during 1941 to 1945. These tests could motivate today's Soldiers to practice and improve combat-related motor skills. Infantry commanders and NCOs can then use the results of these tests to shape their unit's PRT. I will often include a few physical and motor skill tests in the monthly email update.

•Martial arts are now popular throughout the civilian sector, and many Soldiers enter the Army expecting to learn at least something about hand-to-hand combat. A well-conceived strategy linking rational hand-to-hand training with PRT is a vital next step.

•Digital video, the Internet and other powerful technologies are now available to create and disseminate better PRT doctrine.

•Civilian strength and conditioning coaches are rediscovering many physical training ideas that the Army has used in the past. These concepts already belong to the Soldier and only need to be reclaimed.

•Finally, and perhaps the best news of all, is that today's professional combat Soldier is intelligent and motivated. He wants to be trained.

Conclusions

Infantry officers and NCOs at all levels must quietly resolve a few other sticky issues to shift the PRT paradigm effectively toward the battlefield. We will discuss these in the email updates. "Study the past," wrote Confucius. "If you would divine the future." Confucius nailed it, and the leisure required to do so will be very limited if and when the next war comes.

Shakespeare said it well, "There is a tide in the affairs of men, which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries; and we must take the current when it serves, or lose our ventures."

MILK
FACTS & FANCIES

Got Fresh Milk?

(NAPS)—Don't cry over spilled milk. It's a waste of time. There are, however, a number of things that consumers can—and should—do to avoid crying over spoiled milk.

The way milk is handled and stored is the number one factor in spoilage after it leaves the store.

According to Scott Watson, manager of the Mayfield milk plant in Athens, TN, "Handling milk properly, particularly in the hot summer months, is essential to keep milk's taste and nutrition at their best."

Here are a few tips on keeping milk fresh and full of flavor from the Southeast United Dairy Association.

- Keep it cold. 40 degrees F° or colder for longest shelf life.
- Don't expose it to sunlight, which can harm flavor and riboflavin content. Fifteen to twenty minutes of sunlight is too much exposure.
- Make it the last thing you pickup before heading home, and refrigerate quickly.
- Opaque and pigmented milk containers resist light and extend the nutritional value of all types of milk. Some milk producers such as Mayfield are now featuring yellow jugs for just that reason.

Follow these tips and milk will usually stay fresh for another week or so after it's purchased.

THEN and NOW!

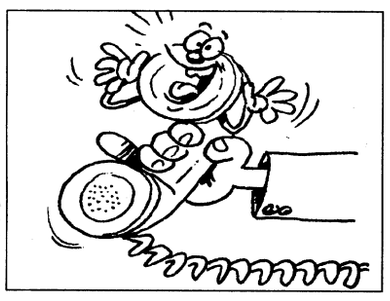
Get-To-Sleep Techniques

(NAPSA)-Counting interesting get-to-sleep techniques may be more fun than counting sheep.

THEN: Ancient Greeks left a pebble by the bedroom door to welcome

Wiggling their toes up and down about 20 times can help some people relax their way to sleep.

Morpheus, the god of dreams. People in the Middle Ages thought vapors from a sliced onion would induce sleep.



NOW: Today, people are easing insomnia by finding such giggle-inducing ways to release tension, such as rubbing your stomach or wiggling your toes.

For sleeplessness that is accompanied by or caused by nighttime pain, an increasing number of people are finding relief from an over-the-counter product known as Melagesic PM. Unlike similar products, Melagesic contains no antihistamines to promote sleep. Each extra strength caplet contains 500 mg. of acetaminophen combined with 1.5 mg. of melatonin sleep supplement for normal, restful sleep with no morning hangover.

Melatonin is a natural substance produced in the pineal gland of the human brain to regulate the sleep-wake cycle. For more information, call 1-800-324-1880.

Did You Know?

(NAPSA)-You could earn $1 million for your best original recipe by entering the 50th Pillsbury BAKE-OFF® Contest. For an entry blank, call 1-800-306-1111 through Sept. 30, 1999, or visit the contest Web site at www.bakeoff.com.

Mellow, nutty, deliciously creamy classic Jarlsberg, for example-as well as the low fat version, Jarlsberg Lite, which retains most of the rich flavor and smooth texture and melts beautifully too-can turn a simple green salad into a treat.

By combining chocolate and a Coolatta drink, Dunkin' Donuts has created a beverage that many say will make everyone happy this summer.

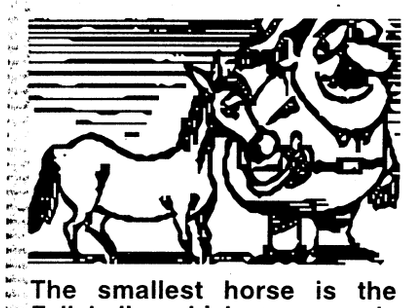
INVESTING IN STOCKS

Help Youth Invest In Stocks For Their Future!

A young person investing in stocks at age 15? NAIC says YES! The best asset a young investor has on their side is TIME. When an adult helps a young person start investing early for their lifetime, youth can build a substantial savings for future needs such as college costs. a first home, a wedding, and retirement.



You can help a young person graduate into becoming a successful investor for their lifetime.

Help a child or grandchild start investing early. Each month and on birthdays, holidays and other occasions you can help add to a young investor's stock holdings. With NAIC's new Youth Investor Program it's easy. NAIC, the nation's leading non-profit investment education group, is helping open the door to investing for youth. NAIC provides educational programs and materials designed just for young investors, explaining the world of money, savings, personal finance and investing.

Young investors can start with as little as $10 or $20 a month, and build a valuable "nest-egg" for their future. By following NAIC's time-tested investing principles, a young person can look forward to a better life and retirement. NAIC Youth Membership is only $20 a year and includes "YMM" youth newsletter, BI magazine each month and other youth investing information. Isn't it time we helped young people invest for their financial future? For an investing kit, contact: NAIC, P.O. Box 220, Royal Oak, MI 48068, or call toll free, 1-877-ASK-NAIC (275-6242). Visit their website: www.better-investing.org.

Since 1951, NAIC has provided investment education to more than 5 million individuals and investment clubs.

The smallest horse is the Fallabella, which grows only 30 inches high.

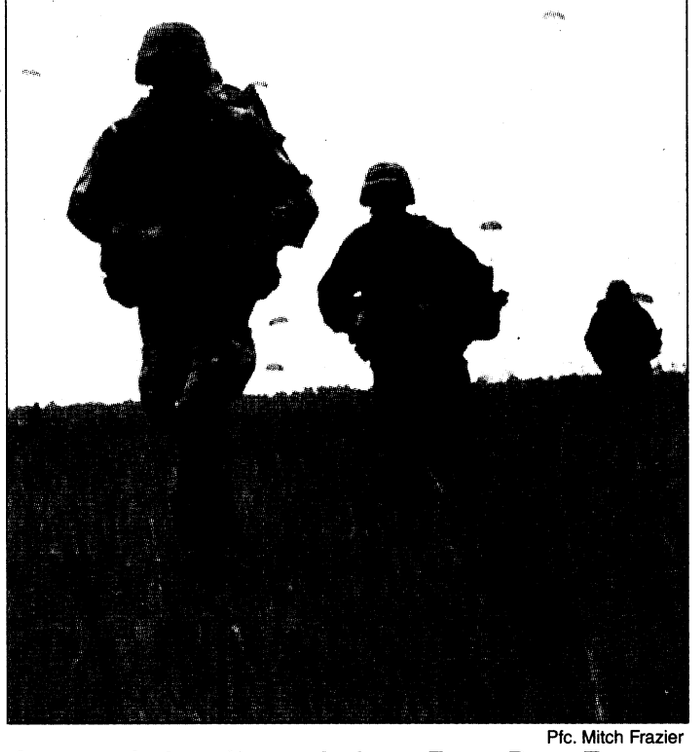
Rangers invade post for biennial reunion

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Rangers from around the world converged on Fort Benning this week to take part in an exercise that would not only test them physically and mentally, but emotionally as well.

These elite American fighters were not tasked with performing a clandestine mission risking life and limb, they assembled here to pay homage to Rangers who paved the way for the Rangers of today.

The week-long festivities, known to many as the Ranger Rendezvous, got a jump start Monday evening as more than 2,000 Rangers leaped from aircraft high above Fryar Drop Zone during a mass tactical jump demonstration that drew hundreds of spectators to the edge of the grassy drop zone.



The tactical jump was only the beginning of the four-day celebration.

On Day Two, Rangers took to Farnsworth Range to show off their new warfighting technology in the form of multiple static displays and an impromptu question and answer session. The day wrapped up at Marshall Auditorium as 14 of the most elite fighting force of days gone by were honored with an induction into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

Day Three got off to a running start as the Rangers took to the roadways of Fort Benning to take part in a 10K, 5K or 1-mile run. For many of the Rangers, the run served as a warm-up for the warriors as they took to various fields of play to take part in Ranger competitions such as jujitsu, sniper best shot and soccer.

Regimental physical training kicked off Day 4 of the celebration, and concluded with regimental passing of the guidon signifying the change of command.

The festivities wrapped up Thursday evening as Col. Stanley McChrystal handed control of the 75th Ranger Regiment to Col. Ken Keen.

Inductees join ranks of extraordinary Rangers

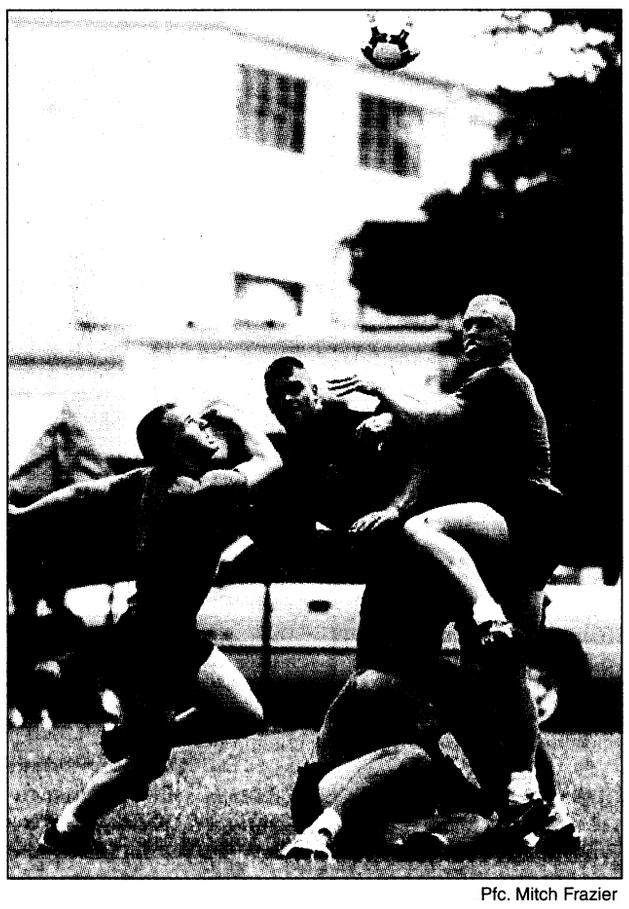
Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

Rangers past and present along with their family members filled Marshall Auditorium Tuesday to witness 14 Rangers join the ranks of America's most extraordinary Rangers as they were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

The Hall of Fame, located at the Ranger Training Brigade Headquarters Building, was created in 1992 to honor and preserve the spirit and contributions of those elite Soldiers who led the way throughout Ranger history, said Master Sgt. John K. Farley, public affairs NCOIC for the Ranger Training Brigade.

The 1999 inductees joined more than 100 Rangers in the Hall of Fame. Past recipients include Col. Ralph Puckett, Command Sgt. Maj. Henry Caro, Maj. Robert Rogers and Abraham Lincoln.

"I walked through the (Hall of Fame) gallery this morning and looked at the names of all the prior inductees. I was very impressed," remarked 1999 inductee Robert W. Prince, who said he was honored and humbled to place among the likes of the past inductees. "I'm almost a little embarrassed though; my Soldiers were the ones who really got me here."



The 1999 inductees were:

Col. Edmond Abood — Abood, who spent 37 years in the military, served during World War II, Korea and Vietnam. He was ultimately awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for his valorous actions in Vietnam.

Capt. Paul W. Bucha — During an engagement in Vietnam, Bucha organized a hasty perimeter defense to ward off the attacks of a superior enemy force. Bucha crawled forward and single-handedly destroyed a machinegun that was firing into his position with grenades. After leaving the military, he returned to the U.S. Military Academy to speak to the cadets about his experiences.

Col. Joseph G. Clemons Jr. — During the Korean War, Clemons led a counterattack against an entrenched enemy force. Encountering heavy fire near the top of the hill, he withdrew his force, regrouped and attacked again.

POW travels to witness rescuer's induction

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

At 78 years of age, retired Master Sgt. John Cook was compelled to travel from San Bruno, Calif., for the Ranger Hall of Fame induction ceremony held Tuesday at Fort Benning.

More than 54 years ago, 1999 Ranger Hall of Fame inductee Robert Prince, led a company of Rangers who successfully infiltrated the prisoner of war camp Cabantuan located 29-miles behind enemy lines and freed more than 500 American and Allied prisoners. One of the prisoners rescued during the daring raid was young John Cook then a private in the Army.

Cook, one of 500 medics assigned to the Philippines in the spring of 1942 for six months of field training, never made it out due to Japanese interference. Cook entered Camp Cabantuan July 5, 1942 and throughout his 34 month stay always made the best of a bad situation.

Cook reminisced about the months spent as a POW and remembered how fellow prisoners suffered and how they sat around at night complaining about the conditions and their horrific treatment.

"While in the camp words that my grandfather taught me always came to mind. 'In life's way, if you can't get the job you like to do, try and like the job you have to do.' — I never forgot this powerful motto and lived by this during my stay at Camp Cabantuan."

Rangers continue to lead the way

Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

What it takes to be a Ranger is kind of like asking someone what it takes to be a parent. It's something you just have to experience for yourself to understand.

commentary

There are too many different situations that a Ranger has to be ready to adapt to for me to be able to tack one quality of a Soldier to. One of a Ranger's most used skills is the ability to go from a basic rifle marksmanship instructor to a demolitions expert to a Jumpmaster to a job like mine where I have to suffer through doing so much of my job on a computer when I really cannot type to save my life.

I adapt to the situation and overcome whatever obstacle stands in my way. I may not be carrying my fallen comrade off of a live-fire raid site, but it is the same mentally fit attitude that makes all Rangers complete their mission even though they may be the lone survivor.

A Ranger will never quit, despite the odds, the weather, limited visibility, or how long it has been since he has had any food, slept or seen his family.

A Ranger is willing to give the ultimate sacrifice for a country where 95 percent of the people don't even know we exist. Rangers have spearheaded almost every American invasion from the Revolutionary War to the firefight in Mogadishu, Somalia. But if asked, most Americans think we put out forest fires.

If you are 19 and can carry a ruck sack, go without food and sleep for about two months, you can earn your Ranger tab and be Ranger qualified but being a Ranger takes much more. Being in the 75th Ranger Regiment is a way of life that is far and away the most physically and mentally demanding. It takes the will to be ready to do the job every day when that alarm goes off in the morning and when hitting your knees every night praying to the almighty for the safety of your Brother Rangers in the next day's mission.

It definitely is not a job for everyone; in fact, it isn't a job for most people. And who can blame them? It is pretty daring to jump out of an airplane in the middle of the night onto a foreign drop zone to engage the unsuspecting enemy who probably outnumber us. It is even more dangerous when after that mission I return home to my wife at 4 a.m. in the morning and can't really tell her where I have been.

Rangers have a bond. You will rarely see one Ranger without his Ranger buddy. You will rarely see a Ranger family member who isn't good friends with another. The camraderie and brotherhood of the Rangers is unlike any other unit. The men are willing to trust their lives with each other in a firefight, but also are always at each other's house during a family event.

Rangers have a sense of loyalty to their unit and will always do the right thing even when no one else is looking. Selfless service is synonymous with the word Ranger.

An American Airborne Ranger is the ultimate fighting Soldier — the ultimate hero. What it takes to be a Ranger is too hard to explain in words, but those of us who are or have been Rangers know — and those who haven't been may never.

Felons not only ones who pick up trash

Master Sgt. Tracy Tanner
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

commentary

A co-worker came to work the other day totally infuriated.

She was annoyed.

During our ride to lunch, she shared the source of her annoyance.

It seems she'd followed a guy to work who ... "threw his whole pack of cigarettes out his car window."

"Whoa, Monica (name changed to protect the infuriated), that's probably a good thing. Perhaps this guy had kicked the habit in that instance, and he needed to get that nasty stuff out of his automobile."

"No," insisted Monica. "It was empty because after that, he threw out the wrapping top of a new pack of cigarettes."

"Oh," I thought, "a chain smoker."

"Does he have any idea who has to pick up his trash?" Monica, still a bit tensed up, questioned.

I know who has to pick up his trash, but I was impressed that Monica knew. She, a Department of the Army civilian and military brat who has never done the dirty deed of police call, knows that the men and women who keep Fort Benning looking good are those same Soldiers who would sacrifice their lives to protect this country.

However, perhaps the guy who threw out the empty pack of smokes is unaware.

Perhaps he thinks the same guys in the orange jumpsuits policing Georgia's highways are going to pick up his trash.

Sorry, buddy, it doesn't work like that.

Fort Benning takes care of its own — to include trash.

The men and women who keep Fort Benning looking good are not associated with the criminals who police up Georgia's highways. They're not felons; they're not doing time. They're serving their country because they chose to. They're the best America has to offer. They're our youth. And they're proud to serve.

On a bet, I'd say that not a one of them own a bright orange jump suit or leg or wrist irons. No, these are the Soldiers of our future.

Getting back to our Monica and her story. She followed this guy all the way to Building 4. She was amazed that he worked there, at the Infantry Center, and had such disrespect for Soldiers. Then she realized that she knew him and that she liked him. But after this day, she would never understand him. How could he roll down his car window and throw trash along the roadways?

But perhaps, she realized, she could educate him. Education is a powerful tool.

She realized she could explain to him that convicted felons are not out there performing police call on the grounds that encompass Fort Benning. No, the men and women who are doing those dirty deeds are our country's future.

Wouldn't it be better to give them more time to train and become proficient? Let's let them concentrate on Soldiering.

Let's get a little plastic car bag to throw our trash in to avoid having to throw it out the window. And when that bag is full, let's dispose of it properly.

Let's think about our environment ...

Let's think about those who wish to serve but lose valuable training time cleaning up after others.

Let's just think and then avoid throwing trash out our car windows.

How to get stuff in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Requesting coverage of news events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include battalion-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the battalion level, check presentations and group photos.

The frequency of such events on post and small number of photojournalists on The Bayonet staff prohibits us from covering these sorts of events.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road if desired. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

The Bayonet is located in Room 606, Infantry Hall, Fort Benning, GA 31905.

317th Sappers greet new boss

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Sapper Soldiers from the 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), said good-bye to their former battalion commander Lt. Col. Daniel M. Wilson Jr. and welcomed in Lt. Col. Stephen Hill as his replacement.

Hill replaced the two-year veteran of the battalion who will assume his new duty station in the Military District of Washington, Washington, D.C.

Prior to coming to Benning, Hill has served in many leadership capacities to include assignments such as a platoon leader, assistant S-3 and company commander with the 54th Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Mechanized), Wildflecken, West Germany; project officer, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Seattle, Wash., staff engineer, U.S. Army Special Operations Integration Command, Fort Bragg, N.C.

He most recently served as a joint engineer staff officer at Headquarters, U.S. Forces Japan.

Hill is a 1982 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, the engineer officer basic course, the armor officer basic course, the armor officer advanced course, the Combined Arms and Services Staff School, the Command and General Staff College and the Armed Forces Staff College. Hill has also earned a Master's Degree in Civil Engineering from Purdue University.

During his 21 years of service, he has netted several awards to include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Army Meritorious Service Medal, the Joint Service Commendation Medal, the Army Commendation Medal, the Army Achievement Medal, the Joint Meritorious Service Medal, the Armed Forces Expedition Medal and the Humanitarian Service Medal.

TSU, USARSA ink agreement

Dr. Russ Ramsey
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Dr. Aaron Lucas, director of Troy State University at Fort Benning, recently signed a unique agreement with Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Under the agreement, U.S. and Latin American faculty members at USARSA can complete a master's of science in international relations with Troy State University on a fast track basis.

The agreement uses an earlier arrangement (1995) that allows Command and General Staff College students at USARSA to receive constructive credit for national military policy and for U.S. military strategy with Troy State. By taking eight additional courses at night while simultaneously enrolled in the Command and General Staff College Course, USARSA students can earn both their course diploma in addition to a master's degree in International Relations at the same.

In five years of operation, this agreement has produced 26 military officers who earned both diplomas at once, with seven more to complete the linked programs in Dec. 1999.

The new agreement just signed now allows faculty members, both U.S. and Latin American, to have the same opportunity. If they have already completed an accredited CGSC course or a War College course in any hemispheric country, they qualify for constructive award of course credits with Troy State in national security policy and U.S. military strategy.

Then, by successfully completing eight additional TSU courses at night, instead of the mandatory 10 courses, they can earn their master's in one calendar year.

According to Dr. Russell W. Ramsey, professor at both USARSA and TSU and program coordinator for the linked programs, this dual enrollment with constructive credits is nationally unique.

"We have graduates of the dual enrollment programs now holding top planner billets in the highest military staffs around the U.S. and Latin America," said Ramsey.

"It is one more way that the U.S. School of the Americas is nailing down the peaceful political environment to accompany the economic boom now occuring in the hemisphere," he said.

POW: Shows support

months before his rescue, Cook had a reassuring dream that laid most of his worries to rest.

"Christ appeared before me with his beard and white robe and said to have no fear because I would be out of the camp soon," Cook said. "Everyone made fun of me and no one believed me but somehow I knew that everything would be okay."

Cook was overwhelmed with joy when he met Robert Prince about six years ago at a Ranger reunion.

"I would never have missed the induction of Bob Prince. When they rescued me from the camp, they gave me a second chance at life."

ALLIES

Leadership cannot be exercised by the weak. It demands strength—the strength of this great nation when its people are united in purpose, united in a common fundamental faith, united in their readiness to work for human freedom and peace; this spiritual and economic strength in turn, must be reinforce in a still armed world by the physical strength necessary for the defense of ourselves and our friends.

Three times a charm

For the first time in nearly a decade, three arms of the 250-foot Airborne towers were in operation simultaneously July 16. Led by Capt. John R. Hanson, Soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, were the first Airborne training unit to make the first drop of its kind since the towers re-opened in late April of this year.

Lt. Col. Douglas E. McCallum receives the battalion guidon during a change of command ceremony July 19.

Soldiers, cadre and family members of the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, welcomed new battalion commander, Lt. Col. Douglas E. McCallum, during a change of command ceremony held on Sand Hill Monday.

McCallum replaced Lt. Col. Roy S. Howle, Jr., as the battalion's former top officer heads to the Pentagon to serve as an operations and planning officer.

McCallum has served in many command positions prior to his assumption of the training brigade. He has served as a rifle company executive officer, battalion S2 and assistant battalion S3 with the 3rd Armor Division in Gelnhausen, Germany, a plans officer and company commander with the 75th Infantry Division in Fort Ord, Cal., a battalion operations officer, executive officer with the JRTC Operations group at Fort Polk, La.

Prior to making the move to Benning, he served as executive officer for the Department of the Army Secretariat for Selection Boards and as the Colonels Assignment office in Infantry Branch at the Total Army Personnel Command, Washington, D.C.

During his 17 years of service, McCallum has scored several military awards and accolades to include the Ranger Tab, the Parachutist Badge and the Expert Infantryman's Badge.

He has also logged many hours in both military and civilian education from the University of Georgia, the Combined Arms Services Staff School, the Army's Command and General Staff College and the Defense Strategy Course.

McCallum brings with him to Fort Benning his wife Nancy and two daughters, Sarah and Sylvia.

Capt. Jay Griffith
Directorate of Threat and Security

The activities in the Former Yugoslavia have brought and kept the Balkans region to the forefront of world events since the early 1990's. Not to be overlooked in the region is the country of Greece, which has many interests in the area.

With the American and NATO presence in the region, a Greek terrorist organization known as 17 November poses a threat to American service members, and civilians stationed or travelling in Greece. 17 November is a radical leftist group established in 1975 and named for the November 1973 student uprising in Greece protesting the military regime. The group is anti-Greek establishment, anti-United States, anti-Turkey, anti-NATO; committed to the ouster of US bases, removal of Turkish military, presence from Cyprus and severing of Greece's ties to NATO and the European Union (EU). Its organization is rather obscure and is possibly affiliated with other Greek terrorist groups.

The group's initial attacks were selected handgun assassinations against senior U.S. officials, including U.S. Embassy official Richard Welch in 1975 and U.S. Navy Captain George Tsantes in 1983.

In April 1984, a senior U.S. Army NCO was shot and wounded while transporting documents. The victim saved his life by being alert and taking evasive action when two terrorists on motorcycles approached his car.

In two separate incidents in 1987, busses carrying U.S. military personnel were bombed. A total of 26 Americans were injured in the attacks.

There was an attempted assassination of a U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration Agent in Athens in 1988. U.S. defense attache Capt. William Nordeen was killed by a car bomb in June of the same year.

Since 1990, 17 November has expanded their targeting to include EU facilities and foreign firms investing in Greece. They also added rocket, attacks to their methods. During the Gulf War the group was responsible for at least five of the 15 terrorist attacks against coalition targets in, Greece, including the assassination of a U.S. Army sergeant.

The Revolutionary Organization 17 November group struck six times in early 1998, and several other groups claimed responsibility for bombings in various locations in Greece. Little is known about 17 November's organization or membership. The Greek Government has not arrested a single 17 November member in the 23 years since the group killed its first victim.

Hall of Fame: Honors heroes

Through hand-to-hand combat, his small volunteer force took the objective.

Sgt. 1st Class Donald L. Lehew — Lehew, a former instructor at the Florida Ranger Camp, was awarded the Bronze Star with "V" device for heroic actions in Vietnam when he exposed himself to enemy fire to save the life of a reconnaissance team leader and retrieve a Viet Cong prisoner from a river nearby.

Sgt. Maj. Joseph R.M. Cournoyer — In 1944, Cournoyer led more than 20 French Commandos behind enemy lines after the Battle of the Bulge. He was one of the first volunteers for the Airborne Rangers and was selected to be the first sergeant of the 3rd Ranger Infantry Company (Airborne).

Lt. Col. John S. Daniel Jr. — Daniel was deployed to Vietnam to be the first senior advisor to the 1st Vietnamese Ranger Group. After nine months of combat, Daniel was severely wounded. The wound was so severe it appeared he would have to be medically retired. However he not only rehabilitated himself, but was deployed again to Vietnam.

Sgt. Maj. Santos A. Matos Jr. — Through his 26 years of service, Matos served in numerous special operation units during the conflicts in Grenada and Panama. He consistently volunteered for all hazardous duty and helped develop free fall techniques still utilized by the military.

Sgt. 1st Class John L. McCoy — In 1941, McCoy was seriously wounded during house-to-house fighting in Hong Kong and became a prisoner of war. He endured 45 months of barbarous imprisonment and after the Japanese surrendered, McCoy testified to convict his captor of war crimes.

Chief Warrant Officer William "Doc" Donovan — During his 28-year military career, Donovan took part in Operation Urgent Fury, Operation Just Cause, Operation Desert Storm and Operation Restore Hope. In 1992, Donovan risked his life when a airplane in his lift crashed in Great Salt Lake during a training exercise. He paddled more than a mile in a small rubber boat in stormy weather to recover the bodies and save the pilot.

Gen. Wayne A. Downing — During Vietnam, his selfless and heroic leadership was recognized with two valor awards. As the third commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment and first modern commander, the regiment became the world's premiere Infantry unit.

Maj. Robert W. Prince — Prince was given the task of planning and executing the daring Prisoner of War raid at Cabanatuan in the Philippines in 1945. Prince infiltrated his element during a 29-mile foot movement behind enemy lines. To achieve tactical surprise, Prince had his Rangers low crawl the last mile.

Warrant Officer Arthur "Robbie" Robinson — Robinson was inducted as an honorary member for his military and civilian service to the Ranger community. As a memorable of the Australian Army, Robinson served alongside U.S. units. His awards include the Silver Star, Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry and Vietnamese Armed Forces Medal of Honor.

Lt. Col. Cairson Johnson — Johnson joined Merrill's Marauders first campaign in Burma. He commanded with great distinction and on many occasions was seen to carry multiple packs and rifles of men who had become too exhausted. He retired after 30 years of service and was honored in 1965 with the George Washington Honor Medal.

Sgt. Maj. Arthur A. Werner Jr. — Werner, who was at Pearl Harbor when the Japanese attacked, led recon patrols and ambush patrols in the Guadalcanal. He then volunteered to join Merrill's Maruaders and served in Burma. His awards include the Combat Infantryman's Badge with two stars, two Silver Stars, one Bronze Star for valor, four Bronze Stars for meritorious Service, two Purple hearts among others.

ACAP announces briefing, workshop schedules

Army Career and Alumni Program

"Separating Soldiers are required to receive briefings, information and assistance as necessary to take full advantage of their benefits and entitlements. This process should begin 180 days before the separation date but not later than 90 days from separation. The three-day program is followed by individual counseling sessions as necessary with service providers and ACAP Center counselors," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services Manager.

The three-day program of briefings and workshops is presented in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall by ACAP Center personnel, Georgia Department of Labor Local Veteran Employment Representative, and Fort Benning service providers (Retirement Services, Veterans Affairs, Transition, Finance, and TriCare). Successful participation in this program empowers Soldiers and their families to begin transitioning to civilian life with dignity and pride.

Schedule

•Each event begins at 8:30 a.m. in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, civilian casual dress

Aug 1999	Sep 1999	Oct 1999

All passengers should wear seat belts

Regis Beighley
Fort Benning Safety Manager

It is estimated that 12,000 to 15,000 lives could be saved annually if all occupants of passenger cars wore their seat belts.

Unfortunately only about 10 percent of the American population take this important precaution when they go for a drive. The Army has long been a supporter of the restraint systems. It should be emphasized that:

•You are 20 times more likely to be injured if you are thrown out of a car in an accident.

•Seat belts cut fatalities by more than 40 percent.

•Seat belts cut the number of moderate to serious injuries by 60 percent.

Personnel should be educated in these and other pertinent facts regarding the use of seat belts. The information they receive may save their life.

Banner Day

Rangers battle for title, bragging rights

Sgt. David Rowan
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Ranger companies from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment battled it out for the coveted banner July 15 in a biannual day of athletic competitions.

Known as Banner Day, the competition featured eight grueling events including softball, basketball, combatives and soccer. The day's activities also included two other nontraditional games — Americanball and flickerball.

Americanball, a combination of soccer, wrestling, football and rugby, is perhaps the most unique sport played during Banner Day. Flickerball combined the rules of football and rugby.

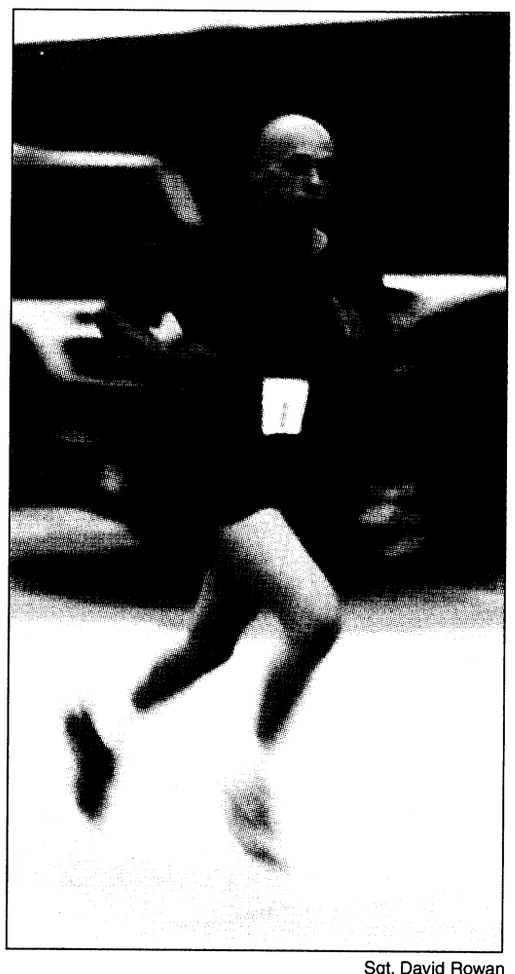
Each company received an amount of points in each event for how well the company placed in that event.

When the dust finally settled on Peden Field, it was Company B that added the streamer to their guidon, signifying their win of the "friendly" competition.

"This is the first time Bravo Company has had the banner in my tenure at 3rd Ranger Battalion," said Sgt. 1st Class Mike Ferucci, who was instrumental in the company's success by competing in numerous events.

Although Co. B came out on top with 25 points to take first place, Headquarters and Headquarters Company was a close second scoring 23 points.

"I can't believe we only came in second. I don't know what happened," snared Sgt. 1st Class James Sims of HHC. Sims said the company had been well-briefed on a flawless plan created by the HHC commander.



All of the events demanded 110 percent of the Rangers' physical and mental endurance, strength and teamwork, which are all required of them for their combat mission, said 1st Sgt. Richard Gatien of HHC.

Not only did Banner Day provide the battalion with an overall winner, the events also helped the unit decide which Rangers would represent the battalion during Ranger Rendezvous competitions against 1st and 2nd Ranger Battalions from Hunter Army Airfield, Ga., and Fort Lewis, Wash.

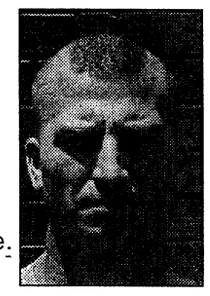
RANGERS TRIVIA



The Rangers were first raised to fight the French and Indians during America's early colonial days. The unit known as the Rangers came into being in 1756 under New Hampshire Militia Major Robert Rogers. He copied many of the guerilla-style tactics that the Indians were using, like hit hard and fast, then run, regroup, and attack again somewhere else unexpected. These principles pioneered modern guerilla warfare Physical and are still used today.

BLACKHAWK STAKES

1-50 take part in competition

1st Lt. Ty S. Short
Company B, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

The 4:30 a.m. wakeup came a little early recently for the 144 "Blackhawks" of Company B, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

With only the items listed on the packing list in their rucks, the Soldiers embarked on a day of training they may never forget. The Soldiers were broken down into 18, nine-man squads for a squad competition called "Blackhawk Stakes."

The competition was designed to instill teamwork and the seven Army values — loyalty, duty, respect, honor, personal courage, selfless service and integrity — while it also stressed physical fitness.

The competition consisted of 16 events scheduled over the course of 13 hours.

"Squad competition day was the turning point for second platoon and likely the entire company. Because every Soldier has strengths and weaknesses, the variety of events required teamwork and cooperation for success," stated Spc. Jason Stuck of 2nd Platoon. "It was immediately evident that one or two strong Soldiers were not enough to succeed as a squad. Instead the squad leader must utilize all his men, taking advantage of their strengths in one event and using them in such a way as to minimize any weaknesses they have in another."

Stuck added that the competition also allowed individuals to gain more respect and a clearer identity within the platoon by rising to the occasion, as well as developing teamwork.

The first event of the day was the "Full battle rattle." This event was to see which squad could assemble first with all the required equipment for the day: Kevlar, LBE, 45-pound rucksack, litter and designated packing list. This exercise stressed teamwork and cohesiveness.

The next event was the one-mile litter run. The task was to move one member of the squad on the litter at all times to the finish point. Right after the run, the squads went through the obstacle course. The keys to success here were physical fitness and endurance.

"As a platoon, it made us realize that we do need each other to make it to the finish line. It pulled the seven Army Values out of each individual by showing self discipline, respect and most of all personal courage," said Pvt. Derrick Aleshire of 3rd Platoon. "The competition was great and pulled out motivation and teamwork. It opened our eyes, to make each individual see we are all one big team."

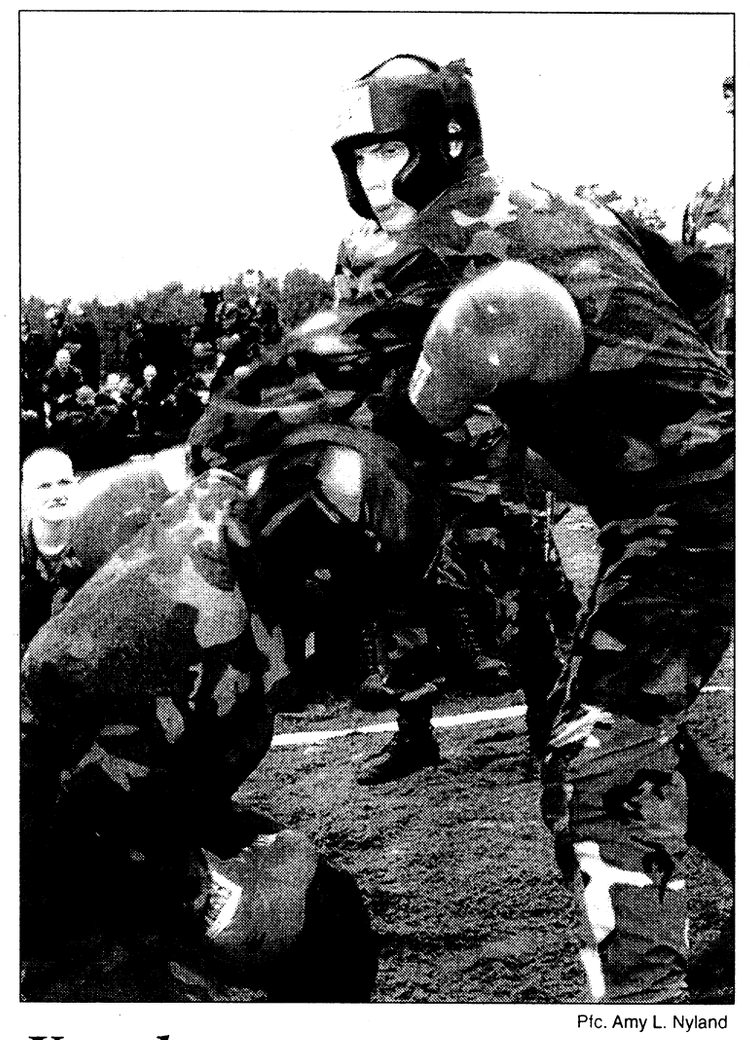
Directly after the obstacle course the Soldiers were given a basic skills test to don the protective mask within the Army standard of nine seconds, with an additional six seconds to enplace the hood. They were also given a test on their chain of command and general military knowledge. The purpose of these events was to instill in the Soldiers that even under physical stress they must be able to accomplish each and every basic task.

"During the squad competition I noticed everyone put their differences to the side and got down to business. Without working together, the task would have been impossible. It helped show what everyone was capable of," said Pvt. Robert Bridger of 4th Platoon.

Now it was time to test the Soldier's ability in a water environment. To prepare for this training each squad conducted another one mile litter run, a uniform change and a mile and half squad run to the pool.

Here teamwork was the key to success and also knowing how to pace yourself and the members of your squad. First every Soldier was given a 50-meter swim test to ensure he could safely complete the water events. The first event was a squad against squad "Chicken Fight." After the chicken fights, it was time for the squad relays. Each squad had to swim 225 meters for the relay event. By this time the squads were only seven hours into the competition and it was time for chow, but again they had to get there by conducting a 1.5 mile squad run.

"The squad competition is something I will never forget. The weather was terrible, the events were exhausting, but the teamwork and dedication took us to the next level of becoming Soldiers," said Pvt. 2 Hayes Garrett of 1st Platoon.



After chow the competition started back up with a squad ruck run to the confidence course. The next event was the confidence course where teamwork and motivation were essential in successfully completing each obstacle. With only five more events remaining, you could begin to see the physical fatigue fighting against the wills of these young Soldiers. Immediately after the confidence course the squads made their last movement of the day, a one mile ruck run back to the company area.

At this point in the game endurance and will power were the driving factors. The next event was the push up event in which one member of the squad was doing push ups until he started to slow down then someone would switch out with him. The next event was a two and a half ton truck push over 75 meters slightly uphill. The last event of the day was a squad tug-o-war in which every squad gave their last bits of energy to try and win the competition.

"Squad Stakes day brought out the best in these Soldiers. They were true warriors, who through their will and leadership made their buddies push themselves much more than they would have done without that," said Drill Sgt. Michael Theus. "Facing the challenges of rain, ruck, and each other. These young Infantrymen filled me with pride as they continued through with confidence, motivation and teamwork. Believing they could make it was the deciding factor between the teams."

"From my observation of the squad competition, 2nd Platoon commandos pulled together as a team like none other I have seen before. They refused to come in any other place but 1st place," said Drill Sgt. Jimmie Jackson. "To them 2nd place was the same as last place. I commend them on their drive, motivation and teamwork. They truly are like their newly found motto, made up after they won the squad competition 'Second To None.'"

Blackhawk Stakes was an event that molded our company together as a cohesive team and gave us an extremely high motivation level.

ALLIES

The soldier is a man; he expects to be treated as an adult, not a schoolboy. He has rights; they must be made known to him and thereafter respected. He has ambition; it must be stirred. He has a belief in fair play; it must be supplied. He has imagination; it must be stimulated. He has a sense of personal dignity; it must be sustained. He has pride; it can be satisfied and made the bedrock of character once he has been assured that he is playing a useful and respected role. To give a man this is the acme of inspired leadership. He has become loyal because loyalty has been given to him.

30th AG gets new commander

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Four company's worth of new Soldiers from the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), Infantry Training Brigade, got their first taste of an Army ceremony during a change of command ceremony held Tuesday on Kanel Field.

Fix

Lt. Col. Debra L. Fix took command from Lt. Col. Nancy A. Johnson, who will head to Washington D.C. to work as the J1 in the Office of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Originally a native of Texas, Fix graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1981 where she was commissioned a second lieutenant in the regular Army.

Fix comes to Fort Benning after serving as the assistant chief of staff, G1 at the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault).

She has served in a number of positions to include platoon leader, assistant S3 and battalion adjutant at the 501st Signal Battalion. She has also served as the officer-in-charge, Enlisted Assignments and Utilization Section; the Chief, Administrative Services Division at the 101st Adjutant General Company; commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Combined Arms command at Fort Leavenworth Kan., and commander of the 203rd Personnel Services Battalion, U.S. Army Alaska.

Soldiers to get flag upon retirement

Sgt. 1st Class Connie Dickey
Army News Service

Soldiers will soon get an American flag upon retirement.

Congress authorized the flags in the FY99 Defense Authorization Act and directed service secretaries to present a U.S. flag to service members upon retirement from the military, but it did not allocate funds for payment of the flags.

All Soldiers who have retired since Oct. 1, 1998, will be eligible to receive a flag, according to an Army spokesman, since that was the effective date of the Defense Authorization Act.

Last October, the Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps directed local commands to distribute the flags and pay for the flags from their operating budgets, but the Army took no action.

Several weeks ago complaints from many retirees began arriving at the Department of the Army through messages to the Sergeant Major of the Army and other Army officials.

Gary Smith, chief of Army Retirement Services, said he has talked with Lt. Gen. David Ohle, deputy chief of staff for personnel, and a draft policy is in the works now.

"We would like for the transition points to take the responsibility of distributing the flags at local commands," Smith said, but no final decision has been made yet on who will be directed to do that. He said he hopes to have the policy ready for approval by mid-August.

"We'll take into consideration the people who have not gotten flags so far," Army spokesman, Lt. Col. Guy Shields, said. In the meantime, retirees should make it known to retirement services they want a flag, he said.

post briefs

Sergeant major board to convene

Students' imaginations run wild in summer program

Bayonet staff writer

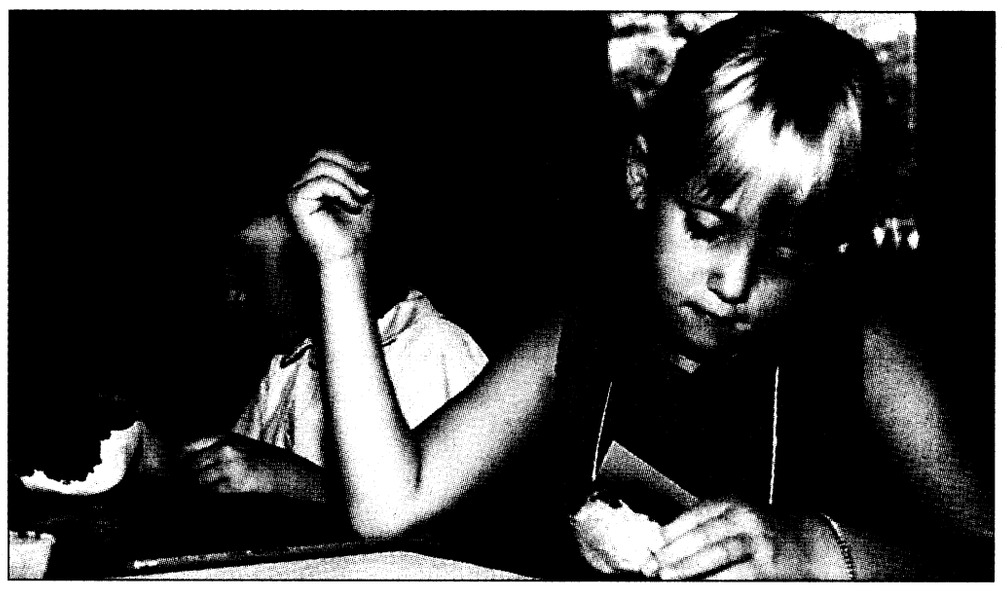
While most of Fort Benning's schools sit dark and dormant over the long stretch of summer vacation, there is one that shined brightly from the light of a bundle of creative bulbs.

These bulbs were the minds of 45 students who attended the Summer Arts Camp held at White Elementary School from July 13 through Thursday.

For eight days children ages 5 to 11 were allowed to run wild with their imaginations. From music, dancing and singing to drawing, painting and writing, the children explored every avenue of the fine arts.

Divided by age into three groups, the students rotated through three different areas of creative expression. These areas were visual arts, music and drama and creative writing. The theme for the camp centered around the new millennium, and students were encouraged to base their ideas and projects on what life would be like in the future, said Jill Beard camp coordinator and parent volunteer.

By the end of the camp, everything from future self-portraits and neighborhoods to new millennium menus, ads, shopping lists and instruments were ready for display.



Besides art, music, writing and drama, camp-goers were also given the opportunity each morning and afternoon to star gaze. Inside the walls of a large inflatable planetarium the children could look at the stars and different constellations. Something the children enjoyed immensely, Beard said.

"I really liked the star lab," said 6-year-old camper Elyse Shafer. "And I liked doing the future neighborhood, because I made a pool where you have to climb high up to jump in the pool."

Shafer said the camp is very good and wouldn't mind coming back again because "it's really fun." She also said its fun to use your imagination because you can think of tons of things when you do.

Beard explained that the camp, which was Warning: Heat demands extreme caution

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

With temperatures exceeding 90 degrees, and humidity levels greater than 90 percent, caution must be taken while enjoying the summertime sun.

According to the National Weather Service (NWS) Heat Index, on a 90-degree day with 90 percent humidity the temperature will feel like 122 degrees when you are in shady conditions with a light wind. If you are in direct sunlight, that temperature could actually be increased by up to 15 degrees.

Prolonged exposure to these conditions can be dangerous, according to the NWS website. Problems such as heat cramps, heat exhaustion and sunstroke can be encountered. If both the actual temperature and humidity level increase, conditions become even more dangerous and the risk of heat disorders will rise.

According to the American Red Cross, some people are more susceptible to heat problems than others. For example, young children, elderly people and people who are ill or overweight may have more difficulties in extreme heat. Also, men may be more likely to experience heat disorders because they sweat more than women do and therefore dehydrate more rapidly.

It is important to remember that what may be average summer temperatures to one person could be dangerous conditions to someone else.

Extreme temperatures are gauged by their severity relative to normal temperatures for an area. If you are just moving to a hot, humid environment like Fort Benning from a cooler, drier climate, your body may not be accustomed to the conditions.

The following are suggestions from the American Red Cross website on what to do during periods of extreme heat:

•Slow Down. Avoid strenuous activity.

•Avoid too much sunshine.

•Postpone outdoor games and activities.

•Avoid extreme temperature changes.

•Stay indoors as much as possible.

•Keep heat outside and cool air inside.

•Conserve electricity not needed to keep you cool.

•Vacuum air conditioner filters weekly during periods of high use.

•Wear loose-fitting, lightweight, light-colored clothing that will cover as much skin as possible.

•Protect face and head by wearing a wide-brimmed hat.

•Drink plenty of fluids even if you do not feel thirsty.

•Take frequent breaks if you must work outdoors.

•Use a buddy system when working in extreme heat.

•Drink plenty of water regularly and often.

•Avoid drinks with alcohol or caffeine in them.

•Eat small meals and eat more often.

•Avoid using salt tablets unless directed to do so by a physician.

•Never leave children or pets alone in closed vehicles.

To find out more about the warning signs of heat disorders and how to treat heat illnesses, visit the website of the American Red Cross at www.redcross.org. To determine the heat index for your area you can access the NWS website at www.nws.noaa.gov. By paying attention to your body and your environment you can stay safe and have fun this summer.

Army programs aimed at halting domestic violence

Harriet Rice
Army News Service

Domestic violence is an unpleasant subject and it's sad when it occurs anywhere — in the military or the civilian community.

The most extreme cases, which are few and far between, become fodder for the media as happened both in 1994 when Time magazine published a feature entitled "The Living Room War" and again last January when 60 Minutes aired a disturbing segment called "The War at Home."

There are media claims that domestic violence in the military is several times higher than in the civilian sector. Reporters attempt to establish a connection between military warfighting training and violence in the home.

The fact is, Army officials do not deny domestic violence exists. And they operate Family Advocacy Programs at every installation that focus on prevention, victim advocacy and commander involvement.

"The whole country is becoming more sensitive to the issue of family violence. Communities are doing more to protect women and children. We're aware of our families' needs and FAP is just one of many programs designed to help families with a variety of situations," said Brig. Gen. Craig B. Whelden, commander of the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, the agency responsible for the Army's Morale, Welfare and Recreation programs, including Family Advocacy.

Whelden continued, "We're taking proactive, aggressive measures to prevent, identify and intervene at the earliest known time of an incident, we are establishing a victim advocacy program, and we have a financial safety net called Transitional Compensation."

What most victims are afraid of is reprisals from the abuser and that the primary breadwinner will be either kicked out of the military or somehow lose pay as a result of being demoted or otherwise punished," explained Delores Johnson, the Army's FAP manager at the CFSC.

"Transitional compensation was set up specifically to encourage spouses to report without fear of reprisal and to make sure there is transition pay if, in fact, the Soldier is court-martialed, loses pay or has some other kind of disciplinary or judicial action taken against him that affects the family's income," she said.

Congress established Transitional Compensation in 1994 as part of the fiscal year Department of Defense Authorization Act (PL 103-160).

Strawberries provide good source of nutrients

1st Lt. Lori A. Farrer
William Beaumont Army Medical Center, Texas

Once again, it's time to dig out your bathing suit, fire up the grill and invite friends over for a lazy afternoon get-together. What could better accompany your outdoor feast than a bowl of seasonal fruit? Whether in the form of a dessert, a drink or even a salad, fresh berries are an excellent choice of fruit and probably even healthier than you realize.

Strawberries, for example, have many disease-fighting nutrients. They protect against heart disease, several forms of cancer and obesity.

Just eight medium strawberries contain 150 percent of the Recommended Daily Allowance (RDA) for vitamin C. Vitamin C acts as a powerful antioxidant in fighting cancer, healing wounds, resisting infections and absorbing iron.

Strawberries are also a good source of folic acid, which has been shown to reduce homocysteine levels. Lower homocysteine levels are associated with a reduced risk of heart disease. One serving of strawberries contains 20 percent of the RDA for folic acid, or 80 micrograms. Women of childbearing age in particular need at least 400 micrograms of folic acid each day to prevent neural-tube defects such as spina bifida in their babies.

Compared to other fruits, strawberries also contain a lot of fiber. One serving has almost 4 grams of fiber. High-fiber diets are useful for those trying to trim down for the summer.

In order to lose 1 pound per week, you must subtract 500 calories per day from your diet. The more fiber you consume, the more regular you become. Not all of what you eat gets absorbed, and it is estimated that you can subtract approximately 100 calories from that goal of 500 if you follow the National Cancer Institute recommendations of 20-35 grams of fiber each day.

The fiber in strawberries not only helps you lose weight, but can also save your life. High-fiber diets are also shown to prevent colon cancer. In fact, by improving your diet overall, you can reduce your risk of all forms of cancer by 35 percent, especially by consuming less fats and more fruits and vegetables rich in vitamin A, beta-carotene and vitamin C.

In addition to the fiber, strawberries also contain a substance called ellagic acid. This is a natural, organic compound that scientists are now discovering can ward off not just colon cancer, but also cervical cancer caused by the human papilloma virus. Red raspberries are also an excellent source of ellagic acid.

The evidence is there. Fresh berries are a delicious, low-fat, cancer-preventing snack. The next time you're in the mood for something sweet, but good for you, try this low-fat dessert. It's sure to please your palate:

Strawberry Shortcake Recipe

— 3 cups sliced strawberries
— 2 tablespoons sugar
— 1 cup all-purpose flour
— 1 tablespoon sugar
— 1 to one-half teaspoons baking powder
— One-fourth teaspoon cream of tartar
— One-eighth teaspoon salt
— 2 tablespoons shortening
— Light whipped topping

In a medium bowl, stir 1 and one-half cups of strawberries with 2 tablespoons of sugar. Mash strawberries slightly and set aside.

In a medium bowl, stir together flour, 1 tablespoon of sugar, baking powder, cream of tartar and salt. Cut in the shortening with a knife or pastry blender until crumbly. Make a well in the center and add milk.

Stir with a fork until dough just clings together. Quickly knead the dough gently on a floured surface by pressing and folding the dough for 10 to 12 strokes. Roll into half-inch thickness. Cut dough into 4 biscuits with a 2 and one-half-inch biscuit cutter or the top of a glass.

Place on an ungreased baking sheet and bake for 10 minutes at 450 degrees or until golden brown. Cool for 10 minutes. Fold remaining sliced strawberries into mashed berries.

Split biscuits in half and spoon strawberry mixture between and over tops. Top with whipped topping.

BBB offers tips for overseas spending

Better Business Bureau

If you're traveling overseas this year, keep the following tips in mind if you plan to do some shopping.

In most foreign countries, consumer protection laws are different from those in the United States. The laws of the country in which you make the purchase prevail, so be sure that you understand all the terms of the sale, including shipping arrangements, before you sign the sales slip.

It may surprise you to find that some merchants have "no refund" or "all sales final" policies. In some countries no exchanges or refunds are normally given unless the merchant promises them in advance.

If no policy is posted, you should assume no refund or exchanges are allowed. Get any refund or exchange policies in writing. Also, confirm who will pay shipping and custom fees in the case of returns. Such fees will be your responsibility unless you have a written agreement that the merchant will pay the fees.

Keep your receipts and any documentation of purchase in a safe place. Overseas sales slips may just list a total purchase amount without a breakdown of charges, so you may want to ask for an itemization of your purchases.

Before you travel, familiarize yourself with U.S. customs policies. Some items such as fur, leather, fruits and vegetables, or computer software, may be prohibited or restricted by the U.S. Customs Department. Prohibited items may be confiscated and you may be subject to a fine.

If you purchase an item with your credit card and are unable to bring the product into the U.S., your credit card company is not obligated to give you a refund and will probably not be able to secure one for you from the merchant.

Beware of prices that are "too good to be true" and merchandise that may be counterfeit. If value or originality is a key factor in your decision to purchase an item, make sure you get to a professional, independent appraisal in writing before you buy gemstones, artwork or any other expensive item.

Keep any certificates of authenticity or appraisals with you as you travel. Do not have them shipped with the merchandise.

Tips help drivers survive car fires

Richard H. Middleton Jr.
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

You're driving with your family in the car when all of a sudden you see smoke rising from under the hood. Your mind starts racing: Is it a fire? Should I pull over? Should I call the fire department?

To prevent such last-minute confusion, take a moment and learn how to prevent and respond to car fires.

It may come as a surprise, but car collisions do not account for most car fires. Instead, according to the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA), two-thirds of all car fires result from mechanical or electrical failure.

Many of these failures are attributable to poor car maintenance. According to Mike Connors, assistant fire chief for Naperville, Ill., "proper maintenance is the key" to keeping motor vehicle passengers safe. If you don't monitor your engine or keep up the wiring, anything can happen." While this advice certainly applies to cars, it especially holds true for older vehicles.

As a component of proper maintenance, experts recommend that drivers have their oil changed every 3,000 to 5,000 miles in conjunction with having their engines' inspected by a reliable mechanic. The mechanic should look for drips, holes and lose hoses.

Moreover, individuals must be careful with using gasoline. According to NFPA figures, from 1991 to 1995, 62 percent of car fire deaths and more than 50 percent of injuries occurred in which gasoline was the first material to ignite.

The proper use of oil can also help prevent car fires. Both professional and "weekend" mechanics should apply oil through funnels. Quickly remove any oil spilled onto the engine. The high engine temperatures can easily ignite any oil residue. In the case of an oil fire, do not use water to try to put it out — this will only spread the fire. Instead, if it is a small fire, use a fire extinguisher or wait for the fire department.

The following tips from the National Safety Council can help keep motorists safe when encountering a car fire.

•If smoke or flames are coming from your car, get out. Cars are replaceable. Lives are not.

•If you are familiar with how to use a fire extinguisher, only attempt to extinguish small fires. In all other cases, wait for the fire department.

•If the hood is up and there is a fire under it do not shut it. Closing the hood makes a bad situation worse.

•Stand up-wind from burning vehicles. Many materials emit toxic fumes when burning.

•Never stand in any fluid that has leaked. Many substances are highly flammable.

•Stand at a 45 degree angle to any bumper. Some bumpers are fluid-filled. When heated, the pressure could blow the bumper off and cause injury.

Most important since three out of five vehicle fire deaths occurred in fires caused by collisions or rollover, always wear your seatbelt when driving. To survive these car fires, you must survive the crash.

Arts: Students explore creative side

a first-ever of its kind, was developed after a suggestion for an integrated fine arts program was introduced by White School Principal Dr. Judy Archer.

She said she told Archer it would be a good idea to hold a two-week summer camp as a sort of test for the proposed program. From there a committee was put together and an outline for the summer camp was made.

Once word got out about the camp it only took about three days for all of the 45 slots to be filled, Beard said.

She stressed that the camp was a fee paying camp, but that the prices were very reasonable. She said they tried very hard to keep the prices down because it was in no way a money making venture, simply a service to Fort Benning families.

"We knew there was a huge demand for programs such as this and our concept was to run it as a pilot project this year," Beard said. "If we feel it is successful, and by all accounts it was, then the hope is to run it on a larger scale next year and possibly use it for a model for other schools so they can do their own summer camp."

Beard said the camp was very unique because of the huge emphasis on imagination and lack of formal structure.

"We were trying very hard to differentiate the camp from school," she said. "We didn't do any remedial or curricular work. It was just fun stuff. Our emphasis was entirely on having fun and not doing work of any sorts."

"We put a lot of emphasis on using imagination. So often in school teachers have to limit imagination because of time constraints, materials and attention, but in here their imaginations are going wild. I think encouragement of their imagination was our main goal."

One example of trying to steer away from the school atmosphere was the fact that instructors weren't called "teachers" instead they were known as tour guides. All of the "tour guides" were teachers from Fort Benning schools. And each of the three groups not only had one tour guide, but a full time volunteer and a number of part time volunteers as well. So, the staff to student ratio was excellent, Beard said.

Kristine Schroeder, tour guide and substitute teacher for White School, was really excited about the camp. She said it gave the kids a wonderful opportunity to be exposed to different ways of doing things.

"Choice was such a big part of learning during this camp, because the kids make all the choices," Schroeder said. "It was funny because it took the children the first day before they realized it was camp and not school. They were shocked to find that when they didn't want to do something it was perfectly OK."

Beard said all in all there was only one requirement of the children and that was that they have fun.

FAP: Army offers transitional payments

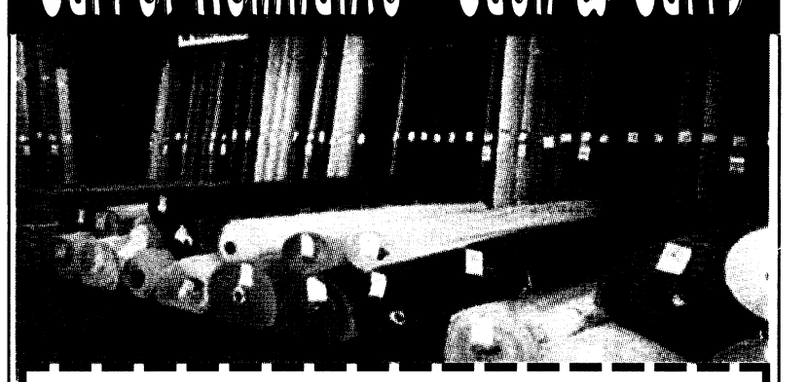
The legislation authorized temporary payments at the rate specified for Dependency and Indemnity Compensation. The current monthly DIC rate is $881 for spouses and $217 for each child.

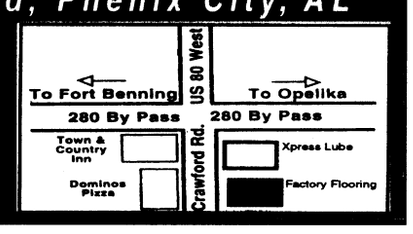
In response to Department of Defense Instruction 1342.24, the governing Army regulation (AR 608-1) was changed to reflect the new laws in 1997 and again in 1998. The TC program is centrally funded and managed at CFSC.



Benefits start the date a court martial is approved or administrative separation is initiated. Payments continue for a minimum of 12 months, but cannot exceed 36 months.

Victims are also entitled to commissary and post exchange privileges as well as medical and dental care related to abuse during the time they receive TC benefits.

From the beginning of the program through June 1999, there have been 300 applications from 55 Army locations. The program funding has helped 268 families including 530 children.



"Transitional compensation is a wonderful tool to help those victims who need help in transitioning from abusive situations and in being more comfortable with the military as a whole in reporting abuse," said Johnson. "We must continue to let victims — spouses — know this program exists and how it can help them."

Proper waste disposal saves money

Walter Nichols
Directorate of Public Works

The Fort Benning Curbside Yard Waste Collection Program successfully processes from 7,000 to 11,000 tons of leaves, grass clippings, small tree limbs and trimmings each fiscal year. These yard wastes are shredded, composted and used in landscaping projects on post. This represents a two-fold savings for the community — reduced costs for landscaping materials as well as for waste disposal.

In order for the curbside collection program to provide these benefits and to ensure proper service to the Army family, we need everyone to do their part. You can do this by following a few simple guidelines.

Allowable items for collection:

Yard waste collected may consist of grass clippings, leaves or tree limbs and yard waste less than three feet long. Please do not place soil, rocks, sod, garbage, household items or other trash in yard waste containers. Containers and bundles of yard waste that contain any such prohibited items will not be picked up.

Containers, sizes, weights permitted:

The preferred container is a durable plastic or metal waste container clearly marked "yard waste only." Special paper yard waste bags, available at DPW's U-Do-It Self Help Center, Building 385, may also be used (please do not use plastic bags).

Containers and bags should be used only for leaves and grass clippings. Limbs, trimmings and other yard waste should be tied in bundles, not placed in bags. These bundles must be less than three feet long. All bags, containers and bundles must weigh less than 50 pounds. Containers and bundles of yard waste that are too heavy or yard waste put out in other than permitted containers will not be picked up.

Family Housing occupants should put yard waste at curbside by 7:30 a.m. Monday morning.

Units and activities:

Fort Benning's Yard Waste Composting Operation has moved to Building 4000, in Harmony Church, on Old Cusseta Road. Units and activities that have yard waste (leaves, grass clippings and limbs) should deliver the material to the above location between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. weekdays.

The State of Georgia Solid Waste Regulations prohibit disposal of yard waste in municipal landfills. Please do not place yard waste in garbage containers or brown dumpsters; this would be a violation of state law.

If you have any questions, comments or suggestions, please contact Walter Nichols at 545-1007.

Change in pickup location

Garbage, recyclables and yard waste from housing units 963 A through H Dixie Road will no longer be picked up at the curb on Dixie Road. All such items must be placed on the concrete pads adjacent to the parking lots at either end of the building. Please ensure the pick-up areas are accessible to the truck on your scheduled pick-up days. For information more information, call Glenn Todd at 545-2177.

Lavoie experiences water interruptions

Continental Flooring has begun installation of backflow preventors in family housing in the Lavoie area off Indianhead Road. Contractor employees will wear identification tags and will contact each occupant to schedule a time to turn off water and do the work. Work hours will be from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Water will not be turned off before of after these hours. Work throughout the Lavoie area will be completed in 6 months. For more information or questions regarding the project, call Tony Riles at 545-4749.

Start early planning

The permanent change of duty station (PCS) peak moving season is here. To ensure a smooth, trouble-free PCS, stop by the Family Housing office located in Olsen Hall, Building 399 to obtain information and advice that will prevent delays and problems later.

Start your PCS planning early and set up your mandatory Pre-Termination Inspection 30 to 45 days before you are scheduled to leave the installation. Don't wait until the last minute, when we may not be able to guarantee a termination appointment for the specific date and time you may desire.

For more information call the DPW Housing Division Quarters Management Section (Assignments and Terminations) at 545-2990.

Change in number

Residents of Davis Hill, Bouton Heights, Perkins Place and McGraw Manor need to call 689-5400 for maintenance and kitchen appliance repairs.

All other Family Housing Areas need to call 545-2135 for maintenance repairs and 689-5400 for kitchen appliance repair.

For more information, call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

He's on a collision course... with a good career.

At seventeen Danny found his primary skill was hot-wiring cars. Fortunately for Danny someone like you took an interest and turned him on to job training. Danny chose the field he knew best — cars. He's now finished with probation and has almost completed a course in auto mechanics. Soon, Danny will be making good money and paying taxes, and trouble is a distant memory.

Divorce needs to be last resort

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

You many be facing one of the most difficult decisions of your life. Your marriage is on the brink and is in deep trouble, and you must choose between staying together and getting a divorce. There exists no magical formula for making this decision, and far too often a decision like this is made solely on an emotional level. The trouble with emotions is that they have the consistency of Silly Putty.

reflections

I have been asked on many occasions why I am so adamant in my opposition to divorce. I am one of six children and the only one of those six who is still married to his or her first and only spouse. I hate divorce. The U.S. Census Bureau provides us a sad historical backdrop to what has become a national disgrace:

- In 1900, one divorce for every 10 marriages.
- In 1920, one divorce in every seven marriages.
- In 1930, one divorce for every six marriages.
- In 1940, one divorce for every four marriages.
- In 1960, one divorce for every four marriages
- In 1972, one divorce for every three marriages
- In 1976, one divorce for every two marriages

And according to the latest statistics (1995) the rate of divorce has increased to nearly 52 percent of all first-time marriages ending in divorce. Is there any reason why I should not be concerned, even appalled?

Given all this, is there any hope for a couple whose marriage is heading down the slippery slope to a divorce? Yes, there are two choices you and your spouse have. Proceed with your plans for a divorce or decide that you will remain married and attempt to resolve your problems. Let me say this at this junction, there is not a problem so great that God isn't greater.

The implications of divorce are so vast that most couples don't even stop to understand their decision for divorcing. Don't proceed with a divorce until you and your spouse have sought the help of a chaplain, pastor or a trained marriage counselor. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can provide you with such help in your decision-making process.

For more information, please contact the Family Life Center at 545-2050.

God should not just be called upon in time of need, desperation

Chaplain (Maj.) Jonathan C. Gibbs
Combined Arms and Tactics Division

There's an interesting phenomenon I've seen when people are in trouble. They try to bargain with God. "Oh God, if you just do this I promise I'll ..." or " Lord, I promise I'll never do this again if you'll just ..." Ever done that? Who hasn't? The problem with approaching God in this manner is that we really don't have much to bargain with. If we're really honest about it, what do we have that God needs? What will we give him or do for him as our part of the bargain that he cannot do for himself?

Probably the most common "bargaining chip" people try to use with God is church. "Lord please just make her come back to me and I swear I'll stop drinking ... and I'll even go to church!" Sometimes they follow through, but most often the resolution is short -lived because people make going to church the sum of their association with God. When church becomes unrewarding or just inconvenient, they stop going. The problem is confusing going to church with coming to God. They're not necessarily the same.

Consider this fact: in the whole New Testament, Jesus never once said, "Go to church." What he did say repeatedly was "Follow Me." On one of these occasions recorded in Matthew's Gospel, Jesus said, "If anyone wishes to come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross, and follow me." The denial Jesus speaks about is not simply foregoing something I have a right to like when I deny myself dessert in order to make a weigh-in. It is the denial of repentance, turning away from self-will and the desire to run my own. Rather it is identifying myself completely with what the cross symbolizes: the sufferings and sacrifice of the savior himself. We take up the cross when we place our faith in the one who died there to make atonement for our sins and to give us true life, eternal life.

Are you trying to bargain with God? Are you using church as your trump card? By all means go to church. It won't hurt and it might help! More importantly, heed the call to genuine repentance and saving faith in Jesus. Whatever your trouble, the way out will really begin when you stop bargaining and start following.

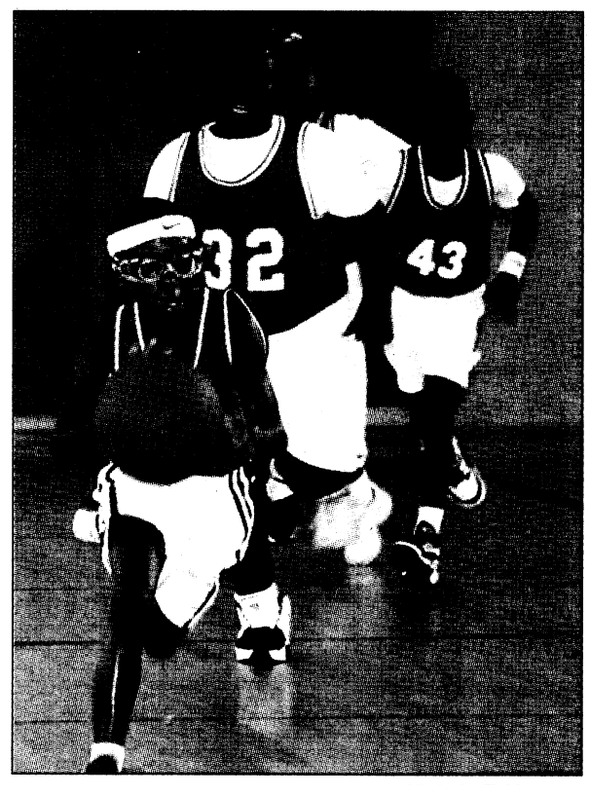
Youth Services basketball finished its second week of action-packed play as 13 teams took to the court on a quest for victory.

The Spurs edged out the 76ers 6-5 during the first game of the 6- to 7-year-old division. Joseph Saragosa, Crosby Adams and Willie Horne led the Spurs with two points each. Michael Velez and Jimmie Davis tossed in a basket apiece towards the 76ers final score of 5.

Ritchie McDonnell came up big for the Heat scoring 10 of the team's 12 points against the Lakers. The Heat played aggressive defense and held the Laker's offense to 2 points. Laker Gary Hunt scored 2 points as the team's top scorer.

In 8- to 9-year-old action, the Warriors defeated the Heat 24-10. Kahlee Tyler put 9 points on the board for the Warriors and teammate Marvell Glover added 7 points to seal the victory. Teammates Gunnar Hanson and Travis Lush led the Heat in scoring with 4 points apiece.



The second game of the division saw the Blue Devils out shoot the Sonics, 21-16 in a fast-paced game. Twain Scott, Blue Devils lead scorer for two consecutive weeks, led his team to victory with 8 points. Sonic players Marco Camacho, Mack Clemons and Nicolas Holley contributed 4 points each toward the team score of 16.

The Knicks fell to the Spurs 26-73 in the first 10- to 12-year-old division game. Omar Tyler, who scored 14 points and became the team's top scorer for the second time, highlighted the Spurs offensive drive. Teammate Erich Tyler and Marshall Thompson contributed 12 points each towards the Spurs final of 73 points. Emmanuel Wallace led the Knicks with 9 points and Dominique Cousins tossed in 5 additional points.

Robert Penn led the 76ers attack against the Miami Heat during the second game. Penn shot for nearly half of the team's points with 16, making him the 76ers lead score for the second week. T.J. McFarelane, the second highest scorer on the 76ers, added 9 points. The Heat's, Xavier Shaw led his team in scoring for two consecutive weeks with 12 points. Shaw's 12 points combined with Dervon Nash and Dominique Love's 5 points falling short of a victory over the 76ers.

In the 13- to 15-year-old division, the Bulldawgs rousted the Pacers 54-34. The dynamic duo, Donavan Mudayh (15 points) and C.C. Hunter (12 points), proved to be the Bulldog's most valuable offensive pair for the second week in a row. Ernest Tyler led the Pacers in scoring with 11 points and teammate Roberto Duff contributed 9 points towards the final score of 34.

Games are held in the Main Post Youth Services Gym and are played on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday through Aug. 19. All games begin at 5:30 p.m.

July is mid-summer fun for most people, but to a bow hunter, July is one month closer to the opening of deer hunting season in September. Bow hunters itching for opening day can brush up on their skills and practice their shot at the Fort Benning Archery Range.

The archery range, which opened last September, features a six-point zero range from 10 to 60 yards, a 17-point walking range that stretches nearly two miles and an archery clubhouse with a 16-yard indoor range.

"The Fort Benning archery facility is as nice as any in Georgia and one of the finest in the Army," said Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes, bow hunter and driving force behind the development and building of the archery range last year. "Archery enthusiasts and bow hunters, both Soldiers and civilians, come from all over to shoot on this range."

Hughes said although the Soldiers grapple their way to '99 Pan Am Games

Harriet E. Rice
Army Community, Family Support Center

Eleven Soldiers will be among an estimated 6,500 athletes participating in the 1999 Pan American Games in Winnipeg, Canada now through Aug. 8. Members of the Fort Carson, Colo.-based Army World Class Athlete Program will box, wrestle, run, play team handball and compete in the modern pentathlon and decathlon.

Middle distance runner Dan Browne qualified for the 5,000-meter event. In 1998, the West Point graduate won his second Army 10-Miler in addition to five national championships. The Oregon native was named Runners' World magazine's 1998 American Male Runner of the Year.

Also on the U.S. track and field team is Dan Steele who will compete in the decathlon. Dan and his twin brother Darrin used their speed and strength as crewmembers on the 1998 U.S. Olympic Bobsled four-man teams in Nagano, Japan.

Representing the Army on the U.S. Boxing roster is Corey Bernard who is ranked number two nationally and who took gold in the 139-lb weight class at the 1999 All-Army Boxing and Armed Forces Championships. Bernard, who hails from Pass Christian, Miss., learned to box when he was 13 years old.

Dominic Black, Dremiel Byers and Glenn Nieradka will go to the mat for the U.S. in freestyle and Greco-Roman wrestling. Byers caught the world's eye in May when he defeated Olympic silver medalist Matt Ghaffari and two-time national champion Rulon Gardner to win Greco-Roman gold in the 286-pound weight class at the USA Wrestling nationals in Las Vegas.

At nationals, Nieradka won his Greco-Roman weight class title at 138.75 pounds, while Black was the first Army wrestler in nine years to bring home a freestyle title in the 213.75-pound weight class.

In team sports, Michael Thornberry and Jeffrey Kunard are on the U.S. Team Handball roster. Thornberry played defense on the 1996 U.S. Olympic team handball squad. The 6-foot-7, 230-pound Virginia Beach, Va. native also competed in the 1994 Pan-American games in which the U.S. team won bronze. Two other Soldiers, Jonathon Hartley and Mathew Sabatino, are alternates; all four are West Point graduates.

Brett Weatherbie earned his slot on the Pan-American U.S. Modern Pentathlon team by placing 3rd overall in the 1999 point standings and 4th at the U.S. Modern Pentathlon Championship in May. Weatherbie, a San Antonio, Texas, native and former Southeast Conference champion swimmer, will fence, swim, run, shoot and ride in an event considered the ultimate test of an athlete.

Soldiers on the U.S team:

Corey Bernard — Boxing, 239 lbs.; Pass Christian, Miss.

Dominic Black — Wrestling, Freestyle, 213.75 lbs; Tigard, Ore.

Dan Browne — Track & Field, 5,000m; West Linn, Ore.

Dremiel Byer — Wrestling, Greco-Roman, 286 lbs; Richland Center, Wis.

Jonathon Hartley —Team Handball, alternate; Atlanta, Ga.

Jeffrey Kunard — Team Handball; Lafayette, Ind.

Glenn Nieradka — Wrestling, Greco-Roman, 138.75 lbs; Tigard, Ore.

Matthew Sabatino — Team Handball, alternate; Plantation, Fla.

Michael Thornberry — Team Handball; Virginia Beach, Va.

Dan Steele — Track & Field, Decathlon; Sherrard, Ill.

Brett Weatherbie — Modern Pentathlon; San Antonio, Texas

range is open to everyone, civilians must sign a waiver before shooting at the range. "Waivers are available at the clubhouse which is located near the range for anyone who has not yet signed one."

According to Hughes, the range was designed with safety in mind and users need to follow the rules posted at the zero range. The walking range has 17 targets strategically laid out and placed so there is no crossfire.

All bow hunters are required to wear orange vests while on the walking range and should not leave the trail to search for stray arrows.

"The success of this program is directly related to community support. We would not have a range of this quality without the local support of Bass and Buck, Shooters, Northside Pawn Shop, Master Taxidermy and Advanced Taxidermy," Hughes said.

"Local experts in the sport, like Long-bow Archer Donny Kinnard, have helped tremendously in the development of the archery program," he noted.

"The archery facility would not be the same without their support. I want to thank them for their help in making the Fort Benning range one of the best," he said.

The range, located on the corner of Aldrich and Hourglass Roads in Harmony Church, is open 7 days a week for bow hunters of all ages.

The clubhouse, which is home to the Fort Benning Archery Club, contains an indoor range, a meeting room, a small workroom, a water fountain and restrooms.

The clubhouse is located in Building 4966 on Ware Street adjacent to the range and the keys can be checked out from the Ranger Training Brigade Headquarters staff duty Building 5000.

For more information on waivers or directions to the range, call Hughes at 544-6907 or 989-1589.

Club to host archery matches

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

The Archery Club holds several Three Dimensional (3D)-Shooting competitions throughout the year. The 3D bow shooting competition involves the placement of 25 foam 3D targets on the course.

"Three man teams are sent out on the course, which generally takes one to two hours to shoot," said Sgt. Dewane Mosher, point of contact for the 3D Shoots.

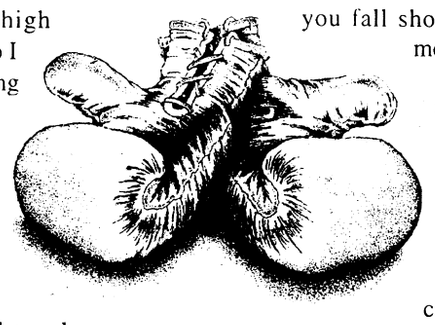
Mosher, who keeps the archery action going on Fort Benning said the number of participants determines the entry fee and prizes awarded at the end of the competition. "Any remaining money is cycled back to the archery club for target maintenance and facility improvements."

The next 3D-Shoot will be held Aug. 21 and 22 at the Fort Benning Archery Range. A shoot is also scheduled for September 4 and 5.

Registration and the safety brief starts at 9 a.m. followed by the assignment of competitors to different classes. The shoot begins at 10 a.m. and runs through 4 p.m.

Anyone interested in becoming an Archery Club member or registering for a 3D-Shoot, should contact Sgt. Dewane Mosher at 989-0156.

23-year old tanker rings All Army boxing deal



George McNamara
Army News Service

Pursuing our dreams is something we'd all like to do. Some Soldiers have a chance to pursue their dreams of Olympic glory through the Army's World Class Athlete Program. John Medina is one of them, and his stardom is on the rise.

A tanker by MOS, Medina's very much a "blue collar" Soldier, but unlike other tankers, instead of going to the motor pool, he heads for the gym to train.

"I started boxing when I was seven — seven to 14. Then I stopped when I got into high school. (I) got into sports, cross country, (but) wrestling and boxing have always been my first love," Medina said.

It wasn't until he enlisted in the Army five years ago that Medina stepped back into the ring. "I think joining the military was a good idea at the time because I was ready to graduate from high school. I wasn't doing anything, so I joined the military to get something out of my life."

The 23-year-old's decision has definitely paid off. Now the number-two-ranked flyweight in the nation, Medina has won four straight All-Army and Armed Forces boxing titles.

Last year, the 112-pounder showed his international potential by winning a bronze medal at the Goodwill Games.

"You go up there (and) you're boxing against the best in the world. You're actually representing the United States. You're trying to raise up your flag. Sometimes you fall short," said Medina pragmatically. "I mean, it was very good. I learned a lot, gained a lot of experience from that and the camp."

All-Army boxing coach Byron Moore has coached Medina for the past two years.

"I think we haven't reached his max potential. I think he's still growing. In 1998, he finally got a chance to get some international experience, and I think John Medina will step up to any challenge," he said.

One of those challenges is the same one every amateur boxer looks at: the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

"That's my goal — my main goal. But I'm taking one match at a time," Medina said quietly.

This athlete knows where he's going, but at the same time he's a realist.

"I know it's there. I know I can make it there if I just try a little harder than I did last year to knock the number one guy out. I'm right behind him. I'm on his heels, so at the end of this year, I'm going to step it up and just see where we go from there."

The 23-year-old Fontana, California native still has a lot of fight left in him — and that tenacious blue collar attitude will keep him coming back to work until the job is done.

Like he said, "I'm still building myself up. I'll worry about today, today and tomorrow, tomorrow."

Army, MWR searching for best board battlers

Harriet E. Rice
Army News Service

Chess is a way for Soldiers to exhibit their talents in strategic thinking, said the 1998 Army Chess Champion, Joseph Kruml. At the time, Kruml was a student of Russian at the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, Calif.

As the defending champion in this year's All-Army Chess competition, who will be able to step up to the challenge of Kruml's strategic thinking skills for this year's title?

That's the question as Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation gears up for the 1999 U.S. Army Chess Championships held annually to compile the Army's best board battlers for an international match of skill.

Greta Anderson, a recreation program specialist at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va. who has taken the reins as this year's tournament organizer, said the Army level tournament is scheduled for Sept. 4-10 at Fort Belvoir, Va.

"The tournament is a United States Chess Federation-rated tournament conducted by a UCSF-certified tournament director," Anderson said when asked the difficulty and style of the tournament.

"We are looking for the Army's top chess players to make this annual tournament an exciting one," she noted.

Although the tournament is slated to find the Army's nest chess masters, there are a few minimum requirements Soldiers must meet before applying for a competition slot, she said.

Soldiers interested in competing must hold a USCF rating of 1800 or higher and submit an application package to CFSC no later than Aug. 1.

The application package must contain DA Form 4878-R with a detailed listing of chess tournament experience for the past two years, the application USCF rating, and a commander's letter of release for the period Sept. 3-19.

The top six winners from the All-Army championship will travel to Germany for the NATO Military Tournament Sept. 11-16.

Last year's team traveled to Portsmouth, England in October where they played a grueling 10 hours of chess a day against 48 other players from eight European nations. After a strong start, the U.S. team was in second place, but finished sixth.

For additional information check with local MWR officials or e-mail andersog@hoffman-cfsc.army.mil. Upon completion of the application packages, Soldiers can forward them to USACFSC-SRL (Army Chess), 4700 King Street, Alexandria, VA 22302 or fax them to (703) 681-7249,DSN 761.

Marksmen log recent wins

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories recently. The following results are just some of their accomplishments.

• Indoor Sectional, Grand Rapids, Mich., June 29 — The USAMU Service Pistol Team won the 22-Caliber Indoor Shooting Sectional for the first time in 12 years. The USAMU team beat 197 other teams and 1,393 individuals to win the match.

• U.S. Practical Shooting Area Championships — Last year, USAMU action shooter 21 year-old Julie A. Goloski became the first woman ever to win a majority of the USPA Area Championships in the United States. Out of eight Area Championships, she entered five and won four.

This year, the Army policewoman broke her own record by winning a total of five 1999 Area Championships so far.

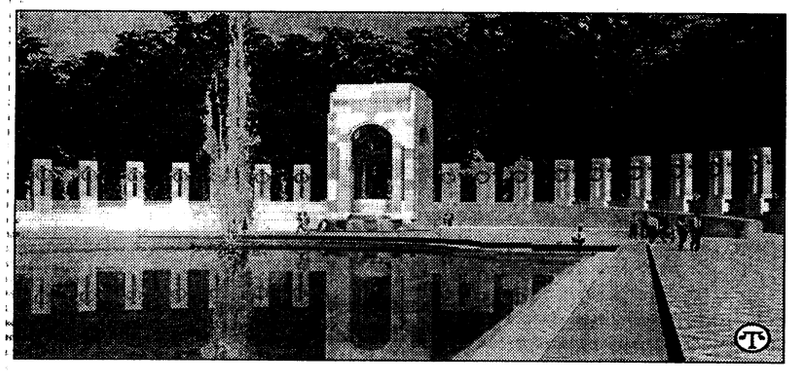
•World Shooting Championships, Tampere, Finland, July 9 — In the Junior Men's Trap Match, USAMU shotgun shooter Richard Hadden was in a three-way tie for second place, but after the shoot-off finished in fourth place. However, he was the highest finishing American in the Championships, and he lead the U.S. Team to a Gold-Medal winning first place finish in the Team Match.

RTBn, Pride sponsor appreciation day

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Ranger Training Brigade and the Georgia Pride have teamed up to host a Military Appreciation Night Sunday, during the Pride's softball game at 5 p.m. at the South Commons Softball Complex.

Soldiers, family members and retirees will be admitted free of charge with a valid military identification card.



Staff Sgt. Kevin Teran and Staff Sgt. Jim Moran, winners of the Fort Benning-hosted 1999 David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition will throw out the first ball.

The Ranger Training Brigade will also provide a color guard and a hand-to-hand combat demonstration prior to the game.

The Georgia Pride, who are slated to take on the Akron Racers Sunday, is a professional women's softball team which has just completed a sweep over the first place Tampa Bay Firestix.

ID cards will admit Soldiers, family members and retirees to grandstand seats which normally sell for $4 ($3 for military). A $2 upgrade will get spectators into the box seats and a $3 upgrade will provide admission to the club seats. Club seats are on the lower level behind home plate while the box seats are higher up behind home plate.

AMERICA'S HEROES

WWII Memorial Design Moves Forward

(NAPSA)—The National World War II Memorial that will honor the sacrifice and achievement of America's World War II generation successfully completed the second of a three-phase design approval process.

The National Capital Planning Commission (NCPC) recently approved Friedrich St.Florian's preliminary design. Earlier, the Commission of Fine Arts (CFA) gave its approval, calling the design "an eloquent...statement worthy of the subject and the site."

The design concept was approved in the summer of 1998. The American Battle Monuments Commission (ABMC) hopes to return to the CFA and NCPC for final design approval by the end of this year.

"We are obviously pleased with these results," St.Florian said. "The design is still a work in progress, but it has achieved a greater sense of clarity and unity, and a greater degree of integration into the National Mall. It was gratifying to have that confirmed by the commissions. We are eager now to move the design process forward to final approval."

The memorial will pay tribute to the 16 million Americans who served in uniform, the more than 400,000 who gave their lives and the millions more who supported the war effort from the homefront.

The design features a lowered plaza surrounding the Rainbow Pool; two 41-foot granite arches at the north and south ends of the plaza, within which bronze American eagles hold laurels memorializing the victory of the WWII generation; and 56 stone pillars that embrace the plaza.

Individually, the 17-foot pillars represent the states and territories that comprised the U.S. during World War II; collectively they are symbolic of the unity and strength of the nation.

A sacred area at the western side of the plaza will memorialize those Americans who gave their lives, commemorate the sacrifice of America's allies and all of humankind, and celebrate, with a light of freedom, the triumph of light over darkness.

Haydn Williams, chairman of ABMC's site and design committee, called the design "a stronger and more powerful composition that respects and complements its historic surroundings."

The memorial will be built on the national mall in Washington, D.C. ABMC hopes to break ground for the memorial by Veterans Day 2000. More than $57 million of the $100 million needed to complete the project has been raised.

Information on how to help build the World War II Memorial can be obtained by visiting its web site at www.wwiimemorial.com or by calling the toll-free customer service line at 1-800-639-4WW2.

Tax deductible donations in honor of living or deceased members of the World War II generation may also be sent to: World War II Memorial Fund, P.O. Box 96766, Washington, D.C. 20090-6766.

Emu Oil Eases Sunburn Pain

(NAPSA)-Ouch! Fun in the sun isn't always fun-especially if you forget to put on the sunscreen. Despite knowing the risks of sun exposure, many Americans avoid the necessary precautions to protect themselves from the sun's harmful rays. The result: an enjoyable day at the beach can turn into a painful memory. As we all know, the itching, redness and blistering associated with sunburns isn't soon forgotten.

Many people turn to emu oil for sunburn relief.

If sunburn causes you distress this summer, there is relief. The best way to alleviate painful sunburn is to soak in a cool tub of water or place cold water-soaked towels or gauze on the affected areas. To help hydrate the skin, follow up the cold-water treatments with a light coating of emu oil. Emu oil, produced by the ostrich-like emu, has been known to reduce pain and blistering of burns within three minutes of application.

Emu oil can be found in health and natural food stores, via the Internet and by direct mail. For more information about emu oil, visit the American Emu Association's Web site at www.aeu-emu.org or call 877-457-7972.

Man With MS Climbs Mountains, Inspires Grant-Giving Program For People With MS

(NAPSA)-Everyone knows that life can be like a roller coaster. For 43-year-old Eric Simons, though, life's roller coaster has been like the Rocky Mountains.

In just three years, the former oil entrepreneur has recovered enough from a severe onset of multiple sclerosis (MS) to climb the Rockies in Colorado and a volcano in Mexico. His grit and courage have even inspired the creation of a grant-giving program, the Betaseron® Multiple Sclerosis Champions of CourageSM, to find and encourage other determined people with MS to continue blazing new trails of goal setting and accomplishment.

How did Simons rise from the depths to the peaks? And why tackle mountains?

First, he had to get over the shock of his diagnosis. "I was baffled," he says. "How could a robust, healthy person like me be slammed out of the blue by such a devastating illness as MS?"

An unrelated illness that left him bedridden also put his MS in perspective. "At that point, I felt that if I could recover enough to take an occasional walk in the yard, I would be happy," he says. Until he was able to start on MS medication, however, Simons endured daily spasms that felt like electric shocks, robbed him of the use of his arms, and disrupted his thinking abilities.

Three weeks after Simon began treatment, he was skiing. "Not that I felt all that great skiing, but I was still downhill skiing with my kids."

Simons used his regained mobility to get involved in the fight against MS, organizing and coordinating local MS Walks. He began coaching youth soccer-"another passion." He also started training to get in mountaineering shape-biking, hiking, mountain biking and backpacking.

"I want to be an inspiration to other MS sufferers, especially the newly diagnosed," Simons says. "I want to show people what can be done despite MS. Everybody with MS has their own goal to achieve-their own mountain to climb-whether it's climbing Everest or simply having enough energy to get through the morning."

Simons' dramatic story sparked the creation of the Betaseron® Multiple Sclerosis Champions of Courage, funded by a grant from Berlex Laboratories, Inc., that awards a $7,000 grant to people in the MS community who have compelling stories to share. The Champions program is based on the philosophy that quality healthcare combined with a positive attitude and the support of others, can be empowering forces that enable people with MS to enhance their quality of life.

More information about the Champions program will be available in the near future at www.Betaseron.com. Applications for the award can also be obtained by calling 800-788-1467.

Despite being diagnosed with multiple sclerosis, Eric Simons has been able to reach new heights and achieve big goals.

TRAVEL NEWS & NOTES

Israel: Official Destination Of The Millennium

(NAPSA)-While other countries will usher in the new century with parties and events, perhaps no other place on earth is as prepared or qualified to celebrate the religious and cultural aspects of this unique celebration over an entire year as Israel.

As Arie Sommer, Israel's Tourism Commissioner in North America, puts it, "If it weren't for what happened in Israel 2,000 years ago, there would be no new millennium to celebrate."

A half-hour drive from Jerusalem lies the lowest point on the earth-the Dead Sea. However, on December 31, 1999, 100,000 people will elevate it as never before when they join hands in a circle around the shores of the Dead Sea to welcome the new millennium.

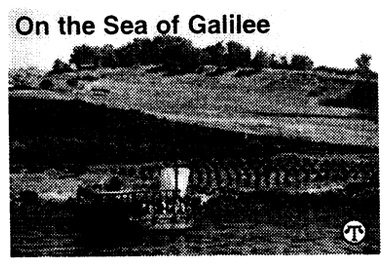
This event-called the Great Embrace-along with hot-air balloon rides, outdoor performances, adventure tours and concerts is but one of the ways that Israel is preparing to recognize this rare occasion.

Travel industry experts are predicting that Israel will become the destination of choice for travelers seeking a spiritual dimension to their millennium celebration. And Israel is offering a variety of special events throughout 2000.

As guardians of the holy places of the three great monotheistic religions-Judaism, Christianity and Islam-Israelis take their responsibilities very seriously. "It is a sacred duty with which we have been entrusted," says Sommer.

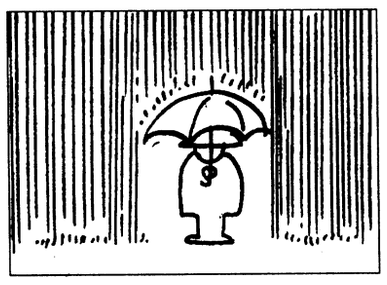
Part of this may be enhanced by the Vatican's pronouncement encouraging travel to sacred locations like Jerusalem and Nazareth, as part of the celebration of the 2000th anniversary of the birth of Jesus. In addition, it looks like Pope John Paul II will visit Israel in March of 2000.

Even though Israel is expecting a hefty increase in tourists, millennium events are spread out over the next 18 months to avoid bottlenecks.



El Al Israel Airlines is purchasing new jumbo jets. TWA and Tower Air also fly directly, and Continental Airlines will start daily service this summer.

Many new hotels are opening, including the Nazareth Marriott and Nazareth Renaissance, the Jerusalem Hilton, a revamped King David Hotel and Herod's Sheraton Resort in Eilat.



A number of historic locations have also been revitalized. For instance, Nazareth, Jesus' home, has undergone a $100 million face lift and the area around the Basilica of the Annunciation has been redesigned.

For more information call 1-888-77-Israel or visit the web site at www.goisrael.com.

On the Sea of Galilee

Israel will be the destination of choice for many seeking a meaningful way to welcome the new millennium.

The wettest place on earth is Tutenendo, Colombia, with an annual mean rainfall of 463.5 inches.

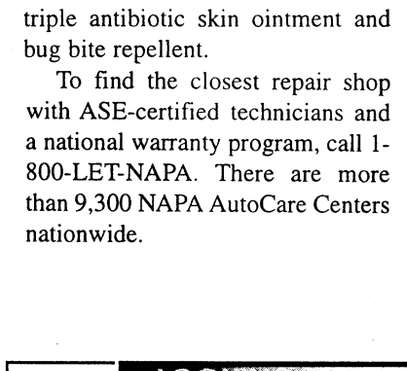
CAR CARE CORNER

Pre-Trip Inspection Is Crucial For Beating The Heat And Heavy Highway Miles

(NAPSA)-To reduce the risk of hot-weather breakdowns, the National Automotive Parts Association (NAPA) recommends a Pre-Trip Inspection Checklist. NAPA also recommends travelers call their automotive technician to schedule any needed maintenance or repair at least one week prior to departing for a road trip.

"When vacationing by car there's always a risk of a breakdown, which can quickly turn a great vacation into a really terrible one," said Steve Handschuh, president of NAPA. "You can minimize that risk by properly maintaining your vehicle and preparing it for summer conditions."



Pre-Trip Inspection Checklist:

• Fluids. Check fluid levels under the hood: oil, coolant, brake fluid, windshield wiper fluid, transmission fluid and battery fluid.

• Wiper Blades. Replace worn blades to help safely navigate during summer rains.

• Tires. Make sure all tires (including the spare) are properly inflated. Look for uneven tread wear and bulges. Most roadside emergencies are due to blowouts. If it has been more than a year since the last tire rotation, take the car to an ASE-certified technician and have the tires rotated and balanced. Also have the alignment checked.

• Belts & Hoses. Check the brake lights, turn signals and headlights to make sure they work properly and have enough illumination. Tap the horn a few times to make sure it will blow every time.

Safety Supplies & Equipment:

• Tool Box. There are many compact, all-purpose tool kits on the market, but the most important items can probably be found around the house: blade screwdriver and Phillips-head screwdriver, pliers, a knife and duct tape. Always carry a jack and know how to use it! Also carry jumper cables, flares, a flashlight and a crescent wrench.

• Water. A gallon jug of water could mean the difference between being stranded on the side of the road and making it to the next exit.

• First Aid Kit. In addition to bandages, carry sterile gauze pads, a small roll of medical tape, and burn ointment. Make sure the kit has a triple antibiotic skin ointment and bug bite repellent.

To find the closest repair shop with ASE-certified technicians and a national warranty program, call 1-800-LET-NAPA. There are more than 9,300 NAPA AutoCare Centers nationwide.

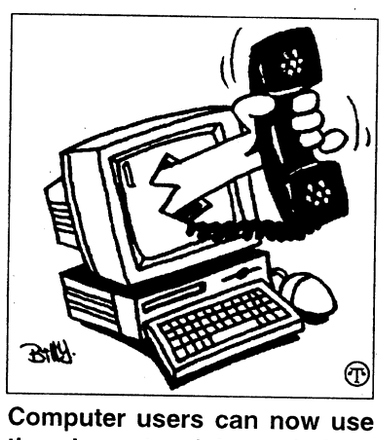
Getting Your E-Mail Over The Phone

(NAPSA)-More than 90 million Americans rely on e-mail to communicate with family, friends and colleagues. The electronic medium makes it simple to stay in touch with people on the other side of town or across the country.



However, e-mail users don't always have access to a computer to pick up their messages. When traveling, sharing computer time, or when logging onto an e-mail account just isn't convenient, users are effectively cut off from their correspondence.

Fortunately, there's a new free service-from General Magic called myTalk-that makes it possible to pick up, respond to and delete e-mail messages by phone. Users simply call a toll-free number, tell the service what to do, and hear a pleasant, conversational response.

The service also features a function that lets users work with e-mail from up to three service providers at once. Supported providers include AOL, Earthlink, Mindspring, Prodigy and more than 20 others.

"E-mail is an attractive way to communicate because it allows you to quickly create and deliver information, yet still retain the personal nature of a letter," said Steve Markman, chairman, chief executive officer and president of General Magic. "With myTalk, we are making e-mail even better by allowing consumers to easily access it wherever there's a phone."

Users get a toll-free number and e-mail account with their own ID. For those new to e-mail, this can serve as a primary account. The user ID provides access to the setup screen and personalization features to enable access by phone. Advertisers' support is what makes this service free.

Computer users can now use the phone to pick up their e-mail messages.

"We believe the convenience of our easy-to-use voice front-end will make Internet-based services like e-mail more useful to people in their daily lives," added Markman.

To subscribe to the free service, you can visit the website at www.mytalk.com. For more information about General Magic, see www.generalmagic.com.

When the mercury flirts with the 100 degree mark and the humidity settles over Fort Benning like a wet Army blanket, as it has this past week, conditions are ripe for heat casualties.

Fort Benning is well prepared for the summer heat. Volumes of information exist with the first goal to prevent heat injuries and the second to treat heat casualties quickly and efficiently before they become serious.

But with 59,000 Soldiers training here each year, with training running the gamut from live fire field exercises to forced marches to indoor and outdoor classroom instruction, there will be heat casualties.

Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general, noted the variables leaders have to contend with in preventing heat casualties.

First, training can't stop. Second, by its very nature most training is conducted outdoors and third, each Soldier is different. Some are in top physical condition and are acclimated to summers at Fort Benning. Others are in top condition, but not acclimated, and then there are those who are neither in top physical condition nor acclimated. Some may even come from climates where 70 degrees is considered a heat wave.

This puts the pressure on the commander to devise the right training, provide the proper amount of sleep, ensure the proper foods are eaten and that the Soldiers stay hydrated without becoming over hydrated. No small task. And no matter how vigilant leaders are, heat casualties will occur.

That's when the post's series of back up plans are activated, from treating Soldiers on the spot to evacuating them when more serious conditions seem to be present. Post officials make every effort to ensure the necessary safe guards are in effect to reduce the number of heat casualties.

First, all leaders and Soldiers receive hot weather classes that prepare them to deal with the heat.

Policy memorandums set forth guidelines on preventing heat injury. They include how much water to drink and warn against too much water (not more than 12 quarts in 24 hours).

Rest and work cycles are established depending on the heat category and the type of physical exertion.

Leaders need to monitor Soldier's eating habits, making sure they stay on a regular diet that provides the necessary calories, minerals and salt for the body to function under stressful conditions.

Standard dining facility meals or two to three Meals Ready to Eat or a combination of the two, meet those standards.

Leaders are taught to be watchful for heat injuries, recognize the type of injury and take proper action when a heat injury occurs. These range from resting a Soldier in the shade to administering liquid intravenously and immediate evacuation.

Buddy teams are used so Soldiers can monitor one another's conditions.

Heat can be deadly. This summer alone, 58 people died in the U.S. from heat injuries. It's everybody's business to see to it that Soldiers don't become heat casualties and if they do, that they are treated promptly and properly.

HAZMAT: Post responds to mock disaster

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

When Tommy Hill jumped in his firetruck early Monday morning his pulse began to race. A bead of sweat trickled down his forehead foreshadowing the mist of toxic chemicals he was about to encounter.

Hill was on his way to a potentially lethal call — a call he and firefighters around the world fear. The call was a chemical leak, and Hill was named as the incident commander.

When Hill and his 20 hazardous material-battling colleagues arrived at the Marne Road water treatment facility shortly after 9 a.m., they found a one-ton chlorine cylinder leaking simulated toxic gas into the air.

Luckily for Hill this was a simulation and the potentially lethal aspect of the call was now nil, but that didn't mean he shrugged off the call. He took advantage of the possibility to train in a scenario that would be as close to the real thing as possible.

"We hope to never have a leak like the one we were called here today to stop," he said after finding out the leak was a drill. "But training exercises like this provide us and all of our agencies a chance to work together and prepare in case anything like this would ever occur."

Training began for the department as soon as the first units arrived at the treatment facility establishing a command post and evaluating exactly what they were up against.

Once the culprit was named as chlorine gas, emergency personnel donned Level A chemical suits and began organizing a game plan to enter into the oxidizing chlorine haze.

Within minutes, two tool-kit toting fire fighters made their way from the Marne Road command post down the 300-meter long driveway that would take them to the site of the leaking tank.

It only took the pair a matter of minutes to plug the one-ton tank, but finishing the job was far from over for these firefighters.

Now the task of decontaminating the two's suits and gear now loomed as the hot July sun drove the temperature up to nearly 100 degrees and the 20 some pounds of gear they wore began to weigh down on the two.

Shortly after finishing the firefighters' decontamination, Hill debriefed all of those involved calling the training exercise a fantastic job by all parties involved, but did note there is never a perfect incident.

"There are always going to be some activities that we need to enhance upon, and there are some we need to just do away with," he said after the incident debriefing. "We do the drill for two specific reasons. To see how ready our equipment and resources are and how ready our coordinating agencies are. And today, I think we accomplished both of those tasks."

According to Hill, hazardous material training like the one hosted earlier this week is essential in the wake of a similar incident in the late 1980's where individuals died because of such a leak.

USARSA hosts first-ever SNCOC conference

David Mize
U.S. Army School of the Americas

In an effort to enhance the role of the noncommissioned officer in the militaries of Latin America (LATAM), the U.S. Army School of the Americas hosted the first U.S. and LATAM Senior Noncommissioned Officers Conference (SNCOC) July 18-23.

"The purpose of the conference was to establish a forum for LATAM NCOs to exchange ideas regarding the roles, missions and standards of a NCO Corps," said Command Sgt. Major Manuel Valdes, USARA's command sergeant major and principal official for the conference. "The conference also served as an opportunity to discuss the structure and development of the Professional Military Education System and its importance in enhancing the professionalism of the NCO Corps."

Valdes also said the conference, at a strategic level, promoted several U.S. Southern Command (USSOUTHCOM) program objectives, including an increased understanding of U.S. military organization and force structure; assisting regional militaries to meet future mutual challenges by emphasizing the role of the NCO Corps and promoting long-term relationships and military-to-military contacts.

Attending the week-long conference were 20 LATAM NCOs representing 12 countries and six command sergeants major representing the U.S. Army which included Valdes; Command Sgt. Maj. Jesse Laye, USSOUTHCOM; Command Sgt. Major Daniel Bonilla, Special Operations Command South; Command Sgt. Major Robert Keehu, U.S. Army South; Command Sgt. Major Phillip Kiniery Jr., U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy and Command Sgt. Major Cynthia Pritchett, Combined Arms Center.

"This experience was very valuable," said Sgt. Melania Badilla from Costa Rica. "I was the only female NCO Latin American attending the conference. I feel fortunate sharing ideas with the group."

Besides interchanging ideas during the numerous briefings, the attendees visited the Basic Combat Training Brigade, Noncommissioned Officer's Academy, U.S. Army Airborne School and the Night Fighter Facility.

They also observed a squad movement live-fire exercise at Garnsey Range, a humanitarian demining operation at Terry Demolition Range and a Rangers-In-Action exercise at Hurley Hill.

Valdes expressed his admiration for all the NCOs attending the conference and reaffirmed that it was a total success which will create long lasting relationships.

He also said the comments made by Gen. Charles Wilhelm, commander-in-chief, USSOUTHCOM, during a recent visit to USARSA, encouraged the importance of the effective role NCOs play in each of the LATAM countries.

"The officers are the head of an organization and need to manage activities ... while the NCOs are the heart of the organization and need to lead the accomplishment of the mission," said Wilhelm.

Fort Benning provides common ground

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

If you are a part of the Infantry family, coming to Fort Benning is a unique experience. There is a sense of familiarity to this post, whether you have come here a dozen times or this is your first. While the phrase may be somewhat overused, Fort Benning truly is the "Home of the Infantry."

commentary

Almost every Infantryman will come to Fort Benning more than once during his military career, often accompanied by his family. Whether going to basic training, the Captain's Career Course, Airborne or Ranger School, everyone eventually has memories of Fort Benning.

There is no doubt that mixed in this collection there are both positive and negative experiences. Soldiers may have haunting memories of Ranger School, and wives may have fond memories of the family time they had during the Career Course.

Fort Benning ends up providing common ground among Infantrymen and their families wherever they are assigned. It is never difficult to find someone who will give you an opinion on the quality of the Post Exchange or where the best place to find sweet tea is. At company picnics and family support group meetings there is often someone who has just recently been to Fort Benning who can tell you which housing is being renovated or how the instructors are in a particular course.

As a result of all the movement to and from Fort Benning, it is often true that when you come here you will be reunited with old friends and colleagues. Your next door neighbor could be your best friend from Fort Drum, or your Basic Non-Commissioned Officers Course classmate may have been your roommate in basic training. Since everyone comes and goes through Fort Benning, there is always a chance that it will bring you back to old friends.

This is definitely one of the best things about Fort Benning. Another positive thing is the fact that there is a good chance that any new friends you make here will be with you at another assignment somewhere down the road. Maybe the next time you sign into a new unit you will find your old friend from Fort Benning ready to show you around, or the first time you go to a battalion coffee you will recognize the woman sitting across from you. Fort Benning acts as a conduit for not only building friendships, but also maintaining them within an Army lifestyle that is full of complications.

Both Soldiers and family members become used to packing boxes, changing addresses, and saying goodbye every few years. Moving to a place they most likely have never been, and often will never see again after three years becomes a routine process. While this is certainly a way of life that we can adapt to, it is not always easy. Fort Benning offers a brief pause in that hectic world. Even if you are not overly fond of the post, it is still a known quantity.

It is not only Infantry Soldiers and families who can gain something from the social interaction at Fort Benning. It is often a good time for Soldiers from other branches and nations to get to know their Infantry counterparts and vice versa. Fort Benning is the showcase for the Infantry, a place where the Infantry illustrates the better parts of its character to the Army as a whole.

Time spent at Fort Benning is for the Infantry, a unifying experience. Nobody will have exactly the same stories to tell of their time here, but everyone can be part of the group for having been here.

Infantrymen and their families can know that when they come to Fort Benning there are some parallels with returning home.

Participation celebrates diversities

Jose E. Serrano
Directorate of Resource Management

During my 23 years of employment with the Federal Government, I have participated in numerous activities and social functions dedicated to the celebration of the various ethnic groups that comprise our wonderful military and civilian society.

commentary

After my first year in this wonderful community, I decided that it was time, once more, to get involved in this ethnic awareness process.

Therefore, I volunteered my time and I took part in the first Hispanic Month planning meeting scheduled by the Equal Opportunity office, June 17. However, taking into consideration the large number of Hispanic Americans at Fort Benning, I was disappointed with the lack of interest for "our" event.

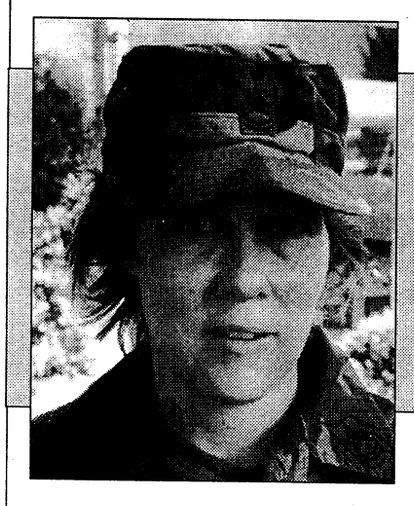
We, at times, have taken for granted our liberty, freedom of speech, our own traditions, and even the one annual occasion when the government provides us with the means to celebrate our diversities. We cannot and should not continue with the just-wait-and-see attitude. We owe it to our families, our neighbors, our community and ourselves because we too have contributed to the growth of this wonderful nation. It is our responsibility to get involved, not just for this occasion, but all year long as well.

Our children are our country's most valuable resource, regardless of ethnic background. But for many of them, this is the only chance they get to see each of our cultures outside our homes. It is, on occasions like this one, that they can observe and experience those elements that bind us together as people. Let us show them our various cultures, get them involved in the process, and share also our beautiful traditions with the rest of this wonderful community.

I encourage you to participate and express your opinion for this and future events. Our cultural awareness process can and should continue beyond our designated annual celebrations, and together we should find ways to make this a reality.

Remember that your contribution is valuable to the cause no matter how small. An hour, an idea, or one day contribution to this event would be valued and greatly appreciated.

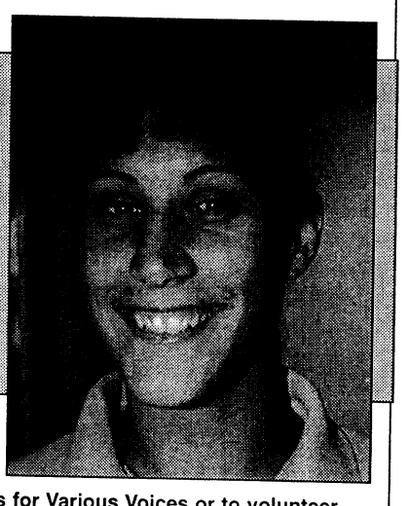
VARIOUS VOICES



How do you think Fort Benning should spend this year's ACOE money?

Paula Sando, family member — "I think they should spend it on overhaul for the schools. Things such as new playground equipment, computer equipment, bathroom renovations, etc."

Spc. Daniel Markel, Company D, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "Well, parking is getting pretty tight on Kelley Hill, they may want to think about making more parking for the Soldiers."



Sgt. 1st Class Laurie Emmer, U.S. Army Medical Activity. — "They should use it to improve the quality of the barracks."

Pfc. Melinda Kelley, Veterinary Services — "They need to use it for barracks improvements. Actually they just need to tear them down and completely rebuild."

Sgt. Douglas Shaffer, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "They could use the money to upgrade housing or start building some new homes."

Capt. Andrea Viera, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School — "They should use it to purchase physical fitness equipment for all of the units on post."

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Directorate of Public Works

Call: Caller expressed concern about the policy for quarters occupants with large dogs to install a six-foot fence.

Response: The caller was informed that the "big dog rule" has not become law yet. A staff study will be conducted, which will take a few more weeks, therefore residents still have time to prepare for the likely future implementation of this requirement.

This is a safety issue of grave concern and will benefit both the family and the pet. The caller was advised to contact Family Housing concerning the process and requirements for erecting a fence.

Directorate of Operations and Training

Call: Callers said they have been told they can only buy gas while wearing their PT uniforms in the mornings, prior to PT formations and not coffee at the Main Post Gas Station and Shopette.

Response: The callers were informed that U.S. Army Infantry Center Policy memo 97-25, 5 Nov. 97, Wear of Military Uniforms, states: Soldiers will not wear the PFU at the PX, Commissary, Burger King or other convenience centers on the installation." Purchase of fuel would constitute an immediate necessity; purchase of other items, such as coffee, snacks, etc., would be a convenience and is not allowed in the PFU.

Directorate of Public Safety

Call: Caller said information should be better disseminated about headlight covers not being allowed on vehicles on Fort Benning.

Response: It was explained that the prohibition against headlight covers is a Georgia State Law (40-8-22d) and not a post policy. Headlight covers are not legal unless they are installed as original equipment on a vehicle by the factory. It was also explained that it is each individual's responsibility to be aware of laws and statutes and that ignorance of the law is not an acceptable defense.

Connelly Cup

Dining hall goes for TRADOC's top honors

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Although visitors are commonplace to Fort Benning, when officials from the Army Training and Doctrine Command stopped by post last week to dine at the Warrior Inn Dining Facility, the staff knew the trip wasn't just by coincidence.

Sgt. Maj. Gerald C. Butts, Headquarters, TRADOC, Director of Food Service, was the first to experience the dining facility as he took notes for the facilities vie for the rights to this year's Connelly Cup, an annual award that names the Army's best Dinning Facility.

"What I'm looking for is basically the quality of the facility and the compliance with the new dining facility standards," Butts said as he inspected last week. "And so far, I have been very impressed."

Butts noted the attitudes of the Soldiers and civilians who get up early every morning to put warm, delicious food on the plates of Soldiers is a refreshing site and one that is in keeping with the aggressive program established.

"The attitudes of the young troops and the young NCOs make this facility what it is," he said. "They keep customer service number one and in this business that is what is important."

Customer service begins with the refreshing atmosphere of the dining facility that Chief Warrant Officer 2 Georgina Pipkins, 36th Engineer Group food service advisor, calls more home-spun than anything.

"The dining facility is set up in a manner that welcomes Soldiers to eat with us," she said. "We have everything from ice cream to hamburgers to home-cooked meals and all for a price that our competition cannot even come close to."

While Butts would not comment on Fort Benning's status in the Connelly Cup competition, he did say that there is an unmatched sense of pride here that will take the facility far.

The announcement of the winner of the quest for the cup will be announced Sunday.

The Connelly Cup is an annual award named after Phillip A. Connelly, a former president of the International Food Service, and honors excellence in food service.

Rangers welcome commander

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Rangers from around the United States gathered on York Field July 15 to bid farewell to former regimental commander Col. Stanley McChrystal and welcome Col. P.K. Keen as the Ranger regiment's top officer.

McChyrstal, a two-year veteran of the Ranger Regiment, will now assume his duties in New York.

Keen has served in a variety of leadership roles prior to assuming the command of the Amy's only Ranger regiment.

He has served as a company commander and a battalion operations officer for the 1st Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C. While serving at Fort Bragg, he also served as a battalion commander for the 1st Battalion, 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

After leaving Fort Bragg, Keen assumed command of the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, Hunter Army Airfield, Ga.

He most recently served as the Special Assistant to the Commanding General, U.S. Army Infantry Center.

Keen has earned his bachelor of science degree in mathematics and master of arts in Latin American Studies. He is also a graduate of the Army War College and the Infantry Officer's Basic and Advanced courses.

Keen's decorations include the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal, the Special Forces Tab, Ranger Tab, Pathfinder Badge, the SCUBA Diver Badge, Combat Infantryman's Badge, Expert Infantryman's Badge and Master Parachutist Badge.

Keen is joined in service by his wife Mary Ellen and his two sons, Ryan, 19, and Jonathan, 16.

Handbooks focus on harassment

Tonya Johnson
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — To help Soldiers and their leaders continue to create and maintain positive working and living environments, the Army has distributed two different versions of a handbook for the prevention of sexual harassment called Human Dignity — The Prevention of Sexual Harassment.

One handbook is for staff sergeants and below; the other is for sergeants first class through general officer.

The handbooks focus on ways Soldiers and their leaders can become more aware of the issue of sexual harassment and prevent it from happening. The booklets were created specifically for members of active Army and Army Reserve units.

The books are widely used throughout the Army, and have been proven to be a successful tool for commanders, according to Army officials.

The handbooks define sexual harassment as a form of sex discrimination and illustrate certain behaviors that constitute sexual harassment. This includes sexual advances, requests for sexual favors and unwanted verbal or physical actions of a sexual nature.

Additionally, gender discrimination is defined in the handbooks as a form of discrimination in which male or female soldiers receive different treatment based on their gender.

The creation and production of the handbooks was a mission of the Army's Human Relations Task Force, which was established to oversee the progress of the Human Relations Action Plan.

The plan was a product of the findings of the 1997 Secretary of the Army's Senior Review Panel Report on Sexual Harassment and the 1997 Department of the Army Inspector General's Special Investigation of Initial Entry Training Equal Opportunity and Sexual Harassment Policies and Procedures Report.

Authorized active Army and Army Reserve units can order copies of the booklets through their regular publications accounts.

Triad of Excellence

Patriot Battalion implements battle cry for Infantryman

Spc. L. McKinley
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

The Triad of Excellence has become the battle cry of every Infantryman assigned to 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment (The Patriots), Infantry Training Brigade, on Sand Hill.

The concept which started as a discussion between the commander, battalion executive officer and the command sergeant major during a five-mile run on how to make a better Infantryman, has developed into an all-encompassing plan focusing on building the best Infantrymen possible.

"As we were running," recalled Lt. Col. Jay Chambers. "We were talking about what was important to an Infantryman. In addition to the Army values, they decided on physical training, shooting and tactical training. As the run continued, they started talking about how we could turn those three aspects into a motivational tool or symbol. Much like the motivational signs and mottos hockey teams slap on their way onto the ice, the Triad was born as the 2-58 Infantry Battalion's battle cry."

The realization is that Infantrymen of the 21st Century must be able to carry heavy loads over long distances, move quickly over harsh terrain and still have the stamina to complete the mission at the end.

From the first day in the battalion, all new Soldiers understand that physical training will be one of the most important parts of their training. All companies have at least one master fitness trainer who assists the commander in developing and supervising the PT program.

Sgt. 1st Class Mario Cockrell, a platoon sergeant in Company D, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., was the leader in reintroducing the FITT principle and developing a challenging PT program that produced massive gains for that company.

Their final company APFT average last cycle was more than 267 points. The program followed in the Patriot Battalion goes well beyond push-ups, sit-ups and a two-mile run. Total fitness is the buzzword.
