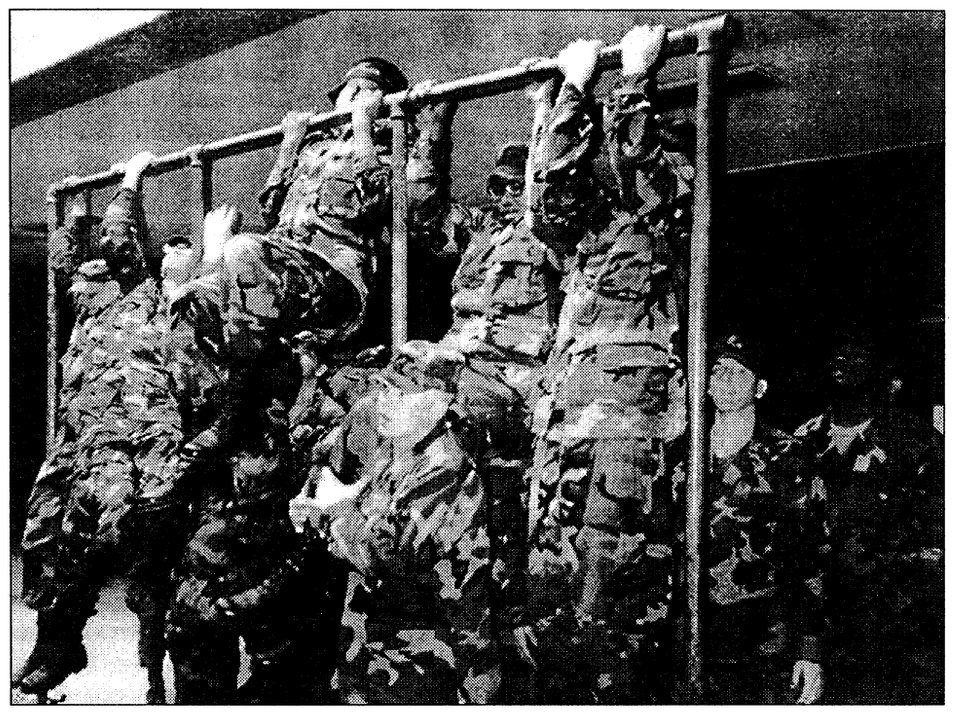
"I want barrel-chested, knuckle-dragging Infantrymen who can bench press the world and run like deer," commented Chambers. "The Infantrymen of today are faced with harder challenges than ever. They must be able to climb into second story windows, sprint between firing positions while carrying a machine gun and fireman carry a buddy out of danger if necessary."

During the 14 weeks that each Soldier spends in the Patriot Battalion, he will have completed four obstacle courses, four confidence courses, four rappelling exercises (one from Todd Field at 4th Ranger Training Battalion), a five-mile run in 40 minutes (five minutes faster than the OSUT standard) and more than 200 miles of road marching. There is no doubt that when a Soldier leaves the Patriot Battalion he is prepared to face the physical challenges of being an Infantryman.

Regardless of how fast he can get to the battlefield, the Infantrymen of today, just like their predecessors, must be able to shoot accurately to win their battles. marksmanship is the next focus.

During the basic training portion of One Station Unit Training, Soldiers spend 10 full days perfecting their marksmanship abilities. The key asset in this process is the drill sergeant. Every drill sergeant takes ownership of this process like no other.



"BRM (Basic Rifle Marksmanship) is the most challenging and rewarding time for a drill sergeant. You must intimately know the four fundamentals and how to teach them. But, you also have to know the psychology involved in getting a Soldier to relax and do his best. You have to know each Soldier individually and what works for him," said Sgt. 1st Class Calvin McCloy, 3rd platoon sergeant in Co. A, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

From the start of BRM all the way through qualification day, the drill sergeants teach, coach and mentor the Soldiers in their platoon on the intricacies of effectively using their weapon. This process not only means long days on the range, but it means taking time from their personal lives on the weekends and into the weeknights to continue molding their men through reinforcement and remedial training using tools like the Weaponeer and the MACs system.

To aid the drill sergeants in analyzing his men's performance, they all use tracking charts in order to shift their emphasis to those Soldiers who are having difficulty. It allows the drill sergeant to critically analyze every Soldier's performance and identify what deficiencies they need to concentrate on.

All of the hard work pays off on qualification day. The battalion standard is at 90 percent for first time qualification rate and 100 percent by the end of the day.

Shooting does not end there. Throughout the rest of the cycle the Soldiers will use their basic rifle marksmanship in other events. The new advanced Infantry marksmanship program focuses on combat marksmanship to include shooting at night using the Army's latest technology and effectively engaging moving targets.

The Soldiers will also be familiarized with the M203 Grenade launcher, M249 Squad automatic weapon, M240 Machine gun and M60 Machine gun.

The last event for these Soldiers is a "March and Shoot" conducted during the Patriot FTX. This is a four-mile course with full combat load, at the end of which the Soldiers immediately go onto the firing line and qualify again. This exercise teaches Soldiers the effects of physical duress on marksmanship and reinforces the importance on focusing on the four fundamentals of shooting.

By combining physically fitness and rifle marksmanship, the Patriot battalion turns to the last phase of Infantry training. The goal of this phase is to train Soldiers to be proficient as a member of an Infantry squad or fire team in a tactical or MOUT environment.

There is a logical progression that begins by teaching every individual the movement techniques used in combat. During this phase Soldiers are also required to qualify on a rigorous hand grenade course and throw two live fragmentation grenades. Next, Soldiers are paired up and learn buddy team tactical movement during blank and live fires. Squad tactical training introduces Soldiers to the battle drills, the foundation of all offensive maneuvers.

Drill sergeants see double at ITB

Capt. Eric W. Miller
Company D, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

Although unusual, it is not entirely unheard of to have a set of twin brothers in a basic training company. For Company D, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, on Sand Hill, this cycle has the drill sergeants seeing double, double vision. There are not one, but two sets of twins; Pfcs John and Dan Robinson of Enid, Okla., and Pfcs John and Harley Sowell of Bauxite, Ark.

These motivated look-alikes are currently undergoing the second half of Split Option Two training, as part of the One Station Unit Training (OSUT).

The twins, like all Split Option trainees, attended the first seven weeks of basic training last summer while still in their junior year of high school. Upon completion of the first seven weeks, also know as the "basic training" phase of OSUT, the trainees are released for one year to a National Guard or Army Reserve Unit. They train with these units as a regular Soldier would, to include two weeks of Annual Training.

More importantly, they complete their high school education. Upon graduating high school, Split Option trainees return to the ITB to finish the final seven weeks of OSUT, consisting of Infantry Advanced Individual Training. After AIT, some Soldiers will attend additional Military Occupational Speciality training in such areas as mechanized Infantry and mortar training. They are then sent back to their National Guard or Army Reserve units as fully trained, qualified Infantrymen.

Once the twins complete AIT, the Robinsons and Harley Sowell want to go to Officer Candidate School and pursue their collective dream of becoming Infantry officers and Rangers. John Sowell wants to work his way up through the non-commissioned ranks, hoping to earn staff sergeant stripes before his six-year commitment in the Army is complete.

John Sowell said that with your brother as a battle buddy, "It is like you've never left home." The Robinson twins agree. Dan added, "The best part is watching the drill sergeants go nuts trying to figure out which of us is which."

Do they ever get in trouble for something the other one does? "Sometimes," said John Robinson. "But your brother is the best battle buddy that you could have."

ACAP: Local paper prime source for job information

Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

The local newspaper is an excellent source of information for separating Soldiers and their families. Wherever a transitioning Soldier may relocate, he or she can find out about the job market, economic trends, business growth, people on the move, housing and more by regularly reading the local paper.

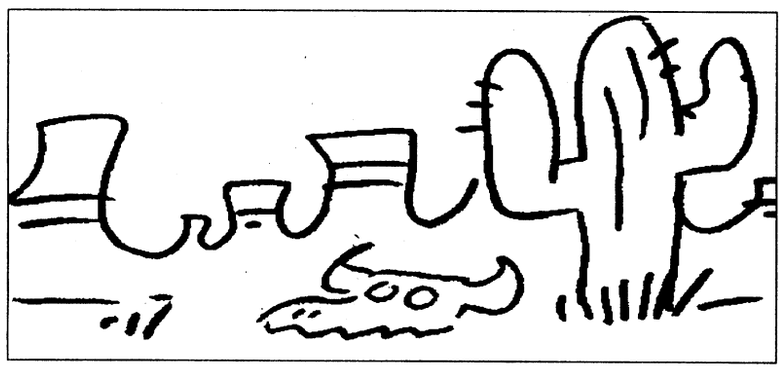
The newspaper is an information source which has the advantage of being available when it is convenient to the reader's schedule, and when compared to other forms of news media gives much more detail about local events, said Guy Smith, Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program counselor.

Sunday's paper usually has the most complete classified employment section because employers know it is more widely read by job seekers. The Sunday paper also has special sections that may describe one or more successful businesses, the employment outlook, and may also give biographical information about successful business leaders.

Along with actual job ads are announcements of upcoming events, training programs and recruiting campaigns in the classified section of the paper. Soldiers can match their professional Army skills, training and experience with the requirements found in newspaper classified employment ads, Smith said.

It is recommended that separating Soldiers learn more about the job search process and how to find good jobs by attending ACAP preseparation briefings and job assistance workshops. ACAP instructors will teach how to network, use job data bases on the internet, ACAP hot leads, the transition bulletin board, job fairs, employer days, placement firms as well as the newspaper, Smith said.

ACAP recommends reading the classified employment ads in the local paper by buying it, getting someone to mail it to you or using the Internet. This information source may help you locate a job, and it will certainly make you better prepared with local news that can make you better prepared for the job interview.



For ACAP eligibility, scheduling and information, visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

ITB goes to ring for glove to glove action

Blow by blow, Soldiers learn what it takes to become a warrior

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Two Soldiers from Company D, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment go head-to-head during a boxing bout on Sand Hill July 17. Co. D is only the second Company from ITB to incorporate boxing into the Soldier's hand to hand phase of training.

After slipping into a pair of red boxing gloves, protective pads and a mouth piece, two wet and sandy privates step warily into the ring, ready to tackle the next step of basic training. Before the whistle blows, the Soldiers eye one another, shake gloves and listen as they receive a pep yell from their drill sergeants.

The two retreat to a corner of the ring where they wait, one with fear in his eyes, the other pumping with excitement. At the sound of the whistle they go head to head. During the next 30 seconds, gloves fly, bodies grapple, noses bleed and egos are crushed. But all of the Soldiers who stand up to the challenge are that much closer to being an Infantryman with the spirit of a warrior.

It was Company B, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade that headed out to the sawdust pits July 17 to do something no other company in the battalion had. Topping out the total control phase of basic training, the Soldiers received their hand-to-hand instruction with a little twist at the end — the opportunity to box their fellow Soldiers.

Because of an ongoing push by the brigade to increase the warrior ethos, Co. B Commander Capt. Michael O'Brien and Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Joe Lowder decided that boxing would be a good addition to the Soldiers' training.

Besides pumping up the Soldiers and promoting team spirit, boxing also hones a Soldier's warrior mentality, said Sgt. 1st Class Adrian Fleming, senior drill sergeant for Co. B.

"It gives the Soldiers a competitive edge to actually fight someone else," he said. "Boxing creates a realistic atmosphere for them because they are doing it rather than just learning about it."

Fleming, who put together the program of instruction for the boxing addition, said the company is testing out the concept for the battalion. He said he believes it won't be long before all of the battalion, and eventually the brigade, decides to incorporate boxing into the training.

Lowder mentioned that boxing correlates with the seven Army Values.

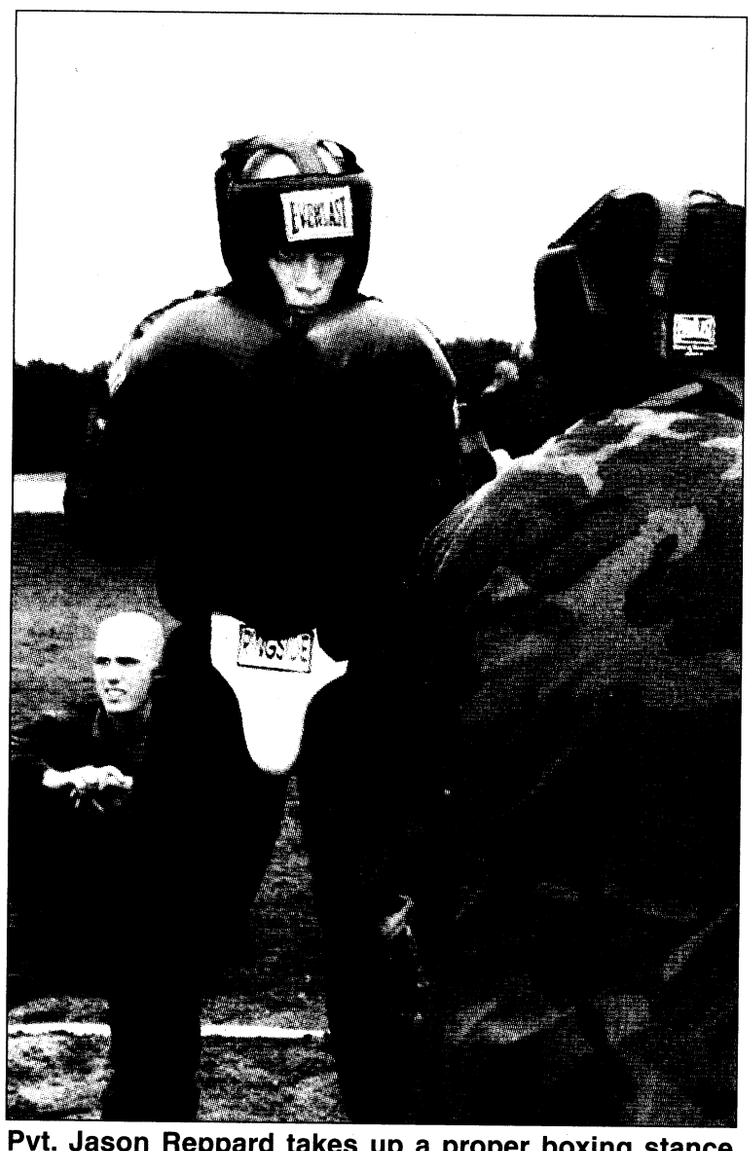
"Personal courage is obviously the value that jumps out," Lowder said. "A lot of these privates haven't had the opportunity to box, and their ability to overcome fear and have physical contact with another Soldier helps instill a warrior ethos."

He went on to say that after the boxing experience, "the Soldiers are well on their way to becoming Infantryman."

Of course, before these soon-to-be Infantryman got the chance to duke it out they had to learn the fundamentals of hand to hand combat. During a four-hour block of instruction they learned everything from proper fighting stance and falling techniques to kicks, throws and punches, Fleming said.

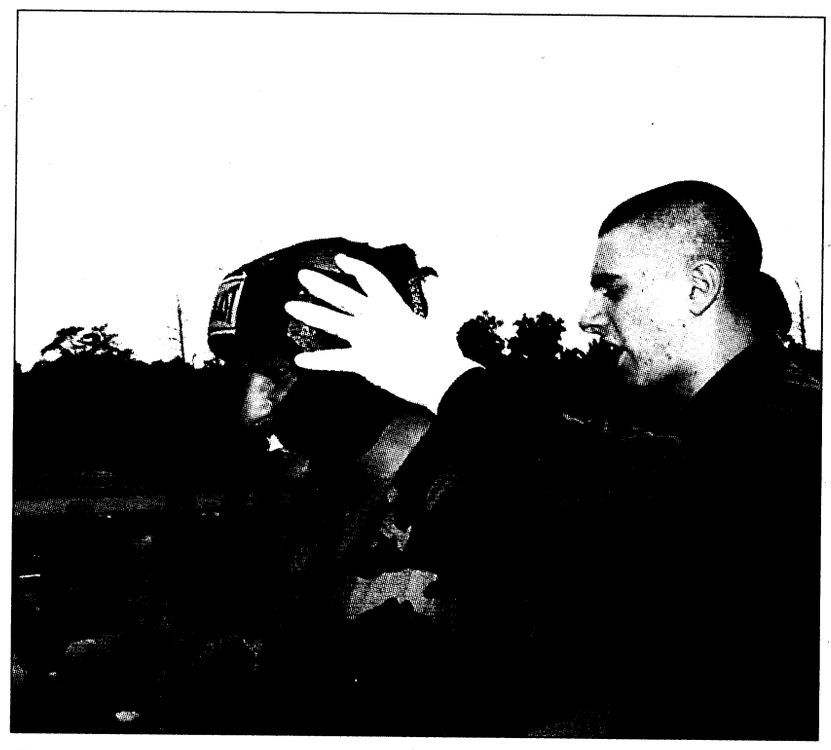
After the learning was done it was time for the trainees to get down to business and see how it really felt to take on an opponent.

Each of the four platoons retreated to their own ring where members squared off against one another. Fleming said the Soldiers were divided into five different weight classes and matched with someone who was close in size.



After everyone in the platoon had a go with the gloves, the four best fighters from each platoon advanced to the next phase which had them fighting against members of another platoon. Once the best fighters were determined from those matches they advanced to the semi-finals and on up until only two fighters were left to battle it out for the championship.

For Pvt. Shawn Potter being able to box was a valuable experience. Potter said it helped him get rid of a lot of built-up tension while teaching him important lessons.



"At first I wasn't too thrilled about doing it, but I definitely think it's a good experience for everyone," Potter said. "It helps you to think under pressure and keeps you from locking up. And if you had any tension before you stepped into the ring, you definitely got rid of it."

According to O'Brien, boxing was something different for the Soldiers to do and also a good way to close out the first phase of training.

"This is a culminating point for the total control phase," O'Brien said. "We were looking for something that demonstrated to the privates the physical and mental demands of an Infantryman on a daily basis, and boxing is a prime example of the opportunity to do that."

Pvt. Jason Reppard takes up a proper boxing stance while mentally preparing himself for the task ahead.

Soldiers check each other over to make sure equipment is on properly and secured tightly before anyone steps into the ring to take on an opponent.

Pvt. Shawn Potter pours water over his face to wash away some blood that occurred from a punch to the nose.

Boxing promotes esprit de corps and team spirit by giving the Soldiers a chance to cheer their buddies on.

ALC offers access to technology

Mike Hodge
Army Learning Center

The Army Learning Center at Fort Benning has recently moved. It is now located in Infantry Hall, annexed to the Technical Library.

This new location has allowed access to modern network servers which allow faster connection times. The personal computers have been upgraded to support new versions of computer programs.

The ALC has attracted many U.S. Army Infantry School students needing computer access. Internet availability also assists the military students with civilian education research.

The Army Correspondence Course Program

The Army Correspondence Course Program enrollment is processed electronically through the AIPD home page on the internet. The ALC assists 80 Soldiers monthly with registration for ACCP.

FAST

The Functional Academic Skills Training student population is growing because of access to the CYBIS GT preparation curriculum. Sixty-three TRADOC Soldiers have been rostered into the FAST program last quarter. Seventy-eight percent of the Soldiers using CYBIS GT preparation curriculum have raised their GT scores to 100 or greater.

CYBIS

CYBIS utilization is increasing. Third Quarter CYBIS total hour usage has increased from 16 to 150 hours per month. This increase is due to availability, accessibility and advertising of the ALC capabilities. We have many Soldiers using CYBIS on their home computers. ALC has the availability of 20 CYBIS stations.

In addition to the previously mentioned services the ALC also provides:

•Lessons available on video and audio tapes.

The Army has purchased access to information technology courseware for 500,000 Soldiers (active, Reserve and National Guard and Department of Army civilians).

The courses are all computer-delivered, self-paced, interactive and include titles such as Microsoft Office '97, MS Windows NT 4.0, Courses for system certification preparation, Data communication, Networks, Programming, Operating Systems and Information Systems Design.

More than 800 courses, ranging from two to 12 hours in length are part of the Army-wide purchase. In order to gain access to the courseware, eligible personnel will be required to register at the CBT Master Web from an Army military address site. After registration students can access courses using a Web browser from home, office or the ALC. CBT Systems, Inc. is the vendor providing these courses. The CBT Master Web address is www.armycbt.army.mil. Once you are registered and get a student logon and password, you will be allowed access to unlimited lessons for the entire fiscal year.

If you do not have a military domain address, you may visit the ALC to complete the registration process. The system offers a variety of courses and contains attention-getting graphics and features, a different learning environment than just sitting in a classroom.

This program can help experienced and inexperienced computer users. The Army, computer-based learning systems allow access to training via media that is widespread and the commands don't have to use their training funds to train their personnel. As of April 14 more than 20,000 students have registered for courses on the program, growing at a rate of 400 to 500 a day. Please be advised that these are not recreational courses, these are meant to replace information technology training classes usually conducted in residence.

TRIAD: Excellence

Battalion, 18th Airborne Corps LRSC, and attended all the military schools on CQB and SRT, rewrote the MOUT SOP so those Soldiers leaving the Patriot Battalion are already familiar with current doctrine in MOUT.

Throughout this process, the cadre meticulously critique every individual whether part of a team or alone to ensure that he meets the standard. If not, the Soldier receives remedial training and retests until he has proven his proficiency at every level of tactical training.

The capstone in tactical training is the Patriot Field Training Exercise. During the FTX, Soldiers will recertify on everything they have learned.

It begins with a 12-mile road march to a defense site where the company sets up a full company defense to standard. Individually, each Soldier must prove he can dig a fighting position to standard. But, it also allows the Soldier to see what a full company defense looks like and how his position is integrated into the men to his right and left and the company as a whole.

After the defense, the Soldiers move as squads through the situational training exercise lanes to certify they are proficient in executing the battle drills. The STX lanes really offer an opportunity to the drill sergeants to share experiences and mentor their Soldiers.

Next, en route to McKenna MOUT village, the Soldiers conduct the march and shoot. At McKenna, the drill sergeants again review the four-man stack and entering and clearing a room.

The FTX ends with a 15.5-mile road march and a 300 meter two rope bridge across the Upatoi Creek. At the end of the FTX, the Soldiers have proven they are fully trained and understand what it means to be an Infantryman.

Through focusing on the "Triad of Excellence" 2-58 Infantry Patriots are producing stronger, faster, better trained Infantrymen than ever before. The key is positive leadership and ownership of the Soldiers and training. In the Patriot Battalion, leading means coaching, teaching and mentoring new Soldiers to become Infantrymen.

Every drill sergeant takes pride in his Soldiers and leading them to success and never asking a Soldier to do what he would not do himself.

Our commitment to providing the U.S. Army with the very best in physically fit, qualified, and tactically proficient Soldiers is better than ever before.

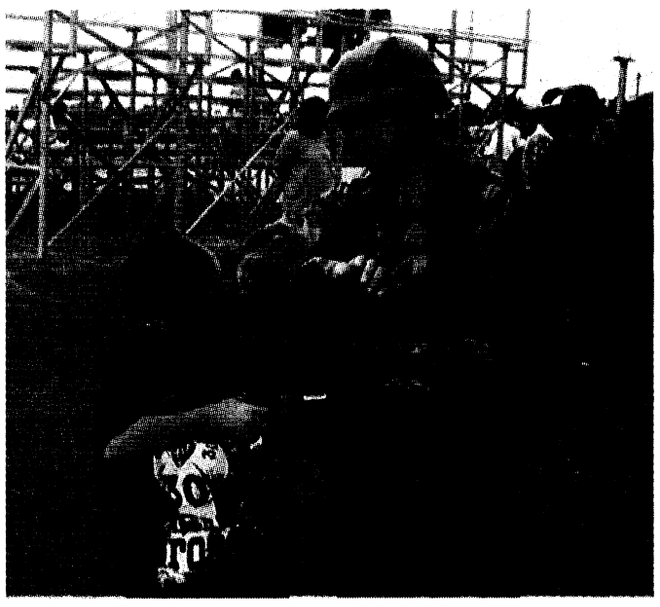
New infant screening tests hearing

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet

Since May 10, Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) has been participating in universal hearing screening. Parents are automatically offered this quick, painless screening for their baby as a means of helping determine whether or not a child may require further testing to identify a possible hearing deficit. Already, nearly 200 babies have been tested at Fort Benning.

"Our goal is to identify the babies with hearing loss and enroll them in appropriate services as early as possible," said Ute Chavers, coordinator for the program. "We found that if you can screen a newborn and detect a hearing loss, early intervention can be used and we can help with speech and language development."

The test is called The Madsen Echo-Screen, and can be done 24 hours after birth. The person administering the screen will insert a miniature probe into the baby's ear canal, press a button and the results will appear on the screener display. On average the process only takes one minute and four seconds per ear.



"It is an objective, reliable, non-invasive hearing screen," Chavers assured. "We can take it to the patient's bedside, do it in the crib, do it in mom's arms, do it while she is nursing her baby." The only real requirement is that the test be conducted in a quiet environment. "We have had excellent response from parents. I'm gung-ho on it and excited about it and so are the parents," Chavers added.

The screen will either indicate a pass, or that the baby should be referred to audiology for further testing. A refer does not mean, however, that the baby has deafness or a hearing deficiency, Chavers pointed out. There are other factors such as fluid in the ear that could produce the same result. Also, if a baby has risk factors for hearing problems then the child will be referred to audiology regardless of the screening results.

"If there are at least three risk factors involved, then we automatically refer them to audiology, even though they pass the screener, because our screener is not diagnostic. We stress that to parents – this is just a screener," Chavers said. It is important to note that the screening provides information specific to the baby's hearing at the time of the test only.

Girl Scouts kick-off membership

Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc.

More than 1,000 volunteers of the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc. met Saturday at Fort Benning's Family FUN Center for their annual Membership Kickoff Meeting. Volunteers learned about upcoming plans for Girl Scouting as the new millennium quickly approaches.

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts serves a 12-county area of west-central Georgia, including Fort Benning and east-central Alabama. The council's current membership of 4,432 girls and adults exceeded the 1998-1999 program year membership goal of 4,420.

At Saturday's meeting the 1999-2000 program year membership goal of 4,503 members was set, which represents serving one out of every nine girls within the council's jurisdiction. The Girl Scout program year runs from Oct. 1 through Sept. 30.

In addition to receiving Girl Scout program information from Concharty Council staff, volunteers were treated to a motivational session from Fort Benning's own Sheila O'Mara, facilitator of Army Family Team Building. O'Mara emphasized the importance of volunteering and the monumental difference Girl Scout volunteers make in the lives of the girls they serve.

Girl Scouts is the world's preeminent organization dedicated solely to girls — all girls, where, in an accepting and nurturing environment, they can build character and skills for success in the real world. In partnership with committed adults, girls develop qualities that will serve them all their lives — like strong values, social conscience and conviction about their own potential and self-worth. In Girl Scouts, girls discover the fun, friendship and power of girls together. Through the many enriching experiences provided by the Girl Scouts, they can grow courageous and strong.

Currently the Concharty Council is looking for a volunteer to fill the position of Service Unit Treasurer. This volunteer would be responsible for keeping track of the Fort Benning Service Unit and Troop accounts.

In addition the council is also looking to fill the position of Product Sales Manager for the Fort Benning Service Unit. For more information about the Girl Scouting program or to volunteer, call Kelly Mueller at 687-3709. ◆

International Wives Club

Group offers support for foreign spouses

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning is home to a special organization — the International Wives Club, which just celebrated its 24th anniversary. This group of approximately 100 women representing 20 countries, is made up of foreign-born wives of both active duty and retired military personnel of all ranks. The club helps to provide a support structure for women who are a long way from home.

For most Army spouses a new post means lots of new questions. Where is the "good" grocery store? Where can I look for employment? How is the school system? For foreign-born spouses there are all those questions, but often there are many others as well. What are my rights in the U.S.? Where can I take English classes? How do I apply for citizenship?

There are many things Americans take for granted that may seem strange to people from other countries. According to members of the International Wives Club, the shopping is often different, usually the food is different, and places may seem much farther away from each other than people believe at first. Women just coming to the U.S. can experience a great deal of culture shock when they find themselves at Fort Benning.

The International Wives Club provides foreign-born spouses with a way to meet other people who have the same questions and concerns. It is a good way for women to find friends who speak the same first language, or according to club secretary Joanne Lewis to find "an outlet to 'go back home.'" The club also works to provide military wives with answers to questions and access to information through English classes and citizenship classes, as well as guest speakers who focus on subjects such as self-defense and legal issues.

The club is not only involved in helping foreign-born wives adjust to life in the U.S., but it is also active in community events that focus on cultural exchange. One of the club's goals is "to teach each other about our cultures, (because) basically we are all the same," said club member Pauline Branchcomb. For example, members of the group often do presentations on their countries of origin for local schools or other organizations.

Also, the International Wives Club will be participating in the upcoming Columbus International Festival, which will take place from 2 to 7 p.m. August 15 at the Columbus Civic Center. The event is free to the public and will feature a variety of entertainment including music and dance. The International Wives Club will be presenting booth exhibits on both Costa Rica and Germany.

In addition to helping people become comfortable with their new environment at Fort Benning, the International Wives Club also provides social opportunities for its members. The club not only meets once a month, but also holds a variety of special events. These events typically highlight a particular country and are organized by women from that area. Occasionally the group also goes on outings to places such as the international food market in Atlanta.

"Ours is a real comfortable group. It is a good way to meet people from your own background," said Olga Kelly, President of Treatment plant receives top award

Doug Cook
Directorate of Public Works, Camp Frank D. Merrill Section

The Georgia Water Pollution Control Association (GWPCA) has announced that the Camp Frank Merrill Water Treatment Plant won the association's 1998-1999 award for operation efficiency and excellent service. This is the top award in the category of less than 1-Million Gallons Per Day Water Treatment Plants. The award will be presented at the closing session of the association's annual conference at the Macon Centraplex in Macon, Ga. on Aug. 14.

Camp Merrill's new Water Treatment Plant was brought on-line in March 1998, and a dam was constructed on the Etowah River to provide raw water intake for Camp Merrill's water distribution thanks to a previous upgrade in 1997.

The plant possesses a state of the art rechlorination system; the only one of its kind in Georgia, according to Charles Williams of the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Environmental Protection Division. The water treatment plant has its own microbiological lab and is furnished with new laboratory equipment to perform a variety of tests to ensure the quality of water.

DPW personnel responsible for water plant operations are John Jarrard and Stanley Cochran. Jarrard, chief water plant operator, worked closely with the Corps of Engineers during the construction of the plant. He assisted in bringing the system on-line and programming the treatment process to meet all state requirements for Micro-Floc treatment plants. Jarrard currently holds a Class I Water Treatment Certification and has a bachelor's degree in chemistry and biology from North Georgia College and State University.

Formerly employed at the city of Dahlonega Water Treatment Plant for five years, he has worked at Camp Merrill since July 1996.

Assisting Jarrard is Cochran, a DPW carpenter who provides support in plant operation as needed. Cochran was extensively cross-trained in water treatment by Jarrard. He currently holds a Class III Surface Water Treatment license from the State of Georgia and recently took the state exam for Class II certification.

The Georgia Water and Pollution Control Association presents environmental recognition awards each year based on rigid criteria such as safety record, staff training, equipment maintenance and adherence to federal and state water quality standards.

"The Georgia Water and Pollution Control Association is proud to recognize superior operation of drinking water and wastewater treatment facilities by communities throughout the state," said Jack Dozier, executive director of GWPCA. "We appreciate working with the Georgia Environmental Protection Division to recognize the outstanding performance of Camp Frank D. Merrill. The protection of public health depends on this type of quality service on the local level."

Fort Benning, the DPW and the Camp Merrill chain of command are justifiably proud of the recognition and accomplishments of Jarrard and Cochran. Jarrard and his wife Amy will attend the presentation during the GWPCA conference in Macon on Wednesday.

Change in pickup location

Garbage, recyclables and yard waste from housing units 963 A through H Dixie Road will no longer be picked up at the curb on Dixie Road. All such items must be placed on the concrete pads adjacent to the parking lots at either end of the building. Please ensure that the pick-up areas are accessible to the truck on your scheduled pick-up days. For more information, call Glenn Todd at 545-2177.

Lavoie experiences water interruptions

Continental Flooring has begun installation of backflow preventors in family housing in the Lavoie area off Indianhead Road. Contractor employees will wear identification tags and will contact each occupant to schedule a time to turn off water and do the work. Work hours will be from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Water will not be turned off before or after these hours. Work throughout the Lavoie area will be completed in six months. For more information or questions regarding the project, call Tony Riles at 545-4749.

Start planning early

The permanent change of duty station (PCS) peak moving season is here. To ensure a smooth, trouble-free PCS, stop by the Family Housing office located in Olsen Hall, Building 399, to obtain information and advice that will prevent delays and problems later.

Start your PCS planning early and set up your mandatory Pre-Termination Inspection 30 to 45 days before you are scheduled to leave the installation. Don't wait until the last minute, when we may not be able to guarantee a termination appointment for the specific date and time you may desire.

For more information, call the DPW Housing Division Quarters Management Section (Assignments and Terminations) at 545-2990.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Chavers and her team of five other professionals, including an audiologist, are at the forefront of this screening practice. Only nine states in the U.S. test 90 percent of their newborns, according to Chavers. Every baby born to families stationed at Fort Benning is offered this screening, though, whether they are born at MACH or elsewhere, and Chavers' team makes sure nobody slips through the cracks.

"I think this is something that all newborns need to have," said Chavers. The typical referral age for children with hearing deficiencies has been between 18 and 24 months. However, children can be provided with hearing aids as early as three months if a problem is identified, and by six months can be experiencing normal language development, according to Chavers.

The Madsen Echo-Screen can be used on infants up to 6 months of age, and if concerned about an older child, an appointment can be made with audiology. For more information about universal hearing screening or to schedule an appointment for your child, call Ute Chavers at 545-5564. For other questions concerning Educational & Developmental Intervention Services (EDIS), call Cindy Falk, at 545-1161 or 545-3835.

Wives: Group facilitates cultural exchange the club. Kelly was a founding member of the club at Fort Benning and has been involved with the organization since 1975. One of her goals for the group has always been to provide "support for new foreign wives," and she still hears from women who were members of the group years ago.

Organizations similar to the Fort Benning's International Wives Club do exist at other military installations, so if PCSing look for these activities at other installations. "It is good to get involved in the community," said Branchcomb. "Clubs are very important on a military base – they keep a type of unity."

The International Wives Club meets the first Wednesday of every month at 7:30 p.m. in Building 2682 on Custer Terrace. Anyone is welcome to attend.

BBB recommends tenants insurance for renters

Better Business Bureau

If you rent an apartment or house, the idea of buying renter's insurance, also known as tenants insurance, may not have crossed your mind. Renter's insurance protects your belongings against loss and damage. And it provides liability protection. Your landlord's insurance does not cover your personal property.

A standard policy will cover furniture, clothing and most other personal belongings for their actual cash value at the time of loss. Cash value coverage takes into account the age and condition of items at the time of damage or loss. You would be reimbursed for the value of the item minus depreciation. In order to recover your losses at the price it will cost to replace them ask your insurance agent about replacement value coverage.

The liability coverage in the renter's policy applies at home and elsewhere to injuries and damages caused by you or a family member and will cover legal costs if you are sued. However, it does not include liability resulting from the use of an automobile.

To determine your insurance needs, make a list of all your household belongings. If possible note prices and dates of purchase. Take photographs or make a videotape of your more valued belongings. Keep your inventory and visual record of your belongings in a safe place, outside your home.

When looking for an insurance company, talk to several different agents or companies and compare prices and services.

Keep your inventory list handy so you find the amount of coverage that is most appropriate for you. Ask for a list of standard coverage so you know whether you'll need to get additional coverage for some of your belongings. Find out about the deducible or your out-of-pocket costs. Keep in mind that raising your deductible will usually lower your premium.

Review your policy with your insurance agent or representative so that you clearly understand what's covered.

If you have a complaints, contact your state insurance department or your BBB.

Everyone can unleash their potential through the Lord

Chaplain (Capt.) Daren Waters, Sr.
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

One of the most tragic experiences in life is to go through it and never maximize your potential.

Many thoughts, ideas, aspirations or dreams pass through the tunnel of possibility but often they never break the surface of reality. How many times have you heard or even said, "Someday I am going back to school," or "One day I am going to do this or that?"

Before we know it, years pass and we are still stuck in the starting blocks of "someday or one day." Slowly but surely; the once vibrant dream drifts to a place of stagnation and low visibility. Now, the likelihood of accomplishing these hopes clings fast for survival.

Is it too late? Should we just let them go? Some do and some don't. Some will maximize their potential, while others will not. Myles Monroe coined a very powerful description of potential, "All you can be but have not become ... all you can do but have not yet done ... how far you can reach but have not yet reached ... what you can accomplish but have not yet accomplished. Potential is unexposed ability and latent power."

It is therefore not what you have done, but what you are yet able to do. I submit to you today, that as long as there is breath, there is yet time to tap into unleashed potential.

In doing so, I think it's important to first acknowledge where we are and make peace with what we have achieved or the lack thereof. Secondly, allow ourselves to dream again and bring it back into focus. Finally, place what we have before God. The word of God stands like a pillar and yet offers to us comforting words of assurance for every occasion, even for plans we desire to accomplish. Proverbs 16:3 says, "Commit to the Lord whatever you do and your plans will succeed."

Whatever your goals or dreams, be encouraged and don't lose hope, for God specializes in bringing the best out of us, particularly in times when our circumstances seem hopeless.

Daily problems trouble marriages

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

I'd be worried if I didn't have anything to worry about. Sound familiar? Anxiety and worry are common sources of trouble in many marriages. Problems can overwhelm a person so much they become entwined in them and leave little time to enjoy life. Even if only one spouse is the worrier his or her worrying will have a negative effect on his or her partner.

Worry is destructive. But how can one break out of this destructive pattern? H. Norman Wright in his book, Communication: Key to Your Marriage, outlines some practical steps in overcoming worry. Let me share them here with you.

Don't try to face your troubles on your own. Turning to God is not a cop out when facing life's troubles. He alone is the one who can provide the best solution. Friends, counselors or a clergyperson can also be a great source of comfort and advice.

Remember you have a choice of who "runs the ranch." You have the power to change your negative thoughts into positive ones. The Apostle Paul said, "Whatsoever things are good, think on these things."

Concentrate on reality. Don't let your thoughts be filled with what might happen. Face your problems square in the face and ask for God's help and direction for the present situation.

Be honest with yourself and accept your problems. Evaluate the situation. Search for workable solutions and when you have one put the solution into action. Once again, always include God in the decision. Worrying about your problems will not make them go away. Taking responsibility paves the way for finding the right solution.

Think in terms of possible solutions. Together with your spouse "brainstorm" ways of overcoming any problem you are facing. In this process it is so important to pray and ask God for guidance. Wright says, "Focus on the solution rather than the problem."

Don't concentrate on things that trouble you. While you cannot always avoid troubling situations you can stay away from areas that increase your anxiety or worry. There will always be differences of opinions in any marriage. It is best to stay away from areas of personal opinion (i.e. politics) that lead to disagreement.

Accept what can't be changed. Make this prayer of Richard Niebauer's your own: "God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can, and wisdom to know the difference." Don't try and "fix" your spouse, rather try to accept and love him or her in the way you want to be loved. Will this guarantee success? No, but I can guarantee you failure if you do not.

Live one day at a time. Learn to enjoy your marriage ... today. Have fun with your spouse ... today. There are too many challenges today that require your attention for you to worry about what the future may hold.

Many couples at Fort Benning find it difficult to not be overwhelmed by problems. They are so worried about this and that they let the trials of life rob them of the joy of being married.

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center wants to help you rediscover the joy of marriage. For more information, call the center at 545-2050.

WINNIPEG, Canada — Army athletes captured one gold, three silver and one bronze medal in Pan American competition July 25 and 26.

Kenneth A. Johnson of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, won a gold medal in the Men's Free Rifle three-position competition, scoring 1140 in the preliminaries and 93.5 in the finals, for a total score of 1,233.

Daryl L. Szarenski of the USAMU took a silver medal Monday in the Men's Free Pistol competition. Jason A. Parker, also of the USAMU, finished fifth in the Men's Free Rifle competition Sunday with a total score of 1,220.6. Parker shot 1125 in the preliminaries and 95.6 in the finals.

Daniel D. Steele of Fort Carson, Colo., climbed from fourth place coming into Sunday's events to claim a silver medal in the Decathlon. Steele scored 14.54 (906 points, second overall) in the 110m Hurdles, 46.08 (789 points, second overall) in the Discus, 4.50 (160 points, third overall) in the Pole Vault, 63.73 (794 points, first overall) in the Javelin, and finished first in the 1500m run with a time of 4:33.31 (723 points). Steele's total score of 8,070 trailed the Decathlon gold medal winner, USA's Chris Huffins, by only 100 points.

In Greco-Roman wrestling competition, Dremiel Byers, Fort Carson, won his first Pan American silver medal while teammate Glenn Nieradka, also of Fort Carson, won his first Pan American bronze medal.

Byers defeated Alfredo Far of Panama in the semifinals 3-0 to advance to the finals where he lost by decision to Olympian and World Champion Hector Milian of Cuba, 1-1.

"I lost the match, but he didn't beat me," said Byers, who was disappointed in his final standing. "I don't really feel good about winning a silver medal ... Winning a silver medal means you got all the way to the end, but couldn't finish," he said. "But Hector (Milian) is going to have to worry about me again. I'll keep training, maybe head overseas to train with the Russians or just go full speed with what I've got. I'm going to do everything I can to meet Hector again in World Championships."

Nieradka, who defeated Armondo Olivier of Venezuela 6-0 to win the bronze, was also unsatisfied winning less than gold. "I don't feel very good about my overall performance here. It's not where I want to be," Nieradka said. "Bronze is a medal and all, but it feels like a consolation prize.

Competing on the international level, you have to minimize your mistakes, keep your focus and stick with your game plan," Nieradka said."

"It's easy to get away with stuff in the states when you're wrestling the same guys. But when facing experienced competition, you can't afford mistakes. In the states, falling behind in a match 3-0 is no big deal. Here, it is."

Capt. Anthony Fritchle, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, takes down a classmate during a recent class at the Live Oaks Martial Arts Studio in Columbus.

Teacher makes art a 'practical' science

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

When Duke Meade began studying martial arts more than two decades ago, he noticed one major downfall in the ancient learning system.

While the arts teach mental and physical discipline at even the most fundamental levels, it can be sometimes months, even years, before the knowledge of the warriors of yesteryear are applied to techniques that can be beneficial to the student on both the streets and in the training room.

That is where Meade came into the picture nearly 10 years ago when he applied his knowledge and created a new method of teaching that sticks to discipline and agility of the ancient system, but focuses more upon the one thing that matters most in any confrontation — staying alive.

"There are a lot of studies where you can study for ten years and have a third degree black belt and still not be able to defend yourself," Meade said. "That is wrong. By doing that all you are dong is teaching people to perform rather than fight. It is not about style or fancy kicks. It is all about practicality."

Practical, that is how this 40-year-old Columbus native explains the philosophy behind his martial arts instruction program called Live Oak. And according to the arts expert, the techniques and practicality that his program is founded upon brings in not only police officers and security personnel from the area but Soldiers as well.

"The majority of the people I see in here are people who want real battle-focussed training," he said after a class late last week. "And since that is what they want, that is what I give them."

Meade gives his students a type of training he said is a combination of many ancient styles that are practical in today's world.

"I emphasize hand-to-hand combat," he said. "It is the most practical part of any art, and when my students leave here, they are going to leave here with something that may save their lives."

Meade developed this style from a combination of arts he acquired studying in Japan for more than 13 years while he paid the bills teaching English to locals.

"I learned from many masters in their own arts while I was in country," he said as he revealed the family lines of the art on a flow chart hanging in his studio. "Now I am taking that knowledge and passing along that information to my students here."

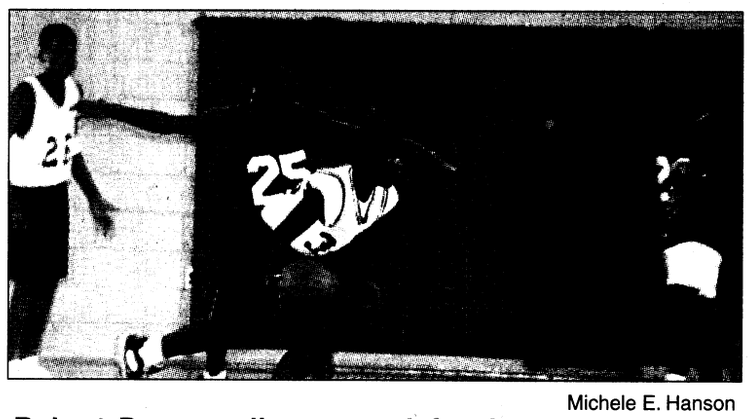
Youth teams take home wins during Week 3 play

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

The summer basketball season heated up during the third week of play.

In 6- to 7-year-old action, the Heat took the Spurs for a run, beating them 7-4. The Bulls and the Lakers battled to put 3 points each on the board during the second game of the division.

The Warriors dominated the Blue Devils during the first 8- to 9-year-old game 28-14. Anthony Mister led the Warriors in scoring for the second time this season with 8 points and teammate Kahlee Tyler contributed 6 points.



Blue Devil George Layne was the top scorer with 5 points and Bobby Kemp added 4 points but were unable to spark a victory over the Warriors who have played strong all season.

The second game of the division saw the Heat come from behind in the last five minutes of the game to tie it up against the Sonics 8-8. Heat forward Gunnar Hanson with 6 points and guard Travis Lush with 2 points were the team's lead scorers for the third week in a row.

Sonic teammates Mack Clemons and Roderick Shelton led their team in scoring with four points.

The first 10- to 12-year-old division game saw the Spurs explode offensively against the Miami Heat. Omar Tyler came on strong for the third week in a row leading the Spurs to victory with 18 points. Marcus Patterson assisted in the victory over the Miami Heat with 12 points.

students in a progressive manner that builds upon what they learned and tests them not to achieve the next belt, but to achieve Meade's confidence.

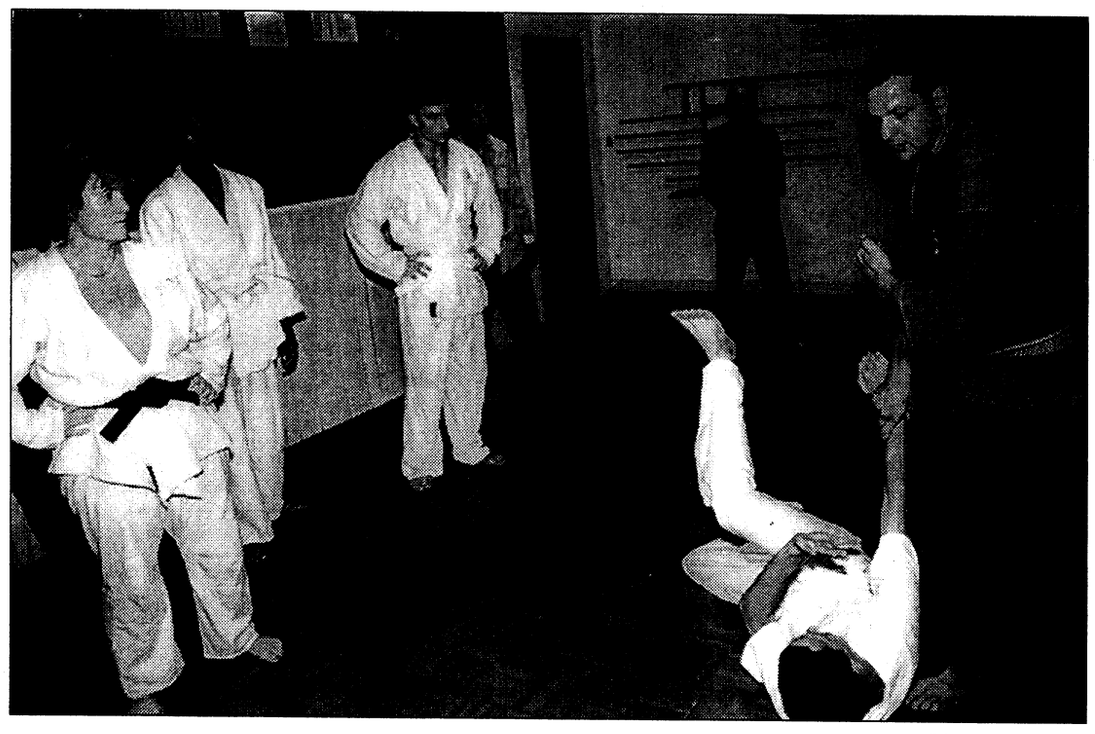
"It isn't about what color of belt you have earned that is going to save your life on the streets or the battlefield," he said. "It is what you know that is going to save your life. That is why I base all progression on how they perform everyday, not just on a belt test and a bunch of fancy kicks."

Progression begins the first day in Meade's classes which are limited to no more than 10 students, a number he said allows adequate one-on-one teaching. He begins with a process he calls building body armor.

"I teach the students the proper way to take a strike from their opponent and focus on the areas that are most commonly hit during battle," he said. "We continue to practice this and eventually their bodies will develop an 'armor' to help protect itself in these areas."

Unlike many martial arts instructors, Meade refuses to teach the art using pads.

"It is not realistic for either of the involved to use pads while training," he said. "It doesn't give the aggressor the feel of really striking someone, and it doesn't give the person being hit the chance to learn a reflex to the blow. That is why I teach them to build the body armor."



While striking to learn how it feels may seem a bit rough, Meade boasts that to this day he has never had anyone hurt during training and said it is a immeasurable ally when the situation turns from training to reality.

"I am not training show fighters like so many of my colleagues and other commercial martial artists," he said. "I am teaching real-world hand-to-hand (combat) skills."

It is not just Meade who is singing the song of good training. One of Meade's students, Capt. Anthony Fritchle, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, agrees that what Meade teaches is truly an asset to any Soldier or individual looking to learn real martial arts.

"I have been studying martial arts for about 12 years , and I have learned so many more applicable techniques here with Mr. Meade than anywhere else," he said.

"What he is teaching isn't a television version of karate or jujitsu. It is an art that will allow you to defend yourself whether at the ATM or on the battlefield."

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Martial artist Duke Meade demonstrates the proper take-down method during a class earlier this week. Like all of his instruction, Meade focuses on the practicality.

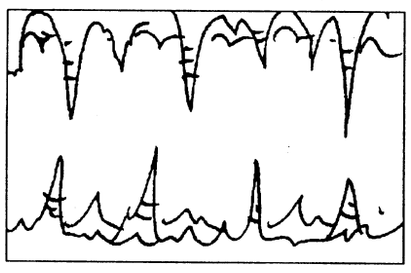
Dominique Love contributed more than half of the Heat's points with 12 and became the top scorer for the first time this season.

The 76ers slid passed the Knicks 38-33 during the second game. For the third consecutive week, Robert Penn (19 points) and T. J. McFarelane (15 points) proved to be unstoppable as the 76ers top scorers.

Knicks' Lee Herring and M. Williams contributed 8 points each towards the teams final score of 33.



The Pacers secured a win over the Tarheels in the 13- to 15-year-old division beating them 55-36. Ernest Tyler and James Fuller scored 12 points each as the Pacers lead scorers. Tarheels Derrick Whitley (12 points) and Roosevelt Vickers combined for 20 points but came up short of the victory.

The YS Summer Basketball season will continue through Aug. 19.

All games are held Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays at the Main Post Youth Services gym and begin at 5:30 p.m.

For information about football, soccer and cheerleading registration call 545-3070 or the gym at 545-3540.

BBB answers Y2K concerns

Better Business Bureau

Are you concerned about the year 2000, also known as "Y2K" and how related problems may affect your accounts with financial service companies? Proper planning and communication can help you avoid some problems that may occur.

The Better Business Bureau, along with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, suggests the following tips to ensure a smooth Year 2000 transition:

•Read and learn all you can about the Year 2000 situation and what banking institutions are doing to protect consumers. Pay special attention to mailings from your bank and other institutions.

•Keep good records of all your banking transactions, especially for the last six months of 1999 until you get several bank statements in 2000. These records should include documentation of your deposits, investments, ATM withdrawals and loan payments (credit cards, mortgage, auto loan, etc.) Also, keep copies of bank statements and transaction receipts.

•Consider asking your lender for a printed history of the payments on your mortgage, car loan or other debts, including how much of each payment has gone toward principle and interest. Check to make sure this information is accurate. Be aware that some institutions charge a fee for these records.

•Obtain a copy of your credit report early in 1999 and if you spot a problem, get it corrected promptly. In 2000, obtain another copy of your updated report and check again for errors.

•If you do banking by home computer, contact the computer manufacturer or software vendor to find out if your system is Y2K compliant. Some computer companies have web sites with this information. Also, keep back-up copies of your account records and transactions.

•It's possible that crooks and con artists may try to cash in on fears about the Year 2000. If someone tries to sell you a product, service or investment that's "guaranteed" to fix or prevent a Y2K problem — be careful. It may be a scare tactic to sell you unnecessary or overpriced services, or perhaps even a scam aimed at obtaining your cash, credit card number or bank account information. If you receive an unsolicited offer, check with the manufacturer of the product that needs fixing. Also, check the company out with your Better Business Bureau.

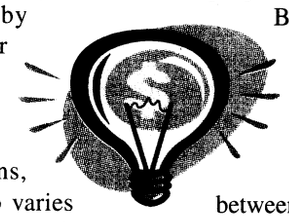
National Weather Service



Post experiences energy curtailments

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

If you were wondering why the lights were off in Infantry Hall and housing felt just a bit warmer, blame it on the heat wave. As a result of record setting temperatures throughout much of the nation, energy costs skyrocketed. To help combat high electric bills, Fort Benning acted to curtail its energy consumption.

The heat wave caused an astronomical demand for power both at Fort Benning and throughout the country. Since Flint Electric, the company which services post, buys electricity from other places, the cost is not only affected by the local heat crisis but also by the heat crises in other states.

In addition to fluctuating as a result of national weather conditions, the price of electricity also varies during the day. Prices are especially high during peak demand periods, such as between approximately 2 and 7 p.m., said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

These factors contributed to a need for Fort Benning to reduce its energy consumption so as not to greatly exceed projected electricity expenditures.

Beginning July 30, four measures were enacted to help lower energy costs, Walls explained.

The first of these was to raise chiller temperatures between about 1 and 8 p.m. every day. This affected all major buildings on post including barracks and office buildings.

The second measure was to curtail air-conditioner use in family housing units. Between the hours of approximately 1 and 6 p.m. AC units were automatically turned off for 15 minutes every hour. This was done using a computer driven system that sends a radio signal which is received by a special box attached to each individual AC unit.

The third way in which Fort Benning worked to lower its energy expenditures was to release personnel at 3:30 p.m. July 30 and Aug. 2. On Aug. 2 approximately $100,000 was saved. On a normal Monday in August, Fort

Honore heads to Washington

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

A smile comes across his face as he dusts off a couple boxes and moves them from the large conference table beside him. His smile grows bigger, and his eyes light up as he stares at the 20-some coins embedded deep within the table's flawless glass top.

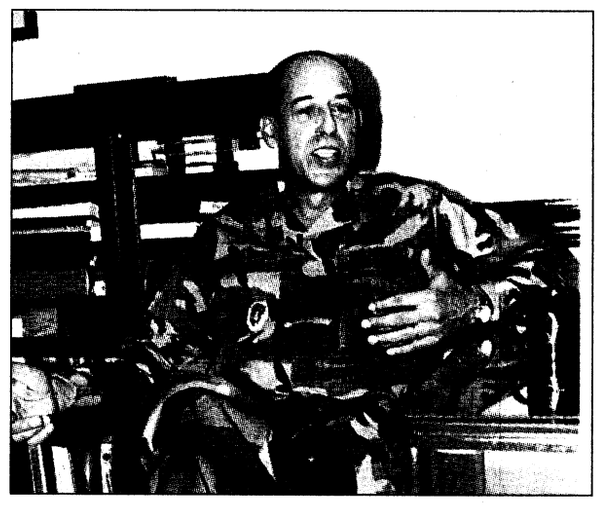
The coins are arranged to spell the letters I-N-F, an abbreviation that stands for what this man loves most — the Infantry. Those coins along with the accolades adorning the walls of his office at the United States Army Infantry School will soon be just a memory for this 51-year-old from Louisiana as he takes to yet another challenge in his Army career; a career that transformed this once farm boy into one of the most influential people in the Army Infantry community.

His name is Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore and after serving as the assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School for the past year, he will now take another step in his walk to success as he and his family of five move to Washington, D.C. to assume duties as part of the support staff for the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"It is hard to say good-bye to a place like this," Honore said as he began packing up items in his sixth floor office in Infantry Hall Tuesday morning. "There is no other place I have ever been that whether it is 30 or 85 (degrees) at 6 a.m. you can hear the cadence calls ringing in an ever-present sound of hooah from all parts of the post. There is no place you can go here and not be motivated — that's hooah."

While the hooah factor may be less for the recently slated two star, he said the personal satisfaction from seeing a young private in basic training or One Station Unit Training will never be matched anywhere.

"Personally, I think I am going to miss being around a place that reinforces individual training on a multitude of levels that is unmatched anywhere in the Army," he said. "Fort Benning impacts the rest of the Army as we are responsible for training not only initial entry Soldiers, but NCOs and officers as well."



"When these Soldiers leave here and go out to their various units, they are expected to be able to take a PT test to standard and know the entire gamut of Soldiering. Our NCOs and officers here make that happen on a daily basis," he said.

Soldiers in training aren't the only ones learning on a daily basis, according to Honore. He said while serving at Fort Benning, he too was a student of sorts as he took notes and acquired the knowledge of operating the third largest military installation in the world from Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, a person he said he considers not only his boss, but his friend and mentor as well.

"It has been a great learning experience for me as I've followed General Ernst through his daily operation of this world-class operation," he said. "I've learned a lot from him personally as well as professionally. He has taught me how to balance accountability and trust between subordinates and commanders."

"Perhaps the greatest thing I'll take from him (Ernst) is his ability to incorporate both the civilian and military communities. One out of five of the personnel assigned here live in the surrounding communities, and we need to ensure that the quality of life for our Soldiers is the highest it can possibly be," he said. "It is about involvement and allowing them to be involved with us that establishes a relationship of trust and good relations."

Honore himself tallied some volunteer time during his stint of service and when asked why, the 28-year veteran simply smiled and said, "There is nothing like the face of a young student to make you reassess why it is that you do what you do. When they ask, 'why do you do what you do,' it makes you think and appreciate everything it is that this Army and this country has given to you."

Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore reflects on his time at Fort Benning.

Those 'gifts' will continue to give as the man who said he became hooked on the Army while in college takes another step in the Army adventure, but re-emphasized the gratitude and fond memories he has for the post.

"Thank you. For all of those people who have directed me in the right direction since I have been here, to those people who took time out of their day for me, I want to say thanks. As the dog and I head out of here in the pick-up truck on the 11th, don't think you'll be forgotten. My memories and time serving this post will never be forgotten."

Honore will be honored during a Honor Bayonet at 4 p.m. Monday.

Air traffic controllers work to keep the sky safe above Fort Benning.

Keeping the sky safe

Controllers man tower

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

It happens to travelers around the world daily — the dreaded delayed notation appears beside their flight number on the list of departures as they scramble to their gate.

They know the delay will make them late to a meeting on the other side of the world, but that is the least of the worries for the air traffic controllers who are attempting to coordinate the air traffic overhead. The safety of the passengers, pilots and ground crews is paramount. And although the meeting may be important to the traveler, the safety of everyone involved is greater.

Situations like this arise every day in airports and airfields around the world, and Fort Benning's Lawson Army Airfield is no different from the norm.

"We are constantly checking the weather and flight status of all in-coming and out-going aircraft to ensure that safety is maintained," said Staff Sgt. Don Hendricks, an air traffic control specialist assigned to the airfield's only control tower.

According to Hendricks, that safety comes in the way he and the other four military personnel and four civilians working long hours at stress levels he said can sometimes

Post honors Soldiers with elite induction

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

He is the drill sergeant who stays out in the rain with his troops teaching them the basics of Soldiering. She is the motorpool sergeant who comes in three hours early to ensure her troops are doing fine, motivated and enjoying the Army. He is the PAC sergeant who makes that extra phone call to ensure his Soldiers get paid.

These are the Soldiers who make the Army the most elite fighting force in the world — these are the Army's non-commissioned officers.

They serve selflessly, work extra hours and go above and beyond the call of duty. They out-perform all expectations for no other reason than making their Soldiers proud and happy to serve, and this week Fort Benning recognized the best of the best with the post's first-ever Army Training and Doctrine Command's Audie Murphy induction ceremony.

The ceremony, held July 29 at the 15th Infantry Memorial near the Officer's Club, inducted four of the post's finest NCOs into a group of sergeants that bolster the same Soldier-first mentality as the club's honoraria World War II hero Sgt. Audie Murphy.

Earning the right to the post's TRADOC inaugural award were Staff Sgt. Mason Bryant, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade; Sgt. Beofra Butler, Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade; Staff Sgt. Sylvia May, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, NCO Academy and Sgt. 1st Class Cheryl Woodhouse, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, NCO Academy.

Although the club began inducting high-caliber NCOs in 1987, Fort Benning's TRADOC Soldiers netted their first induction ceremony this week, and according to Command Sgt. Maj. David Libersat, U.S. Army Infantry School sergeant major, the induction is more than belonging to a club or being the winner of another board.

"Being inducted into the Audie Murphy club is one of the highest forms of tribute that could be paid to an NCO," Libersat said before the afternoon ceremony. "The Soldiers inducted lead their troops in a manner that have not only won them the recognition of their chain of command, but have displayed characteristics that are in line with the actions displayed by Sgt. Audie Murphy during World War II."

The actions displayed by Murphy scored the outstanding Soldier every award for valor this country can give along with numerous awards and war decorations from countries around

Everyone needs way to relieve stress

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

I can't think of anything better than to come home after a long day of work, kick off my sweaty, smelly boots and strip every article of Army issued clothing off my body. Then proceed to plop my worn out behind down on a piece of nice comfy sofa letting myself melt into the cushions, balancing on the brink of paralysis.

commentary

This is my time — a time when all that is required of me is the ability to push a few buttons on the remote control and stop myself from drooling all over the place.

At this point nothing matters ... not the two stories I have to write the next day, not the stack of bills on my counter and not even the four-mile run I have in the morning.

Everything seems so trivial once I have fitted myself into that perfect little body mold I created on the couch. This is the point at which almost all of my stress becomes worthwhile. This is when I am in relaxation heaven.

Ahhh ... relaxation, it is such a beautiful word. Especially since it is usually used in conjunction with such an ugly word — stress.

I don't think there is anyone who doesn't enjoy being able to relax after a stressful day, month or year. Nothing beats that moment when you can just feel the stress as it rolls off your body, turning every one of your muscles into a cross between jello and silly putty.

I know not everyone relaxes in quite the same way. Some people even find it hard to relax. I used to be one of those. But since I've come into the Army, I never take for granted an opportunity to just let my hair down (literally), prop up my feet and act like a bum.

There are so many excellent ways to relax. Here are some of my favorites:

•A warm bath.

•Taking a walk, when it isn't like four million degrees outside.

•After much begging and pleading and even some bribing, a long back, neck and foot massage.

•Reading a book.

•Wrapping myself in a blanket and watching TV all day long.

•Going for a drive. Note: For this to be at all relaxing you need to find a stretch of road where there aren't very many idiotic drivers. This may take awhile, but just be patient, it's worth it in the long run.

And if you are one of those crazy, high strung, can't sit still for nothing kind of people, you might want to think about finding a way to relax before you have a heart attack. You can take baby steps and maybe start with some mediocre relaxing ... like scrubbing the bathtub or mowing the lawn. Then you can gradually work yourself up to the point where you can sit in a bubble bath for an hour or so.

All I can say is we are human and being human is stressful and agonizing sometimes. There's nothing wrong in devoting some time to yourself. We should enjoy the ability to just let ourselves go without worrying about things like work, bills or how we smell. So, I give everyone permission to just let loose this weekend. Enjoy yourself and just relax.

Caldera focuses on importance of USARSA

Louis Caldera
Secretary of the Army

In the past decade, as Eastern Europeans tore down the Iron Curtain, millions of East Asians embraced democracy and pluralism, South Africans turned their backs on racial terror — America's neighbors to the south have made their own march toward freedom. Over the past 10 years, the almost 400 million people of Latin America and the Caribbean have rejected a past replete with authoritarianism in favor of democratically elected governments and free market reforms.

commentary

Prior to the late 1980s, dictatorships or authoritarian governments ruled the majority of Latin American countries. Today, a commitment to democracy is seen in every country in our hemisphere but Cuba. President Clinton encouraged these trends at the summit of Central American leaders held last march at Antigua, Guatemala. The president pledged that the United States would continue to help reinforce democratic systems, economic reforms, adherence to due process of law and respect for human rights. A crucial part of this strategy must be a continuing effort to make sure that Latin America's military forces become the backbone of democracy — and not an impediment.

The preponderance of the engagement with Latin American militaries takes place at the U.S. Army School of the Americas, located at Fort Benning.

There, about 800 foreign and 25 U.S. students attend each year to learn something about professional Soldiering in the modern world. The courses taught at the School of the Americas are a reflection of our national security police — but they're also a reflection of our national values. While the majority of the courses involve professional military instruction, new courses have been added on civilian military relations, humanitarian mine removal efforts, peace operations, and sustaining democracy. All courses include instruction in human rights and make clear that the proper role of the military in society is subordination to civilian control.

Instruction covers the ethical, legal and operational consequences of failing to respect essential standards of individual rights and international law regarding the legitimate use of force.

Despite such changes, the School of the Americas is once again under attack from critics who claim that it trains Latin American militaries to violate human rights and circumvent the democratic process. The facts are that less than one percent of the school's 60,000 graduates have ever been linked to human rights violations, and fewer still have had allegations substantiated against them. What these graduates did cannot be condoned but what they did was not a result of their attendance at the School of the Americas. After all, nobody condemns Harvard because the Unabomber was educated there.

Instead of focusing on the negative, we should examine the role of the vast majority of graduates who have served their nations proudly and professionally. For example, the key members of the delegations that put together the recent historic peace accord between Ecuador and Peru were School of the Americas graduates from Peru, Ecuador, and the guarantor nations of Chile and the United States.

During my recent travels throughout Central America to observe efforts in the wake of Hurricane Mitch, I saw School of the Americas graduates working hand-in-hand with U.S. military personnel to deliver relief supplies and rebuild their nations. School of the Americas graduates are working with the Organization of American States to provide humanitarian assistance in Central America and are serving in peacekeeping missions around the world.

The School of the Americas receives more oversight than any other U.S: military school. It has undergone six separate investigations at the request of Congress and the Department of Defense. Each of the investigations has found the School of the Americas to be in compliance with U.S. law and policy.

A distinguished Board of Visitors has been established to oversee the operation of the school. The militaries of Latin America are no longer saddled with the ideological conflict of the Cold War, which spawned numerous civil wars throughout Latin America. Their nations, however, are still faced with many problems: from narco-trafficking to isolated insurgencies; from economic underdevelopment to environmental devastation. In each of these areas, responsible, respected military institutions are key to the pursuit of justice, stability and security in the region. The militaries of the region are moving away from their authoritarian past and focusing on a future of supporting their citizens and elected leaders. As they turn to the Untied States Army School of the Americas for help in this process, we simply cannot afford to turn away from them.

it was projected that the tab would have been $403,000 if measures had not been taken to conserve electricity. "The curtailment was effective and we trimmed big dollars," said Mark Fincher, Chief, Energy Management Branch.

The fourth way that Fort Benning tried to save money during this heat wave was by asking people to turn things off when they are not in use. Fincher added that this was something that can not only help reduce energy costs during this heat crisis, but throughout the year.

According to Walls, the commanding general is emphasizing that at no time will air conditioners be turned off completely. "We'll throttle them back a little bit, but we aren't turning them off," assured Walls.

While at this point the heat wave seems to be breaking, conservation measures will stay in effect as long as weather conditions force energy prices to remain abnormally high. As temperatures decrease, the cost of electricity should go down and the more extreme measures may no longer be necessary.

"We will continue to watch the temperatures, but we think the worst is over," said Walls.

Walls added it is important to note that the energy curtailment measures were a response to an emergency situation and are not intended to become permanent. As hot summer days continue though, people will still be asked to help watch the electric bill by turning things off when they are not in use.

"It is a common sense type of thing; there is no use in wasting anything whether it is energy or paper," Finchner emphasized.

Army News Service

The Army will align its education assistance program with existing enlisted schooling to provide Soldiers the opportunity to obtain a college degree based upon military job training and experience.

The pilot program, which began last August, now features two military occupational specialty-specific associate degree programs, said Dr. David Eyler, the associate director of Service Members Opportunity Colleges, a contractor that provides educational services to Department of Defense military personnel. SOC is part of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities.

"SOC Army degrees [SOCAD] is a long-established program ... but this new program, implemented as a pilot last August, involves the award of guaranteed college credit for training and experience in specific military occupational specialties, while working toward a degree," said Eyler.

The Army chief of staff and sergeant major of the Army wanted to provide an advanced education program for enlisted Soldiers not wishing to pursue pure academic degrees, said Education Services Specialist Louie Chartier.

Consequently, said Chartier, who works in the education division of The Adjutant General Directorate, the Army reviewed the existing SOCAD program in order to add an occupational degree program which would incorporate Army learning experiences and minimize additional college study. The main goal, she said, was to enable enlisted Soldiers to earn a college degree by making the most of their Army training and experience.

"We first met with senior enlisted leaders from Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations, Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Noncommissioned Officer Education System and The Adjutant General Directorate offices," Chartier said. "When you maximize military experience, you minimize the amount of college study and preserve choice for the soldier; a consideration which was important to senior leaders."

While Soldiers could obtain estimates of accumulated college credit from Army Education Center counselors in the past, Chartier said, those were only estimates, which didn't apply to a specific degree program. Additionally, she said, some schools would accept certain courses or credits, while others could be discounted.

The new program "gives enlisted Soldiers the ability to discover what their Army experience is worth toward a specific college degree; this takes the extra step," said Chartier. The key of the new degree program, she said, is having it tied to the NCOES.

Essentially, Soldiers will be able to translate their MOS background into a college degree, said Chartier. The new system will reestablish a working relationship between Army training schools and colleges.

"We don't just put the degree out there for NCOs to pickup," she said. "The Soldier is involved throughout the process of earning a college degree.

"It will not be a direct part of the NCOES curriculum, but it will be explained to students in Basic Noncommissioned Officers Courses that they can accrue college credit, and ultimately, a degree, via the program."

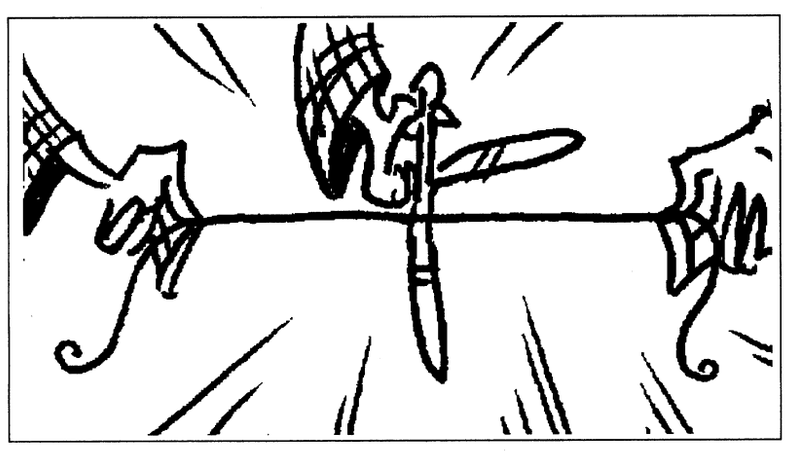
Awarding college credit through the new program will involve no guesswork, said Chartier, as credits will be awarded at certain MOS skill levels. Soldiers can look at "degree builder" plans dedicated to their military jobs. Soldiers at remote sites or on deployed status could take courses and tests via the Internet. College Level Examination Program and other national testing programs and Federal Aviation Administration and similar licensure and certification exams will also be taken into consideration for college credit.

"The 'degree builder' shows the guaranteed options for gaining the credit," said Chartier. "This will make it easier for Soldiers to get college degrees in the service, over time.

"It is a fine opportunity for Soldiers, especially at the NCO level. After attending BNCOC, some Soldiers could leave the service with an associate's degree or certification. When they go into a second career, they can start working at a higher level."

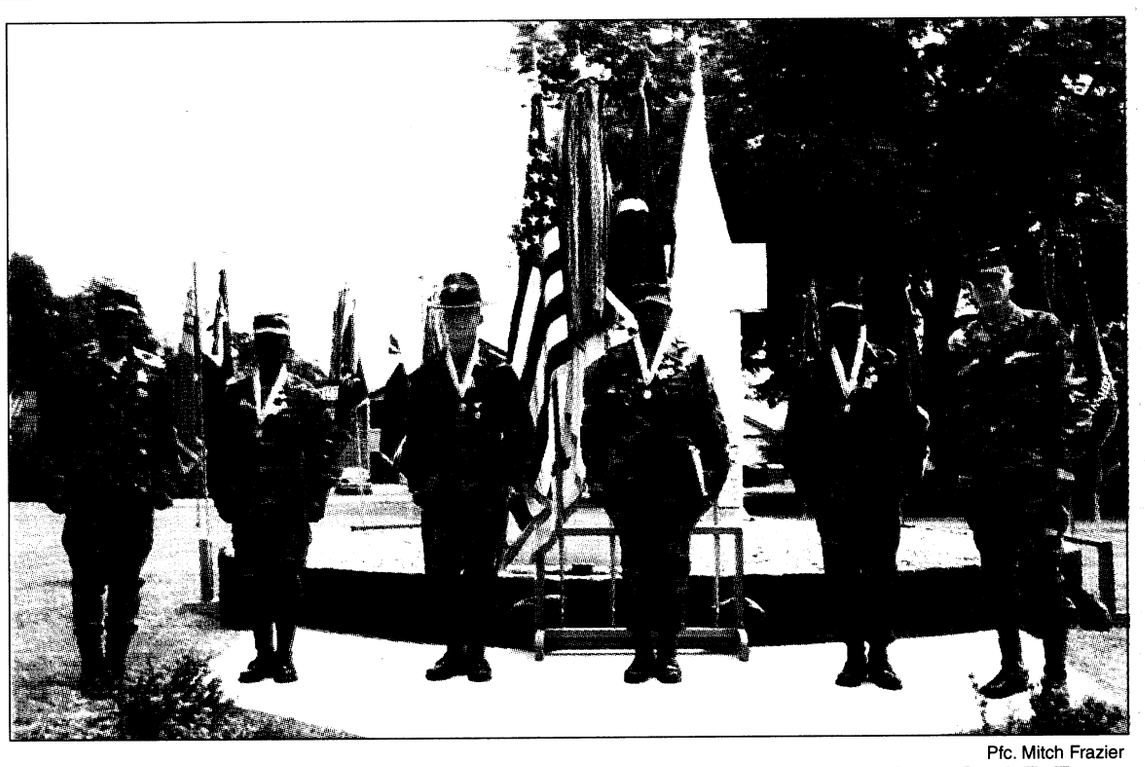
Eyler noted that not every MOS is included in the new program at this time. A pilot program, for one of two aviation MOS degree programs that began in August 1998 in the BNCOC program at the U.S. Army Aviation Logistics School at Fort Eustis, Va., is now complete, he said.

"The two degrees cover 15 MOSs in aircraft maintenance (Career Management Field 67)," said Eyler. "Then, we have two degree programs developed for the medical career management field; 91A (medical equipment repairer) and 91P (radiology). The first has been presented at BNCOC at Fort Sam Houston, Texas."



Development work is now underway for 91V (respiratory therapy), he said, while program managers are also surveying administration (CMF 71) and information systems (CMF 74).

As before, said Eyler, Soldiers will work with counselors at Army Education Centers to earn occupational degrees under the new program, which still falls under the Army's SOCAD agreement with colleges and universities.



"Every counselor who has access to the Web (www.soc.aascu.org) can download degree builders to work with each soldier," he said. Soldiers in the MOS's for which degree builders currently exist can enroll in the program at the nearest Army Education Center, said Eyler, and they'll telephone and e-mail access to the college's point-of-contact if they're assigned at a remote site.

"Guidance counselors can use tuition assistance programs to pay for the program (and) CLEP tests are free of charge," said Chartier. "However, some certification exams cost money; the amount depends upon the area of expertise. In this case, the money comes out of the service member's pocket.

"Right now, the Montgomery G.I. Bill doesn't pay for certification exams, but it is being looked into," she said.

Club: Soldiers display attributes

Infantry Regiment.

While Libersat noted the peacetime Army challenges Soldiers of today in a different manner than did the Army at the time of Murphy's WWII stint of service, he did say these top Soldiers still continue that tradition and that 'can-do' attitude in their daily tasks whether it takes place in an office or on a battlefield.

"These outstanding Soldiers foster teamwork, leadership and the values that are keeping with the highest standards of the military and gives great tribute to S'gt. Audie Murphy," Libersat said. "These four Soldiers were found to display all of these attributes."

The four were selected after a grueling process that included a battalion board, a brigade board and a post board comprised of present Audie Murphy Club members and the club president. Once completed with the battery of boards, the results of the boards, letters of recommendations and any other vital information were forwarded to Headquarters, TRADOC for evaluation and approval for acceptance into the elite club.

"This testing process is unlike any other," Libersat noted. "It doesn't stick to the normal technical board questions, but is focused primarily upon situational leadership-based questions."

"The board members are looking for the NCOs ability to demonstrate the same characteristics found in Sgt. Audie Murphy," he added.

Takin' a walk through the swamp

Ranger wives take on annual adventure

Capt. Christine Wollard
AAC Public Affairs

A group of Ranger wives cautiously make their way through the water during 6th Ranger Training Battalion's annual Rangers' Wives' Swamp Walk July 24. The spouses also took on the rappel towers and learned about reptiles and weapons used during Ranger School.

They arrived in jeans and battle dress uniform pants, boots and tennis shoes, tank tops and t-shirts hastily labeled "Perky's Platoon" in black magic marker.

Immediately, the Ranger instructors knew this crowd would be a tougher audience than could usually be found filling the seats of their classroom at Camp James E. Rudder, Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

More challenging, perhaps, but also more fun.

The 6th Ranger Training Battalion held its 30th annual Rangers' Wives' Swamp Walk July 24 beginning at 8 a.m. The all-day event was held not as an open house, but as an opportunity to familiarize the Ranger instructors' spouses with what their husbands do every day.

"Instead of the wives' Swamp Walk, you could call it Ranger appreciation day," said Lt. Col. Mark Johnstone, 6th Ranger Training Battalion commander. "This is a really good opportunity. They can read about certain things or their husbands can tell them about it, but until they do it, they can't fully appreciate it."

The 6th RTBn is responsible for the third and final phase of the 63-day U.S. Army Ranger Course, training students on close-quarters combat techniques and skills in a coastal swamp environment.

According to Johnstone, the day's events were meant to familiarize spouses with the unique environment the Rangers operate in, as well as give them an appreciation for the teamwork required in that job.

The Swamp Walk began with a reptile class, showing various poisonous and non-poisonous snakes found in the area, as well as a small alligator. By the end of the class, some participants seemed none-too-happy to leave the room filled with everything from black racers to timber rattlers.

Next, participants broke into two groups, which would rotate between firing various weapons and rappelling.

As participants climbed to the top of the 60-foot rappel tower, facial expressions ranged from excitement to nervousness to fear. Each spouse had her equipment checked out by a rappel master, then proceeded to either the wall or the "helicopter skid" to take her leap of faith.

Some went solo, some with a buddy, and a few even rappelled side-by-side with their Ranger husbands.

"I loved it," said Kathleen Dulac, who was participating in the Swamp Walk for the first time. "I was so scared to do the rappelling, but I'm glad I did it."

A few seasoned veterans like Dusty Hilton were repeat customers; her third rappel of the day was done Australian style, or face first.

At the weapons familiarization station, wives had the opportunity to fire everything from an M-16 rifle to the M-249 squad automatic weapon.

"I never expected to shoot automatic weapons," Dulac commented.

After a quick lunch, Swamp Walk participants were transported out to Pine Bluff, where they submerged into the Yellow River and crossed a rope bridge. They then experienced the teamwork needed to operate the F-470 Zodiac Raft, which they paddled a short distance down the river.

Towards the end, the gang of women headed to the swamp for a "leisurely" stroll.

With the heat index rising to near 110 degrees during the event, safety was at the forefront of everyones mind. Combining the heat with the level of inexperience most spouses had with the tasks performed, the Rangers actively assessed the risks and tried to reduce them, according to Johnstone.

Although the majority of the 50-plus participants were associated with the 6th RTBn, the event also drew about 10 participants from the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, stationed at Fort Benning.

Events like this help build camaraderie and a sense of community in this tightly knit Army unit, according to Johnstone.

By the end of the day, wives had a better feel for the challenges their husbands face on a daily basis.

"It gives the wives a taste of what the guys go through ... a taste of the endurance needed," Dulac said.

Controllers: Safety

a tough thing for some to handle.

"It can be a very stressful job," Hendricks said while clearing a plane for landing Tuesday afternoon. "You just can't let it get to you. You have to be able to go into almost an automatic reaction mode where you aren't even thinking about the stress. If not, it will get the best of you."

He said while the 170 missions flown out of the airfield on a daily basis is a challenge for the very short-handed traffic controllers, it is a challenge that fosters excellent teamwork and camaraderie.

"We find ourselves joking and cutting up with each other, but that is just part of it," he said. "We are all friends up here. We have to be able to be close and get along with each other because when things get hectic, you want to be able to work with you partner and know you can trust him to do the right thing."

Hendricks said that working relationship begins every morning as the first controller pair arrives at the tower at 6 a.m. to take on the morning shift that will have the two keeping the air safe above Fort Benning until early afternoon. Then it's time for the second round of traffic controllers to assume the flight control task until all air traffic is finished sometime around 9 p.m.

"It's tough really with only four Soldiers here to get to really know the guys on the other shift, because we seldom see them beside when were coming in," he said. "It's not like we have a lot of time to talk then."

The shifts are both led by a civilian supervisor who ensures continuity between the shift transition and maintain control while the shift is on-going.

"We take every precaution possible to ensure the safety of our pilots, ground crew and flight personnel," said William C. Smith, tower chief. "The civilians here give us an added benefit."

While the eight personnel assigned to the tower continue to direct the air traffic high above Fort Benning, the skies will continue to be a safe place to travel.

American Red Cross opens new center

Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

The American Red Cross opened a state-of-the-art communications center July 26 at Fort Sill, Okla., completing a two-year modernization effort for the agency's emergency messaging services.

The opening of the center means that all military installations in the contiguous 48 states now have access to one-stop emergency communications services, according to Sue Richter, vice president for the Red Cross' Armed Forces Emergency Services. A similar center opened in Falls Church, Va., in November 1988, but only covered military installations in 13 East Coast states. The Fort Sill center expands the service to the entire country.

Richter said the two centers consolidate services previously provided in offices at 145 different military installations.

"This makes it easier for active duty military personnel and their families to reach the Red Cross," she said. "They will do that through one toll free number (1-877-272-7337) and regardless of whether it's midnight or 6 a.m., they will get a Red Cross worker who is standing by ready to help."

The automated telecommunications system will route callers either to Fort Sill or Falls Church, depending on their point of origin. Richter said she expects the Fort Sill center will handle about 75 percent of the traffic, or about 600,000 calls per year.

Every day of every year, the Red Cross delivers news of family emergencies to service members stationed around the world. Whether delivering news of the birth of a child or the death of a family member, a Red Cross message provides service members and their commanders with the information they need to start such key personnel actions as emergency leave or compassionate reassignment.

Act protects rights of reservists

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

The Uniformed Services Employment and Re-employment Rights Act of 1994 has been amended to protect the rights of reservists returning from active duty to government jobs.

Although few Guard and Reserve members have expressed a concern, DoD's increased reliance on the reserve components spurred the Office of Personnel Management to issue regulations concerning the act's application to federal civilians. The protections also apply for reservists employed by state and local governments and by private employers.

There are few incidences where a reservist would not be entitled to return to a position of employment, according to Air Force Col. Rowan Bronson, assistant director of personnel in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs. Those incidences would include people who fail to give advance notice to employers that they've been called to active duty, those who exceed five years' cumulative active duty time or who failed to report back in time, and those who are discharged under less than honorable conditions.

"Basically, if they don't fall into those categories, they should have no problem getting back within federal civil service," Bronson said.

About five percent of the Ready Reserve — 73,000 people — hold federal civilian jobs, Bronson said. They may volunteer or be called up individually or with a unit, but still receive the same protections, he said. Another agency, the National Committee for Employer Support of Guard and Reserve, protects their rights, too, as well as the rights and concerns of employers. The committee uses ombudsmen in the field (at least one in every state) who act as mediators between reserve component members and their employers and who explain to them the roles and responsibilities of each.

Employers concerned about a reserve component member being gone too long or too often also can directly communicate with unit commanders, the colonel said.

Before going on active duty, reserve component employees should notify their civilian employers, preferably in writing, Bronson said, except when to do so would hamper military security or delay the employee from reporting to duty. While reservists are away from their normal jobs, their entitlements continue as if they were there, he said.

"Benefits that are provided to all employees should continue to be provided to absent reservists," he said. "If the reservists are in positions that would automatically be upgraded during their absence, they should receive the upgrades. Pension and health benefits attached to the position as a normal course of the way the employers do business should stay in place."

Administration of the new rules will be applied uniformly across federal departments, although there could be some nuances depending on the reservists' branch of service and the department's human resources policies.

Reservists can find out exactly what's required of them through their units and employers and by accessing the Department of Labor "tickler file" that contains questions and answers for both reservists and employers. The file is on the internet at www.dol.gov/elaws/userra0.html.

Form 2586 reports experience, training

"Transitioning Soldiers will need to document military experiences, qualifications, work history, training, education and achievements. Preparation of a resume is the accepted way for a job seeker to present his or her professional history to potential employers. One very convenient source available, free of charge, to help with resume preparation is the DD Form 2586, Verification of Military Experience and Training (VMET)," said Chick Eagle, Fort Benning ACAP Center Manager.

The Department of Defense will issue to each separating Soldier a DD Form 2586, "VMET" report. Soldiers have completed numerous military training courses and served in many positions, experienced a wide range of responsibilities, perhaps too many for some to recall easily for inclusion on resumes, job or college applications. The VMET report is created from automated records on file and includes military job assignments, training programs with recommended college credits and civilian job titles that relate to specific Military Occupational Specialties (MOS).

Separating Soldiers should automatically receive the VMET report no later than 120 days before their separation date. However, because of changes in separation dates, it is recommended that each separating Soldier call the VMET office to check the status of the automatic system. Of particular importance is to update the mailing address in the VMET office to insure it is received in time to be useful. CONUS based Army personnel call: (800) 258-VMET.

"Soldiers who have received their VMET are encouraged to bring it to ACAP preseparation briefings, workshops, and counseling sessions. This useful tool is available to separating Soldiers as a valuable entitlement to help transition back to the civilian workforce," Eagle said.

To inquire more about the VMET and other ACAP services or information, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309 or stop by Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

OCS turns enlisted into officers

Spc. Jamie Karl Officer Candidate School

Opportunity knocks, some folks say. And the old adage rings true, at least in the United States Army.

As the Army strives to expand the experience base of its officer corps, the service is looking harder for top-quality enlisted Soldiers to fill gaps in its commissioned ranks. That is where the U.S. Army Officer Candidate School comes into the battle plan.

OCS, which is located on Fort Benning, affords proven Soldiers and warrant officers in 14 weeks. It is an Army institution that has been in existence since 1941.

But the road to the officer corps is challenging, OCS administrators said, as the course tests officer candidates both physically and mentally. As a result, the school is producing some of the military's best leaders — more than 600 new lieutenants a year.

"The OCS-commissioned officer brings a lot to the table," said the school's executive officer Maj. Bill Ramsey. "Officers commissioned from OCS already know what Army life entails. They understand the hardships Soldiers face."

Most importantly, the OCS graduate is a tested and proven leader. That makes for an officer with invaluable qualities.

Soldiers applying to OCS cite a variety of reasons for seeking a commission. But nearly all attest to the quality of OCS alumni by whom they have been led and mentored.

"Enlisted folks, especially younger Soldiers, garner extra trust and respect for officers who have gone through OCS," said one Soldier accepted to the school. "In fact, it was an OCS alumnus — my former company commander who inspired me as a Soldier and encouraged me to apply for the school."

The OCS training program consists of three phases. First is Basic Phase, in which officer candidates are grounded in a fast paced regimen of Soldiers skills, physical training and land navigation. In Intermediate Phase, focus is on tactics and doctrine, with classroom instruction, examinations and field training exercises. The final phase of OCS is Senior Phase, in which candidates organize their own training, preparing the soon-to-be lieutenants for their officer basic courses.

OCS has specific prerequisites and requirements for acceptance. The official sources on OCS eligibility are AR 351-5, AR 610-210 and the Fort Benning and OCS website, www-benning.army.mil/fbhome/OCS/index.htm

To be considered for OCS, Soldiers must have completed 90 or more semester hours of college. Civilians must have a bachelor's degree at a minimum.

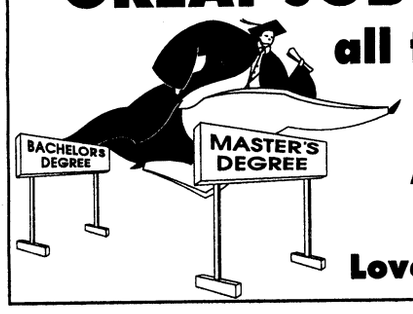
Other basic requirements state that the applying Soldier must:

•Be a citizen of the U.S.

•Have a GT score of 110 or higher.

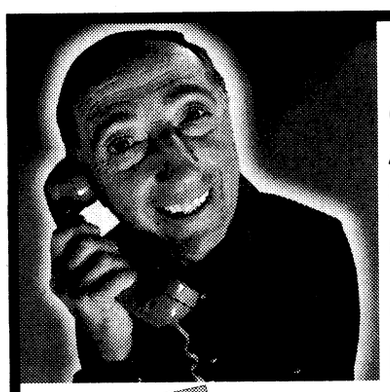
•Pass the Army Physical Fitness Test with a score of 180.

•Meet Army height and weight requirements.



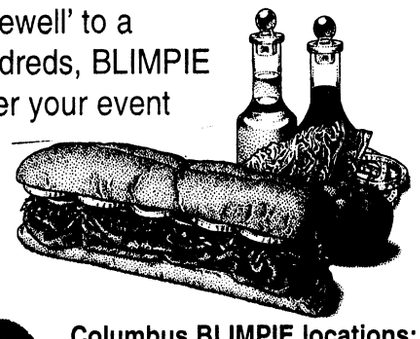
•Pass the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), with 850 minimum or the American College Test (ACT) with a 19 minimum.

•Achieve a score of 80 or higher on the English Comprehension Level Test (ECLT), if primary language is not English.



•Be at least 18 years old and less than 30 (age waiver available for Soldiers 35 or younger).

•Have a complete physical exam six months prior to date of application.



According to the school's personnel and administrative center, the OCS application process is relatively simple. Individuals interested in applying should contact their unit S-1, visit the OCS web site or see an Army Recruiter.

ITB Soldiers lead the way during Cobra Challenge

Trainees complete day of tasks, pugil stick

Capt. James Brownlee
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

A one-mile litter carry, an obstacle course, a confidence course, a two-mile run, a five minute push-up contest, pool relays, another two-mile run, a five minute sit-up contest, a two and a half minute dip contest and a two and a half minute pull up contest, followed by a squad tug-of-war — if you thought this was enough to get your attention, try adding a full period of instruction on pugil stick training right after the tug-of-war.

For the Soldiers of Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, these and many other events were exactly what was getting their attention during the company's "Cobra Challenge."

Giving a new meaning to the phrase "We do more before 9 a.m., than most folks do all day," the Soldiers of Company C were out of bed at 3 a.m. and downstairs in formation before you could count to three. No, this was no fire drill it was the beginning of nine hours of training.

When all of the Soldiers were accounted for, the company commander and his cadre did not say a word, all they gave the Soldiers was an instruction packet and a time hack. The words "good luck" echoed throughout the company area as their time began.

"This exercise is just what this company needed. These men needed a little team building and cohesive bonding," said Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Moon, senior drill sergeant for fourth platoon. "These Soldiers work hard every day, this challenge should be a good indication of just how much our men have learned since they have been here and it also serves as a chance for some of our stand out Hooahs to take control and lead the way."

And lead the way they did. When the company commander finished giving the time hack, it was pure chaos — Soldiers were everywhere, then finally, their individual chain of command took control and the teamwork began. The Soldiers had been given the mission to return to their bays conduct personal hygiene, make their bunks and clean their bays. This was in preparation for the immediate barracks inspection which was to be held while they were downstairs being tested on numerous skill level one tasks.

The spectrum of tasks they were to be tested on were all too familiar to them, however at 3 a.m., just how clear can a person think? The first event of the morning was to don their protective masks within nine seconds. Then after they were given the all clear, they were required to recite their chain of command starting with the president and ending with their drill sergeant. This task was done on an individual basis.

Following the chain of command, they were required to recite their seven Army Values and give a personal definition, followed by the Oath of Enlistment and their three general orders.

"I really had to think there for a minute — everything was happening so fast," said Pfc. Andrew Weaver from Martinsville, Ind. "Luckily I knew my stuff and I got some points for my team. This was a tough challenge and we all knew that if one of us failed it was up to the rest of us to pull him along. It all tied into our selfless service value of knowing that hey, situations like this might happen to us in the real world and I want to be there for my buddy."

Anticipation and excitement electrified the company area when the 16 teams, each consisting of 12 Soldiers were given their marching orders to proceed to the start line for the beginning of the first phase — the litter and obstacle course run. Then immediately after the obstacle course, one member from each squad would be chosen to reassemble an M16A2 within two and a half minutes.

Easy? Perhaps to some, but with a blind fold and just coming off a litter carry and an obstacle course, maybe not. Immediately after the obstacle course, it was straight to the confidence course and then on a two-mile squad run to the Sand Hill pool. Once the Soldiers arrived at the pool, they began the push-up event, this event was a timed five minute smoker. Each man participated once giving it his best attempt at doing the most he could before giving out. Then it was time for the cool water of the pool, and to give the Soldiers a chance to catch their breath and cool down a bit before they were at it again in the squad chicken fights and pool relays. The final leg of the challenge was a two mile run back to Gammon field. Once they arrived at Gammon field they went straight into the sit-up, dip, pull-up and tug-of-war events. These were all timed events and needless to say they wore the Soldiers thin.

"This challenge really let us see just who had what it takes to motivate our squad and platoon," said Pfc. Ijia Phillips from Philadelphia, Penn. "Really, I think the whole company is beyond motivated, we are pumped and ready for more. This challenge gave us the motivation to get to the end of our training. It helped us put aside our differences and work together as a team, and a team is what we are."

The last and final event of the day or morning for that matter, was the pugil stick training. This period of instruction was to be the capstone event. For a Soldier to move, shoot, communicate and fight on any battlefield anywhere in the world, he first must be introduced to the fatigue that may accompany such a challenge. Therefore, this was to be the fight of all fights. This is where personal grudges, team, squad and platoon challenges would come to a head. However, as the men of Co. C soon realized, this was more than just a Cobra Challenge, it was also a personal challenge. To move over so much terrain and to do so many events in such a short period of time, takes a lot out of a Soldier. Moreover, to make good on all of those personal, and platoon challenges, you have to be in better shape than the person that you issued the challenge to. And that is what it all came down to.

The pugil stick event is usually an all out effort by both parties that are being challenged. However, not this time.

The men gave it their all and some still had some to give even after a few bouts. But, for the majority of the company, the two minutes that were spent in the ring with their platoon mate was all that they could handle. Staff Sgt. Timothy Roberge, second platoon platoon said, "These Soldiers did a great job today. You can tell that these Soldiers really want to be challenged here and train. To some of them, this is probably all they will talk about when they go home for their home town recruiting duty. How much they enjoyed being challenged and pushed to accomplish more and more for the sake of the team. This event did more than meet any kind of training criteria, it built teamwork, cohesion and most of all self-confidence. The Soldiers loved it."

All in all, the main focus of training and having fun while building teamwork and esprit de corps was accomplished. The over all winners of the Cobra Challenge, were the Warriors from second platoon, with the fourth platoon Wolverines coming in second, followed by the third platoon Terminators and first platoon Mad Dogs, coming in to round out the field.

Up next for Company C is STT, and then their final field training exercise to be held Aug. 16-23. The company graduates at 9 a.m. Aug. 27 on Kanell field, located on Sand Hill.

Army eyes training, technology to make urban warfare easier

Jim Caldwell
Training and Doctrine Command

"The U.S. Army faces tremendous challenges in military operations in urban terrain, but still no other military does it better than we do," said Lt. Col. Mike Hanley, chief of the Forced Entry Battle Lab at Fort Benning.

Facing an entrenched foe in a city can be "a meat grinder," said Hanley, who is the former chief of live fires at the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La. There is really no way to know for certain what sort of threat lies around every corner. And, in the past, the uncertainties of urban warfare have typically resulted in dead and wounded.

What will help reduce casualties in urban combat, Hanley said, is tough, realistic training, such as that offered at JRTC, and technological developments. U.S. forces are making progress in the urban combat arena. Some personal protection equipment is almost ready to field, while work continues on high tech systems.

Gen. John N. Abrams, commander of Training and Doctrine Command, compared today's approach to fighting in urban and complex terrain to World War II.

"The only time they were successful in fighting in urban areas in World War II was with siege tactics," he said. "They'd bring in the heavy forces and tell the heavy forces, 'Blow down this wall.'"

Then troops repeated the process from the outer reaches of a city until they reached the center.

"If I were to offer the national command authority that kind of tactic (today), with all the environmental factors considered, they'd say, 'Abrams, you're just a little bit out of date,'" the general said.

Today's commander not only has to try to minimize Army and allied casualties, he also has to protect local civilians and city infrastructures. Adding to the problem are humanitarian groups on or near the battlefield, such as the Red Cross and Doctors Without Borders.

Abrams also feels that technological developments, along with tough, realistic training, will make the job somewhat less dangerous.

Some technological achievements are closer to reality than others. For example, several types of personal protection equipment are being tested and produced now.

"There are some very promising capabilities that allows you to have a robot that looks like a cricket that can see and report back to you with microprocessors," Abrams said.

"You can have a robotic assault gun," the general said. "You can bring it into a built-up area. Maybe it is controlled by dismounted troops."

Personal protection equipment is currently being tested in a joint Army-Marine Corps MOUT Advanced Technology Concept Demonstration. Protective gear includes kneepads, goggles, gloves and hands-free communications.

Soldiers and Marines are also testing breaching tools. Among them are explosive blankets that can be attached to walls and doors to blow holes in them. Rifle-launched entry munitions can blow holes in doors 30 meters away.

Testing the gear continues in experiments at MOUT sites at Fort Benning and Camp Lejeune, N.C. The ACTD will culminate in a Joint Contingency Force Advanced Warfighting Experiment at Fort Polk in September 2000.

The XVIII Airborne Corps will act as the JCF headquarters, with participation from the Navy and Air Force, who will be conducting experiments of their own.

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., and a Marine rifle company will use the protective gear in a MOUT assault.

That's when they invade JRTC territory.

"The difference in MOUT training at JRTC and training at a home-station MOUT facility is the difference between scrimmaging among a football team and playing a game," Hanley said. "It doesn't outdo the real thing, but it is a real test for any unit."

Key to making JRTC training so realistic is the opposing force, Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 509th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

"Ten times a year they spend weeks in the woods, and are probably the most lethal troops in the world," Hanley said.

A videotape of the "battle" is used for after action reviews with the Soldiers in training.

"That's where you get the best training," Hanley said.

Realistic training, coupled with technological assistance, will help American Soldiers to overcome the challenges of combat in urban and complex terrain. They will augment the Army's greatest resource, Abrams said.

Task Force 1-15 gathers for live-fire exercise

Spc. Brian Murphy
4th Public Affairs Detachment

CAMP DOHA, Kuwait — It was sort of like a family reunion, but with lots of tanks, gunfire and explosions.

The entire Task Force 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, had the rare opportunity to train together when they participated in a live-fire exercise in the Udairi Desert July 9.

"Until now, all of the Task Force training has been conducted by the individual units," said Capt. Rob Fisher, observer from Fort Benning. "This is a scenario in which everyone must work together for the mission to be successful."

Most of the action started the day prior to the live fire. All of the units conducted a dry fire.

Afterwards, the units analyzed what went right and what needed to be done differently.

"After the rehearsal, all of us got together and discussed everything," Fisher said. "If something didn't go as smooth as possible, it was brought up."

The remainder of the dry-fire portion of the exercise was spent conducting maintenance.

"The mission isn't that difficult," said Spc. Chris Waddell, tank gunner, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment. "But if our equipment doesn't work, then that's one less vehicle we can count on. That's why we are very thorough."

The live fire started the next morning before sunrise. The challenges began from the moment the task force rolled out.

"As soon as they started, they came across their first objective," Fisher said. "The first objective was a large group of Infantrymen with anti-tank weapons. In order to get to the main defensive site, the task force would have to get through them."

Company C, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., conducted a dismounted assault and within minutes had taken out the Infantry strong point, which cleared the way for the rest of the task force.

Then, 3rd Platoon, 3rd Military Police Company came and set up a lane for the task force to pass through safely.

The next set of obstacles for the task force was when they encountered two armored vehicles.

"Eliminating those targets quickly was very important," Waddell said. "They were the enemy's early warning. If they spotted us, they could call in artillery fire. If we took them out early, there wouldn't be a lot of artillery being fired at us."

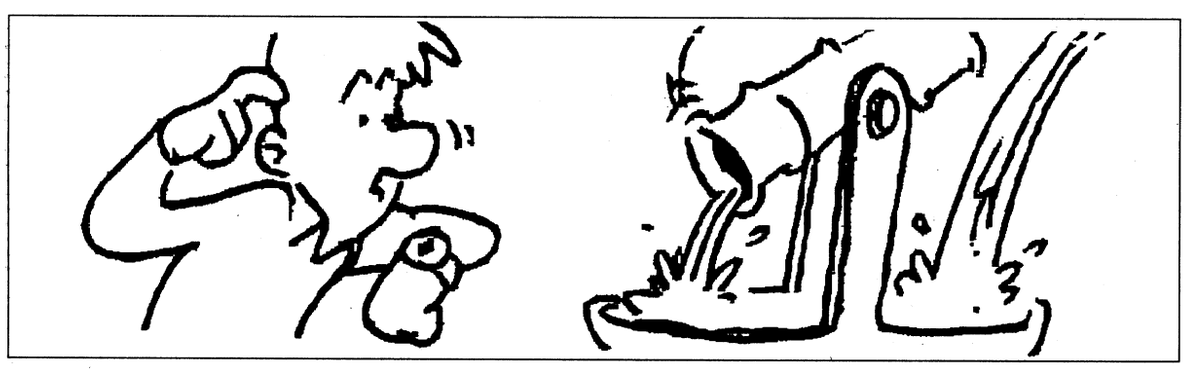
The task of destroying the enemy vehicles was given to Co. A, 2nd Bn., 69 Armor Regt. Once completed, the task force moved on to it's final objective.

The only thing separating the task force from the enemy was a tank ditch and a berm.

Company C, 317th Engineer Battalion used a mine clearing line charge to clear out the area. Then the engineers brought the M60A1 Armored Vehicle Launched Bridge to create a route across the tank ditch. Next, an Armored Combat Earthmover was used to knock down the berm. The route was then established for the task force to finish the job.

"Everyone moved out and took out what was left," Fisher said. "The exercise ended on a high note."

According to Fisher, the reason the live fire went so smoothly is because the task force was well prepared.



"The task force did a very solid job during this exercise," he said. "Everything that was brought up yesterday was fixed today. They did a good job yesterday. Today, they did excellent."

With the live-fire exercise complete, everyone put down their weapons, packed up their gear, said their good-byes and headed for the door.

Schools remind parents to register

Fort Benning Schools

Parents are reminded that the 1999-2000 school year begins Aug. 24 and that registration is now underway. Parents can register their children from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

All registrations and verifications will take place at the child's or children's assigned or neighborhood schools. It will be necessary for parents to register at each school if they have children in more than one of the Fort Benning Schools.

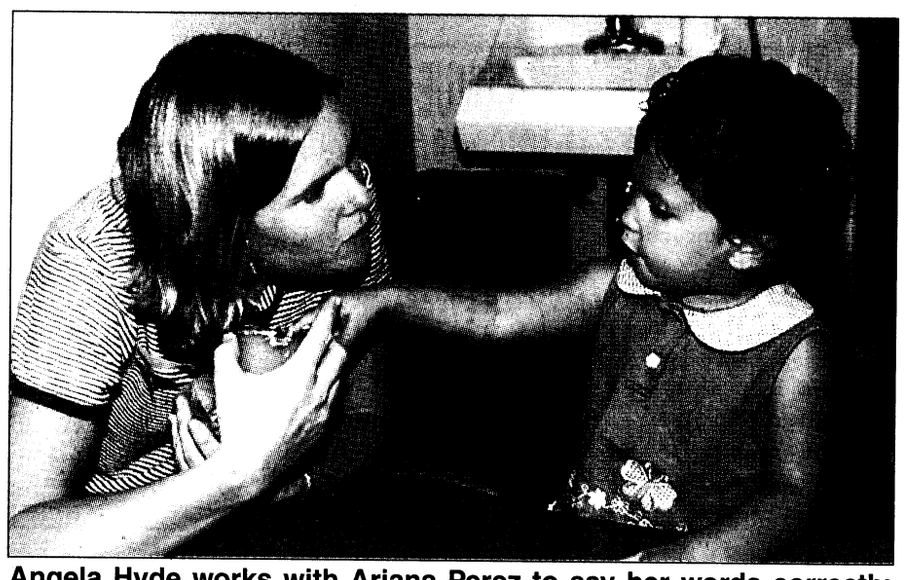
If children attended a Fort Benning school this school year, it will be necessary for parents to verify registration data for next school year by visiting the schools.

If children did not attend any Fort Benning Schools this school year, it will be necessary to complete a registration packet, which is available at the schools.

Bus schedules will be available at a later date and will be published in The Bayonet. Forms for free and reduced price lunches can now be picked up at the schools or at the Fort Benning School's Administrative Center Child Nutrition office, Room 21 located on Custer Road.

New registration requires the child's Social Security number and proof of on-post residence. Registration for pre-K and kindergarten requires the child's original birth certificate. Parents of pre-K and kindergarten students will be given information regarding the procedure for securing a Georgia Eye, Ear, Dental and Immunization Certificate at registration. Parents of students in grades one through eight must bring current shot records which will be recorded on Fort Benning School's health forms.

Verification will include: updating basic registration data (i.e. address, phone number, contact information), health and immunization updates, medications, etc. All registrations and verifications require sponsor and spouse to provide a current military ID card.



The Fort Benning Schools also offer a half-day pre-K program for children who reside on post and will be 4 years old on or before Sept. 1, 1999.

Project gives children step in right direction

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For almost all parents there comes a point in time when they are forced to watch as their little "darling" heads out the door to tackle the next step in growing up — the first day of school.

With this new venture undoubtedly comes an array of emotions from both the parent and the child. Whether its being excited, nervous, anxious, scared, happy or sad there is always an uncertainty about what lies ahead. And for parents of children with special needs or disabilities, this may ring doubly true.

But now there is a program offered by the Educational and Developmental Intervention Services that hopes to quell some of that uncertainty. The program is called Project HIGH, which stands for helping infants gain habilitation, and it gives children ages 2 to 3 the opportunity to experience a classroom setting before they take that leap into preschool.

The month-old program is the brain child of Early Childhood Special Educators, Angela Hyde and Alicia Swinney.

Swinney explained that both her and Hyde came up with the idea of bringing preschool aged children with special needs together in a classroom because they believed it would be extremely beneficial.

"Usually our services are provided in the home," Hyde said about the special therapy her and Swinney are trained for. "So we thought that by giving them the opportunity to be in a classroom type environment that's very similar in structure to how preschool is, it would help them with their transition and make it less scary for them."

According to both Hyde and Swinney, Project HIGH provides a quality learning environment where children can interact with their peers and work on individual goals.

The ultimate outcome being that the children will make a smoother transition from the intervention program to a school setting.

All of the children who are apart of the class are enrolled at EDIS and have some form of disability or developmental delay, Hyde said. These could range from the more serious of spina bifida, down syndrome and cerebral palsy to that of hearing impediments and speech delays.

She went on to say that the class, which runs from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays not only provides a learning environment, complete with visits from a speech therapist, but also the usual gammut of fun and games.

"Most of the children have specific goals, some may even have physical and occupational therapy," Hyde said. "When we find out what these goals are we target them and try to work on them."

Swinney said they focus on a number of skills with the students. These cover cognitive, social and self-help skills to speech and communication.

But the most valuable thing of all is what the children learn from one another, she said.

"I think the main thing that makes this program great is the peer interaction," Swinney said. "Kids learn through play. When they play with another child they see what they are doing and try to imitate them. We find that when we can get a higher level child to do something another child will come over and try to imitate them."

She said so far parents have been very receptive to the program and a few have already commented about the class being a large factor in their child's speech progression.

"I just hope this program continues for a long time," Swinney said "The response we have received so far from the parents is great, they really seem to like it."

For any parents who are concerned about their children having a possible developmental delay, or want to find out more information about EDIS or Project HIGH, call 545-3835.

Summer program enriches local students

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Local high school students participating in the Columbus' Summer Youth Employment and Training program gained valuable work experience and enriched themselves with culture, while working at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

"To me, USARSA is like a set of encyclopedias waiting to be read; a book report waiting to be written or a biography of South America waiting to be read," said Tisherra Taylor, a 16-year-old student from Columbus High School, who worked with the school's public affairs office.

"In my few weeks at the school, I have met people from places like Colombia, Bolivia, Brazil, Venezuela, Panama, Guatemala and Chile. These people were all very interesting and each one had a story waiting to be told."

The program, which is sponsored by the Job Training Partnership Program and the Lower Chattahoochee Private Industry Council, of Service Delivery Area Six, acquaints the youth with a work environment in an attempt to enhance and stimulate their attitudes toward employment responsibilities.

Fort Benning, which supports the program, allows the participants to explore potential career fields and develop marketable skills through work experience and training.

Since June 15, USARSA benefitted with 15 students who helped several of the school's departments with a variety of tasks.

"I worked with the school's Protocol Office," said Tanica Adams, a 16-year-old student from Kendrick High School. "I answered phones, made welcome packets and helped set-up conference rooms for visiting delegates. I also learned money management."

Taylor, who plans to attend an ROTC program in college, said working at the school and around military personnel, reinforced her desires to become a commissioned officer.

"The working experience I received while working at USARSA cannot be taught at school," she said. "If I get the opportunity to work at USARSA again, I'll do it."

The students' last day of work with the school was July 31.

Joyce Livingston, USARSA's program coordinator, said the feedback she received on the students was terrific.

"They were all professional and eager to work," said Livingston. "I think a lot of people will be asking for them again next year."

Recycling program saves thousands

Walter Nichols
Directorate of Public Works

In 1997 Fort Benning attacked the major contributor to its landfills — cardboard. Approximately 30 percent of Fort Benning's solid waste was corrugated cardboard. At that time, 110 special green cardboard collection dumpsters were purchased to improve cardboard recycling.

Within one month, the new green dumpsters increased the amount of cardboard recycled by more than 40 percent.

A very important benefit of these green dumpsters was the improved efficiency in the use of the brown solid-waste collection dumpsters. By removing the cardboard, total waste tonnage was reduced and fewer trips were required to transport solid waste to the landfill.

The green dumpsters are designed to require the cardboard boxes to be flattened before they are placed inside. By flattening the boxes, much more cardboard will fit in dumpsters and improve collection efficiency.

Overall cardboard recycling has been very good. Even when the market price dropped, Fort Benning "hung in there," and our recycling program made some money with cardboard, while many less efficient cardboard collection programs had to fold up.

Besides making a few dollars with its scrap cardboard, the Follow Me Recycling Program saved thousands of dollars by not sending cardboard to landfills.

The market for cardboard has begun to improve. Cardboard mills are being built and enlarged. There is also more demand for scrap cardboard by mills in Europe and Asia. There is a very good possibility that Fort Benning can increase its recycling revenue and decrease expensive off post disposal at the same time, due to the improved market for cardboard.

So how can we advance our attack on cardboard waste? How can we take advantage of the market and convert our cardboard into a valuable revenue generating resource?

We can do this by improving our recycling program; by apply the Infantry "can do" attitude to all our recycling efforts. We must make an extra effort to ensure cardboard is placed only in the green cardboard dumpsters and keep it out of the brown dumpsters.

When units and activities take waste to the crop off point, they also can deliver their cardboard to the Fort Benning Recycling Center, Building 4000, adjacent to the Recycling Center.

Commanders and supervisors must ensure that their personnel are managing solid waste and recyclables properly. Funds spent for landfilling waste reduces dollars available to train Soldiers. The revenue returned to Fort Benning by recycling is used to improve quality of life for military personnel and their families.

Careful driving can be defined as the operation of a vehicle in such a manner as to maintain control at all times, regardless of the traffic, weather or road conditions. The following are a few driving hazards and safe driving practices to be aware of:

•Driving for long periods of time during hot weather will increase driver fatigue. Adjust windows for maximum ventilation and stop frequently to rest.

•Drive at speeds that permit control of the vehicle at all times.

•Turn on your headlights at sundown; let the other person know you are there.

•When weather and road conditions are unfavorable, slow down, and if necessary, stop.

•If you have to stop, pull off the road onto the shoulder only after careful observation. Grass and weeds may hide holes, stumps and other hazards. Don't walk into the roadway.

•Plan your trip to allow ample time.

•Watch for all drivers. They may be drunk, fatigued, sick or just plain careless.

•Braking conditions should be checked by cautious application of brakes to determine skidding danger. Remember that all roads are not the same when wet. Some of the macadam roads are more slippery than others during rain storms. Hydroplaning occurs at about 50 mph, if you carry 24 psi in new tires; about 60 mph if you carry 35 psi in new tires.

•Get your vehicle in good condition for summer driving. Check your steering, tires, brakes, lights, windshield wipers, cooling and exhaust system.

•Turn on your headlights in storms, as some vehicle colors have a tendency to blend in with the road and cannot easily be seen. Do not use parking lights for driving.

Remember — when you hold a steering wheel, you hold your life and the lives of others in your hands.

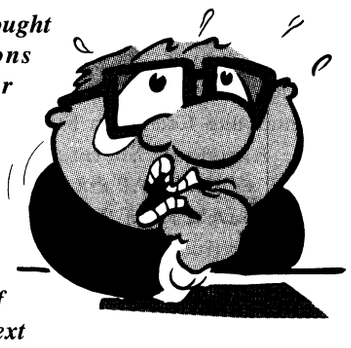
The Northeast Georgia Council of the Boy Scouts of America held a week long High Adventure Expedition at Camp Frank D. Merrill from July 11-16.

Camp Merrill, home of the 5th Ranger Training Battalion, hosted 40 adventure bound scout and venturers between the ages of 13 and 17. Nine Boy Scout leaders headed by Boy Scout District Manager Mike Cavender and nine 5th RTBn cadre led by Company B 1st Sgt. Tom Wilburn instructed, mentored and coached the 40 scouts through various tasks, including knots, rope bridge construction, rappelling, rock climbing and numerous competitions.

"With the days starting at 6 a.m. and ending at 11 p.m., these young adults were as intense as Ranger candidates during their six days,"said Wilburn.



"There are three high adventure bases for Boy Scout venture expeditions in the United States," said Northeast Georgia Troop Leader Mike Rich. "These locations are already booked for the entire 2000 so we try to find alternate adventure sites."

Rich said that Camp Merrill is an excellent location with both expedition sites and logistical facilities concurrently located. He explained that adventure training is designed to build confidence, initiative and leadership in the young scouts.

Wilburn and the eight other cadre from the 5th RTBn were absolutely exceptional in setting the example for the young scouts, he added.

ask the judge

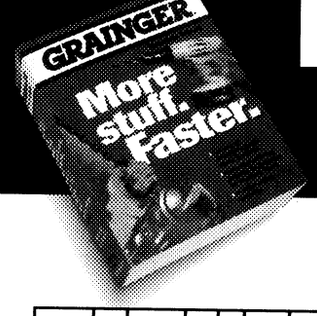
Capt. Brian Bohlen
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: This past weekend I bought some magazine subscriptions from a door-to-door salesperson. The saleswoman smiled at me real nice and said the payments were pretty low, so I signed up. I guess I went a bit overboard because the contract says that I bought $1,200 worth of magazines payable over the next four years. I think I screwed up. What do I do now?

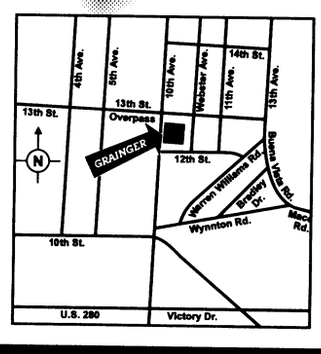
A: We see a lot of Soldiers who regret door-to-door purchases. My advice applies to all door-to-door contracts. The first thing you should do right now is look at the contract for the date you signed it. Now count up the days from when you purchased the merchandise until now but then subtract the date of the sale, Sundays, or Federal Holidays.

If the remaining number of days is three or less, you're in luck. You have a federal right to cancel a door-to-door sales contract by mailing a cancellation notice to the seller's address postmarked by midnight of the third business day after the sale. If you are within this time, you should tear off the bottom portion of the sale contract which bears the "notice of cancellation" section; sign and date it; make a copy of it for your records; and send it registered mail to the seller. If the contract lacks this cancellation section, any written notice to the seller which you sign and which clearly states that you want to cancel the contract is fine.

Do not call the seller to cancel the contract. The federal law you are relying on is only triggered by a written notice of cancellation. Anyway, calling the seller often sidetracks the cancellation process. Just send the letter and it will do the work. You will soon receive confirmation of cancellation from the seller along with a refund of any money you gave them and instructions on how to return the merchandise. The cost of returning the goods is the responsibility of the seller. If you make arrangements for the seller to pick up the merchandise and the seller fails to pick up the goods within 20 days through no fault of yours, you can legally keep the goods as a gift.



For those of you have entered a door-to-door sales contract too long ago to take advantage of the three day right to rescind discussed above, the agreement will be governed by the same rules as with any other contract. We in the Legal Assistance division would be glad to check it out for you. Of course, a legal review of the document is a lot more valuable before you sign it than after you bind yourself by signing.



Thanks for your question. If you need an appointment with the Legal Assistance division about this or any other matter, you can call at 8 a.m. Friday for an appointment for the following week. The numbers are 545-3281 and 545-3282.

TRICARE

Benefits expand to cover cancer prevention trials

Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense

Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness Rudy de Leon, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs Dr. Sue Bailey and Director of the National Cancer Institute Dr. Richard D. Klausner recently announced at the Pentagon that an expanded interagency agreement that enables military beneficiaries to participate in the National Cancer Institute (NCI) cancer prevention trials as a TRICARE benefit.

The Department of Defense has become a wellness pioneer by offering leading-edge cancer prevention programs to its beneficiaries, through the expanded agreement that became effective June 21.

Describing the benefit, Bailey stated, "This agreement will give our at-risk beneficiaries access to some of the most promising advances in cancer research through NCI-sponsored clinical trials throughout the country."

According to Klausner, "This is the first time a health plan has agreed formally to provide coverage for patients to participate in cancer prevention trials. This agreement will become a model for providing access to the best available health care while ensuring that cancer research can continue to make progress."

"To underscore our commitment to wellness and prevention, we feel we must provide reimbursement for clinical trials that offer some of the most promising advances in cancer prevention and treatment research," stated Bailey.

"For some TRICARE beneficiaries with an increased risk of developing cancer, the experimental DoD and NCI Clinical Trials Demonstration Project offers new choices to minimize chances of developing cancer. It is another way to help keep our troops and their families healthy."

The DoD and NCI first combined forces in 1996 with an agreement known as the DoD and NCI Cancer Clinical Trials Demonstration Project, that allowed military beneficiaries with cancer diagnoses to participate in Phase II and Phase III treatment studies sponsored by NCI. Nearly 12,000 military health system beneficiaries are diagnosed with cancer each year, and to date more than 200 family members have participated in these clinical trials. Clinical trials are research studies in which people help doctors find ways to improve health and health care. In cancer prevention trials, participants take medicines or supplements, or take part in certain activities that doctors believe may lower their risk of developing cancer.

Prevention trials are designed to keep cancer from developing in people who have a family history of cancer but do not have cancer, and to prevent a new type of cancer from developing in people who have had cancer. There are also early detection trials to find cancer, especially in the early stages where treatment is most effective.

Finally, these prevention trials include studies to evaluate ways of modifying cancer-causing behaviors, such as tobacco use, poor dietary and exercise habits.

To obtain additional information about cancer prevention, early detection, or treatment trials covered by the DoD and NCI demonstration, interested persons may contact the NCI Cancer Information, 1-800-4-CANCER (1-800-422-6237), or the Demonstration Coordinator, 1-800-779-3060.

Oral health affects pregnancy

Capt. Carla Maxwell
Fort Stewart, Ga., Dental Activity

The old wives' tale that a tooth is lost for every pregnancy is simply not true. While it is true that pregnancy may intensify some dental conditions, misconceptions continue to exist about the effects a woman's pregnancy has on her health and the health of her baby.

As with everyone, tooth decay results from repeated acid attacks on the teeth. A pregnant woman is more susceptible to tooth decay only if she increases her snacking on sugar-rich food and does not maintain good oral hygiene.

Pregnancy gingivitis (gum disease), however, may occur more frequently during pregnancy, due to a rise in the body's hormone levels. The hormonal changes that occur during pregnancy cause the body to have a greater reaction to dental plaque: this results in an increased amount of swelling, bleeding and redness of the gums.

New research suggests a link between gum disease in pregnant women and premature, low-birth-weight babies. The bacteria P. gingivalis is known to be the primary cause of gum infection. This organism can travel via the blood stream to sites far from the mouth, even to the uterus.

P. gingivalis carries substances that can trigger the production of the chemicals called "4 prostaglandins" in the reproductive tract. These prostaglandins are suspected to induce premature labor, which results in low-birth-weight babies.

Since oral health has implications that directly affect pregnancy, it is extremely important that expectant mothers pay close attention to the signs of gum disease. Dental professionals recommend having more frequent dental cleanings during pregnancy.

It is also important for a pregnant woman to maintain a proper daily oral health-care routine that includes brushing and flossing.

Eating a balanced diet during pregnancy is very important for healthy gums. Since the baby's teeth begin to develop between the third and sixth months of pregnancy, it is important for a woman to receive sufficient nutrients, especially vitamins A, C and D, protein, calcium and phosphorus.

Calcium is not lost from the mother's teeth during pregnancy, as some mistakenly believe. The developing baby's need for 400 milligrams of calcium per day is supplied by the mother's diet. If calcium in the mother's diet is inadequate, this mineral will be depleted from the mother's bones.

Concern for the pregnant woman's total health, including oral care, is critical to her unborn baby's development. A woman should continue regular dental visits throughout her pregnancy, but the optimal time for elective treatment is from the fourth through the sixth month of pregnancy.

Windows play vital role in safety

Richard H. Middleton Jr.
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

It's safe to assume that most parents agree that making their homes safe ranks high on the priority list.

What most parents may not know, however, is that "fires and falls of all types are among the leading causes of injury and death in young children," according to the National Safety Council. While windows can be dangerous should a child fall from one, they can also be life saving in the event of a fire. Because windows play a critical role in home safety, it is essential for families to come together and learn window safety.

During fires, windows save lives by providing a route of escape. Fire can be a frightening thing for young children, and they often attempt to hide during a house fire. Tragically, they are often found in these hiding places after a fire occurs. Children need to be taught they cannot hide from fires. Instead, they can and must escape them.

Families should decide on two emergency escape routes from the home. "Windows provide one of the fastest, easiest alternative ways out of a burning home," according to the NSC. Parents should teach their children how to safely and properly escape from windows. Take time to practice with them until they feel comfortable. In the face of disaster, preparation and calmness is key.

Every person in a house should be able to escape through a window without using tools or keys and without needing any special knowledge. Paint, dirt and weathering can often seal a window shut, so make sure they can open easily from inside the home. Never block windows with furniture or any other heavy object. Remember, while security bars, grills and grates can prevent intrusion into your home, they can also prevent escape.

While windows can save lives in unfortunate event of a fire, they can also present a falling danger. In addition to supervising children around windows and closing and locking those which are easily accessible, parents should teach their children how to interact with windows safely and properly.

The following are some helpful window safety tips from the NSC:

•If windows must be open for ventilation, open only those out of the reach of children.

•Keep furniture than can be climbed on away from windows.

•Teach your children not play near windows.

•Don't depend on insect screens to protect your children from falling. Insect screens are designed to keep bugs out. They cannot support the weight of a child.

Window cords also pose a potential danger to children. Kids can strangle in the loops formed by window covering cords. The following are some tips to prevent window cord accidents from the U.S. Consumer Products Safety Commission:

•Cut the window cord above the tassel. Add a safety tassel at the end of each cord.

•For continuous loops on vertical and pleated blinds, install a tie-down device that is secured to the wall or floor.

•Never place a child's bed or crib in arm's reach of a window cord.

•Never put furniture under or near window cords.

For more ways to protect your home and family, contact the National Fire Prevention Association, Department of Public Education, One Batterymarch Park, Quincy, MA 02269-9101. Families can also write the National Safety Council, Community Safety Division, 1121 Sprink Lake Dr., Itasca, IL 60143-3201.

TRIVIA

The term "the whole 9 yards" came from WWII fighter pilots in the Pacific. When arming their airplanes on the ground, the .50 caliber machine gun ammo belts measured exactly 27 feet, before being loaded into the fuselage. If the pilots fired all their ammo at a target, it got "the whole 9 yards."

Values prove to be vital

Chaplain (Capt.) Mickey D. Jett
29th Infantry Regiment

Train a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Proverbs 22:6)

reflections

"As the twig is bent, so grows the tree," is an old aphorism which embodies very basic scriptural and spiritual principles. These teach us that the way a child is influenced early is the bent he or she will take later in their life. Many observers of the violence in our schools are pushing for more gun control laws or more responsibility from Hollywood about the type of films it produces. I am not going to debate the issue of gun control because of its volatile history, but I am advocating that we need to return to passing on values to our children instead of letting Hollywood or anyone else to do that for us.

It is the parents' responsibility to train up their children in the way they should go. But who really has the greatest influence on your children? Where do their values come from? Where are they spending most of their time during the day? I suggest that if our children have faith, it must come from parents who make passing on their faith a priority.

In the Bible, we read that God offers a reward to children who are obedient. "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for it is right. Honor your father and mother" — which is the first commandment with a promise — "that it may go well with you and that you may enjoy long life on the earth." (Ephesians 6:1-3) However, unless mom and dad make passing on their faith a goal, their children will not learn these values.

Being raised in a home where we recognized the goodness of God and were taught how to trust him, my faith was passed on to me from my parents. This was done both by memorization of Scripture and by modeling. My parents lived church. They read the Bible to us children in the home. They practiced what they preached.

Should we pass our faith on to our children? Yes. It is well to teach our children about God. Faith in God gives children a positive, Biblical foundation for living. This is something lacking in many of our youth called "Y" generation.

Those who think it is unfair, because they say their children cannot yet reason for themselves, need only to read Samuel Taylor Coleridge's Table Talk. Here he defends the act of passing on faith to children by using an allegory. "I showed a skeptic my garden, and told him it was my botanical garden. "How so?" said he, "it is covered with weeds. "Oh," I replied, "that is only because it has not yet come to its age of discretion and choice. The weeds, you see, have taken the liberty to grow, and I thought it unfair in me to prejudice the soil towards roses and strawberries."

So, my encouragement to you is to have faith in God. And please, pass that faith on to your children. If you feel you can't because you do not want to prejudice your child's choice; then just look at what children without faith are like. You can either have weeds or a botanical garden. Let us begin growing roses and strawberries in our society.

Parents need to explain divorce to children

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Divorce is never easy, especially when there are children involved. A question that is often asked of me by couples going through a divorce is, "How should we explain divorce to our children."

reflections

It is very important that divorcing parents be honest with their children. Parental divorce is very traumatic for children and most go through a difficult time of adjustment. While some do experience long-term problems most do not. The important factor in all of this is how the divorcing parents can help their children through this most difficult time.

One of the most common feelings children of divorcing parents experience is guilt. As parents we want to shield our children from stress adversity and divorce can bring an abundance of both.

According to Genevieve Clapp in her book, Divorce and New Beginnings, it is good to allow children to encounter stress in doses that are moderate enough for them to handle. She says, "In this way, the stress does not overwhelm them. Instead, it challenges them to learn how to cope with a difficult situation and to master it. If they are successful, they are likely to emerge from the experience with new self-confidence, an increased sense of competence and the ability to successfully handle a greater amount of stress in the future."

Factors to take into consideration is the age of the children, their maturity level and other stress, such as parental divorce, as long as it is not compounded by other stresses or other overwhelming changes.

There may be a need to get some outside help for your children. If this is the case there are many avenues open to you to get help you need. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-2050 for more information.

Tot Town

facility receives honors

Debbie Addison
Directorate of Community Activities

The true test of service excellence begins and ends with the customer, and according to Maj. and Mrs. John Hannah and their 20-month-old daughter Rosa, the personnel at Tot Town provide excellent customer service.

As a result of their service experience at Tot Town over the past year and the desire to express their appreciation to the staff, the Hannah's requested an opportunity to formally recognize the personnel at Tot Town. They also wanted the public to know what a great childcare facility we have at Tot Town.

In responses to their request, the Hannah's participated in a special recognition ceremony at Tot Town on July 9, 1999. The Garrison Manager, Chuck Walls, presented certificates of appreciation to Tot Town personnel. Rebecca Carroll, Chief of the Family Support Division and Jennifer Williams, Fort Benning Child Development Services Coordinator were also present.

Tot Town, one of three childcare centers on Fort Benning, is located on First Division Road, Building. 1051. The center provides hourly care for children six weeks to 12 years old and full day care for children six weeks to two years old. The center is open Monday through Friday from 5:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. and also provides late night services if there are enough reservations and special openings by contract. There are currently 27 employees, some of whom have been employed at Tot Town for more than 26 years.

In describing the excellent customer service provided at Tot Town, Mrs. Hannah stated, "Our 20-month-old daughter Rosa has attended Tot Town for several hours a day for over a year now and has had the pleasure of enjoying the infant room, the pre-toddler room and the toddler room. I have found all the caregivers to be outstanding. The best thing about Tot Town caregivers is that they have a relationship with my child. Backing up the caregivers, the support administrative staff is equally efficient. I also certainly appreciate the Tot Town cook because Rosa can be counted on to eat second helpings at mealtime. I appreciate the staff at the front desk because they they perform many services and administrative functions at once, all with a smile. They do a particularly good job at passing information which no one usually notices. Daily I receive reports of the smallest bits of Rosa's behavior; things one would only expect a parent to notice. As a parent I will definitely miss Tot Town's service when we depart, but I also believe that Rosa herself will miss the interaction she has with the people there."

Chuck Walls, Garrison Manger, also stated that "child care is extremely important but we sometimes forget how important and difficult a job the caregivers have when we entrust our children in their care. So this is truly a great opportunity to recognize everyone for the excellent service they provide to customers and our community."

As the ultimate compliment to Tot Town, Mrs. Hannah stated that she will use Tot Town as the standard for comparing and selecting future childcare services as the Hannah's depart Fort Benning for Fort Carson, Colo. She also stated that even though the facility receives national certification and accreditation, the true test is that they are happy to leave their daughter at Tot Town when they need to.

Employees receiving special recognition include:

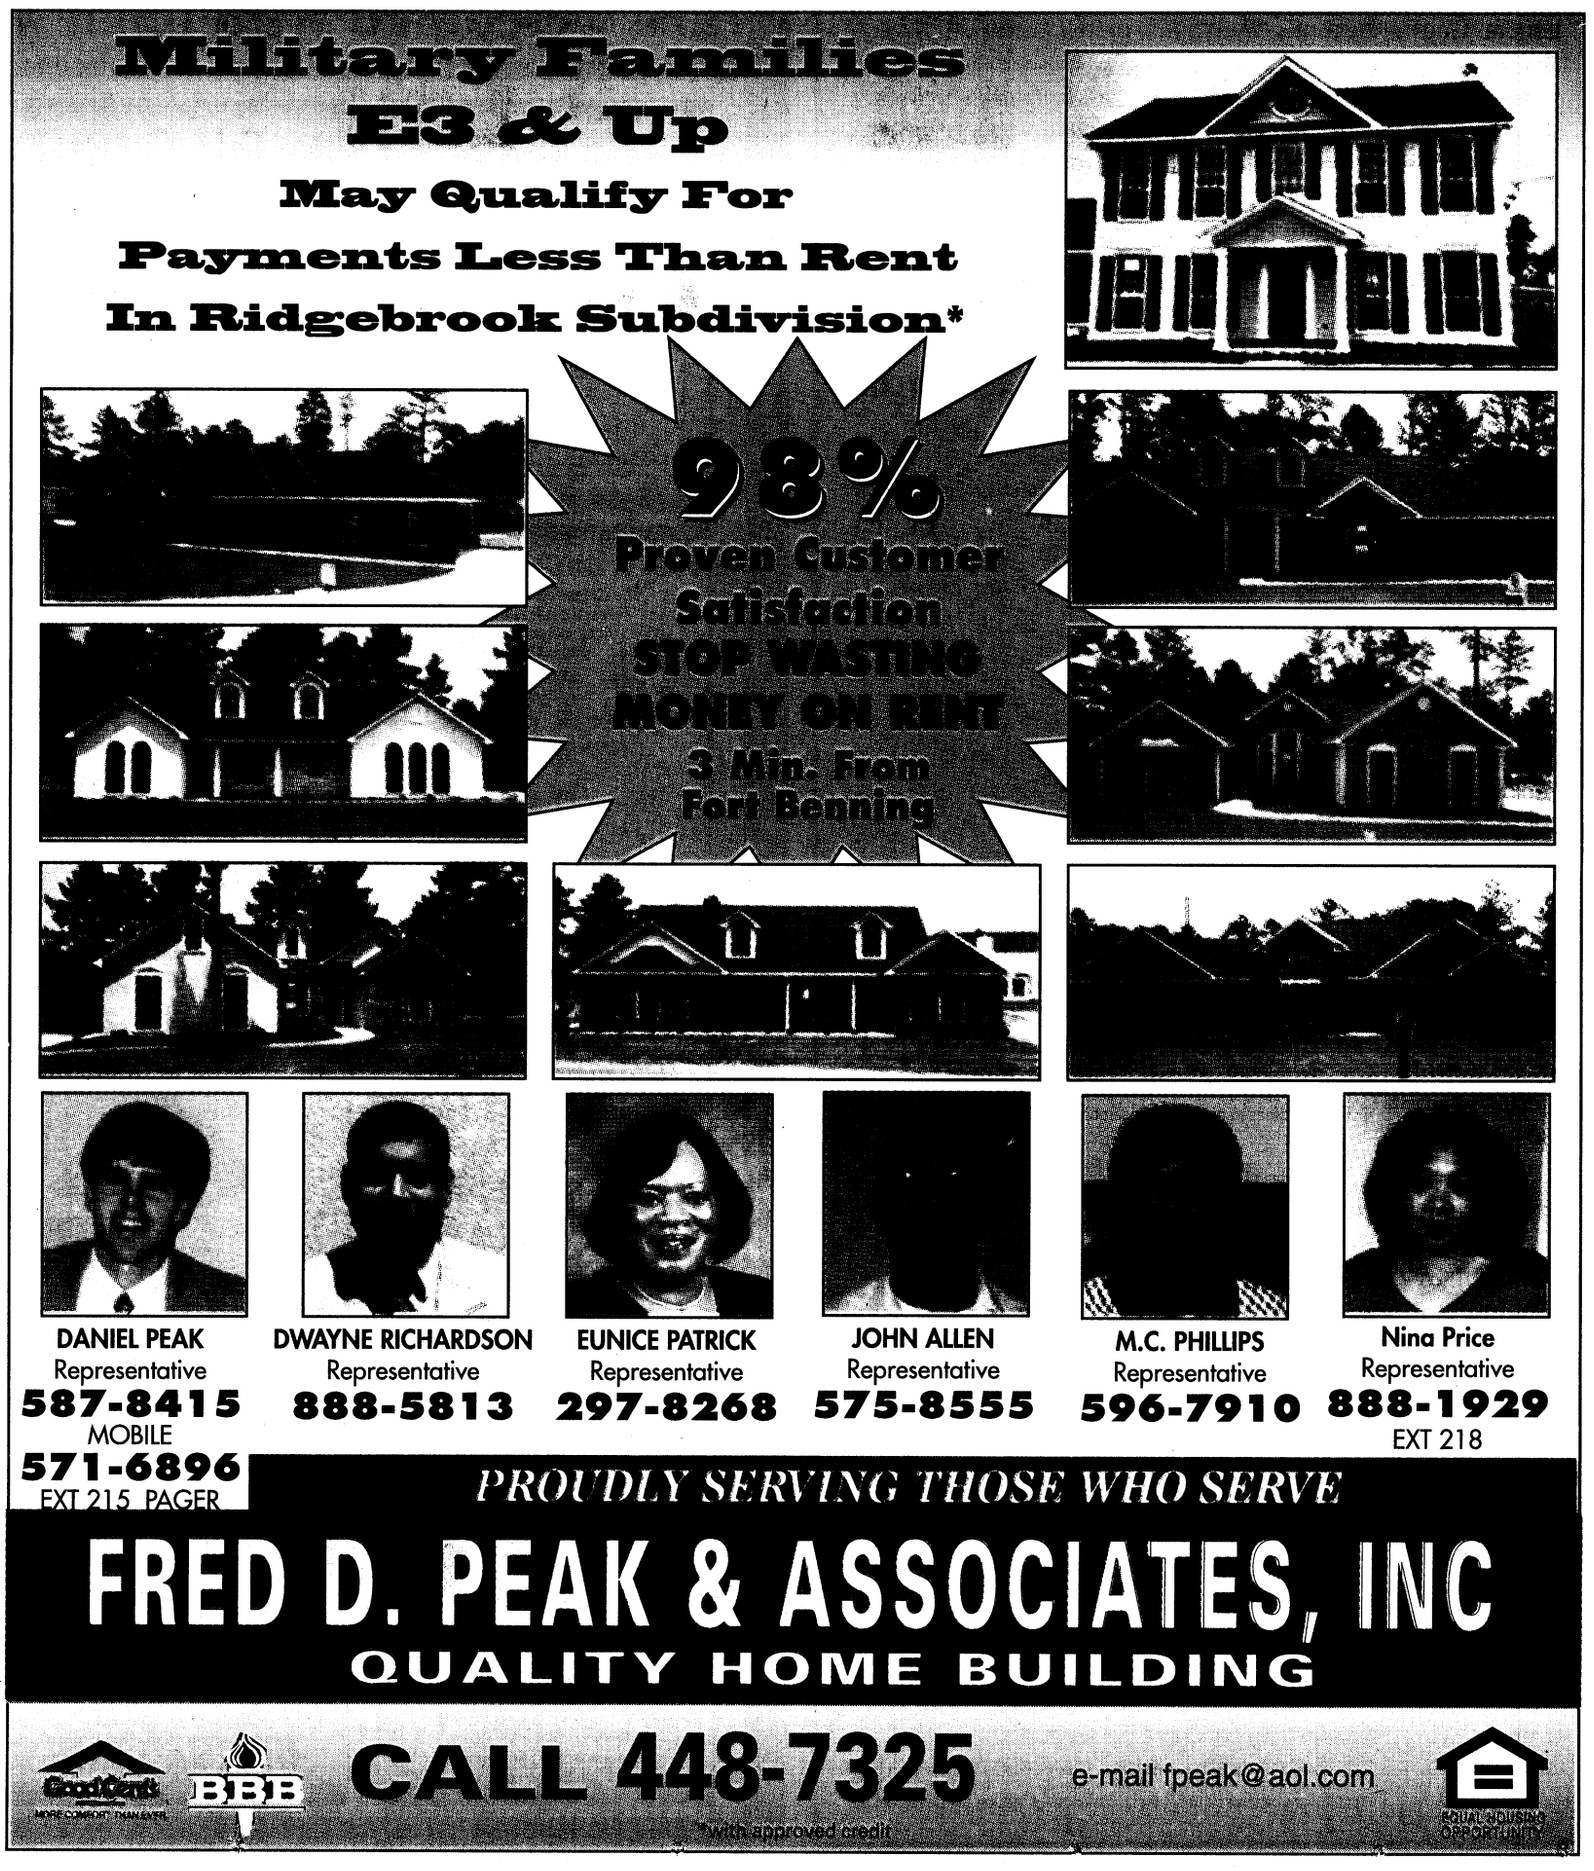
•Leda Brown, director of Tot Town

•Thomas E. Pope, cook

•Bettie Harris, training and curriculum specialist

•Margit Smalls, clerk

•Janice Watkins, clerk



•Gladwyn Jones, custodian

•Caregivers: Shirley T. Allen, Jeannette M. Pistol team takes top honors

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Pistol Team kept its National Service Pistol Championship title by winning the National Trophy Pistol Team Match for the second year in a row, despite losing three of its top shooters from last year.

The team of Stephen M. King, Roger C. Jacobson, Thomas A. Rose and Adam E. Sokolowski, coached by Charles E. Gibbs, won the championship at the National Trophy Pistol Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, July 19, all shooting the USAMU's modified M-9 pistol.

Gibbs said that it felt great winning the Service Pistol Team Match.

"The National Championships turned out to be an excellent competition," Gibbs said. "The best part of this competition was going up against the best teams in the country."

According to Gibbs, the USAMU Team shot well throughout the championships, and they did it in all types of weather including very windy conditions, heavy rain and high heat and humidity.

"The service pistol shooters are all hard-working individuals who make up a strong team," said USAMU Service Pistol Team Head Coach Ray Arrendondo, a 1988 Olympic pistol shooter. "The team works well together, always assisting each other in team development. I am very proud of their effort to succeed and am very fortunate to have such motivated and dedicated Soldiers who strive to be the best."

According to the shooters, the M-9 pistol, which is built and modified by the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop, is the key to victory for the Army team.

"The improvements to the M-9 have helped us to excel," said Jacobson.

"The enhancements made to the trigger system from the standard M-9 sees like moving from a jalopy to a top-fuel dragster in a race."

The medal count continues to mount for Army athletes at the XIII Pan American Games, thanks to Brett Weatherbie's silver medal finish in the Modern Pentathlon July 31.

Weatherbie, a member of the U.S. Army World Class Athletes Program, Fort Carson, Colo., took second place in the Pentathlon, coming in just 97 points behind the gold medal winner, teammate Velizar Iliev of the U.S.

Weatherbie placed first in shooting, fifth in fencing, first in swimming, eighth in riding and second in running. His final score was 5,202.

"This is just my third year competing and my second year internationally," Weatherbie said, competing in his first Pan Am Games.

"It takes a long time; Velizar's been doing it for about 15 years. Simple mistakes like I made on the horse today are things that you learn through the years. I made some mistakes today and he had a great day. He definitely deserved it. Coming in, I had to have him do something wrong to take that spot."

Iliev's performance aside, Weatherbie still came very close to winning the gold. His strong finishes in shooting, swimming and running kept the entire competition a close heat between Weatherbie, Iliev and Sergio Salazar of Mexico, the bronze medal winner.

"My weakest event is the fence," Weatherbie said. "I've been working really hard and trying to get as much experience on that as I can. I went to the world championships two weeks ago, and after two events in the shoot I was in fifth. But after fencing, I dropped to 17th. It's one of those things that just takes time."

"With the Pentathlon, you're always in it. You never know; the ride can change things at the drop of the hat. You have to expect that and try to get past it," he said.

In the riding event, Weatherbie's performance was nearly flawless, up until the very last obstacle. His horse refused to take the final triple jump of the ride, ruining its rider's chance to finish the ride without any penalties.

"I was really focused the whole ride; coming into jump 11," Weatherbie said. "I wanted to stay focused and get over it because it was a tricky turn, and I kind of let

Capt. Christopher Rizzo, a student at the Infantry Captain's Career Course, swept the competition July 30 as he ran past nearly 40 other Soldiers during Fort Benning's 1999 Army 10-Miler pre-qualifier.

Rizzo logged 10 consecutive sub-six minute miles to take the event in 58:25.

According to race organizers, the race was held to prepare potential runners for the Army 10-Miler qualification race slated to be held later this month.

Fitness school offers advice on physical training

Ed Thomas, Ed.D.
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

Many of you have responded by e-mail and telephone to my articles here in The Bayonet or Soldiers magazine. I also write for Tae Kwon Do Times, Physical Educator and a few others. The topic is usually human movement, and the message is almost always the same. I believe that although mediocrity by its nature attempts to destroy that which is beyond it, the human mind is capable of reaching above its own ignorance to a higher ground. American physical culture is philosophically bankrupt, and the Army could and should lead the way in its renewal.

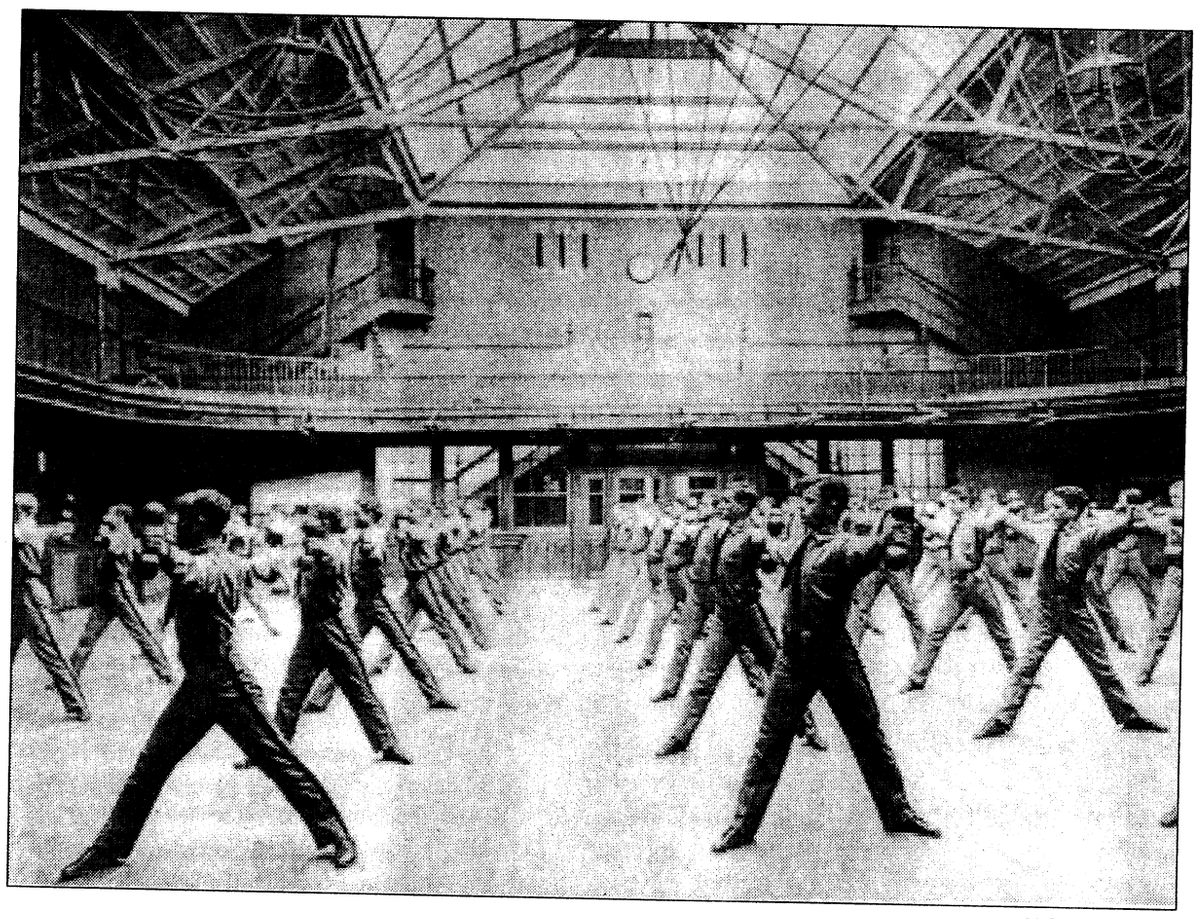
The insightful comments you send to me are proof that the majority is ready for more rational physical readiness training (PRT) and capable of recognizing it. The issue is whether logic will prevail in time. Fixing PRT will be very difficult during the next war, and Army PRT has a history of peacetime mediocrity. There have also been times when the Army led the way in physical training.



Today's Army warrior can show this nation what rational physical training looks like. It will take some change, but the PRT paradigm is always shifting anyway. At close of business each day, the Army is more or less physically prepared for battle. Decisions made at the unit level pertaining to PRT create subtle readiness changes that add up to the total force readiness condition. We change each day. The challenge is to make remarkable progress in the right direction.

I recommend that commanders and NCOs attack the PRT issue on two fronts. First, visit the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) website and stay informed. The on-post web address at Fort Benning is www.benning.army.mil/usapfs. The off-post address is http://www-benning.army.mil/usapfs. Go to the Physical Training link and download Army dumbbell drills number one and two. The price per Soldier for a set of dumbbells is around $8. Men need no more than a total of 20 pounds and women should be able to handle a total of 16 pounds.

Mass dumbbell training is only one of many powerful but forgotten training methods developed by warriors in the past. You might instinctively realize what these drills can do, but you will be much better prepared to explain their value to others by investing a little time in the study of background information. Email me at thomase@benning.army.mil to discuss safety and equipment issues.

Secondly, join our email discussion group, and get a jump on tomorrow's PRT doctrine. FM 21-20 is simply a guide. Only your imagination and expertise limit PRT. Numerous units are already thinking outside the box. Climb up a little higher and take a look.

Editor's Note: Thomas is an Instructional Systems Specialist in the Doctrine Division of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School. He is a Fulbright Scholar and physical educator with over 25 years of teaching experience at numerous institutions including The University of Iowa, Emory University, Northern Illinois University, Upper Iowa University, and Troy State University. Thomas served in the Infantry from 1967-69. His email address is thomase@benning.army.mil. Phone him at DSN 835-6387 or commercial 706-545-6387.

West point cadets practice mass dumbbell training at the turn of the century to improve physical fitness and combat readiness. The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School has recently worked with numerous units to redevelop mass unit dumbbell training drills for future use throughout the Army. "No mas, no mas!"

Those were the words Roberto Duran uttered to referee Octavio Mayren during the eighth round of his second skirmish with Sugar

commentary

Ray Leonard Nov. 25, 1980 in New Orleans.

Those same words came to mind when I first heard of the Legends of Boxing gimmick, for fighters 35 years of age and older, which was conjured up by its inaugural loser — James "Bonecrusher" Smith.

Smith was stopped by Larry Holmes, the "Easton Assassin," in the eighth round June 19 at the Crown Coliseum in Fayetteville, N.C.

The fight promoter for the escapade was former North Carolina State basketball star Cozell McQueen.

Yes, you heard me right — a former hoopster.

What would he know about boxing anyway?

Has the sweet science sunken so low that they need to pull their ancient iron horses out from pasture and put them back on the race track?

Is there still hope that a glimpse of what these legends once were in their heyday will again shine — putting a gleam in the eyes of a once devout boxing following?

A following that, for good reason, has gone from riches to rags within the last decade.

Let's take Mike Tyson for example.

Once upon a time, he was noted for being the youngest pugilist to ever wear the heavyweight crown. Now he's noted for being the only heavyweight to spend more time in jail then my 2-year-old's finger spends up his nose.

And what about ... well, actually no one else really comes to mind.

Sure, you've got George Forman, who, with all due respect, belongs in the legends category at age 50. And of course there's Evander Holyfield, and Oscar De La Hoya.

All great boxers, but it takes two to really motivate Michael Buffer's infamous proclamation: "Let's get ready to rumble!"

Corbett had Sullivan, Robinson had LaMotta, Ali had Frizzier, and Leonard, Duran, Hagler, and Hearns all had each other.

Due to a lack of headline fighters, today's "respectable" undercards have been reduced to Eric "Butterbean" Esch versus John Doe and former Playboy model Mia St. John versus Jane, in a desperate freak show-attempt to bring the masses back to ringside.

I don't know about you, but I'm not falling for it.

Sure, I'll watch it. But you're talking to a guy who grew up idolizing the three stooges and when given the choice between counting the dots on his office ceiling tiles and watching a WNBA game, might even consider watching the lay-up queens.(On second thought, maybe I'll just take a nap.)

Going out on top is what makes the great ones legends. Wouldn't it be nice to remember them that way?

AMU: Shooters win

M-9 pistol is quickly gaining ground as a competitive pistol," Arrendondo said. "The success could not have happened without the help of the gunsmiths who built the guns."

Sokolowski became the first Army shooter to win the National Trophy Individual Pistol Match in 16 years when he beat nearly 550 of the country's best pistol shooters to win the best Service Pistol Shooter title and brought home the General Custer Trophy. He also won the US Army Forces Command Trophy for being the Army's best shooter in both the individual and team matches. And he did it despite this being his first year shooting the M-9.

"The M-9 is a very good pistol," Sokolowski said. "I like it better than the .45 because it has less recoil and gives me more time to center on the target during rapid fire. Since I joined the Service Pistol Team, my rapid fire scores have increased from the mid 260's to sometimes breaking the 290 mark."

Other USAMU shooters recognized in the National trophy Individual Pistol Match included Jacobson, who finished only 1 point behind Sokolowski, Jason A. Sargent and Gibbs who received Gold Medals, King, Rose, and Travis A. Jorgenson who were awarded Silver Medals, and Gregory S. Wilson and William R. Cale who got Bronze medals.

Sokolowski, who joined the unit in March, also finished fifth in the President's Pistol Match; other USAMU shooters making the Presidents Hundred included King, Rose, Jacobson, Jorgenson, Sargent, Gibbs and Wilson.

According to Sokolowski, confidence is what gave him the edge in the National Matches.

"I knew I had the ability and went up there knowing that I'd do well," he said.

Sokolowski said that his confidence comes from a lot of practice and the Army helping him develop his technique.

"It all comes down to the fundamentals and making sure you apply them correctly," the 20-year-old said. "Since I've joined the Army team, I've become much more consistent by learning how to shoot the same way every time."

In the NRA National Pistol Championships, July 15 to 18, in which more than 700 shooters competed, King brought home the Bronze Medal; he was also named to the U.S. Mayleigh cup Team for his excellent scores in the slow-fire portions of the .22-Caliber Matches.

The Mayleigh Cup Team, which competes against other teams from around the world, is made up of the 10 best slow-fire shooters in the U.S.

This event's very challenging course of fire consists of 30 shots at a silver-dollar-sized target half a football field away. King also finished second out of 735 competitors in the Center Fire Slow Fire Match.

Sokolowski won the NRA National Junior Pistol Championship for the second year in a row after winning the High Junior Title in all 12 matches in which he competed.

the horse die underneath me. I didn't realize I didn't have enough tempo until I was over the first jump, and by then it's too late. I tried but it was too little, too late. It's something to take in stride and learn from."

Had Weatherbie taken a gold medal, he would have qualified to compete in the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.Elsewhere, in boxing, Army fighter Corey Bernard took to the ring for the first time in Pan Am competition, dominating Elkena Saunders of the Bahamas.

Bernard, a light welterweight (139/63kg) pulled through to give the U.S. a victory after the team suffered two early losses on the night. Bernard scored continually with straight lefts and controlled the bout until it was stopped on the retirement of his opponent 58 seconds into the fourth round.

"I felt a little tense going in since it was my first bout," said Bernard, also a member of the WCAP at Fort Carson. "Also we (the U.S. team) had taken two tough losses so I knew that the win for tonight rested on my shoulders. I figured I was going to stop him (Saunders) in the fourth round — I felt it — but his corner threw in the towel. If I hadn't been so tense I think the fight would have been easier for me.

"I'm glad my first fight's done with," he said. "Now I can settle in and concentrate on winning the rest of my fights."

Bernard will face Mexico's Jorge Padilla next in the quarterfinals August 2.

Elsewhere, Army athletes Jeffrey Kunard and Michael Thornberry helped the USA Men's Team Handball squad come from behind to defeat Canada 22-20 in their opening match of the Pan Am Games. The U.S. trailed Canada for most of the game until they surged with eight minutes remaining in the contest.

The U.S. faces Puerto Rico Aug. 1 and Argentina Aug. 3.

THE ULTIMATE INTERNATIONAL CAREER

For the extraordinary individual who wants more than just a job, this is a unique career — a way of life that will challenge the deepest resources of your intelligence, self-reliance, and responsibility. It demands an adventurous spirit, a forceful personality, superior intellectual ability, toughness of mind, and a high degree of personal integrity, courage, and love of country. You will need to deal with fast-moving, ambiguous, and unstructured situations that will test your resourcefulness to the utmost.

This is the Clandestine Service of the CIA. We are the cutting edge of American intelligence, an elite corps providing the vital information needed by our policy makers to address the national security interests of the American people. We face new challenges every day, in a world filled with increasingly complex issues. Ours is a mission like no other.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

We are currently hiring officers for the Clandestine Service Trainee Program to serve internationally in two career tracks. Operations Officers spearhead our intelligence collection efforts and are actively involved in seeking new sources of information. Collection Management Officers coordinate our intelligence collection efforts and disseminate the product to U.S. government consumers.

The Clandestine Service has a second program, the Professional Trainee Program, for recent college graduates. Upon successful completion of this program, a Professional Trainee will be considered for the Clandestine Service Trainee Program.

The Clandestine Service Trainee Program is only one of several opportunities with the CIA. Maximum age for entry into the Clandestine Service Trainee Program is 35. U.S. citizenship is required. Both positions also require a minimum of a bachelor's degree with an excellent academic record. Outstanding interpersonal skills, the ability to write clearly and accurately, and a strong interest in foreign affairs are also necessities. A graduate degree — with specific study in physical, chemical, or biological sciences, international business or law, telecommunications, or computer technology — international residency, foreign language skills, and military experience are given strong emphasis in selecting competitive candidates. All selected applicants must successfully complete a thorough medical and psychological evaluation, a polygraph examination, and an extensive background investigation.

The CIA is an equal opportunity employer and a drug-free work force. We represent America and we want to be representative of America.

To apply for the Directorate of Operations, forward your resume and a cover letter, including your college GPA, to: CST Division, PO Box 12002, Dept. RAFBB0899, Arlington, VA 22209; or FAX to CST Division: (703) 613-7871.

Competitive candidates for the Directorate of Operations will be contacted within 45 days.

If interested in U.S.- based positions in the fields of Computer Science and Engineering with the CIA, send your resume via FAX to (703) 613-7884, ATTN: DS&T.

Barracks funding suffers hit

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

A program slated to improve the living conditions for Soldiers stationed on Kelley Hill suffered a hit late last month in Washington as the $47 million project was cut by more than one half.

The program, originally designed to build nearly 400 barracks spaces, four battalion headquarters buildings and 12 company operations offices for the Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), suffered the cut as the political machine of the House and Congress met for approval of the Military Construction Appropriation Bill.

According to Kenneth Holloway, master planner at Fort Benning's Directorate of Resource Management, if passed the bill would have netted Benning the appropriate funding for the proposed barracks and auxiliary buildings. But a squabble between the House and Senate forced the cool $47 million needed out in the cold.

"The military subcommittees on both sides, the House and the Senate, looked like they were going to approve the bill," Holloway said. "but once they got together to vote, the bill was cut."

The $25 million cut immediately sparked questions about the possibility of the project even staying alive after the cut, sending officials scrambling to find a way to keep the project afloat.

"We had to look at what we had and what we could do with the money we were to have," he said. "We have buildings that lie within the footprint (the location of the new building) of the main barracks part of the project, so we knew we had to take care of them first."

He explained those buildings, the company operations buildings and the battalion headquarters buildings, presently lie where the new barracks will be located and must first have a new location to move to before being torn down. "We had to include them (the support buildings) in the earliest part of the project as possible, because they have to be moved before anything else can he started," Holloway said.

Those buildings will be joined by at least 72 barracks spaces, a Soldier community facility along with sidewalks and parking lots, according to presently revamped construction plans.

While Holloway said the dramatic decrease in funding for the first year of the project did require some altering of plans, he noted that if the additional $26 million is made available in fiscal year 2001, the project would suffer no ill effects.

"We have applied for the additional $26 million in funding for the following fiscal year, and if we get it, the project will continue on without interruption," he said. "But we don't know if that will happen."

While Holloway said he cannot be sure on the availability of the $26 million for the project, Doug Graham, a spokesman for U.S. Representative Mac Collins, said he feels "reasonably confident" that the money will be made available.

"There are tons of military projects that are not all paid in one swoop," he said. "It is tough to fund such a big project all at once while supporting a large defense deployment budget."

While neither Holloway nor Graham gave an exact date of notification on the additional $26 million, Holloway did say that contracts for the fiscal year are issued six to eight months before the fiscal year, which begins in October.

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

With recent cuts in project funding, barracks construction projects like these may run out of funding next year without congressional support.

Soldiers return from Kuwait

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

More than 900 Soldiers will return from Kuwait beginning Saturday after spending more than four months in the Middle East as part of Operation Intrinsic Action.

The first wave of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Soldiers will be welcomed home at 11 a.m. Saturday at Lawson Army Airfield with a welcome-back celebration hosted by post command staff and the Infantry Band.

The second and third returning flights will arrive at LAA at 11 a.m. Monday and Tuesday. Soldiers, family members and friends are welcome to greet the Soldiers at Hangar 301 where a welcome ceremony will be held upon the Soldiers' arrival. The returning party will then move to the Kelley Hill Recreation Center where additional festivities are planned.

3rd Brigade units that participated in the deployment include the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, which headquartered the task force; 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment; 203rd Personnel Support Battalion; and 317th Engineer Battalion.

For complete coverage of the event, pick up next week's edition of The Bayonet.

Ordnance company keeps community safe

789th responds to explosive calls throughout the South

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

When the phone rings at Staff Sgt. Wendell Murphy's house, he never knows if this call is going to be the call that has him saying good morning to an old friend or sends him racing to bomb-ridden buildings from Fort Benning to Florida.

Murphy is not a super hero or part of an elite government clandestine operative. He is one of 20 personnel assigned to Fort Benning's 789th Ordnance Company, a small group of highly trained men and women who respond to explosive ordnance disposal calls throughout the cities and towns of Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

Their mission is to neutralize ordnance safely and rapidly and make it home so they will be able to get up the next day to do it all over again.

"It's a challenge," Murphy said when asked about his job as an explosive ordnance team leader. "It is a job unlike any other, because here there are no limits and no rules for the other guy to play by. They are only limited to their imagination, and I have to be able to interpret that and decide how to safely neutralize the situation."

The game of constant interpretation and planning is one that keeps Murphy and his cohorts alive, but is also a factor in keeping the unit together as they tackle taskings from not only Fort Benning's various agencies but from local, state and federal law enforcement officials as well.

Within the past fiscal year, the unit has responded to 156 incidents from those various agencies ranging from home-made explosive devices to unexploded ordnance found while clearing one of the post's hundreds of acres of ranges. So how does a unit of 20 tackle such a demanding schedule?

"It is just a matter of planning," said 789th Company Commander Capt. Kevin Finch about the company's rigorous training and tasking schedule. "We have to be able to be flexible in our training schedules and be versatile in what we do when we aren't answering calls for assistance."

While the unit maintains an intense training schedule to be able to respond with competency to any ordnance call, the Soldiers must also be able to make a shift from training to tasking within minutes.

Photos by Pfc. Mitch Frazier

EOD Technician Staff Spc. Clifford Rahminas assembles a disposal device during a training exercise Tuesday.

"All of our Soldiers know they have to be flexible," Finch said. "As a training exercise is going on, we might get a call from the Secret Service that requires a group of Soldiers to be in Washington within 24 hours. It is a job that requires all of the team to be able to change at a moment's notice."

That ability to change momentarily applies to this select group of Soldiers jobs as well.

"You never know what it is exactly that you are going to face once you start an incident," Murphy said. "You can train for what you think is going to happen and what can happen, but there are never any two incidents alike. That is where we as EOD techs have to be able to think on our feet and maintain that flexibility in our process."

For the Soldiers of the unit, facing this constant flexibility and challenge is not something they were forced to do. This unit is comprised of 100 percent volunteers from occupational specialities from around the Army.

Sgt. 1st Class Marshon Anderson, a master EOD technician assigned to the unit, was a personnel specialist before coming into the career field more than 14 years ago.

"I was a personnel admin specialist assigned to an EOD unit, and almost all of my primary duties were behind a desk," he said. "The EOD personnel assigned were always on the road in support of one mission or another, and I wanted to do the same."

Master EOD Technician Sgt. 1st Class Marshon Anderson and EOD Tech Staff Sgt. Brian Gentry discuss the proper procedure for disposing of a homemade explosive device during the Tuesday exercise.

"I talked to the techs and eventually put my packet in, and here I am today," he said.

If Soldiers are thinking about making the switch to the bomb squad like Anderson did, Finch noted that requirements must be met.

"We are looking for a mature Soldier with a record of doing well, a high GM score and the ability to work within a small group," he said. "We are looking for Soldiers who are interested in a challenging career field."

To find out more about joining the ranks of Fort Benning's elite squad, call EOD at 545-4154.

Do BDUs really belong in an office?

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Let's not kid ourselves, these BDU's we don every morning aren't the most comfortable things in the world to wear, but I really don't think comfort was a real big concern when they were designed and rightfully so.

commentary

These uniforms weren't necessarily meant to be worn in an office-type environment like they are today. These battle dress uniforms were designed for exactly what their name implies — battle.

So I guess it is kind of difficult for me to say I think the uniform should be changed because to tell you the truth, I have never been to battle. I have never even spent much time in the field other than basic training. So perhaps I just might not have the background to fully appreciate this uniform that sees more starch and hot irons than mud and sand.

That is another thing that kinda gets to me about the whole office-BDU thing. Now really, these camouflage suits have what, like 10 pockets in them, yet we aren't supposed to use them in fear of breaking the starch. It seems to me that a cargo pocket was probably named cargo pocket for a reason — maybe because it was designed to carry cargo?

The whole thing really blows my mind now that I sit back and think about it. I can completely understand wearing this uniform to the field, well at least it makes sense based upon my knowledge of the topic. I am still a little clueless about wearing this in an office-type setting though.

It isn't that I am yearning for something else to wear or trying to stir up some heat, heaven knows it is hot enough around here without me doing that. It's just how much sense does it make for a finance clerk to be in BDUs? Will he be going to the forest to fight the bad guy. No, not today — not at Fort Benning. These Soldiers are office-living individuals with no need to be camouflaged from the enemy. They are not in battle or handing out the finance statements on a battlefield, so why are they in a battle dress uniform? Hmmmm ...

Is there a need for another uniform, and if so, who would pay for this new office uniform?

It wasn't that long ago that the Army did have such a creature, and I'm sure some of you old-timers who were serving before I was born know exactly what I am talking about — the khakis.

I've talked to a couple of those guys who served in the khaki crew, and while they said it wasn't the best thing, it did look professional and oddly enough they said the light brown suit wasn't that uncomfortable.

I don't have the answers to any of the questions, but I think they at least warrant some thought. We don't send all of our troops to battle identically outfitted, so should we send all of our troops to work every day outfitted the same regardless of where they work? It is hard to say. Do we stay with an Army-wide BDU policy, or do we develop a uniform for office work and one for the field, so both will remain in better condition and more appropriately reflect the task at hand?

There is no real answer for these questions, but time and money like anything else will tell the story in the future.

May your irons be hot and your starch not run out.

Life today is better than 100 years ago

Spc. Christopher Porter
Fort Stewart Public Affairs Office

So, we're on the verge of ringing in the year 2000. While it's hotly contested whether or not the new millennium begins next year, I have a slightly larger gripe.

commentary

Basically, I want my flying car.

As a child, I remember looking ahead at 2000 with at least some awe. Surely, I thought, the amazing world of the future would certainly be a fun place to live in. Everything could be done with the touch of a button, Jetson-style. Glistening city skylines would feature buildings a mile tall. Postcards from Grandma and Grandpa would arrive from their vacation home on the Moon. Friends and family were brought closer together by that amazing invention, the video phone. Seven-course dinners would arrive in the form of small capsules. Robotic manservants would cook and clean, giving us humans a much-needed break. Everyone had wrist communicators.

Of course, above this futuristic utopia, flying cars would swoop and loop delivering their passengers to a Pan-Galactic Mall in the blink of an eye.

Sadly, these advancements haven't arrived. How could we have been so mistaken? As far back as the 1950's, expositions were held around the globe, heralding the "World of Tomorrow"that would be ushered in with the new century.

The large, domed biospheres and floating cities are nowhere to be found. The mighty space armadas are still mothballed. The worldwide network of space stations above our planet aren't even in the planning stages.

There were even "bad futures" pictured in the movies. Always a dark place, these post-apocolyptic nightmares always featured killer robots or corrupt officials and lots of laser guns.

Even one of the most famous science-fiction books to date, 2001: A Space Odyssey is a pipe dream. Written in the 1960's, Dave and Hal's voyage to Saturn (which was their destination in the original novel, not Jupiter) has hardly been thought of by NASA scientists. We haven't even been to the moon in years. Besides, even when our computers talk to us, they end up sounding like tiny, emotionless idiots.

Most of these fantasies are the products of writers' imaginations. It was in the comics and the movies that these fantastic visions came to be. But more and more, some of the fiction is becoming a reality.

Despite the serious lack of flying cars, technology has advanced by leaps and bounds, especially in the last 10 years or so.

Instead of the clunky stadium-sized computers of yesterday, sleek purring machines sit on our desktop, ready to whisk us away to the world wide web.

Tiny microchips, no larger than the period at the end of this sentence, help power electronic brains that can solve billions of equations per second.

Instead of waiting months for that letter from your sweetheart overseas, e-mail can send your love notes around the planet in seconds.

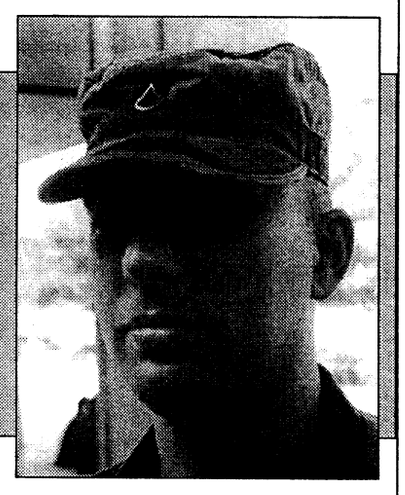
While we're not on our way to other stars, the world's first international space station is taking shape in orbit above us. No, it's not the starship Enterprise by any stretch of the imagination, but it's a start.

Medical science has really progressed. Two diseases that terrified the world earlier this century, polio and smallpox, have been cured. Even more cures are on the way. We've even cloned livestock.

Think of weather forecasting. Residents of Galveston, Texas in 1900 were really surprised one morning to wake up and discover a hurricane bearing down on them. Now, we know about hurricanes a week or so out, drastically reducing the death count.

Music certainly has changed. Instead of the large symphonic suites of Beethoven or Bach, we have the hard driving rock tunes of Billy Joel or "Weird Al" Yankovic. I suppose the reason we don't have flying cars and robotic manservants is because we really don't need them. After all, necessity is the mother of invention. But, it would be nice to have a flying car. Traffic jams wouldn't exist.

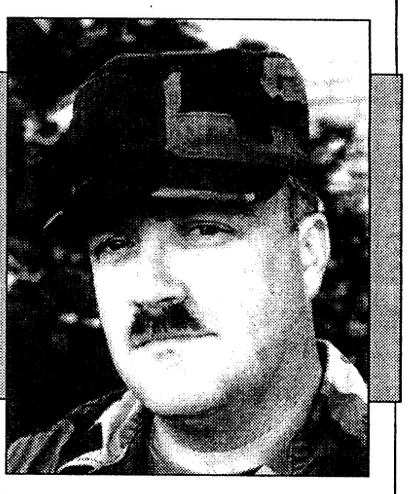
Certainly, life today is much better than it was 100 years ago. It's true, you won't see a flying car for a while. But despite all this, we have a nice planet here. Just look around. We're living in the "World of Tomorrow."



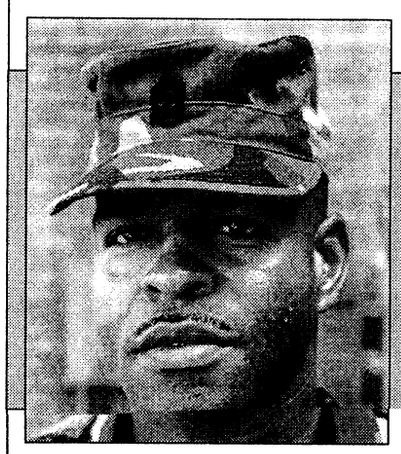
In the year 3000, we probably won't be able to recognize the place. Will Y3K bug be a problem? I suppose we'll find out then.

VARIOUS VOICES

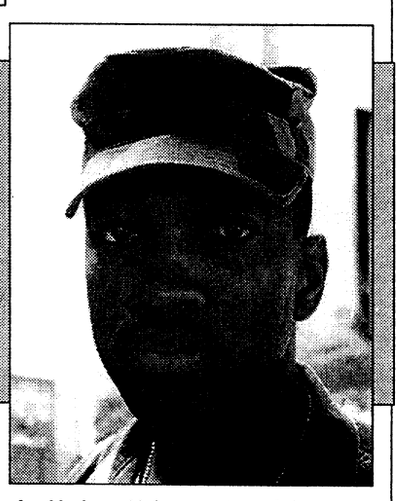
If you could change one thing about the Army uniform, what would it be?



Pfc. Thomas Richmond, Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "I don't think I would change a thing. It would be nice on some things, but it would cost so much it wouldn't be worth it."



Pfc. Seth Hanel, Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "I wish they would bring back the authorization to buy green jungle boots. I think they look good with the uniform."



Pfc. Tim Scharnitzke, Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "It would be nice if we had something just a little cooler. Even the summer BDUs we have now are hot."

Sgt. 1st Class David Bloch, 415th Civil Affairs — "I think shorts would be nice. After spending some time with some other countries, I can definitely see the advantage."

1st Sgt. Castlo Rivers, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade— "It is fine just the way it is."

Sgt. Larry Brown, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "The uniform is pretty good. We have uniforms for all climates. So I think we are pretty well covered."

Defense Department prescribes new pharmacy system

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

Rising costs and concerns for patient safety and health have led the Department of Defense to redesign its pharmacy system.

Defense health officials already were concerned about inconsistencies in the pharmacy benefit when the General Accounting Office reviewed the system in 1998. The GAO called for a more coordinated system that controls costs and makes prescription drugs safer and more evenly available at military treatment facilities, through the DOD National Mail Order Pharmacy and at retail pharmacies in networks under TRICARE, the defense managed health care plan. Congress then asked DOD to come up with a new system.

"There was a concern that we develop consistency across-the-board in our pharmacy programs," said Mary Gerwin, deputy assistant secretary of defense for health program integration and senior adviser to the defense health chief.

For example, if patients get their prescriptions filled at military treatment facilities or by mail order, it costs the system less because DOD has access to Federal Ceiling Prices with the drug manufacturers, Gerwin said.

"Whereas, if beneficiaries get their drugs at the retail level, it could cost the military health system 24 percent to 70 percent more for the exact same drugs."

The problem is further compounded by the lack of standard, system-wide drug availability or formularies.

"A drug available at one military treatment facility isn't necessarily carried at another one," she said. "We've asked Congress for a uniform formulary. These are 'preferred drugs.' Let's say you've got a medication for heart disease, and several drugs provide the same benefits. We want all our pharmacies to carry at least one of those preferred drugs."

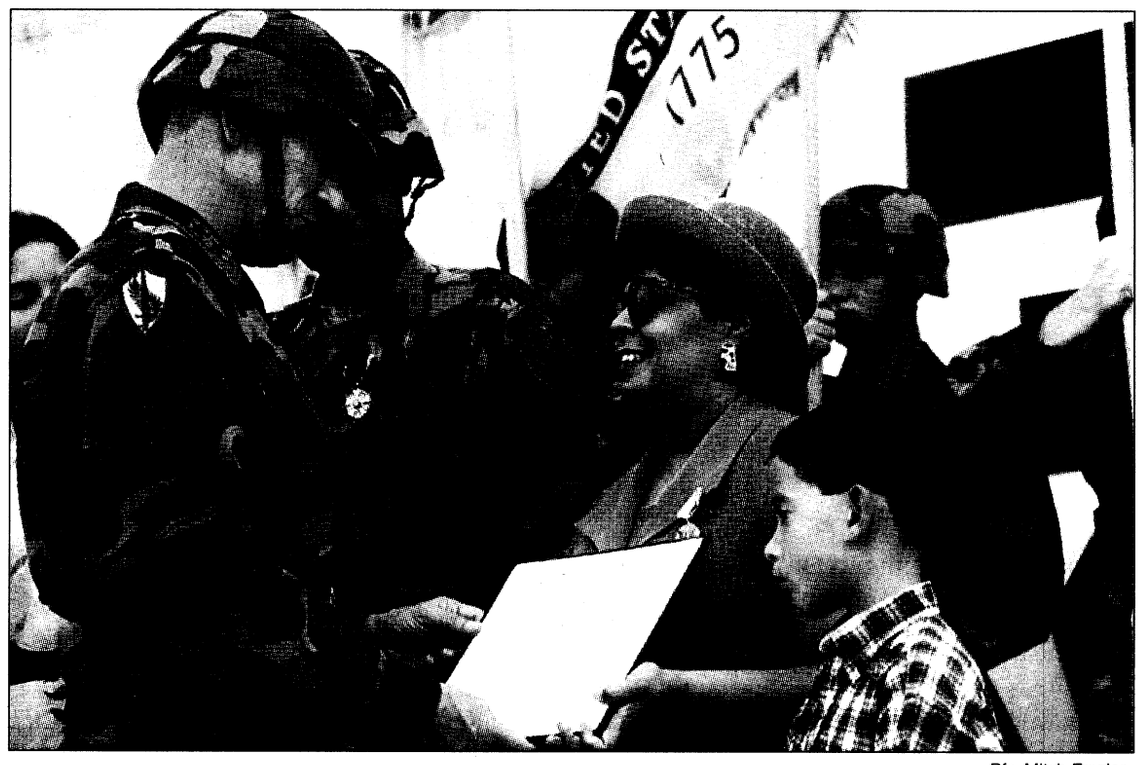
Even a preferred drug could lose its effectiveness and potentially cause harm if it interacts with another medication. Since the information systems that control military pharmacies don't directly communicate, patients may get prescription drugs from multiple sources that could cause health risks when they interact, Gerwin said.

"Under the current system, we have no way of knowing if a safety factor is involved, but the new computer system provides a database that consolidates information from different points of service and targets those drug interactions," she said

For patient convenience and to reduce DOD program costs, the new system also encourages use of the department's mail order pharmacy instead of getting drugs through retail pharmacies. Although current usage of the mail order system is below 10 percent, Gerwin said patients who do get their drugs through the mail like it. She added that the department is able to obtain drugs at the federal ceiling pricing for prescriptions filled via NMOP.

Details are available at TRICARE Service Centers, military treatment facilities and on the TRICARE Web site at http://www.tricare.osd.mil/.

Beneficiary cost has played a significant role in redesigning the pharmacy system, Gerwin said.



"We want to make sure this doesn't end up with additional out-of-pocket costs to beneficiaries," she said. "Although there are co-pays for use of the mail order pharmacy ($4 for active duty family members, $8 for retirees), prescriptions are and will continue to be filled free-of-charge at military treatment facilities."

Included in the redesigned benefit is a pilot program for Medicare-eligible beneficiaries older than 65. Currently, they can get their prescriptions filled only at military pharmacies on a space-available basis or at base closure sites where they were given special access to the TRICARE Pharmacy Retail Networks and the NMOP program.

"We will randomly select two sites for the pilot that, by law, can't be near military treatment facilities," Gerwin said. "We expect the demonstration to begin early next year and last three years." Details of this demonstration are now being finalized.

DOD modeled the new pharmacy design on the best business practices of private sector health plans.

"We looked at both fee-for-service and managed care systems to see what they are doing," Gerwin said. "The department wants to avoid increasing the costs that service members and their families

Chaplains graduate from training program

Keri E. Smith
Bayonet correspondent

Before family, friends and fellow Soldiers, the seven graduates of the U.S. Army Chaplain Family Life Training Program received their long-awaited diplomas Aug. 5 in the Infantry Center Chapel.

The program is held every 18 months and graduates six to eight chaplains at a time. The main course of study is a master's program held at Columbus State University in family and marriage counseling. Graduates also receive certification by the American Association of Pastoral Counselors and the American Association of Marriage and Family Therapists. The combination of the three certifies the chaplains to counsel at any post they are assigned.

Bonnie Matyas, an intern with the CSU program, said she feels the program is very important for the Army to have. "It trains for family issues, substance abuse, violence and even unit problems," she said.

Dr. Bert Kae-Je, one of the program's supervisors, agreed. "It really equips the chaplains to do a much better job for the people who seek the service."

Deputy chief of chaplains Brig. Gen. David H. Hicks, was the guest speaker and told the graduates that because of others like them, Fort Benning has maintained a "phenomenal treatment satisfaction of 98.4 percent." He quoted Dr. Albert Switzer in saying, "If you do not set aside a portion of your life for service to others, you will not be fulfilled."

Col. John C. Latimer, U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff, was also on hand to deliver remarks. He expressed his personal gratitude to the graduates and urged them to "Go out, make disciples and spread the word."

The seven graduates and their next duty stations are:

•Chap. (Maj.) Stephen P DeMien — AMC, Hawaii;

•Chap. (Maj.) Scott H. Kaminsky — Vincenza, Italy;

•Chap. (Maj.) David A. Neetz — Fort Wainwright, Alaska;

•Chap. (Maj.) Marshall A. Peterson — Giessen, Germany;

•Chap. (Maj.) William H. Phillips Jr. — Hanau, Germany;

•Chap. (Maj.) David H. Scharff — Fort Sill, Okla.; and •Supervisor-in-training Chap. (Lt. Col.) George L. Onstead — Fort Benning.

"I really enjoyed spending time with my colleagues. It was just a very good experience," said DeMien.

Q: I applied for a loan last week, and the bank turned me down because of information that was in my credit report. But, I don't know what it could possibly be. What can I do?

A: The Fair Credit Reporting Act controls how your credit history is maintained, used and distributed among third parties. You have a right to know what is in your credit report and, usually, the source of the information.

There are several instances where you may be able to receive a free copy. If you have been denied credit, insurance, employment or rental dwelling opportunity because of information supplied by a credit reporting agency, the organization that you applied to must give you the CRA's name, address and telephone number. If you contact the CRA for a copy of your report within 60 days of the denial, the report is free. You are entitled to one free report a year if you certify in writing that you are unemployed and plan to look for a job within 60 days, that you are on welfare, or that your report is inaccurate because of fraud. Otherwise, a CRA may charge you up to $8 for a copy of your report in most states. Georgia, however, allows two free reports within a calendar year. If you want to request a free copy of your report, you may contact any of the three major CRAs: Equifax (800) 685-1111; Experian (888) 397-3742; or TransUnion (800) 916-8800.

Once you obtain your report, if you find inaccurate or incomplete information, you should contact, in writing, both the CRA and the company that provided the information to the CRA. The company that reported the information must investigate and report the results to the CRA. If the information is incorrect, at your request, the CRA must send notices of corrections to anyone who received your report in the past six months. Moreover, job applicants can have a corrected copy of their report sent to anyone who received a copy during the past two years for employment purposes. If the investigation does not resolve your dispute, you may request your written statement to be included in your file. A notice of your dispute must be included anytime the information provider reports the item to a CRA.

Keep in mind that the above paragraph applies to inaccurate or incomplete information — not truthful negative information. A CRA can report accurate negative information — such as a late payment or an account turned over to a collection agency — for seven years or until the statute of limitations runs out, whichever is longer. Chapter 7,11 and 12 bankruptcies may remain on your report for up to 10 years. (A Chapter 13 bankruptcy remains on your credit report for seven years from the date it was filed.)

Be wary of credit repair companies who advertise that they can erase bad credit and create new credit, all for a large fee. No one can legally remove accurate and timely negative information from a credit report. A credit repair company cannot do anything that you cannot do for yourself for free.

Credit repair companies are prohibited under the Credit Repair Organizations Act from requiring you to pay until they have completed the promised services. By law, credit repair companies are required to give your a copy of the "Consumer Credit File Rights Under State and Federal Law" before you sign a contract. The contract itself must be written, it must spell out your rights and obligations, and it must give you three days to cancel without paying any fees.

"On the March Again"

6th RTB Soldier returns to service he loves

Capt. Bradley Jessmer
Eglin Air Force Base

Due to retention problems, the military is taking back many of those who venture into the civilian world and realize they miss the lifestyle of one who serves his or her country.

After spending 360 days out of the Army, 6th Ranger Training Battalion's Capt. Rob Boone, decided the civilian world was not for him.

"You just don't have the same degree of loyalty and integrity that you do in the military," Boone said.

One of the first people assigned to Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., coming back on active duty, Boone is the assistant operations officer for the Ranger unit attached to the Air Armament Center.

Boone started his career outside the military in several jobs to include working in propane distribution, construction and at a gymnasium. He soon found the business philosophy in those professions was completely different from that of military service, as a result of different mission objectives.

"On the outside," Boone said, "the question your boss asks you is what have you done to make me money, yet in military service your boss would basically ask you what have you done for your country?"

Boone soon found himself out of work for three months and spent most of his time looking for employment. It didn't take long for him to miss the life the Army offered him.

He said that more was guaranteed in the military than on the outside, such as income and job satisfaction.

"The military is levels above the civilian world," Boone added.

After 360 days out of the Army, Boone submitted his package in June to return to the service. In July, he came back on active duty.

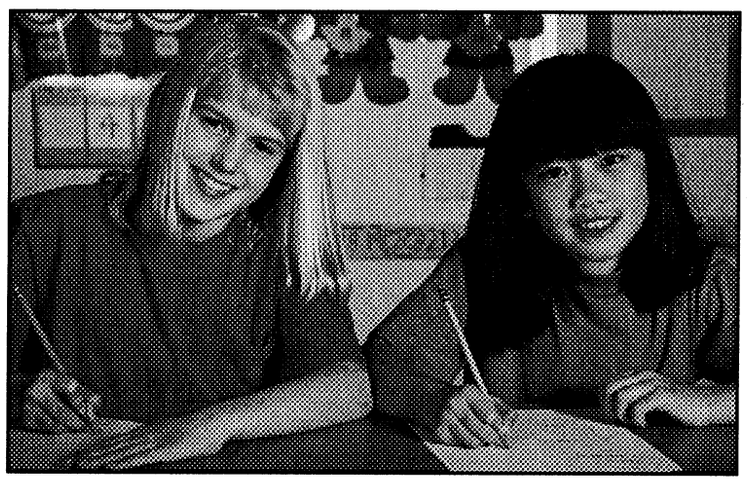
It is becoming more common of an occurrence for individuals to return to the military after realizing how much they missed benefits or simply serving their country.

"Since returning to the military," Boone said, "I've had two of my friends do the same."

"Many are coming to me to find out what employment is really like on the outside," he continued, "After talking to me they seem to have second thoughts about getting out."

According to Boone, the luxury of being able to come back, after realizing the outside isn't what it's cracked up to be, will not happen forever. He said leaving active duty is a big decision to make and shouldn't be taken lightly.

Since his return, Boone has spoken to many and encourages them to stay.



"This is a great job and a great profession," he concluded, "and I'm a lucky guy."

ACAP offers resume service

DORS system helps Soldiers get names to employers

Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

"The Defense Outplacement and Referral System is an innovative tool that transitioning Soldiers and their spouses can use to get their names in front of employers nationwide," said Cynthia Anderson, Automation Specialist and Administrative Assistant at the Fort Benning ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

DORS is a computerized on-line resume service for private sector employers. By dialing a "1-800" number, employers can receive copies of mini-resumes prepared by separating Soldiers and spouses whose skills and training match the employer's needs. The system also allows public and community service employers to receive the same information. Non-profit, public and community service organizations such as schools, hospitals, law enforcement agencies and social service agencies use the PACS registry.

The preparation and transmission of a Soldier's mini-resume is accomplished as a part of ACAP's Job Assistance Counseling services.

Soldiers get individual training and assistance on how to complete the electronically transmitted resume. The preformatted computer program requires name, address and phone data, job and location preferences, a summary of job skills and experience, and the precise date when available to start a new job. Soldiers can get confirmation copies of their mini-resume and see what companies have an interest in them by accessing the DORS/PACS Internet Web Site.

"The system really works! Employers request resumes from the DoD Transition Assistance Office in California and then call or write Soldiers to see if they are interested in working for them," said Anderson. "Many transitioning Soldiers have told us that a company they did not know called them, and the company had received their mini-resume. This is a valuable tool for job seekers, and we recommend that each transitioning Soldier take advantage of this unique service."

Job Assistance is provided for separating Soldiers and his or her spouse as part of the ACAP menu of services.

For more information stop by the ACAP Center in Building 2634 at Soldiers' Plaza or call, 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Task force prepares to return from desert

Spc. Courtney Vickery
4th Public Affairs Detachment

The small bevel gear turns the large bevel gear. The large bevel gear drives the clutch spur gear. The clutch spur gear spins the spur gear assembly.

The service checks on the Bradley Fighting Vehicle's 25 mm cannon are just some of the things the Soldiers of Task Force 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry have to look for as they start to turn in the equipment they drew nearly three months ago for Intrinsic Action 99-02.

In three short weeks, the Task Force has to prepare their equipment so it may be reissued to future Task Forces.

"The biggest obstacle during the turn-in is cleaning the vehicles at the washrack," said Capt. Apisit Lewis, battalion motor officer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1-15.

"Before a lot of the vehicles can be inspected, they have to be clean so that they can be inspected for leaks, cracks or anything abnormal that would be covered up by dirt."

Before the Task Force is finished with their equipment turn in, it has to pass inspection.

"Some of this equipment, such as the support battalion's fueling and transport vehicles, has to be reissued," said Joe Bouchie, production control.

"Therefore, we have to ensure all the equipment is accepted in a fully mission-capable status."

To be ready, every vehicle's system from communications assets to the engines to the weapons systems in the turrets must be checked.

"Some vehicles, mostly the larger tracked vehicles, have their engine and transmissions pulled out and started on the ground to be check for leaks," said Lewis.

Spc. Courtney Vickery

Bradley Fighting Vehicles of Co. C, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., line up in preparation for turn-in.

"Once that is done, we put the engine back in and check the vehicle chassis for problems. For combat vehicles, we usually check the turret and firing systems."

When the Task Force mechanics have a problem fixing a piece of equipment, ITT steps in to help.

"If there is anything we cannot fix," said Staff Sgt. Fausto Gomez, 2nd Platoon master gunner, Company C, 1-15, "we identify the problem to the boss line supervisor in the motorpool, and then he goes to a higher level."

"This is the final step," said Fausto. "We're going to knock this maintenance out and do what we have to do so we can start getting ready to go home."

After the Task Force completes the turn-in, the Ironhorse Soldiers of 4th Infantry Division will have well kept equipment to perform their mission.

Retired Col. Charles P. Murray Jr. hands the Co. C guidon to Capt. Joseph M. Nolan.

Unit pays tribute to MOH recipient

Spc. George Moore
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers past and present from "The Rock," Company C, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, gathered to pay tribute to one of their own Medal of Honor recipients, retired Col. Charles Patrick Murray Jr.

Murray, the honorary colonel of the battalion for the last two years, performed his last act as honorary commander by participating in the Co. C change of command ceremony July 22.

Soldiers and their families said goodbye to Capt. Joseph A. Terry and welcomed Capt. Joseph M. Nolan. Terry went on to assume a rare second command as the Headquarters and Headquarters Company 1-30th commander.

The day was special to Murray because some years ago he also relinquished command of Co. C, 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., to assume command of HHC. On July 5, 1945 by direction of Congress, the president of the U.S. presented 1st Lt. Murray with the Medal of Honor.

On Dec. 16, 1944 in France, Murray was leading a reinforced platoon into enemy territory. While moving, he observed a force of 200 Germans reining deadly mortar, bazooka, machine gun and small arms fire into an American battalion occupying the crest of the ridge. The enemy's position in a sunken road, although hidden from the ridge, was open to a flank attack by Murray's patrol.

He hesitated to commit so small a force to battle with the superior-sized enemy. Crawling out ahead of his troops to a vantage point, he called for fire. His shells bracketed the German force, but when he was about to correct the range, his radio went dead. He returned to his patrol, secured a rifle and grenade launcher and went back to his self-appointed outpost. With an automatic rifle and ammunition, he once more moved to his exposed position. Burst after burst he fired into the enemy, killing 20, wounding many others and completely disorganizing its ranks.

While capturing 10 Germans in foxholes, an eleventh, pretending to surrender, threw a grenade that knocked him to the ground and inflicted eight wounds. Though suffering and bleeding profusely, he refused to return to the rear until he had chosen the spot for the roadblock and had seen his men correctly deployed. By his single-handed attack on an overwhelming force and by his intrepid and heroic fighting, Murray stopped a counter attack, established an advance position against formidable odds and provided an inspiring example for the men of his command.

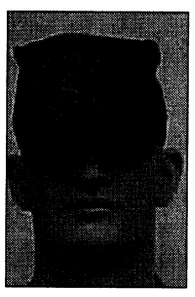
Decorations provide Soldiers with pride

Lt. Col. George Ruff
U.S. Army School of Americas

Military decorations are a great source of pride for those who wear them. Napoleon said, "Soldiers have been known to do great things for the right to wear a small piece of colored cloth on their chest." Many Soldiers have earned decorations, badges and tabs here at Fort Benning. Throughout the Army when one sees a Soldier in uniform wearing badges and tabs representing Airborne, Pathfinder and Ranger qualification, he is seeing a Soldier who has passed through Fort Benning's gates and now associates this post with the outstanding military training he or she received here.

There exists, however, another badge that is being seen more and more frequently throughout the armies of this hemisphere. That badge is the Distinctive Unit Insignia worn by the Latin American graduates of the U.S. Army School of the Americas located in Fort Benning's Ridgway Hall.

The insignia, a 1 3/8 inch blue disc, shows a white Spanish galleon with a red Maltese cross on the sail, red flag at masthead, riding on a white wave line. Below it is a gold star. Around the circumference, between narrow gold bands, is the motto "Uno Para Todos y Todos Para Uno" - "One For All and All For One." The design is based on the U.S. Army Caribbean shoulder sleeve insignia used by Columbus during his explorations in the Caribbean Sea. The motto is a well known quotation from novelist Alexander Dumas, The Three Musketeers, and is frequently used by democratic leaders in Latin America. The motto also reflects what the Monroe Doctrine sums up in a few short words regarding the security of the Western Hemisphere — that is, an attack on one is attack on all.



USARSA relocated from Panama where it had operated since 1946 and became a part of Fort Benning in 1984. Since that time, the School has continually provided Latin American Soldiers with outstanding military training and education. There currently exists more than 60,000 Latin American graduates authorized to wear the badge and that number increases monthly.

When visiting almost any headquarters of major Latin American Army units, one encounters many graduates with their USARSA badge proudly displayed. As U.S. Soldiers have done for many, many years, these Soldiers now associate Fort Benning with the best in military training.

Soldiers sweat in heat, but no serious injuries

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

The heat wave that covered the country through July caused no serious injuries to Soldiers as training at Training and Doctrine Command installations continued without slowing down.

Only 48 trainees had to be treated because of dehydration said Denise Watson, safety specialist in the TRADOC safety office.

"Drill sergeants have been very observant of conditions and risks involved with training events," Watson said.

Most TRADOC training centers are located in states that normally have warm summers, but, until cooler temperatures arrived in early August, this year's heat wave was unusual even for them.

"We've had temperatures in the 100s for days at a time in places where the highs are normally in the 90s," said Milton Hilliard, also a safety specialist for the command.

When the combination of heat and humidity rises, it is indicated by categories. Less and less physical exertion is permitted at each successive category until Category 5, when all outdoor activity is stopped.

Drill sergeants are taught to measure the heat index using Wet Bulb Global Temperature calculators.

Several years ago at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., Category 5 had been recorded at a bayonet course. A drill sergeant decided to walk his Soldiers through the course so they would be familiar with it when they returned when the heat index was at a safe level.

A civilian reporter had observed the walk through and his conclusion was that Army basic training had become soft.

"He didn't see them when the drill sergeant brought them back early the next day to go through the course at full speed," Hilliard said. "We want training to be tough, but we don't want to injure Soldiers just so we can say its hard."

"I've watched drill sergeants wake up Soldiers at 4 in the morning to have them on the range to do training they couldn't do in the heat of the day before."

He said that drill sergeants must be constantly vigilant during the summer.

"The heat index can vary greatly from depressions to hills, from bare ground to heavy vegetation. Drill sergeants have to take Wet Bulb readings in all those areas to make sure it is safe to train."

Some new Soldiers have to be acclimated to weather at training installations even during normal summer weather.

"A Soldier from south Texas going through basic training during the summer at Fort Jackson, S.C., may have no problems," Hilliard said. "But a Soldier from Maine, where a combination of high heat and humidity is rare, can have trouble."

He said drill sergeants pay special attention to these Soldiers to make sure they're not in danger from the unaccustomed heat.

Over the past few months, 21 Soldiers were injured by a heat-induced phenomenon — lightning. None of the injuries were serious, however. High heat and humidity combine with local unstable air to create sudden, unpredicted violent thunder and lightning storms.

Twenty of the injured Soldiers were in a group of reserve component Soldiers training at Fort Gordon, Ga., who didn't have time to find safe cover because a storm popped up so quickly.

"Fortunately, none of the Soldiers were hit directly; they were near where lightning struck," Hilliard said.

Drill sergeants and training leaders try to get Soldiers inside a sturdy structure immediately when lightning is close, he said. Low places in the terrain or spots near the base of a hill offer some protection.

Taking cover in dense woods is also safe, but not beneath single or amongst widely separated trees.

Hilliard pointed out that each quarter an average of 90,000 people are in training throughout TRADOC, from basic training to senior leadership courses.

"It's a credit to the drill sergeants and commanders and their use of risk management that permits training to continue without disruption while normal challenging standards are maintained," said David Prentice, installation safety manager with TRADOC's safety office.

Enlisted retention rate hits high

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

More Soldiers are signing up for another "hitch" after their first enlistment than ever before, while a healthy percentage of career noncommissioned officers are staying in rather than leaving the Army to snag jobs in the current hot civilian economy.

Although the Army's active-duty recruiting goal is projected to fall short by as many as 8,000 Soldiers for this fiscal year, current retention rates for junior enlisted Soldiers and NCOs are at "historic highs,"according to personnel officials in the Pentagon. About 400,000 enlisted Soldiers and 78,000 commissioned officers are currently serving on active duty, according to Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel documents. Those documents listed about 171,000 Soldiers holding sergeant through sergeant major rank.

The retention rate of mid-career enlisted members, usually defined as sergeants and staff sergeants on their second enlistment and having less than 10 years of active service, is now at 75 percent, said Sgt. Maj. Jerry Pionk, ODCSPER's active-duty retention sergeant major at the Pentagon. This, he said, reflects a gain of 1 percent since February.

"Our pre-drawdown (before 1989) mid-career enlisted retention rate was at about 70 percent, so we've gained about 5 percent since then," said Pionk. "In 1996, we saw the rate drop back down to 70 percent, and we were very concerned. At that time we had promotion slowdowns, permanent-change-of-station freezes, which we don't have now. We currently have the money to regularly promote our enlisted Soldiers and NCOs."

First-term enlisted retention numbers are also heartening, said Pionk.

"Enlisted retention for the year-to-date through the end of July is still running well ahead of projections for the fiscal year," he said. "Right now, in our initial-term mission, we're just over 100 percent of what we had planned to do."

"This is really a good news story, because we're very concerned with that market ... (which includes) kids who sign up for college (money) opportunities ... and then get out of the Army."

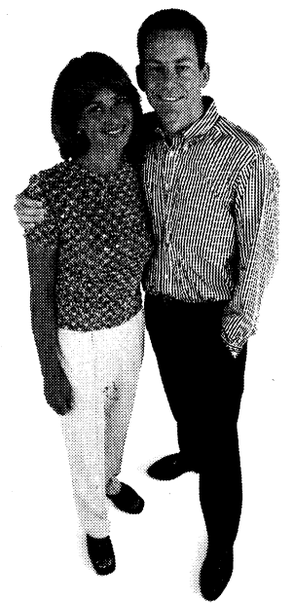
Pionk noted personnel officials are pleasantly surprised with the current "first-termer" retention rate.

"We've had a tendency to lose a lot of those kids, especially in light of today's good (civilian) job market, he said. "We're now keeping approximately 51 percent of these Soldiers, compared to the pre-drawdown rate of about 42 percent.

"That (first-termer) percentage is higher than it has ever been in our history."

Although more enlisted first-termers are signing up for another hitch in the Army, said Pionk, more Soldiers are leaving the Army at points between when they sign their enlistment contracts and before they reach their first duty assignment.

"We're losing about 8 to 10 percent more Soldiers (in the training phase) now ... than we used to lose prior to the drawdown," he said. "That is something we have to combat, because we're not bringing in enough Soldiers through the 'front door' (via recruiting)."



"If you under-recruit, then three to five years later, that is your re-enlistment population. So, we have to keep a higher percentage of our Soldiers, to offset the recruiting losses that have materialized."

Reserve officers need schooling sooner

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Army reserve component first lieutenants through lieutenant colonels will need to complete more quickly than in the past the professional military education that is required before they are considered qualified to be considered for promotion to the next higher grade.

Under a change in law, which took effect Oct. 1, 1996, reserve component officers must be considered for promotion and, if selected, promoted prior to reaching their maximum years-of-service for their current grade. The law affects U.S. Army Reserve and Army National Guard officers.

The Director of Military Personnel Management directed the expansion of reserve component officer promotion board zones of consideration in order to ensure compliance with the law. Use of expanded zones of consideration will begin in May 2001 and will likely result in some officers being considered for promotion earlier than otherwise anticipated.

First lieutenants and captains will be considered by selection boards using expanded zones from November 2001 through April 2005. Majors and lieutenant colonels will be considered by selection boards using expanded zones from May 2001 through November 2002.

While many officers will not be affected by this policy change, other officers may be considered up to a year earlier than they now anticipate. As a result, all officers who will be considered for promotion between May 2001 and April 2005 should complete the professional military education required for promotion in their competitive category as soon as possible.

Lt. Col. Milton N. Vickers, a staff officer in the Office of the Director of Military Personnel Management, noted that Title 10, United States Code, Section 14304(a)(1) requires qualified reserve component first lieutenants, captains, and majors to be considered for mandatory promotion far enough in advance of their statutory maximum time-in-grade date, so that, if selected, they may be promoted on or before the date they attain their maximum time-in-grade for their current grade.

"The requirement that an officer completes his or her professional military education before consideration for promotion has been in Army reserve component regulations for as long as anyone can remember," said Vickers. "So, Army Guard and Reserve officers are not going to be surprised by the requirement to complete professional military education courses. The difference is that some officers will be considered for promotions one year earlier than they now anticipate. Those officers will have to complete their professional military education requirements before they are qualified to be considered for promotion."

Vickers added those officers who do not meet their military education requirements before their promotion board's convene date will be considered to be not educationally qualified and will not be selected for promotion. First lieutenants, captains, and majors who are twice not selected for promotion to the next higher grade could be separated.

Reserve component promotions to colonel by mandatory selection boards are not discussed in 10 USC 14304(a), according to Vickers. However, first-time considered zones of consideration for all mandatory colonel promotion selection boards will be revised to match the revised zones for the mandatory lieutenant colonel promotion selection boards. Army National Guard and U.S. Army Reserve chains of command will announce the zones of consideration and the year groups that will be affected shortly.

Army retirees lead way in retirement home support

Laura Paul
Army Retirement Service

Army retirees are leading the way in support of the two Armed Forces Retirement Homes.

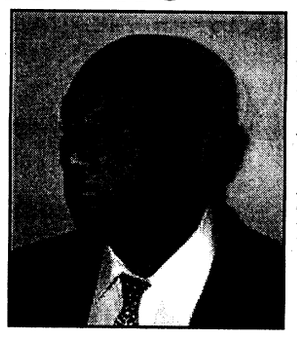
More than 2,100 Army retirees have set up allotments from their retired pay to support the U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home in Washington, D.C., and the U.S. Naval Home in Gulfport, Miss.

Voluntary retiree allotments have brought $116,500 to the AFRH, with 80 percent coming from the Army.

The next highest number of retiree contributors came from the Air Force with 348 people making allotments.

The AFRH are the only veterans' homes run by the federal government. The homes are open to retirees age 60 and older with 20 or more years of active duty service; or veterans unable to earn a livelihood due to a service-connected disability; or veterans who served in a war theater or received hostile fire pay and are unable to earn a livelihood due to a non-service-connected disability; or female veterans who served before 1948.

Almost 1,600 veterans live in the retirement homes; 93 percent are military retirees and 97 percent are combat veterans.



The veterans' homes are looking to retirees for funding because downsizing has resulted in a decrease in support from active-duty service members. Since 1990, active-duty funding — coming from 50-cents-a-month in pay withholding per service member and fines and forfeitures — has dropped 39.1 percent, equating to $142 million.

Anyone wishing to support the Homes or find more about the Homes can write to: Armed Forces Retirement Home; 3700 N. Capitol St.; Washington, D.C. 20317, or they can call Kerri Childress at 1-800-422-9988 or (202) 722-3556, or visit their website at http://www.AFRH.com.

Youth Services basketball teams executed skill, control and teamwork during an exciting fifth week of play.

In the 6- to 7-year-old division the Spurs fell to the 76ers 5-6. The Spurs held the lead during the first half but could not stop the revved up 76ers in the second half. Joshua Burnham led the charge for the 76ers with 4 points and Jedarvis Bates added a basket for 2 points. Marquis Townsend and Tony Davis led the Spurs with 2 points apiece.

The Miami heat stomped the Lakers during the second game of the division 16-2. Karissa Jackson and Ritchie McDonnell led the Heat to victory by contributing 6 points each. Laker Keenen Ingraham tossed in a basket for the team total of 2 points.

In 8- to 9-year-old action, the Warriors thrashed the Heat 30-10 during the first game of the division. Kahlee Tyler led the Warriors for the fourth time this summer with 12 points and teammate Marvell Glover kicked in 6. Lead scorer for the Heat was Travis Lush with 6 points.

The second game saw the Sonics and the Blue Devils end in a deadlock 17-17. With 13 points, Mack Clemons prevailed as the Sonics top scorer for the fourth consecutive week and teammate Daren Waters added 4 points. Bobby Kemp (11 points) and George Layne (4 points) combined for 15 of the Blue Devil's 17 points.

The Miami Heat nosed out the 76ers 51-50 during the first 10- to 12-year-old division game. Although Robert Penn scored more than half of the 76ers total points with 26 the team fell short of a victory. Xavier Shaw hit for 26 points as the Heat's top offensive player.

Marcus Patterson (23 points) and Omar Tyler (13 points) led the Spurs to a 48-38 win over the Knicks during the second game of the division. Lee Herring put 16 points on the board for the Knicks as the team's top scorer.

The Bulldawgs were out-gamed by the Pacers 33-39 in 13- to 15-year-old action. Ernest Tyler shot for 15 points and became the Pacers lead scorer for the third time. Backing up Tyler was teammate Darnell Love who contributed 10 points. Joey Six tossed in 8 points for the Bulldawgs.

Hanen Program helps parents help kids

Marni Magowan Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

Last week was the first anniversary of the Hanen Program at Fort Benning. The program is designed to provide parents of children with language delays strategies that they can use to help their children's language development. According to co-facilitators Kristin Cazana and Toby Stephan, the program has been extremely successful and has already helped 23 local families.

The Hanen Program used at Fort Benning is one of the intervention techniques designed by the Hanen Center of Ontario, Canada. In order to run the class here, Cazana and Stephan, who are both speech-language pathologists, had to be certified. In August of 1998, they organized and participated in a Hanen Certification Conference at Fort Benning — and have been running the program ever since.

The Fort Benning Hanen Program consists of eight classroom sessions and three home visits over the course of three months. The instructors use both video and textual resources to teach parents ways that they can interact with their children every day to facilitate language acquisition. Strategies involving reading, art and music are provided to give parents fun ways to help their children learn.

"Each week we present information on language development and a specific strategy parents can use when they play with their children to stimulate their language," Cazana said. "Our goal is to make it be as natural for the parent as possible to incorporate the strategy so that once they get a feel for it, after a couple of weeks, it is just second nature."

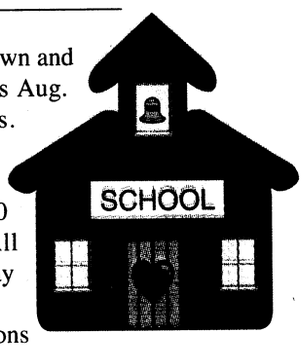
During the three home visits that are conducted, Cazana and Stephan videotape the parents interacting with their children. The class is then able to watch all of the tapes together, not only learning from each other but watching their own progress throughout the program as well.

"I think it is so nice that military families can come together and they have a common goal to help their child," noted Cazana. She stressed that the Hanen Program has definitely had a positive impact on children and has helped to empower parents.

"In the evaluations, most parents have said they have noticed a change in themselves and in how they interact with their child, and they have also noticed a change in their child," Stephan added. He also emphasized that the Hanen Program can be a more dynamic way of helping children with language delays than any other program, because the child gets more out of it when mom and dad are involved.

According to both Cazana and Stephan one of the most important things about the Hanen Program may be the relationships that are formed between the parents. Parents are able to interact with other people who have the same concerns for their child, and long-lasting friendships are often developed.

"The Hanen Program has provided an avenue for a support group for the parents," Cazana said.



If you are concerned about your child's language development, the first thing to do is to contact either Cazana or Stephan through Educational and Developmental Intervention Services (EDIS) at 545-6374 or 545-9114. They will arrange for your child to be evaluated, and a determination about what services are most appropriate can then be made.

"EDIS is family focused. We treat not just the child but our goal is to make sure the family is functioning in the best way they can be for the child," Cazana emphasized.

For information concerning any of the other services offered by EDIS contact Manager Cindy Falk at 545-1161 or 545-3835. EDIS is open Monday — Friday from 8:00-4:30, and is located in Building 392 behind the Infantry Museum.

School year begins Aug. 24

Fort Benning Schools

Summer vacation is winding down and the 1999-2000 school year begins Aug. 24 for Fort Benning schools. Registration is currently underway. Parents can register their children from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. All schools will be closed Wednesday from 8 to 11 a.m.

All registrations and verifications will take place at the child's or children's assigned or neighborhood schools. It will be necessary for parents to register at each school if they have children in more than one of the Fort Benning Schools.

If children attended a Fort Benning school this school year, it will be necessary for parents to verify registration data for next school year by visiting the schools.

If children did not attend any Fort Benning Schools this school year, it will be necessary to complete a registration packet, which is available at the schools.

Bus schedules will be published in next week's edition of The Bayonet. Forms for free and reduced-price lunches can now be picked up at the schools or at the Fort Benning School's Administrative Center Child Nutrition office, Room 21 located on Custer Road.

New registration requires the child's Social Security Number and proof of on-post residence. Registration for pre-K and kindergarten requires the child's original birth certificate. Parents of pre-K and kindergarten students will be given information regarding the procedure for securing a Georgia Eye, Ear, Dental and Immunization Certificate at registration. Parents of students in grades one through eight must bring current shot records which will be recorded on Fort Benning School's health forms.

Verification will include: updating basic registration data (i.e. address, phone number, contact information), health and immunization updates, medications, etc. All registrations and verifications require sponsor and spouse to provide a current military ID card.

The Fort Benning Schools also offer a half-day pre-K program for children who reside on post and will be 4 years old on or before Sept. 1.

Additional registration and verification information is available on the Fort Benning School's website at benning.w1.odedodea.edu or by calling 545-7276.

Fort Benning has a population of about 50,000 people, which ranks it as a medium-sized city. Like many cities our size across the United States, Fort Benning contracts pick-up and disposal of garbage, trash and recyclable items. To ensure maximum efficiency of the curbside-recycling program, place only recyclable items in the brown recycling containers. The contractor will not pick it up if it contains garbage or trash mixed in with the recyclables. The chart below lists types of items and whether or not they can be recycled. Proper disposal of non-recyclable items is detailed below.

Disposal of non-recyclable items:

Baby diapers should be placed in household garbage container.

Food waste should be placed in household garbage container. This includes paper products grossly contaminated with food residue and pizza boxes with globs of sauce and cheese.

Household batteries should be placed in household garbage container.

Automobile batteries should be returned to the retailer where battery was purchased, or the Auto Craft Shop will dispose of battery for a $2 environmental fee.

Scrap metal can be disposed of at Building 4000 from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The facility is closed weekends and holidays. For more information, call 544-6142.

Resident-owned washers, dryers and furniture should be placed on the curb the day of garbage and recycle pick-up. The contractor will make a note of the items and its locations for pick-up later that day or the following day. For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

Resident-owned refrigerators, freezers and air conditioners can be picked up by contacting the DPW Customer Relations Office at 545-2117.

Used motor oil can be disposed of at Building 4000, the Auto Craft Shop from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The facility is closed on weekends and holidays. They will recycle motor oil for a $2 environmental fee.

Tires should be returned to the retailer where they were purchased, or the Auto Craft Shop will recycle them for a $2 environmental fee.

Schedule changes

All changes to these schedules are published in the Bayonet two weeks prior to the change in service, which normally occurs around holidays.

For more information about Fort Benning's curbside programs, call Walter Nichols at 545-1007 or Thomas Moore at 544-6142.

Specialized treatment facilities provide complex medical care

Humana Military Health Care Service

For TRICARE Beneficiaries

The Department of Defense has designated Eisenhower Army Medical Center, Naval Hospital Jacksonville and Keesler Medical Center as Regional Specialized Treatment Service Facilities. These Military Treatment Facilities are centers of medical excellence that treat TRICARE beneficiaries in the southeastern United States who are in need of complex medical care.

While the specialized treatment services offered at each facility are subject to change, the following services are currently offered:

•Eisenhower Army Medical Center in Augusta, Ga. — heart surgery and interventional cardiology, head, neck and spinal surgery, major joint and limb surgery, general surgery, peripheral vascular surgery and pancreas, liver and shunt procedures.

•Naval Hospital Jacksonville in Jacksonville, Fla. — major joint and limb reconstruction.

•Keesler Medical Center in Biloxi, Miss. — newborn intensive care, heart surgery, general surgery, head, neck and spinal surgery, pancreas, liver, adrenal and pituitary procedures, major joint and limb surgery, uterine and ovarian cancer surgery

There are also two National STSFs that currently perform the following procedures:

•Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. — kidney transplants.

•Wilford Hall Medical Center in Lackland AFB, Texas — selected bone marrow transplants.

Facilities designated as Regional STSFs have a catchment area of approximately 200 miles in radius. The catchment areas of the National STSFs comprise the continental United States.

For Non-Prime Beneficiaries

TRICARE Standard and Extra beneficiaries who reside in the catchment area must use STSFs for these procedures or obtain a Non-Availability Statement from the STSF before having these services performed elsewhere. An NAS may be obtained from the STSF Health Benefits Advisor.

Claims submitted for non-Prime beneficiaries who have these services performed outside the STSF without an NAS will be denied, with the following exceptions: 1. Emergency care; 2. Care provided under the primary coverage of another insurance plan; 3. Care specifically designated as exempt from NAS requirements in the CHAMPUS Policy Manual.

For Prime Beneficiaries

To receive the designated STSF care, TRICARE Prime beneficiaries must obtain a referral from their Primary Care Manager and a prior authorization from the Health Care Finder. The Health Care Finder will first determine if space is available at the STSF before authorizing care. If space is available, the Health Care Finder will authorize care from the STSF. If not, the Health Care Finder will authorize care from a civilian provider.

STSF care provided to Prime patients by civilian providers without the required referral and Health Care Finder authorization will be paid as Point of Service.

Obtaining STSF Care

Patients seeking STSF treatment must be evaluated by the STSF prior to their treatment. In some cases STSF patients will be reimbursed by the STSF for travel and lodging expenses incurred by the patient and one attendant (if medically necessary).

If you, or a family member enrolled in TRICARE Prime, think you may need the specialized medical care provided by a STSF, you should contact your Primary Care Manager for a referral. Non-Prime TRICARE beneficiaries may call the STSF phone number directly. These numbers are as follows:

• Eisenhower Army Medical Center 706-787-6714.

• Naval Hospital Jacksonville 904-777-7372.

• Keesler Medical Center 800-841-0950.

•Walter Reed Army Medical Center 202-782-6462 or 9457.

Wilford Hall Medical Center 210-292-7080 or 7391.

TRICARE is a Department of Defense program offered by Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

New smile can boost self-image

American Association of Orthodontists

Nearly 4.5 million people in the United States and Canada are in the care of an orthodontist and looking forward to a beautiful, healthy smile that's good for life.

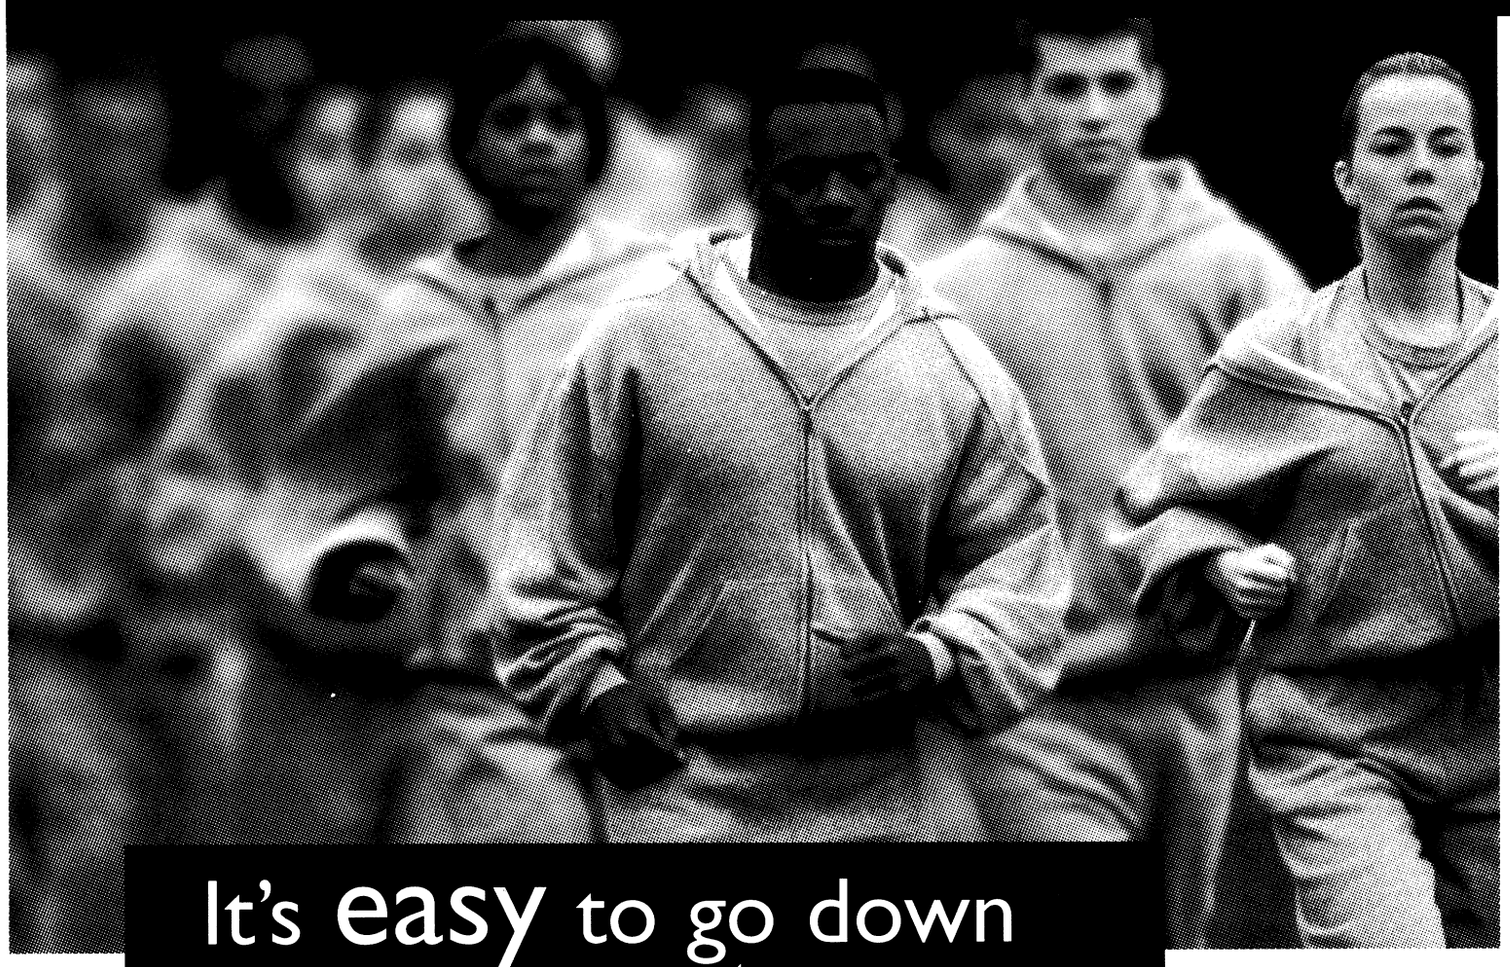
Orthodontics can boost a person's self-image as the teeth, jaws and lips become properly aligned, but an attractive smile is just one of the benefits. Alleviating or preventing physical health problems is just as important.

Without treatment, orthodontic problems may lead to tooth decay, gum disease, bone destruction and chewing and digestive difficulties. A "bad bite" can contribute to speech impairments, tooth loss, chipped teeth and other dental injuries.

When should my child first see an orthodontist? The American Association of Orthadonics recommends that every child should get an orthodontic screening no later than age 7. In some cases, this could be as young as 2 or 3.

Many orthodontic problems are easier to correct if detected early rather than waiting until jaw growth has slowed. Early treatment may mean a patient will avoid surgery or other more serious corrections later in life.

Is it ever too late for a person to get braces? No. Because healthy teeth can be moved at any age, an orthodontist can improve the smile of practically anyone, in fact, orthodontists regularly treat patients in their 50s, 60s and older.



What makes an orthodontist different from a dentist? Orthodontists are the dental specialists who correct dental and facial irregularities, day in and day out.

Orthodontists are uniquely qualified to correct "bad bites." The American Dental Association requires orthodontists to have at least two years of post-doctoral, advanced specialty training in orthodontics in an accredited program, after graduation from college and then dental school.

What about costs? This will vary, of course, depending on the nature of the problem. Many orthodontic problems require only limited treatment. You may be surprised to discover that orthodontics is less expensive than you thought.

Who can recommend an orthodontist? Ask your family dentist to recommend an orthodontist. You also can find the names of AAO members in your area simply by calling a toll-free number, (800) STRAIGHT (800-787-2444).

Better health habits can lead to better life

1st Lt. Marguerite Skelly
General Leonard Wood Army Community Hospital

Ancient cultures believed the heart was the most important organ, not only for good health but also for intelligence, creativity and emotions.

The latest statistics show that heart disease is the leading cause of death for people in the United States. Heart disease is also ranked first among all diagnosis categories for short stays at hospitals.

The American Heart Association has identified several risk factors which can cause heart disease. Some of them can be changed, treated or modified and some cannot.

But the more risk factors a person has, the greater the chance that he or she will develop heart disease.

Risk factors you cannot change: increased age, male gender, and family history (including race).

Risk factors you can change: cigarette and tobacco use and abuse, high blood-cholesterol levels, high blood pressure, physical inactivity, obesity and stress.

Better food habits can help reduce your risk for heart disease. A healthful eating plan means choosing the right foods to eat and preparing foods in a healthy way.

The best way to lower your blood-cholesterol level is to eat less saturated fat and control your weight.

The American Heart Association has developed an easy-to-follow guide to eating with your heart in mind:

- Total fat intake should be less than 30 percent of your total calories.
- Saturated fatty-acid intake should be no more than 10 percent of calories.
- Polyunsaturated fatty-acid intake should be no more than 10 percent of calories.
- Monounsaturated fatty acids should make up the rest of the total fat intake, about 10 to 15 percent of total calories.
- Cholesterol intake should be no more than 30 milligrams per day.
- Sodium (salt) intake should be no more than 3 grams per day.

The American Heart Association suggests this plan for all healthy Americans two years of age and older.

Growing children and teenagers have special needs. You must be sure they get enough energy (calories) and nutrients each day. If you or others in your family are pregnant or breastfeeding or have a medical condition such as diabetes, talk to your health-care provider, registered dietitian, licensed dietitian or nutritionist about your special dietary needs.

Today we still know a healthy heart is a vital part of a healthy person, and we know many things we can do to help keep us healthy.

If you would like more information about the American Heart Association eating plan, sample recipes, or other ways to reduce heart disease, contact the AHA at www.amhrt.org, or call 1-800-AHA-USA-1.

Feast commemorates transition

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert Santry
Catholic Chaplain

My Christian neighbors other than Roman or Easter Rite Catholic, sometimes ask me why Catholics celebrate a festival that is not recorded in Scripture. The purpose of this article is to provide you with a testimonial.

reflections

Let me first say that Catholics do not compartmentalize Jesus and Mary. Where Jesus resides is also where Mary is. Mary faithfully and devotedly points believers and non-believers to Jesus (said she at Cana, "Do as he tells.") Daily from the perspective of eternity she says, "I am the handmaid of the Lord ... Do with me as you say." Mary, the mother thrice admirable, enjoys the status of chief disciple, premier saint, primary intercessor and mother of all creatures. What Eve undid by disobedience, Mary re-did by obedience.

Ancient Christians honored their dead on the anniversary of death as a recognition of "birth into eternity." Modern Catholic Christians do the same. The solemnity of the Assumption commemorates the blessed mother's transition to the other side. The ancient feast also recognizes the unusual circumstances of her departure. Because she was conceived immaculately (without original sin), she did not experience bodily decay. God the Father took her — assumed her — into heaven immediately upon dormition. Ancient and modern Catholic Christians recognize this day as the crowning of her as Queen of Heaven and Earth. This day the Father glorified her and honored her with royal dignity.

On the cross, the Savior said to the beloved disciple John "there is your mother" (and from that moment the disciple took her into his home) (John 19:27). Each occasion we honor the Mother of the Lord we are beholding our Mother and taking her into our home. Taking the blessed Mother into our home, we show her childlike love, bring her flowers and honor her daily.

Ministries center helps find person's real beauty

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Beauty is held in high esteem in our society. If you do not believe that, just take a look at all the advertisements you see on television or in magazines and newspapers.

reflections

Beauty sells products. I'm reminded of the story where a very earnest parishioner one day approached her pastor and asked, "Pastor, how much makeup should a woman wear?" "Depends on what she looks like!" replied the pastor. While this pastor's comment may be funny it also implies the message that this lady needed some help in looking good.

The problem with Madison Avenue's concept of beauty is that very few of us compare to the beautiful people we see in the advertisements it produces. Americans continue to spend untold billions of dollars to make themselves look better and more appealing. We have bought into the lie that outward beauty is more important than anything else in a person's life. Let me make this observation to prove this point.

Nearly two years ago, the world witnessed the death of two well-known women within a few days of each other. One was a beautiful, real woman in the prime of her life and the other was elderly, stooped over and far from physically attractive. Which death generated more public grieving and media attention? While this may be an unfair analogy, it does drive home the point that physical beauty is more highly prized than inward beauty.

Robert S. McGee in his book, The Search for Significance, writes, "We spend hundreds of dollars and an inestimable amount of time and worry covering up or altering our skin, eyes, teeth, faces, noses, thighs and scalps, refusing to believe that God, in his sovereignty and love, gave us the features he wants us to have."

While we expend untold financial and emotional resources to regenerate the outward person, it is the inward person that is in need of change. When one begins to experience God's grace, love, forgiveness and mercy, there occurs an inward transformation that makes physical beauty pale in comparison. Yet, there are so many whose self worth and esteem have been lost because they lack the physical qualities that somehow make them beautiful in the eyes of the world.

At the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, our goal is to provide quality pastoral counseling to assist you in finding your real beauty through a personal relationship with the Lord. When you begin to experience his love your life will begin to change.

Bill Gaither, well-known Christian song writer, penned a chorus that sums this article up.

Something beautiful

Something beautiful, something good,
all my confusion, he understood.
All I had to offer him was brokeness and strife.
But he made something beautiful out of my life.

If you need help discovering your real beauty, call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-2050.

Soldiers net 11 Pan AM medals

Harriet Rice
Army News Service

Eleven Army athletes and six Army marksmen helped the U.S. team pile on the medals at the 1999 Pan American games in Winnipeg, Canada, July 23 through Aug. 8.

Ken Johnson of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit led the Army charge by capturing gold in the Men's 50-Meter Free Rifle three-position event during the opening weekend with a total of 1,233 points. Right behind him with a silver medal was Daryl Szarenski on target in the 50-meter pistol event.

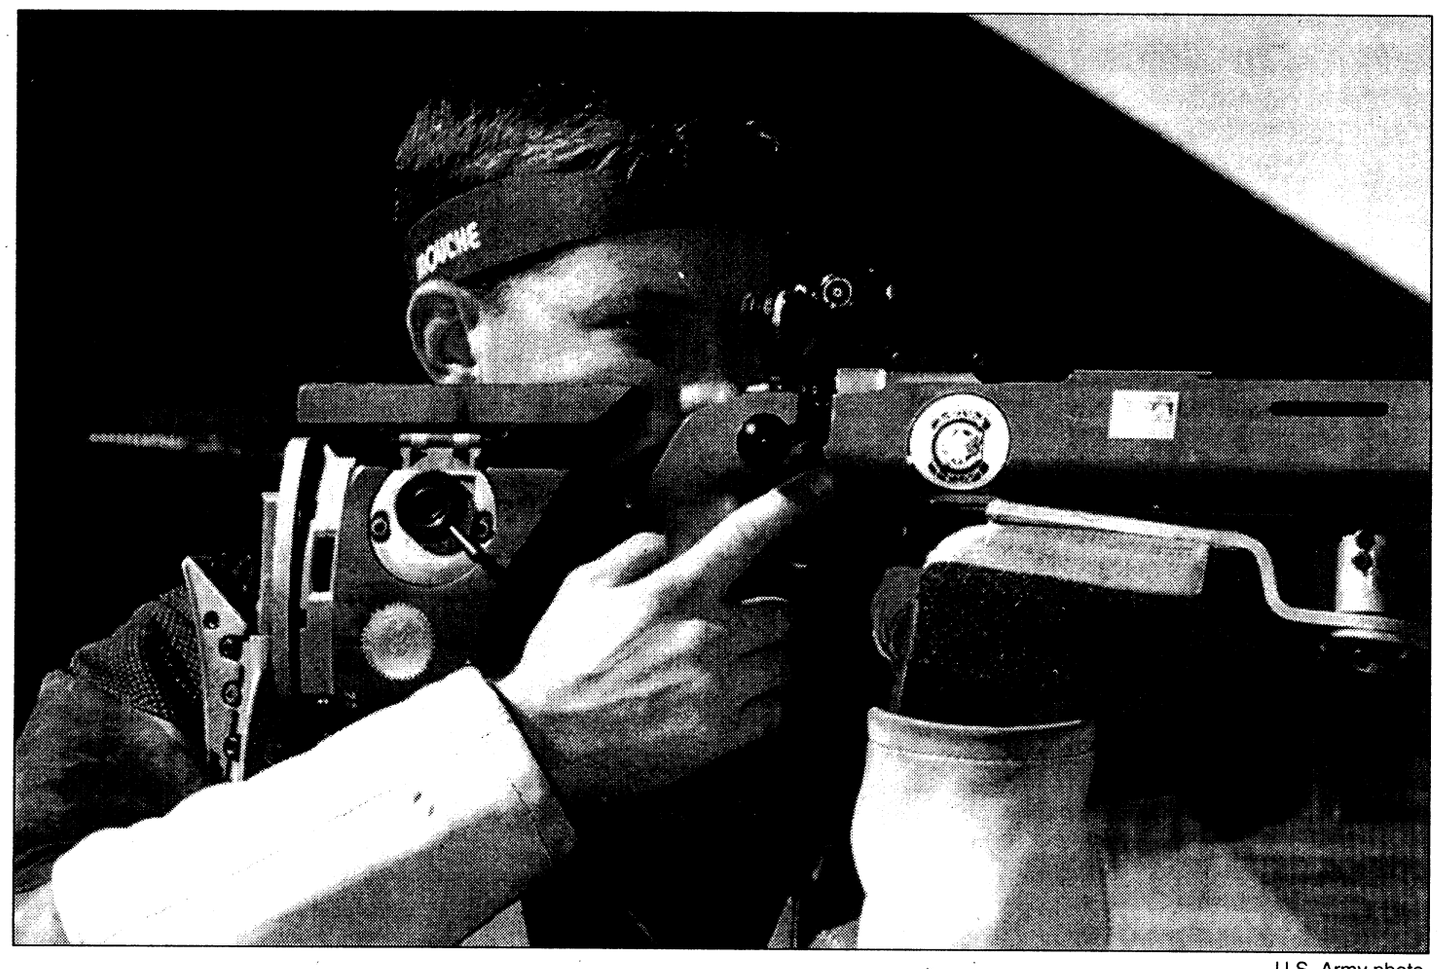
The pace picked up with wrestling action and Army World Class Athletes were in the thick of it as exciting preliminary freestyle and Greco Roman matches started July 25.

In the Greco-Roman event, Glenn Nieradka and Dremiel Byers fought their way through the preliminaries to reach the finals. In the 63 kg prelims, Nieradka bested Fernando Henrique of the Dominican Republic 10-0. In control of the match from the outset, Nieradka scored a 5-point throw on his way to a "Grand Superiority" victory in just 1:10.

"I felt pretty good out there, but I had a good training camp," said Nieradka, a two-time armed forces champion. "I was a little sluggish at first because my nerves were working against me, but once I got my first few points I felt fine."

Byers also earned a Grand Superiority victory in his first preliminary 130 kg bout, dispatching Edwin Millet of Puerto Rico 12-0 in only 1:42. Like his teammate, Byers is a two-time armed forces champion appearing in Pan Am competition for the first time.

The heavyweight won his third round bout against Carlos Nancuvil in spectacular fashion, hefting the massive Chilean over his shoulder for the 10-0 Grand Superiority win and a chance to grapple for gold.



"As I stood up to lift (Nancuvil), I heard the crowd cheering me. I decided right then I was finishing this throw," said Byers, who grunted and strained with Herculean effort as he threw his 295-pound opponent over his shoulder to earn the winning points. "I definitely felt like I wasn't alone out there; it felt good to have the crowd rooting for me."

When it was all over, Byers and Nieradka came away with silver and bronze, and that felt good for team USA.

Then it was the freestylers turn. Dominic Black, another Pan-Am first-timer, defeated Antoine Aboujaoude of Brazil and Dean R. Schmeichel of Canada to advance to the July 28 gold medal round in the 97 kg weight class.

Champions: Soldiers take Pan Am games by storm

Before a raucous crowd of international wrestling fans, Black beat Cuban and four-time Pan Am champion Wilfredo Morales 1-0 in overtime to claim his first Pan American gold medal. His was one of six gold medals the U.S. wrestling team claimed that night and the only the third international gold medal in freestyle wrestling for the Army in almost 40 years.

"Winning the gold medal means a lot," said Black. "Winning here is a good way to build up momentum for the tournaments to follow. For me, that's the world championships."

Track and field events also took place early in the Games. On Sunday, July 25, Dan Steele hammered out the last lap of the 1,500 meter run in the decathlon. That victory propelled him from third place to second and a silver medal with a total score of 8,070 points in the 10 events.

In another multi-sport event, Brett Weatherbie took the silver medal in modern pentathlon, just 97 points off the gold with a final score of 5,202.

Weatherbie, a San Antonio, Texas native, had strong finishes in shooting, swimming and running. "My weakest event is fencing," he said. I've been working really hard to get as much experience in that as I can." In the riding event, Weatherbie's performance was nearly flawless until the obstacle course when his horse refused the triple jump, ruining his rider's chance to finish without penalties.

The only Army boxer on the U.S. team, Corey Bernard, 139lbs, took the bronze medal in the light welterweight division, while two team handball players, Capt. Michael Thornberry and 2nd Lt. Jeffrey Kunard helped the U.S. squad make it to the bronze medal playoffs scheduled for the weekend.

The Pan Am Games are held every four years during the summer preceding the Olympics. These are the XIII Pan American Games; their history dates back to 1932 when the South American delegation of the International Olympic Committee proposed the formation of an organization to promote amateur sport in the Americas.

The first Pan-Am Games were set for Buenos Aires, Argentina in 1940, but World War II forced their postponement. The idea stayed alive and finally became reality, opening in Buenos Aires on Feb. 25, 1951 with 2,513 athletes from 22 countries. This year, there are nearly 5,000 athletes from 42 Western Hemisphere countries.

None of the events were televised in the United States as the Canadian network held the rights; however, a two-hour program of Pan-Am games highlights was aired August 9th on ESPN.

Athletes head to Croatia for games

Yvonne Johnson
APG News

A send-off ceremony for the more than 350 U.S. Armed Forces athletes and officials who will participate in the second World Games in Zagreb, Croatia, this month was held at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., Wednesday.

The program featured a performance by the U.S. Marine Corps Silent Drill Platoon from Washington, D.C., and was hosted by Vice Adm. Daniel T. Oliver, deputy chief of Naval Operations-Manpower and Personnel.

The program began with the playing of musical selections by the 389th Army Band (AMC's Own), and the presentation of colors by the Armed Forces Color Guard.

Oliver led the official party: Brig. Gen. Patrick Adams, chief of Armed Forces Sports; Lt. Col. Willie D. Davenport, special projects director, Army National Guard; and Chaplain (Lt. Col.) James E. May, APG Garrison chaplain.

Oliver, who serves as the senior military sports advisor for Armed Forces Sports and is the Armed Forces representative to the U.S. Olympic Committee, addressed the more than 350 athletes in attendance.

"I would like to say how proud we all are of you," Oliver said. "You personify the goals and dreams of America, individually and collectively."

Before presenting the guest speaker, Oliver called APG Garrison Commander Col. Robert J. Spidel to the stage to accept a token of thanks on behalf of Maj. Gen. John C. Doesburg, commander of APG and the U.S. Army Soldier and Biological Chemical Command.

"We offer a special thanks to Major General Doesburg and the Aberdeen community who went to great expense and planning to make this send-of possible,"Oliver said.

The program's guest speaker, Davenport, participated in five Olympics, from 1964 to 1980, winning a gold medal in the 110-meter hurdles in 1968 and a bronze medal in the same category in 1976.

Davenport told the athletes they should be proud to be a part of the very best to represent the U.S. at the World Games. "Represent the U.S. in a way your mother would be proud of," Davenport told the athletes.

"You are going to war to prevent war. You are waging a war of peace. Keep in mind that it is the spirit of the game that counts."

Following an impressive display of drill and ceremony by the U.S. Marine Corps Silent Drill Platoon, May offered a benediction, asking that the U.S. contingent serve proudly and return safely.

After a reception at the Aberdeen Area Recreation Center, the athletes departed for Baltimore-Washington International Airport and left Wednesday evening.

The send-off ceremony was the end of a long road toward the games, as the teams spent a few weeks practicing together, then converged at APG for final preparations, briefings and paperwork.

Members of the U.S. contingent come from all branches of the service and from all over the world. Many have less than five years in the military and are traveling overseas for the first time.

Though their backgrounds, athletic specialties and reasons for competing vary, they share two distinct characteristics: they are U.S. ambassadors, and they are among the best athletes in the world.

OPERATION DESERT SPRING

3rd Brigade Soldiers return from Kuwait

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

More than 1,000 3rd Brigade Soldiers returned to Fort Benning this week after spending four months in the Middle East as part of Operation Desert Spring.

The task force, which deployed to Kuwait in April, was welcomed back by hundreds of friends and family members toting posters, flowers and balloons who came out to Lawson Army Airfield Saturday, Monday and Tuesday to watch the Soldiers' return.

According to Maj. Robert Cerjan, task force operations officer, Soldiers completed an array of missions during their time in the Udairi Desert beginning with small arms qualification and company-level exercises and culminating with a task force live fire.

"The brigade live-fire exercise was the most awesome display of fire power I have ever seen," said Spc. William Sargeant, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. "The whole task force really pulled together for it."

Cerjan said the deployment was a great training opportunity for the task force.

"This is the premiere training site. You can replicate the training at NTC (National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.), but you really can't get the level of training you get when you're in Kuwait," he said.

While the deployment served as an opportunity to train, there was also a real-world mission the Soldiers had to complete.

"At this time last year, (the Iraqi military) had crossed the border into Kuwait," Cerjan said. "The task force was responsible for contingency operations and maintaining a U.S. presence to deter the Iraqi military from crossing over."

Cerjan added that the Soldiers lived up to the task force mottos "Tip of the Spear" and "Fight Tonight."

"If they would have come across that border, we were ready," he said. "But the bottom line is — they didn't so our mission was successful."

Located only 30 kilometers from the Iraqi border, the 3rd Brigade Soldiers occupied Dragon Base, a tent city complete with outdoor showers and latrines.

"It really wasn't that bad, but it did get old after a while," said Sargeant. "They kept us pretty busy so it did go by pretty fast."

Sargeant added that activities such as concerts and trips were offered to keep Soldiers' morale high.

Not only did Soldiers have to deal with being 3,000 miles away from family and friends, Cerjan said the troops experienced record-setting temperatures while in country.

"That heat was something else. The daily temperature averages about 126 degrees, but it reached a high of 143 degrees."

While Soldiers returned home with their own memorable moments from the deployment, whether it be run-ins with the local wildlife, the extreme heat or training they'd received, one thing was clear.

"It's just really good to be home," said Pvt. 2 Ephremn Bennett, HHC, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt.

New AC begins tour at Benning

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

After countless hours aboard a Columbus-bound plane from Germany, Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton and wife P.J. touched down in the steamy Georgia town late Sunday afternoon to assume the duties as one of Fort Benning's top officer-wife teams.

As Eaton, Fort Benning's new deputy commanding general and assistant commandant of the Infantry School, began his stint of service here, he said he was pleasantly surprised to find the best Army installation lives up to its title.

"This place is so different from Germany," he said during a Monday morning interview as he settled into his new office. "I am just not used to such a large installation. Everything over there is so small, and I get here and things are so nice and clean and on a much larger scale."

While the size and the immaculate condition of the post were a pleasant welcoming for the former assistant division commander for the 1st Armored Division in Germany, he said the cross-Atlantic transition was easier than ones he had made earlier in his career.

"It was an empty nest move," said the 49-year-old father of three. "The hardest thing about it was dealing with P.J.'s two dogs. A couple of the kids are still in school, but they were

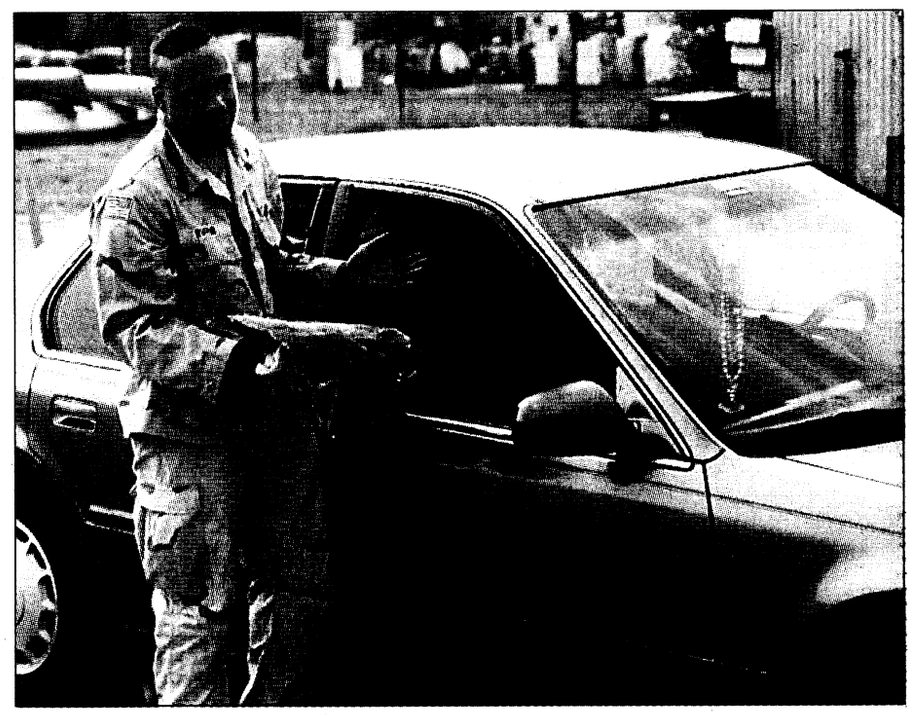
Vandals make Soldier's return less than joyous

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

As some Soldiers returning from Task Force 1-15 received word that their privately owned vehicles had been vandalized in storage, Fort Benning personnel were already preparing paperwork to ensure the Soldiers' ordeal would go as smoothly as possible.

"A list was immediately compiled from the military police report and sent via e-mail to the task force commanders who notified the Soldiers in Kuwait before they returned home," said Rear Detachment Commander Sgt. 1st Class Robert Canarios.

When the Soldiers went to pick up their cars, he said they found on-site legal assistance, a claims examiner and a local auto glass repair company. Soldiers had an opportunity to drive their cars from the lot with all the necessary paperwork or receive estimates and window repairs at the storage lot.



"We have made it as easy as possible for the Soldiers," said Cenneta A. Gunn, claims examiner from the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. "The entire claims program is based on the morale and welfare of Soldiers and we are going to do whatever is necessary to make things right. The Soldiers will not have to pay for any of the damage or loss of property."

The POVs were placed into storage April 1999 and remained in the deployment storage lot, located at Outdoor Recreation on Gillespie Street, until the Soldiers returned this week.

"Our responsibility was to ensure that the storage lot and the vehicles were checked daily," said Canarios. "We worked side by side with the manager of Outdoor Recreation, and the manager was always available for any issues that came up during the storage time frame."

According to Canarios, the vehicle damage occurred between close of business Aug. 7 and the morning of Aug. 9

Back to school jitters affect everyone

Marni Magowen Otjen
Special to the Bayonet©

Do you remember being a child and waiting for that first day of a new school year to hurry up and get here?

commentary

Do you remember waiting to meet your new classmates and your teacher, wondering if you would make friends and hoping that your teacher was nice? Or shopping for school supplies, picking out notebooks in your favorite colors and angling for the big box of crayons. When you are young, that type of change is exciting and scary all at the same time.

A new school year meant progression, the next step in life's adventure. The chance to finally be one of the 'big' kids, to move from T-ball to baseball, or to go to the same school as your older sister. The beginning of a new school year truly was the beginning of a new period in your life.

There was always the chance to reinvent yourself, to try something different. The butterflies in your stomach marked that thrill of discovery, and while sometimes it was academic, it was always personal.

First-day-of-school jitters change as we get older. When you are 5, the jitters may be about being away from your parents; when you are 12, maybe you are nervous about changing classes for the first time; and when you are 15, everything that you wear, say and do can be worrisome.

Apprehension about the first day of school does not always stop when you graduate from high school though; anything that represents the beginning of a new phase in our lives can produce the same effect.

Training for a new career, taking a college class after a few years away from academia, or beginning a military school can make your stomach churn with the same uncertainties you felt when you were waiting for the school bus. Will you interact well with your colleagues? Are you prepared for this experience; is your haircut bad? The desire to fit in and to succeed certainly does not disappear with the superhero lunchbox.

School is a critical part of our socialization process. When we begin our school careers, we learn not only our ABCs, but also some simple truths about life. We learn to share, to wait our turn, and to ask to be acknowledged. We learn to identify with a group while at the same time striving for individuality.

These basic lessons continue to pop up in learning environments throughout our lives. In college classes or military courses, we may quickly realize that sharing information with peers is the fastest way to excel both academically and socially. In our jobs we find ourselves waiting our turn for the next promotion while learning that to be good leaders we must first be good followers. As we grow into ourselves we ask to be acknowledged for who we are and for the ways that we contribute to society.

From the time we are children, throughout our lives, each learning process that we undergo helps us to define ourselves. By choosing which groups we are part of — whether they are social, professional or personal — we are reshaping who we are. It is the struggle to be a part of something larger than ourselves, while at the same time making clearer our individuality, that produces the jitters at the start of a new experience.

As kids go back to school this month, we can take time to remember all the feelings that we had at the various stages of our own development. Not just the first day of kindergarten, but the first day of college, Ranger school, a new job, or whatever events were significant to us as individuals. We can look at who we are right now, think about the choices we made to get here, and anticipate all of the scary yet exciting new beginnings that await us — knowing that back to school butterflies are not always found in a new box of crayons.

Post schools add to quality of life

Fort Benning is blessed in many ways, and one of them is that we are fortunate to have our own Department of Defense school system, a major quality of life asset. This affords us a direct line of communication with the superintendent, the faculty and support staff, and the school board.

They are all part of our "team of teams." Also, the teachers have a better sense for the unique demands of military service and the impacts of short-notice deployments, long separations and dual military families on students. Understanding this can make our school staffs better-equipped to deal with the issues which arise from these conditions.

Since our schools are on our military installation, we are able to provide a more secure environment for study than most communities. Working closely with the school staffs, our own law enforcement, emergency medical services and fire departments are able to provide well-integrated and highly responsive protection for all who work and study in our schools.

While no system is completely "foolproof," certainly ours is designed to create a "safe and secure" environment where students will be able to make the most of the program offered, without fear of harm. We expect parents to do their part, by reinforcing the principles of personal responsibility, compliance with all school conduct codes, including dress codes, and by personally cooperating with all school security measures. Deeds speak louder than words, when it comes to teaching young people how to act.

We know that parents are a "critical link" in the educational process. Become personally involved in the schools your children attend — investing time and energy as a volunteer. Every school has more tasks for volunteers than they can possibly fill, and there is something on that list that matches every parent's abilities. Establish a relationship with your children's teachers from the outset, rather than waiting until there's a disciplinary matter that brings you together. Working with the schools' staff and faculty in a positive, supportive way will pay huge dividends in the attitude your children have toward the importance of education.

Remember that as the school year starts, our law enforcement units will be visible in the community, to make sure our streets are safe for the increased traffic of young people headed to and from classes. We all need to obey the posted speed limits and be particularly observant at intersections and school crossings ... there are few "second chances" in accidents involving automobiles and pedestrians.

Our Fort Benning schools are among the best in Georgia and have won recognition in many different programs. Ultimately, the success of our schools is due to two things: the quality of staff and the active involvement of parents. Let's continue to "reinforce success" in this important area of equipping young people for the future.

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst

letter

I would like to take this opportunity to inform you of the exceptional performance of Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Shank. Shank was assigned to help us as a survivor's assistance officer after the passing of my father, Staff Sgt. Franklin D. R. Cromer, on March 27 of this year.

During the month of April, Shank made himself available to us at anytime that we needed him. He organized everything with special attention to the slightest detail. We had confidence in this Soldier during the entire duration.

I'm sure that you expect first class performance from all of the fine men and women serving under your command. However, I feel that Shank went above and beyond what was expected of him. Not only did he perform his duties to help us very professionally, but also displayed compassion to us all. We feel as if we gained a friend. Several time during the month of April, my father's widow, Martha B. Cromer became worried about the many matters that would arise during a sad occasion such as this. Shank immediately calmed her nerves by reminding her that he would handle everything, which he did, and very well at that.

Shank

We were never made to feel we were burdening this fine Soldier. He informed us that he was honored to be able to help perform this service, that he felt as if he were helping a fellow Soldier who has gone on to his final rest. My father served in Vietnam and Korea during his 20 years of service and was always proud that he had done his duty. I knew my father very well, and I am certain that he felt honored to have Shank help us in this trying time.

Shank performed admirably, displaying a devotion to his duties, pride in his service in the U.S. Army, a positive attitude and a very honorable character. Martha Cromer, her family and I am grateful to the U.S. Army and to you for assigning him to help us.

— Frank M. Cromer

Anthrax vaccine proves to be safe, effective tool

Special to the American Forces Press Service

One of warfare's guiding principles has always been that a weakened enemy is a more easily defeated enemy.

Historically, this principle seems to have had particular relevance when it came to biological weapons. The first recorded use of biological warfare involved the Romans, who placed animal carcasses in the water supplies of their enemies — an act of creative attack that poisoned the water, thinned the opposition's ranks and dealt a mortal blow to enemy morale. In later centuries, the Tartars took this concept one step further by catapulting bodies infected with bubonic plague over the walls of besieged cities.

These rudimentary attempts pale in comparison to the ability of modern technology to perfect the means and methods of biological warfare. As such weapons become more powerful, accurate and deadly, and more available and easier to deliver, our military personnel are increasingly at risk.

Today, at least 10 countries, including Iraq and North Korea, now have — or are attempting to acquire or produce — biological weapons. Within this context, anthrax remains the weapon of choice for germ warfare: As Secretary of Defense William Cohen has said, "It is very easy to weaponize and almost always deadly."

When anthrax is inhaled, death is the predictable outcome for those who have not been vaccinated. Once clinical symptoms appear, death is assured despite the most heroic, state-of-the-art, post-exposure medical intervention and treatment. Death from anthrax can be prevented by vaccination — it provides our men and women in uniform with their only chance of survival.

In an effort to protect our military personnel from the anthrax threat, the Department of Defense has begun inoculating the Total Force with the anthrax vaccine. Over the next seven years, 1.4 million active duty personnel and some 900,000 members of the Selected Reserve will be immunized.

I have taken four in the series of six anthrax shots as required by the Food and Drug Administration for full protection. Secretary Cohen, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Hugh Shelton, and numerous other senior military and civilian leaders have done the same, and they, too, are on their way to full protection against this threat.

The anthrax vaccine has had an excellent safety record since it was first licensed and approved by the FDA in 1970. Before Secretary Cohen authorized the use of a single dose, he ordered supplemental testing of the vaccine, doubly ensuring the vaccine's safety and far exceeding any pharmaceutical industry standards. Supplemental testing, combined with the ongoing supervision of the FDA, demonstrates that the vaccine is safe and effective.

In addition, many independent organizations have explicitly endorsed the vaccine, including the FDA, the World Health Organization, the American Public Health Association, the National Academy of Sciences, the American Academy of Pediatrics, the Centers for Disease Control, the American College of Physicians, and the National Institutes of Health.

As of July 1999, more than 315,000 service members have received over 1,013,000 shots. The rate of FDA-reported adverse reactions for this vaccine is less than those reported for other vaccines, such as typhoid and hepatitis A and B, making this one of the safest vaccination programs in history. The department will continue to closely monitor any adverse reactions and provide appropriate and timely medical evaluation and care.

The Department of Defense is also working closely with the BioPort Corp., currently the vaccine's only FDA-licensed manufacturer, to ensure the continued sterility, safety, potency and purity of the vaccine and to ensure a sufficient supply to meet the department's requirements. BioPort purchased the anthrax vaccine production facility from the State of Michigan in 1998, and since then has upgraded and added to its existing facility.

Sending our men and women in uniform into harm's way without anthrax protection would deny them the protection they need and threaten the critical missions they are called upon to perform. Just as we would not send our forces into battle without helmets and flak jackets, we cannot send them into an arena unprotected from another known threat — anthrax.

Simply put, if we stop anthrax protection today, we would threaten force health protection tomorrow. Secretary Cohen and Gen. Shelton said it more succinctly when they recently wrote: "Our commanders must know that all, not simply some fraction, of their forces are protected from this biologic threat. Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines fight in teams and they need to know that all team members are protected from anthrax."

Our men and women in uniform are routinely vaccinated against many diseases, including tetanus, diphtheria, influenza, hepatitis A, measles, mumps, rubella, polio and yellow fever. The anthrax vaccine will protect our personnel from another disease —a disease that will kill, a disease that can be used as a weapon. So what we are doing today is no different from what we have always tried to do: We are taking prudent measures to protect the Total Force.

The anthrax protection program is the right course of action and the most effective way to counter this lethal threat. The vaccine is safe, effective, FDA-licensed and essential for protecting all our personnel — active duty, National Guard and Reserve.

If you have questions, ask your commanders or medical personnel; go to the department's official anthrax Web site at: www.anthrax.osd.mil; or call the new anthrax hot line at 1-877-GETVACC.

Above all, understand the basic facts: Anthrax kills, vaccination protects.

Gunn said she felt sadness for the Soldiers because there was no purpose for all the destruction.

"Whoever did this did it just to be destructive — many of the Soldiers had stereos, personal belongings and even money in their cars and they didn't steal them."

Pfc. Kevin Ruffin returned Aug. 17 to deal with his damaged Honda Accord.

"It's devastating to return home from a real-world deployment and have to worry about our cars instead of spending time with friends and family," he said. "It's sad that people don't care and would do this type of thing for no reason.

"I hope they catch who ever did this."

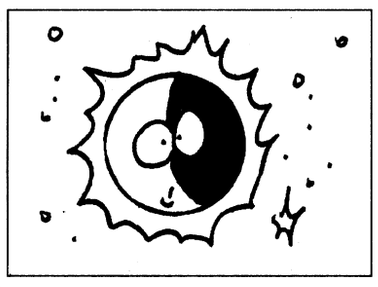
gone when we moved, so it really wasn't that hard on the family."

As he settled into this quarters and office early Monday, Eaton said things are getting as close to normal as they can be for the newest guy on the block.

"It will be nice to get up tomorrow and know where my BDUs are hanging and where everything is in the office," he said. "I am trying to learn as much as possible as quickly as possible so I can get on line with the rest of the staff."



That quick learning is going to be essential for the future of the Infantry Center because Eaton will be looked upon for continuity of policy as he will be the mainstay as Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst retires later this year.

"I have only had a total of 15 minutes together with the general, since I have been so busy getting settled," he said. "I know it is on both of our agendas to take care of those first things first and to ensure the transition process goes as smoothly as possible."

While Eaton said he considered himself an agent for the general and his priorities should reflect that, he said his mission is one of importance to the commanders and Soldiers of Fort Benning as well.

"The colonels in all parts of Fort Benning need to have the tools to be able to have an effective command," he said. "They need to have everything they possibly can to make the American Infantryman the best warrior in the world, and I will do what I can to make that happen."

"Whatever I can do to continue the high quality of training here is what I will do," he said. "That goes for everyone from my office to the private in training."

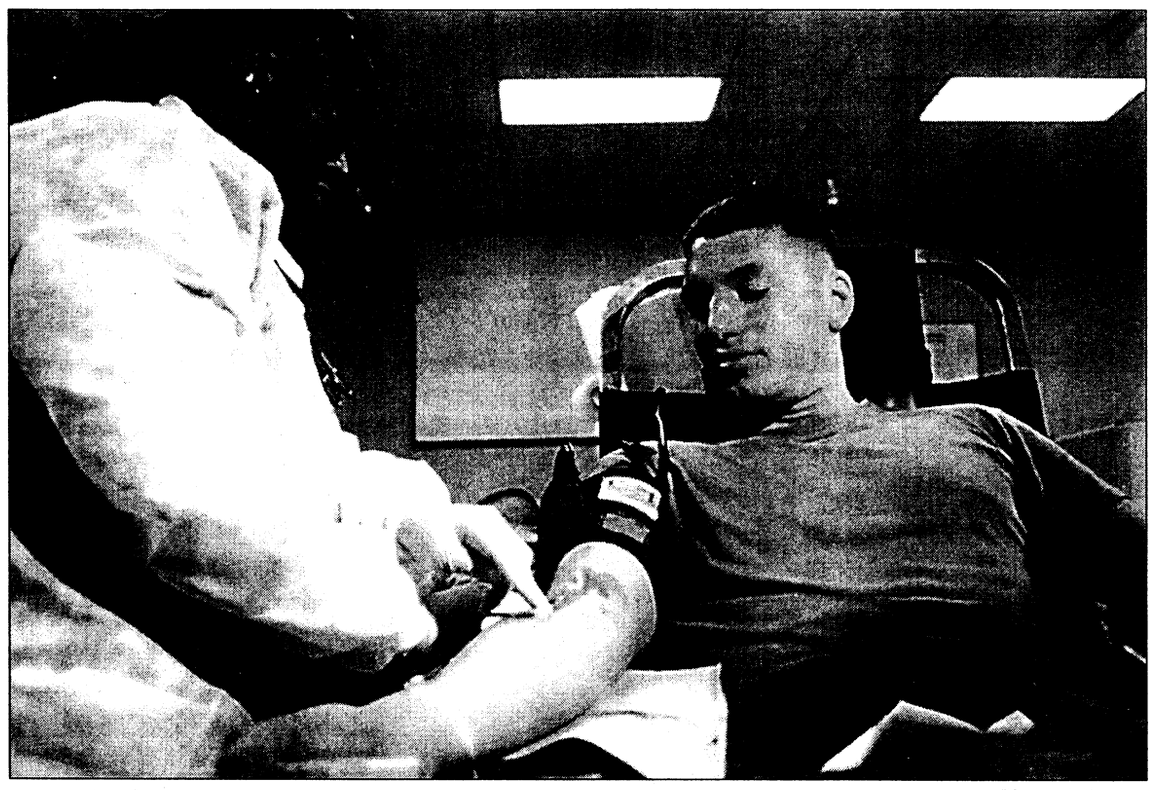
Saving the day

Fort Benning Soldiers do part to help with blood shortage

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer



A plane unable to make a safe landing plummeted into the runway at Columbus Metropolitan Airport and local hospitals scrambled to save the 70-plus people who were charred by the incinerating fire that engulfed the cabin upon impact.

Operating rooms and trauma units quickly depleted their blood vault and were forced to call upon local blood banks to provide the much needed blood that was lost by the victims during the firey crash.

Although this scenario has not proven true for the the residents of Columbus, accidents like these happen across the country. And increasingly the blood vault centers are drawing from are coming up short to near empty.

"We have been dangerously short this summer," said Mari McEwen, a Red Cross blood services representative during a blood drive at 4th Ranger Training Battalion earlier this week. "Not only have we had the normal summer decrease, but over the past couple of years we have seen a dramatic decline in the total number of donors year-round."

According to McEwen, blood banks around the country see a 15- to 20-percent decline annually in the total amounts drawn during the summer months because of students being out of school. That student-related decline coupled with the increased activity of people during the summer has always put the banks in a blood drought, but he said the problem this summer is at an unusually dangerous level.

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

Sgt. David Robbins, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, watches as a Red Cross nurse draws blood during a 4th-RTBn hosted blood drive earlier this week. The drive surpassed normal unit participation by nearly 15 percent with more than 50 percent of the unit participating. Drives like these assist in the replenishment of the dangerously low blood supply.

"Our goal is to supply local banks with a two and half-day supply of blood to support their trauma facilities," she said. "However, during the July 4th weekend, we were down to a half-day supply."

Situations like the holiday weekend put emergency departments in a dangerous predicament pending catastrophes. Although blood supplies have increased slightly since the holiday weekend, McEwen still warns of a potential risk if more people don't give.

"We are doing better than we were in July," she said. "But we still aren't out of the woods. We are still at a dangerous level and without the assistance of potential donors, we could easily slip back into the same situation."

Luckily, she said, school will be in session soon and the banks will regain the student donation population, but she emphasized the need for people to donate year-round to rebuild the blood supply.

"It is just the right thing to do," she added. "If you were in a situation and needed blood, you would want it. Since blood cannot be manufactured, the only way we can get it is through donations. That is why blood drives like these are so very important."

For information on the next drive location and time r to find out how you can give blood, call the American Red Cross Office on post at 545-5194.

Day recognizes anniversary of women's suffrage

Marni Magowan Otjen

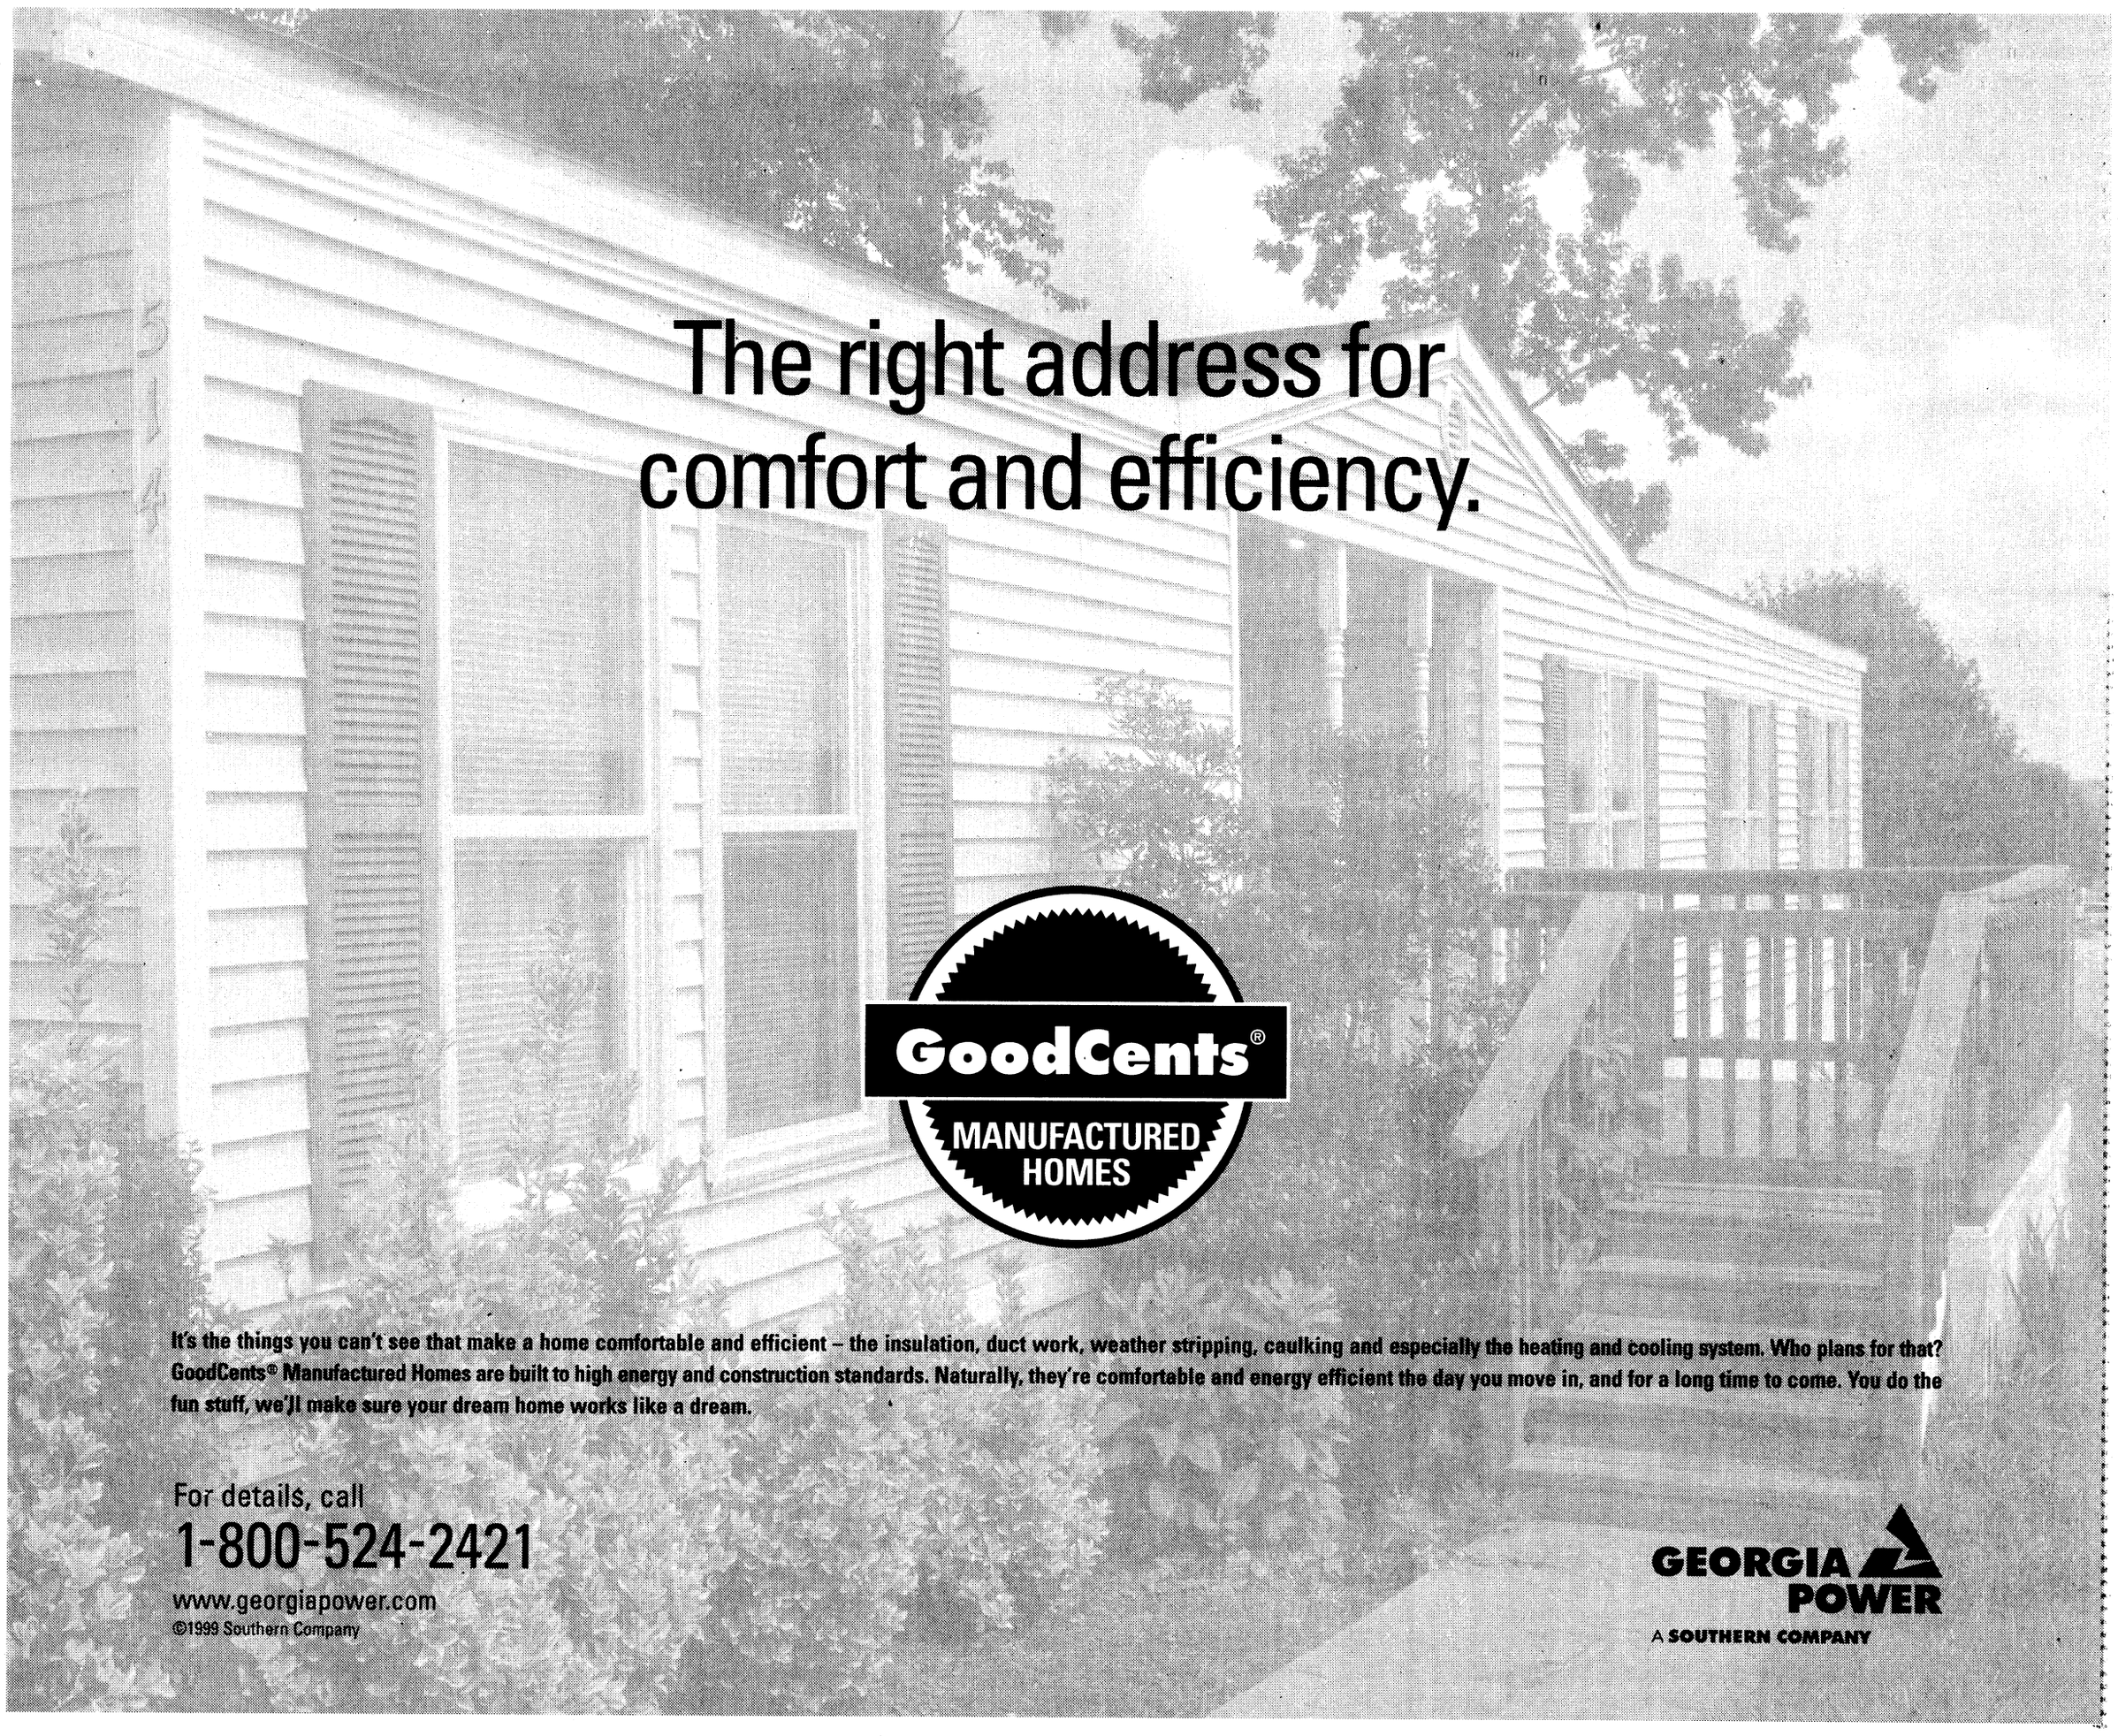
This Thursday, both at Fort Benning and throughout the nation, people will observe Women's Equality Day. Post activities will include a luncheon to be held at the Fort Benning Officers' Club beginning at 11:45 a.m. Phenix City Mayor Peggy Martin will be the guest speaker.



It was Aug. 26, 1920, when the 66th U.S. Congress ratified the 19th amendment guaranteeing American women the right to vote. The amendment states that "The right of citizens of the U.S. to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the U.S. or by any state on account of sex." It had taken well over a century for women to achieve a voice in the governing of our nation, but the 19th amendment was only the beginning of a long and continuing struggle for equality in all arenas. Later victories would include acts protecting women from discrimination in employment, education and pay.

In 1971, Congress designated Aug. 26 "Women's Equality Day." In 1998, President Clinton proclaimed that "As women continue to distinguish themselves in boardrooms, classrooms, courtrooms, and family rooms across America, we must renew our efforts to empower all women with the rights and opportunities promised by our founders and fought for by the heroic women and men whose achievements we honor today."

The women's rights movement became a strong force in the U.S. in the 1830s and was tied in many ways to the campaign to abolish slavery. The first introduction of a congressional amendment calling for women's suffrage occurred in 1878 and the amendment would continue to be presented every year until it was finally passed. By 1912, nine states had passed legislation allowing women's suffrage.

During World War I, women became a crucial part of the war industry, which strengthened their position in favor of federal legislation regarding women's suffrage. Seventy-nine years ago Thursday, Secretary of State Bainbridge Colby certified the ratification of the 19th amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Soldier finds refuge in America, Army

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Eight-year Cuban National Rowing champion and Cuban Army officer Ernesto Abreu knew with an approaching tropical storm that the Cuban Coast Guard would cease patrolling. After escaping custody and eluding his imminent death by firing squad, Abreu had one more challenge — the raging seas. Desperately he assembled a raft from two old tractor inner tubes, scraps of wood and a couple of shovels bound together with rope. Time was crucial and drawing short, so without provisions and wearing only the clothes on his back he pushed the raft into the turbulent surf.

"The waves were overpowering so I had to push the raft through the surf and when I was about two miles out I began to row," said Abreu, now a specialist in the U.S. Army. "I rowed for five days and five nights through two tropical storms. At night I tied myself to the raft so I would not be thrown off by the huge waves that engulfed the entire raft at times."

"During the day I attempted to gather my course by the sun's path from sunrise to sunset. I tried to get water by catching drops of rain, but the drops were like ice falling from the sky — I eventually drank a little salt water to survive."

On the sixth day, Abreu spotted a fishing boat in the distance and signaled them with a mirror he had in his pocket that he had taken from an old car. The boat, filled with tourists, came to the raft, but strict customs' rules prohibited anyone from aiding Cuban refugees.

"I was near death at this point and did not speak English. When they told me I was about 10 miles from Miami, I was so grateful for the directions that I gave them the top I was wearing which was my Olympic warm-up jacket. They probably never understood the real message," Abreu said. "I was driven by my happiness as I rowed toward Florida. When I landed on the beach, I knew that God was watching over me because I did not die."

Abreu was born and raised by his mother in Holguin, Cuba, a country that from birth provides for the basic needs of individuals but in return demands unswerving obedience. Abreu reminisced about how it was growing up in Cuba during a time of great change under Fidel Castro's dictatorship.

"We had two television channels and both of them were government channels. The news played four times a day and was always related to politics, playing negative film clips and propaganda about capitalist countries. The government manipulates the system by using negative propaganda to convince the citizens that what they have is better — I was always curious as to why they were teaching me these things."

At 16, Abreu joined the National Rowing Team of Cuba and eventually earned a master's degree in physical education. While traveling to competitions throughout the world his views on life started to change. He began to gather information about the differences between socialist, communist and democratic systems, and sought knowledge of world economics, current events and politics.

"When I traveled I would sneak magazines to read, and I remember thinking, 'Why do we not have things like this?' I was amazed at the technology of foreign countries."

Abreu said that during his travels he realized that Cubans are confused because they don't know what goes on in the world.

"Cubans are not allowed to have any kind of relationship with tourists because, according to Castro, they disturb the intellectual mentality of a revolutionary citizen by bringing in technology and free world ideas."

Angered after training for eight years and being denied an Olympic appearance in 1984 and 1988 because of communist block boycotts, Abreu began speaking out against the government and was caught trying to defect during a layover in Canada. He was asked to leave the National Team and forced to do mandatory service in the Cuban Army.

"I was commissioned as an officer because I had a degree; however, I never agreed with the Cuban War in Angola because 20,000 Cuban Soldiers between the ages of 16 and 19 lost their lives for a completely pointless cause," said Abreu. "When I spoke out on Cuban involvement in Angola, the Army arranged for my court martial and probable prosecution."

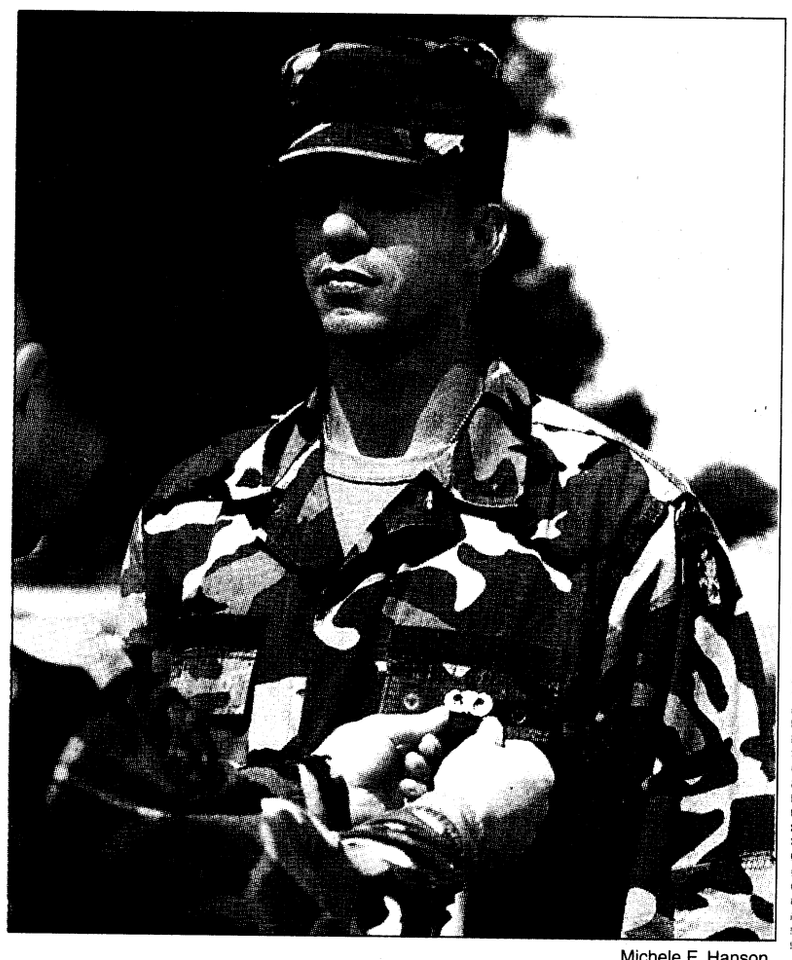
Sept. 23, 1991, after fleeing Cuba in a make-shift raft, Abreu stepped onto a Florida beach and became a free man for the first time. He was picked up by the Florida Highway Patrol, imprisoned, turned over to customs and finally placed in a refugee camp. With no friends or family to sponsor him he would eventually be transferred to Texas and added to their labor force.

"The next morning, Aida Rodriguez, a lady who work for the Catholic Church read my autobiography (refugees are required to write one) and found it interesting because she was born in the same city as myself. She sponsored me and took me to Gainesville, Fla., to live," Abreu said. "Immigrants from Cuba are allowed to collect food stamps for one year, but I never needed that kind of help because I immediately took two minimum-wage jobs and stayed off welfare. I made enough money to pay for my apartment and I eventually bought a car for $600."

During the next two years, Abreu married a French woman, became a father and embarked on a mission to further his education, but his efforts were fruitless because his records remained in Cuba. After getting his transcripts from his rowing coach in Cuba, he was still unable to gain entrance into a college and if he had been accepted, he would not be eligible for financial aid because he was not an American citizen.

"One day I was watching television when an Army commercial came on. I looked at my wife and said 'Did I ever tell you I was in the Army,'" Abreu said. "The next day I saw an Army recruiter and enlisted into the Army as a specialist within a few weeks."

Although most career fields were closed to Abreu, he said the Army has worked for him, not against him. Throughout Basic Training, Advanced Individual Training and a one-year holdover pending a security clearance, he took full advantage of military education opportunities by taking college-level entrance placement tests and correspondence courses.



After receiving his security clearance, Abreu traveled to Fort Benning for Airborne School in February. He had another setback when he suffered from a broken leg after his second jump. Abreu, never giving up on his goal, re-entered jump school and graduated Aug. 13.

"I am now assigned to U.S. School of Americas and I am excited that my family can finally join me after nearly two years of separation," Abreu said. "The Army is not a bad life here in America. I can count on the benefits and look brightly at the future — I know I will sacrifice myself for two or three years but eventually I will be an American citizen, earn another master's degree at Troy State University and hopefully get a chance to attend Officer Candidate School."

Recruit demonstrates patriotism to new country

Capt. James Brownlee
Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

During the month of July, patriotism is more than just a word, it's a way of life. And for many members of the armed forces, being a patriot and swearing to uphold the Constitution was what they were born to do. Many may take being an American citizen for granted; however, many were not so lucky to be born in America and had to fight lengthy personal battles and overcome tremendous hardships just to come to America. For some of these new Americans, deciding to join the armed forces was not the question, the question was when and how.

On any given day or night, patriots from all over the country convene on one spot time and again. This place is Fort Benning's Sand Hill. And one distinctive battalion on Sand Hill has always trained these young patriots in the rigors of becoming hard-charging Infantry Soldiers.

The 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, has one Soldier in particular that knew that if he could ever get to America, joining the American military was going to be his way of demonstrating his loyalty and patriotism to his new country. This young Soldier is Pvt. 2 Viktor Pejic.

Pejic (pronounced Page) came to the United States from Vojvodina, a providence of Yugoslavia in August of 1992 with his family and six suitcases. He was almost 14 and in a new country with a vocabulary of about 300 English words. Four days after finding a home in Michigan City, Ind., he entered the eighth grade.

To some people having a working knowledge of only 300 words in any language is better than nothing, but not for Pejic. After only a few months in his new country, he was able to carry on conversations without saying, "What does that mean?" Moreover, by the end of his senior year in high school, he was doing freelance photography for his local paper and had obtained his real estate salesman's license by taking night classes. He graduated from high school in 1997 with academic honors and was accepted to Ball State University's College of Architecture and Planning.

In October of 1998, he and his family received word that their permanent resident status had been approved. The day he had waited on for so long had finally arrived. He was ready to prove to his new country that his feelings of patriotism were just not words. A week after receiving his permanent resident status, he enlisted in the Indiana Army National Guard. Moreover, two days after his last final of his sophomore year in college, he was in his local miliary processing station ready to fulfill his dream and his "patriotic obligation."

Pejic is now assigned to Company C, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt. He is in his 11th week of training, preparing to graduate.

"He's a go-getter, someone who definitely needs no follow up. If I ask him to do something or if he sees something that needs to be done, you can bet that he's going to get it done, and bet on it that it's going to be done right the first time," said Spc. Phillip W. Patton, Pejic's platoon guide.

When asked what kind of Soldier Pejic is and how he performs his duties within his platoon, Staff Sgt. Regan, Pejic's drill sergeant, said, "He is becoming a Soldier more and more each day. He's a real performer. I really did not expect that from a Soldier of his background. What I mean by that is that I did not expect him to be so assertive. He is definitely not one to sit and watch things happen; he is the one making them happen."

Pejic's performance speaks for itself. Not only has he met the Army's expectations of a model Soldier, he has set the standard within his platoon as well. He has a 298 physical fitness test average, and qualified with his weapon the first time on qualification day.

"I knew this decision to join was the right decision; however, this training is really a whole lot tougher than I expected it to be — both physically and mentally," Pejic. "I spent long hours getting ready for my basic training. I got my run time down to 11:30 and I always did push-ups and sit-ups whenever I got the chance." He said his favorite training event to date has been rappelling at Todd Field.

Pejic and the rest of Co. C, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt. graduate Aug. 27 at 9 a.m. on Kanell Field, on Sand Hill. The public is invited and the guest speaker will be Army National Guard Col. Martin Weaver of Martinsville, Ind.

Do homework when entering job market

Army Career and Alumni Program

"Separating Soldiers will find the transition to civilian life less stressful if they conduct some research before beginning the ACAP process," said Chick Eagle of Fort Benning's Army Career and Alumni Program. "ACAP counselors have helped thousands of Soldiers develop a job search strategy. The best strategy is one built around a sound career plan supported by research done by the Soldier and family members."

Eagle added that the Army may teach many skills and affords ample opportunity to gain experience. It is the responsibility of the separating Soldier to research the job market and decide what career path is better for him or her.

"If time and circumstances permit, we advise conducting visits to job sites, companies, offices, police departments, schools and training programs or wherever more information is needed about jobs, qualifications and the application process," he said.

Eagle said often civilian pay and benefits are high on the priority list for separating Soldiers. He said finding out about pay and benefits requires not only good research, but also detailed analysis of current military base pay, housing, food, medical, dental and insurance to arrive at what is needed to support a desired lifestyle. In some situations, Eagle said that a career goal will not initially meet pay and benefits needed and an alternate occupation must be sought.

"Perhaps the best way to research is to use your network of friends and family to ask for information about careers, pay and businesses. People like to talk about what they do and how they got into their job," he said. "This kind of friendly interrogation can help transitioning personnel find whether they are really suited for a particular job or not."

Some Soldiers, with permission from their chain of command, have found part-time employment off post to research first hand the civilian job market.

"Job fairs, employer days, recruiters, temporary placement firms, newspaper, internet and other sources can help provide additional information about career opportunities," Eagle said.

The ACAP Center is a good place to meet employers and do some research. For more information on the center, call 545-2308 or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Define your leadership style. I try to use a little of all three in the later stages of basic to give the Soldiers and opportunity to have input. But in the early stages it definitely has to be authoritative.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill? To see a Soldier who tells me he wants to quit, tough it out because I won't let him quit, and see the Soldier's sense of accomplishment when he does walk across the parade field.

Subcommittee visits USARSA provides advice

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
USARSA, Public Affairs Office

Members of a Board of Visitors met at U.S. Army School of the Americas Aug. 8-11.

The BOV is a subcommittee of the Army Education Advisory Committee constituted under Public Law 92-463 (The Federal Advisory Committee Act), that provides advice to USARSA related to educational policy, school curriculums, educational philosophy and objectives, program effectiveness, facilities, staff and faculty, instructional methods, and other aspects of organization and management.

Since 1992, the curriculum of USARSA has undergone a series of external evaluations by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, the Inspectors General of the Department of the Army, the Department of Defense and by the U.S. Southern Command. These reviews have formed the basis for certifications to Congress by the Secretary of Defense.

The latest, which is dated Dec. 10, 1998, certified that USARSA's instruction was fully consistent with U.S. military doctrine, and that the USARSA curriculum on international humanitarian law and human rights exceeded that conducted at other U.S. Army Schools.

The BOV members who visit the school encompass a group of professors, ambassadors, retired four-star generals and human rights experts. The BOV included such members as Ambassador Luigi Einaudi, Ambassador David Passage, Retired Gen. Paul Gorman, Dr. David Scott Palmer, Dr. Johanna Mendelsohn, Dr. Louis Goodman and Steve Schneebaum, human rights attorney.

Giving special attention to the curriculum of human rights taught at the School, the BOV found that all USARSA students were exposed to Human Rights Awareness Training as a special block in every course taught, whether in the classroom or in field training.

Meeting with Gen. Charles E. Wilhelm, commander in chief, USSOUTHCOM, the BOV asked for his appraisal of the effectiveness of the USARSA curriculum as it relates to the performance of its graduates.

"While there are undoubtedly graduates who ignored what they had been taught at the School, there are legions of diligent, honorable, principled and highly professional military officers who have returned to their countries and played leading roles in enterprises such as the forging of the peace accords between Peru and Ecuador and the recovery of devastated communities from the ravages of Hurricane Mitch," Wilhelm said.

Beside meeting with Wilhelm, the BOV also met with Gen. John N. Abrams, commanding general, TRADOC and Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general. Col. Glenn R. Weidner, Commandant of USARSA, members of the faculty and representatives from the Secretary of the Army's office, Deputy Undersecretary of the Army for International Affairs, USSOUTHCOM, TRADOC and the U.S. Army Infantry Center, were also

MOBILE TRAINING TEAM

Snipers train 10th Mountain Soldiers

Sgt. 1st Class Rimonie Mapu
29th Infantry Regiment

A Mobile Training Team consisting of five instructors from the U.S. Army Sniper School, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment recently returned to Fort Benning following a deployment to Fort Drum, NY, from a five-day mission in support of the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division.

The MTT conducted sniper advanced rifle marksmanship training and sniper techniques and employment for the Soldiers in support of the ongoing mission in the Balkans.

This is the third MTT of this type that the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. has deployed in the last nine months.

The standard mission has been to train 30 personnel from the supported unit on the M-24 Sniper Weapons System. The Soldiers from Fort Drum are next in line to go to Bosnia in support of Operation Joint Forge.

The training provided consisted of advanced rifle marksmanship, target detection, range estimation, organization, use and employment of snipers, sniper operations in an urban environment, AN/PVS-10 Day and Night Optic and Counter Sniper Operations.

This training proved to be both mentally and physically demanding. The MTT from Fort Benning consisted of Sgt. 1st Class Rimonie Mapu, Staff Sgt. Ronald Lane, Staff Sgt. David Broseus, Staff Sgt. James Cork and Sgt. Ediray Montgomery.

The next unit scheduled to deploy to Bosnia is the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment from Fort Carson, Colo. The U.S. Army Sniper School is planning on conducting another MTT in December.

Chaplain offers comfort, words of help in crisis

Chaplain (Capt.) Milton Johnson
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

If you've had a close friend or relative suddenly pass away, and are feeling empty because of their absence, I want to offer you some words of help and comfort.

reflections

First, let me say that during the month of July, I had two close associates die without any sign of impending danger — one of natural causes, the other accidental. The first was a senior citizen and the second a youth. Both were close to me and when they died (about two weeks apart), I felt a sense of emotional pain and loss. Before the month ended, and I scarcely had grieved their deaths, the news of the Kennedy-Bessette tragedy shocked the nation; reminding me that death neither warns before it hits, nor comforts when it leaves.

My elderly friend and his wife were visiting one of their daughters in Texas when he had a heart attack and passed away while sleeping. His wife said she tried to wake him for breakfast, but after shaking him several times and getting no response, she took his pulse and discovered he was dead. When I was told what happened, I know that my first words, "I'm sorry," were not enough.

More tragic was the death of my younger friend, only 15 years old. She and several other young people were participating in a car wash to earn money for a Christian weekend excursion to Atlanta, when a car struck and killed her upon impact. Stunned by her death, I immediately prayed, "Lord, give me words to say to her family to console them and help them have peace when so much was taken so quickly."

That's the devastating thing about death. It doesn't announce its visit, respect age or give back who it captures. Survivors are left to move on however, and make the best of whatever is left of their lives.

The following poem speaks of something death can't take or destroy:

Those we love remain with us,
For love itself lives on.
Cherished memories never fade,
Because a loved one is gone.
Those we love can never be,
More than a thought apart.
For as long as there is memory,
They'll live on in our heart.

— Unknown

The other thing about death is that it gives relief and rest to whomever it selects. What I mean is that life is fun, but life is like an uphill journey. When people die, they are relieved of walking and climbing the mountain in life — they can rest. Most of us long for annual vacations and retirement when we can relax and take a break from the day-to-day hustle and bustle. The Bible puts it this way, "There is a time and a season for everything under the sun, a time to be born and a time to die ..." Ecclesiastes 3:2.

My prayers are with you if death claimed one of your loved ones. But remember, that person is at rest and for that we can be thankful.

Parents need to explain divorce to children

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries

Divorce is never easy, especially when there are children involved. A question that is often asked of me by couples going through a divorce is, "How should we explain divorce to our children."

reflections

It is very important that divorcing parents be honest with their children. Divorce is very traumatic for children and most go through a difficult time of adjustment. While some children do experience long-term problems most do not. The important factor in all of this is how the divorcing parents can help their children through this most difficult time.

One of the most common feelings children of divorcing parents experience is guilt. As parents we want to shield our children from stress and adversity, and divorce can bring an abundance of both.

According to Genevieve Clapp in her book, Divorce and New Beginnings, it is good to allow children to encounter stress in doses that are moderate enough for them to handle. She wrote, "In this way, the stress does not overwhelm them. Instead, it challenges them to learn how to cope with a difficult situation and to master it. If they are successful, they are likely to emerge from the experience with new self-confidence, an increased sense of competence and the ability to successfully handle a greater amount of stress in the future."

Factors to take into consideration are the age of the children, their maturity level and other stress, such as parental divorce, as long as it is not compounded by other stresses or other overwhelming changes.

There may be a need to get some outside help for your children. If this is the case, there are many avenues open to you to get help you need. For more information, call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-2050.

Welcome back

Benning schools make safety top priority

Dr. Dell McMullen
Fort Benning Schools Superintendent

As another school year begins, I know that your greatest concern is your child's safety. School safety is my top priority as well. Today, more than ever before, it is essential that all of us, parents, students, teachers, administrators, the command and the community, work together to develop a safe, disciplined environment where learning can take place.

Young people who are safe and secure, who learn basic American values and the essentials of good citizenship, are better students. Toward this end, I want to share with you the measures we have in place to ensure that your child attends school in a safe, secure, and respectful environment.

• We have firm but fair discipline procedures in our schools. We ask you to talk seriously with your child about why following school rules is necessary for a safe school environment. Students must understand that bullying, fighting or harassment of any kind will not be tolerated.

• We have an Emergency Preparedness Plan in place. The plan addresses specific actions to be taken in the event of severe weather, bomb threats, acts of terrorism, civil disturbances, fire or other emergencies. Students and staff will participate in practice drills throughout the year to ensure plans can be implemented immediately should the need arise.

• The military police are a critical part of our safe schools program. MPs will be more visible in the schools this year. In addition, MPs provide teacher training in school safety to include drug and gang awareness, safety audits for the schools and expert assistance in the development of safety plans and drills.

• We have surveillance equipment on all school buses. It is mandatory that children behave properly on the school bus. We simply will not allow misbehavior that endangers the safety of our children on the bus. Students must understand that riding the bus is a privilege.

• Students today face challenges and temptations you and I did not face, and as a result, it is not uncommon for us to see troubled children. Troubled children need help. The Family Life Center is ready and able to assist. If the schools recommend help for your child, please follow through. We have full-time guidance counselors in our schools, but sometimes additional intervention is needed.

McMullen

• There is no doubt that parental involvement makes the difference in a child's life. We urge you to visit the schools often and establish a two-way dialogue with your child's teachers. There are many ways parents can become active participants in the educational process. Your child's teachers can recommend some specific activities which will reinforce the program.

• Because it is important that we immediately identify visitors in the schools, we ask that you always stop by the office for a visitor's pass. We control access to our schools by keeping all doors locked except those that are necessary for student movement.

It takes all of us to ensure safe schools. With that goal in mind, I ask for your support of our discipline policies, our dress code and our high expectations for your child's academic performance. I am absolutely committed to keeping children in school, and it goes against everything I believe to remove a child from school. However, my first priority is the safety of all the children, and if necessary I will act decisively to remove any student whose conduct threatens the safety of others. I believe that the parents at Fort Benning support us in this effort to keep our schools safe.

It is critical that parents and the schools work together in the development of our students. I may sound old-fashioned, but after 25 years in this business, it is clear to me that children benefit most when they view us, the adults, as being in charge. When children clearly see their parents and teachers as a team, they are the winners. Thank you for all of the hours you spend in the schools, for all of the extra things you do for teachers, and for the wonderful children you send us to teach. What you want for your child is important to us; therefore, we are committed to keeping the lines of communication open. Please do not hesitate to talk with your child's teacher, the school principal, or with me if you have questions or concerns. We all have the same goal: the best education we can give your child while you are here at Fort Benning. Please join us in making School Year 1999-2000 our best ever!

Attendance paramount to success

Fort Benning Schools

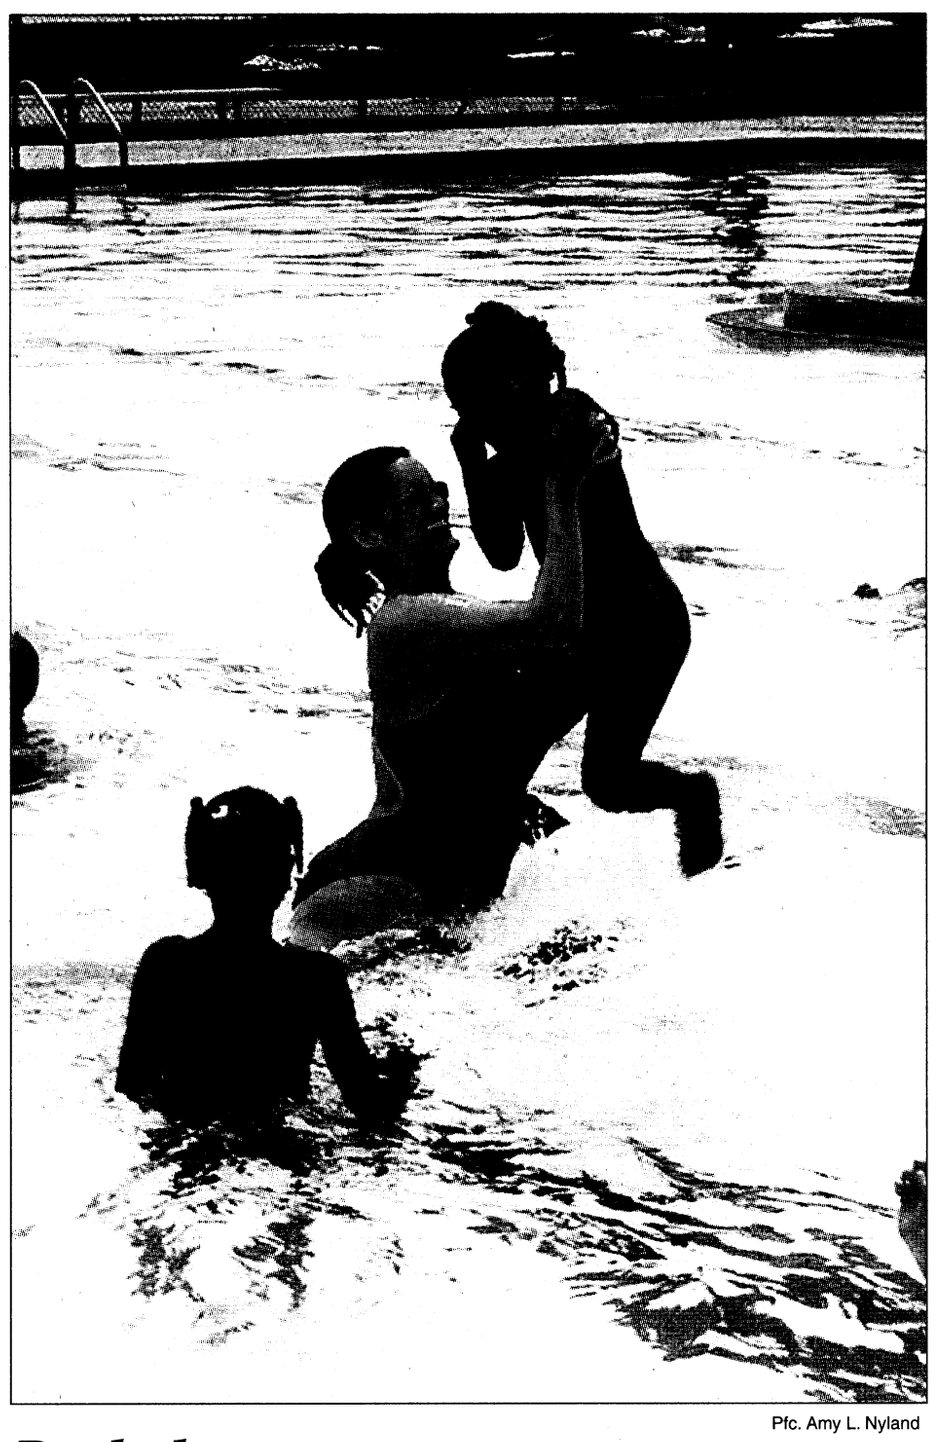
To achieve their best and succeed in school, students must attend school regularly. Because the primary goal of Fort Benning Schools is to help students continually improve their achievement, good attendance is an important goal. When students are absent or tardy, they miss important directions, explanations and practice under the guidance of the teachers.

It is the responsibility of the student, the parent and the school district to see that children attend school regularly. The Fort Benning Schools' expectations for attendance are as follows:

• The educational program at Fort Benning is organized on the assumption that students will be present and will be punctual.

• Students may be excused from school for illness, medical appointments, emergency leave and religious holidays.

Children who are absent from school must have a written excuse from their parents. The excuse will be provided to the teacher upon their return. Should a student return to school without a note, parents will be contacted.



Parents will be notified of excessive absences and tardiness at each of the following occurrences:

10 days — letter to parents

15 days — conference with parent and administrator

20 days — request for command sponsored assistance

Our mission is to educate all children to their optimum level of academic performance. As your child's parent and sponsor, we are counting on you to ensure that your child does not miss school unnecessarily. We firmly believe your child will benefit academically, as well as develop good work habits for his or her future.

Schools implement three new programs

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

First-time students won't be the only new additions to Fort Benning schools this school year. The post's five elementary schools will welcome three new programs during the 1999-2000 school year, and Faith Middle School will participate in two new academic programs.

Reading Recovery

While the first program is starting up in all Fort Benning elementary schools, this is not the first year schools have had a taste of Reading Recovery.

"Reading Recovery targets first-grade students who are significantly behind in reading skills, and it gives them some intense one-on-one instruction to get them caught up," said Kathy Einhorn, director of Curriculum and Assessment for Fort Benning Schools.

Einhorn said the program was once a part of the elementary schools on post, but was cut out two years ago because of funding.

"Research has shown that this is an extremely effective program because it can get kids caught back up to grade level so they're right on track in their reading."

Students become involved in the program after taking an initial assessment in the beginning of the school year. From the assessment, teachers recommend students who need the extra help. Once selected for the program, students begin one-on-one help with reading, language skills, word recognition and reading comprehension.

Einhorn said the program targets first-graders because they are at a critical age for reading development.

"This is the age when kids are starting to get those beginning reading skills," said Einhorn.

Instructional Support

"This year what we've done is particularly target the areas of reading and math," Einhorn said.

She added that this program's first priority are those students who scored below the 25th percentile in the reading and math sections of the Terra Nova test last year.

Throughout the year, Instructional Support teachers will be brought into the classroom to work with those students on reading, writing and critical thinking activities.

Not only is improved performance on the test a goal, but Einhorn said the ability to think critically is also the focus of the program.

"A lot of these children may be able to think at a higher level, but it's not always reflected in their work. So, we really want to bring out the best in the kids," she said.

Einhorn said the results of the program are expected to not only be seen through next year's test results, but in typical classroom writing assignments.

"This is the kind of program where if we've identified kids at the beginning of the year and find they've made a lot of progress, they'll move out of the program back into the regular classroom setting. And we really anticipate that happening."

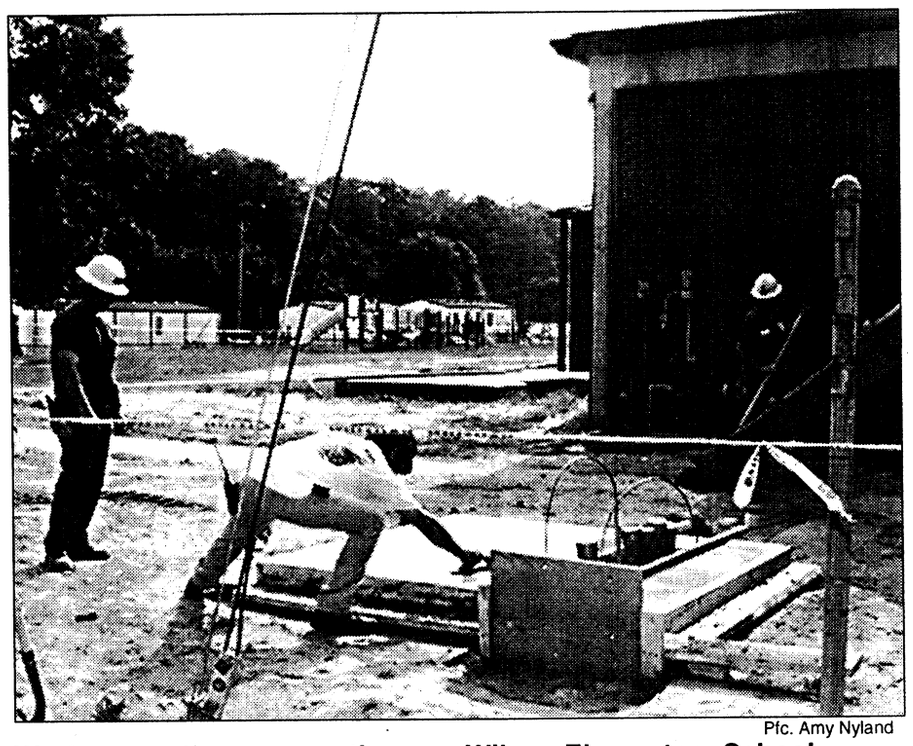
Benning schools receive repairs, upgrades

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet editor

As students head down school hallways for the first time this year, they may notice a few things different from when they last scampered down the halls last June.

Numerous repair and construction projects are currently underway at Fort Benning schools.

One project, which can be seen from the street, is the new roof on Faith Middle School.The expected completion date is December.



Another project underway in five of the Fort Benning schools is local area network installation. Faith, in addition to Loyd, Stowers, White and McBride Elementary Schools each received upgrades to their electrical, mechanical and local area network cabling systems.

According to Donna Ford, facilities manager for Fort Benning Schools, the upgrade is scheduled to be completed in September and will include the installation of LAN cables to each of the schools' classrooms and laboratories.

For those returning to Wilson Elementary School, the familiar trailers will once again be home to each of the school's classes, as renovations continue. Ford said the renovations include the addition of a few classrooms as well as new wall paneling, carpet and lighting systems. If the project continues to keep on schedule, the renovations are expected to be completed Jan. 1, 2000.

In addition to the projects currently underway, the school system has also received funds to begin the construction of a bus barn facility at Harmony Church. The construction of the new facility is expected to begin in October and should wrap up in August of 2000.

Funds have also been established to renovate Dexter. Once Wilson students move into their newly remodeled building, it will be Dexter students' turn to take to the trailers as their school receives a face lift. Ford said it is hard to pin down an exact date when the switch will happen, but is tentatively set for March 2000 depending on how the Wilson project goes.

Workers continue renovations on Wilson Elementary School.

In addition to the projects on schedule, designs have also been completed to replace Stowers' roof and heat and air conditioning system as well as designs to replace the windows at McBride.

test scores

Fort Benning Schools

The best measure of product service and quality results for the school system is the use of standardized achievement test data with national norms.This data formulates and guides our efforts toward educational excellence.

The Fort Benning Schools, along with all Department of Defense Education Activity schools, have administered the CTBS Terra Nova standardized achievement test for the past two years.

The assessment is remarkably different from traditional tests in that it requires students to respond to short answer and essay questions in addition to multiple choice items.

All scores in the graph depict results from the CTBS Terra Nova for the past two school years.

traditionally had a gifted program, but this year the schools are expanding their existing program to include more talented students.

Terra Nova test scores are also initially used to identify students for this program. Students targeted for the program score in the top five percent in reading and math on the Terra Nova test.

"The program really focuses on providing enrichment activities for those students to expand their learning in their area of high achievement," she said.

Einhorn added that with this program, a broader look will be given to students who are not reaching their maximum potential.

"We also want to look at those students who for one reason or another are just not motivated or maybe we're not challenging them enough."

With the addition of the three new programs, also came the addition of nearly 30 more teachers to the Fort Benning school system.

"With the addition of these programs and faculty, we hope we can target student achievement, concentrate on students' strengths and make sure all students are successful."

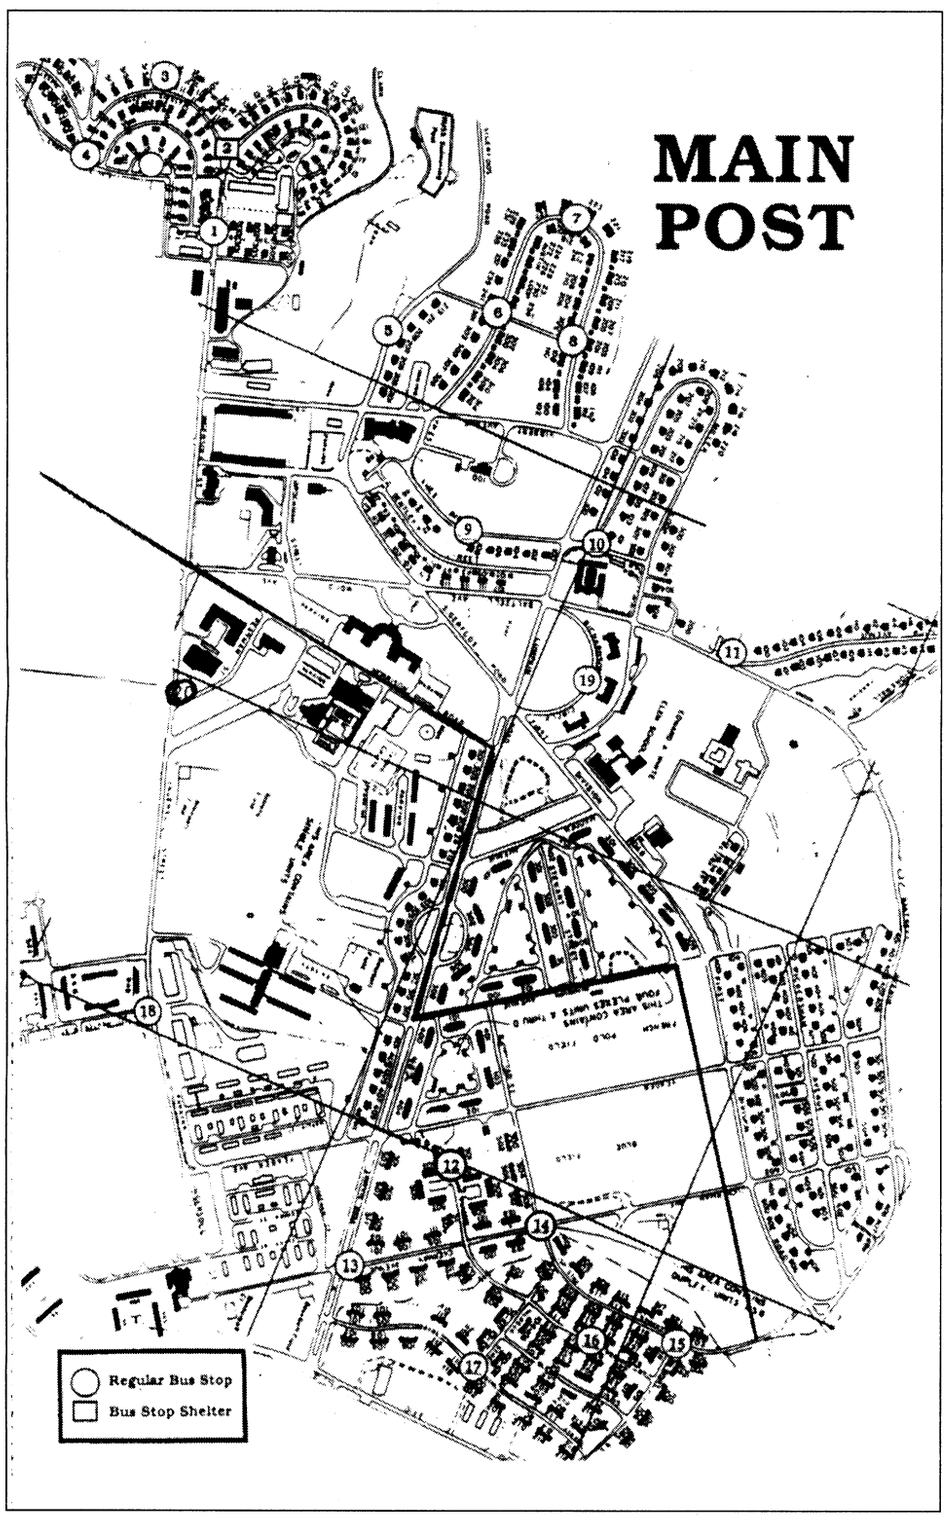
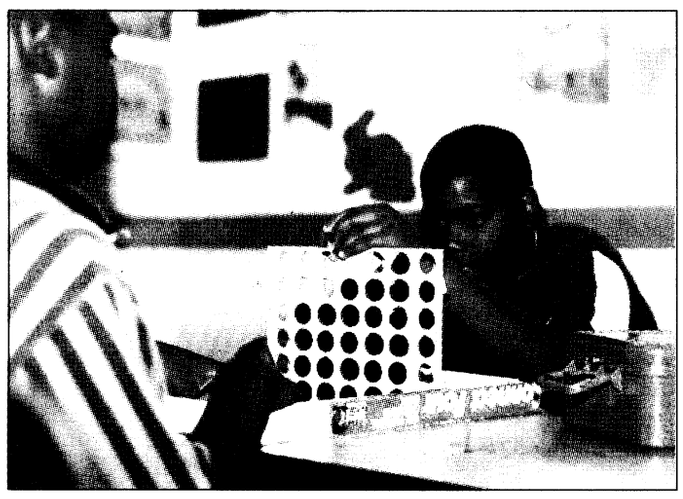
Schools encourage parents to help out, volunteer

Gail Wilson
Fort Benning Schools

All schools encourage the active involvement of parents in their children's education. Parental involvement is a component of virtually all of the system's educational programs.



Parents volunteer in classrooms, libraries, computer labs and school offices. They share their time, experiences and expertise. Special reading programs, specific events and one-on-one tutorial programs have been made possible because of parent volunteers. During the 1997-1998 school year parents volunteered 13,486.75 hours, increasing that to 15,826.25 hours during the 1998-1999 school year.



In an effort to make schools better through the involvement of teachers, parents and the community, the President of the United States, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army and the Chief of Staff of the Army have established and supported programs intended to do just that.

America Goes Back to School is a nation-wide program sponsored by the Department of Education, while the School Home Partnership is aimed specifically at the Department of Defense Education Activity Schools the Fort Benning Command Group said.

Commanders and directors will fully support both the America Goes Back to School and the School Home Partnership Programs. Mission permitting, military personnel interested in volunteering in a Department of Defense Education Activity School or local elementary or secondary school can be excused from duty for up to one hour per week.

Civilian employees can be excused without being charged for leave up to 59 minutes per week, so long as no other excused absences during the week are approved. Excused absences for these volunteer activities are limited to situations where the volunteer and the employee's regular duty hours coincide. In all cases, arrangements must be made in advance with the educational activity and the volunteer's supervisor must approve the time off.

SAS Program continues to enroll for fall term

Along with crayons, pencils, notebooks and backpacks, most parents wish they could add "peace of mind" to their back-to-school shopping list.

Felicia McCord, coordinator of Fort Benning's School Age Services program, hopes to alleviate some of the worries working parents feel this time of year.

"When parents know their school-age children are in a safe, fun place before and after school, they are able to concentrate on their jobs," McCord said. "School Age Services offer parents this peace of mind."

The program operates from 5:30 a.m. until 6 p.m., and only children ages 5 to 10 years attending on-post schools are eligible. Enrollment is ongoing for the fall term, which starts Tuesday, the first day of school. Fees are based on total family income and include breakfast, afternoon snack, transportation to and from school and various educational and recreational activities.

As coordinator, McCord supervises a staff of 24 and expects about 300 children to participate in the program this fall. The main campus, at Patch Hall on Baltzell Avenue, features six classrooms and separate computer and homework labs. There are on-site programs at Loyd Elementary and two outreach centers.

The summer school session included field trips to Callaway Gardens, Providence Canyon State Park and the Coca-Cola Space Science Center. The term's finale was a talent show on Aug. 11 at the Youth Center. Nakeidra Devereaux, 6, sang a popular song. She performed along with 34 other children before an audience of parents, siblings, friends and teachers.

Nakeidra's mother, Yolanda Devereaux, a city carrier with the U.S. Postal Service, and her father, Staff Sgt. Willie Devereaux, of Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (mechanized), have enrolled her in the fall session.

"It is so convenient," Mrs. Devereaux said. "She walks with the group from her school to the program. I love the activities. She did something different every day, and she was in the tutoring program this summer. She just didn't play."

The programs are designed to help children "feel good about themselves," McCord said.

For the fall, she said she hopes to coordinate music lessons and sports clinics with Youth Services, and to start a mentoring program for older children who will help younger ones in the homework lab.

"The program activities, the children's interactions with other children and with the staff, and a carefully prepared environment, all intertwine to provide a comfortable, supportive and inviting atmosphere," McCord said.

No speech of admonition can be so fine that it will at once make those who hear it good men if they are not god already: it would surely not make archers good if they had not had previous practice in shooting; neither could it make lancers good, nor horsemen; it cannot even make men able to endure bodily labor, unless they have been trained to it before.—

Post schools go for excellence

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools set goals they would like to achieve in the upcoming school year. Here are some of them.

Student achievement and citizenship

Student learning in reading, language arts and social studies will increase across all levels of achievement. The percentage of students in grades 3, 5 and 7 scoring at or above the 76th percentile will be increased by 10 percent; those students scoring between the 51st and 75th percentiles, inclusive, will be increase by 10 percent; and those students at or below the 25th percentile will be reduced by 20 percent of the 1990 percentage in the areas of Reading, Language Arts and Social Studies as measured by a standardized achievement test.

The percentage of students who are able to write at a proficient level will increase. At least 75 percent of students assessed by the DODEA systemwide writing assessment will meet the DODEA criteria for proficiency.

Math and science achievement

The achievement gap in math and science between racial, ethnic and gender student groups and the DODEA total group will be narrowed by 50 percent as measured by a standardized achievement test.

Student learning in science and math will increase at all levels of achievement. The percentage of students in grades 3, 4, 5, 7 and 8 scoring at or above the 76th percentile will be increased by 10 percent; those students scoring between the 51st and 75th percentile, inclusive, will be increased by 10 percent; and those scoring at or below the 25th percentile will be reduced by 20 percent of the 1990 percentage as measured by a standardized achievement test.

Safe and disciplined schools

In cooperation with parents and community, DODEA schools will be safe, disciplined, drug/alcohol and violence free environments (to include transportation to and from schools) as measured by disciplinary and incident reports and student surveys.

Teacher education and professional development

Provide a comprehensive professional development structure for teachers and other instructional staff that will increase the school's capacity to implement effective research-boxed instruction for all students and create a continuous learning culture that will increase student achievement as measured by multiple assessments.

Defense announces new child care fees

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

Defense officials recently announced the range of fees for school-age child care programs for the 1999-2000 school year.

The fees reflect a 1.6 percent increase, based on DoD family policy officials' March review of child care fees.

The increase accommodates the inflation rate in the president's Fiscal 2000 budget, according to Carolee Van Horn, a Family Policy Office specialist.

School-age care programs are offered for children in kindergarten to 12 years of age before and after school, during holidays and summer vacations. Fees are based on the number of weekly program hours a child the same family. They may also adjust fees on a case-by-case basis if special financial circumstances warrant.

The rates include meals and snacks when provided. Fees must be reduced by 20 percent if food is not provided during full-day summer programs.

The optional high-cost fee may be used in areas where higher wages are paid to compete with local wages or at installations where wages are affected by high cost of living allowances or locality pay.

At present, the services provide 38,139 spaces, thus meeting 51 percent of the DoD-wide need for care, Van Horn said. To expand school-age care spaces, family policy officials are encouraging use of youth centers, on- and off-base schools, community centers and other facilities, she said.

Fluoride provides protection, reaches people of all ages

Glenn Todd
Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning, like most other communities, introduces fluoride into its water system during the purification process. The relationship between adding fluoride to one's water system and the prevention of tooth decay has been well documented throughout the 20th century. Fluoridation was determined to be the most cost-effective method of providing protection and has the benefit of reaching all segments of a population regardless of age. Hopefully, the information listed below will help Directorate of Public Works customers understand the need for the DPW to provide this service.

Is tooth decay a problem in America?

Yes, tooth decay continues to be a significant oral health problem which is preventable in most cases. Tooth decay is, by far, the most prevalent and costly of oral health problems among all age groups. It is also the principle cause of tooth loss from early childhood through middle age, when tooth loss from periodontal disease is also a major concern.

Can adults benefit from fluoridation?

Yes, research has shown that the tooth decay preventive effects of fluoride are not limited to children but adults obtain substantial benefits also.

Can fluoridation provide long-term benefits?

Yes, studies over the past 50 years show that fluoridation plays a protective role against dental decay throughout life. One example of the benefits was documented in New York state where 16 year olds who were exposed to fluoridated water for six years had 41 percent fewer decayed teeth than those in a nearby non-fluoridated community.

In conclusion, it does not matter how one gets fluoride, whether from drinking water, supplements, toothpaste, mouth rinse or a health care professional. DPW is making it easier to help fight tooth decay by providing fluoride in the installation's drinking water.

Local Soldiers net Croatian medals

Tom Hlavacek

ZAGREB, Croatia — Soldiers from Fort Benning's Army Marksmanship Unit cashed in at the Military World Games taking the gold medal in the men's 300-meter standard rifle team event.

Steven Goff paced the U.S. team with 582 points, the second highest score of the day. The top four U.S. shooters combined for 2,312 points, 11 better than the Russians.

Meanwhile, Andrew Roberts became the Army's first individual medalist. Roberts captured the bronze in the men's Taekwondo under-72-kilogram division. An Army World Class Athlete and the 1999 U.S. National champion, Roberts won his first two matches, including one by knockout. His gold-medal rush ended when he lost a split semi-final bout to Korea's Kim In Dong, 3-2. Kim went on to capture the gold. Roberts said, "I plan to give this medal to my daughter."

Olanda Anderson (178 lbs.) won an impressive 10-0 decision over Tunisia's Laridhi Lotfi. Bradley Martinez beat Sideorenko Valeri of the Ukraine, 2-0. Anderson said, "I focused on making the finals where I hope to meet Russia's Lebziak Alexander, the light heavyweight world champion."

They are no strangers to each other. They have met twice with each Soldier-athlete winning on their home turf.

James Webb (147 lbs.) had to retire from his quarterfinal bout after getting cut over his eye. The U. S. team protested the decision because the U. S. team thought the cut was due to an illegal blow by his opponent.

If the protest is upheld, the Fort Carson Soldier will join his teammates Anderson and Martinez in the semi-finals.

The Military World Games hosted by the Conseil International du Sport Military, known as CISM, ended Wednesday in Zagreb, Croatia. More than 7,000 athletes from 100 countries competed in the games.

While CISM athletic competitions have been held since 1948, this is only the second Military World Games — the first were held Sept. 4-16 in Rome, Italy, prior to the last summer Olympics.

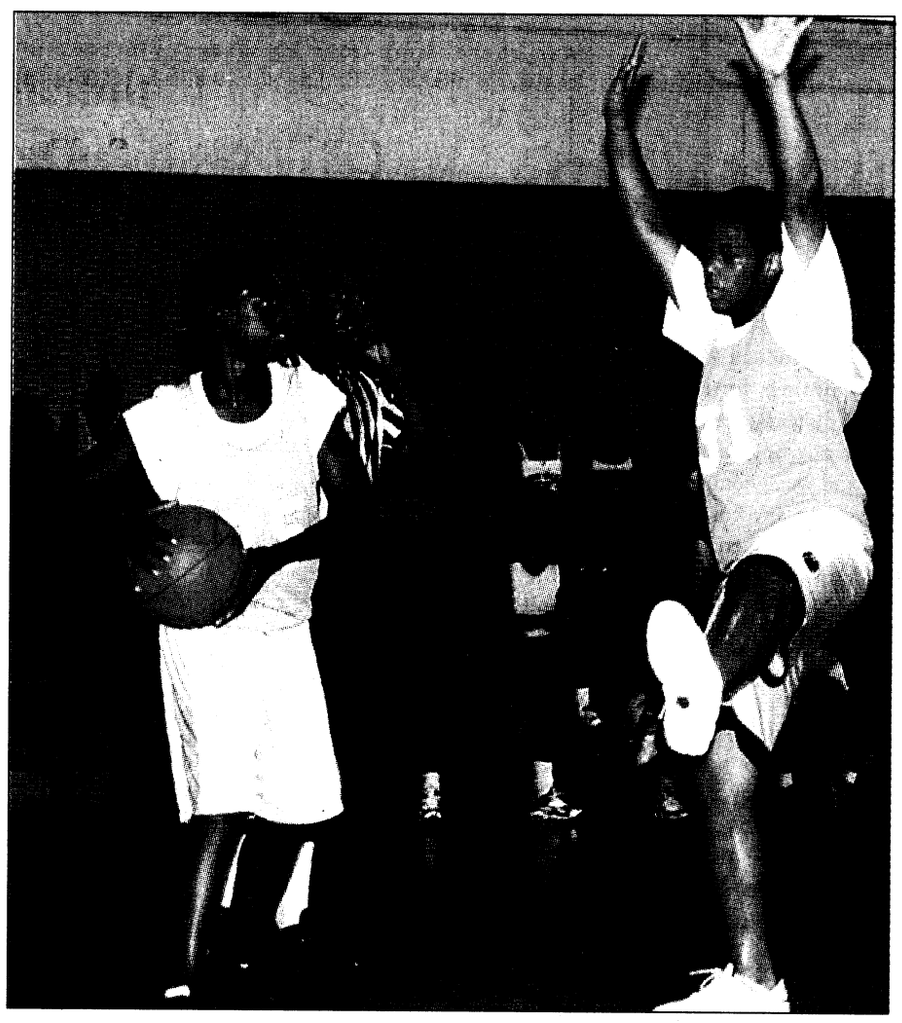
Youth Services' summer basketball games entertained hundreds of fans during the sixth week of play. Close, competitive games captured the attention of family and friends who gathered to support their favorite young athletes.

Jeffrey Moore-Sykes and Aaron Scott led the Lakers to a 5-4 victory over the 76ers in the first 6- to 7-year-old division game. Jedarvis Bates and Joshua Burnam contributed 2 points each as the 76ers top scorers.

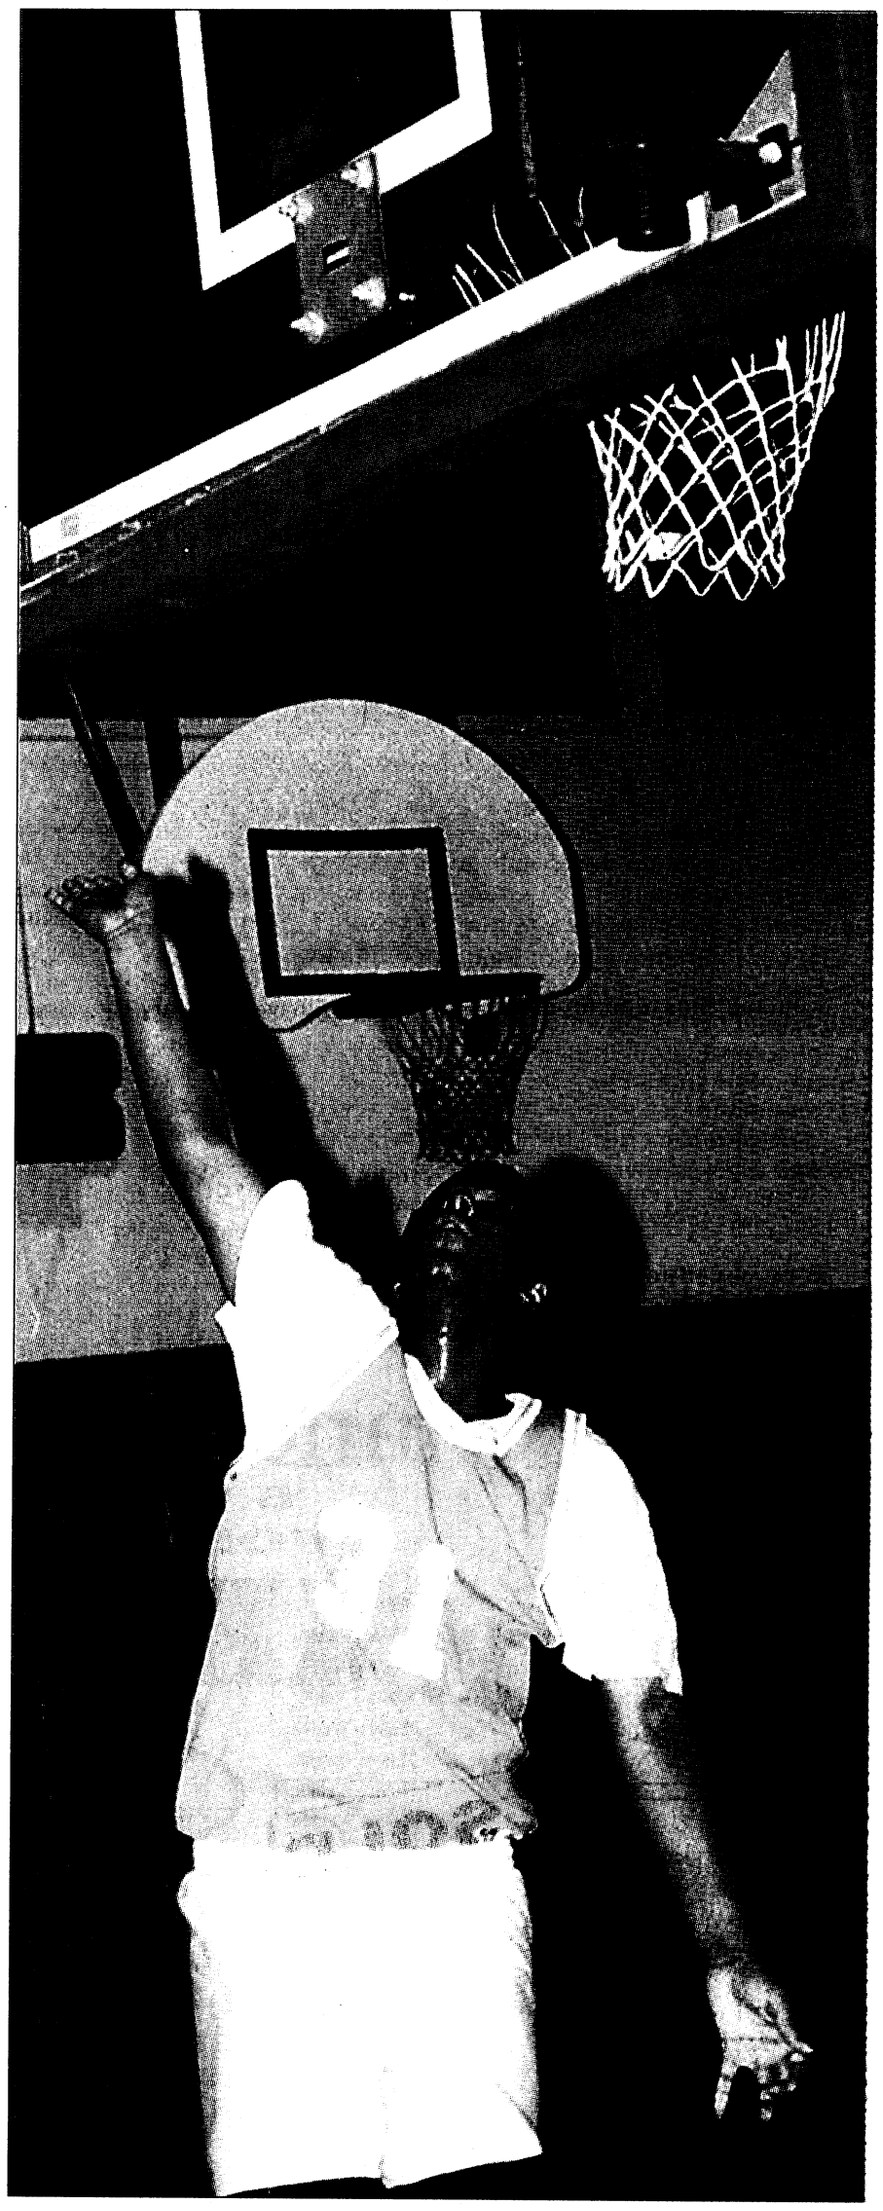
The Spurs fell to the Miami Heat 3-6 during the second game of the division. Heat players Ryan McDonnell, Ritchie McDonnell and Tevin Simon kicked in 2 points apiece as the team's high scorers. Tony Davis (2 points) and Crosby Adams (1 point) combined for the Spur's total of 3 points.



The Warriors triumphed over the Blue Devils 32-15 in the first 8- to 9-year-old division game. Warrior Kahlee Tyler led the assault against the Blue Devils with 10 points. Tyler's 10, coupled with Terrance Mister's 7 points, proved to be too much for the Blue Devil's defense. Dereck Poe was the top scorer for the Blue Devils with 6 points followed by Fabian Cordero with 5.

The second game of the division saw the Heat out distance the Sonics by 4 points leaving the final score at 17-13. Travis Lush (7 points) and Gunnar Hanson (6 points) secured the Heat's win with 13 of the team's 17 points.

Daren Waters put 9 points on the board for the Sonics, earning the top scoring spot for the first time this season.



In 10- to 12-year-old action, the 76ers defeated the Knicks 57-46. For the sixth consecutive week, Robert Penn led the 76ers in scoring with 24 points. T.J. McFarelane assisted Penn by adding 15 points to the team's final score of 57. William Mackey led the Knicks with 23 points followed by Emmanuel Wallace with 8.

Outdoor enthusiasts look forward to changes

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

That season is upon us. The one where men and women pray to their primitive ancestors as they load up their firearms and venture out into the great beyond with dreams of bringing home the "prize." It is hunting season; and with deer opener (bow season) less than a month away hunting enthusiasts are undoubtedly squirming with excitement.

But, deer season isn't the only thing Fort Benning hunters and fishermen have to be excited about. Now, there is the prospect of better gaming ventures in years to come to add to their happy hunting and fishing dreams.

According to Pete Swiderek, fish and wildlife supervisor, Natural Resource Management Branch, Directorate of Public Works, these better ventures are made possible because of recent changes and additions within the Fort Benning Game and Sport Fish Program.

The program, which is funded primarily by money from hunting and fishing permit fees, manages and supports habitats for Fort Benning game and fish species. The objective of the program, Swiderek said, is to maintain and increase game and fish populations in order to provide ample gaming opportunities for Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians.

The new changes in the program came from initiatives set forth by the Fort Benning command during a series of meetings held in 1997 and 1998. These initiatives were proposed with the intent to revitalize and restructure the program and ultimately "provide a safe, quality hunting and fishing experience consistent with mission requirements and sound land management practices that will be a model for other game and fish programs."

Just recently a major step towards this revitalization was taken by hiring a game and fish technician to oversee the program. This addition provides the organization and direction the program needs to make greater improvements in wildlife management, he said.

During the next five years, the goal of the program is to rehabilitate Fort Benning fish ponds, plant more wildlife openings and conduct more intensive census of game population. ◆

Former All-Army hurdler returns to sports arena

Tim Hipps
Army New Service

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — John Register, a former world-class hurdler, officially returned to the world-class track and field ranks Saturday at George Mason University on one God-given leg.

Register, 34, who five years ago had his left leg amputated, won three silver medals in the 100- and 200-meter dashes and long jump during the 1999 Disabled Sports USA National Summer Games.

Albert Reed, a Florida Gator sports psychology major from Gainesville, Fla., won the 200 meters in 28.23 seconds, followed by Register in 33.68 seconds.

"That was good," Register said of his 14.90 clocking in the 100 meters. "My goal today was to run 14.80 seconds, which is the A standard qualifying time for the Paralympic Games. The 14.9 means I qualified for the B standard. It makes me the second-fastest American, and it's my first run underneath 15 seconds."

Last year was the first season back on the track for Register, who works with the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program at the Alexandria, Va.-based U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, since his left leg was amputated in 1994. It was then that he discovered his prosthetic wasn't yet properly aligned for top performances.

"I just got up, put on the leg, and went and ran," Register explained. "It was whipping all over the place, and I ran 18 seconds my first race."

His next time out, Register lowered his time to 17 seconds. Then he took it down to 16.80 at GMU, and later ran 16.20 during the World Championships at Birmingham, England. That was his last race before Saturday, when he cracked the 15-second barrier for the first time.

"It's been crazy," Register admitted with a laugh. "I've made almost a one-second improvement every time I step on the track. I'm just getting more and more comfortable with the prosthetic device.

"I guess the greatest fear that I had, and still have at times, is falling — because the last time I fell, I dislocated my knee. And I don't want to go through that again."

The worst fall of Register's life occurred May 17, 1994 when he landed awkwardly after clearing a hurdle during a track workout in Hayes, Kan. After having his leg amputated above the knee, it took three years for him to run again.

"December of '97 was the first time I actually got up and tried to run leg over leg," Register recalls. "I would do that maybe once a month. I would look at it (his artificial limb) from the corner of my room, and then I would go back out and put it on again. It felt too weird, so I would sit back and look at it for another month."

Then he received a call from Flexfoot, the manufacturer that donated the bottom part of his prosthesis, inviting him to San Diego, Calif., to compete in the company's Ultimate Challenge "because they thought I was a good story.

"That pushed me to actually put it on a little bit more," Register said. "And I told my wife that if I got on the plane to go out there, that I would run. But up to the time that plane was about to leave, I was still debating whether I wanted to go out on the track."

That was May of 1998, when Register made his comeback official on the track.

In the meantime, he had been swimming for nearly four years, primarily for physical therapy and eventually for competition — an aspect of his life Register thought was history.

"At first, I could barely get across the pool at Lee District (Park)," he said. "I was just sucking water, felt like I was drinking the whole pool."

He worked his way up to swimming a mile and went on to compete in the 1995 Disabled Sports USA National Summer Games at Boston, where he took second places in the 50-meter butterfly and 50-meter freestyle and a third in the 100-meter free with times that qualified him for the U.S. Paralympic Trials.

Register went on to swim 1:06.03, which to this day he considers "mind-boggling." Yet he left the team, which he later learned that he had made. And then he began working his way back to the track.

"The reason I really didn't want to run was because I thought that I was at a world-class level — running the 100 meters in 10.45 and the high hurdles in 13.5 and the 400-meter hurdles in 49.5 — and I knew that I was never going to run those times again.

"So I said, 'If I can't run those times, I don't want to run.'"

Eventually, Register realized that being "world-class" is relative.

"I don't know if the bug has hit you from coming out here," he said of the disabled competition. "But it's just something to see an athlete overcome so many what we would think are physical challenges, and they use them to their advantage. They just overcome all these hurdles and obstacles. (These games) are just a culmination of everything they've done.

"The thing I think about is: How many hours of preparation did they put into these games right here? How many times have they been out on the track? How many times have they fallen? How many times did their legs come off as they were running down the track? And what have they had to endure just to make it to here?"

The answers would make an observer's head spin not only because of the speeds the athletes are running but also because of their will to compete.

Before Saturday, Register hadn't even attempted the long jump this year; thus he felt no pressure. He scratched on four of his six attempts. Yet, he popped two legal jumps that were good enough for second place with a mark of 4.90 meters.

"If I can come down the runway and hit that board six times, eventually the jumps are going to be there," he predicted before delivering. "But if you can't hit the board, it doesn't matter what you jump."

Register was beaming after the competition was done.

"That was exciting," he said. "That took me back to college days right there. You never give up on it, you know. They were all pretty good. My first jump was the best one; it was over 5 meters. But I fouled. That would've been A standard for the Paralympic Games. If I keep jumping like that, I'll be fine.

"The rest of the world is going to be shocked when they see the results from this meet — the other jumpers in the world, anyway. There's going to be some good competition in Sydney."

The fact that he's running and jumping, period, makes Register a champion for all mankind. The fact that he will attempt to lower his standards "Down Under" during the 2000 Games in Australia could make him champion of the Paralympic World.

"After the fall, I didn't know," Register recalled of his devastating fall over a hurdle five years ago. "Because there's so much you can do now with sports medicine, I just didn't know. But when the doctor told me that the blood flow was still not getting down to the lower portion of my limb, then I knew I was in trouble. After three days, gangrene was setting in. And I just lost it after that.

"But after about 20 minutes, I knew that it was time to move on. I wasn't too devastated by it because of the fact that I had Christ in my life at the time. I understood immediately that this was for a specific reason. God had just chosen me to go through it. I knew that from the time that I hit the ground because I had been leading a lot of Bible studies at the All-Army Track and Field Camp for the past six years. So here was the test.

"My period of downness was so quick. I recognized the loss, denied it, accepted it, and moved on — all within about 20 minutes."

Register had attended Oak Park and River Forest High School in Oak Park, Ill., and ran four years of track at the University of Arkansas, where he earned three-time NCAA All-America honors and captured four NCAA team titles. He ran the 110-meter high hurdles in 13.51 seconds, and led off the Razorbacks' 4x400-meter relay with a split of 45.3 seconds.

"Our relay team actually beat Michael Johnson's," Register said of the man once regarded as the world's fastest human. He also recorded a long jump of 26 feet, 2 inches, which explains his desire to continue jumping today.

Register admits that he was "very selfish" about joining the military because he wanted to continue running track. He knew that if he made the Army's World Class Athlete Program he would have two more years to train.

"But I didn't want to do a long time (in the Army) because I didn't know if I was going to like it or not," he confessed. "I had heard all the horror stories about how all the Army does is shoot people."

Register distinctly recalls receiving a phone call from then Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, who offered his condolences after the fall. And he remembers getting another call from Training and Doctrine Command's Gen. Frederick M. Franks, a below-the-knee amputee.

"And that really did a lot for me," Register admitted. "Here was a guy who understood, pretty much, what I was going through. He had a knee and everything, but still . . . he's a Soldier. He loves troops. He was my commander for Desert Storm. So that phone call was very valuable."

And he got another inspirational call from former Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene McKinney, who sat with Register's mother, wife and son, while he underwent surgery.

"For that Army support, it really made me feel that the whole Army thing was one big happy family," Register said. "And it really changed my mom's attitude about the Army. She was from the Vietnam era and all the protests and all that. But when she saw the outpouring of support, she couldn't help but say, 'I can't believe that the Army is doing all this.' It was great because I was a regular Joe Soldier. So I can't say anything bad about the Army."

Now Register doesn't know how fast he can go.

"In the long run, I don't know," he confessed. "Just like the T-shirts around here say, 'What is your limit?' There are no limitations, I don't think, for physically challenged athletes because you're always going to get another prosthetic device that's going to be better than the one you had before. We have all these companies competing, and everybody's trying to make the best legs. Something's always going to fit better and align better, and that's going to make you run faster."

"Realistically, I think by the year 2000 we'll see an above-the-knee amputee go below 13 seconds for the 100 meters. And I believe you'll see one of these guys with below-the-knees go below 11 seconds. They're close now. They're at 11.22. They're smokin'. It is incredible. Every time I come out here, I just learn so much. Just talking to each individual is very uplifting."

"I'm getting hungrier now to know that I'm so close to the world leaders. There are only a handful who've run in the 14s before. And there's only two that have run in the 13s. To start making it into that elite group, especially for a guy who's never been a 100-meter runner before. I ran 10.5 — Flo Jo (Florence Griffith Joyner) beat me. I never could run a 100, but I could run hurdles — that was my thing. You don't have to be fast in the hurdles; you just have to be quick over the top."

Register has trouble recounting all the highlights of his career, but he relishes working with the BOSS program. He has two more meets on his mind: the Paralympic Revival at Duderstadt, Germany, on Aug. 27-28 and the Pan American Games for Disabled Athletes at Mexico City set for October.

Meanwhile, he doesn't know what he'll do in the long run.

"I'm not sure how long I will stay," Register says of his future connection with the Army. "I love what I'm doing now. I've grown tremendously as far as my understanding of Army programs, especially of what Morale, Welfare and Recreation does for Soldiers. I think it's a shame that we've lost the past funding for a lot of the programs and we see the strain from the field.

"We expect people to do more with less, which is the standard line now.

And now, years later, we're finding that people are leaving the Army. We can't keep folks, we can't retain them because we've cut and made decisions to penny-pinch and save earlier. But I think we can turn that around and really get things back into the recreation side and make it a very hospitable and family-oriented environment."

If not, Register says he and wife Alice will be content to grow old running a funnel-cake business. That would be one sweet ending to one of the better stories in track and field history.

YS: Athletes net wins

The hard driving Spurs rolled past the Miami Heat 56-31 during the second 10- to 12-year-old game. Marcus Patterson (19 points) and Marshall Thompson (14 points) sparked the Spur's offense to victory. Miami Heat's offensive leader, Xavier Shaw, earned 16 points while Ronald Bray and Gary Robinson tossed in 4 points apiece.

The Pacers slipped by the Tarheels 59-56 in a game that remained close until the final buzzer. Ernest Tyler, with his season high of 20 points, drove the Pacers offensive to a victory along with James Fuller who added 16 points. Roosevelt Vickers led the Tarheels with 20 points and became the lead scorer for the first time this season.

Wildlife: Program gains momentum

"One thing we are trying to do is get fish ponds back in balance, so we can create more productive ponds," Swiderek said. "This means managing the pond by liming, fertilizing and stocking it. But a lot of it is the aesthetics of it too, like getting the grass mowed, providing support facilities such as picnic tables, grills and boat ramps, grating roads, clearing brush away and weed control."

He went on to say customer surveys recommended planting more fall openings with clover and wheat and reducing the amount of dove fields, a suggestion the program is following.

There will also be an increase in monitoring and censusing of game species by doing such things as deer track and spotlight counts and quail call counts.

"This monitoring of the game and fish population is important because it tells us if what we are doing out there in the way of habitat management is making a difference or not," he said. "It lets us know if the population is staying stable, going up or going down."

He said support by volunteers is an intrical part of the program. Volunteers can do any number of things to help, such as fertilize fish ponds, brush control and wildlife monitoring.

"Another part of the restructuring and revitalizing is to get volunteers more involved in helping us, because only one game and fish technician on a 182,000 acre installation just isn't enough."

There is also soon to be a moderate increase in permit fees if approved by Fort Benning command, he added. This increase will help greatly considering most of the program's funding comes from the fees. However, even with the increase, prices will still be drastically lower than those off post or at a hunting club.

Until recently, the program had suffered due to a lack of manpower and funding. But, now with a new direction and a new manager, it is gaining the momentum it needs to become a premier gaming program, Swiderek said.

"The interest is out there," Swiderek said about the fish and game program. "But the biggest thing is communication between the Natural Resource Management Branch and hunters and fishers.

"They need to know the things we do for them," he said. "We had been struggling to support them over the last five years, but things are changing."

Anyone interested in getting involved with the Fort Benning Game and Sport Fish Program is invited to attend the Commanding General's Natural Resource Advisory Council meeting at 7 p.m. Sept. 15 in Infantry Hall, Room 7.

Tips To Help You

A MORE HEALTHFUL, TASTY WAY OF EATING

(NAPSA)-With all the controversy over dietary fat, you may be tempted to reduce your fat intake. But be careful - experts caution you should not be fooled into completely eliminating fat from your diet.

"Our bodies need a certain amount of fat to function," says Riska Platt, M.S., R.D. "Fat is necessary for carrying vitamins like A, D, E, and K. It also helps provide a sense of fullness after eating a meal."

What type of fat is best? Studies have suggested that monounsaturated fats, such as olive oil, the primary fat source in the much-touted Mediterranean diet, help lower blood cholesterol, especially the "bad" or LDL-variety, while protecting the "good" or HDL type.

Additional components of the Mediterranean diet are complex carbohydrates, such as grains, pasta, rice, dried beans and fresh vegetables and fruit. Meat and seafood are taken sparingly, and used more for flavor than as a main course.

"Traditionally, when it comes to cooking and seasoning foods in the Mediterranean region, consumers use mostly olive oil instead of saturated fats, like butter or lard, or polyunsaturated fats, like those found in corn or safflower oils," Platt suggests.

Those interested in learning more about the Mediterranean diet may have good use for the recipes and information found in a booklet called Bertolli Celebrates the Mediterranean Menu.

A favorite selection from this booklet is this delicious and easy-to-prepare recipe for Cannellini Bean & Roasted Garlic Salad, which features flavorful Bertolli Extra Virgin Olive Oil.

Cannellini Bean and Roasted Garlic Salad

4 servings

4 large garlic cloves, peeled
2 tablespoons Bertolli® Extra Virgin Olive Oil
2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
1/2 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper
1-11/2 cups (or one 16 ounce can) cannellini or white kidney beans, rinsed and drained
1 bag (16 ounces) Italian style mixed salad greens
1/2 cup jarred whole roasted red peppers, cut into strips

Heat oven to 325°.

Combine the garlic and oil in a small custard cup; cover with foil.

Bake until garlic is soft, about 30 minutes.

Remove from oven; cool.

Cut garlic into small pieces and add to the beans; reserve oil.

Add vinegar, salt and pepper to the reserved oil; stir to blend.

Flavorful Cannellini Bean and Roasted Garlic Salad is easy to prepare and easy to enjoy.

Toss the salad with 1 tablespoon of the oil and vinegar mixture.

Add the remaining mixture to the beans; taste and add more vinegar, if desired.

Arrange the greens on individual salad plates and spoon the beans on to the top.

Garnish with roasted red peppers.

To receive a copy of Bertolli Celebrates the Mediterranean Menu, a $5.95 value, send a check or money order for $2 to cover postage and handling to: The Bertolli Nutrition Center, P.O. Box 2001, Grand Rapids, MI 55745-2001 MR.

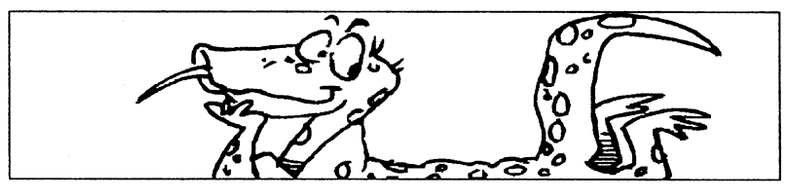
ADOPT-A-TROOPER PROGRAM BENEFITS CHILDREN

(NAPSA)-Shriners Hospitals for Children and state law enforcement officers have teamed up for a new community service program, and young patients get to go along for the ride.

Thanks to the program called Adopt-a-Trooper, developed by Al Kaly Shriners, patients who have an interest in law enforcement can be named an "Honorary Trooper" for the day during parades. The children are assigned an officer from the Colorado State Patrol and then ride in his or her patrol vehicle during the parade.

Prior to the parade, a hospital representative finds an eligible patient or two who may have aspirations of being in law enforcement. The patient and parents meet with the participating Nobles and state trooper, sign a release, and the child is then placed in the parade lineup. The child rides as a VIP, greeting bystanders.

Noble Sam Grassmick came up with the idea for the Adopt-a-Trooper program. He knew that Potentate Earl Aldrich wanted to create a unique program, and then heard from some of the state troopers that they also wanted a new community project. Grassmick put the two together and the idea began to blossom.



A new Shriners program lets youngsters find out about law enforcement by riding along during parades.

According to Aldrich, everyone wins with this program. "We're able to build a relationship with the state troopers and educate them even more about Shriners Hospitals, and we also receive more community awareness and interest for the Shrine and for the state troopers. Best of all, the child who is Honorary Trooper of the day has a great time and a unique learning experience," he said.

Members of Al Kaly Shrine encourage other Temples and service-minded organizations to develop a relationship with their state patrol or local sheriff's office.

MBA's Level Term II Life Insurance Offers Full Benefits to Aviators

Until now, aviators seeking life insurance often faced limitations and reduced benefits. Now, MBA's Level Term II Life Insurance Plan covers flyers — with no aviation restrictions — at the same affordable premiums offered to other MBA members.

And that's just one of the exceptional benefits you'll discover when you check out MBA's expanded Level Term II Life Insurance Plan. Here are more great reasons why MBA's benefits soar above the competition:

- $10,000 Emergency Death Benefit. Just increased! This sum is paid swiftly to the designated beneficiary upon the death of a member, subject to request and verification. (New!)
- Waiver of Premium for Officially Declared POW/MIA. MBA is among the first to offer this compassionate benefit. (New!)
- Continuous Coverage Up to Age 70. Premiums increase only twice — at ages 51 and 61.
- Family Life Insurance Coverage. Purchase up to $250,000 for yourself ... and your dependent spouse. Spousal coverage available for as little as a few extra dollars a month. Plus, you get up to $12,500 of coverage for each dependent child at no additional cost.
- No War Clause. Life insurance benefits remain payable even when death is caused by an act of war.
- Living Benefit. Receive up to 25% of your coverage while you're still living. This benefit reduces financial worries should you suffer with a terminal illness.

Post water meets safety standards

Melissa B. Kendrick
Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning is working hand-in-hand with the Georgia Environmental Protection Division to ensure the quality of the post water supply meets federal and state regulations.

The main source of drinking water at Fort Benning is the Upatoi Creek. It runs through the northern portion of the installation draining into the Chattahoochee River. A wall of protection, which is the purification and verification process established by Fort Benning, state and EPA, ensures the water provided from the Upatoi is of excellent quality.

The various treatment stages and methods at the Fort Benning Water Treatment Plant provides the wall of protection. The plant, which is operated by a total of 12 Directorate of Public Works employees, operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Over the course of a year, the plant treats an average volume of 7.6 million gallons annually.

Current treatment methods resulted in the compliance rating during a recent multi-media inspection conducted by the EPA and the Georgia EPD.

"A compliance rating means that the water at Fort Benning either meets or exceeds all state and federal water quality standards," said Joe Wilkins, Clean Water Program manager for DPW. "We conduct hourly and daily testing of the water supply at the treatment plant to ensure that the people here on post have quality water for their use."

Wilkins added that while some administrative problems were identified by the EPA during the inspection, no areas of environmental concern were noted.

Fort Benning's water is also checked at the tap by taking water samples from kitchen and bathroom taps in family housing units. The water is checked for lead and copper levels and received compliance ratings for water quality.

Adding to the procedures safeguarding water quality at Fort Benning as well as throughout the state of Georgia, is a new EPA regulation which, according to Wilkins, will concentrate even more attention and effort on water quality preservation.

"EPA regulations now require all states to develop state Source Water Assessment Protection Programs, called SWAPS," he said. "These programs will identify both the drinking water source and any potential sources of pollution that may impact its quality. Fort Benning has agreed to participate in this program."

Wilkins said the SWAP efforts in Georgia have begun and predicts the program will intensify in the coming year.

The Georgia EPD was among the first of the state agencies to respond to this new regulation, Wilkins said. "I'm sure we will all work well together to keep the quality of water excellent for everyone here at Fort Benning."

Fort Benning residents will receive a Consumer Confidence Report from DPW's Utilities Branch. The report, scheduled to be released Oct. 19, will provide information concerning the post's water quality.

Monument to honor Japanese-American Soldiers

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

They were short and a quartermaster's nightmare. Their average height was 5 feet 4 inches and they weighed about 125 pounds soaking wet with muddy boots. They prepared themselves for combat with a vengeance seldom seen in an Army camp to earn the right to fight for their country. They were the Soldiers of the 100th Infantry Battalion, the first Japanese-American unit in the U.S. Army and will be honored at Fort Benning by a newly built memorial located on Sacrifice Field.

Etched in the black granite memorial are words that reflect the dedication and mental attitudes of the 100th's Soldiers.

"To the men of the 100th Infantry Battalion who asked only for the right to be called Americans, not Japanese-Americans, a right they so richly earned. Out of their ordinary lives they met the crisis of their time not only with courage and uncommon valor but also with grace and forbearance."

The Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941. After the attack, many Nisei (second generation Japanese in America) expressed the desire to sign up and fight the Japanese. Instead the American government removed 110,000 persons of Japanese ancestry 70,000 of whom were native-born U.S. citizens from their homes and sent them to 10 inland detention camps located in the interior of the United States. The detention centers were home for many of the volunteers of the 100th Infantry Battalion.

Out of this atmosphere of fear and hatred, the Nisei stepped forward and volunteered for an Army that distrusted them. They were volunteers who had two battles to fight — one against the enemy in Europe and one against the enemy of racial prejudice.

The Nisei emerged successfully from both battles and after fighting the toughest troops the Nazis could throw at them during seven campaigns in Italy and France, the 100th Infantry Battalion became one of the most highly decorated units for bravery in World War II. The 3,147 "little men of iron" earned one Congressional Medal of Honor; 52 Distinguished Service Crosses; 147 Silver Stars; nine Legions of Merit; eight Soldier's Medals; 238 Bronze Stars for valor; 2,173 Bronze Stars for meritorious service; 1,703 Purple Hearts and three Presidential Unit Citations among many other decorations.

"Many units and affiliations are unaware of Sacrifice Field," said Frank Hanner, director of the National

MPs, bus drivers crack down on illegal passing

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

It's 7:40 a.m. and you are running late. After an unusually long and painful PT session you hop into your car hot and frantic. You have less than an hour to get ready and be at work. Rolling through your housing area at a steady 15 mph you encounter something that makes your blood boil. The solution seems simple ... simply go around the big yellow bus that blocks your path.

However, the solution isn't that simple, and both the Directorate of Public Safety and Fort Benning School's bus drivers are working hard to make sure everyone on post knows it.

Georgia Code 40-6-163 specifically states that passing a school bus while the crossing arm is out is against the law. And what's more, the code gives bus drivers the ability to take action without the military police being present.

According to Lt. Col. Terry J. Kelley, chief of the Law Enforcement Division, Directorate of Public Safety, all bus drivers have to do is witness someone going through the cross arms, fill out an "improper passing report" with such specifics as license plate number, color of car, description of driver, and fax it to the Women persevere through injustice

Sgt. 1st Class Richard D. Gonzales
USAIC Equal Opportunity Office

Who could have imagined what the impact of the Women's Rights Convention in Seneca Falls in 1848, would have not only on the 19th Amendment, but also on the issue of women serving in the military?

commentary

It is no secret that the 19th Amendment allowed women to vote, but it still did not allow them to be welcomed into another part of the man's world — the military. For most of the past conflicts, women were subjected to the recruit, reject, recruit cycle. This can be described as "we need you now; we are done with you; we need you again."

This type of selective service did not prevent the women of our past history from taking extreme measures to serve their country. Some went to the extent of concealing their gender just to join the fight. World War I brought on the first positions that allowed women to serve in the military, most in the clerical and nursing fields.

Initially, World War II offered many of the same limited opportunities as in previous wars, but due to the shortage of men and the need for labor, many more fields were opened.

However, at the time, it was only a temporary military status. Not until 1948 did the leaders of this nation consider giving women full time status in the military.

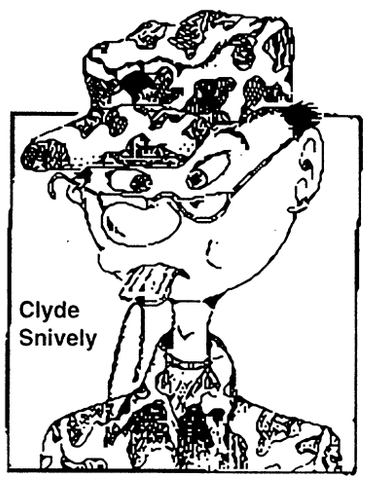
In later years and wars, just like the right to vote, women had to prove their place in this society and what they could contribute to it if given the chance. Starting from the 1970s, women's equality in the military has produced many opportunities resulting in general officers, helicopter pilots, commanders, Airborne School instructors and drill sergeants.

As of today, there are only a few areas that women cannot serve in. I, for one, would advise all those who oppose the idea of women in combat, to look into the past and read of the arguments and the struggles women endured and will continue to endure for equality. It is not a matter of wanting to be a part of a "man's world," but just to have the same opportunity of choice.

As we come to the end of a decade and approach the beginning of a new millennium, we should remember our past to shape our future. The story of American women in the military is a story of strong, courageous and persevering women whose injustice shaped our nation. Today's generation owes them remembrance and honor, for we all stand on their shoulders. They have put their stamp on the military of America and paved a way for us to follow, thus giving us hope for the future.

Some miss meaning of values training

Spc. Clyde Snively
Bayonet correspondent



After several of his Soldiers fell victim to barracks thieves, a company commander in Panama mused out loud, "Barracks thieves should be tossed out of the top floor of the barracks."

The next morning a broken and crumpled body of a Soldier was found next to the barracks. I don't know if he was a barracks thief, or if he survived the "fall." Nor do I know if the commander got into any trouble over it.

But one thing I learned, I'm not going to say what I think should happen to people who vandalize cars of Soldiers who are away on deployment. At least not in this space.

I will say, I hope they get what they have coming to them.

I can't figure it out.

Who would go into a secure area and break into cars, smash windows and take very little? Is this person or persons demented or what?

Sadly, this seems to be a common occurrence. Soldiers deploy, secure wall lockers, vehicles and return to find vehicles damaged, wall lockers ransacked.

I have to think fellow Soldiers are the perpetrators. And this really saddens me. How can one Soldier prey on another?

I'm so naive I can't understand Soldiers dropping cigarette butts on the ground or tossing fast food containers out of their pickup trucks, knowing their buddies will be the ones who have to pick them up while on police call. So I'm really at a loss when it comes to damaging someone's property.

What ever happened to the values training we get?

Seems to me it goes against all seven values.

Where's the loyalty to your fellow Soldier when you're out there bashing in his windshield?

Isn't it your duty to care for and protect the belongings of other Soldiers?

You sure aren't showing your respect for them when you break into their wall lockers and take their valuables.

And if you had an ounce of selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage, you could not bring yourself to do these crimes.

Also, if you had an ounce of sense you'd be thinking, "Hey if I'm busting into this guy's vehicle while he's gone, what's going to stop someone from busting into mine when I'm deployed?"

But then you don't have an ounce of sense. You're working at the beast level and sooner or later you're going to get caught. Maybe not at Fort Benning. Maybe not even while you're in the Army, but you're going to get caught.

I just wish I'd be around to tell you, "Told you so."

Post celebrates women's equality

This year, Women's Equality Day celebrates the 79th anniversary of the 19th Amendment. The right to vote is a precious privilege, which should not be taken lightly. Men and women who cast their votes enhance the entire governmental process. Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity for Soldiers and civilians at Fort Benning to acknowledge their responsibilities to vote and to recognize the continuing efforts toward women's equality and equality for all Americans.

From its radical beginning in 1848, during the Women's Rights Convention in Seneca Falls, the suffrage movement was a long uphill battle for courageous women like Elizabeth Caddy Stanton who drafted the Declaration of Sentiments. The declaration listed the legal disadvantages of women and became the catalyst for future suffrage conventions.

From 1870 to 1910, there were 480 attempts across the nation to pass legislation, resulting in only 27 state votes, of which only two were successful. Then on Aug. 26, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the 19th Amendment making it a constitutional right for women.

It wasn't until Aug. 26, 1973 that the president of the U.S. designated Women's Equality Day, denoting the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, reminding us of women's continuing efforts toward equality in all areas of our society.

Commemoration of the 19th Amendment provides everyone a chance to honor the work of Stanton and others who worked so hard to gain the right to vote. By observing this celebration and casting our vote, we ensure that the fight for equality continues.

Duo nets wins at national competition

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For two members of the Silver Wings, Fort Benning's command exhibition parachute team, a recent trip to the 1999 World Free Fall Convention had them bringing home more than just souvenirs.

Taking high to the skies above Quincy, Ill., Staff Sgt. Dan Leavitt and Staff Sgt. Greg Windmiller participated in the Parachute Association's 1999 Sport Accuracy National Championship held Aug. 10 and 11. Even though it was the first time either of the two competed in a championship of this kind, they beat out eight other teams to walk away with a second place finish.

Leavitt and Windmiller, both two-year veterans of the Silver Wings, said they didn't enter the competition for prizes or awards, but rather to get the Silver Wings' foot in the door of competitions, represent the Army, and of course, have a little fun.

"More or less we just wanted to check it (the championship) out and see what it was like because neither of us had competed in a national competition before," said Leavitt, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment. "We also wanted to help get the team involved in more state and national competitions."

The duo showed their dedication to doing so by actually giving up their own time by taking leave to attend the competition.

However, when they first arrived, the two almost had to abandon their plans. They learned the competition required a four-person team, leaving them short two members.

However, this didn't stop them from doing what they had traveled from Georgia to Illinois to do. It didn't take long for them to run into a couple of their skydiving counterparts and add them to the team.

Leavitt explained that the competition judged parachuting accuracy by measuring in meters and centimeters how close a skydiver landed to the center of a 30-inch disk. If a parachutist lands directly on the disk they receive a score of zero. After a series of four jumps, the team's scores were averaged and the lowest won.

He went on to say his team immediately did very well, and they knew by their second jump they had secured at least a third-place standing. Once everything was said and done, there were only a couple points separating the top three places.

For Windmiller, who is assigned to Company D, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, taking second place in the competition wasn't at all a disappointment in light of who his team lost to — someone he described as the Audie Murphy of the skydiving community.

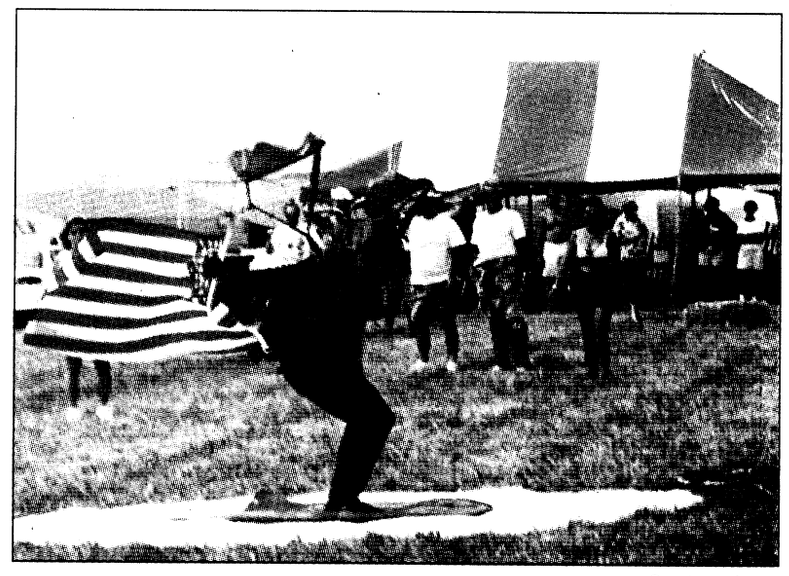
"The team leader of the team that beat us out, Lew Sanborne, has been actively skydiving for 50 years," Windmiller said. "He is one of the oldest sky divers around. He is also the first man to ever hold a skydiving license."

"In fact, he has had more jumps on one particular parachute than I have total."

Although Windmiller admitted he was in awe of Sanborne, there is no doubt Sanborne had reason to be in awe right back.

Windmiller managed to nab first place in the individual category with the lowest average score — something Leavitt described as pretty impressive considering the people Windmiller was up against.

However, for Windmiller it was just an honor to be in the same area as some of the greats.



Both Leavitt and Windmiller agreed they plan to compete again next year, but next time they hope to get two of their fellow Silver Wings to complete the team.

"I think if we could take a four-man team from the parachute team, we could stand a very good chance of taking first place," Leavitt said.

Windmiller said the reason for this is because the Silver Wings specialize in parachuting for accuracy.

"Everytime we jump it's about accuracy. We always shoot accuracy because it looks good to a crowd. Of course, another reason for shooting accuracy is if you can land on an itty bitty target, you can pretty much guarantee you won't land on a crowd. So our accuracy actually has a lot to do with safety issues."

The pair said they want to start getting involved in more competitions. The next possibly being a competition in North to Carolina sponsored by the Golden Knights.

Landmines continue to terrorize South America

USARSA program helps countries develop humanitarian de-mining programs

Capt. Gerardo Hernandez
U.S. Army School of the Americas

According to the International Committee of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, there are approximately 110 million landmines scattered in 64 countries around the world.

These landmines left behind by Soldiers continue to terrorize and destroy human lives long after war and fighting has ceased. Moreover, little research has been conducted to determine how long landmines actually remain active. What we do know is that landmines continue to explode daily, decades after being planted. Although the laying of landmines has ceased in South America, the landmine crisis unfortunately continues to plague the continent.

The United States formulated and led an international process to better coordinate, fund, publicize, and accelerate world-wide humanitarian de-mining assistance and clearance operations. One of the key priorities was to ensure that humanitarian de-mining was an international priority supported by resources and action on Oct. 31, 1997. Therefore, the United States government established a program to assist host nations in establishing indigent de-mining programs. The program was meant to assist recipient countries in the development, training and staffing of humanitarian de-mining operations.

In 1998, the U.S. Army School of the Americas was tasked to implement an effective humanitarian de-mining program that would help selected South American countries relieve human suffering and develop indigenous demining capabilities, while promoting U.S. political, security, and economic interests.

Since then, USARSA has done just that. USARSA develops personnel in the art of humanitarian de-mining. The School has graduated more than 100 students from South America in humanitarian demining operations. The OE-15 Humanitarian De-mining Operations course trains Latin American students in the skills of finding, recognizing, detecting, and neutralizing mines. Many of the students do not have previous experience in de-mining operations and the course trains them as subject- matter experts.

The course objectives focus on neutralization of booby traps and mines. The students are also physically conditioned to endure the demanding tasks involved with humanitarian de-mining operations. USARSA's July-August 1999 HDO course consisted of 18 students from Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Peru and Venezuela. These students came to the USARSA with little knowledge of the techniques used to effectively clear mines and booby traps. The School gave them the necessary tools to lead personnel into de-mining operations.

"Once the students depart to their countries they will be able to conduct any demining operation," said Maj. Jesus Marmol, one of USARSA's primary instructors for the HDO course.

Like their predecessors, the current students will return to their countries to become part of the worldwide humanitarian de-mining effort and thus alleviate the suffering of many civilians.

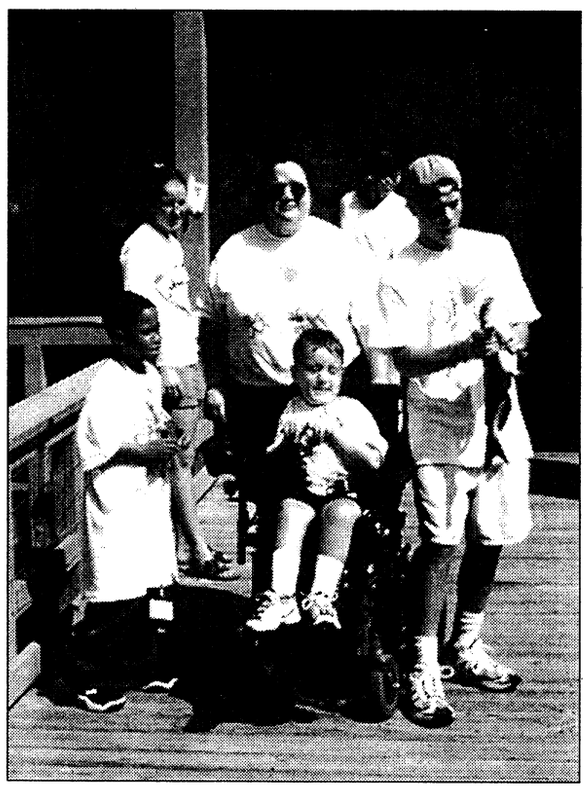
Soldiers work at MDA camp

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

As the two dozen Soldiers took to the wooded campground in the suburbs of Atlanta, many did not even consider that this may be perhaps one of their most challenging missions yet. Unlike other exercises, this mission called for the Soldiers not to face an enemy, but to make new friends.

For the third year, Fort Benning Soldiers, led by the post's Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers organization, volunteered their time to brighten the lives of handicapped children during the Muscular Dystrophy Association's summer camp Aug. 7-13.

During the week-long camp, the Soldiers worked as counselors. Each was given one or two children to care for throughout the days of arts and crafts, canoeing, fishing and horseback riding, among other activities.



Even when the sun went down, the counselors stuck by their campers' sides and assisted them with daily tasks such as hair combing, feeding and bathing.

"They were plenty tired when it was all over," said Joanie Rosenbaum, summer camp director. "Compared to this, boot camp was a breeze."

While many agreed the camp was a lot of work, Sgt. Jonathon Kunze of the Ranger Training Brigade, said he will remember those seven days for the rest of his life.

"This was quite possibly the most rewarding experience of my life," he said. "Just to be able to go out and make a difference in one of these kid's lives was worth it for me."

Sgt. Sylvia May, NCO Academy, said her most memorable moment from the camp was when she helped a 9-year-old girl walk for the first time with a walker.

Spc. Tina Fontaine

A group of summer campers gather to see a freshly-caught fish.

"This camp really made me appreciate the little things we do every day that we sometimes take for granted," she said.

With about 109 campers and just 89 counselors, Rosenbaum said the Soldiers really saved the day.

"They were so extremely helpful. I wouldn't have been able to do it without them," she said.

Rosenbaum added that with almost 85 percent of the campers wheelchair bound, the annual camp is for many of the children the only time they get out and experience different things.

"I just want each and every one of the volunteers to know that they really helped make a child's dream come true," she said.

Program may get Soldiers out early

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

About 500 active-duty Soldiers from all ranks may leave the Army between Dec. 1 and Jan. 2, two days to two weeks earlier, thanks to an annual early-out program.

Essentially, Soldiers affected by the Army's Holiday Early Release Program should be able to get home by Christmas, said Lt. Col. Billie W. Keeler, chief of the Retirements and Separations Branch, U.S. Total Army Personnel Command, Alexandria, Va.

"The Christmas-New Year's holiday period is a time of increased (service member) separations (from the Army), and reduced personnel manning due to holiday leaves," Keeler said. "This program benefits Soldiers leaving the Army by helping them to beat the holiday rush."

Current ETS Early Release Target Date:

Dec. 1-2	Nov. 30
Dec. 3-4	Dec. 1
Dec. 5-7	Dec. 2
Dec. 8-10	Dec. 3
Dec. 11-14	Dec. 6
Dec. 15-17	Dec. 7
Dec. 18-20	Dec. 8
Dec. 21-24	Dec. 9
Dec. 25-27	Dec. 10
Dec. 28-31	Dec. 13
Jan. 1-2, 2000	Dec. 14

Commanders may not separate a Soldier under the provisions of the program if the Soldier has not submitted a voluntary request for release from active-duty under expiration of time of service requirements, according to officials.

Soldiers selecting the early release program aren't authorized permissive TDY in conjunction with separation processing.

The schedule is to be used for equitable early transitioning; two days leeway of the adjusted target ETS date is authorized as an exception.

Bus: Don't pass

military police. Once it the MPs, they determine who the registered owner of the vehicle is and issue that person a citation. Kelley added that those who are cited are subjected to a mandatory court appearance in which the judge can set the fine as high as $200.

Kelley mentioned that in the last year a greater intensity has been placed on identifying cross arm violators and citing them. He said when it comes to the safety of children no one should take the matter lightly.

"People who drive on this installation need to understand they are not to pass a stopped school bus, because to do so puts a child at risk. And we will not tolerate motorists putting our children at risk. I don't care how late somebody is, if they are going around a stopped school bus and putting one of our children in danger, there is absolutely no excuse for that."

But yet over the years, bus drivers have noticed more than their fair share of motorists whipping by the little red stop sign without regard for the innocent passengers who are loading and unloading from the bus doors.

In the three years that Cheryl Wells has driven bus at Fort Benning she has seen three children nearly hit by careless drivers. In one case a car actually drove up on the curve to go around her bus, narrowly missing a young girl who was exiting the bus.

Wells said she usually has two to three incidents a week of drivers ignoring the cross arm. Some she said have even yelled obscenities or made profane gestures while doing so, something she said she just doesn't understand.

"I understand it's frustrating but you have to think about the child," Wells said about having to wait behind a bus. "I don't even like being stuck behind a bus, and I drive one. But the fact of the matter is, are you going to be able to sleep tonight if you kill a child?"

But things are getting better, Wells said. Everyone is cracking down to make sure the violators do not get away with breaking the law and endangering a child. She said she has even enlisted the help of the 50 to 60 students she drives.

"The kids on my bus know what to do. If I holler that a car has gone by they will start writing whether it was a blue car or green one. They help me out because I can't always get it all."

Wells went on to say she doesn't have any children of her own, but she feels as if the children she drives are her own.

"These are my kids. I don't know if I could ever drive a bus again if I saw a child get hit. It's scary, and it makes all of us so mad that people could be so careless."

Officials share concerns about op tempo

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

The proposed pay raise, pay table reform and changes to the retirement system will have a positive influence on military retention rates, but officials are still concerned about the effects of operations tempo, said Vice Adm. Patricia A. Tracey.

Tracey, deputy assistant secretary of defense for military personnel policy, also said DoD must better understand how members' concerns about their families may be causing mid-level officers and NCOs to leave the services. DoD must do more to address these quality-of-life issues, she said.

The mid-year report on retention in the military is mixed, she said. "The Army has a great year going, the Navy is doing OK — they'd like to be better. The Air Force is struggling, and the Marines are doing well," she said during an interview.

Tracey said the congressionally-proposed 4.8 percent across-the-board pay hike, targeted pay and repeal of the Redux retirement system will encourage more service members to stay on active duty. "Yet, a very robust economy out there means these men and women believe they can get out and have more personal time with their families," she said.

Tracey said visiting and talking with people in the field reveals that members' attempts to balance family and service demands have a lot to do with retention problems.

DoD is doing more than just promoting pay raises and retirement reform, she said. The department is working with Congress to increase the amounts of special pays and incentives available as retention tools. It has proposed new special pays for Navy special operations warfare officers and surface warfare officers and an enlisted aviation career incentive pay.

Another initiative will raise the ceiling for selective re-enlistment bonuses from the current $45,000 to $60,000. Although only a few people will qualify for the maximum amount, Tracey said, the initiative will give service planners more flexibility and make crucial military specialties more attractive.

"The most important signal of all is that everyone in Washington has been talking about the importance of retaining experience in the military," Tracey said. "After 10 years of downsizing, that's the right kind of dialogue to have going."

Optempo remains a problem. Optempo is the pace of operations experienced by units, especially in terms of deployments and training. Since the end of the Cold War, more U.S. service members have been deploying to hotspots around the world. Tracey said the services are looking at ways to make military life "more predictable."

She said the Navy and Marine Corps have for years deployed crews and ships on a set cycle. She cited the Air Force's aerospace expeditionary force as a promising step toward making Air Force life more predictable. The Army, too, is looking at deployment rates and how to ensure no unit is overstressed.

Some personnel tempo problems result from the turbulence created by downsizing and consolidation, she said. Perstempo refers to the degree of turbulence or turnover in individual jobs, how hard and how long individuals work and how frequently they are being deployed. Optempo generally drives perstempo, but so does how well a unit is manned. "In some cases, we have the right number of people, but they may still be in training," she said.

Of course, the careful operations tempo and personnel tempo planning go by the wayside when an operation like Allied Force comes along, she said.

Another problem with retention is a mindset, Tracey said. "Some commanders have been asked for half their careers to help downsize the force, and now they have to help retain an experienced force," she said.

The active duty military shrank from 2.13 million service members in 1989 to 1.36 million today. Retention is not a commander's first concern when the military shrinks that amount, she said.

DoD will survey service members to determine, in part, what importance service members attach to quality of life issues when making their decisions to stay or leave. The survey is expected out in September, DoD officials said.Presidential Unit Citations among many other decorations.

DoD explains jargon

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

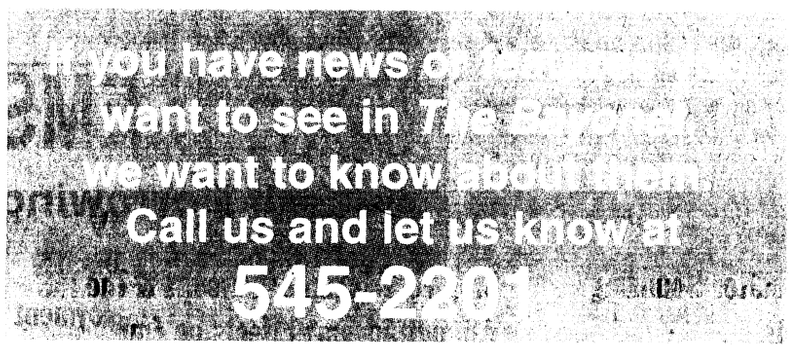
Many service members are not sure what "optempo" and "perstempo" are, except they know they don't like them high.

The terms are related, and service members and even some DoD officials use them interchangeably. The fact is, they're not the same.

A tempo is a musical term meaning the speed at which a piece is played. The word's definition over time has expanded to mean the pace of an activity, as in the "tempo of everyday life is getting faster."

DoD adopted "operations tempo" as a measure of the pace of an operation or operations in terms of equipment usage — aircraft "flying hours," ship "steaming days" or "tank (driving) miles." In the military way, the term became jargon: optempo. Obviously, the optempo increases with the intensity of and number of operations.

Maria Hughes, senior readiness analyst in the Pentagon, said the services generally define personnel tempo — "perstempo" — as the time an individual spends away from home station. Each service measures somewhat differently. Optempo and perstempo seem the same because they often rise and fall together, but they don't have to.

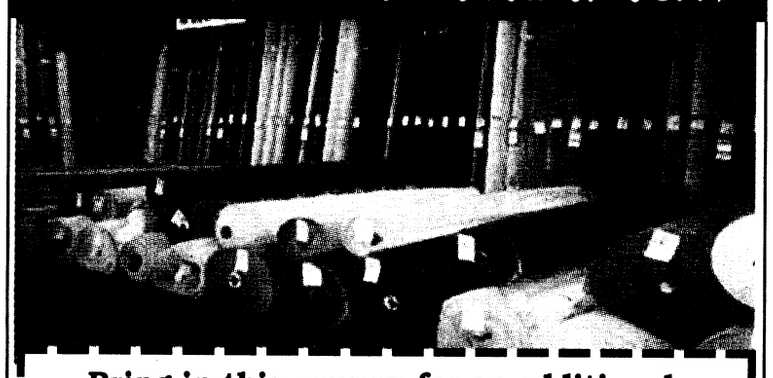


Got that straight? Now, complicating the situation are two new terms officials are starting to use: "worktempo" and "deptempo."

Worktempo is a newer of the two. It is generally defined as the pace of work that military personnel experience at home stations. In general, when a unit deploys, those members staying at home see a worktempo increase.

"They have to perform many of the same jobs with far fewer people," said Army Lt. Col. Catherine Abbott, a Pentagon spokesperson. Likewise, units preparing for deployment have an increase in worktempo prior to departure.

Deptempo stands for deployment tempo. It's generally a measure of the number of days in one month that a unit would have to deploy to accomplish assigned training or operational missions. Scarce units in periods of high demand — for instance, AWACS aircraft units —tend to have high deptempos.



So now you know what the DoD jargon means. Don't get too comfortable with the definitions, though, because the defense authorization bill before Congress directs DoD to standardize the definitions. More on that effort later — as its tempo increases.

FTX: ITB Soldiers take to field for end-of-cycle event

Capt. James Brownlee
Company C, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., ITB

They say the hardest part of any journey begins with the first step. For the 200 new Infantry Soldiers of Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, that first step came at 4 a.m. on a warm and humid Monday morning almost two weeks ago. That step would eventually lead them into a profession that only few dare call their own. With a distinct objective in mind, the men of Co. C, set out on a seven-day field training exercise — the final test for America's newest Infantrymen.

The first phase of the FTX for Co. C was a 12-mile road march with a 35-pound rucksack and weapon. The objective was to arrive and secure the area of operation.

"The digging was impossible. It took us a good 14 hours just to dig our M-60 position. The ground was packed hard with the red Georgia clay and the heat was just way too unbearable even with all of the mandatory rest breaks," said Pvt. Brendan P. Fogarty of Miami. "We all thought that the commander and first sergeant were a bit crazy when we heard that we had to go rest and get out of the sun. Then, on top of that, we got fruit and Gatorade delivered to our platoon command post."

Others looked past the numerous distractions and took note of the lessons that were being taught.

"I learned just how extensive our platoon and company's fire power really is," said Pfc. Dexter Bricken, of Fort Myers, Fla. "I learned why we put our weapons systems where we put them. I learned a heck of a lot about the priorities of work in the defense, most importantly how to eat, sleep, conduct personal hygiene and perform weapons maintenance. It all boiled down to learning how to survive and live in my foxhole. I learned more from my drill sergeants during these past few days than I ever thought I could."

While in the defense, the company came under a chemical attack initiated by the opposing force. The Soldiers remained in chemical suits and protective masks for approximately four hours, while they continued to improve their defensive positions.

"At first we all thought it was the OPFOR throwing some screening smoke or one of our early warning trip wires going off," said Pvt. Christopher Harman of Woodbridge, Va. "So, when the smoke drifted our way we all just sat there. We really didn't think it was a chemical attack. In a matter of seconds our faces, hands and the back of our necks began to sting. We knew right then that this white cloud was no OPFOR screening maneuver, this smoke cloud was gas. It only took us a couple of seconds to don our protective masks and give the gas signal, but those first couple of seconds were pretty realistic."

The Soldiers received a fragmentary order to infiltrate the enemy's defensive perimeter. After crawling 100 meters through sand and mud Pvt. Joseph Tardiff from Vacaville, Calif., said, "At first it was pretty scary and we really didn't know what to do. But we were told to high crawl and not to get up, so we all just kind of reassured each other and moved out. This was by far one of the hardest things that we have done and one of the most exciting. Never have I been told to crawl 100 meters with all kinds of explosions going off and live rounds with tracers flying over my head. It was kind of like the Army value — Duty. It was our duty to accomplish the mission and reach our objective, which was the enemy's positions. With that in mind we trusted our drill sergeants and took off. The course was a real smoker and when we finished we were exhausted but, boy, was it fun."

With the infiltration course complete the company moved out to the McKenna MOUT site where the company spent two days going through a number of various tasks and scenarios. 1st Sgt. Carlos Garcia

For many men, joining the Army and becoming an Infantryman is a family tradition. This is the case for a medical research physicist who spent 11 years in college, earned two bachelors, two masters and a doctorate in medical physics. He left an air-conditioned lab to spend 14 weeks in the hot Georgia sun to complete One Station Unit Training after joining the Florida National Guard. This Soldier shares his family name with Gen. George S. Patton, who was his grandfather's uncle.

Spc. Phillip Patton, Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry, Infantry Regiment, Training Brigade, graduates today with the rest of his company at 9 a.m. at Kanell Field.

Becoming an Infantryman was one of Patton's goals of carrying on the family tradition.

"For me, selfless service is to serve my country and to carry on my family tradition," Patton said. "Selfless service is what this Army and our nation is all about. Our forefathers thought nothing of giving their lives for what they believed in. They gave all so we could have what we have today — freedom."

Patton added that selfless service is not just serving his country as his family has, but also working together as one for a common goal, no matter what the goal may be.

"Maybe the goal is getting to the finish point during the Eagle Challenge. There we all had to give everything we had and then some," he said. "Some of us had fewer strengths than others, but we all worked together to improve said, "During this phase of the FTX we are able to show the Soldiers just exactly what type of environment they might be fighting our next world conflict in.

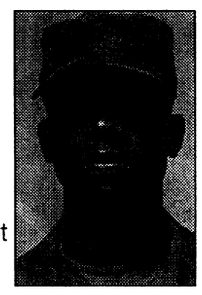
"We take these young men, build up their confidence and self-esteem, and give them every possible advantage to succeed. What you get is a Soldier who can be counted on in every environment whether it is here in MOUT or out in a desert. These new Infantrymen are quick thinkers, they can react and adapt instantly to almost any situation. Knowing that, we add in numerous tasks throughout the scenario and put them in all different types of tactical situations. When they become proficient at one task and situation they feel good about themselves. So we always find them coming back ready to learn and accomplish more. It's a building process that never ends.

The final days of the FTX conducted situational training exercises. The STX lanes focus on squad battle drills with the main effort of the drill on individual and buddy team actions.

With the FTX coming to an end, the Soldiers prepared for a river crossing and a 15-mile road march back home.



"Our river crossing was awesome,' Pvt. Christopher Rocha from San Antonio, Texas, said. Back in our rehearsal area we went through it over and over but doing it at night was a whole different experience. It took real personal courage to meet the challenge of actually going across that rope bridge with only a snap link and a safety harness. Now I understand why the cadre talked about rigor and intensity— doing a rope bridge at night is rigor and intensity. Hooah."

After the crossing the river using a rope bridge, the Soldiers set out on the 15-mile road march. With the warm August night surrounding them, the soon to be newest members of U.S. Army Infantry began the trek to Sacrifice Field, located in front of the Infantry Museum for the Crossed Rifle Ceremony.

Pvt. Ermon Kirby from Newark, N.J., said, "Now that our FTX is over I can honestly say that what our forefathers sacrificed for us was just a little bit more than what the average American citizen will ever understand. I know that we have only touched the tip of the iceberg by volunteering to become Infantry Soldiers but what we went through gives me an idea of just how tough things were for my forefathers."

upon and overcome."

According to Staff Sgt. Timothy Roberge, Patton's platoon sergeant, the Florida native excelled during OSUT. He said Patton remained his company's platoon guide for the entire cycle, achieved a PT score of 270 and was a first-time go in all phases of training.

"Specialist Patton is a real self-starter and when he gets going, it's hard to stop him," Roberge said. "He has remained platoon guide for the entire cycle for just this reason. He can make things happen. He gets assigned tasks completed without being checked on. He leads the way in just about everything around here."

OSUT has taught Patton about teamwork.

"This experience has taught me more than just how to be an Infantryman," Patton said. "I've developed a stronger understanding of the concept of teamwork. As a medical research physicist, I often work alone and depend on my abilities or the abilities of a limited few others. As platoon guide, I've realized that it is important everyone is able to complete the assigned tasks, even if it means others will have to do extra work.

"This training emphasized the importance of working together to make sure the company is a success and to play down the importance of being an individual. We are all a team and being a part of the team, especially the whole Army team, is what I am proud of the most."

Patton's brother also followed the family tradition of military service. He is a major stationed at Fort Hood, Texas.

GA Council recognizes volunteer of the year

Terry Beckwith
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Georgia Council on Child Abuse recently recognized 1st Lt. Sherry Daniels, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, as the Fort Benning's Family Advocacy First Steps Program Volunteer of the Year.

The First Steps Program is designed to provide parent education, emotional support, resource referrals and follow-up contacts to parents of newborns.

Other program volunteers selected Daniels for this award because of her hard work and dedication.

"All the volunteers in the First Steps Program selected her because they admire her dedication and commitment to the program," said Juliette Blakely, parent support coordinator with the Family Advocacy Program.

"She sets the example for all of the volunteers to emulate — she works full time and then drives in from Seale, Ala., to work with new mothers," Blakely said.

Daniels volunteer work began as a Candy Striper at Mt. Sinai Hospital in Dearborn, Mich.

"I volunteer because I feel that if there is anything you can do to help someone, then why not?" Daniels said.

Daniels became interested in the First Steps Program while assigned to MACH's Mother-Baby Unit where she watched volunteers visit new mothers and talk to them about caring for babies.

"It is a unique experience to interact with young, inexperienced mothers, some who feel they might have made a mistake. I get to help them and give them the encouragement to become better parents. I am helping both the new mother and the baby," she said.

Daniels joined the Army in 1988 and was later accepted into the Army Enlisted Commissioning Program in 1995. She attended John Hopkins School of Nursing and graduated in 1997. She also graduated from Officer Candidate School that same year.

In addition to her full-time job in the Same-Day Surgery Unit, Daniels, a mother of two school-age children, volunteers her weekend time to the program.

For more information about becoming a First Steps volunteer, call the First Steps office at 544-2020.

"It really is a great program," Daniels said.

Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Georgia Department of Labor in Association with veterans organizations is conducting a Job Fair at the VFW Hall, 1824 Victory Drive.

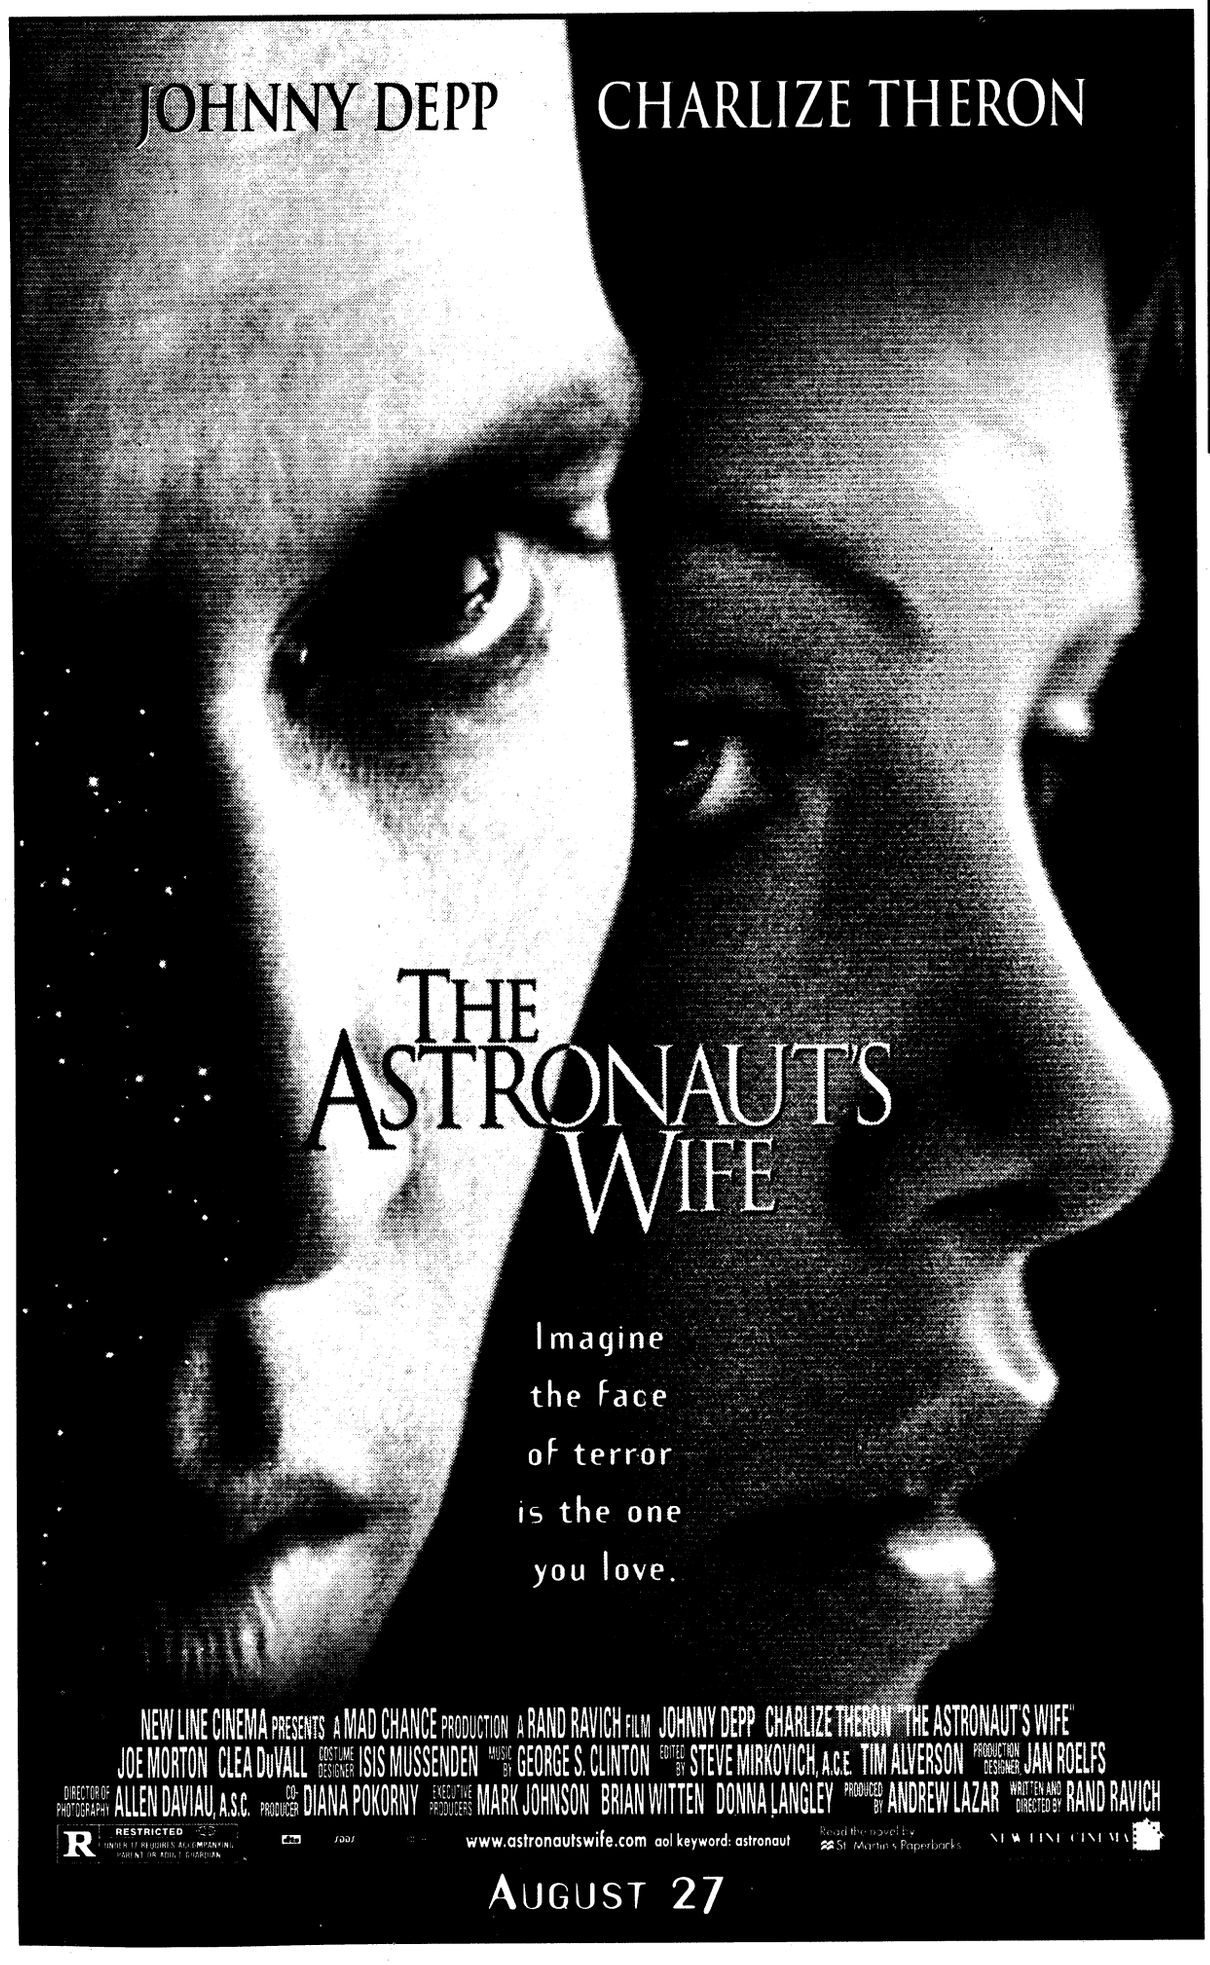
The fair will open at 9 a.m. and close at 1 p.m. Sept. 9. The annual event is open to any Soldier (active, retired, or separated), civilian employees and any family members interested in the job search.

"It is recommended that personnel in the ACAP process or nearing a separation point attend the event," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services manager. It is anticipated that approximately 30 employers will be represented.

Wight said many advantages can be gained by job seekers attending job fairs.

The first advantage is the opportunity to gather information about a wide range of potential employers and civilian careers. By talking with recruiters from many companies and agencies, job seekers can compare their skills with the requirements of the positions available.

Second, the fair is an opportunity to practice interviewing skills. All attendees should look sharp in their duty uniform or appropriate civilian professional dress. (Blue jeans and T-shirts are not professional.) Interviewees should practice describing their selling skills and experience when asked about their professional background. For those who have attended the ACAP job search workshop, review some of the interviewing material to better prepare.



Third, in regard to submission of resumes and the completion of applications, it is important to remember that there will be opportunities to do that at the job fair. Copies of resumes are not mandatory for attendance but will be helpful to give to selected employers or to help with completing job applications. It also might be wiser to gather job specifics, company data, and names and addresses of the point of contact and mail cover letters and targeted resumes after the fair.

Attendance at the job fair is just one of the steps in the job search process. If participants can find employers interested in their skills and experience and they have presented themselves well, be prepared for follow-up action. Many Soldiers have eventually found excellent jobs with companies they first met at a job fair.

Take advantage of this annual opportunity to get up close and personal with real employers.

For more information about the job fair and job seeker strategies, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308, 545-2309.

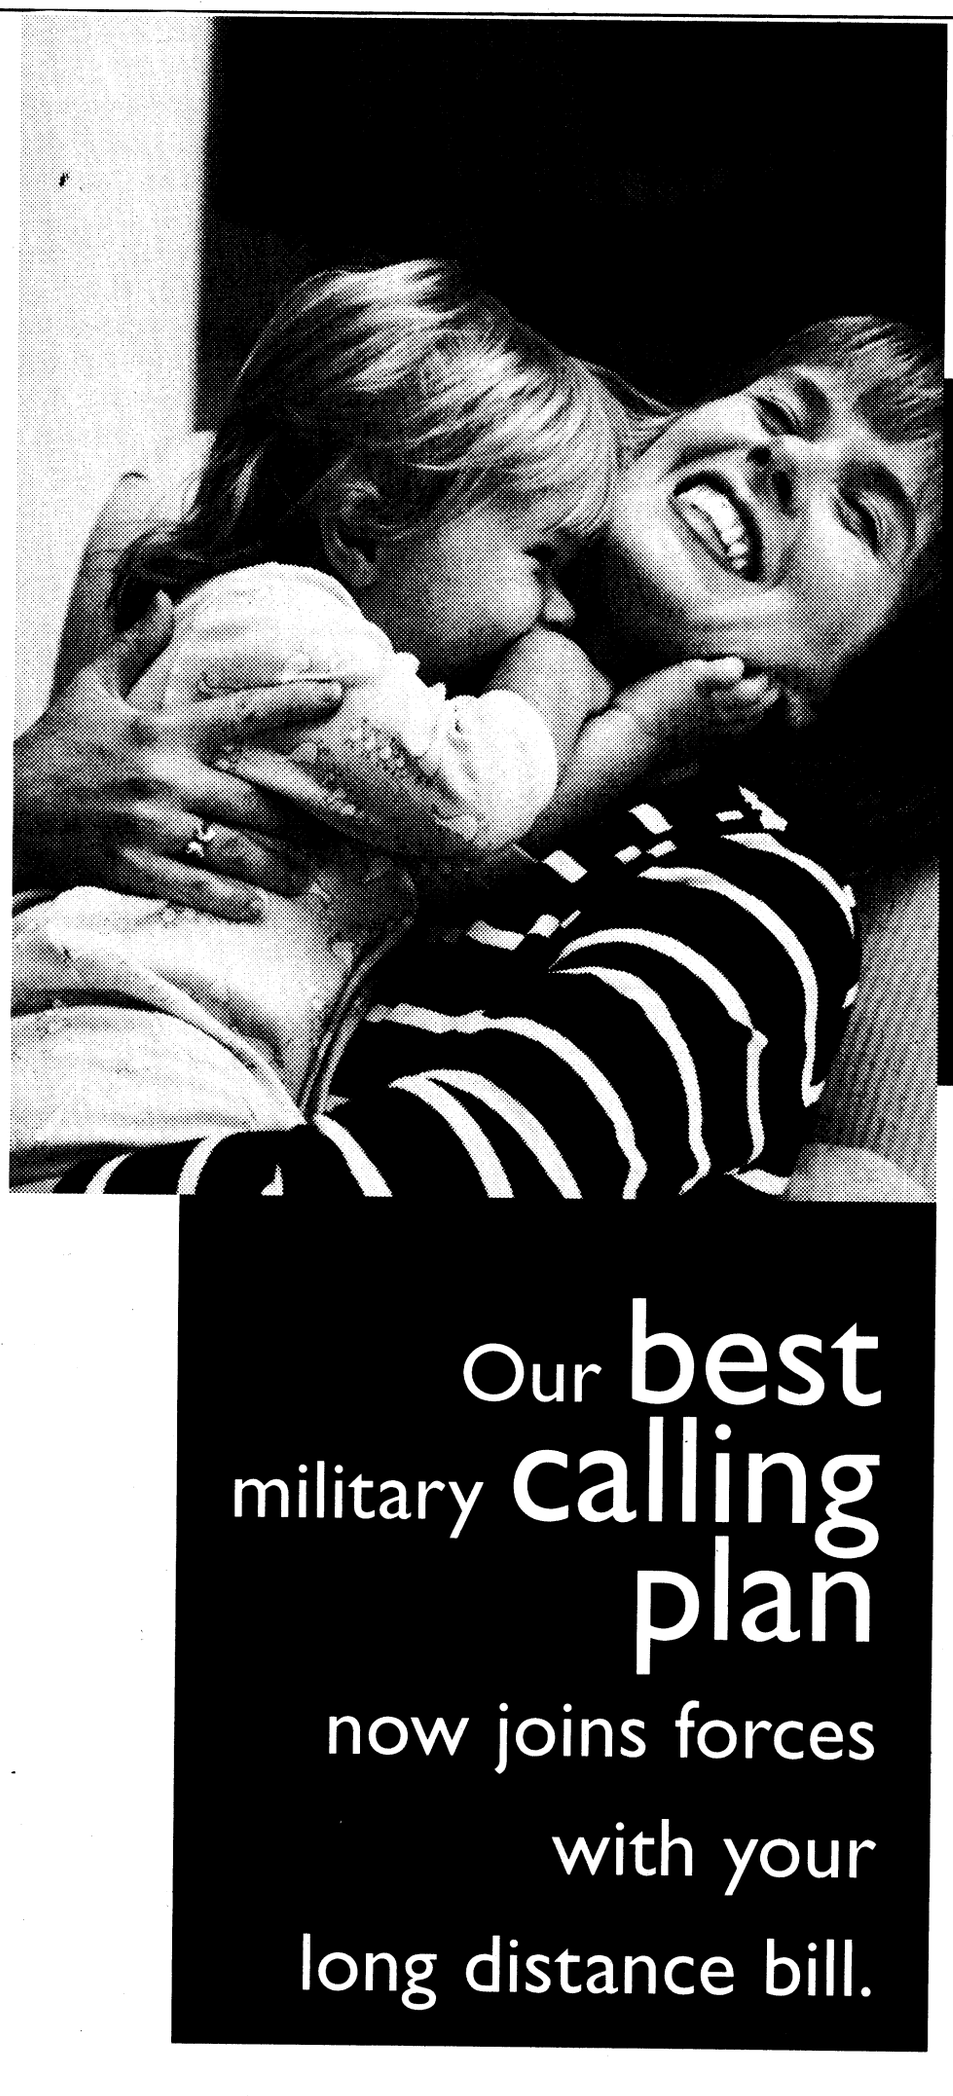
For the first time in the history of the Long Range Surveillance Leaders Course, an Egyptian student successfully completed the demanding 33-day school Aug. 13.

Capt. Abdel Moamen, a reconnaissance platoon commander in his native Egypt, graduated with Class 05-99.



"This was a great opportunity for me to train with American Soldiers. I really enjoyed learning about the different tactics and techniques taught in this course," Moamen said. He also said he found the LRSLC a physically challenging course that allowed him to learn about surveillance missions in an environment different than his usual desert terrain back in Egypt.

Additionally, he said he was impressed by the professional level of instruction he received from the cadre of Company D, 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

"The level of teamwork I experienced from fellow American students really made me feel a part of something great," he said.

"Capt. Moamen was energetic and eager to learn," said Capt. Michael A. Viera, Co. D commander. "He met the standard and represented his country well."

The LRSLC is a graduate-level course that many American students find difficult, Viera said. "Capt. Moamen's ability in meeting all course requirements confidently and overcoming the language barrier is an indication of his determination."

Cameras keep watchful eye on riders

A surveillance camera, mounted to the right of bus driver Lani Escamilla's rear-view mirror, keeps a watchful eye on students. All school buses on Fort Benning have cameras. Escamilla drives Bus No. 47 at Dexter Elementary School.

When children start to misbehave on her school bus, Cheryl Wells, the driver, likes to tell them, "Turn around and smile at the camera." It's a reminder that although her back faces the students, someone else — rather something else — has a steady, unblinking eye on them.

From the moment Wells turns on the ignition, the surveillance camera mounted just right of her rear-view mirror starts monitoring the ride to and from White Elementary School. Not only do the black-and-white tapes, complete with audio, record student behavior, they also note each and every time the driver touches the brakes, activates the yellow, warning lights and the stop arm.

All 32 buses in the Fort Benning school system were equipped with the cameras last year — at a cost of about $1,000 per unit, according to Robert Ouimette, contract manager of Taylor Motors, Fort Benning's school transportation service. Fort Benning Schools paid for the cameras, not the contractor.

According to Dr. Thomas Dignan, principal at Faith Middle School, it was money well spent.

"Anything that will help ensure that you have a safe bus is worth the investment," Dignan said. "Children know that besides the bus driver, we have another way to check on discipline and behavior."

Students attending off-post schools in the Muscogee County School system are also under surveillance. All buses are equipped with video cameras, according to Myles B. Caggins, Jr., assistant superintendent for Business Affairs.

This past year, Dignan said he checked about seven tapes each month, usually after a driver reported an incident to him or when parents, who had received conduct reports on their child, would ask to observe his or her behavior on the bus.

"Parents say, 'My child wouldn't do that,'" Wells said. "Then, they get more of an idea of what actually goes on."

Sgt. 1st Class Juana Marrero, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, thinks the cameras are great.

"This way you can see who is doing what. You can see what went wrong and who is at fault." Marrero's son, Frank Camacho, is an eighth-grader at Faith.

When conflict happens on a bus, there are usually several versions of the story. Playing the tape helps drivers and principals get to the truth. "Most students won't tell on each other," Wells said.

"The tapes are there to assist us," principal Dignan said. "But they are not the final judge. The bus driver is in charge of the bus. He is the captain of the ship."

The cameras allow drivers to concentrate on the road. Once the children are safely at school or home, the drivers can review the tapes and follow up with disciplinary action. "They can view the tapes later and then proceed to turn in conduct reports," Donna Ford, support services supervisor for Fort Benning Schools, said. The tapes are secure in tamper-proof boxes and only principals and Ouimette have keys. Ouimette randomly checks tapes as a safety measure.

Dexter Elementary School driver Lani Escamilla recalled how a tape helped her last year. "A parent called and said I was letting the students stand up," she said. "The tape showed that wasn't true."

Seating assignments deter vandalism

Vandalism aboard school buses may become a thing of past with new methods of deterrence

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

All Faith Middle School students who ride a school bus will be assigned a seat by Sept. 3. It is part of an effort to crack down on vandalism to the buses, according to Robert Ouimette, contract manager for Taylor Motors, Fort Benning Schools' transportation service.

Last year, 230 seats were cut on Faith buses, at a cost of about $25 a seat, he said.

Drivers will conduct pre-trip and post-trip inspections. "And we will pull the video tapes to verify who is in the seat," Ouimette said. Students charged with vandalism will be subject to school disciplinary action and the cost of repairs.

Broken windows can run about $165. Windows are usually broken accidentally, he said, when a student throws a heavy backpack into the seat or sends an elbow through the glass.

Ouimette also asks that any resident who sees someone throwing eggs at a bus to call the Military Police. Last year a student was hit in the face and cut when an egg sailed through an open window, he said.

"All buses are equipped with cellular phones with a direct line to the MP station," he said.

Students bid farewell to summer, welcome new year

There were a lot of smiles — and a few tears — as students and parents entered the front doors at McBride Elementary School Tuesday morning. The 1999 Fort Benning school year had started, and there were plenty of cameras and camcorders on hand to document the event.

Peering from the hallway into Lynne McLaughlin's pre-K classroom, Sophia Del Toro tried to catch a candid photograph of her 4-year-old daughter, Brianna, sitting with her class on the floor.

"I'm probably more worried about her going to school than she is," Del Toro said. "She has no problems about going to school. We've been getting ready for this for a while."

Brianna was not alone in her eagerness. "We had a good opening," Del Hicks, McBride principal, said. "Everyone was anxious for the school year to begin. The teachers all have their rooms ready. That's really the unspoken word that means so much to the children."

McBride has about 400 children enrolled. System-wide, there are approximately 3,100 students and 260 teachers at the six elementary and one middle school on post, according to Gail Wilson, spokesman for Fort Benning Schools.

Carrying bags full of supplies, new backpacks and insulated lunchboxes, the children settled into their desks. By 10 a.m., the second-graders in Bergen Ostervold's class were ready for a water break.

"They all came in happy and on their own," Ostervold said. "It's all falling into place."

An hour later, lunch was being served at White Elementary School. The menu featured pizza, salad and corn. Before lining up to go to the cafeteria, the kindergartners in Carolyn Phillips' class colored quietly. So far, the day had been a good one for Jordan Brown, 5, daughter of Cheryl and Chief Warrant Officer 2 William Brown, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

"I'm excited because I never went to this school before," she said.

The highlight of the morning for Sarah George, 5, was "cutting out a gingerbread man." The daughter of Kimberly and Lt. Col. Keith George, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Sarah showed off her new navy blue school dress decorated with ABCs.

For many children, the school day ended the same way it started — with a bus ride home.

After going over a few important rules, again, bus driver Annette Patterson asked the pre-K children on Bus No. 14, "Do we all understand?" Heads nodded; a few children answered with a soft-spoken, "Yes."

"Are y'all ready to go home?"

A much louder "Yes" answered Patterson.

Age worsens effects of heat

Richard H. Middleton, Jr.
Association of Trial Lawyers of America

As families try to cope with this summer's hot weather, we should remember that those most at risk of heat-related illnesses are the elderly.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 2,862 Americans died between 1979 and 1996 as a result of extreme weather; 61 percent were over the age of 65.

As we get older, our body's ability to regulate temperatures decreases and we become more susceptible to the dangerous effects of unusually high summer temperature that may compromise our health.

Several factors affect the body's ability to cool itself during extreme hot weather. Humid conditions make it difficult for the body to perspire.

As perspiration evaporates from the skin, the body is cooled; high humidity stifles the body's ability to respond efficiently. Other factors include obesity, heart disease and drug and alcohol use.

The most common health problems that arise during the summer months are heat stroke and heat exhaustion.

Heat stroke is the most serious and potentially life-threatening. It results from failure of the body's temperature regulating mechanism. The victim's condition may be characterized as hot, dry skin, dizziness, headache, thirst, nausea, muscular cramps, mental confusion, delirium, convulsions, or unconsciousness. Unless quick and proper treatment is rendered, death may occur.

Heat exhaustion is caused by the loss of large amounts of fluid and by the excessive loss of salt through perspiration. The symptoms of heat exhaustion resemble those of heat stroke, but they are milder and victims have a body temperature that is normal or only slightly elevated. Victims of heat exhaustion should be removed to a cool place and given liquids to drink.

There are many preventive measures that people can take to reduce the risks of such illnesses. The following tips are important:

•Drink plenty of fluids. Regardless of your activity level, be sure to increase your fluid intake.

•Replace salt and minerals. Heavy sweating removes salt and minerals from he body. Drinking fruit juice or sports beverages helps replenish those lost resources.

• Wear appropriate clothing and sunscreen. Wear lightweight light-colored and loose-fitting clothing while in the sun and use a sunscreen with at least SPF -15 protection.

• Pace yourself. If you are unaccustomed to working or exercising in a hot environment, start slowly and pick up the pace gradually.

• Stay cool indoors. The most efficient way to beat the heat is with an air-conditioner. However, if you don't have one, take a trip to a local mall or public library for a few hours.

• Use a buddy system. When working in the heat, monitor the condition of your coworkers and have someone do the same for you. If you're over the age of 65, have a friend or relative check up on you at least twice a day.

• Schedule outdoor activities carefully. If you must be out in the heat, try to plan your activities so that you are outdoors either before noon or in the evening. While outdoors, rest frequently in a shady area.

All of these simple preventive measures can help reduce the chances of older people falling victim to severe health problems often caused by the hot summer sun.

For more information on dealing with extreme temperatures, visit the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's National Center for Environmental Health web site at http://www.cdc.gov/nceh/ncehhome.htm.

DPW turns pest control over to civilian contractor

Penny O'Connor
Directorate of Public Works

During the past six weeks, the Directorate of Public Works has gradually transitioned pest control services on Fort Benning from "in house" to contractor supplied service. Fort Benning customers continue to receive the same high standard of service from certified technicians in accordance with Environmental Protection Agency and state standards.

A number of qualified local pest control vendors have been contracted to provide services during this transition period.

As the transition proceeds, customers will continue to call 545-3224 to schedule appointments for all pest control problems. Callers, especially those anticipating a PCS in the near future, should expect to call for an appointment at least two or three weeks in advance, to ensure the required pest control inspection or service call can be scheduled when desired.

Customers may request either a morning or afternoon appointment. Appointments at specific times cannot be given; there are too many variables involved to be able to guarantee a set time. Morning appointments will be from 8 a.m. to noon, afternoon appointments from 1 to 5 p.m., technicians will work after 5 p.m. to complete appointments as necessary.

With the change to contracted service, it is imperative customers be home on the day of their appointment; any cancellations should be made 24 hours in advance. The contractor is entitled to compensation for his time and expense, and the government will be billed even if the customer fails to be present for their appointment.

The Self Help Store in Building 385 on Vibbert Ave is another source of supplies for pest problems for family housing customers. They stock items for ant and roach control. Hours are 8:30 a.m to noon and 12:30 to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday.

If you need to reschedule or cancel an appointment or have any concerns or comments about the service you have received. call Daniel Donahue, DPW Family Housing Maintenance Section, at 545-2607.

Labor Day Schedules for Yard Waste, Refuse and Recycle Collection

There will be no yard waste picked up in family housing on Sept. 6. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be on Sept. 13.

For good health into the year 2000 and beyond

NCI challenges America

Lt. Col. Sally S. Hoedebecke
U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine

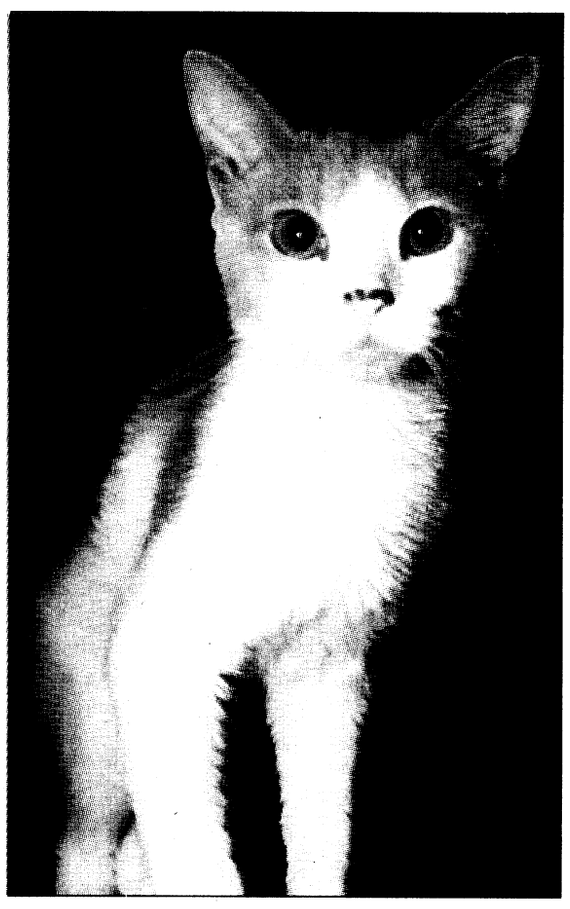
What does it take to be fit?

If you think exercising, you are only half-right. Webster Dictionary defines fitness as "the state or condition of being physically fit, especially as the result of exercise and proper nutrition." So, while exercise is vitally important in achieving fitness, exercise alone cannot make you physically fit. You need both exercise and a nourishing, healthy diet to be fit.

National 5 A Day Week is Sept. 12-18. This year the National Cancer Institute is challenging Americans to "Get Fit With 5," by emphasizing the importance of both nutrition and physical activity as part of building the foundation for a healthy lifestyle.

The NCI is encouraging everyone to "Take the 5 A Day Challenge" and team up with friends, family or coworkers to challenge themselves to a week filled with fun physical activity (a total of 30 minutes or more per day on most days of the week) and tasty fruits and vegetables.

A recent national telephone survey conducted by NCI showed that 36 percent of Americans know they should eat at least five fruits and vegetables each day, but only 23 percent of Americans eat that many servings daily. The DoD 5 A Day Committee found similar results in a survey conducted in May 1998 with 288 Soldiers at Fort Campbell, Ky.



Only 25 percent of the Soldiers thought they should eat five or more servings of fruits and vegetables, however, only 21 percent actually consumed five or more servings a day. Interestingly, 52 percent thought they should eat only three to four servings a day, but 46 percent consumed only one or two servings per day. There seems to be a disconnect between what people think they should eat and what they actually eat. If we want people to eat five or more servings a day, then we may need to encourage them to eat more than just 5 A Day.

On the other hand, it seems as if Americans are doing better as far as physical exercise is concerned. While only 19 percent of Americans say they know the government's recommendation for 30 minutes or more of moderate physical activity most days of the week, 40 percent say they are meeting or exceeding this recommendation. Since Americans are doing better with the physical activity goals, we need to spend more time and energy promoting the nutrition portion of the 5 A Day program.

For those wanting to see how they measure up, visit the NCI and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention web link at www.5aday.gov. This site's interactive chart allows you to enter the number of fruit and vegetable servings you eat, along with your minutes of physical activity for the day. You will then receive a personalized response showing how you are doing compared to other Americans, along with the experts' recommendations and a set of personalized tips. Use this new tool to help you meet the 5 A Day Challenge.

A combination of 5 A Day with 30 minutes of moderate physical activity five days a week are two of the easiest and most concrete things we can do for better health. So Take the 5 A Day challenge this September and "Get Fit With 5."

In need of love

A 3-month-old female mixed-breed dog and an adult male, shorthair cat are just a few of the animals available at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic. Many more are in need of a good home.

Pet owners are required to pay for initial vaccination and procedure costs, which can be anywhere from $8 to $40.

Interested individuals can view the animals from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4444.

DoD, NCI expands clinical trials

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

The Defense Department and National Cancer Institute have expanded access to clinical trials for DoD health care beneficiaries.

Since 1996, the DoD and NCI Cancer Clinical Trials Demonstration Project has provided patients with an opportunity to participate in NCI-sponsored cancer treatment clinical trials Phases II and III. They can receive the care either in military medical facilities or through participating civilian providers. DoD covers the cost of the trials under its managed health care plan, Tricare. Now, DoD also will cover the costs for participation in early detection and prevention clinical trials.

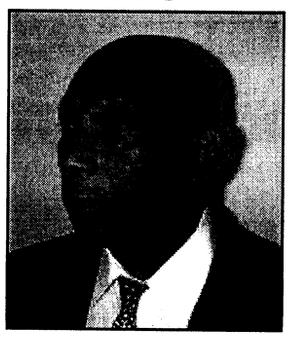
"To underscore our commitment to wellness and prevention, we feel we must provide reimbursement for clinical trials that offer some of the most promising advances in cancer prevention and treatment research," said Dr. Sue Bailey, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs. "For some Tricare beneficiaries with an increased risk of developing cancer, the experimental trials offer new choices to minimize chances of developing cancer. It is another way to keep our troops and families healthy."

Clinical trials are research studies that help find ways to prevent, diagnose or treat illnesses and improve health care. People enrolled in the studies receive care that is considered the latest medicine or therapy, but is not yet approved as standard care.

Two types of prevention clinical trials study the ways to reduce the risk of getting cancer. Action studies focus on finding out whether actions people take — exercising more or quitting smoking, for example — can prevent cancer. Agent, or chemoprevention, studies are designed to learn whether taking certain medicines, vitamins or food supplements can prevent cancer.

This is the first time any health plan has agreed formally to cover the cost of clinical cancer prevention trials, according to Dr. Richard Klausner, NCI director. "This agreement will become a model for providing access to the best possible health care for people, while ensuring that cancer research can continue to make progress," Klausner said.

Nearly 12,000 Tricare beneficiaries are diagnosed with cancer each year, Bailey said. Meanwhile, other military patients are seeking ways to lower their risk.



"Prevention and early detection," she said, "are two of the most important and effective strategies for reaching the American Cancer Society's goals of saving lives lost from cancer, diminishing suffering due to cancer and eliminating cancer as a major health problem.

"When people hear the words, 'You have cancer' they experience a wide and frightening range of emotions. They enter a world of bewildering choices about treatment, pain management, health maintenance and financial burden."

This agreement gives DoD patients access to the most promising advances in cancer research, Bailey said. More than 2,000 sites throughout the United States, including military hospitals and clinics, comprehensive and clinical cancer centers, community hospitals and practices, will conduct the clinical trials. In some cases, patients may be able to get part of their care from their own physicians.

To obtain more information about cancer prevention, early detection or treatment clinical trials covered by the DoD/NCI demonstration, call the NCI Cancer Information Service at (800) 422-6237 or the demonstration coordinator at (800) 779-3060. Information also is available on the Military Health System Web site, www.tricare.osd.mil/cancertrials, www.tricare.osd.mil or http://cancertrials.nci.nih.gov.

CCD to kick-off during September

Phil Reilly
USAIC Chaplains Office

Confraternity of Christian Doctrine classes for pre-school through high school students will begin at 10:10 a.m. Sept. 19 at Dexter School. CCD registration is held after masses on Saturdays and Sundays through Sept. 5.

reflections

The first society of Christian doctrine was established in Rome under Pius IV during the Council of Trent (1545-1563).

It was an organization formed to provide religious education for adults and children who have never taken part in any formal catechesis. Catechesis is rooted in the Greek verb, katechein, to resound or to echo. Catechesis echoes the word of God. Pius V supported and called for its establishment in parishes around the world. Pius X (1903-1914) was a strong advocate for the renewal and extension of the Confraternity. His encyclical of April 1905 mandated the establishment of CCD in every parish to counteract the decline in religious knowledge and to provide religious education for those attending public schools.

CCD is most widely known for providing religious instruction for elementary and high school students. Actually, it includes instruction at all stages of life and is involved with vacation schools, correspondence courses, college sessions and adult theological education. There are currently about six million students in CCD.

In the U.S., the third Sunday of September each year is called Catechetical Sunday. On this day parishes throughout the U.S. recognize CCD and have a commissioning ceremony for catechists, those who will echo God's word during the school year. This year the motto for Catechetical Sunday is "God Our Father-God Our Love."

For more information on registering for this year's CCD season, call Phil Reilly at 545-5508.

Post offers continuing education classes

Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplains Office

Who would want to be commanded by a colonel who had never attended any military school other than a basic officers course? Or, who would want a sergeant major who had only attended basic training? Many people will answer "You must be crazy" to these questions, but never consider their need for continuing their religious education past a few years in Sunday School as a young child.

September is observed as Religious Education Month in the armed forces.

I would like to take a few minutes to tell you the many opportunities for continuing Protestant religious education at Fort Benning. Sunday School for all ages beginning with 3 years old and continuing through adults, meets every Sunday morning at White Elementary School. There are three adult classes so there is an opportunity to select the class you are interested in attending. Curriculum for preschool though high school is selected from the Resource Guide, which is published for Department of Defense use. Therefore, if you attend Sunday School regularly, no matter what post you are assigned to, eventually you will have studied most of the Bible.

Protestant Women of the Chapel meets every Thursday morning at Custer Terrace Chapel. Their program consists of Bible study, prayer, praise and fellowship.

Senior High Protestant Youth of the Chapel meets every Sunday evening at the Infantry Center Chapel.

There are also Home Bible Studies and Bible studies taught by unit chaplains.

All of these continuing education opportunities differ from secular continuing education opportunities in two major ways. They are free, and you do not have to extend or re-enlist to attend them. Although attendance is encouraged, and in some cases rewarded, it is not mandatory.

As with most religious programs, volunteers are a crucial element and are always needed. To volunteer to assist with any program, talk with your unit chaplain, chapel pastor or the director of Religious Education.

Won't you consider continuing the religious education of yourself and your family now by taking advantage of some of these opportunities?

chapel notes

Fall Bible studies begin Sept. 9. There are five studies to choose from: Walking in Total God Confidence by Donna Partow, To Live is Christ by Beth Moore, Train Up a Mom by Vollie Sanders, Jesus Changes Women by Helene Ashker and To Stand and Not Be Moved by Fran Sciacca. Meetings consist of prayer, praise, music and Bible study. All women are invited to attend.

Organist needed — The Fund Custodian is accepting applications for contracts as chapel organist. Qualified organists who are interested should contact Staff Sgt. Constance Jones in Room 512, Infantry Hall or call 545-4960.

Church offers information — Anyone interested in inquiring about the Catholic Church or if you know anyone interested, may call Phil Reilly at 545-5508. Classes will begin in September with date to be announced.

PYOC holds meetings — The Protestant Youth of the Chapel meet on Wednesday evenings with Chaplain (Capt.) Dave Baum as the leader. All senior high school students are invited to attend. For information about the time and place of meetings, call Baum at 685-2061.

Center offers Sunday School — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at White Elementary School on 1st Division Road from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. There are classes for students from 3 years of age through adults. Everyone is invited. Daycare for children of parents who are attending or teaching Sunday School is provided at the Infantry Center Chapel. If you need a ride, call 545-4715.

Church holds pre-baptism class — There will be a pre-baptism class for parents planning to have their children baptized in the Catholic Church. The class is scheduled for Sept. 12 at 1 p.m. at the Custer Terrace Chapel. This is the first session in a three-session cycle. For more information, call 545-5508.

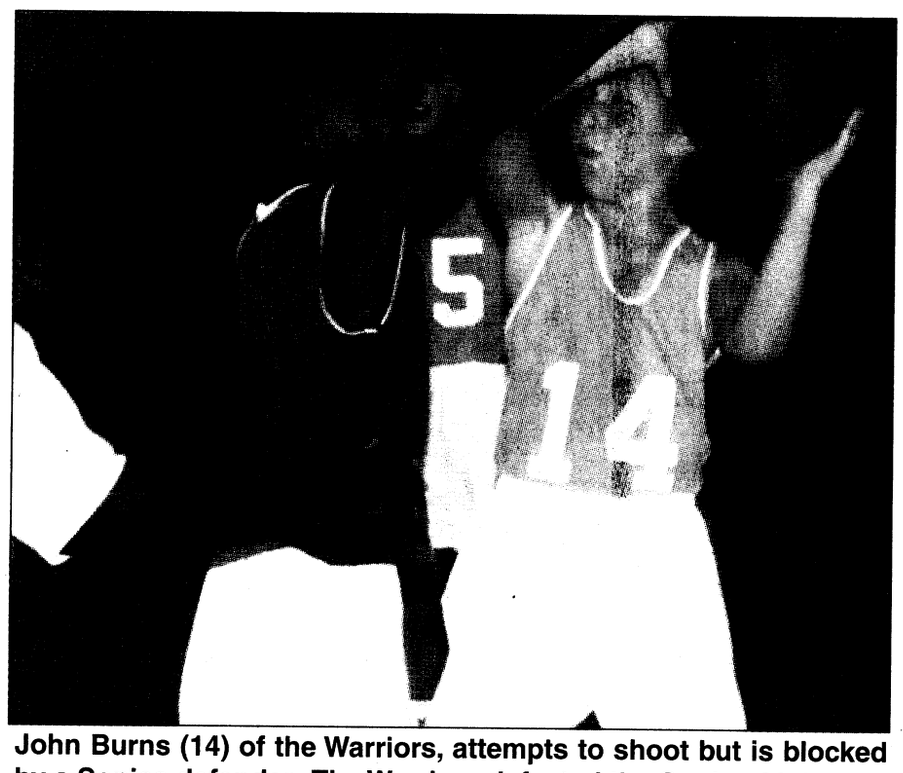
The Youth Services basketball season ended Aug. 19 after 17 teams in four divisions went head-to-head for seven weeks of summer competition.

The Spurs defeated the Lakers 6-2 in the first 6- to 7-year-old division game. The Spurs defense overpowered the Lakers offense leaving them scoreless in the first half. Tony Davis led the Spurs with 4 points and Crosby Adams added 2 points for the team total of 6. Laker Gary Hunt tossed in 2 points becoming the top scorer for the third time this season.

Tevin Simon's 4 points sparked the Miami Heat to a victory over the 76ers during the second game of the division 7-1. Simon along with teammate Richie McDonnell's 3 points locked in the win against the 76ers. Jedarvis Bates made a free throw for the 76ers.

The Heat hit the floor fired up for their game against the Blue Devils during the first 8- to 9-year-old division game. Both teams struggled for the lead throughout the game, but at the final buzzer the Blue Devils were up 16-15. Twain Scott led the charge for the Blue Devils with 7 points followed by Jordan Goodman's 5 points. The Heat's top scoring players for the fifth time this season were Travis Lush (6 points) and Gunnar Hanson (4 points).



The second game of the division saw the Warriors sneak by the Sonics 32-30. The Sonics, led by Mack Clemons with 13 points, fell behind during the first half and were unable to capture the lead. Kahlee Tyler contributed 9 points as the Warrior's top offensive player. Teammate Marvell Glover kicked in 7 points, helping to clench the win over the Sonics.

In 10- to 12-year-old division action, the Spurs trampled the 76ers 51-31. With 21 points, Omar Tyler became the Spurs' highest scorer for the fourth time. The 76ers' defense was unable to stop the offensive drive of Omar Tyler, Marcus Patterson (12 points) and Erich Tyler (12 points). 76er Robert Penn cemented the team's top scoring honors for the seventh time with 16 points.

The Knicks engaged the Miami Heat during the second game of the division but was unable to pull ahead, ending the game in a draw 42-42. Xavier Shaw contributed 24 points for the Heat and was backed up by Dominique Love with 13. Mackey Williams captured the top offensive spot for the Knicks with 20 points.

The BullDawgs outplayed the Tarheels during the final 13- to 15-year-old division game 48-39. Donavan Mudayh led the BullDawgs with 12 points and teammate Joey Six added 11 points. Roosevelt Vickers put 12 on the board for the Tarheels.

Shooters take CISM's top spots

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit brought home three Gold Medals from the 1999 Counsel International du Sport Militaire — known as CISM and the Military World Games — conducted Aug. 8-20 in which more than 80 nations sent 5,000 athletes in 19 sports to compete.

The U.S. Shooting Team, comprised of rifle and pistol shooters, came in second overall to Russia in the grand aggregate. Norway finished third.

The U.S. won the Gold Medal in the Men's 300-Meter Standard Rife Three Position Team Match with Stephen C. Goff leading the team with 582 points. Goff and the other three U.S. shooters — Troy A. Bassham, Thomas A. Tamas and Glenn A. Dubis — combined for 2,312 points, 11 points better than the Russians and beat 27 to win the match.

Teams led the U.S. team to victory in the 300-Meter Military Rapid Fire Team Match; the team brought home the Gold Medal by beating second-place Norway by 22 points, third-place Russia by 27 points and 25 other teams in the match.

Bassham triumphed over 142 shooters to win the 300-Meter Standard Rifle Three Position Individual Gold Medal and Dubis finished fourth out of 131 shooters in the 300-Meter Military Rapid Fire Rifle Individual Match; he had tied for the Bronze Medal but ended up in fourth place after the tie-breaking procedure.

According to Col. Arch Arnold, USAMU commander, who was the CISM U.S. Shooting Team captain, this was the first time in 10 years that the U.S. swept the rifle matches.

"We brought back the two trophies and won three out of four Gold Medals in rifle," said CISM U.S. Rifle Team Coach Bill Krilling of USAMU. "I was very pleased with our rifle team overall; the team performed well. I think we showed real dominance; we are considered to be one of the top military rifle teams in the world."

USAMU's Carl W. Trompeter II lead the U.S. Pistol Team to a ninth-place finish out of 34 teams in the 25-Meter Rapid Fire Pistol Team Match and finished in 12th place out of 180 competitors in the individual match.

The U.S. Women's Rifle Team placed fourth out of 20 teams in the 50-meter Sport Rifle Prone Match, just 2 points away from the Bronze Medal, team members were USAMU's Kimberly N. Howe, U.S. Army Reservist Lt. Wanda R. Jewell, who as a civilian is the assistant training and operations officer for the USAMU; and U.S. Air Force Deena L. Wigger, who trains with the USAMU. Jewell also barely missed the Bronze Medal by one point and finished fourth in the individual Sport Rifle Prone Match. In the 50-Meter Sport Rifle Three Position Match, the team finished ninth of 20 teams.

Post officials warn travelers to be safe

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

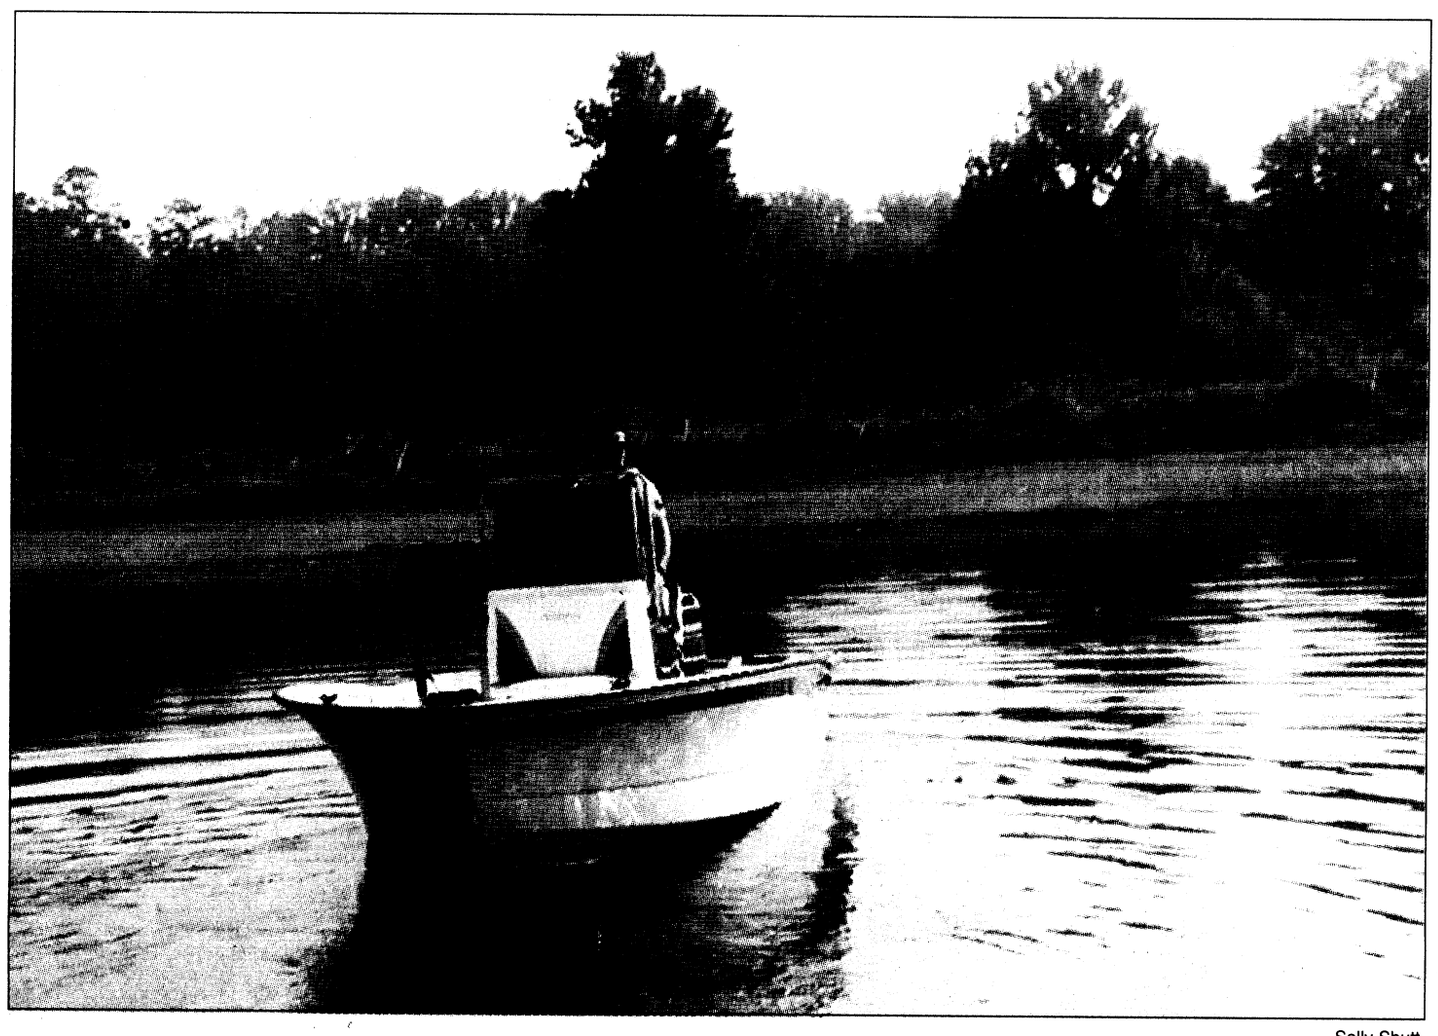
Fort Benning Soldiers and their families will be joining hundreds of Americans on the highway this Labor Day weekend, squeezing in a final summer road trip over the four-day break.

And with payday just two days earlier, law enforcement and safety officials warn travelers to play it safe.

"We will be holding our breath for this one," said Master Sgt. David Jones, NCOIC of the Law Enforcement Division, Directorate of Public Safety. "It's unpredictable."

Over the weekend of Aug. 20-23, 12 driving under the influence tickets were issued on post, and by the next weekend, the number of speeding citations had increased by more than 50 percent, Jones said.

Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of the Law Enforcement Division, offered drivers two tips: "Number one: slow down — speed kills. Number two: If you are going to drink, don't drive. If you are going to drive, don't drink."



Admitting that people have heard those tips so often they may sound cliche, Kelley said drivers may heed his advice if they realized how much a ticket will cost them.

On post, if you are driving between 11 and 20 mph over the speed limit, the fine is $100; 20 to 30 mph over, $200. If you are clocked at 30 mph over the limit, you must make a mandatory court appearance. Dixie Road, Highway 27 and Interstate 185 are favorites for speeders, he said.

Not only do drunk drivers risk their lives, as well as those of others, they also risk losing a big chunk of their savings account.

MPs keep water safe

Saturday morning while other military police officers were patrolling Fort Benning in cars or on bicycles, Sgt. Tyler Edgecombe and Spc. Keith Brown launched their patrol vehicle — a 19-foot open boat — into the Chattahoochee River.

Donning life vests, as well as heavy-duty sunscreen, the two MPs started their patrol from Uchee Creek Recreation Center, and they'll be out there again this weekend making sure boaters are safe.

Every weekend from Memorial Day until Labor Day, the Directorate of Public Safety sends out a boating patrol along the 15-mile stretch of the river that winds through post, from the southern border of Riverbend Park to the northern end at Upatoi Creek. The MPs enforce laws, including boating regulations and post policies, such as the Commanding General's directive of

Motorist kills Marne Soldier in drive-by shooting

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

A 21-year-old Soldier was killed early Sunday morning when the vehicle he was a passenger in was fired upon by a passing motorist.

Pfc. Antrone L. Simpson, D Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), was fatally shot shortly after 4:30 a.m. Sunday while riding in the front seat of an eastbound vehicle in the 4300 block of Victory Drive, according to Columbus Police Department reports.

While police said they have no motive for the crime or suspects as of Thursday morning, Lt. Steve Cox, Columbus Police Department Homicide Division, said the incident is still under investigation.

"We have determined there were a minimum of two individuals in the car that did the shooting," Cox said. "But we have no other information than that."

Cox did note that the incident did not appear to be a "random act" but said it appeared that the car Simpson was a passenger in was singled out for an unknown reason.

Simpson, a native of Jamaica, N.Y., had served with the 15th Inf. Regt. since last October and had just recently returned from the Kuwaiti desert serving with Task Force 1-15.

"Simpson was a tender-hearted person who did what he had to and always had a smile on his face while he did it," said 1st Lt. Michael Sivulka, Simpson's former platoon leader. "Whatever the mission required, he did."

Sivulka and the rest of the company paid tribute to the fallen Soldier Wednesday afternoon with a memorial ceremony held on Kelley Hill.

"Anytime you lose a Soldier it is hard on everyone," said Capt. Elbert Valentine, D Company commander. "It is like losing a member of the family."

"It's a tragic situation that no one expects to happen to them," he said. "But the guys are handling it as well as can be expected."

Police ask anyone with information on the shooting to call detectives at 653-3405 or Crime Stoppers at 653-3188.

It wasn't a movie that played before Spc. John Stebbins' eyes as he sat huddled behind his "safe little wall" on the streets of Mogadishu, Somalia.

The bullets he could feel whizzing directly over his head weren't fake. The screams he heard echoing through the air weren't manufactured. And those who lay wounded, and even dead, on the ground weren't going to get up and walk away after it was all over.

Before him played out a scene he had spent years training for — only this time it was real.

Less than two years before, a young Stebbins had made the decision to volunteer for one of the most elite fighting forces in the world — the U.S. Army Rangers. It was at that time that he swore to uphold the Ranger creed. A creed that he would never forget. A creed that would push him toward heroics.

It was from behind that safe little wall in Mogadishu that Stebbins heard the piercing sound of pain. Laying severely wounded on a ravaged Somali street, Stebbins saw one of his fellow Rangers rest the brink of death.

It was in those few moments that Stebbins contemplated his choices. Abandon his creed, stay where he was and live, or brave the lead-filled streets to bring his nearly-dead buddy back to safety but possibly die in the process.

It didn't take long for him to figure out what he should do. Rushing into the street, Stebbins grabbed his comrade and hauled him from danger. Lucky that he too wasn't taken out in the effort.

But it didn't end there. Acting as ammo bearer, he spent the remainder of the day and into the night taking out Somali firing positions and risking his life to make sure his buddies could do the same.

It wasn't until later that night that Stebbins looked into the sky and saw what could have possibly been the face of death. An explosive flying through the air landed just feet away from Stebbins blowing him head over heels through the city's streets. He escaped with burns over half of his body and a golf ball size piece of medal wedged into his foot. His fight was finally over, and he had accomplished something very few had.

"I knew I was out of it," Stebbins said about being wounded. "And inside I was thinking to myself that I did what I set out to do ... to prove to myself what I had questioned a year and a half before, which was — if I am ever in combat, am I going to run? I felt I did OK."

TRICARE has options for everyone

Harry Noyes
Army News Service

Army medical leaders are frustrated. Massive efforts have been made to explain TRICARE to Soldiers, families and retirees. Yet complaints continue to roll in that people "don't understand TRICARE."

commentary

Personally, I've always wondered why. TRICARE contracts and financing are complex, but for beneficiaries TRICARE is very simple. A quick summary:

"You have three choices. First is TRICARE Standard: go to any doc you want, send us the bill, and we'll pay part of it. Second is TRICARE Extra: pick your docs off our list, they send us the bills, and we pay a little more. Third, you can join TRICARE Prime and never have to worry again: just do what your primary caregiver says. He or she will lead you by the hand through all your health care."

What could be simpler? Soldiers are certainly smart enough to understand such a system. So the real problem must not be complexity or a failure to explain TRICARE.

Instead, I suspect that "they don't understand TRICARE" is a codeword for tougher issues. The challenge is to find out what's really bothering people and either fix it or, if that's impossible, tell people why it cannot be fixed.

Some things cannot be fixed. Some people are just angry about change and nostalgic for a time when they could go to the post hospital for any care they needed at no charge. We can't just brush this attitude off by deluding ourselves that "they don't understand TRICARE." We have to be strong enough to admit to ourselves and to them the hard truth that military medicine will never be the same again.

Reportedly, TRICARE is especially confusing to retirees. But that doesn't necessarily mean that they don't grasp how TRICARE works. Maybe what confuses them is deciding which TRICARE option is most economical — a different issue altogether.

Someone who needs little care might save money with TRICARE Standard or Extra, while someone who needs a lot of care will do better with TRICARE Prime. But what about people in between? What about the risk that a retiree or family member who is healthy today will need a lot of care six months from now?

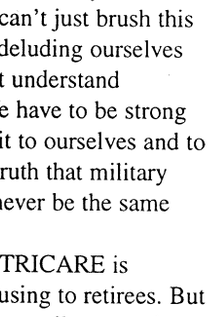
Clearly, retirees have to play the odds. To put it bluntly, like any decision on buying insurance, it's a gamble. It's easy to say that joining Prime is a bargain, if only for peace of mind. But for a family that never had to make that call before, it can be a tough choice.

There is help for retirees. Health-benefits advisors can calculate the actual costs of various scenarios. That makes a decision more concrete, but not necessarily easier. This kind of balancing act is always difficult. One need not be "confused" to feel that.

For some people, the problem may be something else entirely. Maybe they grasp the concept perfectly. Maybe they love it. And then their appointments get screwed up, or they start getting bills from doctors who didn't get paid by TRICARE. When that kind of thing happens, when reality doesn't match the expectations in people's minds, they experience a specific form of confusion called cognitive dissonance.

In fact, only a small percentage of beneficiaries encounter serious TRICARE problems. But many more hear the stories, and they also suffer cognitive dissonance.

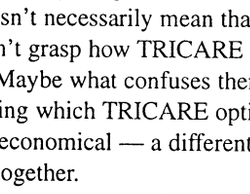
In short, no matter how well medical leaders explain the game plan, there will be confusion if the plan is not executed as promised. At that point, no amount of extra explanation, however clever, will do any good. Instead, the quality of execution simply has to be improved.



Beneficiaries should take comfort from knowing that both line and medical leaders are acutely aware of this and know that they have to fix the flaw in TRICARE.

Former Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis Reimer said so at the 1999 TRICARE conference, demanding that TRICARE officials aim for 100 percent beneficiary satisfaction.

Army Surgeon General Lt. Gen. Ronald R. Blanck and Deputy Surgeon General Maj. Gen. Patrick D. Sculley have repeatedly told their troops that there is no acceptable alternative to making TRICARE successful. Going back to the old days is simply not an option.



Beneficiaries can help make TRICARE work by: TRICARE isn't perfect, but it is a heroic effort to maintain quality care that is accessible to the entire military family despite massive resource cuts. To reach that goal, TRICARE needs energetic support from the medical community and beneficiaries alike.

Accidents reach peak during holiday

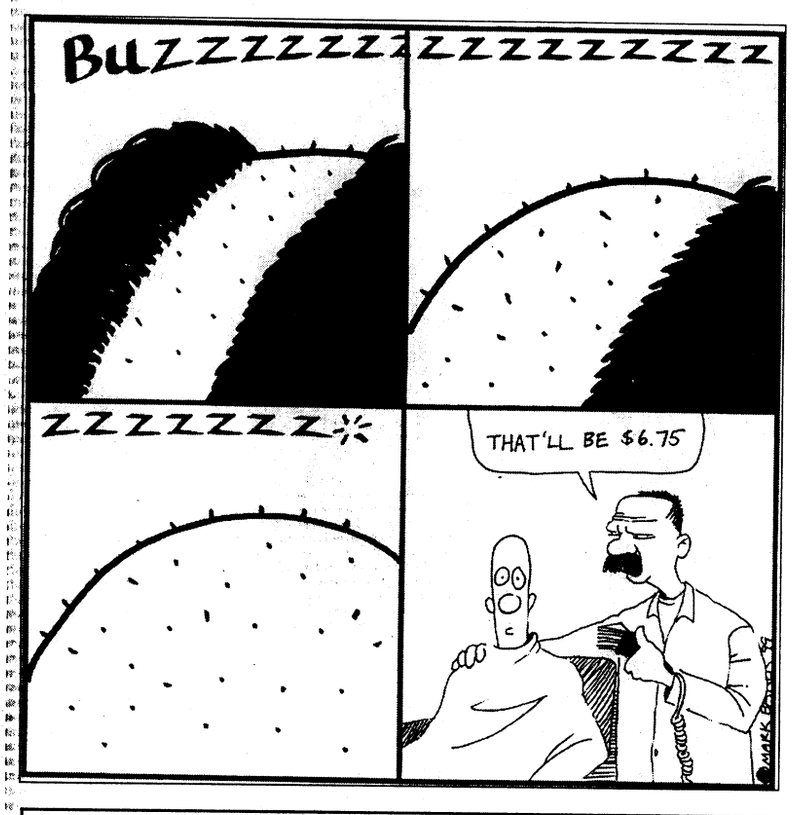
Every Labor Day weekend the highways are crowded with people enjoying the last summer holiday of the year. Many families will plan extended weekends and travel great distances to be with relatives. Unfortunately, traffic accidents reach their peak during this holiday.

Our goal is for Fort Benning to be accident free. This can only be achieved if everyone is involved in the prevention effort. I need your help to achieve this goal. I want you to do the following as you make plans for this long summer weekend:

•Conduct a good PMCS of your vehicle to ensure it runs safely.

•Check the weather forecast for the areas you will be traveling through.

•Take frequent breaks on long trips (at least once every two hours).



•Drive and boat defensively, alertly, and stay sober.

•Always wear seat belts in vehicles and personal flotation devices while on the water.

•Swim only in areas with lifeguards present.

Take the extra time to THINK SAFETY and act safely during this holiday. Have fun and enjoy a safe holiday. Help us conclude a safe summer — be smart, be safe.

Community member thanks Soldiers

Monday, Aug. 16, at approximately 4 p.m. while driving north on I-185, I came upon an accident. I was in the passing lane and could not stop. It appeared that a car had gone off the side of the highway and there was a woman standing next to her car down in a ditch. As I passed by, up ahead I saw three to four Soldiers in BDUs who had pulled over and were running back toward the woman to assist her. They looked like they could save the world, and I had such a proud feeling about being a family member at Fort Benning. I just knew that woman would get the necessary help needed until an ambulance could arrive. Once again, Fort Benning Soldiers have assisted the community. I would like to thank those Soldiers for their caring. You are a credit to us all.

Soldier expresses gratitude

My name is Sgt. 1st Class Noel Ramos and my apartment burned down July 31 at Battle Park Apartments. The help that I have received from my battalion, other units and agencies on Fort Benning has been overwhelming. There are so many people I would like to thank. I just would like for them to know how I feel and how I appreciate what they have done for my family.

I want to say thank you to all those people who don't know me or my family and have donated what they could to help. I would also like to let my chain of command know how I feel about the tremendous support and overwhelming donations they have given to my family.

Thank you from the Ramos family! We don't know how to repay you, but we hope that the Lord Jesus Christ will bless each and every one of you and your families for what you have done for mine. Thank you and God bless you!

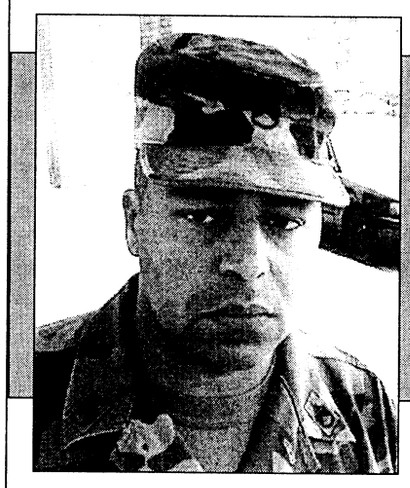
Mom thanks BCTB for transforming son

I really enjoyed the graduation ceremony Aug. 19. My son was in the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade. I have never been so proud as that moment, except for his birth.

I'll never forget what you did for him. You'll never know. He's a grown man now. He really liked his drill sergeant, which you probably don't hear often.

I just wanted to thank you for what you did for him and us. We came all the way from Wisconsin to see the great event.

I would also like to thank Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Charlie Morrison for talking with us when our son first got down there.



Again, thank you. Thank you for changing our son into a man.

DENTAC, Red Cross offer dental assistant training

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Last August, Rebecca Fields spent every weekday morning in class at Love Dental Clinic as part of Fort Benning's Red Cross Dental Assistant training program. She would go home, hit the books, take an hour off for dinner, and then study until 11 p.m.

"It was very intense, and you learn a lot very fast," she said. "I would go home and prepare for the next day."

A month later, she started working in the dental clinics on post as a volunteer assistant, accumulating more than 300 hours of service. She even took over the job as Red Cross chairperson for the dental program, acting as the liaison between the U.S. Army Dental Activity and the agency.

"The program is very intense," said Col. Adolfina Polk, chief of Preventive Dentistry at DENTAC. Two, five-inch thick volumes are covered during the course; and topics include instrument names and passing, sterilization, X-rays and mixing of materials.

After completing the course work, candidates are required to volunteer two full days a week for up to 300 hours in Fort Benning's three dental clinics: Love, Salomon and Bernheim.

"Experience is the best teacher," Polk said. "Once they go chair-side, they will get more adept as they work with patients." Candidates may assist with 12 to 15 patients each day in the clinics.

"When you go chair-side, it all comes together," Fields said.

Polk called the program "one of the best courses I have seen. I look at this as a partnership between DENTAC, the Red Cross and the community, and I look forward to the extra help; it's a great aid to our organization." The four women who completed the course last year volunteered more than 1,200 hours in the clinics.

"It's a win-win situation," Polk said. "It's a plus for them — they are learning a vocation."

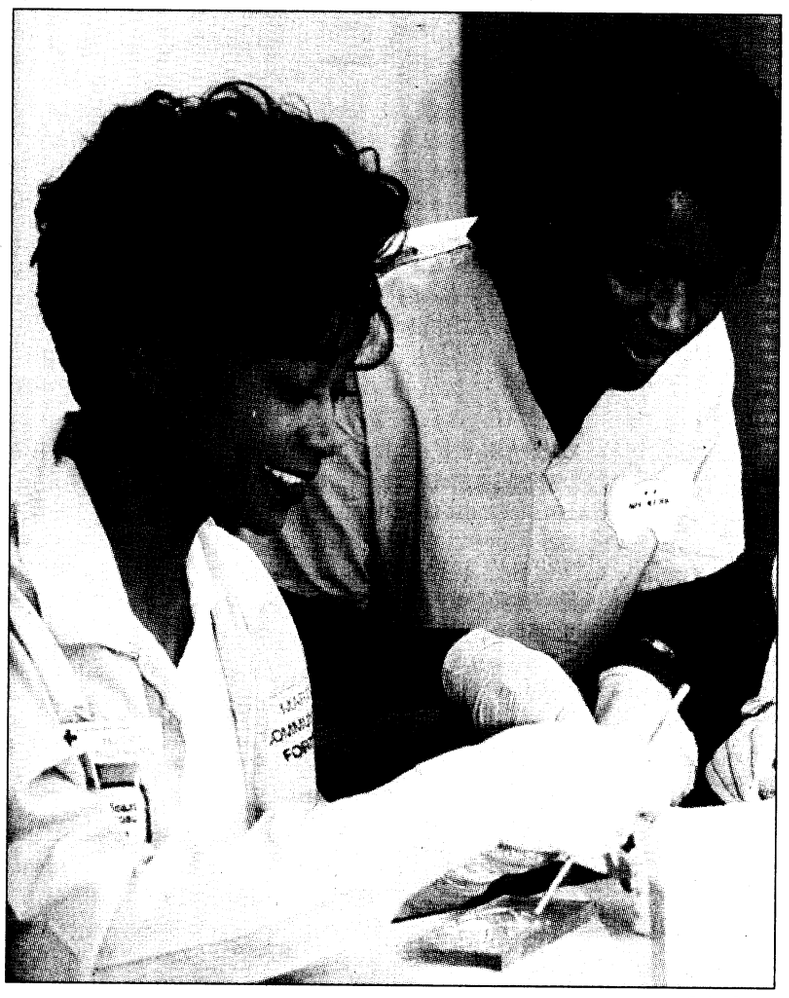
Still, the dentist said, "We are not gearing this so they can get jobs in the civilian sector. But, if after 300 hours ..."

Polk added, "The program's main focus is to offer to the community a viable skill which is beneficial to DENTAC and the volunteer."

Fields' commitment to the volunteer training program paid off for her two weeks ago when she started work as a full-time assistant in a civilian dental practice in Columbus. The three other women who finished the program and were awarded certificates last year also found jobs in Columbus.

It was one of those women who told Karen Alex about the program. "She told me it would be a good experience," Alex said. "I was working as an order clerk, and I wanted something else down the road."

Tristina Crawford, who read about the training in the newspaper, also decided to enroll "so I could have a vocation," she said.



Alex, Crawford and two fellow classmates, Denise Glenn and Felisha Dallmann, completed their classroom instruction Thursday, and after the holiday weekend begin volunteer work in the three dental clinics on post. All four women are spouses of active duty Soldiers assigned to Fort Benning.

The Red Cross and DENTAC started advertising for the program in December. A candidate must be a family member of an active duty or retired military member, possess a high school diploma or GED, submit three letters of reference and have at least one year remaining on station at Fort Benning.

Interviews were held in January and February by a three-person team representing both DENTAC and the Red Cross.

"The selection process is very tough," Fields said. An orientation is held explaining the program and the commitment involved. The Red Cross only pays for 30 hours of child care a month for any volunteer, so often friends are called upon to help. Candidates are also asked to read a paragraph from a dental book and explain it to the committee.

Once selected, the candidates must complete their immunizations, especially the six-month process for hepatitis B shots, and physicals.

Sally Shutt

Volunteer Felish Dallman, left, mixes a temporary filling at Love Dental Clinic with the assistance of Spc. Virginia Webb, a dental hygienist with U.S. Army Dental Activity.

Last month, the candidates attended classes daily. "It's hard work and not easy," Fields said. "It's a big commitment, especially the month of August. You have tests and you must pass."

USARSA critics campaign to close school

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Critics of an Army school at Fort Benning are campaigning to persuade members of Congress to eliminate funding the facility needs to operate.

The U.S. House of Representatives voted 230-197 on July 30 to cut $1.2 million earmarked for tuition and travel costs for foreign students attending military training courses at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Without that funding, the school would be unable to train and positively impact up to 1,000 Latin American and Caribbean military, civilian and police students per year, according to Army officials.

Without the $1.2 million, the remainder of the school's budget ($3 million) would pay for operational maintenance and staff salaries, but there would be no students to teach, said Army officials.

The USARSA funding issue is set for discussion between members of House and Senate appropriation committees in September when Congress returns from its August recess, according to Army officials.

USARSA plays an important role in current U.S. national security strategy, which stresses engagement with foreign governments and militaries in order to shape the international environment in ways favorable to U.S. security interests, said Col. Glenn R. Weidner, USARSA's commandant. Established in Panama in 1946, USARSA relocated to Fort Benning in 1984 as part of the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty.

In recent years, said Weidner, the school has come under attack by human rights groups that allege the USARSA has trained and continues to train Latin American military officers and police officials in techniques of cruelty to suppress populations back home seeking societal and governmental reform.

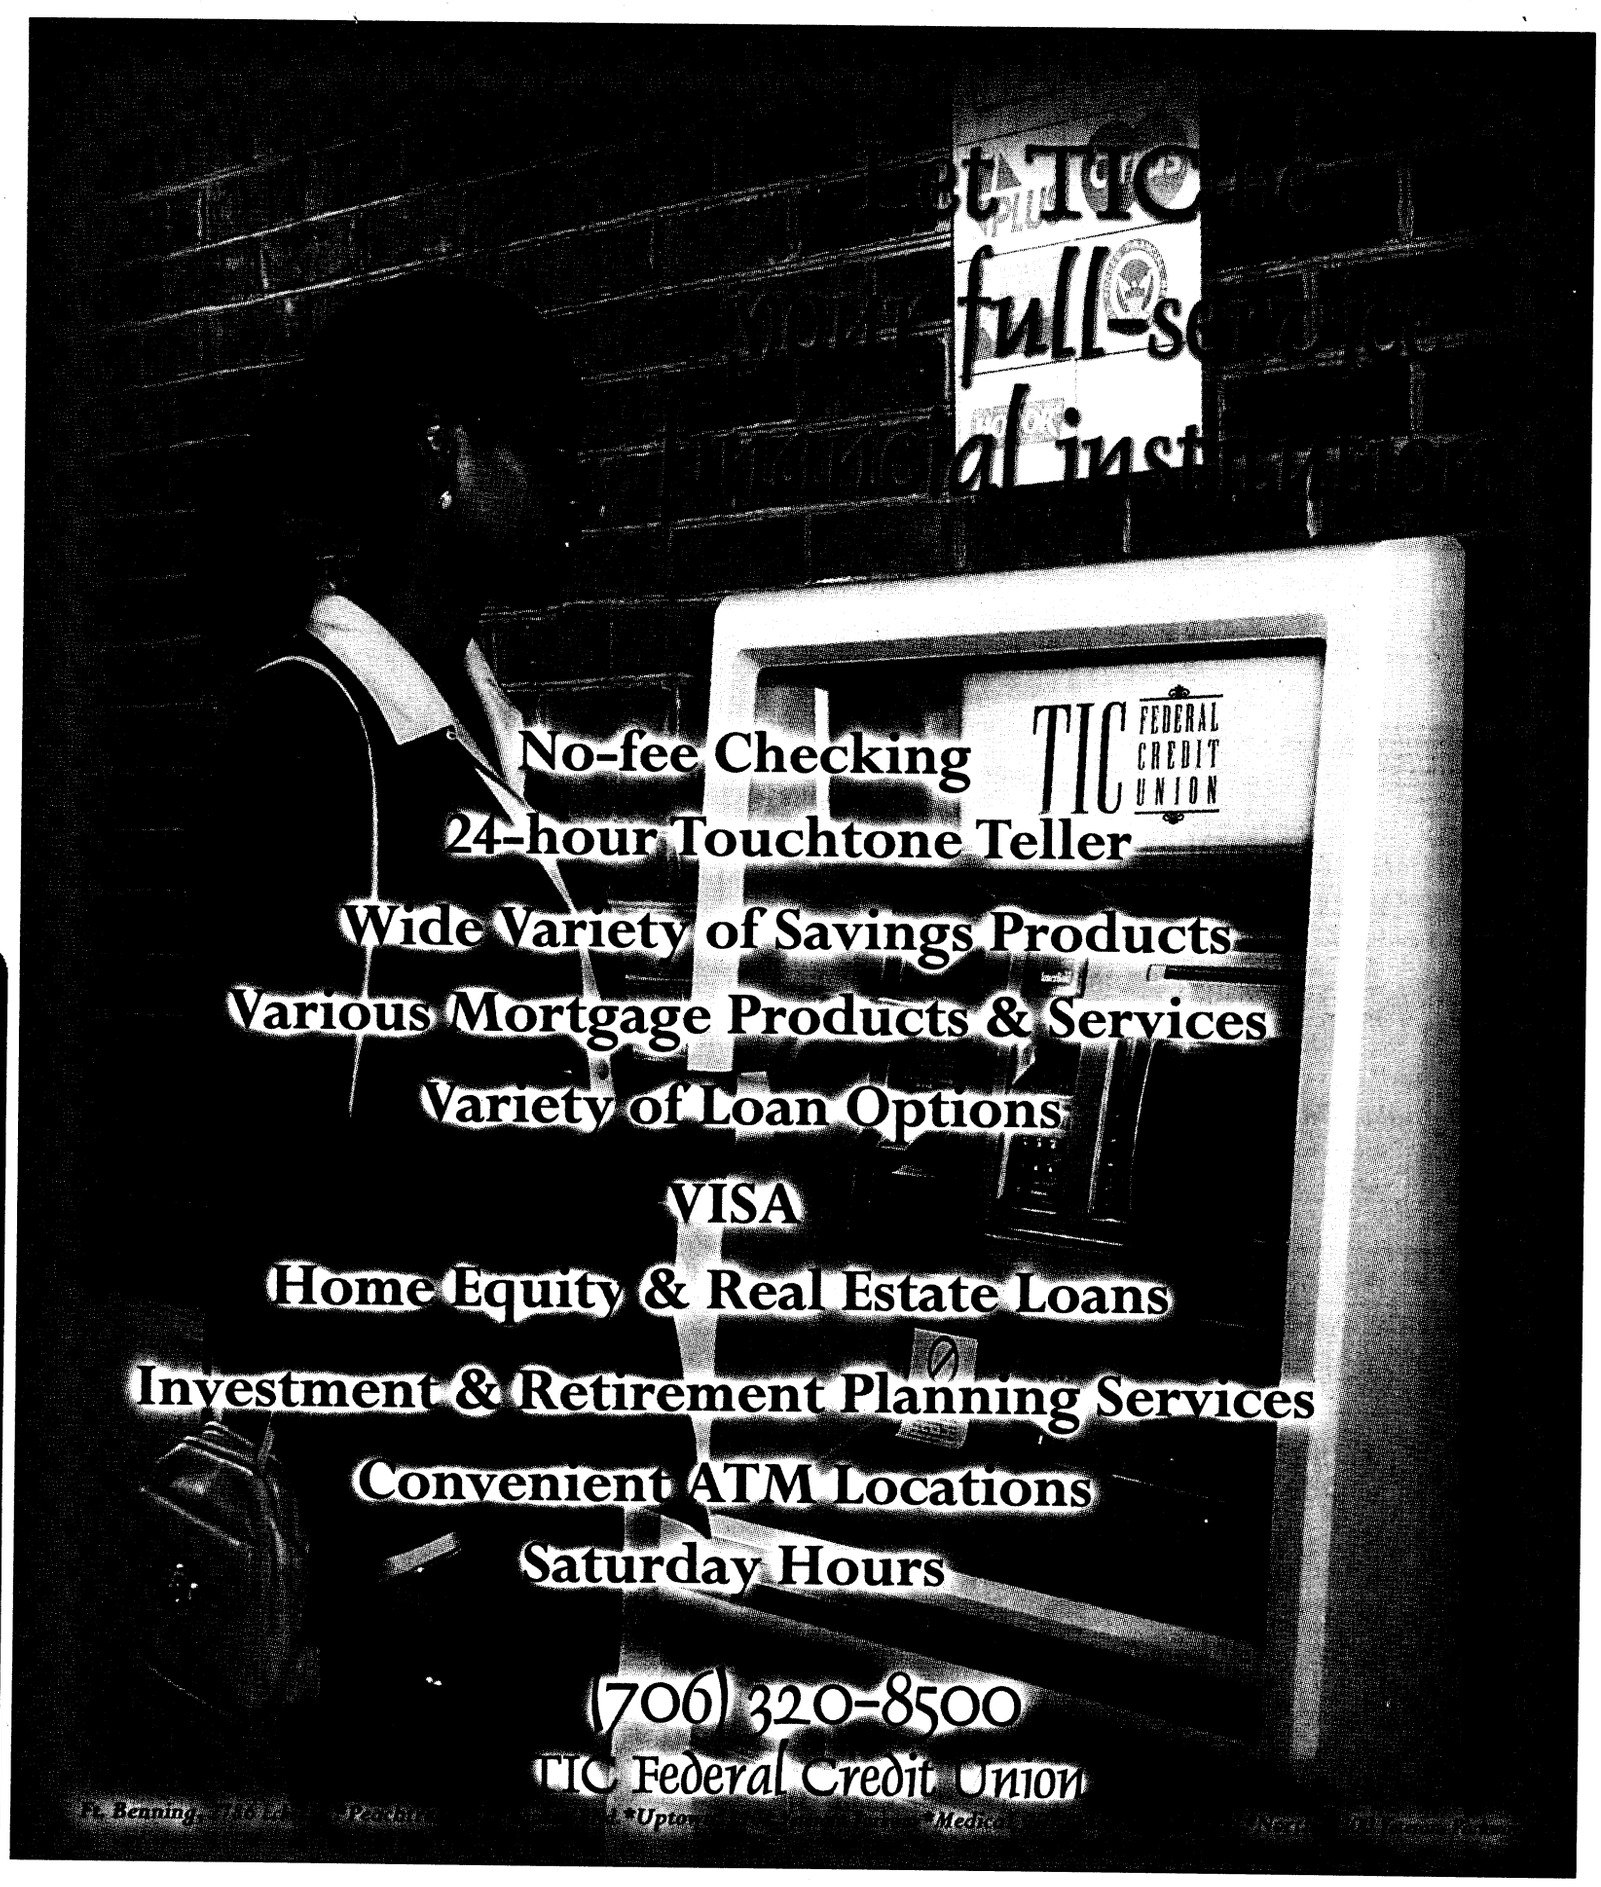
Specifically, he said, critics who want to close the school say some USARSA graduates have conducted crackdowns, which included torture, against government dissidents in their home countries, such as Panama and El Salvador, during the 1980s.

Weidner, a 1971 West Point graduate and 28-year Army veteran, strongly denies critics' allegations that the USARSA "has trained or trains dictators." He graduated from the USARSA's Command and General Staff Officer Course in 1986, and then served on the faculty as course director the following year.

"I believe the campaign to close USARSA has relied upon a systematic distortion of the record in order to achieve its purpose," said Weidner. "My own reading of that record, as well as my own experience at the school in 1986-87 convince me that the school, despite allegations to the contrary, has promoted values entirely consistent with those espoused by its fiercest critics."

USARSA's lesson plans "reflect U.S. military doctrine and U.S. and international law," he said.

"Our intent is to transmit through course content and by example the same values and professional standards taught to our own Soldiers," said Weidner.



Noting that more than 60,000 Latin American Soldiers and officials have attended USARSA in its 53-year history, Weidner said the few who betrayed their training — like USARSA alumni Gen. Manuel Noriega, the former president of Panama now imprisoned for drug-dealing and other crimes — are far outweighed by the vast majority who have participated in the overwhelming transition to democracy that has characterized the region."

"(The USARSA) promotes U.S. values with respect to democracy, the proper role of the military in society, and adherence to international standards of human rights. Bottom line, USARSA did not, and does not teach torture or violations of the law. Rather, it does just the opposite," he said.

Post celebrates women's equality with luncheon

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

It was a day honoring women and their hard-fought battle for the right to vote. The name, "Equality Day," said it all, and what better way to celebrate than to remember not only the historic figures like Susan B. Anthony and Elizabeth Caddy Stanton, but the amazing women in today's society.

In welcoming more than 250 people at a Women's Equality Day luncheon Aug. 26 at the Officers' Club, Maj. Brenda Worthington, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), offered a brief refresher course on the suffrage movement. The 19th Amendment giving women the right to vote was added to the U.S. Constitution in 1920 — 72 years after the first women's rights convention in Seneca Falls, N.Y.

"Although it took us (the United States) a long time to get it right, we did do it," said Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst, commanding general of Fort Benning. The U.S. continues to influence the rest of the world concerning women's rights, and "our Soldiers are out there setting the example."

Martin

Shifting the focus from voting rights to honoring today's female crusaders, Ernst introduced the guest speaker, Phenix City Mayor Peggy Martin.

"We all have examples of remarkable women," he said. "They may be our mothers and grandmothers."

Martin is one such example, he said. She has been very supportive of Fort Benning since her election in 1998. Her husband, who served 19 years in the Army, passed away several years ago. "She is a role model for young women and not so young women."

It was a busy, but exciting week for the mayor, who holds two jobs — "three if you include mother of four and grandmother of nine," Ernst said. In addition to her duties as mayor, she is the Consumer Service Manager for Tom's Foods. Martin caught a plane to Williamsport, Pa., immediately after the luncheon to support the Phenix City National All-Stars in their U.S. Little League Championship title-winning game.

"My daughter asked me what I was going to talk about. Well, I'm not here to give you any statistics," she said. "I am here to speak from the heart."

According to Martin, women "must take the challenge, and keep things moving away from the 'Good Ol' Boy system'" by stressing integrity, honesty and dedication. "I'm not a politician; I'm a public servant," she said.

Martin first ran for public office in 1994, seeking the job of probate judge in Russell County. Undeterred by others' doubts, she "started knocking on doors and letting the people see me," she said.

Disappointed after losing the election, Martin said "her female side came out" and she cried, but went immediately to congratulate her opponent. Someone asked her why, after such a tough fight, and she responded, "Because I'm a Christian."

In her next political outing, she was elected to the Phenix City Council, and last year won the mayor's position.

After her speech, Martin presented Ernst a key to Phenix City. Joking that there are no keys to Fort Benning, Ernst presented Martin with an Iron Mike statue.

"There's just one word that sums it up," Martin said. "Hooah!"

In his closing remarks, Ernst reminded the women and men in the room to continue to fight for equality.

"It's a formation, and everyone in the formation has to do their part," he said. "That is what makes this nation great. If we ever stop trying, we will stumble and fall."

Yolanda Wilson provided entertainment for the luncheon. "I feel it is a day that all women should try to participate in and acknowledge because we have come a long way, and we are still progressing," she said. A legal clerk with the Judge Advocate General's office, Wilson sang the national anthem and the hymn, He Looked Beyond My Faults.

"Programs such as this should encourage us to stay in the fight and to run the race because we are conquerors. I admire all women who have the goal to progress and achieve the desires of their heart."

Contracting gets new chief

After 23 years of service, retired officer steps up as head of department

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Retired Lt. Col. Karen A. Brinckmann became the Director of Contracting Aug. 23.

During a 23-year stint in the military, Brinckmann held numerous positions that prepared her for this job, including duty as a contracting officer, MEPS commander, IG representative in Washington, D.C., and chief of Protocol in Korea.

Although her military career ended July 1994, she has since held positions as a contract administer and was chief of the contracting division for the Corps of Engineers, San Francisco, Calif.

Brinckmann is currently a level III Certified Acquisition Professional in contracting and acquisitions, and holds Masters Degrees in Business Administration and Contracting from the Florida Institute of Technology.

According to Brinckmann, she never married and never had any children because her career always came first. "When I was in uniform, my entire life was the uniform. I am extremely dedicated to my work.

"I thoroughly enjoy working and have always looked forward to new challenges," Brinckmann said. "I attribute my success to my combined experiences, which led up to making me capable of doing this job — I am sure this job will meet all of my expectations."

Brinckmann

Brinckmann said her transition into director was excellent because everyone at Fort Benning was receptive and willing to keep an open mind.

"I found out shortly after arriving here that Southern hospitality was not fiction. The people I have met are more than willing to help out and have made me feel welcome," she said.

"I am excited about living in the South and working at Fort Benning."

Veteran takes helm at DRM

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

A 33-year veteran of Fort Benning's Directorate of Resource Management assumed the position of director July 18.

After serving two years in the Army, Bobby N. King earned a degree in accounting from Troy State University and embarked on his career at DRM.

During his tenure, King became a certified financial manager and served as finance and accounting officer, the chief of the accounting division and the chief of the accounting services division.

According to King, working directly with Soldiers is what he has enjoyed the most over the years.

"Helping Soldiers work out problems is the most satisfying part of my job," King said. "In my new position, I can continue that tradition by hopefully ensuring that Fort Benning has the resources needed in order to produce great Soldiers."

King

King's first area of focus while at the helm of the DRM is the implementation of the new installation command plan, which includes a working contract between installation commanders and the TRADOC commander.

"The plan is an agreement of what the commanders want done and how it can be achieved with available resources that include human resources and dollar resources," he said. "At times, because of the scarcity of resources, we are limited. But we will always do the best job we can."

While his job as director brings new challenges, King looks forward to each and every day. "I have an excellent staff of people who care and work together for the good of the Soldier and the mission. What more can I ask for?

FBI arrests web page hacker; government sites becoming more secure

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Working from information provided by the U.S. Army's Criminal Investigation Command, FBI agents arrested a 19-year-old Wisconsin man Aug. 30 for malicious altering of a U.S. Army Web page.

The agents identified the Green Bay man as the co-founder of a hacker organization known as "Global Hell."

The arrest capped a two-month investigation led by Army CID agents, after an unidentified intruder gained illegal access to the Army Home Page June 28 and modified its contents. The intruder also gained access to an unclassified Army network and removed and modified computer files to prevent detection.

Since the case is still ongoing, Christopher Unger, web site administrator for the Army Home Page, didn't want to talk about specifics of what the hacker did to the web page or what the Army is doing to protect its sites from future hackers. However, he said the Army has moved its web sites to a more secure platform. The Army had been using Windows NT and is currently using Mac OS servers running WebSTAR web server software for its home page web site.

Unger said the reason for choosing this particular server and software is that according to the World Wide Web Consortium, it is more secure than its counterparts. According to the Consortium's published reports on its findings, Macintosh does not have a command shell, and because it does not allow remote logins, it is more secure than other platforms. The report also said the Consortium has found no specific security problems in either the software or the server.

The Consortium is a worldwide group of representatives from more than 350 organizations that provide the infrastructure for a global interoperable World Wide Web. Membership is open to any organization.

"Government networks are inviting to hackers because of their high profile," Unger said. However, the Department of Defense is laying the groundwork now for more secure Internet sites that will prevent unauthorized access to information, he said.

Boat: MPs end summer patrolling

no swimming in the river.

This year, the patrol assisted in towing boats with mechanical problems, rescuing stranded boaters who were dehydrated after four hours in the sun, and seizing alcohol and writing Boating Under the Influence tickets.

"We do a lot of courtesy stops," Edgecombe said, "checking to see that boaters are OK."

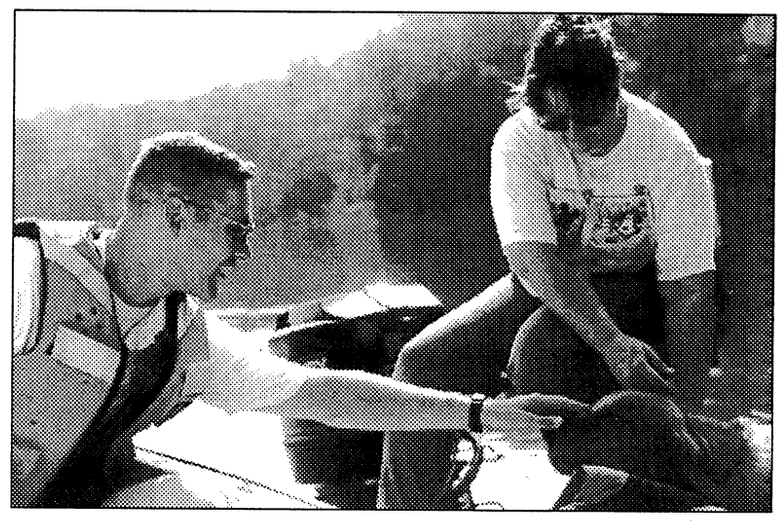
As the boat cruised down the river, the MPs waved to boaters and fishermen along the banks. Always slowing down when approaching within 100 feet of another craft, the men would ask fellow boaters over a loud speaker if things were going well.

With the drought this summer, the river level is low and pollution evident.

"It doesn't look like the Alan Jackson video," Brown said, referring to the country singer's song, Way Down Yonder on the Chattahoochee. Floating in the murky water Saturday were plastic balls, plastic foam buckets and soda bottles.

"In the Chattahoochee, there's no telling what you are going to find," Edgecombe, who collects plastic balls from the river for his rottweiller, said.

Pollution isn't the only thing the MPs have spotted on the river, and they have a photograph to prove it. About two weeks ago, Edgecombe saw a 9-foot-long alligator, on the shore of an inlet. But, on Saturday, the reptile was nowhere to be found.



During the week, Brown rides a bicycle as part of the Community Oriented Police Squad platoon. After pedaling a two-wheeler all week, Brown said, the boating duty "doesn't feel like work."

Edgecombe agreed. "It's the easiest way to work and not work at the same time."

The boat patrol works in two-person teams, with five members assigned to the weekend duty covering Friday evening and all day Saturday and Sunday.

Patti Hails, manager's assistant at Uchee Creek, has been like a surrogate mother to the team this year. "I check on them and make sure they are not dehydrated and that they are fed."

Having the patrol on the weekends for the last two years has made a difference, especially in the area of alcohol and boating, Hails said. "It has made a difference, just like on the highway.

Safety: Holidays often spell trouble first-offense DUI is going to cost you about $3,000," Kelley said. "That includes the fine, the increase in insurance rates and the fee for mandatory traffic school.

"That's what people don't realize. They don't look at the ramifications down range. That could be your new TV, VCR or even your tuition in college. There's a great deal you are risking if you are going to drink and drive."

When an accident does occur on post, the scenario is often familiar, according to Regis Beighley, safety manager for the Infantry Branch Safety Office, Directorate of Public Safety.

"It's usually on the weekend, at night, and no seat belts. Often alcohol is involved. They (the traffic reports) all read: 'lost control of the vehicle, ran off the road, hit a culvert or a tree.' It's the same story, but with different names."

The number of traffic fatalities has been dropping at Fort Benning each decade since the sixties. There were 244 in the '60s; 140 in the '70s; 70 in the '80s; and 36 so far this decade. Beighley attributed the decline to vehicle design improvements, safety features like air bags, command emphasis on safety and a smaller Army.

And, Beighley said, holidays don't have to spell trouble. "Army-wide we do really well before holidays." He cited three factors: command emphasis, vehicle inspections and an extra training day for travel. Fatigue is one of the top four causes of accidents. It follows losing control, crossing the centerline and speeding.

Stebbins: Award honors ITB Soldier

Now, one Silver Star and six years later, Staff Sgt. John Stebbins, a drill sergeant with Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, found even though it has been a long time since those fateful days in Somalia, he hasn't been forgotten. And just recently, he received some news to confirm that.

"I was doing drill and ceremony on Kanell Field on an ordinary Saturday afternoon when I was called to report to the battalion commander," recalled Stebbins, reffering to Lt. Col. Dennis Bundy. "He said, "Drill sergeant Stebbins, a company in England called On:line Finance has asked that you be present to give an award called the Stebby award named for you!" And I said, 'Sir you have to be kidding.'"

But his commander wasn't kidding, and Stebbins learned that sure enough, an American named Joe Giannamore, owner of a 24 hour on-line loan company in England, had developed an award for honoring his employees and had named it after Stebbins.

According to Stebbins, Giannamore had just recently read a review for the book Blackhawk Down, a story chronicling the fight in Mogadishu, and was so taken by Stebbins' performance and willingness to go "above and beyond the call of duty" he decided to name this award the Stebby Award.

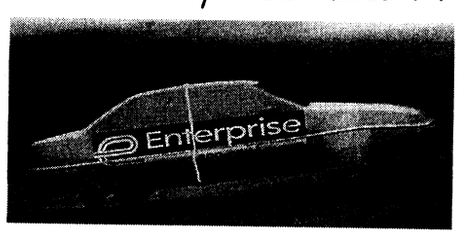
"It seems he (Giannamore) and his buddies were sitting around talking," Stebbins explained about how the award was devised. "They were talking about how they didn't have the same ethos as when they first started the company. How they weren't as interpersonal. That's why they wanted a way to recognize their special employees — those people who gave it their all to make them successful. Those people who do their job for more than a paycheck. They do it because they love what they do."

What's more, Giannamore wanted Stebbins to come to England and present the honors and was willing to pay for the cost of the five-day trip.

On Aug. 5, Stebbins boarded an England bound plane to meet a group of people he didn't know and present an award with his name on it.

"When I stood up to give my little speech I talked about working as a team. How, because I was there (Somalia) with who I was there with, my Ranger buddies, I was able to do extraordinary things. That's what the Stebby award is about — ordinary people working together as a team to do extraordinary things."

Now, Stebbins is back in the United States shaping the warriors of tomorrow. Each day he instills in them the will to face adversity and not run in the other direction.



He said he is very honored they decided to name an award after him, but the fact of the matter remains — he is just an ordinary guy.

"I am a normal, average kind of guy," Stebbins said with a chuckle in his voice. "In fact, how I know is that when I went over to England all the employees at On:line were saying they expected Stebby to be a little bigger."

OSUT Soldiers learn basic skills from

Reserve Drills

"Better move private!"

It's a phrase that can be heard daily in the training environment of Fort Benning's Sand Hill as drill sergeants transform young civilians into tomorrow's warriors.

The seemingly endless hours of instruction and motivation by drill instructors to make that transformation successful is no easy task especially when it is one that comes around only two weeks a year.

It is a challenge that the 18 reserve drill sergeants and cadre from the 1st Battalion, 333rd Regiment, 84th Division (IT) faced as they assumed the responsibilities of training more than 180 Infantry trainees during their stint of active duty service last week.

"It's a very challenging mission to assume," said 1st Lt. Vylius Leskys, Company B commander, 1st Battalion, 333rd Regiment, 84th Division (IT). "We have to continue to prepare for our Infantry mission as well as be prepared to train Infantry Soldiers from Week One to Week 14 of OSUT."

That training mission took the Soldiers from their reserve unit in Flint, Mich., to the hills of Fort Benning to tackle Week 11 and Week 12 of Infantry One Station Unit Training, weeks that span from forest patrols to river crossings and the slide for life.

So how do 18 Soldiers from Michigan make the transition from civilians to Soldiers?

"It really isn't that much of a change," said Staff Sgt. Isaac Cullum, a reserve drill sergeant and business manager in Indiana. "We are working with people here, something that I do every day in my civilian job."

While Cullum said his demeanor transformation was not a problem a few of his cohorts did find an obstacle in their migration south to train troops.

"The heat is just so different," said 1st Lt. William Similo, the company's executive officer. "When we left Michigan it was 75 and sunny. Now we are dealing with humidity, hills and heat that to be honest, we aren't used to it."

Getting used to the heat, was, according to Similo, the only major obstacle the company has faced since they began training troops last week.

"We train year round to come down here and lead training," he said during a field training exercise last week. "So we are ready when we hit the ground. It just takes us a little time to acclimate ourselves to the temperature."

Acclimation is something that is far from easy in the rigid training environment of the Infantry Training Brigade. However, according to Staff Sgt. Feliciano Santiago, an active-duty drill sergeant assigned to Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, it is one these outstanding NCOs tackle with no problem.

Trainees from Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, conduct a river crossing under the direction of reserve drill sergeants.

"They bring a lot of knowledge and motivation to the company," Santiago said about the performance of the reservists. "They have proven themselves as impressive leaders and trainers."

The Soldiers abilities to prove themselves is not the only thing that these citizen-Soldiers bring to the table during their two-week active duty experience.

"The privates seem to build a relationship with the reserve drills," he said. "They serve as a role model and give the privates a chance to see the reserve forces in action."

While the action in Georgia is over for the reservists of 1st Battalion, 333rd Regiment, 84th Division (IT), Leskys said the mission is one that is on-going back in Michigan.

"Although we're done with this year's training cycle, we are far from done with our training," he said. "We will continue to train and continue to make the 84th Division's mission one of the highest caliber."

Reserve drill sergeants continually support training missions throughout Fort Benning's Sand Hill Initial Entry Facility.

The Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 33rd, 84th Division (IT) trained more than 180 Soldiers while supplementing the training staff of the Infantry Training Brigade's 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

LRC

teaches teamwork

2nd Lt. Edgar Jimenez
A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

The Soldiers that help run Fort Benning and keep the records straight got a chance to do some training of their own Aug. 26.

A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment sent troops to attack the Leadership Reaction Course.

The course, which is used by many different organizations to develop leadership, tests an individual's ability to lead, follow and analyze problems, said Capt. Herman Kirsch, Company A commander.

Throughout the course, Soldiers had to demonstrate that they are capable of leading others through a mission, following others' plans and developing a coherent plan.

The Infantry Officers Basic Course, Officer Candidate School and Reserve Officer Training Corps are just some of the courses that incorporate the LRC into their leadership training.

The LRC is composed of 20 stations. Ten of the stations are "dry" stations, the other 10 have water obstacles. Upon arriving at each station, a leader is chosen from the group of five or six and briefed on the situation and mission. Each person gets a chance to lead one of the missions. The leader must then create a plan and accomplish the mission within the allotted time.

Although mission accomplishment is important to the exercise, it is more important for Soldiers to remain flexible in their planning. If an idea doesn't seem to work, Soldiers must be willing to change the plan and accept ideas from other groups.

"The course was an experience that benefited all of those involved," said Sgt. William Bryan, a lane evaluator for the course. "It gave the Soldiers a break from their daily routines and allowed them to come together and work as a team in a different environment."

The LRC also gave A Co. the opportunity to work on troop leading skills away from its various facilities.

"Because of Alpha Company's organization, we rarely have the chance to see each other outside of PT," Bryan said."Even within each directorate, the personnel often interact with the Soldiers they help more than the people in their own unit. The LRC is valuable training that allows the interaction."

Soldiers prepare for real-world missions with Hammer Focus exercise

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The thermometer neared the 100-degree mark as the Soldiers of Fort Benning's Kelley Hill ventured into the woods to endure the week-long real-world training mission last week called Hammer Focus.

The mission, according to 1st Lt. Regonald Harris Sr., fire direction officer, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), was to provide the Marne Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade, with a week of intensive training that would prepare them for anything the world could throw at them.

"Training exercises like this are designed to build confidence," Harris said after returning from the 7-day exercise. "It is a chance for them to prepare for what they may face when they are called upon to fight anywhere at any time."

Anywhere means any place in the world for the Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade because they are a supporting element of the Army's readiness force, the 18th Airborne Corps. And readiness for anywhere is exactly what these Soldiers trained for during their 170-hour field exercise.

"The training was not focused on one specific topic or task," said Sgt. Cedetrick Jefferson, a squad leader assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment's. "We have had NBC training, civilians on the battlefield training and tactical encounters on a variety of levels."

While Jefferson did note the multitude of training, he said the training was not singled out to the tasks mentioned.

"We try to train on as much as possible while we are out here," he said last week during the training exercise. "However, there is no task that is more important than another. They are all important and should be to the Soldiers."

The training span gave both the leaders and the Soldiers an opportunity to evaluate the readiness and the competence level of all of the units involved, Harris said.

"We had every element from the brigade represented in the exercise," he said. "That allows us an opportunity to work out any problems that may come up during a mission like this whether it be a National Training Center deployment or one like the Soldiers from Task Force 1-15 just returned from," he said referring to its Kuwaiti deployment.

While he said both the Soldiers and the leadership of the brigade did learn from the training they encountered during the exercise, he said the task force's absence during the training exercise proved to be a vital learning tool as well.

"The task force's absence allowed our people to experience what it was like to have to deal with the absence of a battery or company," he said. "It was definitely real-world. They now know what it is like to have to make do with what resources they have and overcome those obstacles."

Spc. Paul Illingsworth, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, said that the personnel deficit was just one of the obstacles the Soldiers faced while they called the woods of Fort Benning home for the week.

"The biggest problem we faced was the heat," Illingsworth said. "It is a lot hotter here than anywhere else I have ever been before. It just drains you, and that makes it hard to carry on with your mission."

According to Harris, despite the heat and the long hours the Marne Soldiers faced while training in the field, he said the mission was one that offered both the Soldiers and the leaders of the brigade a chance to improve themselves and continue to maintain the standard as the best brigade in the Army.

"We are ready to do whatever we are called upon to do," he said. "We have learned from the exercise and taken those lessons and continued to perfect the the processes that make the brigade the best in the Army."

Separating Soldiers, family members and other job seekers will be able to talk with many Columbus area employers at the Job Fair Sept. 9.

This year's event is sponsored by the newly appointed Georgia Department of Labor Commissioner, Michael L. Thurmond. Job Fairs like this are part of a continuing emphasis throughout the state to get employers to hire vets. Other sponsors are VFW Post 665, The American Legion Post 35, and Disabled American Veterans Chapters 7 and 56. Employers will set up their booths at the VFW Hall, 1824 Victory Drive. The fair will open at 9 a.m. and close at 1 p.m. Sept 9. The list of employers is being finalized and the organizers will have a complete list soon, said Bruce Tait of the Columbus Office of the Georgia Department of Labor.

As of now, the following employers have committed and will have representatives available: Callaway Chemical, Charbroil-W.C. Bradley, Goldens Foundry, Internet-Columbus Foundry, Hornady Trucking, Eastern Services Corporation Trucking, Dolly Madison-Interstate Brands, Saint Francis Hospital, South Trust Bank, Sun Trust Bank, Spectrum Stores, and Columbus Consolidated Government. Many of the other large employers in Columbus were in contact with the Department of Labor office and will be represented.

A great deal of effort goes into planning, organizing, and sponsoring a job fair, and it is a great advantage for veterans, separating service members, and other local job seekers. It is highly recommended that Fort Benning and Columbus job seekers attend in large numbers if possible. It is a great job seeking opportunity. Duty uniform is fine for this event.

For more information about the job fair please contact a Veterans representative at the Georgia Department of Labor's Columbus Office, 649-7423.

Dexter students learn sign language

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If you were to walk down the halls at Dexter Elementary School, you may see something that looks a little strange. Students quietly jaunting along, eagerly waving and weaving their fingers together to form cryptic style symbols. No, these children aren't communicating in secret code, they are actually talking to each other in another language — sign language that is.

In fact, almost every student at Dexter Elementary is learning sign language thanks to a program started five years ago by Pam Koon, physical education teacher at Dexter.

Koon explained that the program developed from an interest she had in sign language. She said it was when she finally decided to take classes to learn how to sign a few years back that everything fell into place.

"As I learned (sign language), I would come to school and work with the kids and teach them. And they had such an interest; they absolutely loved to do it. So the more I learned, the more I taught them and the more they learned, the more they wanted to know. It just went back and forth," Koon said with a smile.

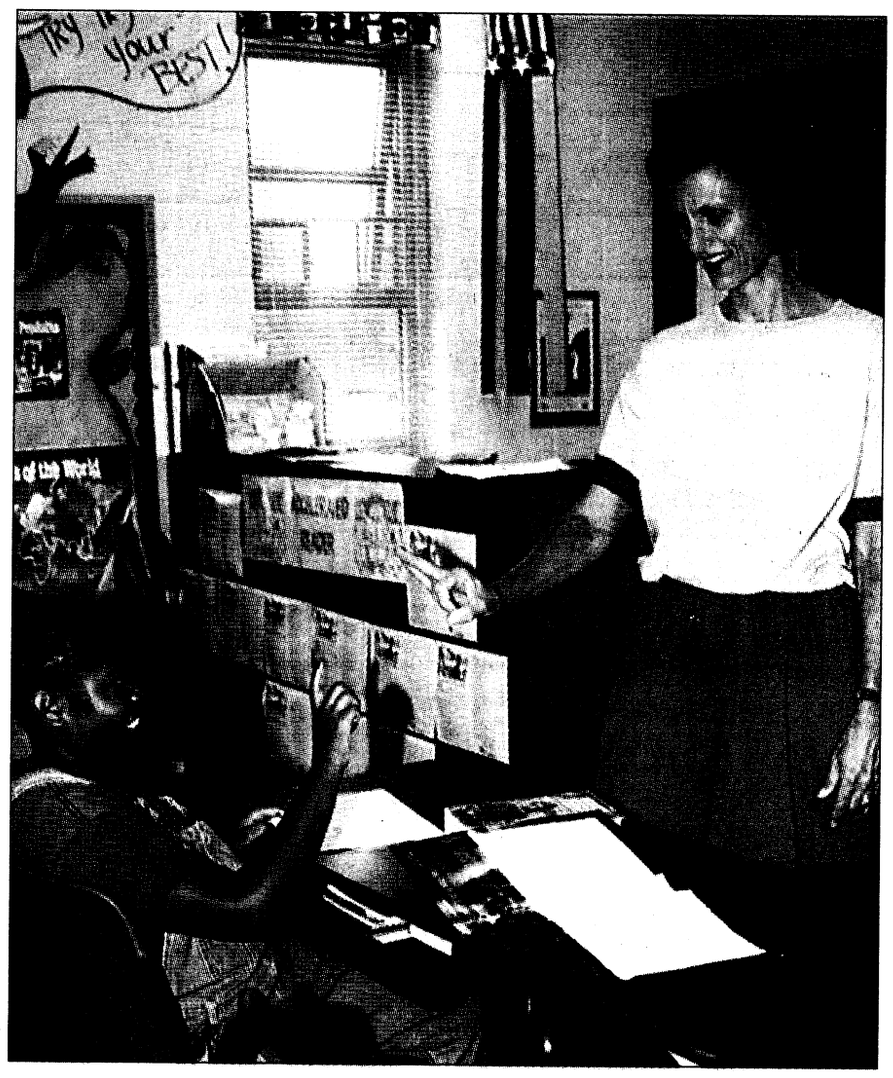
It was because of that love that Koon decided to start making sign language a part of the children's regular PE sessions.

"Since I'm a PE teacher I always work with gross motor skills such as running, jumping and hopping, and I thought that sign language was a great way to add the fine motor coordination in at the end of each class for a cool down," Koon said.

Now, she uses the last 10 minutes of gym class to teach the fundamentals of sign language. But it doesn't stop there. Koon also hosts a before school PE program five days a week and every other Monday is devoted to learning the fourth most used language in the world.

Koon said she starts the children out by giving them a copy of the alphabet to learn the letters. They then move on to learning how to spell their names and basic things like asking, "How are you?" and "Nice to meet you." Finally, they move on to songs and simple phrases, she said.

According to Joyce Flatt, education technician, the children thoroughly enjoy learning how to sign. Flatt said the school does all sorts of things in sign language, such as songs, plays and different programs.



"They do a lot of songs, and it's just beautiful," Flatt said about everything the children use language for. "In fact they did this blacklight program where the children wore white gloves in the dark, so all you could see were their hands. It was just so effective you were almost in tears."

Flatt went on to say that learning how to sign does a lot more for the students than giving them something fun to do.

"Research shows that learning sign language helps young children develop language skills. And the way Ms. Koon does it, she incorporates her program with the language arts. So it really supports classroom teachers also."

Koon agreed by saying that learning to sign not only boosts language art and vocabulary test scores, it also gives children an added awareness and sensitivity toward handicaps ... especially deafness.

"I think this will help them," she said. "It (deafness) used to be kind of embarrassing and people didn't accept it so much. But learning this shows them acceptance. And now maybe they won't be afraid if they see a deaf person. My hope is that they would go up and communicate with them."

Student wins poster contest

Benning family member takes home cash prize for creative family picture

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Sports and math are Michael Tomczewski's favorite things to do. He doesn't consider himself artistic and does not particularly like to draw, so he was very surprised when he learned his drawing placed first in the 1999 Armed Services YMCA Poster Art Contest for the entire Army.

"I came home later than I was supposed to — When my dad called me over to tell me the good news I actually thought that I was in trouble for being late," laughed Tomczewski, who drew the poster when he was in the fifth grade at Wilson Elementary School. "I couldn't believe that my poster won."

Military children from around the world participate in the annual art contest, which is sponsored by the Armed Services YMCA, and $500 U.S. Savings Bonds are presented to the first place poster winners from each of the services. The overall-winning poster, chosen from the top service posters, is featured each year on the Military Family Week poster.

Military Family Week will be celebrated Nov. 21-28 with many installations conducting programs and special events that recognize military families.

"This year's drawings, as in the past, reflect the challenges and joys of life in the military as seen through the eyes of elementary school age children," said retired Rear Adm. Frank Gallo, national executive director of the Armed Services YMCA.

Gallo said that a prominent theme this year was moving to new communities, with many of the drawings depicting moving vans, traveling scenes and leaving friends.

"Other drawings included a wide variety of family activities such as going to church and visiting libraries, commissaries and other places on installations," he said. "Each year the children tell success stories of military families through their drawings."

Tomczewski, who illustrated his family of six in detail, didn't think his poster was special because he simply drew his family being themselves.

"I drew my dad in his uniform, my brother with a skateboard, my mom in her work clothes and my sisters talking," he said. "It is great to win something like this because people get to know me and my family through my drawing."

Michael Tomczewski's winning poster earned him a $500 U.S. Savings Bond he intends to use for college.

Fort Benning students have entered the poster contest for the past two years and have earned their place as the 1998 overall winner and 1998 and 1999 first place winners for the Army. Although the students hailed from different schools, they were unknowingly bound together by a common thread — Audrey Leanza an art enthusiast who was also their art teach.

"We spend some time talking about the military family so the kids can get in touch with how they feel, and then I ask them to 'do their best' on their posters," Leanza said. "Throughout the year I try to teach the children about design element, spacing, proportions and other basic drawing techniques — it gives them guidelines that improve their drawings, and it pays off for the kids in the long run."

Michael's mom, Gloria Tomczewski, was very proud of her son's accomplishment generated from his art instruction.

"I am glad that the school system participates in different contests because it gives the kids incentive while boosting their self-esteem," she said.

Faith needs volunteers for new program

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

A Fort Benning school is currently looking for a few good men and women who would like to go back to school — as volunteers.

The volunteers are needed to share their experiences and provide support and guidance to students at Faith Middle School as part of the school's new mentoring program.

According to Tom Dignan, Faith's principal, the mentors will be matched up with a student who is participating in Faith's achievement program.

"This school is just a microcosm of society. There's a whole range of problem situations to deal with — there are students who have lost their parents, there are students in the midst of divorce, and there are students from perfect families," Dignan said. "The achievement program deals with students who are struggling in certain areas, and with this program we can give them the extra attention they need to bring them back to the level they need to be at."

After the mentors are paired with a student, Dignan said the mentor will schedule a time to come in during the school day and work with their student as teacher, role model, motivator and friend.

"All the students who belong to this program won't necessarily be problems or have problems," he said. "They might just have difficulty studying or need someone to talk to."

Alice Brown, one of the achievement program's instructors, said the mentors will be a wonderful addition to the program.

"We are really excited about working with the mentors," she said. "This program is really going to be a big team effort — a team of teachers, counselors and mentors."

Initially, Soldiers are being targeted to participate as mentors, but Maj. Samuel F. Mosteller, command coordinator for the mentoring program, said he would also like to get retirees and civilian employees involved.

"I became involved in this program because I have always been interested in teaching as a second career," he said. "And I thought this was one way we could make a difference in these kids' lives."

Fort Benning's Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers organization is also working to get volunteers involved in the program.

Labor department to inspect amusement park rides

Georgia Department of Labor

In Atlanta, Michael Thurmond, Georgia state labor commissioner, said that the Georgia Department of Labor's annual safety inspection of amusement park and carnival rides is underway across the state in preparation for the upcoming fall season.

Thurmond also stressed that the riding public has some responsibility for its own safety.

"Many people throughout the state either visit an amusement park or take in a carnival that comes to their home town," he said. "There are certain safety practices they should follow."

Here are a few tips amusement park goers are recommended to follow while at the park:

• Remain seated in the ride at all times.

• Use the safety devices, such as seat belts that are provided.

• Always supervise small children.

• Walk, don't run, on ride platforms.

• Keep your hands and feet inside the car when seated.

• Never force your child or friends to ride.

• Wear proper clothing, such as no open shoes.

Sign: Program enriches students

She added that learning to sign gives the kids an understanding that it's OK to be different.

For fifth-grader Brittani Maldonado, a two-year veteran of the program, the best thing about signing is getting to do all sorts of programs and plays in front of the school.

She also said that she likes being able to move her fingers all around in different ways.

Most importantly though, she pointed out that if someone deaf came to the school they would be able to communicate with one another.

"It would be bad if we had deaf kids come to the school and no one knew sign language because then we wouldn't be able to talk to them," Maldonado said. "But now we can because of learning sign language."

Everything about the program is so positive, Koon said. She said she believes it would be great for all of the schools to do.

"It's so positive in every way, for the brain, for vocabulary, for fine motor skills," Koon said. "It's funny because teachers have said that in class, you know how we used to pass notes, well, the kids will be sitting there signing to each other."

Mentors: Helps kids

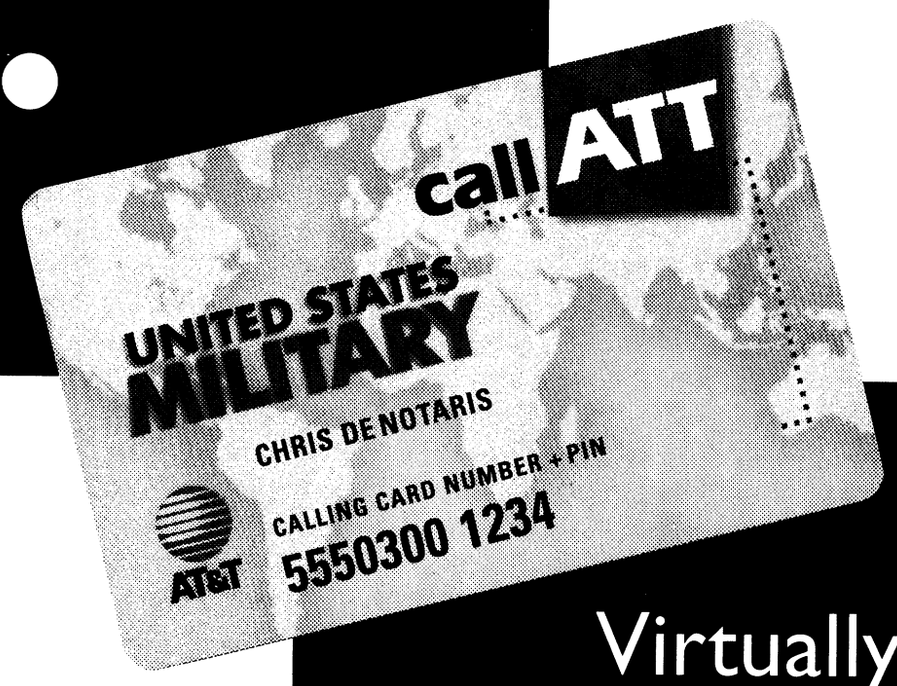
"This is a great opportunity to get involved in our community," said Spc. Tina Fontaine, BOSS president. "After all, these kids are our future."

Mosteller added that mission permitting, military personnel interested in volunteering in a Department of Defense Education Activity School or local elementary or secondary school can be excused from duty for up to one hour per week. Civilian employees can also be excused without being charged for leave up to 59 minutes per week, so long as no other excused absences during the week are approved.



Those who would like to participate in the mentoring program can pick up applications at Faith or the Fort Benning Schools Administrative Office of the Superintendent on Custer Road.

Dignan said he would like to have all applications returned by Sept. 10 so they can begin planning a training session for the mentors.

PCSing Soldiers need to take action

Marty Gutierrez
Directorate of Public Works

The Permanent Change of Station moving season is here. The Family Housing Branch, Directorate of Public Works, reminds all Soldiers living in government quarters to take action now.

If PCSing this year, two stops are a must for preplanning. One is the Family Housing Office in Olson Hall, Building 399 (open Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.). The other is Transportation in Building 280, Transportation Lane.

Personnel in these offices will provide all handouts, forms, information and advice needed to ensure a smooth trouble-free move. Don't delay; start early. At this time of year, the volume of Soldiers PCSing is at its highest.

Successful termination of quarters at the Family Housing Office involves the following steps:

• Make an appointment for the mandatory pre-inspection. Thirty to 45 days before leaving the installation, call Quarters Management Section (Assignments and Terminations) at 545-2990; or stop by in person at the Family Housing Office in Building 399.

• Pre-inspection. The inspector will walk through quarters and prepare a pre-inspection sheet detailing problems or deficiencies that must be corrected in order to pass final inspection.

• Make an appointment for the final inspection. Ensure quarters are cleaned to government standards.

• Final inspection. If occupants fail the final inspection, they must correct deficiencies, pay for any damages and schedule another final inspection.

• Pick up termination paperwork and proceed to Building 2621 to complete out-processing.

DPW Family Housing must serve a large number of Soldiers in a short period of time with a limited work force. Early scheduling will avoid conflicts and delays. Soldiers who wait till the last minute to contact Family Housing may be unable to schedule inspection appointments for the specific dates and times they may require.

Remember that national holidays, organization days and installation training holidays may impact installation clearing plans. During these times, although Soldiers may have completed termination of quarters, out-processing at Soldiers' Plaza is closed. Installation signatures can not be obtained until the next duty day.

For more information, call Quarters Management Sections (Assignments and Terminations) at 545-2990; Inspection Section at 545-7312 and Community Homefinding Relocation and Referral Services at Soldiers' Plaza at 545-3921.

New to Fort Benning?

To submit a service order request to DPW, the only correct phone number to call is the DPW Work Order Desk at 545-2135.

Recently the Work Reception Station has received up to two dozen calls per day from customers calling in Service Orders using an incorrect phone number. Only the 545-2135 number is answered round the clock (after-hours and weekend calls are forwarded to an emergency service desk). Calls to an incorrect number will not be forwarded for action.

The source of the error is not known. Check phone lists and handouts for correct numbers. Replace the number listed to call in Service Orders with the correct number — DPW Work Order Desk; 545-2135. Keep this number listed with other important and emergency numbers.

Labor Day schedules for Yard waste and refuse and recycle collection

Refuse and recycle collection in Family Housing for Tuesday through Sept. 10 will be picked up as normally scheduled. For more information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-1568.

Labor Day holiday schedule for the Self Help (U-Do-It) Center

In observance of Labor Day the Self Help Center, including the Loan Equipment Section and Venetian Blind and Shade Shop, will be closed Saturday through Monday. The Self Help Center will reopen for business on Tuesday at 8:30 a.m.

For more information, call Dr. William C. Shirley at 545-1121.

Renters need insurance to protect property

Better Business Bureau

As a renter, buying renter's or tenant's insurance may not have crossed your mind.

Renter's insurance protects your belongings against loss and damage and it provides liability protection. Landlord's insurance does not cover personal property.

A standard policy will cover furniture, clothing and most other personal belongings for their actual cash value at the time of loss. Cash value coverage takes into account the age and condition of items at the time of damage or loss.

Tenant's would be reimbursed for the value of the item minus depreciation. In order to recover losses at the price it will cost to replace them, ask insurance agents about replacement value coverage.

The liability coverage in the renter's policy applies at home and elsewhere to injuries and damages caused by any family member and will cover legal costs if sued. However, it does not include liability resulting from the use of an automobile.

To determine insurance needs, make a list of all household belongings. If possible note prices and dates of purchase. Take photographs or make a videotape of valuable belongings. Keep an inventory and visual record of all belongings in a safe place outside the home.

When looking for an insurance company, talk to several different agents or companies and compare prices and services. Check the company out with your BBB of West Georgia, Southwest Georgia and East Alabama.

Keep a current inventory list handy to help determine the amount of coverage that is most appropriate. Ask for a list of standard coverage limits to determine whether additional coverage is needed.

Find out about the deductible or possible out-of-pocket costs. Keep in mind that raising the deductible will usually lower the premium.

Review the policy with an insurance agent or representative to get a clear understanding of what is covered.

Parents perform most important job

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Littleton. Paducah. These names are now unfortunately and unfairly synonymous with death and terror. Kids killing kids simply because "They made fun of me."

reflections

The generations born between 1977 and 1994 are much more likely to be victims and perpetrators of crime. The statistics speak for themselves. From 1985 to 1994, juvenile arrests increased as follows:

- murder — up 150 percent
- weapons law violations — up more than 90 percent
- aggravated assault — up 90 percent
- robbery — up nearly 60 percent

"Where does it all end?" may be the wrong question to ask here. Instead we need to ask "Where does it all come from?" Thom S. Rainer in his book, The Bridger Generation, cites two important reasons why violence has skyrocketed for this group: moral uncertainty and parental detachment.

In this "anything goes" society, is it any wonder the line between knowing what is right from what is wrong has become so blurred that the moral absolutes of the Bible have become an object of scorn rather than something to embrace? The present American culture is lost in a world of "Jerry Springerism" where yesterday's outlandish act becomes tame in comparison with today's.

Rainer said, "The bridger generation also has grown up estranged from their parents." More than ever parents are spending less time with their children than at any time in our history. Josh McDowell has said, "The relationship teen-agers have with their parents is the key ingredient in determining whether they will become involved in risky behavior. Teen-agers are crying out as never before for meaningful relationships based on real love."

Parents, there is no job more important than raising your children. While I realize that the military places unusual demands upon its Soldiers, I also know that those demands can become excuses for not fulfilling your God-given mandate to raise your children in a way that there is no doubt in their minds that they are more important than your job.

Let me be so bold as to declare this: apart from Jesus Christ, our younger generation has no hope. I close with this remark I recently read in Family Voice magazine: "one of the strongest messages to come out of the tragedy in Littleton, Colo., is the hunger of this generation for Jesus Christ ... young people flocked to the churches for answers. Inspired by outspoken Christians who were martyred in their school, they made decisions for Christ. In Littleton — and beyond — teens are helping to turn the tide toward a moral society.

There is hope for the bridger generation — and it is Jesus Christ.

In an effort to help meet the spiritual needs of teen family members a special meeting for all interested parents will be conducted at the Infantry Center Chapel at 7 p.m. Sept. 13. At this meeting, the group will discuss the post-wide Protestant youth group with its own dedicated full-time youth worker team. For more information, call Rupel at 545-2050 or 545-7777.

Marriages need encouragement to work

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) George Onstad
USAIC Chaplains Office

Often during a PT run, I will hear a sergeant encouraging his or her Soldiers to keep up the pace with a chant, "Don't cheat your body now!" The leader knows that in order for his Soldiers to improve, they have to "give it their all."

reflections

Marriages need the same type of encouragement as Soldiers do on a PT run, if not more. Couples need to "give it their all" and not drop out early.

I work with many couples whose marriages are in trouble. Marriages die of neglect. Couples quit communicating. The Soldier comes home from work, the TV comes on and the relationship is turned off. No more romance. No more dates and flowers. When the couple does communicate, it is complaints about clothes on the floor, not enough help with the kids, chores, money and time.

Marriages need PT just like Soldiers need PT to stay physically fit. Dolores Curran, in her book Traits of a Healthy Family, identified 15 traits of a healthy family. All families have strengths, and all families can improve. You might consider this a PT test for relationships. The 15 traits are:

- Healthy families communicate and listen;
- they affirm and support;
- they respect one another;
- they develop trust;
- they have a sense of play and humor;
- they share responsibilities;
- they teach right from wrong;
- they build a strong sense of family;
- they have a balance of interaction;
- they have a shared religious core;
- they respect privacy;
- they value service to others;
- they foster table time and conversation;
- they share leisure time;
- healthy families admit to problems and seek help.

No family will have all of these traits. All families should have some of these traits.

When we consider the consequences of divorce and the stress of marital problems — the pain, sadness, depression, loneliness, suffering of children, loss of productivity at work and physical problems — we can see that marriage PT is a good idea. Do some marriage PT this week. Evaluate your family. What are your strengths? Where can you grow? Build each other up with compliments. Say "I love you" to every member of your family every day. Don't fall out. "Don't cheat your marriage now."

If your family needs a little help with your relationship "PT," your unit chaplain is ready to give you a hand. If they cannot personally help you, they have the connections with those who can. "Don't cheat your marriage, now."

Races set capitol-bound team

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

After a battery of two test runs and a series of rigorous practices, Fort Benning is beginning to slate a team to compete in the 13th annual Army 10-Miler Oct. 12 in Washington, D.C.

Team coach Danny McMillian said the team has yet to finalize a complete roster, but he said one thing could be determined from the qualifying runs held recently.

"It looks like we are going to have a very competitive team especially if we field a co-ed team," McMillian said after the final qualifying run last week. "With the times we have now compared to the finish of last year's 10-Miler results, Fort Benning could easily finish in the top five teams."

While McMillian said he was unsure if the post would send two teams, one male and one female, or whether he would compile a single co-ed team, he said the post would fare much better with the mixed team.

First-place finisher of both qualifying races, Christopher Rizzo, an Infantry Officers' Career Course student, agrees with McMillian on the fielding of teams and is anxious to organize team practices.

"We would have a much better shot at a top five finish with a co-ed team," Rizzo said after last week's final qualifying race where he shaved nearly three minutes off his time from the first race. "But the next few weeks are going to be very important in determining our success."

As those next few weeks roll by, Rizzo said he and the rest of the team need to get together and put in some hard work and mileage to build up their level of fitness.

Although this talk of bringing a higher level of fitness to the team is coming from an athlete who finished the 10-mile course in 55 minutes, he said he thinks he and the rest of the team can and will do better after a couple of weeks of intensive training.

"We are going to be a very competitive team by the time the race rolls around in October," he said. "I expect everyone to run at least a minute and a half to two minutes faster by race day. After a good night's sleep and a couple of weeks of lighter running prior to the race, we'll be a very fast team."

The heat is another factor Rizzo said is going to assist the Soldiers in their quest for 10-Miler success.

"We are going to be in D.C. in October in a much cooler environment than we are used to," he said. "After running 10 miles here in the heat and humidity, it is going to be much easier to go up there and run in the cooler, less dense air."

While that chance to run in the cool air is still a few months away for the Soldiers on the team, Rizzo said he wants to see Fort Benning do as well as possible and said he will do anything he can to make that happen.

The Army 10-Miler is the largest 10-mile race in the United States and is widely known as one of the nation's premier racing events.

The event is co-sponsored by the Military District of Washington and the Association of the U.S. Army with all proceeds from the 10-mile endurance test going to Soldier and Soldier-family programs.

Pentathlon team scores world CISM wins

Harriet Rice
U.S. Army Community Services

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — There's no feeling in the world like standing on the podium with a gold medal around your neck listening to your national anthem played over the public address system. Three Soldiers experienced that feeling recently, and they loved it.

Jim Gregory, Brett Weatherbie and Chad Senior made up the U.S. Armed Forces Modern Pentathlon team that won the gold medal in competition against teams from more than a dozen countries at the Conseil International du Sport Militaire modern pentathlon championship Aug. 24-28 in Warsaw, Poland.

Gold in modern pentathlon has been a long time coming for the U.S. team — more than a decade, if ever. "I don't know if they've ever won the team gold. Finally, we put everything together and did what I knew we could do," said team captain Gregory.

"The most awesome thing was just standing up there and listening to the Star Spangled Banner. It's a great feeling. I think we'll try to do it more often now," quipped the Dumfries, Va., native who celebrated his 29th birthday two days later.

Gregory made two trips to the medal podium, also winning the individual silver medal with a personal best 5,379 points amassed during competition in the five sports that make up modern pentathlon: swimming, fencing, riding, shooting, and running. An American hasn't won an individual medal in CISM modern pentathlon since the 1960s. Just 18 points separated Gregory from the Czech Republic gold medalist, Libor Capalini.

USAMU shooters sweep national match at Perry

Sgt. Michael J. Brock
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Coming off an exciting win in the Service Rifle Interservice matches in Quantico, Va., the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle team carried the winning tradition over to the 1999 National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, Aug. 3 to 14.

The team managed to take second, third and fourth places in the National Individual Service Rifle Championship.

Lance Dement rejoined the Service Rifle team from the Running Target team to become the highest scoring Army competitor taking second place while Lewis A. Tippie, 1999 Interservice Champion, came in third place in the National Individual Service Rifle Championship.

"After not shooting service rifle for four years, I had four days practice before going on the road to the Virginia Regional and the Interservice Matches," Dement said. "I was just glad that I could be an asset to the Service Rifle Team this summer."

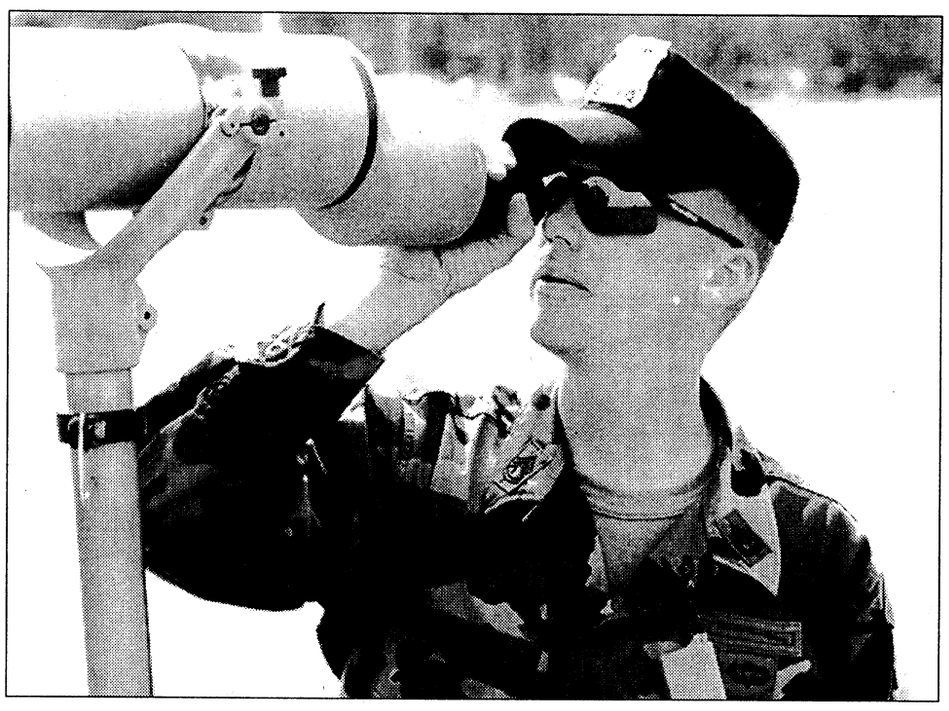
The matches started out very well when Kevin McMahon won the National Trophy Individual Rifle Match with a score of 495 points, 10 X's, out of a possible 500 points. An X is a center shot used in tie-breakers. McMahon was also named High Infantry Competition.

In the President's Rifle Match, John O. Chubb took first place with a score of 295 points, 10 X's, out of a possible 300 points. The President's Rifle Match is also known as the President's Hundred Match, out of the 1,237 competitors firing, only the top 100 places will be awarded the President's Hundred tab. Out of the 19 shooters from USAMU, 16 of them made the top 100.

"This is the second time that I have won this match," Chubb said. "It feels pretty good knowing that I have prestige among my peers. Because when you step up to the shooting line you have to have everything right, there are no second chances. But, I really wasn't focused on winning the match, I was just focused on shooting."

In the first team match, the National Trophy Rifle Team Match, the AMU took first and third places. Rand D. Bentson coached the team of Chubb, Dement, McMahon, Tippie, Norman L. Anderson and Emil Praslick along with team captain Scott Boyd to a first place finish with a score of 2.943 points, 101 X's, and beat the second place Marine team by 13 points. Charles Coffey coached the third place team of Sgt. 1st Class Grant Singley, Lance Hopper and Christopher Hatcher, Joshua Maguire, Tobie Tomlinson and Kyle Ward with a score of 2,902 points, 89 X's.

Bentson's team consisting of McMahon, Singley, Anderson and Tippie took second place with a score of 1947 points.



"This is the third year in a row that our team has won the National Trophy Rifle Team Match," Bentson said.

In the long-range matches, Hopper won the Billy C. Atkins Trophy for the first time with and M-16 service rifle. The Billy C. Atkins Trophy is the long range service rifle aggregate of three different 600-yard matches, two different 1,000-yard matches and the Palma Individual Trophy Match which is 15 shots each fired at the 800, 900 and 1,000 yards.

The Service Rifle Team also won the two 1,000-yard team matches-the Romanian Trophy Team Match and the Herrick Trophy Team Match.

"Our guys did outstanding this year,"said Rick Remily, Service Rifle coach. "We have won every 1,000-yard service rifle team match from the Virginia Regional Matches through the Interservice Matches and on into the National Matches."

Other top finishers were Dement winning the Clarke Trophy Match and Tomlinson winning the Navy Cup Match.

Soldier strives to earn chess title

Harriet E. Rice
U.S. Army Community Services

Rudy Tia took his winning chess strategy to Eagle Base in Bosnia where he won the local tournament. Now the 1st Cavalry Soldier from Fort Hood, Texas, faces six others in a bid to take back his Army Chess Champion title.

He'll face tough competition from Joseph L. Spencer of Fort Carson, Colo., when they meet at the 1999 All Army Chess Championship Saturday through Sept. 10 at Fort Belvoir, Va.

Both Soldiers hold U.S. Chess Federation Expert ratings over 2000. All Soldiers who participate in the Army level tournament are Class A players with ratings of 1800 or more. The USCF is the national governing body for chess in the United States.

Tia, a field artillery cannoneer crewman, was the defending 1997 All-Army champion, but lost his title to a Defense Language Institute Russian student, Joseph Kruml in 1998.

"The most important things in chess are planning, strategy, and how many moves you think ahead," Tia said at the 1998 tournament.

He thinks 15 moves ahead when he is focused and compares chess to battlefield strategy.

"The pieces have to cooperate with each other the same as Soldiers have to cooperate to win a war," he said.

All Soldiers with the exception of Spencer are returnees from past tournaments.

This will be David Hater's sixth trip to the championship, and he's hungry to capture the title himself after plateauing for three years at second place.

Now stationed at the U.S. Military Academy, West Point Department of English, Hater has been a member of the All-Army Chess Team that competed NATO Invitational Tournaments.

Jeffrey McAleer will travel from Germany to participate; he's been on the All-Army team for the past two years.

Other tournament returnees are Charles Costales (Fort Riley, Kan.), Michael Cerezo (Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.), and Chris Pitts (Fort Sam Houston, Texas).

The top six Soldiers will represent the United States at the 1999 NATO Invitational Chess Tournament Sep. 13-18 in Stetten, Germany.

The All-Army Chess Championship is an Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation activity conducted by the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

Tour seeks volunteers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Marshals are needed to man the 11th hole during the Buick Challenge next month.

Marshals are needed for the Larry Mize shoot out, Sept. 27; the AFLAC Pro-Am, Sept. 29, and for each day of the tournament, Sept. 30 to Oct. 3.

Volunteers will need $50.50 to pay for their golf shirts, rain jacket and hat. In return, they receive free access to the tournament and free reserved parking.

They will also get free admission to Callaway Gardens and their greens fee paid for following the tournament. Snacks and drinks are provided to the marshals during the tournament and they are invited to attend a volunteer appreciation party at the end of the tournament. Would be marshals should contact the public affairs office at 545-2211 to sign up to assist.

CISM: Team wins

"I had a really good day, not a perfect day by any means, but consistent throughout," he said. "It's the greatest thing I've done so far," said Gregory who was the 1997 modern pentathlon national champion and a 1996 U.S. Olympic team alternate.

Teammate Brett Weatherbie, a native of San Antonio, Texas, was still riding high from winning the silver medal in the modern pentathlon at the 1999 Pan American Games in Canada the previous month. Had his horse not balked in the riding event, the gold might have been his.

Weatherbie is ranked 28th of the top 50 modern pentathletes in the world and Senior, from North Fort Myers, Fla., is ranked 38th.

All three of the Soldiers are members of the Army World Class Athlete Program, a program sponsored by the Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation activity based at Fort Carson, Colo.

MWR offers chance to putt for cash

Harriet E. Rice
U.S. Army Community Services

If you could make a hole-in-one and win $20,000 dollars wouldn't that be the "Shot of the Century?" That's exactly what Army Morale, Welfare, and Recreation officials have in mind with a millennium golf event scheduled for September.

Fifty-two Army installations are participating in the Shot of the Century Hole-in-One contest sponsored by U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in conjunction with corporate partners First USA Bank and Budweiser.

"We wanted to start doing some pre-millennium programming that will get people excited about participating in local MWR events," said Bill Sport, golf program manager at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center. "This is the first of several millennium events we'll be running through the end of this year and into 2001 featuring golf, bowling, clubs and theme restaurants."

The Shot of the Century contest is open to U.S. I.D. cardholders who are authorized MWR patrons in accordance with AR 215-1. Golf professionals and installation golf course employees may not take part.

Up to 3,600 finalists are expected to vie for nearly one million dollars in cash. The lucky ones who make a hole-in-one win $20,000. And close does count in this sport; anyone who puts a shot within six inches of the edge of the cup wins a $1,000 consolation prize.

How far will golfers have to hit their shots? "There are two different distances," explained Sport. "For men, the shot is 165 yards. For women and juniors under the age of 15, the distance is 150 yards. Each contestant gets only one crack at it — no practice shots, no mulligans."

Detailed instructions and marketing packages have already been sent to participating installations, so golfers should be on the lookout for announcements about the contest. "We'd be very excited to present any Soldier with a check for $20,000 as a nice early holiday bonus," said Sport.

Fort Benning MWR officials said the first 70 people to sign up for the shot of the century on Sept. 25 will get their chance to put for the cash, according to Michelle Young, Fort Benning's MWR publicity assistant.

For more information on the chance to putt for cash on Fort Benning, call Young at 545-3328.

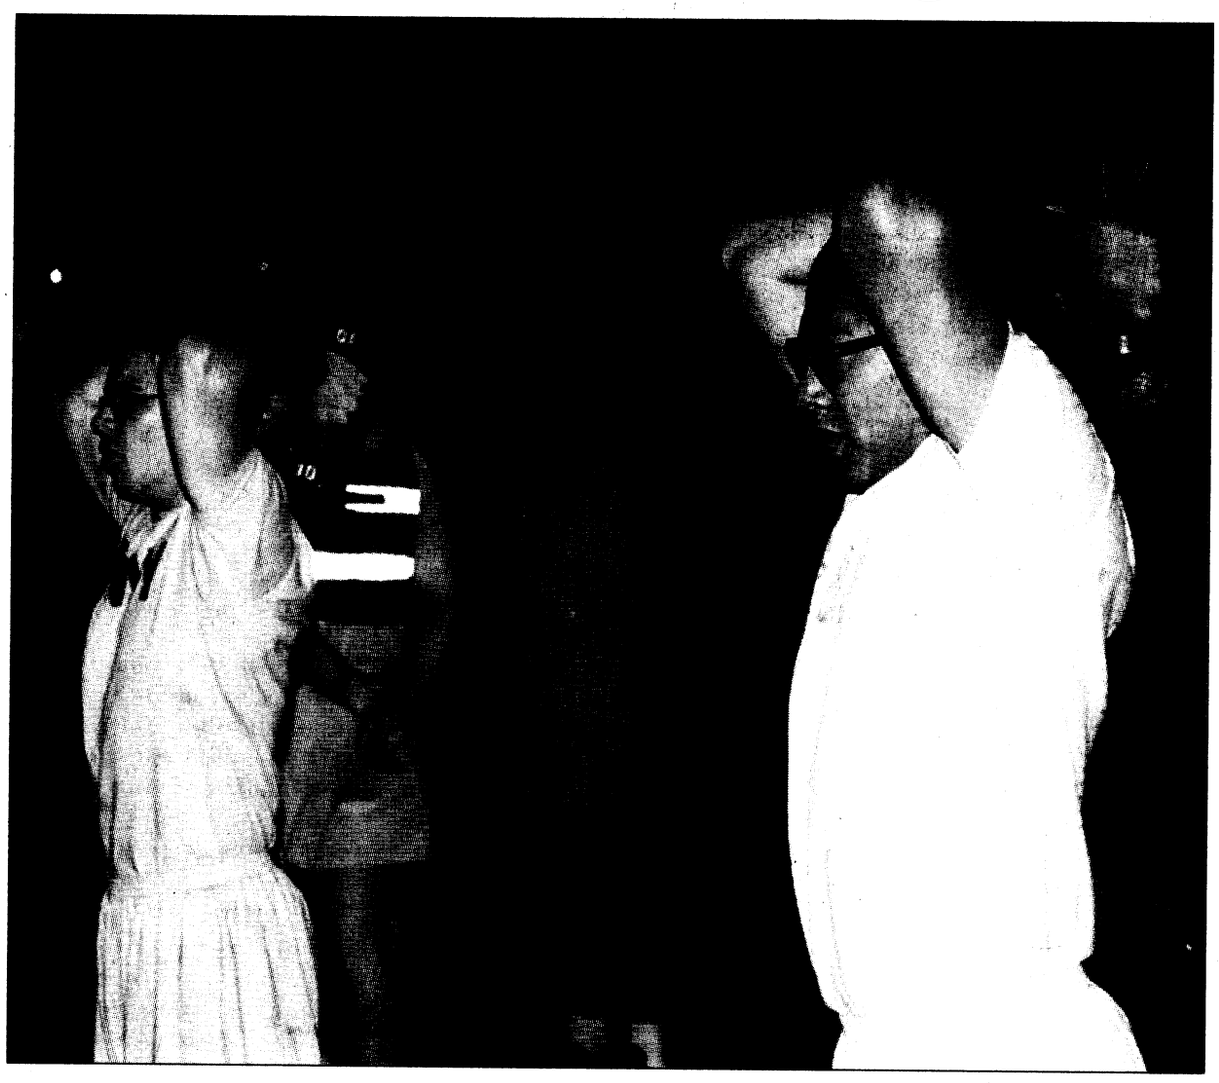
ITB Soldiers test new PT program

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

While pushups, sit-ups and a run typically dominate many units' physical training program, a platoon of Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers are proving that a step backward in time may help the Army take a great leap forward in the physical fitness arena.

With guidance from the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, trainees from 4th Platoon, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, abandoned the traditional PT regime and began testing a program which focuses on exercises and techniques performed during the early 20th Century and World War II era.



"The Army has built very effective battle focused physical training during previous wars," said Frank Palkoska, USAPFS chief of staff. "The challenge for tomorrow's Army is to apply those lessons learned to the future."

As part of the program, the drill sergeants were trained on variations of the pushup and sit-up, the use of equipment such as dumbbells, medicine balls and bamboo sticks and told to limit their running to three days a week.

Staff Sgt. Michael Tucker, one of 4th Platoon's drill sergeants and a 13-year Army veteran, said he was a little skeptical when the platoon first began the test, but said he quickly saw a difference in the trainees' performance.

"I have always been told that if you run every day, you're going to get better at running. And the same goes with pushups and sit-ups," Tucker said. "What we have found with this program is that we can run three times a

Post readies for change of command ceremony

Master Sgt. Tracy Tanner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Le Moyne

Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne will assume command of Fort Benning from Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst in a ceremony scheduled for 9 a.m. Sept. 14 on York Field.

Ernst, who has been in command since July 1996, is transferring to Fort Monroe, Va., to serve as special assistant to the Commanding General, Training and Doctrine Command, developing modernization strategies for light forces and Military Operations in Urban Terrain until his retirement next year.

Le Moyne comes to Fort Benning from Washington, D. C., where he was the Assistant Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel since September 1998.

Prior to that, he served in Europe as the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations, U.S. Army Europe and 7th Army, and as the Chief of Staff, USAREUR.

His previous assignments have taken him throughout the world, to include eight overseas tours. He has commanded Infantry companies in Vietnam and in Germany, where he later led an Infantry battalion. Additionally, he commanded the 1st Brigade, 24th Infantry Division in December 1990 while serving in Saudi Arabia.

In addition to Vietnam, he has combat tours in Panama and Iraq.

He received his commission in 1968 after graduating from the University of Florida. He holds a Master of Science degree in Public Administration from Shippenburg State College.

His military education includes the Armor Advanced Course, the Marine Corps Staff College, the Army War College, and the Royal College of Defense Studies in London, England.

Le Moyne's awards include the Combat Infantryman's Badge and the Purple Heart for wounds received in combat.

He and his wife, Marion, have one son, James.

In the case of inclement weather, the ceremony will be held at Marshall Auditorium.

New burial law affects post

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

A new law ensures all eligible retirees and veterans receive proper military funerals.

Congress gave the nod to the new law directing the Department of Defense to provide personnel to take part in ceremonial flag-folding, flag presentation to the next of kin and the playing of taps at military funerals starting Jan. 1.

The new policy, according to an Armed Forces Press release, comes after many installations have had to cut back on the ceremonial squad due to numerous manpower cut backs while facing an increase in the number of requests for the color squad. This service must be requested by the next of kin.

Sgt. 1st Class Irma Ray, noncommissioned officer in charge of Fort Benning's Casualty Assistance Branch, said that presently each of the 600 funeral detail requests Fort Benning receives annually requires nine personnel from various major support commands, a number she said has been supported by the commands and falls within the stipulations of the new guidelines.

"Presently, Fort Benning is capable of handling all of our 82- county service area," she said. "We have all the major support commands involved in the program and have had no problems filling the requests."

Ray did say the operation tempo of the present personnel tasked with the detail is high, and noted that the number of funeral requests has grown and is of concern to both herself and those tasked to handle he detail.

"We have seen a slight increase in taskings," Ray said. "We are getting into a time when we are starting to see the World War II veterans pass away, which makes for quite a few requests."

The issue of having enough personnel to fill the detail, Ray said, is one that has not yet posed a problem for personnel assigned here.

"We have every major support command on rotation to perform the funeral detail," she said. "If the personnel assigned become over-tasked or cannot handle their duties, the next assigned command will assume the remainder of their responsibilities,"

While Ray said Fort Benning was in compliance with legislations, she did say there has been no official action by the Department of Army or the Army Training and Doctrine Command to notify her office of any changes to the present policy dated May, '96.

Benning vet deploys

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Recently staff members from the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic suffered a loss when they watched their only veterinarian pack his bags and head to Southwest Asia for a six-month deployment.

Because of this unexpected departure, the clinic is currently unable to accommodate customers to the same extent as before, said Kim Malone, veterinarian technician. In fact, she said clinic services have been cut nearly three-fourths.

While the clinic will still provide such basic services as distemper and rabies vaccinations, heartworm and fecal checks and over-the-counter products, those services the veterinarian provides will be limited, she said. These include examinations, health certificates and certain lab work.

According to Col. John M. Mitchell, garrison commander, this cut in services should only last for an estimated three to four weeks.

Plans are currently in the works for contracting a civilian veterinarian to come to the clinic for a total of 16 hours a week. The solicitation is out and they are receiving bids from local vets. He said the hope is that within two to three weeks they will be able to focus in and identify one person.

Mitchell explained that currently the clinic is receiving help from the regional veterinarian command. He said one day a week a military veterinarian visits the clinic to provide vet services for personal pets. The vet also comes one day a month to provide services for Fort Benning's military working dogs, Mitchell said.

However, the clinic handles between 6,000 and 7,000

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller said he was concerned about vehicle registration decal placement on vehicles.

Directorate of Public Safety's response: Motor vehicles that are owned or operated by a person who resides, performs duty, employed or frequently visits on the post will be registered within 10 working days of arrival on post. At time of registration, POV owners are told to place the decal in the top center of the front windshield. Since the commencement of the MP checkpoint, DPS has confiscated 108 decals that were not affixed in accordance with instructions issued at time of registration.

Call: Caller said the mailman does not stop at his quarters unless he has something to deliver. The caller said he sometimes has bills or letters to go out and has to drop them off at one of the mail drops.

Directorate of Information Management's response: It was explained that the U.S. Postal Service has a nation-wide policy in effect that does not require mail carriers to pick-up mail unless they have mail to deliver. This is because of the mail carrier's required time schedule. However, if the mail box is located at curb-side, the carrier usually will pick up. If the box is located on the quarters, the mail carrier normally will not stop unless there is a delivery to be made. In this case, it is up to the mailer to deposit his outgoing mail at any U.S. Post Office drop box. The caller was also informed that if he wished to file a formal complaint, he may do so by completing a Customer Complaint Card at the Fort Benning Post Office Branch.

Call: McGraw Manor residents expressed concern about inadequate parking in the housing area and wonder why there is not assigned designated parking.

Directorate of Public Work's response: Designated parking in McGraw Manor has been evaluated and found not to be a solution for inadequate parking. DPW has targeted selected areas which have a significant deficiency in parking for the number of families living in the area. The first phase of the project will add 60 spaces and plans are to add 120 more spaces when funding is available.

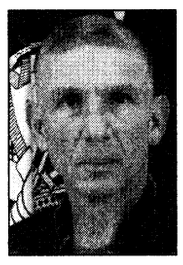
VARIOUS VOICES

Do you think the 545-BOSS line is a valuable tool for the community?

Sgt. Maj. Herbert Thompson, Infantry Training Brigade — "I think it is a good tool for family members and Soldiers who feel trapped and their chain of command isn't assisting them. However, it should never be used as a weapon against any leadership."

Carrie Martin, family member — "I used the BOSS line once a long time ago, but I never got a response. However, I still think it's a good thing to have around and hopefully it has improved.

Sgt. 1st Class David Rogers, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment— "I've never used it, but I'm sure it has to be of value to some Soldiers who cannot get answers from their chain of command."



Spc. Sabrina Stapleton, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think it's good because people are able to voice their concerns and have another place to turn if things aren't getting done where they should be."

1st Lt. Kreg Calvert, B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I've known plenty of people who have used it and they always get a response. It identifies any problems that may be going on in the unit so I think this is definitely a good thing to have.

Sgt. 1st Class Latrice Anderson-Brackens, A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "I've referred the line to others because it provides an opportunity to give them feedback for whatever question they may have. It's definitely a good tool as long as it's used right."

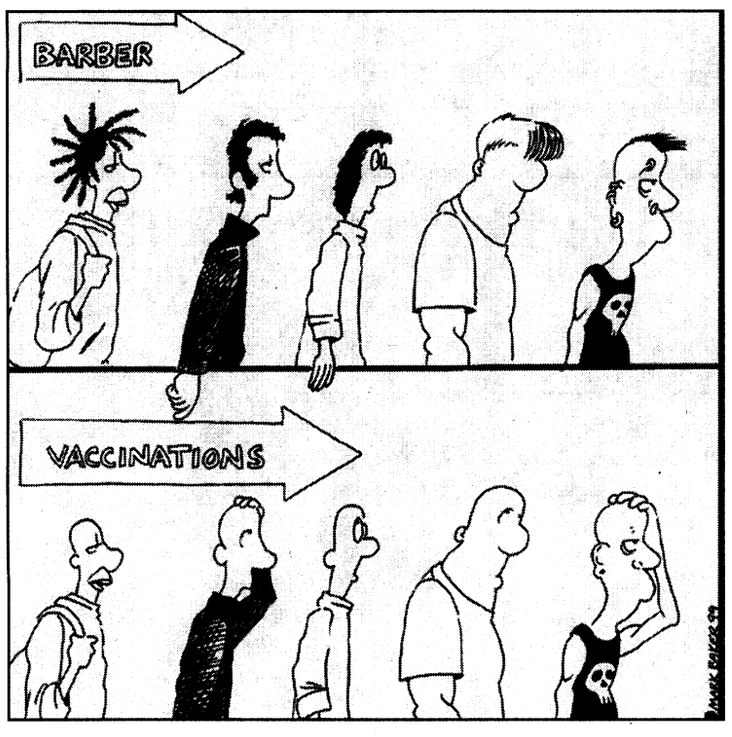
CG says goodbye, thanks to community

Linda and I will leave Fort Benning with the full range of human emotion.

For three years we have served with the best team of teams in our Army. Best by test.

Seven separate evaluations have proclaimed us best in Army, Department of Defense, Georgia and the entire Federal Government (President's Quality Award). The team of Soldiers, families, civilian workforce, distinguished alumni (our retirees) and supportive local community made us winners — you.

However, it is not the trophies or accolades that are most important; it is the daily teamwork and focus on taking care of mission, Soldiers, families and each other that is most important here. That is a tremendous source of pride.



Fort Benning has become the symbol for our Army of standards, competence and excellence. We embody the heart and soul of our Army, best represented by the Follow me Statue or "Iron Mike," the individual Soldier. So long as we continue to focus on the individual — training, discipline, skill, will and care — Fort Benning and our Army will be OK. The daily contact with the professionals who keep us focused has been a source of satisfaction.

What I will miss the most is the daily contact with the great team here, from PT to night ranges, marches, gatherings. The association with great Soldiers their families, volunteers, civilian employees, retirees and those who support us in Columbus and Phenix City will be truly missed by Linda and me.

Thanks Fort Benning for being who and what you are — a great team of great people, a source of pride and satisfaction. I was privileged indeed to have served with and among you.

Good Luck and God's blessing in the important work you do for our Army, our Nation and world peace. Hooah!

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding General

Bayonet wants community input

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

We get a lot of feedback from readers, and we appreciate your letters, story ideas and comments. We appreciate the positive comments, and we do our best to address the negative ones.

As Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, we are dedicated to giving you the most complete coverage possible. In order to do this, we rely on members of our audience to keep us informed about their units' or directorates' activities.

Requesting coverage of news events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include brigade-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road if desired. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

If you submit an announcement for post briefs or community briefs, check it when it appears in The Bayonet. Then, if you must resubmit it at a later date, submit it as it ran in the paper.

Story ideas, submission

If you believe you have a good story idea and want to write the story yourself, call us to see if we're interested. If you don't want to write the story, call us and we'll arrange a time for you to talk with a reporter.

We reserve the right to edit all stories for publication, and we cannot guarantee if or when submitted stories will appear in the paper. Stories that are submitted after the deadline will be published in the next week's paper.

Stringers

Stringers are people belonging to various units who write about and take photos of unit activities for The Bayonet.

Without stringers, our coverage of unit activities would be decreased. Unit commanders who would like to arrange for a stringer should call The Bayonet's command information officer at 545-2201.

Stringers need not be trained or have experience as journalists; The Bayonet will provide training and materials including film and photo processing.

Letters

The Bayonet welcomes letters to the editor and readers' responses to the paper's content. Letters may be typed, or handwritten, and must include name and telephone number.

Our policy is to staff letters to the appropriate directorate or activity and to run their response at the same time we run your letter.

Also, names may be withheld upon request; however, in order for your letter to be considered for publication, you must include your name and daytime telephone number. Letters received without the author's name and telephone number will not be published. We reserve the right to edit all letters.

Address

We are located in Infantry Hall, Room 606. Our mailing address is: The Bayonet, Infantry Hall, Room 601, Fort Benning, GA 31905. Our fax number is 682-0095.

Mark Byrd sprays herbicide on kudzu. The kudzu is endangering red-cockaded woodpeckers' habitat.

Kudzu endangers birds' habitat

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

You know you are in the South when there's sugar in the tea and kudzu growing along the highway, covering everything in sight like a blanket of green foliage. The fast-growing vine is so synonymous with Southern life, there are restaurants, bands and even a cartoon strip named for it.

Kudzu greets you when you pass through the Benning Drive entrance to post and all along Custer Road. While it has a certain charm, kudzu is hard to control and most foresters, farmers and land owners consider it a weed.

In 1994, an environmental mandate pitted the kudzu against the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker at Fort Benning.

The plant was taking over too many of the woodpecker's pine trees and endangering its habitat. It was time to break out the herbicide and the sprayers.

It's a long battle. Kudzu can grow 60 feet high in one growing season. Kudzu spraying takes place in August and September, and it takes about three to four annual treatments to get it under control. The kudzu will die back every year, and then return.

For the past four years, private contractors through the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and forestry technicians with the Natural Resource Management Branch have been trying to control the kudzu on post. Fort Gillem in Forest Park, Ga., and Dobbins Air Force Base in Marietta, Ga., also have kudzu programs.

"If you are persistent enough, we feel like we will accomplish our goal, which is control," Warner Spence, chief of the Forest Resources Section, Savannah district, Corps of Engineers, said. "Eradication is not necessarily the goal.

"Without treatment the kuzu will gradually encroach further and further into the forest and cover whatever is in the forest. It's just one of those weeds that will take over. It covers tall trees to the point that it blocks sunlight and blocks the growth of other plants."

The jeopardy biological opinion, issued by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, required a survey of all the kudzu on post. There are 647 patches, a total of 1,282 acres, of the plant on Fort Benning, according to Mark Byrd, forestry technician with the Natural Resource Management Branch.

"It (the mandate) called for the reasonable eradication of the kudzu affecting the red-cockaded woodpecker's habitat," Bob Larimore, acting chief of the branch, said.

The kudzu also has potential impact on other endangered species, such as the plant relict trillium.

Private contractors hired by the Corps of Engineers have used broadcast spraying for the past three years, and this year some in-house spraying of patches has been handled by the post's natural resource branch.

"It will kill it, but you have to treat it for at least three growing seasons," Byrd said.

According to Spence, a three-year treatment can cost $250 to $500 an acre to gain control.

"If you surrender it to kudzu, you have to practically buy the land back. You have to reclaim it."

Retired general loses star

Army News Service

Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera ordered Wednesday that retired Maj. Gen. David Hale be reduced to the rank of brigadier general on the Army's retired list.

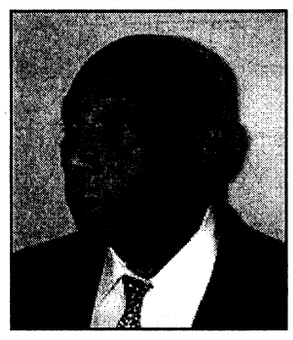
Caldera took this action after receiving the unanimous recommendation of an Army grade determination review board. The board, consisting of three senior general officers, was directed by Caldera to recommend to him the highest grade at which Hale had served satisfactorily.

Hale was court-martialed in March of this year at Fort Lewis, Wash. He pled guilty to seven counts of conduct unbecoming an officer and one count of making a false official statement with intent to deceive, the equivalent of a felony conviction. As a result, in July, Hale was reprimanded, ordered to forfeit $12,000 in retirement pay and fined $10,000.

Caldera's decision will result in a permanent reduction in Hale's monthly retirement pay, and officials said this will be retroactive to March 1, 1998, the effective date of his retirement.

Hale retired last year after serving a short stint as deputy inspector general of the Army. Charges were brought against Hale following an investigation into allegations that he had a series of improper relationships with the wives of subordinates during assignments in Turkey, Hawaii and Washington, D.C.

Army officials explained that a reduction in grade is not an authorized punishment for an officer at a court-martial. Federal law states that officers are to be retired at the highest grade in which they served satisfactorily, and officials said this determination is made by the Secretary of the Army. The process of determining the last grade in which Hale served satisfactorily is an administrative action under Army personnel regulations, officials said, and is separate from the courts-martial.



A grade determination review board, composed of at least three senior officers, reviews the soldier's service records and any other evidence relevant to the grade determination. The individual considered does not appear before the board, but is afforded the opportunity to review all matters that will be considered by the board and may submit materials for the board's consideration.

In Hale's case, the board considered his service records, his submission to the board and the record of trial in his courts-martial. There was no evidence available to the Army that Hale engaged in misconduct in a rank lower than major general.

As a result of the Secretary of the Army's decision, retired Brig. Gen. Hale stands to lose approximately half a million dollars over the course of a normal continued life expectancy of 25 years. This amount is based on the difference between a major general and brigadier general's retirement pay, his life expectancy and annual cost of living increases over his life expectancy.

This was not the first time the Army has convened a grade determination review board to consider a reduction in rank for a general officer. An Army grade determination review board met in 1998 to consider the case of another general officer. In that case, the acting secretary of the Army decided to permit the officer to retire in the grade in which he was serving at the time of his retirement.

Retired officer re-enters reserves

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

After spending three years in the Army and 25 years in the Army Reserves, retired Lt. Col. Charles R. Herdener reached his mandatory retirement date. But retirement was premature for Herdener who embarked on a mission to re-enter the Army any way he could.

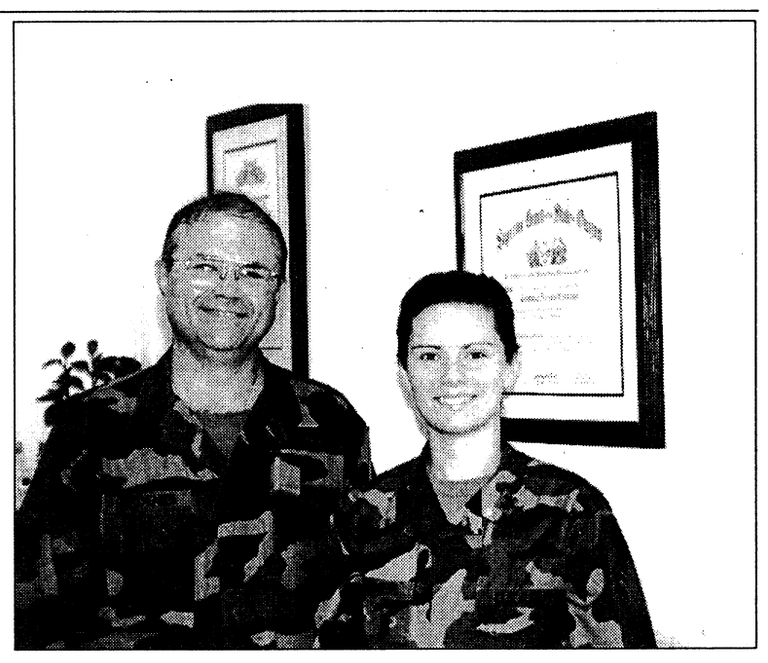
Herdener, a 1968 Reserve Officer Training Corps commissioned officer, began searching for a way to stay in the military long before he reached his retirement date because he enjoyed all aspects of his military experience.

"I am a patriot, I like the uniform and everything that goes with it," said Herdener, now a personnel affairs warrant officer. "I had to fill out the same paperwork that I did when I entered ROTC in 1964 but it was all worth it now that I am back in."

Although Herdener's civilian career as an environmental law specialist offers challenge, his 25 years in the reserves with the 364th Civil Affairs Brigade was an adventure that only the Army could provide.

"While participating in missions like Warfighter and Ocean Venture, I had the opportunity to travel throughout the world, meet new people and work in very interesting jobs," Herdener said. "All of the missions were accompanied by great experiences that would not have been possible if I had not been in the Army."

"I enjoy the change of pace and I am more energized when I return to my job after spending the weekend training — it is a symbiotic relationship because the things I learn in both worlds, Army and civilian, help each other."



Capt. Tamara Herdener, a second-generation lawyer and trial counsel for the Infantry Training Brigade said the military is like a hobby to her dad.

"When he first got out of the military our entire family realized that he was not happy without his connection to the Army."

Tamara said her dad always supported her decision to enter the Army.

"My dad liked the adventure, the challenge and especially the camaraderie of the military. I enjoy the Army for the exact same reasons," she said.

"The choice to come back in was a good one for my father," Tamara said. "I respect him for his dedication to the Army and believe the Army is lucky to have someone who is so dedicated."

Fort Rucker NCO walks 1,500 miles to raise money for monument

Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Buffett
TRADOC News Service

Six states; 144 cities, villages and military installations; more than 1,500 miles.

That's the challenge Command Sgt. Maj. Ronald W. Bedford recently took on. The 45-year-old Knoxville, Tenn., native walked out of Mobile, Ala., on Aug. 29 and began his journey to Washington, D.C.

The hike is expected to take 71 days. All along his route, Bedford hopes to meet and greet thousands of World War II-era Americans.

Bedford will cross onto Fort Benning Saturday on his way to the nation's capital.

"This is all about honoring heroes," said Bedford, who serves as the senior enlisted leader at Fort Rucker, Ala. "I, along with my sponsor, the Noncommissioned Officer's Association, want to focus attention on those men and women who served in (World War II) and those families who rationed food or went to the factories back here at home to support the war effort."

At the same time, Bedford and the NCOA intend to raise awareness of the effort to build a World War II Memorial in the national mall of Washington, D.C. Just over half of the $100 million needed to pay for the project has been raised. NCOA, is counting on the walk to draw additional donations from individuals, civic organizations and corporate America.

Senator Bob Dole, chairman of the World War II Memorial Committee, applauded the efforts of Bedford and NCOA. "In World War II, it was NCOs who set the example and provided the frontline leadership for our Soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen that resulted in victory after victory," Dole said.

"I am very proud to see Command Sergeant Major Bedford and the members of the NCOA follow in the footsteps of their World War II predecessors," Dole said. "They are once again setting an example by taking a leadership role in another important campaign — the building of a lasting tribute in our nation's capital to America's great World War II generation."

Dole said Bedford will be "carrying the gratitude and respect" of all World War II veterans during his walk. "While we are marching with you in spirit, it is my hope the honor of your mission will lighten your steps when the going gets tough or the days get long on your difficult journey. I wish you God's speed every step of the way."

Steven Spielberg, Tom Hanks and James E. Bedford, the command sergeant major's dad, all played a part in the conception of the NCOA World War II Memorial Honor Walk.

"It all started with the movie Saving Private Ryan," Bedford said. "So much was being said about the power of that film, so, we decided to line up a special showing for troops and their families here at Rucker."

A week later, Bedford saw a television special in which Hanks, star of the Private Ryan epic, made mention of the need for a World War II Memorial and the ongoing efforts to have one built. Bedford, who had assumed a monument already existed, was spurred into action.

"I knew I had to do something," Bedford said. "It just didn't set right with me that these great Americans were not being honored by some sort of memorial."

Bedford's dad was among those who served during World War II. Fortunately, he never saw combat, according to his son. Hostilities ended while his father was still at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Yet, the death toll of World War II vets — as many as 1,000 a day — is a harsh reality all Americans must face, Bedford said. He's also aware his father will, one day, be among those who pass on, and he said he's not going to let that happen before a monument is built in his honor.

"How many sons can say, 'I gave my dad a memorial?'" Bedford posed. "To me it would be the greatest gift I could give to a man I love and respect with all my heart."

To prepare, Bedford began logging 10-miles a day on foot. The ex-airborne Infantrymen said he's no stranger to hoofing it, and he knows the challenge will be as much mental as it is physical.

"I realize there's going to be blisters, bruises, cramped legs and spots where the skin is rubbed raw," Bedford said. "But I think I can handle all of those. We'll fix it the best we can and drive on."

Bedford will be accompanied by medical support, safety vehicles and a small staff of NCOA supporters the entire journey.

The route Bedford has chosen weaves from Mobile, Ala., through the Florida Panhandle and on up through Alabama, Georgia, South and North Carolina and Virginia.

"I think it's significant that a Soldier is doing this," Bedford said. "For one thing, it shows what the military is all about — sacrifice, personal courage, honoring a nation. And it's proof of what the military can do for young men and women — I mean here I am 26 years later and my body and mind are still sharp enough to tackle this journey."

Throughout the walk, Bedford said he fully intends to boast about the merits of military service. And he's going to offer the following reminder: "All Americans have military in their blood."

"At some point in the past, all of us had a family member or relative who served," Bedford said. "Patriotism ... service to our country ... it's part of our heritage. I think this walk will serve as a reminder of that."

PT: Program affects Soldiers' performance

week, our injuries drop down to zero and we run two to three minutes faster than privates who run five times a week."

In addition, Tucker said the platoon's overall APFT scores are 40 to 50 points higher than their OSUT counterparts.

"There is no doubt in my mind that this is a better program by far," said Tucker, who added that the Soldiers are aiming for a 300-point platoon average when they take their final record APFT Sept. 21. "These privates are definitely capable of it, and in my mind this would be military history."

Pvt. Kyle Wachtendorf, one of the 55 trainees testing the program, said the variety of activities has helped him stay motivated.

> "There is no doubt in my mind that this is a better program by far."
> — Staff Sgt. Michael Tucker
> Drill sergeant, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

"It was different than what other platoons were doing, but I liked it because it kept you from getting bored with the same old routine," he said.

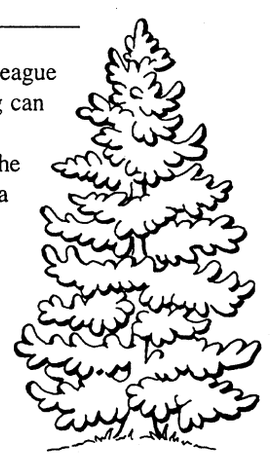
Not only have the drill sergeants seen improvement in the trainees' APFT scores, but during their daily tasks as well.

"We can also see a difference in the way these privates take on everyday tasks like the confidence course and bayonet assault course," Tucker said. "These privates are blowing everyone else out of the water in every aspect."

According to Lt. Col. William Rieger, USAPFS commandant, the performance on these tasks is what really makes a difference.

"The APFT is only an assessment," he said. "What it really comes down to is whether Soldiers are capable of performing their combat-related tasks and meeting mission requirements. Improving mission performance through fitness is the key."

While the test platoon will go on to graduate in two weeks, Tucker said he plans on continuing the training with future cycles.



"I would really like to dig deeper into the exercises and take the training to the next level."

USAPFS also plans to continue testing the program on additional Fort Benning units.

Post home to big tree

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Phenix City has its U.S. National Little League Champions. Not to be outdone, Fort Benning can now claim a national winner of its own.

This champ — the largest spruce pine in the country — measures 149 feet tall and sports a circumference of 10 feet 5 inches. Steve Kerlin and Tommy Hutcherson, forestry technicians with the Natural Resources Management Branch, discovered the pine in the woods behind McBride Elementary School on Custer Road.

"I had heard about the tree years ago," Hutcherson said. "But I had not seen it."

During routine inventory operations recently the men located the giant and measured its circumference and height. They submitted the tree to the Georgia Champion Tree Program, coordinated by the Georgia Forestry Commission, and a representative from the state program certified their measurements.

The rest is tree history. Georgia's program is recognized by American Forests, an organization that maintains the National Register of Big Trees.

"The champion tree program is designed to discover, recognize and try to preserve the champions of each species," said Bob Larimore, acting chief for the Natural Resource Branch.

"The trees are graded according to a mathematical formula considering trunk diameter at breast height (4 1/2 feet above ground), total tree height, and spread of the crown."

All champions deserve a trophy, and a permanent marker will be placed at the base of the pine.

Fort Benning also owns three state champions. The post has the largest Arkansas oak, mimosa and blackjack oak in the state.

Vet: Post pets waiting for replacement doc animals, which Malone said makes for a tight schedule. For the time being customers will have to call a few weeks in advance for an appointment. She said this, coupled with the reduction in hours, has made for some unhappy customers. But, the staff hopes that people will be patient and understand they are doing everything they can to accommodate them.

Mitchell said he is confident everyone will be well cared for. In fact, he said once the new plan takes affect, customers should see an increase in care.

Right now, he said all together there is five days a month of military vet care and when that is coupled with the two eight hour days a week of civilian vet care, it will be more coverage devoted soley to privately owned pets.

"Once we get this rolling it is actually going to be better coverage hours devoted to pets than we had before."

For the time being, Mitchell said customers are asked to bear with them until the new coverage gets sorted out.

"We know its important to them and we intend to support it ... to meet their needs at the level they had been getting before," Mitchell said. "And I believe that with this new plan, they are going to see an improvement in the total number of hours of care they receive."

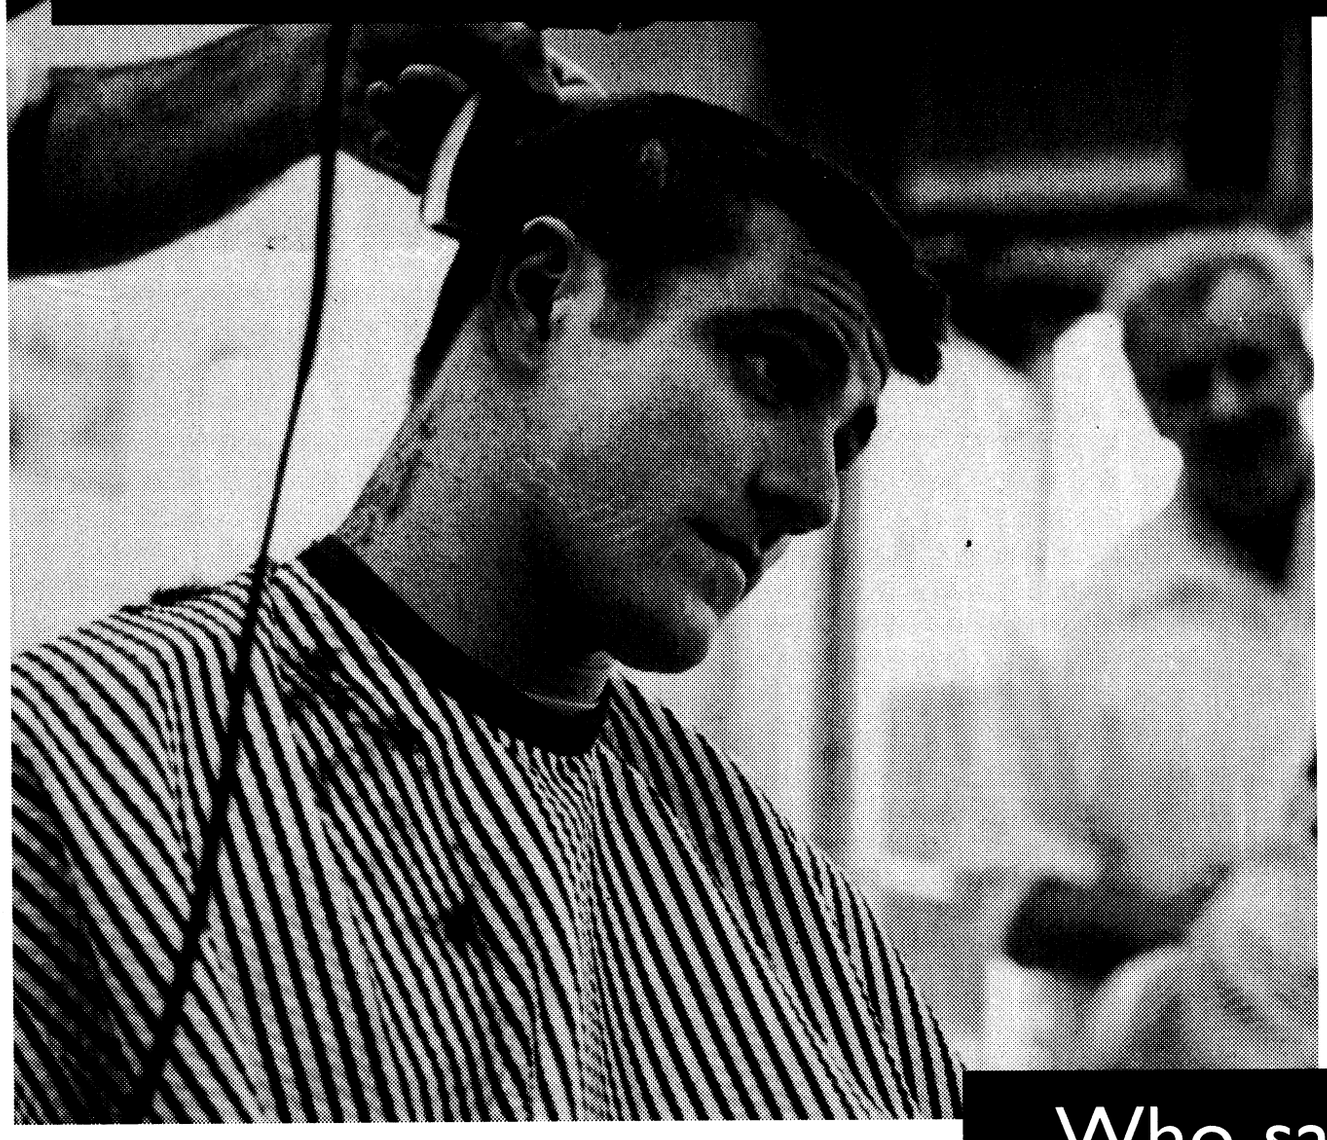
DoD aims for more incentives

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

DoD is working with Congress to create three new special pays and to beef up others, DoD officials said.

The services use special pays and incentives to retain members in critical military specialties. Special pays are even older than the Republic — the first was a Continental Army enlistment bonus offered in 1776. It was an extra $6 per month.

If Congress agrees, DoD will offer three new special pays in fiscal 2000: career enlisted flier incentive pay, special warfare officer pay and surface warfare officer pay. The whole package is a part of the fiscal 2000 Defense Authorization Bill.



The career enlisted flier incentive pay is aimed at retention in all the services. Those who qualify would receive the pay as long as their operational flying duty requirements are met. The proposed pay ceiling is $400 per month. Enlisted fliers currently qualify for hazardous duty incentive pay and receive $150 to $240 a month.

Special warfare officers special pay would be limited to Navy SEALs. Officers would receive up to $80,000 if they stay as Navy SEALs through their 14th year of commissioned service.

The special pay for surface warfare officers if accepted would allow lump-sum bonuses of up to $50,000 to officers who agree to complete their full tours of duty.

One proposed change in current special pays is an increase in the selective re-enlistment bonus. The ceiling would rise to $60,000 from the current $45,000. Few service members receive the maximum, DoD officials said, but the Navy, seeking to retain nuclear-trained sailors, came close to the $45,000 ceiling. Another change would let DoD pay service members their selective re-enlistment bonuses after 17 months of service rather than the current 21 months.

Rangers head to Africa for live-fire exercise

Spc. Jon Creese
U.S. Army Special Operations Command

SHOSHON, Botswana — It is just before noon, and the high sun beats down from a clear blue sky upon U.S. Army Rangers. Milling around in a field of sand, stone, and unyielding thorn bushes and bramble, right outside the Kalahari Desert here, they prepare for a live-fire exercise.

Machine guns, ammunition and rucksacks litter the objective rally point as Rangers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, camouflage their faces and hands.

"Six minutes and we're moving out," cried 1st Lt. Mike Cook, 1st Platoon leader.

Rucksacks are slung onto shoulders and weapons are loaded. The Rangers gather by squads and begin a tactical move toward the objective, approximately 500 meters away.

Shortly after, the support-fire element in the rear breaks off to the right and heads for a hilltop overlooking the objective from a distance of 350 meters.

No path leads there, so the Rangers make their own — low crawling through the rugged country and over jagged rocks when they near the top of the hill in site of the objective.

The support-fire element is now in place and anxiously awaits the command to fire.

Meanwhile, the main element prepares to break through the wood-line and take refuge in a trench, one and a half meters deep, only a few yards from the objective — two "occupied" buildings with a bunker between them.

"Ready ... five ... four ... three ... two..." squad leader, Staff Sgt. Glen Smith, barely gets "one" out before the simultaneous explosion of deafening machine gun fire and the thundering blast of a modified AT4 anti-tank weapon fill the air. The support-fire element sends a viscous round of lead into and around the objective as the main element charges the first building from the trench.

This is nothing new to these Rangers.

"We try to send lead up the field ever where we go," said Staff Sgt. David Tally, squad leader and sniper section sergeant. "We usually conduct one live-fire exercise every month. I feel more trained up now than ever."

Though the majority of this unit's live-fire exercises take place on Fort Benning, this particular one Aug. 22 was in support of Flintlock IIB. A 45-day joint chiefs of staff exercise in Botswana led by 3rd Battalion, 3rd Special Forces Group (Airborne). Flintlock IIB focused on SF teams training Botswanan troops, but also included an invitation for the Rangers to show their strength.

Rangers have a unique way of planning these exercises, said Staff Sgt. Mike Creamer, squad leader and observer/controller for the support-fire element.

"The difference with the Rangers in this type of exercise is the platoon leader will sit with the platoon sergeant and squad leaders to figure out how to take an objective. Once you prove yourself as a competent leader, the officer is going to listen to you," he said. "There is a very good working relationship between officers and enlisted Soldiers in Ranger units."

Ranger units also put newer, younger privates in leadership roles during training to demonstrate why it is important to "follow orders and listen," Creamer said.

Cpl. Shadrack Kganteepe, a Botswana Defense Force Soldier who observed the exercise was impressed.

"This is the first time I have seen such an exercise. I really enjoyed it," he said "We train very differently here."

The exercise may have looked flawless, but with some of the less experienced, younger Rangers, mistakes were made.

"I was moving too fast and made some mental errors," said Pfc. Kevin Jones, grenadier. Jones had only been with the unit for two weeks, and this was the first live-fire exercise he has participated in.

But for the most part, as the Rangers stormed across the 300-by 350-meter fenced-in objective area to take the second building, there was little doubt that, if this was real, those inside would have no choice but to die or surrender.

One Ranger commented on the possible reality.

"Going to war isn't something I wish for, but if my buddies are going I want to be with them," said Sgt. Jared Van Aalst, a team leader who has been with the unit for more than three years. "You always want to see what you can really do after so much training."

Peanut shells save Army more than $8,000

Maj. Hugh C. Mueller
3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry

A U.S. Army Reserve unit from Wisconsin recently saved a Fort Benning unit more than $8,000 with ingenuity.

The physical training field of the newly activated 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry, Basic Combat Training Brigade, needed to be covered because approximately 3/4 of the field was mud and wasn't useable for PT.

The reserve unit, 2nd Battalion, 339th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 84th Division (Institutional Training), traveled to Fort Benning to train for its wartime mission, which is to displace the command group and staff of an Initial Entry Training unit.

After an initial coordination meeting between the cadre of the two units, Maj. Jay Costello, executive officer of the 2nd Battalion, 339th Infantry, assigned specific tasks to each of the staff sections. The primary task for the battalion supply officer was to find a source for the sawdust to cover the PT field.

"This was no small task," Costello said.

The staff of the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry, had been trying to acquire sawdust since the unit's activation April 7, said Capt. Ed Santiago, BCTB supply officer. In the past, Fort Benning units had been able to acquire sawdust very inexpensively, or even for free, from small sawmills in the local area. However, some of these sources had since gone out of business, and others had no sawdust to offer.

The other solution was to purchase the sawdust through the Directorate of Public Works, which has an official source. Based on the fact that it requires 650 cubic yards of sawdust to cover a PT field, and that the sawdust costs $12.95 a cubic yard, this would have cost the unit $8,417.50. "This option was cost prohibitive," Santiago said.

With that background, Capt. Stuart Graham, logistics officer for the 2nd Bn., 339th Inf., went to work. He called every sawmill in the area and confirmed the fact that there was no sawdust available. He then called DPW and found out that the cost of sawdust through that organization was still $12.95 per cubic yard. However, during the same phone call, a DPW representative recommended that Graham contact Tom's Foods of Columbus and ask them if they had any peanut shells available. The DPW representative said that the shells would work just as well as sawdust, and that he believed Tom's Foods gave them away for free.

A bit skeptical, Graham contacted Tom's Foods. "I wasn't sure if this guy was pulling my leg but when I called — sure enough, they said that they gave away peanut shells, and that they just happened to have truckloads of them available at the time," Graham said. The only problem would be transporting the shells from downtown Columbus to Sand Hill.

Graham got in touch with Don Day of Day's Trucking Company of Smiths, Ala., and arranged for transporting the peanut shells the same day. During the next three days, the trucking company delivered, at a nominal cost, four tractor trailer loads of peanut shells to the PT field. The total delivery ended up being approximately 900 cubic yards, far more than the minimum of 650 cubic yards of sawdust required.

While Graham was working the delivery of the peanut shells, Maj. Michael Marx, the operations officer of the 2nd Bn., 339th Inf., was also busy. He spent the day contacting personnel in the medical field to find out if the peanut shells could possibly have any detrimental effects on those Soldiers who are allergic to peanuts. He was assured that the risk is minimal.

So, in a few short days, the reserve staff solved a problem which the 3rd Bn., 47th Inf., had been working on for months. This not only showcased the interoperability of the Reserve and Active Component units, but also proved that problems can often be solved simply by looking at them from different angles, said Lt. Col. Don Salo, deputy commander of BCTB.

Lt. Col. Edward B. Daly, commander of the 3rd Bn., 47th Inf., said, the crowning achievement goes to Graham. "Not only did he provide us with an upgraded and safer PT field, but he also saved the U.S. government more than $8,000."

Army Career and Alumni Program

Army Career and Alumni Program services enhance quality of life for separating Soldiers and their families.

The U.S Congress has enacted legislation during the past 10 years which mandated the establishment of transition assistance programs that Soldiers and families enjoy today.

ACAP is an Army program designed to be a focal point for information, briefings, workshops and referrals to all available transition services, said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services Manager.

Services such as pre-separation briefings, workshops, counseling, civilian job search assistance, verification of MOS skills, military education and training and relocation information were not specifically mandated before 1990. Before ACAP, Soldiers and their families were pretty much on their own and services varied from installation to installation depending upon available resources. In 1997, the Army created an ACAP Center at Fort Benning with separation services available for retiring, separating Soldiers, DA Civilians, and their families. To get maximum benefit from these transition and relocation services a Soldier should try to start preparing as early as 180 days from ETS, and Congress has established 90 days out as the minimum acceptable.

Preparation of a highly personalized Individual Transition Plan is key to a successful career and location change. Transition services continue to be available for 90 days after separation. The ACAP process begins with attendance (spouses encouraged to attend) at the three day Preseparation Benefits Briefing and Workshops currently being held weekly in one of the Infantry Hall classrooms. The agenda includes completion of the preseparation checklist and overview of all available benefits, detailed service provider briefings, and job assistance workshops.

Beginning ACAP early gives separating personnel the best chance for a positive transition experience. See your servicing PAC to schedule your ACAP briefings and workshops.

For information about the ACAP process, call the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Recruiters take to streets with new van

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Army recruiting marketers don't stand still in efforts to sign up new soldiers — they often go mobile.

The two U.S. Army Recruiting Support Battalion vehicles are a tractor-hauled "Adventure Van" and a recruiter marketing support minivan.

"We heard the Army Chief of Staff (Gen. Eric K. Shinseki) wanted to take a look at our equipment," said Sgt. 1st Class Charles Bradshaw.

The 48-foot-long "Adventure Van," pulled by a diesel-powered truck, is chock-full of digitized Army career information access systems and other interactive displays including simulators for the M-16 rifle, M1A2 Abrams tank and Cobra helicopter, said Detroit native Sgt. 1st Class John Thompsett.

Thompsett is partnered with Sgt. 1st Class Shawn Davis on their Adventure Van cross-country jaunts.

"Our mission is to travel throughout the United States to support local recruiters in their communities to make more awareness of the Army," said Thompsett. "When people see the Adventure Van, they wonder 'Hey, what is in that vehicle?'

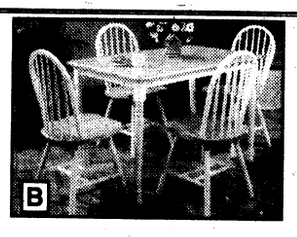
"We say 'Come on inside and we'll show you what the Army has.' We've had these (type of) vans in the (recruiting fleet) for 25 years now."

"They are very effective. We set them up for state fairs, high schools, air shows and colleges. People come in to get some hands-on experience ... the vans really generate interest for the Army," he said.

Local recruiters, said Thompsett, are on-hand to answer specific questions from potential enlistees.

"We travel around the country and do academic and Army-related shows at local high schools and colleges. Basically, the Adventure Van gives young people some hands-on experience with Army equipment (and) they can click on touch-screens to request additional information," said Davis.

Navy family members Brandon Hunter, 10, and his 12-year-old brother Barrett spent some "stick time" in an Army attack helicopter simulator inside the Adventure Van. As a result of their experience, both youngsters said they'd consider abandoning ship and going Army.



"This is really awesome because it gives you a chance to get in on the action, and even if you don't want to join the military — it gives you idea of what it could be like," said Barrett. "I'm the gunner ... and my brother is the navigator. Right now, he is trying to find one of the targets, although I don't think he knows how to use the radar properly."

Thompsett said his Adventure Van left Fort Knox Aug. 19. He and Davis will be on the road until mid-December, stopping off at Syracuse, N.Y., Springfield, Mass., New York City and Indianapolis.

"I believe the Adventure Van is a very effective marketing tool for the Army," said Thompsett, who noted that the Recruiting Battalion also employs special cinema vans for video presentations on Army history and recruiting initiatives.

"If somebody didn't see us pulling into town, a lot of people probably wouldn't approach the recruiter," he said.

Wilson Elementary receives face-lift

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

"No whining" hangs on the principal's door and became the motto last December when the entire staff, teachers and student body packed up and headed out of the school into portable trailers.

The trailers are home to Wilson Elementary while the school undergoes extensive renovations that will update and modernize the facility.

Donna Ford, facilities manager and safety officer, said that the renovations will take an entire year to complete but were absolutely needed, and came at an opportune time. Renovations include the reconfiguring of the kitchen area that is no longer in use because of the satellite lunch program, a new electrical system and completion of the Local Area Network Project.

"Everyone at Fort Benning is excited about receiving funds that will provide a better teaching and educational environment," Ford said.

Other renovations and upgrades included the replacement of the heating and air conditioning system along with carpet, tile, doors and windows. New additions were added creating more space for offices and classrooms.

"We have taken advantage of every inch of space," said Phyllis L. Parker, principal at Wilson.

According to Parker, when the school received a new roof it created a large overhang in the back of the building that will be closed in during the reconstruction and turned into two offices. The educational and supply technicians were in a classroom last year and the redesign and new additions freed up classroom space so everyone will have a place under one roof.

Parker said that the renovation project is impressive but the most impressive aspect of the ongoing adventure was the unbelievably smooth transition from the school to the trailers last December.

"The children adjusted so well you would not have known we moved to portables, and the teachers never missed a beat," she said. "Everything required change — from assemblies to field day. Our key to success is our ability to keep a great attitude while remaining flexible at all times."

Michele E. Hanson

Students exit from portable trailers that serve as temporary classrooms until school renovations are completed.

Although most of the inconveniences go unnoticed to visitors, the biggest inconvenience is inclement weather as the children move from trailer to trailer. Rainy days are not a favorite time. The teachers and students bring umbrellas and rain jackets but still get wet because there is no way around it.

"There are so many things we have put on hold, the most important aspect is time spent with parents like at our annual technology night usually held in the fall — getting back to events like that is what I am really excited about," Parker said.

The renovation completion deadline is Dec. 31 and Wilson's grand reopening is scheduled for Jan. 9.

"We are planning a big open house and a big celebration when we move back into the school. It will be a well deserved celebration," Parker added.

Children need to know about dangers of dogs

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

When "little Tommy" throws on his backpack and heads out the door on the way to school he most likely knows what he needs to be careful of.

He probably knows when it's safe to cross the street and when it's not. And he probably even knows why he should never talk to strangers. But there is one danger "little Tommy" may not be aware of. What's worse is this danger is almost always irresistible to young children — dogs.

There is no doubt that a cute and fuzzy dog wandering aimlessly about is hard for almost anyone to resist, even adults. However, it doesn't matter how cute or friendly a dog seems, there is always that potential for disaster when dealing with something unfamiliar.

In fact, just this year alone on Fort Benning there were more than 100 reported dog bites, said Spc. Eric Zwicker, veterinarian technician with the Fort Benning Veterinary Services. The majority of which he said happened to children.

That's why parents need to sit down and talk with their kids about the dangers of approaching a strange dog, Zwicker said.

He stressed that the most important thing for parents to tell their children is always stay away from any animal they do not know.

"When a child sees an animal running around, usually their first reaction is to go up and pet it," Zwicker said. "That's when the bites happen. The best thing is just to stay away and notify someone to call the MPs or animal control."

Of course, Zwicker explained it's not just unfamiliar animals that are dangerous. People also need to be aware of neighborhood pets. He said if an owner is not around and hasn't said it is OK to touch their animal, it is best left alone. Children need to know that dogs on chains or behind fences aren't safe to pet.

Zwicker mentioned there are a few breeds of dogs that are known for more aggressive behavior. He said many reported bites come from chows, rottweilers and pit bulls. Even some small dogs such as cocker spaniels tend to be biters.

Zwicker went on to say that although most of the reported bites on post were mild there have been a few extreme incidents of Rottweilers mauling residents.

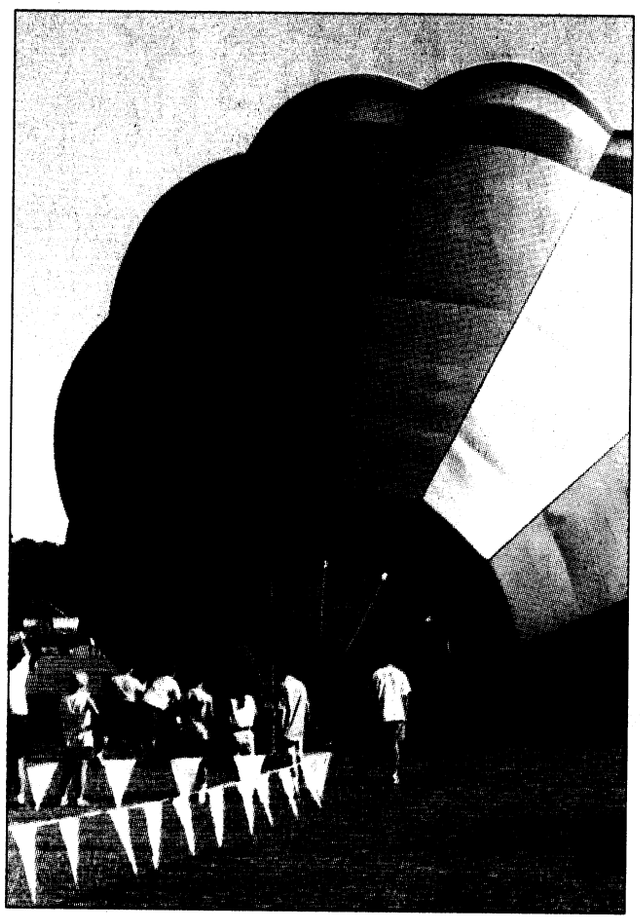
That's why people who know they have an aggressive dog need to take appropriate action to protect their family, friends and neighbors. He said aggressive dogs are best kept behind a fence, but if not, owners should ensure the dog's chains are secure and that warning signs are posted.

"Anyone with an aggressive animal needs to keep control of it. If they can't train it, or have someone else train it to break the aggressiveness, they need to take the right steps to keep it from attacking other people."

According to Col. John M. Mitchell, garrison commander, there are a number of repercussions people face if they do not take action.

Mitchell explained that residents can be forced to get rid of the dog, they may lose their pet privileges or in the most extreme circumstances they can be required to move off post.

He added that residents can also be forced to build a fence if it is felt necessary. If they do not comply, they can also face consequences.



"I'm not here to threaten, that's not what I do," Mitchell said. "But our office is directly concerned with providing a safe and secure environment for people on post. That is one of our chief concerns."

"As far as I'm concerned one serious dog bite is one too many for me. When you think what a Rottweiler, German Shepherd, Doberman or any of these large breed dogs who are bred for aggressiveness can do ... it takes away the whole argument of the supposed two bite rule."

All in all it comes down to being smart and safe about dogs and educating children about the right thing to do, Zwicker said.

Tips for protecting yourself from attack

- The best way to avoid any kind of confrontation with a dog is to stay away from ones you do not know. Always call the MPs or animal control if you see a dog running around without an owner.
- If you are confronted with an aggressive dog, stay calm.
- Don't run. Running triggers an instinct in the dog to run after you.
- Talk softly and calmly to the dog.
- Never make direct eye contact but keep your eyes on the dog.
- Try to remove yourself from the dogs space by backing slowly away.
- If you are chased by an aggressive dog while on bike, get off the bike and put it between you and the dog and walk slowly away.
- If you are attacked, try to get on your stomach covering your neck and face as much as possible.

Callaway Gardens hosts balloon festival

Special to the Bayonet©

PINE MOUNTAIN — Eyes were turned upward last weekend at Callaway Gardens during the attraction's first Sky High Hot Air Balloon Festival.

Wind posed problems for the 33 balloonists all weekend, with only one of four scheduled launches taking place.

On Saturday morning and evening, strong gusts and wind direction forced the colorful balloons to remain on the ground rather than risk landing in wooded areas. The winds subsided and shifted by Sunday morning, and the balloons were able to lift off for the festival's last day.

However, the final launch that evening was cancelled when winds grew so strong the pilots were unable to even inflate the giant balloons.

While balloons were the main draw, there were other things flying in — and falling from — the sky on Saturday to entertain the hundreds on the ground. Radio-controlled model airplanes from the Columbus-Fort Benning RC Flyers club buzzed over South Field in acrobatic moves.

The models were grounded just before 2 p.m. when the UH-60 Blackhawk parked at the other end of the field prepared to take off with three members of Fort Benning's Silver Wings Command Exhibition Parachute Team on board.

When the helicopter reached 10,000 feet, Lt. Col. Edward Daly, commander of 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry, Basic Combat Training Brigade; Marine Gunnery Sgt. Jimmy Holt and Staff Sgt. Terry Murphy, both of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, exited the craft in a free fall and formed a triangle. Each then activated a smoke canister on their boot heels so the audience could spot them in the bright sunlight.

The men then turned 180 degrees from the center and tracked away to form a starburst effect. When they reached 3,000 feet, they deployed the parachutes and, in a stack formation, floated to the target on the field. Daly, with the American flag attached to a parachute line, landed first, followed by Holt and Murphy.

The three then packed their chutes and answered spectators' questions. According to Murphy, a veteran of 600 jumps, the number one question asked is "What does it feel like?"

"You don't have the roller coaster effect," he said of free falling. "It's a slow, gradual increase in speed, to about 110 to 120 miles per hour (before you open you chute)."

Children most often ask if they can try it, he said. "I tell them when they turn 16, with their

Benning turns trash into cash

Walter Nichols
Environmental Programs, Solid Waste Program

It may sound like a fairy tale, but Fort Benning has a chance to convert its number one volume waste, cardboard, into gold. Industry will pay cold hard cash for cardboard trash. Markets for recyclable cardboard, in particular, are currently surging. Fueled by strong demand for cardboard, most insiders in the waste paper industry feel that a golden opportunity exists for cardboard recyclers to receive very good prices for their product.

Old (or waste) cardboard is the highest tonnage recycled product at recycling centers. Cardboard is identified as the Kraft paper product with the corrugated inner liner. It is usually brown, but can be white and overprinted with different colors of inks. The easiest way to identify cardboard is the corrugated inner liner. Cereal and shoe type boxes (single layer, gray on inside and lacks the inner corrugated liner) is not cardboard.

In spite of increased recycling of cardboard at Fort Benning, too much of it is sent to off-post landfills. This means potential operating funds are spent on the disposal of a valuable resource.

Fort Benning's disposal cost for landfilling waste products is about $60 per ton, while the current market price for recyclable cardboard is about $100 per ton. To bring this point home, consider the cost (at today's prices) of landfilling 480 tons of cardboard (the approximate amount Fort Benning recycles per year) vs. income gained by recycling it. The cost to pay someone to bury 480 tons, or approximately 2.4 million pounds, of cardboard would be $28,800. That's a lot of money to simply throw in the dumpster. On the other hand, the money made if the same amount of cardboard were recycled and sold would be $48,000.

But prices for recycled cardboard can go much higher. Just a few years ago in the mid-'90s, the price for cardboard rose to almost $200 per ton. The hypothetical 480 tons would have earned $96,000 at those prices. This should be quite an incentive, especially when you consider that while cardboard makes up a whopping 30 to 40 percent of Fort Benning's total waste, only about 65 percent of cardboard waste is being recycled.

Even if the price of cardboard does not continue to rise, it's a sure bet that landfill costs will continue to climb as space for new landfill sites becomes more difficult to obtain. Fort Benning can still reduce landfill disposal costs dramatically by recycling. In disposing of trash, should money be spent to have it buried, or don't spend a cent — sell it and receive a considerable amount of money to use for so many other things that are badly needed on post? This is a no-brainer! The catch? It will take a little work.

The ways Fort Benning can take advantage of this golden opportunity include the following:

- Put all cardboard in Green Cardboard Collection Dumpsters or transport to the Recycling Center, Building 4000, Harmony Church. (Do not put cardboard into the brown dumpsters. Items collected in brown dumpsters are sent to the landfill.)
- Flatten the cardboard and put it through the slot in the front of the green dumpsters. Do not place boxes that have not been broken down into cardboard collection dumpsters. Do not load dumpsters from top. Load cardboard through loading slot only. Keep top lids closed at all times.
- Army Family Housing residents are provided cardboard collection service by placing all flattened cardboard boxes next to their brown recycling bin. One cardboard box may be used as a container for all the other flattened cardboard. Cardboard and other recyclables will be picked up on same day as garbage, trash and yard waste. And yes, cardboard pizza boxes (only the heavy corrugated type) may be recycled; just scrape off any globs of cheese and sauce that may have stuck to the box.
- Units and activities that have a large amount of cardboard, for example when unpacking new equipment or furniture, must ensure that arrangements are made to recycle the cardboard packing boxes at the Recycling Center. Smaller amounts can be put into the green cardboard dumpsters.
- Commanders and supervisors should ensure that their unit or activity is doing everything it can to get all cardboard to the recycling center or into the green dumpsters.
- Contact the Directorate of Public Works, Recycling Center Hotline at 544-6142 if you have any questions or problems about Fort Benning's Cardboard Recycling Program.

Capt. Stephanie Sanderson
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I am about to be deployed to Bosnia and I'm trying to get things squared away before I leave. Do I have to give my wife a general power of attorney?

A. No, you do not have to give your wife a general power of attorney.

However, before I discuss when you would or would not want a general power of attorney, let me explain a few terms first.

A power of attorney is a legal document by which you give another individual the authority to act for you. It is one of the most powerful legal documents that you can give to another person. The giver of the POA is called the principal, and the one who has the power is called the agent, or the attorney, in fact. There are two types of POA's: general and special.

Every act performed by your agent within the authority of the POA is legally binding upon you. Therefore, a POA should only be given to a trustworthy person, and only when absolutely necessary.

A general power of attorney gives your agent the right to conduct practically any business transaction you could do yourself, such as write checks and pay bills, borrow money and sign contracts in your name. General POA's may not be accepted for the performance of certain acts, such as cashing government checks or conducting real estate transactions.

Moreover, the law does not require acceptance of a POA, but once a valid POA is accepted, the courts will enforce it against you.

A special power of attorney gives your agent authority to act on your behalf for a particular transaction or purpose, such as shipping household goods or registering your automobile. A special POA is often better than a general POA because the extent to which your agent may bind you to certain transactions is limited to specific actions.

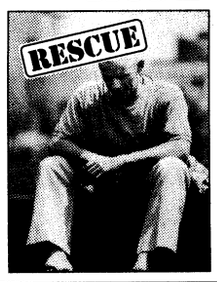
Once executed, a POA is extremely difficult to revoke before its expiration date. If you choose to revoke a POA, the most effective method is to retrieve the actual document and destroy it. If this is not possible, you would have to complete a revocation of power of attorney form and deliver it to the agent; you may obtain this form at the SJA office. You should also provide certified copies of this document to creditors, banks, companies or individual with whom the grantee has dealt or is likely to deal on your behalf.

In those instances where state law required the POA to be filed in court, you should file a copy of the revocation document with the court.

However, be aware that if an agent continues to use the POA after you have revoked it in writing, the business (such as a car dealer) who accepts the POA is protected (assuming they are not aware of the revocation) and the contract or other legal obligation entered into by the agent is still binding on you.

In conclusion, here are a few general considerations to keep in mind:

- Any third party has the right to refuse a POA;
- A POA should be given for only a limited time period (such as the actual length of a deployment);
- Many financial institutions and other businesses have their own POA's which they prefer to be used. Therefore, it is best to show your POA to all known third parties that may be dealing with your agent to ensure that your POA is acceptable; and
- Do not give a general POA when special POA will accomplish the mission. There is less opportunity for abuse when only limited powers are given.



The Legal Assistance Division prepares POA's on a walk-in basis. The office of the SJA is located in Building 5, at the corner of Vibbert Avenue and Sigerfoos Road.

If you have any questions about information provided in this article, contact the Legal Assistance Division or make an appointment with an attorney. The telephone number is 545-3281.

Tricare speeds up payment of claims

Humana Military Healthcare Services

New Tricare initiatives will speed up payment of claims in order to protect Soldiers from bad credit ratings due to unpaid medical bills.

Medical Command officials say the ultimate responsibility, however, still lies with Soldiers to ensure that when they get a bill for health care from a civilian practitioner, they submit the bill for payment. Soldiers must not assume that bills will automatically be taken care of until they submit the claim for processing. Under the new system, getting the claim into the Tricare system will ensure that soldiers will not be subjected to bill collectors or have their credit ratings affected by disputed medical bills.

"The system works if bills and claims are submitted in a timely fashion," said Lt. Col. Rick Fisher in the Tricare division at Army Medical Command Headquarters.

Soldiers must make a copy of the bill for their records, then submit the original and a Claims Form DD2642 to the claims processor in their regions. The claims forms can be downloaded from the Internet at www.tricare.osd.mil or from the Tricare Service Center.

Until Oct. 1, claims outside of Regions 1, 2, 5 and 11 should be sent to the Active Duty Claims Processor at the closest military medical treatment facility. After Oct. 1, responsibility for active duty claims payment will transfer from MTFs to civilian claims processors, who will be required to process to completion 95 percent of all claims within 30 days and 100 percent of all claims within 60 days. After October, claims will be sent to the following:

•Region 1: Tricare Region 1, Active Duty Claim, P.O. Box 7015, Camden, SC 29020-7015

Regions 2 and 5: Tricare Regions 2/5, Active Duty Claims, PO Box 7025, Camden, SC 29020-7025

•Regions 3 and 4: Tricare Regions 3/4 Claims, P.O. Box 7031, Camden, SC 29020-7031

Region 6: WPS/Tricare, PO Box 8999, Madison, WI 53708-8999

•Central Region PGBA: ATTN:TPR/SHCP, PO Box 870019, Surfside Beach, SC 29587-8719

Region 9 and 10: PGBA/Tricare, PO Box 870006, Surfside Beach, SC 29587-8706

Region 11: WPS/Tricare, PO Box 8999, Madison, WI 53708-8999

Tricare Pacific: PGBA/Tricare, PO Box 870001, Surfside Beach, SC 29587-8701

"Under the new system, after 60 days the contractors will be charged a percentage of the claims they haven't processed. So we're holding their feet to the fire," Fisher said.

If the civilian claims processor denies a claim, it will be sent for review to the centralized Tri-Service Military Medical Support Office (MMSO). If the claim is authorized by MMSO, then it will be paid within 60 days. If the claim is not authorized, such as for elective cosmetic care, then the claim will be denied and the Soldier will be responsible for payment.

"Soldiers don't know they have a health maintenance organization. If they get a bill, they have to get it to their insurance processor. It's an education process," Fisher said. "There's no reason whatever that active-duty Soldiers should have claims problems. There are many avenues to obtain help."

Any active-duty Soldier who has a question or problem about his or her medical claims from civilian physicians can call toll-free (888) MHS-MMSO; or DSN 792-3950/3900 or commercial (847) 688-3900 anytime 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to get help. Information is also available at http://navymedicine.med.navy.mil/mmso/ on the World Wide Web.

Claims for family members have been and will continue to be handled by regional Tricare contractors. The numbers to call for family members are:

Region 2: (800) 931-9501
Regions 3 & 4: (800) 444-5445

Tricare

Q: My family is covered by Tricare Standard. I hear that you can save money by using Tricare Extra. How does this work?

A: Tricare Standard beneficiaries take advantage of the lower costs of the Tricare Extra benefit whenever they go to Tricare network providers for their healthcare needs. Network providers include doctors, hospitals, counselors, pharmacies, labs, X-rays services, urgent care centers and other healthcare professionals. Humana Military Healthcare Services has contracted with these providers to offer services to Tricare beneficiaries at rates that are below the standard Tricare allowable charges. As in Tricare Standard, an annual deductible applies for Extra, but beneficiary cost shares are significantly less under Extra, once the deductible has been met.

To locate network providers, you may check the Provider Directory, available at your local Tricare Service Center, contact the Provider Locator Service at (800) 661-4315 or visit the Provider Locator Service page on the HMHS web site, www.humana-military.com.

Callaway: balloons, planes entertain crowds parents' permission, and without that, when they turn 18."

Planes and parachutes filled the skies, but music filled the air when the 18-member Infantry Center Jazz Band, one of seven performance groups within the Infantry Band, played for an hour at the amphitheater. "With big band and swing music coming back, we thought we would have something for everyone," said 1st Sgt. Morris Foor, bandleader.

Other activities during the festival included a classic car show and helicopter rides. But, the hot-air balloons were the main attraction for the more than 20,000 people on hand for the three-day festival, one of 10 that pilot Chuck Norton and his wife, Deborah, will attend this year. The Nortons' balloon is 75 feet tall, 62 feet wide and measures 90,000 cubic feet inside the envelope of the balloon.

The couple, from Augusta, Ga., and several other pilots inflated their balloons for both launches Saturday so the crowds could see them. Many provided tethered balloon rides.

Whether or not there will be another festival next year has not yet been decided, Rachel Crumbley, public relations manager for Callaway Gardens, said Tuesday. "We are still trying to recuperate."

Rosh Hashanah celebrates anniversary

Holiday marked by two days of intensive prayer

Lt. Col. Randolph J. Kranepuhl
USAIC Chaplains Office

Rosh Hashanah celebrates the anniversary of the creation of the world.

reflections

It is more encompassing than the secular New Year. Also known as Yom HaZikaron, (Day of Remembrance) and Yom HaTeruah, (the Day of the Shofar or ram's horn), it is marked by two days of intensive prayer. It begins a 10-day period culminating in Yom Kippur.

Central themes of Rosh Hashanah are God's sovereignty over the world and his rulership over all people. Several customs are associated with Rosh Hashanah. The shofar is sounded as a signal to the Jewish people as a call to penitence and a reminder of the shofar sounded at Mount Sinai, associated with the giving of the Ten Commandments and the Torah. Moses Maimon (aka Maimonides) said, "Look well to your souls and consider your acts; forsake each of you his wrong ways and improper thoughts and return to God so that he may have mercy upon you."

Some customs associated with Rosh Hashanah follow. Until Yom Kippur, the common greeting is "May you be inscribed and sealed for a good year."

The hope is that God will see one as a worthy person who will be given the gift of life for another year. What this means is that during the Days of Awe, God examines the deeds, good and bad, of all people. This includes deeds, good and bad, not done as well. Could we have given more to charity? Could we have been kinder to our spouse or children? Were we guilty of gossip or verbal cruelty?

Another custom is to eat apples dipped in honey as a symbol of hope for a good and sweet New Year. It is common to go to all friends and acquaintances and ask for forgiveness for any real or perceived wrong committed over the past year.

Editor's Note: This article on Rosh Hashanah and the one next week on Yom Kippur describe the reasons for, and the celebration of the two most important Holy Days in Judaism, a period sometimes called "The Days of Awe."

Oscars not given for integrity

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

In his book, Whatever Became of Sin?, world-renowned psychiatrist, Dr. Karl Menninger wrote, "For many people, life has lost its dimensions. The heights and depths are gone, and life has become flat and dull and cheap and frivolous."

reflections

There is little to admire in the people who are prominent in our culture. Dr. J. Alan Peterson noted, "We have celebrities but not saints. People, aimless and bored, amuse themselves with trivia and trash. Neither the adventure of goodness nor the pursuit of righteousness gets headlines. No other culture has been as eager to reward either nonsense or wickedness."

While immoral actors grab the headlines with their demands for more exposure on television, people of integrity and righteousness are decried as bigots, homophobic and unchristian-Christians. "No Oscars are given for integrity," Peterson wrote.

There is something dramatically wrong in America when a high-ranking official from a mainline domination ridicules the Christmas Nativity story, speculates about Jesus being a "drag queen," praises same sex marriages and declares the Ten Commandments as being "immoral."

When such attitudes invade the church, I can no longer stand on the sidelines and remain silent. In this, silence is not golden it's just plain yellow. If our culture is lost, it will be by default. It will be because people of integrity and righteousness did not speak out against moral decay. We complain but do nothing. Do something!

"We can no longer afford the luxury of living self-centered lives," wrote Daniel Johnson in his book Aim for the Children.

I believe there is an answer to the moral decay that is in our land, it comes from providing this generation with a strong spiritual foundation.

Once again quoting from Aim for the Children: "Think what would happen if hundreds of thousands — millions?— of parents decided to live radically, assuming responsibility for the education of their children, curtailing the pervasive influence of television, working in concert with like-minded families in the community to raise a generation of young people in the fear and admonition of the Lord, teaching them that it is not wrong to be different, then sending them out into the world to reclaim for their children what has been lost by default."

Parenting is a challenge and you may need some help. The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center offers parenting classes that emphasize the physical, emotional and spiritual aspects of parenting.

Candidates get ready to rumble

Spc. Jamie T. Karl
3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

In the world of sports, September is prime time. Football is off and running, and baseball's pennant chases are at their pinnacle.

And this Saturday at Fort Benning, September brings the autumn Joint Military Athletic Competition — the Olympics of the U.S. Armed Forces' officer candidate schools.

From super PT tests to relays to the tug-of-war, JMAC pits the Army, Navy and Air Force officer candidate schools against one another in a friendly vie to determine which service will hold bragging rights in the realm of physical fitness.

The semi-annual competition debuted in 1994 as a contest between the Air Force and Navy. But the event started to attract a lot of attention at Fort Benning in spring of 1998, when Army OCS competed in its first JMAC — and won. In fact, since entering the JMAC ring, the Army has dominated the event by winning the last three competitions.

The winning performances have allowed the Army to capture and retain "The Bomb," the coveted JMAC trophy — actually an inert training round — presented to the winning service school at the conclusion of each competition.

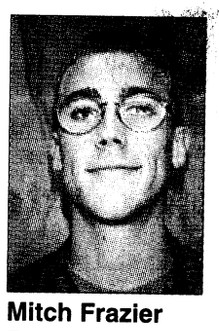
Fort Benning will host this autumn's round of JMAC, beginning Saturday at 10 a.m. with the opening ceremony at York Field. To highlight the opening, the Silver Wings will jump in and present "The Bomb" to Medal of Honor recipient and Army OCS graduate retired Col. Robert B. Nett.

The contests, held at Stewart Watson Field, will get underway at 10:30 a.m. beginning with the three-mile run. The final contest will conclude around 2 p.m. followed by the closing ceremony, award presentation, and a picnic on York Field for the competitors and their classmates.

The Army Officer Candidates participating in this weekend's competition, members of OCS Class 4-99, understand that expectations are high. The candidates themselves have made it clear they intend to win this round of the JMAC, and keep "The Bomb" at Fort Benning — and they have put in extra training hours to ensure that they are at the top of their respective games.

But a lot of work has gone on behind the scenes, as well, to ensure that the competition gets off the ground and runs smoothly.

At OCS, a JMAC operations cell was created by Lt. Col. David Osborne, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. Headed by Officer Candidates George Edwards and John Ruths, and supported by other candidates in the battalion, the cell works with various organizations on post and acts as a liaison between the service schools.



"The teamwork exhibited by the post agencies supporting this event has been phenomenal," Osborne said. Equally impressive have been the efforts of the candidates synchronizing an event of this magnitude.

Edwards and Ruths are responsible for the majority the JMAC planning, scheduling and coordination. But they credit the organizations around post for making things happen.

"Already we are indebted to the services of many people here on post," Edwards said. "Cliff Davis and the folks from DOT, Andrew Snoddy from the Sports Office, and several others like the Silver Wings, Food Services and DPW have been instrumental."

MWR offers chance to putt for cash

Harriet E. Rice
U.S. Army Community Services

If you could make a hole-in-one and win $20,000 dollars wouldn't that be the "Shot of the Century?" That's exactly what Army Morale, Welfare, and Recreation officials have in mind with a millennium golf event scheduled for September.

Fifty-two Army installations are participating in the Shot of the Century Hole-in-One contest sponsored by U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in conjunction with corporate partners First USA Bank and Budweiser.

"We wanted to start doing some pre-millennium programming that will get people excited about participating in local MWR events," said Bill Sport, golf program manager at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center. "This is the first of several millennium events we'll be running through the end of this year and into 2001 featuring golf, bowling, clubs and theme restaurants."

> "We'd be very excited to present any Soldier with a check for $20,000 as a nice early holiday bonus."

> Army Community and Family Support Center

The Shot of the Century contest is open to I.D. cardholders who are authorized MWR patrons in accordance with AR 215-1. Golf professionals and installation golf course employees may not take part.

Up to 3,600 finalists are expected to vie for nearly one million dollars in cash. The lucky ones who make a hole-in-one win $20,000. And close does count in this sport; anyone who puts a shot within six inches of the edge of the cup wins a $1,000 consolation prize.

How far will golfers have to hit their shots? "There are two different distances," explained Sport. "For men, the shot is 165 yards. For women and juniors under the age of 15, the distance is 150 yards. Each contestant gets only one crack at it — no practice shots, no mulligans."

Detailed instructions and marketing packages have already been sent to participating installations, so golfers should be on the lookout for announcements about the contest. "We'd be very excited to present any Soldier with a check for $20,000 as a nice early holiday bonus," Sport said.

Fort Benning MWR officials said the first 70 people to sign up for the shot of the century on post on or before Sept. 25 will get their chance to putt for the cash up for grabs, according to Michelle Young, Fort Benning's MWR publicity assistant.

For more information on the chance to putt for cash on Fort Benning, call Young at 545-3328.

Rangers form 10-Miler team

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

More than 30 Rangers from the Army's three Ranger battalions will be traveling to the nation's capitol next month to take part in one of the Army's premier running events.

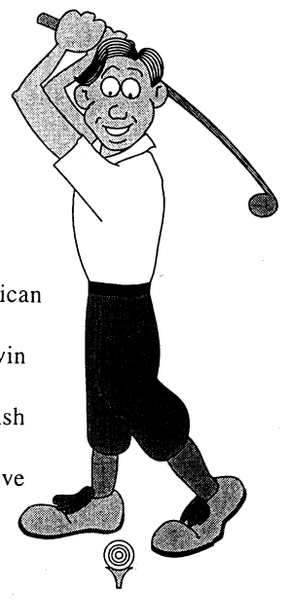
These elite Soldiers make up the Ranger Army 10-Miler team, and according to the team's captain Todd Bearden, this team of Rangers is going to leave D.C. with a trophy.

"All of our guys look like they are going to finish in right around 60 minutes," Bearden said. "And that I believe is good enough to put us at least in the top 5."

Bearden said while the projected placement of the team is important, he said it will come down to the training intensity of the team within the next month.

"Individual training is going to be crucial to the success of the team," he said. "Especially since the team is spread out over three different battalions across the country."

Although that distance has yet to halt the advance of the Rangers toward their race winning training, Bearden did note the team's difficulties recently, since most of the Rangers are currently deployed on a training mission.



"Most of our guys were racing at 56 to 57 minutes before they left," he said. "and this is a lot harder course than what they will face in D.C."

That top 5 finish is not out of sight even despite the difficulties the Soldiers have faced while deployed, according to Bearden. However, 1st Lt. John Detro managed to fit in a 10-mile competitive run with the U.S. Army Europe during the deployment and finished in the top 4 of the race.

"Detro is one of our strongest runners," Bearden said. "And with a finish in a race like that, he is sure to lead the racers to a great finish."

The teams of Rangers should return to the rolling hills of Fort Benning next week, and according to Bearden, the endurance training will continue when they return to make the team the top in the Army.

Ernst hands over reigns to Le Moyne

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Praise for Soldiers and the work they do is what Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst spoke of before handing over the responsibility of running the post to Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne in a ceremony Tuesday morning on York Field.

The change in command represents the end of what Ernst called "three years of magic" for himself and his wife Linda, but the magic has yet to end as far as the career of the 33-year veteran is concerned.

Ernst will be making a trek north to Fort Monroe, Va., where he will work for Gen. John N. Abrams, commander of the Army's Training and Doctrine Command. There the Infantry guru will work on the role of fielding Infantry forces before retiring in January.

"I am going to miss the PT, the jumps, walking through the mountains and the swamps in Florida," he said as he addressed the troops for the final time as the post commander. "But most of all, I am going to miss being around the youngsters. This is the only job I know of where an old guy can get a chance to be around the young guys. I am going to miss that."

As Ernst makes his way to Virginia, Le Moyne, along with wife Marion, step in to assume the duties as the post's top command team.

"It is an honor to serve here at Fort Benning," Le Moyne said in his brief acceptance of command speech. "It is a privilege to work with American Soldiers and to work with those entrusted with our nation's sons and daughter."

While Le Moyne said he still has to unpack and get settled into Riverside, the post commander's home, his next efforts are sure to include keeping Fort Benning at the top of the Army in everything from training to quality of life.

Before moving to Benning, Le Moyne served as the assistant deputy chief of staff for personnel in Washington, D.C.

Le Moyne, who spent time as an enlisted special forces Soldier before becoming an officer, earned his commission in 1968 after graduating from the University of Florida.

He has since served as a Ranger school instructor and as an operations officer for the 2nd Ranger Battalion. He has also logged time as an advisor to foreign military divisions including his 1968 tour as an advisor to the Vietnamese Airborne Division and his 1983 tour as an advisor to the Saudi Arabian National Guard.

Le Moyne and his wife have one son, James, and a grandchild Ashley.

DCP faces RIF; reduces civilian separations

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Recently, the Fort Benning Directorate of Civilian Personnel accomplished something that many may consider pretty remarkable.

In January, the DCP was faced with a reduction in force. That RIF affected more than 120 civilian employees — 42 who were to be permanently separated from their jobs.

However, after months of hard work and determination, the DCP was able to reduce the number of separations from 42 to four, said Kathleen Kenna, director of Civilian Personnel. Not only that, but the DCP was also able to cut the number of grade reductions from 43 employees to 37 and re-assignments from 42 to 40.

What may be more amazing is the fact that even though the DCP started with a larger number of separations than in years before, they ended with the lowest number ever. An achievement even the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command had to call and congratulate them for.

According to Kenna, this kind of success was the result of a team effort throughout the installation. She said everyone worked together to try and train and place as many employees as possible.

Both Martin Army Community Hospital and the Directorate of Logistics were instrumental in hiring people, Kenna said. In fact, MACH, which isn't even in the same competitive area as Fort Benning, placed five employees among their ranks. DOL was looking for motor vehicle operators and helped out by training and placing seven employees. Other directorates also took an initiative by waving certain qualifications, she said.

"It's really a good feeling to know how many people worked to affect this action," Kenna said. "This year we got a great deal of help from managers and organizations on post, whether they were a part of this or not. And that's the nice thing, we can pull so many resources into achieving a goal."

Kenna said even those who were unable to be placed in a job are still counseled and have been placed on the priority placement list. This allows them to be referred for any jobs that come open that they are qualified for.

Justine Boone, a medical clerk at MACH, experienced this commitment first hand.

Boone had worked for 17 years as a recreation assistant, and said she was scared when she found out about the RIF because she had no idea what she was going to do.

She said the DCP guided her each step of the way, narrowing in on her skills and eventually helping her get a job at MACH.

"They worked very hard to make sure I went some place," Boone said. "They always stayed in touch and were there for me when I called. I'm just so thankful and feel very blessed they put in the time and effort that they did. I felt good about them working on my case, because I really knew they were working on my behalf."

But most importantly, Kenna said, her employees' commitment and hard work comes from a personal concern for the people.

"It's a people issue. These are people who have worked for us, some of them for many years, and we feel we owe it to them to do everything possible to avoid separation."

A line of AH-64 Apaches from Hunter Army Airfield arrive at Lawson Army Airfield to wait out Hurricane Floyd.

Benning plays host to evacuated aircraft

More than a 100 aircraft flock to Lawson Army Airfield impending Floyd destruction

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

As the southeastern United States prepared for the arrival of Hurricane Floyd earlier this week, Fort Benning stepped up to play host to more than 100 military aircraft that had to be evacuated from the Georgia and Florida coasts.

The 107 aircraft, mainly UH-60 Blackhawks, AH-64 Apaches and CH-47 Chinooks, flew onto post Tuesday from Savannah's Hunter Army Airfield and a National Guard base in Jacksonville, Fla., to wait out the storm that spanned nearly 600-miles wide and carried 130-mph winds.

"We have a formal hurricane evacuation plan with units in Savannah. So when any bad weather comes to the East Coast, we bring them here," said John D. Campbell, Lawson Army Airfield's manager, who added that they have a similar agreement with the National Guard base.

In addition, the airfield also took in two C-130s from Pope Air Force Base, S.C.

While the airfield began filling with hordes of incoming aircraft Tuesday morning, Fort Benning continued its daily airborne school missions in addition to bringing in VIPs such as Gen. John N. Abram, commander of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, who was on hand to participate in the post change of command ceremony.

"We're doing about a hundred things all at once," said Campbell about Tuesday's hectic schedule. He added that with only a handful of employees parking the vehicles and working on flight plans, the experience was stressful. "Everyone put in 100 percent, and we were able to get through it without any major problems."

Although the airfield may seem a bit crowded with three of the field's ramps filled with aircraft, Campbell said this wasn't the most Fort Benning has seen. Two years ago, the post welcomed more than 180 aircraft while another hurricane plowed the coastline.

"As of now this is all we're going to have here, but that could change depending on the storm," he said.

Campbell added that it's also up to the storm to decide when the aircraft will be able to return home.

"We need to wait until the storm passes, and we get an all clear from the home stations before they can redeploy," he said. "We can only hope that they can go back to their home station the way they left it."

CFC to kick off

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

If it hasn't happened yet, it will.

That is what Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said earlier this week about the benefit everyone receives from some form of a charity group.

"Everyone will benefit from some form of charity either directly or indirectly at some time in his or her life," he said. "There is going to be someone you know or someone near you who will benefit from one of these groups, and that is why we need to help them."

That help according to Walls is only days away as Fort Benning prepares to kick off this year's Combined Federal Campaign at 4 p.m. Sept. 24 in Classroom 6 of Infantry Hall.

Although the campaign is an Army-wide program that raises money for a variety of not-for-profit organizations, this year the campaign will feature a local version of the drive called Designation 9,000.

"Designation 9,000 allows us to keep a portion of the collected money here in the Columbus area," Walls said. "More than half of our Soldiers and family members who live off post use many of the activities provided by the charities this campaign raises funds for

Wife thanks veterans for sacrifices

Tammy Dominski
Fort Bragg Paraglide

My husband called it Platoon Morale Day in a very serious tone. My friends and I, in secret, called it "The Joe Party" and giggled about it like schoolgirls, because we are never serious about anything for very long. "Joe" is a nickname for Soldiers.

commentary

But tomorrow my friends won't be with me, and I won't be laughing anymore.

Tomorrow, barring last minute call-outs, alerts or conflicts of schedule, men from my husband's platoon will gather in my living room. I will shuffle around my kitchen amidst the smell of pizza and brownies and try desperately to look busy. And I will try to shut out the sounds coming from my living room, but I know I won't be able to. You see, they are gathering to watch the movie Saving Private Ryan, and the giggling I did with my friends was only masking something I'm dreading: having to watch that movie again.

I will never forget the night I sat in the darkened theater as that movie unfolded before my eyes for the first time. With tears streaking down my cheeks, I was shown quite graphically what my husband, an Infantry Soldier, did for a living. And I realized that there were men out there I had to thank for the ease in which I have lived my life.

I have never wanted for food or shelter or warmth. I don't know what it's like to lose my home simply because someone didn't like where I came from. I have the right to voice my opinion on whatever causes touch my heart. The only devastation that I have ever seen due to war has been on TV. And the last time a member of my family was touched by battle was when my great-great-grandfather died in the Civil War.

There are people out there who risked their lives and died so that I can lead my cushioned life. I know I probably wouldn't be here today had it not been for those people, men who are no less than heroes in my eyes.

To me, a hero is anyone who is willing to sign away years of his or her life to a cause he or she believes in. Not all of us possess such fortitude. I have been told that I have courage because I speak out for the few things in my life that are important to me, but I cannot begin to fathom the bravery it would take to go off to war, knowing you might not come home. The gallantry those men, as well as the ones gathered in my living room tomorrow, possess is beyond anything I can comprehend.

Patriotism is in my heart. I cry when I hear taps played. I can't get through All-American Week without goose bumps. I get chills when I see a line of C-130s dot the sky, and one of my favorite songs is the 82nd Airborne Chorus's version of God Bless the USA. So how does someone like me say thank you?

Sometimes the words "thank you" are spoken too late. People are taken from our lives before we get around to telling them how we feel. In a speech to Congress in 1790, George Washington said, "To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace." I don't like to think about war because I'm an idealist who hopes that the days of armed conflict will become obsolete during my lifetime. I don't wish for the men in my living room to go off to fight a war, but I know that they are prepared to do so. The men who will be in my home tomorrow don't know how I feel because it's hard for me to articulate my feelings into spoken words. I don't even think my own husband knows how I truly feel. But I could try.

I could tell them I appreciate the sacrifices they've made. I wonder if they know how much I look up to each and every one of them and that I am truly honored to be in their presence and in the presence of anyone who has ever served our country. I could just start by saying thank you before it's too late.

So tomorrow, should "Joe Party" occur as scheduled, I'll try to watch the movie, maybe, even though I will no doubt see half of it through tears.

When it's over I will gather the courage that comes from being in the company of heroes, in my eyes, and I will start by saying thank you to them.

To those of you who will not be with me tomorrow, please, before the day is through, find someone who has served our country, past or present, and tell them thank you, from the bottom of your heart, for the job they did for us. They deserve that at the very least.

New CG sets goals

While Marion and I have only been back for less than a week, I want to let you know that Fort Benning is everything it claims to be.

As we drove onto this beautiful post, we recognized the care and concern those who work and live here have for it. Fort Benning reflects your pride in living and working at Americas best military post. It takes planning and hard work to make an installation of this size look this good.

But Fort Benning is more than outward appearance as I quickly learned. The military and civilian work force consists of true professionals who believe in what they are doing. We need men and women like this to keep our Soldiers trained and our nation safe.

We were impressed by the support from the people of our local communities. They truly have our best interests at heart and we know we will enjoy working with them in the coming months.

My goals for Fort Benning are simple:

• Train Soldiers to standard.

• Ensure our Soldiers are fully deployable and that we are prepared to deploy them on a moment's notice.

• Continue to evolve and grow, adjusting to the demands placed on us by the American people.

• Continue to be the best place in the U.S. Army to train, to work, to live, to raise a family.

I am looking forward to working with and meeting you.

letters

Mrs. Ernst thanks community

Words can never really express a deep and sincere feeling, but I do hope in some small way they will be able to convey the gratitude I feel toward you, the ladies of Fort Benning. Your kindness over the past three years and your support shall always be remembered by me with a feeling of warmth and appreciation.

There have been many deployments to foreign lands over the past few years, which has meant separation from loved ones for many of us, but it also afforded me the opportunity to observe firsthand how effectively your Family Support Groups took superb care of families in your battalions and brigades.

It was a privilege to see you join together on so many occasions, giving of yourself, to help others.

I cannot adequately express my appreciation for the many farewells from the volunteer organizations and the ladies of Fort Benning. You have touched my heart in places I never knew I had. I shall treasure these memories forever.

To all of you, my heartfelt thanks for your love, support and friendship which made my efforts as the Commanding General's wife so much easier.

Carl joins me in wishing each of you and yours continued success and unconditional happiness, always.

Hugs and Hooah,
— Linda Ernst

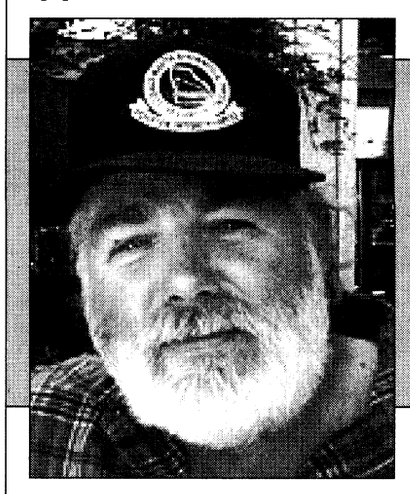
Soldier questions other's morality

On Sept. 7, 1999 at approximately 6 a.m., my son had his bike stolen. His bike was taken from my carport on Davis Hill. If I truly live on the Best Military Installation in the World do I really have to worry about my little boy's bike getting stolen? I don't think so.

This infuriates me to think that a low life, maybe a Soldier, maybe a Soldier's dependent, would do such a thing on the supposed Best Installation in the World. Am I wrong? No I am not wrong. We are the Best Military in the World and I shouldn't have to worry about my little boy's bike getting stolen, right after I leave for work.

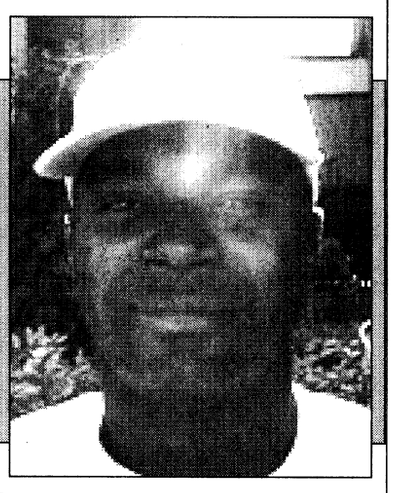
So what does a Soldier do on the Best Military Installation in the World? He has to think of ways to protect his.

Why do I have to spend more money to protect and replace my property when all the people around me are my brothers and sisters in arms? Why do I have to worry about vandalism? Why is it that I don't trust my neighbors anymore? Why am I worried about leaving my family when I go on deployment, or even go to work for the day?



The answer to all of these is a lack of morals and ethics. It might not be your immediate neighbor but somewhere down the line there is that person who wants your stuff. You cannot change a person's thinking over night or figure out why they commit these acts. They probably don't even realize they have done something wrong, because they have no morals or ethics. Someone did not teach him or her right from wrong, and that is a shame.

I am not writing this because I am holier than thou, it is because if you commit these acts or you know people or Soldiers who commit these acts, you are wrong. One day you will get caught.



— Staff Sgt. James Schwartz

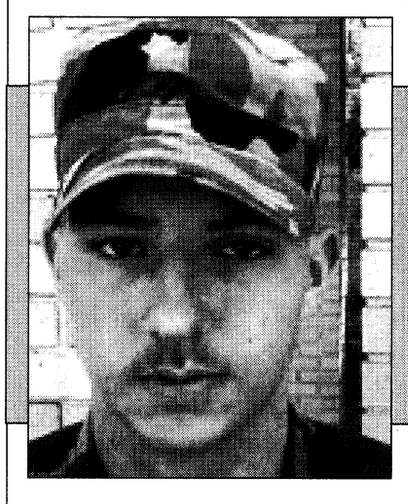
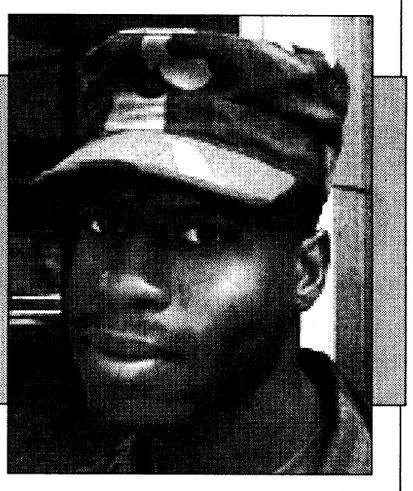
VARIOUS VOICES

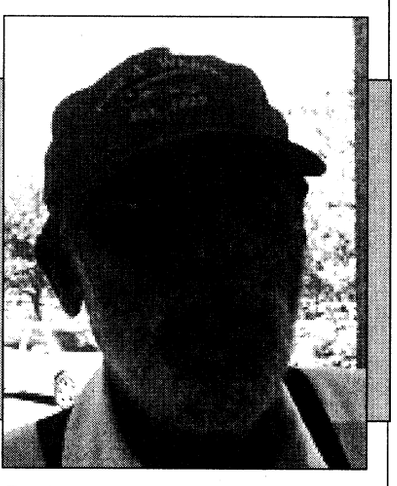


How can we as a country show our appreciation for our veterans?



Loyd Stein, family member — "We need to give them more money and medical benefits when they retire. It is the least we can do for them after serving our country."

Sgt. 1st Class T.L. Sermons, 6th Training Support Battalion, Fort Gillem, Ga. — "For all the Soldiers who retired after serving their country for more than 20 years, we need to start showing our appreciation for what they have done. We need to make the benefits reflect what these guys gave in service."



Pvt. Hans Palomarez, B. Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mech.) — "We need to give the veterans and their families more benefits so if something happens to the retiree, the family will be taken care of."

Pfc. Jamar Johnson, 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group — "We need to give them more benefits. After giving 20 or 30 years, we need to give them something for their service."

Lorane Gagenon, family member — "There needs to be something that shows our appreciation for their hard work, like better medical care."

James Caruthers, commissary bagger — "There needs to be more benefits to let them know we care, like the VA hospitals, and the benefits need to quit being cut."

Proposed bill could save Soldiers money

State legislature could cut vehicle registration ad valorem tax

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers registering their automobiles in Georgia may soon find a little extra cash in their pockets after visiting the tag office thanks to a proposed bill in the Georgia state legislature.

If passed, the proposed bill, House Bill 441, would give Soldiers a leg up when registering their vehicles by making them exempt from the state's ad valorem tax — a tax that costs some Soldiers nearly $100 when registering their vehicle in the Peach state.

Although the tax can be avoided under the present system if the vehicle is titled entirely in the serviceperson's name, it leaves those Soldiers who have a lien on the vehicle or a joint title paying the tax. That, state representatives say, is unfair.

"For so many years there has been an inequality between those with a single title and those without," said a spokesperson for the post's staff judge advocate office.

"Finally, the state has realized the need to make the change and make it equal for both parties."

For years spouses who did not want to pay the tax were forced to sign the vehicle over to the servicemember or find a way to keep the vehicles registered in their home state, according to the spokesperson. However, many cases where the vehicle was financed and both the serviceperson's name and the financing company's name appeared on the title, the chance for the ad valorem exemption was impossible.

That impossibility could transform into reality early next year as the House reconvenes in January to resume its regular session.

Although House Bill 441 is one of the hundreds of bills the men and women of the state's governing body will see in the inaugural session of the new millennium, staff judge advocate officials encourage Soldiers to contact Georgia state senators and representatives to show support for the potentially cost-cutting legislation.

"The legislation could save Soldiers and their families hundreds of dollars," he said. "And it is very important that they show as much support for the bill as possible so that saving can happen."

While the legislation process is still more than four months away, early support for the bill cannot hurt, he said.

"The more we show support and initiative, the better chance we have in getting this passed quickly," he noted.

For more information on the proposed bill, look it up on-line at www.ganet.org.

Ranger dies during training accident

A Ranger with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment died Sept. 9 during a training exercise in Bamberg, Germany.

Sgt. Jamey J. Dimase, 26, a team leader and Cincinnati native, is survived by his mother, Linda Stacks, who resides in Cincinnati, and his father, Michael Dimase, who lives in Miami.

Dimase, who joined the Army in September 1992 and became a Ranger in June 1998, was deployed to Germany with his unit and was participating in marksmanship training at the time of his death.

A preliminary investigation indicated Dimase died of a gunshot wound to the chest at approximately 11:30 a.m. Sept. 9. Medical personnel on the scene immediately responded to the accident but were unable to resuscitate him.

U.S. Army Special Operations Command, higher headquarters for the 75th Ranger Regiment, is conducting an investigation.

Ron Gorday, director of Operations and Training, passed away Sept. 8

Gorday, a native of Waycross, Ga., graduated from the University of Georgia in 1966 with a Bachelor of Science degree in Biology.

He completed the Medical Service Corps Officer Basic Course and Rotary Wing Flight School and served as aircraft commander of a medical evacuation helicopter in the 45th Medical Company, Republic of Vietnam, until he was seriously wounded Feb. 1, 1968. Following evacuation to Walter Reed Army Medical Center and return to active duty, due to his wounds, he was medically retired July 9, 1970.

Gorday moved to Columbus where he served as a marketing consultant and later as a middle school science teacher in Muscogee County. During this time, he earned a Masters Degree in Biology Education and an Education Specialist Degree in Administration and Supervision.

In 1978, he left the public schools and became a training specialist at the U.S. Army Infantry School, and later a training analyst in Systems Division. He was directly responsible for development of Army-wide new equipment training and the procurement of training devices and simulators. In 1997, Gorday assumed the position of deputy director of Operations and Training.

Gorday's military awards include the Aviator's Badge, the Air Medal with 12 Oak Leaf Clusters, the Air Medal with "V" Device, the Vietnam Service Medal and the Purple Heart.

Ron Gorday leaves his wife Kay; his son, Chris, his daughter, Lisa, and their families and three grandchildren. His contributions to the defense of our nation, to the education of our youth and the readiness posture of our armed forces are immeasurable and will benefit the country he loved and served for many years to come.

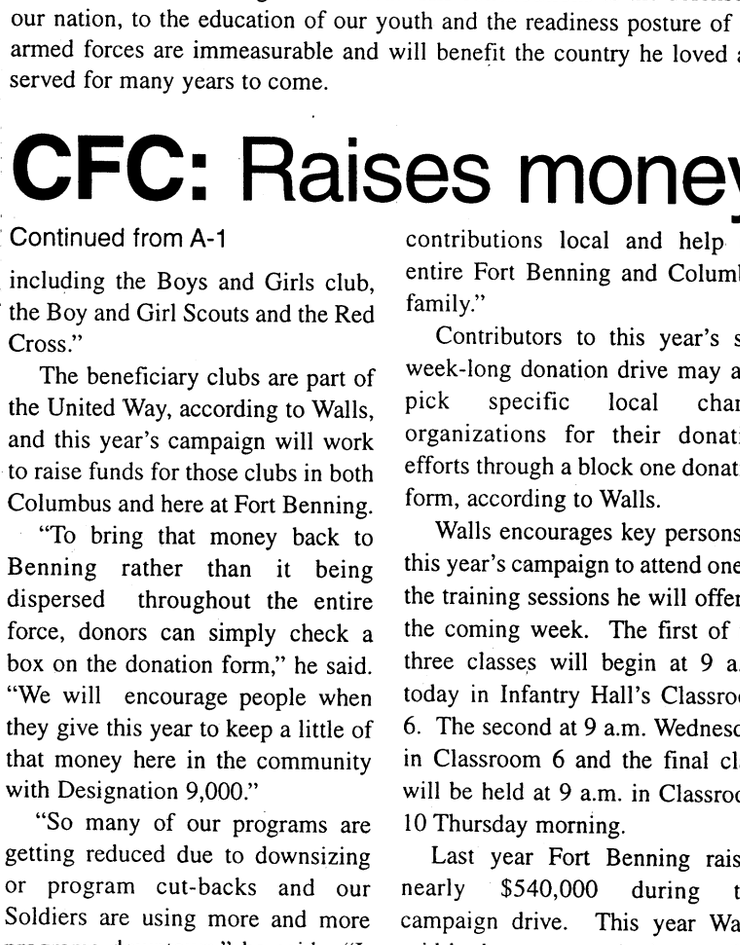
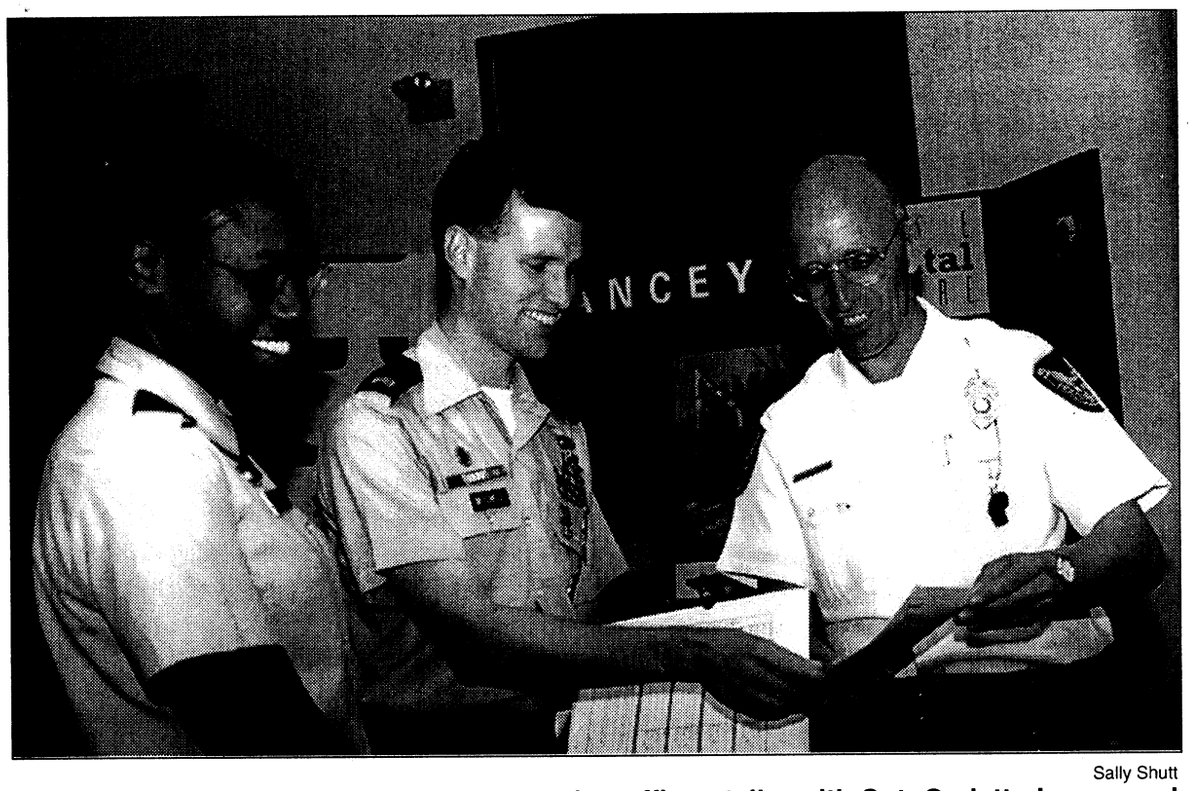
including the Boys and Girls club, the Boy and Girl Scouts and the Red Cross."

The beneficiary clubs are part of the United Way, according to Walls, and this year's campaign will work to raise funds for those clubs in both Columbus and here at Fort Benning.



"To bring that money back to Benning rather than it being dispersed throughout the entire force, donors can simply check a box on the donation form," he said. "We will encourage people when they give this year to keep a little of that money here in the community with Designation 9,000."

"So many of our programs are getting reduced due to downsizing or program cut-backs and our Soldiers are using more and more programs downtown," he said. "It makes good sense to keep contributions local and help the entire Fort Benning and Columbus family."



Contributors to this year's six-week-long donation drive may also pick specific local charity organizations for their donation efforts through a block one donation form, according to Walls.

Walls encourages key persons in this year's campaign to attend one of the training sessions he will offer in the coming week. The first of the three classes will begin at 9 a.m. today in Infantry Hall's Classroom 6. The second at 9 a.m. Wednesday in Classroom 6 and the final class will be held at 9 a.m. in Classroom 10 Thursday morning.

Last year Fort Benning raised nearly $540,000 during the campaign drive. This year Walls said he hopes to reach close to that amount.

Employers take part in job fair

Next year, after 20 years in the Army, Sgt. 1st Class Clifford Hadley will retire. Assigned to the Bradley Instructional Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, he plans to stay in the Columbus area.

Sept. 9, he followed the advice of retired friends and attended a Veterans Job Fair sponsored by the Georgia Department of Labor.

"The only tip I got was to start early, and that's what I'm doing," Hadley said.

Thirty-five employers from the Columbus area were on hand at the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post No. 665 on Victory Drive to discuss job openings. Hadley was interested in those offering part-time employment.

"I'm looking for part-time now, so that I can get into the system," he said after talking with a representative from Char-Broil.

Like Hadley, about 20 percent of Soldiers from Fort Benning who leave the military will stay in the local area, according to Bruce Tait, veterans employment representative for the department of labor.

The more than 400 people who dropped by the fair were able to talk directly with the human relations professionals from area police departments, hospitals, trucking companies, banks, manufacturers, and the Columbus consolidated government.

"This is a golden opportunity to meet the human resources people who you usually don't even get to talk with," Tait said. "Some people came in just to meet representatives from particular agencies so they could put a face with their names."

The public was invited to attend the fair. Around the lunch hour, the number of people in military uniforms increased. Some, like Sgt. Carletta Lamar, assigned to the Columbus South office, Macon Company, Atlanta Recruiting Battalion, were interested in seeing just what the civilian sector offered. "I won't be getting out for another one to three years," she said.

Military personnel possess traits employers want, according to Chick Eagle of the Army Career and Alumni Program. "They have discipline and a history of a work ethic. They show up on time and have a high level of training." ACAP helps separating Soldiers translate what they have done in the military into civilian terms through resume workshops and job counseling.

Human resource representatives echoed Eagle's comments. "I do my best to get as many (military) as I can," Frank Kolar, Jr., employee relations supervisor for Intermet, the Columbus Foundry, said. He especially likes to hire noncommissioned officers because of their experience. "They have self-discipline and the understanding of obtaining and maintaining standards."

Police departments heavily recruit military members, according to investigator Cheri Scheafer, Cobb County Police Department in Marietta, Ga. And, they do not have to be former military police officers.

"We are looking for people used to discipline," she said. "Most of our applicants today are infantry."

The former Army MP added, "Public safety is not a Monday through Friday, 9-to-5 type job, and military people understand the long hours and having to miss their spouse's birthday."

Individuals who missed the fair can check job listings which are updated regularly at the ACAP center in Soldiers' Plaza. For more information, call 545-2308.

A Southern Region Military and Civilian Job Fair will be held Oct. 26 at the Montgomery Civic Center in Montgomery, Ala., from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. It will feature more than 130 employers.

Former CG heads to TRADOC

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If all the memories he acquired at Fort Benning hadn't had time to come rushing back, there is no doubt as former Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst stood before the post Tuesday and bid his troops goodbye, a tiny gate was opened.

With retirement simply a year away and his position of commanding general handed over, Ernst leaves Fort Benning with a love for a place that is not only the home of the Infantry, but a home for his heart as well.

It was more than 30 years ago that this two-star general had his first experience with Fort Benning ... it definitely wouldn't be his last. In fact, the winds of change would blow Ernst through Benning four more times — two times as a student, once as an instructor, once as the assistant commandant and finally as post commander.

There is no doubt that the collection of memories Ernst acquired during his many years at Fort Benning is insurmountable. However, he said what he will miss the most and remember forever, is simply the everyday sights and sounds of Soldiers being Soldiers.

"What I take with me when I leave Fort Benning won't be the memory of any single event," Ernst said. "It's when you get up and go to PT and it's six in the morning ... you can almost smell it and you can most certainly hear it and feel it. It's the sights and sounds of Soldiers on the street, Soldiers in training all over the post. It's those sorts of things I will take away."

Ernst admitted that some of his favorite things to do were everyday Soldier skills and regretted that time constraints prohibited him from going to the field more often and spending time with trainees.

"I'm still basically just a kid at heart," Ernst said. "I like shooting weapons; I like walking patrols with Soldiers; and I like falling out of airplanes. There is just a lot of fun in this business of Soldiering."

And just like the young trainees Ernst wished he could have spent more time with, he, too, was once a young Soldier unsure of what the future had in store. He admitted that in the early days he had no idea he would end up where he is today.

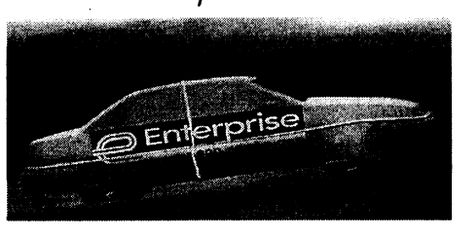
"I didn't have any clue how long I was going to stay in the Army," Ernst said."At that time most of us were looking forward to going to Vietnam. And for all the Infantry at that time your goal was to survive a tour in Vietnam. So if I had a goal when I was that young, I'd say it was I wanted to live to be 25 ... it definitely wasn't the Army. But I stayed in beyond that and just took it one step at a time."

It was with each of those steps Ernst came to realize what he wanted to do "for as long as he was having fun," was be a Soldier. And for him, there was no finer place to be a Soldier than at Fort Benning.

Ernst said it is going to be especially hard to say goodbye to the Home of the Infantry, knowing he will never be back as a Soldier.

"It's going to be very tough emotionally for me and Linda," Ernst said about his last day at Fort Benning. "I know I will never be back in uniform. I'll visit Fort Benning, but that's different because it's not like being a part of this marvelous institution. So that's going to be very difficult and very sad."

As for future goals, he said he simply wants to enjoy the next phase of his life and all of the gifts God has given him.



For Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, Ernst left these words of advice — have patience.

"You could drive yourself crazy thinking I need to spend more time with this or more time with that, but the schedule is going to be the schedule. And the CG, commandant, chief of branch, is not the master of the schedule, the schedule is the master of him."

And to the institution Ernst commanded for three years and is so very proud of he said, "Keep doing what your doing, because no one does it like Fort Benning."

Businessman saves WWII buildings

Seven World War II buildings saved from pending destruction six years ago at Fort Benning will be restored as a historical monument to the Soldiers who served the U.S. during that war, thanks to the financial backing of Columbus businessman and WWII veteran Frank G. Lumpkin Jr.

A post supporter for decades, Lumpkin was honored during a ceremony Monday morning in front of two of the wooden frame buildings set for restoration, the headquarters of Gen. George S. Patton and the general's sleeping quarters.

The National Infantry Association, the organization leading the venture, dedicated the project, a major addition to the National Infantry Museum, to Lumpkin. Once completed, the courtyard around which the buildings will stand will be named the Frank G. Lumpkin Jr. Plaza.

Six of the buildings are temporarily located behind the museum on Baltzell Avenue. The seventh, the Harmony Street Chapel, is still standing at Harmony Church. The street will also feature an enlisted men's barracks, mess hall, supply room and orderly room.

In 1993, hunters were shooting at the buildings, which were located at Sand Hill, according to retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White, president of the National Infantry Association, and then commanding general of the post. He ordered that they be moved to Main Post. After the ceremony, White stuck his finger in one of the bullet holes in the sleeping quarters.

While stationed at Fort Ord, Calif., White had admired that post's World War II Company Street monument and realized that Fort Benning should try to preserve some of the buildings from that era.

"I knew we had to move them here (Main Post) and get them under our control," White said. But, the post and the Army did not have the money to do anything else with the buildings, so they remained untouched, until Monday.

Workers from the contractor, DE/TE Builders, were tearing out the ceiling in the headquarters building after the ceremony and assessing the extent of work required. They know asbestos and lead paint will have to be removed.

They also discovered that the original stairs had been moved, and that the windows are original to the building, according to John Teeples, DE/TE president.

"Right now, we are getting the building structurally stabilized," Teeples said.

Sam Andras, architect with JRA Architects, has been investigating the history of the buildings and working with Fort Benning, the National Infantry Association and the state historical preservation office.

"Our role is to find out what it used to be and to restore it to the original condition utilizing as much of the historical materials as possible," he said.

The buildings, designed as temporary structures in cantonment areas, were expected to only last through the war, Frank Hanner, director of the museum, said. Soldiers were housed and trained in them.

"Someone can look back and say that's what my great-great-grandfather lived in. That's the legacy Mr. Lumpkin is leaving to Fort Benning."

Sally Shutt

Frank G. Lumpkin Jr. and his family pose in front of the building he's helping to save.

"I love those buildings," Chuck Walls, Benning garrison manager, said. "That's how I remember Army posts as a kid."

"The National Infantry Association has taken on the leadership of this to make sure it gets done," White said.

The National Infantry Association has founded the National Infantry Foundation, "a charitable foundation organized to benefit the National Infantry Museum and its projects," Hanner said.

For the National Infantry Foundation, this is just the first wave in an ambitious project which will include improvements and a possible move for the Infantry Museum to a new permanent home.

Columbus family safeguards Fort Benning's history

Sally Shutt

Frank G. Lumpkin Jr. was 10 years old in 1916 when his father and two other Columbus men traveled to Washington, D.C., to persuade Congress to establish an Army training post on the Chattahoochee River. Two years later, Camp Benning was founded.

On Monday, the 93-year-old was honored for his role in safeguarding the history of Fort Benning. Lumpkin donated the money needed to restore seven World War II buildings, including Gen. George S. Patton's Headquarters, and establish a company street monument.

"Frank G. Lumpkin ensured that there would be a Fort Benning in 1918, and Frank G. Lumpkin Jr., has ensured that Fort Benning history will be protected," Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum, said during the ceremony.

In 1993, the World War II buildings were saved from destruction. When Lumpkin heard that they were just sitting behind the museum, he approached the National Infantry Association with a check, which he later gave to then Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Hendrix.

Lumpkin

"I told him (Hendrix) I had written a bad check for $100,000, but that everything I have I would pledge to it (the restoration project)," Lumpkin said.

Lumpkin's son, Frank G. Lumpkin III, recalled the check, which is stored in the museum's safe as a historical document. "He told him that it was a bad check because he didn't have it all in cash, but that his son would make it good."

"No family has been more supportive of Fort Benning," Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst said. "There must be something in the DNA."

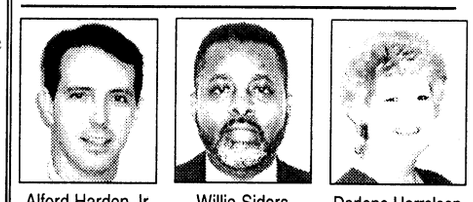
Lumpkin's wife, Edith; daughter, Julia Willcox Lumpkin; and son, Frank G. Lumpkin III; also attended the ceremony, held in front of two of the buildings. Lumpkin Road that runs through Main Post is named for Lumpkin's father.

"My entire family is here. This is the greatest honor I've ever received, and Fort Benning is the greatest place in the United States," Lumpkin said.

Lumpkin, a graduate of the University of Georgia's Law School, served on active duty from 1940 to 1946. He was a captain in the 2nd Armored Division stationed at Fort Benning. He was in the 66th Armored Regiment, commanded by Col. George S. Patton. He served as a major in the 709th Tank Battalion and fought in the European Theater of Operations in the Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe campaigns.

Lumpkin shared an anecdote about Patton during the general's time at Fort Benning. Lumpkin's father was riding with Patton when MPs pulled the general's vehicle over. The general questioned the private first class, and according to Lumpkin, the young man responded, "Aren't generals supposed to obey the law?"

Patton was so impressed with the young man, who had only been in the Army for a few months, that he insisted the MP be promoted to "buck sergeant" and assigned to work at the headquarters.



"Anyone who got a ticket would have to have it posted in the headquarters," Lumpkin said outside of the building where the citation was probably displayed.

Julia Willcox Lumpkin, a probate judge in Muscogee County, remembered visiting post as a little girl with her father. "Daddy has been real supportive of the Infantry Museum and Fort Benning," she said. "And, World War II was a part of his life.

"Whatever makes Daddy happy, makes me happy, and Fort Benning makes him happy."

School turns Soldiers into Army's top guns

Students learn sniper basics

Photos by Pfc. Mitch Frazier

After being dropped off in an open field with the rest of their sniper team, sniper student Spc. Joshua Holmes provides suppressive fire as a teammate gathers his gear before moving to the nearby treeline. The movement was part of the course's three-day culminating field exercise.

Bayonet staff writer

For years the Army has proven itself effective in packing a lethal blow to enemies in an urban environment through the use of highly trained Soldiers and modern technology.

The weight of packing that lethal strike lies heavily upon a group of highly disciplined, accurate and self-sufficient Soldiers called snipers.

These Soldiers volunteer to compete for a slot from the ranks of the Army's ground-fighting force — the Infantry — to come to Fort Benning and learn to be one of the Army's top gunners.

The five-week school takes the volunteer Infantrymen deep into the forests of Fort Benning and to the various ranges to learn the techniques needed to become one of the Army's elite shooting experts.

"Many of these students are filling slots in their various units as snipers before they even come to school," said Staff Sgt. Dominic Barnello, a sniper school instructor, assigned to C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "It is our job to teach these Soldiers in five weeks how to be the best at the various tasks it takes to be a sniper."

While Barnello said it is difficult to teach the students everything they could possibly encounter while in the field, he said the course does teach the students the basics and instills the knowledge they need to make decisions while serving as a sniper.

"We teach the students as much as we possibly can within the five-week period they are here," Barnello said while observing the three-day field training exercise. "But our emphasis is teaching them how to be the eyes and the ears of the commander."

While many snipers are portrayed on the silver screen as lone gunmen and vigilantes, Barnello said these men are more than a tool of one shot from 900 meters.

"Stalking and engaging a long range target is only part of the job of a sniper," he said. "Many of times the sniper team provides more intelligence to the commander than the (S-2)."

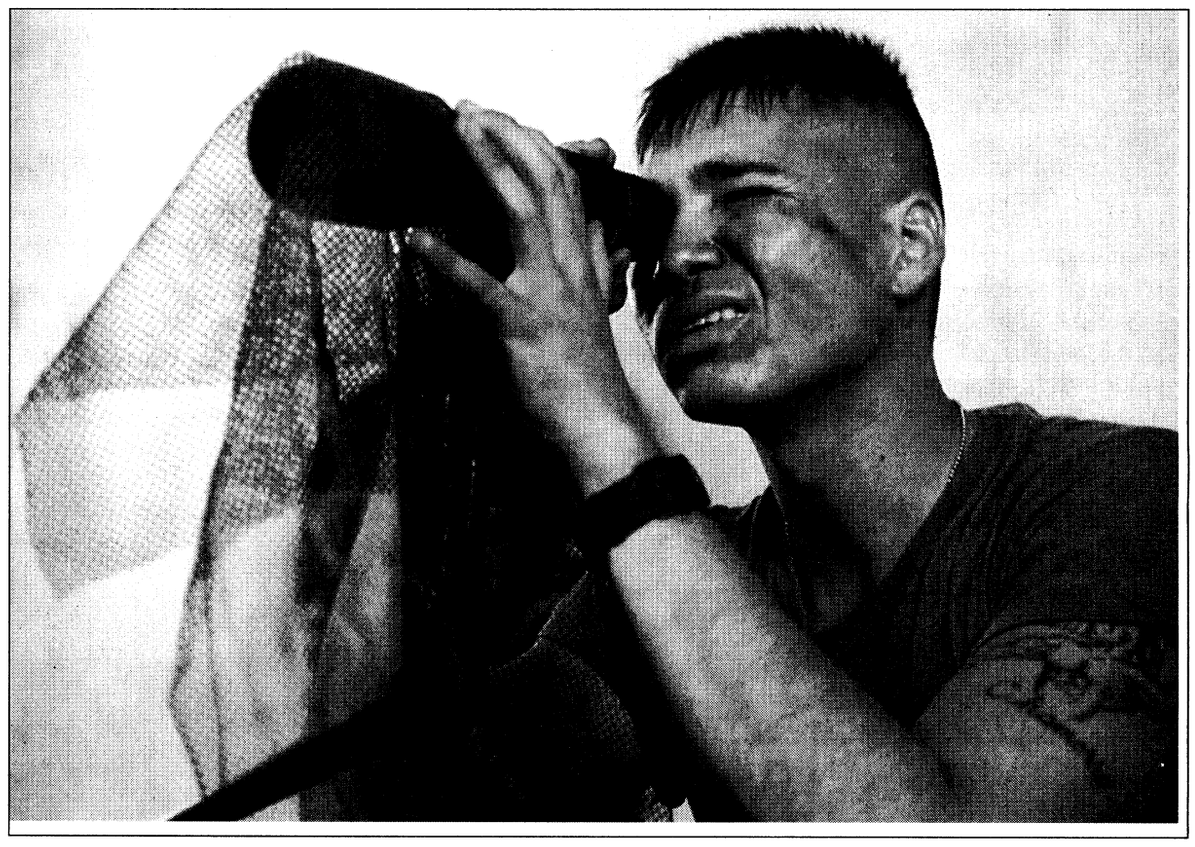
That ability to gather intelligence and act upon the gathered information is tested during the field training exercise that focuses upon many environments including military operations on urban terrain.

"This is where the students are put to the test," said Sgt. 1st Class Carlos Huertas, the school's officer in charge. "They are evaluated on every aspect of what they have learned since they have been here."

The second day of the training exercise featured many of those aspects including an air employment into a remote location, movement to an urban area where they confronted an enemy sniper and withdrawl from the MOUT site without detection.

"It is so important for the students to learn this aspect of the skill," Huertas said, "because this is something that more than likely these guys will be called upon to do in the near future."

Huertas' comments stem from the recent use of snipers through the various hot spots around the world to not only eliminate targets, but to gather intelligence as well.



While the class of 30 snipers that took part in this week's field training exercise are now nearing completion of the training cycle, Huertas said the training is far from over for both the students and the cadre.

"These Soldiers will return to their units with the ability to do their job successfully and correctly," he said. "But the students are not the only ones moving on to other things."

Huertas said those other things include the school's mobile training team that will soon be deployed to take the sniper school show on the road.

Once in action, the team will move throughout Europe teaching Infant ymen in the field how to become one of the Army's elite snipers.

Soldiers desiring to tackle the five-week course and become one of the elite sniper sect should contact their unit PAC clerk or make their chain of command aware of their desire to be one of the best.

Sniper student Spc. Julian Anglen looks for an enemy sniper from inside a darkened building at McKenna MOUT site. The search for the sniper challenged the students to test their identification skills in an urban setting while facing an opposing force. Training such as this is becoming more relevant to today's modern sniper as deployments to urban battlefields around the world are occurring more often.

Air Force brass get an up-close look at Benning's best

After watching a 45-minute Rangers in Action demonstration, Air Force Lt. Col. Warren Fontenot said, "It makes me proud to be an American, and I'm glad it's them and not me."

Fontenot and about 260 of his fellow Air War College students from Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., visited Fort Benning Sept. 9.

Lieutenant colonels and colonels from the Air Force, Army, Navy and Marines, as well as foreign officers and civilians attend the 10-month-long school. Each year during the senior service college's Army Week, students travel to Fort Benning for a taste of Army life. The week covers military decision-making and planning, culminating in a ground war simulation exercise.

Their day on post included a combined arms live fire exercise and land warrior demonstration, lunch with Soldiers at the Infantry Training Brigade and an airborne demonstration.

"We will show them a little bit of what we do at Ranger School," Col. Frank Helmick, Ranger Training Brigade commander, said before the demonstration at Hurley Hill.

"This demonstration really showcases the Ranger instructors here. There are no better non-commissioned officers in all of the Army than the NCO RIs," Helmick said. "They are the quiet professionals."

They, and their demolitions, didn't seem quiet during the well-rehearsed demonstration, presented at every Ranger School graduation. The demonstration gives a brief history of the Rangers and covers the different phases of Ranger School.

"It was good to see how the Rangers train and what they offer to the Department of Defense," said Air Force Lt. Col. Yancey Walker, a medical officer. "especially with the special missions that we (the military) are getting into now."

Experts field new lighter, more effective mask

Equipment will be cheaper to replace

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

It will be the lightest, most comfortable protective mask service members have ever used, Army Col. Steven V. Reeves said.

Reeves, project manager for nuclear, biological and chemical defense systems, said the Joint Service General Purpose Mask will replace five different masks used by Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines.

Impetus for the new mask was the Gulf War.

"We set up a repair facility and we had Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines bringing us seven different types of masks," said Rick Decker, mask project team leader. "We had a heck of a job trying to establish the logistics trail, getting the spare parts for each mask."

Military officials said the services experience the same type of environment, so there really was no need for each service to develop its own mask. The joint-service mask, being developed at the Army's Soldier and Biological Chemical Command, will protect wearers from battlefield concentrations of chemical and biological agents and toxic industrial chemicals. The services will buy 3.5 million masks.

> "It (the new mask) is lighter than the current M-40 mask and easier to see through than previous masks."
> — Col. Steven V. Reeves
> Nuclear, biological and chemical defense systems project manager

"Joint-service officials sought to make the mask more comfortable," Reeves said. "It's lighter than the current M-40 mask and easier to see through than previous masks."

"Unlike some prior masks that had binocular eyepieces, the joint-service mask has a single eyepiece," Reeves said. "This gives the service member much greater field of view. We're testing this vision piece to ensure it will interface with night vision equipment, any weapon-sighting systems, as well as individual weapons."

He said the filter technology is probably the biggest and most radical change advancement. One team objective is to reduce breathing resistance by half, he said. This means it won't be so tiring to use because it will take less work to breath.

"There is a counterpoint," Reeves said. Joint forces operating in urban environments could be exposed to toxic industrial chemicals, he noted. The traditional mask protection in such arenas is to use denser filters, which makes it harder for wearers to breathe. He said the team is committed to creating an extra-strength filter with no breathing penalty.

The M-40 series of masks used today by the Army and the Marine Corps is the best in the world, Reeves said. It protects users against current battlefield chemical and biological threats, but not industrial chemicals, he noted. Another drawback, he said, is the NATO standard filter canister that be mounted to either side of the mouth. The new mask integrates the filters back into the mask, Reeves said.

Other aspects joint service planners are designing into the mask will make it easier to maintain. "One unique aspect of the filter is something we're calling the 'service-life indicator,'" Reeves said. "We're going to embed a small color patch in the mask filter — green will mean the filter is ready to go; red means you need to replace the filter." The planners got the idea from similar indicators used on toothbrushes.

Another idea is to color-code parts inside the mask that need maintenance.

"We're making the valves blue. That'll make it easier for service members and those maintaining the mask," Decker said. "(The valves) don't have to be black or green; we're not camouflaging the inside of the mask." The one-piece design makes the mask easy to clean, he added.

Reeves said the team hopes to hold the cost to $50 per mask. At that low price, the mask is virtually disposable if it becomes unserviceable, he said.

Designers are testing the mask with Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines. Decker said tests are planned aboard an Aegis cruiser; at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.; during an Marine Corps amphibious exercise at Camp Lejeune, N.C.; and at Fort Polk, La.

Finally, there is the new issue of homeland defense. The mask design is intended to be certified by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration and the National Institute on Occupational Safety and Health, Reeves said.

"So as we start looking at the terrorist threat around the United States, we also had to have a mask that first responders — police departments and fire departments — could also use," he said. "Many states and counties require OSHA and NIOSH certification for lifesaving apparatus."

Army Career and Alumni Program

Many separating Soldiers find opportunities, good pay, benefits and chances for advancement in the manufacturing and production segment of industry.

In the local area there are spinning mills and clothes production, battery and small engine manufacturing, jet engine components, printing production, textile equipment manufacturing, building products, paper products manufacturing and many more, said Diana Ermi, one of Fort Benning's ACAP Job Assistance counselors.

Many Soldiers have developed the skills and experience needed by the manufacturing companies in the Columbus area as well as around the country. Skills with machinery, equipment operations and maintenance, creating safe work environments, dedication to on-time mission accomplishment and strong supervision and management skills make Soldiers qualified to begin second careers in manufacturing, Ermi said.

Soldiers often begin by filling key positions on manufacturing or production lines and then rise quickly based on their desire and ability to higher level supervisory positions. This is a trend ACAP counselors have heard about over and over from Soldiers and companies alike.

Manufacturing companies usually offer excellent pay and benefits packages depending on the industry, location, and degree of skilled workforce. After an initial waiting period, employees receive medical and dental programs, 401K and profit sharing retirement savings and investment plans and life insurance options as well. A good benefits package can add as much as 25 percent to the salary. Good manufacturing companies will offer a good benefits package to stay competitive and attract top workers into their work teams.

For more information about ACAP, visit the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Hicks

Name: Meta Alfreda Hicks
Hometown: Leesville, La.

Volunteer title: ACS Volunteer Supervisor
Why do you volunteer? Besides my job duties, upon entering and exiting the workplace, my personal key points of volunteering are to give a hug to a spouse, share a laugh with a co-worker, spread a smile to a Soldier and exchange a handshake to our retirees.

What do you like most about volunteering? I was offered the opportunity to share my time and skills in a goodwill way and assist in meeting the needs of others. Seeing the accomplishments and results have given me great pride in volunteering and a high respect for those I work with.

What others say about your contribution? Ms. Hicks is a true professional. She integrates with all of the ACS program managers and has the necessary skills to provide support to Soldiers and family members. She has an endearing personality and is driven to ensure positive volunteer service. She is extremely professional, dependable, mature, sincere and honest in character.

MACH offers free cancer screenings

Maj. Francis Schanne
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Health Promotion Center of Martin Army Community Hospital, Preventive Medicine Service and the Urology Department of MACH will be joining the American Cancer Society and hospitals across the country in offering free prostate cancer screenings, counseling and educational literature during Prostate Awareness Week Monday through Sept. 26.

The event will be highlighted by the free screening in the MACH Urology Clinic the following week on Sept. 29 and Oct. 1.

The incidence of prostate cancer is decreasing and with efforts like Prostate Cancer Awareness, the number of deaths per year due to prostate cancer is decreasing. This is because the surgical and or radiation treatment of prostate cancer works best when the cancer is found early.

In 1999, the estimated number of new cases of prostate cancer is 179,300 with 37,000 deaths due to prostate cancer. This makes it the most common cancer in men except skin cancer. Prostate cancer is two times more common in African Americans than in whites and two times more common in men with a family history of prostate cancer than in men with no family history of prostate cancer.

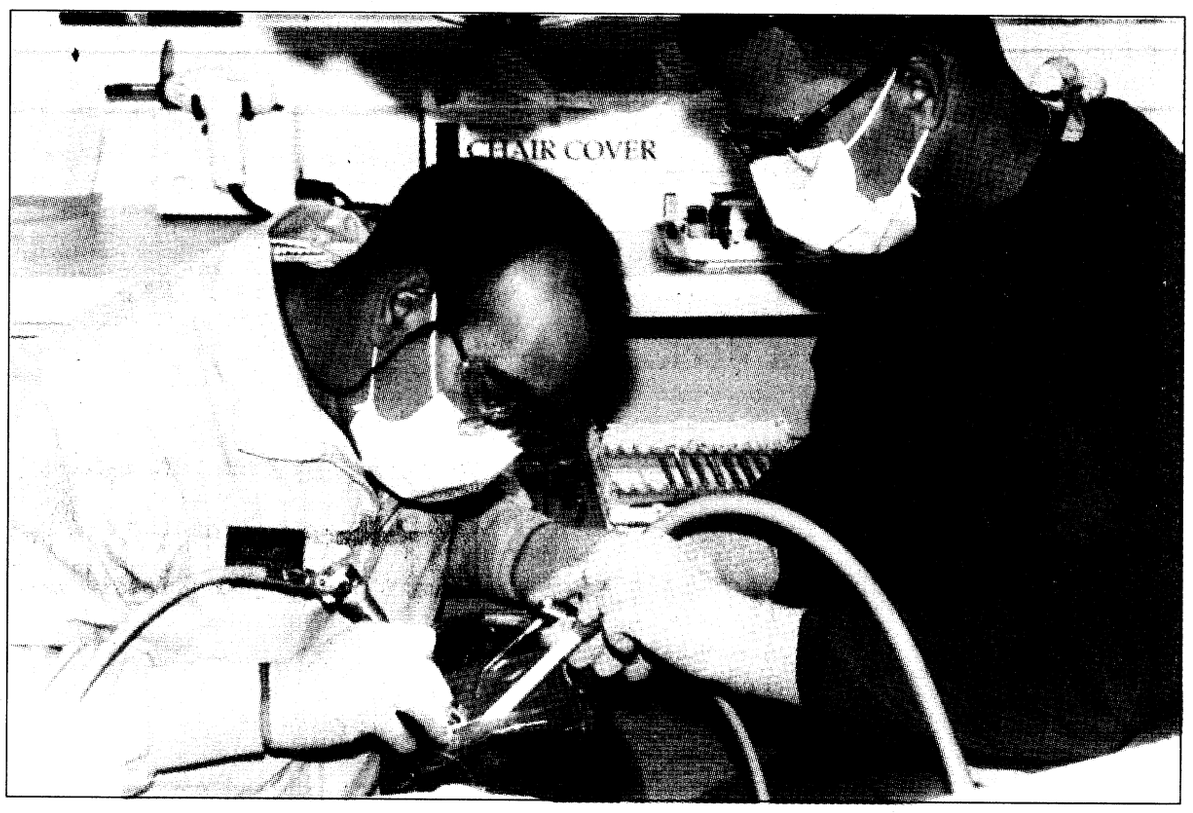
Prostate cancer is highly treatable when detected early. However, it is most often silent in its early stages. That is why it is vital to screen for the cancer through the use of PSA and digital rectal exam. PSA is prostate specific antigen, a protein secreted into the blood by the prostate. The amount of PSA in your blood can be an indication of your risk of having prostate cancer. That is, men with a high PSA level are more likely to have prostate cancer.

African Americans and men with a family history of prostate cancer should begin yearly PSA and rectal exams at age 40. All other men should begin at age 50. More information can be obtained by contacting Drs. Stephen Lee and Francis Schanne, MACH, at 544-2292, Department of Urology. Visit the web site: http://doctor.medscape.com.

The Health Promotion Center will provide health educational literature and displays at various gyms, units, Main Exchange and MACH. More information and counseling can be obtained by calling Alfreta Gibson at the Health Promotion Center at 545-1987.

Soldier wins Cuban lottery, ticket to freedom

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©



When Spc. Luis Lozada won the lottery in 1995, he felt as if he was the luckiest man on earth. This wasn't an ordinary lottery yielding wealth for a single lucky winner, but one held for the sole purpose of granting freedom to Cuban citizens and their families.

An immigration agreement between the U.S. and Cuba, in which the U.S. guaranteed visas to Cuban citizens, and Cuba, who in good faith agreed to release them, allowed Cubans to immigrate in 1995.

However, after winning the lottery, the Lozada family was uncertain as to whether or not Cuban authorities would grant their release because Cuba had a lot invested in Lozada. After spending six years in medical school and three years in residency, Lozada became a neo-natologist, (a pediatric doctor specializing in the treatment of premature and critically ill newborn babies) and, like everyone in Cuba, was restricted by the government.

"They (the Cuban government) put me through school, and I belonged to them. I, like most others, had no choices, guarantees or freedoms. For people who have never visited Cuba, it is tough to understand why someone would want to leave — the people of Cuba have no rights," Lozada said. "There was no hope for my family or our future because my monthly salary of 400 Cuban peso (equivalent to $3.50) would never get us ahead."

Lozada said he loved his job and although working with critically ill babies in the intensive care unit was stressful, it was extremely fulfilling. "Other than family, my job is the only thing I miss about Cuba," he said.

Today, Lozada, a dental assistant with U.S. Army Dental Activity believes millions of Cuban citizens filed with the U.S. Immigration that year, but it was not until he arrived in America did he realize how blessed he really was. Shortly after arriving in America his 2-year-old daughter became very ill and needed immediate medical treatment.

Seminar educates, informs support groups

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The Installation Volunteer Coordinator Office has a mission for the Soldiers and family members of Fort Benning. That mission is to learn the ins and outs of one of a units most vital assets — the family support group. And with a new venture called Operation: FSG, the aim is to do just that.

According to Jill Crider, IVC coordinator, Operation: FSG is a one-day seminar intended to educate and inform FSG leadership about how to manage a successful support group.

The seminar, which is scheduled for Oct. 13 will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the FUN Center, Building 359. Teachers from the IVC Office, Army Family Team Building and Leadership Seminar will cover everything from volunteer management, communication skills and grief leadership to Fort Benning history and protocol, customs and courtesies.

Crider stressed that while the seminar is aimed at FSG management, such as advisors and representatives, it is open to all ranks and family members. Anyone who is interested must register by Sept. 29 to ensure they will have a spot available to them. The seminar is free and lunch will be provided.

All of the classes will teach Soldiers and family members about important skills that are needed to operate a FSG, Crider said. Things such as proper communication, dealing with crisis and conflict, and working as a group.

The seminar will also educate attendees about Fort Benning itself. Learning about policies, regulations and traditions unique to Fort Benning is vital to maintaining a FSG, she said.

"FSGs aren't governed by rules or regulations, which allows commanders authority for flexibility," Crider said. "The point being, we want people here at Fort Benning to understand how FSGs work at Fort Benning and tailor them to the mission they have at their units. Because, what worked at Fort Campbell or Fort Hood may not necessarily work here."

Another thing Operation: FSG hopes to do is clear up any misconceptions about what a FSG is, Crider explained.

"I think there is a lot of misunderstanding about what FSGs are," she said. "FSGs are not there to baby sit, taxi drive or be a bank, but were established to maintain support, whether that be with a phone call, morale building activities or outreach and information."

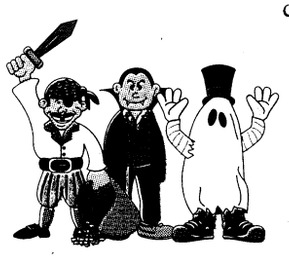
She said FSGs are important because they provide a common bond between families who are experiencing the same kinds of stresses.

"I want families to have peace of mind. Sometimes it's just the 'what ifs' that freak people out. So having a common group or link of support people going through the same thing can be very comforting. And if we can educate and help family leaders every time a spouse deploys, the impact is less traumatic."

Crider said because of the constant turnover of people going through Fort Benning the hope is that Operation: FSG will become an annual event.

For more information or to register for Operation: FSG call 545-3016.

Fort Benning outlines rules for trick or treating



Directorate of Public Safety

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 30 (the only day "trick or treating" is permitted).

Children under 13 years old are allowed to trick or treat. An older person (14 years or older) must accompany pre-school children.

Trick or treating is limited to only the housing area in which the participants reside, and only residences with lighted entry ways should be approached.

Children should wear light-colored, fire resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or "glow" spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

Wear masks or head coverings that do not restrict vision. Use colorful facial makeup in lieu of masks as much as possible.

Pet owners should take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

Ensure children carry flashlights after dark. If a child carries a pumpkin, it should be lit with a battery device, not a candle.

Never let your child eat anything until you have inspected the treats. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes trick or treating.

Post reuses multitude of products

Walter Nichols
Directorate of Public Works

What happens to the white office paper, metal, glass, plastic food containers and cardboard that is recycled? The various materials collected for recycling on Fort Benning are sent to many different places and reused or converted into a multitude of products.

Fort Benning recyclable material is collected weekly and is delivered to the Fort Benning Material Recovery Facility Recycling Center located at Building 4000, Old Cusseta Road in Harmony Church. It is then processed and shipped to the highest paying recycling industries and converted into new products, or it is recycled and used on post.

Fort Benning's Recycling Program is unique because so much of the material collected is processed and reused on post, instead of purchasing more costly commercially available items. An example of this is the conversion of wood waste, low value mixed paper and yard waste into valuable mulch and compost. This mulch is used to repair erosion damage and to establish vegetation on construction sites after projects are completed.

Here is a quick rundown where Fort Benning's recyclable material goes and what eventually happens to it:

White office paper

This is sorted to remove contaminants and non-white paper. The resulting valuable product is sold to the highest bidder. It is used to manufacture high-grade office paper; however, it can be used as feedstock (major ingredient) for making other paper products.

Because of its value, Fort Benning's used white office paper can wind up in recycling mills almost anywhere in the world.

Corrugated cardboard

This is one of the highest tonnage recyclable materials generated on Fort Benning. There have been recent price increases for recycled cardboard, with more predicted in the near future.

Fort Benning can bring in considerable revenue and at the same time reduce waste disposal costs, if everyone makes a greater effort to recycle by using the green cardboard collection dumpsters. Cardboard collected in these green dumpsters is sold to mills located throughout the southeastern states, returning money to Fort Benning. Cardboard put in the brown dumpsters is buried and we all pay for it.

Low value mixed paper and old newspaper

Mixed paper includes colored paper, magazines, catalogs and paperboard boxes. While not as valuable a commodity as white office paper, this can either be sold to the highest bidder or can be blended with yard and wood waste to produce compost.

Market value determines whether this lower value paper mix is used here on post or sold to mills where it can be used in the manufacture of tissue paper, paperboard and other paper products.

Aluminum food and beverage cans

These are baled into small one-foot cubes, and are sold to smelters, usually in southern states. Recycling aluminum cans saves considerable electrical energy and reduces water pollution when compared to making aluminum from natural ore.

By recycling, the need to import bauxite ore from other countries is reduced. All types of aluminum products can be made using aluminum cans.

Steel and tin food and beverage containers

These cans are also baled into small cubes and sold to mills. The tin and other coatings are reclaimed and recycled. The steel is processed and used in car bodies, bridges, appliances, armor plate, weaponry, etc.

Plastics

Various types of plastic are used to manufacture park benches, artificial lumber, textiles, insulation and furniture. High quality carpet and expensive outdoor wear can be made from plastic soda bottles.

Fort Benning sorts plastic by type and bales the compacted containers at the recycling center into large bales (approximately 800-1000 pounds) for sale to mills.

Yard waste

Processed grass clippings, leaves and clean wood waste is blended and processed into compost for on post use. By using this material, Fort Benning diverts thousands of tons from landfills avoiding thousands of dollars in landfill costs.

When used instead of commercial compost and mulch, Fort Benning saves even more money. There is an added environmental benefit realized when this recycled mulch is used in erosion control projects; the level of silt in the streams is reduced.

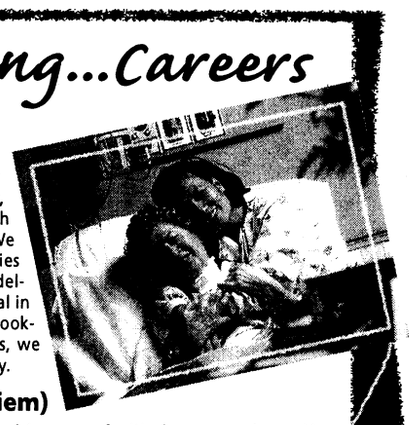
Glass food and beverage containers

Glass is processed at the Recycling Center by grinding it into a sand-like material. It can be used for certain construction projects and as filter media to improve quality of water. If market price of glass increases, Fort Benning has the option to sell glass to the highest bidder.

Used automobile oil

Oil is collected and transported to the Central Heating Plant, where it is used to supplement fuel oil for heating. Recycling used oil saves fuel and avoids disposal costs.

Fort Benning has greatly reduced the amount of resources it disposes in landfills. In 1993 Fort Benning sent 47,950 tons of material to landfills. In 1998 that had decreased to 15,800 tons, which was only about one-third of the 1993 total.



This reduction saves Fort Benning, considering the current cost of collecting, processing and transporting waste in addition to landfill fees totals approximately $60 per ton. There are hidden costs avoided too; material sent to landfills has the potential to cause serious environmental problems, such as air pollution and contamination of water resources.

Holding down costs is not the whole story. But also increased revenues and produced valuable products for use on post, thanks to stepped-up recycling. The bottom line: recycling creates high quality employment in the private sector, protects the environment, conserves limited natural resources and reduces disposal costs.

Volunteering benefits schools

Potential volunteers met at Dexter Elementary School Sept 9 to find out more about the various volunteer programs available at the school.

Parental involvement is critical for academic success, Vicki Rogers, Dexter principal, said.

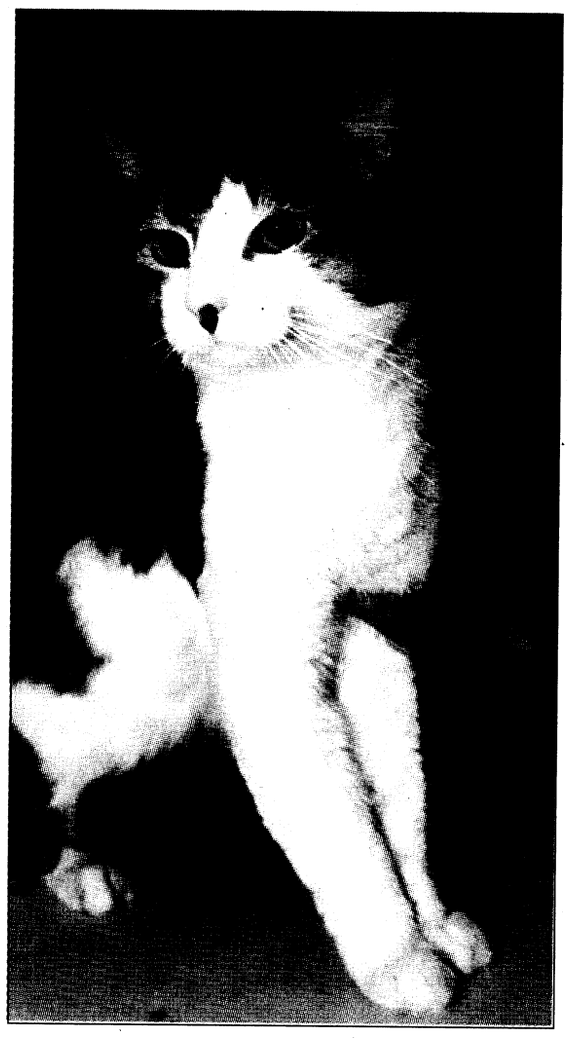
"If parents are involved in their children's work, it makes a difference in their attitude," she said. "The children work harder."

One volunteer is Margret Maldonado, who is president of the Dexter Parent Teacher Organization. She said she joined PTO because of her daughters, Brittani and Mercedes.

"They like for me to participate," she said. "It makes them feel important. Brittani even said it shows that I care."

In addition to volunteering in classrooms and the library, parents can become co-teachers and participate in the Giraffe program, Partners in Print and Family Night Math.

A citizenship program, the Giraffe program, is about sticking your neck out for others.



The Partners in Print program is a parent-led program that teaches parents how to read with their children.

A new program for Dexter is Family Night Math, which is designed to teach parents how to help their children with math problems.

Soldiers and civilian employees are encouraged to volunteer as part of the president's initiative America Goes Back to School.

Volunteering, said Barbara Reeves, the parent key communicator and school board representative for Dexter, shows her children that school is important.

"My kids enjoy seeing me here supporting them. If I show them I care about school, then they will too."

DoDEA to increase number of school counselors

Staff Sgt. Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense Education Activity plans to nearly double the number of counselors and psychologists in its schools by June 2000 to help students deal with increasing stresses in military family life.

Ray Tolleson, DoDEA interim director, said the first 48 of 200 new counselors and psychologists are already aboard at work. The hirings, he said, are in response to parents' concerns about their children, particularly in Europe, where the high rate of deployments has increased family disruptions.

With the new hires, DoDEA schools will achieve the American School Counselor Association's recommended ratio of one counselor for every 300 students. Most public schools never meet that target ratio, Tolleson said.

DoDEA's school system previously had 226 counselors, spokesman Jim Jarrard said. Although the initial need was identified in Europe, he said, the new staff members are being added throughout the DoDEA system. In total, overseas schools will hire 147 new staff members, while domestic schools will get about 45, he added.

Tolleson stressed the increase in counseling staff doesn't signal an increase in behavioral or emotional problems among students. It's merely one more way to make students more successful, he said.

"This is going to guarantee closer contact with students," he said. "Additional counselors to help students plan for the future, whether it be in college or in a vocational program, can only help strengthen the educational program."

Tolleson said the new counselors are helpful because military families face issues many others never have to — deployments, field duty, frequent moves, and living in foreign countries.

"If you look at Europe particularly, families are often disrupted by the deployment of their military member to places like Bosnia or Kosovo," he said.

Despite this, he said, he is impressed by how well students in military schools cope.

"It's amazing how students from military families adjust to what would be for most of us very difficult changes," he said. "But we haven't seen any of that manifested in overt discipline problems."

In fact, just the opposite is true, according to DoDEA communications director Pat Lambe. The incidence of all types of violence is significantly lower at DoDEA schools — in some cases, zero — compared with what you might find reported nationally, she said.

Tolleson said standardized test scores haven't dropped either — DoDEA students hold their own against students from across the country. "That says a great deal about the students we have in this school system," he said.

He said the role of the school counselor has changed in recent years.

"At one time counselors were seen as an arm of administration," he said. "They supervised basketball games and dances."

Traditional counselors of the past were there more to help you pick a college or tell you what your aptitude was.

"We're seeing a swing to a broader concept," he continued. "Now, part of their job is to make sure students' school experience is a successful one. If something's getting in the way of that, a counselor is there to help the student work through it."

For instance, he said, if a student is having difficulties in a particular class, a counselor might recommend a shift to another class. Or if a child is having trouble adjusting to a new school, a counselor might help the child learn how to better deal with stress and make decisions in a positive way.

Tolleson said students may seek out a counselor or teachers may refer them.

"More often than not, a student will say, 'I need some help,' and just make an appointment," he said. "Teachers play an important role because they see the student every day. It wouldn't be atypical for a teacher to talk to a counselor and say, 'Talk to this child. I think there may be some problems.'"

Cuban: Gains freedom

American hospital I was completely amazed at the advanced technology used and the modern equipment," Lozada said.

Within hours the doctors discovered that Aurora had a malformed kidney and bladder and would need surgery to live a near-normal life.

"The operation took five hours and would not have been possible in Cuba. Winning the lotto brought us to America but I believe God had a plan because my daughter would probably not be with us today if we had stayed in Cuba."

Life in Cuba was isolated from the outside world and while living in Cuba, Lozada was completely unaware of life in free countries. He now feels great sadness for Cuban citizens, especially the children.

"I am overjoyed to be raising my children in such a wonderful place. I am grateful for my job in the Army because the Army provides everything I need to raise my family successfully."

Sgt. 1st Class Guadalupe Escobar-Shank, NCOIC of the Bernheim Dental Clinic, said that she never met a more motivated Soldier than Lozada.

"At first I thought the transition from doctor to dental assistant would be difficult for Lozada but after getting to know him and watching him work with patients I realized that he gets a great deal of satisfaction from helping patients," she said. "I hope everything goes well for him in the Army."

Lozada currently spends his days at the dental clinic and studies for his upcoming medical boards at night.

"My goal is to pass the boards and my dream is to be a doctor again possibly in the Medical Corps," he said. "I am not sure of the requirements to get in the Medical Corps but I hope to someday do what I love most — helping little babies."

ask the judge

Capt. Stephanie Sanderson
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

I have received a notice in the mail from the IRS that says my tax return is wrong, and that I owe a lot of money. What does this mean? Is this a tax audit? I got my taxes figured for me at QuickoTax, but they are not open anymore. What do I do now?

Don't panic! Just because you have been sent a notice does not mean that you actually owe money to the government. Further, it does not mean that you are about to go to jail or lose your house.

It is most likely that this document is a computer-generated letter which has identified a problem with your return. It can be a minor error, or it can be an undeclared income. But it is not a tax audit.

The federal income tax laws are "self-reporting" — that is, we file a tax return telling the federal government how much money we made, our exemptions, how many dependents we have, what deductions we want to claim and even how much we owe in taxes. When we send this information in to the IRS, it is entered in computers. Eventually, this information is checked against other sources of information: the W2s filed by employers, the interest statements sent in by banks, dependents claimed by taxpayers on their returns, stock brokerage reports and the like.

Many times, the figures we sent in do not agree with the computer cross-check. When this happens, the computer generates a letter that automatically re-computes your tax using their version of the information on hand. As a result, the letter may indicate that money is owed. The letter will usually indicate what facts they changed in your return. Keep in mind that they have decided what the error seems to be, but they have not actually audited your return.

A first step in getting the facts is to look at your tax return for the year indicated. If you do not save old tax returns and supporting documents, your task will be much harder. You can compare the IRS computer-generated version of the tax return with your own, and find out if you think they are right. Then call IRS directly. The letter usually will give a number, where a representative will call up the letter on the computer and discuss the problem with you.

Remember, the letter may be mistaken. For example, the letter might show income of $5,000 more than you reported last year. When you call, you find out that the income was earned at Acme Bicycle Company, and you know that you have never worked there. Perhaps someone else has been working using your name and your social security number. Another call may reveal that your ex-wife claimed your child on her tax return, even though the divorce decree says you can claim the child. In both of these cases, you will have to make sure that you communicate with IRS, but if you do so, you would not owe additional tax.

Of course, if it appears that you owe additional tax, it will be necessary to make arrangements to pay. If you cannot pay what is owed, first seek waiver of penalties assessed against you for late payment. This can work when you can establish that the error was made in good faith. Unfortunately, the interest on past due tax cannot be waived.

Finally, it may be necessary to consider installment payments to IRS, using their Form 9465, which is intended for that purpose. The IRS will try to accommodate a pay plan that meets your budget.

After you have the background, it may be that more assistance is needed.

Then, call the Legal Assistance Office for an appointment. Call 545-3282 and get started.

BBB suggests tips for reliable car repair service

Better Business Bureau

If you're the typical car owner, you may not know much about the mechanics of your vehicle. When it's time for repairs, however, you should know how to locate a reliable shop and a qualified mechanic.

If you have a problem with your car while it's still under warranty, follow the manufacturer's requirements, which may include having repairs made at an authorized, franchised dealership, to keep your warranty in effect.

If your car is no longer under warranty and you're looking for a qualified, independent repair shop, look for shops that display certification — like an Automotive Service Excellence (ASE) seal.

ASE certification indicates that some or all of the technicians have met basic standards of knowledge and competence in specific technical areas. Make sure the certificates are recently obtained.

However, certification alone is not an absolute guarantee of good or honest work. If major repairs are required, you may want to find a dealer or repair shop specializing in the type of repair needed. If you are in doubt about what the problem is, let the shop diagnose the problem. You may cost yourself money by requesting a specific repair that may not in fact solve the problem.

Always get an estimate for parts and labors.

When you pick up your car, ask the service manager to explain all work completed and all replacements made. Also, ask that any major new parts that have been installed be pointed out to you, if possible. If the shop guarantees its work, get the guarantee in writing. Be sure that your bill itemizes the repairs so if a problem occurs later, you can prove that the item in question is covered by the guarantee.

Jewish community prepares for holy day

Lt. Col. Randolph J. Kranepuhl
USAIC Chaplains Office

Yom Kippur is the holiest day of the Jewish year. It is marked by intensive prayer and by a complete fast, refraining from all food, water or any sustenance of any type from evening to evening.

reflections

There is a legend that atonement was achieved during the Exodus from Egypt as marked by Moses' bringing down the second set of tablets containing the 10 Commandments on Yom Kippur.

The Lord spoke to Moses saying, "... the tenth day of this seventh month is the day of atonement — It shall be a holy convocation to you, and you shall afflict your souls; ... You shall do no work." Most Jews spend nearly the entire day in their synagogue, shul or temple praying for themselves and the world that we should all be worthy in God's sight for another year of life and health.

A key to Yom Kippur is the theme of forgiveness and atonement. In Judaism, the first evening's service is called "Kol Nidre" (all vows) is a prayer asking for God's forgiveness for vows to God not completed and annulment of these vows.

This does not mean that God forgives our transgressions against our fellow human beings. God (we hope) will forgive us for our transgressions against him. God will not forgive us for our transgressions against our fellow persons. God tells us that only the person whom we have wronged can make this forgiveness. Prayer will not right even a single wrong done to our fellow human beings.

Common customs include not wearing leather shoes. On this day, we remember that all living things are God's creations, even those we use for our own survival. Bathing done for relaxation is forbidden. All Jewish people fast except children under 9 years of age and anyone in poor health. The most sacred thing in Judaism is the preservation of life — almost any commandment may be broken to save a life. The wearing of white is common on Yom Kippur to symbolize purity and humility.

As the day ends, the closing ceremony, known as the "Neilah," represents the closing of the gates of heaven and the completion of the process of atonement and judgement. As we leave our places of worship, we all hope that we have been found worthy of life for another year. There is generally a "breakfast" meal with family and friends.

Yom Kippur services will be conducted at the synagogue and temple in Columbus.

Marriage is risky business

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

If just getting married to be married is your reason for marriage, you're in for a big let down.

reflections

Ed Young in his great book on marriage and family, Romancing the Home, writes: "You can get in big trouble married; you can get in big trouble not married. Marriage is not the panacea many believe it to be."

In most states, if not all of them, it is more difficult getting a driver's license than it is a marriage license. Most couples just are not prepared for marriage and simply think that love will keep them together. One young couple came to me and wanted to change the marriage vows from "as long as we both shall live" to "as long as we both shall love," it's just not the simple.

I have yet to meet any couple who go into marriage contemplating divorce. Yet couples marrying today have more than a 50 percent chance of getting divorced. And while statistics exist, many couples remain married even though they are unhappy in their marital relationship. Marriage is a risky business, probably the most risk routinely taken on by the greatest number of people in our society.

Marriage is not an end. It is a beginning. Couples who prepare for marriage have a better chance of staying happily married. In one study couples completing a premarital training course had a significantly lower divorce rate as compared to a group of couples who had not gone through premarital training.

If you are getting married, seek out an effective pre-marriage training course. Most pastors and chaplains offer this training for couples they are marrying.

The Fort Benning Family Life Chaplain Center also offers a monthly pre-marriage training class.

For more information, call the center at 545-2050.

Members of OCS Class 4-99 participated in the competition, which is held semi-annually. This was the fourth straight competition the Army OCS competitors have won. Their win secured not only bragging rights, but "the bomb," an inert training round, which serves as the JMAC trophy.

YS fall sports begin

The start of fall sports is synonymous with the turning of the leaves. Across the country millions of children don their cleats, practice cheering and prepare uniforms for the upcoming sport season.

More than 500 Fort Benning youth will participate in this tradition as the Youth Services recreational sports program kicks off.

Thirty-two soccer and football teams, along with 10 cheerleading squads, officially began practices Sept. 13 and will continue practicing until opening day Sept. 25. Tackle football will open Oct. 2 due to an extra conditioning week, without pads, added for safety reasons.

Youth Services will have a fresh start this year with a revamped football program that follows the Columbus Youth Football League's rules and regulations. Changes to the program include; age appropriate grouping, strict adherence to minimum weights and the tracking of weight restricted players.

"Safety was the number one issue when we considered making changes to the tackle football program," said Linda Laine, director of YS. "Although in the past we have had no problems, the policy changes will benefit the athletes by promoting safety along with fair competitive play."

In addition to the football modifications, Laine said that the Soldiers learn hand-to-hand

11th Inf. Regt. participates in combatives training

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

In the formation stood Soldiers trained in boxing, wrestling, martial arts and various weapons, but on this morning those skills would not be called upon because these Soldiers were entering into a new realm of training — the realm of Jujitsu.

On Sept. 1, officers and NCOs from the 11th Infantry Regiment participated in combative training designed to teach Soldiers the basic skills of hand-to-hand combat. The purpose of the training was to gain skills in the highly effective, basic grappling techniques of Jujitsu.

"Grappling provides a perfect opportunity to train battle focused physical fitness," said Col. Michael Ferriter, 11th Inf. Regt. commander.

The 11th is home to units with unique, diverse missions including the Captains Career Course, Infantry Officer Basic Course, Officer Candidate School, Airborne School and the CONUS Replacement Center. Ferriter said that conducting monthly physical training with the leaders from each of the units builds not only physical fitness but camaraderie as well.

"The common thread between these diverse units is leadership and Infantry ethos," said Ferriter. "Monthly leader physical training brings regimental leaders together to build team work, warrior spirit and friendships while enhancing their physical fitness."

Combative training was selected for the monthly PT, because regardless of a Soldier's size or skill, everyone could participate effectively and leave the training with several new grappling skills.

Sgt. 1st Class Tom Henderson, combatives and Pre-Ranger instructor with the 75th Ranger Regiment, began training in Jujitsu while serving in the 2nd Ranger Battalion as a squad leader. Henderson, along with several NCOs from the 75th, teaches the fundamentals of Jujitsu to Soldiers so when it comes time to close with an enemy they know how to fight and win.

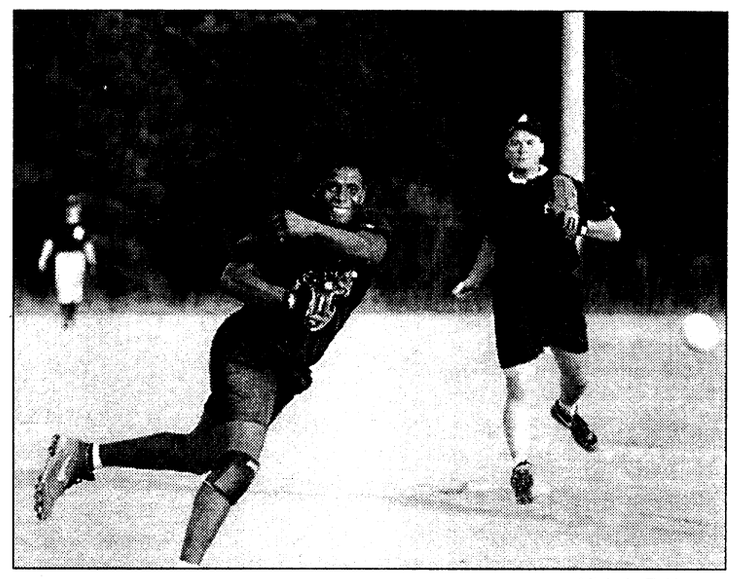
"The Army has always used some form of combatives training — Soldiers who learn Jujitsu will not only be effective with their weapons but also with their hands if needed," Henderson said.

According to Henderson, Jujitsu was developed to be combative but at the same time it can be trained realistically and at full speed without harming the training partner.

"This is an extremely effective form of hand-to-hand combat that is easy to learn and fun. By using an upright technique a smaller person can beat a larger person and a person of equal size and strength will have a greater advantage over their opponent if they are trained in grappling."

Basic technique includes front Guillotine choke, bent-arm bar, rear and front takedowns from a mount and rear-naked choke. Advance techniques such as advanced group grappling, takedowns, strikes, kicks and pressure point and joint manipulation are taught once basic technique is mastered.

Henderson believes that every American has a responsibility not to be a victim and that knowing how to protect yourself leads to less confrontation. Additionally, he believes combatives training enhances the intangible qualities of confidence, mental and physical toughness, and aggressiveness.



"Whatever type of confrontation you come across, whether it be in combat, while walking down the street or in a mall, knowing how to fight is a preventive measure," he said. "There is nothing mystical about Jujitsu. It's about fighting. Don't fight unless you have to but if you have to — then win and win fast."

For information on combatives training or training for units, call Sgt. 1st Class Jason Beil at 545-3799 or Sgt. 1st Class Tom Henderson at 545-3800.

YS: Receives equipment

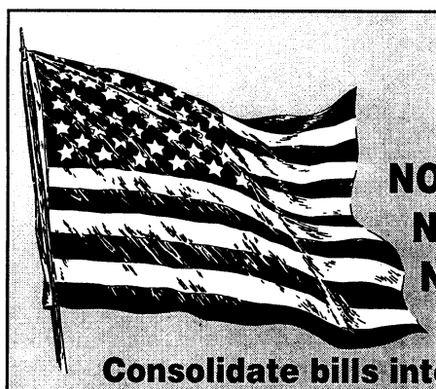
purchase of new helmets, shoulder pads, equipment and uniforms is not just for football but also for soccer, baseball and basketball. Material was purchased and is available to cheerleading coaches who want to sew uniforms or add to the existing uniform.

"We are trying to get the biggest bang for our buck and take advantage of an opportunity we haven't had for years — the funding is nothing but great news for the children and will benefit them in many ways," Laine added.

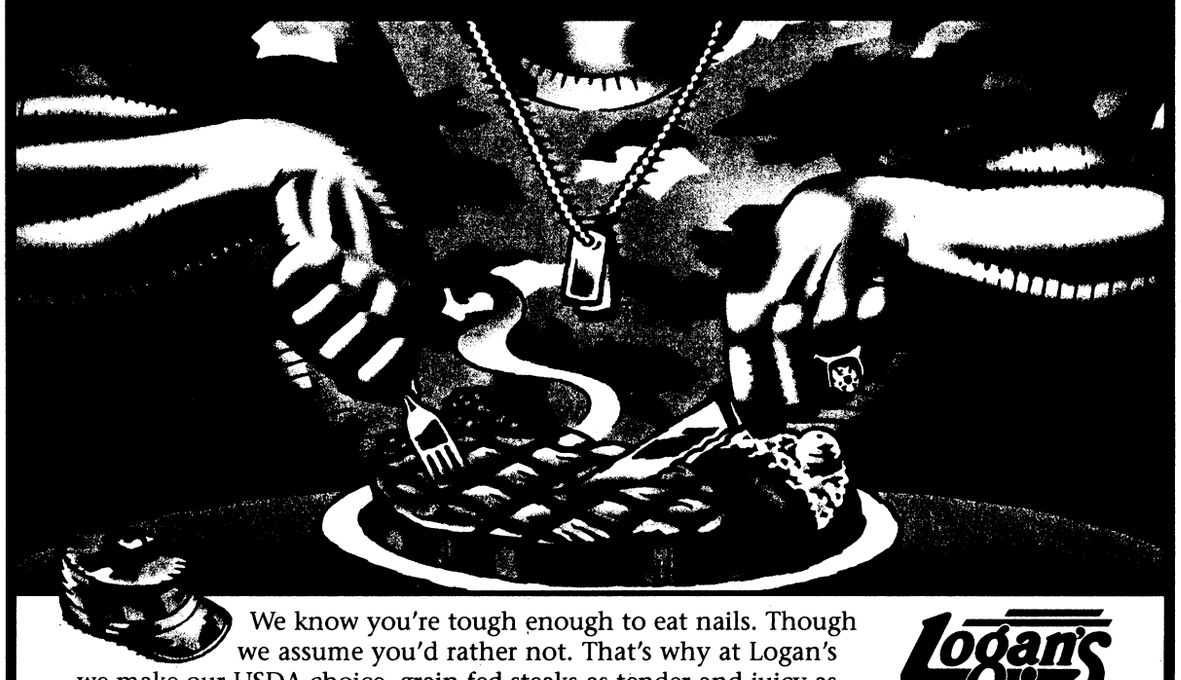
According to Dori Wagner, child and youth program assistant at YS, volunteers, a scarce resource at times, were readily available this season and without them there would not be a sports program.



Mark Bell, an 11- to 12-year-old division football coach and former high school football player, brings experience along with his knowledge of the game to his newly acquired team.

"I have a lot of fun and get just as excited about coaching as the children do playing," Bell said.

The fall soccer program includes 22 teams in all age divisions. Soccer games are held at French Field on Main Post. Flag and tackle football games are held at Green Field on Main Post and each tackle team will play one game at Doughboy Stadium.



Games begin at 9 a.m. Sept. 25 and will continue through Nov. 21. For information on the upcoming sports season, call Youth Services at 545-3070.

Gettin' the game plan

Soldiers move into a building at McKenna MOUT site to plan their attack during the Advanced Concept Training Demonstration exercise. The exercise is a joint service venture that enlists the help of the Marine Corps to enhance the lethality of front-line troops on urban terrain. For full coverage and photos of the on-going exercise, see A-6.

Family housing undergoes changes

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

In the last two months, about 55 Fort Benning families packed up and moved at government expense.

That's not so unusual, except they did so voluntarily — without orders — and not to another Army installation, just to different quarters on post.

The moves were part of a reallocation of post housing designed to balance out waiting lists between the different ranks. Army Regulation 210-50, Housing Management, requires installations to compare family housing assets against current requirements by grade periodically to keep waiting time for housing fairly equal.

When an imbalance exists, commanders can reallocate housing to meet requirements.

The housing office conducted a reallocation study last winter when the waiting time for company-grade officers to get on-post housing was 12 to 18 months. However, senior NCOs were moving into quarters in less than 30 days.

"We had a big imbalance there, and we wanted to correct that with the reallocation," Ron Smith, chief of the family housing branch, said.

The plan also included two directives from then-commanding general Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst: that housing areas be identified for specific ranks, and that quarters continue to be designated for students of the Infantry Captains Career Course (ICCC).

"We had several housing areas on post that were occupied by different grade groups," Smith said.

Indianhead Terrace, for example, is a junior-enlisted area, but there were quarters set aside there for senior NCOs. Also, Bouton Heights had 42 company-grade officers living in a community of more than 400 NCOs.

"Major General Ernst said, 'Let's go one way or the other,'" Smith recalled.

ICCC students were a priority because of the rental market in Columbus.

"If you take an ICCC student who is here for six months, and you send him downtown to sign a lease, he has to pay more than a Soldier who can go down

Callaway hosts golf pros, Soldiers

Once again, Callaway Gardens and Buick, along with AUSA are sponsoring Military Appreciation Day at the Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens today.

Soldiers, family members, reservists, retirees and Department of Defense civilians can attend one of the premier golf tournaments for free. Those not interested in golf can still go and spend the day picnicking with their units or touring the gardens and the Sibley Butterfly Center.

For golf aficionados, the Buick Challenge field will have some of the top golfers in the world competing for the grand prize.

Steve Elkington will be back to defend his title and four members of the victorious Ryder Cup team, Justin Leonard, Jeff Maggert, Davis Love III and Steve Pate, along with team captain Ben Crenshaw, are expected to compete.

Others who made verbal agreements to play are Billy Andrade, Paul Azinger, Chip Beck, Ernie Els, Fred Funk, Robert Gamez, Tom Kite, Billy Mayfair, Craig Stadler, and Curtis Strange.

Since the cutoff is not until Saturday, all golfers should be on hand for Friday's Military Appreciation Day.

Those wishing to attend can either ride up in buses, which will depart from unit parking lots, or drive. Those who drive will need to pay a $3 parking fee.

AUSA and the Morale Welfare and Recreation Department of the Director of Community Activities will also hold a drawing for prizes, which have included bicycles, televisions, and savings bonds.

3rd Bde Soldiers head to Egypt

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Nearly 1,200 Soldiers from Fort Benning's Kelley Hill will board planes and fly to Egypt Oct. 10 to take part in one of the largest deployment exercises to date.

The exercise, Bright Star '99, will bring a coalition of military forces from 11 countries to the sandy training areas of Egypt to enhance joint-service and joint-nation operations in the mid-Atlantic region, according to Lt. Col. Charles Canedy, executive officer, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

"The exercise is all about building cohesion between the coalition forces," Canedy said. "For many of our troops this will be the first time in a joint nation environment and will give them an excellent opportunity to learn how to operate in such an environment."

That learning experience began for the troops earlier this month as they worked around the clock to prepare and then ship their vehicles and equipment to the region.

"It was a great show of our capability to be ready and mobilize within hours," Canedy said about the vehicle and equipment transport. "It simply revalidates our deployment capabilities by sea and rail."

While the equipment portion of the deployment is now complete, Canedy and the other 1,200 Soldiers must now prepare themselves for the month-long training trek to the desert.

"We have been training up for the deployment for quite some time," he said. "All of the gates that need to be opened such as qualifications, have been completed, and we are ready to go."

Pros head to Callaway for tourney

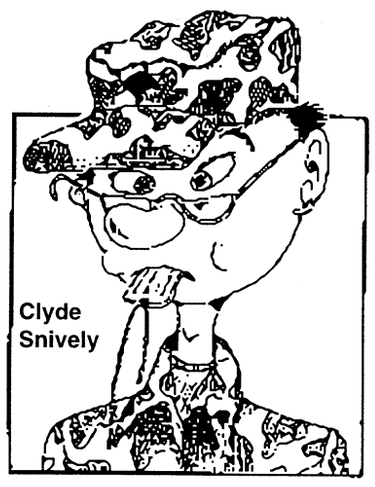
commentary

Golf, is a four-letter word. Spelled backwards, it's flog.

I've tried golf a few times in my life and can tell you those are true statements when it comes to describing my game.

But that won't stop me from heading out to Callaway Gardens today to watch the pros play. Also, I might catch a glimpse of Cheryl Ladd, one of Buick's promoters.



She started playing in 1997 and is down to a 17 handicap already. I was a marshal during the pro-am that year and remember watching her hack her way around the 11th hole. Not a pretty sight. The only thing worse was the Japanese golfer who hit the ball eight times, never got on the fairway and was still short of John Daly's drive.

Anyway, back to Military Appreciation Day. If the weather's decent, I can't think of a better place to be.

First, Callaway Gardens is absolutely beautiful and so is the golf course. Trainees will find it attractive, in that extra banks of phones are installed just for them.

Also there's all that interactive stuff you can try your hand at and find out just how good a golfer you are.

And of course for the trainees, there's all that forbidden food. Dump the sack luncheons, head for the food court, that would be my advice. Okay so it costs some bucks, but hey, when's the last time they sank their teeth into a greasy burger and could wash it down with an ice-cold soda?

Tired of watching some of the best golfers in the world play? Then take a hike. Literally. Get on the walking trails, find the butterfly center, the trout ponds, the flower gardens.

But let's get back to the golfers for just a minute.

Best in the world. Sure they are. Ideal conditions. Fairways with grass on them. Manicured greens. And despite the large galleys, pure silence as the golfer prepares to hit or putt. Well, maybe not pure silence. There are the birds.

Now put those guys on the Fort Benning golf course, and let's see how well they do. Fairways don't always have grass. The greens tend to be spotty and silence. Ha!

Sounds that reach you as you are hitting your stroke can range from M-16 firing to Bradleys firing their 25 mm guns and even the louts who drive by in pickup trucks who think it's cool to honk their horns or yell at you in the middle of your stroke.

Now that's golf.

Come on out Steve Elkington, let's see you defend your title at the Follow Me golf course.

Fort Benning shapes future leaders

commentary

The other day I took a step back from the trees and saw the forest.

While observing an Airborne School graduation that included three of our drill sergeants, I realized the graduation was not only an event of individual achievement but it was collectively an achievement for the Army as an organization. Three drill sergeants made it through a tough Infantry school and undoubtedly led those privates (by example) who had just finished Infantry One Station Unit Training and were now headed out to the Army.

I could tell by the faces of our sergeants and the others there that it was one of those special moments — the ones we all have that seem to go in slow motion, that we can remember in great detail throughout our lives. It was a moment that was associated with hard work and culminated with achievement, accomplishment and satisfaction.

From there I had to hurry to C Company's Turning Green ceremony, the event that marks the end of training for our National Guard Soldiers who are only high school juniors and return next year under the split training option.

At the end of the ceremony, the drill sergeants shook hands with each Soldier and spoke to each one. All were grinning with the look of accomplishment and satisfaction that seemed to say "We've done it ... we've both done it."

Again, I was privileged to witness that special moment they will all remember vividly throughout their lives. Their parents couldn't wait to tell me how proud they were; how the Army and the drill sergeants have provided direction and purpose for their sons and what a wonderful day it was in their lives.

From there I left for Victory Pond and a Ranger School graduation. The Rangers in Action demonstration was finished, but you could still feel the excitement in the air — the energy coming from the hungry, skinny Ranger class and the anticipation of seeing their young wives, children and loved ones.

One of our captains who had completed his company command and had gone to Ranger School en route to the career course was smiling ear to ear. I watched his wife pin on his tab. I felt privileged to witness a moment filled with elation, achievement and success. A moment that young captain and his wife will always remember.

Finally, I came back to the battalion and watched one of our drill sergeants re-enlist. He did it in front of the 220 Soldiers of his newly filled company. The first sergeant explained to the Soldiers what they were going to witness and tied the values classes they received to the oath the drill sergeant would take.

Afterwards the drill sergeant who re-enlisted spoke to the Soldiers. He told them that every day he puts his uniform on he feels the same pride he did the day he graduated from basic training. He spoke about what an honor and privilege it is to serve our country. He spoke of duty, selfless service, personal courage ... As he was speaking I could tell the Soldiers were internalizing, identifying and actually becoming one of us.

As I was driving home that night, I realized the significance of how Fort Benning touched all of them and played a part in their lives. I also realized how much we set the conditions for our Soldiers to achieve those special moments, sometimes in ways we never realize. Those Soldiers will become our drill sergeants, the drill sergeants will become our senior NCOs and that young captain will go far beyond his company command. I saw Fort Benning touch and shape our future leaders.

Day to day it seems we spend a lot of time focusing on fixing immediate problems. We go to meetings, meet suspenses, answer questions, gather resources. We care for our Soldiers and make sure that training is to standard and realistic. Most of the time we are in the trees and hopefully not in the weeds. I had the chance to step back and see the forest ... and felt privileged to witness it, to be part of it. It makes being in the trees most of the time so worth it.

Hispanics make contributions

In recognition of Hispanic Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the period from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 has been proclaimed national Hispanic Heritage Month. This year's theme is A Vision for the Twenty-first Century.

The military and civilian contributions of Hispanics reflect a deep commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy, which are the strengths of the U.S. The Hispanic community has given us generals, admirals, philosophers, statesmen, musicians, athletes and Nobel prize-winning scientists. Members of the Hispanic community and the various Hispanic cultures continue to make significant contributions to our American society.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and in the surrounding communities to participate in this observance through the activities planned by their units, staffs and other post agencies.

Soldier's art transforms into local TV show

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Almost every day someone walks into the station (WCGT, a local independent television station) and thinks they have a great idea for a show. However, most people never develop a script or set. When Don Miller entered the station manager's office with his Uncle Sketchit script in hand, Virgil Thomson knew Miller meant business.

"If I had a nickel every time someone came to me with a television idea, I'd be a rich man," said Virgil Thomson, WCGT station manager. "Miller not only entered my office with a script, he had developed interactive characters and carried meticulous stage development plans."

Thomson said Uncle Sketchit and the Adventure Machine was right on target because of its interactive nature and creativity. "Interactive programming is the way of the future — Uncle Sketchit or one of his cast of characters, interacts with the children throughout the entire show."

Don Miller, a corporal assigned to C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, has drawn cartoons for newspapers, written and illustrated two children's books and currently spends every spare minute working on his newest creation, Uncle Sketchit.

The show takes place in a barnyard with characters ranging from a crow, who narrates the production, to Oscar the talking Oak Tree. Uncle Sketchit, the main character, will take children on daily adventures by using his adventure machine, creating words from letter flowers and drawing simple sketches with the children.

According to Kelly Miller, wife and strong supporter of Uncle Sketchit, Don has always had a lot of creative ideas but this time he has taken an extra step to make a good idea into something special.

"Don has worked hard on the set and has carefully planned out every aspect of the show. He has involved the entire family in the project and it has brought our family closer together," Kelly said.

The show, which is visually interactive for small children, adds a new dimension by using sign language for hearing impaired youngsters who may not be able to read yet. Miller's daughter, Kimberly O'Hara who's a seventh-grade student at Faith Middle School, learned sign language while attending Dexter Elementary School and will sign portions of each show along with the theme song.

Kimberly, who was recently diagnosed with total high frequency hearing loss, accompanied by nerve deafness and deteriorating hearing, is proud of working on a show that reaches out to all children.

"I have a hearing problem so learning to sign is good for me, and I really enjoy communicating with sign language," she said. "I understand how it feels to have a hearing problem, and I think it's cool to help other children effected by hearing loss."

The station will shoot the pilot show this week and plans to use the pilot show to obtain sponsors. Uncle Sketchit and the Adventure Machine will air on Knology, Charter Communications, TCI, Phoenix City Cable and in the fall with Time Warner Cable on Fort Benning.

Cpl. Don Miller arranges the puppets of his new show, Uncle Sketchit.

Miller said he learns as he goes but all in all, working on the show with his family has been a great experience.

"I feel privileged to have an opportunity like this and hope in the near future to get national syndication for our show."

A group of Soldiers glide down the Ocoee River during a recent whitewater rafting trip.

Soldiers go whitewater rafting

Maj. Dennis Wince and Capt. Julie Brown
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, recently participated on a whitewater rafting trip on the Ocoee River in southeastern Tennessee. The group consisted of 30 Soldiers including eight international officers assigned to the International Student Training Detachment.

"We wanted to take a unit with diverse missions and use this trip to assist in building unit identity and teamwork," said Lt. Col. Gary Daniel, battalion commander for 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. "We also wanted to increase morale and esprit de corps within the organization. I think the trip was a big hit."

The trip consisted of a half-hour orientation and safety briefing followed by two hours on the river battling the raging rapids. The river is comprised of Class III and IV rapids and was the site of the kayaking events during the 1996 Summer Olympic Games.

For most of the Soldiers, this was the first time they had ever tried whitewater rafting. While some initially expressed concerns, those fears soon diminished the minute the adventure began.

"We all had a great time," said Vahur Joesalu, a student from the country of Estonia attending Infantry Officer Basic Course 6-99. "I have never done anything like that before."

Other Soldiers echoed these same sentiments.

"It was extremely awesome. I recommend it for all Soldiers," said Pvt. Cindya Martinez, A Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Overall all the trip's participants agreed the trip was an overwhelming success for the battalion.

"It was a very exciting trip, I recommend it for the future to get Soldiers more involved and raise morale," said Sgt. Michael Cochran, A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Based on the feedback from the Soldiers, the battalion is already planning another whitewater adventure for next spring.

Everybody wins with pay, table reforms

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Everyone wins in the military compensation portion of the fiscal 2000 Defense Authorization Bill, said Navy Capt. Elliott Bloxom, DoD director of compensation.

The bill, passed by both houses of Congress Sept. 22, authorizes a 4.8 percent across-the-board pay raise Jan. 1. It also makes pay table reform a reality. Some 75 percent of all service members will receive a further pay raise July 1, 2000.

"The authorization bill is huge in terms of what it will do for our men and women in uniform," Bloxom said.

The changes to basic pay, retirement, fixes to the military pay table and pay raises to DoD civilians total about $35 billion over the next six years. Bloxom said DoD officials proposed the military pay triad in response to the changing demands of U.S. forces today and the competition DoD faces from a vibrant economy.

"We must adequately compensate the men and women in uniform so they will stay with us, instead of being lured to do something else," he said. Also, more military personnel have achieved higher levels of education than in the past and DoD has to adequately reward them, he added.

The president's budget request — submitted to Congress in February — contained a 4.4 percent pay raise. However, 4.4 percent is only .1 percent higher than the employment cost index. The ECI is a series of indices that measure employment cost changes in the private sector. One index measures changes in salaries and wages from year to year.

Congress boosted the pay raise to 4.8 percent, making it the military's largest since fiscal 1981. Further, over the next six years, the authorization bill calls for the annual raise to match the ECI plus .5 percent. So, if the index is 3.9 percent, for instance, the military raise must be 4.4 percent.

The second pay initiative is pay table reform. First, a little history. The current pay tables have been around since 1949 and few changes have been made since, with the exception of adding E-8 and E-9 pay grades in the late 1950s and the chief warrant officer 5 grade recently.

The last two Quadrennial Review of Military Compensation panels recommended pay table reform. It is finally accomplished in the fiscal 2000 authorization.

Post prepares for Retiree Open House Oct 14-15

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The 17th annual Retiree Open House will be held at Fort Benning Oct. 14-15.

Approximately 500 retirees from all branches of service living in Georgia, Alabama and Florida are expected to attend. They will have the chance to receive updated information about their benefits.

"It's important for them to get together with other retirees and to keep abreast about their benefits and entitlements," said Pat Harris, assistant retirement services officer.

Individuals who have pre-registered and have appointments will be given physical exams Oct. 14 at the Physical Exam Section, Building 323, behind the National Infantry Museum.

The 15th kicks off with registration at the Officers' Club starting at 6:30 a.m. Buses will depart the club at 7 a.m. for the Sand Hill Dining Facility where participants are invited to have breakfast with basic trainees. Part of the bus tour will include stopping at a One Station Unit Training graduation.

Lunch will be served from 11 a.m. to noon in the Regimental Room of the Officers' Club. The cost is $7.45.

Different agencies will set up booths in the club for a county fair from 12:30 to 2 p.m. Other agencies will provide services in their offices during the day, without appointments. Those agencies include the ID card section, casualty assistance and legal assistance offices.

Martin Army Community Hospital will sponsor a health and dental fair from 12:30 to 2 p.m. in the mall at the Main Post Exchange.

Retirees who wish to attend should call the Retirement Services Office at 545-2715 or 545-2541.

Uniform changes become effective

Tonya Johnson
Army News Service

Army uniforms will have upcoming changes, and Soldiers will need to replace older uniforms in the future.

There is a new shade in the Army green uniform, in which AG 489 replaces AG 344. "It's a richer, darker green, and it gives the uniform a better appearance," said Master Sgt. Debra Wylie, Uniform Policy Officer for the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

The AG 344 shade is not allowed for wear as of today. Female Soldiers are required to have one Class A jacket, two skirts and two slacks of the new uniform, and male Soldiers should have one Class A jacket and two trousers. According to Wylie, the uniform for females will cost $175 and female officers must pay $4.70 extra for the braid conversion kit for their uniform. The uniform will cost enlisted men $165, and male officers $175. Soldiers need to know that the AG 344 and AG 489 can not be mixed and matched.

As far as Class B uniform changes, there were new changes made in shirts, skirts and slacks for female Soldiers. Female Soldiers can now choose between two shirt styles, a mandatory tuck in shirt, which costs $9.65, and a new overblouse (optional), which costs around $15. Old overblouses cannot be worn after beginning today. The long sleeve version of the tuck-in shirt costs $14.45, according to Wylie.

"The tuck-in shirt is long enough so that the shirt doesn't come out of their pants. The overblouse is designed so that the shirt doesn't come up when a female raises her arm," said Wylie.

Wylie also mentioned that females are required by today to purchase a new wrap around neck tab with hook and pile fastener.

New skirts have been designed for wear, making the former A-line skirt unauthorized after Sept. 30, 2002. Wylie is pleased by the change and said, "I've been in the Army for 19 years, and it's the first change I've seen in the skirts and the trousers."

The new skirt has a back zipper, and a kick pleat, which offers a stylish design, yet allows for easier movement. The skirt also has a non-slip waist band, and has two darts on the front and back of the skirt.

"We received good feedback on the skirt. They (female Soldiers) especially liked the kick pleat. In addition, the females, through surveys, wanted the skirts more tapered like the female skirts in the Marines," said Wylie. The new skirt will cost $24.25.

Female Soldiers will also see a change in their slacks. "The new slacks allow for easier alterations and look more tailored," said Wylie. The new slacks, which cost $28.60, will have belt loops, unlike the previous slacks. A one-inch black web belt with a one-eighth inch yellow brass buckle must be worn with the slacks. The belt must be worn so that the tipped end is to the female's right, which is the opposite of the male's belt on their pants. The slacks, which have a mandatory purchase date of Oct. 1, 2002, can be worn without a blouse if the Soldier is wearing a long or short sleeve overblouse.

Expecting Soldiers will see a change in the maternity uniform. The new uniform, according to Wylie, will provide extra comfort and looks better. The new maternity ensemble includes one long sleeve shirt, two short sleeve shirts, one tunic, two slacks and two skirts. The whole ensemble should cost a little over $200. The individual prices are as follows: tunic-$32.95, one pair of pants-$27.95, skirt-$12.70, short sleeve shirt-$19.95 and long sleeve shirt-$10.95.

Male Soldiers will see changes in their long and short sleeve shirts. The new shirts have pleated pockets, a stand-up collar and are made with heavier material, according to Wylie. The short sleeve shirt will cost $10.20, and the long sleeve shirt costs $11. 45. Older shirts cannot be worn beginning today.

In general, Wylie likes the new uniform changes, and hopes that other Soldiers will like the new changes.

"The new changes enhance the Soldiers appearance in clothing, and the changes are major improvements in comfort, as well. We're constantly looking to improve the Army uniform through feedback from the Soldiers," she said.

Golf: Soldiers get in free

it comes to watching golf tournaments.

First no cameras, coolers, pagers or cell phones are allowed on the course, any of which can be distracting to golfers as they ponder a putt or address a drive.

Viewers are also reminded this is not the NFL or NBA where noise is good. On golf courses, silence is golden, although applause is encouraged after a good shot or putt. And of course, jeering and booing a competitor is certainly frowned upon.

Programs are available and free. These are handy because spectators can see when their favorite pro is teeing off and link up with his gallery and follow him around the course.

For those not into walking, they can stand at the tee box to watch golfers hit the big boomers, station themselves along the fairway to see how well the pros can negotiate their fairway shots, or even find their ways out of the tenacious rough. And finally there are the greens that people can stand by to watch the pros make the fabulous twisting putts, or miss the simple two-footers, which bring great joy to the average duffer who knows what it's like to miss a tap in.

Exhibitors also are on hand and golfers and would-be golfers can try their hands at putting or driving. For ITB and BCTB Soldiers, there are banks and banks of telephones and rows of food and drink booths.

"Today is a training holiday and Callaway Gardens is an ideal place to spend a day off," Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said.

also ready to go, according to Canedy. Through the use of the brigade's family support groups, he said all of the families were prepared for the month without their Soldier spouses.

The exercise will not only give the Marne Soldiers a chance to operate in a joint nation environment, but Canedy said it will also offer the Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, a chance to practice for their upcoming deployment to the deserts of the National Training Center.

"It is going to be a great opportunity for all of the Soldiers," he said. "All of the Soldiers are pumped about the chance to be a part of the exercise and are ready to go."

Move: Officials change housing

there and sign a three-year lease."

Smith presented suggestions to the command group and the following decisions were made:

- move ICCC housing from Perkins Place to Norton Court (previously designated for junior enlisted)
- provide 55 more permanent-party company-grade quarters (located in Perkins Place, previously designated for ICCC students)
- provide 10 more quarters for sergeants major and command sergeants major on Austin Loop and Sigerfoos. Sergeants major can not accept quarters designated for senior NCOs any longer. They must compete in their own category, Smith said.
- reduce field-grade officer quarters by seven.
- reduce senior NCO quarters by 160. Many senior NCOs buy homes off post, Smith said, and 251 junior enlisted were already living in housing designated for senior NCOs.
- increase junior enlisted housing by 90.

Current waiting lists reflect the changes initiated by the housing office. Across the board — except for field-grade officers — the waiting lists are running one to four months long. Any major or lieutenant colonel not designated "key and essential" can expect to wait 14 months for quarters. "There are simply not enough field-grade quarters to go around," Smith said.

"We have housed virtually every company-grade officer that was not tied to a lease and was available to move. We've been able to house every one of them since mid-August. That was probably upwards of 40 to 50 right off the bat."

Word of the impending changes leaked out to housing residents earlier in the summer, and many started voicing concern. The garrison commander, Col. John Mitchell, and chief of staff, Col. John Latimer, held town hall meetings to brief residents on the new program.

The biggest issue involved whether or not the residents would be forced to move because their area had been designated for a different rank, like the junior-enlisted families living in Norton Court, which would become a company-grade area. The housing office originally planned a phased program, with all moves taking place by February.

But, after residents spoke out against the moves, housing officials changed their plans.

Smith stated there would be no command-directed moves. The plan will be accomplished in two to three years through volunteer moves and attrition.

"We went through a series of town hall meetings with these folks, and here's what we finally agreed to do," Smith said.

"If they would voluntarily agree to relocate to other vacant quarters on post, we would pay to move their household goods and to reconnect their telephone and cable service. We would pay to clean their quarters and do their self-help maintenance for them."

Parents were given the option of keeping their children in their previous schools.

"Everyone breathed a big sigh of relief when we heard we didn't have to move," Shelly Holladay said. She and her family decided to remain in Norton Court, where they have lived for three years.

"People want to feel as if they have a choice. I don't have a lot of control over where we move in the Army, but while I'm here I've made this our home," she said.

"My friends who moved out got the houses they wanted, and they are happy. It's clear now that everyone is satisfied."

One of those friends is Kyle Straits. She and her family moved Aug. 4 from Norton Court to Custer Terrace.

"We chose to move because we believe we will be here three more years," she said. The housing office allowed the Straits to pick the house they wanted, and they found the neighborhood to be very friendly.

"My whole block moved, and now five of those families live on my street or the next street over."

She expressed concern for the people who decided to remain in Norton Court.

"I don't know how long they will allow officers and enlisted to live beside each other," she said, "no matter what they say now."

Capt. Fred Wintrich, commander of A Co., 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, lives on Austin Loop. His part of the street is now designated for sergeant major housing, but he decided to stay in the house rather than move to Perkins Place, a company-grade section.

"They wanted to force me to move to a house that I had been denied earlier," he said. Perkins was previously designated for ICCC students.

"We love our quarters, and fortunately, no one had to move. We are good to go."

As a student at ICCC a few years ago, Wintrich lived in Perkins Place, and he agreed that it's a good idea for the command to continue to provide on-post housing for the captains and their families who are here for the six-month course.

"It's very beneficial to be on post. The rental market in Columbus is not geared to students who are here for just six months," he said.

When the housing office looked at the ICCC quarters, it was decided that permanent-party company-grade officers would benefit more from living in Perkins Place.

"What we were actually doing under the old plan was taking junior company-grade officers who had young children or no children and they were being housed in four-bedroom quarters, which they really didn't qualify for, and in most cases, didn't need that much space," Smith said.

"And we had permanent-party, company-grade officers who are older and have older school-age children, and they were being housed in three-bedroom units and could benefit from having four-bedroom units."

The moves have worked out well, Smith said, "but it's been a challenge for us trying to manage this undertaking."

Soldiers and Marines use a new collapsible ladder to gain access to a second story window. The new ladder is one of many pieces of equipment the MOUT ACTD site will test during the experiment.

Army, Marines work to improve urban lethality

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

When Soldiers and Marines stormed the beaches of Somalia earlier this decade, they knew little about how to conduct military operations in the urban environment they were about to face.

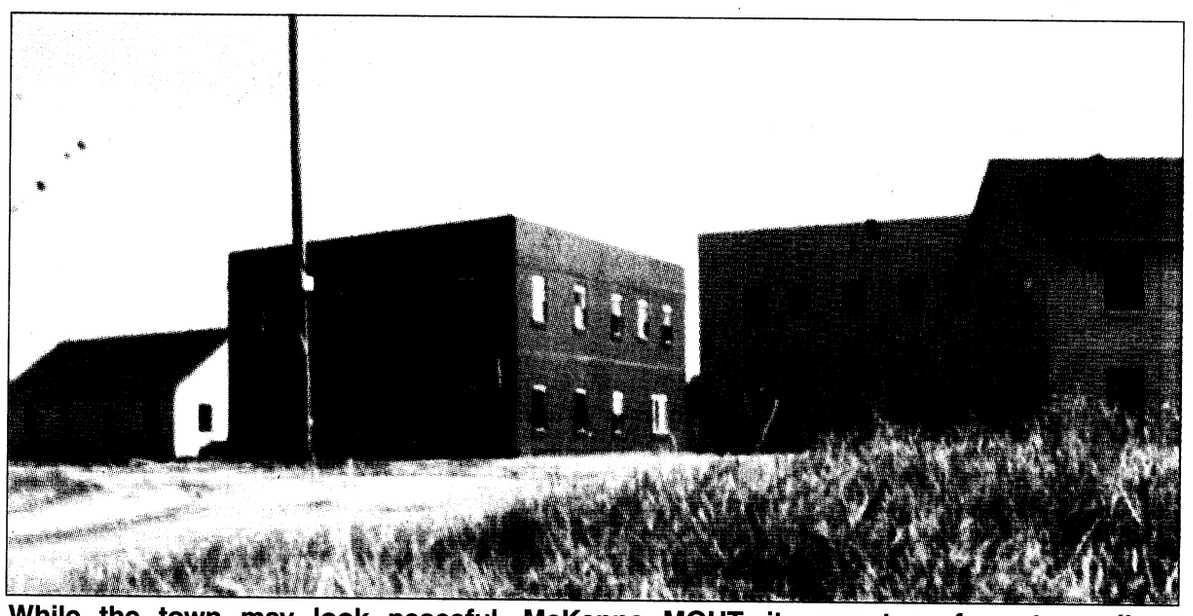
Before the operation in the early 90's, the military had not needed to place such an emphasis on urban fighting techniques. However, the clash in Africa along with the hundreds of other missions the armed forces has since fielded has proven otherwise, prompting the services to revamp the training for America's front line ground troops, the Infantry.

That push for training is still going on today as the U.S. Army and the Marine Corps have teamed up to improve the readiness and lethality of those troops in urban environments.

Improvements are currently being tested in a joint-service partnership called the Military Operations on Urban Terrain Advanced Concept Technology Demonstration. The two-year development demonstration, according to training officials at Fort Benning's MOUT ACTD site, is aimed at giving both the warrior and the trainer a better understanding of how Soldiers and Marines can better operate on urban battlefields.

Developers began compiling the information gathered at the MOUT ACTD site nearly a year ago and are continuing to improve the operating procedures and technological equipment to make the Soldier and the Marine a more lethal tool in the urban warfare arena.

"We are taking these Soldiers and Marines and giving them equipment to help them battle some of the difficulties they face in the MOUT environment," said Maj. Richard E. Stockton, chief of Division 3, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab. "Once they become proficient with the equipment, then we record the group's ability to move throughout the MOUT environment while facing an opposition force and review the information to see how we could better the performance."



That reviewing process is essential to the productivity of the test, according to Stockton, because without it he said there is no real way to review and improve upon what has been accomplished.

The reviewing process is courtesy of a control center linked to the MOUT ACTD via fiber optics, which logs the action of every Soldier and Marine during the experiment. The process is possible thanks to the day- and -night-capable cameras and electronic detection devices in the buildings and on the warriors that can be compiled in the control room to produce not only a video of the engagement, but a three-dimensional overview and a two-dimensional view.

"The variety in the reviewing capabilities allows us to analyze exactly what we could have done better in the situation whether it be something procedural or something technical with the equipment," he said. "And once we determine where the problem lies, we can fix and test it again to ensure we have it right."

Making it right is the foundation of this experiment as it is not only responsible for making Soldiers and Marines proficient in MOUT warfare, but is tasked with putting MOUT warfare equipment on the Department of Defense's Rapid Acquisition Program to allow warriors in the field the technological advantage that have been proven on the training grounds here.

While many of those tools will not be available until funding is allotted or they have undergone further testing, the equipment along with the acquired techniques will take the spotlight at the end of next year during the MOUT ACTD culminating exercise scheduled for next fall.

While the town may look peaceful, McKenna MOUT site can turn from tranquil to treacherous in minutes as the Soldiers and Marines discovered this week.

Duty pays off for staff sergeants

Recruiting helps Soldiers pin on rank

Sgt. 1st Class Connie Dickey
Army News Service

Some 260 former or current detailed recruiters will be pinning on E-7 rank this year if they reclassify to 79R (Recruiter).

According to Sgt. Maj. Bill Hursh of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, the Army's requirement was to promote 361 recruiters to sergeant first class. "We only had 231 staff sergeants in the 79R (Recruiter) field eligible for promotion to sergeant first class this year."

However, there were more than 3,400 former and current detailed recruiters that were eligible for sergeant first class promotion competing in their primary military occupational specialty.

A detailed recruiter is a Soldier with a primary MOS other than 79R who is selected for recruiting duties. Recruiting duty is usually for three years.

Since the Army needs qualified, experienced recruiters, the Army leadership decided to allow those staff sergeants who were not selected for promotion in their PMOS, but were still considered fully qualified, to compete for promotion as a 79R, Hursh said. Their records were reviewed with the 79R records and re-voted for selection to sergeant first class as a recruiter, with the best-qualified Soldiers selected for promotion as a recruiter without regard to whether they were a 79R or a current or former detailed recruiter, Hursh said.

> "This is a win-win situation. The Soldier gets promoted and the Army gets a qualified recruiter."
> — Sgt. Maj. Bill Hursh
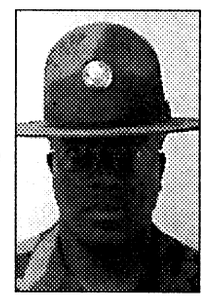
> Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel

There are some conditions current or former detailed recruiters must meet in order to get promoted, however, officials said. Those staff sergeants selected for promotion in the recruiting field have to meet all the requirements to qualify as a recruiter. For example, if they have been out of the recruiting field for more than a year, they have to go back to recruiting school, they have to attend the Advanced NCO Course within a year of selection, and they must reclassify into 79R, making that their permanent MOS.

There's additional good news for eligible staff sergeants who do decide to accept the promotion offer. Those who received a re-enlistment bonus in their primary field will not have to forfeit any of the bonuses if they select reclassification into the 79R field, Hursh said. In some cases, if all requirements are met, some staff sergeants may even receive a bonus for reclassifying and re-enlisting as a 79R.

Selectees are receiving a letter from the Army Personnel Command explaining their options. An accept or decline endorsement attached to the letter has to be filled out and sent back within 30 days.



"We've had some positive feedback from the field," Hursh said, even though some selectees are still within that 30-day window and have not responded yet. "If a staff sergeant declines, it just means they are removed from the sergeant first class promotion list and they remain a staff sergeant in their primary MOS. They can still compete for promotion next year if they are eligible.

'This is a win-win situation," Hursh said. "The Soldier gets promoted and the Army gets a qualified recruiter."

Separating Soldiers are required to receive briefings, information, and assistance as necessary to take full advantage of the benefits and entitlements. This process should begin with the three-day ACAP session and then followed shortly with individual counseling sessions as necessary with service providers and ACAP Center counselors, said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services Manager.

The three-day program of briefings and workshops is presented in Infantry Hall by ACAP Center personnel, Georgia Department of Labor Local Veteran Employment Representative, and Fort Benning service providers (Retirement Services, Veterans Affairs, Transition, Finance, Inservice Recruiter and Tricare).

"Successful participation in this program empowers Soldiers and their families to begin transitioning to civilian life with dignity and pride," Wight said.

Because there are major differences in the benefits available to retirees, special sessions are held each month to address retirement issues and may not be appropriate for those separating on ETS dates or for other reasons.

The following is a schedule of briefings for the next three months:

Each day begins at 8:30 a.m. in Classroom 30 or as directed, Infantry Hall. Attendees may wear civilian casual dress or duty uniform.

Oct. 4-6 — ETS and others
Oct. 18-20 — retirees only
Oct. 25-27 ETS and others
Nov. 1-3 — ETS and others
Nov. 8-10 — ETS and others
Nov. 15-17 — retirees only
Nov. 29 through Dec. 1 — ETS and others.

Congress passes resolution to fund government through Oct. 21

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Congress has passed a continuing resolution that would fund the federal government at fiscal 1999 rates through Oct. 21 while legislators continue work on fiscal 2000 appropriations bills.

Congress sent the continuing resolution to the White House for President Clinton's signature. Fiscal Year 2000 starts today. Without the resolution, the government would be forced to shut down. If legislators cannot agree on the appropriations bills by Oct. 21, they must pass another resolution to keep the government running.

The continuing resolution does not allow federal agencies to start any new projects. Since military and civilian pay raises do not start until Jan. 1, pay checks for service members and DoD civilians would not be affected unless a deadlock occurs and extends past New Year's Day.

Thirteen appropriation bills fund the federal government. Only one — the military construction bill — has been signed into law. President Clinton signed that bill Aug. 17.

The House and Senate have passed their versions of the fiscal 2000 defense appropriations bill. Senate and House members are in conference to hash out differences in the two bills. Once the conference is finished the full House and Senate must approve the bill. If it is approved it then goes to the president for signature.

Defense Secretary William S. Cohen wrote to the chairmen of the Senate and House Appropriations Committees' defense subcommittees to air departmental concerns. Heading his list was the House's deleting funds for the Air Force's F-22 Raptor air superiority fighter.

"A failure now to fund initial procurement of the F-22 fighter would cause devastating disruption of acquisition contracts and add up to $6 billion to the cost of our planned program," Cohen wrote. He indicated he supports the Senate program that fully funds the F-22 within a constrained program.

Cohen said other cuts Congress contemplates would unduly affect operations and maintenance accounts. He asked conferees to sustain funding for DoD modernization programs. Specifics he cited include the AIM-9X missile, the Global Hawk unmanned aerial vehicle, Global Positioning System, Joint Stand-off Weapons and theater ballistic missile defense projects.

Festival promotes unity

U.S. Army School of the Americas

In one common spirit, filled with varied music, food and cultural artifacts, the Inter-American community bonded during the 1999 U.S. Army School of the Americas Festival of the Americas' Sept. 23 through Saturday.

The festivities kicked off Sept. 23 at Faith Middle School with an Open House, where more than 1,100 students from the Muscogee County, Harris County and Phenix City School Districts, traveled through 19 different nations without leaving Fort Benning.

While a group of USARSA Bolivian students and family members played native music from the Andes Mountains inside the school's gymnasium, local students journeyed past displays of leather goods, hand-made ceramics, colorful hats and coffee beans during their visit to each country's cultural exposition.

Each nation involved in the USARSA program of instruction prepared a colorful booth inside the school featuring artifacts and media presentations of their respective countries.

"I feel an enormous pride to have this opportunity of sharing a piece of my country with this great community," said Capt. Julio Gonzalez of Paraguay, a student with USARSA's Combat Arms Officer Advanced Course.

Some countries, like Panama, Puerto Rico, and of course, the U.S., were represented by American Soldiers and their families.

"This is a great way to show the students and everybody else that the Army incorporates all types of nationalities," said Staff Sgt. Brenda Davila, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, USARSA, who was staffing the Panamanian exhibit. "We defend our country with the same pride — yet we still keep our native traditions and customs and share them with our community."

"I learned that they (the United States) are also part of the Americas like all our Hispanic neighbors ."

— Paris Holmes
Spencer High School
12th-grader

Most students admitted that the Open House opened a gateway to a great learning experience.

"I was very surprised to see the United States booth at this Open House," said Paris Holmes, a 12th-grader at Spencer High School. "I learned that they are also part of the Americas like all our Hispanic neighbors."

Holmes, along with her fellow classmates, was assigned a country and tasked by her teacher with finding everything she could about that country.

"I had El Salvador," she said. "I learned they ended a 12-year civil war in 1992 and that their president is Francisco Flores. I learned so much from all the countries here. This event really taught us what our neighboring country's cultures are all about."

The jubilation continued Sept. 24 with the Bocadillos Tipicos inside Ridgway Hall. During this reception, guests sampled finger foods and tasted each country's native drinks.

"This was a great social bonding event," said Capt. German Hernandez, of the Dominican Republic and student with USARSA's Combat Arms Officer Advanced Course. "It was great to go around the room sampling different foods and drinks from all these wonderful countries."

The gala event culminated with the Parade of Nations and Cena Tipica at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center Saturday.

With an array of colorful costumes mixed with tropical and indigenous beats, the Parade of Nations electrified more than 700 guests as each country's representative performed their traditional dance and music.

"I can understand why so many people look forward to this event," said Sgt. Lisa Villarreal, HHC, USARSA. "Every year I learn more about our hemisphere and the distinct cultures that occupy it. This year's costumes and dancers were spectacular."

After the sharing of music and dance, a traditional Latin American fare of rice with pigeon peas, paella (Spanish-style seafood mixed with yellow rice), black beans, roast pork, baked chicken, sweet plantains and a variety of desserts, melted the guests' palate.

The festivities continued with a DJ providing tropical music sprinkled with cumbias, merengues and salsa for the guests.

"There are so many diverse cultures in the United States," said Sgt. April Johnson, HHC, USARSA. "Tonight I witnessed America share different cultures with the community. I feel a little closer to those cultures, and I can understand my place in USARSA a little better."

Columbus resident Ronald Hurtado summed up the bonds of understanding and friendship inspired by the festival by saying, "If there were a School of Asia, a School of Europe, a School of Africa, there would be no more wars. "

McBride celebrates cultures

Hispanic Americans hail from around the world and bring to this country a heritage rich in culture. McBride Elementary students touched on this culture while participating in various activities throughout Hispanic Heritage Month.

First-grade classes celebrated by counting to 10 in Spanish, playing number Bingo, sampling Spanish foods and saying the Spanish alphabet. Lisa Roush, a first-grade teacher at McBride, said that during the month of September her students were exposed to the world of Hispanic culture through books, song, dance and food but their favorite experience was making "Eyes of God," (Ojo de Dios). The Eyes of God yarn wrapping project was completed during art class with the help of parent volunteers.

"This craft was difficult for the children, but the adventure was well worth it because they were extremely proud of their work," she said.

Roush, along with most teachers, believes exposing children to different cultures helps them gain an understanding that although people are different, they are still very much alike.

"Bringing the essence of culture from home into the school ties learning into all aspects of the children's lives," Roush said. "It reinforces that although some of us look different or talk different, we are all Americans learning to live together and striving for a better way of life."

Sharing cultures broadens student understanding and gives them a background about diversity, said Penny Wilson, second-grade teacher. But Hispanic students gained more than knowledge from the sharing of their culture.

"The Hispanic children were very proud of their parents who shared the Latin American culture through song, stories and food," Wilson said. "Diversity is an asset and like most Department of Defense Schools, McBride is fortunate to have children from different backgrounds sharing their cultures throughout the school year."

Homework tips help parents help children

Michele E. Hanson

Every parent knows the importance of reading, writing and arithmetic but there is a fourth basic of getting a good education — responsibility.

However, parents of school-aged children also know that getting children to be responsible for their own homework is no easy task. In fact, wide ranges of emotions are often displayed when children are asked to complete their homework assignments. Regardless of how children feel about their homework, getting them to take responsibility for it is an important step in life that will carry forth into adulthood.

"Homework is an opportunity for parents to be involved in their children's education on a daily basis, but ultimately homework is the child's responsibility," said Gail Wilson, director of staff development for Fort Benning Schools.

Wilson, who believes that parents play a critical role in teaching responsibility to their children, said that parents have an opportunity to make an enormous difference in how much and how well a child learns.

"Parents should encourage independence but be available to lend support when needed — the children need to learn how to structure their time, come up with a homework strategy and learn about the consequences of

R/C Flyers air show set for Saturday in Alabama

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

There will be acrobatic stunts, sky diving and formation flying near Fort Mitchell Saturday, but spectators can breathe easy that if any mid-air collisions occur, the only things hurt will be the wallets, and maybe the pride, of the airplane owners.

Piloting a plane from the ground has its advantages.

The Columbus-Fort Benning R/C Flyers Association, Inc., will hold its annual fall radio control model air show from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. at the group's flying field about one mile off Alabama Highway 165.

It will be the largest event of this kind in the area with more than 75 pilots from Georgia, Alabama and Florida flying about 150 planes, according to Jim Boone, the club's secretary.

"This fly-in will be very special because of the large number of highly skilled pilots who have told us they will be here and also because of the special demonstrations by nationally known acrobatic show pilots."

And it's free.

There will be special flight demonstrations at 12:30 and 3 p.m. by a giant scale B-29 bomber that weighs more than 100 pounds. An exact scale model of the Enola Gay, the American bomber that dropped the first atomic bomb on Hiroshima, Japan, will drop a replica of an X-1 rocket plane.

"It would be worth going out there just to watch that," said Lt. Col. Jeff Arneson, chief of the Battle Control Division of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab.

Arneson will fly two of his models during Saturday's show. He started flying 30 years ago with his father and has been a member of the local club off and on for a decade whenever the Army would station him at Fort Benning.

When he first started at age 16, Arneson said, "All we did was free flight. I would build the model, put the engine on and find a very large field. Over time, we have upgraded the radios and control panels."

He still makes all his own planes with balsa wood,

October launches awareness campaign

Domestic violence prevention should be year-round concern

Rebecca Welch
Family Advocacy Program

Recent statistics show that four out of five reports of domestic violence in the military are substantiated. Annually, more than 16,000 cases are handled in the military.

These sad statistics hide the extent of the harm that is occurring. It is still true, despite efforts to improve public awareness, that many families trapped in the cycle of violence remain silent. The harm does not stop at the married couple. Approximately half of all batterers also intentionally injure their children physically or sexually. Additionally, research shows that children who witness violence in their homes (even through the walls) are adversely impacted in a variety of ways.

Welch

October marks Domestic Violence Awareness Month at Fort Benning and Armywide. However, the campaign to prevent violence can and must be a year-round concern. Without a community-wide commitment to end the violence in our homes, we will only find ourselves back here a year from now measuring the hurt.

The violence must stop. Not only are our families threatened, the fundamental mission of readiness is being undermined. Batterers who fail to come forward for assistance are causing a great burden on families and the military.

We know that prevention is the key. First, we need to prevent violence from continuing. Second, we need to recognize that every military couple lives under the risks that can, if not addressed, put families at higher risk for battering. Finally, prevention will be successful when the entire community understands that family violence is unacceptable and that positive support for couples and families is what is needed.

Prevention of this kind takes partnership. That partnership must include leadership, the helping system, the media, all military and civilian personnel and their families. As Family Advocacy Program Manager at Fort Benning, I am calling on everyone to take the lead. Get involved in the move to prevent domestic violence. I urge anyone who wants this campaign to work to call the Family Advocacy Office at 545-3344 for prevention information and referral.

A display will be set up at Army Community Services, Building 2624, during the month of October.

Items to promote the program will be free to military families. Educational materials to include brochures on improving your marriage and a list of treatment programs and classes offered through Social Work Services will be available. The resources are out there. We have the services and information right here at Fort Benning. Please do not wait; use them today.

Program ensures violence-free home

Family Advocacy Program

The truth is not always pretty, but the outcome of facing yourself in the light will make you stronger and happier . You and your family can have a more fulfilling life.

Once you face the truth, you can begin to make changes in the way you see yourself and in the way you live.

Becky Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager, said that each person in the military community has the responsibility to help make the community safe and to ensure that family members live in a violence-free home.

"This is a year-round task," Welch said. "October is the launching point for a sustained year-round campaign to end spouse abuse and child abuse and to assure the protection of victims. Our emphasis must be on the prevention of domestic violence and on encouraging family members to seek appropriate supportive and rehabilitative services."

New studies are showing that domestic violence is not confined to spouse battering. Children in violent homes are also victims, both of direct abuse and injury and of psychological battering that comes from witnessing violent acts.

What should awaken all of us is the fact that acts of domestic violence are carried out by the very people who should be making sure that their loved ones are safe and secure.

"This is a chilling thought, but we should realize that something can be done to turn the tide and end the violence. Each of us can and must take positive action," Welch said. "The first step is to take personal responsibility for the safety and security of ourselves and of our loved ones. Each of us is capable of making our own households violence-free, but personal responsibility extends beyond the walls of our homes and reaches out to our streets, our shopping centers and our jobs."

In the military, domestic violence undermines the mission of readiness.

In society at large, it undermines the fabric of our communities and of our lives.

"Prevention can happen everywhere, no just at home," Welch said.

It can happen in the media, in the workplace and in the neighborhoods.

All of us need to make the message clear: domestic violence is not tolerated; everyone deserves to be safe and secure. Couples and individuals need to understand that there are options to violence.

In the military, there are long-standing programs that put special emphasis on domestic violence prevention and intervention. Here at Fort Benning, there are services available for individuals and couples: Social Work Services and the Chaplains' Family Life Center.

To find out about these services and the Family Advocacy Program as a whole, call 545-3344.

Domestic violence does exist in community

Family Advocacy Program

Domestic violence is your business ... in the community.

• Speak out against domestic violence.

If you see or hear a domestic violence situation, call for help. You can call your local domestic violence hotline, women's shelter, crisis intervention hotline or the local police. Organize your community to speak out against it. Write your legislators. Make them accountable for their position on domestic violence. Write letters of support to movie and music companies speaking out against domestic violence. Write to movie and music companies who portray women inaccurately. Let them know this is unacceptable and that you will not purchase their products.

• Get involved!

Show your support. Volunteer. Make donations. Organize food or clothing drives for the local women's shelter. Generate community support through those drives.

Find out from the local domestic violence program or hotline how you and others can help. Wear a ribbon. Get a bumper sticker.

• Educate.

Approach your local businesses to join in a community education campaign displaying posters, flyers and other educational information.

• Be a friend.

Help a friend in an abusive situation by being a good listener. Tell them it is not their fault. Help them find resources and support available in their community.

• Be nonjudgmental.

Domestic violence does not discriminate against gender, race, socio-economic status, marital status or age. Know that violence is not an acceptable way to deal with anger or conflict. They did not "ask for it." They does not 'deserve it.'

• Be an example.

Make a commitment to the cause. Let others know about your commitment. Use nonviolent conflict resolution strategies in your relationship with your partner and when disciplining your children.

• Know the facts and then share them with others.

Set up domestic violence workshops in your workplace, community group or church. Get your schools to address the issue with their students.

• Know who to call for help.

Have the numbers of the local domestic violence program, women's shelter and local police on hand.

• Initiate conversations about domestic violence.

For more information, call the Family Advocacy Program at 545-3344.

An Ode to My Dog

He is a Jack Russell Terrier and his name is Russell.
He is quick as a rabbit.
He is an explosion at the start of his sprint.
He is very kind and friendly.
I always say let's play.
And that makes his day.
When I get home from school he is filled with joy.
And he is a boy.
His teeth are like knives.
He makes me tired.
And he sleeps in my bed.
Until I get up in the morning.

— Andrew Cole

Ode to My Grandparents

My grandma and Pop-Pop
Are as sweet as candy.
They always are nice
When we come to visit.
But when I don't listen,
They can be a bear.
Sometimes they might
Be a roaring lion.
My grandma always buys me stuff
Even Pop-Pop does that.
We only visit them about 5 times a year,
But it is always fun at their house!

— Jake Droughan

Thoughts

What I can do to improve the world is to be kinder to others. I can recycle paper and other recyclable products. I can volunteer to help in shelters. I can cut grass for people who are unable to cut their own. I can just be kind to my neighbors.

— Brandy Fogg, 6th Grade

Think about other people not just yourself. If you help them you'll probably feel better about yourself, and if you need help they'll probably help.

— Christopher Schirmer, 6th Grade

I can improve the world by starting canned food drives to send to homeless and needy people. I would send the food to people not just in America but to people all over the world who really need all the help they can get. I see it like this. If your family was cold and hungry and had nowhere to go, I think you would really be grateful if you got help from people.

— Justin Morehead, 6th Grade

If I could change the world I would stop people from polluting the Earth. I would stop factories from dumping chemicals into our oceans and rivers. I would make industries stop cutting down the rainforest and killing off animals and plants. I know this is almost impossible to stop, but I wish I had the power to do it.

— Aundrea Rivera, 6th Grade

Center holds Health Fair

Alfreta Gibson
Health Promotion Center

If asked, Anita Jackson, 42, would say she takes her health seriously. She eats right, exercises regularly and keeps annual appointments for check-ups, but in 1993 she had a life-changing experience.

She had just completed her annual women's examination and the doctor suggested she get a mammogram at age 35.

"I had no significant findings, so I decided to wait. I wasn't doing self breast examinations monthly, but I felt I was doing them often enough," Jackson said. "After all, breast cancer happens to someone else."

Jackson was shocked when her husband found a lump the size of a dime in her breast.

"Perhaps if I had gotten the mammography done when suggested, the lump would have been discovered at about the size of a pea," she said. "I could tell by the look on the doctor's face when he examined me that something was there. Emotionally, I was scared and feared that I had something that could kill me. I feared leaving my family."

A devoted wife and mother, Jackson credits her husband, Jim, and 8-year-old son, Kyle, for helping her recover.

"My son and husband were my inspiration. Somehow I knew there was a higher power taking care of me."

It was that higher power that helped Jackson and her husband also cope with their son's diagnosis of leukemia. Like Anita, Kyle is presently doing well and his cancer is in remission.

"A lot is expected of women. We're in the workplace, mothers, chauffeurs, cooks, caregivers, etc. I've changed my way of thinking about life, family and relationships. I don't worry about 'stuff,' especially that which I can't change. I don't burden myself with trivial things. I have surrounded myself with supportive, positive thinking people. I've had a rebirth of priorities."

Jackson is a prime example of the power of education and action.

"I understand the importance of being in tune with my body and feel obligated to promote health awareness to others. I hope my story will encourage lifetime habits that are keys to good health, awareness and personal health responsibility," she said. "I'm counting my blessings and making my health and my family's health a year-round affair."

The Health Promotion Center of Martin Army Community Hospital, Preventive Medicine Service, Community Health Nursing will conduct the annual Women's Health Fair from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at the Main Post Exchange. For more information, call Alfreta Gibson at 545-1987 or 545-2885.

October is National Energy Awareness Month

Mark Fincher
Energy Management Branch,
Directorate of Public Works

October is National Energy Awareness month. Traditionally, this is the month the Army places additional emphasis on energy conservation because of its importance. Energy resources are invaluable to our nation's economic and environmental security.

Three executive orders signed by the president as well as the Clean Air Act require Fort Benning to reduce its energy consumption on a square foot basis. President Clinton signed the most current executive order, Greening the Government through Efficient Energy Management, June 3.

As a result of this executive order, as well as requirements from the National Energy Conservation Policy and Energy Policy Acts, Fort Benning is required to reduce energy consumption by 35 percent by the year 2010 based on 1985 consumption levels.

Fort Benning has worked to reduce energy consumption for years, and this year is currently four percent below the TRADOC assigned energy goal.

This four percent represents a cost avoidance of more than $600,000 of utility dollars. Beginning next year TRADOC will fund installation energy accounts at the level of their assigned energy goals. This is good news for Benning and the few other installations that have kept consumption consistently below goal. By maintaining this cost avoidance, the difference between the actual expenditure and the amount funded may be spent on other post needs, such as training, equipment or infrastructure maintenance.

Recent projects that helped put Fort Benning below the goal include air conditioning projects and individual boilers in individual buildings to provide heat, hot water and steam, instead of the old leaking steam distribution systems. Money to accomplish these decentralizations came from DA Utility System Modernization and Energy Improvement accounts and did not require local installation funding.

In addition an Energy Savings Performance Contractor is retrofitting thousands of lighting fixtures with energy efficient lamps and ballasts throughout Fort Benning. The contractor (Duke Solutions) pays for the entire project cost from their accounts and Fort Benning repays them over a period of years from the energy savings. The projected annual savings as a result of this project is estimated at more than $66,000 per year.

FY-99 Whole Barracks Renewal — Parking Area Upgrades

As part of the recently awarded FY-99 Whole Barracks Renewal project, two parking areas will be upgraded starting in October. Targeted for expansion and improvements are the parking areas beneath the elevated water storage tank near Roosevelt Range, at the intersection of Way and Dixie Roads, as well as the temporary parking area just off Sightseeing Road between Buildings 2824 and 2825.

The new construction will last several months. During this time, the parking areas will be closed. Cars will not be parked there during the construction. Parking will be available on the large existing lot on the south side of Dixie Road to the far west of the range.

The Air Force project slated to go in this area will begin construction around the start of the new calendar year. Impact on parking from an overlap of the Whole Barracks Renewal and the Air Force project should be minimal; however, the entire area will become congested with new construction for some years to come.

For more information, call Mike Graham at 545-9687.

Transitions lead to new life

Chaplain (Capt.) Jim McNeely
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

Fall is traditionally a time when the temperatures cool and the leaves change color. The heat of summer is gradually replaced with the cold of winter. The shorts and T-shirts get replaced by jeans, flannel shirts and jackets. This period between seasons is a perfect example of the principle of transition.

The Gospels show us another transition. After St. Peter's great confession, Jesus' ministry changes. Up to this point, he was the great miracle worker and hero. The common people loved him. After Peter's affirmation of Jesus as Messiah, the Lord begins talking about his suffering, death and resurrection.

reflections

The disciples didn't like all this talk of death and suffering — who would? But Peter seemed to take it worst of all. He rebuked the master by saying to him, "Hush, Lord! God wouldn't do that to you." Jesus sternly rebuked Peter, reminding him of higher priorities in life than Peter's limited perspective.

Most of us resist change. We don't like it. Like the disciples we try to silence those who remind us that there are transitions in life that shake our worlds.

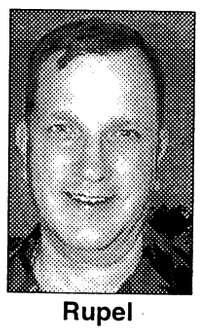
Once as a chaplain in a hospital I told a family that their loved one was dead. Their response was to throw a magazine at me! This demonstrated resistance to the transitions inherent in the death of a close family member or friend.

The discomfort of transition reminds us that life is not always fun and games. There are difficulties to endure in this life, some of which are deeply painful.

But eventually the transitional period is replaced by a new season. There are riches to be found in new life but not until the transition is experienced. From the fertile soil of transition comes the promise of everlasting life.

I plan to enjoy the fall, the season of change. For when the leaves have fallen and the wind is chilled, I know that new life is coming. New life is what I want and what God promises me when I embrace the change — rather than fight it.

Trust builds strong relationships



Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Earnie Larsen, founder of International Marriage Encounter, wrote: "The only issue I think there is in any relationship is trust. A relationship cannot fail except if trust fails. The only reason a relationship ever dies is because of no trust."

In my years as a chaplain, I have counseled hundreds, if not thousands, of couples and the most difficult obstacle I have witnessed for any couple to overcome is the loss of trust.

Ordinarily when one speaks about trust or the lack thereof, we usually think of one or two of the "biggies" — sexual infidelity or lying.

But trust is much bigger than that. Trust means I really care, and I know that you care for me. It means that I will do nothing to ever harm my relationship with you because your relationship is all important.

Rupel

Married couples will always express their love in a way where there is no room for doubt that they love their spouse.

"Trust means that you have proven to me you will express your caring ways which count to me," Larsen said. "Not in things that count to you. I can only trust you if you have demonstrated you care enough about me to be present to me in a way which is important to me." In other words, don't leave your spouse guessing if you love him or her.

This is best demonstrated by having great communication. "The first commitment in a relationship is not to the relationship; it is the commitment that both people are willing to bend back and look at themselves." This may mean that I may need to change in order to be a more loving and trustworthy spouse. It's not — you need to change, but what do I need to do differently to make our marriage better?

Where married couples run into trouble is when neither spouse is willing to change. It is "my way or no way" that causes so much trouble. Ask yourself, "What is it I need to change in order to make our relationship grow?"

Better yet, just ask your spouse. Believe it or not, he or she knows.

If you find that your marriage is not all that you want it to be why not give the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center a call at 545-2050. The center offers a wide spectrum of programs and counseling for couples wishing to make their marriage better.

and estimated that a beginner could invest about $400 in a new kit, including engine, radio and control board. Some models, like the replica B-29, can run more than $1,000.

Part of Saturday's activities will be a model airplane yard sale. "It will be like a flea market behind the flight line with old models and engines. You can trade or buy outright," Arneson said. "If you are looking for a certain part or engine, it's a good way to get it inexpensively."

To reach the flying field, take Highway 431 South from Phenix City, then turn left on Highway 165 and go through Fort Mitchell. Turn left on Russell County Road 18. The field entrance is about one mile on the left. Signs will be posted.

The field has bleachers, a covered pavilion, portable restrooms and a concession stand, which will serve hot dogs and hamburgers.

Tips: Help with assignments

not getting the homework done," Wilson said.

Parents can guide their children through the homework dilemma by initiating and using three steps.

STEP 1 — Parents must expect homework to be completed and clearly explain that:

- Homework is as important as work done during class.
- During homework time, there will be no TV, no radio, no music and no phone conversations.
- All assignments must be completed every night and should be completed by the child.
- Homework should always be given the best effort.

STEP 2 — Check to see that the child is doing the assigned homework and:

- Has started homework at the beginning of the daily homework time.
- Continues to work on assignments throughout the DHT.
- Completes all homework by the end of the DHT.

If you are unable to be home during DHT, you should:

- Have an older sibling, another adult or caregiver check to see that homework is being done.
- Call the child to check on progress.
- Have child leave completed homework assignments to be checked when you get home.

STEP 3 — Back up your words with actions. Present your child with a choice:

- Do homework or lose privileges. If your child chooses not to do homework, the child chooses to lose privileges. This teaches the child that he can control events in his life. If a child chooses not to do homework, you must:
- Consistently follow through with loss of privileges.
- Impose loss of privileges in a calm but firm manner without getting upset.
- Be prepared for your child to get upset, but do not back down.

"Homework helps reinforce skills learned at school, and children can take the skills they learn at school and apply them in real life," Wilson said.

"If there is no homework, reading with each other or to each other can be quality family time. Children and parents can connect by learning together and share what they have learned with the family."

"Overall, learning can be a positive family experience and by seeing that homework is done properly, parents demonstrate to their children their concern about succeeding in school and in life."

Goodwin finishes tournament with a 2-day score of 146

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

A new Follow Me Golf Course champion was crowned Sunday after a two-day tournament that included an opportunity to win $20,000 during the Shot of the Century hole-in-one competition sponsored by MWR.

This year's champion is Gary Goodwin who shot 73 both days for a combined score of 146. Finishing in second place with 147 was Joe Lowder who also shot 73 the first day but 74 Sunday.

Ron Greene led the play Saturday finishing 18 holes in 72 but shot 76 Sunday for 148 and third place. Bob Osbourne who successfully defended his title of course champion last year failed to do so this year. He finished in fifth place with a combined score of 155.

Regardless of how the more than 60 golfers finished, they all started with the same opportunity to win $20,000 for making a 165-yard hole in one for men or 150 yards for women. No one at the Follow Me Golf Course won the money but most liked the opportunity to try for it.

"It would have been nice to win the money," said John Kamai, "but they didn't make it easy. They used a temporary hole — not a normally groomed hole. And a practice shot would have improved everyone's chances."

Most of the entrants weren't out for the big money but for the opportunity to improve their game.

"Tournament play is fun because you have to play by the rules," said Darren Ross. "Golf is a fun sport and hobby because you challenge yourself each time you play."

Jim Parker who has a 4 handicap and has been golfing on the Follow Me course since November, agreed with Ross. "I play tournament golf because it is a challenging way to test your skills." Parker's skill has been proven with numerous tournament wins in Naples, Italy, and also Sept. 24's Red Leg Open scramble.

After golfing for more than 10 years, Kamai said, "Golf is a different game every time you play."

For the more than 60 golfers who chipped and putted their way through the competition, the game landed the following athletes in the top of their flights.

Jogging club runs past Panthers in race

Faith students finish first in Smith Station Cross Country Invitational

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Faith Middle School Jogging Club ran to victory Saturday at the 4th annual Panthers Invitational Cross Country meet held at Smith Stations High School in Smiths, Ala.

"It went real well," said Susan Emerson, Faith physical education teacher and coach of the Jogging Club.

The Jogging Club, which has been around for more than 20 years, meets on Monday and Thursday afternoons September through November. On those afternoons, Emerson said the students train.

"They do warm-ups and stretching, and I teach them training techniques, and then they build up to running two miles."

Since it is a club, and the only other competition the students compete in is the Brookstone competition in October, Emerson does different activities to keep up interest.

"We will be giving the students free T-shirts with their names and time on them if they run two miles in 15 minutes or less for boys and 16 minutes or less for girls," Emerson said. "We also do prediction runs, where the students predict their times for the two-mile run, and whoever predicts closest wins."

At the meet Saturday, Joey Fix, an eighth-grader, won first place overall in the two-mile run with a time of 11:33.

"I was hoping to place in the top four and was real happy to finish first," Fix said.

Other finishers were:
- Michael Doud — 17th place
- Mike Bailey — 21st place
- John Cimmons — 32nd place
- Edward Scott — 33rd place
- Torey Powell — 34th place
- Gary Moken — 35th place
- Jay Chambers — 36th place
- Frank Gathers — 37th place

Emerson said that she estimated at least 50 or 60 boys competed.

In the girls' two-mile race, the first Faith student finishing was Tamika Smith, who finished 10th overall with a time of 16:44.

"I did better than I expected and was happy with our team's performance," Smith said.

Other finishers were:
- Rachell Freeman — 12th place
- Gaskins — 14th place
- Brandy Fogg — 17th place
- Kristen Anderson— 19th place

"This was very impressive, because all the girls are sixth-graders," Emerson said. "It was also good for the students to see the high school students competing, it gives them an introduction to running."

Team tops Air Force in first games

The 1999 Southeastern Military Athletic Conference Men's Basketball season got underway Saturday and Sunday with a two-day tournament here, and two powerful wins over Warner-Robins Air Force Base at Audie Murphy Gym. "This year's team is built to match any team we play, because we have a mix of youth and some vets who have lots of energy," said Coach Michael Slinson. "We're fresh and ready for anything."

With a new sponsor, U.S. Cavalry, the Fort Benning Stallions returned to the game Saturday afternoon with a final score of 90-72. Slinson said he was pleased with the team effort, and felt they made minimal mistakes.

The top scorers for Saturday's game were forward Carlos McMillan, with 12 shots, and guard Bobby Matthews with 12. Leading with 10 assists was Tyrone Harmon, also new to the team.

Sunday's game started out slowly. "It was very hard to play back-to-back games like that," said Slinson. "The team just wasn't into it." After the half-time break, the Stallions came back with good defense, and won the game 82-75, with an exciting final 3 minutes with lots of board work from McMillan. Leading scores for the game were guard Ronald Williams, with 21 shots, and with 22 rebounds, McMillan was very key down the stretch.

Also returning to the court this year is Carl Harris-guard, Quantez Franklin-forward, and Chris, Harley-center. This seasons toughest matches are set against Hurlburt Air Force Base, and Keesler Air Force Base, who have both won the last 2 years in a row.

In spite of these two opponents, Slinson is confident the Stallions will take home the Championship.

"I think we have a great team this year, with lots of power behind them. What we really need is the support from Fort Benning fans, so come out and cheer us on," he said.

The Men's Basketball Team next travels to Tyndall Air Force Base, but you can catch their next home game Oct. 15-17 against Moody Air Force Base.

Field Artillery unit raises more than $1,000 for area youth

Keri Smith
Special to the Bayonet©

The 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment sponsored its annual Red Leg Open golf tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course Sept. 24.

The event raised, which has been hosted for the past 70 years, raised more than four times last years total, earning more than $1,400 to benefit Santa's Castle, an organization that helps give needy children a brighter, more fulfilled Christmas.

The tournament kicked off at 9 a.m. Friday. The best ball was played with standard rules applying. Thirty-four four-man teams played this year, more than any previous year.

Players from past tournaments, such as Bobby Davis, a member of a three-time, top five team said, "you really have to stick together as a team and learn to use each others strengths and weaknesses."

There were several contests held, such as an open skills contest, longest drive on the fifth and 11th holes, longest putt on the seventh hole, and closest to the pin on the 13th.

While some participants had a fun day just being out in the sun, most were impressed with their supervisors for letting them take the time from work to help benefit the event. William Brown, who helped sponsor the event, said he was happy about the turnout for the tourney.

"I think it's amazing today's Army will take the time from their grueling work week to get together for a very worthwhile cause," he said.

Some golfers didn't even care about winning the tournament, but said they were happy to make a difference in the lives of some children this Christmas.

"We're not worrying about scores," said Nate Carlson, "It's all for the kids today."

Russ Pond gets a cleanup

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

A few weeks ago Russ Pond was just an ordinary pond complete with mud, weeds, muck and gunk. Now all of that is changing thanks to a cleanup effort that is intended to spiffy up the place and get it ready for the community.

The old pond, which is tucked away in the woods just off of Vogle Avenue, hasn't had much activity since its days as a swimming pool during the 1940s. At that time the pond could get hundreds of visitors in a single day, said Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes, Russ Pond project manger, Directorate of Community Activities.

He explained that a few years after the pool was opened, it was shut down because water started coming in from the bottom. From then on the pond didn't receive much attention and as the years rolled by it began to deteriorate until it became a safety hazard.

"Nobody had really taken any interest in it," Hughes said. "Twenty years of growth and dirt and silt have gotten into the pond and there were some safety problems involved with snakes and other creatures crawling around down there. And since the pond is close to the quarters there has been a lot of concern about people getting bitten by snakes and other things."

Because of that concern for safety it was decided the pond was in desperate need of a make-over. So after a year of planning, the project got underway Sept. 27.

The cleanup, according to Hughes, is a collaboration between the the Natural Resources Branch, Directorate of Public Works and the 36th Engineer Group and

Gulf War illness team to visit post

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

A cloud of questions, concerns and uncertainty seemed to loom heavy when the Gulf War ended and thousands of veterans began experiencing mysterious physical symptoms. Those questions and concerns led the Department of Defense to begin an extensive effort to raise awareness of the issues surrounding Gulf War illness.

One of those efforts is a special outreach team from the office of the special assistant for the Gulf War illness that travels to installations to provide information to the community and listen to the concerns of veterans. Over the last year and a half, the team has visited more than 14 installations and Fort Benning is about to be added to that list Nov. 1-5.

"There is a little of something for everyone," said Col. Philip Wilkerson, executive assistant, deputy to the special assistant to the deputy secretary of defense for on Gulf War illnesses, about the what the team will provide on their visit.

Wilkerson said the mission of his office is three-fold:

• Inform veterans and family members about medical programs

Soldier discovers Fort Benning's bear facts

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning is home to an abundance of wildlife — deer, woodpeckers, bald eagles, bats and even alligators. But as one Soldier discovered, a black bear may also find Fort Benning's lush foliage too hard to resist.

Pfc. Bryant Cabral, a truck driver with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was traveling to a remote training site with a group of Advanced NCO Course students Sept. 10 when he spotted what he suspected was a bear.

"All we saw was a big furry creature on the side of the road," Cabral said. "I didn't think there were any bears here. Everyone we told thought we were crazy and said we must have been seeing things."

After contacting Pete Swiderek, the Natural Resource Management Branch's Fish and Wildlife supervisor, Cabral learned that there was a slight possibility the animal he saw was a bear. It wasn't until later that day when Cabral took Swiderek out to the spot of the sighting that his suspicions were confirmed.

Although the bear was nowhere to be found, tracks left in the area of the sighting served as enough proof of the bear's presence.

"This is extremely rare," Swiderek said. "There has been talk of sightings in the past, but this is the first documented case of a black bear ever recorded on Fort Benning."

Swiderek said the bear was probably a juvenile male dispersing from another population to find its own territory.

While bears are a rarity here, Georgia is no stranger to black bear populations. Swiderek said there are three main areas in the state where populations of bears are concentrated — the North Georgia mountains, around the Okeefenokee Swamp and a third just south of Macon near the Ocmulgee River.

Although there is no way to tell for sure where the bear originated, Swiderek said it mostly likely traveled from the population south of Macon.

"That's really not that far, and these males are known for traveling long distances," he said. "It's just a fluke this bear happened to come this way."

While the bear could have easily passed right straight through Fort Benning, Swiderek said there is also a good probability that the bear is still on the installation.

"There is a considerable amount of habitat out there, like swampy areas, where it could hide."

With the arrival of deer hunting season only two weeks away, the Natural Resource Management Branch is concerned someone may attempt to snag the bear as a trophy.

"This is a protected animal," Swiderek said. "There are only two areas where bear hunting is allowed and Fort Benning is not one of them." He said the only two authorized bear hunting areas are in the North Georgia mountains and around the Okeefenokee Swamp.

Although bears are often unfairly portrayed as vicious animals, Swiderek said if encountered it will probably just run away.

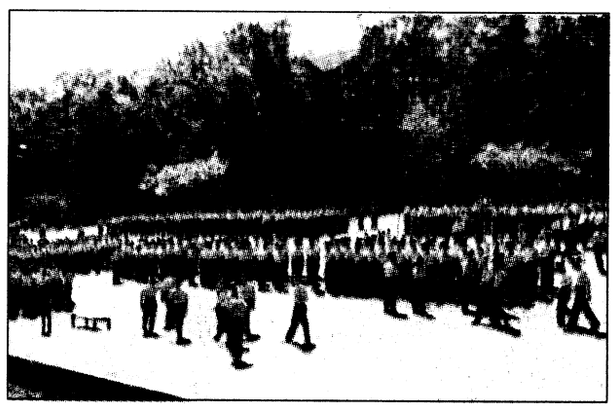
He added it is highly unlikely anyone will ever even see the bear, but said all sightings of the bear or its tracks should be reported to the Natural Resources Management Branch at 544-7319.

Troops head for JRTC

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

More than 95 Soldiers from Fort Benning's Kelly Hill arrived at Lawson Army Airfield Saturday to depart for what organizers call an exercise that is as close to the real thing as possible.

The exercise, which enlists the efforts of the Marne Soldiers as well as the 2nd Battalion, 82nd Airborne Division, will take more than 170 of the Army's Rapid Deployment Force personnel to the swamps and forests of Fort Polk's Joint Readiness Training Center.



The center will serve as the training ground for the service members for the next 21 days as the Army's airborne forces pair up with the firepower of Fort Benning's own Marne Soldiers.

"This is an excellent opportunity for both the 82nd as well as our 3rd Brigade Soldiers to improve battlefield readiness and improve our combat operations," said Capt. Pete Granger, B Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). "As partners in the Army's rapid deployment force, we benefit greatly from training like this that allows us to operate on a common ground."

That common ground will be as close to real combat as possible, Granger said before boarding the Louisiana-bound aircraft Saturday.

"We will be going into a challenging combat scenario that is well

commentary

I agonized over writing this commentary not because I don't have a stand against domestic violence but because some of my views have changed with age. I, like most Americans, believe that domestic violence is 100 percent unacceptable and under no circumstance justifiable. However my view about women who stay in this cycle of violence has changed.

When I was young (in college), I remember being outspoken and opinionated stating, "If a man ever hit me or abused me in any way, I'd pack up and leave." I chalked up all women who remained in abusive relationships as losers. My views were embarrassingly narrow and my ignorance was just that. Now, through research, maturity and inward reflection, I have discovered why battered women may remain with abusers and why seeking help can only improve their lives and the lives of their children.

It is a fact that one out of every four American women report that a boyfriend or husband has physically abused them. Even more startling is a national survey of more than 2,000 American families that found approximately 50 percent of the men who frequently assaulted their wives also frequently abused their children. So, why in a time of heightened public awareness would women remain silent?

Women who stay with abusers are not losers, but women who need help. They are plagued by fear (of further harm or death), destroyed self-esteem, co-dependency (justifies relationship), guilt (of separating from the abuser or breaking up the family), religious beliefs, commitment to family and the unwillingness to leave.
