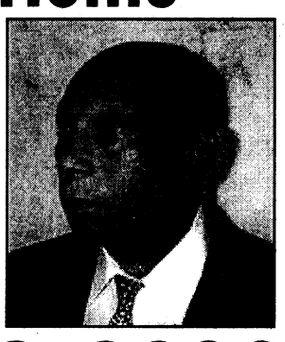
The 36th Engineer Group announces the closure of a 1,500 meter section of dirt road running from the Dekkar Air Strip to approximately the northern corner of Lawson Army Air Field. (Grid Coordinates FL93887290 to FL95057395) The road will be closed now to April 15. Normal traffic on this road is minimal and alternate roads can be used while this section is closed.

The purpose of the closure is to determine if the use of recycled crushed asphalt on Fort Benning tank trails will increase the trafficability, stability and longevity of the unimproved dirt surfaces through mechanical stabilization. The test strip will be divided into six sections. Each section will test a variation of road bed preparation and surface treatment. DPW Environmental Branch will provide their "rock crusher" equipment to process the asphalt and personnel are available for information and consultation.

For more information, call the Construction Management Officer at 545-2954.

Family Housing Closure Notice



The Family Housing office, Building 399, Olson Hall and the CHRRS office, Building 2621, Soldiers' Plaza, will be closed all day on March 29. Employees will attend an all day training session. Both offices will reopen at 8:30 a.m. March 30.

Don't forget!

Army Family Team Building offers Level II classes from 6:30-9 p.m. on Tuesday nights through March 28.

Easy path not always best road to take in life

Chaplain (Maj.) Harvey Hennington
30th AG Battalion (Reception)

reflections

A few years ago, we had a rather large yard, which required constant maintenance. My wife mows the lawn at our house, since I have terrible allergies.

One time when she was mowing the back yard, a rabbit ran from some brush, through a fence until he got his hips caught in the wire.

Although he probably could have pushed himself back through the wire, he continued to try to go forward, and was hopelessly caught.

At this point, my wife came for me, telling me that I had to help the poor rabbit. I found some sturdy gloves in the garage and followed her to the point of entrapment.

Sure enough, there he was, struggling as though he was scared out of his wits. As I took hold of his rear feet, he stopped struggling.

I guess he figured either I'd kill him for dinner or I'd have pity and let him go. I quickly pulled him back through the fence and let him go.

In the book Pilgrim's Progress, the main character, Pilgrim, also has a choice.

He can either take the path to the left, which slopes downward, is clear and wide, or he can take the path to the right, which leads uphill and has some bushes growing in the way. He decides to take the easy path and soon finds himself at the edge of some water. He can barely make out the other side.

Unfortunately, he missed the sign that said Slough of Despond. Soon he finds himself waste-deep in water with so much muck on the bottom that he can barely pick up his feet. Very tired and depressed he decides to turn back. At this point he realizes that he really could have saved time by taking the road that appeared to be harder. He also realizes that he lost a whole day's travel because he took the wrong fork in the road.

Life is just like that isn't it? So many times the path appears to be easier than it really is. It is easy to miss the warning sign and plunge into something way over our head.

Once we are finally willing to admit our mistake, steps must be retraced to the fork in the road and then the right road must be taken. We have a built-in warning device called conscience.

Like the fork in the road, we can elect to heed its warning or ignore it. Many times this involves doing the right thing as opposed to the wrong thing.

Once when preaching, I used the illustration of taking a trip and being on the look out for policemen. I explained that I found a wonderful secret.

If I obeyed the speed limit signs, I didn't have to worry about getting stopped for speeding. This made for a tremendously enjoyable trip. If I decided to ignore the warning, I found myself all uptight and completely exhausted by the time I reached my destination.

Just like the rabbit, it is easy to get scared and snared. Once we realize that we are caught, it is very tough to turn around or to back out of the situation, but in most cases that is exactly what is needed.

Once we have made a mistake we must admit to ourselves and those affected that we were wrong, and be willing to go all the way back to the fork in the path and then take the right road.

Sin acts as the snare of life ... sooner or later that sin will catch up to us and bog us down until there is nowhere to turn but up.

God's word says, "But if you do not do what is right, sin is crouching at the door, it desires to have you, but you must master it." Genesis 4:7.

Jesus is ready and waiting to forgive all our sins and help us back to the right path — all we have to do is ask.

chapel briefs

Catholic council meets Friday — The Military Council of Catholic Women meets at 10 a.m in the Main Post Catholic Chapel on the first Friday of each month, for a special program with a guest speaker.

This meeting is followed by the noon mass.

The group also meets Thursdays of all other weeks from 9-11 a.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel for a Bible study. All women are invited to share in this fellowship. Child watchcare is provided.

For more information, call Marty Terhune at 687-0308 or Marge Connelly at 682-2754.

Sunday School meets — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at Edward A. White School on First Division Road, from 9:30-10:30 a.m.

There are classes for students from 3 years of age through adult. Everyone is invited.

Child care for children of parents who are teaching or attending Sunday School is provided at the Infantry Center Chapel.

If you need a ride, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Prebaptism class date set — There will be a prebaptism class for parents who plan to have their child baptized in the Catholic Church.

The class will be conducted at 1 p.m. March 26 in Custer Terrace Chapel. This is the first session of a three-session cycle. To register, call Phil Reilly at 545-5508.

Protestant Youth of the Chapel meets — Effective March 19, the Junior High and Middle school group will meet from 6:30 to 8 p.m. and the Senior High group will meet March 23 from 6:30 to 8 p.m.

Relationships die without trust

Marital trust means proving your love in caring, giving ways

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Noted marriage counselor Earnie Larsen had this to say about trust, "The only issue there is in any relationship is trust. Our task is to grow, to become more trustworthy so there is more trust in our relationship."

Marriages die because of no trust. One spouse does not trust the other or neither trusts each other. Communication? Forget about it.

When trust dies communication dies with it.

Rupel

For too many couples doing what it takes to make the marriage work is not an option. Instead they choose to get mad, scream, yell and intimidate. It's more of a game than a marriage, it's who can win this argument. Husband 3, Wife 2.

Screaming, yelling and intimidation may be a part of a football game but it has no place in a marriage where a couple is trying to build trust. When I talk about trust with married couples most think about sexual fidelity.

Trust in a marriage goes beyond that. Marital trust is where you really care about your spouse. Trust means proving your love to your spouse in caring, giving ways which count to him or her.

The first step in becoming trustworthy is to look at oneself and ask, "What is there about me that I need to change? What do I need to change in order to become a more trustworthy spouse?"

Don't wait on your spouse to change. If both spouses will do this, there is no limit to where their relationship can go and their love for each other can only grow.

However, those who are not honest with themselves and continue to play games with their spouses will end up miserable and most likely in a divorce court.

Maybe you and your spouse need help with your communication skills.

The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center offers couples communication classes. Call the Center at 545-2050 for more information.

And in the morning, a great while before day, he rose and went out to a lonely place, and there he prayed. Mark 1:35

Hurricanes play host to 200 plus swimmers

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Destiny Graber, 13, probably spent more time in the water than out this weekend. The daughter of Sgt. 1st Class Gregory and Quiteen Graber, Destiny is a member of the Columbus Hurricanes Swim Team.

More than 200 competitors from the region hit the heated water at the D.A. Turner YMCA on Warm Springs Road as the Hurricanes hosted the Southwest Georgia Division Championship.

Sunday afternoon Destiny competed in three finals. She placed second for her age group in the girls' 200-yard backstroke, third in the 100-yard breaststroke and fourth in the 100-yard freestyle. A student at Blackmon Road Middle School, Destiny has been swimming on the team for three years.

The Grabers were stationed at Fort Drum, N.Y., where the severe winter weather and an excellent coach made indoor swimming extremely popular, Gregory said. Destiny took lessons there at age 6 and joined the Hurricanes when the family moved to Columbus. She practices about five times a week.

Of the monthly meets, she said, "I do it for fun, and I don't take the meets very seriously. It helps you do better if you enjoy it."

And swimming has become a family affair. Mom Quiteen worked Sunday as a timer for Lane 1.

"I'm not a real sports person," Quiteen said. "And this a way for me to get involved."

Destiny's younger sister, Jessica, 8, started swimming in September and had a great meet, qualifying for three finals.

"It's wonderful to see them excel and grow," Quiteen said.

While the kids were racing, the parents of the Hurricanes were working hard poolside serving as timers, officials and announcers.

The team "cut me a break," Gregory, who is assigned to Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade, said.

Teen's talent turns heads

1st Lt. Raquel Riley

She has an angelic face, like the kind you would see on a statue in a sanctuary.

Her expression never changes.

And her eyes watch you — very closely and very carefully.

What Naketia Swanier doesn't realize is that people are watching her — very closely and very carefully.

This 5'6" girl wonder, as some may call her, has raised the eyebrows of not just local coaches, but even a few college coaches are watching.

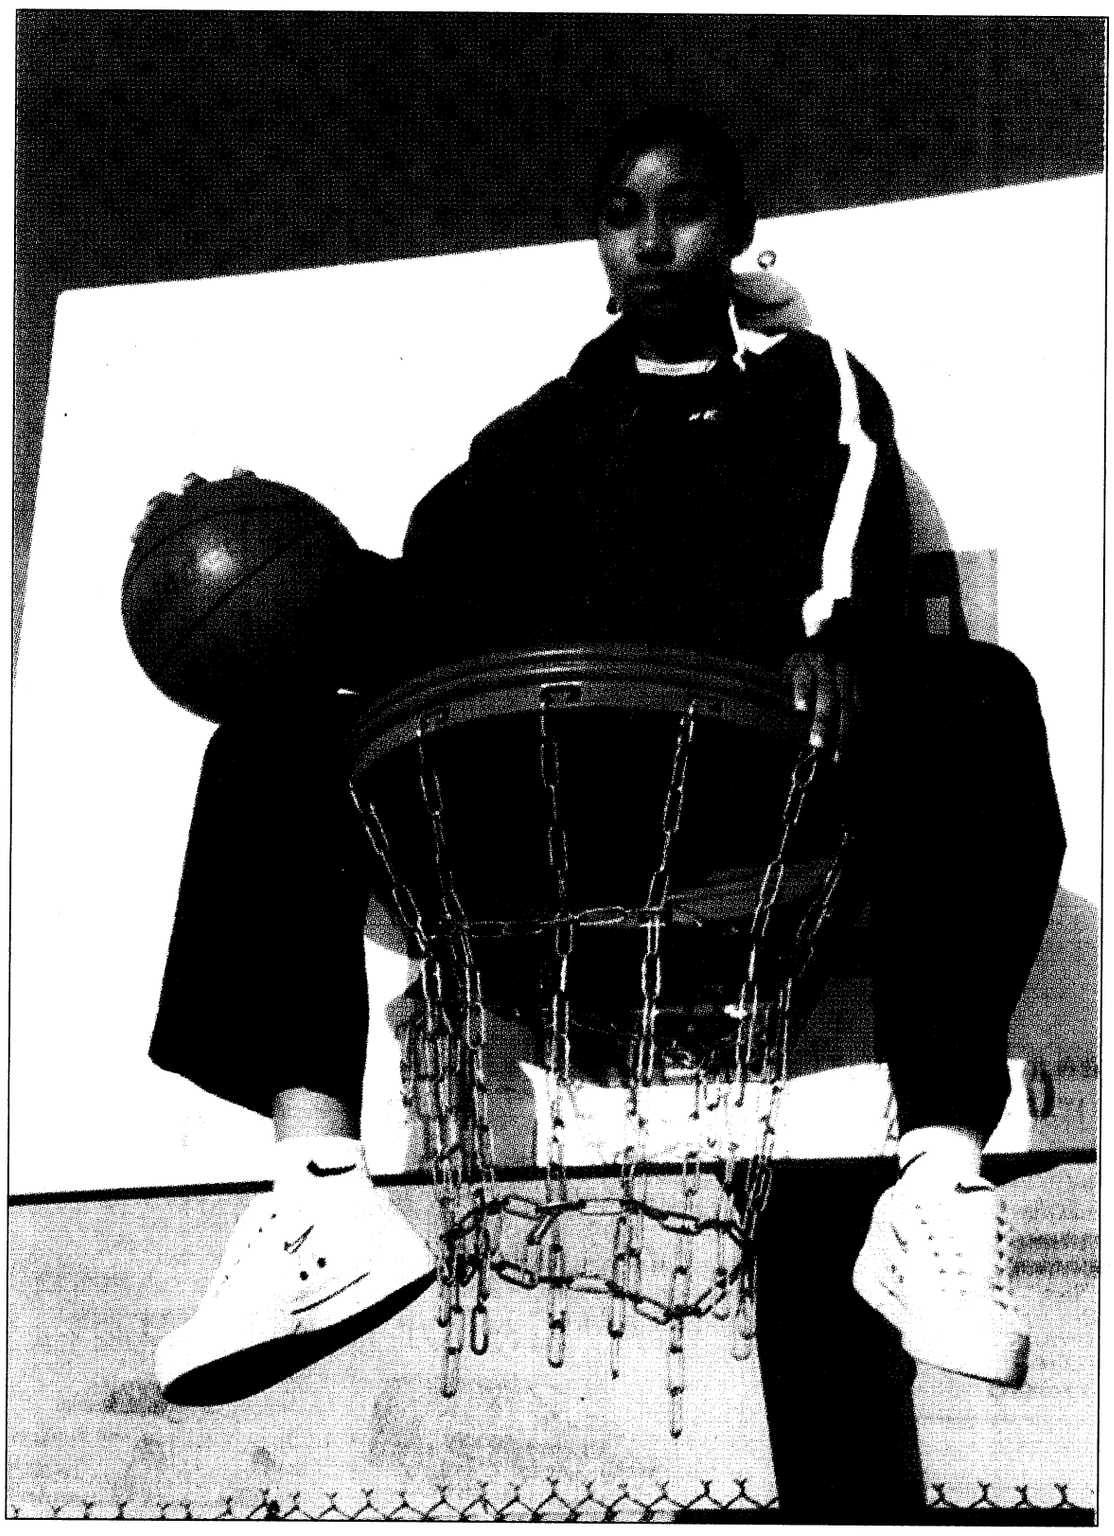
That's probably because this young teen-ager has already superseded many high school player's averages, in one game, to their average totals in say, two or three games.

At the age of 12, when most girls are still weaning themselves from Barbie dolls, she had already led the Wuerzburg Jr. Girls team Germany to a first place win. She also happened to pick up a few awards enroute, including the Sportsmanship Award and Most Valuable Player Award, just to name a few.

The question that many might ask is how do you coach a child so gifted?

Michael Green, basketball coach of the Georgia Magic Girls basketball team, stepped up to the challenge. Having met Naketia more than three years ago, he realized he had a winner on his hands.

"I knew she had a gift after I watched her play for only 10 minutes." He said that he was a bit skeptical of the phone call he received from her father Sgt. 1st Class Cornell Swanier, now stationed at Fort Benning as an Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control educator.



"I have talked to lot of parents who tell me their kids have that special something. I take it with a grain of salt because every parent is going to feel that way about their kids," he said. "But when I saw Naketia play, I knew her father was right."

Soon after her tryout with the Atlanta-based team, she helped lead them to first place wins in the Youth Basketball of America tournament and the Georgia State AAU tournaments in May '98. To top off that year, in July, she and her team took a gold medal home at the Georgia Games held in Atlanta. And if that isn't enough "in your face" action, Naketia then helped lead the team to the National Championships last year in Springfield, Mo., finishing ninth out of 74 teams.

Naketia seemed destined to become the heart pounding basketball star that she is. At the age of 6, she was dribbling balls between her legs. Her parents, having both played sports, took notice of their daughter's skills and bought her a basketball goal. As she grew older, she played other sports to include soccer, baseball and T-ball, but basketball was in her heart.

Now, a basketball player at Arnold Middle School, she continues to astonish misbelievers by averaging 22 plus points a game. In her last season, her record high was over 33 points. Not bad for someone who can't even drive herself to games yet.

What comes, as even a bigger shocker is her demeanor. She is very humble about all the fame and glory her skill has earned her.

1st Lt. Raquel Riley

Naketia Swanier, 12-year-old at Arnold Middle School, is one of the area's most promising young basketball stars.

"She is a very honorable person. Things don't seem to faze her," her coach said. "She is just amazing. I mean, she works well with her teammates and stays focused at all times."

He added that her success is partly attributed to her parents. "Every week, they travel to Atlanta for practice and are at every game. They support her whole-heartedly."

Shooters aim for win in tactical match

Rifle and Pistol club plays host to 45 riflemen

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Rifle and Pistol Club hosted a tactical rifle match Saturday at English Range.

More than 45 marksmen competed in the shoot that took targets out to 300 yards.

The shoot was comprised of six classes, but three classes were made up of only one shooter.

In the competitor class, T.W. Fuller took the top honors shooting a perfect score and only five rounds outside the X-ring. Lindsay Bunch and Fuller were close behind with a score only a few points down.

In the bolt action precision class, Gerald Boutin won by shooting a 249, only one point away from perfect. David Tally and Tony Sporri tied for second place missing the top spot by only one point.

In the professional class, Raymond Smith shot a perfect score with 15 bullets placed in the X-ring. Bill Huskey and Henry Wadkins rounded out the top three spots in the class. The next tactical rifle shoot is scheduled for 2 p.m. April 9 at English Range.

Tactical rifle shoots are held the second Sunday of each month and tactical pistol shoots are held the first Saturday of the month. A special event to Fort Benning will be the Glock Sport Shooting Foundation competition March 25-26 at English Range.

Between 300 and 350 shooters are expected to compete in the two-day shoot, which is the largest shooting competition in the tri-community area and usually the second largest in Georgia, said Jim Graham, assistant manager of English Range.

There will be three stages which will take about two hours for competitors to complete, Graham said.

A prize schedule, based on the Lewis System, will pay off six pistols and about 10 cash spots per Lewis, said Graham.

Only Glock pistols are allowed.

To register for the shoot, write to 2,000/2,001 Registration and Membership Application, P.O. Box 1254 Smyrna, Ga., 30081, or fax (770) 433-8719.

Entry fees are $25 for pre-registration and $35 the day of the match. Also there is a $20 GSSF membership fee, which is good for one year.

Other GSSF matches that are nearby include Conyers, Ga., Columbia, S.C., and Jacksonville, Fla.

For more information, call 689-3371 or (770) 432-1202.

36th battles to stay undefeated

Engineers topple 598th 49-37, use fouls to advantage

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

"Taking the ball to the hole creating a lot of shots and fouls," is how 36th Engineers head coach, Lucious Hires said they won 49-37 over 598th Maintenance at Tuesday's Post Intramural Basketball game at the Audie Murphy Gym.

Although missing two key players, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group was able to come closer as a team and managed to get the best of the undefeated 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group.

Nearly as soon as the game began 598th forward, Stephen Bullck drew a foul and went to the line, but he was unable to sink either of the two foul shots.

The game got off to a slow start, with neither of the teams scoring. Almost as probing for each other's weaknesses the first half scores were kept low.

With 10 minutes left in the first half, 36th began to slowly pull away while 598th was getting frustrated and began to foul frequently.

Taking advantage of numerous turnovers, and their speed, 36th created many scoring opportunities from fast breaks leading to several layups.

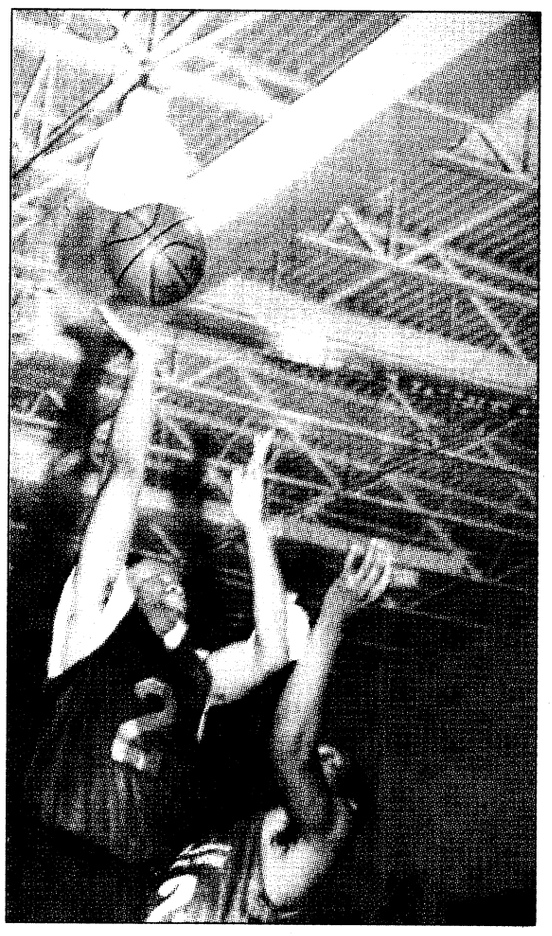
Almost out of desperation, 598th continued to foul. They often collided in mid air causing both the defender and the attacker to drop to the floor.

The first half ended with 36 in the lead 24-11.

The second half was similar to the first with neither team running up the score to a extreme.

However, 36th continued to chip away at 598th defense, as well as drawing more than 10 team fouls giving them the opportunity to go to the free-throw line multiple times for a one-on-one chance.

Utilizing fast breaks and taking advantage of untimely turnovers, 36th extended their lead continuously till time expired letting the 36th take the win, 49-37, and remaining undefeated. Losing their first game, 598th "is an excellent team," said Hires.



"We just didn't get into our rhythm," said Tim Jones, coach of the 598th. "Things ju t didn't go the way we wanted."

> "Missing our two key players really brought us closer. ... We all just played our hearts out."
> — Lucious Hires
> 36th Engineers coach

Things worked out a little differently for the 36th even though they were missing two key players.

"Tonight we played as a team," said Hires. "Missing our two key players really brought us closer together, and there was really no star. We all just played our hearts out."

Intramural action can be seen at three gyms across the post. Santiago Fitness Center, Bryant Wells Field House and the Audie Murphy Gym on weekdays.

Local park offers fun, relaxation

Spc. Amy Nyland

outdoor corner

There is a place in Columbus' own backyard that is perfect for just spending the day.

Although Flat Rock Park isn't the most spectacular park in Georgia it is definitely a step up from most other post and city parks.

Located off Warm Springs Road you immediately find out how the park got its name. There are a series of small rock formations that trickle down into the park. During the summer water flows over these ledges creating a sort of flat waterfall effect. Although I'm not sure how safe it is, I have heard stories of people actually sliding down the rocks when the water is flowing.

In my opinion the best thing about the park is the fact that it's not just a bunch of playground equipment plopped down in a sandbox. It sprawls across a pretty good chunk of land and is in the thick of nature with a variety of trees and animals to add to the experience.

Flat Rock is perfect for all kinds of adventure. Whether you want to ride your bike, explore, hike around, fish or have a picnic, the park has the means to accommodate it all.

There are loads of picnic shelters, tables and grills for barbecuing, which make it perfect for get-togethers and family outings.

If you're looking to get some exercise you can bike or hike around. If you decide to haul out your bike you can choose to take it easy and simply ride on the road around the park or you can challenge yourself by tackling the park itself. When I went I enjoyed riding down along the flat rocks while it was mostly dried up.

The park is big enough so that if you walk from one end to the other you are bound to get something out of it.

Although I'm not sure how good the fishing is, the lake is never without at least one angler out testing the waters.

Best of all, the park is just right for relaxing. The atmosphere is just right for pulling out that trusty blanket and taking a nap under the sun or sitting down by the lake with a good book.

I recommend everyone go out and enjoy a day at the park. I'm positive you won't regret it.

with a crutch. "It's amazing what you have to do to get out of something," he said laughing.

The father still played an important role — cheering the Hurricanes on against the five other competing teams.

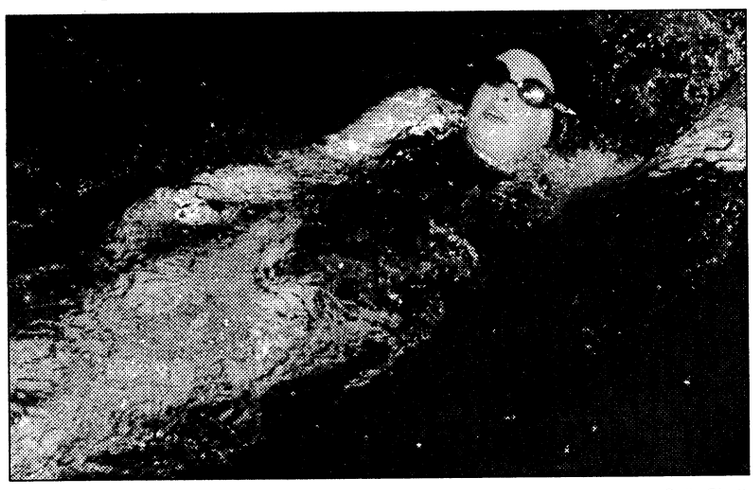
Other military families were out in force at the meet.

Amanda Olsen, 11, finished eighth in the girls' 11- to 12-year-old 100-yard backstroke.

"I really like being in the water," she said. Meets, however, "can be kind of nerve wracking and my stomach turns."

She puts up with that because "it's fun and I like being with my friends."

Her dad, Maj. David Olsen, the Marine Liaison at the U.S. Army School of the Americas, worked the computer Sunday keeping track of the results. Amanda's mother, Shirley, served as an official. Her younger brother, Gregory, placed second in the individual medley for his age group.



"We started the kids off at about 5- or 6-years-old and let them experience different sports. If they didn't like it, we didn't push it," David said. "As long as they like it, I will encourage them to do it."

The swimmers practice an average of five times a week in 90-minute sessions, and meets are held about every two to four weeks. The Olsen siblings usually compete in one a month.

"The camaraderie is wonderful," Shirley said. "The kids' friendships will last forever, and that goes for the parents' friendships also."

The event started Friday afternoon and ran until 8:30 p.m. Swimmers and parents were there from about 7 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. Saturday, and 7 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. Sunday.

The Hurricanes have 90 members, and about 20 percent are military connected, coach Jeff Dellinger said.

Sally Shutt

Amanda Olsen competes in finals Sunday.

Sunday marked the end of the short-course season in the indoor 25-yard pool at the Turner facility. The long-course season will start in May at the 50-meter outdoor pool on Double Churches Road.

Parents do not have to be members of the YMCA for their children to participate. However, if their child joins the team, he or she must pay club dues that include membership to the Y for the child.

Monthly dues are $40 for the beginner or tryout level and increase to $90 for the senior level. Meets are an additional expense.

"Everyone is more than welcome to come out and see what we offer," Dellinger said.

If interested, call Dellinger at 561-2546.

Star: Young prodigy set sights on college b-ball

Rosie Swanier, also stationed at Fort Benning, at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), 29th Infantry Regiment, sees herself in her daughter. Once an avid basketball player herself, Rosie said, "She has the same drive and determination I had. She gives 110 percent in every game."

Though Naketia sees herself one day playing on a Division college team, her mother was quick to interject, "Academics are first. I love what my daughter is doing, but she knows that I want her to achieve in academics."

With that remark, the basketball star didn't even cringe. She carries a 3.5 average in school.

"It's not a problem," Naketia said with a grin, as she grabbed her basketball and headed off to school.

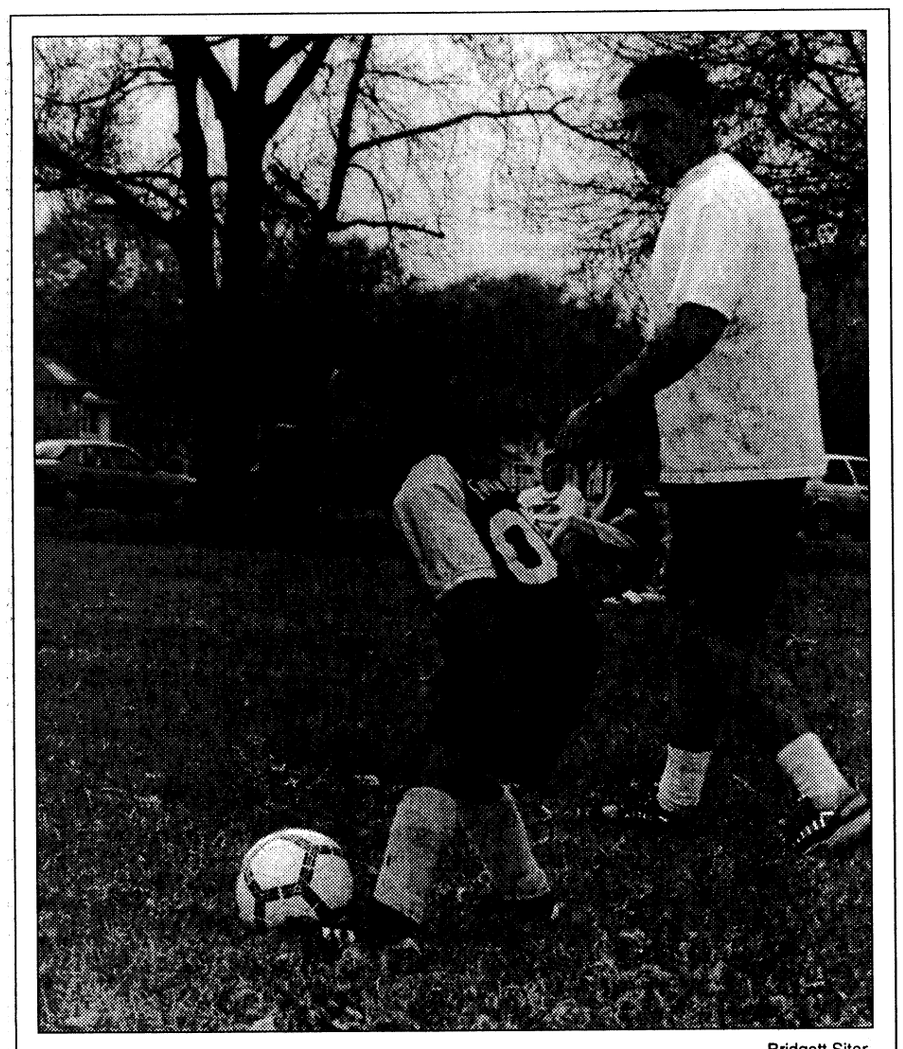
Some of Swanier's other accomplishments include:

• Led the Wuerzburg Jr. Girls in USAREUR Championships, 2nd place, March 98 at age 11, won Sportsmanship Award (13- to 15-year-old division).

• Led the Wuerzburg Jr. Girls in USAREUR Championships, 1st place, March 99 at age 12, won Most Valuable Player Award (13- to 15-year-old division).

• Placed first in 11 and under Georgia State AAU and Youth Basketball of America (YBOA) Championships with Georgia Magic (May 98).

• Went to National Championships in New Orleans, La., with the Georgia Magic, placed ninth in the nation out of 78 teams (July 98) 11 and under.



• Won Gold Medal in Georgia Games in Atlanta, Ga. (July 1998).

• Placed first in 12 and under Georgia State AAU and Youth Basketball of America (YBOA) Championships with Georgia Magic (May 99) 12 and under.

• Went to National Championships in Springfield, Mo., with the Georgia Magic, placed 13th in the Nation out of 74 teams. (July 99) 12 and under.

• Averaged 22 points a game with Arnold Middle School this past season.

• Selected as Sports Ambassador to represent the U.S. major cities overseas playing basketball.

Pig problem plagues post

New program aims to eliminate excess wild swine

Officer Candidate Sharon McBride
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Feral swine stomping and rooting around post have not only become a nuisance to the Fort Benning community recently, but now they have become a safety issue as well.

Recently 10 to 15 of the cloven hoofed animals were reported to be hanging out on the Lawson Army Airfield causing a ruckus and a backup of airfield traffic.

Also, there were several reports of the pesky critters tearing up sod and turf on post, most recently having desecrated the Ranger Memorial.

As a result, an area on post has been designated for a feral swine control project.

The area, which encompasses part of the Indianhead Terrace Family housing, land surrounding the Lawson Army Airfield and the land surrounding the new 75th Ranger Regiment barracks, is the area of concentration for the project for the next couple of weeks.

Three personnel from the Directorate of Public Works and the Directorate of Community Activities will be in the area eliminating the swine until the pigpopulation is under control.

"So far we have eliminated 21 pigs," Johnny Phillips, a biological technician, with the Conservation Branch DPW, said. For the past few weeks, Phillips has been working hand in hand with Pete Swiderek and Cliff Hughes, to thin out the ever growing feral pig population.

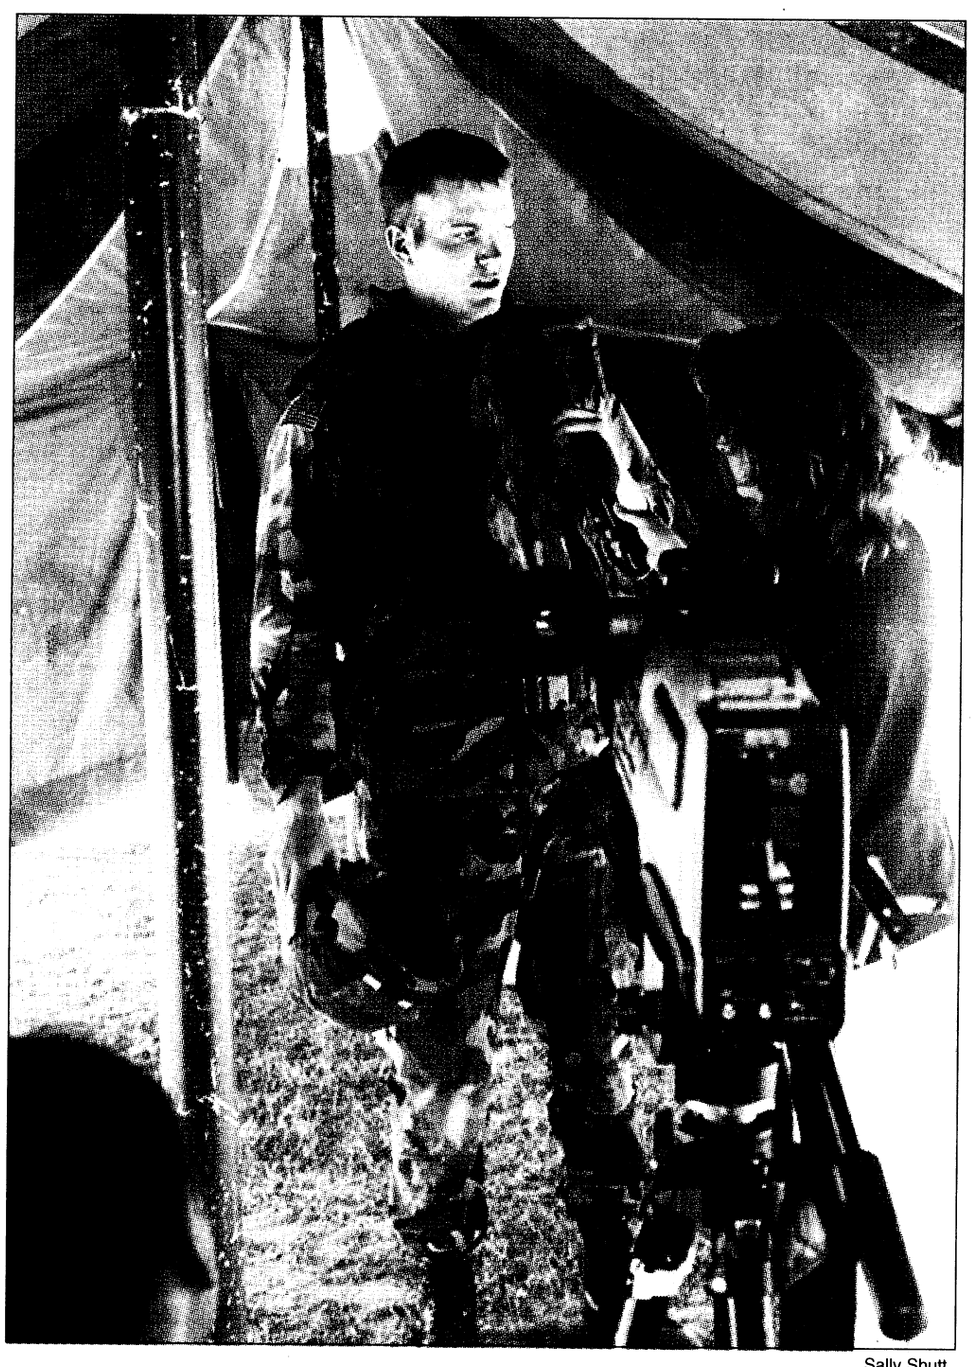
"There are so many of them," Hughes said. "Basically the habitat is overrun with them."

"There are still more out there," Phillips said. "They multiply rapidly. They are just about in every training area on-post, but now they are moving into the more people populated areas of post and that's causing concern."

"The pigs have taken over essentially what is a small area," Hughes explained. "It's no wonder that they have overflowed into the Main Post."

Phillips estimates there are about 10 to 20 more pigs to be eliminated.

Although the swine are not known to attack people, they can become very nasty if they perceive a threat, Phillips said. "With tusks as long as your index finger, they can be a real threat."



"Families who live in the Indianhead Terrace family housing, have been asked to keep children out of the woods until the project is over as an extra safety precaution," he said.

Bosnia at Benning?

Deployees get real-life training at site

Spc. Ian Tomas, a linguist from Fort Carson, Colo., participates in a mock interview Saturday before deploying to Bosnia

The surroundings are new — brand new — but the instruction remains the same for Soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines and civilians processing through Theater Specific Individual Readiness Training on their way to the Balkans.

Two weeks ago, a new 4,000-square-foot building behind the Collins Training Center, headquarters of the 29th Infantry Regiment, opened for business. The former TSIRT site was located at Harmony Church in an old motor pool.

The new building has three classrooms and office space for personnel. Two checkpoint lanes were constructed behind the building and feature concrete barriers and concertina wire. Personnel and vehicle inspection exercises are conducted there.

"They replicate checkpoints in Kosovo or Bosnia. It's to give them an idea of what they will see over there," A.J. Luke, TSIRT site manager, said.

Since March 1997, about 10,000 people and almost 208 units have trained at the Fort Benning site while processing

Recruiters take effort to video

Spc. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

In an effort to recruit new civilians into the Army, the U.S. Army Recruiting Command is going 3-D.

A team of photographers from the command have been at Fort Benning all week shooting video of various training.

The video itself is a new idea to the command because the new ads will be three dimensional.

Because of that factor, the team has been taping certain events and training that might lend themselves to a nice 3-D effect, said Capt. Beth Botti, advertising project manager for the Recruiting Command.

Among the training, the crew has been capturing video of an Airborne jump, Airborne students on the 250 foot towers, Rangers doing fast rope training, miscellaneous aviation footage, Bradleys, humvees, dismounted Infantry Soldiers and an award ceremony with color guard presenting arms.

Botti said the team was looking for certain events that would entice prospective Soldiers into hearing out recruiters.

"The whole idea is to look for opportunities where images are coming at you. That's what will help the video be effective," she said. "A lot of the stuff that we have in our cinema vans right now, are 2-D, and we want to do something a little more exciting that will help bring the young men and women in and raise their interest in the Army."

This isn't the first time a video crew from the Recruiting Command

Female general's success story keynotes lunch

Post plays host to Women's Month lunch Wednesday

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

When eighth-grader Velma L. Richardson announced her intention to become an Army officer, her classmates laughed at her.

In the early '60s, few women pursued careers in the military, and very few black women were promoted to the rank of officer.

Richardson briefly entertained thoughts of becoming a preacher like her grandmother or a doctor like her uncle.

But it was her Aunt Vashti Jeffries' career as a colonel in the Women's Army Corp that most intrigued Richardson.

"Her lifestyle, the way she talked about the Army, how she enjoyed her work and her ability to travel around the world really appealed to me," Richardson said during an American Forces Press Service interview. "She is why I am here. And she is probably why I have stuck around so long."

Richardson, 49 years old, has "stuck around" long enough to become one of only five black women to ever hold the position of brigadier general.

In January Richardson became the deputy commanding general of Fort Gordon, Ga., the second highest ranking officer at the U.S. Army Signal Center.

She now holds the fourth highest rank a U.S. Army commissioned officer can attain.

A lot has changed in the past 40 years since Richardson first dreamed of joining the Army. Women like her Aunt Vashti broke new ground for generations of women.

And women like Richardson continue to shatter the glass ceilings that have traditionally limited their career options.

Fort Benning celebrated the contributions and sacrifices of women in America at a Women's History Month Luncheon Wednesday at the Officers' Club.

The theme of this year's observance was "An Extraordinary Century for Women — Now, Imagine the Future!"

As the guest speaker, Richardson said the Army has been in the forefront of providing equal opportunity to women, making America truly "the land of opportunity."

"Using the military as a yardstick, it's certainly possible to imagine an amazing future for our gender, our military, and our nation."

Richardson said Women's History Month is a wonderful opportunity to publicly appreciate the contributions of women to American history.

"We should all feel a great sense of relief that America awoke to realize that we could no longer ignore the talents, strengths and gifts of more than half the American population," she said.

"The future of today's young women is brighter than at any other time in history because the military eliminated the use of gender as an excuse for discrimination."

More than 400 people attended Wednesday's event, including eight third-graders from Dexter Elementary's talented and gifted program.

Teacher Marjory Brasfield said the students were exited about the opportunity to attend the function.

"They have been doing independent studies all month long on great women in American history," she said. "This is a marvelous way to celebrate the culmination of all their hard work."

Humor heals April Fools' disaster

commentary

All the major events in our lives have taken place on or around a holiday. We had our first date on Fathers' Day. Tom gave me an engagement ring on Christmas, and we were married on Valentine's Day. Our first child was even born on Labor Day.

So I should have known this was no April Fools' joke when the phone call came on April 1, 1998. It was one of my husband's buddies, calling to tell me I should go immediately to the Womack Emergency Room. Oh, he played his part very well. He even sounded upset as he told me about the high winds on Sicily Drop Zone, and about the huge bank of packed clay that came between Tom and a perfect parachute landing fall. He said Tom was hurt badly.

In my own defense, I should tell you that my husband is notorious for his practical jokes.

There's one poor guy in Florida who has never fully recovered from finding a snake in the office refrigerator. It was coiled on a tray, covered with foil, and labeled 'cookies'.

So when I awoke that morning and looked at the date on my alarm clock, I knew I'd better be prepared for some form of foul play before the day was over. It was just like Tom to recruit someone else to help him with his little scheme.

His friend went so far as to say that Tom had broken his sacroiliac. I actually giggled. Everybody knows there's really no such thing as a sacroiliac. Right?

A quick word with the ER doctor confirmed that, indeed, there is a sacroiliac. It's the joint between the top part of the hipbone and the bottom vertebrae.

The doctor said that Tom had shattered this bone and his left pelvic bone, and we should expect a very long, slow recovery. At this point, things were looking decidedly not funny.

They recommended bed rest for at least six weeks and physical therapy. It might be six months before he could comfortably sit behind a desk, and don't even think about jumping from an airplane for at least a year. Maybe never.

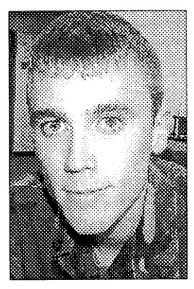
Did I mention my husband always has to have the last laugh? He left that hospital in less than a week. He returned to work in less than a month. And, yes, he jumped out of a perfectly good airplane three months later.

His mother will tell you it was many prayers that made it possible for Tom to recuperate so miraculously.

His buddies will tell you it was that Ranger hooah spirit that spurred him to recovery.

His dad will tell you it was his indominable sense of humor.

But, just between you and me, the reason my Ranger became upright and mobile in record time, had very little to do with his Ranger pride or his sense of humor, and a whole lot to do with a certain rubber-gloved nurse he called Brunhilda. He still breaks out in a cold sweat at the mere mention of her name.



Tom's injuries have completely healed, although he swears he can tell when it's going to rain by the ache in his hip. He never lost his sense of humor, but I've grown to appreciate him for it, or in spite of it. And just to prove it, I'm baking him a batch of his favorite cookies.

They'll be waiting for him in the fridge, wrapped in foil, labeled 'cookies.'

Long duty hours can spell trouble

commentary

Say the two letters, 'C' and 'Q' together in or around the ranks of today's military, and you are sure to hear numerous groans and derogatory comments about the all-day duty.

Despite the complaints, the Army has always contended the 24-hour duty is something we have to do to keep our colleagues safe. But as more and more studies are published on sleep deprivation as a result of such duties, the question has to be asked, "Is this so-called safety duty really keeping our Soldiers safe, or is it putting them at an unneeded risk?"

The threat isn't coming from the increase in global terrorism or rising rates of attacks on personnel overseas, the threat comes from something everyone battles on a daily basis — the battle to get enough sleep.

And those Soldiers battling the big sleep deficit after 24-hour duty have the scales of safety weighted against them.

The Council on Scientific Affairs reviewed two decades of records including a National Highway Traffic Safety Administration study that revealed as many as three percent of highway crashes are caused by sleepy drivers.

So who are the sleepy drivers? People like the 24-hour CQ Soldiers who are forced to work too long without enough sleep and then get in their vehicles and drive home are some of them.

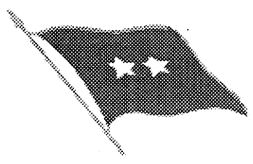
The Army has admitted tired drivers and long-term road trips don't mix by regulating drive times while Soldiers are operating government vehicles, but nothing has been done by the big green to protect persons driving privately owned vehicles after a long duty day.

Army Regulation 385-55 states military drivers operating a government vehicle for a combined duty period exceeding 12 hours in any 24-hour period must have at least 8 consecutive hours of rest.

The Army seems to be taking care of drivers of government vehicles, but shouldn't this rule apply to privately owned vehicle operators as well? It is obvious the same dangers are out there whether piloting a Bradley or a BMW, so perhaps something needs to be done to keep our Soldiers safe.

Police officials report tired drivers are the primary cause of more than 100,000 traffic accidents a year. An organization like the Army that is already operating on short-staff cannot afford to lose its people to these types of preventable accidents.

The answer to me seems simple — follow the same rules for POVs as GOVs. If a military driver can only work 12 hours without sleep, the same should hold true for the men and women filling the rest of the ranks, including a charge of quarters shift.



Sure more people will have to be on the duty roster, and the whole issue of recovery time will have to be reevaluated, but isn't it worth it to keep our Soldiers safe? Isn't it worth it to keep our Soldiers alive?

Community works together to prevent child abuse, neglect

Whereas, child abuse prevention is a community problem and finding solutions depends on involvement among people throughout the community;

Whereas, statistics of children who are abused and neglected escalate each year;

Whereas, the effects of child abuse are felt by whole communities, and need to be addressed by the entire community;

Whereas, effective child abuse prevention programs succeed because of partnerships created among social service agencies, families, schools, religious organizations, law enforcement agencies, and the business community;

Whereas, all citizens should become more aware of child abuse and its prevention within the community, and become involved in supporting parents to raise their children in a safe, nurturing environment.

Now, Therefore, I do hereby proclaim April as Child Abuse Prevention Month at Fort Benning, Georgia, and call upon all Soldiers, families, citizens, community agencies, religious organizations, medical facilities, and businesses to increase their participation in our efforts to prevent child abuse, thereby strengthening the community in which we live.

Safe, harmless jokes make April Fools' Day fun

We're well into the new millennium, and I'm hoping that the new millennium brings us some brand spanking new jokes and tricks come this April 1.

April Fools' Day actually came to be in 16th century France when, the start of the new year was April 1. Then, in 1562 Pope Gregory introduced a new calendar, and the new year fell on Jan. 1.

Some people didn't hear of or wouldn't believe the change, so they continued to celebrate New Year's Day on April 1st. Others played jokes and tricks on them and called them "April Fools."

Anyone who knows me well might say I'm fairly gullible.

When I was a freshman in high school, I heard two guys talking. One of them told the other, "Hey, did you know that the word gullible isn't in the dictionary?"

This threw me into a whirlwind. "How can a word not be in the dictionary?" I wondered all day. When I got home, the first thing I did was run to my dictionary and look it up. It was right there.

Then it slowly started sinking in. Ohhhh, I thought, boy am I gullible!

Like me, there are other gullible people, and April Fools' is the perfect day to play tricks on them.

For me the hardest part is trying to come up with something that people will believe.

When I try to play a joke, I cannot keep a straight face.

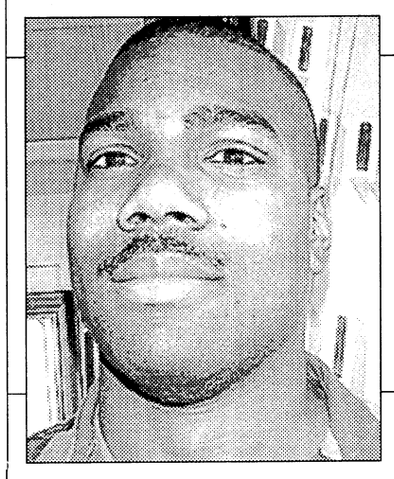
I usually tell my husband something stupid, like the car broke down or the dogs ran away. I'm really not too creative when it comes to playing jokes. The only time anyone believes me is if they forget it's April Fools.

I haven't heard anything spectacular in the way of jokes from anyone else.

My sister called my dad two years ago and asked him if he had heard from me. He said no, and my sister said, "Well, then she should probably tell you."

By saying that she had him thinking I was pregnant. I followed up with a call and made him believe it. Eventually we let him in on the joke.

Then, when I really was pregnant that October, he didn't believe me.



Now my 8-month old son is walking — sorry, had to throw that in there, proud mom. No joke!

April Fools' Day is a great day to play safe, harmless jokes and end up having a big belly of laughs. Be safe, be nice and play some good jokes!

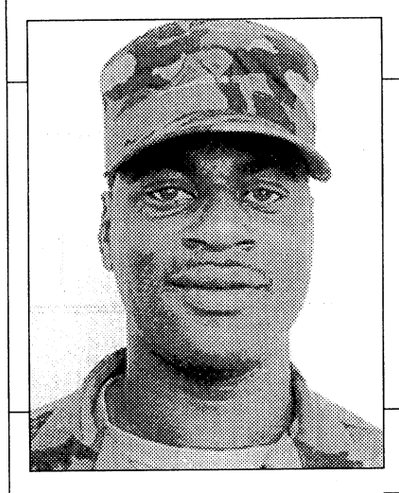
VARIOUS VOICES

What was the best April Fools' joke ever played on you?

Spc. Troy Stupart, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "When I was stationed in Germany, I was a driver for our executive officer. I was supposed to pick him up on April Fools' Day, and the guys in my office replaced the rank on my hat with his. When I went out the brigade commander saluted me."



Spc. Kiona Jones, HHC, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Bde. (Mech) — "My friend convinced me that she had seen my name on a roster saying I was going to Bosnia. The whole company was in on it. I really thought I was going."

Staff Sgt. Jason Orello, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C. — "My wife told me she was pregnant and she really wasn't."

Sgt. Justin Enders, A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "When I was at the 10th Mountain Division I had just gotten back from 30 days of leave and I was told we had to pull out. Supposedly there was an alert and we needed to leave. I was already packed up and half way to Rome, N.Y., before I found out it was a joke."

Spc. Joseph Simmons, 104th Transportation Co., 36th Engineer Group — "My mom made our family believe we had won the lottery. She packed us up, drove to Tallahassee, Fla., and when we got there we found out the only thing she had won was a ticket. She only did it to get all of the kids together."

Renea Lee, Army and Air Force Exchange employee — "The best April Fools' joke that has been played on me was when I went to make some coffee and somebody had replaced the sugar with salt."

Retiree finds joy in footnotes of history

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Robert Felton spends three days a week in "the hole," sometimes not seeing daylight or another human being for hours at a time. He still enjoys his job. He calls it a gold mine where he discovers "little gems" every so often.

Like the time he found a game roster listing the players on the Army and Navy baseball teams that competed at Fort Benning during World War II. There in pencil on the coffee stained ledger were the names Joe DiMaggio and Phil Rizuto.

"Those are what I call the footnotes of history — the little known facts that I come across every now and then that really make my job interesting," Felton said.

Felton's "job" is a volunteer position preserving and cataloguing photographs and historical documents at the National Infantry Museum. He works in the reference library. His co-workers call it "the hole" because it is a cramped and isolated room. Felton calls it "Fort Benning's attic," because it houses an estimated 250,000 photographs, books and documents relating to Fort Benning and the U.S. Infantry.

Felton, who will turn 70 in May, retired from the military in 1974 after 27 years of active duty, including tours in Korea and Vietnam. As a lieutenant colonel, Felton spent his last four years at the Pentagon.

"Since the time I was just a little boy, right after World War II, all I ever wanted to do was join the Army. I enjoyed my time in service, except for the last few years at the Pentagon," Felton said. "I missed being with the boys in the field."

While attending the Advanced Officers' Course at Fort Benning in 1958, Felton discovered another "gem" near the very same spot where he works today. From the third floor of the museum, Felton pointed out the window at Sacrifice Field and described the scene as it appeared more than 40 years ago.

"This used to be the old hospital," he said, referring to the museum itself. "In that field, there were old one-story buildings from World War II used as an annex to the hospital. That's where I met my wife Dell. She used to work in one of those buildings."

Dell's family lived in nearby Newnan, Ga., so the Felton's returned to Columbus after retiring, and Robert worked for 17 years with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

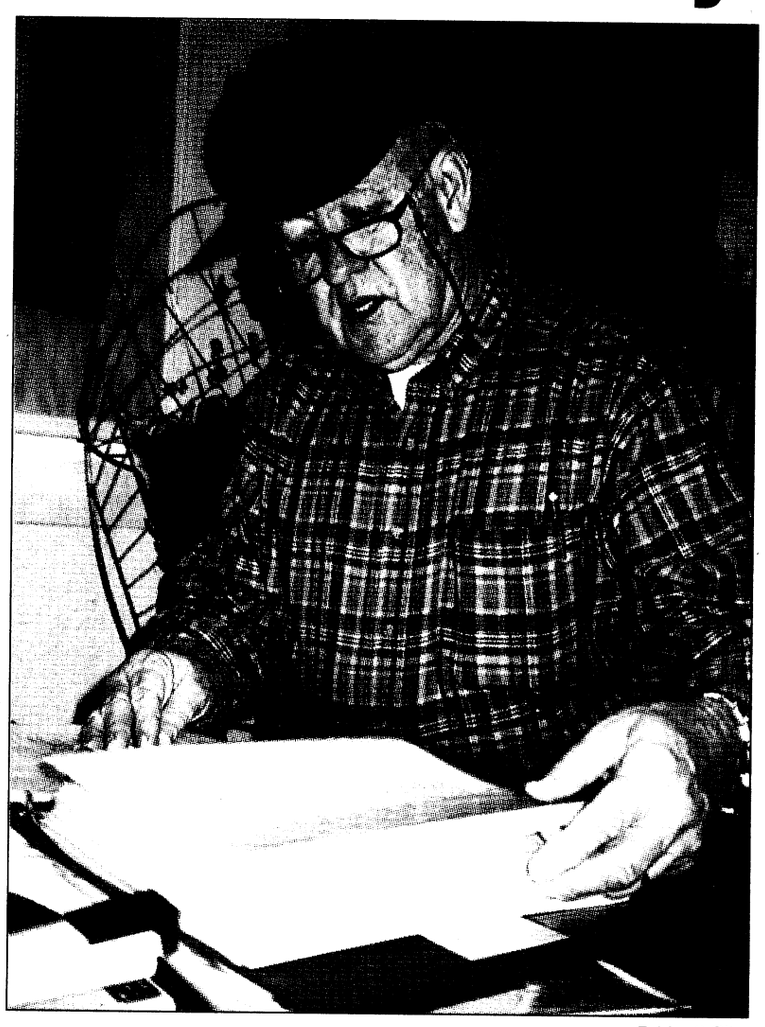
After toying with several volunteer activities, Felton approached the museum director, Frank Hanner, who said he could use some help "straightening out some photographs."

"That was three years ago," Felton laughed. "I'm only about a quarter of the way done."

The task of separating, identifying, cataloguing and preserving thousands of unmarked photographs would seem daunting to even the most avid history buff. Felton calls his methods "low tech." He often has to refer to historical records or call historians to identify photos. Sometimes it's as simple as recognizing a face or a uniform.

"It's like a Pandora's box, I guess you'd say. It's a tremendous job, but sometimes frustrating," Felton said. "In and of themselves, these pictures might not be all that interesting. But it's the stories behind the pictures that are fascinating when you start to identify them and learn about the lives of the people in them."

Felton was named Retiree Volunteer of Excellence in 1999 for his contribution to the museum. His co-workers say he is performing an invaluable service to Fort Benning and the Army.



"If it wasn't for Bob, those photos would still be sitting in filing cabinets, with no organization or protection. They couldn't be properly utilized to assist people," said Hanner. "The people who donate these pictures to the museum are entrusting them to us for future generations. The service Bob is performing is invaluable."

"It's not a glory job," said Becky Pennington, museum secretary. "All he gets out of it is self-satisfaction and the knowledge that he is doing something that we have no one else to do."

Felton appears undaunted by the job at hand and unimpressed with the accolades sent his way.

"I like my work, but I'm really in it for the money," he chuckled. "I got a 100 percent increase at the beginning of the year."

Of course, as a volunteer, Felton receives no pay for his work, and a 100 percent increase of nothing is still nothing.

Site: Prepares Soldiers for world deployments through the CONUS Replacement Center, Luke said. The Fort Benning TSIRT site is one of six in the U.S.

"We have the capability to run 400 Soldiers a week through here," Luke said.

Saturday a group of about 35 individuals, including linguists, tankers and flight medics, were completing their instruction.

"The training is geared to what they may encounter in Bosnia or Kosovo, and is a follow-on to the training they have already received in Force Protection," Earl Brown, chief of the Mobilization Branch, Plans and Mobilization Division, Directorate of Operations and Training, said.

Classes in media awareness, countermines, mine awareness, convoy operations and other topics pertinent to the theater of operations are given in the building.

Monica Manganaro, deputy public affairs officer at Fort Benning, presented the media awareness class, which covers what can and cannot be said to the press. While the class remained inside, she, a camera operator, and several volunteers stepped outside to conduct mock television interviews. She then played the tape for the class to critique.

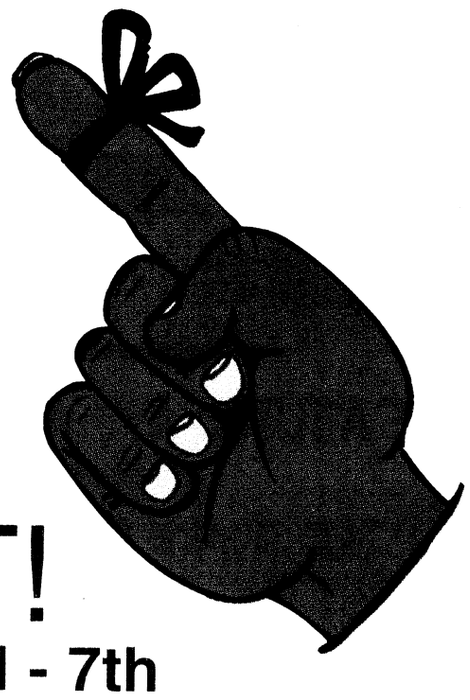
"Remember, you are putting a face on this big green machine," she said.

While Manganaro covered media awareness, two other groups were conducting personnel and vehicle searches outside under the supervision of NCOs from the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The day before, the students had received classroom instruction.

"We go from the crawl, to the walk and then the run mode," Luke said.

By Saturday morning, the students are in the running stage — applying what they've learned in the classrooms on Friday to the field.



In addition to the personnel and vehicle searches, Situational Training Exercises are conducted at the Force Protection Lanes just down the road from the Collins Center. Squads move down the 1,000-meter lanes and probe for mines, bypass mine-wired obstacles, react to sniper fire and deal with civilians on the battlefield.

Trainers from 1st Army at Fort Gillem, Ga., instruct units which process through the center. But for smaller groups and individuals, the training responsibility falls on the the 29th Infantry Regiment, Luke said.

"Everything we are teaching here relates to what is going on in the Balkan theater," Staff Sgt. Mike Roberts, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Inf. Regt., said.

Old Glory needs light when under stars

Regs say porch light not enough to illuminate flag

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For all of the "Yankee Doodles" on post there is probably nothing more patriotic than the American Flag waving just outside the door.

And while erecting a flag at one's private quarters may seem a simple procedure, there are actually a number of Army regulations that guide the proper display of the flag.

One of the more common mistakes people make is keeping the flag outside past dark, said Cliff Davis, chief of ceremonies, Directorate of Operations and Training.

Army Regulation 840-10 states that the flag of the United States will be displayed daily from reveille to retreat unless MACOM commanders authorize the permanent or semipermanent 24-hour display of the flag.

When display of the flag past dark is authorized it can only be done so if the flag is illuminated with its own source of light.

Residents often turn on their outside lights thinking it is proper lighting, but unless that light is aimed directly at the flag, it doesn't meet the standard, Davis said.

Other regulations regarding the display of the flag prohibit it from being worn as apparel, bedding or drapery.

It can never be festooned, drawn back, nor up, in folds, but always allowed to fall free. It should never be used as a covering for a ceiling or decoration.

Also, the flag must never have any marks, insignia, letters, words, designs, pictures or drawing of any nature placed upon it nor attached to it.

Davis said he often sees people making a number of other mistakes when it comes to paying respect to the flag.

One of these is rendering the proper courtesy when the flag is passing by.

"A big problem with both civilian and military is they don't take the time to know the proper courtesies rendered to the flag when it passes," Davis said. "When the flag passes six paces before until six paces after military personnel should salute and civilians should cover their heart with their right hand."

Another major disrespect to the flag that Davis witnesses often on post is the lack of courtesy during reveille and retreat.

"My biggest pet peeve is during reveille and retreat when people do not stop their vehicles and render honors," Davis said.

He explained that a person should get out of their car, face the flag, or the music if they cannot see the flag and salute or place their hand over the heart.

"By rendering proper courtesy to our national symbol it simply shows respect to our nation," Davis said about why it's important to understand and abide by the regulations.

"I feel great when I properly display the flag. It says that I am proud of my country."

Smartforce sends Soldiers to school for free

New website makes Microsoft certification easily accessible on line

Sgt. Lori Smith
Assistant editor

More than 5,000 courses are available online and free for Department of the Army civilians and active-duty, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers.

Free information technology training is available on the SmartForce website, a technology-based system of interactive courseware.

Courses are designed for the beginning computer student as well as those who would like more advanced training. Students can choose from a wide range of courses including Microsoft Office 2000, Java programming, systems and data base design and networking.

"This is a great opportunity to brush up on computer skills," said Mike Hodge, education services specialist, Fort Benning Army Learning Center.

"The Army bought into this program in 1998," Hodge said. "With fewer personnel, training dollars are short. This way Soldiers can stay in the office and train."

Hodge suggests Soldiers and authorized civilians take advantage of this opportunity because computer knowledge is necessary for today's workforce.

The self-paced courses range from two to 12 hours. Upon completion of the course, students receive a certificate of completion. Although the certificate does not count towards college credit, Hodge said it may show the unit or employer that the student has computer knowledge.

To gain access to the courseware, students must register at the SmartForce Website from any military address site.

Hodge said if students have problems, he can assist with registration at the Army Learning Center in Infantry Hall.

Once registration is complete, students can access courses using a web browser either from home, office or the Army Learning Center.

The address for SmartForce website is www.armycbt.army.mil.

FORT MONROE, Va., — Training and Doctrine Command has a key role in developing three masks to protect service members who might be exposed to nuclear, biological and chemical agents on future battlefields.

"Public law mandated the consolidation of all DoD chemical and biological defense programs and made the Army the executive agent for coordinating and integrating the development of NBC protective equipment," said Carl Fraker, an NBC systems analyst in the Combat Service Support Directorate for TRADOC's Deputy Chief of Staff for Combat Developments.

"Within TRADOC, we represent the Army's fighting force, the Soldier. We are responsible for developing the requirements for new equipment based on an analysis of our potential adversaries' capabilities. We also are aware of deficiencies of existing masks, based on feedback from the field."

Other services go through a similar process. When all the services' requirements are identified, a Joint Service Integration Group brings all their representatives together to integrate their needs.

The purpose of the integration group is to prevent each service having to develop their own unique versions of equipment for NBC defense requirements.

There currently are two versions of the next generation Joint Service General Purpose Mask in various phases of development.

The XM-50 is for all ground personnel, while the XM-51 will be for combat vehicle crewmen.

A new Joint Service Aircrew Mask is also under development.

Only a technology demonstrator model of the XM-50 exists now. It was built by engineers at the U.S. Army Soldier and Biological Chemical Command at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. Made of a black rubber blend, it has a single eyepiece for a greater range of vision.

The eyepiece will also work with night vision and sighting devices. Below the eyepiece are low-profile filters and a voicemitter, which make the XM-50 look like a Darth Vader mask.

Another objective is for the new mask to be compatible with a wide range of current equipment or equipment and systems that are being developed.

"Our suspicion is that the finished mask will look very much like this when it is fielded in the 2005-2006 timeframe," Fraker said.

How it eventually looks depends on the winning contractor's recommendations to meet the performance specifications, followed by a series of developmental tests and operational trials.

The final M-50 mask will have a 50 percent across-the-board improvement in visibility, breathing, speech clarity and overall comfort.

The XM-51 differs from the XM-50 in that it will have an optional hose which combat vehicle crewmen can plug into an onboard gas particulate system.

"Combat fighting vehicle crews are more and more like pilots working in confined spaces, any mask and filter system that interferes with their movement and ability to perform their mission can cause almost as much risk as an NBC environment," Fraker said.

The XM-50 may also be modified so that ground personnel such as air traffic controllers can use different communications equipment.

The new aviation mask will be designed for used by helicopter pilots and crew members, as well as for "fast movers" (jet aircraft), according to Fraker.

As the Army increasingly operates in urban areas around the world, there is also another threat to consider — toxic industrial materials and chemicals.

"We're requiring for the first time ever for this future mask to protect us not only against traditional NBC threats, but now toxic industrial materials," Fraker said.

Post prescribes control burns

Prescribed burning of woodland areas will take place from Monday to April 9. If weather permits, the following areas will be affected: A15, C1, D8, D14, E7, J3, L6, M2, M8, N1, N2, O5, O10, P3, Q3, S1, T2, U3, Y1, Y3, Z1, Z2 and the Sand Hill cantonment area.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat training areas. Personnel proposing to use these areas must vacate the areas before 9:30 a.m.

Units using ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pinestraw, leaves and trash, from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4.

AUSA hosts writing contest

The Association of the United States Army has established a writing prize for future concepts for a Mobile Protected Fighting System.

This prize is designed to promote conceptual thinking for the design, development and use of a new ground combat system by the U.S. Army around the year 2025.

AUSA will assemble a distinguished panel of military and civilian experts chaired by retired Gen. Glenn Otis to judge essays of 2,000 words or less. The top essay will receive a prize of $5,000. Second prize is $1,000 and third prize is $500. The three prizewinning essays will be published in Army Magazine and presented at this year's annual meeting.

Send essays to: Institute of Land Warfare, Association of the United States Army, MPFS Essay Contest, 2425 Wilson Boulevard, Arlington, VA 22201.

Benning culinary team takes honors at competition

Pvt. Jeremy Moyer, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, won a bronze medal in the Junior Chef of the Year at the culinary arts competition at Fort Lee, Va. He works at Gibson Dining Facility at Kelley Hill.

The Soldiers eating chili dogs at Gibson Dining Facility at Kelley Hill last week had no idea the cook serving the entree was a medal-winning chef.

Pvt. Jeremy M. Moyer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Infantry Brigade, won a bronze medal in the Junior Chef of the Year contest at the 25th annual U.S. Army Culinary Arts Competition held earlier this month at Fort Lee, Va.

At 20, Moyer was the youngest Soldier on Fort Benning's six-member Culinary Arts team. Although he has only been in the Army two years, Moyer has years of experience in food service and participated in cooking competitions while in high school.

"My family owns the Chimney Corner Restaurant back home in Lancaster, Pa.," he said.

When he leaves the Army in 18 months, Moyer plans to attend the Culinary Institute of America to further his culinary education, he said.

Moyer and the other Soldiers who competed for the Junior Chef of the Year honor were required to cook and serve a set menu which was comprised of soup, a main plate with starch and vegetables and dessert.

They used standard Army recipe cards given to them the day of the timed event.

Master Sgt. Carolyn Lewis is a master chef, a Culinary Olympic medal winner and surrogate mom to the food service Soldiers like Moyer whom she mentors at Fort Benning.

Several of her Soldiers have gone on to serve at the Pentagon and to compete on the U.S. Army Culinary Arts Team.

Assigned to A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Lewis serves as an enlisted aide to Commanding General John Le Moyne.

The chef guided the team during the competition Feb. 24 through March 11. They returned with 20 overall awards and numerous lessons learned in hand.

Lewis won an honorable mention in the Chef of the Year competition. She was required to plan, prepare and serve a five-course meal for four people using a mystery basket of ingredients. She had four hours to complete the task and her ingredients included ostrich, shrimp, scallops, halibut, quail, duck and assorted vegetables and fruit.

She also won three bronze medals and two honorable mentions.

Fort Benning's four-member Field Mess team won a silver medal. Staff Sgt. Olen Winningham, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Bde.; Spc. Wileana Martin, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Bde.; Sgt. Katina Stacey, 988th Military Police Company, and Moyer were given a menu at 6 a.m. and required to have a meal for 50 people prepared in four hours.

The experience of preparing food for judges was much different than preparing for Soldiers, Martin, who also won an honorable mention for cold desserts, said.

"The judges are constantly there, watching the process and watching every little move you make," she said.

Soldiers are not that picky. "In the field, they are glad to just come in and eat," Martin said.

Winningham, a pastry chef, won a bronze for petit fours and an honorable mention for a centerpiece.

Sgt. Belinda McCall, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, won a bronze medal in the centerpiece category and an honorable mention in the lunch meal contest.

Fort Benning's six-member team competed against 12-member teams from other installations. The group had less than two weeks to prepare for the competition, Lewis said.

"Because our Soldiers go to the field a lot, we were unable to pull them from their units until just before the competition," she said.

Local Army attorneys earn accolade for service

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Office of the Staff Judge Advocate received the 1999 Army Chief of Staff Award for Excellence in Legal Assistance in March, for their demonstration of consistent excellence.

Receiving the award for the last 10 years in a row, and 15 of the last 16 years, Jane M. Winand, chief of the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said the office helps Soldiers, family members and retirees with various legal issues such as preparing wills, power of attorney, filing income tax and other personal legal matters.

The award is to recognize a LAD that provides quality legal services and shows innovation in the provision of preventative law information, Winand said.

"The strength of our program lies in the dedication and experience of the attorneys and support personnel," she said. "Our current staff includes an attorney with an advance law degree in tax, an attorney who specialized in divorce law in Columbus for seven years before joining the LAD. And we have a paralegal who has eight years experience handling family support cases."

Staying busy in 1999 as well as other years, SJA helped nearly 41,000 people in legal matters including adoptions, small claims court and probate, Winand said.

"While many civilian legal offices charge $1,000 per case, we do the cases for free and have quite a high caseload," she said.

The office is able to maintain it's high standards because of the professionalism of the military and civilian staff.

"It is the great people we have here that gives the office it's strength," she said.

Rich Coreno was able to see first-hand the professionalism and strength the office gives during times of need.

After his dad passed away, Coreno, a personal management specialist for the Civilian Personal Advisory Center, took his mom to the SJA to ask questions on his dad's will and estate settlement.

"Carolyn Moller, (a legal assistance attorney), did a super job helping us. In a difficult and confusing time, she put us at ease. She even went to the probate judge's office with us and took care of everything," Coreno said.

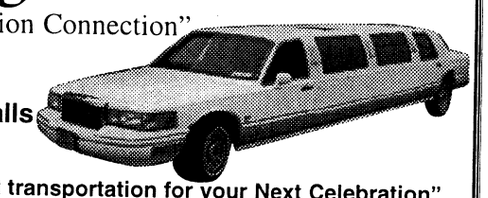
"The care and concern she showed was very evident," he said. "There is no better assistance around."

Pigs: Digs send officials on anti-swine search

All in all the pigs are disposed of in a very humane manner, he said. Several huge traps have been set in secluded areas where the pigs are known to frequent.

The traps are boxes approximately four feet by eight feet that work with bait and a sliding trap door.

"Basically they are confined in the pen until we get to them," Phillips said.



The pigs are taken to Daffin's, a meat processing plant in Columbus.

"Then the processed meat is donated to local food banks through a program called 'Hunters for the Hungry,'" he said.

With pigs that weigh up to 300 pounds that's a lot of meat for the less fortunate, he said.

The project is scheduled to continue for the next couple of weeks.

Soldiers from D Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, get down and dirty on the crab-walk obstacle.

Trainees put through paces by taking on obstacle course

Staff Sgt. K. Allen Whiteacre
3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

The conditioning obstacle course hosted 240 Soldiers from D Company, 3rd Battalion, 47 Infantry Regiment, March 24. The company went looking for the challenge and motivation it experienced the last time it was at the course.

"We would like to hit this course three times a cycle, because it is an excellent gut check and builds esprit de corps," said Capt. William Burley, D Co. commander.

According to the program of instruction, obstacle courses are used to improve physical conditioning and instill confidence. Although the course is littered with low obstacles it is run against time. The time factor and team competition offers an excellent physical workout.

As with most periods of instruction the obstacle course also reinforces several Army core values. Overcoming the limitations of one's physical conditioning to complete the course to standard requires personal courage.

By being a positive motivator and encouraging teammates to succeed, one practices selfless service. On the other hand, by refusing to be a negative motivator the competitors demonstrate respect.

The course is made up of 15 obstacles that challenge competitors to jump, dodge, climb, traverse, crawl, vault and balance. Trainees jump ditches, climb a 25-foot rope, traverse a horizontal ladder, negotiate a log bridge and dodge their way through a grid maze.

That puts the trainees in front of the centerpiece of the course near the halfway mark. Competitors must crawl under barbed wire. The ditch, depending on weather, is often filled with mud and water. The company found the obstacle when there was more mud than water to crawl through.

"The mud pit is the most memorable obstacle, because it is a chance to get dirty," said Pvt. Marc Runge, from Phoenix, Az., with a grin and mud on his face.

After the mud, the course is downhill. The obstacles left include a fence, a six-foot wall and a few other minor obstacles.

D Co. ran the course once for familiarization and then once for competition. Finally, platoon squad leaders competed against each other and the clock.

As always in competition there is a winner, but because this competition helped build teamwork, physically conditioned the trainees, reinforced several Army core values and raised the company's level of motivation, it was a win-win competition with no losers.

Mortar Leader Course taught at Campbell

Instructors teach Air Assault hopeful Soldiers

Capt. Gary Jones
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The Infantry Mortar Leader Course conducted its first ever course outside of Fort Benning since the course's inception back in 1962.

The IMLC course was conducted at Fort Campbell, Ky., with the Soldiers of the 1st Brigade (Bastogne), 327th Infantry Regiment, 101st Air Assault Division, attending the class.

The course is normally conducted at the Infantry School, but the 29th Infantry Regiment and the 1st Brigade commanders' initiative took the course and its mobile team of instructors to Fort Campbell.

This was the first time the IMLC has been conducted at Fort Campbell, or at any other installation in the Army.

The Infantry Mortar Leader Course graduated the first class of students during a ceremony at the 327th Infantry Regiment's dining facility March 16.

The presentation of course certificates at the graduation ceremony has now tripled the number of Infantry mortar leaders in 1st Brigade, said Lt. Col. Gordon B. Davis, Jr., commander of 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., and guest speaker at the graduation ceremony.

"That's what IMLC was established for and that's the charter for the Army to produce technical and tactical expertise needed to successfully lead the Army's mortar platoons and sections," Davis said.

Thirty-four of the 42 students enrolled in the course successfully completed "one of the most academically challenging courses that the Army has to offer," said Master Sgt. John Hoch, training chief for the Infantry Mortar Leader Course.

In addition to the mental rigors, the course can also be physically tough.

Throughout the four weeks, condensed from six, the students participated in 210 hours of instruction and live fires, seven exams, and more than 30 hours of cardiovascular physical training.

"Fast and furious" is how Spc. Ryan Downey, A Co., 3rd Bn, 327th Inf. Regt., described his experience with the course.

"I didn't know what to expect before going in but it was definitely worth it," he said.

Students completed the course in record time, despite the rigorous pace. It consisted of late training nights, often until 11 p.m., and two full Saturdays.

Some students also had to endure the stresses of retraining.

"The course was pretty hard," said Spc. Tim Demars, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 327th Inf. Regt. "I'd never done any of this kind of training before. I learned a lot. I knew what it was all going toward, so I made myself deal with it and drive on."

Col. Michael L. Oates, commander of 1st Bde, 327th Inf. Regt., commended the instructor cadre from Fort Benning and all those responsible for the training for their leadership.

"The NCO corps is what makes our Army the strongest in the world," Oates said.

To the graduating class, he added, "Your leadership appreciates your newly obtained expertise and skills. They know what they're getting back when you return to your units."

Candidate marches to own drum

Officer Candidate Sharon McBride
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

All it takes is a few notes of The Army Song for him to get a charismatic gleam in his eye.

Put him up in front of more than a hundred officer candidates to lead them through that traditional song and it's visually apparent on his face that this man has found his utopia.

Officer Candidate Derrick Shaw, currently enrolled in OCS Class 3-00, recently joined the ranks of a select group of officers in the U.S. Army.

Pending his graduation from OCS this summer, Shaw will become one of only 21 officers in the entire U.S. Army that hold the position of staff band officer.

"A staff band officer primarily is a band conducting position," Shaw said. And on occasion they also conduct chorus that are attached to world famous bands -- bands like FORSCOM, The U.S. Continental Army Band and of course The U.S. Army Band or better known as Pershing's Own.

It's a feat that took Shaw years of preparation, a grueling application process, not only to be selected to become a staff band officer, but to gain OCS admittance as well.

Prerequisites for the band job include a minimum of five years experience teaching and conducting music, letters of recommendation and a video tape of the "hopeful" conducting specific musical selections.

But it doesn't stop there, that's just the first part of the selection process.

If the video fares well, the "hopeful" must travel to Arlington, Va, to audition for a slot.

Simultaneously, those who want to be selected must also submit a OCS packet, which entails getting letters of recommendation and appearing before a selection board.

Shaw, who was working as a high school band director for more than four years in Atlanta, Ga., started the entire application process in January 1999.

He made the first cut and was invited to audition, along with approximately 20 other applicants.

"It was the hardest audition I ever had to do," Shaw said. The hardest part was the music theory portion, he explained.

"That test humbled me," he said. "and I thought to myself, 'These people are going to think I'm a joke.'"

The second part of the audition was a chance to conduct band members of Pershing's Own, — an elite band has been in existence for more than 75 years and is the premier musical organization of the U.S. Army.

His packet was approved and soon Shaw found himself on the way to basic training as an OCS college option candidate.

"I've always wanted to be in the Army," Shaw said. "Army bands are some of the best in the country. It was definitely a vertical career move for me."

But after spending 29 years as a civilian, Shaw said entering the world of the Army was a bit of a shock to his system.

"Teaching high school for four years is not conducive to being in shape," he explained. So he started running — a lot.

And after graduating from basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C., in December '99, he came to Fort Benning, where he waited to start OCS in late February.

While he waited to start class, he said he ran — a lot more.

Shaw is now six weeks into the course, and has entered the intermediate phase of OCS.

"OCS so far has been a real challenge, but it's been real good for me," Shaw said. "Physically, its pushed me. But I like everyone in my platoon, and I'm learning a lot from the people around me."

They in turn are also learning a lot from him.

On several occasions, Shaw has led the class in singing "The Army Song," and "The OCS Alma Mater."

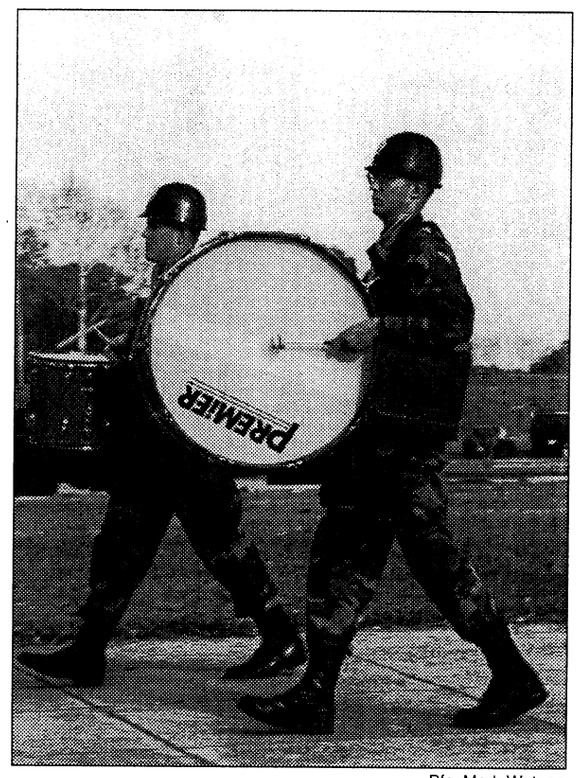
"It was very stirring for me," Shaw said. "I'm a very expressive conductor. I am very passionate about music, and I am very passionate about the Army.

"I think that all comes through when I conduct," Shaw said. And I think that's one of the main reasons I was selected."

And the folks at Arlington agree.

"Shaw had a very strong audition," Maj. Thomas Palmatier, Headquarters Department of the Army Staff Band Officer, said. "He communicated very well, he had great military bearing, and he seemed very comfortable in leading and motivating the band members."

Only two or three selections for staff band officers are made per year, Palmatier said. But last year, Shaw was the only one that met the criteria and was selected.



"It's a very select group," Palmatier said. "It's a diverse group with a lot of talent."

So much talent in fact, that Shaw did not feel he was ready to try to audition for a slot until he had a masters degree in music under his belt and several years of practical experience.

"I didn't feel I was ready when I was younger. I really wanted to be successful," Shaw explained.

"I love being a part of the military and a musical tradition that dates back in history," he said.

"Music has always been a part of daily life in the Army," he explained. "As Soldiers we wake up to music — every post in the world stops when retreat and reveille are played. Music has always been a part my life. I'm happy to say I'm right where I want to be."

has visited Fort Benning in search of great training footage. They were here in October shooting for commercials.

Botti said that experience was very helpful in preparing for the current shoot.

"The first time I did this was the commercial shoot here," she said. "After going through one of them, you really get an idea of what you are going to need the next time."

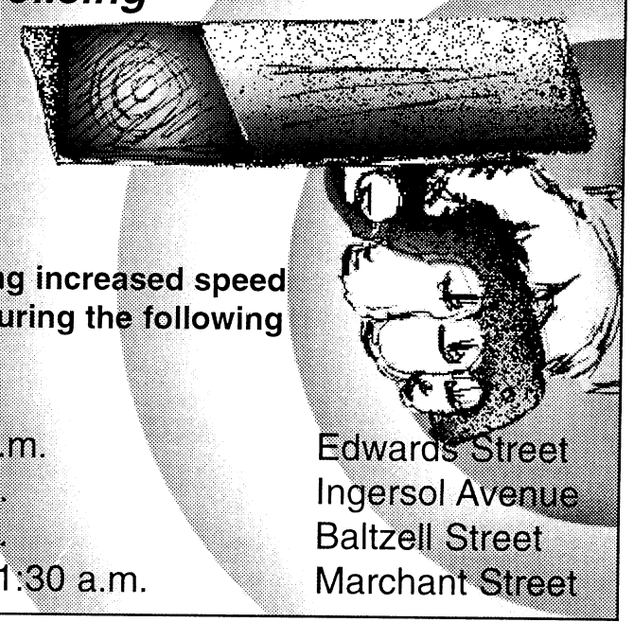
Making the new video in 3-D was a new concept to the Recruiting Command. It came about thanks to Gregory Durdock, a sales engineer for VREX Inc., the company making the video.

"I thought the new technology might be something the Army would be interested in using for marketing and advertising," he said. "We specialize in stereoscopic 3-D imaging so I thought we might be able to help the Army do something a little different to get more people interested."

"Now we're here to obtain some true stereoscopic video. I think we should be able to get a lot of good video from things like the Bradleys and the Blackhawks," he added.

Botti said something else that has made the shoot easier is the support the team has gotten from units across post.

"Everybody has been absolutely super by accommodating us and our needs. The help we've received from all of Fort Benning during both of the commercial shoots is really appreciated," she said.



"This is an ideal place to come with a lot of great aspects of Army life and a lot of great Soldiers."

The team will finish shooting today and then head back to have the tape edited and worked into short promotional video.

Botti said recruiters could look to see the video available as soon as this summer.

Hospital support group walks for research

Logged miles turn into earned dollars for cancer survivors

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Last spring Susanne Fowler was in a hospital bed fighting breast cancer. This spring she'll do her fighting in sneakers as she makes her away around the Kinnett Stadium track during the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life.

Her husband, Anthony, who is assigned to the Ranger Training Brigade, and two small children, Julien and Arianne, walked in the fund-raiser last year.

"I told myself then I'm going to be there next year," Fowler recalled.

May 19 Fowler will be joined at the cancer society event by her family and the friends she has made through Supporting Sisters, a breast cancer support group at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Monday evening Fowler and her "sisters" held their monthly meeting and shared stories of diagnosis, surgery, chemotherapy, radiation and survival.

Fowler was told a year ago that the breast cancer she was diagnosed with and treated for three years earlier had returned.

This time around, she sought out a support group of fellow patients.

"What I was seeking most were women who had been through it," she said.

"You can really open up and share your emotions and feelings," the 38-year-old nurse said.

"I'm willing to talk to anyone about breast cancer. That's my way of dealing with it," Fowler said.

"You meet survivors who have been through the same problems, and you see that five or 10 years down the road, there is life after breast cancer."

Ingeborg Atkins is one of the survivors. At 73, she calls herself "one of the old bloods" in the group.

"It's different for older women," she said. "I feel so sorry for younger women."

The group ranges in age from the those in their mid-30s to women, like Atkins, in their 70s.

Fowler was just 34 when she found a lump.

"Younger women who believe you can't get breast cancer are mistaken," she said.

Fowler encourages women who find anything questionable during their breast self-exams to go to their doctors.

"And if you don't feel confident with his diagnosis, try to get a second opinion — even if you have to pay out of pocket."

Carol Myrick had surgery two years ago for breast cancer. Last year she walked the first survivor's lap of the Relay for Life with her husband, Alan.

He often attends the support group meetings with her, and offers support to other husbands who are facing the illness with their wives.

After the first meeting in 1998, Myrick thought she didn't need to return.

"I felt fortunate because I didn't need to undergo chemotherapy, and I thought I didn't need to come back here," she said.

But, several months later she returned and found that there were varied topics discussed, and that while she might not be the one needing support, she could be the one to provide it to others.

The group also includes active duty personnel, like Master Sgt. Rebecca Smalls, 49, of the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity.

Smalls worked all but three days during her five months of radiation treatment after

Police, schools team up to keep students safe

Approaching the anniversary of the massacre at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colo., authorities have officially concluded their investigation. But unanswered questions still plague the minds of parents and educators across the country.

Could this happen in our community?

Is there anything we can do to prevent it?

The Fort Benning school system has always had an emergency plan for natural disasters and terrorism, but last year's incident at Columbine was the inspiration for a broader, more detailed Safe Schools Plan.

"We had a plan in place one year ago that included standard operating procedures for evacuations," said Donna Ford, support services supervisor. "But those plans were not detailed to include every possible emergency scenario. We revised the old plans to make them very thorough and precise, yet simple to read."

Since the beginning of the school year, every school on post has instituted the plan, and some have incorporated extensive measures of their own to ensure their students' safety.

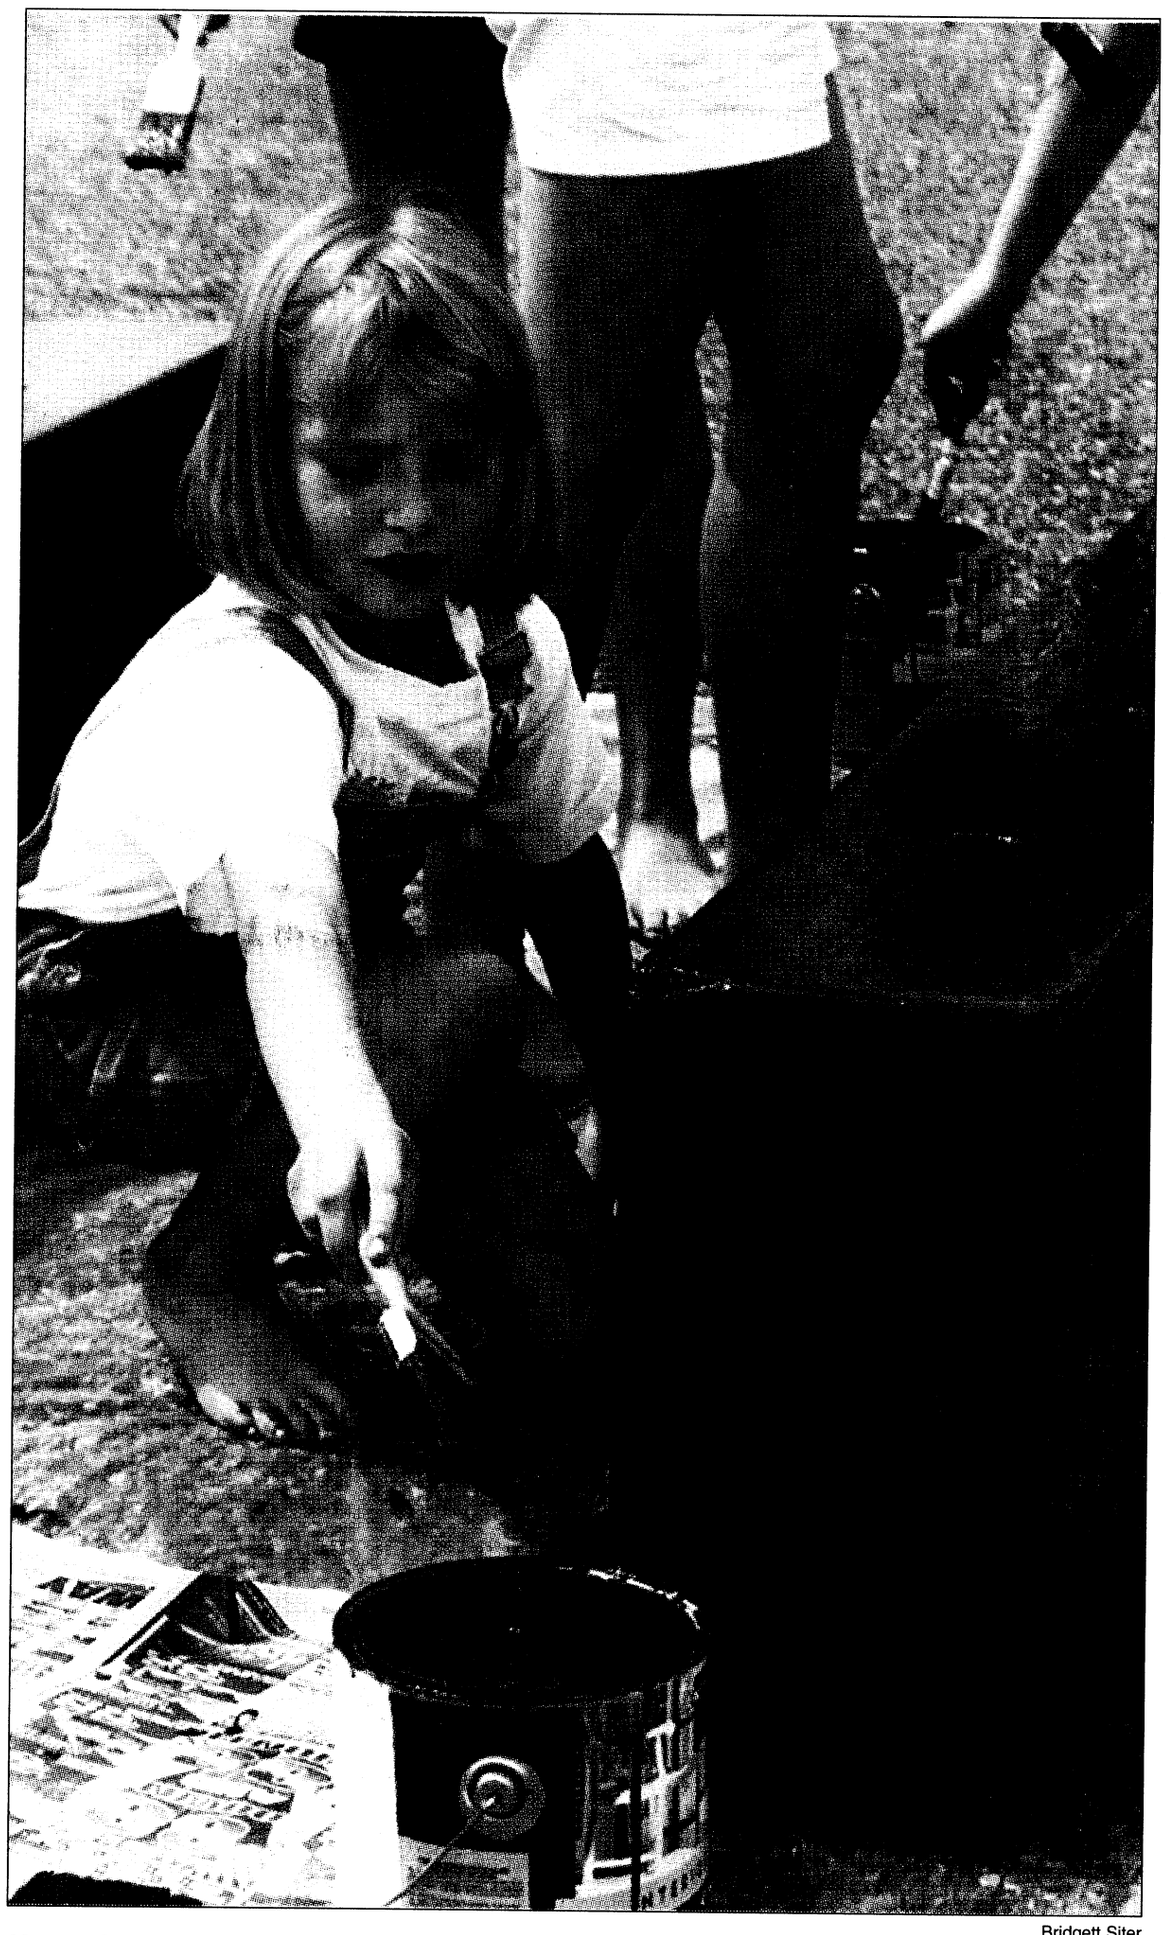
All schools have a visitor sign-in policy and staff members have been trained to watch for unidentified visitors on campus. Schools also have limited access after school starts each morning. Only the main entrance remains unlocked throughout the day.

"Safety is everybody's job now. Even our custodians have been trained to take extra security precautions," said Glenn Hughes, Stowers Elementary principal. "It was a bit bumpy in the beginning of the year. Parents may have felt we were being a little intrusive by requiring identification and locking them out of the perimeter doors, but they are quite grateful after they learn that we are doing it to protect their children."

Though these preventive measures are an integral part of the new plan, much of it is instructional planning for natural disasters and terrorist threats, both interior and exterior. The plan works on two levels.

The immediate response plan details every action that should take place in the school as soon as a crisis situation has been identified. Checklists are provided for personnel listing emergency contacts and procedures to follow to reduce students' exposure to danger.

"Teachers are our first level of defense because they're our first responders. They've been trained to know how to respond as soon as an emergency occurs. They know what steps to take to protect their students," Ford said.



Rebecca Willoughby, sixth-grade teacher at Faith Middle School, said the safety plan offers teachers a sense of security.

"Chances are we would be the first to know if there was a crisis.We needed this guide," Willoughby said. "It certainly makes me feel safer knowing how the system would have me handle an unfamiliar situation."

The second part of the plan is called Operation School House, an all-inclusive title for the various plans Fort Benning emergency response departments have developed. Ford said this part of the plan is the result of a group effort that included the schools, support services and emergency response forces such as the military police, fire departments and health-care providers.

"I have been so impressed with the support we've received from the entire post," Ford said. "All the Volunteers lend hand, paint brush to effort

Bridgett Siter

When events like Wednesday's Women's History Month Luncheon go off without a hitch, very few people realize the amount of preparation that goes into every detail. Tens, even hundreds of people contribute their time and efforts to make the program flow effortlessly.

A team of 10 young Red Cross volunteers devoted more than 50 work hours this month sawing, sanding and painting the large stands that are used at such events to display the 50 state flags.

Sunday the volunteers, all between the ages of 9 and 17, added the final coat of paint. Red Cross assistant station manager Cassandra Wyatt said the children began work on the flag stands March 3, and spent many weeknights and weekends on the task.

"Initially we thought the stands would just need a coat of paint. They were a lot worse than we realized," Wyatt said. "We had to replace some of the legs, sand them all down to the bare wood, and apply several coats of paint."

The volunteers are members of a "special projects team," youth volunteers who, with the help of adult volunteers when necessary, tackle projects outside the scope of traditional Red Cross assistance. From polishing silverware for the Enlisted Wives' Club to painting flag stands, they offer their help in areas that garner them little recognition.

"Typically we use our student volunteers in the hospital, the library and Vet Services," Wyatt said. "But we want to give them a chance to learn that there are things they can do to help the community that are nontraditional, but still very much needed."

Basic trainees visit local church for Operation Appreciation

Soldiers receive food for bodies and souls at St. Luke event

It was culture shock for 40 Soldiers Saturday night — a taste of civilization for a few hours before returning to Sand Hill and the rigors of basic training.

The Soldiers, in their seventh week of training at the Basic Combat Training Brigade, were the guests of St. Luke United Methodist Church for an evening of food, games and fellowship.

"I think my body is going into caffeine shock," said Pvt. Jeremy Fjeldheim after dinner with a Mountain Dew in one hand and a candy bar in the other.

"This has been a lot of fun. It's been great to see civilization and how nice the people down here are," the Littleton, Colo., native said.

JoAnn Holt was one of about 25 church members who welcomed the Soldiers. Holt talked with the young men about their hometowns and what their training was like.

"We just chatted," she said. "I think they were glad to be somewhere where there were grandmothers."

In its second month, Operation Appreciation is held one Saturday evening per month and is sponsored by the uptown Columbus church as an outreach to the Soldiers in training. Those who participate, approximately 40 per event, are somewhere between weeks seven and nine of their training. The units are selected on a rotating schedule, according to their training cycle, and the men volunteer to attend.

"St. Luke wants to minister to this community and Fort Benning is a big part of it. The post has been very gracious and cooperative, and we are enjoying our relationship," said Dr. Hal Brady, St. Luke pastor.

Brady, retired Col. Ralph Puckett and others worked on the project for more than a year and approached the BCTB with the idea.

As a result of the first appreciation night held in February, Brady and several church members attended the graduation ceremony at Sand Hill of the young men they met that night.

"Our members' reaction was better than I expected," John Tongert, one of the coordinators of the program, said. "They were really touched by talking with the Soldiers. Some ladies even had tears in their eyes."

Community recognizes childrens' months

Army Family Advocacy Program

The Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program will be sponsoring several events during the month of April in observance of Child Abuse Prevention Month and Month of the Military Child.

Mark your calendar for the following events.

Saturday-April 30:

• The Army Family Advocacy Program at Fort Benning is joining many state and national organizations in a campaign to "get people to show their true colors" as a part of Child Abuse Prevention Month in April.

The Family Advocacy Program, under the direction of Rebecca Welch, is a specialized prevention program which focuses on child and spouse abuse.

It was a signal to her community of her personal commitment to involve everyone in the battle to stop child abuse. Bonnie's own grandson, Michael Wayne "Bubba" Dickenson, was a tragic, young victim of child abuse.

His death gave her blue ribbon its own inspiring message.

Can one person make a difference?

According to Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager, Bonnie Finney had a great message she was trying to get across to the public. The blue ribbon serves as a constant reminder to fight for the protection for all our children.

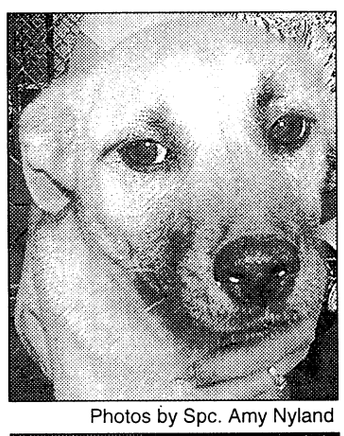
"We must protect our most precious gift of all — our children. Wear a blue ribbon in April to show your concern for our children. Put one on your car, give one to a friend, and tell him or her what it means. You may save a child's life," Welch said.

Blue ribbons can be picked up at the following locations during the month of April:

• Family Advocacy Program Building 2624 Soldiers' Plaza 545-3344 or 545-5516

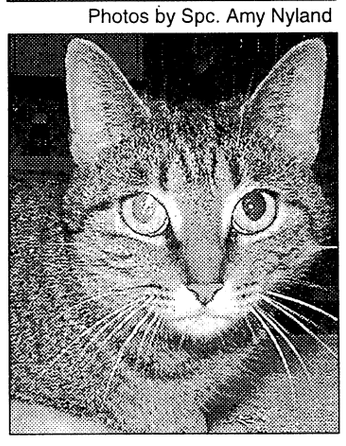
• Social Work Services Building 2625 Soldiers' Plaza 545-1661

• Family Advocacy First Steps Program Martin Army Community Hospital, 3rd Floor 544-2020



• University of Georgia Cooperative Extension Ground Floor, Government Center

Family Advocacy has coordinated with the Child Development Centers and Youth Services to have educational materials available for parents, to include the following refrigerator magnets — "The Military Parent's Pledge."



"Ten Ways to Build Self-Esteem in Your Military Child" and "Eight Keys to Military Family Success."

The Army Community Service Family Program located in Building 2624 will also have a display table set up with free educational materials for parents and coloring books and crayons for children throughout the month of April.

For more information , call Rebecca Welch, manager, Family Advocacy Program, at 545-3344 or 545-5516.

Michael Nuckols
Directorate of Public Works

The Directorate of Public Works Environmental Management Division nominated the Recreation and Support Services Division's new fishing pier project at Uchee Creek Army Campground and Marina for consideration in the Eighth annual Keep Columbus Beautiful Community Awards Program.

The new pier provides the community, including handicapped persons in wheelchairs, with access to the wild and scenic Uchee Lake.

A system of ramps and platforms, made of pressure treated decking lumber, link a portion of the Uchee Creek recreation area to the waters edge, approximately 30 feet below.

The ramps are designed for wheelchair access, with a maximum ramp section length of 30 feet.

Horizontal resting areas, or platforms, are provided every 30 feet. The result is a total ramp length of approximately 300 feet meandering in a "switch back" pattern through the wooded slopes of the backwaters' bank.

Some of the resting platforms at the end of the switchback ramps are enlarged and, because of their locations overlooking the waters below, function as great nature observation decks.

This project was sited, designed and constructed with tree preservation in mind. As a result of team efforts between the site manager, the designer and the builder, no tree was removed for the construction of any portion of its structure.

This project is located on a steep riverbank, which represents a fragile ecological area. Bank vegetation protects the slope from erosion and provides habitat for a myriad of animal species.

The project was also designed as a nature observation facility and, as such, will contribute to public environmental awareness.

The project's low impact construction and its design, which blends harmoniously with the surrounding natural beauty, make it an excellent candidate in the following categories: tree preservation, beautification, and community improvement.

DPW plans gas outage

There will be a scheduled natural gas outage from 6 a.m. to noon Saturday in the 2700 and 2800 block area on Main Post. The following buildings will be affected: 2726 - Army Learning Center, currently vacant; 2783 - Arts and Crafts; 2784 - Reggies and the NCO Club; 2785 - Bowling Center; 2818 - Audie Murphy Gym; 2820 - 36th Engineer Group Chapel; 2822 - 36th Eng. PEP Club sponsor rally for Terra Nova testing

Loyd Elementary School

Loyd Elementary School celebrated the beginning of the standardized testing of the Terra Nova on Friday March 10 by having a PEP Rally sponsored by the PEP Club of the school.

The PEP Club consists of third-, fourth- and fifth-grade students who meet on Fridays with the club sponsors Debra Wade and Steve Pate.

PEP stands for Panther Enrichment Program. The school mascot is a Panther.

Wade is the instructional support person at the school. Pate is the Talented and Gifted program teacher at the school.

Students in the PEP Club wrote an original play that told the student body how important the Terra Nova test is. The play compared kids called "Yahoos" to students who cared about their school experience. The student body enjoyed the play. It was light-hearted, yet came with a powerful message that was well received.

After the play, the PEP Club invited the audience to remain for light refreshments.

A large cake had been decorated for the celebration with the clubs motto, Do your best, Be the best!! The motto was echoed throughout the school on the T-shirts the PEP Club wore on that day and on the next week as a reminder during testing.

On Monday of testing week, the PEP Club gave each student a handmade bracelet for the girls and a good luck gecko for the boys made of school colored beads. The students loved them.

"This is the first time I have seen the children so excited about testing," Pate said. "This rally is helping set the mood for next week."

"It is so rewarding seeing the children being this interested in their school career," said Wade.

Students build bridges from scratch

Loyd Elementary School

Students in grades one through five were given an awesome task during the enrichment classes at Loyd Elementary School.

They were given a small amount of plastic linker cubes and the following instructions:

Make a bridge that will hold up a teacher using the fewest possible cubes. The cubes they used were a one square inch each.

Students were not given any help. They were given five minutes to brainstorm the problem, and 25 minutes to work.

After much discussion, students began to work on the task.

Students really got into the mood of things and worked very hard on making the bridge.

After much work, the students were amazed that they could do this. Many students were able to construct a bridge that held up the 200 pound teacher.

Airlines offer bereavement airfare — Many Soldiers and family members are unaware that airlines offer reduced airfare when travel is necessary to attend the funeral of a relative.

When you call the airlines, ask right away about the bereavement or compassionate fares. Expect the agent to ask you about who died, what the relationship was, name of funeral home or hospital, etc.

VA establishes toll-free number — The U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs has established a toll-free telephone number for veterans and dependents to get the latest information about VA educational benefits.

The toll-free number is (888) GI-BILL (888-442-4551).

By calling the toll-free number, individuals can obtain general educational information, detailed eligibility criteria and general background material on VA programs.

"Work was the best thing for me. Think about it. You still want to feel normal," she said.

Since October, 1995, she has been in remission.

"But there is always this fear that it is coming back," she said.

The women in the group have helped her.

"I don't want to do this by myself," Smalls said. "I enjoy coming here because we talk about issues and we help each other. These are people I can reach out to and talk to who have gone through what I have gone through."

Between five and 15 people attend the meetings. They meet the fourth Monday of the month on the second floor of the hospital in the Regimental conference room.

While there are other support groups in Columbus, the one at Martin Army is unique in that it is geared toward military families.

"Military women are different. They are far from their families and friends. We have a mix of people from all over the world," Sheila Murphy, the group's facilitator, said. Murphy is a mammography case manager in the radiology department at Martin Army.

The hospital's staff has been very supportive in speaking to the group, Murphy said. Surgeons, radiologists, nutritionists, physical therapists and Tricare specialists are a few of the guest speakers.

"They speak for about 15 to 20 minutes, and then open the floor to questions," Murphy said.

Last year, Murphy and her husband walked 26 miles during the Relay for Life as part of Martin Army's team. She is serving as co-captain for this year's team of fund-raisers.

"Everyone knows someone whose life has been touched by cancer," Murphy said.

In 1999, 176,300 new breast cancer cases were diagnosed in the U.S.

"We can expect one in eight women during the course of their life to develop breast cancer," she said.

The next meeting of Supporting Sisters is April 24 at 5 p.m. It will be a potluck social. For more information, call Murphy at 544-3423 or Shiloh Hendricks, Breast Health Patient assistant, at 544-3730.

The Relay of Life will be held from 7 p.m. May 19 until 10 a.m. May 20 at Shaw High School's Kinnett Stadium.

For more information call the American Cancer Society at 324-5614.

Plan: Keeps schoolchildren safe in case of local disaster

related departments on post met and discussed the best ways to coordinate their efforts. They have been with us 100 percent in making sure every area is prepared to take action in any situation. The MPA (Military Police Activity) has walked through every one of our schools. They know the layout and they've formulated a plan of action for any possibility."

In fact, the MPA has not only formulated a plan, the Special Reaction Team "practiced" their plan last fall in a mock hostage crisis at Stowers.

"Our facility is a little more secluded out here, so this was a good place to have a trial run," Hughes said. "We staged a very life-like hostage situation. The Special Reaction Team treated the situation as they would a real one. As a principal I was relieved to see their expertise and the professional way they carried out their task."

In the event of an actual crisis, Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement Division, said the various departments involved in the Safe Schools Plan and Operation School House are prepared to move quickly and efficiently.

"It wouldn't do a bit of good to have the greatest plan, but never exercise it. We have to prepare for the worst-case scenario and then practice that plan," Kelley said. "DoDEA said our plan is one of the best they have seen. But keep in mind, it is a living document. It will continually be reviewed and altered as needed."

The plans have already had to be altered to accommodate the renovations at Dexter Elementary. Special considerations were made because the students are currently in modular classrooms. Principal Vicki Rogers said that the contractor has been involved in the temporary revision of the school's safety plan.

"The contractor has been very cooperative in working with the Safe Schools Plan. He has held off construction in the cafeteria to allow access to that area for evacuation in the event of severe weather," Rogers said.

Kelley said he feels confident Fort Benning schools will not experience the kind of tragedy that happened in Littleton, but parents and teachers can be assured that post schools and response teams are prepared for any kind of emergency.

"It's a shame that it took something like the incident at Columbine to focus national interest on school safety," he said. "At Fort Benning our emphasis has always been on school safety. There is nothing more important than our children."

Church: Welcomes Soldiers in fellowship arrived in vans. After unloading, they lined up in formation under the watchful eyes of a drill sergeant. Then they entered the fellowship hall where they were warmly greeted and given nametags on which to write their first names.

For many of the young men, it was their first chance to learn the given names of their peers.

"They are so formal when they come in, but so relaxed when they leave," church member Ann Newman said.

A map of the United States rested on an easel, and the Soldiers placed colorful pushpins on their hometowns. The church's praise band played while the men mingled with church members including young people their age.

"I think they see that kids on both sides are an awful lot alike," church member Bryan Newman said.

Newman retired from the Army in 1993 and feels a special connection to the Soldiers, he said.

"Not only do I remember going through basic, but years later I was a company commander at Fort Benning and we put 1,000 Soldiers through Infantry basic training," he said.

Newman helped with the logistics of the evening. He ordered 35 large pizzas, dozens of cookies, chips, veggies with dip, six gallons of ice cream, sundae fixings, soft drinks and 100 candy bars.

Not only did the young men receive food for their bodies, but food for their souls.

Brady spoke for a few minutes on Gideon and stressed four points. He told the Soldiers to put their confidence in God, to step forward in courage, to seek always to be an asset and to remember each person can make a difference.

The church opened its youth center to the troops, allowing them to watch NCAA basketball, play pool, pingpong and other games. In the library, magazines, newspapers and writing supplies were offered to anyone wishing to write home.

Pvt. David Jarvis graduates April 6 and called the evening "a great cap to the whole training process."

A highlight for the Vermont native was playing the bass guitar with an impromptu ensemble on stage. Lt. Col. Edward Daly, commander of 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., started things off on the piano, and Chaplain (Maj.) David Giammona, brigade chaplain, joined in on drums.

Giammona called Operation Appreciation "a win-win situation."

"Soldier response has been overwhelmingly positive, and the volunteers at St. Luke's have expressed great appreciation for having been given the opportunity," he said.

Painters: Help

Staff Sgt. Marion Jackson, NCOIC of protocol, said the volunteers' efforts will not go unnoticed.

"We use those flags at various activities on Fort Benning," Jackson said. "We don't have the staff to do this kind of work and it wasn't cost effective to replace them. Those kids have helped us a lot."

Lauren McCarty, a 17-year-old Red Cross volunteer, said she enjoys working for the special projects team because she knows the time she spends is worthwhile.

"It's fun just because we all have a good time when we get together to work, but I know the main purpose of the Red Cross is to help people. I like that," McCarty said.

Enjoyment in life comes from reflection of past

Chaplain (Capt.) Milton Johnson
1st Battalion. 30th Infantry Regiment (Mechanized)

reflections

If I were asked what are the three things I enjoy doing, the answer would be: attending church, spending time with my family and pausing to meditate on nature.

Although I enjoy a number of other things, these are first on the list because when I do them, I give, receive and learn more about others and myself.

Since childhood, church has been an important part of my life. Although I am very shy, just preparing to go to church has always been exciting. That's the time when I pull away from work to get spiritual energy to go through the next week happy and content. A young man stopped by my office recently to share his experience of surrendering his life to the Lord, and the joy he senses as a result of it. His story was fascinating. He said a military police officer stopped to check him while he was changing a flat tire. After asking several questions, the MP started talking about the Lord and church. Their conversation turned into a lengthy Bible study that ended with an appeal for conversion and an invitation to go to church.

This Soldier said he accepted both and has been happy ever since. He couldn't wait to see the chaplain and talk about his new life. When he left my office I thought, "If everybody could have that experience, what a better place the world would be."

But, everybody could have that kind of experience if they took time to do what that young man did — open their hearts to allow the Lord to come into their lives, and to follow through with going to church or chapel. And, I can't think of a better time to try it than right now while reading this article.

Christ and church can bring happiness to one's life, and I invite you to try them.

The second joy for me is getting together with family. I grew up in a large family (six brothers and six sisters) and my parents practiced eating meals, going to church and taking vacations together.

It was at those family gatherings where I learned to pray, be polite and feel good about the personality I have. When my folks got together we laughed, cried, talked, criticized and sometimes that was all we did for the entire evening after supper. I learned more about how to work hard and respect people from those family get togethers than probably any class, job or seminar. To this day, I still get a kick out of striking up a conversation over dinner and continuing to talk until time to take a shower or go to bed. Try that sometime, you'll like it.

Several years ago, I developed a sermon entitled "When does God stop talking to us?" The main point in that discourse was that God talks through people, experiences, the Bible, prayer and nature. But to hear his voice in nature we have to stop, look and listen.

The Bible puts it this way in Romans 2:20, (NIV), "For since the creation of the world God's invisible qualities — his eternal power and divine nature — have been clearly seen, being understood from what has been made ..." And, Psalm 19:1-4, "The heavens declare the glory of God: the sky proclaims the work of his hands. Day after day they pour forth speech; night after night they display knowledge. There is no speech or language where their voice is not heard. Their voice goes out into all the Earth, their words to the ends of the world."

I admire nature, and nothing relaxes me more when I'm tired and worn down, than a pause to enjoy the beauty of creation. Once in a while, I like to reflect on moments from the past and desires for the future. What three things do you enjoy the most?

Easter service set

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

In the tradition of celebrating Christ and his resurrection the post will hold its annual 2000 Easter Sunrise Service at 7 a.m. April 23 at Doughboy Stadium.

This year's guest speaker will be Chaplain (Col.) Richard Hartsell, post chaplain.

The event is a community-wide Easter worship service in the Protestant tradition and everyone is welcome to attend, said Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan, Catholic Chapel chaplain.

Blickhan explained there is a long tradition of holding a service on Easter morning because that was the time of Jesus's resurrection.

"The beauty and freshness of an early spring morning helps us to understand in a small way of God's goodness and his plan for eternal life for us," Blickhan said.

He encourages everyone to come out and share in the miracle of this resurrection.

"Worship is a wonderful opportunity to share moments of peace with the lord," Blickhan said. "His message is a healing one an it is spoken to all regardless of background, age, race gender or nationality."

Participants will be able to enjoy refreshments at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex following the service.

Love in marriage creates own rewards

Chap. (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries Center

Love in marriage is based upon a daily commitment by each spouse.

You choose to love or not to love. When you love your spouse it means that you are willing to accept him or her as a person.

This does not mean you accept bad behavior on your spouse's part or for that matter your part.

For example, suppose you come home from a long, stressful day on the job and as you enter your house your wife immediately lays into you for no apparent reason.

You realize something is bothering her and what's happening is not intended to hurt you. Now you have a decision to make.

Rupel

While your wife's seemingly senseless tirade doesn't make you feel good, you can choose to continue to love her or to escalate the situation by fighting back.

However your anger will never encourage her to resolve her inner conflict and rise above her moodiness. But maybe, just maybe your love and understanding will.

Choosing to love brings its own rewards.

One of my favorite passages of scripture says, "Love does not act unbecomingly; it does not seek its own, it is not provoked, does not take into account a wrong suffered."

While the temptation is to fight back and give your wife a good dose of her own medicine it is better, much better, choosing to love — even in the "difficult" times.

MCCW plans guest speaker — The Military Council of Catholic Women will meet April 7 at 10 a.m at the Main Post Catholic Chapel for fellowship. Father Don Blickhan, the guest speaker, will speak on marriage and family. The program will be followed by noon Mass. All women are invited to share in the fellowship. Child care is provided. For more information, call Mary Terhune at 687-0308 or Marge Connelly at 682-2754.

PYOC meets — The Protestant Youth Of the Chapel junior high and middle school group will meet from 6:30 to 8 p.m. and the senior high group will meet from 6:30 to 8 p.m. March 23.

Summer job offers fun in sun with pay

Red Cross sponsors 40-hour water safety instructor course

Karen Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

Although Memorial Day weekend is a few months away, it's not too early to be thinking about a summer job, especially if you want to be a water safety instructor.

"Now's the time to take the water safety instructor course," said Lanette Lanfear, volunteer health and safety instructor at the American Red Cross.

If you wait until May, you may not receive your certification in time for the summer season because the course is usually offered during March and April, said Lanfear. "I don't think too many people are aware of that."

The American Red Cross sponsors a 40-hour water safety instructor course that will span the next five Saturdays. The cost of the class is $92. Each eight-hour session includes classroom and pool time in order to prepare future water safety instructors to teach swimming lessons from levels one to seven.

Eligibility for the water safety instructor course, however, requires meeting three criteria: Having already completed an Instructor Candidate Training Course; be 17 years old; and pass the precourse.

The precourse, also taught by American Red Cross volunteer instructors, is a four-hour session that entails a water test and a 25-question written test. Potential instructors must demonstrate 11 different water skills from a long, shallow dive to swimming all four strokes correctly. After completing the water test, students are given a small break and a book to study from in preparation for the written test. Passing the written portion requires a score of 80 percent or better and it tests knowledge of basic water safety.

The water safety instructor course was not always its own program.

It was once part of the lifeguard training curriculum, where you had to be a lifeguard in order to be a water safety instructor.

The program was changed in the early '90s where water safety instruction became its own course and lifeguard certification was not a prerequisite.

This also meant that a lifeguard was on duty during swim lessons providing an even safer environment for

Sluggers enjoy spirit of game

It was a real squeaker March 25 as the Fort Benning Eagles were just barely able to hold off the Cubs by a score of 9-8 in Youth Services Baseball action at Dexter Field.

The Eagles came out strong, scoring the maximum of 6 runners in the first inning. The Cubs were only able to come up with 1 run before being called out.

In the second, the Cubs were able to bring in 3 by working the bases with single hits while the Eagles only brought in one.

The third was all Eagles, bringing two more players across home plate.

The Cubs were unable to get a player around the bases this inning. Going into the fourth with the score at 9-4 in favor of the Eagles, the Cubs made their biggest push of the game by scoring 4 runners.

But it was too little too late as the game was called at the one hour time limit with the Eagles ahead, 9-8.

This first game of the season was a good opportunity for both teams to get their feet wet.

Eagles coach Patrick Amos said he was glad of the win, but was happier that the team members enjoyed themselves.

"It seemed like all of our practicing paid off during the game. The kids did a great job of working together and fighting the heat," he said. "All and all, I'm just glad everyone had fun — that's what the game is all about."

Christy Simmons, Cubs coach, agreed. She said she was happy to see her team get out and do their best.

"I think they have a lot of courage to want to learn the sport. They were really participating and have a lot of team spirit," she said.

She added, it also provided her an opportunity to see where the kids might need a little fine tuning. "We're going to work more on infield, getting our players into positions where they like to play, that's what we need to do," said Simmons.

Josh Lundak, Eagles player, said he had fun for his first game.

"I liked getting to bat," Lundak said. Playing the field was okay, but I like batting the best."

Opener draws 300 shooters

Classic awards 10 firearms, prize money

More than 290 Glock shooters participated in the eigth annual Old South Regional Classic pistol competition Saturday and Sunday.

The Glock Sport Shooting Foundation season opening match was held at Fort Benning's English and Roosevelt Ranges.

In the ninth year of GSSF competition, about $5,000 in prizes were awarded in this year's OSRC, said Scott Gilbertson, GSSF match coordinator. There were 10 firearms and $3,000 in prize money presented to shooters based on the Lewis System for the amateur classes and to the winners of the master classes.

"These matches are a great time," said Gilbertson. "The shooters are always really nice and laid back. These matches are a great family activity and a great way for a entire family to spend time together."

"This is my first match and I am loving it," said Phillip Warren, a competitor from Macon, Ga. "There was a bunch of us who came

HHC pummels C Company, 68-31

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

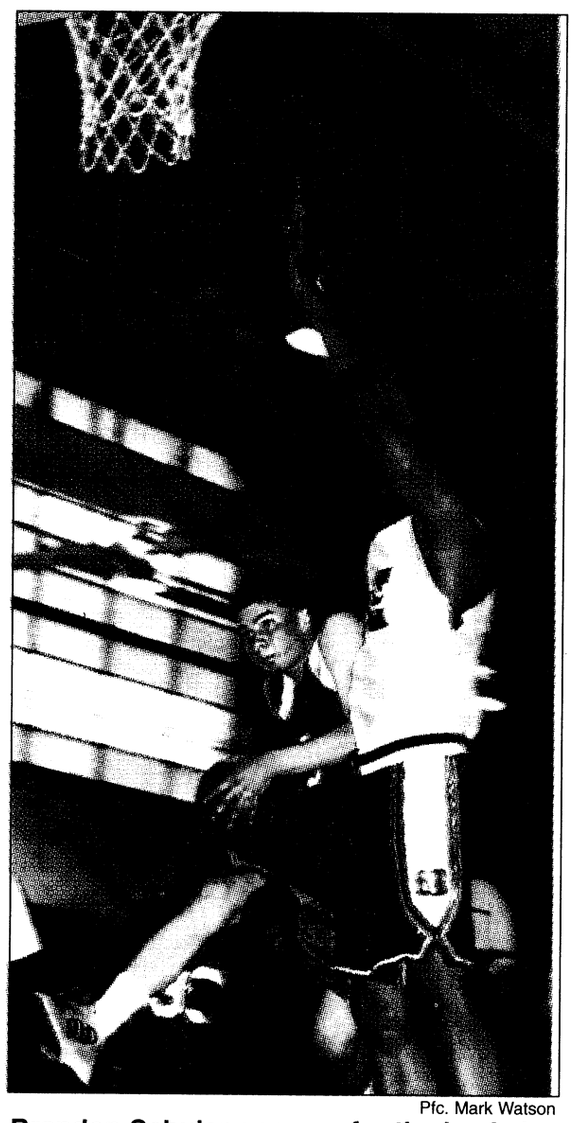
Using the fast break and a double-team defense to their advantage, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, emerged with a 68-31 win over C Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment in Monday's post intramural basketball game.

During the fast-paced game, C Co. was overrun when HHC turned their speed and full court passes into a full-blown rally.

The game began slowly with both teams trading baskets and never having more than a two point advantage until 10 minutes and then HHC, began to pull away.

Using accurate passing to their advantage, HHC took a 12-point lead with 10 minutes remaining in the first half. Beginning to step up their defense, they stole the ball from C Co. often leading to scoring opportunities.

Knowing that they were being overrun, C Co. increased their defense as well, closing their loss to 10 points. The first-half score was 28-18 in favor of HHC.



As the second half began, HHC stopped C Co. in their tracks while continuing to expand their lead.

HHC's defense was tough and pressuring, so nearly every time C Co. got the ball, the white jerseys from HHC, surrounded whoever had the ball, often slapping it away.

Allowing only 13 points in the second half, HHC scored 40 of their own.

"We played good, but we definitely could have done better," said Jimmie Ward, a C Co. forward. "We didn't have a whole lot of unit support and I think we could have done better if we would have had more."

The intramural regular season ended Tuesday and the playoffs are scheduled to begin today. Games are scheduled to be held at the four fitness centers weekdays at 6, 7 and 8 p.m. The winners from each gym are set to play a final four playoff at the Briant Wells Field House with the championship game tipping off at 8 p.m. April 8th.

Great balls of fire

Combining a powerful offensive attack with solid defense, the students of the U.S. Army School of the Americas Command and General Staff Officer Course, cruised past the instructors of the school's Department of Joint and Combined Operations, 6-3 in soccer action March 18.

The victory gives the students an early lead toward the Commander's Trophy, which will be given at the end of the season by Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant, USARSA, to the team with the most victories.

Both teams will meet several times this year in different sporting events to determine who will hold the bragging rights and keep the trophy.

For the past two years, the students have earned the bragging rights.

kids. "It means you have more eyes on the pool," said Cassandra Wyatt, assistant station director at the American Red Cross.

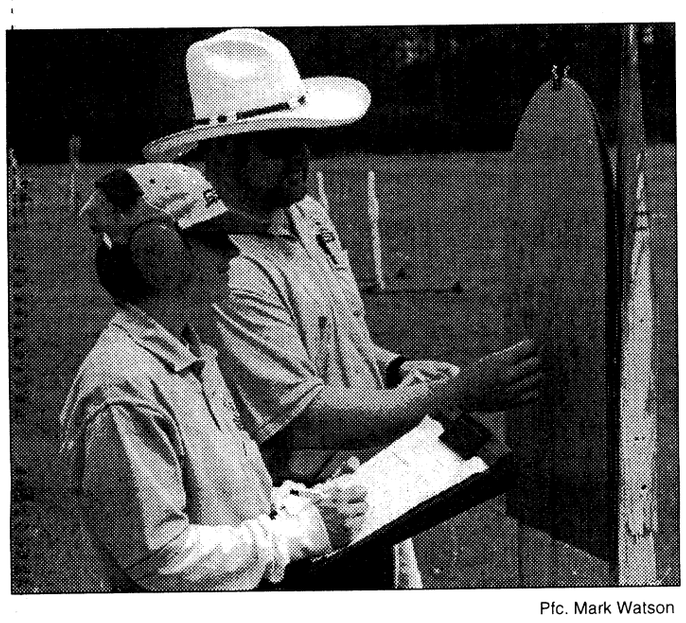
Also, with the water safety instructor course as a separate program, it makes the coursework more intense as well as more thorough so teachers can give better lessons.

In addition, the water time teaches such important aspects of swimming as determining an individual's buoyancy level. "It's hard to teach you to swim if you can't float," Lanfear said.

Another aspect of the course covers a variety of different swim lesson situations so students can gain experience in how to effectively structure a safe and productive class.

Wyatt recommends the water safety instructor program because it teaches leadership and responsibility as well as giving the swim teachers a sense of pride. "(Teachers) feel like they've really done something. You wouldn't believe how it affects the kids," she said.

Besides providing a community service, teaching swimming lessons during the summer is fun, according to Lanfear. "You get paid to get a tan. You're not inside working ... you're outside in the sun," she said.



One of the reasons that the water safety instructor program is so important is that there is a high demand for instructors in the Fort Benning community. "With a post this large, there's a need," said Lanfear.

And, "It's necessary for kids to learn how to swim," says Wyatt. Especially with the amount of pools nationwide that do not require lifeguards by law.

"You're not going to be rich by teaching swim lessons, but you can feel good by helping someone learn a skill that will be with them the rest of their life," she said.

Shooters: Compete

"There was a bunch of us who came down from Macon just for this shoot."

The GSSF matches draw a wide variety of shooters and many of the competitions have hundreds of competitors. There is no age limit for shooters.

"The youngest shooters that I have seen were an 8-year-old-boy and a 9-year-old-girl," Gilbertson said. "We make sure they are confident in handling a weapon by giving them a dummy gun to try out. "The oldest shooter I have seen was a 92-year-old-man," he said. "There has even been a quadriplegic who has competed with a little help from the range officers."

Fort Benning usually runs second for the number of shooters in the GSSF circuit, but Dallas and Indianapolis have been fairly close in the last few years, he said.

"GSSF is oriented to new shooters and to introduce shooters to competition," Gilbertson said. "These matches are always a good time for everyone who participates."

BANK AGREES TO LOANS FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH BAD CREDIT!

Columbus, GA. Milton Watts, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Including Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

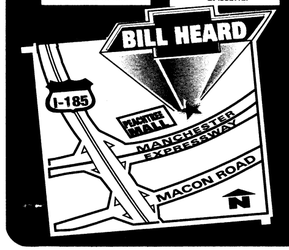
A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of a new or slightly used car, truck or van either for their family or a business venture.

These are prime, in demand vehicles, that are either repossessed, overaged or a terminated lease situation.

Bankers will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expressway until the end of May. Best of all, cut rate financing will be offered to those whose credit would not normally meet such an arrangement at rates that banks usually reserve for their blue chip clients. Quoting Watts, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing.

Kevin Thompson, Representing the dealership, has arranged for special low payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the cash crunch at the holiday season.

In some cases these payments are ridiculously low. When pressed for an example, Thompson replied, "Well, here is a '95 Elantra 4 door #HS002. With $1 down payment to validate the transaction, your payments to be taken on would be $55 for 60 months at only 9.9% APR with a credit approval process that can take as little as 20 minutes. An incredibly low sale price of only $1,995. Adding only tax, tag, title and WRA make this payment arrangement possible. "Or, if a truck is your thing, then here is a '96 Toyota Tacoma #HS003. Again the $1 down to validate the deal and start making payments on a new bank contract of just $111.89 for 72 months at the same low 9.9% APR with credit approval that may be arranged while you wait. Again, the low monthly payment is possible because of the $5997 sale price adding only tax, tag and title.



This offer is for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle.

Hundreds of new Chevys including Silverados, Tahoes, Venture Vans, Blazers, Malibus and Impalas are included in this offer.

Along with acres of used Chevys, Fords, Hondas, Jeeps, Acuras and Nissans.

Shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much the bank will advance you by calling Mr. Thompson or his assistant Mr. Stallings at 322-8888 OR 1-800-868-1585, 9am to 9pm.

"Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

ALL VEHICLES: ALL REBATES & DISCOUNTS INCLUDED IN SALE PRICE OR PAYMENT. JUST ADD TAX & LICENSE. DUE TO ADVERTISING DEADLINES, SOME UNITS MAY BE SOLD. PHOTOS FOR ILLUSTRATION PURPOSES ONLY. ALL OFFERS ARE EXCLUSIVE WITH APPROVED CREDIT & EXPIRE 72 HOURS AFTER RUNNING DATE! 29¢ GAS OFFER MAY AFFECT FINAL PRICE!

Post earns eighth ACOE award

Officials will present award May 11 in D.C.

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's seven-year stint as an Army Community of Excellence got another year longer Tuesday evening.

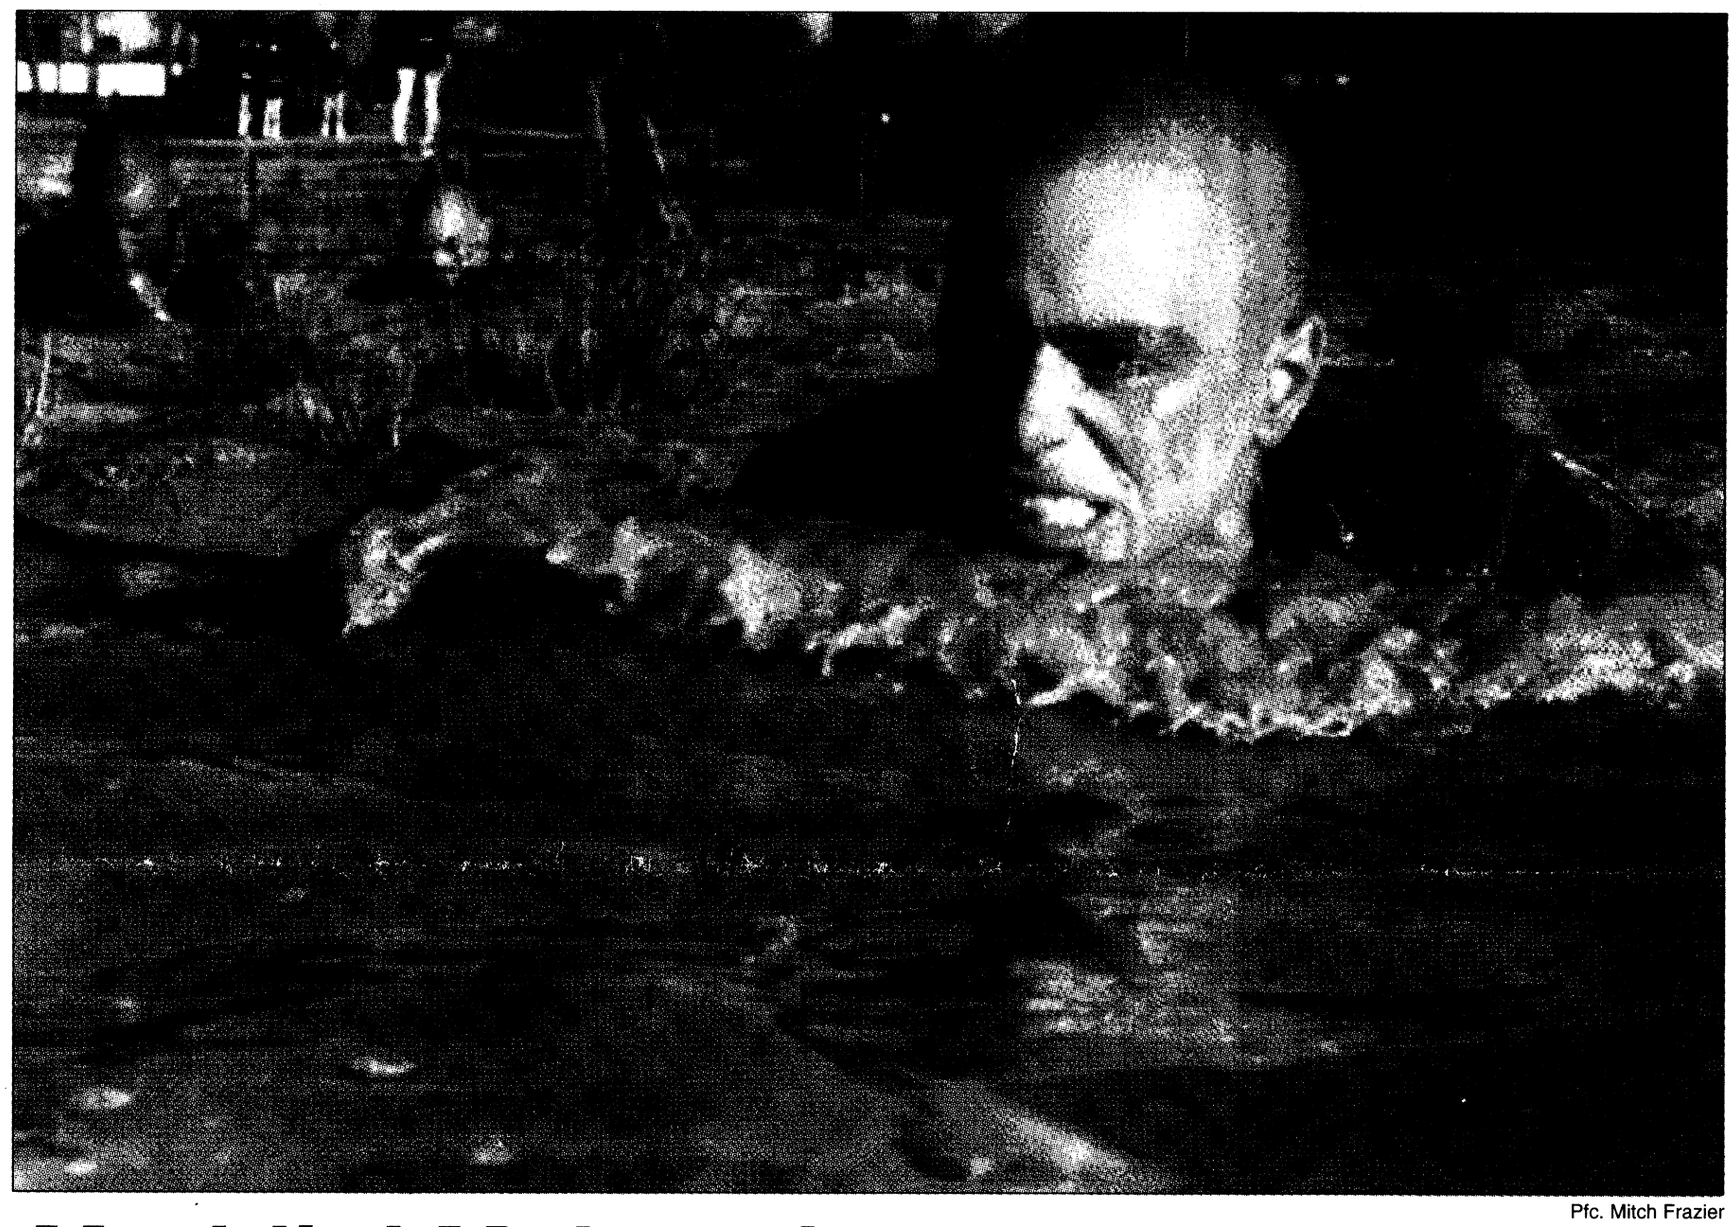
It was shortly after 4 p.m. Tuesday when post officials received the congratulatory call from the Pentagon telling them that for the eighth consecutive year Fort Benning was named as one of the top installations worldwide.

The annual Army Community of Excellence competition named Fort Benning the top installation based upon a post-submitted entrance packet and an evaluation panel's site visit in January.

This year's award will net the post a $200,000 prize purse and bring the eight-year total of prize monies earned from ACOE to nearly $6 million.

"This just shows that Fort Benning continues its quest to improve service for its customers," said Pat Porter, a quality analyst at the Directorate of Resource Management. "We continue to be a leader and strive to be the best place to live and work in the Army.

"I think this a very good indication (of that)," she said.



While there are presently no plans in the works for the prize monies netted this year, past prize money has gone to fund various community projects including the addition of new playground and gym equipment, purchase of electric carts at Martin Army Community hospital and completion of the post fitness trail.

Suggestions are still being sought for the $500,000 Commander in Chief's award scored from last year's win.

"Winning this award — again, and again, and again — is truly a tribute to the great professional work force we have here at Fort Benning," said Col. John Latimer, chief of staff. "The true measure of wining ACOE is the civilian work force — it's the continuity that makes this possible."

"We have to remain focused, we can't get complacent," said Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander. "This is not a given, especially since everyone else is working to dethrone you."

Latimer and Mitchell will join other officials from Fort Benning for a trip to the Pentagon May 11 to accept the award from Gen. Eric K. Shinseki.

OCS Hall of Fame inducts 86 honorees

Col. Rose Walker will be first female award recipient

Officer Candidate Sharon McBride
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Officer Candidate School will induct 86 members into its Hall of Fame at 11 a.m. April 7 in Marshall Auditorium at Infantry Hall.

One of the 86 inductees will be the first female in the history of the Hall of Fame to be inducted.

Col. Rose Walker, the first female to be inducted, is a graduate of OCS Class 3-78, and is currently the Brigade Commander, 1st Personnel Command, U.S. Army Europe and 7th Army, Schwetzingen, Germany.

"The first class of females to graduate from OCS at Fort Benning was OCS Class 1-77," Maj. Bill Ramsey, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment executive officer and Hall of Fame project officer, said. "So (Walker) is the first of many distinguished female officers to be inducted into the Hall of Fame."

All the honorees are OCS graduates who distinguished themselves in military or civilian pursuits.

"There are 38 Medal of Honor recipients, five federal judges, six U.S. senators and over 200 general officers to date inducted into the Hall of Fame," Margo Davis, Hall of Fame administrator, said.

Retired Maj. Gen. Frank A. Catalano, is scheduled to be the guest speaker at this year's induction ceremony.

Catalano is a graduate of OCS Class 11-66 and was most recently assigned as the Deputy Commanding General for Reserve Components at Headquarters, U.S. Army Forces Command from Dec. 1, 1995 to Sept. 19, 1999. He retired from active military service on Sept. 30.

This year marks the 42nd anniversary of the beginning of the OCS Hall of Fame. Since its start, more than 1,900 graduates have been inducted into the Hall of Fame,

Abused families now have help available

Money makes transition easier for battered

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Tears of joy rolled down the face of the grandmother and her shouts of "Thank you, Jesus" traveled across the phone lines. At the other end, Cenneta Gunn experienced one of the joys of her job — helping others.

Gunn is the Victim-Witness Liaison at Fort Benning's Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

She recalled the grandmother's reaction when she received a check from the Department of Defense's Transitional Compensation Program to help with the care of her two grandchildren — children who had been abused by both of their active-duty parents.

"She was overwhelmed with joy and that touched me so. You don't know how much," Gunn said.

The compensation provides monthly monetary help and other assistance to family members of service personnel who have been court-martialed or separated from the military because of dependent abuse offenses.

Gunn has helped spouses and children apply for the aid. She is working on two cases now, and since she took over the liaison position in 1997, 10 families have received the assistance, she said.

"These people are so grateful for this money," she said

The payments and other benefits are made directly to the family members who have been victims of domestic violence or sexual abuse, to offer help as they return to life outside the military.

"It is of the utmost importance," she said. "Transitional Compensation is just what the name implies. It is to help the family transition into the civilian world."

Since 1994 when it was created by Congress, the program has distributed more than $6 million to more than 347 families who have been separated due to abuse, according to the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in a press release.

TC is unique to the military and is one of the tools the Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program uses to encourage victims to step forward and report abusive relationships.

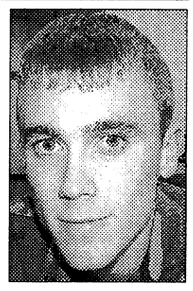
Soldier questions incentive plan

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer



commentary

The Army has always boasted the biggest incentives for recruits. Now that recruiters are offering incentives of nearly $70,000, the question has to be asked, "When is too much?"

When is the cost of getting someone in the service too much? Does it stop with a signing bonus of $20,000 and $50,000 for college? What about the plans to issue each new Soldier a laptop computer, is it going to stop there?

Why are we focusing all of our resources and incentives on recruitment? What about the specialist who has served four years, busted his tail and worked to get where he is. Why aren't we spending some of our money on retention?

A friend of mine is nearing his ETS, you know what he was offered — stabilization for two years and a bonus. Combined, the benefits equal a little more than the ability to supersize a value meal once or twice a month at lunch.

It is not enough after he has given four years, two of which were in Panama. Extra fries and a bigger drink are the only thing we can offer this Soldier, while we are giving recruits $20,000 just to sign.

The whole inequity of the Army's recruitment and retention programs just blows me away. I can't get over why the Army would even consider boosting the recruiting program when we have hordes of people, including my buddy, who are leaving for better deals on the outside.

And why not? In an era of good economy and decreasing benefits for long-term careers in the Army, why wouldn't they leave? Especially when they see how the Army is giving more incentives for newcomers and completely forgetting about them.

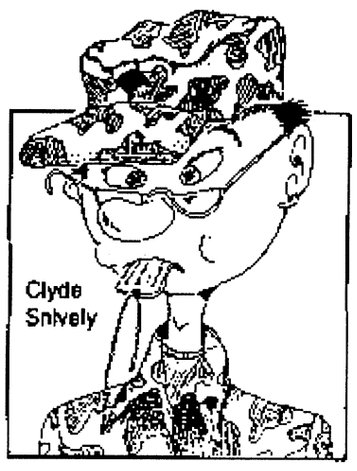
Maybe the powers that be should step back and reconsider this new computer thing in the works for every new recruit. But trust me, the computer thing is just the tip of the iceberg of the myriad of things they have planned for newbies.

I think we have lost sight of what is important in keeping a strong force ready to fight and win. It takes both the new private to drive a Bradley and the senior sergeant to teach him how to do it.

If we continue on this trend of more recruitment than retention, are we going to have a senior sergeant around to lead, or are we just going to have a force full of over-confident and over-paid privates?

The choice is in the hands of the Department of Army. I will be anxiously awaiting the outcome.

Debate looms over tap or bottled water



Clyde Snively

commentary

At the risk of having my computer torched by people with a financial stake in bottled water, let me ask this question: "Why are you paying money for something you can get for free?"

Does bottled water have a certain taste? Is it lemon or currant flavored? Does it send bubbles up your nose when you drink it? Does it provide a high-energy boost to you as you sit at your desk, slaving away over the computer or as you ramp up for the last five miles or your first century ride? There's got to be something to it. Just look at the number of people wandering about with their precious bottles of water. Now if we lived in Florida where water has a tannic taste or on the Georgia coast where water has a sea weed taste I could understand this.

I could even understand your spending money on something you can get for free if you lived where water pipes are soldered with lead and you've got young ones in the house. But why buy bottled water if you live and work on Fort Benning? Tests are constantly run on the water to make sure there are no heavy metals in it, or any other band members for that matter. Our water comes from the beautiful Upatoi Creek and is some of the best in the state. If it's fashionable to walk around with a bottle of "North Georgia's" finest or some Frenchy water, Aqua Vit, then go ahead and pay your $1 for the bottle and then refill it with Fort Benning tap water.

You'll get the same bennies — the water is clear, it's clean, and it's tasteless, yet every time you finish off a bottle and refill, you save yourself a buck. I don't know about you, but with high gas prices running rampant out there, something I have no control over, I'm going to get my water from the drinking fountain and save myself some money.

Also, there is no expiration date on my tap water (check your bottled water and see if there is an expiration date. Also check the label for nitrates.) I have no idea what a nitrate is but I know it can't be anything good. What is that ends in "trate?" A few that come quickly to mind are bitartrate, castrate, concentrate, frustrate, prostrate and verticillastrate. Nothing good there I can tell. And what do we do with nitrate? We use it in fertilizer, we use it to blow up things. So anyway, that was my opinion until Amy who can press 200 pounds and Mark who never stops talking claimed they could tell the difference. So out of deference to them, I invested $1.50 and bought two bottles of water from the PX downstairs, snitched a bottle of water that was being stored in our refrigerator, got some Infantry Hall hooah water out of the tap and challenged them to a taste test. Guess what. To a man (Mitch the investigative reporter also pitched in) they determined that the water in cup A (hooah water) was "poor," or "dreadful," while the water in B and C tasted about the same. The water in the D cups, which I snitched, was deemed to be "colder than the others."

So much for theory, but I'm still drinking free water.

Reader responds to transmission articles

Last week one of our military customers brought us a copy of your paper from March 17th.

We read the article by Mitch Frazier about dishonest transmission shops, also the piece by Clyde Snively. We hear similar "horror stories" from many of our customers.

Pfc. Frazier needs to familiarize himself with the Better Business Bureau's procedures before blindly exonerating Mr. Davis' non-response to the bureau.

When a letter about a complaint is sent to a merchant regarding an incident, it clearly states that the business has 10 days to respond. If the bureau doesn't hear from the merchant in that time, he is sent TWO more letters. Therefore, either Mr. Davis can't read, or prefers to say anything to escape from unpleasant situations.

While there are bad apples in nearly every barrel, we'd like to address another side. Your paper maligns an entire division of the automotive after-market industry.

For instance, Generic Motor & Transmission has been serving locally over 11 years. We invite you to call the BBB, and to dig a little deeper than just listening to the recording — actually speak to a staff member.

Generic has tried to give the kind of service we would wish to receive, if we had to change places with the customer.

There have been times when an employee was out, or when a part was unavailable, that we've had to keep a vehicle a few days longer than the estimated completion time.

It's also true that a couple of tow truck drivers in town recommend us. Not because any of them have ever received a "kickback," but simply because folks like to steer friends and acquaintances to someone who will treat them like a Christian.

Remember: There are two sides to every story.

Soldiers should take pride in serving country

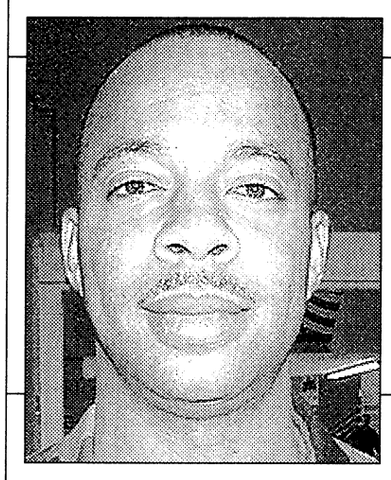
commentary

It seems like on any given day, I can always find at least one person who will complain about this or that on what they dislike about their jobs or the Army.

It's either they're worked too hard, not appreciated, not paid enough, etc. I'm the first to say I've complained too.

There have been those days when I wonder, "What am I doing here? Or, why did I sign up for this?"

Then there are those moments when I actually realize what I'm doing here. For me, I most always feel it, a sense of pride in myself and the military, when I'm somewhere and the national anthem is played. Then there was last Friday. I went out to cover a veterans' group visiting post. It was just another assignment I had to get done — at least at first. As I stood there, taking pictures and waiting to interview some of the veterans, it happened again. The retired first sergeant said something that struck deep to my heart. He said he was proud of each and every one of us who put on the green suit each day.

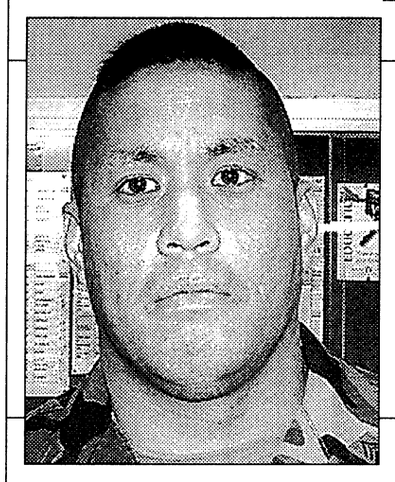


He wasn't there to pat his fellow members on the back for all of the sacrifices they made. This man who had seen battle so many times said he was proud of us for carrying on the tradition of the military. He said he was proud to see how we, today's Soldiers, take pride in the Army, our jobs and our country.

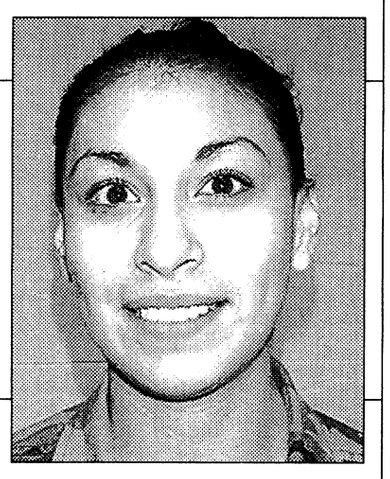
It gave me a deep, warm feeling being reminded that I'm a Soldier, not just a journalist. I sit at a desk each day, but I'm also here to protect our country and our way of life. It's sad that many of us don't realize that when we come into the grind everyday.

Pay is OK, but I don't think that's what it's ultimately all about. I hope that all Soldiers can realize that — we're here to carry on that tradition the first sergeant spoke of. There might be times when I feel like no one notices what I'm doing. But from now on I'll just take a moment to remember that first sergeant, and the fact that they do.

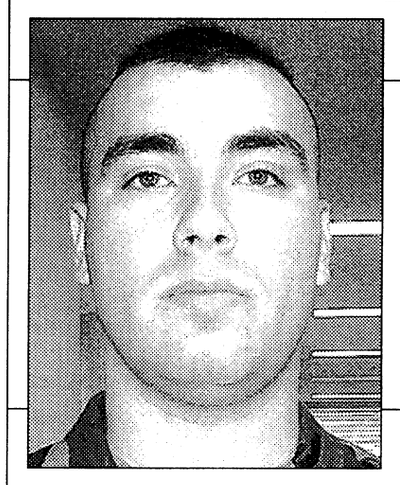
VARIOUS VOICES



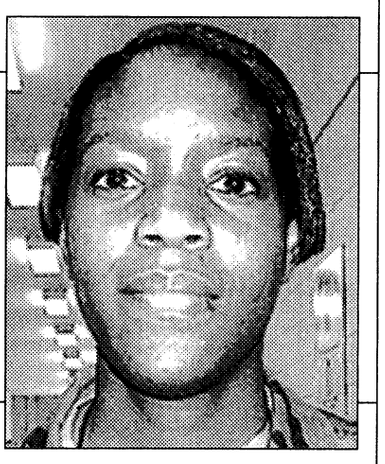
How do you feel about the Army giving incentives to new recruits?



Sgt. 1st Class Jerry Beatty, 3-345 Training Support Battalion, Atlanta, Ga. — "I think the only way you are going to attract new recruits is to give them incentives. However, you also need incentives to keep those who are already in. I think they should balance it out."



Pfc. Wanda Cintron, Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade — "I would say it's better to give incentives to keep people in. Yes, it's nice to offer incentives for those who are just coming in, but it's also very important to take care of those already in."



Master Sgt. Leroy Balag, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment— "I strongly disagree with that. They should pay more attention to the experienced Soldiers in the Army. There's a wealth of experience in the Army they aren't offering their time or energy to keep in."

Pfc. Cristyll Higgins, 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group — "I think they should spend more money on keeping people in rather than all this money on people with no experience. All they have to do is keep people happy and it shouldn't be hard."

Spc. Carlton Queen Jr., Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion — "I don't think they should spend any money on recruits, rather invest it in re-enlistment bonuses."

Staff Sgt. Michelle LeMay, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think the Soldiers who have been in awhile deserve incentive bonuses rather than trainees, because trainees aren't guaranteed to stay in."

Visit gives vets, trainees time together

Korean War Veterans return to basic training

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

It was a meeting of past and present as Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, hosted veterans from the 38th Infantry for a two-day visit last week.

During the visit, the 23 Korean War veterans spent two days with the Soldiers of 1st Bn, 38th Inf. Regt., Basic Combat Training Brigade.

The visit culminated with a regimental change of authority ceremony March 31 in front of the battalion headquarters where retired 1st Sgt. Roy Oliver was named honorary sergeant major for the 38th Regiment.

Getting back to Fort Benning was a real pleasure, Oliver said.

"The visit has been outstanding. I've really enjoyed seeing the young recruits here and that the Army's being maintained at the highest standard," he said. "I've been very honored to be named the honorary sergeant major of this regiment. I've replaced a very good friend of mine who passed away last year, and I was honored to be his replacement."

During the ceremony, Oliver replaced retired Sgt. Maj. Bob Hammersmith who died last year.

Honorary Regimental Commander retired Col. Jim Hinton said he always enjoys the opportunity to visit with today's Soldiers.

"I like to visit as often as I can, especially if I can contribute something," Hinton said. "I love to talk to the young Soldiers. I think they were a little surprised to have a guy in civilian clothes come around who they didn't know had been in the service for 32 years and three wars. I really enjoyed talking to them."

Oliver told the cadre of the pride he feels in their work and shared a story with them to let the Soldiers know how much others think of them too.

"Back several years ago, I had a sign on the back of my van that said 'I survived the Korean War,'" he said. "There was a young Korean man who walked up behind me and asked if I had served in the war. I said, 'yes.'

"He shook my hand and thanked me for having the opportunity to be born in a free country. It really made me feel good," Oliver added. "It's all worthwhile. If you 'be all you can be' not only in the Army, but 'be all you can be' everywhere you go and you'll always be happy with yourself."

> "Any time you talk to veterans, the benefit you get from that, their experience and camaraderie, it really cannot be expounded upon."
> —Lt. Col. Kenneth Strickland,
> Commander, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.

Lt. Col. Kenneth Strickland, commander of 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., said having the veterans visit re-emphasizes how great of a sacrifice the men made to his basic training Soldiers.

"We need to reinforce the heritage the Army has always held close. That is an appreciation for the veterans and what they've done in the past and the values that instills in those of us who are serving today," he said. "Any time you talk to veterans, the benefit you get from that, their experience and camaraderie, it really cannot be expounded upon. It's because of their sacrifices that we continue to do what we do — being Soldiers to the standard that we do."

1st Lt. Joshua Blair, C Co. executive officer, said he was glad he could help the veterans commemorate their history with the unit.

"These veterans frequently conduct reunions. They wanted to do something special this year to commemorate 50 years since the war," he said.

Blair added, this year the group wanted to have their reunion at C Company because most all of the servicemen served in the company during the war.

The visit provided an opportunity for the cadre and trainees to learn a little more about the men who served before them and the history of the company they now call home, Blair said.

"It was great to see the Rangers talking with a former Ranger, Soldiers from the same background sharing stories," he said. "Everyone was really impressed by what the veterans went through — things they probably will never have to go through — and were really respectful of that. It was great for us to be able to honor and pay tribute to our Soldiers from the Korean War."

The 38th Inf. Regt. was constituted and organized in 1917 at Syracuse, N.Y. during the military build up boom before World War I.

The regiment took part in World War I and World War II. Then when North Korea invaded South Korea, the 38th Infantry. with the 2nd Infantry Division again answered the call fighting through "The Gauntlet," at "The Punch Bowl," and on "Porkchop Hill."

In the cease fire that followed, the 38th Infantry stood guard and stayed ready in South Korea for 33 years.

In 1999, the 1st Bn., 38th Inf., welcomed the challenge of a new mission of training entry-level Soldiers.

spouse and child abuse.

"Transitional Compensation has helped Family Advocacy Programs tremendously," said Becky Welch, program manager of Fort Benning's FAP. "It helps get spouses out of abusive situations, where before they felt there was no way out."

Gunn agrees and wants to get the word out about the compensation to encourage victims to step forward and report abuse. Often victims are hesitant to report the crime to commanders or post authorities because "it could mean their spouses will be put out of the Army, and there will be a loss of income," she said.

Monthly rates for transitional compensation are: spouses or ex-spouses, $881; children under 18 and living with a parent receiving TC, $222. Children who are in the care of a legal guardian, $373 for the first child; $538 for two children; $699 for three and $136 for each additional child.

"This is tax-free money that they do not have to claim," Gunn said.

During the time the dependents are entitled to TC, they are also allowed to keep their family member ID cards, commissary and exchange access and medical and dental care.

If the family is in on-post housing, they are allowed to remain in quarters for 30 days. Under special circumstances, they may request a waiver and extend, for example, if the children are close to completing the school year, Gunn said.

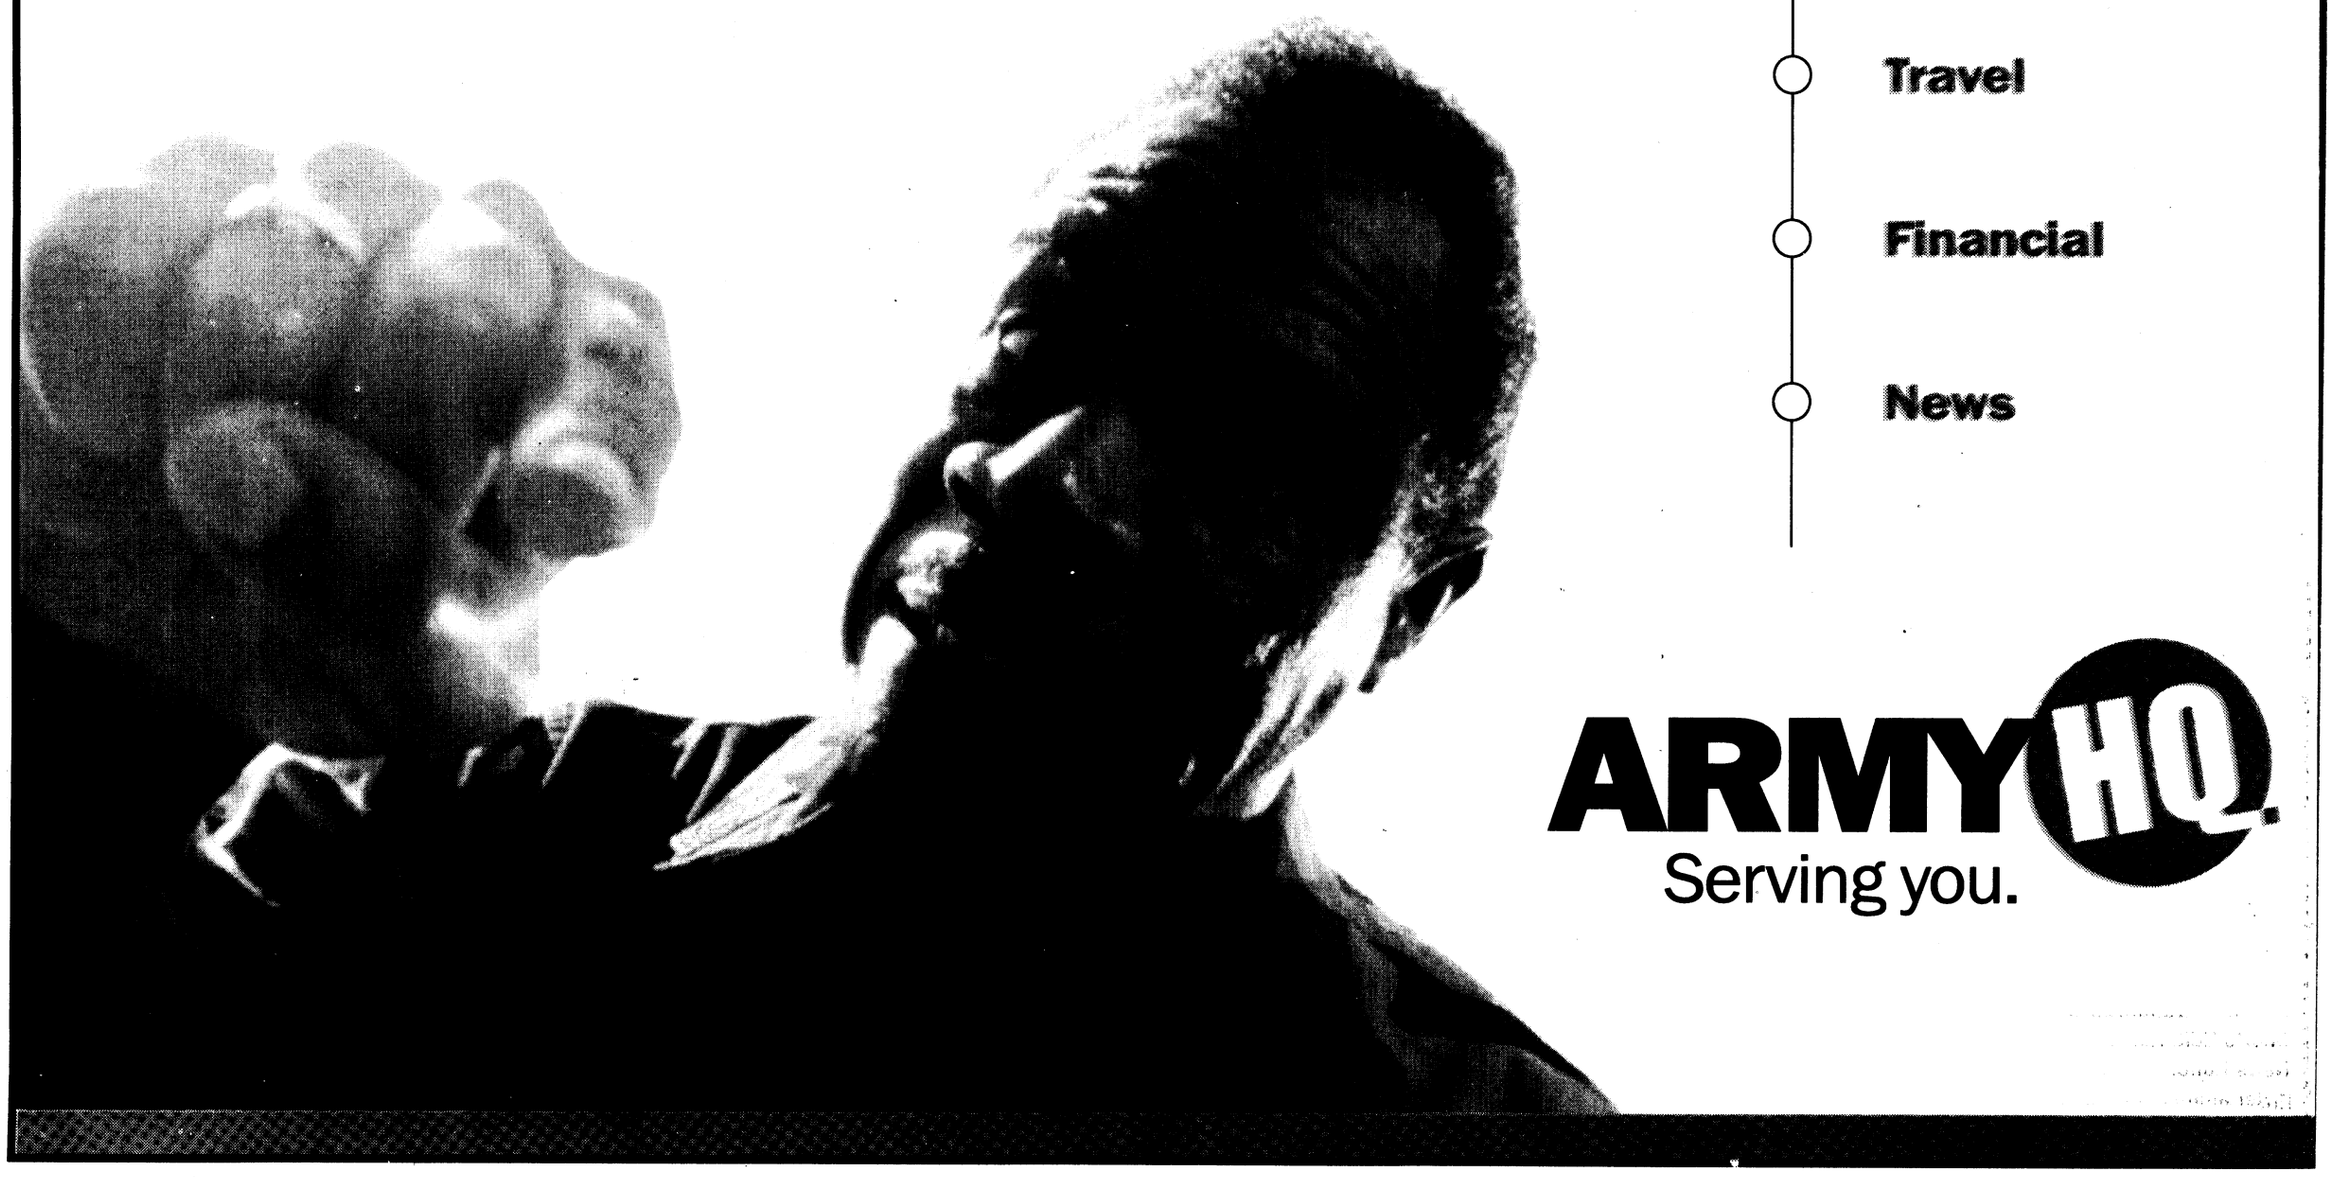
TC is received for a minimum of 12 months and a maximum of 36 months. The duration depends on the Soldier's ETS date, Gunn said.

The liaison encourages families to "spend wisely and save as much as possible," she said.

TC is forfeited if the dependent is an active participant in the abuse, or if the dependent cohabitates with or remarries the former service member.

Family members are not eligible for the assistance until the Soldier has been court-martialed or notified of the administrative separation.

The cause of the separation must be listed as domestic abuse in order for family members to get TC. When the reason cited is "for the good of the Army," the family cannot apply for or receive the compensation, according to the law.



"A lot of commanders may not realize this," Welch said.

In some cases it can take up to two months before the family members receive the TC after the court-martial or separation has been approved, Gunn said.

In the meantime, the convening authority can waive a Soldier's pay reductions or forfeitures and award that money directly to the family members for up to six months.

Gunn often speaks to post organizations about the compensation, most recently at a victim awareness conference at Kelley Hill for commanders and chaplains.

For more information on TC, contact Gunn at 545-1633 or 545-2285, or Theresa Sanchez, victim advocate representative at FAP, at 545-7517.

Former NCO earns OCS officer accolade

Burke earns honor as 48th Patterson award recipient

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Nearly a year after graduating Officer Candidate School, 2nd Lt. Kevin Burke has claimed one of the schools top honors.

Burke is the 48th recipient of Judge Robert P. Patterson award, an annual award presented to the school's top Infantry officer graduate of both OCS and the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

Burke will be awarded the honor today at 11 a.m. in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

The award was established in 1952 by friends of Patterson in honor of his extraordinary heroism in World War I.

His actions during the war earned him a Distinguished Service Cross for his daylight reconnaissance into enemy lines and destruction of numerous enemy outposts.

While covering his patrol's retreat, he dropped and feigned being killed in order to escape.

Patterson, a graduate of OCS, later went on to serve on the U.S. District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals, the Secretary of War for President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Secretary of War for President Harry S. Truman.

Patterson died in a fiery plane crash on Jan. 22, 1952 in Elizabeth, N.J.

Burke's service record mirrors the foundation of Patterson's as he too was an enlisted Infantryman before attending OCS.

Burke enlisted in the Army in Jan. 1992 and has served at Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Lewis, Wash.

He is currently assigned to D Company, 2nd Battalion, 5th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood Texas.

His awards include the Army Commendation Medal, Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters and the NCOES with a numeral 2, Good Conduct Medal, National Defense Ribbon and Army Service Ribbon.

Ceremony: Honors graduates with induction including former senator Bob Dole.

To be eligible for the Hall of Fame, OCS graduates must have graduated from any active component OCS program; this is a recent change from past criteria.

Also, the nominees must have accomplished one of the following: attained the rank of colonel while on active duty or in a reserve component, awarded the Medal of Honor, been elected or appointed to an office of prominence in a national or state government, been recognized for outstanding civilian service or distinguished wartime service.

In addition to inducting members into the Hall of Fame, the Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award will also be presented during the ceremony.

2nd Lt. Kevin Burke is the 48th recipient of the award, which honors the outstanding OCS Infantry graduate of the previous year.

The award, named for Judge Robert P. Patterson, was instituted by friends of the former judge in 1952 upon his death. Patterson earned the Distinguished Service Cross, Silver Star and the Purple Heart during World War I and later served as Judge on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and as Secretary of War during the Truman administration.

A reception at Wigle Hall will follow the Infantry Hall ceremony.

THE BAYONET CONGRATULATES THIS YEAR'S OFFICER CANDIDATE SCHOOL HALL OF FAME INDUCTEES

Officer Candidate Sharon McBride

Sgt. Reginold Tatum, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, conducts a survey of the testing strip. The strip will serve as the site where experiments will be conducted to find out how to improve Fort Benning's tank trails.

Experimental asphalt could save post money

Officer Candidate Sharon McBride
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Saving Fort Benning money, that's the idea behind an 36th Engineer Group experiment to improve tank trails here on post.

Using recycled, crushed asphalt and a chemical compound called Nutra-Bond Plus on a pre-approved testing strip, the engineers hope to figure out how to cut down on dust as well as upgrade the much used Fort Benning tank trail system.

Typically, the hundreds of miles of tank trails that weave throughout the training areas on post are in a constant need of upgrading, said 2nd Lt. Jowanna Day, 36th Engineer Group construction inspection officer.

However, because money is tight the trails aren't always in the most serviceable conditions, she said.

By grading over the deep-ruts and using combinations of recycled material, the engineers hope essentially to not only improve the trails, but to use a lot of the waste asphalt that takes up space in our landfills.

"By using the recycled, crushed asphalt, we are using basically a free material, that would ordinarily take up space on post," 1st Lt. Jennifer Retherford, 36th Engineer Group construction management officer, said. "It costs about $15 a ton to dispose of it in off-post land fills."

A 1,500 meter strip of tank trail located near Lae Field is where the testing site is located.

The strip, typical of most of the trails in Fort Benning's training areas, is made up of silt and clay, a mixture that erodes easily and produces a lot of dust in the summer.

The erosion and dust are problems that not only negatively impact the surrounding environment, but the Fort Benning community as well.

The 36th hopes that by testing different combinations and types of soil and asphalt at the site, that a cost effective solution will be found to combat the problems.

Besides experimenting with different combinations, the engineers will also use Nutra-Bond Plus.

Nutra-Bond Plus is a chemical compound that when applied on the tank trails will keep the dust down and the air cleaner.

"The test strip will be monitored over a one-month period," Day said. "Two complete sets of traffic flow testing will occur: once during dry conditions and once during wet conditions."

Results of the testing will be announced later in the summer.

84th Division commanders fill in at 1st Bn., 19th Inf.

84th Division (IT) Public Affairs Office

When the active Army sends out a call for help, the 84th Division (Institutional Training) answers.

The most recent call came from 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, at Sand Hill, who needed a battalion commander.

Lt. Cols. Michael Soja, commander of 2nd Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, 1st Brigade; and Harold Berloth, commander of 2nd Battalion, 333rd Infantry Regiment, 1st Brigade, filled the need. Each served as the commander of 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment for three weeks in January and February.

The vacancy was a result of the active duty battalion commander, Lt. Col. Dennis Bundy's temporary transfer to brigade staff.

While training divisions have provided reserve drill sergeants to the brigade for nearly 20 years, this is the first time a reserve battalion commander ran the unit.

"It's been good that we have the relationship with the 84th. We can call on them when we need to," said Bundy.

"I (gave) them full responsibility of the unit while they were down here," Bundy said. Both commanders fulfilled the responsibility in an outstanding manner, he added. "I have full confidence in the 84th commanders."

"Being able to come down here and be a commander, that's quite a honor," said Soja. "You can't replace an opportunity like this."

His biggest challenge was finding his way around the installation.

"I've never been to Fort Benning," he said.

Serving as battalion commander was also a great opportunity to train for the upcoming battalion displacement, he said, referring to the summer training mission where all Soja's battalion staff officers, as well as staff officers from other 84th battalions, will step into their active duty counterparts job for two weeks.

There will be six battalion displacements, Bundy explained.

"The 84th battalion staff will come in and work side by side with their active duty counterpart.

"If the 84th Soldier outranks the active duty officer, they will be in charge of running the staff position, " he added.

The displacement emphasizes the chief of staff of the Army's philosophy of creating one team with all Army components, he said. •

"It's important for the 84th to be part of the total Army and we couldn't do our mission without them," he said.

Editor's note: The 84th Division (IT), is headquartered in Milwaukee and has subordinate units and soldiers throughout the states of Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, Iowa, and Indiana. As an institutional training division, the 84th currently performs a variety of missions in support of the Army school system, also known as TASS. Missions include providing basic combat training and infantry one station unit training to new soldiers and officer training to ROTC cadets. The division personnel also train active and reserve component service members in combat service, combat service support, health services and professional development courses.

Infantry Officer Basic students provide swimming instruction to units

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

What do Ranger School, Special Forces Selection course, the Best Ranger Competition, Infantry Officers' Basic Course, and a day at the lake all have in common? Water.

A Soldier must be able to swim to do any of those, and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment is helping Soldiers learn how.

HHC, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., has a unique type of swimming instruction. The program began in July 1999 in response to the added graduation requirement that all IOBC lieutenants must be able to pass the Combat Water Survival Test in order to graduate.

The CWST consists of three events — the 15-meter swim in BDUs, boots, LCE and weapon, the three-meter drop and equipment removal.

The program focuses on teaching the lieutenants, and whoever else wishes to learn, how to pass all three phases of the CWST through a holistic approach. Instead of simply focusing on how to pass the test, the instructors also teach water confidence, breath control and some basics of fitness swimming.

Water confidence training can help Soldiers who may have had a traumatic experience with water when they were young and as a result are still afraid of the water.

Breath control is important both for water confidence and for passing the CWST.

Fitness swimming also helps the Soldier learn an alternative to the normal routine of physical training.

So far, 100 percent of those who have attended 15 or more lessons have passed.

> "The instruction may someday save someone's life."
> — 2nd Lt. Joe Novak
> Swimming instructor

But the instruction and the success don't stop there, nor are they limited to only the lieutenants preparing for IOBC and Ranger school.

The instructors have also helped other Soldiers prepare for and pass the swim test for the Special Forces selection course. In addition, several competitors for this year's Best Ranger Competition have improved their stroke technique and training techniques by attending the lessons. Other Soldiers have improved their times in triathlons by learning new techniques.

2nd Lt. Michael Dick is the man responsible for creating the program. He said he synthesized the program from several other swim programs around the country, to include Drown-Proofing from Georgia Tech and Basic Swim Instruction from the Department of Physical Education at the United States Military Academy.

One of the former instructors, 2nd Lt. James Gadoury, is also scuba qualified and added his knowledge (regarding water confidence and breath holding) to the program that he picked up from his scuba training.

According to one of the current instructor 2nd Lt. Joe Novak, who also instructed swimming in Atlanta, the instruction given to those who seek help with stroke technique can cost between $400-$500 for a weekend seminar.

Novak added that he thinks the lessons provided can't be beat.

"The swim instruction here is worth at least that amount because the instructors teach the same drills and techniques that are only found in only a few elite swim clinics around the world," he said. "However, there is no price associated with the benefit that the instruction may someday save someone's life."

Both Davis and Novak learned their techniques while swimming for the U.S. Military Academy.

Anyone who is interested in getting swim lessons can call Sgt. 1st Class Edwin Nieves at 545-8178.

Soldier charged in Columbus murder

Medic admits to shooting, pleads innocent to slaying

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

What began as a trip to a Columbus restaurant ended in gun fire and subsequently an arrest of a Fort Benning Soldier late last week.

Spc. Shem Omar Morgan, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 22, was arrested at 3:30 a.m. March 30 by military police at his barracks for his involvement in a south Columbus shooting the night before.

Morgan, who is accused of fatally shooting Jamal D. Miles, 21, of Columbus, is in the Muskogee County Jail awaiting trial.

The shooting stems from a previous dispute the two had at a local nightclub earlier in the week, said Columbus Police Maj. Ricky Boren.

While on his way to a fast-food restaurant in Columbus, Morgan said he saw a man who he thought he had argued with earlier in the week. Upon seeing the man, he instructed the driver of the vehicle he was a passenger in to follow the blue Pontiac Sunbird so he could talk to the driver he thought to be someone other than Miles.

The pursuit led Morgan to the man in front of a Pembrook Drive residence in south Columbus where he pulled beside Miles' vehicle. After a few words were exchanged, Morgan fired multiple shots from a .380 -caliber automatic pistol, killing Miles, Boren said.

Morgan pleaded innocent Friday in Recorder's Court to murder and possession of a firearm during commission of a crime, saying he shot Miles in self-defense after he grabbed for a weapon. No weapon was found on or near Miles by police at the scene.

Investigators have discovered, however, Miles was not the person who Morgan had a dispute with at the nightclub earlier in the week.

"This is a case of mistaken identity," Boren said. "Miles was just in the wrong place at the wrong time."

Morgan will continue to remain in the Muskogee County Jail until a bond amount is set by Superior Court.

FAST training proves successful in raising Soldiers GT scores

Soldiers improve math, reading scores allowing more options

Sgt. Lori Smith
Assistant editor

Functional Academics Skills Training classes are now open to Soldiers wanting to improve their general technical score.

Soldiers attend FAST classes to prepare for the Armed Forces Certification Test. This battery of tests determine a Soldier's scores in different functional areas including the GT.

"The AFCT is basically the same test as the ASVAB, the test taken prior to entry in the Army," said Tilden Robinson, FAST coordinator.

Soldiers may need to retake the AFCT in order to raise their GT score for various reasons, Robinson said. "The GT score indicates an ability to learn."

The GT score is used to determine eligibility for Military Occupational Specialities, entrance into flight school and Officer Candidate School or for re-enlistment purposes, said Elaine M. Livingston, chief of staff for education and training and education service officer.

The FAST program is the tool that Soldiers can use to attain higher scores.

"We try to teach them to think and reason through problems," said Robinson. "Our goal is for Soldiers to attain at least 10th-grade reading and math levels."

Students spend four hours a day reviewing math, reading and vocabulary. A small amount of grammar and spelling is also covered.

Periodic testing throughout the classes will be given to the Soldiers to monitor progress and a GT predictor test is given at the end of course.

The program has been quite successful.

"Around 95 percent of the Soldiers will raise their math scores by the end of the class," said Robinson.

He said the believes 50 percent of the students in his current class will achieve at least 10th-grade levels in math and reading.

And five out of 14 Soldiers who were enrolled in the last FAST class and took the AFCT earned a GT score of 110 or above on the last test, said Robinson. The three week FAST class program is open to all Soldiers.

Soldiers are encouraged to take the AFCT as soon as they are finished with the FAST class if they feel they are ready.

But, Robinson said, a Soldier may take AFCT only three times throughout their Army career.

FAST classes are held at Building 9004, Kelley Hill. For more information, call 544-3689.

Mime teaches expressive art at Faith

Students use body language to communicate

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

For a mime, Mary Ann Hart sure has a lot to say. As the resident artist at Faith Middle School this week, Hart extolled the benefits of the performing arts and encouraged students to — pardon the pun – think outside the box.

"I'm here to help these students understand the art of mime," Hart said. "But more importantly, I want to encourage them to open up, use their imaginations and be creative. I want them to develop an appreciation for each other's talents."

Hart, a professional mime and puppeteer from Atlanta, is this year's Artist in Residence, sponsored by the Faith parent-teacher organization and Young Audiences of Atlanta. She began miming more than 20 years ago in the late '70s when "miming was in its heyday." She has performed nationally and internationally in North Ireland. As a 15-year veteran of the Artist in Residency program, this is Hart's second visit to Faith.

"I was here about nine years ago. I enjoyed it then, but I think the students are more open, more receptive to the arts this time around," she said. "They're eager to learn and eager to share their talents."

Hart worked with students individually and in group workshops. She taught them the basic skills of illusion, such as imaginary tug-of-war, and the "mime in a box" routine. They also participated in role-playing games and character definition exercises.

> "Too few schools realize how the arts can enhance ... critical and creative thinking skills."
> — Mary Ann Hart
> Artist in residence, Faith Middle School

"The students have to learn to define the character they are portraying with their actions. They have to learn to focus on what they want to express, without words, and convey that to their audience," Hart said. "It's about movement and body language."

When she wasn't conducting workshops or performing for audiences, Hart met with students, teachers and parents to offer insight into the benefits of providing art programs in schools.

"Whether it's a funding issue or low test scores, more and more schools are doing away with their art programs or de-emphasizing them in favor of reading, writing and arithmetics. Too few schools realize how the arts can enhance these other areas and strengthen critical and creative thinking skills."

Art teacher Gloria Loar said that programs like Hart's also teach students teamwork and cooperation.

"We wanted Mary Ann to be this year's resident artist because she met all our criteria. She has a great personality. The kids really enjoy her," Loar said. "Plus miming reaches a majority of students in a way that other kinds of artists, such as painters or musicians, might not be able to do in a week's time. Besides the art of the mime itself, she's giving them valuable lessons on interacting as a team when they have to develop a group mime."

Students who participated in Hart's week-long workshops performed humorous mime sketches at Faith Family Night on Wednesday. Sixth-grader Kawaski Rutledge said he enjoyed the experience.

"It was pretty cool. Instead of talking, we had to express our feelings with our movements," Rutledge said. "Miming teaches you that you can show your emotions with your body language."

Hart said watching the students "sparkle" when they perform makes her week's work worthwhile.

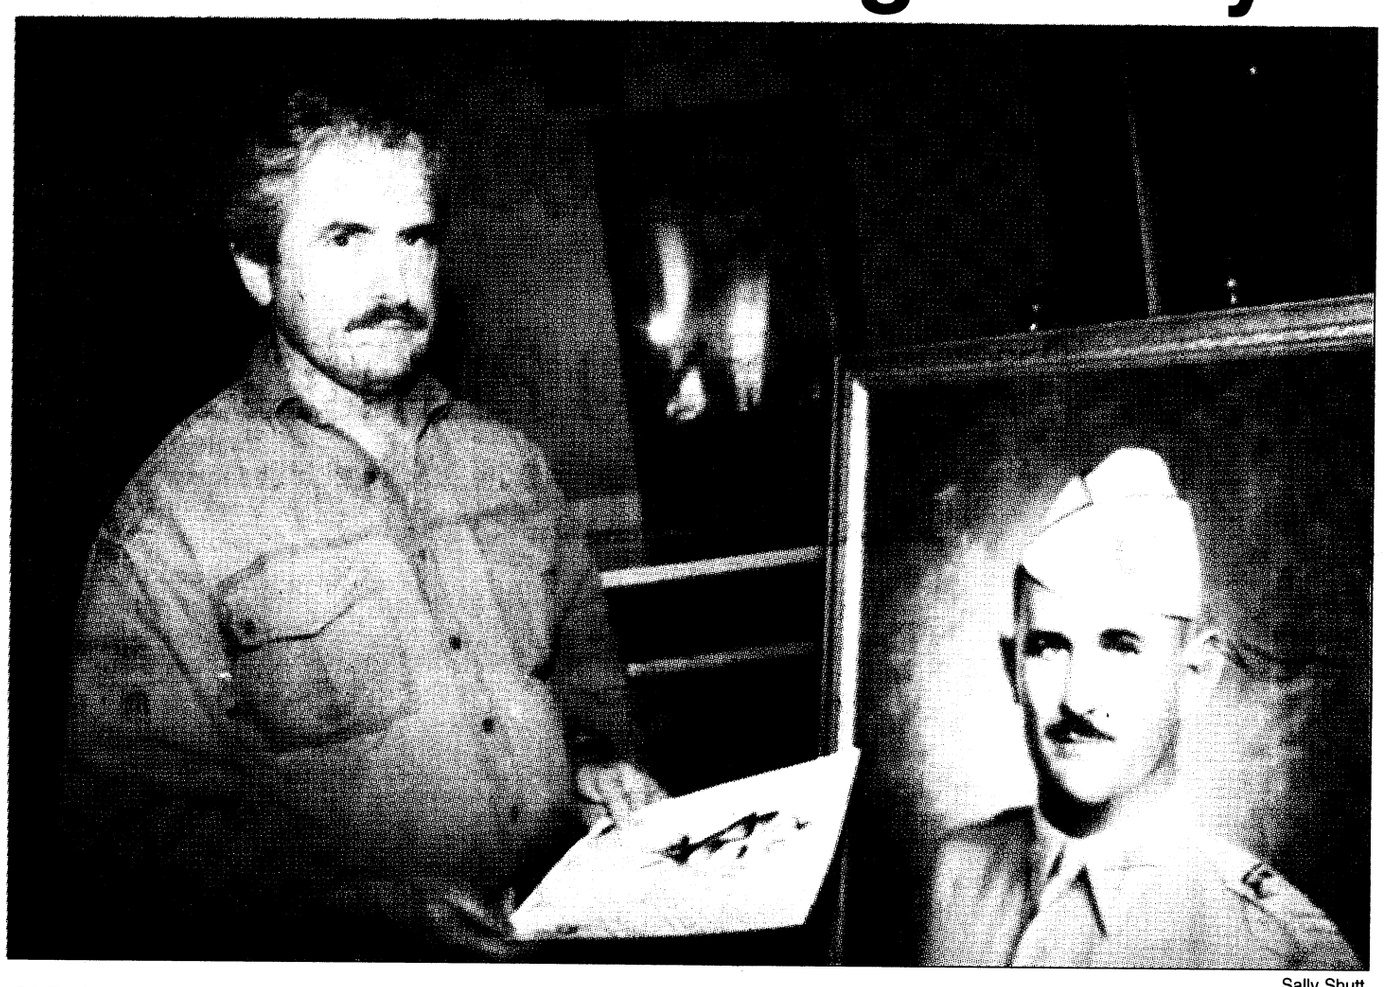
"At this age, kids are becoming too inhibited. They get nervous when they're unsure how they should act. Girls tend to be more shy. Miming is an excellent outlet. You just never know who's going to come out of their shell."

Artist adds touch to Benning history

Post supporter's team up to make artistic dream reality

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Individuals going about their day at Fort Benning often see Al Reid's artistic touch. They just don't realize it.



From posters in Infantry Hall heralding the history of 59 Infantry Regiments to lifesize paintings of U.S. Soldiers hanging in the National Infantry Museum, Reid's artistic talent is displayed all over the post.

Reid doesn't sign the work he does as a visual information specialist with the Training Support Center, Directorate of Operations and Training. So don't expect to find his name on the Riverwalk maps that will be posted on circular signs along the trail in the future or on the new coin he designed for the Commanding General to award to special honorees.

But you will find Reid's signature on the covers he has drawn for Infantry Magazine and on his most recent project, an oil portrait that will soon hang in the Infantry Museum of Frank Lumpkin Jr., a World War II veteran and financial supporter of the museum's programs.

Lumpkin donated the money to restore seven World War II buildings, including Gen. George S. Patton's headquarters and sleeping quarters, into a Company Street.

Reid has been friends with the museum's director, Frank Hanner, for 14 years, and wanted to do something special to honor Lumpkin's contribution to the museum. He spent 100 hours of his own time on the project.

Sally Shutt

Al Reid poses with a portrait of Frank Lumpkin, Jr. that he painted for the Infantry Museum.

"I personally share Mr. Lumpkin's dream to preserve these old wooden buildings," Reid said.

Hanner provided the artist with a black and white photograph of Lumpkin as a captain during World War II.

"We are honored and pleased to receive this wonderful piece of artwork for our collection," Hanner said. "This is something to remind us of Mr. Lumpkin, his love for Fort Benning, and what he was kind enough to give to the post."

This year's Youth Services Spring Carnival will begin Tuesday and run through April 15 promising more fun and games at a new location.

Stewart-Watson Field, across from Infantry Hall, will be home to the third annual week-long event.

Because of the carnival's location, units are asked to avoid the area in the interest of safety, Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said.

The change in location is twofold: the vendor is bringing in more rides, which means more space is needed and the new youth sports complex is being built on the old location.

The vendor, Belle City Amusements, is bringing 25 to 30 rides and 15 to 20 game booths, Linda Laine, director of Youth Services, said.

The company also plans to introduce two new rides to Fort Benning — the Power Surge and the Titanic.

Laine said the Power Surge is an imported ride from Italy with the vendor boasting the portable model in the United States.

She also noted the Titanic is a type of slide ride.

Carnival-goes are welcomed to participate in this year's three separate wristband nights.

During the first night of the carnival, the wristband will cost $7 and is good from 5-10 p.m.

The two additional opportunities to purchase wristbands will be Thursday from 5-10 p.m. and April 15 from 1-6 p.m. However, the wristband price increases to $10 on both these days.

The carnival hours are 5-10 p.m. Tuesday through April 14 and 1-11 p.m. April 15.

Thanks to an extension of the post curfew, younger carnival-goers need not worry about staying out too late, Laine said.

Youth Services receives a percentage of the money the vendor makes on the carnival, Laine explained.

The carnival is open to the public.

Students travel globe during reading program

America Quest takes students on world tour

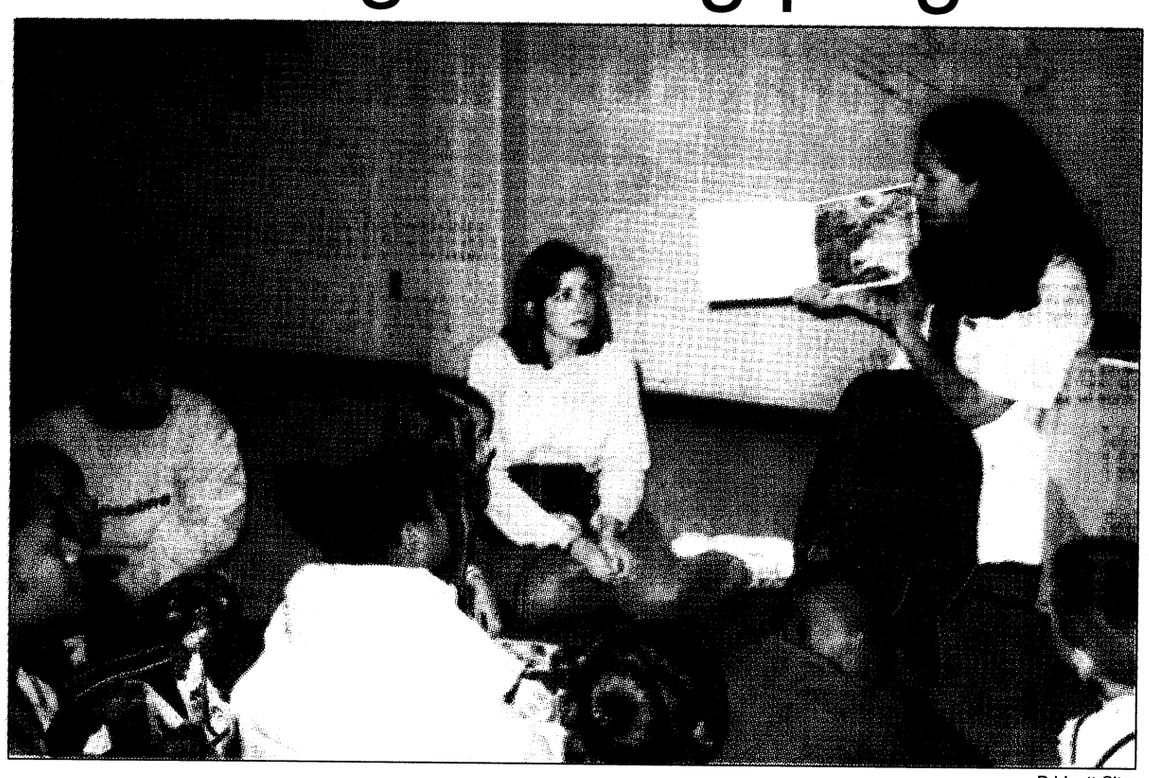
Jules Verne once said he could make it Around the World in 80 Days. Tuesday evening more than 100 Fort Benning students circled the globe in less than two hours — and made it back in time for dessert.

The students and their families visited eight foreign countries during Stowers Elementary School's International Reading Night. Participants traveled vicariously from one country to another by visiting "stations" where guest readers shared stories and souvenirs from Japan, Africa, Italy, Germany, Sweden, China, France and Mexico.

"Each station has a guest reader with ties to the country he or she is representing," said Julie Pelletier, Stowers media specialist, who organized the event. "They either lived there, visited there or their ancestry is there."

Fifth-grade teacher David Murrey displayed souvenirs he collected while serving as a missionary in Africa.

Decked in a French beret, assistant school superintendent Richard Skinner read Beauty and the Beast and talked about his experience as an educator in Europe.



Kathy Einhorn, the curriculum director for Fort Benning Schools, represented the country of Sweden, where her grandparents were born.

"I made spritz cookies to share with my audiences because it was my grandmother's recipe," Einhorn said. "And I'm reading Flicka, Ricka, Dicka because it's what my grandmother and my mother used to read to me when I was this age."

Students received miniature soccer balls from school superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen who represented the country of Germany. Fourth-grader Danielle Marker said the German display was her favorite part of the evening.

"I liked hearing about all the different countries, but Germany was my favorite," she said. "I was born there, but I moved when I was about two years old so I don't remember much about it."

Teachers Bobbi Markham and Diana Hardenstein told their audiences about their recent visits to Japan and China, and Markham demonstrated the Japanese art of origami. PTO volunteer coordinator Christina Seamone read a book about Mexico, her native country.

Stowers teacher Diana Hardenstein read The Seven Chinese Brothers to students and guests at International Reading Night.

Guest reader Brenda Castro distributed Italian cookies called pizzelle, and shared the souvenirs she collected during her three years in Italy.

"The kids were obviously excited to be here," Castro said. "It's important for them to realize that many cultures and nationalities are represented here. Tonight they're having fun and learning too."

Second-grade teacher Kris Clemons said the event benefited the students in two ways.

Candidates share time with students

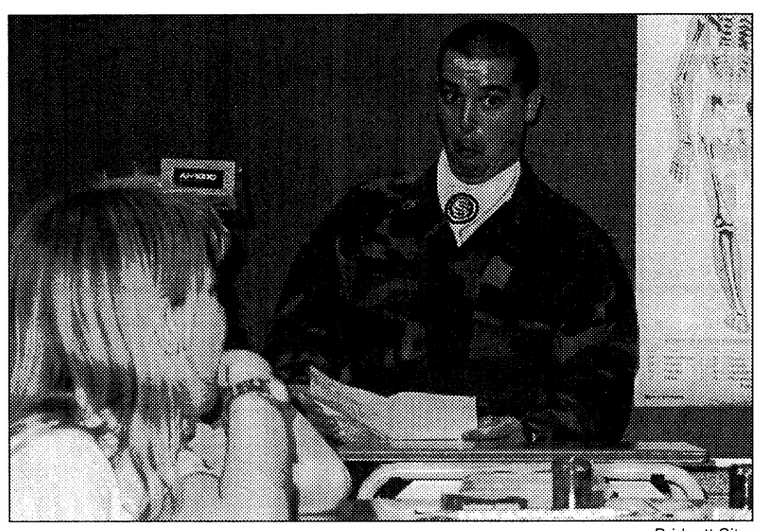
A group of OCS students made a "big" impression on Stowers Elementary School Tuesday. More than 80 candidates from the A Company, Class 2-00, played big brothers and sisters to the entire school.

In teams of two and three, the officer candidates visited every classroom and read humorous poetry and short stories. After visiting with the students they were treated to cookies and punch in the library.

"Every OCS class is required to perform some kind of community service," said senior officer candidate Alfred Boone, class president. "We decided unanimously to take part in the Big Brother-Big Sister program and read to elementary students."



Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Columbus offers a "big for a day" program for people who want to volunteer on a one-time or occasional basis.

"They contacted me and said they wanted to be a part of the program," said Beth Dreyer, director for the program. "Perfect. We contacted Stowers and said we had all these volunteers who wanted to read. It all came together beautifully."

Principal Glenn Hughes thanked the candidates for "sharing their time with our nation's greatest resource — our children."

"Being a Big Brother or a Big Sister to a military child is an awesome responsibility. Who better to fill that role than a Soldier who understands the issues that these children face," Hughes said

Second-grader Matthew Riley said he enjoyed the readers because they were humorous and expressive.

Officer Candidate Matthew Kopp narrates "Hungry Mungry" for Kris Clemons' second grade class.

"They read our class funny Shel Silverstein poems. You should have heard how funny they sounded when they read Hungry Mungry. They made faces," Riley said.

Senior Officer Candidate Richard Bailey said he enjoyed the experience as much as the students.

"It's just an awesome idea to work with kids. It was fun but it sure made me miss my own kids," Bailey said.

Advocacy makes difference in child abuse

Rebecca Welch
Family Advocacy Program

April is Child Abuse Prevention Month. What is advocacy? When we speak up or write in support of a cause we believe in or in opposition to a policy or program, we are advocating or engaging in the practice of advocacy.

Anyone can be an advocate who is willing to challenge systems when they don't work, work for laws and policies when they do work, and be a voice for others, particularly those who can't speak for themselves.

Above all, advocacy is a frame of mind — not just a job title, occupation or role in life. Whether it involves a single individual or group, advocates see opportunities where others see obstacles.

A common tenet of most communities is the moral obligation to speak out and advocate for those who have difficulty speaking effectively for themselves. Among those who most need and deserve advocacy are children and families in need.

Advocacy is most effective when it is a collective effort through which people with conflicting values and goals try to overcome their differences and work together for common ends. Each part of the community has a role to play.

Directorate of Public Works

Kudos and thanks to the units and activities that are making the effort to bring recyclable material directly to the Directorate of Public Works Material Recovery Facility as requested in the March 17 Bayonet article.

DPW is recruiting additional staff for the MRF and asks for everyone's continued support in the meanwhile. Please check future issues of The Bayonet for updates.

Families living off post are temporarily requested to stop bringing recyclables to the PX Recycle Collection Point until DPW has adequate manpower to keep the bins properly serviced. This will prevent overfilling of the bins.

Individuals may drop off recyclables at the MRF, Building 4000, in Harmony Church on Old Cusseta Road. Hours are from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Everyone is encouraged to flatten all cans and plastic containers and leave the tops off all plastic food and beverage containers. The crews at the MRF appreciate all efforts to enable them to process materials more efficiently and quickly.

MRF personnel are available on site to direct units in proper disposal of all items.

Yard Waste recycling reminders: the warm weather and abundant rains have triggered a growing spurt. Grass and shrubs are shooting up, up and away.

The resulting superabundance of yard waste needs to be recycled. Grass clippings alone make up approximately 10 percent of Fort Benning's solid waste.

Georgia State law prohibits the disposal of yard waste in sanitary landfills. Please be sure to put leaves and grass clippings in clearly marked durable plastic or metal recycling containers that can be emptied directly into the yard waste collection vehicle. The container will be returned to the curb after it is emptied.

Paper yard waste bags, available through the Fort Benning DPW Self Help Shop, may also be used, but only for leaves and grass. Do not put limbs in either the bags or containers.

Small limbs may be tied in bundles and placed at the curb. Please do not put any yard waste in plastic bags. The contractor is not authorized to pick up plastic bags.

Another way to recycle grass clippings is to leave the clippings on the lawn and letting them break down naturally.

Leaving lawn clippings on the lawn is not only an ecologically sound alternative, but is economical as well. It can save a considerable amount in solid waste management costs for Fort Benning.

Frequent mowings enable clippings, which are 75 percent water, to dry up, break down and release nutrients to the soil.

Lawns stay greener and develop a deeper healthier root system. The need for mowing will vary with temperature, fertility, moisture and season.

If done correctly, this method will greatly reduce lawn raking and grass bagging. Use a mulching mower or mow more often with a non-mulching mower.

Mow at proper height, set mower height at 3 to 4 inches, and keep the mower blade sharp.

Do not remove more than one third of the grass' growth height at a time.

Mow when grass is dry. If the grass is still wet, the clumps of clippings that lie on the surface should be raked in. If allowed to stand, they will smother and kill the grass beneath.

Contact the DPW Solid Waste Program office at 544-6142 or 544-7187 if you have any problems or questions.

Club adds touch to yearbook

Wanda Person
Wilson Elementary School

This year, the Wilson School yearbook, newly titled The Trailblazer, has been produced by students of the Photography Club.

The club, which consists of fourth- and fifth-grade students, was given the responsibility of creating the yearbook by principal, Phyllis Parker, when the club was founded earlier this year.

"I believe our students have the talents and skills necessary to create a top-notch memory book," Parker said. "They've done some great photography, which is displayed in the hallways, and I believe this is going to be one of our best yearbooks ever."

The students are proving Parker right. All of the photography in the yearbook, other than individual student pictures provided by Life Touch Photograph, has been produced by photo club members.

Student interest in the book has been tremendous. More than 140 yearbooks have been pre-ordered, and the club expects to sell all of the remaining yearbooks when they arrive. The 24-page yearbook will sell for $10.

The club also gave the yearbook its name, The Trailblazer. Josh Olive, president of the club, said the name was selected because "Trailblazers work on projects that are new and do things that other people haven't done before. One of the things I like about Wilson School is that kids get to do things that are important. Most people think that just adults do the most important things, but kids really can make a difference."

Club sponsor, Parker agreed early in the year that having students create the book was the only way to go.

"Our students need real-life situations to apply what they've learned," Parker said. "It was very rewarding to see how well the photos that the club members took turned out. We can't wait to get the book back from the publisher."

First-graders to perform

Wanda Person
Wilson Elementary School

First-grade students at Wilson School will become actors in a production of The Three Billy Goats Gruff, performed for parents and other visitors today.

Jennifer Ragan's class, working with Reading Recovery teacher Sara VanCleave, will perform onstage. Bonnie Cyfers' class will have responsibility for the costumes, props and the stage set. Carol Hare's class is creating invitations and programs and will serve as reporters interviewing characters and others who helped with the play.

The teachers decided to do the play because, "Many beginning readers focus all their attention on getting the words right and fail to enjoy the story. I hope our play will enable our students to make the transition from reading being just some words on a page to reading being a meaningful story filled with delightful characters and events," said VanCleave.

While Ragan's class will actually take the acting roles, the involvement of all first graders was very important in developing plans for the activity.

"The children in my reading group worked together to create the invitation and the program. This included creating pictures illustrating the play, summarizing information, and creating the body of the invitation and the program," Hare said.

"They were all very excited about it and even titled the play The Three Billy Goats Gruff — starring all of the first grade. There is a real sense of ownership among all of the first graders with this project," she said.

In addition to programs and invitations, first graders have also created props and the stage set. Cyfers' students have designed trees, shrubs, and the bridge to be crossed by the billy goats.

They have also made costumes for the main characters.

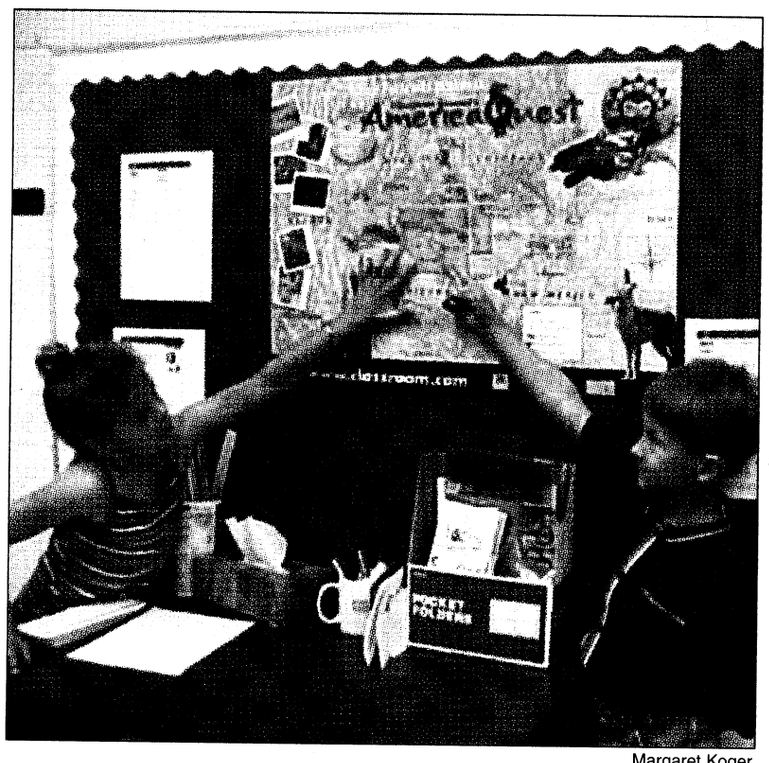
Students go on adventure

Margaret Koger
Wilson Elementary School

The Anasazi Indians disappeared over 700 years ago and students at Wilson School are determined to find out why.

Unlocking this ancient mystery has been the focus of an online adventure learning project in which the school has been participating for the last month.

Sponsored in part by Life Touch Pictures, the America Quest project connects students from around the nation with scientists and archaeologists who have traveled to the mesas and canyons of the southwest.



Through the internet, students are able to collaborate in the investigative experience as it unfolds.

Together with the expedition team, students search for clues regarding the Anasazi abandonment.

With the interactivity of the site, students are able to sharpen their navigational skills as they help the team chart their course.

At the same time, they are also able to contribute information to explorers and experts in the field.

From first to fifth grade, students have become immersed in the adventures of America Quest. Checking the team's daily updates, learning about the unique culture of the southwest, investigating animals native to the region, and gathering clues about the disappearance of the Anasazi have become a part of the daily routine.

Margaret Koger

Jazman Bailey and Chase Holbrook check out the map of the America Quest online adventure.

When the quest was officially over at the end of March, students hoped their role in the adventure will have helped to unlock the mystery.

Regardless, the students said the knowledge gained will be worth the time invested in the project.

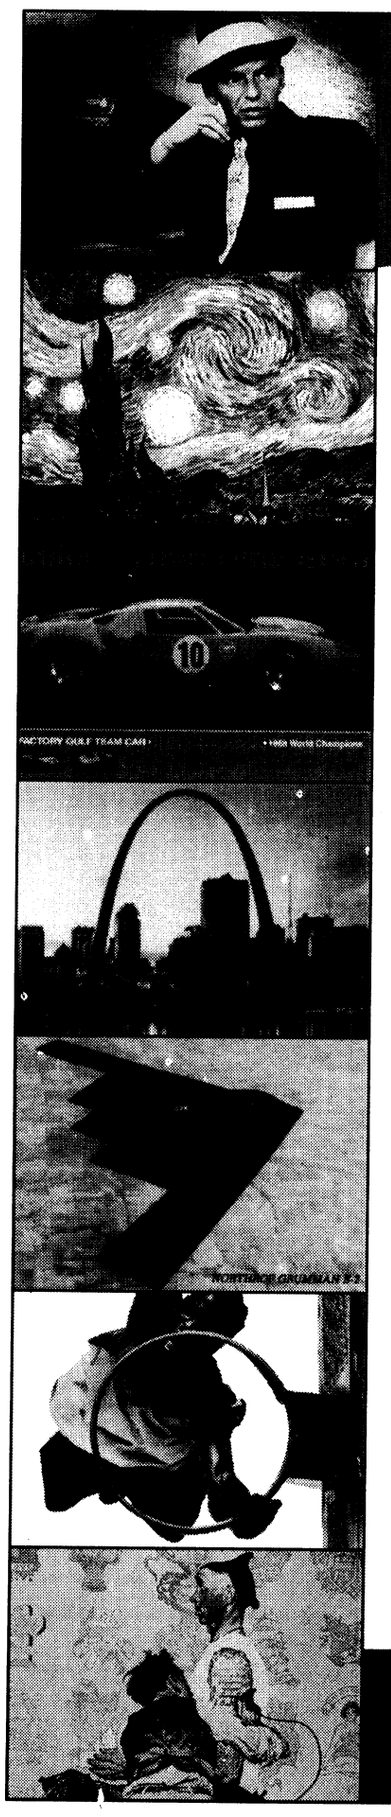
Kids time travel at Wilson school

Margaret Koger
Wilson Elementary School

In what century was the toothbrush invented? When were mirrors made? Who was the man responsible for inventing the microscope?

These and other questions can be readily answered by Wilson School enrichment students in third through fifth grade. After completing an extensive project on the events, people, and inventions that shaped our last one thousand years, enrichment students have become expert time travelers.

The project required students to explore some of the most important happenings of the last millennium in order to gain a general knowledge of each century.



After this, students chose one century of interest to conduct more in-depth research.

Using the varied resources of the media center, students gathered information. However, the researching process was not always easy, and students found they had to explore numerous sources.

The effort has paid off. Students created phenomenal multimedia presentations that have been shared throughout the school. Using an In Focus digital scan converter, which projects what is on the computer monitor onto a large screen, students were able to stand before several classes of students at a time and confidently present their research findings.

Students enjoyed the process and especially the end products.

"I liked researching about different centuries and finding out what happened before I lived," said fifth-grader Rhiannon Pegan. "I think it was a good experience because I got to share what I learned."

Q: I served in a combat zone. What tax consideration should I be aware of?

A: Armed forces members who served in a combat zone or a qualified hazardous duty area are allowed additional time to take care of tax matters. The deadline for taking actions with the IRS is extended for at least 180 days after the later of:

• The last day the taxpayer is in a combat zone, or

• The last day of any continuous qualified hospitalization for injury from service in the combat zone. Qualified hospitalization is hospitalization which resulted from an injury received while serving in the combat zone.

The deadline is also extended beyond the 180 days by the number of days that were left for the member to take action with the IRS when she entered the combat zone.

Armed forces members who serve in a combat zone or a qualified hazardous area may also exclude certain pay from their income. They do not have to receive the pay while in a combat zone, but it must be paid for service there or for a period during which they were hospitalized as a result of their service there. Two common examples of military pay that can be excluded are active duty pay earned in any month they served in a combat zone. A reenlistment bonus can also be excluded if the voluntary extension or reenlistment occurs in a month they served in a combat zone.

Presently there are two combat zones. Desert Storm beginning Jan. 17, 1991, and Allied Force beginning March 24, 1999.

Service in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Macedonia after Nov. 21, 1995 is a qualified hazardous duty area and the area designated as Operation Allied Force after March 24, 1999.

The following military service does not qualify as service in a combat zone:

• Presence in a combat zone while on leave from a duty station located outside the combat zone.

• Passage over or through a combat zone during a trip between two points that are outside of a combat zone.

• Presence in a combat zone solely for a member's personal convenience.

Stop by Tax Center 2000 for more details. It's open in Infantry Hall, Classroom 1. The hours are Monday-Friday 8:30 a.m.- 4:30 p.m.

Junior Leadership Team works to resolve problems

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Junior Leadership Team at Dexter Elementary School is tackling the issues that face young students at Fort Benning schools.

From noise control in the cafeteria to the Terra Nova testing, the team works to resolve problems and make improvements in areas of concern to students and faculty.

"The idea for a student leadership team came about because research tells us that students are not typically involved in making the decisions that affect their daily school activities," said Vicki Rogers, principal. "Since our school building is being reconstructed, we felt this was a good time to also renew the spirit of what's taking place inside the school. We want all the stakeholders involved in this renewal — parents, children and staff."

The 13-member team consists of two representatives from each grade who were selected by their teachers. Members act as classroom liaisons, attending monthly sessions and reporting back to their classrooms about ideas and decisions discussed by the team.

Fifth-grader Kerri Bal said she enjoys her role as a member of the leadership team.

"It's fun and I like to go in front of the class and teach the other kids the things I've learned at the meetings."

Joyce Flatt, the education technologist, serves as chairperson for the Junior Leadership Team. She oversees meetings and helps the members develop a workable plan to solve problems facing Dexter students. The team is currently trying to find a way to reduce the noise level in the school cafeteria.

"We're teaching our student leaders a four-step problem-solving process. We work on one step at each meeting," Flatt said. "During our first meeting, we gathered information. The second step was to formulate a plan. We brainstormed ideas and carried them back to the classrooms to share with the other students. Ultimately we want everyone to have the opportunity to voice their opinion.

"When we've arrived at a decision as to the best way to reduce the noise level, we'll carry out our plan, and finally evaluate the results. Hopefully we'll learn from our mistakes and recognize our successes," she said.

Flatt said the team will follow this same strategy when evaluating the Terra Nova test results.

They will look for viable ways to increase scores in areas that need improvement. Members will discuss possible plans at the end of the school year and begin to implement the plan when students return to school in the fall.

Reading: Opens doors

"This evening is about reading, and I can't stress the importance of that enough. Reading affects every area of our lives. But more importantly, it's about parent involvement," Clemons said. "It means a lot to these students and their teachers to see all these parents here supporting their childrens' educations.

"It tells the children they are really very important to their parents. It's all about putting children first," she added.

After visiting each country, students and their guests gathered in the school gymnasium to participate in multi-cultural games, such as quill, a French version of bowling, and bram ball, a German ball game.

The evening concluded with a dessert reception in the auditorium, where ice cream was served with an international flair.

"It's just ice cream in a cone," Pelletier laughed. "But I bet you didn't know it originated in Italy."

Artist: Shares works

Had the museum gone off post and commissioned "this caliber of work," it would have cost thousands of dollars the museum doesn't have, Hanner said.

Reid never met Lumpkin who died March 21 at age 92. But the businessman and his family did see the portrait and were very happy with it, Hanner said.

Reid is sorry Lumpkin didn't have the chance to unveil the portrait on the third floor of the museum.

"But I hope we all can see his dream of a World War II Company Street become a reality," Reid said.

"All of us who spent much of our Army time in these old wooden buildings have fond memories of how hot they were in the summer and cold in the winter," he said.

It was the Army that brought Reid to Fort Benning in the 1960s. During his three-year tour he worked as a printer and graphic plate maker. When he left the Army, he returned to his native Chicago and studied fine art for two years. Since 1967 he has worked as a commercial artist.

"I never could get used to the Chicago weather and I always liked the climate down here," he said.

After working as an airbrush artist with advertising agencies and photo labs, he joined the Fort Benning work force in 1985.

"I love Fort Benning and the diversity of the work. One day I might be working on posters and weeks later I'm doing a military rendering or even painting," he said.

Technology is taking over the graphics field and Reid laments that time constraints make computers the tool of choice.

"When I started, it was all hands-on work. Now everything is mostly computer-generated," he said.

On his own time and in his studio behind the Columbus home he shares with his wife, Rhio, Reid enjoys painting. Several portraits hang in his Fort Benning office, including one of his son, Freddy. Reid plans to paint one of the couple's daughter, Kristen, whose adoption just became final two weeks ago.

Reid describes himself as a history buff who loves visiting the museum and encouraging others to do so.

"Today's Soldiers must soak up as much history as possible to put their careers in perspective," Reid said. "And they have a valuable resource in the National Infantry Museum."

Living Christian life brings enjoyment, fulfillment

Chaplain (Capt.) Norman Jones
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

reflections

There is a misconception Christians live dull and boring lives with stringent rules of "can't do this or can't do that." I think the false notion is that in order to have fun and joy, one has to go to a disco party, drink alcohol and live a loose life.

While there are moral and biblical guidelines that show us how we should live our lives, the truth is that committed and dedicated Christians experience joy and fulfillment in their lives.

God's joy is deep down inner feeling of peace, hope, contentment, stability and a sense of well being regardless of one's circumstances.

Christian joy comes from the Holy Spirit that dwells in us. The Scripture tells us the "Joy of the Lord is our strength." (Neh. 8:10)

So to experience God's joy is to experience strength from within — strength to press on in spite of the misfortunes that bombard us daily.

But how do we get the Joy of the Lord? We get joy from the Lord when we share fellowship together at church and pour our hearts out in worship, prayer, adoration and singing. When Christians get together, we normally share a common bond, a common interest and a common denominator (Jesus) and we can't help but experience joy, warm love, acceptance and encouragement.

We get joy from reading and meditating on God's Holy Word. God's Word gives us hope, encouragement, guidance, wisdom, strength and blessed assurance (Ps. 119, II Tim 3:16). If you are having a bad day, I suggest you pick up your Bible and start reading one of the Psalms, and I believe you will start feeling better.

The Psalms have a calming effect on our spirit. They soothe and refresh our souls.

We get joy in knowing that God is caring and forgiving and that he will never leave us or forsake us (Ps. 103, Rom. 8:31-39). These are key elements in any kind of relationship and without them joy is only a wish.

There is joy in knowing we have a blessed future awaiting us in heaven with Christ. There is joy in knowing when this life is over, we will fly away to a place of eternal rest where there will be no more sorrow, tears, pain, disappointment, hate, injustice, war and wickedness. We will fly away to a place where there is everlasting joy, tranquility, peace and bliss. There's a song that says, "When we all get to heaven, what a day of rejoicing that will be, when we all see Jesus, we will sing and shout the victory."

Thank God we have a joyous and glorious future. When I think about my future home in heaven, my few years on earth (Ps. 90:1-10) and the troubles I experience are pale, minuscule and insignificant in comparison to the future glory that lies ahead.

All of us want joy, peace and contentment, but not all of us go to the right source. Some of us try everything else but God.

His joy is free and readily available to anyone who wants it. You can experience His joy today by simply placing your faith and trust in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Couples must overcome worry in marriage

Chap. (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries Center

I'd be worried if I didn't have anything to worry about. Sound familiar? Anxiety and worry are common sources of trouble in many marriages.

Problems can so overwhelm a person that they become so entwined in the problem that they leave little time to enjoy life. Even if only one spouse is the worrier, his or her worrying will have a negative effect on his or her partner.

Worry is destructive. But how can one break out of this destructive pattern? H. Norman Wright in his book, Communication: Key to Your Marriage, outlines some practical steps on overcoming worry. Let me share them here with you.

Don't try to face your troubles on your own. Turning to God is not a "cop out" when facing life's troubles. He alone is the one who can provide the best solution. Friends, counselors or a clergyperson can also be a great source of comfort and advice.

Rupel

Remember you have a choice of who "runs the ranch." You have the power to change your negative thoughts into positive ones. The apostle Paul said, "Whatsoever things are good, think on these things."

Concentrate on reality. Don't let your thoughts be filled with what might happen. Face your problems square in the face and ask for God's help and direction for the present situation.

Be honest with yourself and accept your problems. Evaluate the situation. Search for workable solutions, and when you have one put the solution into action. Once again, always include God in the decision.

Worrying about your problems will not make them go away. Taking responsibility paves the way for finding the right solution.

Think in terms of possible solutions. Together with your spouse, "brainstorm" ways of overcoming any problem you are facing. In this process it is so important to pray and ask God for guidance. Wright said, "Focus on the solution rather than on the problem."

Don't concentrate on the things that trouble you. While you cannot always avoid troubling situations you can stay away from areas that increase your anxiety or worry. There will always be differences of opinions in any marriage.

It is best to stay away from areas of personal opinion (i.e. politics) that lead to disagreement.

Accept what can't be changed. Make this prayer of Richard Niebauer's your own: "God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can, and wisdom to know the difference." Don't try to "fix" your spouse, rather try to accept and love him or her in the way you want to be loved. Will this guarantee success? No, but I can guarantee you failure if you do not.

Live one day at a time. Learn to enjoy your marriage today. Have fun with your spouse today. There are too many challenges today that require your attention for you to worry about what the future may hold.

Many couples at Fort Benning find it difficult not be overwhelmed by problems.

They are so worried about this and that, that they let the trials of this life rob them of the joy of marriage. For more information, call the 545-2050.

Tigers, Cubs go to bat in YS baseball

Teams stay neck and neck during game

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

The Fort Benning Tigers were able to hold off the Cubs Saturday, 18-12, during Youth Services baseball action at Dexter Field.

The game began with both teams looking pretty good in the first inning. The Tigers scored 5 while the Cubs brought in 3.

One of those runs for the Cubs was thanks to a home run from Nick Simmons.

Simmons said he was a little nervous as he ran in the home run.

"I didn't think I would make it home before the catcher got the ball. I was worried that he would get me out because he was pretty good," he said.

The second inning was even closer as the teams battled it out. The Tigers scored 4 and the Cubs got 3.

It wasn't until the third inning that the Tigers began to pull away by scoring 3 runs off of a home run by Deandre Murphy went unanswered. The inning ended with 12-6 on the books.

It was an all out in the last inning of the game as both teams maxed out their runs scored at 6 each. But the clock ran out and the Tigers took the game, 18-12.

Danielle Secor, Cubs coach, said she thought the team could have caught up in the last inning if the league did not limit the number of runs.

Secor added, even though the team came up a little short, she was still proud of her team members for their hard work.

"They really rallied in the last inning," she said. "The whole team did a great job of working together."

Tigers Coach Troy Murphy said the team's hard work really paid off — keeping them on a 2-0 wining streak.

"It was a total team effort," he said. "We've been practicing twice a week, and we're just going to keep working on what we've been working on."

In the second game of the day, the Yankees were barely able to hold off the Eagles by a score of 13-12.

Marne hoopsters edge out ITB cadre in final minutes of playoff bout

10th Field Artillery moves closer to winning post champion title

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Although only six players for each team showed, many of the fans were on the edge of their seats as Service Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, managed to hold the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry, Infantry Training Brigade team at bay for the last few minutes of Monday's post intramural basketball playoff game 58-56.

With a post season victory, 10th FA moved one step closer to the possibility of winning the title of post champion.

The game started with the teams trading baskets, neither team taking a commanding lead.

The whole first half was kept entirely within a five-point spread while both teams kept the fouls nearly out of the game.

Working the baseline to their advantage, 10th FA drove for a number of reverse lay-ups, while 50th Inf. used the fast break leading to unopposed lay-ups.

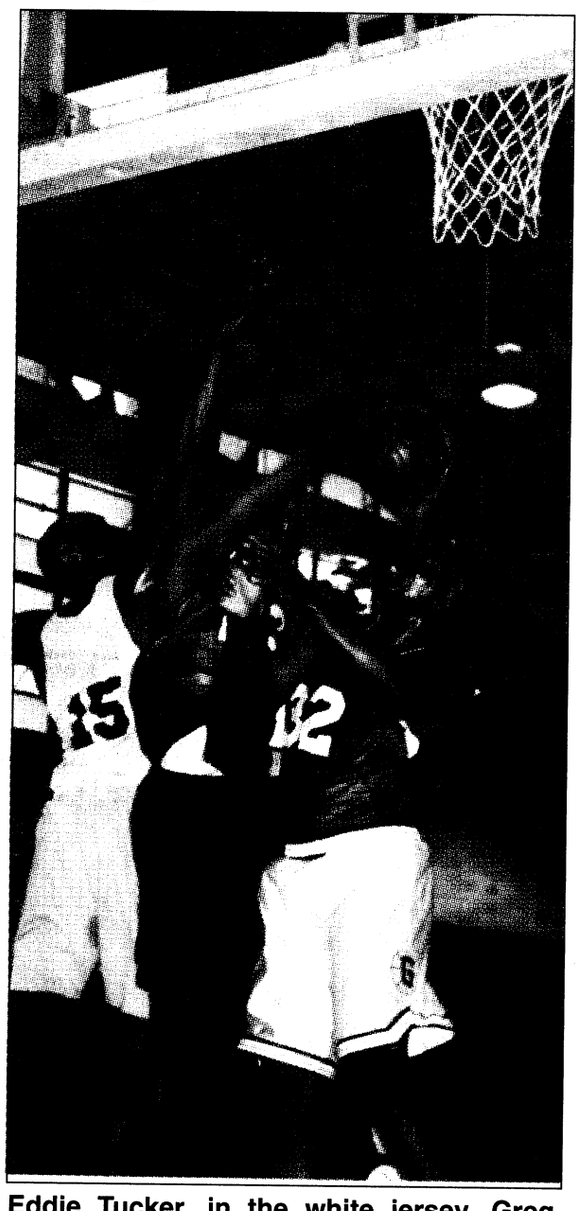
In a clean game, the first foul occurred a full 8 minutes into the game, where as many post games have a foul in the first minute of action.

The first half ended with the score tied at 30, and 10th FA forward, Larry McClelland, promised to turn up the heat and pull out the win.

Holding true to their promise, they did turn up the heat scoring 10 unanswered points, but too much heat can get you burned.

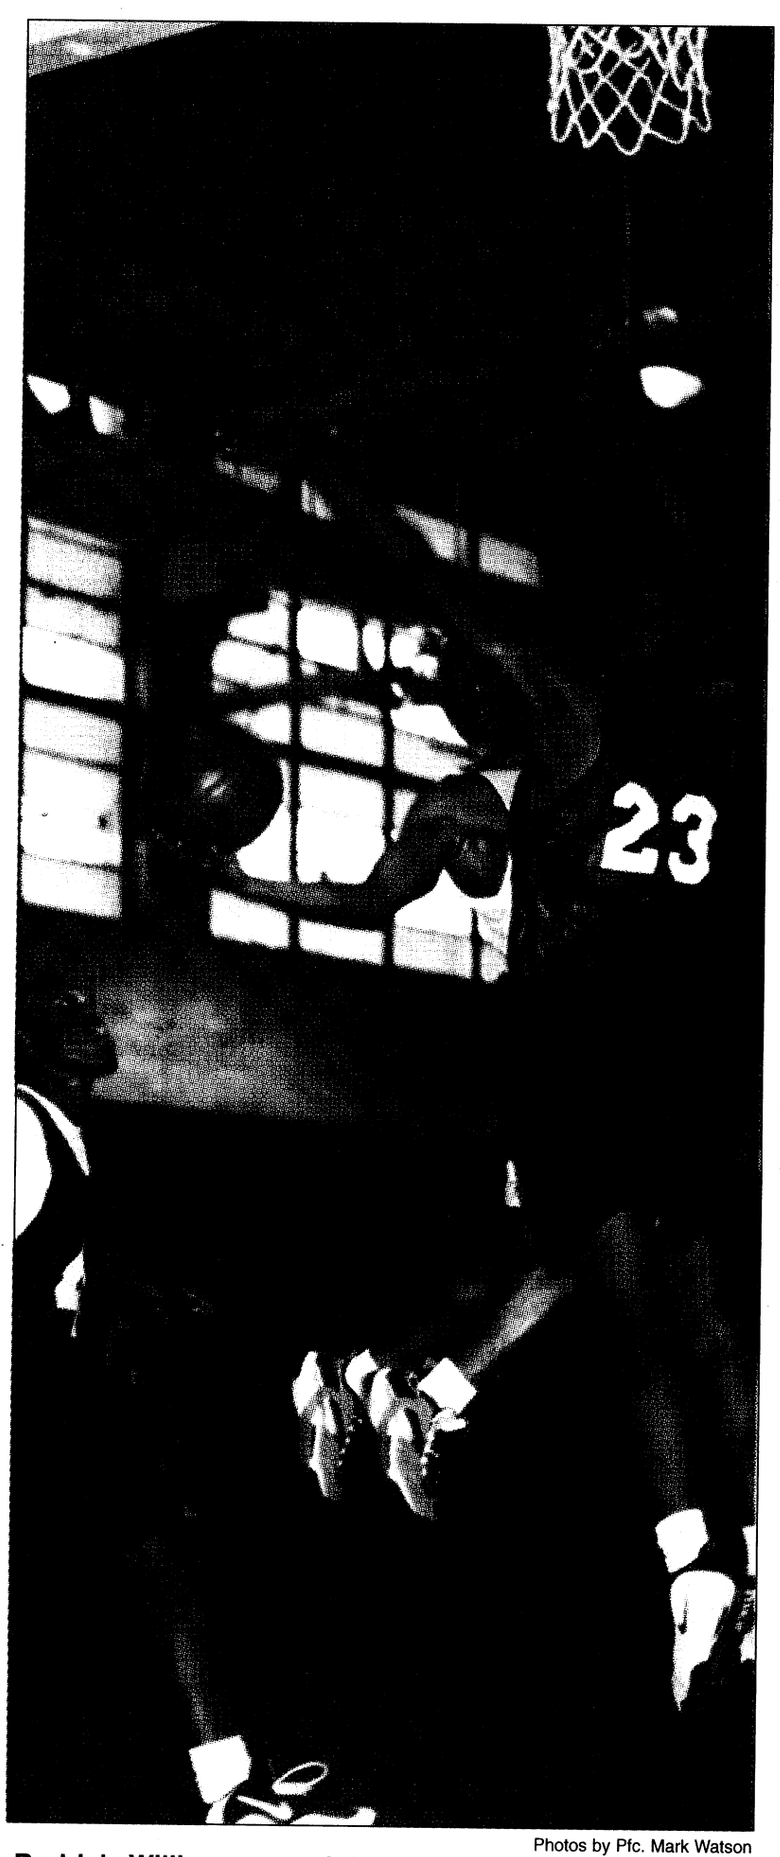
While trying to expand their lead by unsuccessfully attempting three-pointers, 50th Inf. began to chip away at 10th FA's defense while stealing the ball for several three-on-two drives that ended with an easy basket.

Taking the lead with five minutes remaining, 50th ITB held on to their 53 points while 10th FA loaded another round of high explosive action and re-gained the lead with only one minute remaining.



An untimely foul by the 10th FA brought Quanten Franklin, 50th Inf. guard to the line for a one-on-one attempt, with only seconds left on the clock.

Although unsuccessful in making the free-throw, 50th ITB re-took control of the ball and put up a last second desperation shot which did not fall as the game ending horn sounded.



"We played real hard," said Johnny Hair, 50th Inf. coach. "We just turned over the ball too many times and couldn't make out free throws. We'll be out ... again and will play strong."

"It is a game of wit," said Walter Battle, a 10th FA guard. "We wanted it more. We were more intense and even though we are tired, we won it for the entire artillery."

The post championship game will tip-off Monday at 7 p.m. in the Briant Wells Field House. The consolation game will begin at 6 p.m.

Shooters compete in match

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

More than 40 shooters competed in the April International Defensive Pistol Association match Saturday at English Range.

In preparation for the up-coming night shoots, shooters faced new challenges at the daylight competition.

Using IDPA paper targets and steel knock-down targets, shooters needed to shoot two stages in a series of double taps and single shots.

The shooters were required to to double tap the five paper targets and knock over the steel targets. To throw a kink into things, one of the paper targets could not be shot at until a steel target was knocked down activating a swinger revealing the target.

A smart shooter would shoot a small steel knock-down target before activating the swinger, or they had the possibility of not having a clear shot at the steel, said Jim Graham, assistant manager of English Range. Still many shooters were fooled by the trick.

In the stock service category of the shoot, Randall Banks won first with Johnathan Moore and Ricky Phifer Sr. trailing close behind.

In the enhanced service class, Frank Russo shot for the win with Moore and Tony Wisyanski shooting for second and third place.

In the custom service class, Moore placed first with Jim Crissman and Jeff Richardson trailed behind.

In the service revolver, back-up automatic and back-up revolver classes, Bruce Robinson took the win with Morris Lewark and David Tutherow trailing in the service revolver class and James Fleeman placing second in the back-up automatic class.

Instructor's impact packs powerful punch

Former Ranger teaches martial arts to children

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Felix Davila instructs 6-year-old Andrew Bogges.

In the world of martial arts, he is Fort Benning's equivalent to Mr. Miage. But when you are on his time there definitely isn't any "wax on, wax off " going on.

While Felix Davila isn't as small in stature as the karate wonder in the hit movie, he really isn't all that much bigger either. However, size has no bearing on the impact he has had on those he teaches, and it is apparent his influence packs quite a punch.

Davila's Tae Kwon Do teaching experience began eight years ago while serving at Fort Benning. He said he wanted to find a way to become more actively involved in his children's lives, so he decided to use his skills in Tae Kwon Do to teach the art to the community.

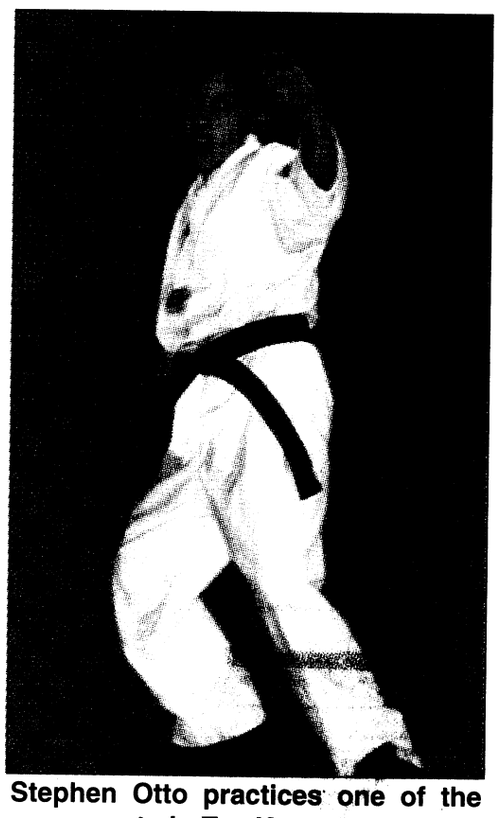
What started out as a class with five students quickly grew to more than 40, and it wasn't long before Davila was offered a contract from Youth Services. Now every week on Tuesday and Thursday nights, children and adults alike gather at YS to learn one of the oldest forms of martial arts from a teacher who is unlike any other.

For Davila, a 20-year-veteran of Tae Kwon Do and former Army Ranger, there is much more to the ancient art than just teaching kicks and punches. His students know a lesson with him is a work-out for the mind as well as the body.

"My main concern is to instill the values that this martial art has behind it," Davila said. "The five values I stress are courtesy, integrity, perseverance, self-control and indomitable spirit, which is a spirit no one can break."

Whereas the traditional approach to instructing a martial art is usually harder and straight forward, Davila said he considers himself a teacher and mentor first.

Doing good in school is a must, and periodically he makes the children bring in copies of their report cards to check up on their progress.



And while Davila teaches his students every level of the physical aspect of the sport, he said he emphasizes its use as strictly self-defense.

"One of the first things they learn is that just because they may have the physical ability to control someone or take someone down, that should not be the first approach rather the last resort," Davila said.

Recently, Davila got a special treat as he watched two of his students don the highest belt worn in Tae Kwon Do — the black belt. He said it was the first time since he's been teaching on Fort Benning that a student under the age of 18 was promoted to the level of black belt, let alone two.

He admitted that it is a great motivation for him to see his students reach that level. However, while it is motivation for him to see his students succeed, his students and their parents give him much of the credit for their success.

Mechel Christy, mother of 11-year-old Justin Christy, one of the black belt recipients, said she is extremely impressed with Davila and his teaching methods.

She said he teaches the children morals along with confidence and discipline.

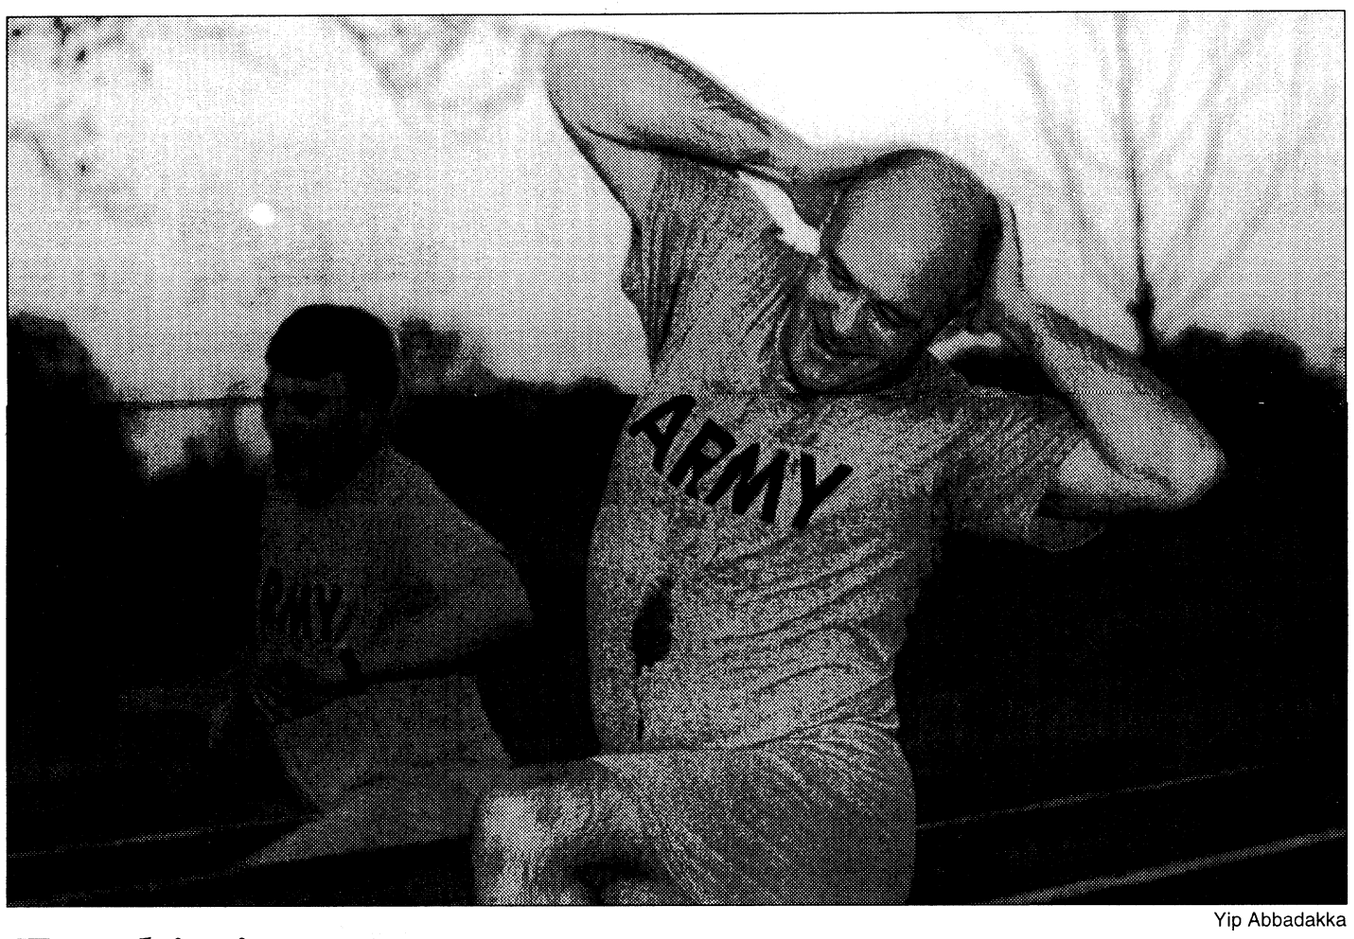
"He's wonderful with kids," Christy said. "I don't think my son would have been as interested in Tae Kwon Do if it hadn't been for him. He definitely played a part in Justin getting his black belt."

Justin, who has future goals of participating in the Junior Olympics, said Davila taught him to have more respect for others and also not to give up.

"He's a real nice teacher, he never yells at anyone and he's really fun to be around," the younger Christy said.

The other black belt recipient, 16-year-old Joe Cozart, said he considers Davila more like a friend and father figure than a teacher. He said Davila gave him the skills he needed and let him take it the rest of the way.

Working as a teacher at Youth Services is a nice break for Davila who works days as a martial arts instructor for area law enforcement. He said Tae Kwon Do keeps him not only in shape, but motivated and he hopes he will be practicing until he is 80 years old.



Davila encourages everyone to get involved in some form of martial art because of the level of fitness that comes from it.

"I stress that fitness needs to be added to family values," Davila said. "A well, fit family will always do better because they feel good about themselves, which keeps them more motivated to do things as a family."

Those who get involved in Tae Kwon Do almost always walk away with more than just the basic knowledge of the art, Davila said. Overall fitness and strength, confidence, discipline, respect, the ability to overcome obstacles, self-control, courtesy, integrity and perseverance are just a few.

"People who stick with this tend to stick with it for life," Davila said. "And that's why I like to push for this more than anything. I got into it as a child and left it for a while, but eventually I came right back for it."

Classes are Tuesday and Thursday with children beginning at 5:45 p.m. and adults starting at 6:45 p.m. Cost is $30 a month and everyone is welcome. For more information about the class or how to get involved, call 545-3070.

Toughin it

Lt. Col. Gary Daniels, commander, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and Capt. Dwight L. Pip negotiate the Toughnut Obstacle during the first Cycle-Cross competition hosted by the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment. The event required participants to tackle the Main Post obstacle course, complete a run and included a bike event.

AMU shooters take home recent wins

Paula J. Randall-Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories recently. The following results are some of their accomplishments:

• Alabama Sectional, Pleasant Grove, Ala., March 24-26 —USAMU action shooter Maxient J. Michel was the overall winner out of 192 competitors in this International Practical Shooting Confederation match.

Julie A. Goloski was the Women's Winner.

• Monthly Pistol Training Match, Fort Benning, March 25 — Service pistol shooter Gregory S. Wilson was the overall winner and took second place in the .22-Caliber and Center Fire Matches.

Adam E. Sokolowski won the .22-Caliber and Center Fire Matches in the Grand Aggregate.

Roger C. Jacobson finished third overall as well as third in the .22- and .45-Caliber and Center Fire Matches.

Jason A. Sargent won the .45-Caliber Match.

• Dixie Match, Jacksonville, Fla., March 17-19 — Service pistol shooter Thomas A. Rose finished second in the Excellence in Competition Match out of 127 competitors; Jacobson was third and Sokolowski finished fourth.

The USAMU team of Jacobson, Rose, Sokolowski and Sargent won the Service Pistol Team Match and came in third overall in the Grand Aggregate.

• Oak Ridge Monthly Match, Oak Ridge, Tenn., March 25 — Service rifle shooter Grant L. Singley was the winner of the match, followed by Lewis A. Tippie in second place and Tobie L. Tomlinson in third.

• 2000 Australian-Pacific Grand Prix, Queensland, Australia, March 11-18 — Shotgun shooter Shawn C. Dulohery won the Gold Medal in the Kemen Open Skeet Match March 18. He also took the Silver Medal in the Badge Skeet Match March 14 and the Bronze Medal in the Grand Prix Skeet Match March 16. Dulohery was also a member of the three-person USA Skeet Team that won the Gold Medal in the Skeet Team Event.

sports briefs

Faith sets race — The 21st annual Faith Spring Race will be held Saturday starting at Faith Middle School.

The event will feature a one, two and five-mile race and has more than 10 age divisions. Awards will be presented to the top three open divisions (male and female) of the five and two mile races, and to the top five (male and female) open division winners of each one-mile race. Medals will be given to the top three male and female finishers of each group in each race.

Pre-registration for participants 14 and younger is $5 and $7 for those 15 and older. Registration the day of the race will be $6 for those 14 and younger and $8 for 15 and older.

Maps of race courses are available at the Faith Middle School Physical Education Department. For more information or entry forms, call 545-5524 or 545-7793.

USAIS holds golf scramble — The U.S. Army Infantry School is holding a four-person golf scramble open to Soldiers and their guests at 1 p.m. April 14 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Deadline for sign-up is today.

For more information, call 545-5296.

NRMB sets traps — The Natural Resource Management Branch has set up traps in the wooded areas throughout the installation in an effort to eradicate the wild boar problem on post.

The traps are dangerous and people are asked to keep out of the areas where they are employed.

The traps are large, wooden boxes baited with corn.

For more information, call Pete Swiderek at 544-7077.

YS accepts applications — Youth Service is now taking applications for summer basketball coaches. Anyone interested in coaching should stop by Youth Services, Building 1056 or call 545-3070.

Georgia Parks offers annual pass — Outdoor enthusiasts can save money at any of Georgia's 48 state parks this year by buying an annual ParkPass. The pass is $25 and provides unlimited access to Georgia State Parks without paying the $2-$4 daily parking fee.

For an additional $10, visitors can join "Friends of Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites," which offers not only the annual pass, but also discounts in Friends-operated gift shops, free historic site admission, one free round of golf, volunteer opportunities and a newsletter.

For more information about the ParkPass program, call (404) 657-9851 or visit www.gastateparks.org. To join "Friends of Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites," call (800) 864-7275.

Chik-fil-A tournament pays tribute to armed forces — The Chik-fil-A Charity Championship hosted by Nancy Lopez, Georgia's only LPGA Tour event, will pay a special tribute to the Armed Forces April 30.

Anyone with a military identification card may present it at the tournament gates for free admission. In addition, the first 1,000 general admission fans through the gates will receive a complimentary golf cap embroidered with the United States flag.

The tournament benefits WinShape Homes, a long term foster care organization for the handicapped.

For more information, call (770) 474-4653.

Mothers receive free admission — Moms will receive free admission to the nationwide championship on Mother's Day May 14 where they will see Senior PGA Tour players vie for a $1.45 million purse in the 10th annual Nationwide Championship.

The tournament runs May 8-14 at the Golf Club of Georgia in Alpharetta, Ga.

Individual tickets to the tournament are available for $20 to $25 while package deals are available for $175 to 2,000. The seven day tournament benefits Children's Healthcare of Atlanta.

For more information, call (404) 303-0993.

Privilege Card available — The 2000 "Lung Card" offers golfers the opportunity to play on more than 600 of the finest courses in the Southeast including courses in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and the South Carolina Beach area.

The card holder has the opportunity to play one or more rounds of golf for free or reduced green fees on every course listed.

Some courses in the vicinity include Bull Creek, Callaway Gardens, Maple Ridge, Red Oak, Woodland and more.

The cost of the Golf Privilege Card is $25.00 each.

A special offer of buy three cards gets the fourth free.

For more information, call 569-1098.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school:

•Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.

•Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.

•Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

BANK AGREES TO LOANS FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH BAD CREDIT!

Columbus, GA. Milton Watts, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Including Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of a new or slightly used car, truck or van either for their family or a business venture. These are prime, in demand vehicles, that are either repossessed, overaged or a terminated lease situation.

Bankers will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expressway until the end of May. Best of all, cut rate financing will be offered to those whose credit would not normally meet such an arrangement at rates that banks usually reserve for their blue chip clients. Quoting Watts, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing.

"Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

Kevin Thompson, Representing the dealership, has arranged for special low payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the cash crunch at the holiday season.

In some cases these payments are ridiculously low. When pressed for an example, Thompson replied, "Well, here is a '95 Elantra 4 door #HS002. With $1 down payment to validate the transaction, your payments to be taken on would be $55 for 60 months at only 9.9% APR with a credit approval process that can take as little as 20 minutes. An incredibly low sale price of only $1,995. Adding only tax, tag, title and WRA make this payment arrangement possible. "Or, if a truck is your thing, then here is a '96 Toyota Tacoma #HS003. Again the $1 down to validate the deal and start making payments on a new bank contract of just $111.89 for 72 months at the same low 9.9% APR with credit approval that may be arranged while you wait. Again, the low monthly payment is possible because of the $5997 sale price adding only tax, tag and title.

This offer is for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle.

Hundreds of new Chevys including Silverados, Tahoes, Venture Vans, Blazers, Malibus and Impalas are included in this offer. Along with acres of used Chevys, Fords, Hondas, Jeeps, Acuras and Nissans.

Shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much the bank will advance you by calling Mr. Thompson or his assistant Mr. Stallings at

Burning reduces risk of wildfire

Jack Greenlee puts out the remains of a prescribed burn fire on Sand Hill April 6.

Prescribed burns protect natural habitat of endangered bird

Sally Shutt

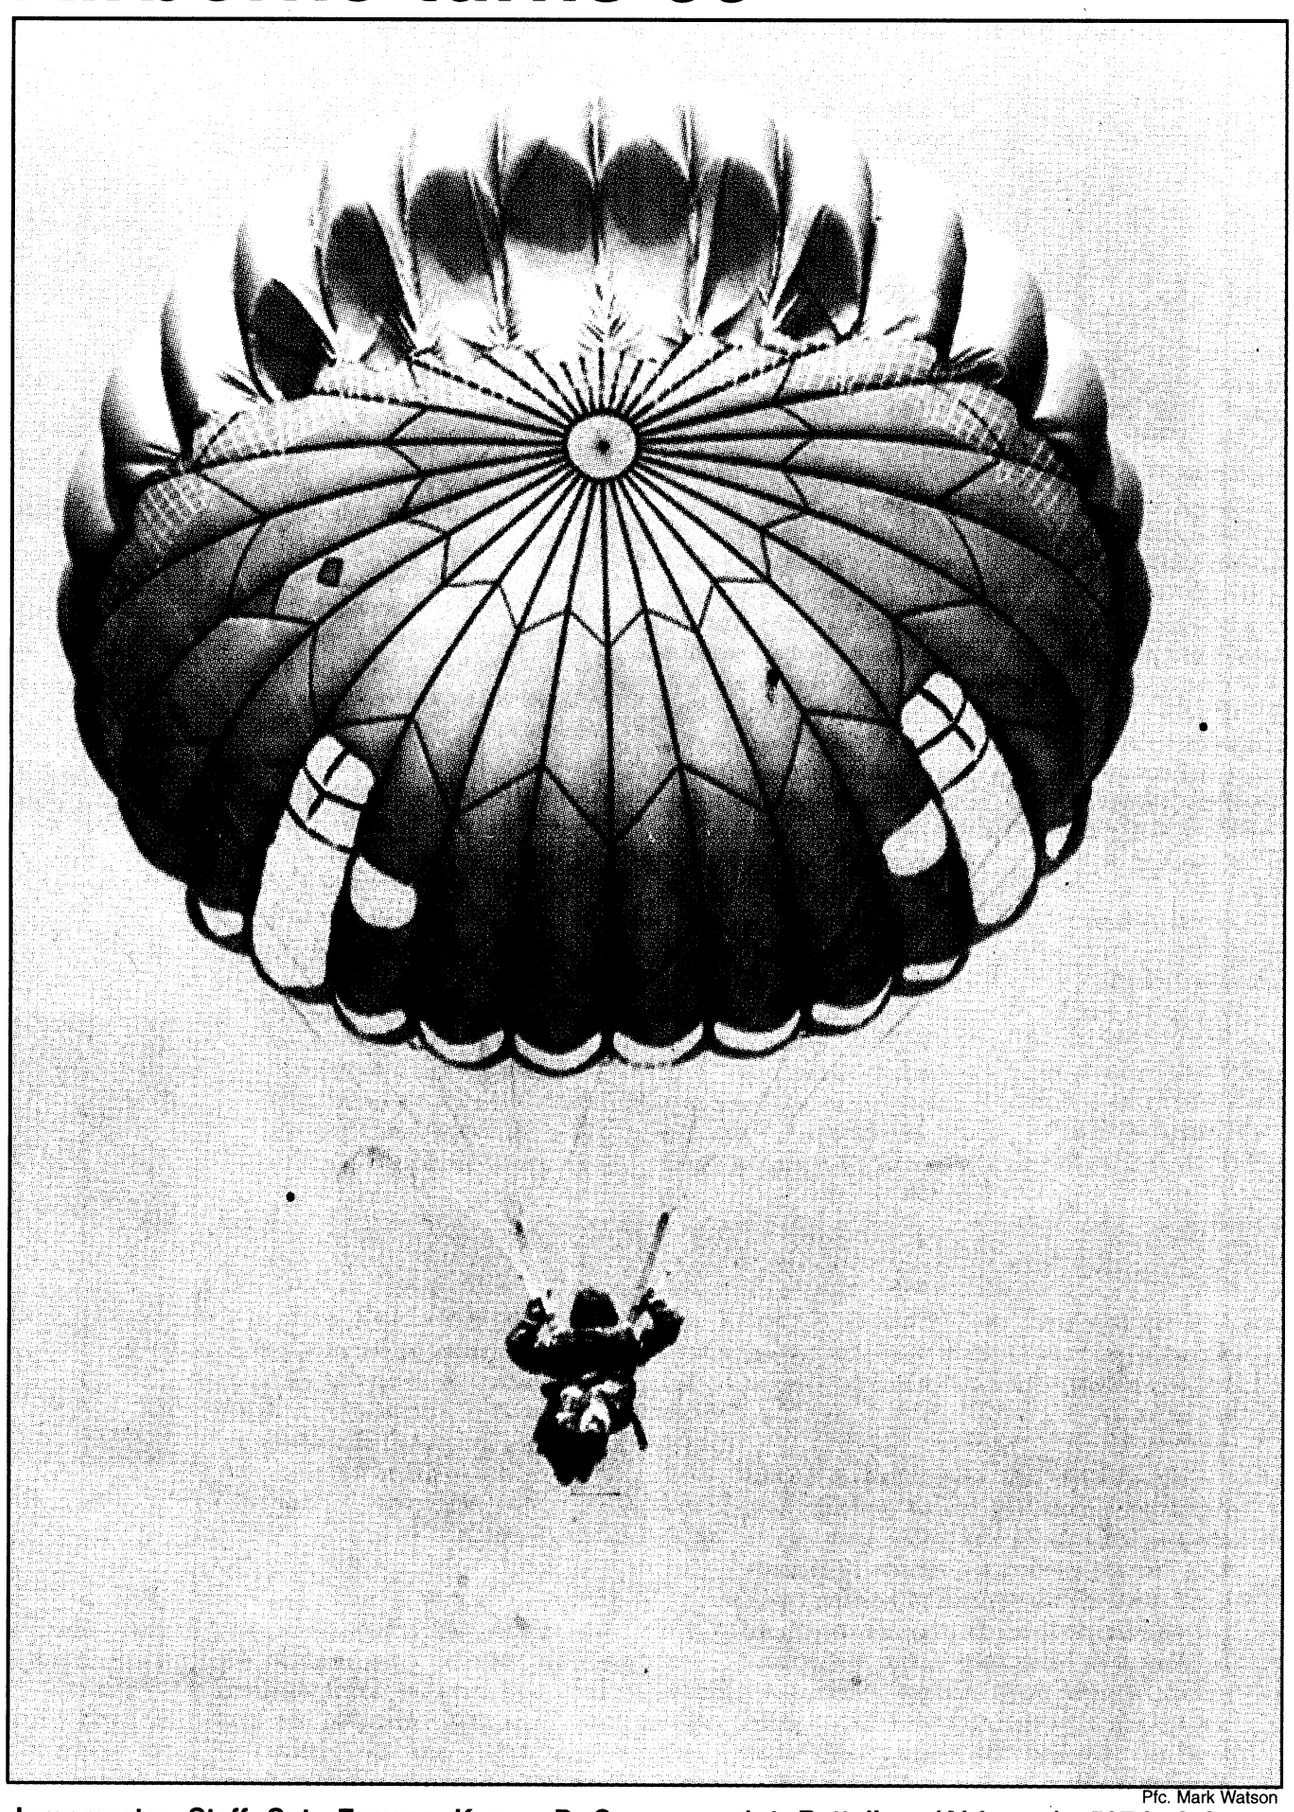
Smoke Hill was a more appropriate name for Sand Hill April 6.

Forestry technicians from the Land Management Branch and red-cockaded woodpecker technicians from the Conservation Branch burned 169 acres that day in the areas around the Infantry Training and Basic Combat Training Brigades.



The fires were started around noon and burned out by 4 p.m.

The prescribed burning is part of the post's ongoing Forestry Management Program designed to reduce the risk of wildfires and improve the health of the forest for wildlife in general — and the habitat of the red-cockaded woodpecker, which is on the federal government's endangered species list, in particular.

Dressed in bright yellow fire-protective gear and carrying drip torches, 10 prescribed burners set the blazes and then watched as the brush burned quickly throughout the five wooded areas on the day's schedule.

Generals meet Tuesday, focus on modernization

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

It's been several years since the former commandants of the Infantry School convened to discuss pertinent issues in the military, more specifically the Infantry.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne decided to reinstate these conferences this month with the Former Commandant's Conference from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday in Infantry Hall, Room 642.

The meeting's topic will be Army transformation, which includes heavy modernization, light modernization and Brigade Combat Team initiatives, said Lt. Col. John D'Agostino, who put together the agenda for the leaders' conference.

The agenda includes morning briefings by different directorates of the Infantry School, followed by an open discussion with Le Moyne in the afternoon.

Le Moyne scheduled the Former Commandant's Conference before the Infantry Conference, which is June 12-15, said Lt. Col. Don Sando, deputy chief of staff. "To discuss ongoing projects and get feedback," he said.

"The former commandants have years and years of experience. It's always good to share ideas," said Sando.

The conference intends to update these former commanders on current programs as well as provide a means to discuss current issues. "We're not just telling them things, we're seeking their input and counsel," said Sando.

Gen. John Hendrix, Forces Command, will join nine retired post commanders at the conference.

Patients benefit from well-rounded residents

Residency Program helps Martin Army care for patients

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

There are 26 residents in Martin Army Community Hospital's Family Practice Residency Program, but don't expect to find them serving only on the first floor of the big white hospital.

While the residents do work and train in the first-floor family practice clinic, they also treat patients all over the hospital, serving a rotation in every specialty Martin Army offers — from the OB ward to the ER and the allergy clinic.

"If there's a specialty, they have a rotation in it," Maj. Karen O'Brien, the program's director, said.

"They are the front line of care for this hospital, but they always have someone supervising them," O'Brien said.

Maj. Sarita Mobley, a Columbus native, is in her third year of training and will graduate in June. Mobley served in the Army for six years as a medical service corps officer. She left the military to attend medical school at Morehouse College in Atlanta.

Many patients don't realize that family practice is a specialty, but Mobley said she never once questioned her choice.

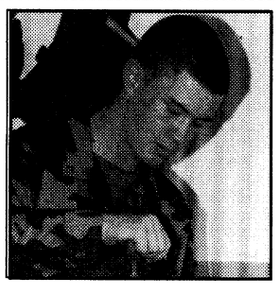
"This is the best program. There is nothing that can compare to it," she said.

"I think military residency programs, particularly family practice ones, are unique in the sense that you get to see a large variety of patients," Mobley said.

Her next assignment will be as a staff physician in a family practice clinic at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

"I like continuity of care and managing a variety of patients, from older patients to young ones. I also like dealing with women's health issues.

"In family practice, we say we follow the patients from cradle to the grave," she said.



William F. Schafer has been a patient at Martin Army for almost 40 years and enrolled in the Family Practice Residency Clinic when it started in the early 1970s.

"My wife signed us up the first year," he said. Schafer and other patients over the age of 65 who receive Medicare cannot enroll in Tricare Prime; however, a number of older patients are allowed to be seen at the clinic on a space-available basis in Survival skills, tips help lost

commentary

When it finally dawned on me that the woods were getting thicker and the trail wasn't going to magically appear beneath my feet it didn't take long for that sinking panic feeling to set in.

It had been an hour since my hiking partner Nicki and I had seen a clearly marked trail and we were getting a bit anxious.

What was supposed to be a relaxing hike on one of the trails at Pine Mountain quickly turned into an important lesson on how tricky nature can be if you are not prepared.

I will admit I have no idea how we got off the trail in the first place, but we did. I guess it's just one of those great mysteries of life.

All I know is one minute we were walking along a clearly marked blue-blazed trail and the next we were dumbly staring into an abyss of trees wondering which way to go.

At first we were both nonchalant and very optimistic. We figured we weren't far from the trail and we would find it soon enough.

Then after 45 minutes of walking up, up, up, through cobwebs and thorny bushes and getting slapped in the face by branches, it occurred to us that we had no clue where we were or where we were going.

This is the part where I have to sacrifice my pride by admitting that I have no navigational or directional skills whatsoever. I usually find my way by looking for landmarks, but considering fast-food restaurants and department stores aren't exactly a mainstay in the middle of the woods, I was definitely out of luck.

So, I pretty much left it up to Nicki to get us out of there. She didn't like that too much and quickly reminded me that I was the one in the Army.

Nicki remained relatively calm most of the time. Not even losing her dog for a half an hour or the big black snake we saw phased her too much. It wasn't until she got caught in a gigantic spiderweb and expended most of her energy screaming and thrashing around that it finally got to her.

After being lost for an hour and a half my mind began to whirl with the possibility of being lost for days, even weeks. I imagined eating bugs and sucking on leaves to stay alive. All it did was scare me more and I promised myself that once we got out I would buy a compass and a survival guide.

Well obviously we did get out because I wrote this commentary on our unfortunate mishap. By some act of divine intervention we eventually found a trail and made our way back.

Now I am here singing from the choir. I advise anyone who decides to go out in the woods to be prepared. My first and foremost recommendation is a compass and matches. Those two things could ultimately save your life. Fire is the key to survival.

The people at Adventure Sports Online also recommend always taking an extra sweater or jacket and a pocket poncho or large garbage bag for rain gear.

Some other tips they offer for those who lose their way is to stay put because someone should come looking. If no one knows where you are then it is best to follow a stream or river — people most often live near water sources. They also advise to stay warm, comfortable, hydrated and findable.

While these tips may seem simple and obvious, you would be surprised how easily forgotten they are. Believe me I know first hand.

Juggling act puts strain on family time

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

An artist took up residence at Faith Middle School last week. If you read last week's paper, you learned all about Mary Ann Hart, a professional mime, and her passion for the performing arts.

Watching her in action last week reminded me of my own childhood desire to perform. My art of choice was juggling. I used to watch the professional jugglers on the Bozo the Clown show. If you watch long enough it starts to look pretty easy. By the time the juggler had exited stage right, I was convinced I could do it myself.

Off I'd go to round up those little plastic bowling pins. I'd start by tossing one up in the air until I felt pretty comfortable. You know if you can't juggle one plastic bowling pin, you're headed nowhere under the big top. Feeling pretty confident, I'd add another. See, I knew I could do it.

Toss in pin number three. Oops. Try again. And again. And again. And — oh forget it. Gee, it really looked easy on television.

I'd put my dream on a shelf until Bozo invited another juggler to be his guest.

Things haven't changed all that much in the 30-something years since I failed as a performer. I'm still lousy at juggling. But I keep trying. And something always gets dropped, but it's no longer plastic toys that are hitting the floor.

I'm not all that different than moms and dads everywhere who are going through life juggling their most precious possessions, hoping nothing gets bruised in the attempt. I've even inflicted a few bruises myself. Like when I miss Thomas' ballgame because I'm across post at McKenzie's soccer game — ouch. Or when Jacob hits a double on Green Field, but I'm on Blue Field watching Brittney play soccer.

Perhaps I should have seen trouble ahead when we were in the thick of pre-season practices. Thomas would head for practice on his bike at 4:30 p.m. I would drop Brittney off at her practice at 5 o'clock, head across post to drop Jacob at 5:30 p.m., circle back to the soccer fields to drop McKenzie off at 6. By then it was time to return to pick up Brittney. Then Jacob. And so on. Throw in Wednesday night church and the occasional after-school activity and the picture starts to blur.

Whoever thought ball season could present so many conflicts for a family? I'm sure it was designed to play a strengthening role in the lives of kids and their families.

It's no surprise that middle school-age kids are dropping out of organized sports by the hundreds. My guess is that it may have something to do with the fact that they've been put in every seasonal sport going since they were old enough to wear cleats. And all too often Mom or Dad are not there to see them play, because Dad's in the field and Mom's watching over a younger sibling on another field. Who's there to pat them on the back when they do a good job, or give them a hug when they wish they could've done better? I'm sure this scenario isn't representative of all our Fort Benning families. I see so many of them juggling their lives successfully — poetry in motion. Performing art at its finest. But as for me and my house, I've learned my lesson.

My kids will be allowed to pick one sport each year. If they choose soccer, they can play a good pick-up game of baseball with the neighborhood kids when they have the desire. If they choose to play football, they can play soccer the following year.

I think unstructured time is important to the development of healthy children. That doesn't mean they'll veg in front of the TV. It means they'll have the chance to sit on the sidelines and cheer for their brother or sister. It means they'll have to use their imagination when there's nothing penciled on their schedule for the evening. It means they'll get to wear their inline skates again. Maybe Jacob will get to practice walking on his stilts. He used to enjoy that when he had more than 10 minutes between activities to devote to it.

Maybe Thomas will finally learn to ride that unicycle he got for Christmas two years ago.

Lots of maybes, but one thing is for sure, I'll have less stress and a lot more peace of mind. As a result, I'll be a better mother to my children.

Who knows, I might even join them in a game of basketball out on the driveway. Or maybe we'll gather up a few plastic bowling pins and form a family juggling act. We've had a lot of practice.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Soldier said that post gyms do not allow children under 12 to use the gym and he feels this policy should be changed as long as the children are accompanied by a responsible adult.

Directorate of Community Activities Response: The Soldier was informed that children 12 years and under are allowed in adult gym facilities with an adult. However, the adult must be participating in the activity (basketball or racquetball) with the child. Children 12 years and under are not allowed in weight room areas because weight-bearing equipment is designed for adults.

Call: Caller said since there is a post regulation prohibiting use of profanity and obscene language in any public area on the Fort Benning military reservation, this should also extend the use of such in housing areas. She said people living in quarters should not be allowed to bring their radios and stereos outside around small children playing loud music which is racist, sexist, obscene, vulgar or profane. She said this music carries labels prohibiting sale to minors and people should not be subjected to hearing this type of music that they don't even play in their own homes.

Garrison Commanders Office Response: USAIC Regulation 210-5, Aug. 6 1998, Chapter 4, Sec. III, para 4-5, states: "The use of obscene, vulgar or profane language in any public area on the Fort Benning military reservation is prohibited." Para 4-7 states: "Playing of radios and electronic sound devices ... which emits sound at a volume audible at a distance of 15 feet .... on any public street, public parking area or private driveway on the Fort Benning reservation is prohibited." The regulation also states that failure of residents of family quarters who fail to live in harmony with their neighbors and comply with policies will result in termination of quarters.

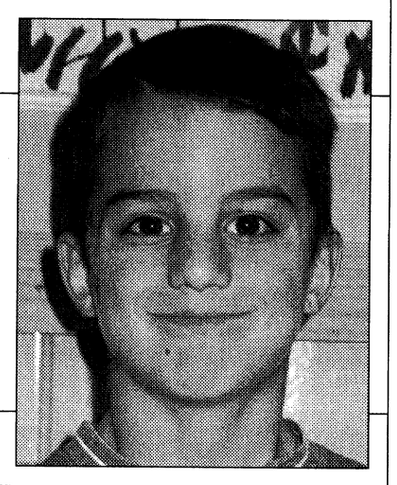
Call: The caller said school buses are speeding in their housing area at about 40 miles per hour and there are small children playing that are at risk. She said she has confronted one driver and has called the school. She said the driver slowed down for a while but has begun speeding again.



DPS Response: The caller was contacted and informed of enforcement efforts and results in her area with speeding school buses. She did indicate who the bus belonged to and promised to report back with a bus number. Law Enforcement Division will have traffic patrols out there earlier and she was assured that there is a zero tolerance for speeders on the installation.

Fire: Burns 169 acres on Sand Hill; protects woodpeckers

Prescribed burns usually require fewer technicians, but with the large number of training sites and other "assets" — buildings and landscaping — at Sand Hill, the branch wanted more people available to keep the fires under control, said Tommy Hutcherson, one of three "burn bosses" during the day.

In January, Jack Greenlee, supervisory forester, met with operations officers from ITB and BCTB and coordinated the plan to burn about 450 acres during the spring and summer in the Sand Hill area. The officers provided training schedules and maps of training sites.

The weather and wind direction made April 6 a great day for a prescribed burn, and a decision was made by Greenlee early that morning to proceed as planned, Hutcherson said.

The brigades were contacted to verify their training schedules.

"We didn't want to smoke out the military, and we didn't want to smoke out Columbus," Hutcherson said. Westerly winds kept the smoke out of Columbus.

"We want to keep the smoke out of Columbus because it is such a smoke-sensitive area," Hutcherson said.

The winds cooperated by not shifting, and the Community Relations Office, which usually handles complaint calls from the local area, did not receive any about the smoke.

The Garrison Commander's office issued a safety alert in March about the smoke hazard resulting from the prescribed burns. Individuals with asthma, allergies, heart disease or women who are pregnant should avoid smoky areas and remain indoors as much as possible while smoke is present.

Prescribed burning is common on post from January through August, with between 25,000 and 30,000 acres burned each year. Areas throughout the post are burned on a three-year rotation, and all burning is done in accordance with prescribed weather parameters, Greenlee said.

Walking through a newly blackened wooded area beside Winder Clinic and the Sand Hill Post Office, Greenlee said, "In three weeks this will all be greened up and look like new."

Diamond-shaped signs with the endangered woodpecker's picture were posted on several trees in the burned section, designating a 200-foot buffer area around a woodpecker cluster of four cavities and the surrounding area where the birds forage.

"The woodpeckers live in family groups," Michael Barron, wildlife biologist, Conservation Branch, said. Barron coordinates all red-cockaded woodpecker projects on post.

There are more than 300 clusters on Fort Benning, and only two types of military training are allowed in a cluster area — foot traffic and the firing of blank rounds, Barron said.

Each bird has its own cavity, and white bands are painted on the pine trees that have the holes, which are usually 2 inches in diameter.

Because it can take a bird up to a year to complete a cavity on its own, the environmentalists are giving them what Greenlee calls "government housing."

A prescribed burn protects the habitat of the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker.

trees, providing the birds with a ready-made home.

"We are creating new opportunities for the birds to colonize on their own," Barron said. So far, 16 "recruiting sites" have been installed — proving that BDU-wearing recruits aren't the only ones being sought to live on post.

In order for the bird to be removed from the endangered species list, 15 populations in the southeast must expand, Barron said, and Fort Benning has been designated as one of the "recovery populations." The goal is to increase from the more than 300 clusters already here to 450.

In the meantime, prescribed burning will continue to contribute to the effort.

This year, about 100 clusters are in areas where the burning will take place, Barron said.

Program: Helps doctors gain medical experience, knowledge order to give the doctors a wide-ranging patient base.

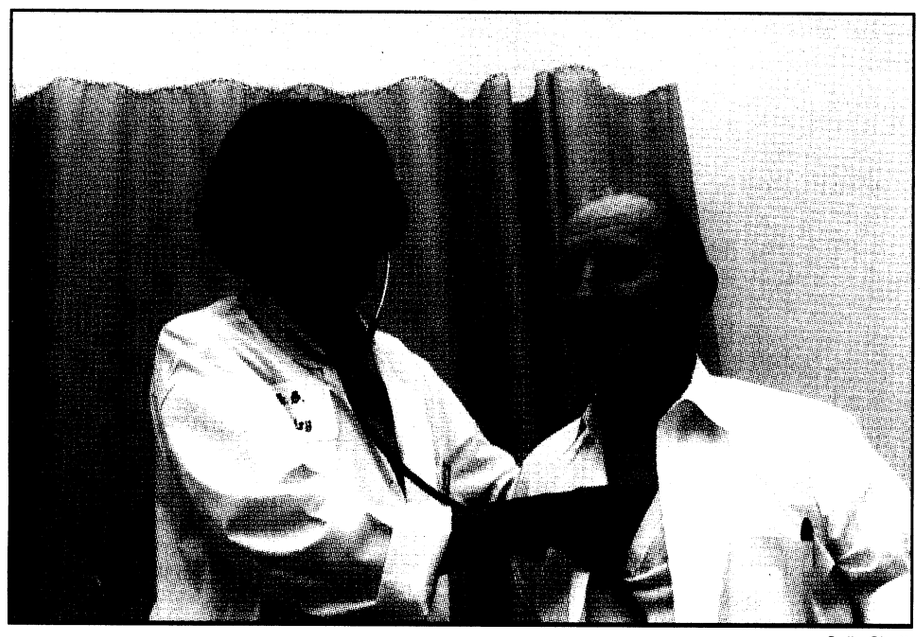
"We do provide care for some Medicare patients," O'Brien said. "In a lot of military facilities, these patients would all be forced to go downtown, but because we want our residents to have exposure to patients of all ages, some are allowed to be seen here."

Schafer interjected that he and his wife have supplemental insurance, in addition to Medicare.



"We could go anywhere we wanted to for medical care, but we prefer to come here, because they are here. These doctors come here fresh from school with the latest medical training," he said.

Joyce Weekley and her husband, William, have been patients in the clinic since 1973, and she is thrilled with the care they have received from Capt. Mario Caycedo, a second-year resident.

"My husband doesn't like doctors, but Dr. Caycedo was able to convince him to undergo a physical," she said. "He even calls us at home and has developed a relationship with us."

Margie Anderson had not been to a doctor in 40 years. That was until she met Capt. Carlos Wise. He changed her mind.

Wise, a third-year resident, cared for Anderson's husband who suffered from heart failure.

Sally Shutt

Maj. Sarita Mobley, a third-year resident, listens to William Schafer's heart during an exam at the Family Practice Clinic.

"He did everything he could to save him," Anderson said. "Dr. Wise is a wonderful doctor."

The Family Practice Residency Program was founded in 1972, the first of six established in the Army and the only residency program at Martin Army, O'Brien said.

As of 1999, there have been 199 graduates, all of whom have passed the American Board of Family Practice Certification Exam. O'Brien graduated from the program in 1996.

O'Brien is proud of the program and cites the fact that in October it received a five-year accreditation from the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education, which reviews all military and civilian residency programs in the country.

> "We could go anywhere we wanted for medical care, but we prefer to come here because they are here."
> — William Schafer
> Family Practice patient

"The average accreditation nationally is 3.6 years," she said. "Less than 5 percent of residencies get a five-year accreditation."

This is the third consecutive five-year accreditation for Martin Army's program.

"Which is pretty much unheard of," O'Brien said. The doctor gave much credit to Lt. Col. Jeffrey Rifkin, the previous residency director who helped the program prepare for the accreditation process and site visit last spring. He was killed in May 1999 in a car accident.

Nine physicians serve on the teaching staff. Half of the residents were trained at civilian medical schools; the other half at the Uniform Services University of the Health Sciences in Bethesda, Md.

In order to graduate from the program, the residents must obtain medical licenses either from the state of Georgia or from the state listed as their home of record. Most residents already hold licenses in Georgia, O'Brien said.

In addition to the accreditation, Martin Army's program is also known as a top research program.

Last year the residents and teaching staff made five national presentations and were published four times. Already this year, they have made three presentations and been published once.

If attending classes, conducting research and treating patients weren't enough, the residents are also active in community service.

They conduct a tobacco education program in the Fort Benning Schools each fall, and throughout the year offer smoking cessation and advanced directives classes.

"These are all resident-run and were initiated by residents," O'Brien said.

For more information on the classes, call 544-3065.

MPs honor unsung hero

Conference room named after clerk

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Lt. Col. Donald Salo never met Leroy Johnson, who died unexpectedly at age 61 Nov. 29 — Salo's first day on the job as commander of the Military Police Activity and director of Public Safety.

"But I've heard about him every day since then," Salo said Friday morning during a ceremony honoring Johnson, a civilian blotter clerk for 10 years with the activity.

An overflow crowd attended the ceremony in the Directorate of Public Safety's newly renovated Johnson Conference Room — named for the man known around the MP station as "Mr. J."

"Mr. Johnson gave 10 years of his life to this organization. He was a role model and mentor to the Soldiers and civilians," Salo said.

Automation, or blotter clerks take written incident reports prepared by MPs; edit for spelling and grammar, then enter the information into the automated blotter system.

"Blotter clerks are our unsung heroes. They are people we count on to be here all the time," Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement, said.

"Mr. J. was a light to the Provost Marshal's office. The way he said things would just lift you up, and his passing created a void we haven't been able to fill."

"He was crusty on the outside, but he had a heart of gold," Maj. Samuel Mosteller, the executive officer for the MP activity, said.

Mosteller recalled how Johnson would voluntarily work shifts late at night so other clerks with small children could go home.

Over the years Johnson — a computer specialist who served 28 years in the Air Force, including a tour in Vietnam — trained Jonna LeBlanc, Becky Kilgore and other clerks on the Offense Reporting System, the automated blotter system used on post.

"He would make sure we were doing OK and keep us informed about rules and regulations," Kilgore said of the man credited with working out many of the "bugs" in the system.

"We miss him a lot. You can walk in and feel him not here. There's a part of the building that's missing," LeBlanc said.

Johnson's widow, Ernestine, and their two daughters, Teresa and Charlene, attended the ceremony.

"His job was his whole life," said daughter Maj. Teresa Johnson, a reservist with the 81st Regional Support Command, in Birmingham, Ala.

"He would be very proud and so honored that his co-workers thought so much of him," Charlene Johnson, an educator from Chicago, said of her father.

Their brother, Capt. Charles Johnson, was unable to attend the ceremony honoring his father because the Army officer is in special training at Quantico, Va., his mother said.

The conference room had not changed since Salo was a first lieutenant assigned to the MP activity back in the 1980s, and the commander wanted to dress up the room and have it reflect the whole DPS organization. He chose pictures to hang on the freshly painted walls that reflect the history of both the police and fire agencies on post. Representatives from branches of the directorate were on hand.

"Mr. Johnson dedicated his life to selfless service, and I think it is fitting that we dedicate this room to him," Salo said.

During the ceremony, Ernestine Johnson pinned an Army Achievement Medal on Spc. Keith Kuhn. He was given the medal for his work in refurbishing the room.

Officer Candidate School inducts first woman into Hall of Fame

Lessons learned from OCS instrumental for colonel's success

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

"That's cool."

Or at least that is how Col. Rose Walker said her two young children described her being the first woman inducted into the elite Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame.

While the induction Friday may only be "cool" to her 8- and 6-year-old sons, it marked a first for the school's honorary club as Walker earned her place as the first woman inducted into an elite group of who's who of OCS alumni.

"This is an honor," Walker said after the ceremony. "But there is nothing different about me from the rest of the inductees. A Soldier is a Soldier whether he is a man or a woman."

The now colonel said she first learned her lesson in gender equity in 1979 before graduating the school and has relied on that lesson ever since.

"We were on our way back from a field exercise, and all I could think about was being tired," she recalled. "It was hot, and I was surrounded by about 10 men in the back of a deuce and a half (truck).

"I looked at the Soldier next to me and hoping for sympathy, I said, 'I am tired of trying to be a man.' He replied, 'So am I.'"

While the lesson she learned came at a cost of humility for Walker, she said she believes it is what has brought her back to the school for the honor.

"I have never really had rank as a goal," she said. "I have just always treated people equal and with the respect that they deserve.

> "I've never had rank as a goal ... I guess that's the secret to my success."
> — Col. Rose Walker
> First woman inductee
> Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame

"I guess that is my secret to success," she said.

While her founding morals and lessons learned have guided the wife and mother of two this far in her career, she said she has no plans for what is to come in the future for her military career.

"I have some projects I would like to finish up in the next few months, but I am just tackling one project at a time," she said. "I guess you could say my only real long-term project is what I try to do on a daily basis and that is taking care of troops."

Walker, who is presently the brigade commander for 1st Personnel Command, U.S. Army Europe, will pave the way for additional female inductees into the school's elite honor club.

"The first class of females to graduate from OCS at Fort Benning was in '77," said Maj. Bill Ramsey, OCS executive officer and hall of fame project officer. "So (Walker) is the first of many distinguished female officers to be inducted into the hall of fame."

Walker's induction makes her part of special sect of OCS grads that includes 38 medal of honor recipients, five federal judges, more than 200 general officers, and former Sen. Bob Dole.

Navy officer lends hand on Russ Pond project

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Navy officer is working hand-in-hand with Fort Benning's 36th Engineer Group to add the finishing touches to the Russ Pond renovations before he has to "jump ship" and return to the Navy.

As a civil engineer in the designs management section of the 36th Engineer Group, Lt. Joe Zurzolo — Lt. Z to his friends —says "the Navy is telling me I've been away long enough."

Zurzolo is one of four officers from the Navy Civil Engineer Corp who have been assigned to Army and Air Force installations as a part of an exchange program designed to promote knowledge and cooperation among the services. The program began in 1996, and Zurzolo is the second Naval officer to work with the 36th engineers.

"There are different focuses in the various services, even in the engineering communities," Zurzolo said. "They all have different methods and different procedures. We can all benefit from understanding them.

"You never know when or where we'll be working side by side. With this exchange, we're able to integrate information, learn from each other, and work together a little better and faster."

As a registered professional engineer, Zurzolo's job is to design plans for various construction projects. Besides the second phase of the Russ Pond renovation, Zurzolo has also assisted in the Malone Range upgrades and repairs, and the construction of a medical clinic in Nicaragua during the 1998 Hurricane Mitch disaster relief campaign. He is currently working with the 18th Airborne Corps to design a C-17 contingency runway at Fort Campbell, Ky.

"The Navy has provided me such a depth of experience. I'm certain I've had significantly more experience than my peers who attended civilian schools and went into the engineering field," Zurzolo said. "In the Navy, and especially in this exchange program, I've had an enormous amount of training in the planning, supervising and execution of a large variety of projects."

Capt. Ken Law, who works with Zurzolo in the designs management section, said Zurzolo's Naval training has enhanced the 36th Engineer's program.

"When a Navy officer gets slotted as a civil engineer, that's all he does. It becomes his specialty," Law said. "So he knows his job extremely well. The bottom line is, he has brought a lot of expertise to the shop."

Zurzolo first entered the service as a Marine in 1985. He was commissioned with the Navy after graduating from the Naval Academy in 1992. After a tour as a construction officer in Puerto Rico, Zurzolo and his wife Karen moved to Columbus in October 1998.

"Marines, Navy, Army — all I've got to do is hit the Air Force and I'll have covered it all," Zurzolo joked.

Zurzolo said working with the Army engineers is different than he anticipated.

"The backgrounds of Army engineers are much more diverse than the Navy, where all civil engineer corps officers are either engineers or architects. That's not an iron-clad prerequisite in the Army," he said. "Here, where the focus is on construction and combat, we have several different college majors."

Zurzolo, an Ohio native, said he and his wife will miss Fort Benning and Columbus when his tour ends in October.

"We live in Columbus — what a great town. We've enjoyed it. We had season tickets to the Springer and we like to attend RedStixx games," he said. "We've really had a nice time here."

Basic students excel during tactical exercises

Former NCOs add experience to training

2nd Lt. Steele McGonegal
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The three classic commands of the Infantry — run, jump and kill — took on a more immediate meaning for the officers of Infantry Officer Basic Course Class 2-00 recently as they put them to use at Garnsey Range's Situational Tactical Exercise lanes.

The training included such tasks as "Knock Out a Bunker," "Breach a Mined Wire Obstacle" and "Secure a Foothold in a Trenchline." Each event involved individual, collective and leader tasks that were performed by squad members and the appointed squad leader.

For 2nd Lt. Mike Tang, the training was his first at Garnsey. The focus of "Actions on the Objective" versus the entire operations planning stood out as a benefit to Tang.

"The cadre were hands-off during the event," he said. "Allowing us the autonomy to make our own decisions and display our leadership abilities on the battlefield.

"We had a good time, mainly because we had a good team (squad) to work with," he added.

Tang's squad contains four lieutenants 30 years or older, each of whom were former staff sergeants. The STX allowed the experienced Soldiers to rehearse and perform some fairly common training.

2nd Lt. Jason Lewis, a recent graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, acted as squad leader for the event "Knock Out a Bunker." He said his team worked well together.

"The participation and integration of our international student, Capt. Mohammed El-Fiki of Egypt, demonstrated that while differences in the military structure and organization exist, swiftness and violence of action on the objective are key to all armies," said Lewis.

"The good thing was that they used doctrine as a base and allowed us to add technique to improve your understanding as a leader of a changing battlefield environment," added Staff Sgt. Robert Gully, cadre member. "You cannot predict what will happen in combat, but you can have a baseline of knowledge that allows for flexibility that is technique."

Gully knows about changing battlefield environments because prior to attending OCS, he participated in Operation Joint Forge and Endeavor. He is also Airborne, Air Assault, Ranger and Special Forces qualified, most recently with the 10th Special Forces Group.

Class 2-00 has a lot of experience to rely on between the seven Rangers, three Special Forces group members and more former NCO's than can be counted quickly. This has allowed for a superior pool of experience to solve each problem put to them.

Challenges fill officer course

OCS training covers multitude of Soldier skills

Officer Candidate Deandre L. Garner
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

If you have heard the beat of a bass drum rolling along the streets of main post near Infantry Hall it's the Officer Candidate School marching to classes.

Class 2-00 of A Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS), is nearing the end of the 14-week course, which is divided into three phases: Basic, Intermediate, and Senior phase.

Class 2-00 recently concluded its Basic phase recently with a field leadership exercise, day and night land navigation tests and an inspection by Capt. Ronnie Preston, A Company commander.

"They have worked through some tough challenges," said Preston. "This class has earned Intermediate Status."

Physical fitness is also paramount at OCS, and the program is very intense. For instance, in one day, in addition to regular PT, the class completed the Combat Water Survival Test and a Conditioning Obstacle Course.

The obstacle course was challenging, said Officer Candidate Calvin Simpson. "I really think it had to be a test of coordination and endurance. I was tired after going through the course a couple of times," he said.

As in most Army schools, there are always plenty of push-ups, flutter kicks, and running.

Previous OCS graduates 2nd Lt. Doug Taylor and 2nd Lt. Charles McGarry also introduced the class to combatives and an excruciating exercise known as the "sun god."

The class has experienced more than just physical challenges. Officer candidates are put in charge of the company with the student chain of command performing day-to-day operations.

The cadre are there to teach, assess, and counsel the student leaders.

"Everything at OCS is a training event," explained Capt. Eric Shwedo, senior TAC officer.

Officer candidates have had written examinations on Army operations, tactics, and military intelligence.

There is also a wide variety of other information and knowledge the candidates are responsible for on a daily basis, including a daily operation order information.

"It's a good idea to make people memorize things because it forces them to pay attention to details and not overlook the small things. As leaders, we need to not only pay attention to the big picture, but focus in on small individual tasks," said Officer Candidate David Sandoval.

The Basic Phase culminated with Field Leadership Exercise One and the land navigation practical exam at Yankee Road.

"That has got to be the most challenging course I've ever negotiated in my 16 years in the military," Simpson said.

The anxiety of walking in the woods in the dark posed a problem for some, but besides a few bumps and scratches, the class completed the course successfully.

While completing tasks required during the Officer Basic Course provides its own rewards, the candidates are now looking forward to the final reward — a gold bar.

Nutrient system could make changes to Soldiers' mealtime routine

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. combat troops may get part of their daily diet through their arms if a new concept works out.

Army Soldier Center researchers in Natick, Mass., are working on a transdermal nutrient delivery system — a skin patch similar in concept to nicotine and motion sickness patches. The new system could be a part of every combat service member's kit by 2025.

Gerald Darsch, joint project director for the DoD Combat Feeding Program at Natick, said the current developmental version is about the size of a conventional adhesive bandage and three to four times thicker. The final version will be encased in some polymer to be very flexible, he speculated.

"Service members probably won't even notice they have it on," he noted.

The patches would contain "micronutrient" reservoirs and microscopic "pumps" and "plumbing." The nutrients would augment or supplement a warfighter's diet during periods of high-intensity conflict. Officials see a use for the system to combat cold weather and high altitude stress, for instance.

"The idea is to keep the warfighter's cognitive and physical performance sharpened at the optimal level," Darsch said. "It could mean fewer dead or wounded U.S. service members."

Darsch said the system could incorporate various micronutrients.

Researchers, he said, are considering 65 to 70 chemicals that might be effective and safe.

Two candidates, for example, are tyrsone, which has been proven to help combat cold and high altitude stress, and glutathione, which could help reduce muscle fatigue and increase the ability of the liver and kidneys to filter out metabolic wastes.

"We have identified some that might be beneficial, but there still needs to be a lot of research done. What are the doses that we should administer? What are the lasting effects?" he asked. "We need to be sure before we start giving these to warfighters."

The system would dispense micronutrients when a self-contained near-infrared sensor determines the wearer needs them. The chemicals would be absorbed by osmosis through the skin.

Even using the transdermal patch, though, service members will still be hungry because the patches won't replace food.

"You can still eat even with the transdermal system," Darsch said. "Am I going to tell you that a Milky Way or a Snickers bar still won't find its way into the rucksack of a Soldier? Our service members are pretty bright. They'll take whatever pogey bait is necessary."

Darsch said researchers could probably add an appetite suppressant or something that will make the hypothalamus think the stomach is full.

He said the Army has spent just "thousands" on the concept. If accepted, he thinks a "50 percent solution" to the engineering of the transdermal patch system is possible by 2010.

Helicopter battalion earns prestigious award for safety

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

FORT RUCKER, Ala. — The U.S. Army School of the Americas' Helicopter School Battalion (HSB) was awarded the Order of Daedalians, Lieutenant General Allen M. Burdett, Jr., Army Aviation Flight Safety Award during a ceremony held at the Soldier Service Center, March 20.

According to Lt. Col. Daniel Barreto, commander, HSB, the Daedalian trophy and award is presented annually to the Army aviation training unit judged by the commanding general of the Training and Doctrine Command to have the most effective aircraft accident prevention program. The award was first presented in 1970.

Since 1991, the mission of the Helicopter School Battalion has been to provide initial and advanced helicopter flight training in all phases and modes of flight, and to provide helicopter maintenance and maintenance management instruction to Latin American mechanics, logisticians, and aviators. All of the training conducted by the HSB is done in Spanish. Additionally, the HSB trains and assists Latin America in the development of doctrinally sound, cost effective, aviation standardization, safety, command and control and maintenance programs by means of non-flying courses. This training is especially important to the conduct of counternarcotics and disaster relief operations in Latin America

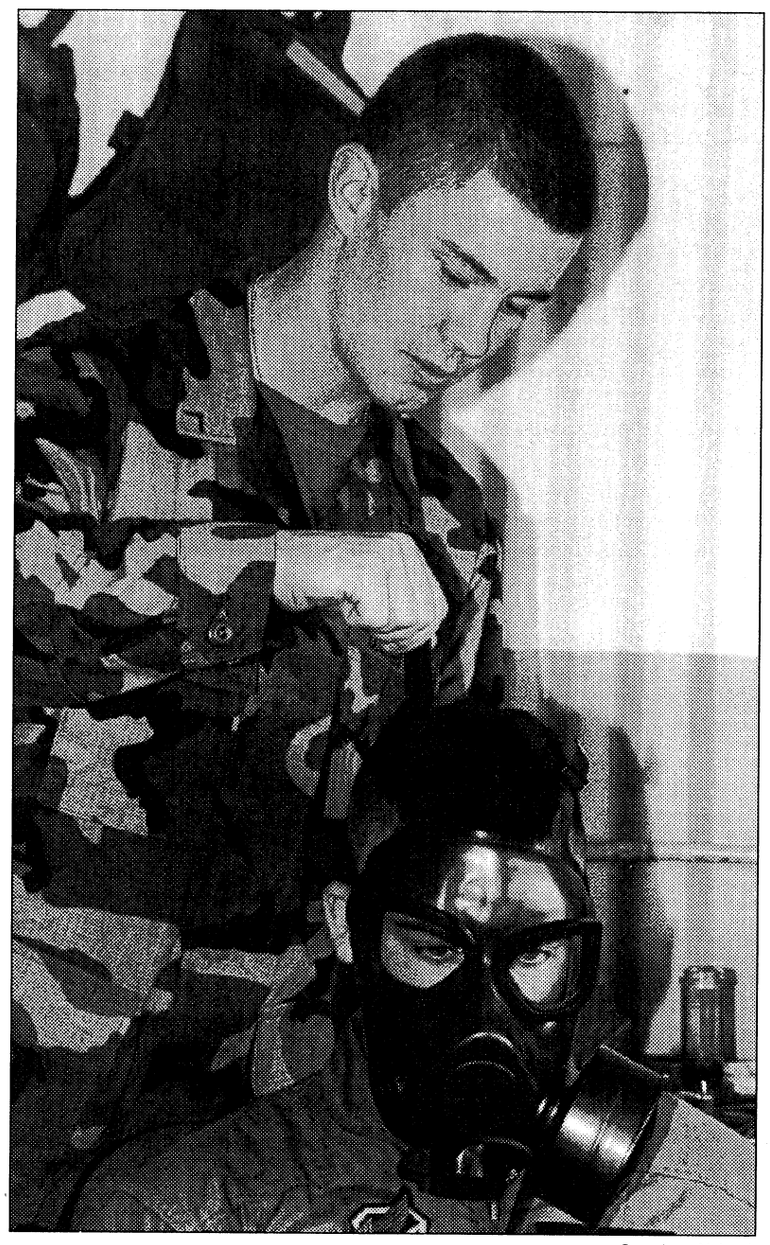
Barreto said that in Fiscal Year 1999, the instructors of the HSB taught 165 aviators from eight Latin American countries in 14 separate programs of Instruction. The students trained were not only from foreign armies and air forces, but also from national police forces and other agencies to include, for the first time, the Mexican Navy.

"The HSB has trained students from Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela," he said. "More than 1,800 students have graduated from the battalion's flight, maintenance, and safety courses."

Barreto added that during FY 99, the HSB accumulated 4,357 hours of flight in both the UH-1 and UH-60 helicopters, without a Class A, B, C, or D mishap.

He also said that since July 1992, the battalion has accumulated in excess of 26,500 accident free flight hours. Not only are the flight and on-duty records of the battalion exemplary, but so is its off-duty performance of no recordable Class C accidents resulting in loss of resources or duty time.

"The HSB has a truly extraordinary safety record in light of its unique and challenging mission," said Barreto. "Our safety record is based on both perceived and actual risk factors. The HSB must, because of its mission, contend with a host of real as well as potential risk factors in order to accomplish the goal of training foreign students in a foreign language. The manner in which this unit manages the risk has produced our extraordinary safety performance record."



In addition to promoting the tenets of safety, Barreto said it was within their charter to share the knowledge, teach the principles of safety, and spread a high degree of safety consciousness throughout Latin America.

"For this reason, the HSB developed and implemented the first safety management course in Spanish," he said. "It provides our students with a foundation upon which they can build their respective safety programs within their countries."

The course covers subjects such as safety program management, duties and responsibilities of an aviation safety officer, accident prevention, human factors in aviation, and aircraft mishap investigation and reporting.

"We also provide safety assistance teams to our neighbor nations," said Barreto. "Subject matter experts and Mobile Training Teams are deployed to Latin America where they provide the host nation with on-site evaluations, training and recommendations to bolster their operational programs."

Maj. Gen. Anthony Jones, Commanding General, Fort Rucker, presented the prestigious award to Barreto and Chief Warrant Officer Tony Quinones, Battalion Safety Officer.

498th Medical Co. tries new masks

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

When people think of gas masks, the word "comfortable" probably isn't the first thing that comes to mind.

However, for the Soldiers of the 498th Medical Company, 36th Engineer Group, a new and improved gas mask is now a reality.

Three weeks ago the company received 75 M45 masks that replace the M24, M43 Type II and the M49 aviator's mask. The M45 is the only authorized mask for aircrewman.

Just about the entire mask is different, said Pvt. Jason Taylor, NBC specialist for the 498th.

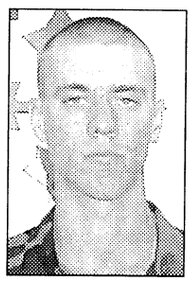
"The number one thing about the mask is its comfort," Taylor said. "That is probably it's greatest asset."

One of the biggest differences in the mask over the old one is the fact that aviators will no longer have to carry a bag that contains the canister. On the old masks the canister was carried in a shoulder bag with the hose running from the mask into the bag. On the new M45 masks the canister is located directly on the mask and can be switched from side to side.

"The mask is more universal," Taylor said. "In battle they aren't going to have to worry about the hose when they are running and jumping. It will make less baggage for them."

Taylor explained that the mask is available in five different sizes for a better fit. It is easier to maintain and understand at operator level. The mask is fully unit level maintenance and the hood is also much easier to install.

Although the Soldiers have not had ample time to try out the masks, Cpl. Carmen Combs said there are a number of little things she learned about the mask, which she thinks will make it much better.



One of these is that the inside of the mask is hypoallergenic so those who are allergic to rubber will now be able to wear the mask without discomfort.

There is a drinking attachment, something the old mask didn't have, which is extremely beneficial. There are also front and side voice mitters for phone conversations, improved mask vision and improved vision correction for Soldiers who need inserts.

All in all the mask is much more Soldier friendly and will be less trouble for the Soldiers in training and combat environments, Taylor said.

Troop levels in Saudi not to be cut back

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia — U.S. troops will not reduce troop levels in the area, contrary to news reports.

The April 9 story quotes an anonymous U.S. military official saying that Defense Secretary William S. Cohen and Saudi Defense and Aviation Minister Prince Sultan agreed to reduce troop levels at Prince Sultan Air Base.

"The story is complete hogwash," said Pentagon spokesman Ken Bacon. "We have no plans to reduce the number of airmen or planes at Prince Sultan Air Base, and the topic of reducing airmen in Saudi Arabia was not discussed between Secretary Cohen and Prince Sultan."

U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia Wyche Fowler said there "has been no discussion whatsoever at any level about reduction of American soldiers." There are about 4,000 U.S. service members in Saudi Arabia.

During a news conference following meetings between the Prince and Cohen, Sultan said the U.S. troops are in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia to conduct operations over Southern Iraq.

"These troops are doing their duties to keep the peace only, not to be aggressors," Prince Sultan said. Whatever is said more than that is not true."

Cohen and the prince said the discussions were fruitful. One part of the discussions centered on the Peninsula Shield forces of the six Gulf Cooperation Council — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and Oman.

All six GCC countries contribute to the force, but it is more a paper force than a real one. The forces only exercise together about once every two years. Prince Sultan suggested the United States join with Peninsula Shield forces to achieve more multilateral exercises.

The prince also commented on U.S.-Iranian relations. He said Saudi Arabia called for peace, and he hoped Iran would respond "with what is in its security interests. All steps taken by the United States toward this goal are welcome."

Cohen and the prince also discussed the Cooperative Defense Initiative, which seeks to tie the gulf states, Egypt and Jordan into an early-warning network to track missile threats. He said the United States thinks the initiative is an important program for the gulf because of the threat of chemical and biological agents in the region.

"There is no particular sense of timing to this issue," Cohen said. "We are talking about it because we have seen evidence that the spread of chemical and biological weapons continues."

DOT employee dies

U.S. Army Public Affairs Office

A Directorate of Operations and Training employee and member of the Alabama National Guard died while on active-duty training in Alabama.

Lt. Col. Paul E. Roberts, 44, of Columbus, died in Birmingham, Ala., Saturday.

Roberts was the team chief for the Infantry School's U.S. Army School of the America's oversight team.

"He evaluated the training at USARSA," said Ralph Hammond, chief of the Training Development Division, DOT.

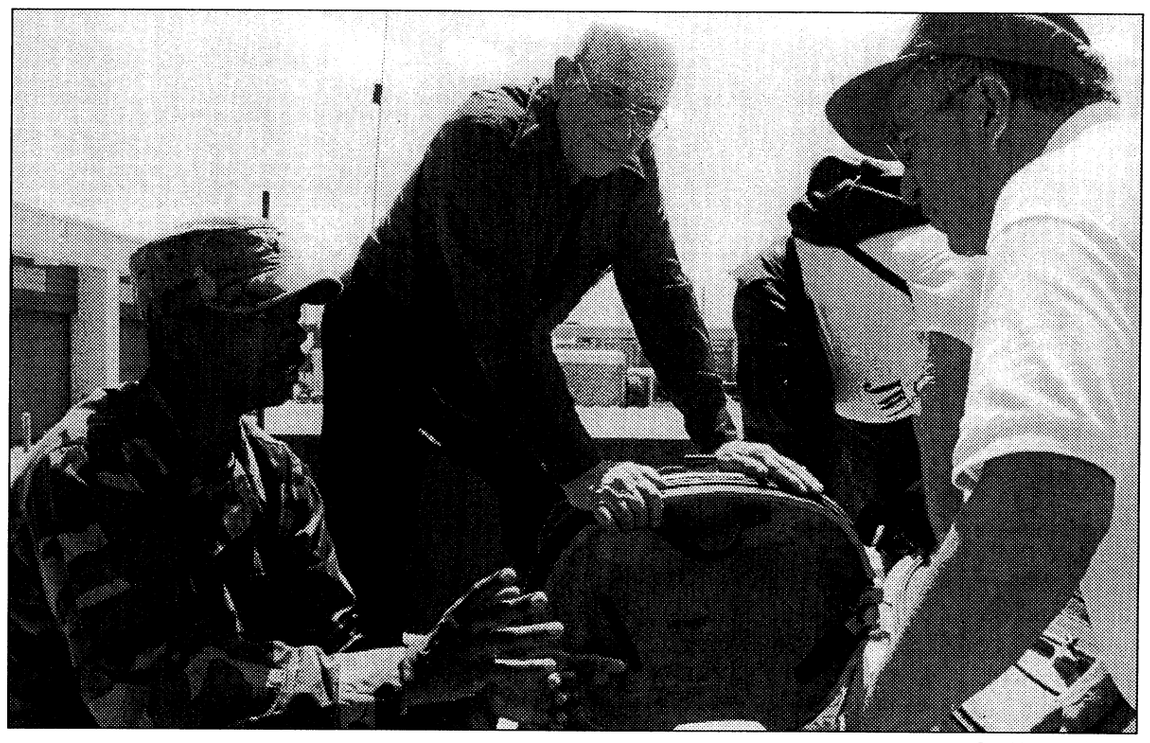
Roberts wrote USAIC Regulation 10-5, which provides a comprehensive view of the relationship between the command and staff with USARSA, Hammond said. The regulation was directed by the commanding general to provide better oversight and support to USARSA.

"He started working for DOT in August and he did an outstanding job on the regulation," Hammond said. "His extensive military experience was a major asset to the job."

Before working at DOT, Roberts was a military history instructor for the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

At the time of his death, Roberts was preparing to begin a program of studies at the U.S. Army War College, Carlisle Barracks, Penn.

Roberts is survived by his wife Beth; by three daughters: Melissa Mancini; Stephanie and Teresa Roberts; son, Paul Roberts Jr., and son-in-law Gregory Mancini.



"Paul's compassion, his skill as an Army officer, and his humor will be greatly missed by all who knew him," Russ Eno, editor of the Infantry Magazine, said.

Funeral services were Thursday at Saint Anne Catholic Church and interment was at the Fort Benning Cemetery.

Korean War vets visit Kelley Hill

Spc. Eantize Barren explains his duties to veterans Curtis Banker and Joe Padilla.

"This thing has everything. Where's the sink? Where's the dining room set?"

This was one of many observations about the M-1A1 Abrams battle tank Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, overheard from veterans of the 73rd Tank Battalion during their visit to the unit April 7.

Along with the comments, there were also plenty of questions for the Soldiers of the unit.

For a short time this allowed Pfc. Guy Hayes to serve as a subject matter expert instead of his normal role as a tank gunner.

He was surrounded by Korean War veterans during their visit commemorating 50 years since the conflict.

Questions about the tanks of today like, "How do you zero your weapon? How do you navigate? We used to use the evening stars." and "What's the top speed on this thing?" were coming fast and furious from the curious vets.

Hayes was also lucky enough to get a little advice from the tankers.

"Have you ever run your tank down Harmony Church Hill? You should try it sometime," said Curtis Banker, a 73rd Tank Bn. veteran.

Hayes said he was more than happy to talk about his knowledge of the combat vehicles with the veterans since he shares a common heritage with them.

"It's been real nice talking to them because they were here before us and know all about what we do," said Hayes. "Plus, they were all in Korea. They have a lot of interesting stories to share."

Some of the veterans like Robert Weisbrodt, a former sergeant first class from Cincinnati, said they were surprised to see how much the Army and the equipment had changed over the years.

"It's all together different. It's amazing how everything is. Compared to the equipment we had this is phenomenal," Weisbrodt said. "Everything is different. The post is different, the people are younger — it's really interesting to be here again."

Others said they enjoyed their visit to Fort Benning because it gives them a chance to visit with the young tankers of today's Army.

"I've met some real nice kids here," said Raymond McCaghren. "They're friendly and are glad to answer questions. I can tell the Army is really doing great."

Along with the visit to the motor pool, the veterans also shared a meal with the Soldiers and visited the Infantry Museum before leaving Fort Benning.

Accident reminds Soldiers of safety

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Not knowing the rules and regulations when it comes to owning and operating a gun can be a fatal mistake.

A recent incident involved a Soldier who found a gun and thought it wasn't loaded. While handling it, the gun went off and the Soldier was shot in the stomach.

Perhaps if he knew one of the cardinal rules in handling a gun, the circumstances would have been different.

"Always treat (the gun) as if it was loaded," said Regis P. Beighley, safety manager of the Infantry Branch Safety Office. Also, "Point it away from yourself and anyone else."

An assumption gun accidents mostly involve children is another mistake.

"(It could be) anyone who's not experienced and doesn't know how it works," Beighley said. Even if a visiting relative, a long-time gun owner, wants to handle your gun it still might not be a good idea. "All guns are not the same," he said.

Although a prime reason for gun accidents is improper storage, it is only one aspect of being a responsible gun owner and operator.

Fort Benning has its own set of weapons regulations to help ensure safe gun operation as well as responsible ownership among Soldiers and civilians.

"We require they obey the rules that contribute to the safety and security of everyone else on post," said Col. John Mitchell, Garrison commander. "We're committed to make this a place safe to work and live."

According to USAIC Garrison Regulation No. 210-5, section 9-5 part b:

• Privately owned small arms and ammunition of all personnel assigned to or TDY and quartered on Fort Benning, except those individuals living in family housing will be registered and stored in the arms room of their immediate organizational commander in accordance with AR190-11.

• Personnel living in family housing may retain privately owned weapons with a small amount of ammunition in their quarters after proper registration at the military police station. Personnel maintaining privately owned weapons in family housing are responsible for adequate security for these weapons.

To register a firearm on post, go to Building 2637 in Soldiers' Plaza for the necessary paperwork or call 545-3646 for more information. If a firearm is stolen it must be reported immediately to the military police at 545-5222.

Registration of the weapon "gives a sense of accountability to it. We think that's important," Mitchell said.

To store a weapon safely in a home, keep the firearm locked up, unloaded and out of sight.

"There's no safest place (to store a gun)," Beighley said. It's a matter of circumstances and people that determine the security of the chosen place. "You want to take as (many) precautions as you can," he said.

Weapons are banned from the barracks entirely.

"There's a limited area of lockable space," Mitchell said. "It's tougher for a Soldier to secure it."

According to section 9-5 Transporting weapons, parts b through c:

• All personnel assigned to or employed at (to include those personnel at Fort Benning in a TDY status) who desire to transport a privately owned weapon to and from hunting, sports shooting or other recognized function involving that weapon will ensure that the weapon is unloaded.

No weapon will be transported with a loaded magazine or clip affixed into the weapon. No weapon will be transported with a round in the chamber or any other projectile in a "ready to fire" configuration. Weapons will be transported in the trunk of vehicles, if so equipped. No weapon will be transported in glove compartments, under seats or any other concealed manner (except in the trunk of the vehicle).

Even if someone has a concealed weapon permit from Alabama, for example, it is not legal on a federal installation to carry a concealed weapon, Mitchell said.

For vehicles without a trunk, such as a pickup truck, an anchored storage unit like a tool box in the back is acceptable. Although gun racks look good, Beighley said, they're not the safest type of storage.

"If you're in an accident, the gun could easily fall off and you can get hurt," he said.

According to paragraph 9-7 Firing or discharging weapons, parts a and b:

• No weapon will be fired, discharged or used within the limits of garrison and cantonment areas.

• No weapon will be fired, discharged or used within 50 feet of a training area building, ammunition storage area, active airfield, posted 'no hunting' area, roadway or within 200 feet in the direction thereof.

The consequences for accidents and crimes involving weapons range in severity. This includes failing to transport a weapon properly. If the weapon is unregistered, it is far more serious an offense.

"(Punishment for Soldiers) range from a letter of reprimand to court-martial and the circumstances will dictate that," said Mitchell.

For civilian employees, however, sanctions range from official reprimands to loss of employment for DA employees Mitchell said.

Visitors with no official business, are also covered under the weapons regulations, he said. Visitors on post may be cited or banned from the installation.

In all cases, the circumstances surrounding the violation is considered in determining the action to be taken, he said.

"It is important to note all weapons involved in any violations will be confiscated by DoD or military police," Mitchell said.

One of the most important elements of preventing accidents with firearms is learning how to use a weapon safely and properly. There are several ways to learn about a personal firearm — aside from reading the issued instructions — such as taking a class or researching the specific make and model of gun.

The Infantry Branch Safety Office sponsors Hunter Training Class, which is sanctioned by the state of Georgia. Volunteers, who are expert hunters, teach the course with state provided curriculum, lesson plans and workbooks. The class is offered once a month from August through December.

Other preventative measures to take to avoid gun accidents include the following:

• Unload guns when not in use.

• Be sure barrel and action are clear of obstructions.

Weapon storage

• Register all privately owned weapons at the post TREO office, located in Building 2637.

• DO NOT bring weapon into TREO office when registering.

• Obtain written permission on registration form from unit commander to keep weapon in unit arms room.

Former CG keynotes conference

Gen. Hendrix will address students, AUSA diners

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Former Commandants Conference is bringing Infantry experts to post to discuss the Army Transformation.

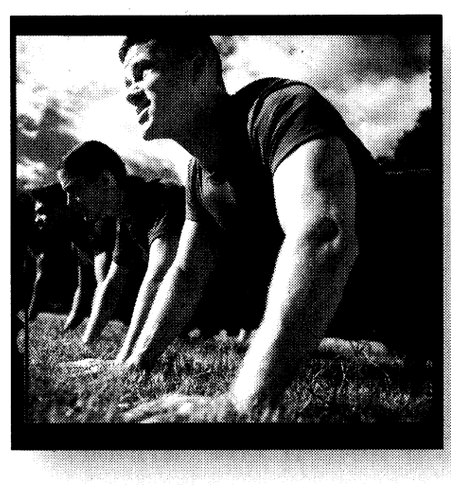
However, one former commandant will also be the guest speaker for several different occasions.

Forces Command Commanding General Gen. John W. Hendrix, who was Fort Benning's Commanding General from 1995 to 1996, is scheduled to present a professional development seminar to Infantry school students and speak at the Association of the U.S. Army spring general membership dinner.

Hendrix will speak to students in the Infantry Captains' Career Course, ANCOC, Officer Candidate School, Infantry Officer Basic Course and staff and faculty from 3-4:30 p.m. Monday in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

He is also the guest speaker for the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the AUSA spring general membership meeting.

The dinner is at 6 p.m Tuesday in the Supper Club at the Officers' Club.



Tickets for the dinner and the meeting cost $11 and are available through unit sergeant major offices.

They may also be purchased from the AUSA office by check or credit card. For more information, call 689-3272.

Dress for the dinner is Class A uniform or appropriate business attire. The public is invited.

Feathered friends get new riverfront homes

Groups work together on housing project as part of Earth Day

Sgt. Lori Smith
Assistant Editor

Bluebirds on Fort Benning now have 14 new houses to call home as a result of a joint Earth Day project by the Directorate of Public Works, Fort Benning schools and local youth groups.

The newly constructed bluebird houses were mounted April 7-8 by school children and DPW employees along the Riverwalk on Fort Benning.

The birdhouse project is the first of many improvements planned for Earth Day and the Riverwalk in years to come, said Linda Veenstra, environmental attorney at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, who was in charge of the project.

"We have a beautiful Riverwalk here," Veenstra said. "If we can put out more education and conveniences it will make it much more user friendly."

Children met at the Riverwalk to help DPW with the hammering.

"The kids were invited to come out today to see the location of their birdhouse," said Bob Larimore, chief of Land Management Branch, DPW. "This way when they come out to the Riverwalk, they can see the bluebirds sitting on top of their box."

Children were given birdhouse kits to construct and decorate as they wished, Larimore said. "They were only asked to identify their group with either a wood burner or writing on the box."

Kris Keske, a reading teacher at Loyd Elementary School had her reading class construct and decorate their school's birdhouse using a woodburning technique.

"We showed the school our birdhouse with our school's name on it and they felt great pride for doing something to help the bluebirds," said Keske. "They knew the story about how the bluebirds had lost many of their nesting areas and this was our way of helping the bluebirds."

"All these bluebirds are dying and I just wanted to help out," Chris Arbelle, a fifth-grader at Loyd Elementary School, said.

Arbelle said he helped decorate Loyd's birdhouse and feels like he put a little of himself into the project.

"It's a little of my own — I carved my name on it," he said.

The birdhouses were strategically placed along the Riverwalk beginning at the Welcome Center and ending near the Infantry Museum.

"I walked the two-mile stretch of the Riverwalk on Fort Benning looking for the best places as far as visibility and meeting their habitat requirements," Johnny Phillips a biological technician with DPW, said.

"Bluebirds like open areas," he said. "If they're in a dense area, they won't have a clear flight to their box. They are also territorial. The boxes can be no closer than 75 to 100 yards apart."

For these reasons, only 14 boxes were put up.

Bluebird populations have declined steadily over the years due to habitat loss, Larimore said.

"By constructing these birdhouses, bluebirds have a place to nest and reproduce," he said.

Bluebirds lack a strong bill to excavate a cavity for nesting, they depend on finding the used cavities of other birds or man-made houses.

"If bluebirds don't use these boxes, sparrows, fly catchers or other types of songbirds will use them," Phillips said. "Occasionally wasps will get in them but generally some type of wildlife will use them."

"But, just providing an artificial cavity for birds or other wildlife to use is a good management technique," Phillips added.

The 14 new houses are in addition to the 120 existing

AAFES rewards students

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If students are looking for an added incentive to bring home those A and B grades, the Army and Air Force Exchange is willing to give it to them.

A new program sponsored by AAFES called "You Made the Grade!" honors students of military members in grades 6-12 who have a B average or higher with free merchandise, discounts and drawings, said Gary Greene, general manager, Fort Benning PX.

All students need to do is come to the Main Mall PX and report to the store manager with a valid ID and report card.

They will then receive a coupon book with $55 worth of discounts and free products in various AAFES facilities, Greene said.

Not only that but students will also be able to enter in a drawing for thousands of dollars in savings bond.

He explained that each quarter AAFES will award three bonds totalling $10,000 based on a blind drawing.

"We are doing this to recognize and award student excellence," Greene said. "We have many patrons and we wanted to recognize our youth as part of the community, and what better way than supporting scholastic achievement."

Greene said the coupons are not just everyday coupons, rather they are targeted toward youth. Students will find discounts on Nike, Adidas, Tommy Hilfiger, Sony, Calvin Klein and more.

There are also free products available from such places as Burger King.

"We didn't put 50 cents off on laundry detergent or discounts on irons in these packages, we are targeting the youth and giving them what we think they want," Greene said.

The program is just now getting

Local residents show respect for past pets by restoring graves

When Erica Gibson's miniature schnauzer Toby became terminally ill in October, the 12-year-old realized she would soon have to say good-bye to her companion of five years. The vet recommended that Toby be put to sleep, and Gibson's family began to consider where they would bury their beloved pet.

"We visited the Pet Cemetery on post. Erica was so upset by what she saw. It was overgrown and uncared for," said Erica's mother, Paula Gibson. "We called the vet clinic and they told us the cemetery was no longer used for burials because there is no one to care for it."

Eventually the Gibsons decided to bury Toby on the family's farm in North Carolina, but after returning to Fort Benning, Erica couldn't forget the neglected graves she had seen at the Pet Cemetery. In March, she again contacted the vet clinic, this time to request permission to clean the graveyard herself.

With supplies obtained at the self-help store, Erica and several of her classmates from the Faith Middle School Honor Society met April 2 to mow, rake, and trim the unkempt and overgrown grounds. It didn't take long to realize the magnitude of their task.

Many of the headstones and gravemarkers in the two-acre cemetery were obscured by weeds and ant beds. Vines had overtaken the stone marker that once graced the entrance to the cemetery where hundreds of dogs and cats have been laid to rest since the late 1950s.

"It was a much bigger job than we anticipated," Erica said. "So I decided to put flyers up all around the school and get help from anybody who wanted to volunteer."

More than a dozen volunteers showed up Sunday. They edged and raked and uncovered graves long hidden by overgrown grass. Occasionally they paused to read the endearing epitaphs dedicated to the animals that had once been members of Fort Benning.

Housing office closes for move

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

It's moving day at the Family Housing Office.

Housing officials, who are more accustomed to assigning quarters than moving into them, will be the ones packing up and taking over new digs today.

So don't try to call or drop by the office. The phone lines will be disconnected and doors locked today while the office personnel move out of Olsen Hall and into Building 1836, the old railroad depot, on Mitchell Street.

The office will reopen at 8:30 a.m. Monday in its new location and all phone numbers will remain the same, Ron Smith, chief of family housing, said.

The vacated office space at Olsen Hall will be turned back over to the Billeting Office.

"We were taking up sleeping space," Smith said, referring to lodging for visiting personnel.

The depot, a historical building, has been refurbished.

"It's a historical building, so we had to maintain the historic features," Smith said. "We received approval from the Georgia State Historic Preservation Office for all work done."

At Olsen Hall, the different housing sections were spread out over two floors and with different exterior entrances. The move to the new location will help consolidate assignment clerks, inspectors and administrative personnel into one location, Smith said.

The Community Homefinding, Referral and Relocation Services office at Soldiers' Plaza will not be affected by the move.

The CHRRS office helps personnel who are inprocessing get placed on the family housing list and individuals seeking information about off-post housing.

Students in Gloria Loar's sixth-grade art class pose with their finished quilt panel. The novice quilters worked two weeks to complete the quilt

Students work together on quilting project

Quilting project builds teamwork, friendship among Faith students

Twenty young students sit in a tight circle, hunched shoulder to shoulder over the large quilt that covers their laps. They giggle and gossip as they stitch, their needles flying nearly as fast as their mouths. Occasionally their instructor draws their attention back to the task before them and for a moment or two nothing can be heard but the gentle rustle of fabric.

Many students participated in quilting bees in the 19th century and even the early part of the 20th century. But a quilting bee is a rare sight at the turn of the 21st century.

Faith Middle School students from Gloria Loar's sixth-grade art class recently took part in a two-week quilting-bee reminiscent of sewing circles from days gone by.

Under the tutelage of Robin Schafer, a Faith volunteer and experienced quilter, and with the help of student teacher Patty Rigdon, the students spent two weeks, during and after school, quilting the 4.5- by 6-foot panel.

It depicts a river teeming with colorful fish, a sunny sky filled with birds and butterflies, and the words "Faith Falcons Soar Above a Clean Chattahoochee."

The quilt was completed Wednesday, just in time to submit it for the Chattahoochee River Quilt Contest, a project sponsored by Columbus Leadership 2000 to promote awareness and support of the Chattahoochee River. The contest was open to all schools, civic organizations, businesses and scout groups.

Faith's contribution was the first one accepted by project director Becky Champion, who visited the school on Thursday.

"This is spectacular. I just can't believe it. It looks professional to me," Champion said.

The students were obviously thrilled with Champion's praise of their project, but they were quick to admit their lack of expertise.

"Most of us had never even sewed before. When we started doing it, it was a lot more difficult than we imagined it would be," said 11-year-old Melissa Kahler.

Kahler's classmate Dinah Travis said she

Directorate of Public Works

Southern pine beetle traps have been erected in the training areas of Fort Benning.

The Land Management Branch monitors SPB population trends annually in order to plan for control of the pest.

Hundreds of acres of pine forests are destroyed on Fort Benning every year by the devastating insects. Knowing up front what the population has in store allows planning for suppression activities and to minimize damages.

The SPB is one of the most destructive pests in the southern U.S.

The location and intensity of the infestations may vary from year to year, but this beetle remains a constant threat to pine forests.

The beetle will attack most pines, but its favorite hosts are the loblolly pine and the shortleaf pine, which are both major components of Fort Benning's forests.

In the late spring and early summer, beetle populations can grow very rapidly because conditions are right and many generations are produced each year. In colder months reproduction is slower because beetles disperse at this time.

It is important to detect problem populations early in the season before numbers and damages increase.

Early detection of SPB infestations gives foresters more time to prepare management programs.

The traps used to collect the beetles are called Lindgren Funnel Traps. These devices are cylindrical to depict the hole of a pine tree and are implanted with pheromones to attract and capture SPB along with clerid beetles, which prey on the SPBs.

The number of SPBs and clerid beetles captured are counted, the data is analyzed, and the information is used to predict the number of upcoming SPB infestations.

The Land Management Branch is currently collecting beetle data for a summer 2000 SPB forecast, so the traps are out.

If you happen to be out in the woods and see one of these strange looking contraptions, now you will have some idea of what it is.

Appreciation Week honors post volunteers

Jill Crider
Installation Volunteer Office

Fort Benning will join communities across the country to recognize the contributions of its volunteers during Volunteer Appreciation Week April 24-30.

This year's theme "Celebrate Volunteers!" sets the stage for the entire post to applaud the efforts of volunteers and plan special events and service projects to commemorate the annual week-long event.

Fort Benning volunteer organizations, agencies and unit family support groups are encouraged to use Volunteer Appreciation Week as an opportunity to thank people who make outstanding volunteer contributions throughout the year.

It is also a good time to remind residents about the importance of volunteering and making volunteer service a regular part of their lives.

To salute all Fort Benning volunteers, everyone is invited to attend the Commanding General's Recognition and Appreciation Reception from 4-6 p.m. April 25 in the Supper Club of the Officers' Club.

Volunteers of Excellence awards will be presented to 20 community individuals, one youth, one retiree, one family support group volunteer, one family support group and one overall organization. Activities are also planned throughout the continuing week.

The Installation Volunteer Coordinator, Volunteer Management Council and DCA sponsor Volunteer Appreciation Week.

"America was built on the spirit of volunteerism. Without the efforts of millions of volunteers who give their time to help others in their communities, our country would be a different place," said Robert K. Goodwin, president and CEO of the Points of Light Foundation.

Goodwin noted that volunteer community service is everyone's responsibility and each of us can make a difference.

"Saying 'I must do something' will always solve more problems than simply saying 'something must be done,'" he said.

President Richard Nixon established National Volunteer Week in 1974 as an annual celebration of volunteerism.

Every succeeding president has signed a presidential proclamation supporting the week and promoting volunteer efforts.

Recent surveys underscore the importance of citizen involvement. A 1999 Independent Sector survey found that more than 109 million adults now volunteer, contributing some 20 billion hours worth an estimated $225 billion. Closer to home, Fort Benning volunteers reported 171,478 volunteer hours worth more than $2.4 million (one hour multiplied by rate of $14.49).

In celebration of Volunteer Appreciation Week and those that already volunteer, the Installation Volunteer Coordinator encourages anyone who is not involved to get connected to the volunteer opportunities available on post.

To learn where volunteers are needed, call 545-3016 or stop by Building 359 on Ingersoll Avenue.

Community members must take active role in preventing abuse

Rebecca Welch
Family Advocacy Program

More than three million children are reported abused or neglected each year and three children die each day as a result of maltreatment. Everyone in the community has a role to play in prevention.

Since 1993, when April was designated Child Abuse Prevention Month, communities across the country have used this month-long observance to increase awareness of child abuse and its prevention.

It is a time when individuals, schools, businesses, hospitals, religious organizations and social service agencies join forces in the battle against child abuse. Child maltreatment is one of society's oldest, most insidious problems.

Recognizing that everyone can participate in efforts to eliminate this serious threat to children, communities across the country are stepping forward to promote the message that child abuse can and must be prevented. The National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse offers the following suggestions about ways to help prevent child maltreatment in your community.

Help parents in your community

• Establish a parent support group.

Plan a regular time when parents can get together to talk about and find solutions to parenting challenges.

• If you know a parent under stress, offer him or her a break. Take care of the children for a while so the parent can relax.

• Organize a regular playgroup so children and parents can all benefit.

Respond when you see abuse in public

• Strike up a conversation with the adult to direct the parent's attention away from the child.

Say something comforting like "It looks like it's been a long day for both of you."

• Praise the child and parent at the first opportunity.

• Divert the child's attention (if misbehaving) by talking to the child.

Examine your own parenting practices

• Recognize that you are the most important person in your children's lives.

What you say to them and how you treat them determine how they feel about themselves.

Offer them honest praise at every opportunity

• When you're feeling troubled or lonely, and when pressures build up, don't lash out at your child.

Stop and take a deep breath. Remember you are the adult.

Close your eyes and pretend you're hearing what your child is about to hear.

• If you think you need help, you're not alone.

Being a parent isn't easy for anyone, and sometimes it's very hard.

Take the first step. Reach out for help.

Check your community's resources for a child abuse or crisis hotline, parenting group or family service agency.

• Report suspected abuse or neglect.

Protecting children requires everyone to report suspected abuse or neglect.

To report suspected maltreatment, call Social Work Service at 545-1661.

For more information on child abuse prevention, contact Theresa Sanchez, Family Advocacy Victim Advocate, at 545-3344.

Drill sergeants teach students Soldiering

1st Lt. Matthew Hauck
2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry

1st Lt. Matthew Hauck

Sgt. 1st Class Victor Clark, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, keeps a watchful eye on "Soldiers" from White Elementary during marching instruction.

Approximately 100 students from ages 9 through 11 volunteered for training the morning of April 3.

The students from White Elementary School were preparing for a re-enactment of Pickett's Charge, a famous Civil War battle at Gettysburg.

Three drill sergeants from the Basic Combat Training Brigade trained with the students. The "new recruits" were lined up, and giggles were replaced by grimaces as the drill sergeants instructed them on the necessity of discipline.

"Keep your head and eyes straight forward," barked Sgt. 1st Class Victor Clark of D Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment.

After 40 minutes the students became proficient at facing movements, commands at attention, and finally, marching and singing cadence.

A few rowdy "Soldiers" were instructed to shape up, and performed a few "push-up" repetitions with Staff Sgt. Christopher Diaz.

The students were laughing more than doing the exercise, possibly because of the candy Pixie Sticks "gunpowder" they consumed when the drill sergeant wasn't looking.

The students seemed to prefer marching, especially shouting cadences.

"I enjoyed the opportunity to march with a big group of students," said Jessie Bennett. "Drill sergeant Echols was nice. He made us laugh."

The student "Soldiers" and drill sergeants walked away from the parade field with the mission accomplished and a few laughs along the way.

Diaz said he enjoyed his time with the students.

"The kids seemed to have a good time, and I found it inspirational," he said. "It is not often that I have the opportunity to interact with children and I found that I enjoyed working with them as more of a teacher than an instructor."

Evelyn Brahman organized the event and was keeping a sharp eye on the best "Soldiers" for the re-enactment in a couple weeks.

The 2nd Bn., 47th Inf., BCTB, plans to increase its role in the community, and is planning more events with White Elementary School.

off the ground, but Greene said he expects it to be very successful with tremendous participation from area students.

The program will hopefully motivate kids toward doing better and achieving that A and B average, Greene said.

"We want our Army community to be above average," he said.

"We recognize excellent Soldiers, but we never recognize the children, and they are also achieving excellence in their mission," Greene added.

For more information about the "You Made the Grade!" program at the PX, call 689-8025 or 689-0385.

bluebird houses already being monitored on Fort Benning.

"All the houses are on a drivable route so we can easily monitor and repair them if necessary," Phillips said. "The bird houses will be checked annually to clean them out and see how successful they were."

"We had a great response from the schools and youth groups. We would have loved to put more up," he said.

Cub Scout Pack 51, Columbus 4-H Council, Loyd Elementary School, White Elementary School, Wilson Elementary School, Dexter Elementary School and Faith Middle School participated in the Earth Day project. Earth Day is April 28.

Kids: Take care of cemetery

"There's so much history here. The headstones are fascinating to read," said Paula Gibson. "There are military police dogs buried here — one even killed in the line of duty. And there are so many family pets, obviously loved by families who have long since left the area. It's sad to see them neglected and forgotten."

After three hours of work, the cemetery began to show signs of improvement.

Fallen limbs and scattered debris were removed. Flowers were planted in the flowerbeds. The grass was trimmed and edged.

But the students and their parents agreed that the work of maintaining the pet cemetery would have to be an ongoing project or, again, it would fall in a state of disrepair.

"This is one of those projects that will require a couple of hours every few weeks," said Debbie Kniskern, a parent volunteer.

"It's not going to be all accomplished at once. We're hoping to adopt it as a continuing project."

Bill Bunt, chief of range, roads and grounds, Directorate of Public Works, said adopting the cemetery is an excellent idea.

"About six or seven years ago, a directive came down that said pet cemeteries could no longer be maintained by government forces," Bunt said.

"As far as I know it has been several years since a Scout group came in and cleaned it up. It definitely needs to be adopted," he added.

Kaye Kyle, family support assistant, said the cemetery is no longer open to the public because of space limitations.

"It is strictly for working dogs now," Kyle said. "Military families who lose a pet can dispose of the carcass at the sanitary land fill, or they can contact Vet Services to have their pet cremated. They can retain the ashes or disperse them in wooded areas on post."

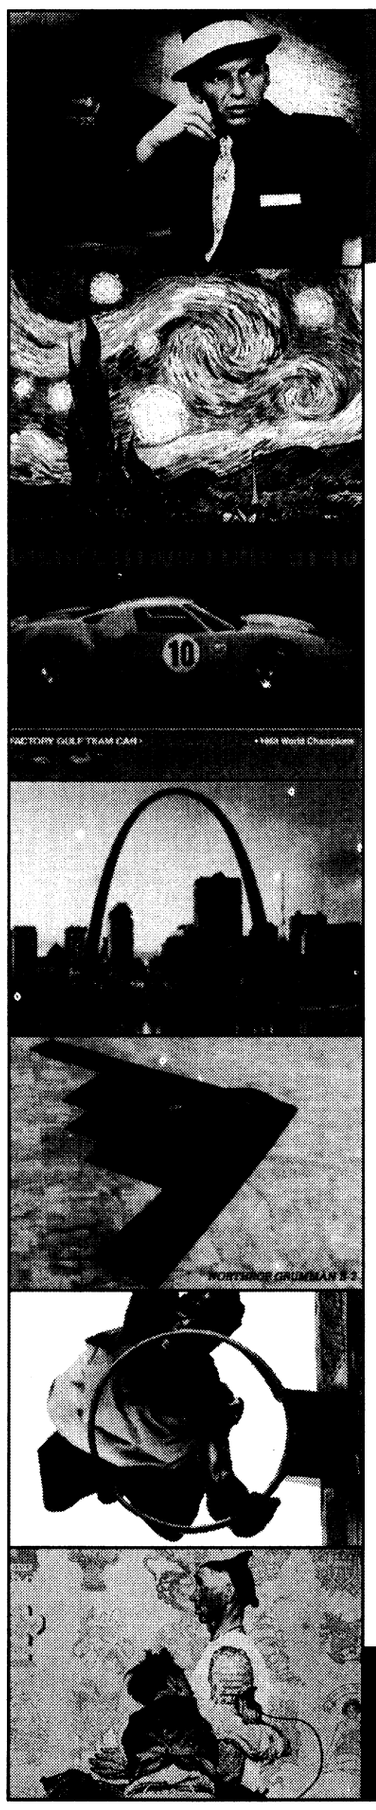
Quilters: Learn essential skills enjoyed participating in the project because it was for a worthwhile cause.

"It was a good experience, but it was difficult. The letters were really hard to stitch," she said. "I had fun helping out for the school, but I don't think I'll be quilting again any time soon."

Faith's quilt panel and all other contest entries will be on display at the Riverfest April 28-30, where the winner will be announced.



The panels will then be housed at the Oxbow Meadows Environment Learning Center and will be available for loan to schools and civic organizations.

Champion said she hopes the display of the quilts will evoke the same kind of nostalgia that the quilting bee inspired.

"Ultimately, I would like to see the panels hanging between the light poles on the Riverwalk," she said. "Like wash hanging on a line, it should elicit good old memories of when the Chattahoochee River was clean."

My Most Embarrassing Moment

My most embarrassing moment was when I when I threw up in P.E. I was in the fourth grade last year. That day, I was so nauseated that I felt like I was spinning around in circles everywhere I went. I was so ill that I couldn't eat, not one single bite. When I got to school that day, my nose was running like a faucet and my cough was like a hammer banging against something.

After lunch we went to P.E. We had to play a game where we needed a partner and each of us had to grab one end of a jump rope and start running. My partner, Rashonda Perkins, and I began to run. After a while I got dizzy and when we stopped I threw up. Rashonda dropped the jump rope and ran to Mr. Weinbaum. Phyllicia and Alex's class were in P.E. with my class and when they saw me, everybody started to stare.

After that, Rashonda took me to the nurse and I was so embarrassed. When we were walking to the nurse I finally spoke to her. The first thing I said was, "I threw up in P.E., cool!" She started to giggle.

When the nurse called my mother, at the time everybody in my house was sick except for my dad and brother. My mom picked me up from school. When I got home, my sister was home also. She got picked up from school too. After a while my sister and I began telling each other why we came home and how high our temperatures were. When it was my turn, I told her how embarrassed I was and how it happened.

That was the most embarrassing moment for me.

The Orphan Ant

In the cold winter, on a snowy morning, deep beneath the house on McKibben Court lies an orphan ant that lives with his cousin termites. Little does he know that his mother, father and his millions of brothers and sisters are in the back yard, two ant hills down.

Since he had millions of brothers and sisters, their names were numbers. His number was 2,897, but his cousins didn't always call him that. Instead they called him "wimp" or "Little Ant" and made smart remarks like, "Hey Little Ant, how's your little life going?" And they would walk off snickering their nasty snickers. That wasn't the only problem. The termites knew where his anthill was, but they never told him. So he decided to find out himself. The ant went into the house searching for a treasure, the greatest treasure of all — family. When he entered the kitchen, he saw a little boy, an ant's worst nightmare. They "torture" ants.

He ran as fast as his six legs could carry him behind a chair leg. Then ran to the next and the next until he was next to the door. He ran through the crack in the door. Finally, he was in the back yard. There he saw three ant hills. He went into the first anthill. When the queen saw him, she said, "Guards! Seize him!"

He ran out to the next one and when he saw those guards charging at him. He ran to the next one. In there he felt at home. He walked into the queen's lair and the queen said, "Is that you son?"

"Yes," he exclaimed and ran and hugged his mom.

Attack of the Killer Tornado

The worst storm I have ever been in was a tornado. A tornado is like a tall spinning top that goes through a place and destroys it until there is nothing left. A tornado begins when the cold air and the warm air hit and it makes a spinning top that forms slowly until it hits the ground.

I am going to tell you about the tornado that hit Deloka, Ga. It all began when I was playing outside when my mom was hanging clothes on the clothesline to dry. She turned around and saw trees start to bend and crack like fireworks were going off. The breeze was starting to pick up and then my mom ran to me and we ran inside.

My baby brother was inside on the floor. My mom rushed for him and picked him up and we rushed down to the basement. I ran so fast my mom said, "You run so fast you are like Sonic." I giggled a little. At a time like this it's not a laughing matter. By the time we were safe we could hear the trees cracking and the wind blew like a huge fan.

I wanted my dad to be there but he was at work. I thought about him so it would be fine. We could see the wind dying down and then we thought it was safe to go back upstairs.

When it was over, our family went outside to check out what happened. There were trees cracked up and bent up. There were trees over the dog pen and one tree was almost over my dad's truck.

So the big tornado was over and it left a huge mess we had to clean up. When my dad got home, we started to cut all the trees that were demolished.

We cut them down with my dad's chainsaw. Then we had the backyard back to normal. We will never forget the attack of the killer tornado.

reflections

Do we need Seder in our lives? You are looking at this heading and most of you are rightfully asking, "What does the word "Seder" mean?"

Change two letters in this Hebrew word "Seder" and you will get its English translation.

Change the first two letters from "se" to "or" and we get the word "order."

Passover, the Jewish holiday commemorating the Exodus from Egypt more than 3,300 years ago, has a universal message to people of all faiths.

One of the central themes of Passover is the Seder where we have a set order of prayers, stories and foods that bring to life the festival of Passover and make each participant feel as if "he himself left Egypt and was freed from slavery."

Matzohs, unleavened bread, are eaten to remind us of the type of bread our ancestors ate in their haste to leave Egypt. Bitter herbs remind us of the bitter times and "charoset" a mixture of chopped apples, wine and spices are a symbol of the mortar used to construct the pyramids.

A lamb's shank bone is placed on a special Seder plate to remind us of the Passover sacrifice. Some Jews even dress up in what they think was the type of clothing worn by their ancestors in that period.

By experiencing the Seder, Passover comes alive each year. It is not just a historical event recorded in books lying on the library shelf or on the web.

Personally, I just returned from a nine-month deployment in support of the peace-keeping force in Kosovo.

I spent the first four months in Kaiserlautern, Germany, and just recently returned from serving for five months as the Kosovo Forces NATO Chaplain.

By this time next year I will have forgotten many of the wonderful experiences there, but if I were to sit down every year and spend an evening recounting all that happened to me and wear my uniform and eat the foods I ate there, and sleep in a tent or trailer, then my memories of Kosovo would become real again.

I recommend that all of you make your religious celebrations come alive by getting more involved and trying to put yourselves at the event and time of that holiday. Establishing "Seder" or order and priorities in our religious and personal lives can only bring us closer to God and our families.

Judaism teaches us to relive God's miracles and make them part of our daily life. This is a lesson for men and women of all faiths.

Learning to parent takes time, effort

Chap. (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries Center

Remember learning how to ride a bike without training wheels?

Those were scary times. Scraped knees, broken spokes, crash landings in the nearest ditch, mom or dad running alongside of you to catch you if you fell.

Finally the day came, and you took off by yourself. What a feeling!

The wind whipped your face, and you delighted as everything flashed by you as you went flying down the street. Freedom! You were riding solo!

Parenting is a lot like riding a bike. The motion feels awkward at first, and it is so hard keeping your balance so that you don't fall over, but as you learn to concentrate and keep your balance, you relax and begin to enjoy the ride.

Riding a bike doesn't come naturally, and neither does parenting.

Rupel

Without a doubt, you don't feel confident until you have ridden down the road for several miles.

Like learning to ride a bike, parenting requires a lot of time, patience and effort.

But, once you learn, you never forget.

If you are a young parent who just started learning how to ride down the road of parenthood, take this to heart: hang on, keep peddling, keep your balance and enjoy the ride.

Need some help with your parenting? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-2050 for more information.

Children 8 and younger take off on "go" in the one-mile race category during the 21st annual Faith Race held Saturday at Faith Middle School.

Race draws more than 300

Young, old take part in annual Faith fun run

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

No matter big or small, young or old, in strollers, wheelchairs or on piggy back, runners took to the roads Saturday for the 21st annual Faith Race.

More than 300 participants from Fort Benning and the tri-community showed up for this year's event, racing in one-mile, two-mile and five-mile categories.

Apparent the race is a favorite among children, questions such as, "You mean we are really making a mile dad?" and "How do we know which way to go?" could be heard echoing down the row of small heads clustering at the one-mile starting point.

While the clouds played their games, threatening rain during the entire race, it wasn't until the five-mile runners got on their mark that the skies opened up and poured down.

However, even the threat of rain couldn't keep faithful returners and newcomers from showing up to compete.

For Noe Garcia, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, and his son and daughter, the race offered an opportunity to get out of the house and do something as a family.

Garcia admitted it was his 8-year-old son, Noe Jr., who persuaded the family to get involved.

"He has reached that age where he wants to run a lot, and he asked about the race, so I decided to bring him out," Garcia said.

The race is oriented towards the family and especially towards children, said Susan Emerson, race coordinator.

She said this is what makes it such a popular race.

"It's an opportunity for the whole family to participate," Emerson said. "There is a race distance for everyone, whether they are a good runner or a just beginner."

Honing her racing skills was 12-year-old LaTelia Brackens' motivation for coming out to the race.

"I want to become a better runner and of course practice makes perfect," Brackens said.

This year's race was made even more special by its dedication to the memory of Ron Gorday, who was the finish line coordinator for the Faith Race for many years, Emerson said. Gorday died last summer.

She also extended her thanks to volunteers from the Officer Wives Club, Falcon Parent Teacher Organization and the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Infantry Brigade, for helping make the race safe and successful.

Listed below are this year's Faith race top three finishers in each age category.

2nd Bn., 29th Inf., takes home post championship

Final minute scoring run crowns new post basketball champs

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Ending this year's post intramural basketball season was the championship game with A Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry, besting A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, 51-46.

In the fast-paced game both teams were evenly matched and the point span was kept within four points the entire game until the last minute of the game when 1st Bn. went on a 5-0 scoring run.

Patrick Smith, a 1st Bn. guard, was the first to put points on the board 30 seconds into the game.

Jimmie Walker, 2nd Bn. center, gave his team the first boost of the game answering Smith's basket.

Trading points throughout the first half, 1st Bn., managed to take the lead for the first time in the game after several fouls from 2nd Bn. which created scoring opportunities.

Playing tough defense but fouling frequently, the teams remained neck and neck until the last minute when 1st Bn. guard Joshua Craddolph was fouled as he went up for a shot.

Going to the line, Craddolph sunk both free-throws giving his team a two point lead. After a drive down court by 2nd Bn. he stole the ball and broke away for an easy lay-up.

As time ran out, 2nd Bn. center Jimmie Walker tossed a half-court prayer shot, but his pray went unanswered.

The score at the end of the first half was in favor of 1st Bn., 25-21.

As the second half began, Kleckey Pointer, a 2nd Bn. guard, showed what he was made of as he scored the first basket of the half.

A quick turnover from 1st Bn. and 2nd Bn. was on the board again, tying the game at 25. A number of steals and forced turnovers later, 1st Bn. was back in the lead and running over the defense of 2nd Bn.

"We need to take it to them. We can't hold them," shouted a 2nd Bn. player.

With that 2nd Bn. turned up the heat on both their offense and defense.

Using break-aways to their advantage, they made several successful full-court passes leading to points.

Holding their own 1st Bn. changed their action and began to take more outside shots and sinking them.

1st Bn. tied the game up once again and the game returned to trading baskets until only two minutes remained on the clock.

On a break-away drive, 2nd Bn. guard Brian Grant sunk the basket giving his team a two point lead.

Trying to sink one of their own, 1st Bn. was met by a crushing defense, and although they were able to put up several shots, none fell in for them.

As the one minute mark rolled by 2nd Bn. realized they were in the lead, and began to hold the ball and just pass it around without trying to score again.

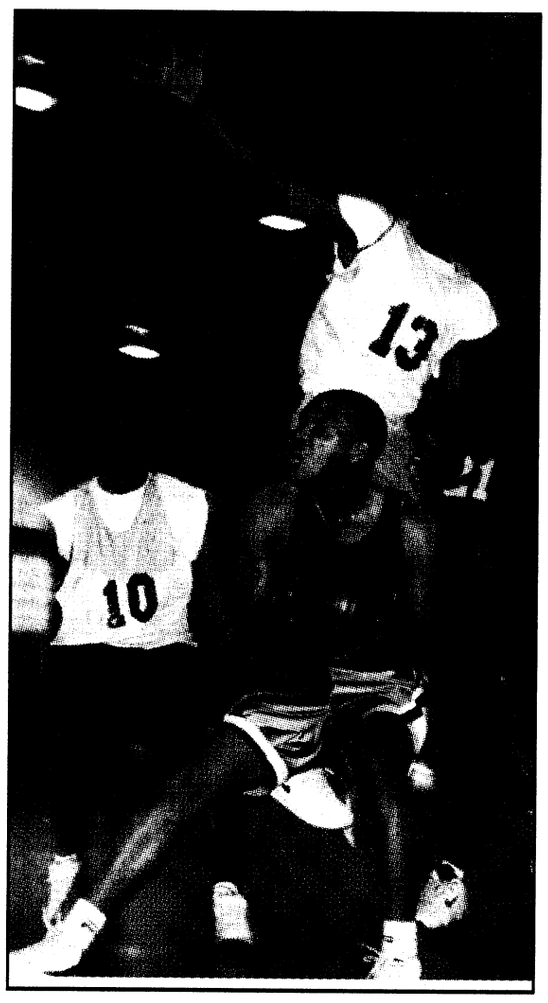
Fouling on purpose, 1st Bn. gave Thuran Russell, a 2nd Bn. forward, the opportunity for a one-on-one chance. Although he was unable to sink the basket, teammate Walker was fouled and was able to make one of his free-throws giving his team a three point lead.

With one more possession of the ball and only 16 seconds remaining, 1st Bn. drove downcourt for their last attempt of the game. On a misplaced pass, the ball was stolen and fired to Grant, who took the game home sinking the easy basket as the game-ending horn sounded.

"We played a really good game," said Russell. "We were able to pick it up at the end and they tired out."

Agreeing his team was tired, 1st Bn. forward, Jeff Frye said they lost their focus.

"We played pretty good in the first half but played like we had no purpose in the second," he said. "It even seemed like we couldn't box them out."



Worried for a while, Russell said one player in particular was destroying their game plan.

"Their Number 11 (Smith) was killing us," he said.

Smith, who made the game opening score, scored many of his team's points, drew several fouls and repeatedly stole the ball creating havoc on the 2nd Bn. defense.

He even drove through a three-man defense by himself leading to a basket.

However, when the game winning lay-up went in, Russell said he knew they won.

Buford Gigley gains control of the ball during Monday's championship game.

Hoopsters from 2nd Bn. ended their season with a 15-1 record.

"If it weren't for our rebounding, we would have been in a lot of trouble," he said.

Nursing a sore shoulder, Grant said they couldn't sink most of their shots, and it was their rebounding that saved them the game.

"We missed a lot of free-throws and other shots," he said. "It was a really good game, and a really long week."

Olympic selection-matches begin

AMU shoots for top spots in qualification

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the first of two Olympic Selection Matches that will choose the U.S. Shooting Team to compete in the 2000 Olympic Games this September.

The first Olympic selection competition will be conducted Wednesday to May 5 at Hook and Phillips Ranges and the Pool International Shooting Complex on post. The second selection match is scheduled for June 21 to July 1 in Atlanta at the Tom Lowe Shooting Grounds, formerly called the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Center.

Shooters' scores from both matches will be added together and the top one, two or three shooters, depending on the discipline, will make the Olympic Team; there are 17 Olympic shooting disciplines.

The breakdown of the 29 slots on the 2000 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team is as follows: Women's three position free rifle has three quota slots; men's air pistol, men's free pistol, women's sport pistol, men's air rifle, women's air rifle, men's three position free rifle, men's free rifle prone, men's running target, men's trap, men's double trap and men's skeet have two quota slots each; women's air pistol, women's trap, women's double trap and women's skeet have one slot each; and no Olympic quota slots were earned for rapid fire pistol.

Forty USAMU Soldiers, including 11 former Olympians, will be competing against 500 of the country's top shooters for the 29 slots on the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team.

Out of the possible 31 Olympic slots the U.S. Team could have been given, 29 quota slots were awarded to the U.S. by American athletes winning them; nine Olympic quota slots were won by seven USAMU Soldiers.

Army shooters who won quota slots are: Thomas A. Tamas, prone rifle; Jason A. Parker and Staff Sgt. Kenneth A. Johnson, air rifle; Glenn A. Dubis and Johnson, three position rifle; Daryl L. Szarenski, air and free pistol; Armando R. Ayala, running target; and James T. Graves

Take trip in time at Florence Marina

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

outdoor corner

After a blissful and beautiful day at Providence Canyon State Park, my friend Erin and I wanted to end the evening right by watching the sunset. It was already sinking low in the horizon and I knew I had no time to waste.

As we raced towards the blazing ball of orange I had no clue to where we were heading, all I knew was we had to make it there before the last of the sun said goodbye. After 15 minutes of aimless driving, to our surprise we found a spectacular lake with an array of pinks, reds and oranges dancing off its surface. We made it just in time to witness the dazzle of the sun's rays covering the water and the clouds.

The lake we stumbled upon was Walter F. George Lake located at Florence Marina State Park, and it provided one of the most amazing sunsets I have ever watched. While we didn't have the opportunity to check out the rest of the park that night, I vowed I would one day return.

So, when I got a call from one of the park's interpretive rangers a couple of weeks ago inviting me to come out and pay a visit, my answer was a swift and resounding "yes."

Florence Marina is about 40 minutes from Columbus and very easy to find. Once you get on Highway 280 South past Cusseta there are signs pointing you there the whole way.

Florence Marina State Park is a boat owner's paradise with boat launches, covered boat slips, docks and more. However, it is definitely not limited to boat owners.

The park offers 44 camp and RV hookup sites and a number of one and two bedroom cottages. The new two bedroom cottages are very large and include all the essentials, with an added bonus of a screened porch. The park also has tennis courts, an Olympic-size swimming pool, miniature golf course, deep-water fishing pier and fish cleaning stations.

However, it is at the Kirbo Interpretive Center where the adventure really begins. It was there I met Eric and Clay. Besides the usual park offerings, Florence Marina interpretive rangers give tours of nearby historical locations. These guys were going to be my guides in a trip through time.

The first place we went was a small fort in the middle of nowhere called Fort McCreary. Besides being able to climb into the old building I learned a lot about its history from Clay (the history buff) who had plenty to say about the fort and its significance. I found out that on occasion he offers re-enactments and black-powder demonstrations.

Our next stop was the site of ancient Indian mounds. The area where these mounds are located is closed to the public so basically your only ticket to seeing them is through a tour given by the rangers. I learned a lot during the tour about the Indians and their society, while also getting a little lesson in plants from Eric (the botany buff).

But, I have to admit my favorite part of the tour was the pond where I got a look at 10 young alligators. Considering my hero is Steve Irwin, better known as "that crazy crocodile hunter," I had to resist the urge to jump in and wrestle me some 'gators.

When we got back from the tours Eric and Clay risked life and limb by letting me partake in some good, old-fashioned fun with tomahawks and ancient arrow-throwing devices.

After narrowly escaping injury from my numerous misguided throws, both Clay and Eric had to say their goodbyes to get ready for the upcoming Easter egg hunt the park was holding. I was sad to see them go, but impressed at how much I learned in such a short time.

I really enjoyed my time at Florence Marina and have no doubt that others, especially families would feel the same. Throughout the year the park holds a number of annual special events such as an Astronomy Evening, Alligator Day and Christmas celebration.

Sluggers battle on field during YS baseball

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

It was a battle of the sluggers as the Tigers defeated the Eagles, 20-14, in coach-pitched baseball action Saturday afternoon at Dexter Field.

The day started off with rain, high winds and a chill in the air causing the first game to be canceled. It looked as if the Tigers and Eagles game would be canceled too when the weather cleared up.

The teams wasted no time in the first inning as the Eagles scored three runs, two of those off a triple by Mike Connors. The Tigers brought six runs scored off singles and doubles.

In the second, the Eagles were shut out while the Tigers scored 3 runs bringing the score to, 9-3, Tigers.

The Eagles run drought continued into the third inning. The Tigers began to turn up the heat scoring three runs off of a home run by Nick Cathell and later three more runs on a home run by William Buffin.

Going into the fourth with the score at 15-3, things looked grim for the Eagles. That didn't faze them a bit though as they started off the inning with a home run by B.J. Millsap and another home run that scored two runners by Connors. They also brought in two more runs before they were through this inning.

The Tigers answered back with two home runs in the fourth by Brandon Hayes and Deandre Murphy plus a single run. The fourth inning ended with 20-8 on the scorebook.

Time was running out when the Eagles pulled out all stops in the fifth inning. They started out strong as Tyler Straits hit a home run scoring three runners. The team added three more runs to bring the score to 20-14 before the game was called by the official.

It was a good game all of the way to the end, said Troy Murphy, Tigers coach.

"It was a real good game. We started out kind of slow, but picked up the pace in the end," he said.

Murphy said he thought both teams showed that they have the right stuff to play good baseball.

"They (Eagles) had a real good game offensive wise, and I think we played a good defensive game," Murphy said.

Eagles coach Mike Menendez said he was proud of his team.

"I thought the team did a great job of pulling together," he said. "As long as everyone on the team has fun and gets a chance to learn more about baseball, it's a good day."

FORT BENNING HISTORY BOOK

published to commemorate FORT BENNING'S 75th ANNIVERSARY

Fort Benning recently celebrated its 75th Anniversary, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

We knew the book would be interesting and informative. The next step was to make it as attractive as possible. An experienced layout and design firm was hired, and they have done an absolutely superb job. You will enjoy thumbing through its pages for years to come. You will also be proud to put in a prominent place at home for friends to enjoy, or at work for your customers to see. And, if you're looking for gift for a retiree, or a friend who served at Fort Benning and is no longer here, there's no better way to remind them of your lasting friendship.

Published by the contract printer of Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, The Bayonet, the hardcover book, protected by a beautiful full-color dust cover, has 168 pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, an overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and Desert Shield/Storm, detailed information on the current major units, and a variety of stories that round out the post's interesting history.

It is the perfect "coffee table book" and is a 'must have' for anyone who has been stationed at Fort Benning. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of Fort Benning, recognized year after year as. . .

"The Best Army Installation in the World!"

BANK AGREES TO LOANS FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH BAD CREDIT!

Columbus, GA. Milton Watts, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Including Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of a new or slightly used car, truck or van either for their family or a business venture. These are prime, in demand vehicles, that are either repossessed, overaged or a terminated lease situation.

Bankers will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expressway until the end of May. Best of all, cut rate financing will be offered to those whose credit would not normally meet such an arrangement at rates that banks usually reserve for their blue chip clients. Quoting Watts, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing.

"Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

Kevin Thompson, Representing the dealership, has arranged for special low payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the cash crunch at the holiday season.

In some cases these payments are ridiculously low. When pressed for an example, Thompson replied, "Well, here is a '95 Elantra 4 door #HS002. With $1 down payment to validate the transaction, your payments to be taken on would be $55 for 60 months at only 9.9% APR with a credit approval process that can take as little as 20 minutes. An incredibly low sale price of only $1,995. Adding only tax, tag, title and WRA make this payment arrangement possible. "Or, if a truck is your thing, then here is a '96 Toyota Tacoma #HS003. Again the $1 down to validate the deal and start making payments on a new bank contract of just $111.89 for 72 months at the same low 9.9% APR with credit approval that may be arranged while you wait. Again, the low monthly payment is possible because of the $5997 sale price adding only tax, tag and title.

This offer is for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle.

Hundreds of new Chevys including Silverados, Tahoes, Venture Vans, Blazers, Malibus and Impalas are included in this offer. Along with acres of used Chevys, Fords, Hondas, Jeeps, Acuras and Nissans.

Shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much the bank will advance you by calling Mr. Thompson or his assistant Mr. Stallings at

Soldier risks life to save crew

Team leader earns Army's Soldier's Medal

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

In the night hours of May 4, 1999, an AH-64 Apache Helicopter crashed in Albania while on a training mission near the Bosnian border.

While in flight, something went tragically wrong on the fully armed helicopter causing it to invert and plummet to the ground below.

Following the formation of helicopters in which the doomed Apache was part of, was a specially equipped UH-60 Blackhawk that held a Downed Aircraft Rescue Team.

Staff Sgt. John Farlow, now assigned to A Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was a team leader assigned to E Company, 51st Infantry, Forward Long Range Surveillance Detachment, at the time of the crash.

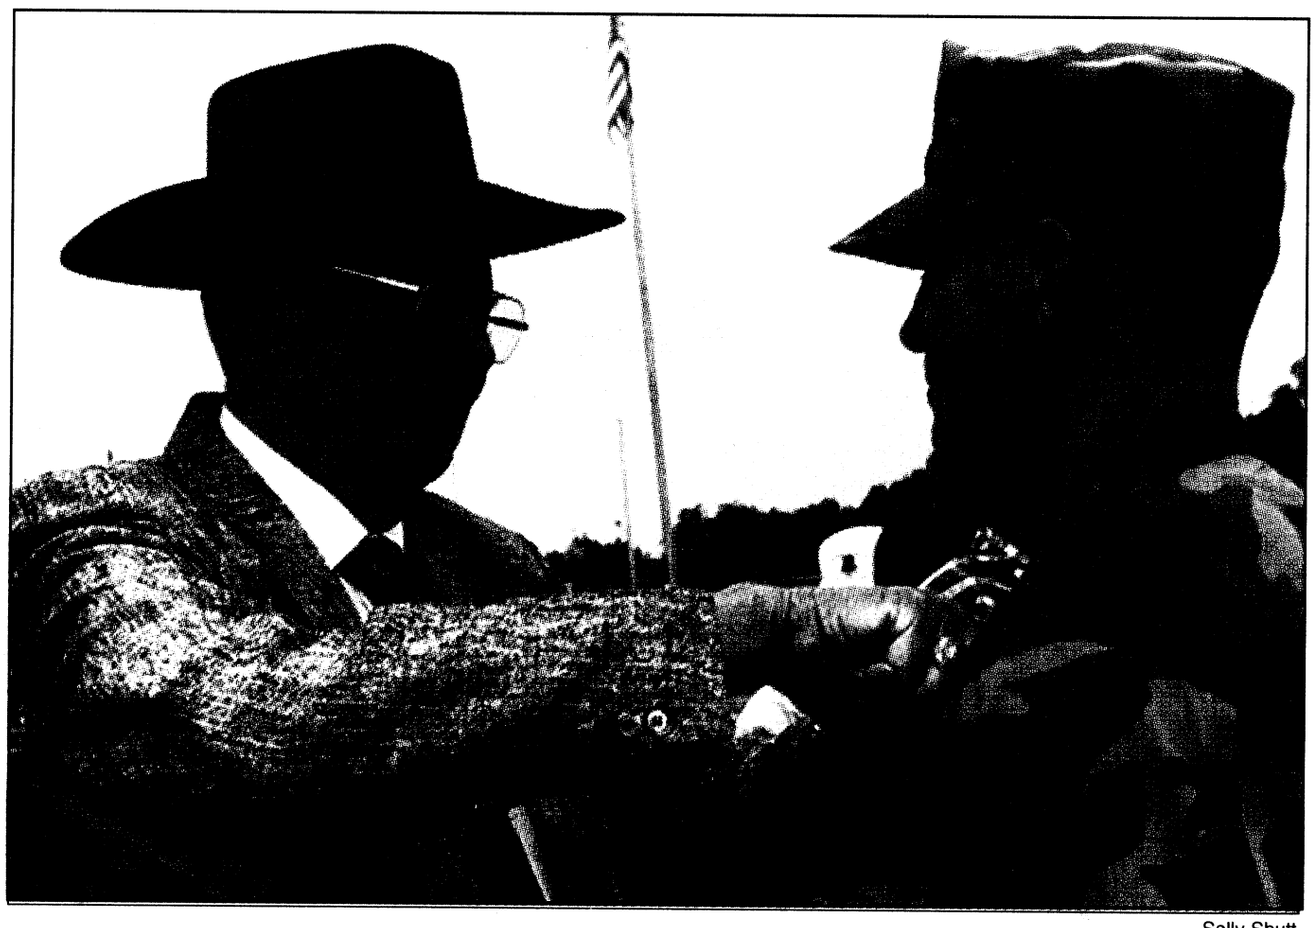
After receiving the message an aircraft was down, the rescue team went into action.

"We could see the crash site from about five kilometers out. (The helicopter) was on fire and there were a lot explosions going on," said Farlow. "All the rockets and ammunition on board were cooking off so there were secondary explosions."

Arriving on scene and not knowing the condition of the downed men, Farlow instructed the pilots to land, allowing the rescue team to walk to the crash instead of fast-roping which would have been hazardous to the crew.

"We landed about 200 meters short of the crash on top of a hill," he said. "There were fires all over, so I sent one man back for a fire extinguisher and dropped the rest of my crew off."

Allowing his team to provide cover fire should any hostiles move in, Farlow moved into the crash site alone and began to search the area.



After searching the area, Farlow withdrew and linked up with a medic and went back into the crash site.

"We scanned the area just in case either pilot had been thrown clear of the wreck," Farlow said. "After more explosions, we were able to locate and identify one of the pilots."

Leaving the crash site once

Airborne honors paratroopers

The past met the future at Fort Benning April 13 as one of America's newest paratroopers looked into the eyes of an Airborne pioneer and saw tears of pride welling up behind his glasses.

Loyd McCullough, 87, an original member of the first parachute unit, the Test Platoon, pinned silver wings on the uniform of 1st Lt. Melissa Graham, 22, the youngest officer to graduate from the Airborne School's most recent class. It was part of the traditional pinning of the "Keeper of the Wings."

"He talked to me about what it meant to him to be Airborne and encouraged me to continue to work hard. His eyes became teary when he spoke to me," Graham said.

"It was a tremendous honor," said Graham, one of the first two women to graduate from Virginia Military Institute in 1999.

McCullough, of Beavercreek, Ohio, and 49 other test platoon members were the first men to train as U.S. paratroopers 60 years ago at Fort Benning. Their contributions to winning World War II and the courageous spirit they epitomized were celebrated during the annual Airborne Awards Festival held April 12-15 in Atlanta and Fort Benning.

A group of more than 350 veterans and their families from all over the country traveled in chartered buses from Atlanta April 13 to see a demonstration by the Command Parachute Exhibition Team, the Silver Wings; meet today's paratroopers and listen to Gen. Hugh Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Shelton delivered the keynote address during an afternoon memorial service at Airborne Walk. President Clinton's top military adviser, the four-star general noted that the symbols of the Airborne where all visible — the berets, boots, patches and plaques — but it was something hands can't touch, the Airborne spirit, he wished to recognize.

"We honor the legacy of those who forged the spirit of the Airborne," Shelton said.

"As most of you know or have experienced, once you've logged a number of jumps, the spirit may be all that you've got left. Even the best chute in the world can't effectively protect a paratrooper from some of the places the plane can drop you," Shelton said.

"Airborne. It's a single word that strikes fear in the heart of a potential adversary and that stands for all that is

General speaks out on Army future

Hendrix addresses AUSA dinner

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Keynote speaker Gen. John Hendrix, Commanding General of U.S. Army Forces Command at Fort McPherson, left a lasting impression on the 159 attendants at the AUSA, Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, Spring Membership Dinner Tuesday evening in the Supper Club of the Officers' Club.

His speech focused on leadership and what to expect from the Army of the future.

Commanding General, Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne introduced Hendrix at the AUSA dinner as "a Soldier who tells it like it is from the heart."

Hendrix began his speech by recognizing Fort Benning as an important training facility for Infantry Soldiers and leaders. "This is a national treasure, it is a treasure for the Army because of what we do here," he said.

This premised one of the focal points of his message regarding the Infantry and its future amid a changing world.

"There was a time 10 years ago where there was a clear focus and everyone knew what the mission was," he said. "That time doesn't exist anymore.

"We are here to fight these wars and defeat the enemy, but the enemy is not quite so clear anymore and contingency operations are here to stay," he said. "We must never lose sight that we must be trained and competent warriors."

Hendrix emphasized leadership and its integral role in creating a more efficient Army.

"We need great, positive, proud Soldiers who believe in their future and their contribution to the nation," he said.

"The way to achieve this is through positive leadership, which takes a positive attitude.

"A positive attitude is almost 100 percent effective (when leading Soldiers) and performance is 99 percent attitude," Hendrix said.

"There is a future for the Infantry that is bright," he said. This includes manpower and firepower.

"Our goal is to be able to respond faster and respond with combat power when it hits the ground.

Former CGs tackle new topics

Transformation tops talks for generals

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

Past Fort Benning commanders met Tuesday afternoon in Infantry Hall for the Former Commandants Conference organized by current Post Commander Maj. Gen. John LeMoyne.

The 10 commandants met with LeMoyne to discuss various topics on Army Transformation, to include heavy modernization, light modernization and brigade combat team initiative.

The conference was a good opportunity to get updated on where today's Infantry stands, said Lt. Gen. (retired) Orwin Talbott, commander from September 1969 to February 1973.

"Having spent 35 years on active duty, I feel very deeply about the Infantry. It's been good to get a feel for the people here and where they think the Infantry should be going," he said. "There were a lot of various aspects discussed. I thought it was very constructive and I think General LeMoyne would agree."

Post sets Easter service

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

This year's post Easter Sunrise Service will begin at 7 a.m. Sunday at Doughboy Stadium on Main Post.

The Protestant-based service is a community-wide event and is open to the public.

This year's speaker will be Chaplain (Col.) Richard Hartsell, post chaplain.

Hartsell received his commission through the Army ROTC program at Louisiana State University in 1971.

Participants will be able to enjoy refreshments at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex following the service.

For more information, call 545-1452.

Other services open to the community will start at 7 a.m at the Infantry Training Brigade headquarters in front of the duck pond; the 2nd Brigade, 47th Infantry Regiment, and 3rd Brigade, 47th Infantry Regiment, will celebrate on Sand Hill's Pomeroy Field.

For more information regarding these services, call 544-9601.

commentary

A commentary is really nothing more than a glorified soap box. It's our chance as journalists to deviate from the practice of writing "just the facts." It's an opportunity to voice our opinions, and here at the Bayonet we are an opinionated bunch.

Sometimes we share our feelings about some rather innocuous subjects, like bottled water or loud music. And at other times we feel passionate about issues that affect our lives.

Such was the case last week when we were tossing around ideas for commentaries. Someone mentioned that April is Child Abuse Prevention Month, and before I put my brain in gear, my mouth had already pulled out of the driveway. When the smoke finally cleared, there I stood, inches above the others, my feet firmly planted on that soap box. My editor handed me a pen and said, "Write a commentary," which was really just a nice way of saying "Shut up and sit down."

So here I sit, having a very difficult time conveying exactly how I feel about child abuse and discipline. There is a big difference. It's safe to say we all cringe at the horror stories we read in the papers and hear in the news about the helpless little victims of abuse. No one is questioning the need to end these atrocities.

But my point, and I do have one, is that there are various kinds of child abuse — physical, mental, verbal and neglect — which comes in many forms. I'm going to stick my neck out and say that neglecting to discipline a child is a form of abuse.

I have a paddle hanging on my wall at home. It's kind of an heirloom. It was used on my husband's backside when he was a little boy — a lot. I'm told he was a real hellion. I'm not so sure that it had any redeeming effect on him, but it seems to keep my own children on the straight and narrow. I don't even have to apply it — I just remind them that it's there if I need it, and I seldom need it.

A few weeks ago an adult told one of my children that spanking is a form of child abuse. Now I'm aware that there is a school of thought that says spanking teaches children that physical violence is an acceptable way to express anger and frustration. I don't subscribe to that theory. "Time out" doesn't work, and the very mention of it is laughable to those of us who have tried it on a strong-willed youngster.

There is a fine line between paddling and abusing a child. I don't strike my children out of anger. And yes it really does hurt me more than it hurts them. I also talk to them, hug them, tell them I love them and pray for them every day. The Bible tells me that my children are gifts from God, and I am to "train them in the way they should go and when they are old they will not turn from it." I'll take that divine direction over all the passive-parenting advice in the world.

In the aftermath of the Columbine disaster, I was saddened and frustrated by the public outcry for more legislation, more school programs and more education. All the legislation in the world won't make up for lax parenting. I suspect a firm, loving, actively involved parent would have foreseen a problem and prevented many deaths.

So before I climb down from this soap box, let me say one more thing. My heirloom paddle has a scripture on it. It says "Do not withhold discipline from a child; if you punish him with a rod he will not die." Though we blanch at the word "rod" what it means, in essence, is love your children enough to discipline them. Don't be afraid to be strict. Don't be afraid to invade their space. You may save their lives. At the very least, you will raise a healthy, disciplined adult.

CG sends wishes of joyous Easter

For almost 225 years, Soldiers of America's Army have been standing tall in defense of the citizens of our nation. Often, as is the case this Easter, our Soldiers have had to be away from their families on important occasions while protecting the national interests on foreign shores and while providing assistance to the citizens of other nations.

Again this year, we have troops in Bosnia, Kosovo, Kuwait, Europe, Latin America and Korea keeping the peace and assisting our friends around the world.

Easter is the observation of the most important event of the Christian faith, the celebration of the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. Though innocent, He was crucified for the guilty and He was later buried in a borrowed grave. On that first Easter morning, three days after the crucifixion, He arose from the grave to give testimony to the power of His sacrificial death and He soon ascended into heaven to reign in power with God, the Father.

May all of you who follow the risen Savior have a joyous Easter and a blessed year in service to our God and to the great nation with which we are all so blessed.

Maj. Gen. John LeMoyne
Commanding General

Thanks goes out to volunteers

One of our nation's, and certainly the military's, most valuable resources is its volunteers. During Volunteer Appreciation Week Monday through April 30, these dedicated men and women here at Fort Benning will be saluted for their efforts and their commitment to serve.

"Celebrate Volunteers!" is a most appropriate theme for this year's week-long event.

On behalf of the Fort Benning community, I want to say a special thank you to the many individuals who make a difference every day in our community and in the lives of our Soldiers, families and retirees. Army Family Team Building, Red Cross, Leadership Seminar, Parent Teacher Organizations, Scouts, Youth Services and the Chapel are just a few of the volunteer organizations we will be honoring at next week's Annual Volunteer Recognition and Appreciation Reception.

These volunteers devote more than 200,000 hours worth of time that is worth an estimated $2 million.

Volunteers make a difference in our community. They make our country a better place. I want to urge those of you who are not yet part of this special group to join. Volunteer opportunities are available to everyone, whether you want to give your time every week, once a month or once a year.

Volunteer with your family, in your Unit Family Readiness Group, in your housing area or our schools and chapels. Many of our Fort Benning programs offer opportunities that offer paid childcare and training for future employment. Every bit helps and every person is appreciated.

Again, let me say how much we recognize the importance of this commitment and the value of what our volunteers do here at Fort Benning. I salute each of you, congratulations and thank you.

Maj. Gen. John LeMoyne
Commanding General

letter

Our great post has no shortage of selfless volunteers. In fact, we value volunteerism so much that we make a special effort to recruit, train and employ volunteers in virtually every aspect of the "non-mission" side of the installation.

Literally hundreds of people, of every age and from every conceivable walk of life, work every day of the week, contributing their own time and energy to improving the quality of life at an installation that has earned the reputation for being the best installation in our Army.

Each quarter, several volunteers are recognized at the Commanding General's Excellence Breakfast and once a year, we make a concerted effort to thank this uncompensated work force for it's important contribution during a week of coordinated events, culminating in an awards ceremony.

What we don't have enough of is trash-pickers. That's right — trash-pickers. We've divided the whole installation into zones, with military units responsible for all the various highways and by-ways of this great post, areas they patrol daily, picking up the trash that seems to mysteriously emerge overnight.

These Soldiers, equipped with unit vehicles, reinforced by the Community Life NCOs, do their level best to capture every chewing gum wrapper and fast food container, styrofoam coffee cup or soda can that comes their way, but they just can't keep up. We even have civilian employees in the Directorate of Public Works, who spend precious hours operating our lone street sweeper or cruising the neighborhoods in trucks looking for fallen limbs to pick up — and they can't keep up.

All are worthy projects and each contributes to the improved appearance of Fort Benning, and in tangible ways, to the quality of life on this post, in ways we could not afford to finance under current budget constraints. For this selfless work, we are profoundly grateful.

But it's still not enough. We still have overflowing trash cans on Youth Activities sports fields — trash deposited there by the great kids and well-meaning parents who serve as spectators, coaches or officials. This is trash that could easily be bagged up and removed by the same parents, as they leave the field, and dropped in a dumpster or into their own trash can at home.

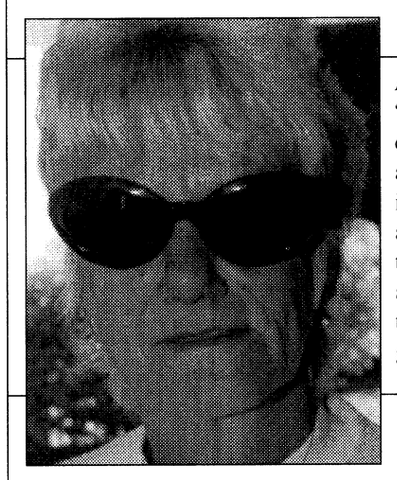
We still have dumpsters, placed across the post for specific types of trash or garbage, being filled to overflowing by folks who are either too lazy or too thoughtless to close the lids before leaving. The same process is repeated, only with a larger supply of distributable trash.

We even have people who toss trash out their car windows (as hard as this may be to imagine). And we have trash that's left as the "waste management technicians" do the weekly pickup around housing areas.

So what's the point of all this? The point is: let's change it. Let's pick up the trash, rather than walk by it, wondering why the post doesn't do a better job of cleaning up.

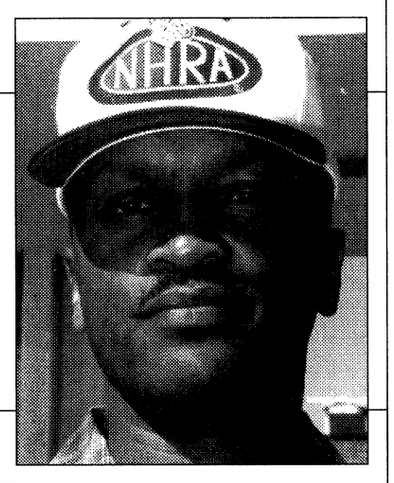
Most of us have to walk a little every day, either for exercise or even just moving from our parking lot to our place of work. What if we made a point of picking up trash that appears in our way? Better yet, what if we made a commitment to spend a little time each week, picking up trash in some place around where we work or live?

Whether it's in the treeline in our housing area, or in the hedges around our office building, or in the ditch behind our barracks or around the dumpster nearest to us — where ever we find "our own little eyesore," only 15 minutes a week devoted to this effort would make a noticeable difference in the condition of this great installation.



And because this is important to all of us on Fort Benning, we'd like to recognize those folks who are willing to make this little commitment to making our post a better place.

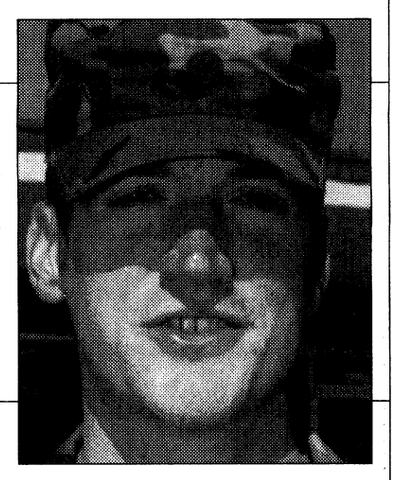
Join the Benning Police Corps! Put trash in its' place!



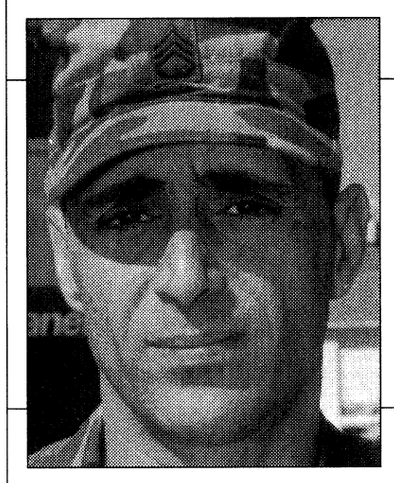
John Mitchell
Garrison Commander
Chief of "Police"

VARIOUS VOICES

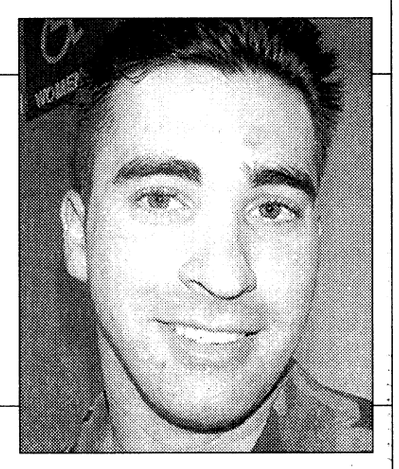
Where is the line drawn between punishing and abusing a child.



Anna Walton, Columbus — "The way I see it, spanking is a far cry from abuse. I'm not talking about leaving marks, but a little tap isn't going to do any harm. They are going overboard by taking away the right to spank. I know there is abuse going on, but it's getting to the point where parents cannot even get their child to mind."



Retired Sgt. 1st Class Joshua Carrol, Columbus — "You don't have to slap a child or hit a child to get his attention — that is abuse. There are ways of disciplining children without hitting them. Besides spanking a child when you are mad isn't smart because you can end up going overboard."



2nd Lt. LaWanda Law, 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group — "Abuse is taking it to the extreme. It doesn't take a lot to show a child when they have done wrong. It's when you go overboard that it crosses into abuse."

Spc. William Hayes, 283rd Army Band, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think that the line would be crossed when there is no longer a level of respect for the person receiving the discipline. As long as it's done in the best interest and it's not excessive."

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt, U.S. Army School of the Americas — "I don't like the word punishment, I prefer tough love. It's where you have to set the guidelines of discipline without crossing the boundaries of harming your child."

Spc. John Parker, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "If you leave a mark on your children when you punish them, you have crossed the line. I think you can spank a child without hurting him to get the point across."

AER campaign collects more than $200,000

Emergency fund wraps up, exceeds postwide goal

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Financial trouble can take even the best financial planner from riches to rags in a matter of hours. But thanks to Army Emergency Relief, Soldiers, retirees and family members traveling down the rocky road of money mishaps have a helping hand to hold.

AER assists Soldiers experiencing financial trouble courtesy of funds collected during an annual fund drive, and the most recent drive for Fort Benning wrapped up Tuesday.

The seven-week campaign collected more than $200,000 for the fund, a number organizers were aiming for from the March 1 collection campaign start.

"Setting a new record for AER donation is a direct reflection of the involvement of our great command sergeants major and their desire to take care of Soldiers and their families," said Col. John Latimer, chief of staff, U.S. Army Infantry Center.

Participation in the collection campaign came from those who are the potential benefactors of the fund — active-duty service members, retirees and family members, he said.

"The campaign is built upon the camaraderie of the Army family," said Al Deane, post AER officer. "It goes right along with our motto, 'Helping the Army take care of its own,' and that is exactly what AER is about."

AER provided nearly $800,000 in financial assistance to the Fort Benning community in 1999.

That help came in the form of grants and interest-free loans for Soldiers going on emergency leave, payment of utility bills, initial rent and deposit, major vehicle repairs, replacement of clothing after disasters and vehicle payment, Deane said.

Money from the fund also assists family members in undergraduate scholarships to local undergraduate institutions.

This year's collected funds will be forwarded to Headquarters AER in Alexandria, Va., and will be made available for use by Soldiers at installations worldwide.

Those needing assistance can contact Deane at the AER office located in Building 2624 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, by email at DeaneA@benning.army.mil or by calling him at 545-2536 or 545-4045.

Post gathers to honor top Soldier, NCO of quarter

RTB, 11th Regt. Soldiers earn top honors

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The post held an awards ceremony to recognize the most outstanding Non-Commissioned Officer and Soldier of Fort Benning at the Main NCO Club April 14.

For the first quarter of fiscal year 2000, the NCO of the Quarter was Staff Sgt. Gregg Smith, B Company, 6th Ranger Training Brigade, and the Soldier of the Quarter was Spc. Nichole McKenzie, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry.

"I won (NCO of the quarter) as the result of a lot of hard work and good leaders setting me up to succeed," said Smith.

Agreeing hard work was necessary, McKenzie also needed to track down some necessary items.

"I needed to acquire some equipment that wasn't issued to me like (Nuclear, Biological and Chemical) gear," she said. "I also did a lot of studying on the history of the post and the Army."

Studying for the different boards was a necessary task for Smith as he needed to review current regulations.

"I needed to read up on the current regulations and field manuals to see any changes that may have happened," he said. "I also got the chance to study a lot on material that was more unfamiliar than other material."

Appearing before three boards, McKenzie said, was the toughest part about being selected.

"The written exams and hands on stuff was easy for me, but facing the boards and having to spit out something at a moments notice was tough," she said.

With all the regiments sending their best NCOs and Soldiers to face the post board, McKenzie said, the competition was intense.

"It was a very tough competition," she said. "There was even one Soldier who just graduated from (Primary Leadership Development Course) and was the distinguished honor graduate."

Winning the awards, for some may not be a big deal, but both Smith and McKenzie were proud of their achievements.

"I am very pleased about winning," said Smith. "We don't have a lot of opportunities to prove our excellence, and this is one way to show that we are tracking."

"I am really glad about winning," McKenzie said. "I will have to keep studying for the Soldier of the Year award now but this will be a really good thing for my career progression."

Both Soldiers give credit to their leaders for their help.

"I am very proud of (McKenzie). She made me look good," said Staff Sgt. Michelle LeMay, HHC, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. "She works very hard and is dedicated. She did an outstanding job and it was well deserved.

"I always knew she could do it, and that she has the potential to be a great NCO."

"(Smith) is a great Soldier," said Capt. Joseph Kuchan, Smith's platoon leader. "He is always reliable and a joy to be around. He is a good instructor and a go-to guy."

NCO Academy makes move to classrooms of Infantry Hall

New location gives students computer access, modems

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The Non-Commissioned Officer Academy is in the process of moving from Building 880 to the classrooms of Infantry Hall.

The NCOA is moving into Infantry Hall to save the Army money.

Currently, two of the four schools, Advanced Non-Commissioned Officer Course and Drill Sergeant School, have already made their move into the classrooms of Infantry Hall.

The Primary Leadership Development Course and the Basic Non-Commissioned Officer Course are to be moved after several more classrooms are remodeled.

"It is a slow process," said Command Sgt. Maj. George R. Monk, commandant of the NCOA. "Right now, the workers are finishing up one classroom that will be divided in two."

Agreeing that the process was a slow one, 1st Sgt. Stephen Tavares, deputy commandant, said the move will not be complete for at least a year due to the classroom remodeling.

"The classrooms are being made into the Classroom 21 model, which will have computers and modems for each student," Tavares said. "The new workstations will help the students a great deal."

"By moving, the students will be in a better learning environment," he said. "They will have access to computers and other technology that they did not have in Building 880."

"Also the repairs and improvements would have cost too much," said Monk. "So in the summer of 1999, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst mandated the change of location."

The move began in December of 1999 with the NCOA cadre, staff and some students working on the move.

"So far we have saved the Army about $24,000 by using our own strength and issued vehicles."

Moving the NCOA one piece at a time into the entire west wing of the first and second floor, Monk said the move will continue to save money.

"Once over here, the students will be closer to the learning center, the PLDC students will be saved one hour of marching, and we will save money on busing the students to and from chow," said Monk.

Monk said he is ready for the move to be finished and is pleased with the progress of it.

"Overall I think it will be a good move," he said. "Fort Benning will continue to have top-notch Soldiers and the best resources to train them."

Reserves boost visibility; offer bonuses, benefits

Officer Candidate Sharon McBride
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

In an effort to boost their visibility on post, the U.S. Army Reserves is now offering a lot of new benefits and bonuses to get people to join, as well as come off the Individual Ready Reserve list.

The IRR is a reserve list of literally thousands of Soldiers who don't drill with a unit on a regular basis, but whenever there is a need, for example like Desert Storm, they can be called upon to serve their country, Sgt. 1st Class William Pope, 81st Regional Support Command Retention NCO, said.

"A lot of people don't know that we have several Reserve units on Fort Benning," said Pope. "So when they PSCed here with their spouse for example, they chose to transfer into the IRR."

But instead of just being in the IRR, Soldiers can re-join a unit here on Fort Benning and earn extra money for drills and gain education benefits and bonuses.

"Education benefits include the Student Loan Repayment program," Pope said. "While monetary advantages include reenlistment bonuses, affiliation bonuses, and not to mention MOS skill training and reclassification training."

Also recent laws have been passed so that Reservists are eligible for Veterans Affairs home loans, access to dental care and shopping at the commissary and the Post Exchange.

Once an individual joins or re-joins a Reserve unit, they are responsible for training one weekend a month, two weeks out of the year, Pope said.

Reserve units on post include the 718th Engineer Company, the 2145th Garrison Support Unit, the 1207th U.S. Hospital, the 213th Legal Support office, the 802nd Quartermaster Company and the CONUS Replacement Center.

All these units include a variety of MOS' and job skills, said Pope. For those interested in learning more about Reserve units on post, a special Task Force has been set up in Building 15.

The Task Force operation hours are Monday through Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. or for more information, call 544-7198 or 544-7112.

Airborne: Pay tribute to paratroopers past, present, future good and great about America," he said.

Shelton mentioned the courage of Alfred Rascon, the nation's most recent Medal of Honor recipient, who attended the ceremony. A retired captain, Rascon received the medal in February — 34 years after his heroic actions in Vietnam.

A medic with the 173rd Airborne Brigade (Separate), Rascon saved the lives of wounded men in his unit by covering them with his own wounded body and shielding them from exploding grenades on March 16, 1966.

After the memorial service, which also featured the 82nd Airborne Chorus, Shelton shook hands, smiled for photos and signed autographs before leaving post.

From Airborne Walk, the buses carried the festival attendees to Fryar Drop Zone to watch an Airborne operation and the graduation of the most recent jump school class, D Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment.

Rascon, who is now the Inspector General of the Selective Service, spoke to the graduates and their families at the drop zone.

"Look around and you will see silent heroes," he said.

Rascon and two of the surviving members of the test platoon, McCullough and Thad P. Selman, the mayor of Barwick, Ga., pinned wings on several graduates.

Although he received his wings in 1963, the day "seems like a blur to me," Rascon said.

McCullough enjoys returning to Fort Benning and has missed only one reunion in the last 22 years.

The weather cooperated during the day, and Don Lassen, editor of the Static Line, knew why.

"I think God is Airborne. When we left Atlanta, some of the people wanted to go back in to get their umbrellas. But I told them they wouldn't need one because it wasn't going to rain today," he said.

As the day ended and the buses prepared to leave Fryar Drop Zone headed back to Atlanta, Staff Sgt. Nancy Sellers, Fort Benning's Black Hat of the Year, commented that she wants to return as a retiree for the Airborne's 100th reunion in 2040. That's the year a time capsule buried in 1987 at the Airborne Walk by members of the test platoon will be opened.

"I will be 70 years old, and I'm going to be here when they dig up the time capsule. I want to know what's in there," she said.

Hendrix: Focuses on Army's future

"We want to be able to get there and deter a war from occurring. If not successful in deterring then we can rapidly fight it," he said.

He projected eight to 10 years from now the existence of an Infantry unit consisting of a smaller force but one that's more lethal, more rapidly deployable and more tactically mobile than today.

"You're going to have an Army that's dramatically better.

"Our goal is to deploy a combat brigade in 30 hours, a division in 96 hours and five divisions in 30 days. We can do that. Those are worthwhile goals and they are achievable," he said.

"Your Army is becoming more relevant to the times. We need for you to have faith and confidence in where it's going."

During his two-day visit to Fort Benning, Hendrix also attended the Former Commandants' Conference and made it a point to speak to the students in leadership schools such as ANCOC, IOBC, OCS and ICCC.

"I wanted to talk to the leaders who are in classes, to talk to them about how I see the need for leadership in the army today," he said. "The bottom line is we have every reason to be proud of what we do."

"Today's Army is different than that of five or 10 years ago mainly because every generation comes along into society with different views.

"The world has also changed. A lot of where we are in the Army today has to do with that," he said.

Regarding these changes in the Army, Hendrix said, "It's a positive story."

Change and progress were some of the issues discussed at the Former Commandants' Conference that afternoon. The purpose of the conference was to "review progress of the Infantry and its role as a part of the larger Army — it's organization, it's equipment modernization program and it's training progress — and to offer our advice on those matters," he said.

Hendrix said one of the high points of the conference that brought a bit of nostalgia to the table was seeing retired Lt. Gen. Orwin Talbot who was the Commandant when he was a captain in the Advanced Course.

"It was fun. I felt good about the opportunity to input," Hendrix said.

"It was a wonderful dialogue back and forth, a wonderful experience," Le Moyne said.

Students receive honorary citizenship

Columbus mayor makes USARSA students welcome

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Demonstrating southern hospitality, Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters welcomed the 62 students attending the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Officer Course by granting them honorary Columbus citizenship during a Government Center ceremony April 4.

"Anybody can welcome you into their community, but we really want them to feel it," said Peters. "And the way they're going to feel it is for us to show it."

Peters said the city of Columbus welcomes the military.

He said Columbus appreciates Fort Benning and USARSA and all the interaction that occurs between them.

"We're all in this together," he said. "We may speak different languages, but the way to break those language barriers is for us to get together and have these relationships and these events because we all have the same needs, same problems and same concerns all over the world."

Maj. Salvador Ibarra, of the Mexican army and student with the CGSOC, felt grateful with Peter's action.

"This is a pleasant goodwill gesture on behalf of the mayor," said Ibarra. "This shows us that he is interested in us being here and appreciates what we're doing here."

Ibarra added that as an honorary citizen he wants to share more of his culture with the community and hopes a lasting friendship will endure.

Other students felt that becoming honorary citizens will strengthen the bonds between them.

"This ties all the students together, both the U.S. and Latin Americans," said Maj. Michael Dempsey, also a student with the CGSOC. "This helps build cohesiveness."

Peters also commended the excellent work Col. Glenn Weidner, USARSA commandant, and the school does despite all the politics surrounding it.

"It is very difficult to carry out your mission when you have so many different eyes and ears and people pulling at you all the time," he said. "We try to make things easier for the school not more difficult here in Columbus."

For the past three years, Peters has granted honorary citizenships to the students attending USARSA's CGSOC.

The CGSOC is a 49-week course that educates and trains officers of all services for duty as field-grade commanders and as principal staff officers at brigade and division level in their armed forces. The course has been accredited by the Department of the Army as equivalent to the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College course, presented at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Ranger: Earns accolade for heroic actions in Albanian crash again, Farlow spent time searching the surrounding crash area for the other ejected pilot.

With Col. Jeffrey J. Schloesser, DART commander, arriving on the location, Farlow accompanied him back to the hill top helicopter crash site for his third trip back to the wreckage.

"I really didn't think about what was going on — I just acted," he said. I had been to one crash before, and I was a lot more scared at that one."

"The only time I got worried about doing (the rescue) was when some 33-millimeter rounds flew over my head," Farlow added. "But as far as thinking about it, I really didn't. I just felt that someone else would do the same thing for me."

At a ceremony Tuesday, he was awarded the Army's highest award for valor during peace.time — the Soldier's Medal.

Farlow was modest about receiving the high recognition.

"It is nice getting the award, but I don't know if it is for me," he said. "I think it should go to the guys who did their job. Mine was to get pilots out, and we didn't get pilots out."

Farlow joined A Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, only a few weeks ago, Lt. Col. Daniel B. Allyn, battalion commander, said his actions are a credit to the battalion, and said they are proud to have a hero in the ranks.

"He has tried to down-play his heroic action twice now," said Allyn. "First he asked his commander in Germany to present him the award as he boarded the plane to come here and most recently he asked for the award to be presented privately."

Lt. Col. Greg Rowes, Farlow's former commander, wrote comments Allyn read.

"Staff Sgt. Farlow was the best team leader in the company," Rowes said in his comments about Farlow's actions during the Albanian crash "He inspired others to do their best and garners the willing personal commitment from his men that delivers performance that exceeds even the highest unit expectations and potential. He is a truly inspiring leader."

Farlow is the type of Ranger who leads the way, Allyn said.

"Farlow is a man of honor and personal courage to demonstrate the exemplary strength of character which makes our regiment and Army the most respected institution in the World."

Conference: Returns new ideas from experienced leaders

"It was also good to hear what the new concepts are for the organization of the Infantry and the necessity of avoiding bureaucratic piecemealing the combat strength from the companies and battalions," Talbott said. "They have a good organization now and they need to preserve it and fight for it regardless of the red pencil guys in Washington."

Talbott added, top on his mind was funding for the Infantry..

"My greatest concern was whether money problems were causing critical problems," he said. "I don't think they are as far as Fort Benning is concerned, but getting new equipment, getting the money — that will take years to solve."

Retired Gen. John Foss, commander from March 1984 to January 1986, said the conference provided the former commandants an opportunity to discuss their ideas on how to keep the Infantry in peak condition.

"We all love the Infantry and served a long time in the Infantry so we are all concerned that a lot of people think that Infantry tasks and roles can be done by technology now and in the future," he said. "Of course, we haven't found that technology yet so we really need to keep the strength of the Infantry.

"I think we had a lot of good discussions about that — how to make the Infantry stronger, making sure they are better equipped and that they get the things they need for the future," Foss said.

He added, that he also thinks funding is the key to achieving those goals.

"A big problem is that the budget doesn't support what we would like to do so that we can have changes come about as soon as we would like to see them," he said.

Business aside, Foss said he enjoys every chance to get back to Fort Benning.

"Fort Benning is the best post in the Army. Everybody knows that and coming back here reinforces that," he said. "There will always be a need for the Infantry and coming back here reinforces that."

Hearing about the future plans for the Infantry was a highlight of the conference, according to retired Gen. James Lindsay, commander from July 1983 to March 1984.

"I was most interested in hearing about the new brigade," he said. "I liked being brought up to speed and hearing about where we are going in the Infantry."

Lindsay added, he thought the conference was beneficial to all involved.

"It was great. I wish I had thought of having a conference when I was down here —- to have a conference like this before the Infantry Conference," he said.

LeMoyne will now bring the ideas discussed during the Former Commandant's Conference to the Infantry Conference to be held here June 13-15.

Trainees face chamber of doom

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Before entering the darkened chamber Soldiers of D Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, cheer, give the thumbs up and call out their respective platoon mascots with undeniable enthusiasm. Most are oblivious to what they are about to face.

Once inside the chamber it isn't long until coughing, gagging and painful grunts can be heard through the thick cement walls. Even the biggest and strongest cannot resist the urge to run.

By the time the door opens, the once enthusiastic Soldiers burst out, doubled over coughing, choking and burning.

They have just gotten their first real lesson in warfare and its painful effects. They just made a trip through the gas chamber.

While it may seem like the Soldiers had to endure some cruel and unusual form of punishment, they actually received the tools to save their lives in the event of a nuclear, chemical or biological attack, said Staff Sgt. Timothy Dryman, D Co. assistant operations NCO.

Dryman explained the biggest reason for going through the gas chamber is for the new Soldiers to gain confidence in their equipment and also to identify any problems they have with the equipment.

The chamber, which releases CS gas, similar to riot and tear gas used by police, gives the Soldiers a little taste of the effects of NBC without harming them. Some of these effects include watery nose and eyes and burning in the throat, eyes, nose and skin.

"I think it adds a lot more to the training for them to do the gas chamber, because it makes them aware of could happen without the equipment," Dryman said. "It really gives them confidence in their equipment and its effectiveness."

Staff Sgt. Scott Morgan, a drill sergeant with D Co. agreed with Dryman.

Morgan said he enjoys the realistic training, especially because it is one of the first things the Soldiers experience.

"When they go through the chamber they have a different outlook on NBC and what it is," Morgan said. "They take the classes, but don't really pay attention. It isn't until they go through the chamber that they really wake up and start focusing on what they are here for."

After emerging from the gas chamber red eyed and coughing, Pvt. Robert Sneed was fairly optimistic.

"It burns and it makes you cough, but it's the best cure for a cold," Sneed said.

He described the feeling to having someone rub onions in your eyes and having a horrendous sunburn, but said it is definitely a good lesson learned.

"If you are in the field and don't know how to use your equipment, you are a lost puppy and you will probably die," he said. "This gives you the tools you need to be on auto pilot, to do what you have to without thinking about it."

The NBC portion of training is usually confined to two days, Dryman said.

On the first day Soldiers learn the basics of their equipment and how to employ it. This includes taking the mask and mission oriented protective posture suit on and off and maintaining it. It is the second day where Soldiers cap off their lessons by making a go-through at the chamber. When they are done going through the chamber they receive more lessons pertaining to NBC such as reacting to chemical and nuclear attacks and how to decontaminate skin and equipment.

All of this training is extremely vital, because the threat of these kinds of attacks is very real, Dryman remarked. He also added that he doesn't think it is emphasized enough during the Soldiers training.

"Personally I think this training is very important given the fact that a lot of our enemies out there today have chemical capabilities," he said. "Regardless of MOS I think it's important for everyone to get this training, and know what to expect on the battlefield."

Mass casualty made real by moulaged victims, screams of pain

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

A blaring whistle followed by a powerful blast sent Sgts. Roxana Rujel and Aurora Reyes-Arcaya scrambling for cover.

Seconds later, painful shrieks bellowed from the distance causing the national police officers from Peru to rush towards the cries for help.

"Help me, please!" screamed a bleeding casualty. "I can't move!" yelled another one.

This situational training exercise conducted April 13, helped the 19 students from Peru, Bolivia and Mexico who are attending the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Medical-Assistance Course, function as medics under simulated tactical situations, said Staff Sgt. Edgardo LeGrand, an instructor from A Company, USARSA.

"This is a mass casualty exercise where the students must perform triage," said LeGrand. "They have to properly evaluate, treat and evacuate the patient while being under attack by the enemy."

LeGrand, a 15-year Army medic veteran, said triaging is not an easy thing to do under those conditions.

"The students have to immediately apply the DIME system — find the delay, immediate, minimal and expectant patient," he said. "They have to clear the airway, check for breathing and circulation. They only have 15 minutes to perform all the medical procedures."

1st Lt. Julio Cossio, a student with the Bolivian National Police, said the exercise was very realistic and reinforced his belief that medics are needed as members of his police force to support their operations.

"Our daily missions fighting the war against drug-trafficking becomes more and more difficult and dangerous," said Cossio, an 8-year veteran counter-narcotic officer.

"The imminent danger of harm exists each time we go out on a mission. Having a medic on these missions is crucial ... it's a priority for saving lives in case of confrontation. This exercise proves it to me."

One student performs rescue missions on land and at sea. "It is our job to act as paramedics for our country," said 1st Lt. Alejandro Romero of the Mexican Navy. "We serve as medics at sea and at land."

Romero said, he too is actively involved in fighting the war against drug-traffickers and that having a well-trained medic could be the difference between life and death when conducting "volatile" missions.

"It is of great importance to my country to have me learn these medical skills here at the School of the Americas," he said. "This course gives me the necessary skills to support our missions. It is well-taught and highly professional."

He especially liked the mass casualty exercise where the stressful environment forced the students to perform in a quasi-real manner.

"Although this was done as training here, my country and other countries in Latin America suffer from narco-terrorism," he said. "Scenes of mass casualties could become a reality for any one of us. That's why this course is so important."

Meanwhile, the realism of the training surfaced on the faces of Rujel and Reyes-Arcaya, who were feverishly triaging the screaming casualties.

"I've never experienced the adrenaline rush of seeing so many casualties at once and not knowing immediately who needs help the most," said Rujel fighting off the smoke while working on a casualty. "My first casualty had lost his hand — blood was squirting everywhere and he was screaming. I was very nervous. I had to take a deep breath and remind myself that this was a training scenario."

Her partner, Reyes-Arcaya felt the same way.

"It was very difficult at first," she said. "The victim's screams of pain made me nervous. I knew I had to control myself before I could control them. This was definitely an intense training scenario which helped me learn a lot about myself."

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt

Sgt. Aurora Reyes-Arcaya, a student in the U.S. Army School of the Americas Medical-Assistance Course, helps stabilize a casualty during a situational training exercise held April 13. The course develops medical skills required of military or police units.

The six-week course develops medical skills required of personnel serving in a military or police unit, said Legrand. In addition to the basic lifesaver measures, students gain basic knowledge of human anatomy, the treatment of complicated injuries, fluid replacement, splinting, suturing and much more.

"The students did well during this exercise," he said. "They were a little nervous at first with the realistic chaos accompanied by smoke and artillery simulation. The skills they learned during the course, which they applied today, will not only help them during their missions, but in any emergency situation. They will be prepared."

The students graduated yesterday during a ceremony inside the school's Pratt Hall.

Ranger sniper platoon shines

Rangers take wins, learn from USAMU

Capt. Shawn Daniel
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Everyone wants to be a part of a winning team, and that theory was no more evident than at a ceremony to re-enlist five NCOs from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment's Sniper Platoon.

These Ranger Snipers attribute their success to an unparalleled commitment from the chain of command, outstanding technical assistance from Fort Benning's Battle Lab and a great working relationship with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

The snipers' success and their extended commitment to service in the United States Army stands as every leader and individual Soldier's goal.

In July 1998, the 75th Ranger Regt. consolidated company snipers into a Sniper Platoon in Headquarters and Headquarters Company. The 75th Ranger Regt. conducted consolidated training for three weeks to ensure all of the platoons met the same initial standards and then released the platoons to start working for their respective battalions. Their proficiency and lethality has grown exponentially ever since.

The 3rd Ranger Battalion Sniper Platoon's first trial came at the Joint Readiness Training Center a mere five months after their consolidation.

With a lot of support and unlimited freedom to maneuver, the Sniper Platoon ended the rotation with 28 enemy kills and only two sniper casualties.

Their success greatly contributed to the Battalion's success as a whole and far exceeded the snipers' contributions during previous JRTC rotations.

Through the course of the Sniper Platoon's existence, they have won numerous sniper competitions.

While the below listed individual and team accomplishments are impressive, the most significant aspect of their victories is that fact that they used standard Army ammunition, weapons and optics, while their competitors often used top of the line commercial products from some of the best manufacturers in the world.

The Sniper Platoon will be the first to admit the Army Marksmanship Unit has greatly aided their progress over the years. From maintenance and fine tuning of rifles to their overall expertise in marksmanship and ammunition, the USAMU has provided invaluable assistance.

Training together regularly, the two units have developed an inseparable partnership that has resulted not only in countless trophies, but also in a deep mutual respect.

While proud of each and every accomplishment, the 3rd Ranger Bn. takes even greater pride in the improvement the NCOs have made in such an invaluable asset and most importantly in the retention of the outstanding NCOs for both the Ranger Regiment and the United States Army.

1st Place, Canadian Sniper Competition — Staff Sgt. Kevin Humphres, Sgt. Jason St. John.

1st Place, 10th Special Forces Group Sniper Competition — St. John, Sgt. Jared Van Aalst.

1st Place, 2nd Marine Division Sniper Competition — Van Aalst, Cpl. Robby Johnson.

1st Place Fort Benning Rifle Match (3 Times) — Sgt. 1st Class Lindsay Bunch.

1st Place, Fort Benning Rifle Match — Van Aalst.

1st Place, Fort Benning 500 yard Rifle Match — Johnson.

Additionally, the 3rd Bn. snipers have posted numerous Honor Graduates and Top Guns from the Fort Benning Sniper School, the Special Operations Target Interdiction Course and the Marine Scout Sniper School.

'Rock' gets off to roaring start at NTC

Pfc. Teresa Heist
3rd Infantry Division PAO

Soldiers from 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) "Rock of the Marne", got off to a roaring start at the National Training Center's equipment Draw Yard last week. Soldiers on Rotation 00-07 worked hard in the hot and dusty Fort Irwin environment to prepare vehicles for dispatch, a week long process that is the first step of NTC rotations.

Sgt. James Stone, 4th Battalion, 64th Armor, Fort Stewart, is experiencing his first time at NTC, although he said about 90 percent of his battalion have been to Kuwait and therefore are familiar with a desert environment.

Stone is responsible for drawing 13 Heavy Expandable Mobility Tactical Trucks and 13 cargo trucks used for ammunition. Entering the Draw Yard April 9, 19 vehicles were already drawn by the afternoon of April 11.

Many Soldiers in the Draw Yard were assisting ITT, the civilian counterpart responsible for maintaining vehicles. Stone explained that during the normal process, company commanders sign for vehicles that are inspected first. Problems are initially identified which releases accountability to the units. Due to the large task force of Rotation 00-07, Soldiers are assisting ITT in providing vehicle maintenance and repair.

Sometimes when vehicles are signed for, the ground underneath is contaminated with fuel or oil. When this happens, the unit is responsible for removing the contaminants. This is exactly what happened with 4th Bn., 64th Armor, which required the assistance of an environmental crew.

Sgt. Emil Santiago, a combat engineer with C Company, 317th Engineer Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, and his crew were assigned the job of containing and removing contaminated sand. According to Sangtiago, 4th Bn., 64th Armor maintained that the spill was already there, but since signoff had taken place, the unit assumed responsibility. Using dump trucks, back hoes and scoop loaders, the crew continued to remove sand until testing showed the sand is clean.

"If I can smell even a trace of fuel, we have to keep digging," said Santiago.

Sgt. Edgar Ford, signal support systems specialist, 4th Bn., 64th Armor, prepared a 577 armored personnel carrier for the field. Ford is attached to a scout unit and is responsible for communication. His job is setting up "retrans" stations that link communication between two points.

"The real trick is when we get out into the box," said Ford. "That's when we're going to do our stuff."

Once the vehicle is ready, the operator joins the convoy of assorted mechanized vehicles, waiting their turn to sign out before leaving the Draw Yard gates. The vehicles are then driven to the "hammer base," a staging area where they await their first mission at NTC.

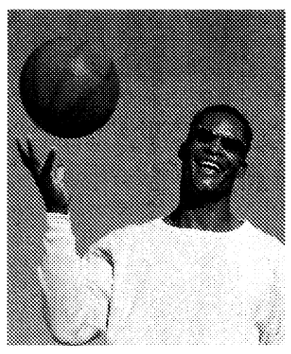
4th RTB vies for expert badge

4th Ranger Training Battalion

"Gallantry will I show the world that I am a specially selected and well-trained Soldier."

The 4th Ranger Training Battalion did just that at the Expert Infantryman Badge test site. The 4th RTB had 10 of 15 candidates earn the coveted badge. That's a 67 percent pass rate.

The battalion has some impressive statistics in regards to EIB, said Capt. Carlton Paris, 4th RTB. Every line company is 100 percent EIB qualified, and has earned the EIB streamer. Headquarters Company's Merrill's Platoon currently has 33 out of 41 Soldiers assigned EIB qualified.



Training was the key to the Rangers' success.

The Rangers attended the EIB training prior to test week. Upon completion of a day's training, the Rangers would then identify tasks that they needed to improve upon and would work on them late into the night.

Through constant retraining, the Rangers executed the 40 tasks required to earn the EIB. The training was so effective, three of the Rangers passed with perfect scores.

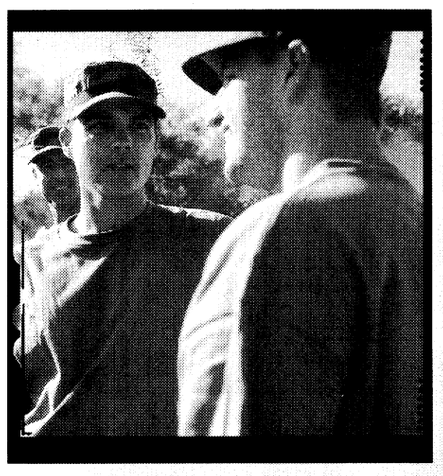
When 1st Lt. Fred Cannan, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th RTB platoon leader, was asked about the significance of the Soldiers earning the EIB his reply was, "These Rangers were able to demonstrate their high degree of proficiency at combat critical skills. This proficiency is what will keep Soldiers alive to fight and win on the battlefield."

You don't pay tax on a Roth IRA

This is the big attraction of a Roth IRA – you don't pay tax when you make a qualified withdrawal, not even on the earnings and gains that build up.

You must follow certain rules, such as holding the Roth IRA for 5 years and reaching age 59½.

What's more, you can convert many traditional IRA accounts to a Roth IRA. And you can contribute to a Roth IRA after the age of 70½.



You need to meet the guidelines, compare, and examine which choice is best for you.

Other IRA options also offer tax advantages. For example, you can withdraw up to $10,000 from most IRA accounts without paying early-withdrawal tax, if you use the funds to buy a first home or pay for higher education.

For all the facts on Roth and other IRA benefits, see your 1999 tax booklet. Or check our Web site: www.irs.gov

Family member acts on Broadway

Acting skills land Soldier's daughter part in "Annie"

Most young girls dream of pursuing careers as models, singers, actresses or fashion designers. One Fort Benning fifth-grader has already added the first three to her resume. Eleven-year-old Nina Ducharme began singing, modeling and dancing more than six years ago while living in Hawaii.

"She was always singing, singing, singing, ever since she was old enough to walk. She showed so much interest and talent that we took her to various voice coaches and dance teachers, and one thing led to another," said Nina's dad, Sgt. 1st Class William Ducharme. "Nina's had more specialty schools than most Army Soldiers. If she wore a uniform, it would have a lot of patches on it."

At an age when most young starlets are vying for the lead in the school play, Nina's resume already reads like that of a seasoned actress.

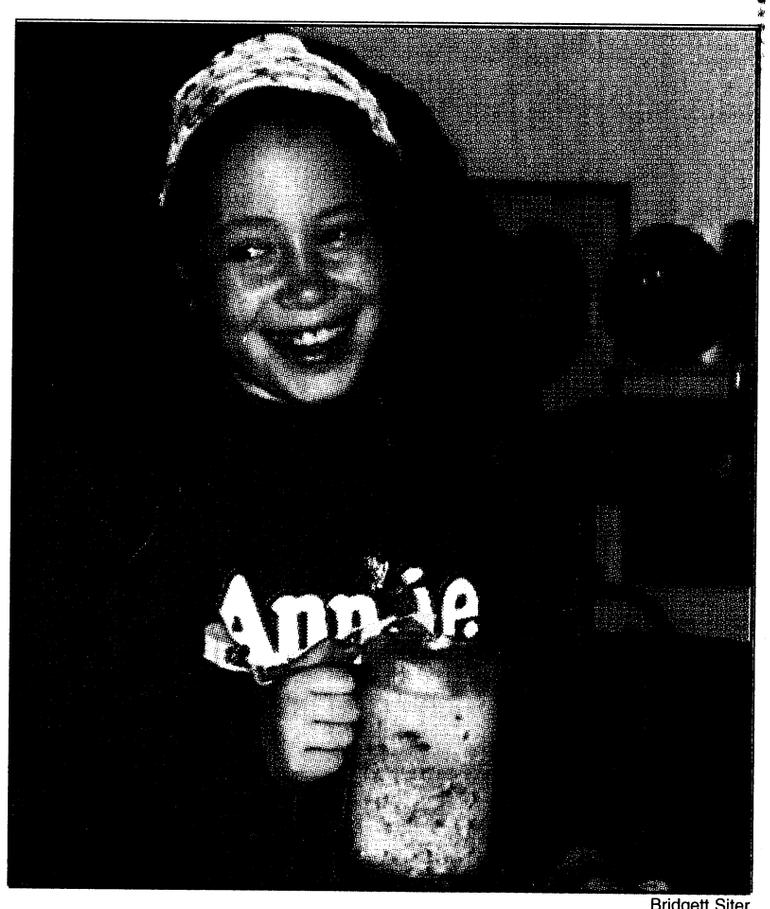
While in Hawaii, she played an elf in "Santa's Light Show," performed in "Damn Yankees" and won the 1997 "Kiddieoke Star Search." She was also featured in commercials for Kentucky Fried Chicken and Computer City.

Nina's family moved to Fort Benning last year, and in July she began a 40-week national tour with the Broadway production of Annie. She played an orphan named Tessie, a role that showcased her acting, dancing and singing skills.

"It was a great experience — a lot of performing. Everybody says I should be a singer," she laughed. "But really I want to be a fashion designer or an inventor."

Nina and her mother, Bonita, were visiting friends in New York last July when they heard about the casting call for Annie. More than 100 girls tried out for the five orphan roles.

"It was really a fluke. They were actually getting ready to come home when Nina decided she'd like to audition. It was a whim," her dad said. "They came home right afterwards and we got a phone call a couple of days later saying the producers wanted Nina for the part of Tessie."



Accompanied by her mother, Nina returned to New York for several weeks of rehearsals before beginning the seven-month tour in September. Traveling primarily by bus, the cast performed more than 200 shows.

"My favorite part was seeing the beautiful theaters. They were very elaborate, with incredible architecture and detailing, like gold gilding and huge winding staircases," Nina said. "But I liked traveling everywhere too. We went from places like Boise, Idaho, to Mexico, and back to Illinois in one week. It was neat to see what it's like all over the country, to see what other kids see every day."

Along the way, Nina and her mother occasionally stole a few hours to play tourists. They visited Graceland and Planet Hollywood in Nashville, Tenn., and the Smithsonian Institution in Washington D.C. They went shopping in Mexico and attended a boat party in Charleston, S.C. Nina also participated in promotionals for the show by visiting public schools along the route.

"We had a lot of fun. Nina loves to travel, but the schedule was rigorous. It was a different city every day," her mother said. "She would have three hours every morning with the tutor, usually on the bus. We would pull into a hotel in time for supper, then get ready for the show, which didn't

Post-wide sale set for May 6

Bargains galore available during yard sale

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The post-wide yard sale is the ultimate chance to cleanse the house of clutter or to find the bargain of a lifetime.

Catering to families who are about to PCS and yard-sale junkies, the post-wide yard sale 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. May 6 is a win-win situation.

"You know one person's trash is another one's treasure," said Jodie Bowers, president of the mayor's association that sponsors the yard sale.

There are two post-wide yard sales per year, one in the spring and one in the fall because those are the prime times to prepare for PCS. Most families try to schedule moves during the children's summer break.

"In the summer, everyone goes from post to post," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. "As a result, a lot of people are packing up and divesting themselves. It's a great opportunity to get rid of stuff they don't want to hall off to their next duty station.

"We've been doing this the last three years and (the yard sales) have been very successful," he said. "We encourage participation. The more people out there, the more people will come." The post-wide yard sale attracts people from the Fort Benning and Columbus areas.

In order to participate, just set up the yard at 8 that morning, Walls said.

You can put a "yard sale" sign on the road or on the main thoroughfare with the address to publicize it, Bowers said.

"The only thing we require is that after the sale ends you go and get your sign."

For yard-sale regulars, this event is heaven. "It's one big huge yard sale," Bowers said. "It's better than going out every Saturday."

Bowers admits that although she has held her own yard sale during the event, she enjoys shopping. "I got lots of Christmas presents," she said. "You find almost everything."

One of her proudest finds was a Tom Clancy book. "Paying a buck for a Tom Clancy hardback is a bargain," she said.

Giraffes sighted at Dexter school

Dexter Elementary kids learn valuable lessons from five-month project

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Many Fort Benning teachers felt like zoo keepers during the week preceding spring break, when students began acting more like caged animals than humans. Still, even the teachers at Dexter Elementary were surprised when third-grade students reported seeing giraffes roaming the school grounds April 13.

The students were graduates of the "Giraffe Project," a national program designed to encourage young children to recognize heroes, or "human giraffes," among their peers and in their community.

"A giraffe has a big heart. It weighs about 25 pounds. And it's always sticking it's neck out. That's how it warns the other animals when there's danger on the horizon," said project director Tammy Hinkley. "This program teaches our kids to look for these qualities in the people they call heroes — people who have big hearts and are always sticking their necks out for others."

Thursday's graduation marked the conclusion of the five-month project. In November parent volunteers began teaching the giraffe curriculum once a week in Terri Bond's and Stephanie Hagalin's third-grade classrooms. The students read about and researched heroes like Abraham Lincoln and Harriet Tubman. Then they wrote essays about the personal heroes in their lives.

"I learned a hero is someone who does things out of the kindness of their heart, for no reward," said 9-year-old Devon Humphries. "I've learned new ways to be kind, and how a human giraffe can impact people's lives in a powerful way."

Fort Benning family finds bundles of joy on highway

Homes found for eight new family members

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Two weekends ago while driving home to Fort Benning from southern Georgia, Renee and Nathan Gray were blessed with eight tiny bundles of joy. Since then their lives have been in a bit of disarray.

While the story seems reminiscent of Bobbi McCaughey and her amazing septuplets, there is one major difference — the Gray's bundles of joy are of the furry persuasion.

When Renee said she saw what looked like a teddy bear on the edge of the road she urged her husband to pull over. There on its side lay a box, and when Renee opened it she found a cluster of puppy eyes staring back at her.

The eight puppies which the Grays believed to be a lab and shepherd mix were scared, dehydrated and malnourished. Without thinking they loaded the pups up and brought them home.

Renee admitted that her first reaction was that of amazement. She said she was stunned that someone could leave a boxful of defenseless animals on the side of the road. Then it hit her that she had eight dogs to take care of and she wondered what she was going to do.

After bathing the fluff balls that night, the Grays gave them food and water and that's when they realized just how bad off the animals were.

"We fed them and they fought for the food and water, but after that they just laid down, they weren't acting like puppies."

Renee worried about the pups and even feared they may have had parvo, but once the neighborhood kids came around and handled them, she said they started to come out of their shell.

"When the neighbors started handling them they began to play around and act like puppies again. I think the human contact did them good. They have come a long way."

Of course, acting like puppies again came at the expense of a good night's rest. Renee said each night she and Nathan had to get up every two or three hours to feed the pups and change their paper.

After all the work of getting the energetic hounds back into tip top shape, the next step was to find them good homes.

Because the Grays are getting ready to PCS to Germany they knew they had to kick it into high gear.

Immediately they took pictures of the adorable pooches and circulated it on the internet.

They even made a trip to Atlanta where five of the puppies found new homes.

After more than a week of looking and hoping, the Grays said a fond farewell to the last puppy on Wednesday.

Even after all the work, Nathan who just finished the Bradley Leaders Course, said he grew fond of the puppies.

"I had no problems with them," he said. "I was telling her (Renee) that if we had a bigger place and we weren't moving we'd probably keep one."

Renee said it is her love of animals that kept her from taking the easy way out and just dropping them at a shelter.

"You want them to have a good home, not just a home," she said.

"I get it (love of animals) from my mom. She has eight or nine acres in Jackson, (Ga.) and if there's a stray, the neighbors are calling her. She has 15 dogs, along with horses and cats. If it's stray and it comes to her house it has an open invitation. We're just big animal lovers."

Now the Gray's are able to PCS knowing they helped save the lives of eight adorable creatures.

Even after sleepless nights and all the hard work, Renee said she doesn't regret her choice. She is just glad she was able to get to them in time.

Work with sitters to prevent child abuse

Rebecca Welch
Family Advocacy Program

April is Child Abuse Prevention Month.

To help prevent child abuse, here are a few tips on what parents should expect from child care providers:

• Ongoing communication, open access to the home or center and frequent updates on your child's progress.

• Loving care, responsiveness, stimulation and attention to building your child's self-esteem.

• A safe and healthy environment.

• Honesty. Caregivers should share information about problems or accidents. They should pay income taxes and meet all legal requirements.

• Acceptance of your wishes on matters such as discipline, seat belt and car usage, TV watching, food, toilet training and smoking.

• Advance notice of changes, such as in hours or costs. You should have between a month and six weeks notice if a caregiver can no longer care for your child.

• Support for your family. Caregivers should not be critical of your family's lifestyle or values and should not be involved in family disputes.

They should respect your religious beliefs and cultural background.

• Acceptance of you as the most important person in your child's life. Advice should be offered in a non-critical way.

• Assurance that everyone in contact with your child is trustworthy, properly trained and continuously supervised. This includes caregivers' friends and relatives, custodial help, transportation workers and visitors.

• No surprises. Your childcare provider shouldn't suddenly announce that her teen-age daughter will be watching your children three afternoons per week, nor should a favorite day-care teacher disappear without explanation.

Here are also some tips on what providers should expect from parents:

• Open communication. You should clearly explain your wishes and provide information on problems, on changes at home and about your child's routine, activities and preferences.

• Agreement on terms and arrangements (fees, hours, etc.) in writing.

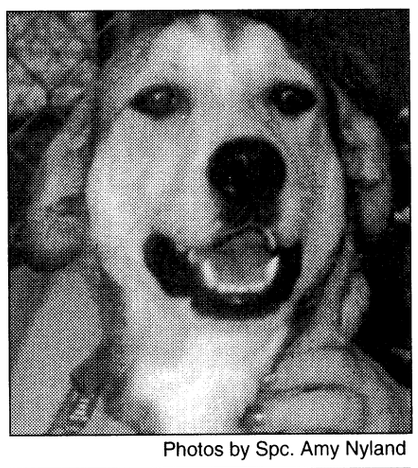
• Honesty and trust. Show your trust by asking questions and not jumping to conclusions when you have a concern.

• Advance notice. Provide a month to six weeks notice of changes in your childcare plans.

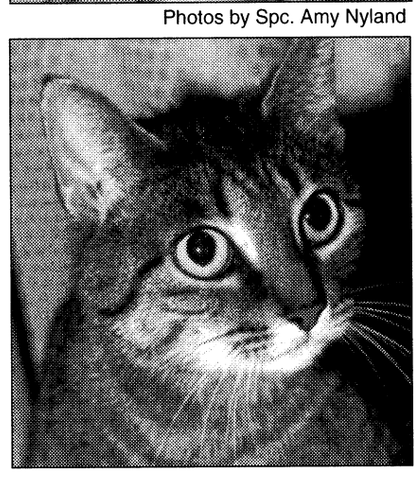
• Consistency. Pick up your child on time and follow through on agreements. If you are to supply diapers or other items, bring them before they are needed.

• Healthy children. Agree in advance about when you can and cannot bring a sick child.

• Payment on time. Your caregiver provides for his or her family with this income.



• Respect your caregiver as a professional. Taking care of children is his or her profession and a demanding job.



Value your caregiver because he or she is an important person in your child's life.

• Understanding and support for your child's feelings toward his or her caregiver. A child who spends hours with a caregiver should love that person, but this person should not diminish how your child feels about you.

• No surprises. Caregivers don't like surprises any more than parents do. Caregivers should know ahead of time about changes in your childcare needs and about your concerns.

Patrick Chauvey
Directorate of Public Works

The U.S. Army and Fort Benning will observe Earth Day Saturday. This special day has been celebrated worldwide for almost three decades.

It is an opportunity for all of us to ponder what Mother Earth has done for humanity and think of ways to show our appreciation and gratitude. The fast and furious pace of modern life leaves most of us with too little time and occasions to appreciate the wonders of our natural surroundings.

One of the purposes of Earth Day is to promote environmental awareness, along with certain aspects of conservation, pollution prevention, and environmental management.

This year, as in the past, the Environmental Management Division of the Directorate of Public Works has had the lead in sponsoring the events associated with Earth Day. In an effort to expand the benefits provided by this opportunity, EMD decided to spread the various Earth Day related activities over most of this month.

The program kicked-off with a birdhouse project April 7-8. The project consisted of assembling and decorating wooden birdhouse kits provided by EMD and installing them along the Fort Benning Riverwalk. This project received ample participation from the Fort Benning School System, Youth Activities as well as local Boys and Girls Scouts and is considered a success.

During the week of April 16, the showcase window in the Infantry Hall main lobby was decorated by EMD with displays relating to the spirit of Earth Day. This year, a special emphasis was given to a nature interpretation trail to be added to the Fort Benning Riverwalk.

This is EMD's latest ambition. The majority of this project will be funded and constructed by various volunteer organizations. Its design is already available for review. Any on-post organization interested in participating is encouraged to contact EMD. This is also a perfect opportunity for Eagle Scout projects.

Also a special program will be held in conjunction with Earth Day and Arbor Day at McBride School on April 28.

Every year, Earth Day is also an opportunity to recognize Fort Benning individuals or organizations that have made a contribution to the quality of Fort Benning's environment, by either performing their duties in an exceptional manner or by accomplishing an exceptional task. The winners are selected by a team of EMD program managers who have first-hand knowledge of the individual's performance and accomplishments.

This year's recipients are:

• Dan Hudson and Curtis Williams, DPW employees, for outstanding performance of duties in the management, operation and maintenance of the Fort Benning water treatment plant, sewage treatment plants, and related distribution and collection systems.

• Andy Carroll, DOL employee, for outstanding performance of duties in the management of the Aviation Division hazardous and toxic materials and waste programs.

• Russell Goodwin, DPW employee, for inventiveness in the system design and realization of a hazardous waste fluorescent bulbs accumulation points.

• Lorraine Thomley, MEDDAC employee, for outstanding performance of duties in the management of MACH hazardous and toxic materials and waste programs.

• Staff Sgt. Hughes, special assignment DCA, for exceptional involvement in post beautification projects and nuisance wildlife population control.

• Bob Osbourne, DCA employee, for outstanding performance of duties in the management of all DCA Division's hazardous and toxic materials and waste programs.

• Sgt. 1st Class Brian Finch, RTB, for outstanding performance of duties in the management of the Brigade's hazardous and toxic materials and waste programs.

This year, as an innovation to the traditional recognition program, the Garrison Commander has directed EMD to select various Fort Benning organizations for possible nomination as candidates to the 8th Annual Community Awards Program sponsored by the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission.

All entries must be received by KCBC by Thursday. Winners will be announced at an award luncheon on May 11.

The following Organizations were selected:

• 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Battalion (OCS), for postwide community service projects, in the Beautification Award category.

• 63rd Engineer Company for the upgrade of Russ Pond, in the Community Improvement Award category.

• 29th Infantry Regiment for Post policing in the Litter Prevention and Cleanup Award category.

• Directorate of Community Activities Recreation Division for the new Uchee Creek pier in the Community Improvement Award category.

• McBride Elementary School for woodlands education projects in the Community Improvement Award category.

[redacted] wish the best of luck to these well deserving organizations. They will be recognized along with the other Earth Day Recognition Award winners for their outstanding environmental stewardship.

Club protects environment

Vicki Rogers
Dexter Elementary School

On any given day, you may see children from one of Dexter's three environmental clubs as they go around campus picking up litter, watering plants, posting ecology signs or planting various gardens.

For the past three years, Dexter students have prepared raised gardens and flower beds in our courtyard area. Their efforts earned them the prestigious Gateway Schools Award from the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission during the 1998 and 1999 school year.

The clubs are currently building a school-yard habitat, which will be dedicated on Earth Day. This habitat will be home for frogs, toads, earthworms, goldfish and butterflies. This particular project is being implemented by the e-Club.

The e-Club is Dexter's environmental club for kindergartners and first graders. They learn the importance of protecting the earth and conserving our limited natural resources.

This active group meets weekly to recycle newspaper and plastic, and to do litter patrols. The e-Club was established in 1994 for the purpose of raising students' awareness of positive environmental stewardship.

Third graders at Dexter are part of an club called Earth Watchers. This club was established in 1998 to raise the environmental awareness of third and fourth graders.

The main objective of Earth Watchers is to help the students realize that they can each make a difference. The club motto is "Caring begins with personal responsibility."

Earth Watchers conducted a pop-top collection and recycling contest throughout the school to benefit the Ronald McDonald House.

Dexter fifth grade students are members of the GreenThumbs. These students help care for our campus green house.

They grow and plant flowers for use in landscaping and beautification projects. They also plan and implement our Gateways School projects.

Each year, The GreenThumbs take an active role in the Help the Hooch River clean-up. Since GreenThumbs are the oldest environmentally aware students in our school, they take a leadership role when working with younger schoolmates.

At Dexter our campus beautification plan is an ongoing project. It takes the dedication of all three environmental clubs. The real fulfillment can be seen in the faces of these students as they follow Dexter's motto, "Working together towards tomorrow!"

Fifth-graders perform musical

Vicki Rogers
Dexter Elementary School

"I would do it again and again and again!" exclaimed fifth grader Brian Watts about the recent Strawman's Jubilee, "The audience loved it!"

Strawman's Jubilee, Dexter's fifth grade musical production was written and directed by performing arts teacher Cy Dietrich.

The plot centers around two scarecrows, Scat and Shooby, who are searching for a new way to chase birds from their garden using psychology.

The musical is filled with lively songs and dances to include This is a New Generation, an original song created by Dietrich, to explain the arrival of psychology in Scat and Shooby's bird chasing.

Sittin' in the Moonlight was created to slow the pace and change the mood of the moonlight party.

The dances in the musical were creative and the jokes were funny, said John Lusk, "I liked the fact that I was performing with my friends."

And what did these kids learn about their production? "A lot," said Quenten Almeida, as he described how the scenery must be moved and the characters dressed and ready to go on stage.

"I learned that it takes hard work and dedication," he said.

Patrick Herold agreed.

"I learned to project my voice to make it loud enough to be heard in the back of the audience, and I learned that if you mess up, you just keep going and the crowd will never know," he said.

GreenThumbs complete projects

Vicki Rogers
Dexter Elementary School

What do you do on Great American Clean-up Day? GreenThumb environmentalist, Meggan Bond said, you could construct and put up birdhouses along the post's Riverwalk.

Materials for birdhouses were supplied by DPW to the clubs, and students assembled and decorated their houses.

This project is part of Fort Benning's Earth Day 2000 celebration.

The birdhouses were installed April 8 as part of the Great American Clean-up activities. Making the birdhouses gave all of the students a great feeling of pride.

"I feel really good about helping to create habitats for birds," said Bond. We decorated the birdhouses and learned the necessary requirements to ensure birds will use the new birdhouses."

But their work didn't stop with birdhouses. Students from these environmental clubs also participated in a campus clean-up as well.

"I am so excited about the work of these clubs," said GreenThumb's club sponsor Linda Turner. "These opportunities help our young people realize that their efforts really do make a difference."

Dexter students make quilt as tribute to beauty of nature

Vicki Rogers
Dexter Elementary School

Students from Dexter Elementary School recently completed a quilt that promotes environmental conservation.

This quilt was truly a work of cooperation and love. It incorporates the artwork of several grade levels of students.

The fish in the river were drawn and hand colored by third graders onto regular construction paper and then scanned into the computer.

Then they were printed out onto transfer paper and ironed onto the tie-dyed river.

The colors the students used blended in marvelously with the dye to make the colored fish look like real fish in a river.

The flowers were made by first-graders. They drev heart-shaped flowers onto material and colored then with markers.

Then the backs were covered with sticky material an ironed onto the brown fabric, which represents the bank of the Chattahoochee River.

The smiling trees along the background were sponge painted by kindergartners who drew in the smiling faces

They also stamped on the leaves and happy-face turtles, frogs and butterflies.

We chose the title "Happiness On the Chattahoochee because of our focus on helping the earth and th Chattahoochee River stay happy and healthy.

We owe a special "Thank you!" to Ann Horn, one o Dexter's dedicated kindergarten teachers.

Without her creativity and expertise, we could neve have made this quilt.

Ducharme: Achieves dreams end until 11 every night."

Despite the grueling schedule, Nina was able to maintain good grades at Stowers Elementary, where faculty and students made sure she was kept abreast of their current studies.

"I had performed at school last year, so they knew this was something I wanted to do. Mr. Hughes (Glenn Hughes, principal) and Mr. Murrey (David Murrey, teacher) were so supportive. They sent my school work to me and I worked with a tutor every day. Mr. Murrey kept a folder in the classroom for me and when he was passing out work, my friends would say 'Don't forget to put one in there for Nina.'"

After returning home in March, Nina said she decided it was time to "take a break and get back to the business of being a kid again." Though her parents allowed her to make that choice, they both supported her decision.

"I realized that we take so many things for granted, like sitting in your favorite chair and watching your favorite TV show and being together as a family," Bonita said. "It got to the point where we were ready to take our lives off hold."

Her father's biggest concern was Nina's adjustment to a regular school environment.

"I was a little worried about how the other students would react to Nina when she returned," she said. "In Hawaii where she appeared in commercials, the other kids wanted to talk about that a lot."

"It took the focus off the school work," Ducharme said. "It hasn't been like that at all. It's like she never left. No one makes a big deal out of it."

In fact, it appears that even Nina makes "no big deal" out of her Broadway experience.

"It was a wonderful experience, but it was also a hard task. I cried some. I especially missed my best friend and my dad. There's no place like home."

Sale: Offers shoppers' paradise

One thing that this breed of bargain hunters is known for is haggling for the lowest possible price. "Oh yeah, haggling is good," Bowers said.

"People come out for the thrill of the bargain," Walls said. "It's one of the fun parts about yard sales."

There are a wide variety of items that show up for sale at an event such as this one from clothing to bicycles.

But a few items remain on the "most wanted" lists of shoppers.

"Toys and tools are big sellers," said Walls. "I know from experience that they snap them up quick."

"Fisher Price and Little Tike are really big," Bower said.

Furniture, televisions and microwaves are sought after and for many families starting out, finding these items for cheap, "It's like a godsend," Walls said.

When the sale ends at 2 p.m. and not all is gone from the yard, the Thrift Store on post, 229 Ingersoll Ave., will gladly accept those unsold items as donations. Bring items to the back of the store to the donation room from 2 to 4 p.m. Saturday.

Project: Gives to ARK projects

Participants in the program are required to complete one service project before receiving their diplomas. Dexter students voted unanimously to sell donuts to raise funds for their favorite "giraffe." During Thursday's ceremony they presented music teacher Cy Dietrich with a check for more than $400.

"They decided they wanted the money to go to Mr. Dietrich to replenish the ARK (acts of random kindness) funds. They recognize Mr. Dietrich as a human giraffe because he started the ARK project and he's always doing so much for the school and for others," Hinkley said.

Dietrich said the ARK project is yet another way students can recognize the kindness of others and learn to reach out to people in need. The ARK donated nearly $13,000 to North Carolina flood victims last fall.

Baby wipe warmer recalled

Prince Lionheart product recalled after reports of electrical shocks

Consumer Product Safety Commission

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, Advance Thermo Control, of Hong Kong, is voluntarily recalling 152,000 baby wipe warmers distributed by Prince Lionheart, of Santa Maria, Calif.

A wipe warmer is an electric appliance that warms baby wipes.

Cracks in the interior tub of these wipe warmers can allow water to contact the electrical components. This can then result in consumers receiving an electric shock.

Prince Lionheart has received four reports of electric shocks when consumers touched the wipes in the warmers with cracked tubs.

This recall involves Prince Lionheart Baby Wipe Warmers with style number 0224 and date codes between 9803 and 9901 with cracked tubs. The style number and date code are written on the bottom of the units.

The wipe warmers are white plastic boxes that are 9 inches long, 6 inches wide and 4.75 inches high. "Prince Lionheart" is written on the lid of the warmers.

An orange light is located on the front of the warmers to indicate when it is on. "Santa Maria, Ca., USA" and "Made in China" are written on the bottom of the units.

Toy, department and baby specialty stores, including Toys "R" Us and Burlington Coat Factory, and mail order catalogs, sold these wipe warmers nationwide from February 1998 through December 1999 for about $25.

Consumers should immediately unplug the warmers, remove the wipes, and check to see if the interior tub is cracked.

If so, stop using the warmer immediately, and call ATC for information on receiving a free replacement unit.

If the tub of the wipe warmer is not cracked, the unit is not part of the recall, and consumers can continue to use the appliance.

For more information, contact ATC at (888) 843-8718 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. CT Monday through Friday.

MS:
A Disabling Disease

Multiple sclerosis is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system. Symptoms may be mild such as numbness in the limbs or severe—paralysis or loss of vision. Most people with MS are diagnosed between the ages of 20 and 40 but the unpredictable physical and emotional effects can be lifelong. The progress, severity and specific symptoms of MS in any one person cannot yet be predicted, but advances in research and treatment are giving hope to those affected by the disease.

Easter provides time to overcome defeat of sin

Chaplain (Capt.) Michael Neufeld
203rd Forward Support Battalion

reflections

When I was a child, I looked forward to late Saturday afternoons. I would come in from play at dusk and sit down in front of the television to watch what was then my favorite television program, The Wide World of Sports.

Each week I would join the host Jim McKay and span the globe in search of the greatest sporting events. One week we would visit Kitzbuehl, Austria for the running of the Hahnenkann downhill; the next it would be New York City and the Melrose Games, the world's premier indoor track meet.

The images in my memory are vivid and unforgettable, from a young Cassius Clay defeating Sonny Liston to take the heavyweight title of the world, to an aging Al Oerter winning his fourth Olympic trial in a row on his way to the discuss the Gold in Mexico City in 1968.

One image stands out above the rest and it does not capture "the thrill of victory." It is a young Yugoslav ski jumper who takes a nonscheduled right turn before going airborne, only to stop by bouncing off of many hard objects.

This was the "agony of defeat" and it was shown both at the beginning and the end of each show for more than a decade. I am told that this is one of the most remembered sports images of all time.

But why would this be remembered? I believe that this is so easily called to mind because it speaks so powerfully to our own situation.

Born to know the true freedom that comes from an intimate relationship with the living God, we have veered off the true path, harmed ourselves horribly and are unable to get back on the right track. Surely we have all tasted the agony of defeat.

There is good news however and it is proclaimed powerfully through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ which we celebrate this week.

Good Friday and Easter Sunday together constitute the holiest time of the year in the Christian calendar because they call to mind the very essence of the Christian message.

The Gospel of John tells us that "God so loved the world."

Such love was expressed, not merely through word, but through the powerful deeds of God in Christ. Jesus Christ went to the cross, experiencing what for all appearances was the ultimate defeat.

However, His death was, and is victory to us. He brought our sinfulness, weakness and brokenness to the cross only to destroy their power forever. Not only that, he crushed the very symbol of our defeat, death itself, when He rose early on that Easter.

This is a time of great celebration for Christians the world over.

We who have known the defeat of sin and the resulting alienation from God, now joyfully proclaim the ultimate victory which is ours in Christ who died and rose, all for love of us.

Avoid money pits with teamwork

Chap. (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries Center

Rupel

Gary and Amanda were pursuing the American dream of owning their own home. They found their dream house and although it was a little more than they could afford, they decided to go ahead. Besides, Amanda could always go back to work.

They soon discovered buying a home also meant having to furnish it. It was so easy to buy now and pay later. Too easy. Before long, they found themselves in deep debt.

Gary had to take on a second job to help pay off their mounting bills and Amanda took to working overtime.

Then the unexpected happened, Amanda found herself pregnant. Their first child was born and Amanda wanted to stay home and raise their newborn daughter but finances would not allow her to.

Having a child and paying for its care is expensive. There was never enough money and soon Gary and Amanda found themselves arguing almost every day over money.

The American dream was quickly becoming a nightmare for this couple. They were caught in a money trap and could not get out.

This story is far too familiar with a couple I work with. In fact, money is the number one issue couples argue about.

In his book, Romancing the Home, Ed Young wrote, "The Bible says more about money than it does about heaven or hell combined, and amazingly relevant principles regarding money management, stewardship and budgeting."

When we begin to realize that whatever we own is not ours but in truth belongs to God then I believe we can start the road to financial responsibility.

God expects us to be good stewards of what He provides to us.

We need to learn that there is a difference between a want and a need.

While Gary and Amanda needed a place to live, they let their want take precedence over their need. The result, financial problems which in turn produced other problems.

John Wesley said, "Make all you can! Save all you can! Give all you can!"

Couples can meet these three admonitions if they make a budget they can live with.

Quoting Ed Young again, "Drawing up a budget can teach couples a great deal about how they view money, and requires them to establish financial goals at the outset."

Budgeting also helps couples discern between needs, wants and desires.

Most couples get themselves into trouble when they put wants and desires ahead of needs.

You may want a BMW, but need a Tercel. Learn to know the difference.

God expects us to be good stewards of what He has given us. Do not fall into the trap of putting your wants ahead of your needs. Be faithful to use wisely what God has given you.

Soldiers team dominates championship

Army triumphs over other services in 6-0 victory

Master Sgt. Mike Briggs
American Forces Press Service

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas — The Army women's basketball team won all six of its games in dominating style to capture the Women's Armed Forces Basketball Championship April 11 for the ninth year in a row.

A strong rebounding game and swarming defense propelled the Soldiers to the championship with an average margin of victory of 35 points per game over the Air Force, Marine Corps and Navy competition.

The Marines posted a 4-2 mark to finish second, the Air Force was third with a 2-4 record and the Navy ended the double round-robin tournament fourth at 0-6.

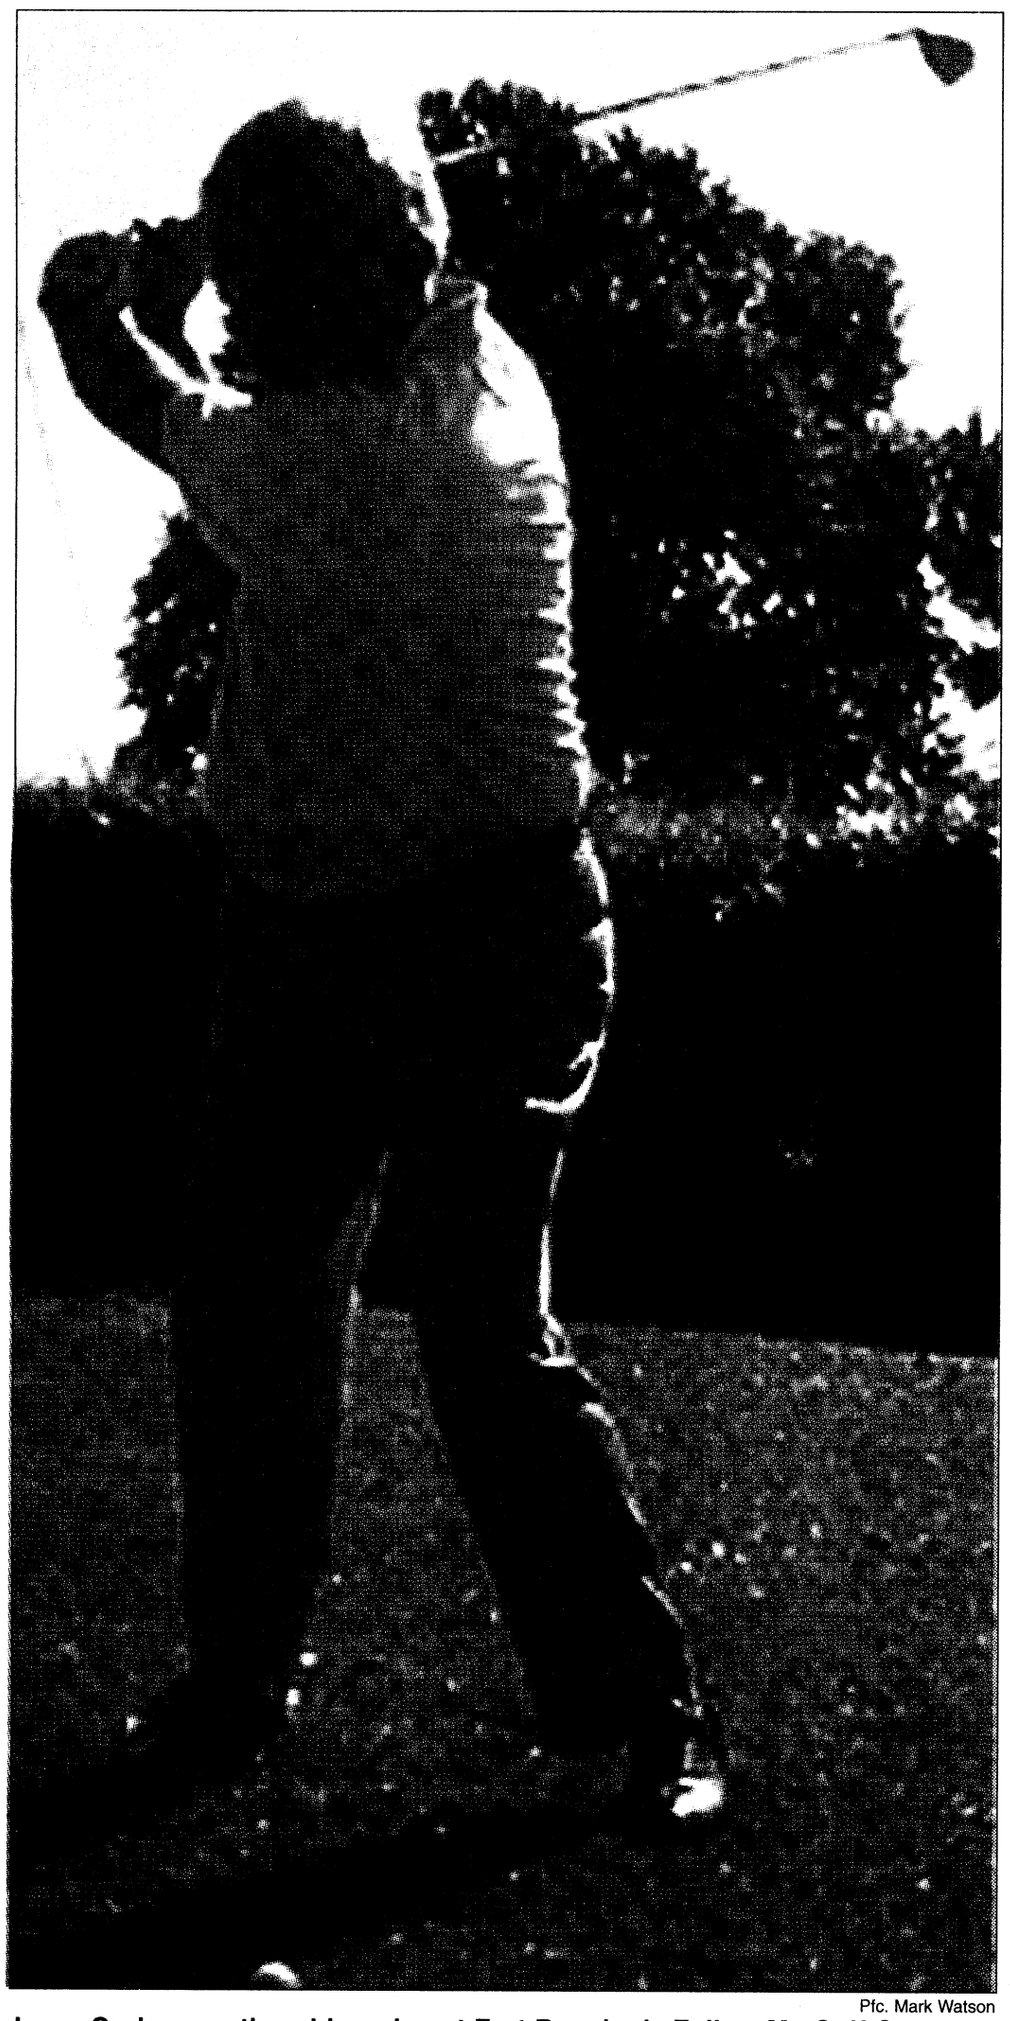
"The key to our success is we never relax," said Sgt. Sylvia Williams, Army center. "I don't care if we have a 20- or 30-point lead. We never relax." The six-year Army player from Fort Hood, Texas, credited her coach, Master Sgt. Johnnie Pickett, for preparing the Army women.

"We worked really hard before we got here," Williams said. "We have a real tough trial camp. We try to schedule our team against teams that are better than us, and it prepares us for play at this level."

Pickett, from Fort Hood, said he has no problems keeping his players focused during the armed forces rivalry.

"We understand that we're representing 495,000 Soldiers in the Army, so it's easy to stay motivated when you think about that," said Pickett, who has been the Army head coach for 10 years.

The Army women have dominated the interservice basketball competition since its inception in 1978 with titles in 21 of the 23 previous championships.



Five players were picked for the championship all-star team. Williams was selected as center; 1st Lt. Carrie Wood from the U.S. Air Force Academy, Colo., and Army Reserve Pfc. Evetta Crawford-Herring of Texas were picked as forwards; and 2nd Lt. Kallie Quinn from Ellsworth Air Force Base, S.D., and Cpl. Teri Jones from Marine Corps Air Station Yuma, Ariz., were named guards.

The all-stars, minus Wood, and eight others selected for the armed forces team traveled April 12 to compete in a national pro-am tournament in Florida. Rounding out the squad were Capt. Kim Kawamoto of Fort Meade, Md.; Sgt. Sharon Lyons and Spc. Coretta Chenault, both of Fort Hooc Spc. Carolyn Conkleton of Fort Jackso S.C.; Spc. Felicia Griffin of Fort Bennin Ga.; Pfc. Akilah Rone from Kaiserslaute Germany; Senior Airman Kerri Wilburn c Moron Air Base, Spain; and Marine Corp Staff Sgt. Carlotta Moore of Camp Butle Japan.

Coaches were Pickett and Tech Sgt. Angi McCullough of Robins Air Force Base, Ga

Golf Course welcomes new pro

Pfc. Mark Watson
Larry Cruise practices his swing at Fort Benning's Follow Me Golf Course.

PGA member arrives, hopes to promote golfing

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The Follow Me Golf Course has a new golf professional with more than three decades of golf experience to help golfers with the game.

Teeing off for the first time in 1967, Larry Cruise has been a Professional Golf Association member since 1987. Most recently, he comes from Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., where he was the director of golf. He plans to bring his golfing knowledge here now that he is in charge of golf operations.

"I hope to promote golf here and re-establish customer relations," Cruise said.

Although Cruise has been here for a little more than one month, people are pleased with his work.

"He's great. The customers seem to really like him," said Roger Garrity, general manager of the golf course. "He has come up with new marketing techniques and the shop is stocked better." He also patrols the course on the weekends and keeps the play flowing freely.

Cruise began as the golf pro on March 16 and hopes to get more people involved in the game. Soldiers and civilians alike have the opportunity to play on Fort Benning's Pineside and Lakeside courses with 36 holes of play and attend clinics to help them with their game.

"On April 22 and 29, there will be beginner clinics held, which teach swing and golf etiquette," Cruise said. "We give lessons to individuals and groups. We also give a no-cost clinic to units that come out."

"On April 22, the clinic will be for active-duty Soldiers," said Garrity.

When Fort Benning's schools let out, the golf course will also be giving summer golf lessons to youths. To get more people involved in the game of golf, the course is also sponsoring a day of free golfing once a month for all active duty Soldiers on Fort Benning.

"We are getting comments from the members who like what (Cruise) is doing," said Garrity. "The requests for lessons have even risen since he arrived, and I am very pleased with his work."

Cruise invites everyone to come out to the course and give the game a try.

"(The golf course) is a great place where Soldiers can come and play, and it is an activity everyone can participate in," said Cruise. "Golf is a game that you don't have to be good at to have fun."

Army boxer gets second chance at 2000 Olympics

Tim Hipps
Fort Belvoir Eagle

Staff Sgt. Olanda Anderson's Olympic dream was resurrected April 14 when USA Boxing officials released 178-pound Olympic hopeful Michael Simms from Team USA for disciplinary reasons.

Simms' dismissal reopened the ring for Anderson, who won the 178-pound championship at the U.S. Olympic Boxing Team Trials Feb. 9-13 at Tampa, Fla.

Two weeks later, Simms twice defeated Anderson in a 24-hour span during the U.S. Olympic Box-offs at the Foxwoods Resort Casino in Mashantucket, Conn., where Simms stole Anderson's 178-pound spot on the 2000 U.S. Olympic Boxing Team.

Simms was released from Team USA last week for repeatedly missing curfew and failing to obey coach Tom Mustin's instructions during training camp at Colorado Springs, Colo., and at the America's qualifier in Tampa March 27-April 1.

Simms already was on probation with USA Boxing for his behavior during training camp at Colorado Springs in preparation for the 1999 World Championships at Houston, Texas.

An eight-man USA Boxing board voted April 11 to remove him from the team.

Anderson got the official word on Friday after Simms was allowed time to appeal the decision, which he did not.

"I feel for Simms," said Anderson, who never showed any compassion for his arch rival in the ring. "But now I have a chance to redeem myself. I thought it was over for me, as far as amateur boxing and the Olympics.

"I was just moving on with my life and I got the call (about Simms). I was out of boxing shape, but I was excited. I said, 'Yeah, I'll give it another try.'"

Anderson departed from the Arco Olympic Training Center in Chula Vista, Calif., near San Diego, on April 16 for a Central America Olympic Qualifying Tournament at Tijuana, Mexico.

There he must reach the final bout of his weight class to earn a trip to Sydney, Australia, to represent Team USA and the U.S. Army in the 2000 Summer Olympic Games.

As an alternate, Anderson's disposition wasn't the greatest in training camp as Simms' sparring partner.

But he found new resolve upon learning that he would get another shot at boxing Down Under.

"I have a chance to redeem myself — to show my stuff again," said Anderson, who readily admits that he didn't exhibit his best stuff during his nightmarish weekend in Connecticut. "Now I have a chance to go to the Olympics."

At the Foxwoods, Anderson lost 11-7 to Simms on Friday.

He then tossed and turnec throughout the night, crying instead of sleeping before their crucia rematch on Saturday afternoon which Simms won, 12-5.

"I was tired — mentally tired,' Anderson said after that crushing setback "I just didn't have anything left to win it. Maybe it wasn' meant for me to win it."

The Infantryman was ready tc hang it up and go back to his military job.

But the Sumter, S.C., native took 10 days of leave from the Army, got refocused, then reported to the U.S. Olympic Training Center as Simms' alternate.

USA Boxing officials said the 29-year-old Anderson appeared ready to rumble when he left for Tijuana.

His first fight Tuesday against Colombia's 178-pound amateur champion.

The top two finishers in each weight class advance to the Summer Games.

Anderson said he planned to take on the match like it was any other.

"I'm going to approach it like this is a regular bout," said Anderson, who conceded that Simms won their battle of psychological warfare at the box-offs. "At the box-offs, I let Simms get to me. If I can stay the way I am right now, I'll be all right going to the Olympics.

"I'm not going to let it stress me out anymore. Even if I go to Olympics, I'm going to stay like this. It's just another fight. That's my new attitude.

"All I have to do there is just box, let my hands go," he said of the tournament in Mexico. "That's all I need to do. I've got the experience. I've got all the tools. I just have to start applying them.

"Ain't no excuses. I'm looking to qualify and get it out of the way."

Anderson, who felt he let the Army down at Connecticut, doesn't want anyone second-guessing USA Boxing's decision to release Simms.

"If I don't get a medal, people will always say 'What if Simms had gone?'" Anderson said. "Now, I've got to go qualify and concentrate on getting a medal at the Olympics — a gold medal, preferably."

And he believes the entire U.S. Army is on his side.

"I was bad in camp a little bit, and I had to check myself," the Army World Class Athlete revealed. "Your character does come into play. So does your integrity. All that comes into play, and I've changed all that stuff," he said.

"I sat down and talked to coach and I talked to the other coaches here and they all said: 'We wanted you.'

"Character means a lot. I always thought I had a good upbringing, but the Army helps out with a lot of that."

(Editor's note: Tim Hipps is a staff writer for the Belvoir Eagle and the designated ARNEWS correspondent for the summer Olympics.)

PE teacher retires after 38 years at Faith Middle School

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

With the 21st annual Faith Race behind her, race coordinator Susan Emerson is already looking forward to next year's run. Though she's competed in more than 800 road races and marathons, Emerson has never run in the Faith Race.

"I've been the director since it first began. That never left enough time to run in it," Emerson said. "I may never be as fast as I used to be, but at least I'll be able to participate now. Running has always been a big love of mine."

Emerson is retiring in June after 38 years of teaching physical education at Faith Middle School. Though currently nursing a hip injury, she hopes she'll soon be able to devote more time to running again.

"It's suffering from overuse, probably from bowling," she laughed. "Running might have aggravated it, but it didn't cause it. I'll never blame running."

Although Emerson credits former PE teacher Dalton Oliver with the idea for the Faith Race, she has been the driving force behind the highly successful event since it's maiden run in 1979. She wonders now who will "grab the baton and run with it" after her retirement.

"I don't know who will do it next year. It concerns me but I feel that if it's meant to continue, it will," she said. "I've put in so much time and energy, and I've enjoyed it. But I've reached the point in time where I need a change. It's hard to admit to myself that it's time to step down and let someone else take over. Physically, I don't have as much to offer as I once did."

Emerson speaks and moves with a youthfulness that belies her words. When she's not walking in marathons — she recently completed the Disney and Los Vegas half-marathons — she can be found on the tennis court or running

Adventure to Chewacla for fun

outdoor corner

I don't think I could ever explain the feeling of exhilaration I get when I'm biking. Flying down a path laden with gged rocks, stumps and crevices, the wind hipping through my hair and the possibility iat at any moment I could be sent catapulting ver my handle bars is pure joy.

I must admit that before my first experiences ith mountain biking, I could never understand ow some of my friends were so into the sport.

To me the thought of biking always brought ack memories of my pre-car days when if I eeded to get somewhere my mom would emind me that I had a perfectly fine bike to take ie there. But because my friends are fairly ound-minded people, I decided to trust them nd try out mountain biking for myself.

After I got my first taste I didn't question ieir fascination one bit — I guess you can say I vas been bitten by the mountain-bike bug.

Lately, I am always on the look-out for places airly close to ride. That looking brought me to a ooklet for Chewacla State Park in Auburn, Ala. was delighted to see that the park featured a nountain bike trail.

Chewacla is located off of exit 51 on nterstate 85 South about 35 minutes from Columbus. Just like almost every other state ark it has the usual camp grounds, cabins for rent, playgrounds and plenty of picnic areas and pavilions.

However, what impressed me most about the park was it's trail system. There are at least six different loop and regular hiking trails that take anywhere from 20 minutes to an hour to complete. There is also the mountain bike trail that at times links up with a few of the hiking trails.

Although I didn't spend an extensive amount of time at the park I was able to try out portions of a couple of the trails.

One of the trails I decided to traverse by bike brought me to a tumultuous hill that taught me the finer art of braking. When I finally rolled to the bottom of the hill I said a little thank-you to God for allowing me to escape injury and another thank-you to the incredibly smart person who invented bike brakes.

It was at the bottom that I noticed the unmistakable sound of rushing water. I got off my bike and came upon Chewacla Falls, which connects to Chewacla Lake. I guess this is where I should mention that the park also offers a lakefront beach area with swimming, fishing and boating.

The falls captivated me and I couldn't resist hiking around the rocks down to the water's edge.

Deciding to check more of the area out I hopped back onto my bike only to encounter almost impassable areas of the trail (at least for the bike). I ended up walking my bike back to the upper pavilion where I found a rock trail on another side that provided lots of climbing fun.

Once I finished my rock adventure I wanted to do some more riding. I ended up finding a trail that crossed at the base of the bridge. The trail was moderately difficult, but much more passable than the other. It went for about one to two miles before it came to an abrupt halt. I had fun on this trail, dodging rocks and branches and maneuvering my way over fallen trees. Certain areas were covered in thick wet sand that was almost impossible to ride through. Needless to say my legs got a workout.

While I was impressed with the beautiful scenery and extensive trails, I wasn't too keen on how well the park marked the trails. There are virtually no signs and all you have to go by is a map you get when you enter the park. In fact, half of the time I wasn't even sure if I was on the designated mountain biking trail.

Of course, that won't deter me from going back. Anyone who wants a change of scenery or change of state should think about going out. The park is open daily from 8 a.m. until sundown. There is a $1 per person fee.

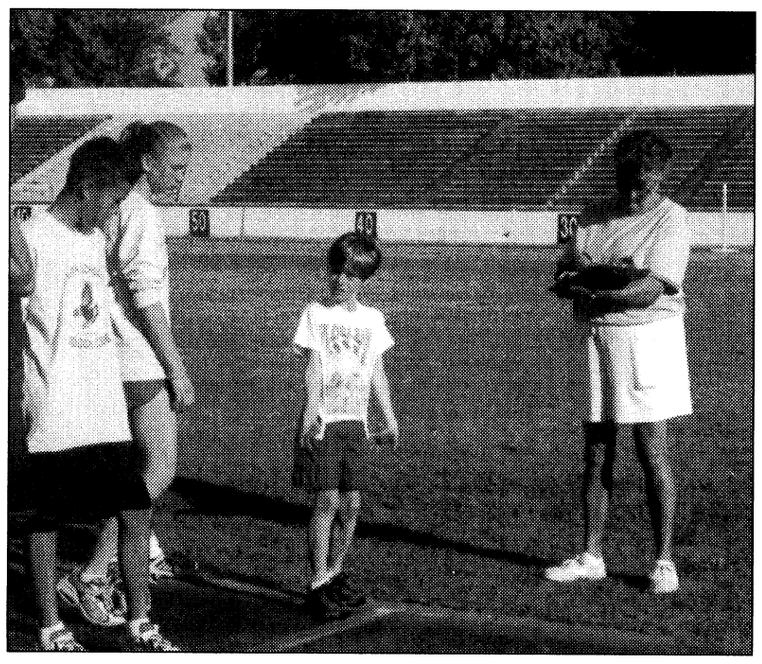
rack. She works with the Columbus Track Club and coaches he Faith Jogging Club.

"I've always been an outdoor person — sports-minded, athletically inclined. My father worked in forestry and he always encouraged my love of outdoors," Emerson said. "But at that time there was no place for women in the field of forestry, so I decided to be a teacher like my mother. Teaching PE allowed me to still be outdoors and stay athletic."

Emerson, a Mobile, Ala., native, moved to Columbus in 1962 when a friend told her about the PE position at Faith. At that time, Faith was located in the current NCO academy and housed fifth through eighth grades.



"A lot has changed over the years. Education just seems to be a continuous cycle. Ideas and methods come and go and come back again," she said. "The biggest difference between now and then is the lack of discipline in our schools. That's not unique to our area. In fact, it's much worse in other areas. But I think TV has a lot to do with it. It influences the way kids act and feel too much."

Despite the trend toward a "more permissive atmosphere in today's school," Emerson said middle-schoolers are still "incredible to work with."

"They shock me with their language. They shock me with what they wear. But they are always different, always forgiving, always fun. I wouldn't have lasted 38 years if I didn't enjoy it."

Co-workers say Faith students and staff will miss Emerson's dedication and professionalism.

"I've worked with Susan for 18 years. She was here when I got here," said PE teacher Jimmy Cochran. "It's going to be tough without her. Personally I don't know how I will deal with her leaving — I guess it won't fully hit me until I walk through those doors and she's not here. We're going to miss her."

Bridget Siter

Susan Emerson works with the jogging club.

Emerson and her husband Jack, himself a retired teacher, will vacation in Florida this summer and a trip to New England in the fall.

"I'll probably do some volunteer work, too — something low-stress," she said. "And I'm looking forward to getting out and working in the yard. And of course I'll get back into running."

Sports briefs

Bank Agrees To Loans For Individuals With Bad Credit!

Columbus, GA. Milton Watts, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Including Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of a new or slightly used car, truck or van either for their family or a business venture.

These are prime, in demand vehicles, that are either repossessed, overaged or a terminated lease situation.

Bankers will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expressway until the end of March. Best of all, cut rate financing will be offered to those whose credit would not normally meet such an arrangement at rates that banks usually reserve for their blue chip clients. Quoting Watts, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing.

Kevin Thompson, Representing the dealership, has arranged for special low payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the cash crunch at the holiday season.

In some cases these payments are ridiculously low. When pressed for an example, Thompson replied, "Well, here is a '95 Elantra 4 door #HS002. With $1 down payment to validate the transaction, your payments to be taken on would be $55 for 60 months at only 9.9% APR with a credit approval process that can take as little as 20 minutes. An incredibly low sale price of only $1,995. Adding only tax, tag, title and WRA make this payment arrangement possible. "Or, if a truck is your thing, then here is a '96 Toyota Tacoma #HS003. Again the $1 down to validate the deal and start making payments on a new bank contract of just $111.89 for 72 months at the same low 9.9% APR with credit approval that may be arranged while you wait. Again, the low monthly payment is possible because of the $5997 sale price adding only tax, tag and title.

"Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

This offer is for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle.

Hundreds of new Chevys including Silverados, Tahoes, Venture Vans, Blazers, Malibus and Impalas are included in this offer. Along with acres of used Chevys, Fords, Hondas, Jeeps, Acuras and Nissans.

Shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much the bank will advance you by calling Mr. Thompson or his assistant Mr. Stallings at 322-8888 OR 1-800-868-1585, 9am to 9pm.

Group continues school protest

Protesters may face jail time for Friday's rally

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Three SOA Watch protesters were apprehended by military police Friday afternoon after illegally entering post and staging a paint-splattering demonstration on the steps of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

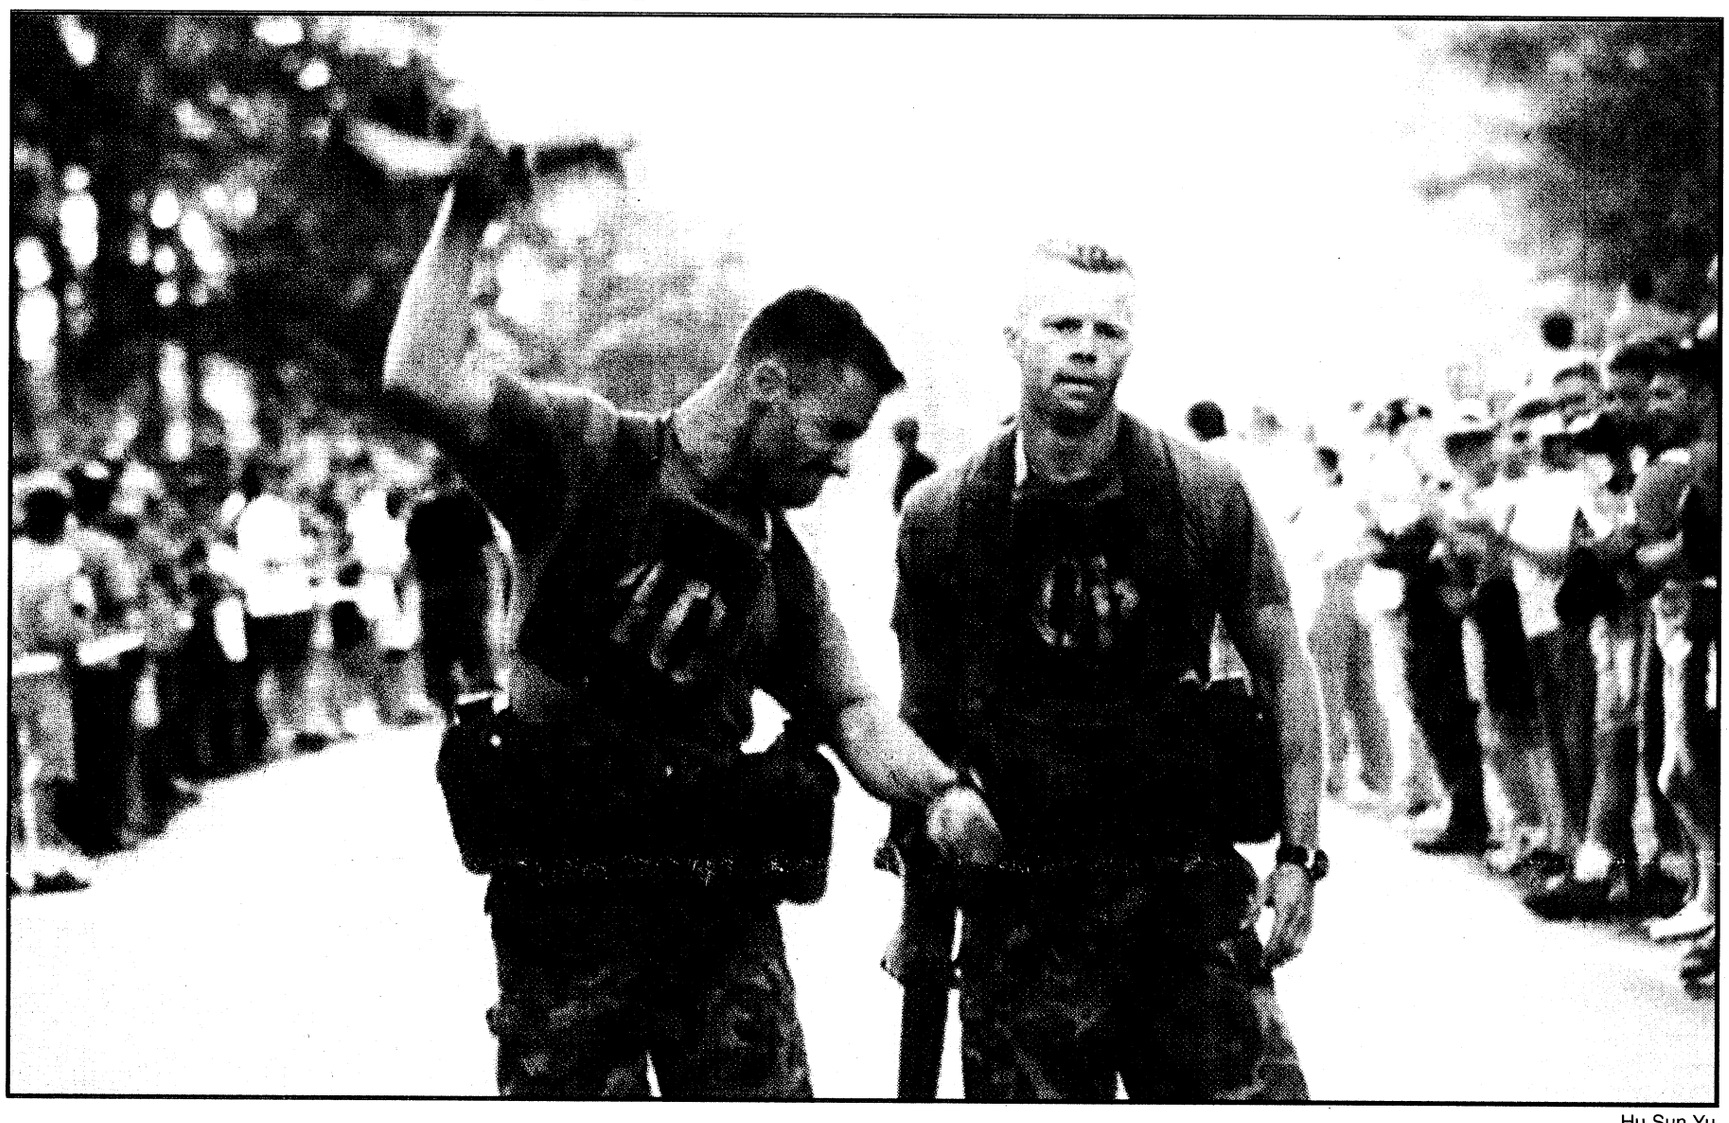
The demonstration was aimed at commemorating the murder of a Roman-Catholic bishop who the anti-school activist group contends was killed by a graduate of the school.

One of the activists, Steve Jacobs, Columbia, Mo., dressed in black clerical garb and lay as if dead in front of the entrance to the school in commemoration of the murder.

Two other protesters, Chrissy Kirchoefer, 22, and Maureen Doyle, 47, both of Columbia, Mo., wore black shrouds and white death masks as they knelt on either side of Jacobs.

The demonstration lasted only 10 minutes, police said, as the demonstrators were surrounded by school officials and Department of Defense police.

Col. Glenn R. Weidner, commandant of the school, invited the trio into the school during the short-lived protest to get an up-close look at what really goes on at the school, but he said the protesters declined and opted to continue with their "street theater."



"The three weren't serious about learning what we do here," he said. "If they wanted to be here, they could have just come to the front door and gotten an inside look at what we do.

"But they chose to do things their way," he said.

Doing things their way may land the three in federal prison for up to six months and fines of up to $5,000 as they face charges of destruction of government property, disorderly conduct and criminal trespassing.

Post prepares to make land swap

Planners ready to trade 2,200 acres with Columbus

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning officials welcomed representatives from six American Indian nations to post April 26 for a day-long conference designed to help smooth the way for the eventual transfer of land between the city of Columbus and the post.

"Our goal was to open a clear line of communication with the Native American tribes," Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander, said.

"I believe we were very successful. We made great progress in opening a dialogue with them."

The American Indians voiced concern about the protection of more than 60 archaeological sites identified on the land the post will turn over to the city.

The land exchange proposal calls for the post to deed 2,200 acres, the North Tract, east of Schatulga Road to the city in return for 2,156 acres, the South Tract, in Chattahoochee County. Negotiations for the deal started more than a decade ago.

The city plans to use the land they acquire for parks and recreation and industrial development; the post will use its acquisition for training.

The American Indians were invited to the post as part of a consultation process mandated by federal law.

All federal agencies are required to consult with American Indian tribes on a government-to-government basis when issues affecting their cultural heritage are involved. Each tribe is recognized as a sovereign nation.

"The main issue for them revolves around the preservation of their tribal heritage. These were the lands on which their ancestors lived hundreds of years ago," Mitchell said.

The meeting in Infantry Hall included Columbus city officials and representatives from the six sovereign nations: Thlopthlocco Tribal Town of Oklahoma, Alabama-Quassarte Tribal Town, the Muscogee (Creek) Nation of Oklahoma, the Seminole Tribe of Florida,

Bargain hunters have chance for big finds

Postwide yard sale welcomes buyers

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

While shoppers count their last pennies in anticipation, sellers stock their carports with unwanted items in preparation for tomorrow's main event — the postwide yard sale.

Although it begins at 8 a.m., many bargain hunters will leave their homes well before then to be at the "right" place by start time.

"We usually head out a little before 8 a.m.," said Nancy Carlisle, vice mayor of East Main Post and third-year shopper at the postwide yard sale.

The prime shopping hours are between 8:30 and 9:30 a.m. even though the sale doesn't end until 2 p.m., she said. "That's when the rush seems to be."

Carlisle is an avid yard-sale shopper who especially enjoys this one on post. "I have been looking forward to this for three months," she said.

Even her daughter likes to get in on the action. "She brings her allowance money," Carlisle said. "She's been saving for about a month."

A serious bargain hunter, Carlisle approaches her shopping spree around the post with a strategy. "We start at the Iron Triangle and work our way out from there," she said.

Carlisle's group of shoppers usually stop when they're either out of energy or money.

The postwide yard sale is offered twice a year: spring and fall. From a buyer's standpoint, Carlisle said the spring tends to be better than the fall because "people like to get rid of stuff before they move rather than after." Families tend to move during the summer time, which makes spring a perfect time to unload excess household goods.

For Molly Ramsey, resident of East Main Post and first-time seller at the postwide yard sale, she wants to get a head start in lightening the load for the next move.

"We're leaving in one year, so I can do this again in the fall if I have to," she said.

She also plans to unload stuff that's gone unused for years. "I'm hoping to get rid of 20 years of accumulation. We're cleaning out a lot of closets as far as clothing and toys and things like that.

"We'll have an eclectic collection (of items for sale)," she said.

Ramsey, who witnessed a great deal of people come through her neighborhood last year, anticipates at least the same turnout.

"There were a lot of cars and a lot of people," she said. "We are really looking forward to it."

In order to participate in the sale, just set up the yard by 8 a.m.

To publicize each sale, put a sign at the end of the road or on a main thoroughfare. Mayors request at the conclusion of the sale all signs are taken down.

If items are not sold, the Thrift Shop on post, 229 Ingersoll Ave., will accept them as donations from 2 to 4 p.m. that day. Bring items to the donation room in the back.

Resolution success brings joy

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

I have done something incredibly remarkable this year. Something that will amaze and stupefy 10 maybe 15 people.

After years and years and years of making and breaking New Year's resolutions, I have finally made one and kept it.

Yes, you heard me right; for more than four months I have abstained from drinking soda, a pretty amazing feat if I do say so myself. Now I know many people may feel inclined to oooh and ahhh and touch me as I pass by, but I must ask anyone who gets a sudden impulse to control themselves.

I will admit I was once your average resolution roller who dished out a laundry list of things I "swore" I was either going, or not going, to do. I think my earlier record for keeping a New Year's resolution was a week and two days, and even then I was thrilled.

I would love to tell everyone my recipe for success but the truth is I just don't know. Maybe after years of flexing my will power muscle, it finally is strong enough to resist temptation. But, if that was the case, I could have resisted stuffing my face with that delicious red velvet cake yesterday.

In my opinion, New Year's resolutions are a waste of time. Basically they are just a way for people to makes themselves feel better after the rigors of the holiday season. My theory is that by promising to lose 10 pounds or not swear as much we can trick our brains into forgetting for a moment that our $5,000 credit card bill will be arriving any day. By making resolutions we are able to focus on trying not to break them, rather than what we can break when the bill does arrive.

I guess once the bills arrive our brains are forced to accept the reality. Most people I know who make resolutions are only able to keep them for a week or two. Notice that bills usually arrive a week or two into the new year. Coincidence? I think not.

So once the bills come, we automatically feel miserable and no longer need the promise of keeping a resolution to keep our spirits up.

I don't know why this year was different for me — I still had bills to pay and I managed to keep my resolution. Maybe it's best not to over analyze a good thing. Instead, in honor of my success, I've decided to help other people by compiling a short list of things people can do to help keep their resolutions. Here are just a few:

• Attach small electrical devices to your entire body and every time you feel the urge to break your resolution, send a couple hundred volts of electricity searing through your body.

• Convince yourself that if you don't keep your resolution your mother- in-law will move in with you permanently.

• Move to another state so the bills cannot find you.

I hope these have been helpful and next year may you enjoy the same success that I have.

Ranger baby makes grand entrance

commentary

Jacob Earl Nesbitt knows the secret to making a grand entrance. Timing is everything. My mom used to say it's always best to arrive just after all the festivities begin. That's exactly what "Big Jake" did.

Weighing in at 10 pounds, 6 ounces, Jacob made his grand entrance April 28, just a week past his due date and right after the "festivities" began at the 18th annual David E. Grange Best Ranger Competition.

Four miles into the opening run, Officer Candidate Mike Nesbitt received the call he'd been expecting. Wife Cheryl was in labor with baby number three, a boy this time, who was anxiously awaited by his two big sisters, Claire and Brittney.

Cheryl and Mike and his teammate, Officer Candidate R.J. Casey, had already discussed the possibility of labor putting an end to Mike's first and R.J.'s second attempt at the title.

There was never any doubt that Mike would walk, or as it turned out, run away from the competition to be at Cheryl's side during labor. I believe his exact words were, "This (family) comes first. This is what's really important. There's God, family and then all this stuff."

A former Sgt. 1st Class, Nesbitt proved himself to be a first-class Soldier and a top-notch dad. It would have been easy to justify missing Jake's birth for the sake of the competition. No one would really have faulted him. Lots of Soldiers miss the births of their children. It's a job hazard. And of course he had a partner to consider. They had trained together for months.

Which brings me to the unheralded hero in our story. Casey had competed before. His first teammate suffered heatstroke, disqualifying them both from competition. Surely Casey entered this year's contest with his teeth gritted and his heels dug in the sand.

And again this year he walked away with "nothing but a T-shirt." He couldn't claim a trophy or a baby!

Casey exemplifies everything a Ranger stands for. He did the right thing when there was nothing in it for him except the certain knowledge that he had done just that. I nominate him for the role of best supporting character in this drama. He not only supported his teammate's decision to join his wife at the hospital, but he also went along for the ride.

Sally Shutt

Proud papa Officer Candidate Mike Nesbitt holds Jacob with his Best Ranger partner OC R.J. Casey.

And what a ride it was! No, he didn't get his hands on a trophy, but he got to wrap his arms around a 10-pound gift from the Ranger God.

Someday when Jake is old enough to understand, Cheryl will tell him the story of his birth. And when he goes to bed at night and says his prayers, he'll thank the God of the Rangers — the God of moms and dads and babies and buddies — for the Best Ranger Dad in the whole world and his Ranger buddy, too. And he'll end his prayer with a hooah.

SJA picks Law Day essay winner

As an African-American youth I can deeply identify with the importance and impact of diversity on America.

In the past, I have talked with older relatives of how their childhood was tremendously different from my own. They have described to me the hardships, tribulations, and the derisive society that they, and many others, had to overcome to get where they are, but it is because they live in a democracy that they were able to do so. For if they had not lived in a democracy, their lives and mine would have been drastically different.

Therefore, I come to the conclusion that evidently diversity and democracy go hand and hand.

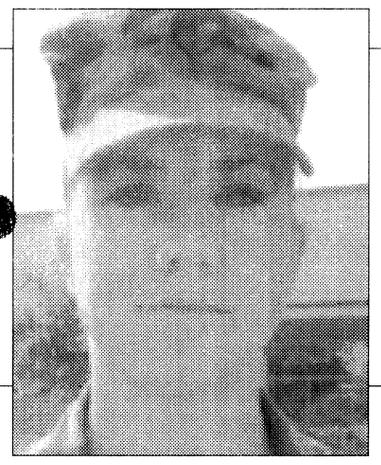
It is because of our democracy that we as the people who govern over it are able to change, get rid of, and make laws. Such laws that rule against discrimination against anyone because of handicap, age, illness, color, or any moronic excuse someone could come up with to condemn anyone and keep them from doing as they like, are laws that we as a people, not as separate groups, have put into existence.

It is also because of diversity that we are able to work together as a people to change ignorant and intolerable rules, that would let another human enslave another, or let an employer deny someone a job because of handicap, even though that handicap may not interfere with that person's ability to complete a job to a more than satisfactory level.

America's maxim for the Army is "Be All You Can Be." Because of this, our nation's people have a voice in what goes on. They're able to live this saying out everyday as they speak, protest, petition and vote against those that care to differ.

The people of America say it every time they go to school or work with someone different from them or don't exclude someone because they may have the unfortunate circumstance of being burdened to a wheelchair because of birth defects, that they appreciate and recognize the power of diversity and democracy. We as the people cry out the importance of diversity as we celebrate the different cultures and backgrounds that surround and simultaneously affect our lives.

As a military child, I recognize and realize diversity and democracy in a much brighter light. In that light I see the strongest evidence of democracy and diversity when I think about an unfortunate circumstance of this country going to war.



My dad and many people of many different races, backgrounds, and nationalities will be there on foreign battlefields fighting for our way of life so that we will continue to practice and cherish the thousands of rights and opportunities that are available to us because we live in a democracy. As stated before, democracy and diversity work hand in hand.

Wildlife biologists band, track endangered birds

Red-cockaded woodpeckers get ID tags

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Three Fort Benning newborns received identification bands Wednesday morning. But unlike the ones worn by infants at Martin Army Community Hospital, these will be worn for life.

Wildlife biologists from the Conservation Branch of the Directorate of Public Works are banding red-cockaded woodpecker nestlings this spring in an effort to track the population of the endangered bird. Adult birds are banded in the fall. The nesting season runs from April through July.

"In April we start looking for their nests. Once we identify a nest, we count the number of eggs and check back in a week to see if they hatched," Jonathan Neufeldt, a wildlife biological technician, said.

Neufeldt, using a ladder, climbed about 26 feet up a longleaf pine to a cavity. The cluster was adjacent to a range at the Malone Complex where Soldiers were firing small arms.

Using a special tool with a nylon noose, Neufeldt pulled the nestlings, who were about a week old, from the cavity and carried them down the ladder to weigh and band them.

The birds each weighed about 32 grams.

Each nestling receives two sets of bands. Those on the right leg are color-coded identifying its specific family cluster; those on the left leg number that individual bird.

The goal is to band 25 percent of the active population.

"Each bird is banded uniquely," said Michael Barron, red-cockaded woodpecker coordinator, Conservation Branch. The post's red-cockaded woodpecker technicians use spotting scopes throughout the year to track the birds.

"We can identify a bird without having to recapture it," he said.

The mother lays one to five eggs in the breeding male's roost cavity. The eggs are incubated about 11 days. About 26 days after hatching, the young birds leave the nest.

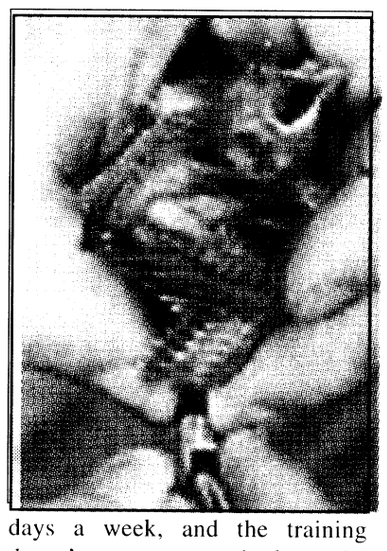
Females usually disperse in the fall and winter, but males either stick with the family group or fly away to find their own territory.

In order for the bird to be removed from the endangered species list, 15 populations in the southeast must expand, and Fort Benning is one of four Army posts recognized as a "recovery population." The others are Fort Bragg, N.C.; Fort Polk, La.; and Fort Stewart, Ga.

Fort Benning's goal is to increase from 158 effective breeding pairs to 250, Barron said.

"We still have a ways to go," he said, citing statistics that show that during the last four years the number has increased from 121 to the 158 pairs today. "Realistically, it could take 20 to 30 years," he said.

Banding the birds is essential to the monitoring. "We want to be able to prove to the Fish and Wildlife Service that we have met recovery," Barron said.

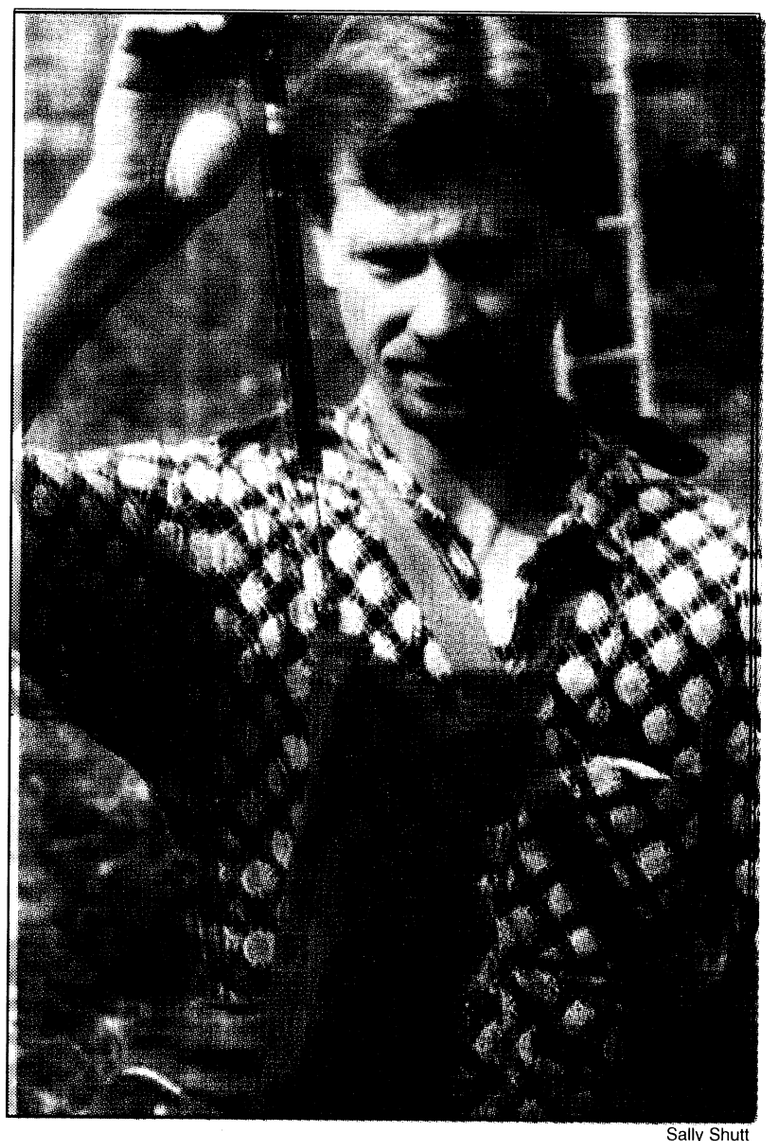


The birds prefer to forage in mature longleaf pine stands. The birds live in family groups, or clusters, with one breeding pair and one or more adult offspring, usually male, serving as helpers. A cluster usually has four cavity trees in various stages of completion.

"They are little engineers," Barron said. "They are always constructing new cavities." It can take the woodpecker up to a year to complete a cavity.

Two white bands are painted on trees that have red-cockaded woodpecker cavities. A 200-foot buffer surrounding the cluster is labeled with single white bands and diamond-shaped signs.

These markings alert Soldiers they have entered an endangered species site."We take steps to make sure troops know what their responsibilities are to the environment and that they adhere to all national, state and Army regulations designed to protect it," Barron said.



The range adjacent to the nestling's tree is used four to seven days a week, and the training doesn't seem to bother the woodpeckers, said Skip Caldwell, range specialist with the Directorate of Operations and Training.

"They co-exist quite well with training there. They hatch their eggs and raise their young and the guys are just firing away," he said.

That situation is unique to that cluster, Barron said. "That was an established range and the birds are reproducing without any negative effects, so we have more flexibility there." In other areas of post, regulations apply concerning troop movement, vehicular traffic and firing of weapons in a cluster.

Interest in the birds is high. Barron will take several McBride Elementary students and their teacher out today to watch nestlings being banded.

Letter carriers hope to 'Stamp Out Hunger' in national effort

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

When you make a trip to your mailbox you might want to think about leaving more than just mail for the your letter carrier to pick up.

In an effort to "Stamp Out Hunger" the National Association of Letter Carriers is holding their eighth annual food drive.

Fort Benning residents are asked to place non-perishable food items and canned goods on or underneath their mailbox by 9 a.m. May 13 for the carriers to pick up.

The food items that are collected will be given to the Army Community Service Emergency Food Locker, said Al Deane, Emergency Food Locker supervisor.

Deane said the letter carriers will make their rounds and deposit the food with an ACS representative at the Custer Road fire station. It will then be taken to the food locker. Representatives will be available at the fire station from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Deane said it is very important for residents to contribute because this is a way for them to help their own.

"We have Soldiers and families that because of various reasons are unable to provide food for their family, and ACS' Emergency Food Locker stands ready to help those individuals," Deane said.

Jerry Hooks, an 18-year veteran letter carrier and effort volunteer said people on Fort Benning may not be aware that everything that is collected on Fort Benning will go to help the Soldiers of Fort Benning.

Even if a Soldier lives off post they may still be assisted by the drive. Of course, the opposite holds true for those who live off post and would like to contribute. He said all they need to do is leave the food at a mailbox and it will be collected.

Columbus and other neighboring cities are also participating in the drive, but everything that is collected goes to the city's prospective food banks.

"I believe most folks who live in quarters are compassionate enough to know there is a need among their fellow Soldiers and are willing to give on that day to help those people," Hooks said. "It's all about Fort Benning helping Fort Benning."

Last year around 6,000 to 8,000 pounds of food were collected on Fort Benning.

Soldiers compete to be called best instructor

Fort Benning's top teachers receive awards at ceremony April 26

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Three Soldiers were honored at an awards ceremony April 26 and were recognized as the top instructors Fort Benning has to offer.

During the ceremony, the most outstanding officer, Senior NCO and Junior NCO instructors were rewarded for their efforts that went above the rest of the teaching community.

Receiving the title of Officer Instructor of the Quarter was Capt. Jack O'Savage, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

Leading the field for Senior NCO Instructor of the Quarter was Sgt. 1st Class William Walker, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Bradley Instructors Course, and the top Junior NCO Instructor of the Quarter was Sgt. Ron Hudson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"It is nice to be recognized for our hard work," Walker said. "Really, it is great to be rewarded for doing what we are supposed to do."

Agreeing that the recognition was nice, O'Savage said he received satisfaction when he received the title.

"I was really satisfied about winning," O'Savage said. "A lot of hard work paid off."

Also happy about receiving one of the awards, Hudson said he was very proud of earning the title.

Although some people may call the instructors overachievers, Walker said he feels that he just does his job.

"I feel that we make a huge impact on the Army, and it is important we do our job," he said.

The three instructors each received the Army Achievement Medal along with other rewards. Their hard work is recognized, said Col. Robert Hoidahl, deputy assistant commandant. Teaching is just part of their work.

"Pitching the class is just the tip of the iceberg," he said. "The preparing and planning of the classes is a big part of teaching."

West Point football coach tours posts, finds what motivates players on field

Todd Berry makes trek to several posts throughout Army

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

To find out what makes his players tick, West Point head football coach Todd Berry is touring several posts across the nation.

Fort Benning was chosen as the first installation on Berry's list of tour sites.

His tour began Monday as he observed the Best Ranger Competition award ceremony. Berry also met with members of the chain of command.

He said he was really inspired by motivation levels of the Soldiers during the Best Ranger Award Ceremony.

"Just from hearing about what these gentleman have just gone through — it's a pretty amazing feat," he said. "I like being around people who are committed to excellence, who aspire to do really great things. These men are the epitome of that."

Berry

Berry said he hopes to get a better understanding of what Soldiers go through when they are in the field instead of on it through his visits.

"It's for me to get educated on the Army," he said. "I think that it's important that I have a full appreciation for what goes on.

"When I have to go into a young man's home, I have to be able to explain what the Army is all about to his parents," Berry said. "From a recruiting standpoint and to better understand the current players on the team, I feel I need to be better educated and this is a great opportunity to do that."

Berry said his interest in the military began when he was in ROTC in high school.

"I've always had a strong interest in it," he said. "My father was in the Army and I have some background so I can appreciate it."

Since arriving at West Point in December from his previous coaching position at Illinois State University, Berry said he can already see some differences in the future Soldiers from his past players.

"There are certainly a lot of nuances about West Point," he said. "The young people coming out of there are just incredible, and the support that is there for them is unlike any other place that I've been."

He added the team has been busy during their first practice session.

"We just finished our spring practice Sunday. We had a good practice," Berry said. "There were a lot of transitions for the young people because we're changing our offensive and defensive systems so dramatically.

"But I'm looking forward to this next fall and maybe being a little more dynamic than what's happened in the past," he said.

During his tour of installations, Berry also visited Fort Sill, Okla., Wednesday, and tours Scholfield Barracks, Hawaii, today.

For those interested in getting Berry's thoughts on what he observes on his tour, he will chronicle his experiences with daily entries on the Army Athletics official web site at www.usma.edu/athletics.

Protesters: Vow to return to post, school

The protest Friday marked the second time this year protesters ventured onto post, and a press release from the group said it won't be the last.

The group vowed to return to post monthly to show their disdain for the school they have named the "School of the Assassins."

Weidner said the demonstrations aren't going to change how the school conducts business.

"We are going to continue to train and improve the professionalism of Latin American Soldiers," he said. "We are teaching peace and cooperation and that is what we will continue to do."

the Chickasaw Nation, and the Poarch Band of Creek Indians.

The city covered the travel and lodging expenses for the tribal representatives.

Letters, along with drafts of the land exchange documents, were mailed to the tribes asking for their input.

The purpose of last week's conference was to discuss the tribes' concerns and how the land exchange proposal could be adjusted to meet their approval, Linda Veenstra, an environmental attorney with Fort Benning's Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said.

In coordinating the meeting, Fort Benning officials had to be conscious of tribal culture, Veenstra said.

"A consultation is a dialogue, whether that is by letter, phone call, meeting or other form of informal contact," she said.

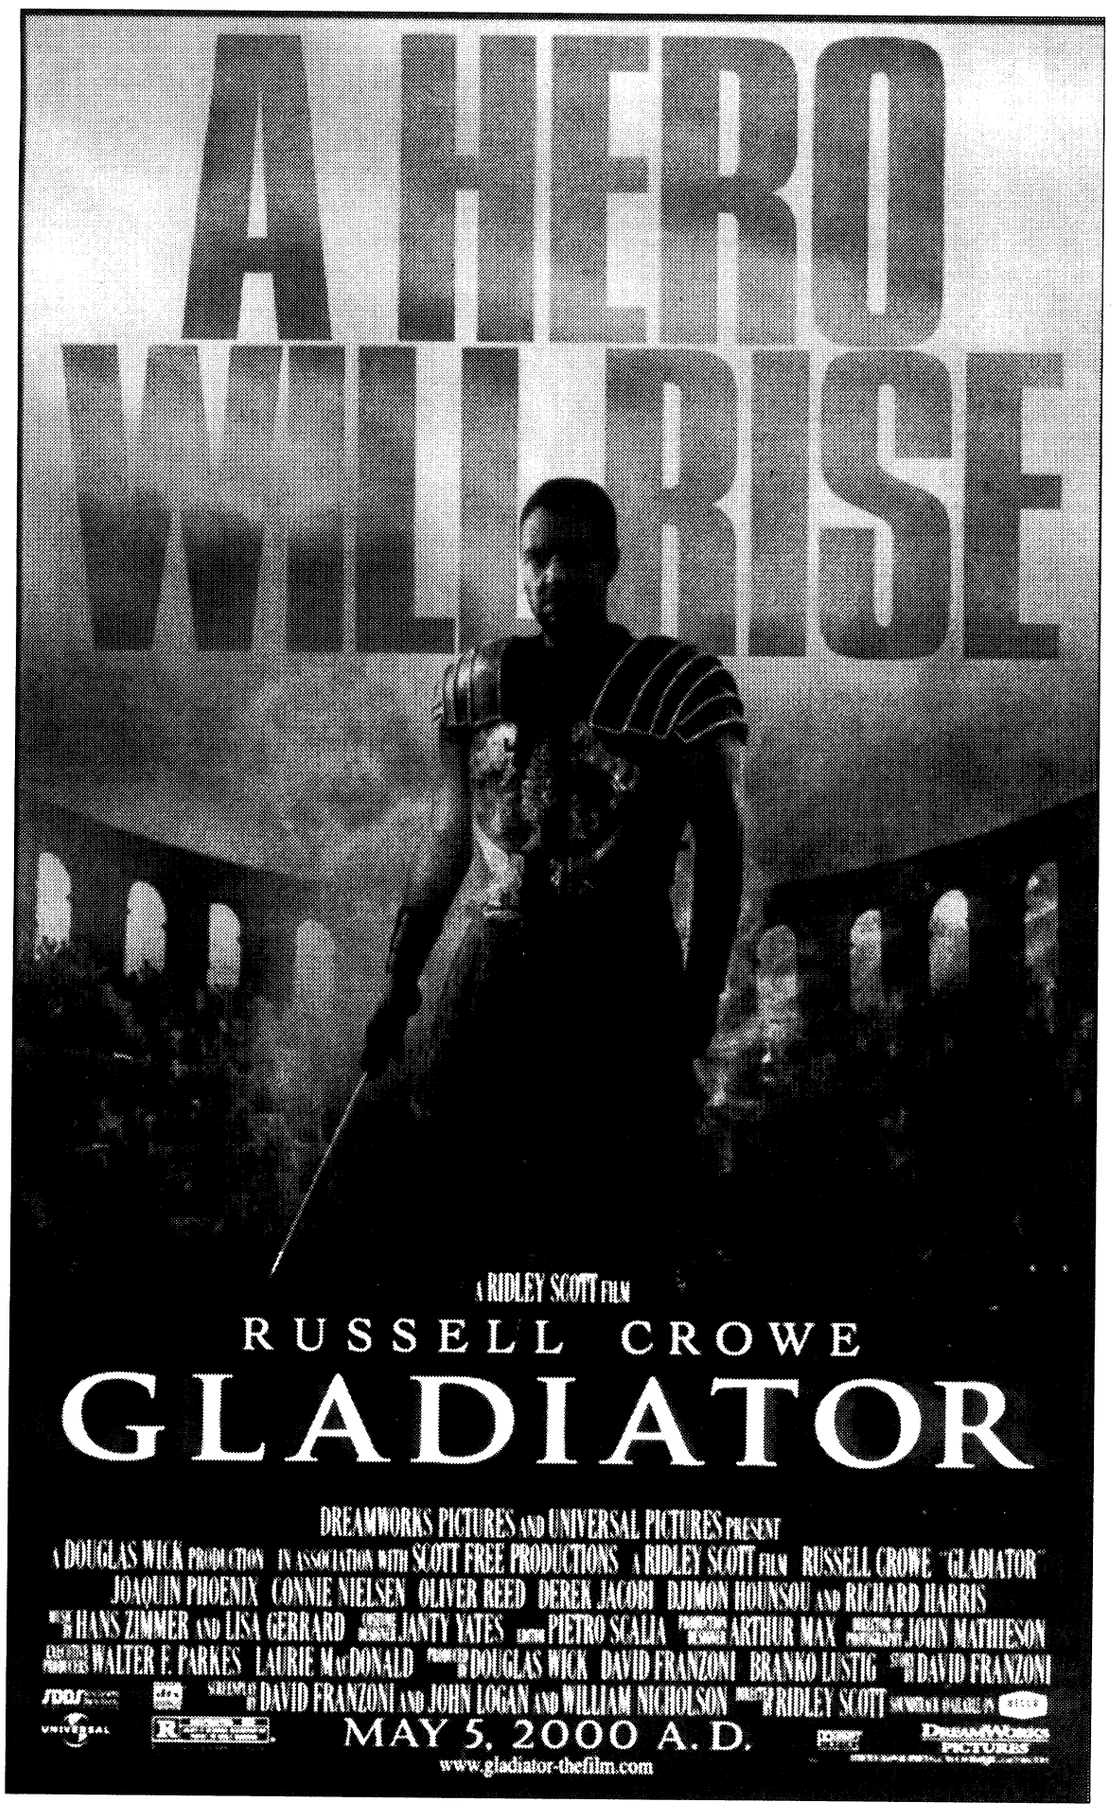
"The Army culture is used to conducting business by letter and documentation, and that is how we would usually start off discussion about a project," Veenstra said.

"What we are hearing from the tribes is the Native American culture prefers a face-to-face meeting."

The main issues covered during the seven-hour meeting included bridging the gap between federal and state protection of the cultural and sacred sites on the North tract.

A time table was set up allowing representatives from the tribes to review the archaeological reports conducted by a consulting firm hired by the city and to conduct their own site visits to the North Tract.

The next consultation meeting is scheduled for early August.



The post hopes to establish a long-term relationship and dialogue with the American Indians that will continue past the land transfer because there may be other areas of development on the post — such as construction of buildings or ranges — that may require consultation with the tribes, Mitchell said.

Along those lines, the Directorate of Public Works plans to offer a class in the future to all interested personnel on Native American culture and consultation issues, said Dr. Chris Hamilton, Fort Benning's cultural resource manager and coordinator for Native American affairs.

"We want to have as sensitive and knowledgeable relationship as possible," he said.

Veenstra agreed.

"It would be beneficial for personnel at Fort Benning to get a better understanding of the Native American culture. We hope to have a good relationship with the tribes for a long time," she said.

Soldiers spend day remembering Holocaust

Post EO sponsors trip for Soldiers, civilians to Holocaust Memorial

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A group of Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians spent Tuesday remembering one of the worst periods in the world's history, the Holocaust, and listening to firsthand accounts from two men who are making sure others never forget.

The post's Equal Opportunity Office sponsored a trip for 43 active-duty Soldiers and nine civilians to the Holocaust Memorial and the William Brennan Jewish Heritage Museum in Atlanta.

The trip coincided with Yom HaShoah, Holocaust Remembrance Day, on Tuesday.

"I will always cherish this day in my heart," Maria O'Malley, a civilian who works at the U.S. Army School of the Americas, said after the trip.

"My desire is that everyone, at one time or another, would visit one of the Holocaust museums."

The group's first stop was the memorial in Greenwood Cemetery honoring the six million Holocaust victims. Benjamin Kirsch, the memorial's architect , spoke to the gathering.

"He told us the story of how the memorial was built, and the meaning he put into it and what it all represents," Sgt. 1st Class Sylvia Contreras, Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office, said.

Contreras was especially moved when Kirsch revealed how he and four other family members escaped from Europe and made their way eventually to the United States. He also shared the horror of discovering that his mother, father, brother and sister had died in a concentration camp.

The group then visited the museum where they viewed the exhibit "Absence of Humanity, The Holocaust Years," and listened to Dr. Morton Waitzman share his experiences as a 19-year-old corporal assigned to the 29th Infantry Regiment in 1945.

Waitzman, a radio operator, recalled freeing prisoners from a concentration camp in Germany.

"We liberated mostly the dead, and others who were almost dead," he told the group.

Deborah Cannon, the Equal Employment Officer for the Department of Defense School System at Fort Benning, will never forget Waitzman's story of U.S. Soldiers giving their rations to the starving Jews who were held there.

"No one had told them what to expect, and they were not prepared for what they would see. They didn't know not to feed them, and many died after that," she said.

For Cannon, the trip was "a stark reminder of why history must be told and studied and why all races should work together so atrocities will not be repeated," she said.

A community Holocaust memorial service will be held at 7 p.m. Monday in the Patrick Theater at the Columbus Museum on Wynnton Road.

The Shoah Foundation's Academy Award-winning documentary The Last Days will be shown. The event, sponsored by Temple Israel's Rabbi Alfred L. Goodman Memorial Fund, is free to the public. The Shoah Foundation, established by Steven Spielberg, chronicles the accounts of survivors and others. Parents are reminded that the film footage is inappropriate for small children. Job seekers have the opportunity to find out what type of jobs are available and compare their job skills with the job market at the Job Fair.

The Association of the U.S. Army and the Georgia Department of Labor are sponsoring the annual Fort Benning Military job fair from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. May 18 in Infantry Hall.

The fair is open to any Soldier (active, retired or separated), civilian employees, and any family members interested in the job search.

It is highly recommended that personnel in the ACAP process or within one year of a separation point attend this important event," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services manager.

Many advantages can be gained by separating Soldiers attending this job fair.

The first advantage is the opportunity to gather information about a wide range of potential employers and potential civilian careers. By talking with recruiters from many companies and agencies, job seekers can compare their skills with the requirements of the positions available. Soldiers can evaluate the advantages and disadvantages of civilian employment and may find that staying in the Army is the best choice, Wight said.

Second, the fair is an opportunity to practice interviewing skills. All attendees should look sharp in their duty uniform or appropriate civilian professional dress.

"Blue jeans and T-shirts are not appropriate for a job fair," Wight said.

Wight suggests job seekers practice describing and selling your skills and experience when asked about your professional background. For those who have attended the ACAP job search workshop, review some of the interviewing material to better prepare.

Third, in regard to submission of resumes and the completion of applications, it is important to remember that there will be opportunities to do that at the job fair. Copies of resumes are not mandatory for attendance but will be helpful to give to selected employers or to help with completing job applications.

Resumes work best when targeted to a specific employer, Wight said. It might be wiser to gather job specifics, company data, and names and addresses of the points of contact and send cover letters and targeted resumes after the fair.

Attendance at the job fair is one of the steps in the job search process.

"If you find employers interested in your skills and experience and you have presented yourself well, be prepared for follow-up action," Wight said. "Many Soldiers have eventually found excellent jobs with companies they first met at a job fair."

Take advantage of this once a year opportunity to get up close and personal with employers.

For more information about the job fair and job seeker strategies, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Pre-scuba offers grueling test in confidence

10-day course weeds out future Army combat divers

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

More than two miles offshore of an unfriendly country, a door on a submarine opens 50 feet below the surface.

Several men dressed in black wetsuits swim out of the dive chamber and into the black sea.

Their mission is to swim to shore, infiltrate a secret military installation, set explosive charges around the base and return to the sub undetected.

Once on shore, the men shoulder their equipment and head toward the base. An hour later they reach the perimeter lined with a chain-linked fence topped with concertina wire.

Digging under the fence, the team moves silently into the sleeping base.

They set 10 C-4 explosive charges on key targets throughout the installation and slip back to their escape route.

Slithering under the fence the undetected warriors leave the objective area behind and return to the security of the sea.

Reaching the water's edge, the team is illuminated by a huge fireball created from their crafty trait.

"Hooah" the team says in unison as they gear up for their long swim back to sea.

Returning to the pick-up site, the team treads water for several minutes until their ride home surfaces off their port side.

Entering the sub, their NCOIC greets them and tells them the satellite has confirmed their targets were completely destroyed.

Although fictional, combat divers train for real-world missions starting in the pre-scuba course.

Pre-scuba is a 10-day selection course that tests and teaches the students on their swimming abilities as well as their water confidence.

The class determines who, if any, will attend the Combat Divers Qualification Course in Key West, Fla.

Pre-scuba, ran by 4th Ranger Training Battalion, has a 100 percent success ratio for the actual qualification course, said Sgt. 1st Class Sergio Rodengen, NCOIC of pre-scuba.

"We graduate everyone who goes to the actual course because of the high intensity class here. We go above and beyond the standards (in teaching this class)," Rodengen said. "It is a grueling process, and only a few are selected to go to CDQC."

> "Less than one percent of the Army is combat diver qualified. In fact there are more professional football players than combat divers."
> — Staff Sgt. James Ryan
> Pre-scuba instructor

Day one for the class of six students from 4th RTB, began at 8 a.m. Monday at the Briant Wells Field House with the students in the water nearly all day.

Becoming human prunes, with carbon dioxide levels rising in their bodies, the students learned how to ditch and don their equipment while submerged. They also learned other tasks that they will be required to perform in Key West.

"During the first nine days, the students will learn about ditch and don, knot tying, 50-meter subsurface swim, 20-pound weight recovery and a 16-pound weight belt swim," he said. "They will also swim 1,000 meters and will add another 500 meters each day till they reach 3,000 meters," Rodengen said.

"They don't have to achieve the standards on the nine days of training, but the must pass all the tasks on the test day," he said.

Even with all the training, the students are only somewhat prepared for the CDQC.

"CDQC may be the toughest course in the military mentally and emotionally," said Staff Sgt. James Ryan.

"There may be tougher physical schools, but CDQC I think is the toughest mentally."

During the five-week course, the students will eat 6,000 calories each day, but will burn off every bit of that, he said. The students are sent through a series of grueling exercises that test their stress limits.

"In one exercise the student is underwater and wearing a blacked out mask. The instructors will wait until he exhales, then they will rip the regulator out of his mouth, tie the hose in a knot so the student is not able to recover it, and then turn off the air on his tanks," said Ryan. "The students have to take off the tanks, turn on the air and recover the regulator and begin to breath again.

"The instructors will allow the student to control his heart rate and then do it again," he said. "In that exercise, the claustrophobia is real bad. It is a really stressful event."

Although Ryan said the students were looking real strong on their first day, most of them will not become combat divers.

"Less than one percent of the Army is combat diver qualified," he said. "In fact, there are more professional football players than combat divers. Last year we only graduated two from the CDQC."

Agreeing that the course is tough, 1st Lt. Fred Cannan said this wasn't the first time he has gone through pre-scuba.

"This is the third time I have gone through," he said. "Everything is going fine so far, but they haven't brought the heat yet."

"The course is tough," he said. "I think it is the hardest in the Army.

3rd Brigade Soldiers attack OPFOR during NTC

Troops secure objective during rotation training

Pfc. Teresa Heist
Fort Stewart PAO

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — Like fireflies at night, the blinking lights of MILES gear could be seen scattered across the Mojave Desert, telltale signs that the battle had already begun. A full moon beaconed overhead, hindering the sleuth advances of 3rd Brigade as it made its attack on Opposing Forces April 18 at the National Training Center.

Beginning with an air assault of light Infantry at 1 a.m. and a dismounted attack at 3 a.m., the mechanized battle began at 6 a.m. when troops crossed the line of departure. Their mission — secure an objective that would facilitate the division achieving its objective.

As dawn broke, F-18 Hornets swarmed overhead. Its crew initiated active air defense measures by dropping flares, better known as "chaff," to deter surface-to-air missiles being fired at them by 3rd Brigade.

By 7 a.m., the task force had fulfilled the training mission's aim, the battle ended and the after action reviews began.

One of the difficulties encountered during the morning attack was getting through the desert passes.

The terrain was difficult to traverse in an M-113 Armored Personnel Carrier because of the many "waddies" (large trenches where rainwater drains), said Pfc. Patrick Wissling, combat engineer, A Company, 3rd Battalion, 17th Engineer Brigade.

"I learned that I should use the map a lot more," Wissling said. "I probably would have taken another route."

Some were successful enough to make it through the entire exercise without getting "killed."

"We didn't die — we lived another day!" exclaimed Spc. George Diaz, driver, Bradley Command Track Fighting Vehicle. "We shot down two attack Hind 24 helicopters."

"The training went real well," said Sgt. Robert Edwards, squad leader, A Company, 3rd Battalion, 17th Engineer Brigade. His unit provided engineering assets to Apache 130. "We helped Apache 130 do some stealth reaches, which is where they try to breach without being noticed," explained Edwards. "It went as planned." Edwards said that according to what an observer controller told him, this is the first time in 17 rotations that such a large quantity of firepower was still left at the end of an attack, considered a "win" in the record book.

> "As a commander, it's stressful figuring out where you're having problems. You never have enough time to get everything done."
> — Capt. Nathan Haas
> Commander, B Co., 1st Bn., 30th Inf.

In NTC training, it's not whether one side wins or loses, it's how much is learned in this force on force maneuver training using miles instead of real bullets. The training is designed to be challenging, unpredictable and parallel with a real combat situation.

Bringing 4,500 soldiers to train together takes a lot of detailed planning, and presents leaders with one of the more difficult challenges in their military career.

"We did some great things out here today," said Capt. Nathan Haas, commander, B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry. "As a commander, it's stressful figuring out where you're having problems," said Haas who is currently on his fourth NTC rotation, but his first as a company commander. "You never have enough time to get everything done. You really have to have your stuff together. The unit has to be able to do a lot of different things at the same time. Time is the most challenging factor facing leaders."

Haas explained that although the training can be stressful, he did enjoy his participation in the battles. "It's a lot of fun actually," he said.

Ironhorse Division fields new M2A3 Bradley

Army's newest Bradley steps above older one

Spc. Kimberly Bethel
Fort Hood PAO

FORT HOOD, Texas — A Fort Hood unit is the first to field the Army's newest edition of the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

The M2A3 Bradleys rolled out of West Fort Hood and into the motor pool of 2nd Battalion, 8th Infantry Regiment, 4th Division. Fourteen of these first 16 will go to B Company, and the other two will belong to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, said 1st Lt. John Wilson, executive officer for B Co., 2nd Bn., 8th Inf. Regt.

The battalion began testing them last summer while in the field for gunnery and is now the first battalion in the Army to field the new A3s.

Soldiers from 2nd Bn., 8th Inf. Regt., are currently attending a 42-day course covering the new Bradley. After they have completed the course, they're packing up and heading out to the field to break them in and get them dirty.

Wilson said all of the A3s are scheduled to be outfitted with the "Force XXI Battle Command Brigade and Below" digital communications system by mid-summer. FBCB2 is the system which provides situational awareness for all levels of command on the battlefield.

There were several improvements and modifications made to the A3 from the Bradleys being used by a majority of the Army, according to officials.

Most of the modifications to the Bradley took place inside the vehicle and its turret, said Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Isaac, a Bradley instructor. Although the turret of the A3 is smaller than the A2's, additional components and software have been installed increasing the A3's ability to "shoot, move, and communicate."

According to the Army's M2A3 Operator's Course syllabus, functional improvements were made to the A3's electrical power system, Nuclear Biological Chemical protection system, 25 mm enhanced gun system, situational awareness capability and its navigational systems.

Electrical power to the A3 is segregated such that many of the components in the A3 can continue to operate despite the failure of other components. Power is supplied by a 400-ampere voltage and current-regulated generator connected to six hull batteries and one 24-volt turret battery.

The syllabus describes the 25 mm enhanced gun system as having two types of barrels, nitride and chrome. The gun uses the chrome-lined barrel to compensate for the higher temperatures when firing the new depleted uranium penetrator and other service ammunition.

Removable link bridge plates have been installed on the feeder, replacing the old permanent bridge plates to ease the removal of jams and aid in cleaning out debris and dust build-up.

Also, the manual safe switch will now travel approximately 30 percent beyond center when placed in the fire position to prevent the switch from jumping back to the safe mode when firing a weapon.

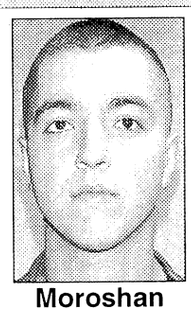
The troop compartment has also been reconfigured and can accommodate 10 Soldiers, consisting of a three-man crew and seven dismounts, according to Staff Sgt. Victor Irving, a Bradley commander assigned to B Company, 2nd Bn., 8th Inf. Regt.

The dismount squad leader now has his own display screen in the back of the A3 so that he and his dismounts can see what the Bradley commander and gunner see through their sights.

The BC will now have the added advantage of a "target designator" enabling him to bring his gunner's line of sight or view of the battlefield online with his own at the push of a button. This way if the BC sees something on the battlefield in another area, the BC can change his gunner's sight picture instantly.

One of the best innovations, according to Wilson, is the A3's on-board diagnostics capability. The A3 executes a system-level built-in test on power up and continually monitors system status while power is applied. Malfunctions are displayed on the commander's tactical display to alert the crew of potentially dangerous faults.

According to the syllabus, pre-mission and preventive maintenance checks and services are built into software to make it easier for the operator to maintain the system.



In the event of a failure which the crew cannot correct, Irving said, maintenance personnel no longer have to lug around six boxes of test equipment and a series of more than 13 technical manuals in order to troubleshoot the vehicle. The vehicle diagnostic and maintenance software provides embedded diagnostic and maintenance capability.

Improvements to the sights, combined with the advent of the squad leader's display, voice and data radios, digital maps, alerts, malfunctions and digital messaging, provide the A3 with situational awareness capability never used before in any other Bradley Fighting Vehicle, according to officials.

A larger gas particulate filter system was employed in the A3, along with additional crew stations and heaters, to provide NBC protection for the entire crew, both mounted and dismounted.

The invitation read "Faith Middle School cordially invites you to our Bed and Breakfast, Saturday, April 30 — come work in our flower bed and we'll feed you breakfast!"

Thirty-five adults and students responded to the invitation. They showed up early, wearing straw hats and sun glasses, and stayed until the last flower was planted and watered in the new "Tierra Sparks Memorial Garden."

Tierra, the 16-year-old daughter of Willie Sparks, an electronics mechanic for Fort Benning Schools, was shot and killed by her jealous boyfriend, 19-year-old Jerry Wynn, April 4.

Shortly after her death, members of Faith's school-home partnership program decided to plant the garden in her memory.

"The idea was really two-fold," said assistant-principal Angie McPherson. "It's a wonderful way to beautify the front of our school — something we've been planning to do anyway. Secondly, and most importantly, we wanted to pay tribute to the daughter of a fellow employee that we all know and love."

Fantastic Flora, of Seale, Ala., donated 20 flats — more than 1,000 flowers — for the garden, and horticulturist Catherine Cole, a Faith Middle School parent, designed the arrangement. Employees, students, parents and community members worked four hours Saturday, breaking just long enough to enjoy the food and drinks provided by the Fort Benning Burger King and Sam's Club of Columbus.

"Everybody wanted to have a hand in this because Mr. Sparks is a truly beloved employee," said Cindy Givens. "He does so much for us here at Faith. He's a 'not say no' kind of guy. We all love him and this is our way of showing him how much we care."

Seventh-grader Jasmin Millett arrived 45 minutes before the scheduled start of the event.

"I just wanted to get an early start so we could make sure it was all done right. It's good that someone wanted to do this in honor of Tierra. I never met her but I did meet her dad," Millet said.

Givens said a plaque will be placed in the garden in Tierra's memory.

Club dedicates new eco-habitat

It might come as a surprise to hear the words "habitat," "ozone" and "environment" come out of a child's mouth; or hear him express concern about the Earth's future and want to make a difference.

But at Dexter Elementary School, it's different.

The school's "courtyard" was filled with buzzing students April 28 at the Earth Day Celebration sponsored by the e-Club.

While waiting for the program to start, many students couldn't help but look curiously at the event's main attraction: the eco-habitat and its surrounding gardens.

The eco-habitat is a type of water garden consisting of a pond and surrounding flowers. A crossover bridge adds ambiance as well as allows the children to gaze into the pond and view the habitat from above.

"The e-Club worked all year on this project," said Vicki Rogers, principal of Dexter Elementary School. "It's home for a variety of things: toads, snails and butterflies."

In a dedication ceremony the e-Club named the pond after Ann Wintrich, a parent who donated her time to the project. She helped to get donations and materials to make the pond happen, Rogers said.

The e-Club children also joined hands encircling the habitat and sang a song of appreciation to Wintrich thanking her for the Wintrich Pond.

Becky Schrader, a neighborhood parent, also was honored by the e-Club for her dedication to the greenhouse and the garden projects. "I love to garden and came in to help the kids," she said. "The kids love to do it (garden) and they all wanted to do this."

She said she made sure all the plants were watered in the greenhouse and helped transplant them from carton to soil.

"The greenhouse is important because they can have it forever," she said. "There's room for kids to learn."

Schrader said they also are planning to do a fall garden. "It's so warm in Georgia, you can plant at that time of the year."

As a part of showcasing the e-Club's latest project, the Earth Day celebration was a means to communicate the importance of respecting Mother Earth and conserving her resources.

The program included an overview of Earth Day in America citing its date of inception: April 22, 1970, and some of the e-Club members from the kindergarten spoke their tributes to the habitat.

"I like the habitat because it

McBride students celebrate Earth Day

McBride Elementary School held an Earth Day celebration April 28. Despite the cool temperature, students, teachers and special guests assembled outdoors to plant a tree alongside the entrance to the school.

Winners of the school's Earth Day poster and essay contest joined Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander, in dumping the first shovel of dirt on the Southern White Oak, which was provided by the Directorate of Public Works.

"This is the second year we've participated in McBride's celebration of Earth Day," said Lou Smith, chief of operations, DPW. "The kids love it. They understand the environment and the whole idea behind Earth Day. We consider it an honor to join them in their celebration."

During the gathering, the second- and third-graders sang How Does Your Garden Grow?, and Mitchell addressed the assembly, explaining the dual purposes of the ceremony.

"We have these kind of ceremonies to congratulate people who have done a really good job, like our winners in the essay and poster contests," he said. "And we have ceremonies to focus our attention on something important, like caring for our earth. McBride has a reputation for being sensitive to our earth and concerned about our environment. I want to congratulate you for giving something back to it."

Third-grader Stephanie Smeltser said, despite the cold, she enjoyed Friday's celebration.

"I think having this today is a good idea so people will remember to celebrate taking care of our earth," she said.

Youth Services lock-in leads to laughter

Comic keeps fun in the air for local teens

Karen Taylor

The added attraction to this year's Fort Benning regional lock-in was definitely a laughing matter.

Scott Francis, aka The Great Scott, performed an hour-long comedy-magic show revealing the many jokes he literally had up his sleeve.

He began the show by borrowing a dollar from a member of the audience. He proceeded to turn it into a $20 bill and then made it disappear. It wasn't until the audience playfully demanded back the dough that Francis magically found the dollar in a boy's sleeve and returned it to its rightful owner.

He used volunteers from the audience to do balloon races, card tricks and even to lure a "snake" out of a basket.

For one trick he used two chaperones and he tried to make a card disappear in each of their hands. He didn't succeed in making the cards disappear and while the audience groaned at a failed trick, he surprised them by revealing that he stole their watches.

For the finale, he had an audience member put him in a straitjacket. Music played while he made his Houdini-like escape. Before long, however, the music started to change tunes from Mission Impossible to Smooth Operator and his escape turned into a variety show as he pulled props from underneath the straitjacket, including puppets.

"If you don't like comedy as much, there's the magic. I call it a sort of shotgun approach. If you don't get them with something, you get them with something else," Francis said.

"My main objective is to entertain you, to make you laugh. I don't care if I fool you (with the magic)," he said.

In many cases, "not fooling" the audience was the funny part of the skit.

During one trick, Francis claimed to be a black belt in karate. While blind-folded he said he would accurately punch his index finger through a playing card after the deck is thrown in the air by a blind-folded volunteer.

When she threw the deck too

Kids go on trial during national Law Day

More than 300 Faith Middle School students were present at the April 26 trial of accused seventh-grader Justin Scott, who faced criminal charges on harboring an illegal substance in his school locker. Notably absent from the proceedings was Scott's classmate, Zachary Doolittle, the 12-year-old accused of supplying the marijuana.

Before a packed courtroom, principal Dr. Tom Dignan took the stand on behalf of the defendant, voicing doubt as to whether "a really good honor roll kid like Justin would knowingly traffic marijuana in school."

But prosecutor Brenda Hain reminded Dignan and Judge Rick Parker that it was Dignan himself who requested the military police search on March 20, a search that netted an undisclosed amount of marijuana packaged in a brown wrapper and hidden among the books in Scott's locker.

"The evidence shows, beyond a reasonable doubt, that not only did Justin put the package of marijuana in his locker, but he also accepted a bribe from his classmate to do so," Hain said. "Justin accepted $50 from Zachary Doolittle, a young man previously convicted in the state of Alabama for soliciting marijuana."

The proceedings took less than 45 minutes, and following a very brief recess, Parker returned a guilty verdict and sentenced Scott to 30 days in a youth detention facility.

Scott showed little emotion as the verdict was read.

As for Doolittle, the student who allegedly bribed Scott, he has yet to be charged with any crime in connection with this case because, well, he doesn't really exist.

"Completely fictitious," Dignan said with a grin, when asked to account for Doolittle's whereabouts. "He doesn't even exist. He's just a character in the skit who's presence wasn't really required here today."

However, Justin Scott does exist, and the 12-year-old honor student played his part well in Wide-eyed and wary, Fort Benning fifth-graders visited Faith Middle School last week for a preview of sixth-grade academia.

Dr. Tom Dignan, Faith principal, and school counselors met with students and parents from each of the five elementary schools during three orientation sessions.

Following a tour of the building, the students were given an opportunity to ask the important questions that nag adolescent minds during the transition to middle school.

"What do we do if we forget our locker combination?"

"Do we really have to take a shower after PE?"

"When is the first school dance?"

Dignan said such questions are typically what he hears during the annual orientation, but he expects to hear more critical concerns when he makes follow-up visits to each school in mid-May.

"They tend to ask questions about the school itself, not the classes or the academics," Dignan said. "That comes later when they've had time to reflect on their visit.

"Then we go to each school so we have more time to interact with them in smaller groups and hear any concerns."

Dignan and counselors Fred McCraw and Gerald Madler each introduced the students to various aspects of middle school life.

They explained rotating schedules, dress codes, bus safety and disciplinary policies.

"The transition from elementary to middle school can be very frightening and stressful for students and their parents," Madler told the students. "Life will be very different from anything you've experienced before — suddenly you have to remember schedules and locker combinations. At the same time, you're experiencing many emotional changes.

"We want you to know that you can talk to your counselor at any time," he said. "That's what we're here for — to work through any concerns you might have."

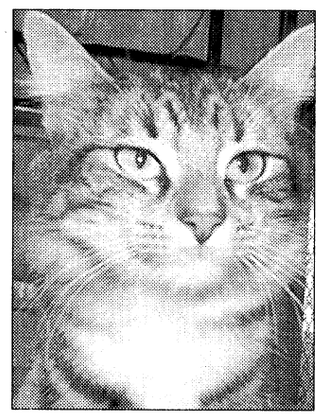
Sherry Dignan, a counselor at Stowers Elementary, said parents should also stay attuned to their children's concerns during the summer before they become start middle school.

"Going over there to visit the school is such a great thing," she said. "The teachers and administrators always put their minds at ease."

"They handle every question individually," she added. "But if questions or fears arise over the summer, visit the school again.

"There is always someone on duty in the office. Parents should put their own minds at ease and help alleviate any worries their kids have."

Ten-year-old Justin Lord visited Faith on Tuesday with a group of students from Wilson Elementary.

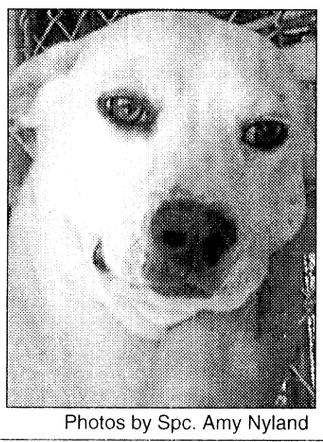


"I'm looking forward to coming here because we get our own lockers. That's cool," he said. "But I'm nervous about the dress code. We'll have to tuck our shirts in and wear belts all the time."

Kyle McKibben, an 11-year-old Stowers student, said the prospect of being a middle-schooler is exciting.

"When I was little, I was always looking forward to growing up. Now here I am going into middle school already. It's like, wow, this is pretty exciting," McKibben said.

Overwhelmingly, the single greatest concern expressed by the students was the size and layout of the school.



"I would tell you not to worry but you'll worry anyway," Dignan laughed. "We haven't lost anyone yet. We'll take good care of you all."

Pets of the Week

A 9-month-old female domestic long haired cat and 6-month-old male mixed breed dog are just a few of the animals available. Many more are in need of a good home.

Patch Preschool holds registration — Patch Preschool will hold open registration for 3 and 4 year olds for the 2000-2001 school year Monday from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.

Children must be 3 years old by Oct. 1 and fully potty trained to be eligible to attend.

Children must be first registered with Central Registration. Documents needed to register are a current Child Care Card, birth certificate, an up-to-date shot record and a current Leave and Earning Statement.

For more information, call 687-2402.

AFTB offers classes — Army Family Team Building will conduct Level III classes through Thursday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Courses and materials are free. AFTB classes are held in Building 395 on Ingersoll Avenue.

For more information call 545-5377.

Utility deposit changes — The Utility Coordination Center, Building 2633, now has five phone lines with direct access to BellSouth, Columbus Water Works, Georgia Power and United Cities Gas Company.

There are no longer customer service representatives or paper waivers for deposits, though deposits can be waived for those with a good credit history.

Club: Protects environment

provides a home for the earthworms," Brittany Britt said.

"I like the vegetable garden best because I like to plant them and they are good for you, too," Christopher Refer said.

"I like the habitat because we grow plants here and growing plants helps the Earth," Corey Williams said.

"I like the habitat because it provides a place where other students can learn," Tyler Lewis said.

The gardens surrounding the eco-habitat, planted by the students with the help of parents and teachers, included herbs, vegetables and wildflowers plus a special Honor Garden dedicated to the 18 students who started the e-Club.

The e-Club is a group of kindergarten and — now for the first time — first-grade students that do different projects related to the environment and preserving Mother Earth.

The purpose of the club for the children is "to teach them to be good students of the Earth," Rogers said. "We need to teach children at a young age to be good students of the Earth."

Rogers said the e-Club and its many events wouldn't have been possible without Earnestine Ezekiel, the kindergarten teacher at Dexter Elementary who's in charge of e-Club.

The club has regularly scheduled meetings every Tuesday and Thursday before school, from 8 to 8:30 a.m. and campus watch on Friday during school.

Tuesdays are the business meetings run by Debra Roman, president of e-Club. Here, members discuss future events and projects.

Thursdays are recycling days where the children bring recyclable items from home, mainly newspapers and plastics.

Omari Anyabwile, a first-grader at Dexter, is the recycling supervisor. He's in charge of the final report and said recycling is what he likes the best about e-Club.

Fridays Ezekiel takes the class out to pick up litter around campus. There are picker-uppers, who wear gloves; spotters, who raise their hands to indicate finding a piece of litter; and baggers who carry the bags.

While students learn about important environmental issues, Ezekiel incorporates each activity into the kindergarten curriculum. For example, on recycling day the children must sort the plastic bags and lids emphasizing grouping skills.

She also does flow graphs with the lids in order to teach graphing.

Ezekiel won Woman of the Year award in 1997 from Keep Georgia Beautiful for her work with e-Club and dedication to preserving the environment.

In 1999, the e-Club won first place in ecology projects from Keep Georgia Beautiful and Dexter Elementary won Gateway School of the Year from Keep Columbus Beautiful.

A new transportation rule potentially can affect anyone who is PCSing.

Transportation no longer accepts propane gas tanks, full or purged, in household goods for shipping beginning May 1.

DPW recommends the following options for disposal:

• Give the tank away to a friend or sell it in a yard sale. You can pick up another inexpensive tank at a yard sale at your next duty station.

• Take the tank to the Material Recovery Facility, Building 4000, Harmony Church. The MRF is open Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

These options are environmentally friendly choices. Neither requires purging of the gas tank into the atmosphere.

White Elephants

There will be a Ribbon Cutting Ceremony for the grand opening of the first section of renovated units in the "White Elephant" housing area. The ceremony will be at 10 a.m. Tuesday at 100 Yeager Ave.

Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander, will be the guest speaker and will cut the ribbon. There will also be a brief history of the renovation project and a walk-through of the renovated housing unit.

Road closure notice

Dixie Road will be closed between Way Street and Sightseeing Road from May 15-21.

During this period, traffic on Dixie Road will be detoured via Way Street or Sightseeing Road around the affected area. Signs and barricades will be placed to clearly mark the detour route.

The purpose of the closure is to install utility connections and concrete entrance to the new 17th Air Support Operations Squadron Facility on Dixie Road.

For more information about the road closure, call Jon Taso, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, at 544-4601.

Children hit books on field trip

Bergen Ostervold
McBride Elementary School

McBride Elementary's second-graders took their first field trip of the year to the South Columbus Library and to Oxbow Meadows Science Center April 7. And Were we excited!

I know you are thinking, "Library? Exciting? How can that be exciting?" But as soon as the students arrived, they knew they were in for a treat.

"When we got there, I knew it was going to be a fun day because we got to hear stories and got to listen to music," said Kaitlyn Stafford about the library. Many of the other students shared the same thoughts as Kaitlyn.

Tammy Tramell helped the students get their "sillies" out by having them listen carefully to music and then follow the directions by dancing. She also read three books to the children. She talked about the library, its books and its summer programs with the students. She then took the 60 students and 12 chaperones on a tour of the library.

During the tour of the library, Tramell showed the students where they could find different books and materials and how to check them out.

Montrel Crawford said he liked the music and he saw a lot of books, but he really liked getting a library card so he could check out stuff.

"My mom filled out a registration form so I can get a library card," said Kaitlyn Johnson

The South Columbus Library staff gave a library card registration form to each of the students.

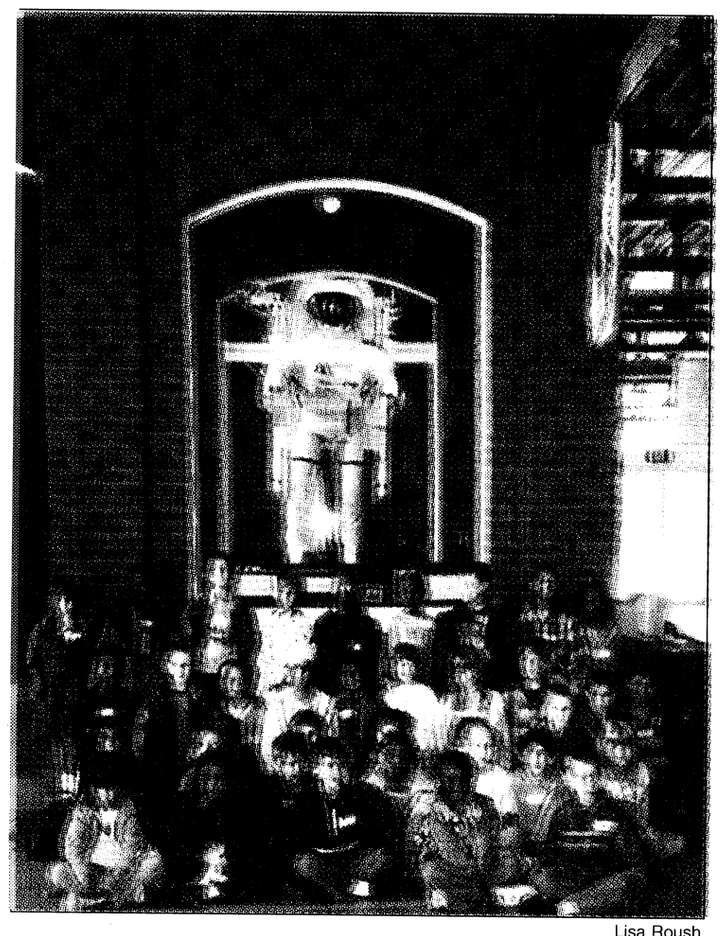
After the library tour, the students arrived at Oxbow Meadows and had a picnic lunch. Karissa Gates and Kayla Phillips said they liked being able to eat pretzels outside with their friends. Though, they also said with a smile, "We were afraid that maybe insects would get on our food!"

The classes were then split into two groups to continue the field trip.

Two of the classes went on a nature walk, while the other classes learned about different reptiles in a classroom setting.

"The trip to Oxbow was fun and interesting because we got to see some weird animals," said Chloe Frantom of the reptiles she saw inside.

"When I saw those snakes, they were interesting because they weren't poisonous and didn't bite anyone. I liked the snapping turtle, too," said Cornelius Latson.



Both children said that they liked the turtles, bugs, and tadpoles that they saw on the nature walk.

Andrew Perez said, "I liked walking in the woods and seeing all of the neat animals."

Natascha Galeana said she thought the walk was fun because she got to see different birds.

The Oxbow Meadows staff offered a lot of interesting and valuable information about the animals found in this area.

Oxbow Meadows also has different presentations during the summer and on the weekends.

Lisa Roush

Students from Lisa Roush's first-grade class at McBride Elementary School visit the Coca-Cola Space and Science Museum.

McBride students go on adventure at Science Museum

Linda Berry
McBride Elementary School

The first-graders at McBride Elementary went to the Coca-Cola Space and Science Museum April 5 and April 6.

The students were able to go into a mock shuttle and pretend they were taking off and landing. They watched a space show in the theater and learned while playing on the computers.

Many of the students said making a solar system out of food was the most fun. The largest planet, Jupiter, was a marshmallow, while the smallest, Pluto, was a poppy seed. All of the students had a great time.

Cameron Ashcroft said the best part was being in the Space Shuttle and Elizabeth Hernandez liked the food solar system.

Third-graders go high tech for class

Iris Kimbley
McBride Elementary School

The third-grade students at McBride have been busy this year integrating technology into various projects.

One project that has just been completed by the students, "Spiders," allowed the students to use the Internet, Microsoft Word and Power Point. The "Spider" project was chosen to go along with the school's "Woodlands" theme.

The students began this project by researching information from an Internet site that was found by the school's educational technologist, Jean Batey.

Batey said the students enjoy using the Internet to locate information for special projects. She said she takes the time to find "kid friendly" sites that go along with the curriculum the classroom teachers are focusing on.

"Once the site is found and it has been checked out for kid friendliness, it is then put on the McBride Links page to allow easy access for the students and the teachers," Batey said.

After the students' research was completed, they turned their notes into paragraphs using Microsoft Word.

Batey said the students have been using this program for quiet some time and feel confident using it.

Many students enjoy the program because of the many graphics and the various font options.

"My favorite program to use is Microsoft Word because I like the graphics and it lets you know right away if you made a mistake in spelling or grammar. I like to make sure everything is correct before I turn it in," said Stephanie Smeltser, a McBride student.

"I really enjoyed working with Microsoft Power Point because my graphic looked great when I pulled it up, and I got to pick a cool background for my slide," said Brodrick McLaurin.

Once the students completed their paragraphs, they chose the most interesting facts about their spiders to put on a slide for a class Power Point presentation.

The students learned how to create individual slides using the Power Point program. The slides included important facts and graphics pulled from Internet sites.

The slides were then put together to create class presentations for each of the third-grade classes. These presentations will be shared with the other grade levels at the school.

Many of the students said they really enjoyed the whole process of preparing the presentations and learning about spiders.

"I thought it would be pretty cool to do this report. I learned where wolf spiders live, what they eat, and how they get their prey and how they eat it," said Kassi O'Neil.

"I learned that the tarantula can eat each other but the bite is not deadly to people. I enjoyed finding facts about spiders," said Eric Doss.

"I liked using Power Point because I wrote down all of the cool facts about orb web spiders on one slide. I found out that it has a poisonous web," said Nelson Gabriel.

"I think that learning about spiders was fun," said Chris Mullens. "I learned that when a Tarantula gets mad it pulls its hair from its abdomen and throws the hair at its prey."

Be sure to stop by the Postwide Yard Sale Saturday.

Comic: Entertains kids as part of lock-in early, the audience pealed with laughter. He then had her pick up three cards and throw them. The audience laughed even harder when, as an obvious hoax, he quickly pointed to them with the card through his index finger and the thrown cards fell to the ground.

Originally from Boston, Mass., and now living in Charlotte, N.C., he has been doing comedy-magic for 27 years.

He has worked with Whoopie Goldberg, Fabio and opened for a famous impressionist, Rich Little.

He specializes in "clean" humor and has performed for a variety of adult and youth groups during his travels, including church groups.

After the show, many audience members gathered around Francis thanking him for the show and asking how he did tricks, especially the one with the dollar bill.

"I liked the last act (with the straitjacket)," said 18-year-old James Traylor.

"I thought it was excellent," said 14-year-old Caniesha Webster. "I liked the way he presented himself as a comedian.

"I liked the way he got everybody involved. He got (younger) kids involved, too. That was really good."

Webster was one of the "lucky" people to be picked to go on stage as a volunteer during the show.

"People had a lot of courage to get on stage," Traylor said. "I wouldn't have gotten on stage."

The Fort Benning regional lock-in takes place once a year during April in celebration of the Month of the Military Child.

Other scheduled events during the lock-in included a dance, basketball tournament and Galactic bowling.

Membership for Youth Services is $30 per family per year and children must be 11 years old to be in the middle school program. Younger children can participate in special programs, Thorn said.

Trial: Teaches students about law process

Wednesday's mock trial, which took place in the cafeteria at Faith Middle School.

The mock trial is an annual event sponsored by the Office of Staff Judge Advocate to coincide with national Law Day, May 1, a congressionally mandated observance of the U.S. civil judicial system.

"National Law Day is a celebration of the fact that we live in a free nation, and we have a democratic government," said Capt. Paula Harrison, trial counselor and special assistant to the U.S. attorney. "The goal of this mock trial is to educate students about the way the legal branch of that government, our judicial system, works."

Using data and facts gleaned from an actual court case, Harrison scripted a believable scenario about a good student caught in a bad situation.

The play began as students watched Pfc. Austin Moon, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company, and his working dog, Petra conduct a drug search on student lockers.

Throughout the proceedings and during a question and answer session afterwards, students listened intently as acting prosecutors and defenders redefined words like sentence, recess and examination — words typically used on a daily basis in middle school.

At the end of the assembly, the students reached a unanimous verdict.

"It was neat. It wasn't really like I've seen on TV," said eighth-grader Joey Fix. "The whole thing was pretty realistic."

Seventh-grade teacher Peggy Martin agreed that the experience went a long way toward dispelling any unrealistic expectations students have formed.

"This program is excellent because many of these children have never known anything about the law except for what they've seen in the media, on TV or at the movies," Martin said. "Bringing it here at a child's level, and putting them near the whole process makes it more meaningful and understandable to them."

Dignan said he hoped students also gain a healthy respect for our judicial system.

"We want these students to walk away with a knowledge and appreciation for the law," Dignan said. "We want them to know that it is fair, and it exists for our protection, but if you break it, you will have to pay the consequences."

As for Scott, the only consequences he suffered from the trial was a little good-natured teasing from his classmates.

Jews ask 'what if' during Passover

Randy Kranepuhl
USAIC Chaplains Office

reflections

Passover began on the evening (as do all Jewish holidays) April 19 with the First Seder (literally "order") and lasts for eight full days. But Passover is more than a dinner in which we drink wine and eat the traditional unleavened bread commanded by the Bible in Exodus 12:15.

Passover is when we tell the story of the time of our freedom. We reflect not just on the passing of the Jewish people from slavery in Egypt to freedom. Self-centeredness is not what Judaism is about.

We also reflect on those who do not have freedom even today. And we reflect on "what if?"

What if the Exodus had not happened? If the Jewish people had not taken the land of Canaan where would religion be today? Could Jesus have preached to the Philistines? Would the Torah ever have been written?

It was the passing of the Jewish people into freedom that allowed them to become the people chosen by God to present his code of living to the world. Could Christianity or Islam ever have happened without the giving of the Torah and the Tanakh (the "Old Testament")? What could Jesus have "fulfilled" if there were no Tanakh to fulfill?

Many questions, much to think about, and no clear answers it seems. But the quest for understanding of God is a journey, not a destination, for all people.

The customs of Passover remind us of this time. Firstborn children fast the day when Passover begins to commemorate the redemption of the firstborn Jewish children. We eat nothing with leavening as a remembrance when we had no time to allow breads to rise. The departure from Egypt was too sudden and required haste. We have two Seders in which we eat a meal full of symbolism. We eat bitter herbs and dip vegetables in salt as well as eating other foods to commemorate the bitterness of slavery.

To me, two things are most indicative of the nature of Judaism then and now. Before one of the cups of wine is drunk, we dip a finger in our wine glass and remove a drop of wine for each of the plagues inflicted by God on the Egyptians. This is not a sign of gloating over our victory. It is a sign of sadness at the suffering of fellow human beings.

Also, there is a beautiful tale told of the crossing of the Reed (not Red) Sea. When the waters had closed upon Pharoah's chariots and Infantry, the Jewish people and even God's angels began a song of joy. As the story is told (and repeated in our daily prayers), God chastised all and said "My children are drowning in the sea and you want to sing before me!"

We should always remember that all things come from God. Our love for God should be reflected in our love and understanding for each other. In these times of so many conflicts in the world, we should remember the Exodus and work for the betterment of all people. Happy Passover!

Father's love knows no bounds

Chaplain (Capt.) Jim McNeely
USAIC Chaplains Office

Grace is a word filled with emotional energy. As a seminary student, I remember vivid (if not violent) discussions about what grace meant.

Some simply quoted the classical definition: "unmerited favor." But this explanation left me wondering if the idea of grace was a spiritual reality or just another academic term for theologians.

The reality of grace as a practical virtue strongly impacted me as I became a parent. When my first child was born my eyes flooded with tears as I stood outside her nursery window.

I loved that helpless little baby so much that it literally overwhelmed me. She did not earn it from me, but rather had it because of who she was: my daughter.

As she grew, I became aware of that deep love and how it impacted my responsibility as her father.

I did not hold her responsible for mistakes made in ignorance.

I allowed her room to grow and learn on her own. I protected her from more serious hazards, like electrical outlets.

When she crawled behind the couch in our home, however, I let her find her way out (which she did!)

The Christian faith refers to God as "The Father." This word is more than a statement of gender; it is a reference to the grace of a caring Daddy.

Like my young daughter, we are all prone to make silly mistakes and some more serious.

Our heavenly daddy, however, understands our limitations and extends to us his deep and abiding faith in us, all tempered with his corrective love.

He is not interested in violently destroying us but rather enjoys our growth and maturation as women and men.

God loves us so much that even when we are in the middle of a tempestuous storm of our own choosing and call him to help, he readily gives us his love and support.

Sometimes he rescues us from dangers too difficult for us to handle but often he helps us discover our own way out.

How has God revealed his grace in your life? Where is his grace present in your life now?

Family member sprints toward Olympic dream

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Janeth Alder stretches out before a run with help of her husband Daniel Alder. She runs twice a day while training for a shot at earning an Olympic slot in Sydney, Australia.

Olympian trains for second run at Gold Medal

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

The sport of running always involves moving toward a goal — mainly the finish line. For Janeth Alder, the goal has become bigger than she could have ever imagined when she took up the sport when she was 9 years old.

The Latacunga, Ecuador, native has worked from those humble beginnings to become a world-class and Olympic runner.

Making it where she is today has been a real challenge, Alder said.

"I started running when I was still in primary school. Running was a sport nobody wanted to do, especially women," she explained. "It was kind of challenging to start running, but that was what attracted me."

"In Ecuador, running was not like a big sport," Alder added. "When I went to high school, a lot of my professors didn't like me running, so I had to keep fighting to run. I never thought I would be running in international races though."

Alder, 25, got her first taste of international notability when she was only 14.

Her skill as a female runner landed her a spot in a program called Sport Aide, where she acted as an ambassador for Ecuador in cities across the globe.

She then took on the next step of competition. Alder started running in and winning junior championships when she was 16 years old.

Alder rounded out her high school track career by winning fourth place for cross country during world competition in Boston in 1992.

She also placed 12th in the world for the 1,500 meter race that same year in Korea.

> "Sometimes if you make the times, they still will not take you. It all depends on the political climate at the time. If they have money and the political stability then people go."
> — Janeth Alder
> Family member, Olympic hopeful

Then while she attended Brigham Young University in Utah, Alder was an All-American every year from 1993-97.

One of Alder's greatest accomplishments was when she went to the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, Spain.

She said making the team was kind of a last minute thing because of the way her country organizes its Olympic team.

"They don't have an official selection process," she said. "What they do is they see your times. They know who the good athletes are and they wait to see if they meet the qualifying times during track meets.

"Sometimes if you make the times, they still will not take you. It all depends on the political climate at the time. If they have money and the political stability then people go," Alder said.

She said making it to the Olympics was definitely worth playing the waiting game to see if there would be a team.

"It was very exciting. Here I was only 17 years old at the Olympics," Alder said. "I got to meet people that I had always held so high. I was really excited to be able to run with them in the same race."

Alder now has her eye on representing her country again this year if her country is able to build a team.

She has been working her way up from short distance to marathon distance running.

"I used to run track in the 800 meter, 1,500 meter, and 3,000 meter. Now I'm trying to run long distances," she said. "I have been running road races — 10Ks, 5Ks."

Her training regimen includes running twice a day everyday with four miles in the morning and eight to 10 miles in the evening. She also does three major upper body workouts per week.

The training is paying off. Because of it she can run two miles in a little under 10 minutes.

Alder's husband, 2nd Lt. Daniel Alder, a student in the Infantry Officer Basic Course, said his wife is an inspiration to him.

"I'm very proud of her," he said. "It's nice to have someone in the house who is intense about something."

He added, his pride was probably the strongest when he and his wife competed in Panama military running championships while they were stationed there.

"I came in first and she came in second. She beat every Marine out there," he added. "It's fun for me because I like to see her do well."

Alder is now waiting for word that her home country will have a team in this year's Olympics.

Army shooters grab top spots in U.S. Olympic selection trials

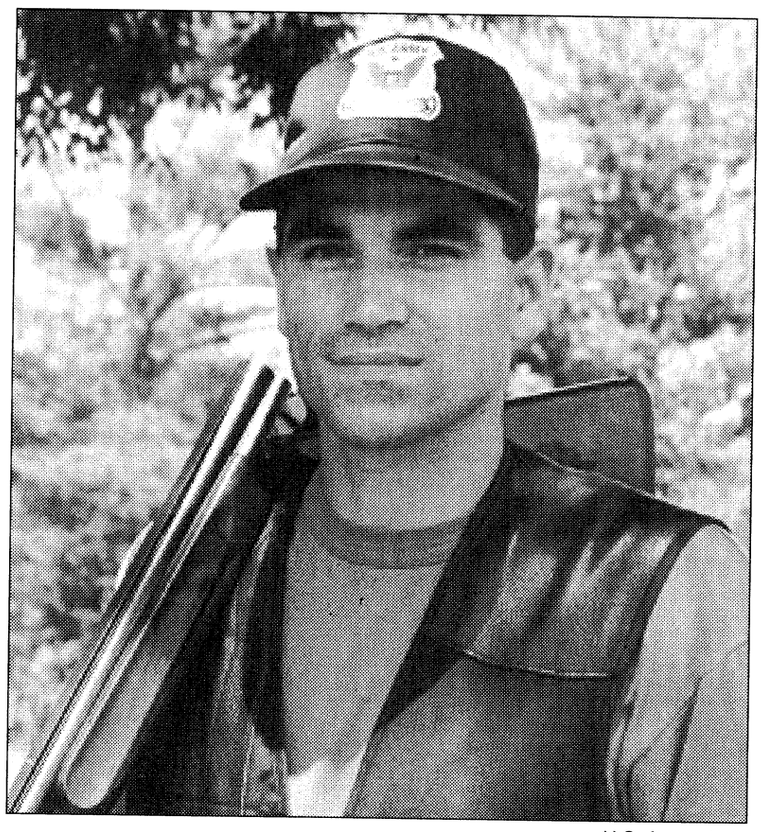
Shooters with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit took six of the eight top spots in the U.S. Olympic Men's Air Rifle Team Selection Matches.

There were 53 shooters competing in the two-day match looking to make the top eight slots, who got to compete in the finals.

After the finals, Matt Emmons won the match by 9/10ths of a point over USAMU's Kenneth A. Johnson, who is the 1999 Army Athlete of the Year and a 1996 Olympic alternate.

Air rifle world-record holder Jason A. Parker took third place, 2.1 points behind Johnson.

Other USAMU shooters competing in the finals were Stephen C. Goff, who finished fourth, Timothy R. Manges in fifth, Troy A. Bassham in sixth and David A. Johnson in eighth.



In the Women's Sport Rifle Matches, Jayme Dickman was named the champion and Melissa Mulloy was second, just 2/10ths of a point behind. Thrine M. Kane was third. Also competing in the finals were Nancy Johnson, wife of Kenneth Johnson, who was fourth, and Deena Wigger, who trains with the USAMU, who finished in seventh place.

Skeet Matches ended a day early with James Graves securing the top position.

The Running Target matches continue through Sunday.

Rapid Fire Pistol, Men's Free Rifle Prone and Women's Air Rifle start Friday and end Saturday. The first of two Olympic Selection Matches, which will decide the 2000 U.S. Olympic Shooting

Golf clinic attracts new enthusiasts

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Thirteen family members — most of whom have never swung a golf club before — experienced a taste of teeing off Saturday at a free golf clinic on the Follow Me Golf Course.

The hour-long clinic, taught by Larry Cruise, head pro, and Jimmy Carpenter, assistant pro, covered golfing basics from how to grip the club to the art of putting.

"I've always done this at other military courses I've been," said Cruise. "I feel it is necessary to introduce the game. It's a good way to see if you want to pursue it."

"I want to learn about golf. I find it fascinating. I want to learn it correctly," said Carmon Benson. "My son is a fantastic golfer. I want to say 'Michael let's go play golf.'"

Carpenter taught gripping the club and swinging for tee off or a long drive and Cruise instructed how to putt and chip.

Although both Cruise and Carpenter focused on technique, they shared personal experiences and some inside tips to the game.

"It's not easy to hit the golf ball, I'll tell you that. But anybody can learn," Carpenter said.

His session on hitting the ball focused on the fundamentals of grip and stance.

"The most important things to learn is how to stand and how to grip," Carpenter said. These two things are key to becoming a good golfer.

To give everyone a feel of how to hold the club, he used a form-fitting grip that slipped over the handle. "This way you're not having to adjust constantly," he said. "If you don't get the grip right, you won't hit the ball right."

Carpenter then told the new golfers to stand in an "athletic stance," like you were about to sit down, to prepare for the tee off.

To drive the ball, the swinging motion entails keeping the arms relaxed and the grip tight.

"It was the miracle of miracles when I made contact with the ball," Carpenter said of when he first started out.

"It was nice to learn how to actually hold a golf club," said Erin Colbert.

After getting a feel for driving the ball, it was on to putting and chipping. "This is your final destination, hopefully," Cruise said of getting to the green. "Sometimes you don't get to the green," he said. That's where chipping comes in handy.

Cruise demonstrated chipping with a nine iron and a sand wedge, but "you can use any club that you want to chip with," he said. "The kind of club you use will control the loft."

A rule of thumb, however, is "the quicker you can get it (the ball) on the ground the better," Cruise said. "The longer it's in

Army boxer secures Olympic slot

Tim Hipps
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Olanda Anderson completed the United States' most tumultuous road to the 2000 Summer Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia, by winning a pair of bouts in America's Olympic Boxing Qualifier III April 17-22 at Tijuana, Mexico.

Anderson's Olympic dream was resurrected April 14 when USA Boxing officials released 178-pound Olympic hopeful Michael Simms Jr. from Team USA for disciplinary reasons.

Simms' dismissal reopened the ring for Anderson, who won the 178-pound championship at the U.S. Olympic Boxing Team Trials Feb. 9-13 at Tampa, Fla.

Two weeks later, Simms twice defeated Anderson in a 24-hour span during the U.S. Olympic Box-offs at the Foxwoods Resort Casino in Mashantucket, Conn., where Simms stole Anderson's 178-pound spot on the 2000 U.S. Olympic Boxing Team.

Simms was released from Team USA for repeatedly missing curfew and failing to obey coach Tom Mustin's instructions during training camp at Colorado Springs and at America's Qualifier in Tampa March 27-April 1.

An eight-man USA Boxing board voted April 11 to remove him from the team. Anderson got the official word April 14 after Simms was allowed time to appeal the decision, which he did not.

Scenic trail challenges bikers

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

outdoor corner

Between being able to play connect the dots with the bounty of bruises on my legs and arms and fry eggs on my overly sun-crisped face, I will admit I wasn't without a lack of pain this weekend.

Being the "bright idea" person that I am, I decided to go mountain biking at a place I read about called Camp Thunder.

Located near Thomaston, Ga., you can get there by taking Manchester Expressway out of Columbus towards Manchester, turning right on Highway 18 in Woodbury and right on 74. Follow the road until you see a sign for Camp Thunder.

The trail is actually located within the Camp Thunder Scout Reservation and starts at the canoe base of the camp along the Flint River.

The beginning of the trail is nothing more than a rocky road that runs parallel to the Flint River.

The beauty of the river, combined with the lush green of the Pine Mountain ridge made the first leg of my journey truly enjoyable. I will admit I was lulled into a false sense of security, thinking the remainder of the ride would be just as easy.

When my friend and I finally got to the start of the "real" trail that's when the true adventure, and pain, began. I should have known immediately that it wasn't your run of the mill trail when I couldn't make it up the first 50 feet without getting off my bike.

But, I am not one who takes a hint, or a sign from God very easily, so I kept on chugging along.

My friend, who barely qualifies as a beginner mountain biker was beginning to question my sanity. I knew she wanted to say something, but being a good sport she didn't.

When we finally got to the top of the first hill, we had our choice of going straight up or on a nice even plain. You can imagine which one we chose.

I knew the hill that went straight up was an 8.5 loop trail that was designed for more experienced riders, so we decided to do a little exploring on what seemed to be an easier route. We probably would have been better off with the loop.

While there were a few patches of uninterrupted riding, I found myself spending more time off my bike than on it.

I got a great upper body work out lifting my bike over a number of huge trees blocking the path. There were also plenty of times where I narrowly escaped crashing by sacrificing my legs and other important body parts. At one point I was even attacked and punctured by a giant thorn bush while trying to navigate my bike through tar-like mud.

By this time, my roommate didn't have to say a word, her dirt-streaked, sweaty face said it all. She wasn't having a good time.

Even though the experience was a bit tumultuous, I really enjoyed myself.

I knew that if I was more experienced most of the stuff I encountered would have been a piece of cake.

In fact, when we finally got out of the woods, I made another go at the beginning of the trail, just so I could ride back down. My friend decided to sit that one out.

If you are a gung-ho mountain biker and are looking for a trail that will challenge you, this is your ticket.

Although I didn't conquer the actual trail itself, the portion I did traverse was full of essential mountain biking elements — trees, rocks, hills and mud.

I know that in time I will get to the point where I'm confident enough to go back and tackle the entire trail.

And hopefully next time I won't come back looking like something the cat drug in.

Shooters: Continue Olympic trials

Team, officially kicked off at the USAMU ranges April 19. Nearly 400 competitors are vying for 29 slots on the Olympic Shooting Team.

The second selection match is scheduled for June 21 to July 1 in Atlanta at the Tom Lowe Shooting Grounds, formerly called the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Center. Shooters' scores from both matches will be added together and the top one to three shooters, depending on the discipline, will make the Olympic Team.

1996 Double Trap Olympian Theresa E. DeWitt of the USAMU won the match beating 1996 Olympic Double Trap Gold Medalist Kim Rhode by 4 points.

USAMU's David R. Alcoriza — a 1996 Double Trap Olympian took second place, just 1 point behind Glenn Eller who won the match.

1996 Olympic Trap Bronze Medalist Lance Bade finished in third place, 1 point behind Alcoriza.

There were 49 shooters, 36 men and 13 women competing for three double trap slots, two male and one female, on the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team.

Most matches run from 9 to 11 a.m. everyday; they are open to the public and the media are invited.

Competitors are available for interviews after they have finished shooting.

Clinic: Helps lower score card numbers

the air, the less control you have over it."

For chipping and putting the secret is a smooth stroke and keeping the head still. "In this part of the game, the body has to be quiet," he said.

The same "athletic stance" is needed for chipping and putting and the grip is slightly different than when driving the ball, consisting of a straight hand-over-hand configuration.

Some people prefer the same grip when driving and putting, whatever is most comfortable, Cruise said.

The arms remain straight and swing in a pendulum motion from the shoulders.

Although there is a thrill in driving the ball past the 100- or 200-yard markers, Cruise cautions against neglecting chipping and putting aspects of the game.

"This is where you can get your score down very quickly," he said.

He also suggests to take the time to practice putting and chipping before playing as a way to relax before taking on the course.

This also helps reduce the frustration factor when playing golf.

"I always ask if you have patience because it's going to try every bit you've got," he said. "There are a lot of peaks and valleys in this game. That's what makes it a great game."

This was the first free clinic for family members offered at the club, but Cruise said he plans on doing more throughout the year.

There is a women's golf clinic on Tuesdays from 4 to 5:30 p.m. at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Cost is $15 and reservations are required.

For reservations, call 687-1940.

There also is a Monday morning women's golf group.

For more information, call Kathy Burns at 682-0906.

BANK AGREES TO LOANS FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH BAD CREDIT!

Columbus, GA. Milton Watts, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Including Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of a new or slightly used car, truck or van either for their family or a business venture.

These are prime, in demand vehicles, that are either repossessed, overaged or a terminated lease situation.

Bankers will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expressway until the end of May. Best of all, cut rate financing will be offered to those whose credit would not normally meet such an arrangement at rates that banks usually reserve for their blue chip clients. Quoting Watts, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing.

"Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

Kevin Thompson, Representing the dealership, has arranged for special low payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the cash crunch at the vacation season.

In some cases these payments are ridiculously low. When pressed for an example, Thompson replied, "Well, here is a '95 Elantra 4 door #HS002. With $1 down payment to validate the transaction, your payments to be taken on would be $55 for 60 months at only 9.9% APR with a credit approval process that can take as little as 20 minutes. An incredibly low sale price of only $1,995. Adding only tax, tag, title and WRA make this payment arrangement possible. "Or, if a truck is your thing, then here is a '96 Toyota Tacoma #HS003. Again the $1 down to validate the deal and start making payments on a new bank contract of just $111.89 for 72 months at the same low 9.9% APR with credit approval that may be arranged while you wait. Again, the low monthly payment is possible because of the $5997 sale price adding only tax, tag and title.

This offer is for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle.

Hundreds of new Chevys including Silverados, Tahoes, Venture Vans, Blazers, Malibus and Impalas are included in this offer.

Along with acres of used Chevys, Fords, Hondas, Jeeps, Acuras and Nissans.

Shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much the bank will advance you by calling Mr. Thompson or his assistant Mr. Stallings at 322-8888 OR 1-800-868-1585, 9am to 9pm.

8 PAYMENTS FOR 6 MO.

On All Vehicles In Stock. Total A Customer Pay Deferral Plans. Example: 2000 Chevy Malibu: 39 Months Same Cash Lease With $2,000 Down Payment Plus Tax, Tag, Title. Remaining 36 Months Starting 10/2000. All Offer Exclusive.

Fort Benning survives 'Love Bug'

E-mail users help fight off crippling virus

Sally Shutt

E-mail users at Fort Benning helped the post fight off the crippling "Love Bug" virus last week, keeping the impact at a manageable level.

The Information Systems Security Manager, Carol A. Vasko-Norman, started issuing specific warnings concerning the "ILOVEYOU" messages early May 4 when the virus struck worldwide causing billions of dollars in damage.

Luckily, post users were already conditioned to be cautious thanks to routine warnings about the dangers of opening suspicious-looking messages and forwarding chain letters and junk mail.

"They knew not to open those messages," Vasko-Norman said.

In fact, Fort Benning was the only installation in the Training and Doctrine Command that kept its e-mail system up and running, she said.

"I'm proud of the people here. We've done real well," she said.

Still, some messages were opened and about 60 personal computers were affected.

There are 3,500 users on the Fort Benning e-mail system, with about 1,000 more users on other systems, Paul Yates, director of Information Management, said.

While there were "tons and tons of messages sent, we were affected less than anyone else," Yates said.

"The key thing from my perspective was our user-awareness. We could have been seriously damaged if they had started opening the e-mail. I've heard horror stories from other installations."

Vasko-Norman agreed, adding that quick reaction by information systems administrators helped keep Fort Benning's e-mail up during the crisis.

"We made a conscious decision to stay up and ride it out," she said.

The battle continues with new variants out there, some even disguising themselves as virus alerts.

Yates and his staff started writing "Fort Benning Virus Alert" on the subject line so users

Land Warrior aims to shift odds

Program will increase combat survivability

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Technology is no stranger to the Army, and by examining the Soldier's combat capabilities, the Land Warrior program, through technological advancements, enhances the Infantryman into an optimal warfighting system.

"Typically Infantrymen are the most vulnerable guys on the battlefield," said Col. Hank Kinnison, TRADOC System Manager — Soldier. "We want to achieve an overmatch in extreme close combat."

The Land Warrior program aims to shift the odds by increasing the lethality and survivability of the Soldier.

Many military missions require Soldiers to infiltrate urban areas where they would most likely face close combat.

"Infantry close combat presents a very confusing environment. When you face an enemy that's close up, one of the problems as an Infantry Soldier is knowing what's going on," he said.

"As our interests require us to do this we want to be successful," Kinnison said. "The Land Warrior program is what ties it all together."

The full Land Warrior equipment package includes a weapon system, integrated helmet assembly, computer radio system, integrated software system and personal clothing and individual equipment.

The weapon system is a M4 modular weapon — based off of the M4 carbine weapon — and includes a laser range finder, digital compass and daylight video sight.

Information seen through the weapon's sight links to a retractable eyepiece on the helmet. This increases a Soldier's stealth and

Recon leaders meet

4th Ranger Training Battalion

Senior leaders from major units that field Long Range Surveillance and active and Reserve component LRS units descended upon Fort Benning as the Ranger Training Brigade hosted the annual LRS Conference May 9-12 at Infantry Hall.

The purpose of this year's conference was to educate leaders on LRS, develop a roadmap for future LRS unit force structure and doctrine.

"LRS detachment and companies are assets commanders in the field value highly — nothing beats a human being on the battlefield," said keynote speaker, Brig. Gen. Daniel E. Long Jr., assistant division commander of the 29th Infantry Division, Md. "This is an asset that is flexible at adjusting to completely new and different situations, understands pattern recognition and cognitive decision making."

Division commanders only have two assets that allow them to see deep, and one of them is the LRS Detachment, said Col. James T. Faust, commander, 525th Military Intelligence Brigade, 18th Airborne Corps, Fort Bragg, N .C.

Today many intelligence leaders have come to rely exclusively on technical means to gather information and intelligence such as overhead satellites and Unmanned Aerial Vehicles, Faust said. These are viewed as the panacea for answering the commanders questions.

"LRS units should be employed as either the primary or secondary means to confirm, refute or augment electronic or imagery intelligence systems," said Lt. Col. Clarence K.K. Chinn, commander, 4th RTB. "This is especially true in environments where U.S. technological capabilities do not provide an advantage, such as third world urban areas or operational areas where technological collection efforts are inhibited by extreme weather conditions or heavy vegetation."

LRS is a viable asset in the Force XXI structure, said Lt. Col Chuck Taylor, G3, 10th Mountain Division.

"The best central processing unit on the battlefield is the Soldier, not the Pentium," said Taylor.

"Nothing will replace human intelligence in the deep battle. LRS must be ready to rise to the next level and major commands should have an invested interest in ensuring that their LRS units are equipped properly and can adapt tactics and techniques for future conflicts.

CID names building after hero

Dedication ceremony set for today

Spc. Mitch Frazier

From the young athlete on the playground to the politician at the podium, people are always looking for someone to emulate — someone to call their role model.

For the Army's super sleuths, the Soldiers of the Criminal Investigation Command, that role model has not only earned Chief Warrant Officer Maurice Parker a place in the hearts of man — but, after today, it will earn him a home on Fort Benning.

A ceremony slated for 1 p.m. today will rename Building 108, Fort Benning's CID battalion headquarters, to Parker Hall in honor of the man who gave more than 50 years of service to his country.

"Parker is a role model for the agents," said Lt. Col. James B. Crockett III, Benning CID battalion commander. "He is an outstanding representative of what they should strive to become."

Parker began his Army career in 1940 when he enlisted as a cook, and after only a short stint of service, he was recruited for the First Special Service force, an elite U.S. — Canadian force called the Devil's Brigade.

While assigned to the unit and the 508th Parachute Infantry Regiment, he saw combat time in both the European and Pacific theaters. Upon his return he transferred into the CID.

During his time in CID, he served in numerous capacities including special agent, special agent in charge, executive officer and commander before retiring in 1972.

Parker continued his law enforcement career at the Montgomery County Sheriff's Office in Clarksville, Tenn. He served for nine years as the departments chief investigator, training officer, jailer and administrative assistant.

Foster mom touches hundreds

Spc. Amy Nyland

commentary

We all hear stories about amazing people.

Like the man who managed to lift 200 pounds worth of appliances with his tongue, or the person who watched a record-breaking 300 episodes of Full House in a row without gagging. Now those people are really special.

Yet, even those stories of extraordinary feats pale in comparison to the accomplishments of one incredible woman I have the privilege of knowing — my mother.

My mom has done something few if any can say they've done. She has raised or helped raise more than 400 children in her lifetime. For more than 13 years my mother opened her heart and her home to children who never had the privilege of knowing unconditional love. My mother was a foster parent.

Before I even stepped into the military world I had already learned a lot about seven important values — respect, honor, integrity, duty, loyalty, selfless service and personal courage, all from watching my mother day after day.

While these values may not have been blatantly stressed or taught by my mother, she embodied them, and in turn instilled them in me and all the others she took under her wing.

When I think of these values one of them becomes synonymous with my mother — selfless service.

Year after year my mom gave every ounce of herself to a cause simply because she wanted to, not because she had to.

She sacrificed her heart, her home and her family to make a difference in the lives of children who may never have had any hope otherwise.

For most of these children, the first time they ever encountered any kind of real love, understanding or trust was from my mom. You can imagine how confusing it must have been for a child who only experienced abuse and indifference by her own parents to walk into the loving arms of a stranger and finally see how a "real" parent is supposed to be.

There were many times my mom was on the receiving end of a child's hurt and pain, often getting her own heart trampled on for no reason. The amazing thing is no matter what they did or said she always welcomed them back like her prodigal children and kept on chugging along — taking more and loving more.

While there were lots of successes and some failures over the years, my mother's impact is very evident in the hundreds of kids (now grown-ups) who still call her mom and keep coming back. They often bring their own children who run up and down the halls of our house yelling things like "I love you Gramma."

Although my mother is no longer a foster parent she has truly left her mark on the world in more ways than one. She has left it in the hearts and minds of all the children she touched. Not only that, but their children's children and generations to come.

This Mother's Day I want to salute anyone who accepts the kind of challenge my mother did. Like my mom, you are rare gifts from God worthy of only the highest forms of recognition. I send out not only a thank you to all the foster moms of the world, but also a great big "I love you" to the greatest mom there is. You are my inspiration and my hero ... I love you Mom!

Sacrifice, giving define military spouses

commentary

I'm writing a thank-you note to military spouses today. I hope my mother will be proud that it's timely and sincere. She always stressed the importance of taking a moment to write a personal message; greeting card copy just wouldn't do.

Today is Military Spouse Day, and while I could spend my words discussing the contributions and sacrifices of these men and women in general, I think the Fort Benning community is already well acquainted with those facts. Just last month post volunteers, including numerous military spouses — active and retired among them — were recognized for their hard work and long hours.

Instead, I'd like to take this opportunity to tell you about the military spouses who have touched my life.

While the rest of the world, the civilian sector, groups them under the label military spouse, I know them only as my friends — no labels, just a diverse group of men and women who chose to marry a person who wears a uniform to work instead of a tie.

They move routinely at about three-year intervals or sooner instead of settling into a community where their children will grow up with the neighborhood kids and graduate from the high school they started out at as freshmen.

They know the value of turning wherever their family is stationed into their home — for the time being. And they know the value of reaching out to others around them and making them feel a part of their family, their unit and their Army.

I was a newcomer to the group 13 years ago, clueless to the importance of carrying my military ID card at all times if I wanted to do anything on post. I even wondered why people stopped their cars and got out when a bugle sounded and music started playing one afternoon.

I had entered a new culture with its own customs and a language full of acronyms. These were the days before Army Family Team Building, so my Level I instructors were the wives at the Florida Ranger camp — women who answered my endless questions without laughing and made me feel a part of their group.

My first child was born a few years later at Fort Irwin, Calif., — a post in the middle of the Mojave Desert that always reminded me of the small town, Mayberry. It was a feeling that came from the people there, not the landscape, which looked like the moon.

Four friends arrived at the hospital in time to watch our daughter receive her first bath. They provided food for days and emotional support I will never forget, especially during the long rotations when our husbands were in the field.

Barstow, 37 miles away, was the nearest town. Victorville, 75 miles down the road, offered the closest mall. When someone was going to make the trek to civilization, also known as Wal-Mart, calls were made to see if anyone needed something.

I've always been amazed by the talented women I've met. They include accountants, doctors, an opera singer, nurses, chefs, teachers and the list goes on.

Home & Garden Television should consider a special on military spouses and how they can turn cookie-cutter quarters into uniquely decorated homes — in record time.

There's one particular "Martha Stewart" I must thank. My friend, Rachel, came to my rescue years ago when I dropped a match onto new carpeting in our quarters and singed the fibers. She came over, Heloise book in hand, and helped me shave the carpet and attempt to repair the damage.

It was a Lucy and Ethel moment, but my family cleared quarters a year later with a clean slate.

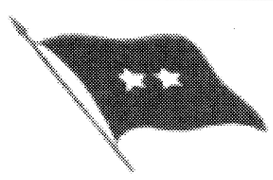
To these friends and military spouses everywhere, thank you for being there for each other when duty calls our Soldiers away. Thanks for donating your time and talents to making the military community a better place to live — a Mayberry when the rest of the world looks like the moon.

I'm sure the stories sound familiar to you. The situations are similar, only the locations are different.

Take the time today to say thank you to the military spouses who have touched your life. Call or e-mail them. After all, it's their day.

And if you wear the uniform, don't forget to thank your spouse. Flowers are always nice. Dinner out is even better.

Give thanks to spouses



Today is Military Spouse Day!

It's a good time to reflect on what spouses do for us and what they mean to us.

Military spouses are important because they are always there for us. We may be deployed overseas, on extended field training exercises or just putting in the normal 12 to 14 hour days, but the spouses are there putting in the 24-hour days, tending to the children, the pets, the household.

They are ready to pick up and move at a moment's notice; they can set up a household and make it a home in an unfamiliar environment in a blink of an eye. They are miracle workers!

Sometimes a spouse is a fellow member of the military, juggling military duties with taking care of the home.

Whatever the situation is, we owe them a great deal.

Today would be a great time to do something special for them.

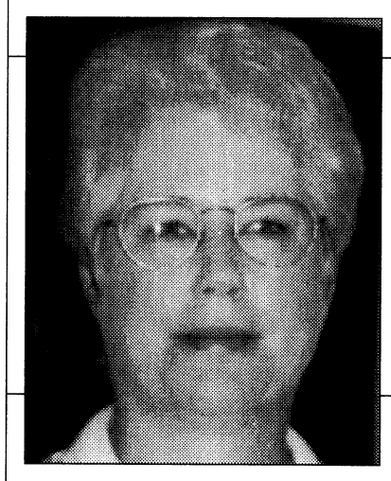
letter to the editor

The Family Advocacy Program wants to remind everyone that Military Spouse Day is celebrated today. We would like to take this time to express our appreciation for the dedication and sacrifice that are made by military spouses in our community.

In the daily press of activities, which characterizes our modern lives, we often overlook opportunities to express our appreciation to those who make a special contribution. To amend that oversight, we take this opportunity to salute all military spouses.

We, as civilians, should value and commend every military spouse on this day. To show our appreciation, the Family Advocacy Program will give out a canvas tote bag to each military spouse and have a display set up from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today at Building 2624 with educational materials on parenting, building better relationships, blended families and other topics.



For more information on Military Spouse Day, call Rebecca S. Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager, at 545-7517.

DoD hopes to eliminate food stamp inequities

6,300 military members remain dependent on government aid

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

Far fewer service members are on food stamps than people think, according to Defense Secretary William S. Cohen.

Speaking with reporters en route to Europe April 30, Cohen said DoD officials have been operating on the assumption that about 12,000 active duty service members receive food stamps. Since DoD's last survey, however, he said, the number has dropped to about 6,300.

Pentagon officials recently announced they hope to eliminate food stamp eligibility inequities. Cohen said DoD wants equity for people living off-base and those living on, but not by taking away the food stamp benefit from eligible families.

"We'd like to see a situation where no service members are on food stamps, but we also want to make sure that any benefit that is available to our citizens is also available to our servicemembers," he said.

DoD officials want to change food stamp eligibility rules by eliminating monthly cash housing allowances as income.

Current food stamp rules count the allowances as income but not the value of government quarters. A servicemember living on base, then, would appear to earn less and could qualify for stamps more easily than a peer living off base.

Actually, according to department data, members receiving allowances fare worse because the money covers only 81 percent of off-base housing costs on average — and by law is intended to cover only 85 percent. Members and families off base also may have added transportation and gasoline costs because they don't have easy access to the commissary or the exchanges.

"So they have a double expense," Cohen said.

The secretary said he hopes that systematically targeted pay increases can eventually get all service members off food stamps.

Captain combines Soldiering with art

ICCC student uses love of art to create military masterpieces

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Top-notch organizational skills, not to mention talent and a love for what he does, help Capt. Michael P. Solovey manage a three-dimensional career as a Soldier, military artist and businessman.

Late nights also play into the mix.

"The Army takes a lot of time," the 25-year-old said. "But, if you really love something, you don't mind staying up late and hustling to get a lot done."

Solovey, who was promoted May 1, will graduate from the Infantry Captains' Career Course in July. In between his studies at Fort Benning, the ordnance officer has completed a pen and ink rendering entitled "Follow Me" celebrating the Infantry School. The drawing shows various aspects of the school including the Bradley, Airborne and Ranger courses.

He plans to sell the "Follow Me" print and auction the original to help his ICCC class raise money to pay for a social at the end of the course.

It's not the first time Solovey has paid tribute to a military unit with his work.

While in Bosnia with the 1st Armored Division, Solovey was tasked with drawing a farewell gift for the assistant division commander.

Supplies posed a problem.

"We went down to Tuzla to an art store carrying our weapons to get canvas and pens," he recalled.

The result — "96 Combat Patrols Today, Sir" — was a hit, and requests starting pouring in for prints.

"It was a shot in the dark," he said of his marketing of the print.

A Newport News, Va., company mailed the prints to Tuzla, and Solovey sold more than 300 of them in what he called a "tail-gate operation."

Word traveled quickly and soon sergeants major were calling, asking the artist to create a print for their battalion.

Capt. Michael Burcham recalled their days together in Bosnia.

"He didn't sleep a lot. He would sit up in the tent drawing and painting," Burcham said.

The two men, ICCC classmates, have known each other for four years, and Burcham admitted he has several of Solovey's works hanging in his home. His favorite is not a military print, but a watercolor of a bridgehouse in Bad Kreuznach, Germany, where they were stationed.

"But I think he does some of his best stuff in class with his doodling," Burcham said.

While Solovey hasn't displayed his doodlings yet, his other works are hanging in his Columbus apartment. He converted the living and dining rooms into a studio complete with easels and a light table he built.

Articles about the artist have appeared in The Stars and Stripes and The Talon, the 1st Armored Division's magazine, and hang on the walls, along with a dry-erase board covered with his to-do list.

Solovey has been combining his interest in the art world and in all things military for numerous years.

His junior and senior high art teachers in Williamsburg, Va., helped develop his artistic talent, especially Sister Gabriel Mary.

"She was the Yoda of the art world and a grandmother figure to me too," he said.

Solovey recalled the surprise of teachers, family and friends when he announced that he was attending Virginia Military Institute instead of the Savannah School of Art and Design, where he had been offered a partial scholarship.

"They thought it was kind of weird. No one expected me to take the VMI route," he said.

"But the challenge of the military and the sense of brotherhood I saw appealed to me."

A language major, he made time each semester to take an art class.

While in college he started drawing sketches of homes and selling them to the owners who then framed them or used them on Christmas cards.

The income from this "cottage industry" helped supplement the $100 a month he received as part of his ROTC scholarship.

His last semester he traveled to France to study literature and art as an exchange student. While there he painted "A Rat Longs For Home," one of three VMI prints that have sold very well at the bookstore on campus since 1996. Rat is the term used for freshmen at the institute.

Since then he has named his business The Solovey Art Collection. His work is listed on a website, www.arthangups.com, out of Maryland.

Solovey has been asked countless times which career — artist or Soldier — will win out over the other.

"When I do get out of the Army, and I'm not sure when that will be, I want to do military art full time because I think it is the best way I can make a difference," he said.

"I have a real passion for it. I may not be the best one yet, but I really enjoy it."

For more information, call Solovey at 568-1060 or e-mail him at SOLOVEYART@hotmail.com.

CID: Honors former 'super sleuth' in dedication ceremony couldn't stay away from the Army, and nine years after he retired from the CID, he rejoined the Army's investigative team as a civilian special agent where he served as the criminal intelligence coordinator and assistant operations officer at the 3rd Military Police Group.

Parker continued to serve the CID for 11 years before retiring again in 1994. But the 73-year-old couldn't stop serving the country and profession he loved.

He became an active member of the CID Agents Association and at the group's 1995 national convention in Columbus, Ohio, he died hours after being named as the group's top cop — the president.

Now nearly five years after his death, Fort Benning will join Fort Campbell and Fort Leonard Wood in honoring the man with a memorial of its own.

A plaque honoring Parker will be hung in the newly named Parker Hall after the ceremony and will remain there as a reminder to agents of what a great agent is.

"He truly is representative of what we want our agents to be," Crockett said.

Col. John Latimer, Fort Benning Chief of Staff and Col. George Smith, deputy commander, Criminal Investigation Command, Fort Monroe, Va., will speak at the building dedication ceremony this afternoon.

Don't forget to attend the first-ever postwide town hall meeting at 7 p.m. May 23 at the Faith Middle School gym.

USARSA loses supporter, friend with death of Amos

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The U.S. Army School of the Americas lost a tremendous supporter May 3 with the death of Columbus resident Elena Diaz-Verson Amos.

Cecilia Alexander, the school's international military student officer, will miss Amos' unfailing willingness to help the school and its students.

But, more importantly, she will miss her friend of 15 years.

"Once she met you, she was your friend. No matter where she saw you, she would speak to you. She was just a down-to-earth person," she said. "I know she touched many lives."

Alexander recalled two years ago that Amos, whom she considered the school's "Godmother," hosted an Easter egg hunt for students and their families on the lawn in front of her downtown penthouse.

"There were 500 eggs there that day and the prize egg had a $200 gift certificate inside," she said.

A native of Cuba, Amos came to the U.S. as an exchange student and attended the University of Miami. It was there she met John B. Amos, who later founded Aflac, Inc. They were married in 1945.

After her husband died in 1990, she donated his law books and the mahogany bookshelf that once housed them in his office to the school.

Nicolas Sandoval is a library technician in the John B. Amos Library.

"She was a great lady and very charismatic," he said. "She was superb in dealing with people because she showed she cared."

"The large quantity of volumes in Spanish she donated to the library and the school are useful and will continue to be useful in reinforcing the concepts of peace, democracy and security in all the students who attend here," Col. Patrio Haro, assistant commandant, said.

"Elena was a passionate believer in our country, our military and the need for contact at the human level between Latin America and America," Col. Glenn Weidner, the school's commandant said.

"She was unwavering in her support and in her belief that Latin America would be better off because of the school."

Of the many different things she did for the school, face-to-face contact was the most important, he said.

She opened her home up to students for social events, each year hosting a Christmas party, and she helped found the School of the Americas support group.

Amos lobbied for the school from the day it opened its doors, Weidner said.

"She was very proud of the school."

Her philanthropy is well known. In 1992 she bought a plane and helped Cuban Air Force Maj. Orestes Lorenzo rescue his wife and two children from the island. A year later, she assisted Fidel Castro's daughter in fleeing the country.

She helped fund the Latin American Studies program and the Eminent Scholar in Latin American Studies at Columbus State University.

"Her commitment to freedom and opposition to communism were lifelong passions," Weidner said.

Amos was recognized in October by the Commanding General for her contributions to the post.

Bug: Harms computers

would know the message was from an authorized source and not a virus variant, he said.

While the Department of Defense provides anti-virus protection for the e-mail system, nothing was available to stop the "Love Bug."

"We weren't prepared for this. No one was," Vasko-Norman said.

Several units and activities on post fall under commands other than TRADOC and have their own servers. Many were instructed or chose to shut down their e-mail systems in order to contain the virus.

Martin Army Community Hospital pulled the plug on its e-mail until mid-day last Friday at the direction of the U.S. Army Medical Command. The Fort Benning Schools, a Department of Defense Education Activity, and the Army Marksmanship Unit, which falls under the U.S. Army Recruiting Command, did the same.

"Normally the procedure in extreme cases — and this was one — is to stand down the e-mail system across the command to isolate and contain the virus," Sgt. 1st Class Robert S. Finch, AMU's information management specialist, said. The unit's system was down May 4 and 5.

"We were up and running by Monday morning, except for the five computers that were infected," he said. AMU has a total of 38 users.

The Southeast Civilian Personnel Operations Center has global address lists that it needed to protect from the virus, said Rod Alles, chief of the Information Services Division.

"We shut down our e-mail system from about 8 a.m. Thursday until 8 p.m. that night," he said.

CPOC covers a six-state region — Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Virginia, North and South Carolina — and Puerto Rico.

"The way this virus replicated itself was designed to clog up the pipes and eventually bring down entire systems," he said.

"This has caused a lot of damage and cost a lot of money," Martha Jenkins, exchange systems administrator for Fort Benning, said.

"I wish the person who created this virus would have used that smartness in a constructive and not in a negative manner."

Post e-mail users have been warned about junk mail and chain letters in the past.

"Everyone should be reminded that sending chain letters is against DoD, Army and Fort Benning policy. Individuals sending chain letters or junk mail can lose their e-mail privilege. Chain letters look like viruses and cause a lot of extra work in tracking them down," Yates said.

Technology: Enhances warfighting safety during a mission. By pointing the weapon around a corner or above a bunker, the Soldier can view the situation, and shoot if necessary, without exposing his body.

A Soldier can also take a picture of a person or place and transmit it to his commander or others in the platoon.

Through the eyepiece, the Soldier can view his position and the location of other Soldiers via a global positioning system. It also is equipped with night vision.

In addition, a hand-held display will allow leaders to enter, edit and receive orders similar to using e-mail.

The helmet, which includes a retractable microphone and radio system, is more concisely designed, better fitting and much lighter than the previous version.

The addition of all this advanced equipment to the Soldier, however, won't weigh him down in combat.

By using better design and materials it does not add any weight to the Soldier and even lightens the load, Kinnison said.

The individual equipment items are modular. This gives the Soldier an option to carry necessary gear for better mobility.

For example, the modular pack the Soldier carries is essentially three packs in one: a butt pack, an assault pack and a large backpack.

The equipment used in the Land Warrior program is not only more technologically advanced but also more durable.

"It survived an Airborne jump and it survived rigorous submersion testing," said Maj. Brian Cummings, assistant TRADOC System Manager — Soldier.

Although this equipment looks like it would cost a fortune for the government, it is actually quite cost efficient.

"It's made of common off-the-shelf items," Cummings said. "We've gone to a more commercially available approach."

This made Land Warrior cost less and easier to repair or replace parts. "We've made it as simple as possible," Cummings said.

Although the initial phase of the Land Warrior program began in 1996, the effort for this particular program started in February 1999. After a recent revamping of the project it will be ready for large-scale testing in the Joint Contingency Force Advanced Warfighting Experiment scheduled for September 2000 at the Joint Readiness Training Center in Fort Polk, La.

"There weren't too many experiments (with Land Warrior) other than with a few Soldiers," Cummings said. "This is the biggest test we've done so far. It's a major event."

"JRTC enables us to record what's going on," Kinnison said.

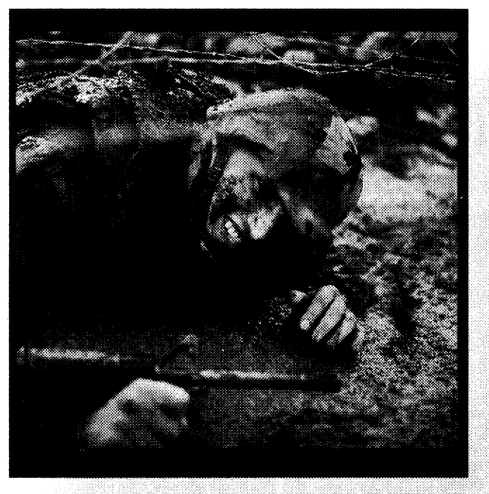
The exercise involves the C Company, 3rd Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, which will perform three major missions — nighttime Airborne assault, platoon assault and night live fire ambush — over seven days.

"We picked the worst possible conditions Infantrymen have to perform under," Kinnison said.

Preparation for JCFAWE started in April and will continue until August, including a stop at Fort Benning for intensive military operations in urbanized terrain and ambush training July 30 through August 12. Other training sites are Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Polk, La.

"This exercise will focus on the hardware and software. It will test specific equipment, test using it tactically in the field and test the collective effort to be able to use it in the field," Cummings said of JCFAWE. The purpose is to gather insights of Soldiers and make changes from there.

"They have to tell us this is good. They've got to like it," Kinnison said.



"The system will then enter an operations test after JRTC for one year to determine if it's ready for combat."

NTC rotation winds down, Soldiers prepare for home

Real world training offers 3rd Brigade true challenge

Pfc. Teresa Heist
Fort Stewart PAO

Like armies of ants marching single file, queues of Soldiers in their vehicles slowly snaked around the dust bowl Saturday when 3rd Brigade returned from the field, signaling that National Training Center rotation 00-07 is nearing completion.

Waiting in seemingly endless lines for wash racks, turn-in placement and dust bowl amenities such as the Troop Store, Soldiers "killed" time by reading, eating and swapping stories with fellow Soldiers.

The Army adage "hurry up and wait" was certainly true Saturday according to Spc. Jason Millett, C Company, 123rd Signal Battalion. "It's (preparing for turn-in) a very slow process," said Millett. "There's a lot of things to do in a short amount of time. We're understaffed too," he added, explaining how his unit is currently at 50 percent strength. Millett said he hasn't had a real shower in 16 days and still has a long day ahead of him before he will get that opportunity.

Waiting in line for the wash rack for wheeled vehicles was Sgt. Raul Valmeo, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

According to Valmeo, a lot of CS gas was used on them this rotation. In fact, said Valmeo, observer controllers threw CS gas canisters right up to everyone's faces, forcing his unit to attain MOPP level four a total of seven times. "We learned that you must always stay ready for an attack," stressed Valmeo.

At the wheeled vehicle wash rack, Soldiers are given 15 minutes to wash their vehicles and then are responsible for cleaning up the bay in five minutes. Next, they get into another line where they are assigned a position at the motor pool's turn-in yard.

In the bustle of activity at the track vehicle's wash rack was Pvt. Edward Watters, cannoneer number one, 1st Bn., 110th F.A. Watters is responsible for loading and firing 98-pound rounds for a 155 mm. Howitzer. "I loved it," said Watters about his experience out in the field. "We fired 203 rounds in three days (during the live fire)." Watters explained that the training didn't go very well in the beginning, but improved tremendously as the days progressed.

Pfc. Brandon Clements, cannoneer number two, 1st Bn., 10th F.A., had the strenuous job of hand-carrying the heavy ammunition between the M992 Field Artillery Ammunition Supply Vehicle and the Howitzer, which keeps a distance ahead of about 20 feet.

Both Clements and Watters agreed that teamwork was definitely the most important lesson learned during this rotation.

"They did very well," said Sgt. Ahmad Abdur-Rashid, ammunition team chief, 1st Bn., 10th F.A. "We had a lot of motivation this rotation. They enjoyed themselves." Abdur-Rashid added that time was spent cross-training his Soldiers during this training cycle.

After nearly two hours of waiting in the relentless sun and still behind at least 20 wheeled vehicles waiting for the wash racks was Sgt. Ricque Cole, petroleum specialist, 4th Battalion, 64th Armor Regiment. Cole said his unit, which supports the tankers, spent a lot of time in MOPP level 2, approximately two to four hours per day. "The reason," Cole explained, "is to climatize Soldiers for actual wartime, so it won't be such a shock. As a platoon, we did very well," added Cole.

According to Cole, the vehicle used to scatter CS canisters was so commonplace it was given the nickname "Dr. Doom."

Soldiers fortunate enough not to be waiting for hours out in the hot sun spent their time in the dust bowl's living area.

Here supplies were sorted and trash discarded, shelter halves constructed, laundry washed and loved ones phoned. Much needed showers were taken removing two weeks worth of dust and grime. But, it seemed that purchasing items at the Troop Store took priority. Waiting for hours, Soldiers stood in long lines to obtain items dreamed about in the field.

With happy stomachs and clean hair, many Soldiers will drift off to sleep thankful that the rotation is coming to an end. But for those Soldiers responsible for turning in vehicles, the following morning brings another challenge, preparing a war-beaten vehicle to pass the inspections given by ITT Federal Services Corporation, the civilian counterpart responsible for NTC vehicles.

This, some would say, is where the real battle begins.

5th RTB families get up-close look at Ranger instructors' daily regimen

Master Sgt. Dan Rhodes
5th Ranger Training Battalion PAO

DAHLONEGA, Ga., —Rappelling, tying knots, crossing two and three rope bridges, and firing weapons are all in a days work for Ranger Instructors and students at Camp Frank D. Merrill, home to the 5th Ranger Training Battalion.

But April 22nd was no ordinary training day, because from noon to 4 p.m., wives and children of the cadre were given an inside look at what their husbands and fathers do on a daily basis.

At noon, the family members gathered in the dining facility for lunch and a briefing by the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Keith Antonia. Following lunch, the participants walked the route students use to reach the lower mountaineering training area. Once there, 1st Sgt. Tommy Wilburn from B Company briefed everyone on the equipment they would use while rappelling down the 30-foot-wall.

"These are fun events to do, but I only plan on doing them once," Kelly Rhodes said, "And I hope I don't embarrass my husband."

Ranger Instructors from the various companies gave a quick rappelling demonstration and then moved the wives and children to the rope corrals. Once everyone was placed into the harnesses and inspected for safety, they assembled at the top of the rappelling wall. With only a little coaxing needed for some, everyone successfully rappelled down the wall. Several even ventured back to the top for another go around. A few were even brave enough to attempt the Australian rappel where the descent is face first.

One such soul was 12-year-old James Clingan. "I didn't think it would be scary and it really wasn't. I wanted to do it over and over again."

When everyone had their fill of rappelling they moved to the two rope bridge and crossed the Etowah River prior to negotiating the three-rope bridge suspended 30 feet over a fast flowing cascade. In true Ranger fashion no one froze or refused to cross.

The final event was firing the M4 carbine on the 25 meter small arms range. Not surprisingly, very few missed the mark with the ten rounds they fired.

"I really liked the weapons firing but everything else was scary. I don't know how they do it and I don't want to do it again," said Heather Carland.

A barbecue was supported by the NCO Club where everyone retold their own "war story" from the day's activity. More than 60 wives and children from the 5th RTBn and the RTB participated in the annual "Ranger Wives Day" and many cannot wait until next year.

"I think everyone had a good time and when the word spreads we will probably have more family members participate next year," said Angela Antonia.

Organizations work to keep Columbus beautiful

Fort Benning receives awards for earth efforts

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Four of Fort Benning's top tree-friendly organizations were honored at a Columbus luncheon Thursday for their efforts in keeping the community beautiful.

The 63rd Engineer Group netted an award for its involvement in the Russ Pond clean-up; McBride Elementary School's Woodland Trail rallied to win an urban forestry award; Officer Candidate School took home honors for its help in the postwide beautification effort; and the Directorate of Community Activities won an award for its work in constructing a new fishing pier at Uchee Creek.

While the award ceremony was part of an annual award system that honors local community groups for their contributions in keeping the Columbus area clean and beautiful, this marks the first time Fort Benning has earned honors from the group.

"Col. (John) Mitchell, the garrison commander, told us to check into the program and see if we had any groups that would qualify for the award," said Patrick Chauvey, acting Environmental Management Division chief. "We put together the list and submitted them, and four out of the five we sent won an award."

The four were selected based upon the positive impact the projects had on area beautification and resource preservation.

"This truly shows what a great part of the community Fort Benning is," he said. "When people travel to this area they don't just travel to Columbus but they come here as well."

"This shows we, too, are doing our part to keep our community — both Columbus and Fort Benning — beautiful," he said.

The secret to success for the four units awarded, Chauvey said, is two-fold.

"These units put in long hours and designate extra people to ensure the post continues to be beautiful," he said. "That is how they accomplish the mission."

"But they also have to follow more stringent regulations than they would if they were to work on an area on private property," he said. "The increased pressure from the regulations and federal law also pushes them to perform at a higher level."

For some projects, like the renovation of Russ Pond, that higher level forced the cooperation of both military and civilian personnel to ensure the project was not only completed, but completed according to federal law.

"These Soldiers are great," said Melissa B. Kendrick, a senior environmental specialist at EMD. "They are always willing to work with us on compliance, and they are always ready to take on the challenge no matter how big or small."

While these Soldiers and civilians are willing to take the challenge, Chauvey said he has a challenge of his own for Fort Benning for next year's competition.

"I want more units to win next year," he said. "I am sure there are all kinds of untold stories out there of Soldiers working to improve the environment."

"It doesn't matter if it was a one-time project or on-going, I want to know about it," he said.

For more information, call Patrick Chauvey at 545-4211.

Tuesday's ribbon cutting at 100 Yeager Avenue marked the completion of the white elephant project's Phase I.

"This is proof of the Army's commitment to families, even in lean times," said Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander, who spoke in place of Gen. John Le Moyne at the ceremony.

"This is a sentimental journey for me to see how they look now because we lived there before," he said.

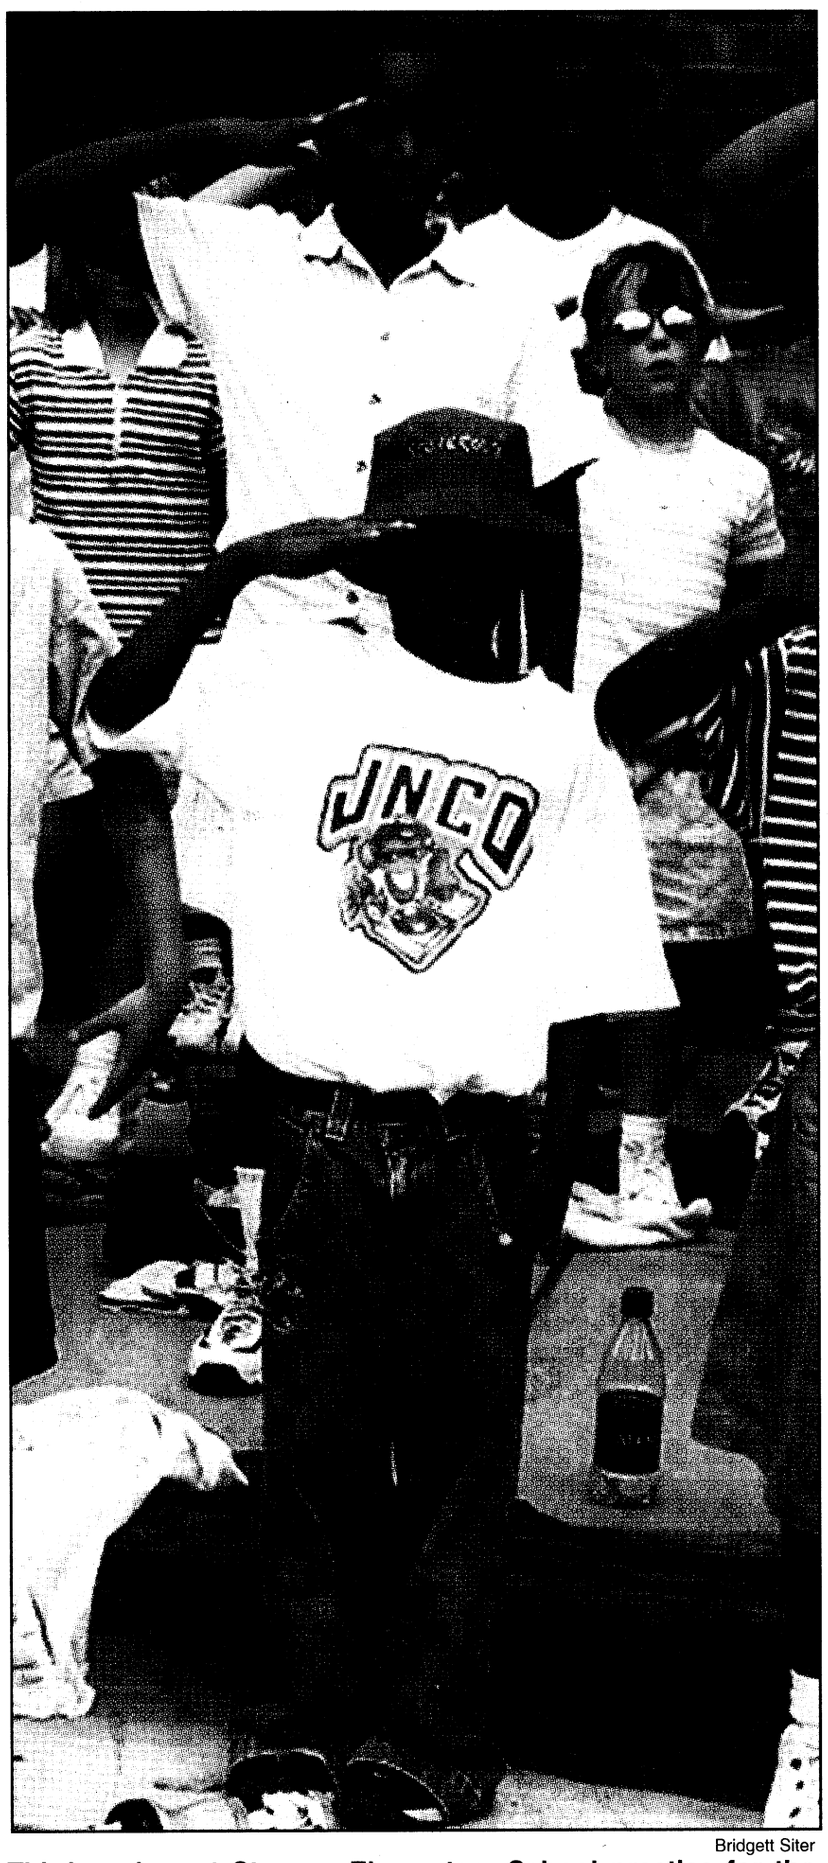
Mitchell lived in the white elephants 21 years ago. "It was 21 years ago today that my wife and I celebrated our twin daughters' first birthday in a set of these units," he said.

There are three phases to the white elephant refurbishing project: Phase I consisting of eight buildings, Phase II of 10 buildings and Phase III of 12 buildings — for a total of 120 units.

"We're doing it neighborhood by neighborhood," said Sam Anonas, of JRA Architects.

The project started with the smallest neighborhood first so it was easier for the construction crew from Trawick Contractors of Birminham, Ala., to adjust their schedule if problems came up such as asbestos and lead, he said.

"You don't know what's inside the walls until you start tearing them down," Anonas said.



In reality, minimal wall-demolition was a part of the refurbishing process because the buildings are historic.

Built in 1935, the 120 white elephant units were originally field-grade quarters with three bedrooms including an attic and a storage area. These quarters were added to the historic register in 1984.

"All of the work had to go through the Georgia Historic

Schools get 'newer' math

DoDEA incorporates same math curriculum throughout military

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Just when the term "new math" was becoming obsolete, the Department of Defense Education Activity schools will introduce a "newer" math to elementary and middle school students when they return to school August 17.

For the first time, all DoDEA schools, both overseas and stateside, will be using the same math curriculum — a big plus for students transferring from one installation to another during the school year.

Fort Benning's director of curriculum, Kathy Einhorn introduced The Path to Success, Math and Math Thematics to school board members and representatives at the April 24 school board meeting. The Path to Success and Math will be used in kindergarten through fifth grades, and Math Thematics will be used at the middle school level.

Materials for the newly adopted program were ordered and received this year after 120 administrators and teachers from DoDEA schools helped review and select a universal curriculum.

"They looked at what our current curriculum might be lacking that our students are going to need in their job market," Einhorn said. "They made their decisions based on the need for a strong math vocabulary, a good balance between computation and problem solving, and the desire to have a hands-on activity-based learning experience."

Einhorn said the new curriculum is "thematically organized," introducing themes in each unit that will allow teachers to incorporate various subjects into each lesson.

"When the students are introduced to a new math skill in a unit such as the rain forest unit, they enjoy learning because it's relevant to their interests and they understand how it applies to their world," Einhorn said.

Einhorn said the new program also places a strong emphasis on the development of a math vocabulary and writing techniques, skills required on the Terra Nova Assessment Test.

"We've typically asked our students to explain their reasoning when we evaluate their skills, but we haven't given them the tools to do that proficiently in the past. This is one of the best aspects of the new curriculum."

Faith Middle School math teacher Alice Hiltibrand agreed that Math Thematics is ultimately more practical than the curriculum she currently uses in her classes.

"This will require a lot more technical writing, as opposed to the creative writing we've been stressing for years," Hiltibrand said. "Studies show that this is where schools in the United States lag behind other nations, particularly Japan.

> "Every child has a different way of learning, and this curriculum allows you to pool from different methods of teaching."

> Fourth-grade teacher

This kind of critical thinking and extensive writing will really help these students when they need it in the job market."

Richard Thomas, a fourth-grade teacher at White Elementary School, said the new curriculum incorporates a wide variety of resources that will alleviate the monotony of math.

"Yes there's a lot of repetition so they grasp new skills, but it's so flexible that it's never boring for the students. It uses so many resources like manipulatives, computer software, overheads, big books ... ," Thomas said. "I've used some of the methods in my classroom already and I'm seeing immediate results. Every child has a different way of learning, and this curriculum allows you to pool from different methods of teaching."

Fort Benning teachers and administrators began pre-implementation training last fall to prepare them to teach the new math curriculum next year. Einhorn conducted individualized training for all grades at each elementary school. In April, middle school teachers and administrators attended training sessions at the Fort Benning Schools administrative offices.

"By the end of May, our teachers will have had at least six hours of training on the new curriculum, some much more than that," Einhorn said. "The pre-implementation training has given them a real handle on the new material and they're very excited about introducing it to their students."

Although all Fort Benning schools are now prepared to fully implement the new curriculum in their classrooms next year, some teachers have already begun to borrow from the materials they have reviewed.

"We were instructed not to introduce it completely yet," said Dorothy Hyder, an instruction support specialist at White Elementary School. "But it's such good material that it's hard not to jump right into it. It's concrete as opposed to abstract learning. They (students) get to use manipulative for longer periods of time, and that makes them feel more comfortable with the Representatives answer questions at postwide town hall meeting

For Fort Benning residents who have questions about their community, the postwide town hall meeting has answers.

Residents from all neighborhoods are invited to attend the first-ever postwide town hall meeting at 7 p.m. May 23 in the cafeteria of Faith Middle School.

"It's a way to express grievances, concerns and suggestions to the people who make decisions," said Command Sgt. Major Ken Graham, garrison command sergeant major.

"This is your venue to express what you really feel about your community, good and bad.

"It's the best opportunity you have. The garrison commander and all the directors of the different agencies are there," he said.

Agencies attending the meeting include AAFES, Directorate of Community Activities, housing, Directorate of Public Works, the hospital, TRICARE, the commissary and military police.

In addition, the community life NCOs, volunteer mayors and the garrison commander, Col. John Mitchell will be on hand to answer questions.

"You couldn't get a better audience other than the CG himself, or the chief of staff," Graham said.

Also invited are the sponsoring commanders and sergeant majors of each community. It is a chance for them to explain their involvement in the community and put faces to its members, Graham said. "Many people don't understand the role of sponsors."

If panel members do not have an immediate answer to a question, concern or suggestion, they will get back to that individual, Graham said.

In the past, each community had its own meeting. "This year we decided to try something different," said Jodie Bowers, president of the mayors' association.

The postwide meeting aims to bring everyone together in one place to discuss a variety of community issues.

Every neighborhood has many of the same problems, Graham said.

But in many cases, "(Residents) may not know who to turn to," Bowers said.

Issue sheets are available for residents to fill out prior to the meeting at the family unit network center located at Building 359 on Ingersoll Avenue. Residents can submit completed issue sheets to the FUN Center, fax to 545-3020 or e-mail to criderj2@benning.army.mil by Tuesday.

Using the issue sheets, it gives people a chance to think about questions in advance, Graham said.

Bowers said she will take sheets to the appropriate agency. This enables directors to do research if necessary in order to fully address a particular issue.

"If someone has a suggestion (the agency) can tell them the legal ramifications, financial ramifications and everything else that has to do with it," Graham said.

Residents also can bring the sheet with them to the meeting as a reference for their questions or comments.

"We want to make sure every one gets a chance (to participate)," Bowers said.

Preservation Office," Anonas said.

In fact, Larry Jones, a historic architect was involved with the project to ensure the historic integrity of the structure was maintained during construction, said Dr. Chris Hamilton, cultural resource manager.

All windows and doors are original, just cleared of the lead paint, said Harold Hartman, area engineer with U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Savannah District.

"It's the original woodwork from the 1930s," he said. "Even the wood floors are original. They were just sanded down and refinished."

The changes within each white elephant unit include transforming the third bedroom into a nook for a washer and dryer hookup, and constructing an adjacent bath with a shower.

A master bedroom exists in place of the sleeping porch, complete with his and hers closets.

The kitchen was gutted and refurbished with new cabinetry, sinks and vinyl flooring.

Other added features were sprinklers, cable hookup, new phone jacks and new light fixtures.

Also, several built-ins in the living room and master bedroom provide extra storage or display areas.

One well-loved feature by residents is the new patio right out front of each doorway.

As a part of the project, the ground was dug up to replace sewer lines.

"We had to re-sod and added sidewalks," Hartman said. "Students at Dexter really like using that sidewalk."

It not only keeps the children safe from traffic, but preserves the grass, he said.

Before Phase I of the white elephant project even began, the staff from JRA Architects walked through the 120 units more than three years ago.

"We made notes on where each spot of mildew was. We went into every single garage," Anamos said.

This field work done by the architects set the plans for what needed to be done to each unit.

Phase II is scheduled for completion in October followed by Phase III in April 2001.

concepts they're learning. I'm thrilled with it."

Einhorn said parents will have the opportunity to view the new curriculum in August. Most schools are planning "training" sessions for parents to familiarize them with the new program. Parents also will receive periodic newsletters to update them on the skills their children are learning and offer practical ways to reinforce them at home.

"It's important to us that parents are kept abreast of their child's progress and that they understand this curriculum is very different from what they may have come to expect," Einhorn said. "But now they will know what to expect any time they move to a new installation. That's the beauty of standardizing math throughout the whole system, and hopefully we'll head in that direction with all our other curriculums also."

Road Closure

From Monday through May 26, Dixie Road will be closed between Way Street and Sightseeing Road to install utility connections and a concrete entrance to the new 17th Air Support Operations Squadron Facility.

Traffic will be detoured to Way Street and Sightseeing Road. Signs and barricades will be placed to clearly mark the detour route. For more information, call Jon Taso at 544-4601, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Reduced services

Service Orders: Shop staffing levels will be minimal due to employee participation in Safety Stand Down Day May 25. The Directorate of Public Works work reception section will coordinate all services and emergency response.

To call in a service order or to report an emergency, call the work order desk at 545-2135.

For more information, call Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist, at 545-2117.

Family Housing Branch: Offices will be closed May 25. For more information, call the Family Housing Office at 545-2988.

Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center: All sections of the Self-Help Center will be closed May 25. The Center will reopen at 8:30 a.m. May 26. For more information, call Dr. William C. Shirley at 545-1121.

Air conditioning startup begins

Criteria for startup of air conditioning in administrative areas and buildings on post were met on Sunday.

Startup is authorized when the effective outside temperature exceeds 85 degrees for four out of five consecutive days. Calculations to determine the effective temperature include the humidity as well as temperature.

DPW personnel began bringing air conditioning systems on line on Monday. However, not all systems can be started automatically, some must be turned on manually and there may be some delay in service in some buildings or areas.

Customers can assist in ensuring that their air conditioning equipment operates at maximum efficiency by installing new filters.

Frequent changes of filters will keep interior air cleaner and reduce equipment down time. Please be aware that customers with a documented medical exception to policy have top priority. Service orders for troop living quarters and for family housing are normally given priority over those for administrative areas.

If air conditioning has not been started up in a building, a service order should be called in to the work order desk at 545-2135.

For more information, call the Energy and Utilities Division office at 545-4480.

Power outage notice

On May 26 Flint EMCS will conduct a series of scheduled power outages in the area served by the Baltzell Power Substation. This area runs east to west from the golf course to Edwards Street, and north to south from Mountain Division Road to Dixie Road.

The purpose of the outages is to map the extent of the underground feeds out of the substation. Currently, the precise coverage of each feed is not known. The determination of the exact coverage area for each circuit will help reduce the length of unscheduled outages in the future.

A 30-minute outage is scheduled for each of the five underground circuits originating from this substation as follows:

- From 7 to 7:30 a.m. — Baltzell and Rainbow avenues.
- From 7:30 to 8 a.m. — museum area.
- From 8 to 8:30 a.m. — golf course and Iron Triangle.
- From 8:30 to 9 a.m. — Wold, Ingersoll and Vibbert streets, Miler and Austin loops, Officers Club and Quarters 1.
- From 9 to 9:30 a.m. — Lumpkin and Blessing roads and Zukerman and Perkins streets and the area between Edwards and Ingersoll.

The outage areas are defined as closely as possible at this time. Circuit coverage may not match the identified areas exactly. As a result, outages in some buildings may not occur exactly as the schedule above indicates.

For more information, call Benny Hines at 545-4310.

Memorial Day schedule

Family Housing Branch: Offices will be closed May 29. For more information, call the Family Housing Office at 545-2988.

Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center: All sections will be closed May 27-29. The Center will reopen at 8:30 a.m. May 30. For more information, call Shirley at 545-1121.

Yard Waste collection: There will be no pick-up in family housing on May 29. The next scheduled yard waste pick-up will be June 5. For more information, call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4232.

Garbage and Recycle collection: No pick-ups on May 29; areas normally scheduled for pick-up on Monday will be picked up on May 30 instead. Garbage and recycle collection in family housing for May 30 through June 2, will occur as normally scheduled. For more information, call CIB at 545-4232.

Pets of the Week

An adult female domestic long-haired cat and an adult female Staffordshire terrier are just a few of the animals available. There are currently 17 kittens available for adoption and many more animals are in need of a good home.

For more information about these or any other pets, call the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic at 545-4826.

Students learn key to reading

Loyd children master phonics during class

Loyd Elementary School

The kindergarten students at Loyd Elementary have taken to heart their title, "Pre-First Graders."

Their teachers have received training with one of Marva Collins' proteges, Rita McGlothin, and have charged into the phonics instruction with single-minded verve, as they adopted the Marva Collins philosophy, Welcome to Success!

This is the message that greets every student at Marva Collins' Eastside Preparatory School in Chicago. She has learned that the secret to every child's success is in building his self confidence (esteem).

At Marva's school, every child is told "You can do it" and "I will not let you fail." And she set out to build an educational program that will instill success in every child. That's why every child in grades kindergarten through eighth recites the Marva Collins Phonics Wall Cards every day. She knows that when a child has a command of his or her language, the possibilities are endless.

What better way to instill this command of language than by giving each child the keys to unlocking all of its mysteries. Those keys are phonics.

The program was easy to implement, and easy to follow. The results were incredible. Kindergartners at Loyd are now reading, and reading well. They are self-confident learners that any first-grade teacher would be thrilled to receive.

So, what do the cards do? The wall cards unlock the mystery of any word in English. The wall cards and the chants that go along with the cards help the students learn these keys to reading. The simple exercises make the transition from knowing the keys of phonics to using the keys to phonics.

Parents of our students report that their children recite the chants in the bathtub, in the Commissary and even at the dinner table.

The students love to demonstrate their expertise for friends, family and even for school visitors.

We're so proud of these students and teachers who stepped outside the box and took on this new and challenging strategy which truly welcomed success.

For more information about this program, call the school office at 544-4342.

Remember, celebrate mothers this holiday

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New Deputy USAIC Chaplain

As you think of your mother there are probably a lot of emotions and memories that readily come to mind.

When we were very young, the time spent with moms may have consisted of trips to the store, playing a variety of games, enforcing the completion of homework, chores and doing the right thing.

reflections

As we get older the memories shift in many cases to the quiet support that a mother gives to each child in her own unique and personal way.

As we celebrate Mother's Day this weekend it could be interesting to ask yourself, "How do I honor my mother?" For some, it is sending a card, or others giving a gift. We can honor our mothers every day.

A couple questions can easily measure how much we honor our mothers. Would my mother be proud of "this" action? Would she like to hear the words coming out of my mouth right now? Would I want her to know what I am thinking, or watching on TV or at the movies?

There is not one person who could answer these questions with a "yes" all of the time. However, we can be aware that each mother models to her children the values by which to live life.

There are instances in the Bible where mothers are highlighted. In most cases, the love mothers gave to their children was connected to the love they experienced with God.

Hannah was the mother of Samuel. She prayed for the privilege of being a mother. Early in Samuel's life, Hannah gave him back to God and Samuel became the prophet who anointed the first two kings of Israel.

Moses' mother hid him three months before turning him over to God by placing him in a basket and setting him at the brink of the Nile River. Moses became the leader of more than a million Israelite people exiting out of Egypt and the author of the first five books of the Bible.

How we live our lives will either honor or dishonor our mothers. God has given us our mothers as an extension of his love and has entrusted them with the responsibility of giving us a faith and value system.

I hope as you celebrate Mother's Day you will remember your mother with great fondness and honor her with a lifestyle she would view with pride. May God richly bless you as you bless one another.

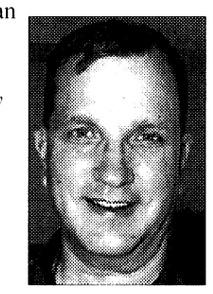
Single parents must love, work more

Chap. (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries Center



If you are a single parent you don't need to be reminded that you face an especially challenging job.

Noted Christian speaker and author Josh McDowell said, "If you're married but your relationship with your spouse is cold, at least you have hope that through love, work, counseling and prayer, your marriage can become what it ought to be. The single parent, however, doesn't have that hope. What do you do?"

Divorce is the single largest contributor to single parenthood. If at all possible, it is best that both parents, even though divorced, remain active in their children's life. And for single parents in the military life it can get pretty interesting when deployments take them away from their children.

How can single parents model a loving relationship for their child?

Plain and simple, it cannot be done. However there are some things that can be done that may help.

Using McDowell's book, How to Help Your Child Say No to Sexual Pressure, as a guide let me offer single parents some suggestions. Overdose your child with love. As much as possible, you should support your child's need for parental love by yourself. It's quality and quantity that can make a difference.

I realize that the vast majority of single parents have to work outside the home and then face more work when they get home.

For many the last thing they feel like doing is playing with their child. So much to do and so little time to get everything accomplished.

However, as McDowell noted, "Aggressively loving your children takes a firm commitment on your part."

Second, divorce can bring the worst out in people and it is tempting to speak negatively about marriage. However, this can create an attitude in your child that you do not wish them to have.

Even though your marriage ended in a divorce, talk to your children positively about what marriage can be. When they ask you why your marriage didn't work out, admit any mistakes that you may have made and assure them that even though you got a divorce, marriage can be a wonderful experience.

Third, sex outside of marriage is wrong. If you do not want your children to engage in premarital sex then you should not. Plain and simple, if it is not right for your children then it is not right for you.

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center exists to help all Soldiers and their families including single-parent families.

If the pressures of being a single parent are overwhelming, give the Center a call at 545-2050 or 545-7777 to get some help in meeting the challenge of being a single parent.

OCs go head-to-head in JMAC competition

Spc. Amy Nyland

Officer Candidate Elizabeth Dubreuil tries to knock out one more situp during the Joint Military Athletic Competition Saturday at Maxwell Air Force Base.

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Beneath the stinging rays of a blazing sun, hundreds of officer candidates from the Army, Air Force and Navy squared off in a test of brawn and endurance during the Joint Military Athletic Competition Saturday at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Ala.

JMAC, which is an olympics of sorts for the officer candidates, pits the three services against one another in six different events — a three-mile run, super physical fitness test relay, 3 x .5 mile relay, volleyball competition, stretcher carry and tug of war, said 2nd Lt. Christopher Augustine, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, adjutant.

Augustine explained the services are awarded points based on the place they come in for each event.

This year's JMAC ended bittersweet for the officer candidates of the 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., when they were forced to turn over the trophy, a "bomb," to the Navy after being edged out of first place by one point.

> "OCS is very physically challenging and people had to reach deep down to pull out the extra strength to be as competitive as they were at JMAC."
> — Officer Candidate Elizabeth Dubreuil
> JMAC competitor

The Army managed to secure second place with a score of 17 points while the Air Force came in third with 13 points.

JMAC is a semi-annual competition that originally began in 1994 as a competition between the Air Force and Navy officer candidate schools.

In 1998 the Army OCS was invited in on the fun and has since participated in five competitions, winning every one until now, Augustine said.

The day started out slow for the Army after taking third place in the first event — the three-mile run. However, first place finishes in both the volleyball and stretcher carry events kept them neck-and-neck with the Navy.

By JMAC's end, the Navy and Army were tied and the fate of both was to be determined by the tug of war.

The Army candidates spared no expense coming to the rope clad in "warrior" faces.

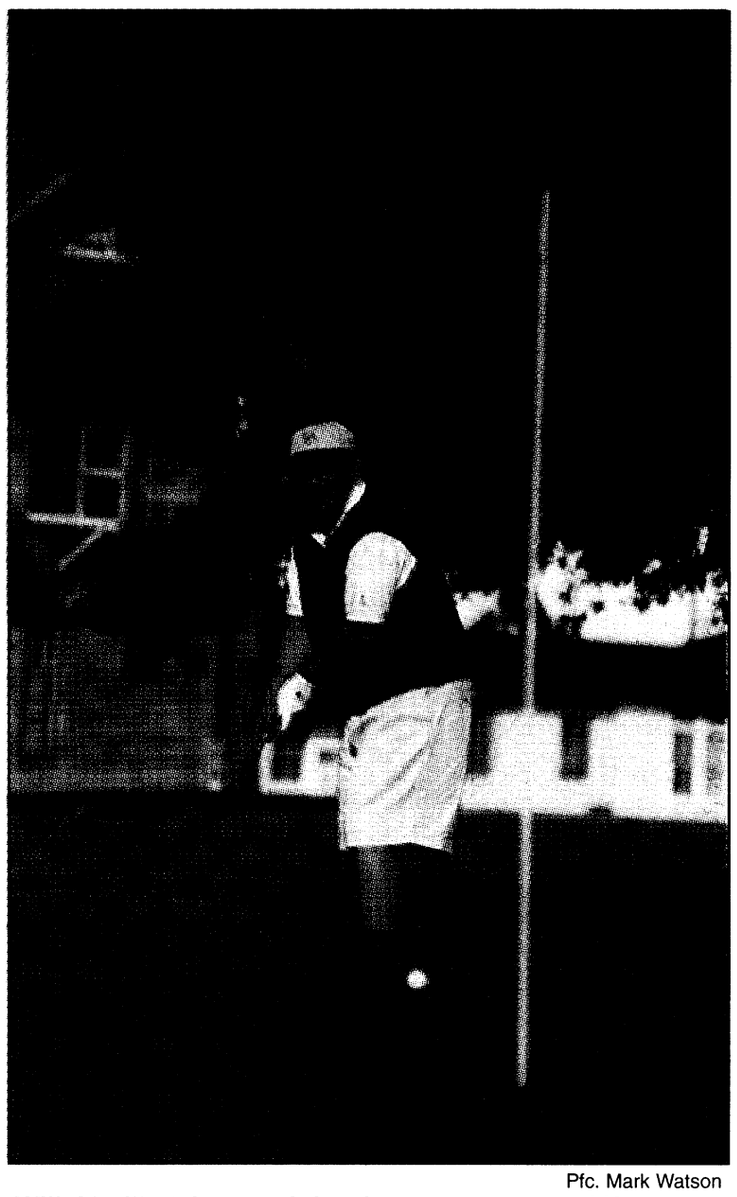
However even camouflage wasn't enough to secure the win as the Army was pulled over the line by a triumphant Navy.

Although the Army didn't return with the "bomb" this year Senior OC Elizabeth Dubreuil, competitor in the super APFT, said she is proud of everyone and how much they put into the competition.

"OCS is very physically challenging and people had to reach deep down to pull out the extra strength to be as competitive as they were at JMAC," Debreuil said. "I am really proud of everyone and feel that to lose by only one point is still amazing."

Dubreuil mentioned that her favorite thing about the competition was just being able to see how the other services operate.

"Overall my experience with the other officer candidates was the best thing about it. It was neat seeing how the other services do PT, organize themselves and march."



For Senior OC Dianne Petrowski it was exciting just to come out and have some fun. Petrowski said the main objective was to bring everyone together and promote esprit de corps.

Big swing

Braves pitcher Graham Sherril swings for the fence in Tuesday's Youth Service baseball game against the Red Sox. Although they lost their first meeting between the two teams at the beginning of the season, the Braves drove home 10 runs in six innings of play. The Red Sox team scored six runs.

Mayors' Cup tourney attracts more than 100

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The fourth annual Mayors' Cup Golf Tournament was held Saturday and Sunday at the Follow Me Golf Course.

More than 100 golfers showed up for this year's annual tournament, which supported the Asian Pacific Alliance Education Fund.

This year's winners were:

For the Men's Championship flight: John Littletook first, in second was Tom Daniels followed by Won Yi, Chad Andrea and Bob Antoskow.

In the men's first flight, Ron Green won followed by Scott Polymale, Mike Ray Walt Worthington and Chef Lee.

In the second flight, Al McDowell came away with the win with John Spillar, Pat McKenzie, Jong Lee and Paul Kim finishing in their respective places.

For the third flight, Yoon Bok Change won, followed by Chang Soo Chong, Auprey Batts, David Brown and Ted Christobal.

In the fourth and final men's flight, Norm Kotaella took the top spot followed by Darrel Parkinson, Jerry Mazurkiewicz, Kris Sham and Charles Hill.

The overall women's championship went to three-time champion Jinson Antoswok, with Jennifer Thomas in second and Mary Henderson in third.

For the women's low net, Mavis Hill walked away with the win, followed by Cordy Arnold, Nina Green and Jodi Arnold.

Golf Scramble tees off for Red Cross

Staff Sgt. Chris Fletcher
C Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

The Golf Scramble, sponsored by the 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, "Raiders," will be May 25 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

According to Pfc. Christopher Applegate, the tournament's organizer and the battalion finance personnel clerk, this should be a lot of fun and should have some great prizes.

"We're sponsoring the event and all proceeds will go to the Red Cross," Applegate explained. He added that the battalion was looking for a different way to help the Red Cross in addition to doing the blood drives that the unit conducts.

Applegate said prizes will be given for a variety of different things such as closest to the pin and the longest drive, as well as door prizes.

A scramble is played in the following way, four golfers team together at the same hole, tee up and each drive their ball toward the hole, Applegate said.

The golfer in that group with the best shot is whose ball the team uses to progress toward the hole. The game is played in this manner for the entire 18 holes of golf.

Any interested golfers should call Applegate at 544-8737. The cost to enter the tourney is $35 for civilians, $25 for nonmembers of the golf course and $20 for all members of the Follow Me Golf Course.

"If you didn't make it to a blood drive than this is a good way to help the Red Cross," Applegate said. "I hope everybody will have a lot of fun because it's for a good cause."

Trail provides multilevel challenge

outdoor corner

A wonderful thing happened to me this weekend — I fell in love. I don't think I can pinpoint the exact moment that it hit me, but I definitely know that there is no other one for me. The first minute I laid my eyes on its beautiful physique and spectacular colors it was all over. But the true moment of elation came when I finally saddled up and went for a ride.

Now don't get the wrong idea here, what I am referring to is the new mountain bike I bought on Friday. After months of debating over whether I should throw down the dough for a new bike I finally decided what the heck. And let me tell you it was one of the best decisions I ever made.

What makes it even better was the perfect trail I discovered this weekend. On Sunday I headed out to the Tuskegee National Forest in Tuskegee, Ala., where the Bartram Trail was waiting to be conquered.

You can find the Bartram Trail by taking Highway 80 West out of Phenix City. You will drive for about 40 miles until you pass under an overpass. The Tuskegee National Forest will be on the right about two or three miles after the underpass.

I was so excited to test out my new bike that I had barely rolled to a stop before I was jumping out of my truck. Within a flash I had thrown on my necessary gear — helmet, gloves and Camelbak, and was on my way.

About a half a mile into the trail I was pleased to encounter another female rider and after a minute or two of conversation I decided to follow her lead. It wasn't long before things started to really pick up.

The section of the trail we were traveling on was thick with magnolia trees so there were plenty of roots to dodge and drive over. Not only that but the single track was full of twists and turns so I had to watch myself when flying around corners. There was almost always a nice big tree or mogul waiting to take me out.

What impressed me the most about the trail was the fact that it wasn't too hard or too easy. There were plenty of times I was flying down the track so fast the bugs stung when they hit my face. There were also times when I thought my heart was going to pop out of my chest trying to negotiate myself up one of the hills.

It always seemed that if I was getting too comfortable something would come up to challenge me. And then when things seemed to get too tough it wasn't long before they were easy again.

I would recommend this trail for anyone. Beginner and intermediate riders will find plenty of challenges and more experienced bikers can practice their skills while getting some miles in. The trail is supposedly 18 miles out and back.

I will warn anyone who goes out however, that the trail does have some areas with extreme erosion and there are a couple of unexpected ravines. If you have never been you might want to take it easy on your first trip to scope out the area. So far this trail is definitely on the top of my list.

I'm already dreaming about when I can go back out again.

sports briefs

Bank Agrees To Loans For Individuals With Bad Credit!

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of reliable transportation.

Columbus, GA. Milton Watts, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Including Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

> "Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of a new or slightly used car, truck or van either for their family or a business venture.
These are prime, in demand vehicles, that are either repossessed, overaged or a terminated lease situation.

Bankers will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expressway until the end of June. Best of all, cut rate financing will be offered to those whose credit would not normally meet such an arrangement at rates that banks usually reserve for their blue chip clients. Quoting Watts, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing.

Kevin Thompson, Representing the dealership, has arranged for special low payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the cash crunch at the vacation season.

In some cases these payments are ridiculously low. When pressed for an example, Thompson replied, "Well, here is a '95 Elantra 4 door #HS002. With $1 down payment to validate the transaction, your payments to be taken on would be $55 for 60 months at only 9.9% APR with a credit approval process that can take as little as 20 minutes. An incredibly low sale price of only $1,995. Adding only tax, tag, title and WRA make this payment arrangement possible. "Or, if a truck is your thing, then here is a '96 Toyota Tacoma #HS003. Again the $1 down to validate the deal and start making payments on a new bank contract of just $111.89 for 72 months at the same low 9.9% APR with credit approval that may be arranged while you wait. Again, the low monthly payment is possible because of the $5997 sale price adding only tax, tag and title.

This offer is for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle.

Hundreds of new Chevys including Silverados, Tahoes, Venture Vans, Blazers, Malibus and Impalas are included in this offer. Along with acres of used Chevys, Fords, Hondas, Jeeps, Acuras and Nissans.

Shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much the bank will advance you by calling Mr. Thompson or his assistant Mr. Crosby at 322-8888 OR 1-800-868-1585, 9am to 9pm.

Bill boosts funding for schools

Treasurer said new Impact Aid still isn't enough

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Muscogee schools will receive more than $900,000 to offset the the cost of educating military dependents thanks to a new bill passed by Congress this week.

The Impact Aid Reauthorization Act of 2000 increases financial aid to schools by $15,000 over last year's figure of $885,000.

"This bill continues to help school districts perform the vital job of educating the children of our military personnel," Collins said.

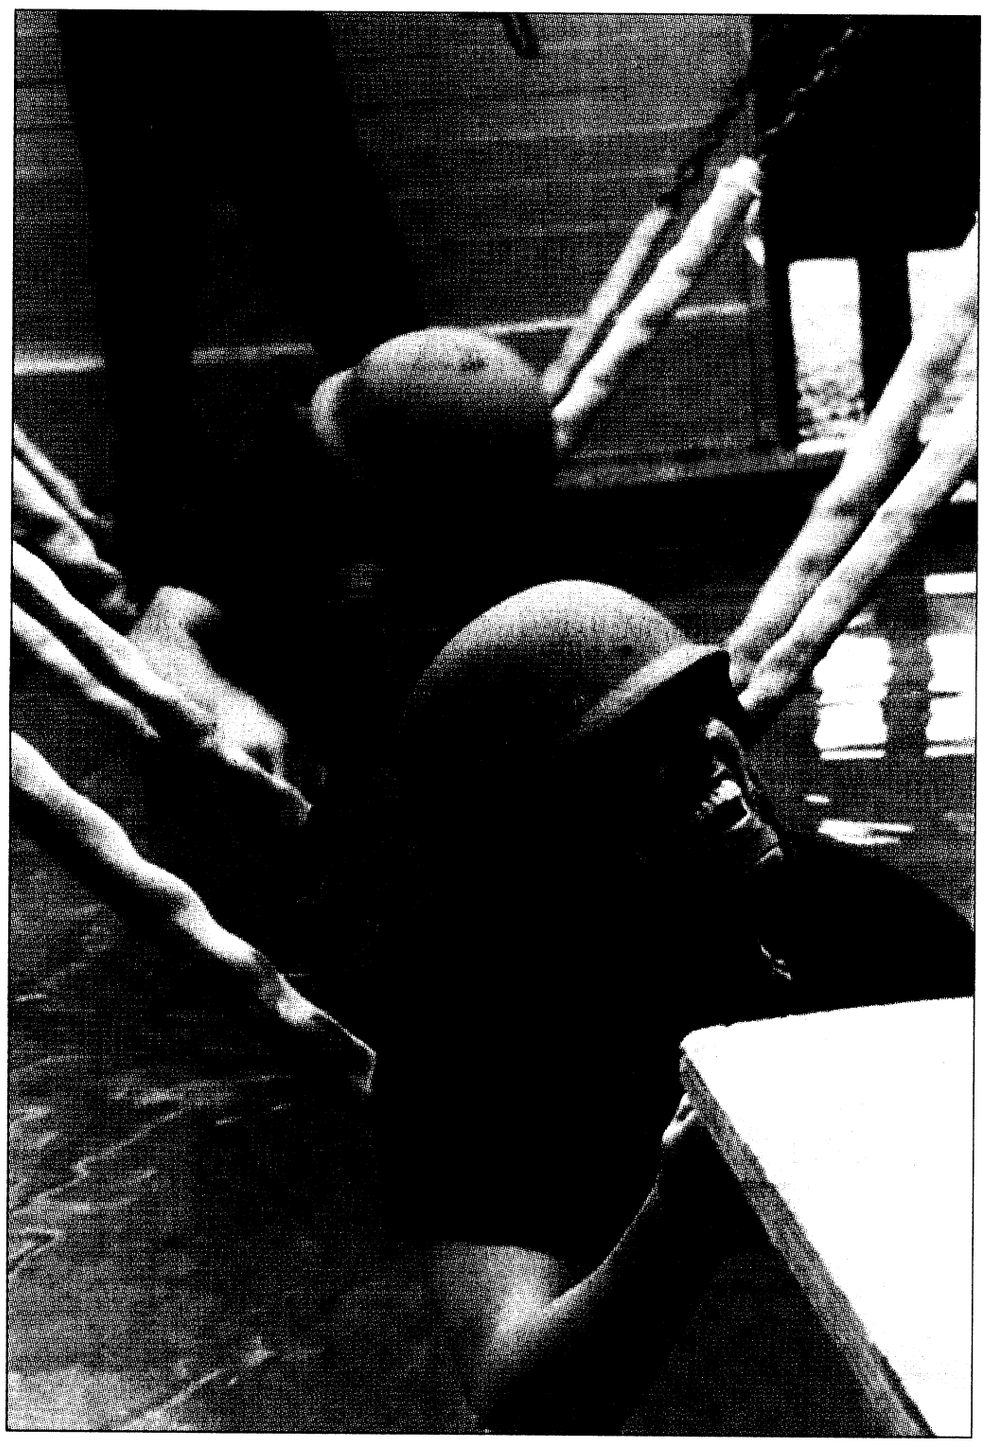
Local school officials said the increase is still not enough.

"We have seen the Impact Aid numbers dwindle considerably over the past 10 years," said Fred Jones, Muscogee County School treasurer. "Historically, the figure was somewhere around $1.5 million."

The tax that supports the school is part of local property tax base — a tax military service members living on post are exempt.

While that exemption is beneficial for the service member at tax time, it puts local schools in a situation where they are forced to foot the bill for the students from Fort Benning.

"The decrease in funding has put an added pressure on us, there is no doubt about that," Jones said. "But by raising funds through other means, we don't believe the students feel the pressure."



Currently, there are no programs or positions that have been disbanded at Muscogee Schools due to the lack of Impact funding, but Jones said he couldn't rule out a possible tax hike in the future to offset the gap left between the Impact Aid and the actual cost of educating military dependents in civilian schools.

The major reason students don't feel the funding bind is because the revenue generated from Impact Aid goes directly into the schools' general operating fund — a portion of the school's annual budget that appropriates monies for bills and day-to-day operation of the facility, Jones said.

"I am really surprised to hear of the increase," Jones said. "At one point in time we were told the program many be disbanded all together."

Collins spearheaded the campaign to overhaul the 50 year-old program, earning Georgia schools Impact Aid allocations totaling $13,551,000 in 2000.

A group of 59 Department of Defense employees spent a week at Fort Benning immersing themselves in Army training.

But some found themselves immersed in more than military methods their last morning on post.

Quite a few hit the water at the Leaders' Reaction Course and found themselves all wet.

Dressed in matching black twill pants and sports shirts with the Executive Leadership Development Program (ELDP) logo, the men and women worked in teams to complete the mission presented to them at each station along the reaction course.

"We are all different shapes, sizes and from all the different components of the Department of Defense," Rick Garver said. "But we've come together as a team."

Garver, safety manager with the Office of Safety and Loss Control, at Fort Shafter, Hawaii, and the other participants visited the post for a hands-on look at the Army, an experience designed to assist them in understanding the overall mission throughout DoD's area of operation.

The ELDP was established by the DoD in 1989 to prepare mid-level careerists for supervisory and executive positions.

Soldiers come home after training at NTC

Spc. Mitch Frazier

After spending more than a month in the California sand, the Soldiers of Fort Benning's 3rd Brigade Combat Team are home.

More than 1,000 Soldiers from five Fort Benning units teamed up with units from Fort Bragg, Fort Campbell and Fort Stewart to square off against one of the best opposition forces in the world — the warriors of the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

And while the 32 days in the sand battling the elite elusive force certainly tested the deployed elements, Brigade Commander Col. Anthony Cucolo said the lessons learned from the deployment began to tally up long before the first round was fired.

"Training for our deployment began earlier this spring with Marne Focus," Cucolo said. "And with the addition of a SEDRE to deploy us to Fort Irwin, the training lessons learned from this exercise were outstanding."

That SEDRE was a first for the brigade as the 3rd BCT was augmented by reservists who

Post brings home top award

CG accepts award during Pentagon ceremony May 11

For the eighth consecutive year, Fort Benning has another Army Communities of Excellence trophy to add to the long list of post accolades.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne and an entourage of nearly 50 post representatives joined the Army's vice chief of staff at the Pentagon to accept the award May 11.

"It is the collective effort of the first-class people who work hard and are proud of what they do that makes a post a Community of Excellence," said Maj. Gen. John M. Keane, Army vice chief of staff, during his Pentagon address. "The winners here today represent the best the Army has to offer."

For Fort Benning, being the best is nothing new.

The post has taken home the Army's top excellence honors eight times since the award program inception 11 years ago at the nation's capital.

"This is something we plan for every year," Sen. Mac Collins said jokingly during a congratulatory social after the award ceremony. "We just count on Fort Benning

Current creates electrical buzz

Col. Randy Buck
Directorate of Public Works

commentary

Losing electrical power isn't that uncommon at Fort Benning. The wind comes up the power goes out. During the Best Ranger Competition we lost power at one of the ranges the Ranger Training Brigade was using for the competition.

This was not a typical electrical outage but rather a very scary one. Why? Because — by all accounts — when Flint Electric arrived to fix the problem, they should have found a dead, totally fried human being at the base of one of their power poles.

Fortunately, they did not find a dead person, but here's why they should have.

Flint had killed part of the range circuit out there, after proper coordination with Range Control. This had absolutely no effect on the RTB range operation. Flint killed the power by opening a switch on one of their poles, then installed a lock-out device with a big warning label on the switch.

Apparently, several hours later, some unknown person visited one of the powerless ranges, decided he needed power, drove down the power line until he found the switch, cut the lock-out device and activated the switch.

In accordance with their standard operating procedure, Flint had (as a fail-safe mechanism) grounded out the system one or two poles down the dead section.

The electrical surge flowed through the activated switch, ran down the inactive section, hit the ground-out, than ran BACK up the line, sending a surge down the lock-out mechanism and blowing out the "upstream" fuses (guarding the section that had not been inactivated), thereby disabling the RTB ranges.

This all happened in about one nano-second, so by all rights whoever activated the switch still should have been holding the switch handle when the electricity ran back to it and should have, therefore, been electrocuted. It's a miracle no one was.

However, what this means is that a very stupid person remains in the gene pool! We'll probably never know who did this, but we'll get the word out through the Directorate of Operations and Training weekly training meeting and the post safety office to reinforce the obvious — don't mess with power poles, equipment or lines.

Leave such business to the professionals, such as Flint Electric. It is unreal we have to "remind" folks of such things!

Walkers wage war with relay

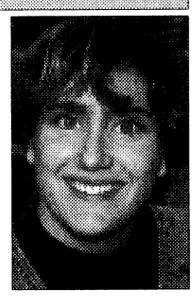
commentary

More than half a million people are expected to die of cancer this year, according to the American Cancer Society. That means more than 1,500 people a day.

I don't think I know a single person whose life hasn't been touched by cancer. More than 20 years ago my sister's best friend's husband died of leukemia. Their son was less than 1 year old.



Three weeks ago I talked with a young Soldier who was leaving the Army to spend more time with her grandmother who was recently diagnosed with throat cancer.

A former co-worker's 4-month-old daughter was diagnosed with cancerous tumors on her spine.

The list of people who are diagnosed with cancer continues to grow.

But while that list grows, the number of cancer survivors is also growing.

Research is the reason.

Last year's Tour de France winner Lance Armstrong talks about his fight against cancer in a TV commercial. He says that 10 years ago the type of cancer he had would have killed him, but because of research he is now a cancer survivor.

The American Cancer Society's Relay for Life helps fund the research. The money it raises accounts for 30 percent of ACS' annual income. More than 1.5 million people participated in the Relay for Life in more than 2,500 communities. The Relay for Life raised $127 million nationwide last year and the Southeast Division raised more than $17 million. That's no small chunk of change, which means a lot of community effort.

Tonight at Kinnett Stadium next to Shaw High School more than 68 teams will attempt to raise $200,000 for research, education, advocacy and patient services. (Team members paid a $10 registration fee to walk and then were asked to raise a minimum of $100.)

The overnight event kicks off at 7 p.m. with opening ceremonies and the cancer survivors' lap. The luminary ceremony begins at 9 p.m. This is where candles within paper bags are lighted in honor of people who have survived cancer and in memory of those who didn't. The luminaries will burn through the night lighting the way around the track and serving as a reminder that cancer is a community concern.

During the night the event organizers have planned for musical entertainment and in the wee hours of the morning there will be midnight volleyball, a hula-hoop roll, jump rope walk, egg walk and Frisbee toss.

John Dalelio, general chairman for the Columbus-Fort Benning Relay for Life 2000 event, said last year teams were formed last minute and showed up on site with money raised and walkers ready. He's hoping that happens again this year.

Language police hits home hard

commentary

My oldest son Thomas is a seventh-grader at Faith Middle School. He is learning to ar-tic-u-late in language arts. He speaks very clearly and eloquently. It's driving the rest of us crazy.

He's become somewhat of a language-policeman, and no one is safe from the long arm, or in this case ear, of the law. Last week he corrected one of his teachers for using the word "stuff" in the wrong context.

"Stuff is what you do to a turkey," he says. "It should never end a sentence like 'Mom, we're going to go ride our bikes and stuff.'" He calls it language abuse.

Still, it's incredibly pleasing to a mother to watch her child develop a wonderful, rich vocabulary, and to learn how to use it correctly at an age when most teens seem to have a limited use of the English language.

Recently a middle school teacher told me today's students are peppering their talk more and more with words that would make a sailor blush. We're not talking about what my grandmother used to refer to as "gentlemen's cusswords." Kids are casually using language that was censored from television a generation ago.

One of my high school teachers used to say that the use of profanity is the sign of a weak mind. How else do you explain why an otherwise intelligent student can think of more four-letter adjectives than Roget's Thesaurus, but he can't carry on a clean conversation without tripping over words like umm, you know, like, uh...

Recently the BOSS line and The Bayonet have received an influx of complaints about the use of profanity on post, particularly by young family members. Garrison policy states that this kind of language is offensive and therefore prohibited in public places on Fort Benning. Unfortunately all the policies in the world won't change a kid's behavior. That's my responsibility, and yours, as parents.

Of course we all know kids will cross boundaries when they're among their peers and away from mom and dad. That's a fact, not an excuse to condone such behavior. We as parents have to be aware of who our children are associating with, what they're watching on television, what they are listening to and what they are reading.

Hats off to Thomas's language arts teacher Libby Kurinec, and others like her, who are teaching our kids to comfortably communicate in an intelligent, mature manner without using profanity or annoying interjections. If there were more adults who refused to converse at a childish level, I could concentrate on writing about more important stuff, like, umm...well, you know.

Reader recognizes good Samaritans

Too often, acts of kindness go unnoticed. I had an experience at the Audie Murphy Fitness Center April 20 that could have been devastating, had it not been for the quick response of two of the patrons who were using the facility during the same time that I was there.

Approximately 40 minutes into my 60-minute routine on the treadmill, I began to feel faint. I vaguely remember pressing the emergency stop button on the machine and exiting to sit on a nearby stationary bicycle for a rest.

A man using the climbing machine in the area, who I later learned was named Mike Wadsworth, asked if I was all right. I don't remember much of what happened afterwards.

What I do know is that sometime later, I awakened to find Mike and another man, Bruce Wingate, attending to my needs. Cool compresses had been placed behind my neck, under my arms and behind my knees in an effort to bring my heart rate down and lower my body temperature. Bruce encouraged me to take sips of water.

For the next two hours Bruce sat with me at the gym, helping to cool me and later to keep me warm when I began to shiver.

Interesting, to say the least, I had been a regular at the AMFC since December, saying hello to many people who would frequent the facility. But I never knew anyone by name, and had not shared mine with anyone either. It's nice to know that there are those who will respond accordingly to a stranger in need.

I experienced five similar episodes of this same sort of activity over the next four days, resulting in a CT scan of my head and an EEG to rule out an aneurysm, lesion on the brain or seizures.

Thanks to the assistance of Mike Wadsworth and Bruce Wingate, a potentially horrific situation was lessened, and I not only realized the value of goodwill, but I also met two wonderful people in the process.

German Soldiers get insiders' look at U.S. Army

Officer candidates visit, participate in training

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

It was business as usual at the Ranger School water confidence course May 10.

After walking across an 8-inch wide log suspended 40-feet in the air, a 22-year-old Soldier commando crawled across a rope suspended across Victory Pond and touched the wooden Ranger tab. After asking the instructor on the ground for permission to drop, he fell to the water.

Nothing out of the ordinary, except he yelled, "Einzelkaempfer" on the way down.

It's the German version of Ranger and means "single fighter."

Six German army officer candidates completed the water confidence test joining Ranger students in their third day of training.

The event marked the end of a three-week visit to Fort Benning where they observed and participated in various facets of training, including sniper, Airborne, basic and One Station Unit Training.

They spent a week in the swamps of Florida with the 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Camp Rudder participating in a waterborne movement and technique training.

The six graduated earlier this year from the German army's officers' school and spent one week in Washington, D.C.

"We take the best of the graduates and they get a four-week trip to the United States to learn about the U.S. Army," Sgt. Maj. Michael Knoell, German army liaison, said.

"It is a good experience and shows them how another army works," he said. "In the future, with combined missions, it's important they learn about other armies."

OC Jan Westphal, 21, is Airborne qualified and on German jump status. He was allowed to complete jump week with the students at B Co., 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, and earn his U.S. wings.

"I was able to complete five jumps with great luck and with great weather," Westphal said.

Westphal particularly enjoyed jumping from a C-130 and C-141, two planes which the German army does not have, he said.

"This is a very special experience for these guys," said Lt. Col. Kurt K. Rotter, German army liaison officer. "Especially because we do not have an area like Florida and Georgia."

Temperatures reached the low 90s May 10, and all six agreed the water at Victory Pond was much warmer than the water used in their training in Germany.

OC Daniel Pohling, 23, took his camera everywhere with him to document his trip.

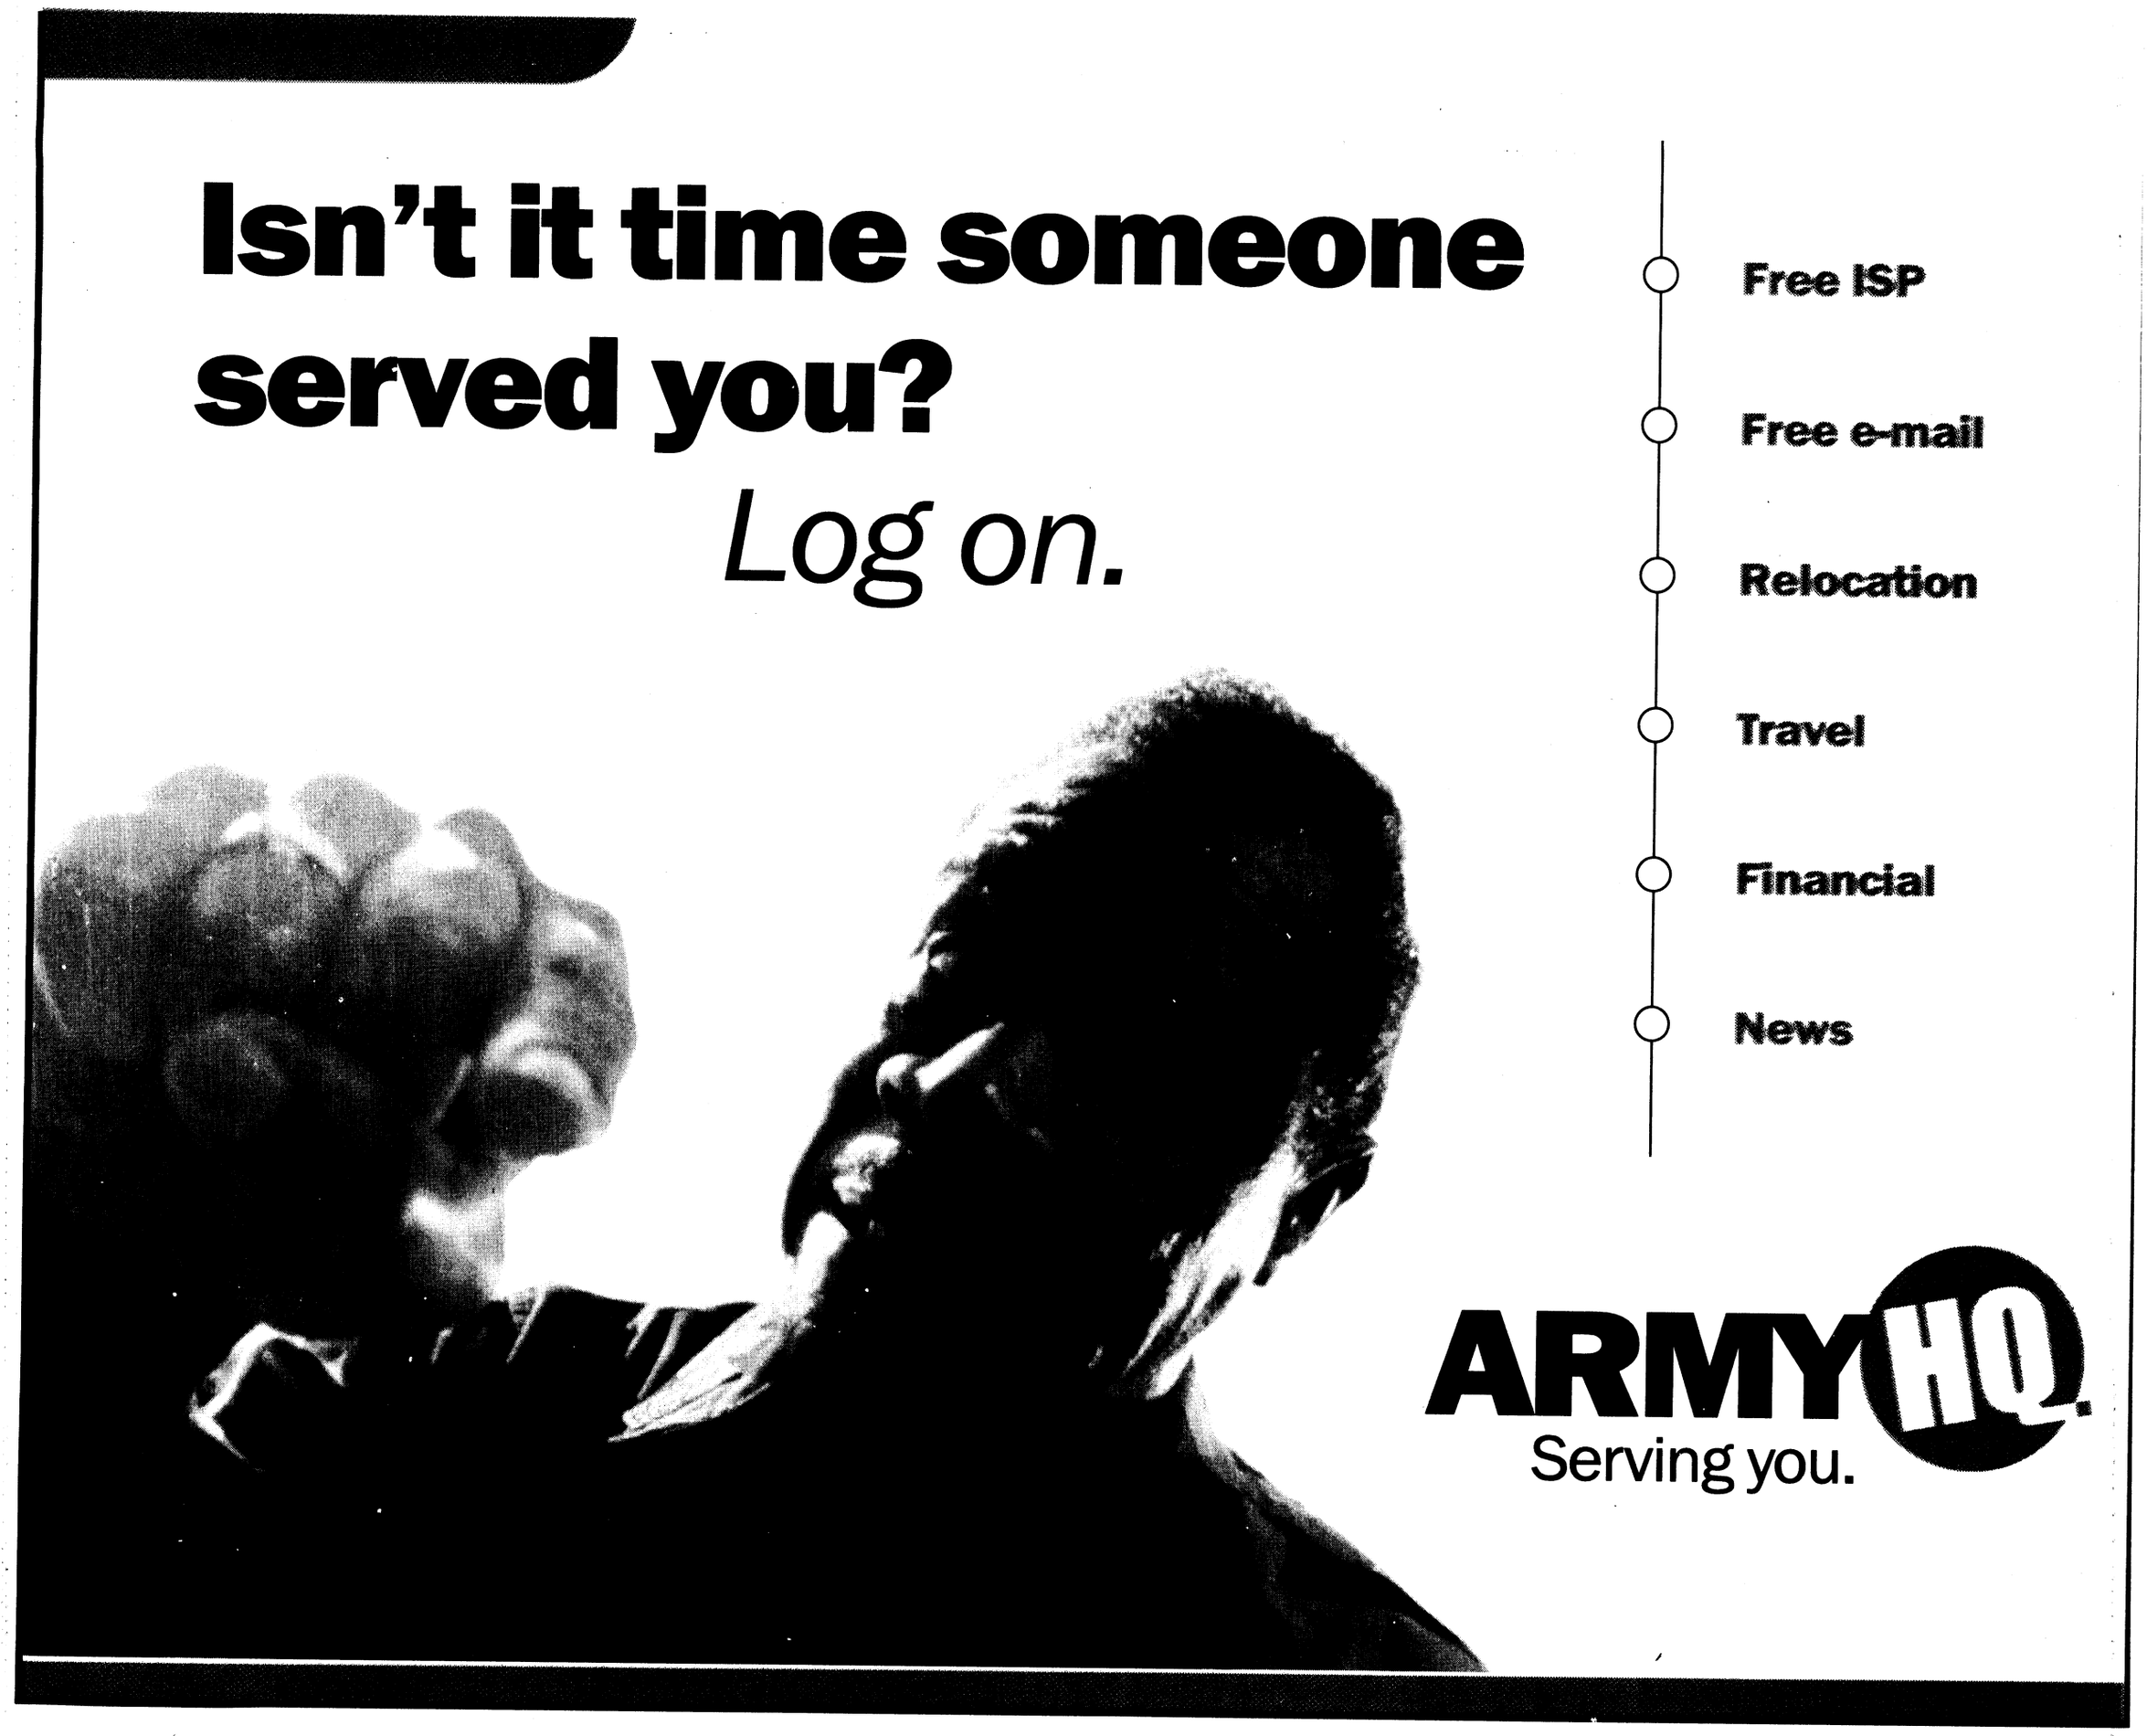
When the OCs return to Germany, they will report to the chief of staff of the German army, who founded the program.

OC Kay Sperling and his peers noted some differences in training between the U.S. and German forces.

"We have smaller classes, with about one instructor with nine students," he said.

And OC Timo Mroz discovered Americans are much louder than their German counterparts, he said

"We are more quiet in Germany when we come into a class. Here they yell 'Ranger.' "



Upon their return, the six will enroll for three years of study at the University of Army in Munich or Hamburg.

Army, Hollywood create technologies together

Group visits post to experience Soldiering for real

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The Army hopes to bring sci-fi technology to Soldier training in the form of a holodeck.

The project was discussed during a visit to Fort Benning May 10-11 by representatives from the Institute for Creative Technologies, Simulation Training and Instrumentation Command, Training and Doctrine Command and the Department of the Army.

A holodeck, often used by the crew in Star Trek with the help of Hollywood special effects, would be, for the Army, a simulator using virtual cinematography and video game technology to create realistic 3-D scenes that it could use for Soldier training and mission rehearsal.

The Army recently signed a contract with the University of Southern California specifically to create the Institute for Creative Technologies to harness holodeck technology.

Some of the challenges faced within the world of simulations and virtual reality is achieving a realistic environment that is adaptable and interchangeable depending on the situation.

"We want the Soldier to think he is in combat with all the same sounds, noises, fears and sweat," Caravana said.

One of the major simulation goals is to suspend disbelief, said Jan Chervenak, chief of simulations center, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab.

Theoretically, the simulation will do this by addressing all of the Soldier's senses within a virtual environment.

"It looks photorealistic, you don't think 'Oh, I'm in a cartoon,'" said Dr. William Swartout, director of technology at ICT. "(Soldiers) would really feel that and build tensions."

With the holodeck, Soldiers would experience everything from culture to terrain of the place where they are expected to perform mission.

For example, if Soldiers are scheduled for a mission in a country where none have ever been before, they could use the simulation to learn about the culture and customs.

This type of simulated training also would help leaders design more effective tactics for the mission.

Ideally, the holodeck will have rich libraries of scenes and situations that the commanders can easily tap into.

"People who are not programmers should be able to customize characters and create new missions," Swartout said.

The group's visit was packed with presentations and demonstrations for the representatives from ICT to see what Soldiers do and to get a feel for what specifics are needed to make such a holodeck effective for Army training.

The group saw all facets of the Infantry including its equipment, training exercises, future programs and its operational environment.

> "The advantage of a simulator is you can afford to fail and learn from experience."
> Dr. John Edwards
> assistant secretary of the Army, acquisition, logistics and technology

"We wanted them to see the life of an Infantryman," said Dick Caravana, deputy of DBBL. "Many of these people have never been in the military or have never seen a military post before and don't know what it's like."

"We took them through everything but crawling in the mud," he said. The group was even given an MRE for lunch.

The holodeck would ultimately allow the Soldiers to train less expensively and with more options. For example, when a mechanized Infantry unit currently trains in the field with its Bradley fighting vehicles, it's usually at gunnery and the focus is on the three-man crew rather than the Soldiers dismounting from the back.

With the development of a holodeck, the Bradley unit — crew and dismounts — would be able to train together in a simulated environment.

The holodeck would theoretically cut the cost of training and allow more experimentation with mission tactics, as well as prevent casualties.

"The advantage of a simulator is you can afford to fail and learn from experience," said Dr. John Edwards, assistant secretary of the Army, acquisition, logistics and technology. "Because cost is so low, you can afford to fail, literally. Consequences in a real environment are injury."

Swartout said hypothetically in later stages of the holodeck, it would use platforms such as the Microsoft X Box or the Sony Play Station, costing about $300.

The Army's vested interest in creating ICT at the University of Southern California is the Institute's ability to draw from Hollywood directors, screen writers and special effects people as well as computer scientists to improve Soldier training.

The proof of ICT's potential is partly in the resumes of ICT staff and its collaborative Hollywood counterparts.

Richard Lindheim, executive director of ICT, has served as a senior television executive for Paramount and was involved with the television show Star Trek.

Dr. William Swartout, director of technology for ICT, was formerly the director of the intelligent systems division at USC's Information Sciences Institute.

Craig Cochrane, project coordinator of ICT, has worked as director of television development for Norman Lear and director of New Media programs for the Paramount Television Group.

Also, Dr. Randall W. Hill Jr., project leader at USC's Information Sciences Institute and a research assistant professor in computer science at USC, worked as a work area manager for network automation in NASA's Deep Space Network Advanced Technology Program at JPL before joining the team.

Notable attendees from the Hollywood film industry included Randal Kleiser, director of Grease and The Blue Lagoon; and Larry Tuch, a screen writer, with the NBC series Columbo and Quincy and the interactive project Where In the World is Carmen Sandiego, to his credit.

"ICT is a combination of entertainment people and computer specialists," said Lindheim. "It's a collaboration of entertainment and science and technology. By forming a collaborative group, we create something new and hopefully rather effective."

"We're a group of engineers, the entertainment people give us a different perspective on how to represent things," said Alesya Paschal, systems engineer for STRICOM, contractors for the ICT effort.

"One of the things artists are really good at is working around the boundaries that are given to them," Swartout said.

ICT has the luxury of tapping into both sides of the technological spectrum: the scientific expertise of its staff or the creativity of film industry via the University of California.

"USC brings to the party real important assets in terms of technology," Lindheim said.

ICT draws from USC's components such as the School of Engineering, School of Cinema and TV as well as the Anneberg School of Communications.

Post: Wins eighth ACOE title

being here during the ceremony as an Army Community of Excellence because we know the post constantly works hard to be the best in the Army."

That continued effort and desire to be the best is what Maj. Gen. Robert Van Antwerp, Army vice chief of staff, said keeps posts like Fort Benning in the Army's top spots of the ACOE competition.

"Excellence is not a singular action," he said. "It is not something you do once — it is a habit. It is what people repeatedly do that is the mark of excellence."

While Van Antwerp's Aristotelian philosophy paid tribute to the dedication Soldiers and civilian employees show on a daily basis on the Army's 188 installations, he said the ACOE award signifies the highest level of excellence in the Army.

"You are a role model for the rest of the Army," he said. "This award represents you are the very best the Army has to offer ... and shows your post is truly a special place."

The ACOE competition, which began in 1989, is aimed at evaluating installations worldwide and contributing significantly to the efficient operation of the Total Army's training, sustainment and power-projection platforms as well as ensuring the post's pursuit of excellence.

That quest for excellence is evaluated annually in a voluntary 50-page application that requires post leaders to show where the post has excelled over the year as well as requires the post to point out areas it could focus improvement efforts on in the future.

"The Army Communities of Excellence program rests upon the belief that we are stewards of what the American citizens have given us," Van Antwerp said. "And the resources they have given us to use — their trust, their money, their land and the most important resource, their sons and daughters."

While Fort Benning took home nearly $200,000 in award monies from this year's competition, organizers are already setting their sights on next year's revised program that ups the prize purse to nearly $3 million.

"Even though we've won eight times in the past, that doesn't mean we're there," said Sara Hodges, chief, Directorate of Resource Management. "There is going to be a lot of tough competition next year with the top prize being $3 million. And you can be sure everyone is going to be out for Benning.

"It is going to take a team effort to ensure our win next year, but I think we can do it," she said. "The promise of $3 million will be a great enticement to do that."

Deployment: Marks firsts for Army, teaches Soldiers ensured safe loading and maintained the overhead for the initial deployment.

Like in a combat deployment, Cucolo said, the reserve Soldiers assistance gave his Soldiers time to concentrate on the war they were about to face.

"The Reserve support was really an asset," he said. "It allowed our Soldiers to focus on taking care of equipment and ensuring it was in the right place without the huge overhead of having to supply our own people for command and control."

Once in the desert the combat team continued to tally lessons learned as they were greeted by a number of civilian protesters and hordes of inquisitive media. Although all were part of the scenario, Cucolo said they added to the realism and provided yet another avenue for his Soldiers to learn.

It was only days until the Soldiers were rolling into the sands of the desert to seek and destroy, but like their initial greeting at the training site, their greeting here was not one categorized as friendly either.

"An attack, followed by an attack, followed by a defense and two movements to contact," Cucolo said as he smiled describing his first day in the desert. "It certainly wasn't a warm welcome."

That fast-paced optempo continued throughout the 32 days in the desert, he said, with lessons learned tallying in the hundreds.

Those lessons, he said, weren't just for 3rd Brigade but marked a first for the Army as well.

"This is the first Limited Conversion Downsizing 21 force to ever fully participate in NTC," he said. "And although we found some problems with task and organization, we still proved to be a lethal, capable organization."

LCD 21 is a new initiative by the Army to downsize brigades, by eliminating a company from each and inserting a Cavalry Troop and transferring numerous responsibilities from those eliminated company commander positions to the already tasked company commanders who still remain.

"We found while we were out there that the cavalry troop lacks logistical support in medical, mechanical and fuel," he said. "And the changes in roles from the different commanders are something new for the brigade."

"There is no doctrine or FM (field manual) to reference in a situation like this," said Capt. David Meyer, commander, D Troop. "So we had to work until we found our place."

Finding that place proved to be no problem for Meyer and his Soldiers as he and the rest of the BCT worked together in the real-world training environment to get to the point where Cucolo said his men are ready for war.

"We are ready to go tomorrow," Cucolo said. "This brigade is coming off two years as a defense readiness brigade and multiple deployments.

"If there is one thing this brigade can do, it's deploy," he said. "And this trip to NTC proved that we would be successful if we had to go," he said.

While the Marne Soldiers of the 3rd BCT will continue to train for war, Cucolo said a return trip to NTC scheduled for next June will focus the brigade's training schedule for the year to come.

"People criticize units for training for NTC because they say if you train for NTC, you aren't training for war," he said. "I disagree. If you can win at NTC, you can win anywhere.'

Program: Takes top level civilians, trains on teamwork

Components nominate individuals who are in GS-12 or 13 positions and who have three years of service as a career employee with the DoD. Military officers can also be nominated.

A complex screening process follows before the final 60 individuals are selected for the 10-month program. After an orientation, the group gathers once a month for a week at various military installations for training.

They remain in their current positions during the program, going on temporary duty for 55 to 60 days throughout the year for intensive training, briefings and field trips.

This marked the group's 14th year visiting Fort Benning for "Army Immersion Week," the most hands-on of all the installation visits, Scott Ash, management analyst with the ELDP, said.

"After they complete the course they are more aware that their civilian mission is nothing more than to support the warfighter," Ash said.

"They see all this and they are better prepared, especially for future assignments."

While there are classroom lectures and seminars, hands-on training is the hallmark of the program, allowing the civil servants the chance to experience the methodology of selected aspects of military training.

"That's why we call this an immersion," Ash said.

For example, at Fort Benning the group assembled and disassembled M-16s at the Infantry Training Brigade and then went to the Malone Complex to observe and fire the weapon.

They also visited the U.S. Army School of the Americas, the Ranger Training Brigade, Nuclear Biological Chemical School and Army Marksmanship Unit. Their schedule also included observing a Hands On Training Exercise at Red Cloud Range conducted by the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The itinerary allowed plenty of time for the group to interact with Soldiers.

"We have breakfast and lunch in chow halls and they really enjoy talking with the Soldiers," Ash said.

John Infante, international programs manager, Directorate of International Affairs, National Guard Bureau in Maryland, and the other participants will graduate from the course in early June.

"I've really gained an appreciation for the warfighter and the Infantry," he said.

"We received a snapshot of the Infantry, Airborne and Rangers and the challenges they have to overcome," he said.

"As I make decisions, I will reflect on those 18-year-olds and take into account the impact on them."

events and more bands the entire family can enjoy."

Like last year an free Asian Pacific Islander food sampling will be available to the first 2,000 festival goers, Fontaine said. The sampling will include a taste of many dishes including roasted pig, kim-chee, rice, tropical fruit and chicken.

Also slated for this year's heritage celebrations is a barrage of bands that Michelle Young, event co-organizer and Moral Welfare and Recreation marketing specialist, said will resemble a mini-Riverfest.

"We have a number of different bands scheduled throughout the day," she said, "as well as live remote broadcasts from local radio stations."

Local band DSOS will be the headline act for the event taking the main stage at 8:30 p.m. with opening acts by Tony Skahan, By D' Sign and Empire.

Traditional fire dancers and martial artists will also share the stage throughout the day.

A new children's area has also been incorporate into this year's festivities. The new area will have numerous carnival games and booths as well as an 18-foot slide, a space walk, a climbing wall and water wars.

Free canoe races and boat rides will also be available at the marina.

A free shuttle for all active-duty military will begin picking festival goers up at the Main Post Shoppette, Kelley Hill Recreation Center and the Sand Hill Shoppette at 2 p.m. The shuttle will also make pick-ups at the same locations at 5 p.m and 8 p.m.

The free event will begin at 3 p.m. and conclude at 10:30 p.m.

Engineers from the Alabama National Guard know that practice makes perfect so they spent two weeks at Fort Benning building bridges and then tearing them down.

The 200th Engineer Battalion came to the post for its annual training May 4-20.

"We put the bridge or raft in and then take it out. That's our job," Capt. Roger Moore, the battalion's adjutant, said from the shore of the Chattahoochee River Saturday morning. He watched as Soldiers assembled a six-bay raft that would ferry 20 vehicles across the river.

"It's like a kid with building blocks. You build something nice, and then you put your foot through it. For us, that's where the practice and the repetition comes in," Moore said.

The battalion has two companies — the 167th Engineer Company (Assault Ribbon Bridge) from Demopolis, Ala., with a detachment in Centreville, Ala., and the 168th Engineer Company (Panel Bridge) from Eutaw, Ala., with a detachment in Marion, Ala.

Fort Benning is a great location for the 322-member unit to train because of the Chatthoochee River, Capt. David Ward, the battalion's assistant operations officer, said.

"The river is deep enough, with a launch depth of 22 to 24 inches, and wide enough at 400 feet," he said. "And we have gotten tremendous support from the Directorate of Logistics and Range Control."

Earlier in the week the 168th Eng. Co. constructed a Bailey bridge over a creek bed.

The 167th Eng. Co. enlisted the aid of a Chinook Saturday to airlift bridge erection boats, weighing 11,000 pounds each, and bays, weighing 12,000 pounds each.

The boats and bays were staged on Dekkar Field and dropped into the river at Engineer Beach six miles away. The aircraft and its four-member crew were from F Company, 1st Battalion, 131st Aviation, out of Birmingham, Ala.

The battalion conducted a full river closure Sunday by constructing a ribbon bridge that spanned the entire width of the river. The battalion then traveled across the bridge, leaving its campsite located behind Dekkar Field and moving to an area near the 36th Engineer Group.

Sgt. Daniel Lewis has been with the unit since 1994 and knows how important the annual training is.

"Practice makes perfect," he said. "The more you do it the better you get. Every five years we have a change in inventory with people leaving and new people coming in."

Moore agreed.

"It's important that we indoctrinate new people in the unit with more sustained operations than we are able do on the weekends," he said.

One weekend each month the unit trains in Demopolis on the Tombigbee River, but the battalion is unable to do full closure operations there.

Last year the battalion was deployed to the Dominican Republic to construct schools in eight villages and a 500-man base camp during Joint Task Force Caribbean Castle, a relief effort after a devastating hurricane.

"We were the first battalion-size element in the Dominican Republic since the U.S. invaded in 1965," Ward said.

Son follows father's military footsteps

Sergeant major takes pride in awarding son

If pride has a face, it is that of a father watching his son become a Soldier.

Twenty-five years after the end of the Vietnam War, one of Fort Benning's few remaining active duty Vietnam veterans proudly watched his son take his place among the ranks of the U.S. Army Infantry.

At the Turning Blue Ceremony for A Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, May 4, Sgt. Maj. Jan Stegeman waited patiently for the opportunity to present his only son, Pvt. Matthew Stegeman, with his blue Infantry cord.

"I couldn't be any prouder of him," said Stegeman, who is assigned to the office of the special assistant to the commanding general — Army National Guard. "He was your typical middle child. He went through some rebellion and some hard times, but he's straightened himself out and he has a direction. I'm proud of him."

At the age of 21, Matthew is three years older than his father was when he joined the Army in 1970, in the midst of the Vietnam War. Though the younger Stegeman admittedly joined the Army for the training and opportunities, his father enlisted for reasons less pragmatic.

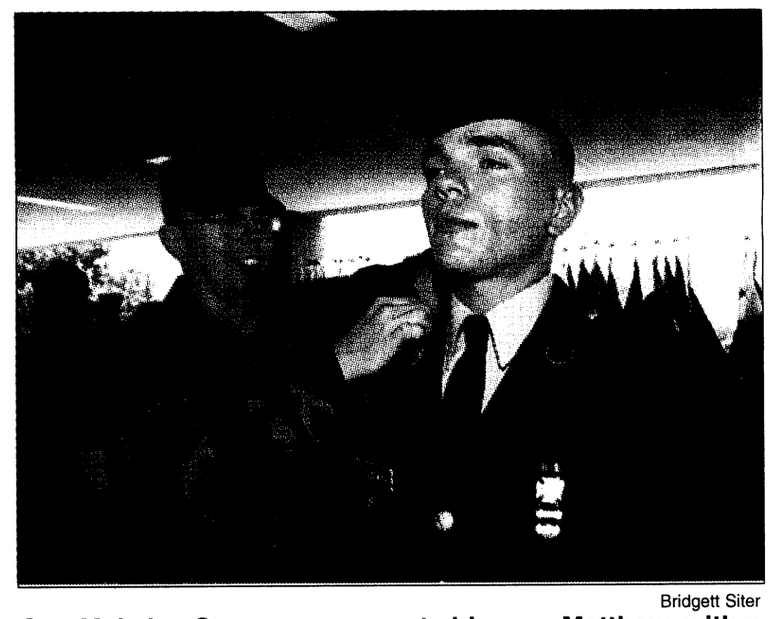
"I just felt compelled to join and do my part to serve my country during the war. I felt I was needed," said Stegeman, who was attached to a combat engineer unit during the war.

"It was a different era in the late 60s, early 70s. There were conscientious objectors, sure, but there was still so much patriotism. I felt it was my duty to serve."

Stegeman returned to his hometown of Dayton, Ohio, after the war. After a seven-year hiatus, he enlisted in the Army Reserves in 1980, but eventually joined the Army National Guard and moved to Fort Benning in 1999.

"I came home from Vietnam before Matthew was even born," Stegeman recalled. "We didn't have yellow ribbons or ticker-tape parades waiting for us. We weren't treated like heroes. Too many people died over there, but we all lost our lives in one sense — our lives as we knew them before the war."

Stegeman speaks very matter-of-factly about his time in Vietnam and the repercussions of war. He and his first wife were divorced eight years ago — a fact he hesitates to blame on post-war stress. Instead, Stegeman said he chose to focus on the repercussions of the divorce itself.



"Of course it was hard on the kids. Matthew had a really hard time dealing with it. I tried to explain the kind of person I was when I came back from Vietnam and the choices I made, but it was hard to reach him when he was a teen-ager. I lived eight blocks away but we never saw each other."

The younger Stegeman doesn't blame his parents or the divorce for his teen-age rebellion. He described himself as "a 90s kid — a slacker" before he joined the Army.

"I was just a jerk, I guess," Matthew said. "I worked at upsetting Mom and Dad. I wouldn't call or go see him for months at a time. I was not really focused on doing anything with my life for a long time."

Matthew's "focus" came in the form of a visit with a recruiter last fall. He called his father and step-mother shortly before Christmas to tell them he would be coming to Fort Benning.

"He always said he was going to be a Soldier when he was little. When he was 8, he used to run around the house with a LAW (light anti-tank weapon) simulator," Stegeman laughed. "But that was years ago. I was surprised when he called and said he'd joined the Army."

Sgt. Maj. Jan Stegeman presents his son, Matthew, with a blue Infantry cord after graduation.

Matthew, who will be assigned to the 3rd Infantry Brigade, will live in the barracks at Kelley Hill, but his father and step-mother said they have already set up a bedroom for him in their Fort Benning home.

Both father and son said they look forward to spending time together again.

"He'll always have a place at our house. It's going to be nice being able to see more of each other and get to know each other again, man to man," Stegeman said. "He's grown up so much in the last few months and I'm really proud of him. I know he made the right choice."

Engineers construct fighting positions

During the intense stress of war, engineers are required to work fast to create fighting positions for heavy equipment and tank ditches.

Although not in a combat situation, Soldiers of the 718th Engineer Company, Combat Support Equipment, did just that Saturday as part of their monthly reserve drill weekend.

Preparing for their lanes evaluation, the 718th headed to the field to dig a fighting position for a Bradley Fighting Vehicle and tank ditches.

Using the work horse of the unit, the D7G bulldozer, two operators were able to carve the position into the earth in a little over one hour.

"With the two bulldozers working together, the position can be created in about an hour," said Capt. William Schaper, commander of the 718th. "One dozer will do the digging while the other spreads the soil, so there isn't a huge mound of dirt that can be easily spotted."

Working together, the bulldozers quickly dug the position until one broke down.

With a few adjustments on the bulldozer, the engineers were able to re-start it and get it underway again to finish the position.

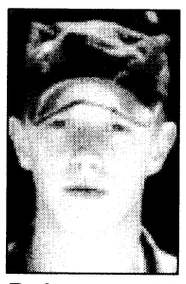
After the position was dug to standards, one bulldozer backed into the hole and smoothed the base. A Bradley then drove into position and proofed the hole.

"(The bulldozer operators) did a good job," 1st Lt. Nixon Maxey, a 718th platoon leader, said. "Their first attempt in the hole, and I think they would get a 95 percent or higher on the position."

Although the 718th is a combat support unit, they also have construction abilities.

"Here on post, we have created a landing zone out at 4th Ranger Training Battalion, we repaired Malone 22 and also repaired another landing zone so when helicopters landed, they didn't get a brown out."

Although tearing into the ground may get the dander up on environmentalists, the 718th always has an environmental impact statement done on the site they plan to train on.



"We don't do a lot of damage because we train in areas that have been used before," said Schaper. "Not only do we not have a bad impact on the environment, we often times have a positive impact because we repair things like wash-outs."

> "Being in the reserves, we try to cram a whole month of training into a weekend. Although in many units they are unable to do that, we are able to get it done."
> 1st Lt. Nixon Maxey
> 718th Engineer Company

Stuffing as much into the drill weekend as possible, Maxey said they get a lot of training in a short amount of time.

"Being in the reserves, we try to cram a whole month of training into the weekend," he said. "Although in many units they are unable to do that, we are able to get it done. And because we are in the field a lot and staying busy, the morale is high."

Post swimming pools to open next week

Pools offer residents way to stay cool during summer heat

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

As the mercury exceeds 80 degrees, Fort Benning residents begin to fantasize about long, lazy days spent lounging in the swimming pool. With sunscreen and sunglasses in hand, they'll be flocking to area pools by the end of May.

Five of the seven outdoor swimming pools on Fort Benning are scheduled to open May 26. Although the Sand Hill pool will not be used this year, and the Youth Services pool won't open until June 10, the other pools will be ready for swimmers before the Memorial Day weekend.

Al Stewart, Community Activities director, said the cost of repairing the Sand Hill pool was prohibitive this summer, but it's possible that the necessary repairs will be completed by next year.

"The repairs are in the design process, but the Sand Hill pool needs too much work to be ready this year. If the funds are available at the end of the year, it could possibly be ready next summer," Stewart said. "We had to make a choice between two pools based on the amount of time and money available, so we chose to do the work necessary to bring the Custer Terrace pool up to date."

With a new chlorinator, reconstructed water lines and deck work completed, the Custer Terrace pool, as well as the Kelley Hill and Carey pools, will be available to all authorized military ID card holders and their families.

The Uchee Creek swimming pool will also be opened for Memorial weekend. However, unlike the previously mentioned pools, Uchee Creek charges an admission fee for guests who are not registered at the campgrounds.

A new policy at the Officers' Club swimming pool will allow guest house residents to use the pool, courtesy of the guest house. The pool is free to members of the club, but for the first time ever, a limited number of season passes will be available to non-members and their families. For a cost of $150 per family, or $120 for a single adult, passes will be sold starting today on a space available basis.

The Youth Services pool traditionally opens after the end of the school year.

The pool will be available to all YS card holders and their families June 10. Members under the age of 10 must be accompanied by someone over the age of 16.

John Bush, chief of community operations division, said qualified WSI (water safety instruction) instructors are needed at the YS and the O' Club pools. Qualified individuals can call the YS at 545-3070 or the O' Club at 687-0871.

The O' Club will offer swim lessons at a cost of $25 to members and anyone with a season pass. Non-members will pay $35. Anyone interested in lessons can call the physical fitness center at 687-0871.

For those who want to enjoy swimming with the convenience of never having to leave home, backyard above-ground pools are permitted on post . Master Sgt. Donald Blackmon, community life officer, encourages residents to erect fences around their pools.

"Safety is always the key issue," Blackmon said. "Basically the resident is responsible for the upkeep and safety of the pool, and pools over 3 feet tall must be covered when not in use."

Band concert this weekend

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

In celebration of Armed Forces Day, the 283rd Army Band is performing a concert Saturday at the Phenix City Amphitheater.

The concert, which begins at 5:30 p.m., is free and open to the public.

The event will be hosted by Phenix City Mayor Peggy Martin.

The concert is a great opportunity for the band members and community members to pay tribute to those who have or are currently serving in the Armed Forces, said Staff Sgt. Mark Hedges, band operations supervisor.

"It's Armed Forces Day and we're going to honor veterans. We've invited every veterans organization in the area so it'll be a great time for everyone," he said.

Hedges added, one highlight of the concert with be a segment called Ceremonial Flourishes, a piece based on Army bugle calls.

For more details about the concert, call Hedges at 545-5313.

Quality time focus of TOTAL project

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

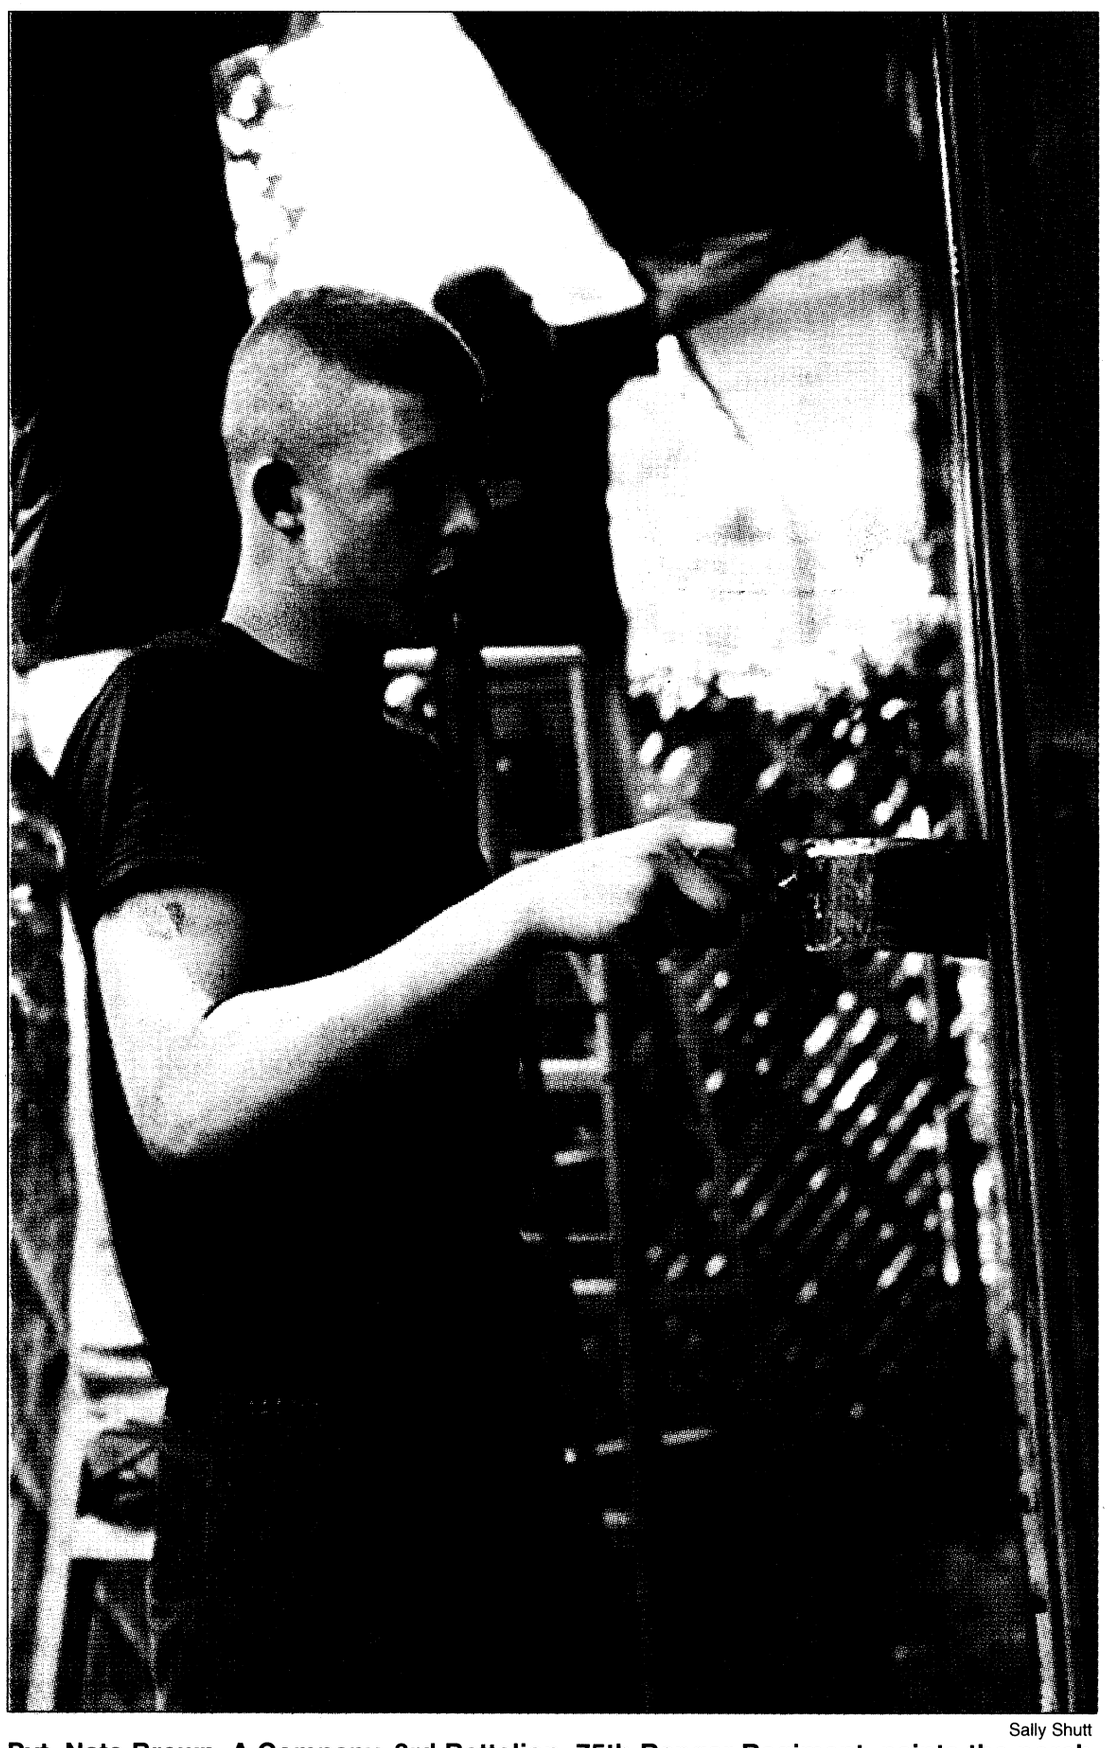
Fort Benning schools are encouraging students to turn off the television May 22-26. The project, called TOTAL (Turn Off the TV And Learn), is designed to help students and their parents recognize the educational benefits of spending quality time together participating in family-oriented activities.

The idea for the week-long event was first conceived by the school-home partnership committee at Faith Middle School. Assistant principal Angie McPherson said it became obvious that the TOTAL project was too good to keep to themselves.

"In thinking about what we wanted to do and all the activities we could incorporate, we realized that many of these students have younger brothers and sisters attending the elementary schools on Fort Benning," McPherson said, chairman of the school-home partnership committee. "So we invited all the other schools to come on board and the response was phenomenal."

Six of the seven schools on post are taking part in the project. McBride Elementary held its own event earlier in the year. Participating schools kicked off the event this week, some serving TV-shaped cakes in the cafeteria.

Each school will distribute log sheets to their students who will then record the number of hours spent involved in activities other than watching television. The results will be tallied at the end of the week, and each principal has offered an incentive for students to meet their predetermined goals.



Many of the staff members at Wilson Elementary School will dye their hair in rainbow colors if students meet their TV-free goal. Faith Middle School students hope to see their principal, Dr. Tom Dignan, kiss a pig.

Faith's media specialist Cindy Givens polled students throughout the entire school system and used the information she collected to create TOTAL activity booklets for students to share with their families. Based on ideas students contributed, the booklet offers suggestions for fun and educational family activities and ways to turn every-day activities into educational experiences.

Staff Sgt. Roger Cassman took a day off from his job at Kelley Hill May 12. But he didn't take time off from work — not by a long shot.

Cassman, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, arrived at a three-bedroom ranch house on Rice Street at 5 a.m. ready to paint, pull weeds, plant shrubs, move furniture and anything else he was asked to do.

He and about 40 volunteers worked during the day as part of the House of Heroes project at the home of Elizabeth "Betty" Cook, the widow of Levy Cook, a medic who served in World War II and Korea. Levy Cook retired from the Army in 1962 as a staff sergeant and worked as an EEG technician at Fort Benning's Martin Army Community Hospital. He died in 1978.

The home is the first site in the country for the House of Heroes, a volunteer project designed to recognize and honor veterans and their spouses who served the country faithfully and sacrificially.

"I believe in helping out the community and our fellow Soldiers, especially those who have fallen," Cassman said while painting the kitchen.

"If not for all the men and women who risked their lives, we would not be free today."

In one day, Cook's home of 40 years received a facelift including landscaping, interior and exterior painting and the installation of a ceiling fan.

Rangers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, joined Cassman and other volunteers from agencies such as Hands On Columbus, which organized the project.

USARSA, Phenix City school pledge 'commitment' to students

Organizations work to improve quality of education

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betencourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas and the Glenwood School of Phenix City signed a "Pledge of Commitment," which will forge a bond for genuine and enduring friendship between the two schools, during a ceremony inside Pratt Hall May 11.

Cecilia Alexander, USARSA's international military student officer, said the signing of the pledge between the two schools allows each to improve the quality of education for the students.

"The pledge specifically states that each side will use their resources to achieve the mutually agreed upon goals and work together to continually improve and strengthen the partnership," she said.

Alexander said the students participating in Glenwood's Spanish Club were the one's who would be participating in different USARSA projects and events, including the upcoming Festival of the Americas in September.

For the USARSA students, the opportunity to help out Glenwood School will further broaden their horizons and promote opportunities to establish personal relationships, which abide well beyond their tenure at USARSA.

"This is a great opportunity for our students to interact with the language and the culture," said Donna Carter, foreign language teacher at Glenwood. "It also gives them a 'real-time window' with what's going on in our hemisphere."

Carter said both the school and the students are very excited about the pledge with USARSA.

"Students are already lining up for volunteer jobs at USARSA," she said.

One of the projects USARSA and Glenwood will team up together on will be the Habitat for Humanity.

"Having USARSA students to help us is a great resource for us," said Carter. "I believe that USARSA's participation with Habitat for Humanity will show their students how a community improvement project can be done without government expenditure. This is something they can take back to their countries."

The Pledge of Commitment was signed by Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant, USARSA, Peggy Martin, mayor of Phenix City, and William Hayes, headmaster for Glenwood School.

Support handbook available

Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The U.S. Army Research Institute for the Behavioral and Social Sciences has produced a short, user-friendly, self-contained handbook to assist company and battalion-level Family Support Group leaders.

According to ARI officials, "The Family Support Group Leaders' Handbook" combines 20 years of research findings with what experienced FSG leaders at the Army War College, Europe, and U.S. Army Forces Command say works.

It also contains lists of additional resource materials (other handbooks, films, research reports, and Army regulations) and where to get them via the Internet, telephone or ordinary mail.

Additional information about how to get this manual is available from the ARI by writing to: Director, U. S. Army Research Institute, 5001 Eisenhower Ave., Alexandria, VA 22333-5600 or by phoning (703) 617-8867 or DSN 767-8867.

Information is also available by accessing the ARI internet address www.ari.army.mil.

for volunteers for the project. He put the word out and 15 men signed up to help.

"We do a lot of work in the community. Just last month we worked with the Special Olympics," Saragosa said.

The Rangers made quite an impression on Cook's 8-year-old great-grandson, Austin Dixon, of Savannah, Ga. Saragosa presented the boy with a unit coin commending him for working hard at raking leaves and moving bricks.

"They are cool because they are making it a new yard and doing a lot of painting," Dixon said, referring to the Rangers in black T-shirts.

The idea for the House of Heroes project was first introduced at a conference for the National Society of Human Resource Management last fall in Washington, D.C.

"We wanted to do something personal and practical," Wayne Anthony, state director of the society, said.

"This makes sense. We are attempting to express with our actions a gratitude that can never be adequately expressed in words," said Anthony, the director for the Center for Servant Leadership at the Pastoral Institute in Columbus.

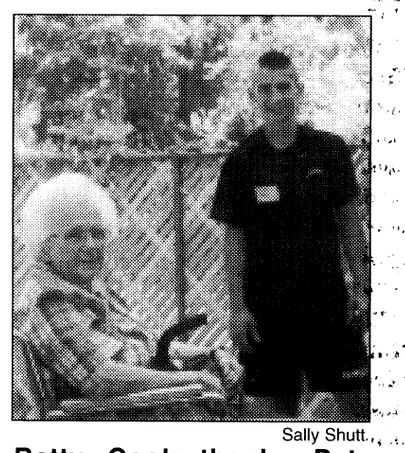
To qualify, recipients must be an elderly or disabled veteran or spouse and the owner and occupant of the home needing repair. W. C. Bradley Co. was the sponsoring business for this project, ensuring that the homeowner had no expenses.

Cook recalled why her husband chose to buy the house on Rice Avenue back in 1960.

"We lived on Fort Benning at Baker Village. It was May and we didn't have any trees. He drove over to look at this house that was for sale and never stepped inside. He went straight to the back yard and counted 19 pine trees," Cook said.

"He told me the house was my department, and that the backyard was so nice and shady," she said.

Most of the pine trees were cut down years later after an ice storm killed them, but there was still plenty of shade available for Cook to sit under as she watched the volunteers working diligently to finish before an afternoon ceremony.



"I don't even know the words to use," she said when asked how she felt about being selected as the first House of Heroes recipient.

Her daughters, Marie Dixon of Macon, Ga., and Ruth Cook of Columbus, said it's not uncommon for their mother to downplay her contributions to the community.

Betty Cook was named the "Quiet Disciple" for the Columbus district of the United Methodist Church in 1991.

"That is what she is. She does a lot of volunteer work, but she doesn't seek recognition," Ruth said. Her mother is still active with the Red Cross Blood Drive team, and the Asbury United Methodist Church nursery.

Col. Frank Helmick, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, paid tribute to the Cooks during a 4 p.m. ceremony in the front yard. Following his comments, Sen. Max Cleland presented Cook with an American flag that had flown over the U.S. Capitol.

Sally Shutt

Betty Cook thanks Pvt. David Williams for his work on her home.

"On behalf of the Congress of the United States and a grateful nation, this gift to you for your gift to us," was inscribed on the wooden box.

Rep. Mac Collins and representatives for Sen. Paul Coverdell and Rep. Sanford Bishop also attended the ceremony.

Cleland, Collins and the other members of the Georgia congressional delegation plan to go back to Washington and encourage other elected officials to start a House of Heroes program in their districts, Anthony said.

Hands On Columbus plans to repair and improve another home this fall.

Project: Promotes family time

kind of things they would like to do with their parents," Givens said. "Their responses were varied, some very creative and some as simple as 'going for a walk' or 'playing ball together.' Then we used their ideas to create this book for them to share with their parents and we listed examples of places and activities available on and off post. Our goal is to get families to interact — to venture out into the community and take advantage of what is out there."

McPherson said she hopes a week without TV will encourage parents to actively seek opportunities to share time with their children.

"What we are wanting parents to do is think outside the box. It doesn't have to be a pen and paper learning activity. Riding down the road or doing simple household tasks together can turn into a learning opportunity if you get creative with it," McPherson said.

Stower's fifth-grader Aubrey Coovrey said she understands the importance of looking for recreation other than television.

"You really don't learn anything from the TV, but some kids sit in front of it all the time," the 11-year-old said. "Maybe a week without TV will show them that it's more important and more fun to go outside and play and spend time with their family."

Many academics stem from

Carolyn Phillips
White Elementary School

"It's Greek to us," or at least that's what students in the third- and fifth-grade enrichment classes at White Elementary School are saying.

They have donned the chiton, a toga-like garment, as they study the vast legacy of Greece.

Virtually every subject in today's schools has Greek roots to included zoology, biology, architecture, history, geometry, theater, logic, and hygiene.

One of every eight words we speak, read, or write is Greek in origin.

The Greeks invented and laid the foundations for democracy and examined their lives and sought goals.

They called this quest arete (air-ah-tay), which means to strive for perfection or excellence as a part of the physical, mental, academic, and spiritual development of oneself.

The students at White have been challenged to memorize the Greek alphabet and famous quotes and sayings as they learn about Greek history, culture, and myths.

Recently the students used creative problem solving skills to build Greek temples within 90 minutes using a set of materials issued by the teacher.

"The Greeks used lots of columns in their temples," said Lauren O'Neill. "I like wearing the chiton. It makes me feel like I'm back in ancient Greece."

Pam Anthony, a pre-K teacher, is coaching the students on the dramatic style of the Greek orators. The students will make masks to be used in the choral reading of Antigone.

The students are also training to display their physical abilities during the schools Olympic Competition scheduled for late May.

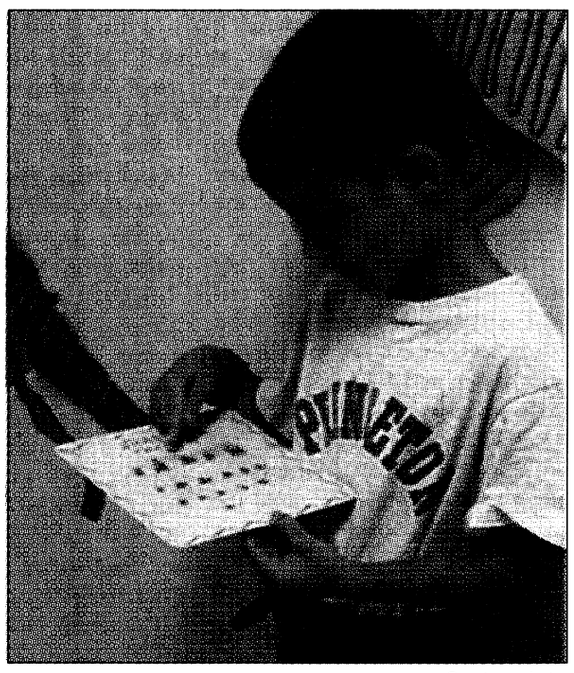
Students discover dinosaurs

Carolyn Phillips
White Elementary School

People have long been fascinated by the monstrous size of the dinosaurs.

First- and second-grade students at White Elementary School have been exploring the exciting world of paleontology. The students began their study of dinosaurs by simulating their eating and nesting habits along with caring for the hatchlings.

"On the first few days my dinosaurs were eaten by T-rex," Amber Coleman said with a small amount of frustration in her voice. "It didn't take me long to help my dinosaurs learn how to survive," she added.



These young paleontologists carefully uncovered dinosaur skeletons embedded in layers of rock.

They then label each fossil piece and put the skeleton together to exhibit in the Dinosaur Museum. Using critical thinking skills, each fossil skeleton was carefully studied to gather as much information about the dinosaur as possible.

Through this process the students learned about the various theories scientist have about these huge beasts and their extinction.

"The best part of going on the fossil hunts was that I found a whole shark's tooth," said Todd Mueller.

Dr. D. Schwimmer, a paleontologist at Columbus State University, said, the fossils are about 80 million years old.

Todd Muller checks out a chart showing examples of shark's teeth.

The students are preparing to share the information they gathered with other members of the student body by performing a puppet show about these huge, fascinating, and extinct animals.

Art camp planned for late July

White Elementary School

Fine Arts Summer Camp will be held at White School July 24-28. Children will attend five sessions each day from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

The 40-minute sessions will include drama, music, dance, visual arts and crafts, and creative writing. The Computer Lab will be used to publish student work and create presentations.

Activities will be planned around the central theme of Under The Sea.

Enrollment is limited to students of White School. One parent of each enrolled student is required to volunteer during one day of the camp.

Forms will be sent home to be completed and returned to the school office.

The classes will be filled on a first come basis.

Tuition is $40 for one child, $75 for two children, $100 for three children and $120 for four children.

The purpose of the camp is to provide children with an alternative to traditional summer activities by being creative, entertaining, and yet educational within the realm of fine arts.

God, country can be balanced by members of Armed Forces

Chaplain (Maj.) Dave Norvell
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division

reflections

As you take a moment to honor those who served their nation in the Armed Forces, also remember those who served their God. We can do both.

When asked whether a Christian should pay taxes levied by the Roman Empire, Jesus said in Matthew 22:17, "Give Caesar what is his right according to law, and give God what he is due. Citizens can believe in their God, and believers can be good citizens by serving their country."

Some feel they have "no time" for chapel attendance, Bible studies, local church involvement or giving offerings because their job demands so much.

It's like saying, "My job rules and reigns my life." Soldiers give, and give sacrificially, in doing their jobs, but they can still can and must allow God's influence in their lives. Does your job demand all of you?

Some of the most powerful, dynamic officers, NCOs, enlisted Soldiers and family members I have known were able to do both.

They worked under enormous pressure and had hundreds of issues claiming their attention each week, yet they attended worship, volunteered as ushers, served on committees and regularly read their Bible or daily devotions.

You accomplish this delicate balance by admitting both God and country are important, setting priorities, making commitments and following-through.

Follow-through work is another phase for practicing faith.

Trust you are doing a vital and long-range work. You can expect to struggle with maintaining the balance, but you will have time to do both.

Press toward the mark of serving God and your country!

Communication between spouses vital to avoiding marital conflicts

Chap. (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries Center

As human beings part of our uniqueness is our ability to verbally communicate. However, this uniqueness can be a double-edged sword.

This is because we can be misunderstood as easily as we misunderstand. Attaching non-verbals to our words can further complicate the whole communication process.

As adults we are thrust into contact with other adults whose lives and experiences have taught them words and definitions which don't match our own. Bring this problem of unmatched meanings into a marriage relationship, and you have unbounded potential for misunderstanding.

Understanding words though, will not resolve marital conflict.

Rupel

Attitudes, feelings and beliefs behind words we use can turn out to be more important and powerful than the words themselves.

True effective communication begins with self-respect. When we don't feel good about ourselves, we cannot be open and honest with those close to us.

This can lead to find fault in our spouse to cover up our own inadequacies. Self-respect helps us to accept and respect others.

Let's face it. No one is perfect. It is far too easy to find fault in others. In the marriage relationship, this can easily lead to destructive marital conflict. Accusing and blaming are real communication killers.

It puts the person who is the object of the accusation and blame on the defensive. Often counteraccusations are hurled back at the accuser. This leads to escalation in the conflict, and once this escalation begins, the conflict can turn ugly and even violent.

This is not communication. It is war!

There is a better way to resolve marital conflict and the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can help.

Give the Center a call at 545-1760 for more information.

'Gruesome' men take to links for love of game

Pfc. Mark Watson

Norman Williamson, one of the eight original members of the "Gruesome" chips his way out of the sand.

Local enthusiasts log more than 8,000 rounds on Follow Me

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

With every year members of the "Gruesome" may get a little slower and a little bit more arthritic.

Although old age creeps up on them slowly, they don't let it slow them down with their passion for golf.

The Gruesome is a close-knit group of retired Soldiers that takes to the course four days a week.

"We play on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays," Norman Williamson said. "We got started in 1976 with about 28 players. There is only 8 original members left."

With three original members playing Monday, they have more than 8,000 games between them.

"All 8,000 have been played here (on the Follow Me Golf Course) mostly on the Pineside course," he said. "One of the guys (Bill Klobe) just hit 3,000 games.

Although the group gets together to play golf, the meeting is more than just a game.

"It is a way to extend old friendships," Williamson said. "The trick now is just getting here and playing. We do good if we can shoot our score on nine holes."

Although modest about their ability to play, their swings were smooth and strong and they played better than most men half their age as they shot scores of just over par on nine holes.

"We still get lucky every once in a while," Bill Shuff said. "Sam Adams got a hole-in-one just last week."

The luck doesn't end with just one man though, Shuff has had his fair share of luck.

"I have been playing for 24 or 25 years and have 13," he said proudly.

Having played around the world, the group has played some odd courses.

"I have played at about 75 courses, everywhere from Singapore to St. Andrews, Scotland," Williamson said. "I even have played a course in Saigon, (Vietnam), in 1966.

"They had barbed wire strung around the course, so if you hit the ball into the rough it stayed there," he said. "I still carry my membership card to the course."

"I have played all over, too," Shuff said. "I've played in France, Germany, California, North and South Carolina and Texas."

Members of the Gruesome say that golf is a release for them, and it gives them something to do during retirement.

"There are some of us who are over 80," Williamson said. "Coming out (to the golf course) gets me out of 'honey-do projects.'

"It gives me the chance for relaxation," Shuff said. "We all just love to play."

Like their age, their scores are

Colonels trounce sergeants major

Officers dominate game, 27-7

The colonels swung for the fences as they crushed the sergeants major 27-7 Monday during the Military Appreciation Week Celebrity Softball game at Gowdy Field.

This year's game marks the third year in a row that the colonels have bested the sergeants major.

The game began slowly for the sergeants major as they couldn't make anything productive happen.

The colonels got off to a quick lead when their first man up swung on the second pitch and drove it deep into left-center field bringing him around the diamond to score the first run of the game.

The colonels began the humiliating defeat driving in more runners before shortstop John Kamai fielded the ball and tossed it to first baseman Edmond Crivello ending the inning.

At the top of the second, the sergeants major answered back with a scoring frenzy of their own.

Kamai hit the ball deep enough for a stand-up triple. Edwin Lasanta matched that with a triple bringing Kamai in.

Michael O'Neil popped the ball out of the infield leading to a RBI single. David Libersat stepped up to the plate and drove in two runs before the sergeants

Soldiers battle for title

Fit-to-Win competition names post best

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

How would you like to knock out 605 push-ups in only three minutes? Well you can do it if you have four motivated Soldiers on your team.

As the midway point of Military Appreciation Week rolled around, Soldiers gathered at Doughboy Stadium for the Fit-to-Win competition.

The competition, which was a combination of the 100 meter sprint, one mile run, push-ups and the tug-of-war, brought the competitive spirit to Doughboy.

Runners in the 100 meter sprint started the four event competition.

The top male finishers were, Kyen Hill of the 11th Infantry Regiment team, Eric Taylor with the 36 Engineer team and Justin Keller, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

For the females, Eunice Brow, on the 29th Infantry Regiment took the top spot while Sharon Williams, U.S. Army School of the Americas and Rachel Smith, 36th Engineers followed.

After a brief stretching period, competitors headed to the push-up event where 11th Inf.Regt., team took the top spot with 605 push-ups followed by the 29th Inf., Regt., with 553, the USARSA took third with 524 and 58th Inf., Regt., knocked out 488 for fourth place.

The one mile run was the next event. As the runners crossed the finish line, Mathew Feeham, of the 11th Inf., Regt., team was in the lead followed by Cody Lane for the 58th Inf. Regt., and Miguel Sheran for the USARSA team.

For females, Traci Belcher of the 11th Inf. Regt., team won, with Nerine Pete and Laura Dean, both with the USARSA team close behind.

With the last event, the tug-of-war, Soldiers faced off to see who's team was the mightiest.As 11th Inf. Regt., pulled USARSA over the line, they emerged victorious followed be the 29th Inf. Regt., team and 58th Inf. Regt., team.

"This is a great competition," Jervon Burns, a three-time 36th Engineer Group competitor said. "It is a chance for good, healthy competition, and it gives us other events than the PT test."

First time competitor Keller, 58th Inf. Regt., said the competition

Soldiers from across Fort Benning gathered Tuesday morning at the O'Club for the Military Appreciation Week's Sand Volleyball finals.

As more than 20 four-man teams dwindled down to best players, the E Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, team emerged victorious.

Trainees and cadre members teamed up to walk away with the unexpected win.

The players who made up the winning team were, Shane Aki, Calvin Flinta, Shane Tulatona and Ieremia Masaga.

It was 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, ITB, with the team of Michael Stunkard, James Fredrick, VIctor Baez and Walter Cassasola bringing home the silver.

Charles Morris, Mario Gabriel, Armando Oimla and Frank Rodriquez of A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, took third place.

And C Company, 29th Inf. Regt., with Donnie Bobo, Michael Randolph, Christopher Deavila and Michael Cummings taking fourth place.

"It was a lot of fun," Rodriquez said who was part of the team that brought home the bronze. "It was something I wish we could do once a week.

"We just got a group of guys together and I was very surprised when we won third place. In fact I was amazed.

"I never thought we would do that well."

Law Day Run

Pfc. Mark Watson

More than 30 runners took part in the Law Day Run Saturday, sponsored by the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. The over all winners were Fransico Garcia for the males and Kerryn Davidson for the females. In the 18-years-old and under femalegroup, Anuarite Mubangu took the spot followed by Courtney Lee, Asley Salo and 7-year-old Annabell Garcia. For the 30- to 39-year-old males, James Miller won, followed by Pete Lind and Arreola Rodriga.
In the 40- to 49-year-old male group, Jon Lightner took top honors with Micheal Beard and Sam Mubangu close behind. Sole competitors were: Wayne Scott, Martinez Cavemann, Retia Scott, Stacey Salo and Michael Small.

is a break from the stress of basic training.

"I'm in my fifth week of basic," he said. "This is a great break from the stress and a lot of fun. It also gives us the chance to compete against other people from across the U.S."

Agreeing the competition was great, one mile run competitor Renee Grippon, on the 29th Inf. Regt., team said Military Appreciation Week is a lot of fun.

"I am having a great time," she said. "The best part is competing against each other and having people cheer people on."

The events wind down today with the General's Fun Run and the selection of Ms. AUSA at 11 a.m. on York Field.

An awards ceremony will follow the pageant on York Field awarding the newly crowned queen and winners from the military appreciation week games.

getting higher, so they depend on brains instead of brawn.

"I average in the low 80s," Williamson said. "My best game was a 71, but on one game I only putted 21 times on 18 holes,"

Agreeing that his game was slowing down, Shuff said he relies on his chipping more.

"As I get older, I don't hit as far and I don't putt as well, so I have to depend on my short game," he said. "My best game was a 62. I had 11 birdies and one bogey on that game," he said, as he shot 10 under pa that game.

Although the Gruesome members tee off from the senior tees, the men drive straight down the fairways as they swing effortlessly to the next green.

major were thrown out at first.

With the game tied at four, the colonels once again were up to bat. After their four-run warm-up inning they decided to show what they were made of.

Going through the order three times, the colonels pummeled the ball as they drove in 11 runs before the inning ended.

As third inning began, Carlton Holloway of the sergeants major team drove in a team member and wound up with a single, but before his team could really get started they grounded out with the inning's score at 15-5.

The sergeants major played tough defense and didn't allow any score in the third and fourth innings while sergeants major's Herbert Thompson drove the ball nearly to the fence allowing him to easily score.

With the beginning of the fifth inning, Mack Vereen headed to right field as a substitute for James Boyett. When he stepped up to the plate, he took two strikes and then drove the ball out of the infield scoring Lasanta and the last point of the game for his team.

In the bottom of the fifth, the colonels stepped up once again and pulled some more tricks out of their bag scoring four runs before they had three outs.

When the sergeants major grounded out twice and popped out, the colonels stopped the sergeants major from scoring in the sixth while driving in five of their own bringing the score to 27-7.

The sergeants major came to the plate again, but they popped up two balls for outs and then grounded another.

"Our infield was like vacuum cleaners," said Don Sando of the colonel's team with Joseph Lowder at third, K.K. Chin at shortstop and Jay Chambers at second. "They couldn't get anything past the infield."

"It is always great to win," said John Latimer. "Now (Command) Sergeant Major Vereen will retire with the loser trophy."

Taking the loss with a grain of salt, Vereen said that they "honorably accept defeat."

"We lost for the last three years, but we really beat them the year before."

As a tradition of the Celebrity Softball game the defeated team makes a donation to needy children.

"We are donating $2,000 to Santa's Castle as tradition," Vereen said.

With their spirits soaring and their heads held high both teams left the field awaiting next year's game.

A NEW TALE OF MILITARY ADVENTURE BY THE AUTHOR OF THE SMASH-HIT NOVEL ATLANTIS

Mankind's most dangerous enemy has returned.

Thousands of years ago, a malevolent force destroyed the majestic civilization of Atlantis. Now this ancient power has launched a new assault with a single objective—the complete annihilation of all life on earth. For ex-Green Beret Eric Dane and this team, the ultimate fight for survival has begun.

Bill means more money for Soldiers

Junior enlisted get biggest benefits boost

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines will see a little extra in their paychecks next year thanks to a new bill passed by Congress last week.

House Resolution 4205 secures service members a 3.7 percent pay raise effective Jan. 1, 2001 following a Congressional mandate that requires the 2001 pay raise be .5 percent more than the average salary increase in the private sector.

"The strength of our military is in its Soldiers, which is why we are again increasing the pay of our men and women in uniform," said Rep. Mac Collins, one of the bill's writers. "This is an important step in rebuilding the strength of our military, which has been given too many tasks and too few resources."

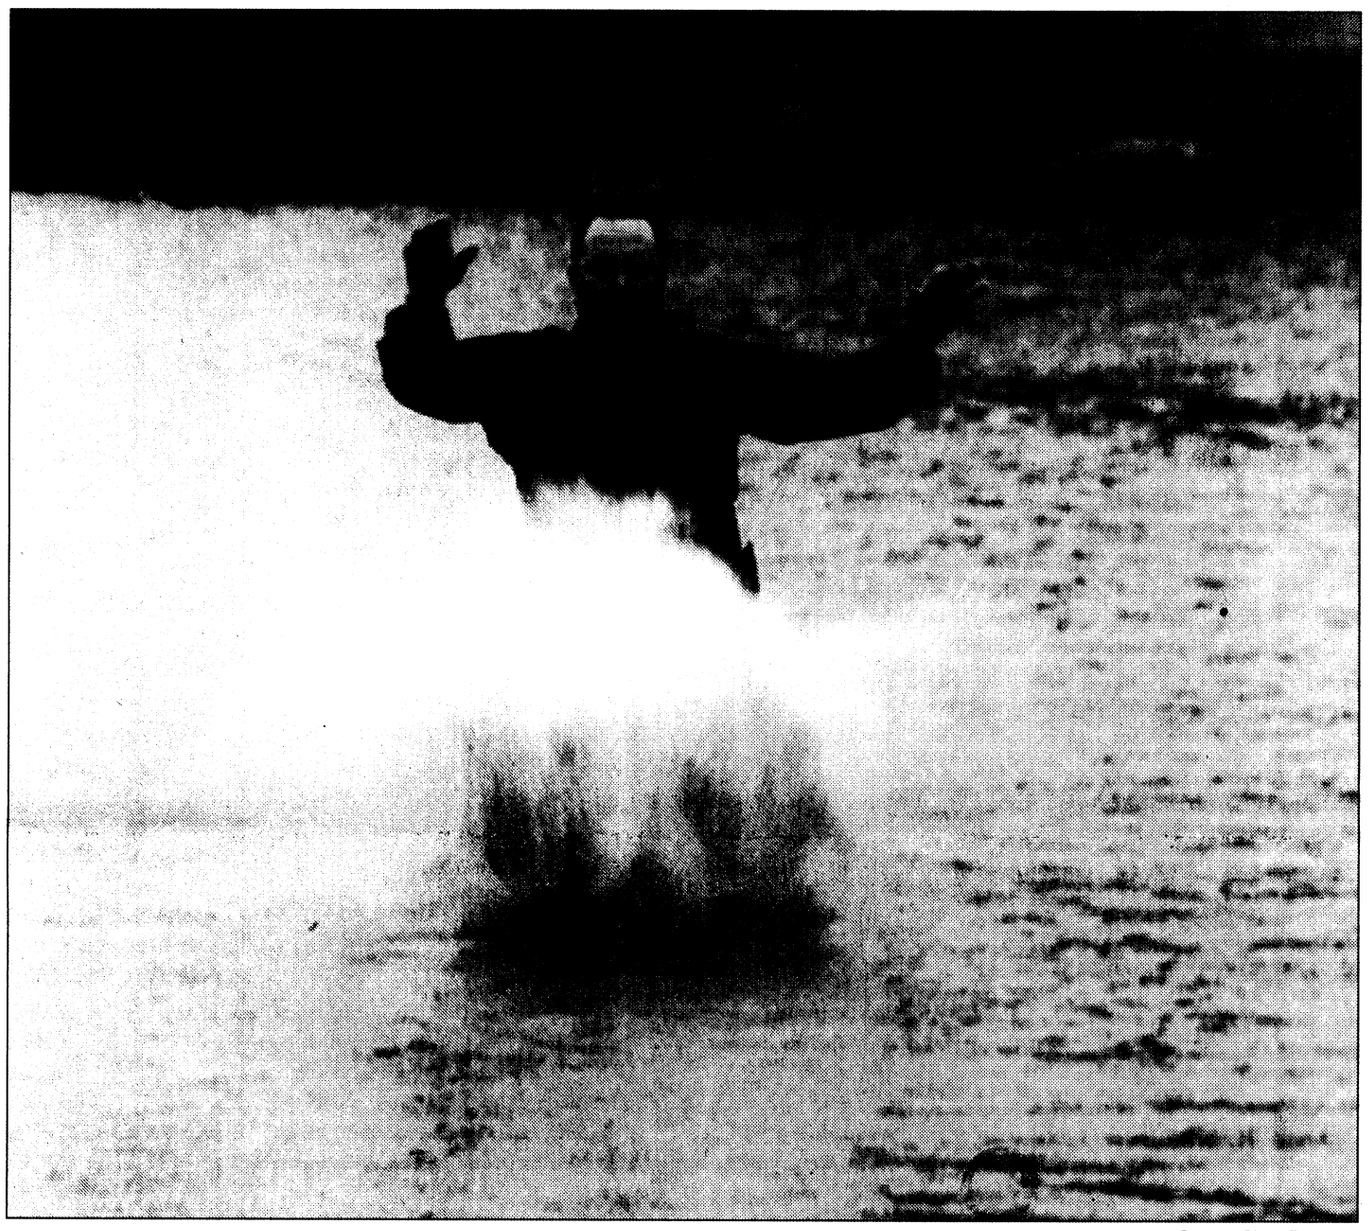
The bill also secures Soldiers living off post more money in the form of additional housing allowances.

The raise answers the Secretary of the Army's plan to reduce the out-of-pocket housing costs to 15 percent for Soldiers.

The housing portion of the military benefits bill also sets a minimum housing allowance for junior enlisted members by eliminating the housing rate brackets for E-1 to E-3 members and giving all junior Soldiers the E-4 with dependents rate.

Junior members will also be the most likely to benefit from another new addition to the military benefits package, Collins said.

The new bill provides up to $500 monthly for service members whose gross family income qualifies them for food stamps.



Eligibility for the allowance would be based on whether a military family's total income, including the value of government-owned quarters, put them over the threshold for assistance eligibility.

The bill also gives both enlisted and officer members a new option in saving for retirement.

Men and women in uniform can now participate in the Thrift Savings Plan, a tax-deferred savings plan that has been offered to federal civilian employees for years.

Military personnel will be able to contribute up to $10,500 annually — 5 percent of base pay or drill pay and special duty pays

Randall Wallace, Hollywood screenwriter, participates in the water confidence test during his visit to the Ranger Training Brigade earlier this month. Wallace plans to use his experiences to help him better understand Soldiering for his upcoming movie, We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young.

Screenwriter aims to shoot war movie at Fort Benning

While searching for a book to read before a flight to Hawaii five years ago, screenwriter Randall Wallace saw a title that caught his eye, We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young.

"It was powerful and poetic," he said.

The book, written by retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and Joe Galloway, chronicles the first major battle of Vietnam, the 1965 fight in the Ia Drang Valley.

A line in the prologue about the Vietnam War grabbed Wallace's attention even more: "Hollywood got it wrong every damned time, whetting twisted political knives on the bones of our dead brothers."

"When I read that, I knew I was in the presence of some guys who were going to tell the truth," Wallace said.

Congress mandates changes

USARSA receives new name, mission

Spc. Mitch Frazier

The U.S. Army School of the Americas is nearing approval for a new charter, mission and name.

Under a bill passed last week by the House, the school, which trains Central and South American Soldiers, would be able to continue operations but would be forced to close its doors later this year and reopen as a new Department of Defense institution.

The new school would also be required to operate under a revamped set of regulations.

Those regulations, school officials said, would require the school to transition from a military training institution to a school for both military personnel as well civilian and military police agencies in South and Central America.

An additional focus on the problems associated with democratization, and a revamped and more diverse board of visitors that includes members of Congress to oversee the new school is also planned in the proposed reorganization effort.

"This will be a step forward for the school," said Col. Glenn Weidner, the school's commandant. "But I don't think this will end the protest for the school.

"The problem is so loaded with emotion and misunderstanding, I don't think we will ever see it end," Weidner said.

The battle over what will actually happen to the school under the reorganization effort is still being waged in the halls of the nation's capital as the Senate and

Airborne pioneer marks another first

First black paratrooper presents award

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

It was a gathering of past and present Airborne Soldiers during the Airborne graduation ceremony May 19.

Among those Soldiers were two who shared a special link. Staff Sgt. Jerome Jones, from the 369th Signal Battalion at Fort Gordon, Ga., was presented with a new award that recognizes the class NCO honor graduate, named after retired 1st Sgt. Walter Morris.

Morris, the first black paratrooper from the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, was on hand to present Jones with the award.

Morris said presenting the award named after him was an unbelievable event.

"I feel a sense of pride I've never felt before," he said. "This is the most exciting thing that has ever happened to me besides being selected to be a paratrooper. This is a wonderful, wonderful gift and I'm so proud to be here."

Having Morris there to present the award was a real honor, said Sgt. Maj. Efrain Hernandez, Airborne School sergeant major.

"First Sergeant Morris was a pioneer of the Airborne tradition. I think it's only fitting that we honor him and his achievements with this award," he said.

Morris said going to the Airborne Walk for the graduation ceremony brought back vivid memories of his first days as an Airborne Soldier.

"Sixty something years ago, we were in this area, this was where we did calisthenics," he

Last week I met a Hollywood filmmaker who plans to bring We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young to the big screen. During the course of the interview at the Ranger Training Brigade, he told a story about retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore, the book's author, that stands out in my mind as Memorial Day approaches.

Randall Wallace, who wrote the screenplay for Braveheart and now We Were Soldiers, has visited Fort Benning twice. Last year Moore took the filmmaker around post, showing him the home where he and his family lived while stationed here, and the parade field where the men of the 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry — under the command of then Lt. Col. Moore — gathered early one morning before deploying to Vietnam where they would fight the first major battle of the war.

But the former commander had another stop to make before allowing the filmmaker to leave the post — the cemetery where the men who didn't survive the battle of Ia Drang in November 1965 are buried.

"General Moore wouldn't leave until he had taken me to the cemetery and prayed over the graves of his men, each one," Wallace said.

This weekend, it's that image I will recall as we observe Memorial Day.

Area residents will have numerous chances to honor the men and women who gave their lives in service to our country.

Col. Robert B. Nett, Medal of Honor recipient, will speak Saturday at 10:30 a.m. during a pre-Memorial Day celebration at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park. The park is at the corner of Lawyers Lane and Buena Vista Road, Columbus.

Nett is the guest speaker again during a 2 p.m. ceremony at the Fort Mitchell National Cemetery on Sunday. The U.S. Army Infantry Center Band will provide music. The cemetery is on Highway 165 about 10 miles south of Phenix City.

More than 200 people are expected to attend the service at Fort Mitchell, which is considered "one of the most beautiful of all the national cemeteries," Lewis Wood, secretary for the memorial committee, said.

Fort Benning's Memorial Day ceremony is set for 9 a.m. Monday at the Main Post Cemetery. Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, deputy commanding general, will speak and a wreath will be placed at the grave of the unknown Soldier. The Infantry Center band will also perform.

Eaton will speak two hours later during an 11 a.m. ceremony at the Phenix City-Russell County War Casualties Memorial on the corner of Summerville Road and Stadium Drive, next door to Garrett Stadium, in Phenix City.

Mom shares secrets with others

commentary

I'm not the world's best mom. I'll never be mistaken for June Cleaver, doing housework in a dress, pumps and pearls.

Sometimes I have trouble remembering the last time I did any serious housework, period. But I do know something June didn't know.

I don't know if June Cleaver ever did it, but I recognized early on that sometimes, a mom has to make time for herself, even if she has to take some kids with her.

I've been known to pack up my first-grader and one of her little friends, take them to a local fast-food establishment, treat them to a children's meal, and then turn them loose in the play area while I read the Sunday paper or a good book.

Of course, I don't ignore them. I'm very attentive when they leave the giant hamster tubes and report to my position.

Take the time they came screeching up to report that my daughter was bleeding. I know my child, and she was much too tearless for it to have been a real "emergency."

"Are you sure she's bleeding?"

"YES!"

"Is she bleeding from a vein or is it an arterial bleed?"

As expected, this stopped the whiners in their tracks. "What's the difference?"

I proceeded to explain about blood from a vein flowing freely, while an arterial bleed would be from an artery and would spurt.

"Well, it's not doing either. While you were explaining about bleeding, where she got scratched got all dried up." Several "high-fives" later, they had been congratulated on my daughter's "healing" and were playing happily again.

A few minutes later, they were back.

Not to be outdone, my daughter reported that Amber had "broken her arm." I conceded that a broken arm was serious business.

"Are you sure it's broken, Amber?" I asked. The moppet standing in front of me had assumed a pitiful stance, holding the "broken" arm.

"Oh, yes. I know it's broken."

"What makes you think your arm is broken?"

She straightened the "broken" arm and slowly raised it to nearly shoulder level. "I can only lift it this high."

"Wow. That's pretty bad. How high could you lift it before you broke it?"

She lifted her arm over her head. "Before I broke it I could lift it all the way up to here!"

Another amazing miracle cure! (I can't take full credit for the "broken arm test," though. I got it from my father-in-law who witnessed it, time and again, in a World War II field hospital.)

A regular visitor at my desk is a Bayonet staffer's 11-month old, a.k.a. "the office baby." On his short visits to the office, he makes the rounds of everyone's laps, I ply him with crackers and we're delighted for a quick break from the routine.

The best part about his visits is if he gets cranky, we hand him back to his mom.

Our office family will soon be adding another addition to the fold. I (almost) envy the new moms. Aside from being so darn cute, babies have innocence to spare.

As my daughter gets older, the challenges get, well, more challenging but the rewards are greater too ... something our new office moms are about to learn. And I'll be glad to help the new moms make some time for themselves.

As long as I can give them back if they get cranky.

commentary

The gun is my weapon, my protection, my reason, my reputation, my confidence, my life and my power.

All of these are some of the reasons people find the gun something of fascination, whether for the good sport of hunting, self-protection or acts of violence. Although the ownership of a gun is perfectly legal, it has raised many issues questioning its ability to be owned by the common American.

Even though the weapon mechanism was developed in the distant past its meaning and purpose are still the same, to kill or disarm another man.

Over time the gun has received many modifications, making it more deadly, or in some cases safer than before.

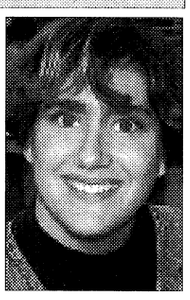
This weapon was intended to be a weapon of war, but with the growing crime and constant demand for self-protection the gun became available to the American home.

During the past century the gun has been the number one cause in the death of millions of Americans. Still to this day thousands of people are dying each year to the wrath of the gun, not only in America but also all over the world. The number of gun-related deaths is at its highest ever in America.

The majority of these deaths are gang related, but some people fail to notice that it can happen anywhere and to anyone regardless of the area of a person's reputation.

In the past year, the gun has taken a large leap with the group of people it affects. Children are now taking advantage of the easy access to the weapon and "solving" their problems at school.

School-related shootings have hit our country hard and are taking a large toll on our young society. Just recently the unexpected occurred proving that no one is safe from these tools of destruction. A 6-year-old boy not even out of first grade shoots his fellow classmate in the face with his uncle's pistol. This is an example of how easily the gun can be accessed, even by a highly unexpected, sweet little child.



Now over the past 12 months our country has had many discussions on the worth and worthlessness of the gun.

To this day the greatest topic of debate is the probation of the weapon in America. This topic will probably be debated and confronted for years, way past my time, but regardless of the laws or restrictions on the gun, violence will still occur in some shape or form, thus leaving America helpless to the waste of life at the pull of the trigger.

Dieting children cause for parents' concern

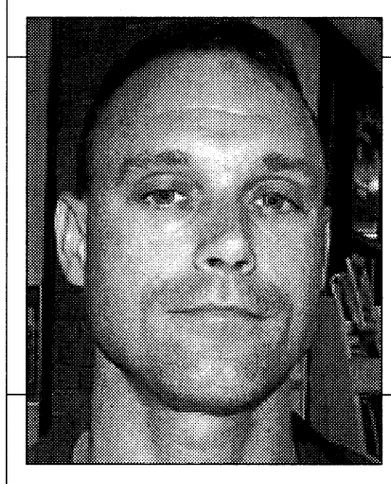
commentary

My 8-year-old daughter told me about a child in her class who doesn't eat breakfast any more because she is trying to lose weight.

This simply amazes me. Breakfast is the most important meal of the day, especially for children who are learning with the same intensity as the speed of light and need nourishment for brain cell growth.

This second-grader doesn't have any reason to diet. She looks like most of the other children in her class.



Why are second-graders concerned about their weight? Is it because their role models are Britney Spears or Christina Aguilera? Why are children comparing their bodies to those of models on fashion magazines?

Society's obsession with thinness is putting our children at risk. Young girls are at risk for developing poor body images and then developing eating disorders.

Preoccupation with weight and size, not eating or no weight gain in spite of a large appetite indicate an eating disorder. Bulimia and anorexia nervosa are typically problems for teen-age girls but parents of younger children need to be aware of where their children are developing their body image.

Summer heats up snake problem on post

Heat brings snakes closer to people

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

It was about 10:30 p.m. when Donna Johnson was watching television in her Indianhead Terrace home, saw something crawl across the living-room floor. Calling upstairs to her husband, Tyrone, to investigate, he rushed downstairs with a flashlight and a broom to try to corner this mystery creature. It was a snake.

"It was maybe a foot or a foot and a half long," Tyrone Johnson said.

While he kept an eye on the snake, his wife called the military police and it was expediently removed from the home.

Although the snake found in the Johnson's home was identified as a harmless garter snake, it's not the first time snakes have made an appearance in post housing or work areas.

Lt. Col. Don Salo, Fort Benning provost marshal, said last week the MPs received five calls regarding snake sightings in the housing areas. He saw his first snake of the year last weekend while running near the golf course.

There are about 20 to 30 calls of snake sightings per year, said Johnny Phillips, biological technician, Directorate of Public Works Conservation Branch. The staff at the conservation branch are trained snake handlers, who can safely remove the snakes after receiving caller information from the military police.

Although the DPW Conservation Branch handles snake removal, Regis Beighley, safety manager, Infantry Branch Safety Office, said if a snake is sighted call 911.

"The MPs will respond. Like any other emergency, it's the best thing to do," he said.

"We get notified for all emergencies," Salo said. "If I had a snake in my quarters, I would call that an emergency. We just cordon off the area and make sure its safe until the DPW gets there."

Salo cautioned against people trying to use their personal firearms to try to kill the snake.

"We don't want someone shooting at the snake," he said. "That would become a bigger problem."

Beighley said leaving snakes alone is the best way to handle an encounter with one, especially not knowing what kind it is.

One way to tell the difference between a venomous or non-venomous snake is by looking at the eyes.

Except for the coral snake, all other venomous snakes have elliptical eyes. The coral snake and non-venomous varieties have round ones.

"But you'd have to get pretty close to tell," said Jim Trostle, coordinator of wildlife and trails at the Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center. "I suggest go pick up a good field guide."

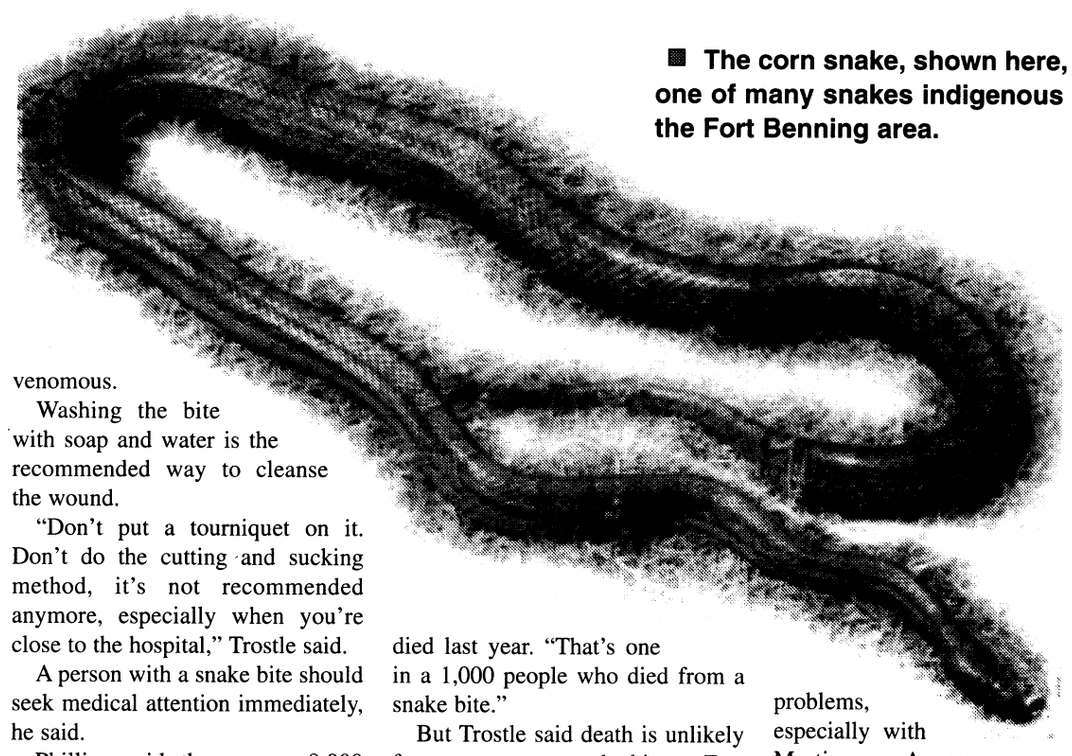
There are several circumstances that will bring snakes to the housing areas such as if there are mice in the home or in the home's surrounding habitat.

Also, storage areas around a property could pose as possible snake hide-outs. "Most snakes like cubbyholes to crawl in or under. They go looking for these kinds of places to use as a nesting site," he said.

"Snakes will come to human areas when their food source is moved or they're looking for water," Trostle said. The recent dry weather forced snakes to search for water outside the forests. Controlled burns will also chase them out.

In order to keep snakes away from a residence, keep the lawn cut short and clean of debris; and do not keep food, including pet food, outside because the food will attract rodents that can bring snakes to the area.

"Typically in the woods, during the dry heat of the day you might find them underneath things," Trostle said. "If you pick up logs, a flat rock or something, you might come across a snake."



"If you don't know what it is, it's best to stay away," Trostle said.

Sometimes the snake may just stay still and try to camouflage itself waiting for the person to pass.

"If it's coiled and still and watching you, your best bet is to walk away," Trostle said. "People are bitten because they are trying to do something to the snake. They try to hit it or decide to pick it up and move it somewhere."

If a snake bite occurs it's important to remain as calm as possible.

Victims should immobilize the bitten area while keeping it lower than the heart to minimize the spread of the venom — even if it is suspected that the snake is non-venomous.

■ The corn snake, shown here, is one of many snakes indigenous to the Fort Benning area.

Washing the bite with soap and water is the recommended way to cleanse the wound.

"Don't put a tourniquet on it. Don't do the cutting and sucking method, it's not recommended anymore, especially when you're close to the hospital," Trostle said.

A person with a snake bite should seek medical attention immediately, he said.

Phillips said there were 8,000 venomous snake bites per year in the United States of which nine people died last year. "That's one in a 1,000 people who died from a snake bite."

But Trostle said death is unlikely from a venomous snake bite on Fort Benning unless the person is very old, very young, or has health problems, especially with Martin Army community Hospital so close.

A CLOSER LOOK

Here is a brief description of the six species of venomous snakes that are indigenous to the Fort Benning area.

■ Southern Copperhead: Average adult size is 22-26 inches. This snake is stout-bodied with broad, light brown to gray crossbands, alternating with dark brown to reddish-brown crossbands.

■ Cottonmouth: Average adult size is 20-48 inches. This is a dark-colored, heavy-bodied snake.

■ Eastern Diamondback Rattlesnake: Average adult size is 36-72 inches. This is a large, heavy-bodied snake with a row of large dark diamonds.

■ Timber Rattlesnake: Average adult size is 36-60 inches. The reddish brown stripe running down the center of the back is disrupted by a series of large, black chevron-like crossbands.

■ Dusky Pygmy Rattlesnake: Average adult size is 12-24 inches. The top of the triangular-shaped head is covered with nine large scales.

■ Eastern Coral Snake: Average adult size is 20-30 inches. The body is ringed with black, yellow and red; the yellow rings are narrow.

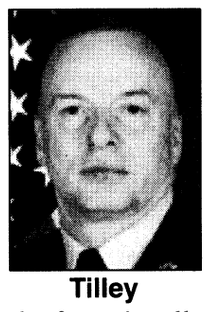
Army names Tilley to fill top NCO slot

Sergeant major slated to replace Hall June 23 in D.C.

Army News Service



WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera and Army Chief of Staff Eric K. Shinseki announced May 18 that Command Sgt. Maj. Jack L. Tilley has been selected to be the 12th sergeant major of the Army.

For the last two years, Tilley has been serving as command sergeant major for U.S. Central Command at MacDill Air Force Base, Fla. He has 32 years of experience with the Army as an armored cavalryman, including a combat tour in Vietnam.

Tilley will be sworn in June 23 after Sgt. Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall retires. Hall, who also served at U.S. Central Command before coming to the Pentagon, has been sergeant major of the Army since Oct. 13, 1997. Hall was extended a year when Shinseki took office last June. Hall is retiring June 22, after 32 years of service.

As sergeant major of the Army, Tilley will serve as personal advisor to the Army chief of staff on all enlisted-related matters, particularly in areas affecting Soldier training, NCO leader development and Soldier and family well-being.

The sergeant major of the Army devotes the majority of his time traveling throughout the Army observing training, and talking to Soldiers and their families. He listens to their concerns and provides the chief of staff feedback and recommendations for the forces' well-being.

Tilley

He also sits on a wide variety of councils and boards that make decisions affecting enlisted Soldiers and their families and is routinely invited to testify before Congress.

Tilley entered the Army at Fort Lewis, Wash., in 1966. He served in Vietnam as an armor crewman and scout driver for A Troop, 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry, in September 1971. Since then, he has served in every position from squad leader to command sergeant major of the 1st Armored Division. He also served as command sergeant major for Task Force Eagle in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Tilley spent much of his career serving in Germany and Fort Knox, Ky. He served at Knox as tank commander, instructor, operations sergeant, battalion and later brigade command sergeant major with the 194th Separate Armored Brigade. He also served tours at Fort Polk, La.; Fort Lewis, Wash.; and Fort Benning, Ga.

Prior to his assignment at U.S. Central Command, he was command sergeant major of the U.S. Army Space and Missile Defense Command, Arlington, Va.

His military schools include the Drill Sergeant School, Master Gunner Course, First Sergeant Course and the Sergeants Major School, where he graduated from Class 28 in 1987.

His awards include three Legions of Merit, the Bronze Star with V Device, three Meritorious Service Medals, Vietnam Service Medal and Campaign Medal, Presidential Unit Citation, two Overseas Service Ribbons, NCO Professional Development Ribbon, Drill Sergeant's Badge and Parachutist's Badge.

He is married to the former Gloria Smith and they have two sons, Brian and Kevin.

Businesses, municipalities open doors for Soldiers

National employers search for help at AUSA Job Fair

Karen Taylor

Special to the Bayonet©

There wasn't much elbow room at the seventh annual Association of the U.S. Army Job Fair May 18 as people packed the corridors of Infantry Hall in search of one thing — a new job.

While some were searching for a career after the Army, others were looking for a higher paying job.

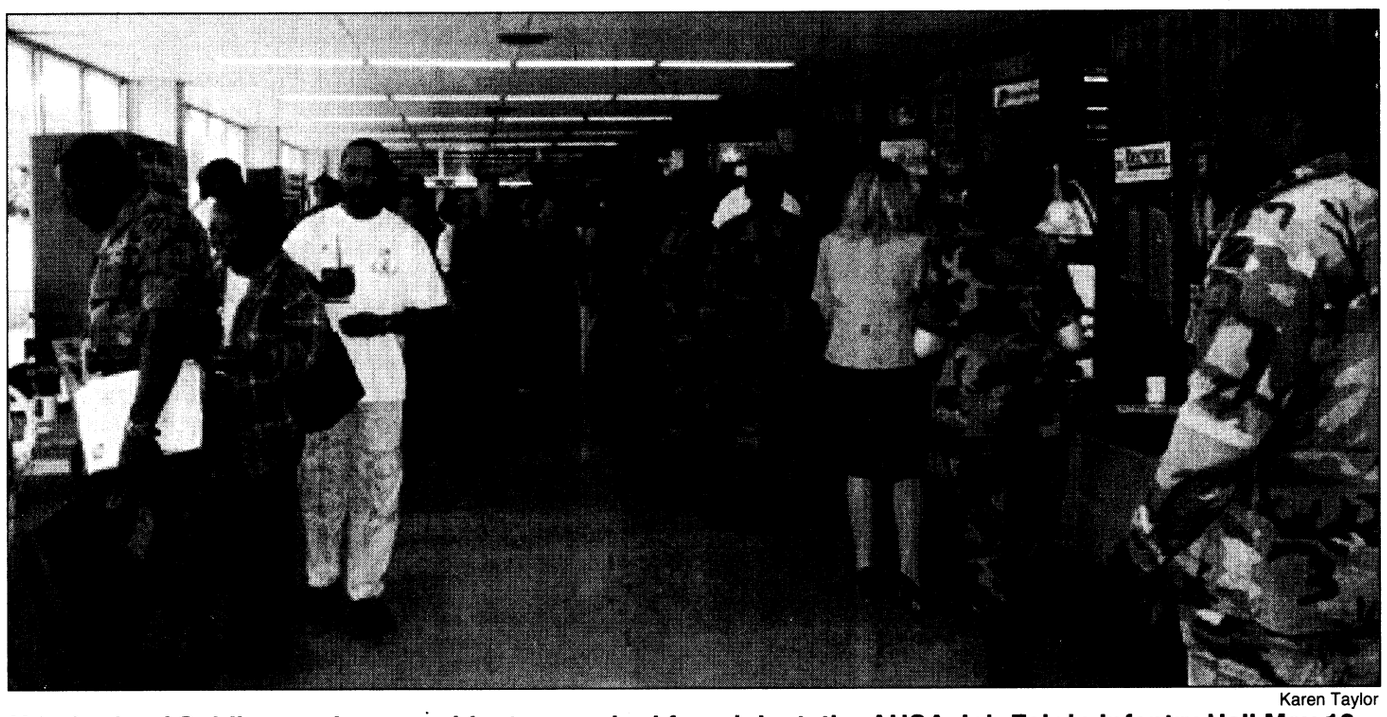
Whatever the reason, the AUSA Job Fair provided a venue of 116 employers for the more than 2,000 Soldiers and civilians who attended to gather career information, to give out resumes and even to fill out employment applications.

"I'm looking for employment and hoping out of all these companies, someone will pick me up," said Tess Mabry, a Columbus resident.

Mabry was searching for an administrative or law enforcement position.

"I'm looking for a better paying job and hopefully that's what I'll get out of it," said Genevieve Williams, family member. She was looking for a job in her current field of budget analysis, but she said she likes people and "anything in customer service is OK, too." Williams already had one interview set up for last week and she had only just begun to make her way down the corridor.

The job fair covered the gamut of employers from the Los Angeles County Police Department to the St. Francis Hospital in Columbus.



It covered local, state and national employers, said Bruce Tait, Jr., representative at the Georgia Department of Labor and six-year chairman of the AUSA Job Fair.

The event was sponsored by the AUSA Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter and assisted by the Georgia Department of Labor, Army Career and Alumni Program and Army Community Service and Family Member Employment Assistance Program.

The AUSA Job Fair is an annual occurrence on post during Military Appreciation Week.

"We feel that we need to set up something like this because people take time out of their lives to be in the military. They've been out of the job market for a while and they need a chance. Here, are your major recruiters," Tait said.

The job fair was open to everyone, but Tait said the target audience was military personnel, especially those with plans to get out of the Army. "The recruiters are familiar with the military," he said.

Karen Taylor

Hundreds of Soldiers and area residents searched for a job at the AUSA Job Fair in Infantry Hall May 18.

Many recruiters look for retired military personnel because of their leadership skills and experience, which makes them ideal candidates for managerial positions.

"I want to see what types of jobs are in the Columbus area," said Pfc. Dionza Cunningham, 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group, who is due to ETS in a few months. "I still have to feel my way around."

She said she hoped to do some networking at the fair.

Charlotte Bush, employment marketing representative for the Georgia Department of Labor said in the Columbus area labor market shows a demand for health care and computer professionals.

"Because of an aging population, (health care) jobs are in demand," she said. "Physical therapy, home health, anything that has to do with health care."

Luau hits big with locals

Festival's 4,000 attendees marks new record

Tiki torches were lighted and Hawaiian music played as the second annual Fort Benning Asian Pacific Islander Heritage Month Luau kicked off at 3 p.m. May 19 at the Uchee Creek Campground and Marina.

The festival, which attracted more than 4,000 people, proved to be a marked improvement from last year's attendance figure, said Spc. Tina Fountaine, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president and event organizer.

"We had 500 more out here this year," she said. "It was a lot of work, but all in all it turned out to be really good."

The event kicked off with children's games and canoe races.

While the children slid down the large inflatable slide and ran through the obstacle course, the canoes races brought out the child in grown-ups as more than 16 three-person teams paddled around buoys in the marina.

The team "Tipover," comprised of Staff Sgt. Lonnie Null, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Sgt. Luis Gonzalez and Spc. Tolo Aliki, both with A Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., earned top honors as they out-paddled the Officer Candidate Team.

As the Tipover team crossed the finish line, a 400-pound pig that had been cooking since 7 a.m. was unearthed and a crowd soon gathered as the aroma drifted through the area.

"(The pork) is great," Pfc. Nicholas McKenney, A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., said. "It has been a while since I have had it cooked this way. I want more. They are doing a great job on it."

Entertainers Tony Skahan and By D'Sign attracted a large audience as the rest of the food was being prepared.

As the music ended, more than 3,000 luau-goers lined up for the free, authentic Asian-Pacific style roast pig, chicken, rice, crab noodle salad, tropical fruit and Kim-chee.

"The food is pretty good," Pvt. Chad Martin, 988th Military Police Company, said. "I think I like the pork the best."

Agreeing with Martin, 1st Sgt. John Kamai, who helped cook, said it was perfect.

"It really turned out great," he said.

Pfc. Andrea Day said the luau was a good release for Soldiers.

"This is a great cultural experience, said the C Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, Soldier. "A lot of the things displayed here should be in a museum.

"It is really peaceful here, and a good break from Main Post and Kelley Hill. It also is a way to work with the chain of command on a personal level."

Spc. Jesse Evans, A Co., 203rd FSB, 3rd Bde., agreeing with Day said it was a great time and a way to wind down.

"I am here for the free food, to watch the dancers, to cut loose and just have fun."

Hula, Tahitian, Korean and fire dancers took to the stage after the martial arts demonstration to give the audience a taste of the Asian Pacific dancing heritage.

Winding down the evening was DSOS and Empire who entertained the Soldiers and families until 11 p.m. when buses took Soldiers back to predetermined areas to keep the number of vehicles to a minimum.

For Fountaine, this years luau proved to be a success, and planning for next years event should be in the near future, after this years luau was reviewed.

Authentic roast adds to event

Pfc. Mark Watson

Bayonet staff

As part of the second annual Asian Pacific Islander Heritage Month Luau, a 400-pound pig was cooked in authentic Asian Pacific style, by burying it.

The pig alone could feed more than 600 people, said cook Robert Kaiwy, who began preparing the pig the day before the luau.

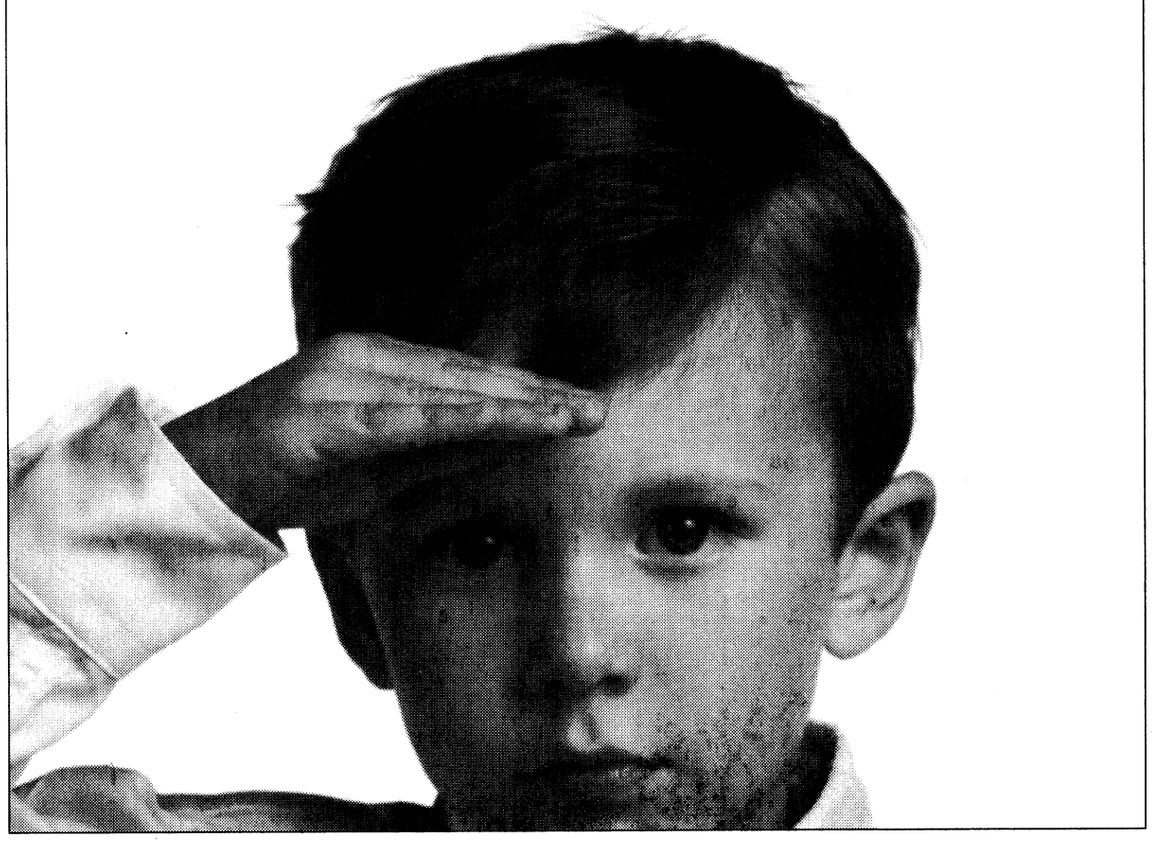
Before cooking the pig, it was dressed out by rubbing the pork with rock salt and then wrapping it with wire to keep it together.

Kaiwy, along with four of his pig cooking cohorts, then dug a hole large enough to cook the pig along with other essential items — wood, rocks and cabbage.

"We put wet burlap sacks on top of the pig to keep it moist and then canvas on top of the sacks to keep the steam in," Kaiwy said. "The canvas was then covered with dirt and the pig cooked for about eight hours."

While the luau festivities continued throughout the afternoon, the pig roasted over the red-hot rocks until 4:30 p.m. when it was unearthed to a small crowd of hungry luau'ers.

"It really turned out great," said 1st Sgt. John Kamai, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "And it should pretty good eating too."



"It looks great," said Command Sgt. Maj. Edmond Crivello, 1st Battalion 11th Infantry Regiment sergeant major. "I can't wait to get my hands on some of it."

More than 3,000 people lined up to try out a piece of the pork along with other traditional Asian Pacific foods.

Screenwriter: May make Fort Benning set for new movie right, so he is taking on the challenge himself. He has written a screenplay based on the book, and plans to direct and produce the project. He hopes to start filming next spring, possibly at Fort Benning, and have the movie in theaters by Christmas 2001.

Wallace wrote the screenplay for Braveheart, which won the Academy Award for best picture of 1995. He also wrote, directed and produced The Man in the Iron Mask, starring Leonardo di Caprio.

To prepare for the Vietnam saga, Wallace, 50, took on a personal challenge — two weeks with the Ranger Training Brigade. The filmmaker participated in various aspects of training during the three phases of Ranger School at Fort Benning, Dahlonega, Ga., and Camp Rudder, Fla.

He talked about his adventures before leaving the post last week.

"When you make a movie you have to believe in it yourself, and you have to get other people to believe and to go out on a limb. You can't do that unless you go out on the limb yourself. And that's really why I'm here," he said.

One of the limbs he climbed was a log 40 feet above Victory Pond, part of the water confidence test. In Dahlonega he climbed Mount Yonah carrying a 40-pound ruck sack, and in Florida he participated in a night stream crossing.

He admitted that for a guy who spends most of his time in an imaginary world, he was thrilled to be out with "real guys, doing real things," he said.

"I know that putting on a pair of BDUs and hanging out with Rangers is not going to make me a Ranger. But I knew I couldn't experience the true depth of this kind of commitment and service unless I got my hands dirty," he said.

And he picked up the lingo quickly, including finding a definition for hooah, which he discovered has many including "amen" and "yes."

His last night in the Georgia mountains, a new usage came to him for the term.

"I was lying there with every muscle and bone in my body hurting, and I thought hooah meant, 'Hooah thought this was a good idea? Hooah came up with this bright notion?' "

The son of a candy salesman, Wallace grew up in Tennessee and Virginia. He graduated from Duke University with a degree in religion, and he never served in the military.

Staff Sgt. Jason Powell, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, RTB, escorted Wallace during his visit to post, which also included a 3-mile buddy run, hand-to-hand combat and pugilistic training.

"He did really well," Powell said.

"He just wanted to get a feeling for what Soldiers were like and how they talked. He couldn't ask his actors to do something he wouldn't do."

Wallace's excitement over the project inspired Powell to read the book.

"He really hopes that he does it justice," Powell said.

The project has the support of Moore, who as a lieutenant colonel commanded the 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry, and Galloway, the only reporter on the ground throughout the fighting.

The unit's 450 men jumped into a small clearing in the Ia Drang Valley. Immediately they were surrounded by 2,000 North Vietnamese soldiers. During four days of fighting, 234 Americans died at Landing Zones X-ray and Albany.

It was Moore's support and the subject matter of the screenplay that helped pave the way for Wallace's visit and entry into Ranger training, Wallace said.

"General Moore's book has been read by virtually every standing officer in the Army."

Moore lives in Auburn, Ala., and will receive a Doughboy award June 14 at Fort Benning recognizing his 32 years of military service and his distinctive contributions to the Infantry community.

Wallace visited Fort Benning 18 months ago. During that trip Moore introduced him to Basil Plumley, who served as the battalion's sergeant major and now lives in Columbus. He also talked with Ernie Savage, who inherited command of the 2nd Platoon, B Company, during the battle.

Retired from the Army, Savage is a project officer in the Foreign Analysis Division, Directorate of Threat and Security. He first met Wallace several years ago at a reunion of the 1st Bn., 7th Cav., in Washington, D.C. Moore and Galloway invited the screenwriter to attend and talk with the veterans.

"You don't know how to take these Hollywood guys," Savage said. "But he seemed to be more genuine and concerned with seeing the book the way Moore and Galloway intended."

The two men talked again last year at Fort Benning.

"He really wants to know how Soldiers act, how they interact with each other and react under fire," Savage said. "That's probably the reason Moore and Galloway agreed to let him do the movie."

Savage hopes Wallace is approaching the movie cautiously. After all, he and other veterans of the battle and the decade-long war — not to mention the thousands who have read the book — will be in the audience.

"They will be looking for the mistakes," he said.

A deal is in the works with a major motion picture studio to produce the movie, and Wallace wouldn't comment on who would star in the film.

He would like to film parts of the movie at Fort Benning, he said, because the historic quarters haven't changed that much in the last 35 years.

"I focused in the screenplay a great deal on the women back home," he said, adding that Moore's wife, Julie, is the one who encouraged him to make the movie.

"It was heart-wrenching and inspiring what these ladies went through," he said of the family members left behind when the unit deployed from Fort Benning.

Wallace stresses that he wants the film to be true and uplifting.

"The truth is liberating, as the Bible tells us, and my feeling about this story is that if it is done right, it will be profoundly uplifting because we all know about what was eroded or even destroyed in Vietnam. But we are not really aware of what was affirmed," he said.

"Americans who said we shouldn't be sending any more young men over there under these circumstances will be able to look at this movie and say, 'I was right.'

"And the Americans who said those are our sons and daughters over there and we need to be proud of them will look at this movie and say, 'I was right.'"

Morris: Honors heritage of paratroopers with new award said. "We would get on the field and start to imitate the white students training."

Little did Morris and the rest of the Soldiers know what those exercises would lead to.

"The commander of the school, General (Ridgely) Gaither, drove by and saw this field that was supposed to be vacant after the white students had left. He saw 50 black Soldiers jumping up and down shouting, 'One thousand one, one thousand two,'" Morris said. "He didn't know what to make of it so he had me called to his office.

"When you, as a first sergeant, get called to the general's office, you are scared to death because you wonder what in the world you have done to deserve being called to his office," he said. "He asked me to explain what we were doing and I did. He then explained to me the secret of all secrets — that there was going to be a black parachute company in the United States Army and would I like to be the first sergeant of that company. I was elated, my heart almost burst."

Morris said the shock was overwhelming because the black Soldiers were playing a different role in the war effort before the formation of the 555th Parachute Inf. Bn.

"It was unbelievable. In 1943, we were a separate unit, a separate society," Morris explained. "We, as black Soldiers in uniform, were denied access to the post exchange and the main theater. We couldn't go in even in uniform, but the German and Italian prisoners of war that were stationed here could walk in to the exchange and buy a Coke or cigarettes.

"We were actually servants, not Soldiers for the school," Morris said.

"When we were told the Army was going to start a black parachute company and we would be trained as combat Soldiers, it was a great, great moment," he said.

While Soldiers are still Soldiers, Morris said he has noticed some differences in the training an Airborne trooper goes through.

"In the beginning of '44, we trained in four stages as students, compared to today there are only three stages," he said. "In those days, the first week was spent in Alabama for calisthenics. That was all we did. It really got our minds and bodies in shape for what would come later on in our training."

All of that training paid off for the Soldiers of the 555th as they learned to use their skills to defend America.

"When we were ordered to report to Pendleton, Ore., as smoke jumpers, that was exciting because we had no idea what a smoke jumper was," he said. "We learned about the incendiary bombs being dropped on the Pacific northwest by the Japanese incendiary balloons.

"The forest service couldn't cope with it so they asked the Army if they could spare some paratroopers. The Army said yes, they had 600 paratroopers that they didn't know what to do with," Morris said. "The theater in Europe was closing down and General MacArthur didn't want black paratroopers to integrate with the white paratroopers in the Pacific.

"So the Army sent us to be smoke jumpers for the fire season of 1945," he said. "The Japanese sent over thousands of balloons that dropped bombs on national forests. We had more than 1,200 individual jumps on 32 fires in the western states and we only lost one man."

Morris said he is glad he could play a role in those beginning steps of integration in the military.

"This is so great now. There is no comparison," he said. "It's so great to be a part of it, to be an American, because this country is moving forward and has come along way. We still have a little way to go, but we've come a long way."

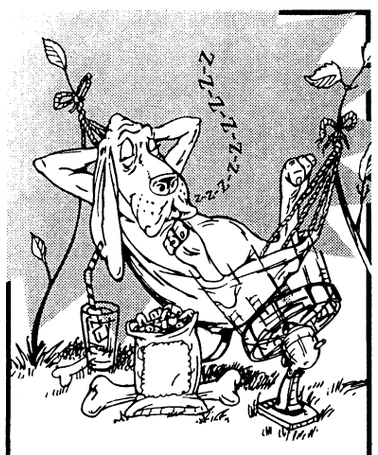
and bonuses — into the plan.

The bill also boosts the antiquated clothing allowance for officers.

The change, which marks the first time the allowance has been revamped for nearly 20 years, doubles the figure for both active-duty and reserve officers.

"The bill is good for America," Collins said. "By improving our Soldiers quality of life, it will improve retention and recruitment."

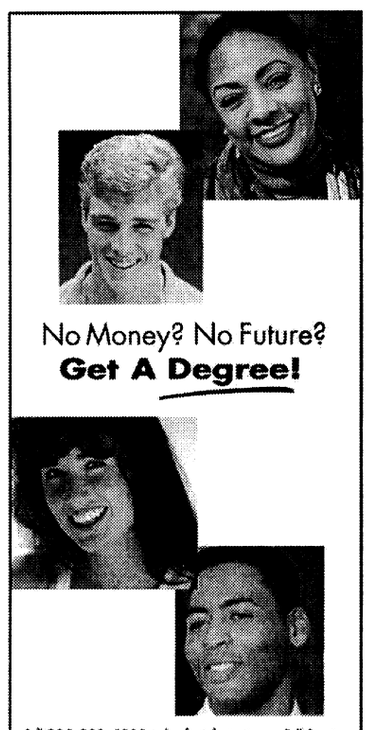


The bill still awaits signature from the president before becoming law.

Washington officials said that approval may come as soon as this fall.

A CLOSER LOOK

If passed by Congress, military service members would see the following.



- Effective Jan. 1, 2001 a 3.7 percent pay raise.
- Housing allowance upgrade for E-4 and below to current E-4 standard.
- A special allowance for the lowest paid Soldiers, up to $500.

Man's passion keeps city

Clean-up is one of many projects for retired

Bridgett Siter

A sign on the south side of the brick wall that stands at the junction of Buena Vista Road and Lawyers Lane in Columbus proclaims the five acre triangle of land the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park. On the opposite side of the wall, surrounding a sculpture of three U.S. Soldiers, 119 bricks bear the names of Columbus natives who lost their lives in Vietnam.

Retired Sgt. Lonnie Jackson said an elderly woman visits the wall every day just to gaze at the name of her son engraved on one of those bricks.

"His name was Blount. I'm not sure of his first name," said Jackson, from across the park where he kneels in a flower bed. "She said he told her he was bringing her back something from Vietnam, but he was killed before he could come home. She still wonders what it was he wanted her to have."

When Jackson returned to the United States from his second tour with the 9th Infantry Division engineers in Vietnam, his first stop was San Francisco. As he tried to hail a cab on that hot summer day more than 28 years ago, he gradually became aware of the stares and whispers of the people passing him on the street.

"I thought I must look pretty sharp in my uniform," Jackson laughed. "Over there (Vietnam) we didn't know about all the opposition going on over here. It didn't take me long to catch on. I couldn't even catch a cab that day."

At the age of 71, Jackson speaks without rancor as he recalls the abuse he and other Soldiers endured after the war.

"I remembered the way we celebrated the return of our boys after World War II, and I had already been in the Korean War. So I was surprised by all the name-calling and the negative attitudes we encountered when we got back (from Vietnam). There was no recognition," Jackson said.

In 1996 Jackson spearheaded the effort to establish the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park where the annual Memorial Day Celebration will take place May 27. Now the widowed retiree, whose only daughter and grandson live in Atlanta, spends his days overseeing the care of the park and several of his other pet projects.

"When I first retired, I noticed no one in the community put any emphasis on keeping litter off the streets. In the Army I never saw that kind of trash. So I started a clean-up drive. I called it 'Operation Esprit de Corps.' It was really just an awareness tool to get people to take pride in their community."

Jackson's clean-up campaign was so well received in his community that he initiated yet another anti-litter drive geared towards churches, schools and individuals. The MLK Pride Month's Clean Up Drive helped Jackson earn the President's Volunteer Action Award (Points of Light) and the Martin Luther King Unity Award.

In fact, Jackson has won numerous awards, 44 in all, for his efforts to beautify and unify the Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning communities.

Perhaps Jackson's greatest passion is the tutorial program he founded 16 years ago to help school age children with math and reading skills.

More than 15,950 students have benefited from the year-round program, and nearly 7,000 tutors.

"This country puts too much emphasis on building bigger and better jails. What we need to do is send more kids to college. Education is the key to bringing about change in this country," Jackson said. "This tutoring program brings people together from all walks of life to teach these kids. It's a big diverse group, and when you put them all together you get a real good unit."

Bridgett Siter

Lonnie Jackson plants flowers at the Veterans Memorial Park in Columbus as one of many of his 'pet' projects.

Jackson frequently uses words like 'diversity', 'unity' and 'communication' when he talks about the organizations to which he devotes his time.

"When I was sent to Korea I was green from Alabama. I had never crossed the Mississippi. What I saw there amazed me. I saw unity in their way of life. When a bunch of prisoners had to run from one place to another, they would link arms and run as one, pulling the injured along with them. That was unity at work. That's what we have to do with our brothers and sisters here in America. All nations and colors may be represented here, but it's still America. We've got to pull together."

Jackson has attempted to do just that — pull communities together — through the institution of his various projects and programs throughout the area.

Brad Castleberry, community relations officer, public affairs office, said Jackson's determination to "see it through" is the reason for his many successful ventures.

"I've known Lonnie for about 20 years. I knew him back in the 70s when he was wearing leisure suits," Castleberry laughed. "He's never changed. He's still relentless and dogged in his determination to see his causes through to the end. He's always been an overachiever."

Jackson paused momentarily when asked his own formula for success.

"You just have to work at anything you want to do. You have to put emphasis on what's

Panel polls Soldiers on total Army team

Task force assesses Army programs

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers voiced opinions about their units, their bosses and Army culture this week to the Human Relations Task Force.

The task force was conducting a study to address issues about Army culture, to assess the climate and see if the Human Relations Action Plan Initiatives are effective, said Master Sgt. John Johnson, Fort Benning project officer.

The Human Relations Action Plan Initiatives were developed and implemented as a result of highly publicized sexual misconduct cases in 1996 and the findings from a 1997 report by the Senior Review Panel that researched the Army's human relations environment and sexual harassment.

These initiatives are everything from surveys commanders take before they take command, to sexual harassment, equal opportunity and consideration of others training, said Col. Robert Woods, team leader of the Human Relations Task Force.

The study aims to find out if these programs have been effective or does the Army need to re-focus, said Johnson.

This is a follow up to the Senior Review Panel's research done in 1997, Woods said.

During its four days here, the task force met with various companies, training battalions and individual Soldiers for data collection.

"We conducted two types of research. One was focus groups, which are small groups of interviews with groups of people E-1 through E-4s, junior NCOs, senior NCOs, lieutenants, captains and field grade officers; and I'll be conducting interviews with the commanders and command sergeants major," Woods said. "We also conducted surveys with Soldiers.

The surveys collectively address human relations in the Army. They ask, on a variety of topics, everything from individual perceptions of what the Army is like; is it what they expected; what he thinks of the boss," he said.

Each survey is comprised of multiple choice questions and a section where the Soldier can write his opinion or comments.

"The good thing about that is the Soldiers are taking the time to do that. Within each group Soldiers are explaining their opinion on a variety of subjects. Some have to do with an individual case — some positive, some not so positive — but also about the future of the Army, what their perception is from their viewpoint, whatever level they're at," Woods said.

Soldiers also expressed opinions during focus groups.

"We have some very standard question that we ask, but we ask about human relations, how are things in units, what's working when and what doesn't, that type of thing ... we've gotten some good feedback from that, too," he said.

A senior NCO was partnered with a research psychologist from ARI during the focus groups to help facilitate and, at times, to clarify Army language while Soldiers answered the questions.

"As a part of the team I served not only as a note-taker, but also as a facilitator for the discussion group," said Master Sgt. Gloria Sims, senior NCO of the Human Relations Task Force. "Soldiers may make a statement and (the research psychologists) don't quite understand what they're saying because they are speaking in military terms. So, I'll ask them another question to get them to clarify their meaning."

"She also knows how to come through the ranks for the rest of the story, sometimes. And press the harder issues that they may not open up on their own. That's where the NCOs are really, really good," Woods said.

The task force was careful to minimize the skew, bias and margin of error during analysis by taking a large and diverse sample of the Army population.

The task force visited 15 installations including FORSCOM units and TRADOC units. Fort Benning was chosen because it has both a FORSCOM and TRADOC units.

Installations ranged from Fort Hood to Korea.

"When we get to an installation it's very important when we go back, we've spoken to the Army, so we've talked to combat arms, combat support and combat service support," he said.

The team was even well-balanced.

"I'm a combat arms officer myself and the NCOs we have are combat arms, combat support and combat service support, so we have a representation of everybody on the team also."

The data taken from the study will be analyzed over the summer and presented in an out-briefing to the Army chief of staff in the fall.

"The intent of that out-briefing, of course, will be to express findings on how well those Human Relations Action Plan programs are working in the Army," said Woods.

From the results of the study the Army will make decisions about policy, doctrine, programs and training as far as changes or modifications.

These findings also will hopefully reveal if there have been any changes in Soldier attitudes or experiences since 1997.

Hollywood producer seeks Army rags-to-riches stories

Man behind Rescue 911 wants to know how military changes lives

Amy Bailey
USAA project coordinator

Arnold Shapiro, the Oscar- and Emmy-winning producer of Scared Straight, Inside America's Military Academies and Rescue 911, will soon produce five videos under the working title How The Military Changed My Life.

Each video will focus on one of the military services: Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and will profile true stories of men and women whose lives have been changed for the better as a result of the opportunities afforded them by serving in that particular service. These profiles will be of young people currently in uniform, or successful civilians whose lives were changed and improved because of their military service.

This project will be funded by The USAA Educational Foundation, which will make the videos available to each military service for duplication and distribution to bases and recruiting officers throughout the country and the world. In addition, after videos are produced, Arnold Shapiro Productions plans to edit several of the stories into a television special, which will be shown on one or more cable networks.

Arnold Shapiro Productions is launching an extensive search for stories to include in this important project. The production staff is looking for those with inspiring stories about ways in which military service has enriched or positively changed their lives. They are particularly interested in young people (preferably under age 30) currently serving in the military; or those who credit the military for their post-service success in the civilian world. Anyone interested in participating should send a brief written account to: Arnold Shapiro Productions, 520 Broadway, Suite 220, Santa Monica, CA 90401 (please clearly mark envelope with which service served), or e-mail aspproductions@aol.com.

The USAA Educational Foundation is a tax-exempt nonprofit entity Providing consumer education to the general public. Educational topics focus on the areas of personal finance, safety and quality of life. Free informational resources are available in a library of over thirty booklets and a variety of course materials.

School: Will close its doors, reopen as new DoD facility

House bills have yet to meet for joint approval of the bill during a special conference.

Both versions call for basically the same renovations for the school, said Nicolas Britto, the school's public affairs officer. The dispute now lies in naming the school.

Because Congress chartered the school, the Army had to seek its approval for the school's reorganization.

Since the school began operation in Panama in 1946, the school has trained more than 60,000 Latin American Soldiers and police personnel.

Opponents of the school believe some of those graduates have committed civil rights atrocities and abuse.

Congress has vowed to answer the call of the protesters in the new bill by requiring the school to teach at least eight hours of instruction in human rights education in each course the school hosts.

Doug Graham, press secretary for Rep. Mac Collins, said the bill should be returned from the joint conference by August and will be returned to Congress for final approval later this fall.

"I think we could expect to see it signed by September," Graham said.

USARSA slates conference

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas will host the second annual Latin American — U.S. Senior NCOs Conference, June 25-30.

The SNCOC establishes a forum for Latin American NCOs to exchange ideas regarding roles, missions and standards of the NCO Corps, said Command Sgt. Maj. Manuel Valdes, USARSA's command sergeant major.

At a strategic level, Valdes said the SNCOC promotes several U.S. Southern Command program objectives.

He said the conference increases an understanding of U.S. military organization and force structure.

The conference will assist regional militaries to meet future mutual challenges by emphasizing the diverse missions of each country's NCO Corps.

Attending the conference will be the senior NCO of each Latin American country's army, navy and air force.

Key U.S. participants expected to attend includes the Sergeant Major of the Army and the Command Sergeants Major for Training and Doctrine Command, U.S. Southern Command, Combined Arms Center and the U.S. Army Infantry Center.

Protesters continue to plague USARSA

Police apprehend 11 demonstrators Wed. morning

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Toting signs reading, "new name — same shame," 11 School of the Americas protesters exited a van in front of the U.S. Army School of Americas Wednesday morning in hopes of showing their disdain for school and its planned reorganization.

However, a Department of Defense police officer at the school was quick to dash those hopes as he apprehended the protesters shortly after 10:30 a.m. as they exited their rental van in front of the Latin American training facility.

"We had information that told us they would be here this morning," Col. Don Salo, Fort Benning's provost marshal, said Wednesday afternoon. "We positioned a DoD police officer on the school grounds and had military police patrols loitering in a three-block radius of the school.

"We were ready for them," he said.

Apprehended were David Jessop, 19, Oberlin, Ohio; Brandon Stroman, 21, Glouvesterma, Mass.; Oren Casdi, 29, Kent, Ohio; Rebecca Johnson, 20, Cincinnatti, Ohio; Christiani Goodwin, 21, St. Louis, Miss.; Sarah Bania-Dobyns, 21, Denver, Colo.; Riva Pearson, 20, Shokan, N.Y.; Sarah Saunders, 19, Lake Orion, Mich.; Emilia Baldoni, 20, Perrysburg, Ohio; Kathleen Baldoni, 44, Perrysburg, Ohio; Martha Baldoni, 70, Perrysburg, Ohio.

All of the protesters were permanently barred from post and may face charges in federal court of disorderly conduct, criminal trespass and obstruction of a law enforcement officer, Salo said.

Wednesday's protest marks the first time members of the protest group, SOA Watch, have shown their disapproval for the Congressional-mandated overhaul of the school planned for later this year.

Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant of the school, said he didn't believe the proposed reorganization would halt the group's persistent protests.

"The problem is so loaded with emotion and misunderstanding, I don't think we will ever see (the protests) end," Weidner said.

The Wednesday protest tallies the third protest at the school this year.

MPs' 10-mile run supports Special Olympics

15th annual Torch Run builds teamwork

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

While most Soldiers were participating in their regular PT activities Tuesday, Soldiers from the Military Police Activity embarked on a journey.

Their journey began at the Information Center on Fort Benning Road when they took up the torch during the 15th annual Law Enforcement Torch Run in support of the Georgia Special Olympics.

Before they began the run, Lt. Col. Don Salo, provost marshal, asked if anyone had run the Riverwalk, which was where the run took place. Most hands went up. Several hands dropped though when he asked how many had run more than six miles, and nearly all the hands went down after he asked who had ever run 10 miles.

"It is a unit cohesion run," he said moments before they took off. "The idea is not to see how fast we can make it, but just to make it together. It also is a confidence builder."

As a member of the Criminal Investigation Command handed off the torch to Sgt. Laura Cashion, a U.S. Army Infantry Center MP, the formation began the 10-mile run.

The runners planned two stops to drink a quick cup of water and then continue on their way.

Two stops and two hours later, the formation arrived at the Public Safety Building in Columbus via the Riverwalk.

With several hand-offs along the way, Spc. Shamus McKnight, with 3rd Brigade's Military Police Platoon, brought the torch to the building where the MPs finished their torch-bearing obligation.

In a brief ceremony, the MPs were thanked for their contribution.

"The Army is the driving force for many good things, which happen in the community," Muscogee County Sheriff Ralph Johnson said.

Also thanking the MPs for their contribution was the Columbus Police Department.

"We really appreciate the help of the MPA," Wesley Mott, assistant chief of police said. "There is no greater deed than to get on one knee and help someone out.

"The Soldiers are continuing the tradition of helping out at the Special Olympic games, and for many of the participants, that day will be the greatest of their lives because many of them won't live (long). They won't have the chance to grow up and be a Soldier or policeman."

Salo said he was happy to participate in the run.

"I was honored to pass the torch along," he said.

"(By participating), the Soldiers feel they were part of the festivities. There is pride and honor (in helping out). For the younger Soldiers, this shows them what the Army is all about —selfless service."

Other Soldiers really enjoyed the run and the participation as well.

"I really liked the run," 1st Lt. Kate Bielak, a USAIC MP said. "The other Soldiers helped raise money by donations and from T-shirts (for the games).

"It was a symbol of MPs doing something for the community and a good cause," she said. "The run was a great way to build esprit de corps and build motivation.

"The only time we were worried about anything on the run was when we crossed a wooden bridge and it started to bounce like a trampoline," she said jokingly.

Overall, Salo thought the run was a success.

"No one fell out and we finished within four minutes of the time we set. I was really pleased with the run. There is a lot of pride and honor in participating."

Competition bolsters teamwork for officer candidates

Military Appreciation Week activities build esprit de corps

Officer Candidate David Sheronas
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS)

When Officer Candidate Mathew Feehan crossed the finish line with a time of 15:19 to place first in the General's 5K Fun Run May 19, it was the third time he'd done so in less than two weeks.

Feehan, like many of his classmates in Officer Candidate School Class 4-00, gladly and proudly volunteered to represent his class, and A Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS) as a whole, in various athletic events throughout Military Appreciation Week.

Feehan first competed in and won the 3-mile run May 6, with a time of 16:13, at the Joint Military Athletic Competition, Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., when Army OCS competed against the Navy and Air Force Officer Candidate and Training Schools.

He also won the mile run at the Fit-To-Win Competition in Doughboy Stadium May 17 with a time of 4:45.

When asked why he was willing to compete, Feehan said, "Because it's a way I can contribute to our team — our class." Such sentiment has been echoed by all of Feehan's fellow competitors and classmates.

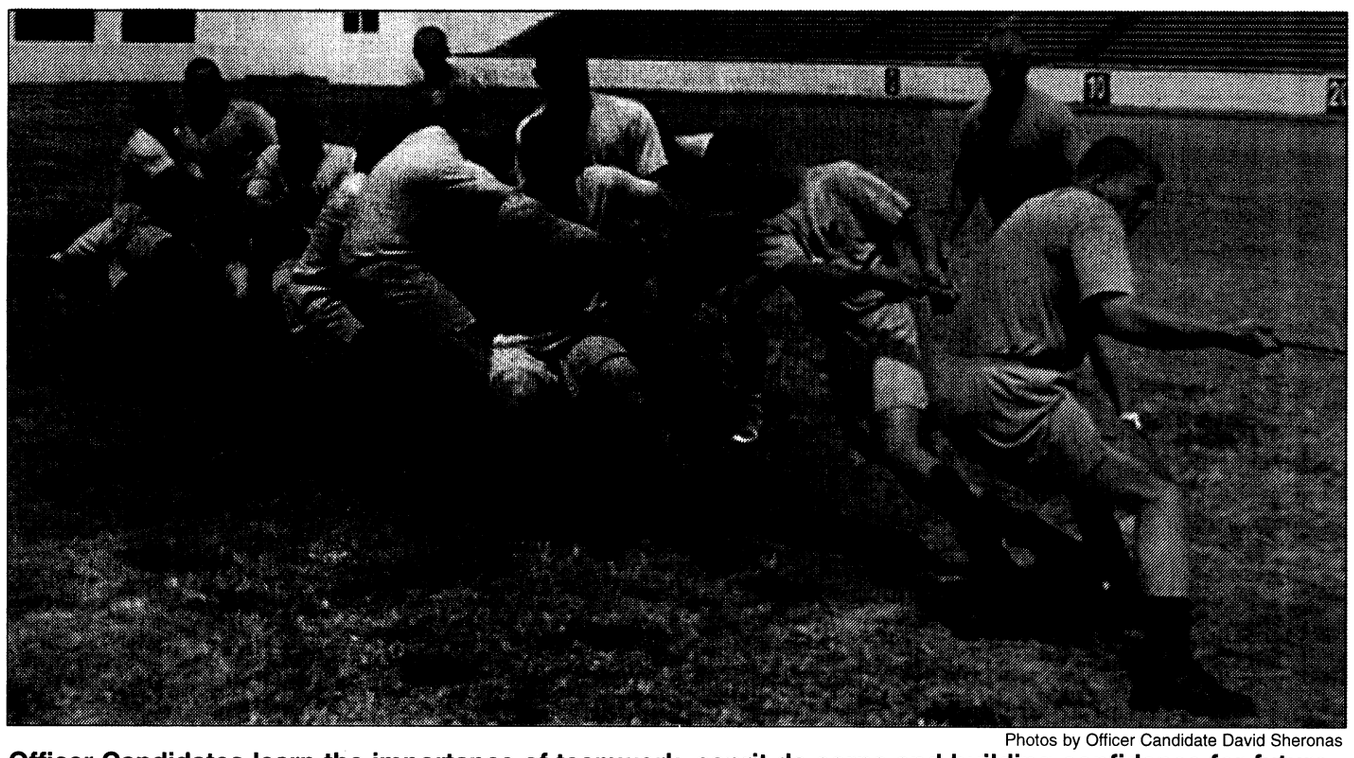
OC Robert Walker, who anchored an undersized but victorious tug-of-war team for Class 4-00 at the Fit-To-Win Competition, said it wasn't just the teamwork aspect that motivated him to compete, but the chance to perform under pressure.

Although it was only a tug-of-war contest, Walker said, "Winners and leaders produce under stress." Similarly, though team success is most important to her, OC Uche Heyward said she feels "very competitive and likes to be challenged physically and mentally."

In speaking with officer candidates, it quickly becomes apparent there are certain threads tying them all together: a desire to be the best at whatever they do and an understanding of the value of teamwork. Though the two can often be at odds, it is common principal at OCS to bring both the concepts together to produce the best results.

"I don't put much value on being first by myself, but I'm more interested in being part of a winning team and contributing to the overall goal," said OC Traci Belcher, who placed first in the mile with a time of 6:02. "Most leaders aren't satisfied or shouldn't be if they're not giving 100 percent — they need to set the example. How can you be satisfied if the finished product isn't what it could be?"

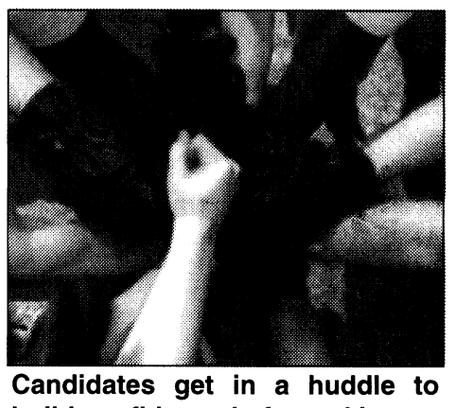
While events like these give candidates the chance to get out of the everyday training school environment, it also provides the opportunity to build esprit de corps through competition to help build further confidence in their leadership abilities.



"Most candidates know they must lead by example, and to do that, they must demonstrate the quality to get out in front," said Capt. Wesley Dumas, senior TAC officer, A Co., 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. (OCS). "These events give the candidates the opportunity to set the example."

"As future leaders, we at Army leadership schools stress fitness," said Capt. Ronnie Preston, company commander, A Co. "We emphasize and stress to the candidates the importance of leading from the front in all aspects of life. We can not ask Soldiers to be fit if we are not fit."

Leading from the front is reinforced daily at OCS. Candidates are placed in positions of leadership to bolster development at every level of soldiering.



Working together as a team is a major developing tool used at the school. Teamwork is utilized to achieve the mission everyday.

"In the case of competitive athletic events," said Feehan, "physical fitness and discipline ties in with the OCS mission of creating and fostering the ideas of leadership and teamwork."

Jane Wayne Day allows spouses to experience Ranger training

Capt. Breck Paris
4th Ranger Training Battalion

Wives from the 4th Ranger Training Battalion recently had the opportunity to demonstrate that being a Ranger wife is not for the weak or faint-hearted.

The 4th RTB hosted its annual Jane Wayne Day May 6. The purpose of the event was to bring families together and allow the wives to experience some of the activities their husbands do on a regular basis.

The day started out with registration and a welcome brief at Eubanks Field. The wives were then divided into squads led by Ranger instructors. The ladies were organized into round-robin stations where they learned about actions in an aircraft, parachute landing falls, how the main and reserve chutes deploy, and tackled the 34-foot tower.

The wives then moved to the Hurley Hill demonstration area.

After polishing off an MRE for lunch, they were afforded another set of demanding challenges.

The squads conducted camouflage techniques and rappelling from the 60-foot tower. The women practiced Zodiac boat operations in Victory Pond and also completed the log walk rope drop and suspension traverse.

The day ended with a cookout where all the families were able to swap their "war stories."

The wives said the day was a great opportunity to get a better understanding of their husbands' jobs.

"By participating in Jane Wayne Day, I was able to get a better understanding of what it takes to be an Airborne Ranger," said Mattie Paris. "I was nervous, but proud of overcoming my fears with the help of the cadre."

The day seemed to be a big success for all of the families and the wives of the 4th RTB proved to everyone that they have what it takes to meet the challenge of being Ranger wives.

Award: Instructor of the Cycle.
What do you find most challenging about being a Ranger instructor? It is an awesome responsibility and is extremely rewarding training Ranger students. I take this mission very seriously, knowing that I can directly influence the leadership of the Army — that a Ranger I trained could very well be my future NCO, platoon leader or even my company commander.

Award: Instructor of the Cycle.
What do you find most challenging about being a Ranger instructor? My greatest challenge as a Ranger instructor is instilling into the Ranger student the concept of train as you fight. My overall goal is to have the student treat everything from pre-combat inspections to final execution of the mission as real as possible in a training environment.
It's important for them to realize that in training you can make mistakes and learn from them because in combat mistakes cost lives and the littlest mistake such as falling asleep on security could get your fellow Soldiers killed.

Bradley battle leaves students feeling success

2nd Lt. Steele McGonegal
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Infantry Officer Basic Course defense field training exercise normally ends with several Opposing Force Bradley Fighting Vehicles sitting among the overrun remnants of an IOBC Company defensive position, said Capt James Hewitt, one of the Senior Platoon Trainers for IOBC Class 2-00.

Hewitt even drew a quick sketch of the action that drew uncomfortable laughter from the lieutenants of 3rd Platoon.

But the task remained for B Company to defend Bush Hill against the impending attack by the OPFOR.

The company had two and a half days to execute the plan created by 2nd Lt. Doug Taylor, student company commander for the mission.

His operations order included a counter-reconnaissance plan that compensated for the predictable limitations of platoon's defensive operations.

"The terrain around Bush Hill (is) not ideal (for defensive operations)," said Taylor. "It lends far too much maneuver area to vehicles, which is detrimental to dismounted (defense)," he said.

"It's your best guess what the enemy is going to do, so you place your defense where you think the enemy will maneuver," Taylor said.

Taylor and 4th Platoon leader 2nd Lt. David Wilmore had to move the platoon's position because the enemy had too much maneuver room.

The move strengthened the company position and proved instrumental in the battle that followed later in the week.

Wilmore said the new position allowed his platoon to set up a linear ambush along Box Springs Road.

"We had mission success as a result of the move," said Wilmore.

Fourth platoon's linear ambush meshed with 3rd Platoon's blocking position; effectively slowing the movement of the OPFOR unit.

2nd Lt. Brian Lassetter planned the emplacement of two major wire obstacles along Box Springs Road.

Lassetter said the idea was to slow the OPFOR at the first obstacle, allowing the anti-armor assets to attack one or two Bradley vehicles.

He then wanted to stop them at the second obstacle where his platoon would create a roadblock out of killed OPFOR IFVs.

According to Taylor, B Co. killed seven Bradley vehicles during the battle.

Three of those were destroyed in the 3rd Platoon kill zone.

This is not to say that the defensive operations were without problems, he said.

Perhaps the biggest dilemma was a lack of radio communications between platoons and command networks.

Additionally, at least a few breaches of operational security occurred when students communicated too loudly while in the defensive posture.

As Staff Sgt. Robert Chavira explained in the after action review, the platoon must have an internal communications plan.

Over the course of the three-day field problem, B Co. destroyed two HMMWVs, eight Bradley vehicles, and over 40 enemy personnel.

Overall, the company "was undoubtedly successful," Taylor said.

DoDEA names Stowers' principal best

Hughes earns top honors for caring about staff, students

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fearing the worst, teachers and faculty members of Stowers Elementary School gathered in the media center before the start of school May 19. They waited apprehensively to hear the news that had warranted a personal visit from the superintendent of Fort Benning schools.

A visit such as this, at the end of the school year, often signifies a change of staff, and the Stowers faculty dreaded to hear their principal would be transferring to another school. Instead they were relieved and ecstatic when Dr. Dell McMullen announced Glenn Hughes had been named the Department of Defense Education Activity Distinguished Principal of the Year.

Ray Tolleson, interim director for DoDEA schools, called Hughes May 18 to inform him he had been selected as the top principal by the National Association of Elementary School Principals.

Hughes

"I was speechless," Hughes said. "I'm rarely at a loss for words, but when I got the call I was speechless. I think all I could say was 'Thank you very much. I'm honored.'"

Nearly a week after receiving the news Hughes was still at a loss for words when asked about his award. He talked freely about the things that are near and dear to his heart — his students, his faculty, his family, his faith. But he was obviously reticent to speak about the qualities and qualifications that earned him this honor.

"What's really important is that this brings recognition to Stowers," Hughes insisted. "The teachers here work so hard and do such a terrific job. I'm excited and appreciative, and I'm going to enjoy representing Stowers and Fort Benning. But it makes me feel uncomfortable to talk about this (award) as a personal accomplishment. I look at it as 'our' accomplishment, because we all work well together."

Hughes apparently works well with whomever he associates. Fellow principals, school parents and community members submitted glowing letters of recommendation to the Distinguished Principal selection committee. But it was Hughes' history of successful leadership that cinched the title.

"In the six, years he has been principal, not one member of his staff has come to me with a concern," said McMullen. "Quite to the contrary, staff members tell me their principal listens to their concerns and constantly supports their efforts. He has an exceptional talent for bringing about harmony and productivity."

A Columbus native, Hughes has spent nearly all of his 21 years as an educator within the Fort Benning school system. He had worked at every school on post, either as a teacher or assistant principal, before becoming principal at Stowers in 1994.

At Stowers he has implemented various programs to facilitate parent involvement and a strong relationship between the school and the Fort Benning community. He has also instituted leadership programs, such as the Golden Stallions, that have been modeled by other DoDEA schools.

"If I have a platform it would be recognizing children for their good behavior," said Hughes, who continually promotes Stowers' philosophy that "Everyone is a Champion!"

"In this day and age when we have kids killing kids, I believe it's very important that we celebrate good citizenship, because in the long run that's more important than making the Honor Roll all the time. We need to not only recognize and reward good behavior, but we need to teach our students the skills they need to be good and productive citizens."

McMullen said Hughes exemplifies his philosophy for the staff and students at Stowers.

"Mr. Hughes actively models a strong sense of purpose to (his) students," McMullen said. "He embodies the best qualities of a professional educator: honesty, integrity, enthusiasm and commitment. Stowers' school mission 'lives' rather than just adorning a wall."

Though happy with the success of his career, Hughes said he still strives for improvement as a principal and an educator.

"I believe each person has a mission — a calling — on earth. God's plan for my life was to be an educator. I've always enjoyed teaching," he said. "As a teacher I felt that I knew what good teaching was about, and I really wanted to help other teachers discover that. That's my mission as a principal."

Hughes' desire to achieve his goal led him to apply for the opportunity to attend a Harvard Leadership Seminar in Boston in July. He was the only DDESS principal selected to attend the workshop, another honor he dismisses as "a great opportunity

Parents, districts oppose change

Schools could fall under local districts in future

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Military parents are strongly opposed to local school districts taking control of post schools.

The Secretary of Defense conducted a study in 1995-1996 to collect information concerning the possibility of transferring the Department of Defense Domestic Dependent Elementary and Secondary Schools to local education agencies. Results reveal both parents and local districts are not in favor of the change.

Various delays, including funding deficiencies and the complication of coordinating data between the Office of Management and Budget, Department of Education and the Department of Defense General Counsel hampered the expedient progress of the study. After surveying parents, local education agencies, school superintendents and commanders at 15 military installations, including Fort Benning, the study was completed in October 1997 and results were released in January of this year.

More than 12,000 parents, randomly selected, were questioned using a mailed survey. Results show that the parents of children enrolled in DDESS schools have a very high opinion about the quality of education their children are receiving, the safety and discipline provided by DDESS schools, and the school's encouragement of parental involvement.

The study summary also addressed parents' concerns about student safety, the inability of local schools to meet the special needs of military children, the possibility of busing and the loss of neighborhood schools, as well as the quality of education.

The survey concluded that "parents of DDESS students strongly and overwhelmingly oppose transferring DDESS schools to the local school districts." Moreover, 50 percent of DDESS parents gave their child's school an "A" and only 21 percent of public-school parents did the same.

"Relative to their opinions of U.S. public schools in general, DDESS parents had higher opinions of the quality of DDESS schools. DDESS parents rated these schools more highly than parents in other surveys rated their own child's public school. In addition, given parents' awareness of the potential for transfer of the DDESS schools ... these ratings may partially reflect parents' opposition to a transfer," according to the Survey of Parents' Opinions on DDESS Schools.

Opinions regarding the possibility of the transfer were also collected during on-site interviews at 15 military installations with DDESS schools and 24 education agencies adjacent to DDESS schools. Installation commanders

Advisers assist with Tricare claims

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The phone rings constantly in the Health Benefits Advisers office, Building 9204, next to Martin Army Community Hospital.

Military health care beneficiaries with questions about claims and bills from civilian providers call Nancy Lance and Patricia Wood for answers.

"We talk to at least 30 a day," Wood said.

Both have worked in the medical insurance field for about 15 years — the last four dealing with Tricare and issues related to the military's current managed health care system.

All military hospitals have government employees who serve as HBAs on staff to assist beneficiaries with claims problems and answer any questions about benefits.

"Any military installation or civilian provider will have a person there who can point you in the right direction," Lance said. "Go to the business office and seek out the person who handles claims."

Dealing with bills and trying to understand and follow prescribed procedures sometimes results in frustrated beneficiaries.

"Don't let the frustrations and bills pile up," Wood advised. "There are people out there who can help you, and there are plenty of places to go for information."

Knowledge is the key.

"You have to be knowledgeable of the system. Read the literature and updates that are published in retiree newsletters and other military publications," she said.

Tricare has web sites — www.tricare.osd.mil and www.tricare_help@amedd.army.mil — and a toll-free number, 1-800-444-5445.

Often individuals are surprised when bills arrive in the mail because they didn't understand their responsibilities as beneficiaries in the first place.

Wood recalled that she once helped a woman who brought a shoebox full of bills to her office, all unopened.

"We sat down and went through them and she really didn't owe all that much," Wood said.

Tricare Prime enrollees — including all active-duty personnel — must seek a referral and authorization for care they receive from anyone other than their primary care manager.

Authorization tends to be the number one issue

Time capsule to be opened after 25 years

Lee Strickland
Faith Middle School

Faith School alumni and teachers will return to unearth a time capsule they buried 25 years ago during a ceremony June 2 at 1 p.m.

Prior to the "Grand Reopening," a Reunion Mixer from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. will take place at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. Former students and staff will then go to Faith to unearth the capsule.

An assembly for current Faith students will be held at 2 p.m., and they will bury another capsule to be opened in the year 2025.

Alice Martin, chairperson for the event, said, "This event will finally answer the question so many current students have asked about the contents of the capsule. The school day will include cultural flashbacks for students to get a better perception of America in 1975."

Faith School Principal Tom Dignan said that actual school records of the capsule's contents were not kept, but several former students have contacted the school requesting information about attending the event.

Alumni from California, Indiana, South Carolina and Georgia have expressed great interest in attending the affair, said Martin.

One former student, now living in Indiana, plans to return to Faith for the event with his children, she added.

The event is open to all those who attended Faith Middle School, especially those who attended during the years of 1973-1977.

For more information, call Alice Martin at 545-5524 at Faith School or e-mail the school at amartin@benning.odedodea.edu.

Child care facilities plan improvements

Linda Kozaryn
Armed Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Already hailed as the best of its kind in the nation, DoD's child development program will be even better in the future, according to Linda Smith, head of DoD's Office of Family Policy.

The White House lauded the military program last year as a model for the nation. This spring, the National Women's Law Center cited the program for its quality, affordability and availability.

Center co-director Nancy Duff Campbell, released a report, "Be All That We Can Be: Lessons From the Military for Improving Our Nation's Child Care System," at a May 16 Pentagon press conference. The 40-page document, based on a six-month study, calls the program a model for national child care reform and highlights lessons that policymakers, advocates and others can use to improve civilian child care.

Smith, who's devoted a 22-year government career to child care and family issues, attributes DoD's success to the countless people throughout the services who have worked to improve the child care system over the past decade.

"There was a collective will in DoD to change child care," the family policy director said. "Along with the leadership's commitment, many people at all levels of DoD worked to fix the problems."

The Military Child Care Act of 1989 authorized funding for child development centers, set fees based on family income and government matches and set up subsidies for family child care. It tied caregivers' wages to training requirements and established an accreditation initiative, inspection regime and child abuse prevention and safety procedures.

Smith, who became head of DoD's child care and youth programs in 1989 and director of the Office of Family Policy in 1995, worked with Pentagon policymakers, commanders and child care providers to develop a comprehensive system that would meet families' needs. While the law primarily focused on child care centers, DoD went beyond the law in applying its requirements across the board.

"The law seeded the effort," Smith said. "The leadership supported it. We, in policy, determined the need to create the to work with seasoned principals from all over the nation."

With the school year coming to an end, and a challenging leadership course lined up for mid-summer, one might think Hughes would be looking forward to relaxing with his wife and 11-year-old daughter during the month of June.

"Actually my wife says she won't see me until August," laughed Hughes, who will spend the latter part of June teaching Bible classes and constructing a church for villagers in the Dominican Republic.

Hughes is accompanying a mission team from Lakewood Baptist Church where he and his wife teach Sunday School and direct a preschool Bible program.

"It's just something I feel very strongly that I need to do," he said. "I don't come from a wealthy family, but we always had food and clothing and a roof over our heads. I've been able to give back to my community in various ways over the years, but this is my opportunity to give back to God."

Hughes will be recognized for his accomplishments at the May 30 school board meeting and at the General's Command Retreat July 27.

He will also be honored at a presidential reception in Washington, D.C. next fall.

Study: Proves schools success

and DDESS personnel reiterated the concerns of parents, typically opposing the transfer and citing similar doubts about the outcome of such a transfer. The survey said commanders generally feared the loss of DDESS schools would be viewed as a degradation of current quality-of-life programs at their installation.

In order to facilitate the transfer of DDESS schools to civilian control, the federal government would have to pay local school districts $83 million to offset tax revenues lost to the local community. Another $118 million would be required to prepare facilities for transfer.

The study concluded that present funding levels do not provide sufficient reimbursement to offset the cost of transferring DDESS schools to local districts, and state and local education officials "do not actively seek a transfer of DDESS schools."

With neither parents, DDESS personnel or local school districts adamantly supportive of the transfer, Congress is content to put the issue to rest for the time being. According to the May 22 issue of Army Times, based on the findings of the report, assistant secretary of defense Alphonso Maldon Jr. stated that transferring schools to local communities "is not feasible at this time." However, Fort Benning Schools superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen said she feels strongly that this is an issue that will be addressed again in the future.

"I certainly believe that the closer scrutiny the DoD budget comes under, the closer scrutiny we (DDESS schools) will also get," McMullen said during the April 24 school board meeting. "This subject has been addressed in the past and I'm sure we can expect it to arise every four or five years. It's just incredibly reassuring to know that parents still feel our schools are the best at meeting their needs."

with beneficiaries, Lance said.

"It may be because they didn't seek it in the first place, or they called and it didn't get processed correctly and things fell through the cracks."

If correct authorization is not given, a non-active duty beneficiary will have to pay at the Point-Of-Service level — which can include a $300 deductible and 50 percent of the allowable charge, she said.

"We don't have a lot of repeat offenders on that," Lance said.

Appeals may be filed, but in the meantime bills may start to pile up. Lance advises beneficiaries not to risk ruining their credit rating by not paying anything on the bills and having them turned over to a collection agency.

"Check with the provider and see if they will accept a small retainer while you are appealing the claim," she said.

For Tricare Extra and Standard beneficiaries, non-availability statements are required for inpatient care and fall under the umbrella of the HBAs.

You must obtain a statement to receive inpatient care from a civilian provider if you live within the 40-mile catchment area of Martin Army, you require non-emergency inpatient hospitalization for more than 24 hours and you do not have other primary health insurance.

If you don't get the non-availability statement prior to admission, Tricare may not share the costs.

It is the responsibility of the beneficiary to initiate the non-availability process with the HBA. They will need patient and clinical information from the civilian provider. If the needed care isn't available at Martin Army, the HBA issues the NAS and then notifies the provider.

The beneficiary can call the HBA and check on the status of the non-availability statement.

Lance and Wood give briefings all over post to various organizations explaining how the Tricare system works. Any unit can schedule a briefing by calling the Marketing Services Division at 544-4950.

For questions about claims, call Lance at 544-1347 and Wood at 544-3461.

Care: Delivers quality for kids whole system. And everybody in the services worked to find the money and fight for the changes."

Today, the military child development program links child care centers, family child care homes, after school programs and resource and referral services.

What was once an underfunded, loosely organized effort is now a top military priority.

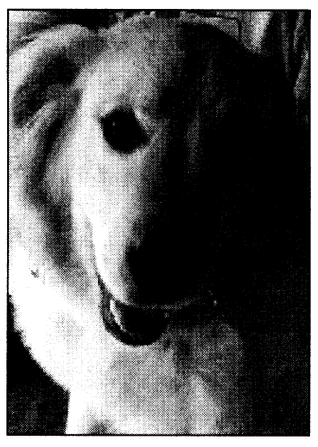
Military and congressional leaders acknowledge the link between child care and operational readiness.

About half of today's service members have one or more children below school age, Smith said. The military community includes about 500,000 children under age 5, 440,000 ages 6 to 11, and nearly 295,000 ages 12 to 18.

Despite its success, however, Smith stressed, it's not time for DoD to rest on its laurels. "To move the program forward, we need to keep re-examining the program. We do have things left to do."

For example, she noted, about one-third of military children are cared for not in businesses, but in private homes.

"We can do a lot more to support family child care providers," she said. "We still have some work to do to reassure parents that family child care homes offer the same quality and are as safe as child development centers."

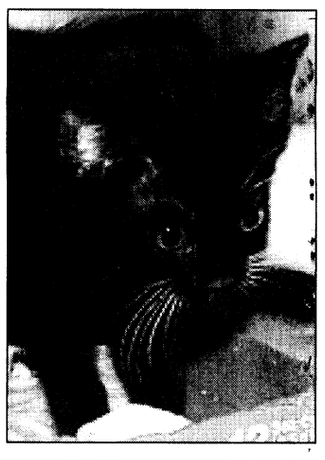


DoD currently meets 58 percent of military families' need for child care, Smith said.

The goal is to meet 80 percent of the need by 2005.

"The military has successfully focused on quality and affordability, but we now need to focus on availability.

To meet its goals, Smith said, DoD needs to work with the civilian sector to improve child care.



"One of the biggest obstacles to us making these moves off base is the inconsistent quality of civilian child care," she said. "The law center report highlights the need for civilian child care reform."

Pets of the Week

A 8-month-old male golden retriever and a 6-week-old female kitten are just a few of the animals available for adoption. Many more are in need of a good home.

For more information about these or any other pets ready to be adopted, call the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic at 545-4826.

Power outage notice

Flint EMCS will conduct a series of scheduled power outages today in the area served by the Baltzell Power Substation. This area runs east to west from the golf course to Edwards Street, and north to south from Mountain Division Road to Dixie Road.

The purpose of the outages is to map the extent of the underground feeds out of the substation. Currently, the precise coverage of each feed is not known. The determination of the exact coverage area for each circuit will help reduce the length of unscheduled outages in the future.

A 30-minute outage is scheduled for each of the five underground circuits as follows:

- From 7 to 7:30 a.m. — Baltzell and Rainbow avenues.
- From 7:30 to 8 a.m. — museum area.
- From 8 to 8:30 a.m. — golf course and Iron Triangle.
- From 8:30 to 9 a.m. — Wold, Ingersoll and Vibbert streets, Miler and Austin loops, Officers Club and Quarters 1.
- From 9 to 9:30 a.m. — Lumpkin and Blessing roads and Zukerman and Perkins streets and the area between Edwards and Ingersoll. For more information, call Benny Hines at 545-4310.

Memorial Day schedule

Family Housing Branch: Offices will be closed Monday. For more information, call the Family Housing Office at 545-2988.

Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center: All sections will be closed throughout Monday. The Center will reopen at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Yard Waste collection: There will be no pick-up in family housing on Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pick-up will be June 5. For more information, call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4232.

Garbage and Recycle collection: No pick-ups Monday; areas normally scheduled for pick-up on Monday will be picked up on Tuesday instead.

Garbage and recycle collection in family housing for Tuesday through June 2, will occur as normally scheduled.

Students go back in time

Pioneer skills highlight annual Colonial Days

Wilson Elementary School

The second annual Colonial Day was held at Wilson School April 13.

Fourth-graders, dressed in colonial costumes, enjoyed a day filled with fun and learning. Students participated in a variety of activities throughout the day including quilting, pottery making, and butter churning.

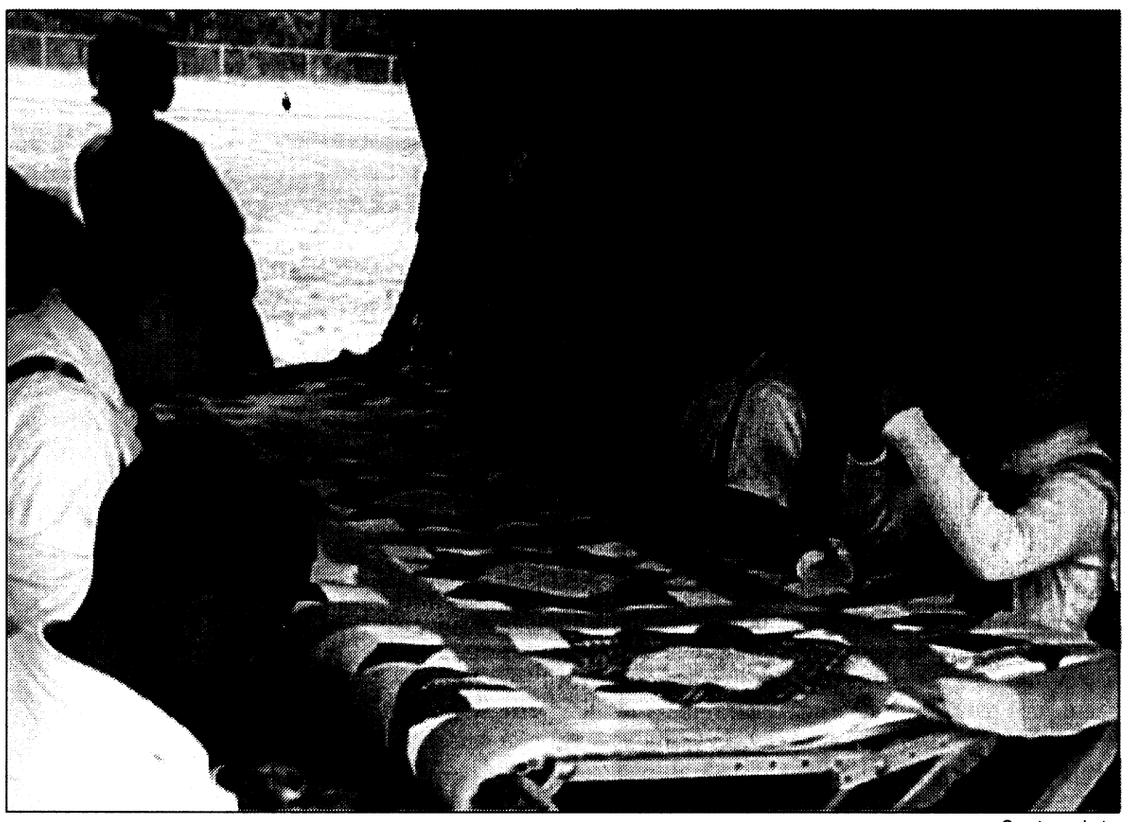
Students learned how colonial children made dolls from cornhusks and enjoyed games such as a watermelon roll, hoop race, and jump rope rhymes.

Students especially enjoyed fourth-grade teacher Julie Miller's One Room Colonial School complete with dunce cap and stool. Students were amazed to learn that children of all ages learned in the same class, and promotion as well as demotion could occur several times in one school term.

Retired Master Sgt. Leonard Bast provided a Revolutionary War living history demonstration for the children.

Bast showed the students how a typical colonial Soldier would have to live.

He explained how the Soldier would have to carry everything he needed with him — from his plate and fork and corn meal to his candles, bedroll, and firestarter. Children marveled as Bast demonstrated how to start a fire using flint and steel.



The highlight of his demonstration was the firing of a blank cartridge with his "Brown Bess" muzzle-loader.

Fourth-grade students tried their stitches on a colonial quilt with the help of parent Elizabeth Salvi and her quilting club. This is the second year that Salvi has participated.

Boys as well as girls enjoyed the quilting and gained a new appreciation for the time and effort involved in the craft.

Created as a culminating activity for a social studies unit on Colonial America, the day has become a tradition at Wilson, and something that children eagerly anticipate all year.

"Any time students can become actively involved in their learning, the more likely they are to remember and apply the subject being taught. Colonial Day brings to life the social studies curriculum that our students have been studying," fourth-grade teacher Kirven Boyce said.

Student council members look on as a Carpenter's Way Ranch resident introduces them to his pet rabbit, Elvis.

Students visit volunteer project at Carpenter's Way Ranch

Wilson Elementary School

Students from Wilson School had a unique opportunity to see the the fruits of their volunteer actions recently at the Carpenter's Way Ranch in Harris County, Ga.

As a member of the Kids Care Network, a national organization that promotes philanthropic deeds among young people, students at Wilson worked on projects that aided others in the community, the state, and the world.

Proceeds from the school store, which is manned by student council members, were donated to the Carpenter's Way Ranch.

Members of Wilson's Student Council, the Principal's Advisory Committee, and the Wilson MONARCHs, an environmental action group, visited the ranch May 16 to see how the monies generated by their volunteer fund-raising efforts have been used.

The Carpenter's Way Ranch currently serves eight boys ranging from fourth to ninth grade.

These boys live on the premises and are educated through "aquaculture," a project-based learning venture, which requires that the students use their academic skills to solve real problems, such as how to raise catfish of appropriate number and size for commercial uses.

Their activities have a very practical purpose — twice a month, the boys take the catfish they have raised to market and sell their fish. In addition to the traditional academic program, students at Carpenter's Way also travel to extend their learning.

They have developed a link with Auburn University and routinely go to the campus to work at the school's Aqua Center. They also travel to Atlanta, Tuskegee, and other areas for research purposes.

Plans are underway for the partnership between Wilson School and the Carpenter's Way Ranch to continue next fall.

Wilson students plan to take several trips to the ranch in the fall to gather and analyze water samples from the ponds and to work collaboratively on other research projects. In addition, the Student Council intends to continue its support of the ranch by contributing a portion of school store profits to the ranch. Fifth-grader Chris Ivey said, contributions to the ranch are beneficial on several levels.

"Knowing that I'm contributing to the Carpenter's Way makes me feel joyful inside that I've done something good," Ivey said. "I think they are using the money we've contributed for good things. Someday, they will probably remember this and do something good for other people."

Students become MONARCHs

School's environmental action plan helps campus, community

Wilson Elementary School

The Monarch butterfly is unique among North American butterflies in performing an annual two-way migration in vast numbers from one area of the continent to the other.

No other North American butterfly, and probably no other insect among the millions of species on Earth, performs a similar migration.

At Wilson School, students have the opportunity to become MONARCHs.

The acronym, which stands for Making Our Neighborhood A Really Cool Home, is an outgrowth of the school's environmental school-community action plan.

This environmental undertaking, appropriately named The Butterfly Project, is now in its third year at Wilson.

This is the first year the students have had the opportunity to earn MONARCH status, and much like the monarch butterfly, Wilson's MONARCHs have the opportunity to travel great distances and impact many.

To become a MONARCH, students must accumulate at least 20 points in a given month.

Points can be earned in three ways.

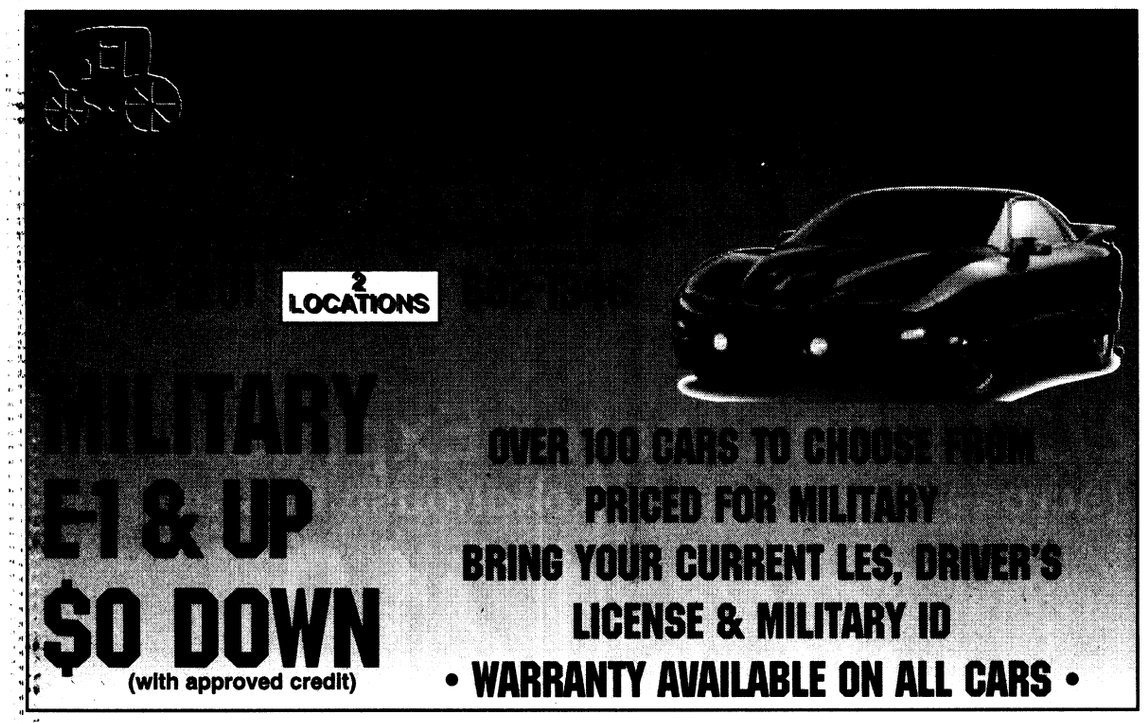
Students can perform community service, such as working in the common areas of their neighborhood, planting a garden, or helping to promote better recycling habits.

School service can encompass a variety of things as well.

Students can work around the school campus, help with the landscaping project, monitor classroom use of resources, or help to beautify the interior as well as the exterior of the building.

The third way that students are able to earn points is by performing random acts of kindness.

"We are looking at our total environment," said Margaret Koger, project sponsor.



"We want to foster in our students the belief that it is up to them to create the kind of world in which they will soon be caretakers. With the mobility of our population, students have the potential to have far reaching influence."

The program has been successful so far. In the first MONARCH ceremony May 5, six distinguished students were inducted.

With school superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen as the keynote speaker, students watched as their peers were recognized for their outstanding achievements.

Honored during the ceremony were Tamara Becker, Brittany Critelli, Kylie Frederick, Joshua Olive, Rhiannon Pegan, and Tanesha Santiago.

The next induction ceremony will be held in June.

ask the judge

Carolyn Moller
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: When I was younger, I was very careless with my credit history. I didn't care if the creditors were paid on time because I thought "What's the big deal, they got their money."

Now I want to purchase a home, but I can't qualify for a loan based on my credit history. I've seen advertisements for quick credit fixes, do they work?

A: No. According to the Federal Trade Commission, www.ftc.gov, there is nothing a credit repair company can do to fix your credit rating that you cannot do yourself.

The only way to fix bad credit is time together with regular payments. What harms a credit rating the most is the length of time bad information stays on your record.

Credit bureaus can list negative information up to seven years; however, there are some exceptions to this rule.

Bankruptcies may be listed for 10 years, lawsuits or judgments may be listed for seven years or until the statute of limitations runs out, whichever is longer, and criminal convictions may be listed indefinitely.

All of these factors are considered when a creditor is determining whether to extend credit.

Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, the creditor must provide you written notice that your application for credit was denied. Further, it must tell you the name and address of the credit bureau that supplied information used to make the determination that resulted in the denial of credit.

You have 60 days from the date of notice to request a free copy of the credit report that was used in your case.

Once you receive the credit report it is important to review it carefully for inaccurate or incomplete information.

If the report does contain some negative information that you believe is incorrect, you must notify the credit bureau in writing.

The credit bureau is required under the FCRA to investigate your claims, unless they deem the dispute as frivolous.

Further, the credit bureau must forward all relevant information pertaining to your dispute to the information provider.

This is usually done within 30 days of your written request.

The information provider also has an obligation under the FCRA to investigate your dispute.

The information provider must provide the results of its investigation to the credit bureau, which then forwards this information on to you.

If your dispute is substantiated, the negative information must be removed from all credit reporting agencies.

On the other hand, if the matter is not resolved to your satisfaction, you have the right to place a summary (not more than 100 words) on your credit file.

This summary will be attached to each credit report that is requested.In order to further protect your rights, it is a good idea to write to the information provider that you dispute the information that was reported to the credit bureau.

If the information provider reports this information to a credit bureau, it must also submit a copy of your dispute.

If it is discovered that you are correct, then the information provider cannot use this information again.

A credit repair agency cannot do anymore than the items listed above.

Rather than spend the money for this service, it may be far wiser to use the money to pay your debts.

As always, the best way to avoid credit problems is to pay your bills regularly and on time.

If you need additional information on this topic, contact the Legal Assistance Office to make an appointment.

The telephone number is 545-3282 or 545-3281 or come by Building 5 on Friday mornings to make an appointment for the following week.

Memorial Day provides time for reflection

Chaplain (Capt.) Terry Romine
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery

reflections

Memorials are an important part of our lives. They are important to remind us of lessons learned, for honoring those who have gone before us and remembering what our current responsibilities are.

We often do special things for memorials. We put pictures on the wall, erect monuments and make special memorial contributions to various organizations for the purpose of remembering special people and events.

One of the things I enjoy is getting the box of photographs out and discussing them with my family. I like to explain the event or the special person pictured to my daughter.

Likewise, I enjoy the older box of photographs at my mother's home. She enjoys telling me about her granddad and other family members who are special to her.

Memorial Day is that special day once each year when the nation pauses to remember the special contributions of those who have given their lives defending the freedoms of this nation.

God told Joshua to take stones from the Jordan River and build a memorial pillar so that when the time comes and your children ask the meaning of the pillar of stones you will have the opportunity to explain the deliverance of God to them.

We should take the opportunity of Memorial Day for some great family time. A trip to a veterans memorial ceremony, monument or museum would be the opportunity to explain to our children what others have done before us, what great lessons we can learn from them and what our responsibilities are now in defending these same freedoms.

It just might make our children understand what being a Soldier is all about.

God is key to long lasting marriage

Chap. (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries Center

It has been my honor to write a weekly article for The Bayonet for the past two years. However this will be my last as I'm headed to Belgium on a new assignment. So, let me take this opportunity to express a few words on what I believe to be the most important aspect of great, lasting relationships.

Over the course of nearly 15 years of service as a chaplain, I have counseled with thousands of couples and it has been my observation that those who allow God to have an active role in their relationships do so much better. God never intended that we live our lives separate from him.

In Genesis, we are told that in the cool of the day, God would join Adam and Eve in the garden.

Rupel

However, this first couple decided that they wanted to do things their own way regardless of the consequences and humanity has gone downhill ever since.

It is God's desire that he have preeminence in each life, each marriage and each family. At best, when God is excluded, life is only a shadow of what it could be.

In his book, The Christian Family, Larry Christenson writes, "The secret of good family life is disarmingly simple: Cultivate the family's relationship with Jesus Christ. There is no phase of family life outside of this relationship. There is no problem a family might face which does not find its solution within the scope of this objective."

I come from a family of six children and I am the only one that is still married to his or her original spouse (for nearly 26 years I might add).

Yes, we've had our share of conflict but our faith in God has been and continues to be bigger and stronger than any problem we face. I can say without a doubt it is because Margaret and I committed ourselves to each other and to allowing God to be an equal partner in our marriage.

Finally, families who put their faith and trust in God will never be disappointed because our heavenly father will always, always, experience his love, dedication and care. It is living in the care and power of the one who has never lost a battle and never will.

God bless you and may the God of creation keep your hearts and minds in perfect peace.

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." — Hebrews 11:1

Post finishes Military Appreciation Week with run

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Fort Benning Soldiers help close out Military Appreciation Week by participating in the General's Fun Run May 19. The run was part of the five days of competition.

Friendly competition comes to halt after five days, 18 events

Pfc. Mark Watson

Soldiers across Fort Benning participated in 18 different events during the five days of Military Appreciation Week.

Soldiers, alongside retirees, family members and community members participated in track and field events, volleyball, bowling and softball tournaments, a golf tournament and a combat cross country run.

The games began at 8 a.m. May 15 at Doughboy Stadium with the track and field events.

While those events were taking place, Soldiers gathered at the O' Club for the sand volleyball preliminary matches.

Later in the day, softball preliminary matches were held at Engineer field and hoopsters gathered at the Briant Wells Field House for the first day of the three day long tournament.

Ending the first day of Military Appreciation Week was the Celebrity Softball Tournament which was a intense competition between colonels and sergeants major.

After scoring 11 runs in the second inning, the colonels continue to open their lead during the seven inning game until time expired leaving the colonels on top, 27-7.

Soldiers gathered at Carey Swimming Pool for a triathlon May 16. The softball matches continued while the sand volleyball tournament wrapped up with Shane Aki, Calvin Flinta, Shane Tulatona and Ieremia Masaga, all from E Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, bringing home the win.

The midway point of the week brought Soldiers out to participate in the soccer preliminary matches as well

Veteran strikes post bowling record

Passion fuels former crewman to comeback

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

In the dim light you can see him approaching his mark. He moves quietly, methodically, never taking his eyes off his target as he slowly raises his weapon. He strikes from a mere 60 feet away, knocking down all 10 with one shot.

He's good, very good. Some would say the best they've ever seen on Fort Benning.

He says he's better now than he was when he retired nine years ago as an indirect fire crewman at Kelley Hill.

Despite the hip replacement surgery in 1994, he's still not someone you want to face in a dark alley — a bowling alley that is.

Les Ferrell has justifiably earned a reputation on Fort Benning as a bowler extraordinaire. At the age of 47, he has been bowling for more than 35 years.

Now an ATM specialist for a local armored car service, Ferrell devotes about 25 hours per week to the sport.

Ferrell said his bowling skills were at their peak and he was "in the zone" April 30 when he bowled a three-series game with a combined score of 825 out of a possible 900 points, a Fort Benning record.

"I was ecstatic," Ferrell recalled. "It was the last night of the league and we already had first place locked in. I was just out to have some fun. But the lane conditions were great, I had a few lucky breaks and I was in the zone."

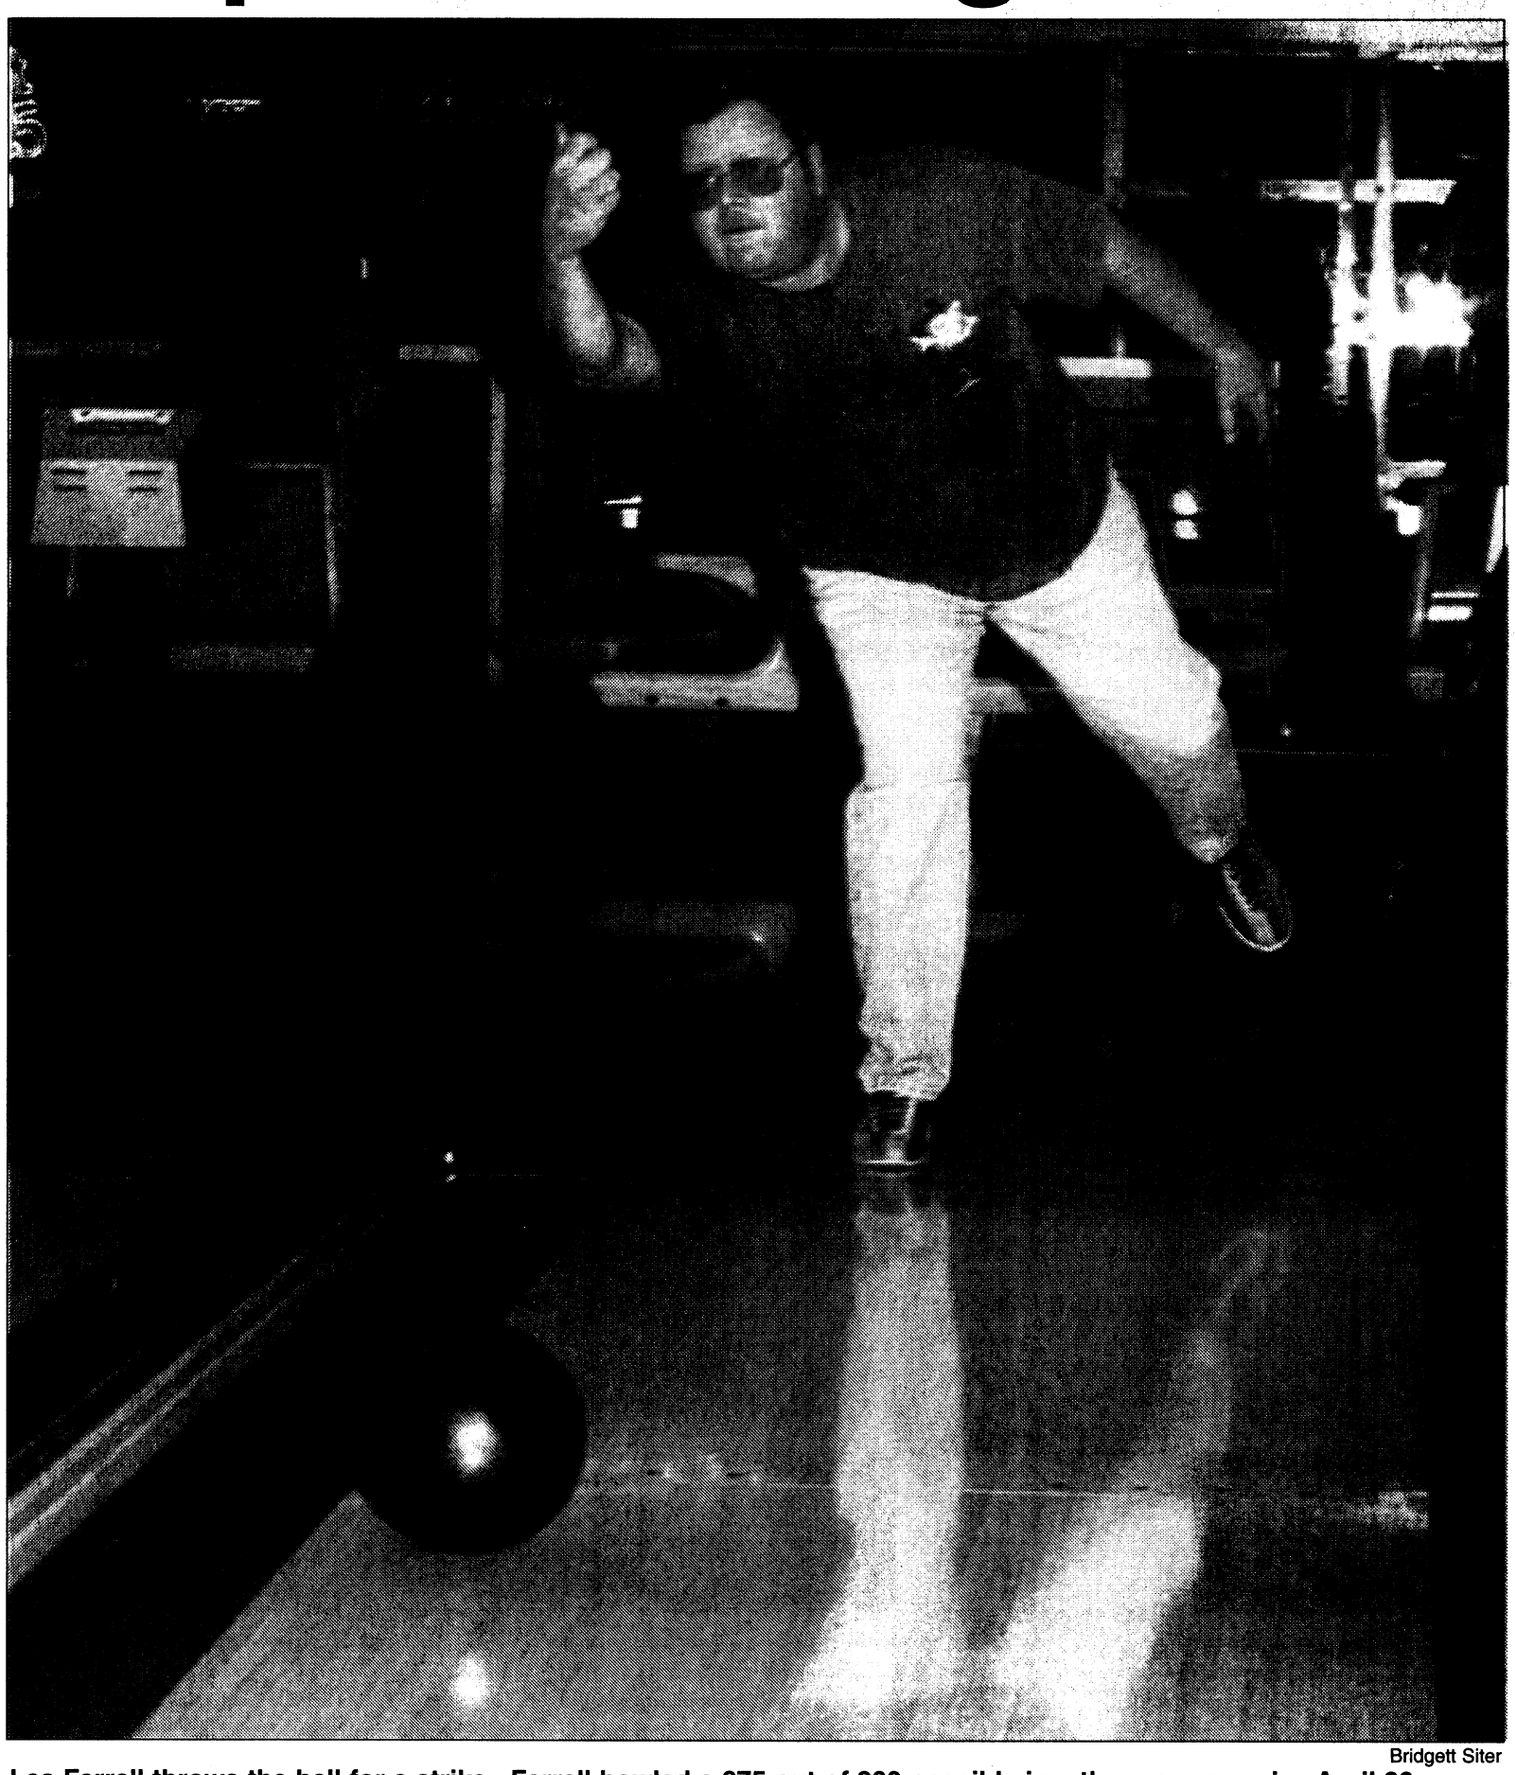
Fort Benning bowling program manager Jim Cantrell said Ferrell's feat was a first here.

"I've been here 36 years and I don't ever recall anything over 800," Cantrell said. "It's quite an accomplishment. You just don't usually see that kind of bowling."

Ferrell, who holds the highest game average on Fort Benning (221), also helped lead his league teams to two first-place finishes. But he's quick to point out that he hasn't always been an exceptional bowler.

Six years ago, Ferrell underwent a complete left hip replacement as a result of a degenerative bone condition.

He was unable to bowl for more than 15 months. When he did return to the lanes, Ferrell had to learn to adjust his bowling technique to compensate for his disability. The result, an unorthodox right-foot approach, earned him the nickname "wrong-foot" among his teammates.



He took a lot of good-natured teasing about his awkward bowling style, but his perseverance paid off. Ferrell had the last laugh May 20 when he and teammate Bob Kaiwi earned a first-place finish at Fort Benning's 117-team bowling tournament.

"It was tough having to start over and relearn my approach. I kept trying to bowl the right way, but I couldn't do it. I cracked my ankle with the ball quite a few times," he laughed. "My average was down in the 120s and 130s when I came back, but I just kept practicing. It took me two years to get it back."

Whatever "it" is, Ferrell's definitely got it. You certainly can't credit his equipment — he's bowled in the same "house" shoes for eight years, he uses only one bowling ball — a rather generic model his sister gave him for Christmas 10 years ago — and he carries a worn bowling bag with a Tasmanian devil on the side.

Ferrell, who is single, calls bowling his "one and only," a passion he discovered as a 12-year-old boy in New Orleans. He describes himself as a very casual guy, one who enjoys "blue jeans, T-shirts and beer."

"There are a lot of good bowlers on Fort Benning, a lot of them retirees like myself," he said. "We just like to get together, have a smoke, share a joke and bowl a few rounds. We don't take ourselves too seriously and we have a real good time."

Bridgett Siter

Les Ferrell throws the ball for a strike. Ferrell bowled a 875 out of 900 possible in a three-game series April 30.

Shooters blast competition away for international match positions

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters from around the military have won slots on the 2000 Shooting Team to compete at the Conseil International du Sport Militaire Shooting Championships in Ankara, Turkey, July 17 to 26.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit hosted the recent CISM Team Selection Matches, conducted May 12-14 for the Pistol Team and May 17-19 for the Rifle Team. Sixteen shooters will make up the CISM Shooting Team.

USAMU rifle shooters were the only competitors at the men's rifle trials thus taking every slot on the team. Glenn A. Dubis was the winner, followed by Troy A. Bassham in second, Thomas A. Tamas in third, Stephen C. Goff in fourth and Michael E. Anti taking the fifth slot.

Eric A. Uptagrafft and Robert E. Harbison are the alternates.

In the pistol trials, USAMU's Steven M. King took first place overall in the men's competition, followed by Carl W. Trompeter II of USAMU in second place, David Vondrak in third, USAMU's Daryl L. Szarenski in fourth and Marine Eric Poe in fifth.

Marine Dexter Conrad and USAMU's Grant E. Saylor were chosen as the alternates.

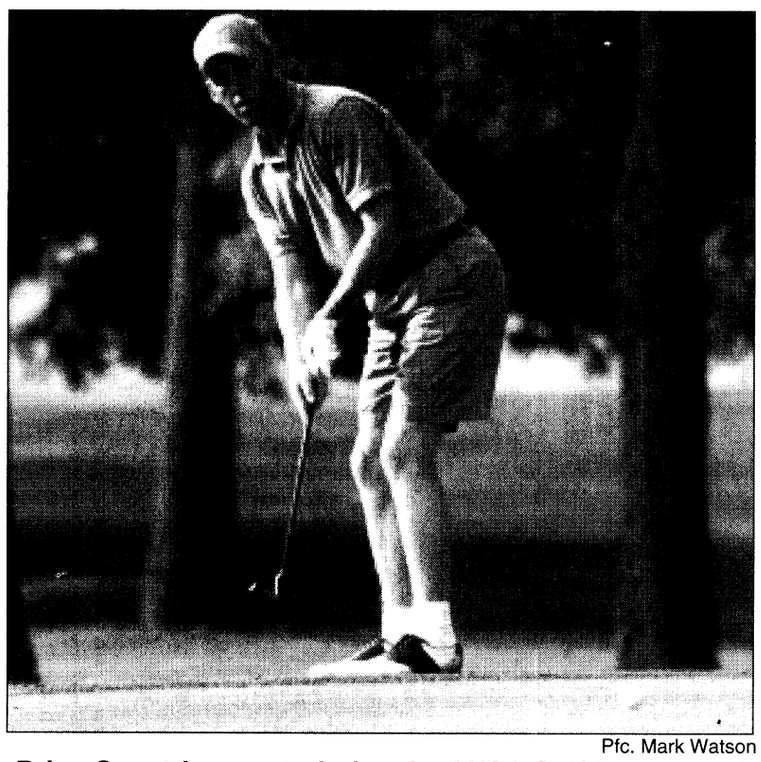
In the women's pistol competition, Roxanne Conrad was first, USAMU's Rhonda L. Bright was second and Army Reservist Sandra Utasy was third.

Secret of success discovered in game of golf

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Some say golf is life, and the rest is just details. One Fort Benning retiree says life is indeed a lot like a golf game, but it's in the details that one learns the secrets to a successful life. He and others like him have set out to prove their theory by teaching local youths the secrets of success — via golf.

Sam Link, manager of Seniors For Kids, Godwin Creek Golf Course, and a group of local retirees are using the game of golf to teach kids respect, responsibility, honesty, integrity and a myriad of other values that will contribute to the success their students seek in all areas of life.



Seniors for Kids is a non-profit organization founded 12 years ago by the late Bill Godwin, a Jordan High School football coach, affectionately known as "Coach" in the Columbus community. When Godwin died in 1998, his son John, a PGA Master Professional, took over operation of the organization. The younger Godwin said the golf course, once a thriving center for youth activities, fell into complete disarray during his father's illness.

"The program dwindled away to almost nothing. Before he died we had more than 200 kids involved in the program," said Godwin, the chairman of Seniors For Kids and the Director of Players for U.S. Kids Golf in Atlanta. "It looked more like a cow pasture than a golf course when I came on board. I knew we would have to renovate if we were going to stay viable."

Godwin applied for and received a grant for $100,000 from the U.S. Golf Association, who rated the Seniors For Kids one of the best youth golf programs in the country. The grant was conditional, requiring Godwin and his associates to "match" the grant by Golfers swung into action May 18, as the Follow Me Golf Course opened its greens to Soldiers participating in Military Appreciation Week's AUSA Golf Tournament.

After a short briefing, 41 four-person teams headed to out to play for their chance of one of the $19,000 in prizes.

Prizes went to the top seven military teams, as well as several drawings and side competitions. There were two drivers awarded to the players who hit the longest and most accurate drive.

A putter went to the person who hit the ball closest to the pin.

The top team of the military sub-chapter competition was from the Ranger Training Brigade whose team members were Harry Ikner, Jed Hawkland, Wayne Perkins and Mike Moore.

"The tournament was run real well," Ikner said. "They put it together good and there were people ensuring the game moved along well.

"Our team played great together," he said. "We cooperated good too. No one carried the game for the rest of us and we shot a 55 which was 17 below par."

Following RTB was the Criminal Investigation Detachment team with members of Juan Bustamante, Kenny Dell, Jared Garrity and Jim Adanski.

Winning the honor as top corporate team were Chad Glanton, Dusty Wilson, Skip Henderson and Robert Anderson.

Soldiers participate in Spring Golf Tournament

11th Infantry Regiment

The 11th Infantry Regiment sponsored the Spring Golf Tournament May 13 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The winning team was comprised of Jeff Keffe, Thurston Sheffield, John Giglio and Stephen Leebern.

The tournament was intended primarily to strengthen esprit de corps among the Soldiers of the 11th Inf. Regt., and to convey the regimental commander's appreciation to those Soldiers by saying, thanks for the job well done, said Maj. Doug Moriarity, the regiment's deputy commanding officer.

"Colonel (Michael) Ferriter wanted give our Soldiers a tournament like no other," Moriarity said.

There were 35 teams totaling 142 participants.

More than 67 percent of the participants were Soldiers of the 11th Inf. Regt., with other Army units and civilians entering 12 and 21 percent respectively.

All ranks from privates first class to colonels were represented alongside military spouses, retired military persons and civilians.

The youngest participant was 15-year-old Larry Lewis of Stewart County, Ga.

The tournament was organized as a four-man scramble. Teams competed for best team score, longest putt, longest drive and most accurate drive. Players also had several opportunities to win valuable prizes for a hole-in-one, including a Buick Sedan, a golf vacation, golf clubs, a vehicle maintenance package and a lifetime supply of golf balls.

Other prizes raffled to participants ranged from golf clubs to grills, gift certificates to cell phones and savings bonds to cigar gift boxes.

Prizes were donated by Columbus area businesses that support the troops.

Local businesses also provided all the snacks and beverages. A buffet style lunch was provided in conjunction with the awards ceremony.

The tournament was such a success that next year's tournament will have a tough act to follow.

Volunteers: Teach children life's values raising another $100,000. Godwin began soliciting tax-deductible donations from local businesses and requested assistance in renovating the course from various sources, including the Fort Benning community.

Two months ago, Link, a retired Airborne Ranger, noticed the poor condition of the golf course in its early stage of renovations while driving past the course.

"They looked like they could use the help, and I needed the work. But I told John I wasn't giving away my time for nothing. He has to pay me a dollar a year," Link laughed.

Link, Godwin and a handful of other volunteers now spend their days clearing and seeding the 20 acre, 9-hole course, hoping to have it completed before their July 4 grand opening. They actively seek help from anyone interested in helping restore the course and the Seniors For Kids program to its former glory.

"We're looking for anyone to help. No one will be turned away," Godwin said. "We're in the mad dash to the finish now and we need all the help we can get. We need people to rake and mow and plant grass.

"You don't have to know anything about golf. You just have to be willing to work and have an interest in helping kids," he said, once again turning the conversation back to his primary interest and the purpose behind all the hard work.

"Golf is not usually a kid-friendly activity. There just aren't enough places for kids to golf or learn to play golf in this area. And it can be costly," Godwin said. "When Dad's health was failing, we decided we couldn't abandon the program. It just wasn't the right thing to do. The youth struck a cord with me like they did with Dad, so I couldn't just let it go."

Godwin and Link are anxious to put the business of renovating behind them so they can get on with the business of mentoring kids.

"It's about so much more than teaching golf," Link said. "It's about teaching them to set goals and meet them. It's about teaching them honesty by allowing them to score themselves. It's about courtesy on and off the course. We'll talk about these and so much more when we work with these kids."

Since 1988, more than 2,000 children have been taught to play golf at the Seniors For Kids course.

Link said they have come from all walks of life — some from affluent families who help contribute to the ongoing success of the program by paying a nominal fee for lessons, and some from underprivileged homes where paying for lessons is not feasible.

"No one will be turned away. We've had kids from 7 to 17 come here for lessons. There's no criteria for joining the program. We welcome whole families who want to get involved," Link said. "Our goal is to reach out to the whole tri-community — Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City. It's for anyone and everyone."

Anyone interested in helping can visit the course at 403 42nd Street, Columbus, or call Seniors For Kids at 324-0583. They can also be reached at www.skyboom.com/seniorsforkids.

Week: Builds esprit de corps in ranks as the Fit to Win competition, a multiple event competition which attracted more than 75 participants.

In the 100 meter sprint competition, Kyen Hill won for the males and Eunice Brow for the females.

The 11th Infantry Regiment knocked out 605 push-ups for the win in the push-up competition.

The one-mile run was next up and Mathew Feehan and Traci Belcher took the top spots.

With the final event, the team tug-of-war, the 29th Inf. Regt. walked away with the win.

As May 18 rolled around, Soldiers gathered at Kelley Hill for the Combat Cross Country competition.

The AUSA golf tournament was also held which was won by the members of the Ranger Training Brigade team.

The soccer finals were held at French Field.

The last events of Military Appreciation Week were the General Fun Run and the awards ceremony for the Ms. AUSA competition which was won by Spc. Rebecca Quick who represented the Basic Combat Training Brigade and Spc. Makita West from the Infantry Training Brigade.

You don't pay tax on a Roth IRA

This is the big attraction of a Roth IRA—you don't pay tax when you make a qualified withdrawal, not even on the earnings and gains that build up.

You must follow certain rules, such as holding the Roth IRA for at least 5 years and reaching the age of 59½.

What's more, you can convert many traditional IRA accounts to a Roth IRA. And you can contribute to a Roth IRA after the age of 70½.

You will need to meet the guidelines, and make careful comparisons to determine which choice is best for you.

Other IRA options also offer tax advantages. For example, you can withdraw up to $10,000 from most IRA accounts without paying an early-withdrawal tax, if you use the funds to buy a first home or pay for higher education.

For all the facts on Roth and other IRA benefits, see your 1999 tax booklet. Or check the IRS Web site: www.irs.gov

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Loans: Lender loosens its requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered " yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you are pre-approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self-employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge - "how much you qualify for". Credit manager Kevin Thompson can be reached at (706) 322-8888 ext 144 or ext 145. Open 7 days a week.

Civilian benefits automate July 31

New system allows web, phone access

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Members of Fort Benning's civilian workforce will be able to change their heath insurance and other benefits over the phone or on the Web starting July 31 thanks to a new regionalization effort by the Department of Army.

The Army Benefits Center for Civilians (ABC-C), located at Fort Riley, Kan., is already servicing more than 87,000 civilian employees in the Southwest, North Central and Capital regions.

"The ABC-C is an effort to maximize the use of technology and promote efficiency through the consolidation of resources," said Kathy Cole, chief of the new center. "It uses state of the art technology similar to automated systems used by banks, colleges and health insurance carriers."

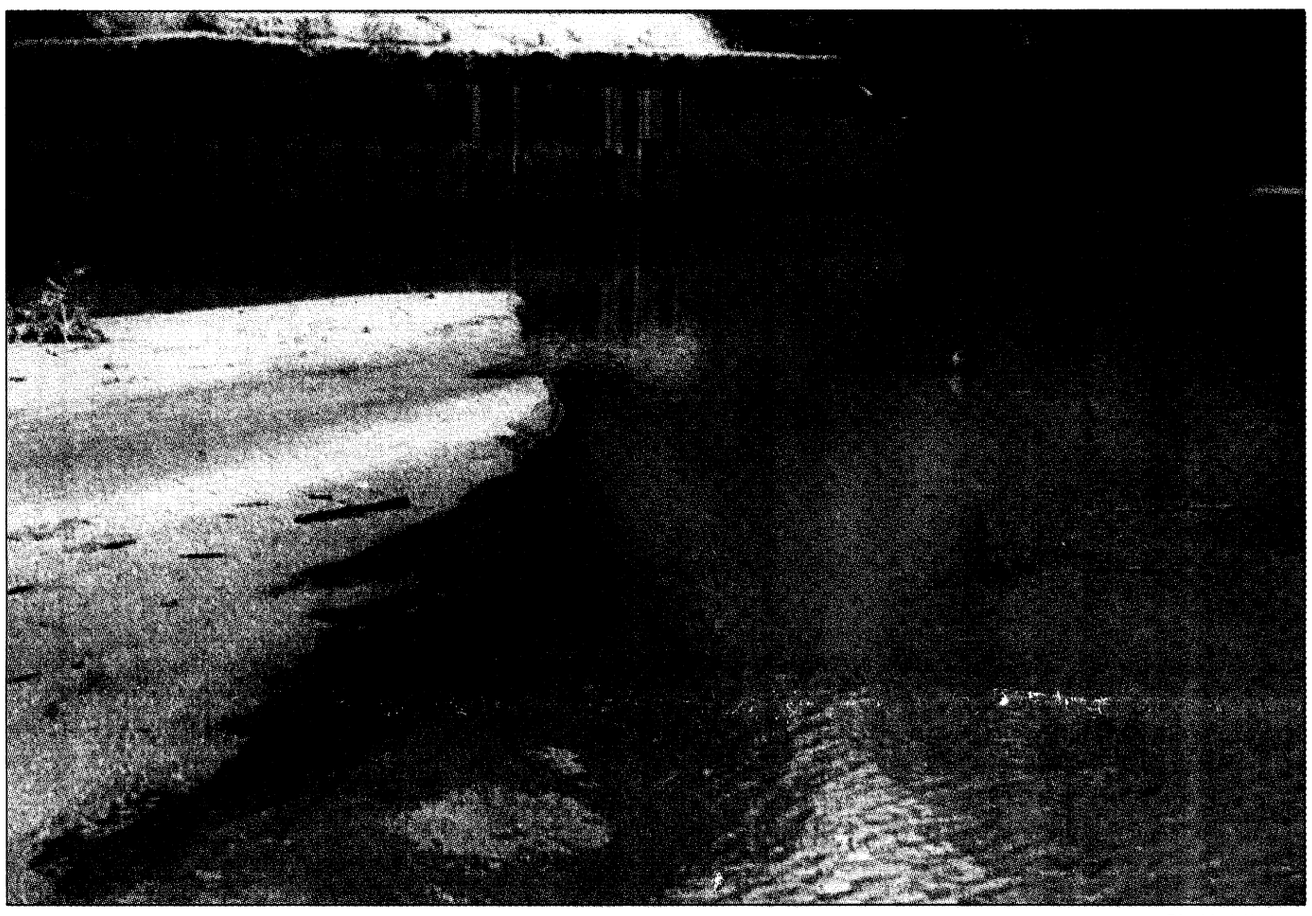
The new system, which will replace the face-to-face career counseling now offered to civilian employees, will offer personnel two ways to access personal and general information and process benefits transactions.

The Interactive Voice Response System (1-877-ARMY-CTR) allows personnel to access the system through a touch-tone telephone; and the Employee Benefit Information System, a customized web application (www.abc.army.mil), allows customers to access the system via the Internet.

Both are designed to guide employees through their benefit and entitlement needs. The system will provide personnel with the ability to file for retirement, update information about a thrift savings plan, health benefits, life insurance and survivor benefits, she said.

Employees may use either system from any location to access information and process transactions.

Barbara Filbert, a spokesperson for the new system, said redundant operations and duplicate data entry will decrease with the new system as personnel actions will be electronically routed and tracked between the desktops of managers.



People needing assistance will be able to transfer to one of 30 national career counselors via the telephone-based system.

"Transition from the current system to the two new applications will be excellent on the 31st," said Dan Clauson, director of the Southwest Personnel Operations Center and ABC-C. "We will turn on all of the access to the two systems for the entire Southeast region and load all the personnel files on that day."

Although Clauson called the transition excellent, he said there are challenges associated with 'Critical situation'

Pfc. Mark Watson

The water level at Fort Benning's water collection inlet reached what officials call a 'critical level' July 7 prompting post officials to release new water restrictions effective today.

New restrictions now in effect

Plummeting water triggers additional limits

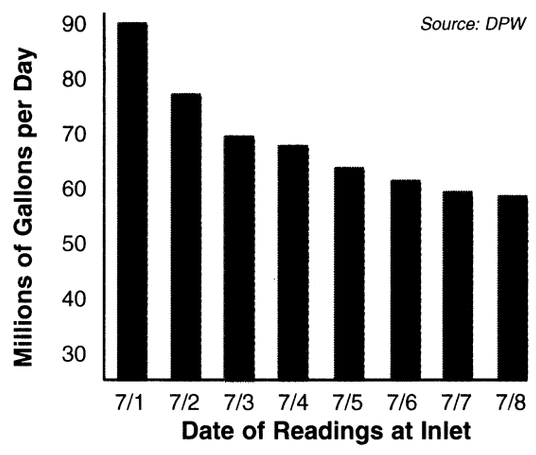
Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Despite water conservation efforts across the state of Georgia, water resources continue to decline.

That decline has forced Fort Benning officials to impose further water restrictions to ensure an adequate supply of water for post residents.

The new limits will replace the current three-day a week watering schedule for post residents and limit use of outside watering to only two days a week.

The new schedule aimed at lowering water usage an additional 10 percent will allow even-numbered addresses to water on Mondays and Fridays and odd-numbered addresses on Tuesdays and Saturdays.



"We are in a critical water situation," said Col. Keith A. Stelzer, director of Public Works. "The flow in the source of water to Fort Benning has continued to decline."

The flow rate dropped below 60 million gallons a day July 7, triggering the post to take a more restrictive response to ensure the quantity and quality of drinking

Dangerous drop

The Fort Benning water supply has seen a dramatic decrease since July 1, prompting post officials to implement the new limits.

Army granting more waivers

Recruiters say influx not about meeting mission

Spc. Mitch Frazier

From behind steel bars to inside steel tanks — it's a move that seems inconceivable, even impossible for a fighting force that is the smallest in history and claims to have the best of the best serving.

But that move is now reality as more recruits with felony crimes in their police history are entering the ranks of America's Army.

The number of recruits with felony arrests in their backgrounds has risen from 166 in 1999 to 357 so far this year, and with the recruiting year ending Sept. 30, officials said that number is likely to rise.

Although the number of waivers have more than doubled, recruiting officials deny the presence of more felons entering the ranks.

"The increased number represents a change in the way the Army defines a felon, not a change in policy," said Doug Smith, a recruiting command public affairs officer at Fort Knox, Ky.

Last year recruiting command redefined what the Army considers a felony offense, making any crime punishable by more than a year in prison a felony in the eyes of the Army, he said.

Some of those misdemeanors the Army now labels as felonies include domestic violence and school firearms violations, Smith said.

Martin Army feeling woes of deployments

Docs working longer hours to fill vacancies

A year ago there were 21 family practice staff physicians assigned to Martin Army Community Hospital.

This summer, that number has dropped to 10.

Relief will arrive by Labor Day as new doctors in-process later this summer, but even with the new replacements, the Department of Family Practice and Community Medicine will see two slots unfilled as 19 physicians work on staff, said Col. Steven E. Reissman, the department chief.

"For part of the summer, we are down theoretically to close to 50 to 55 percent of our staff," Reissman said.

Several factors have contributed to the shortage, including summer transitions, overseas deployments, additional taskings to regional National Guard sites and a redistribution of doctors across the service.

A new requirement to fully staff divisions and operational assignments first has had an impact on TRADOC medical facilities, Reissman said.

"A lot of doctors were diverted to brigade surgeon positions and flight surgeon slots," he said. "Most of the places where family physicians are assigned, especially the larger installations, all took what we hope are temporary cuts for this year," Reissman said.

"Where are the docs? The docs aren't going to the training posts. The docs are going to FORSCOM posts — the Fort Hoods of the world — where you have the troop populations, and they are going to Korea and Germany," said Capt. James Boxmeyer, the department's administrator.

"We aren't getting filled at the MEDDACs anymore at 100 percent, because per the Chief of Staff of the Army's guidance, the divisions are to be filled first."

Summer is the prime reassignment season in the Army, and many doctors, like other Soldiers, are either leaving or in the process of signing in to post. Other doctors remain assigned to Martin Army but are deployed for three to six months. One is in Germany to backfill for a physician serving in Bosnia and Kosovo. Another was sent to Korea.

This year Martin Army also received an additional staffing at the Alabama National Guard and Reserve Training Center at Fort McClellan, Ala. From May to September, a doctor is assigned to the troop medical clinic there. The duty used to fall to the active component at Fort McClellan, but that post closed last year.

commentary

Remember how you couldn't wait for summer vacation when you were a kid? No matter what the calendar said, summer didn't officially start until the bell rang on the last day of school.

That's when you ran home as fast as your legs could carry you, eager to begin what was surely going to be the most exciting summer vacation in the history of, well, summer vacations. And waiting at home was Mom, with a tall glass of lemonade and a willing ear. She listened to all your big plans — swimming, ball games, fishing trips, camping in the back yard and endless hours of bike riding. Ahhhh, summer.

But shortly after the Fourth of July it got too hot to play outside, and one day began to melt into the next in a series of sizzling disappointments. Boredom set in, and Mom had to dig deep in her bag of tricks to find something to relieve the monotony of summer.

Maybe she let you stay up an hour past your bedtime and supplied the glass jars for catching fireflies in the back yard. Perhaps she organized a neighborhood game of hide-and-seek or taught you how to turn an empty detergent bottle into a great squirt gun. At one time or another, she probably showed you how to twist the stem of a dandelion just so, snap fast, and send a yellow projectile spinning into the air.

And after she found something — anything — to keep you occupied for a little while, she headed back to the kitchen to finish mopping, canning, scrubbing, dusting, ironing and cooking before you grew tired of the temporary diversion and came crying boredom again.

Traditionally moms have always served as activity directors during summer vacation. That's really not changed all that much since we were kids, but now moms often have to work outside the home at a job that helps make ends meet but doesn't pay enough to hire a nanny, cook or housekeeper. Add a TDY dad to the formula, and things get a little crazy.

It's nearly impossible to entertain Junior, sometimes even impossible to know what he's up to while you're at work. And chances are he's not as easily entertained as you and I were. Dandelions and fireflies can't compare to the lure of Nintendo games and personal computers. And even when monotony sets in, there's no appeal in playing hide-and-seek when you've been playing search-and-destroy on a virtual reality screen. Sad but true, today's kids are growing up faster and more worldly then we did a generation ago.

We're not always there to guide their steps when they get bored with the endless games, videos and CDs we've provided them. That's why Fort Benning's juvenile court gets a little crowded during summer vacation. Kids go looking for the wrong kind of fun when no one's keeping tabs on their extracurricular activities.

But the modern family doesn't have to forfeit traditional values for the advantage of two incomes. There are ways to make sure Junior's not out destroying public property when you're out working to pay for his pleasures.

First of all, set some ground rules. This is no place for wimpy parenting. "You will not leave the yard, have your friends in the house or surf the Internet while I'm not home," is really not an unreasonable code of conduct for any child old enough to be left home alone. Don't be afraid to enforce the rules by establishing fair punishment for breaking them.

Know who your kids are socializing with and get acquainted with their parents. Feel uneasy about the kid with the tattoos and nose ring? That's intuition, and it's probably a good idea to send him home. Better safe than sorry.

And when you are not physically present, make sure you call frequently and check up on the kids. This is a good time to remember the days of your own youth, when you got too old for freeze tag and hopscotch and decided to test the limits of Mom and Dad's parental control. Love them, teach them, raise them well, but don't hand them the reins in the name of trust until they reach maturity — say sometime after they're 30.

Make sure your children know their role within the family. Give them responsibilities when you're not there. Keep a list posted on the fridge — "make your bed, run the vacuum, clean the kitchen, leave the television off and read a book." And stick to your guns, because they will challenge you.

Try to share at least one meal together every day. That's the perfect time to ask direct questions about their day. Plan some family activities together whenever possible, even if it's playing board games or walking the dog.

I'm no expert on the subject, but I've spoken with some who are, and they'll tell you exactly the same — don't relinquish control of your household when you walk out the door. You're the boss at home even when you're reporting to the boss at work. Make sure the kids know that before you leave each day. Then kiss them and tell them you love them.

Soldiers' good deed ignites hope

commentary

My glass is usually half empty. I wouldn't necessarily call myself a pessimist, but like a friend once said, "I'm not negative, I'm just realistic."

Unfortunately, reality isn't always as perfect as those "happily ever after" movies, which is why I usually look at things for what they're worth.

I can't remember the exact moment I decided to abandon my rose-colored glasses, but I'm guessing it was pretty early in life. Because my mother was a foster parent, I grew up surrounded by children whose families put the "dys" in dysfunctional. Most of them were forced to abandon fantasy for reality shortly after birth.

While these children taught me reality isn't always fair, and in fact can be mighty cruel, they also showed me being realistic doesn't mean giving up hope.

In a world where so many of our realities are weather-beaten by fear, anger and disappointment, hope is the distant lighthouse flagging us on and keeping us going.

When I joined the Army and left my safe haven in Minnesota, I immediately smacked head-on into the world's door.

It didn't take me long to figure out that assuming and expecting the worst is much easier than hoping for the best. After all when you hope, there is a chance of having those hopes crushed.

I walked around in my little bubble, like I'm sure many of us do, accepting the world and things as they were and never expecting too much out of people.

It was just recently I encountered a situation that opened my eyes and made me realize I needed to pop my little bubble. It actually ignited a hope in me about the goodness of humankind.

Driving home from a movie my friend and I saw an older lady and her mother stranded on the side of the road close to where I live. There was a man already assisting them, but I decided to stop and ask if they needed anything to drink.

Since my friend knows a little bit about cars, she immediately went to work alongside the gentleman trying to figure out the problem.

As I eased into conversation with the lady, I watched in amazement as car after car stopped and asked if we needed any help. Not only that, but people from the apartment complex filtered out with oil, water and tools — anything to help fix the mysterious ailment.

Soon we were surrounded by people of all ages ready to lend a helping hand. The neatest part about the whole situation was every single person who stopped was in the military.

Like a chorus, we all chimed in at once asking which unit everyone belonged to and where we were originally from. Soon the atmosphere became almost festive as we stood around joking and exchanging experiences.

It wasn't much later the team of "analysts" had identified the problem in the car, and the lady and her mother were on their way.

As everyone departed I couldn't control the smile I had inside.

I'll admit I have never felt prouder to be in the military or to be human. A chunk of my cynicism dissolved that day and I realized I had to keep what I learned from those foster children close to me.

While I will always remain realistic I will also keep my hope burning strong. Reality is big, but I am convinced hope is a million times bigger.

letter

I hope through this letter I can convey some degree of the gratitude I feel toward all the volunteers, colleagues and commanders of Fort Benning.

For the past two years I enjoyed your support, willingness to serve, eagerness to assist and above all, your friendship.

Your kindness was greatly appreciated, and you fully deserve all the credit for setting such an incredible standard of excellence.

Through all the deployments; the family readiness group and family support group briefings; OPERATION: FSG!; the Volunteer Management Council meetings; Army Family Action Plan symposium; town hall meetings; Volunteer Appreciation and Celebration Week activities; and the day-to-day "just showing up and helping out" — you reaffirmed my belief some of the finest Soldiers, families, employees and retirees associated with the Army are right here at Fort Benning.

It was an absolute honor to be included in your volunteer efforts and to witness your selfless service.

My last day on the job as the Installation Volunteer coordinator, Family Readiness Group liaison, AFAP coordinator and Mayors' advisor was Tuesday. I've accepted another position in Columbus.

I do wish each of you continued success and unconditional happiness. I know the incoming IVC will experience the same fine tradition!

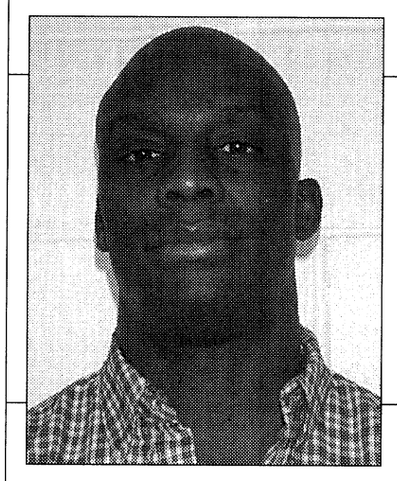
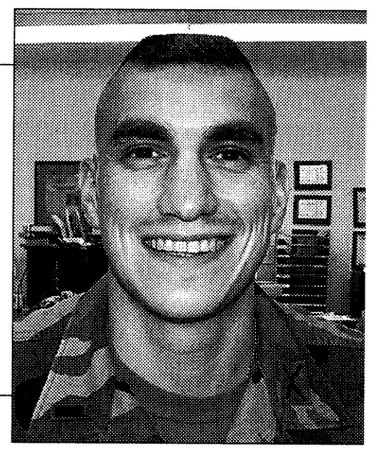
How can parents keep their children entertained during the summer?

Spc. William McGinnis, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "In my opinion all you need for kids is something steady. If you get them on a schedule then it shouldn't matter, because they will have something to look forward to everyday."



Claudia Rentz, family member — "We just spend time with our children. We go to movies, go bowling and even go to the laundromat together."



James Harris, Morale Welfare and Recreation — "Parents need to get involved in activities where they can spend time with them, because the people children want to see the most are their parents."

Retired Staff Sgt. Gloria Ashe, Columbus — "I keep my 2-year-old entertained by playing a lot of one-on-one games with him. We also take nature walks and watch GPTV together."

Staff Sgt. Marke Harris, A Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion — "It depends on how old the children are. Parents can spend time with them, send them to summer camp and get them involved in youth programs."

1st Lt. Jesse Losoya, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — We just do stuff together as a family. We go to the park. We went to Six Flags the other weekend, and we have the zoo coming up."

Families reap benefits of ACOE award money

$500,000 will fund more than 15 new local projects

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff

A list of approved projects for funding by last year's Army Communities of Excellence money is hot off the press and Soldiers and family members will find themselves reaping the benefits.

The $500,000 award will go toward more than 15 projects — all of which will directly impact the quality of life for Soldiers and their families, said Sara Hodges, chief of Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management.

Most of the projects involve upgrading and renovating Fort Benning facilities, such as neighborhood parks and pools and fitness centers, she said.

Award money will also be used to replace and buy equipment for a number of other post complexes.

Some examples of what the money will buy are playground equipment for Bouton Heights and McGraw Manor Outreach Centers, six new internet computer stations for the Sayers Library and physical fitness equipment for Kefurt, 5th and 6th Ranger Training Battalion gyms.

All of the ideas for how to use the money came directly from the people of Fort Benning, said Pat Porter, quality management analyst. More than 60 project proposals were considered and then narrowed down to the current list.

The decision concerning which projects to proceed with was made by the post's senior leaders during this year's Quality Executive Steering Team conference held June 27-28, Porter said.

"It was really a democratic process," she said. "Everyone (senior leaders) had the opportunity to vote."

Once current projects are completed it won't be long until DRM asks for more suggestions as how to spend the $200,000 purse from this year's ACOE win.

Hodges said everyone on Fort Benning should feel secure knowing the money is going back to help the community.

Demonstration steers direction of modernization

NATO gathers data on Soldier modernization

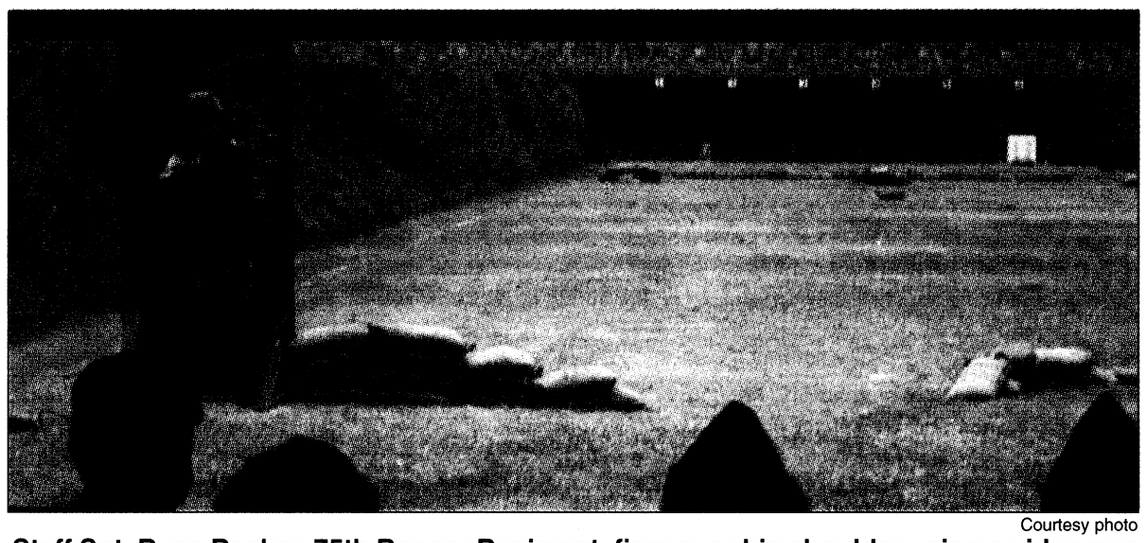
Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff

A group from Fort Benning's TRADOC System Manager Soldier and nine Rangers from the 75th Ranger Regiment returned from a trip to the Netherlands where they participated alongside 11 other NATO countries in the Soldier 2000 Demonstration, June 27-30.

The purpose of the demonstration was to show NATO Army Armaments Group what each country is doing in terms of Soldier modernization so they could decide if they want to move forward in improving Soldier interoperability, said Mike Tryon, deputy TSM Soldier.

During the demonstration, each of the countries set up their own static displays and conducted briefings on their modernization programs. The U.S. showed off its Land Warrior capabilities with the help of the Rangers by participating in live-fire and tactical demonstrations.

Tryon said the Soldier 2000 Demonstration was an overall success and a lot was learned about the direction of modernization.



"We were successful in that they (NAAG) were very impressed with what all the countries are doing, but also noting we still have more work to do in interoperability," Tryon said.

"For example, combat identification — being able to tell from one country to another the friendly guys on the battlefield versus who the enemy is and where the enemy is."

While most countries have come a long way in vehicle and aircraft identification, Soldier-level identification has been lacking, which is something TSM-Soldier is currently addressing, Tryon said.

"Take a look at Kosovo right now where some of the countries' forces are working together in terms of population control and patrolling and things of that nature," he said.

"In the event you have to work together, you want to be able to exchange information on where you are and where the enemy is. You need to work in conjunction with one another."

Courtesy photo

Staff Sgt. Ryan Recker, 75th Ranger Regiment, fires over his shoulder using a video gun sight that demonstrates the Army's indirect firing capabilities.

Learning about the need for interoperability wasn't the only thing attendees learned during the conference.

Each of the countries were able to see where the other stands and also exchange ideas on improved equipment.

"While the U.S. is still ahead in many areas, we are also learning from other countries," he said. "There are a lot of good ideas with body armor, cold weather gear, boots and so on."

Many of these ideas, he said, TSM-Soldier will look at to see how they can be incorporated into the U.S. system.

For Staff Sgt. Justin Johanson, one of the Rangers who participated in the demonstration, the experience was beneficial because it allowed him to see "the bigger picture."

"It was a really good experience being able to mingle with the other countries, seeing what they had and showing them what we have," Johanson said. "It was also good to see that we are definitely ahead in the race."

Even though the U.S. may be slightly ahead in the race, he said seeing other countries aren't far behind is a wake-up call.

"It keeps you on your toes, because you know there are other countries out there, whether they are NATO or not that have similar technology, and they are trying to get a step ahead," he said. "Seeing that pushes you forward so you don't get caught short."

New state program takes impaired drivers off roads

Barnes' zero tolerance plan mirrors Benning enforcement efforts

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Georgia Gov. Roy Barnes has no tolerance for drunken and drugged motorists, and his new initiative is aimed at taking them off the roads.

"Operation Zero Tolerance: You drink and drive and you lose" is a 15-month sobriety checkpoint and public information campaign that incorporates the efforts of more than 350 law enforcement agencies across the state to wage the war on impaired motorists and take them off Georgia roadways.

"Georgia has an enviable record of aggressive highway safety programs," Barnes said.

"We are proud of our ability to implement effective measures to combat DUI and related highway crimes.

"With the cooperation of local and state law enforcement agencies, concerned individuals and community organizations, we believe we can impact the numbers of deaths that occur on our roadways as a result of alcohol or drug-impaired driving."

Despite not being included in the campaign's $1 million federal funding, Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, law enforcement, said Barnes' plan equals the intense efforts Fort Benning takes daily on removing dangerous and impaired motorists from the roadways.

"We are continuously focusing on drunk drivers," Kelley said, "and have always maintained a zero tolerance policy on impaired drivers."

That hard stand on drunk drivers has taken 351 drunk or drugged motorists off Fort Benning roadways since October.

"By taking these dangerous motorists off the road, we are ensuring the safety of Soldiers, family members and civilians and are protecting the people who protect our world," he said.

While Kelley said some of those cited for driving under the influence may feel like they are capable of driving, he said even after one drink, reaction times begin to slow and a driver's ability to be able to recognize dangers are significantly decreased.

"Many times we pick someone for DUI and they don't realize how intoxicated they are," he said. "But in the state of Georgia the legal limit is .08, and if the intox 5000 shows a BAC reading of .08 or more, they are driving while intoxicated."

Kelley said those who indulge in an alcoholic beverage on occasion are not exempt from the intoxicating effect of a social drink.

"Everyone who drinks is susceptible," he said. "You don't have to go out and get staggering drunk to be legally intoxicated.

"My best advice is if you are going to drink at all — don't drive."

Kelley also said the best time to decide who is going to be the designated driver is before going out.

"If you have already been drinking, it is too late to decide who is going to drive," he said. "Drinking and driving is gambling with your life and your career.

"What happens if you lose?"

Window of opportunity for voting narrows

Request for ballots should be made 45 days in advance

Staff Sgt. Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

Election Day, is less than five months away.

That may seem like a long time, but voting officials recommend absentee voters request ballots 45 days in advance, even further in advance if they haven't yet registered to vote in their home district.

Hmmm ... that window of opportunity is starting to narrow.

Officials with the Federal Voting Assistance Program have put a tremendous amount of information about absentee voting on the Internet at www.fvap.ncr.gov. Some specific links military voters may find helpful are below.

How To Do It — Vote Absentee! http://www.fvap.ncr.gov/publications/howtoinfo.html

This page consists of an electronic version of the useful pamphlet "How To Do It — Vote Absentee." The pamphlet answers such questions as: Can I vote absentee? How do I apply for an absentee ballot? When is the best time to apply?

The pamphlet is also available through unit and installation voting assistance offices.

Online version of the Federal Post Card Application http://www.fvap.ncr.gov/othertools/onlinefpca.htm

This recent addition to the site was added to make voting easier for those without immediate access to a voting assistance office.

The only down side to using this version is individuals must pay their own postage. The printed, card-stock version can be sent postage-free.

Toll-free voting assistance numbers in foreign countries http://www.fvap.ncr.gov/tollfree2000.htm

This page includes toll-free phone numbers to the Federal Voting Assistance Program from nearly 60 different countries. DoD voters can also transfer to the DoD Voting Information Center, which, in turn, can transfer individuals to the office of their elected officials in the U.S. Congress, and their state governors and chief election officials.

DoD plans program to provide computers, college for troops

Caldera hopes new initiative will boost recruiting efforts

Kathy Hoffman
Special to Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera has announced a $600 million distance-learning initiative to help Soldiers complete college "anytime, anyplace, anywhere they can take their laptop."

Caldera called on colleges and universities, Internet companies, hardware and software companies and others to prepare and submit bids to the Army offering technology and extensive curriculum for Soldiers.

The resulting program — Army University Access Online — is expected to help Soldiers to obtain college degrees or technical certifications through Internet-based courses while they serve using laptop computers and vastly expanded learning opportunities.

"The Army's greatest competition in recruiting and retaining Soldiers is not the hot economy but the desire for and availability of higher education to today's young people," said Caldera.

Making the announcement at Washington's high-tech Ronald Reagan building, Caldera said the revolutionary distance-learning program will run initially at two or three selected installations to be announced later this summer.

Distance learning is an increasingly popular form of schooling that uses communications technologies to harness the vast array of educational resources available and stimulates the development of life-long learning skills.

The Army has budgeted nearly $50 million for AUAO and its website, eARMYU.com, in fiscal 2001, with another $550 million over the next five years. Caldera's goal is to see the program implemented Armywide.

The potential to reach students is overwhelming at 1 million-plus possible students. The program will be available to all active-duty, Reserve and National Guard members. Soldiers will be provided with such resources as tuition assistance, textbooks, laptops, printers, Internet access, academic counseling, help desk, course offering and a command climate that creates a true life-long learning community.

Expansion of the program could eventually make it available to Army families as well.

Caldera will host an Industry Day Aug. 2, also at the Reagan Building, to seek ways to achieve the plan. A preliminary Request for Proposal will be issued Aug. 11 to prospective industry and education providers. A final Request for Proposal will go out in September, and officials expect a contract to be awarded in December.

"We have specific requirements that need to be met," Caldera said. "For example, we need to wire barracks and other facilities where soldiers can get easy online access. We also need to provide the optimum technology package to students — equipment that is durable and portable, and ISP service that is reliable and accessible."

Potential vendors must provide a technology package that will include a laptop computer, printer, Internet Service Provider account, maintenance and warranty of equipment.

Korea ... forgotten war remembered

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

July 13

Gen. MacArthur reports 488 American casualties since U.S. forces joined the fighting in South Korea — 42 killed, 190 wounded, 256 missing.

In contrast to press reports of many American troops fleeing in panic from North Korean forces, he called the U.S. retreat "one of the most skillful and heroic holding and rear-guard actions in history."

He pointed out American Soldiers were often outnumbered 10-1, but they have inflicted far greater casualties upon the communists. MacArthur also says South Korea would have been overrun already without U.S. Soldiers.

He announces the Eight Army, commanded by Lt. Gen. Walter H. Walker, will command all U.S. ground forces in Korea from Taegu.

July 13-14

Secretary of Defense Louis A. Johnson ordered the services to stop releasing information on troop and unit movements.

However, the departure of the 1st Marine Division from San Diego on July 14 is widely reported.

On July 14 Johnson says he has ordered 500 military doctors to Japan and Korea at MacArthur's request.

July 14

In Los Angeles Brig. Gen. William L. Roberts, commander of the U.S. Military Mission to Korea before the invasion.

He says the reason the U.S. didn't give planes, tanks and heavy guns to South Korea was "to prevent the South Koreans from attacking."

North Korea invaded the Republic of Korea, because the South's economic growth "could no longer be tolerated," according to Arthur C. Hunce, U.S. economic cooperative chief to South Korea, speaking in Tokyo.

He says in 1949 South Korea had lowered inflation, upped industrial output by 50 percent and exported rice for the first time.

July 15

Russian Premier Josef Stalin offers to negotiate a peace in Korea in return for kicking Nationalist China out of the UN and replacing it with Communist China.

The U.S. government rejects the offer as simply a move to get another communist country membership in the UN.

July 15-19

The 34th and 19th Regiments of the 24th Infantry Division engage two North Korea divisions in the hills and rice paddies around Taejon. They would pull out the next day, but MacArthur says the two undermanned regiments have set back the invaders' timetable.

About 500 North Koreans seize the Samgyo bridgehead on the Kum River July 15. At other sites along the river, U.S. Soldiers kill hundreds of Reds trying to cross in banzai-like charges.

North Koreans in captured American fatigues, led by English speakers, cross the river and hit U.S. positions. GIs assume they're ROK Soldiers until the guerrillas pull guns and start shooting. More Reds wearing fatigues and South Korean civilian clothes cause havoc against other positions and supply roads for the next five days.

With heavy artillery support, North Koreans cross the Kum at Kongju and attack the middle of the U.S. line. As GIs fall back to eight miles from Taejon, they have to clear out nests of snipers who infiltrated their lines.

On July 17 American Soldiers take up defensive positions west of Taejon. The U.S. Army field headquarters evacuates the city and the airfield is closed. The South Korean government had left July 14 to reestablish the national capital at an unreported location. There is no fighting for the next two days as the Reds consolidate their forces.

They're forced to bring heavy equipment over the Kum at night to keep from being attacked by U.S. fighter planes.

July 16

South Korean troops repelled an attempted amphibious landing by North Korean forces near Yongdok. MacArthur calls it a "devastating" defeat and the "most conclusive setback" of the communists. The ROK Army also holds off several Red divisions around Chongu, Hamchang and Audong. Their efforts protect the 24th's withdrawal to Taejon.

Refugees from Seoul said the first thing North Koreans did when they entered the city June 28 was to destroy the jail. Many released prisoners join the Red army.

One freed prisoner, Kim Chung Che, former Seoul police official jailed for communist activities, is made chief of police of Seoul. The invaders also entered peoples' homes and took nearly all their food.

North Koreans massacre 30 U.S. soldiers and a Catholic chaplain north of the Kum River.

July 17

The Army drops the required score on entrance exams for volunteers from 90 to 70. Half of all New York volunteers scored below 90.

The Senate Banking Committee announces an investigation of "unreasonable" price hikes on food and other goods immediately after the Korean War began.

July 17-19

U.S. and Australian fighters and bombers hit North Korean forces all along the front.

American pilots down two Yak-9s July 17 and three more on July 19, making 31 air kills for the U.S. Air Force.

July 18

The U.S. 1st Cavalry Division lands at Pohung. Part of the division heads north to Yongdok, while the rest moves inland through guerrilla-infested mountains to Yongchon and Taegu.

MacArthur announces that the 25th Infantry Division has landed at Pusan.

The general also declares there will be no press censorship of news media reporting on the war in South Korea.

He says he will trust reporters not to reveal information that is damaging to the UN war effort overseas.

Several reporters already banned for writing about certain developments have their credentials restored.

At the same time, MacArthur directs the Japanese government to continue the ban on communist publications.

The U.S. Army reveals that Russian military advisors are serving with North Korean units fighting in South Korea.

July 19

President Truman requests $10 billion to beef up the American military for not only Korea, but to be able to confront communist challenges in other parts of the world.

The Army and Air Force agree to let prior service reserve officers volunteering for duty to keep the one-grade promotions given at the end of their World War II active service.

MacArthur receives another title to go along with CINCUN and U.S. commander in Korea. ROK President Syngman Rhee names him commander of all South Korean military forces.

At the end of the week, the North Korean advance is along a line across the peninsula beginning on the west coast just below Taejon and running just slightly northeast.

Army moves toward new civilian education

DoD plans to fill baby boomer gap before loss

Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

DoD has a potential civilian employee problem, and Jerome Smith is working on preventing it.

The problem is that thousands of highly skilled "baby boomers" will become eligible to retire shortly. Any mass exodus would leave a giant "skills gap" in DoD's civilian workforce. Smith said DoD should starting planning to fill the gap now, before it's too late.

When Smith was sworn in as DoD's first chancellor of civilian education and professional development on Oct. 2, 1998, Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen touted the appointment as a new era in DoD's education of its civilian workforce.

He tasked Smith with creating a world-class education and professional development system for civilian employees patterned after the best aspects of the military system and corporate America.

"We're looking at the lessons corporate America has learned and is willing to share with us about being world-class competitors," said Smith. "We'd like to take the best of what they've learned and incorporate it into our system."

He noted that a lot of the baby boomers' replacements are already in DoD's workforce and looking at a new era of tremendous technological and socioeconomic change. Smith said DoD must ensure its education and professional development programs prepare these new leaders and managers to do as well or better than their predecessors.

And then there's another high hurdle to cross — recruiting.

"We must compete with a robust economy for top-quality people we need to make the department operate effectively," said Smith, the principal advocate for the academic quality and cost-effectiveness of all DoD civilian education and professional development activities.

Successful world-class companies know their workforce is their most important asset and so they use education and professional development programs to attract and retain quality people, he noted.

"That's what we need to do if we're going to be competitive with those same corporations for the workforce," Smith emphasized. He said potential employees need to know what DoD can offer that would make defense the place they want to work.

Smith visited several firms in Northern California's Silicon Valley to see how those high-tech, high-performance companies treat their employees. "They offer wonderful education and professional development to their people for many reasons," he said. "Part of it is to help them get their product out. Part is to keep their people at the front of the technological revolution, and part of it is to meet their employees' personal needs for their own personal growth.

"That's our competition," he emphasized. "If we want to play in that market, we have to provide the same type of high-quality education and professional development for our workforce."

Smith said all DoD civilian employees should know they will receive the appropriate training required for advancement and to do their jobs as well as they can be done.

He said he's working toward an education and professional development system that will be personally rewarding for DoD employees.

"We're going to provide a system that makes us competitive," Smith said. "And, it will make our people enjoy their work and feel that they are current and are building their own educational portfolio as they progress through their defense career.

"We want people to feel good about working in DoD because it's an important enterprise and critical to our nation's survival."

> "If we want to play in the market, we have to provide the same type of high-quality education and professional development for our workforce."
> Jerome Smith
> DoD chancellor of civilian education and professional development

Ensuring that all of DoD's educational institutions gain accreditation is Smith's first goal. The second is to publish standards that DoD demands of institutions and identifies programs that are suitable for the workforce.

"Another goal would be to build a true community of DoD civilian educators," he said. "We need coherence because that's what characterizes the good parts of our volunteer education program, K through 12 program, and our military education and training program. We need the same thing on our civilian side."

Smith said his office has become a broker for accreditation of DoD institutions through the voluntary accreditation process in use in American higher education and recognized by the U.S. Department of Education.

Some DoD educational institutions, such as the Uniformed Services University of Health Sciences, lead the way with multiple accreditations. The university, in Bethesda, Md., has regional and specialized accreditations for its doctor, nurse and doctorate programs.

War colleges and military academies have been accredited for a long time, said Smith, a former leader of a couple of colleges at the National Defense University, a fully accredited institution authorized to give master's degrees.

"We have other institutions that have specialized accreditations, such as the Defense Information School at Fort Meade, Md., which trains military journalists, broadcasters and photojournalists," Smith said. "It has been accredited by the Council on Occupational Education, a specialized accreditor recognized by the Department of Education."

But, he pointed out, not all DoD institutions are accredited — yet. "We can do it," he said.

Since DoD is moving toward an information-based department from a production-based operation, Smith said DoD's workforce should be educated in the jobs workers will have in the new information age.

DoD also has a superb voluntary education program that allows service members and civilian workers to attend off-duty classes at civilian education institutions, according to Smith.

"What we really don't have is a similarly organized civilian education program," he noted. "That's what we're focusing on improving now."

Smith said since becoming chancellor, he has established a fully manned office and created a Web site.

He and his staff planned and hosted the first DoD conference on civilian education and professional development and scheduled the second for Aug. 8-9 at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences.

He has also organized the DoD Metrics of Excellence Task Force, which is laboring to produce standards for DoD educational institutions. The third steering committee meeting is scheduled for June 28 at Smith's office in Arlington, Va.

Smith wants his legacy to be an education and professional development system that results in a world-class civilian workforce.

He said the workforce should be comparable and suitable for the support of DoD's already world-class military.

System: Gives civilian employees automated career access making the change from a local-based personnel system to a national automated system.

"There are a lot of challenges associated with the automation," he said. "But the web application is great, and if employees get stuck in a situation they can always reach a career counselor via the telephone system."

The 30 career counselors at the Fort Riley center have access to the website and can walk employees through any troubles they may encounter, he said.

Locally, Fort Benning will also help alleviate the troubles that may arise during the transition with workshops designed to answer any questions people may have about the new automation.

All workshops will be held in Marshall Auditorium on the following dates and times:

- Tuesday, 3 p.m. to 4 p.m.
- Wednesday, 9 a.m. to 10 a.m.

Willie D. Varner, chief, Management Services Division, is spearheading the transition effort here and said the switch to automation could be initially cumbersome.

"The transition might be initially difficult for employees who are used to dealing with their career counselor face to face," he said. "But I think they will find the computer or the toll-free telephone system easy to use."

The program stems from a 1994 Department of Defense initiative that reckoned automation technology was a way to improve efficiencies while cutting the personnel workforce.

Since that decision by Army planners, 10 civilian personnel regions have been created across the Army, and the personnelist workforce has been reduced by 41 percent.

Varner said no personnel positions here are slated to be cut as a result of the automation introduction.

The new Army Benefits Center-Civilian will provide civilian government employees with a system accessible from the worldwide web and via a touchtone telephone. Employees will be able to access and update the following information:

- Retirement (Civil Service and federal employees retirement systems).
- Thrift Savings Plan
- Federal Employees' Health Benefits
- Federal Employee's Group Life Insurance
- Survivor Benefits (death and dismemberment)
- The web-based system can be accessed via Internet at www.abc.army.mil, and the phone-based system can be reached at (877) ARMY-CTR.

Waivers: Are in no way lowering standards, officials say granting now are for crimes considered misdemeanors at the local level by juveniles who have maintained a clean record since the incident," he said.

Since the move to make more crimes felonies in the eyes of the Army officials, the number of misdemeanor waivers processed has dropped nearly 1,000, a number Smith said is representative of the change in the definition of a felony.

"It's just because we are calling more things felonies now," he said.

Despite the granting of the additional felony waivers, Smith said the Army isn't compromising any standards.

"We aren't bringing rapists and murderers into the Army," he said. "The rise in felony waivers has nothing to do with recruiters making mission."

"Making mission" for recruiters on the streets of Columbus means selling the service to at least two civilians every month.

Despite the challenges in meeting high recruiting demands in a booming economy where the job market is nearly saturated, recruiting officials here said they do whatever it takes to keep civilians with a felony in their backgrounds from ever stepping into the ranks.

"Usually if they have one felony arrest on their record, that's not all," said a local recruiter. "If they show up with a felony on their record, we show them the door."

Smith said the Army will only grant a waiver for one felony per applicant and will not grant a waiver to anyone who has been involved in the sale or transfer of drugs.

"We are not compromising our standards or lowering the bar by any means," he said.

At the end of June, the Army was 30,000 recruits short of this year's recruiting goal of 80,000 new troops by October, a number Smith said is achievable.

Doctors: Could see additional help at Martin Army by fall supporting National Guard annual training at Camp Shelby, Miss., and backfilling for a physician at the Anniston Army Depot Clinic in Anniston, Ala.

In the meantime the doctors on staff are working long hours and foregoing any extended leave until reinforcements arrive.

"We are holding up well," Reissman said.

The shortage affects the Family Practice Clinic at Martin Army, Aviation Medicine and Winder Health Clinic.

Aviation Medicine is down from three to two doctors; Winder from five to four. A few doctors are pulling double duty during the summer. For example a physician on the teaching staff of the family practice residency program is also serving as the OIC at Aviation Medicine.

"Each clinic is trying to be incredibly flexible to meet the access demands, and they are doing a good job," Reissman said.

"We are bending over backwards to try to work patients in and make sure they are not inconvenienced."

Access standards are set for Tricare Prime enrollees under the Tricare Managed Contract. Standards fall under three categories: same-day appointments are to be seen within 24 hours, routine appointments within seven days and wellness appointments within 30 days.

Non-Prime enrollees are given appointments on a space-available basis.

Since the shortage began, "most non-Prime enrollees and a small percentage of Prime enrollees are being referred to the Health Care Finders at Martin Army Community Hospital to assist them in finding physicians in the civilian network or other military treatment facilities," said Carol Cain, chief of Beneficiary Services, Healthcare Management Division.

"If Prime enrollees require a wellness appointment and Martin Army is unable to schedule them within 30 days, the beneficiaries may enact their right under Health Affairs Policy 97-023 to waive their access standard, with the medical clearance from their primary physician or specialist, whichever is the case," Cain said.

While acute and routine appointments can not be delayed, patients wishing to schedule wellness exams — like physicals or annual pap smears — may consider waiting until September.

"If patients can be a little flexible and not make the wellness appointment until fall, that would help. Those are 30-minute slots, whereas other visits are scheduled for 15 minutes," Reissman said.

Those who can't wait, for whatever reason, will be given wellness appointments. However, they may have to see someone other than their assigned primary care manager.

Letters were mailed recently informing patients they were being reassigned to a new primary care physician, one replacing their current doctor.

"Patients know this is the time of year when moves happen," Cain said

"We work real hard with patients to try to accommodate them as best we can, so they don't see the major transition that is happening within this facility."

Limits: Make sure water supply stays water on post, Stelzer said.

Upatoi Creek has historically provided adequate water flow to serve the post, with a flow of nearly 319 million gallons of water a day. That number dropped to 56 million gallons a day July 7, nearly 30 million gallons a day less than the June figure, prompting the new measures, Stelzer said.

The drought has left the South reeling for rain since finishing last year with a 11.5 inch rainfall deficit. And, according to the National Weather Service, there is no relief in sight as forecasters call for continued below-normal rainfall.

The Georgia Department of Natural Resources mandated Georgia to begin conservation measures last month, but Stelzer said the present measures are in effect to ensure ample amounts of water are available in the future.

"It is not really a matter of how much we take in, it is about ensuring we have water in the future," he said.

Fort Benning's water treatment facility is the only large consumer of water located in the creek whose headwaters begin in Talbot County, said Joe Wilkins, an environmental specialist at DPW.

"Fort Benning residents have done an excellent job reducing consumption already," Stelzer said. "Since we implemented the original restrictions, post residents have reduced water usage over 2 million gallons a day.

"They really have done an excellent job, but we still need to reduce our consumption by at least an additional 1 million gallons per day," said Col. John Latimer, chief of staff.

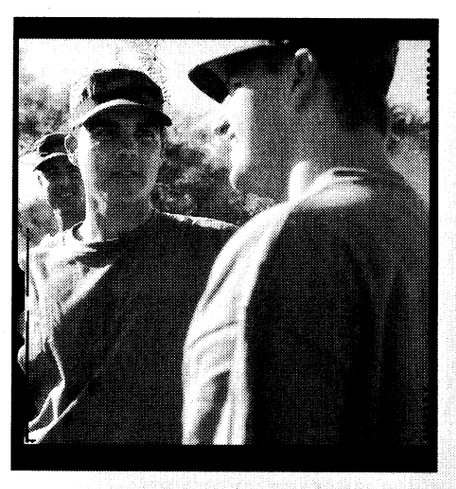
While Fort Benning will continue to monitor residents to ensure compliance with the new restrictions, Stelzer offered the following suggestion to keep water use to a minimum.

Keep toilet flushing to a minimum, he said. Toilet flushing uses as many as three gallons per flush.

"Across Fort Benning's 4,000 households and 6,221 barracks rooms, this can make a difference," Latimer said.

A CLOSER LOOK

Fort Benning's new water limits are now in effect. A recent drop at the water supply collection point has prompted post officials to issue the following restrictions.



- All outdoor watering is limited to 30 minutes or less.
- Outdoor watering will be limited to Mondays and Fridays for residents with an even-numbered address.
- Outdoor watering will be limited to Tuesdays and Saturdays for residents with an odd-numbered address.
- All watering will be done by hand.
- Sprinklers are prohibited in family housing areas.

Officials recommend the following water conservation tips to reduce the post's water intake an additional 10 percent:

- Keep toilet flushing to a minimum. In some cases flushing the toilet uses as much as three gallons of water.
- Refrain from watering lawns. The shallow rootbase of grass allows it to absorb enough moisture from sporadic rainshowers.
- Keep showers brief. An average shower uses 2.5 gallons per minute.
- Refrain from washing partial loads of laundry and dishes.
- Turn off the water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing hands.
- If washing dishes by hand, do not let the water run.
- Fill a plastic one-quart bottle with water and place it in the toilet tank. This can save five or more gallons per day per a family of four.
- Keep a jug of water in the refrigerator so the tap doesn't have to be run until the water cools.

REMEMBER: Fort Benning has issued new water restrictions. All outdoor watering will be limited to 30 minutes or less. Even-numbered addresses are now allowed to water on Mondays and Fridays only while odd-numbered addresses are restricted to Tuesdays and Saturdays. All watering must be done by hand.

Soldiers aim high during qualification

BRM phase marks high point of Soldier's training

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

This is the third story of a six part series, which takes an in-depth look at basic training.

Soldiers from D Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, faced what has been called one of the most mentally demanding parts of basic training Saturday — basic rifle marksmanship.

The one-day test is said to be more stressful on the Soldiers than any other part of basic, said 1st Sgt. James Luze, company first sergeant.

"The day of qualification is mentally the hardest for the Soldiers," Luze said. "They are just scared they won't qualify."

To cope with the stress, drill sergeants play a different role when it comes to qualification day.

Trainees will be pampered the night before qualification, Luze said. The drill sergeants make sure the Soldiers are prepared and tell them they need to be confident but not too cocky.

"The drill sergeants will also loosen up any nervousness by telling jokes and using other humor," Luze said.

The day before the actual qualification, the Soldiers have one last practice to work on their nerves and learn the course of fire.

"They build the range up to be some sort of monster," Luze said. "As long as they keep their focus, they will do well. We tell them just to do their best and to go for it."

Pvt. Alan Lawry shot the first expert qualification of the day.

"I did great," he said. "I got a 36 (the minimum for an expert score). I really wanted to get a 40, but I am really happy about the 36," he said.

After he fired his first magazine, Lawry said he was worried he wouldn't do as well as he hoped.

"I only hit 17 in the fox hole," he said. "The 100 meter target really got me, because I just wasn't taking my time and concentrating.

"I just talked to myself and started to breathe deep and hit 19 while in the prone unsupported position.

Pvt. Michael Stanley said he never fired a weapon before joining the Army but he did what he was told and shot better than he expected.

"Yesterday I barely passed, but today I felt good," Stanley said. "I did exactly what the drill sergeants told me to do and got expert. I am so proud."

Although two expert scores and many marksman and sharpshooter scores were taken, not all the Soldiers qualified on their first try.

Those Soldiers were sent to a drill sergeant who calmed their nerves to get them ready to qualify the next time.

"We tell them to relax and just to have a good time," said Staff Sgt. Stanley Mitchell, one of the D Co. drill sergeants. "The Soldiers who didn't make it the first time will be sent to retrain, tighten up their shot groups and work on their fundamentals, then will go again."

Even if the Soldiers don't qualify their second time out, none are written off as a failure.

"It is possible for the Soldiers to attempt to qualify two times today," Luze said. "If they still don't make it, we focus on them and work with them.

"They will get a chance to get back out and qualify prior to graduation," he said. "We don't write any of the Soldiers off."

13th CSB takes away more than dust from NTC

Soldiers learn readiness, limitations

1st Lt. Raquel Riley
13th Corps Support Battalion

The wind storms have quieted and the howls of the coyotes have faded since the Soldiers from the 13th Corps Support Battalion wiped their boots off from another rotation to the National Training Center.

Many stories have been written about the great work Soldiers did out at the National Training Center, but one question remains — did they learn anything?

Transporting millions of supplies over a distance equating to a little over one time around the earth the "Road Dawgs" had their fair share of lessons learned, said Capt. Lisa Saulsbery, commander of the 104th Transportation Company.

"The Soldiers learned their limitations," Saulsbery said. "We were running a 24-hour a day mission — some Soldiers would start a mission at 8 a.m. and not even return until maybe 3 a.m. the next morning. It was a challenge."

A cook from the 104th said he learned lessons on cooking in larger quantities.

Feeding more than 4,000 Soldiers was really good training, said Staff Sgt. Toby L. Floy, a section sergeant.

"In doing so, I had the chance to meet a lot of different Soldiers from different duty stations."

Other Soldiers learned a few skills outside of their daily jobs.

While the 598th Maintenance Company provided support to 3rd Brigade, they also went above and beyond their normal duties. "Sling load operations" were added to their resumes.

"When routes were cut off due to 'enemy' contact, and parts for vehicles were still needed, our Soldiers helped get the parts to their destinations via aircraft," said Capt. Janelle Woodbury, company commander.

All lessons learned did not come directly from the training center.

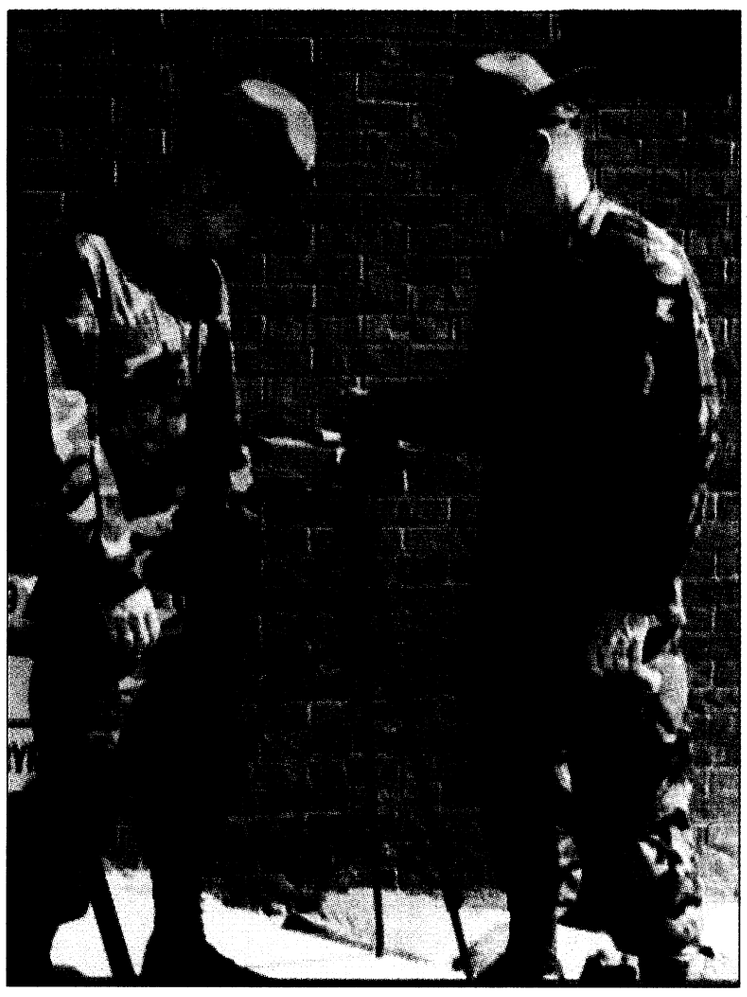
Though only a small element from the 608th Ordnance Company traveled to the training center to give ammunition support, many lessons were learned from those supporting the mission here on.

As the acting rear detachment commander during the rotation, 1st Lt. Mike Hearn learned a few lessons of his own about readiness.

"Soldier Readiness Packets and Family Care Plans were a big issue," Hearn said.

"The better we prepare ourselves and our families for deployments, the easier the deployment will be on everyone."

One family member agreed communication with her deployed fiancee, was a major key to their wedding.



Tina Copelin, wife of 608th Soldier Sgt. Alphonso Copelin, said the phone calls she received from her, husband, were imperative to planning their marriage.

"I talked to him every other day, so I was able to send necessary paperwork to him to get the ball rolling.

I was glad I was able to talk to him so often. It made the process easier for both of us to deal with."

All these lessons and many more learned from NTC will follow the 13th CSB to their next NTC rotation in May 2000. Training as they fight, they are truly prepared for war.

Soldiers hone warfighting skills through books

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army leaders are hoping today's warriors will continue to hone their warfighting skills and learn more about the Army's heritage beyond the normal duty day by undertaking a voluntary, self-paced reading program in their spare time.

The new course of study is the Army chief of staff's recommended professional reading list. It was released in mid-June to major Army commands for further distribution down to company-level units.

"The professional reading list is a list for all leaders," said Gen. Eric K. Shinseki, Army chief of staff, in the list's cover letter.

"We can never spend too much time thinking about our profession. There is no better way to develop the sure knowledge and confidence required of America's most demanding occupation than a disciplined, focused commitment to a personal course of reading and study."

The list contains the titles of 40 books divided evenly among four hierarchical and progressive smaller lists.

Which list Soldiers should start depends on where they are in their careers in terms of experience, education and the level of responsibility they currently hold. For example, a cadet or sergeant would start with the first list, while a division commander or sergeant major would begin reading the last list.

The various titles on the list also complement each other and the required reading found in the formal study of the officer and enlisted schools, according to Brig. Gen. John S. Brown, commander of the Army Center for Military History and the Army's chief of military history.

While the Center for Military History was assigned as the program's executive agent, Brown quickly pointed out the list truly was Shinseki's.

"The chief has been involved all throughout the process of developing this reading list. It was his idea and it serves the purposes he stated he wanted when he had us start work on the list."

Brown explained the purposes — encourage habits of reading and reflection; sustain intellectual growth between attendance at the various formal institutional schools; facilitate officer and NCO professional self-development; and deepen each Soldier's appreciation of their military heritage.

Training brigade welcomes commander

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Ranger hospitality has improved in two decades. At least that's the conclusion Col. Hazen Baron reached Monday morning upon assuming command of the Ranger Training Brigade.

"In January of 1978 when I reported in as a prospective Ranger student, I received a somewhat different reception at the Ranger Training Brigade," Baron recalled. "It's encouraging to see Ranger hospitality has improved immensely in the ensuing 22 years."

Col. Frank Helmick relinquished command of the RTB to Baron in front of the Ranger Memorial.

Helmick's next assignment will be with the Joint Staff, Combating Terrorism Directorate, in Washington, D.C.

Citing Helmick's personal touch and leadership, Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne said the RTB commander always found a way to spotlight the Ranger instructor and not himself.

"Frank, you believe Ranger School is the toughest there is in the Department of Defense, in the world. You have lived it, experienced it, and you have proven that Ranger School is probably the best life insurance any Soldier or Marine can have," Le Moyne said.

Sally Shutt

Col. Frank Helmick (left), outgoing Ranger Training Brigade commander stands with Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne and new commander Col. Hazen Baron.

During Helmick's two-year command, the graduation rate for Ranger School increased from 66 percent to about 74 percent, Le Moyne said.

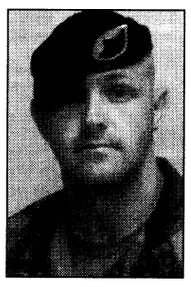
In his farewell remarks, Helmick thanked "first and foremost" the Ranger instructors who served under his command.

"They are the best in the business. They do more and ask for less than any other group of Soldiers I've ever been associated with," he said.

Helmick also recognized commanders and leaders from the RTB's three battalions — the 4th Ranger Training Battalion at Fort Benning, 5th Ranger Training Battalion at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., and the 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Camp James E. Rudder, Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

"This is the last time I will wear the black beret," Helmick said. "It has been an honor to serve the Ranger community, to serve Fort Benning, to serve our Infantry and to serve our Army."

Roses were presented to Helmick's wife, Melissa, and the couple's daughters, Jane and Christina, for their contributions to the brigade.



Baron comes to Fort Benning from Washington, D.C., where he served as the chief, Army Initiatives Group, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans, Department of Army.

He has held command and leadership positions at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., Fort Richardson, Alaska, and Fort Bragg, N.C. He has also served in a variety of staff positions from battalion to Army and joint levels.

Joining Baron at Fort Benning are his wife, Jolyn, and son Kenton. Daughter Karissa is a junior at Wake Forest University, and son Hazen is a freshman at Northeastern.

Award: Ranger Instructor of the Cycle

What is your greatest challenge as an Ranger Instructor: The toughest part of being a Ranger instructor is providing a rigorous training that will push each Ranger student to his physical and mental limit.

But the same time motivate him to exceed those limits and stretch the boundaries of what he thinks he is capable of doing.

I have Soldiers during zero week who arrive from duty stations all over the world.

Many have not acclimated to the extremely dangerous heat in this region. That further complicates my mission as safety is always the first consideration.

FAMILY PROGRAM EXCELLENCE...

Army Community Service (ACS) will celebrate its 35th birthday on July 25th, 2000. Fort Benning's excellent community service programs are designed to assist commanders in providing family support services to Soldiers and their families. The following represent some of the Fort Benning ACS accomplishments during the 1999-2000 fiscal year.

Family Advocacy Program (FAP)
The FAP focuses on child and spouse abuse prevention and education. The "First Steps" program has expanded, reaching more than 1200 family members, primarily assisted by 14 trained volunteers. The FAP serviced more than 3,000 Soldiers and family members during 19 pre-deployment briefings. The FAP sponsored the second Domestic Violence Conference in March 1999 for local tri-community (Fort Benning, Columbus, and Phenix City) professionals. The FAP staff now includes a training specialist and Victim Advocate.

Army Emergency Relief (AER)
Army Emergency Relief provides emergency financial assistance in the form of grants and loans to members of the Armed Forces and family members. AER provided $654,147 in loans to 799 clients and $86,738 in grants to 103 clients to assist Soldiers (active duty and retired) and widows of the community. The 1999 Annual AER Campaign received contributions in excess of $178,295.

Family Member Employment Assistance Program (FMEAP)
The FMEAP offers assistance to family members who are seeking employment. It is provided through employment information that includes private sector job bank, personal training development workshops, individual job search assistance, and counseling for skill identification and employment options. In the FY 99 time frame, 667 Soldiers and family members placed in jobs, which resulted in $6.87 million in additional income for military families.

Consumer Affairs/Financial Assistance Program (CAFAP)
The CAFAP ~ offers information, education, and individual counseling, and assistance in consumer issues, financial planning, family budgeting, and debt management matters. During the FY99 period, 1,584 individuals received training in 121 classes. The CAFAP also sponsors consumer workshops, such as the quarterly car-buying seminar. Soldiers/families returned a total of $130,259 to creditors in debt liquidation programs.

Utility Coordination Center (UCC)
The UCC allows newly arriving Soldiers to obtain utility services (water, power, gas, and telephone) at a single location. The UCC in/out processed 6,563 Soldiers and returned $122,054 to the participating utility companies in FY99. The UCC provides the convenience of one-stop utility connections and disconnections. Soldiers with good credit standings are not required to pay deposit to have their utility service initiated.

Relocation Assistance Program (RAP)
During the FY99 time frame, RAP provided relocation information to 5,533 Soldiers; assisted 25 family members in completing citizenship classes; provided Lending Locker assistance to 125 Soldiers and their families; and conducted Newcomer/Spouse Orientations for 375 Soldiers and spouses.

Emergency Food Locker
The ACS Food Locker assisted 224 clients with a two-day supply of emergency food during FY99.
During the holiday season, turkeys were provided to needy Soldiers and military retired families. Food Locker items are made available through the generosity of private organizations, food drives, commissary vendors, and local businesses.

Army Family Team Building (AFTB)
Designed as a survivor course for Army spouses, AFTB is targeted toward new people in the Army, leaders in the community, or anyone interested in updating personal skills or basic knowledge. AFTB, a total volunteer program under the auspices of ACS, celebrated its fifth birthday on December 16, 1999. All AFTB courses and materials are available and free to Soldiers, family members, and DA civilians. During the FY99 time frame, 1,544 individuals participated in AFTB training at Fort Benning.

School Age Services (SAS)
During the summer FY99, the SAS program offered various educational/recreational activities for children. This was at no extra cost to the parents. The SAS Computer Lab instructor designed, implemented and trained staff (CDC, FCC, SAS) on basic computer skills to help meet training requirements. Effective 1 October, the program added the USDA Food Program. This allows for a nutritious breakfast and snack to be served to all children enrolled in the program. A bowling league was implemented in the fall of FY99. Demand increased from one league to two. An ACS Food Drive was set up within the SAS program to donate canned goods to ACS. In FY00, SAS children will volunteer to Christmas Carol around the installation and provide a "Tree of Giving" to give items to the needy. In FY00 the engineers are expected to have completed designs to install an air conditioning unit at Patch Hall.

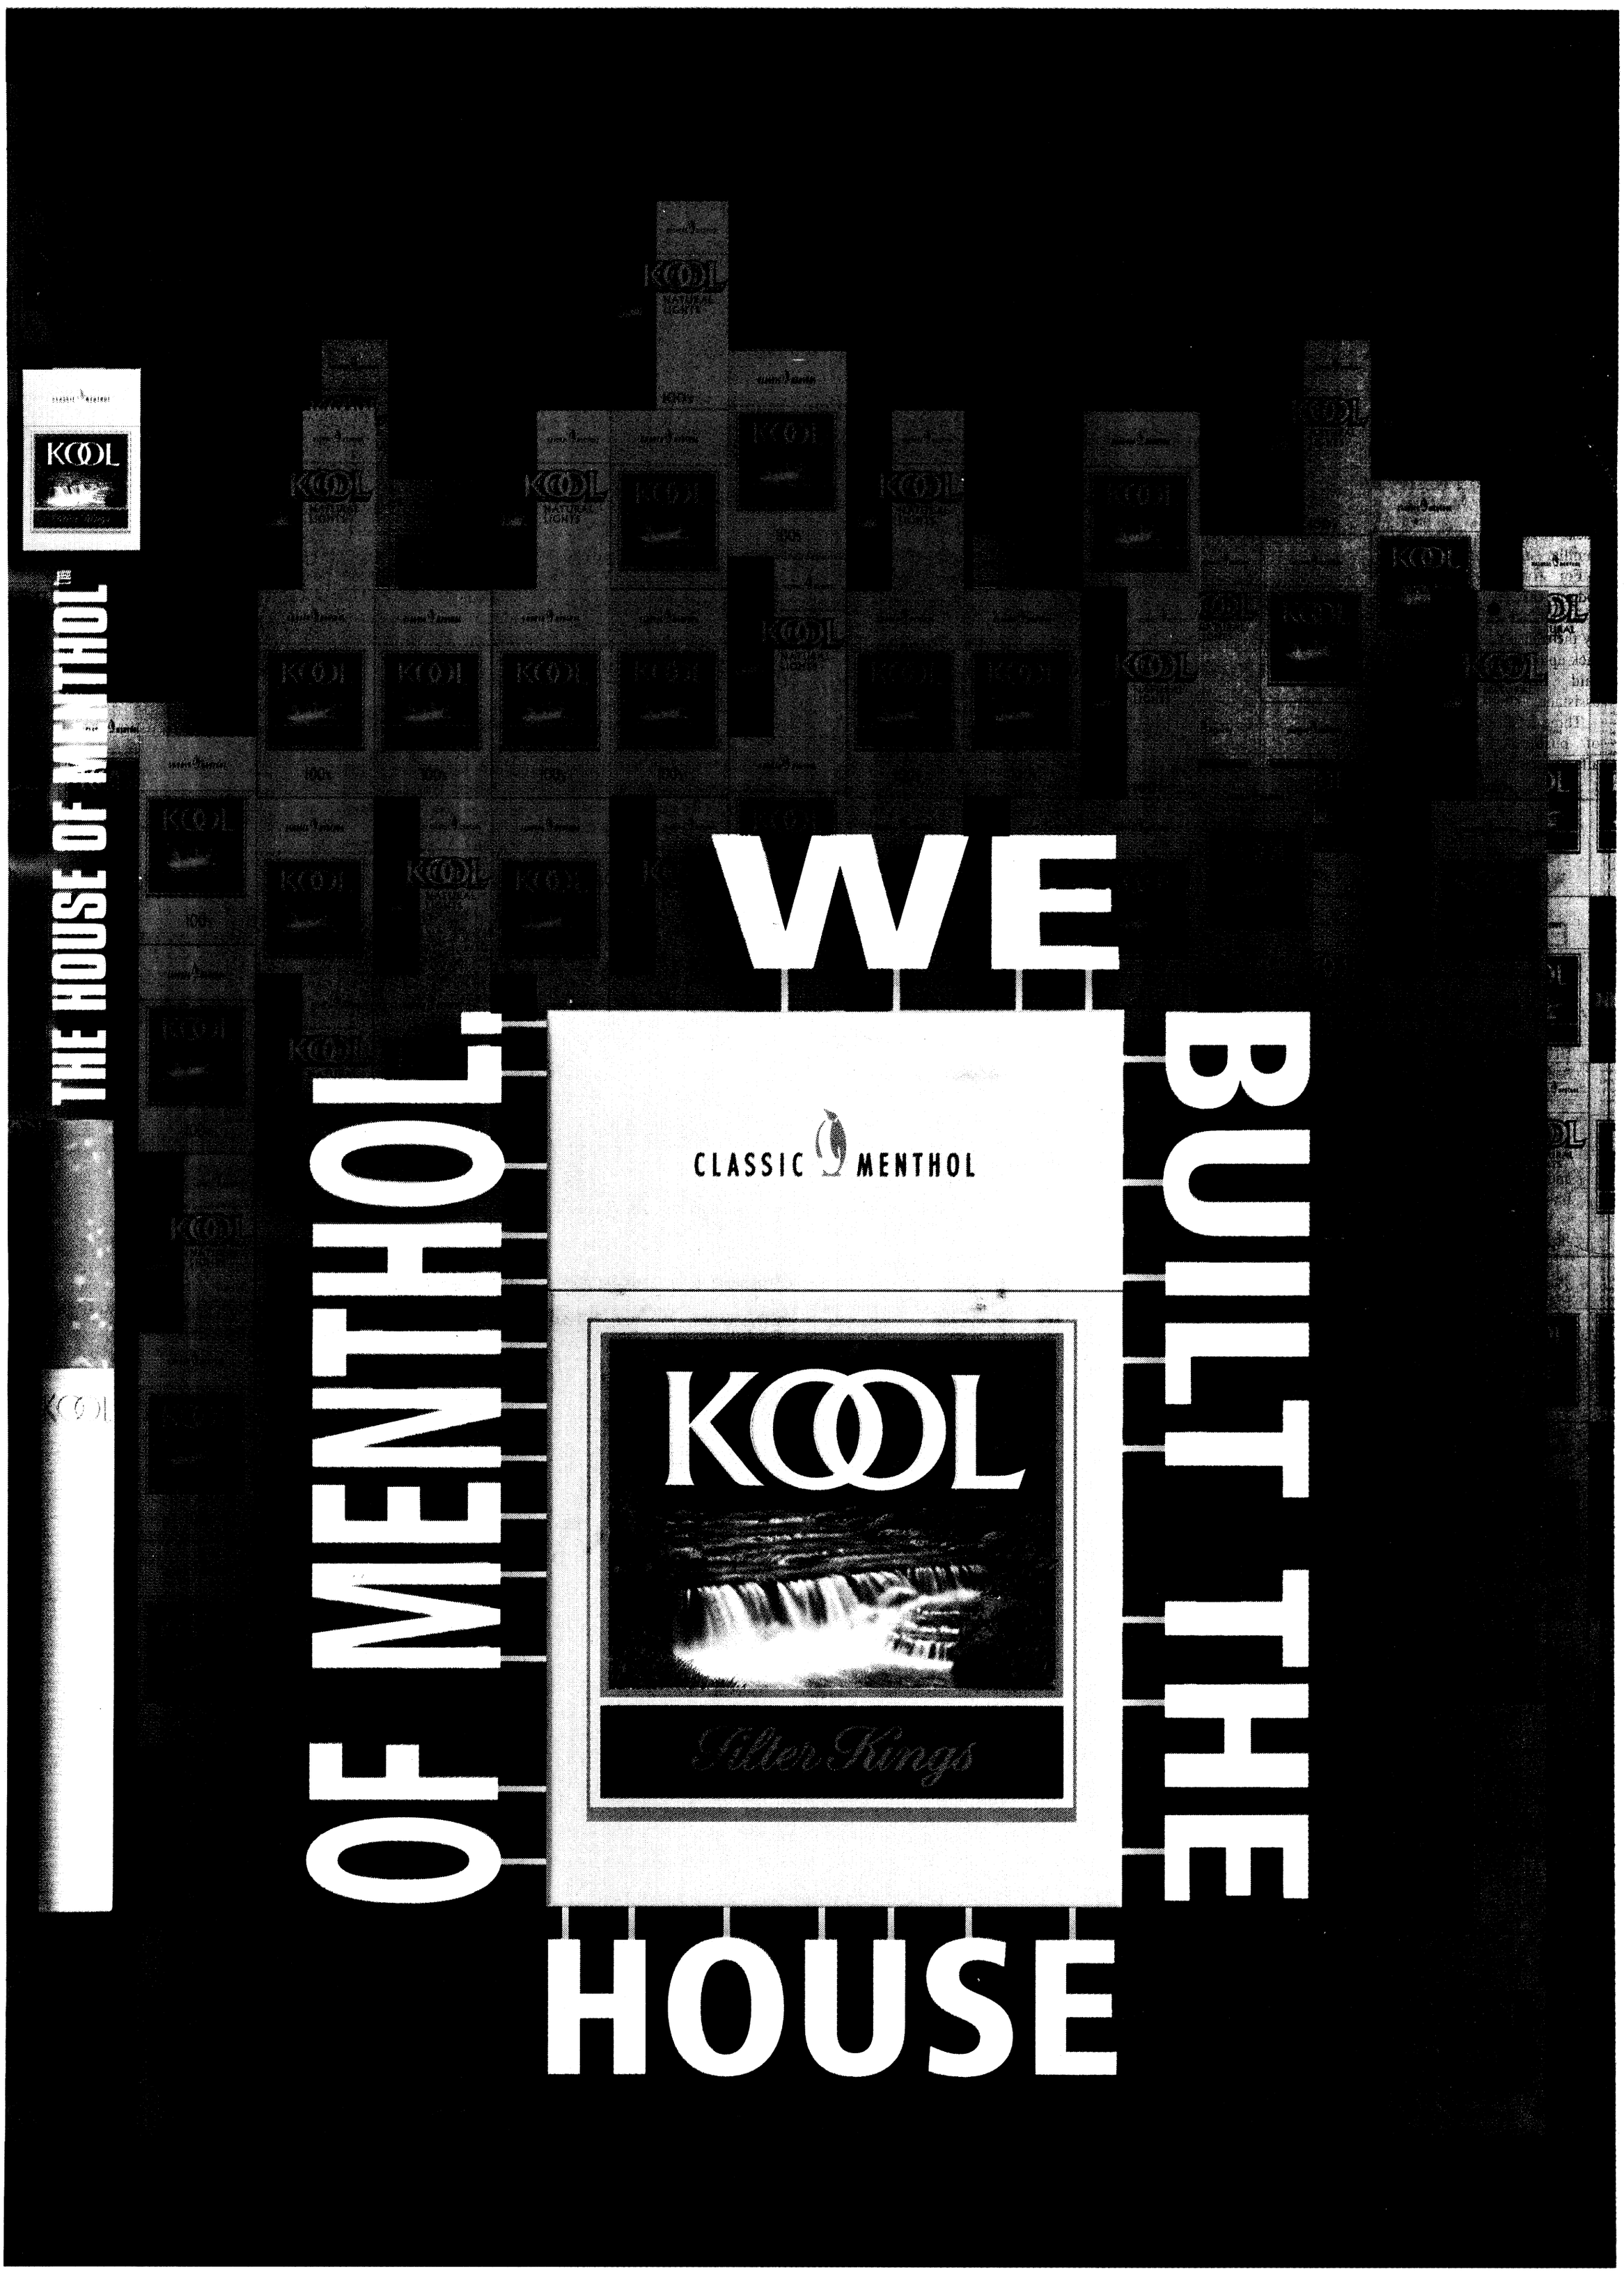
These types of programs help to improve the quality of life and the well being of Fort Benning's community.

IDENTIFYING AND REWARDING EXCELLENCE...

Soldiers, family members, and dedicated employees are our reason for existence. MWR stays in touch with patrons' needs, wants, and desires with the aid of the Mystery Shopper Program, comment cards, a new website addition, formal and informal research, and direct interaction.

Mystery Shopper Program
Facilities are shopped anonymously by use of telephone and in-person visits. Customer service elements such as store appearance, courtesy of employees, and quality of product and services are evaluated. The Fort Benning MWR Mystery Shopper Program measures excellence, drives the training program, and provides incentives to employees who deliver superb customer service.

Employee Recognition
Employees demonstrating excellent customer service receive a DA Certificate of Commendation and monetary award, recognition as superb employees of the month, quarter, and year, quarterly CG Breakfast recognition, and recognition at the retreat ceremonies.



Comment Cards
Comment cards are one of the older methods of gathering data; yet still one of the most effective. In FY99 we received over 5,821 comment cards from patrons. The cards are analyzed and many suggestions are implemented into the MWR system. Recently, a Customer Service Report Card was designed to display customer comment ratings for each activity with specific comments to employees shown on the Report Card. The document has proven to be a very beneficial tool for employee feedback (an area identified as weak in our DCA Climate Survey)

Fort Benning MWR Website
Our patrons can now access the Fort Benning MWR from around the globe at http\:www.benningmwr.com. This site provides a world of information, both of a local and national scope, and will serve to gather patrons' feedback from around the world. This site currently receives over 50,000 visits per year.

Marketing Research
The Fort Benning MWR has led the way within Department of Army MWR operations in listening to, and acting upon feedback from Soldiers and their family members. DCA uses a variety of formal and informal research methods to determine objective and scientific based needs of our patrons. The Fort Benning MWR performed its first triennial survey in 1988. Following the 1988 survey, there have been four Triennial Needs Assessments performed and include the 1991, 1994, 1996, 1999 surveys. The 1994 and 1996 assessments were both administered by the Department of the Army Community and Family Support Center while the 1991 and 1999 were performed locally. Historical five-year planning and execution data, coupled with financial results and customer utilization rates, clearly show the wisdom of using formal research in making business based investment decisions.

"Standards of Excellence"
"Standards of Excellence" are written goals for each facility. Each "Standard of Excellence" is placed in common areas for viewing by patrons. "Standards of Excellence" are not limited to just MWR locations, but have been implemented post-side. MWR's "Standards of Excellence" vision is that all customers who visit our facilities leave with assurance that we are friendly, helpful, and appreciative of their business.

Your feedback is essential to the continued excellence of the MWR Program. We sincerely value your comments, and ask that you continue to tell us how we are doing so that we may better serve you.

Transportation, Housing officials busy with moving

Moving is a rite of summer for military families. Moving vans started lining the streets in housing areas on post almost as soon as school ended back in June and will continue to be familiar sights until September.

For transportation, housing and lodging officials, this is peak season.

About 200 people a day are dropping by the transportation office to schedule pick up or delivery of household goods, said Liz Hervey, transportation assistant.

Three local moving agents went out of business earlier this summer, affecting moving dates for about 25 families, Hervey said.

"We've had a lot of upset people," she said. "This is one summer we won't forget."

Other carriers, many already booked, were called upon to take on the additional jobs, but even then delays resulted and schedules were affected in the shuffle.

One option available to people who are pushed to reach their next assignment by a certain date is to move it themselves, and transportation officials are encouraging many to rent their own trucks.

"If they can't wait, we encourage them to do a DITY (Do It Yourself) move," Hervey said.

To avoid some problems, she suggested as soon as orders arrive, Soldiers should contact the transportation office to set up an appointment to come into the office and talk with an assistant who will set up a date for pick up.

A CLOSER LOOK

For PCSing assistance:

- Call the Transportation office at 545-4900 or drop by Building 280 on Transportation Lane.
- Family Housing Office can be reached at 545-2990 or visit the Fort Benning Home Page at www-benning.army.mil/FBHOME/ and click on Housing on the web index.
- Call the Guest House for reservations at 689-0067, extension 1142.

"Don't wait around thinking you have time," she said.

The Family Housing Office will turn over about 1,700 quarters this summer or about 41 percent of its inventory of homes.

"That's a little higher than in past years," said Ron Smith, chief of the Family Housing Branch, Directorate of Public Works.

The turnover time for quarters varies from four to 20 working days depending on the amount of work required after occupants leave.

Families arriving at Fort Benning will find waiting lists exist for all housing areas. The waiting times for junior enlisted is running from three to six months with 332 families on the list.

Soldier becomes Colonist for film

Engineer takes leave for The Patriot

One Fort Benning Soldier answered a "call to arms" last fall and found himself on the front lines of a revolution.

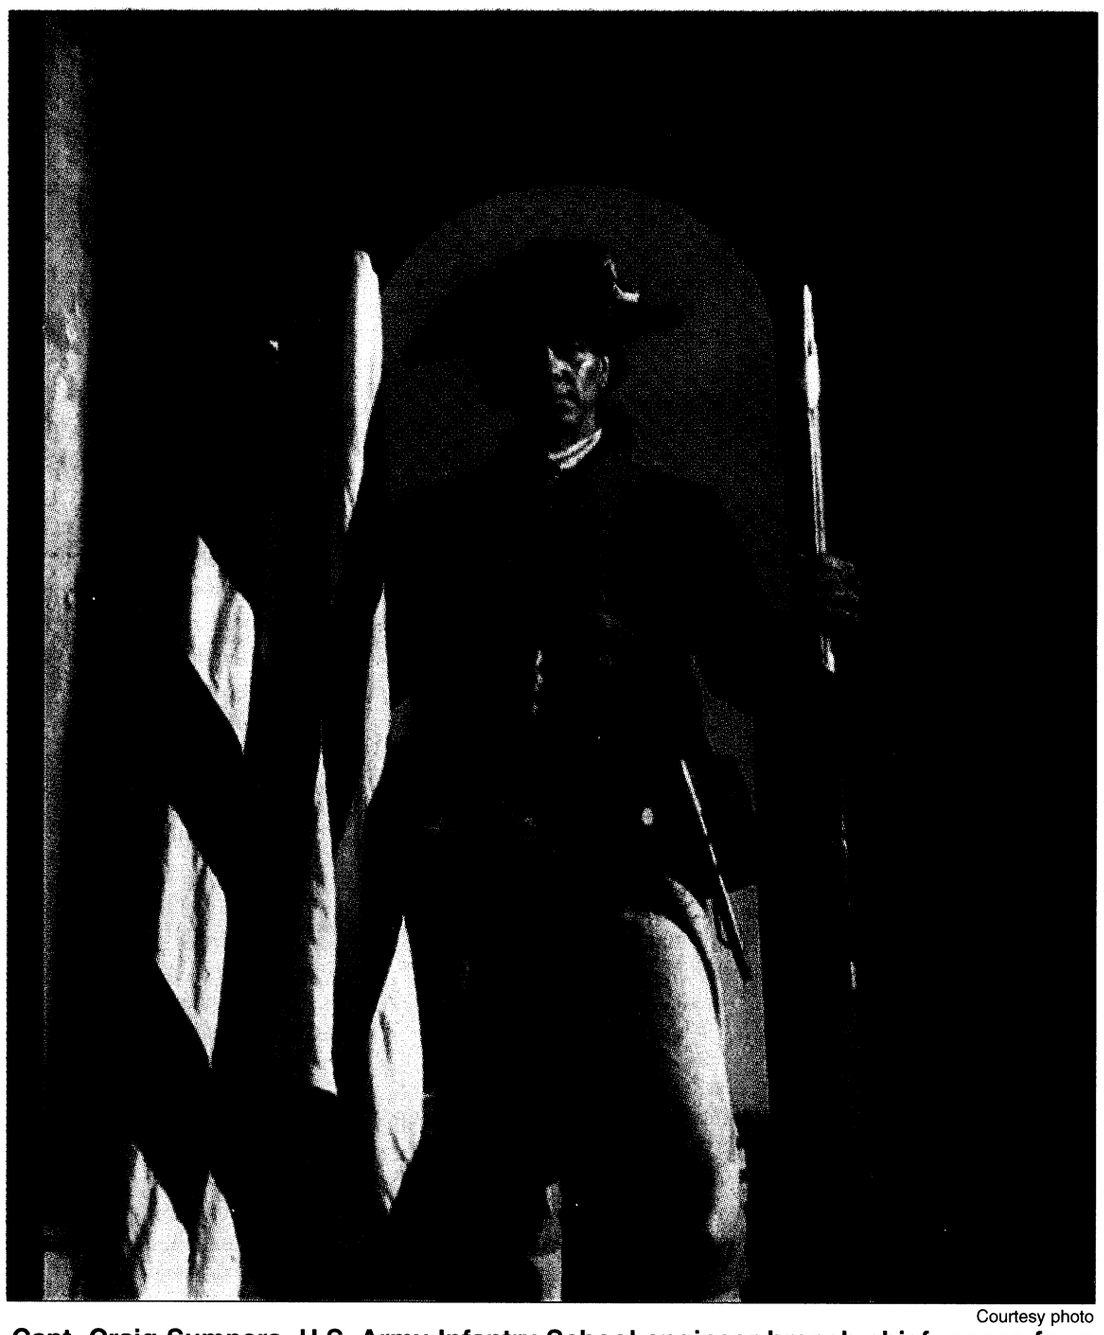
While stationed at Fort Jackson, S.C., Capt. Craig Sumners responded to an advertised casting call for Roland Emmerich's production of The Patriot starring Mel Gibson. More than 1,000 men auditioned for the parts as extras, and Sumners was one of several hundred selected to play a Colonial Soldier in the film about the Revolutionary War.

"It's really funny how I ended up getting a part," said Sumners, now the engineer branch chief at the U.S. Army Infantry School. "My wife actually called the casting department when she read about it in the newspaper. They didn't need any women at that time, but she called me at work to tell me they were looking for men to play Soldiers. At first I just laughed it off. But then I thought, why not? You only live once. So I decided to give it a whirl."

Sumner's audition was a series of grueling sprints up and down hills and a few quick measurements to see if he "fit the suit."

"They needed men who were in pretty good shape because of the physical demands of filming long hours in the hot sun, running up and down hills and doing hand-to-hand combat," he said.

"And they were only hiring people who fit in the costumes they already had on hand. If you were too big or too little they just couldn't use you."



Having qualified in both categories, Sumners took two weeks leave and traveled more than two hours daily from his Fort Jackson home to Rockhill, S.C., where filming began each morning at 3 a.m.

After making his morning rounds to the wardrobe, prop, accessories and make-up departments, he joined the hordes of cast members in the breakfast tent where they were briefed on the day's agenda before boarding buses that carried them to the various locations where the battle scenes were filmed. Sumners called this the "most unglamorous, glamorous part of the business."

"We worked 12-hour days, six days a week. We wore wool overcoats, vests, shirts, breeches, hats and wigs. It was hot and grueling," he said.

A typical day of filming involved hours of rehearsals and walk-throughs before film actually began rolling. The actors portraying Colonial and British Soldiers practiced choreographed battles for hours to ensure safety and historical accuracy, often

Protect furry friends from heat

Tips help keep animals safe from high temps

If Soldiers think they have it bad this summer having to wear BDUs, they should try spending the summer without sweat glands and wearing fur coats.

That's what dogs and cats have to do during the grueling heat of Georgia's summer months.

Without any sweat glands, dogs and cats keep cool by panting. But panting is just one way for dogs and cats to dissipate heat, they also use their instincts.

Many dogs dig holes close to the home's foundation or under a bush to create a cool place to lay.

For cats — traditionally more independent and more mobile than dogs — as long as they have access to inside the home or other shaded areas they should be fine during the summer, said Spc. Eric Zwicker, veterinary technician at Fort Benning Veterinarian Clinic.

Just because a pet shows signs of independence and good instincts, however, it doesn't mean that pet owners should dismiss the basics: shade, shelter and water.

Dogs especially need these three things during the summer in order to prevent heat exhaustion because they are confined to a fenced yard.

Shade comes in many forms: trees, bushes and overhangs.

One shade alternative for yards without trees or shrubs is to use an old tarp, or some other material that doesn't absorb too much heat, and put a cabana up, said Pamela Green, assistant shelter manager at the Muscogee County Humane Society.

She also suggests spraying down the ground to create a cool surface for the dog to lay on.

Many dog owners place a plastic kiddie pool in the yard for the dog to dip or soak in during the day.

Although a doghouse provides shade and shelter for the dog, it can still get very hot during the summer.

"Put the doghouse in the shade, under trees or bushes, otherwise it's kind of like a little hot box," said Dr. Jim Thorsen, Doctor of Veterinary Medicine, a volunteer with the Muscogee County Humane Society.

The doghouse should be placed in a shaded area, but sometimes

Living in quarters requires diplomacy

Community NCO helps to resolve neighbor conflict

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Neighborly, by definition, means to behave in the manner of a neighbor, and our concept of neighborly behavior is traditionally defined by those we perceive as model neighbors — Lucy and Ethel, Fred and Barney — even Tim Taylor and his friend Wilson, always ready to lend an ear and impart a bit of his worldly wisdom over the backyard fence.

But when the family next door behaves more like the Hatfields and McCoys — threatening and belligerent and even physically violent — the word "neighborly" becomes a singular oxymoron.

"I'm afraid of my neighbor," said one Fort Benning resident, during the May 23 post-wide town hall meeting. "She's threatened me and my children and keyed my car two times. What can be done to stop her?"

The woman, who requested anonymity for fear of retaliation, said the hostile relations were rooted in a disagreement over parking spaces in front of their homes.

"She was using three parking spaces and apparently thought she had a right to do so. When I parked in front of my door in the only space available, she came into my yard and threatened to beat me up. She used racial slurs and cursed at my children."

That set the trend for a series of angry encounters and the frightened resident believed it was her neighbor who keyed her car twice while it sat in front of their homes. She called the police on numerous occasions, filed a written complaint at the military police station and used a hidden camcorder to catch her neighbor in the act of vandalism.

> "I'm scared to be alone, scared to go outside and scared to let my children play outside."
> Fort Benning resident

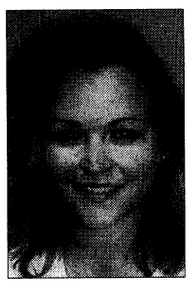
"I would move off post if it were feasible for us to do so right now," she said. "As it is, I'm scared to be alone, scared to go outside and scared to let my children play outside."

"Neighbor rage" is the catch-phrase of the day — the neighborhood equivalent of "road rage" — and an all-inclusive term for volatile behavior one neighbor exhibits when dealing with another.

Though Fort Benning has not experienced the same degree of violence as Columbus and surrounding communities, parking shortages and the living conditions unique to military families can cause potential problems in a confined community.

"A lot of our problems stem from misunderstandings about housing regulations," said Master Sgt. William McKithean, community life NCO for East Main Post. "Maybe it's people who are new to the military and don't understand what's expected of them when they live in quarters, or maybe it's the fact that school is out and parents are getting involved in the bickering that goes on between kids who have more time on their hands."



Whatever the reason, McKithean said community life NCOs are doing a lot of "baby-sitting" these days, responding to calls from residents who are angry at their neighbor or feel threatened by their neighbor about issues that can be resolved with common sense.

"What we're typically seeing is bad relations escalating over trivial problems. Say the kids squabble for a while then go back to being friends, but their parents can't let go of the hostility and they compound the problem by involving other neighbors who take sides with one garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

The County Cooperative Extension Service is offering a Master Gardener Program sponsored by the State of Georgia. This is an opportunity for anyone interested in gardening and volunteer service to get involved with their community.

The Master Gardner program is an organization that offers 40 hours of horticulture training in exchange for 50 hours of volunteer service. The volunteer service will be completed after a 20 session training program. The training program will cover such topics as landscape design, propagation and organic gardening.

There are a variety of choices for completing the 50 volunteer hours.

Volunteer assistance is needed for tasks ranging from phone work to conducting workshops. Enrollees will have until December 2001 to complete their volunteer hours.

Once the sessions and volunteer hours have been completed, each enrollee will receive a master Gardener Certificate. This certificate may be transferable to the state of you next duty station. People with Master Gardener certification in another state are encouraged to transfer their certification to Georgia by visiting the Extension office.

Master Gardeners are a welcome addition to Extension offices in many states. There is a strong need for skilled volunteers to complete area beautification programs. In addition to certification, graduates of the Muscogee and Chattahoochee program receive a one year membership to the Master Gardener state Association. Those interested will be given the opportunity to be charter members of developing the Muscogee Master Gardener Association.

The sessions will begin Sept. 12 and run through Nov. 30. Classes will be held at the County Extension Office on Tuesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Interested residents can contact me at Columbus Gardener@ aol.com. There is no prior education or training in horticulture needed to enroll. There is a $70 fee for the books and materials required for the course. The deadline for application is Aug. 24.

If you would like more information or an application contact ColumbusGardener@aol.com.

Editor's note: Jennifer White is a student at Columbus State University and enrolled in the Columbus Cooperative Extension Service's Master Gardner Program.

Neighbors: Impact community life

party or the other," he said.

"They are doing the right thing by calling us, but the situation could be defused if they just realized the impact their behavior could have on their spouse's career."

Post residents must live in harmony with their neighbors, and to disrupt community harmony constitutes a violation of housing policy according to garrison regulation. Fort Benning policy is to notify the garrison commander when a resident has violated housing regulations or failed to heed warnings about regulation infringement three times.

"We're not going to move everybody around until they're satisfied with the people they live next to," said Command Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Graham, garrison command sergeant major. "We get these kind of complaints in our office about twice a week, and we take them very seriously. We can't regulate how someone feels about their neighbor, only how they behave toward them. We don't tolerate violence or any kind of behavior that disturbs the harmony of the community."

Graham said the majority of problems that reach his office are minor issues, such as barking dogs and disagreements over parking spaces.

"Most of the time it becomes a matter of tattletelling back and forth, a 'he said — she said' kind of situation that can easily be resolved when we involve their chain of command. We have 4,000 sets of quarters on post, so when you look at the big picture, we really get along very well on the whole."

Fort Benning rarely experiences the kind of violence civilian communities face, said 1st Lt. Esteban Gutierrez, chief of law enforcement operations.

"We have maybe two or three calls a day from people complaining about their neighbors, and it rarely stems from violent behavior. It's usually dogs barking or loud domestic disputes," he said. "For the most part, people abide by the rules, because they know they have to do so in a military community."

Gutierrez said cases are assessed on an individual basis, and actual physical violence would result in assault charges according to the Georgia state code. Like Graham, Gutierrez said more often than not, one call to the resident's company commander will end any further problems.

"We (MPs) don't have the resources to follow up on every situation we encounter like the unit does. When we respond to this kind of call and it's a nonthreatening situation, we always recommend that the chain of command gets involved."

The first step toward resolving bad relations is to approach the neighbor in a non-violent manner and discuss the problem, Graham said. If that doesn't work, he recommends calling first the area coordinator or the community life NCO for your housing area.

The CLNCO will assess the situation and attempt to help both parties come to an agreeable solution. If necessary the CLNCO will contact the resident's unit commander or the garrison commander.

"We haven't had a situation yet that couldn't be resolved by involving both service members who reside in the quarters and their chain of command," Graham said. "Living in post quarters is a privilege and once they realize they are jeopardizing that privilege, they come to an agreement as quickly as possible."

Movie: Teaches Soldier about acting repeating one scene eight or 10 times before the director was satisfied.

"It was dangerous at times because there were so many people on the battlefield at once and there were horses on the field and simulated explosions everywhere," Sumners said.

"The worst part was inhaling all the pyro-dust. When the explosives went off the air became very dense with dust and dirt. Then we'd take a break until everyone cleared their eyes and stopped coughing."

Though Sumners didn't get the chance to meet the star of the film, he did find himself standing next to Gibson during filming. He said there appeared to be an understood hierarchy among the cast, and extras weren't often given the opportunity to mingle with the character actors.

Sumners, his wife and two sons, ages 12 and 13, saw the movie when it opened at the Wynnsong Theatre on Fort Benning. Though he didn't recognize himself on the screen and didn't find his name among the credits — an honor reserved only for those with speaking parts — he said he enjoyed the experience of watching the finished project and knowing he had played a small role in its completion.

"I learned a thing or two about patience and tolerance," he laughed. "But it was really neat to learn all that goes on behind the scenes and all the work that goes into developing every single scene of a movie.

"When you see the final product it looks so simple and runs so smoothly that you don't realize all the work and sweat that went into every detail."

Faith Middle School registration open now

Fort Benning Schools

School begins Aug. 17 and registration is currently being held for students who plan to attend Faith Middle School from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at the school.

All students planning to attend Faith Middle School during the 2000-2001 school year must be registered.

Registration for students who will be attending an elementary school will begin July 31 and continue through Aug. 11. Register elementary students at the school they'll attend.

If your child attended Fort Benning Schools last year, you must register by presenting an ID card. If your child is new to the Fort Benning Schools, you must register by bringing proof of Fort Benning residence or housing slip, ID card, any records from the previous school year and current immunization records, including the Varicella vaccine.

Keep water use to a minimum — Fort Benning is under a water restriction.
