BTB activates Jan. 14

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning will welcome a new Basic Training Brigade (BTB) during an activation ceremony at 2 p.m. Jan. 14 in front of Infantry Hall.

When the BTB is activated it will be the first time in more than 30 years that Sand Hill has housed a brigade other than the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB).

According to Capt. Preston Howard, BTB logistics officer, the new brigade will contain three battalions and a headquarters service company. Two of the battalions will consist of five companies and one will consist of four. Each of the companies will have the capacity to train around 240 Basic Combat Training (BCT) Soldiers per cycle.

After the BTB's activation, the neighboring ITB will bid farewell to the 1st Battalion 38th Infantry Regiment, which will officially transition over to the new brigade. The battalion already began its first cycle of BCT Nov. 24 and will become the BTB's first operational battalion.

The remaining two battalions are scheduled to stand-up in April and May and receive their first training cycles in May and June.

One battalion isn't all the brigade will receive from the ITB. Three other companies are also expected to make the trek from One Station Unit Training (OSUT) to BCT. Another six companies are expected to come from Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Preston said the resources from ITB should help build a strong foundation for the new brigade.

"We are doing everything we can to make sure that when we stand up as a brigade we can support the 1-38th as well as the ITB did. That is our main focus right now," Preston said.

According to the brigade's Executive Officer, Maj. Ernest Sherrill, when the brigade becomes fully operational, Sand Hill should see about a 40 percent increase in the number of Soldiers being trained.

Sherrill said to help handle the increase in Soldiers additional billets will be constructed at the 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, ITB, and two barracks complexes which have been dormant will be renovated to receive the remaining battalions.

Preston said the biggest challenge Sand Hill will encounter is training during the summer surge.

He said things may be tight because both brigades will need to use some of the same equipment and training sites. However, he said with good planning and scheduling they shouldn't encounter too many problems.

"It all boils down to scheduling," Preston said. "It will be kind of hectic during the summer months when both the BTB and ITB are full up and that will probably be our biggest challenge."

Most people have watched movies that show Soldiers in combat performing courageous acts during times of desperation and crisis. Some of these Soldiers make the ultimate sacrifice, others continue to fight through sweat and tears so they may complete their mission. One such Soldier was recently honored at Fort Benning for his courageous act during World War II.

Retired Col. Leland Fair was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross Dec. 23, 53 years after being recommended for the Medal of Honor.

Fair's road to leadership and courage may have all started July 4, 1945. Fair and other Soldiers were attacked along a road leading from Kibangay to Tuli in the Philippine Islands.

According to the original citation, the leading squad came under intense enemy machine-gun fire from pillboxes and a light machine gun mounted in a tree to their front. Mortar fire also fell on the platoon, killing four and wounding six. It was evident that the enemy force needed to be cleared, but due to the harshness of the terrain and the volume of enemy fire it was impossible to locate the enemy position and determine its strength. Fair, then a second lieutenant assigned to Company A, 34th Infantry Regiment, Mindanao, Philippines for only three days, volunteered to take a reinforced squad through the heavy jungle to outflank the suspected location of the enemy.

Reinforced with a bazooka team, grenades and all the extra ammunition that could be carried, the squad struck out through the jungle, guided only by a compass. The squad reached the first pillbox.

"I was the first scout. I saw the first pillbox about five yards ahead of me. They opened fire and we returned fire on them. Lieutenant Fair and an enemy traded grenades. Then he continued throwing more," said Pfc. Alex Guerrero, Company A, 34th Infantry

New system simplifies process

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

For years the corporate business world has expedited the process of filling departmental vacancies through the use of high speed automation, and beginning in March, the Department of Army Southeast Civilian Personnel Operations Center will follow suit.

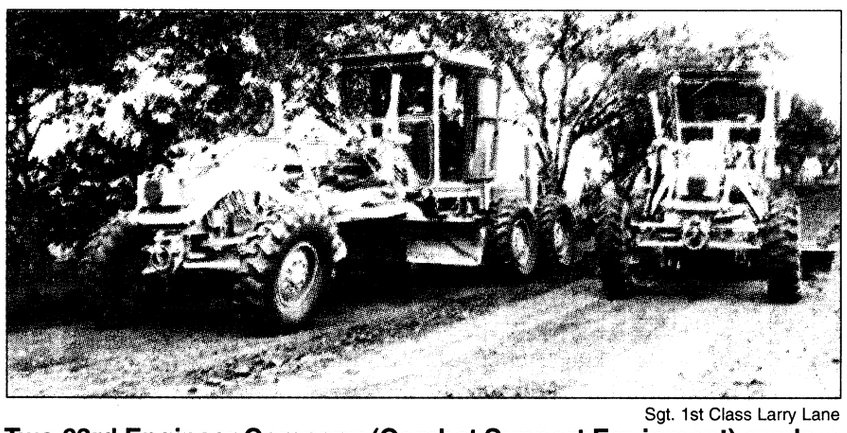
The program, called Resumix, eliminates all the antiquated forms used previously by DA and replaces them with an on-line resume search system that allows individuals to submit their application for government employment easier, quicker and more complete, according to Kathleen L. Kenna, Director of Civilian Personnel for Fort Benning.

"The program uses the latest computer technology to make the government employment process simpler and will speed up the replacement process needed to keep the civilian work force at the level it needs to be," she said.

"Supervisors in the workforce told us that when employees left or were transferred, the time it took to replace them was too long. They just couldn't operate efficiently with the decline in manpower," she said.

According to Kenna, Resumix also alleviates other problems found in the heavy paper process that is presently in use.

"This new process also makes it easier for individuals to apply for jobs as well," she said. "The new system maintains resumes in a database, and when a position becomes available, interested persons simply send, fax or e-mail a note to the civilian personnel office and ask for their resume to be considered."



At the heart of the new Resumix system is the resume itself, Kenna said.

"Resumix has a resume builder specifically adapted for DoD use on-line at www.cpol.army.mil," she noted. "The builder actually walks individuals through the process and puts the resume in a form that is easily definable by the system's protocol."

Kenna said commanders, directors and supervisors are invited to attend one of two briefings explaining the new system. Those briefing are currently slated for 9 to 10:20 a.m. Tuesday and 3 to 4:30 p.m. Thursday. Both will take place in Infantry Hall's Classroom 7.

Employees can learn more about the system in the upcoming informational meetings scheduled for 9:30 a.m and 2 p.m. Jan. 22 in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

Two 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) graders work a road in Jinotega, Nicaragua.

Engineers continue mission in Nicaragua

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Jinotega, Nicaragua, as one Soldier told me, is "up in the clouds" and I considered myself lucky to be flying there by UH-60 Black Hawk. Leaving the lower level of Managua behind, the altitude rose quickly as we passed over steep, cloud-covered mountains and what looked like double-canopy jungle.

From the air, I could see the problem areas created by Hurricane Mitch. Some roads were cut off by a new river of water. Mud slides had rearranged the mountain roads and little villages were isolated from larger cities.

While the Black Hawk flight took about an hour, it took nearly half a day for the engineers who convoyed their grader, bulldozers and other equipment from the port of Corinto up the mountains of Jinotega.

"Everyone's brakes were smoking; it was hard on the big stuff," said Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Whetstone, a motor sergeant with the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment). "We didn't expect this, so hopefully it doesn't mess up things too much," meaning, the Maintenance Platoon brought plenty of spare parts to take care of the brakes. They're self-reliant and used to operating in remote areas.

Jinotega is located in what's considered the central highlands, a land of rugged mountain cliffs and a lot of green. The 63rd Eng. Co. (CSE) is in Jinotega to improve 19 kilometers of road to reconnect coffee growers to the main highways.

The unit's Headquarters, Maintenance, 2nd and 3rd Platoons make up the large body of engineers at the forward operating base (FOB) Houston, an old Nicaraguan Infantry camp.

The benefit of being with the engineers is they have the tools, supplies and know-how to build what they need.

When engineers roll out to forward work sites, those who remain behind break out the tools to add lights to the latrines, install showerheads and anything to help keep the bugs from invading and the rain from falling on laptop computers.

As I walked the camp, there was a constant chilly drizzle saturating the ground and the Soldiers, and just when the sun threatened to come out, it would rain harder. The daily weather forecast was always "cloudy with a chance of rain," a Soldier told me.

"My clothes have been hanging over there for a day and a half – they just keep getting washed and never dry. The air is so damp," said Chief Warrant Officer 2 Darren Cook, maintenance technician with the 63rd Eng. Co.

"We do get a lot of rain it's causing the soil to give way. We've had a couple of vehicles get stuck," Cook said. The engineers have to travel the same roads they are repairing. "This ground doesn't have many rocks in it. You drive over it four or five times and you've got mush."

Though considered remote, the muddy, winding roads are always busy with farmers using the overcrowded public bus, trucks, mules or feet to transport big sacks of coffee beans to the markets.

The dirt roads are considered secondary roads, little more than what may be considered a muddy, range road by Fort Benning standards, said Col. Allen Rasper, JTF Build Hope Commander and Fort Benning's 36th Engineer Group (Construction) commander.

Rasper was in Jinotega for a site visit. Accompanied by several engineering officers and NCOs, Rasper stopped off to inspect road grading operations and to check out a borrow pit, a site to excavate rock used

New Year's parties become old hat

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Champagne, noisemakers and a kiss — what a way to bring in a new year!

commentary

New Year's used to be such a big deal for me. It always seemed like a way to wash out the bad that happened that year before starting all over again. But as time went on and I became older, the magic of bringing in the new year faded.

When I was 13 years old, my friends and I went out of our way to get sugared up so we would be able to stay up until midnight and watch the Times Square ball drop.

We invested in a few liters of pop and candy and then called our "boyfriends" over to watch it with us.

After everyone arrived, we ran down into my friend's basement and tried to figure out how we could sit next to the guy we liked without them figuring out who liked who.

The night was filled with petty talk, truth or dare games and one couple who insisted on making out on the sofa.

By the time midnight rolled around, the room was so full of laughter we barely noticed the ball and the beginning of a new year.

As I got older, I thought New Year's would be increasingly more exciting.

Having a driver's license enabled me to venture to parties across town.

Then other party opportunities opened up for me when I turned 18 and I could celebrate the new year in clubs. When I turned 21, I could celebrate New Year's with champagne.

But during these years of growth, New Year's became less and less important for me to celebrate.

Forgetting to watch the ball drop because I was having too much fun became a distant memory. I would find myself falling asleep on the couch or just coming home from my second-shift job as the ball made its decent and another year began.

This year I made it my mission to stay awake long enough to watch the legendary ball drop in front of the crowd gathered in Times Square.

I knew I would have to leave out the champagne or I would have been asleep by 10 p.m.

Hopefully, next year by this time, I will have found something fun and inventive to do to celebrate the year 2000.

But until then, I decided to celebrate without the parties and noise. Instead, I enjoyed celebrating the best way I knew how, with the family, dog and good, old-fashioned Times Square Ball.

Post continues excellence

We just concluded another great year and look forward to a great 1999. God blessed us and continues to bless us with a great team, making Fort Benning the best place to train, live and work.

Once again we excelled in the Army Communities of Excellence competition and from all reports should be pleased with the outcome of the Georgia Oglethorpe competition when those results are announced.

We are about to conclude a Warfighter conference hosted by the Chief of Staff of the Army and attended by the Chief of Staff of the Air Force. Fort Benning was selected because of our reputation for standards, quality and excellence.

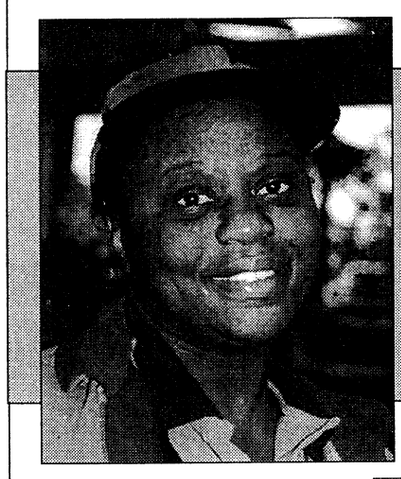
Next week we activate our new Basic Training Brigade. Again, our reputation for setting and enforcing high training standards and our ability to take care of Soldiers were reasons we were selected for this additional brigade.

Our outstanding war-fighting units were again placed in harm's way when Saddam began his saber rattling, the 3rd Brigade began deploying troops to Kuwait to backup the U.S. mission there. And when Hurricane Mitch ravaged Central America, the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) was sent there to assist with much needed humanitarian and disaster relief. They are still there and doing a great job.

This is what I call a great commentary on our great Soldiers and family members.

The Infantry Training Brigade sent more than 3,500 Soldiers home for the holidays and returned them all safely, along with the other units on post.

So while we had a good safety record over the holidays, we need to concentrate on making 1999 better than last year when four of our fine Soldiers were killed in car and motorcycle accidents while off duty, one Soldier drowned, another was killed by lightning and yet another died in a parachute fall.



Most of these deaths could have been avoided and as we begin the new year I ask everyone to do his or her role in protecting our force, our most valuable resource of all.

Thanks for all you do for Fort Benning, the Army and the United States of America. I am proud of each and everyone of you and pray that God will continue to bless you in 1999.

Hope shines through tragedy-stricken land

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

I recently returned from a short deployment to Nicaragua where Fort Benning Soldiers are improving roads and helping the people return to a more stable life after Hurricane Mitch dealt Central America a knockout punch.

The hurricane's force damaged nearly 1,500 kilometers of road throughout Nicaragua, disconnecting smaller farming communities to the bigger cities and in some cases, completely isolating the people from any form of medical care or a way to bring their coffee beans to market.

By reestablishing secondary farm roads, erecting temporary bridges and building a health clinic, the engineers are helping the Nicaraguans get their lives back on track.

commentary

Several hundred thousand civilians and Soldiers are now homeless. A mudslide wiped out one village, killing an estimated 2,000 citizens. The short- and long-term impact on the people, economy and agriculture is numbing for both the Nicaraguan community and for those sent there to help.

In the midst of this turmoil, a joy or a positive spirit seems to thrive. The Nicaraguans have embraced our American force with as much zeal as our force has embraced its mission.

I talked to a number of Soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen and the overall spirit for the mission might best be described by a bulldozer operator who said, "This is engineer work. I wish I was with my family, but we've got to get this thing done. I'm just happy to be helping these people."

This is a strange new world to operate within for an American force. We haven't been enemies, but our respective governments have not always been the best of friends.

Parked on the Managua, Nicaragua airfield beside our UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters are an equal number of impressive former Soviet Union era aircraft. Nicaraguan Soldiers with AK-47s pull security for the airfield and escort American convoys.

After talking to Soldiers of both countries, I discovered each had concerns with how they would initially be received by the other, whether it would be a relationship they would have to work hard on.

However, once language and political barriers were dropped, Soldiers were left standing and the two sides discovered they had more in common than they suspected.

Someone once said a tragedy has a way of pulling a community together and for us, this means we have made new friends in Central America. May that friendship grow.

I will try to address some immediate concerns Fort Benning family members and friends may have.

Where are our troops located? The 36th Engineer Group (Construction) makes up the majority of the headquarters element for Joint Task Force Build Hope, the Nicaragua mission part of the overall Central America force known as Joint Task Force Aguila. The 36th Eng. Grp. took over an old flight tower at the international airport in Managua, Nicaragua's capital.

The 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) is attached to the larger element of this mission, that is, the 46th Engineer Battalion from Fort Polk, La. The 63rd's Headquarters, Maintenance, 2nd and 3rd Platoons mostly make up the mission at Jinotega, a place north from Managua and close to the Honduras border. The community is agricultural and known for coffee beans. It's harvest time and the road improvement will help the farmers get their beans to market.

The 63rd's 1st Platoon is attached to a large body of the 46th Eng. Bn. at Esteli, another road improvement project. There are miscellaneous additional elements of Soldiers and Marines at both Jinotega and Esteli.

The 498th Air Ambulance have three helicopters each in El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua. Business is slow for them and everyone is happy about that.

Communication. For the time being, it is hard to get a morale call out of places like Esteli and Jinotega. In Managua, where the communication lines are more solid, it's easier to get some kind of link, DSN and the new reliable field tool, e-mail.

Mail. It's arriving pretty quickly. Here's a working address:

Soldiers Name
JTF Build Hope (NU)
HHC, 36th EN GRP (or other unit name)
US DAO Unit #2701
APO AA 34021

Safety and protection. There is a security force at each base camp made up of a squad each of top notch Nicaraguan Soldiers and 101st Airborne Division Infantry troops. They share all duties and in the future may conduct some joint training in weapons and tactics.

Malaria and scorpions. Everyone is taking their pills, using their netting and preventive medicine personnel are spraying tents with something mosquitoes don't like. Scorpion stings are as harmless as bees in this region. I saw a scorpion in the TOC at Jinotega. Someone crushed it, but this made me remember to shake my boots before putting them on in the morning.

Food and water. MREs and bottled water are keeping the Soldiers healthy and happy. Hot meals have begun in some areas and nothing lifts a Soldier's morale like a hot meal after three weeks of MREs. I helped unload a truck of turkey and pies for the Christmas dinner.

Requests. Soldiers asked for any newspapers, regardless how old and any videotapes. This mission is scheduled to end in February, but there's a lot of down time between now and then.

There are a few more things I could elaborate on, but I just wanted to hit on a couple of the quick questions that might be on the minds of those left behind.

The mission morale is high. It took a little time before base camps were built and the equipment was in place but the mission is in full swing. I think engineers are the most impatient group I've ever met and now that they are behind their machinery, they are happily focused on completing their mission with quickness and quality.

And while our Soldiers build strong roads, they are also building a strong relationship for America with our new friends in Nicaragua.

Year provides U.S. forces chance to shine

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last year was a busy year for Fort Benning Soldiers as units from around post completed numerous deployments from field exercises to real-world situations in Kuwait and Central America.

The year began as more than 1,100 Soldiers from Task Force 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) left for Kuwait to participate in Intrinsic Action.

Less than a month later, the task force was joined by additional Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, who were deployed in preparation for a conflict with Iraq. Although the tension slowly dissipated, the Soldiers remained in Kuwait for five months completing training exercises as part of Operation Desert Thunder.

Besides traveling around the world, the brigade also completed numerous field training exercises including Hammer Focus, Marne Focus and a rotation through the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif.

While 3rd Brigade had their fill of deployments, Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) also had a chance to put their skills to the test. In addition to providing support to 3rd Brigade during training exercises, Soldiers from the 608th Ordnance Company returned in August after supporting Operation Joint Forge in Hungary for nearly a year.

While the year was filled with training opportunities, 1998 was also a year for many firsts.

The U.S. Army School of the Americas opened the Army's first Spanish-speaking NCO academy. The post also hosted the Rapid Force Projection Initiative. Units from around the Army participated in the high-tech field experiment including Soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) from Fort Campbell, Ky.

For the sixth time, Fort Benning captured the Chief of Staff of the Army, Army Communities of Excellence award for installation excellence.

As the year came closer to an end, Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) and 36th Engineer Group deployed to Central America to support countries ravaged by Hurricane Mitch. Units supporting Task Force Build Hope are expected to return in February.

Regiment in 1945.

After having a near brush with an enemy grenade, Fair shot the enemy Soldier as he retreated back into the pillbox.

The squad then fell under simultaneous fire from four other pillboxes. Fair immediately directed the fire of the lead scout and the automatic rifleman on the central pillbox.

"He directed the movement of the squad continually as we moved forward he seemed to be every where at once," said Pfc. Karl Forrest, Co. A, 34th Inf. Regt. in 1945.

"He exposed himself repeatedly to enemy fire as he moved from one pillbox to the other," Forrest said.

Fair received wounds on his right hand from shrapnel of an enemy grenade.

Upon their return Fair learned that one forward pillbox may have been missed during the initial assault. Despite his wounds and fatigue, Fair volunteered to lead a fresh squad to the attack.

After Fair was satisfied the enemy threat was destroyed, he moved back to security and led his squad down the hill to a position overlooking a clearing.

In the clearing there were 10 casualties found from the first mortar fire attack. The squad leader had been wounded.

Fair searched for litters back at the company, but when none were found he returned to help evacuate these Soldiers with their ponchos as litters. Fair conducted a search for one man who was reported missing.

Only after learning that the missing man had reported back to the company did Fair consider his mission accomplished.

According to the Soldiers who accompanied Fair on these missions, his brave acts inspired them to put their hearts into the mission.

"I felt that if he could move forward so boldly I could too. I think that his leadership, tactical deployment and direction of the squad made us all want to get out and fight hard," Forrest said.

After the war, Fair was reassigned to a new unit and his comrades went home or were reassigned.

Col. Leo J. Meyer, a first lieutenant for Co. A, 34th Inf. Regt. during the attack, initially recommended Fair for the Medal of Honor. Fair said the recommendation for the Medal of Honor just fell through the cracks.

He resubmitted the recommendation in hopes Fair would be honored on the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II.

During his 35 year career, Fair, who retired from Arkadelphia, Ark where he was a professor of military science at Henderson State University, has been stationed at Fort Benning numerous times. Fair has been named in the Infantry Hall of Fame and the Officer Candidate School's Hall of Fame.

Fair received the award at Fort Benning because of his history with Fort Benning and because he was also going to be in the area for the holidays.

"This is the second highest award our nation bestows. In this particular case, we are recognizing a Soldier far too late for an event that occurred in World War II," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

"It is an honor and I am happy to be receiving this award," Fair said.

"I had heard they were trying to get me recognized but I never thought it would happen."

for drainage.

Rasper said Army engineers are perhaps the most capable group for operating in remote locations, because they can work independently.

"That's what we bring to the table that some other organizations can't necessarily bring," Rasper said. "We have the ability to live in an austere environment thanks to a comprehensive logistics structure."

All along the winding roads of Jinotega, local engineers work with shovels and older equipment to handle some of the smaller jobs.

"Their capability is much less than what we can offer, but we're not talking about super highways. We're talking about typical Central American, dirt-surface, one-and-a-half lane roads," Rasper said. "The fact that we have larger equipment doesn't mean it's better suited for the work we're performing."

At the burrow pit bulldozers prepared material for the road, as 1st Lt. William Brown, the 63rd Eng. Co. (CSE) executive officer lamented the rain.

"Our material is too wet," Brown simply said. "All the Soldiers are real anxious to start work and get the mission done. The rains are a problem now, because there's too much water in the fill and on the road. We can't work in mud. Once we get material that is dry enough, we're going to put it on the road."

This road improvement project is "routine" work for the engineers, Brown said.

"Deploying overseas is a lot more challenging than deploying within the states, because there's a lot of unknowns out there. We have to plan for everything," Brown said. The new terrain offers its own challenges. "We don't have this kind of rock at Fort Benning. There's a lot of steep terrain and some shear cliffs right off of the job sites. Difficult terrain is good training for the equipment operators."

Engineers had to be back at the FOB by 6 p.m., the curfew designed to keep Soldiers from overworking. The rough roads make traveling at night hazardous.

In their efforts to make their stay more comfortable, engineers had nearly completed the showers in a day's work of carpentry and plumbing. Everybody was eager to get the showers working instead of taking "bird baths." After several weeks of MREs, the Soldiers were also looking forward to a hot meal on Christmas, a couple of days away.

Sgt. Angela Phillips, a petroleum supply specialist said it was great to deploy with the engineers because they are always coming up with ways to improve life at the FOB. One of the most necessary initial projects, the latrine, was one that received thumbs up across the FOB.

"Those are the best latrines I've ever seen in the field," Phillips said about the complex latrine built with separate stalls and lights for nighttime use. "We always go with port-a-johns and they're never really that clean."

Phillips reminded me it's the simple things that keep Soldiers happy, like showers, mail, clean latrines and a dry tent. Phillips is known within the unit for her positive attitude and said it was her mission to keep her spirits high for others to tap into.

"I'm probably one of the strong ones. It's pretty hard to get me down," Phillips said. "I think God put me here for a reason – to lift spirits," Phillips said. "I don't want to be looking down, because I want people to come to me when they're feeling down."

Morale was high within the base camp, said 63rd Eng. Co. (CSE) 1st Sgt. Julio Sanchez, and the Soldiers had a good feeling for the mission.

"You have to get them to feel really good about what they're doing and build confidence in them," Sanchez said. "We have a lot of young, new Soldiers and it may be the first time away from home for them."

Medical problems have been minimal for the engineers, said Cpl. Robert Levesque, a medic from Company D, 261st Area Support Medical Battalion, Fort Bragg, N.C.

"We're always going to have the standing water, but we're going to do what we can to keep the bugs down," he said. Scorpions are little more than a regional novelty and are not of the deadly variety.

The medical aid station, with a couple of doctors and medics, has only seen some minor cases of muscle strain and joint pain, injuries associated with the physical engineer work. The rain has kept the dust down, so there are few cases of asthma and airborne diseases.

Sanchez said the Soldiers would probably gain a new respect for their own living conditions after seeing some of the homelessness and poverty in Nicaragua.

Communication and constantly updating Soldiers with fresh information helps keep the Soldiers comfortable, Sanchez said. A Spanish language speaker and a key leader, Sanchez is a vital link in the daily meetings with the Nicaraguan leadership in camp.

The FOB is jointly managed by a Nicaraguan and American commander. The Nicaraguan commander is an Infantry battalion commander, Maj. Reynaldo Silva who takes care of the camp and convoy security. His American counterpart is Capt. Robert Carr, the 63rd Eng. Co. (CSE) company commander. Sanchez often serves as an interpreter when the leaders meet.

While the Soldiers realized the importance for the Nicaraguan and U.S. relationship to progress smoothly, they didn't seem to have to work at this relationship.

"When I first heard about this, I was very excited," Silva said. "I didn't think of it as the Americans coming, but I saw it as a gesture of good hope and getting help for our country from an external source."

Silva said the two armies share the common traits of being well-organized and disciplined.

"This is the best mission that the military can do, because it shows the military is not only here for a combat role. It shows we care about people," Silva said.

At the end of this meeting, Silva proposed a day of cultural exchange in a nearby village, a fiesta of music and food. In the future, he said, he would supply local newspapers and would let Soldiers use his commercial telephone line, if they couldn't call home any other way.

Carr said he and Silva have established a good working relationship and the two have helped each other maintain an efficient base camp.

The mark of success for this mission, Carr said, would be for the mission to be completed professionally and safely, with all Soldiers returning home unharmed. The Soldiers had a long year of stateside deployments and exercises which helped make this deployment all the easier, he said.

"I think the Soldiers will see the importance of the things that I as a commander always concentrate on – building a team and taking care of each other," Carr said. "They'll understand why we train so hard and that the field exercises were more stressful. Here, it's a piece of cake."

news from the front

USAIC Public Affairs office

The following are excerpts from a letter to Fort Benning from Col. Allen Rasper, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) commander.

Medical humanitarian assistance missions at the community level are comprehensive.

We are assisting local providers with primary care, preventive medicine, limited surgical care and veterinary care.

The engineering effort is proceeding well. To date, we have completed 31 kilometers of road and two culverts; six additional culverts are nearing completion.

TVs and VCRs are present at each forward operating base (FOB); some will soon have satellite TV. Some base camps do not have MWR phone capability; on weekends, however, we afford troops the opportunity to visit base camps that possess the phones.

AAFES merchandise is available at two FOBs with access to all personnel. Additionally, we have a traveling AAFES vendor.

We have executed 55 convoys, totaling 24,222 miles. We are producing, bagging and distributing our own ice.

Cultural exchanges are also underway. Some FOBs had special Christmas activities, dinners and shows. Nicaraguan LNOs to the JTF headquarters hosted a Christmas Eve dinner for my primary staff and deputy commander.

Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines in Managua sponsored an orphanage on Christmas Day. Each of the 47 children received a new outfit, including shoes, a toy and a meal. Games were played later in the day.

Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines remain motivated and are proud of their accomplishments and the opportunity to help the people of Nicaragua.

Ranger's support makes mission possible

1st Lt. Lawrence Basha and Pfc. Derrick Draper
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

When the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment deployed recently to Fort Pickett, Va., much attention was paid to the line companies and their combat-focused training. But other less visible members of the Battalion — the Rangers in the Commo Shop, the S-4 section and the Ranger Dining Facility are indispensable for successful training like the recent Fort Pickett deployment.

Many people are unaware that all Soldiers assigned to the Ranger Regiment must successfully complete the Ranger Indoctrination Program (RIP). All NCOs and officers attend a similar course, the Ranger Orientation Program (ROP). Thus, all who serve in the Ranger Battalion are "Rangers." The battalion commander, the newest radio operator and the shift leader in the dining facility, must all meet the same standards. No matter what position one holds, the five-mile standard run and the 30-mile road march are the same for all.

During the Fort Pickett deployment, the Rangers behind the scenes played as important a role in the execution of the Ranger mission as the Infantrymen whose job is to "close with and destroy the enemy."

The 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger. Regt. Commo Shop is the voice of the commander. The communications specialists set up communications equipment, maintain a constant, secure link to higher headquarters and support the company Commo Sections. Spc. David Marr, the S-3 SAT COM Radioman, said, "We are the lifeline of which 3/75 flows. Without us the body doesn't know what the brain is thinking."

The 3rd Ranger Bn. communications experts operate many different types of communications equipment to direct the Rifle Companies and manage the battle at the Battalion's Tactical Operations Center (TOC). As part of the total Ranger team, the TOC is responsible for four radio systems, eight long-range OE-254 antennas and countless hand-held Sabre radios.

The radiomen must know the plan as well as the chain of command. They receive the same mission briefing as the S-3 and the battalion commander and learn who is supposed to make radio communications and when Marr, Spc. Timmothy Melia and Sgt. Richard Converse are the first three 3rd Bn. Ranger communications courses in more than three years to graduate from a U.S. Army Ranger School and earn the coveted Ranger Tab. They have set a standard for their peers. By the end of January, almost half of those in Battalion Commo will also have their Ranger Tabs. The Ranger regiment. is the only duty assignment where communications MOS Soldiers may attend Ranger School. Communications specialists in 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger. Regt. have "led the way" among Soldiers as well. In the past year, 3rd Bn. Commo has produced four Soldiers of the Month, two Soldiers of the Quarter and the Soldier of the Year.

Getting the battalion, equipment and ammunition to Fort Pickett — not to mention maintaining it — was a huge responsibility. The job fell to the battalion S-4 section. This group consists primarily of the battalion's mechanics, the ammo section, the Special Operations Equipment armorers and the Rangers who bring all supplies to the battalion, the Property Book Office section. Whether replacing the engine of the Rangers' specialized vehicles, fixing broken weapons, repairing target mechanisms on the ranges or moving supplies around to six different sites, the S-4 section accomplished the mission and often exceeded the standard.

Through every iteration of training on the platoon raid ranges, the SOE armorers were present and ready to provide essential support. They did less running up and down range than the Soldiers in rifle companies, but they had their hands full nonetheless.

"We fixed around 55 weapons that the platoons would not have been able to use to complete the mission if they didn't get fixed," said Tim Ivey, the battalion's civilian armorer. "If the battalion was not able to support itself, it wouldn't be able to go anywhere."

Lots of training means lots of ammunition. The battalion's ammunition handlers managed hundreds of thousands of rounds of more than 100 different types of ammunition, and hundreds of pounds of different explosives. They moved so much ammunition that it took five transport trucks to move it from Fort Benning to Fort Pickett.

"Most of these guys are not support MOSs; they are 11B," said 1st Lt. Paul Sari, the Battalion Support Platoon Leader, who managed most of the battalion's logistic support during the deployment. "But," he continued, "You would not know that from the quality of support they provide. That is why it is fun to work with them."

A crucial but frequently unacknowledged group the cooks of the 3rd Ranger. Bn.'s Ranger Dining Facility (RDF). In the field or in garrison, whatever the conditions, the cooks have been acknowledged as among the Army's best.

The 3rd Ranger. Bn. is authorized 22 cooks, but the RDF has only 15, due to the physical challenges the cooks must face. The physical demands on Rangers are so severe that they are authorized 40 percent more food per individual than the rest of the regular Army, which puts an additional burden on the cooks. During the Fort Pickett deployment, 3rd Bn. used 10 cooks to feed more than 500 hungry Rangers and attachments, a ratio that was well below Army requirements.

On deployments, the cooks work at the Battalion Casualty Collection Point. Here they perform Infantry duties and assist the Battalion medics during the processing and caring for casualties.

"I feel I have the best cooks in the Army," said Sgt. 1st Class John O'Donnell, RDF NCOIC. "They have higher PT scores than Army average and are motivated and disciplined." In garrison, his cooks work every other holiday and weekends. It may sound bleak, but as Rangers, they know mission comes first. O'Donnell said of his men, "It's a thankless job. My guys do as well as they do because they take pride in themselves."

The pride shows. In the last year, the RDF has had two Chefs of the Quarter and has won Best Dining Facility on Fort Benning in two of the last four quarters. Like the Battalion Commo Shop, the RDF is the only Food Service unit where a cook can attend Ranger School. Last July, Sgt. Tony Strange pinned on his Ranger Tab, becoming one of a few food service personnel in the entire Army with a Viçtor identifier.

The philosophy of the RDF is simple. "If somebody wants something, I'll give it to him," O'Donnell said. "A lot of these Rangers don't have a choice about where they eat, and I give them what they want."

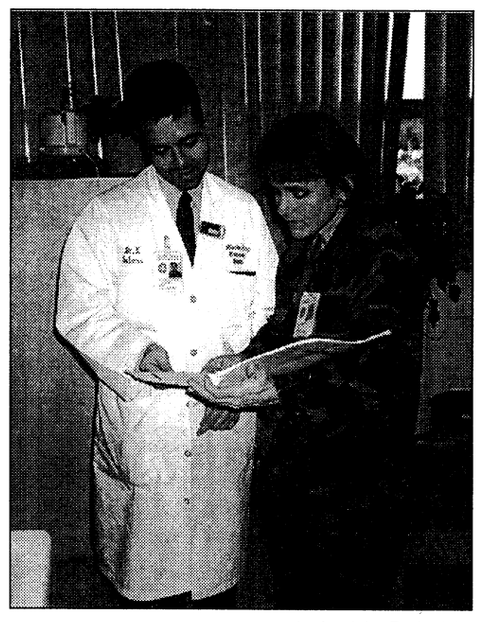
Showing how much the personnel in the RDF are part of the total Ranger team, he explained, simply, "It's all about the individual Ranger's needs."

MACH internist receives honor

Martin Army Community Hospital

Maj. Stephen Salerno, M.D., Chief of Internal Medicine at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), is the recipient of the Col. Robert H. Moser Award for 1998. This award recognizes the best General Internist serving in a military community hospital for two or more years.

From 1996 to 1997, Salerno served as a General Internist at MACH, where he is presently chief of Internal Medicine Service. He demonstrated superb skills in clinical medicine as well as administering a busy clinic of internists and subspecialists. He has redesigned and consolidated clinic functions and space, and his efforts contributed to the success of MACH during the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations inspection. Of special note, MACH's Family Practice residents recognized him as the Teacher of the Year for 1998.



Salerno's academic interests and abilities are evidenced by his contribution of 15 articles and abstracts to medical literature. He serves on the manuscript review boards of four journals. He has been an examination question formulation consultant for the American Board of Internal Medicine.

Throughout his post-graduate career, Salerno has taken upon himself to pursue ever-increasing roles in several national organizations, the most noteworthy of which is the American College of Physicians (ACP).

He received multiple national research awards from the ACP at the Army, tri-service and national levels. He is currently the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity Coordinator on the Army Governor's Council and is a member of the National ACP Medical Student and Associate Subcommittee.

In multiple positions, he functions as a spokesperson for the promotion of General Internal Medicine and is widely respected for the stellar level of his diverse skills.

Col. Lairie Stabler, Deputy Commander for Clinical Services, commented, "Not only is this recognition of an outstanding Army physician and internist, but it is a compliment to MACH as well."

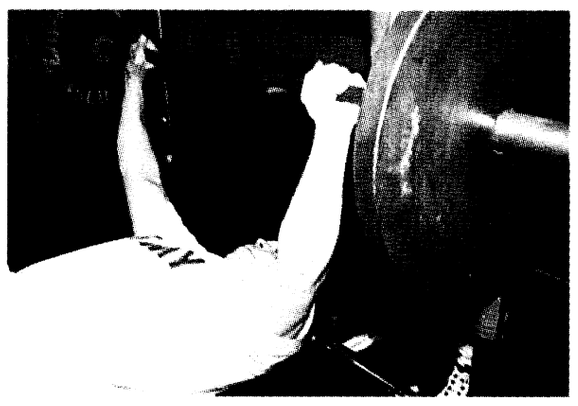
Organizations treat Soldiers over holidays

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The holidays are usually a time for families to come together and spend time with one another. However, there are always those who cannot be united with their families during the holiday season.

Fort Benning Soldiers who were unable to be with their families had a variety of activities they were able to participate in thanks to a program sponsored by the Association of the U.S. Army and the Directorate of Community Activities called Operation Holiday.



"Operation Holiday is designed to give single Soldiers and geographical bachelors meaningful activities that they may participate in during the holiday season," said Sally Ghent, administrative officer, Directorate of Community Activities.

Soldiers from all units on post were able to participate in anything from basketball tournaments and hockey games to bench press competitions.

Spc. Vidal Gray, U.S. Army Dental Activity, was one of the many Soldiers who was unable to go home for the holidays, and took advantage of one of the free bowling tournaments.

"This is a nice thing for Soldiers to do, it helps keep spirits up during the holidays," Gray said.

For some of the Soldiers, this holiday meant being away from home for the first time, and the activities were probably important in helping to keep their spirits up. A few Soldiers in training were able to take advantage of the free recreation and get away from the barracks for awhile.

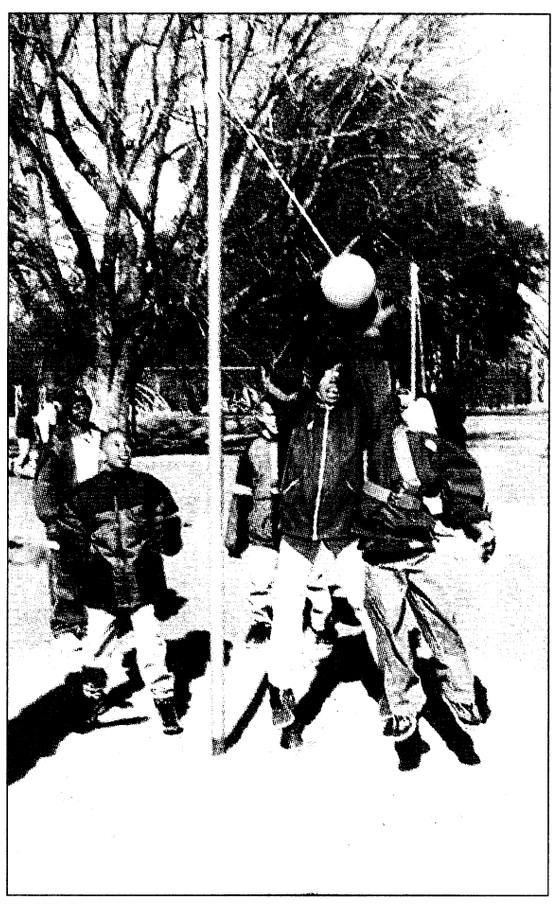
"This program is great. It is real good that the military takes time out to take care of its Soldiers who could not go home for the holidays," said Pfc. Nick Fowler, Company A, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

"I was not expecting to be received this well," said Pvt. Nathan Simons, Co. A, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., ITB. "Fort Benning has gone beyond what was necessary for them to do for the Soldiers who stayed behind."

Soldiers were also able to attend numerous Columbus Cottonmouths hockey games among other off-post activities.



"I hope Columbus wins tonight," Simons said. "I was at last night's game and they lost."

Simons, who is a native of Canada, said he did not have enough leave saved up to go home. However, Simons didn't have to sit around the barracks, instead he experienced his first trip to Atlanta where he was able to watch a college basketball tournament at the Georgia Dome.

Soldiers were also able to attend movies at the Hollywood Connection in Columbus. All of the activities were provided to the Soldiers free of charge and transportation was also provided to the Soldiers.

MPs find safety operation successful

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Military Police are always out and about taking drunk drivers off the road. But from Nov. 21 through Jan. 3, the "Loaded 45" operation perhaps saved additional lives as two extra MPs were posted on Fort Benning around the clock to get those under the influence of the streets.

"During the 45-day period, 91 drunk drivers were taken off the roads," said Col. Thomas J.Cain, Director of Public Safety. "Fifty-one of these were stopped by the patrols of "Loaded 45."

Although the MPs pulled over nearly double the amount of drunk drivers as last year, the MPs do not measure the success of the program by the amount of people caught.

"Our success is measured by no one being killed on Fort Benning's roadways," Cain said. "During this holiday stretch, the roads on post have remained fatality free and to the best of our knowledge, not a single Soldier from Fort Benning lost their life because of an intoxicated driver off post either."

"Everyone was back for duty and that was our goal," said Lt. Col. Ronald Jones, Chief of Law Enforcement.

Although the number of patrols are increased due to a higher probability of drinking and driving during the stretch between Thanksgiving and Christmas, the MPs monitor the roadways year round.

It is not over for those who want to drink and drive, Jones said.

"We believe the word is out that speeding and drinking and driving are two things you do not want to do because the risk of caught is higher on post," Cain said.

Soldiers and those who pass through post should remember that the MPs posted at checkpoints are also on the lookout for drunk drivers.

"There are several teams conducting checkpoints around the clock. It is not unlikely that someone who has been drinking will run into a checkpoint," Cain said. "Hopefully their visibility will have a favorable impact."

For those who did get caught, Jones said, they may take reassurance they are alive, but will now appear in front of a Federal Magistrate Judge and face the penalties.

Budgets help stabilize finances

The Georgia Society of CPAs

For many people, the "B" word brings to mind unpleasant thoughts of self-denial and endless recordkeeping. However, budgeting does not have to be a thankless chore. The Georgia Society of CPAs point out that a budget is basically a saving and spending plan that can help you reach your financial goals. With a computer and a personal finance software package, you can make the task easier and enhance your ability to analyze the results.

Whether you go to the automated route or stick with the pencil and paper approach, the act of creating a budget is basically the same.

You start by listing all sources of monthly income, including wages and salary, bonuses and commissions, interest, dividends and rental income. Next, you identify your major expense categories. Consider fixed monthly expenses like food, clothing, dental bills, gifts and car repairs. (If you're using a computer, you can scroll through the list of default categories.) Then, grab your pay stubs, checkbook register and credit card statements and begin to allocate your expenses to the different categories you created.

You are likely to find that some spending is hard to reconstruct. Many budget builders find that their records reflect only a portion of their spending and for some people, it's a relatively small portion.

If you can't account for a large chunk of your income, try for a few months to carry around a small notebook and record every dime you spend. While spending $5 a day on incidentals may seem trivial, the $1,825 you could have at the end of the year if you did not spend it certainly is not.

Look for expenses that can be cut back so you'll have more money for investing, vacations, your children's college fund and other purposes. A key strategy for meeting your financial goals is to get in the habit of paying yourself first. Rather than paying all the bills and allocating what is left over, if anything, to savings, you should determine the amount you wish to save each month and set it aside before you pay other bills.

It is important that you monitor your budget on a regular basis. Once a month, or more frequently if you prefer, record and categorize the current month's income and expenses. Then take a look at how you have done. Here is where the power of a computer can come into play. Personal finance programs can depict your budget graphically. Budget charts and graphs vary from program to program, but allow you to compare the budgeted amounts in each category to your family's actual expenses and income. And you also can choose how you want to view the data.

When you compare your income and expenses, if you find that your spending is outpacing your income, you may need to rework the numbers. Try to squeeze a little out of several categories rather than taking a bigger chunk out of one. And don't ignore cuts to your seemingly fixed expenses. For example, it is possible for you to reduce your mortgage payment by refinancing, and your homeowners or automobile insurance premiums by raising the deductible.

Personal finance software not only makes it easy to see whether you're staying within your overall budget but, more importantly, charts the success of your budget by category.

Just click on a month where you've blown the budget and the program quickly highlights the categories that contributed to your downfall.

Personal finance software also can serve as a planning tool. Suppose you want to celebrate your tenth anniversary on a cruise in the Mediterranean. Assign an estimated cost and a date, and most programs will show you how much you have to save each month to meet your goal.

CPAs say that it could take several months or more before you arrive at a budget you can live with. The key is to be flexible. If you find you are spending more than planned, you may have to strengthen that resolve. On the other hand, maybe your goal was unrealistic and needs to be adjusted.

New results show positive impact of quitting smoking

Dr. Virginia Yates

Martin Army Community Hospital

Every year, millions of people set New Year resolutions to live healthier lifestyles. One of the biggest challenges toward this goal is quitting smoking. However, every year, four million Americans are able to break the smoking habit. If the overwhelming risks for heart attacks, strokes, many types of cancer and lung disease are not enough to make a person quit, perhaps knowing the positive effects of stopping will help provide an incentive.

The American Cancer Society, in conjunction with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, has compiled the following description of the events in a smoker's body which begin within minutes of quitting.

•Within 20 minutes of quitting smoking, the blood pressure and heart rate lower closer to normal and the temperature of the hands and feet increases to normal.

•By eight hours after quitting, the level of oxygen in the blood increases closer to normal and the level of poisonous carbon monoxide in the blood lessens.

•By 48 hours of quitting, the nerve endings begin new growth and the senses of taste and smell improve.

•During the next one to nine months after quitting, coughing, sinus congestion and shortness of breath start to improve. The body has little sweepers call "cilia" in the lung passages that clean away germs and dust. These are damaged by smoking. These begin to regrow during this time, reducing the risk of infections.

•One year after quitting smoking, a former smoker has cut the risk of heart disease by nearly half what it was when smoking.

•Five years after quitting, when compared to a smoker, a former smoker has cut the risk of lung, mouth, throat and esophagus cancers to nearly half. In five to 15 years, the former smoker will have the same risk for stroke as someone who never smoked.

•Ten years after quitting, rates for lung cancer are similar for former smokers and those who have never smoked.

•Fifteen years after quitting, the former smoker has the same risk for heart disease as the person who has never smoked.

Martin Army Community Hospital offers night or daytime smoking cessation programs as well as the nicotine patches for those who participated in either program.

The Family Practice monthly evening class will be from Jan. 25-29. Interested participants can call 544-3065 to register. For those who prefer a daytime program, the next Internal Medicine clinic smoking cessation classes will be held Feb. 1-3 and 8-10. Call 544-1255 to register for the day program. Active duty Soldiers may also register for smoking cessation classes at the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Sledgehammer Clinic at 544-1833.

Q. Will Fort Benning have a Tax Office for the upcoming tax season? And, if it does, what services will it offer?

A. The Fort Benning 1999 Tax Office will open its doors Feb. 1 and will remain open until April 15. It will be located in Infantry Hall, Classroom 1, and its hours of operation will be 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Soldiers will be offered free tax help that will include tax preparation, distribution of state and federal tax returns and electronic filing.

In the meantime, here are some tax-money saving ideas to consider:

Postponing tax by postponing income is traditionally a main goal of year-end tax planning. This year it was especially relevant because many new deductions, credits and other tax breaks that are first available in 1998 are phased out as one's adjusted gross income (AGI) increases. For example:

•IRA Conversion

If you intended to convert a traditional IRA into a Roth IRA, and did so in 1998 it may of helped spread your tax liability over four years. Roth IRAs are attractive in that, unlike traditional IRAs, a qualifying distribution from a Roth IRA is tax-free.

A taxpayer may convert a traditional IRA into a Roth IRA (the "rollover"), but only if the taxpayer's AGI is less than $100,000. Caveat: any tax-free money removed from the traditional IRA loses its tax-free status en route to the Roth IRA and becomes taxable income. That "new income" does not count towards the $100,000 cap, but is still taxed. To alleviate the tax consequences of converting to a Roth IRA, the tax code makes a one-time exception. If all, or any part of, a traditional IRA was rolled over to a Roth IRA in 1998, this "new taxable income" that is subject to tax may be spread out over four years, with year one being 1998. (See the December Soldiers Magazine for an article on Roth IRAs.)

•Mutual Funds

Mutual funds may produce a significant capital gains distribution. Selling mutual fund shares before the record date for the capital distribution may help keep AGI down. Mutual fund shareholders can ask the mutual fund family for record date information or check out their web site.

•Got Kids? Get Credit

Taxpayers may now claim a tax credit of $400 for each qualifying child who is 17 or under as of Dec. 31, 1998. (A qualifying child is also a child, grandchild or stepchild, for whom you can claim a dependency exemption. The child must also be a U.S. citizen or resident.) The credit begins to phase out at $110,000 AGI for a joint return and $75,000 for a single return.

•Education Credits

There are also two new education credits-the Hope Credit and the Lifetime Learning Credit.

•The Hope Credit allows a tax credit of up to $1,500 per student per year for tuition and fees paid after Dec. 31, 1997, for the first two years of college. The credit is equal to the first $1,000 of tuition and fees a taxpayer pays and 50 percent for the next $1,000 for a total of $1,500. As a side note, spouses who qualify as students are eligible, too. For the Hope Credit, the student must be taking at least half of the normal course load for one term during the tax year.

•The Lifetime Learning Credit is available for educational expenses for your dependent, spouse or yourself paid after June 30, 1998. The credit is 20 percent of up to $5,000 for tuition and fees, for a maximum of $1,000. The maximum goes up in 2003 to $2,000. Unlike the Hope Credit, the Lifetime Learning Credit has no course load requirement. The Lifetime Learning Credit is available for college and post-college courses and is also available for courses at an eligible institution to acquire or improve job skills.

The phaseout for the Hope Credit and Lifetime Learning Credit begins at $80,000 for joint filers and $40,000 for single filers.

•Sale of Your Home

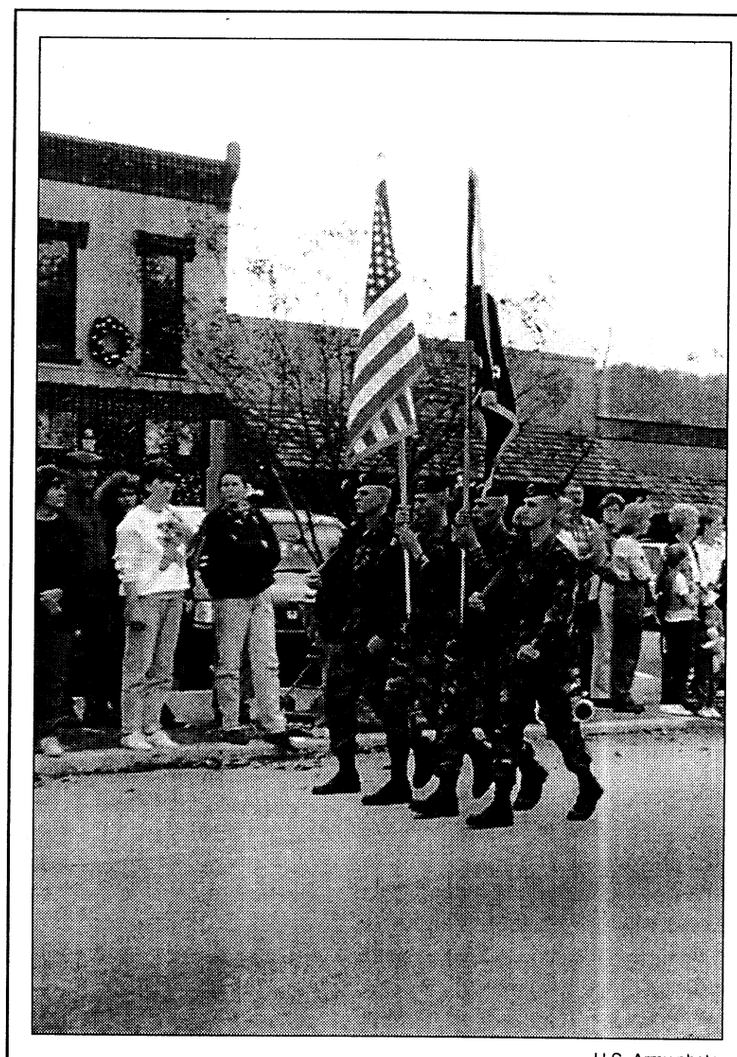
Married taxpayers may exclude up to $500,000 gain on the sale of a home from tax if:



•the house was owned jointly;

•the husband and wife lived in the house for two out of the last five years; and

•the husband and wife hadn't claimed an exclusion in the last two years.

Single taxpayers may exclude up to $250,000 of gain from a home sale. This current sale of home rule allows the seller to rent out the house for up to three years while trying to sell the house and still exclude some gain from tax. (Remember to factor in recapture rates for depreciation on rental homes.) Should the seller(s) be forced to move due to a job or health reasons before living in the home for the required two years out of five, there would be a proration of the amount of gain. For example, if the seller(s) only lived in the house for one year and then moved due to a new job, the seller(s) could still exclude half of $500,000 (married filing joint) or half of $250,000 (single filer).

If you have questions about the information provided in this article, or other tax related topics, call the Legal Assistance office at 545-3281 and make an appointment to speak with an attorney. You may also find helpful information from the Internal Revenue Service on the web at

Crib safety may prevent infant injuries, deaths

Mark S. Mandell
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

What could be more benign: a mother or father tucking an infant into a crib for an afternoon nap?

Unfortunately, this daily ritual experienced by millions of parents and children across America can turn tragic. Each year, about 50 babies suffocate or strangle due to defectively designed cribs and thousands more are injured, according to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC).

Ann Brown, CPSC chairwoman, said more infant deaths are associated with cribs than with any other nursery item. "Even a crib that was new for the first child should be re-examined before using it for a second child," Brown said.

Crib-safety warnings came too late for John and Rose Lineweaver, whose 23-month-old son, Danny, nearly strangled in 1984 when his clothes caught on a corner post as he tried to climb out of his crib in the middle of the night. Danny, who suffered severe brain damage, died in 1993.

After Danny's accident, the Lineweavers founded The Danny Foundation, a crib watchdog group dedicated to educating the public about hidden crib dangers and to comfort other parents whose children have died under similar circumstances.

In addition, the CPSC and lawyers who represent injured consumers have warned for years that defectively designed cribs and playpens can cause injury or death. Attorneys often are on the front lines in establishing that a pattern of dangerous defects exist.

With cribs, cornerpost extensions and decorative knobs can catch infant clothing or neck cords causing hanging or asphyxiation. Children often lack the physical strength or dexterity necessary to free themselves from entanglement.

Other potential design defects include slat width that permits a child's body to slip between crib rail slats and headboard cutouts or scrollwork that can trap an infant and result in hanging.

Jack Walsh, executive director of The Danny Foundation, and Consumer Reports magazine offer parents the following tips for purchasing a crib:

•Buy a new crib; stay away from used cribs, even if they have been in the family for a long time. The Danny Foundation recommends that consumers avoid cribs made before 1990.

•Consumer Reports recommends that parents stay away from cribs that have corner posts that can snag clothing; ornamentation that can break and pose a choking hazard; decorative cutouts that can trap; and slats more than two and three-eighths inches apart, which can strangle. These features are common with older cribs.

•Stay away from cribs that have been hand painted because the paint may have a lead base.

•Drop sides must not be releaseable by a child. They should hold securely in the raised position and must require two distinct actions or a force of 10 pounds with one action to release the latch or lock.

•Mattresses should fit snugly so that a baby cannot get caught between the mattress and side of the crib.

The CPSC maintains a toll free number (800) 638-2772 that provides information on whether certain makes or models meet standards or have been recalled. The Safe Nursery, Tips for Your Baby's Safety, and other brochures are free from the CPSC, Washington, D.C., 20207.

In addition, The Danny Foundation (800) 833-2669 provides crib-safety guidance and the brochure Is Your Crib Safe? And the Consumer Reports Books' Guide to Baby Products, Fourth Edition is available at bookstores.

Without a doubt, crib safety is a crucial but often overlooked aspect of a newborn's environment. These safety tips can help parents be on the lookout for hidden dangers to their children.

How to Minimize Frozen Water Pipes

Frozen pipes aren't just an inconvenience. An average of a quarter-million families in the U.S. have their homes ruined and lives disrupted each winter all because of water pipes that freeze and burst.

By taking a few simple precautions, you can save yourself the mess, money and aggravation frozen pipes cause. Here are a few simple steps to prevent frozen pipes.

•Disconnect and drain garden hoses; then insulate your outside faucet with newspaper or a paper bag. For assistance, call the Family Housing Maintenance at 545-2607.

•When outside temperatures are below 25 degrees let hot and cold water drip overnight from all faucets on outside walls.

•Open cabinet doors to allow heat to get to pipes that are not insulated under sinks and appliances on or near exterior walls.

•Call in a service order to identify pipes that are not insulated: exposed pipes in attics and outside are susceptible to freezing.

•Seal leaks that allow cold air inside, near where pipes are located. Look for air leaks around electrical wiring, dryer vents and pipes. Use caulk or insulation to keep the cold out and the heat in. With severe wind chill, a tiny opening can let in enough cold air to cause a pipe to freeze.

•If you're away set your thermostat to no lower than 55 degrees.

•Ask a friend or neighbor to check your quarters daily during periods when temperatures are below freezing.

If Your Pipes Freeze

Don't take chances. If you turn on your faucets and nothing comes out, leaves the faucets turned on and call the appropriate number listed immediately.

SPIRITUAL FITNESS

New year offers more challenges

Chaplain (Maj.) Jonathan Gibbs
U.S. Army Infantry School

Poised on the edge of a new millennium, the year before us offers both challenges and opportunities. We often approach the New Year with a desire to make changes in our lives. Perhaps there's a habit we want to finally quit. Maybe it's something we know we should do, but just haven't found the time or the inclination.

reflections

We make resolutions. We determine this year we're really going to turn over a new leaf. Or perhaps we decide what we need is something radical, something that will give us a whole new lease on life. Unfortunately, all too often our new leaf gets turned back over pretty soon, or the lease quickly runs out on that radical change we were going to make. Before we know it, we're back to our old habits and nothing seems to have changed at all.

For many people, the same holds true for their spiritual lives. They sense the need for a change where God is concerned. They have good intentions. They make promises. They determine that this year they'll really get more serious about their spiritual life, but this determination frequently is short lived. Often the reason is simply that their priorities are misplaced.

Three of the four Gospels record an occasion when a young man came to Jesus and asked him a question: "Teacher, what must I do to get eternal life?" After a brief discussion about the moral law, which Jesus told the young man he needed to observe, he challenged him by saying: "If you want to be perfect, go, sell your possessions and give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven. Then come, follow me." (Matthew 19:21)

The Gospel writers also record the fact that upon hearing this, the young man went away sad, because he had great wealth. He wanted a change. He sensed a deep, unmet spiritual need in his life. He wanted assurance that he was right with God. His problem was his priorities.

For this man things, not God, had the place of priority in his heart. In telling him to sell his possessions, Jesus was challenging him to reevaluate his priorities and place God first in them. For us, the problem may not be wealth. It might be our position or power. It might be another person or our own pride or selfishness. Whatever it is, anything that replaces God as the priority in our lives will keep us from making the kind of genuine spiritual changes that will endure. Most importantly, Jesus was offering this man not just a new lease on life, not just the chance to turn over a new leaf, but rather a whole new life.

This is the significance of the invitation to "Follow me." That invitation comes to each of us today as Jesus invites us to follow him, to believe in him, to trust in him for eternal life, for a truly new life.

Expressing feelings key to understanding

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

How do you communicate your love for your spouse to your spouse? A story about a couple celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary illustrates a good answer to this question.

Having spent most of the day with relatives and friends at a huge party given in honor of their Golden Anniversary, the couple found themselves back in their home of 40 plus years. It had been a wonderful day reliving memories. Before going to bed for the night, the couple decided to have themselves a little midnight snack. Earlier that day, the wife had made some fresh bread and the husband thought it would be good to eat. They went into the kitchen where the husband cut off the heel of the loaf of bread and handed it to his bride of 50 years. Her reaction was not what he expected. She exploded in a tirade, "For fifty years you have been dumping the heel of bread on me! I'll not take this lack of concern for me any longer!" She went on and on letting 50 years of bitterness spew out of her mouth. The old guy was flabbergasted with this outburst. When she was finally through he simply said to her, "But it's my favorite piece."

Love often displays itself silently, with no exception of recognition. However love needs also to be expressed verbally. Isn't it a shame that love goes unnoticed? Do you ever feel that the love you express to your spouse or family is misunderstood or even acknowledged? For a healthy relationship love needs to be expressed in word and deed.

Do you love your wife? Show her and tell her. Do you love your husband? Make it clear in word and actions.

USAMU

Soldiers take aim on another year

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) had a great year in 1998. Army marksmen may have proved their world dominance by winning four individual and team world championships, set two and tied one world record and earned five quota slots for the U.S. at the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia.

USAMU showcased the U.S. Army, the Department of Defense and the U.S in more than 200 matches around the world this year.

The International Rifle Team, which is home to seven Olympians, had an outstanding year. These shooters, who can hit targets smaller than a dime from 50 meters away, brought home four world-cup medals, three world records, four world-championship titles and two Olympic quota slots this year.

For winning three world cup medals and setting two world records in air rifle, Jason A. Parker was selected as the U.S. Olympic Committee Shooter of the Year. The 1992 Olympic alternate Thomas A. Tamas won the world championship and tied the world record in prone rifle, as well as winning the Gold Medal at the World Cup Finals and the National Championships.

Three-time Olympian Glenn A. Dubis brought home a world cup Bronze Medal and two national championships, in addition to being a member of three winning world championship teams. International Rifle Team Coach William E. Krilling was named by the U.S. Olympic Committee as the National Shooting Coach of the Year, as was one of the five finalists in the USOC National Coach of the Year Competition.

The International Pistol Team had six shooters on the U.S. National Shooting Team and four shooters on the U.S. World Championship Team. One of those shooters, Olympic hopeful Daryl L. Szarenski, not only won the Interservice Free Pistol Championship, but also won the National Air Pistol Championship. Szarenski won the Gold Medal in air pistol and and Olympic quota slot for the U.S. at the Buenos Aires, Argentina, World Cup. AAFES takes part in basketball net recall

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service in conjunction with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission and Little Tikes, Ohio Art, Today's Kid and Fisher Price announced this week a voluntary recall to replace the nets of 10.1 million toy basketball sets.

The nets can be unhooked from the rim and children can strangle on the loops or openings if they put their heads into the openings.

Since 1988, CPSC and the manufacturers have received 20 reports of 5-year-old children getting their heads and necks caught in the nets of toy basketball sets. In 1992, an 18-month old child died after becoming entangled in a partly unhooked net.

AAFES sold the nets from Little Tikes, style number 4612, CRC number 6559785, Sub-department number 495800295, UPC number 050743046124.

Customers should remove the nets that can unhook or have knots that slide. They can contact their local exchange store's customer service to order replacement nets. They can also contact Little Tikes at www.littletikes.com for replacement nets.

Although AAFES only sold the item from Little Tikes, they are providing all the manufacturer's toll-free numbers and Internet address for customers who may have bought basketball sets from other retailers. They include Ohio Art, Bryan, Ohio (800) 641-62226, www.world-of-toys.com, Today's Kid, www.todayskids.com, Fisher Price, (888) 229-4555, www.fisher-price.com.

At the Interservice Pistol Championship, the Service Pistol Team won the overall Interservice Team Championship as well as the .45-Caliber and Service Pistol Championships. Under head coach Ray Arredondo, the Interservice Championship Team line coach was Kimberly J. Kold, who set the eight women's national pistol records this year.

At the National Pistol Matches, the team won the National Service Pistol Team Championship and finished second out of nearly 100 teams in the country in the NRA National Pistol Championships.

Roger C. Jacobson was named to the Mayleigh Cup Team that broke the national record this year and Thomas A. Rose was awarded the Forces Command Trophy for being the top active Army competitor in the National Trophy Match.

Julie A. Goloski and Joy Christy of the USAMU Action Shooting Team won many championships this year. Goloski became the first woman to win a majority of the U.S. Practical Shooting Association Area Championships in the U.S. She was named as the best new female shooter at the Bianchi Cup and won Silver Medals in the Women's Division at the World Speed Shooting Championships and at the Limited and Open Nationals.

Shooting against more than 300 competitors in the North American Championships, Christy won the Limited Shoot Off and was a member of the Winning Gold Standard Team. She also won the Georgia State Championship and the European Standard Division Championship, as well as a majority of the Master's Division Area Championships.

The USAMU Custom Firearms Shop built and customized many of the shooters' rifles and pistols, as well as making much of the ammunition that helped the Army shooters dominate this year. USAMU pistol gunsmith Charles P. Gartland was commended for his work on the M-9 pistol, which helped the shooters win the 1998 National Service Pistol Championship, and was also chosen by USA Shooting as a gunsmith for the 1999 Pan American Games.

Although 1998 was a great year for USAMU shooters, they say they are looking forward to an even better year in 1999, and Olympic gold in Sydney, Australia, in the year 2000.

Medical unit provides aid

If things work out for the Soldiers of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), they'll return from Central America with very little flight hours on their UH-60 Black Hawks.

When business is slow for this medical evacuation (medevac) unit, that means Soldiers are not injured. Knowing that they are trained and ready to save lives, is satisfaction enough for these crews. Until that "911" call comes, they train on medical skills and maintain their aircraft.

The medevac unit is supporting Joint Task Force Aguila, the U.S. response to Hurricane Mitch's destruction to Central America. With several thousand military personnel participating in this engineering and humanitarian relief mission in remote regions, an emergency medical treatment system is critical.

One of the greater challenges of this mission was to create a medical evacuation system from scratch, said Capt. Reid Miegel, flight platoon leader.

"At Fort Benning, the system is already setup and it is a constant system," Miegel said. "We had to come in and create a system designed for this mission."

Miegel is a pilot with a team in Managua, Nicaragua (JTF Build Hope) and is responsible for the air crews and aircraft there and at San Jose, Guatemala and San Salvador, El Salvador. Each site maintains three medevac helicopters.

JTF BUILD HOPE

The evacuation crews are the vital links between the forward operating bases (FOBs) where engineers work and the 86th Combat Support Hospital, Fort Campbell, Ky., located in Comalapa, El Salvador. The FOBs have a high degree of medical treatment capability, but the medevac crews are there to back up the field medics and doctors when a case becomes critical.

"If they're up there doing construction work, the heavy equipment might cause an injury and I expect us to play a big role in evacuating personnel," Miegel said.

Before the unit deployed, medics met to access the potential missions they would face, said medic Staff Sgt. Anthony Campos.

"There's the heavy machinery, the heat factor and this mission is ongoing," Campos said. "Day 10, they may be feeling great, but come day 11, they may have a stomach virus which may weaken them even more."

Disease is not one of the greater problems facing the engineers, Campos said, unless it's a disease that has been ignored or left untreated until the problem has become severe or chronic.

While the medevac crews have some limitations in what medical treatment they can perform, Campos said, the medics are a "cut above" from what treatment medics on the ground can provide.

Post honors veteran for years of service

McIntosh

After four decades of government service, one member of the Fort Benning community has brought a life-long career to an end. Now, this retired lieutenant colonel looks forward to filling his days with relaxation and dreams of catching big bass.

Retired Lt. Col. Charles McIntosh was honored Monday at Infantry Hall during an Honor Bayonet ceremony.

McIntosh was awarded the Order of St. Maurice, a Department of the Army Superior Service Award and a plaque commemorating his lifetime of service to the nation. McIntosh is no stranger to awards. During his 24-year military career, he has been decorated with such honors as the Distinguished Service Cross, two Silver Stars, three Bronze Stars for valor, four Purple Hearts and two Vietnam Crosses of Gallantry.

"When we built the Iron Mike statue, it was built with a Soldier like this in mind. He is a true grunt," said Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore. "Mr. McIntosh is a living legacy to the Infantry."

McIntosh has completed numerous tours in foreign lands such as Korea where he was held prisoner of war for three years.

He retired from the Army in 1972, but continued to serve his country with the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Directorate of Combat Developments.

While working as a civil service employee, he was an essential member of the Light Infantry Task Force team that developed the doctrine and core training strategies for today's light Infantry battalions. He was then assigned the responsibilities for maintaining and updating combat tasks for Infantrymen.

These efforts have since been published in the Soldier's Manual, The Infantry Soldier's Manual and are key components of the Common Task Training Manual.

McIntosh also ensured Infantrymen received quality equipment when he accepted the challenge of managing worldwide Infantry communication requirements as the Combat Development's Operational Facility Manager. His efforts while employed there ensured that Infantrymen would never be deployed with inadequate communications packages.

As a Combat Development Specialist with the Electronics and Special Developments Division, McIntosh led the development of a Combat Identification System to reduce fratricide and the Shortstop Electronic Protection System which helps protect Soldiers in foxholes from artillery threat.

"He always focused on the Infantry Soldier," said Maj. David L. McGlown, chief of the Electronics and Special Developments with the Directorate of Combat Developments.

A distinguished employee, McIntosh was looked to for answers and advice, McGlown said.

"We worked together for 18 months, and although I was his supervisor, McIntosh was a mentor to me," McGlown said. "His experience and manner make him a very respected and admired person."

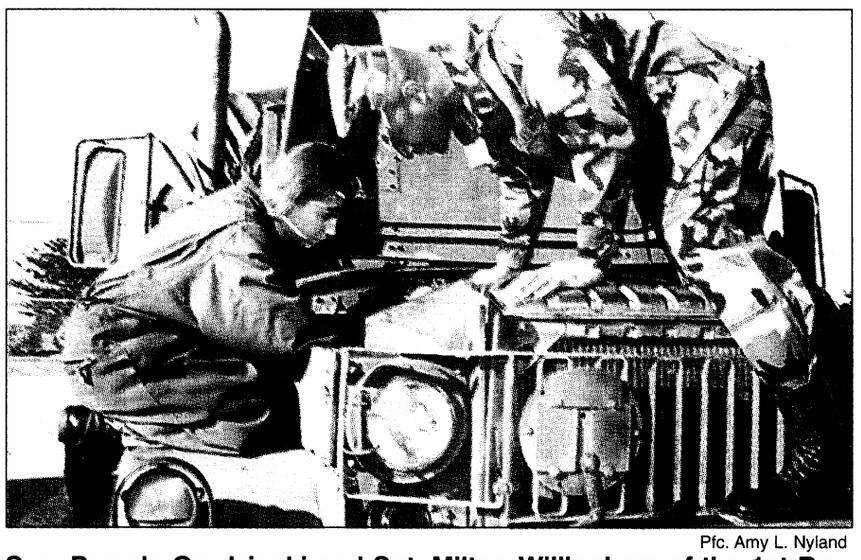
"These experiences have been challenging, but also very rewarding. I have strived to do a service to the Infantrymen and to make their job easier," McIntosh said. "I have received an education one cannot buy during my time of service."

One lesson McIntosh learned during his service he has strived to live by.

Years ago, McIntosh was once told that good leaders do not wait around for something to happen — they make them happen.

Unit wins TRADOC award

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer



The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment recently won the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) Heavy Maintenance Award and has advanced to the Department of the Army (DA) level of the competition.

If the battalion wins the DA Maintenance of Excellence award it will be the ninth time since 1983 they have taken home the top honors.

Results of the competition are expected to be announced sometime in March and until then the unit awaits the arrival of inspectors who are scheduled to walk through the maintenance pool in early February.

According to Master Sgt. James Wright, battalion maintenance sergeant, before the battalion can even be considered for the TRADOC level it must first compete against units post wide.

Wright said the battalion prepares for the competition throughout the year by compiling a booklet of data which contains information about such things as the operational readiness rate for that year and results from monthly analysis samples. After it is completed it is sent up to the Maintenance Division of the Director of Logistics where a team selects one large and small vehicle maintenance winner. From there it goes to TRADOC and on up.

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Spc. Pamela Grudzinski and Sgt. Milton Willingham of the 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., perform a maintenance check on a vehicle Tuesday.

He added that the battalion must be continually prepared because there is usually no warning as to when inspectors will come out to verify data and talk to Soldiers.

"It's always constant, from collecting the data to not knowing when the inspectors will show up," Wright said. "You may try to spruce things up but it's a maintenance operation, as soon as you clean it up it's going to get dirty again, so it's a continual process."

Spc. Jim Punzo, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., said he believes there is an excellent chance they will win the DA award.

"We do things the right way and on time," Punzo said. "I think the biggest thing is we take pride in our work. This is definitely one of the best motorpools I have ever worked in."

Sgt. James McKee, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., said they should smoke the competition.

"We have good Soldiers that work well as a team," McKee said. "There is great unity within the unit which sets us apart from the others."

Wright said everyone contributes to the unit's success whether it's the operator who does the initial preventative maintenance check or the mechanic who is actually fixing the vehicles.

He said the unit has a long-standing history of competing for awards and this is because they want to be recognized.

"We want people to judge us and compare us to other units," White said. "For the Soldiers knowing they are apart of an award winning unit means a lot to them. It is the final outcome for all of their hard work."

Organization exceeds goal for 1998

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Santa was able to visit more children from Fort Benning this year as Santa's Castle exceeded the goal for the 1998 Christmas season.

The private, non-profit organization provided 1,190 Fort Benning children with toys and puzzles in hopes of making their Christmas a little brighter.

Santa's Castle had originally hoped to help 1,000 children this year, but thanks to Soldiers, units and local community members, they were able to reach more families because of the numerous donations they received.

"We received a lot of support this year," said Janine Hutchings, advisor for Santa's Castle. "We would not have been able to do this with out the help of the units."

Infantry Training Brigade's (ITB) Command Sgt. Maj. James Burnette said ITB was able to contribute more than $4,000 to Santa's Castle this year because of the joint effort of the brigade's sergeants major and drill sergeants.

"The worst thing I can think of is a child waking up on Christmas morning and having no presents to open. How can you explain that to a child?" Burnette said. "It is our obligation to help Soldiers and their families during the holidays."

Holiday marks day of reflection, celebration

Louie Cooper
Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office

Today marks the celebration of our nation's newest national holiday — the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr.

commentary

King was a 26-year-old Baptist minister with a Ph.D from Boston University at the beginning of the Montgomery boycott. The boycott was led by Rosa Parks. Parks defied the law and refused to give up her bus seat to a white man on a crowded bus. Her defiance led to the origination of the Montgomery Improvement Association headed by King.

King clearly stated his strategy for nonviolence in his Letter from the Birmingham Jail: "A just law is from God. An unjust law is a code that is out of harmony with the moral law:

•Active nonviolent resistance to evil;

•Not seeking to defeat or humiliate opponents, but to win their friendship and understanding;

•Attacking the forces of evil rather than the people who happen to be doing the evil;

•Refusing to hate the opponent;

•Acting with the conviction that the university is on the side of justice."

King founded the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in 1963. He began a series of marches to demand fair employment opportunities, desegregation of the public facilities and release of the 3,000 people arrested for participating in the marches. King's purpose was to dramatize the fact that many blacks were still denied the right to vote in the states of the deep South. In Selma, black citizens outnumbered whites, however, they composed only three percent of the voters. More than 400 white members of the clergy joined the demonstration. The marchers were harassed by police and unruly mobs. The violence touched off sympathetic demonstrations of support throughout the country. In the next month, Medgar Evers, the leader of the Mississippi NAACP, was shot in the back outside his house. This set off nationwide sit-ins, school strikes and marches.

President Kennedy submitted legislation to Congress in order to secure voting rights to broaden government protection of black civil rights. The March on Washington on Aug. 28, 1963 was the highest point of the civil rights movement.

Most people can still remember April 4, 1968. America felt shock and disbelief along with the world as news of the assassination of King flashed across the media. His life was taken by a sniper's bullet on the balcony of a Memphis motel, in Memphis, Tenn. He had gone to assist the plight of black garbage workers.

The true spirit of the Civil Rights Movement can be experienced at the Civil Rights Museum in Atlanta. The museum features an exhibit that portrays the essence of Freedom Walk.

Martin Luther King Jr. Day is a day of reflection and celebration, not just a national holiday and a day of rest for federal employees.

Everyone in America should be allowed to attain his or her maximum potential in corporate America and the federal government in this era of downsizing and strategic planning.

If the federal government is to survive this downsizing, managers must allow all its employees to be empowered. If the true sense of empowerment is allowed for all employees in their jobs, then America would be one step closer to achieving equity for all of its citizens. If a person is not allowed to grow, he will become bitter, stagnant and "burned out." Everyone can't be a leader and a manager. However, good leaders listen as well as lead their subordinates. Some of the best ideas for growth and development in corporate America have come from the workers, working in the trenches everyday.

Veterans from conflict deserve respect, honor

Retired Col. Ralph Puckett
Special to the Bayonet

I was recently returning from Tifton, Ga., my hometown, where I'd participated in a great Veterans' Day ceremony. The event honored all the services, in addition to POWs and MIAs. I had just tuned my car radio to the middle of a talk show. The discussion was about the declining interest in Veterans' Day activities.

commentary

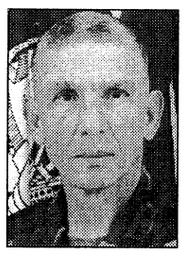
The caller explained that Korea, Vietnam and other conflicts had few casualties in relation to WWII. Fewer people served and fewer families were touched by the conflict. As a result, he reasoned, interest in honoring veterans had declined. The gist of his argument is valid. However, for those comparative few who were involved in Korea, Vietnam, the Dominican Republic, Panama, Grenada, Lebanon, the Persian Gulf, Somalia and the Mayaguez, the Pueblo and other incidents, they were "real wars."

For the men caught in the kill zone of mortars, grenades and automatic weapons fire, the action is real. It is intense, as intense as that on Omaha Beach. That explosion that blows out your eardrums. The blinding flash of light. The ear-splitting noise. A shard of hot metal that slams into your body. The pain that courses through you like an electric charge. The numbness as you watch your life blood ooze from your body. The fear and confusion as you try to recover your mental control.

You see the lifeless body of one of your Soldiers. You know he's dead. You don't have to check. Dead bodies look different. Was he the Soldier who shared with you a sip of coffee from a canteen cup that looked as if it hadn't been cleaned since Caesar invaded Gaul? Was he the Soldier who was playing frisbee shortly before he loaded onto a chopper that air assaulted him into this hell hole? Was he the one who said, "Hey, Ranger, you wanta see a picture of my boy?" The trooper clutches in his hand a letter and snapshot from his wife. It's their first child — a boy the father has never seen — born eight months after he left for Vietnam. You say something about how pretty the mother is. You point to the baby and say "Airborne." You know the Soldier is going to take that letter and photo with him into battle in just a few minutes. The military side of your brain tells you that he shouldn't. The enemy may get it and use it for intelligence purposes. But something inside you says, "What the hell! Let him take it." The trooper will reread that letter every chance he has. He'll pass that photo around for all his buddies to see. You hope you sound convincing when you tell him he'll be holding that baby himself in a few months. As you walk away, you say a silent prayer, "God, make it happen. Don't let anything happen to that boy. He's just a kid!"

A short time after Veterans Day, I participated in a memorial service for Rangers killed in action and in training. Thoughts tumbled through my brain. I knew some of those men. I had heard of others. Some like Shughart and Gordon. When a chopper was shot down, they went to rescue the downed airmen. They had to know that their chances of surviving were nil. They lived and died by the Ranger creed: "I will never leave a fallen comrade to fall into the hands of the enemy and in no circumstances will I ever embarrass my country." They were awarded the Medal of Honor posthumously.

What do we call Mogadishu? OOTW? An Operation Other Than War? Yeah! Tell that to the Rangers who were killing — and being killed — at a distance of 10 feet!



As I heard Gordon and Shughart's names read, I thought of Mrs. Gordon and the letter she had written to Newsweek. She hoped that her husband's last thoughts were about his duty and not about her and their children. She did not want him to be distracted from his job! Where does America get men like Gordon and Shughart and thousands of others who have died fighting in "incidents" and "police actions" and "Operations Other Than War?" I don't know. But I do know that when America is no longer the home of brave men and women, America will no longer be the land of the free.

There was no declaration of war during the Korean conflict. It was a "police action." What was Vietnam? And all those other "incidents?" The Mayaguez? The Pueblo? The Dom Rep? Names forgotten or never known by most of America.

Each had its casualties — fathers, husbands, sons, sweethearts. They embodied dreams of the future, but came home in flag-draped coffins.

The caller was right. Those battles weren't real wars — unless you were there!

Fort Benning hosts commemorative service

Fort Benning celebrates the anniversary of the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. today. This day is set aside to commemorate not only the memory of a great American, but also to remind us of the lasting influence that King has had on American society. It is a time to reflect on the past and to rededicate ourselves to the future, to the principles for which King lived and died ... a dream of dignity for all.

The theme for this year's Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. commemorative service is "Civil Rights Today for a Better Tomorrow."

In recognition of King's many lasting contributions to our great country, a commemorative service will be held at 10 a.m. today in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall. All members of Fort Benning and the surrounding community are encouraged to attend this service.

This is a significant and important event — recognition of the difference one person can make.

Santa: Castle helps

Santa's Castle this year, Hutchings said.

"Every unit on post has Soldiers who need the assistance Santa's Castle provides," said Lt. Col. Jerry Reyes, commander of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "It is the right thing to do. Last year we had a number of Soldiers participate in the program, so we felt it was only right to contribute to something that we benefit from."

Just as important as the donations, Hutchings said Santa's Castle would not have been able to function without its volunteers.

Volunteers complete such tasks as assisting shoppers through the castle and assisting in toy assembly. Volunteers also conduct fundraisers throughout the year to help support the organizations.

"Those who volunteered their free time completed crucial tasks for Santa's Castle," Hutchings said.

Some volunteers work all year long collecting funds, shopping and inventorying items for the following year.

The members of Santa's Castle will begin working for the 1999 season at the beginning of February. Anyone who would like to start donating or volunteering may call Santa's Castle at 685-4400.

Givers bring joy to less fortunate Soldiers

Chaplain (Capt.) Garet Aldridge
USAIC Chaplains Office

I swiped the idea for this article from Francis Church's 1897 article "Yes Virginia, There is a Santa Claus" in the old New York Sun. It seemed a fitting way to express our most profound thanks to all of you who supported Santa's Castle for the benefit of all of our Soldiers across the post.

Dear Chaplain,

I am a 25-year-old E-5 with a wife and four kids. My unit was deployed most of last winter and spring. Then we went out on Marne Focus. We just got in from gunnery, so I haven't been home much. My wife tells me that the car is broken down. It doesn't look like there will be enough money to fix the car, buy food and get anything for the kids for Christmas. My buddies say that nobody cares; that there is no such thing as Santa Claus. Please tell me the truth. Does anyone out there give a darn about me and my family? Is there any such thing as Santa Claus?

Sgt. Lionel Trane
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division

Dear Sgt. Trane,

Your buddies are wrong — dead wrong. They have been affected by the selfishness and self-centeredness of a world where taking care of number one has become our most important concern. They think that everyone is like them: jaded, skeptical, egotistical and self-seeking. Their universes are so little that they do not see women and men with greatness of heart, with generosity, caring or of concern. They cannot grasp the truth that, in God's great gift of love at Christmas, God's love descended and filled all those who opened their hearts to the truth of Christmas.

Yes, sergeant, there is a Santa Claus. He exists just as certainly as love, generosity and devotion exist. Even though your friends cannot see it, you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! How dreary would our lives be if there was no Santa Claus. And how grim would be our lives, if benevolent men and women; if Family Support Groups and battalions and regiments and just ordinary Joes had not built him a Castle right here on Fort Benning.

It would be as dreary as if your home had not been blessed by your four beautiful children: Maria (How prissy she is!); Darius (What a guy!); Tonya (A serious GI Jane!); and Michael (With the soul of a poet!). There would be no childlike faith, then, no poetry, no romance to make this hard life in the defense of our nation tolerable. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished.

Not to believe in Santa Claus! Not to help him build his Castle. You have got to be kidding! Now, your buddies who have so little faith, such minuscule hope, and such small charity, might stand around Custer Terrace all Christmas Eve with their night vision goggles and try to prove there is no Santa Claus. But even if they did not see Santa Claus, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. After all, if there were no Santa Claus, why would there be a Santa's Castle?

The most wonderful thing in the world are things that neither children nor people can see.

Have you ever seen love? You might have seen it reflected in the faces of your children when you come home all tired and dirty from a field training exercise. But you haven't seen love — only its reflection. Have you ever seen loyalty and selfless service? Of course not. You have only seen its merest reflection in your true friends, your NCOs and your officers. Shakespeare once wrote, "There are more things in heaven and in earth than are dreamt of in your philosophy ..."

Nobody can imagine all the wonders there are unseen and unseeable in the world. There is a veil covering the unseen world that all the tanks and all the rockets and all the artillery and all the Infantry can not tear apart. Only love and faith and charity can push aside that curtain to reveal the supernal beauty and glory beyond.

Yes, sergeant. Somebody cares. Somebody gives a darn about you and your wonderful family. No Santa Claus! Thank God he lives and lives forever! And thank God for all those men and women; companies and battalions right here on Fort Benning who built him a Castle so that he can continue to make glad the hearts of our children both this Christmas and for many Christmases to come.

Engineer group leads humanitarian effort

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

When the five-member advance team of Joint Task Force (JTF) Build Hope stepped off of their airplane and into the dark Managua, Nicaragua night Nov. 22, they carried little more than their personal gear and a small collection of communications equipment. Hurricane Mitch had knocked out telephone lines and roads were cut or underwater.

"Our command post was a hotel room and we had nothing but what we were carrying — a laptop computer and a notebook," said Maj. Paul Grosskreuger, chief of operations for the 36th Engineer Group (Construction).

"We got our team started and over time it just grew and grew," said Grosskreuger. The force now numbers more than 1,800 U.S. military personnel busily helping restore some normalcy to the lives of the Nicaraguan people.

The 36th Eng. Grp. is the central unit of the JTF Build Hope joint operations center, located in an abandoned flight operations and control tower on the flight line of the country's Cesar Augusto Sandino International Airport. The multi-mission task force continuously coordinates its humanitarian assistance efforts of road reconstruction, medical and food airlifts to isolated communities and the construction of a medical clinic in a remote mountain village.

The mission is typical "field engineering," a mission seemingly tailored to the skills of Army engineers, said JTF Build Hope Commander Col. Allen Rasper, the commander of the 36th Eng. Grp.

The task force plans to take care of 85 kilometers of road as a primary mission.

"That doesn't sound like a lot but we have the kilometers that are the hardest to get to," Rasper said. Members of the task force and Nicaragua's government determined which road the American engineers would repair, those roads most difficult to reach for Nicaraguan engineers and work that would not take money away from local contractors.

The commander responsible for overseeing the engineer mission is Lt. Col. Gary Johnston, the commander of the 46th Engineer Battalion, Fort Polk, La. Attached to the 46th Eng. Bn. are engineer and combat support units from throughout the Army and Marines, to include Fort Benning's 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment).

There are six forward operating bases throughout Nicaragua, each with its unique road improvement and one site assigned to construct a medical facility to replace one that was washed away by the floods.

"I guess one of the advantages we have in this type of mission is that we are self-sustaining," Johnston said. "Because of our mission, when we deploy somewhere we bring the resources with us. We don't have to live off of the local population."

The Nicaraguan government lacks the resources and the ability to reach the areas where work needs to be accomplished, he said.

The one building the task force plans to erect is a medical clinic in a remote site named Wiwili. When the Rio Coco River rose nearly 30 feet in two days, the village's buildings were filled with mud, including a hospital that serviced approximately 60,000 patients each year.

"The building was not destroyed, but it was filled up with mud," said Maj. Jeff Eckstein, design engineer for the 36th Eng. Grp. Walking into what's left of the room, a sink appears to be eight inches off of the floor, but the mud is 3-feet deep. "All of the instruments they had were destroyed or contaminated."

A temporary facility built there will house eight doctors and return health care to an isolated area that now has an immense homeless problem.

"When something like this happens in the United States, you find out there are a lot of resources that are immediately available," Johnston said.

The secrets to the success of the task force so far, Grosskreuger said, have been solid and reliable communications and logistics networks.

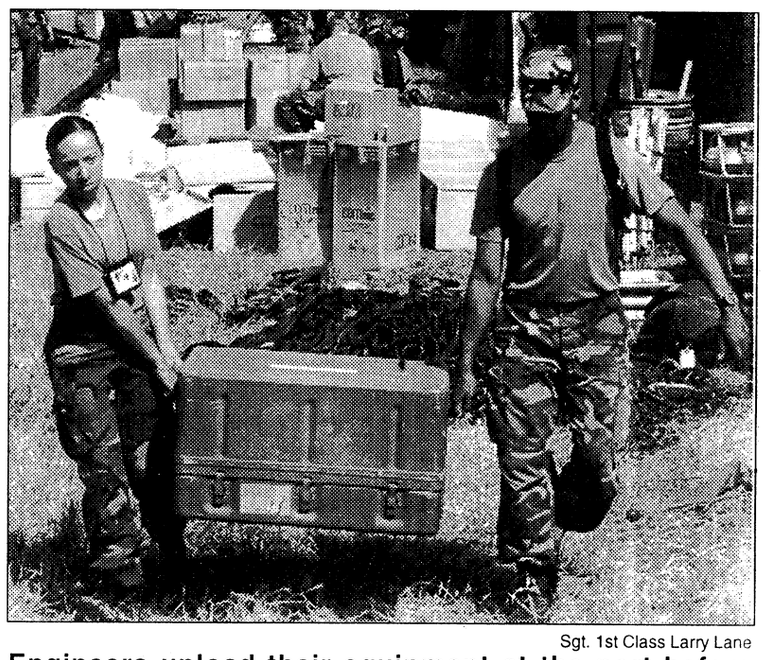
Communications equipment like cellular telephones has kept commanders in touch and the decision making process continuous, he said.

"You turn yourself into a mobile office. You can gather critical information and influence operations throughout the day. I can reach out and touch my commanders, quickly get their feedback and coordinate in a manner of minutes what might have taken a day five years ago,"said Capt. Leroy Chisolm, operations officer.

The task force may assume a larger medical mission in the future, said Capt. Peter Mott, medical liaison officer with the 261st Area Support Medical Battalion, Fort Bragg, N.C. But for now, the medical mission's first priority is to the task force Soldiers.

"We will be working side by side in their clinics, helping take care of their patients," Mott said. Medical personnel will eventually help the Nicaraguan Ministry of Health devise national programs in disease and vector control. Some medical teams have assessed the sanitation and disease control measures needed at displaced people camps. Some of the regional diseases include malaria, cholera and dengue fever.

While the engineers are pushing on with the road reconstruction, the task force's CH-47 Chinooks have flown more than 85 tons of medical supplies, food and clothing to the people left homeless and without health care. Chinooks have been assisting such private organizations as the Red Cross of Nicaragua and America, Chisolm said.



"The first two questions I'm asked by the people are: did I bring medicine and did I bring food?" Chisolm said. Rice and beans make up the primary load, he said, and there is a great homeless problem now throughout Nicaragua. "People are sharing homes, wooden shacks, with two or three families together."

The villagers have remained calm and dignified in their despair, Chisolm said. "They have common sense and they know if the village beside them goes under, they'll go under too because its like a chain. They need the next village to survive."

Without the CH-47 Chinook's provided by the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky., food and medical supplies could not make it to where it's needed, said Christine Strater, relief logistics delegate with the American Red Cross. Some villagers were flooded from their homes, along the Rio Coco River, the river between Nicaragua and Honduras.

"Help can't get there because the roads are not accessible," Strater said. "With the helicopters, we've been able to do drops of rice and beans, medical supplies and oil. We couldn't do it without the U.S. Army flying us there." While JTF Build Hope tries to answer some of Nicaragua's medical and humanitarian assistance problems, the mission is still one of field engineering, Rasper said.

"Our reliance is on the expertise and experience of seasoned NCOs and young lieutenants fresh out of college. This mission will be a great application of personal skills, innovation and adapting to the situation."

498th: Mission provides unit chance to train

Until the medevac call comes, the teams fly reconnaissance missions to familiarize themselves with the terrain and to improve their response time to the FOBs.

Flying in Nicaragua can be a challenge, said pilot in command, Chief Warrant Officer 2 John Adcock. Nicaragua is a hot land of radically changing altitude, spotted with several smoking volcanoes.

"We're seeing a little bit of sulfur smoke, but it,s not really causing problems," Adcock said about the volcanoes. "The ash fall-out could cause problems with the engines. We have to take special maintenance procedures to avoid any problems that might come up later."

The thin oxygen of the high altitude stresses the engines, Adcock explained, limiting the weight the aircraft can carry.

"The air is thinner up there. It's like trying to run a two-mile race at 10,000 feet. At that altitude, you do not have the oxygen level as you have at sea level. You're body would be starving for oxygen and it's the same with the engines; they're not getting the oxygen they need to cool down."

The total strength of the 498th Air Ambulance in Central America is 71 Soldiers, which includes a motor pool and an aviation maintenance unit in San Jose.

The mission to Central America also provides a chance for the Soldiers to train in an unfamiliar environment, Miegel said. "We're not used to working in such austere environment and it's providing a good challenge for us."

After a visit to the National Infantry Museum, Sgt. 1st Class Robert T. Christensen, Co. A, 2nd Bn. 330th Regt., quizzes Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers on combat tasks.

Christensen questions one of his Soldiers after touring the National Infantry Museum Saturday. Soldiers were not allowed to purchase select items to take back.

Reserve drill sergeants take on OSUT

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Transforming America's youth into the Soldiers of tomorrow is a daily challenge for the thousands of active-duty drill sergeants taking to the "trail" to train, teach and lead the land warrior of the future. But what happens when this force cannot support the mass influx of inbound Soldiers?

The mission is tasked to the Army's strength in reserve, the Soldiers of the U.S. Army Reserve, a force that is perhaps relied upon now more than ever as the fighting force of the Army slims down in preparation for the new millennium.

"The reserve mission here is a unique one," said Drill Sergeant Staff Sgt. Terry R. Malone, Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade (ITB). "They allow us, the active-duty drill sergeant, a chance to experience new ideas and new methods of instruction."

The reserve augmentation to Fort Benning's ITB and installations Army-wide is a system that began in the early 80s, according to 1st Sgt. Roscoe Mayfield, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 330th Infantry Regiment, Kalamazoo, Mich., and has to grow as it has refined and honed its leaders to perform at an unmatched standard since its inception more than 10 years ago.

"We have no problem coming down here and taking over the training cycle," he said. "We prepare for this up to a year in advance. So when we get here, the drill sergeants are more than prepared to assume all training responsibilities."

Assuming all training responsibilities is exactly what is expected of the 12 Kalamazoo-based drill sergeants presently assigned to ITB for their annual training exercise; however, this two-week stint of service is more than just an exercise for these dozen drills.

"This is my passion," said Sgt. 1st Class Robert T. Christensen, Co. A. "To know you have had a direct impact on a Soldiers life is beyond what words can explain."

"I can't think of anything else I would rather do in the Army," he added.

Christensen, a field training officer for the Kalamazoo Police Department, Kalamazoo, Mich., said he and the other reservists donning the brown round for this two-week rotation do not undergo a transformation process to return them to the drill sergeant attitude.

"You never lose the demeanor," he said of those questioning the reservists ability to maintain the ability to "motivate" trainees. "Once a drill, always a drill. It's part of you, it's part of your life."

"In fact, I try to bring more of the discipline I teach here to the young officers I see and instruct back home," he said. "What we try to teach here is independent, educated thinking. It is a process that applies no matter who and where you are. The world doesn't need anymore robots."

Christensen and his reserve drill sergeant counterparts filing through Fort Benning annually are insured a smooth transition process by the mobile training team (MTT), a team of ITB leaders that brief the reserve command on recent policy changes and implementations that effect the mission of training tomorrow's Soldier.

"Long before we ever step foot on Fort Benning, we know the new regulations governing trainees and concerns of the command," Christensen said. "The MTT does an excellent job of assisting us in making ourselves more mission ready.'

Mission readiness is essential to the drill sergeants and support staff of the 2nd Bn., 330th Inf. Regt. as they are not only challenged annually to train Soldiers two weeks out of the year, but are also the on-call replacement force if a conflict would arise that required the manpower of the active-duty drill sergeants.

"This two-week annual training is only part of what we do to remain mission ready," Mayfield said. "We are constantly preparing and training for a situation that could arise requiring us to assume the entire responsibility of training here at ITB."

The possibility of that occurring is greater than one may think, Mayfield pointed out.

"During Operation Desert Storm, Soldiers from our battalion were activated to train Soldiers returning from inactive ready reserve status to resume their combat-ready lifestyle."

As this two-week mission draws to an end Saturday, the planning for the next rotation of troops for Soldiers of the 2nd Bn., 330th Inf. Regt.., has already begun.

"We will have troops down here again in June," Mayfield said. "And once again, we will continue to serve with the same strength we have all the time."

Soldiers undergo SEDRE exercises

13th Corps Support Battalion

As Soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group (Construction)'s 13th Corps Support Battalion (CSB) and 63rd Engineer Company (CSE) were stepping off the plane and into the sands of the National Training Center (NTC), Soldiers were hard at work deploying the 3rd Battalion, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky., that would replace them on the next rotation. From Oct. 26 through Nov. 4, the 36th Engineer Group Soldiers deployed to the port of Jacksonville, Fla., in support of Dragon Team 1-99 Sea Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise (SEDRE). The SEDRE was part of the deployment process for the 3rd Bn., 101st Airborne Div. (AA) enroute to NTC rotation 99-03.

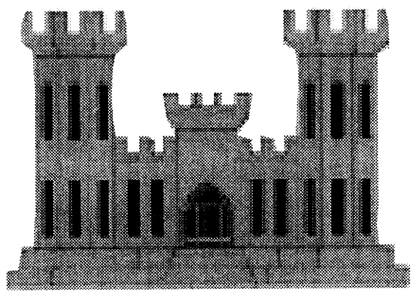
Soldiers from the 13th CSB station, 63rd Engineer Company (CSE), 926th Preventive Medicine Medical Detachment (LB) 36th Engineer Group (Construction) and the 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) provided a Port Support Activity (PSA) to the 1186th Terminal Transfer Battalion. Over the course of the operation, Soldiers of the PSA joined forces with personnel from Fort Benning's Department of Logistic's Transportation Division and Soldiers from the 3rd Bn., 101st Airborne Div., (AA) in an effort to download rail cars and prepare their contents for shipment by ocean-going vessel. In total, the Soldiers of PSA Benning downloaded over 600 pieces of rolling and container stock. These pieces were then inspected, documented, marshaled, staged and loaded on the Cape Henry for transport to Port Hueneme on the California coastline and then on to NTC.

Although busy inspecting, marshaling and staging vehicles, these same Soldiers provided much needed logistical support to the SEDRE operation. Soldiers from the 690th Medical Company were on-site with three Field Litter Ambulances to provide front line medical support in the event of an injury while other Soldiers maintained shuttle service support for personnel involved with the mission. Soldiers took part in maintenance contact teams to assist in "quick-fix" repair work on disabled equipment and still other were instrumental in the feeding and life support of the more than 500 Soldiers and DOL civilians that were present for the operation.

Dragon Team 1-99 was the third SEDRE that the 101st has conducted since July of 1997; and by far, the most complex. The past two SEDREs used ports of debarkation on the Atlantic Coast and Gulf of Mexico. This operation was unique in that the port of debarkation was in California and called for crossing The Panama Canal. No SEDRE to date has attempted such a logistically challenging mission. Due to its complexity, Dragon Team 1-99 called on the expertise of numerous FORSCOM, MTMC and the Army Reserve units as well as Military Sealift Command and the U.S. Navy.

The Soldiers of PSA Benning were a true asset to the successful completion of such a challenging deployment exercise. After working 24-hour shifts for four days and managing on little sleep, they accomplished their phase of the mission ahead of schedule and without injury. The Soldiers of the 36th Eng. Grp. and 13th CSP Bn., are a true asset to their respective units and exemplify the work ethic and professionalism for which the Army stands. Soldiers of PSA Benning received training on rail and port operations which was put into use in light of the recent deployments to Honduras and Nicaragua in support of Hurricane Mitch relief efforts.

63rd continues support in Nicaragua



1st Lt. Sean Scott
63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment)

Among the scenic mountains and coffee plantations of Northern Nicaragua, the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) tackles the task of re-opening vital roads left impassable in the wake of Hurricane Mitch. The dual mission of repairing roads and building a healthy relationship with an important Central American country is well underway.

Second and 3rd platoons of the 63rd currently operate on a 23-kilometer stretch of road vital to the Nicaraguan economy in the area of Jinotega. The area produces much of the country's export coffee crop. Roads in this area also provide a vital link between Managua area and northeastern towns.

With eight kilometers complete to date, the Soldiers and NCOs battle uncooperative weather as well as the immense task of providing logistical support in rugged mountain terrain.

Second platoon's mission lies on a stretch of road between Cuyali and Astorias, while 3rd platoon upgrades the road from Cuyali to La Colonia. Morale is high, and construction is on schedule.

"This is a great opportunity to see another country and interact with Soldiers of another nation," said Pfc. Shane Godaire. Soldiers from the Nicaraguan Army work hand in hand with U.S. troops forming a team to provide security to servicemembers throughout the country.

"The Nicarguan people are warm and gracious hosts. Everywhere, Americans are greeted with smiles and friendly gestures. We look forward to continued success and mission completion by February," said Capt. Robert H. Carr, commander of 63rd and the forward operating base (FOB) in Jinotega.

The task of upgrading the roads requires ditching and reshaping the road surface as well as filling and compacting in washout areas. Engineers utilize graders, bulldozers, bucket loaders, compactors and five-ton dump trucks to complete the mission.

"Skill and expertise from operators and supervisors are invaluable to success as unstable slopes, and sharp rocks create a hostile environment for equipment and Soldiers alike," stated Staff Sgt. Robert Dowdy, third platoon sergeant.

The 63rd Eng. Co. deployed to Nicaragua in support of Task Force Build Hope on Dec. 14. Headquarters, 2nd, 3rd and maintenance platoons pushed out to the Jinotega area upon arrival to set up a FOB to stage construction operations.

The unit formed a company team in Jinotega with the attachment of a platoon of engineers from Fort Polk, La. (carpenters, plumbers and electricians), a medical detachment from Fort Bragg, N.C, an Infantry security team from Fort Campbell, Ky., and a Marine Corps water purification unit from Camp Lejeune, N.C.

First platoon is located in Estelh, working under the 55th Engineer Company (Medium Girder Bridge).

The troops will return to Fort Benning on completion of the mission which is estimated to be around the middle of February.

Antarctica

Director journeys to bottom of world

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If parents find their children donning parkas, scarfs and mittens and talking about conquering the coldest continent in the world, they need not worry. This winter, Jerry Christy, Fort Benning's director of educational technology, journeyed to Antarctica and took the Fort Benning schools with him.

For Christy, a trip to the bottom of the world not only meant fulfillment of a boyhood dream but the ability to share that dream with others.

Through an interactive online project, Christy communicated with students by sending pictures and information via e-mail. Students were continually updated throughout the 14-day adventure by daily reports sent back by Christy himself.

Some may classify the trip alone as amazing, but Christy said what he encountered when he returned home made the trip even more memorable.

When he returned Dec. 4, he found that people from more than 39 states and seven foreign countries had logged onto his project. Although Christy said he doesn't know the exact number of people involved in the online experience, he said everyone from college students to people who were in no way connected to schools were giving him feedback and ideas.

He remarked about how unbelievable it is that something which started so small was able to take off the way it did.

"It was beyond my wildest imagination," Christy said. "It was put together at a totally grass roots level with no sponsors at all. This was a personal dream and so much has come out of that."

Christy admitted that when he got back he wasn't sure how enthused kids would be after the fact. But now that he has visited more than 10 schools and seen the extent to which the students were involved in the project, he knows how deep of an interest they had in the trip.

"Across the board they were so excited," Christy said. "The level of questions I got was so telling about how involved they were because they had pointed questions. It wasn't these outrageous 'what if' questions that often times come from children. These questions came from kids who had a knowledge. You could tell they had learned a lot and wanted answers to their questions."

Dorothy Hyder, a fifth-grade teacher at White Elementary School, said she tied in Christy's adventure throughout all of her learning lessons.

Hyder said the children did a lot of studies on weather, measurement and different explorers, which covered everything from math and science to social studies. The children also completed a project on the computer which compared Antarctica's animals to Georgia's.

One of the reasons she thinks the students were so interested in Christy's journey was because they were involved in it while it was happening.

"Participation in a real-life adventure while it was happening fascinated the children," Hyder said. "I think they also found it neat that they really know someone who could be classified as an explorer."

Steven Antonia, a fifth-grader at White Elementary School, said it was Antarctica's animals which sparked his interest in the project.

Students from Dexter Elementary School welcome Jerry Christy home Dec. 4 after his 14-day trip to Antarctica.

Christy poses on the MS Explorer while in Antarctica.

"I really liked the animals he (Christy) was able to see up close like the penguins," Antonia said. "I also liked the whaling stations and all the historical places."

Christy commented that being able to reach the students while on the trip was actually happening was definitely one of the keys to the project's success.

"The ability to communicate in real time is an extremely valuable tool," Christy said. "Being able to send back our reactions and impressions so that the children could react to it was the key, because there is a difference between doing it while it's happening or hearing about it after the fact."

Fifth-grader Brian Lee said what amazed him the most about the whole trip was the fact that Christy had always wanted to go to Antarctica.

"The most interesting part to me was that he wanted to go to Antarctica since he was a little boy and finally got to accomplish his dream," Lee said. "He got me interested and I think I might just want to go to Antarctica, too."

Christy said one thing he emphasized the most was the idea of setting a goal and never giving up on it.

"One of the themes I was pressing throughout the trip was the idea of having a dream and going for it," Christy said. "I've had feedback from students along the way who have said 'Here's my dream, here's what I want to do,' and when you boil it all down that's one of the most important things, because you never really know when you have reached a child."

Now that he has returned, Christy mentioned that people want to know what he will do next. Christy said he's just trying to get back to his regular routine, but plans to work with teachers on more project ideas.

"Ever since I've gotten back, folks have been asking me 'What's next,'" Christy said. "I wasn't thinking in those terms in the beginning and I'm still not thinking in those terms."

"This trip was personal satisfaction, but everything that has come out of it has added up to way more than just personal satisfaction. It has reached into areas I never expected it to and that is incredibly gratifying."

Fort Benning elects new BOSS president

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Fountaine

There's a new "boss" in town and she's ready to do what it takes to get the Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers (BOSS) program back on track and give Fort Benning's unmarried Soldiers a place to turn.

Spc. Tina Fountaine, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, was recently elected as Fort Benning's new BOSS president and is hoping more Soldiers will become actively involved in the program.

A native of Rochester N.Y., Fountaine came to Fort Benning in October of 1997 and was assigned to 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). She first got her feet wet with BOSS at the company level and by the summer of '98 had moved up to become battalion BOSS representative. Now, her position as president will have her looking out for all of Fort Benning's single Soldiers.

"It feels really good, but is definitely a big step," Fountaine said. "However, if it wasn't for the support from the 3rd Brigade Soldiers and my chain of command, I probably wouldn't have gotten this chance. But I enjoy what I'm doing, I like to get involved and I really want to make a difference in the program."

According to BOSS Program Manager, Sgt. 1st Class Valerie Boggs, Fountaine received the largest turn-out for a BOSS election and is the right person for the job.

"She's high speed and ready to do the job," Boggs said. "She's motivated and excited about doing a good job and that's exactly what the BOSS program needs — an energetic, young Soldier."

As president, Fountaine oversees the brigade BOSS representatives and makes sure there is an effective battalion-level program put together. She helps to make sure that representatives are coming up with things for single Soldiers to do and are keeping up with quality of life issues.

Fountaine said the key to a successful BOSS program is Soldiers' support. One way she hopes to improve program participation is by getting the word out about what BOSS is and what it does for Soldiers.

"A lot of single Soldiers are not too sure what the program is all about," Fountaine said. "The BOSS program was set up to take care of the single Soldiers' quality of life and to come up with programs and activities to keep them active in the community."

"For a lot of single Soldiers that come right out of high school, it's the first time they have been on their own. The BOSS program provides guidance and helps them meet new people and make friends."

Another way she hopes to get a larger involvement is by planning more sporting activities and community projects.

Fountaine mentioned that one of her biggest goals is to get the Soldiers confident in the BOSS program.

"I want the program to get back on track and I want not only the Soldiers, but everyone to have confidence in the BOSS program," she said. "It would definitely be nice to see more involvement from both single Soldiers and their chain of command."

OPERATION READY

Program helps educate families

Michelle Harvey
Bayonet correspondent

Being deployed at a moment's notice in order to serve and protect this nation has always been part of the life and times of an active-duty Soldier in the military.

Rene Arnold, a "thirty-something" mother of two, who lives in Columbus, can relate to this because her husband was deployed to Saudi Arabia during Desert Storm several years ago.

"I worried about him, hoping he wouldn't get hurt," Arnold said. "I prayed for him so he would be safe."

For decades, Soldiers have placed their lives on the line and left their families behind for the sake of our country. But separation due to deployment can create stress within military families.

Studies conducted by the Walter Reed Institute also showed that family conflict, caused by deployment, contributed to poor military performance of Soldiers, who were dealing with this kind of emotional stress. Also, these Soldiers were more likely to suffer mental and emotional breakdowns during military conflicts.

On the other hand, these same studies showed that Soldiers dealt with stress better if they believed their families were provided for during deployment.

Because of these findings, Operation Ready, a program established in 1994, was created to help Soldiers and their families to better cope with anxieties due to deployment.

Operation Ready (Resources for Education About Deployment and You) provides educational materials such as video tapes and modules to better assist Soldiers, commanders, Family Support Groups (FSG) and Army Community Service (ACS), so they can foster reassurance for their families.

These materials deal with issues such as pre-deployment ongoing readiness, financial planning, coping with military separation and post deployment homecoming and reunions, so that military families can better handle their situation.

The program even caters to the needs of children by helping them to understand their circumstances through workbooks.

"Anytime a Soldier is deployed, we are here to support their families, and provide their needs," said Frances Howard, chief of ACS at Fort Benning. "And it (Operation Ready) is a tool which can provide resources and information for these families.

For more information about Operation Ready and deployment call Howard at 545-6969 or 545-5516. The office of ACS is located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2624.

Commissary policy change requires patience of patrons

Defense Commissary Agency

The title "bagger" is an apt name. He or she is the helpful sort who bags your groceries and takes them to your car — for tips only. For the last 20 years or so baggers at Fort Benning have routinely and willingly unloaded shopping carts at the check stand as well.

"But, Fort Benning has been the exception, not the rule," said Commissary Officer Jim Hobbins. "A lot of our customers don't realize that offloading groceries from shopping carts at the check stand is not part of the bagger's usual duties and is not done at other commissaries. Some enterprising bagger in the '70s here probably decided it was a good idea and it stuck."

The Defense Commissary Agency (DeCA), which operates 296 commissaries worldwide, needs to ensure that customer check out procedures are standard at all its commissaries. unloading carts is not a routine part of services.

"It's important to realize that baggers are not commissary employees," Hobbins said.

They are permitted to work for tips by the installation and sign a "bagger's agreement" outlining the services they agree to provide — unloading groceries is not part of the agreement. Their work takes place after the groceries are checked through, not before. Their work area is behind the register, not in front of it.

"Physically handicapped or elderly customers who need assistance with unloading groceries can certainly ask baggers to assist them," Hobbins said. "That is strictly a matter between the customer and the bagger."

Customers will notice signs posted at the end of the check stands to remind them to unload their carts.

"We want to offer the best service we can and so do the baggers," he said. "And I know it's difficult to change after all these years, but we ask for your patience as we move to bring Fort Benning Commissary in line with the rest of DeCA."

Healthy diet helps lower risk of CAD

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Coronary (heart) artery (blood vessel) disease is the number one killer of both men and women in the U.S.

Each year, more than half a million Americans will die from heart attacks caused by coronary artery disease (CAD). Seven million Americans have CAD.

CAD is the most common form of heart disease and is caused by narrowing of the arteries which carry oxygen to the heart muscle. The arteries become narrow with a waxy deposit of cholesterol called plaques.

This plaque can build up and a clot can easily block off circulation to part of the heart muscle. This is called a heart attack.

The American Heart Association has given the following description as the warning symptoms when an artery of the heart is not getting enough oxygen to the heart muscle. These symptoms are called angina (ann-gin-nah):

•Very uncomfortable pressure, fullness or squeeze-like pain in the center of the chest lasting more than a few minutes,

•Pain spreads to the shoulders, neck, or arms, and •Chest discomfort associated with lightheadedness, fainting, sweating, nausea, sick stomach or trouble breathing.

In some illnesses, such as diabetes, the symptoms of pain may not be the same as those listed above due to complications of diabetes. For these people, extreme weakness, nausea or trouble breathing may be warning symptoms.

Heart attacks continue to be deadly despite the many advances in modern medicine. Many of these deaths could be prevented because CAD is related to certain aspects of lifestyle.

Controllable risk factors for CAD include smoking, high blood pressure, high blood cholesterol, physical inactivity and obesity.

The heart needs a constant supply of oxygen and the act of smoking decreases this supply immediately. Smoking increases how easily the blood forms a clot. Over years, cigarette smoking also causes an increase in the amount of plaque that collects in the coronary arteries.

Poorly controlled hypertension creates extra work for the heart which increases the need for oxygen. Over time, poorly controlled hypertension leads to heart muscle damage and narrow, damaged arteries.

High cholesterol provides the substance which forms the plaque and which narrows the arteries of the heart.

Increased physical activity results in a stronger heart muscle, improved circulation to the arteries, lower blood pressure and lower cholesterol when performed regularly.

Obese people tend to have more hypertension, higher cholesterol and tend to be less active with less conditioned hearts than those who are of normal weight. Fortunately, exercise and a "heart healthy" diet can lead to loss of body fat, lower blood pressure and lower cholesterol.

A "heart healthy" diet is one which is rich in fruits, vegetables and low-fat dairy products. It contains as little as possible of animal fat, dairy fat and fried foods.

Recently, a great deal of interest has emerged about nutritional supplements for decreasing risk of heart attack, such as Vitamin E, Vitamin C, folate and multiple B vitamins. Patients should speak to their doctor about these as some physicians may recommend the use of these supplements. Many of these are still being studied for benefit.

One of the most noteworthy medical treatments for the prevention of heart attack is the use of aspirin. However, the American Heart Association cautions that people do not begin taking aspirin on a long term basis without first consulting their doctor. Aspirin is not without risk in certain people such as those with liver or kidney disease, peptic ulcer or bleeding elsewhere in the bowel, allergy to aspirin or a history of heavy alcohol use.

Despite the many advances in treatment, prevention is the most important medicine in the fight against heart disease.

Procedure simplifies job-filling process

Civilian Personnel Operations Center

The Southeast Civilian Personnel Operations Center (SECPOC) is making a major change in the way positions are filled. The new process is called Resumix. Resumix will be used to fill most civilian positions General Schedule (GS) and Wage Grade (WG). This procedure simplifies the process of filling jobs for everyone involved — applicants, managers and personnel lists.

Resumix uses the latest technology to read, extract and store resume information so individuals do not have to fill out a new resume every time they want to apply for an appointment or a different job. The Resumix system automatically matches candidates to those position opportunities for which they have indicated interest and qualify. Resumix keeps resumes on file, so registrants can submit updates at any time.

To ensure interested individuals receive maximum consideration for job opportunities, all employees are encouraged to submit their resume during the data call from Jan. 23 through Feb. 28. Even those who do not have immediate plans to change positions are urged to submit resumes. Job Information Kits will be provided to each employee and will include comprehensive instructions on how to complete and submit a resume. In addition, dedicated teams from the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center (CPAC) and Southeast Region Civilian Personnel Operations Center (SECPOC) will conduct briefings and training sessions to fully inform employees on Jan. 22 on the use of the new system. Additional information and assistance will be available from your servicing personnel specialist in the Fort Benning CPAC.

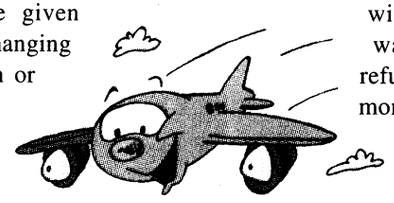
Q. I bought a non-refundable ticket to go home for Christmas. I had to change my plans because of Operation Desert Fox. My holiday was a mess and that ticket was expensive. Is there any way I can get my money back?

A. Although nothing can really make-up for an interrupted holiday season, there is some good news. Airlines have agreed to refund or reschedule previously confirmed reservations for military personnel whose leave arrangements were affected by Operation Desert Fox.

A summary of the options offered by different airlines is listed here. You should call your airline for more detailed information.

Continental Airlines will waive change and refund penalties for military personnel and dependents holding non-refundable tickets. The waiver is effective immediately and will expire Feb. 27, 1999. The waiver code is 1LGBT.



Delta Airlines will waive change fees and minimum or maximum stay requirements on published excursion fares for tickets issued prior to Dec. 15, 1998. The waiver code is 43296.

You will need either a letter from your commander stating that leave was cancelled due to Operation Desert Fox or a copy of your orders. The reservation agent should put an OSI (Other Service Information) message in the PNR (the itinerary).

Delta Airlines will issue a refund to those unable to use their tickets. You should send your tickets, a letter from your commander or a copy of your orders and a return address for refund to: Delta Airlines-Refunds and Records, Dept. 818, Hartsfield International Airport, Atlanta, GA 30320.

Northwest Airlines will waive change and cancellation penalties and administrative fees for previously confirmed or ticketed reservations. The waiver code is 9BFAA.

Passengers are given the option of changing origin, destination or stopover points with the value of the original ticket contributing towards purchase of a new ticket or extending the original ticket validity by one additional year (two years total).

All conditions of the new fare must be met. You should send the refund request and a copy of your orders to Passenger Refund Department, B 4950, 5101 Northwest Drive, St. Paul, MN 55111-3034.

Reno Air will waive advance purchase requirements, change penalties and refund restrictions for published fare codes.

Southwest Airlines will waive advance purchase restrictions on lowest available fares. You must present your military identification card and a copy of your orders at the ticket counter prior to ticketing.

This is effective immediately and expires today. If you need a refund, send a refund request and copy of your orders to the Refunds Department.

United Airlines will authorize waivers and refunds for a six-month period.

The rules are found under the profile: (S*FAR/MIDEAST) (ask an airline representative or travel agent to look it up for you).

Transworld Airlines will waive penalties and cancellation fees.

The minimum stay requirement will be waived for travel already commenced, to allow an earlier return without penalty. Transworld Airlines will also provide full refunds if a copy of your orders is provided.

American Airlines will waive the $75 administration charge effective immediately and expires today. A copy of your orders is required.

Military members must rebook their itineraries through American Airlines reservations and provide proper authorization. Refunds will be given in the form of a voucher only.

U.S. Airways will waive cancellation penalties and issue vouchers or refunds for troops and their families through Feb. 28.

Midway Airlines has not published their policy on refunds. Call the airline for further information.

Should you wish to discuss a legal problem involving your travel plans, you can make an appointment to speak with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Division by calling 545-3281.

Lord holds 'blue print' to life

317th Engineer Battalion

Christmas has come and gone and soon we will throw away or store our Christmas tree. The decorations will come down and the dazzling multi-color lights will be unplugged. The spin of giving will cease, smiling and merry making comes to a halt and we will go back into our normal way of living. So what's next? What are you looking forward to? A new year with new resolutions that were broken the previous year? Do you have hope for a bright future or do you see nothing but dark clouds on the horizon?

reflections

Whatever your plans, objectives and goals are, may I suggest that you include the lord in them? If you have tried and tried to change things in your life and nothing seems to work why not give God a chance? I strongly believe that he can make a difference in your life today.

The Bible tells us in Proverbs 3:6 that we should "acknowledge the Lord in all our ways and he will direct our paths. Commit to the Lord whatever you do, and your plans will succeed (Prov. 16:3). Many are the plans in a man's heart but it is the Lord's purpose that prevails (Prov. 19:21)."

Include the master planner in your plans because he has the blue print for your life and he knows what's the best for you. Let's face the fact, none of us have lived this life before (unless you believe in re-incarnation) and none of us have lived a perfect life, but we know Christ did. So, maybe he might have something to tell us, maybe he might have some wisdom to impart to us and just maybe, he might be able to show us or guide us through the maze of life. Remember, "He's been there and done that."

If your plan is to lose weight, why not include the lord by asking him for strength to be disciplined and to avoid those tempting, weight-gaining foods.

If your plan is to have a stronger relationship with your spouse, why not search the scripture and find out what the lord has to say about marriage. Here are a few passages you can read: Matthew 5:27-28, 31-32; Romans 7:1-3; I Corinthians 7:1-16; Ephesians 5:21-33 and Peter 3:1-7. You can also strengthen your relationship by seeking counseling, attending marriage seminars, praying together and attending the service of your choice regularly.

Planning for the future without the one who holds the future may not be a wise idea. Would you plan to go to an important job interview without thinking what the interviewer might ask, or how you might present yourself? You and I know what most likely would happen if we did not include the interviewer in our plans.

Whatever you resolve to do this new year, allow the lord to become a part of the process. You will discover for yourself that when the lord is involved, he will open doors that no one can shut. He will close doors that no one can open. He will be a bridge over your troubled waters, and he will lift you up and carry you when you feel like you can't go on.

So what's your plan today?

Center offers help to Soldiers, families

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Fort Benning, "Best Army Installation in the World," home of the Infantry, Airborne School, great weather — it just doesn't get much better than this. Yet, there are many Soldiers and family members living here whose lives are on the edge. Where can they turn to in time of need? For many, the Fort Benning Chaplain Life Ministries Center is the answer.

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center exists to provide Fort Benning Soldiers and family members with the best pastoral care offered anywhere. Even though the center is part of the varied ministries offered through the installation chaplain's office, it is not a place of worship. Instead, it is a place staffed by highly-trained Army chaplains specializing in marriage and family counseling.

The center is located in Building 2606 in Soldiers' Plaza. The center provides marriage and family counseling, individual counseling, premarriage counseling, parenting classes and many other services designed to assist those in need of quality pastoral care.

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is a free, wonderful place to get the help you need for yourself or your family. For more information, call the center at 545-1760. Help is just a phone call away.

Students communicate through Internet

Stowers Elementary School

Sue Ann Dixon's fifth-grade class at Stowers Elementary School is currently participating in the World School Japan Project, which was coordinated by Jerry Christy of the Fort Benning School System.

The students communicate with different elementary schools in Japan via the Internet. The students share project ideas, customs, weather, likes, dislikes and languages as well as pets and favorite foods. They have also exchanged pictures over the Internet.

The class has their own mailbox on the Internet they can access from their classroom.

Each morning, the "Star Stallion" signs onto the Web as the rest of the class hovers around the computer hoping to hear, "You've got mail!" Most mornings, they are rewarded with e-mail from the students in Japan. The students take turns sharing the latest e-mail with the class and sending return mail.

Mike Starrett

Sue Ann Dixon, fifth-grade teacher at Stowers Elementary School shows students how to use the Internet to communicate with an elementary school in Japan.

Dixon said the class has suggested a field trip to Japan, but for now, they are happy to experience Japan electronically.

Classes learn from each other

Stowers Elementary School

Collaboration is a term used to describe special education and regular education working together to achieve a child's maximum potential.

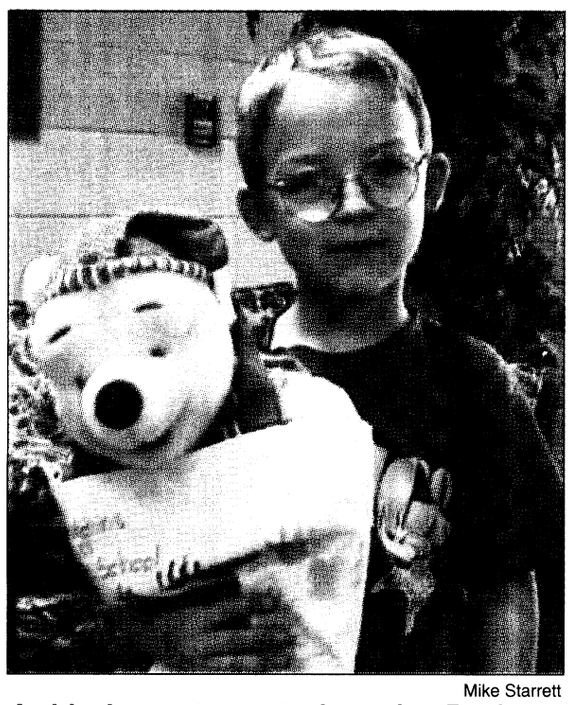
At Stowers, a collaborative program exists between Bonnie Wise's and Janie Morris' preschool special education classes and Amy Henderson's kindergarten class. The benefits of collaboration are two-fold: children in the preschool classrooms are exposed to more complex language and play skills from typically developing peers. These peers are demonstrating behaviors and skills that encourage the preschool children to interact and problem solve.

The kindergarten children are also reaping educational benefits. In working with the preschool children, the kindergartners are learning new and creative ways to encourage learning. They are also developing a heightened awareness of differences and similarities by participating in this program. Other benefits include a sense of responsibility and increased self-esteem.

All three teachers said they are excited about the collaboration and look forward to positive results.

Program promotes reading, writing

Stowers Elementary School



Would you like a bear to visit your family? Each student in Barbara Hutchins' kindergarten class at Stowers Elementary School get to take Honey Bear, the class pet, home about once each month.

Honey Bear is a stuffed bear that travels home in a canvas bag with his own notebook. Each night a different child takes him home. The child includes Honey Bear in all of his family activities. The child then draws and writes about the experiences he and Honey Bear shared that evening.

The following morning, Honey Bear and the student return to school. Honey Bear's adventures are shared with the entire class as the child reads what he wrote in the notebook. Some entries include Alex : "Honey Bear and I went to the carpet store," Aja: "Honey Bear and I went roller skating" and Dimitris' entry, "Honey Bear and I had a sleepover."

According to Hutchins, the activity connects experiences at home and at school. By allowing the child to be the author and illustrator, writing in the notebook promotes beginning reading and writing skills. She said it also helps the child develop oral language skills when he shares his or her writings verbally with the class.

Honey Bear is a seasoned traveler who has visited many local and distant places. Besides the Commissary and Post Exchange, he has journeyed to Canada over the winter holidays. He has also accompanied some of the children to Martin Army Community Hospital's emergency room in the middle of the night.

Mike Starrett

A kindergarten student in Barbara Hutchin's class prepares to take Honey Bear home for the night.

Hutchins said she learned of the class pet concept from a fellow instructor during a workshop several years ago.

"Although I have forgotten her name, she will always have a special place in my heart for sharing this wonderful idea with me."

Each week, KID'S KORNER will highlight activities conducted at Fort Benning Schools. Check out next week's issue to see what's happening in the KID's KORNER.

Kids learn values, discipline through art

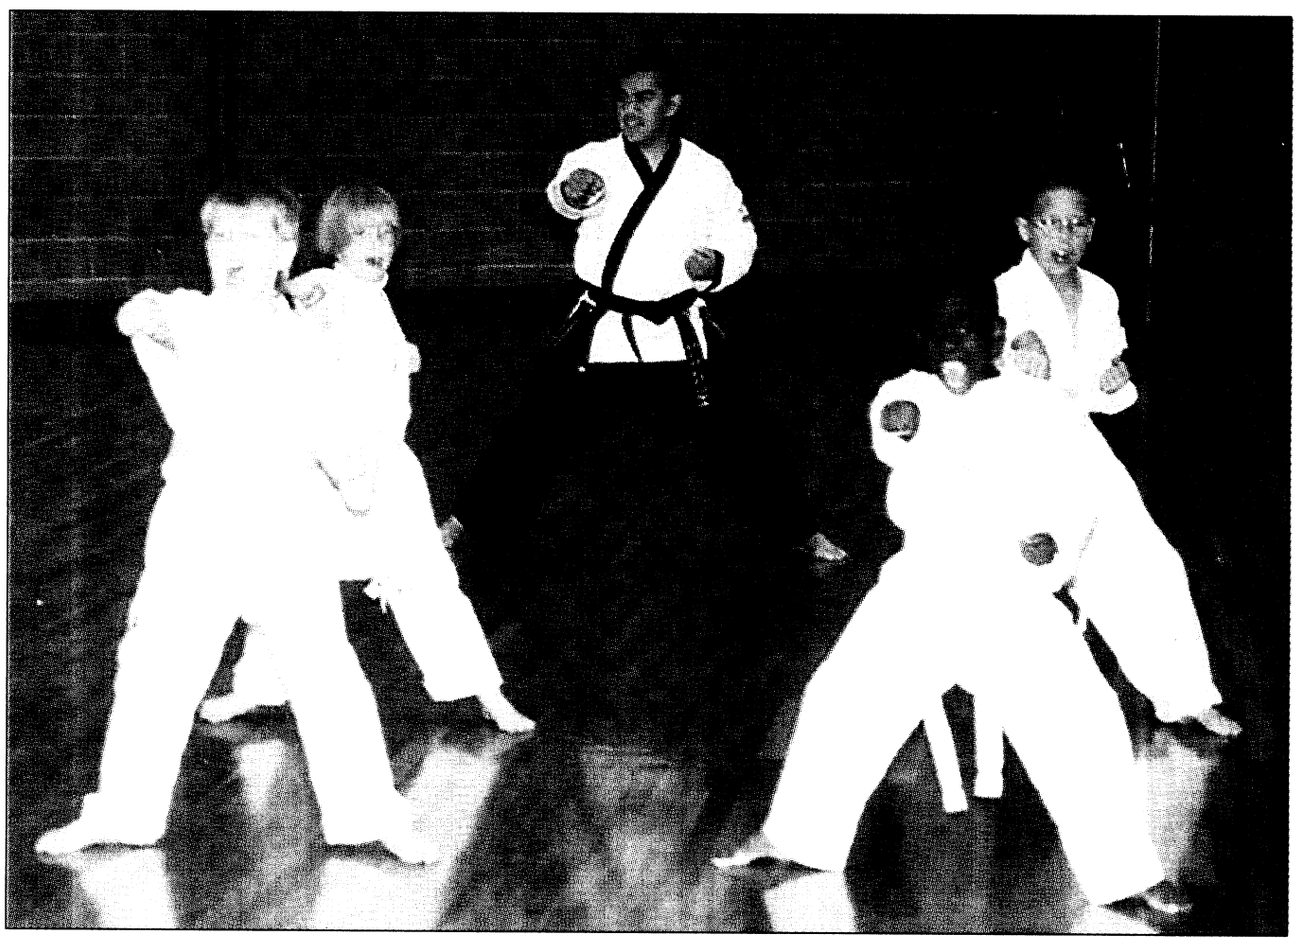
Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Integrity, honor, perseverance and discipline are encouraged routinely and are an important aspect of Tae Kwon Do instruction held at Youth Services (YS). Scott Romiza, a 2nd Degree Black Belt in Korean Tae Kwon Do and 3rd Degree Black Belt in Okinawan Uechi Ryu Karate is the newest addition to the YS program and has always enjoyed teaching Tae Kwon Do.

"Tae Kwon Do adds a different dimension of physical and mental training for children and adults," Romiza said. "I combine modern Tae Kwon Do along with the conditioning aspects of Uechi Ryu Karate to well round my classes."

Ramiza said taking this type of instruction helps re-enforce basics such as respect, honor and discipline. Discipline is an important part of his class.

"I have a young student who began Tae Kwon Do with average to poor grades and over time he has learned more about what discipline means and was able to increase his focus at school. He has raised his grades substantially."



Linda Laine, sports director at YS, added a second instructor to provide an enhanced program for its customers.

"The addition of a second instructor benefits everyone involved with the program or anyone interested in starting Tae Kwon Do," Laine added. "Customers are able to attend classes easier because the two instructors operate on different days which allows a choice for people with busy schedules."

Felix Devila, a 3rd Degree Black Belt in both Tae Kwon Do and Hapkido is in his sixth year of teaching at YS and combines both Korean systems to provide well-rounded instruction to his students.

"I teach the art by combining the sport side of Tae Kwon Do along with the traditional training," Devila said.

"Tae Kwon Do teaches medium range fighting using fists, legs and feet; Hapkido teaches medium range fighting along with grappling which includes fighting on the ground, like wrestling."

James Bennett, instructor at Youth Services assists students as he instructs them on the techniques of Tae Kwon Do during a class.

Devila is a member of the World Tae Kwon Do Federation and prepares his students for competition at local and state tournaments.

For the past three years he has taken Fort Benning youths who qualified to the Junior Olympic Tournament. In order to qualify for the Junior Olympics the student must be a green belt, under the age of 17 and have won for his age and level competition at the state tournament.

The students must be physically ready for competition, which takes a great deal of discipline.

"The students must be prepared to fight for three rounds lasting three minutes each," Devila said. "Sometimes a student may need to fight up to five bouts in a row so physical fitness plays an important role in this arena but also in life."

"Devila is an exceptional instruction and has a great deal of patience when dealing with the children," said Stephanie Coolly.

"My son Christopher has asthma and this class has helped him learn to breathe along with reinforcing his self esteem."

Tae Kwon Do instruction is offered on Monday and Wednesday with Romiza and Tuesday and Thursday with Devila at the Main Post YS Center.

Those who are interested my join Tae Kwon Do for $30 a month. Dates and times may vary according to age.

To register or obtain more information, call Linda Laine at 545-3070.

Students are trained to use mental skills along with physical techniques.

'Elite athlete' tries out for Army boxing team

Brian Lepley
Army News Service

Few people join the Army to get rich. Rondale Mason hopes to be one of them.

Mason, of Columbus, Ohio, completes basic training at Fort Sill, Okla., the second week of February. After Advanced Individual Training at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, he reports to Fort Carson, Colo., to try out for the Army Boxing Team.

"I basically got into this (boxing) to make a lot of money," the 19-year-old said before shipping to basic. "I wanted to be like Mike Tyson and make the most money you could make."

Sgt. Byron Moore, the Army boxing coach, awaits Mason. The two first met at the U.S. Amateur Championships in January 1997 then four months later at the U.S. versus Mexico match. Both events happened at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs. In May, Moore showed Mason the Army facilities at Fort Carson.

"Rondale is an elite athlete. With us providing the training, he has the potential to make the 2000 Olympic team," Moore said. "He has excellent boxing skills and I'm glad he made the decision to come to us."

The Army was one avenue Mason considered in his quest to become a professional boxer. After meeting Moore, the teenage boxer was impressed. "I saw that the same methods used at the Olympic camp were the ones Coach Moore used," Mason said. "I thought that was impressive."

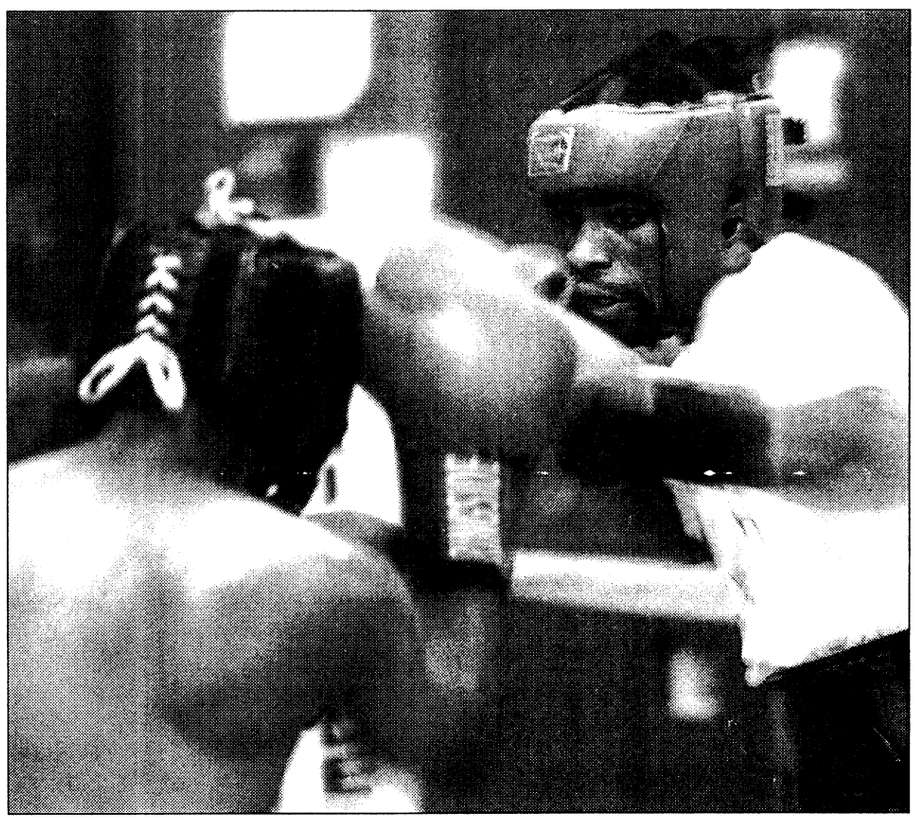
Mason's coach in Columbus, Vonzell Johnson, has put young men in Golden Gloves tournaments for 14 years. He knows Mason must step out of his program to get farther.

"He's a product of my program; I want him to exceed my standards and get to the Olympics," Johnson said. "He has a lot of God-given talent and always kept himself in tip-top shape. He's been the best worker I've ever had."

Staff Sgt. Douglas Milford, Mason's recruiter, knew nothing of Mason's athletic talents. Ali Milford saw was an Independence High School senior who needed to be contacted about Army opportunity.

"I first called him off our junior list. He listened but didn't seem interested initially," Milford said. After that contact, Mason traveled to matches and met Moore. Mason said he began serious discussion about enlisting in December 1997.

"I didn't want to go to college. I wanted to take the best shot at the Olympics and the Army gives me that," Mason said. "It didn't take long to think about it; the benefits, the travel, the experience, is what's best for me."



Johnson reminded his boxer that, the ring aside, Mason has a responsibility to the Army. "The Army is a good opportunity for him as far as advantages like education, but I told him there's more than boxing," Johnson said. "If things don't work out for him as far as boxing, he knows he has an obligation to his country."

Mason has handled basic training well, his mother Rozalene Mason said. "He's told me he loves it; loves the lifestyle, everything he's doing," she said. "I think it's the greatest decision he's made in his life. This is an important time in his life — he's a boy becoming a man — and he needs this discipline. Rondale really likes the Army boxing coach and the Army will be very good for him."

Mrs. Mason doesn't exhibit the stereotypical instinct of a mother terrified for her son going to the Army. Her son's brains and maturity will serve him well.

"He was a straight 'A' student and his teachers loved him. He's been a blessing from God to me — no drugs, no street life, no children," she said.

"He's been the best son. Being in the Army, being part of a team, having that unity with other young men, will be important for him."

West Point grad earns runner of year honors

Harriet Rice

Alexandria, Va. — Fleet-footed 2nd Lt. Dan Browne ended his 1998 racing season by winning the Gator Bowl Rockin' the River 5-K race Dec. 31 in 13:05 - by one 100th of a second.

As he crossed the finish line in Jacksonville, Fla., the 23-year-old West Point graduate raised his open hand to signify the five titles he won this year. The other firsts were in 4-K cross country, indoor 3,000-meter, outdoor 10,000-meter, and 10-K road races. The last man to win more than three U.S. distance running titles in the same year was a civilian named Ed Eyestone who won four road titles in 1993.

For his season finale, the Oregon native, who also won his second Army 10-Miler in 1998, was named Runner's World magazine American Male Runner of the Year out of thousands of runners eligible for the honor.

"That's probably the biggest accolade I've received to date in my running career. I'm excited that this has been such a good year — my first year training at altitude. It's really neat to see the fruits of my labor coming to fruition," he said with a breathless laugh, obviously thrilled.

What is it that makes Dan Browne so fast?

"I train hard. I train to race, and I race to win," Browne answered without hesitation. He is totally focused on the 2000 Olympics. "I'm taking the steps leading to 2000. That's what it's all about: continuous improvement. There's no looking back. I've got my eyes set on the mountain ahead of me and I'm charging up the hill as fast as I can."

A member of the Army's World Class Athlete Program based at Fort Carson, Colo., Browne trains in Boulder with coach Rich Castro along with a dozen other runners, all WCAP members.

"I have always found leading by example is the best way to do things. I continually try to lift them up and keep them excited about running," said Browne.

Safety first

Reflective gear makes difference between life, death

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

You probably won't find supermodels prancing down the runway sporting the latest in roadguard vests and reflective belts, but then the world of fashion isn't exactly concerned with safety. On that same note, people who plan to take to Fort Benning's roadways shouldn't be worried about making a fashion statement if it means the difference between life and death.

When most people think of reflective gear, they probably primarily associate its use with Soldiers during physical training (PT) in the early morning hours. But, for anyone who walks, runs, rides a bike or motorcycle during the day or night, brightly colored reflective vests, belts and bands should be the norm and both Army and post regulations have strict rules about when and where reflective gear should be worn.

U.S. Infantry Center (USAIC) regulation 210-5 states that anyone utilizing post roadways for jogging, running or walking who are not part of a military formation must wear bright-colored clothing during daylight and reflective clothing, safety vests or reflective sashes with arm bands and leg bands during times of limited visibility.

Along with a list of requirements governing the use of bikes and motorcycles, Army regulation 385-55 makes it clear that anyone who rides a bike or motorcycle is required to wear a reflective vest at all times.

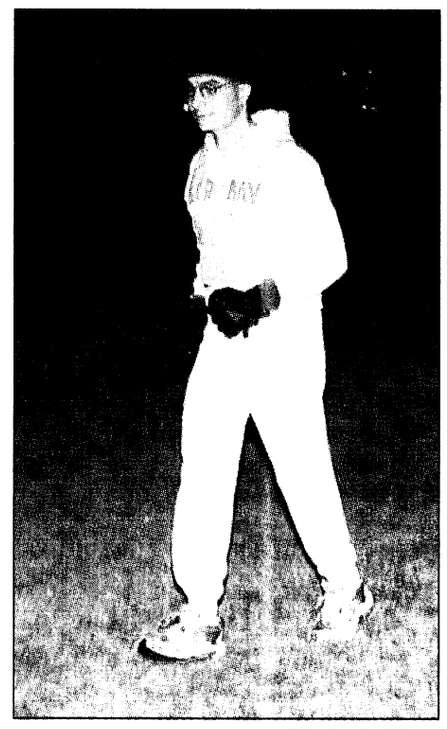
According to Fort Benning's Safety Manager Regis Beighley, the wear of reflective gear nearly triples a person's chance of being seen on the roadway which significantly decreases the chances of being hurt or killed.

"We are most vulnerable when out in the roadway, because a lot of times people driving cars just don't notice someone along the road," Beighley said. "Most often they just don't expect someone to be on the roadway."

Beighley added that reflective gear doesn't just protect people from being hit by cars, but may also save their lives in other instances such as that of heat injury. He said if someone were to suffer a heat injury and fall away from the road, chances of being seen and receiving medical attention are increased if they are wearing some kind of reflective gear.

Beighley warns drivers and those on the roadways to be especially careful at dawn and dusk.

"Probably the worst time for people on roadways is at dusk and dawn, because that's when drivers' eyes aren't accustomed to the change in light," Beighley said. "There are also so many distractions such as cellular phones and radios that make it much more possible someone on the road won't be seen. All it takes is for you to swerve a little bit and you've taken someone's life."



Although Fort Benning hasn't had an accident involving someone being struck by a car in more than two years, that doesn't mean there haven't been close calls or that reflective gear isn't necessary, said Chief of Law Enforcement Lt. Col. Ronald K. Jones.

Jones said Fort Benning is lucky that no one has been seriously injured or killed, but attributes much of the success to Operation Slow Down and the MPs watchful eyes over designated running areas.

However, he said it is most often the times after morning PT when individual runners are out and not being careful when problems can occur.

"Most unit PT functions are well supervised so there usually isn't too much danger involved there," Jones said. "However, what becomes really dangerous

Ceremony honors civil rights activist

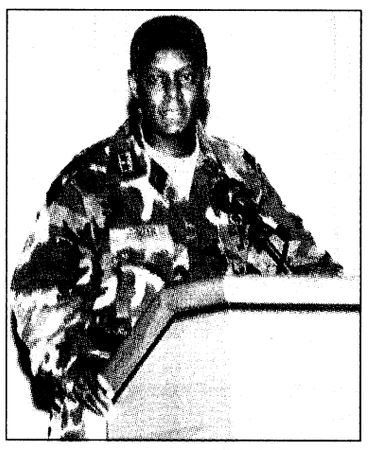
Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

"Civil Rights Today for a Better Tomorrow" was the theme of the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Commemorative Celebration held in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall on Jan 15.

The annual ceremony was first held in 1986, which marked the beginning of the official national observance of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday. This year's ceremony included performances by the Infantry Band, the principles of nonviolence read by Faith Middle School students, a song by Celeste Lee and the Kendrick High School Chorus.

"Violence as a way of achieving racial justice is both impractical and immoral," said Master Sgt. Jose R. Morales, NCOIC of the equal opportunity office in his opening remarks. "Violence is immoral because it seeks to humiliate the opponent rather than win his or her understanding and thrives on hatred rather than love."

Morales said that King applied six principles of nonviolence in his quest for civil rights and racial harmony for all Americans.



"Nonviolence is a way of life for courageous people," said Natasha Bennett, one of six students from Faith Middle School who read the principles of nonviolence as part of the opening ceremonies.

Guest speaker Maj. Gen. Milton Hunter, Director of Military Programs, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, spoke to an audience of more than 300 about the significant contributions made by King throughout his life.

"At a time when society was divided by local laws and segregation, and by collective and individual prejudice, Dr. King went to the plate and stood up for change," Hunter said. "When he spoke about change within the society in which he lived, Dr. King was able to look beyond to a brighter future for generations to come."

Hunter reminisced about times when he was a child living in a society divided by racial inequality and the questions formulated in his mind as a child.

"Although I was a young boy, I remember the rules and the signs 'white only' or 'coloreds only' and I clearly remember the mood of our country," Hunter said. "The signs were in virtually every public facility (cafeterias, drinking fountains, hospitals, buses and schools) and I wondered at that time, could there be something different about the water or does each hospital have special blood?"

Michele E. Hanson

Maj. Gen. Milton Hunter speaks to the audience about King's contributions.

Hunter talked about how far we have come as a society since that time and how much advancement has been made in equality for all people since King's death more than 30 years ago.

"As we celebrate Dr. King's 70th birthday, we need to remember what he stood for and the legacy he left for us to fulfill," Hunter said. "Our children and grandchildren will learn from the actions we take as a society today and that is why it is important to know and remember where we came from as a nation and as a people."

Benning ready to defend title

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army Communities of Excellence (ACOE) Army Performance Improvement Criteria (APIC) Evaluation Team will arrive on post Sunday for a week-long visit.

During their on-site visit, the team will be verifying and clarifying the contents of the post's 1999 ACOE self-assessment packet. The team will also be capturing best practices to share with other Army installations.

Continuing a tradition of excellence, Fort Benning will again compete for the Chief of Staff of the Army (CSA) Award for Installation Excellence for the seventh consecutive year and the Commander-in-Chief's Award for the fourth time this century.

Team members are: Brig. Gen. Naman X. Barnes, State Area Command , Maryland Army National Guard; William R. Epprecht, 279th Base Support Battalion, Bamberg, Germany; Harlan B. Groover, U.S. Forces Command, Fort McPherson, Ga.; I. Jean Sutherland, Yuma Proving Ground, Ariz; Sgt. Maj. Ruth A. Labhart, U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Command, St. Louis, Mo.; and Maj. Kenneth A. Koon, Madison, Wis.

"Fort Benning is the best; we know that, now let's prove it to the ACOE team," said Sarah McLaney, chief of the Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management. "This is our last chance to win before the new millennium. Teamwork is critical to winning the award and we are the 'Team of Teams' — Together Everyone Accomplishes More (TEAM). Hooah!"

Engineers rebuild medical clinic

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

When Hurricane Mitch stomped through Central America, the heavy rains swelled the Rio Coco, the river that separates Nicaragua from Honduras. The river grew and flooded the communities located beside this important resource. In two days, the river rose about 30 feet, filling houses with thick mud and forcing families to evacuate to higher ground.

In Wiwili, Nicaragua, nearly 300 buildings were filled with mud, said Maj. Jeff Eckstein, a design engineer with the 36th Engineer Group and Joint Task Force Build Hope.

"You can go into a room now and see a sink that looks like it's about eight inches off the floor because there's about three feet of mud in there," Eckstein said. The greatest loss to the Wiwili community was a hospital that had an annual patient load of about 60,000.

"People would travel for two days to get medical treatment up there," Eckstein said. The doctors were also left homeless. "All of the instruments they had were destroyed or contaminated."

Building a replacement medical clinic and a building to house the doctors may be one of the more critical projects the 36th Eng. Grp. can accomplish while in Nicaragua. Soldiers from the 46th Engineer Battalion, Fort Polk, La. and other engineering and medical specialists are now busy restoring medical capabilities to this village. The two 30-foot by 84-foot buildings are being erected on an old baseball field on higher ground.

The design work for this project was accomplished by engineers of the 36th Eng. Grp. Deployed with a van full of computer equipment and architectural software, these engineers survey and assess what materials are required when conducting construction on roads and buildings.

This separate unit helps speed up construction work, by having the resources already in place for engineers assigned the project, Eckstein said.

"If everything goes as planned, the materials will be delivered the same time the construction unit arrives to do the work. When they get here, they don't have to go out and do an assessment and order materials."

The unit's typical mission is to design U.S. military projects, such as base camps and logistical supply routes. Members of the unit have deployed to Bosnia and have been involved in several projects in the U.S. The Wiwili clinic is a challenging mission, said technical engineer Spc. Erik Panther.

"The Wiwili facility has been a good project, because we were able to take it from the beginning and

Mother finds solution to priority problem

commentary

For the past 13 years (which happens to coincide with the birth of my first child and two more shortly thereafter) I have vowed to take better care of myself.

Each year my goal has been the same: set aside a little bit of time from my hectic schedule and participate in some form of physical training. As a mom, athlete and athletic trainer, I know how important proper diet and exercise are in maintaining good health but I never imagined how difficult accomplishing this simple goal would become.

I'm sure many people think this resolution is attainable; however, many women who embark on the mission of being a good mother or 'supermom,' know that making time for yourself is extremely difficult, if not impossible.

My beloved husband restates his words of wisdom "just do it" every time I mention my exercise dilemma. He sounds like a familiar commercial and would have a valid point if I were Samantha from the old television show Bewitched. Then, every time I wanted to exercise, I would simply wiggle my nose and make my endless list of duties vanish. My list, by the way, is like the pink, battery bunny: it keeps going and going and going and doesn't seem to be gearing down.

I told a friend recently that I would appear to be an idiot if I stated in my commentary that I don't have time to run three times a week. Seriously, how long can running take in my condition? It's not like I'm running marathons; I can barely make it through the Follow Me Fitness Trail (at a snail's pace) without feeling like Fred Sanford.

The truth of the matter is, my heart is always in the right place and the problem is not my inability to follow through with my workout resolution, but my high level of commitment to family. This commitment includes being superwoman (without the physical characteristics, of course), mother, wife, Bayonet writer, volunteer, gardener, housekeeper, public transporter, cook, dishwasher, banker, tutor, pet maintenance specialist, baker, nurse, counselor, Molly McMaid, waitress, mechanic, carpenter and craft queen.

People who know me well say I am the busiest person they have ever known. After all, how many people travel 120 miles a day transporting kids and never leave Columbus? No, not a fool, just little ole me who is getting steadily larger and more unhealthy as the years role on. I get up at 5:30 a.m. and hit the hay about 11:00 p.m. so how can I squeeze in physical training? Well, I'm not a Ranger student (and never want to be) so getting up even earlier is not an option. Since cloning and duplication are out of the question, I will have to set new priorities that place me a little higher on the totem pole so I can take better care of myself. I will learn to say "no" periodically and put off the things that are relatively unimportant in the scheme of life. I probably don't need to vacuum every day, right?

I read an article when I was in college that stated only five percent of American women work out and of them only one percent work out on a regular basis. I remember thinking that the author must have been misinformed or off his rocker. Now that my life has progressed past my selfish, childless years, I can totally relate. In the past I have been unable to stick to a healthier regime, but this year will be different — I think.

Pedestrians should be aware of surroundings

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

Something happened to me awhile back that scared the heck out of me. It was one of those incidents where you swear your heart jumped out of your body. I guess it made me aware of safety issues and how they relate to everyone, including myself.

It all happened one night after I had just gotten off work. I was driving in one of the more poorly-lighted areas of post and almost hit someone with my car. Okay, so "almost" is probably not the right word, considering it was dark out and I could practically count this person's nose hairs. Although I was going under 10 miles-per-hour, the fact is if this person hadn't jumped a little to the left, he would have been hurt and I would probably be in a lot of trouble right now.

One thing's for sure: I will never forget the look of sheer terror on that person's face or how I felt when I realized I could have done some damage. And even though I hold myself mostly responsible for what happened, when I examine the situation I find that we are both responsible in some way.

You see, I'm pretty sure that this person saw me coming. I wasn't going that fast and I did have my headlights on, but he still proceeded without caution. He probably figured since he was the pedestrian he had the right of way, and I suppose he's right.

However, you can only be a pedestrian with the right of way if the person who's driving can see you.

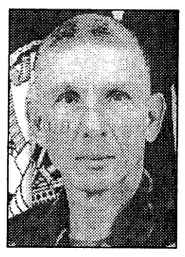
This is the part where I give the Army lots of credit. I can testify to the fact that BDUs do work and people who wear them blend in, especially in extreme darkness. I know this because I didn't even see the potential victim until he was practically squashed against my windshield.

This brings me to an issue I want to stress. Those who wear BDUs when there is darkness must be extra careful if they plan to frolic around post. I know lots of Soldiers, including myself, who think that to wear BDUs is to be invincible. Well, I'm here to confirm that this is totally not true. While BDUs improve our chance of survival on the battlefield, it's when the sun goes down on post that our camouflage status can become fatal.

Although there are no strict rules about wearing reflective gear while in BDUs when it's dark, it just makes sense. It also makes sense to walk on the sidewalks and take extra precautions when crossing the street.

Of course, this goes both ways. Drivers need to be aware of the lurking shadows and adjust their driving accordingly.

All of these principles can be applied to us when we are wearing civilian clothing, too. Whether we are exercising, walking the family pet or just going for a midnight stroll, we need to take precautions. We must also remember our loved ones and take the same precautions for children and animals.



Everything from roadguard vests, light-colored clothing, chem. lights, glow-in-the-dark spray to sequins, sparklers and tinsel can be used to help make visibility possible.

Being creative helps detract from the fact that you look a little absurd. However, I would say the best way to stay safe is just to use common sense and realize that with the darkness comes dangers of all types.

I hope everyone thinks a little bit harder about safety and what it means to them, because I would hate to one day hear about someone getting hit and killed on post.

I would also hate for it to become post policy to plaster yourself in reflective tape before attempting to go anywhere at night or early morning, which is probably the next step if someone ends up getting injured or killed.

Hard work pays off for campaign

The 1998 Combined Federal Campaign was one of the best in memory. Thanks to your hard work and dedication we were able to raise more than $545,000. It's evident that Fort Benning takes this campaign very seriously and for all the right reasons. The money you collected will provide an immense benefit to many people in need, both on Fort Benning and in our local community.

I want to personally thank the commanders, command sergeants major, directors and key persons who had the challenging job of directly contacting potential givers. I especially want to thank those of you who donated money to the many worthwhile causes this campaign represents.

Again, I am extremely happy to pass my congratulations on to you. Thank you for making us all proud.

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Entomologists help keep bug population down

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Anyone who has slept out in the open has heard that irritating, high-pitched, buzzing noise — a hungry mosquito looking for a late night snack. It always sounds like the pest is flying right inside the ear and there seems like there's no escape.

In Nicaragua, there is defense against this tiny enemy that would otherwise plague the members of Joint Task Force Build Hope. Naval entomologists from the Navy Disease Vector Ecology Control Center, Bangor, Wash. is the JTF's ally in this miniature war.

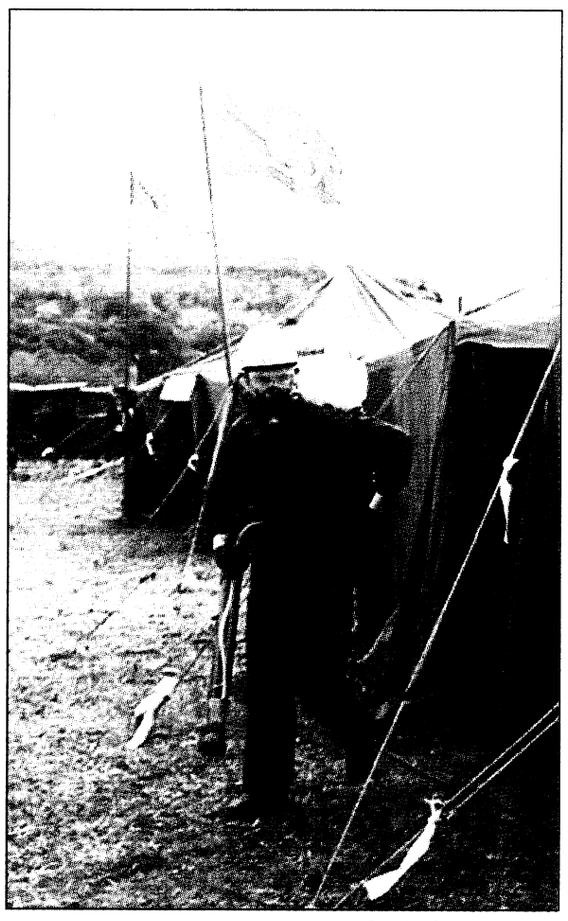
Armed with big sprayers of deet and other weapons, the sailors are helping to keep the bug population down.

"This is the best experience you can ask for, seeing the problem right up front rather than reading about it in a textbook," said Lt. JG Pete Obenauer about his unit's mission.

The rains of Hurricane Mitch created many pools of standing water where mosquito larvae formed. Mosquitoes are known carriers of such diseases as malaria, dengue and encephalitis.

The team first surveyed the work and billet areas to determine if mosquitoes were carrying any of the possible diseases, Obenauer said. After a study of the area and mosquitoes, the team sprayed the spots to decrease the population.

"The first thing is to make sure everybody has protection," Obenauer said. This means ensuring the troops are using mosquito netting and a deet-based bug deterrent. "A lot of people don't know anything about malaria and that it's spread by mosquitoes," he said.



Large insecticide sprayers were used to treat the inside of tents at the base camps. The team also sprayed uniforms of some troops with a chemical that keeps mosquitoes away.

Scorpions, tarantulas, rodents and snakes are other pests the team has to manage, Obenauer said.

"We've come across some interesting organisms and specimens," Obenauer described. "We found a small Central American boa constrictor and there's been several people who've come across scorpions. Make sure you shake your boots out."

In their early studies, the team hadn't discovered a wide scale disease problem, said hospital corpsmen, Navy Chief Petty Officer Charles Purdin, but troops don't like getting bit by mosquitoes.

"It was a morale thing," Purdin said. "When we first got here, people were complaining about mosquito bites. We went into one area and the larvae was so thick, we scooped it up."

A member of the preventive medicine staff sprays insecticide in the tents of a Marine unit.

Purdin said the team usually preaches about safety and doesn't get the opportunity to use their spraying equipment, a mission that has been taken over by civilian government workers.

"In the states, everything is usually contracted or it's a GS position," Purdin explained. "This is the only opportunity that we can go forward, to actually break out our equipment and use pesticides."

Purdin said he also credits his allies, members of the preventive medicine unit who check the food and water used by task force troops. The entomologists and preventive medicine personnel were all sent to JTF Build Hope by the Naval Environmental Health Center, Norfolk, Va.

"If we do our job right, no one knows we're here," Purdin said about the unit's behind-the-scenes status. The entomologists teach at the Naval Health School, San Diego, Calif. The information gathered in this mission will serve to educate future entomologists, Purdin said.

"We're taking photos all of the time of our different spray missions and we can provide experience to the guys who will be taking our place."

Community takes part in parade

Helping to keep the "Dream Alive," hundreds of people gathered in downtown Columbus Saturday for the Unity Parade, a celebration in honor of Martin Luther King Jr.

An array of colors, music and inspirational words were part of what the over 150 organizations who participated in the parade gave the cheering citizens of Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning.

Leading the parade while playing the Army Song was the Fort Benning Infantry Band. Not to be outdone, every local high school band performed magnificently, causing the people to join with dancing celebration.

"It makes me feel real good that something for Martin Luther King Jr. is being done here — especially a parade," said Staff Sgt. Maurice Cole, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade.

The Smithville, N.C. native said he liked the camaraderie he saw and hopes to help out in next year's parade.

"Martin Luther King Jr. was the point of emphasis for African-Americans — a voice to be heard in America," he said. "What we do now will affect what we do in the future."

U.S. Army School of the Americas children ride on a float during the Unity Parade in honor of Martin Luther King Jr. Saturday in downtown Columbus.

Saturday's parade exemplified what Martin Luther King Jr. stood for, "equality for all races," said Spc. April Johnson, U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

"He was the founding father of the Civil Rights movement," she said. "Without his contribution we wouldn't be where we are today."

Amongst the several floats that paraded for the people was USARSA's "Unity in the Community" float.

"It's important for us to participate in this parade because we are part of this diverse community," said Cecilia Alexander, USARSA, International Military Student Officer. "We are sharing Dr. King's dream — we are all the same."

Alexander said the parade gave the Latin American children who rode on the float an opportunity to share the dream.

The one-and-a-half-mile parade route stretched across the Chattahoochee River from Broad Street in Phenix City to Broadway in downtown Columbus.

JTF: Soldiers aid

run with it," Panther said. "We did the basic information gathering, the design and then went back and laid it out."

Panther said the project was special in that it was for a humanitarian purpose, instead of the typical combat support mission.

The group doesn't often get the chance to work on building design, what is considered vertical construction, said design unit member 1st Lt. Sean Scott.

"This was a good, all-encompassing project, because it got our surveyors and designers involved," Scott said. "With a lot of our projects, one guy gets handed the job and he takes it from start to finish."

The design van is parked beside the JTF headquarters in Managua. The Wiwili project is far to the north, in a valley covered by trees. Materials and construction had to be sling-loaded into the job site.

The construction of the medical clinic is one element of the Wiwili mission which also includes assistance from U.S. preventive medicine personnel, said Capt. Dennis Kellen, 261st Area Support Medical Battalion, Fort Bragg, N.C. Kellen commands the force of 75 at Wiwili.

"We have medical personnel on ground to provide assistance to the military and conduct humanitarian assistance missions," Kellen explained. During an organization meeting, Wiwili officials notified Kellen of a nearby town that had about 300 cases of cholera.

Malaria was also on the increase, Kellen said, from the increased breeding of mosquitoes in the standing flood waters. Preventive medicine units sprayed the areas to decrease the mosquito population.

While the construction and medical mission continues in Wiwili, the relationship between the U.S. forces and the local community may prove to be the most important outcome of the mission, said Capt. Juan Arango of the 350th Civil Affairs Command.

"It has been about 20 years since someone from the American forces has been here in Nicaragua, so it's great that we're coming back in a humanitarian effort," he said.

Safety: Gear helps is the people jogging with headphones and the individual runners who have a feeling of invincibility because they are on post."

In fact, Jones recalled an incident involving himself where a family member who wasn't wearing reflective gear had headphones on and was pushing a baby stroller, and darted out in front of his car, causing him to have to lock up his brakes.

Jones said anyone who is caught not biding by the regulations will be stopped whether they are on bike or foot and will either receive a warning or an Armed Forces traffic ticket which is sent to that person's or their sponsor's commander.

According to Beighley, what it all boils down to is the use of reflective gear which can only be effective if the person is taking other precautions to be safe.

Beighley said some guidelines to staying safe while running, jogging or walking include keeping to sidewalks, provided there is no interference with pedestrian traffic. If people are on roadways always run against the flow of traffic staying as far left as possible. It is advised that people avoid streets with heavy traffic and run in single files when jogging with others. He also said the use of head phones or ear phones while running, jogging or walking is prohibited on installation streets and roads.

"Courtesy, cooperation and common sense on the roadways of Fort Benning can ensure the safety of everyone," Beighley said.

Cadet Ralph Robinson explains to Cadet Mickey Ledwick the fundamentals of Infantry squad tactics during the field training exercise Jan. 14. Robinson, a Green to Gold recipient, serves as a mentor for younger cadets in Columbus State's ROTC program applying the skills he learned on active-duty to the tactics he teaches as a ROTC cadet.

Sergeant turns cadet with ROTC program

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

He was one of the Army's finest NCOs. He held the rank of sergeant, bore a Ranger Tab and had a strong will to put Soldiers first. He was what every NCO was supposed to be, devoted and loyal to his country, the Army and his unit, the 75th Ranger Regiment.

But three years ago, he turned in his stripes and left active duty to participate in a program that would be the key to making his dream come true.

Daniel C. Wood II was going to back to school.

He was determined to earn what he had envisioned for himself for years, a commission as an officer in the Army he had served so proudly the years before. But Wood's enlistment wasn't up and going back to school as one of the Army's quick reactionary forces wasn't an option, however, that was not a concern to the then 23-year-old because he had been selected as the recipient of an all-expense paid trip to the land of academia.

He had won a Green to Gold Scholarship, a ticket that would send him on his way to realizing his dream.

It is now more than three years after that day when Wood was awarded his opportunity to transform his dreams into reality. The two silver diamonds that don his collar signify he is the cadet battalion commander, revealing the success of the enlisted leader-turned-America's top Army ROTC cadet.

"I knew what my goals were and this was a way to accomplish them," he said as he reflected upon his decision to accept the Green to Gold Scholarship. "I knew in order to get what I wanted out of the military, I had to put a lot into it."

Putting a lot into it is something that is not an unfamiliar approach for this Soldier and Dean's List Student; however, he said his method was never tested more than during the first six months of his return to academia.

"It was a complete culture shock," he said about his transformation process. "For almost four years I had been in an environment where the focus was defense of the constitution."

"We didn't think about 'How do you work this algebra problem?'" he said jokingly. "The Rangers just weren't geared to that type of training."

Facing these new challenges of equation and deciphering were minor though compared to the obstacle that awaited this field-trained Soldier.

"On the first day of classes, I had only been off active duty for about a week, still had my real sharp high and tight. I stood out like a sore thumb, but I was in a different environment with 18-year-old kids right out of high school compared to the Soldiers I was used to," he said. "They just couldn't relate, and I became almost cynical towards that environment."

"It took me nearly six months to actually adapt to being a civilian," he said. "Luckily, I had ROTC to fill that void that opened when I left active duty. I could still put on the uniform and get the feel of being in the military."

The quest to fill that void, according to Wood, did more for his career than anything else.

"I was missing that camaraderie of the close-knit family I was used to in the Ranger Battalion, and I found that the Ranger Challenge Team here helped me to have that family I was missing, not to mention help me relax a little with some of my teammates and get back into that civilian mode."

Wood said the camaraderie he was introduced to in the Ranger Challenge Team served as a foundation he has built upon ever since.

"The friendship I built in those first few months really established my interest and dedication to the program," he said.

That devotion has taken him through the ranks of the 45-member Cougar Cadet Battalion at Columbus State University, ranking him as the battalion's top cadet, cadet lieutenant colonel, cadet battalion commander.

"He is a great leader," said Lt. Col. Gery B. Truitt, Professor of Military Science at Columbus State. "He exemplifies everything an effective officer should be and more."

Cadet Jamal DeSaussure, a Green to Gold scholarship recipient, takes cover behind a tree during a field training exercise designed to prepare juniors for ROTC's Advanced Camp.

"He is a valuable asset to the battalion and is sure to be an asset to where ever he may be assigned."

Wood's potential for becoming an effective officer was tested last summer during the program's required summer training exercise that evaluates a cadet's leadership potential and other contributing qualities that are required of today's modern officer.

The exercise is called Advanced Camp, and according to Wood, his success at the exercise established him as the number one cadet in the nation.

"Advanced Camp is very similar to PLDC," he said. "People are given leadership positions and evaluated on a point basis. I was awarded 948 points out of the possible 1,000 which earned me the top rating."

Wood, who will graduate with his master's degree in public administration in May, was told earlier this month that he will be branched as an intelligence officer, but he has yet to decide a date to attend the required officer basic course.

As to whether Wood will continue his quest for success to the stars of a general, he said he has no plans for that far out, but said he was going to work as long as he is happy in what he is doing.

"I don't view success by how much money you make or what kind of things you have," he said. "It is all about happiness. If someday I decide that this is no longer making me happy, that will be the end of it, but no matter what I do, even if it is flipping hamburgers, I'm going to be happy."

Program turns Green to Gold

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Army ROTC is looking for a few good Soldiers with officer potential to join the ranks of the commanding, the Army's officer corps.

Soldiers presently serving on active duty can take advantage of this opportunity by applying for the Army's Green to Gold program that allows Soldiers to turn in their stripes for a bar.

"We are looking for talented enlisted Soldiers with officer potential to enroll in ROTC, earn a bachelor's degree and earn a commission as a second lieutenant," said Capt. Irvin Pete, recruiting officer for Columbus State University's Army ROTC program. "And in some cases, the Army will even pay for the transition from Soldier to student."

The program is broken down into two main categories, Pete said, one being the scholarship option and the other being the non-scholarship route.

The scholarship option allows Soldiers to enter a school of their choice anywhere in the nation that hosts a ROTC program and the government will pick up the tab for tuition and a $110 stipend a month to help offset the cost for books and other educational expenses.

Soldiers desiring to participate in this option must have a GT score of 110 or higher (except four-year scholarships), be on active duty as of June 1 the year the scholarship is awarded, be under the age of 27 on June 30 the year when commissioned (this may be extended three years, one year for each year of active duty) must have a minimum ACT score of 19 or a SAT score of 920, must have completed two years of service, obtain a letter of acceptance from the college they plan to attend and at least a 2.5 GPA on all college work. Soldiers must also have a letter of acceptance from the professor of military science, a letter of recommendation from the Soldier's commander and time in service may not exceed 10 years.

Soldiers applying for the scholarship need to submit their application prior to the March 15 deadline.

The non-scholarship option qualifications are the same as the scholarship option with the exception that there are no SAT and ACT requirements and the GPA minimum is reduced to 2.0.

"Both options give Soldiers the opportunity to obtain their commission by going to school full time once they are released from active duty," Pete said. "It is not an easy process, but it is something that will pay off for those considering it."

That process requires Soldiers, once they have completed the college's application process and obtained the required letter from the school's professor of military science, to submit a personnel actions form to their chain of command asking for early release from active duty to participate in the ROTC program.

"We here at Columbus State are responsible for processing applications and assisting Soldiers who are interested in the program no matter where they decide to go to school," Pete said. "I encourage any one even thinking about the program to look it over and give me a call to talk about qualifications."

Columbus State has established a hotline for the Green to Gold program that lists all qualifications and along with information on how to obtain and begin the application process. The number, which can be reached 24 hours a day, is 565-3418.

Pete said information can also be obtained from AR 145-1 and AR 635-200, Chapter 16-2, the Education Center and through the Soldier's chain of command.

For additional information, call Pete at 568-2058.

Candidates experience leadership training

OC John W. Shermer
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Under a cloud of CS Riot Gas, the Intermediate Officer Candidates from Fort Benning's Officer Candidate School (OCS) Class 1-99 kicked off a morning attack on a location near Detrow Hill, culminating their field exercise and bringing them within days of the coveted Senior Status.

The Detrow Hill Offensive was part of a week long field exercise. Candidates from the four student platoons moved across Fort Benning and back again conducting raids, ambushes and movement to contact, as well as patrol base procedures, digging into a defense and assembly area procedures.

Perhaps this experience is no big deal here at the home of the Infantry, but for many, these proceedings were new ground, particularly for the candidates who were not branched combat arms or did not come from a combat arms community prior to being accepted to OCS.

Though Infantry skills were learned under realistic conditions, the point of the field exercise was not to necessarily teach Infantry tactics, but to apply leadership skills learned during the first two months of training. After each field operation, there was an After Action Review and then the officer candidates received a written fragmentary order concerning their next mission.

Concerning leadership skills used, Candidate Everett Slack said, "Keeping subordinates informed was vital to morale."

Complicating the problems with moral were conditions of rain and temperatures that dropped to the single digits for a significant part of the exercise.

Within a month, the candidates from this field exercise will be commissioned as 2nd Lieutenants into the U.S. Army. For many candidates this training will be the only one of its type they will receive while in the Army. However, the importance of doctrinal Infantry training was stressed by Capt. Todd Coulsen, Commander, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt.

"Every Soldier is an Infantry Soldier," Coulsen said.

Counselor joins ACAP

Stacey Vigil
Army Career and Alumni Program

A new addition to the Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) has arrived at the center to assist separating Soldiers and other residents of Fort Benning with job searches.

"We are pleased to welcome Philomena Mubangu to the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza," said Harold Ericksen, manager of the Fort Benning ACAP Center. "As an ACAP Counselor, she will assist separating Soldiers, spouses and civil service workers with transition planning, understanding benefits and entitlements, how to conduct a successful job search, skills assessment, resume writing and interview preparation."

Mubangu comes to the Fort Benning ACAP Center with experience in interviewing and assessments, career change counseling, crisis intervention and education counseling. She holds a Bachelor's degree in Occupational Education and a Master's degree in Mental Health Counseling.

She is a military spouse and said she is "looking forward to assisting Soldiers with the transition into the civilian workforce."

Mubangu is active in the Fort Benning community and is currently serving as the vice president in charge of fundraising for the Faith Middle School Parent-Teacher Organization.

"Philomena brings to the ACAP Center a unique background and special insights into the corporate hiring processes. She adds another dimension to our staff and this will benefit our separating Soldiers as they enter the job search," Ericksen said.

For more information about the ACAP Center, call 545-2308, 545-2309 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Sand Hill welcomes new brigade

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning welcomed its newest addition during an activation and assumption of command ceremony Jan. 14 on York Field.

The new Basic Training Brigade (BTB) became official as its colors were unfurled and passed from Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst to Col. Nolen Bivens, signaling the assumption of Bivens' command.

Ernst talked about how remarkable it was to be able to activate the brigade and welcome the new commander.

"This is a unique ceremony on a unique day because I had the distinct privilege and honor of activating a brigade," Ernst said. "Today we are fortunate because as I passed the colors, I passed it to a great Soldier and Infantryman, who is exactly the right Soldier and exactly the right Infantryman to command this brigade."

Ernst added that Bivens has the right credentials and the right background, but more importantly the right heart and soul to do the job well.

When Bivens took the stand he told the audience it was a great day for not only him, but the nation, the Army and tri-community.

He talked about the Army of today and the BTB's role in training the Soldiers of tomorrow.

"In our Army there is a familiar quote that says 'Move out and make contact,'" Bivens said. "Today, the BTB moves out to make contact with every citizen to help that individual become the best Soldier in the best Army in the world."

Bivens takes command of the BTB after serving as Chief of Wargaming, Simulations and Analysis Division, U.S Special Operations command, McDill Air Force Base, Fla.

Bivens has served in an array of command and staff assignments in the Army including Division G1 Staff Officer, 2nd Infantry Division, Korea; executive officer of 2nd Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment and deputy assistant chief of staff, G3 Training, 3rd Infantry Division, Wuerzburg, Germany; commander, 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry and 1st Brigade, 24th Infantry Division.

Born in Chesterfield, S.C., Bivens earned a bachelor's in science from South Carolina State University in 1976 and was commissioned a second lieutenant. He earned a master's in science in Operations Research and Management from the Naval Postgraduate School in 1984.

Bivens also graduated from the Infantry Officer Basic Course, Infantry Officer Advanced Course, U.S. Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, U.S. Marines Corps Command and Staff College Non-Resident and the National Defense University, National War College.

Some of his awards and decorations include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Expert Infantryman Badge, Parachutist Badge and the Army General Staff Identification Badge.

Bivens and his wife, Pamela, have three children, Maranatha, Christopher and Victoria.

63rd builds roads, friendships in Nicaragua

1st Lt. Heather Andrews
63rd Engineer Company (CSE)

Four weeks into construction, 2nd and 3rd Platoons of the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) drove ahead to accomplish their roadwork missions in the mountains of Jinotega, Nicaragua.

Work is already complete on 2nd Platoon's first project, which was to upgrade six miles of road between the villages of Cuyali and Astoria. This project also included the installation of a French Drain, an underground filter system constructed of rock and sandbags. The finishing touches are being put on a culvert which will complete 3rd Platoon's nine miles of road that runs between Cuyali and Colonia.

Both platoons are leaving behind a much improved road surface and a drainage system previously nonexistent. These improvements will help the local road network hold up throughout the next rainy season.

In addition, Sgt. Marty Little said, "The experience and training the Soldiers are receiving and the aid we are providing to this country are invaluable."

Support from maintenance and headquarters platoons ensures that the projects stay on track with minimum delay.

Soldiers receive relief from the hectic work schedule on Sundays and holidays with relaxation, religious services and other organized activities, all of which have helped to keep morale high. Thirty American Soldiers spent Christmas Eve dining on traditional Nicaraguan holiday dishes with host nation Soldiers. A similar engagement took place on New Year's Eve. Soldiers regularly participate in self-run religious services sharing their talents of singing and preaching. Friendly contests of softball and soccer were held on New Year's Day with teams comprised of both American and Nicaraguan Soldiers. Participating in joint activities has helped keep homesick personnel in good spirits as well as develop a lasting bond with a unique and fascinating culture.

"I really enjoyed the dance production put on by the local children and the Mariachi Band that came to entertain us one night," said Staff Sgt. Betty Truitt.

Cultural exposure is also gained on trips to downtown Jinotega which occur three times per week. On these short trips, Soldiers have the opportunity to dine at a local restaurant approved by the U.S. Army Veterinary Corps and purchase local crafts and regional coffee. Another recreational highlight was an afternoon of mountain hiking on the local terrain and a visit to the abode of the local medicine man whose powers of faith healing are believed by many in the area.

The time the 63rd has spent in Nicaragua has flown by according to any Soldier you ask. The three weeks the company has remaining in country will be no different. Upcoming events include a base camp run into downtown Jinotega, an organized softball game with Nicaraguan Soldiers on a field in town, an afternoon of dancing and socializing at a local discotheque and a picnic celebration on the company's last Sunday in Jinotega. Company D, 261st Area Support Medical Battalion, an attachment from Fort Bragg, N.C., will continue providing health care to local citizens on their medical humanitarian aid missions. Second and 3rd platoons of the 63rd will drive forward to successfully complete their projects by the end of January.

As a final note, Sgt. Michael Moore commented on the friendliness and hospitality of the Nicaraguans.

"Sometimes you may leave the base camp feeling down, but as soon as you pass through the gates heading out to the project site and see the smiling children shouting and waving, your spirits are lifted. You feel appreciated and you realize why we are really here."

Soldiers mentor kids in BBBS program

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Big Brothers Big Sisters (BBBS) of Columbus is a program designed to enhance the lives of children between the ages of 6 and 16 from primarily single-parent homes. BBBS actively seeks to assist children who are in need of positive role models and is why a unique partnership was formed between BBBS of Columbus and the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers (BOSS) program at Fort Benning.

After arriving in Columbus in August 1998, Beth Dreyer, director of BBBS of Columbus, made getting her foot in the front door of Fort Benning her first priority.

"I learned of a BBBS program in Florida that had a great working relationship with the Air Force and knew if they could benefit from our program so could the Army," Dreyer said. "Fort Benning was an untapped resource that could provide enough Big Brothers and Sisters to the programs to minimize the waiting list."

Last fall, Dreyer met with Garrison Command Sgt. Maj. Edmond Singleton, and "picked his brain" about the best way to approach Soldiers and introduce them to the BBBS program.

"When I arrived in Singleton's office he had the BOSS president standing by and he proceeded to outline a strategy for reaching every Soldier on post through BOSS meetings, newspaper articles and presentations," Dreyer added. "Singleton was so motivated and inspiring that I knew we could get the program off the ground."

Several weeks later Dreyer attended her first BOSS meeting and asked each representative to spread the word on the benefits of becoming a big brother or big sister.

Soon after, Dreyer received a call from BOSS representative Pvt. 2 Anthony Guerrera, assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"After I was introduced to how the BBBS program worked, I felt confident that I could find volunteers within our unit," Guerrera said. "I passed around a sign-up sheet for a worthy cause and the response was tremendous."

Dreyer held an orientation for all the interested Soldiers of HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. and received more than 20 applications since the initial briefing.

Dreyer said the program hopes to double, if not triple, the number of children waiting on the BBBS list by using Soldiers as 'Bigs'.

"There are more than 50 children on the list waiting to be matched with a Big Brother or Big Sister and most of them are boys," Dreyer said. "Using Soldiers as 'Bigs' should help rectify the matching problem."

"The unit has been extremely helpful and their cooperation has accelerated the application process ten-fold, which means that BBBS will be able to match these young men and women with children by the beginning of February," Dreyer said. "The volunteer Soldiers of HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., are to be commended for their willingness to make a difference in the community and in the lives of these children."

For further information on how to become a Big Brother or Big Sister of Columbus, call Beth Dreyer at 327-3760.

Operation Rebound

ITB drill sergeants help communities' troubled youth

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

A program that has been in the works for years by the Muscogee County School District became a reality Saturday as 27 elementary students from around the county converged on Fort Benning's Sand Hill to participate in instruction aimed at helping troubled youth bounce back from problems they have recently faced.

The program is called Operation Rebound, and according to the program's director, Dr. J. Hud, the skills of the Soldiers (Company D, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade) involved proved to be an excellent way to reveal to the troubled youth the importance of staying out of trouble and following the rules.

"The drill sergeants, the first sergeant and the commander here have facilitated a great opportunity for the kids," Hud said. "They have reinforced the respect the students need to have for adult authority, something that many of them are lacking and the reason most of them are here."

Operation Rebound is a program the school system established nearly five years ago to give students facing a 10-day suspension an alternative to being out on the streets in an environment that does not promote healthy learning.

"We take these misguided leaders and work with them and counsel them so that when they do return to school, they will not run into the same problems that got them in trouble in the first place," Hud said. "As part of Operation Rebound, we separate them from the other students and still require them to serve the punishment of the suspension, but we afford them this opportunity so they can keep turning in their homework and not fall behind."

Operation Rebound is more than just a tutoring program for kids who happen to find themselves in trouble, he said. It is a program of intervention.

"We don't just separate these kids out of the mainstream for 10 days and put them back into the system," he said. "We counsel them and show them why they need to obey and respect adult authority. That is why we are here today to show them that respect is essential."

"Who better to show them that than a drill sergeant?" he asked with a smile upon his face.

"What we conducted today very similar to day one of basic training," said Capt. Robert L. Kammerzell, Co. D commander. "We showed them what was expected of them and expected it, but most importantly we taught them values."

According to Kammerzell, the students were given a course of instruction on Army values which he said he feels are essential in the success of any troop or civilian.

"We gave them numerous periods of instruction on various military tasks such as making a bunk properly and personal hygiene, but our focus was placed upon values. It is all about living by the Golden Rule and that is what we tried to bring to these kids today."

"If we just reached one of these kids out here today, we have contributed to the rest of their life," he said.

Drill sergeants from Company D, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade instruct Operation Rebound students on fitness training.

"It is not just our job to carry a ruck and a weapon. We have an obligation as American Soldiers in the U.S. Army to contribute to the greater part of society."

As to whether the ITB will continue to take part in this opportunity, Kammerzell said the next cycle break is only a couple of months away and plans are already being made for the next time cadre can assist in bettering the leaders of the future.

"We train Soldiers here everyday to be the leaders of tomorrow, but this is our opportunity to give back to the communities of Columbus and Phenix City."

DPW offers HAZMAT goal

Directorate of Public Works

Do you have poisonous chemicals in your home or at work?

Poisonous chemicals can harm your health, kill wildlife and destroy our valuable natural resources. The Environmental Management Division (EMD) of the Directorate of Public Works (DPW) has a staff of experts to assist us in preventing chemicals from being released into our environment. The DPW staff is in the process of implementing a Pollution Prevention Plan.

Currently, Fort Benning generates more than 300,000 pounds of hazardous waste a year. The ultimate goal is to reduce this number to zero. Yes, zero — we can do it! But they need your help. Here are some hints that will help achieve this goal, and best of all, save the environment.

Buy only latex paints instead of oil-based. Oil-based paints are flammable and their disposal is regulated. On the other hand, latex paints are water-based, clean up easily and pose few hazards.

Buy only chemicals you need and no more! Too often, we buy more chemicals than we will ever use. In most cases, disposal of even a small quantity of these chemicals can cost hundreds of dollars. Approximately 85 percent of the hazardous waste that we dispose of is a result of purchasing more chemicals than we use.

Avoid buying aerosol cans. They contain propellants that are flammable and contribute to air pollution. Instead, buy products with hand-pumps.

If you do have chemicals that you can no longer use, don't put them in the closet in the hope they will go away. They won't.. If someone else can use the product, give it to them. Otherwise, take the time to dispose of chemicals properly. If you have questions, call your:

•Family Housing residents can call the DPW environmental staff at 545-4766.

Make sure that all containers are labeled properly and completely. At work sites, maintain a file of the material safety data sheets for all chemicals you use.

Chemicals should be used for their intended purpose and used up completely. Never pour excess chemicals down the drain just because it is easier — this is illegal!

Keep containers closed. Keep them out of the reach of children. Remember, open containers result in air pollution.

Listed below are some methods to reduce chemicals around the home:

•Replace glass cleaner with a mixture of one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice in one quart of water. Spray on and use newspaper to wipe dry.

•Replace mothballs with cedar chips, lavender flowers, rosemary, mint or white peppercorns.

•Replace furniture polish with one teaspoon of lemon juice in one pint of mineral or vegetable oil.

•If you store a homemade mixture, make sure it is properly labeled and do not store in a container that could be mistaken for a food or beverage.

•When preparing alternatives, mix in a clean container, making only what is needed for the job at hand.

The Martin Army Medical Mentor

Menopause may occur prematurely

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

By the year 2000, approximately 19 million American women will be in the menopause phase of life. For most women, menopause occurs when menstrual periods naturally stop at about age 50. Periods stop because the ovaries no longer function.

Some women experience menopause artificially when the ovaries are removed by surgery or radiated as occurs in cancer treatment.

Menopause may also occur prematurely. Menopause before the age of 40 is considered premature. The cause is usually unknown, but cigarette smoking, chemotherapy, radiation and surgery affecting the blood supply to the ovaries have also been associated with premature menopause.

Women in the pre-menopause, menopause and post-menopause phases may have no undesired symptoms or they may have severe symptoms.

When a woman is in her 40s, she may enter a transition period leading up to menopause. At about age 35, the ovaries become less active. Women in this phase of life will often have a harder time becoming pregnant.

During her 40s, a woman's menstrual period cycles may become two or three days shorter. They may also occur closer together.

Sleep problems, sexual problems, hot flashes, body and mood changes, especially depression and increased body fat may also accompany the menopause. However, many of these symptoms can also indicate a change in the function of the thyroid. For this reason, women should talk with her doctor about the symptoms she is experiencing rather than assume these represent the changes of menopause.

Two of the most important changes of menopause occur over time to women and those are heart disease and osteoporosis.

Heart disease is the major killer of postmenopausal women. During menopause, the ovaries no longer make the hormone estrogen so women become low in estrogen. Years of medical observation have led doctors to believe the low estrogen condition that occurs in menopause may be an important reason women have a dramatic increase in heart disease risk once they go through menopause.

Studies have shown that women at an increased risk of osteoporosis (fragile bones) are women who are low in estrogen, are slender, Caucasian or Asian, smoke, drink alcohol, have low calcium diets and who have sedentary lifestyles. These fragile bones break easily and may not heal, leading to years of pain and loss of mobility.

Next week's article will review the treatments and medications being recommended for the problems described today.

Editor's Note: This is part one in a two-part series regarding menopause and the drugs used to treat it.

DPW gives residents gas leak procedures

Directorate of Public Works

Gas leaks can be a deadly threat to life and property. Natural gas is piped throughout our housing areas for the purpose of heating our water and houses. Occasionally, the pipes, fittings and controls develop leaks. It is very important that you report all gas leaks immediately.

If you suspect a gas leak, and are unsure how serious it might be, do the following: Play it safe and leave the area. Call 911 to report the leak. Be sure to provide the 911 operator with a telephone number or location where you can be reached. When the fire truck arrives, contact the supervisor in charge and tell him or her what and where you suspect the trouble is.

If you suspect a gas leak, but do not consider it an immediate threat to life and property, do the following: Turn off the pilot light in the immediate area. Call the Work Order Desk as appropriate for your area. If you choose to leave your quarters or building, give the Work Order Desk an alternate telephone number or address where the technician can reach you.

Who to call:

- Emergency Response (Fire Department): 911
- Non-Emergency Response: 545-2135
- Davis Hill and Bouton Heights: 689-5400

Defense Commissary Agency

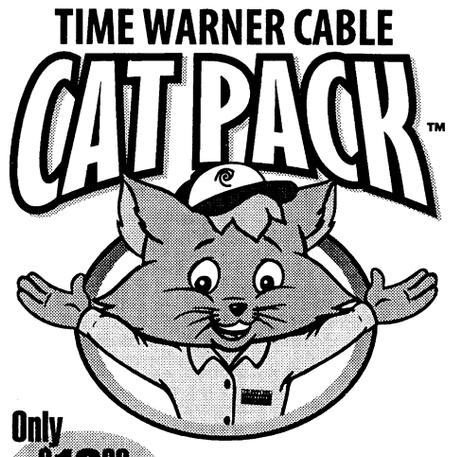
Customers who write bad checks in commissaries face paying a new administrative fee when the Defense Commissary Agency (DeCA) implements new business requirements recently passed into federal law.

"The great majority of our customers write good checks," said Richard E. Beale Jr., DeCA's director. "In fact, more than 99.8 percent of checks written to commissaries clear just fine. For the very few that don't, this puts our collection procedures in line with other retailers."

Beginning with checks presented at commissaries Feb. 1, an administrative fee of $25 will be assessed to patrons whose checks bounce. The commissary will collect the administrative fee when the patron redeems the dishonored check. The only exception is when a check bounces because of bank error.

If dishonored checks are not redeemed at the commissary within 30 days, the military finance office may charge an additional $15 fee. If the customer takes no action, the finance office may deduct the debt from the military member's or sponsor's pay. Military members will be held responsible for dishonored checks written by family members.



In Europe, the system works differently. Dishonored checks aren't sent to the commissary, but to the Subsistence Finance and Accounting Office, Europe. If dishonored checks are not redeemed within 30 days, the finance office may charge an additional $15 fee. If the customer takes no action, the finance office may deduct the debt from the military member's or sponsor's pay. Military members will be held responsible for dishonored checks written by family members.

Previously, customers had a 30-day grace period to redeem their dishonored checks without assessment of an administrative fee or penalties by military finance offices. In fiscal 1998, patrons wrote 43 million checks to commissaries worldwide. During that same time, banks returned more than 71,000 patron checks to commissaries. Customers made good promptly on most of those returned checks, with only about 22,000 checks eventually proceeding to debt collection. The new fees are expected to help further reduce the number of dishonored checks.

The change brings the commissary in line with dishonored check practices and procedures used by the commercial grocery sector, military exchanges and MWR (Morale, Welfare and Recreation) activities, said Gary Lutz, DeCA's Director of Resource Management.

1998 Reform Act gives taxpayers rights, protection

Georgia Society of CPAs

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 makes sweeping changes to the way the IRS interacts with taxpayers. In fact, a major section of the new act, The Taxpayers Bill of Rights 3, includes more than 40 new taxpayer rights and protections.

The Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants (CPAs) highlighted some of the more significant ways in which the new law protects taxpayers.

Burden of proof shifts

Historically, the IRS's determination of tax liability has been presumed to be correct. Perhaps the most important provision in the act shifts the burden of proof from individual taxpayers to the IRS in court proceedings on income, gift, estate or generation-skipping tax liability.

To benefit from the new provision, you must introduce credible evidence, cooperate with reasonable IRS requests and meet certain recordkeeping and substantiation requirements.

Relief for innocent spouses gets easier

As a rule, married individuals filing joint returns are jointly and severally liable for the tax due on a joint return. That means one spouse may be held liable for paying the entire tax bill, even though the other spouse is responsible for an understatement of income.

The new law makes it easier for "innocent spouses" — those who did not know and had no reason to know of certain understatements — to qualify for innocent spouse protection.

In doing so, the 1998 act eliminates the understatement dollar thresholds and adjusted gross income requirements and expands relief to include "erroneous" and not just "grossly erroneous" income items of the other spouse.

Furthermore, joint filers who are divorced or legally separated, or who have been living apart for at least 12 months may make a separate liability election with respect to an understatement. The election must be made within two years from the date the IRS initiates collection efforts.

Interest and penalty rules change

The new act also provides interest and penalty relief for taxpayers. In the past, the IRS could subject you to years of interest and penalty charges if it delayed telling you that there was a mistake on your return. Now, if the IRS doesn't tell you within 18 months after you file your return or the return's due date (whichever is later), in most cases, the charges stop accruing.

In the past, the IRS charged one percent more in interest on overdue charges than it paid out on overdue refunds. Under the new act, the rates of interest on both underpayments and overpayments are the same — three percentage points above the federal short-term rates.

Court, audit and collection procedures revised

The act also makes Tax Court more accessible by increasing the small tax case threshold to $50,000 from $10,000.

Taxpayers who win in Tax Court now can claim higher attorney fees. And if an IRS officer or employee negligently disregards Tax Code regulations, you may collect up to $100,000.

Another key section of the new law includes a long list of safeguards that limit IRS authority and protect taxpayers from IRS audit and collection abuses.

New year offers more challenges

Chaplain (Capt.) William C. Harrison
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

With a new baby at home, I have been reminded once again of the awesome responsibility of being a parent. I firmly believe that both the failures and successes we have as parents affect our children's futures and even generations to come.

reflections

We know all too well how experiences can be passed down in the family, leaving destructive habits and scars in their wake. The good news is that positive experiences can be just as formative and influential on our children and their children.

In spite of what has gone on in your family history, as a father, you are the key link that could anchor your family to God Almighty for the next 100 years. Fathers are expected to be the spiritual leader of the family. Our children are watching our example and will most likely follow our lead, especially when it comes to spiritual matters.

Ralph W. Stockman once said, "What makes greatness is starting something that will live after you." God gives every father the opportunity to do something great. A wise man makes the most of this opportunity. How you choose to live your life for the next century is no small endeavor. But God promises to do his part if you will only do yours.

God will use others along the way to help mold your children — your spouse, pastors, teachers, camp counselors and friends, but he wants to start with fathers who are called to be the anchor that grounds the family in a solid Christ-centered foundation. Your family is a team and you are the coach. In order for your team to be successful, you will have to mentor your children. Here are some coaching tips as passed down from noted author, Steve Farrar, for dads to help us in raising our children right:

•Coach them in how to pray and that the most important book of all is the Bible.

•Coach your sons that men protect women and that a father is responsible for providing for his family,

•Coach your daughters that there are two kinds of beauty — outside and inside, and that inside is more important to you and to God.

•Coach them about money, at least 10 percent back to God, 10 percent to savings and live off the rest.

•Coach them to respect and obey authority.

•Coach them not to cheat and not to lie.

•Coach them to share their victories, joys, sorrows, and defeats.

•Coach them that it is better to be respected than popular.

Coaching your children to track with the Lord means investing in their lives at every level, by showing them a father who is concerned and involved. Coach your children well and the victory you will see will be greater and endure longer than any world championship.

We need to step back a bit from our busy schedules and get a healthy perspective on what is truly important in life. How do our other responsibilities in life compare to our role as parents in the big scheme of things? Is there anything else in your life that really is more important than the time you spend with your children, that is occupying too much of your time or energy?

New parents who are just realizing how challenging parenting can be often ask, "Why don't children come with an instruction book?" I have some good news for you — they do! God's holy word, the Bible is our instruction book for parenting and for all the challenges of life. It takes God's wisdom and his strength to make the most of the wonderful opportunity you fathers have to mold and shape the next generation. Once you realize that you are struggling to fulfill the role of being the parent your children need, you need only to consult the manufacturer. God the Creator made us and he blessed us with children to raise. He knows how significant that responsibility is and he will provide the tools to do it right.

What's happening at Faith Middle School ...

FAITH MIDDLE SCHOOL STUDENT AUTHORS SHINE

Growing up

Brittany Burress
Eighth Grade

Looking in the mirror,
I see to my surprise,
A completely different person,
Staring deep into my eyes.

The carefree little girl,
I saw at four and five,
Has now become a young woman,
Fighting to survive.

In a world filled with madness,
That surrounds me every day,
It's frightening to think,
I could be killed for what I say.

Remembering a time so long ago,
Picnics, swing sets, bikes and parks,
When I didn't have to worry,
About other people's remarks.

It's scary to think,
That time flies by so fast,
What used to be my present,
Has now become my past.

And when I look into the mirror,
What I see looking back at me,
Is the face of an aspiring young woman,
Where the little girl used to be.

The Earthquake

Ashley Maignan
Sixth Grade

David woke up with a start. The whole room was shaking. Objects were falling on the ground. "Earthquake!" David thought. He tried to climb out of bed, but the quaking knocked him down. Frantic, he climbed under the bed to escape the sharp pieces of falling ceiling. Seconds later, all was still.

David suddenly remembered his younger sister Nicole. Their parents were out to eat and they had left 3-year-old Nicole in the care of 14-year-old David. David had to hurry and get her. The house was badly damaged and the floors were crumbling.

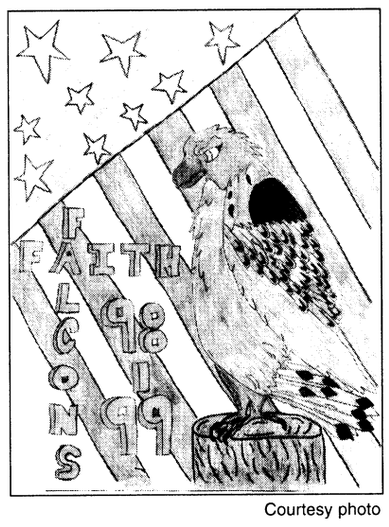
Stepping gingerly over the mess, he found his sister's room. She was still in bed, though wailing in fright. David scooped her up and headed for the stairs. They had to get out before an aftershock occurred.

Only one problem with that plan. There were no stairs! The stairs had fallen.

"I want my mommy!" screamed Nicole, still scared.

David tried to calm her. Then he thought fast and furiously. How would they get out? There seemed to be no way. The window — there was a porch under it. They could climb out and jump down.

Just as David reached the window, an aftershock began. It was hard to keep from falling out the window.



Once he finally got on the roof, he hesitated to jump. It was higher than he thought. He could break an ankle. David was about to go back in the house when his sister's cries snapped him back to reality. He had to get out now. The obliterated house couldn't stand another aftershock.

Suddenly, he had an idea. He reached down carefully and grabbed the post that supported the porch roof. Carefully swinging down, he hugged the pole, then slid down cautiously. All the while, he made sure Nicole was on his back. When his feet touched the ground, he knew they were safe.

Or so he thought. There was a humongous crack in the earth in front of the house. The houses on his street looked like a demolition crew had begun to knock down the houses and quit when they were half finished.

"Wow!" thought David. The street was deserted. They started to pick their way through the debris. It was hard going with Nicole. She slipped twice, scraping her elbows and knees. They would never get

Ode to my cat

Katharina Conley
Sixth Grade

She watches me like a camera,
With her deep, green eyes.
It is my cat,
Tessie.
Her coat is as black as the night,
And as white as snow.
When you pet her,
It feels like you are petting thousands of feathers.

She is as small as a mouse,
But in my eyes,
She is big.

As brave as a bunny,
And as pretty as a butterfly.
When she walks,
You can hear her soft and slow footsteps.
She wants to get petted the whole day,
And, of course, she wants to play.

Tessie eats everything she can get,
She could eat an elephant!
Most of the time,
Tessie sleeps.
But not at night.

When I look at Tessie,
A big smile is on my face.
That's my sweet, little Tessie.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Kyle Jacobs
Seventh Grade

Dr. King's birthday is a national holiday.
Reaching the pinnacle of his career, he was shot and killed.

Martin was a co-pastor with his father.
Atlanta was his birthplace.
Receiving his Ph.D, he quickly started the bus boycott.
The March on Washington took place in 1963.
In 1929, Dr. King was born.
Non-violence is what he spoke for.

Leading the civil rights movement wasn't easy for him.
United Nations was the place for which he protested the bombings of Vietnam.
Tennessee sanitation workers thanked him for helping.
He attended school in Atlanta.
Ebenezer Baptist is where he and his father preached.
Rosa Parks was the reason for which he began protesting.

King was Time magazine's Man of the Year.
In 1963, he gave his "I Have a Dream" speech.
National hero, was he.
Getting civil rights was his main goal.

Jesse Jackson was with him when he was shot.
Receiving a Nobel Peace Prize was a great accomplishment.

Beowulf vs. Grendel

Rachel Smith
Seventh Grade

So sit back and I'll tell you a tale
A tale of a wondrous man
Who saved us all from Grendel's wrath
And just with his bare hand

This man was Beowulf
So young and strong and right
He put no trust in any sword
But in his truth and light
In his truth and light

Grendel was an evil demon
He was the son of Cain
This devil's gift was a man-eating beast
He caused the land much pain

Now when these met in Hall Herot
A battle they did fight
Beowulf grabbed Grendel's arm
And held with all his might

Grendel screamed and kicked and fought
But Beowulf held tight
Grendel pulled so hard he ripped off his own arm
Beowulf had won the fight!

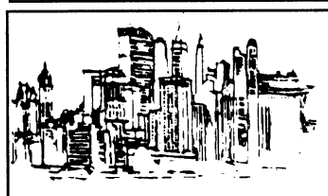
Some friends are pure gold

Tiffani Cordero-Torres
Eighth Grade

All the things you do
To make this world a better place,
Instill a special joy in you,
And guide you on a path that's true.

They fill you with an inner grace,
Which glows so brightly in your face.

Some friends are pure gold,
Or gems that sparkle in your heart!



They put their grief, or pain, on hold —Effuse warm sunlight when you're cold.

They even pluck the doubts apart
From all your dreams, to help you start.

You are such a friend —
The sort the very lucky find!
In you, soft human virtues blend.
I treasure all the thoughts you send.

You are so warm, so dear, so kind.

Battery B nets tournament title

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

While the Atlanta Falcon-Minnesota Viking football game Sunday may have kept hundreds of community members plastered to their television sets, Fort Benning had its own down-to-the-wire battle Jan. 15 during the championship game of the Martin Luther King Jr. Holiday Basketball Tournament.

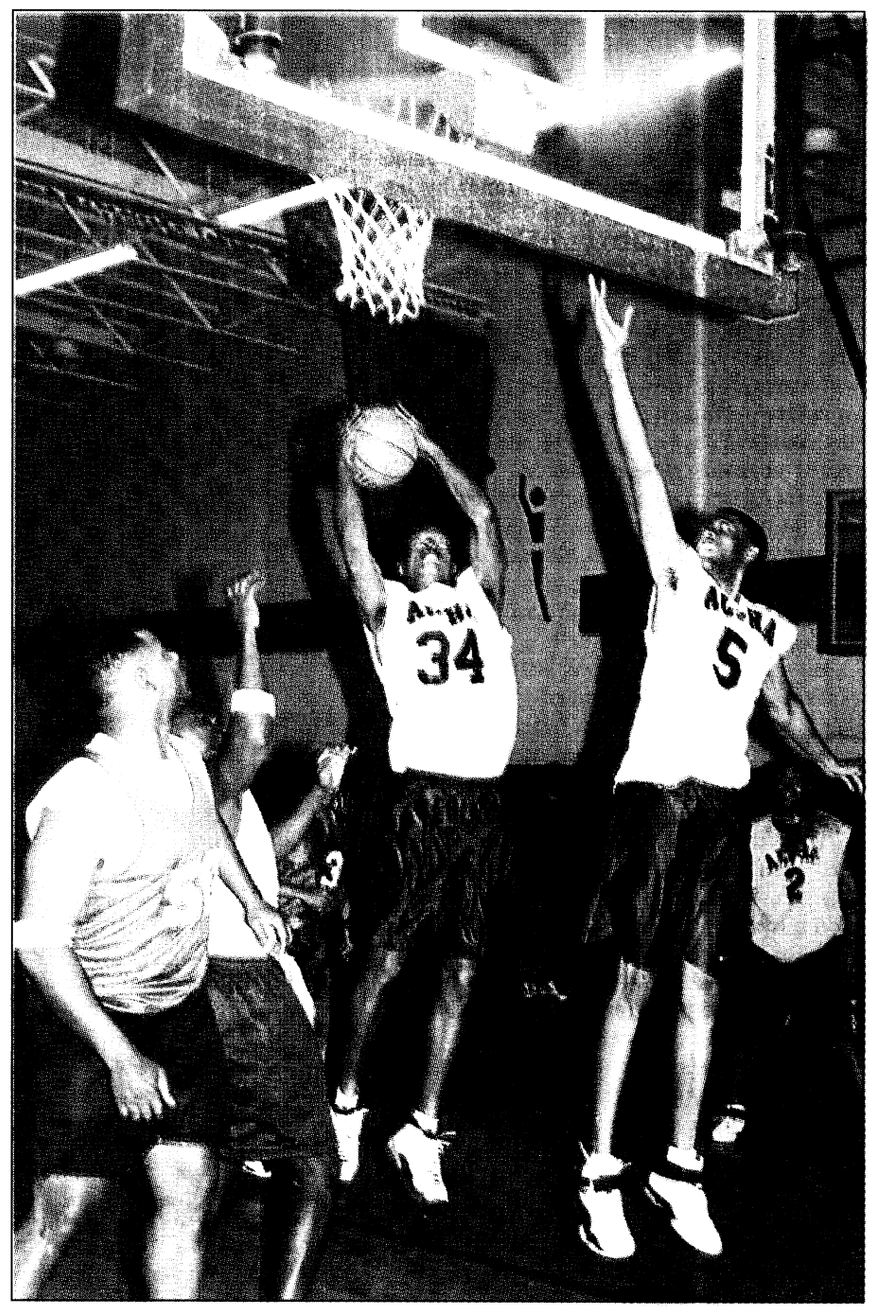
Despite being down by 15 points in the first half, Battery B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) rallied back to slide past Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment 64-62 in the final game of the annual tournament.

Twenty-two teams from around post participated in the tournament, which was conducted over the course of five days at both Audie Murphy and Kefurt Fitness Centers. After beating out about four teams each, Co. A and Battery B were left to face each other for the championship.

Co. A dominated the first half of the 40-minute game, leading 37-26 over Battery B at halftime.

"I just tried to motivate them and get them back into the game," said Battery B Coach Addison James of his halftime speech. "They had a good three-point shooter and we knew that we had to cover him and not let him get off any shots."

With four minutes remaining in the game, the 'King of Battle' team had rallied back and tied Co. A. After sinking two free throws from a technical foul, Battery B was able to take the lead for first time since the opening minute of the game.



Just as it looked as if the game would go into overtime, Battery B was able to send off a last second shot to win the game.

"This was definitely the toughest game of the tournament," said James, who added that the holiday tournament helped his team prepare for the upcoming intramural basketball season.

"Our first game is Feb. 2. This helped us find out what we need to work on before our regular season starts," he said.

More than 40 teams are participating in the intramural season, which has already begun for some teams. Fort Benning currently has four leagues that play at Kefurt Fitness Center, Santiago Fitness Center, Audie Murphy Fitness Center and Briant Wells Field House. Games begin at 6 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday at most locations.

For more information on the season, call 545-4300.

YS Huskies live, win by team's Golden Rules

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

With sports being so much a part of life for today's youth, it could be of reassurance to parents that their children receive more than a good time. One group of Fort Benning adolescents not only learned the fundamentals of soccer, they were taught lessons in life.

The Bolivian-American Huskies Kory Chuymas (Golden Hearts) soccer team kicked their way into first place of their Youth Services' division using a mixture of skill, talent and determination on and off the field.

So what set aside these 11 players from the rest? Coach Ronald Hurtado de Mendoza, sergeant with the U.S. Army Reserves, not only encouraged the players to do well during the games, he also pushed for excellence in life.

"The players had to follow four 'golden rules' to continue to play on the team," Mendoza said. "The players had to pray before and after every practice and game, obey their parents, strive for excellence in school and work towards improving their physical fitness."

With all the rules established, parents were not reluctant to let their child give extra time to sports because of fear their grades would suffer.

"Education has always been important in our home. It made me feel better that the coach reflected our own house rules," said Annette Rodriguez, mother of Fernando, Huskies MVP of the year. "Fernando, who also plays basketball, has always been good in school. He is currently in his school's honor program."

If the parents went to Mendoza and told of how their child's grades had begun to slip, they would not be allowed to play on the team.

"School is important," Mendoza said. "One player even achieved straight A's after beginning the season with the team."

However, excelling in school is just one goal the players had to work towards. Physical fitness was stressed just as much as the attention to their grades.

"The players had to run two miles everyday, either by themselves or with their parents and even with their parents unit if they could," Mendoza said.

Player Charlie Canedy, age 14, nicknamed the F-16 by teammates, was credited by Mendoza with the speed and endurance to run from goal to goal repeatedly by the end of the season.

"Charlie has a natural ability to run, but he was able to work on it more while participating in sports," said Lisa Canedy.

The running not only helped the players get into shape, but it helped create a common bond in their family unit. Fernando said he just enjoyed running with his dad.

When the final game ended, the players were able to leave with a trophy, but perhaps they left with much more than the souvenir.

"Everyone from the smallest player on the team was made to feel important," said Rodriguez. "Everyone's self-esteem was boosted, and that can be hard to do."

Players were encouraged to get on the field and play, Mendoza said. Some players who were afraid of the ball became very active by the season's end.

"Charlie was encouraged to be a team motivator, and he enjoyed motivating others on the team and during the season I began to see his self-esteem rise," Canedy said.

Whatever the players try to accomplish in the future, their time on this team taught them that if they work hard enough towards their goals, they can achieve anything.

Bulls player Travis Lush (33) dribbles around defenders during 8 to 9-year-old Youth Services basketball action Jan. 16.

The Bulls charged past the Lakers 30-18 in an action packed game. Mack Clemens contributed 8 points for the Bulls, and Kaylee Tyler marked the high score for the Lakers with 6 points.

In 10- to 11-year-old play, the Celtics triumphed over the Lakers 28-8. Eddie Jones was the high scorer for the Celtics with 10 points. Michael Aaron contributed to the Lakers final score by tossing in 4 points earning the title of top scorer.

During the second game, the Warriors routed the Ruff Riders 31-11. Warrior Jake Draughon led his team to victory by putting 11 points on the board. Emanual Wallace earned his marks as the Raider's high scorer, contributing 4 of the Ruff Rider's 11 points.

In the first game of the 12- to 15-year-old division, the Spurs breezed by the Kings 42-25. Travis Smith added 20 points to his team total of 42 while Tarig Patterson led the Knicks in scoring with 14 points.

The last game of the day finished as a draw between the Ruff Riders and the Warriors 24-24. Lead scorer for the Ruff Riders was Donavan Mudayh with 6 points. Issac Brown tossed 11 points for the Warriors.

Basketball is held every Saturday beginning at 9:00 a.m. at the Main Post Youth Services Center.

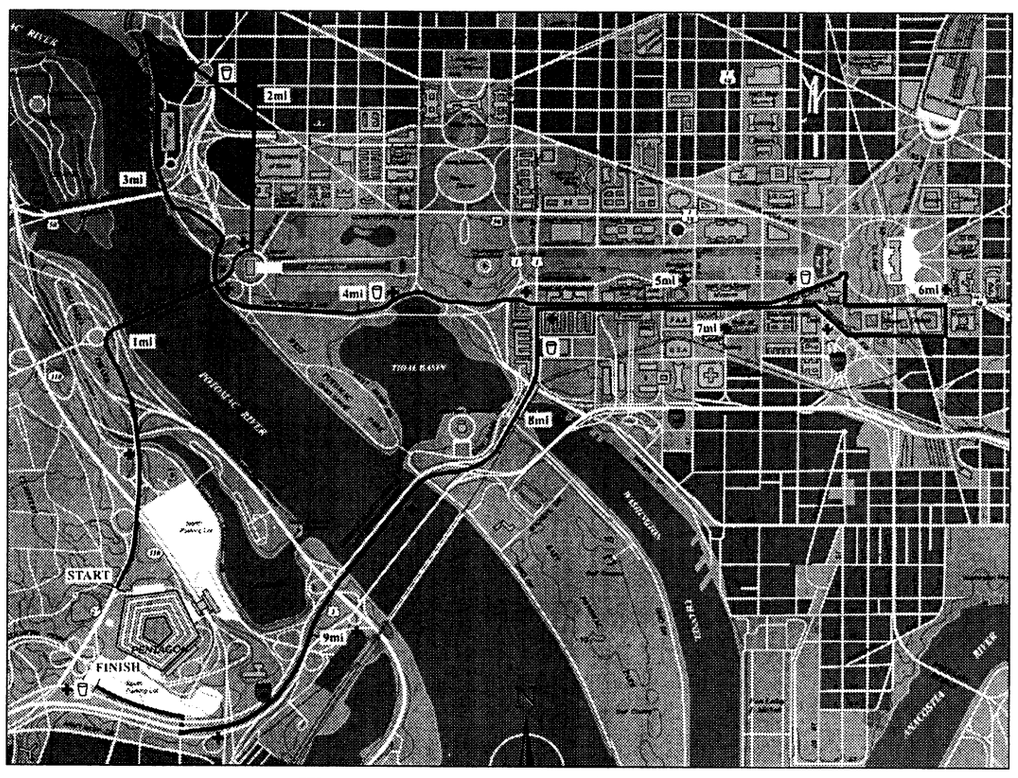
Runners can now register online for Ten-Miler

Pvt. 2 Keisha R. Ford
MDW News Service

Race officials hope to open individual registration for this year's Army Ten-Miler, scheduled for Oct. 10, online Feb. 1, according to Jim Vandak, assistant race coordinator at Fort McNair.

Vandak said they expect to begin online team registration and registration for teams, the Junior Ten-Miler and pre-race pasta dinner by late February or early March.

The Ten-Miler, MDW's premier sporting event, is co-hosted by MDW and the Association of the U.S. Army.



"The beauty of online registration," he said, is that the Army Ten-Miler website, www.armytenmiler.com, "can be accessed anywhere — Europe, the Far East," 24 hours a day and seven days a week. Web site users would receive up-to-date race information.

Last year, the first time online registration was used for the Army Ten-Miler, Vandak said, about 15 percent of the record 14,108 race participants took advantage of registering by computer. From June 1 through Oct. 27, he said, more than 331,000 people visited the site.

He added that provisions will be made for runners who register individually and later find that they want to compete as team members. For example, if a runner were to register individually and later find out he was eligible for the Fort Benning team, he would be able to do so.

This year, Vandak said, race officials plan to use "championship-chip-scoring technology" to help reduce congestion at the finish line. The new scoring system will likely require the entry fee to be increased from $20 to $25.

Vandak compared the new system to a bar code used in various stores. He said a computer chip will be affixed to each runner's shoe. When a runner crosses the finish line, a mat reads the chip and transmits the chip's information, along with the time, to a computer. The information on the chip identifies the runner and the computer matches the finishing time to the runner's age, team affiliation and other relevant information. He said the system processes 1,000 people per minute.

The 1999 Army Ten-Miler course

Vandak said that in previous years the race officials used the lane method in which runners were routed down lanes at the finish line. Now each runner has only to cross the finish line to have his or her finishing time recorded.

Surveys about the technology, he said, were sent to 6,000 participants from last year's race by e-mail. About 700 runners indicated they favored the chip and 50 were against it.

Another change, Vandak said, will probably be limiting the number of entrants to 16,000. He explained that 16,000 runners are all that can be accommodated if the race is to be completed in the time runners are allowed on the course.

Traditionally, he said, the race begins and finishes at the Pentagon. Last year's course offered views of the Potomac River, Lincoln Memorial, Kennedy Center, Washington Monument, Smithsonian Institution, National Air and Space Museum, U.S. Capitol and other national landmarks. This year's course, Vandak said, will remain basically the same.

"I think it's the most picturesque course in America," he concluded.

Exercise prevents disease, aids in weight loss

Maj. Mary Jo Laurin
U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventative Medicine

Have you ever walked or run five days a week, feel like you've been working hard, but you're not quite sure that you're reaping the benefits of all your hard work?

Generally, people exercise to reap the benefits of cardiovascular health — they want to have a stronger heart that is more able to pump nutrients and oxygen to all the body. This helps to prevent heart disease by making blood vessels more pliable and minimizing plaque build-up. It allows the heart to operate more efficiently. It can aid in achieving weight loss. People usually can see the results of this benefit, but some people get frustrated because they are not losing weight fast enough or not at all.

How do you know if you're exercising correctly to achieve the benefits that you want? To reap both cardiovascular and fat-loss benefits, one must exercise aerobically. This literally means exercising "with oxygen." When a person exercises aerobically, he or she must do an increasing amount of work to exercise the heart and lungs. The more intense the work, the greater the stress to the heart and lungs and the greater the exercise for the heart and lungs.

However, a lot of exercise can be too much of a good thing. You need to get your heart rate to such a level that you achieve results without injuring your heart. How do you know if you are at the right intensity? Three simple words: target heart rate (THR).

There are two ways to determine THR: One is exercising at a percentage of your estimated maximum heart rate. The other, the Karvonen formula, is exercising at a percentage of your heart rate reserve. The first method is not as accurate but is easier to calculate.

Here are the two formulas:

1. THR formula: Max Heart Rate = 220-(minus) age

Example for 20 year old:

THR = Max Heart Rate x level of exercise* Max Heart Rate = 220-20=200

THR=200x.60=120 (lower level of range)

THR=200x.70=140 (upper level of range)

* Level of exercise:

Beginner: Range is 60 to 70 percent

Moderate exerciser: Range is 70 to 80 percent

Competitive exerciser: Range is 80 to 85 percent (in some sources, you will see as high as 90 percent)

Body fat loss: Range is 60 to 75 percent

For the above example the THR range is 120 to 140 beats per minute. That means when a person is exercising, his or her heart rate should be between 120 to 140 beats per minute. If it's faster, the person should slow down; if it's slower, try speeding up.

2. Karvonen formula for THR:

Max Heart Rate = 220-age

Heart Rate Reserve = Max Heart Rate - Resting Heart Rate

THR = Heart Rate Reserve x level of exercise* + Resting Heart Rate

Because the Karvonen formula uses your own resting heart rate, it is more accurate.

To determine your THR, you need to be able to take your pulse. You can most easily find your pulse at your neck, or on your wrist, close to the palm of your hand. Practice taking your pulse when you are still. The best time to measure your resting pulse is before you get out of bed in the morning (without an alarm to awaken you). The better you become at taking your pulse when you're not exercising, the easier it becomes when you do.

If you have difficulty taking your pulse, there are other methods of determining exercise intensity that are both effective and easy to use. One is the "rate of perceived exertion" (RPE) the other is the "talk test."

The RPE was founded by Gav Borg. This method is based on how you feel during exercise. The exerciser grades on a numerical scale how he or she feels compared to the level of effort given. (See Borg Scale below). The individual can learn to exercise at a specific RPE based on feelings or the exerciser can compare it to his or her THR. Soon the exerciser will learn which RPE corresponds to the THR and won't necessarily have to monitor THR every time the individual exercises.

Borg Scale from the American College of Sports Medicine (ACSM):

7	very, very light
9	very light
10
11	fairly light
12
13	somewhat hard
14	RPE between 12 and 16 is usually associated with exercise benefits.
15	hard
17	very hard
18
19	very, very hard
20

The "talk test" on the other hand is easier than the RPE. The "talk test" can be used in conjunction with heart rate to get a feel for the correlation, but generally the following rules apply:

•You are exercising at the right intensity if you're able to complete a sentence.

•You are exercising too hard if you're gasping for air and can only say a few words at a time.

•You aren't exercising hard enough if you're able to carry on a long conversation.

How often and how long should you exercise? The minimum for aerobic exercise is 20 minutes three times a week. If you want to lose fat, you should exercise at least 30 minutes four to five times a week. The more often you exercise, or the longer you exercise, the more benefits you reap!

Regardless of which method you choose to determine your intensity level, it is a good idea to follow the rules mentioned above if you want to ensure the results you're looking for. The most important part is to just get out there and do it. Happy exercising!

Benning defends title

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's quest to claim its seventh Chief of Staff of the Army Award for Installation Excellence took its final step this week as the Fort Benning community played host to six Department of Army evaluators tasked with collecting data on both the installation's infrastructure and its people.

According to the Army Communities of Excellence (ACOE) Evaluation Team's Team Chief Brig. Gen. Naman X. Barnes, the community of Fort Benning is currently one of three posts across the nation in contention for the award.

"Fort Benning is already a winner just by getting this site visit," he said. "Only the top three for all of the installations submitting packets receive a visit."

Joining Fort Benning in the ranks of top three posts in contention for the 1999 award are Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Carson, Colo.

The ACOE award program has been in existence for more than 10 years, according to Barnes, and although he said he has only been involved in the program as an examiner for three years, he said he was very impressed with what he has experienced here.

"The people here at Fort Benning have really been refreshing to see. Every place we have been, the staff and the people here certainly have a 'can do' attitude," he commented. "That has been what has really impressed us the most. Everyone here seems to always strive to do better and be the best they can possibly be."

"What a great attitude they have," he noted.

That great attitude and can-do mentality has led Fort Benning in the past to not only the seven consecutive Chief of Staff of the Army awards sponsored by ACOE but has earned the installation the Commander-in-Chief's Award four times in the past century.

Evaluations for the awards are based upon a series of seven categories each focusing on a different area of the installations operations to include leadership, strategic planning, customer focus, information analysis, human resources, process management and compiled results of the six other categories. According to Barnes, each of the seven categories are examined and evaluated by an individual evaluator and then the entire six-member team compiles their information and assesses a score for the results category.

The evaluation process, which began Tuesday, concludes with an out-briefing by Barnes at the Commanding General's Two Star Excellence Breakfast this morning.

Sarah McLaney, chief of the Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management Division, said the visit went very well.

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Brig. Gen. Naman X. Barnes speaks with fellow ACOE team member Harlan B. Groover during an evaluation meeting Wednesday.

"The post was ready and I really think it was evident to the evaluators, " she said. "We have a great installation here and it showed."

As to when Fort Benning will know the outcome of the examination, Barnes said the feedback report should be returned in the middle of March, and the winners will be announced by the first of April.

"I think they saw that Fort Benning is a team of teams, and I believe we have a good chance of winning the Commander-in-Chiefs Award for the fourth year," McLaney added.

Post helps test new PT uniform

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Keeping in step with the changing Army, Fort Benning is participating in the evaluations of new physical fitness uniform (PFU) prototypes, which are currently in their test phase.

After numerous complaints about the current PFUs were expressed and on the authority of the Army Chief of Staff, the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) began an investigation into the improvement and possible replacement of the PFU.

"We wanted to give Soldiers the best possible uniform," said Frank Palkoska, chief of doctrine for USAPFS.

According to Palkoska, there were many downfalls to the current PFU. Everything from the lack of moisture management capabilities, absence of structural reinforcing and the tendency to retain odor were a concern to Soldiers.

"The old PTs stretch out of shape and tear easily," said Sgt. 1st Class Latrice Anderson-Brackens, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "You do not get your money's worth out of them. If someone wanted to be a real stickler about the uniform regulation AR 670-1, we would be buying new uniforms every month."

Palkoska said the new uniforms were designed to avoid all of these current problems. After "shopping" around, he said the new uniform will be more durable, versatile and comfortable.

The new PFU is a five-piece ensemble consisting of an outerjacket and pants, shorts, long-sleeve mock turtleneck shirt and short-sleeve shirt. All of the pieces are made of a nylon-blend fabric which allows water to be wicked off the skin and is more breathable.

The outerjacket is vented both in the back and under the arms. Some of the jackets have an elastic waist and others have a drawstring. Outerjackets are also adorned with reflective material. The pants are double lined reinforced in the knees and in the rear. They also have elasticized ankles which are equipped with zippers for easy removal.

Palkoska said the shorts were designed to eliminate a problem some Soldiers had with the fit of the current shorts. They also double as swim trunks. The shirts assist in keeping the upper body area dry as well. The total ensemble is also designed to be a fuller fit which will allow for a wide array of activities.

"These PTs are easily maintainable and washable," Palkoska said. "They also will allow a wide range of seasonal wear."

These prototypes are being tested in six different environmental conditions. Fort Benning and Fort Jackson, SC. were chosen for the amount of initial entry Soldiers.

Because these Soldiers endure regular rigorous activity, Palkoska said, this enables testers to determine the prototypes durability.

Fort Drum, N.Y., and Hawaii were chosen because of the severity in weather, and Fort Hood, Texas, was chosen because of the large concentration of Soldiers.

Although Soldiers may be seen wearing the prototypes, there is still more testing to be done before the official release projected for the year 2000.

After the field test period is complete, feedback will be collected and final adjustments will be made to the uniform. When the final uniform is complete, Palkoska said, details will be worked out in order to get Soldiers the best possible price for the uniform.

"The new uniform will be slightly more expensive than the current ones, but the cost will be lower than the projected cost per prototyped uniform," Palkoska said.

This may come as a relief for all Soldiers who must purchase the new PFU because initial entry Soldiers will be the only ones who will be issued them.

Despite the cost, Soldiers who tested the PFU said the uniform is a welcome change.

"I really like the new PTs," Anderson-Brackens said. "I can wear them in the rain without getting soaked, and they are warm."

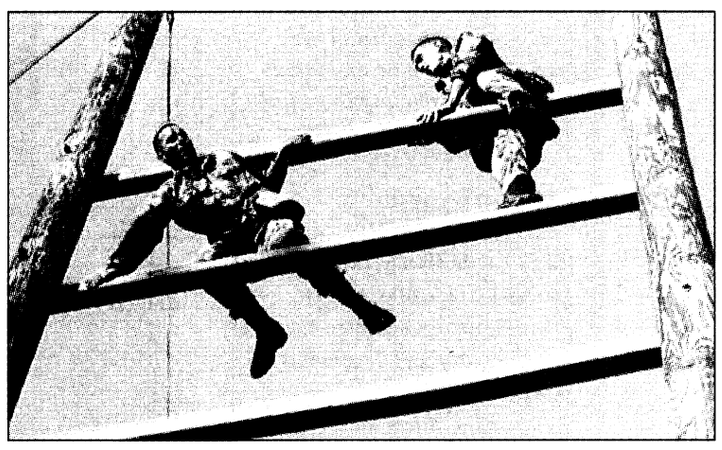
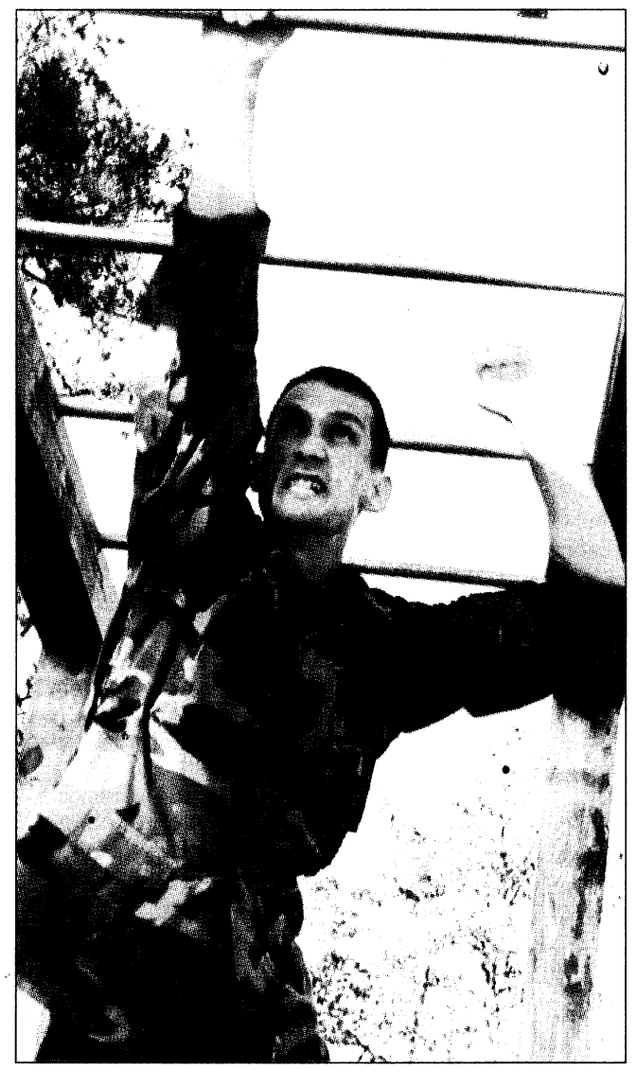
JTF BUILD HOPE

After weeks of building and rebuilding, members of the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) continue to bring a sense of stability and even new life to hurricane-devastated Nicaragua.



"We helped deliver a baby yesterday," said Col. Allen Rasper, commander of the 36th Engineer Group and Joint Task Force Build Hope during a recent telephone interview.



As part of the Task Force, Fort Benning Soldiers deployed in November and December following Hurricane Mitch which left 2,300 people dead and more than 800,000 homeless.

Wherever opportunities exist to get the country back on its feet, Fort Benning Soldiers from the 36th Eng. Grp. including the 63d Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) and other attachments are accomplishing missions which benefit everyone involved, according to Rasper.

One project engineers are currently working on is in Wiwili, a remote outpost whose medical clinic was wiped out by Mitch. Until recently, it was only accessible by Chinook and its only means of communication was tactical satellite. Now, after the delivery of 50 Chinook-loads of materials, supplies, equipment and personnel, construction of an 8,800 square-foot medical clinic is underway, much like "an

Leaders take violence seriously

Harriet Rice
Army News Service

"We disagree with recent media coverage claiming domestic violence in the military is on the rise. The fact is, substantiated cases of spouse abuse in the Army have declined 15 percent in the past five years," said Brig. Gen. Craig B. Whelden, commander of the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va.

His comments came following the Jan. 17 airing of a CBS 60 Minutes segment titled "The War At Home" that focused on domestic violence in the military and three Army cases in particular.

"Soldier readiness starts at home. Unfortunately, domestic violence is a part of our society as a whole. Because we recognize this and because over 60 percent of Soldiers are married, we place a high priority on the well-being of the family unit, and we take domestic violence very seriously," Whelden said.

Post celebrates history month

USAIC Equal Opportunity Office

For many African Americans, Black History Month is a social paradox. It is a month that has a dual disposition. It gives Americans a chance to look back at the achievements of distant and recent African American leaders. Yet, its very existence reveals hypocrisy, cynicism and ignorance by Europeans who intentionally sought to destroy any record of Africa's illustrious past.

There is an anxiety that follows with stating "a black man invented this or that." The first reaction by blacks and whites alike, is a look of surprise or a response of "really." It is said to affirm black contributions to the world, yet at times it asserts a genetic pretense.

So what is the purpose of the Army's Ethnic Observance program? The main focus is to teach Soldiers and civilians about our country's history and the roles that many Americans played in the development of our nation. This event seeks to honor a few of those great African Americans.

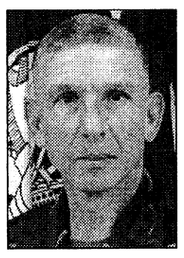
Some of the events for African American History Month will be:

•11:30 a.m. Feb. 5 — Arts and Education program at Marshall Auditorium

•5 p.m. Feb. 13 — African Dress night at the After Hours Club, Main Post

•Noon Feb. 19 — Infantry Hall display room

8 a.m. Feb. 19 — Trip to Tuskegee Institute



•5 p.m. Feb. 23 — A play by the Kendrick High School — ITB Recreation Center

Test your knowledge of black history

It's Black History Month. How much do you know about black history? Take this test, developed by the Post Equal Opportunity Office, and find out. The first person to call the Post Equal Opportunity Office with the most correct answers to the 10 questions will win a prize. Answers must be faxed to 545-3317 or brought to Building 2509 between the hours of 1 to 3:30 p.m. The contest ends at 4:30 p.m. Feb. 15.

1. What well-known female author penned the prize-winning novel, The Color Purple ?
2. Who was the abolitionist, statesman and orator who was the editor of the abolitionist paper, The North Star?
3. Whose daring refusal to move to the back of a segregated bus sparked the Civil Rights Movement of the 1950s and '60s.
4. What world renowned author and poet during the Harlem Renaissance movement authored The Panther and the Lash?
5. One of the most famous educators in American history — who was the founder of the Tuskegee Institute?
6. On what day in 1865 were slaves living in Texas and Louisiana emancipated?
7. Which creative businesswoman became America's first black woman millionaire?
8. Henry O. Flipper was the first black American to graduate from West Point. In what year did he graduate?
9. Who was the leader of the Niagara Movement (the forerunner of the NAACP) and the first editor of the Crisis magazine?
10. This physician is known as "father" of blood plasma and blood banks.

African Americans enrich culture

African Americans have made an indelible impression on the fabric of our society. They have played a central role in the development of our nation. Through strength of will and unimaginable endurance, they survived the horror of slavery to become settlers, writers, artists and leaders in the religious, political and business world. The traditions, values and strength that African Americans brought from their diverse countries of origin and difficult passage have not only reinforced the morals and political fiber of the country, but add beauty to our culture as well.

African Americans today continue to enrich our culture and quality of life through contributions in every segment of society from business, education and politics to science, law and medicine. They distinguish themselves and bring honor to our nation by serving admirably in its defense throughout the world. As our African American communities grow along with our nation, we share a deep pride in their culture, tradition and values, recognizing the key role they play in the process of the democratic system.

It is important to recognize the contribution African Americans have made to the social, political and moral strength of the United States. I challenge each of you to recognize the many accomplishments of our African Americans citizens and to discover more about their rich culture and triumphant history. In doing so, you will gain a greater understanding not only of the heritage of African Americans, but of our national heritage, which are one in the same. Discover the undeniable kinship between African American heritage and that of every American.

I proclaim February to be African American Heritage Month for Fort Benning. During our African American Heritage Observance events, you will have an ideal opportunity to learn more about African American culture. Enjoy the music, food and entertainment, but take time to learn as well. Look at the exhibits, read the material provided, ask questions of your African American friends. Celebrate African American heritage!

Soldier expresses thanks to organization

Dear Santa's Castle, I read the chaplain's letter in The Bayonet last week and it made me think of how fortunate me and my family were this year because of the Santa's Castle. Unlike the fictional character who "wrote" the chaplain's letter, I'm not a 25-year-old, I'm not an E-5 and I don't have four children. But I am a Soldier with a family that wouldn't have had a Christmas without your generosity. This past year was a tough one for us, between deployment, field exercises, a new baby and car problems — we soon came to realize that Santa coming to visit our kids was going to be highly unlikely.

My wife heard about Santa's Castle and asked me to see if our family qualified. It took some convincing, but I finally decided my pride was not going to be the reason my children woke up with tears in their eyes on Christmas morning.

The application wasn't a horrible, long, drawn out and embarrassing process. Not at all. My chain of command and the volunteers of Santa's Castle ensured that all the information and details remained as discreet as I wanted them to be.

I'd like to thank the Santa's Castle, volunteers, units and anyone else that provided time and money to this project. I know that there are many families you helped besides just mine. It reaffirmed my beliefs that there are more people out there that do care. The Army truly is the "world's biggest family." So thank you, Santa's Castle, for caring about my two boys. Ideally, there would be no need for a Santa's Castle, but since that's not the case, please know how much you're appreciated and how thankful this Soldier's family is for what you do.

Greatfully,
One Fort Benning Soldier

Organization thanks those who donated

Thank you all from the 1,190 children who received toys this year and from the staff of Santa's Castle 1998.

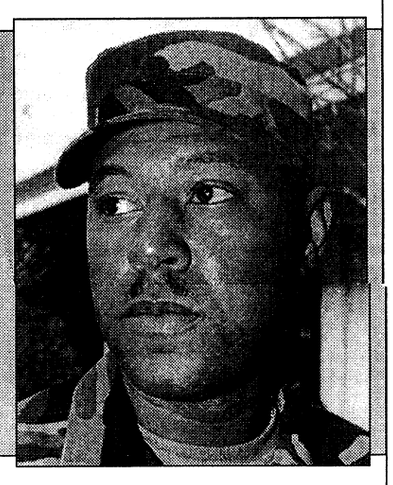
Most of us called him "Charlie," not Charles. We lived, we loved and we laughed with him. He was a man of his word. When Charlie said it would happen, it did. When Charlie said someone would take care of it, they did. We came to depend on him. Those who worked with him believed in him and followed, not out of fear or intimidation, but out of loyalty and trust. We trusted in a man who did so much for Soldiers throughout the years. He served, first, for 22 years on active duty, including three tours in Vietnam, and then, for the next 18 years in civil service, working to make visions reality.

Many Soldiers will never know our Charlie, but they have him to thank for making their training better, safer and smarter. They'll never know of his many contributions to "Owning the Night," which gives us the edge on the battlefield at night. They may also never know that we have him to thank for our edge in fighting in urban terrains. And that's okay, because those of us who lived, loved and laughed with him know — and we will miss him.



Charles Thornton, a division chief for Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, died Saturday. His funeral service is scheduled for 2 p.m. today at EST at Fort Mitchell National Cemetery, 553 Highway 165, Seale, Ala.

Violence: General emphasizes leadership

He emphasized that Army leadership is committed to combating domestic violence. Whelden continued, "We've taken a proactive approach that includes a variety of domestic violence prevention programs, treatment services, and victim assistance."

Prevention, treatment and assistance are available to Soldiers and families through the Army's Family Advocacy programs. The programs are centrally managed by the Army and executed locally at installations worldwide, staffed by professional social workers — many of them with years of experience, like Delores Johnson.

Johnson heads up the Family Advocacy Program (FAP) at CFSC; she has worked on the Army's spouse abuse prevention programs since 1991. There have been a lot of changes and new services added in the past eight years, she said, such as classes in stress management and conflict resolution, couples enrichment workshops, treatment programs, victim support groups and a financial assistance program specifically designed to support victims of abuse for up to three years.

"The financial assistance program established by Congress in 1997 is called 'Transitional Compensation (TC),'" explained Johnson. "Victims whose spouses have been court-martialed or separated from the Army apply for TC, and when they qualify, they receive monthly payments for themselves and each child for up to 36 months. They also keep their commissary and exchange privileges." In the past two years, the Army has paid victims entitlements totaling more than $3 million.

"Congress' intent with TC was to make spouses feel more comfortable about coming forward and asking for help. However, our focus is on stopping the problems before they start," Johnson said. "One of the ways to do that is to make sure family members know what resources are available to them. Army Family Team Building, which has reached more than 200,000 Soldiers, civilian employees and family members in the past four years, is one of many community programs that is very effective in getting out information about FAP."

In addition to educating Soldiers and families, the FAP staff provides unit commanders with a desk-side FAP manual that details how to handle cases. "Anything that affects any aspect of the Soldier's life or his family has an impact on readiness, and that makes it a commander's concern. It's in our best interest to have the best possible FAP program — one that works," Whelden said.

Commanders are involved; they are notified within 24 hours of any alleged report, and Army regulation requires all incidents to be reported. Commanders must attend case review meetings and are required to send Soldiers to mandatory treatment sessions for verified cases of abuse.

"Because of the differences between military and civilian reporting rules, trying to compare military and civilian abuse rates is like comparing apples and oranges," explained Johnson in response to the 60 Minutes claim that military rates of abuse were five times higher than civilian rates.

Department of Defense officials compile statistics using a very broad definition of spouse abuse ranging from emotional mistreatment without physical contact to physical contact that does not require medical treatment to the most severe cases of physical injury. Some civilian studies and statistics only count the cases involving severe physical abuse. Officials also point out the military population includes a much higher number of the most "at risk" group — young men — than a comparable group of the civilian population.

Even though the Army takes pride in the extensive programs available to Soldiers and families, there is always room for improvement, Whelden said.

"FAP exists to help Soldiers and families. If there is something we need to do to make the program more responsive or more effective, we'll do it," Whelden said. "Healthy families are essential to the morale and readiness of our Army."

old fashioned barn raising," Rasper said.

"The engineers provide the major work effort, but when medical and security people aren't performing their missions, they chip in," Rasper said. "It's a community effort."

Hurricane Mitch left survivors of all ages without proper basic medical care, but those needs provide medical personnel with unusual training opportunities, including everything from cholera consults to recommending procedures for correcting physical deformities in children.

"As the doctors, nurses and medics are going out in the countryside, they're seeing things they've never seen before and it's a learning experience," Rasper said. "Through the learning process, we're offering relief and treatment to those we can."

According to Rasper, the Soldiers have brought "a bit of Americana" to their living areas. In Jinotega, nicknamed Paradise Island, Soldiers installed showers, street signs, a multi-set TV room to watch movies and have a game parlor where they play dominoes and board games.

In Managua, where the HHC and medevac team live, they've nicknamed the area, Hotel California. Tents make up the compound with signs directing Soldiers to various businesses. The bank, for instance, hangs a sign "Wells Fargo."

The barber shop is affectionately called, "Cuts R Us," and the "Hot Springs" is really an outdoor shower, without hot water.

An important ingredient of the mission, Rasper said, is the cultural exchange between the two countries.

Soldiers have frequent contact with the local community while at the work sites, and Sunday leisure time often turns into softball games between teams made up of Americans and Nicaraguans.

"We look forward to continuing relations with Nicaragua," Rasper said. "It's important for us to get to know them, and for them to gain confidence that we are who we say we are and not here to do some of the things we've done in the past."

volunteer profile

Name: Sue Morris

Hometown: Yadkirville, N.C.

Volunteer job title: Vice President-Leadership Seminar

Volunteer organization(s):
Leadership Seminar, OWC Board Member, AFAP Facilitator

Why do you volunteer?
I think it is important to give something back to the community. The military would definitely suffer without the efforts of volunteers. Plus, since my husband is a Marine, I feel like I am an ambassador for the USMC.

What do you like most about volunteering?
Through my volunteer work here at Fort Benning, I have come in contact with a lot of wonderful people who I would otherwise not have met.

What are your interests and hobbies?
I like to travel, hike, climb and spend time with my husband.

What others have to say about your contributions: Sue is a former Naval officer who brings a high level of skill and talent to this post. As a Marine wife, she could have easily remained "low key" but instead chose to participate in many activities including the Ranger Regiment, the Officer's Wives' Club and Leadership Seminars.

Internet assists Soldiers in home search

Stacey Vigil
Army Career and Alumni Program

For many transitioning Soldiers, a career change means a change in location as well. The logistics of a long-distance move in addition to transitioning from the military can be overwhelming.

The web site (www2.homefair.com/calc/salcalc.html) is available through the Fort Benning Home Page under related links and other information (www.benning.army.mil/bhome/ACAP/acapweb1/html) and is dedicated to making that transition a little easier for the Soldier and his or her family.

This site includes cost of living comparisons for various cities, estimates on moving expenses and test score comparisons for those Soldiers who will have children attending public school in their new location. There is also a wide variety of information available for those who will be buying a home.

If the Soldier is not ready to make this step, there is an abundance of information on rental options.

An in-depth planning service is also available. This includes a timeline to assist in organizing tasks, change of address services and discounts on items such as truck rental.

If a Soldier is simply looking for a cursory view of a location, he or she may want to request one of the free city reports. A city report will provide a comparison of cost of living, climate, demographics and a historical look at the crime rate for the area that is being considered.

This site will provide the Soldier with an overall look at what is involved when considering a move. It can be a one-stop resource for planning and information that will make the difference when trying to achieve a transition from one location to another.

For more information concerning this web site or other services available through the ACAP Center, call 545-2308 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Army concert tour needs technicians

Army News Service

The call is out again. Army Entertainment officials are soliciting applications for Soldiers to form the road crew for the 1999 Army Dog Days of Summer Concert Tour. The deadline for applying is March 1.

"We're recruiting Soldiers worldwide," said Jennifer Wicks, concert tour coordinator. "We need a minimum of eight Soldiers. Some will need a commercial driver's license to drive the 18-wheelers and we want others who have technical experience with audio and lighting systems."

Command support for this program is very important.

"We need commanders' support in releasing them to work this Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation (MWR) program that benefits thousands of Soldiers and their families," Wicks said.

Why does the Army want Soldiers for this job instead of hiring civilians?

"It's the contemporary way we carry on the tradition of entertainment for the Soldier, by the Soldier, established more than 80 years ago by another Soldier, Sgt. Irving Berlin, the son of Russian immigrants. It's excellent for Soldier morale," Wicks explained.

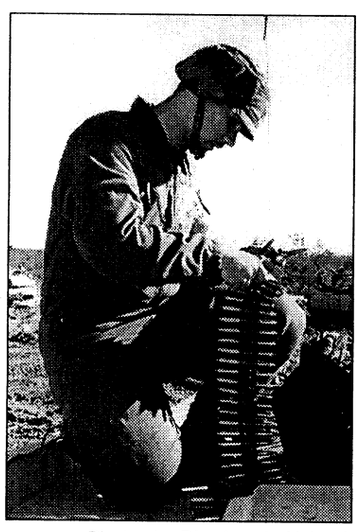
"This assignment is not a 179-day sham, contrary to what some commanders and senior NCOs might think," said Mark Nixon, a former Soldier and now chief technician who was selected to work with the U.S. Army Soldier Show while on active duty in the early '90s.

"This is serious business and hard work," Nixon said. "During the concert season that runs from June to October, Soldiers on the technical crew drive three 18-wheelers more than 12,000 miles, handle 52 tons of equipment including more than 11,000 feet of cable, 75 road cases and 615 pieces of stage platform and scaffolding. They are responsible for more than a million dollars' worth of state-of-the art sound, stage and lighting equipment."

There are 12 concerts in this year's tour. Once they reach each destination, the Soldiers work up to 18-hour days, unloading, building the stage, installing audio and lighting systems, working rehearsals and the concert, breaking it all down, loading all the truck and head out for the next venue. It's a grueling exercise in logistics and engineering — hardly light duty.

Soldiers selected for the 1998 crew enjoyed the work and testified to the long hours. "The tour was everything I expected it to be — with a lot of hard work. My command was very supportive; they backed me 100 percent," said Sgt. William Love, from Fort Eustis, Va.

The Dog Days of Summer Army Concert Tour started in the continental U.S. five years ago in response to MWR customer surveys that said Soldiers wanted top name entertainment at affordable prices on their installations. By contracting with a prominent promoter who has worked with chart-toppers such as Trisha Yearwood and Garth Brooks, the Army is able to bring current popular artists like Marc Chesnutt, the Dixie Chicks and Clay Walker to a dozen installations a year.



The cost of the tour is offset by commercial sponsorship from corporations like Miller Brewing Company, AT&T and VISA as well as local media sponsors at every installation.

Active duty Soldiers interested in serving with the 1999 Dog Days of Summer Army Concert Tour must submit an application packet which includes the following:

•A resume of technical experience with references
•DA Form 2a/2-1 outlining their military background
•An official DA photo
•A letter of release from their commander

The packet must arrive at the Army Entertainment Division by or before the March 1st deadline.

Send to: Army Entertainment, Attn. Jennifer Wicks, P.O. Box 439, Fort Belvoir, VA 22060. For further details, contact Wicks at (703) 806-5062 (DSN 761) or e-mail wicksj@hoffman-cfsc.army.mil. ◆

Sgt. Jeremy Thompson prepares ammo for an upcoming tank live-fire.

Two M1-A1 Abrams Tanks maneuver down range during the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division's bi-annual gunnery qualifications. Tank crews were evaluated and given a point value based on how well they performed during the exercise. It was the point value which determined whether the crews qualified.

M1-A1 Abrams tanks from Company A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., are parked in a row before they will be used during the gunnery qualifications. Tank crews performed maintenance checks and cleaned the tanks before they were taken out to tackle Tank Table VII.

Kelley Hill Soldiers hit range to qualify in bi-annual event

Anyone who needs to satisfy their thirst for Army adventure with some concussion-size gun fire and huge rolling tanks will find what their looking for if they don't mind the drive.

Hastings Range, a place 45 minutes from Main Post that practically skims the Fort Benning boundary, is where the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), has gathered their force and begun bi-annual gunnery qualifications with the M1-A1 Abrams Tank.

It is here that individual tank crews test their skills on the gunnery qualification table dubbed Tank Table VIII and find out if they have what it takes to be called the best tank crews in the battalion.

According to Company B Commander Capt. Stephon Calhoun, all tank crews are required to go through a number of different tables before hitting number eight, but it is at table eight where they will be monitored, assessed and given a point value based on their performance.

When actual qualification begins, two tanks at a time move into the defensive position and get ready to take turns engaging the targets. As the qualification progresses, the tanks are required to make five engagements in both the defensive and offensive positions and at stationary and moving targets. The qualification also requires them to execute the live fire at night giving them a total of 10 engagements at table eight.

While this is being done, tank crew evaluators (TCEs) keep a careful eye on the exercise, watching what the crew does well and what it doesn't. By their assessment they figure out a point value and whether or not the crew has qualified.

Calhoun said the way the point system works is a tank crew begins with 100 points for each engagement. As they execute the scenario they lose points for such things as bad commands, not hitting targets, being too slow and so on. When it is done they must have at least 70 out of the 100 points to qualify the appropriate engagement.

After they complete both the day and night scenarios they have a possibility of 1,000 points. To be considered qualified for table eight a crew must have at least 700 points and qualified seven out of the 10 engagements.

Once this is all said and done and a company has qualified all of its tank crews it then moves on to the culminating exercise which is Tank Table 12. This is where all of the individual tank efforts are combined for a platoon size exercise.

Calhoun said all of the tank crew efforts in qualifying are essential to building crew cohesion.

"The most important aspect of qualifying is crew cohesion," Calhoun said. "It helps them learn to depend on each other because it takes all four crew members to fight that enemy tank that's out there."

According to 1st Lt. Trampes Crow, platoon leader for Company A, gunnery qualification is important because it teaches fire distribution and how to effectively engage targets.

"When you get to train as a platoon, it teaches the platoon to coordinate fire so that when the target comes up you're not shooting it more than once," Crow said. "What it results in is less wasted rounds. The bottom line of what you get out of it is one shot one kill."

Sgt. 1st Class Marcus Merritt said the the best thing for the Soldiers is just being able to get down range.

"I think what the Soldiers like best about these exercises is the fact that they are able to train on their equipment," Merritt said. "And of course nothing beats being able to shoot those big rounds down range."

But according to Calhoun, nothing is better than the pride teams have when they are named the highest scoring tank and platoon in the battalion. And of course nothing beats the bragging rights that come along with that honor.

"It's great training and the Soldiers really like it," Calhoun said. "The tankers work on their tanks all of the time and to get the chance to take them out and fire them gives them a great deal of pride. These guys have a lot of love for their vehicles and a lot of love for what they do and this is how they show that."

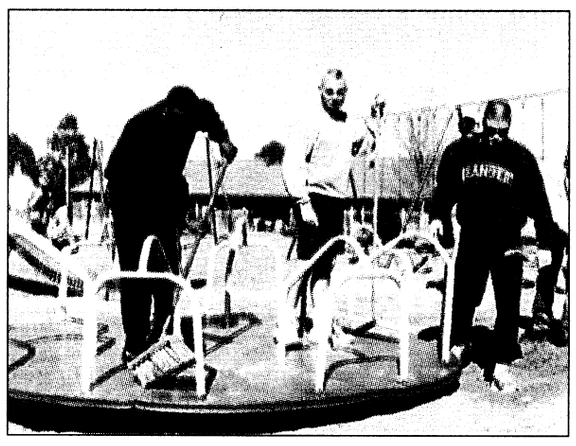
Candidates clean up post parks

OC Elliot W. Olmstead
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Members of Company A, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, left the grounds of Officer Candidate School (OCS) Sunday to accomplish their community service project.

For their project, the candidates of Class 1-99 decided to refurbish two parks in the Bouton Heights and Davis Hill community.

Using the student chain of command, the class acquired all the necessary tools and supplies to complete the mission at hand. Having task organized the jobs by platoon, Company A painted all of the playground equipment including swing sets, merry-go-rounds, basketball backboards, slides and monkey bars. The candidates also painted over graffiti on the basketball court.



In addition to repainting the equipment, the candidates also picked up debris and trash from the playground areas. They found a missing rim to the basketball court and were able to reattach it.

"This is a good first step for officers in the Army — to spend their free time to improve the community," said Officer Candidate (OC) Nicholas B. Cohen.

"Any day it is better to give to the community ... because this is for our future, our children," added OC Daniel C. Scully.

It seemed that all the care and hard work was well received as neighborhood children shouted "thank you" at the candidates as they walked by.

After the work was completed, the candidates cleaned the supplies, tools and trash. To further the improvements on the park, student leadership coordinated with the Directorate of Public Works to replace the parks' rusted chains on the swings.

Thrift shop donates bundles of clothing to needy

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

While some of Fort Benning's Soldiers are spending time in Central America as part of Joint Task Force Build Hope, another organization on post did a little of their own hope building by donating bundles of clothing to the people of the hurricane-ravaged countries.

One "thrifty manager" and four other Officers' Wive's Club Thrift Shop volunteers and staff members banded together recently to transfer more than 500 articles of clothing from Fort Benning to Honduras.

"One night while I was watching TV, I saw how people who were affected by Hurricane Mitch were in desperate need of clothing — especially summer clothes," said OWC Thrift Shop Manager Lori Lane. "I thought about it all weekend and wondered what I could do. I ended up bagging some of my own clothes, but realized that my small amount just wouldn't cut it."

Lane said the Thrift Shop gave her the perfect opportunity to help on a larger scale. She said any merchandise that isn't claimed or sold after 60 days becomes property of the Thrift Shop. They are then free to donate those items to other causes such as the hurricane relief.

So, after four hours of pulling and stuffing, approximately 25 garbage bags brimming with everything from shirts and shorts to belts, shoes, socks and hats ,became the final product of all the ladies' hard work.

"I decided it was a great way to downsize our inventory and help out a lot of people," Lane said. "We ended up going through all the rooms and pulled out every summer item we had. We pretty much just threw in anything that we thought they could use in that kind of climate."

Although it was the efforts of Lane and the others involved that propelled the idea into reality, she said it couldn't have happened without the people of Fort Benning.

"It's not our clothes, it's the community's," Lane said. "Everybody who brings in clothes and leaves them or donates them made what we were able to do possible."

Lane said she feels its important to let people know that not only does the Thrift Shop help Fort Benning, it reaches out to all communities. Currently, the Thrift Shop donates money and goods to more than 25 organizations on post and off.

She said they do a lot of donating to Goodwill, Valley Rescue Mission, Humane Society Thrift Shop and many organizations on post such as Army Community Service, Santa's Castle and all of the Fort Benning schools.

"We never throw anything away unless it's damaged or torn," Land said.

She added that "anyone in the community who needs something can call the Thrift Shop and they will take a look at the situation and start collecting items for them."

For more information about the Thrift Shop donations or to volunteer to work at the Thrift Shop, call Lane at 687-4830.

Maintain quality of life after menopause

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Maintenance and quality of life after menopause has become an increasingly important health issue as thousands of baby boomers enter this phase of life. This is particularly important because many women will spend over one third of their lives in a post-menopausal state.

Women may seek medical treatment for the unpleasant symptoms of hot flushes, vaginal dryness and mood changes associated with menopause. However, many women are beginning to realize the changes in heart disease and osteoporosis after menopause are some of the most important health risks for this stage of life.

Much of what has been learned about menopause has come from studies which compare past behaviors by healthy women to those of women who are less than healthy. For example, some of the recommendations for women to use estrogen therapy to prevent heart disease came from a study of nurses. This was a 10-year study that found nurses who used estrogen had about half as many heart attacks as nurses who did not use estrogen.

The National Institute of Health is currently conducting a large study called the Women's Health Initiative. It is a study of more than 160,000 women and will be completed in the year 2005. This study is looking at heart disease and cancer in women and the roles of estrogen, low fat diets, calcium, and vitamin D.

One in four women will die of heart disease. Women have much lower risks of heart disease before menopause, however, by two years after stopping menses or menopause, women who have not been on hormone replacement have the same heart disease risks as men the same age. This conclusion is supported by studies which have found that the female hormone estrogen raises the level of good cholesterol in the body and lowers the levels of a significantly harmful type of cholesterol.

The most widely prescribed medication for the prevention of heart disease for the post menopausal woman is estrogen. Estrogen therapy is used to prevent heart disease, but also to prevent and treat osteoporosis, relieve hot flushes, vaginal dryness and lessen mood changes from hormone changes.

Estrogen comes in a variety of natural and synthetic types and may be used as either a pill or patch. Vaginal creams of estrogen do not reach high enough blood levels to be considered estrogen replacement therapy. The amount of estrogen in hormone replacement therapy is approximately five to seven times weaker that the forms found in birth control pills. For this reason, the undesirable side effects should be less than than those of birth control pills.

Estrogen, however, is not without side effects or consequences. Estrogens should not be taken by women who have breast or uterus cancer or liver disease. If a woman has not had a hysterectomy, she is at increased risk of cancer of the uterus unless she also takes a second hormone called a progestin. Progestins are synthetic progesterone therapy which help to maintain a healthy uterus by preventing over stimulation from estrogen. Progestins are available as a pill or patch.

Progesterone hormone creams are currently being widely studied in Europe and are sold over the counter in the U.S. Users should know that, like the estrogen creams, many studies have shown that they do not reach therapeutic blood levels and they have not been shown to be a replacement for the benefits of estrogen therapy in heart disease and osteoporosis.

Many treatments are available both by prescription and over the counter for menopause and the years that follow it. Herbal remedies for hot flushes, depression and anxiety may help some women, but they have had no formal study. High-soy diets may be associated with higher levels of the good cholesterol, HDL and may turn out to play a role in preventing heart disease. While many of these remedies are not harmful, most should not be taken by pregnant women, and all women should be warned that many of these items may be marketed without strict inspections for purity and side effects.

Along with heart disease, a second very serious medical problem for women is osteoporosis. More than 20 million women in the U.S. have osteoporosis and more than 1.5 million of these women will fracture a bone this year. Estrogen deficiency is associated with loss of bone density. Because not all women can take estrogen therapy, several other drugs have been recognized for prevention and treatment of osteoporosis.

Alendronate (Fosamax) is widely used for both prevention and treatment of osteoporosis. It will not prevent or treat heart disease, hot flushes or other health issues in the menopausal or post-menopausal woman.

Some of the newer categories of drugs to be available by prescription for osteoporosis include what are called Selective Estrogen Receptor Modulators (SERM). Drugs in this category include Raloxifene and Tamoxifen. These are currently being used to prevent osteoporosis. However, Raloxifene is also being studied closely for benefits to the heart as it may improve forms of levels of various cholesterol in the bloodstream.

None of these treatments replace a healthy life style of prevention and maintenance. All women in the menopause and post-menopause years should be monitored for cancers of the breast, colon and uterus. Taking any of the above treatments will not diminish the need for close monitoring for these problems.

Woman may also take an active role in preventing the health problems associated with these years by staying physically active and eating a diet low in animal fats. This both improves the levels of cholesterol associated with heart disease and improves bone density in the prevention of osteoporosis.

Women who smoke cigarettes raise levels of harmful cholesterol and more easily form the plaques associated with heart attacks. Cigarette smoking has also been shown to stimulate conversion of estrogen to an inactive form. As a result, even if taking estrogen, these women may benefit less from the therapy due to smoking.

Family Housing Curbside Recycling Program

Fort Benning has a population of about 50,000 people, which ranks it as a medium-size city. Like many cities across the U.S., Fort Benning contracts pick-up and disposal of trash and recyclable items. To ensure maximum efficiency of the curbside recycling pick-up program, the installation's contract is written so the contractor is not required to sort garbage and trash items in the brown recycling containers. The chart below lists types of items and whether or not they can be recycled. Proper disposal of non-recyclable items is detailed in the chart below.

Disposal of Non-Recyclable Items

•Baby diapers should be placed in household trash containers.

•Food waste (to include paper cartons with food residue) should be placed in household containers.

•Household batteries should be placed in household trash containers.

•Automobile batteries should be returned to the retailer where the battery was purchased or the Auto Craft Shop will dispose of for a $2 environmental fee.

•Scrap metal can be disposed of at Building 4000 between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 544-6142.

•Resident-owned washers, dryers and furniture should be placed at the curb on the day of trash and recycle pick-up. These items are identified that day and picked up later that day or the following day. For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

•Resident-owned refrigerators, freezers and air conditioners can be disposed of by calling the DPW Customer Relations Office at 545-2117 to schedule a pick-up.

•Used motor oil can be disposed of at Building 4000 between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 544-6142. The Auto Craft Shop will recycle used motor oil for a $2 environmental fee.

•Tires should be returned to the retailer where they were purchased or the Auto Craft Shop will recycle them for a $2 environmental fee.

Schedule Changes

All changes to these schedules are published in The Bayonet two weeks prior to the change in service, which normally occurs around holidays. For more information, call the Curbside Program at 545-1007.

Scholarships aid future education

USAIC Public Affairs Office

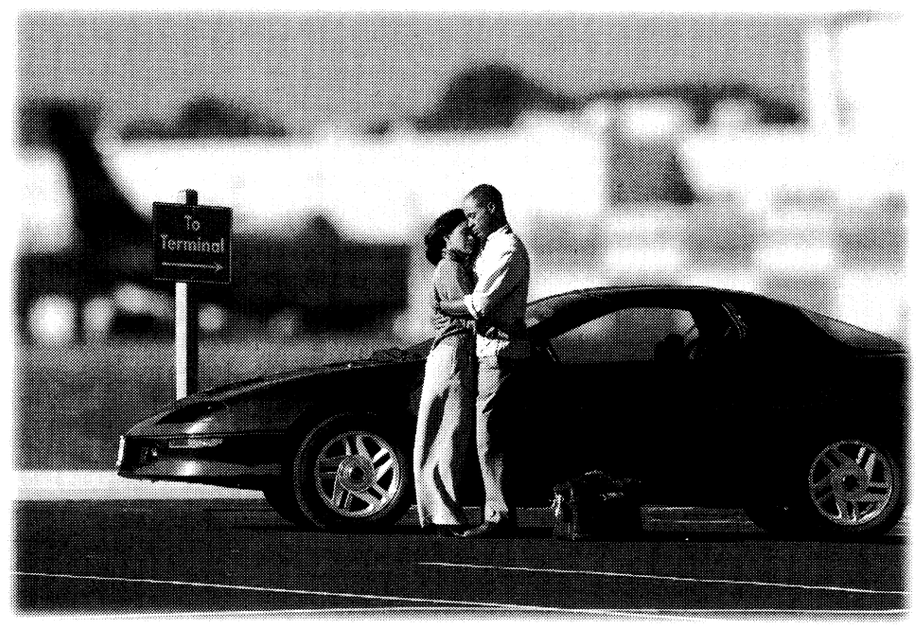
Now is the time to act for high school seniors and college students who need scholarship money for college next fall. Many scholarships that will help families pay for tuition, room and board, textbooks, lab fees and a myriad of other related expenses will be awarded over the next several months. Although this is the season that students focus on applying to colleges, it is vitally important for families to have applications in soon for scholarship sources so they can receive money when the scholarships are awarded.

Unfortunately, many families delay seeking help in searching for scholarships that can help them and miss out on money they are qualified to receive. Many are forced into relying on burdensome debt to finance their education.

According to the U.S. Department of Education and Financial Aid Experts, many students miss out on valuable scholarship opportunities simply because they are not aware of the various scholarships that can help them. Here are some sources students can research now:

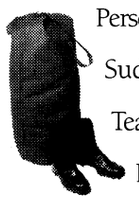
•Coca-Cola Scholars Foundation: 150 awards of $4,000 to 10,000. Students will be evaluated on leadership, academics, motivation and extracurricular activities. For information, write Coca-Cola Scholarship Committee, P.O. Box 4422, Atlanta, GA, 30301-0442.

•William E. Schmidt Foundation: Awards from $5,000 to 10,000. Student's ages 16- to 20-years-old are eligible. The deadline is March 31. Interested students can send requests to 4445 Commerce Street, Evansville, IL, 47710.



•McNeil Consumer Products Company-Tylenol Scholarship: 510 awards of $1,000 to 10,000. This award honors elected class officers. For an application, write P.O. Box 8499, Clinton, IA, 52736-8499.

•The John Gyles Education Fund: Available to full time post-secondary students with U.S. or Canadian citizenship. Awards are available up to $3,000. Send a self-addressed stamped envelope to: The John Gyles Education Fund, Attention James Cougle, Administrator, P.O. Box 4808, 712 Riverside Drive, Fredericton, New Brunswick, Canada, E3B5GA.



•Educational Communications Scholarship Foundation: 2 scholarships of $1,000. Students must have a GPA of a "B" or higher and must be a U.S. citizen. Send request to ECSF, 721 N. McKinley Road, P.O. Box 5012, Lake Forest, IL, 60045-5012.

•Hitachi Foundation: $5,000. This scholarship is awarded to students who have demonstrated community service and are college freshman and above. Send request to Hitachi Foundation, Yoshiyama Award, 1509 22nd St. NW, Washington D.C., 20037.

There are hundreds of thousands of scholarship and grant sources available to students who take the time to locate them. For additional updated information on other financial aid sources, a Steps-to-Success Timetable for receiving scholarship aid and how to receive awards from 400,000 independent sources, send $3 to cover handling to the National Academic Funding Advisory (NAFA), 188 Summer Street, Scholarship Dept. St., Portsmouth, NH, 03801.

Q. Occasionally I get e-mail messages about ways I can make some extra money. If any of these offers are legitimate, I'd love to give them a try. How can I tell which ones are scams?

A. You must exercise extreme caution when responding to solicitations you receive via e-mail. The Federal Trade Commission has provided guidance by publishing the top twelve scams most likely to arrive via bulk e-mail.

•Business opportunities: Some messages claim that you can start a business, such as an Internet-related business, with little work or cash outlay, and with unbelievable earnings of $150 per day or more. Many of these are illegal pyramid schemes masquerading as legitimate ways to earn money.

•Bulk e-mail: These solicitations offer to sell you lists of e-mail addresses, by the millions, to which you can send your own solicitations. Some offer software that automates the sending of your bulk e-mail messages. However, sending bulk e-mail violates the terms of service of most Internet service providers. Additionally, several states have laws regulating the sending of unsolicited bulk e-mail.

•Chain letters: You are instructed to do the following: send a small amount of money to the names on the chain letter, replace one of the names with your name, and forward the letter via bulk e-mail. The letter may claim that it's a legal way to earn money, but chain letters are almost always illegal.

•Health and diet scams: Weight loss pills and herbal formulas, cures for impotence (and we're not talking' Viagra) and hair loss are among the scams that have been flooding e-mail boxes in recent months. These items simply don't work.

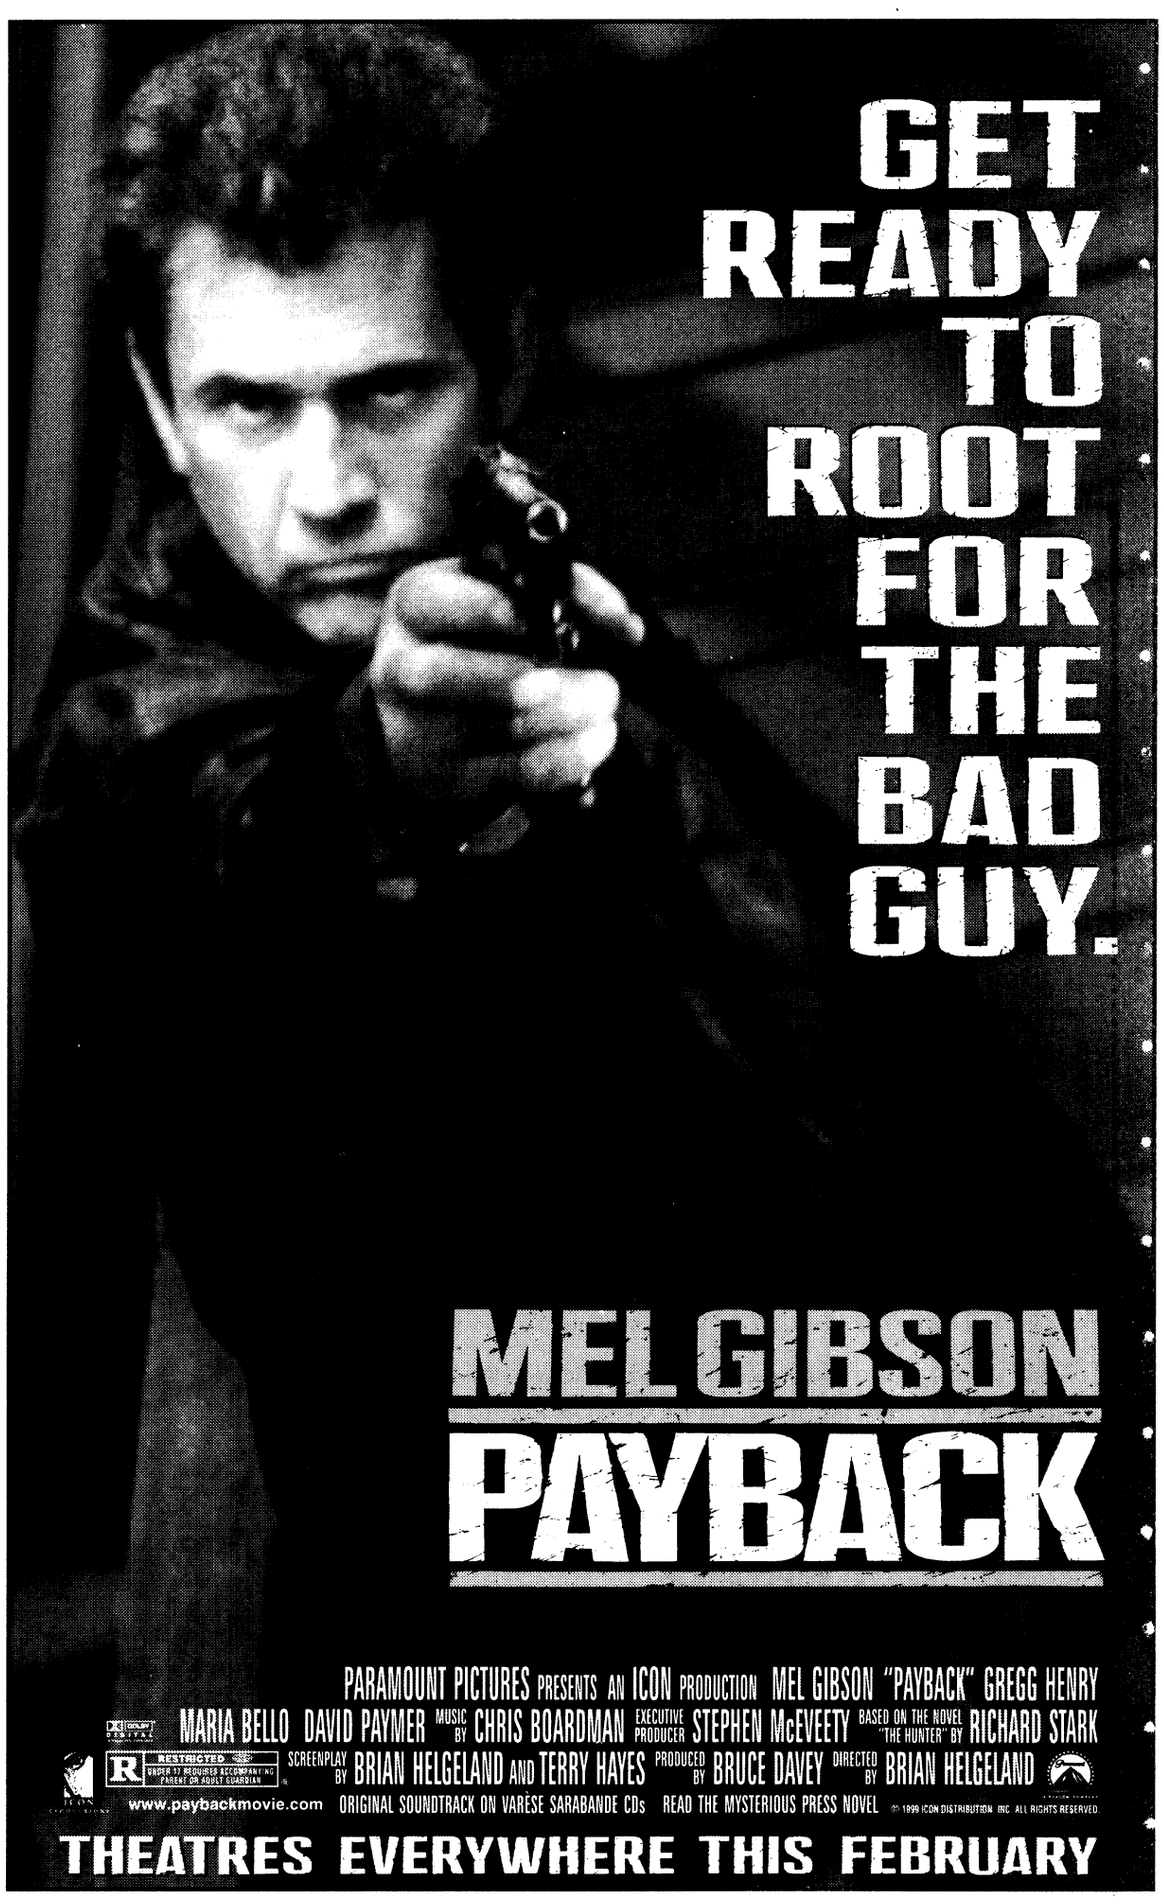
•Effortless income: These solicitations offer unlimited profits exchanging money on world currency markets; newsletters describing a variety of get-rich-quick schemes; the perfect sales letter; and the secret to making $4,000 in one day. If these worked, who wouldn't be using them?

•Free goods: Some e-mail messages offer valuable items, like computers and phone cards, for free. You pay a fee to join a club, and you bring in other participants to earn the goods. Most of these are pyramid schemes, which invariably collapse.

•Investment opportunities: These offer outrageously high returns for low or zero risk. One version offers investments in an offshore bank. Usually these scams shut down before they can be held accountable to customers.

•Cable descrambler kits: These kits allegedly allow you to receive free cable. They usually don't work, since TV systems in the U.S. use technology that is too sophisticated for these devices. Plus, even if it works, it's illegal.

•Guaranteed loans or credit, on easy terms: Some messages offer home-equity loans that don't require equity in your home, or guaranteed credit cards regardless of your credit history. Usually these are offered by offshore banks. Sometimes these are offered in combination with pyramid schemes. The "loans" are really just a list of lenders who will reject you if you don't meet their standards. The credit cards usually don't come through and the pyramid schemes collapse.



•Credit repair: These scams offer to clean up your credit so you can get credit cards and loans. No one can remove items from your credit report that are legally sound. Additionally, these scams may advise you to take actions that violate the law.

•Vacation prize promotions: If you receive an e-mail saying you've been "specially selected for a prize, remember that thousands or millions of other people are getting that same message. You can all pass the time in your shabby accommodations by discussing how sick you were on the tugboat.

You can receive more information on these and other Internet-related subjects from the Federal Trade Commission at (202) FTC-HELP (382-4357), or write: Consumer Response Center Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., 20580.

If you have further questions about your rights as a consumer, make an appointment to speak with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Division. The phone number is 545-3281.

Festival celebrates new year

Chaplain (Capt.) Vern E. Jordin II
USAIC Staff Chaplain's Office

Tu Bi-Shevat (or Shebat) is known as the festival of the New Year of Trees, or in some communities as the "Feast of Fruits." Much like we sometimes refer to Independence Day as "the fourth of July," the name actually means the fifteenth of Shevat. Shevat is the eleventh month in the Jewish calendar. Remember that the Jewish calendar is based on the lunar cycle. This means that the days are not celebrated the same day each year in our secular, Julian calendar, as is Christmas and the celebration of New Years. With the adjustments made like our leap year, this month always falls in the January to February time frame. This year Tu-Bi-Shevat will be celebrated on the first day of February.

The purpose of the holiday is to establish the age of fruit trees and the times they become clean for use. The reason is that according to the Old Testament law, a tree was considered unclean through its third year. The fourth year that it blossomed, it became clean and its fruit was holy to the lord. The fourth years' fruit was given to the lord through the priests and the levities. That year's fruit was used also to help the poor, widows, orphans and strangers in the land. These are the "first fruits of the trees. Not until the fifth year was the owner allowed to take fruit for himself. The holiday marks the new year of the tree. A tree which blossoms before the fifteenth of Shevat belongs to the old year. A tree which blossoms after the fifteenth of shevat belongs to the new year. With this determination the farmer can know when his fruit becomes clean and useable.

There are some benefits to this practice. Taking the fruit early before it could ripen during the first three years facilitated the tree's growth to maturity. Discarding whatever fruit might appear in the first three years and not letting it remain on the ground to sprout other saplings helped the tree to grown faster. That same fruit, if eaten, would not be easily digested and could make one feel ill. It gives a lesson in patience. It also taught men to put God first in their lives, as he deserves.

As a minor or sort of "semi-holiday" for religious purposes, Tu Bi Shevat is not one of the five major feast days in the Jewish holy calendar. It is celebrated with scripture readings and the eating of fifteen kinds of fruit. The scriptures read include Psalm 104 and Psalm 120 through 134. Psalm 104 is a psalm of praise to God as the creator and the one who sustains us. Today in the nation of Israel people celebrate the holiday by planting trees, especially in desert places. It is seen as a way to overcome the desert.

There is a particular scripture passage associated with this practice of waiting until the fifth of the year to harvest fruit. It is found in the the prophecy of Joel. Joel tells us of a great swarm of locust which came and ate up all the crops. They ate the olive and grape vineyards down to the ground. The locusts were described as God's great army, sent to punish Israel for her sins. Additionally the wheat and barley were destroyed. This meant that there would be no clean harvest of fruit available for the next five years. There would be no grain for at least two years. With what would they feel their children? With what would they feed their livestock? Whatever grain they had stored would have to be used to plant the next crop. People would nearly starve. Their livestock would dwindle. With what would they even make a sacrifice to atone for their sin. In Joel 2:25, God said that if they would repent and turn back to him, he would give back the years that the locust had eaten. When they had nothing of their one with which to make atonement, God stepped in and made the atonement for them.

Home forms life of family

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

The noted pastor and author Charles Swindoll has this to say about the home of life, the anvil upon which attitudes and convictions are hammered out. It is the place where life's bills come due, the single most influential force in our earthly existence. It is at home, among family members, that we come to terms with circumstances. It is here life makes up its mind.

In his book, One Home at a Time, Gary Rainey outlines what he calls, "The four pillars of family reformation". Let me share some of them with you:

Accepting responsibility for our short comings and turning away from damaging behavior is a must first step in restoring the family. One who seeks the help of God in this matter will experience a personal reformation of the soul which can lead to reformation within the family.

A covenant goes far beyond responsibility our short comings go far beyond a simple promise to be good. It is a solemn oath made before our spouse and God to hone each other and the institution of marriage. It is all about integrity. The most difficult problem for a couple to overcome is when trust is broken because of the unfaithfulness of one of the spouses. The covenant of marriage is a life-long promise.

What's happening at Loyd Elementary School ...

Parents, teachers join forces for Math program

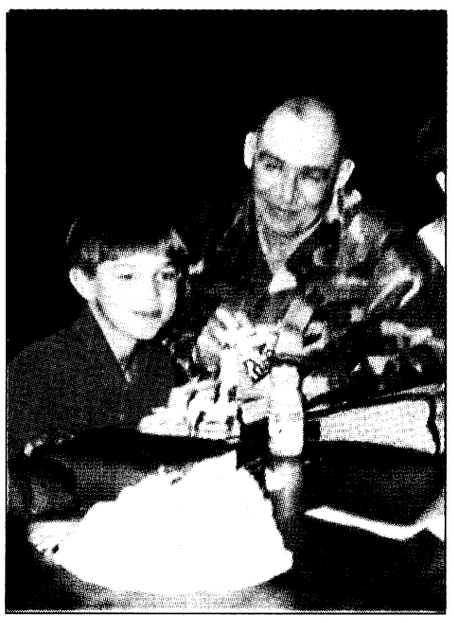
Katherine Walker
Loyd Elementary School

Loyd Elementary School began a new program for parents Jan. 20.

Math Mentors, designed by the School Home Partnership Committee, provides parents with strategies that they can use at home to help their child with their Math lessons.

The first session, which occurred in the Lunch and Learn format, featured third, fourth and fifth grades. In this session, parents joined their children in the school cafeteria for lunch and then proceeded to the classroom for an informative hands-on lesson taught by Loyd School teachers and parents.

Fourth-graders in Ellen Smith's class were actively involved in a problem-solving comparison shopping experience where parents and children had to determine the best value for their money. Students had to choose from two stores and were given a list of items that must be purchased at the lowest cost. Calculators were used as parents and children collaborated on the best place to shop.



Fifth-graders in Cathy Ross' class were involved in making fractions out of a pizza while Shelly Moore's class created pictograph, bar or line graphs. Third-graders furthered their knowledge of the multiplication facts.

In Angela Hervey's class, the parents taught the children activities that related multiplication to repeated addition using beans as counters. Michelle Reasoner's class took on Multiplication Bingo.

The March Lunch and Learn program will follow the Math Mentors format and will be offered to kindergarten, first and second grades.

The Math Mentors program meets the requirements for Benchmark 8.1:

Parents, educators and community members will collaborate to develop educational opportunities for students.

Each week, KID'S KORNER will highlight activities conducted at Fort Benning Schools. Check out next week's issue to see what's happening at McBride Elementary School.

Travis Lush contributed 8 points in the second half to the Bulls team total.

The second game of the division was between the Warriors and the Rockets. Edwin Cruz put in 11 of the Bulls 33 points. Antonio Wright scored more than half of the Rockets points with 4.

In 10- to 11- year-old action, the Celtics drove the points up on the Ruff Riders beating them 35-24. The Celtic's Erich Tyler aided his team by contributing 11 points to his team total. Darryl Carlisle led the Ruff Riders with 9.

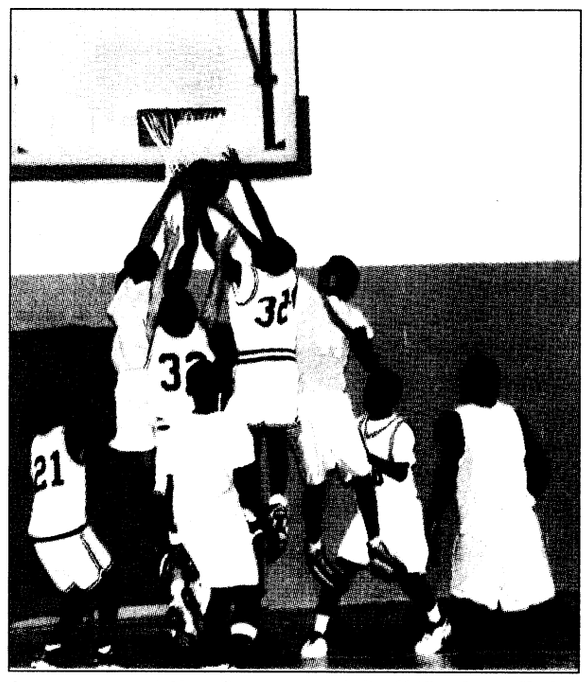
The 12- to 15-year-old division games began with a bang. The Ruff Ryder's fought the Spurs until the final buzzer to secure a 40-37 win.

Battling from under the net, Osualdo Carela was the lead scorer for the Ruff Ryders with 12 points. The Spurs' Travis Smith led his team with 17 and cashed in as top scorer for three consecutive weeks.



The last game of the day kept the audience on their feet. The Knicks scraped by the Warriors 38-36. Warrior Charles Barnes tossed in 12 of the team's 36 points. Jermaine Speight led the Knicks to victory with 13 points.

Dribble it

During an intramural basketball game Tuesday at Audie Murphy Fitness Center, a player (above) with the 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) passes the ball while an opponent from the 608th Ordnance Company attempts to block the pass. At right, the ball slips from a 598th Maint. player's hands as he goes up for shot. The 608th Ordnance Company ended up winning the game.

Intramural games are normally played beginning at 6 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday nights at Audie Murphy, Kefurt and Santiago Fitness Centers in addition to Briant Wells Field House.

Super Bowl XXXIII Atlanta Falcons vs. Denver Broncos	Atlanta — Falcons deserve to win. Besides, is anyone else sick of the Broncos or what?	Atlanta — The Dirty Birds will beat the Broncos, 34-17, humiliating John Elway in his final pro season and setting off a dance riot in Atlanta.	Denver — I am rooting for the Broncos, but have nagging feeling those nasty Dirty Birds will take it.	Denver — Denver by 4 (but I hope the Falcons win)	Denver — Denver because everyone else down here is cheering for the Falcons
Predictions for next year's season	Next year, the Chicago Bears will make a comeback and actually win more than four games.	Jags take it all assisted by the return of instant replay.	Minnesota will return from humiliating defeat and claim it all.	Jets to win AFC, but will get stomped by Giants in Subway Bowl. (This is a fantasy pick — probably won't remember it by next year.)	The Chicago Bears are going to make it to the Super Bowl

Soldiers return from Nicaragua

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Thirty-four Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) and 122 from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) returned home Tuesday after spending two months in Nicaragua lending a hand to help rebuild the hurricane-stricken country.

About 30 more Soldiers from the 63rd Eng. Co. (CSE) are expected to return home Feb. 13 while members of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), which are situated in three Central American countries, are expected to make the trip back some time around the end of February.

The Soldiers of the 36th Eng. Grp. left family and friends in early December and ended up celebrating the true spirit of Christmas by giving the people of Central America a little hope for the future. The Soldiers spent their time opening and building roads, constructing culverts and assisting in other endeavors to help get the countries back on track.

Before the plane rolled to a halt at Lawson Army Airfield, hundreds of family members gathered at the hangar to welcome the Soldiers back with signs, banners, balloons and flowers.

For one family member, this homecoming is even more special because it is for her son. Raelynn Page said it's been about six months since her son has seen his father and she can't wait for him to get back.

"I'm almost more excited for my son because he hasn't seen his daddy for about six months now," Page said. "Of course, nothing is going to beat just having him home again."

She added that communication was tough which made the absence a little harder.

"I only got to talk to him about three times and that was hard, so it's going to feel really good just to catch up on what's going on."

When the plane finally touched down at about 8 p.m., the Soldiers marched into the hangar where they were greeted by family members and friends. As soon as the Soldiers were dismissed, it didn't take long for everybody to find one another and give the long-awaited hugs and kisses.

Sgt. Barry Rimpsey hugs his wife Anna after returning home from Nicaragua Tuesday.

"I'm feeling out of this world right about now," said Sgt. Barry Rimpsey, 63rd Eng. Co. "It's so great to be back and see all of my babies. I can't explain it, I feel like there's electricity going through my body."

Rimpsey said it was a neat experience being able to help the people of Central America, but nothing beats being able to come home and see his family.

"It feels great knowing that we were able to do what we could for these people. They were poor and hungry, with no housing. I'm just glad we were able to help the little that we did."

Rimpsey's 11-year-old son Joseph said he's glad his dad is back because they have a lot of things to catch up on.

"It feels really great having him home. A lot of times, we watch movies together and I missed that, so now we can start doing that again," he said.

There is no doubt that for most of the Soldiers the homecoming was exhilarating, however, some of what they left behind will be missed.

"They were beautiful people who didn't have much, but made the best of it," said Staff Sgt. Michael Morris, 63rd Eng. Co. "I think we've fostered a great relationship between Nicaragua and America. Before they didn't really trust us, but now they know we don't mind leaving home to help them out."

Tyler Tatum, 3, son of Spc. Reginald Tatum, eagerly awaits his fathers return.

Morris said the one thing he will miss most about being there was the children.

"One memory I'll never forget is when our vehicle broke down and we were surrounded by kids who were talking to us and having a great time. They have such a joy for life, which is awesome considering their circumstances."

Investigators topple band of burglars

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

A birage of burglaries that began in November came to a close last month as military police (MP) investigators acted upon a tip that led to the arrest of multiple individuals and the recovery of some of the stolen goods.

Sgt. 1st Class Dan Downs, NCOIC of the Directorate of Public Safety's Military Police Investigations Division, said the tip that toppled the band of burglars came from someone who just days before was victimized by the thieves.

"The caller told us that he just saw a person walking down the street wearing what he thought was one of his articles of clothing," he said. "We investigated the tip, and it led us to the individuals."

"We were just in the right place at just the right time," he said.

Downs said once investigators began talking to the accused individuals, they realized there was a link between this burglary and others that had been logged recently in the area.

"They all fit the same description," he said. "Most of them involved forced entry, and in all the cases, no one was home at the time of the crime."

Downs said after further investigation, the accused told investigators that the crimes were simply committed where they knew no one was home.

"They told investigators wherever there was the most mail in the mailbox, that is where they would strike," he said. "They just looked for an easy target and took advantage of it."

According to Downs, that easy target is just what the MPs are trying to eliminate with their house watch program.

"The program takes only five minutes to enroll," he said. "All it takes is for the resident to come to the MP station (before heading out on vacation) and fill out a simple form that lists specifics about the home."

Included in those specifics, Downs said, is a list of who has access to the home, a list of what vehicles are left at the residence and the locations of any lights inside or outside of the residence that have been left on.

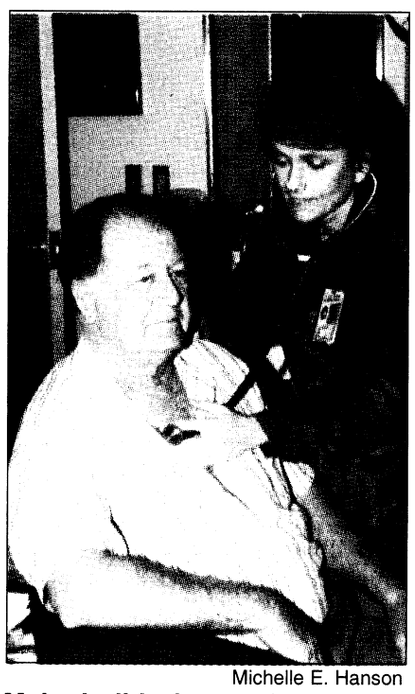
"It is just a list that lets us know what the resident left at home and how he left it," he said. "It also ensures that a patrol officer will check the residence for these things and ensure the safety of the residence while the residents are not at home."

"It is an easy process that in this case could have saved several Fort Benning residents a lot of hassle and money," he said. "Even if they couldn't have made it into the MP station, they could have asked a neighbor to watch the house or collect the mail. It is just simple crime prevention."

The program's success speaks for itself, Downs said. Two Fort Benning residents, who signed up for the quarters checks before going on vacation, proved the worth of the house watch program. During a house watch check patrol, a MP checking their quarters apprehended one thief in the act of burglarizing their homes. That apprehension led to the arrest of two others who were charged a few days later.

For more information on obtaining a house watch form, visit the military police station, Building 215 on Main Post.

Team fields new weapon



Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

A team from the U.S. Army Tank-automotive and Armaments Command-Armament and Chemical Acquisition and Logistics Activity (TACOM-ACALA) recently completed fielding more than 800 weapons of the new Modular Weapons System (MWS) to be used by Fort Benning units.

The team spent less than a week converting 779 M-16 A2s and 86 M-4s into the new M-16 A4 and M-4 Carbine configurations.

According to Tom Tkatch, logistics management specialist for TACOM-ACALA, the new configurations are different because of special rails located on the forward handgrips and beneath the carrying handle which allow a wide

Army nurses prepare for anniversary

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

With painful memories of her husband, a medical evacuation pilot killed during the Persian Gulf War, echoing in her head, Maj. Judith Lee, adult nurse practitioner at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), spoke slowly of her dedication to the Army Nurse Corps (ANC).

Lee's dedication to the ANC, in part, stemmed from the commitment and valor demonstrated by Army nurses stationed throughout the world.

"I am confident that the nurses of the ANC deployed to the Persian Gulf during the war gave the best possible care to my husband as they have to thousands of Soldiers since the earliest days of our Republic," Lee said. "Every Soldier is a son, brother, husband or father to someone — it is important to family members that if a Soldier is wounded, they have the best chance of returning home to loved ones."

The ANC was officially established by an act of Congress on Feb. 2, 1901. Since then nurses have played a vital role in caring for wounded Soldiers and have endeavored to relieve the pain and suffering of war.

"There is an incredible legacy of nursing professionalism and military service following nurses who served since the Revolutionary War," said Maj. Maria Rivera, Department of Nursing administrative assistant at MACH.

Rivera said she was proud to be a part of a unique group of experienced professionals who dedicated themselves to selfless service throughout their long history.

"I have accomplished more than I ever imagined during my lifetime from being a part of the Nurse Corps and that is what makes the upcoming 98th anniversary celebration so special," Lee said.

"Celebrating the Past, Looking to the Future" is the theme for the Army Nurse Corp's 98th Anniversary Celebration scheduled to begin at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Officers' Club.

Brig. Gen. Bettye H. Simmons, Command Surgeon, U.S. Army Forces Command (FORSCOM), will be the guest speaker.

Simmons has served in a wide variety of positions and was appointed as Chief of the Army Nurse Corps on Dec. 12, 1995 and Command Surgeon for FORSCOM April 22, 1997. She graduated with a bachelor's degree in nursing from Incarnate Word College and received a master's degree in nursing from the University of Texas. Simmons is also a graduate of the Command and General Staff College and the U.S. Army War College.

"Simmons was asked to speak because she is the head of the ANC and brings a wide range of experiences with her," Lee said. "Her philosophies lie with mentoring and grooming junior officers in the corps because they are the future of the ANC and the brunch will give her an opportunity to get to know some of them."

Brunch begins at 10 a.m. and The Tender Blenders jazz group will provide music. For information about the brunch, call Rivera at 544-4218.

CHILDREN'S DENTAL HEALTH MONTH

Brushers never too old to learn new habits

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

Going to the dentist has never been my favorite pastime. In fact, I can remember times as a child when I would have rather gobbled up a pan of liver than sit in that reclining, leather chair.

commentary

Even after about 300 visits (I had braces for two years), I still would prefer the liver, but I have at least realized that going to the dentist is one of those necessary evils (sorry dentists). It's sort of like getting shots — you really don't like them, but they may save you from something a whole lot worse.

My worst fear is being 40-years-old and toothless. I don't want to be the postergirl for dentures or want others to have to stare at my teeth when I forget them in a restaurant. When I was 12, I lost one tooth compliments of a flashlight and I have since vowed to pay more attention to my pearly whites.

February is National Children's Dental Health Month. Although this month focuses on the importance of regular check-ups for children, you are never too old to go to the dentist.

Here are some handy-dandy tips from the Academy of General Dentistry that can help improve your oral health.

•Sometimes, people don't brush long enough to get the best results. The Academy advises to brush for the length of one song, which is about two to three minutes. (I tried this one and it actually works provided you don't try and sing along at the same time. It can get pretty messy.)

•If you don't have time to brush, rinse your mouth with water. Water neutralizes acids and reduces bacteria by 30 percent. (Only use this as an emergency, otherwise, please brush your teeth.)

•Using a straw when drinking coffee or tea prevents the liquid from touching and staining the front tooth surfaces.

•Change your toothbrush every three months. Frayed bristles do not clean teeth very well. Sick? Toss your current toothbrush more frequently since the bacteria and viruses remain on the toothbrush and can serve to lengthen your illness.

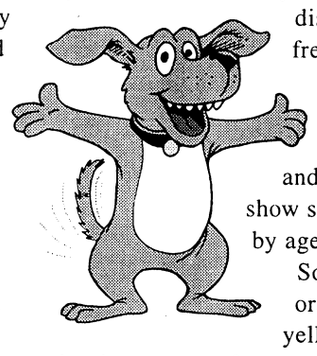
•Nix the hot coffee and ice cream combo. Switching from one temperature extreme to another can cause teeth to expand and contract, causing hairline cracks to develop.

• Get married. Couples often possess similar dental habits. A person in good oral health is 5.4 times more likely to have a comparable partner. People tend to select spouses with some parallel dental behavior.

•Chew sugarless gum. Chewing gum can triple the regular amount of saliva, which is nature's buffer to cavities. (It also helps reduce bad breath ... hint, hint.)

•Clean your tongue. According to the Academy, 85 percent of bad breath originates from the mouth and tongue. In addition to tongue scrapers, you can use a spoon to scrape away the bad-breath bacteria. (This can be quite uncomfortable, yet some seem to enjoy it.)

Animals' teeth also need care, cleaning



Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

OK, so February is National Children's Dental Health Month, but did you know the month has also been deemed National Pet Dental Health Month?

commentary

If you didn't know, your pet's teeth also accumulate plaque and tartar just as our teeth do. With that in mind, could you imagine not brushing your teeth for months? How about years? Makes you want to go home and kiss your pet, doesn't it?

When I was younger and my family would take our weekly trip to my grandparents' house, my siblings and I would always marvel over how my grandfather brushed his cat's teeth. We had never heard of anyone brushing their pet's teeth before and the cat certainly didn't seem to enjoy the extra pampering. In fact, the poor thing barely came out from under the couch as it was.

It wasn't until many years later that I learned that my grandfather was on the right track and had perhaps saved his kitty from much more pain further down the road.

According to the American Veterinary Dental Society, oral disease is the most frequently diagnosed health problem for pets, and nearly 80 percent of dogs and 70 percent of cats show signs of oral disease by age 3.

Some symptoms of oral disease include yellow and brown build-up of tartar along the gum line, inflamed gums and every pet owner's worst nightmare — persistent bad breath.

Bad breath may not seem so bad, but the bacteria associated with oral disease can damage the heart, liver and kidneys not to mention contribute to tooth loss. There's nothing worse than a dog with no teeth. I wonder if they make doggie dentures?

Anyway, please don't just run out and buy a toothbrush and drool bib for Fifi or Max. I'd ask a veterinarian for advice before subjecting your pet to any unneeded torture.

While your pet may be in dire need of a cleaning, your vet may suggest a quick fix to the pet's dental dilemma — to switch brands of pet foods. Some brands are specially formulated to help remove tartar and plaque, and they are mighty tasty to boot. (Don't ask how I know this.)

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller said the two-way stop signs posted at the corner of Edwards Street and the street that leads down into the east parking lot of Infantry Hall need to be changed to blinking red and amber lights or plain stop signs. She said when drivers see the two-way stop sign, they are assuming that cars coming out of Infantry Hall parking lot are supposed to stop and they just drive right across the road making the cars stop suddenly. The caller said there is the potential for an accident at the intersection and it could be prevented by clarifying what a driver coming down or going up Edwards Street should do, and that is stop.

DPW's response:

The Installation Traffic Engineer inspected the site and checked standards regarding correct stop sign usage and placement for this intersection. He concluded the additional sign stating "Two-way" was not in accordance with requirements and regulations and he had it promptly removed.

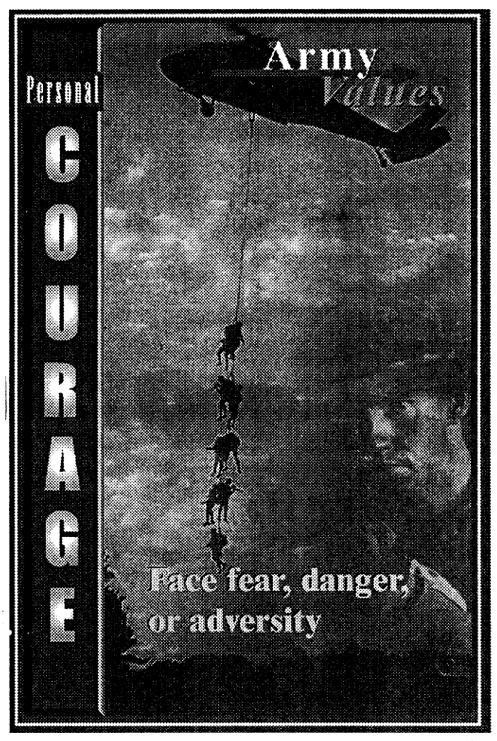
Call: Caller concerned about vehicle registration decals placement on vehicles.

DPS's response:



Motor vehicles that are owned or operated by a person who resides, performs duty, employed and or frequently visits the post will be registered within 10 working days of arrival on post. At time of registration, POV owners are informed of the proper placement of registration decals. Since the commencement of the MP checkpoint, DPS has confiscated 108 decals that were not affixed IAW instructions issued at the time of registration. The decal, DD Form 220, is to be affixed to the center top of the front windshield of the vehicle for which it was issued.

Call: Caller wanted to know who to call about the condition of the water flowing into her quarters. She said it has been brown repeatedly.

DPW's response:

The Water Plant, under the DPW's Energy and Utilities Branch, is responsible for checking into calls such as this. The problem was resolved by that afternoon.

FY 2000 budget provides increase for Department of Defense

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

President Clinton's proposed Fiscal Year 2000 defense budget would provide the Army its first real growth in funded dollars since 1985, enabling bigger pay raises for Soldiers and civilian employees, and a return to the "50-percent" Soldiers' retirement system.

The Army would receive about $67 billion in Fiscal Year 2000 under the president's proposal, providing the Army with 1.4-percent real growth in funding compared to last year, according to senior Army budget officials.

"This proposed budget addresses our most important readiness concerns," Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera said. "It increases pay and benefits that help us recruit and retain the best people, helps fill key personnel shortages, shores up training, budgets, and targets additional resources to repair aging infrastructure, and keeps our modernization efforts on track."

Military personnel appropriation funding will be used to reward Soldiers for their superb post-Cold War service, according to a senior Army budget official. At more than $27 billion, the military personnel appropriation is the largest portion of the Army's proposed FY '00 budget.

"We have worked closely with the president and the Defense Department to put together a Fiscal Year 2000 budget and out-year plan that provides substantial funding increases for our critical readiness accounts," said Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer. "This budget also calls for the largest pay raise our Soldiers have received in 15 years, a 50-percent retirement for all Soldiers, and pay table initiatives.

"It is important for our Soldiers to know their daily sacrifices are recognized and these compensation-related initiatives are a big step in the right direction."

The president's budget provides funding for increased commitment to combat readiness and modernization, according to senior Army budget officials. The Army's portion of the budget would support 480,000 active-duty Soldiers, 350,000 Guardsmen, 205,000 Army reservists, and 217,000 Department of the Army civilians.

The Army would use much of the proposed FY '00 budget to fund quality of life, or "people programs," officials said. This includes pay raises of 4.4 percent for all Soldiers and civilian employees, the cancellation of the 1986-enacted, "Redux"-40-percent military retirement system, barracks modernization and family housing improvements, the promotion of efforts to privatize family housing in the continental U.S., and the renovation of installation infrastructure.

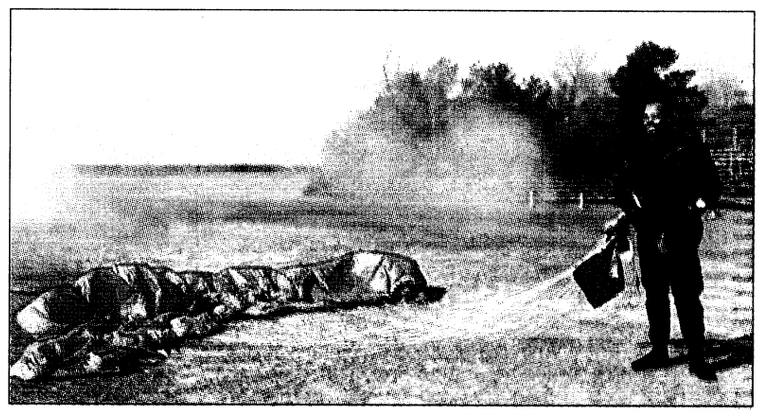
The 4.4 percent pay raises, which exceed anticipated civilian-sector pay hikes and estimated inflation rates, would take effect Jan. 1, 2000, officials said.

For some time, senior DoD and Army officials have told Congressional leaders that pay, benefits and overall quality of life for service members, to include Soldiers, has been slipping in recent years. The proposed budget helps to alleviate those concerns, officials said.

"There is the psychological aspect. (Service members) have to be impacted by seeing the Secretary (of Defense), the service secretaries, all of the Joint Chiefs (of Staff) and the chairman standing up (before Congress) ... that is very positive. Then, to see the president of the administration deliver on that ..." said a senior Army budget official.

To address Soldiers' concerns about pay, the proposed budget, in addition to providing an across-the-board 4.4 percent pay raise, also contains money for incremental pay raises for some junior enlisted Soldiers, career officers and NCOs.

The incremental pay raises were mostly proposed to accomplish a change in the purpose of service member pay tables to reward performance over length of service, according to DoD compensation officials. They said in current military pay tables, on a percentage basis, gears officer pay 37 percent on promotion and 63 percent for longevity. Enlisted service member pay is currently geared 47 percent on promotion, and 53 percent for longevity.



If approved, this added pay, to be distributed in amounts of 0.1 to 5.5 percent to some junior enlisted soldiers and mid-career NCOs and officers, would take effect July 1, 2000. Overall, the pay proposal would represent the biggest service member pay raise since 1982.

The increased funding, according to the senior Army budget official, would also improve readiness by enabling the Army to provide more troop training time, and to fund continuing research, development and procurement of new equipment, and harnessing new technology to enhance modernization efforts.

The proposed Army budget would be used to upgrade existing hardware such as the M1 Abrams tank, the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, and more, according to the senior Army budget official. Money would also be used for test and evaluation of the Comanche helicopter and the Crusader self-propelled artillery system.

Skydivers take "plunge"

Sgt. 1st Class Michael Elliot recovers his parachute after completing a practice jump Jan. 29.

Exhibition skydiving teams rely on each other to make the show a success for spectators who have gathered to watch. They only have one chance to execute each move correctly and marvel the crowds below.

For two members of Fort Benning's Silver Wings Exhibition Parachute Team, relying on each other isn't just something they practice while in the air, it's something they do on a day-to-day basis.

Sgt. 1st Class Michael and Sgt. Celia Elliot are the Silver Wings' jumping couple. It was their love for the skies that brought them together, but it was their love for each other that had them wed in a ceremony one year ago.

The duo began performance jumping together three years ago after opportunity knocked at Celia's door.

Having her first airborne experience before entering the Army, Celia said she has loved the sport ever since first she began.

"When I joined the military, it was always with the intent of going airborne. I knew that was what I wanted to do," Celia said.

Celia joined the Army and followed her passion becoming a parachute rigger. One day while she was at work, she was asked if she wanted to volunteer for the Silver Wings and "jumped" at the chance.

Not only did her love of the sky lead her to participate in something she enjoyed, it led her work with Michael, who ended up becoming her team leader and eventually her husband.

Michael, who has more than 1,000 jumps under his wings, began jumping with the parachute team three and a half years ago.

"It was initially hard for me," Michael said. "It was not everyday that I jumped out of an aircraft at 10,000 feet, but the more I did it, the more I fell in love with the sport. When you are up in the air, there are no words which could describe it, it is like you are flying."

More than three years and 1,200 jumps later, the two took a somewhat unique approach to making a lifelong commitment. This bride-to-be didn't walk down the aisle with flowers in hand, but rather a reserve and ripcord as the two took the "plunge," parachuting into their ceremony.

"Our wedding was definitely different," Michael said.

Could there be a better way to enter a life-long commitment and have a little fun at the same time? Not for this couple, but they are always professionals when it comes to their skill.

Even after the wedding, the pair said they continue to keep their relationship strictly business while in the air.

Michael said everything they do while in the shop, is done as a team. It takes all the members of the Silver Wings to complete a mission. However, it takes teamwork to make anything from a mission to a marriage to work.

"I do not see him as my husband, he is like everyone else on the team. Although it is different when we go home," Celia said.

MWS: Units receive weapon spectrum of devices to be mounted to the weapon.

Tkatch said everything from optic equipment to laser pointers and infra-red devices can be attached easily to the MWS without having to re-adjust or re-zero the weapon.

He said the MWS are ideal because the weapon can change to fit the mission.

"This system gives the Infantryman a greater capacity to fight in all weather and conditions at any time without any problems, which equals more capability, more threat and more certainty of hitting a first-round probability," Tkatch said.

Tkatch added that this is the first time since the early '80s that any major significant changes have been made to the M-16 A2 which have been incorporated into the Army's weapons pool.

According to Marianne B. Dixon, Force Modernization and Integration Officer, Directorate of Operations and Training, all of the more than 800 MWS will go to support the U.S. Army Infantry School (USAIS).

Dixon said thus far the only unit which has received the MWS are the Rangers of the 75th Ranger Regiment and those under USAIS. The 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) is projected to receive the weapons some time next year with other units to follow in the future.

Spc. Kenneth Laws, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Infantry Regiment, said the new configuration of the M-4 is better than the old because it is easier to carry and more user friendly. He added that is also more deadly.

"It is an ideal weapon because you can attach mission essential equipment to it without much hassle," Laws said. "It increases our lethality because we have greater fire distance and accuracy."

Tkatch said he expects the MWS to be around for quite some time.

"This weapons system is a work horse," Tkatch said. "It's going to be a workhorse for the next 20 years or so and I'm going to be proud to see it out there when I'm old and stooped over."

Commission proposes changes to GI Bill

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

Imagine serving four years on active duty and then getting a full college scholarship and $400 a month to live on.

That's the reward a congressional commission would like the nation to give its men and women in uniform. The 12-member panel of military veterans would also like service members returning to civilian life to receive subsidized temporary health care and other improved veterans benefits.

The Congressional Commission on Service Members and Veterans Transition Assistance conducted a two-year review and issued its report to Congress Jan. 14. Panelists proposed major changes to the Montgomery GI Bill and the military's transition assistance program.

Congress set up the commission in 1996 to review benefits and services available to active duty members and veterans, said Anthony Principi.

He said a review was needed to reflect changes since the original GI Bill became law in 1944 and subsequent veterans legislation was passed in the 1980s.

"We've seen dramatic changes in the size and makeup of our military," Principi said. The commission visited over 40 military installations around the world, talking to thousands of service members and family members, the chairman said. The panelists also held numerous hearings and meetings with government policy makers, employers and military and veterans service organizations.

The panel learned health care, employment and education are foremost on service members' minds.

"Education is the most important benefit that we can provide to active duty people in this high-technology, information age if they want to get good jobs," he said.

The panelists ran into some hard truths when they explored veterans education benefits, he said. Under the current program, service members contribute $1,200 of their first year's pay to enroll in the Montgomery GI Bill. Principi said about half of those who contribute fail to use their benefits.

The commission looked at why service members forgo their benefits.

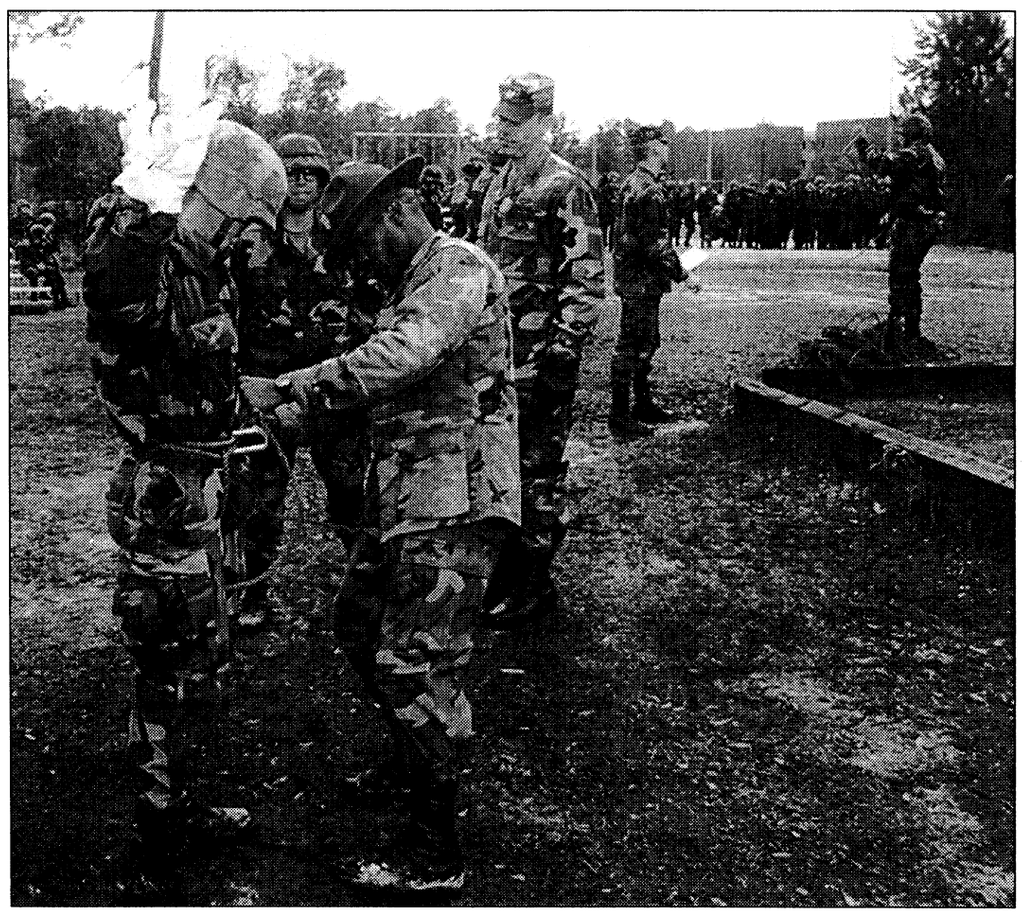
"The monthly stipend is insufficient to allow them to go to school," Principi said.

The cost of a good education has risen dramatically since the Montgomery GI Bill became law in 1984, he said, and the nature of education has changed.

"That's not hard to understand," Principi said. "With Pell Grants and Stafford Loans and state college programs, you really have to do little more than breathe to be able to go to college in America today."

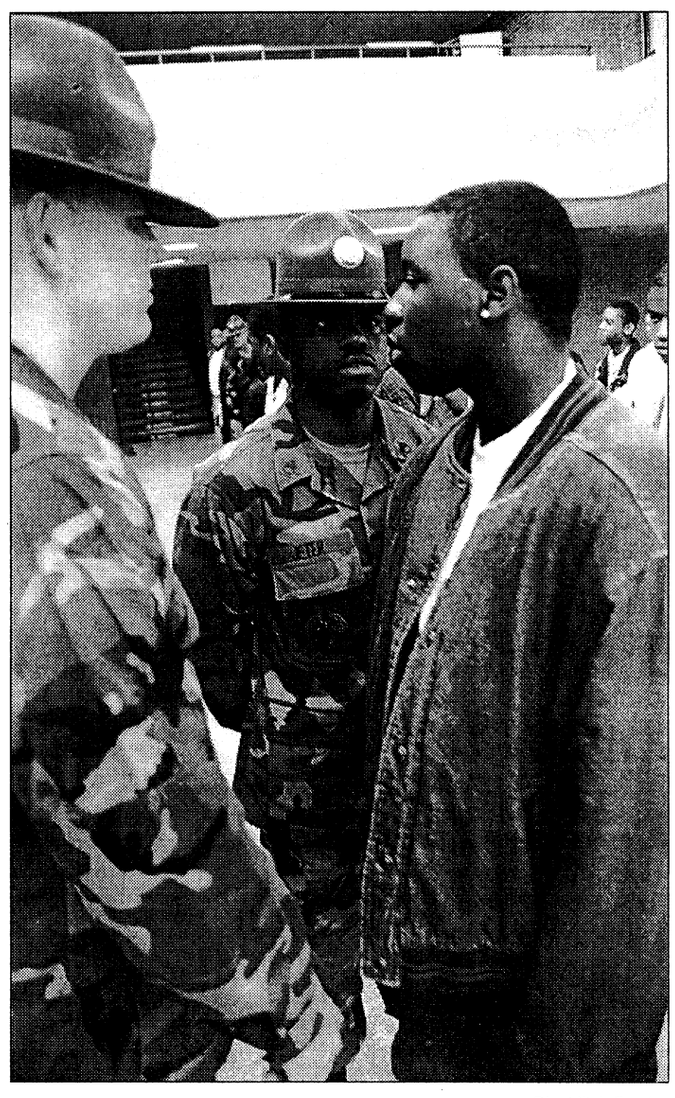
The commission recommended Congress pass legislation for the government to pay for honorably discharged members with four years on active duty to attend any school in America for which they qualify. The panelists said the scholarship should cover full tuition, fees and books, and provide a $400 monthly stipend. The four-year service clock would start on the enactment date of the new law; members already on active duty at that time would qualify by re-enlisting or extending to satisfy the four-year requirement.

The commission also proposed that service members who stay on active duty and don't attend college or other schooling be allowed to transfer their education benefits to their dependent spouse or child.



The panel also recommended repealing the $1,200 contribution, both for the new GI Bill and the Montgomery version.

"So, after the date of enactment, service members would no longer have to make that $100 a month contribution," Principi said.



Along with enhancing recruitment and retention, he noted, these proposed changes would impact all of America.

"Look at the World War II experience and what that GI Bill did. It built modern America. It built a generation of great leaders," he said.

"(Our) recommendation will allow today's service members to go to the best schools in America. It will give them the incentive to do well and the aspiration to attend America's elite schools."

Top NCOs prepare for ride on "the trail"

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

For the thousands of Soldiers who annually join the ranks of the Army's enlisted force, the drill sergeant is the first person they come in contact with. They are the first impression the new Soldier will have of the Army. They have sworn to protect and serve, and the drill sergeant is responsible for ensuring that impression reflects the high standards of the modern Army.

Those high standards, according to Drill Sergeant Sgt. 1st Class Darrell G. Sullivan, the acting first sergeant at the U.S. Army Drill Sergeant School here, are something that drill sergeants are instilled with from Day 1 of their 9-week course of instruction that transforms them into the finest trainers, mentors and leaders in the world.

"We take the Army's top noncommissioned officers and teach them to be the finest trainers able to lead and teach Initial Entry Training Soldiers," Sullivan said. "They are tested, tested and retested to the point that the training we give them here and the training they will give to recruits is second nature."

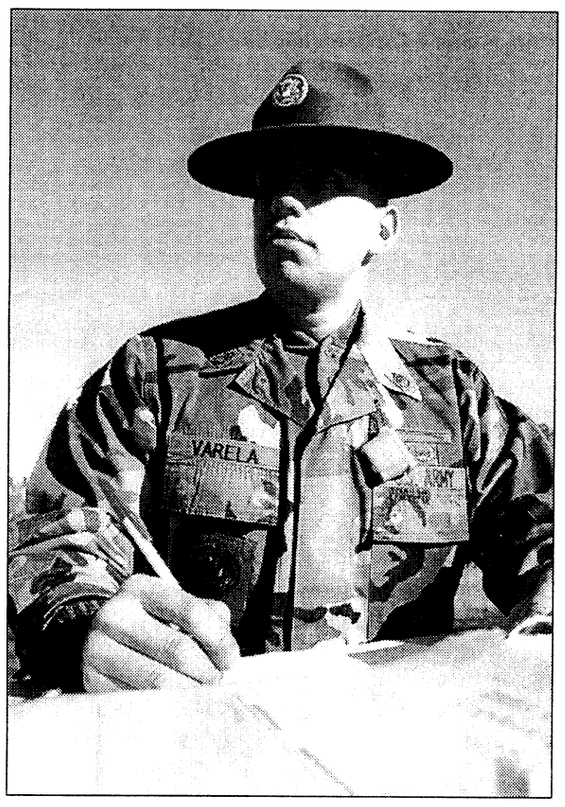
For the more than 400 drill sergeant candidates that annually shuffle through this, one of three drill sergeant schools in the Army, learning and performing the skills required to train and to lead the land warrior of the future is not an easy task.

"This is a tough course there is no doubt about that," said Staff Sgt. Daniel D. Rawlings, a drill sergeant candidate slated to serve at Fort Eustis, Va. "But it is all worth it. I have always wanted to train Soldiers. Some of the Soldiers coming in seem to be lacking motivation. I just want to see if I can fix the problem."

"I realize I cannot do it by myself, but at least I can have some input into it," he said.

Adding input and working together as a team is an essential part of the course that spans nearly 370 academic hours and takes noncommissioned officers from around the Army who either volunteered or were selected by the Department Army to "hit the trail."

Prior to packing their bags and heading to the school, noncommissioned officers desiring to don the brown round must meet or exceed the standards of a multitude of tests evaluating everything from their state to their ability to speak properly.



Army Regulation 614-200 outlines the standards for becoming one of the Army's finest instructors and leaders, however, NCOs investigating the regulation and the possibility of one day earning the right to be called a drill should beware.

"Within the last two years, the regulation has changed quite a bit," said Sullivan. "The incident at Aberdeen (Proving Grounds, Md.) in the early 90s prompted DA to change the system which in turn changed the regs."

The danger in aspiring drill sergeants researching the regulations is that they may get a hold of one of the old regulations which entail many different requirements, Sullivan said.

According to U.S. Army Personnel Command Deputy Public Affairs Officer Shari Lawrence, the best things desiring drills could do is access the new and updated regulation via PERSCOM's web page.

The address for the drills sergeant regulation is http://books.army.mil/cgi-bin/bookmgr/BOOKS/R614_200/8.Section-III.

Early-outs hard to find in 1999

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

The Army will not offer "early-out" programs in Fiscal Year 1999, except to some lieutenants and officers in the Army Medical Department.

Army personnel officials said no Temporary Early Retirement Authority (15-year retirements), Voluntary Separation Incentive, or Special Separation Benefit programs will be offered to enlisted Soldiers or Army Competitive Category officers above the rank of lieutenant.

"With ends strength manning achievement as our top readiness priority, the use of Programmed Managed Losses is not required in FY 1999," said Maj. Marlon K. Beck, personnel officer, Directorate of Military Personnel Management, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"In the past, the officer and enlisted drawdown effort, despite challenges to achieve Congress-mandated ends strength, was very successful because we worked hard to demonstrate care and concern for Soldiers and their families throughout the reshaping of the force," Beck said.

According to Beck, the Army reduced its active officer corps by more than 25,000 from 1989 to 1998, and cut its active enlisted force by 82,644 from 1992 to 1998.

Most Soldiers that opted to leave the Army early in years past, Beck said, were volunteers who had between eight and 20 years-of-service.

Personnel who retired early received scaled-back retirement pay. Soldiers who left early under VSI or SSB received annuities or lump-sum payments, respectively.

"We used the full spectrum of drawdown tools provided by law, however, whenever possible, we took advantage of those programs that encouraged voluntary separation of officers from the force," Beck said. "Voluntary separation was encouraged by offering monetary incentives such as separation bonuses and early retirement."

The Fiscal Year 1999 early-out officer program for the Army Medical Department is still in effect.

Early outs are also available to lieutenants that meet eligibility requirements to separate under the Army National Guard Combat Reform Initiative.

These lieutenants must serve their remaining service obligation in the Army National Guard.

IOBC ends bayonet, pugil stick training

2nd Lt. Charles Smith
Infantry Officers Basic Course

The students of the Infantry Officer's Basic Course, Class 1-99, recently completed bayonet and pugil training. The second lieutenants of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, were trained by Staff Sgt. Jeffrey Myhre, a 4th Platoon Cadre member.

Myhre conducted two sessions during which students were instructed in both defensive moves and in ways to inflict massive bodily harm on the enemy.

Among the moves taught were the parry left, parry right, slash, thrust and Myhre's favorite, the smash. The training was culminated by maneuvering Sand Hill's Bayonet Assault Course.

The course consisted of 13 stations which required participants to execute bayonet drills, scale obstacles and move tactically. Following the assault course, Co. C conducted platoon-level pugil training.

After donning a football helmet, hockey gloves and a chest protector, the lieutenants paired up and joined battle.

The training is designed to develop aggressiveness in Soldiers and to reduce the anxiety of closing with and destroying the enemy. The morning was topped off with a Company level contest by weight.

Parents learn to 'teach' in new program

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

More than 200 parents and children flooded the White Elementary School cafeteria Feb. 28, ready to partake in a new literacy program adopted by the school. The program is called Partners in Print and is aimed at teaching parents different ways to help their children become better readers.

According to Cynthia K. Hill, third-grade teacher and workshop coordinator, Fort Benning recently adopted the program which began in Australia, a country that has the highest literacy rate in the world.

Hill said the program involves a series of 12 workshops throughout the year, but because it was just introduced, White School will conduct two or three for the remaining school year.

Those who attend the workshops are divided into four groups and spend their time rotating through four different sessions which last about 10 minutes each.

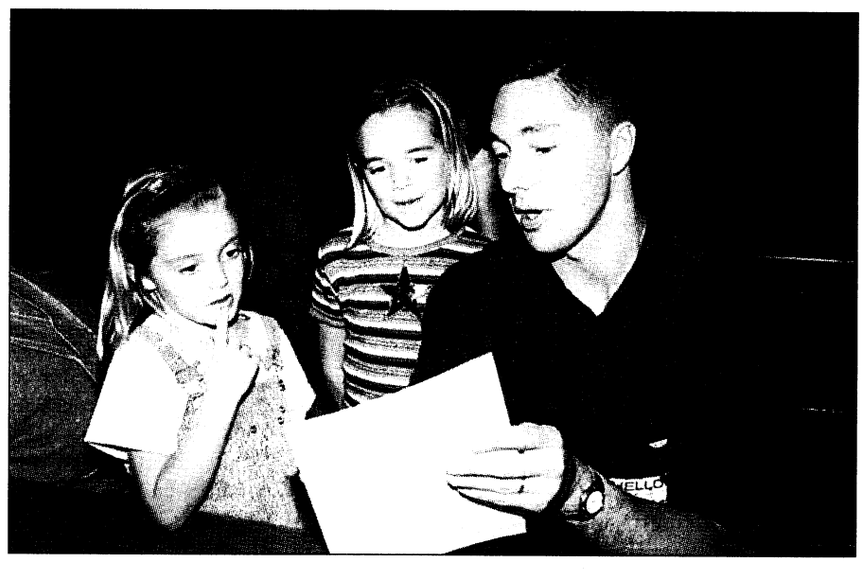
During the sessions, teachers first offer hints and tips to get children excited and interested in reading. The session is then turned over to the parents who spend the remainder of the time working the exercise with their children.

Hill said an example of one of the sessions is using cut-up sentences.

"There's one session called 'What's Missing' that involves reading a story and leaving out words or phrases. Depending upon whether the listener was really listening, he or she should be able to replace the missing word," Hill said. "It's a skill that enhances a child's reading ability, because as they learn to listen and focus on the text, they can integrate the knowledge they have with it."

Another session teaches parents to use nursery rhymes, chants and fingerplays to get the children interested in reading.

One of the participants, 1st Lt. Ron Green, 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), said he decided to come to the workshop because he wanted to spend time with his 6-year-old son, Devante, and learn different ways to help him read.



"He's really getting into reading and beginning to enjoy it and I thought it would be fun to come here and read out loud to him," Green said. "I figured I could use what I learn here to help him, because sometimes he gets frustrated and it's hard to tell him not to. This workshop should help me understand what level he is on and the best way to help him."

The younger Green said he likes it when his dad reads to him.

"I like reading with my dad, because he helps me with some of the words I don't know," Devante said.

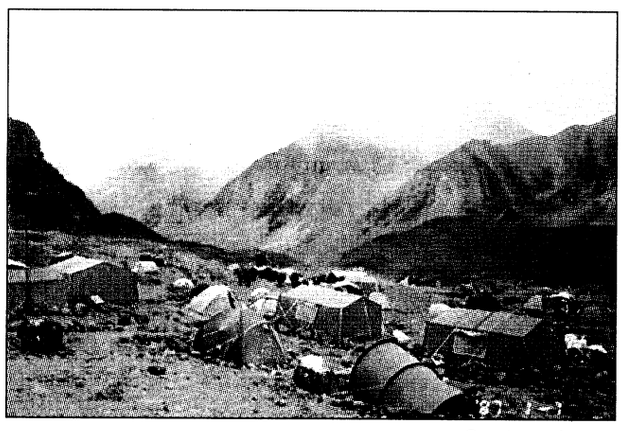
Hill said one of the main goals behind the program is to get parents involved.

"We definitely want children to become better readers, but before they can become better readers the parents need to be involved in their education," Hill said.

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Capt. Malcom Schaefer, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, practices reading with daughters, Elyse, 5, (left) and Ashley, 6, Schaefer attended the Partners in Print workshop held at White Elementary School Jan. 28.

Jill Beard, a volunteer coordinator for the program, agreed that it is vital for parents to be involved for their children to become better readers.



"I believe that reading is something that is half learned at school and half learned at home, and a child cannot learn to read without both halves," Beard said.

Beard said the workshop not only focused on parents and young children, but the whole family.

"One of the reasons we invited the whole family is because we feel there is a real place for older brothers and sisters in teaching the younger kids to read," Beard said. "It's important for them to get involved because even when they are babysitting they can apply the techniques they've learned to help the younger ones."

White School's Reading Specialist, Sara Vancleave, said the most important thing is just for everyone to have a good time.

"This workshop helps children and parents learn that reading is fun," Vancleave said. "Parents realize there are ways to be involved in their children's reading outside of the textbook and library; they find it's all around them everyday."

Climbers gain respect for nature's majestic giant

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Dreams came true, life became clearer and military integrity remained intact for the Fort Benning joint multinational climbing team Dec. 27 through Jan. 23 during their assault on Mount Aconcagua, nature's 22,841 foot rock that challenges thousands of climbers annually.

After a successful climb in July of Mount Rainier located in Washington, both Marine Maj. Mark Burger, and Lt. Col. Eduardo Garate, a guest instructor from Chile who works with the Department of Joint and Combined Operations at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA), wanted to go higher. Garate mentioned Mount Aconcagua and the planning began.

Since July, the team, which also included Marine Lt. Col. Dan Curfiss, Marine Maj. Mike Morris, Marine Capt. Matt Marcinelle, and Lt. Col. Rich Sheppard, USARSA, has been training to climb Mount Aconcagua, the largest mountain in the Western Hemisphere. Mount Aconcagua is located in the Andes Mountains in Argentina just east of the Chilean border. Mark Lonsdale, a published author from California, was also part of the team.

But not all the hard training, not even the altitude chamber at Fort Rucker, Ala., prepared the climbers for Aconcagua's challenge.

"Anything above 18,000 ft. is considered high altitude," said Burger. "Your body goes through different changes trying to adapt to the lower atmospheric pressure. Some people adapt faster — some people suffer severe side effects from going into an environment where the atmosphere is about 40 percent of what it is at sea level."

Only Garate made it to the summit (top).

"I felt so proud after reaching the top," he said. "Behind me there was so much work and sacrifice."

Although he had conquered something he wanted for a long time, he felt sad that the rest of his team could not celebrate with him.

"This was a team effort," said Garate. "Although I was the only one that reached the summit, I couldn't have got there without the support of my team."

For Garate, making it to the top was a dream come true.

A native of the town of Los Andes, Chile, about 60 kilometers away from Aconcagua, he said when he was a boy there was a hill in Los Andes where he and his father would climb to look at Aconcagua.

"My father always pointed toward Aconcagua," he said. "Climbing that mountain was always on my mind. What seemed to be an out-of-reach goal has become a dream come true."

For others on the team, climbing Aconcagua had become an obligation to themselves, the team and their families, added with an extra ingredient that always

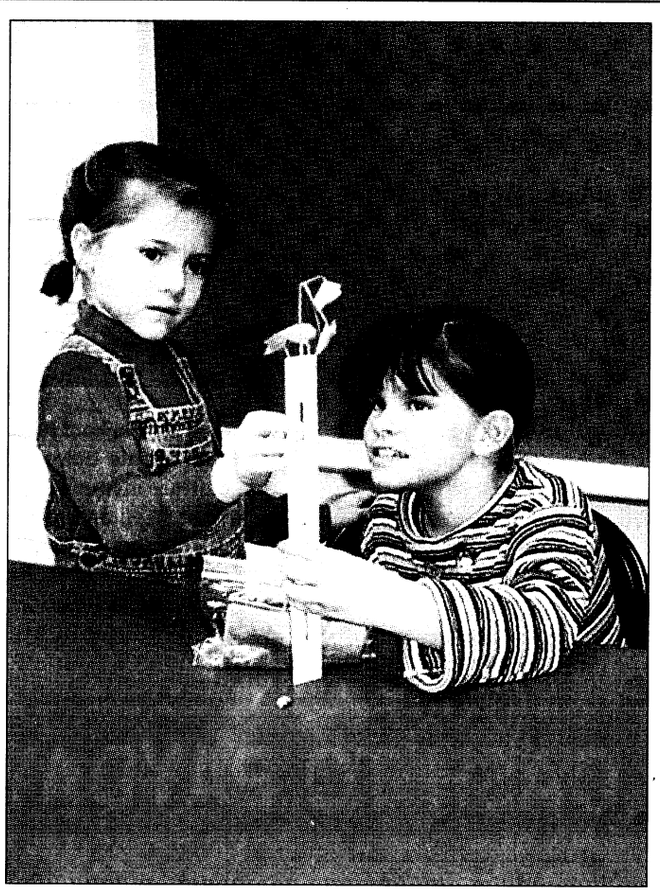
Programs help combat abuse

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent



When it comes to combating child abuse, Fort Benning Soldiers and military family members are not alone. Child abuse in any family is not a pretty picture, but the Army's stance is to confront it early on, not ignore it, according to Family Advocacy Program (FAP) Manager Rebecca Welch.

"I don't think people started hearing as much about child abuse and family violence until sometime in the 80's," Welch said. "For years, families just handled it themselves."

Welch believes the military has always focused on relieving increasing stresses on military families and preventing child abuse by having programs in place to educate Soldiers and families on the issue.

"I think Department of Defense was looking more at having

The Martin Army Medical Mentor

... a community service from Martin Army Community Hospital

Overall health improves with self-care

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

One very good tool available for teaching person self-care is a book called, Take Care of Yourself. It is distributed free to those who enroll in Tricare either at Soldiers' Plaza or at the Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) Tricare Service Center. It is also distributed the first Wednesday of each month at 2 p.m. in the hospital's Baugh Conference Room.

The book is designed to help the reader make a decision of when to call or see a doctor. For example, more than 10 percent of doctor visits nationwide are for uncomplicated colds.

The book consists of many common complaints and takes the reader through a step-by-step process for deciding whether professional medical care is needed and how urgently. The reader should look up the very worst problem first, not skip any questions and take the action indicated. A special section is dedicated to emergencies and should be read before such need arises.

Many self-help books exist, but this one is endorsed by several physician groups to include those serving in the MACH Family Practice Acute Care Clinic.

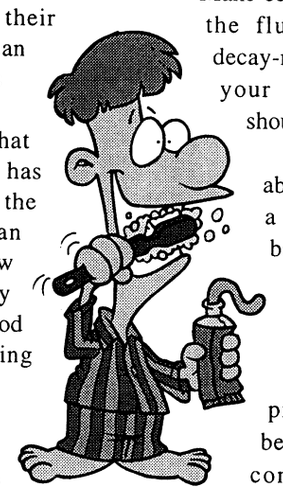
Some who use the book express the feeling that any problem treated without medication and by using a home treatment regimen has been made trivial by the health provider and inadequate care has been rendered. This is not true. Instead, one should be reassured that the illness should resolve without problems if given time.

Many people have come to expect a medication for any illness that comes along. While medications can be life saving, some may interfere with the natural body mechanisms such as immune responses including coughing, inflammation and diarrhea.

For example, most healthy people can fight an infection naturally without the use of antibiotics. This is especially true of viruses because antibiotics do not fight viruses. Antibiotics have been so overused unnecessarily that now the earth faces a crisis of powerful germs for which antibiotics are not effective. This problem will only worsen over time as the germs multiply into forms which can resist the antibiotics being used.

Most healthy people are capable of fighting colds, sore throats and in many cases ear aches,without the use of antibiotics.

A former Surgeon General once released the statement, "You, the individual, can do more for your own health and well being than any doctor, any hospital, any drugs and any exotic devices."



Many people have bought into this concept of accepting personal responsibility for good health. In fact, the national health goals program, Healthy People 2000, is based on the notion of preventing national illness through individuals with healthy lifestyles. These goals were set up by a panel of health experts through the Department of Health and Human Services. By the year 2000, the goal is that more people will exercise regularly, fewer will smoke cigarettes, fewer will be overweight and less fat and alcohol and more fiber will be consumed.

A website for learning more about better health through reading and self-care is www.healfinder.gov. The sections named "just for you" and "smart choices" are especially helpful. This site is operated by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Dentist promotes good habits early

Lt. Col. Adolfina Polk
Fort Benning Dental Activity

As we fast approach the 21st century, the phrase that comes into mind is "The future is now." The way children care for their bodies today will have an impact on their health as adults.

The good news is that preventive dental care has dramatically improved the oral health of American children. It's now possible for many children to reach adulthood without ever experiencing tooth decay.

February is National Children's Dental Health Month and the Fort Benning Dental Activity has these tips for parents and caregivers:

•Take children to see the dentist regularly, beginning by the child's first birthday.

•Put only water in a child's nap time or bedtime bottle.

•Start brushing as soon as the child's first tooth appears.

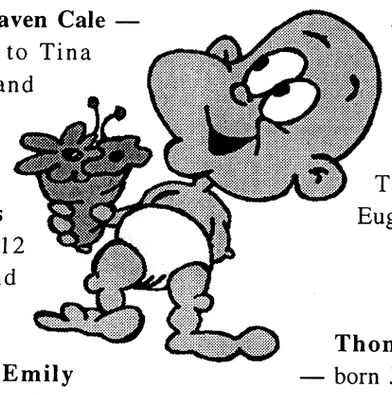
•Begin flossing when two teeth begin to touch.

•Brush and floss your child's teeth daily until the child can be taught to do this alone.

•Make certain your child gets the fluoride needed for decay-resistant teeth. Ask your dentist how this should be done.

•Ask your dentist about dental sealants, a thin protective barrier that shields the chewing surface of back teeth against tooth decay.

Good oral health practices should begin in infancy and continue throughout adult life. In your child's early years, you must provide this care. Later you will need to instruct, monitor and motivate your child to help maintain good oral health habits.



Attitudes and habits established at an early age are critical in maintaining good oral health throughout life.

DoD mandates abuse programs

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

No Fort Benning Soldier or family member gets by without some kind of training in the awareness and prevention of child abuse, according to Rebecca Welch, Fort Benning's Family Advocacy Program (FAP) Manager.

Programs mandated by the Department of Defense ensure that parents, children, commanders and the professionals who work with them are all informed on the subject and the help that is available, Welch said.

Listed below are some of the programs:

Commander Education Program — Commanders are briefed on a continuous basis regarding identification of abuse, FAP policies and procedures, programs available and command responsibilities.

Troop Education Program — Annual education for all military personnel on abuse, available treatment services and Army policies on abuse.

Parent Education Program — Includes the "First Steps" program which provides parent education, emotional support and follow-up contact to parents of newborns in an effort to prevent abuse.

Safety Education for Children — FAP provides Fort Benning school counselors with materials to conduct classes for children on child abuse , after school safety, good touch, bad touch, etc. and information for teachers and counselors on how to listen and talk with children about abuse.

FAP also participates in community and unit events such as health fairs, organization days and provides educational materials to units, Child Development Services, Youth Services, Family Support Groups and spouse orientation.

For more information, call the Army Community Services Family Advocacy Program at 545-3344 or 545-5516.

programs already in place to meet the needs of families," Welch said.

The FAP is a "commanders program," Welch explained. In that all commanders are briefed on the programs, which are mandatory and targeted at every family member.

"We are the tools to help them meet the needs of their Soldiers' families," Welch said.

Col. Thomas J. Cain, director of Public Safety, said Fort Benning is one of the few installations that keeps unit commanders informed of all reports of family problems via the daily blotter, regardless of whether or not violence is a factor.

In some communities, police will not document a domestic problem unless an assault is part of the situation encountered.

"That is not so at Fort Benning, nor should it be here or anywhere," Cain said.

Cain said in the case of abuse, it's better to over-report and intervene before the problem becomes too severe.

"We recognize that 'verbals' are often preludes to the elevated criminal character of future family confrontations or abuse," Cain said. "Consequently, we want to focus on response and counseling efforts toward prevention, not just post-event analysis."

Every reported case of child abuse on post goes before the Case Review Committee (CRC) composed of a pediatrician, a social worker, Chief of Social Work Services, a chaplain, the FAP manager and representatives from Judge Advocate General, Military Police, Criminal Investigation and Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control.

After a thorough assessment of the facts, the CRC votes on whether to "open" the case and develop a treatment plan for the family, or close the case.

Welch emphasized that the CRC is a "treatment" body, not a judicial body.

To ensure that cases reported among families living off post don't slip through the cracks, FAP has a Memorandum of Agreement with the Department of Family and Children Services of Muskogee and Chattahoochee Counties. Those cases also are reviewed by the CRC.

"Because so many Soldiers live off post, it's very important to have a good relationship with downtown," Welch said. "You have to forget thinking, 'This is my turf.'"

Welch has matched those words with action over the last 10 years by being a key player in the development of Children's Treehouse, Columbus's child advocacy center, according to Joanne Cavis with the University of Georgia Cooperative Extension Service. The center, Cavis said, was modeled much after Fort Benning's program.

"The FAP program reflects a model educational program," Cavis said. The model downtown, she said, "continues to come from a multi-disciplinary approach."

One of the foundations in starting a movement to prevent and educate about child abuse is getting all the team members and their different backgrounds and points of view together, Cavis said.

"When people from different disciplines train together, they hear the same message, have better appreciation for each other's job and build relationships for working together," Cavis said.

"Everyone at Fort Benning works together and they have the expertise in developing, planning and implementing their programs," she said.

Welch also has been instrumental in providing training for those involved in the Columbus program.

Fort Benning representatives were part of the group of downtown leaders who first met to address the need for a child advocacy program in Columbus. Out of that came the Columbus Chartered Council on Child Abuse (CRCCCA).

Welch said when she first came to Fort Benning in 1988, she saw a need for better communication with CRCCCA. When they didn't have the funds for training professionals and para-professionals in dealing with child abuse, Welch saw it as a perfect bridge. Fort Benning had the funds, since its programs are mandatory, so she and Cavis developed a child abuse training conference for civilians and military that began in 1991 and continues to be a yearly event sponsored by FAP and the University of Georgia.

"Looking at it from a regional standpoint, you get civilian and military interaction," Cavis said, "and that's important."

Welch said she sees firsthand the effectiveness of Fort Benning's approach in the families who go through treatment. She also believes the rising number of requests for materials and seminars makes a strong statement.

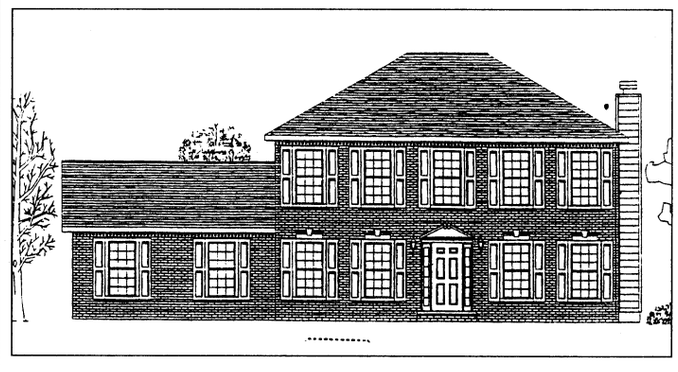
motivates Marines.

"There were four Marines there — if four Marines were still on the mountain, I wasn't going to be the first one off the mountain," Curfiss said.

Even though the team planned to get to the top together, safety was the number one priority.

"We tried to move up the mountain safely without putting anybody's life at risk," Burger said. "It wasn't, 'make it to the summit at all cost,' we were looking for the camaraderie, long-term adventure and life-long memories."

Since returning, the team has gone to different schools and given presentations about their trip. Burger said there is a possibility that they will be giving their presentation at the Coca-Cola Space Science Center at Columbus State University.



"During the presentations, I attempt to show the students how this trip relates to life," Sheppard said. "First, anything you do in life requires team work. Second, you are always going to have mountains to climb in life. No matter how tall it is, you have to climb them one step at a time. That's what we did — that's how we do it in life."

Communication prevents disaster

Chaplain (Capt.) Len Kircher
30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion

Every 10,000 miles, whether I think my car needs it or not, I take it in for a tune up. Depending on the type of car you drive, some need them more frequently than others. But a tune-up is vital if you want to keep your car running smoothly and make it last a long time.

reflections

Occasional tune-ups in marriages are also important, whether you think your marriage may need it or not. When life seems to be going along smoothly, couples can fall into a false sense of well-being in regard to their spouses and children. We fall into a daily "routine" in our home lives. The spouse goes to work, comes home, eats, watches TV and goes to sleep. The at-home spouse cooks meals, gets the kids off to school, performs the myriad of chores necessary to keep a household running, then it's off to bed at night. Pretty soon this becomes a tedious, and in some cases, a destructive lifestyle. Dissatisfaction may be brewing but not readily apparent. But in some people's minds they say, "It's all right, at least we're not arguing," or "Why rock the boat if everything's alright?" Cars may appear to be running smoothly when a problem deep in the engine may be brewing. Marriages can experience the same thing. I propose two types of tune-ups for a marriage. First, the occasional one-on-one "check-up," and secondly, the scheduled, mandatory trip to the shop.

The occasional check-up is needed when things appear to be going well. My suggestion is that you periodically visit a counselor to talk out things in your marriage, even if things appear to be going well. I offer this because married couples are so emotionally involved that a counselor's objective intervention may bring out some issues one or the other spouse may be experiencing that the other is unaware of. This can help you discover issues in the engine of your marriage that may not be readily apparent.

Secondly, mandatory trips to the shop are those activities offered by organizations to help you in your married life. Marriage enrichment retreats, child-rearing seminars and programs offered by the Chaplain Family Life Center or Army Community Services are just a few examples of what you can do.

We constantly seek self-improvement through service schools, college courses and correspondence classes. Why shouldn't we do that with our marriages? If we put as much energy into our marriages as we do with so many other activities, very few would fail.

What you get out of your marriage depends very much on what you put into it. People grow; so do marriages. Make an effort in the coming months to keep your marriage tuned!

Actions speak louder than words

Chaplain (Major) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

There is an old saying that goes, "Your actions are talking so loud that I cannot hear a word you're saying!" Who talks to your children? Friends, neighbors, teachers, basically anyone they come in contact with. Those who spend the most time with your children at the critical times in their development will have the biggest impact on their lives.

George Daub, founder of Family Wellness Associates, talks about the "window of influence" every child goes through. Daub states, "Between 8 and 12-years-old, a child is ready to develop judgment." This is a productive time for parents to influence their children. The parent's influence is still strong, the child has enough experience and is developmentally ready to form more mature perceptions and the onset of the heavy peer influence of teen years yet to come.

Much is being said in our nation about family values. Remember, actions still speaks louder than words. Parents' values are more lived than spoken. This is especially true in the area of sex and drugs. If you preach abstinence and drink to excess yourself, your teen gets the message of "drink."

It isn't easy talking to your children about sex and drugs. But if you don't, then who are you going to entrust to do so — television? Talking to your children about these subjects leads to clarity. Do your best to make it easy for your children to ask questions and above all, be a good listener.

Many parents lived rather, shall I say "wild" lives as teenagers. However, there is no need to bring up all your past exploits in the area of sex and alcohol and drug use. What matters are the values you now believe and practice.

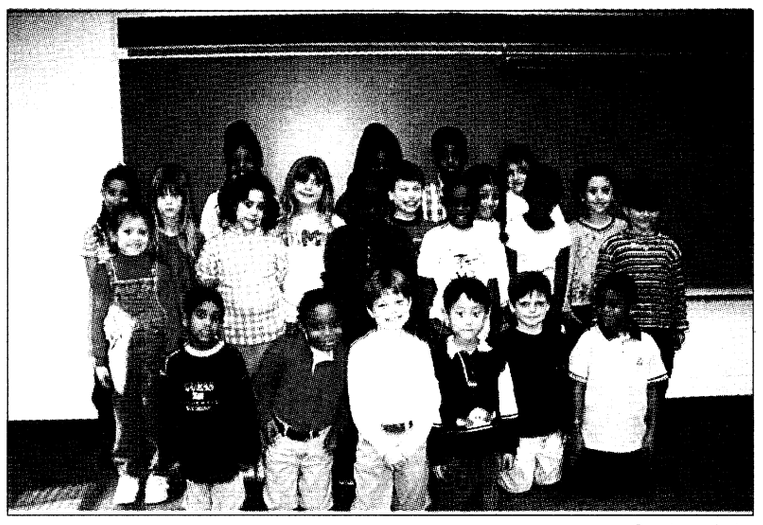
McBride Elementary School

The Horticulture Club at McBride Elementary works with second-grade students interested in plants, gardening and related activities.



The club meets weekly, after school and has 36 members. Nancy Gordy, Pre-K teacher and Melissa Lewis, a first-grade teacher, share their knowledge of science through hands-on activities. The students are involved in learning how things grow in water, soil, plastic bags, straws and cups.

The students grew a seed in a small plastic bag, with water and a paper towel. They could see the seeds sprout and see that each seed grows differently. This was followed up with a laser disc video showing a seed sprouting in 60 seconds.

"This was so exciting for the students. They would not blink so they wouldn't miss the leaves popping out. They asked to watch it over and over again," Lewis said.

"The Horticulture Club will use their knowledge to create a garden in the spring, and all the McBride students will share in this experience," Gordy stated.

Anyone interested in donating seeds, plants, garden tools, bird baths, feeders or knowledge and experience in these areas, can call the Horticulture Club at McBride Elementary School at 544-9411.

Parents help kids achieve in school

Nancy Hammond

McBride Elementary School

At the Lunch and Learn program at McBride Elementary School parents learned some important things to do to help their children achieve success in school Jan. 29.

Principal Del Hicks gave an informative talk about how parents can make a difference in developing positive attitudes in their children and in helping children achieve desired educational skills.

Hicks gave specific suggestions for helping students at each grade level with reading, math and study habits. His suggestions included listening to children read, talking about stories that are read and using flashcards for words and math facts. He stressed the importance of reading to children, providing a daily free reading time at home and helping children memorize math facts appropriate to each level.

Hicks said that parents should check school work daily and have children correct any mistakes they made. Homework assignments reinforce the learning that takes place in school. When parents emphasize the importance of homework and check all work that is to be returned to class, children are more likely to do their best work.

He also said another important role parents have is to transfer learning into "real-world" situations. He said family trips to libraries, museums, parks, historical sites and nature centers make learning more significant for children. Keeping diaries, writing letters to relatives and friends, using recipes, recording appointments on calendars and counting money needed for purchases are a few ways that parents can extend learning.

Kindergarten class celebrates 100th school day

Velinda Hickey

McBride Elementary

The kindergarten children of McBride School are celebrating the 100th day of school today.

The children had been counting up to this special day since the first day of school.

Calendar activities are a big part of the opening routine each morning in kindergarten. The children learn to sequence and name both the days of the week and the months of the year. The number of days are counted and displayed in a special container that shows the math value of ones, tens and hundreds. Moving to the hundreds place is reason to celebrate!

The teachers provided activities all day that focused on the number 100. Activities included counting 100 objects and creating 10 sets of 10.

Some children fingerpainted 100 designs using 10 different colors. Other children listened to the story of 101 Dalmatians and painted 100 dots on a picture of a white dog. The children sang songs about Day 100 and teachers read poems about Day 100.

Several classes made Day 100 headbands and wore them to lunch. Many children were grouped into pairs and counted 100 objects such as paper clips, dominoes, links and plastic counting bears. These objects were placed into 10 sets of 10 on a counting mat. The mats were checked by the teachers for counting accuracy.

The celebration ended by eating cake with 100 chocolate candies on the icing. Each child received a certificate for participation in Day 100.

The parents participated in the celebration activities by helping their child prepare a math project at home. Projects included 100 objects and were very creative. The children brought their projects to school, which were proudly displayed in the halls for everyone to view.

The teachers took their students on a tour of the projects for discussion and admiration. These creative projects and the activities of the day made Day 100 a fun learning experience for all participants.

Run launches Girl Scout cookie sales

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Cookies and running do not sound like a likely match, but one group of girls from the tri-community area turned the two into a winning combination.

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts held their annual Girl Scout Cookie Run Saturday to kick-off their cookie sales.

More than 350 residents from Fort Benning, Columbus and other surrounding areas gathered at Weracoba Park in Columbus to participate in a 5K sanctioned, 5K Wheelchair, 1.5 mile "Run for the Cookies," 1.5 miles handicapped and a 100- yard tot trot.

"We had a great turn out, and we had more runners than were expected because of the rain," said Susan Schlader, office manager, Concharty Council of Girl Scouts and co-director of the race. "We had a lot of people register the day of the race. It was wonderful."

Whether the men, women and children who ran were seasoned runners or just beginning, they had more than three miles of pavement ahead to cover.

A regular to the event, John Detro, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, said he participates in the Cookie Run every year.

"This is one of the best races in town," Detro said. "I have come in second here before but I am hoping to win this year."

Participants like Bobby Reyes, son of Lt. Col Jerry Reyes, commander, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment said he just hoped to have a good run and take a minute off his time from the previous two years.

And what would complete a race better than a sweet reward. The overall winners of the 5K and 1.5 mile races left the race with a trophy and cookies.

"I am tired of winning trophies. I would like to win something I can use, and I can definitely use the cookies," Detro said.

Whether the goals of the participants were to improve their times, win or to enjoy the race, all helped the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts.

The 5k winners in the female category were:
1st place — Connie Robertson, HapeVille
2nd place — Claudia Norton, Americus
3rd place — Laura Mayer, Phenix City
The 5K winners in the Mens category were:
1st place — John Detro, Fort Benning
2nd place — Greg Ojendyk, Phenix City
3rd place — LLoyd McDonald, Columbus

Runners 19 years-old and under placed in age appropriate groups.

The 1st Place winners in the male age groups were:
Ages 5 to 9 — Kelly Maresca, Fort Benning
Ages 9 to 11 — Brad Lewis, Columbus
Ages 12 to 14 — Bobby Reyes, Fort Benning
Ages 15 to 19 — Kelly Church, Columbus

The 1st Place winners in the female age groups were:
Ages 12 to 14 — Amy Maresca, Fort Benning
Ages 15 to 19 — Jill Holland, Salem

The overall winners for the 1.5 mile "Run for the Cookies" race in the female category were:
1st place — Claudia Norton, Americus
2nd place — Elizabeth Crawford, Auburn
3rd place — Bryn Crawford, Auburn

The overall winners for the 1.5 mile "Run for the Cookies" race in the male category were:
1st place — Mark Christensen, Columbus
2nd place — Don Cleveland, West Point
3rd place — Andy Harp, Columbus

For all those who were unable to make it out and run, Girl Scouts will be out selling their cookies at various locations. All proceeds from cookie sales go to the benefit of all the girls and volunteers of the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts.

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Despite a soggy Saturday, more than 350 people took part in the Girl Scout Cookie Run, an event that benefits the local chapter of the Girl Scouts of America.

Rifle, pistol club offers fun, hosts competitions

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

"A club designed for the average person with average ability."

That is how Fort Benning's Rifle and Pistol Club's Assistant Manager James J. Graham explained the demographics of the firearms-focused group that is now more than 700 members strong.

The club, according to Graham, is more than just an open range for the Soldiers, civilians and family members of Fort Benning to hone their handgun and rifle skills. He said it is a place for them to have fun and socialize.

"What we see most is just a lot of people coming out to shoot for recreation and to have a good time," Graham said. "We see everyone from a young private to a retired officer. Everyone is equal when they come out here on the range. We are all here for the same reason, to have a good time."

Recreational shooting on Fort Benning is something Graham said the club has sponsored here for more than 40 years, and according to the retired Infantryman, the range is one of the finest in the Southeastern U.S.

"This is a great range," he said. "It is a versatile range that we have had some pretty good luck with."

"It isn't real specialized to one type of shooting or another," he added. "We can configure these targets out here to do about anything that anyone could ever need. We have the ability to shoot everything from point blank to 500 yards."

The ability to configure the target locations of any of the 40 lanes of fire has created a perfect location for the club to hold a variety of competition shooting matches for not only club members, but anyone desiring to test their weaponry skills.

According to Graham, the opportunity for individuals to put their skills to test occurs monthly as the range plays host to gunnery competitions such as the one that will take place Saturday.

"The matches are designed for the average guy with average right-off-the-shelf equipment," he said. "If you have a service caliber, semi-automatic pistol with a couple of magazines, you're in business."

Graham noted that although the competition is based upon a competitive nature, no one walks away empty-handed.

"Everyone that shoots gets a T-shirt just for entering and paying the pre-registration fee of $15," Graham said. "What we try to do with these matches is give a real competitive experience for the average person."

Although the matches are designed to give the novice marksman an opportunity to excel, Graham noted that no matter what the skill level of the shooter, the match is challenging.

"If someone is thinking that just because we give the new guy a chance that these matches are easy, they are absolutely wrong," he said. "The matches are very, very challenging, but there is room within the competition categories to progress."

Matches are designed to place individuals in their varying level of competency and weapon type, he said.

The club not only hosts monthly matches and open ranges throughout the week, they play host to Glock's Old South Classic, an annual handgun competition that draws marksmen from all across the south to participate in the event which has an award purse of more than $3,000 and gives away three Glock handguns.

"We have hosted this event for seven years now, and every year we have more people turn out than the year before."

Graham said last year's competition brought more than 300 people to English Range to compete in the national event.

"We had a great turnout last year," Graham said. "It really follows our philosophy of giving the new guy a chance."

The Old South Classic awards top finishers points according to the Lewis System of scoring, a system that takes the entire field of competitors and divides them into thirds by their finishing marks. To each of those top finishers in the third, Glock will award a new Glock handgun and a first place trophy.

"There is no place else I know of where a guy can come out and win a new gun on his first try," he said. "It is just an excellent opportunity."

This year's match will be held March 27 and 28.

The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club is located at English Range on Dixie Road.

To receive additional information or to join the club, call Graham at 689-3371.

Company issues hunting safety tips

Escape to the Outdoors

All hunters and recreational target shooters must take shooting safety into consideration before going shooting.

Here are some suggestions to keep in mind from the firearms experts at Remington:

•What condition is the gun in? Is it cleaned after every outing to reduce corrosive buildup that can cause jams and malfunctions? A clean gun not only performs better, it will last longer.

•Are you using the proper ammunition for your gun and for what you are hunting? Is the ammunition new and in good condition? Using the proper caliber is mandatory for safe shooting. Old bullets or shotshells should be discarded in favor of new cartridges.

•What is beyond where you are shooting, and what is the maximum range of your gun? For example, a .22-caliber rifle bullet can travel more than one-and-a-half miles, so it is imperative to know what is behind your field of fire.

•Never point a gun at another person whether the gun is loaded or unloaded. Consider every firearm to be loaded.

•Keep your gun unloaded while you are walking to your stand or to the table at the range.

•Keep your finger off the trigger until you are ready to shoot.

•Point the muzzle downrange.

•Wear eye and ear protection. Many different types of earmuffs and glasses are available for wear.

Tips help keep boaters out of trouble

Escape to the Outdoors

Driving a boat is different from driving a car. When you turn the wheel on a car, the front of the car changes directions, but when you turn the wheel on a boat, the back end swings around.

Scott and Marty Glorvigen, twin pro anglers on the Yamaha Outboards Pro Staff, have some suggestions on improving boat handling.

"We use a small F9.9 four-stroke outboard for trolling and the new F100 for main power," Scott said. "Where we live in northern Minnesota, it's often quite cold in the mornings, especially at season's end, and these four strokes start easier than our cars do."

When steering, the twins said it helps to picture your boat as the radius of a circle with the bow in the center. Your boat motor is your steering, your acceleration and your brakes. This can take some getting used to, but with a few tips and little practice you'll be an old hand in no time.

The Glorvigen twins added that the following suggestions have helped them in their lifelong enjoyment of safe boating:

•Docking — Pull up to the dock very slowly, approaching at a 45-degree angle. If there is wind or a current, go against it for more control. When the bow is about a foot away from the dock, turn the motor so the prop is pointed toward the dock, put the engine in reverse and give it a tiny bit of throttle.

•Stopping — Whether you are picking up a passenger on the dock, beaching your boat, pulling onto your trailer or just stopping to fish, you must remember that your motor is your brake. You are essentially canceling your forward momentum by putting the motor in reverse and pulling back against the boat's forward movement. Every stop in every boat is different because of variances in size and speed, so stopping is something you need to practice.

•Getting going and trimming the boat — When you first start to take off, your motor should be all the way down. Increase throttle to power out of the hole. The front of the boat will climb up. When you feel the bow start to settle again, begin raising the motor slowly. You will feel a "sweet spot" when the boat is trimmed correctly — the steering torque will almost vanish and the boat will ride smoothly over the water.

•Bad weather — Stay ashore during storms. If you get caught in one, however, don't panic. Slow down. Approach the waves at an angle and keep the bow up so the waves don't crash over the front of the boat. Head for the closest safe harbor. You may have to take a bit of zig-zag path to keep at an angle to the waves. Don't forget to run your bilge pumps if you don't have automatic ones. Make certain all passengers are wearing their personal flotation devices properly.

•Loading — Retrieving your boat in strong wind and big waves is a challenge. Start with the trailer a little shallower than usual, but make sure it is in deep enough to keep the motor in the water when you get the boat on it. What you want to do is let the wind and waves put you on the trailer. Get lined up and ride the waves onto the trailer. Keep the motor in gear to keep the bow tight to the trailer while you run up to secure the bow strap.

Lt. Col. Adolfina Polk, preventive dentistry officer for Fort Benning's U.S. Army Dental Activity, checks 4-year-old Bobby Brouillette's teeth Tuesday while visiting the Santa Fe Child Development Center (CDC) as part of National Children's Dental Health Month. Polk peered into more than 150 children's mouths at the CDC and is expected to make the visit to all of Fort Benning Schools and CDCs by the end of the month.

Fort Benning wins Oglethorpe Award

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, together with a number of leaders from the tri-community, gathered at the Columbus Chamber of Commerce Tuesday to announce the newest addition to Fort Benning's already extensive list of awards and accomplishments.

It was declared that Fort Benning, along with Total System Services (TSYS) of Columbus, were the two winners in the Georgia Oglethorpe Award, the highest level of state recognition for performance and excellence that a Georgia organization can receive.

This was the first time Fort Benning has competed in a state awards process. Fort Benning began the process of submission in July and received a site visit from evaluators in mid-November. The awards process measured performance that included seven interdependent categories. They evaluated leadership, strategic planning, human resource focus, customer and market focus, information and analysis, process management and business results.

Victoria Taylor, executive director for the Georgia Oglethorpe Award process, extended her praise to the award recipients and explained why it is such a significant achievement.

"We are very proud of TSYS and Fort Benning for what they have achieved," Taylor said. "The Georgia Oglethorpe is first and foremost about low-cost, high-value assessment and feedback. When an organization competes it means they stand up to a very difficult set of criteria that has been proven worldwide to be useful in a future prediction of how performance will take place in an organization."

When Ernst stepped up to the dais, he remarked about how great it was to be able to represent Fort Benning and share the good news with everyone.

"First of all, it is a real pleasure on behalf of all of the great teams at Fort Benning to stand here today and be recognized as an installation, particularly when we share the dais with an organization like Total System Services. We know how proud you are and you know how proud we are to be a part of this community."

He talked about how Fort Benning wasn't allowed to participate in one award last year because of winning too many times in a row and needed to find another area to test itself in.

"We couldn't compete in one of the federal categories last year and that was the Defense Award, because of a rule literally called the 'Benning Rule,'" Ernst said. "So we said 'OK' we have to scrimmage or else we'll never know if we have a good team; so who else has a game or a field we can scrimmage on. And we found it."

It wasn't just Ernst who praised Fort Benning's excellence, but also representative and CEO for TSYS, Rick Ussery, who gave Fort Benning kudos for all of it's accomplishments.

"First off, I'd like to say congratulations to Fort Benning and General Ernst for winning the Georgia Oglethorpe for performance in excellence," Ussery said. "Fort Benning is a very strong, well-run military post which has won numerous awards in recent years. We are very proud to share this distinction with them and happy to have them as partners in our community, committed just like we are to improving the quality of life in the Chattahoochee Valley."

Training brigades receive Stored Value Cards

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning entered a new era of technology with the introduction of Stored Value Cards to the Basic Combat and Infantry Training Brigades Feb. 5.

In a partnership between the Department of the Army, Department of Treasury Financial Management Service, Defense Finance and Accounting Service, Army and Air Force Exchange Service and post financial institutions, the 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade, received the cards and began distribution. Soldiers entering training will now be issued their initial pay advancement on a card that works similar to a debit card instead of cash.

The Stored Value Cards brought Fort Benning into the 21st century, said Finance Network Specialist Juan A. De Jesus, U.S. Army Finance Command. "We have done away with the old business practice of cash, checks and voucher systems."

The cards are designed to maximize training time by cutting out the hassles currency caused. Soldiers no longer have to wait in line as military pay office cashiers count out the money and wait as Soldiers recount the cash back to them. This was a time consuming process, De Jesus said. Now, Soldiers step up to a window and just sign for their card and move out.

Each card is coded for the individual Soldier with their name printed on the back to ensure each Soldier uses their own individual card. The Stored Value Card is also installed with a computer chip that tracks the last transactions the Soldier has made. No on-line delays will be experienced as the insertion terminal deducts the amount directly from the computer chip unlike debit and credit cards which use phone lines at the time of purchase.

First Union National Bank and Smart Card Products Group Vice President Michael L. de Julien said the program has been a success story from the beginning.

The cards were first introduced at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.; Fort Sill, Okla.; and Fort Knox, Ky. as a pilot program more than a year ago and since then, installations such as Fort Knox have been able to do away with their police escorts who were employed to protect the cash as it was transported from the bank to post.

New Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers like Pvt. Andrew Paris have experienced the advantages of the card.

"The card is quick and practical, because I don't see the need to have cash on hand during training anyway," Paris said.

More than 100,000 cards with a total value of $50 million have already been issued Army wide over the past year and more will continue to be issued as more Soldiers enter the Army. Fort Jackson, S.C. is also expected to be brought on-line during the year.

So, as the Army looks toward the future of banking technology, U.S. Department of Treasury Financial Program Specialist Brett D. Smith said the cards may also open doors for new ways for Soldiers to access money while deployed and in other scenarios.

AFRICAN AMERICAN HERITAGE MONTH

Post celebrates contributions, accomplishments

"We pray to help us remove all that divides us from one another and teach us to practice kindness instead of hindrance," said Chaplain (Capt.) Norman Jones, USAIC Chaplains Office, during invocation for the African American Heritage Month program held Feb. 5 at Infantry Hall.

"The Legacy of African American Leadership for the present and the future" was the theme for this year's program and reflected on African American progress, contributions and accomplishments.

"We have come a long way in the last 50 years, starting at a point about 150 years behind the Constitution which stated 'all men were created equal,'" said Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore in his opening remarks. "Only in the last 50 years has progress gone from a point of wanting to sit on the bus; wanting to sit on the front of the bus; wanting to drive the bus; wanting to manage the bus and finally wanting to own the bus."

Honore said we have gone from social and civil equality to economic empowerment and we must continue to work together as a society to foster economic empowerment because through this type of empowerment we get upward mobility.

"We must combine along with education, a concept of values we have to decide if the values we teach our children should come from great people who significantly impacted our country such as Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. or from the MTV generation," Honore said. "We need to separate what is entertainment from what is real life and in order to do that we must

Honest Abe, values help make U.S. great

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

I never thought much about whom my favorite president was until I began writing this commentary. Other than voting in a handful of presidential elections, my background was severely limited in the areas of history and politics. In fact, my knowledge was limited to recent presidents so I researched the past on a quest to discover my favorite president.

commentary

The biggest issue was qualifying 'favorite' when writing about a man who held the most influential and powerful office in the world. Should I formulate an opinion on job performance, popularity, leadership capabilities or personal qualities? My search for a favorite president ended when I stumbled upon a book titled, The Words Lincoln Lived By, written by Gene Griessman. The book captured the essence of Abraham Lincoln, the 16th president, by using his own words and examples from the way he led his life.

Lincoln maintained a high personal standard and his job performance, leadership style and honesty contributed in making him my favorite president.

I chose Lincoln because he was a visionary leader with unwavering faith. At a time when America was torn by civil war, Lincoln was able to preserve the Union while abolishing slavery. He believed in equality for all men and that no individual had the right to dominate another.

Lincoln thought Americans had become 'hypocrites' before the world by fostering human slavery while proclaiming to be a free nation. Lincoln stated, "Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves; and, under a just God, cannot long retain it." Before his assassination Lincoln managed, through compromise, to bring together pro-Union slave holders, conservatives, radicals, abolitionists and moderates in order to hold the Union together.

I admire Lincoln because he was an exceptional role model as a husband, father and leader. He lived by the words he spoke and believed that he must keep some standard of principle fixed within him. I was touched after reading many accounts of his honesty told by people who knew him.

Young Lincoln would walk miles to repay a few pennies he had overcharged a customer and he resolved to be honest at all events throughout his life. Thus, long before his death he earned the name 'Honest Abe.'

"People relied implicitly upon his honesty, integrity and impartiality," stated R.B. Rutledge, friend of Abe Lincoln.

According to Griessman there are two types of courage. The first type is physical and shows itself on battlefields. Lincoln felt he lacked this; however, he possessed an abundance of the second type, which is moral in nature. He was able to make tough choices and accept the consequences. During a speech in 1939 Lincoln stated, "The probability that we may fail in the struggle ought not to deter us from the support of a cause we believe to be just; it shall not deter me."

As president, Lincoln opened the White House to the people. He trusted the people and they trusted him in return. When Lincoln died on April 15, 1865, he left a great legacy that changed America forever. He had freed the slaves, preserved the Union and the nation was reborn.

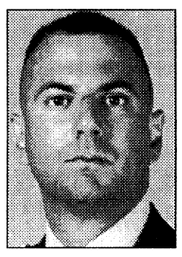
Lincoln was a heroic leader whose timeless words of wisdom have inspired me some 130 years later and will continue to remind future generations of the values that made America great.

Romantics need survival guide during holiday

Master Sgt. Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs NCOIC

Gentlemen, if you haven't already ordered the flowers, bought the gift and made the restaurant reservations, I suggest you find a deployment that begins today. Valentine's Day is upon us and you are doomed.

commentary



This is mankind's greatest stress-inducing holiday, second only to Christmas. I say "mankind" because face it guys, it's not our holiday. The spotlight may be on us and we are expected to entertain, but this holiday is clearly for the ladies. And wouldn't you know a traitor of a man is behind this holiday — Cupid is a dude. If I could find that flying fat boy with the arrows, I would choke the love out of him and I mean that in a nice way.

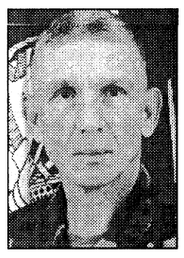
Here are some tips to help reduce Valentine's Day stress. These tips might be considered basic self-defense tactics, they have nothing to do with kickboxing or Tae-bo, but they could help you survive.

Plan ahead. If you didn't plan what you were going to do for Valentine's Day weeks ago and decided to "just wing it," you already dug yourself a hole you can't possibly climb out of. Women are great planners and guys are infamous for waiting until the last minute to square things away. Guys can remember odd little facts like when the U.S. won the first Olympics bobsled competition or what day they broke their favorite drill bit, but a lady is lucky to find a guy who will remember Valentine's Day. I forgot to plan for Valentine's Day in 1990 and had to live it down for approximately forever. Oh, I did remember to celebrate my enlistment on Feb. 12.

Flowers. I know it's corny, but women still like a dozen red roses, if only to tell their friends they received them. Make sure the roses are delivered at work so she and her friends will see proof of your love. However, if you didn't plan ahead, you might not find roses or someone to deliver them. Whatever you do, don't have your large, hairy friend dress up like Cupid and deliver a handful of "wildflowers" borrowed from a hotel garden, unless you want to be known as that "thoughtful freak who will be getting out of jail next week."

Chow. Get a reservation at that nice restaurant where you have to wear your "good" tie, the one she bought you and you never wear. Bring a credit card and don't sweat the prices, though you could be buying a set of truck tires instead of a small piece of meat with an unknown origin. If the restaurant is offering "half price off" on pitchers of beer and there's a 450-pound guy singing karaoke country songs, you might want to move to another location.

Fight the urge to propose or marry. Yes, I know what you're saying, "What better way or day to seal the contract?" But why ruin the holiday for the rest of your life? I know someone who got married on Valentine's Day and then later divorced. She can't remember when her divorce was finalized, but she'll always remember the day of her marriage.



She's always right ... whatever it is. She is in control and the focus of your life for the next 24 hours or for the weekend, depending how long you've committed yourself. If she buys you some token gift, for example, boxers with little hearts, wear them proudly. Just don't wear them outside when you step outside to get the morning newspaper. The rest of the men's community appreciates your discretion; your decisions impact on us all.

Remember that Valentine's Day eventually turns into some kind of bragging ritual where women take inventory and trade notes with their friends. How successful you are will later impact on you when you receive praise or scorn from the women's community. I swear the ladies have some kind of underground intelligence-gathering network, maybe an Internet news group, where they swap notes. No kidding, I'm walking through Cairo, Egypt and these two women look at me, shake their heads with disgust and say something about "Valentine's Day, 1990."

When all else fails, try honesty. Write this down and repeat it: "Honey, I forgot about Valentine's Day and I can't possibly buy a gift that adequately expresses how much I love you." Don't worry it's not copyrighted and you don't even have to believe it.

Disclaimer: Lane does not endorse or suggest any of his tips, other than the last one which he said worked, but he still had to live down forgetting Valentine's Day.

Prevention is key to safety

Fort Benning personnel will have an extended weekend to celebrate President's Day. Long weekends increase the potential for serious injury or death in traffic accidents. However, my goal for Fort Benning is to be accident-free.

The key to this prevention effort is the involvement of first line leaders. They know their personnel and can make safety briefings effective. Leaders will emphasize the following:

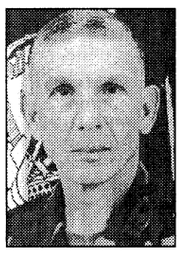
•Consider commercial transportation instead of driving.

•Check your car for sufficient tire tread, operational lights, good windshield wipers and nonleaking exhaust system.

•Check the weather forecast for the area you will be traveling in.

•Take frequent breaks (at least every two hours) on long trips.

•Drive defensively, sober and alert.



•Wear your seat belt.

I wish all personnel, military and civilian, a safe and enjoyable holiday.

Please be smart and be safe.

Post wins excellence award

Fort Benning, you have done it again. Governor Roy Barnes announced Tuesday that Fort Benning was the winner of the Georgia Oglethorpe Award for excellence in the Government category.

We entered the Oglethorpe competition for several reasons.

First, we were declared ineligible to compete for the Commander-in-Chief's Army Community of Excellence award last year because of the "Benning rule" that does not allow repeat winners.

To remain sharp, we looked around for somewhere else to scrimmage and we found Georgia Oglethorpe. Unlike the ACOE and other federal government competitions, in Oglethorpe we competed against the private sector and government agencies within the state of Georgia.

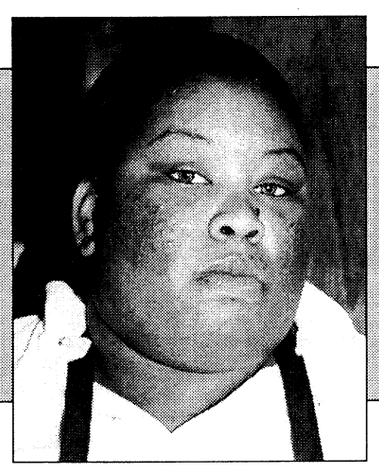
We quickly realized we were dealing with some expert evaluators and knew we had gone to the right place to get a fair, in-depth evaluation on how well we were performing our many missions and how well we were taking care of our customers — you.

I think this left us in a great position in this year's Commander-in-Chief's competition and the $500,000 that comes with it.

As the Commanding General of Fort Benning, I recognize it is the people in the trenches — you, who win these awards.

Your efforts, combined with the great support we receive on a regular basis from our friends in the Chattahoochee Valley, once again put us over the top.

To think we were rated on par with Total Systems Service, Inc., the winner in the business category, says a lot about the men and women who live, work and play at Fort Benning.



My congratulations to the great Fort Benning team of teams. What a privilege it is to serve with you.

Thanks! Hooah!

Benning transcends into 21st century

Alfonso Deane of Army Emergency Relief keeps track of clients with the new computer system in his office.

With the progression of computer technology, and the anticipation of Y2K, Fort Benning is transcending from an era of mainframes, into a system of networks, which will give the installation better access to the information highway in the 21st Century.

"In late 1993-94, we started laying towards changing the way we did business on Fort Benning in the automation realm," said Paul Yates, director of Information Management at Fort Benning.

"Instead of depending heavily on the big mainframe computers, we proceeded to go in the arena of being shifted from the mainframe type of environment to smaller systems and networks," Yates said.

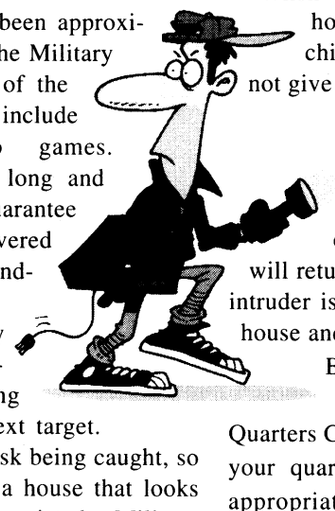
Yates best describes the new systems and networks as "a shift in information management paradigms." So far, about one-third of the offices in Fort Benning have the new technology.

Because the mainframes were outdated, hard to repair and not Y2K compliant, Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst and Yates decided there was a need for the transition.

"We didn't have much of a choice. We had to get out of it because it was not 2000 compliant," Yates said.

Besides having programs like Microsoft Exchange and e-mail, this "paradigm" will allow every office in Fort Benning to have more usage of their computer, which will make their jobs easier.

"Everybody will be able to publish, produce forms, spreadsheets and more if they choose to do so," Yates said. "People will try to do more with the computer to ease their workload."



Alfonso Deane, who works at the office of Army Emergency Relief has access to the new program and agrees with Yates. "This new program allows me to keep better track of the records of my clients," Deane said.

In the near future, every office on Fort Benning will have this new technology. "This is an installation-wide effort, and everybody is involved," Yates said.

MPs offer tips to keep house safe

Directorate of Public Safety

Every American has the right to be safe; this is especially true in the privacy of their own home. There is nothing more frightening than waking up to the sounds of an intruder inside your house. The experience of returning home and knowing that a stranger has been inside violates the very core of our existence.

In recent months, there have been approximately 24 break-ins reported to the Military Police on Fort Benning. Most of the items stolen during these crimes include jewelry, VCRs and video games. Investigating these crimes is a long and tedious process and there is no guarantee that stolen property will be recovered if and when a suspect is apprehended.

The most effective security technique is deterrence — protecting your home by discouraging intruders from making it their next target. Burglars usually do not want to risk being caught, so they are less likely to victimize a house that looks occupied or protected. You can assist the Military Police by taking the following precautions to protect yourself and your family at home or while you are away.

•Always keep your doors and windows locked.

•Use a timer on lights, stereos or the TV to give the appearance that someone is home.

•On your answering machine, never leave a message that you are not at home.

•Have a neighbor pick up your mail and newspapers.

•Keep important papers, valuable jewelry and large amounts of cash in a safe deposit box.

•Engrave your valuables with your driver's license number or social security number. Keep a record of serial numbers or other identifying markings.

When at home, never admit anyone into your home unless you know who it is. Make sure children understand and follow this rule. Do not give personal information to a stranger over the phone. Notify the police or telephone company of any obscene or threatening phone calls.

Always leave a light on when you go out, and never leave notes saying when you will return. If you return home and suspect that an intruder is inside, do not enter. Go to a neighbor's house and notify the police immediately.

Before departing on vacation, go to the Military Police Station and fill out a Quarters Check form. The Military Police will check your quarters during your absence and will take appropriate action in the event of a break-in. Remember to notify the Military Police upon your return so your identity can be verified.

Remember to help "Make Our Post The Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or suspicious to the Military Police Station at 545-5222 or 545-5223, or the "Crime in Progress" line at 545-2222.

Army plays role in cancer research

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Army News Service

Through a program administered by the Army at Fort Detrick, Md., the Department of Defense (DoD) has been funding cancer research since 1992 and is now second only to the National Cancer Institute in funding research for breast cancer.

Accomplishments of DoD-funded cancer research include: a sensitive examination to identify breast cancer cells in bone marrow and blood, development of a cluster procedure to group breast shapes into a small number of classes and development of a quantitative index of breast density.

"The Department's capability to manage large research programs has been successfully put to the test," said Col. Irene M. Rich, former Director of the Office of Congressionally Directed Medical Research Programs. She said Congress directed DoD to conduct cancer research because of its capability to manage such a large program.

Since 1992, the program has administered more than $800 million in breast cancer appropriations. The Breast Cancer Research Program has awarded more than 1,800 breast cancer grants to more than 830 institutions in the U.S. and abroad.

"Our program has invigorated the field of cancer research by bringing new scientists into the field and adapting the program vision annually to address research gaps," Rich said.

"It has been exciting to see these ideas funded and we expect many of the projects to contribute important knowledge to the cancer research field," Rich added.

The research program offers grants in research, training and recruitment and enhancement of the research infrastructure such as tissue banks.

"We follow promising avenues of inquiry, foster new directions in research, are addressing neglected or under-studied issues and we are bringing new scientists into the field, all with the goal of eradicating the disease," Rich said.

"I learned a great deal about his sacrifices and dedication to the civil rights movement ... King was a heroic leader who led by example and I admire him because he left our world a better place for all people."

Most people know that rivers like the Mississippi and the Chattahoochee can be unforgiving to those who venture into them for fishing, fun and relaxation. A little more than nine years ago, residents of Fort Benning volunteered their time to help out victims of the rivers.

Today, 14 Department of Defense employees of the Fort Benning Fire Department are keeping this tradition alive as they not only put out flames on post, but also volunteer for the Directorate of Public Safety's Dive Rescue Team.

Divers are called out to complete missions ranging from water rescues to recovering drowning victims in Fort Benning's area of the Chattahoochee River.

"During the peak season of April through September, we receive three to four drowning calls and numerous boating accidents," said Lt. Stephen Goodman, officer in charge of the Dive Rescue Team. "If it is a waterborne problem, we are there."

Within the last few years, the dive team has recovered a murder victim and answered numerous emergency calls from stranded boaters.

According to the divers, one of the problems that keeps them in the water is the underestimation of the current that flows through the Chattahoochee. On the surface, the water looks calm in areas, but divers said the current is very swift and strong.

When Fort Benning's Dive Rescue Team is not answering distress calls, they also come to the aid of the Military Police (MPs).

"We have gone out onto the water to support the post when there has been a stolen weapon reported to have been disposed of in the water and the MPs need areas of the water searched," Goodman said.

However, divers do not venture into the water to become victims themselves. Prospective divers must complete a variety of swim tests and classes before they can work with the team as a public safety diver.

The qualification test consists of five different events prospective divers must pass.

Divers must prove their skills by treading water for 15 minutes, swim 50-meters under water, swim 400 meters non-stop and recover a 15-pound brick from the deep end of a pool.

After the divers have proved their ability in the water, they must then improve their diving skills by attending diving classes.

"Divers are put on a list so they may begin an open water dive. After they complete this class they move on to the advanced diving class," Malone said. "Divers then begin to learn rescue skills in the rescue diving class and finally they begin the public safety diving class."

After they have passed all the required courses, they may begin to help out those in need.

"Depending on the availability of the classes, it can take anywhere from six months to a year for someone to become eligible to dive with us," said P.T. Malone, dive master. "The water we dive into is black with a swift current that can carry hazardous debris so we are constantly training."

"We train about once a month either in the classroom or deepwater dives," Goodman said. "We are required to complete at least two deepwater dives a year."

But the job these divers perform is not always grim. They have helped the water treatment plant on post with a repair project.

Divers put their skills to use when the water treatment plant needed a hole sealed in a pool which stores and chlorinates water. The divers saved Fort Benning more than $25,000 by performing this service to the community.

So what drives these divers to complete these missions? Malone said it is just like rescuing someone from out of a building.

"It is just the gratification of knowing you have helped someone," Malone said. "No one on the team gets paid; it is all volunteer, so the divers are whole heartedly into the team."

Those with dive experience and who wish to inquire about the training, can call Goodman at 545-2935 or 545-1220.

Unit creates home away from home

1st Lt. William M. Walker
63rd Engineer Company (CSE)

The Soldiers of the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), displayed their ingenuity and talents while creating a "home away from home" through numerous Morale, Welfare and Recreation projects at Forward Operating Base (FOB) Houston. Engineers, known for being innovative and resourceful, installed everything from a recreation room to MWR phones, hot shower facilities to a custom built washing machine, all in an effort to make Soldiers comfortable during their stay in Nicaragua.

The recreation room, known as the "Engineer Lounge," was one of the first facilities constructed at FOB Houston. The Engineer Lounge had tables for playing games and an assortment of weights and exercise equipment. The Soldiers constructed a curl bench and squat rack.

"It is not Audie Murphy, but it is enough to keep me in shape. If you are creative, you can get a good workout." said Sgt. Davie Scott, 63rd Maintenance Platoon, who was a regular user of the weight room.

Almost simultaneously the TV room was established. The Soldiers constructed about 10 benches and a TV stand to set up a movie cinema. The company bought about 20 current movies as part of our MWR equipment and some Soldiers brought movies from their personal collection.

Company Commander, Capt. Robert H. Carr worked to get a contract completed so that MWR phones could be established for the FOB. The local phone company installed four lines to be used by the company, two of which were used as MWR lines.

A small PX was also established in the base camp. Anything from socks to sodas were sold at the PX. Due to the short supply in Nicaragua, the PX only contained a small assortment of items, but the Soldiers enjoyed the opportunity to get supplies and snacks.

Upon arrival at FOB Houston, Soldiers from 1st Platoon, Company B, 46th Engineer Battalion (Combat Heavy) worked with Soldiers of the Maintenance Platoon to establish a heated shower facility. Some innovative Soldiers built an assortment of benches and chairs to provide a source of relaxation after a hard day of work. One Soldier even constructed a rocking chair using two by fours and plywood for the company commander.

Even the officers got into the act. Company Executive Officer 1st Lt. Will Brown constructed a screened porch on the front of the company Tactical Operation Center. Many Soldiers enjoyed sitting on the porch and relaxing each night and on the weekends.

To aid the monotonous task of washing clothes constantly a washing machine was also constructed. An old motor and a 55-gallon drum was used to construct the washer. The washer had three cycles; one to wash, one to rinse and one to wring. The washer cleaned volumes of clothes for Soldiers throughout the company.

Once the phone lines were established, the 63rd completed a contract to connect to a local internet provider, thus giving the Soldiers another way to contact family and friends. E-mail became the main line of communication for those who had computers at home. The last MWR item to be installed was probably the most important for morale. A satellite dish and three televisions were delivered to FOB Houston. The satellite provided two American Forces Network (AFN) stations which gave the Soldiers up-to-date information and news.

"It is a plus because it allows the Soldiers to stay abreast of current events and AFN has a variety of programming," said Chief Warrant Officer Darren Cook, Maintenance Platoon. Almost the entire FOB watched the playoff football games on Jan. 17.

On Jan. 24 the company hosted a big barbecue to close out the time in Jinotega. The Soldiers watched a hometown baseball game during the morning. By mid-afternoon, the dining facility cooked up an awesome spread of food, including barbecued chicken, baked beans and potato salad. The company also purchased a large cake for the celebration. The Nicaraguan Soldiers joined in the feast and enjoyed listening to a disc jockey who played a variety of American and Nicaraguan music throughout the party. The Soldiers from both countries enjoyed the time to relax and blow off steam after a hard week of work. As a final event, many of the Soldiers went to the local disco to dance and drink sodas.

The Soldiers worked hard to improve the living conditions around FOB Houston.

"After seeing other base camps, I realize how nice FOB Houston is and how much fun it is to work with Engineers," said 1st Lt. Jeff Aycock, Company D, 261st Medical Battalion.

Individual creativity and technical skills allowed the Soldiers to achieve a level of comfort that most would not expect during a deployment to Nicaragua. Our Soldiers enjoyed the deployment and time flew by. The Engineers received a large dose of Nicaraguan hospitality and provided the Nicaraguans with an equal dose of American hospitality.

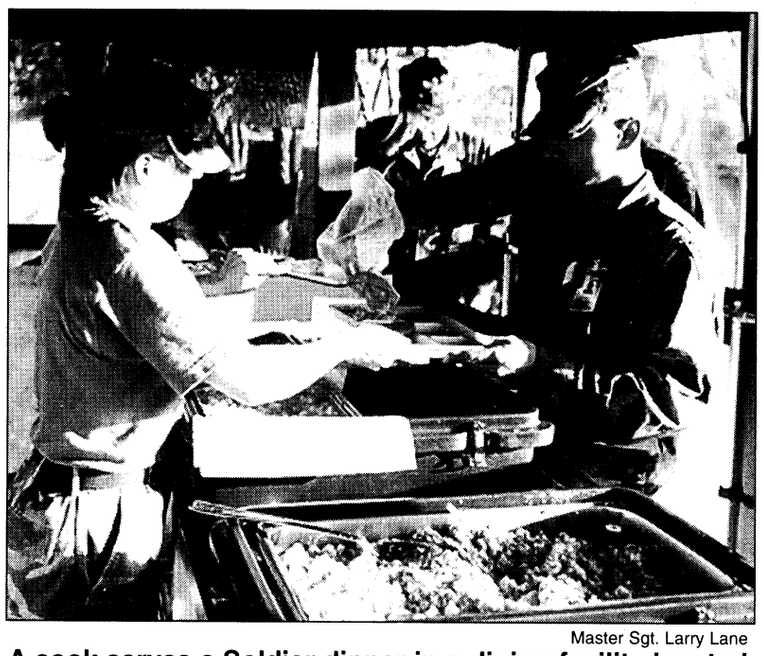
Troops bring Benning tradition to Nicaragua

1st Lt. Chea Neitzel
36th Engineer Group (Construction)



Wherever troops go, they bring with them the Army community. Soldiers deployed to Operation Fuerte Apoyo, in support of the Hurricane Mitch disaster relief mission are no different. The 36th Engineer Group (Construction) is continuing the Fort Benning tradition of excellence with the establishment of "Hotel California" in Managua, Nicaragua, recently named Best Large Army Installation in Nicaragua for the 10th week running by Col. A. Allen Rasper, Task Force Build Hope commander.

Looking over the complex, it's easy to see why it has set the community standard in Nicaragua. Once a Soldier checks into the four red walls, a multitude of activities and services become available to him, providing some comforts and reminders of home. Whether they are enjoying the MWR facilities, dining at the Hard Rock Café or shopping on Rodeo Drive, one can always see Soldiers living it up at the Hotel California.

The number one priority for many community members is their stomachs. Hotel California offers the "Hard Rock Café-Nicaragua," as the place with food closest to mom's cooking in the entire country. It serves a variety of Unitized Group Rations meals to satisfy just about any craving. Other needs deserving immediate attention include a deluxe outdoor spa facility, which provides therapeutic cold water cleansing and massage.

For those with a penchant for shopping, Rodeo Drive is the U.S. Army's largest shopping complex in Nicaragua. Not only does it house the largest AAFES exchange in the country, it also offers trinkets from a local vendor, postal, barber and shoe-shine services, and to pay for it all, a finance office. However, Soldiers short on cash can spend spare time participating in the wide range of MWR activities offered by Managua Creek Recreation Center, including basketball and volleyball, the largest Army running trail in country and a variety of tournaments and games.

So, as Soldiers of TF Build Hope continue to build their home away from home, they create a sense of community in Managua. They worship together at the makeshift Chapel and TV room, eat together at picnic tables, fondly referred to as our outdoor cafe, and forge what they will remember as their Nicaraguan families. The Army continues to prove that a community of excellence is not necessarily in hometown, America, but wherever people choose to build one.

news from the field

36th Engineer Group (Construction)

The following are excerpts from Col. A. Allen Rasper's situation report dated Feb. 7.

Operation Fuerte Apoyo continues smoothly and safely with no obstacles in sight. Phase II (Rehabilitation) is complete, Phase III (Transition) is nearing completion and Phase IV (Redeployment) is in full swing.

Our troops accomplished much during Phase II. The Engineer Task Force (TF 46) completed 125 kms of road rehabilitation, which included the emplacement of 515 concrete culvert sections totaling 24 culvert systems and transported more than 105,000 gallons of water for the city of Ocotal while simultaneously upgrading the city's water system. They also helped repair a water main in Corinto; repaired two bridges on the route between Jinotega and Wiwili; diverted two rivers and built causeways; performed minor repairs to San Juan de Limay medical clinic; and built and furnished a 5,600 square foot clinic with running water, septic system and electricity at Wiwili.

The Medical Task Force (MTF 261) conducted humanitarian assistance missions at 26 locations. They treated 4,240 Nicaraguan patients, performed 47 surgeries, pulled 152 teeth, conducted 248 eye exams, sprayed 537 houses and buildings and 1,781 acres, vaccinated 3,634 dogs and conducted professional seminars for over 860 people. Logistical Task Force 189 supplied the force by executing 311 convoys resulting in 275,757 kms driven and 200 tons of material moved. They processed close to 6,000 class IX requisitions and produced 1.5 million gallons of potable water. Task Force 189 and the aviation detachment (7-101 Avn) also moved 681.5 tons of humanitarian supplies to people in need. The Infantry company from Fort Campbell, Ky., conducted exceptional security operations. The postal team processed 30.5 tons of mail for our forces. Needless to say, we enjoyed receiving mail. Contracting negotiated over 160 contracts, infusing about 1.5 million dollars into the local economy.

Phase III will conclude next week with the dedication of the Wiwili clinic, Wiwili Forward Operating Base closure ceremony, outbriefs to the Ministers of Transportation and Health and presentation of TF Build Hope plaques and certificates to those Nicaraguans who contributed to our mission success.

AER lends helping hand

Michelle Harvey
Special to the Bayonet©

With the commitment to provide financial assistance for military families since 1942, the Army Emergency Relief (AER), a non-profit organization, celebrated their 57th anniversary last week.

"We provide relief for Soldiers who have to go on emergency leave or perhaps payment on their delinquent rent or mortgage to prevent eviction or foreclosure on their home," said Alfonso Deane, Fort Benning Army Emergency Relief Officer. "Also, we provide payment for utilities or food for his or her family members."

AER also can help pay for medical and dental expenses, provide emergency transportation and money for vehicle repair.

This past year alone, AER has helped more than 800 Soldiers.

"I had to come to AER for a problem I had at home, and it was taken care of in a professional manner," said Pvt. Richard Wafford.

Through financial loans or grants, AER not only provides assistance to active-duty Soldiers, but also retired Soldiers and surviving spouses and orphans of Soldiers who have died while on active duty or after retirement.

This organization does not receive any appropriated or non-appropriated funds from the government. "The money provided by AER comes from contributions," Deane said.

Last year, AER raised more than $700,000 through donations.

AER also provides undergraduate-level education scholarships for dependent children.

"The scholarships are for children of either active-duty Soldiers, Soldiers who have died during active duty or retirees," Deane said.

Deane, who has been a part of AER for eight years and is retired military, wants Soldiers to know that with about 1,800 locations around the world, AER can assist Soldiers away from Fort Benning.

"Soldiers from whatever branch of the military can receive help from AER from the nearest military branch they are closest to," Deane said.

Furthermore, in case of emergency leave, food, immediate eviction and foreclosure on a home, Soldiers can now get on-call help from AER after duty hours.

"Within the Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City area, Soldiers can access relief afterhours at 545-2218," Deane said.

For more information about AER, call Deane at 545-2536 or 545-4043. The the office is located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2624.

Dentist gives tips for teeth

Lt. Col. Adolfina M. Polk
U.S. Army Dental Activity

As teeth develop, grooves form on the chewing surfaces of back teeth. These grooves or pits and fissures are narrow and can't be cleaned with regular toothbrushing. As such, they make a great hiding place for food particles and bacteria, setting the stage for tooth decay.

Dental sealants, though, can help prevent cavities on chewing surfaces. Sealants are a thin plastic coating applied to the chewing surfaces of back teeth. The plastic acts as a barrier, keeping food and bacteria out and protecting teeth from decay.

Your dentist can apply sealants in just a few minutes. Once the teeth have been cleaned, the dentist roughens the chewing surfaces slightly, which allows the sealant to adhere. The dentist then "paints" the sealant onto the tooth. The sealant hardens within seconds and can protect the tooth from decay. The dentist will check the sealants during the child's dental examination to make sure they are still intact.

Your child's permanent molars should erupt anywhere between the ages of 6 and 8, so it's never to early too talk to your dentist about the value of sealants. In addition to getting sealants, your child can work toward a healthy smile by:

- brushing twice a day with ADA-accepted fluoride toothpaste;
- cleaning between the teeth daily using floss or an interdental cleaner;
- eating a balanced diet and limiting snacks; and
- visiting a dentist regularly.

Ecology Club

Students win award for earth efforts

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

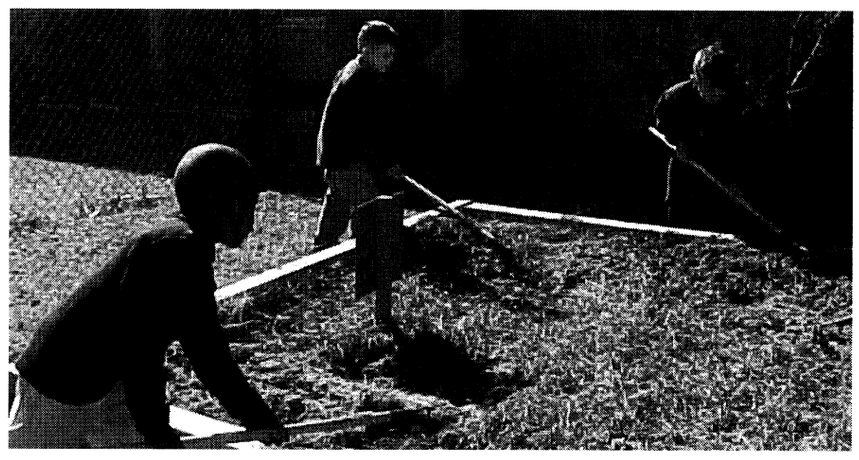
The members of the Ecology Club (e-Club) at Dexter Elementary School are doing what it takes to keep this planet beautiful, and their efforts aren't going unnoticed. Recently the e-Club, which is comprised of more than 50 kindergarten students, won first place in the State of Georgia Department of Community Affairs Keep Georgia Beautiful Awards Program.

The competition recognizes the best programs and projects in Georgia for their "earth-friendly" endeavors. The youngsters which comprise the e-Club stole the show in the Educational Initiatives category and may have the chance to venture to the World Congress Center in Atlanta on March 18 to attend the awards ceremony.

According to kindergarten teacher and e-Club sponsor, Earnestine A. Ezekiel, this isn't the first time the club has won a spot in the Keep Georgia Beautiful Awards Program. Last year the club received an honorable mention and the year before last it took home second place out of more than 400 competitors.

"We were excited and surprised to find out we won," Ezekiel said. "These children are just so serious about their environment and taking care of it. In fact, many of the parents have commented that their children get after them about things concerning the environment."

It was the children's excitement and concern Ezekiel said, that led to the development of the e-Club during the 1994-95 school year.



A unit study about the environment had always been included in Ezekiel's annual lesson plan, but it was the 1994-'95 year that the curious kindergartners showed an overwhelming enthusiasm towards the lesson and didn't want it to end.

Ezekiel said the e-Club became a perfect way for the children to quench their thirst for knowledge and help out Mother Earth in the process.

Today, the club includes all of the kindergarten students in the school. It holds regular meetings on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 8 to 8:30 a.m. and has a student president, vice-president and secretary.

Aside from learning and talking about the environment, the children also take care of their school through such on-going ventures as Campus Watch. This is where the students, armed with gloves and trash bags, spend the last 15 minutes of their Friday afternoons combing the campus for litter. The club also has a recycling center where the children can drop off recyclable items.

Five-year-old Aramis Brannon said it is important to pick up trash because it makes everything better.

Courtesy photo

Kindergarten students from Dexter Elementary School work in a garden outside the school as part of the Ecology Club. There are six raised garden plots that the children attend to.

"When we do Campus Watch, we pick up trash and stuff people don't see or could step in," Brannon said. "We pick it up to make everything all clean."

Aside from just cleaning up the campus, the children work to beautify it as well.

Ezekiel said the club raised enough money last year to build one of the children's favorite parts of the club — six raised garden plots outside the school. The children tend to the gardens by pulling weeds and planting flowers.

Kelsey Bateman, e-Club secretary, said she loves helping with the gardens, especially when they plant flowers.

"I like when we go out to the gardens — just a little bit ago, we planted tulips and that was neat," Bateman said.

Brannon said he likes being able to go to the gardens too, especially when they pull weeds because he can dig in the dirt and look for worms.

According to Ezekiel, the next big project on the list is to build a habitat. The habitat will house everything from frogs and earth worms to small fish and butterflies.

Among other things, the children also help maintain a memorial garden and present an original drama each year to the school. This year the students will put on Calamity in the Forest on Earth Day, April 22.

"This program is about educating the children, parents and total community about taking care of our environment and it has been extremely effective," Ezekiel said. "It is my philosophy that the place to start is with young children because that is where it will do the greatest amount of good and make the biggest difference."

"Winning this award just goes to show that we are concerned with our environment and that we would like to keep that enthusiasm going for all students of Dexter and even Fort Benning."

Building 108 gets a facelift

Have you noticed all the construction at Building 108? Building 108 is located beside Burger King and used to be the home of the Directorate of Logistic's Training Support Center (TSC).

The construction is a part of last year's demolition project. Additions to the building, which were constructed after 1954, have been removed to leave about 19,500 square feet of floor space. The exterior of the building will be patched to eliminate existing holes and will receive a new coat of paint. New sidewalks will surround the building. Curbs and gutters will be poured around the adjacent streets.

The project involves completely gutting the interior and installing new walls, finishes, bathrooms, mechanical systems, electrical systems and a state of the art communications cable. The floor will be overlaid with a special concrete mix. New windows will also be installed in the previously blocked window openings.

Building 108 will be the home of four different agencies including the Criminal Investigation Division and the Logistics Assistance Office. The agencies are currently located in World War II wood barracks, which will be demolished.

Building 108 was originally constructed in 1942 for the U.S. Army Signal Corps and then home of the Fort Benning Commissary until 1972.

Regular exams help keep pets healthy

Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility

Regular vaccinations and health exams are necessary for pets to live long, healthy lives.

Like humans, pets need immunizations (vaccinations) when they are young and then need yearly checkups (with vaccinations) for the rest of their lives. Both military and civilian veterinary clinics can provide these services for military pet owners.

Dogs should receive their first set of shots, be tested for intestinal worms and be started on a heartworm preventative at 6 weeks of age. They should then receive boosters at 9 and 12 weeks. Every year after that, dogs need to be vaccinated and should have a heartworm test and a test for intestinal worms.

Cats, like dogs, should receive their first set of shots and be tested for intestinal worms at 6 weeks of age. Cats do not need to be tested for heartworms or put on heartworm preventative because heartworms are rarely ever found in cats. Booster shots need to follow at 9 and 12 weeks and then once yearly. Yearly tests for intestinal worms are recommended for cats which spend time outdoors.

The Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility is located in Building 265 on 10th Mountain Division Road and is open from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. The clinic is closed the last working day of the month for inventory.

CPAs suggest establishing financial plan

Georgia Society of CPAs

This Valentine's Day, instead of flowers or candy, consider giving your spouse something more meaningful. The gift suggestions on the following list compiled by the Georgia Society of CPAs may not sound very romantic, but they can bring you and your spouse financial happiness and security over the long term.

A financial plan

Take some time to discuss long-term financial goals like buying a home, paying for college and planning for retirement. Once you have established mutually-agreed-upon financial goals, the next step is to prepare a financial plan for meeting those goals.

Begin by establishing your net worth — that is, the value of what you own minus what you owe. Then put together a cash flow statement that shows how much you earn and how much you spend. Use this information to establish a realistic plan for saving and investing toward your goals.

An ownership manual

The form of ownership you choose for property and other assets determines what you can do with them, how protected they are from creditors and where they go when you die. Laws are complicated and vary from state to state, so it is a good idea to seek professional advice when determining whether to call the property you own yours, mine or ours.

A security blanket

Sufficient life, disability and health insurance can provide your partner with key financial security in the event of an untimely death, illness or accident. If you and your spouse are both employed and do not have children, your group life insurance coverage at work may be enough.

But once you start a family, you will want additional life insurance to protect your dependents. Health and disability insurance are equally important.

Be sure that you are adequately covered with disability insurance that replaces a lost salary and with health care coverage that protects you from the high cost of medical treatment. If you are both employed, check your policies carefully to be certain that you are not paying for duplicate coverage you don't need.

A comfortable retirement prospect

One way to ensure a long, happy life together is to regularly fund a retirement plan for you and your spouse. Knowing how much retirement income you will need to maintain your current lifestyle through retirement is the key to establishing a successful plan for retirement savings. And remember, the earlier you begin saving, the lighter the burden. If one spouse has no earnings, consider the possibility of contributing to a Spousal IRA.

Peace of mind

Spare your loved one the pain of making the difficult decision about continuing or discontinuing life sustaining medical treatment by creating a living will. A living will details the kind of treatment you want or do not want in the event you are terminally ill and cannot make that decision on your own. Be sure that your family and your physician are aware that you have a living will and that they know you keep it.

It's also a good idea to have durable power of attorney, a legal document that gives your spouse (or another designated individual) permission to manage your money, make decisions about your investments or sell real estate on your behalf if you should become mentally disabled as a result of an illness or accident.

A credit card to call your own

Each spouse should establish credit in his or her own name, so that if one spouse should die or leave the marriage, the other will still have some credit. If you don't currently have a credit card in your name, apply for one now.

A financial records road map

Make sure you each know where important financial papers such as wills, insurance policies, bank and tax records, personal papers and retirement and employee benefit plans are filed or stored. Prepare a comprehensive document that you each can refer to in the event of an emergency.

A will

Planning for your death may not appear to be an appropriate topic for a candlelight dinner, but without a will, you die "interstate," meaning that your state's law will determine what happens to your estate and to minor children. To assure that your beneficiaries will inherit exactly what you each intend, have a will drawn up by an attorney. Keep copies of your will somewhere safe and accessible and update it as necessary.

An appointment with a CPA

Be aware that as a married couple, you are likely to face a higher combined tax bill than you would as single taxpayers. That's why it is important to make tax planning a year-round priority. A trusted tax professional can help you make the most of tax saving strategies.

The Martin Army Medical Mentor

... a community service from Martin Army Community Hospital

Urinary infections affect men, women

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Only the common cold outnumbers urinary tract infections (UTI) for numbers of events of illness in women. One in five women will have a UTI in a lifetime.

Males are less susceptible than females to UTIs. One major reason is that females have shorter urethras draining the bladder and opening to the outside skin. This shorter urethra allows germs to travel to the bladder more easily. A urethra is the outflow tube that drains the urine from the storage pouch called the bladder. The skin at the urethra opening can become contaminated with germs that can travel up the urethra to the bladder and start an infection called cystitis. If the germs travel beyond the bladder and up the tubes to the kidneys, a kidney infection or pyelonephritis (pronounced "pie-low-nef-right-us") can occur.

Men and children can also have UTIs. The risk for UTIs is increased if the person is diabetic, immune suppressed, has kidney stones or has an unusual internal anatomy which does not drain urine properly. A urinary catheter also makes a person at higher risk of a UTI.

Signs and symptoms of a UTI include:

•burning or stinging urination;

•frequent urge to urinate;

•cloudy, strong smelling or blood-tinged urine;

•pain over the pubic area; and •loss over control of urination.

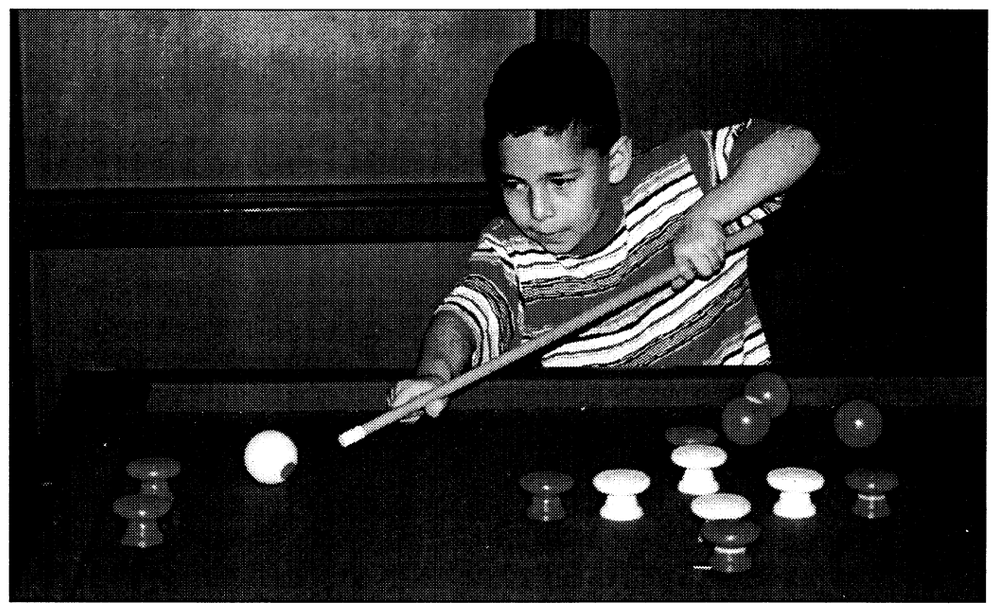
However, children may not be capable of explaining these sensations. Very young children may have fever, nausea, vomiting or fatigue as symptoms.

Not all painful urination is a UTI. Some other causes of painful urination include estrogen deficiency or irritation of the urethra such as with sexually-transmitted infections or perfumes, soaps and other chemicals. A urine test by the doctor can identify a UTI.



The treatment for urinary infections is antibiotics. However, people can take the following steps to lessen the risk of future infections.

•Drink plenty of fluids to flush away germs. Some evidence shows that acidic drinks such as cranberry juice discourage bacteria from clinging to the lining of the urinary tract.

•Empty the bladder when full. Over time, delaying emptying may weaken the ability to empty the bladder completely. This retained urine is more prone to infections.

•Avoid tight, poorly-ventilated clothing which trap moisture and promote growth of bacteria.

•Keep the area clean and avoid contamination. Showers tend to clean off bacteria more effectively than baths do.

Supplement industry may mislead consumers

2nd Lt. Kimberly Brenda Dietetic Intern

Millions of Americans take dietary supplements which include vitamins, minerals, herbs, amino acids, hormones and extracts to name a few. This shouldn't be a surprising statement and the proof is in the billions earned each year by the supplement industry.

The problem is that lack of regulation of supplements makes it easier to have misleading advertising. So, how can you be sure the pill, powder or tea you bought as a health aide is safe? Why is there conflict about regulation of supplements in the first place?

The conflict exists because the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) can only take action if a company includes a drug claim on the product label. So, unethical companies get around this regulation by promoting their product in books, magazines, radio and television but do not print the claim on the label itself.

Also, the manufacturer does not have to prove the supplement is safe before it is sold to you. If there is a problem with the supplement, the responsibility falls on the FDA to prove the supplement is not safe.

With this information, you should realize the quality and efficiency of the supplement(s) you take is not guaranteed by any means, regardless of the claim. However, some companies do act responsibly and the supplements have to pass chemical tests, microbial scans and mold and mildew screens.

Although a supplement may pass purity tests, this in no way assures the proper dosage is known. For this reason alone, no matter why you're taking the supplement, you should consider the supplement to be a drug.

If you equate "natural" with "safe" you are mistaken. Supplements, natural or synthesized, are potentially hazardous. Taking too much may lead to toxicity or death.

Some supplements act as stimulants and an overdose can result in heart failure. Other supplement overdoses can cause liver or kidney damage resulting in the need for transplants. A herbal "dieter's tea" may actually contain senna (a laxative) and uva ursi (a diuretic), both deplete your body of potassium, an electrolyte that is needed to regulate heartbeat. So, taken often, something seemingly as simple as a tea can do serious damage to your body.

Always report any adverse reactions to the Food and Drug Administration at (800) 332-1088 and the American Herbal Products Association at (512) 469-6355.

To go to bat for the other side, supplements can have benefits. Germany's Commission E. has done scientific studies of supplements, specifically herbs, and approved approximately 200 for use.

Such supplements as echinacea, saw palmetto and ginkgo have shown to be helpful in some clinical trials. Credible information is available regarding supplements if you still want to take supplements.

One highly recommended book is entitled The Honest Herbal: A Sensible Guide to the Use of Herbs and Related Remedies by Varro Tyler, a pharmacognocist from Purdue University and one of the country's leading experts on herbal remedies.

Ideally, the best source of information for use of supplements should come from professionals in botany, chemistry, pharmacology and other health-related fields. A dietitian could also help you obtain credible information about supplements.

Don't blindly trust the ads in non-professional magazines or the "too good to be true" radio and television commercials. Stand guard and don't be taken in by the hype. Be reasonable, no miracles come in a pill, powder or tea.

One simple way to determine credibility is to take notice if the articles in a magazine are praising the benefits of a particular supplement and advertising mainly those products.

For example, be suspicious of the magazine that only writes positively about protein or herbal supplements and has protein or herbal supplement ads. A reputable magazine will discuss both pros and cons regarding health products.

So, you are back to the original question. How can you know a supplement is safe?

The problem is you cannot completely; however, you can take an active role in your health. Hopefully, you realize now how important it is to get educated and informed about the supplement from credible sources. Make smart choices and have realistic expectations of the supplement. The bottom line is you are the sole navigator on your quest for health and it is time to take control.

Rangers share experiences with students

Julia Bobick
U.S. Army Recruiting Battalion, Kansas City

Students at Liberty Junior High School in Kansas City, Mo., had the opportunity to view career options in a new way — through the lenses of several military scopes, range-finders and thermal sights.

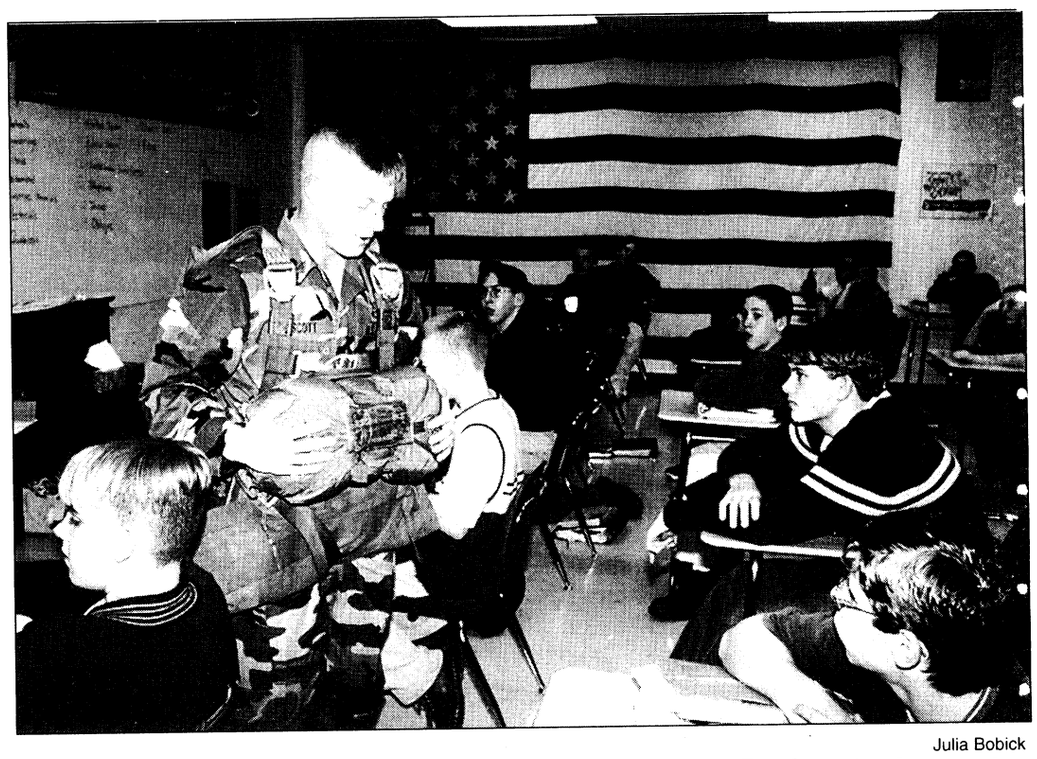
Two Rangers spent the week visiting Liberty and Exclesior Springs high schools and middle schools, teaching students about their roles in the Army and increasing awareness about future opportunities available to them.

Staff Sgt. Steven A. Morris and Cpl. Ryan W. Scott of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, volunteered to come to Missouri to share their experiences with students as part of the Total Army Involvement in Recruiting Program. They brought along some of their operational equipment, including several different sights, global positioning equipment, parachute, rucksacks and field gear.

Morris said this is the first time he has been on an assignment to travel and talk to students about his six years of military service as a Ranger and field artillery fire-support specialist.

"We really didn't know what to expect," he said. "But after the first demonstration, they were excited about the presentations."

Both the Rangers agreed it was a lot of fun and beneficial to the students.



"It puts the idea of the Army in the back of their minds," said Scott, who has been in the Army for two years.

Later, when the students are making decisions, they might remember our demonstrations and consider the military option, he added.

"I mean, who wouldn't want to jump out of an airplane; it's pretty fun," he added.

Scott, an Infantryman and team leader of a machine gun squad, joined for the excitement of becoming a Ranger and more than $19,000 in college money.

The event was sponsored by the Excelsior Springs U.S. Army Recruiting Station.

Vet recalls discrimination, marching with King

Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

Blatant, in-your-face discrimination against African Americans in his hometown of Selma, Ala., made Vincent L. Johnson an angry young man.

That anger fueled a fire for equality and justice for African Americans. Johnson joined in civil rights demonstrations and marched with Martin Luther King Jr. Now, at age 53, he's focusing the energy and lessons learned during the civil rights struggle toward building equal opportunity and diversity in the Air Force's civilian work force.

Johnson, a GS-14 personnel management specialist, is chief of the disability and black employment programs in the Air Force's Human Resources Development Division at the Pentagon. His responsibilities include developing and implementing policies and procedures for managing discrimination complaints.

He said he didn't personally experience the discrimination his family did in Alabama because most of his formative years were spent living on Army posts in Germany, Texas, Missouri, Virginia and Oklahoma. His father, the late retired Master Sgt. Vincent L. Johnson, was drafted in 1944 and served in a trucking outfit overseas during World War II. Young Johnson's experiences with racism came during vacations with his family in Alabama.

"I was angry during that period," said Johnson, a 1968 Army draftee who earned two Purple Heart Medals as an Infantryman in Vietnam. "How could I have not been? My father and uncles put their lives on the line for their country in the military, yet we were treated as less than human during that period."

When he visited relatives in Alabama, it was particularly galling for him to witness the discrimination his aunts and uncles endured. One of his aunts was a high school teacher, another taught elementary school and an uncle owned a small construction company.

Even though they spent their money in white-owned businesses, they were not allowed to use any facilities — bathrooms, water fountains — and they always had to wait until all the white folks were served, Johnson said.

In comparing life on Army posts to living in Alabama, Johnson believes the military led the way for equality and fairness for minorities.

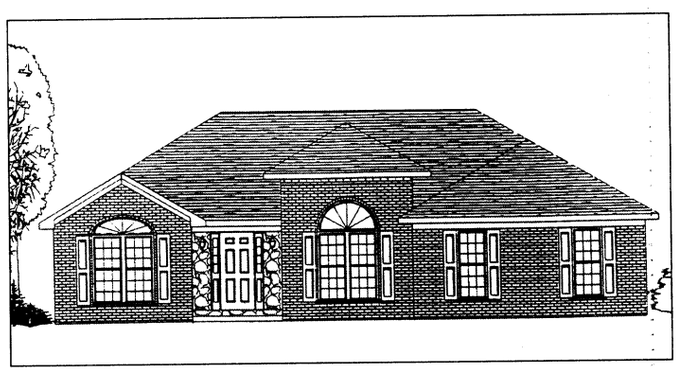
"The Army gave my father the opportunity to grow professionally and as a man," he noted. "And the Army got him out of the coal mines."

Being a military dependent changed his outlook on life by exposing him to different cultures overseas and providing him with the opportunity to attend better schools than those open to African Americans in Alabama, Johnson said.

"I learned very fast that I was just as smart, just as athletic and could compete with anyone," he said. He also learned to understand how segregation was "hurting the country by not using the talents of all our citizens."

He said marching with King taught him that one person could make a difference by standing up for what is right and for his beliefs. When King led his famous Selma to Montgomery march on March 21, 1965, Johnson was among the more than 8,000 protest marchers starting in Selma. Protected by federal troops, they were joined along the way by more than 25,000 marchers.

King mobilized and embarrassed the country into changing discriminatory practices faster than it would have happened otherwise, Johnson said. He thinks things would have eventually changed, but at a much slower pace. Johnson returned to Selma in 1970 when his father retired and lived there until his fathers death at 88 in 1997.



Armed with a bachelor's degree in education from Langston (Okla.) University, he pursued a master's degree in education and a doctorate in guidance and counseling at Alabama (Montgomery) State University.

He said those hated "white only" and "colored only" signs are down now and African Americans have made phenomenal progress in Alabama, including the political arena.

Johnson credits the Department of Defense (DoD) and the military services with making remarkable strides in improving race relations and opening up opportunities for African Americans, other minorities and women. "I'm impressed with the progress DoD has made in my 20-year civilian career," he said. "DoD should be the leader as we are the defenders of freedom for all Americans."

Daily temptations can be fought

Chaplain (Capt.) Robert McKee
1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

We all face a common challenge overcoming the temptations that Satan puts in our lives. Temptation is common to everyone, however, how we deal with these temptations is unique to each individual. Being tempted is not a sin. We know that Satan tempted even our Lord Jesus.

reflections

The gospel of Matthew 4:1-3 states that after Jesus was baptized, "Jesus was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights — the tempter came to him."

Jesus had fasted for 40 days and 40 nights and his human body was hungry and in need of nourishment. At this very time, when Jesus was hungry, Satan tempted Jesus first with the challenge, "If you are the son of God, command these stones to become bread." Jesus replied, "It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but on every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God."

Jesus used God's word to overcome this temptation and every temptation from Satan, "Go, Satan! For it is written you shall worship the Lord your God and serve him only." We need to follow the example of Jesus and put Satan and his temptations on the road!

James 1:13 tells us that God does not tempt us, " Let no man say that when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for cannot be tempted with evil, neither he tempteth and man." Through God's power, we can overcome any temptation Satan casts our way. Be alert, be on guard.

Satan will hit you at your weakest point and strive to lead you to sin against God. Satan will help each of us justify our sinful desires and give into temptation, because after all, it is not that bad and most people do it. The good news is that Jesus overcame Satan in every way and through faith in him, we can overcome our sinful nature.

In our weak moments, when Satan comes to tempt us, Christians can call upon the power of God and he will give us the ability to overcome any temptation. Remember the example of Jesus when he had fasted 40 days and 40 nights, and Satan tried to tempt him, Jesus told Satan to go! So the next time you are tempted at your weak point, be like Jesus and tell Satan to go!

Teen tension can lead to conflicts at home

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

If men are from Mars and women are from Venus then where in the world are teens from? I know what you're thinking ... no that place is designed for the devil! That is a question that many parents ask themselves (usually forgetting they once were teenagers) and end up with being frustrated. Teens are in that time of great change physically, emotionally and socially. All these changes take their toll on the teen. The teen is wanting to be fully in charge of his or her life only to become frustrated because of having to be largely dependent upon his parents.

This tension can often lead to conflict within the family having teenagers. Parents see their teen as being impulsive and irresponsible. Teens see their parents as being narrow-minded and certainly no where being cool. The teen's desire for power too often runs head on with parental power. Kaboom! It's World War III! Usually the parent will win. It kind of reminds me of the little boy whose father tells him to sit down and be quiet. While the boy does so on the inside he is thinking to himself, "I may be sitting down and being quiet but on the inside I'm standing on the chair and screaming at the top of my lungs." Many of teens will only do enough to get by in order to avoid a major conflict with his or her parents but usually it barely satisfies mom and dad. The result is an uneasy truce.

There has got to be a better way. Simply avoiding the issue will not make the situation any better, and it will most likely lead to a major blow up between teen and parent.

It is best to win your teen's cooperation by asking them for help, their opinions and their suggestions. Bring your teen into the rule-making process. A person who is included will be cooperative. If parents and the teens can argue a upon a mutual goal, then they can work together to achieve it rather than fight each other.

If these principles sound interesting, call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760.

Children's dental month educates

Lt. Col. Adolfina M. Polk
U.S. Army Dental Activity

The theme for this year's campaign, "Smiles are Always in Fashion," looks back over 50 years when the first annual observation of Children's Dental Health Month began as a one-day event in Cleveland, Ohio, on Feb. 3, 1941. During that year, February was designated as Children's Dental Health Week in Akron, Ohio.

The American Dental Association held the first national observance of Children's Health Day on Feb. 8, 1949. The single day observance became a week-long event in 1955. In 1981, the program extended to a month-long celebration known today as National Children's Dental Health Month (NCDHM).

Since 1941 the observance has grown from a two-city event into a nationwide program. NCDHM's messages reach millions of people in communities across the country and at numerous armed service bases. The messages let the community focus on the dental needs of children. The focus of the month has always been dental health education and the prevention of tooth decay.

Decay is one disease process that is totally preventable. It is through the education of the parents, guardians, teachers, day care providers and the child that good oral hygiene and diet habits are established. This is the only way tooth decay will be eradicated.

A preventive approach, which has been termed the "no-cavity plan," is being advocated by most children's dentists throughout the country. There is no mystery to having a child cavity free. Water fluoridation has been a great success against tooth decay. Along with the proper diet, good home oral hygiene and regular dental visits children can lead a "cavity-free" life.

The Fort Benning Dental Activity plays an active role in reaching the community to provide dental health awareness. Dental education classes are given to expectant mothers, screening dental exams are performed in all schools and day care centers on post, information is given at various health fairs and education classes are provided by the community dental health hygienist. DENTAC realizes the importance of education and spreading the word to stamp out tooth decay.

Fort Benning youth skates to stardom

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Anthony Stewart practices puck control during a pick-up game at the Columbus Civic Center earlier this week. Stewart's practice regiment which spans more than 10 hours a week, takes the 13-year-old from Columbus to Atlanta and includes more than three games.

What began as a pastime for a 13-year-old Fort Benning boy has developed into a passion for the 5-foot-tall youth as he has taken his dream to the ice and transformed it into reality.

Anthony Stewart, son of Sgt. 1st Class Carl Stewart, Henry Caro NCO Academy, began his hockey career only 12 months ago, yet in his rookie season, he has earned a position on a league in Atlanta and a slot on this year's Georgia All-Star team.

"He has really excelled this year," his father said during one of Stewart's practices earlier this week. "No one ever expected him to play this well his first season. He has pleasantly surprised us all."

Stewart said he began playing hockey two summers ago on roller blades while waiting for his father to return from a fishing trip.

"I just fell in love with it," he said. "I had tried a lot of other sports (in the past) and I just didn't really get that feeling. But when I started playing hockey, I just knew this is what I wanted to do."

Although he didn't take to the ice until December of 1997, Stewart said the first couple months on rollerblades contributed to the success he is having now.

"I got a feel for the game on rollerblades, but now that I am on ice, I like it even better," he said. "It is so much quicker and more aggressive on the ice than it is on the ground."

Stewart said the rollerblades were not the only thing that contributed to his success. He attributes a majority of it to his father.

"Without my dad I could not have accomplished what I have," he said. "My dad pushes me to come out here to the ice and train even when I don't want to."

Pushing him to train is something that comes natural for the Stewart's father, an instructor at the Henry Caro NCO Academy and a former high school hockey star.

"Once I realized Anthony had a talent I set up a training schedule for him, and we began to train on the fundamentals of the game," the proud father said. "I could see it in his eyes and in the way he plays."

The senior Stewart said although he has had a hand in guiding the talented teen down the road to success, he cannot attribute all of his son's development to his initial training. Most of it, he said, lies within his son's desire to become one of the best and the training he received last summer in New York.

"When we knew he really wanted to do this (hockey), my father encouraged us to send him to a camp up there (New York) to learn the tricks of the trade from the best," he recalled. "And ever since, he has shown some real potential."

That potential for success not only shows up on the ice, Stewart said, it shows up in the classroom as well.

"It is hard to say which he is more passionate about," his father said proudly. "Whether it is in the classroom or on the ice, he gives it everything he has."

Stewart said he hopes that his determination will take him to the top, but he said his hopes to play in the NHL are just dreams.

"I would love to play in the NHL," he said. "But to get there, I know I have to work hard now."

Stewart's father said his son will get a chance to add to his play list as he and the family will move to Germany this summer, but Stewart said reassuringly, American hockey will not be forgotten.

"It will be another test for me," he said. "They play faster over there, and that is really going to help me with my skating and improve my defensive skills."

The first-string center continued by pointing out the only draw back to German hockey — the absence of aggressive checking, something he hopes to remedy.

"I think I could probably bring a little bit of American hockey to them," he said smiling.

Stewart will get a chance to hone those smashing skills during the next three months of play, but said he would just continue doing what he is doing — attempting to be the best hockey player he can be.

"I just want to be a good player," he said. "Whether that means pros or college, I want to do the best I can."

Ready, aim

Richard A. Bass, U.S. Army Dental Activity, takes aim upon a target during Fort Benning's Rifle and Pistol Club's monthly combat pistol competition. Bass along with his wife, joined more than 20 other participants in the competition that included not only competition pistol target shooting, but rifle shooting as well.

The monthly match is only part of what the club has to offer. Youth Services basketball finishes fifth week of play

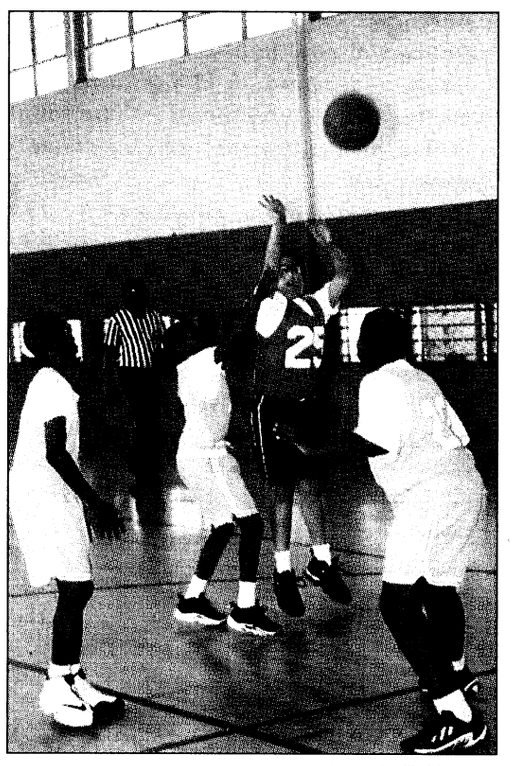
Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet

Youth Services basketball finished its fifth week of action-packed play Saturday.

The Pistons edged out the Wolf Pac 6-4 during the first game of the 6- to 7-year-old division. Jordan Goodman led the Pistons with 3 points. LaQuintin Braye and Lonnie Powell tossed in a basket apiece for the Wolf Pacs final score of 4.

In the second game of the division, Shaquille Shaw was lead scorer for the Benning Bulls with 4 points and led the team to an 8-1 victory over the Tigers. The Bulls defense shut down the Tigers and held them to 1 point. Rashawn Anthony contributed 1 point for the Tigers.



In 8- to 9-year-old action, the Lakers topped the Rockets 25-17. Kahlee Tyler put 7 points on the board and became the Lakers lead scorer for the third time this season. Rockets Luis Flores contributed 16 of the Rockets 17 points. Flores was the top scoring member of the Rockets for the fourth time this season.

The second game of the division saw the Warriors sneak passed the Bulls 19-17 during the final seconds of the game. Mack Clemons led the Bulls with 7 points toward the team total of 17. Warrior Marcus Valentine put in nearly half of his team total as the lead scorer with 8 points.

The Magics beat the Warriors 34-16 in the first 10- to 11-year-old division game. Magics' Dominique Love came up big with 15 points for his team. Jake Draughon led the Warriors with 4 points.

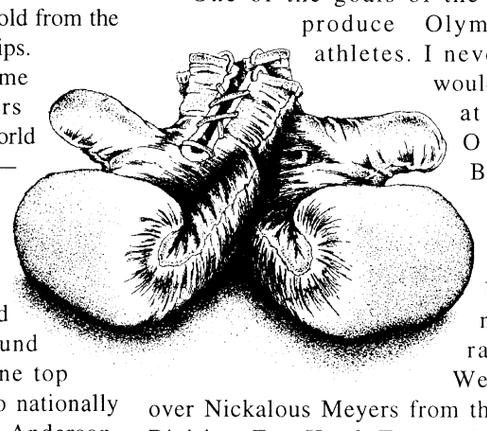
The Ruff Ryders escaped with a victory over the Lakers by a narrow margin 23-21. Ruff Ryders' Sherrod James and Emmanual Wallace contributed 6 points apiece as the teams lead scorers. Michael Aaron contributed 11 points for the Lakers.

In the 12- to 15-year-old division, the Knicks rousted the Spurs 36-29 during the fast-paced game.

Michele E. Hanson

Angel Miranda (25) of the Ruff Ryders puts the ball up for 2 points during Saturdays game against the Lakers.

Jermaine Speight led the Knicks attack against the Spurs with 14 points and Travis Smith contributed 9 points of the Spurs team total.



The Warriors were trampled by the Ruff Ryders during the last game of the day. The final score was 44-32. Roberto Duff and Donavan Mudayh were the Ruff Ryders top scorers with 10 points each. Warriors' Charles Barnes and teammate Issac Brown contributed 10 points apiece as the lead scorers but their efforts were not enough to pull out a victory over the Ruff Ryders.

Youth Services basketball games begin at 9 a.m. Saturday and continue through Feb. 20. For information, call 545-3540.

Soldiers slug it out at championships

Michael Kastre
Army News Service

It was three nights of fights, hype and glory at Fort Carson, Colo., Jan. 26-29 as 50 Soldiers met in the ring to test their mettle and determine champions in 11 weight classes. Hundreds of spectators at the Fort Carson Post Field House were not disappointed as boxers from installations worldwide slugged it out at the finals to see who would take away gold from the 1999 All-Army Boxing Championships.

Since Jan. 6, the fighters — some selected by application and others already in the Fort Carson-based World Class Athlete Program (WCAP) — underwent intensive training, working out under the watchful eyes of Army Boxing Head Coach Byron Moore and his staff.

In the line-up were 17 World Class Athletes who train year-round with Moore. Not on hand was one top contender, the Army's number two nationally ranked light heavyweight Olanda Anderson, who was off in Russia fighting a "Super Bout" re-match against Alexander Leziak. Even with Anderson gone, there was enough excitement to go around.

At 112 lbs, John Medina scored a unanimous decision over Michael Keopuhiwa, Hawaii National Guard. It was Medina's first outing after a three-month layoff following surgery on his wrist for a cyst "probably caused by the (the shock) of punching so much," said 23-year-old Medina, who is ranked number two nationally and who made it to the 1996 Olympic trials. To prepare for fights mentally, Medina said, "I spend time alone away from my family to visualize the fight and to focus. I don't go in to hurt the other guy, but I want to win."

Jason Franco, a newcomer to WCAP, easily won the 119 lb. class with a victory over Guadalupe Roman of the 2nd Infantry Division, Camp Red Cloud, Korea. Franco, 20, said he joined the Army in 1997 as a track vehicle mechanic because he wanted to better himself and because "I felt they could teach me a lot more discipline than civilian training."

The Odessa, Texas, native was 11 years old when he put on his first boxing gloves; it was his dad who got him started. As a civilian, Franco had upset veteran 106-pounder Bradley Martinez at the 1995 U.S. nationals. But just as Franco was about to try for the 1996 summer Olympics, his father died. He didn't box again for two-and-a-half years, working through his personal challenges. Now, he's back ranking number seven nationally.

In the 139-lb. division, Corey Bernard, outpointed Reginald Smith of Fort Hood, Texas, 5-0. Bernard soldiered for more than seven years before putting on gloves again. "I learned how to box when I was 13, but I never actually fought until I joined the military," said the 27-year-old Mississippi native, a petroleum supply specialist. His first big break was winning the 1998 U.S. nationals, which brought him from relative obscurity to his current 5th place national ranking. At his age, he knows the clock is ticking; he'll be 29 when the 2000 Olympics roll around.

"One of the goals of the WCAP is to produce Olympic caliber athletes. I never dreamed I would have a shot at the Olympics," Bernard said.

In a tough contest for the 147 lb title, USA Boxing number three-ranked James Webb prevailed over Nickalous Meyers from the 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas. Another relative newcomer to WCAP, Webb, who fought last year at 139 lbs, fought to a 3-2 decision over Meyers.

Two nationally ranked fighters slugged it out in the 156 lb weight class: Chris Lords (ranked 9th) was sent packing by Yamar Resto (ranked 3rd). Although Lords recovered and came back to knock down his opponent, the 24-year-old Resto won in a 4-1 decision. The Puerto Rican native, who came into the Army in 1993 as a field artilleryman, admits listening to salsa music to get pumped up and help him focus before bouts.

Julius Fogle repeatedly tagged Terry Ismall of Fort Hood, Texas, scoring a technical knockout in the 3rd round to take gold at 165 lbs. Another knockout came when Deandrey Abron floored Enrique Flores, of Camp Casey, Korea, 2:48 into the 1st round to win the 178 lb. title.

At 201 lbs, Georgia native and heavyweight Stanley McClain, 29, is another nationally ranked WCAP boxer. The number two-ranked McClain soundly defeated Samuel Brown of Fort Irwin, Calif., 5-0.

The All-Army champs competed Thursday and again today against their peers from the other three branches of service at the Armed Forces Championships held at Kelly Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas. This is the first step as boxers qualify for the U.S national amateur championships, the Conseil Internationale du Sport Militaire World Military Games in Zagreb, Croatia, in August and other top competitions on their way to the 2000 Olympic trials.

In the last 10 years, while they were selected as alternates, no Army boxer has made the Olympic team. But with the new, improved World Class Athlete Program, the Army has made a commitment to the Olympics. Now formed as a military unit, the WCAP is organized to support the athletes' military careers, at the same time providing them best training and coaching possible in their chosen sports. "We're Soldiers first, athletes second," said Moore, who noted that if the Army needed him in his military occupational specialty as mechanic, he would be ready to go.

When asked if he was optimistic about the Army's prospects against the other armed forces boxing champions, Moore said, "I try not to be optimistic or pessimistic. Instead, I try to just do my job." He added, "I believe in this group of athletes we have. I believe we can accomplish anything we set out to accomplish."

Ranger battles to save life

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

It was an ordinary afternoon for Sgt. Michael S. Blakeslee, a medical evacuation NCO with the 5th Ranger Training Battalion, as he sat awaiting treatment at a Dahlonega Physical Therapy Center shortly after noon Feb. 5. But his ordinary afternoon was about to change.

Sitting beside Blakeslee in the treatment facility was a 70-year-old man. The two sat quietly waiting, but when the elderly man slipped into seizure-like activity, Blakeslee responded.

The seizures ceased and Blakeslee evaluated the man's vital signs. Coming up with no significant findings, Blakeslee told the man he should go to the hospital for treatment, but the man said he was fine.

Within minutes the silence was broken once again as the man began to go into seizures, but this time Blakeslee's medical training was put to the test as he fought to keep the man who lied pulseless alive.

Blakeslee, assisted by a physical therapist, battled to keep the man alive through a constant repetition of heart compressions and breathing. Although the routine was tiring, the two knew every second and every breath of air could mean the difference between life and death for the man.

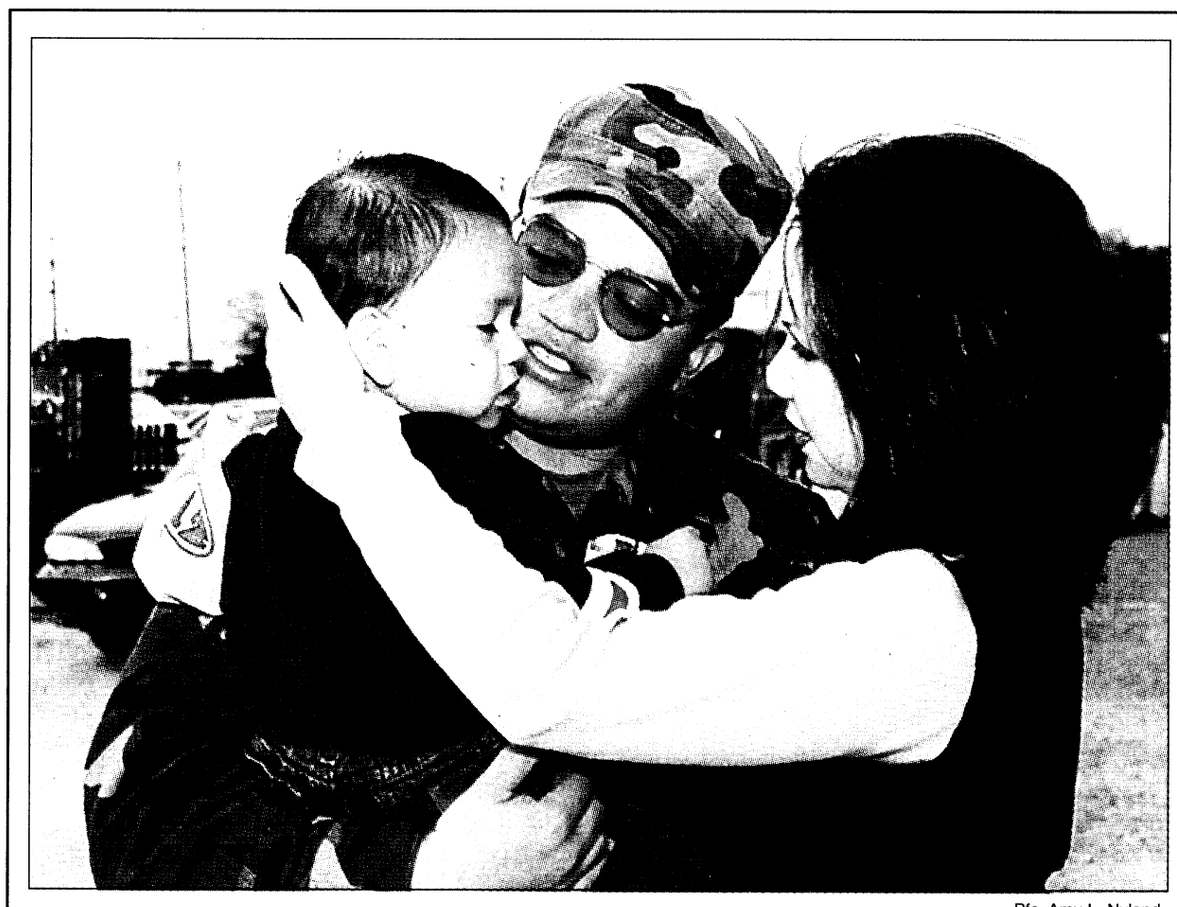
An ambulance crew arrived within minutes at the Dahlonega facility, and Blakeslee's quest to keep the man alive was turned over to the technicians who rushed the man to a nearby hospital for treatment.

Blakeslee's quick actions and technical know-how gave the man a fighting chance, but according to Blakeslee, what he did was nothing out of the ordinary.

"If anyone was put in the same situation, they would have done the same thing," Blakeslee said. "My job is a medic. Just because I am not wearing the uniform at the time does not mean that I do not have to do my job. In this case, I was just doing my job."

Although Blakeslee contests he was just doing his job, he has been deemed a hero by many in the area.

"What Sergeant Blakeslee did was truly a heroic deed," said James M. Neel, the physical therapist who assisted Blakeslee in conducting two-man CPR at the clinic. "He did everything he could possibly do to assist in the resuscitation."



"He is everything you would expect a Ranger to be — calm, cool-headed even in stressful situations like this," Neel commented. "He is an outstanding representative for what today's Army is."

However, this is not the first time the Ranger medic has gone out of his way to assist others.

In January, Blakeslee teamed up with his platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Gerald C. Ecker, to implement a program that would teach other Soldiers on camp the essentials of emergency medicine so when faced with a challenge like he was, they would be prepared as well.

The program, Ecker said, is one that spans more than four weeks and results in Soldiers obtaining their certification as a Basic Emergency Medical Technician.

"Although all of our instructors here are combat lifesaver qualified, this course takes their training a step further," Ecker said. "With more trained emergency medical personnel on the mountain and around the camp, our service to the students who come here monthly is increased exponentially."

National Prayer Breakfast

Gathering recognizes values

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Following in tradition, Fort Benning Soldiers and employees gathered at the Officers' Club for prayer, music and food during the National Prayer Breakfast Feb. 12.

In 1953, members of the Senate and House Prayer Groups along with President Eisenhower proclaimed the first Presidential Prayer Breakfast to bring together leaders and recognize the moral and spiritual values upon which the nation was founded.

Since then, individuals in leadership positions from different areas of life meet together for discussion and prayer.

This year's breakfast hosted guest speaker Marvin Schuster, Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of Schuster Enterprises and a director of Columbus Bank and Trust.

Schuster volunteers in various organizations which include St. Francis Hospital, the Pastoral Institute, Encounter Ministries Incorporated and United Way and many others within the community.

During his introduction, Schuster was described by Col. Michael A. Bingham, U.S. Army Infantry School chief of staff, as a spiritual leader among the community.

"Mr. Schuster is not only an incredible businessman and a widely respected man of vision and passion, he is a man of god," Bingham said.

Schuster

Schuster concentrated his speech on the importance of making the most of each day.

Referencing how short life is, and the importance of enjoying it, Schuster said if people had to number their days, they would make sure not to waste any of them.

"Make the greatest use of your time at Fort Benning because you do not know when the end will be," Schuster said.

He also spoke of the importance of taking care of one another and keeping "light and love in everyone's heart."

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst commended Schuster and his contributions to the community.

"Mr. Schuster is respected for his generosity with time and the success God has blessed him with, which means a lot in this community," Ernst said.

Ernst also thanked Schuster for sharing a little bit of levity and a lot of wisdom to those who attended the celebration.

The ceremony concluded with the singing of "America the Beautiful" and a closing prayer.

USARSA conducts rights training

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) conducted human rights training for the 1999 Command and General Staff Officer Course(CGSOC), Feb. 8-12.

"This week exemplified what we do best here at USARSA, and that is teach human rights up front to all of the students who come to the school," said Maj. Tony Raimondo, judge advocate for USARSA and principal human rights instructor for the school.

Raimondo said human rights is taught at the beginning of each course because it lets the students know that human rights is of vital importance in accomplishing military missions within the limits of International Humanitarian Law and Human Rights Law.

"We emphasize to the students that they always have to keep the laws in mind so they can plan accordingly," he said. "We also instill in them the understanding of the importance to plan ahead, by considering or visualizing situations where human rights violation could unintentionally occur; and to take preventive measures to avoid that."

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt

Students of the 1999 Command and General Staff Officer Course work on human rights scenarios.

This year's guest speakers for the week-long human rights training were Francois Senechaud, with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), and Steven Schneebaum, a human rights attorney in Washington D.C.

Schneebaum is a former member of the Board of International Human Rights Law Group, and a current member of the Board of Visitors for USARSA. The Board of Visitors was established in 1996 by the commander of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) for observation and evaluation of USARSA's operations and performance.

Records ensure family's security

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Tragedy can strike unannounced at anytime during a person's life.

There are many things Soldiers can do to ensure their family's well-being in case of an untimely event.

Upon entry into service, Soldiers receive a Soldiers Government Life Insurance (SGLI) policy which can cover Soldiers up to $200,000 payable after death. If a Soldiers dies while in service, personnel rely on the emergency data card to contact the next of kin and beneficiaries, said Sharon Staples, Fort Benning military personnel clerk.

Although Soldiers can chose not to have SGLI coverage, the policy ensures their families will be taken care of after death with maximum coverage for $16 per month, which works out to roughly 53 cents a day. The difference between the $100,000 and $200,000 policy is only about 25 cents a day. What does this mean for his family?

With a $200,000 death benefit, the spouse can buy a house for $100,000 and invest the remaining $100,000.

Trees provide more than essentials

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Many of you may not know that today is Georgia's observance of Arbor Day. No, that's not the holiday where you honor the wonders of docking ships, that's Harbor Day. Arbor Day is the holiday dedicated solely to trees.

commentary

Most of us are aware that there is a National Arbor Day which is observed every year on the last Friday in April. But what I have just come to discover is that every state celebrates its own Arbor Day depending upon the best tree planting time in that area. It just so happens that Georgia decided the third Friday in February would be perfect.

For some reason, I got to wondering when and where the whole tree thing was started, so I decided to do some research.

What I found was that the first Arbor Day was celebrated more than 100 years ago in a state known for its plethora of corn and generally treeless terrain. It was Nebraska that issued a state proclamation begging settlers to go out and plant something that grew taller than the corn. What they hoped to get out of it was a little bit of shade, shelter, fruit, fuel and of course, something more interesting to look at.

Now, things are a bit different. When people are urged to plant trees, it's for things a little more important than shade, such as oxygen and toilet paper.

Some people may think it's silly to have a state and national holiday honoring trees, but if they stopped and realized how much trees do for us they may change their minds. Heck, we have been taking for granted the usefulness of trees since the beginning of time. And with patches of rain forest the size of football fields being torn down every minute I would say dedicating two days to planting trees probably doesn't even come close to covering the damage.

Everyday, we take advantage of the millions of trees that give their lives to make ours easier. I don't think there is one home in the entire world that doesn't have some product made from trees.

However, it's not just the product value of trees that matters, it's the hundreds of other little things they provide that probably mean the most.

Let's take beauty, for example. I can testify to the awe-inspiring effect hundreds of huge beautiful tree's hovering neatly along the highway can have. It sure beats the one cow and three tumbleweeds you see driving through North Dakota.

There's also the sentimental value that adds up over the years. You'll always remember the tree you stole your first kiss under or the one where you carved the name of your one true love you ended up dumping the next day.

Of course, there's always recreation. Who can forget the countless dares you received before finally attempting to climb that huge oak tree — the firefighters who ended up getting you down probably won't. Plus, what would camping be if there weren't woods to camp in? It wouldn't be camping, it would just be you, a tent and a fire in the middle of an open field.

Most of all I'd hate to see what Fort Benning would be like without its scores and scores of trees. It doesn't make for much of a training environment if you know what I mean.

Anyway, the list goes on and on. I guess the best way to look at Arbor Days' importance is trying to imagine what this world would be like with no trees at all — it's a pretty scary thought.

So remember trees are our friends. They never complain when we chop them down, or slice off their branches or carve weird things into them. They just stand there content that they are helping us. Why not give something back to this fine state on Arbor Day? Get out there and plant a tree!

Child deals with ethnic identity dilemma

Sgt. Marcia Jackson
U.S. Army Alaska

We are who we are. I talk to my daughter, Dominique, just about everyday.

We talk about things like the weather and how different it is in Philadelphia compared to Alaska. We talk about boys and clothes and when I will allow her — if ever — to wear make-up. But today we talked about something different — race.

commentary

She told me that children in her class told her she wasn't "really black." She said they were teasing her because she is fair skinned with sandy brown hair, freckles and hazel eyes. She was told she talked like a white person and dressed like one also.

I started to dismiss the youngsters' actions as just another case of "juvenile jealousy," but then I reflected on my own life and how, even today, I get told things like "I'm not black enough" or "I sound like a white person." Well, someone needs to tell me what a white person sounds like.

My mother raised me to be the best person that I can be. I was afforded the opportunity to attend Catholic school, where I learned the fundamentals of being a good human being. Not a black human being trying to be white or a white human being trying to be black, but a young woman trying to find out who she is and where she fits in.

During my discussion with Dominique, she expressed to me her anger and how she wanted to fight to prove that she is black. She believed that fighting would make the hurting stop. That hitting would "show them she wasn't going to be played with." But I told her that fighting is only a temporary solution to a permanent problem.

In the words of Martin Luther King Jr., "We must forever conduct our struggle on the plane of dignity and discipline. We must not allow our creative protest to degenerate into physical violence."

I try to instill in my child that she should work to educate others on who she is and her background. That way they could get to know her and respect her for who she is, not what she looks like. But then, does she even know who she is?

When I asked her this question, she lightheartedly said, "I'm your daughter." While it gave us both a laugh and lightened the mood, she knew that wasn't what I was after. After a moment of silence, she said reluctantly, "I'm Dominique Michelle Cherry."

I smiled and asked a second question, "When you look in the mirror, what do you see?"

"Me," she said.

"No Dominique," I said to her. "Go to the mirror, look in it and tell me what you see."

"I see brown hair, brown eyes and freckles," she said. "Mom, I just see me."

"Do you know what I see?," I said. "I see a beautiful young lady who just wants to fit in. I see an 11-year-old who is eager and confused. I see a strong, intelligent young lady. I see me at that age.'

Dominique couldn't believe that me, her mother, could have one day been the object of sneers and unkind words, but I told her that it is something we ail must go through black, white or other.

I read to her an excerpt from a Maya Angelou poem, "Still I Rise."

You may shoot me with your words,
You may cut me with your eyes.
You may kill me with your hatefulness,
But still, like air, I rise

I told her to think of this the next time anyone tries to put her down. I told her to remember that no matter what, she would always be my star.

After we talked, I looked at myself in the mirror, and thought to myself — what do I see? I saw a strong, intelligent, determined, stubborn woman who was not trying to be black or white. A woman who was still trying to do what her mother had taught her all those years ago — be the best person I can be, no matter what the color of my skin is.

So why can't others see the same thing?

But then again, does it really matter what others think?

you ever wonder?

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The origins of some of the things Soldiers do and say are enlightening and sometimes amusing. For example, we take for granted that a sergeant wears stripes, but why? For that matter, why are they called sergeants?

The Bayonet will be attempting to answer questions such as these. Did you ever wonder why a p ivate is a private? To remind him or her of what they are missing in the barracks? And if a major outranks a lieutenant, why does a lieutenant general outrank a major general?

This week's topic of discussion is Scuttlebutt. We've all heard it. But who was this Scuttle person and how did his fourth point of contact become associated with rumors and gossip?

The Navy takes credit for this expression. According to the Center for Naval History, to scuttle was to drill a hole, to tap a cask or barrel. A butt was a wooden cask for water or other liquids. Aboard a ship, a scuttlebutt was where sailors got their drinking water. Like its modern counterpart, the office water cooler, gossip was often exchanged when sailors gathered at the scuttlebutt for a drink of water. Although bottled water and water fountains have long since replaced the original scuttlebutts, scuttlebutt lives on.

Organizations offer help

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

More than 30,000 Americans resort to suicide every year, and according to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, suicide is only outranked by four other causes of death in 25- to 44- year olds.

There are many reasons people resort to suicide. Anyone can have feelings of loneliness and despair. These feelings can sometimes seem hopeless, but there is help available.

Fort Benning's unit chaplains may be the first resource to turn to along with numerous other avenues of help. Community Mental Health, Department of Psychiatry and the Civilian Counseling Service at the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Program (ADAPCP) are all available for individuals in need.

However, before a person can seek help, knowledge of a problem must be identified.

Education Coordinator Sgt. 1st Class Darryel Johnson, trained Suicide Intervention Trainer said, "Problems can be related to finances, work situation, relationships or some other type of traumatic experience in the past."

A person who is thinking of suicide can show signs of a problem in many different ways. Anything from the quality of their work to their appearance can begin to suffer.

"Those who are thinking of suicide may appear withdrawn, talk of death and give away their most prized possessions along with many other signs," Johnson said.

People who are experiencing problems can receive help in finding hope and a solution to problems 24 hours a day from organizations on post or their unit chaplain.

These services may arm those in need with the knowledge and skills to deal with problems such as anxiety.

However, some may not realize they have a problem. For these people, suicide intervention may be the only answer to a possible life or death situation.

Johnson said it is important to find out the reasons for sudden changes in an individual's behavior. By asking the individual if there is anything they would like to talk about in hopes of providing them with assistance.

"Talking it out can be a great help. In some cases an individual may only intend actions to be a threat, but each attempt must be considered carefully," Johnson said.

There is a Suicide Intervention Workshop "First Aid in Action," that can be given on the unit level that prepares people for intervention situations.

The workshop is a two-day course for leaders and supervisors, which focuses on immediate crisis intervention. U.S. Army Infantry Center Suicide Prevention Planning Guide (600-22) is also available with all numbers to call for assistance if needed.

Upon completion of the workshop, participants are able to assess risk of suicide, assist those at risk through immediate crisis and make an appropriate referral, Johnson said.

If there is someone who is having problems, help may be reached by calling the following numbers:

Unit chaplains, Community Mental Health — 545-1717 or 545-5964;

Department of Psychiatry — 544-3590 or 544-3521;

Civilian Counseling Services — 545-2475.

Services can be reached during duty hours of 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., or for emergencies on-post help may be reached at the emergency room or the duty chaplain at 544-1502 or 545-2218. For emergencies off post, call the 24-hour help line at 327-3999.

USARSA: Students apply techniques

Humanitarian Law. The ICRC is a private Swiss organization whose role is to take direct and immediate action to assist victims of war in international and internal conflicts, as well as in situations of internal disturbances and tension. They also promote preventive measures by disseminating knowledge of international humanitarian law.

For the last two years, Senechaud has been teaching and lecturing on the laws of armed conflict for two or three courses a year at USARSA.

Senechaud said the human rights training the students received last week and the human rights training they receive throughout the year certainly puts each country represented at USARSA at par with one another in the understanding and application of human rights.

"They also learn how the ICRC operates in the international community," he said.

Raimondo said the human rights training doesn't stop at the beginning of each course nor after last week's training session. Rather, this serves as the foundation for the human rights training scenarios developed throughout each course.

"In these human rights scenarios, the laws of war — the laws of human rights — are applied on a practical level," he said. "It's one thing to teach human rights and have them understand it. But they also need to apply human rights to a situation that presents itself."

He said USARSA students apply the human rights techniques during various course stages including situational training exercises and field training exercises.

"Practical exercises not only teaches the student how to apply human rights law, but it also reinforces their knowledge of that law," said Raimondo. "That's why last week's human rights training was so important."

Lt. Col. Alejandro Navas of the Colombian Army and student of the 1999 CGSOC, said last week's training was very interesting and extremely important.

"We as Soldiers must understand all the principals, protocols and applications of human rights laws," Nava said. "The guest speakers were experts in the field of human rights and we benefited tremendously from their lectures."

The week ended with the CGSOC students visit to Andersonville, Ga.

"Our approach to human rights at USARSA is not to simply teach it once and then forget about it," Raimondo said. "We teach it during the entire course because human rights is applicable to every single military operation."

RECORDS: Soldiers update

If she has small children, by the time they reach college age, the interest drawn on the $100,000 could pay for their college education.

In addition to keeping an updated SGLI, Soldiers should also ensure their records are updated. Not having current information may delay notification of family members and benefit pay. if a Soldier is in an accident, units also rely on the data to contact family, Staples said.

To avoid hardship and confusion, Soldiers should update their records whenever there is a change in their family such as a new child, address change, death in family, divorce, marriage or separation, according to Staples. Soldiers should bring marriage licenses, divorce decree, marriage, birth or death certificates.

Soldiers who need to update their records can enter their unit's records facility on a walk-in basis.

The Main Post Records Facility is located in Building 2620 in Soldiers' Plaza for Soldiers in the following units:

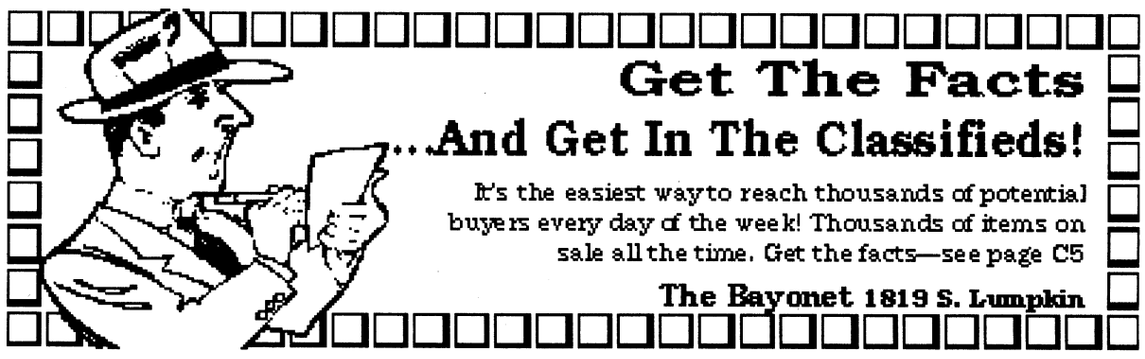
- 11th Infantry Regiment
- 29th Infantry Regiment
- U.S. Army School of the Americas
- 75th Ranger Regiment
- 36th Engineer Group (Construction)
- U.S. Army Dental Activity
- U.S. Army Department of Medical Activity
- 988th Military Police Company
- U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police

The Kelley Hill records facility is located in Building 9058 for 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) units.

Soldiers who are unsure which records location they should attend should check with their units.

Soldiers and family members may also want to draft a will so their family will not need to deal with details while coping with the death of a loved one.

Wills are important because normally they can provide the spouse access to assets that might otherwise be frozen, such as checking and savings accounts and civilian life insurance policies.



At the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Soldiers and their families can put their affairs in order in case of premature or even natural death.A will can also name guardians to children who are still minors in the event both parents pass on.

"A will gives a written directive to family members, so they do not have to deal with specifics during a time of death in regard to how the property, both real and personal is distributed," Moller said.

Soldiers and family members who are interested can call for an appointment to meet with an attorney on Fridays beginning at 8 a.m.

Those who would like to have a will prepared can also pick up a worksheet prior to their appointment at the Office of the Staff Judge, Advocate located in Building 5.

For more information on wills or to set up an appointment, call 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Ranger candidates (counter clockwise from top right) from the 5th Ranger Training Battalion finish one of the final phases of mountaineering instruction high atop Mount Yuma near Dahlonega, Ga. Above, Ranger instructors from 5th RTB show Ranger candidates the proper procedure for scaling the stone mountain. Counter-clockwise, Ranger candidates belay one another as they make their trek to the top of Mt. Yuma using the buddy assisted method of mountaineering. Prior to climbing the mountain, Ranger candidates check one another to ensure the climbing harnesses are secured properly. Ranger instructors give one final check of candidates' gear before climbing and answer any final questions the candidate has. A Ranger candidate scales one of the many stone sheers that create the challenging course candidates must climb to successfully pass, the second phase of Ranger School. Mountaineering phase consists of more than three weeks of intense modern mountaineering training to prepare future Rangers for life on the mountainous battlefield.

Deployments to foreign countries are always a challenge for Soldiers of the Army, but as Spc. Steven G. Hamlet, U.S. Army Infantry Center chaplain's assistant, discovered, that challenge is even greater when Mother Nature compounds the situation with torrential rains, heavy flooding and a devastating hurricane.

Hamlet was one of 500 troops assigned to Soto Cano Air Base, Honduras, serving on a six-month deployment to the region when Hurricane Mitch swept through Central America in October. In its wake, thousands were left homeless, needing water and looking for any source of help they could find.

"Once the hurricane came through, it was total destruction," recalled the 25-year-old chaplain's assistant who served as the base chapel's noncommissioned officer in charge. "It was unlike anything I had ever seen. These people were left with nothing, and that is where we came in."

According to Hamlet, troops assigned to the region began their assistance efforts almost immediately to the storm-tattered country with 24-hour assistance efforts that included anything from air-lifting supplies to rural regions to medevac support from the residents buried deep within the debris the storm left in its wake.

"We worked non-stop for the first 48 hours after the storm delivering supplies and assisting with the medical evacuation of residents trapped deep beneath the rubble," he said. "The efforts were complicated even more by the flooding and the constant rain."

That rain, Hamlet said, was one of the most difficult challenges the team faced while in the country.

"We were forced to work in a constant rain that turned everything into a muddy mess," he said.

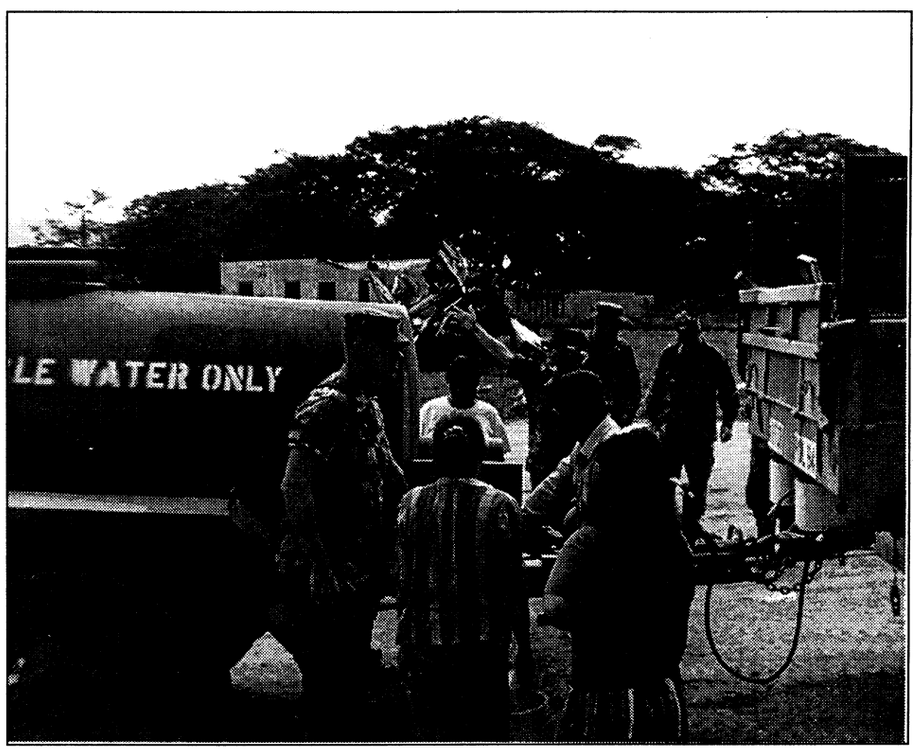
Added to the first few days of rescue operations and supply drops, Hamlet said the team of troops were also tasked with the cumbersome job of attempting to halt the nearby rising river with thousands of sandbags.

"We filled more than 46,000 sand bags those first two days to try to keep the river from washing away our power generation facility," he said. "Although the facility ended up getting wet, we were still able to save it and much of the surrounding land that would have been washed away."

Filling sandbags and providing relief aid was only one piece of the puzzle that formed Hamlet's Honduran efforts.

"Helping the orphanages was probably the most vital thing we did while we were in Honduras," Hamlet said. "We provided them with the opportunity to receive the supplies they needed to care for the children."

Although the supplies and the care were a big part of the effort, Hamlet said the biggest gain made in the deployment came from the education he and others gave to the people of Honduras about the prevention of diseases.



"With all of the flooding, the potential for disease was very high, and the Hondurans knew nearly nothing about how to prevent it," he said. "We took on the responsibility of training them so the problem wouldn't arise."

Even though Hamlet was tasked with these duties during duty hours, the Soldier also donated his off-duty time to assisting with the orphanages.

"I just enjoyed helping the kids and feeling like I could make a difference," he said. "There is no feeling like helping someone out."

Hamlet said he enjoyed assisting the region so much, he plans to return to the region again in the near future.

"I'm not sure when I will be able to make it back, but I look forward to returning. It is a constant need and if I can do anything to help, I will."

2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., welcomes new commander

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Friends and family, along with students from the Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC), gathered in Marshall Auditorium Feb. 12 and watched as the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (IOBC) guidon was passed from hand to hand, signifying the end of one leader's two-year command and the beginning of a journey for another.

Lt. Col. Charles W. Durr Jr. assumed command from Lt. Col. David W. Brown, who is expected to attend the Army War College this summer.

After passing the guidon, Brown took the stand and spared no time in thanking everyone for all they have done for him during his two-year term. He commented on how great it was to be the commander of the 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., and became emotional when saying his goodbyes.

"I love being a Soldier — that is all I've ever wanted to be," Brown said. "People who don't do what we do, can never and will never, understand the love, the pride, the humor and sheer joy of being a Soldier.

"The fact that I'll never be in an Infantry battalion again — there is no happy ending to this story," he said. "The only thing that helps with the sadness of this reality is that I have spent the last two years being a Soldier of the 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt."

Brown also extended his praise to the new commander and his family.

"The 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., is in great hands. Lt. Col. Chuck Durr, wife M'Lynda and son Charles are a great Army family who care about the Soldiers and I have no doubt they will give their heart and soul to this battalion. Chuck and M'Lynda, you begin an awesome journey, buckle up and enjoy the ride."

When Durr stepped up to the podium he explained how nice it was to be back at Fort Benning and what an honor it is to be able to command Infantry Soldiers.

"Over the last couple of weeks, I have been astounded by the efforts and heartened by the potential of this mass of Infantryman, both old and new," Durr said. "See if you can get inspired while watching these guys in action, they are the Army's future and there's nothing better than to be surrounded by warriors and warriors to train."

Durr was born in El Paso, Texas in 1983 and began his military career after graduating from the Reserve Officer's Training Corp at the University of Florida. He also received a masters degree in General Administration from Central Michigan University.

Durr's military education includes Airborne, Ranger and Jumpmaster Schools, IOBC, Infantry Officer Advanced Course and the Command and General Staff College.

He has served in an array of Army and joint military positions to include — battalion executive officer of airborne units in Fort Bragg, N.C., and Panama, the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Chaffee, Ark., and the congressional liaison for Ballistic Missile Defense in the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

He also participated in several contingency operations such as Operation Just Cause in Panama, Operation Golden Pheasant in Honduras and Operation Provide Democracy in Haiti.

His awards and decorations include the Defense and Army Meritorious Service Medals, Joint Service Commendation Medal, Humanitarian Service Medal, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal with Bronze Arrowhead, Combat Infantryman's Badge, Expert Infantryman's Badge, Master Parachutist Badge with Combat Star and Secretary of Defense Identification Badge.

Durr and his wife Lt. Col. M'Lynda Durr, have a four-year-old son, Charles III.

Students receive dose of southern hospitality

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Students and family members of the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA) 1999 Command and General Staff Officer Course (CGSOC), received a dose of southern hospitality at Columbus' Wynn House Feb. 7.

Ron Collins, director of the International Friendship Ministries, said the organization holds a reception at the Wynn House for the incoming CGSOC.

The one-year CGSOC is attended by mid-grade officers from the U.S. Army and Air Force, as well as officers from Latin American armies and police forces.

"This event helps the new Latin American students and American students know that they are welcomed in Columbus," Collins said.

During the reception, Collins, his staff and numerous local volunteers gathered in cultural sharing and attempted to find American families to sponsor the students and their family.

"We think it's really a blessing for American families to meet the USARSA students," he said. "They can become sponsors — become friends."

He said throughout the year the International Friendship Ministries, an interdenominational ministry made up of various local groups and churches, sponsors other events like fellowship, English classes and arts and crafts for the foreign students which includes the International Student Training Detachment on Fort Benning.

"We feel we receive the greater blessing because of the wonderful ways these students enrich our lives," said Carole Collins, International Friendship Ministries.

Maj. Fredy Diaz, of the Honduran Army and a student with USARSA's new CGSOC, has already taken advantage of the English classes the ministry offers.

"This is an excellent program," he said. "The English classes have helped me tremendously."

Collins said he and his wife Carole have been helping the USARSA students since the school moved to Fort Benning in 1984.

"This group represents the heart of Columbus," said Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant, USARSA.

Commissary

Deli-Bakery offers something for everyone

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

What could make more than 3,200 hand-made German Brotchen disappear? Hungry customers shopping at the newly-renovated deli-bakery located in the Fort Benning Commissary could.

The deli-bakery offers a wide variety of products and several expanded services to accommodate Commissary customers. Services include a hot food bar, pre-made sub sandwiches, a variety of pizzas, fresh-baked goods, customized cakes, sliced deli meats and cheeses and party trays for all occasions.

"There is no order too big or too small," said JoAnne Westbrook, deli-bakery manager. "The staff works hard to produce quality products and they are all customer-service oriented."

Westbrook said the deli department has a hot food bar which features half or whole rotisserie chickens and hot barbecue sandwiches along with a variety of hot vegetables. Assortments of cold sandwiches are made daily to include ham and cheese, roast beef and turkey. Party trays are available with meat and cheese, all meat, all cheese or can be made special order.

"The deli makes the best meat and cheese trays around and saves our customers at least 28 percent compared to downtown," Westbrook said. "The trays are delicious and range from $15 to $45 depending on the number of people served."

Other than fresh bread, rolls, bagels and buns, the bakery makes cookie plates, donut trays and has a cake decorator for customized cake orders.

"It is gratifying to produce a beautiful cake for a special occasion," said Christina McCoy, assistant bakery manager and cake decorator. "For the past five years I have decorated cakes and try to make each cake exactly as the customer wants it."

Chocolate, yellow or marble cakes come in quarter, half or full sheets, round single layer or double layer. Cakes are personalized at no extra cost. Kits and additional artwork are available for a small additional fee.

Services that benefit Commissary customers are not limited to the deli and bakery. The produce department makes fruit trays, vegetables trays and fruit baskets upon request. The trays come in a variety of sizes and will be made to order.

Trays and special orders for graduations, change of commands, weddings, funerals or any other occasion require a 24-hour notice until Oct. 1. Orders placed from October through January need a 48-hour notice.

For more information on deli-bakery services or to place an order, call 544-3524.

Retired Soldiers find life after the military

Michelle Harvey
Special to the Bayonet©

Life after the military. Many Soldiers have probably thought about how they can make a successful transition from the Armed Forces into the civilian world after retirement.

A few retired Soldiers have done just that by replacing their Army uniforms for business attire. Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Robert McCoy, Retired 1st Sgt. David Welmont and Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Joe Heckard formed the McCoy Environmental Technicians Company (M.E.T.).

McCoy, Welmont and Heckard met while attending Airborne School in the early '70s. The trio continued to keep in touch with one another throughout their military careers and into retirement.

Upon Welmont's retirement in 1995, he came up with the idea to start a company. With the help of longtime friend McCoy who also retired in 1995, they formed M.E.T.

"It was originally a one-man operation and started in my house," McCoy said.

Later Heckard, who retired in 1997, joined the company. Heckard also owns the 4-n-1 Restaurant, which is located on Victory Drive in Columbus.

"We found out that there is much camaraderie between fellow NCOs in the Army, and we can work on a level that we can better understand one another," McCoy said.

To better describe the company, M.E.T provides laborers for the environmental industry. "Moving and controlling personnel is basically what we do," said Welmont, who is vice president of M.E.T. "We place them in a safe training environment, then place then in the industry."

McCoy, who is president and owner of the company, believes there was a need for this type of business in this community. "I know there was a need for quality technicians, so we started the company because we thought we could do a better job with our military background and experience."

Welmont agreed with McCoy's statement. "We are unique because all of our people are certified to work in any arena, whether it be hazardous materials, hazardous waste, etc."

There are about 65 certified professionals employed at M.E.T. and about 95 percent of them were in the military. "We look for people who are willing to work and are drug free," said Heckard, who is the operation officer for M.E.T. "They go through a 40-hour course, which teaches them about OSHA and other safety fundamentals," Welmont said.

The entrepreneurs received much support from community-based organizations such as the Better Business Bureau (BBB) and the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce. "These agencies really helped with the success of this company," McCoy said.

Because they have been in the military, and feel they are a part of the Fort Benning community, the men contribute to special awards and ceremonies for Fort Benning Soldiers like the NCO of the Quarter and Year awards.

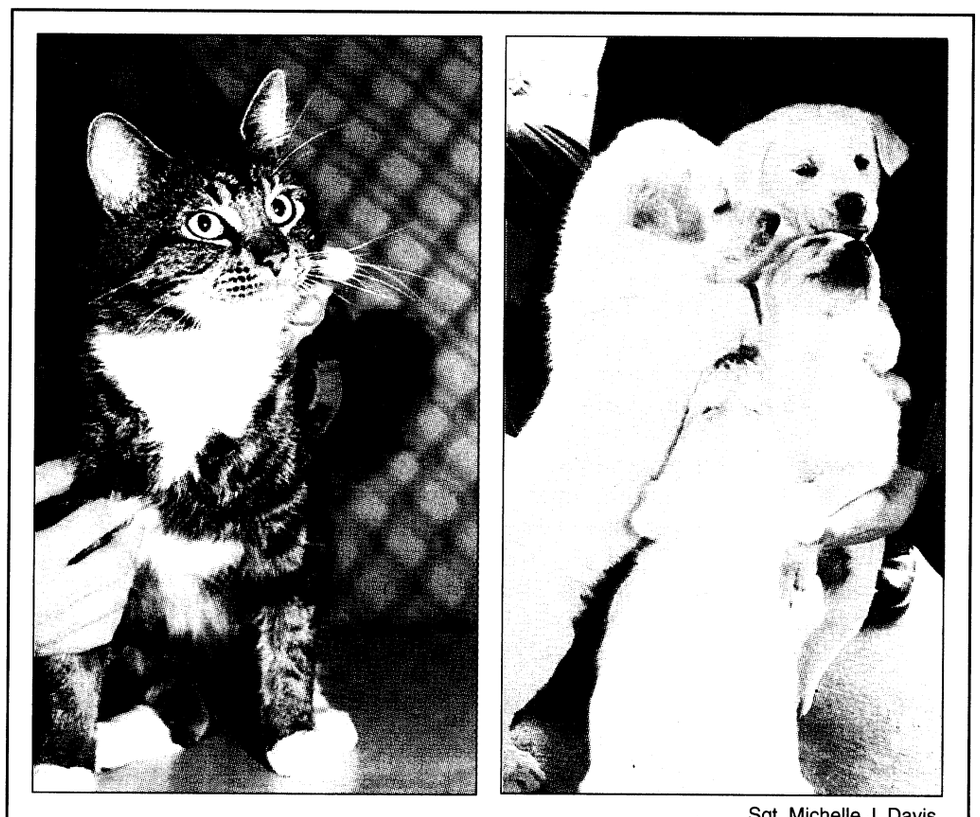
"Since we became businessmen, we are willing to work and support Fort Benning and the Soldiers," McCoy said.

They are also willing to advise Soldiers who are thinking about leaving the military and teach them to be productive, successful civilians.

Mouth protection protects players

Lt. Col. Adolfina M. Polk
U.S. Army Dental Activity

Mouth protectors are not new to football or hockey players, but what about other athletes? Couldn't baseball or basketball players benefit from wearing a mouth protector?



They sure could. In fact, anyone who participates in a sport that could result in physical contact should wear a mouth protector. Mouth protectors can cushion a blow to the face, minimizing the risk of broken teeth and injuries to the soft tissue of the mouth.

A mouth protector generally covers only the upper teeth. Some athletes, like those who wear braces or those with a protruding jaw may need a protector for lower teeth as well. A properly fitted mouth protector will stay in place while you are wearing it, making it easy for you to talk and breathe. There are three types of mouth protectors:

Stock mouth protectors are inexpensive and come pre-formed, ready to wear. You can buy one at most sporting goods stores, pop it in your mouth and hit the field. Unfortunately, they don't always fit very well. They can be bulky and can make breathing and talking to your teammates difficult.

Boil and bite mouth protectors also can be bought at most sporting goods stores and may offer a better fit than stock mouth protectors. They should be softened in water, then inserted and allowed to adapt to the shape of your mouth. To make sure you get a proper fit, you may want to ask your dentist to help you.

Custom-fitted mouth protectors are made by your dentist. They cost more than the other versions, but are custom-made and offer a better fit than anything you can buy off the shelf. Athletes who have braces or fixed bridge work especially should consider custom-fitted mouth protectors.

The clinic recently changed the adoption cost. Now, pet owners only pay for initial vaccination and procedure costs, which could be any where from $11 to $40. Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

The Martin Army Medical Mentor

... a community service from Martin Army Community Hospital

Low thyroid function may go unnoticed

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Thirteen million Americans have disorders of the thyroid and an estimated eight million of these people are unaware they have this problem. The most common thyroid problem is called hypothyroidism.

Hypothyroidism is the word used to describe an underactive or failing thyroid. The thyroid gland creates hormones which improve metabolic processes in the body.

Metabolic processes include making important proteins and using oxygen in the cells.

Large population studies have shown that as many as one woman in 10 over the age of 65 has hypothyroidism. Hypothyroidism affects both men and women but affects women eight times more often than men. The most common ages when hypothyroidism is first noted are between the ages of 30 and 50 years.

Usually, patients with hypothyroidism have mild symptoms. Follow-up studies have shown that people with mild hypothyroidism eventually develop more severe symptoms in later years. Therefore, anyone diagnosed with hypothyroidism should be followed closely throughout life.

Hypothyroidism can have several causes. The thyroid gland is stimulated by hormones from the master of all glands called the pituitary gland. Doctors can tell from test results whether or not the pituitary gland is the source of thyroid problems.

Hypothyroidism from pituitary gland failure is rare.

Usually hypothyroidism is isolated to failure of the thyroid gland alone. This failure can occur spontaneously or it can develop after treatments used for an over active thyroid. The most common cause of hypothyroidism is called Hashimoto's thyroiditis and may run in families.

More common symptoms of hypothyroidism can include dry skin, dry or brittle hair or nails, constipation, muscle cramps, sluggishness, poor concentration, and, in women, increased menstrual flow. In addition, cholesterol levels may be elevated which increases a person's risks of hardening of the arteries, called arteriosclerosis.

The treatment for hypothyroidism is synthetic thyroid hormone. Doses are adjusted until normal blood levels are reached. If a person has an underlying heart condition, the doses are increased more slowly. Taking thyroid medication daily is important if blood levels and dose requirements are to be correct.

Taking either too much or too little thyroid medication can lead to problems. If not taking enough medication, a person can feel sluggish and have any of the symptoms listed for hypothyroidism. During pregnancy, the dose of thyroid hormone may need to be increased.

Taking too much thyroid hormone can make a person feel nervous, have heart palpitations, trouble sleeping, shakiness, and can cause excess calcium loss from bones. This bone loss can increase the risks for osteoporosis and fractures later in life.

Generally, people with hypothyroidism do very well and many notice an improved sense of well being once the correct dose of medication is established.

BBB warns of Social Security scams

Better Business Bureau

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) receives numerous consumer inquiries and complaints about direct mailing that use the words "Social Security" or other government-like symbols as come-ons to get consumers' attention and sometimes their money.

One type of mailing offers to provide, for a fee, various services which are available from the Social Security Administration at no charge, such as obtaining a Social Security number for a newborn, notifying Social Security of name changes for newly married persons, or obtaining personal earning and benefit estimate statements. Consumers can obtain this information for free by calling the Social Security Administration.

Another type of solicitation offers an extra social security check to senior citizens who send back money or provide their bank account or social security numbers.

Recipients are being asked to send a "filing fee" of varying amounts or to fill out a form including their social security and bank account numbers so their the fee could be automatically deducted. Social Security recipients usually do get letters from the government when their benefits increase or the government may send out a statement of taxes paid and future benefits due. But, the federal government never asks for money for a processing fee. And they normally don't ask for someone's Social Security number — they already know it.

Consumers who fill out applications for these fraudulent companies are providing enough confidential information to permit use of their identity to establish credit, apply for a loan, buy a car or conduct many other transaction in their name.

If you receive misleading information about a "Social Security" service from someone seeking payment for the service, send the entire solicitation to the Social Security Administration. If you have a complaint, contact the BBB at 324-0707.

INRMP ensures conservation

Directorate of Public Works

The Integrated Natural Resources Plan (INRMP) is a comprehensive plan for ensuring that natural resources conservation measures and Army activities are integrated and consistent with Federal Stewardship guidelines.

When completed, this plan will address many issues including land use, military training needs, forest management, threatened and endangered species management, fish and wildlife management, outdoor recreation and cultural resources.

The legal basis for the INRMP is the Sikes Act and its 1997 amendments.

The Nature Conservancy was contracted to facilitate the development of the INRMP. The Nature Conservancy was selected because of their ecosystem-based conservation planning knowledge and experience. Ecosystem management is the underlying theme of the INRMP.

The ecosystem is hard to define, but involves air, soil, water, wildlife, microorganisms, plants and people. It involves weather, hydrologic cycle, food webs, nutrient recycling and other processes. In short, the INRMP will address the big picture and how these many complex entities are interrelated, instead of just looking at some of the parts. This plan is a common sense approach to a well-managed natural resource stewardship program as a prerequisite for sustainable training, not a constraint. It addresses mission needs, stakeholder interests, regulatory requirements and fiscal considerations.

The INRMP has been under development since December 1996. It is divided into three phases.

Phases One and Two are completed. Phase One identified and evaluated natural resource issues. Phase Two defined the military mission needs and environmental planning requirements under the National Environmental Policy Act. Phase Three will be completed in December 1999 and will provide the plan and an environmental assessment.

The completed document will be signed by the installation commander and approved by TRADOC. Other stakeholders and partners will include the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, Georgia Department of Natural Resources and the Alabama Department of Conservation and Natural Resources. The key success of the INRMP will close coordination efforts between the Directorate of Public Works, the Directorate of Training, and the installation's stakeholders and partners.

Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, Chief of Staff of the Army, said it best: "Environmental responsibility involves all of us. The environmental ethic must be part of how we live and how we train. By working as a team we can preserve both the natural diversity of military training areas and our opportunity to train the way we plan to fight now and in the future."

BBB cautions about IRA fraud

Better Business Bureau

Many people pledge each New Year to set aside more funds to provide for a secure retirement. If you're among them, the Better Business Bureau (BBB) cautions you to be on the lookout for ads and solicitations that claim certain types of investments for Individual Retirement Accounts (IRA) are "IRS-approved" or "IRA-approved."

According to the Federal Trade Commission, investors are receiving misleading sales pitches for the specific IRA investments via the telephone, the mail and the Internet. These solicitations claim that certain investments have been "approved" for IRAs. The fraudulent promoter tries to convince the consumer that the investment is safe, can be used for IRAs, and, that the investment has been reviewed and approved by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS).

That is not the case. Many consumers are confused by the role of the IRS when it comes to IRAs. The IRS issues letters to IRA sponsors, trustees and custodians certifying that they are in compliance with requirements concerning investor rights, account administration and standards that allow contributions to be deductible. But the IRS does not:

- •review or approve investments;
- •advise people on how to invest their IRAs;
- •endorse any investments; or
- •issue statements that an investment in an IRA is "protected" because the IRS has approved a particular trustee or custodian.

While many investment offers are legitimate, the BBB advises consumers to carefully examine each one, before committing to anything check with your state securities regulator to make sure the investment and the person selling it are registered.

If you have a question or complaint about IRA investment opportunities call the BBB, the FTC at (202)-FTC-HELP, the Securities and Exchange Commission at (800)-SEC-0330 or the North American Securities Administrators Association at (202)-737-0900.

For more information about investment opportunities, visit the BBB's web site at www.bbb.org.

What's happening at Dexter Elementary School ...

Program develops qualities

Dexter Elementary School

Courage, caring, helpful action and persistence are qualities being developed by first and third graders in a special new program sponsored by Dexter's School Home Partnership Council. This new program is GIRAFFE, a nationally acclaimed character education program with a unique twist.

GIRAFFE lessons use real heroes, people who are sticking their necks out for the well-being of others, as role models to help children identify the characteristics of courage, caring, service and responsibility.

"GIRAFFE's simple theme of 'sticking one's neck out for others' is already catching on among these youngsters," commented Principal Vicki Rogers. "Through a study of real heroes, students have identified certain qualities which make that a person a giraffe."

Susan Cissel, one of the parent volunteers teaching GIRAFFE, further explained, "After completing the program, students will have the skills to integrate GIRAFFE qualities into their own lives." And that is exactly what students are doing as they design and carry out their very own service projects.

According to parent volunteer Wendy Taylor, GIRAFFE teaches children how to find substantive heroes and it empowers them to go out in the world and make a positive difference. "Its focus on the courage of ordinary people doing extraordinary deeds is worthwhile. I think it encourages kids to be caring leaders of tomorrow," noted parent Janet Colunga, a volunteer in the GIRAFFE program.

The first and third graders are now making tracks around Dexter as they become GIRAFFES within their community. A part of that responsibility is to do a service project. Their first project is an Arbor Day ceremony in honor of hero Lynn Harp, Dexter's recently retired Media Specialist and an active environmentalist.

The tree, planted on the grounds of the school which Harp served so faithfully, will be an enduring remembrance of her love, courage and devotion to the Fort Benning community.

"We introduce children to human GIRAFFES ... men, women and children who have taken positive action to make the world a better place," said parent co-teacher Mary Ascevedo. And, parent Vanessa Crosby added, "Our children are learning to look outward, to ask themselves "Who is a positive role model in my community?" and then to look inward to ask themselves, "How can I be a role model in my community?"

These students are indeed wasting no time as they make tracks. You will soon be hearing about their next service project slated for the months of March and April. Plan to join this enthusiastic group of youngsters as they conduct a Book Drive to benefit the Children's Room of Fort Benning's Sayers Library.

Workshop empowers parents

Dexter Elementary School

Partners-in-Print, a national parent involvement program, is designed to educate and empower parents as partners in their child's literacy development. "Its goal is to bring parents and educators together in developing confident, successful readers," explained Principal Vicki Rogers.

"Through a series of evening workshops, parents learn strategies to help their children become better readers, and," Rogers continued, "the best part of it all is that they get the opportunity to practice the strategies with their children during the workshop."

A quote from the Barham family sums up the feelings of many Dexter families regarding this new School-Home Partnership initiative: "This was fun, and allowed us to spend quality time with our children!"

"We have an enthusiastic team of parents working with the program," noted Peggy Gindville, Teacher Coordinator of the program. "We have completed two workshops and Dexter families have consistently given high ratings to each session. Their only regret is that sessions aren't long enough!"

School Board representative and parent volunteer, Barbara Reeves, noted, "This is a perfect example of how School-Home Partnerships should work! We are having fun and learning at the same time!"

One parent noted that Partners-in-Print inspired him to read to his child each day and equipped him with ways to do it. For example, sessions show parents how to introduce a book, what questions to ask, and how to use the illustrations to develop understanding of the text.

Another parent commented that these sessions helped her to develop more open-ended questions as she discussed a book with her child.

"But more importantly," noted Rogers, "is the fact that families are having fun reading together."

"The beautiful part of this program," commented Gindville, "is that parents become co-teachers in the learning process. In our case, parents are teaching the sessions to other parents, and having fun as they go."

Rogers concluded, "Dexter School is greatly indebted to our Partners-in-Print Parent Team ... Lori Moriarity, Barbara Reeves, Colleen Sullivan, Wendy Taylor and Karen Walters, who conduct workshop sessions in the program. Our next workshop is scheduled for March 11."

Take God's presence with you

Chaplain (Capt.) James K. McNeely
Ist Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade

Recently, I was walking at the University of Notre Dame in Indiana. I entered the Sacred Heart Basilica where silence permeated the beautiful church.

reflections

I sat down in one of the pews, knelt and prayed. After I finished my prayers, I sat quietly for a moment to just enjoy the beauty around me. I looked at the gorgeous stained glass windows which artistically told the stories of the scriptures— especially those of the Virgin Mary. The colors seemed bright, even though there was little sunshine to help illuminate them.

I also caught a scent of incense used in the daily services. High above the alter was a huge light which symbolized the presence of God. As I bathed in this beauty around me, I reflected on how often I fail to notice the small but important gifts of beauty and joy God gives me each day.

The Army is full of activity. All of us, including chaplains, are rewarded for our work. There is nothing wrong with labor. We are an important part of this great nation. Our mission as Soldiers compel us to train and work hard. Our survival in combat may depend on our labor now. Career issues center on our work and performance. But make no mistake about it, we are important for more than our capacity to fire a weapon or lead Soldiers. Our value as human beings centers on our sacred place as God's children. We are special because God has chosen us to be!

At times, I have blamed the Creator for problems in my life. Like the great spiritual persons, I have felt God was distant. However, I have gotten through these crises by realizing that God is all around me. The best way to discover this reality is to pause and be aware of my surroundings and my heart. Meditation of this type certainly runs counter to our Operation Tempo, but it can be done and the spiritual rewards are incredible.

The next time you are in a line at the Commissary, Post Exchange or shopping mall, pause and look around you. See if you can discover God's little love notes to you. Maybe you will see God in the smile of an infant. Maybe an elderly couple will be holding hands in the line. Or perhaps, you will simply remember you are blessed even to have a place like this to shop. Whatever it may be, be thankful and experience God's love.

Eventually, I had to leave Sacred Heart Basilica. Other matters of life needed my attention, but I experienced God in those brief moments. So while I did need to leave, the peace and joy I felt allowed me to take Sacred Heart Basilica with me. I hope you can take God's presence with you, too.

Parenting teens can be tough job

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life ministries Center

Being a parent is a tough job. Try being a teenager! Teens growing up today face far more pressure and temptation than when you and I were their age. You, as a parent, may have trouble understanding or talking with your teen; it is like they're living in a completely different world. But remember, it is not an easy task being a moral, "just-say-no- to-premarital-sex" teen in today's environment.

While peers play a huge role in influencing your teen, do not think for one moment that they do not want your input and guidance. This includes the area of sexuality. A study done a few years ago by the Search Institute found "... among adolescents as a whole, the overwhelming preference for someone to whom they would most like (emphasis mine) to turn for help and advice with questions about sex was their parents."

Josh McDowell wrote in his book, How to Help Your Child Say "No" to Sexual Pressure, "It takes a secure child to say "no" to pressure, and a great deal of that security comes from knowing that the relationship between Mom and Dad is secure." McDowell goes on to say, "Kids need intimacy and love. They should be learning it and getting it at home, beginning with Mom and Dad's secure relationship. But when they can't find it there, they go looking elsewhere, often in a sexual relationship."

Many teenagers fail to bring something to their parents because Mom and Dad get so upset that they increase the guilt. It is easy to be loving when a child is loving, cooperative and obedient. But we must display unconditional love for those times when our children are just the opposite. When we do, we make all the difference in the world in how our kids relate to us. Children need to know beyond a shadow of a doubt that Mom and Dad love them without strings, that Mom and Dad will not berate them when they make wrong decisions, that Mom and Dad forgive and that Mom and Dad are on their side.

Building this loving and forgiving relationship with your children will create an atmosphere that can make all the difference in their saying "yes" or "no" to the tremendous temptations and pressure they experience on an almost daily basis.

For more information on effective family relationships, contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760.

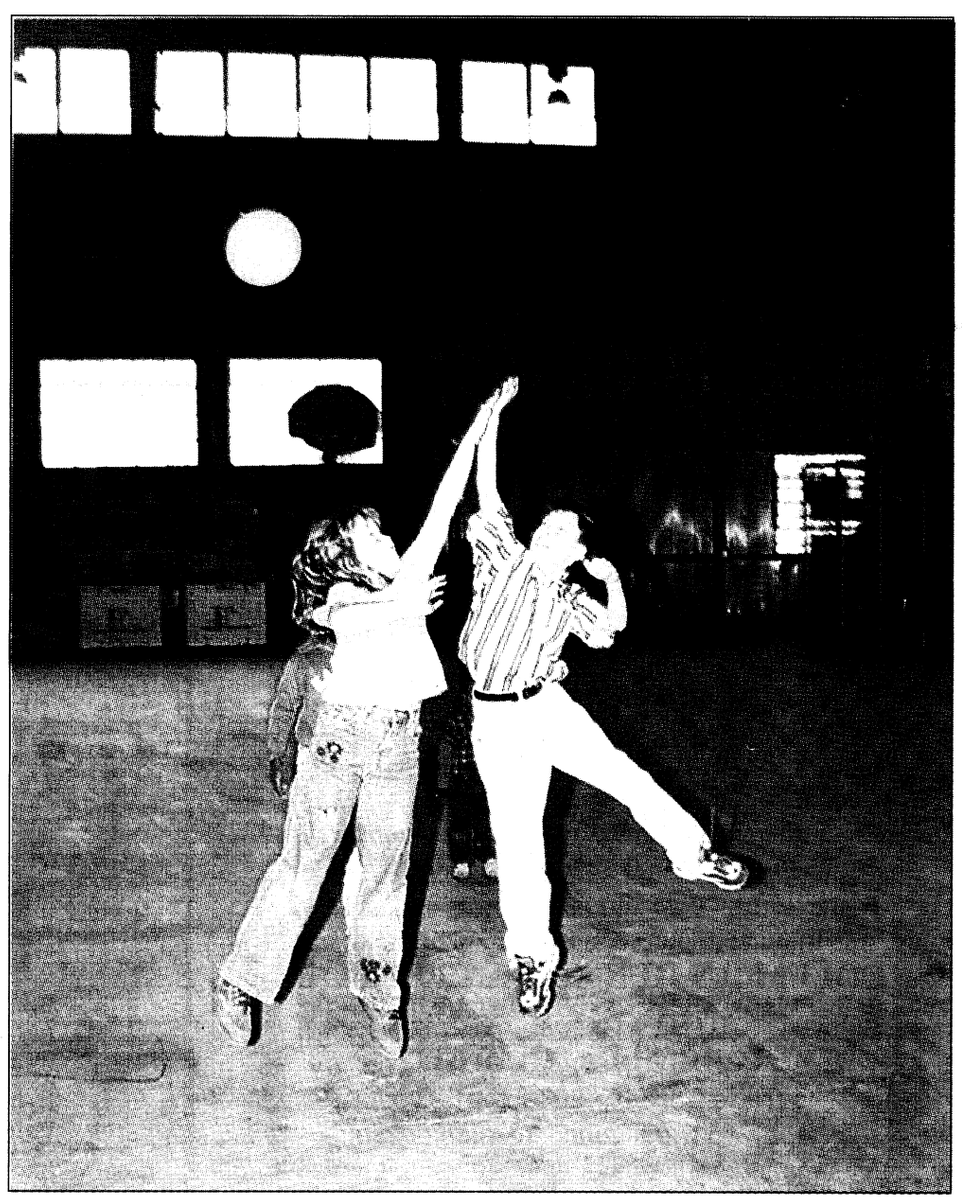
The second game in the division saw the Pistons shut out the Tigers 8-0. Kyle Edwards came on strong, contributing 6 points to the Pistons team total of 8. In the 8- to 9-year-old division, the Laker's Dewaughn Brackens contributed 8 points to the team's 22-8 win over the Warriors. James Braddy led the Warriors in scoring with 4 points.

The Tarheels beat the Rockets during the second game 14-8. Daren Waters became the team's high scorer for the second time with 6 points. Luis Flores led the Rockets with 7 points.



In 10- to 11-year-old action the Celtics triumphed over the Magics 27-25. Gerald Roberson led the Celtics with 15 points and Xavier Shaw put 8 on the board for the Magics.

The Warriors topped the Lakers 11-8 during the second 10-to 11-year-old game. Terrell Batside led the Warriors as the team's top scorer for the second time this season with 7 points. Michael Aaron was a one-man scoring machine and hit for all 8 of the Lakers points.

MACH brings Relay for Life to Benning

Special to the Bayonet©

Everyone is touched by cancer in some way throughout their life span. Fighting for survival along with a long road to recovery, if possible, or losing the battle against cancer is how family members, friends, co-workers or acquaintances effected by cancer will spend the rest of their lives.

Cancer is non-discriminatory and it's victims are people of all ages, religion, ethnic background and economic standing. Relay for Life (RFL) is an American Cancer Society team event that is held in communities across the country to fight cancer.

"This annual fundraiser began in 1984 and is an unique activity that offers an opportunity for communities to take up the fight against cancer," said Maj. Judith Lee, adult nurse practitioner at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) and military liaison for the event. "The relay gives Soldiers and personnel a chance to support people with cancer and helps provide funds that are needed to find new treatments and possible cures."

According to Lee, 10- to 12-member teams begin fundraising prior to the event and commit one member of the team to be on the relay track for the duration of the RFL which begins at 7:00 p.m. and continues until noon the following day.

The relay honors cancer survivors during the first lap and is a vehicle that maximizes participation in the fight against cancer at a local level.

More than 1,800 community events with a projected participation of 700,000 people will raise millions of dollars which provides for cancer research, medical education, support groups for cancer victims and information on treatment and diagnosis of all types of cancer to cancer patients, families and the medical community.

"MACH has formed a team and is hoping to inspire other organizations on Fort Benning to join in this unique opportunity to fight cancer," Lee said. "This fundraiser involves the act of giving along with the spirit of volunteerism and is held for all the right reasons."

For information on the RFL or to schedule a unit briefing, contact Lee at 544-1272. Team packets are available from Steph Hargrave at 660-7028 or from Alecia Henderson at 649-5281.

Relay for Life is slated to begin at 7:00 p.m. May 14 and continues until noon the following day at Kinnett Stadium.

Top gunners raise money for American Cancer Society

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Although their goal for next year is to make the 2000 Olympics, this year the goal for the shotgun shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is to raise money to help find a cure for cancer.

The 14 Army marksmen will be joining shooting enthusiasts of Columbus to help the American Cancer Society reach its 1999 goal of raising $100,000 in its eight annual Sporting Clays Classic.

Last year, 400 competitors and 500 spectators raised $78,000 making it one of the Cancer Society biggest fund-raisers in the country.

Besides the Army shotgunners, competitors will be from Total System Services, AFLAC, the Hughston Clinic, Swift Denim, Colonial Bank and Trust and St. Francis Hospital.

The sporting clays tournament will be conducted March 20 at Buckland Farms, which is located on highway 355 in Juniper, Ga. The shooting starts at 8 a.m. and is followed by a reception and awards dinner at 5 p.m. The farm, owned by Brent Buck of Buck Industries, will host the sporting event, which is the fastest growing outdoor sports event in America.

Throughout the day, there will be food provided by Country's Barbecue, sporting vendors, games, prizes and trick-shooting demonstration by two-time Olympians Todd Graves and Bret Erickson of the Army Marksmanship Unit, which is tentatively scheduled for around 4 p.m.

"We are very excited that we'll have Bret and Todd to do their trick shooting demonstration, we appreciate the support of the Army Marksmanship unit," said Duke Miller, president of the American Cancer Society of Columbus-Fort Benning.

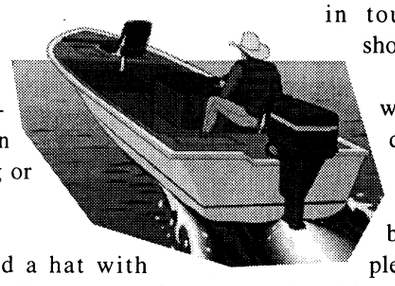
Bret E. Erickson prepares for his upcoming trick shooting demonstration to raise money for the cancer society.

"We've participated in the tournament every year since it started in Juniper about four years ago," Erickson said. "It's for a very good cause, which hits home for me because my dad died last summer from cancer."

The fund raising tournament will be open to the public.



Boaters need emergency items onboard

Escape to the Outdoors

Experienced boaters know there are some things that you really shouldn't leave the launch ramp without. Some of this experience has been learned the hard way by a ruined trip that could have been just fine if only the right gear had been available.

Here's what Jay Yelas, a leading contender for Bass Angler of the Year honors and a member of Yamaha Outboards and Skeeter Boats pro staff, recommends you should keep in your boat at all times.

Yelas found the suddenly changing cold weather to be a major factor when he won the Bass Central Invitational in Missouri last year, his third major tournament win. By planning ahead to have the right kind of warm clothing onboard, when it began to snow and the wind chill factor dropped to five degrees, he was able to continue in the tournament safely and comfortably.

Yelas offered some tips on must-have items in planning a boating or fishing trip.

For yourself

•Keep onboard a hat with sunglasses, along with some good sunscreen. Reapply the sunscreen often. Sunglasses should have UV screening.

•Insect repellent, no matter what time of year it is.

•Lip balm with sunscreen.

•Rain gear — Always keep a plastic poncho for everyone on the boat. Getting soaked is no treat, and you never know when a storm will blow up.

•Radio — Depending on where you are, a marine radio or CB radio can help you stay in touch with the shore.

•Drinking water — Never drink alcohol while operating a boat, but bring plenty of water in case you're delayed getting back to shore for any reason. If you're out in the sun for long periods, your body needs the water.

For the boat

•Tow rope, in case someone needs help getting back to the dock.

•Quart of outboard motor oil. If your motor is a four-stroke model, make certain you use only certified four-stroke motor oil, never two-stroke oil and vice versa.

•Coast Guard-approved fire extinguisher. Check the gauge to see if it's still good.

•Spare boat plug.

•Owner manuals — Having your manuals aboard can help solve problems quickly or remind you of the different features your boat and motor offer.

These things really don't take up that much room on the boat and having them along may save the day sometime. With any luck, you will never need most of them, but don't take a chance. Be prepared.

Army Secretary visits post

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera was the keynote speaker Wednesday afternoon at a luncheon hosted by the Association of the United States Army and the Columbus Rotary Club at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center.

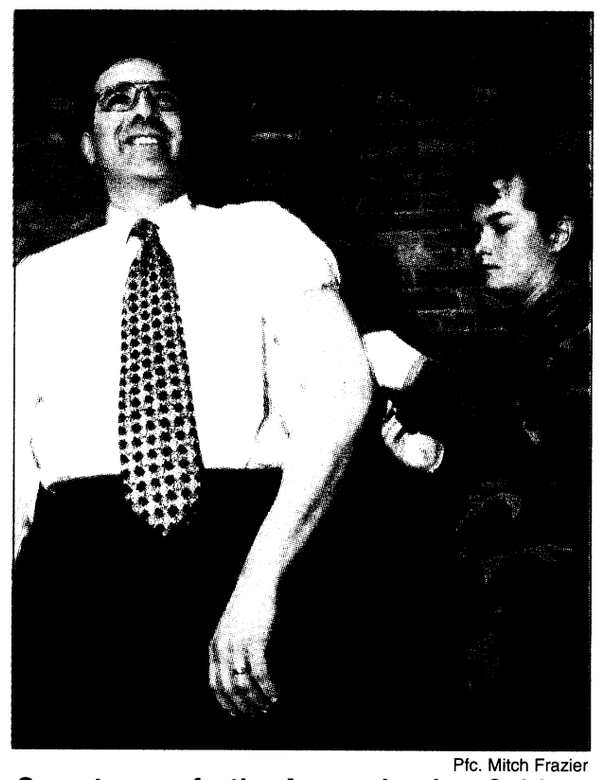
The Army's top civilian addressed more than 400 Soldiers and civilians on the Army's essential role in executing national military strategy and the people that make that process a successful one.

"The Army is not only vital to defending the nation and our interests around the world," he said, "but because it is a people-based force, it is a force that is supporting U.S. leadership in this post-cold war world in the way that no other force can."

Caldera said Fort Benning personnel play a vital role in making that spread of U.S. leadership abroad possible through its multiple deployments to foreign countries around the globe.

"On any given day we have more than 30,000 Soldiers deployed to over 70 countries, connecting with those countries in the way only ground force people can do," he said. "Whether responding to a natural disaster in Central America or standing guard in the (Persian) Gulf, our Soldiers underscore U.S. presence, leadership and U.S. resolve in the world."

Calling those deployed Soldiers ambassadors of U.S. doctrine, Caldera personally commended those who have participated in overseas deployments and added that their participation has allowed for resolve in areas such as battle-tattered Bosnia.



"Our Soldiers model the role of a professional military under democratic control," Caldera said during his 30-minute address. "In the face-to-face encounters with the militaries of other nations, American Soldiers repeatedly prove themselves to be a potent force in our nation's arsenal for democracy and freedom."

Caldera also cited Fort Benning's participation in shaping the international environment by conducting the training of more than 1,500 international students annually.

"The training these students receive allows them to appreciate the resources that our nation makes available to our military, because we don't want them to underestimate the tremendous capability that our Army has," he said. "They get to see the excellence of our Soldiers, the professionalism of our leaders and the rigors of our training."

Although Caldera cited the need for excellence in training for both the highest caliber of American ground Soldiers and foreign students, he also noted the need for constant force projection like that which is conducted at Fort Benning.

AER hosts kick-off

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The Army Emergency Relief (AER) program will host its annual kick-off celebration at 2 p.m., Monday at Infantry Hall in Classroom 9.

The celebration marks the beginning of the two-month fundraiser for AER. AER is a non-profit organization founded in 1942 by the Secretary of War and the Army Chief of Staff. It was incorporated to provide emergency financial assistance to eligible personnel in their time of need.

Since AER's start, it has assisted more than 2.5 million people with more than $610 million.

Fort Benning's AER office helped more than 800 people by providing more than $700,000 in 1998, according to AER Director Al Deane.

"We help eligible personnel with their mortgage or rent, food, utilities, essential travel expenses in regards to emergency leave, emergency transportation and major vehicle repairs. These are just a few categories AER offers financial assistance for," Deane said. "We hold these campaigns annually to replenish the funds we have given to others throughout the year."

Those who qualify for assistance can receive an interest-free loan, a grant or part loan and part grant. The loans are set up to be paid back over a minimum of 12 months and grants (a monetary gift) are given when repayment of a loan would cause undue hardship.

However, the AER would not be able to assist eligible personnel if it were not for the voluntary contributions from active and retired Soldiers, repayment of AER interest-free loans and other unsolicited contributions.

"This is a Soldier's organization; no one knows when something may happen and it is good to be able to come to the AER center when in financial need," Deane said.

So, what makes a person eligible for assistance? Assistance is available for all active duty Soldiers, single or married, and their dependents. Soldiers in the National Guard, U.S. Army Reserve Soldiers who have been on

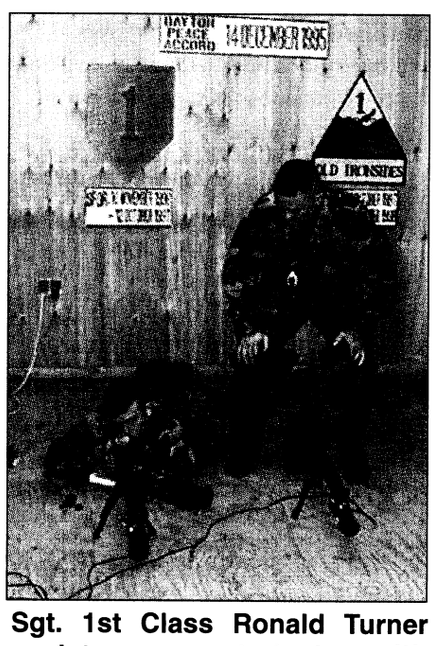
DPW wins award

Michelle Harvey
Special to the Bayonet

The Department of Public Works has been named the recipient of a 1999 Keep Georgia Beautiful award.

The department's "Follow Me" Recycling Program won first place in the Reduce, Reuse, Recycling category, which recognize agencies with the most successful recycling and waste reduction programs.

"The program promotes saving our resources and making a better environment, not only for us, but for our children and our grandchildren," said Solid Waste Manager Walter Nichols. "The program was set up to encourage recycling as the preferred method of waste management."



Wendy Duffy, who is an environmental specialist for the department, credits the efforts of the entire department, for winning the award. "I've always noticed what Walter has done with the program and all the teamwork this department has put forth in the 'Follow Me' Recycling Program."

The recycling program has been in existence since the '80s. Since then several components within the program such as the Material Recovery Facility (MRF) and others have improved the way of life in this community.

"It's a very comprehensive program," said Nichols. "Also, it's not just the the people at home who participate, but people in the workplace and at the schools are also part of the success of the program."

In 1994, Fort Benning disposed of more than 44,000 tons of waste in landfills. However, only 15,000 tons of waste was disposed of in 1998 because 37,000 tons of the waste was recycled that year.

Marksmen train Soldiers in Bosnia

Sgt. 1st Class Ronald Turner
U.S. Army Sniper School

Seven Fort Benning Soldiers and one civilian employee recently returned from Bosnia and Fort Hood, Texas, after training Soldiers on advanced marksmanship skills, counter-sniper operations and selected fieldcraft skills.

After a call in late November from 1st Calvary Division Headquarters (Forward) in Tuzla, Bosnia, the U.S. Infantry Center assembled a team to provide critical training needed to the field.

Lacking trained snipers throughout his deployed task forces and at home station, the Commanding General for the 1st Calvary Division identified a requirement to develop a counter-sniper capability at company level to counter hostile individuals or factions using civil disturbances to threaten U.S. operations in Bosnia.

Fort Benning's Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore directed the assembly of a team of experts to answer the need as soon as possible.

Due to its ownership of the U.S. Army Sniper School, the 29th Infantry Regiment pulled together a mobile training team (MTT) with a large contingent of expert marksmen from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU), Ranger Training Brigade (RTB) and Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab (DBBL) in addition to the Sniper School cadre.

The team of experts assembled in December and began preparing the program of instruction (POI) and lesson plans.

Concurrently, Staff Sgt. Harold Cady, a U.S. Army Sniper School instructor, and Lt. Col. Gordon Davis, 2nd Bn.,

commentary

Throughout our lives we have learned about women who made an impact on society. Names like Susan B. Anthony and Rosa Parks stand out in all of our history books. However, there are many others who opened doors to new frontiers to shape our lives.

Women such as Gertrude Elion and Rosalyn Yalow.

Nobel Prize-winning biochemist Gertrude Elion brought the medical field to new heights. Through drugs she created, Elion transformed leukemia from a once fatal disease to a disease with an 80 percent survival rate. She was also employed as the only woman in a top position for a leading pharmaceutical company during World War II.

Children today who are suffering from the devastating effects of leukemia continue to survive, thanks to a drug she developed.

Elion is also credited with developing the first drug to attack viruses. This research led the way for the development of the AIDS drug, AZT. In the 1950s, Elion also developed two effective cancer treatments.

And the medical community would not be where it is today without the dedication of another Nobel Prize winner, Rosalyn Yalow.

Not only did Yalow change the face of medicine, she is credited with beginning the field of neuroendocrinology which allows police investigators to test bodies for poison after death to determine murder.

Yalow also revolutionized disease control. Unborn babies are screened for Spina Bifida and other serious diseases, and modern blood banks can detect diseases in donated blood before the disease is transmitted to patients because of her research.

Yalow was the first woman educated in the U.S. to win a Nobel Prize.

These historic women are two who have led the way for others while making valuable contributions to society.

I applaud the work of those who campaigned for my right to vote and defended our constitution, but there are countless other female pioneers who are left in the shadows when we learn about our history.

These women symbolize the very meaning of independence. They made discoveries and advancements in a time when it was primarily a man's working world.

So, as we look back on the women who dedicated their lives to advancement, take a moment to remember the names of these and other unsung heroes who have changed the world.

36th Eng. Grp. reveals secret to Build Hope success

To the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) Soldiers who deployed to Nicaragua in support of Hurricane Mitch disaster relief-humanitarian assistance, their families and rear detachment personnel:

Now that we have all returned home safely and are reunited with friends and loved ones, I want to pass on my thanks to those who deployed on Operation Fuerte Apoyo, the rear detachment and family members. It was a privilege commanding Task Force (TF) Build Hope (Nicaragua) and deploying with such a wonderful team.

As you will recall, elements of the 36th Engineer Group were called upon to lead the U.S. effort in assisting the people of Nicaragua. Let me share with you some of the successes of TF Build Hope.

The Engineer Task Force (TF 46) completed 125 kilometers of road rehabilitation, which included installing 24 culvert systems, and transported over 105,000 gallons of water for a town while simultaneously upgrading the city's water system. They also helped repair a town's water main, repaired two bridges, diverted two rivers and built causeways; performed minor repairs to a medical clinic, and built and furnished a 5,600 square foot clinic.

The Medical Task Force (MTF 261) conducted humanitarian assistance missions at 26 locations. They treated 4,240 Nicaraguan patients, performed 47 surgeries, pulled 152 teeth, conducted 248 eye exams, sprayed 537 houses and buildings and 1,781 acres, vaccinated 3,634 dogs and conducted professional seminars for over 860 people.

The Logistical Task Force 189 supplied the force by executing 326 convoys resulting in 301,077 kms driven and 2,422 tons of material moved. They processed over 5,500 Class IX requisitions and produced 1.5 million gallons of potable water. Task Force 189 and the aviation detachment (7-101 Avn) also moved 681.5 tons of humanitarian supplies to people in need. The postal team processed 19.3 tons of mail for our forces. Needless to say, we enjoyed receiving mail.

Contracting negotiated over 160 contracts, infusing about $1.5 million dollars into the local economy. In addition to meeting mission requirements, units conducted numerous cultural exchanges that contributed to fostering a positive rapport with the local population.

Our accomplishments would not have been possible without the untiring support of the rear detachment, family support groups and friends. Those who supported us from the rear are the real heroes.

You get none of the glory, but experienced all the worries and the many challenges of keeping things at home on an even keel. I thank you for your support and untiring commitment.

You made it possible for the deployed Soldier to focus, without distraction, on the mission at hand.

This significantly contributed to high Soldier morale, tremendous work output and an outstanding safety record. I hope you are as proud of the accomplishments of the total team — deployed Soldiers, families and rear detachment — as I am.

Over 20 years have passed since there has been any significant U.S. military presence in Nicaragua. For historical reasons, some Nicaraguans were skeptical of our return. The performance, discipline and caring attitudes of Soldiers changed all that; the people of Nicaragua were saddened by our departure.

Your professionalism has resulted in a number of favorable diplomatic and military initiatives. The normalization of mil-to-mil relations, which is now in process, would not have occurred without us.

Together we made history. Thanks to all for making this a highly successful deployment. TF Build Hope — People Helping People —HOOAH!

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

you ever wonder?

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Where did common military traditions come from? Although Soldiers hold some of these practices dear, many do not know the origin of them. The Bayonet will attempt to put some of these questions aside and enlighten the curious minds who may have often wondered why things are the way they are.

This week's topic is on unit mascots. Many units have them, but why and how they chosen the mascot they represent themselves with?

Mascots have long played roles in military units. One longstanding mascot tradition is carried by the 27th Infantry Regiment, the "Wolfhounds," at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii. The Regiment's 1st Battalion has shared its quarters with a Borzoi, "Kolchak," for many years.

The present Kolchak is the 11th in a line of Borzoi or Russian Wolfhounds, to serve as the unit's mascot.

Unlike his 10 predecessors, who were predominantly white dogs, Kolchak 11 sports some brown patches. He assumed his role of unit mascot at the tender age of six months on March 20, 1997, the day his sire, Kolchak 10, was medically retired.

In 1918, the 27th Infantry Regiment deployed to Vladivostok, Siberia, on a secret mission to protect Allied stores along the Trans-Siberian Railway. By the time they returned to Hawaii in April 1920, the unit had earned the nickname, "Wolfhounds," In recognition, the unit obtained Kolchak 1 in 1929.

The mascot is named for Adm. Aleksandr Vassilyevich Kolchak. Kolchak, an anti-Bolshevik leader was captured and executed in January 1920. His arrest and execution marked the end of a civil war.

Borzois are large, powerful sighthounds with an aristocratic bearing, little sense of territory and well-developed chasing instincts. Bred to hunt game on the open steppes of Russia, they were used to chase steppe hares and foxes. As their common name, Russian Wolfhound, implies they were also used to chase down wolves.

A large, swift dog with the heart and strength to chase and hold wolves. A fitting mascot for an Infantry regiment with a proud history.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera and Ranger Training Brigade Commander Col. Frank Helmick watch the Rangers in Action demonstration.

Secretary: Caldera offers hope

"Fort Benning is a principal power projection platform for our Army," he said. "It is also a mobilization station which has enabled us to play a vital role in mobilizing, training and deploying Soldiers from our total Army in support of missions like the one in Bosnia."

Nearly 12,000 Soldiers, mostly Reserve component, have deployed from Fort Benning to Bosnia to make that operation begin, he said.

Caldera also noted that those 12,000 Soldiers are only a virtual handful of the Reserve Component force that now augment the strained active Army in serving the multiple campaigns the Army is involved in.

"There is no question that the high pace of operations we have experienced, coupled with 14 years of declining budget, have placed our Army and our forces under strain," he said. "It is becoming increasingly a challenge to maintain a high state of readiness even as we attempt to accelerate the pace of modernization and be able to take care of our people."

Caldera did offer hope for the Army, though, as he introduced President Clinton's new budget which would provide an additional $12 billion for defense spending in fiscal year 2000.

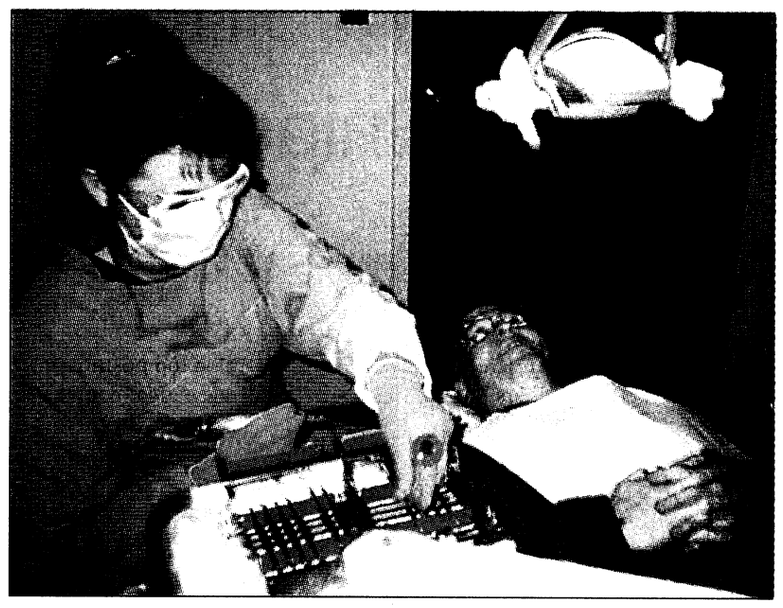
"This is the first sustained increase in defense spending in a decade," he said. "And that sends the right message to our most precious resource, our Soldiers. This lets them know that they will be rewarded appropriately for their actions at every level."

Prior to leaving the convention center, Caldera reinforced equality at every level by being the first person Wednesday to receive an anthrax vaccination, a shot that Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade received later that afternoon.

Enroute to Lawson Army Airfield for his return flight to Washington, the Secretary took time out to visit with Rangers from Ranger Training Brigade and see a firepower demonstration by the 29th Infantry Regiment at Red Cloud Range.

Students receive training

Michelle Harvey
Special to the Bayonet©



Properly trained dental hygienists are in demand in the world of dentistry.

With this in mind, the U.S. Army Dental Activity (DENTAC) has allowed students from the Columbus Technical Institute's dental hygiene program to receive hands-on training at Love Dental Clinic on Fort Benning.

"There is a large need for this type of dental hygiene training because there is a need for well-trained dental hygienists in this community," said Dr. Katherine Kaufman, program manager of the dental hygiene program at Columbus Tech.

This partnership between Columbus Tech and Fort Benning was formed because the students needed a place to fulfill clinical hours for graduation.

"Our facilities are currently under construction and are expected to be finished next quarter. But in the meantime, we needed somewhere for our students to see patients," said Kaufman.

Samantha Mull, a student graduating from Columbus Technical Institute's Dental Hygiene Program helps a patient.

"No place was quite as convenient as Fort Benning, where the students can see a diversity of patients," she said.

Although the students have the opportunity to practice what they learned in their classes, the clinic also benefits because the program allows the clinic to see an even larger number of patients than before.

"The students help a great deal because it allows the clinic to open up many hygiene appointments that may not have been available if the students were not here to help," said Kaufman.

DENTAC Commander Col. Bruce Clem also said the students are an asset to the clinic.

"We have better access to provide better dental care for our Soldiers than before because the students are here for their training," he said. "The support training for additional people for hygiene is a plus for all dentists everywhere."

Twelve students from the program spend four to five hours a week in a supervised, professional environment, and provide dental care for the Fort Benning

Bosnia: Snipers train on foreign terrain

29th Inf. Regt. commander, conducted an in-country reconnaissance and face-to-face coordination with the 1st Cav. Div. and 1st Brigade Combat Team leaders to plan the majority of the support details. These details included conducting a MTT in a foreign land with ongoing operations, limited training areas and thousands of unmarked mines. A subsequent reconnaissance was conducted at Fort Hood, Texas, with 2nd Brigade Combat Team leaders.

The final POI consisted of advanced marksmanship training, counter-sniper, Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT) operations, select fieldcraft exercises and skill sustainment training (to be conducted post-MTT).

The training was primarily aimed at preparing some 30 Soldiers in each brigade combat team to be advanced marksmen for each of the deployed (or to be deployed) commanders, company teams and scout platoons. It also provided valuable familiarization and employment training for task force commanders, company commanders and scout platoon leaders.

The U.S. Army Infantry School team consisted of eight instructors and one civilian from Fort Benning (of which all were sniper qualified or had extensive marksmanship experience). The three Soldiers from the Sniper School included Sgt. 1st Class Ronald Turner, Staff Sgt. Leroy Brink and Staff Sgt. Harold Cady. The team also included Staff Sgt. Grant Singley, Sgt. Emil Praslick and Sgt. Kyle Ward from USAMU, Staff Sgt. Isacc Ragusa from the 4th Ranger Training Battalion and Jerry Barricks from DBBL.

Students collect data during an exercise on a range in Bosnia. A mobile training team from Fort Benning was deployed to Bosnia to train the students.

The team departed Lawson Army Airfield Jan. 12 enroute to Bosnia. During their stay in Bosnia, the team first trained 30 Soldiers from the 1st Brigade Combat Team and two Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division at Eagle Base in Tuzla for three days.

The team then headed to the southwest sector of Glamoc, Bosnia, for the hands-on portion of the training including marksmanship and fieldcraft exercises.

According to Brink, the training became more challenging at this location because mines had not yet been recovered and training outside the base camp was restricted because of the possibility of hostility from the local population.

The training in Bosnia concluded Jan. 30 and the team then headed to Fort Hood.

When the team arrived in Texas, Sgt. Robert DeWitt, an experienced gunsmith with USAMU and Staff Sgt. Christopher Lentz and Staff Sgt. Jeremy Sullivan, both of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, joined the team.

During the two weeks at Fort Hood, the team conducted basic classroom instruction from marksmanship to fieldcraft exercises including counter-sniper, target detection, range estimation and vehicle and equipment recognition.

The final test for the students was to engage key targets with precision fire under realistic conditions. Soldiers had to prove they could engage a target at an unknown range with precision fire on command, which is what the Sniper School refers to as "Final Shot." All teams passed their final exercise.

Shooters help train

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Three service rifle shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) spent 20 days living in a tent, subsisting on T-rations in Bosnia training snipers for the U.S. Army as part of a Fort Benning Mobile Training Team. The team also consisted of personnel from the Ranger Training Brigade, the 29th Infantry Regiment and the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab.

From Jan. 12 to 31, USAMU shooters Staff Sgt. Grant L. Singley, Sgt Emil Praslick III and Sgt. Kyle A. Ward joined the team to help in conducting counter-sniper training in Bosnia.

The team provided advanced marksmanship training, sniping and fieldcraft techniques to 30 Soldiers from the 1st Cavalry Division of Fort Hood, Texas, and two from the 10th Mountain Division of Fort Drum, N.Y., learning how to maintain riot control in an urban setting and create a show of force.

On Glamoc Range, the Soldiers were given training in engaging stationary targets, sniper employment and marksmanship training on the M-24 sniper system, which was prototyped and tested by the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop. They were also given instruction in ballistics in Tuzla amid a landscape dotted with bombed-out buildings and concertina wire.

The service rifle shooters, along with USAMU gunsmith Sgt. Robert B. DeWitt and two Soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment also went to Fort Hood Feb. 1 to 12 to train 30 Soldiers of the 1st Cavalry Division preparing to deploy to Bosnia.

3rd Brigade CALFEX ends in success

2nd Lt. Carl J. LaMonica
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

It was the first week of February when Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), conducted a Combined Live-Fire Exercise (CALFEX) before a large crowd of spectators at Cactus Range. Students from the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, National Guard, Army Reserve and distinguished visitors filled the grandstands.

The participants in the live-fire exercise included elements from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 317th Engineer Battalion, and the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment. Just prior to conducting the CALFEX, all of the key leaders rehearsed their parts one final time at the battalion level back brief under the supervision of Lt. Col. Douglas Lee, commander, 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

After the back brief, all of the units' vehicles were prepared and positioned to start the exercise. The loud speakers were tuned to the Co. A net frequency for everyone to hear the intricate reporting and commands given throughout the exercise. Capt. Dan Wilson, Co. A commander, gave the cue over the net to cross the line of departure (LD). Immediately, sections from first and second platoon raced out of the dark woods like a pack of ravenous wolves to occupy their support by fire position directly in front of the crowd. Like a well-oiled machine, the Bradley Fighting Vehicles (BFV) took turns rolling out of their defilade positions placing deadly 25mm fire on targets of opportunity 1,200 to 2,000 meters away.

Meanwhile, 3rd platoon and a platoon from the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. and the 317th Eng. Bn. moved 2,000 meters away on the left flank. The massive M1 Abrams tanks moved into a second support by fire position. The tanks gave the spectators a big thrill as they began to volley fire their massive cannons. Sparks and metal shrapnel flew from the impact of the 120mm tank rounds into the targeted hulks. Third platoon continued to move toward its objective of clearing a trench line system left and forward of the tanks.

Wilson gave the order to the BFVs at the first support by fire position to move down to the tank support by fire position. The Bradleys moved with great speed and agility to the tank support by fire position. Once there, the Bradleys suppressed the trench line with hundreds of rounds of 7.62 mm machine gun fire. The deadly wall of fire was placed on the bunkers and trench with great position. This allowed 3rd platoon, directed by 1st Lt. John Foster, to get in position. Once in position, the machine gun fire was lifted. With bayonets fixed, Foster's platoon charged the objective stabbing, shooting, moving and communicating. The trench line and objective was cleared with lightning quick speed.

With the objective cleared, the engineer element moved in safely and placed a mine clearing line charge to clear an avenue of approach for follow on elements to pass by safely. The CALFEX culminated with the earth rumbling detonation of the line charge.

"It shook things up a bit," Foster said.

After the exercise, a display was staged in front of the grandstands consisting of some of the vehicles, as well ask the operating crews questions. The CALFEX provided insight into the detailed coordination that must go into an exercise, and the lethality of today's Army when assets work together to accomplish a mission.

"The CALFEX was an overwhelming success for the Co. A team," Wilson said. "The Alpha 'Apaches' executed to standard, and should be proud of their accomplishments this week."

AMU receives NOPTEL instruction

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

In basic training, all Soldiers are taught "one shot, one kill" when it comes to basic rifle marksmanship training. But in the times of downsizing and doing more with less, that statement becomes more true.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle team has been training drill sergeants, officers and units with the best possible techniques on how to shoot a rifle and be effective with it along with competing in national and interservice competitions.

The Service Rifle Team completed a "Train the Trainer" clinic at Fort Story, Va., for the 10th and 11th Transportation Groups out of Forts Story and Eustis, Va., at the end of November.

"We trained about 150 Soldiers in the two weeks that we were up there," said Sgt. 1st Class Charles W. Herlth Jr., Coach of the Service Rifle Team.

The instructors used several different techniques in training all the Soldiers, Herlth added.

"On the first day, the students were in a classroom working on improving the fundamentals of shooting as well as doing a round robin," Herlth said. "The round robin consisted of improving shooting positions, working on sight alignment with air pistols and using the NOPTEL system."

The NOPTEL system is an electronic shooting system using lasers and prisms along with computers to tell shooters how they are holding their rifle, where the shot hit on the target and the follow through of the shot.

The second day of the clinic is when they put all of the skills together and proved it on the range with a live-fire exercise, Herlth said.

"After the live fire, we took everybody in the class out to qualify with their weapons," Herlth said. "Everyone qualified on the first try and the range control cadre were astonished because this group had never done that before."

The 11th Transportation Group also set a new post record for qualifying after the training, Herlth said.

Officers prepare to take on Ranger School riggers

Infantry Officer Basic Course

On Feb. 4, the Infantry Officer Basic Course Pre-Ranger Class 4-99 graduated at Building 75. Of the original 115 students that began, 84 went on to the Ranger Course on Feb. 8.

From the outset, PRC 4-99 proved to be a difficult undertaking. With gale-force winds and rain during the Army Physical Fitness Test and bad weather up until the last road march, training continued with instructor and student sharing the hardships.

The IOBC Pre-Ranger Course is conducted in two variations, a 10-day and a five-day dependent upon the amount of time available between IOBC graduation and a scheduled Ranger Course start date. The course is physically and mentally challenging and focuses on transitioning Soldiers from the routine daily mentality to the "Ranger mindset."

The Pre-Ranger Course focuses on preparing officers for the rigors of Ranger School and covers the wide spectrum of tasks needed to be successful in Ranger School.

The training schedule emphasizes the combat orders process, patrol base procedures, basic patrolling, ropes and knots, road marching with heavy loads and physical fitness. The key philosophy is attention to detail.

The IOBC Pre-ranger Course is primarily designed for the newly graduated Infantry lieutenant in order to bring him up to speed along with his enlisted counterparts in the Infantry community who attend a Pre-Ranger course prior to attending the Ranger Course here at Fort Benning.

The course is open to a limited number of enlisted Soldiers each cycle and does not require a Soldier to be on orders for the Ranger Course or on a unit Order of Merit list.

Prerequisites include an updated physical, letter of release from your unit addressed to the Commander, Headquarters & Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry. Soldiers will need a rucksack and full LBE, 3 sets of sterile BDUs, and 2 pairs of well broken-in combat boots.

Here are the tentative class dates for the upcoming quarters:

March 16 to 26,
April 26 to May 7,
June 14 to 18,
July 16 to 18,
Aug. 17 to 27,
Sept. 13 to 24

Fort Benning's own win competition

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Two of Fort Benning's own have taken home top honors in an annual award which is calling them the best "resource managers" out of personnel from 16 installations within the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC).

Sandra Babb, senior management analysist and team leader for the Manpower Team, Director of Resource Management (DRM), and Capt. Shawn Bergquist, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment won the Resource Management category of the Functional Chief Representative Special Award (FCR) in the 1998 Annual Resource Management Awards Program.

The Resource Management award recognizes outstanding contributions by individuals who have stimulated the growth and progress of the Army's resource management stewardship. The award is just one category in the more than 15 different categories which recognize both military and civilian practitioners in such areas as budgeting, cost analysis, auditing and accounting and finance.

In order to even be considered for the award an individual's superior must submit an application form detailing the person's achievements and contributions. In both Babb's and Shaw's case they had no idea they were entered in the award and were surprised to find out the good news.

"My boss put me in for this (award) and I had no idea he had done so," Babb said. "This is such a nice surprise. I'm honored and flattered to be considered as the Top Resource Manager for 1998 in the civilian category."

For Babb it was her "can do" attitude and high quality work which made her a prime candidate for the award, said Arne Moi, chief of Manpower Division. He said plain and simple Babb is an extraordinary employee who is always eager to help others.

Babb

Bergquist

"Sandra is probably the premier manpower analysist in TRADOC and she is well deserving of this award," Moi said. "She is just a super person."

Babb who has worked in civil service on Fort Benning for 30 years explained that her job requires her to prepare and maintain the documents which contain the information of all personnel and equipment necessary to train every Soldier on Fort Benning.

She said her basic responsibility is to take care of Soldiers, commanders and directors to ensure they get what they need to carry out their mission.

Babb doesn't take all the credit for her honors though, she attributes much of her success to the others who support her.

"I'm only as good as the people who work for me so I definitely cannot take all the credit for this award," Babb said. "I guess what sets us apart is that we go out of our way to make our customers feel they are important. We try and let them know that we are never to busy to stop and take care of them."

The Resource Management Award is just another award Babb can add to her continually growing pile. Some of her other awards include Superior Civilian Service Award, Commander's Award for Civilian Service and Meritorious Civilian Service Award. Babb has also recently been elected to the Board of Directors for the TIC Federal Credit Union.

On the flip side in the military arena, Bergquist received the honor of being called resource manager of the year for working two years as the 75th Ranger Regiment's comptroller.

According to Bergquist, being regimental comptroller meant he was responsible for overseeing the planning, programming, budget and execution of money for the regimental headquarters and three Ranger Battalions, which are all located on different installations.

He said he worked on a very macro level with an unclassified budget of about 12 million dollars.

Like Babb, Bergquist said it was a team effort that helped him be successful.

"It's very flattering that the command would recommend me for an award," Bergquist said. "I'm very honored and pleased that I got it, but like I said it's a team award, it's not about Shawn Bergquist."

Capt. Michael Nahas, Bergquist's replacement as Regimental comptroller, said Bergquist is most deserving of the award because he developed a creditable reputation which in turn helped build a creditable reputation for the regiment.

"The United States Army Special Operations Command (USASOC, Deputy Chief of Staff, and Resource Management recommended Capt. Bergquist for the below MACOM level Resource Manager of the Year Award based on Bergquist's expertise, professionalism and credibility," Nahas said. "Capt. Bergquist attributes as an honest, credible straight talker earned him and his unit the reputation as one of the best in the area of resource management in USASOC as well as the U.S. Army."

Soldiers conduct mortar training

Capt. Brandon Sanschez
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Sgt. 1st Class Duncan E. Hughes and Staff Sgt. Franklin K. Colleado, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, recently ended a two-week long course on the M23 Mortar Ballistic Computer for the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, currently deployed to Macedonia as part of Task Force Able Sentry.

What makes the training course unique is the format in which it was delivered. The two instructors utilized the televised network at the distance learning center in Infantry Hall to train two different groups of Soldiers on Mortar Fire Direction Basic and Advanced Procedures. This type of training marks a progressive step forward for both Infantry Mortar Instruction and U.S. Army Infantry units deployed worldwide to conduct invaluable sustainment or opportunity training. This training is done with subject matter experts from the U.S. Army Infantry Center who are NCOs from the Infantry Mortar Leaders Course (IMLC) before the unit executes a combat training center rotation and external evaluation or a live-fire exercise.

Col. Richard Rowe, commander, 29th Infantry Regiment said, "This technology has enhanced the 29th's mission of training trainers by allowing our instructors to reach units previously unable to attend on-site training or access subject matter experts. Thus units are able to enhance their overall readiness."

In the future, instructors from IMLC will conduct distance learning training for units deployed to Sinai, Tuzla and Vilsek Germany.

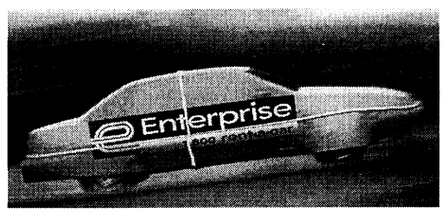
IRRs can apply for training tours

U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Command

"The Army Reserve will train upwards of 3,000 Individual Ready Reservists (IRR) in fiscal year '99, and in the future, we'll be training a lot more," said Col. Richard A. Sackett, the Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans at the U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Command (AR-PERSCOM).

As a result of the fast-paced operational tempo the active component has labored since the fall of the Berlin Wall, the Army has increasingly relied on U.S. Army Reserve IRRs. With no slowdown in sight, the leadership of the Army Reserve is determined to train as many qualified Soldiers as possible this year and beyond.

Any member of the IRR may apply for a 15-day annual training tour through the IRR team at Headquarters, AR-PERSCOM. Tours are available for all ranks and military occupational specialists and areas of concentration at many U.S. Army Forces Command installations and Training and Doctrine Command installations. All training will be in either a primary or secondary MOS.



"This is a great opportunity for recently discharged active-component Soldiers to hone their skills," said Lt. Col. Robert Gable, the IRR Annual Training Team chief. "To go on tour, IRR Soldiers should send our team a completed DA Form 1058-R, and we will do our best to locate a quality training opportunity in the time frame specified by the Soldier."

IRR Soldiers interested in serving a 15-day AT tour should contact Gable or a member of a team at (314) 592-0465, fax (314) 592-0347 or email at robert.gable@arpstl-emh2.army.mil.

Black History Month

Students celebrate 100 great Americans in history

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Almost everyone probably knows the impact such famous black Americans as Martin Luther King Jr. Rosa Parks, Maya Angelou and Michael Jordan have had on history.

But what about the long list of black Americans who haven't been immortalized in the pages of history books? From actors, artists and athletes to politicians, entrepreneurs and freedom fighters, hundreds have left their imprint on the world in one way or another.

For fifth-grade students at Stowers Elementary School, the legacy of 100 black Americans will perhaps be more firmly planted in their minds after a recent assignment and special performance presented by the youngsters.

In honor of Black History Month, Ann Justice, fifth-grade social studies teacher at Stowers, said she had her students pick one influential black American from a list of 100 to research and do an assignment on.

From that assignment, Justice said another idea was spawned — have the children put on a special performance to not only honor the influential black Americans, but also allow the parents to share in their children's discoveries.

So with no more than a couple days preparation, the students got up in front of friends, family and fellow classmates Tuesday to sing, read excerpts from the play Harriet Tubman the Second Moses and show everybody a little of what they've learned.

The presentation also included having each of the 92 students getting up to tell the audience a little something about the person they researched.

Eleven-year-old Cassie Mot picked a woman she said she learned a lot from — freedom fighter and peacemaker Coretta Scott King.

What Mot said she learned from King was to never give up and always be determined in whatever she does.

"I learned that Coretta Scott King did a lot of things in her lifetime even though she wasn't treated fairly," Mot said.

"It's important to learn about the different African Americans in history because many of those people didn't have any special rights, but they still proved they could do things just as well as anyone."

Justice said it is good for the children to learn about many more black American contributors than just those mentioned in the students' history books.

"I think it is important for the students to know that there are a lot of people who helped to make this country what it is, not just the ones our text books are limited to showing us," Justice said.

She went on to say that holding a presentation and inviting the parents out is an opportunity for the students to show their parents what kinds of things they are learning.

"I think parents are glad to know that their children are getting a well-rounded education and this presentation gave us an opportunity to highlight some people who did great things," Justice said. "Hopefully what the children have learned will stick with them and they will remember that in America we are truly a society made up of great people of all colors and races."

Currently crews are preparing to wrap up renovations by spreading 1,400 tons of gravel on the trail's surface.

School board meets, tours

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning School Board held it's monthly meeting at Dexter School Monday.

School board members were first treated to students in Peggy Gindville's Pre-K class who signed a song for the visitors. The members were then given a presentation by principal Vicki Rogers on the many aspects of Dexter, including WDEX, the Dexter television station, the sign language club of which all students are members, and the many ecology clubs throughout the grades. She also talked about Dexters' School-Home Partnership (The Giraffe Program) and the Partners-in-Print program.

Two Dexter ambassadors, students at Dexter, then took the members on a tour of the Mouse House, the computer lab.

The School Board Meeting started off with recognition of the Army Communities of Excellence team being recognized by the schools' officer Col. John Mitchell, who represented Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

Those team members who were presented a coin were:

Judi Ebert, teacher, Faith; Diane Ermi, parent, Faith; Cindy Givens, teacher, Faith; Glenn Hughes, principal, Stowers; Melanie Keating, educational technologist, Wilson School; Philomena Mubangu, parent, Faith; Elaine Perkins, computer assistant; Barbara Reeves, parent, Dexter; Vicki Rogers, principal, Dexter; and Gail Wilson, director of staff development.

"They made an important contribution to the site visit when the evaluation team was here," Mitchell said.

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent, then recognized Dexter kindergarten teacher Earnestine A. Ezekiel for her work with the e-Club. Ezekiel was given a compass pin.

Col. Randy Buck, school board president, told those present about the day and a half of school board training that himself, McMullen, Col. Jim Stone and Barbara Reeves had recently undergone in Atlanta. The focus, Buck said, was to help school boards do better teamwork.

"It was very informative," Reeves told members.

McMullen then presented a proposal, drawn up by President Clinton, to reduce class sizes in grades one, two and three to 18 students too one teacher ratio. This will be spread out over six years. McMullen also gave the statistics for Fort Benning Schools' now: There are 11 classes in Fort Benning Schools currently at an 18 to one ratio, 26 are at 19-23 to one, 14 at 24-25 to one and one at 27 to one. Current accreditation accounts for 28 to one.

McMullen also gave the volunteer report. She reported that the numbers were down a little. Col. Buck saw the positive side in it though.

"It's healthy. Although there are less volunteer hours, there are more people volunteering. It's great that more folks are chipping in here and there," Buck said.

The meeting ended with McMullen giving the Superintendent's report, telling members about the busy month all the schools' had activity-wise.

Program merges cultures

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt

Col. Lex Parker, Assistant Commandant from the El Salvadoran Army and wife Marina greets guests at the Host of Latin Americans "Meet Your Family Night" at the Officers' Club Feb. 19.

U.S. Army School of the Americas' (USARSA) Latin American students, guest instructors and their families came one step closer to becoming acquainted with American family life during the Host of Latin Americans (HOLA), "Meet Your Family Night" at the Officers' Club Feb. 19.

According to Cecilia Alexander, USARSA International Military Student Officer, HOLA is a sponsor and hospitality program designed for local families to help USARSA's Latin American students, guest instructors and their families understand the American way of life by giving them an opportunity to participate in home and community activities.

"This is a great way to share cultures," said Kent Young, a first-time sponsor with HOLA. "I'm really looking forward to this."

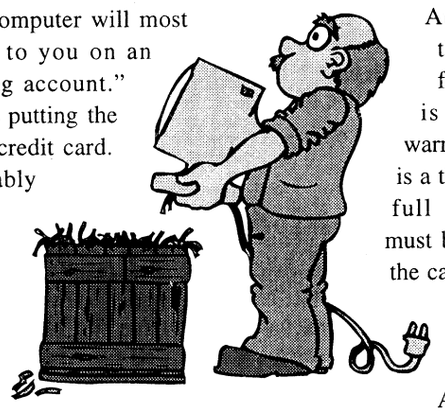
Young and his spouse, Joanne, have been residents of Columbus for more than 10 years and said not only will it be a good experience for them, but also for their son.

Standing near Mr. and Mrs. Young was Maj. Guillermo Chalup, a 1999 Command and General Staff Officer Course (CGSOC) student from the Bolivian Army. Chalup is being sponsored by the Youngs.

"I think HOLA is an extraordinary program," Chalup said. "It gives us the opportunity to not only share our culture in a school environment with other classmates, but also with local citizens."

Chalup said he is looking forward to the year-long relationship with the Youngs and anticipates it will extend into a life-long friendship.

Like Chalup, numerous other CGSOC students met their sponsors for the first time Feb. 19. They, along with their sponsor, will become part of USARSA's extended family.



"Once a part of the school, one wants to always be a part of the school," said Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant USARSA. "HOLA is an essential part to make sure that extended family continues."

Q: I got a postcard in the mail offering computers for sale. It's really expensive, but it comes with an on-site warranty, which would be great. Do you think it's worth it?

A: The deal is probably not a "great" one, for a number of reasons. The computer will most likely be sold to you on an "open revolving account." This is just like putting the computer on a credit card. You will probably be obligated to pay an 18 to 20 percent annual percentage rate. If you think the computer seems expensive now, wait until you finally pay it off! You may end up paying many times what the computer is actually worth.

The alleged "on-site" warranty is an entirely different problem. Written warranty protections are governed by federal and state law, such as the Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act. This federal law requires manufacturers to make certain warranty disclosures before you buy the merchandise. The warranty must be labeled "full" or "limited." Some of the requirements of a full warranty are as follows: it must promise to remedy defects within a reasonable time and without charge; it cannot limit the duration of any implied warranty; it must permit the consumer to elect a refund or replacement after a reasonable number of attempts by the manufacturer to fix the problem; and it must not require any duty of the consumer other than notice of the defect, unless the duty is "reasonable." Any warranty that is not a full warranty is a limited warranty. If there is a time limit on a full warranty, it must be included in the caption, such as a "full one-year warranty." A warrantor can give both a full and a limited warranty, as long as both are explained and differentiated.

The following disclosures must be provided in both full and written warranties: the parties entitled to enforce the warranty; a clear description and identification of products, parts, characteristics, components or properties covered by the warranty; a statement of what the warrantor will do in the event of a defect, malfunction or failure to conform with the warranty; the point at which the warranty term commences, if different from purchase date and the time period or other measurement of warranty duration; a step-by-step explanation of the procedure which consumers should follow to obtain performance of the warranty obligation; whether the return of a registration card is required; the availability of alternative dispute resolution; duration limitations on implied warranties; and limitations on relief available, such as incidental or consequential damages.

In your case, the seller must do more than promise an on-site warranty. The seller must provide you with the above-mentioned details before you sign the contract. The seller, the warrantor and the service provider should follow the Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act, because they all can be sued under the Act.

Make sure that you read every word on every piece of paper that relates to the warranty before you buy any merchandise. An on-site warranty isn't always a true on-site warranty. The small print may say that the warrantor has sole discretion in deciding where to repair your computer. So you may pay a huge price for an "on-site" warranty, only to continually send your computer out of state for repairs.

If you have any further questions about your rights as a consumer, make an appointment to speak with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Division. The telephone number is 545-3281.

Fitness trail receives facelift

Directorate of Public Works

Army Communities of Excellence competitions pay off in intangibles. They are a great source of feedback, affirming strengths of installations' organizations and operations and pinpointing areas for improvement. For the winners there are tangible payoffs — money!

Award money is invested back into the communities through quality of life projects that might not otherwise be done in today's belt-tightening climate. As a three-time CINC Award winner, Fort Benning has put its award money into a long list of projects. The latest in this line of projects is the Nature and Fitness Trail renovation.

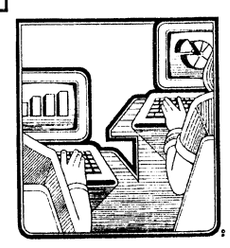
The trail is a two-mile loop that runs along the golf course and through scenic-wooded areas. There are fitness stations placed along its length. Last fall it was obvious the trail was in need of repair. Over time, the culverts designed to divert rainwater became filled with soil. The accumulating water gradually eroded the sides of the trail in numerous places. A hazardous 15-foot drop-off developed along the side of a portion of the trail that runs along the golf course. Exposed tree roots, ruts and holes provided obstacles for the unwary.

Last November, Fort Benning awarded a contract to renovate the trail to Brown & Root Services. Since then, heavy equipment and mountains of rock have popped up like mushrooms. Project Manager, John Crabtree of Brown & Root has acted in close concert with DPW Engineering Division's William Gordy to oversee all work and ensure quality control.

The subcontractor selected for the work is Charles Sizemore of Tello Constructors, a small construction company located in Columbus. Tello has filled in all eroded areas and constructed six new catch basins to improve water drainage and prevent further erosion.

The trail itself has been graded to a new width of seven feet, providing access to emergency and maintenance vehicles.

Recent heavy rains have caused a delay in the final stage of spreading the 1,400 tons of gravel on the trails surface. Once the area dries out enough to haul and spread the gravel on the trail, work will resume.



Weather permitting, a week of hard work should see the job completed and ready for use. There is a new parking lot at the head of the trail at First Division Road and Dixie Road for folks who want to use the trail to get a cardiovascular workout or just take a leisurely stroll through the wooded areas. All hikers, bikers and fitness buffs can look forward to the reopening of the trail in the near future. See you there soon.

High school student excels

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Columbus recently named its top area high school students for the 1998-99 school year, and among them was a young lady who just happens to be the daughter of a Fort Benning Soldier.

Kristie Wavers, a Senior at Carver High School, has surpassed what most parents may only dream of for their children. Daughter of Linda and Sgt. 1st Class Keith Wavers, career manager with the Office of Infantry Proponency, Kristie has not only earned the highest SAT score in her school with a 1390, she also holds a 4.0 grade point average and has qualified for a number of scholarships, including the full Hope Scholarship.

Wavers has been accepted to Georgia Tech, Tulane and various other schools and universities in different parts of the country, but has her sights set on attending Tulane.

"She is extremely gifted and driven," her father said. "Kristie has never had anything other than an A in school. She is a far better student than I ever was."

Wavers

So driven in fact, that Wavers took summer school courses the summer before her senior year so she would be able to take more advanced courses during the year. Her father also said sometimes they have had to make Kristie take a break from her school work.

"Sometimes when we go on vacation, we have her leave her work at home because she needs a break, and this can be a struggle," he said.

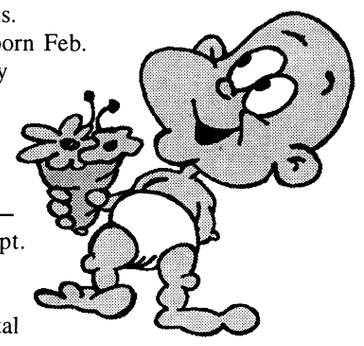
Even though Wavers has worked continuously, she said it has not been in vain, but instead has allowed her to pursue her childhood dream.

"I have known that I wanted to be a doctor since I was about 8-years-old," Wavers said. "I am happy that what I have worked towards is coming true."

Her father said he just hopes she will be happy and enjoy any career she chooses.

Along with the rigors of her daily activities, Wavers found time to become involved in many programs within the school. She is a member of the National Honor Society, Mu Alpha Theta, math team and the Allied Health Club.

Wavers also took time to assist students in her classes and family members who needed a little extra help.



She said even though other students may struggle with classes, they can receive help and raise their grades by working hard.

"Students can turn to other students for peers or teachers for tutoring," Wavers said. "If they keep at it they will eventually get it."

Food choices can ease crampy bowels

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Many people experience gassiness and an occasional change in bowel habits. These problems are usually short lived and the person returns to feeling well.

For some people, however, the problem does not go away. The person may have years of recurring crampy bowel pains, gassiness, bloating and an uncomfortable urge to move the bowels. Some of these people have constipation, others have diarrhea and some people experience both.

These people may have a problem known as Irritable Bowel Syndrome, or IBS. The cause of IBS is unknown and there is no cure. IBS has had many other names in the past to include spastic bowel and spastic colon.

IBS should not be confused with the more serious condition called ulcerative colitis. Colitis means inflammation of the bowel and IBS is not a condition of inflammation. Also, IBS is not associated with bloody bowel movements.

People with IBS may have bowels that are more sensitive and react to stimulation with spasms more easily than usual. Certain foods, medications, emotional conflict, stress and menstrual cycles may trigger these spasms.

Because eating causes the bowels to begin contracting, many people report cramping, pain and the urge to have a bowel movement within 30 to 60 minutes of eating. Often, the more a person has eaten, the stronger the stimulation.

There is, however, dietary advice that may help control the problem. For many people, increasing fiber with whole grains, fruits, vegetables and beans will lessen symptoms. Yogurt may be tolerated better than milk that has not been cultured. Also, the less fat in the diet, generally, the less severe the symptoms.

Some people continue to have problems on a high fiber diet. For these people a low fiber diet is prescribed. The diet is referred to as the modified residue diet. It is also very low in fat.

People with IBS generally have fewer problems when they decrease the intake of caffeine and carbonated beverages. Smaller meals or smaller portions can be helpful.

Recent studies have shown that stress relaxation techniques improve many medical conditions. Because the bowel is stimulated by the nervous system, some people notice an improvement in IBS symptoms while practicing relaxation training.

Dental hygiene important to primary teeth

Lt. Col. Adolfina M. Polk
U.S. Army Dental Activity

New parents may not realize the importance of caring for their infant's primary teeth. The Fort Benning Dental Activity cautions parents, however, that serious tooth decay may develop by the child's first birthday. Even though the child's primary teeth will eventually be replaced with permanent ones, the primary teeth are critical for chewing, speaking and appearance.

Baby bottle decay, also called nursing-bottle or nursing-mouth syndrome, is a condition that can destroy the primary teeth of an infant or young child. It develops when a baby frequently receives a bottle of milk, formula, fruit juice or sweetened liquids to serve as a pacifier or comforter. Prolonged breastfeeding may also cause this condition.

Tooth decay is caused by bacteria, which are present in a thin film of plaque that constantly forms on the teeth. The bacteria in plaque use sugar to produce acid which attacks tooth enamel. If sugary liquids are allowed to remain in the mouth, acid can attack teeth for several minutes. Tooth decay can occur after frequent, repeated acid attacks.

It's not just what children drink, but how often and for how long their teeth are exposed to decay-causing acids. For example, if you offer a bottle containing sugary liquids as a pacifier many times a day, the teeth experience more acid attacks. Allowing a child to fall asleep with a bottle during nap or at night also can harm teeth. While the baby sleeps, the flow of saliva is decreased. Harmful sugary liquids collect and remain around the teeth, inviting acid attacks.

You can prevent this by watching what you give your baby between regular feedings. A nursing bottle should not be used as a pacifier or as an aid to help a baby sleep unless it contains plain water Don't dip pacifiers in a sweet liquid and don't add sugar to baby's food to try and make it taste better. Children can be taught to drink from a cup as they approach their first birthday. This will eliminate prolonged bottle feeding or using a bottle as a pacifier.

The Fort Benning Dental Activity recommends that after each feeding, parents should wipe their baby's teeth and gums with a clean, damp washcloth or gauze pad. This will remove plaque and prevent acid attacks. Begin brushing as soon as the baby's first tooth appears. Continue cleaning and massaging gums in all other areas that remains toothless.

Visit the dentist by the child's first birthday. While this may seem early, your dentist can determine if you are using the right cleaning techniques. The dentist can also determine if there are problems with the child's primary teeth.

Children should receive an optimal amount of fluoride, a mineral needed for the development of decay-resistant teeth. Whether or not you live in a community that has fluoridated water, you should ask your dentist about how your child can get the right amount of fluoride.

Purim arrives sundown March 1

Chaplain (Maj.) Ben Romer
2nd Signal Brigade, Mannheim, Germany

The Jewish Holiday of Purim starts sundown Monday, the 14th day of the Hebrew Month of Adar. Jews all across the world will gather to hear the reading of the Megillat Ester—the scroll of Esther.

reflections

They will hear the words of the biblical book of Esther. And what a story it is! Beauty pageants, feasts, palace intrigues, detective work, bad guys, good girls — it is all in there.

The villain of the story is Haman and the heroes are Mordecai and his young relative Esther. She wins the beauty contest and becomes the new queen of Ahasueras (probably one of the Persian kings the Greeks called Xerxes). The previous queen, Vashti was removed, according to the story, because she refused to appear before the king wearing her crown (according to some, only her crown). Haman becomes irate when Mordecai refuses to bow down to him and through a subterfuge convinces the king to allow him to punish those who did not do his bidding. He sets out to destroy the Jews with the unwitting permission of the king.

Unknown to Haman was the family connection between Esther and Mordecai. Mordecai discovers Haman's plot and asks Esther to intervene. Up until this time, Esther had hidden her Jewish identity. However, now she steps forward, realizing that she is the only one who can save the day.

Risking her life for her people, she goes before the king asking permission to speak. He loves her, so he not only grants her this request, but half of his kingdom! Esther convinces the king to change his mind, Haman is caught and the entire plot to kill the Jewish people is prevented. The Jews throughout the kingdom received permission to defend themselves against Haman's forces and they did. It is interesting to note that the Book of Esther is the only book in the Hebrew Bible which makes no (direct) reference to God.

Today, the holiday is celebrated sort of like Mardi Gras. Children and adults dress up in costume and every time Haman's name is read in the story the congregation attempts to drown it out with noise makers called graggers. People are supposed to reach a point where they can't remember if they are blessing Mordecai or cursing Haman.

In recent times in cities such as Tel Aviv, Israel, they hold parades called Ad Lo Yada. Jews eat three — cornered pastries filled with poppy seeds or fruit called Hamentaschen (literally Haman's hat or ears). Purim is the original Jewish gift exchanging holiday and people still give to the poor on this day. So be happy, it's Adar, the month Purim takes place!

People need to learn forgiveness

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Family Life Ministries Center

Probably one of the most difficult lessons we have to learn is in the area of forgiveness. This is especially true in marriages and families. Our spouse may do something that undermines the trust so needed in a loving relationship that forgiveness seems impossible.

Years ago I went through an experience that tested my willingness to be a forgiving person. I would like to say that I passed this test with flying colors, but I did not. In fact, I failed miserably.

I was a youth pastor in Indiana and things were going well. My wife and I came to the church that had just a handful of kids attending its youth group. We worked hard with that group of young, vibrant teens and within two years there were nearly 100 teens in the group. One day, the senior pastor called me into his office and fired me. No reason other than he thought it was time for me to "move onto greater things."

I remember walking across the parking lot to our home to give Margaret the news. I was devastated — no, I was mad! To add insult to injury, the senior pastor actually lied from the pulpit, telling the congregation that I had walked into his office and submitted my resignation in order to pursue military chaplaincy. Hogwash!

During my second semester in seminary, one of my professors called me into his office to speak with me. Dr. Smith simply looked at me and said the most remarkable thing. "Bud, God can never use you in the military until you get rid of that chip you're carrying on your shoulder."

I knew he was right. My anger for that pastor was so great that it was affecting my whole being. Regardless of what he had done, I had to forgive him.

That same day I made peace with God concerning this whole situation. Little did I know that peace would be tested in a way I never would expect. In 1987, I was back in Indiana attending a conference of pastors from my denomination. I got to the church early where the meetings were being held and went inside. I must admit there was a desire to go over to him and give him a good piece of my mind. But that small voice said, "Go over to him and tell him that you love him." Have you ever argued with God? That day I did. I gave God every good reason why I shouldn't do that. His reply, "Then how can you expect me to love you?" Good question!

I walked over to him and said, "David (not his real name), it's good to see you. Thanks for what you did for me and I love you." I think he was taken back by my comments. However, that October morning I learned that love coupled with forgiveness brings healing to broken relationships.

Don't wait for your spouse to make peace with you, even if you are the one offended. Make peace with him or her ... learn to forgive or let God help you learn to forgive. There are many areas where forgiveness is difficult and you and your spouse may need some help in guiding you through this process. The chaplains at the Family Life Center can help. Call 545-1760 for more information.

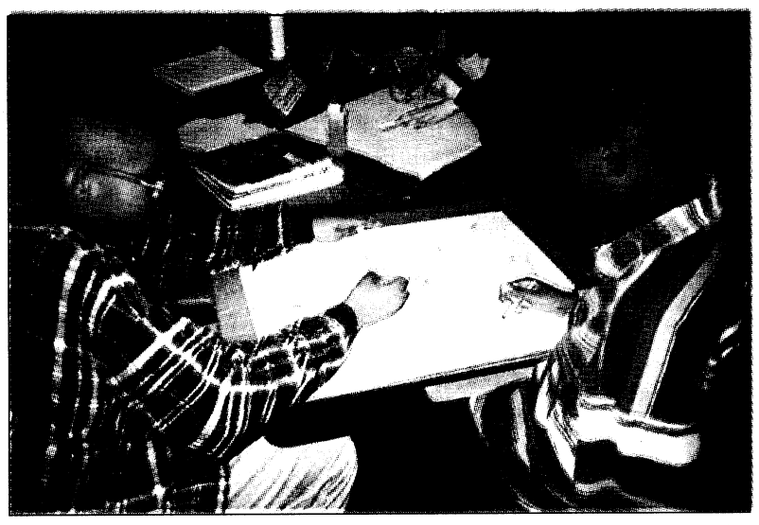
What's happening at White Elementary School ...



Students simulate journey

White Elementary School

Students in Joyce King's fourth-grade class at White Elementary School are learning what it's like to be a pilgrim by doing simulations of the passage across the Atlantic, settlement of the colony and the starting of a new life in America.

In the first part of the project, students worked together to draw diagrams of the Mayflower. They learned about many of the problems aboard the ship. They then wrote a first-person narrative about the trip including many of the terrible things the Pilgrims had to endure during the 66 days crossing the Atlantic.

Next, they will take the actual passenger list from the Mayflower, and working in groups, they will create character sketches of the Pilgrims they have chosen to be. They will determine how old they are, when they were born, why they left England and what they expect their lives to be like in the New World.

Joyce King

After that, the students will go to the Internet and visit a web site that shows models of the Pilgrims' houses. The "families" will work together to construct their own models of the houses they plan to live in. They will be involved in writing descriptions of daily life in the new colony.

This simulation will enable students to learn about many of the problems faced by the Pilgrims and how they had to work together to survive.

Kris Keske

Students hone reading skills

White Elementary School

How many fourth-graders do you know who love to read and write?

Children in Kris Keske's fourth-grade class can't get enough of reading good books and writing about many different subjects. The day starts and finishes with children celebrating communication through print.

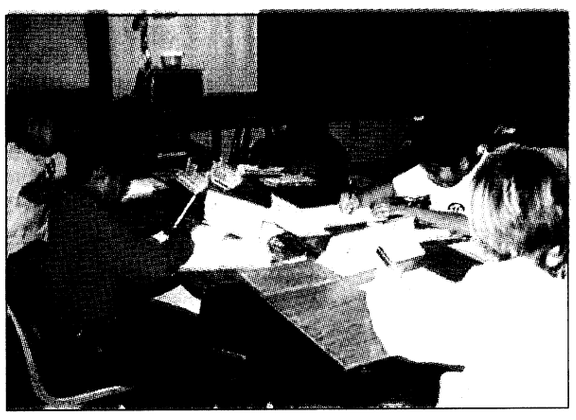
At any time of the day, you will find children reading books in the pillows, on the stool, at their seats or with their buddies. Even the teacher reads books with the kids. Some really good books like Where the Red Fern Grows and Bridge to Terabithia have been circulating among the students.

Keske's class has accumulated the most Accelerated Reader points of all third through fifth-grade classes in the school. Children keep record of their books in a special reading log.

Some children have more than 10 pages of books recorded. A book parade is planned for April. Students will design a "float" around their favorite books. If you ever wonder about whether children enjoy reading challenging books, just stop by this class.

Hand in hand with the enthusiasm for reading goes an avid interest in writing. Children use writing prompts or their own ideas to write in a journal every day. Sometimes these journal series blossom into full production through a play, poster or book. Emilio Rodriguez and Shaun Berger have produced several plays based on journal entries. Children may publish their writings on computers in the classroom or at the computer lab. There is no one designated time for writing — it happens all day long.

A special speaker's chair is in the front of the room. Children may sit in the chair when they read their own writings or tell about good books they're reading. Suggestions are made on how to improve writing selections and children are encouraged to make corrections without being embarrassed about mistakes. Literary parts of a story such as plot, setting and characters are identified and discussed in enthusiastic ways. Have no doubt — these fourth-graders have developed a genuine interest and love for reading and writing.



Multinational class shares wisdom

White Elementary School

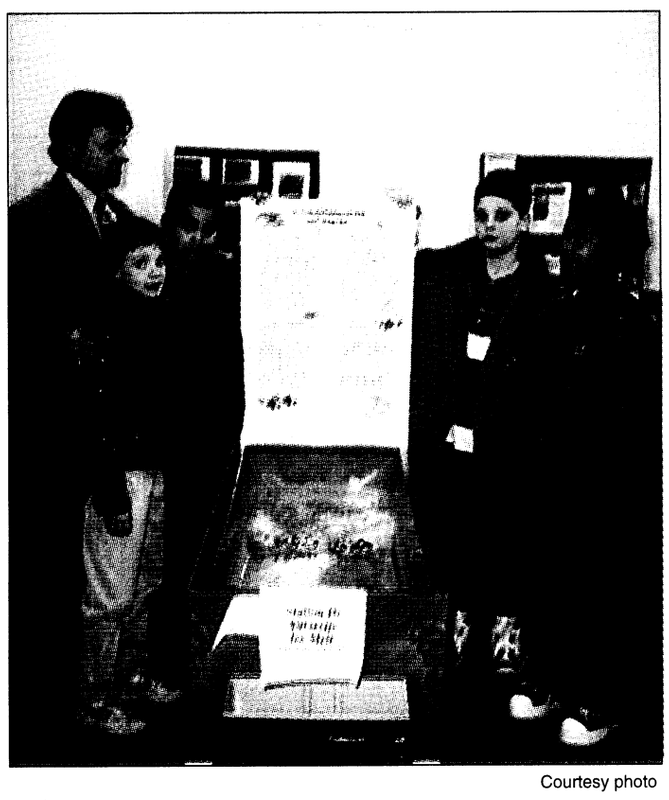
Debbie Rodriguez's fourth-grade class is a unique multinational group at White Elementary School that includes students from Venezuela, Columbia, Mexico, Sri-Lanka and other countries.

She is always trying to incorporate vocabulary, expression and customs from the countries that are represented in her class. One such activity is learning a popular word of wisdom from each country. Each child shares something about his or her country and then discusses and compares their stories. Later, students choose a popular saying from a tin container and illustrate how each child is capable of reaching a goal and demonstrating their understanding of the saying.

After trying to guess the saying that goes with their illustration, they will write new words of wisdom by changing the ending of an old saying.

Debbie Rodriguez

Darius Phillips (left), Pravishka Wickramasuriya, Victoria Hobbie and Eduardo Mendoza and London Crutcher work on their illustrations.



Advanced students are challenged by creating their own new words of wisdom which they will publish to share with younger peers.

One of Rodriguez's students, Shauntoria Craver, had some words of wisdom.

"Don't let my braces get in your faces," she said. This literally translates into, "Don't treat me different because I wear braces."

Idiomatically speaking, Rodriguez's class is coming up roses.

The display showed how cities could be covered by ocean water should the Antarctic ice caps melt. The students could also investigate and make scientific measurements of the changing ice, sand and water.

The project was part of the class's Antarctic Science Fair held recently at Faith Middle School.

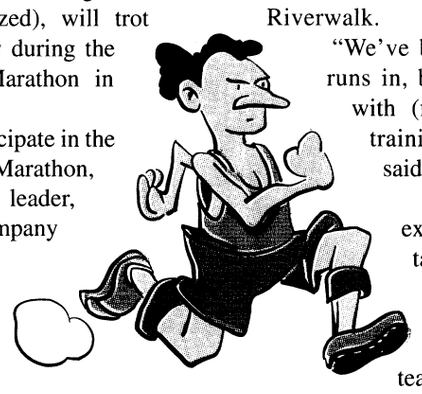
16th Annual Blue Angel Marathon



Team takes on race

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

Imagine running on I-185 from Fort Benning out to Exit 6 and back, give or take a few miles. After this weekend, one group of 3rd Brigade Soldiers will know exactly what this 20-plus mile run would be like.

Ten Soldiers from Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), will trot down 26.2 miles of roadway during the 16th annual Blue Angel Marathon in Pensacola, Fla., Saturday.

The group decided to participate in the run, also known as the Navy Marathon, after John Foster, a platoon leader, placed fliers around the company looking for team members..

"I was going to run it anyway, so I thought I'd see if we could come up with a group of Soldiers and make it a team effort," said Daniel Wilson, the company's commander.

Foster said he thought the run would be a good challenge for not only himself, but the other runners.

"I used to hate running at first, but it was just something I had to overcome," he said. "And now, this (Saturday's race) will be my second marathon."

Team member Brian Sullivan also saw the marathon as a personal goal that needed to be met.

"Basically, I joined the team just so I can say that I've actually gone out and finished one (a marathon) and to go out and run with the Soldiers of this company," he said.

Although marathon runners Foster and Wilson know what to expect from Saturday's race, other team members aren't letting their inexperience ruin their confidence.

"We did a 10-mile course around Sand Hill, and after that run, I'm more confident about the race," said team member Arden Canon.

In addition to running the 10-miler, the team has also completed other long-distance runs in preparation for the marathon including a dash down the tri-community's historic Riverwalk.

"We've been trying to get a lot of runs in, but we've been pretty busy with (field) exercises and other training requirements," Foster said.

While the team doesn't expect to set any records or take home first place, they said they do have one goal.

"Our goal is to just finish standing up," joked team member Anders Foster.

Just finishing may be the top priority, but John Foster said the team is aiming at finishing the marathon in a little more than four hours.

"The winners normally finish in over two hours. If we finish in four, that will work out to about nine-minute miles for all 26 miles, which is still pretty good," he said.

Although the marathon hasn't even happened yet, the group is already looking forward to making another race appearance.

"Hopefully, once Soldiers see what we have accomplished, we'll get a bigger group to participate in the next one," Foster said.

He said the next marathon the unit will participate in is the Air Force Marathon in September or the Marine Corps Marathon in October.

Army boxers slug their way to championship

Michael Kastre
Army News Service

Top fighters from the four military services gathered for a three-night slugfest — the Armed Forces Boxing Championships, Feb. 10-12 at Kelly Air Force Base, Texas. When it was over, the All-Army Boxing team walked away as the undisputed team champions with 20 points and 8 gold medals out of a possible 12.

The Army's big gold machine rolled into the tournament with its cadre of nationally ranked fighters — members of the Army's World Class Athlete Program based at Fort Carson, Colo. But the preliminaries started on an ominous note with two upsets when heavyweight contender Stanley McClain, ranked second in the nation, and Marshall Christmas, another nationally ranked Army fighter, both lost their bouts. In post-fight comments, Army Coach Byron Moore said, "We knew it was going to be very competitive and in this type of rivalry anybody can win."

But when the ringside bell signaled the start of the championship bouts, the Army team — with fighters in 10 of 12 divisions — answered it with fury and attitude. Their attitude was echoed in the shouts and cheers of hundreds of Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines egging on their favorites as they fought for service "bragging rights."

John Medina, 112 pounds, led off against a very tough and determined Marine Corps's Matthew L. Winters. Winters, also known by his nickname, "Mighty Mite," came storming out of each round with a flurry of punches, but Medina, the California native ranked number two in the nation, was able to counterpunch his way to a solid 17-11 victory. This was only Medina's second outing in more than three months following successful surgery to remove a cyst from his wrist.

Then it was Jason Franco's turn. He easily outclassed Airman Albert Villarruel, 37-11, in the 119-pound division.

Franco knows first hand about overcoming obstacles and meeting challenges. "I was trying for the '96 Olympics when my dad, who was my first coach, died. I stopped boxing for two and a half years." Franco didn't lace his gloves on again until after joining the Army almost a year ago, but he is proving that he has the mental and physical toughness to be a champion.

Hong Gu lost a close 17-16 decision to Marine Corps's Orlando Cordova in the 125-pound title bout. But teammate Corey Bernard, 139 pounds, came out in the next bout and put together a sterling performance to outdistance the Marine Corps's Felson D. Perez by a margin of 21-5.

In a fierce display of strength, James Webb won the 147-pound division and bloodied Marine Jawawn L. Hairston in the process. The referee stopped the fight 2:23 into the second round. Yamar Resto lost his 156-pound title to a very active Marine Henry A. Markin in a hard-hitting 30-27 contest.

Julius Fogle, 165 pounds, overpowered Air Force's Michael A. Frazier with an impressive combination of jabs and punches. The referee stepped in and stopped the fight in third round.

Olanda Anderson, fresh off the plane from Russia where he lost a tough re-match against Alexander Lesiak, squared off against Airman Joseph Pastorello and proved he is still a champion by posting a 15-7 win in the 178-pound division. The contest pitted Anderson, ranked number two in the nation, against a number three-ranked competitor.

In one of his best efforts to date, super heavyweight Preston Hartzog, scored a hard hitting 16 - 6 win over number 10-ranked Marine James L. Smedley in the last bout of the night.

Thanks to the World Class Athlete Program, the Army has positioned itself to make a serious bid for representation at the 2000 Olympic games in Sydney, Australia.

Fraternization policy gets DoD approval

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Army News Service

A new Army policy on fraternization took effect Tuesday, giving officers and enlisted Soldiers who are now dating one year to marry or end their relationship.

The new "good order and discipline" policy revises Army Regulation 600-20. Besides restricting personal relationships between Soldiers of different ranks, it also limits private business deals between officers and enlisted Soldiers. While the policy does not prohibit transactions such as selling a car or renting a house, it does restrict the lending of money or entering into long-term business partnerships. Business relationships, which were allowed under the old policy, are exempt until March 1, 2000.

Secretary of Defense William Cohen directed in July 1998 that all services align their fraternization policies. The Army's "Good Order and Discipline Policy" is a direct result of that directive, officials said, and not only applies to relationships between Soldiers, but also relations of Army personnel with service members in other branches.

Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs, Patrick T. Henry, said the new policy reflects the need for the military services to have standard policies because of the increasingly joint character of modern military missions.

The policy immediately prohibits officers and enlisted Soldiers from beginning any new romantic relationship. However, if the relationship existed prior to March 1, officials said the Soldiers have until March 1, 2000 to get married, break up or face the consequences.

The policy also prohibits relationships between permanent-party soldiers and initial-entry trainees, whether stationed on the same post or not. It prohibits romantic relationships between recruiters and potential recruits, without regard to where the applicants live or where the service member is stationed.

In fact, the new policy prohibits any relationship between Soldiers of different ranks if the relationship appears to compromise supervisory authority, or could result in impartial treatment. Relationships are prohibited if they appear to involve the improper use of rank or position for personal gain. Relationships are also forbidden if they will have an adverse impact on unit morale or the ability of a command to accomplish its mission.

Officials said the new policy is not intended to preclude normal team building such as community organizations, family gatherings, unit-based social functions or in any way limit athletic competition. Unit-based social functions include picnics, hails and farewells, right arm night and bring your boss night.

"I want to stress that the Army has always emphasized the importance of

AER begins campaign

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Army Emergency Relief (AER) held its kick-off celebration Monday to announce the beginning of its fundraising campaign.

Members from all offices on post gathered to assist the AER's mission so they may continue to help Soldiers and their families during times of crisis.

Kick-off guest speaker Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst supported and encouraged each unit representative to help Fort Benning reach this year's goal of $160,000.

"The Combined Federal Campaign and the Army Emergency Relief fund are both designed to help out others," Ernst said.

Fort Benning's AER section has provided $4,809,430 to Soldiers, retirees and their families and widows since 1992 and a total of 2.5 million people have benefited from the campaign since it was established in 1942.

AER has extended its help to these eligible members who were facing eviction from their homes, unable to put food on the table, make necessary car repairs, travel during emergency leave or one of the many other qualifying situations.

"This is one organization that shows the Army really does attempt to take care of its own," Ernst said.

Soldiers will be able to take part in the contributions from their office through their unit representative until May 15.

According to Ernst, Fort Benning could reach its goal for less than a hamburger, soda and fries per person..

Donations are also accepted year round at the AER office located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2643.

Unit sets Benning record

Pvt. 2 Mitch Frazier

When a trauma patient is admitted to the hospital needing blood, it is expected that it will be available, but last year in the Columbus area, hospitals experienced a deficit of more than 6,000 units of blood and were forced to seek assistance from other blood centers.

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment took it upon themselves to help make that deficit disappear Feb. 25 with a blood drive that not only made the blood available for the local hospitals, but broke a Fort Benning record as well.

"We had 344 individuals sign in and collected 277 units of blood in this one drive," said Sgt. 1st Class Michael S. Sargent, blood drive coordinator. "That is more than 50 units over the previous record the 29th set in October of last year."

"By the end of the day we were hoping to hit the 400 mark, but we just didn't make it," he added.

Although, the Soldiers did not reach their goal, Sargent said she was pleased with the turn-out under the circumstances.

"We had a lot of people detailed out today and on the ranges, so it made it very difficult to get everyone in here," he said. "But given the situation, I am happy with the turnout."

Sargent was not the only one happy about the turnout. Red Cross Consultant Sandy Ethier said the participation was not only the best she had seen, but said it says a lot for the people of Fort Benning.

"There is a very giving spirit here at Fort Benning," Ethier said. "In 1998, we had a total of 991 in Muscogee and Chattahoochee Counties, and with the help of Fort Benning, that number is continuing to rise."

Either said the great contributions that Fort Benning has made to the areas blood supply are not going unnoticed.

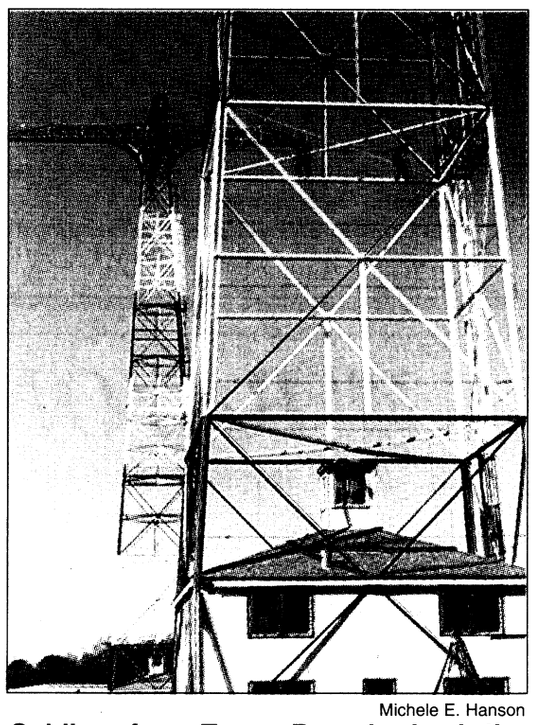
AIRBORNE TOWERS

Legacy connects paratroopers past, present

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

"By God men, I haven't had this much fun since I was a kid," said Gen. George Lynch, Chief of Infantry, after taking a ride on a controlled descent parachute drop tower August 1940. The towers, owned by the Safe Parachute Company in Highstown, N.J., became a highly successful and realistic training aid for the original parachute test platoon as they prepared to make their initial jump.

One of the many problems facing test platoon training was the lack of sufficient training aids. When the test platoon was in its third week of training Maj. William C. Lee ("father" of the U.S. Airborne Forces), Air Infantry project officer for Lynch, learned of the two parachute jump towers. Lee traveled to New Jersey, viewed a demonstration of the towers, and became convinced that parachute drop training from towers would benefit the platoon and the developing Airborne program. Lee returned to Washington, secured permission and funding for the platoon and arranged for travel to New Jersey.



The platoon traveled to Highstown for a week's training on the parachute towers, which stood an impressive 150 feet above ground. One tower was a "controlled" tower from which a jumper and his open descending canopy was guided down along cables to a controlled landing. The other tower was a "free" tower, which enabled a jumper to be hauled to the top with an open parachute, and be released to float freely down for a more realistic landing. Each member completed 15 tower jumps while in Highstown, and the towers were effective in facilitating the progress of the new Airborne program.

The success of parachute tower training in 1940 led to the construction of two parachute towers at Fort Benning, similar to the ones at Highstown but would stand 250 feet high. Two additional towers were constructed later, bringing the total to four. One of the towers blew down during a windstorm in 1954, leaving one control descent tower and two free release towers standing today. Tower training remained in effect through 1996 when this portion of Airborne training ceased.

The Tower Branch of the Airborne School, in close coordination with the Directorate of Public Works (DPW) and the Directorate of Logistics (DOL), is preparing the jump towers for reintegration into the Airborne training program.

"The towers, dormant for nearly three years, will have every aspect of the mechanical operation and safety of the towers inspected, analyzed,

Eat right America! March is National Nutrition Month, so here are a few hints to live past 80-years-old.

•Eat breakfast
•Sleep six to eight hours everyday
•Do not smoke
•Keep blood pressure low
•Be active by walking 20 to 45 minutes without stopping.
•Maintain weight no more than 10 to 15 pounds over ideal body weight
•Eat three balanced meals a day
•Have a pet
•Live in a town with less than 50,000 people
•Keep mental health through relationships and friends

These 10 suggestions were compiled from a seven country study on longevity. You will note that three out of 10 deal with food.

How well do you practice these healthy eating habits?

Breakfast can be easy if you plan just a bit. Bagels and a slice of fat free cheese makes a quick and very portable choice; add a box of juice or a piece of fruit and you have one of those balanced meals.

For variety grab a fruit yogurt, toss a handful of granola in and a slice of toast with a lowfat slice of ham.

Then to watch your weight, incorporate activity into your daily activities. Walk the stairs everytime instead of the elevator, even if it is six flights.

Love to shop? Power walk in the mall for 30 minutes before actually shopping and browsing.

Buy a $2.95 jump rope and take it everywhere. Jumping rope for 15 minutes in a hotel room during a trip can do wonders for alertness and daily frustrations.

These activities can control weight in addition to helping control blood pressure and stress.

Above all, enjoy yourself. If you want cheesecake — have it, but consider splitting it with someone; or eating only half.

Other tricks include slowing down the rate that you eat. To accomplish this try putting down your fork between every bite.

Chew and swallow that mouthful before you pick up the fork again. Now do this each and every biteful. You will eat less and fill up faster.

Try drinking a sip of water between every bite. This is also a great way to avoid constipation and help flush the kidneys and bladder.

So many little steps outlined above can have a really big impact. Try for yourself. Believe that you can and you will eat right America.

Women's History Month

Wife leads way

Sgt. 1st Class Thomas L. Dale
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized)

A field artilleryman's wife, Mary Ludwig Hays (better known as Molly Pitcher) shared the rigors of Valley Forge with her husband, John Hays. Her actions during the Battle of Monmouth (28 June 1778) became legendary. That day at Monmouth was as hot as Valley Forge was cold. Someone had to cool the hot guns and bathe the parched throats with water.

Across that bullet-swept ground, a striped skirt fluttered. Mary Ludwig Hays was earning her nickname "Molly Pitcher" by bringing pitcher after pitcher of cool spring water to the exhausted and thirsty men.

She also tended the wounded and once, heaving a crippled Continental Soldier up on her strong young back, carried him out of reach of the hard-charging British. On her next trip with water she found her Artilleryman husband back with the guns again, replacing a casualty. While she watched, her husband fell wounded.

The piece, its crew too depleted to serve it, was about to be withdrawn. Without hesitation, Molly stepped forward and took the rammer staff from her fallen husband's hands. For the second time on an American battlefield, a woman manned a gun. (The first was Margaret Corbin during the defense of Fort Washington in 1776). Resolutely, she stayed at her post in the face of heavy enemy gunfire, ably acting as a matross (gunner).

For her heroic role, General Washington issued her a warrant as a noncommissioned officer. Thereafter, she was widely hailed as "Sergeant Molly." A flagstaff and cannon stand at her gravesite at Carlisle, Pennsylvania. A sculpture on the battle monument commemorates her courageous deed.

CG thanks Soldiers for relief efforts

I wish to extend my thanks to the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) Soldiers who recently returned home safely from Nicaragua. When the call came in to lead the humanitarian and relief effort following the devastation of Hurricane Mitch to the area, you answered.

Despite the personal sacrifice of leaving families during the holidays, you deployed knowing that you were bringing the greatest gift of all to a nation in need. You brought life and hope and ignited the flame of a cultural exchange that shows promise for the future.

Your lasting contributions are a great credit to you as American ambassadors and Soldiers.

By rebuilding roads, 125 kilometers to be exact, upgrading a city's water system, installing 24 culverts and building bridges, you left an indelible mark on the country.

By treating more than 4,000 patients, performing 47 surgeries and conducting 248 eye exams, you left an indelible impression on the Nicaraguan people.

Your success and accomplishments are greater too, knowing you accomplished your mission and returned home safely.

Thanks for all you do for Fort Benning, our Army and the United States of America. Your dedicated service to our country makes a difference. You made us all very proud. Well done. Welcome home.

Do you ever wonder?

Many military ranks used today have foreign roots. Even the word "Soldier" is from the Latin word solidus, which was a Roman coin. Electronic banking was unheard of then and the military was paid in cash, with solidus.

The Latin word privus or privo described someone who had no office or position. An accurate depiction of today's privates, or as a military rank, private can be traced back to the Sixteenth Century when an individual could make a private contract to serve as a private Soldier in a military unit.

Lieutenant can be traced to the French language. A tenant is a holder and Lieu is a place therefore a lieutenant is someone who holds the place of a senior officer in his absence.

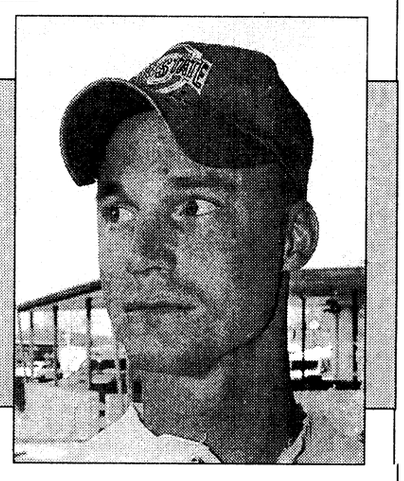
Colonel on the other hand has been traced to the sixteenth century Spain. In 1505 King Ferdinand reorganized part of his Army into columns or colunelas. These colunelas were royal units and were also called coronelias. They were commanded by colonels. A century later the French adopted the colunela which was commanded by a colonel.

In the seventeenth century, the French colunelas had evolved into regiments, but the rank colonel was retained.

When the British copied the French army's regiments, they also adopted the rank colonel, but opted for the Spanish pronunciation, coronel. Eventually, coronel was pronounced kernal which is how we say it today.

Colonels or colonels were assisted by deputies — lieutenants — who would step in for them when they were absent.

The coronel's lieutenants became the units' lieutenant colonels.



For more on the history of ranks, go to "Why is the Colonel Called a Kernal," by Raymond Oliver at www.airforcehistory.hq.af.mil.

Doughboy gets makeover

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Recently, with the help of a little more than $140,000 in Army Communities of Excellence money, one of Fort Benning's oldest structures underwent a transformation that turned it's dingy exterior into something a little more whiter and brighter.

For the past eight months, the contracting company Brown & Root worked to complete three renovation projects which had them fixing-up, washing and painting the 76-year-old Doughboy Stadium, according to Brown & Root Project General Manager, Ken Hudson.

Hudson said July through August was spent installing security cages and replacing doors along the walls of the stadium. August and September, the contractors remodeled one of Doughboy's towers and from December through February, they finished the job with a pressure wash and fresh coat of paint.

Because of its size, repainting Doughboy was an extensive project that required more than 400 gallons of paint, Hudson said.

Derek Lee, civil engineer with the Directorate of Public Works (DPW), explained that the main reason for the renovations was because the stadium desperately need to be painted. He added that the remodeled tower and security cages will be used for storage.

Along with a new exterior, the Training Support Center (TSC) also helped out by restoring the historical unit emblems which line the outside top edge of the stadium.

Lee said Doughboy Stadium is an important part of Fort Benning's history and in keeping with that they painted it the same color it originally was.

"By renovating Doughboy, we are helping to restore a little bit of Fort Benning's historic fabric," Lee said. "Doughboy has been around for a long time and it's important we keep it in good condition so we'll have it around a lot longer."

With a more attractive appearance, more people may be apt to use the stadium, said Lamar Caldwell, chief of Community Recreation Division. "We try to keep all of our facilities in good shape for our Soldiers and families and this is just another example of that."

The last time any renovations were made to Doughboy was in the early '80s, said Caldwell, so it's nice to have it looking good again.

"We are certainly glad the work is done," he said. "Anytime we can get our facilities upgraded and painted, it's always great and we really appreciate it."

Currently, the stadium is primarily used for physical training and intramural sports, but before 1982 its grounds were used for a variety of athletics and fitness. Some of the stadium alma mators include the All-Army Football Team and local college football teams along with Fort Benning's own post level football team.

Just as the renovations were done to improve the stadium for the Soldiers, the same held true when a project that proposed building the stadium was introduced in 1923.

The project called not only for a stadium that could house various forms of recreation, but also an Officers' Club, baseball field and polo field. The estimated cost of the entire project was $350,000 and most of the work was to be done by the Soldiers.

According to Frank Hanner, director of the Infantry Museum, Doughboy was built by the Soldier, for the Soldier and rightly named in honor of him as well. Doughboy was an early name for an Infantryman.

From the beginning, Doughboy was a place for the Soldiers to go to showcase their athletic and fitness abilities or watch others do so, Hanner said.

"It was and is a morale booster," Hanner said. "The stadium gives Fort Benning a wonderful area for recreation and it also has helped Fort Benning become a part of the community."

He went on to say that Doughboy represents the ingenuity of the Soldiers of that period, because when they were finished they had an enormous stadium that even some colleges would of liked to have.

sound professional interpersonal relationships to the success of Army missions," Henry said. "The nature and structure of our Army demands that officers and enlisted work together in teams and units under trying circumstances. Unit cohesion is essential to build the confidence and trust necessary for units to fight and win on the battlefield. Good, professional leadership and common sense will make these new policies work for the good of the Army," he said.

Relationships between Reserve Component members are exempt from the new policy if the relationships are primarily based on civilian acquaintanceships. Personal relations between Regular Army and Reserve component Soldiers are also allowed, with the same stipulation. However, officers and enlisted Soldiers cannot date if either are on active-duty tours or serving in full-time Guard or Reserve positions.

The new policy gives commanders at company-level the authority to prohibit relationships that compromise or appear to compromise the integrity of authority or the chain of command.

"The efforts Fort Benning has made to supplying local blood banks is great," she said. "That is why Fort Benning is being nominated for a national merit award by the National Association of Blood Banks."

The award, according to Ethier, nationally recognizes groups that make a significant contribution to regional blood banks, and she said it is an award that Fort Benning can be very proud to receive.

"This award really represents the sense of pride Fort Benning has," she said. "This award proves that."

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment also added to the collection cause Friday with another blood drive held at Infantry Hall that collected 117 units.

A Soldier from 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment prepares to give blood Feb. 26 during the battalion's first quarter blood drive. Soldiers and civilians alike tuned out in record number for the event.

"Fort Benning keeps on exceeding our expectations and taking that extra step to make tomorrow a little better," Ethier added. "It is truly refreshing to see this many people pull together to make something great like this happen."

Towers: Training prepares students repaired or modified," said Col. Victor Bero, 11th Infantry Regiment commander. "Tower Branch, DPW and DOL have put forth great effort and left no stone unturned."

Tower week training enables the Airborne student to demonstrate canopy control and execute a parachute landing when descending with a parachute. On the way up the tower, the student is able to see what 100 feet and 200 feet above ground looks like. It is at this height the Soldier must lower equipment and prepare to land.

"The reintegration of tower training will better prepare Airborne students for jump week, the third and last phase of Airborne School," said Lt. Col. Brian Stephenson, commander of 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Inf. Regt. "Dropping a jumper from a tower while suspended from a parachute is similar to jumping out of an aircraft with the exception of the 'prop blast' and 'opening shock' the rate of descent for landing is also similar and is effective, realistic training for the students."

Bero said, in addition to their training value, the towers are an important part of the Airborne tradition and represent a link to the past.

"As one of the earliest training aids in the Airborne School, the towers were an integral part of the training program until 1996 and impact young Soldiers by making a connection to the legacy established by Paratroopers of the past and present."

Army takes step to accept recruits with GEDS

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

After missing this fiscal year's first-quarter recruiting goal by 2,300 Soldiers, the Army is taking a look at accepting more recruits with high school equivalency degrees.

"This notion that quality is defined by being a high school diploma graduate has put us in a box that is really hurting our ability to recruit," Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera said. The Army has many fine Soldiers now with GEDs, Caldera said, explaining that young people with GEDs shouldn't be barred from military service if they can demonstrate the "desire and the ability to be successful."

Caldera has directed Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs Patrick Henry to develop a pilot program to look at recruits with GEDs. Henry said the program will study ways "high potential" GED holders might be identified.

The pilot program will not be a "quick fix" for recruiting shortfalls, officials said, but is instead designed to provide benefits for the Army years into the future.

"The Army is committed to recruiting and maintaining a quality force," Henry said.

"Earning a GED should not preclude otherwise qualified and motivated young men and women from serving our nation in uniform," Henry said. "They have taken the initiative to earn a recognized high school equivalency, and that initiative can translate into success in the Army."

A small task force under Henry is trying to isolate attributes, qualifications and skills that will identify those potential recruits with GEDs who are most likely to be successful in the Army, an official said. Life experience such as jobs, scouting, and volunteer work may be taken into account, he said, to see if these play a significant factor in demonstrating one's potential for retention.

The task force may also look at other research, he said, such as a study being conducted now by the Army Research Institute for the Behavioral and Social Sciences.

ARI developed a test to measure motivation among recruits. Called the Assessment of Individual Motivation, or AIM, the test has been administered to about 20,000 recruits so far. About 2,000 of these recruits have GEDs, researchers said.

Some researchers envision the AIM eventually being used to help screen potential recruits. The test results might be combined with other criteria and experience, officials said, to help identify those candidates who are highly motivated and likely to succeed in the Army.

Under a current Department of Defense policy, no more than 10 percent of recruits can be GED holders. Officials said if the Army wants to accept more than 10 percent, Caldera would request relief from DoD regulatory restrictions.

Last month, recruiting more GED holders was a topic of discussion at the Army's first Hispanic Leadership Summit held Jan. 13 in San Antonio, Texas.

Participants at the summit included Congressmen Ciro Rodriguez and Charlie Gonzalez, both of Texas; and Gil Coronado, director of the Selective Service System. Coronado dropped out of school at age 15 and joined the military. He later went on to receive a GED and retired from the service as a colonel.

"The military opened more doors in my life than I ever thought existed," Coronado said

Coronado explained that the military "provides a level playing field in which you meet people from walks of life that you might never have been able to meet were it not for the military. It's truly one of the best experiences a young person can have for laying a successful foundation to his or her life," he said.

Rodriguez, who represents the San Antonio district, said that research has identified seven reasons why students drop out of high school. "One of those is academic," Rodriguez said. "The other six are not."

Rodriguez said that many Hispanic students drop out of high school to help support their families. He said that that these young people deserve an opportunity to enlist in the Army.

"I think that the Army is an institution that should not write off people in America who need a second chance," Caldera said.

A number of the Army's top NCOs have been GED holders, according to Army personnel officials, saying those ranks include two former sergeant majors of the Army.

One example of a GED holder who achieved success in the Army was Medal of Honor recipient Louis Rocco. He dropped out of high school, later earned a GED, and went on to earn an associate's degree from the University of Baylor while in the Army. He also was commissioned a warrant officer before leaving the Army. He now works as a counseling therapist at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in San Antonio.

As a sergeant first class, Rocco earned the Medal of Honor in Vietnam in 1970 for carrying eight injured Soldiers across 20 meters of exposed terrain under fire. He did this despite having a broken wrist, fractured hip and severely burned hands suffered moments earlier when his helicopter was shot down on the way to pick up the wounded.

"You don't have to have a diploma to serve your country and perform an act of valor above and beyond," Rocco said.

"A lot of prayer, the support of my wife and the support of my command."

That is what Sgt. Joseph H. Renteria, Jr., Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said allowed him to be named as the NCO of the Quarter during a ceremony at the NCO Club Feb. 25 that honored Fort Benning's best NCO and Soldier of 1999's first quarter.

Spc. Jeff S. Frye, Jr., Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, joined Resteria in the awards ceremony as the first quarter's Soldier of the Quarter.

"A lot of great leadership made this happen for me today," Frye said shortly after the awards ceremony. "Without their help and them constantly challenging me, there is no doubt that I would not be standing here today."

Command Sgt. Maj. David J. Libersat, the U.S. Army Infantry School sergeant major and keynote speaker at the event, focused on that teamwork that makes Soldiers like Frye and Renteria the best in the Army.

"These Soldiers represent our Army and our country as model Soldiers and citizens," he said. "Though we recognize individual accomplishments today, it was with teamwork that brings this recognition about."

"It started with the team leader, the squad leader or the platoon sergeant recognizing within them the potential for excellence," he continued. "It was through their efforts in teaching and mentoring that facilitated their success."

Agents learn combative techniques

Pvt. 2 Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Facing armed confrontations and apprehending subjects for arrest are just some of the dangers that U.S. Customs Service agents face on a daily basis. For the 21 custom's agents who call Fort Benning home, these dangers are the basis for the lessons they are assigned to teach here at the Customs National Firearms Program.

"The program teaches senior agents from the field how to teach basic combatant skills to the personnel in their field offices," said one of the program's instructors, Inspector Paul McManus. "We teach them everything from the most basic non-lethal kicks and pressure point applications to maintain subject control, to the appropriate use of lethal force."

McManus said that although the course covers a wide variety of training for those 20-some agents lucky enough to make it to the elite school, it provides them with a basic understanding of what they are expected to teach in the field.

"We simply cannot make these people combatant experts in three weeks (the duration of the course)," he said. "But we can give them an operational knowledge of what is expected of them."

That knowledge is achieved by a courseload that takes agents into the classroom for more than 60 hours of instruction on the use of non-lethal subject control techniques and sends them to the range for an additional 20 hours of weapons instruction.

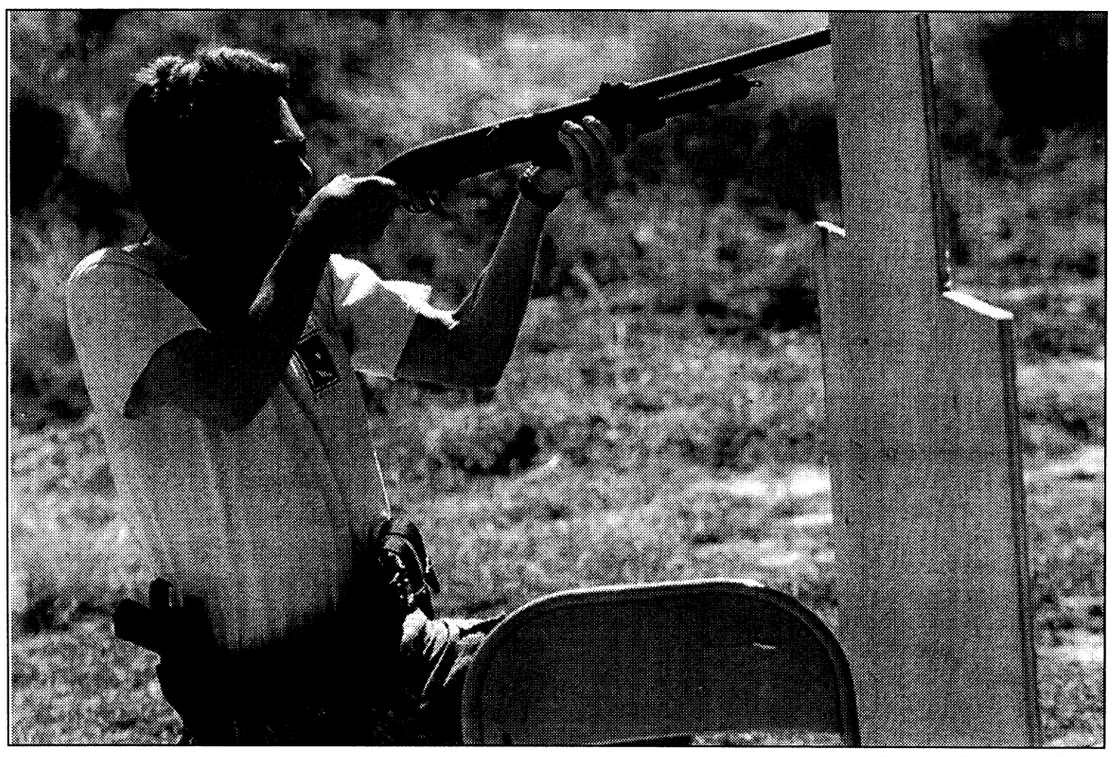
According to the program's combatant instructor, Hugh Sovick, the classroom portion of the program allows students to hone their non-lethal combatant skills.

"Using the kicks and holds we teach, these agents will be able to not only manage combative people better, but be able to share this knowledge with the personnel they will soon be assigned to teach," he said.

That sharing of knowledge is essential to the program's long-range success, Sovick said, and throughout the course, he said he emphasized that to the students.

"All of this training will be no good if they cannot go back and instruct it to their people," he said. "That is why we spend so long on each task of the combatants."

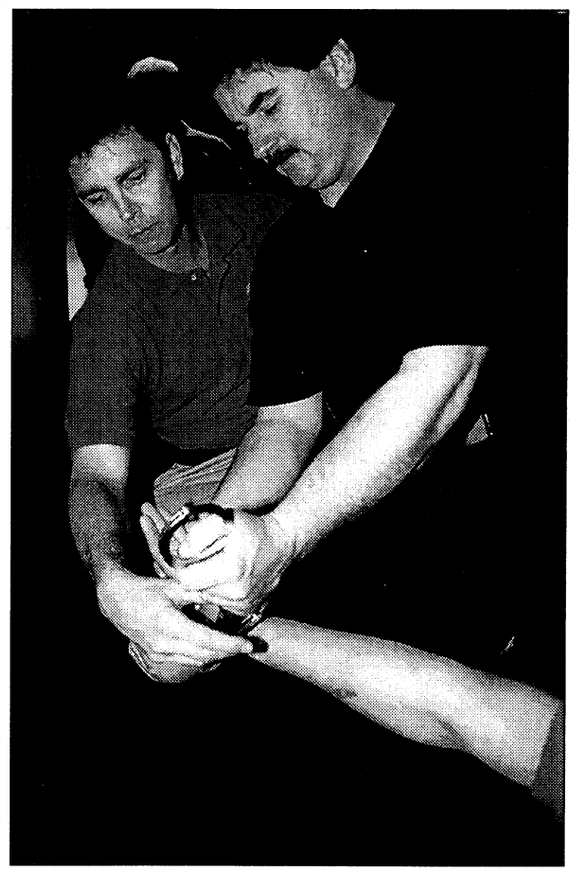
Currently, Sovick is emphasizing those combatant skills to students attending the program's Customs Firearms Instructor Training program here.



"These guys know how lucky they are to be here and know that Hugh (Sovick) is the best of the best," McManus said. "The program only holds three classes annually to train new instructors, so these guys know how important is is to do well."

Sovick, a former platoon sergeant and avid student of many different forms of martial arts, not only instructs the Firearms Instructor combatant portion of the course, but assists with the mobile efforts of the program as well.

"This class here is not the only thing we are tasked with as far as training," he said. "Being the Custom's only firearms instruction program, we also go out to various field offices and recertify their site trainers as well."



Whether it is training agents at Fort Benning or training them on the road, the U.S. Customs National Firearms Training Program staff at Fort Benning is responsible for teaching the basics in the world of combatants.

"We work hard to produce well-rounded instructors that are proficient in what we teach," he said. "If they can return to their offices and pass along these skills we have taught them, our mission is a successful one."

Soldiers complete Table VIII gunnery

1st Lt. Bill Riley
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

On the afternoon of Feb. 18, the Soldiers of the "Audie Murphy" Company — Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), rolled back onto Kelley Hill after completing a semi-annual Bradley Fighting Vehicle (BFV) gunnery.

Once every six months, Co. B, with their 14 Bradleys, must go to the gunnery ranges to qualify their crews. However, much of the work and training starts long before the vehicles move onto the range. First, each crew spends time in a simulator working on their gunnery skills and crew coordination.

Next, each crew, which consists of a drive, gunner and Bradley commander, conducted a Bradley Gunnery Skills Test (BGST). The BGST proved that the crew could operation the BFV weapons system, which consists of a 25mm chain gun and a 7.62mm-coax machine gun. Once each of these goals were met, the company was ready to go to the gunnery.

When they arrived at Ruth Range, Co. B began preparing to fire live rounds. The final task to be completed was the Bradley Crew Proficiency Course. During this training, a crew would go down range and engage targets without live rounds. To help make the training more effective, the crews used the Precision Gunnery Systems (PGS).

"I feel PGS is the best simulator system that we have at this time. Although there are some minor quirks with the system," said Staff Sgt. Timothy Tasse, the master gunner for Co. B.

The PGS uses latest to simulate real bullets being fired, allowing the gunner to observe the strike of the round.

The following day, the Co. B "Bushmasters" began Table VI training. By the morning of Feb. 13, the crews were finished and ready to begin the next phase of gunnery. After a few hours of sleep, the Soldiers moved to Hastings Range. Upon completing maintenance of the Bradley's, the Soldiers went home for a night of sleep, showers and a home-cooked meal.

On Feb. 14, the company returned to the field to begin Table VII. Table VII is a practice "test" for the final qualification at Table VIII. That afternoon, close to 90 family members loaded on buses and were able to see their Soldiers at work. The families were able to observe BFVs fire live rounds among other activities.

On the morning of Feb. 16, Table VIII began.While evaluators from the 1st Battalion, 188th Infantry Brigade proofed the range to ensure all the targets worked, the Bushmasters prepared their vehicles and receive one last briefing from Capt. Jon Ring, Co. B commander.

The crews then began going down range, destroying wooden enemy troop and vehicle targets.

At about 9 p.m. that same night, the first 25mm round streaked into its target, flashing like a laser beam across the night.

Sgt. 1st Class John Rainey and his crew, Spc. Jeffery Walters and Pvt. Ashley Elder led the way as Co. B with a perfect Table VIII. Another crew that showed great achievement during Table VIII was Sgt. Michael Tyson, Spc. Jason Valadez and Spc. Joshua Dobbins. Even though this crew has only been together for a few weeks, they also qualified as a Distinguished crew.

Overall, the company headed home with 11 Distinguished crews, three Superior crews and two that qualified.

Upon arriving at Kelley Hill, the Soldiers of Co. B immediately transitioned into their next mission — the IRC for the XVIIIth Airborne Corps.

Trainee proves to be Olympic hopeful

Co. E, Ist Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., ITB

No one can know who the U.S. Army will attract through its recruiting efforts. Recently Company E, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade had a interesting private in their ranks. His name is Pvt. David Bartlett.

Bartlett was recently accepted into the World Class Athlete Program for the martial art, Tae Kwon Do category. This was not a fluke however. Bartlett is a 2nd degree black belt and has trained and competed all over the world for the past 14 years.

Originally from Syracuse, NY, Bartlett started training when he was four-years-old. He earned his black belt when he was just 10-years-old. He trained and competed for the next four years at the state level until he was spotted at a tournament and was asked to come and train at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo. From 1995 to 1998 until he joined the Army, Bartlett lived at the Olympic Training Center competing in Olympic level competitions all over the world in such places as Australia and Europe. He recently was allowed in February to go to a tournament where he qualified to be a member of the U.S. Pan Am team to compete in Greece on March 19. With continued team success one can expect to see Bartlett represent the U.S. Olympic Team in Sydney, Australia in 2000.

Bartlett said he was very challenged while on Sand Hill and he learned a lot that he will be able to take with him to the World Class Athlete Program.

Soldier escapes from streets

Sgt. Jason L. Bartlett
Company E, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., ITB

Fort Benning is home to the nations only Infantry Training Brigade (ITB). The ITB is highly regarded and known throughout the world. As a drill sergeant, I receive many Soldiers with each having their own unique story to tell. One story in particular has caught my attention. I would like to share with everyone the story of Pvt. Roy J. Bean.

Bean was born in 1979 in Fort Worth, Texas. His parents, who were 15 and 18 years old at the time of his birth were avid drug abusers who attempted to reel him in to their twisted world of drugs, alcohol, violence and neglect. After almost being killed in a gunfight over drugs, the State of Texas intervened and placed him along with his two younger brothers into the care of his 75-year-old grandmother.

His grandmother did not have the necessary funds to provide a stable home for three young children, but she did her best. As the boys grew older, they became too much for her to handle. The began running the streets and getting into trouble so they were finally sent to the Masonic Home and School at the suggestion of a close friend of their grandmothers. His grandmother continued to see and take care of the boys until he untimely death during Bean's homecoming football game.

After a stint playing college football, Bean decided to join the Army. He joined with the ambition of becoming an Airborne Infantryman with the prestigious 82nd Airborne Division.

He joined the Army to better his life and be part of a family. Bean plans to use the Army as a stepping stone to a career in law enforcement and provide a better living environment for his two younger brothers.

Bean grew up fast and alone without role models, with the help of the Army and his own determination, he has come to be the model and example for fellow Soldiers to follow and strive for.

Whatever the mission, Bean has become what the Army expects of a Soldier and he is committed to becoming the best.

Regiment honors spouses

2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The Pioneers of the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment hosted a Valentine's Day Ball Feb. 12 at the Iron Works in Columbus. The theme for the dance was "Spouse Appreciation." Nearly 200 Soldiers, spouses, friends and guests gathered for an evening of fun. Distinguished guests included Col. and Mrs. Richard J. Rowe, Jr., Commander, 29th Inf. Regt. and Command Sgt. Maj. and Mrs. Retherford, command sergeant major, 29th Inf. Regt. The guest speaker was retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank C. Plass, the honorary command sergeant major of the 29th Inf. Regt. and President of the 29th Infantry Association. He is a three-time combat veteran and retired from active duty in July 1971 with 33 years of service.

Plass remarked about the great increase in the number of married Soldiers in today's Army, the emergence of family support agencies and programs and how family events like this would never have taken place during his Army career.

Several wives and Soldiers were honored for their selfless service and countless hours spent volunteering in unit Family Support Groups. They are Staff Sgt. Joyce Price and Staff Sgt. Patricia Baker of Company A; Leann Weatherford and Lynn Wright of Company B; Laura Marshal of Company C; Tonya Vance and Jennifer Fisher of Company D Carolyn Williams, Cpl. Charlotte Madden, and Sgt. Barbara Horne and Linda Kennedy of Headquarters Company. Door prizes were given away and a distinguished historical exhibition of U.S. Army uniforms and memorabilia were on display. Bryan Newman provided this outstanding display and was recognized for his efforts to preserve a connection with the past. Following the formal portion of the ball and a delightful dinner, the colors were retired and the dance floor was opened. The night concluded with a great deal of appreciation expressed to the spouses for their untiring support of the Soldiers.

Army Career and Alumni Association

One of the questions that is on everyone's mind as they begin the transition process is "What is the value of my skills in the civilian workforce?" A quick, effective way to begin research on the topic is through the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program's (ACAP) Association Center's Home Page. The site Wages and Trends can be accessed through related links and information.

"The web site Wages and Trends provides the job seeker with valuable information on what income levels he or she should be looking for in a specific area of the country," said Diane Ermi, an ACAP counselor. "This information is useful for both income planning and salary negotiation. The individuals who have taken the time to do this type of research become our real success stories."

An additional feature of this site provides individuals with an idea of the growth that has been experienced in any given occupation over the past year. There is also a long-term forecast which is helpful for those who are researching a career field. For most occupations the site will tell the individual an estimated number of job openings due to attrition and expansion.

The Soldier can do an enormous amount of research in a very short period of time. The site provides typical education levels and job descriptions for those who are not sure whether they qualify for a particular opening. It also allows the Soldier to plan for any future education or training needs which may be required as he or she advances within a chosen career path.

Ermi reminds us that being informed is one of the key components in a successful job search. It allows the transitioning Soldier to go through the process with confidence and clear goals in mind.

Job seekers can reach ACAP's page by visiting their web page at http://www.benning.army.mil/ACAP/acapweb1.html or via the Fort Benning web page at http://www.benning.army.mil.

What's happening at Wilson Elementary School ...

Students collect pennies

Wilson Elementary School

Students at Wilson School experienced the joy of giving back to the community through a recent penny drive in which they collected pennies to donate to Santa's Castle. Motivated by the promise that Phyllis Parker, school principal, would come to school dressed in her pajamas if a $100 goal was reached, students proved that they could far exceed the goal and brought in a grand total of $1150 in pennies.

At the conclusion of the Penny Drive, — was named "Penny Queen" for collecting 18 pounds of pennies; Michelle Allen's 2nd-grade class was announced the winner of the class competition; and a check was presented to Santa's Castle.

Wilson Elementary School

Wilson School is just a mouse-click away! The Wilson Web Page, (http://www.mindspring.com/~wilsones/Wilson_School.html) provides parents and students with information about the school, upcoming events, special projects and educational links so students can work on projects at home with their parents.

Being accessible on the Internet has been a goal of Wilson School since they created their web site in the fall of '97. It has been especially helpful to families moving into the Indianhead Terrace housing area at Fort Benning. The school has had families e-mail them saying that they will be stationed at Fort Benning and that they found the web site helpful in making preparations for attending the school.

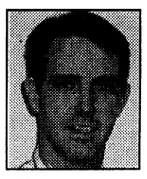
Parents and students soon learn that it is important to check the web site daily. The site is constantly changing. Student work is posted, new links are added and current events are featured. Melanie Keating, Wilson School educational technologist, said that technology has progressed to the point that changes can be made easily, thus allowing daily updates to the site. Whole classes have been able to add pages highlighting class accomplishments and activities.

The latest feature of the site is "Terra Nova Targets." These educational sites which have been identified by teachers contain general content included in the Terra Nova Standardized Test objectives. The sites have been posted on the web site so that parents can review the information with their children and help to reinforce at home the content which has been addressed in the classroom.

This drawing by kindergartner Aaron Spradlin is posted on the web site.

Students celebrate Hispanic heritage

Wilson Elementary School



Los Tigretas is Wilson's Spanish club for students in Kindergarten through 2nd-grade. Students learn conversational Spanish, appreciation for Hispanic culture and customs, and the history of different Hispanic countries. Hispanic heritage appreciation is an integral part of Wilson's curriculum. The club has performed at special events during the school year, including the Hispanic Heritage Month Celebration and Cinco de Mayo. Parents and representatives from the School of the Americas volunteer to assist with the club and serve as guest speakers.

Sponsors of the club, Kim Crowell and Maria Mercado, demonstrate in club meetings that learning is fun as they teach poems and songs to help children remember Spanish vocabulary and phrases. In addition to regularly scheduled club meetings, students participate in activities to enhance and reinforce their skills.

Students play doctor in war re-enactment

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The screams of Soldiers echoed across the field as doctors rushed to save as many patients as they could. Some were lucky and their wounds healed, while others were not so lucky.

A number of White Elementary School fifth-graders were given the opportunity to get first-hand experience of a battle and its aftermath in Evelyn Braman's six-week history lesson on the Civil War.

On Feb. 26, students covered themselves in red paint and blood-like goo and sprawled themselves on the school yard becoming wounded warriors as they re-enacted the Battle of Gettysburg.

"The students are becoming a part of history when you use this type of hands-on teaching method," Braman said. "We have reenacted one battle in the war and now we are reenacting what it was like for the doctors and nurses taking care of the wounded in the field hospital the day after the battle."

Students posed as doctors and scurried around the battlefield with field dressings, crutches and fake body parts for amputee victims. They were not only trying to save lives but learning what it was like for doctors during a war and before advanced equipment used today was available.

"The students begin to see what it was like when patients were treated on the volume of their screams," Braman said. "The students who are playing comatose victims are usually the ones who end up dying because the students playing the doctors tend to forget about them, and the same was true on the battlefield."

Students like William Fauvell, one of the confederate casualties, said he learned how hard it was for the doctors to take care of people during a war and how the screams could make it hard for doctors to concentrate on the patients.

"It is hard to win a war and the screams are so horrible," Fauvell said.

One of the doctors, Steven Antonia, assisted so many patients at the surgery station, a fellow student referred to him as another George Clooney from the television show ER.

Photos by Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
William Fauvell plays the part of a confederate Soldier who has been treated for a stomach wound.

Steven Antonia tries to move a patient from the serious care area to the surgery area where he can perform a foot amputation on the patient.

"This is fun and we were able to learn what it was like during the Civil War by acting it out," said Daniell Jansch, one of the doctors.

This type of lesson was not only fun for students like Jansch, class participation and interest rose during the past few weeks.

"All of the students showed up for school during this lesson. No one wanted to miss out on this," Braman said. "The students have shown a genuine interest in the activity. Some of them did research on their own just because they wanted to learn as much as they could about the lesson."

This is not the first time Braman has intrigued other students over the past few years, according to Braman, former students have come to her and expressed their love for the lesson.

"I have had past students come to me and say 'This is what I remember about history class," Braman said. "Students enjoy this."

When the doctors for the day finished treating as many patients as possible and the excitement began to wind down, the students gathered around for an after action review where they discussed what had happened during the reenactment of the battle.

Although, students completed the most interactive part of the lesson, they will continue to study the Civil War for two more weeks.

Schools prepare for Terra Nova

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

It's just about time for students to break out that bundle of number two pencils and dust off their thinking caps, because in a matter of weeks all of the Fort Benning Schools will be buckling down to take the Terra Nova test.

From March 15-19 children in grades one through eight will receive the multiple assessment test which evaluates students in four different areas — reading and language arts, math, science and social studies.

Middle school students will be tested on one area of the exam each day while elementary school students will spend an extra day on the test because the reading and language arts portions will be divided into two.

Kathy Einhorn, Fort Benning's director of curriculum, said this is only the second year Fort Benning schools have taken the Terra Nova test.

Einhorn explained that the exam is more difficult than other standardized tests partly because of the structure of it. On parts of the test students are required to not only solve problems but also explain how they solved them. The test also involves more application problems and writing, she said.

"It (test) was difficult for the students because we went from a test that had a lot of literal comprehension, recall and remember kind of answers, to answers that required the children to think, apply and do a lot of writing," Einhorn said.

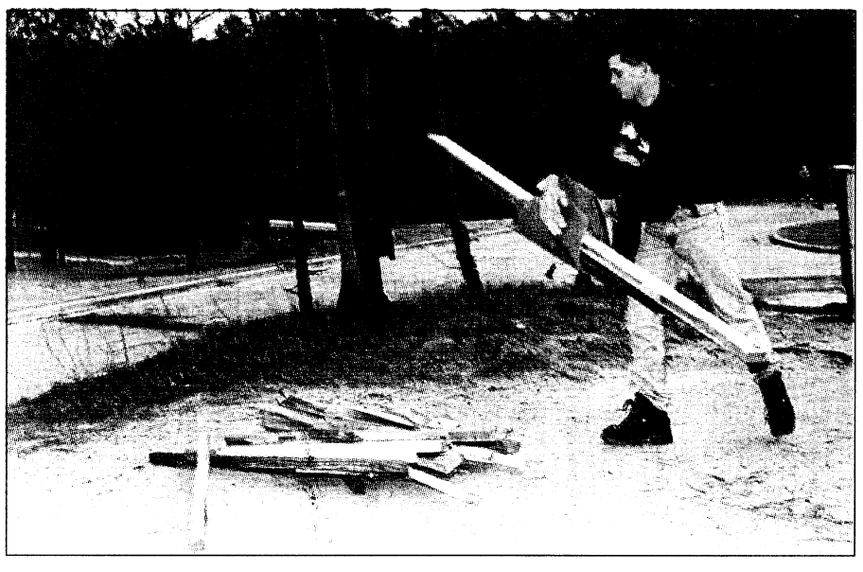
Lieutenants lend hand

2nd Lt. Stephen W. Norcross
Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Eager to escape the confines of the classroom, the newly-commissioned lieutenants of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment traded their pencils and field manuals in for brooms and paintbrushes in order to take part in a community service event at Spencer High School on Saturday.



Arriving in the morning, the members of the Infantry Officer Basic Course Class 2-99 divided into platoons to tackle the challenges that awaited them. They swept the walks, cleaned leaves clogging the street gutters and dressed up the school's baseball field dugouts with a new coat of paint. Amidst piles of leaves and empty paint cans, the Company A lieutenants were all smiles. "We are just glad to spend some time out here to help the community and the kids of Spencer High School," explained 2nd Lt. Jerod Wilson.

With such a large group of young officers participating, the projects were finished quickly. Before noon, Spencer High School looked ready for inspection.

2nd Lt. Kevin Hegarty expressed his pride in the company's efforts, "The guys showed great dedication and care for the community."

Afterward, they also showed how volunteer work could generate a healthy appetite by helping themselves to the baked goods sold by the wives of the company's officers.

Armed with muffins, cakes and smiles earned by a job well done, the lieutenants of IOBC Class 2-99 finally dispersed to enjoy the remainder of their Saturday.

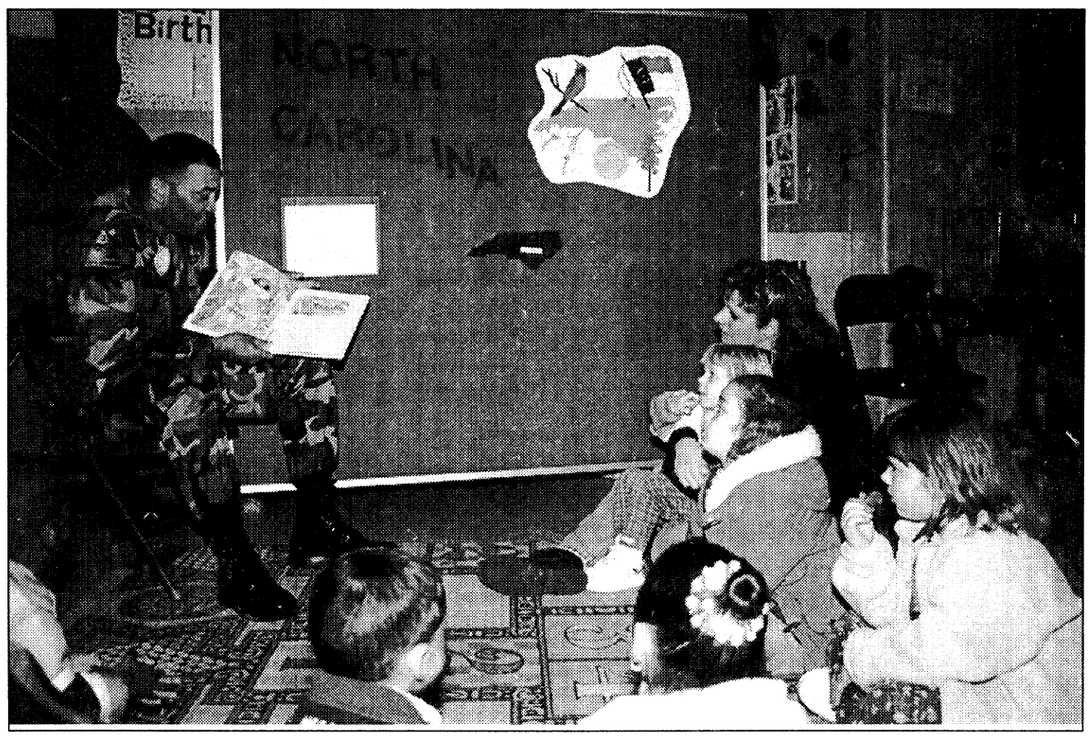
AFTB: Program helps families deal with issues of Army life

Sgt. 1st Class James B. Merkel
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized)

Jim's wife has deployed. Soon after, Jim discovers his last electric bill is so large that if he pays it, there won't be enough money left to buy groceries for the rest of the month. What are some possible solutions?

How about this: Your spouse rushes into the house and says "Honey, I'm sorry I'm so late. I had a meeting with the First Sergeant and the CO after the GI party to talk about the FTX. No time for dinner, I'll have an MRE when I get out to the CP. Would you mind taking my Class As to the QM laundry? I have to get back ASAP or they'll think I'm AWOL. Bye!"

Would you be totally lost in this alphabet soup? If you attended the Army Family Team Building (AFTB) Program, you would have a better means of coping with these common Army family situations.



On Feb. 20, that is what Soldiers and their families from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) did. They attended courses designed to improve their knowledge of the Army. These courses are designed to assist Soldiers and their spouses in dealing with the everyday issues of Army life. Emphasis is on teaching the non-military spouse where to find information or services provided by agencies both within and outside the Army, and to stress the link between soldiers, their families and Army civilian employees.

The AFTB Program is designed with the recognition that Army leaders have a responsibility to establish a partnership between the Army and its families. Studies have shown the family life of a Soldier directly impacts the Soldier's performance, readiness and retention. Further, studies from past deployments shows that families, both the sponsor and the spouse, must be trained together to support each other during contingency operations.

The Soldiers from Kelley Hill started training with Level I. This level is designed for Soldiers and their family members who are new to the Army, or need basic information about the Army. Level I covers Military terms and acronyms, the chain-of-command and chain-of-concern, the different military ranks and pay grades, Army staff structure, installation organizations, military and civilian community resources and financial information such as benefits, entitlements and compensation. This level also covers the family and military expectations, impact of the mission on family life and basic problem solving.

This training is important for the simple fact that 3rd Bde. will assume the duty of Division Ready Brigade later this year. Soldiers of the Brigade must be ready to deploy to a real-world contingency for anything from peace keeping operations to combat operations against any foe.

Through the AFTB program, life as a family member will be somewhat easier if there is an understanding of what the Army's missions are (why things are done the way they are at each level) and how these deployments can affect you and your family. Thus, the Soldiers and their families are better equipped to survive possible deployments

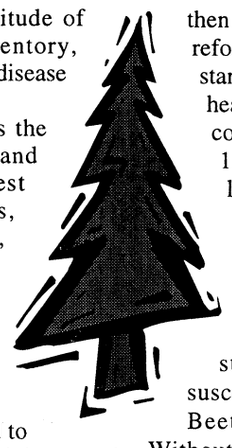
State reading

Capt. Todd Mason, Company D, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, of North Carolina reads a story to a group of parents and children Nov. 23 at Stowers Elementary School in celebration of Read Across America.

Soldiers from eight different states volunteered their time to come in and read to the children. The kids rotated around the room by choosing a state they wanted to go to. Each state featured a different story.

Directorate of Public Works "Essayons" Information Corner

Post manages vast timber land



Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning has approximately 182,000 acres of which 140,00 acres are managed for timber production. This program has a multitude of responsibilities to include forest inventory, timber harvest, reforestation, insect and disease control.

Providing optimum training areas is the number one priority, but promoting and sustaining healthy and vigorous forest which benefits endangered species, recreation, wood fiber production, aesthetics, fish and other wildlife is also a high priority.

A forest inventory of all managed forest on the installation has been completed and is being updated continuously on a ten-year cycle. The inventory data provides information used to make sound timber management decisions and available habitat for the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker (RCW). This information is being used to balance our training needs and our goal to reach full recovery of the RCW population by the year 2026.

Re-establishment of the longleaf pine ecosystem is a major objective of the installation, but can only be accomplished with artificial reforestation. Over the past 40 years, areas that once were predominantly longleaf pine have been reforested with mainly loblolly pine and slash pine seedlings. In 1988, the first attempt to replant longleaf pine seedlings was found to be successful and since then more than 5,600 acres have been artificially reforested with longleaf seedlings. Mixed pine stands will be converted to longleaf naturally by heavy thinning, leaving longleaf seedlings and controlled burns. Other areas, approximately 1,500 acres annually, will be planted with longleaf pines.

You may think our timber management program is pretty straight forward, but not so, because now enters Mother Nature in the form of insects, diseases and adverse growing conditions. These conditions stress our timber inventory making them susceptible to the Southern Pine Beetle, Ipps Beetle, littleleaf disease and fusiform rust. Without a doubt, the Southern Pine Beetle is the most destructive. On an average, about 200 acres are destroyed annually by the Southern Pine Beetle infestations. In conclusion, managing the installation's timber program is challenging, but our goal is to provide quality training areas balanced with being a good steward of the environment.

If you would like more information about the installation's timber management program, call Bob Larimore, Natural Resource Branch at 544-6206.

BBB warns of credit repair schemes

Better Business Bureau

If you have filed for bankruptcy, you may be the target of a credit repair scheme called file segregation. In this scheme, a credit repair company promises, for a fee, to help you hide your bankruptcy and establish a new credit identity to use when you apply for credit. The problem is, file segregation is illegal. If you use it, you could face fines or even a prison sentence.

These dishonest credit repair companies make their pitches in classified ads, on radio and TV and over the Internet. If you pay their fee and sign up for their service, you may be directed to apply for an Employer Identification Number (EIN) from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). Typically, EINs-which resemble Social Security numbers are used by businesses to report financial information to the IRS and the Social Security Administration.

When you receive your EIN, you will be instructed by the credit repair service to use that number instead of your Social Security number when applying for credit. They will also tell you to use a new mailing address.

To convince you to establish a new credit identity, the credit repair service is likely to make a variety of false claims. These false claims, along with the pitch of getting a new credit identity, should alert you to the possibility of fraud. You'll probably hear:

•Claim 1: You will not be able to credit for 10 years (the period of time bankruptcy information may stay on your credit report). Keep in mind, that each creditor has its own criteria for granting credit. While one may reject your application because of bankruptcy, another may grant you credit shortly after you've filed for bankruptcy.

•Claim 2: The company or file segregation program is affiliated with the federal government. The federal government does not support or work with companies that offer such programs.

•Claim 3: The file segregation program is legal. It is a federal crime to make any false statements on a loan or credit application, to misrepresent your Social Security number and to obtain an EIN from the IRS under false pretenses. Further, you could be charged with mail or wire fraud if you use the mail or the telephone to apply for credit and provide false information.

If you have a problem with a credit repair company, report the company to your Better Business Bureau, your state attorney general or you local consumer affairs office.

TEST: Students get ready

Although the students did well overall last year, Einhorn said the test results showed that as a school system there were a few areas that needed work, especially in math comprehension and math problem solving.

In response to this, teachers spent the school year working extra hard on the children's math and writing skills. She said the children are well prepared for the test and everyone expects they will do much better.

According to Einhorn, last year's goal was to have all of the schools at the 50 percent mark on the test. This year they have higher aspirations, hoping all of the schools score at least at the 55 percentile.

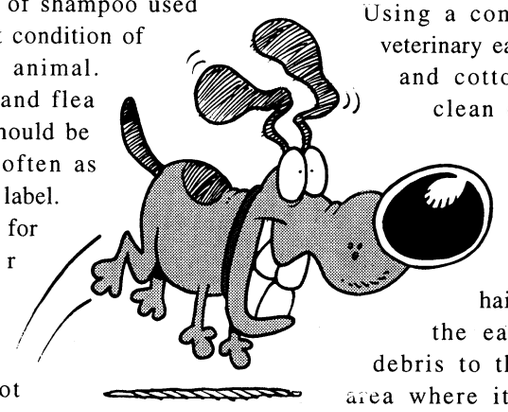
Although only grades three through twelve are required to take the test, Einhorn said it's important for the 1st and 2nd-graders to take it as well.

"Our principles felt very strongly that it helps our kids to be tested," Einhorn said. "It helps them first of all to be ready for the 3rd-grade assessment, but it also helps teachers to see the students' strengths and how well they are learning."

Einhorn said most of the students liked the Terra Nova better than other standardized tests, especially the 8th-graders.

"They really were motivated by the test, but I think it's because it made them think," Einhorn said. "They were challenged by it, they were very interested in it and they really liked the pictures."

Einhorn mentioned that the sooner the children take these tests the more they will be prepared in the future.



"If we can get kids to perform at this level they are going to be so much more prepared for college and the job market," Einhorn said. "To me this is an authentic assessment of what you go to school for, because when you learn these things you don't just know them, but you can apply them as well.

Pet grooming important factor in healthcare

Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility

Pet grooming, when performed safely, is an important factor in preventive healthcare. Proper maintenance of pets' coats, skin, nails and ears can preclude many of the most common pet ailments. Three basic grooming measures that are important in maintaining animal health are: bathing, nail clipping and ear cleaning.

The frequency at which dogs and cats should be bathed depends on the type of shampoo used and the coat condition of the animal. Medicated and flea shampoos should be applied as often as stated on the label. Shampooing for regular bathing purposes should occur not more than once every two weeks to avoid drying out an animal's coat. Because of the stress involved, and their fastidious grooming habits, cats do not need to be bathed unless for medicinal or pest control purposes.

To protect the health and safety of the animal being bathed, measures should be taken to ensure that room and water temperature are comfortable. Avoid getting water into the animal's eyes, nose, ears or mouth. Animals should be thoroughly wet before applying shampoo, and lather should be worked down from the head and neck. Rinsing should be done several times in clear, fresh water. Any shampoo residue left on the pet's skin can cause itching and irritation. Hot blow-dryers can cause burns and may dry the skin. Animals should be towel-dried as much as possible and kept in a warm place until the coat and skin are completely dry. Frequent brushing helps keep coat and skin healthy between baths.

Ear cleaning is best done directly after bathing. Using a commercial veterinary ear cleaner and cotton balls, clean only the outer section of the ear. Tiny hairs inside the ear sweep debris to the outer area where it can be safely wiped away. Cotton swabs should never be used, as they can cause permanent damage and may result in hearing loss.

Nail trimming should be done monthly on dogs and cats to prevent long nails from tearing and cracking. Nails left untrimmed can also grow under and into the pads of the feet. The dew claws (on the side of the leg) is especially prone to becoming overgrown because it does not wear down. Safe nail trimming should be done using animal nail clippers for dogs and human nail trimmers on cats.

White claws held to the light will display a pinkish blood vessel running from the edge of the paw to the middle of the nail curve. The length of the blood vessel may vary depending on the frequency of the nail trimming. Only the whitish nail extending past the edge of the blood vessel may be trimmed. Trimming too close to the edge of the vessel can result in bleeding and soreness. Dark nails, or those with less opacity, can be coated with mineral oil to make them more transparent. It the nail remains too dark to determine the location of the blood vessel, trimming the nail away in small increments may be necessary. Should the vessel be cut, bleeding can be slowed by applying direct pressure to the tip of the nail.

Some breeds of dogs and cats have special grooming needs. Animals with longer coats may require frequent clipping that can be done at home or at a professional salon. Other breeds may have special allergies or intolerances for certain product ingredients. Consult a veterinarian about any specific questions or needs. Pets that are well maintained have better overall health and lead more enjoyable lives.

The Veterinary Treatment Facility is located in Building 285 on 10th Mountain Division Road. The hours are 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday (closed the last working day of the month for inventory) and the phone numbers are 545-4444 and 545-1127.

Teacher's vision brings music to life

Michelle Harvey
Special to the Bayonet©

Through the vision of Cy Dietrich, the fifth-grade class of Dexter Elementary brought to life the music of of Mozart, Bach, Tschaivosky and other composers in the musical production Pantomime Phenomena.

Pantomime Phenomena, a play choreographed by Dietrich, who is the music teacher for the school, was created to introduce classical music to the students in a creative and interesting manner.

"During the summertime, I was trying to think of something different to help the kids to learn about music," said Dietrich.

"Since listening to classical music is a part of the curriculum, I thought it would be more effective that they can play along while listening," he said.

In order to experience the visual phenomena of pantomime, the play was presented in the dark. With the help of some devoted parents, the entire stage was draped with black polyethylene for the special effect.

From harps, violins, and clarinets, to bassons , trumpets, and french horns, Dietrich made about 32 instruments out of cardboard and wood over the summer.

"What the audience experienced is really what the children heard because they listened to a recorded song and played along with their instruments," Dietrich said.

The students wore fluorescent colored gloves and they were transformed into a living painting of neon hands and instruments, and danced in the sea of darkness.

"We were pantomiming the music," Dietrich said . "They were feeling the movement of the music by what they were expressing with their hands."

Besides pantomiming classical music with their fluorescent instruments, the students used their hands to sing songs in sign language.

"Mrs. Pam Koon, who is the Physical Education teacher at Dexter also teaches sign language to the students," said Dietrich.

The children even presented their own rendition of Tschaivosky's Nutcracker Suite through song and dance in the world of Pantomime.

It was the accepted practice in Babylon, 4,000 years ago, that for a month after the wedding, the bride's father would supply his son-in-law with all the mead he could drink. Mead is a honey beer, and because their calendar was lunar based, this period was called the "honey month" or what we know today as the "honeymoon."

Nutrients may 'boost your mood'

Kerryn Davidson, R.D.
Martin Army Community Hospital

Pick your passion. Scientists are discovering that when you're in the mood for a particular food, your brain may have as much to do with what you pick as your taste buds do. Part of performance nutrition is to provide the right balance of these foods so that we have the psychological stamina to join our physical vigor. These nutrients also help people to reduce fatigue and regulate positive mood, two requirements to stay in the fast lane.

Carbohydrates boost brain serotonin, a calming neurotransmitter that counters irritability and depression. Eating carbohydrates begins a process that allows the amino acid tryptophan to enter the brain more easily to make serotonin. Antidepressants like Prozac keep serotonin high.

"If you notice that, for no good reason, you feel down, anxious, put upon or unable to focus, try carbohydrates," said Judith Wortman of the Department of Brain and Cognitive Science at MIT, who is a pioneer in the study of food and mood. Wortman suggests you eat cereal, a bagel, a potato, rice cakes or pretzels, allowing 90 minutes for the food to work. Keep in mind that fat, as well as a full stomach, slows digestion, blunting the tryptophan's effect. Expect the resulting mood to last about three hours.

The amino acid tyrosine, contained in protein-rich foods, stimulates dopamine and norepinephrine brain chemicals which make people more alert, improve attention, motivation and reaction time. An Institute of Medicine committee on military research reported that tyrosine supplements helped Soldiers think more clearly under conditions of severe stress, such as extreme cold or high altitude, said the committee chair, Robert Nesheim. Does this mean that eating more tyrosine-rich foods such as fish, chicken, meat, eggs and beans will make you more alert? It is more accurate to say that protein is less sedating than carbohydrates. The two nutrients fight fatigue better than carbohydrates alone — especially at lunch, when the normal rhythms of your body make post-meal drowsiness more likely.

An individual should eat three to four ounces of lean protein food to prepare for mental activities. You can eat carbohydrates along with it, but skip the fat. Avoiding red meat completely may do more harm than good. With all the hoopla over low-cholesterol diets, many women experience low-level iron deficiencies that make them feel tired and blue. (The body needs adequate iron to keep its cells fueled with oxygen and, thus, energized.) Those most at risk for iron deficiency are women who exercise frequently, have been pregnant in the past two years or consume fewer than 2,500 calories per day. The key is choosing lean meats such as flank steak, round steak or sirloin which are lower in fat.

Not drinking enough water each day can leave you feeling lethargic. Mild dehydration is a common but often overlooked cause of fatigue, said dietitian Elizabeth Somer, author of Food and Mood. When the body dehydrates, blood flow to the organs decrease and the brain slows down. Relying on thirst, however, is a poor way to determine how much water you need. Most adults should drink six to eight glasses of water or plain seltzer per day. Soft drinks, however, are no substitute. Many act as diuretics and increase dehydration.

"Caffeine is more than a perk-me-up," said nutritionist Robert Nesheim. "It can also help maintain alertness, especially when doing long, tiresome tasks." Recent research links the amount of caffeine in one to two cups of coffee with an improved ability to think clearly, make snap decisions and feel more energetic up to three hours after drinking it. In a study of 50 sleep-deprived people, the amount of caffeine in as little as one and a half cups of coffee boosted their concentration, energy and confidence levels.

Although the mechanism is not firmly established, some researchers believe that caffeine raises blood pressure slightly and blocks hormonal messengers that lull us to sleep. Keep in mind, however, that if you drink more than two cups of coffee a day or are sensitive to caffeine, it can make you irritable and jittery.

Magnesium deficiency and stress are also linked so closely that some doctors and dietitians now advise people who lead hectic lives to add magnesium rich foods like bananas to their diets, according to Dr. Mildred Seelig, a former executive director of the American College of Nutrition. Most Americans do not eat the Recommended Daily Allowance (300 mg) of this important mineral. If you have a hectic schedule or a stressful job, the problem is worse. Stress hormones, which flood the body during times of tension, leach magnesium out of cells, resulting in lower resistance to viral infection.

There is more evidence for magnesium's energy-promoting role from studies on the Chronic Fatigue Syndrome at the University of Southhampton, in England. One group of patients received a placebo, while another received a weekly gram of magnesium, the equivalent of about two bananas a day. (If you don't like the thought of eating two bananas a day, substitute servings of other good magnesium sources, such as nuts, beans, leafy greens and wheat germ.) After six weeks, the group who took magnesium reported a significant boost in energy. Other research has found that increased magnesium intake resulted in less anxiety and better sleep.

Citrus fruits are among the richest sources of vitamin C, a key ingredient for boosting levels of the energizing brain chemical norepinephrine. This neurotransmitter regulates the body's ability to be alert, attentive and motivated. Researchers have found that even a small deficiency in vitamin C (the RDA is 60 mg, or three quarters of grapefruit or one orange) can leave you feeling irritable and blue. The precise mechanism is still unclear, but a lack of vitamin C-rich foods can also inhibit your body's ability to absorb the iron it needs to fight fatigue.

In a recent study of more than 1,000 people with diets only slightly deficient in vitamin C, more than half reported feeling less nervous, cranky and depressed when they ingested amounts equal to the RDA. Consuming more than that, however, may make you feel even more upbeat. In a University of Alabama study, researchers found that those who regularly consumed 400 mg of vitamin C per day (equal to two twelve-ounce glasses of orange juice or six oranges) were half as tired as those who consumed less than 100 mg per day.

Another trace mineral to consider is selenium, which has been linked to upbeat moods. In a 1990 study conducted at University College, in Swansea, Wales, people who consumed the least selenium tended to be the most anxious, depressed and tired. Those given the amount found in one Brazil nut reported a greater sense of happiness, more energy and a reduction in tension compared to participants given a placebo. Other good sources of selenium: seafood, cottage cheese and fruit.

The food you crave may trigger the release of endorphins, pleasure-enhancing substances made by the brain. Cravings often differ by gender: women tend to prefer fat-sugar combinations like chocolate, ice cream and cake; men like fat-protein or fat-salt mixtures such as steak, pizza and French fries. Satisfy your cravings healthfully by cutting fat; for example, fat-free pudding for a fat-sugar craving; lean meat for a fat-protein craving; fat-free tortilla chips for a fat-salt craving. For the lowest-calorie high of all, try exercise. Those who exercise regularly produce more endorphins than those who do not.

worth repeating

The primary reason for the existence of all the U.S. Armed Forces is to provide the military power to deter war. Should deterrence fail for reasons beyond our control, then these forces must be able to fight and win. There is no cheap way to do this. There also is no second prize in the business of war today, nor will there ever be.

Believers rely on prayer

Chaplain (Capt.) Michael J. Neufeld
203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division

We Americans are doers. A task is set before us and we tackle it with vigor and purpose. As a nation, we owe our prosperity, power and prominence, at least in part, to our dedication to the task of working to build a great nation.

reflections

Great strengths however, can become terrible weaknesses when taken to extremes. Indeed, our "can do" attitude can and often does lead to a sense that we are totally self-reliant. Why do we need anyone or anything else when all seems within our power?

The truth is that the value of our lives as humans is bigger than our ability to accomplish things. Our lives only find true meaning in our relationship with God. You and I were born to be one with the God who wonderfully created us, redeemed us and sustains us. What a dignity this is — to be called by the living God into the most intimate of relationships.

As with all relationships, our relationship with God is built on communication. God would have us pour our hearts to Him, trusting in the depth of his love for us. But even more, God would speak to his own — you and me — and share his very self, the depth of his love and his perfect will for each of us and for the world.

Prayer is not a nicety. It is not something to be done once per week and then forgotten. It is also not merely to be fit into our lives when we have the time or the pious inclination. We are children of a living God. Prayer, understood in this context is absolutely crucial to our lives, at least as important to our inner lives as the air we breathe. Cut off the lines of communication with the Lord and you will spiritually suffocate and die.

The call to each of us is to pray constantly. This is not an easy task for us. We are simply and sadly often far busy "doing" to stop and spend time with the Lord. Tragically, even when we do find the time to pray, we often treat prayer as just another task to be accomplished and approach it with the same dull resignation as we do so many other "chores."

Yet, God would have each of us wake up. God gives us the joy of his presence when we pray, but also a vision of his will for the world and the strength to carry it out. Seen in this light, prayer is a very practical activity, an absolute necessity for believers who are "doers."

Today has been set aside as World Day of Prayer. On this day, all of God's own are called to come before the Lord to seek his will for our broken world. Let us join together and come before the Lord in quiet and in prayer. But, let us do so only as a beginning. Let each day which follows also be a world day of prayer as we come to better trust and more closely follow our Father whose love for us is beyond measure.

Divorce rates rise since early 1900's

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life ministries Center

In 1900, the divorce rate in the United States was one for every 10 marriages, by 1993 the divorce rate was one for every two marriages (National Center for Health Statistics). Furthermore, marital and/or family discord has been linked to higher rates of depression in adults (especially women), juvenile delinquency and can even lead to physical health problems and a lowering of worker productivity (Center for Marital and Family Studies, University of Denver).

In 1995 the Council on Families in America issued this statement:

'The divorce resolution — the steady displacement of a marriage culture by a culture of divorce and unwed parenthood — has failed. It has created terrible hardships for children, incurred insupportable social costs and failed to deliver on its promise of greater adult happiness.'

By no means do I condemn those who have gone through a divorce for I fully realize that many had no other choice. No, my purpose is to address the destructive nature of divorce because it is destroying our children, our institutions and quite possibly our culture. The damaging effects of divorce upon couples and their children are incalculable. The tragedy is divorce is not only accepted, it is fast becoming expected. One study revealed that when a friend gets married, 64 percent of those surveyed expect the marriage to end in divorce. Only 31 percent expect it to last forever (Gary Smalley in One Home at a Time).

You may be facing one of the most important decisions of your life. Your marriage is in trouble and you are facing a monumental decision: stay together or get a divorce. Before you make a decision, you and your spouse need to gain the knowledge of what effects a divorce will have on your lives.

If you choose to remain married and attempt to resolve your difference, let me offer you some advice. It will be important for you and your spouse to find the help of a trained counselor who can assist you through your difficulties. The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is a place where you and your souse can find help.

For more information call the center at 545-1760.

Fun for children

Where can you take your children to participate in extracurricular activities that will not involve much travel or cost a lot? The School of Performing Arts (SPA) may be the answer you are looking for.

The school is sponsored by the Officers' Wives Club (OWC) and offers a variety of classes for children of all ages including gymnastics, dance and piano.

"The services offered through the SPA are beneficial for military families because the classes have quality instructors and an affordable rate," said Nancy Howel, president of the OWC. "The money generated from the school becomes part of the OWC welfare fund which provides donations for organizations such as, Santa's Castle, Army Family Team Building and several college scholarships."

Wendy Ditchfield, gymnastic instructor for the under 5-year-old program, was a competitive gymnast turned coach and enjoys teaching children tumbling and gymnastics.

"I love the sport of gymnastics and I enjoy the interaction with my students," Ditchfield said. "I have gained valuable knowledge over the years on how to help children feel good about themselves. Coaching is worth it when you can put a smile on a child's face after helping the child accomplish a task he couldn't do before."

Ditchfield said, that gymnastics carries over to all aspects of a child's life and that she was a prime example of this carry over from her childhood gymnastics experience.

"I had a terrible childhood and home life; however, the one thing I could look forward to was going to the gym and feeling like I could accomplish anything in the world," Ditchfield said. "It is no stretch to say that my positive experience in gymnastics as a child made me who I am today — I would not have been as successful or have such a positive outlook on life today without my gymnastics experience."

According to Ditchfield, teaching a toddler gymnastics encourages self-discipline, appropriate group behavior and intestinal fortitude along with developing agility, coordination and gross motor skills in a continually growing body.

"It is important for a child even at 2-years-old to come away from an experience feeling like they did it!" Ditchfield added.

"Coach Ditchfield's class is a great opportunity for my son Jarred because it introduces him to a different type of physical exercise that is new and exciting," said Kim Balcavage. "The instructor maintains order while providing an extremely fun environment for the children."

Ditchfeild said, there is more to coaching than teaching a perfect forward roll; it's helping a child enjoy what their learning.

"The good feeling a child gets from an experience is just as important as learning the skill," she added.

The SPA is open to all ranks and family members and offers the following classes:

Gymnastic classes for children under the age five, boys and girls are offered weekday mornings with instructor Wendy Ditchfield.

For more information, contact Ditchfield at 323-2786.

Gymnastic classes (beginning, intermediate and advanced) for boys and girls 5 years and up are offered Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons and evenings with Sally McDaniel.

For information, call McDaniel at 563-7870.

Dance classes (jazz, ballet and tap) for children 3 years and older. Classes are offered weekday afternoons and evenings on Tuesdays and Thursdays with instructor Regina Destephano.

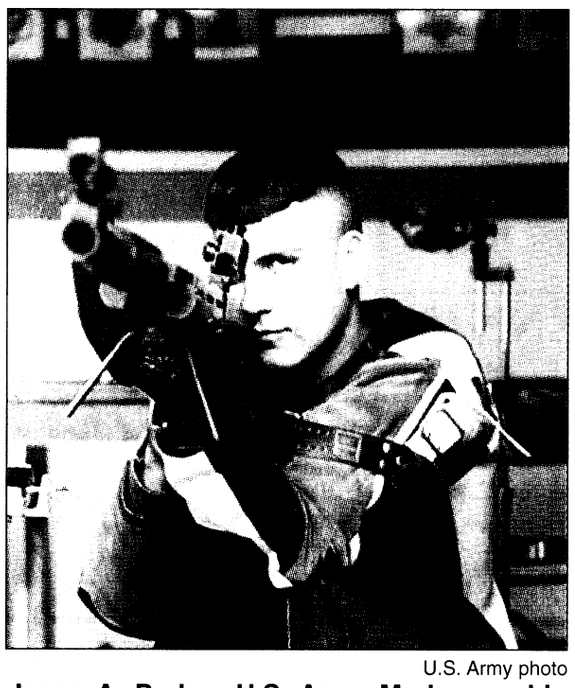
For information call Destephano at 682-4789.

Piano lesson are available weekday afternoons and evenings for anyone 4 years old through adult. Piano lessons have a monthly rate for weekly 30 minute lessons or weekly 45 minute lessons.

For information on piano lessons, call Diane Swiecicki at 297-6524.

USAMU shooter takes home honors as finest firer

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit



First he broke two world records and won a World Cup Gold Medal. then he won a Gold and Silver Medal in two more World Cups, becoming the first American shooter to win three World Cup Medals in a single season. Now, the Soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) has won a national shooting title.

USAMU international rifle shooter Jason A. Parker was selected as the 1998 USA Shooting Shooter of the Year, USA Shooting of 1 Olympic Plaza, Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the U.S. After being selected as the USA Shooting Male Rifle Shooter of the Year, Parker was selected as the overall Shooter of the Year out of all the winners in the four Olympic shooting disciplines. USAMU international pistol shooter Darryl L. Szarenski won the USA Shooting Male Pistol Shooter of the Year.

At only 24 years old, Parker, who has been shooting with the USAMU for less than two years, had a great year in 1998. Not only was he a member of the U.S. World Championship Shooting Team, but he also earned his International Distinguished Badge.

Parker won the Gold Medal in the Air Rifle Match at the World Cup in Buenos Aires, Argentina, last month and was selected as one of the 12 best air rifle shooters in the world to compete in the World Cup Final in Zurich, Switzerland, this month, where he finished fifth. In May, he won the Silver Medal from a field of 101 of the world's best marksmen in the Men's Air Rifle Match at the 1998 Milan World Cup, only a week after winning a Gold Medal and setting two world records at the Munich, Germany, World Cup, for which he was featured in Sports Illustrated's Faces in the Crowd column in June.

"As the reigning world-record holder, he has an excellent chance of making the 2000 Olympic Team and he has a great military career ahead of him," said USAMU Deputy Commander Robert Aylward.

Jason A. Parker, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, is the USA Shooting Shooter of the Year and he Army's top marksman.

"These days, with the wealth of talented athletes around the world, it's a rare feat to medal in consecutive World Cups like Jason did," said U.S. National Rifle Team Coach Dan Durben. "His accomplishments are a credit to his hard work, preparation and positive attitude."

"I'm excited that I had such a good year, it turned out a lot better than I thought it would," Parker said. "There were a lot of good shooters having success this year, like Sergeant (Thomas A.) Tamas who won the World Championship and Sergeant Szarenski who shot very well this year, so I was surprised that I won shooter of the year."

Parker said he owed much of his success to his coach Bill Krilling, who was recently named as the U.S. Olympic Committee National Coach of the Year in Shooting.

"Mr. Krilling has really helped me develop my technique," Parker explained. "I also get to practice and compete with the best shooters in the world right here on our team, and the unit has the best gunsmiths who make sure the guns are working right. I owe my success to the Marksmanship Unit and to the Army."

"This was his year, he did very well," Krilling said. "He's still on his way up. If he continues to improve at this pace, he'll be a favorite for the 2000 Olympic Team. By the time the Olympics are here, he'll be ready to go for the medal."

"I feel like I have a pretty good chance for the Olympics," Parker said. "I'm pretty confident in air rifle and I'm working on my smallbore to bring it up to the same level."

Raised in Omaha, Parker graduated from Bryan High School of Omaha in 1992. In 1996, he received a degree in psychology from Xavier University of Cincinnati, Ohio, where he won team Gold Medals in prone and air rifle, a Team Silver Medal and individual Bronze Medal in three-position at the 1994 Junior World Championships and was the 1995 and 1994 Junior Olympic Air Rifle Champion.

Parker enlisted in the Army in January 1997. After completing Basic and Infantry training, he was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in April 1997. In 1997, he won individual and team Gold Medals at the Championship of the Americas in Buenos Aires and placed second in Air Rifle at the National Championships. ◆

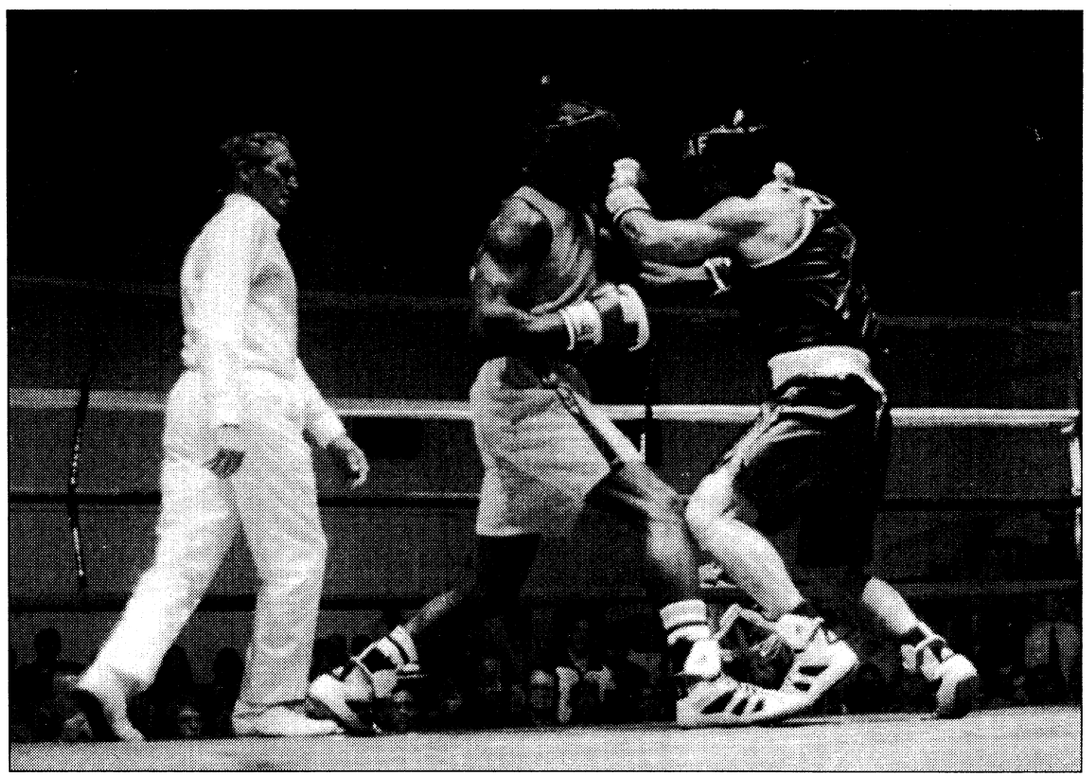
Army boxers prepare for championships

Harriet Rice
Army News Service

Fifteen Army boxers are among 250 of the top Olympic-style boxers in the United States getting set to compete at the 1999 Everlast U.S. Championships set for March 8-13 in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Of the 15, seven are double winners in their weight classes, having taken titles both at the All-Army and Armed Forces Championships held in February. Twelve soldiers are members of the Army's World Class Athlete Program based at Fort Carson, Colo.

Top fighters to watch are nationally ranked Olanda Anderson (178 lbs.), John Medina (112 lbs.), Yamar Resto (156 lbs.), Corey Bernard (139 lbs) and Stanley McClain (201 lbs.)



Number two-ranked light heavyweight Anderson battled the number three-ranked Air Force Joseph Pastorello, outpointing him for the Armed Forces title. "It was tough this year. I've got to pick it up a notch if I want to defend my national title," said Anderson.

Flyweight Medina picked up his fifth Armed Forces title this year. "Every time it's different, whether it's my first time or last time. We've got to step up to another level, not stay in just one place. We're getting better after every match," said the number two-ranked Fontana, Calif. native.

Head Coach Byron Moore is high on optimism. "All members of the team have the ability to make the semi-finals. I think Bernard is going to have an excellent performance. He's young, but I truly believe he can be ranked in the top three in his weight class," said Moore in a pre-event interview from Fort Carson.

A key factor is that Army boxers are finally accustomed to the new computerized scoring system now used in the United States. In the past, boxers could whip up a fast combination that looked pretty and scored points, but really didn't hurt anyone, Moore said. Not so anymore.

"Two judges have to identify a scoring blow within a second in order to register it as a point. The white portion of the glove has to hit the scoring area from the waist up to the headgear in the front of the face to be a scoring blow — and the punches have to have some 'oompf' behind them," he explained.

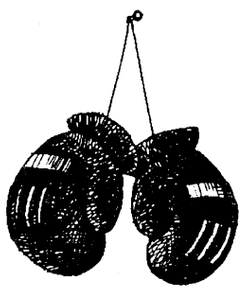
All-Army boxers trade punches during a preliminary match at Fort Carson, Colo. This match qualifies boxers fro the upcoming Everlast U.S. Championships. Selected matches will air on ESPN with dates and times to be announced.



This year's national championships could go a long way in determining the Olympic team for the 2000 Olympic Games. The top four finishers at this year's tournament will advance to the U.S. Challenge, a trial event for both the Pan American Games and the World Championship which take place later this year.

The competition is organized by USA Boxing, the national governing body that sanctions the championships along with the Colorado Association of USA Boxing. Preliminary bouts will be held at the Olympic Training Center. Semi-final and final rounds will be held March 11 and 13 at Colorado College. Selected fights will air (tape delay) on ESPN with dates and times to be announced.

The Army World Class Athlete Program provides accomplished soldier-athletes the training, coaching and opportunity to compete at national and international levels on their way to qualifying for the Olympic team. Always "soldiers first," the athletes must maintain their military skills and attend college in addition to their pursuing their sports goals. If called upon, they will deploy.

"All the athletes are top contenders. We're very excited, and the soldiers are very motivated. Our goal for the U.S. Championship this year is to win the team title. We're looking forward to it." said Moore.

Coach balances discipline, nurturing

Michael Kastre
Army News Service

Byron Moore, head boxing coach for the Army's World Class Athlete Program, knows the both the fury inside the ring and the turmoil it can create when you walk away from it. He said it was hard to retire as an active boxer in 1993, but he added, "Once I really got into coaching I realized what a great challenge it was so I focused on that. Not only was I an athlete who tried to put his best foot forward, but I found that motivating other athletes to do their best was a great challenge. I'm not looking for wins all the time. What I am always looking for is an athlete to perform at his best. I will always be satisfied with that."

Asked, about the state of Army boxing, Moore reflected, "If you go by the results of our success at the Olympic games-I would say the last two games-our athletes have fallen off and that's how most people review it." He went on to explain how the system works, "Two judges have to identify a scoring blow within a second in order to register it as a point. That is, the white portion of the glove has to hit the scoring area from the waist on up to the headgear in the front of the face to be a scoring blow. It has to be effective-you have to have some 'gumpf' behind it."

Having been on both sides of the ropes, Moore mused on that special combination of technical skill, 'heart' and attitude that all successful fighters seem to possess. "I think today, especially in amateur boxing, you have to have balance and a focus because you can have two guys in (the ring) with big hearts, but one is going to be more skillful than the other," he said.

"The one with skill edge should be victorious. But if you don't have any heart and you and are fighting a guy who does and is willing put it on the line, he might just walk over you and your skills. So I think in order to be a champion in amateur boxing you have to start off with

Big O helps lead team to title

Michael Kastre
Army News Service

Boxers representing all the military services slugged it out to determine Armed Forces Champions in 12 weight classes this week. The Army boxing team defended its title in a big way against the Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps champions by winning eight gold medals and two silver. They were led by 26-year-old Olanda Anderson, the number 2 ranked amateur light heavy weight in the nation. Anderson, a six-year army veteran, has appeared five times in the event and won four times.

The rangy and powerful Anderson, known to his teammates as Big O, had just returned from Russia where he lost a close rematch to Alexander Lesiak, a potential Olympic rival. Despite the loss, though, he showed he still had his championship form by out pointing Air Force Joseph Pastorello, ranked number 3 nationally, by a score of 15 to 7 in the 178 lb. class.

"This was very special to me because I had a title to defend," said the Sumter, S.C. native. "It was an opportunity to prove that I am still number one in my weight division in the military."

Outside the ring Anderson is quiet and easy going, but it's a different story when he steps between the ropes where he is far from low key. "He is the type of leader I would like to have if I were a young Soldier," said Army Boxing Head Coach Byron Moore. "He brings attitude into the ring."

Still, some observers say he needs to be even more aggressive when fighting and adopt a sort of 'junk yard dog' mentality. "I don't get into those debates," said Moore. "He is tracking well and I like what I see. I think he has the right attitude to win any fight that he sets his mind on-either in the U.S. or internationally."

Yet being top ranked can be distracting because it makes you a target. "It doesn't bother me as much as it used to," said Anderson. "I have a job to do and I focus on that."

Soldier fulfills basketball dream

Tim Hipps
Army News Service

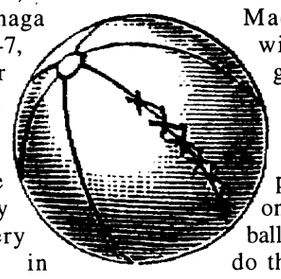
The U.S. Army spent eight years training George Evans, who in turn has put a college back on the NCAA basketball map.

Evans, who leads George Mason University in points, rebounds, blocks, steals, field-goal percentage and floor burns, is just three Patriot victories shy of living out his most-cherished dream.

By Sunday night, he will have fulfilled or failed to accomplish the No. 1 goal of his adult life — a trip to the first round of the NCAA Championships.

A decade has passed since the Patriots (16-10 overall, 13-3 Colonial Athletic Association) made their lone appearance at The Big Dance. And this George Mason bunch wouldn't have sniffed a whiff of the post-season party had George Evans never come to campus.

Playing in the NBA is merely icing on the cake of competing in March Madness. And if anyone knows about a reality check, Evans, 28, who spent eight years in the Army, is the man. He knows that winning the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament at Richmond Coliseum this weekend is what it's all about at this point, in his place, in our time.



Yes, Virginia, the sun will rise Monday regardless of the Patriots' outcome in the Commonwealth's Classic. But should they lose, the dreams of GMU seniors Jason Miskiri, Nik Mirich and Avery Carey will be quashed. And Evans, just a sophomore, is determined not to let that happen, not on this mission.

"The major thing for us to understand is that as quickly as it comes, it can be gone," Evans said of what he brought from the military to GMU. "Like when I was in Haiti, I remember when one of my associates from another unit was hooking up an electrical generator so we could have some electricity. It was nothing out of the ordinary, nobody was attacking us. We were just out there enjoying what little time we did have to just relax."

"And he got electrocuted. All five of his toes got blown off his right foot. He was in really bad shape," he recalled. "That just brought into perspective that as quickly as you have everything, it can be gone. I guess I just take that into basketball."

That's why Evans savors this weekend so much that he's determined to carry GMU on his shoulders.

"He constantly challenges himself to get better," GMU coach Jim Larranaga said of Evans, a 6-7, 225-pound center from Portsmouth, Va. "He is mature, goal-oriented and determined. He has the capability of scoring very effectively in transition, because he can really run the floor and from the low block with his jump hook and turnaround jumper. He can also crash the offensive board. He's our most reliable and most important go-to guy inside.

"He truly is a real impact player," Larranaga admitted.

The impact Evans has made on GMU's basketball program, along with the arrival of junior-college transfer guard Jason Miskiri could be compared to that Michael Jordan made on the NBA. Well, let's just say they rescued a downward-spiraling program. Second-year GMU coach Larranaga also is greatly responsible for the turnaround.

"Coach has always told us that attitude is the most important thing, no matter what," Evans said. "And he's got us really believing in that. Our attitude has to be just to play ball and to have fun. It's all mental. We just have to stay focused, have more poise down the stretch and just relax."

Last year, this team learned little about having fun together.

"Last year was pretty rough," Evans admits. "We lost and we lost and we lost. But just as quickly as we lost, we could've been champions, and it's just the opposite this year," he said. "As quickly as we've become one of the elite teams in the conference, we could be one of the worst teams once the tournament starts. We could lose the first game."

GMU's first game is set for noon Friday against the winner of Thursday's tournament play-in game between American (6-20, 2-14) and William & Mary (8-18, 3-13), teams that GMU has beaten twice. That winner will advance to Saturday's 6 p.m. semifinal, televised by Home Team Sports, against the James Madison-UNC-Wilmington winner. The championship game is set for Sunday at 7 p.m. on ESPN2.

"We have a page taped up in our lockers with 10 philosophies, and the first one is: 'We will pressure the ball.' And that's it. If you don't do that, you're not part of our system. I don't care about the points or the rebounds or whatever, I just want to win. I came from the Army, where we won all the time."

Evans won a gold medal with the All-Army Team and a silver medal in Italy with the All-Armed Services Team, a combination of Army, Air Force, Navy and Marines. His post-level team also won the championship every year.

"I'm just used to winning," he said. "I know nothing else. I hate to lose."

Despite the fact that his single mother isn't a big fan, winning basketball games runs in the Evans family.

"Mom's just not a big basketball fan," said Evans, whose brother Darian, 22, is a senior playing for the University of South Alabama, which made the NCAA Tournament last year. "We've tried and tried to get her to games, but she just can't do it. She's not into it."

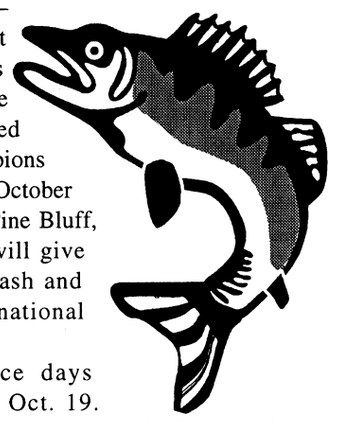
"It was tough for me to watch him (Darian) on TV last year when they went to the tournament," George admitted. "I kept wondering if I'm ever going to get there and get the opportunity to experience that. I love college basketball. I watch it all the time. I've been watching March Madness for years on TV and thinking: 'Wow! I wonder how it is to be there? Just to feel the excitement there.' Now, I'm just trying to make the most of this and trying to experience that."

In the Army, Evans drove for President Clinton's top military adviser, General John Shalikashvili, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"I was like an E-3 or E-4," Evans recalled. "And he was just a general. That was my job, no big deal. But once he made it up to the Chairman of Joint Chiefs, then everybody started asking me what it was like to drive him around. He was just a regular guy to me. He talked to me. He had conversations with me about family life and the Army. He was just a great guy. If you ever have an opportunity to meet him, you should."

During the 1996-97 season, Evans averaged 40 points and 18 rebounds for his post-level team at Aberdeen, Md., which averaged more than 100 points a game. But stints in the Persian Gulf, Somalia and Haiti began to take their toll on his game. At 25, he realized it was time to make a call between the Army and basketball.

"When I first told my brother that I was going to leave the Army and go play ball, he said that I was crazy," Evans recalled. "For a long time, he kept saying: 'You can't be serious, Brother, you're lying.' But eventually, after he saw me play in a tournament last year against New Orleans, he gave me a call and said: 'Great game, man. I didn't think you could make an impact like that.' Ever since then, he's been positive and given me a lot of confidence. I really needed that."



Darian, a 6-6, 220-pounder, is about the same size as George. Can the old Army vet still take his little brother?

"He'll say that I can't," George says. "But age will get him every time. It's still a thinking man's game.

"Right now, I just want to enjoy it, and first and foremost, get my degree," Evans said of his future. "Then, whatever happens after that happens."

Albanian faction agrees to sign agreement

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

The ethnic Albanian faction in Kosovo has agreed to sign a peace agreement by March 15, but Serbs have not approved any deal.

Pentagon spokesman Ken Bacon told reporters during a Feb. 23 news conference that U.S. aircraft sent to Europe earlier in case NATO ordered an air campaign will remain deployed for the time being.

"We will evaluate the situation and take a few days to make the decision on whether (the aircraft) stay or come home," Bacon said.

President Bill Clinton said at the White House that any vicious or aggressive Serb acts can still be met by NATO air strikes. He said NATO Secretary-General Javier Solana still has alliance> authority to order air strikes — and whether he does depends on the Serbs.

DoD also said the American component of a possible NATO peacekeeping force in Kosovo would cost $1.5 billion to $2 billion per year. Some 4,000 U.S. service members would be part of the force, about 2,200 of them members of the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit, Camp Lejeune, N.C. The Marines are currently deployed in the Mediterranean aboard the USS Nassau, USS Pensacola and USS Nashville; Bacon said they would stage through Thessaloniki, Greece.

State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said the ethnic Albanians said they would sign an accord after consulting with residents in Kosovo. More than 2,000 people have died in the year-long conflict between Kosovar separatists and the Serbs.

Bacon said the U.S. government hopes both sides will exercise restraint.

"We believe this is an opportunity for the Serbs and the Kosovar Albanians to put war behind them and live in peace," he said. "Neither side should provoke the other."

He said the next challenge in negotiations is to convince Serb President Slobodan Milosevic that the area is "better off with NATO patrolling a demilitarized Kosovo."

Bacon said any peacekeeping force in Kosovo would be mostly European. The United States would provide roughly 17 percent of the ground forces compared to 33 percent when NATO went intoBosnia.

"The United States is a leader of NATO," he said. "The NATO allies and the Kosovar Albanians want U.S. participation."

DoD fulfills 1997 Defense Reform Initiative

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

DoD has made progress in fulfilling the 1997 Defense Reform Initiative, but more can be done and the department should "institutionalize" the process, Defense Secretary William S. Cohen said March 1. Deputy Defense Secretary John Hamre said he was satisfied with the progress DoD has made in implementing the reform initiative, except for its inability to get approval for two new rounds of base realignments and closures.

Cohen also unveiled a CD-ROM on the initiative entitled"Partnering for Excellence." The disk highlights the status of reforms and features new reforms the department is working on.

He held it up during a Pentagon news briefing and said it was another example of the way he wants the department to head. "In keeping with our desire to move the department toward an electronic and paperless environment, I decided that our first status report on defense reform should be available solely in an electronic format," he said. "A CD report is easy to use; it is widely available and included on our DoD Web site, DefenseLink."

Cohen said DoD would not use the first sustained increase in the DoD budget in 15 years as an excuse to derail reforms. "On the contrary, now more than ever, our ability to both secure the necessary funding for our men and women in uniform and sustain efforts to prepare them for future missions hinge on our ability to build the most efficient, effective support structure possible," he said.

The U.S. military is world class even after severe downsizing, major spending cuts and reorganization, Cohen said. But the war-fighting force has shrunken faster than its support structure, he added, warning, "We risk having a world-class military being encumbered by proportionately larger yet less efficient support infrastructure."

DoD needs reforms because it hasn't enough to pay for all its high-priority readiness and modernization needs, even with promised, sustained budget increases, Cohen said. It needs base closures for the same reason, he added. The BRAC rounds of 1988, 1991, 1993 and 1995 will have saved $14.5 billion by fiscal 2001 with annual savings of $5.7 billion per year. The department expects BRAC rounds in 2001 and 2005 would net significant savings that could be channeled to readiness and modernization.

Hamre said he believes a base closure commission is a real possibility. "When I speak to people on the Hill, they have an understanding of our situation," he said.

The DRI started with four pillars: elimination, re-engineering, consolidation and competition. The program expanded to include such areas as acquisition reform, logistics improvement, financial management and quality of life programs for DoD personnel. The expansion institutionalized the program so workers are used to "reforming the support structure on an ongoing basis," Hamre said.

Hamre said it is easy to track the progress the department has made under the DRI. "When the secretary tasked us to do this, he said 'I don't want any "airy-fairy" stuff, I want real tracking of progress that you're trying to make,'" Hamre said. "We've tried to highlight that in this report."

Another way to chart DoD's progress is in competition. DoD wants to use competitive bidding for functions currently performed in-house. DoD saves money no matter whose bid wins, in-house activities or private contractors. The department expects to save $11.2 billion by competing 229,000 positions through fiscal 2005.

The CD also has information specifically aimed at communities that might be affected if new base closure rounds are approved.

The winning slogan will be featured in the voting program's 2000-2001 media campaign, which focuses on increasing voter awareness worldwide and encouraging citizen participation in the Democratic process.

DoD conducts virtual job fair

Army News Service

The Department of Defense (DoD) is conducting an Internet-based virtual job fair for individuals leaving military service from Europe, their family members, and DoD civilians in Europe. The cyberspace event is a first for the DoD, although virtual job fairs are not new to the private sector. The job fair began yesterday and will continue through March 15.

The Web-based European job fair offers military personnel, DoD employees, and family members access to about 100 firms offering more than 13,000 jobs worldwide. These jobs range from telecommunications to trucking to health care to retail sales. A private contractor developed the job fair site which can be reached via the European Command (EUCOM) Web site at http://www.eucom.mil. Access is limited to individuals leaving military service, DoD civilians and contractors in Europe, and their families.

Job seekers can create and post resumes and search an easy-to-use database with information about prospective jobs, employers, employment locations and benefits. Job seekers can also take advantage of an on-line library of career resources and send electronic mail (e-mail) directly to companies. These services will be available 24 hours a day, seven days a week for the duration of the virtual job fair.

For those individuals who do not have e-mail, the site offers links to free Web-based e-mail services, to include furnishing a unique e-mail address to any participant needing an address. In addition, EUCOM has arranged extended hours at many base sites, including libraries and transition assistance offices, to allow Service members, DoD civilians, and families without home access to take part in the virtual job fair. European Command has been pre-registering individuals for the fair since January, and more than 2,500 persons have logged in.

"Today, the virtual job fair is taking the place of the traditional, labor-intensive job fairs the Department has held in Europe since 1993," said Ollie Smith, deputy director of the Office of Family Policy. Smith manages the DoD's transition assistance programs. "We hope the response will be very positive," Smith said. "The virtual job fair allows people who couldn't attend traditional job fairs to participate in this important employment program. They can even do it on their own time, whenever and wherever they have access to a computer connected to the Web. Plus, the will be able to choose from more jobs and more employers than ever before."

Benning institutes ID policy

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning has instituted a new policy which requires Soldiers to wear their identification tags at all times when on duty and suggests Soldiers wear them at all times — regardless of their duty stations. The new policy includes wear with the physical fitness uniform.

According to one post official, "We train more than 50,000 Soldiers a year here and most are in some sort of high-risk training. It just makes sense that we need to be able to correctly identify Soldiers under all circumstances, especially in emergency situations."

Post officials point out that the wear of ID tags when in a duty status and even while off duty, is "just common sense." "We do a lot of high risk training that includes physical fitness training. If something were to happen to a Soldier and the Soldier lost consciousness, the ID tags would tell authorities immediately who he is."

Soldier program enhances survivability, lethality

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Any Soldier who has spent extended periods of time in the field can probably attest to the fact that anything which makes life a little bit easier is a godsend. Those who rush out to stock up on these "lifesaving" items can take some comfort in knowing that there is an Army program that works to alleviate this trip to the store and the cost that comes with it.

The Soldier Enhancement Program (SEP), which was created in 1989, benefits Soldiers by providing them with better and more user friendly equipment in a process that is intended to cut acquisition times in half, said SEP manager Ken Sutton.

The program initially focused on the dismounted Soldier, but has been expanded to include all Soldiers. SEP is designed to enhance survivability, lethality, mobility, command and control and sustainability of an individual Soldier in a combat situation, by speeding the process of adding commercial "off the shelf" items to the Army inventory, Sutton said.

Whereas something may take up to seven to 10 years to be introduced into the Army's inventory through the normal acquisition process, SEP's goal is to begin fielding the equipment within three years.

"When Soldiers get ready for the field they end up going to Ranger Joes, the Cavalry Store or Brigade Quartermaster and they spend their own money buying equipment to use in the field, and we don't want them to have to do that," Sutton said. "If the equipment is that good, the Army ought to buy it and give it to them."

Sutton explained that the program revolves around the ideas and suggestions of the people. In fact, he said anyone who uses items he feels enhances his effectiveness in a tactical situation or has ideas of how to improve a commercial item may be able to impact the Army.

The process of actually incorporating those suggestions begins with the proposal. First off, to even be considered as a proposal an idea must involve items or equipment that can be worn, carried or consumed for individual use in a tactical environment.

If the proposal meets this criteria, it is then sent to the proper proponent for evaluation. Sutton said an example of this would be the mine probe. If someone had a suggestion for an improved mine probe, it would be sent to the Engineer School, because that is the proponent for that item. The proponent evaluates the items based on whether the Army really needs them or not.

If the item is considered a "need" the proposal is then sent to a material developer which evaluates it for technological risk.

A low technological risk would consist of items that are available off the shelf. Medium risk items need to be "tweaked" a bit in order to be suitable for the field. High risk items would be ones that are not commercially available.

Sutton added high risk items are not handled by SEP because the program doesn't do research and development.

It is during an annual review of all ongoing Soldier modernization projects that an executive council selects SEP new start proposals for the next fiscal year.

This year, of the 134 proposals submitted, a little more than 30 met the criteria and made it through the needs and risk assessments. However, only 10 proposals were actually chosen by the executive council to begin testing in the year 2000, Sutton said.

An example of an item that was proposed for testing in the year 2000 is a M240 Combat Ammunition Pack (CAP). The CAP provides Soldiers with a small, lightweight, reusable ammunition magazine or container that attaches directly to the M240B Machine Gun. There is also a thermal cutting device which gives Soldiers the capability to quickly cut through steel bars, burglar bars, locks and hinges during Military Operation on Urban Terrain operations.

So far SEP has adopted about 100 pieces of equipment that Soldiers may be currently using. Such things as the mini mag flashlight, new menus for the Meals Ready to Eat, plastic handcuffs and improved body armor are a few examples of these.

Sutton mentioned one of things that makes the program valuable to Soldiers is the fact that Soldiers are the ones who can make suggestions.

"What I really like to get best is input from the Soldiers and commanders,

Michelle Harvey

Faith Middle School students Michael Driggers and Jackson Lee rehearse a skit for the Odyssey of the Mind Regional Competition, which is set for Saturday.

Odyssey of the Mind

Students prepare for competition

Michelle Harvey
Special to the Bayonet©

In an effort to promote cooperative learning and teamwork, Faith Middle School will compete in the Odyssey of the Mind (OM) Division II Chattahoochee Regional Competitions Saturday at Jordan High School in Columbus.

Odyssey of the Mind is an event which allows students in kindergarten through college around the world to exercise creative thinking and problem-solving skills through dramatization of an historical event.

If a particular team from any school participating wins the regional level, the team advances to the state level. Furthermore, if the team wins state championship, the team will compete in the World Competition.

Faith Middle School has participated in the event for 15 years. Last year, the school placed seventh in the World Competitions.

"It's thinking of what something is, and what it can become is what Odyssey of the Mind is all about," said Cindy Givens, one of the coaches for the Faith Middle School team.

"It's giving the kids the opportunity to think creatively," she said.

The students must solve a problem by creating and presenting an eight-minute dramatic performance based on the first or last scene of a play that relates to history.

"Schools from the United States and around the world were sent copies of a long-term problem," said Ann Trawick, who is also a coach for the competition. "We are given weeks, months even to solve the problem in a creative way."

This year's theme for OM is "O My Faire Shakespeare," in which the students had to write a play, produce lyrics, design costumes and the scenic backdrop within a budget of $100.

"We chose the play MacBeth from Shakespeare and we integrated the historical event of Cleopatra having her brother Ptolemy XIII killed, in order to gain the Egyptian throne," Trawick said.

"It's similar to the play MacBeth, in which MacBeth kills the character Duncan in order to gain the Scottish throne," she added .

"Queen of Denial" is the name of the skit, and the students believe it best describes their main character, Cleopatra.

"She is the Queen of denial," said Laura Rose, a student from Faith, who plays the role of Cleopatra. "She's somebody who has to have her way at all times."

Although the main character seems to be quite egotistical, the team learned the importance of working well with others for a common goal.

"You have to be able to get along with your teammates," Rose said. "You must be able to work with people, be creative and always have team spirit and motivation to go on," she said.

Through this competition, the students will develop skills that can help them be effective leaders in the future.

"Tomorrow's world is going to need more people who can effectively solve problems," Givens said. "The skills they develop today through these competitions is something that they can carry with them in the future," she said.

When I was given the assignment of writing a commentary on words of wisdom, I began to recall all of the useless advice people seemed to think I was in need of.

commentary

For as long as I can remember, people have told me not to count my chickens before they hatched, look before I leapt and not to bite off more than I could chew — none of which ever made any sense to me.

I began to ignore all the advice until someone finally said something that has actually helped me through many tough times in my life.

Whenever I feel as if I am in over my head, I remember this simple phrase — "Don't sweat the small stuff, because everything is small stuff."

Now as little as one might think these simple words help, when you put them into perspective they can make every trying time a little easier.

I used to find myself worrying about everything under the sun. I ended every day with a headache and without solutions to anything. I was constantly on the edge and cranky.

One day, I was discussing things with a close friend of mine and he told me not the sweat the small stuff. I was totally dumfounded. I thought he had not been listening to a word I said. Everything I was worried about seemed so important to me.

But then he finished by saying that no matter how big I thought the problem was, it was all small stuff in the long run.

After about an hour of thinking about what I had just heard, I decided that taking this point of view was worth a try.

I began blowing things off and not caring about the things that were out of my control. I also began to realize all of the problems that were in my control. That was the key to making the advice work. I began to realize there was a solution to everything. When people panic, solutions become hazy and clouded.

I was amazed to find how quickly answers to problems came to me when I did not worry about them. I began to find myself a lot happier and relaxed. I was able to think things through with a clearer head.

I also learned another important lesson — I shouldn't push people's advice away, but try to apply it to my life. I figure if it has influenced someone's life enough where they believe it may help me, who am I to argue.

Past decades increase feminine awareness

Staff Sgt. Ronald Stokes
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

As recently as the 1970s, women's history was virtually an unknown topic in the kindergarten through twelfth-grade curriculum or in the general public's consciousness.

commentary

To address this situation, the Education Task Force of the Sonoma County (California) Commission on the Status of Women initiated a "Women's History Week" celebration in 1978.

The date chosen was the week of March 8 to make International Women's Day the focal point of the observance.

The activities that were held were met with enthusiastic response and within a few years, dozens of schools planned special programs for Women's History Week.

In 1979, groups were invited to participate in Women's History Institutes at Sarah Lawrence College, such as the national leaders of organizations for women and girls. When others learned about the country-wide Women's History Week celebration, they decided to initiate similar celebrations within their organizations and school districts. They also agreed to support the efforts to secure a Congressional Resolution declaring a "National Women's History Week." In 1981, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch and Rep. Barbara Mikulski co-sponsored the first Joint Congressional Resolution.

As word spread rapidly across the nation, state departments of education encouraged celebrations of National Women's History Week as an effective means to achieving equality goals within classrooms. Maryland, Pennsylvania, New York, Oregon, Alaska and other states developed and distributed curriculum materials to all their public schools. Organizations sponsored essay contests and other special programs in their local areas.

Within a few years, thousands of schools and communities were celebrating National Women's History Week, supported and encouraged by resolutions from governors, city councils, school boards and the U.S. Congress.

In 1987, the National Women's History Week Project petitioned Congress to expand the national celebration to the entire month of March. Since then, the Women's History Month Resolution has been approved with bipartisan support in both the House and the Senate. Each year, programs and activities in schools, workplaces and communities have become more extensive as information and program ideas have been developed and shared.

The popularity of women's history celebrations have sparked new interest in uncovering women's forgotten heritage. Many states and cities have instituted a "Women's Hall of Fame." This month, take the time to look at the contributions women have played in shaping our nation.

Dedication of women keeps country moving

Lt. Col. Rick Thomas
Public Affairs Officer, Fort McClellan, Ala.

My wife makes the absolute best chicken and dressing in the world — no exaggeration.

So, unless you have been invited to my house for a scrumptious dinner of chicken and dressing, you're probably asking yourself what does her dressing have to do with me.

See, my wife is also a full-time teacher, completely dedicated to ensuring young boys and girls have the basic tools needed to succeed.

On numerous occasions, she has tossed and turned at night because she was concerned for one of her students, either academically or personally.

Like our instructors in the Military Police School, Chemical School and Training Brigade, she too must prepare lesson plans and monitor the progress of her students. As a teacher, just as in the military, my wife gets equal pay for an equal job. When she gets home at night, she somehow manages the household, although I do run things in the house, like the vacuum cleaner, dish washer, etc.

She raised two children who are now in their final years of being teenagers.

Raising children is a full-time job by itself and each age presents different challenges; however, she seems to have answers regardless of the age of our kids.

Dinner will always be ready in "10 minutes," despite still wearing her school clothes. Rarely is dinner served out of bags. Although every meal may not include seven courses, each meal includes nearly every food group, often to the chagrin of my kids and me.

Once she's finished with school and our home, she crams in time to volunteer at the chapel, directs the Protestant Youth Group, participates in a high school booster club, assists with the refreshment stand at girls' soccer games, participates in the Fort McClellan Women's Club and offers to help just about anyone else who calls to ask for assistance or support.

Generally, by the time she's headed out the door to volunteer, I'm heading upstairs to go to sleep.

Now, you're probably asking yourself again, "What is so different about this guy's wife? My wife does the same thing."

Folks, you're absolutely right and that's exactly why we have Women's History Month.

There is no way my house, nor this country, could flourish without women. I believe it's been that way for over 200 years.

My personal success, however slight, is because Jo Ann has been there for 21 years. Likewise, our nation's success is based on foundations built and maintained by women.

By the way, March is also Women in Education Month.

You ever wonder?

The structure of today's military ranks can be traced back as early as the days where kings, queens and knights ruled the land.

A "sergeant" was originally a "serviens," or servant, who attended a knight in the field or on a field of battle.

An experienced fighter, but without the money and titles he would have needed to qualify as a knight, "sergeant" was more an occupation than a rank. In an era where anyone on the battlefield was an opponent, armed or not, the sergeant became a fighting man even if only for self-defense.

Not many kings or lords could afford a large standing force. Large armies were raised only when they were needed, usually by conscription. With his experience and expertise, the sergeant could be called upon to train and lead the drafted force, and if the occasion arose, keep them from running off the battlefield during the fight.

In times of peace, the sergeant could be employed as a guard or part of a police force. Today's title "sergeant-at-arms" is a reminder of the (armed) sergeants once hired to maintain order.

Today's sergeants wear their rank in the form of "stripes" or more correctly "chevrons." French for "roof" or "rafter," the chevron has appeared on shields and coats-of-arms since the 12th century, making them a symbol of honor.

In 1782, enlisted men serving under Gen. George Washington who had served for three years "with bravery, fidelity and good conduct" could be identified by "a narrow piece of white cloth, of angular form" sewn on their uniform coat's left sleeve.

For an entertaining and educational history of ranks, look up Why is the Colonel called Kernal written by Raymond Oliver, the museum curator of the McClellan Aviation Museum at www.airforcehistory.hq.af.mil.

CRC

Staff ensures Soldiers, civilians are prepared

Staff Sgt. Christine Judkins
Sgt. Jennifer Koentop
133rd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

There are Soldiers and civilians tucked away every week in the Harmony Church area of Fort Benning waiting to go to all corners of the world.

From Norway to Kuwait and Bosnia to Saudi Arabia, a joint effort between Fort Benning and the staff of the Continental United States Replacement Center (CRC) ensures Soldiers and civilians are prepared before they deploy around the globe.

"The CRC's mission is to receive and process non-unit related personnel and units for deployment to and redeployment from the theaters of operations," said Sgt. 1st Class Leon Sumlin, the NCOIC of Company A, CRC.

"We care and feed the Soldiers while they are here. Also, we validate paperwork and ship Soldiers out," added Lt. Col. Robert Marsh, commander of the CRC.

There are an average of 235 troops on the ground per week, Sumlin said.

CRC's support includes taking care of weapons qualification, paperwork, equipment issue and customer service, he added.

Marsh speaks highly about the support he has received from Fort Benning.

Installation support comes from the Post Adjutant General; Directorate of Public Works; Medical and Dental Activity Command; the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate; the 29th Infantry Regiment and the Directorate of Logistics.

The installation support comes together in a weekly cycle for deploying Soldiers at the CRC that includes medical screenings and physicals through MEDDAC. The 29th Infantry Regiment provides support by conducting the M16 and M9 weapons qualification ranges. The 29th also conducts Individual Replacement Training where students rotate through various stations such as medical evacuation procedures, driving hazards and convoy operations, countermine operations, mine awareness and situational awareness skills. The Directorate of Logistics conducts U.S. Army Europe drivers testing and also helps issue Soldiers' and civilians' equipment through the Central Issuing Facility.

Staff Sgt. Tommy Reid, Co. B, supply NCOIC, CRC, distributes linen to a Soldier preparing to deploy.

According to Sumlin, the CRC is composed of two companies. Company A handles all deploying personnel and Company B handles re-deploying personnel.

The CRC is located in the Harmony Church area of Fort Benning, just a few miles away from main post. The compound consists of 13 single story cinder block buildings; a headquarters element, two companies, a dining facility, recreational room and eight billets.

Marsh said he expects the recreational room to be manned by personnel around the middle of this month.

Since December 1995, the CRC has supported Operations Joint Endeavor, Guard and Forge Operation Southern Watch, and Operation Desert Fox, which have personnel in Germany, Italy, United Kingdom, Spain, Bosnia, Croatia, the Former Republic of Yugoslavia, Hungary, Kuwait and other countries.

Personnel who process through the CRC include military members of all services and components (Active Reserve, National Guard), civilians (contractors, Department of Defense, Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Red Cross), and Army units (Reserve Components).

CRC is run by the U.S. Army Reserve Command from Fort McPherson, Ga. The Active Guard and Reserve Soldiers and the CRC fall under the operational control of the 11th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning, said Capt. Walker, an AGR Soldier assigned to the CRC.

The cadre consists of 16 Active Guard Reserve permanent party Soldiers; 10 Individual Ready Reserve and Individual Mobilization Augmentee Soldiers on 120 to 179 day temporary duty, 19 Annual Training soldiers on a 21 day TDY; and four temporary support personnel from Fort Benning, explained Walker. The installation also provides the CRC with two active duty Soldiers on special detail, a sergeant major and a major who works in the S-3 shop.

The CRC also conducts weekly After Actions Reviews and uses critique sheets with processing personnel to continue to improve the operation and quality of life. Marsh says quality of life is a high priority, and the CRC, along with Fort Benning, continue efforts to improve the facilities and processing of personnel at the CRC.

Solicitors must follow guidelines

Staff Sgt. Melanie R. Rowton
Detachment 1, 314th MPAD

As if the accumulation of cigarette butts and roadside litter isn't enough, some solicitors are making matters worse by illegally placing pamphlets, fliers and posters on vehicles, unit bulletins or even directly faxing advertisements to units.

Unfortunately, solicitation on post is creating an even bigger burden than just extra "police call" duty. Now solicitation has begun invading the privacy of Soldiers and their families in residential areas and in billets.

"The biggest problems arise from solicitors knocking on door. This is strictly prohibited according to AR 210-7 (Commercial Solicitation on Army Installations) and USAIC Supplement 1 to the regulation," said Janice Kaye Kyle, Family Support Assistant for the Directorate of Community Activities.

"Young Soldiers are the biggest targets for insurance solicitors," Kyle said. "A lot of companies host free food parties for the purpose of gathering their audience. The problem is their method of advertisement and that the Soldiers they target are usually younger and don't really understand fully what they are getting into."

These absolute violations of Army policies and regulations not only leave extra litter flying around post, but worse, they lure young Soldiers into purchases or services they do not need.

Some other points that need to be addressed, according to Kyle, is that commanders are responsible for having each Soldier E-3 or below, fill out a DA form 2056 for any commercial insurance solicitation that they end up buying. This counseling should be done by the appointed insurance officer or the Staff Judge Advocate Office. This ensures that Soldiers are aware of their SGLI benefits as well as the new policy they are buying and they are counseled on the costs and provisions of his or her existing benefits.

Annually, Fort Benning updates the USAIC circular 210-7 that lists authorized solicitation agents and companies. It also posts those which are currently suspended from soliciting on the installation. According to USAIC Supplement 1 to AR 210-7 it is never authorized to solicit in training units. This includes initial entry training and the 75th Ranger Regiment and 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment due to the sensitivity of their training.

"This supplement is currently being revised to also include some airborne training units," Kyle said. "The best way to solicit legally is to use those avenues available specifically for that purpose. This ensures people aren't badgered but have a choice in the matter. These include, The Bayonet, direct mail and the telephone (commercial only)," Kyle said.

Commanders are advised to set aside a prescribed area at battalion level or higher headquarters for the purpose of soliciting to Soldiers by appointment only. This area must not be dayrooms or billet areas during weekends or during lunchtime.

The only door-to-door solicitations that will be approved are annual cookie sales and Christmas greenery sales by Boy and Girl Scouts; food collections for the needy; Youth Services' sports teams fund-raisers; and Fort Benning Schools' organizations such as PTO's. "The big difference is that these fund-raisers are not for profit and they are not year -round," Kyle said.

Questions regarding solicitation do's and don'ts should be addressed to Janice Kyle 545-6811.

SEP: Benefits Soldiers

because they are the people who know best what the Army needs," Sutton said. Suggestions from Soldiers are more credible and carry more weight with the SEP program because they are closest to the problem."

Although the SEP program is part of Soldier modernization efforts, he stressed it is not an Incentive Awards Program.

"Soldiers do not benefit from the program monetarily, but it's an opportunity for them to improve the Army with Soldier modernization," Sutton said. "If they have a good idea and it gets through all the gates, the Army is going to make it available to them. And if it makes their lives better in the field and it makes them more lethal, more survivable, more sustainable and mobile, then that's how they benefit."

Sutton added that anyone who has an idea can submit a proposal during a three month window which usually runs from June to August. During this time people can e-mail him at suttonk@benning.army.mil, fax him at DSN 835-1377 or call at 545-6047 or DSN 835-6047. Individuals can also pick up SEP proposal forms from the TRADOC System Manager-Soldier Office in Infantry Hall.

Soldiers enrolled in the Military on the Move (MOM) Pregnancy PT Program perform a step aerobics workout routine Monday. MOM Soldiers meet five days a week for physical training and educational classes that prepare them for childbirth as well as keep them in shape.

A Soldier performs one repetition of an aerobic routine while staying at a safe heart rate.

Pregnancy PT provides Soldiers with safe alternatives to unit training

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The image of a Soldier can be envisioned as a lean, strong-muscled, cardiovascular-fit individual due to hours of physical training (PT). However, what do female Soldiers do when they become expectant mothers and want to keep in shape?

In 1994, Fort Benning took the first step in giving these Soldiers the opportunity to stay fit with a pregnancy PT pilot program. The program has become known as the Military on the Move (MOM) Pre- and Postnatal Fitness Program.

The MOM program follows American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists guidelines and includes individual exercise restrictions tailored by each Soldier's physician to meet their physical needs while keeping the mother's and baby's safety in mind.

According to the U.S. Army Community Health Nursing Office, there are a variety of benefits mothers receive from the MOM program.

"I have seen Soldiers receive a sense of enjoyment when they can maintain a level of physical fitness while experiencing less weight gain and keeping muscle tone during pregnancy," said Staff Sgt. Kristina Cook, U.S. Army Community Health Nursing.

U.S. Army Community Health Nurse Capt. Lisa Leazenby believes the program is not only important for the health of the mother and baby, it allows the mother to return to a physical readiness condition faster than if they were to do minimal PT for the full nine months of pregnancy.

MOM consists of a variety of different exercise programs designed specifically for the pregnant Soldier. The program includes intensive aerobic exercise, strength and endurance training, running or walking and push-up and sit-up improvement.

According to statistics gathered by Army Community Health Nursing, Soldiers who exercise during pregnancy are able to reach their previous fitness level six months postpartum compared to Soldiers who do not exercise during pregnancy. Of the Soldiers, 47.6 percent who participated in pregnancy PT increased their PT scores an average of 19 points six months postpartum compared to 12 percent of Soldiers who did not participate.

However, not only is it important for pregnant Soldiers to be enrolled in a program geared to keep in shape, safety is also an issue. MOM is PT geared specifically for the pregnant Soldier, according to Leazenby.

"When a Soldier is pregnant, the body releases hormones which cause joints to loosen, so stretches and exercises must be modified," Leazenby said. "Pregnant Soldiers should not lay on their backs or do anything that causes them to be extremely out of breath. The bottom line is a Soldier needs to be able to talk while exercising and take an exercise at their own pace if they need to. This ensures they have enough oxygen available for the baby."

One of the Soldiers enrolled in the MOM program, Spc. Melissa Clark, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, said she believes all pregnant Soldiers should be encouraged to attend.

"Pregnancy PT keeps me at my target heart rate for 30 minutes without endangering my baby," Clark said. "Most people do not understand the physical demands of being pregnant. Pregnancy PT takes me and my child's safety into consideration."

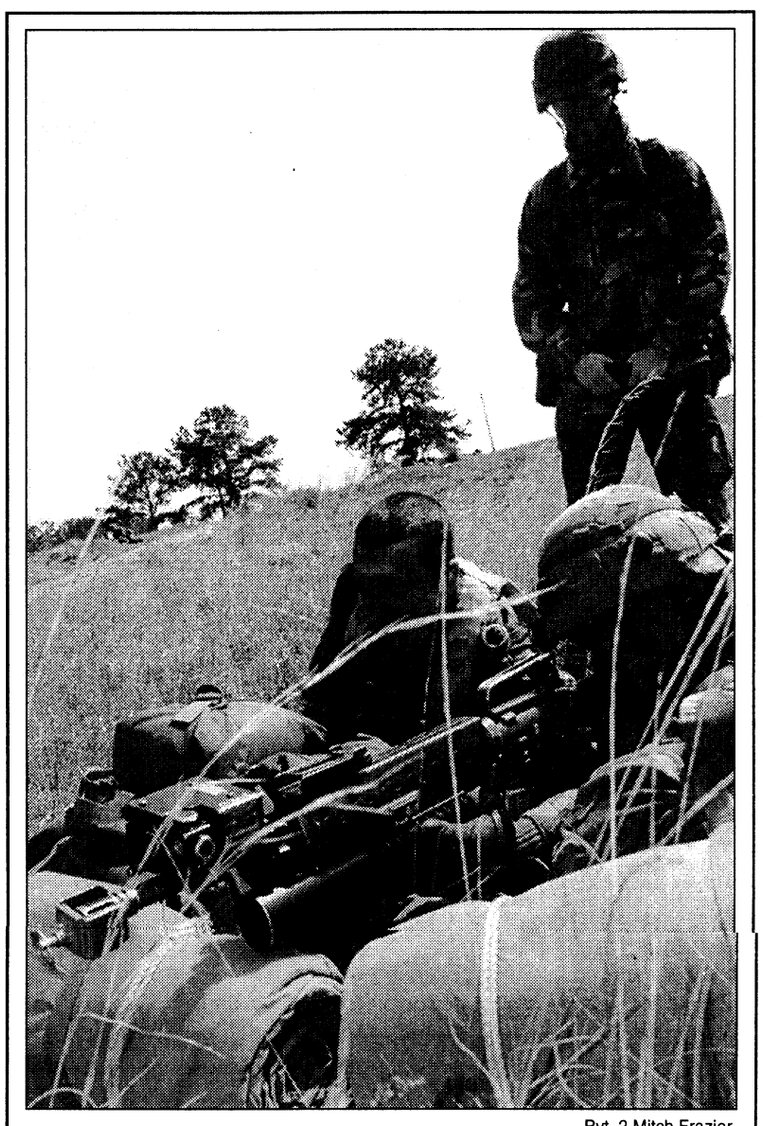
The program is not just geared towards the physical fitness of the Soldiers, MOM also contains educational programs, which covers topics of what Soldiers should expect during pregnancy, labor and childbirth. Moms-to-be also learn how to take care of their baby, learn about regulations governing Soldiers during pregnancy and after birth and how to budget for the baby. Soldiers are informed about programs available to them such as First Steps, Women Infant and Children food supplement programs, Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting, Family Advocacy and the Linen Closet.

Although all major commands on post have agreed to the MOM program, throughout the years, the program has encountered problems with some supervisors.

For the protection of the Soldier, when they begin their 28th week of pregnancy they are to work a maximum of 40 hours a week which begins at the beginning of PT through personal hygiene time to the end of the day, according to the memorandum signed by unit commanders.

"Some units will begin pulling Soldiers from the MOM program because they do not want their PT to interfere with the 40-hour work week limit," Cook said. "When they begin to do this they are putting the mission before the Soldiers health."

"Many Soldiers who do not participate in the MOM program often are flagged after taking the first Army Physical Fitness Test at six months postpartum," Leazenby said. "Chaptering Soldiers for failing to make their height, weight and PT standards wastes the Army's and the unit's time and resources. These Soldiers are an Army investment."



The MOM program is also geared to help Soldiers return to unit PT four to six weeks after returning back from leave. During this time, Soldiers continue to do PT within the MOM program. This portion for the program focuses on the physical fitness test. It targets specific areas that each individual Soldier may be having difficulty with.

Once a Soldier is enrolled in the MOM program, attendance is mandatory. Accountability is reported weekly to each unit. This is considered the Soldier's place of duty unless the Soldier has an approved absence. Authorized absences include, but are not limited to, medical appointments, training holidays, holidays, leave and passes. Soldiers who fail to attend the MOM program without authorization from their unit chain of command can be subject to administrative or disciplinary action under the Uniform Code of Military Justice by the unit.

Unit Soldiers who are interested may enroll Soldiers in the MOM program by sending the Soldier to the Community Health Nursing in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2631 Wednesdays at 10 a.m.

Unit commanders, NCOs and unit leaders are encouraged to attend MOM PT to experience their Soldiers workout regiment.

Blackbirds get back to basics

Pvt. 2 Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

He threw on his ruck and moved out leading the more than 50 troops in his platoon through a week-long journey that would take them deep into "enemy" territory.

The journey is not an assault deep within the enemy-laden swamps of some distant country, this is a training exercise that offers newly-commissioned second lieutenants from the Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) an opportunity to lead an Infantry platoon while they wait to move on to their next duty assignment.

According to 2nd Lt. John Hutchinson, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, IOBC, the program, which is a cooperative between IOBC and the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB), offers new lieutenants like himself a practical opportunity to put the training he has received to the test.

"This is a good program," Hutchinson said as he evaluated his troops on room clearing techniques earlier this week. "It not only allows new officers like myself an opportunity to evaluate their individual leadership skills, but it also gives them a chance to see what they can expect from their new privates coming straight from OSUT (one station unit training)."

Hutchinson, who had previously served as a National Guard enlisted Soldier, was one of three newly-commissioned officers slated to take place in the IOBC-ITB program this week and is one of the first lieutenants to take part in the program in more than 5 years.

"It had previously been an unwritten rule that the IOBC graduates would come out here and lead some troops prior to moving on to their next assignment," said 1st Lt. Gyles Gregory, executive officer, Company C, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. "But one thing led to another and assignments began to roll in a little sooner for the students and the time they used to have to come out here seemed to disappear."

Both Hutchinson and Gregory agreed that the program is essential in providing the much-needed troop leadership time that new leaders like Hutchinson need, but they both realize that the current needs of the Army require many of the newly pinned officers to move on to yet another school.

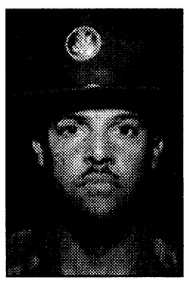
Company C, 4th platoon drill sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Gary Mayo said that the opportunity for Hutchinson and other new lieutenants to train with ITB Soldiers has proven to be an asset for not only the new officers, but for the ITB Soldiers they are tasked with leading as well.

"Having the lieutenants out here helps the privates get a better understanding of what to expect once they get to their unit," Mayo said. "This officer-Soldier interaction is something they have never experienced before and something the drill sergeants cannot provide unless we have people like Hutchinson out here participating in the program."

Hutchinson's participation in ITB training began at 5 a.m. March 4 with a road march that ended with the new lieutenant giving an operation order (OPORD) and leading the Soldiers in establishing a defensive.

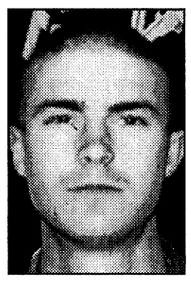
"Those first hours when we marched in and set up the defensive allowed me to lead new Soldiers for the first time," Hutchinson said. "I had given countless OPORDs and led fellow IOBC students in establishing a position, but this was different."

Guided by his technical know-how and the direction of Mayo, Hutchinson continued his leadership training throughout the week as he led the ITB Soldiers through a seven day field training exercise (FTX) that included tactical lane training, Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain (MOUT) instruction and basic field skills.



"He has done an excellent job out here this week," Mayo said. "He received a chance to take part in some really good training this past week that was beneficial to both himself and the Soldiers as well."

Mayo commented, "As a former enlisted man and a graduate of North Georgia Military College, he will be an asset to his next unit."



As for where that next duty assignment will take Hutchinson, "Only time and my success at Ranger School will tell," he said.

Soldiers evaluate benefits of new jobs

Army Career and Alumni Placement Association

When Soldiers transition from the military, they are leaving behind the benefits that are unparalleled in the civilian market: no cost family medical, 30 days annual leave, sick leave, no tax housing and ration allowance, PX and Commissary benefits, a retirement plan which is fully funded by the employer and the list goes on.

"Most, if not all, of the equivalent coverage will require a financial contribution by the Soldier when he or she enters the civilian job market," said Stacey Vigil, Army Career and Alumni Placement Association (ACAP) Counselor. "This can cause a significant impact on the amount of disposable income available each pay period. It is one of the many factors to take into consideration when evaluating job offers."

The Soldier will begin the process by exploring basic facts about the company and its potential. Then, he or she will need to do some further research to really differentiate between the opportunities presented. Some of the areas one may wish to consider are as follows: tuition reimbursement, retirement plans, medical and dental coverage, life insurance, paid vacation and sick leave.

"In each of these categories, the individual will want to sit down and carefully evaluate his or her needs," Vigil said. "Find out exactly what the benefit package consists of and how much of that cost will be your responsibility."

Other factors that should be considered are company turnover, size and stability, location, opportunities for additional training and the importance of your job within the organization.

As one goes through this evaluation process, the differences between companies and opportunities will become clear. The Soldier will be able to enter into a new job with the confidence that he or she made the best decision. This will increase the likelihood of creating long-term job satisfaction.

For more information on evaluating job offers and other ACAP services, call 545-2308, 545-2309 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

4th RTBn changes command

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

The 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, received a new commander in a change of command ceremony held March 4 at the Ranger Memorial.

Lt. Col. Clarence K.K. Chinn assumed command from Lt. Col. Eric D. Hutchings.

Hutchings reminisced about a time when the nation wallowed in self-pity of post Vietnam.

"Here at Fort Benning, there was a little island of belligerent Ranger Instructors who focused on one thing and one thing only, the task of rebuilding the United States Army," Hutchings said. "Ranger training then as now was no nonsense pass-fail with absolutely no gray areas measured against a clear cut standard of excellence."

"I will always be proud of the small contributions made during the last two years in the Ranger course and prouder still that I once stood in the company of such honorable men and with them endeavor to do good for my country."

Chinn will take command of 4th Ranger Training Battalion after serving as a staff leader. Chinn said it was good once again to see the look of confidence that says 'I will not fail' on the faces of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion Rangers.

"It is a privilege to be given the opportunity to lead this outstanding unit and to develop and train the future military leaders of this great nation."

Chinn was commissioned from the U.S. Military Academy in May 1981. His extensive military education includes Ranger, Airborne, Jumpmaster, Infantry Mortar Platoon and Air Assault Courses; Jungle Warfare Training Course; Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, Combined Arms Services Staff School and the Army Command and General Staff College.

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Lt. Col. Clarence K.K. Chinn receives the guidon from Col. Frank Helmick during a change of command ceremony March 4.

Chinn served at Fort Lewis, Wash., in 3rd Battalion, 39th Infantry as a rifle platoon leader and executive officer and in the 2nd Battalion, 75th Infantry (Ranger). Chinn commanded Company C, 1st Battalion, 503rd Infantry, as well as Company A and Headquarters Company at 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

His awards and decorations include the Ranger Tab, Master Parachutist Wings with two Bronze Stars, Combat and Expert Infantryman Badge and Air Assault Badge.

Chinn and his wife Val have two children, Ashley and Jared.

Retirees should consider healthcare coverage

Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

If you are approaching retirement from active duty service, you have some important decisions to make regarding healthcare coverage for you and your family.

As an active duty servicemember, you have been covered as a TRICARE Prime member through the military health system. Your family had the option to choose TRICARE Standard, TRICARE Extra or TRICARE Prime with no enrollment fee.

TRICARE is still there to serve you as a retiree, but there are options to consider and actions you must take.

Don't wait until the last minute to think about your healthcare coverage. These decisions should be incorporated into your overall individual transition plan. Usually healthcare coverage should be considered about three to four months before retirement.

To assist you in making these important decisions, Humana Military Healthcare Services has produced an informative brochure, TRICARE and Military Retirement. This brochure, which is available at your nearby TRICARE Service Center, describes in detail each step of the decision-making process, including the following:

•Exploring your TRICARE Options — Obtain the information you need to make your decisions. Attend a retirement briefing on post, visit your TRICARE Service Center or call the Beneficiary Services Line at (800) 444-5445 to learn more about your TRICARE options.

•Updating your military status in DEERS — You will have to update your DEERS record to reflect your changing military status. Your post personnel office can assist you with changes to your DEERS record or you can call DEERS at (800) 538-9552.

•Familiarizing yourself with the availability of MTF health care where you will be residing as a retiree — Now that you are retiring from the military, a civilian rather than a military healthcare provider may provide your care. If you will reside in an area with a Military Treatment Facility (MTF) and you prefer to be treated at the MTF, you should consider enrolling in TRICARE Prime, since Prime members enjoy priority access to MTF Services.

If you are not sure where you will reside, TRICARE Prime enrollment can be transferred.

•Choosing a TRICARE option for you and your family members — Once you have evaluated your options, you may choose to enroll in TRICARE Prime, or use TRICARE Standard or Extra.

•If you choose to enroll in TRICARE Prime — You need to do the following:

•Fill out the TRICARE Prime enrollment form enclosed with the TRICARE Choices brochure. Choose a Primary Care Manager for yourself and each family member you are enrolling. You will be committing to Prime coverage for a 12-month period.

•Choose an enrollment fee payment option and enclose your payment with your enrollment form in the appropriate envelope.

•Send in your completed enrollment fee to be received by the 20th day of your last month of active duty service in order to ensure continuous TRICARE Prime coverage.

DRMO disposes of excess government equipment

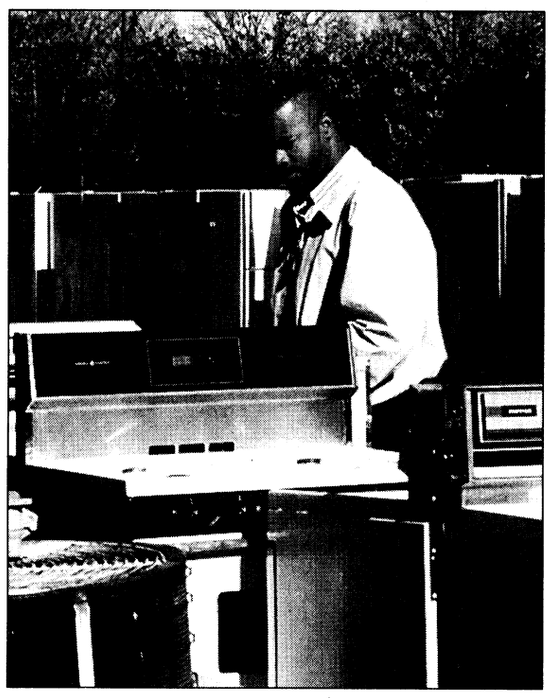
Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

For sale: ammunition cans, refrigerators, sleeping bags, military clothing, weight scales, furniture, ice cream maker, automotive parts and much more!

The Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service (DRMS) provides the Department of Defense (DoD) with the best value service to customers for the reuse, transfer, donation, sale or disposal of excess and surplus property. DRMS is the parent element of the Fort Benning Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office (DRMO) and is the program manager for the disposal of government surplus worldwide.

"The primary objective of DRMS is to take excess government materials and dispose of it through a systematic process," said Danny Snow, deputy chief of the DRMO.

According to Snow, excess or surplus materials are brought in on receipt from various generators and are screened for the initial step of the process, which is reutilization. Reutilization and transfer involves finding a home for the property with other DoD federal agencies or military units at a no cost redistribution effort.



"If a unit has a need for a certain item or piece of equipment they would check our inventory. If the item is available, a no cost transfer from DRMO to the facility would occur," Snow said.

If there is no need for a particular property at this level, it can be transferred to the state level, which is the third step of the process.

"State agencies support organizations such as Boy Scouts, local police enforcement, city and county highway and parks department and high school JROTC. If these organizations have a need for an item in the DRMO inventory, the state can requisition it from us," said Fran Allor, chief of the DRMO. "We then transfer the needed item to the state and they disseminate it to the eligible organization."

Items that remain in the inventory after the first three processes are sold through government surplus sales held at nearly every military installation around the world. DRMO surplus sales, held approximately every six weeks at Fort Benning, are customer friendly and use modern technology to benefit potential customers.

"We are a customer oriented business that utilizes the latest technology to help better serve our customers," Allor said. "We send out flyers and catalogues, place information on a fax poll (so people with a fax and polling capabilities can get a copy of the current catalogue) and we have an easy access web site."

Michele E. Hanson

Danny Snow, deputy chief of the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office, inspects some of the surplus property.

The web site includes an updated inventory list, a few pictures of special interest items and enables customers to bid on and purchase items with a major credit card, without leaving the comfort of their homes, Allor added.

"Agencies, units and customers can access the information on upcoming sales from all over the world. The web site is a win-win situation that helps to generate additional sales of government excess," she said.

Fort Benning's DRMO sales generated more than one million dollars in 1998 and contributed to DRMS sales from around the world that exceeded 198 million dollars.

"When people think of DRMO, they think of disposing junk, but we are actually returning millions of dollars to the U.S. Treasury and avoiding the spending of additional millions," Snow said. "DRMS is an honorable and worthwhile program that benefits everyone."

The next government surplus sale will be held March 30 at Building 470 on 10th Mountain Division Road. For information on the bidding process and sales of surplus property, call Pam Dykes at 545-7214 or visit the web site at: http://www.rdms.dla.mil.

Soldiers tutor youth

Michelle Harvey
Special to the Bayonet©

In the spirit of helping others, about 30 lieutenants from Fort Benning helped "at risk" youth to achieve academic success in the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus (C.C.S.C.) Tutorial Program Feb. 27 at Eastway Elementary in Columbus.

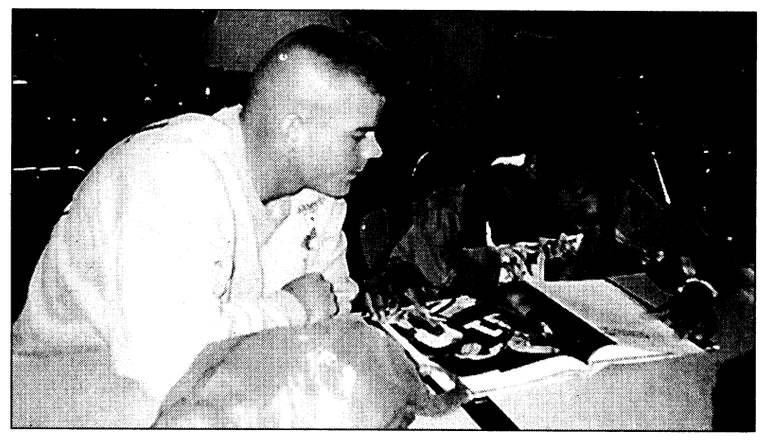
During the two-hour session, the officers helped the students from kindergarten through eighth-grade with various subjects like math, reading, English and social science.

"The officers from the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment came to help the children this morning, and we appreciate what they are doing," said Daisy Honor, who is one of the organizers of the C.C.S.C. program.

2nd Lt. Christopher Johnson of the 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., helped organize the Soldiers to volunteer in the program.

"What we basically did was bring the officers out to help with the students because we understand the importance of a good education," Johnson said. "Now what we want to do is get other platoon leaders in other companies and even our own regiment to participate in the program."

Another officer, 1st Lt. Ivy Williams of the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), has volunteered with the C.C.S.C. program for three years.



"I found out about the program during IOBC, and I have loved it ever since," Williams said. "It gives us a chance to help the youth who do not have the opportunity to receive one-on-one learning in their regular classrooms."

Lonnie Jackson, founder and chairperson of C.C.S.C. Tutorial Program, thanked the Soldiers for giving their time in order to help the children.

"We appreciated them coming, and need more of them to volunteer because Soldiers are great mentors for children," Jackson said. "I hope they will continue to come because the children benefit from it."

The tutoring sessions are held each Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon at Eastway Elementary (4601 Buena Vista Road), J.D. Davis Elementary (1822 Shepherd Drive) and Eddy Middle School (2100 South Lumpkin Road).

For more information about becoming a volunteer, call C.C.S.C. at (706) 697-5357 or (706) 321-9596.

QUOTE ME

What a society gets in its armed services is exactly what it asks for, no more and no less. What it asks for tends to be a reflection of what it is. When a country looks at its fighting forces it is looking in a mirror; if the mirror is a true one, the face that it sees there will be its own.

Third-graders play in dark

Bumping and stumbling through a darkened room probably isn't most people's choice for quality entertainment. However, third-grade students at McBride Elementary School found out that with the help of some nifty equipment, not even a lack of light can spell doom for fun and games.

On March 4, Soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), loaded up a bundle of Night Vision Goggles (NVGs) and headed to McBride to give three third-grade classes a taste of Army life.

The Soldiers borrowed the gym and set up different obstacles and games for the children to try while using NVGs. The students were able to tackle a miniature obstacle course, a round of musical chairs and even a go-through at the limbo, all in total darkness.

The children not only played games, but also learned exactly what the goggles do, said Pfc. Richard Thackston, one of the Soldiers who helped demonstrate the NVGs. Thackston said they put infrared on one of the walls so the kids could see how infrared is invisible without NVGs.

"Basically, we came out here so we could show these kids the kind of equipment their moms or dads use," Thackston said. "Now they can go home to their parents with a better understanding and they can also say 'Hey guess what I did.'"

Eight-year-old Codi Glancy said it was neat to be able to use the NVGs.

"It was cool to be able to see in the dark," Glancy said. "When we were doing it we kept bumping into each other and I didn't know who was who."

For the Soldiers, coming out to show off their equipment wasn't just a demonstration on behalf of the Army, it was also a personal call.

While the 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. was deployed to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., from October through November, the more than 75 third-graders wrote letters of encouragement to the Soldiers.

"It was definitely unexpected," said Pfc. Caleb Rowe about receiving the letters. "It made me feel a little more important that someone was interested in what I was doing and took the time to ask. Coming out here is just a way for us to say thank you to the kids."

The idea of writing to Soldiers at NTC came from one of the student's parents, said Nancy Gordy, coordinator of the demonstration and pre-k teacher at McBride.

Gordy said parent volunteers helped gather the names of single Soldiers from the battalion and the students went to work writing individual letters to each of the Soldiers. What began as a learning experience developed into more for both the students and the Soldiers.

Pfc. Ramone Meyer kept the letters Twain Scott wrote to him and was anxious to meet his 9-year-old pen pal.

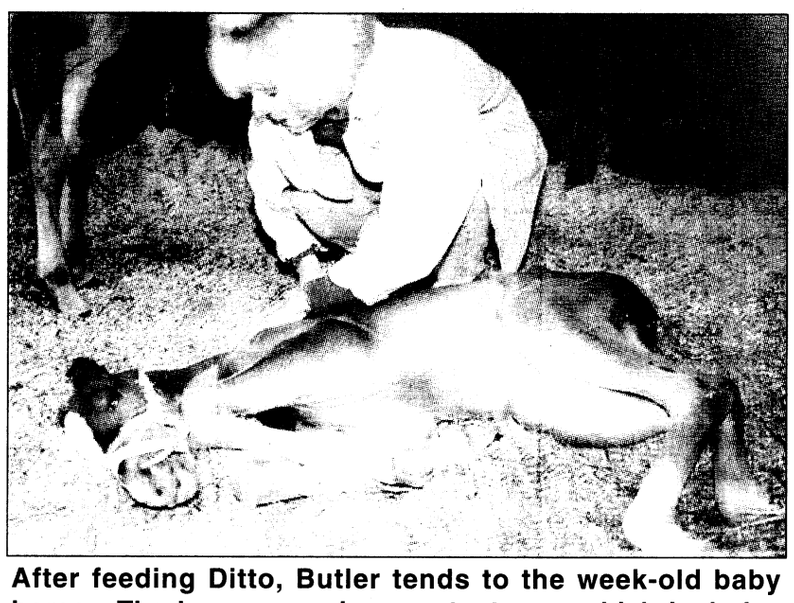
"I thought it was nice that someone would take the time to write to me and I just wanted to say thank you," Meyer said.

He mentioned that he talked to Scott and asked him about the things he wrote in his letter.

"I think I've definitely made a friend," Meyer added.

Gordy said the students were excited to get the chance to meet some of their pen pals and use the NVGs.

Of course it wasn't just the children who were able to enjoy using the NVGs, the teachers joined in the fun as well.



"The teachers are so excited they are running down to the gym to do it themselves," Gordy added.

After it was all said and done, the Soldiers showed their appreciation by bringing cake and drinks for the students to enjoy also.

Benning family receives two miracles

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

Miracles do happen — just ask Fort Benning residents Kaye and Staff Sgt. Tim Butler who recently became the proud parents of two orphaned foals.

The Butlers, who have bred and raised horses together for the past four years, found themselves facing what could have been an even more tragic situation when they lost both of the foals' mothers at birth and nearly both foals as well.

"The way I see it is we have two walking miracles here at the Fort Benning stables," said Tim, a Ranger with the 75th Ranger Regiment. "Both of these animals had slim chances of surviving, yet they beat the odds."

While both foals were due on the same date, the first, now known as Ottoe Bee A Dandy, was born four weeks premature on Jan. 19.

"I was getting ready to leave one night and I went out to check on something when I saw something over by the fence," said Tim, who explained that the baby had slipped out over the outer side of the paddock fence. "If we hadn't noticed him, he would have died for sure."

Dandy wasn't the only one in danger, however. The mother's health was at stake as well when she suffered complications following the birth. Her health quickly deteriorated and by the time veterinarians were on-site, the mare had to be put down.

With the mother gone, Dandy's only hope for survival was Auburn University which has an equine neonatal facility. The colt was kept at the facility for two weeks where he began feeding and had his eyes stitched and a splint placed on one of his hind legs.

"They (the veterinarians) said in the beginning he only had a 10 percent chance of surviving," Kaye said of the 70-pound newborn. "He is doing so much better now; he's up to about 130 pounds now, which is about normal."

Just as all new parents can expect long nights with less sleep, the Butlers also had to shuffle their schedules so they could be at the stable to feed the foal every two hours.

"I think I've slept in my own bed four times since Feb. 2," said Tim, who set up a bed inside the foal's stall.

Just when Dandy's health was looking up, tragedy struck again late the night of Feb. 27 when the second mare went into labor.

YS offers more than sports

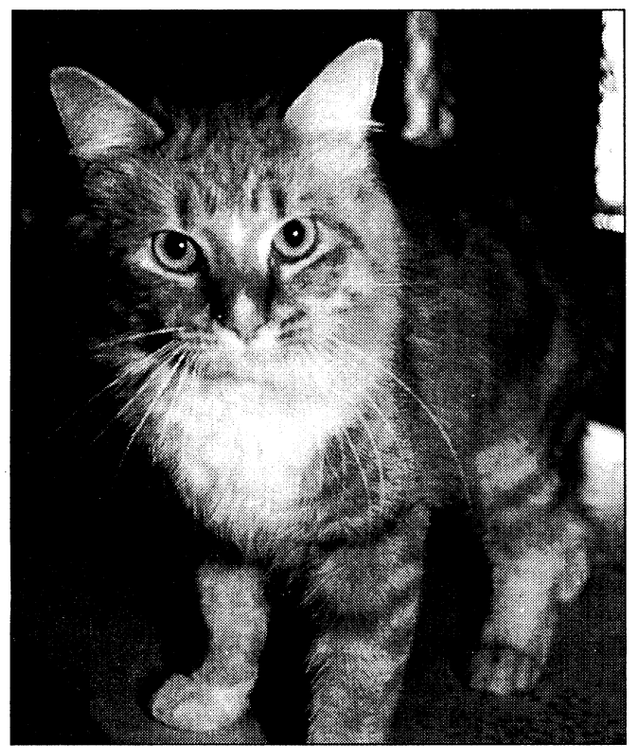
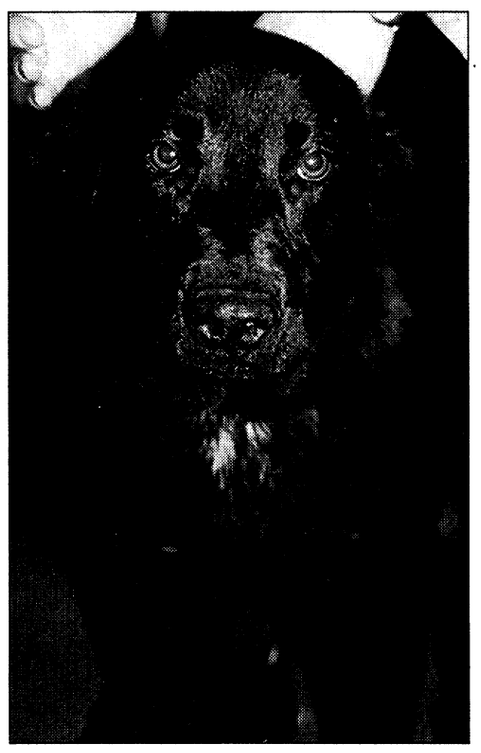
In a perfect world, every household would have a computer so all children could benefit from the advantages of modern technology. Where can a child find a computer to do research or complete an important school project in this world?



The Youth Services Computer Lab (YSCL) may be what you are looking for.



Youth Services maintains eight required baseline programs, which includes sports, leisure and recreation, teen council, volunteer committee and others. One of the baseline programs established for registered YS children is the pre-teen and teen computer lab located in the School Age Services Building.

The lab is equipped with 15 computers, printers (several with color capabilities) and various programs.

"The YSCL is a wonderful place to finish up projects, complete homework, play age-specific games or prepare for the SAT exam," said Quintella Thorn, program director at YS. "The computer programs, which include Windows 95, word and printshop are available to meet the needs of the children."

White Elephants get facelift

Directorate of Public Works

The clock started ticking for the Savannah District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers construction contractor, Trawick of Birmingham, Ala., Jan. 25 with the issue of a "Notice to Proceed."

The $13.1 million renovation of the 30 quadraplex family housing units known as the "White Elephants" was launched. The preliminary paperwork was filled out and permits obtained. Since the buildings, built in 1932, were declared historical facilities, a dialog had been entered in with the Georgia State Preservation Office to minimize adverse impact to the buildings in light of their historical significance. With these things done, the actual work could start. With a 200 calendar-day deadline, the transformation began with the eight buildings in the Phase I Area bounded by Yeager Ave., Bjornstad St., Running Ave. and Lumpkin Rd.

Harold Hartman, Area Engineer; Jeff Hill, Project Engineer and Don Moore, Construction Representative; all with the Savannah District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, have been working behind the scenes on this "Whole Neighborhood Revitalization" project.

Work was divided into three phases to minimize disruption to the neighborhood. Each phase of the project is fenced to provide security and safety. The first phase should be ready for occupancy by next October. Phase II will begin two weeks after completion of Phase I. This phase will last 240 days and will include 10 buildings encompassed by Running Ave., 1st Division Rd, Madden Ave. and Stewart Ave. The area within Running Ave., Steward Ave., Madden Ave. and Lumpkin Rd. containing the last 12 buildings will make up Phase III. Construction will start in this area two weeks after completion of Phase II. This final phase will be completed in 290 days of initiation.

When complete, every "White Elephant" family unit will sport a remodeled kitchen, new appliances and the addition of a second bathroom, storage area and laundry room. Other less visible but equally important improvements include installing new interior electric wiring, replacing heating and air conditioning units and the abatement of lead paint and asbestos.

Exterior work includes improvement of site drainage, repairs to garages, construction of three Tot Lots (one per Phase area) and a community basketball and tennis court to be constructed in the centrally located Phase 3 area. There will be walking paths, sidewalks and patios.

The dictionary defines 'white elephant' as "a possession unwanted by the owner but difficult to dispose of." After all of this work, these buildings may still be as big as elephants and still white, but they certainly won't lack takers. By this time next year, 32 families will be in their "new" homes and 40 more will be more than halfway through their wait for the completion of Phase II.

Foals: Infants receive TLC from 'parents'

"The foal was sideways in the mare's stomach," Kaye said. "It had kicked a hole in the mare's uterus. At that point, we knew there was no hope for the mother and we just needed to try and save the baby."

The Butlers' hope was once again placed on veterinarians at Auburn University who performed a Caesarean section on the mare.

"To have something like this happen once was terrible, but I almost couldn't believe it when it happened again," she continued. "The veterinarian said what happened to the second mare was only a one in a million chance."

The second foal, a filly named Ditto Playmate, was sent home 36 hours after birth and the Butlers added her to their rigorous feeding schedule.

According to Kaye, the foals will probably be fed formula for two to three months then work up to dry food.

When the transition to dry food occurs, this will not only change the hectic feeding schedule, but will also help bring down the cost of the foals' upkeep.

"Right now, we spend about $110 a week in formula alone and I won't even talk about the vet bills," Kaye said.

Despite the extra care and cost, the Butlers, who have five children, are happy with the new additions to the family.

"It's like having infants again. We've got the same worries — if they're running a fever or not eating," Kaye said. "The only difference is that they're a lot bigger and they can hurt you."

TRIVIA

The term "the whole 9 yards" came from W.W.II fighter pilots in the Pacific. When arming their airplanes on the ground, the .50 caliber machine gun ammo belts measured exactly 27 feet, before being loaded into the fuselage. If the pilot's fired all their ammo at a target, it got "the whole 9 yards."

the needs of the children."

Thorn recently attended a Trainers Training Class in Washington D.C. and has spent several weeks training the staff on how to work with the children in the lab.

"I am grateful for the training class because training the staff greatly enhances the program," Thorn said.

According to Thorn the intent of the program is to get teens and pre-teens involved with using computers to their benefit by enhancing the technology available to them.

"The lab provides an opportunity for children who do not have computers in the home and enhances other programs at YS," Thorn said. "We can use the computers to build on other programs offered at YS like researching a topic before a field trip."

"In the near future the lab will have Internet capabilities and will also become a homework center conducive for studying," she added.

Computer lab students should meet at the Main Post Youth Services Center located in Building 1056, Thursdays at 4:30 p.m. The lab is available for School Age Services and YS children.

For further information about the YSCL or to volunteer at the lab, call Thorn at 545-3070.

BBB offers tips to consumers

Better Business Bureau

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) offers the following tips to help improve your consumer skills in 1999:

•Be your own best protector. Even with all the consumer protection agencies and laws on the books, consumers must protect themselves by being leery of high pressure, "too good to be true" claims and more. Say "no" whenever you feel pressured or have unanswered questions. Check out businesses and deals before signing anything or paying money.

•Don't do business with strangers who approach you at home without doing a thorough check. Make sure you have a permanent address and phone number for the business. Check the company out with your BBB.

•Don't give any personal information over the phone to an unfamiliar company. This includes your credit card numbers, but also the credit card expiration date, your social security number, driver's license number and bank account numbers. Even if you're told it's only for "identification or verification," this information can be used for unauthorized credit card charges or bank account debits.

•Don't pay in advance for a "guaranteed" loan, job or buyer for your timeshare. Advance fee schemers typically ask for hundreds and sometimes thousands of dollars before providing what they've promised, usually without a written contract.

•Don't fall for calls or letters claiming you've won a prize, but you must pay something. These calls or letters are usually worded very carefully to give the impression that you've already won, when in fact, it's either a low-value "premium with purchase" or a non-required purchase with extremely slim odds that you're the top winner.

•Don't get involved with work-at-home schemes or business opportunities without checking carefully. Work-at-home offers to address or stuff envelopes, assemble items, read books, sell web sites and so on, where you must pay first for a kit or instructions, are schemes to get your money but deliver nothing or something different than represented.

Study reports on health issues associated with obesity

Capt. Joanna J. Reagan
Martin Army Community Hospital

Often, we hear conflicting information about nutrition, fitness and weight controls. Overall, total calorie intake has been increasing in the past 20 years, partly due to an increasing intake of foods low in fat. Therefore, cholesterol levels are dropping in the U.S. But, because physical activity levels have not changed very much, Americans are getting fatter.

Is it harmful to be overweight? Last year, two reports in the New England Journal of Medicine compared the relationship between body weight and mortality. Both reports indicate that obesity shortens lives. The Nurses' Health Study compared the association between mortality and body-mass index (defined as weight in kilograms divided by the square of the height in meters). The Honolulu Heart Program (a study of Japanese American men) showed the differences of obesity compared to race and sex.

The Nurses' Health Study started with 115,195 women (30 to 55 years of age) free of known cardiovascular disease and cancer. During 16 years of follow-up, 4,726 deaths were documented of which 881 were from cardiovascular disease, 2,586 from cancer and 1,256 from other causes. The results showed that women over 140 percent of their recommended weight were 4.1 times greater risk of developing cardiovascular disease.

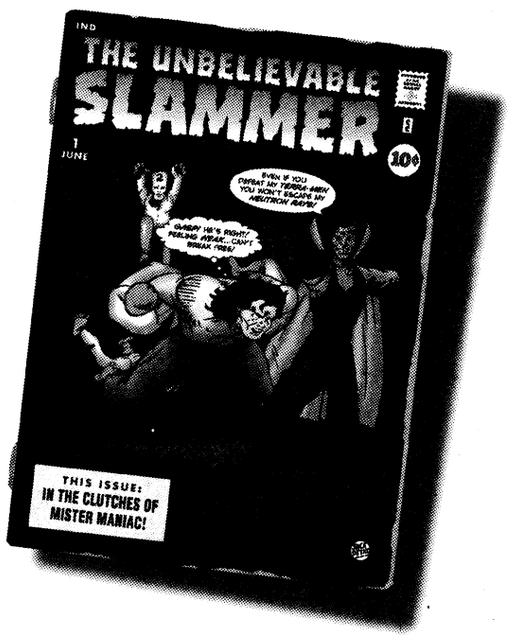
In the Nurses' Health Study, mortality from coronary heart disease (CHD) was strongly related to the relationship of the waist to the hip circumference, a strong predictor of CHD than body mass index. The risk of CHD also depends upon where the body fat lies. People who carry weight around the waist have a greater chance of heart disease (due to metabolized fat closer to the heart) than people who carry their weight near the hips.

One thing is for sure, the incidence of obesity is increasing in America. Thirty-two million women and 26 million men (approximately one-third of the U.S. adult population) are overweight (at least 20 percent more than "desirable" levels.) National survey data suggest that in the past 15 years, the mean body weight of U.S. adults has increased by eight pounds. (Not to mention that the recommended weight standards have become increasingly permissive over the past several decades.)

There are many health issues associated with being overweight:

•High blood pressure occurs two to six times more frequently in overweight people.

•Obese males have a higher chance of colon, rectum and prostrate cancer. Women have a higher chance of gallbladder, liver, breast, uterus and ovarian cancer.



•Studies show 70 to 85 percent of diabetics have a history of obesity.

•Joint disease and musculoskeletal problems such as lower back problems and herniated disks are associated with obesity. Increased weight leads to greater wear and tear on these joints, which may become less and less active, thereby leading to further weight gain.

•The psychosocial costs of obesity include ridicule and discrimination which contributes to a low self-image and a negative emotional reaction to dieting.

Obesity is a serious issue in the U.S. and people have tried a variety of methods to lose weight. For example, a newsclip about the latest and greatest finding may trigger many people to try a new product or a method for a quick and easy way to lose weight.

One thing is clear from the hundreds of weight control studies conducted in the past 20 years — long-term weight control can be achieved with regular physical activity and modified eating habits.

For the record, high-tech professionals are not the pocket-protector-wearing, comic-book-hoarding, wish-I-was-a-Druid, haven't-had-a-date-since-I-took-my-cousin-to-the-prom geeks you think they are.

But that part about making lots of money? That's entirely true.

Jesus gives peace, rest

Chaplain (Capt.) Jose Resto
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment

Come to me, all you who labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon and learn of me, for I am gentle and lowly in heart and you will find rest for your souls. For my yoke is easy and burden is light. (Matthew 11:28-30)

reflections

Stress is a fact of life. God has made us complex spiritual, physical, intellectual and emotional beings. And today's reality is stress affects every area of our being, no matter how well prepared we are intellectually, physically, emotionally and spiritually. Stressful situations will occur at any place and anytime.

What is stress? Stress is the response of the body to any demand made upon it. We live with serious stress because of unexpected changes. When unexpected changes are devastating, we often feel that God is nowhere to be found. Events happen that change our lives drastically: a death, an accident or a illness. There is no way we can control these things. But, it helps to remember that God is in control and aware of every detail. Technology provides a convenient lifestyle. We have television, microwaves, washers, dryers, computers and cars, but life seems to move at a much faster pace these days. We don't have time to rest, eat, enjoy life, worship God or to spend time with family.

Are you experiencing a great deal of stress? God's powerful presence may always be counted on, especially at those points in life where people feel most pressure and anguish. Jesus will give you rest from fear, rest from depression and rest from worry. He will give you the necessary rest, no matter what the problem. His presence and help are available anytime. The only requirement is to ask in prayer. In the midst of our busy lives, we can find rest in him. We are living in a busy society. We have a million things to do every day, but we do not have enough time for ourselves or for God.

A lot of people cope with stress by trying to forget about their troubles, by drinking alcohol or by taking sleeping pills at night to have some rest. Many are heavy laden, some with cares of life, some with pain and illness and some with the consciousness of sin. Jesus invites all who are carrying the heavy burden of life, and sinners to come to him and have the desired rest and peace that every person is seeking. The invitation itself is: "Come unto me." Jesus alone can give you peace and rest. Jesus can give you the freedom from stress. He can refresh your soul and give peace to the mind distracted by doubts. None can give you rest but Jesus. But, in order to find the true peace and rest, we must come and take the yoke of Jesus Christ. Remember his yoke is easy and his burden is light. Amen.

Marriage requires preparation

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Divorce is on the decline and that is good news! However, couples getting married for the first time continue to face a 50 percent chance of divorce in their lifetime. Then why even marry?

In a recent article in USA Today, David Popenoe, a Rutgers University sociologist, stated "Couples who live together before marriage are about 48 percent more likely to divorce than those who don't." The article also stated "living together is not a way to prepare for marriage or to avoid divorce."

While there exists no guarantee in preventing divorce, there is a way to better enhance a couple's chance of having a good marital relationship. Couples going through a systematic, in-depth pre-marriage training program can greatly reduce their chances of getting a divorce. Some studies show a 50 percent reduction in the divorce rate.

Marriage is one of the greatest relationships in existence. But you have to prepare for it. Do you set off on a vacation without prior planning? Does a doctor become a doctor without years of preparation? How much time do we spend preparing for a marriage? To be sure, it is harder getting a hunting license in most states than it is a marriage license.

For most couples, there is very little planning, communication and understanding surrounding the institution of marriage. It is "love will keep us together." But statistics punch huge holes in that rose-colored myth. This is why pre-marriage training is vital and why the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center offers a monthly pre-marriage training seminar. While this training does not guarantee marital bliss it can prepare you for marriage.

The goals of this training are four-fold: eliminate as many surprises as possible; identify possible problem areas; learn some marital skills and; teach couples to be realistic with their expectations of marriage.

For more information on pre-marriage training call the Family Life Center at 545-1760.

Building a village

Shelby Carter, a fifth-grader at Dexter Elementary School, constructs a bridge for an 1850s village. The reconstruction was done as part of a project for the student's studies of American westward expansion in social studies. Students built cabins, wagons, bridges and furniture, all from natural materials.

Students share work

Dexter Elementary School

Dexter Elementary School was notified in early February that seven of its 33 fifth-grade students had poems selected for publication in the 1999 edition of the Anthology of Poetry by Young Americans. Students published in this anthology come from all over the U.S., range in age from kindergarten to high school, and come from all different social, economic and philosophical backgrounds.

Here are five of the poems chosen for publication:

My Christmas Tree
Shelby Carter

Every year at Christmas time
We decorate the tree
It's one of my favorite things to do.
It means a lot to me.

I love the beauty of a tree,
Its needles and its smell.
We put it in our living room
Next to our musical bells.

We decorate every inch of it,
Every cranny and every nook.
The ornaments we put on it
Are hung with silver hooks.

The garland looks so pretty
Strung around the tree.
The candy canes and shining star
Are such a sight to see.

The Christmas tree's so beautiful.
It gives off glowing light.
It fills the room with happiness
And makes our spirits bright.

A Friend
Michael Hutchings

I was talking to a whitterbum
One bright and sunny day.
He asked if I was jolly,
I said what anyone would say,
"Yes, jolly Whitterbum, I am very gay!
I have a question Whitterbum,
Would you like to play?"

Saint Bernards
Abigail Cucolo

Saint Bernards slobber and drool too
You will believe me when slobber gets on you
What's that you say? You still don't believe?
Well, maybe I should bring mine, then you will see!
You will think he's cool, but don't be a fool.
He will drool on you like you've been in a pool!
Then you will believe and see too
That Saint Bernards can slobber and drool on you.

Summer Blues
Brittani Wills

School is out
And there are kids all about.
It's time to have lots of fun
In the bright, bright sun.
We can go play
And party all day.
Let's go play
And have the best day.
But I'm stuck to my books.
All I can do is look and look.
I wish I could just sneak
And take just one peak.
I want an ice cream bar
That's colder than the air conditioning in a car.
I can play with friends.
We have a friendship that will never end.
That is all I have to say
About my extremely boring day

Rotten Teeth
Trinitie Vance

Rotten teeth are black
They fall out all the time.
You wish you could get them back
Some day before Valentine's.

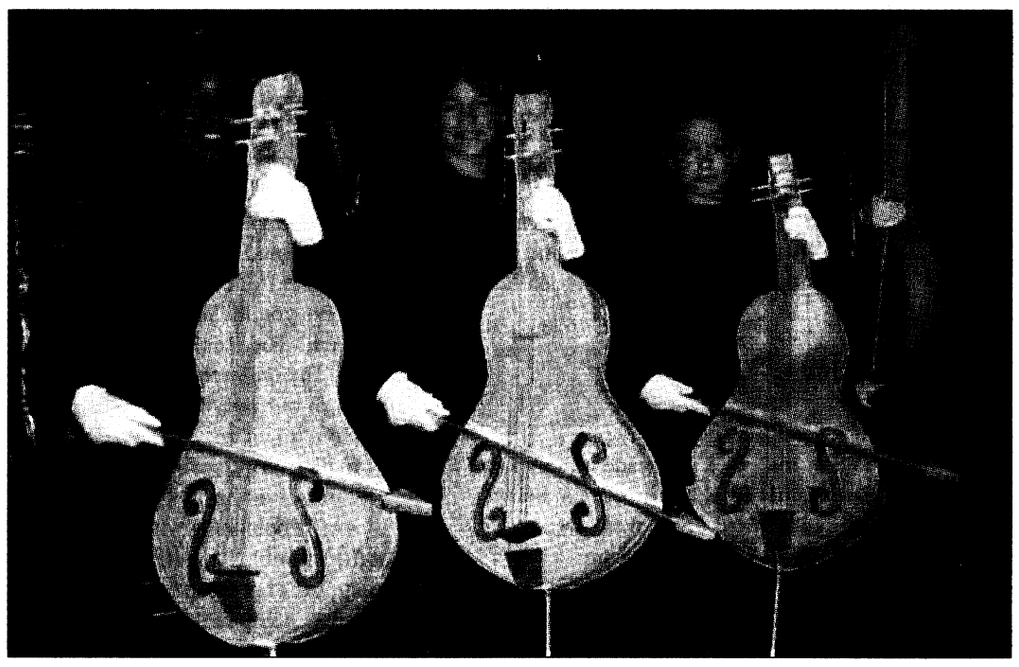
Rotten teeth hurt,
Rotten teeth are gross,
You see blood spurt
When they fall and hit your toes.

Now you don't have any teeth
Because you ate too many sweets.
You'll never get them back,
So when you open up, all I see is black!

Dexter puts on pantomime production

Dexter Elementary School

Incredible moments of black light and classical music amazed and fascinated the audiences gathered at Dexter Elementary School March 4 and 5. Pantomime Phenomena, a multi-curricular production involving both fifth-grade classes, was the result of coordination between the music and physical education staffs at Dexter. Two popular songs were signed and several famous classical music compositions were pantomimed with orchestral instruments under black light.



The children were clothed entirely in black, except for the white gloves they wore. They played instruments designed by Cy Dietrich, music teacher at Dexter, that were painted with fluorescent paint. The instruments glowed when the lights went down and the black light was turned on. The only thing the audience saw was disembodied hands playing instruments seeming to float in space.

I liked how it only showed our hands and instruments and no bodies, said fifth-grader Abigail Cucolo. "That's cool."

During one weekend near the end of February, Dietrich, with the help of Dexter parents Kathy and Bruce Anderson, Janine Hutchings, Debbie Vines, Melvin Smith and grandfather Don James, constructed and painted the totally black, multi-leveled stage the students played on.

The inspiration for this unique program came this past summer when Dietrich was trying to determine how to get the students more involved in classical music.

Hoping that incorporating several senses would help them really get into the music, Dietrich came up with the idea of making the instruments of an orchestra out of cardboard and other materials and then asking the students to play along with the music they heard. Brightly-colored violins, cellos, basses, French horns, oboes, bassoons, clarinets, a celesta and even harps made from stairway railings appeared in Dietrich's classroom. The students found the movement engrossing, but difficult.

Part of the string section performs with their cellos during the pantomime production at Dexter Elementary School March 4 and 5.

"Sound discrimination was the hardest part for the kids to pick up," Dietrich said. "They had to really listen to pantomime the music, to tell when their instrument was playing, whether it was playing fast or slow and whether they needed to bow or pluck their strings."

As the student instrumentalists chose their favorite instrument and began practicing, they discovered that it took strength to hold and play any instrument for the entire length of a composition by Mozart, Bach or Tschaikovsky.

Troy Howell remarked with a smile, "I like playing the bass because it's bigger than me!"

While the orchestra played The Nutcracker, three students who choreographed their own movements interpreted the music with flashing hands and feet. As Madeleine Flores, Amber Hanson and Dana Vines danced, only their white tutus, gloves and socks showed, creating an ethereal effect.

"It was definitely phenomenal!" said parent Kathy Anderson. "Mr. Dietrich was able to create an image that looked magical, with nothing but hands playing instruments and objects floating in space."

A second type of pantomime was also part of the program: sign language. Dexter's physical education teacher, Pam Koon, has been teaching the children American Sign Language all year, but they had never signed wearing gloves. As the centerpiece of the Pantomime Phenomenon, the students signed Angels Among Us by Alabama and Feelin' Groovy, the Simon and Garfunkel hit. During the performance, audience members could be seen signing and softly singing along with the performers.

Koon said, "We all enjoy learning a new language, and research shows that learning sign language improves children's language arts scores. For the children to be able to learn a language and share it by performing is just a great experience."

"Seeing the children's hands portray the beauty of sign language was an emotionally moving experience because of the carefully selected songs," Anderson said. "It was very special to see these two forms of art come together into one spectacular performance!"

Ranger rides to '99 Gold Medal

Sgt. Nelson Mumma Jr.
U.S. Army Special Operations Command

Duluth, Ga. — A Fort Benning Ranger entered the 1999 Georgia Games Spring Festival here Sunday defending two Bronze Medals he won last year in the biathlon and mountain biking events.

He did more than that, earning a Gold Medal in mountain biking and a Silver Medal in the biathlon.

For Jesse Morse, an imagery analyst with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, his effort was part of the plan he set for himself.

"I have certain goals I'm trying to reach, one of which is competing in the national championships," said Morse, 35. "Every year I'm trying to improve and have to push myself harder as I get older."

To win the Gold Medal, Morse biked 14 miles against 15 competitors. His Silver Medal effort came against 45 biathletes, running 3.1 miles and cycling 9.4 miles.

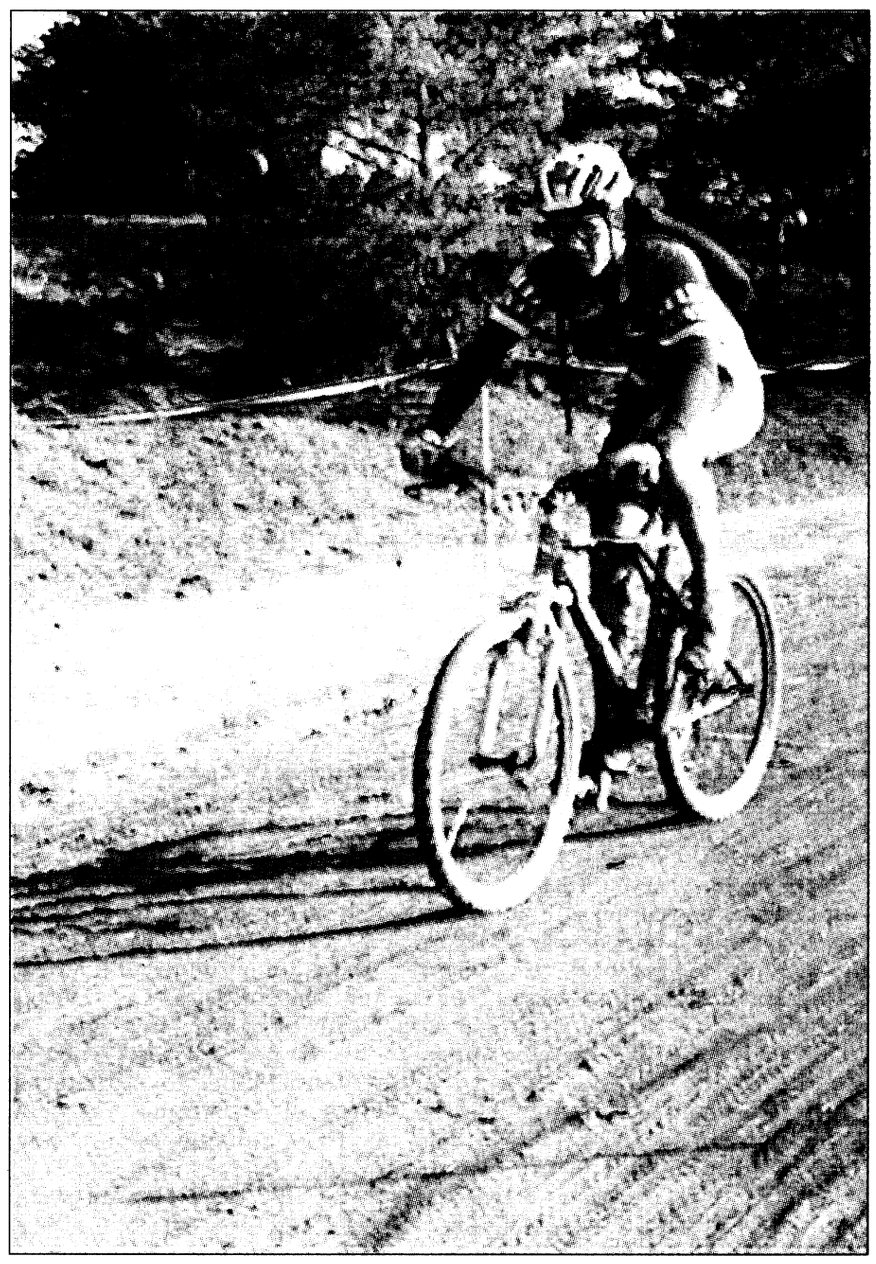
Morse began cycling six years ago, while attending Ohio State University. At the time, he competed mostly to stay in shape. Now, his training, which includes biking up to 200 miles a week, running three to five miles a day, swimming and weight lifting, helps him lead other Rangers.

"Morse is a role model for every Ranger in HHC," said Staff Sgt. Jimmy Holovackl, senior image analyst for HHC, 75th Ranger Regt., and Morse's supervisor.

"A lot of the Soldiers are younger than him, but he does everything they do, and most of the time does it better. He's leading the way."

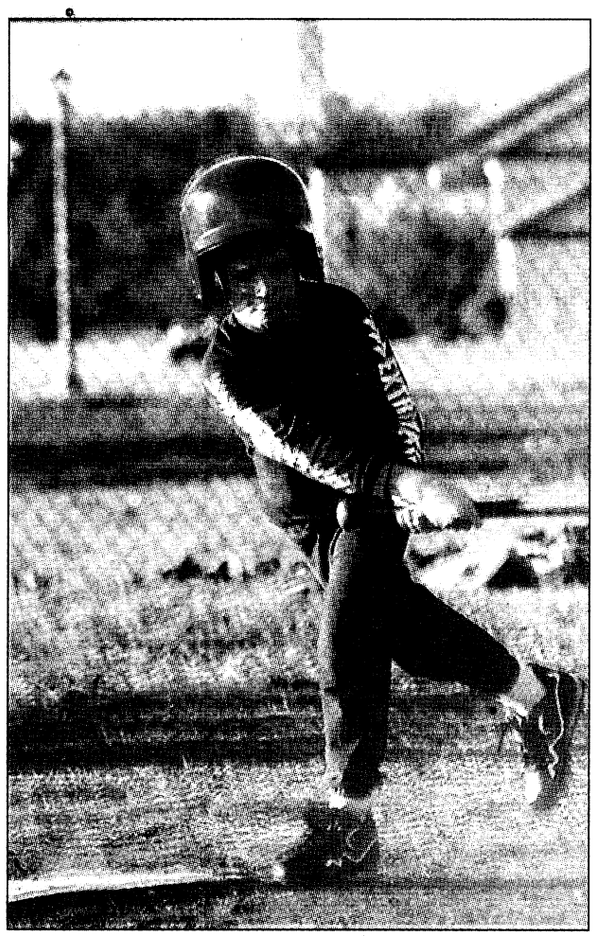
To Morse, that's important.

"My training really helps me keep in shape and sustains my competitive nature," he said. "I'm always trying to stay ahead and keep above the (physical training) standards."



Morse puts the same dedication into his work that he puts into his physical fitness training, Holovackl said.

"I give him missions and don't have to worry about how it's going to get done or if it's going to get done," he said. "He's a sergeant, but sometimes works two skill-levels above that. He's even been asked for by name by higher headquarters."



Although Morse has had quick success, earning the Silver Medal in the biathlon only a year after taking up the event, he is realistic about his future.

"I would love to compete at the national championships (in July)," Morse said. "But that all depends on how much training I can get in before then. My Ranger duties come first, and if I can find the time to train, I want to give it (the championships) a try."

While it's still uncertain whether Morse will be found at the national championships, he can certainly be found at the front of a Ranger element, leading the way.

YS swings into spring sports

Fort Benning youth turn out in record numbers to register for upcoming season

The grass is turning green, flowers are beginning to bloom and hundreds of children are donning cleats and preparing their gloves for the upcoming baseball and soccer season.

Thirty-six baseball and soccer teams officially began practice on March 8 and will continue practicing until opening day March 20.

"Providing a sport program for children keeps them off the street and allows the children to have fun while exercising," said Dorrie Wagner, recreation assistant at the Main Post Youth Services Center.

"Participating in sports is a great experience for most children and is a positive avenue for kids who need something to do."

According to Wagner, more than 400 registered Youth Services (YS) children were divided by age and placed with volunteer coaches made up of Soldiers and family members.

Wagner said all of the volunteer coaches take time out of their busy schedules to help the children of Fort Benning and without them YS would not have a sports program.

"I coach because the kids truly enjoy the game and I like to be out there helping them learn the basic skills necessary to develop in sports," said Delrick Whitehorn, who is coaching his second season of baseball for YS.

"Baseball builds competitiveness, camaraderie and team work, all of which are beneficial for the children."

The YS baseball program includes four t-ball teams (ages 5 and 6), three coach-pitched teams (ages 7 and 8), four 9- to 11-year-old baseball teams and two 12- to 15-year-old teams.

T-ball and coach-pitched games will be held at Dexter School's baseball field located behind the school. The 9- to 11-year-old games will be held at Green Field on Main Post and the 12- to 15-year-old games at Norton Field located behind Faith Middle School.

The spring soccer program includes six 4- to 5-year-old teams, eight 6- to 8-year-old teams, six- 9- to 11-year-old teams and three- 12- to 15-year-old teams. Soccer games for all age divisions are held at French Field on Main Post.

Games begin at 9 a.m. March 20 and will continue through May 15. There are no scheduled games on April 3 due to the Post Easter Egg Hunt.

YS upcoming events include the 12- to 15-year-old basketball all-star game at 11 a.m. Saturday at the Main Post YS gym.

USAMU prepares for international competition

Paula J. Randall-Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit are gearing up for the 1999 Pan American Games U.S. Team Selection Matches to be conducted April 13-24 at the Wolf Creek Shooting Complex, where the 1996 Olympics were held in Atlanta.

The Pan Am Games, which is conducted every four years, is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and the Campeonato de Tiro des las Americas (CAT Games) — where shooters can win medals and set world records. The 1999 Pan Am Games is also the last opportunity for nations to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

The 41 USAMU international shooters, who are part of the World Class Athlete Program, will be vying for a limited number of slots on the team to represent the U.S. at the 1999 Pan Am Games in Winnipeg, Canada, July 23 to Aug. 8. Shooters from the International Rifle, International Pistol, Running Target and Shotgun Teams will have to be one of the two top finishers in their discipline to make the team.

The International Pistol shooters will be competing April 11-17 in the Rapid Fire, Air Pistol, Free Pistol and Sport Pistol Matches. USAMU shooters Rhonda L. Bright and Daryl L. Szarenski are two of the current leaders in the race for the Pan Am Pistol Team slots.

International Rifle Team members will be striving for slots in Air Rifle, Free Rifle Prone and Smallbore Three-Position April 9-14. Stephen C. Goff, Michael E. Anti, David A. Johnson, Glenn A. Dubis, Kenneth A. Johnson and Jason A. Parker, of USAMU, are leading the pack in the Pan Am Rifle Team competition.

In the shotgun competition, USAMU shooters Theresa E. DeWitt, Joseph D. Buffa and Joetta R. Dement are ahead in the competition. The shotgunners will compete in Skeet, Trap and Double Trap April 15-24.

USAMU running target shooter Armando Ayala is in contention for one of only two slots in 10-Meter 30+30, which will be decided April 10 and 11.

Matches to be conducted April 8, where 5,000 athletes from the western hemisphere will compete 34-person U.S. Shooting T, which will compete against hundreds of shooters from dozens of other countries.

Grapplers prepare for championships

Harriet Rice
U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center

The Army's top grapplers go to the mat in the Armed Forces Wrestling Championships Saturday at Fort Carson, Colo.

The Greco-Roman meet is set for Saturday. With eight weight classes in each division, competition promises to be tough, especially for newcomers on the Army team.

There aren't many veterans left — one of them is the head coach, former Olympian Derrick Waldroup, holder of 15 Armed Forces and four national titles. He placed 7th in Greco-Roman at the 1996 Summer Games in Atlanta.

"We've taken the last two years to do some rebuilding. We have a lot of new faces, new young Soldiers. It's going to be a tough battle. The Marine Corps, the Navy, the Air Force all have tough teams — they have more veterans," explained the 37-year-old Chicago native. "I think it's going to be probably one of the closest Armed Forces competitions I've been involved with in the last 14 years."

New and veteran wrestlers are top ranked in the nation. The Nieradka brothers, Dave and Glenn, who hail from Oregon are back, each fighting in a different weight class. Dave Nieradka is nationally ranked sixth at 58kg, while Glenn ranks third at 63 kg.

Wisconsin native Spc. Keith Sieracki, another veteran, ranks second at 76kg. His teammate in that weight class, Spc. Miguel Spencer, ranks third but is sidelined by an injury.

A total of 62 Soldiers, including returning World Class Athletes, participated in this year's All-Army wrestling camp. Survival is not easy, and only the fittest make it.

"Two major adjustments (Soldiers) have to make are to the altitude and the rigorous training regimen we put them through. We put the All-Army guys right in there and they have to keep up," Waldroup said.

Training at altitude — over 6,000 feet (higher than Denver) — gives the athletes an advantage, Waldroup said. But athletic ability aside, it's attitude and the hunger for victory that really counts.

"This year three All-Army athletes made the team; that says a lot about their character. They have the ability to become future WCAP athletes. This is going to be their first trial period," Waldroup said. The three All-Army wrestlers are Clarence Arrington (Fort Carson, Colo.), Eddie Woody (Baumholder, Germany) and Charles Daniels (Fort Campbell, Ky.)

"We've been emphasizing intensity and tenacity. I think when everything else is even — athletic ability — it's going to come down to the person who really wants it the most."

While Waldroup is a realist, he is also optimistic about the talented Soldiers who make up the Army team. "We are not going to be back where we were in 1996 where we had five guys in the finals of the Olympic trials, but we are definitely a lot closer than we were last year."

DoD team vies for championship

Stowe, Vt. — A Chinook pilot, a West Point cadet and an aviation company operations officer swept, the men's Armed Forces Giant Slalom Championship held here March 4.

Despite poor snow conditions, rain and dense fog, Grant Haugen, Adam Heppe and William Taylor finished first, second and third out of 11 male skiers representing the Army, Air Force and Marine Corps.

Haugen, who captured the giant slalom gold medal, is stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky., where he pilots Chinook helicopters. The Colorado native grew up in Telluride and was a ski racer throughout high school and his four years at the University of Nevada, in Reno. As a National Collegiate Ski Association racer, Haugen finished the 1988 season with national rankings of 10th place in the downhill and a ninth place in the Super G.

Since his piloting job doesn't allow for many training opportunities on the snow, Haugen cross trains and works out to keep himself in top physical condition. He said he hit the slopes only twice in December and skied just one practice run the day before the race.

Together with the military's top two women skiers, Staci Pannel and Jennifer Rollins, the three men join 20 military biathletes who make up the armed forces ski team that will represent the U. S. at the Winter Consiel International du Sport Militaire championships scheduled for March 19-26 in Lillehammer, Norway.

Haugen is no newcomer to the Games, having won a place on the 1998 team. Although he is not looking forward to leaving his wife Stephanie and their newborn baby, Haugen said he anticipates making his mark at the competition along with teammates Taylor from Fort Wainwright, Alaska, and Heppe, who attends the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

Wrestling coaches share strong bond

Michael Kastre
Army News Service

Fort Carson, Colo. — As a coaching duo they are formidable: Derrick Waldroup, Olympian, and Anatoli Nazarenko, world champion. As the Army's head wrestling coach and assistant coach they complement each other; individually, they are living legends in the world of mats, pins and holds.

During his military wrestling career, Waldroup, a member of the Illinois Wrestling Hall of Fame, won an impressive array of medals and 15 Armed Forces titles. He was also a force in international competition, wrestling in Pan American Games, Conseil International due Sport Militaire World Military Championships and the 1996 Olympics. Nazarenko is a three-time world champion from Kazakhstan who wrestled and coached for the Soviet Union, then coached Waldroup to his seventh place finish in Atlanta in 1996.

Beyond the love of the sport, Waldroup and Nazarenko share another strong bond: the desire to make the U.S Army team one of the best in the world.

Based here at the Army World Class Athlete training center, they work out with and train the Army's top wrestler for competition that could lead to berths on the U.S. Olympic Team for the 2000 Sydney games. They paused to reflect on the facilities, the art of coaching and the strength of the Army team.

The Army has created one of the best training centers of Greco-Roman wrestling in the United States. "We have year round training and not many places in the country offer such an opportunity. We have balanced training based on science. And since our team is comprised of Soldier athletes, we can control it all year around," said Nazarenko, who came to work with the Army program in 1995.

This pursuit of performance excellence is altering Army wrestling. Waldroup explained, "We are now able to attract more top athletes to our World Class Athlete Program. Many used to come from the high school ranks, but now we are getting people like NCAA champions from the college level."

In December 1998, the Army team returned from an intensive training camp in Russia and almost immediately went into a tough training session at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo. "I think our guys are getting to the point now where we can push them harder and harder. The benefits are going to be down the road," Waldroup said.

The two coaches also invited teams from Bulgaria and several other countries to train with the Army team prior to the Second Annual Dave Schultz Memorial Tournament scheduled at Fort Carson in February. That competition featured many of the top wrestlers from the U.S. national and the international community and paved the way for selections to the Armed Forces Wrestling Championship being held Saturday.

U.S. Nationals are slated for May in Las Vegas, Nev. The Pan American Games and the Military World Games this summer are all rungs on the ladder wrestlers must climb to qualify for U.S world team trials, even though selection will not made until the year of the Olympics. Waldroup said, "You have to place in the top eight in the nationals to compete in the world team trials."

Such a demanding schedule of training and competition requires the coaches' total commitment as well as discipline tempered with a measure of nurturing. This can be challenging because of all the different personalities of the athletes. But as Waldroup noted, "That's one of the advantages of the Soldier as opposed to being a coach at a university. With a Soldier you are not going to have a lot of the problems you find with some of your university or high school athletes because of the military structure. That makes our job a little bit easier to do because the military athlete is a Soldier first and he is disciplined."

Discipline is key. "This is one of the duties as a coach: you have to maintain discipline. You have to make sure everything is in balance," Nazarenko pointed out. "Part of this process is persuading people to do the right thing. But there are a lot of ways to do that, you can't just punish people. Depending on what the problem is, for example, you can make them train harder."

Nazarenko added, "Whatever it takes to get their attention. Maybe it is making an athlete repeat something until he gets it right. There are a lot of ways. Coaching is intuition. And you need all these methods to achieve your results."

He continued, "In my mind the most difficult part of coaching is seeing each athlete as an individual. You have to recognize that some athletes have more talent in certain areas. And you have to really be able to identify this and focus and push those athletes in the direction of their talents. You can't emphasize the same thing for everybody. You have to identify strengths and weaknesses for each person and work with those."

But it takes more than just developing raw talent; it takes attitude. "At this level (world class amateurs) the skills of the wrestlers are very close. Those who win are the ones with more heart and mental power," Nazarenko stressed.

Waldroup agreed. "You can train an athlete to have good technical skills, but you can't overlook the psychological part of it. When I started working with Anatoli, I probably learned more about wrestling in two years than I did in the previous 20 because he showed me how sports psychology can really help you to focus mentally and increase your power curve."

Preserving The Nation's Treasured History

(NAPSA)-Here's news that's bound to raise a red-white and blue-flag: A major thrust has been made to preserve the "Star-Spangled Banner" and the nation's Charters of Freedom-the Declaration of Independence, Constitution and Bill of Rights.

The Pew Charitable Trusts joined First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton earlier this year in a White House briefing to announce this program.

The flag that inspired our national anthem, and the founding documents housed at the National Archives, more than 200 years old, are in need of up-to-date preservation efforts to help make sure they will last into the next century and beyond.

"As the country approaches the new millennium, we want to make sure that the blueprints of democracy and this grand, tattered old flag are safe," said Rebecca W. Rimel, president of the Pew Charitable Trusts. "These are American touchstones and we are proud to offer our help to protect them from the ravages of time."

She added: "With historic Philadelphia as our home-and Independence Hall the birthplace of the Declaration of Independence-it is particularly fitting that the Trusts celebrate their 50th year with this gift to the nation that will guarantee the future of these irreplaceable national artifacts."

The Trusts are granting $5 million to the Smithsonian Institution for the $18 million Star Spangled Banner project. Other significant support comes from Polo Ralph Lauren and a Congressional appropriation.

The Star-Spangled Banner, the 30-by-34-foot flag sewn by a Baltimore widow, is housed at the National Museum of American History in Washington. This flag was flying over Fort McHenry in Baltimore on the morning of Sept. 13, 1814 and inspired Francis Scott Key to pen the words to our national anthem.

The Smithsonian will place it in an on-site glass-enclosed conservation laboratory where it can be cleaned and treated before being reinstalled.

The public will be able to see the banner during the conservation process.

The plan to develop enclosures for the Charters includes a grant of $800,000 from the Trusts to the Foundation for the National Archives and $1.32 million from the federal government.

The Pew Charitable Trusts, among the nation's largest philanthropies, support nonprofit activities in the areas of culture, education, the environment, health and human services, public policy and religion.

Hospitals Aid Children

(NAPSA)-Across the nation and in Canada, Shriners Hospitals for Children are helping youngsters in need to live healthier and not be afraid to dream.

They do this by offering excellent, no-cost medical care to children with orthopaedic problems or burn injuries.

Since 1922, Shriners Hospitals have provided care to about 600,000 children. Known as experts in pediatric burn care, Shriners focuses much of today's research on improving the quality of life of burn survivors. Here are some tips to help prevent burns:

- Keep children away from electrical ranges, ovens, grills and heaters.
- Don't allow cords to dangle from countertops where young children may tug on them and pull a hot appliance off.
- Buy and use only child-resistant lighters. Teach children the dangers of playing with fire.

There are 22 Shriners Hospitals for Children. To refer a child to Shriners Hospitals, call toll-free 1-800-237-5055 in the U.S. or 1-800-361-7256 in Canada.

Women, men equally adept at office technology

(NAPSA)-As women continue to advance in the workplace more women are taking advantage of office technology.

According to a survey, sponsored by Hewlett-Packard Company and Working Woman magazine, women feel as comfortable with and competent at dealing with office technology as their male co-workers, but there are gender differences in how men and women seek technical assistance and gender biases in teaching children about technology.

The "Women and Technology" survey found that 76 percent of men and 76 percent of women believe the sexes are equally adept at adopting technology.

The study also found that being technology-savvy provides advancement opportunities for 62 percent of working women.

Currently, one in 12 professionals doesn't use any office technology, and one in five would consider returning to the days before computers, faxes and printers.

The study also found that men and women react differently to technology roadblocks.

More men (50 percent) than women (39 percent) struggle through problems themselves rather than ask for help.

Women (22 percent) are more likely than men (10 percent) to ask colleagues, friends or family. However, both are equally likely to call tech support.

Views diverge when it comes to children and technology. The majority of men (83 percent) and women (91 percent) think children should be introduced to technology before age 10.

However, more women (49 percent) than men (34 percent) say children should be introduced to technology by age five.

Women and Technology

The overwhelming majority of women responding to the survey credit technology for making work more efficient (90 percent), faster (86 percent), higher quality (83 percent) and easier (85 percent).

However, about two-thirds said they didn't believe the ability to use office technology affects job security.

Women (27 percent) are less likely than men (39 percent) to say technology complicates work. More than half (51 percent) said technology enables more free time.

About 72 percent said they would work from home using technology but weren't sure employers would agree.

Overall, women said they consider themselves skilled in office technology. Women surveyed ranked as follows:

Technology wizards-15.0 percent
Literate-67.5 percent
Illiterate-13.3 percent
Fearful-3.4 percent
Don't know-0.8 percent

Popular Office Technologies

Women ranked the following office technologies according to frequency of use:

printers-79 percent
fax machines-75 percent computers-72 percent
e-mail-62 percent
voice-mail-54 percent

Following these technologies (in order of frequency of use) were the Internet (45 percent), cellular phones (36 percent), pagers (34 percent) and laptop computers (19 percent). The survey found the same office technology use for men.

Hewlett-Packard Company (www. hp.com) sponsored this study with Working Woman magazine (www. workingwoman. com) to learn more about how its customers use technology.

The overwhelming majority of women credit office technology with making life easier.

Boy Scouts, Knots May Help Millions

(NAPSA)-Two former Boy Scouts have developed a medical device that lets surgeons "tie the knot" with just the push of a button.

For years, surgeons have identified the tying of knots inside the body as one of the more challenging tasks during videoscopic or minimally invasive surgery. In this kind of procedure, surgeons insert long, thin instruments-including a miniature camera-into the body. Once inside, surgeons can use the camera to guide them as they perform common surgeries such as that for gallbladder, hernia and gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD) or chronic heartburn.

Dale Schulze and Troy McMillen, engineers with Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc., were part of a group of former Boy Scouts who developed the knot-tying device, known as the Suture Assistant.

The hand-held device has a preloaded, pre-tied knot at its tip. Once inside the body, with the squeeze of a trigger, the knot tightens and holds. According to a recent study, the Suture Assistant was shown to tie surgical knots that were at least as strong as those hand-tied by surgeons.

"The Suture Assistant basically ties a surgical knot that is a variation of the knot that Boy Scouts use if they were going down a cliff," said Schulze, who earned a knot-tying merit badge as a boy.

After poring over The Encyclopedia of Knots in search of a practical slip-knot that could become a permanent knot inside the body, McMillen developed a new design, called the DuraKnot™.

"It's one of those things you learn as a kid that you never knew would come in handy one day," he said.

"Laparoscopic knot tying is difficult," said Ed Philips, MD, a pioneer in minimally invasive surgery at Cedar Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. "Now surgeons can have an instrument that is easy to use and a time saver in the operating room."

Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc., a Johnson & Johnson company, is the manufacturer of the Suture Assistant.

Surgeons can now easily tie knots during minimally invasive surgery, thanks to a new device designed by former Boy Scouts.

Fort Benning wins fourth CINC award

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

As Fort Benning stepped up to accept the Georgia Oglethorpe Award Thursday, Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst also learned that Fort Benning's strive for excellence paid off with the announcement of another post victory.

It was announced Tuesday that Fort Benning is the winner of the 1999 Army Communities of Excellence Commander-in-Chief's Award (CINC) for the fourth time in five years.

"I am proud of our Fort Benning family. It is truly a team of teams," Ernst said. "Winning the Chief of Staff Award for the seventh consecutive time and the Commander-in-Chief's award for the fourth time in five years is incomparable. Additionally, we were recognized as the best federal activity and best government activity in Georgia. It clearly proves that Fort Benning is the best installation in the Army."

After being forced to sit out last year's CINC Competition due to 'The Benning Rule,' the post came back stronger than ever this year, said Sarah McLaney, Chief of Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management.

Not only will this win secure $500,000 for improvements to post and to quality of life for Soldiers, family members and the civilian work force, it also shows Fort Benning is the best of the best, McLaney said.

"Everyone is proud to be associated with Fort Benning. This win says a lot for our work force," McLaney said. "The people here are constantly striving to give better service to everyone they work with. We are always striving to be better tomorrow than we are today."

Not only did Fort Benning beat out 27 other Army installations this year in the ACOE, Fort Benning has seized the title in every competition it has competed in every year.

"We are also grateful to the civilian community. Their support was a critical element in our winning these awards," Ernst said.

So, after Fort Benning leaders place the Oglethorpe in the well-decorated trophy case, they will begin to prepare to depart for the presentation of the ACOE Commander in Chief Award May 7 in Washington D.C.

TSM develops new rucksack

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If just the thought of strapping on a rucksack is enough to make every joint in your body ache, have no fear, the Army is ready to get rid of the old and bring in the new.

In a combined effort between the Army and Marines, a replacement to the All-Purpose Lightweight Individual Carrying Equipment (ALICE) is in its final stage of testing. Within months a decision will be made as to whether the new carrying system will be ready for the backs of Soldiers.

The Modular Light-Weight Load Carrying System (MLS) is a far cry from its older and less versatile counterpart. Created partly based upon the advice of Soldiers, the new rucksack is more than just a carrying device, according to Assistant TRADOC System Manager (TSM) Soldier, Maj. Bill Mason.

"In 1994, the Army did a survey of 2,000 Soldiers and what they wanted in a new load carrying system," Mason said. "They (Soldiers) wanted something that was tailorable, which means it can be reconfigured to any mission. They also wanted to have something where the weight would be distributed equally between the shoulders and the hips."

In 1995, The U.S Army Infantry Center decided to give the Soldiers what they wanted by approving an Operational Requirement Document for a new load-carrying system. The process of developing a new rucksack began and ultimately lead to the birth of the MLS.

There are six types of components to the MLS which makes it ideal for Soldiers, Mason said.

First, there is a load bearing vest, which replaces the old suspender and belt system. The main rucksack comes complete with a butt and assault pack and modular sleeping bag carrier system. It also includes a series of pockets and pouches which attach to the rucksack. Fitted inside of the rucksack is an on-the-move hydration system that has a tube which runs from the rucksack directly to the Soldier.

Besides these six components, the MLS is a tailorable system that allows all of the accessories to be removed and arranged specifically to meet the requirements of different missions.

Mason said another benefit the MLS provides is equal weight dispersion between a Soldier's shoulders and hips.

"Anyone who has road-marched knows that after a few miles your arms and your back start hurting," Mason said. "The MLS not only allows a Soldier to initially distribute the weight between his shoulders, but also throughout the movement he can move it back and forth by adjusting some bindings."

Sgt. Jeff Cathrell, TSM Soldier, agrees that the new rucksack is better.

"I have road marched with it (MLS) and it helps distribute the load to take the strain off of your back," Cathrell said. "When I was finished, I didn't feel as fatigued as I did with the older system."

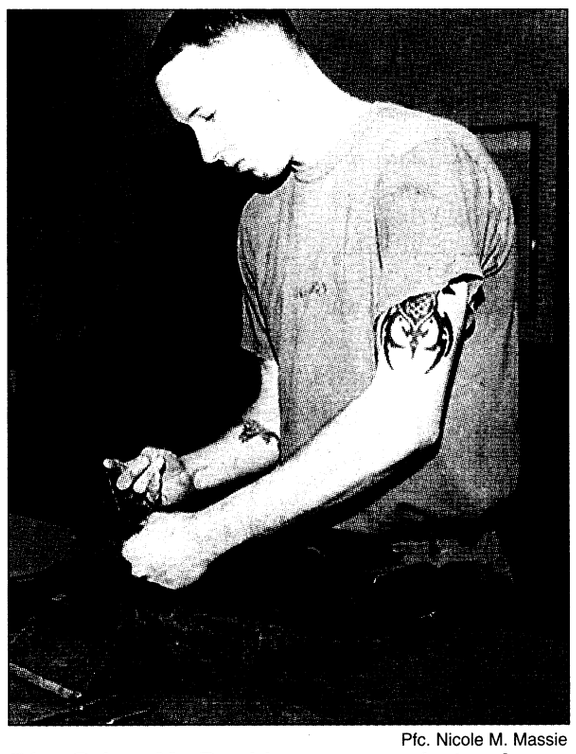
He also mentioned that the on Reserve chute offers higher deployment rate

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Airborne Soldiers have completed more jumps safely over the past year thanks to a new life-saving system, the modified improved reserve parachute system (MIRPS).

Put into action last August at Fort Benning, the MIRPS system brought the odds from a 60th percentile deployment rate with the original T-10 reserve parachute to a 90th percentile deployment rate with the MIRPS.

The development of the MIRPS began in 1994 when the U.S. Army Infantry School took on a mission to find a suitable replacement to the original T-10 reserve parachute.



If the jumper experienced a malfunction in the air with the original reserve parachute, the Soldier would be required to determine the type of malfunction occurring and deploy the reserve in the proper way to save his life.

According to Maj. George Shuplinkov, operations officer, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, deploying the T-10 reserve could become complicated for the inexperienced jumper. The total malfunction may have seemed a little less confusing with the pull drop method but just as frightening.

If the Soldier was experiencing a partial malfunction, he would need to pull the T-10 reserve rip cord grip, stop it from deploying with his left hand, grab the parachute with his right hand, then physically toss it as far away from himself as possible. If he did not do this, the reserve could become entangled with the main parachute and cause a catastrophic failure with both parachutes, said Shuplinkov.

The new reserve parachute took an alternate approach. The MIRPS took the responsibility of proper deployment away from the Soldier and placed it within the parachute.

"The MIRPS elevated the steps the Soldier had to do to deploy the reserve," said Airborne School Instructor, Staff Sgt. Roberto J. Flowers, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regiment.

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Pfc. Brian M. Buckley, a parachute rigger with Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, packs a MIRPS.

In 1995, the MIRPS prototype, the first spring-loaded reserve system was tested at Fort Bragg, N.C. This system, now known as the MIRPS, deploys the reserve away from Soldiers, which is effective no matter what type of malfunction they are having, Shuplinkov said.

"The MIRPS allowed us to simplify training and increased the reliability of the parachute. Now, Soldiers do not have to spend time trying to figure out which method of deployment to use. These tests determined that the new system was the way to go," Shuplinkov said. "There is no doubt in my mind this is the best reserve parachute deployed by the Army."

Soldiers rely so heavily on the parachute that a Soldier must be equipped with a MIRPS any time he jumps on Fort Benning, according to Shuplinkov. Fort Benning has an excess of 2,200 MIRPS on hand.

"I will not hesitate to jump with a MIRPS. I know it is a better parachute," Shuplinkov said. "I have even personally witnessed a MIRPS save a Soldier's life while I was on the dropzone."

Benning cracks down on curfew violators

Pvt. 2 Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

For years, national crime statistics have indicated a trend among the American teen-age population of heightened criminal activity in teens who venture out past curfew. That problem, however, has never been one that has plagued Fort Benning.

That is until now.

The national problem has become local as Fort Benning teens have taken to loitering and participating in illegal activities on post after curfew hours, according to Sgt. Maj. Edmond A. Singleton, garrison sergeant major and presiding judge of Fort Benning's Juvenile Court System, .

"I have seen more curfew violators in the past two months than I have since the juvenile court program began in August of last year," Singleton said. "Unfortunately, most of the kids we see in here (juvenile court) for curfew violations aren't just here for staying out past curfew. They are here for things they did while they were staying out past hours."

Singleton said most of the problems deals directly with the relationship of juveniles staying after curfew and other illegal behavior.

"I would venture to say that 90 percent of the kids who come through here were doing something else illegal when they were caught for curfew violation," he said. "It is not policy for us to go out and search for kids staying out past hours, but when they gather and get into drinking, smoking and using foul language that is when we become involved."

Singleton reinforced U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 that states all dependents under the age of 18 are required to be in their quarters after 10 p.m. each night and remain there until 5 a.m. unless accompanied by their parent or guardian or enroute to or from an organized function.

Singleton said refusal to follow this policy is not only the responsibility of the child but with the Ancient beliefs turn to modern myths

commentary

Superstitions — we've all heard of them and whether we'd like to admit it or not, most of us probably believe in some of them.

If you are one of those people who wouldn't dare cross the path of a black cat or contemplate staying in bed on Friday the 13th because you're scared a piano is going to fall on your head, you are allowing yourself to partake in rituals that have been around for a long, long time.

Almost all superstitions were conjured up by our dear old ancestors and have remained unchanged for hundreds and thousands of years. Some originate as far back as the Middle Ages and even Pagan Europe. Of course, way back then, myths and superstitions were considered religion and followed like the law. I guess for the super duper superstitious, this still applies.

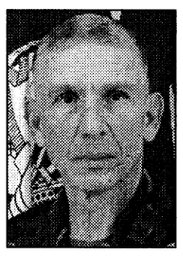
What gets me is that we live in a high-tech, have all the answers kind of world and pay thousands of dollars for a premier education, yet we find it necessary to throw salt over our shoulder or carry around funky-colored extremities from poor dead bunnies. If you ask me, dead animal parts are disgusting and shouldn't be allowed in our pockets.

While I don't believe in most of the superstitions and frankly find some of them pretty stupid, I'm woman enough to admit that an occasional reflex has found me knocking on wood and I do value a couple of items that I feel have brought me luck.

One thing I've never been able to figure out though is why someone would get so caught up in the whole superstition thing he would go a week wearing the same pair of lucky underwear or refuse to pick up a penny that's tails-up. Money is money as far as I'm concerned.

However, when I found out how a lot of these superstitions came about, it began to make sense why people feel so strongly about them. Of course, that still doesn't excuse wearing the same pair of underwear for a week straight.

An example of this is the famed "break a mirror receive seven years of bad luck" superstition. Believe it or not, this superstition is one of the oldest. The idea revolves around the concept that our reflection was thought to be another version of ourselves. Thus, if we break or damage a mirror, we are in turn doing the same to our soul, which is where the bad luck comes into play.



Another superstition that has to do with luck, is knocking on wood. It is usually done after a person brags or says something that could possibly jinx him. The idea that knocking on wood reverses the jinx or brings good luck comes from the ancient Celtics of Europe. These people used to worship trees as early representation of gods. Trees were thought to have the power to send evil spirits away.

Or how about walking underneath a ladder. I mean why in the heck should that bring bad luck. Well, it just so happens that in early history when hanging was the preferred method of execution, a ladder was required to place the rope from the gallow in the correct position. After the deed was done the ladder was also useful in retrieving the person's body. Anyone walking beneath a ladder was sure to face death and since then the ladder has become a figure of misfortune.

These are just a few examples of the hundreds of superstitions that are out there. Even though I don't particularly go for the whole superstition thing, I know there are a lot of people who take them seriously and truly believe in them.

If believing in something lucky or doing something to prevent bad luck keeps somebody confident and makes him feel safe, I guess there's nothing wrong with that. We all need something to believe in.

CG thanks work force for dedication, excellence

Fort Benning, you did it again — you won the Commander-in-Chief's award for excellence for an unprecedented fourth time in a five-year period.

This is like winning the Super Bowl, World Series and NCAA Basketball Championship over and over and over again.

This is a record that will never be repeated. You are the best and no one can take that from you. Look at what you've done since 1993:

Beginning in 1993 and continuing for consecutive years, Fort Benning was the annual winner of the Chief of Staff's award. This year marks the seventh win in a row — so long Chicago Bulls.

In 1997, we won the President's award for quality, the first time out of the blocks. Winning the first time out was unheard of before we came along. It was never done before. To prove it wasn't a fluke, we won the Georgia Oglethorpe Award this year, again, the first time we tried.

We won because of you. We are the best because we are a team of teams. We won because we take care of our Soldiers and their families. And we won because of the unequaled support we receive from Phenix City and Columbus. Our friends in the Chattahoochee Valley are behind us every step of the way and they make the critical difference when evaluators come to visit.

These victories don't come easily — other installations are using our models to improve themselves — that's what ACOE is all about.

In addition to being acclaimed the best again, we also receive $500,000 in awards money. As in the past, we will use this money to improve the quality of life of our Fort Benning family.

I am proud of each and every one of you and thank you for all that you do to win these awards. It's a privilege to serve with you.

Hooah!

BOSS Corner

What is BOSS, or the Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers program?

Department of the Army officials designed the program to improved the quality of life for single Soldiers. Officials saw the need for such a program that could enrich the lives of single Soldiers.

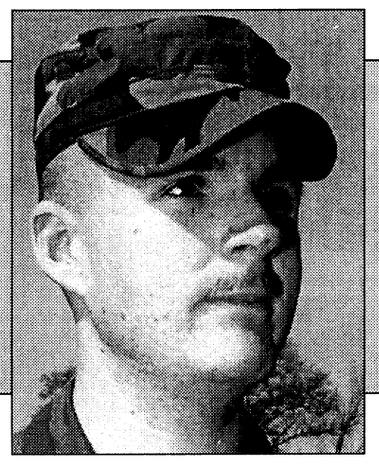
The BOSS program supports quality of life issues and concerns by recommending improvements through the chain of command. The program remains a valuable tool for the chain of command to use in identifying ways to improve Soldiers' lives.

Participating in the BOSS program allows single Soldiers, to meet other Soldiers and take action in improving single Soldiers' quality of life. It's an opportunity for the Soldiers to contribute and meet people in the community by volunteering in different organizations. It allows Soldiers to participate in planned events on and off post.

Post celebrates women's history

In recognition of Women's History Month, the month of March is dedicated to observing the contributions and sacrifices women made throughout American history. The theme for this year's observance is "Women, Putting Our Stamp on America."

Throughout American history, women have shown the pioneering spirit and leadership in a variety of diverse arenas. Absolutely no part of American history is complete without addressing and recognizing the contributions of women from Susan B. Anthony, who fought for voting and equal rights for women, to Amelia Earhart, who bravely took to the skies to advance aviation science.



Within the American military, women have served proudly. Women served in the Revolutionary War in the Army of Gen. George Washington. Harriet Tubman was one of the greatest guerrilla leaders of the Civil War. Women of today both military and DA civilians are propelling military to new heights.

Thousands of women have and are, serving our nation throughout the world. Women are putting their stamp on America.

Regulation outlines post pet guidelines

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning pet owners must follow the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Animal Regulation while residing in post housing.

USAIC Regulation 40-905, Pet and Animal Disease Control, provides procedures that outline rules for the possession and control of all pets owned on post in order to ensure that Soldiers and their family members safety needs are met when dealing with animal matters.

"The installation is responsible for the Soldiers and their families first. The rules contained in this regulation pertain to the care of pets so they can remain a welcomed addition to Fort Benning," said Garrison Manager Chuck Walls. "It is our responsibility to take care of the installation. We recognize that pets are important to families, but due to close quarters, pet owners need to be considerate and keep their pets under control and insure they do not become a annoyance."

The regulation states all privately-owned animals will be under the control of the owner at all times, no animal will be permitted to run stray. Animals will be on a leash when walked. Pet owners must also clean up after their animals. Animal waste must be cleared out of the owners yard frequently enough to keep it from reaching unsanitary levels. This may be as often as once a week or even more for large dogs.

When an animal resides outside they must either be on a chain longer than 10 feet or within a fence when unattended.

Overly aggressive animals are encouraged to be kept off post due to the close proximity of families living in on-post housing.

According to the regulation, no animal shall be allowed to threaten persons without provocation. Aggressive animals which cause unprovoked harm to any person or animal, or are involved in a provoked bite or scratch incident may be immediately removed from post by authority of the installation commander upon a determination that the animal has created a public health concern.

When a dog bites a child, immediate attention is placed on the case and the fate of the dog. In order to keep children safe and dogs welcome in their neighborhood, Walls said, residents have a responsibility to properly supervise their pets.

MLS: System adjusts load to mission the move hydration system is a plus.

"The hydration system is awesome," Cathrell said. "A lot of times Soldiers wont drink when they are moving because it is just too much of a hassle. This system helps us stay hydrated because it's very easy."

For Soldiers who are anxious to get their hands on the system, they may not have to wait long.

Currently, the MLS is finishing up its final phase of operational testing with the cold weather tests in Alaska, Mason said.

"It has already been through the tropical and temperate climate testing and has done very well," Mason said. "We are now just waiting the results from Alaska. Once they are back, those will drive the decision to whether we will procure and field the item."

Mason went on to add that if all the tests are positive, the Army will begin procurement of the system in midsummer, which means fielding could begin sometime between September and December.

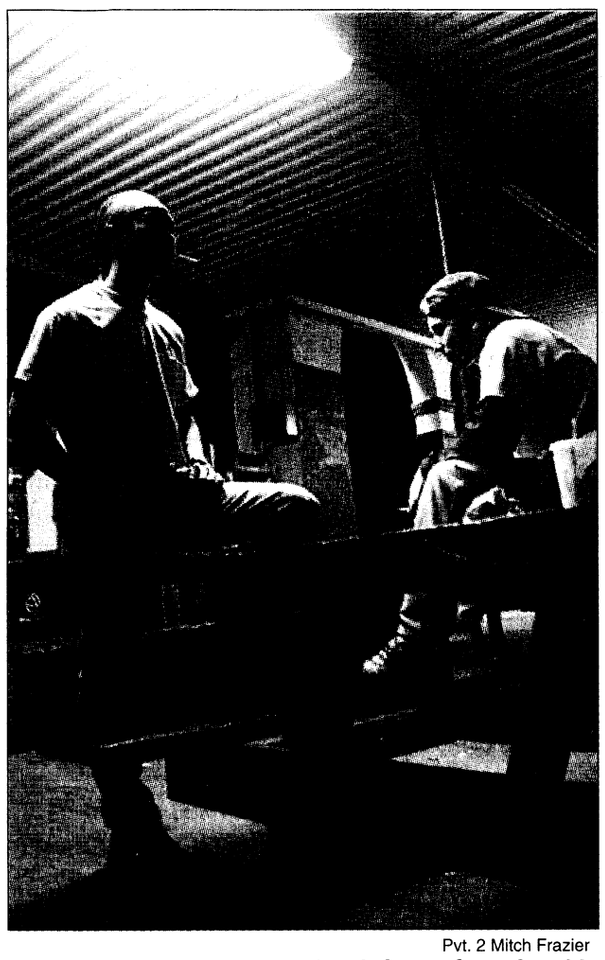
"I would say that the MLS will make the Soldiers in the Army units more effective in two ways," Mason said. "First, for the individual Soldier, it will make him more capable on the objective because he is not as fatigued when he reaches their destination. Secondly, it makes the units more effective because the commander can tailor the load to the mission at hand."

Retirees can enroll in plan

Army News Service

A Survivor Benefit Plan (SBP) disenrollment period is going on right now. Army retirees of at least two years have until May 16 to decide to disenroll and submit paperwork. (If you haven't been retired two years yet, you have a year from your second anniversary to make this decision.) How can you decide if you should disenroll?

Also, a one-year SBP open enrollment period began March 1. Should you enroll in SBP? How will you figure out what it will cost and what benefit will result?



Congress recently passed a law giving SBP a paid-up provision effective 2008. Does this affect you? How should it affect your decision to disenroll or enroll?

Where can you go for answers to these questions? You can go to your Army installation Retirement Services Officer (RSU).

Every Soldier preparing to retire, retiree and family member is served by an RSO. With only a few exceptions, RSOs are located at Army installations. If an RSO is 200 miles away, you can still call, write or e-mail that RSO to get the help you need. Your RSO is an expert on SBP and all other retirement programs and benefits.

Fort Benning's Retirement Services Officer is Friede McDonald. For more information on the Survivor Benefit Plan, call 545-5369 or 545-2715.

Curfew: Families may lose privileges sponsor as well.

"If the child is not at a legitimate activity at 10 p.m., he should be in the house," he said. "It's both the parents' and the child's responsibility to make sure that happens. It is just that simple."

Singleton said even though the program is simplistic, he has individuals who cannot comply with the policy and wager losing their family's on-post privileges, that includes everything from use of the post exchange to getting ejected from housing.

"Although ejection from housing and taking away other privileges are a last resort, we don't hesitate to use them," he said.

Losing those privileges is the last strike in a series of three in the "three strikes and you're out" policy that governs juvenile offenses on post.

According to Singleton, that three strike offense process begins when the juvenile is first detained by military police and given a court date to appear before him in juvenile court. Typically in this, the first offense, juveniles are required to serve 24 hours of community service.

Singleton said with each additional offense the community service time is lengthened up until the third offense where Singleton can then decide on another sentence that could involve the loss of privileges for the entire family.

Singleton said the program has given many Fort Benning youth a second chance and has helped to steer them away from the activities that landed them in Singleton's court.

"Most of the kids I see come through here once and learn their lesson," he said. "But the ones who I see time and time again, those are the ones we are trying to reach."

EIB

Soldiers push themselves to earn coveted badge

Spc. Timothy Peterson
Bayonet correspondent

The Infantryman can set himself above the rest of his peers and show himself to be an expert in his field by competing for the Expert Infantryman Badge (EIB). EIB testing allows him to push himself past the limits and show his fellow Soldiers just what he can accomplish.

Annual testing for the EIB began March 8 at Burroughs Range and Soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment, Ranger Training Brigade, 11th Regiment and Infantry Training Brigade came out to give it their best shot.

Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) began a week of train-up for the badge Monday and will take to the testing lanes March 22-26.

Before a Soldier can even think about testing for the badge, they must first pass a physical training test with a score of 70 points in each event and qualify expert with the M-16A1 or M-16A2.

After they earn the privilege to maneuver the EIB testing lanes, they are required to complete 33 tasks at 19 different testing stations if they hope to earn the badge.

Some of the tasks include assembling and disassembling a M-249 squad automatic weapon (SAW), employing and using the claymore mine; operating and maintaining the SINGARS radio system; estimating range of fire; applying first aid; moving under direct fire and proper camouflaging techniques. They must also complete a 12-mile road march within three hours.

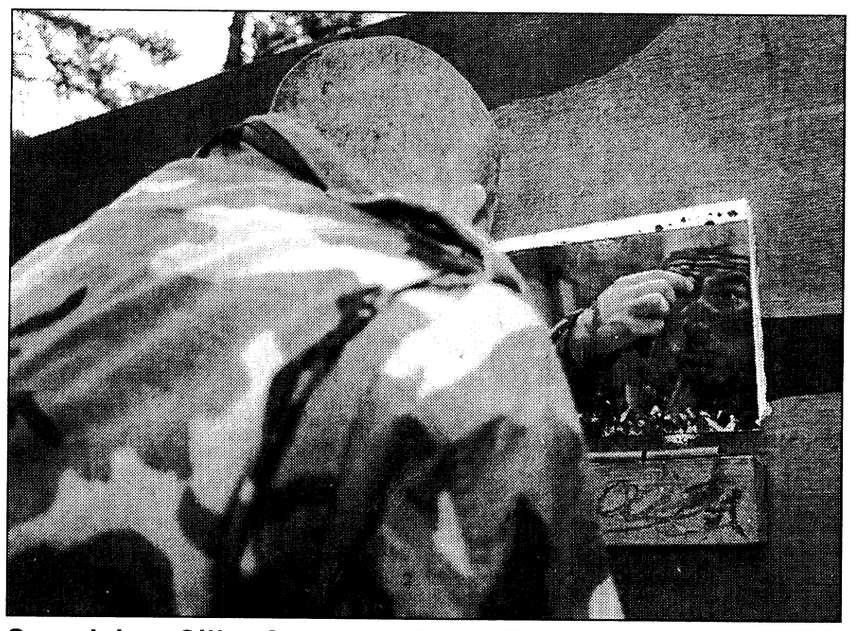
"The hardest task is the land navigation," said Command Sgt. Maj. William M. Grant the, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div., operations sergeant major.

These strenuous tasks afford the modern Infantryman a chance to pull all of their skills together and put to use the skills he has learned. "To succeed in this competition calls for preparation," Grant said. "You need the right frame of mind. You have to really want it."

The badge gives you the opportunity to become one of the elite, said Staff Sgt. Charles M. Fish, an EIB tester and grader. "By earning the badge you earn the right to true bragging rights. It pumps you up."

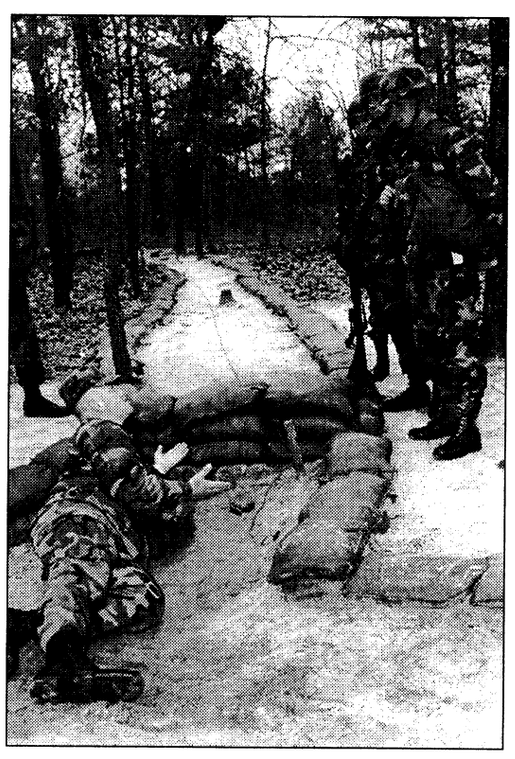
"To me the EIB means advancement," said Staff Sgt. Paul S. Archangel, an EIB candidate. "It's an emblem displaying the pride of an Infantryman."

"It is an example of 'do as I do not as I say,'"according to Staff Sgt. Scott Scholl, a drill sergeant. It gives the trainees something to shoot for. If you tell your Soldiers to be the best and you are a representation of that statement, then it makes them see that being the best at what you do is possible.

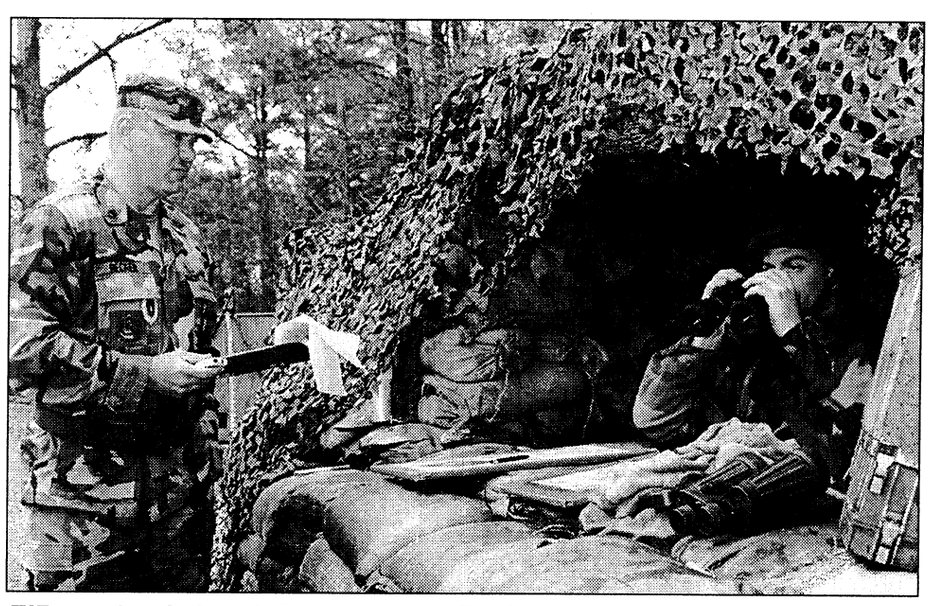


"It gives them a goal to accomplish," he said.

Earning the EIB brings with it not only the pride of knowing you are among the best Infantryman in the world, but also the promotion points, said Grant. It makes leaders say, 'hey I want that guy in my squad,' because they know he is squared away and good at what he does.



"The EIB is not an easy badge to attain, but it is worth the work it takes to get it," one student said as he attempted to complete one of the 33 tested tasks. "I will do everything I can do to get it."



A group of Soldiers gather around a burning barrel to keep warm and quiz each other on the tasks. The Soldiers must complete 33 tasks to qualify for the EIB.

Spc. Jaime Sills, Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, applies camouflage as part of the EIB testing. Soldiers must properly camouflage their face hands and equipment in 12 minutes.

Officer candidates begin intermediate phase

Officer Candidate Frank Tedeschi
Officer Candidate School

The sound of a lone bass drum echoed through the halls of Officer Candidate School (OCS) Saturday, signifying that Class 2-99 had begun its Intermediate Phase. The drumbeat marked time while 112 Officer Candidates (OCs) "enjoyed" the privilege of marching tours around the OCS grounds, a task undertaken to work off the many demerits amassed by the class in the five weeks of Basic Phase.

The students, donning blue ascots identifying them as Intermediate OCs, must work off all their demerits to be eligible to go on pass. Although some will not be able to work off their points for quite some time. But even those candidates will be permitted to go on pass for this weekend's "Mid-Cycle Picnic" at Uchee Creek Campground, an OCS tradition that allows the Candidates and their families to get reacquainted and even gives them a chance to socialize with the cadre and their families.

The five weeks that make up the Basic Phase include training in leadership, Army operations, tactics, intelligence, history and an intensive block of land navigation that culminates with a day and night land navigation test. All training is organized by the candidates themselves, under the supervision of the OCS cadre.

OC Michael Roddey, who served as a Technical Engineer Staff Sergeant at Fort Bragg, N.C., planned much of the training during the land navigation FTX, which took place during the week as student company commander. Roddey attributed Class 2-99's high success rate at the Yankee Road Land Navigation site to the "outstanding motivation and teamwork already exhibited by the class."

OC John Balbuena, who served in the commander's position earlier in the course, echoed these comments. Balbuena, formerly a sergeant first class with the 75th Ranger Regiment, pointed out that "for many students, it was the first time they had ever navigated at night, and most were very successful. More importantly, everybody went away learning something."

The learning process at OCS is fast and furious with the emphasis on performance-oriented training. Although many Candidates are experienced Soldiers, like Roddey and Balbuena, there is a sizable number of former junior enlisted Soldiers at OCS. Additionally, brand-new Soldiers known as college-option candidates, come to OCS directly after basic training. These Soldiers are identified for their outstanding leadership potential at nationwide selection boards.

One such Soldier is OC Cassandra Clemons, an All-American All-Academic athlete out of Baltimore's Goucher College. Clemons, 26, is typical of the well-rounded applicant selected to attend OCS. After finishing college, Clemons dabbled in a few career fields including professional volleyball, but chose the Army for its structure and career opportunities.

Clemons, a prospective Signal Corps Officer, said that OCS has "challenged her physically and emotionally."

"I've been playing catch-up for the last few weeks, but I've been blessed by having very talented and understanding former NCOs in my platoon, and they have made me believe in myself more and more every day," Clemons said.

Statements like this are common among the OCs of Class 2-99 and come as no surprise to TAC Officer 1st Lt. Timothy Dunnigan, an OCS graduate himself.

"We try to put candidates in situations that are sometimes overwhelming," Dunnigan said. "The result of this process is that the cadre learns a lot about each candidate, but more importantly the candidates learn even more about themselves and each other."

Although the students of Class 2-99 have accomplished a great deal in the past few weeks, the pace is just about to pick up for two field training exercises designed to put their newly acquired knowledge and skills to the test. As the OCS cadre keep insisting, "we do not lower the standards, candidates must raise their performance." This mindset permeates the psyche of cadre member and student alike at OCS, which has played an increasingly larger role as a commissioning source in recent years and is set to expand to three companies later this year.

Class 2-99 is scheduled to graduate on April 29. The newly-commissioned second lieutenants will attend their prospective branch's Officer Basic Course before their first assignment as officers later this year.

Civil Affairs Task Force departs for Europe

Maj. John R. Mills
354th Civil Affairs Brigade

In January, the major elements of Civil Affairs Task Force 7 departed from their home stations in Maryland and New York. The Task Force consisted of elements of the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 354th Civil Affairs Brigade and its subordinate battalions.

Deploying Soldiers of the 354th Civil Affairs Brigade departed their home stations on Jan. 10. They received warm wishes and farewells from many family members and friends.

From Jan. 11 until their departure, the members of the Civil Affairs Task Force conducted processing at Fort Benning for subsequent deployment to Europe. This training and preparation consisted of weapons familiarization and qualification, nuclear, biological and chemical training, medical processing and other relevant periods of instruction.

One of the highlights of this period was the training of Soldiers on force protection, situational awareness and individual Soldier skills that would prepare them for their duty in Europe.

Jan. 15 and 16, Soldiers went through periods of instruction and then practical exercises on situations they may encounter during their duty. The Soldiers were familiarized with identification and avoidance of mines and booby traps, how to search detained personnel and their vehicles and possessions and how to react to a variety of situations presented to them.

The Soldiers went through this training with great enthusiasm and looked forward to facing the challenge of their impending assignments.

Sgt. 1st Class Gorakh Persaud, 414th Civil Affairs Battalion, Utica, N.Y., said, "I am looking forward to going. The Army has been good to me and now I get to give back by applying my skills as an electrician in rebuilding a country."

Sgt. Jennifer Bennett, 402nd Civil Affairs Battalion, Tonawanda, N.Y., said she was eagerly looking forward to the assignment. She said that this was a great opportunity to travel, see the world, and be out on her own.

The training the personnel go through during their stay at Fort Benning's Conus Replacement Center is important to reinforcing and refreshing basic Soldiering skills to all deploying Soldiers to the South Eastern European area of operations.

Sgt. 1st Class Michael Speer, operations NCO for the 29th Infantry Regiment Detachment that conducts the training the deploying Soldiers receive. The thrust of the training is if they come across a mine, booby trap or hostile individual, they can remove themselves and their buddies out of harms way and then neutralize the threat.

The Theater Specific Training was performance-oriented training that prepared each Soldier for deployment to Bosnia, said Col. Joe Davis, deputy task force commander. He further stated that the trainers were highly motivated professionals who made an effort to ensure that the Soldiers developed the necessary skills to successfully complete the mission and return safely.

Programs assist Soldiers

Army Career and Alumni Program

According to the Congressional Commission of Servicemembers and Veterans Transition Assistance, military transactions programs are necessary in assisting members of the Armed Forces making the adjustment to civilian life.

"The commission's findings substantiated support for the Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) related transition services," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning Transition Services Manager. "Recent articles in the Army Times have highlighted the possibility of a significant reduction in funding for ACAP services in the year 2000 budget, this study provides the statistical data that may turn that around."

The findings stated that one of the most critical aspects of transition planning is the individual counseling component of transition services. Army Research Institute supported this in a study that concluded among former E-6 and below servicemembers without a Bachelor's degree who participated in the full program had an estimated average earnings difference of $7,300 when compared to those who had only marginal participation.

The program has also received unanimous support from Military Services Personnel Chiefs who urged increased federal funding in order to expand and improve the programs. They cited a study performed by the Department of Labor which concluded the job search preparation resulted in a lower rate and shorter duration of unemployment among veterans, reduced stress and anxiety and fostered happier and better adjusted servicemembers and families.

Wight said "we have an obligation to the men and women of our nation who commit themselves to our defense. Part of that obligation includes providing transitioning Soldiers with the means and opportunity to succeed in their civilian lives."

"First in Training"

BCTB adapts, overcomes challenges

Spc. Kevin Greenwood
133rd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

It is an interesting synthesis seemingly designed for the problem solvers of the U.S. Army — how to uphold long-standing tradition while simultaneously adapting to change. This, however, is not a new situation for the Army. It has often led the way in adapting to and overcoming situations other institutions may find too problematic.

In making the transition from the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) to a Basic Combat Training Brigade (BCTB), the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment has become an example of how "First in Training" exists, not just as a motto, but a guarantee that Soldiers coming into the Army will not become casualties to the changes placed upon their predecessors.

The 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.'s last One Station Unit Training (OSUT) class ended in October 1998. Basic combat training began the following month and is expected to be around for quite some time.

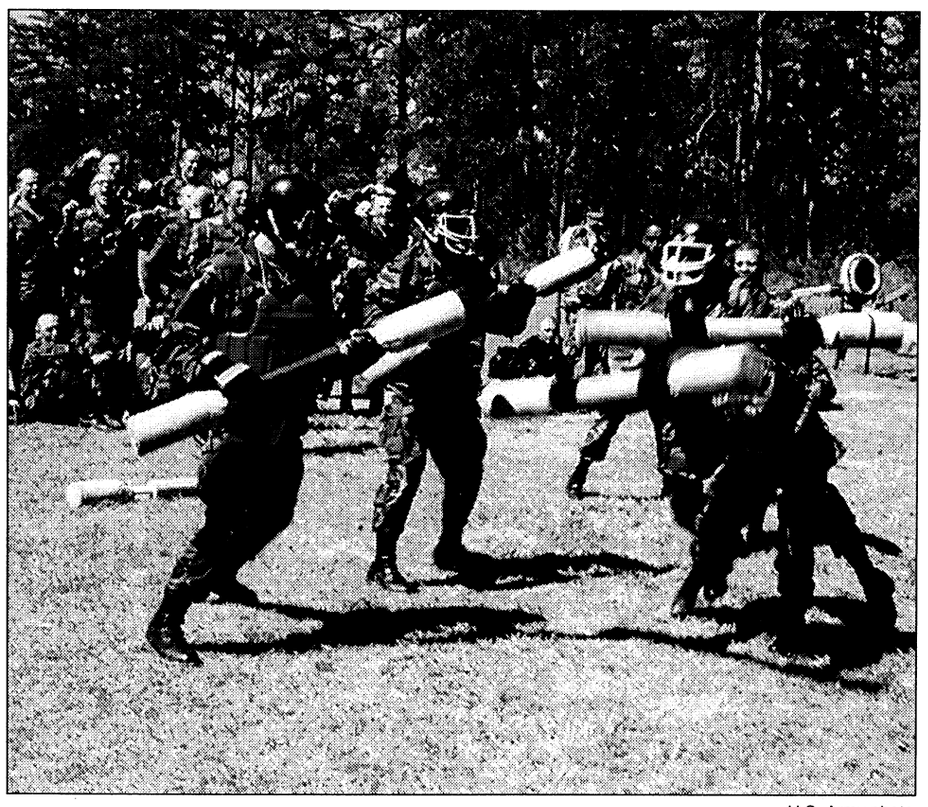
According to Maj. Michael Landers, the battalion's executive officer, there should eventually be six battalions under ITB and three under the BCTB.

Soldiers with a wide variety of planned MOS training will receive basic training at Fort Benning then be transported to other locations for Advance Individual Training. This is different from OSUT, which enables Soldiers to complete the entirety of initial training at once and in one location.

According to Staff Sgt. Patrick Lisbon, a drill sergeant for Co. A, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., the first nine weeks of basic training is essentially the same in both environments.

"Basic is basic," he said.

Capt. Brian Harthorn, Co. A commander, said that the first BCT cycle did exceptionally well in Basic Rifle Marksmanship and physical training (PT). He said the average PT score improved 100 points and everyone qualified with the M16 rifle on their first attempt.



According to Landers, the transition from ITB to BCTB was quite smooth, and the 1st. Bn., 38th Inf. Regt. was able to "plug into the system" and carry on with the mission while "maintaining the standards that were used in the past."

Staff Sgt. Todd Savage, a drill sergeant with Co. A, said that one of the biggest disadvantages facing the drill sergeants at present is that they are unable to enlighten the new Soldiers about the job which lies ahead of them.

Eventually, as new drill sergeants replace those now at the BCTB, there will be a variety of MOSs among them. Currently, about 99 percent of the drill sergeants hold an Infantry MOS.

Landers said it is possible the reception station could possibly see an increase of 1,900 Soldiers per cycle as the BCTB becomes fully operational with two more battalions "standing up" by June of this year. He said one of the battalions is a new one, the other is moving from Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. At the present time, there are no plans to include females among the recruits.

With the BCTB now a reality on post, the Soldiers have yet again proven that they are able to adapt to new situations and do it well.

MCEC targets military students

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

There's no doubt that children are the future and that education lies as a stepping stone to their success. With this in mind, it's easy to see why Fort Benning wasted no time at all jumping into the arms of a new program that focuses on military children and their education.

The program is called Military Child Education Coalition (MCEC) and the spotlight is directed towards an area of military life that takes a toll on students — PCSing and the transition from one school to another.

Fort Benning made a step towards addressing this issue in 1997 with the Education 2000 Symposium. Superintendents, teachers, parents and students from six surrounding school systems sat down and focused on increasing educational problems and ways to solve them.

From this and other efforts, the coalition was born, and with it an increased awareness about the challenges children who are constantly on the move face, said Fort Benning Schools Superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen.

The goal of the fledgling MCEC is to establish partnerships between institutions and individuals who have concerns about military children and their education. By creating these partnerships a greater understanding of the challenges military students face will be established.

Often times students find it hard to adapt to a new school system, which can send them into a tailspin and cause their grades to fall. This is exactly the kind of thing the organization hopes to prevent, said Garrison Manager Chuck Walls.

"The purpose of MCEC is really kind of a networking system which is trying to build partnerships of all schools and military installations, so they can establish a major support system to address and resolve issues facing military children," Walls said.

The proposed network will come from those who join the MCEC as members. McMullen emphasized that any agency or individual who has concerns for military children are encouraged to join and become a member. Fort Benning, along with a host of other military and civilian installations and institutions, including more than 50 individuals, are currently charter members of the coalition.

Those who are members become a link that connects the partnership. They share ideas and practices as how to better support military children during the transition process. There is an annual conference and a website which provides connection to other members and their ideas.

This year the conference will take place June 23-25 at Offut Air Force Base, Neb.

"In fact, General and Mrs. Ernst are travelling to Washington next week to meet with General and Mrs. Reimer to work towards resolving the very issues raised from their forums on military children," Walls said.

He added that "At this stage, its about tracking education, on post and off, to continue to make people aware of MCEC. It's about keeping lines of communication open and realizing that military students are a different case than a cross school transfer. They may be facing some more challenges because of where they are coming from."

For more information about MCEC and the upcoming conference or to become a member, call Nancy Gilley at 545-8232.

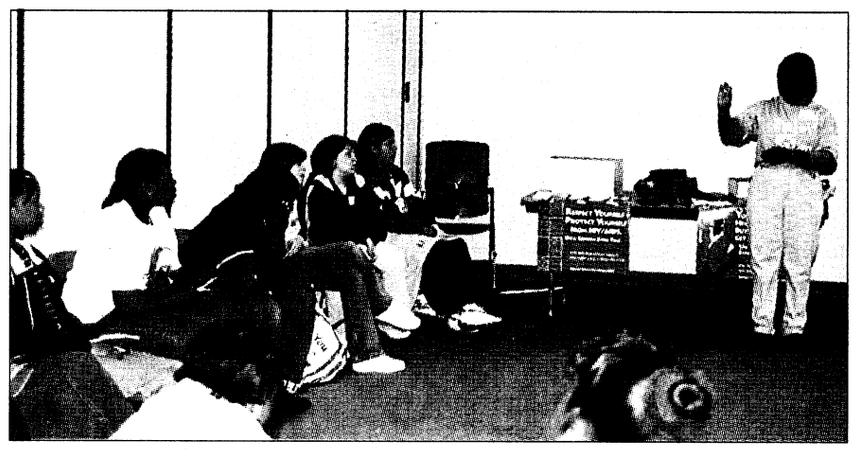
Girl Scouts tackle issues

Michelle Harvey
Special to Bayonet©

With a purpose to address issues that affect teen girls on a daily basis, the Columbus Branch of the American Association of University Women (AAUW) and the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts hosted the "Sister-to-Sister" Conference last Saturday at Columbus State University.

Close to 100 girls ranging in ages 12 to 18 from the tri-city community came to the summit to discuss topics ranging from sexual abuse and sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) to drugs and violence.

"These topics are evaded issues that are not discussed in schools and these girls need to know the correct information," said Gloria Weston-Smart, who is the training director for the Concharty Council Girl Scouts. "And that's why we recruited volunteer facilitators, who are professionals, to come to talk with the girls and give them factual information about these issues," she said.



Smart, who is also a member of AAUW, wanted the girls to have an opportunity to talk openly with one another.

"The girls can network and openly talk about these subjects with an adult, Sister-to-Sister, because most of the time, teens shy away from talking to their parents about the issues," Smart said.

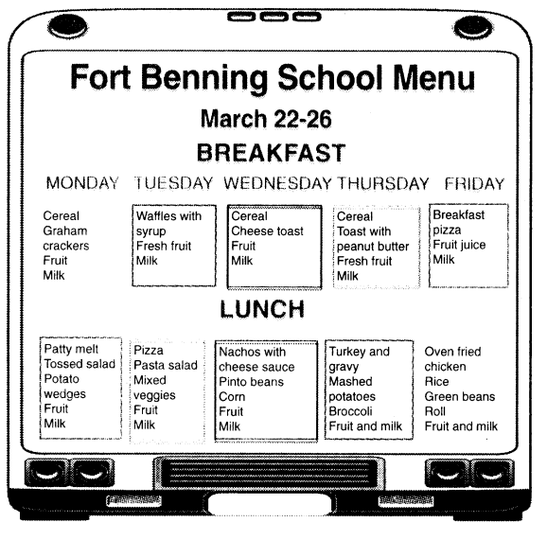
Although AAUW hosted summits for young women since 1991, this is the first time the organization teamed up with the Girl Scouts.

"We have a positive link between us, because Girl Scouts strive to be the best they can be, and that ties in with the beliefs of AAUW," said Susan Turner, vice president of AAUW.

The group even allowed the girls to help organize the conference so they could exercise their leadership skills.

Michelle Harvey

Cheryl A. Johnson (standing), health educator and public information officer in the Columbus Department of Public Health, informs teens about sexually transmitted diseases during the Sister-to-Sister Conference on March 13.



"The summit was for girls, so we thought it was a great idea for us to plan the event," said Angela Huggins of Concharty Troop 69 of Fort Benning.

Huggins, along with her troop member Shannon Fuentez, help served on the planning committee for the conference.

"They were very vocal about the topic they wanted to discuss," Smart said. They have done an outstanding job."

According to Fuentez, the topics discussed in the summit were issues that teens really wanted to know more about. "We want to have the knowledge in order to make basic decision that will help us in our everyday lives," she said.

AAUW hopes to plan another summit with the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts in the near future.

Household goods available for PCSing Soldiers

Moving to a new area can often mean sleeping on a hard tile floor and eating takeout on paper plates with plastic silverware while waiting for the moving company to arrive.

Fort Benning's Lending Closet can help ease the transition burden for Soldiers undergoing a permanent change of station (PCS) to Fort Benning by lending out items to Soldiers while they wait for their household goods.

Over the past year, more than 100 Soldiers have turned to the Lending Closet upon arriving to Fort Benning for assistance.
