DoD postpones anthrax shots

Stoppage comes after manufacturer fails FDA inspection

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Failure of a new anthrax vaccine production plant to pass FDA inspection has led DoD to postpone the second phase of vaccinations for at least six months.

Defense officials announced the Pentagon will delay inoculating troops, other than those deployed to Korea and the Persian Gulf, until new batches of the vaccine are proven safe and effective.

Dr. Sue Bailey, assistant secretary of defense for Health Affairs, said there are enough FDA-certified dosages to continue vaccinating troops headed to those high-threat areas.

Since the first phase of inoculations began last year, 383,000 Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines have received anthrax shots. The second phase will cover first responders to military contingencies or those ready to deploy, Bailey said. The third and final phase will inoculate the remainder of the force.

But if the United States had to conduct a military buildup now, such as it did for Desert Storm, it couldn't fully protect those troops against anthrax, a senior officer said.

"We're not there, yet," said Marine Corps Maj. Gen. Randall West, a special adviser on anthrax and biological weapons to Rudy de Leon, undersecretary of defense for Personnel and Readiness. "We could not today do a full buildup to Desert Storm and have every serviceman and woman that was sent there vaccinated."

Bailey said DoD has other ways to protect troops against anthrax attacks, including chemical and biological protection suits, gas masks and antibiotics. "We are able to provide, as we did during the Gulf (War), some significant protection against anthrax," she said. She said DoD also could decide to give every Soldier a portion of the six prescribed inoculations, so they would have some protection.

In addition, Bioport — the company that produces the vaccine — has Training cadre meet troops at Atlanta airport

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Thousands of Soldiers in training were welcomed back from Christmas Exodus earlier this week as drill sergeants and officers met them at Hartsfield International Airport in Atlanta.

The NCOs and officers were there to provide a helping hand and make sure all of the trainees made it back to post safely, said Capt. James Funk, operations officer for 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — the unit running the tactical operation center at the airport.

"We are the command and control node here that makes sure when a Soldier comes back we get them in the pipeline back to their installations," he said. "We make sure that if they get to the airport, they'll get back to the correct installation.

"We are just here to take care of them and to make sure they aren't up here getting taken advantage of," he said.

Soldiers from several posts were able to benefit from the guidance of the drill sergeants.

"We did Exodus prior with Soldiers leaving out of Gordon, Jackson and Benning," Funk said. "We make sure they get up here, they're staying in uniform and that they're doing the right thing.

"We want to make sure the public sees the right image because we've got more than 11,000 Soldiers coming through here," added Funk.

He said the drill sergeants accomplish this by meeting the returning Soldiers as they enter the airport.

"They come off the concourses and are filtered up through the escalators to baggage claim. We get a hold of them right there and tell them what the plan is," Funk explained.

Funk said he had 75 personnel from Jackson, Gordon and Benning working two shifts to keep the Soldiers on track — the majority of those cadre and staff were from Benning.

Sgt. 1st Class Craig Cooper, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., and TOC NCOIC, said he takes personal pride in helping the Soldiers during the holiday season.

"I want to make sure the Soldiers get a safe transition through the airport — that they or their bags don't get lost," he said. "I also want to keep them in the right uniform so they portray the proper representation of the military.

"This is the only time a lot of civilians actually get to see what the military looks like," added Cooper. "I want to make sure they look their best and are always on their best behavior. It makes civilians who see them feel better about the military."

The help provided to the Soldiers was greatly appreciated, said Pvt. Brendan Dunn, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment.

USO offers benefits for traveling Soldiers

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers traveling through Hartsfield International Airport in Atlanta have tons of options for places to shop and eat, but there's only one place where they can take it easy, grab a free snack and meet other military members.

The United Service Organizations located in the Terminal Atrium offers a nice place for more than 100,000 travelers annually to get a break during their trip, said Mary Lou Austin, executive director for the USO.

"If they need help or information, this is the place," she said. "We just have the knowledge and expertise to help out in most any situation they may face.

"We do a lot of crisis intervention," she said. "We provide military travelers with options. We take care of people with no funds, lost orders, lost luggage, even people who are stranded."

The USO's not only for those facing problems though, said Austin. It's also a safe haven from the hustle and bustle of the airport.

"If they want hospitality from hometown America, this is the place. There's always a free cup of coffee and a doughnut," said Austin.

That hospitality came in handy during the recent surge of Fort Benning Soldiers through the USO during Christmas

Post competes for another ACOE title

6-member team arrives Monday for closer look

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

With a list of eligible posts named as finalists in the Department of the Army Army Community of Excellence award program, representatives from ACOE evaluation teams are now doing site visits to posts so the final winner can be determined.

Six evaluators will be on Fort Benning Monday through the weekend — gathering information on the topics submitted in the post's ACOE packet last August.

The evaluation team members visiting post are Brig. Gen. Gerald Minetti, U.S. Central Command; Col. Spencer Howell, from the 7th Army Reserve Command Headquarters; Lt. Col. Jose Arroyo, from U.S. Army South; Jennifer Marton, from the 417th Base Support Battalion; Jeanne Adams, from the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Headquarters; and Jim Cresto, from the U.S. Army Intelligence Center.

This is Fort Benning's opportunity to show the team why it's been a continual front runner for the program over the years, said Sara Hodges, chief of the Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management.

Hodges said this will be done as team members double check facts and figures.

"They are going to verify and clarify the information that we wrote in our self-assessment," she explained. "The self-assessment is the application for the ACOE competition.

"It is based on the Army Performance Improvement Criteria. We submitted our application, and they scored us based on the criteria," Hodges added. "You have to have so many points for each category. We scored high enough to get a visit.

"After the visit, they can recommend that our score be raised or lowered based on what they see and what they're able to verify while they're here," she said.

The team members will begin their visit with a briefing with the post commander, the command group and key personnel from across post Tuesday.

They will then go on to visit various areas on Fort Benning.

"They'll start interviewing and visiting, verifying and clarifying what they have determined to be issues from our packet they want to hear more about," Hodges said.

That information will help the team members organize a report on the Fort Benning community, she said.

"They'll finish their site visit report before they leave the installation. That report goes to the judges, and then the determination will be made," Hodges said.

"This year we won't be eligible to win the CINC award, which is the best of the Army community makes post best

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

commentary

What makes Fort Benning the best Army installation in the world? It's the community, the people who live and work here that make this place what it is — the best Army installation in the world.

After being gone from Fort Benning for a year, it is great to be back. I missed this place. Though I'm no longer in the military, I still get to work with Soldiers.

While I was away, I worked with civilians who for the first time were exposed to someone who had been in the military. They expected me to do drill and ceremony to turn a corner. I disappointed them. It is great to be back working with people who do more by 9 a.m. than most do all day.

I feel a sense of community here that I haven't felt in other places, including my hometown. When I was here before I thought my sense of community was because of my daughter's involvement in the many youth activities available and the school she attended.

I also considered the possibility it was the local area I enjoyed so much — the Riverwalk, Callaway Gardens, or Uchee Creek, or the local events like the Riverfest and Uptown Jam.

But other towns have great events and good schools. So what is it that makes Fort Benning special? I think it is the Army community.

This is the only place I've ever been where Soldiers and civilians actually work together.

I've worked in Army communities where Soldiers worked and talked only with other Soldiers and ignored their civilian counterparts. And the civilians did the same.

That doesn't happen here.

The people in my office work well with each other. We not only work well together but we play well together, too.

We use birthdays, anniversaries and promotions as excuses to celebrate working with each other. (And with any celebration, good food is always involved.)

My office isn't alone with this spirit of cooperation.

Others here also work and play well together. I think the reason for this is because the people who work here view the post as more than a job but as extended family, and I am happy to be back.

Sibling rivalry spurs Y2K preparations

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

If you are reading this it means that the world, as we knew it on New Year's Eve, 1999, is marching on. Yup. All those Y2K fixes must have worked, and it's a darn good thing I didn't blow off my deadline or you'd be looking at a (big) blank space.

Oh, don't get me wrong. I thought about it. I thought about it a lot. What's the point of making a deadline if all of our computers were going to suffer nervous breakdowns trying to figure out what year it was? Besides, I had a built-in excuse. "What do you mean, you don't have it? I e-mailed it to you in DECEMBER! You know, DECEMBER, as in before Y2K."

I didn't worry much about Y2K until I spent some time with my brother last summer. He and his wife were about to buy a generator and had already put away bottles of water, candles, batteries and canned goods — your basic, no-frills Armageddon arsenal. "I never thought of you as a survivalist type," I said, secretly thinking, "I usually think of you as my bratty kid brother."

"I'm not," he said. "It's for Y2K. I know for a fact that the 'top guys' at Hawaiian Electric are telling everybody not to worry, but while they are saying that, they're buying generators 'just in case.' What does that tell you?"

It told me my bratty kid brother had either grown up or was now a walking poster boy for "one short of a six-pack." It told me my bratty kid brother, the one who thought getting ready for a holiday dinner at grandma's house meant showing up before dessert was served, might have a shot at some turkey if grandma was still around to host Thanksgiving dinner. It told me that even at 40-something, sibling rivalry lives.

It started innocently enough. I had seen my brother's stash of candles. The dollar store near me had a shipment of flashlights and batteries. Flashlights are safer than candles. Coincidentally, I could justify buying them. Christmas was on the way, and we would need them for our daughter's new battery-draining toys. And while I was at it, I picked up some extra batteries for the new flashlights.

Then there was the bottled water at a discount store's going-out-of business sale. At 26 cents a bottle, I could buy three for what my brother had to pay for one. So I did. Besides, at that price, it was cheaper than soda and better for us too.

Then there were the extra canned goods, and the other extra canned goods because the first lot looked lonely in a newly reorganized closet. Stuff I would normally buy, just more of it, all at once. And because I refuse to eat cold chicken noodle soup, I unearthed our camp stove.

Make that the camp stove that I won at a raffle in 1987 — or was that 1985? The camp stove my husband didn't recognize because he thought it had made the one-way trip to Goodwill. The one that is in pristine condition because it's never been used and only took me two hours to find. I justified excavating the stove by telling myself I had "found" it while looking for (an unidentified) something else. Then, since it would be foolish to keep a camp stove around without any fuel, I squirreled away some cans of Sterno. I needed some anyway to put under the fondue pot we don't have the next time I fix the fondue we don't like.

I started sneaking Spam into the family menus so that like me, they wouldn't just eat it, but like it. And before you start laughing, let me just say that I grew up in Hawaii where Spam is respected as a food group and is a staple in any self-respecting islander's pantry. I may not fix fondue but I cook up some mean Spam in a multitude of recipes, even without "Hawaii's Spam Cookbook." (There are two other Spam cookbooks that I know of, but I'm sure this is the best of the bunch.)

My brother upped the ante by buying a generator, but the Sterno was easier to stash and a whole lot more affordable especially since I was not concerned about Y2K. Besides, he only had one generator. I had FOUR cans of Sterno.

Things didn't improve through the fall. Soon, I was glued to the TV every time a news story on Y2K came up, and pulling up Y2K preparedness sites on the Internet to compare supply lists. The competition was heating up. There were people out there with 55-gallon drums filled with grains! Herds of livestock! Wood burning stoves and cords of wood!

My five-pound sack of rice, the two parrots, and camp stove were not measuring up. And how could one remaining 20-plus-year-old C-ration that has trailed us for years, safely cradled in a footlocker, possibly equate to cases of MREs? After all of these years that "C" was more of a pet (and probably more dangerous to eat) than the parrots, even if it doesn't talk as well.

Then the "stock up as if a bad storm's on the way" warnings started. Bad storm for whom? I would need more to prepare for a 'bad storm' in the Yukon than a storm here in sunny Georgia. Paranoia began to run deep. "They" must know something. Maybe those guys at Hawaiian Electric had let them in on their little secret. "They" were finally recognizing how important it was to hint at the truth about Y2K.

Soon, I was past making excuses — any excuses, even weak ones like really needing more C and D batteries because if the power went out I didn't want the dog to be frightened by the dark. I didn't buy any oil lamps or candles last fall, though. I waited until the day after Christmas for those (at half off, too). Nothing like a little Spam fondue by candlelight.

Of course, it's now overcome by events. Looking back, maybe we were looking at Y2K from the wrong perspective. If Y2K amounted to anything, who says it had to be bad?

It's 1900, not 2000? My house hasn't been built yet, so all those checks I've been sending the bank should be returned — with interest, thank you, and the same goes for my credit card account. And while we're at it there should be several million dollars in back pay heading my way, not to mention about a gazillion hours of annual leave that have been accruing since '77. I'm not holding my breath, of course, but you never know.

dial 545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller said he is a single Soldier who works only half a block from the OCS Dining Facility. He said he was turned away from the OCS DFAC and told he could not eat lunch there. He said his DFAC is about half mile away from where he works.

Directorate of Logistics' response: The Commanding General has an open door policy for all authorized personnel allowing them the use of any dining facility when they are away from their normally assigned Dining Facility. DFAC supervisors were informed of this policy and appropriate action was taken to ensure that Soldiers were not turned away again. In addition, a memorandum identifying this open door policy is being placed in all headcounters instruction books in each operational dining facility. The open door policy was explained to the caller and he was reassured that he would be able to continue dining at the OCS Dining Facility which was closer to his duty station.

Call: Caller said in the mornings when she leaves Davis Hill, she has to wait at least five to 10 minutes to turn right because of drivers that are waiting to turn left. She said there is a traffic sign that says no left turn from 7 to 8 a.m., but drivers are not complying with it.

Directorate of Public Safety's response: The caller was contacted and her concern was the intersection where 1st Cavalry Division Road intersects onto 1st Division Road. It was explained that the military police will focus on that particular intersection whenever patrols are available to do so, especially between the hours of 7:30-8:30 a.m., which the caller stated that was the most frequent times when the no-left-turn violations occurred. Efforts will be made to curb the problem.

Call: Caller expressed concern because residents do not abide by the leash law for their pets.

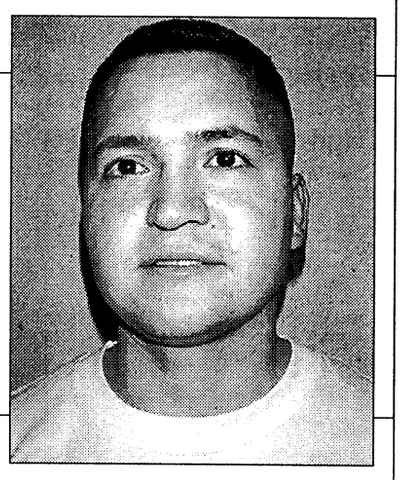
Directorate of Public Safety's response: USAIC Reg 210-5, para 6-9b, reads: "...Pets outside must be on a short leash and at the heel around others. Long leashes are allowed, as is voice command, as long as the owner is alone with the pet. As soon as other pets, or persons, are near a short leash has to be used." Under para 6-9c, it reads: Repeat or serious violations may result in loss of government quarters."

VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think makes Fort Benning the best installation in the Army?

Spc. Troy Rudolph, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "The way the Soldiers are treated here. Soldiers are treated fairly here. It is like a family — one big happy family."

Shelly Holladay, family member — "I think this is the best installation because of its relationship with the community. The people who live here are listened to, and the school system is the best in the Department of Defense Education Activity."



Deborah Nelson, family member — "This place is the best because of the NCOs and the training that is done here. This post has people who care about the Soldiers and their standard of living. The facilities are great — Youth Services and the schools are the best. My children don't want to move."

Terri Bond, Dexter Elementary School — "The schools — the teachers understand the needs of military children with moving from school to school. We've learned how to make them feel welcome, and this makes the whole family feel welcome."

Maj. Kristin Phillips, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "I like this post better than any other place I've been. I like my job, and we're close to family. The community and the schools are the best."

Capt. Mario Cortes, B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think it's the best because of the extensive Infantry training available here. The neighbors, as a community, support each other through all the training and deployments."

"It's great that they're coming to help us out," he said. "To be honest, I'm really nervous about coming back from Exodus, so it's nice having them tell you just where to go and how to get there."

Pvt. Kabu Graham, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, agreed.

"It's pretty helpful, having them get you prepared for going back," he said. "My Greyhound ticket had a problem with it when I left for Christmas. Every drill sergeant I ran into was real helpful by pointing me in the right direction to get it fixed."

The transition back to post went off with little to no problems, said Funk.

"The Soldiers are doing the right thing for the most part," he said. You've always got one or two who aren't. For the most part, the Soldiers are doing a great job."

Pvt. Rich McClary, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, shaves before meeting his fellow trainees at the airport.

Post gears up for MLK day

Civil rights celebration slated for Jan.14

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

"He (MLK) was a true Soldier of justice, and we should celebrate the contributions he made to the country."

— Sgt. 1st Class John Johnson
Equal Opportunity Office, NCOIC

The post celebration of Martin Luther King Jr.'s life is slated for 10 a.m. Jan. 14 in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

The theme for this year's remembrance is Celebrate! Act! A day on ... not a day off.

This year's theme emphasizes the importance of remembering Dr. King's work and legacy, said Sgt. 1st Class John Johnson, Equal Opportunity NCOIC.

"I visited the Lorraine Motel and Civil Rights Museum in Memphis," Johnson said. "On the balcony, where MLK was shot hangs a wreath."

King died because he used non-violent protest to fight for human rights, he said.

"He was assassinated April 4, 1968, and I think we should celebrate his birthday and pay tribute to him for what he has done for all humanity."

The guest speaker is Brig. Gen. Earl M. Simms, the commanding general at Fort Jackson, S.C. Other entertainment includes music performed by the Infantry Band and the Faith Middle School Choir.

"I read that MLK wanted to be remembered for serving others," Johnson said, "not for the Nobel Peace Prize or other awards, but for loving and serving humanity. He was a true Soldier of justice, and we should celebrate the contributions he made for this country."

Army, Air Force, Navy and Marines, because of the back-to-back rule.

"We won it last year so we can't win it again this year," she said. "We are eligible for the Chief of Staff of the Army award."

If the post wins the Chief of Staff of the Army award, it would mean a $200,000 award.

The CINC winner in the ACOE competition wins $500,000.

Hodges said the teams won't finish the visits until sometime in February, making it close to the end of March before final determinations are made as to who will take home year 2000 awards.

Inoculations: Pulled from shelves until new can be made stockpiled more than 1 million doses that would have to be recertified before they are used, according to David Oliver, principal deputy undersecretary of defense for Acquisition and Technology.

Bailey said DoD has no plans to halt anthrax inoculations altogether.

"The program is safe, effective and necessary," she said, "and we will continue to meet the highest possible standards."

Defense Secretary William S. Cohen delayed the second phase of inoculations until the new production facility built by Bioport, the Michigan-based manufacturer, achieves FDA certification.

"The program is safe, effective and necessary, and we will continue to meet the highest possible standards."

— Dr. Sue Bailey
Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs

Bioport built the new production facility after demolishing the smaller state-regulated facility on the same site.

The larger facility is necessary to meet DoD production requirements of some 400,000 dosages a month.

The old plant produced just 2,000 doses a month.

Defense officials thought the process — from demolishing the old plant, building the new one and getting FDA certification — would take less time than it has.

"Frankly, it has been more difficult than the department and Bioport expected to move from a small, state-regulated production facility to a large, modern production facility that meets state-of-the-art FDA requirements," Bailey said.

The Pentagon has left the date open as to when the second phase of inoculations will begin.

In the meantime, the Army, as executive agent for the anthrax program, has assigned a general officer to provide full-time oversight and review of Bioport processes to help facilitate FDA certification.

Inoculations for troops deploying to danger areas will continue on schedule at Fort Benning, said a U.S. Army Medical Department Activity spokesperson. Those already involved in the inoculation process should continue on their established schedule.

USO: Keeps Soldiers relaxed

Exodus, said Capt. James Funk, operations officer for 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — the unit running the tactical operations center at the airport during Exodus.

"The USO has done an awesome job from the beginning," he said. "We've had a lot of people come through there during the Exodus, and they have just done a great job. If you go in there, you'll see. They do a great job every day."

Pvt. Lakouad Salamedoine, a 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. trainee, said he was glad to have a place to take a break on his way back to basic training.

"The USO is a good thing," he said. "It's nice to have a place to get comfortable and have something to do while you wait. It has provided me with a relaxing point in my trip back to basic training."

Salamedoine said the USO also was a good place to make new friends.

"You can meet new people here — we're all Soldiers so we have something in common," he said.

The USO, which is staffed with volunteers, offers a wide variety of services and information for service members to include crisis intervention services, transportation assistance, communication assistance, emergency food, temporary lodging assistance, a hospitality center with TVs, a children's area and a reading room with work stations.

The USO provides services for all service members including new enlistees, Soldiers and their families in transit, troops deploying, reserve component members and military personnel and their families temporarily located in the community.

Austin said the USO couldn't continue its work without the help of others.

"We exist only because of the good of the community and donations," she said.

The USO is a charity organization that depends on donations to fulfill its mission. The USO also receives contributions from United Way and the Combined Federal Campaign.

Donations can be sent to: USO, P.O. Box 20963, Terminal Atrium, #320, Hartsfield International Airport, Atlanta, GA 30320.

The USO is open every day of the year including Christmas. The hours are from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays and 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Sundays.

For more information, call the USO at (404) 761-8061.

Personnel crunch could change orders

Soldiers may be diverted enroute to gaining unit

Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — In response to new manning priorities established by the Army Chief of Staff, the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command Enlisted Personnel Management Division has begun identifying Soldiers currently on assignment instructions for possible diversion to higher priority units.

Soldiers on assignment instructions for overseas commands or priority one assignments such as drill sergeants, instructors, or recruiters will not be diverted according to PERSCOM officials.

Soldiers having report dates to their gaining command of Feb. 1, 2000 or later and identified for diversion will have their original orders deleted by PERSCOM and issued new permanent assignment instructions.

In some cases, Soldiers may be diverted to a division or armored cavalry regiment on the same installation specified in their original assignment instructions.

Soldiers who have re-enlisted for an assignment to a specific installation will continue to be assigned to an installation for which they re-enlisted, but may receive a pinpoint diversion to a specific division on that installation.

Personnel leaders at all levels are available to answer individual soldier questions regarding new or amended assignment instructions. New personnel messages reflecting new assignments will be sent to diverted Soldiers, but Soldiers needing additional information are advised to call PERSCOM, EPMD, Interactive Active Response System, 1-800-394-3763, to obtain information about their assignment.

Army officials establish world-wide Army website

New site boasts easy information access quickly

Ali Bettencourt

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army became the first service to stand up an internal web site available to the entire service community late last year when it opened a new military Intranet.

"Army Knowledge Online," (www.us.army.mil), is the Army's global Intranet, and offers active-duty and reserve Soldiers, Department of the Army civilians, retirees and other authorized users a secure environment to communicate and access a warehouse of military-related information, said Maj. Kristina Van Nederveen, AKO project leader.

No other service offers a global Intranet like Army Knowledgee Online at this time, she said.

AKO looks and acts like other commercial portals, offering chat room capabilities, free e-mail accounts and the ability to personalize the homepage, Van Nederveen said.

"We looked at what they were doing in the private sector, to see what type of features people want, and we incorporated them into our portal," she said.

E-mail accounts with AKO can be checked from any web browser, allowing Army personnel to easily work with their e-mail while on temporary duty, while moving or even after retiring, Van Nederveen said.

"You can have the same e-mail account for your entire military or civil service career," she said.

The portal's search engine only searches web sites with the military domain, (.mil), for information. This helps in cutting down the number of unrelated hits that often result from an Internet search, Van Nederveen said.

"This is the most powerful search engine online for Army content," said Maj. Charles A. Wells, AKO program manager.

AKO also offers a people search that currently allows users to locate other AKO users and will ultimately be linked to the U.S. Army Total Personnel Command's Total Army Personnel Database and a similar database for DA civilians allowing it to act as an Armywide locator, Van Nederveen said.

> "There is the potential to cut down on the amount of TDY people have to do and time people work on a project (with the new site), because they can work on the same document or briefing together online."
> — Maj. Kristina Van Nederveen
> Project leader, Army Knowledge Online

Newsgroups, Army news updates and important messages from the Secretary of the Army and the Chief of Staff are also one click away on the site, providing the Army community with quick access to important and relevant information, she said.

"The web site is helping people get their job done," Van Nederveen said. "There is the potential to cut down on the amount of TDY people have to do and time people work on a project, because they can work on the same document or briefing together online."

One of the biggest concerns for the portal is keeping it secure from computer "hackers" and private from telemarketers and other commercial interests who would want to access the list of registered users, she said.

To do that, AKO uses a sophisticated encryption program that safeguards the portal, she said.

Twenty-seven thousand people access AKO, Van Nederveen said. AKO managers expect 50,000 users by the end of this fiscal year.

"We think that once the word spreads to the Soldiers out in the field, AKO will be as popular in the Army as other commercial web sites are in the private sector," she said.

AKO managers hope that as more Soldiers and others in the Army community begin to use the site, they will provide needed feedback so the portal can continue to improve and better serve the military community, Van Nederveen said.

Millennium brings change to savings plan

Civilian savings program offers more for investors in 2000

Douglas J. Gillert

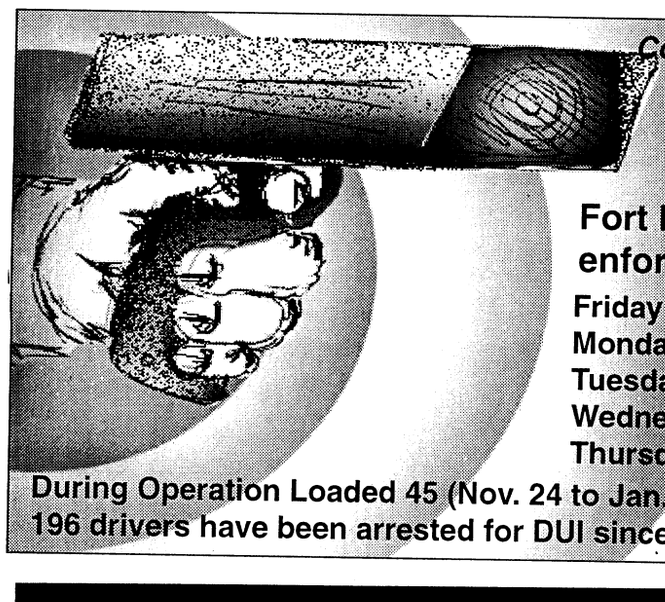
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — More investment funds to choose from and daily transaction processing are among the major changes coming May 1, 2000, to the federal employees' Thrift Savings Plan.

The Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board that manages the government's 401(k) for civilian employees will transfer all existing accounts to a new system in April. The system will convert dollar amounts to shares and offer investors two new investment options in addition to the three existing funds.

The new International Stock Index Investment I Fund will be invested in the Barclays Europe, Australasia and Far East stock index. The index consists of stocks of companies in 20 countries representing 45 percent of the value of the world stock markets.

The Small Capitalization Stock Index International S Fund will be invested in a Wilshire 4500 index fund. It consists of stock actively traded in American stock markets except those in the Standard and Poor's 500 index.



The I Fund is expected to be the most volatile of TSP's five in the short run, followed by the S Fund. Third is the current C Fund, a Barclays Equity Index Fund that tracks the S&P 500. The C, I and S funds potentially can yield higher returns than the safer but generally lower yielding F bond fund and G government securities fund.

Currently, changes investors make to their accounts take effect the following month. Under the new system, transactions will be processed each business day, giving investors more flexibility in managing their accounts. They also won't have to wait for a semiannual open season to change the amount deducted from their pay for Thrift Savings Plan investment. Open seasons will still occur for new enrollments, but the dates will change. The new periods will be April 15-June 30 and Sept. 30-Dec. 31. Currently they are May 15-July 31 and Nov. 15-Jan. 31. Enrollees will receive quarterly rather than biannual statements for the periods ending March 31, June 30, Sept. 30 and Dec. 31.

Loan and withdrawal transactions also will change. Quarterly statements will include loan balance information. Employees with unpaid loans will be able to reamortize them more than once and repay part of the loan ahead of schedule at any time, rather than just once and for the full amount.

All key transactions will be available on the Thrift Savings Plan Web site.

More information about the changes was published in the November 1999 issues of Highlights, mailed to current Thrift Savings Plan account holders and also is available on the Thrift Savings Plan home page (www.tsp.gov/).

Army hopes to boost recruiting with cash

Recruiters get nod to offer bigger enlistment bonuses

Doug Smith
Army News Service

FORT KNOX, Ky. — U.S. Army Recruiting Command officials announced qualified applicants are now eligible for a maximum cash enlistment bonus of $20,000.

This is a 67 percent increase over the previous maximum bonus amount of $12,000.

In addition to announcing the increased cash enlistment bonus, recruiting officials also announced the cash enlistment bonus can now be taken in conjunction with the Army College Fund, which offers up to $50,000 for college or vocational training after a four-year enlistment.

Previously recruits had to choose between the enlistment bonus or the Army College Fund. With the new program, that decision is no longer necessary for initial entry recruits.

Presently, cash enlistment bonus amounts range from $1,000 to $20,000 based upon the military occupational skill selected and the term of service.

There is now a cash enlistment bonus for two-year enlistments.

Until now cash enlistment bonuses were offered only for three-year or longer terms of service.

To be eligible for these enlistment incentives, potential Soldier applicants must have no prior military service, meet educational criteria, score in the top half of the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery and meet all other enlistment criteria.

Anyone who wants to learn more about these enlistment incentives should contact their local Army recruiter, call the Army's toll-free number, 1-800-USA-ARMY, or visit the Army recruiting web site at www.goarmy.com.

Fires set for habitats

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The skies over Fort Benning will be a little smoky next week as the Natural Resources Management Branch burns underbrush in various training areas around post.

Burning of vegetation is common on post from January through August 31 each year.

Foresters will be working in areas F1, G2, G7, H2, K3, K8, L6, P1, P3, Q3, Q4, Q6, S1, BB1 and BB5 starting Monday and continuing through Friday.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these areas to enhance the habitat for the red cockaded woodpecker, an endangered species, and to increase visibility and safety for training.

"By burning the underbrush, we are reducing the fuel load and making the training areas safer," Jack M. Greenlee, supervisory forester, Natural Resources Management, said.

Turkey and deer hunters using these areas need to vacate the premises before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Burning will start around 11 a.m. each day and end around 3:30 p.m., weather permitting.

"Units utilizing ranges and training areas should remove flammable debris, such as pine straw, leaves and trash from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance," Greenlee said.

75th Rangers remember fallen

Staff Sgt. Amanda Halford
U.S. Army Special Operations Command

Photos by Staff Sgt. Amanda Halford

The five Rangers killed during Operation Just Cause were remembered during the ceremony. The color guard was provided by HHC, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Ten years ago on Dec. 19, 1989, America sent her sons and daughters into combat in Panama as part of Operation Just Cause. On Dec. 17, the 75th Ranger Regiment, which spearheaded the conflict, remembered the mission and their comrades who didn't come home.

Eighteenth Airborne Corps Commanding General, Lt. Gen. William F. Kernan, the 75th Ranger Regiment commander during Operation Just Cause, was the guest speaker for the ceremony.

"I remember the jumpmasters leading us into the Ranger Creed at the three-minute warning and what that meant to me. I remember the disciplined manner in which Rangers went about their business on the drop zone, eliminating enemy resistance. I also remember how elated I was at how steady those aircraft were coming in, despite the fact that they were receiving fire, and the elation I felt at seeing those C-130s, Little Birds and Apaches working the objective area," Kernan said.

The anniversary celebration started Dec. 16, with a presentation on the military operation. The next morning, more than 200 Rangers — past and present — participated in an airborne jump that represented the 75th's daring operation into the Republic of Panama 10 years ago.

"We're here with the Ranger Regiment to honor the people who participated in that (operation) and to memorialize those who made the ultimate sacrifice. It's a very special occasion with people I respect and admire very much," Kernan said after the jump.

Kernan said as they flew to Fryar Drop Zone, he looked at the back of the plane and saw former Pfc. Pat McElrath sitting there. The general recalled with emotion the last time McElrath was enroute to a jump. McElrath was a mortarman with C Company, 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt. during Operation Just Cause.

During the airborne operation, another parachutist drifted under him, causing his parachute to collapse. McElrath plummeted to the ground, breaking his back. He hasn't walked since. The 75th Ranger Regt. obtained special permission for him to be on board the aircraft during the jump. At a ceremony later that afternoon at the Ranger Memorial, the 75th Ranger Regiment Commander, Col. P. Ken Keen remembered how the evening of Dec. 19, 1989, started.

"Ten years ago today was a Sunday afternoon, a day I suspect most Americans were home spending with their families, doing that last minute shopping for Christmas or just relaxing," he said.

"For many of you here, it was a much different Sunday afternoon. Some of you were probably were still scraping camouflage off your face having just come back from a full-scale rehearsal of an operation at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla. Some were still just returning home and some had not even reached the front door when the Ranger Regiment was notified to reassemble and send those forces into combat," Keen said.

Kernan explained the planning for the operation actually started in August of 1989 and went on for almost 18 months before company commanders were included. But it paid off.

"I remember the calm and methodical final preparations at Lawson Army Airfield, that's where I was. And I'm sure the same things were occurring at Hunter Army Airfield," he said. "I had the opportunity to address the Rangers at Lawson Army Airfield prior to boarding the aircraft.

"It was a strange sight, all those hardened, combat-laden, steely-eyed Rangers draped in Army wool blankets against the chill and the sleet that was coming down, ready to get on with the business at hand," he added. "I also remember, as I was standing out there, the determined commitment evident in each of their eyes."

Seven and a half-hours later, after being packed with 63 other Rangers in the C-130, Kernan was on the drop zone, in the midst of combat. More than 2,000 Rangers made the 500-foot combat jump on Dec. 20, 1989.

"By daybreak, we all had the bitter taste of combat, many for the first time. But every Ranger was committed to the nation and to their fellow Rangers," Kernan emphasized.

Their mission was to take control of the two airports into Panama, Kernan explained, so the 82nd Airborne Division could go in and complete their mission.

He said it was critical that they neutralize the Panamanian Defense Force's Sixth and Seventh Rifle Companies, which were Noriega's counter-attack threats for the invasion force.

"I was impressed with the precision in which the objectives were achieved," Kernan said. He talked about NCOs who took charge and ensured the success of the mission.

The ceremony also honored those who didn't make it back.

"I remember the pain and anguish we all experienced when we were informed of all our losses. We're out here today to commemorate the 10th anniversary of Just Cause and to honor five brave young men, Rangers who went willingly to do their nation's bidding. They made the ultimate sacrifice, giving the last full measure of devotion," Kernan said.

Ranges who died in Operation Just Cause were:

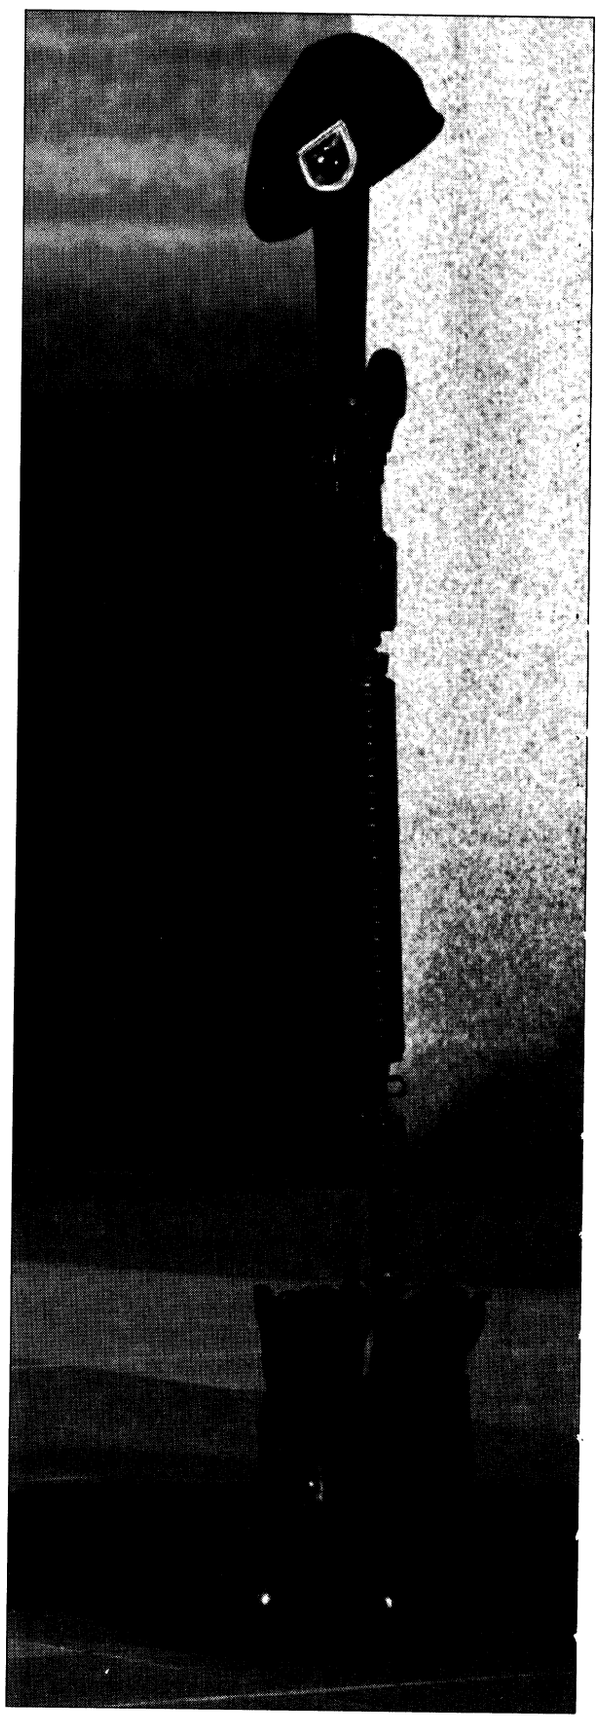
Staff Sgt. Larry Barnard, B Co., 3rd Bn., rifle squadron

Spc. Philp Lear, B Co., 2nd Bn., rifleman

Pfc. James W. Markwell C Co., 1st Bn., medic

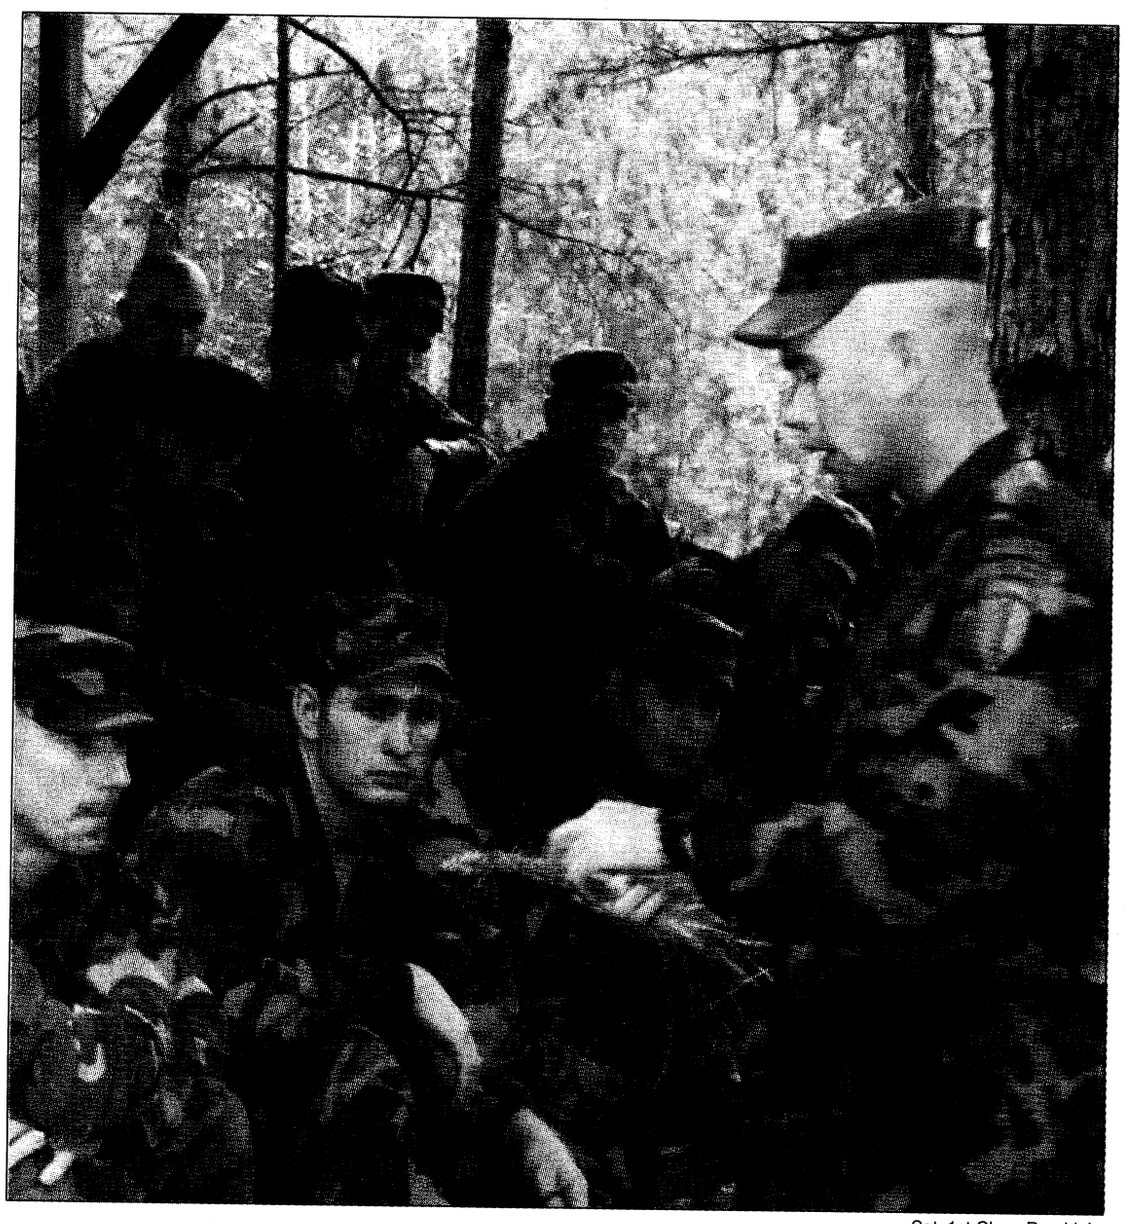
Pfc. John Price, A Co., 2nd Bn., rifleman

Pfc. Roy Brown Jr., A Co., 3rd Bn., rifleman



"Wherever America has been confronted with a tough mission, Rangers have led the way. It has always been so; it will always be that way," he said.

"As I look to the future ... I see many more young men like those five, who will selflessly serve and serve with honor."



Although invited, former President George Bush was unable to attend the ceremony. He sent the following remarks: "For the Rangers, I have nothing but unbridled respect and admiration. When the decision was made to liberate the people of Panama to save American lives and bring the narco-trafficker who ruled them to justice, the Army's elite Ranger Regiment heeded the call. By swiftly and successfully completing the mission, the Rangers earned the admiration and gratitude of Panamanian and American citizens alike.

"There is no way that I might ever properly convey what I keep to this day in my heart for the men and women who served so honorably in this mission. Although I can't be with you as you gather to commemorate this profound 10-year anniversary, please know that my appreciation joins the chorus of millions in our grateful nation."

During the ceremony, a beret with the 75th Ranger Regiment flash was placed on an M-16 in rememberance of the five Rangers. Kernan and Keen also laid a wreath to remember all Rangers at the

A black beret with the 75th Ranger Regiment's flash was placed on an M-16A2 rifle in honor of each Ranger killed during Operation Just Cause.

State-of-the-art armored vehicles put through paces during testing

Ali Bettencourt
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Companies from six foreign countries and the United States will demonstrate their state-of-the-art medium-armored vehicles for Army officials throughout January at Fort Knox, Ky.

Army Soldiers will put 35 French, Turkish, Canadian, German, Swiss, Singaporean and U.S. vehicle platforms through a series of live-fire, mobility, agility and endurance tests during the month-long "platform performance demonstration," said Col. Joseph Rodriguez, director for the Transformation Axis. (The Transformation Axis is the Training and Doctrine Command cell in charge of operational and organizational requirements for the Army's new initial Brigade Combat Teams.)

The Army is in the market for an off-the-shelf vehicle that can serve as the basis for a new fleet of lighter vehicles, and is holding the demonstration to see what is currently available, Rodriguez said.

The new vehicles will outfit two initial Brigade Combat Teams being stood up at Fort Lewis, Wash., he said.

The new platform and BCTs are part of the Army's response to Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki's vision of making heavy forces lighter and light forces more lethal, mobile and survivable, Rodriguez said.

The intent of the BCTs is to: deploy in 96 hours and be combat ready upon arrival, Rodriguez said. The BCTs will be most effective in small-scale contingencies and applicable to stability and support operations and major theater wars, he said.

To do that, the new vehicles must be lighter than the tanks, Bradleys and artillery pieces the Army currently has, and must have a uniform platform that can be used for all the vehicles needed in the brigade — from a command and control vehicle, to the anti-tank and reconnaissance platforms, Rodriguez said.

"Today, when we deploy the heavy force, we can get one M1 tank in the C-17 aircraft," Rodriguez said. "We think we can put four to six of these medium-armored vehicles in one C-17, depending on which armored vehicle the Army ultimately selects and decides to buy."

The heaviest part of an armored division is not the tanks or Bradleys, it is the fuel for those vehicles, Rodriguez said.

The next heaviest aspect is the ammunition and then the vehicles themselves, he said.

Army officials will look for a vehicle with reduced fuel and ammunition weights, an interchangeable design that negates the need for 20 to 30 different mechanics and 20 to 30 different drivers, Rodriguez said.

Once in the area of operation, the commander in chief should be able to move the BCT and its equipment via a C-130, Rodriguez said.

That couldn't be done with today's mechanized force, he said.

"Everything in this brigade has to fit into a C-130 transport aircraft," he said. "If it doesn't fit into a C-130, it doesn't go into this brigade."

The demonstration will educate the Army on what is available and allow officials to communicate the Army's requirements to industry, he said.

It is not a competition, yet, he said. After the demonstration, the Army will determine the modifications and technology insertions the platforms need and will put out a request for proposals, Rodriguez said.

A "drive off, shoot off," for the vehicles contractors construct, is anticipated in May, and a final decision could be made in June or July, Rodriguez said.

Innovative military family programs eligible for extra funding

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Department of Defense-authorized private organizations — to include enlisted, NCO and officer spouses' clubs — that provide military families with innovative support may be eligible to receive extra funding through a Fisher House-sponsored program.

Five organizations will be recognized for developing innovative programs to improve the quality of life and support of military families in their military communities, according to retired Army Col. James Weiskopf, a spokesman for Fisher House. The non-profit Fisher House Foundation Inc. has 26 houses located at military and Veterans Affairs medical centers across the country, which help 6,000 families annually. One award each will be given to an organization that supports the Army, Marines, Navy, Air Force, or Coast Guard, said Weiskopf.

The organization judged to have the most innovative program would receive a check for $10,000. The other four organizations will receive $5,000 each.

In an open letter to members of the military and their families, Arnold Fisher, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Fisher House Foundation Inc., announced a partnership of Newman's Own, Fisher House, and the MilitaryTimes. Newman's Own provides the funding; Fisher House provides the program administration; and the MilitaryTimes Newsweeklies provide the advertising for the program.

The three organizations have created their partnership because together they believe that no investment pays a higher rate of return than investing in improving the quality of life for America's service men and women and their families, said Weiskopf.

World War II Navy veteran and actor Paul Newman has donated more than $100 million for educational and charitable purposes since 1982, when he began selling Newman's Own products, said Weiskopf.

Newman's Own products were first introduced into the military commissary system in 1997, said Weiskopf, who noted that a portion of the company's after-tax profits are donated to the Fisher House program.

To be eligible, the organization submitting the plan must be a private organization as defined in Department of Defense Instruction 1000.15.

The deadline for applications is March 15. Copies of the application and other information can be obtained on the worldwide web at http://www.militarycity.com/communityaward, or by calling the Fisher House Foundation at (888) 294-8560.

DoD stands down Y2K operations center after successful holiday weekend

Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Characterizing the Y2K rollover period as "a remarkably successful weekend," Deputy Secretary of Defense John Hamre announced Jan. 4 that DoD was standing down its Y2K operations center.

During a Pentagon briefing Hamre said the minor glitches that did occur, combined with a normal start of the business week, makes it unnecessary to continue a full-scale watch on the millennium bug.

"Everything worked fine. We just had a small handful of problems," Hamre said, crediting the "literally tens of thousands of people" involved in making DoD's Y2K repairs during the past two years.

"We had no problems with any of our forces deployed anywhere," Hamre said. "Every one of our commanders in chief reported that they were under positive and affirmative control of their theater throughout the entire rollover period."

Some of the minor glitches Hamre referred to included a "swipe card" not allowing entry to a building, a cash register that did not function at a facility in Okinawa, and some computers that did not automatically convert to the year 2000 — a problem that was solved simply by rebooting the computers. He said the glitches were no more significant than a local dry cleaner not being able to get his or her computer working.

Except for a reconnaissance satellite, "nothing had any operational implication," Hamre said. As he had reported in previous briefings during the holiday weekend, Hamre again explained that a satellite-based intelligence system experienced a Y2K failure shortly after the rollover of Greenwich Mean Time. The failure meant that intelligence officials were unable to process information from the system for two to three hours.

Hamre said the problem was not with the satellite itself, but on the ground in a processing station, and emphasized that within several hours a back-up system was in place and operational.

"We had a minor loss of the normal sequence of things we observe on an ongoing basis from this asset," Hamre said.

"It was not judged to be significant in quantitative terms and it was not judged to be significant for military terms because the backup system took care of all our high-priority military requirements."

Although not surprised DoD sailed through the Y2K rollover period without serious problems, Hamre said the Pentagon had anticipated more people would try to use the time period to attempt to hack into DoD computer networks.

DoD is standing down its Y2K operations center for now, but Hamre said it may have to be re-energized at the end of February, when computer systems go through the leap year transition. Disruptions are possible if systems have not been programmed to recognize 2000 is a leap year.

But Hamre believes that scenario is unlikely. "If there was going to be problem that showed up, it really would have showed up at this window," he said.

Agency recruits for census takers

Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Here is an employment opportunity that comes along only every 10 years. Census takers and others are needed right now to work on the 2000 census.

The first census was conducted in 1790 and was a simple headcount of men and women in the country.

Since then life in America has become extremely complex and the collection of accurate census data is vital to the running of our nation.

Billions of dollars of federal, state, and local funds are allocated based on census figures.

The 2000 census will influence just about everything that happens in the country, from deciding how much money is granted a community for schools, hospitals, roads, and social programs, to how businesses decide how and where to expand.

About 500,000 people will be working on the census, which must be on the President's desk by Dec. 31," said Terrie Smith, a local recruiter from the Columbus Census 2000 office.

"We need to test and hire lots of census takers, crew leaders, and some office clerks to support the Columbus and Phenix City regional effort," she said.

"We are dedicated to quality and accuracy of the 2000 census and want to hire Soldiers (with flexible schedules), separating Soldiers, family members, retirees, and any other qualified individual looking for an excellent employment opportunity."

Census takers called enumerators are paid $9.25 an hour and 31 cents a mile for travel.

Although the census effort requires many temporary employees, it can lead to other federal employment opportunities, Smith said.

It is excellent experience for anyone with limited employment history, Smith said.

A 30-minute test is required by all applicants and will be conducted frequently during the next few months.

Successful completion of the test, criminal background check, valid drivers license and reliable transportation is about all that is required.

Applicants must bring either a passport (current or expired) or a picture ID (Drivers License) and Social Security card (or birth certificate) to prove employability.

Testing dates and sites are being set-up around the area.

Interested personnel can call Smith at 706-569-0201 or the main office at 706-653-0117 for information and reservations.

General information about employment on the 2000 census is available at 1-888-325-7733.

For more information call the Fort Benning ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Korea veterans prepare for 50th anniversary

Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The 50th anniversary of the Korea War will begin on June 25, 2000, and continue through July 27, 2003.

In preparation for commemorative activities that will be held in the United States and abroad, Korean War veterans are being encouraged to register with the U.S.-Korea 2000 Foundation. Specifically, the Foundation is looking for anyone who served in the armed forces, including the Coast Guard and Merchant Marine, for at least one day during the period June 25, 1950, to July 27, 1953.

Actual service in the Korean theater of operations is not a requirement. Family members of deceased Korean War veterans are also encouraged to participate.

According to Department of Veterans' Affairs statistics, less than 20 percent of Korean War veterans belong to any national veterans' organization. The Foundation seeks to identify and locate surviving Korean War veterans so that it might inform veterans of and, to the extent possible, facilitate their participation in 50th anniversary commemorative activities.

Retired Marine General Raymond G. Davis, a former Assistant Commandant of the Marine Corps, Korean War Medal of Honor recipient, and Foundation Co-chairman said, "We do not seek to commemorate the war, but rather the veterans thereof and the sacrifices they made to preserve democracy on the Korean peninsula almost 50 years ago."

Interested parties may obtain additional information concerning the Foundation, as well as print a copy of the registration form, from the Foundation's web site. Alternatively, individuals may request an information and registration packet by contacting the Foundation as indicated below. Please include name and complete mailing address.

U.S.-Korea 2000 Foundation, Inc., 4600 Duke Street, Suite 416, Alexandria, VA 22304-2517.

Students back to school in renovated classrooms

More than 400 children return to Wilson Elementary School after year in temporary trailers

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet correspondent©

Wilson Elementary School students and staff returned to their classrooms Monday after spending one year in temporary trailers while their school underwent extensive renovations.

"The students are excited," said Phyllis Parker, Wilson Elementary School principal. "Some of them started attending Wilson in the trailers and they've never had classes in the building."

"It's like starting a new school all over again," said Jerry Brown, fourth-grader.

The renovations were completed by Burgos Construction, from Montgomery, Ala., at a cost of nearly $3 million. Classrooms, offices, and restrooms throughout the school were remodeled. Construction began in January 1999 and was completed during the Christmas break.

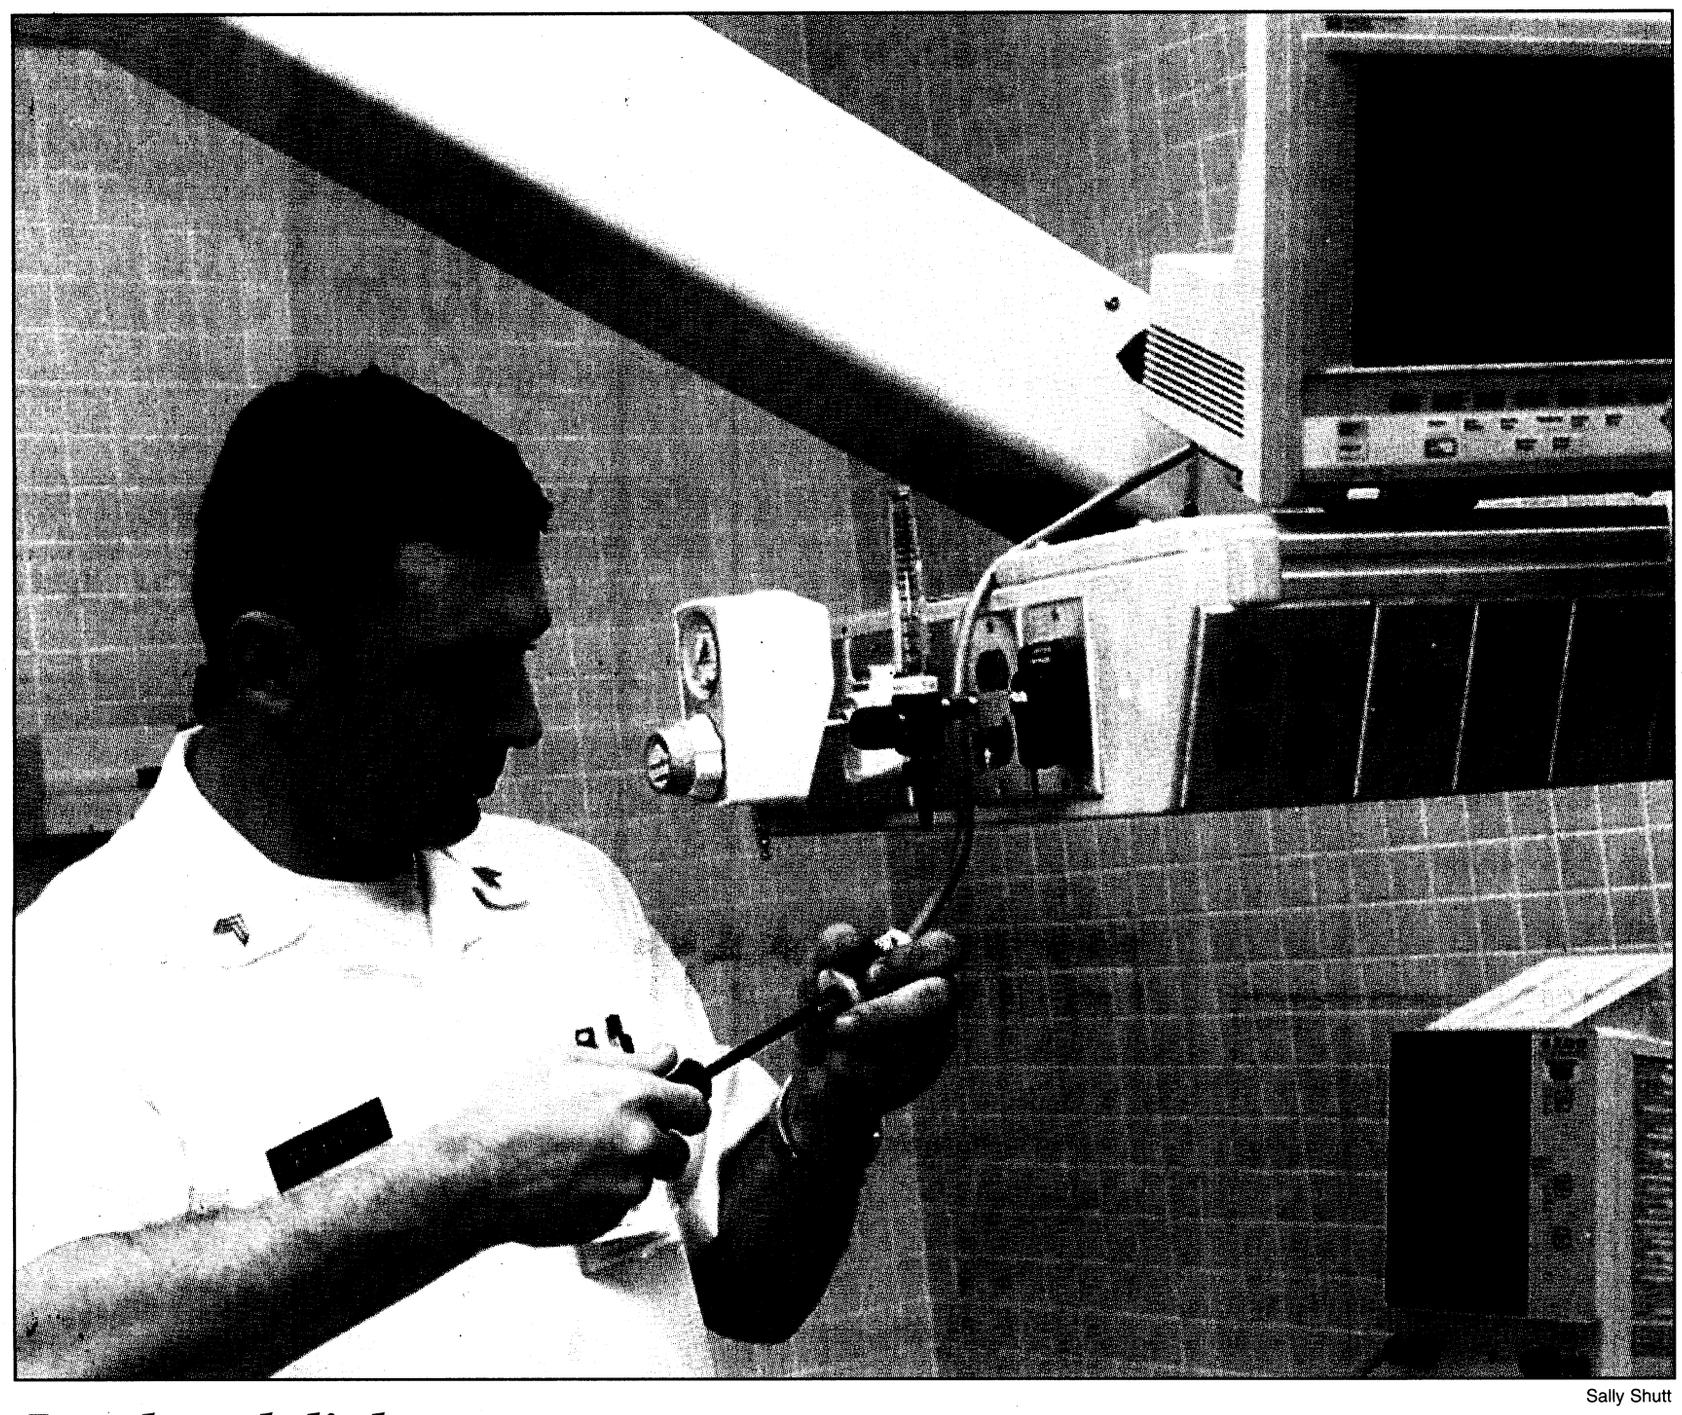
The school, which houses more than 400 students, was built in 1965 and several classrooms were added in 1988. New carpeting and tilework preceded the current renovations, reducing the overall cost.

Minor demolition began over a year ago to remove some existing interior walls. The building was rewired with the local area network system, which is used at Fort Benning

The layout of the school was not drastically altered, but better use of existing space created a new classroom, two new offices, and various storage facilities. The media center, cafeteria, and physical education center continued to be used in their original place within the building.

"The biggest inconvenience was having the students go in and out of the building during bad weather," Parker said. "Otherwise, we didn't miss a beat. We continued to have Internet access throughout the year. That was important to us."

"The trailers were scary during storms," Micaela Burress said. "The classrooms feel bigger now, and the hallways are so clean and quiet, it's like a hospital."



Each classroom was outfitted with new cabinets, coat racks, shelves, bulletin and dry erase boards, and storage compartments.

"Wonderful. Everything is so neatly organized," said Maria Phillips, third-grade teacher. "We have so much more room now."

The exterior of the school was also updated, with new lighting, safety doors, and tinted windows. Student members of the school's Butterfly Project will begin landscaping the lawns surrounding the school sometime in January, and the community will be invited to enjoy the results at an open house in the near future.

Now that the remodeling is complete, the temporary trailers are being transported to Dexter Elementary School, where plans are underway to begin similar reconstruction in February. Parker advised the staff and students at Dexter to view the next few months as an adventure.

"It's a lot of inconvenience, but just keep the end result — a new school — in mind," Parker said.

Cancer treatment study open to Tricare users

Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

The Department of Defense and the National Cancer Institute joined forces in 1966 to introduce the DoD/NCI Cancer Treatment Clinical Trials Demonstration Project.

This project gives Tricare beneficiaries the option to participate in the latest cancer treatment studies. Last summer the program expanded to included cancer prevention clinical trials.

Patients take part in cancer treatment clinical trials in hopes of a cure, a longer life expectancy, or an improvement in their quality of life.

In cancer prevention trials, people with early or previously treated cancer take medicines or supplements or participate in certain activities that doctors believe will lower their cancer risk.

Patients are closely monitored and cared for in the same facilities where standard cancer treatment is provided. These facilities include more than 2,000 sites throughout the U.S., such as military hospitals, clinics, comprehensive and clinical cancer centers, community hospitals and doctors' offices.

Costs for evaluation to determine eligibility and cancer treatments are covered under this demonstration project. All the usual Tricare rules, cost shares and deductibles apply. Evaluation and treatment must be rendered by a provider who participates in the clinical trials.

For general cancer information, call NCI's Cancer Information Service at 800-422-6237 or TTY (for hearing impaired) 800-332-8615 or visit their web site at http://cancernet.nci.nih.gov.

Prospective cancer trial participants must apply and receive authorization before any treatment is received under the clinical trial.

This also includes the evaluation for the trial. For an authorization to enter a DoD/NCI approved clinical trial, contact the DoD Cancer Trials Demonstration Coordinator at 1-800-779-3060.

The demonstration coordinator can assist you in locating clinical trials covered by this program and also authorize coverage for clinical trials held outside the Military Treatment Facility.

Tricare is a Department of Defense program offered by Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.

It could begin as a simple flash. An image or smell, or perhaps even the recollection of a touch. It might not stop there.

In time, a flood of memories could come rushing back and unmask a terrible secret about the past, revealing that someone did something to you which may have affected your whole life and will continue to do so unless you receive help.

It is estimated that one in three women are survivors of child sexual abuse. For women on Fort Benning who are victims of this kind of abuse, help is available. That help is in the form of the Sex Abuse Survivors Support Group.

The program is designed to help women who have been traumatized by sexual abuse to recover from their trauma. "By coming together with others who have had similar experiences in a safe and comfortable environment, survivors can learn to overcome their pain and get rid of it," said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Roggia, director of the Chaplain Family Life Training Center.

For more than 12 years, this program has been offered on and off.

Wilson Elementary club gets only darkroom in Fort Benning schools

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet correspondent©

Because the year-long renovations at Wilson Elementary School are now complete, the fledgling school's photography club is anticipating the use of its newly constructed darkroom, the only one of its kind in Fort Benning schools.

The club's founder, Dr. Wanda Person, media specialist at Wilson, first envisioned such a club for the school after taking a photography course over a year ago.

She postponed implementing her ideas until this year because of the massive reconstruction at the school.

During this time, Person met with architects and discussed plans for converting unused office space into a darkroom for her students.

In the meantime, the 12 fourth- and fifth-grade members of the club practiced their skills with digital cameras provided by the school and disposable cameras purchased by Person.

"I like taking the pictures, but it will be fun to learn to develop them when the darkroom is ready," said Josh Olive, fifth-grader and president of the club of the new shutterbug club.

The club meets Wednesdays after school, and Person said she anticipates more involvement once students begin to develop their own photos.

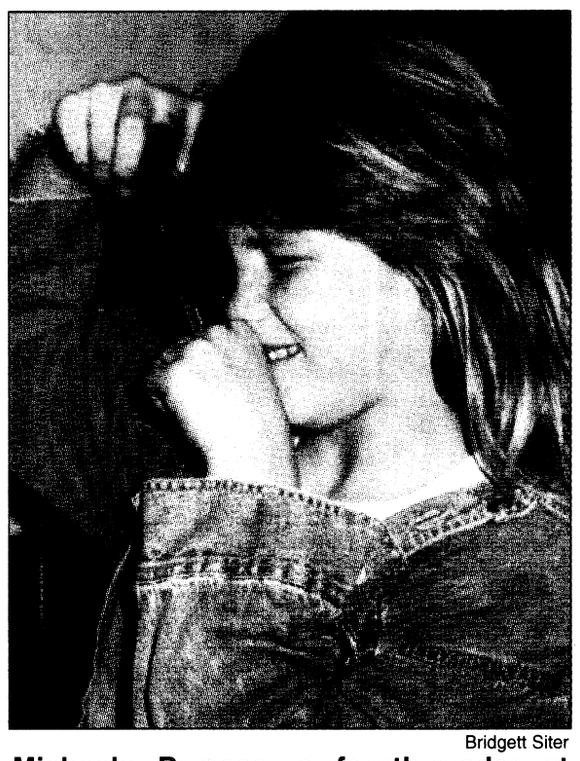
"We are planning several projects, such as scanning photos to make postcards, making scrapbooks, and turning photographs into puzzles," Person said.

Person plans to have club members become increasingly involved with the school yearbook as they develop their skills.

"This kind of activity boosts self-esteem and develops their confidence, as they see the results of their labors," Person said.

The students each keep a journal noting dates, times, and places of their photos, as well as lighting conditions and predictions about the outcome of their work.

They have selected their favorite photogrpahic works to be displayed in an unscheduled upcoming show at the school.



"Several of these students have a really good eye for interesting and unusual shots. I was impressed," Person said. "I didn't expect them to show quite this level of maturity in their work."

After discussing the various photographic styles, Person assigns her students a number of different types of photos, including still-life, landscapes, or portraits.

"I like the art of taking pictures," said Dewayne Metcalf, a fifth-grader who recently completed a still-life of painted autumn leaves. "I like the emotions in the pictures."

Initially Person planned to keep the club membership very small. The response has been so favorable that she now hopes to include third-graders next year.

"They have taken it so much more seriously than I thought they would," she said.

"These children have really thought things through and formed images of each photo in their heads," Person said. "I knew we would have fun and learn something along the way, but this was an unexpected surprise."

money matters

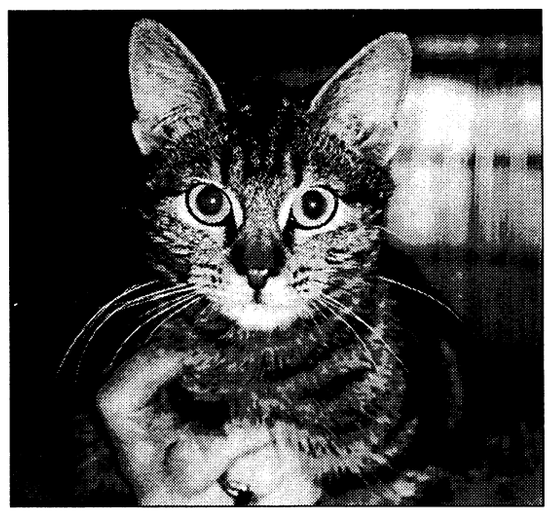
Bayonet correspondent

Campbell

Using debt to finance operations is commonplace in corporate America, as is illustrated by the presence of a large bond market. However, corporations are not the only entities that use debt to finance operations.

The U.S. government also uses debt as a means of raising capital. It does so by utilizing several different debt securities. Depending on maturity, U.S. treasuries have a yield comparable to that of a traditional savings or money market account. However, they are good investments for three primary reasons. First of all, U.S. treasuries basically have no credit risk, meaning that the possibility of them defaulting is almost non existent. This is due to the fact that the government can always raise money to pay its debts, either by raising taxes or printing money. For this reason treasuries prove to be good investments during turbulent market conditions.

Secondly, treasuries make attractive investments because they are exempt from state income taxes. This can prove beneficial for those living in states with high state income tax rates.



And finally, treasuries can be purchased and sold quite readily through a broker or directly from the Federal Reserve. This feature makes them extremely accessible to individual investors.

The U.S. government issues three primary debt securities; Treasury bills, notes, and bonds. Treasury bills are short-term securities with a maturity of less than one year. T-bills are purchased in denominations of $10,000, at a discount to their face value. For example, an individual investor wants to purchase a $10,000, one-year T-bill that is currently selling at a discount rate of 4.5 percent. This means the security is selling at 95.5 percent of its face value, making its current price $9,550. When the T-bill matures in one year, the investor is repaid their $10,000. Thus an investor makes $450 in interest, which provides an investment yield of 4.7 percent ($450 divided by $10,000). The investment yield is what should be observed when shopping for the best T-bill rates.

Treasury notes and bonds work much like corporate bonds. Treasury notes have a maturity of one to 10 years, and treasury bonds have a maturity that is greater than 10 years. T-notes and bonds pay interest semi annually, much like corporate bonds do, and upon their maturity, the U.S. government repays the face value of the bond to the investor. The longer the maturity of the instrument, the higher the yield. A 30-year T-bond typically yields more than a 6 month T-bill.

Although treasury securities do not offer the spectacular yields that other investments may, they do offer a great deal of safety for cautious investors. Treasury securities can prove to be good investments during periods of lagging stock market performance. As always, it is wise to consult an investment professional, or do the research personally, before purchasing an investment.

Campbell has a bachelor's in finance and a minor in accounting from Oklahoma University. He is presently working on a master's in business administration from the University of Phoenix.

I need a home

A 6-month-old female gray tabby and a 1-year-old, female long-hair spaniel mix dog are just a few of the animals available at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic. Many more are in need of a good home.

Pet owners are required to pay for initial vaccination procedure costs, which can be anywhere from $10 to $30. The clinic is open 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m, Monday through Friday.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I had a will done when I was preparing to go to Vietnam in 1969. It still says what I want it to say. Is my will still good? Does a will expire after a certain amount of time?

A. A Last Will and Testament is valid until you as the testator decide to revoke or nullify it. A will is revoked by tearing it up or marking it through with the intent to revoke it, or by signing a new will. Thus, your Vietnam era will, if you haven't revoked it, is still your current will. So you can rest easy because you have a will, huh? Well, not necessarily.

In the old days, it was necessary to locate one of the witnesses that signed the will (imagine trying to find one of the folks that signed that Vietnam era will — bet the witnesses put down a Fort Benning or Columbus address they haven't occupied in 30 years.) However, the laws in each state changed in the 1980s to allow for the addition of a self-proving clause at the back of the will. This extra page, signed by the testator, the witnesses and a notary public, makes it unnecessary to locate the witnesses. The probate of the will is much easier with the self-proving clause.

With a self-proving clause as part of your will, the probate will be relatively simple. The filing fee runs around $100 (the court charges by the page for recording so the cost will vary.) The Legal Assistance attorneys, who are licensed to practice law in Georgia, provide assistance with the drafting of Probate Court petitions for Soldiers, retirees and family members with military identification cards. The services are free.

Many married couples simply want to leave their worldly possessions to their spouses. It is possible to simplify the probate process in many cases by titling real estate and investments jointly with right of survivorship between a husband and wife. In Georgia, the warranty deed for your house and land must clearly indicate an intent to hold the property with right of survivorship by using such words as "joint tenants with survivorship" and "jointly with survivorship." Some states, such as Florida, by statue declare property that is owned by a husband and wife to be automatically held with survivorship. Investments such as stocks and mutual funds may also be held jointly with right of survivorship. The Legal Assistance Division can draft survivorship deeds and provide advice and assistance on these matters.

It is necessary that an attorney meet with you to discuss your needs and determine whether there are estate tax considerations and other factors that may affect your estate planning.

The Fort Benning Legal Assistance Division attorneys have been providing estate-planning services for years. However, it is not uncommon to meet a widow or widower whose spouse may have died either leaving a will without a self-proving clause or no will at all. It is a good rule of thumb to have your estate planning documents reviewed by an attorney every four or five years. Call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to meet with an attorney.

MACH celebrates first millennium baby

Fort Benning couple deliver hospital's first Year 2000 baby

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A new baby in the family is reason to celebrate any time of year. For the Rivera family of Fort Benning, the arrival of their newborn was extra special.

Thomas Martin Rivera arrived at 2:28 p.m. Jan. 1, the first baby of the new millennium born at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Y2K glitches, champagne, football and parades were not on Luz Rivera's mind New Year's Day; she was more concerned with contractions.

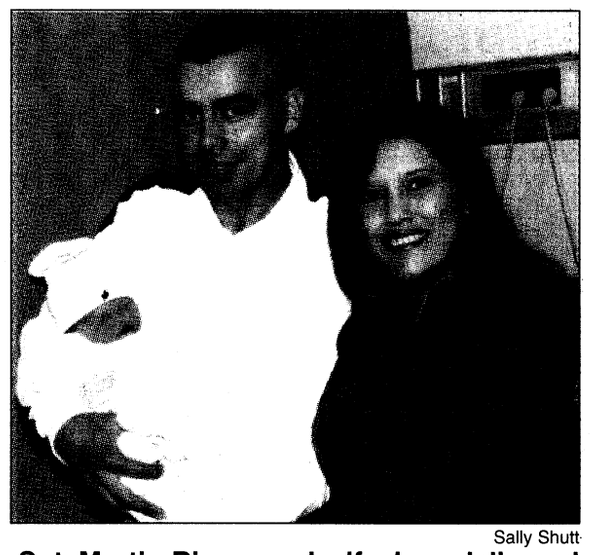
"When I was having him, I wasn't even thinking about Y2K," Rivera said.

"The nurses told us that if she hurried up, he (Thomas) would be the first baby of the new year," Sgt. Martin Rivera, 104th Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), said. "I looked at my watch and thought no way."

But, fortunately for Luz, the labor was short, two hours and 28 minutes.

"I had four contractions and three pushes," Luz said Monday afternoon before leaving the hospital with her husband and their new son, who was sporting a cap with "I'm a Millennium Baby" printed on it.

Thomas weighed 8 pounds, 15 ounces and was 21 inches long.



His older brother, Peter, age 3, had an unusual reaction to his new sibling.

"Peter has a lot of toys that run on batteries," Martin said. "When he first saw Thomas he was sleeping, and Peter told me the baby needs some batteries."

The U.S. Army Medical Department Activity and U.S. Army Dental Activity Auxiliary presented the couple with a special gift basket of baby items, including blankets, T-shirts, a pacifier and toy.

The auxiliary purchased the items and members took the basket to the hospital on New Year's Eve, Gail O'Hare, president, said.

The group also gave Thomas a silver bank engraved with "Martin Army Community Hospital First Baby of the Year 2000."

Health care, housing are top priorities for retention in military

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Health care and housing are two areas DoD must address to keep military recruiting and retention high, said Defense Secretary William S. Cohen.

Cohen, speaking at a conference entitled Strategic Responsiveness here Nov. 2, also said DoD is starting to see positive results from the changes to pay and retirement that were part of the fiscal 2000 Defense Authorization Act.

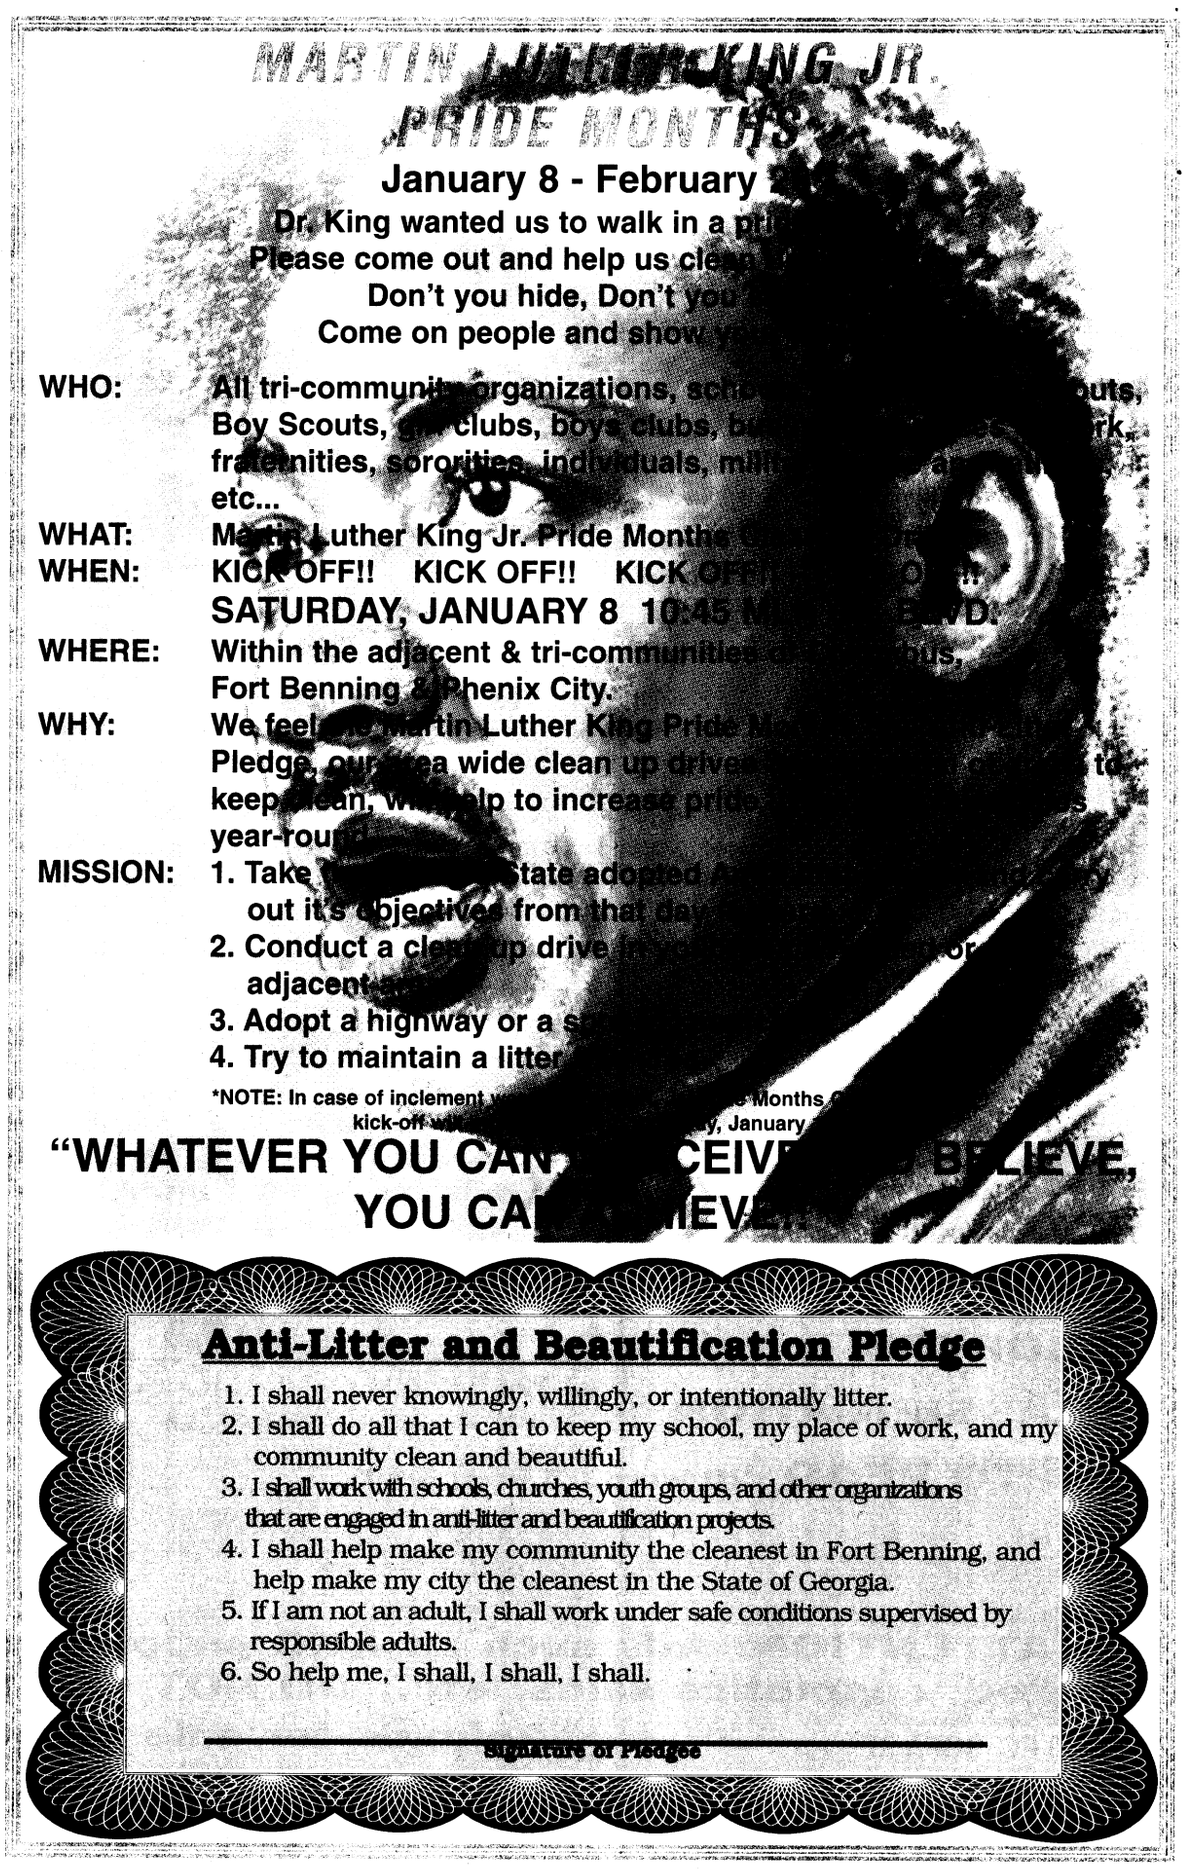
"What we have seen is, as a result of the pay raise, as the result of pay table reform, as a result of going back to 50 percent retirement, that there is a change ... in retention," he said. "When I was out on the USS Constellation a week ago, I re-enlisted 12 sailors. I asked each what caused them to re-enlist and they said pay and retirement benefits. They said, 'We think you're listening to what we say we need, and you're responding.'"

Cohen said members' attitudes are important because "we can't possibly pay what the private sector can pay and will pay." The military directly competes with private industries and other public institutions for the same pool of young people, he noted.

Cohen said that since Congress passed the authorization act, more service members have opted to stay in the service. In the case of the Army, for example, increased re-enlistments made up for recruiting shortages and helped the service meet its fiscal 1999 end strength numbers.

"We've seen in the most recent weeks some change in the attitude and willingness to re-enlist," he said. "Whether this will be enough to sustain that remains another question."

Cohen said the loudest complaints he hears during his travels are about the military health care system. "This is something we have to come to grips with," he said. "We have to be more efficient, we have to eliminate the long lines. We have to address the lack of satisfaction that our people are experiencing."



Cohen said he still hears many complaints about Tricare. "In fact, if we had to point to two other areas — now that we've addressed pay — you'd say housing and health care are of most concern to service members," he said.

He said DoD is trying to build housing for service members through an innovative program that leverages private sector participation — for every dollar DoD invests, the private sector puts in six or seven. He said the program is starting to work.

Cohen also said he thinks DoD must change its recruiting message, that it needs to make a different appeal to recruits.

"The mere fact that we say we'll pay for your college education frankly is not a big seller today," he said. "There are so many programs available from universities and colleges that, again, we're competing again in a very tough environment. We need to have advertising appeal to young peoples' patriotism, to show them what military life can and should be."

Finally, Cohen addressed the need of the military to be more predictable. "We have to provide as much predictability as we can in the lives of our service members," he said. "We have to make changes to lower the operations tempo, the time (service members stay) away from home."

School raises money for agency

Thousands of pennies add up to help for battered women

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Just in time for Christmas, students from Wilson Elementary School collected $638.50 in pennies to be donated to a charity of their choice.

The student council for the school voted to donate their collections to the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women.

"We did this to help people who can't have what we have," said 11-year-old Nicholas Williams, a student council member.

As of the Dec. 16, when the pennies were donated, there were about 15 children in the shelter with their moms, said Roxanne Campbell, legal advocate for the shelter.

When the students began the drive, pennies were collected and stored in a jar.

"We advertised around the school, then students collected pennies and put them in a jar," said 10-year-old student council member Adam Kiamco.

The collection of the pennies started in mid-November and ended Dec. 5.

Of the money donated, some went to the children to buy their mothers gifts and some went to the mothers to buy their children gifts.

The donated money was presented to the families in $50 gift certificates from Walmart.

"We all have a tendency to be greedy, and this donation was to teach the students to give," said Evelyn Montgomery, student counsel advisor.

Pennies were counted for no charge by the Sun Trust Bank.

The shelter gives battered women and their children from Columbus, Fort Benning and the Phenix City area a safe, temporary place to live.

For more information on the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women, call 324-3850.

Penny O'Connor
Directorate of Public Works

The Department of Public Works special vacuum truck crew has been hard at work clearing streets of leaves since repairs to the truck were completed.

Family housing residents can now rake leaves in a pile at the curb for pickup on their scheduled day.

For more details on pickup days, call Trent Lingafelter, the Roads Industrial Equipment supervisor, at 545-3725.

Units and activities that have yard waste (leaves, grass clippings and limbs) should deliver the material to the Material Recovery Facility, Building 4000, in Harmony Church, on Old Cusseta Road between 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. weekdays.

Do not place yard waste in garbage containers or brown dumpsters.

For more information, call Walter Nichols, Solid Waste Program manager, at 544-6142.

Curbside bulk leaf pickup: Leaves may be raked to the curb on the normally scheduled day, including Jan. 17.

The vacuum truck may run late in some areas, but will catch up as quickly as possible to maintain the normal schedule.

Holiday schedule for trash collection

There will be no yard waste picked up in family housing Jan. 17.

The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be Jan. 24.

There will be no refuse or recycle pick-ups Jan. 17.

Port, Kawamura, Fernandez streets, and Indianhead Terrace areas normally scheduled for pick-up on Monday will be picked up after the holiday on Jan. 18.

Refuse and recycle collection in Family Housing for Jan. 18-21 will be picked up as normally scheduled.

Homebuyers cautioned to check warranty

American Homeowners Association

Murphy's Law applies more than ever to owning a home. As much as we'd like our home and everything in it to last forever, something is always breaking down or wearing out.

Homebuyers need to be especially aware of the quality of their new home and the products that go into it.

"Be sure to look carefully at builders and the warranties they offer before choosing one that really stands behind the home," said Richard Roll, president of American Homeowners Association (AHA). "By keeping an eye on the construction warranty and the life cycle of various parts of your home, you'll be protected and better prepared to deal with a problem." For more information, go to http://www.ahahome.com

Homebuilders vary widely in the quality of building materials or products they use. Quality lumber, for example, is hard to find in many areas of the country. When a warped or green timber starts to dry, nails can pop out or a door can stick to the jamb.

That's why a warranty can be critical. It pays to research a builder's reputation and their warranties carefully for what they do and do not cover.

A typical new home warranty covers mechanical items such as plumbing, electricity, and heating and cooling systems for two years. Some builders offer a 10-year warranty against construction defects and repairs.

But the real test is not the warranty but the builder's reputation for following up on problems and fixing them to the customer's satisfaction. For example, concrete is supposed to last for 50 years but not if improperly mixed or formed. If the sidewalk breaks or the house foundation settles and cracks, is the builder going to stand behind the home or hide behind excuses?

The time to find out is before you buy. Ask for at least three customer references and call them, and check with state and local consumer affairs agencies for complaints.

Remember that no warranty is perfect or idiot-proof. A builder definitely should fix cracks in the sidewalk caused by settling. On the other hand, if you poured rock salt all over it and chipped it with your shovel while clearing the ice, whose fault is that?

For more information on any aspect of buying a home, go to http://www.ahahome.com, the web site for American Homeowners Association.

MDA offers free support group meetings

Muscular Dystrophy Association

The Muscular Dystrophy Association offers free support groups in the Columbus area for individuals and their families affected by any of 40 neuromuscular diseases, including muscular dystrophy, myasthenia gravis, spinal muscular atrophy, and amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS or Lou Gehrig's disease).

The groups meet regularly and are designed for individuals living with muscle-wasting diseases and their families.

"MDA support groups are a vital link for the million Americans living with muscle-wasting diseases," said Meg Hodges, MDA Regional Director. "Whether you're the parent of a child just diagnosed with Duchenne muscular dystrophy, the spouse of someone living with ALS, or an adult with any neuromuscular disease, the professionally facilitated groups provide a haven for sharing support, research updates and helpful information."

Area residents and family members affected by neuromuscular diseases can also participate in informal MDA-facilitated "Phone Friends" networks.

They can also take advantage of MDA's extensive online services, including its helpful "Ask the Experts" feature at www.mdausa.org. More than 200 of the world's leading physicians and scientists participate in "Ask the Experts," providing authoritative responses relating to neuromuscular diseases.

Individuals who would like more information on attending an MDA support group are encouraged to call MDA Program Services Coordinator Joan Rosenbaum in Tucker at (770) 621-9800.

Abused: Survivors receive help through support group, counseling

For more than 12 years, this program has been offered on and off.

Meeting as a group lets survivors know there are others out there who are experiencing the same kind of pain they are. It also helps them get in touch with their inner child, "and learn to love, comfort and nurture that child," thus beginning the healing process, Roggia said.

Of course, before a survivor can get help and begin that healing process, they must first recognize the symptoms of sexual abuse.

Fran Hutchens, a counselor at the Center, said, "Women in their 30s will begin to remember childhood abuse in the form of flashbacks or dreams. There are many other distinct and recognizable symptoms of sexual abuse, things such as pulling away from intimate relationships, nightmares, being easily frightened by particular smells, or touches, low self-esteem and difficulty expressing themselves to name a few."

Hutchens said any of these could be a red alert to the possibility of sexual abuse and it's very important to realize this and receive help.

"I can pretty much guarantee that if there is someone who is questioning whether it happened or not, it probably did," Hutchens said. "And to come in and deal with it early gives more time for healing."

Roggia emphasized that the program is completely confidential and no one is forced to talk about their experience unless they choose to.

"The key thing we want people out there to know is that the group is safe and confidential and it is not a place where victims will be traumatized again," Roggia said. "In fact, the first part of the session is aimed at providing educational information to the participants. During the second half they talk about what they learned from the first half and how it applies to their life."

It is ultimately the talking and sharing however, that can help develop strong bonds between the members of the group. Hutchens said, "A biproduct of this group is that members often become close and leave as a tight group of friends."

If someone isn't comfortable with the thought of being part of a group, Roggia said they are also willing to talk to that one person one on one.

In most cases getting help can heal a person in more ways than one. Many women find they are more outgoing, more verbal, less afraid of their bodies, less scared for their children and more confident in themselves after being in the group, according to Roggia.

He mentioned that the program has a consistent success rate, which is partly due to the fact that most of the women who come to the group are those who really want to get better.

"It takes a tremendous amount of courage for people to come and seek help," Roggia said. "Facing the truth is the most important part of the healing process."

The goal is to have two or more groups available to the Fort Benning population. The therapeutic team consists of: Shirley Koop, supervisor and project coordinator. Team One: Hutchens, program coordinator and facilitator along with Chaplain (Maj.) Mike Yarmon, co-facilitator. Team Two: Chaplain (Maj.) Ned Anderson, facilitator and Barbara Phillips, co-facilitator.

The first confidential support group meeting for "Survivors of Sexual Abuse" will be Tuesday from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Sign-ups are currently being taken.

There are no costs or obligations — except the obligation you have to help yourself recover.

If you or someone you know could use this safe, confidential source of help, call the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760.

Spending time with children teaches them your values

Playing with kids more important than doing dishes

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries

If you are a single parent you don't need to be reminded that you face an especially challenging job.

A noted Christian speaker and author, Josh McDowell, said, "If you're married but your relationship with your spouse is cold, at least you have hope that through love, work, counseling and prayer, your marriage can become what it ought to be. The single parent, however, doesn't have that hope. What do you do?"

Rupel

Divorce is the single largest contributor to single parenthood.

If at all possible, it is best that both parents, even though divorced, remain active in their children's life. And for single parents in the military, life can get pretty interesting when deployments take them away from their children.

How can the single parent model a loving relationship for their child?

Plain and simple, it cannot be done. However, there are some things that can be done that may help.

Using McDowell's book, How to Help Your Child Say No to Sexual Pressure, as a guide let me offer single parents some suggestions. Overdose your child with love. As much as possible, you should support your child's need for parental love by yourself.

It's quality and quantity that can make a difference. I realize that the vast majority of single parents have to work outside the home and then face more work when they get home.

For many, the last thing they feel like doing is playing with their child. So much to do and so little time to get everything accomplished.

However, as McDowell noted, "Aggressively loving your children takes a firm commitment on your part."

Second, divorce can bring the worst out in people and it is tempting to speak negatively about marriage. This can create an attitude in your child that you do not wish them to have.

Even though your marriage ended in divorce, talk to your children positively about what marriage can be. When they ask why your marriage did not work out, admit any mistakes that you may have made and assure them that even though you got a divorce, marriage can be a wonderful experience.

Third, sex outside of marriage is wrong. If you do not want your children to engage in premarital sex then you should not. Plain and simple, if it is not right for your children then it is not right for you.

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center exists to help all Soldiers and their families including single-parent families. If the pressures of being a single parent are overwhelming you, give the Center a call at 545-2050 or 545-7777 to get some help in meeting the challenge of being a single parent.

Relationship with Jesus gives shelter, hope

Chaplain (Capt.) David S. Baum
Ranger Training Brigade

reflections

My grandfather used to have a sign outside his home that read "Baumshelter" over a background picture of an explosion.

I am told this sign was typical of his creative sense of humor. He died when I was 8 years old so I remember only a few fading instances of his smile, laugh and comedic antics.

One of my strongest memories is a scene in his home years before he died. He, my uncles and older cousins would descend into the nether regions of that residence where he had a billiards table.

I remember waves of laughter as they played and that the adults spoke to each other and the children with respect. I remember feeling safe — surrounded by these strong capable men. It was a good place to be even if there was not a great amount of toys to keep me occupied.

I was blessed that my father made his home a shelter for his family as well.

As a chaplain I do a considerable amount of counseling and I know that not everyone reading this grew up in a home that was a shelter. Even today many homes probably should have signs at the front door that read "Danger Impact Area."

I am regularly amazed at how many survivors of physical abuse, neglect and incompetent parenting are able to grow into responsible adults.

Whether we have been raised in a nurturing home or an emotional war zone, we all desire a sense of security and a place of safety in a world where justice is incomplete, the weak and vulnerable in our community are abused and diseases consume our loved ones.

That place is found in a relationship with Jesus Christ. The Bible says that "He who dwells in the shelter of the most high will rest in the shadow of the Almighty." (Psalms 91:1 NIV)

The rains will beat down and the wind will blow but his shelter can stand the worst that Y2K brings.

- Fund raising efforts
- Other organizations you are requesting funds from
- Number of military affected
- The name and phone number of your point of contact

Submit requests to Officers' Wives Club of Fort Benning, P.O. Box 51978, Fort Benning GA 31995-1978.

For more information, call Nancy Carlisle at 687-9678.

ACS sponsors seminar — Army Community Service will sponsor a Car Buying Seminar at 6:30 p.m. Jan. 27. This is the place to get all your questions answered and learn tips to keep you from being taken for a ride. You work hard for your money, and that money should give you the greatest value possible. Where do you look for financing? New or used car? Buy or lease? What did the dealer pay for the car? What is the car worth? What kind of repair record does it have? These are only some of the questions which will be answered to keep you from having "buyer's remorse" and being miserable with what you thought was the car of your dreams. Come if you are even considering buying a car.

Registration is required to ensure there are enough materials. For more information, call ACS at 545-7517 or 545-4043 before the deadline of Jan. 21.

Education Center offers voice mail system — The Army Education Center now has a voice mail system. To receive information regarding the Education Center and on-post colleges, call 545-9681.

Patients urged to return records — Patients are reminded that official health care records are property of the U.S. Army. Records may be checked out for appointments and must be returned to outpatient records once care is completed.

It is extremely important that all records are maintained at the military treatment facility, especially in the event of emergent care situations.

For more information, call 544-1810.

Red Cross offers assistance — For Soldiers who need to reach family in a time of need, the American Red Cross Armed Forces Emergency Service Center is available 24 hours a day around the world. Soldiers can call toll-free at (877) 272-7337.

MACH and SJA offer Advanced Directive class — The Martin Army Community Hospital Department of Family Practice and the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate offer an Advanced Directives class. The class allows participants to make their wishes known in writing in case the time comes when they cannot express their desires.

The two-hour program provides an education session with an attorney and physician.

For more information, call 544-3065.

Strays stay at Vet Clinic — Animals impounded at the Fort Benning kennel facility may be released by calling either the Military Police at 545-5222 or Veterinary Service at 545-4444 or 545-5690 during normal business hours, 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Circumstances requiring release at times other than regular business hours should be coordinated through Veterinary Service. An impoundment fee of $5 per day for each animal will be assessed for the days an animal remains in the stray facility.

Animals not claimed by an owner within three working days become property of the U.S. government and may be adopted by a new owner or euthanized as circumstances dictate. For more information, call 545-4444 or 545-5690.

Tricare briefings available — Briefings are available for all organizations (units, family support groups, wives organizations, retiree groups etc.) on accessing military health care under Tricare. These briefings highlight the different categories and also could help beneficiaries understand Tricare a little easier. The Marketing Office at Martin Army Community Hospital offers various types of Tricare materials and briefings. For more inforation or to set a briefing for a organization, call 544-4950.

Divorce and separation briefings set — The Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, conducts briefings for those who request an appointment to discuss divorce or separation issues. After the briefing, an attorney will answer questions and set up appointments.

The briefings will take place at 9 a.m. Mondays at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5. Reservations are required.

For more information, call 545-3281.

Army Community Service answers PCS questions — If you are moving to another installation and need information about schools, shopping, medical and dental services or housing, the Standard Installation Exchange Service can answer most of your questions. For more information, call ACS at 545-4043 or stop by Building 2624 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Office publishes rules for yard sales — The Community Life Office provides rules for yard sales.

- Yard sales are authorized for Saturday, Sunday and federal holidays only.
- Signs advertising the yard sale cannot be placed prior to the day of the sale and must be removed the same day.
- Signs will not be placed on telephone or utility poles, trees, street signs, fences or buildings.
- Yard sales will not begin before 8 a.m. and end no later than 6 p.m.
- Displays of property for sale must not appear unsightly.

Any unsold items must be cleared away from the area and properly disposed of upon conclusion of the sale.

- Yard sales are not a business venture.
- Yard sales will not interfere with the normal flow of traffic or cause a safety hazard.

For more information, call the Community Life Office at 545-3069

Red Cross offers training — Red Cross Health and Safety provides training and certification in the following areas: Community First Aid and Safety, CPR and First Aid-Adults, CPR for the Professional, Pet CPR, Lifeguard Training, Babysitting for Teens and HIV and AIDS. Instructor Trainer certification is also available in CPR, lifeguarding, HIV and AIDS and babysitting. For more information, call Joyce Stratton at 545-5194.

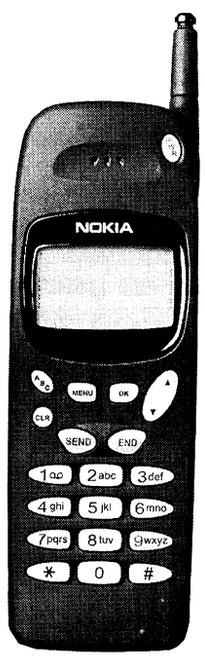
off post



Auburn University offers workshop — The Auburn University Outreach Program Office will offer a workshop, "Storytelling: Finding Your Voice" Feb. 26 at Pebble Hill, the Auburn University Center for Arts and Humanities.

Those interested in storytelling will learn the mysteries of a well-told story, and how to give their storytelling the spark of life. Christine Shumock, workshop leader, is a well-known storyteller throughout the Southeast and has led national storytelling workshops.

The cost of the day long workshop is $75 and pre-registration is required.

For more information or to register, call (334) 844-5101 or (334) 844-3109.

Local athlete scores top spot at CSU

Cross country standout began athletic career with father at Sand Hill

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The smile on her face can't hide the pain of the stress fractures and pulled Achilles tendons that plague her every time she runs.

The pain shoots up and down her legs as she runs, throbbing as if on fire.

But that pain has no place on the face of this determined young lady. Just a smile and a positive attitude — that is you will see from this student-athlete that many say is on her way to stardom.

"No pain, no gain," she said as she looked back on her illustrious running career that has earned her the bragging rights as one of the area's top female student-athletes.

Danerys Encarnacion, a sophomore cross country stand out at Columbus State University, has rocketed to the rank of the Cougar's top female runner during her two-year tenure with the organization.

"I never really thought I would like to run," said the 19-year-old athlete. "I just started one year to get in shape for basketball, and I fell in love with the sport."

Although that love kept the soon-to-be star from fulfilling her hardcourt dreams, it began an athletic career that would send Encarnacion running down the road to a full-ride college scholarship.

Encarnacion began her running career logging countless miles running with her father's basic training company.

Her father, who was a drill sergeant at the time, said the runs were more of a way for his only daughter to experience Army life rather than an endeavor in physical fitness.

"She was considering joining the Army at the time, so I suggested she come run with us and get a glimpse of what the Army was like," her father Jose said. "I'll never forget when she would come out there. She ran circles around those guys," he said.

While the days of her running with basic trainees were short-lived because Jose was transferred to Hawaii, she said her running career continued as they made the move to the tropic.

"I continued running in Hawaii for the couple years we were there, and my times continued to get quicker," she said. "But it wasn't until we came back that I realized my improvement."

The family of three returned to the Columbus area during Encarnacion's sophomore year of high school where she earned recognition as one of the area's top teen athletes.

"I continued to compete throughout high school but I always just thought of it as a hobby really," she said.

Encarnacion

"I didn't think anymore of it until coach came to me and said there was a chance for me to get money for college by running, she added."

"I figured if someone was going to pay me to do something I love, why not," she said smiling.

That love still continues today as Encarnacion continues to hone her running record in hopes of earning a spot in this year's top 10 regional runners.

"I have to continue to work hard in the off-season to get where I want to be for this fall," said Encarnacion who logs nearly 40 miles a week during the competitive season. "But if I continue to work hard I can be in the top 10."

John Norton, CSU cross country coach, said Encarnacion's dreams are within reach.

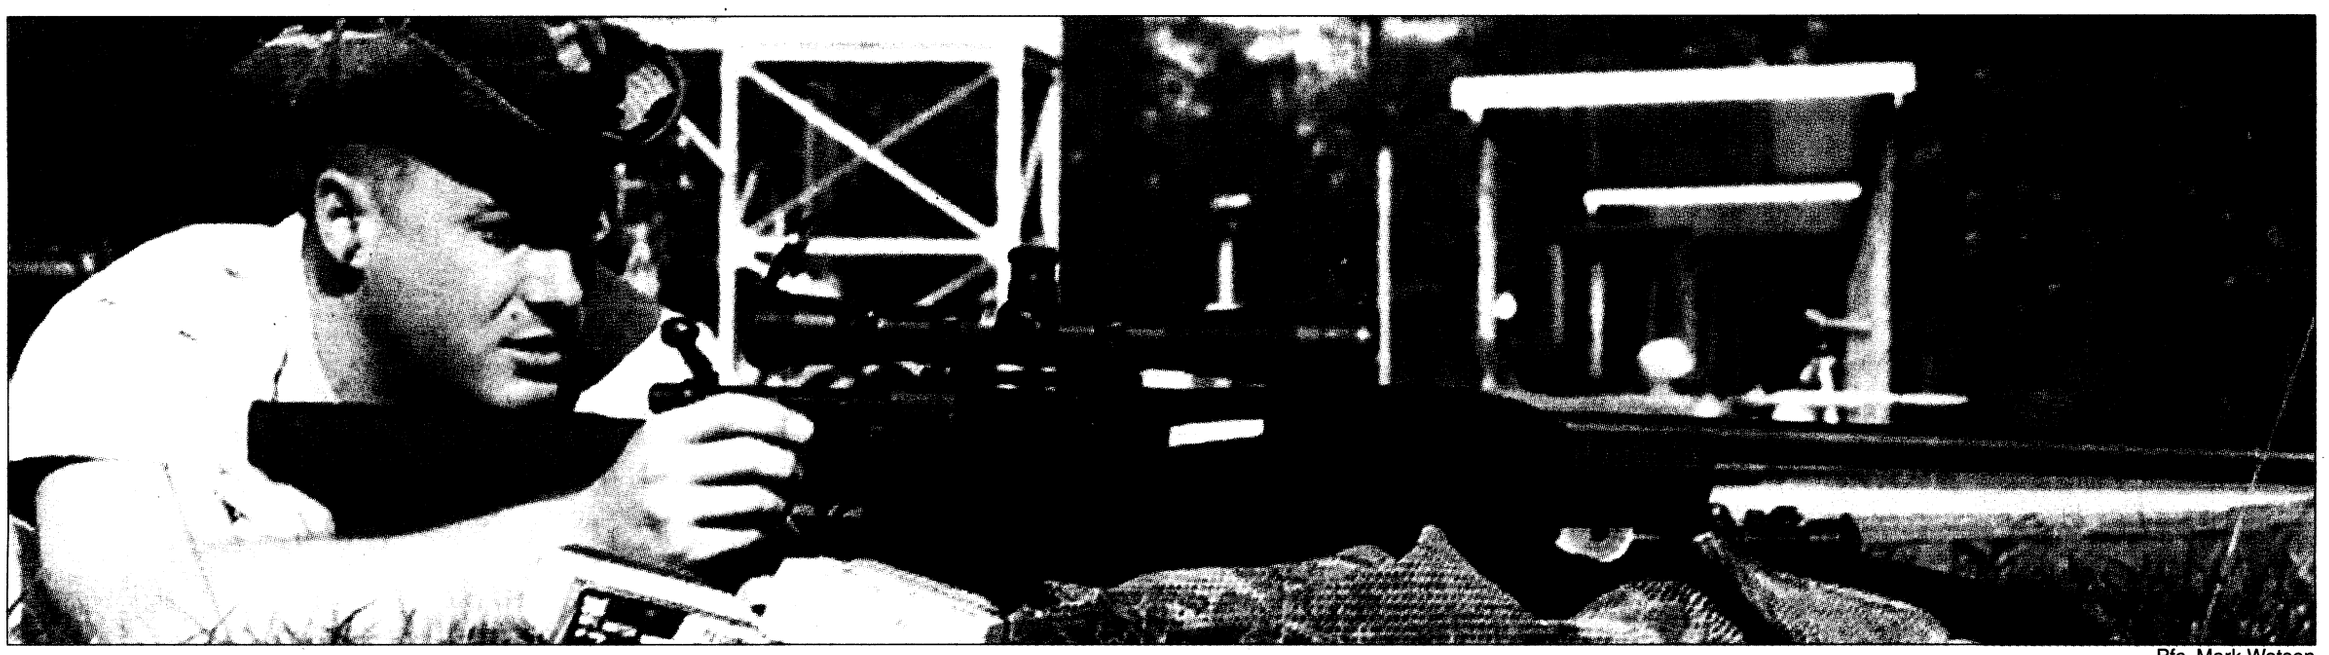
"She is quite a young lady with quite a lot of potential," Norton said. "She is well within reach of being one of the area's top runners."

The fate of Encarnacion's success, he said, will be determined this spring when she begins boosting her training schedule.

"If we can establish a strong program for her this spring there will be nothing that will hold her back from being in the upper echelon of the region's runners," he said.

Norton, who calls Encarnacion 'a bright young lady and an asset to the team' said establishing that program may be a little difficult as the student-athlete is involved in a variety of clubs and organizations.

"It's tough sometimes trying to get together since she is such a busy young lady," he said, "but she has the desire and the ability to make any of her dreams come true."



Last year, Encarnacion led the lady Cougars to a eighth-place conference title as she logged her best time of the year, a 21 minute, 3.1 mile finish.

Both she and Norton hope to improve those records this year.

"We have a couple of perspective student runners who could be a huge asset to not only our team but to Encarnacion as well," Norton said. "The details on the new runners are still a little sketchy, but we could see a couple of girls come here who could push Encarnacion to be the best she has ever been."

While the addition to the student-athlete sect could be a boost for the psychology major, Encarnacion said she islooking forward for the prospect for next year's team.

"It looks like we are going to have a great team this year, and one that I think will be very competitive in the area," she said. "Now all I have to do is work hard so I can make my dreams come true."

Rifle, pistol shooters fire into new millennium with tactical matches

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

All the Y2K hype had no impact on the Millennium Tactical Rifle and Pistol shoots as 45 pistol marksman and 20 rifle sharpshooters blazed away in their respective shooting categories.

The shoot was held at English Range Jan. 1 to bring a bang to the new year.

"It was a great day for the competitions," said Jim Graham, assistant manager for Fort Benning's Rifle and Pistol Club.

For the pistol competition, the stock service class was the largest event with 27 shooters competing. Ricky Phifer bested the class with Johnathan Moore and Red Matthess close behind.

Moore also won the custom service, service revolver and back-up automatic classes.

Stephen Shrader out shot the custom service shooters with Al Edwards and Jim Crissman nipping at his heels.

For the Tactical Rifle shoot, the competitor class held the most shooters. Wayne Smith zeroed in on his target to get the win. Thomas Fuller shot for second place and Shane Waldon scored in third place.

For the semi-automatic precision class, Dan Williams won. In the professional class, Shane Waldon got the win. For the military bolt action class, the lone shooter was Moore, and in the bolt action precision class Clayton Meals took the win.

For more information on up-coming rifle and pistol shoots, call the Rifle and Pistol Club at 689-3371.

West Point announces selection of new head football coach to lead gridiron cadets

Jim Fox
U.S. Military Academy Public Affairs Office

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Army has selected Todd Berry, the former head football coach at Illinois State University, to lead the gridiron Cadets into the new millennium.

Berry, who has spent the last four years at Illinois State University, was introduced as the new head coach of the Black Knights during a noontime press conference at Michie Stadium. He is the 32nd head coach in the history of intercollegiate football at the U.S. Military Academy.

"I have been inspired by a lot of people in my life," said the 39-year-old native of Miami, Okla. "But I've never been any place where the institution has inspired me. West Point is certainly inspiring. I am a very passionate person and I enjoy being motivated. 'The Long Gray Line' ... that means something to me.

"There are a lot of college coaching jobs out there that are perceived as being great opportunities, but many of those positions never intrigued me," Berry added. "I like thinking about the ideals of West Point. I want to be around people that think big; that dream big; that aspire to be all that they can be. That's why this is opportunity is so appealing to me."

Berry's selection comes less than two weeks after Army's 19-9 loss Dec. 5 to the Midshipmen of the U.S. Naval Academy. He replaces Bob Sutton, who posted a 44-55-1 record at West Point during his nine seasons as Army head coach. Credited with constructing a championship football program at Illinois State from the ground level, Berry guided the Redbirds to the best record in school history this past year and the semifinals of the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs. Illinois State closed the year at 11-3, falling to Georgia Southern, 28-17, on Saturday. Berry directed ISU to a flashy 19-7 record (.731) the past two seasons.

> "Todd is a tireless recruiter, and a genuine and sincere person who will not only respect the traditions of West Point, but will live them."
> — Lt. Gen Daniel W. Christman
> Superintendent, U.S. Military Academy

A two-time Gateway Conference Coach of the Year honoree, and this year's GTE Region 4 Coach of the Year, Berry directed Illinois State to its first-ever Gateway Conference title this past season, the school's first outright league crown of any kind since 1950. On the heels of a 3-8 record in 1996 and a 2-9 mark in 1997, Berry presided over one of the finest turnarounds in Division I-AA history a year ago, when he guided the Redbirds to an 8-4 record. That season marked the school's first-ever trip to the postseason playoffs and a national ranking at year's end. He has been a finalist for the Eddie Robinson Award, presented annually to the top collegiate head coach at the Division I-AA level, each of the past two years.

Under Berry's direction, Illinois State established or equaled 50 individual and team school records on game, season and career levels. The Redbirds have been listed in the top 25 national rankings for 19 consecutive weeks. In addition, his players captured 73 individual postseason awards, including four Academic All-America citations and six All-America certificates. This past week, he was listed as a "rising star" in the coaching industry by one prominent national sports news agency.

"Across the country, Todd Berry is considered one of the finest young talents in the coaching profession," said Rick Greenspan, director of Intercollegiate Athletics at the U.S. Military Academy. "He is both offensive-minded and creative. Todd boasts a charismatic personality and has the ability to identify and attract talent while maintaining a high standard of excellence throughout every facet of his program.

"He possesses tremendous organizational skills and a dynamic presence," Greenspan continued. "Todd is a tireless recruiter, and a genuine and sincere person who will not only respect the traditions of West Point, but live them," said U.S. Military Academy Superintendent Lt. Gen. Daniel W. Christman.

"We were looking for someone who personified the core values of the institution and who kept football in its proper perspective as part of the larger mission for the Military Academy producing commissioned leaders of character for our Army," said Christman. "Todd Berry exemplified every one of those characteristics.

"After interviewing Todd for several hours this week, I came away enormously impressed with his commitment to Academy values, his passion for winning and his absolute love for the Military Academy. This was also the opinion shared by everyone we included in the interview process."

Berry was named head coach at Illinois State on Dec. 18, 1995. His emergence came as Illinois State sought someone with a passion for recruiting, outstanding communication skills and a consistent offensive and defensive scheme. Prior to arriving at ISU, Berry spent four years as offensive coordinator at East Carolina University under head coach Steve Logan. He played a vital role on the Pirate teams that advanced to the Liberty Bowl in both 1994 and 1995. During each of his 13 years as an assistant coach, Berry was involved with a team that won a conference championship, played in the postseason and/or was ranked nationally in passing offense.

"I want to be aggressive in all facets of the game," he has said in the past. "I know that you win with defense first and I appreciate that. Most of my background is on offense, but to be an effective offensive coordinator you have to understand defense."

A 1983 graduate of the University of Tulsa, Berry has worked for some well-known head coaches during his ascent, holding down assistant positions on the staffs of Logan at East Carolina, John Cooper at Tulsa and Johnny Majors at the University of Tennessee. While in high school, Berry was an all-state selection in football (quarterback) and track and field at Miami (Okla.) High School. After foregoing scholarship offers from the University of Oklahoma and the University of Arkansas, as well as a nomination and acceptance from the U.S. Air Force Academy, he attended Tulsa and played quarterback for the Golden Hurricane from 1979 through 1981 before suffering a career-ending knee injury. Berry began his coaching career as an undergraduate at Tulsa with Cooper before moving to Tennessee as a graduate assistant and tight ends coach in 1983.

Off the field, Berry is an active participant in coaching clinics and a regular member of the speaking circuit. He has also been highly involved with his favorite charity, the Children's Miracle Network, and has served as television host for the CMN fund-raiser the past three years. Berry assumes his new duties immediately.

National Lender Agrees To New Vehicle Loans For Individuals With Bad Credit!

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of reliable transportation.

COLUMBUS,GA. Kevin Thompson, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circum-stances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Inclu-ding Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

A National Lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of reliable transportation.

In the past, second and third chance vehicle financing was available primarily on older used vehicles which, in many instances needed monthly, if not weekly maintenance. Vehicles that in some cases wouldn't even continue to function for the full term of the Installment Contract. But all that is about to change.

Good people who have had rough times can now purchase brand new cars, trucks, sport utility vehicles and family vans and enjoy the reliability of a brand new vehicle while reestablishing their good credit.

You simply pick out the new vehicle from Bill Heard's massive inventory and take over payments directly from the bank. Instead of coming out of your pocket with any cash you may indeed find yourself receiving a cash signing bonus of thousands upon thousands of dollars just in time for the holidays. Those would be in the form of cash rebates and any cash you may desire on trade equity, if any.

If you find yourself "stuck" with a vehicle you absolutely abhor probably the result of having to deal with a used note-lot out of desperation, we can in most cases break you free of that undesira-ble vehicle and pay it off regardless of what you paid for it and in several notable instances we have actually put people in new vehicles at a substantially less monthly obligation than they presently have.

Lenders will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expwy.—Today through the end of December.

Best of all, new vehicle financing may be offered to those who would not normally qualify for such an arrangement at rates that banks often reserve for their blue chip clients. Quoting Thompson, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing."

Jim Stallings, Representing the dealership, has arranged for unbelievably competitive payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the impending holiday season.

When pressed for an example of the new models available under this Pilot Program, Stallings replied, "Well, there is virtually no limit to the possibilities. Brand new Silverados, Suburbans, Tahoes, Blazers, even Venture Family Vans, 2000 Impalas, the all new 2000 Monte Carlo's, Cavaliers, Camaros, Malibus. If Chevrolet builds it, it qualifies for this special and unique financing opportunity. Many people who felt that their options were limited to a Buy-Here-Pay-Here situation or an older used car are incredibly excited to learn that they can provide their family the safety, dependability, and reliability of a brand new automobile covered by General Motors new car Warranty and Road- side Assistance Program. This offer may be for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle".

Quoting Thompson, "When word of this arrangement was leaked, we worried that our existing inventory would not stand up to the certain demand that it would generate. I was so concerned that I arranged for an additional two hundred and twenty new Chevrolets to be delivered to the dealership from two different overstocked Chevrolet dealers in Atlanta. This additional inventory has our total availability at near-ly one thousand new Chevrolets, but I would advise every potential buyer to shop as soon as possible to insure a good selection, because when the floodgate opens, I don't think that even one thousand chevrolets are enough to cover demand.

You may shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much you may borrow by calling Mr. Stallings or Mr. Thompson at 706-322-8888, out-of-town 800-868-1585.

"Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

Angela Malcom free-lance interviewer, speaks with loan officer Kevin Thompson and his assistant Jim Stallings who will be on hand granting "high risk" loans at rates generally reserved for blue chip clients!

Faulty line bursts, causes spill

Workers attempt to contain the spill Jan. 6.

Driver finds bay full of oil, calls 911 for help

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

More than 200 gallons of 10W-40 motor oil spilled into a bay at the transportation motor pool Jan 6.

The spill was caused when a high-pressure line in a holding tank broke around 3 p.m.

Motor vehicle operator Linda Lee discovered the spill.

"When I walked by the bay, I looked in because I heard some noise," Lee said. "I thought I saw water, but that didn't make sense to me because it hadn't rained. I tested it with the tip of my shoe. When I pulled it back I could see it wasn't water."

The Directorate of Public Safety Fire Department responded to the scene where firefighters contained the spill within minutes of arriving on the scene.

Containment booms and an absorbent that expands 27 times its original weight were used in controlling the spill, said District Chief Lamar Fussell with the Fire Department.

Fussell said he expected close to 100 percent recovery of the spilled oil if not 100 percent. The wooden baseboard will leach some oil, he said.

"My only concern in the recovery process is what went through the external wall of the next bay," Fussell said.

While the wall was a concern, Fussell said they were lucky because the oil spilled onto a concrete pad with no sewer or storm drains.

The spill was contained and did not become the environmental nightmare it could have been, he added.

After the absorbent soaked up the oil, it was loaded into recovery

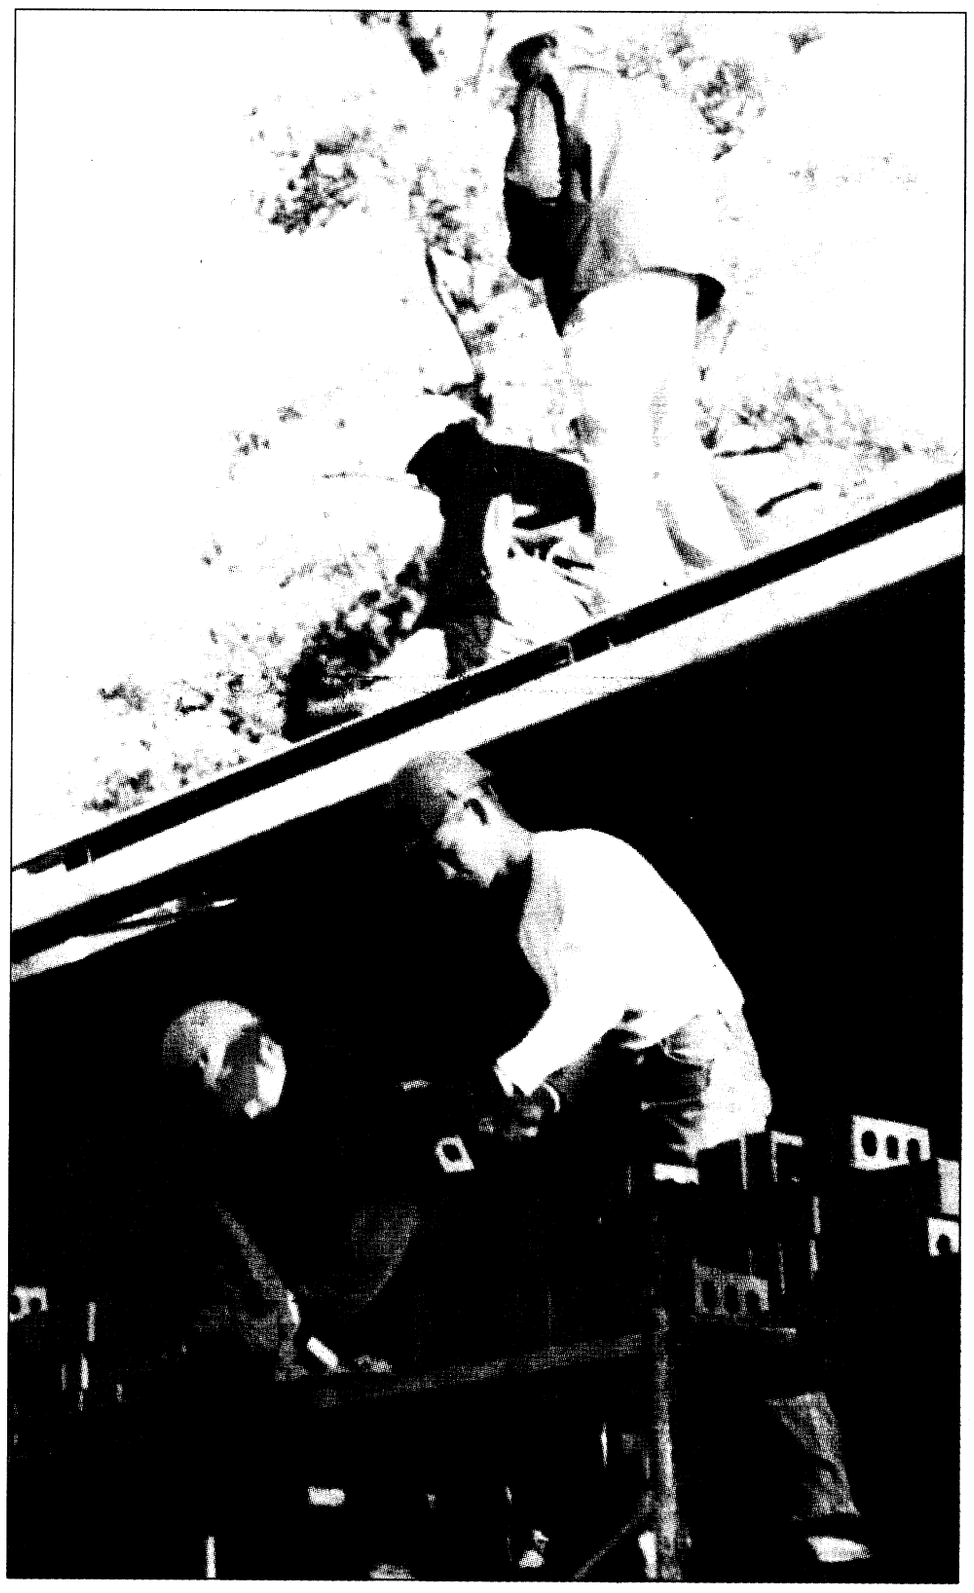
BCTB activation pushes post to new construction

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Helmets and hard hats have similar characteristics, and this past year an increase in one meant an increase in the other at Fort Benning's Sand Hill.

The number of basic trainees increased with the activation of the Basic Combat Training Brigade, prompting a direct jump in the number of construction workers in the area.



Five new buildings and a physical training field have been completed in the last few months, and renovations are ongoing at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), Infantry Training Brigade, where incoming troops are processed and growing pains are obvious.

For Kenneth Holloway, the installation's master planner, and the engineers at the Directorate of Public Works, the project has been a "logistical challenge," Holloway said.

Planning started back in the summer of 1998 when Fort Benning received word that the BCTB would be activated. Funding arrived in February 1999, and Holloway estimated the construction cost so far to be $7 million.

Renovations to two "starship" buildings — Roush Barracks, home to 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry, BCTB, and Hanson Barracks, home of 2nd Battalion, 47th Inf., BCTB — were the first priority. The work was completed by June when the BCTB's three battalions were activated and the first trainees

DoD proposes housing legislation

Cohen wants to boost BAH, privatize quarters

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Secretary of Defense William Cohen announced last week a plan that would put more money in service members pockets and give America's fighting force a better place to lay their heads at night.

The new initiative, Cohen said, will increase basic housing allowances and is hoped to give new life to the push for privatization of on-post housing.

The proposal is slated to cut the required out-of-pocket housing expenses for Soldiers living off post by 15 percent by the year 2005.

"If you are on base, your housing and all of your utilities are paid for," Cohen said in an American Forces Press Service news release earlier this week. "On the other hand, if you're off base you are required to pick up 15 percent at a minimum, and as much as 19 percent currently.

"We've got a real disparity," he said.

That disparity prompted the Department of Defense's top civilian to push for the boost in military housing allowances. And if the legislation passes, the impact on the Fort Benning community could be substantial.

"This could be a huge help for our Soldiers," said Ron Smith, Fort Benning's chief of family housing. "Presently, Fort Benning can only house 50 percent of the entire population on post. Therefore half of our people are forced to live downtown and pay the required 15 percent of their housing costs.

"If this new legislation is successful, that would no longer be the case," he said.

Congressional law presently requires Soldiers living off post to pay 15 percent of their housing expenses, an inequity Smith said he hopes to see disappear with the proposed legislation.

While the boost to the basic housing allowance is one of the headliners for the new bill, Smith said those who presently live in government quarters were not left out in the legislation.

"Cohen's proposed plan also

Hospital seeks new Prime patients

MACH may lose funding if new members don't enroll

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

With more than 10,000 vacant Tricare Prime slots, Martin Army Community Hospital officials are working to increase the number of enrollees during January and February.

Col. James Beson, MACH commander, and Terry Beckwith, director of marketing and public affairs officer, are giving briefings all over post in an effort to get more active-duty family members signed up for the health care program. They will extend their efforts in mid-February to reach retirees and nonactive-duty family members.

The two point out the benefits patients receive by enrolling in the program, including access to a primary care manager and shorter waiting times for appointments.

And there's the benefit MACH will receive in increasing its Tricare load — future funding for the hospital will be based on the number of patients enrolled in the military's managed health care program.

It's called Enrollment-Based Capitation, and while it's not new in the managed health care industry, it is new to the military, Beson said. Military treatment facilities will receive a set amount per person enrolled in the program starting with the 2001 budget.

"We are looking ahead to the next couple of years, because our funding comes two years out," he said.

Although 100 percent of the budget will not be determined by the EBC, Beson said, "We don't know for sure, but I would estimate it to be greater than 75 percent of our budget."

The hospital's complicated budgeting system in the past has been based on factors such as the number of patients seen, regardless of Tricare status. That will change with the switch to EBC, and Beson is preparing for the transition, designed to take place over a three-year period.

The impact of MACH falling short of its enrollment capacity has already been felt

"This year's budget was decremented based on a deficiency model indicating that we were not fully enrolled," he said.

"You can read between the lines. They took money away this year because we were not fully enrolled. That's an indication to me that we need to be fully enrolled or they will take money away next year."

Faith students learn King's lessons

Editor's note: The students at Faith Middle School participated in an essay contest in honor of Martin Luther King Jr. The theme of the contest was "Remember, celebrate, act; A day on, not a day off," which is also the theme of today's commemorative service.

Seventh-grader Anuarite Mubangu will read her essay as part of the post program that begins at 10 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium.

Martin Luther King contributed greatly to our nation, but the day named after him is often thought of as being just another day off the job!

As many of you know, the Civil Rights movement (simply put) was the fight against the ill treatment of colored people. One of the leaders of this movement was a heroic man named Martin Luther King. Being a preacher, King was a very spiritual man who wanted nothing more but for all of mankind to treat each other justly. Fighting against injustice for so long finally won King the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964.

We all drink at public water fountains, can sit down and enjoy a movie at a public theater, or even ride to town on a public bus and sit wherever we please. These events take part in our everyday lives but we so often take them for granted. But if it weren't for such dedicated people as Martin Luther King, going to the movies with someone of a different race wouldn't even be heard of!

I was recently given an assignment on Benjamin Franklin. We were to list some of the characteristics that made him a good problem solver.

Intelligence, charisma and integrity were just some of the traits that Franklin possessed that popped into my mind. However, as I researched Dr. King I realized that many of the traits that Franklin had lied within Dr. King as well.

How can this be? Two men of a different race, sharing the same commendable traits. Could it have anything to do with the fact that all men were created equal? That a man of one race could have just as much of an impact on a nation, as a man of another? Martin Luther King once gave the famous "I have a dream" speech. In it he said that he dreams of a nation where his children will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character.

I have to admit, that before I wrote this essay I appreciated Martin Luther King Day for all the wrong reasons, taking everything he fought so hard for, for granted. But now I have a better understanding of what this heroic man really accomplished. I believe that on Martin Luther King Day, I'll remember King (along with all the other people who played a part in the Civil Rights movement), and truly understand and appreciate the impact these heroic people had on the world and how it affects me today.

I'm afraid that in the distant future, the name of the man who fought so bravely to restore justice to our great nation will be forgotten. But if what he fought for and did is still remembered in the hearts of people around the world, Martin Luther King's efforts will not have been in vain.

Remember, act and celebrate: To some people these words mean absolutely nothing, and Martin Luther King Jr. day just means nothing but another holiday off. To me, however, they mean much, much more.

There are many ways you can remember a great man like Martin Luther King Jr. Two ways are monuments and biographies. I believe that the most effective way to remember is to teach. Children cannot learn and remember Martin Luther King Jr.'s legacy if they are not taught it by teachers and parents. Then, when their children become adults, they in turn can relate Martin Luther King Jr.'s memory to the next generation.

Acting Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream is also of great importance.

Continuing his fight in the civil rights movement and fighting for equal treatment for all mankind is one way to be like Martin. Discouraging violence and making a stand for peaceful solutions is also another way to be like him. Acting like him is an essential key to keep his living legacy alive although he himself is dead. Acting like him will also help complete that famous "dream" he had so many years ago.

Celebrating, in my opinion, is another way of remembering. Celebrating is an appreciation for what Martin Luther King Jr. did for this country and its people. African-American month, Martin Luther King Jr. day, and parades help to celebrate and remember his courageous accomplishments.

Despite what some people may think, Martin Luther King Jr. Day is not just a day off from school or from work. It is a day to remember, act and celebrate Martin Luther King Jr. On this day, instead of staying and watching TV or sleeping until noon, try this instead: Remember him by thinking of how his speeches motivated people to start the civil rights movement. Act like this great man by fighting for peoples' rights and freedom. Celebrate Martin Luther King Jr.'s achievements by visiting monuments, reading a book on his life or accomplishments. Go to an event or parade, or better yet, participate in the event or parade.

When someone mentions Martin Luther King Jr. or I read about him in my history book, these are the things I think. I think how he was a courageous man who stood against violence and stood up for equal rights and peace. And maybe, just maybe, one day I will overhear a little boy say to his mother, "I want to grow up to be like Martin, Mommy!"

"I say to you today my friends, so even though we face the difficulties of today and tomorrow, I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream. I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed; 'We hold these truths to be self evident, that all men are created equal.' I have a dream that one day the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners will sit down together in the table of brotherhood..."

That was the first two paragraphs of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s famous speech, "I Have A Dream." Dr. King was believed to be a great man by many people. He fought for his rights, and what he thought America should be like.

As he fought his way to freedom, he faced many problems, and each day, he grew less and less respectful and faithful for his country, America. He believed that one day his nation would rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed. He had a dream that one day the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners would be able to sit down together in the table of brotherhood. But most importantly, he had a dream of one day being free.

Martin Luther King Jr. felt that one day his nation would rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed. This reference was the whole reason we fought in the Revolutionary War, why we came over to America in the first place, why the Civil War was fought, and the true meaning of the Bill of Rights. He wanted the rights and liberties of all men to be the same, he wanted freedom, and he wanted to end segregation. Discrimination against one another played a major role in his fight for freedom. As blacks were beaten and hosed down in the streets, thousands of singing children were sent to the jails to sing for the innocent blacks. Bombs went off, and everywhere you turned some sort of violence was occurring. He wanted to make America a better place; a better place from all the racial hatred he witnessed.

Martin Luther King Jr. dreamed that one day the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners would join each other in the table of brotherhood. He wanted all people to forgive each other for the ghastly and horrid conflagration and dispute that took place between them. He wanted discrimination and quarrels between them to end. But mostly, he wanted everyone to get along, all of the bad times forgotten, and another day to look forward.

Freedom, happiness, love and peace — these are the great things that King wanted all people to experience. He wanted "... People not to be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character." He wanted people to, "Work together, pray together, struggle together, go to jail together, and stand up for freedom together, knowing that they will all be free one day." This would all go to show that people cannot be a disgrace to their society, but they are people too, with feelings and a heart, and that they are perfectly innocent. Martin Luther King Jr. fought to express that his people had lives like everyone else — they loved, they had goals, and most importantly, they had dreams!

Martin Luther King Jr. was not just believed to be a great man, but he was a great man. He gave his life for other people, knowing he was going to be killed. He was killed by a white man for believing in his rights, and protesting against discrimination. Martin Luther King Jr. changed the way whites look at blacks, and he changed America by his beliefs, and to me, that was his destiny. What Martin Luther King Jr. wanted was for us to remember what he did, celebrate it, and act it out so that he would know he changed America. He was the kind of man that many hated, while at the same time, many loved. He was a man with great beliefs and a purpose; a purpose to change the way we look at one another.

Post remembers MLK

Fort Benning celebrates the anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday today. This day commemorates not only the memory of a great American, but also reminds us of Dr. King's lasting influence on American society. It is a time to reflect on the past and to rededicate ourselves to the future, to the principles for which Dr. King lived and died; a dream of dignity for all.

The theme for this year's Dr. Martin Luther King Commemorative Service is "Remember, Celebrate, Act; A Day On Not A Day Off." This encourages us to remember Dr. King's work (what was done and what needs to be done), celebrate his legacy, and act on it by giving our services back to the community.

In recognition of Dr. King's many contributions to our great country, a commemorative service will be held in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall at 10 a.m. today. All members of Fort Benning and the tri-city community are encouraged to attend this service.

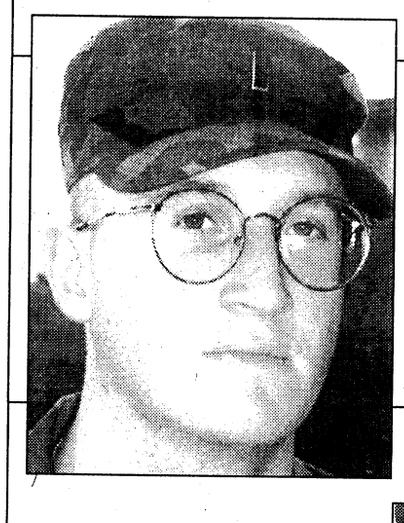
ACS thanks community



The Army Community Service Support Fund issued 952 turkeys during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays to the installation's major subordinate command sergeants major for distribution to Soldiers who would have been otherwise unable to share in the traditional holiday meal with their families.

The ACSSF would not have been able to accomplish this service to our community without the support of the following: Time Warner Cable; Wilson Elementary School (Classroom 14); Religious Education Center (Catholic Sunday School); The Retired Officers' Association Auxiliary; Main Post Exchange; Girl Scouts; Directorate of Contracting; SGS; Chaplains Consolidated Fund; Faith Middle School; Follow Me Golf Course Ladies Golf Association; Sgt. 1st Class Jeffery A. Cornuet, Main Post Child Development Center; Roy Bauer, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's Family Support Group; and the Officers' and Enlisted Wives Clubs. Without help the success of providing for families during the holidays would not have been possible. Thank you.

arrived.

The buildings were made serviceable for trainee barracks, and the combined cost equaled $2.7 million, Holloway said.

Leonard Barracks, the last starship built, was in much better shape and did not require renovation, Holloway said. BCTB's 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, is located there.

The first new construction started in late 1998.

The Directorate of Logistics Transportation and Carlson Wagonlit Travel were relocated from inside a starship building, where the space was needed for troops, to a new building on Sand Hill.

New brick structures were also constructed to house the offices of the Headquarters Service Company, BCTB, and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Infantry Training Brigade.

They were completed in October and November at a cost of $183,000 for the HSC, BCTB, building and $265,000 for the HHC, ITB, offices, Chris Flowers, contract officer for the projects, said.

The Physical Fitness Training Unit at 30th AG Bn. has a brand new workout facility, located on what was once the impound lot. The cost for that project was $184,000. Soldiers who do not meet the physical fitness standards for basic training and One Station Unit Training are assigned to the PFTU and work to meet those standards. Injured trainees from the ITB and the BCTB are also assigned to the unit for rehabilitation.

The Training Aids Support Center has a new $275,000 supply center behind the Sand Hill theater. The building also houses the laundry contractor.

Brown and Root Inc. was the contractor for the five new buildings, and final inspections on them were completed Tuesday. The company also constructed the new fitness field.

Overgrown tennis and handball courts were demolished and a modern PT field put in their place at the 2nd Bn., 47 Inf., BCTB. The field features a 1/4-mile track, rubberized training pit and exercise equipment.

The $297,000 project was completed in about 30 days, Flowers said. Lighting will be added this month.

Marty Eberharter, construction supervisor with Brown and Root, was busy Tuesday overseeing two projects at the 30th AG Bn.

Workers are expanding the latrine area in the reception center and constructing a new AAFES branch exchange behind Johnston Hall. It will be completed in the next few months.

Permanent barracks were available for the trainees at the BCTB and One Station Unit Training at ITB; however, the influx of Soldiers processing through the reception battalion caused a housing headache.

Currently, about 480 incoming trainees can sleep in three leased modular buildings located in front of Johnston Hall.

The cost is $463,596 a year for the buildings and an additional $24,000 for maintenance, Holloway said. The contractor is JMC Construction Inc. of Texas.

The buildings were leased because a quick fix was needed, and budgeting guidelines prevented DPW from moving forward with new barracks.

By law, a new building costing more than $500,000 must come from Military Construction, Department of the Army funds, which are Congressionally approved.

DPW has requested $32 million from the Military Construction, Army funds.

This has been submitted as part of the Planning, Programming and Budgeting System to Congress, Holloway said. It's a three to four year process.

That funding will construct new barracks for 600 additional Soldiers (replacing the modular billets), enlarge the reception battalion's dining facility, processing area and PFTU facility, and create a running track.

"30th AG is the only battalion out there without its own running track," Holloway said.

Last week Col. Randy Buck, chief DPW, gave Congressional staffers a tour of the construction at Sand Hill.

"They were interested in looking at how MCA money is being spent and getting an appreciation for the facilities at Fort Benning," Buck said.

Of the post's $32 million request, Buck said, "We talked that up as we showed them the conditions of these facilities (at 30th AG Bn.). We made it very clear to them that we are woefully short of billeting space, and the dining facility is significantly undersized."

Sally Shutt

Construction workers from Brown and Root, Inc., continue construction on the new AAFES store located behind 30th Adjutant General Reception Battallion on Sand Hill. The building is only part of the new construction in progress.

Tricare: Could cut MACH funding

There are 10,826 Tricare Prime slots vacant — 2,731 designated for active-duty family members and 8,095 for nonactive-duty family members and retirees. While active-duty family members may enroll for free, retirees and nonactive-duty family members are required to pay an annual enrollment fee.

Active-duty military are already covered under Tricare.

"However, many (active-duty military) are confused about their family's health care classification," Beckwith said. "If a family member is not enrolled in Tricare Prime, they are faced with utilizing the space-available system of accessing health care. Space available means just that, when there is space available.

"This is not in the best interest for all concerned. Patients are not assigned to a primary care manager, appointments are not always available, and continuity of care is not a guarantee," she said.

More than 25,000 active-duty family members reside in the MACH catchment area, a 40-mile radius. Of those, approximately 24,000 are users of MACH medical services.

"Currently, we have approximately 18,400 active-duty family members enrolled in Tricare Prime and are diligently striving to reach the remainder who may not know they can still enroll," Beckwith said.

The number of retirees and nonactive-duty family members under the age of 65 who use the hospital is 16,790.

"We have approximately 8,900 of this population enrolled in Prime and are trying to reach all the others to let them know they can enroll," Beckwith said.

Individuals over the age of 65 become Medicare eligible and are not eligible for Tricare Prime.

Because retirees must pay an enrollment fee with Tricare Prime, many are willing to opt for space-available care.

"They can elect to enroll or not enroll, but there will come a time when all the spots will be filled," Beson said. "When will that time be, I don't know."

The MACH commander determines the hospital's Tricare Prime capacity based on the number of assigned Primary Care Managers and their medical specialty — for example, family practice, pediatrics or internal medicine. The number of Prime enrollment capacity slots determines the number of people in the catchment area who can enroll.

"We have two things we have to be concerned about — making sure we are enrolled to our capacity and making sure that our patients are being taken care of and getting in," he said.

If MACH doesn't reach its goal, Beson said it runs the risk of losing some of its providers.

Enrollment forms are available at the Tricare Service Center, Building 9204, Stairwell C, or in the MACH primary care clinics — family practice, Winder, Aviation, Victory Clinic, internal medicine or pediatrics.

Enrollment forms are also available by calling 1-800-444-5445 and having a form mailed to the beneficiary.

The beneficiary completes the form and either mails it to Humana Military Healthcare Services or takes it to the Tricare service center.

Nonactive-duty individuals and their family members have enrollment fees that must be submitted with their applications.

For more information on Tricare, call the service center at 544-1347.

Tricare terms at a glance

Tricare: the Department of Defense health care program for military families and retirees.

Tricare Prime: a plan offering health care at the lowest out-of-pocket cost. Enrollment is required, and a primary care manager coordinates your care.

Primary Care Manager: the doctor or other health care professional who coordinates all of your care. You are assigned a PCM when you enroll in Tricare Prime.

Humana Military Healthcare Services, Inc.: a subsidiary of Humana, Inc., selected by the Department of Defense to offer Tricare in the southeastern U.S.

drums and the contractor will dispose of it, said Felix Seda, an environmental specialist with the Directorate of Public Works Environmental Branch.

The last process in the clean up is applying a fine powder-like substance to pull up and absorb what might have leached into the concrete, Fussell said.

"We spread nearly 200 pounds of the absorbent 1 1/2 to 2 inches deep on the spill," said Eddie Saxton, a driver-operator for the Fort Benning Fire Department.

Because of the amount spilled, fire Capt. Roger Snell expected it to take most of the night to absorb the oil.

"Everyone did an excellent job in containing and cleaning up the spill," Fussell said.

Aggressive driving epidemic hits America

Road rage becoming top problem on roads

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

An Alabama woman was fatally shot late last year after an altercation between her and another driver turned deadly on the side of a central Alabama highway.

The shooting, according to police reports, tallied another victim for the newest and most lethal epidemic to hit America in decades.

The epidemic is road rage and it is coming to a highway near you.

The Alabama death was only one of more than 11,000 aggressive driving related incidents logged on America's highways in the last decade, according to an American Automobile Association report.

And while the death may claim another life for the aggressive driving epidemic, it also brings to the front the reality of how dangerous the road rage epidemic really is.

"Road rage can and probably has affected nearly every driver on the road at some time in their life,' said Lt. Col. Thomas Kelley, chief of Fort Benning's law enforcement division, "It can lay claim to anyone regardless of experience, age of demographic."

Road rage can turn a normally calm person into a green-eyed aggressive driver, he said. "For some it is the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde syndrome. When they get behind the wheel of a vehicle it is as if some metamorphosis takes place. They become discourteous and reckless drivers capable of causing accidents.

"I have known many people who said they too have found themselves on the giving end of the road rage saga," Kelley said. "It seems everyone these days is in such a hurry and sometimes they (we) fail to live by the old Golden rule — treat others how you want to be treated."

The break-neck pace of today's world is a contributing factor to the increase in road rage outbreaks, according to the AAA report. However, many researchers said the biggest contributor to the epidemic growth of vehicular violence is the increase of motor vehicles and the miles they log on America's roadways.

> "For some it (road rage) is the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde syndrome. When they get behind the wheel of a vehicle it is as if some metamorphosis takes place."
> — Lt. Col Terry Kelley
> Chief, law enforcement division

Since 1987, the number of miles of roads in America has increased by only 1 percent, while the number of total miles driven has increased by more than 35 percent.

That, Kelley said, coupled with the increase in the number of vehicles per capita has added fuel to the road-rage fire.

"The numbers of roads and the number of vehicles and miles driven have increased so unproportionally that the infrastructure is moving more people than originally designed to handle," he said. "That inequity in growth puts more people driving closer together and that in turn creates stress."

While Kelley said the infrastructure deficiency is a major factor, he said the underlying truth lies within society's "me first" syndrome.

"We are a society that is always in a hurry and 'me first syndrome' often leads to people being rude," he said. "Many drivers don't take into consideration their actions while behind the wheel."

Kelley said he believed that this failing of others to be courteous while driving could be a result of the lack of education motorists receive prior to obtaining their driving privileges.

"The number of new drivers who have completed a formal education course in driving is on the decline," he said. "Couple that stress with bad driving habits (cutting people off, failure to signal intent and tailgating) has a tendency to rapidly escalate into road rage."

Like many other public school programs, drivers education has been dropped from the course catalogues at many of the today's public schools.

This means many new motorists taking to the road are inexperienced and uneducated on the rules and courtesies of the road.

Presently less than 40 percent of all new drivers on the road complete a formal education course in driving before taking to the road, according to AAA.

"It's unfortunate there are so many people on the road who don't know the rules of the road or simply don't care," Kelley said. "These are the people who, in many cases, can be found at fault in aggressive-driving-related incidents."

Although Kelley said there is no quick fix for the road rage epidemic, he said there are a few tips drivers can use to keep themselves safe when confronted with an aggressive driver.

- Don't take the problems personally.
- Avoid eye contact with an aggressive driver.
- Don't make obscene gestures.
- Don't tailgate.
- Use your horn sparingly.
- Don't block the passing lane.
- Don't block the right hand turn lane.

Kelley also added that the number one thing to remember when confronted with an aggressive driver is, "Let the driver go by and get out of his way. By slowing down, you are only costing yourself a couple of minutes, and you are eliminating the possibility of the situation escalating out of control."

Local teens face prosecution after recent apprehension

Paintings catch police attention; investigators grab young graffiti artists

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

An undisclosed number of youthful offenders found themselves standing in front of the Juvenile Misconduct Authority Tuesday evening to learn their fate after an apprehension last week landed the youths on the wrong side of the law.

The youths, accused of painting numerous buildings on post with graffiti-like writing, could face numerous hours of community service, loss of post privileges and possibly removal of their entire family from post housing, according to U.S. Army Infantry Center regulation 210-5.

The teen vandals' paintings began appearing on buildings near Faith Middle School in mid-December, according to military police reports. Those paintings continued to appear on buildings and vehicles throughout post during the remainder of the month.

Evidence collected from the various scenes pointed military police investigators to the teens last week.

While police officials declined to comment on the status of the investigation, they did release the following locations the teens defaced during their stint of spraying: the Follow Me Golf Course, Faith Middle School, Main Post Bowling Alley, Kerry Pool, Building 69, the Officers' Club, Building 880, Infantry Hall, Airborne shed, Youth Services and the drivers' training center.

Police officials have also linked the juveniles to the painting of a government vehicle parked at the Youth Services Center and the painting of a 1991 Mitsubishi Eclipse.

Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Graham, garrison sergeant major, is responsible for punitive action for the juveniles as the post Juvenile Misconduct Action Authority, but declined to comment on the outcome of Tuesday's proceedings.

"The offenders are juveniles, and this ties our hands on releasing information," said Sgt. 1st Class Valerie Boggs, garrison command NCOIC. "I can confirm, however, that the JMAA will adhere to the post regulations in punishing the offenders in this particular case."

Although police officials said the investigation is still on-going, Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, law enforcement division, Directorate of Public Safety, said incidents like these are unacceptable and will be treated as serious matters on Fort Benning.

"It is a shame, really, that some young people feel they can cause this kind of damage without any regard to the cost. It speaks poorly of them. And senseless acts like these are a violation of what this community stands for," Kelley said. "Fort Benning military police will continue to seek out those involved to continue to make this community a safer place to live, work and play."

Legislation: Could save Soldiers money on housing

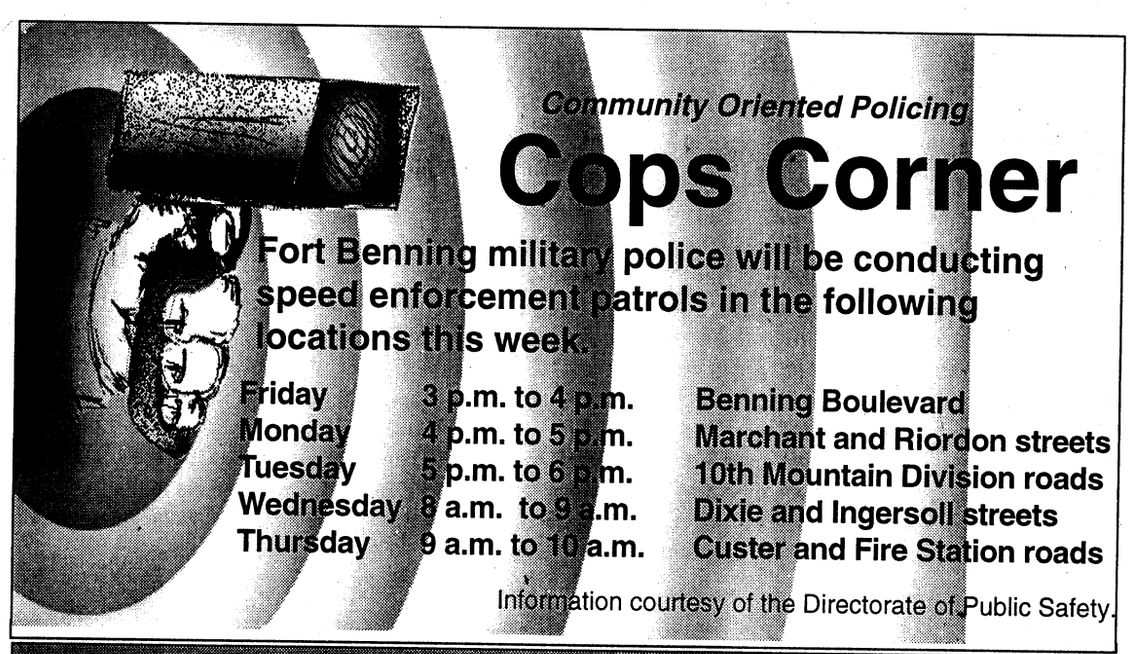
gives on post housing a modernization," Smith said. "Through revitalization efforts and new construction, on-post residents would benefit from the new legislation as well."

The on-post part of Cohen's plan to fix the ailing housing system sends the responsibility of housing operation and revitalization efforts to a private entrepreneur.

Ownership of on-post family housing would be conveyed to a private company, he said, and they would in turn collect the BAH of the Soldiers residing in the housing. "For all intents and purposes they would essentially be paying their BAH as rent to the private owner to reside in on-post quarters."

The new private owner would also be responsible for the renovation of the housing areas that now in many cases are substandard, Smith said.

"The key is that the income stream from the better BAH rates will be there for the private sector to fund the repairs and renovations over the life of the housing," said Randall Yim, deputy undersecretary of defense for installation support in the American Forces Press Service press release. "Are they going to keep up the painting and the plumbing and the day-to-day maintenance so the place doesn't deteriorate in 10 years?"



That is a question Smith said is being answered now in Fort Carson, Colo., as the effort to privatize is already in full swing.

"As far as I know things are going well and as planned," he said. "But only time will tell how well the new privatization system really works."

That time coupled with the further testing slated for Fort Hood, Texas, and Fort Lewis, Wash., later this year should give legislative officials something to base their opinions on when casting their votes next year.

"Secretary Cohen's recent announcement that he intends to decrease out-of-pocket expenses for members living off-post is welcome news," said Sen. Max Cleland, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee. "I am very happy to see this targeted common sense approach to reform.

"Our military staffing levels will continue to hemorrhage as long as Soldier's quality of life lags so far behind their private sector counterparts," Cleland added. "I am committed to working with the secretary on these and other ways to reward the men and women who make so many sacrifices on our behalf."

Cohen gives nod for new deputy secretary

Deputy steps down, top DoD civilian checks yes for de Leon's appointment

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary William S. Cohen has recommended the president nominate Rudy de Leon to replace Deputy Defense Secretary John J. Hamre, who will step down from his Pentagon post March 31.

De Leon currently serves as undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness. Hamre plans to become president and chief executive officer of the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

"Rudy de Leon has dealt with many of the department's toughest and most important issues — maintaining readiness, improving quality of life for troops and families and making sure the department remains a leader in providing equal opportunity to all," Cohen said in a Jan.10 press release.

de Leon

As an undersecretary since August 1997, de Leon has served as Cohen's senior policy adviser on recruitment, career development and pay and benefits for the military's 1.5 million active duty and 1.5 million Guard and Reserve members and 800,000 DoD civilians. He also has been responsible for overseeing DoD's $15 billion-a-year health care system, its commissaries and exchanges, the Defense Education Activity and the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute.

Prior to becoming the Pentagon's top personnel and readiness manager, de Leon served for three years as undersecretary of the Air Force. In this position, he focused on maintaining high quality personnel, force readiness and an affordable modernization program that included the F-22 fighter and the C-17 airlifter. His two-year program review of the C-17 led to $5 billion in cost reductions.

Hamre

De Leon also worked to institute fundamental changes in U.S. military force protection practices when DoD's Anti-Terrorism Action Team was set up after the 1996 bombing in Saudi Arabia.

De Leon's federal career began 21 years ago. Prior to serving as a special assistant to former Defense Secretary Les Aspin in 1993, he was the staff director for the House Armed Services Committee and was responsible for the committee's consideration of annual defense budgets. He helped draft the 1986 Goldwater-Nichols DoD Reorganization Act and oversaw 1990 legislation that authorized the use of military force in the Persian Gulf.

Hamre has been the 26th deputy secretary since July 1997. Prior to becoming the Pentagon's No. 2 leader, he was DoD comptroller from 1993 to 1997. His association with DoD began on Capitol Hill, where he served for 10 years as a staff member of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Cohen praised Hamre for his commitment to fixing problems with effective, practical solutions that were fair to all concerned. He said Hamre's biggest achievements have been in increasing computer security, bringing better business practices to the department, winning increases in defense spending to improve readiness and procurement, and helping defense contractors and the department adapt to global business conditions.

"John Hamre has been my friend and partner in running the department," Cohen said. "He approaches all issues with extreme confidence and an extraordinary sense of humor. He has had a major impact on the department."

"I will miss him when he leaves," he added.

Sergeant gives more than just advice

Retention NCO ensures best for re-enlistees

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Blending honesty, friendliness and a warm smile, Staff Sgt. Ruperto Foster, keeps the Soldiers of the U.S Army School of the Americas on their career path.

During fiscal year 1999, USARSA received Fort Benning's Small Unit Retention Excellence Award three out of the four quarters.

Foster, the School's Reenlistment NCO since 1998, is a huge reason for the School's retention success.

"USARSA's re-enlistment numbers are always high because the Soldiers here like the Army and want to continue progressing in their military career," he said humbly. "I've been fortunate to be surrounded with Soldiers who make my job a little easier."

He said in order for a unit to qualify for a retention award, they must meet or exceed the quota established by the post re-enlistment office.

The quotas are based on the number of Soldiers in the unit and the number who are eligible for re-enlistment during the quarter.

Although the 18-year Army veteran deals with paperwork today, Foster has spent most of his career in the trenches as an Infantryman.

The Panama City, Panama, native originally joined the Army in 1970, but got out in 1972. He later returned to duty in 1983. He earned the Expert Infantryman Badge, Airborne Badge and later the Combat Infantryman Badge during his 9-month combat duty during Desert Storm with the 101st Airborne Division out of Fort Campbell, Ky.

"The Army has allowed me to see parts of the world I never thought I'd see," he said. "It's been good for me and my family."

The third child of six siblings has been married for five years with his wife Jacqueline, who is also in the Army. They have a 3-year-old son named Jarrell. Foster has two adult children from a previous marriage.

His parents and brothers and sisters are still in Panama, where he tries to visit at least once a year. But, if he doesn't make it, he gets a small taste of his homeland here on Fort Benning.

"We have many Panamanian Soldiers and civilians at USARSA, so I get to reminisce about the old neighborhood," he said.

This month, USARSA has already had two Soldiers re-enlist, which motivates Foster.

"I work hard in keeping up with the current changes in re-enlistment policies," he said. "You have to research all the available options for a Soldier and his or her particular MOS. For instance, a Soldier may qualify for a bonus. They need to know that."

When selling the Army gets tough, Foster brings out the warm smile and friendly persona that helps Soldiers make the right decision.

"I help them weigh the difference between getting out and staying in," he said. "The Army is a good career choice — most of the time they listen."

He said there's no secret to his success ... it's very simple, "It's all about taking care of Soldiers. That's the bottom line."

Millennium brings new ACAP concepts

Chick Eagle

The year 2000 brings a new Employer Day concept to the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

"We are encouraging interested employers to visit the ACAP Center each Thursday if at all possible," said Cynthia Anderson, Fort Benning's ACAP Center Employer Day project officer. "We believe this offers a greater opportunity for Soldiers to meet more than one employer and also means greater attendance for visiting recruiters."

Once the Employer Day is established as a Fort Benning standard the word should spread and could grow into a job fair each week, she said.

Employer Days are one of the advantages offered to separating Soldiers, Department of Army civilians, and family members of separating personnel.

The ACAP process is mandated by the U.S. Congress for all separating personnel and should be started 180 days from final separation date, but not less than 90 days before final separation date.

The process begins with a three day preseparation program followed by individual counseling and other services conducted by the ACAP Center or other service provider.

Job assistance is important to many Soldiers, and Employer Days have become very popular at Fort Benning and other ACAP Centers like Fort McPherson, Anderson said.

Interested individuals should keep reading The Bayonet where upcoming events are published in the Community Briefs column of the Community Section.

Flyers are also distributed each week and more information is readily available by visiting the ACAP Center.

Separating personnel should plan to visit these valuable job search events as often as possible.

May 18 is the date that has been selected for the large annual Association of the U.S. Army Soldiers' Job Fair. Employers from local, regional, and national companies will set up tables in Infantry Hall to meet with military personnel. Separating personnel and those thinking long range should attend.

For more information, call the Fort Benning ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634. The ACAP Center web site is: http://www-benning.army.mil/ACAP

post briefs

Power outages scheduled

Flint EMC, Fort Benning's electrical contractor, will have two scheduled electrical outages Monday.

•The first outage will be on Main Post from 8 a.m. to midnight and will affect the TLC Credit Union, Arts and Crafts Center, the Bowling Alley and Reggies.

Additionally, the entire 2700 and 2800 blocks will be off for two hours from 8:30 to 10:30 a.m. The purpose of the outage is to change out switches to prevent future unscheduled outages.

•The second outage will be on Sandhill from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and will affect all the facilities on 2nd Infantry Division Road, all of the facilities on 11th Airborne Division Road and part of 2nd Armor Division Road.

All of Scott Avenue, Peg Street, and 4th and 5th streets will be without power also.

There will not be any outage of hot water or heating as the central plant will continue to operate. Buildings 3405 and 3425 will not be affected by the outage (on 2nd Armor Division Road).

The purpose is to change out conductors that will continue to fail unless they are replaced.

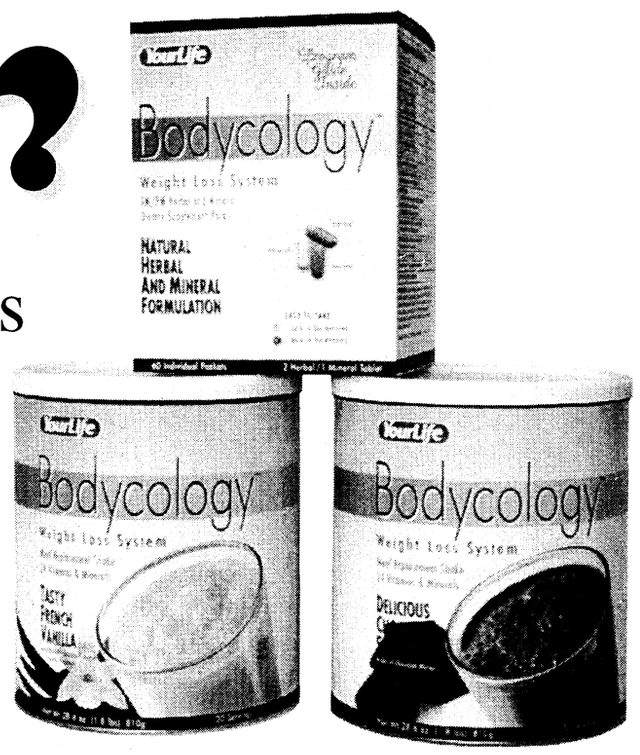
For more information, call Mark Fincher at 545-7928 or Benny Hines at 545-4310.

CG plans Two-Star Breakfast

The quarterly CG's Two-Star Excellence Breakfast and Awards Ceremony is scheduled for today from 8-9 a.m. at the Supper Club, Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The cost of the breakfast buffet is $6.25 and it includes scrambled eggs, bacon, sausage, French toast sticks, biscuits, coffee and juice.

There will be open seating at the breakfast and the buffet lines open at 7:30 a.m.



USAMU needs pistol shooters

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is looking for Soldiers who are interested in shooting on the competition pistol team for the 2000 summer tour.

Those interested should call the USAMU public affairs office for more information at 545-5436.

Soldiers eagerly return from Exodus to complete final stages of training

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

It would seem natural that many Soldiers who go home for Christmas Exodus may not get very excited about the thought of returning to the demanding pace of basic training.

That is, unless you're about to take on Basic Rifle Marksmanship.

Many of the Soldiers in C Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, were all too happy to cut their training break off and come back to Fort Benning so they could head out to the ranges for BRM training.

The training at Malone Range 8 was the first thing the Soldiers moved into after their holiday break, said Capt. Richard Harris, C Company commander.

"Everyone is excited to be back," he said. "This is the portion of basic that everyone gets excited about. They get out, get hands-on and really enjoy being able to fire a weapon."

Pvt. Lynn Harper, a C Co. trainee, said he was glad to get back to Fort Benning for several reasons.

"A lot of us were anxious to get back," he said. "The Exodus was greatly appreciated, but a lot of us started missing being here, we sort of consider it home.

"We're ready to get back and get everything over with. We're real excited about BRM — this is when the fun stuff starts," said Harper. "It's going to be great to actually fire the rifles and learn some of the training that will benefit us in a wartime situation."

Pvt. Anthony Crafter, another C Co. trainee, agreed. He said his training was on his mind the whole time he was home.

"I was very excited about coming back," he said. "I did a lot of thinking about training while I was at home. I didn't know how taking a break would affect our training.

"This is what, I personally, have been looking forward to, and so far I haven't been let down," he added. "I'm looking forward to going ahead and qualifying, as an expert, which is one of everyone's dreams."

Firing expert doesn't just happen though, there's a plan of training that gets Soldiers to that level, said Harris.

He said it all begins with the basics.

"This is where it all starts — with the initial phase of BRM where we teach them the basics," he said. "We focus on the four fundamentals of marksmanship.

"The four fundamentals, steady position, aiming, breathing and trigger squeeze are the keys to success," said Harris.

Those fundamentals, along with some other useful skills, make the young trainees into marksmen, said Sgt. 1st Class Gary Yeatts, a drill sergeant for C Co.

"The privates are being instructed on the four fundamentals of firing, assembly and disassembly of the weapon, how to reduce load stoppage, correcting malfunctions on a weapon and ranges procedures," he said.

This is accomplished by drawing on all of the drill sergeants' skills, said Yeatts.

"The experience from all of the drill sergeants in our company plays a big role in our training in that we all share different techniques on how to accomplish a certain task," he said. "Not any one drill sergeant is an expert on any fundamental of firing a rifle. As a group, we become experts by sharing our knowledge."

Yeatts said out of all of the training the trainees receive before going to a live-fire range, the shot grouping exercise is one of the most difficult.

"The private needs to know how to get the proper sight picture and also have mastered the four fundamentals of firing to to achieve a good shot group. That takes a lot of practice," he said.

Even though it's been a while since the trainees had any practice, training after the holiday break has still been running smoothly.

"It's less of a challenge because they were prepared to re-enter BRM before they went on Exodus," Yeatts said. "It's a bigger challenge when you first get them from the reception station where they don't know what to expect. They had an introduction before they left, so we were able to just pick up where we left off."

Battalion pounds out 'swords' for new millennium

Staff Sgt. K. Allen Whiteacre
3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry

Like crafting a well-made sword, the process of transforming civilians into Soldiers is a complicated and intense process. The drill sergeant spends the first weeks of basic training preparing the future Soldier by melting down resistance to change. He, along with the support of cadre, will form the melted mass of desire into a single blade. That blade will be pounded with challenge after challenge.

After weeks of training the Soldier-to-be's skills are refined and tested. Finally the civilian is no longer a mass of unwieldy talents and desires, but a member of a finely honed, well-crafted and sharp instrument of war.

D Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry, Basic Combat Training Brigade, became the first company this year to complete its training Thursday at a graduation ceremony on Sand Hill.

The ceremony was a time for celebration, but also one of reflection on the journey to become a Soldier. It is a journey, which began with an introduction.

"My drill sergeants are going to teach you everything you need to know about the Army," said 1st Sgt. James Luze, D Company's top Soldier. "Starting with something as simple as how to stand."

With that remark an intensive program of instruction began, as a drill sergeant stepped up and spilled the module on how to stand at the position of attention.

Cadre gave many classes to the recruits using lectures. The first challenge for these Soldiers was staying awake in a crowded, warm classroom.

Instruction on values, military justice, the code of conduct and other subjects are important, but sometimes difficult to make exciting.

In addition, many of the trainees were adjusting their sleep patterns. Where they had been used to sleeping until 10 a.m., they were now getting up at 5 a.m., after having their nighttime sleep interrupted with an hour of fireguard duty.

It was not an easy adjustment for some. "I don't understand it," said Pvt. Glen McMorris, Peoria, Ill. "I just can't stay awake."

By the time Basic Rifle Marksmanship instruction started, there was a welcome sense of relief that the hands-on portion of the course had begun in earnest by student and teachers alike. BRM is also a very serious time in basic training. The weapons are deadly and in the hands of inexperienced men can be a threat to safety.

All of the drill sergeants and other cadre stress over and over the importance of paying attention. "Keep that weapon up, and down range!" is a mantra screamed by cadre throughout the weeks of instruction.

With rifle qualification behind them, there is a feeling of real accomplishment, pride and teamwork in the platoons. It is the middle of a very fast train that includes foot marches, hand grenade qualification, nuclear, biological, chemical training, first aid instruction, familiarization with a myriad of weapons including the M-60 machine gun, the AT-4 anti-tank weapon and the M-18 Claymore mine.

Lt. Col. Edward Daly, 3rd Bn., 47 Inf. commander, pounds out steel during the company's Cold Steel ceremony.

"The Soldiers aren't experts on these weapons the way they are with the M-16, but they have an understanding of how to fire the weapons," said Staff Sgt. Jimmy Russell Jr., 2nd platoon sergeant.

Throughout this training is the thread of physical fitness training which strings one day to the next.

"Recruits can be experts on everything in basic training, but if they can't pass their PT test they are not going anywhere," said Russell.

If the civilian is formed into a weapon of war, and the drill sergeant is the hammer that shapes him, it is the Army values that are the anvil. Army values are the only subject more constant than physical fitness. It is the strength of loyalty, duty, respect, honor, integrity and personal courage in a trainee, which determine the metal of the final product.

"The Army values are important in basic training because they are the foundation for life in today's Army," Russell said. "When all else fails new Soldiers can fall back on the Army values and they can't go wrong."

The final phase of basic training combines the individual skills of each recruit and tests their ability to work as a team on a Field Training Exercise. It is an exercise that challenges the new Soldiers, and tests how well the drill sergeants have prepared them.

"With the completion of this exercise you are now Soldiers," said Lt. Col. Edward Daly, 3rd Bn., 47 Inf. battalion commander, at the company's Cold Steel ceremony the night the exercise ended. "Remember, to whom much is given much is expected."

"These Soldiers have to realize that not everyone can be a Soldier," he added. "The Cold Steel ceremony is a moment of crossover, that etches into their brain that they are now more ... They are Soldiers."

Lightweight armor tested

Interceptor body armor stops 7.62 mm rounds with protective plates

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — It's natural for service members entering a combat area to want protection. Up until now, so-called "bulletproof vests" have been heavy and not all that bulletproof.

This has changed with the introduction of Interceptor Body Armor.

An Army and Marine Corps team has produced body armor that provides protection and trimmed about 10 pounds off its predecessor — the personal armor systems, ground troops vest.

Army project director Kyle Hassler said the total system weighs in at about 16 pounds. The body armor can be tailored to fit the mission.

"The vest alone will protect Soldiers against 9 mm rounds," she said. "If a Soldier is on a peacekeeping patrol and they don't expect to face a lot of opposition, the vest alone will work.

"If the mission is more serious, then the Soldier can add plates to the vest," she continued. "The plates and vest combination will stop multiple hits from 7.62 mm rounds."

The Army and Marine Corps realize not all service members are equal and the plates come in five sizes and go in the front and back of the vest.

"The vest also has a quick release feature," Hassler said. "If you need to drop the plates, one tug and they're gone."

The vest comes with neck and crotch protection attachments. It will work with all current and anticipated load carrying equipment. With the fasteners along the right side, the vest still protects the front of the body even when open.

While Marines and Soldiers will use the vest other services have expressed interest.

The interceptor armor is just the latest in a long line of bulletproof vests. During the Middle Ages, knights wore suits of armor, and common Soldiers tried to outfit themselves against arrows and early guns.

The Spanish conquistadors arrived on the shores of Mexico wearing metal vests designed to stop sword thrusts and arrows.

Researchers at Jamestown, Va., recently unearthed a metal vest early English settlers brought to America.

The U.S. military didn't place much confidence in bulletproof vests.

The first bulletproof vests Soldiers used weren't issued by the military. Union Soldiers in the Civil War bought bulletproof vests from peddlers who traveled around Army camps in Northern Virginia selling their wares.

The vests were made of cast iron and were incredibly heavy.

Not only that, they didn't work. Bullets would shatter the vest and cause many wounds instead of just one.

The vests weren't very popular.

The U.S. military started researching and issuing what became known as "flak jackets" during World War II.

Bomber crews often returned from missions over Nazi-occupied Europe telling how the "flak was so thick you could walk on it." Each of those puffs of smoke in the sky contained thousands of pieces of shrapnel.

In 1942, the Army Air Forces started issuing flak jackets to aircrews. These first flak jackets were heavy, but they did stop flak.

U.S. officials had adapted the flak vest from the Royal Air Force. They were used by flexible position gunners in four-engine bombers like B-17s and B-24s. Some aicrew in medium bombers like the B-26 and B-25 also used them.

The flak jackets were steel plates sown into cloth. "They hung over the chest and stomach like a catcher's chest protector," said Bob Adair, an official with the Air Force Museum at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio. "They were pretty heavy."

There was a helmet that completed the ensemble. The vest had a pull tab to dump it quickly if the plane ditched in the water or the crew had to bail out.

After the war, research continued to make flak jackets lighter and better.

During the Vietnam War, many Soldiers, Marines and airmen received flak vests. Again, the vests would stop shrapnel, but they still couldn't stop a bullet.

"Those were hot, uncomfortable, heavy and bulky," said Scott Ferguson, collections chief at the Air Force Museum. "It was extremely hard to move around in them."

Most service members wore them without shirts. In helicopters, most service members sat on the vests.

The development of Kevlar and ceramic materiel in the 1970s and 1980s made real bulletproof vests possible.

U.S. service members in hot spots around the world count on these armored vests to protect them as they do their jobs.

Age regulation affects Youth Services center

Open recreation now limited to family members at least 11 years old

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A controversial decision by the Department of the Army to alter Youth Service regulations has left many Fort Benning parents confused and frustrated.

In a Department of the Army mandate effective Nov. 1, Youth Service facilities at all military installations are available for open recreation only to family members 11 years old and older.

Fort Benning Youth Services passed out letters, advertised in the newspaper and posted notices to make parents aware of the changes.

Personnel delayed enforcing the new regulations until Jan. 1, in an effort to accommodate members, and give parents sufficient time to make alternate arrangements for their children.

Nonetheless, many parents were uncertain exactly how the changes would affect their children.

"I was totally caught off guard. I don't understand why the changes were made," said Shannon Secules, family member. "We paid fees for membership for both of our daughters, but now neither one of them can use the recreation center."

Youth Service members under the age of 11 will still be allowed to attend class, participate in sports and take part in other special activities, according to the new regulations.

They will be able to visit the snack bar during practices, ball games and between classes. However, they will no longer be able to use the facilities for open recreation.

Linda Laine, Fort Benning YS director, emphasized this decision will not affect younger members' participation in Youth Service sponsored sports or classes.

Parents may not, however, drop off players before practices, or leave children after piano or dance classes to play in the gymnasium or recreation center, Laine said.

A number of parents had come to rely on the center as an alternative to School Age Services, she said.

Although the center is not a child-care facility, many of the children were arriving at the facility after school and being left to play until the end of the work day.

DA regulations state no child younger than 10 can be left unattended by a parent or guardian at Youth Services.

Youth Services is not funded or staffed as a child care facility.

"We use the facilities mainly just for the sports programs, so it won't affect my family a great deal," said Capt. Jim Gray, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment. "Maybe it's a good thing. Maybe the younger children shouldn't be hanging out with the older kids anyway."

Unlike Gray, many parents feel the new structure will adversely affect their families.

"My daughters are 8 and 10," said Maj. Greg Sawyer, HHC, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "During the summer, my oldest could come over, use the pool and spend quality time with her friends. I can see this impacting our family in the summer especially."

"I just spent $30 for membership for my kids," said Staff Sgt. Todd Gibson, B Company, 2nd Battalion 47th Infantry. "Now my son can't use the center, except to take classes, which we pay for separately. So why do we have to pay a membership fee? It should be refunded."

Laine said the transition was going to be hard.

"No one wants to say to a child, 'You can't come in here.' It must be understood that this is a DA mandate," Laine said. "When you leave this installation, you'll find the same rules apply everywhere."

Travel agency curtails leisure services on posts

Harriet E. Rice
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Carlson Wagonlit Travel agents no longer provide leisure travel services at stateside Army installations.

Carlson officials told the Army in October the company would stop paying commissions to installations, and if the Army did not accept charging Soldiers a fee to make plane reservations, the company would curtail its service. Carlson said those changes were necessary since cuts in airline commissions reduced the company's profits. Army officials said the company was unwilling to compromise on fee rates during negotiations, which led to the cut-off for leisure travel services.

Realizing some Soldiers would be inconvenienced, the Army asked Carlson to continue helping Soldiers with plane reservations in emergency leave situations, holiday EXODUS from training centers and leave in conjunction with official travel.

Except for emergency leave, Soldiers can expect to pay a variable transaction fee at on-post Carlson Wagonlit Travel offices.

Weighing heavily in the Army's decision was the state of the travel industry and the multitude of options available for Soldiers to purchase tickets, officials said.

"The advent of e-commerce and e-ticketing is making the on-site travel agent a thing of the past," said Dan Yount, U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center Leisure Travel program manager. "Charging Soldiers a fee for service is not right when the same service is available at no cost from the airlines or off the Internet."

Company recalls infant car seat, carriers for repairs

Capt. Jennifer Christovich
Army and Air Force Exchange Service

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service in cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and Kolcraft Enterprises of Chicago, is recalling about 754,000 infant car seat and carriers for repair.

When used as an infant carrier, the handle can unexpectedly move from the intended carrying position, causing the seat to suddenly rotate. When this happens, the infant can fall to the ground and suffer serious injuries.

The recall involves Kolcraft infant car seat and carriers with the model names: Infant Rider, Secura, Travel-About, Plus 4, Plus 5, Kolcraft Infant Restraint, Kolcraft Infant Car Seat and Playskool Infant Car Seat manufactured from Jan. 1, 1993, through June 30, 1999. The five-digit model and style number and manufacture date, written as month, day and year and possibly the model name are written on a label on the side of the seat.

Some car seat and carriers also were sold with strollers.

AAFES sold only the SECURA and PLUS 4 infant car seats. The seats manufactured from July 1, 1999 with newly designed handle mechanisms are not part of this recall. The Kolcraft Rock N Ride is also not part of the recall.

If the first digits of the model and style numbers on your car seat and carrier match the numbers in the following list, then it is subject to this recall. The series of the affected Kolcraft car seat and carriers are: 1312X, 1382X, 1384X, 1385X, 368XX, 43XXX and 7700X.

Kolcraft provides a free repair kit designed to make the handle more secure and the repair is easily done at home. Customers shouldn't carry the seat by the handle until it has been repaired. Customers can continue to use the product as a car seat or in combination with the stroller. CPSC, NHTSA and Kolcraft remind parents and caregivers to always restrain infants when in the car seat and carrier according to instructions.

To receive a free repair kit or for more information, call Kolcraft toll-free at (877)776-2609, 24 hours-a-day, seven days-a-week. Customers can also contact Kolcraft through their customer service E-mail address: lujan@kolcraft.com or write:

Consumer Service Team
Kolcraft Enterprises
10832 NC Highway 211
Aberdeen, NC 28315

Customers should provide the following information when contacting Kolcraft: model number and date of manufacturer (on the sticker on the side of the car seat), number of repair kits required and complete mailing address.

MACH opens new emergency room

Project results in new ER, acute care clinic, triage center

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Martin Army Community Hospital, one of the oldest community hospitals in the Army, has undergone extensive renovations to its emergency room, helping bring the aging structure into the 21st century.

"We needed to modernize a hospital that was finished in 1958 and is rapidly becoming the oldest community hospital in the Army," Col. James Beson, MACH commander, said Friday before a walk-through of the new ER, which opened to patients Jan. 3 and has been busy since.

On an average day, the emergency room sees about 110 patients, Maj. Joseph Kaplan, head of the ER, said.

The old facility was gutted and a temporary ER set up in an area next to the family practice clinic.

"It was much smaller and not nearly as efficient," Beson said.

The yearlong project resulted in a state-of-the-art emergency room, acute care clinic and triage center — all connected together.

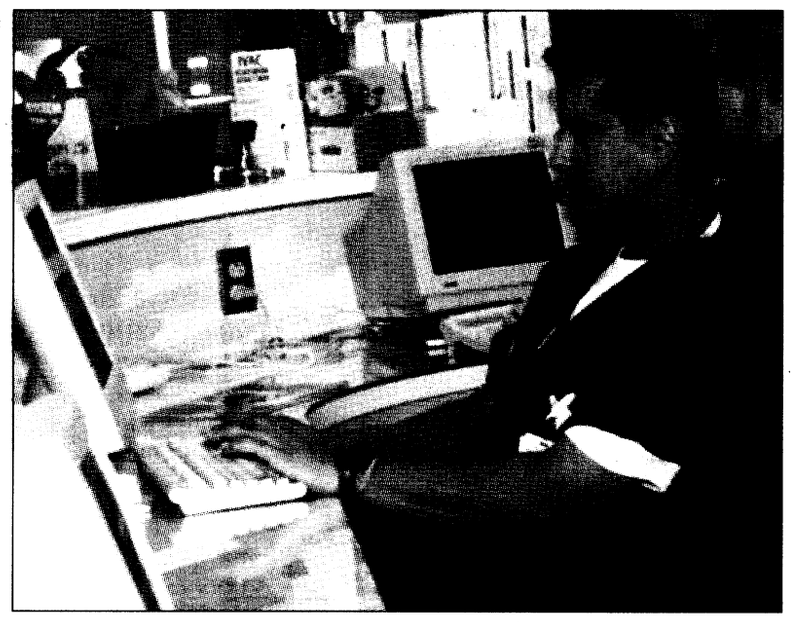
The new ER has an open-bay floor plan and an extensive monitoring system that connects all patients with monitors set up at the centrally located nurses' station.

"The concept is that everyone working in the ER can see what is going on with all of the patients who are hooked up to monitors," Beson said.

A separate trauma room with two beds will handle the most severe emergencies, and there is also a separate infectious disease room with its own airflow system to prevent germs spreading to other parts of the hospital and to other patients.

A decontamination station, basically a large shower stall, was built to use in cases of exposure to hazardous materials, like petroleum spills.

The ER can handle 11 beds, an increase from seven in the old floor plan.



The ambulance entrance opens directly into the ER. All other patients enter the center through the newly decorated waiting room and are first seen by a triage nurse.

"Go to any emergency room and they will tell you that the number of true emergencies is only 10 percent," Beson said. "Most of them are acute care patients."

There are four triage areas where a nurse determines the level of care that is necessary. The nurses will ask patients questions, type the answers into a computer, take vital signs and then determine where the patients will go next — to the emergency room, acute care center, or home with an appointment with one of the hospital's clinics for a follow-up.

"You are not being treated by a computer. There is a registered triage nurse here, so you have the human aspect and the computer aspect. If the nurse doesn't agree with the computer, the nurse makes the decision," Beson said.

Three nurses have been added to the staff, and four nursing assistants are being hired to help staff the central triage section.

Sally Shutt

Sgt. Stephen Soza, emergency room team leader, types patient information into a computer at the nurses' station in the state-of-the-art ER.

The center will be open 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

In the acute care center, doctors, physicians' assistants and nurse practitioners see patients who are not emergency patients, but who need to be seen that day.

The acute care center has a separate obstetrics exam room and an eye, ear, nose and throat room, as well as four standard exam rooms.

The renovation began in December 1998 and was completed a year later on Dec. 21.

The total project cost $1,725,806, and the contractor was Global Engineering and Construction Joint Venture, Inc.

The money came from MEDCOM, the medical command.

Next on Beson's list is a $6.5 million request to MEDCOM to renovate the family practice clinic, the largest of MACH's clinics. He should find out the status of his request later this year, he said.

In a few months, the hospital will open a new wellness center for women.

Two other projects were recently completed.

The main lobby features new furnishings, wall coverings and a patterned concrete floor showcasing the U.S. Army Infantry Center and MACH crests.

The cafeteria has been renamed the Martin Cafe. Booths and smaller tables have been added, as well as a large-screen television. Beson estimated the cost for both projects to be about $75,000.

The public is invited to attend an official ribbon cutting ceremony for the new emergency room on Jan. 19 at 3 p.m. at the main entrance to the ER. Rep. Mac Collins is scheduled to attend the ceremony.

Thrift Shop offers extended hours

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Thrift Shop is expanding its hours. The reason for the increase in hours is to better serve the customers, said Lori Lane, manager.

Beginning Feb. 1, the store will be open Tuesdays and Thursdays, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and every Friday, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., except the first Friday of the month, which is when the store is open for Late-Nite shopping at the Thrift Shop. Those hours are 5 to 8 p.m.

"We're very excited about these new hours. This is the first time in years that we've made such a change, but as the popularity of the Thrift Shop escalates, more hours are needed to meet the demand," Lane said.

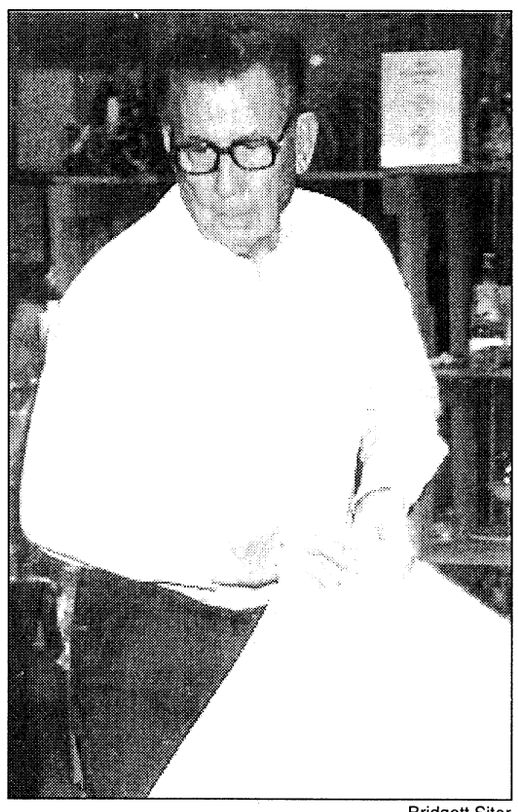
The recent decision to add another operational day to the schedule is, Lane said, "an answer to the patrons' request. We have had so many comments over the past year asking for more hours. Our records indicate we have enough staff and merchandise to support another work day," she said.

The store has experienced a surge in popularity, due in part, to the positive publicity that resulted from the Volunteer Organization of Excellence Award bestowed upon the Thrift Shop in April, Lane said.

"Selecting the Thrift Shop for this award had a lot to do with the computerization of the entire operation. That was an amazing feat, in terms of increased production and overall efficiency," said Jill Crider, OWC vice-president and installation volunteer coordinator.

"The computerization gave people an incentive to come in and bring merchandise and shop. Whereas, everything was written manually before, it now takes no more than seven minutes to consign 10 items," Lane said. "They finish their business quickly and have time to shop. We all benefit."

Lane and her staff began expanding and reorganizing the Thrift Shop more than two years ago. Three new rooms were added in 1988, giving the store nearly 10,000 square feet of floor space.



The merchandise is separated into departments, including womens' and mens' clothing, childrens' items, furniture, electronics, and household items. Newly hand-crafted items, including quilts, ceramics, and floral arrangements, are displayed in the "Craft Corner."

"We try to display the merchandise in such a way that it appeals to our customers. I've had them tell me the arrangements are wonderful. They help the customer see how each item can be used or displayed in their own home," said Karen Maguire, volunteer and designer. "That's what separates this store from others. Our merchandise isn't thrown on tables like a yard sale."

Nearly 90 percent of the furniture consigned at the store is sold on the day it arrives, Maguire said.

"We set a standard and we've adhered to it. If you wouldn't want an item in your home, we wouldn't want it in our store," Lane said.

Consignments will be accepted between 10 a.m. and noon and donations can be dropped off at any time during the business day.

Bridgett Siter

Lester O'Riley, volunteer, rearranges merchandise displays at the Thrift Shop. The Thrift Shop recently expanded its hours.

"We've had such incredible feedback from the public. We certainly hope our customers and consignors will take advantage of our new hours and continue to support us," said Lane.

Volunteers give others a helping hand

Retired couple finds joy in volunteering

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Lester and Ruth O'Riley have volunteered together for more than 14 years at the Thrift Shop.

Ruth was at one time a paid employee of the Thrift Shop and the OWC, but now she performs bookkeeping services for free.

"When my husband retired in 1983, I quit my job and began volunteering so we could be free to come and go as we pleased," she said. Her work has since become a "habit" she enjoys.

Les occasionally joined his wife at the store to do small repairs or carpentry work.

It wasn't until eight years ago, when the store moved to it's present location, that the World War II veteran began to volunteer regularly.

"They needed my kind of help when they moved in here. I'm a bit of a carpenter, plumber, electrician ... those are the things I like to do," he said.

Les, who turns 81 on Feb. 7, said volunteering at the Thrift Shop was the natural progression of events.

"When you are a part of the military community for so long, and you're looking for something to do, you began to look in the very place you feel most comfortable. We're comfortable in the military community."

"I first got orders to Fort Benning in 1942. I swore if I got away from here, I'd never come back," Les said with a chuckle. "Seemed like every time I returned from overseas, I'd get orders right back here. Finally, we just decided to buy a house here. If you can't beat 'em, join 'em."

"That's what attracted me to it in the first place. I like to help military people. The Thrift Shop was designed as a ready source for economical purchases. It's a Soldiers' service," he said.

Although the concept of helping Soldiers first drew the O'Rileys to the store, the customers and staff since have become a second family.

"They are like everybody's grandparents," said Karen Maguire, volunteer.

"They're an inspiration to everybody here. You only have to mention something, and the job is done before you can ask," Kimberly George said, volunteer OWC advisor.

In spite of serious health problems that have left Les chronically ill, the O'Rileys have faithfully volunteered their services each week, and plan to continue doing so as long as they are physically able.

"There are several older volunteers here who have a hard time getting started each day. But it's important, when you are chronically ill, to have something to do that you thoroughly enjoy. It's therapy. It's not a sacrifice on my part. It's a privilege," Les said. "I feel wanted and needed here. I guess I'm selfish in that respect."

Thrift store staff puts customers needs first

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

As the Thrift Shop prepares to implement changes during the next few weeks, the one thing that will remain consistent, said Lori Lane, manager, is the camaraderie among the staff and their continuous dedication to customer service.

The Thrift Shop customers linger because the camaraderie among the volunteers creates a pleasant and welcoming atmosphere in the store, Lane said.

"Most of our retirees have been here for the long haul. They were here before me, and they'll be here after I'm gone. It's continual dedication like I've never seen before," Lane said.

An advantage the Thrift Shop has over other organizations both on and off post is the continuity of the volunteers, said Jill Crider, OWC vice-president and installation volunteer coordinator.

"There are retirees who were here when I first came 10 years ago that are still here. You can't beat that," she said.

The volunteer staff consists of retirees and family members. Each work day, a volunteer or employee provides lunch for the entire staff, and workers eat in shifts, sharing food and friendship.

"There is such an integration of personalities and talents here, all tightly woven together," said Kimberley George, volunteer and OWC adviser to the store.

"In 13 years, I've been involved in six thrift stores. In comparison, there is such an energy here between the staff, the volunteers, and the community that is phenomenal. There are no problems in terms of personality conflicts," she said.

"It's like a big puzzle, and we're all pieces that fit together very well. There is no segregation or cliques. We all just fit," Lane said.

Dexter student Adrick Langsmith writes a letter to an overseas Soldier as part of a Red Cross program.

Students team up to write letters

Students send holiday mail to deployed units

Dexter Elementary School

In November, Nicole Leech's and Laura Feagin's classes wrote holiday letters to Soldiers deployed overseas with the help of the through the Red Cross.

The Red Cross packet asking individuals to write letters to Soldiers explained the Soldiers were in areas where they would not be with their families for this year's holiday season.

The areas where the letters were to be sent included, but were not limited to Kuwait and Bosnia.

Feagin's class also included supplies that had been requested for the Soldiers within the Red Cross packets.

The students were given stationery supplied by the Red Cross and directions to write the holiday letters to Soldiers who were away from their families for the holidays whether on deployments or permanently stationed overseas.

The writing assignment held special meaning for the students since they are sons and daughters of Soldiers Feagin said. "They may have experienced a holiday without their mom or dad."

The students did an excellent job of putting their own experiences of their family members being away for the holiday season in the letters to the Soldiers, she said.

One student wrote, "I know your family misses you. My dad just came back from Egypt and my mom really missed him."

> "I know your family misses you. My dad just got back from Egypt and my mom really missed him."
> — Dexter Elementary student
> From a holiday letter to deployed service member

As an extra incentive for continued interest in the writing as an ongoing activity, the Red Cross awarded certificates to the classes that took part in the holiday writing exercise.

This recognition gave the children pride in their efforts as well as motivation to continue the project beyond the holiday season.

The Red Cross has sent a Valentine packet for similar letters and hopes for a repeat performance of the letter writing campaign during the holiday.

Due to the great success of the combined efforts of the students and their teachers, many more classes will be participating in the next letter-writing task, Feagin said.

Third-graders share feelings with pen pals from Kansas

Long distance friendships develop during Dexter writing assignment with Midwest school

Dexter Elementary School

Students in Terri Bond's third-grade class at Dexter have been writing to pen pals in Wellington, Kan.

Each year Weekly Reader sponsors a nationwide pen-pal program, and as part of the national for kids magazine drive, Bond's elementary students were randomly matched with a class with the same number of students in Kansas.

"Being pen pals with students in another part of the country gives military children the chance to write about their unique circumstances and share them with children who have not had those experiences," Bond said.

One student received a letter that said, "I am sorry your dad is in Korea. My dad has never been there before. I wish you could see him." The letters are very touching because children who have never met are willing to share their feelings with each other without knowing anymore about each other than what they have said in the letters.

The pen pals also write about hobbies, favorite books, school subjects and pets.

They look forward to each package of letters from their pen pals and will continue to write throughout the year.

"The next time we write our pen pals, we are going to invite them to send valentines to Soldiers in Bosnia, Kuwait, Kosovo and Saudi Arabia like we are doing because Soldiers protect all of us," said student Brittany Nolot. "I liked it when I found out that my pen pal likes the same things I do."

The pen-pal program has proven to be valuable to the students in many ways, Bond said.

"It is more than just a way to improve writing skills," she said.

The pen pal program will continue throughout the remainder of the school year, Bond said. However, she hopes the friendships the students develop during the practical writing exercise will long out las this school year.

Middle school students provide positive role models for youth

Mentors can be found everywhere, even across the street.

Peggy Martin's seventh-grade students from Faith Middle School are an excellent example of not only mentoring, but also of reinforcing Literacy Place's kindergarten curriculum.

Among many other things Literacy Place focuses on working together and helping each other.

Each week a group of seventh-grade students walk across the street to Dexter Elementary School to read to kindergarteners student.

This experience gives the young students an invaluable opportunity to associate themselves with positive role models and engaging in a positive activity.

Buddy mentor activities such as these that are introduced early in a child's life has a tremendous affect on his or her educational outcome, according to numerous child educational experts.

By reading to these students, the seventh-graders not only affect the kindergarteners, but themselves as well. The reading is a great builder of self-confidence for the seventh-graders and creates a love for books for the kindergartners.

Kindergarten teachers said they had one word that described the efforts of Peggy Martin and her seventh-grade mentors — Hooah.

Jim Webb
Directorate of Public Works

The Directorate of Public Works and the Directorate of Contracting have issued a delivery order type contract to TECHNICON ENGINEERING, INC., a Macon, Ga., architect and engineer firm to perform a random sampling survey of designated Family Housing units to determine a need for repair or replacement.

This survey may cause some minor inconvenience to family housing occupants, since interior measurements, cataloging and photographing of the randomly selected housing units are necessary.

These measures are needed to compile a prioritized list of maintenance and repair projects for long-range planning and budgeting for all of Family Housing at Fort Benning. They will also be used to assure compliance with the state Historic Preservation Organization for maintenance and repair of Family Housing units that have historical significance.

DPW will provide family housing occupants with a flyer containing a list of TECHNICON employees conducting the random sampling survey. When approached by someone asking to survey your residence, ask for a letter of introduction and his or her identification, which can be compared to the names listed on the flyer. If the person's name is not on the list, do not allow him or her inside your home; and report the incident to the military police at 545-5222.

DPW realizes that some occupants will experience some momentary inconvenience. Residents' cooperation and patience is requested and appreciated while this necessary project is being done. The anticipated start date is Tuesday. Completion date is estimated approximately by Feb. 25.

For more information concerning this project, call Jim Webb at 545-2346 or DPW Customer Service Office at 545-2117.

Holiday Schedule for trash collection

There will be no yard waste picked up in Family Housing on Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be Jan. 24.

Travel: Army looks for better options

"As travel agents continued to cut concession fees to installations, it became obvious that Morale, Welfare and Recreation needed to explore different avenues to provide leisure travel service to soldiers," said Jo Pendry, chief of Business Operations at CFSC. "Our efforts are focused on developing agreements with travel companies to get the soldier the 'best deal'. We want military travelers to be educated consumers and make informed decisions about their travel arrangements, but we can also help by leveraging the Soldiers' buying power."

Pendry added the Army is currently in discussions with the other services, the airlines and Internet companies for other options to best serve Soldiers and other service members.

A special MWR website, www.offdutytravel.com has been created to help travelers find the best fares.

SatoTravel, the agency holding travel contracts at three CONUS installations, also advised Army officials that they would no longer pay concession fees effective Nov. 1. Army officials did reach agreement with SatoTravel about continuing service.

"SATO showed a willingness to negotiate fees and a concern for the young Soldiers," said Bill Bartelt, director of CFSC's Business Programs.

No transaction fees will be charged to E-5s and below or any Soldiers on emergency leave. All other military travelers will pay a fee of $6 and a rate of $3 for each additional family member. Bartelt added, "SATO has also agreed to provide airline bookings via a web site, www.satotravel.com/armyvacations, which includes a self-book and e-ticket capabilities for airline reservations at "no charge" to travelers."

Bartelt said this kind of agreement is an example of the ways Army MWR plans to use technology and travel industry trends to provide service to Soldiers without fees. SatoTravel is also posed to offer a full range of tour and cruise options, which can be booked by calling toll free, (877) 304-8454 for cruises and (800) 949-7286 for tours.

"This is just the first of several arrangements the Army plans to ensure the Soldier can truly get the best deal," Bartelt said.

For more information, call Yount at (703) 681-5225 or e-mail yountd@hoffman-cfsc.army.mil.

Don't forget that the speed limit in housing is 15 mph

God often bestows blessings in unexpected ways

Chaplain (Maj.) Tom Wheatley
Bayonet correspondent

reflections

Our expectations about things has a great impact on what and how we experience those things. In fact, we can actually miss out on some great opportunities if they do not present themselves in accordance with our preconceived ideas.

Paradigm is a word that illustrates this phenomenon — it means a model, an example, or a pattern of how something should be. If something does not fit our paradigm then we may not recognize it. For example, back in the 1940s, the Swiss had 80 percent of the world market on watches. Then one of their own, a Swiss watchmaker, presented a model of a digital watch. The other Swiss watchmakers immediately rejected the digital model because it did not have hands and gears that all watches were supposed to have; in other words, this new watch did not fit their paradigm of a watch. Because of their inability to see beyond their own narrow ideas for their product, two other companies, one American and one Japanese, bought the rights to produce the watch. By the next decade, the Swiss had lost their corner on the market for watches.

Today, 80 percent of the watches sold are digital watches.

When I read Matthew, Chapter 11, I see the same thing happening over the appearance of Jesus Christ. Jesus did not fit the paradigm of how the Messiah was supposed to appear. In this chapter of Matthew, we even find John the Baptist questioning Jesus from prison to see if he really is the one they had all been waiting for. Now John the Baptist is the one who had been sent to prepare the way for the Messiah, and he himself had already announced that Jesus was the Messiah.

During his stay in prison John probably had a lot of time to think. He began to review all of the things that Jesus was doing, and maybe compared it to the descriptions of the Messiah from the Old Testament. Jesus was not exactly fitting the description of a hero-king or conquering warrior who would defeat all of the enemies and restore the former glory of the kingdom. So now even John the Baptist had become discouraged, and wanted to check once more if Jesus was the one prophesied.

All of us have questioned God and His ways of doing things at some point in our lives. We might wonder what God could possibly have in mind by bringing about certain results.

Or we might miss out all of God's blessings right at hand because these opportunities do not appear as we expected.

Perhaps we need to keep an open mind, and recognize that God can do anything God wants to do, and that he will often appear in the most unexpected way. God certainly fooled most everyone when Jesus first arrived on the scene. But what continued to convince everyone was the amazing works that he performed in support of his unusual words.

And when Jesus was asked this question of John, he responded in a way that was to prove he was working in accordance with Old Testament prophecy: "Go back and report to John what you hear and see: The blind receive sight, the lame walk, those who have leprosy are cured, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, and the good news is preached to the poor. Blessed is the man who does not fall away on account of me." (Luke 11:4-6)

The thing that will continue to convince us that God is God, an all-powerful, all-loving and ever-present God, is that he will continue to do amazing things in our lives and the lives of others. And it certainly will not always be what we expect or even deserve.

I do not believe there is one human paradigm that can contain God, no matter how hard we try to fit God and his ways into a preconceived pattern or mold.

Let's just try to expect wonderful things from him, and the more we expect to see him in our day to day activities and in the people around us, the more we will see him at work, right at hand.

Encourage rather than judge

Chaplain (Capt.) James W. Blount
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

reflections

I often wonder what Martin Luther King Jr., would think if he were alive today. I wonder what he would be doing. I think that he probably would still be leading the civil rights movement, in one form or another.

Although we have come a very long way from the cotton fields, we are still a long, long way from being judged by the content of our character rather than the color of our skin. Unfortunately in our society today people in general are too often judged from the outside instead of the inside. It is much more than black and white, but also fat and thin, ugly and beautiful, poor and rich, physically or mentally challenged and "normal," and on and on and on.

Don't you just get sick of it?

Actually, I'd rather not judge at all. Jesus Christ said in Matthew 7:1-2, "Do not judge, or you too will be judged, and with all the measure you use, it will be measured to you."

Rather than judge, be an encourager. Make up your mind to encourage everyone you meet to be the best that they can be. I think that Martin Luther King would applaud that.

As we celebrate King's life and dreams, let us realize that his cause was not just for black people but for all people. His cause was not just a civil rights cause, but a Christian cause. We all should have a dream!

chapel notes

Kelley Hill conducts midweek service — A midweek worship is now being conducted at Kelley Hill Chapel at 6 p.m. Wednesdays. The service includes music, prayer, and Bible study. Everyone is invited to attend.

For more information, call 544-2432 or 544-3070.

Center holds preparation class — There will be a confirmation preparation class at the Religious Education Center, Building 2506, beginning Jan. 25 and continuing on Tuesdays for approximately 10 weeks.

This class will be for junior high and high school students. The class will be Protestant in nature, and will include explanations of baptism, communion, salvation, the components of a worship service and some Bible study as related to the above subjects.

At the conclusion of the class, those who are interested in becoming members of a specific denomination or church will be put in contact with a chaplain of that denomination for further denominational instruction.

Classes will begin at 3:30 p.m. and will last approximately one hour.

For more information or to register, call 545-4715.

Protestant Women plan retreat — The Protestant Women of the Chapel will have a retreat at Smiths Station Baptist Church Jan. 28-29. The retreat begins at 7 p.m. Jan. 28 and 9 a.m. Jan. 29. The theme will be "Stand in the Gap," and the focus verse is Ezekial 22:30. Reservations are required.

Food and free child care will be provided, and a donation to cover expenses will be requested.

For more information or to register, call Heidi Cerjan at 689-9211 no later than Jan. 21.

Knicks topple Ruff Ryders in season opener

Basketball action heats up YS gym once again

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Knicks defeated the Ruff Ryders Saturday in the 10-12-year- old co-ed division on opening day of the Youth Services basketball season. Aggressive defense and cooperative teamwork resulted in an easy 33-14 win for the Knicks.

Standing heads above his teammates, at 5'9", Knicks point guard Anthony Lacour III easily dominated the court throughout the game. Lacour led the game with 18 points, nearly all scored under the net, and displayed incredible talent for rebounding.

"He's the big man. His height is our strength," said Charles Tunstall, Knicks assistant coach.

Despite a consistent valiant effort by the Ruff Ryders, the Knicks maintained the lead throughout the entire game after recovering from an initial tip-off score by Ruff Ryder center Michael Eberheart.

"We played good ball, but their big guy is just so physically big, it made it very difficult to get in there. He makes every rebound and doesn't even have to jump," said Dave Osborne, Ruff Ryders assistant coach.

Although Lacour's sheer size gave the Knicks an obvious advantage early in the game, teammates Terrell Anthony, guard, and Damaris Gutierrez, forward, displayed raw talent that promises to become an unstoppable force by the end of the season. Anthony used his smaller stature to repeatedly outmaneuver his opponents and personally assist Lacour.

"He's (Anthony) the brains behind it all. He has a real knowledge of the game and knows how to control the ball," said Tunstall. Anthony scored eight points for the Knicks, most from a three-point vantage.

Team captain Gutierrez had four assists, and scored a three-point shot in the second half. She was the sole female scorer in the game.

"It's my first year here, and my first time playing co-ed. I was a little bit nervous," she said.

Ricardo Lynton, head coach for the Knicks, had praise for the team. "They all came out highly motivated. They have a spirit to play, and they're all team players," he said.

Ruff Ryders team captain, Walter McGee, forward, helped his team with seven points and incited a short fourth-quarter scramble for control that left the Knicks momentarily stunned.

"We need to work on lay-ups, and we missed some defensive assignments, but we played pretty good otherwise. Their big guy just occupied too much space," said Charley Norman, head coach for the Ruff Ryders.

20th annual Girl Scout run set

Girl Scouts of the Concharty Council

Ready ... set ... go! Mark those calendars and send in those registration forms for the 20th Annual Regions Bank girl Scout Cookie Run set for Jan. 29 at Columbus State University.

The race begins at 9 a.m. with a 5K run — sanctioned event certified by USA Track & Field. First, second and third place awards will be presented to males in females in all categories. This event includes a wheelchair race.

If 5K is just too far to run, there is also a 1.5 mile "Run for the Cookies" around the campus beginning at 10 a.m.

Preregistration fees are $10 for adults and $7 for children 17 and under. Preregistration deadline is 5 p.m. Jan. 27 at the Concharty Council office. Race day fee is $12 for adults and $9 for children. All registered participants will receive a long-sleeved Cookie Run T-shirt. Registration forms are available at all Columbus Regions Bank locations or you can receive one by mail by calling the Concharty Council office at 327-2646.

The annual Cookie officially kicks off the delivery of 2000 Girl Scout Cookies. Girl Scout cookies will be available for purchase at the Cookie Run.

Martin Luther King basketball tourney rounds out week

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The Martin Luther King Jr. U.S. Army Infantry Center Basketball Tournament started Monday at 6 p.m. in the Briant Wells Fitness Center and ends tonight with the championship game at 5:30.

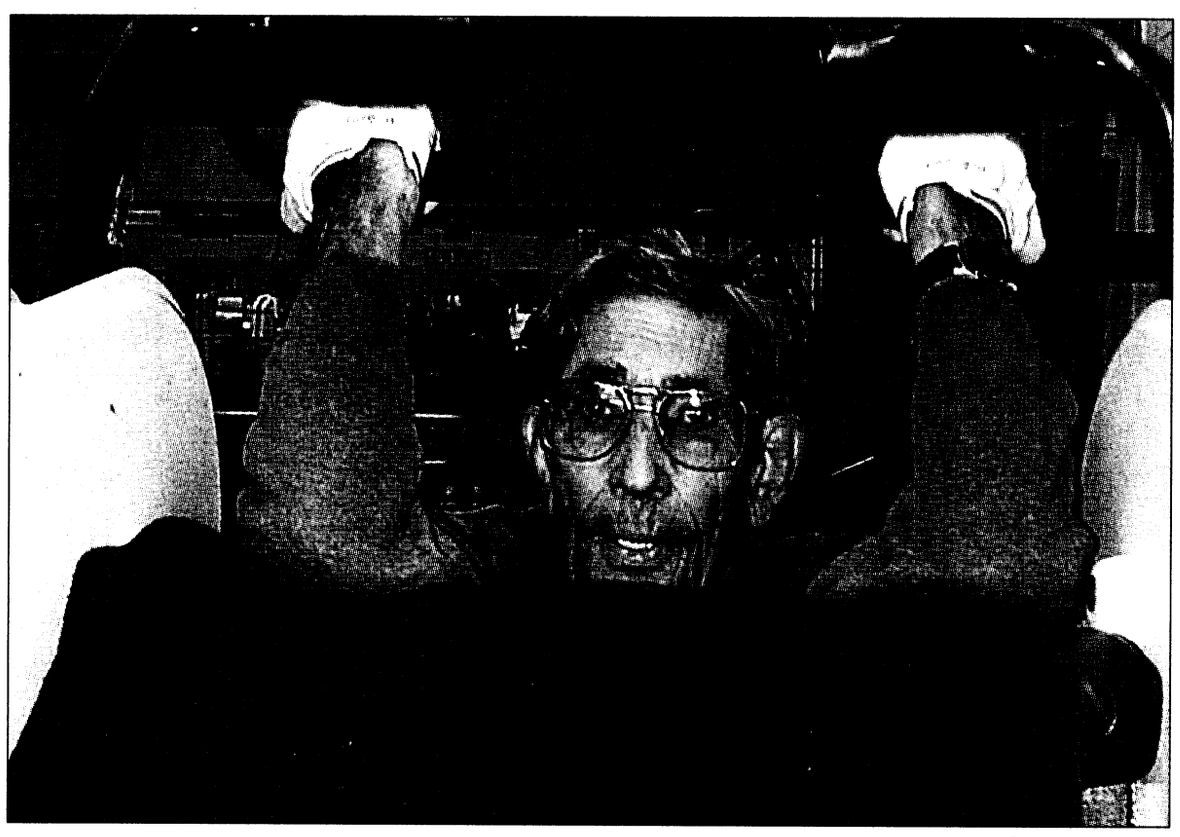
The first teams to tip off in the tournament were the 988th Military Police Company and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade. It was HHC who emerged victorious beating the MPs 40-31.

"We had a good game and really hustled," said Eric Smith, a hoopster on the winning team. "We really didn't have a strategy," he said, "We just came to play."

At the end of the first half HHC was up by only four points, leading 19-15. They would open their lead in the second half. Plagued by fouls and turnovers, both teams battled up and down the hardwood court.

"There were a lot of fouls and turnovers by both teams," said Ken Steinlage, 988th MPs. "The refs made good calls, but I wish they would have just let us play," he said.

"I think we need to work a little more on defense and quit turning over the ball," Smith said. "Overall I was pretty happy with the game," he said.



Steinlage agreed with Smith and was happy about his teams performance,

"It was the first time the team was able to play together, and that hurt us, but we did pretty good. We just had lazy 'D'," he said.

"We have a lot to work on," he said. "We need more practice and need to play together, working on post drills, getting inside and getting into basketball shape."

Smith was quick to add that his team would be working hard in practice.

"We need to work on fouling less and playing together," Smith said.

Retired Chief Warrant Officer Otis Nunnally, an 80-year-old Columbus resident, does a set of curls on a Nautilus machine in the Infantry Hall Fitness Center Wednesday.

The Infantry Hall Fitness Center is open Monday through Friday from 5:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. The center will be closed Jan. 17 for the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday.

USAMU home to male, female athletes of the year

Paula J. Randall-Pagan
U.S.Army Marksmanship Unit

Staff Sgt. Kenneth A. Johnson, a U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit international rifle shooter, and Sgt. Julie A. Goloski, a member of the USAMU Action Shooting Team, the 1999 Army Male and Female Athletes of the Year, left Fort Benning Thursday morning to attend a reception and dinner in their honor that night at the Crystal Gateway Marriott in Washington, D.C.

The Soldiers are scheduled to meet with Assistant Chief of Staff for Installation Management Maj. Gen. Robert L. Van Antwerp at the Pentagon this morning and later with Community and Family Support Center Commander Brig. Gen. Craig B. Whelden in Alexandria, Va., after which they will attend a press conference at the Marriott.

This afternoon the athletes will be the guests of Rep. Mac Collins of Georgia in his Washington, D.C., office and then they will attend a photo session.

Johnson and Goloski, along with the other eight Armed Forces Athletes of the Year, will be honored at the Pride of the Nation Awards Banquet Friday evening, hosted by the U.S. Military Sports Association at the Marriott, and Saturday, they will attend a farewell brunch at the home of Air Force Assistant Vice Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. William Begert.

Johnson

Johnson, the 1999 Army Male Athlete of the Year, won two Gold Medals and two U.S. Olympic quota slots in the Air Rifle and Three-Position Rifle Matches at the Pan-American Games, conducted in Winnipeg, Canada, this summer. He also won Gold Medals in Air Rifle in the Masters de France and Interservice Championships, as well as winning the Gold Medal in 300-Meter Three-Position and the Silver Medal in 300-Meter Prone at the National Championships this year.

Raised in Marshfield, Mass., Johnson graduated from Marshfield High School in 1987. He continued his education at Clarkson University, N.Y., where he was a three-time All-American, and graduated in 1991 with a bachelor's degree in both engineering and psychology.

Johnson, who started shooting competitively in 1983, joined the Army in August 1992. After he graduated from Basic Training at Fort Jackson, S.C., and Generator Repair School at Fort Belvoir, Va., he was assigned to the U.S. Army

USAMU: Shooters win

The 31-year-old has numerous marksmanship accomplishments including being a 1998 World Championship Team member, alternate member of the 1996 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team, a three-time 1995 Pan-American Games Gold Medalist, two-time National Air Rifle Champion, a National Three-Position and 300-Meter Prone Champion and an Air and Free Rifle National Record Holder.

"For many years, Ken has been one of the best international rifle shooters in the country, and this year was no exception," said USAMU International Rifle Coach Bill Krilling. "He is one of the most dedicated international rifle shooters when it comes to training and preparing for matches. Although he competes against 10 former Olympians and three world-record holders on a daily basis, his skill and composure lead him to victory against these great athletes in many matches in which he competes."

Johnson volunteers his time in training junior international rifle shooters as well as training high school and state junior Olympic shooters. He and his wife, Nancy, who is also a world-class international rifle shooter and a former Olympian, live in Phenix City, Ala.

Goloski

Goloski, the 1999 Army Female Athlete of the Year, is this year's Women's World Speed Shooting Champion, as well as the current Open and Limited U.S. Practical Shooting Association Women's National Champion.

Although she is only 22 years old, Goloski became the first woman ever to win seven out of eight of the USPSA Area Championships in the United States, breaking the previous record she set last year when she became the first woman to win the majority of the area championships.

She was also this year's Military Division Gold Medalist and Female Silver Medalist at the Bianchi Cup, as well as winning Gold Medals at the Single Stack Classic, Kentucky State Championships and the Golden Gate and Aware Invitationals.

Goloski, who started shooting in 1991, joined the Army right after graduating from Mynderse Academy of Seneca Falls, N.Y., in 1995. After she completed basic training and Military Police School, she joined the USAMU's Action Shooting Team.

"Through her determination, hard work and dedication, Julie has become the best female action shooter in the nation, as demonstrated by her many achievements this year," said USAMU Action Pistol Team Coach Ray Arredondo. "She won nearly every match in which she competed, something no other American female action shooter has ever done. She also keeps informed of the latest trends and developments to ensure that she is on the cutting edge of technology in her sport."

When she's not competing, Goloski trains U.S. Army Rangers in pistol shooting to prepare them for the annual Best Ranger Competition, as well as doing numerous public appearances and media interviews to assist the Army's recruiting mission. She is single and lives in Columbus.

Don't forget to check out the final game of the MLK basketball tourney tonight at 5:30 p.m. at Briant Wells Gym.

Atlanta Hawks discount tickets — There will be a 50 percent discount off all $50, $40 and $20 tickets for the Hawks vs. Bucks game Monday. Game time is 2 p.m. at the Phillips Arena. Offer is good to all military ID card holders and applies to the first four tickets purchased. Tickets are available at the Phillips Arena box office and at all Columbus area Ticket Master locations.

Team looks for players — Local softball team seeks high caliber players to play on Columbus team.

For more information call Jimmy Armstrong at 566-2015.

Callaway Gardens offers clinic — The Callaway Gardens Fly-Fishing School is conducting two-day clinics that include a group classroom session, field instruction and fly-fishing for rainbow, brown and brook trout in one of the Garden's premiere private lakes.

Topics to be covered include equipment selection, knots, fly selection and casting. The cost of $150 per student also includes lunch both days of the class.

Register now for clinics scheduled for Feb. 5-6, April 1-2, June 3-4 and June 24-25. Overnight accommodations are available. They are filling up quickly, so call the Callaway Gardens Fly-Fishing Shop today at (706) 663-5142, or call 1-800-CALLAWAY (225-5292).

Post running club meets — The Follow-Me Roadrunners, Fort Benning's official running club, will hold their next meeting at 4 p.m. Wednesday at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, Building 468. The club's primary mission is to support the Fort Benning Army Ten-Miler team. This meeting will serve as a planning session for the year's events and be followed by an optional run.

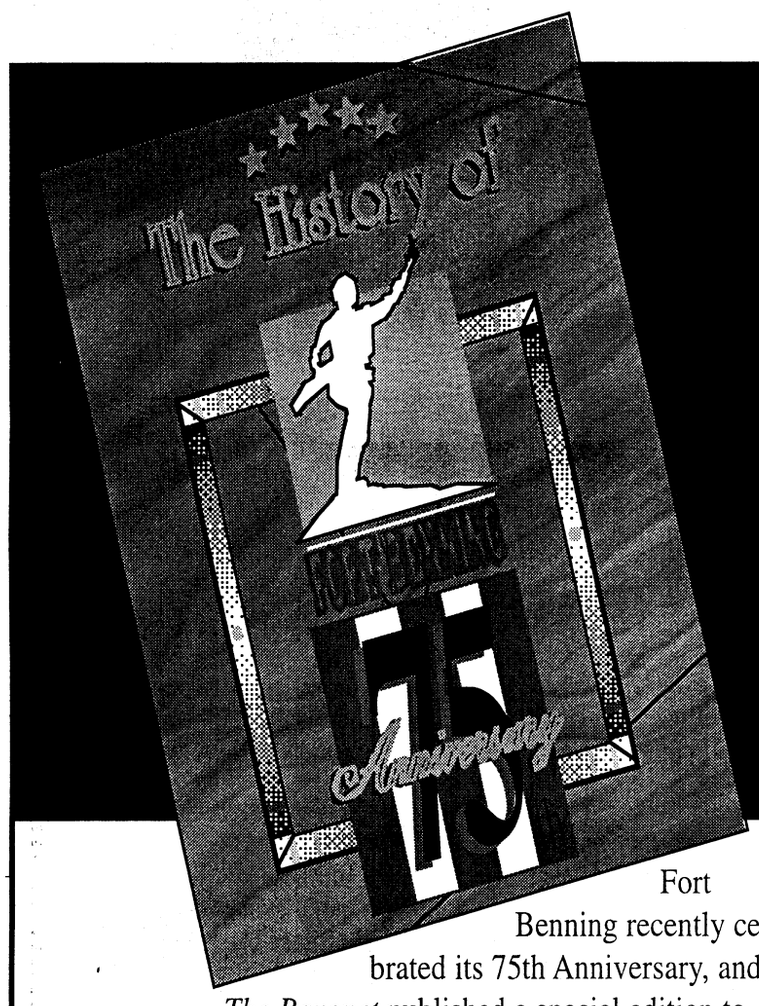
For more information, call Capt. Danny McMillan at 545-6380 or 545-6386.

Auburn University hosts institute — Bass Fishing Techniques is America's only comprehensive institute dedicated to teaching anglers to become better bass fishermen. Its instructional staff includes 13 Bass Masters Classic Champions and 15 B.A.S.S. Anglers of the Year.

This year, Auburn will feature six top pros, including Denny Brauer, Guido Hibdon, Dion Hibdon, Ken Cook, Mark Menendez and Rick Morris. These anglers have vast fish-catching experience earned through years of trial and error on the water. The Bass Fishing Techniques Institute will shorten the "learning curve" by passing the fish-catching knowledge of the pros along to participants. Whether you are an expert or a beginner, Bass Fishing Techniques will improve your bass catching ability. Take this opportunity to visit our campus Feb. 5-6, while enjoying your passion of bass fishing.

For more information call the Outreach Program Office at Auburn University at (334) 844-5100.

Georgia Games to begin — The Georgia Games, the nation's leading state games program, will return to Atlanta for its 10-year anniversary, 2000 Championships and other amateur sporting events.



All Georgia residents will have the opportunity to compete or volunteer in a wide variety of events beginning in early spring and lasting through the fall. Athletes of all ages and skill levels can choose from more than 150 events taking place all over the state in 10 District Sports Festivals in May and June.

In July more than 16,000 athletes and volunteers will participate in the 43 sports and 55 events offered during the five day Olympic-style sports festival July 19-23.

Dates and locations for the 2000 Georgia Games are:

- Jan. 29 — Fashion For Life-Charity Fashion Show, Atlanta
- Jan. 30 — Super Bowl XXXIV-Georgia Dome, Atlanta
- March 5 — Spring SportsFest, Johns Creek, Duluth
- May 13 — Centennial Olympic Park 5K Run-a-Round, Centennial Olympic Park, Atlanta
- May-June — 10 District Sports Festivals, throughout Georgia
- July 14-21 — Torch Run, throughout Georgia
- July 19-23 — Championships, throughout Metro Atlanta and surrounding areas
- July 21 — Opening Ceremonies, Georgia Tech
- Sept. 16 — Fall Jamboree, Life University, Marietta

For more information call the Georgia Games headquarters at (770) 528-3580 or visit the website at www.georgiagames.org.

FORT BENNING HISTORY BOOK

published to commemorate

FORT BENNING'S 75th ANNIVERSARY

Fort Benning recently celebrated its 75th Anniversary, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

We knew the book would be interesting and informative. The next step was to make it as attractive as possible. An experienced layout and design firm was hired, and they have done an absolutely superb job. You will enjoy thumbing through its pages for years to come. You will also be proud to put in a prominent place at home for friends to enjoy, or at work for your customers to see. And, if you're looking for gift for a retiree, or a friend who served at Fort Benning and is no longer here, there's no better way to remind them of your lasting friendship.

Published by the contract printer of Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, The Bayonet, the hardcover book, protected by a beautiful full-color dust cover, has 168 pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, an overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and Desert Shield/Storm, detailed information on the current major units, and a variety of stories that round out the post's interesting history.

It is the perfect "coffee table book" and is a 'must have' for anyone who has been stationed at Fort Benning. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of Fort Benning, recognized year after year as. . .

"The Best Army Installation in the World!"

4-H...Making a Difference

Today, young people face tough decisions in every community. Between the ages of 10 - 14, kids are making lifestyle choices that will affect their futures.

4-H is teaching kids basic life skills . . .
meeting the needs of diverse young citizens across America . . .
directing kids voluntarily to help themselves and others as they interact in their communities
. . . engaging youth to solve important and critical community issues
. . . the same issues about which you are concerned.

Wherever you live, 4-H is there creating supportive environments for kids to reach their fullest potential.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school this fall:

- Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.
- Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.
- Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

Attention Soldiers

Are you in command of your retirement?
How much control do you have?
Do you want control?

Call me for a "no obligation" confidential appointment to discuss how YOU can take command of your retirement funding options through the financial and insurance products I offer.

Think About This:

Almost All Your Investments Are In Equities. You Need Some Liquid Investments. Great, Another 2,000 Choices To Consider, Right?

There are plenty of investment choices out there. And it certainly can get confusing, even when choosing liquid investments. So we'd like you to consider Series I Bonds. They're backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Treasury, so every cent of your investment is protected. They're guaranteed to stay ahead of inflation for up to 30 years, and their interest is fully exempt from state and local income taxes. What's more, you can get started with as little as $50. And you can purchase them where you work, bank, or through the new U.S. Savings Bonds EasySaver℠ Plan. To find out more about I Bonds, point your browser to www.savingsbonds.gov, or write to I Bond Investor's Guide, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328.
I Bonds. They're one easy, and safe choice to consider.

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Loans: Lender loosens its requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered " yes" to any of these questions, they can help you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you are pre-approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self -employed? Late-house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge - "how much you qualify for". Credit manager Kevin Thompson or his assistant, Jim Stallings can be reached at 322-8888 ext 144 or ext 145. Open 7 days a week.

W-2s to arrive, tax help available

Infantry Hall center set to open Jan. 31

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

With W-2 forms about to be sent out, many Soldiers are already making plans for having their taxes done and hopefully getting some of their hard earned tax money back.

While there are many businesses off-post that will compute and file taxes for Soldiers, there's only one place they can have their taxes done and electronically filed for free.

The Fort Benning Tax Center, which opens Jan. 31 in Room 1 of Infantry Hall, will provide Soldiers with an easy way to get their state and federal taxes prepared, said Capt. Richard Henry, installation tax officer.

"We can do all personal income tax," he said. "We do itemized deductions, rental property because a lot of people own houses in other places. We can also do stuff with mutual funds and stocks because a lot of people are getting into that. We do pretty much anything."

Henry said there are only a few examples of when the tax center won't be able to help.

"We don't do corporate tax or partnership tax because that deals with a company," he said. "We, as JAG officers, can't help someone with a home business because that's not what we're here for — we're here to support the Soldiers and what they're doing for the Army.

"If you've got W-2s from a side job, that's okay, but we can't do corporate taxes for a home business," he added. "We can do taxes for rental properties if you have up to two properties, more than that might look like you're working on a business."

The tax center, which helped customers fill out more than 4,500 federal returns and 5,000 state returns, will be staffed by IRS trained Soldiers and volunteers from across post. Henry said they will be using a tax program to figure out tax liability for their customers.

"The computer program that we use does all of the computations," Henry said. "The entire Army uses this program. It's a commercial program that the Army has been using for the past few years."

Henry said there are many reasons Soldiers should take advantage of the free services at the tax center.

"It's a free service that's right here on post, so you don't have to go some place else," he said. "Everyone has training from the IRS, so there's no reason not to use the tax center. We do the electronic filing and that speeds up the process. Plus, you are required to file taxes, so you might as well get them done here for free."

Doing taxes for Soldiers saved customers more than $350,000 in preparation and filing fees last year.

Henry said there are several other ways the tax center can save customers money as well.

"When you go downtown and do the fast return that they do, they usually charge a huge chunk of interest on the money they Usually, when Tracy Hartmann meets with Mark Topp it's in the Cable One Advertising offices in Fargo, N.D.

Topp is a sales representative for the company; Hartmann is his boss.

"I told him he would have a job when he got back."

Jan. 12 the two met at the CONUS Replacement Center at Fort Benning for about an hour, and advertising was not the center of conversation.

Topp is a sergeant in B Company, 142nd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy), North Dakota National Guard. The unit left Wednesday from Fort Benning on its way to Camp Bondsteel in Kosovo.

Hartmann was with a group of 40 employers from North Dakota visiting the post as part of the Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve Bosslift program Jan. 12-14.

"We talked about what we (B Co., 142nd EC Bn.) were doing here at CRC," Topp, a plumber and carpenter, said.

"This was her first impression of the military, and many of the things she saw during her visit, I haven't even had a chance to see."

Feds publish FAIR list

Study names positions that may face cuts

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A list of Army functions deemed "commercial" in nature, and thus possibly susceptible to outsourcing, was released to the public late last month.

The Federal Activities Inventory Reform list, originally expected to be released in November, was made available Dec. 30 by the Office of Management and Budget. OMB released the FAIR list for 21 federal agencies — including the Army — with an announcement in the Federal Register.

Under the FAIR Act of 1998, each federal agency was required annually to make available to the public a list of functions judged to be "not inherently governmental" and as such possibly able to be performed by contractors. This was the first such list compiled, officials said.

Paper and CD-ROM copies of the FAIR list were provided to 16 public libraries in the Washington, D.C., area, to include county libraries in Virginia and Maryland. The list was also made available at the Library of Congress and the Pentagon Library, and can be viewed on the FAIRNET web site at http://gravity.lmi.org/dodfair.

In addition, officials said more information about the Army's FAIR List is available at another web site, www.asamra.army.pentagon.mil. And a DoD hotline number for more FAIR Act information has been activated at (703) 917-7431.

The Army's FAIR list contains functions now performed by more than 221,000 civilian employees, officials said.

A large portion of the Army's civilian jobs — about 84 percent — had to be included on the FAIR list, Dr. John Anderson said, in light of the legal definition for "inherently governmental."

He said this term refers to positions which involve, among other things, interpreting and executing the laws "so as to bind the United States to take or not take some action."

Anderson is the Army official at the Pentagon responsible for the Army FAIR list.

In addition, Anderson said just because a job is "not inherently governmental" does not mean that

Retirees may see boost in benefits

Legislation set to settle veterans' healthcare woes

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

When Charles Butler decided to make the military a career nearly 50 years ago, he said he was led to believe upon retirement, he wouldn't have to worry about the high cost of health care in the new millennium.

It was just something the Army would pay for in return for his 28 years of service to the country.

Now nearly 28 years after this 74-year-old has turned in his stripes, he is still left waiting for that promised benefit to become reality.

Although the cuts that have left Butler without full medical coverage have come from the very people he said promised him the benefits, there is now a possible light at the end of the tunnel for Butler and his retired colleagues.

That newly found light has been created courtesy of proposed legislation circulating in the halls of Washington that sponsors hope will restore full medical benefits to America's retired service men and women.

The "Keep Our Promises to America's Military Retirees Act" was drafted last year by Mississippi Congressman Ronnie Shows but failed to make the docket before the legislature closed its doors last fall.

While Shows said the failure for the bill to reach the floor for discussion last session was a blow to the project, he said it was a blessing in disguise.

Since October, Shows has rallied 219 co-sponsors for the bill, making it one of the group's top priorities when the House reconvenes Tuesday.

"This is the broken promise bill that America's military retirees have been waiting years to see," Shows said. "We should provide health care that was promised to our military retirees, and to which they are entitled after devoting their lives to defend our country."

The bill is based upon what Shows calls an inequity in coverage for both pre- and post-CHAMPUS (Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services) served retirees.

In June 1956, service unique health care was replaced with CHAMPUS leaving those who enlisted prior to 1956 eligible for the Army's full medical retirement package — so they thought.

Extra pay brings plusher pleasures

I like money. I'm not going to deny it. And when the new year flipped double zero and the world hadn't been obliterated or taken over by a pack of mutant aliens, I had a little something to be thankful for — a few more bucks in the ol' checkaroo that is.

Yes, we lucky Army folk have something to look forward to this year — 4.8 percent more to look forward to, to be exact.

To be perfectly honest I don't understand the whole process of how Congress decides to give us more money, but the fact I'm getting more is a big plus in my book, and for the first time in my military career I have no complaints.

The fact is, the raise couldn't have come at a better time. Right now we are all wading through the aftermath of our holiday shopping extravaganzas, and what could be better than some extra money to keep us from wanting to hurt the mailman after he delivers the credit card bill?

Of course, being the lowly E-4 that I am, any bit of added money that comes my way is like Christmas all over again. And I am proud to say this new raise opens up a whole new and exciting world for me.

First of all, I am no longer afraid of the words "super size." I can now proudly look the cashier at Burger King in the eyes and say the words "super size" with the utmost confidence that I have the money in my pocket to cover it.

I have also said goodbye to the trusty dollar store toilet paper and moved onto plusher sheets. Instead of merely dreaming of two-ply, I am now the proud owner of a 12-pack of double roll, aloe-enhanced, super-thick tissue.

But the best I would have to say comes in the form of shopping at the commissary. I never knew you could get a feeling of power buying name brand instead of the fake stuff, but let me tell you it happens. Rushing down the aisle with my Kellogg Frosted Mini-Wheats in hand, the freezer fans blowing cold air through my hair, I realized life couldn't get any better.

So, these are just a few examples of how I'm spending my extra money. Yeah, I know I'm getting excited about the small things, but the truth is the raise isn't all the much. In fact, after taxes it's only about $40 in all. I guess everyone in the military especially the lower enlisted know that already.

But I decided to make a pact with myself. Instead of complaining about how small the raise was, I would think of all the little ways it was helping. And it's funny because the more I thought about it the more I realized that it really did help in a lot of little ways.

So now, I can enjoy my new luxuries of better quality bathroom tissue and brand name cereal while awaiting the second raise in July. Who knows maybe with this next one I will be able to afford something really cool like a psychedelic bean bag chair.

Values training separates Soldiers from civilians

Staff Sgt. K. Allen Whiteacre
3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry

commentary

When I was young, my father would often tell me a harrowing story about his time as a company commander during the Vietnam War. His supply sergeant asked for a stack of pre-signed requisition forms and some vehicles. For this he promised to return with a whole new mess hall. My father did as asked and stressed all day until he saw the convoy of vehicles pull up moments before sunset.

Commanders were not supposed to sign blank requisition forms, and if the supply sergeant's convoy had been caught outside the gate after dark it would have been a dangerous situation that far outweighed the benefits of a new mess hall.

While a fine example of the Army value personal courage, one could argue this story offers an example of actions that violate Loyalty, Duty and Integrity.

Values-based education in basic training offers an excellent way to introduce and reinforce those traits the Army holds valuable.

It is a mistake to say that today's citizens lack values, but it may be fair to say that those values are not directed the way the Army would like them to be.

Soldiers enter the Army with their own values, developed over time by what they have seen, learned, and experienced.

A new trainee who was once a member of a gang, may understand being loyal to that gang, and as a result understands the value of loyalty. It is the job of the drill sergeant to teach and show through example how to apply that value of loyalty in the Army.

Values training gives the drill sergeant another tool to build teamwork in basic training. Few of the privates have really had to consider these seven values in their lives — until basic training.

According to the Department of Army, Army values form the identity of America's Army as an organization and are the glue that binds us as individuals together into a profession. These values tell us what we need to be in every action we take. They are non-negotiable, and apply to everyone all the time in every situation.

These cornerstones upon which decisions are made provide trainees an answer for tough questions. Will this work for every basic trainee? It could.

The problem of course is that not every new recruit will internalize the values. Nine weeks of intense training, posters and Soldiers' cards doesn't force all privates to take on the values of the Army immediately. Nor does nine weeks of training ensure that 100 percent of the privates will pass the Army Physical Fitness Test.

Values training is not that much different than fitness training. Soldiers start from different points, but after completing basic training with its daily dose of instruction the best and the worst have developed something new. Without constant attention, muscles lose tone. And without examples and discussion, values become twisted. No one would suggest that you can't teach physical fitness to someone who has sat on a couch for 20 years, and no one should suggest that values training beginning at age 20 has no effect.

Army values taught in basic training offer a basis for life in today's Army.

The introduction of values to new privates provides an introductory lesson to leadership.

According to the Department of Army, "Be," of Be, Know, Do, is a leader's character, or inner strength. It helps us know what is right and gives us the courage to do what is right regardless of the circumstances. It serves as the basis of knowing and doing.

For the drill sergeant, introducing values to new trainees gives the drill sergeant the opportunity to provide the purpose, motivation and direction to internalize the Army values.

Values-based training is important not because new trainees, whatever their background, don't have values. It is important because throughout the Army's history when values are not made important, or are not the cornerstone of decision-making it has caused problems. As long as we concentrate on values-based training in basic we can be sure that those building blocks will lead to a stronger Army.

Army leaders demand fair treatment for all Soldiers

Service in our Army is honorable and respected by the citizens of this country. Soldiers who offer their commitment and their lives in this service should and must be treated with dignity, honor and respect. Respect for our fellow Soldiers demands that we speak with respect for all. Any derogatory words about any group, including those based upon sexual orientation, that are prejudicial to good order and discipline may subject the Soldier to adverse administrative actions or disciplinary measures under the UCMJ.

Every Soldier has the right to expect treatment consistent with our core values, a safe and secure environment and the support of their chain of command. Whenever we violate the trust of any Soldier, we violate the trust of all Soldiers.

We affirm that treating Soldiers with dignity and respect is a bedrock value for the Army. We declare that there is no room for harassment or threats to any Soldier in our Army for any reason.

Therefore, as the senior leaders of the Army, we are determined to continue to implement the "Don't ask, don't tell" policy with equity and fairness to all of our Soldiers.

Finally, we continue to expect that all Soldiers in the U.S. Army will be treated with dignity and respect at all times, and will be afforded a safe and secure environment in which to live and work. Harassment of Soldiers for any reason, to include perceived sexual orientation, will not be tolerated. We expect commanders at every level to take appropriate action to prevent harassment of or threats against any member of our Army. Once again we are determined to continue to implement the "Don't ask, don't tell" policy with fairness to all because that is the right thing to do for our Soldiers.

How to get your news in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

Requesting coverage

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include brigade-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other post-wide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post. If you can help cover an event, call us first for tips.

Also, due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

Complaints and corrections

If you have a complaint, question or comment about The Bayonet, call the editor at 545-4622. We strive for accuracy, but if we make an error, we will correct it in the next edition of The Bayonet. Call us at 545-4622.

USARSA unites in support of MLK celebration

Members of the U.S. Army School of the Americas celebrate Martin Luther King Day by participating in the Martin Luther King's parade Saturday in Columbus.

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' Soldiers, family support group members, civilian employees and host of Latin American sponsors, united in support of Martin Luther King's Parade, Saturday in Columbus.

USARSA has been supporting the Martin Luther King Parade for the past three years, said Cecilia Alexander, international military student officer and project manager for the school's involvement in the parade.

She said for the past two years the city of Columbus provided USARSA with a decorated float. However, this year they didn't have a float to offer.

"This year we rented a float and had our people help decorate it," said Alexander.

Prior to Saturday's sunshine and the cheering crowd in downtown Columbus, the USARSA team braved the cold early winds Jan. 14, turning a plain float into a colorful representation which Alexander hoped would represent "diversity means equality."

Spec. Ivan Rivera, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, USARSA, has been with the school a little over two months. He said he felt good as a Hispanic American to lend his hand because Martin Luther King represented freedom and unity.

"It makes me feel proud to be part of this organization that celebrates Martin Luther King Day," he said.

Along with Rivera, Pfc. Thomas Childs, also from HHC, was busy stapling red fringes on the float.

"I definitely enjoy helping out because anytime you celebrate an occasion for someone great who did something great for our nation, it's worth it," said Childs.

Margarita Ruff and her 3-year-old daughter Gabriela, carefully positioned colorful paper flowers around the float, which little by little was coming to life.

Ruff, a Colombian native and member of USARSA's family support group, said she felt supporting Martin Luther King Day was important because he allowed equality to become a benchmark in American culture.

"He was a pioneer of human rights for this country," she said. "We all have benefited tremendously by his great triumph."

Because of USARSA's international family, coming together to work on this project was very important, said Carol Contarino.

"This gives them a chance to see how we do things in the U.S. Army," she said. It gives us a chance to work together as a team. This is an Army tradition."

Contarino, also a member of USARSA's family support group said it was additionally gratifying to team up on this project to celebrate Martin Luther King.

"Martin Luther King was important for his role in bringing equality to the forefront of American conscience," she said. "But, he was also important because of his non-violent approach achieving that great deed."

The float, flying the flags represented at USARSA, and carrying children from Bolivia, Venezuela, Guatemala, Paraguay, Costa Rica, and Panama, in their native costumes, was cheered by the hundreds of people lining the downtown streets of Columbus.

The theme for this year's parade was "Unity in the New Millennium."

For Alexander, USARSA's participation was a total success, "We are all one. We have the same goal — unity."

Service honors Martin Luther King

Community gathers to remember contributions of civil rights activist

An estimated 1500 people gathered Jan. 14 at Marshall Auditorium, to honor Dr. Martin Luther King in a commemorative celebration titled "Remember, Celebrate, Act: a day on, not a day off."

In his opening remarks, Staff Sgt. Anthony Jones with the Drill Sergeant School, said the anniversary of King's birthday is a chance to rededicate ourselves to the future.

"The theme of this year's service encourages us to remember Dr. Kings works — what was done and what needs to be done, celebrate his legacy, and act on it by giving our services back to the community," Jones said.

The invocation was delivered by Deputy Post Chaplain Lt. Col. Scott New, who remembered King as a man of faith, "who focused on human dignity, and helped us see the common ground each of us walk."

The event featured music by the Infantry Band and performances by Cy Dietrich, Dexter Elementary School Music and Visual Arts director, and Faith Middle School's Honors Chorus, directed by Faye Lewis Strong.

"We were honored to be invited to perform here today. It was a great opportunity because the students took the time to learn about Martin Luther King," Strong said. "The song we performed, 'Something Inside So Strong,' emphasizes his message that we are all overcomers. Each of these students relate to that in his own way."

Faith Middle School was represented by Anuarite Mubangu, the seventh-grade winner of an essay contest honoring King. The 12-year old presented her winning essay to the packed auditorium.

"I have to admit, before I wrote this essay, I appreciated Martin Luther King Day for all the wrong reasons, taking everything he fought so hard for, for granted. But now I have a better understanding of what this heroic man really accomplished," Mubangu said.

The guest speaker, Brig. Gen. Earl Simms, Commanding General, U.S. Army Soldier Support Institute, Fort Jackson, S.C., remembered King as a great man who advanced the cause of human freedom and racial justice, bringing about long-lasting, substantial changes.

"I do remember Martin Luther King, the times, and how he changed them. It is significant that we pause to recognize, not only the man, but more importantly, what he has done. Don't ever forget. Because if you do, we are doomed to repeat our mistakes," Simms said.

Simms thanked special guests and visiting dignitaries, including NAACP president Edward DuBose.

"As a member of the retired military community, it's quite pleasing to return and embrace the military from this position," Dubose said. "This program shows that Fort Benning is reaching out to the African-American community."

Employers: Get glimpse of Army training

The ESGR group flew to Georgia on a KC-135 tanker that refueled two F-16s from the North Dakota Air Guard during the flight. Their itinerary at Fort Benning included observing Airborne, individual tactical, basic rifle marksmanship and obstacle course training.

They also visited the Close Combat Tactical Trainer Building and the Army Marksmanship Unit during the three-day tour.

Topp informed Hartmann back in October he was being called up to active duty and his unit would leave for Kosovo in January for up to nine months.

"I told him he would have a job when he got back, and he was guaranteed to start back at the same pay. What else would I do?" Hartmann said.

Indeed, federal law protects the jobs of reservists and guardsmen who must deploy.

"It is the law," Maj. Gen. Keith Bjerke, the adjutant general of North Dakota, said. "But there is a big difference between acceptance and forced compliance."

Because of the support Topp received from his boss, he nominated Hartmann for a patriot award with the state's ESGR, and she was selected to participate in the Bosslift to Fort Benning.

The Bosslift is designed to give employers and civic leaders a first-hand look at military training and a better understanding of how the National Guard and Reserves work together with the active component.

"More than 50 percent of our military forces are made up of reservists and guardsmen," Jim Helphrey, North Dakota state chairman for the ESGR, said Jan. 14 before the group observed Individual Tactical Training at Malone Complex Range No. 3 by E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, Infantry Training Brigade.

The mobilization of the 142nd affected employers all over the state.

"I know an electrician who only has eight employees, and three are in the unit going to Kosovo," Helphrey said.

Douglas Cunningham works with the Job Services program in North Dakota. In 1958 he was a Soldier at Fort Benning.

"I've been very impressed," Cunningham said. "The training is much more difficult and intensive than I remember."

Bjerke, the highest ranking officer in the North Dakota guard, traveled with the ESGR and returned to the state Jan. 14. He plans to see his Soldiers again in Kosovo in April.

"They are the first National Guard engineering unit in the Army to go to Kosovo," Bjerke said.

The company includes contractors, electricians, plumbers, equipment operators and other building professionals.

"Many of them practice their trade every day," Bjerke said. "They have a combination of civilian and military skills. Their civilian skills, honed every day, in combination with their military training, makes them a very successful combat engineering unit."

The company spent all of Saturday going through Theater Specific Individual Readiness Training taught by NCOs and officers from 1st Army, Fort Gillem, Ga.

Three situational awareness classes — media awareness, personnel and vehicle inspections — were conducted in and around the TSIRT center at Harmony Church.

The Situational Training Exercises were conducted at the Force Protection Lanes. Squads moved down 1,000-meter lanes and probed for mines, by-passed a mine-wired obstacle, reacted to sniper fire, dealt with civilians on the battlefield and reacted to incoming artillery.

After completing the lanes training, Capt. Scott Forde, B Co. commander for the past three years, said that it was nice to see the members of the ESGR.

"I'm just sorry that they couldn't stay to see this (lanes training)," Forde said.

"It was awesome."

Civilian role players help Soldiers prepare for Kosovo

"Are you American Soldiers? I'm not here to harm you, I just want to talk. Won't you even help us, G.I.?"

Curtis Bryant Jr. stands along the dirt road of a Force Protection Lane calling out to Soldiers from B Company, 142nd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy), North Dakota Army National Guard.

As the scenario plays out, the Soldiers must deal with Bryant and two women determined to convince the Soldiers to help them.

Bryant, Nevette McEachern and Tiffany McGlockton are "Civilians on the Battlefield" — role players hired to help train Soldiers as they prepare to deploy.

"These are our people, and they are going over to a foreign land," Bryant, of Columbus, said after the training ended.

"We are doing all we can to help them before they get over there, and they better take it very seriously."

During the "hot wash" — a brief critique — after the scenario, lane walkers or trainers, tell the Soldiers how they did, and the civilians are allowed to offer their insight.

Tim Gallagher heard through a friend about the job of being a role player at the Theater Specific Individual Readiness Training center.

He started two years ago.

"It's the most fun job I have ever had in my life," Gallagher said.

Niteline USA of Atlanta is the contractor for role players.

"Niteline brings us in and the lane walkers tell us exactly what they want."

Gallagher and the other role players work some Fridays and almost all Saturdays.

"Sometimes there are as many as 32 of us out here or as little as 7," he said.

Civilian role players are used in the situational awareness classes. In the media awareness class, a role player runs the video camera while public affairs officers play the role of reporters and run the critique afterwards. Civilians are also used in the personnel and vehicle inspection classes.

Training on Saturdays starts at 6:30 a.m. regardless of weather and lasts sometimes to 3 p.m.

When he watches news footage from Bosnia or Kosovo, Gallagher looks for familiar faces, he said.

Jennifer Fitz from Smiths Station, Ala., started working last June. She was part of the personnel inspection section.

"It's fun and I get to help them (deploying Soldiers) in getting trained correctly so they won't get killed and can return safely home."

The job pays about $9 an hour, McGlockton, a representative from Niteline, said, and classified advertisements are used to recruit new role players.

MPs remind joggers, road runners of post regulation

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's military police are spreading the message that runners must observe post PT policies, and drivers must observe restricted speed limits during PT hours.

"During Operation Slow Down, between the hours of 6 a.m. and 7:30 a.m., we have the highest concentration of MPs on the roads," said Staff Sgt. Kimberly Dennis, physical security officer. "This is the time of day when work shifts are changing, so we have officers coming on board and officers ending their shifts. They are all out observing at the same time."

Running is not permitted on Dixie and 10th Mountain Division Roads, and any other road, or section of road, with a posted speed limit of 35 mph or more said Dennis.

Runners in formation must have at least one running guard posted 10 meters in the front and behind.

All runners, whether in formation or alone, must wear shirts and reflective belts or vests. Headphones are not permitted.

Runners, in pairs or small groups, must run in single file and observe all road rules.

Dennis said these policies apply to all runners, military and civilian.

All entrances to Fort Benning have posted signs listing the hour of OSD.

Dennis said that all Soldiers and family members should be aware of the 15 mph speed limit during these hours.

Sand Hill observes OSD Monday-Friday, 5:30-7 a.m. OSD hours on main post are 6-7:30 a.m., Monday through Friday. Kelley Hill is closed to all vehicular traffic, weekdays, from 6:25-7:25 a.m.

Lumpkin Road and Dixie Road, east of Sightseeing Road, are excluded from OPS to accommodate morning traffic entering and leaving post. Runners are not permitted on these roads during these hours.

Soldier faces charges in Kosovo

Fort Bragg man accused of murder, indecent acts with Albanian child

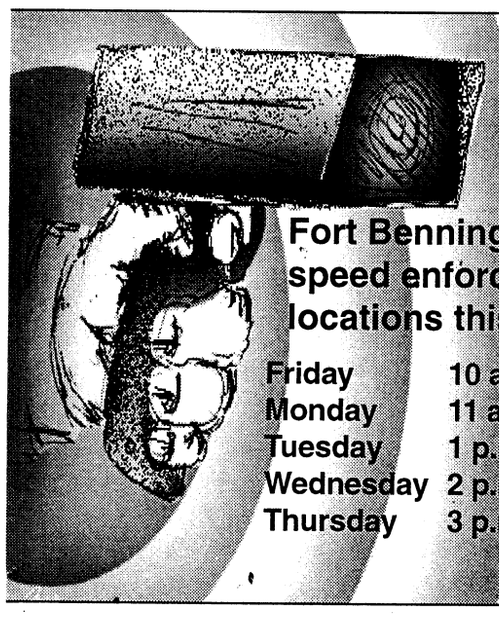
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Staff Sgt. Frank J. Ronghi was formally charged Tuesday with murder and indecent acts with a child.

The charges are in connection with the death of a civilian female who was killed Jan. 13 in the vicinity of the city of Vitina in Kosovo.

Ronghi is a weapons squad leader assigned to A Company, 3rd Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C.

The Army will appoint an investigating officer to conduct a pre-trial investigation that is similar in some respects to a grand jury.



The investigating officer will make recommendations based upon the evidence produced at the hearing.

At the conclusion of the investigation, the investigating officer will recommend to the convening authority whether the charges should be referred to a court-martial.

An Army court-martial is comparable in many regards to its American civilian counterpart, a state criminal court. The accused, after a pre-trial hearing, may be tried before a military judge or a panel of officers and noncommissioned officers.

As in a civilian court, the accused is presumed innocent until guilt has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

Ronghi was transferred to the Mannheim Confinement Facility in Germany pending review by a military magistrate.

Online system makes retirement planning easy

New service allows comparison of benefits via internet-based site

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Department of Defense has unveiled an online calculator designed to help service members decide which military retirement plan is best for them.

The site, http://pay2000.dtic.mil/bottom_ret.html allows members to compare future benefits under the Redux and the High-3 retirement systems.

The fiscal 2000 Defense Authorization Act reformed the military retirement system.

The retired pay reform in the act gives a choice to service members subject to the Redux retirement system — all those who entered the service on or after Aug. 1, 1986 — who reach their 15th year of service beginning in 2001.

First choice: Service members can join the pre-Redux retirement system.

This so-called High-3 system gives members 50 percent of their average basic pay for their highest three earning years before retiring after 20 years of service. To compute retired pay after 20 years of service, for instance, E-7s would total their basic pay for the highest three years — probably the last three — divide the sum by three and then again by two. Retired pay for additional service increases 2.5 percent per year to a maximum of 75 percent for 30 years of service. Also, annual cost of living adjustments are fully indexed to inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index.

Second choice: Eligible service members subject to Redux can take a taxable $30,000 lump-sum bonus, agree to complete at least 20 years of service and choose to remain in the Redux plan. The bonus is immediately payable and can be used any way the member wishes. Retired pay starts at 40 percent of the high three earnings average after 20 years and rises to a maximum of 75 percent for 30 years' service. Redux adjusts pay each year at the rate of the CPI minus 1 percent.

To use the calculator, click on the "You decide — A personalized calculator" link on the Retirement Choice Web page.

Then on the Personalized Retirement Calculator page you click on the "Proceed to the Retirement Calculator" link and then fill in information including your age at 20 years of service and your expected final rank and years of service at retirement. Note whether you would invest your $30,000 bonus if you choose to stay with the Redux option.

The calculator makes some assumptions about the economy — inflation, tax rates, etc. You can accept these defaults or play "what-if?" Click on the "Calculate" button and let the system work.

By law, DoD must notify people facing the decision after they have served 14.5 years. They must make the choice at 15 years of service. The first group facing the choice will be notified in January 2001 for a choice in August 2001.

"We've put this calculator up a year early so people can use it and really understand the choice they are to make," a senior DoD compensation official said. "This is a complicated decision and should not be made lightly."

Law enforcement optimal for Soldiers

Agencies seek Soldiers as police officers

Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Not only are some separating Soldiers looking for careers with law enforcement agencies, but law enforcement agencies are constantly recruiting Soldiers.

To name a few, the following have visited Fort Benning: Phoenix, Ariz.; Charlotte, N.C., and the Columbus Police departments.

Also, the Sheriff's Department from Polk County, Fla., and the Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority Police Department recruited here.

Feb. 17, is the date set for the Georgia Department of Corrections to again recruit separating Soldiers for correction officer and other positions in the state prison system.

Feb. 24, the Polk County Sheriff's Department will return.

"Our ACAP Center upcoming events list more often than not has some kind of law enforcement agency included," said Cynthia Anderson, Fort Benning's ACAP Center automation specialist and Employer Day project officer.

Soldiers have the training, experience, skills, and motivation to make good police officers, but it requires a strong commitment to follow this career path after separation from the Army.

Most police departments require written tests, fitness tests, polygraph tests, background checks, drug tests, interviews and then perhaps a waiting period before entry into the Police Academy.

It is a career path that requires dedication and desire. Law enforcement places many of the same demands on its troops as are found in the Army.

The ACAP Center recommends that Soldiers interested in a law enforcement career after separation should research the job thoroughly to be absolutely certain it's the right career.

Visiting ACAP Employer Days and upcoming job fairs is one way to talk face-to-face with real "cops" and ask probing questions about the life style and demands of a police officer career.

For more information, call the ACAP Center at 545-2308, stop by Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 or visit the web site at http://www-benning.army.mil/ACAP/.

Physical fitness training unit brings trainees up to standard

Tuesday afternoon 10 privates worked on their sit-ups. Paired into teams, the five young men holding the feet of their buddies, encouraged:

"You can do it. You can do more. Come on."

After 30 seconds they switched places.

The Soldiers worked under the supervision of drill sergeants from the Physical Fitness Training Unit, 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), Infantry Training Brigade, in the unit's new workout facility located beside Johnston Hall.

Inside Johnston Hall, Pvt. John Keen was rehearsing for a graduation ceremony.

Earlier Tuesday morning he had passed his physical assessment and was graduating from the PFTU after less than a week in the unit.

"I failed on my sit-ups," Keen said. "I was only able to do six on my initial assessment, and this morning I was able to do 40.

"I was able to pass because of the drill sergeants and the techniques they taught me."

All Soldiers processing through the 30th AG Bn. (Reception) are given a physical fitness test. It involves sit-ups, push-ups and a one-mile run.

On the initial assessment the Soldiers must do 13 push-ups, 25 sit-ups and run one mile in 9 minutes or less.

Those who pass go on One Station Unit Training or to Basic Combat Training; the 5 percent who fail the test are assigned to the PFTU.

While assigned to the unit, the Soldiers have a two-hour cardio-respiratory workout in the mornings and a two-hour muscular workout in the afternoon.

To graduate from the PFTU students must do 20 push-ups, 40 sit-ups and run the mile in 8 minutes or less.

The PFTU graduation rate is around 95 percent, according to Sgt. 1st Class Bruce Balestreri, the unit's commandant.

> "I was able to pass because of the drill sergeants and the techniques they taught me."
> — Pvt. John Keen
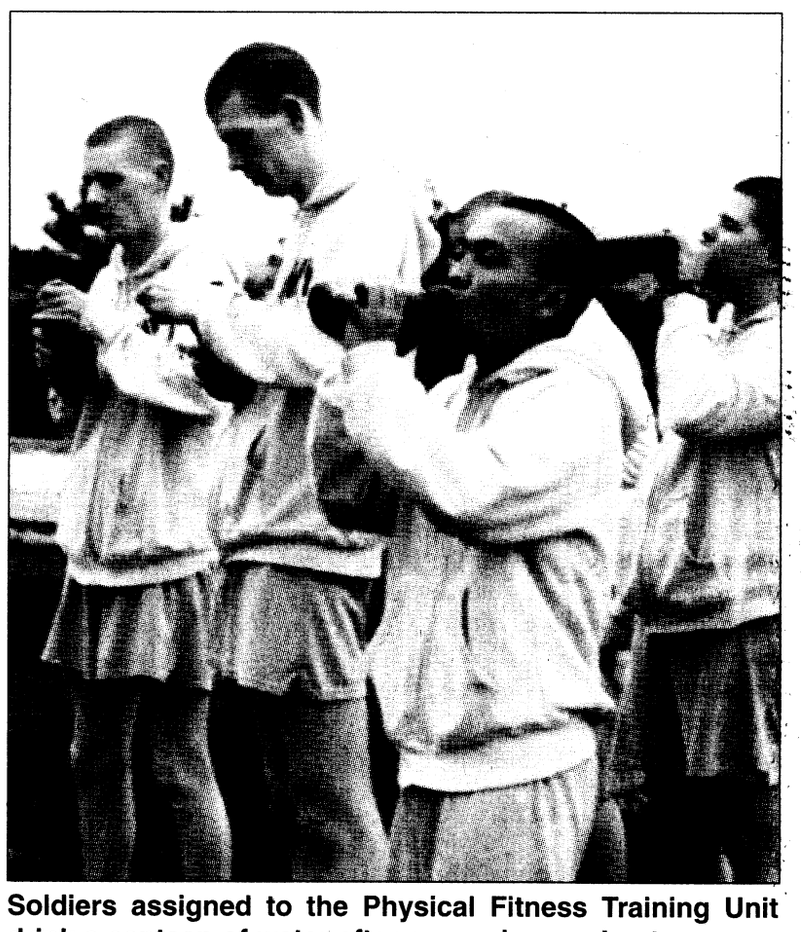
> Physical Fitness Training Unit trainee

The 5 percent who do not pass go home, Balestreri said.

"It's so rewarding to watch the Soldiers improve," said Capt. Tamara Powell, Headquarters and Headquarters Company commander, 30th AG Bn.

"For a lot of Soldiers, it's more a matter of technique. They need to learn the correct position and the correct form."

Staff Sgt. Reynaldo Ruma has been with the PFTU for two years and seen plenty of recruits who needed to shed a few pounds.

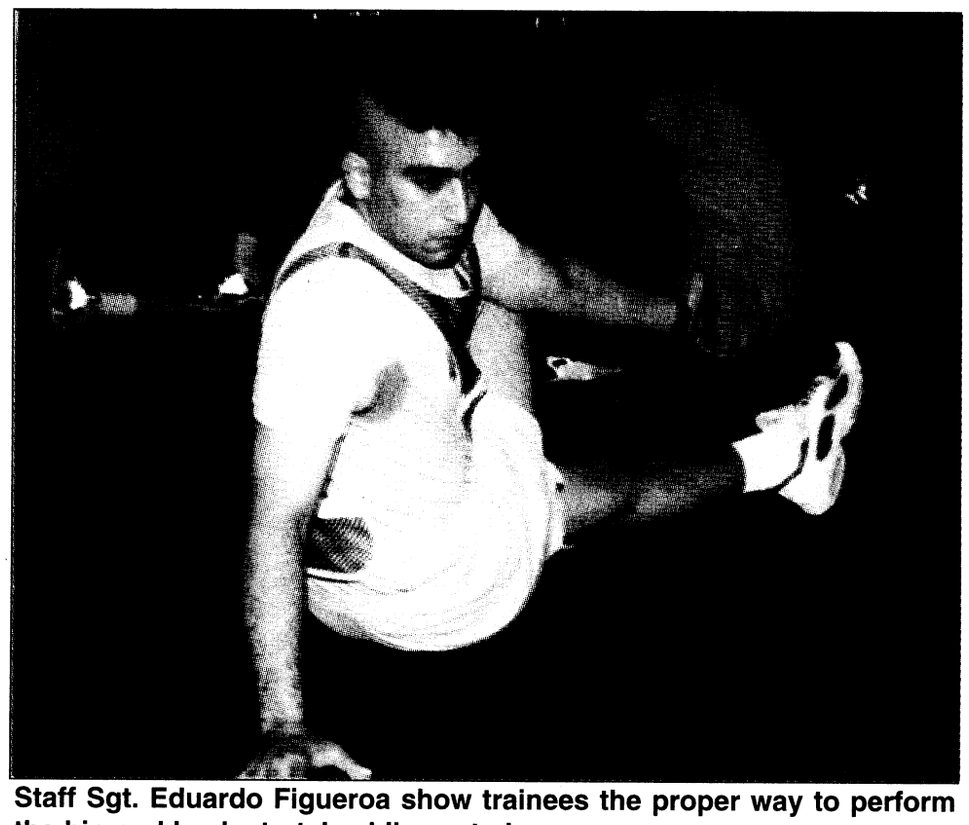


However, lack of upper body strength is a bigger problem for incoming troops, he said.

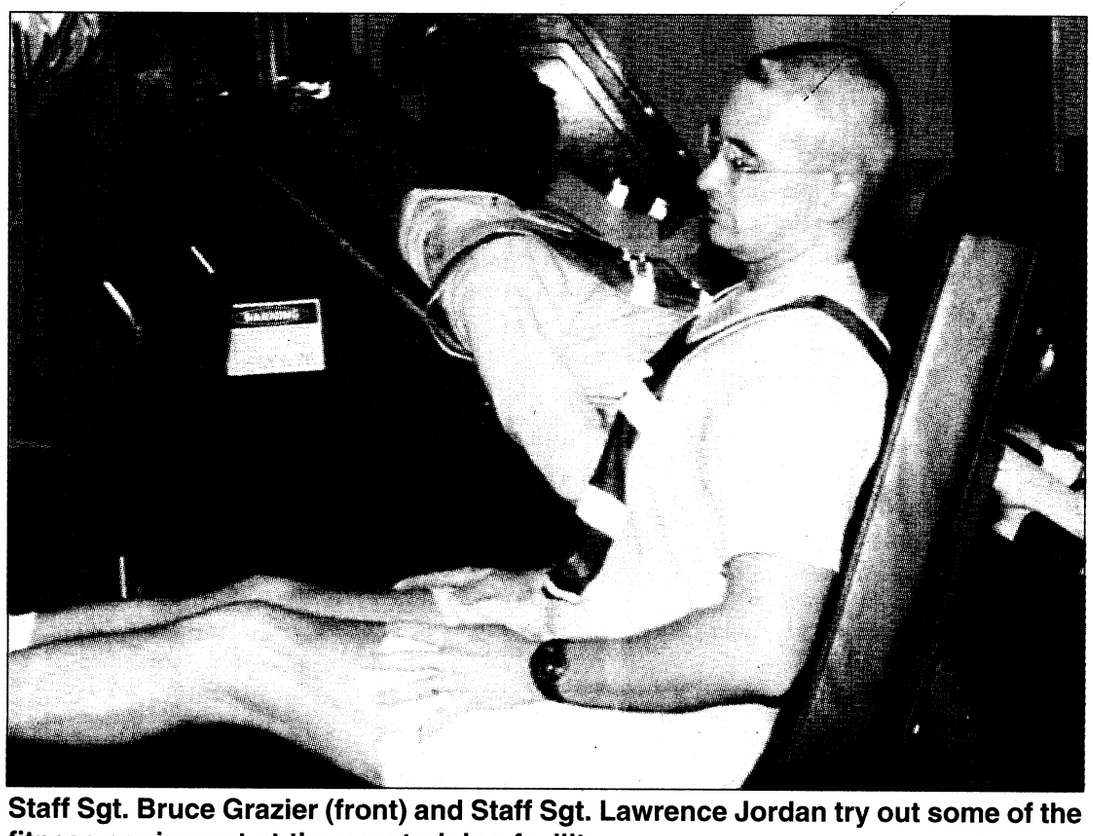
Ruma and other drill sergeants cite too much television, computer use and the dropping of physical education classes as a requirement in high schools.

Dr. Louis Tomasi, research physiologist, at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, agrees.

"There is only one state, Illinois, in the U.S. that requires physical education classes in all grades, K through 12. All other states require only one year of PE in high school," he said.



The PFTU's other mission is to help Soldiers who have been injured during OSUT or basic training recover.



Soldiers assigned to the Physical Fitness Training Unit drink a canteen of water after a morning workout.

In the rehabilitation section, the drill sergeants execute an individual phase training program designed by the Soldier's physical therapist. The goal is to increase the Soldier's physical fitness level, while working toward a full recovery from the injury.

On Jan. 31, five drill sergeants from the PFTU will report to the Master Fitness Training Course at the Army fitness school. Once they graduate, 100 percent of the cadre will be Master Fitness qualified.

Staff Sgt. Eduardo Figueroa show trainees the proper way to perform the hip and back stretch while seated.

Staff Sgt. Bruce Grazier (front) and Staff Sgt. Lawrence Jordan try out some of the fitness equipment at the new training facility.

Legislation: Could score retirees benefits

The same holds true for post-CHAMPUS enlistees as well, Shows said.

"While they (retirees) are eligible to participate in CHAMPUS or any other program that has evolved from CHAMPUS, it is only on a space-available basis," he said. "But that participation is limited too as many military facilities around the country are down-sizing or in some cases closing all together."

So how will Shows and his 219 Congress cohorts right this so-called wrong?

He said if the bill is passed, it would return full medical coverage to those who enlisted prior to 1956. And to those who enlisted after the 1956 introduction of CHAMPUS, he said the bill would make more positions available at local medical facilities for them to receive medical treatment.

"The issue is seeing to the health care needs of our military retirees and ensuring our national defense remains strong," Shows said. "Breaking the promise not only affects retirees but also hurts our ability to currently recruit for all of the armed services.

"It's all about the four R's — Recruitment, Retention, Readiness and doing the right thing for our retirees and service men and women," he said.

Shows' proposed health care legislation has also drawn attention from the Senate.

Sen. Tim Johnson, of South Dakota is scheduled to introduce virtually the same bill in the Senate as a companion bill to Shows' legislation.

"We are hoping both bills do well and meet somewhere in the middle," said Burns Strider, Shows' press spokesperson. "We should see something in the form of a pass or fail within months."

While Shows and Johnson both hope the legislation passes, Strider said it is difficult to call the outcome of the bill's passage potential.

"It is an election year in Washington and many times that means that a whole lot of work is put by the side to spend time on re-election campaigns," he said. "And many times, legislators don't want to side with the huge added cost that we are asking for with this bill.

"But on the upside, a legislator may decide to side for the bill because of the military retirees issue," Strider commented. "It is just hard to say at this point what is really going to happen."

Shows and Johnson both have committed to push the bill through, he said, and both have taken an "all or nothing attitude" on its passage.

"We have talked to no one about whittling this bill down from its original form, and we don't plan to," Strider said. "We are committed to return veterans their benefits and that is the bottom line."

While both Shows and Johnson continue to push for passage of their legislation, Georgia Senator Max Cleland said Tuesday he doesn't completely agree with the process of reform that is being proposed.

"The proposed bill is based upon the Federal Employees Healthcare Benefits Package, and statistics show that is not what retirees want" Cleland said at a health care reform round table held at Columbus State University Tuesday morning.

Those statistics, Cleland said, are based on results from a pilot program he and two other senators sponsored that gave selected retirees a choice between the FEHBP and his proposed solution to the continuing healthcare chaos.

"What we proposed was something called Tricare Senior Prime," Cleland said. "The program allows retirees who are at least 65 years old to become a Tricare Prime patient with no cost to them."

That no out-of-pocket price tag, Cleland said, is courtesy of the federal health care system, Medicare, and so far has been a 29 to one choice over Shows and Johnson FEHBP-based plan.

While Cleland's Medicare-subsidy will run-out at the end of the year when the Cleland-sponsored pilot program wraps up, he said the numbers the program has already returned in favor of the subsidy plan should send a strong message to Congress.

"Retirees have spoken up and told us what they want," he said. "Only this time instead of speaking with their mouths, they have spoken with their feet by walking to their own medical care specialist and signing up for the Tricare Senior Prime.

"Don't get me wrong, the house bill is a step in the right direction, but it is a little vague and is focused on FEHBP," Cleland said. "We have proven what retirees want with our pilot program that began two years ago, and now it is time for us to turn those wants into realities."

Pfc. Mitch Frazier

"Puff," a service officer for a Waverly Hall-based veterans' organization poses a question to Sen. Max Cleland Tuesday at the round table discussion on veterans' benefits held at Columbus State University.

The foundation of the debate on retirees' benefits, Cleland said, are basic quality-of-life issues the Army and the rest of the Department of Defense have continued to battle over the past 10 years as downsizing has slashed payroll recipients, posts and capital by one third.

"Retirees understand the downsizing has limited the availability of space in military hospitals," he said. "But that is no reason for us to not see them (in DoD or VA hospitals).

"It is about keeping our faith in those who we had faith in during war," he said. "We need to take care of those who took care of us."

Cleland, a veteran and purple heart recipient, said if the DoD wants to continue to remain strong, keeping the quality of life for the military's active duty, reserve and retired counterparts is essential.

"For so long there was a push to get people out of the military," he said. "Now we have to worry about getting people in and keeping them here.

"And maintaining retirement benefits including health care is essential to keeping the professionals we have in the military," he said.

Information from Cleland's study will continue to be collected until the end of the year. Compilation of the facts should be available for review sometime in early 2001, Cleland said.

What's next from Washington

House Bill 2966: Results from Congressional committees on passage of the bill should hit newsstands some time in late spring.

Cleland's plan: Results from the study will be compiled at the end of the year, and solutions to fix the failing healthcare system are projected to be in Congress this time next year.

More from Cleland: The senator said he has more quality of life initiatives to tackle this session.

THE BAYONET will continue to report on all the latest military news from Washington as it happens.

FAIR: Challenge period ends Jan 31

it will be outsourced or even considered for outsourcing. But he said some of the jobs will be reviewed to determine the most efficient method of performing the work — by an in-house workforce or by contract. During the Defense Quadrennial Review, the Army agreed to review 73,000 positions under A-76 competitions or through other methods over the next five years.

Anderson said the Army has already contracted out a significant portion of its functions. He said there are approximately 269,000 contractor employees performing functions for the Army.

The announcement of the FAIR list in the Federal Register opened a 30-day public challenge period, officials said. Under Section 3 of the FAIR Act, the decision to include or exclude a particular activity from the DoD inventory is subject to challenge and possible appeal.

With the publishing of the list, an interested party may submit a written challenge within 30 calendar days. This public challenge period ends Jan. 31.

Tax Center: Offers free filing assistance

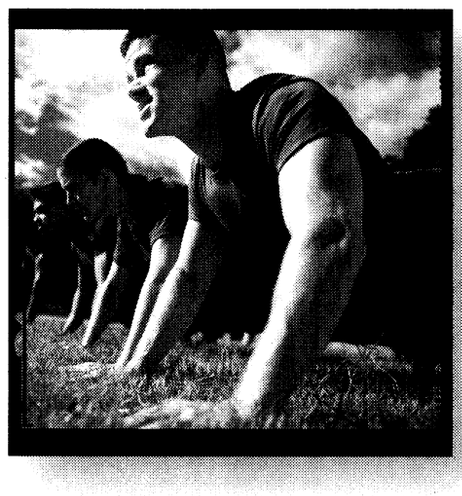
dvance to you, like 25 to 35 percent sometimes," he explained. "If you're getting back a $1,000 refund, they might keep $100, $200 of it. Everyone can use extra money. If you come to us and wait a week or so, you get the whole amount."

Henry said another good reason for using the tax center is their ability to get any forms needed for filing.

He said the IRS also has a website where forms can be downloaded and there are links for the different states forms. The website address is www.irs.gov.



Henry said the tax center will be open to all ID card holders.

The tax center will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. starting Jan. 31 and ending April 17, this year's filing deadline. It will also be open on the Saturdays of Feb. 12, 19 and 26 from 8:30 a.m. to noon.

There will also be another tax center at Kelley Hill to save 3rd Brigade Soldiers the time of traveling to Infantry Hall. The center, which will be staffed by trained 3rd Brigade Soldiers, will be next to the legal office in Building 9025.

For more information about either of the tax centers, call the legal assistance division at 545-3281.

Author, educator to speak at Parent Academy

Barbara Coloroso will give parents advice on family, life issues

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Barbara Coloroso, best-selling author and educator, will return to Fort Benning Feb. 12 for this year's Parent Academy, an annual event sponsored by the Fort Benning Schools and the Family Advocacy Program.

Coloroso lives in Littleton, Colo., which became internationally known this year in the wake of the tragedy at Columbine High School in April.

In fact, the author had spent nearly two years writing her latest book Parenting with Wit and Wisdom in Times of Chaos and Loss when the country's attention turned to Columbine and the shooting deaths of 12 teen-agers and a teacher at the hands of two students, who then killed themselves.

Coloroso, who had neighbors and relatives in the high school at the time of the shooting, added an epilogue to her book discussing the event.

"When we offer our children our time, our affection, and our sense of optimism, we help them find a way through their own adversity, grief and sorrow," she wrote.

"Our culture is living in chaos at this point, and our families are intertwined in the culture," she said in a telephone interview from her headquarters in Littleton.

Coloroso said she spends 110 days a year touring around the world offering advice to parents. She is well known in the Department of Defense Education Activity where she conducts workshops worldwide. She will speak in Belgium and London before returning to the states and her engagement at Fort Benning.

Coloroso spoke on post four years ago, and the response from parents was tremendous, Gail Wilson, the Fort Benning Schools spokesperson, said.

"She received overwhelmingly positive reviews when she was here," Wilson said.

"People who don't participate in this Parent Academy will really miss out."

Coloroso, 52, has been an educator for 29 years. She first started giving educational workshops for teachers, then in the 1970s when parenting seminars became popular, she branched out into offering advice to parents on raising children.

> "Our culture is living in chaos at this point, and our families are intertwined in the culture."
> — Barbara Coloroso
> Author and educator

She wrote the video programs Winning at Parenting ... Without Beating your Kids and Winning at Teaching ... Without Beating your Kids. Next, she penned the best-selling book, Kids are Worth It! Giving Your Child the Gift of Inner Discipline.

During the academy Coloroso will discuss the keys to good parenting. She calls them the three R's: responsibility, resourcefulness and resilience.

She will give practical advice on family life issues such as chores, sibling rivalry, toilet training, allowances and more, all designed to create a home environment where children can develop their own sense of inner discipline.

"It's the same regardless of age, from birth to the teen years," she said.

"You have to establish limits and boundaries no matter what the age group."

Blended families are more prevalent than they were when Coloroso first started teaching, and in her latest book on chaos and loss she discusses second marriages.

"I have a chapter called 'Families born of loss and hope,'" she said. "These families are born of loss, but they are also born of great hope."

While the new spouses enter into the blended family unit with great hope for the future, Coloroso said the children are often still focusing on the loss of their original family.

"We must acknowledge the child's need to grieve," she said.

As a classroom teacher, Coloroso said she refused to ask her students to develop a family tree.

"I found that in most cases it's a family forest," she said.

Through all the travails of parenting, Coloroso said parents should remember that humor is the key.

"You have to be able to laugh — at yourself, at one another and with each other."

The Parent Academy will take place at Faith Middle School Saturday, Feb. 12, from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. The seminar is free and open to all Fort Benning personnel and parents of children from newborns to high school age.

Free childcare will be provided for children 6 weeks to 11 years of age.

Registration will take place Jan. 31 through Feb. 4. For more information, call Fort Benning Schools at 545-8271.

Post regulation prohibits profanity

Garrison says policy applies to everyone

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Some people find second-hand smoke repulsive.

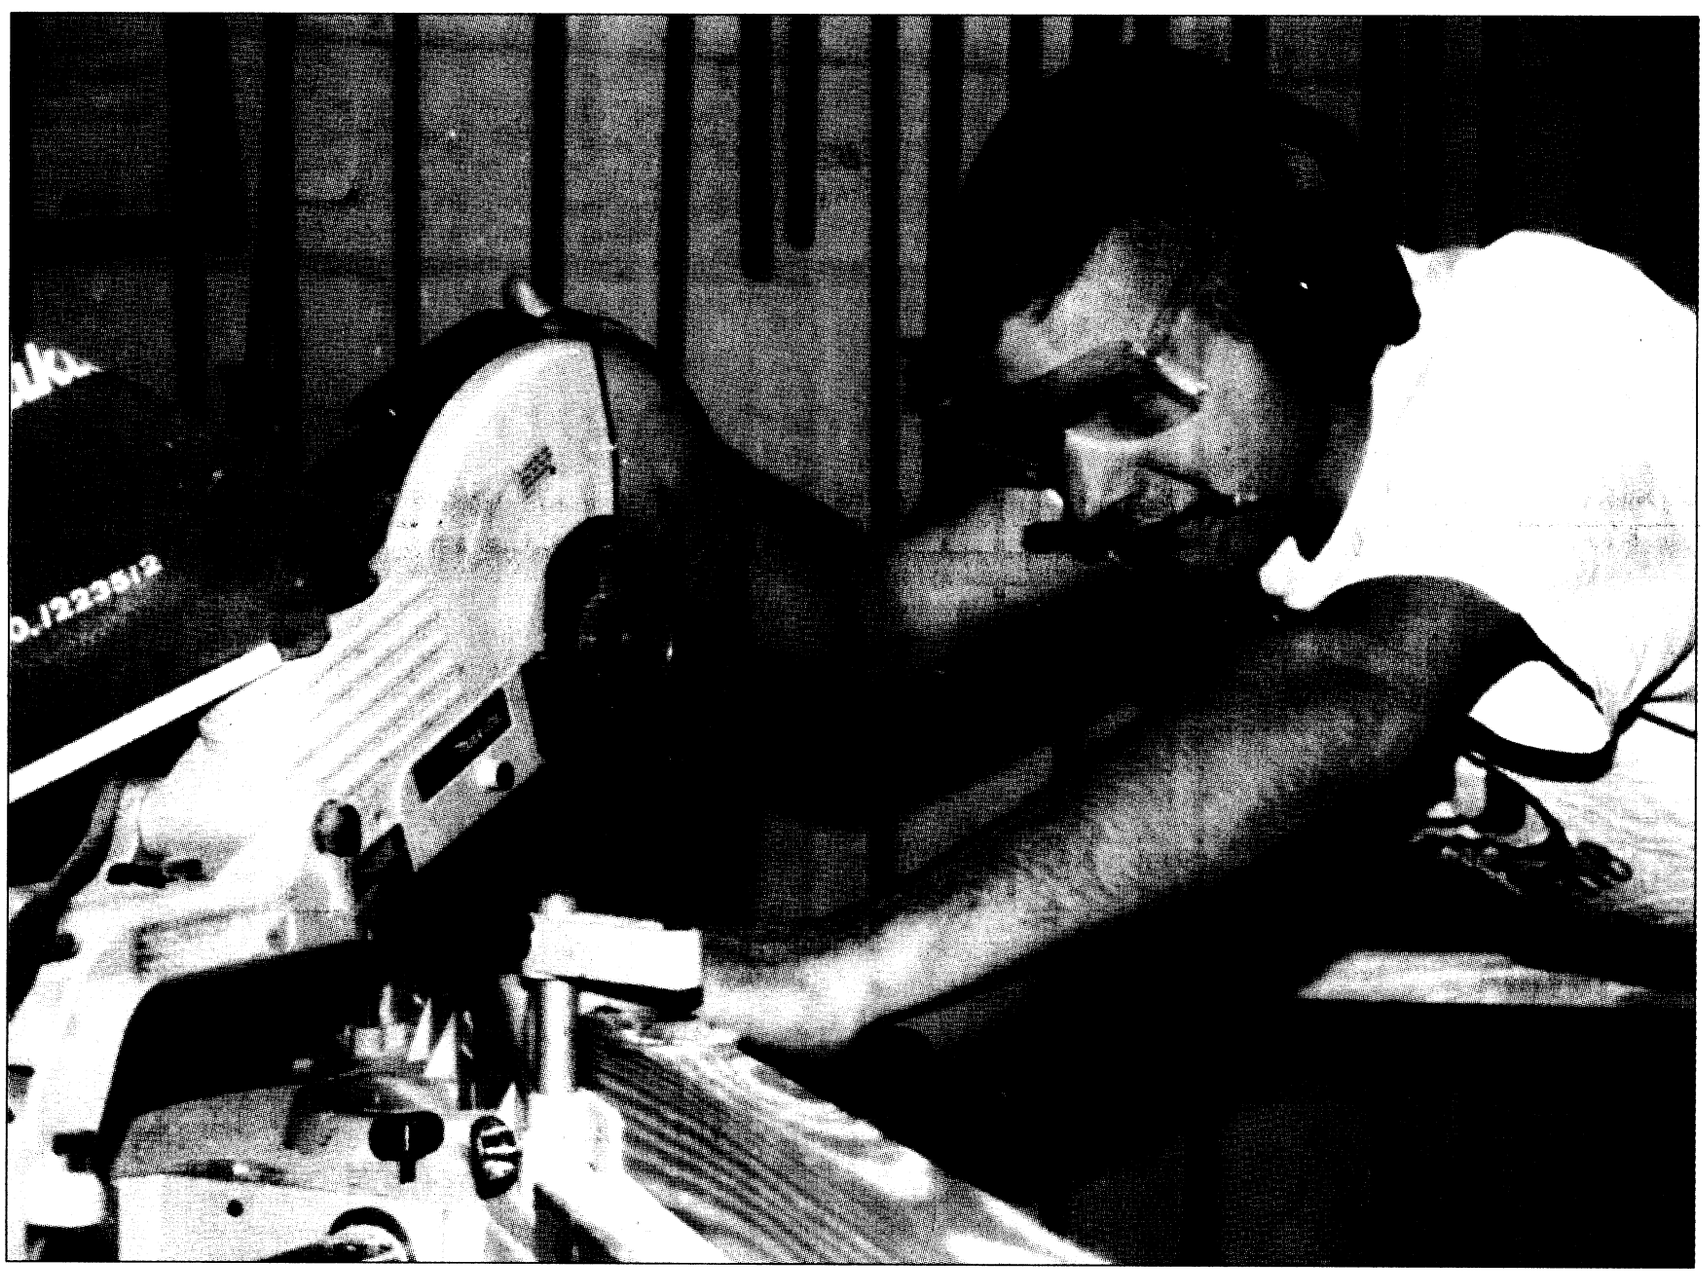
Others find profanity just as offensive.

Garrison policies declare Fort Benning a profanity-free installation, much the same as we're a smoke-free installation, said Sgt. 1st Class Valerie Boggs, garrison command office NCOIC.

Recently, a number of complaints about public profanity have been logged with the garrison commander's office.

The majority of offenses have taken place in and around the Main Post Exchange Mall, Boggs said.

U.S. Army Infantry Center regulations state the use of obscene, vulgar, or profane language in any public area of Fort Benning is prohibited. Profanity is defined as any language that would clearly offend a reasonable person's sense of decency.



"Garrison policy is post policy. It will be applied throughout the post," Boggs said.

Just as the policy applies to all areas of post, it also applies to everyone within its confines. Boggs said that many of the complaints have been about foul language used by dependents and civilians.

"Some people are unaware of the policy. We don't want our families, especially our children, in this type of harsh environment," Boggs said.

When encountering any kind of offensive language, Boggs recommends first asking the offender to refrain from using profanity.

"Most of the time, if you ask a person to stop, they will. You don't have to be confrontational. If it persists, then speak to an employee, store manager, or MP," she said. "We want to be sure our environment is free of profanity. Just as all of us are obligated to police our environment, we're also obligated to make sure it is comfortable for our families."

The wood shop, located in Long Arts and Crafts, Building 2783, will permanently close Feb. 1. All wood projects must be picked up before the shop closes.

AER helps Soldiers in need for more than 50 years

Program assists military families in financial binds

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

When a Soldier gets put into a sudden financial bind, they may feel like they have no one to ask for help.

But that situation is just what Army Emergency Relief is there for.

AER is available to help out active duty Soldiers, retirees, family members and even some reservists and guard members in times of financial need, said Alfonso Deane, installation AER officer.

"AER is a commander's program with two missions," he said. "The primary mission is to provide emergency financial assistance to Soldiers, to help them defray the cost or payment of certain categories of emergencies."

Deane said those emergencies include having delinquent rent, to provide food to a family, to assist those going on emergency leave, car repair costs, and several other categories.

He added AER also offers assistance for school costs.

"We provide undergraduate scholarships for children of active duty Soldiers and retirees," he explained. "They are available annually in November. Applications must be submitted by March of the upcoming year."

AER does this thanks to the kindness of others, said Deane.

"We are a nonprofit organization. There is no budget that Congress provides to AER," he said. "Our funds are generated mainly through annual campaign contributions.

"Our headquarters in Alexandria, Virginia, also invests some of the funds," Deane said. "We also receive memorials and bequests on behalf of retirees who have made arrangements in their will that donations be made to AER in their name."

Deane said AER provides its services to a variety of recipients.

"There are a lot of folks out there that do not know that when you are in retired status, you are still eligible for assistance from AER for yourself or family members," he said.

Widows and widowers of active duty or retired Soldiers are also eligible for help from AER, Deane said. "AER assistance is only provided to widows in the form of a grant. That is provided on a limited amount of grants."

He said AER also serves members of other services who are stationed here by processing assistance requests through their respective service. Deane said help is also available for reservists or guard members who are on continuous active duty service for 30 days or more.

Soldiers need to go through their chain of command to get financial assistance from AER. Retirees can stop in, get an application and make an appointment to talk with an AER representative.

"Once they come in to us, we look at all of the documents they bring in and do a thorough financial analysis," he said.

AER offers college scholarships

Army Emergency Relief

Active-duty Soldiers and Army retirees with college or university-bound children often wonder how they can afford the education cost. Many people don't realize that part of the answer may be found at AER. The Maj. Gen. James Ursano Scholarship Fund, administered by AER, is a secondary mission to help Army families with the cost of undergraduate level education, post secondary vocational training and preparation for acceptance by service academies for their dependent children.

Scholarship Program Eligibility. Applicant must be:

• Dependent children, stepchildren or legally adopted children of Soldiers on active duty, retired or deceased while on active duty or after retirement.

Computer use can cause eye strain

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Do you experience symptoms of "eyestrain," blurred vision and headaches related to computer use?

"You are not alone," said Capt. Stephen Planchet, an optometrist at the Heidelberg Army Hospital. "As the computer and Internet become more popular, vision problems associated with computer use are increasing. At least one-third of my patients have symptoms from extended computer use, termed Computer Vision Syndrome," he said.

Glare, dry eye, incorrect spectacle correction and work habits are just a few of the many factors that can contribute to CVS.

Set-up

A lot of computer strain can be caused from improper posture or workstation set-up.

• The monitor should be 20 to 26 inches from the eyes and slightly below horizontal eye level. The top should tilt away from the user at a 10- to 20-degree angle.

• The larger the monitor, the greater the viewing area, causing less strain.

• The keyboard should be 8 to 12 inches from the monitor and ideally 3 to 4 inches below the desk surface (on a pull-out tray or low shelf). This allows enough space between the keyboard and the monitor for a document holder.

• If you cannot place the document holder between the monitor and keyboard, position it as close as possible to either side of the monitor to minimize head and eye movements.

• Reflections will be decreased when using dark characters on a light background.

• Wear dark clothing and close nearby drapes and blinds to reduce glare.

• Use an anti-glare screen that has the American Optometric Association Commission on Opthalmic Standards seal of acceptance.

• Position the screen perpendicular to fluorescent lights, not parallel to them.

• If you use a wrist-rest, make sure you do not "rest" your wrists on the pad. Your wrists should "hover" a half inch above the rest.

• Feet should be placed flat on the floor with knees bent close to 90 degrees. Thigh to trunk angle should be 90 degrees as well.

• Clean your computer screen.

Wet Up

Dry eyes can become a problem due to the fact that you blink much less when you're viewing a computer.

• Try to blink more often. Place a small note on the monitor that reads "blink" to serve as a reminder.

• Use artificial tears to keep the eyes lubricated.

• Do not use drops that "get the red out." These drops can exacerbate dry-eye symptoms.

Get Up

Take several breaks during the day.

• 20-20-20. Every 20 minutes, take 20 seconds and look 20 feet away. Set your watch alarm for 20 minutes you need a reminder.

In some cases, people with eyestrain will need an exam for "computer glasses."

"If you are experiencing symptoms of CVS, try the above tips for a few weeks. If they don't provide relief, then follow up with an eye exam," Planchet suggested.

Penny O'Connor
Directorate of Public Works

Living in government housing is not a right, but a privilege. Army Regulation 210-50 states that "assignment of government housing to permanent party personnel is not an entitlement. Permanent party personnel are entitled to housing allowances to secure private housing in the civilian community if government housing is not provided."

To safeguard this privilege, Directorate of Public Works encourages all service members to familiarize themselves with and follow Army and U.S. Army Infantry Center regulations.

In the past, there has been occasional confusion concerning the following family housing issues: eligibility for family housing; policy concerning guests in family quarters and personal money-making activities in family quarters. A good understanding of the regulations that apply to these specific situations will prevent misunderstandings.

According to AR 210-50, Housing Management, military personnel with accompanying family members are eligible for family housing. If conditions change and family members no longer reside in the assigned quarters, the Soldier must notify DPW Family Housing and terminate the quarters.

Guests, both family and non-family, are authorized to visit in 30 days. Visits longer than 30 days, in accordance with AR 210-50, require that service members submit a written request to the DPW Housing Division for installation approval. Each request is evaluated on an individual basis.

The same regulation addresses commercial activities conducted in Family quarters. It permits limited commercial activities, such as handicrafts, childcare and sale of products, for sponsors and family members only. All requests to conduct a home enterprise require installation approval and must be made in writing and submitted to the Housing Division. Additionally, if solicitation is involved a permit is required from DCA.

AR 210-50 is the most in-depth and to-the-point source of information on the subject of family housing.

USAIC Reg. 210-5, Garrison Regulation is another excellent source of information. It devotes a chapter to Housing, including information on assignment and termination of quarters, retention of quarters and a variety of issues from waterbeds, to satellite dishes.

Individuals with a computer and Internet access can view or download Army regulations at www.usapa.army.mil/. USAIC regulations can be found at http://www.benning2.army.mil/pubs/. If a computer cannot open and view the regulations, both sites have links to free software, such as Adobe Acrobat Reader, that will make viewing possible.

Soldiers are encouraged to call the Family Housing Office at 545-2999 or stop by Olson Hall, Building. 399 for information on these or any other housing questions. Copies of AR 210-50 and USAIC 210-5 are available for customers to read at the Housing Office.

TROA offers tax guide

Retired Officers Association

WASHINGTON — Retirement-eligible active duty and reserve service members, plus those already retired — regardless of rank — can now view The Retired Officers Association's annual income tax guide on the internet.

The guide provides current tax information on military retired pay, the Survivor Benefit Program, disability compensation and how federal and state tax laws affect those concerned. SBP is also addressed in terms of federal estate tax law.

A new "Tax Information-Potpourri" section provides web site addresses for state tax rates and forms, and web site addresses and telephone numbers for states taxing military retired pay and SBP.

The document "TROA's Tax Guide — for 1999 Returns — is at www.troa.org/TaxGuide.asp. It is also available in fact sheet form at www.troa.org/FactSheets/2000TaxGuide.asp TROA is open to all current and former uniformed service officers and warrant officers in the active duty, reserve, and National Guard forces. You do not have to be retired to join.

AER: Serves military

The decision is then made to either provide a loan or grant. Deane said, the amount of assistance is not limited by a certain dollar amount, but larger amounts are sent up to higher levels depending on the amount of money needed.

"If after we look at the person's financial situation, and if they aren't able to repay a loan, we have the option of providing assistance in the form of a grant," he explained.

Loans are then set up in allotments for 12 to 24 months or can have even more approved if needed.

Last year, AER processed 820 loans for more than $680,000 and 106 grants more than $92,000.

Deane added, a misconception about grants is that you can only be eligible for one once.

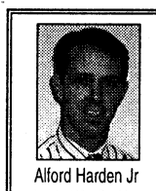
"They will not be penalized for a subsequent emergency by getting a grant. We will work with them up to a point where they are classified as continuous assistance," he said.

Deane said that he sees the majority of his clients by appointment, but there are some cases where they are taken on a walk-in basis.

"If a Soldier is put on emergency leave, they can come by and pick up an application, get all of the supporting documentation, then come in on a walk-in basis," he said. "Another situation would be if a Soldier didn't get paid for some reason and didn't have food for the family. It's the same thing with eminent eviction or foreclosure on a home."

Help is also available during after duty hours and while service members are out of the area.

"Those in need can get help from AER after duty hours by calling the post staff duty office at 545-2218 for emergencies," Deane said. "If you are out of the area, contact the nearest military installation or Red Cross. Red Cross can act as an agency on behalf of AER by processing the request."



On Feb. 5 AER has been providing it's services to Soldiers for 58 years. The local AER office is celebrating that anniversary Feb. 4 from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Deane said AER will be providing cake and soft drink to those who would like to stop by and share a piece of cake.

For more information about the services provided by AER, call 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Faith Middle School highlights budding artists

Faith showcases young artists in school's hallway

Faith Middle School

Featured this week are outstanding artists at Faith Middle School.

Christina Sanches, 8th grade, is the winner of the yearbook cover contest with her Faith falcon drawing.

Sixth-grade artists of the month include Lakeisha Page, Alicia Whyte, James Manuel, Lisa Brown and Danielle Calloway.

Erin Green and Brad Teslin, eighth grade and Sahvanna Korves and Matthew Larson, both seventh graders were chosen as artists of the month. They are all students in Gloria Loar's art class.

Artist of the month is an ongoing project at Faith Middle School. Students are chosen based on how well the pictures are done technically, whether they follow all of the instructions and satisfy all of the requirements (elements of design and principles of art), how hard they work on the task and their pride in the overall quality of the project.

Student masters art of presentations in language arts class

Christina Sanchez
Faith Middle School

Oral presentations are like a piece of art. Some people are artists and paint well, while others just don't have what it takes, or are not willing to put what it takes to create a masterpiece. So I am going to give you the feet that'll help you run down the road called success. So listen carefully; you may learn something new.

First of all, if a topic wasn't pre-assigned to you, pick something that is interesting and something people want to hear about. Your goal is to have a successful presentation, so if you put your audience to sleep, that wouldn't be classified as a successful presentation.

Now that your "very interesting" topic has been chosen, your goal is to get an abundant amount of information on it. With all your compiled notes, be neat for once — organize them!

You have the easy part down. If you thought that was hard, you are in for a big surprise.

Think about how you want to present your information. You can have a visual aid, Power Point, slides, and take it from an expert, aids really do aid you. They help you remember what to say because face it, we all get nervous when giving presentations, and when people get nervous they can become quite forgetful.

You now have the basics down, that you have worked so hard on. You're ready to practice, practice, practice! Now it is important you do not memorize your information. I have seen people do that, and all it brought to them was failure! It is OK to know your information, but please don't memorize! You are bound to forget something, and when you do, it just throws you all off course.

Some "must haves" to score a superior presentation are enthusiasm, vocal variety, eye contact, a great capture and movement to capture your audience's attention. You should walk about but don't pace, and your gestures need to be very effective. Don't just move your hand to say you did a gesture!

So you think you're done? You have all my "must haves" and your presentation is as smooth as a baby's bottom. Well, you just might be done!

Now it is your day to shine and wow the audience. There is one more thing I haven't told you yet.

The clothes you choose to wear do matter! Dress to impress. Look professional, look as if you are an expert. If you come dressed like a rag-man, who in their right mind is going to listen to you? I know I won't!

Also, comb your hair, shave if you have to. Take a shower, do what it takes to make you look clean.

Well, I hope I have helped somewhat, by giving you the feet that will help you travel the road to success!

Be prepared for amazement and a grade that will amaze you! Now this will only happen if you take my advice!

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I know that the IRS audits a certain number of tax returns each year.

What can I do to lessen my chances of ever being audited, and just in case, what records do I need to keep and for how long?

A. The IRS typically looks for discrepancies in the following: Schedule A (itemized deductions), Schedule C (profit or loss from a business) and Schedule F (profit or loss from a farm).

For Schedule A, in which you itemize deductions for such items as charitable expenses and mortgage interest, the IRS tends to audit a smaller percentage of returns where the deductions are less than 35 percent of adjusted gross income. If you go above 44 percent, your risk of audit increases substantially.

If you file a Schedule C for your business, try to keep expenses under 52 percent of gross income. Any expenses over 67 percent of income is a red flag to the IRS for an audit.

With Schedule F, losses over 50 percent of gross farm income invite scrutiny, while losses over 71 percent may trigger an audit.

If you file both a Schedule A and a Schedule C, add your Schedule C expenses as a percentage of gross income with 1.5 times your Schedule A expenses as a percentage of your total gross income. Keep this figure under 10 percent of your income.

Finally, no matter what you do, there is no avoiding a random audit.

More than 150,000 taxpayers are subjected to random audits each year.

To be safe, keep your income tax returns indefinitely, since they can be your paper trail on the valuation of basis of assets that are subsequently sold, for example your house or mutual funds. Old supporting documents (receipts, canceled checks, credit cards and so forth) should be kept six years. The reason is because the IRS can go back three years from the filing date to audit your records, tax return and impose additional tax.

In some cases, the IRS can audit up to six years after filing. This would be if income is under reported by 25 percent or more, or if there is suspected fraud.

If you have questions about taxes, you can call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to speak to an attorney.

Parents need to use discipline

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Family Life Ministries Center

No army could function effectively without some form of discipline or code of conduct. The same applies to families and parenting.

Dr. James Dobson gave this response when asked about the difficulty of raising children properly: "Parents are confused because they have been taught an illogical, unworkable approach to child management by many professionals who ought to know better. Child development authorities have muddied the water with permissive philosophies which contradict the very nature of children."

Permissiveness is the total lack of effective parental authority. If you allow your child to get away with defying your authority you are opening a Pandora's box for future defiance.

The human anatomy contains a marvelous padded area for use in moments when children purposely defy parental authority. Willful disobedience demands a proper course of action by the parents. Contrary to what some may say, spanking is not a form of inhuman punishment or bullying. However, spanking should not be done in anger or to cause physical harm.

Beating a child is always wrong but a few swats on the rear will never destroy your child's psychological well being.

What is proper discipline and authority? Quoting Dobson, "Improper parental power can be defined as a hostile form of manipulation in order to satisfy selfish adult purpose. As such, it disregards the best interest of the little child on whom it tramples, and produces a relationship of fear and intimidation."

Proper authority is loving, caring and nurturing. "Loving authority is the glue that holds social orders together, and it is absolutely necessary for the healthy functioning of a family," Dobson said.

Disciplining children should always be done in love and not anger and in fact I would suggest that if your child does something to really anger you then it is not always the best time to discipline him or her. I remember hearing about a young boy who called his mother a really bad name. Only problem was that his dad heard him. His dad was so mad he said to little Johnny, "I'm so mad at you right now that if I were to spank you I would hurt you! So, tomorrow morning when I get up for work at 5 a.m. I'll spank you." Little Johnny did not sleep a wink that night.

Discipline is not always easy or fun but in order to raise children with a good measure of self-discipline it is the only way to go.

chapel notes

Center holds preparation class — There will be a confirmation preparation class at the Religious Education Center, Building 2506, beginning Tuesday and continuing on Tuesdays for approximately 10 weeks.

This class will be for junior high and high school students. The class will be Protestant in nature, and will include explanations of baptism, communion, salvation, the components of a worship service and some Bible study as related to the above subjects.

At the conclusion of the class, those who are interested in becoming members of a specific denomination or church will be put in contact with a chaplain of that denomination for further denominational instruction.

Classes will begin at 3:30 p.m. and will last approximately one hour.

For more information or to register, call 545-4715.

Protestant Women plan retreat — The Protestant Women of the Chapel will have a retreat at Smiths Station Baptist Church Jan. 28-29. The retreat begins at 7 p.m. Jan. 28 and 9 a.m. Jan. 29. The theme will be "Stand in the Gap," and the focus verse is Ezekial 22:30. Reservations are required.

Food and free child care will be provided, and a donation to cover expenses will be requested.

For more information, call Heidi Cerjan.

PYOC meets — The Protestant Youth of the Chapel meet every Sunday in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

Junior high and middle school will meet from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. and senior high will meet from 7 to 8 p.m.

All students in these age groups are encouraged to attend.

Church plans pre-baptism classes — A pre-baptism class for parents who wish to have their children baptized in the Catholic Church is available.

This will be the first session of a three-session cycle. The first session is Sunday at 1 p.m. in Custer Terrace Chapel. It's recommended that expecting parents take the class during pregnancy. To register, call 545-5508.

Sunday School meets — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at Edward A. White School on First Division Road, from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. There are classes for students from 3 years of age through adult. Everyone is invited.

Child care for children of parents who are teaching or attending Sunday School is provided at the Infantry Center Chapel.

If you need a ride, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Grace paramount factor in Christianity

Chaplain (Capt) Scott M. Bullock
317th Engineer Battalion

What's the all-time favorite Christian hymn? Many would say Amazing Grace for sure. "Amazing Grace how sweet the sound — that saved a wretch like me." These words ring out such a simple yet profound message.

Grace is paramount to the Christian faith. No other world religion embraces the teaching of grace similarly. But what is grace? Grace is not just saying a few words before a meal or doing a kind deed. The Bible teaches that grace is unmerited favor. This means grace is when someone receives a gift they did not earn or deserve.

Grace is also explained by an acronym: G - God's , R - riches, A - at, C - Christ's, E - Expense. The ultimate example of grace in the Bible is God's freely giving to mankind his riches of heaven and eternal life. But this great gift came at the greatest price: God gave his one and only Son, Jesus Christ, to take the penalty for the punishment of sin we all have committed. So no one deserves heaven and no one can earn it because it is all of grace.

reflections

Not only must we know what grace is, but how we may receive God's grace. St. Paul says in Ephesians 2:8-9, "For it is by grace you have been saved, through faith — and this is not from yourselves, it is the gift of God — not of works so that no one can boast." This teaches we can be right with God by our faith in God's gift of grace alone. God's grace is so great because it can make the most horrible person right with God. We cannot earn or deserve grace by our good works because God already provided grace through Jesus Christ's sacrificial death on the cross. What great news to think we can have God's grace by faith in Christ. Not only does the Bible tell us about God's great grace, it also tells us we must show grace to others. Colossians 4:6 compels us to "Let your conversation be always full of grace." So we can be gracious toward others by how we talk. We must remove profanity, gossip, anger and hate from our talk — anything that does not evidence grace in speech.

By receiving God's great grace we can be gracious, just like John Newton, a slave trader turned minister, the author of Amazing Grace.

Armed Services YMCA announces essay, art contests for children

All military youth have chance to win savings bonds

YMCA Public Affairs Office

WASHINGTON — The Armed Services YMCA released details for their Millennium 2000 essay and art contests for children in military communities.

Both contests are open to youth of all military families including the Coast Guard, Reserve, National Guard, and Department of Defense civilian employees. The Young Readers Project Essay Contest is open to children from pre-school through high school. The art contest is open to elementary school students, kindergarten through sixth grade.

The essay contest's top prizes of $1,000 bonds will be awarded to two high school students (one overseas and one in the U.S.), and $500 bonds awarded to winning students in the seventh- and eighth-grade level, the fourth- to sixth-grade level, and the preschool through third-grade level.

An additional 15 U.S. Savings Bonds of $100 each will go to students who earn honorable mentions.

More than 12,000 children have participated in the Young Readers Project essay contest since it began four years ago.

Students may write about any topic related to reading. Suggestions include why the student likes to read, how reading affects the student's life, a book that changed the student's life, etc. Other suggestions can be found on the Armed Services YMCA's web page at www.asymca.org.

Essay entries are due by March 31. Students wishing to submit entries electronically may send them to Y2KEssayContest@asymca.org.

Entries for the fifth Armed Services YMCA art contest are due June 30. Five $500 and five $100 U.S. Savings Bonds will be awarded to winning students. In addition, one of the entries will be selected to be on the poster for Military Family Week (Nov. 19-26). The poster is distributed to military installations throughout the world.

Two winners will be selected from each of the military branches. Children from active duty, reserve, National Guard and DoD civilian employee families are welcome to participate. The theme of the contest is "My Military Family." Entries should depict some aspect of military life and its relation to the student's family.

Both essay and art contests entries may be mailed to: Armed Services YMCA, 6225 Brandon Ave., Suite 215, Springfield, VA 22150. Schools and youth-oriented programs may request a program package from Andree Swanson at 703-866-1260, or by e-mail at aswanson@asymca.org.

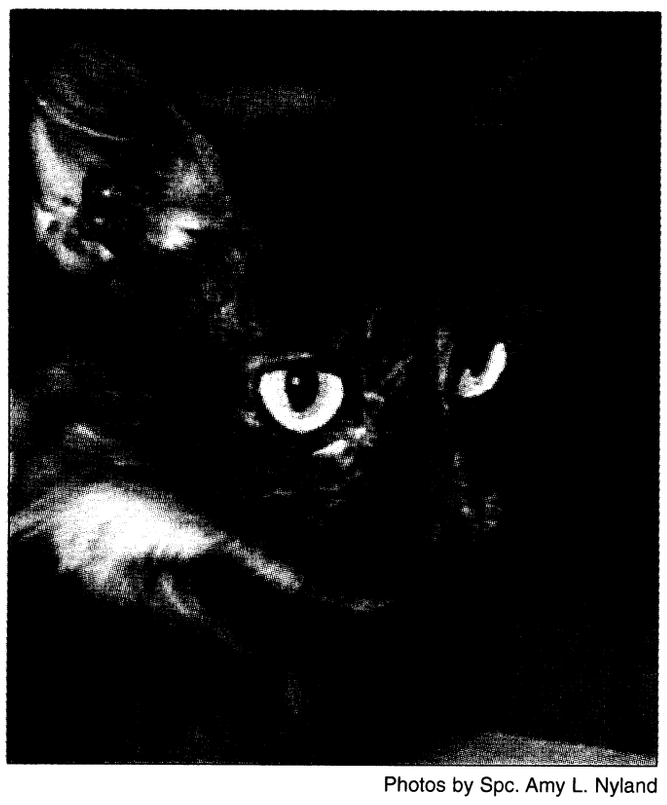
Questions about the program should also be directed to Swanson, or visit the Armed Services

AFTB seeks instructors

Courtney Linn
Army Family Team Building

Would you like to polish your public speaking skills, set your own hours and have some time away from the kids?

This can be done by volunteering with Army Family Team Building. An instructor training course is offered Jan. 31, Feb. 1-2 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Students will learn everything they need to know to begin teaching Levels I, II and III.



The Fort Benning community can have fun and relax while learning new skills at AFTB's monthly seminar. The seminar is from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Feb. 4. Entitled Stop in the Name of Love, students will learn how to build better relationships, manage time, stress and conflict.

AFTB is offering a special incentive for friends attending the AFTB monthly seminar. Friends who attend the class together will each receive a chance to win a special door prize.

All Soldiers, family members, and Department of the Army civilians are welcome to attend classes. Courses and materials are free. AFTB classes are held at the FUN Center in Building 359, Ingersoll Ave.

To register, students must call the AFTB office at least three days before the course begins. Free child care is available for those who register and make the special request for care at least two weeks in advance of the scheduled class.

For those who register less than two weeks before the class, childcare is offered on a space available basis. Call 545-5377, or e-mail aftb@benning.army.mil for additional information or to register.

Millennium brings fresh start for sports

Sports advisory council to provide insight, feedback for office

Spc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

> " We want to make sure we do what the people want, as opposed to what we think they want."
> — Andrew Snoddy
> Fort Benning sports director

For all of Fort Benning's die hard sports freaks and perhaps even the not so die hards, there is some good news concerning the post sports program and the direction its heading.

The year 2000 is a "new beginning" for the program with some important changes taking shape, said Andrew Snoddy, Fort Benning sports director.

Some of these changes involve giving the Soldiers more say in how the program is run, he said. The hope is to broaden the visibility of the program and get more feedback, suggestions and ideas for new and existing programs.

"We want to make sure we do what the people want, as opposed to what we think they want," Snoddy said.

One of the ways Snoddy plans to do this is by establishing a sports advisory council. Ideally, the council will be made up of brigade level representatives meeting on a quarterly basis to discuss information they received from Soldiers. Snoddy remarked that in the past the sports office had no mechanism for receiving feedback, but the advisory council will be the primary tool for this.

"Once the council is established it will be the vehicle through which we will get information and feedback," Snoddy said. "We can't get out and talk to every single Soldier, but with the council we can get a good feel for what's out there."

Right now the program is getting off the ground, but the hope is to have the council fully functioning by the beginning of summer.

Some other changes the sports program will see is in the way of flexibility, Snoddy said. As opposed to having a fixed schedule for games and tournaments the sports office will work to accommodate a unit's needs.

An example of this, he said is the 3rd Brigade. During this year's basketball season the 3rd Brigade will be deployed. However, instead of cancelling the season the sports program will structure the 3rd Brigade basketball league around the dates that are convenient for them. This allows them to still have a league and also a representative in the post-wide tournament.

Not only will there be greater flexibility in scheduling, but also in the different sports and tournaments that will be offered.

If there is an interest out there for a particular sport the sports office will definitely consider implementing it, Snoddy said. And even if there isn't enough support to start a league, there is still the possibility of creating a tournament.

One of Snoddy's concerns is the fact that there are no womens sports. This is one thing he hopes will change.

He also mentioned that the sports program has been restructured to offer something throughout the year. There is currently a racquetball tournament, sand volleyball and softball tournament already scheduled for the year.

However, Snoddy stressed that the only way the sports office can provide the kind of program Soldiers want is by knowing what they want. He said it is essential that Soldiers voice their opinions and ideas.

"We can never get too much information," Snoddy said. "And the more information we have from a broader cross section of the population, the better we can create programs, channel programs and meet the needs of the people."

If anyone has any ideas or questions about the program, call the sports office at 545-4300.

MLK tournament wraps up

MEDDAC tops HHC, 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery, for post basketball title

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Rounding out the Martin Luther King Jr. U.S. Army Infantry Center Basketball tournament was the championship game held at the Bryant Wells Field House Jan. 14.

Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery tipped off the game against U.S. Army Medical Department Activity for the title of post champ.

Both teams were undefeated as the game began in the single elimination tournament, but it was MEDDAC who pulled it out in the end to win the tournament, 43-40.

During the first 20-minute half each team tested the other team.

"We are a second half team," said Tyrone Herman, MEDDAC team member. "The first half we tested the other team and tried to find their weakness," he said.

At the end of the first half, 10th Field Artillery had a nine point lead, 32-21.

With the beginning of the second half, MEDDAC turned up the heat on their defense, allowing only four points to be added to the 10th Field Artiilery's score while posting 13 points of their own.

Early into the second half Robert Edwards, 10th Field Artillery, hit the floor in an attempt to rebound the ball and was injured.

"He was a key player, and ended up dislocating his left shoulder," said Christopher Rankins, coach for the 10th Field Artillery team.

"We used the same strategy as we did in the fist half, but losing (Edwards) really hurt us," said Rankins.

MEDDAC took advantage of the loss of the key player tying the game up with only seven minutes left in the game.

"They looked for their big man, and always passed to him," said Herman.

"It was our ball and we were told to stall. They weren't playing tough defense so I waited," said Herman. "When I shot and the ball ball bounced off the rim I thought we were going to overtime, but it went in, and I was really happy," he said.

"It was a tie game, and we were willing to take the chance on the shot. He shot and got a lucky bounce," said Rankins.

"We won six games games in a row, including the Christmas tournament, and we will be playing in the intermural, too," he said.

Youth Services hoop action continued Saturday, as the Hornets faced off against the Blue Devils in the 12-15 year age division.

Despite an incredible 20-point performance by guard Roosevelt Vickers, the Blue Devils defeated the Hornets, 56-43.

"Vickers did an outstanding job. He's a good shooter all over, and a good defender — just an all-around great player," said Hornets coach Anthony Wright.

Vickers put on a one-man show in the first quarter, leading the Hornets to a 16-10 lead. A second quarter display of defensive teamwork by the Blue Devils overcame Hornet opposition and took the lead for the rest of the game.

"We've been doing a lot of conditioning drills at practice, and it paid off. The defense really picked it up in the second until the offense got in the game. The defense really won it for us," said Charlie Conner, Blue Devil's assistant coach.

Blue Devil forward Joey Fix led his team with 15 points.

In the 6- to 7-year-old division the Black Bulls took the Blue Bulls, 10-7. Tre Powell nailed the victory for the Black Bulls with 8 points while Bruce Milsap was lead scorer for the Blue Bulls with 4 points. The Dream Team tied the Tigers, 8 -8 with lead scorers Jeffrey Sykes and Seandre Lee earning 4 points apiece for their teams.

During 8- to 9-year-old play the Lakers commanded a huge victory over the Green Tigers with a score of 51-9. Kahlee Tyler helped that victory with a total of 18 points for the Lakers while James Braddy sank 6 for the Green Tigers.

The Bulldogs earned the win over the Magics, 21-11. Bobby Seawright lead the way with 4 points for the Bulldogs and Ken Toliver tossed up 5 for the Magics.

The Tigers took a bite out of the Bulls with a 26-10 win. Corey Bush and Anthony Wright were both lead scorers for their teams.

In 10- to 12-year-old action the Tarheels defeated the Magics, 43-7. Both Edwin Cruz and Justin Lord of the Tarheels contributed 3 points while Graham Sherrill of the Magics put up 4.

The Ruff Ryders fell short to the 76ers, 14-22. Xavier Shaw helped seal the win for his team with 14 points.

The Blazers toppled the Knicks, 25-18 with the help of lead scorer Arthur Scott who nailed 11 points. Anthony Lacour of the Knicks contributed 10 to his team's total.

Finally, in 13- to 15-year-old play the Ballers beat Team No. 4, 50-34. Dominic Whitley made impressive play with 22 points for the Ballers while Ryan Roberts helped Team No. 4 along with 13 points.

The club's primary mission is to support the Fort Benning Army Ten-Miler team. This meeting will serve as a planning session for the year's events and be followed by an optional run.

For more information, call Capt. Danny McMillan at 545-6380 or 545-6386.

Auburn University hosts institute — Bass Fishing Techniques is America's only comprehensive institute dedicated to teaching anglers to become better bass fishermen. Its instructional staff includes 13 Bass Masters Classic Champions and 15 B.A.S.S. Anglers of the Year.

This year, Auburn will feature six top pros, including Denny Brauer, Guido Hibdon, Dion Hibdon, Ken Cook, Mark Menendez and Rick Morris. These anglers have vast fish-catching experience earned through years of trial and error on the water. The Bass Fishing Techniques Institute will shorten the "learning curve" by passing the fish-catching knowledge of the pros along to participants. Whether you are an expert or a beginner, Bass Fishing Techniques will improve your bass catching ability. Take this opportunity to visit the campus Feb. 5-6, while enjoying your passion of bass fishing.

For more information call the Outreach Program Office at Auburn University at (334) 844-5100.

Soldiers take to Volksmarching

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

Volksmarching clubs at West Point, N.Y., and Colorado Springs, Colo., sponsored year-round walks voted among the nation's best last year by members of the American Volksporting Association.

The 70,000-member association is the sport's U.S. sanctioning body. Both the Volksport Club of West Point and the Falcon Wanderers in Colorado Springs have large numbers of service members on their rolls.

The West Point volksmarch takes participants all over the U.S. Military Academy campus. The Colorado Springs volksmarch focuses on the Garden of the Gods park.

Volksmarching was brought to America largely by service members who received their first taste of the sport in Germany. Participants earn medals, pins, patches, steins or other souvenirs for completing noncompetitive walks over measured courses. There are two types of volksmarch in the United States.

The first is based on the European model and scheduled typically over one weekend. The second is the year-round or seasonal volksmarch. On these, local clubs measure their course, usually 10 kilometers, and designate a starting point. Walkers can do these walks any time during the year.

Association members voted the year-round volksmarch at Mackinac Island, Mich., as the nation's best last year. The march takes walkers past the historic sights of the island, located between the two peninsulas that make up Michigan.

The Top 10 Year-Round Events in 1999 were:

1. Mackinac Island, Mich.
2. Midtown Manhattan
3. Central Park, New York City
4. Fumee Lake, Mich.
5. Georgetown, Washington, D.C.
6. Kennebunk, Maine
7. Iron Mountain, Mich.
8. The National Mall, Washington, D.C.
9. West Point, N.Y.
10. Garden of the Gods, Colorado Springs, Colo.

To find the starting points for these walks, visit the American Volksporting Association Web site at www.ava.org. for links to local clubs and a listing of scheduled volksmarches.

Shinseki's new plan goes online

Fort Benning leads new Infantry force development

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The Initial Brigade Combat Team's web site went online Jan. 11, and in three weeks it has generated more than 2,300 hits.

That's not surprising to Maj. Dave Pound, chief of the Concepts, Analysis and Integration Division, Directorate of Combat Developments.

The IBCT has sparked tremendous interest and comment throughout the military community, and Fort Benning is in the thick of the action for redesigning the Infantry force.

Things have been rolling along quickly since Oct. 12 when Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki presented his vision of a multi-spectrum force that, once deployed, has the lethality of a heavy unit.

Because of the lessons learned in Bosnia and Serbia, the Army realized there was a gap in the operational capability between light and heavy forces. The term medium brigade, between light and heavy, was used at first, but has since been replaced with Initial Brigade Combat Team, which is a more robust force, able to get to the fight quickly.

Shinseki's plan calls for the Army to transform two brigades at Fort Lewis, Wash., into units that can be on the ground anywhere in the world in 96 hours and use "off-the-shelf" vehicles to enhance the mobility and force protection of the brigades' Infantry forces.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center is supporting TRADOC's effort in crafting the plan for the IBCT, and personnel from Fort Benning have been working for more than four months on the project, logging long hours and frequent-flier miles.

Just last month, Soldiers from the DCD, 3rd Brigade and 29th Infantry Regiment returned from Fort Knox, Ky., after taking part in a Platform Performance Demonstration. Some 35 vehicles from all over the world were observed in an effort to determine potential candidates for the new brigades.

While Shinseki's announcement in October surprised some, Col. Jim Stone, director of DCD, Pound and others at Fort Benning had already put more than a month's worth of work into the emerging initial brigade concept.

The initial efforts included modeling and simulations of various Infantry force structures by the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab's Simulations Center, with

DoD checks homosexual policy on post

Team evaluates implementation of don't ask, don't tell policy

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

A three-member Department of Defense Inspector General team is visiting post this week as part of a service-wide assessment of the implementation of the Homosexual Conduct policy.

The team is here for several reasons, Col. Ron Greene III, Fort Benning inspector general, said.

"They are looking not only at how we implement the homosexual conduct policy, but at the climate on post, to the extent to which the harassment of service members based on perceived or alleged homosexuality may occur. They are also looking at the extent to which disparaging speech or expression with respect to homosexuality occurs or is tolerated," he said.

Greene said the team is also here to determine whether Soldiers have been trained on the DoD policy. Additionally, team members will survey more than 1,000 initial entry training Soldiers in their last two weeks of basic training, as part of their assessment.

Fort Benning currently emphasizes human relations awareness through such training as consideration for others, prevention of sexual harassment and equal opportunity training, Greene said.

"The effort is to ensure that all Soldiers will be treated with dignity and respect at all times, and will be afforded a safe and secure environment in which to live and work," he said.

According to a Jan. 10 release from Headquarters, Department of the Army, the Army homosexual conduct policy, based on Title 10, United States Code, is unchanged. In order to fully protect the rights of all personnel, the following guidance has been provided:

• All Soldiers will receive refresher training on the homosexual conduct policy within 90 days, and the deputy chief of staff will establish a world-wide web page with resource training material to be used in this training at www.odcsper.army.mil.

License bill may save GIs money

House Bill 441 gets nod, could cut property tax from plate purchases

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

An attempt to make license plates a little less expensive for married military men and women is closer to becoming reality thanks to new legislation in the Georgia House of Representatives.

The House has passed and sent to the Senate a bill that would make jointly titled vehicles between a military service person and their spouse exempt from property tax, a benefit military members are already offered if the vehicle is titled in the service member's name only.

Sponsor of House Bill 441, Rep. Larry Walker, said he began formulating the bill last year, but was unable to approach the House for approval until last week when legislators gave their nod for the new bill.

The bill, Walker said, is set to make one jointly titled vehicle per family exempt from the ad valorem tax that is imposed by the state when purchasing automobile plates at the tag office.

"Originally the bill was drafted to cover all vehicles jointly titled between the service member and his or her spouse," he said. "But I had to accept the limitation to one vehicle to get it to pass.

"It's the best I could do," he said. "We have to take what we can get here."

While Walker said he will continue to push for the passage of the bill, it will have to face senate committees before going to the Senate majority for passage. He said he believes the bill will pass when it crosses the hall to the Senate.

"I don't see anything too controversial about the bill and see no reason for it to not be passed," he said. "But we will have to continue to monitor its progress to be sure."

Walker first learned of the inequity in taxation a few years ago after speaking with then commanding general of Warner Robbins Air Logistics Base, Gen. Ron Smith.

Dignitary round table convenes at school

USARSA hosts board of visitors

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Ensuring the maintenance of democracy in Latin America and continuing the educational excellence at the U.S. Army School of the Americas, was part of the agenda for the members of the Board of Visitors during their visit to the school, Tuesday through Thursday.

The BOV is a subcommittee of the Army Education Advisory Committee constituted under Public Law 92-463 (The Federal Advisory Committee Act), that provides the Secretary of the Army, the Chief of Staff and the Army's senior leadership with expert and continuous advice on USARSA's educational programs.

Lt. Col. Joseph Contarino, chief of staff, USARSA, and the Designated Federal Official for the BOV, said the advice relates to educational policies, curriculums, educational philosophy and objectives, program effectiveness, facilities, staff and faculty, instructional methods and other aspects of organization and management.

He said this was the seventh meeting of the BOV.

The BOV members who visit the school encompass a group of specialists in the fields of Latin American studies, foreign affairs, military affairs, human rights and education.

Former Ambassador David Passage is a member of the BOV and is visiting he school this week.

He said USARSA serves an excellent purpose for U.S. national interest, as well as for the interest of the Latin American countries who send their students to the school.

Passage emphasized that if the U.S. believes what it says it believes in human rights, civilian control of military establishments and the military serving the purposes of democracies, then training is a fundamental part of this belief.

"If the U.S. is not prepared to play a role in helping Latin American countries train their military forces in the defense of human rights, democracy and the values that we hold dear to us, then who on earth do we expect to do this?" he said. "It seems to me that this is an important role that the U.S. needs to play and USARSA is the institution which we have used for this purpose."

Passage, who's been associated with the U.S. government as a senior American diplomat for almost 35 years, said the BOV strongly supports the school, the purposes of the school and the way it advances U.S. national interests, as well as the interests of the other democracies in the western hemisphere.

"I am confident that whether the future brings a name or location change for the school, the purposes that are advanced by the school are purposes important for our national interest," he said. "That I'm confident will continue, whatever the guise, name or location. The important thing is that the purposes of the school continue."

People still fuel hatred, oppression

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

Who would have thought something as simple as refusing to go to the back of a city bus in Montgomery nearly 50 years ago would have such an impact on the way the world operates?

Rosa Parks was proud of her heritage when she told the bus driver in Montgomery she wasn't going to give up her seat and move to the rear of the bus.

She couldn't have possibly predicted that the impact of her action would start a movement that is still in motion today — the movement toward civil rights.

Ever since the Parks-sparked movement, Americans have cast aside the idea of separate but equal and delved into a level-headed approach to intermingling and equal races. Right?

Well, the answer on the surface appears to be yes.

Blacks hold key positions and leadership roles in every facet of the business world and are key players in today's global economy.

So why is it at certain restaurants blacks are not treated with the same respect as whites?

Why is it at certain times of night, a black man walking down the street may seem more suspicious than a white man?

Are we really at the pinnacle of equality for all races?

The answer, unfortunately, is no.

The civil rights movement Parks spawned should have set Americans sailing down the road to rights that are equal for all. So where did the equal rights boat run aground?

Perhaps the fingers should be pointed at those who lived during that era and have continued to spread their hatred and anger at the cause.

While I am not calling anyone a bigot or racist, there are numerous people who have in some cases unintentionally passed on the racial hatred and bias to their children.

How else could the hatred continue to be fueled unless by the word of those who were alive during the oppression?

For many of us, we were not even thought of at the time of Parks' push for equality, but we have heard both sides of Parks' story.

We have heard and read everything from calling the woman a hero to condemning the civil rights leader.

So what is the answer to stop the hatred and the passing of the infectious hatred to tomorrow's leaders?

In one word the answer is — education.

Becoming educated on the oppressed minority population during Parks' time allows even the most skeptical to come to the hypothesis that Park's push for equality is truly one deserving of a page in every history book for years to come.

Knowledge is power. Get some and get your story right before making off-the-collar remarks and formulating ideas about others.

If you do, you too will see the light that pushed Parks to success.

Words can hurt worse than actions

Spc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

Sticks and stones will break my bones, but words will never hurt me.

My mother taught me this phrase when I was very young. I had just taken a verbal lashing from the neighborhood bullies, and being the sensitive child that I was, I ran home crying, knowing that with a hug and a kiss my mom could make things all better.

And of course she did make things better. After I got all snug in her lap, she gave me her usual pep talk. She told me the bullies' words were just that, and I shouldn't let them get to me. She then armed me with the phrase above and said the next time they bugged me all I had to do was say it and walk away.

It's funny how things were so much simpler when I was young. Today it's not as easy for many of us, as "sticks and stones," because it doesn't end with words anymore.

I wonder if the Soldier at Fort Campbell who was killed by a fellow Soldier because he was gay, believed in this phrase. After enduring endless harassment by his peers, I wonder if he tried to make himself feel better by thinking that these people's words were just that — words. I wonder if he could have ever guessed that these words would eventually turn deadly. The sad thing is we'll never know what he was thinking, because his life was cut short by hate and intolerance. There is no hug and kiss big enough to make things better for him now.

When we are young, we do stupid things. We make fun of people because they are different and we ostracize them if they aren't our idea of "normal." Even though it's wrong, we get away with it because we are young. So, why is it there are adults who still find it fun to partake in the same playground hate games of our youth? Why do some people find it sporting to single out others because they are different and make their lives miserable? Why do these same people let their hate become so uncontrollable they are forced to violence? And why more times than not, do these people get away with it? Of course, the only ones who can answer these questions are those who are guilty of it.

So this brings me to my next question, "What can we do about it?"

While I'm not an expert at combating intolerance, I know all of us are capable of doing something. If there is a situation that doesn't seem right, don't just sit back and let it happen, take action. Talk to the person who may be in the situation and find out what's going on. Then talk to someone who has the power to do something. And don't let it go until something is actually done.

I know it's easier for all of us to turn the other cheek and not get involved, but as adults we should know that words do hurt and can often be worse than sticks and stones.

Respect exists to preserve, defend freedoms

Our Army core value of respect is at the heart of everything we do as Soldiers.

It is the one value more than any other our Army exists to preserve and defend. Our mission to fight and win the nation's wars ultimately rests on the belief that there are certain fundamental freedoms that all people should enjoy and that these are worth fighting for.

Chief among these freedoms is the right to be treated with regard for basic human rights. Our Declaration of Independence states the nature of these rights very eloquently: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Respect is nothing less than the recognition of what our forefathers regarded as a self-evident truth — the truth that all people are created equal. Respect is the recognition of the inherent worth and dignity that all people have by virtue of their humanity. It is the first right of all human rights.

If all people are created equal, then all have a right to be treated with the same regard for their dignity as human beings. All have a right to be treated with justice and fairness. All have a right to an equal opportunity to enjoy life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

As Americans, because we believe in this fundamental equality of all people, respect means treating other people the way they should be treated. The simplest way to know how we should treat other people is just to ask how we ourselves like to be treated.

Respect implies the capacity to empathize with others and act on the basis of an awareness of our shared humanity. It means putting yourself in the other person's place, asking, and answering the question "How would I feel if that was me?"

As Soldiers, respect is a critical ingredient in the complex "glue" of cohesion that binds a good unit together.

Toleration of harassment or discrimination in any form corrodes the trust that Soldiers must have in their leaders and in one another in order to fight and win in combat.

Effective leaders show respect when they recognize the effects of cultural diversity on a Soldier's perception of a situation.

Even though we may not agree with them, seeking to understand the other person's perspective and what is important to them demonstrates respect.

As Soldiers, we must all work together to foster an environment in which we treat all people with the respect they deserve without regard to race, gender, creed, or religious belief. When we fail to do that and treat people in a disrespectful manner we not only rob them of their dignity as human beings, but we lessen our own dignity as Soldiers as well.

African Americans play central role in development of nation

African Americans made an indelible impression on the fabric of our society. They played a central role in the development of our nation.

Through strength of will and unimaginable endurance, they survived the horror of slavery to become settlers, writers, artists and leaders in the religious, political and business world.

The traditions, values and strength that African Americans brought from their diverse countries of origin and difficult passages have not only reinforced the moral and political fiber of our country, but add beauty to our culture as well.

African Americans today continue to enrich our culture and quality of life through contributions in every segment of society from business, education and politics to science, law and medicine.

They distinguish themselves and bring honor to our nation by serving admirably in its defense throughout the world. As our African American communities grow along with our nation, we share a deep pride in their culture, traditions and values, recognizing the key role they play in the progress of our democratic system.

It is important to recognize the contributions African Americans made to the social, political and moral strength of the United States. I challenge each of you to recognize the many accomplishments of our African American citizens and to discover more about their rich culture and triumphant history.

In doing so, you will gain a greater understanding not only of the heritage of African Americans but of our national heritage, which are one in the same. Discover the undeniable kinship between African American heritage and that of every American.

In recognition of Black History Month and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, I proclaim the month of February as African American Black History for Fort Benning. This year's theme is Heritage and Horizons: "The African American Legacy and the Challenges of the 21st Century."

Storm's projected potential closes post

Order to close came after group assessment

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

While children of all ages waited anxiously by their radios last week in hopes of hearing if their school would be closed, post officials were working hard to get to the bottom of the wintery weather that was quickly approaching from the west.

By late afternoon Jan. 27, the projected path of the arctic front was poised and ready to strike the Columbus area — or so forecasters at the National Weather Service thought.

A closer look at the storm later that afternoon gave weather insiders what they thought to be an imminent strike of the icy blast and prompted post officials to resort to what Chief of Staff Col. John C. Latimer called the post's storm contingency plan.

That plan, Latimer said, brings together top officials from each of the post's major directorates to devise a proactive approach to the inclement weather.

"We assessed the storm and its possible effect on post Thursday," Latimer said about the collective group's meeting. "At that time we had information that placed the storm here at 4 a.m., plus or minus one hour, and we decided at that time to go ahead and make a recommendation to close post."

That recommendation, which was forwarded to the commanding general, was based upon what

> " We are always going to side with safety for our Soldiers and civilian employees."
> — Col. John C. Latimer
> Chief of Staff

Latimer called an evaluation of post activities.

"At the time the storm was supposed to be here, people would have been taking their children to child development centers, getting ready for PT and within a couple of hours school buses would begin to roll out for their morning pick ups," he said. "Also along that time, our civilian workforce would have been making their way into work as well.

"We wanted to avoid putting people at risk," he said. "And that is why we went ahead and submitted our recommendation to General Le Moyne."

The submission of the closure request was approved later that evening.

While Friday came and went without any significant precipitation, Latimer said the decision, in hindsight, still remains a good one.

"Given all the same circumstances, we would make the same recommendation again," he said. "We are always going to side with safety for our Soldiers and civilian employees."

A 30-man response team from the Directorate of Public Works was also stood up in the name of safety. Officials from Flint Electric were also ready to respond if the storm put post residents in danger.

The last time Fort Benning canceled work due to weather was four years ago, Latimer said. But the storm contingency plan that cancelled work Friday is used annually as inclement weather across the country causes Fort Benning to react in some way or another.

"Last year we assisted other posts by allowing them to send more than 125 aircraft here to get out of the path of a storm," he said.

While there was no aircraft movement needed for last week's forecasted storm, Latimer said the post dodged the bullet of Old Man Winter by only a couple of miles.

"We were only 15 miles south of the rain-sleet line," he said. "We just got lucky."

Although Latimer calls the narrow miss luck, he said there may be some kids who disagree with him.

"While some of the kids were a little disappointed we didn't get any snow, it didn't disappoint me at all," he said. "By not having the ice and snow, the post was saved thousands of dollars we would have had to spend on storm clean-up not to mention all the trouble it would have placed on individual families."

Tim Long welds bunk adapters in DOL's maintenance shop at Sand Hill. The new adapters allow bunks to be stacked for more floor space in the bays.

Adapters make room for troops

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

"Bunking" beds is a tried and true method of creating more floor space. Parents do it in their children's rooms and college students in their dorms.

It's not a big deal. You buy a bunk adapter kit and you're set.

If only it had been that easy for Lt. Col. Ken Strickland, commander of 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade.

Strickland's battalion converted from One Station Unit Training to basic training this summer, resulting in an increase in the number of Soldiers living in Leonard Barracks.

The additional beds meant little walking space in the bays.

Bunk adapter sets cost $29 through the Army supply system, and Strickland needed 480. The battalion, BCTB and post didn't have $13,920 to spend on metal pipes.

Dan Gibbs of the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office conducted a worldwide computer and phone search for the elusive adapters. Then, Chief of Staff Col. John Latimer put out an all-points bulletin to Fort Benning units asking for adapters. Some were found at the Conus Replacement Center and Ranger Training Brigade.

But 300 sets were still needed. Fort Benning's Directorate of Logistics came to the rescue. Since Jan. 24, welders have been turning lengths of "cold water pipe" into bunk adapters.

Four 16 and 1/2-inch pipes are needed per set.

"If it can be fabricated, we can do it here," welder Donnie Nelson said.

It's a three-step process. The pipe, purchased by DOL from a Columbus vendor, is cut, deburred and fitted with collars 3 inches from each end. Three welders and one machinist are working on the project.

"The primary purpose of the maintenance division is to support the repair of equipment," said Ken Strumpler, the director of logistics.

The shop has repaired the Airborne jump towers, including all the pulleys, coupling and release mechanisms. In the past they have also fabricated gun mounts and executed other custom work for units on post.

Cutting cost was not the key issue with the bunk adapters, Strumpler said.

"It was the fact that DOL was able to support the mission and meet an urgent need," he said.

Soldiers from 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., drop by the shop at Sand Hill daily to pick up the completed homemade bunk adapters.

"We pick them up as soon as they are finished," Strickland said. When the shop has created enough to complete a platoon, drill sergeants supervise the procedure and the Soldiers can finish the task in about an hour. "Comments have all been positive," he said.

Manufacturers voluntarily recall defective products

Army News Service

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, The Sherwin-Williams Co., of Cleveland, Ohio and Brockway Standard Inc. of Atlanta, Ga., are voluntarily recalling about 3,000 cans of Formby's Conditioning Furniture Refinisher.

The product and its vapors can seep or leak from the nozzle base at the top of the can, posing a risk of fire and chemical injuries.

The firms have received one report of an employee suffering minor burns when refinisher vapors ignited in a retailer's distribution center.

Formby's Conditioning Furniture Refinisher, used to refinish wood furniture, is sold individually and as part of Formby's "Introduction to Refinishing Kit."

The 32-ounce metal can reads, "Formby's Furniture Workshop" and "Furniture Refinisher" in white lettering on a burgundy and mostly green background.

A depiction of Homer Formby appears on the face of the can.

The product can be identified by a code on the bottom of the can written in black ink with one of the following lot number sequences: A961600, A961610, A961620, A961630, A967270 and A969330. Cans with blue ink codes are not subject to this recall.

Discount department, hardware and hobby stores nationwide sold the refinisher from October 1999 through January 2000. The individual cans sold for about $13 and the kits sold for about $16.

Consumers should stop using this refinishing product immediately, and place the product in a well-ventilated area. Since it can leak, care should be taken to keep the product from spilling by always keeping the container upright. Also, do not store near any source of ignition, such as near a gas-fueled appliance. Consumers should call (800) 523-9299 between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. ET Monday through Friday for instructions on how to handle and return the refinisher for replacement or a refund.

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission protects the public from unreasonable risks of injury or death from 15,000 types of consumer products under the agency's jurisdiction.

To report a dangerous product or a product-related injury, call CPSC's hotline at (800) 638-2772 or CPSC's teletypewriter at (800) 638-8270, or visit CPSC's web site at http://www.cpsc.gov/talk.html http://www.cpsc.gov/talk.html.

Computer armoire recall

In cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, Sauder Woodworking Co., of Archbold, Ohio, is voluntarily recalling about 212,400 computer armoires.

The upper doors or upper door components can fall off, causing injury to nearby consumers.

Sauder Woodworking has received 143 reports of an upper door or its components falling off, resulting in 17 injuries, including a broken toe, cuts, scratches and bruises.

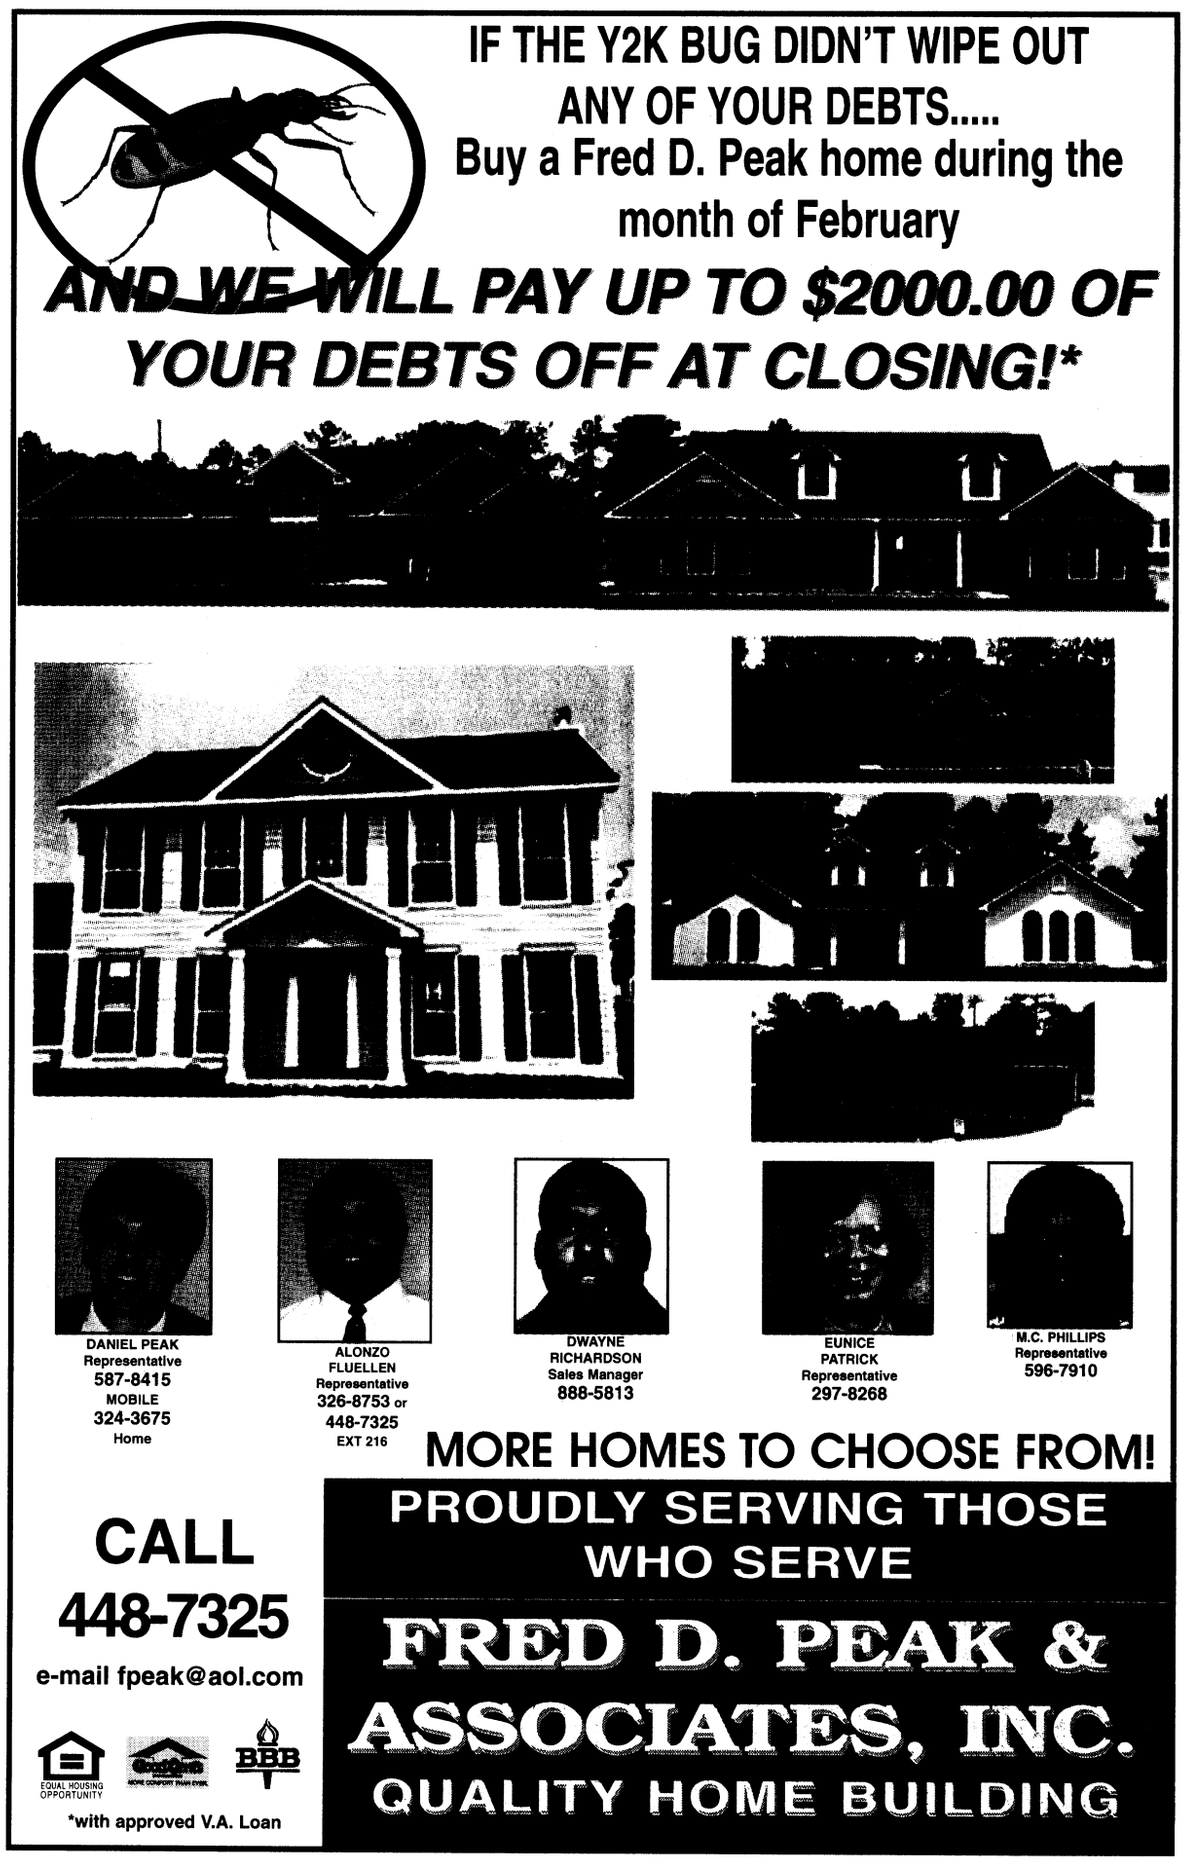
The recall involves the Monarch style computer armoire, models 2549 (washed pine finish), 2649 (woodland oak finish), 2749 (classic cherry finish), 8449 (fruitwood finish), and 9649 (amber oak finish).

The Monarch Computer Armoire measures about 41.5 inches wide, 23 inches deep and 73 inches high with the doors closed. Two upper doors open to reveal designated areas for a printer, monitor, and keyboard.

Two lower rollaway doors open to provide additional work surfaces and a file drawer. "Sauder" is imprinted into two metal strike plates, located in the corners of the upper doors.

The model number is located on a sticker that the consumer attached to the armoire or in the assembly instruction book.

Department, office and furniture stores nationwide sold these computer armoires from July 1997 through December 1999 for about $450.



Consumers should stop using the computer armoire immediately and call Sauder toll-free at (888) 800-6315 between 7 a.m. and 11 p.m. ET Monday through Friday and between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Saturday to order a free repair kit.

The repair kit includes safety brackets for installation on both doors and installation instructions.

Plan: Takes Shinseki's plan to worldwide web subject-matter expertise provided by Infantry Captains' Career Course small-group instructors from Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

The Directorate of Threat and Safety provided potential threat capabilities and participated as the threat players in the efforts.

An after-action review followed each simulation, and Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, Fort Benning's commanding general, was briefed on the emerging insights gained by all participants, Pound said.

Le Moyne and Stone then briefed senior TRADOC leadership on an almost nightly basis.

"All this went on behind closed doors up until the Chief's announcement at the Association of the U.S. Army's annual meeting in October," Pound said.

After Shinseki made his plan public, other units on Fort Benning quickly became involved in the work.

"We developed a campaign plan to map out how the post would support the overall Army effort," Pound said.

The campaign plan's mission statement reads, "Fort Benning directs the integration of Infantry forces across the Doctrine, Training, Leader Development, Organization, Materiel and Soldier domains in order to support the development and fielding of the Initial Brigade Combat Team and the Army's overall modernization efforts."

The campaign plan's requirements were tasked out across Fort Benning, and showed what "we thought each post agency or organization would have to provide," Pound said.

In briefing the campaign plan to officials from across post Dec. 14, the commanding general wanted to show "the big picture and how Fort Benning was going to support it," Pound said.

Le Moyne also briefed the campaign plan to the student bodies of the ICCC, Officers' Basic Course, BNCOC and ANCOC.

"He knew the students were aware of the Army's efforts in the transformation of the initial brigades and wanted them to know exactly what the Army's plans were and the impact on the Infantry force," Pound said.

Personnel from Fort Benning have been sent on temporary duty to Fort Lewis. A team, including a colonel, two lieutenant colonels, two majors and two NCOs, will remain there for the next six months working with other individuals from throughout TRADOC as the staff for Maj. Gen. James Dubik, TRADOC deputy chief of staff for transformation.

Lt. Col. John D'Agostino is the chief of the Initial Brigade Combat Team Task Force. He is the integrator for all of Fort Benning's actions.

"Everything that comes in to Fort Benning from all the other schools in TRADOC and from TRADOC headquarters comes through me, and I figure out who in the Infantry School is best suited to do the job," D'Agostino said.

CATD is writing doctrine for the brigade.

The Directorate of Operations and Training, in conjunction with the IBCT, is constructing the training plan, including leader development.

DCD is developing the organization and equipping of the initial brigade — for example, what type of vehicles and weapons will be used.

In February's issue of Infantry Magazine, Maj. Gen. Le Moyne's "Commandant's Notes" will focus on the overall concept of the IBCT, Russell Eno, editor, said.

The magazine is planning a series highlighting the initial brigades and the changes ahead for the Infantry.

Visit: Evaluates Fort Benning homosexual conduct policy

• TRADOC has been directed to incorporate institutional training on homosexual conduct policies into all stages of the professional military education system within 90 days.

• The Army Inspector General has been tasked to specifically inspect homosexual conduct training throughout the Army and Reserve components.

• Verbal admission of homosexuality may be grounds for discharge. Commanders, in conjunction with the Staff Judge Advocate must, however, determine whether admissions are credible. In most cases of homosexual admission, no investigation is required.

In instances where the commander feels that the admission may not be credible, an inquiry may be appropriate and will be conducted pursuant to AR 600-20.

A "substantial investigation" is defined as one that extends beyond questioning the person, individuals suggested by the person for interview, and the person's immediate chain of command.

The secretary has designated the assistant secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs as the approval authority for initiation of substantial investigations.

Requests for approval will be forwarded through the command channels to the assistant secretary of the Army.

No further action will be taken, including processing the Soldier for discharge, until either permission for initiating the investigation is denied or permission is granted by the assistant secretary of the Army and the investigation is concluded.

• All applicable Army regulations will be revised as quickly as possible to reflect this guidance.

The deputy Chiefs of Staff for Operations and Personnel will work to revise AR 350-1 and mandate annual training on the homosexual conduct policy.

Bill: Could make Soldier's ad valorem tax obsolete at tag time

"I wasn't aware there was an inequity with jointly titled vehicles until (Smith) confronted me with it," he said. "It has been something I have been working on ever since."

While Walker said it is difficult to tell the fate of House Bill 441, Sen. Ed Harbison of Muscogee County said he will ensure he does everything he can do keep the car tag tax bill in motion.

"I spoke with (Walker) before the legislative session and told him I wanted to work with him on this," Harbison said. "And I will do what I have to ensure the bill continues on schedule."

Keeping the bill in motion shouldn't be a problem, Harbison said, citing only slight opposition the bill faced in the House.

"I don't foresee any major problems with its passage in the Senate," Harbison said. "It faced only a few changes from its original form during its time in the House, and I think the same will hold true here in the Senate."

If the bill were to face changes in the Senate, the bill would have to be re-routed back through the House and then returned to the Senate for final approval.

Military men and women can expect to see the tax cut as early as 2001 if the senate decides give the bill the green light.

While there is no exact dollar amount on how much the bill could save Soldiers, officials at the Muscogee County License Bureau said in some cases, especially on new vehicles, the bill could save Soldiers hundreds of dollars annually.

The tax has already been omitted voluntarily by some counties, but counties surrounding Fort Benning — Muscogee and Chattahoochee — have opted not to put a freeze to the tax.

"Right now we are seeing some counties add the tax while others do not," Walker said. "I have serious reservations about that being legal."

While the legality issue has not been brought up, he said a verdict on the bill from the Senate should be announced by March.

DoD releases final Gulf illness studies

Reports claim no chemical agents released

Staff Sgt. Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, D.C. — DoD released two "final reports" Jan. 13 on investigations into the possible detection of chemical or biological warfare agents during the Gulf War.

The reports deal with the reported detection of chemical warfare agents at Camp Monterey, Kuwait, and at An Nasiriyah Southwest Ammunition Storage Point in Iraq.

The Camp Monterey report states unequivocally that no chemical agent was present at the site while U.S. troops were present in 1991.

The investigation stemmed from an incident Sept. 14, 1991, in which several Soldiers reportedly became ill after spilling the contents of a metal can at the bivouac site, roughly 15 miles north of Kuwait City.

The original report released in May 1997 said the effects quickly subsided, and the Soldiers returned to duty.

The contents of the can had been assessed two days earlier as chlorobenzylidene malononitrile, commonly called CS gas and often used as a riot control agent. However, samples of the substance were taken to a Fox chemical reconnaissance vehicle as a precaution, said Bernard Rostker, special assistant to the deputy secretary of defense for Gulf War illnesses.

"The detection equipment in the Fox vehicle sounded alarms for the possible presence of cyclosarin, a nerve agent," Rostker said in a DoD news release. "Further testing done by spectrum analysis, however, confirmed that the substance was, in fact, CS." Three independent laboratories also confirmed that finding, he added.

This report includes new information from veterans that validates the original case narrative and further states that M-256 detection kits found no evidence of chemical agents at the site.

The second "final report" states it's "unlikely" U.S. troops were exposed to chemical warfare agents at the Iraqis' An Nasiriyah munitions depot.

DoD officials said mustard-filled artillery rounds likely were present at the site during the Allied air campaign, but not in any bunkers struck by U.S.-delivered ordnance in early 1991.

The report states the chemical agents were likely moved before U.S. forces occupied the site in March and April 1991.

Chemical and munitions experts at the site found no sign of contamination.

The full reports are available to the public at www.gulflink.osd.mil.

Historic 'White Elephants' get face-lift

Revamped housing units become available

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

It's out with the old and in with the new for 1st Lt. William and Allison Heck.

The couple will move within a few weeks from their home on First Division Road into a completely renovated version of their historic "White Elephant" company-grade quarters.

On Tuesday, the first building completed in Phase One of the renovation project, 400 Lumpkin Road, was turned over from the contractor, Trawick Contracting, to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

The corps will make final inspections before turning the building over to the post Housing Office.

Families can start moving in mid-month, Ron Smith, chief of family housing, said.

Other completed buildings will follow quickly. 402 Lumpkin will be inspected Monday and 100 Running Ave. is set for Feb. 10, Bruce Morrow, general supervisor with Trawick, said.

Buildings will be completed every three weeks after that until all eight have been turned back over to Family Housing.

The 30 buildings known on post as the White Elephants have four housing units each. They were built between 1934 and 1935, and are listed on the National Historic Register.

The Directorate of Public Works and Trawick Contracting worked with the State Historic Preservation Office, and all of the changes met the guidelines for historic renovations. The final project is expected to cost about $13.5 million, Smith said.

Phase one started back in January 1999.

The majority of the quarters were vacated through attrition.

Families in the others were relocated to other company-grade quarters on post.

Phase Two, which includes the Heck's quarters on First Division Road, will get under way next and should be completed in about six months, Smith said.

The Hecks are the last residents remaining in Phase Two, which involves 10 buildings.

The third phase will take care of the 12 final buildings.

If anyone can appreciate the new changes in the quarters, it's someone who has lived in the older version.

The Hecks, who live on the second floor, will no longer have to take laundry down to the basement to wash.

A laundry room and second bathroom have been added to the main living floor.

Those changes and the updating of the kitchen please the couple, Allison Heck said.

"Everything will be brand new including the appliances and the cabinets," she said.

The outside also received a face-lift. Sidewalks and patios were added, and the yards landscaped.

The one-car garages were also refurbished.

To meet national fire safety guidelines for multiplex buildings, sprinkler systems were added.

Form documents experience for transitioning Soldiers

Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Transitioning Soldiers need to document military experiences, qualifications, work history, training, education and achievements.

Preparation of a resume is the accepted way for a job seeker to present his or her professional history to potential employers.

One very convenient source available, free of charge, to help with resume preparation is DD Form 2586, Verification of Military Experience and Training, said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services manager.

The Department of Defense will issue each separating Soldier a DD Form 2586.

Soldiers who have completed numerous military training courses and served in many positions, experienced a wide range of responsibilities, perhaps too many for some to remember easily for inclusion on resumes, job or college applications need to fill out the form.

The VMET report is created from automated records on file and includes military job assignments, training programs with recommended college credits and civilian job titles relating to specific military occupational specialties.

Separating Soldiers should automatically receive the VMET report no later than 120 days before their separation date. However, because of changes in separation dates, it is recommended each separating Soldier call the office to check the status of the system.

Soldiers need to update the mailing address in the VMET office to insure it is received in time to be useful. CONUS based Army personnel should call: 1-800-258-VMET.

"Soldiers who have received their VMET are encouraged to bring it to ACAP Preseparation briefings, workshops and counseling sessions. This useful tool is available to separating Soldiers as a valuable entitlement to help transition back to the civilian workforce," Wight said.

Son follows in father's footsteps, goes Airborne

Proud dad relives past as son earns his wings

Pvt. Travis Cox undergoes jumpmaster personnel inspection in McCarthy Hall prior to his first jump.

Wayne Cox drove more than 12 hours from Ohio to Fort Benning to watch his son complete Airborne school last week.

The Vietnam veteran wouldn't have been anywhere else when Pvt. Travis Cox earned his wings. An electrical engineer, Wayne was at Fryar Field braving the cold weather for each of his son's five jumps.

Airborne School has become a family tradition in the Cox family. Travis, 20, is the seventh member of the family to earn his wings, dating back to his grandfather, Virgil, a 1948 graduate.

Virgil, who was in the Army Air Corps and then retired from the Air Force, had planned to visit Fort Benning and see his grandson, but he became ill and couldn't make the trip.

Wayne graduated in 1968 when he was 18, two years after his older brother, Ted, and three years before his younger brother, Mike. Virgil, Ted and Wayne served in Vietnam during the same time.

Ted's son, Ted Jr., earned his wings in 1988, and Mike's namesake, Mike Jr., followed suit in 1997. They are both assigned to the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg.

"I remember my father putting my wings on, and he (Travis) will remember this the rest of his life," Wayne said.

Despite his Airborne pedigree, Travis still had a hard go of it. Before Christmas, he sprained his ankle during the ground phase.

He recovered and returned for the next class after the holiday break. Assigned to C Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry (Airborne), he was given the roster number 340G — the G signified that he was a recycle from the ground phase.

When asked why he chose to go through jump school, Travis answered with just four words, "Because everybody else did."

"And I thought I could carry on the family tradition. My father kept saying I was his last chance to go Airborne," he added.

Travis graduated from basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C., in July. He attended Advanced Individual Training for parachute riggers at Fort Lee, Va.

His next assignment is with the 82nd Airborne Division where he will have a chance to see his two cousins.

"It was a total surprise when I found out he had joined," Wayne said. "I found out only after he had seen the recruiter."

Jan. 24 Travis and the other students were preparing for their first jump at McCarthy Hall at Lawson Army Airfield. Wayne arrived at 6:30 a.m., after driving down from Ohio the night before.

"I talked to him for about five minutes and told him he looked good," Wayne said.

From a corner in McCarthy Hall, Wayne surveyed the proceedings as 288 students put on their equipment and waited for a weather decision. His jump wings were pinned to his Vietnam Veteran's cap.

"A few things have changed," Wayne said. "The ankle braces for one. I've never seen them before.

"Other than the ankle braces and the style of the helmets, they still act the same. The rookies still act like rookies, and the cadre still act like cadre, which is a good thing."

Wayne recalled his 23 jumps. "I always found it to be exhilarating and never worried about my safety," he said.

In addition to pinning on his son's wings, Wayne purchased Travis' first set of jump boots.

During jump week, the father and son had dinner together and talked about the day's events.

"He didn't ask for any advice," Wayne said. "He was just a little keyed up so I told him to stay calm."

"It really helped me out when my Dad showed up," Travis said. "I was feeling kind of nervous."

Love of teaching keeps drill sergeant on trail

Soldier shares experience with basic trainees

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Spc. Michael Maddox

Sgt. 1st Class Robert Young goes over general military knowledge with a Soldier from E Co., 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, after a Class A inspection.

Little did Robert Young know that when he first enlisted in the military in 1962, that he would still be serving his country through the millennium.

Young, a sergeant first class with the 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry, 84th Division, has been fulfilling his annual two weeks of active duty service by working as a drill sergeant for E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

Young said it's been a long road to where he is now, but one he's enjoyed every second of.

His first experience in the military came during Vietnam when Young enlisted in the Marine Corps right after high school. The Bloomington, Ind., native was assigned to the 1st Marine Division during his 25-month tour.

After Vietnam, Young returned to Paris Island where he served as a drill instructor for three years. He later served sea duty as detachment gunnery sergeant on the USS Ranger.

It was around this time that Young decided to start a family.

"I wanted to raise a family and that was pretty hard to do back then," he said. So he decided not to re-enlist and to instead dedicate his time to building a family in 1971.

Young went on to have two sons and a daughter with his wife, Bobby, and ended up running his own 500-acre farm "raising cattle, kids and corn."

During that time, Young was out of the military for 20 years before he re-entered. He said he decided to join the military again, this time in the Army Reserves, in 1989 for several reasons.

"My son was in the reserves, and he was activated for Desert Storm. I thought, well, they got my boy so I thought I'd come back in too," he said.

"I came back in to go to Desert Storm, a lot of people were doing that because of Sadam's threat of a million man army," Young said. "With my experience as a DI, they sent me to do this instead."

"There's always been men from my family in every war, sometimes more than one at a time. I just figured it was the right thing to do," Young said.

Young added, he's enjoyed every minute since he came back in.

He said he enjoys the camaraderie the military offers.

"I enjoy working with the men and the military life," Young said.

He said he also likes being able to share his love of the military and America with today's new Soldiers.

"I have a flag that flies at my house everyday. I have a lot of pride that was instilled in me many years ago," he said. "I'd like to see these young fellows get it.

"If I can help them out in some way so they can come back from a war, that's what I'd like to do," he added.

Staff Sgt. David Santos said Young's dedication to service and knowledge brings a great aspect to the Soldiers training.

"He's awesome. We cannot afford as NCOs to lose the experience from a first-rated, excellent senior noncommissioned officer who knows all aspects of the United States Army and its environment," he said.

Pvt. Brent Thornton said that Young's example motivates him to do his best.

"He's very impressive," Thornton said. "It blows my mind to see a man of that age go along with us on marches and train us. It really impresses me, makes me want to drive on when I feel like I can't."

Young said bringing his knowledge to the unit is all worthwhile because today's Soldiers seem to soak up the knowledge the drill sergeants put out to them.

"These kids are much smarter than I was used to working with. They are intelligent, highly selected individuals as far as I'm concerned," he said. "When I did this before, it wasn't unusual to find someone with a third grade education.

"The Soldiers today are superior, young privates, more qualified and higher educated."

Young still runs his farm when he's not on drill or working here at Fort Benning.

He also has a black belt in martial arts and Tae Kwon Do and Hapkito three times a week with one class solely for children.

Working with the drill sergeants and commanders from 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., keeps Young coming back to train Soldiers each year.

"The command philosophy, leadership style and expectations are right on target with the type of Soldiers the Army is receiving these days," he said. "The E Company, 1st Battalion., 19th Infantry Regiment drill sergeants and the reserve drill sergeants are the best I have ever worked with."

Young, who is 57, said he plans on leading new Soldiers as long as possible.

"I'll be here doing this as long as my health stays up, I'll stay with it," he said. "In another three years, they're (the reserves) going to do it for me anyway, you have to retire from the reserves at 60. But my health is good so I guess I'll be around until then."

Couple takes on challenge of Officer Candidate School together

Capt. Thomas Hanley
Officer Candidate School

While married couples have been in OCS before, they have normally been in different classes.

Class 2-00 has a unique situation as Adena Joy Weiser and Randall Weiser are students in the same class at the Army's Officer Candidate School.

They were both staff sergeants in the Army before they entered OCS.

"It is a great opportunity for us," said Adena, who described their careers with anticipation of future assignments. "We met at BNCOC, now we are at OCS, and we will be assigned to Europe together."

Both are meeting the challenges of OCS as Randall Weiser is serving as the student company commander, and Adena has been proving herself as the company physical training officer.

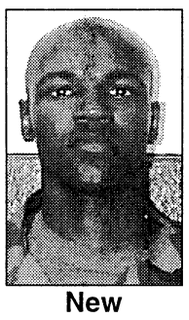
"We have separate jobs, and we are expected to live by the same rules as other officer candidates," said Randall as he described their interaction. "We really have not spoken to each other. The only chance we had to talk was when she had CQ duty. We addressed each other as Basic Officer Candidate Weiser. Everything has to be professional."

A Company Commander Capt. Ronnie Preston shares common feelings with these two candidates because his wife was a captain in the Army as well.

"Both are performing very well in the course, and this is a special opportunity to help young officers get started together," said Preston.

The Weisers are assigned to different platoons to ensure that they are facing the same experiences as any other candidate.

"It is nice for us to see the other getting smoked the same way," Randall said. "We can appreciate what each other are going through."



They come also from similar backgrounds as Adena was a licensed practical nurse who served as a drill instructor, while Randall served as an Infantryman in the 3rd Infantry Regiment, the 'Old Guard', before becoming an X-ray technician.

They attended the same BNCOC in 1996 and were married two years ago at Fort Bragg, N.C. The two were both Audie Murphy Award recipients prior to OCS.

The Weisers said they have been very fortunate because they have been able to depend on family support to make it through OCS at the same time.

"Parents and family have really been supportive, helping us manage bills and personal affairs while we are here," said Randall.

Top teachers earn accolades

Wester, Gouine take home title of year's best

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

We would never have learned as much as we know now if it weren't for teachers.

From the kindergarten teachers, college professors, and from drill sergeants to other military instructors, they all play a part in the sculpting of who we are, and what we know.

To pay tribute to the most outstanding instructors on Fort Benning, the post held the Instructors of the Quarter presentation Jan. 25 in Infantry Hall.

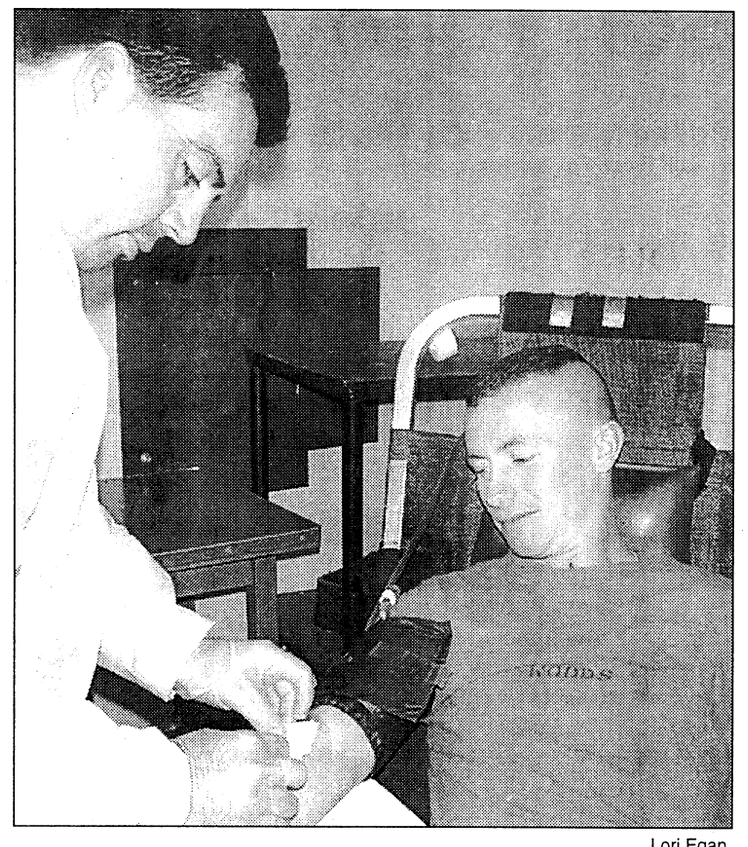
The top senior NCO and junior NCO were recognized for their outstanding instructions.

The Senior NCO instructor was Sgt. 1st Class Steven J. Gouine, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, the primary instructor and NCOIC for Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain.

Receiving the title of Junior NCO Instructor of the Quarter was Staff Sgt. Michael A Wester, A Company, 6th Ranger Training Battalion, the primary instructor for the introduction of reptiles to Rangers.

The instructors were chosen by the Instruction Training Course.

"The ITC came down and watched me teach, and I was chosen I guess on a point system," said Wester.



Gouine was also selected by the ITC for his superb instructions.

"It is really nice to get the recognition of doing your job correctly," said Gouine.

Wester agreed with his appreciation of the recognition.

"It shows that we are doing a good job, and it is really good moral," Wester said.

Both Wester and Gouine are now eligible for Instructor of the Year to be held next year.

Stowers celebrates Black History

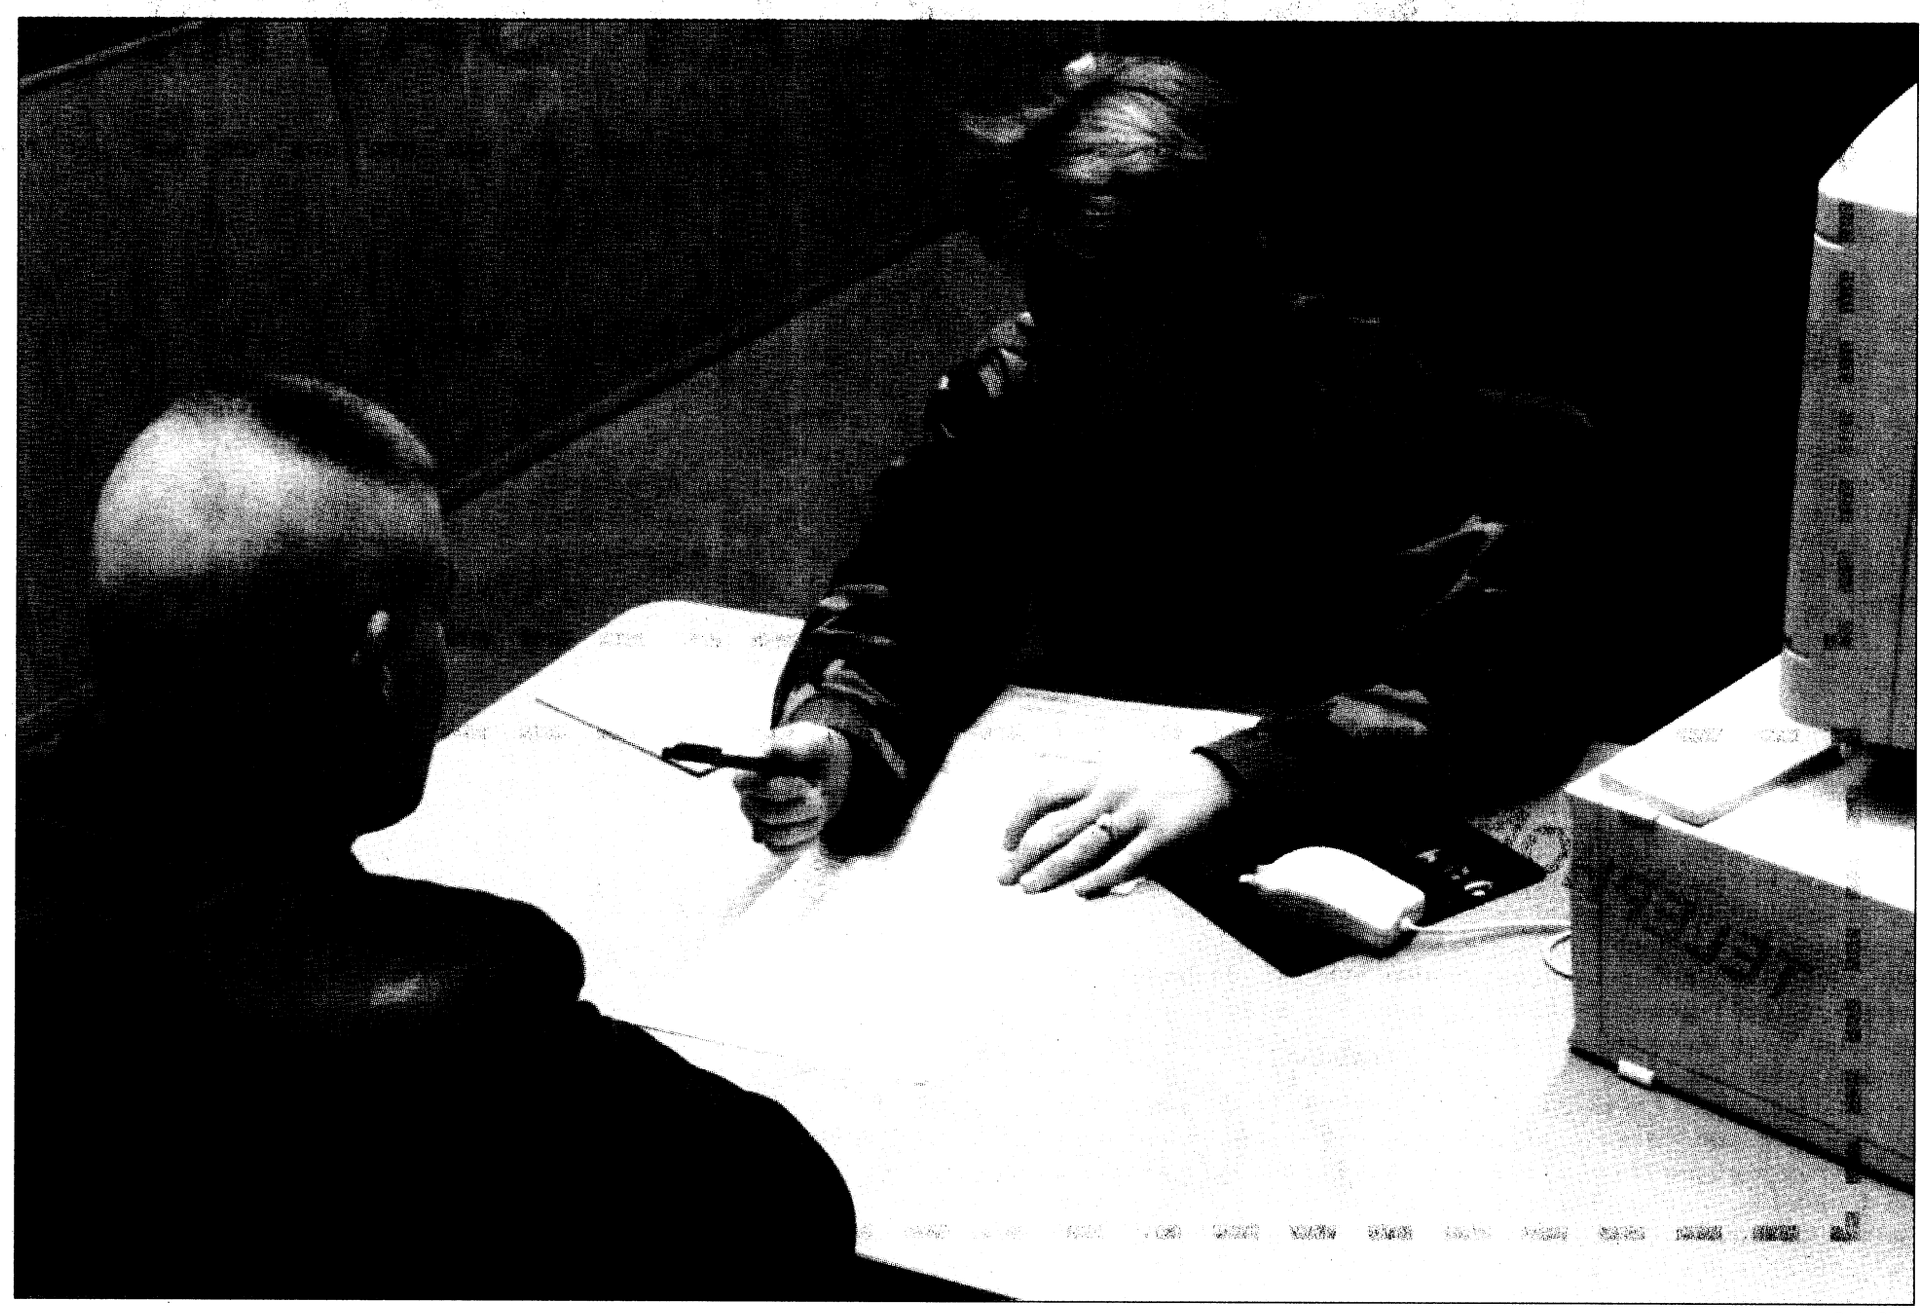
"A Parade of African-American Leaders of the 21st Century" was the theme of a two-part play performed by fifth-graders at Stowers Elementary Jan. 25.

The 90-member cast presented brief biographies of more than 100 great black leaders to the audience of parents and students.



"I'm extremely proud of these students. They each did their own research and compiled the information they presented," said Ann Justice, social studies teacher and director.

In the opening act, students portrayed a slave family waiting for Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad.

Rolanda Kelly, of Columbus, sang a black spiritual, and students performed choreographed steps to "This Train is Bound for Glory."

Fifth-grader Kyle McKibben narrated the second half of the play. Students eulogized African-American leaders in the areas of science, performing arts, politics, education and the military.

"This has been a great opportunity for the kids to share what they have learned, through individual research, with their families and classmates," said Glenn Hughes, principal.

Dental Activity offers advice to parents

Dentists warn that prolonged thumbsucking can cause problems

American Dental Association

February is National Children's Dental Health Month. For new parents who are concerned about their baby's thumbsucking, the Fort Benning Dental Activity offers the following advice.

Sucking is one of the baby's natural reflexes. As infants grow, sucking serves many purposes. Infants and young children may suck on thumbs, fingers, pacifiers or toys because it makes them feel secure and happy and helps them learn about their world.

Young children may find that placing a finger or thumb into their mouth provides them with a sense of security at difficult periods such as after a scolding or when separated from their parents.

Because thumbsucking is relaxing, it may induce sleep. For this reason, young children may often do this in the evenings or when they are tired.

The Dental Activity notes that prolonged thumbsucking can cause problems.

Once the permanent teeth erupt, sucking may cause problems with the proper growth of the mouth and alignment of teeth.

One factor that determines whether a dental problem may result is the intensity of sucking.

Children who rest their thumbs passively in their mouths are less likely to have difficulty than those who vigorously suck their thumbs. When a parent removes the thumb from the child's mouth, a "popping" sound is often heard.

The Dental Activity notes that some aggressive thumbsuckers may cause problems for their primary (baby) teeth. If you notice changes in the baby teeth, consult your dentist.

Usually, children stop thumbsucking between the ages of two and four.

Sucking gradually lessens during this period as they spend more of their waking hours exploring their surroundings. They should cease sucking by the time the permanent front teeth are ready to erupt. Peer pressure causes many school-aged children to stop.

Sucking a pacifier is not necessarily less harmful for a child.

Pacifiers can affect the teeth essentially the same way as sucking fingers and thumbs. It is often an easier habit to break, however.

The Dental Activity says to keep these tips in mind when helping your child:

• Instead of scolding children for sucking, praise them when they are not.

• Remember that children often suck their thumbs when feeling insecure.

Focus on correcting the cause of anxiety, instead of thumbsucking.

• Children who are sucking for comfort will feel less of a need when their parents provide comfort.

• Reward children when they refrain from sucking during difficult periods, such as when being separated from their parents.

• Your dentist can encourage children to stop sucking and explain what could happen to their teeth if they continue.

• If these approaches don't work, remind the children of their habit by bandaging the thumb or putting a sock on the hand at night.

Scrapbooks preserve memories in style

Bridgett Siter

LeAnn Volesky works on a scrapbook. Volesky spends 20 hours a week teaching other military families how to preserve memories with scrapbooks.

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

An array of faded snapshots lay spread on the table in front of her. Shannon Secules shook her head in frustration, trying to recall names and places in the photographs.

"I know they're pictures of me and my brother before we started school, but I don't know when or where they were taken. My dad can't help much, because he was in the Air Force and gone most of the time. My mom died when I was in high school."

Secules spent her early childhood years in far-off locations, such as Sicily and Spain. She's got the pictures to prove it — but not the memories.

Soon after moving to Fort Benning last summer, Secules began sorting through old photo albums that had once belonged to her mother.

What she found was a large collection of unlabeled photos, with no obvious rhyme or reason to the arrangement. It took several weeks to organize the photos of events and people she could recall. The remainder still lay on her dining table.

"These are the last ones. I guess they were taken before I was old enough to remember. I look at them every so often and try to figure them out," she said. "It's like a missing puzzle piece. It's a tiny piece of my history that I'm missing."

These days Secules spends several hours each week recording her more recent history in scrapbooks for her children. She is one of a growing number of people who have discovered a passion for creatively preserving family memories and milestones.

"I don't want my daughters to go through the same thing I did. It's a lot of fun scrapbooking, but I'm very serious about what I'm doing," Secules said.

In fact, the words "serious," "obsessive" and "addicted" are often used by scrapbookers to describe their fascination with cutting, cropping, matting, pasting, and journaling every detail they capture on film.

"It's definitely an addiction. When I went to my first scrapbooking class, I knew within 10 minutes that this was for me," said LeAnn Volesky, a scrapbook consultant.

She said the current popularity of scrapbooking in the military community keeps her busy holding classes and 'crops' about 20 hours a week.

"As military families, we've been so many places and met so many people, that it's important to find a way to preserve all those experiences. It's not enough just to take pictures and leave them in shoe boxes, because we forget important details over the years," Volesky said. "Someday you'll want to remember the 'who, what, when, where, and why' behind every picture. That's why it's important to write details in your scrapbook. It's called journaling, and without it, you've just got a book of pictures."

Volesky said the interest in scrapbooking continues to grow as quality materials become easier to obtain.

School staff wears badges, promotes Army values

Bridgett Siter

When school started last fall, the staff of Stowers Elementary joined the ranks of thousands who have pledged their allegiance to the Army values of loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity, and personal courage.

Principal Glenn Hughes and assistant principal Mike Starrett designed badges for every teacher and staff member with the seven Army values listed on the back. The badges are modeled after the Army values card currently issued to all Soldiers.

According to Hughes, the badges serve dual purposes.

"We were already implementing safety procedures, as part of our Fort Benning Safe Schools Plan. We went one step further and, using our digital camera, created these identification badges for all our staff to wear. Then we took these principles and adapted them for our

OCS family support group goes to field

Senior Officer Candidate Green Chandler
Officer Candidate School

Being away from loved ones can be stressful for Soldiers, especially when attending a military school in a restricted environment. As many students at the Officer Candidate School have learned, a good unit family support group can help reduce that stress.

As the wife of B Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (Officer Candidate School) commander, Melissa Sheldon plays a key role in helping families in the unit stay informed and involved in company activities. Sheldon said B Co.'s family support group tries to break the stereotype of serving as social function for spouses. Instead, she said, the group aims to provide practical help for Soldiers' families.

"We're not just here to bake cookies and gossip. We like to provide real support to the families however possible," Sheldon said.

Despite the restriction of basic and intermediate phases at OCS, B Co's family support group focuses on increasing the interaction between Soldiers and their families wherever possible — even in the field. During the course, family members were brought to several field exercises to visit spouses, attend prayer services and learn about training. Seeing their spouse training in the field has helped families deal with the stress of separation, according to some Class 1-00 spouses.

Marie Towner, wife of Senior Officer Candidate Richard Towner, said she never knew what it was really like in the field and was pleased to learn about weapons, equipment and the conditions in which her husband trained. She said her visits to the field with B Co.'s family support group will help her when she can't be with her husband.

"When he's gone and I'm at home now I can understand what he's going through and be more sympathetic," Towner said.

Another spouse, Maria Marte, said she was impressed by the number of activities provided by the family support group. She also said that staying informed helped reduce the stress of being away from her husband, SOC Odalis Marte.

"They are putting a lot of effort in keeping the families in touch," Marte said.

Capt. Floyd Sheldon, B Co. commander, said the goal of the family support group is to keep families informed so they can react to different situations. He said bringing spouses to the field strengthens soldier and family morale.

"It helps them understand how hard it is for their spouse to train and to see what their living conditions are," Sheldon said.

SOC Edward Lerz said he was surprised to see a family support group for an Army school and he appreciates the fact that his wife always has someone to call on for help.

"It sets my mind at ease, which lets me concentrate on training," Lerz said.

Sheldon said he hopes the candidates and their spouses take what they have learned from B Co.'s family support group and apply it to their future commands.

Jane M. Winand
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I have just transferred to Fort Benning and I am looking to rent an apartment in town. At my last duty station, my landlord refused to return my security deposit and I had to get the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate attorney involved to get my money.

My old landlord tried to charge me more than the security deposit to repair damages to the apartment that were there when I moved in. How can I protect myself from an unscrupulous landlord?

A. The best way to protect yourself is to thoroughly document all of the pre-existing damage to the rental property before you move in.

Georgia law requires all landlords who own more than ten units, or are professional property managers, to conduct a premove inspection to determine if the rental property is in any way damaged.

Usually, the landlord will simply give you a standard form, tell you to list any damages and ask you to return the list to the leasing office.

A word of advice: Fill out the form and keep a copy of it! Far too many tenants do not take the time to properly complete the form and return it to the landlord. Consequently, when the landlord withholds the security deposit for "damages" to the property after you move out, there is no way to dispute the claim, other than to pit your word against the landlord's version of the facts.

By thoroughly inspecting the property and filling out the form, you will establish the condition of the property at the time you move in, thus making it difficult for the landlord to take advantage of you.

Photographs and a videotape of the property will document preexisting damages. Make sure that you keep a copy of the form and have the landlord sign your copy.

Once you move out of the apartment, the landlord must conduct an inspection, within three business days and compile a comprehensive list of damages that he or she plans to offset against your security deposit.

The landlord may only charge you for damages, beyond normal wear and tear, that occurred during your tenancy.

As the former tenant, you have the right to inspect the property within five business days of termination to determine if the list is accurate. If the list is not accurate, you must write a statement to that effect and submit it to the landlord immediately.

Assuming the property is substantially in the same shape when you vacate as when you moved in, the landlord must return your deposit within 30 days.

A completed pre-move inspection sheet helps prevent charges for damage that existed prior to your occupancy. In Georgia, a detailed inspection sheet signed by both of you and the landlord is conclusive proof as to the condition of the property at the time you moved in.

But what do you do if the landlord still will not return your security deposit, despite your "conclusive" proof? If the landlord won't return your security deposit, or worse, charges you more than your security deposit to repair pre-existing damage to the property, you may file a suit in small claims court to recover your money.

Georgia law allows you to recover three times the amount of the security deposit if the judge determines that any portion of the security deposit was wrongfully withheld.

If you decide that this course of action is necessary, you should make an appointment to speak with an attorney in the Legal Assistance Division. You may make an appointment by calling 545-3281 or 545-3282 at 8 a.m. Fridays.

Some may consider physical education to be just an opportunity for children to get out of the classroom for some much-needed exercise, but at Loyd Elementary School it is an integral part of an integrated curriculum.

The entire student body is currently learning to jump rope, while at the same time learning valuable lessons in math and language arts.

The students started the unit in the middle of January and will continue through the month of February in order to celebrate American Heart Month.

Jumping rope is an excellent form of cardiovascular exercise. It is also a wonderful life long skill and an inexpensive form of exercise.

Older students are learning to jump rope and learning key math and language skills. The younger students are learning to count in consequential order, study units of measure and identify geometric shapes.

In the area of language arts, these students are forming letters with the jump rope and learning the proper use of the preposition words over, under, behind and beside.

With the older students, jumping rope reinforces many already learned skills, such as probability, problem solving and critical thinking.

The integration of physical education into the overall curriculum is not limited to jumping rope. This has been a top priority of Debra Mabry, principal of Loyd Elementary, for many years. One reason this concept has been so successful is that it allows the children to have fun, while at the same time learning important skills.

"I like counting while I jump," Denzel Robinson, a kindergarten student in Gussie Cromwell's class, said.

The faculty and staff at Loyd Elementary School create a well-rounded educational experience for each student. Physical education is a very important part of that overall experience, Mabry said.

Loyd School held their second Math Mentors programs Jan. 19 with activities planned for parents and students in second through fifth grades.

The Math Mentors program gives parents the opportunity to actively take part in their child's math lesson and to gain some ideas to use at home.

By observing their child's Math teacher interacting with the students, parents can gain an understanding of appropriate strategies that they can use when helping their child with homework, Debra Mabry, Loyd principle, said.

Robert Thorne led second-grade parents and children in a hands-on measurement demonstration. The participants rotated around five stations, determining the appropriate unit to use in a variety of measuring situations, recording the data and compiling the results in a graph.

Second-graders learn about MLK in social studies

Louise Anderson
Loyd Elementary School

The three second-grade classes at the Loyd Elementary School have spent two weeks studying the life of Dr. Martin Luther King. All of the second-graders can answer the basics about King's life. They can tell you that he was born in Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 15, 1929, finished high school at the age of 15 and much more.

To learn about King's life the students participated in a variety of activities.

This learning process included: flexible working groups, reading relevant books, generation and discussion of vocabulary words and class discussions. These activities culminated with the three classes singing Happy Birthday to King and to the students who were also born in January — Deitra Ross and Brittany Brouillette. Students then ate chocolate birthday cake.

The second-grade classes' Social Studies motto is, "Social Studies is learning about the people and the places of the world and how they are connected."

Loyd Elementary School celebrated the outstanding success toward achieving DoDEA's Goals 2000 Jan. 19. The students have reached 78 percent of reading and language arts goals and 100 percent of the mathematic goals.

"Photo albums are ruining their pictures. Now good products are readily available and you can find them in a lot of stores and specialty shops," Volesky said.

Avid scrapbookers define "quality materials" as acid- and lignin-free products designed for use in scrapbooks. Lignin is a chemical found in wood pulp that eventually causes paper to fade or turn brown. Photographs exposed to lignin over an extended period of time will fade or turn colors.

Acid- and lignin-free products are often more expensive than regular products, but many companies offer guarantees against fading. Specialty stores and craft stores offer a wide variety of chemical-free products, including papers, pens, stickers, die-cuts and borders.

"These days we have so many ways to enhance the traditional scrapbook. We've always enjoyed our photo albums. Now we're elaborating on that concept to preserve memories not only for ourselves and our children, but for generations to come," said Sissy Spivey who is the owner of Snip Snap Scrapbooks.

Like Secules, most people who scrapbook do so out of a desire to document important events and preserve memories. According to Spivey, often a momentous occasion, such as a wedding or birth, triggers an interest in scrapbooking.

"It's often an important event that gets people started, but once they begin scrapbooking, they're hooked on it and they involve their family and friends. I have mothers and daughters who come in to shop and scrapbook together. And recently a husband of one of my regular customers came in to purchase the materials to make his own scrapbook based on his military career," Spivey said.

Whatever the motivation for scrapbooking, Spivey said the outcome is the same for everybody.

"A scrapbook is about your history. The elements involved make it so much more enjoyable than a photo album. People want to see it. And when they look at your book, they get to know you. We're not just talking about your friends or family. We're talking about your grandchildren and their children."

For more information on scrapbooking, call Volesky at 682-7890, or Spivey at 320-0088.

purposes, and listed them on the back of each card," Hughes said.

As part of Stowers citizenship program, students are taught to uphold these same values. According to Hughes, wearing the badges is a daily affirmation of the staff's dedication to the principles they teach and the safety of their students.

"They understand the need, first of all, as educators, to keep the children safe. Wearing these cards signifies our dedication to the education and well being of our students," Hughes said.

Pre-K teacher Louise Frazier said the badges not only help parents identify staff members, but they help the children as well.

"My students are 4-year-olds. If they get lost or disoriented in the school, I've taught them to look for someone wearing a badge," Frazier said.

Staff members wear their badges attached to long neck bands emblazoned with the acronym T.E.A.M. This stands for "Together Everyone Achieves More."

"This is really indicative of the team spirit that prevails here at Stowers. We're working together not only to achieve more in the areas of academics, but also to keep our school a secure place," Hughes said.

Troubled marriages don't necessarily spell divorce

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

You may be facing one of the most difficult decisions of your life. Your marriage is on the brink and is in deep trouble and you must choose between staying together or getting a divorce.

There exists no magical formula for making this decision and far too often a decision like this is made solely on an emotional level. The trouble with emotions is that they have the consistency of Silly Putty.

I have been asked on many occasions why I am so adamant in my opposition to divorce. I am one of six children and the only one of those six who is still married to his or her first and only spouse. I hate divorce.

The U.S. Census Bureau provides us a sad historical backdrop to what has become a national disgrace:

• In 1900, 1 divorce for every 10 marriages.

• In 1920, 1 divorce for every 7 marriages.

• In 1940, 1 divorce for every 6 marriages.

•In 1960, 1 divorce for every 4 marriages.

• In 1972, 1 divorce for every 3 marriages.

• In 1976, 1 divorce for every 2 marriages.

Rupel

And according to the latest statistics (1995) the rate of divorce has increased to nearly 52 percent of all first-time marriages ending in divorce.

Is there any reason why I should not be concerned, even appalled?

Given all this, is there any hope for a couple whose marriage is heading down the slippery slope to a divorce? Yes! There are two choices you and your spouse have: Proceed with your plans for a divorce or decide that you will remain married and attempt to resolve your problems. Let me say this at this juncture, there is no problem so great that God isn't greater.

The implications of divorce are so vast that most couples don't even stop to understand their decision for divorcing.

Don't proceed with a divorce until you and your spouse have sought the help of a chaplain, pastor or a trained marriage counselor.

The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can provide you with such help in your decision-making process. For more information, call the Family Life Center at 545-2050.

Seasons offer time of renewal, hope

Chaplain (Maj.) T. Blake Bowers
Martin Army Community Hospital

reflections

Ecclesiastes 3:1 "There is a time for everything, and a season for every activity under heaven."

We have experienced a historic event. Not only did we pass a century, we also passed a millennium. A time and a season has passed. We start another with new dreams and goals.

Each of you remembers some individual joy, tragedy or triumph or difficult time in your life. Perhaps a family death and the comfort of God's almighty arms. The welcome of a new child into the family and the voices of praise and thanksgiving that went heavenward, or the destruction of a treasured heirloom and God's grace or the blessing from God of a gift of rare value.

In all this time God has been present with you through all your times and seasons. Season means an appointed time, an appointed occasion. Time in this passage means the usual time.

Both give the sense of order and regularity from one event to another. Yet in our times God gives us choices. We should know also that God ordains the ways of man and arranges the details of our life. Both in the context of the big picture and individually. There is nothing we can do to stop being born and dying. Laughter and sorrow will go on. The events of tearing down and building up will go on and so forth.

The events or circumstances might be different but we go through some common experiences. Everything comes in its turn. Yet not everything lasts forever. God is with us through all times as he has been with saints before us in their times and seasons. God has ordained these times and seasons for you and me. Time will move on. We will have other events occur in our life.

Will we grow in our faith from them? Will we use our time and our season wisely and not squander it away on unholy time? As you reflect on your time, your season, use it to learn and grow, drawing you closer to Almighty God.

"And in the morning, a great while before day, he rose and went out to a lonely place, and there he prayed."
— Mark 11:25

Participants in the 20th Annual Girl Scout Cookie Run take to the rain-soaked road during the 5K event.

Girl Scout Cookie Run kicks off

Racers turn out for 20th annual run despite rain, cold

Spc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Neither rain nor a 19-degree windchill was enough to keep close to 150 runners away from the 20th annual Girl Scout Cookie run Saturday.

Runners both young and old alike gathered at Columbus State University to participate in the 5K and 1.5K races, paying no mind to the frigid temperatures and pouring rain.

For Chuck Walls, Fort Benning Garrison manager and race participant, the cookie run is a tradition he has upheld for the last seven years that not even the rain could interrupt.

Walls said that while it was tempting to stay home, the Girls Scouts is a great program to support and the run gives him the perfect opportunity to get out and exercise during the winter.

> "I love this race. This is like the wintertime-keep-you-in-shape race."
> — Chuck Walls
> Girl Scout race participant

"I love this race," Walls said. "This is like the wintertime-keep-you-in-shape race. To make sure your're still running during the winter months."

Despite the less than ideal weather conditions, Rosie Fuentez, race director, said they had an impressive turn out with almost all preregisters showing up to run. Fuentez described the race as a way to "herald in the cookies." The cookie sale is one of the biggest fundraiser events for the Girl Scouts.

She said Girl Scouts start taking orders in January and the cookies arrive in February. After that the Girl Scouts set up booths around the community at such places as Walmart.

"This is just our way of letting the public know the cookies are coming and a way to get the community involved," Fuentez said.

The top three men in the 5K race were John Detro of Fort Benning in first place time of 16:43, Brian Eifler of Columbus in second with 17:05 and Bob Evans of La Grange, Ga., in third with a time of 18:18.

The top female runners were Laura Mayar of Phenix City in first with a time of 20:43, Amy Maresca of Fort Benning took second with a time of 22:29 and Stacey Judge of Columubs in third with a time of 23:53.

In the 1.5K race, the top female winners were Bryn Crawford of Auburn, Ala., with a time of 9:45 in first, Fern Lasseter of Columbus in second with 11:29 and Sally Lassiter of Columbus in third with a time of 12:18. The top male winners were Keith Maresca of Fort Benning in first with a time of 8:08, Don Cleveland of West Point, Ga., with a time of 8:58 in second and Garrett White of Columbus in third with a time of 10:54.

Amicalola Falls offers adventure

Spc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If you've lived in Georgia for any amount of time and haven't made your way up north, I advise you to get cracking.

outdoor corner

While almost all of Georgia offers something beautiful, in my opinion nothing beats the northern part. The Appalachian Mountains provide an abundance of opportunities for just about any outdoor adventure you can think of.

On a recent trip up north, I had an experience of a lifetime when I made a stop at the beautiful Amicalola Falls State Park just in time to see it snow.

Amicalola Falls is a great place whether it be just for a day or an extended stay. Like most state parks there are picnic sites, playgrounds and plenty of trails. If you want to stay awhile you have your choice of primitive to standard campgrounds, RV and trailer sites and cottages. For those who prefer posh over primitive there is also a 57-room lodge located at the top of the mountain.

However, Amicalola isn't your average park. Not only does it offer a 729-foot waterfall, the highest in Georgia, but it has an eight-mile approach trail to the southern terminus of the famous Appalachian Trail.

During my first visit to the park my friend and I drove to the top of the falls and took plenty of pictures. The extent of our exploring was a one-mile hike down the mountain and then back up again.

It was my second trip where I made a more rigorous venture and had the time of my life doing so.

My friend made the suggestion that we hike the beginning of the Appalachian Trail. Of course, that was before we realized we had to go eight miles just to get there. So, instead we settled on a five-mile hike up to a place called the Lenn Foote Hike Inn.

As soon as we got to our starting point we received a big surprise when the skies opened up and unleashed a flurry of snow. Being the northerner that I am, I was more than excited to see snow and couldn't wait to get on the trail.

The scenery of the trail coupled with the snow created an almost "winter wonderland" like atmosphere. However, even without snow the woods were unlike any I've seen before.

Each mile brought on a new and different texture that made every step exciting and beautiful. I never knew what was coming next. The landscape would change from compact areas of dense growth and overhang to wide open spaces with huge, lumbering trees. There were also plenty of mini-bridges and trickling streams to add to the experience.

I was captivated the entire five-miles and before I knew it we had made our way to the Hike Inn.

We stopped at the inn to rest and grab a cup of hot cocoa and I couldn't believe how neat it was. A sort of rustic, homey place, it is Georgia's only backcountry inn. It is a perfect place for people who love to hike and explore nature, but can do without sleeping in a tent.

After talking with the people who ran the place we opted to complete a loop trail to our starting point rather than go back the way we came. The loop would add about 1.5 more miles to the hike, but since we were feeling good we decided to go for the gusto.

In all honesty the trip back was a little less exciting partly because the dry and fluffy snow had turned to partial sleet and around the ninth mile I started to feel every inch of the trek. But once we made it back I couldn't get over how amazing the entire trip was. I had just gone nearly 12-miles in snow, rain and sleet and still had a great time.

When you go to Amicalola I suggest doing the Lenn Foote Hike Inn Trail. The trail is perfect for both beginning and advanced hikers. Maps are available from the lodge at the bottom of the mountain that highlight points of interest and trace the exact route.

You can get to Amicalola Falls by taking Georgia Highway 400 north out of Atlanta. After about 45 minutes you will see signs directing you how to get there. Park hours are Monday through Sunday 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. A $2 state parks parking pass is required.

Bulldogs and Redbulls go head-to-head in YS action

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet

Youth Services basketball action moved to a new location Saturday. A defective heating system forced the hoopsters to seek shelter at Kelley Hill's Kefurt Gymnasium.

Otherwise, it was business as usual for the 8- to 9-year-old division, as the Bulldogs bull-dozed the Redbulls, 25-14.

Although the teams were well matched offensively, the Bulldog defense out-maneuvered, out-hustled, and out-lasted their opponents.

The Redbulls trailed the entire game, holding the margin to a narrow five points during the first two quarters. A third-quarter show of nonstop, aggressive defense tired the Redbulls, and, by the fourth, the Dogs held a strong 10-point lead.

"It was our hustle that won it for us," said Jordan Goodman, forward.

Assistant coach Tony Toliver credited the win to team cooperation

"We have a good team that always works well together. They did what seems to come natural to them," said Toliver. "They played team ball."

Kevin Toliver, guard, lead the Bulldogs with eight points. Center Cory Bush scored six to lead the Redbulls.

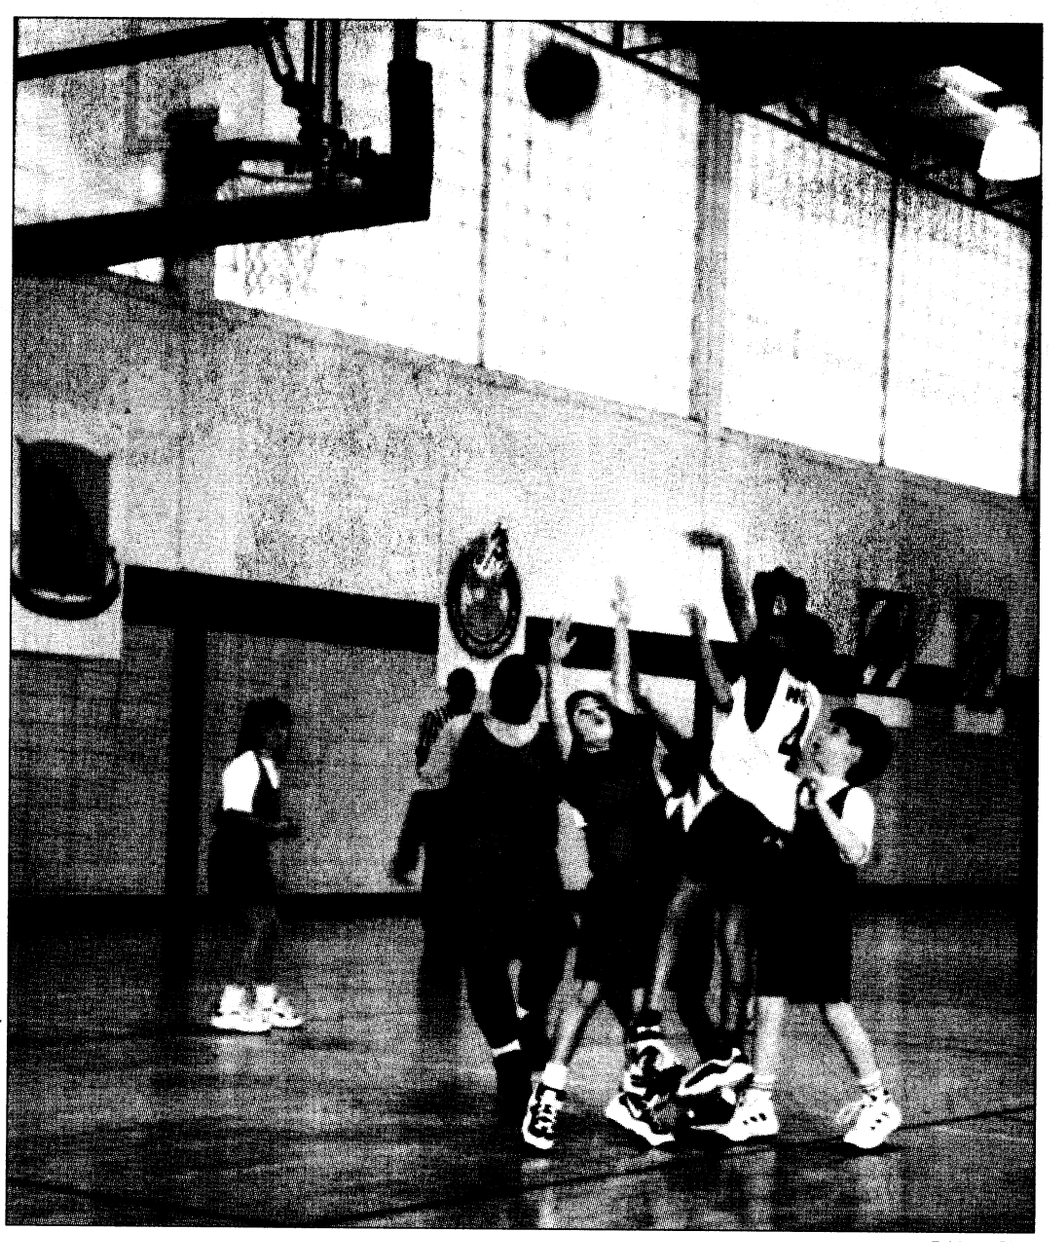
The 4-1 Bulldogs will face the Tigers Saturday at 10:45a.m. in the Kefurt Gymnasium.

In other basketball league action in the 6- to 7-year-old division the Dream Team fell to the Blue Bulls, 10-12. Corey Saunders of the Blue Bulls scored half the teams points with 6, while Dream Teamer Jeffrey Sykes put in 8.

The Black Bulls trampled the Tigers, 12-5. Tre Powell helped seal the victory for the Black Bulls with 6 points and Chase Holbrook was top scorer for the Tigers with 3.

In 8- to 9-year-old play, with the help of an impressive 18 points by Kahlee Tyler the Lakers manged to sink the Magics, 39-11. Raishaun Bennett came out as top scorer for the Magics with 4 points.

The Tigers and the Green Tigers went head-to-head and came out even both scoring 24 points. Anthony Wright helped the Tigers along with 13 points, while James Braddy threw up 18 for the Green Tigers.



In the 10- to 12-year-old division the Ruff Ryders drove over the Magics, 38-6. Walter Mcgee helped lead his team to the victory with 10 points.

The Blazers were defeated by the Tarheals, 25-8. Tamisha McFadden scored 4 for the Blazers while Courtland Akinloye tossed up 6 for the Tarheels.

The Knicks and the 76ers took to the court with the 76ers coming out on top with a score of 43-27. Anthony Lacour was lead scorer for the Knicks with 18 points as was Shaw Xavier for the 76ers with 16 points.

The Blue Devils and the Ballers in the 13- to 15-year-old division battled it out with the Blue Devils beating the Ballers, 41-31. Brandon Smith of the Ballers was top scorer with 11 points.

The 76ers nixed the Hornets, 48-39 with Ryan Roberts helping his team to the victory with 15 points and Earnest Tyler giving it his all for the Hornets with 14 points.

NRMB needs information

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Post deer hunters do more than harvest deer in a season, they help wildlife managers track the deer population.

Hunters supply much of the biological data on the post deer population by turning in deer permits or "kill cards" at the end of the season, said Pete Swiderek, post Fish and Wildlife supervisor, Natural Resource Management Branch, Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Public Works.

"The card only takes a few minutes to fill out, but it helps us keep track of the number of animals taken," Swiderek said.

That is, of course if hunters turn in their card, he added. Hunters who don't turn in kill cards by Feb. 15 run the risk of having hunting privileges suspended for a year.

The card, which is issued with every post hunting license purchase, allows hunters to record where and when they killed a deer. They also track the gender and weight of the deer. That, in turn, provides wildlife managers with important information about the habits of post deer, and consequently, the number of deer to be harvested the following year.

USAMU shooter wins Soldier of Year title

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A shooter with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit has won her third major Army title for 1999.

Julie A. Goloski, a member of the U.S. Army Action Shooting Team, was named as the 1999 Military Marksmanship Association Soldier of the Year.

She also recently wont the titles of Army Female Athlete of the Year and the Army Marksmanship Unit Female Shooter of the Year for 1999.

The Military Marksmanship Association, formerly called the Army Marksmanship Unit Association is the official alumni association of the Army Marksmanship Unit. The Marksmanship Association chose Goloski from a group of nine Soldiers who were nominated.

Goloski

Other nominees were: Kenneth A. Johnson, the 1999 U.S. Army Male Athlete of the Year; Troy A. Bassham, a 1999 Military World Games Gold Medalist; Sgt. Armando R. Ayala, 1999 USA Shooting Running Target Shooter of the Year; Theresa E. DeWitt, 1999 Women's National Double Trap Champion; Shawn C. Dulohery, 1999 National Skeet Champion, Lewis A. Tippie, 1999 Interservice Rifle Champion; Adam E. Sokolowski, 1999 National Junior Pistol Champion; and Charles P. Gartland, 1999 Pan-American Games Pistol Gunsmith.

Goloski was presented the Soldier of the Year Award by retired Col. Mac Johnson, Military Marksmanship Association president at the association's annual meeting Saturday at Fort Benning's Pool International Shooting Complex.

The prize was a .22-caliber match pistol donated by Smith & Wesson engraved with her name.

"Being named Soldier of the Year by the legends who have made the Army Marksmanship Unit an elite unit is an extreme honor," Goloski said. "Competition for the award was so fierce this year as the unit had one of its most successful years.

"It brings me great pride to work with such great champions and to bring home the gold to the U.S. Army," she added.

Goloski was the 1999 Women's World Speed Shooting Champion, as well as the 1999 Open and Limited U.S. Practical Shooting Association Women's National Champion.

She was also this year's Military Division Gold Medalist and Female Silver Medalist at the Bianchi cup, as well as winning gold medals at the Single Stack Classic, Kentucky State Championships, and the Golden Gate and Aware Invitationals.

"Through her determination, hard work and dedication, Julie has become the best female action shooter in the nation as demonstrated by her many achievements this year," said USAMU Action Pistol Team Coach Ray Arredondo. "She won nearly every match in which she competed, something no other American female action shooter has ever done. She also keeps informed of the latest trends and developments to ensure that she is on the cutting edge of technology in her sport."

When she's not competing, Goloski trains U.S. Army rangers in pistol shooting to prepare them for the annual Best Ranger Competition, as well as doing numerous public appearances and media interviews to assist the Army's recruiting mission.

Hunters help control swine

Pigs feeding habits pose threat to environment

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

> "The smaller pigs are really good to eat."
> — Jim Graham
> Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club assistant manager

Fort Benning hunters now have a year-round open season for feral swine.

Because of a rapidly growing population, the pigs are becoming a problem to the environment.

"They feed by rooting, taking their nose and dislodging the ground cover and dirt, and in some areas we have sensitive, rare plants that are being disturbed," said Pete Swiderek, Fish and Wildlife supervisor for Natural Resource Management Branch of Environmental Management Program for Director of Public Works.

The hogs can also have a serious impact the creeks and streams.

"With the ground loosened, erosion from the rain and wind can result in sedimentation and the silting of the streams that will lower the quality of the water," he said.

The pigs not only impact vegetation, but they have a serious impact on humans, especially Soldiers who are training.

"We had one situation where pigs were rooting in a drop zone, and that's not good. Soldiers don't want to land in a hole a foot and a half deep," Swiderek said.

The damage also includes rooting up some target cables on Carmouche Range, as well as tearing up some of the ground near the Main Post Bowling Alley.

Their numbers along with their digging habits is really what causes the extensive damage.

"If they are eating well they can have up to two litters per year with six or seven piglets in each litter," Swiderek said.

Having been deemed a pest, feral swine are now added to the post hunting regulations for animal management.

"I hunt them for the meat," said Jim Graham, Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club assistant manager whose choice of weapon is a .50 caliber black powder rifle.

"The smaller pigs are really good to eat," he said.

Hunting the pigs for meat isn't the only reason that people pursue the animals.

"They compete with the deer for food," Graham explained. "I hunt them to help out the deer."

Swiderek agreed that the hogs had an impact on the deer.

"Hogs pretty much eat anything. Dead or alive, (they eat) snakes, lizards, rats, roots, grass, bugs, nuts and berries," he said.

Hunting the swine does have a health risk.

"There are two diseases that (the pigs) are particularly known for, and they are tseudorabies and brucellosis," Swiderek said.

"Brucellosis is a bacterial disease that people can contract. We advise people to always wear plastic gloves when field dressing the pigs," he said.

New budget returns mixed reviews

Clinton calls for military pay hike, boosts in spending

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Washington's top military officials were offered a mixed bag of benefits Monday when President Clinton announced his proposed final budget — one that directs a purse of more than $291 billion in the direction of the Department of Defense.

Clinton's promised bag of budget benefits includes everything from a 3.7 percent pay hike for Soldiers and DoD civilians to a revamping of the ailing medical system aimed at boosting benefits for both active-duty troops and retirees.

But the increase in defense department spending that exceeds last year's budget by more than $13 billion has some local officials skeptical on the reality of the Clinton budget becoming final.

"The president's proposed budget is irresponsible," said Doug Graham, a spokesperson for Rep. Mac Collins late Wednesday evening. "The budget proposes 84 new programs and billions of dollars in new spending, not to mention a doubling of payroll taxes."

The budget, which Graham said Clinton based on a false premise of a government surplus, does have a silver lining for America's men and women in the armed services.

"Representative Collins is in favor of the budget's boost to defense spending aimed at bettering the quality of life for servicemen and women and giving them the means to fight and win wars," he said. "I am sure Mac will ensure that remains true as the budget is voted upon in the upcoming weeks."

As the vote nears, Fort Benning Soldiers will have to wait and see if the $39.8 million slated for the post's barracks project and airfield addition will actually make their way to the final budget this fall, but post officials are confident that the money will materialize.

The funding for the second phase of the Kelley Hill barracks project and the addition of a fixed wing aircraft hangar at Lawson Army Airfield are in line to Soldiers from 3rd Brigade participate in 3rd Infantry Division's annual training exercise, Marne Focus. The exercise began late last month at Fort Stewart and will continue through the end of the month.

Troops deploy for training

3rd Brigade trains at Fort Stewart during Marne Focus

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The red Georgia clay of Fort Stewart's training areas were spotted with tan tanks and smoke Sunday when elements of 3rd Brigade rolled onto the ranges as part of this year's 3rd Infantry Division's annual training exercise, Marne Focus.

The exercise, which enlisted the efforts of more than 3,000 of Fort Benning's Soldiers and their armored equipment, began late last month in the swampy sands of Fort Stewart and will wrap up at the end of February, brigade officials said.

"This allows us to put together plans and coordinate efforts in a real-world type environment," said 1st Lt. Joshua Doscinski, C Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment. "It gives a lot of these people a first time together to actually operate as a team."

Operating as a team is what the elements found to be the key to success early Sunday morning when the group faced off against themselves in a tactical maneuver designed to build teamwork and coordination between the tank crewman and the Bradley crews tackling the situation.

The scenario set half of the group as the opposition force attempting to defend a territorial dispute with the other half as the aggressors.

But how can these Soldiers safely play war with their colleagues without bullets? The same way they did as when they were kids — with cap guns.

Only this time those cap guns have been replaced by M1-A1 Abrams tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles outfitted with blank ammunition and multiple integrated laser engagement systems.

"Except for the fact that there are trees everywhere, this is about as real-world as it gets," said Staff Sgt. James O'Mailey, 4th Battalion, 64th Armor Regiment, Fort Stewart. "We try to make the best of it, realizing this land isn't exactly like the contingency we would probably be facing in the desert.

"But we make do with what we have," he said. "You will never know exactly what you would do during the real thing, but any type of training is good."

That training impact, O'Mailey said, is

Woman hails Soldier as hero

Specialist returns money found in parking lot

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

A Soldier's good deed, honesty and integrity made him a hero to a Columbus woman.

Helen Edwards recovered a lot of money when a Soldier did the right thing.

Helen was going to Martin Army Community Hospital for an appointment when she dropped her purse. A large sum of money, her credit cards and her identification were in it.

Spc. Cornelius Bennett, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, had a medical appointment the same day.

Bennett was walking through the hospital parking lot and saw the purse lying by the curb.

A fish market in Seattle, Wash., is helping Martin Army Community Hospital employees learn about hospitality.

How can medical personnel relate to fishmongers?

The answer is simple — customers are customers no matter where the locale.

Every employee of the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity is required to take a four-hour hospitality course. MACH started offering the class to its 1,238 employees Jan. 24.

The training includes a video tape showing how the owner of Pike Place Fish Company changed employees' attitudes, as well as how

New Army vision becomes reality

Brigade plan focuses on organization

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Teamwork has been the catalyst throughout the Infantry School in transforming Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki's vision of a modern full-spectrum force into a working prototype.

"This really has been a team effort on the part of all the key members of the Infantry School staff," Col. Jim Stone, director of the Directorate of Combat Developments, said.

The Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, Directorate of Operations and Training, Office of Infantry Proponency, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, 29th Infantry Regiment and the Ranger Training Brigade are all contributing to the Initial Brigade Combat Team.

"In order to move this initiative forward, it has taken the involvement of all of these people," Stone said.

Initial efforts centered on the "organization and operation" of the brigade.

"That has taken a tremendous amount of work to get the squads right and the platoons right to make sure we have the right structure, the right numbers of people, the right kinds of MOSs and the right kind of equipment."

The brigade will have two core qualities — mobility and the ability to achieve decisive combat action through dismounted Infantry assault.

"It's essentially an Infantry brigade. Our main watchword has been to ensure that it was capable of executing Infantry-intensive tasks," Stone said.

The planners started with the Airborne or Air Assault Infantry organization as the base, and added personnel, weapons and equipment to enhance mobility, lethality and force protection.

Two brigades at Fort Lewis, Wash., are being transformed into the initial brigades, and Shinseki has said that the first will be operationally capable by December of 2001.

The initial brigade organization includes:

- Three Infantry battalions of three companies each
- Reconnaissance Surveillance, and Target Acquisition squadron consisting of three RSTA troops and a Sensor troop with a Unmanned Aerial Vehicle, Nuclear Biological Chemical Recon Platoon, and a Ground Surveillance Radar Platoon
- 1 Anti-tank company
- 1 Field artillery battalion
- 1 Engineer company
- Brigade support battalion
- Military intelligence company
- Signal company

BCT units will be equipped with Interim Armored Vehicles (IAVs) to enhance their tactical and operational mobility and provide better protection for the Soldiers.

"The purpose of the vehicle is

commentary

On a rainy Friday evening, in a tiny chapel in Florida, surrounded by a small group of family and friends, Tom and I promised to love, honor and cherish one another for all our lives.

And then there was that part about forsaking all others. The honeymoon was barely over when Tom packed his bags and ran off to join the Army. I went back to Momma in Indiana for the 16 weeks it took him to complete basic training and AIT.

We were just a couple of kids. We were certainly too young to understand the realities of a life-time commitment — to each other or the Army. When they said it wouldn't last, I was never really sure if they were talking about the marriage or the career.

This Valentine's Day, we will celebrate 14 years of marriage. We've spent many of those anniversaries, especially the earlier ones, separated by military miles. And we were often too broke to give those that we spent together more than a cursory celebration. Funny how those memories remain the sweetest.

Like the first anniversary we spent in Fort Drum. February in Watertown has absolutely no redeeming qualities. Despite the three-foot snow drifts, we dressed up in our finest, and headed to Ontario, hoping to dance til dawn in the fanciest night club we knew. I think we circled the dance floor one time before my morning sickness (what a misnomer!) put an end to the evening. There's nothing romantic about nausea.

There was the time Tom saved enough of his paycheck to surprise me with a dozen roses. He somehow sweet-talked his way into the back room of the florist and hand-picked a dozen tea roses, my favorite, in 12 different shades. There were pink, red, yellow, white, peach, — even orange and purple. I've received many bouquets since then, but none has ever meant more to me than that rainbow of tiny roses.

And there was the anniversary I spent alone, sitting on our front porch, listing the reasons I was glad I had married him. Never mind that I was all alone on Valentine's Day, again. Never mind that I was all alone on my anniversary, again. As I put it all on paper, I realized I wouldn't change a thing.

For every tearful good-bye, we've had a happy reunion. For every friend we've waved farewell to, two more have taken his place. For every home we've left behind, just when I've finished decorating, there's a new one waiting for just the right touch. And for every time Tom has missed one of the kids' birthdays, he's turned an ordinary day into one of celebration.

So when I said I'd do it all over again, he took me at my word. Tomorrow night, surrounded by a small group of friends, old and new, we'll renew our vows. This time the kids will be there. The church is different. Maybe the sun will shine. But the commitment remains the same. Come what may, we'll head blissfully ignorant into the next 14 years. Happy anniversary Tom. Looks like we made it.

Thievery goes beyond material possessions

Lori Egan

commentary

A thief is a thief is a thief. Strong words from Lt. Col. Terry Kelley with the Directorate of Public Safety.

It's not a break-in at the post exchange or commissary that has the chief of the Law Enforcement Division concerned but parking at these locations.

Reserved parking spaces are the issue, and people who park in reserved spaces are inconsiderate, Kelley said.

People who illegally or wrongly park in reserved spaces are thieves. They are taking something that is not theirs to take.

Handicap parking spaces are reserved spaces.

A year ago when I was in Idaho, I drove into the parking lot of a small town's grocery store. The two handicap parking spaces were closest to the entrance on the side of the building. On the outer wall of the grocery store was a pay phone. As I was getting out of my car, the driver of a four-door pickup truck for a construction firm pulled into both of the reserved handicap parking spots. The driver jumped out of the illegally parked truck and went to use the pay phone. My jaw hit the ground. I was simply amazed at this man's audacity and lack of courtesy. Then because I stared at him as I walked across the parking lot, he stopped his phone conversation and started cursing at me.

What a creep! Luckily for me my daughter was with me and I didn't sink to this man's level of boorish behavior.

When I told my mother of this incident she said, "Lori, you are not in the Army any more. You're not at Fort Benning and people carry guns in their cars. You're lucky he just cursed and didn't shoot you."

Well she is right, I'm not in the Army any more, but I am back at Fort Benning where parking illegally in a handicap parking spot can cost upward to $500. And if the person elects to contest the ticket in federal magistrate court, court costs of an additional $25 are added to the bill if they are found guilty.

That is a lot of money for the convenience of parking closer to the building.

When talking about parking in undeserved reserved parking spots, Kelley said people should think about how they'd feel if they were entitled to reserved parking and someone else parked in it.

One time when I was walking into Infantry Hall past the rows of reserved parking, I noticed a car blocked in by another car. The blocked car had a note on it, instructing the owner to report to the person whose space was reserved.

I'm just betting that wasn't a pleasant conversation for the person who parked in an undeserved parking spot.

There's a reason parking places are reserved. It's so handicapped and other deserving people can be assured convenient parking. And while it may not be a crime to be inconsiderate, morally it's still a crime to be a thief.

A fabric woven and stitched from a single thread would be a tapestry with no texture and of little intrinsic value. It would be functional, perhaps, but weaker and of little consequence next to a piece blending yarns and threads of different colors, weights and lengths.

The people whose lives and deeds making up the tapestry our country is today are like those different threads. Some of their lines are broad and bright, unmistakable mileposts marking their gifts to the threads woven in after. Other threads are not so wide, their colors muted, but still irreplaceable in the grand scheme of a master weaver. To remove even one would damage and weaken the whole.

This month we celebrate Black History Month. Contributions from African-Americans affect all Americans.

In tribute, THE BAYONET has chosen 12 African-Americans whose gifts touch all Americans.

Not all of the 12 are household names, not all of their actions were earth shaking; but each, in his or her own way, added to the world we live in today.

Can you match the American with the deed?

1 A conductor on the "Underground Railroad," she also served as a spy and scout for the Union Army during the Civil War between 1862 and 1865.

2 After emancipation, he worked in West Virginia coal mines, attending school when he could. He went on to graduate from Hampton Institute in 1875, and went on to found the Tuskegee Normal School in Alabama.

3 Educator, political advisor, civil rights leader and founder of the Daytona Normal and Industrial Institute for Negro Girls. Founded a teaching hospital bearing her name which grew to a college. Served two terms as president of the National Association of Colored Women and advised the Coolidge and Hoover administrations on issues affecting African Americans.

4 First African American to serve as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom at retirement.

5 A landmark setting lawyer and one of history's great judicial figures. Served as chief counsel for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund. Argued 32 civil rights cases before the Supreme Court, winning 29, to include Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Kan., which ended segregation in public schools. First African American on the Supreme Court.

6 Inventor and businessman who invented and patented a "safety hood and smoke protector." In 1916 he led a team of volunteers wearing his "gas masks" and rescued 32 workmen who had been trapped in a tunnel 250 feet under Lake Erie. Also patented an automatic traffic signal. He sold the technology to General Electric for $40,000.

7 One of the first heroes of the war in the Pacific. A Navy mess attendant at Pearl Harbor, he had never been trained to fire a machine gun because of Navy segregation policies. During the Dec. 7 attack, he abandoned the galley and manned a machine gun on deck. He is officially credited with downing two enemy planes, and witnesses have said he downed as many as six. He was awarded the Navy Cross for "distinguished devotion to duty, extreme courage, and disregard for his own personal safety during the attack."

8 Anti-lynching leader, teacher, suffragist, journalist, speaker. Part owner and editor of the Memphis Free Speech and Headlight. Sued and won her case against a railroad for forcefully removing her from a segregated ladies' coach. Wrote "Southern Horrors: Lynch Law in All Its Phases." Was one of two black women to sign the call for forming the NAACP.

9 Probably the most prolific female African-American authors of the century, she wrote seven books and 50 shorter works with topics ranging from an autobiography to folklore, music and mythology.

10 Discovered processes for preserving blood for transfusions. Was appointed to the faculty of Howard University and was appointed head of surgery. During World War II, was appointed head of the National Blood Bank program. He resigned from that position because of the government policy mandating that blood only be given to patients of the same race as the blood donor's. Went on to serve as chief of surgery at Freedmen's Hospital in Washington, D.C.

What is the most romantic way you've celebrated Valentine's Day?

Belle Poppenberger, family member — "My husband and I went and saw Phantom of the Opera in Austin, Texas. And we had dinner in an Italian restaurant. It was the best Valentine's Day ever."

Pfc. Christopher Fones, B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry — "The best Valentine's Day ever was when I prepared a candlelight dinner for my wife. I cooked her a medium rare steak (her favorite), sauteed mushrooms, baked potato and served chilled wine."

Capt. Cecil Henry, B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Two years ago when I got back from NTC, a friend baby-sat our son for my wife and I so we could spend the entire night alone. We had a candlelight dinner."

Spc. Ronda Bryan, 14th Military Police Brigade, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. — "Four years ago, when I was in Atlanta, I was serenaded. The song was Always and Forever and I've never forgotten that Valentine's Day."

Jo Grub, family member — "The most romantic Valentine's Day was when we were in Italy. My husband bought me a dozen red roses, which are very expensive in Italy, and took me to a very fancy restaurant."

Post gathers for Black History celebration

Luncheon honors advancements of minority leaders

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet ©

"Celebrating Black History" was the theme of the Black History Month luncheon at the Fort Benning Officers' Club on Tuesday. More than 400 Soldiers and civilians gathered for the ceremony which was sponsored by the USAIC Equal Opportunity Office.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New called the event "a time of sincere appreciation for African-American history." New said the celebration of Black History Month is an opportunity to focus on what we have in common as human beings and to see ourselves through the eyes of God.

"It is good to remember the many contributions of black Americans to the history of the United States. Each of us can learn from, and be proud of, those who are reaching their potential," New said.

Students from the Spencer High School African American Dance Group performed choreographed steps to West African music. Wearing traditional African dress, they led the audience in singing "Lift Every Voice and Sing," the African-American National Anthem.

The 4th Street Baptist Mime Group received a standing ovation for their performance of "The Battle is Not Yours." In white face paint, the troupe dramatized the black spiritual based on a speech by Martin Luther King Jr.

Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, Deputy Commanding General and assistant commandant, U.S. Army Infantry Center, cautioned Soldiers and civilians alike to avoid becoming cynical in their efforts to combat racism on a day-to-day basis.

"If there's cynicism out there, it needs to be worked through so that folks understand there is still work to be done. We do not want to go back to the old way," Eaton said.

Eaton introduced the guest speaker, Brig. Gen. Dorian T. Anderson, Commanding General, Joint Task Force Six, as "no stranger to Fort Benning." Before being assigned to the Joint Task Force, Anderson was the Commander of the Ranger Training Brigade at Fort Benning.

"I'm delighted to be back home. You don't know how good you have it here until you leave. It is an honor to be asked to speak at this event," Anderson said.

Anderson lauded the contributions of black leaders throughout history and challenged black Americans to rise to the standards set before them by leaders such as Martin Luther King Jr. and Harriet Tubman.

"Where are we in our efforts? How far have we come? The challenge is clear. We have more opportunities than ever before in the new millennium. We need to segregate ourselves from the things that are destroying us and our human potential. We need to free ourselves from the very things that are returning us to slavery — things like drugs and the erosion of the family structure," Anderson said.

Anderson said that the answer to today's problems with racial and social inequality can be found in the past.

"We must seize the moral high ground and rediscover family values. Through scientific advancement we have created a world-wide neighborhood. Now we need to create a world-wide brotherhood."

Class: Reinforces hospitality

they treated customers and each other.

People started pouring into the business, and their success is designed to motivate others.

The instructors keep the fish theme alive in the class by decorating the conference room with fish, snacking on goldfish crackers and throwing "beanie" fish around for fun.

The customer service training has been mandated by the Surgeon General of the Army.

"First, it has to do with our mission of providing good health care and customer service to Soldiers, family members and retirees," Terry Beckwith, public affairs officer, Martin Army Community Hospital, said.

"Secondly, we have to think of the future of our hospital," she said. "Without our patients we wouldn't be here."

Beckwith and six other members of the MACH staff were trained at Madigan Medical Center in Seattle and are now giving the classes every Tuesday and Thursday morning.

And everyone — doctors, nurses, pharmacy personnel, clerical workers, housekeepers, etc. — is required to attend.

"From the commander on down," Beckwith said.

"The intent of this initiative is to improve the customer relations skills of all health care and administrative staff throughout the Army Medical Department," Beckwith said.

"Quality customer service brings our patients back again and again, because they know we care," she said.

Customer service is "critical due to the financial incentives inherent in enrollment-based capitation funding that our military treatment facilities may operate under in the future," she said.

Under enrollment-based capitation, military treatment facilities will receive a set amount per person enrolled in Tricare Prime starting with the 2001 budget. Satisfied patients are more likely to enroll in the Prime program at MACH.

"Our goal is to keep our active-duty family members and retirees coming back to our facility because they have the option to go somewhere else," Beckwith said.

Carolyn Bradley, MACH patient representative, is an instructor.

"Those who attend go away with a sense that the patient is why we are here, and that's why we have a job, and we need to find a way to let patients know they are important to us," Bradley said.

"We become complacent because we've done the job over and over again," Bradley said.

The equipment and technology found throughout the hospital often confuse patients, along with knowing how the appointment or referral systems work.

"We should take the time, slow down, and explain the procedure to the patient," Bradley said.

Maj. Wanda Scott, executive officer with the Healthcare Management Division, agreed that personnel often hear the same questions throughout the day.

"But when it comes down to happening to you, it doesn't matter what your knowledge base is, it becomes very personal."

While some personnel may balk at attending a four-hour class on "manners," Scott has found that evaluations received from MEDDAC employees have been positive.

"We were not willing to just put a program out there to punch a ticket," Scott said. "We wanted it to make a difference, not only in our patients' lives, but also in our own personal lives."

The instructors will travel to the 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega and the Dear Clinic at Anniston Army Depot, Ala., to teach the class to the medics and civilian personnel there.

Once all workers have taken the four-hour session, they will be required to attend an annual refresher course, Beckwith said.

"I didn't know what it was ... I thought it could have been a bomb or something so I reached over with my foot and opened it," Bennett said.

After finding out who the Soldier was who found and returned her purse, Helen wanted to thank her hero. So her husband Leland, a retired major, started calling around.

Helen said she really wanted Bennett's good deed to be recognized.

During an awards presentation, Helen met her hero, and Bennett was awarded a unit coin from his brigade commander, Col. Frank Helmick, and a hug of appreciation from Helen.

Helen said, "He didn't have to turn (my purse) in, but he did what was right and that is why he is my hero."

Officials hope programs will right recruiting woes

New approaches will recruit college students, dropouts

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

In an effort to boost recruiting, the Army announced last week the launch of two new pilot programs aimed at assisting high school dropouts and college-bound students.

The programs are expected to bolster the Army's ailing recruiting program, a system that fell nearly 6,300 troops short in 1999.

The programs, GED Plus and College First, are aimed at enticing more troops into the pool of potential Soldiers making the possibility of reaching recruiting goals a real possibility.

"We are interested in expanding recruiting markets by identifying larger segments of populations with indicators of retention and trainability," said Lt. Col Harold Hardrick, commander, Atlanta Recruiting Battalion. "Today's force requires highly motivated, skilled Soldiers to maintain readiness — these programs serve those needs."

GED Plus, the Army's High School Completion Program, will send nearly 6,000 non-high school graduates to take the General Education Development (GED) test at government expense in hopes of the drop out passing the test and enlisting in the Army.

While the GED program may lure interested individuals into recruiting stations, Dave Foster, chief public affairs official for the Atlanta battalion, said perspective Soldiers attempting to enlist under the blanket of the new program will face more stringent standards than high school graduates.

GED Plus enlistees will have to initially take an Assessment of Individual Motivation and return a minimum score of 46 out of 100. If a passing score is logged, it is on to the standardized military entrance exam, the Armed Service Vocational Aptitude Battery where the enlistee must score at least a 50, a score that is five points over the national average and 19 points over the minimum regular enlistment score.

"We are holding these potential enlistees to a higher standard than normal enlistees to prove the validity of their education," Foster said. "The Army is not lowering their standard whatsoever. We are just simply making an opportunity available to people who before have not had the same opportunities as others."

The new program is expected to cost each recruiting battalion nearly $100 per enlistee who takes the GED as the battalion is responsible for the cost of the class, books and the cost of the test.

The program is slated to cost the Army nearly $3 million annually.

Presently, the Atlanta battalion is one of only a handful of locations nationwide playing host to the GED Plus pilot program scheduled to run through Sept 30, 2003.

The program initially sparked debate from the upper echelon's of the Pentagon because the government is reluctant to endorse any incentive that may be perceived as decreasing the quality of troops.

But Secretary of the Army William Cohen, teamed up with retired Gen. Colin Powell to endorse the new recruiting process.

"We want to extend Army recruiting by identifying people with high indicators of of trainability," Cohen told reporters last week. "This program does this."

"We should have no fear that in any way are we going to lower the standards of the U.S. Army," Powell said at the same news conference.

The second of the two pilot programs put into effect last week, called College First, is an initiative by the Department of Army to target college-bound high school graduates to serve on active duty upon finishing two years of college.

The program, which allows enlistees to participate in either Reserve component or Delayed Entry Program while attending school, will pay the student-enlistee a $150 monthly stipend.

Officials hope the program, which is slated to cost the Army $3 million annually, will boost recruiting in the selected demographic.

Presently the Army only recruits .25 percent of the college-bound population annually.

But teens in the Columbus and Fort Benning area hoping to walk into a local recruiting station and sign under the new college first option, may not want to act so fast. The pilot program is only available in Raleigh, N.C., Columbia, S.C., and Jacksonville, Fla.

Both the GED Plus and the College First program will be re-evaluated in September 2003 to determine the success both. At that time, the duo pilot programs will either be erased or find their way into the recruiting command's regulation books, Foster said.

School holds week of education

USARSA hosts week celebration of human rights

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas held its annual Human Rights Week, Monday through today inside Ridgway Hall.

This annual event combines the 40 hour block of instruction on Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law given to the students attending the Command and General Staff Officer Course with guest lectures, panels, workshops, and displays, which are related to the topic.

"This event can be described as a week of activities that celebrates the respect for human rights and international humanitarian law," said Maj. Tony Raimondo, judge advocate for USARSA and principal human rights instructor for the school. "This week also exemplifies what we do best here at USARSA, and that is teach respect for human rights as an integral part of military training and doctrine."

Guest speakers for the week-long human rights training included Francois Senechaud, with the International Committee of the Red Cross and Steven Schneebaum, a human rights attorney in Washington, D.C. Other speakers who also lectured during the week included USARSA's Commandant, Col. Glenn Weidner.

Schneebaum is a former member of the Board of Directors, International Human Rights Law Group, and a current member of the Board of Visitors for USARSA.

The BOV is a subcommittee of the Army Education Advisory Committee constituted under Public Law 92-463 (The Federal Advisory Committee Act), that provides the Secretary of the Army, the Chief of Staff and the Army's senior leadership with expert and continuous advice on USARSA's educational programs.

The week-long forum will have a Human Rights Panel today, encompassing a group of specialists in human rights from the professional, academia, governmental and non-governmental field.

"We as Soldiers must understand all the principals, protocols and applications of human rights laws," said Maj. Carmen Estrella, a CGSOC student.

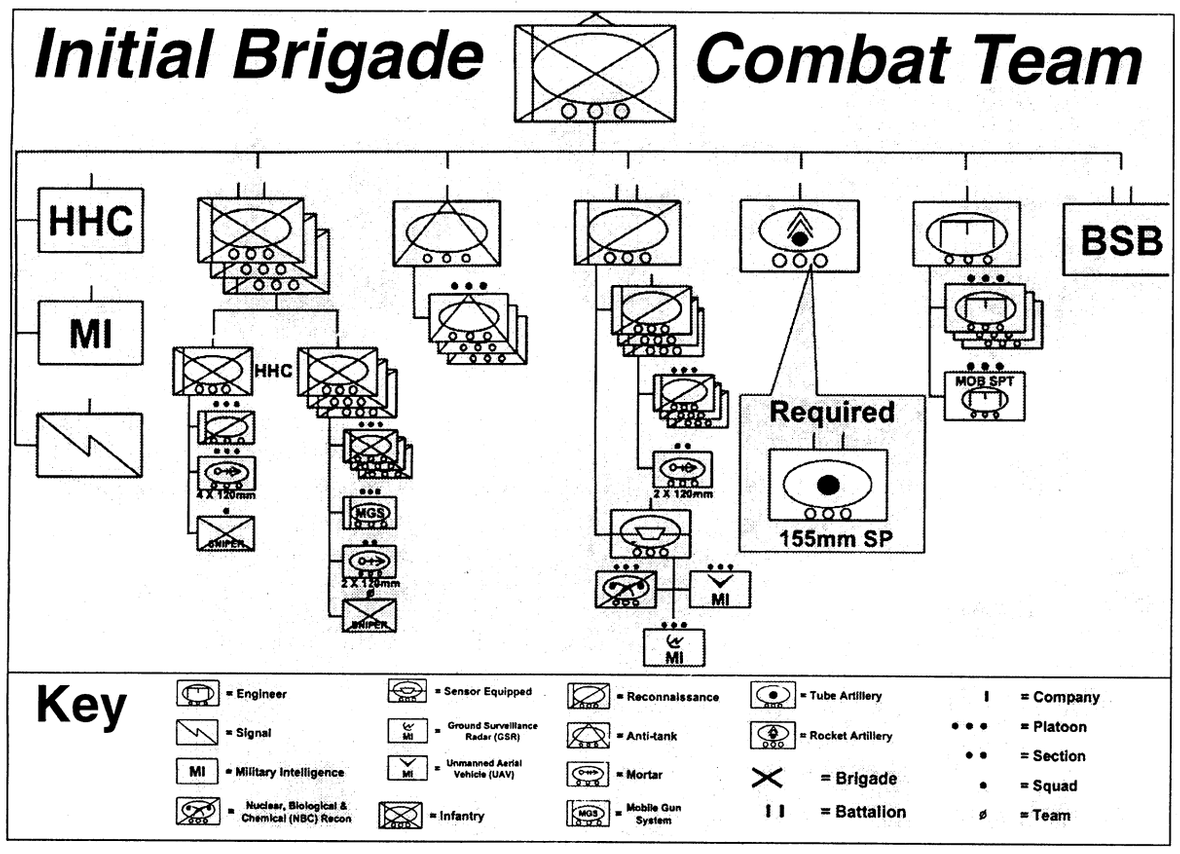
MACH opens new Healthcare Management department

Hospital change eases communication among branches

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

In an effort to improve customer service and streamline hospital operations, Martin Army Community Hospital stood up a Healthcare Management Division in June.

Four branches fall under the division — beneficiary, marketing, data and medical services.



"We stood up the division to facilitate communication between the different branches," Maj. Wanda Scott, division executive officer, said.

"In the past a branch would have only one piece of a person's health care. Now, we've put all the people who deal with the patient into one division."

The enrollment office, patient services, health care finders, health benefits advisors, consult coordinators and all health care service contracts, including Tricare, fall under the Beneficiary Services Branch. The Marketing Services Branch includes the marketing and public affairs office, patient representatives and information desk.

The Data Services Branch handles data analysis. The Medical Services Branch encompasses case managers, risk management, quality management, credentialing and utilization management.

Patients should have an easier time finding answers to their questions, Scott said. When individuals call with questions about their health care, if the person on the other end of the phone doesn't know the answer, he or she should refer the callers to someone within the Healthcare Management Division.

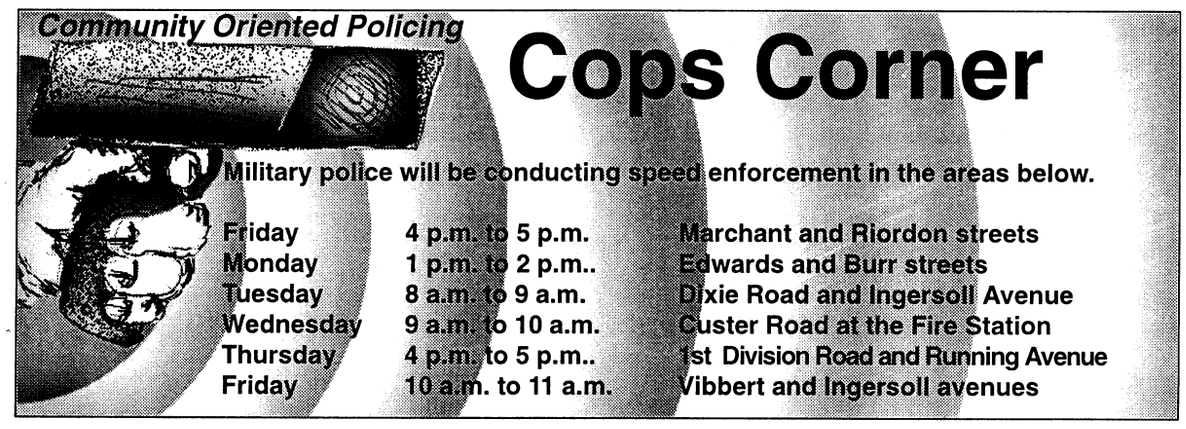
Plan: Brings life to new brigade to carry a nine-man Infantry squad and the crew members," Stone said.

There will be several configurations of the vehicle — one for mortars, anti-tank, fire-support, reconnaissance, etc.

"It's similar to going to a car dealer. You can get several different models of Ford.

They are all Fords, and they all look about the same. But each individual organization has different requirements," Stone said.



"One unique factor emerging from this new organization is the organic combined arms companies," said Maj. Dave Pound, chief of the Concepts, Analysis and Integration Division, DCD, alluding to the integration of indirect (mounted 120 mm mortars) and direct-fire weapons systems (mobile gun systems), as well as personnel, including indirect fire support teams.

Each Infantry battalion will have a reconnaissance platoon capable of conducting simultaneous mounted and dismounted reconnaissance. There is a four-gun 120 mm mortar platoon also equipped with four 81 mm mortars to support dismounted operations. The battalion will field a 10-man sniper squad equipped with heavy and medium caliber sniper systems.

Each rifle company has three rifle platoons, a MGS platoon and a section of two 120 mm mortars mounted on IAVs. The mortar section is also equipped with two 60 mm mortars to support dismounted operations. The company will also have a three-man sniper team.

Each rifle platoon has three nine-man squads with a Javelin command launch unit (CLU). Every weapons squad has two three-man M-240B machine gun teams and two Javelin gunners with CLUs.

Award: Soldier of the Cycle.
What made you join the Army? There were certain goals that I wished to accomplish in my life, and I decided that becoming a Soldier of the U.S. Army would give me the discipline and directive to best fulfill those goals.
Why were you chosen as honor graduate? My platoon nominated me as the distinguished honor graduate of the cycle. My fellow Soldiers characterized me as being dedicated, motivated, responsible, caring and intelligent. They felt I was a great platoon guide and that I always led by setting a good example.

Staff Sgt. Antonio Wiggins

Lie detector

Photos and story by
Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Special Agent David Reisinger, Fort Benning's Criminal Investigation Command, administers a polygraph test earlier this week. Reisinger, one of the Army's 20 polygraph examiners, offers polygraph assistance to both military police and unit commanders to assist in unit-level investigations.

Polygraph tests analyze body activity through sensors attached to the examinee at the fingertips and around their chest and arm. The sensors record pulse, breathing and blood pressure providing data to a nearby computer for analysis.

Commanders now have a new tool in their investigative arsenal when attempting to determine whether a Soldier's story is true during a commander's inquiry investigation.

The tool comes courtesy of the Army's super sleuths, the special agents of the Criminal Investigation Command. But CID officials said, the tool really isn't new at all.

So what exactly is this crime-fighting tool? The Army's top cops call it a polygraph, but those outside the field of finding the bad guys know it by only what it is used for — lie detector.

"Polygraph tests are a tool we make available to commanders to help them resolve (Army Regulation) 15-6 investigations," said Special Agent David Reisinger, a polygraph examiner assigned to Fort Benning's CID detachment. "The test assists commanders in resolving unit level matters that don't fall within the investigative jurisdiction of the military police or CID."

Reisinger, a 13-year veteran of CID and one of the Army's 20 elite polygraph specialists, said some of the investigations CID assists units with polygraph examinations include disrespect to an officer or NCO, return of a positive urinalysis for drug use and missing items from a unit's inventory.

While Reisinger said the Army makes the tool available to commanders, many opt not to use Reisinger's lie detecting resource in fear of their unit appearing on the post police blotter.

"As long as the offense doesn't fall under the MP or CID purview," he said, "the test will not hit the blotter."

Although the results of polygraph tests are not admissible in any judicial hearing, Reisinger said it is not the polygraph that is the true lie detector.

"There is much more to administering a polygraph than putting the instrument on a person and asking a simple series of questions," he said. "If that was the case, anyone could come in here and give the test. But there's more to the test than sitting down and answering a list of questions."

In both the case of attempting to solve a crime and determining a commander's inquiry investigation, a polygraph test begins long before the suspect is strapped into the polygraph machine.

The process begins as soon as the suspect is brought to the CID office and undergoes an initial interview.

Once it is discovered how the person will respond to interview questions, Reisinger formulates a plan on how to question the examinee to allow them to properly plead their case.

"During that initial interview, I figure out how they are going to respond to certain questions and certain situations," he said. "I learn what they do when they lie and then focus upon that to analyze if they are really telling me the truth when they are taking the test."

Analyzing a reaction called flight, fright or freeze, Reisinger said he can typically pin point how their body will react when they tell a lie.

"It is simple physiology really. When your body undergoes stress, it reacts in a certain manner. The same is true when you tell a lie — that is how the polygraph and I can point out a lie," he said. "That reaction, called flight, fright or freeze, is what I use to determine whether the person is really telling the truth."

The polygraph machine, which is attached to the suspect's fingertips, chest and arm, logs heart rate, pulse, sweat and breathing activity and records the results during each question.

On a nearby computer screen, Reisinger analyzes those answers, looking for an indication of flight, fright or freeze, in an effort to disclose whether the examinee is being truthful in their answers.

"Upon completion of the test, I can then go back and compare the individual question results and dictate if the person was undergoing flight, fright or freeze at the time of their answer," he said. "Then it is just simply reviewing those results with the examinee, and if they return a positive result in them lying, I ask them why they did it.

"More times than not they will confess to what they are here for," he said.

While here for Reisinger is usually Fort Benning, the top cop is able to take his polygraph show on the road to assist commanders in the Southeast and Puerto Rico.

"The polygraph is such a useful tool during commander's investigations, we want to make it available to them regardless of their locations," he said. "Thanks to laptop computers, we can take the polygraph anywhere at anytime."

The ability to be mobile sends Reisinger on the road with the polygraph nearly two times a month with his latest endeavor taking him to Alabama.

"It used to be where the analog polygraph machine was bulky and difficult to move," he said. "Now we have the luxury of easily taking our polygraph to commanders locations, making the use of the polygraph more accessible to everyone."

Maj. Dennis Wince, commander of the International Student Training Detachment here, said accessibility led him to call upon Reisinger when property was stolen from the unit last year.

"The polygraph is another tool commanders can call upon in situations like we had to help eliminate a possible list of suspects," Wince said. "And anytime you can cut down the time it takes to solve a crime, the better chance you have in finding the person responsible."

Presently, Reisinger is at the top of the Army's all-star investigator's list for finding the persons responsible for criminal acts, logging a 100 percent confession since Oct. 99.

Reisinger can be reached at 545-8914 or via email at ReisingerD@benning.army.mil.

Expert Infantry site ready for test

Sandbags, nets set for event to name top combat troops

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Phase one of this year's Expert Infantryman's Badge testing is now underway with more than 45 NCOs and Soldiers from units all over post taking to Burroughs Range to get the site well prepared for the close to 500 EIBers expected to undergo testing at the beginning of March.

The Soldiers began setup Monday and will spend until the middle of next week constructing 24 testing sites, said Sgt. Maj. Dwayne Dikes, operations sergeant major for the 29th Infantry Regiment and EIB coordinator.

In order to get the sites ready, the Soldiers will do everything from clearing debris and growth to sandbagging and erecting camouflage nets and booths. They will also be required to gather the appropriate equipment for their particular station and ensuring everything is set up correctly and able to operate smoothly, Dikes said.

Everything has to be done to standard, which means making the sites perfect for training conditions, he said. An example of this was having to remove a small tree that would have ultimately interfered with communications at one of the testing sites.

After the setup is complete, Dikes will inspect each of sites to make sure they are to the standard set by post command sergeant major Command Sgt. Major Mack Vereen and 29th Infantry Regiment Commander Col. Carter Ham.

> "The crucial thing is when (the Soldier) comes to a site nothing is required of him. All he needs to do is show up, get his briefing and then test."
> — Sgt. Maj. Dwayne Dikes
> EIB site coordinator, 29th Infantry Regiment

For Staff Sgt. William Simmons, NCO Academy, Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course, EIB setup "is all a part of the training."

All of the effort that goes into perfecting the sites is done to benefit the Soldiers who will be testing, Dikes said.

"We want to make it comfortable for the Soldiers when they come to test," Dikes said. "We need to make sure that he gets a clear and concise understanding of what he must do. The crucial thing is when he comes to a site nothing is required of him. All he needs to do is show up, get his briefing and then test."

After the site is complete the second phase entails certifying the graders. All of the NCOs involved in the setup process will go through the certification process from Feb. 22-25.

Once certification is complete the graders will man the sites they created and watch as another batch of EIB hopefuls do their train-up and then make their rounds through the stations.

Editor's note: Be sure to pick up the THE BAYONET in the coming weeks for continuing coverage of EIB testing.

Soldiers: Prepare for NTC at exercise beneficial to the troops even though there is no real impact of a successful hit or kill like there is in real war. The laser-equipped engagement system called MILES for short sometimes gives Soldiers a false feel of what is really happening he said.

"Sometimes while you are doing this you wonder, 'would I really be doing this like this if this was real war?' He said. "I would probably kick it up a notch."

Kicking it up a notch would be hard to imagine for some of those involved as the screaming radio traffic during the heat of the Sunday morning scuffle sounding more like excerpts from a Desert Storm documentary than a training exercise.

Sgt. Burto Arrindell, B. Company, 1st Bn, 15th Inf. Regt., said the reason why many of these training battles are so intense is because Soldiers are not fighting an unknown enemy — they are fighting their colleagues and friends. He said all of them are looking to log a win and earn bragging rights with a victorious battle.

"Having your buddies in the other tanks trying to attack you makes it that much more challenging and fun," Arrindell said. "You see your buddy in the other tank, and you want to kill him."

While the light-hearted side of earning bragging rights is a good morale boost for the Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade, this year's Marne Focus also serves the Soldiers with an additional training incentive.

The exercise was also designed to prepare the unit for their upcoming trip to the desert sands of the National Training Center nestled deep within California's Mojave Desert.

"There is no doubt this will help us to get ready for NTC," O'Mailey said. "The Russian-based doctrine used here by the OPFOR is exactly what we will see when we get to California."

The Soldiers of the 3rd Brigade are slated to deploy to NTC sometime next month.

Budget: Gives DoD $291 billion receive the proposed funds, said Ken Holloway, the post's master planner. Those funds have already faced slashings to the tune of a couple million dollars, Holloway said. Those cuts come in line with an Armywide initiative to cut spending, not as part of Clinton's proposed budget, he said.

The cut came to what planners call contingency money, funds that give builders additional purchasing power in case complications occur during construction. He did note construction will continue as planned in accordance with available funding for the projects.

DoDwide barracks projects and other quality of life projects top expenditure lists in Clinton's proposed budget plan, a move that has earned him accolades from Washington officials and military analysts.

"In order to maintain an all-volunteer force, we should not ask if we can afford to improve members' quality of life — we simply can't afford not to," said Sen. Max Cleland. "With the lowest unemployment rate in 30 years, the U.S. military is competing with the private sector for talent more than ever. Our policies, pay rates and benefits must reflect that reality.

"From salaries to housing improvements to health care, this budget is a step in the right direction for our recruiting and retention needs," he added.

While those quality of life issues will continue to top legislators "keep list" for the fiscal 2001 budget, military health care and housing allowances have also sparked the attention of Washington lawmakers.

Secretary of Defense William Cohen announced last month a plan to put an additional $3 billion into increasing housing allowances with the intent of driving out-of-pocket expenses from 19 to 15 percent in FY 01 to zero by FY 05.

That, however, remains to be unseen in the president's latest plan.

Also unseen in Clinton's final fiscal plan, is the revamp of military medical care.

The issue, which has become a hot topic of Washington officials, was discussed, but the boost to active-duty and retiree health care was only mentioned by a senior DoD official who called the medical care situation "a story in progress."

The first issue, he said, is to tackle the problem of medical service for active-duty members and their families living in remote areas. Under a new proposal, he said, DoD would pick up the bill to provide Tricare Prime for families of those service members and their families.

The defense department did add money from the budget this go-round for the elimination of co-payments under Tricare Prime for those service members who have to use civilian facilities.

"It's an equity issue," he said. "Service members treated at a military facility have no co-pays while those treated at a civilian facility currently do."

While some money found its way to the proposed military health care spending plan, other items in the arena failed to make a showing on the list of expected expenditures.

Failure to put money into the purse of the retiree health care plan raised some questions Monday evening, the official said.

But he noted the agency has acknowledged that in the past retirees were seen on a space-available basis in military treatment facilities, and now those spaces are disappearing with the force downsizing.

"There are two things you need to know in the end," he said. "One, there is a very big issue involved here, the question of equity and keeping faith with retirees. Second, there's a very big bill with any proposal."

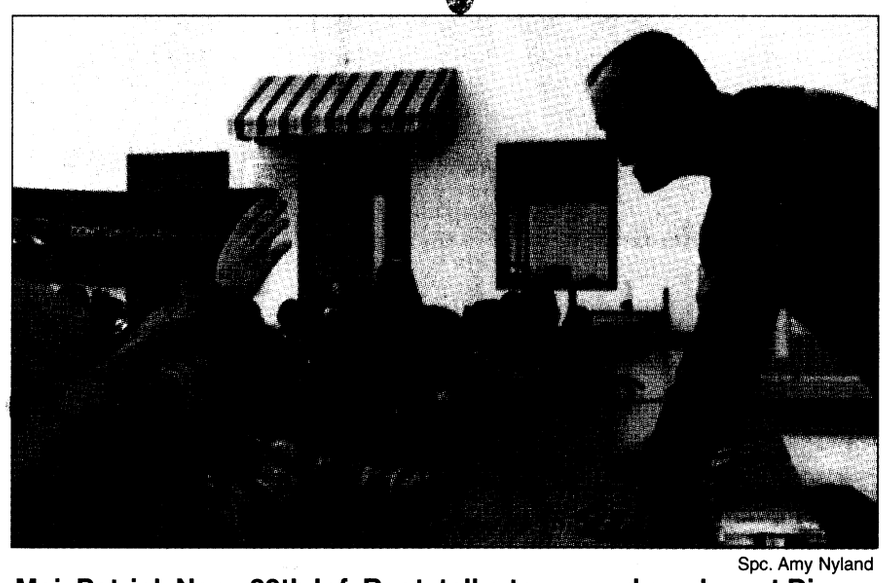
Loyd Elementary students gathered on the front lawn of the school Monday to watch Principal Debra Mabry and Columbus City Councilman Robert Poydasheff plant a "timeless treasure."

The annual tree planting ceremony kicked off the school's month long celebration of Arbor Day. The Green Ash was donated by Mead Coated Board, Inc., and the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission.



"I am delighted to be able to take part in this ceremony, and to be able to play a role in stressing the importance of preserving our ecology," Poydasheff said. "This type of activity allows the students to understand the importance of trees and their benefits to the community at a very early age. Hopefully they will keep sight of this as they grow older."

Poydasheff presented Mabry a certificate, on behalf of the City of Columbus, in appreciation for the school's contribution to the beautification of Fort Benning.

"It's very important for the beauty of the school and the beauty of the world to plant trees. Trees are important for all of us," Poydasheff said.

In preparation for Monday's event, students in all grades have been learning about the life cycle of the tree and the history of Arbor Day.

"We've learned about how trees help keep the air clean, and we learned that pioneers started this tradition in Nebraska," said fifth-grader Bethany Lazier. "So it's really cool that we get to do it here at school."

Maj. Patrick Nary, 29th Inf. Regt. talks to second graders at Dimon Magnet Academy about staying in school.

Soldier encourages kids to follow dreams

Spc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

When Maj. Patrick Nary, executive officer of the 29th Infantry Regiment, makes a visit to one of the local schools, he isn't trying to promote the Army. Instead, he donates his time to encourage kids to do something he said he thinks is extremely important — stay in school.

And while most would probably assume this message is best suited for middle and high schoolers, Nary has a different view. He takes to the elementary schools to talk with students in all grades about the importance of graduating high school and accomplishing their dreams.

"I enjoy talking to little kids and to youth to try and stimulate them into thinking about what they want to do in life," Nary said right before a visit to Dimon Magnet Academy to talk with second-graders. "At that age most of them believe they can do anything and you want to enforce that."

Nary has been making visits to Fort Benning and Columbus schools for the last year and said he became involved when he was contacted by members within the school system looking for positive role models.

He said many other Soldiers from the 29th also visit area schools to talk about the importance of staying in school.

While talking to kids is nothing new for the more than seven-year veteran of the recruiting world, he said it can sometimes be a little harder to keep their attention at such a young age.

"At that age their attention span is really limited so I use a lot of gimmicks to keep them focused," Nary said. "When your dealing with elementary school kids you try to make it as fun for them as possible."

Some of these gimmicks include slides, card tricks and of course the usual goodies such as pencils and hug meters.

Even though it is mostly fun and games when he visits the schools, his message is serious — in order to go anywhere and do anything, kids need to stay in school and get their diploma. Which in turn means staying off drugs and doing the right things, he said.

Kathleen Powell, second-grade teacher at Dimon Magnet Academy said it is a treat to have Soldiers like Nary come to the school. She said it is important for the kids to see positive role models.

"I think with there being so much negative in the world, anytime someone addresses them in a positive way it goes so far," Powell said.

She also mentioned that his message makes a bigger impact on the kids because he isn't a teacher, but a community member.

Even still, Nary said the bottom line is to be there for the kids as a mentor.

"If there is an opportunity to touch one kid, to change his life, to have him go down the right road or come back from a wrong one, that is what I hope to get from talking to these kids."

"It might be a word I say, it might be a pencil I give out that says, 'Be all you can be' or it could be a hug meter that reminds them they are somebody."

Nary encourages everyone to consider being a mentor. He said schools are always looking for positive role models.

"If you call any school and say you'd be interested in volunteering, I'm positive they would be more than willing to have you."

Computer program brings sea to life

Class explores underwater sealife without leaving room

The students in Marie Hand's enrichment program recently took a field trip under the sea, without ever leaving their classroom.

The 30 second- and third-graders, from McBride Elementary School, participated in a research project about rare forms of sea life. The majority of their information was gathered from a computer program called "A Field Trip Under the Sea."

The program features colorful underwater graphics that allowed the students to delve deep into sea beds, where they explored the feeding habits, survival techniques and breeding methods of sea creatures such as the glass jelly fish, purple sea snails, squirrel fish and sea squirts.

Although the computer program was their primary source of information, students also gathered data from the Internet and the library.

"The purpose of the whole research project was to strengthen their research and presentation skills. Each student picked a form of sea life they were not familiar with. They gathered information and used their own words and graphics to create flip-charts about their subject," Hand said.

The students displayed their finished works at an open house for parents and staff members Friday.

"After all their hard work, it was important that the parents see what all was involved in the project," Hand said. "We're incorporating a lot of different learning techniques and developing skills that they will use throughout their school years."

Second-grader Morgan Gadd chose to research the dugong, a sea animal related to manatee and sea cow, because it's name reminded her of a Poke´mon.

"It's like her to pick something no one else would choose. We were all curious about it and we had fun helping her research it," said her mom, Ra Gadd.

Second-grader Shelly Lindblade likened her subject of choice, the sea squirt, to a "bowl of macaroni and cheese."

"It's yellow, and it looks just like a bunch of noodles with holes in them. I like it because it looks funny," she said.

Middle school incorporates non-traditional sports into PE program

Remember when gym class meant calisthenics and dodge ball, tube socks and community showers?

Welcome to the 21st century physical education class, where aerobics and Tae Bo have replaced sit-ups and jumping jacks. Students play games with futuristic names such as "Eliminator" and "Survival."

The staff of the Faith Middle School's PE department has developed a curriculum to rival most high school programs. Parents use adjectives like "progressive" and "innovative" to describe it. Students just call it "cool".

"It's creative," said sixth-grader Kristen Anderson. "We're doing a lot of activities that we wouldn't get to do at other schools."

"So many of the kids who come here have only been exposed to traditional sports, like basketball or volleyball," said Jimmy Cochran, PE instructor. "We've adapted this program to introduce them to as many physical activities as possible. The kids love it. We have a 95 percent participation rate."

Achieving this level of participation required the PE staff to accommodate the special needs of adolescents and young teens. Last year the staff realized the co-ed structure of the classes hindered the students' participation. Classes are now separated for the boys and girls.

"Middle school is all about doing what is best for the students. They're often afraid of failure in front of the opposite sex. We eliminated that problem and have had a remarkable increase in participation," Cochran said.

Anderson agreed that

Former Soldier, doctor travels to Ghana for mission

Dr. Sarah Barr, a former Army captain and general medical officer at Martin Army Community Hospital's emergency room, arrived in Africa Monday for a two-month stay.

Barr is in Nalerigu, Ghana, at the Baptist Medical Centre, a 100-bed hospital run by the International Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Association.

"I'll be doing out-patient and in-patient care, as well as assisting in surgery and whatever they can find for me to do" Barr said last week.

Since leaving the Army in 1997, the Chicago native has been working on her residency in family practice at the Medical Center in Columbus.

This is not the first foreign mission trip for Barr. While a college student at Cedarville College in Ohio she visited China.

As a medical student she worked in Bangledesh for 10 weeks, and just last year she traveled to Mexico with a group from Morningside Baptist Church.

"I have an interest in medical missions, possibly for the long-term," Barr said. "This will be my chance for first-hand experience in it."

Barr

The trip is part of her residency training at the Medical Center, and she remains on salary.

During her five years in the Army, Barr was stationed in Germany and Macedonia. That international experience will be helpful.

"I've deployed to different places so I know how to pack and what general preparations to make. I also know how to be flexible," Barr said.

Updating her shots was one item on her preparation list.

"Some of the shots I needed I had already received while active duty," she said.

Before flying from Atlanta Sunday, Barr spoke during the worship service at Morningside Baptist, seeking prayer for her safety, health and that of her patients in Ghana.

"And for guidance about my future and where God wants me in regards to missions," she said.

The doctor is expected to return April 7.

Dentists warn parents to start children early, set good oral hygiene habits

American Dental Association

The way children care for their bodies today will have an impact on their health far into the new century. The good news is that preventive dental care has dramatically improved the oral health of American children. It's now possible for many children to reach adulthood without ever experiencing tooth decay.

February is National Children's Dental Health Month and the Fort Benning Dental Activity has these tips for parents and caregivers:

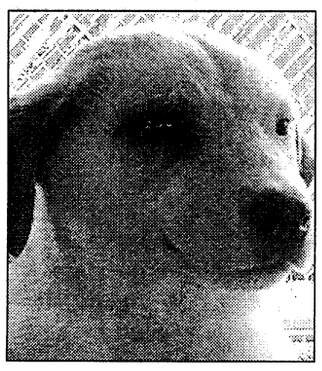
• Take your child to see the dentist regularly, beginning by the child's first birthday.

• Put only water in a child's naptime or bedtime bottle.

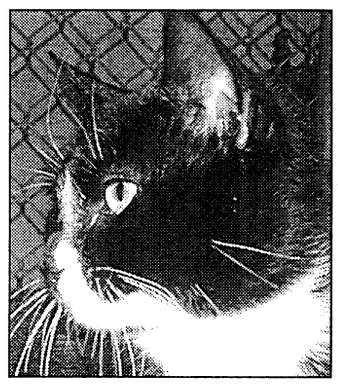
• Start brushing as soon as the child's first tooth appears.

• Begin flossing when two teeth begin to touch.

• Brush and floss your child's teeth daily until the child can be taught to do this alone.



• Make certain your child gets the fluoride needed for decay-resistant teeth. Ask your dentist how this should be done.



• Ask your dentist about dental sealants, a thin protective barrier that shields the chewing surface of back teeth against tooth decay.

Good oral health practices should begin in infancy and continue throughout adult life. In your child's early years, you must provide this care. Later you will need to instruct, monitor and motivate your child to help maintain good oral health habits.

Attitudes and habits established at an early age are critical in maintaining good oral health throughout life.

Take me home!

A 10-week-old female mixed breed dog and an adult male domestic short hair cat, are just a few of the animals available at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic. Many more are in need of a good home.

Pet owners are required to pay for initial vaccination procedure costs, which can be anywhere from $10 to $30. The clinic is open 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m Monday through Friday.

ask the judge

Carolyn E. Moller
Office of Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I was the successful bidder in an online Internet auction for a set of high quality turn-of-the-century sheep wool clippers sold by a man in England. After the auction closed, I contacted the seller by e-mail and we agreed that I should send him a check to his English post office box and then he'd send the cutters. I sent the check express mail over a month ago and yet my clippers haven't arrived. I tried contacting the seller at his e-mail address but I haven't gotten a response. I fear the worst. What do you think?

A. It appears that you've been the victim of a ba-a-a-a-ad and very common form of Internet fraud. We can try to recoup your losses but it sounds like a tough battle. However, since this is a common problem, I'm going to focus on how to avoid getting sheared again.

The Internet provides consumers with a wide world of information, and sellers with a new way to promote their products or services.

Crooks also recognize the potential of cyberspace. The same scams that have been conducted by mail or phone can now be found on the Internet, and new technologies are resulting in new ways to commit crimes against consumers.

Therefore, the secret to successfully using online auctions is to manage your risk before the point of sending payment.

The simplest way to avoid getting swindled online is to deal with established merchants rather than individuals. Incidents of the blatant fraud of non-delivery by merchants is tiny compared to the risk when dealing with individuals. Merchants typically have reputations to uphold, investors to please and the hope of reaping long-term profits through sound business practices. Individual sellers are guided often only by their own moral compasses, which, on occasion, may be susceptible to the influence of short-term greed.

When dealing with a merchant online, you can further reduce your risks by making payment by credit card. A credit card purchaser can challenge any transaction by credit card directly with the credit card company. The credit card company then launches it's own fraud investigation and will credit your account until the matter is resolved. If you are working with an individual seller and pay with a cash or check, you lose the amazing power of plastic.

If you decide to make a purchase from an individual seller in an online auction, there are several ways to minimize the risk. The strongest protection is simply getting the seller to send the item cash on delivery.

This effectively shifts the burden of loss over to the seller. Also, make sure you check out the credentials of the seller through posted reviews from previous buyers on the auction site. Though good reviews can be faked or new identities for a scoundrel created, bad reviews typically ring true and can provide a needed warning.

You may also protect yourself as a buyer by requesting the seller's home and work phone and street address (not just post office box) before sending payment.

That way, you'll have a more substantial point of contact prior to sending money. Whatever you do, do not under any circumstances send money to someone who is unwilling to give you any more information than an e-mail address and P.O. box. This is a sure sign of fraud.

Further, when contemplating any purchase at an online auction involving more money than you want to risk losing, consider using an escrow middleman to broker the deal. Such online escrow brokers are common at all the major online auctions. The escrow broker holds payment from the buyer until the buyer confirms that the product arrived and in the condition advertised.

Such brokers charge a service fee for their assistance, but many buyers find this service well worth the peace of mind gained.

For more information or internet fraud or to make an appointment with a legal assistance attorney, call 545-3281 or 545-3282.

The Clean Air Act Amendments are now 10 years old and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is getting tough on certain issues. The CAAA regulate Class I Ozone Depleting Chemicals commonly known as freons and halons. The CAAA banned the production of Class 1 ODCs in the US. However, these chemicals continue to exist in large amounts throughout the country. Fort Benning is no exception. The post has several large chillers that contain Class 1 freons.

Some of these chillers are beginning to age and show normal wear and tear. It is common for small leaks to develop. However, leaks greater than 10 percent a year are prohibited by the regulations. It was the fear of violating the leak regulation that sent the DPW Environmental Management Programs Branch on the hunt for funds to avoid problems with leaks.

The hunt led north to Fort Monroe, Va., and TRADOC rather than up the stairs to the DPW. Using a pot of TRADOC money known as P2 (Pollution Prevention), the Class 1 ODC containing chiller at Reggie's is getting retrofitted. It wasn't exactly a pot of gold but it was enough for that project.

Lots of communication, cooperation, and coordination between DPW branches made this possible. This is what it takes to keep Fort Benning running smoothly while reducing environmental risks.

Every replacement or retrofit of a Class 1 containing chiller reduces the risk of violating the CAAA.

Therefore, money from other DPW projects on post is not diverted to satisfy the EPA. And the next time you enjoy lunch in the cool interior of Reggie's or mambo the night away you can be assured the air conditioning is in tip top shape and not violating the CAAA.

Montana pioneer talks about homesteading

91-year-old shares his experiences

Owen Ditchfield
White Elementary School

Most students learn about homesteading through books. But fifth-graders at E.A. White Elementary recently got a first-hand account of growing up on a homestead in Montana from someone who lived it.

Montanian E.P. (Monty) Myrick was visiting his daughter and her family in Columbus and stopped by the fifth-grade classes of Pam Tate and Ann Smith to share memories and answer questions about his 91-year-old life.

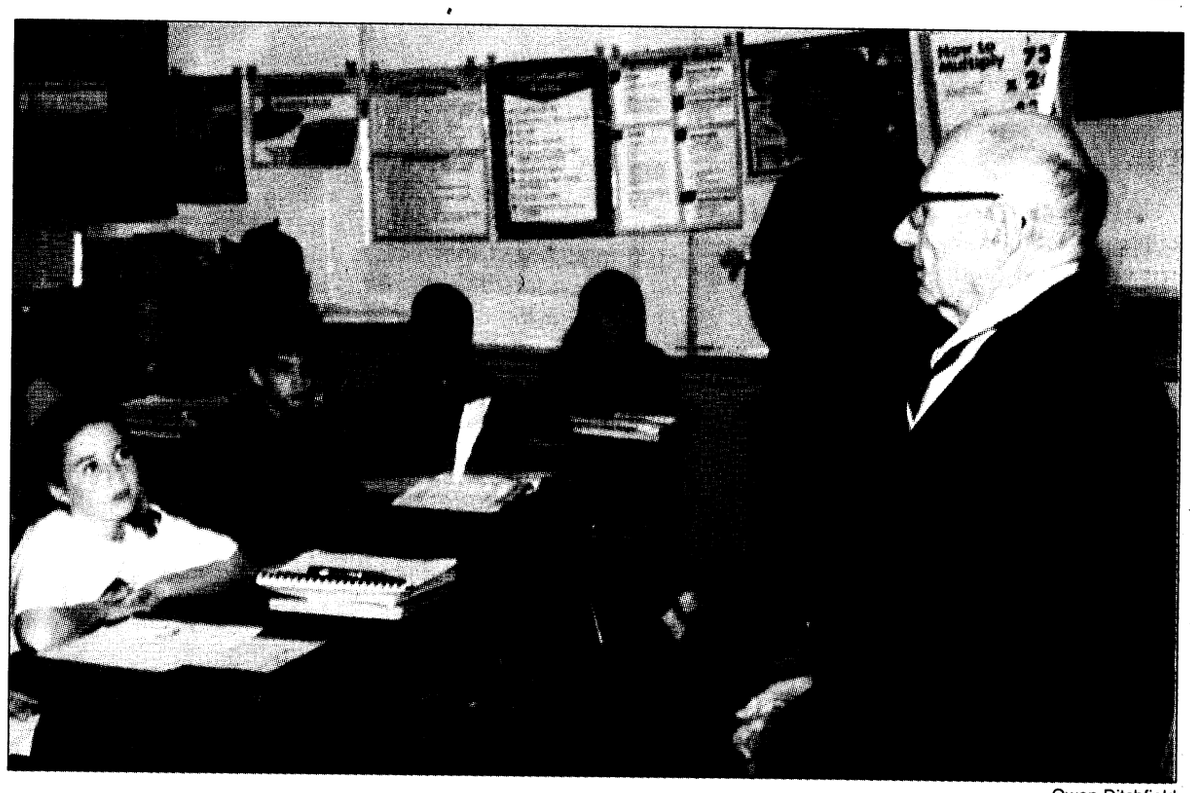
Myrick related how his family moved to Montana by train when he was only 1-year-old. His father started a bank near Fort Benton, (Mont.) but, when the Great Depression began, he didn't have the heart to foreclose on his friends and neighbors' property, so he got out of the banking business and bought over 400 acres of prairie that had never been planted.

Many of the students' questions centered around everyday life in a land where Myrick said, "You might see a neighbor about once a month. Everyone was too busy working the ranch to do much visiting."

He told how it was a 30-mile, all-day trip in a horse drawn wagon to go to town for supplies, so whatever the family needed, they usually made or grew for themselves ... or did without.

Another story the students enjoyed was about the time a kitten tried to sharpen its claws on the leg of a cow Myrick was milking. The cow reacted so fast, Myrick didn't know what happened. When he picked himself up, the cow's foot was through the milk bucket and the cat was dead.

"It was like an explosion," Myrick said.



There were eight to 10 students in the small school he attended from first grade to eight, plus his folks did some home schooling when the weather was bad.

When traveling, Myrick said that they not only had to deal with ice and snow, but muddy roads, which were often so bad that the decision as to which town to go to for supplies depended on which was uphill for an empty wagon or downhill for a loaded one.

The weather on the prairie could also be unpredictable, such as the time the family went into the house to avoid a rainstorm. A little later one of the farm hands came to the house to see if everyone was unhurt. He explained that the barn was gone. Although the animals weren't hurt by the tornado, one horse didn't stop shaking until the next day.

Since Myrick has lived most of the 20th century, the students had prepared many questions about the changes he had seen. Myrick told about their pre-electricity vacuum cleaner, operated manually by one of the children pumping a bellows source of suction. The earliest phone lines were barbed-wire fence, but there were often interruptions when a rancher cut the wire to let cattle through.

During the Great Depression, Myrick could not find a steady job, even though he had a degree in electrical engineering. Fortunately, he was able to go back to the homestead and work for food and other necessities.

Owen Ditchfield

E.P. (Monty) Myrick answers questions from White School fifth-graders about his 91 years of life, growing up on a homestead in Montana. Pam Tate listens in the background.

"At least people with a farm didn't starve," Myrick said.

Myrick had been dating, and was engaged to Rose, his future wife for eight years, but couldn't afford to support a family. He had decided that he needed $1,000 in the bank and a steady job first. He had the money, but no job.

When he was finally employed by Montana Power, working on hydroelectric dams, he immediately got married.

After working at several dams, he was finally promoted to the head office in Butte, Mont., and put in charge of automating all the dams on the Missouri River.

Still very active for someone 91 years old, Myrick lives in a retirement community but often travels around the country to visit his four children in Pennsylvania, Washington, Oregon and here in Columbus. He tries to walk over a mile a day and often bowls three days a week. On the week of his birthday this past June, he bowled his age, plus 100.

At the end of the hour talk, the students still had many questions, and hope to keep in contact with Myrick as they continue their studies of the 20th century. As they begin the new century, the students were fascinated by the opportunity to learn from a person who had lived in every decade of that period.

Pilot program helps students learn math skills using computer

White Elementary students work at own pace with Accelerated Math

White Elementary School

E. A. White School is piloting a new program called Accelerated Math in fourth and fifth grades.

This program individualizes the assignments for each child based on results of diagnostic tests. Students solve problems, mark a special answer card and then check their own work by running the card through a scanning machine.

The student then can print another practice lesson or take a test depending on the results of scores on the activities.

"I learn a lot of different kinds of math. It is fun to do, and I feel proud when I make good scores," said Ken Harris, one of the students working with this program.

Students enjoy the freedom of Accelerated Math, said Dorothy Hyder It allows each student to proceed at his or her own rate. Faster students may move along without having to wait on those having difficulty with a skill.

Students are taking control of their individual math progress. After several practice activities, the program determines if a student has attained a level of mastery of a skill.

Students do not fear testing on a skill because they have proven to themselves that they are ready and capable.

A test is prescribed, and if a student demonstrates 80 percent or better on the test he or she moves on to new skills.

Shannon Chambers, a fifth-grade student from Ann Smith's class said, "I like Accelerated Math because it gives me a better understanding of the arithmetic. It's cool to check yourself and be able to make your own test."

"Accelerated Math allows me to use class time to give individual attention to those who need help in mastering a skill already taught or to provide new instruction to students who are ready to move on to new skills," Hyder said.

"The Accelerated Math program provides the teacher the ability to work one-on-one with every student. It gives opportunities to explain processes in a way each student can understand. Students with similar shortcomings can be placed in small groups."

The Parent-Teacher Organization bought the necessary software and equipment to enhance the mathematics program.

Rain forest enhances creative thinking

White Elementary School

Rain softly falling, singing birds and crickets chirping are sounds that can be heard at E.A. White School as students explore the rain forest without leaving the building.

A new form of virtual reality is emerging in the hallway outside of enrichment teacher Evelyn Braman's classroom.

Students used creative problem solving skills to build the rain forest.

"We need to save the rain forest because we use the plants for medicine," third-grader Darby Kelso said.

Students wrote to the president of the World Bank Company expressing their concerns about the depletion of the rain forest and the possibility of tax dollars being spent on an oil pipeline through the Cameroon rain forest.

They researched information about various animals, plants and insects that live there in order to prepare for their role as tour guide.

Evelyn Braman

Third-graders Slater Kirk and Raymond Fletcher work on the rain forest project at White Elementary School.

Aided by technology in the form of PowerPoint presentations the students are eager to show their support and desire to save the rain forest.

The students will share this information with their classmates as they take them on a guided tour.

To set up a tour with our guides, call 545-4623 and ask for Evelyn Braman.

segregated classes are preferable.

"The girls don't concentrate on what they're doing when the boys are around because the boys show off," the sixth-grader said.

In separate classes, the students focus on traditional sports, such as football and basketball, and less conventional activities, like dance, bowling, archery, golf, angle ball, badminton and sumo wrestling.

"When we first introduced wrestling, the kids were expecting TV-type wrestling. I had to explain that we wouldn't be doing drop-kicks or sleeper holds," Cochran said.

Instead, students watch a video about the Japanese sport of sumo wrestling. They learn the significance of the sumo rituals, such as ceremonial bowing and clapping out of respect for their opponents. The students then get the opportunity to practice both the wrestling techniques and the ceremonial rituals.

Cochran, Emerson, and their colleagues, Scott Denney and Tori Noon, instruct each activity in two-week units.

"At the middle school level, kids get bored easily. We want to present as many possibilities as we can — to give them a taste of a wide variety of activities, ultimately to develop life-long interests in different areas," Denney said.

This variety is the key to a well-rounded middle school PE program, according to Emerson.

"Unfortunately, traditional organized sports have put so much pressure on kids, we find they're getting burned-out and quitting by the time they're teens," Emerson said. "At this age, they should be trying many different sports. They can make decisions about which ones they want to continue to participate in when they're in high school."

"They need this variety to discover their strengths and interests. They discover things about themselves they wouldn't know otherwise," Cochran said. "For instance, at the eighth-grade level, we do collegiate wrestling. The smaller boys, who haven't been so successful on the football field, suddenly discover that they're pretty good at wrestling, so they find their niche."

Annetta Curtis, mother of sixth-grader Jemesa Curtis, said she is pleased at the variety of activities offered at Faith.

"I was actually surprised. It's not just climbing ropes and playing kick-ball like when I was in school. I remember I hated gym. My daughter loves it," Curtis said.

Although the program is designed to expose students to a wide variety of sports, Denney said each activity is carefully selected for the individual skill it develops.

"It's not just about exercise, but about the skills they learn from those exercises. Even traditional games, such as 'Capture the Ball,' teach problem-solving skills," he said. "That's the 'education' in 'physical education.'"

Indeed, putting the "education" back in PE, meant developing age-appropriate programs for the different developmental levels of middle school grades.

"Sixth-graders are still self-consumed — not yet team oriented. We do a lot of self-testing, combative activities, like arm wrestling and Indian leg wrestling. In the seventh grade, they're starting to develop some concept of teamwork. By the eighth grade, we're challenging them and expecting more from them," Cochran said.

"At each grade level, we gear our activities to their capabilities. But at every level, we want them to put forth an effort, try new things, learn to work together and discover something they enjoy and are successful at," Emerson said.

America needs parents to instill godly values

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Abraham Lincoln said, "A child is a person who is going to carry on what you started ...

He will assume control of your cities, states and nations. He is going to move in and take over your churches, school, universities and corporations ... The fate of humanity is in his hands."

America more than ever needs godly parents instilling godly values in its children.

Dennis Rainey in his book, One Home at a Time, wrote, "The home is the best place for a child to learn about God ... our best hope for renewal lies in the restoration of godly home."

God places great value in children and parenting is a lofty and honorable calling. Parenting should not be left up to someone other than the parents.

It is not the school's responsibility, nor the day care center's or the local church's.

For many parents children are not a gift but a burden.

That is why I challenge all parents to commit themselves to making their family a higher priority than a career.

Rupel

There is no job worth losing one's family over. If the job becomes so demanding that it consistently takes you away from your family then it is time to find another job.

Unfortunately we have created a cultural climate in America that wars against the family and the home.

If you choose or have chosen to be a parent then be one.

Be willing to spend time with your child and give him or her top priority. Father Patrick W. Egan said, "We in the 'me generation' need to hear a little less about self-fulfillment and little more about self-denial.

Perhaps denial and sacrificial love is the ultimate key to fulfillment."

Americans can no longer afford living self-centered lives.

If we are ever to reclaim our children there must be a spiritual renewal in our land because a nation that excludes God is headed for disaster.

This little note that came over the Internet sums it up pretty good:

Dear God,

Why didn't you save the school children in Littleton?

Sincerely,

A Concerned Student

And the reply:

Dear Concerned Student,

I'm not allowed in schools.

Heartbroken,

God

Valentines opportunity for selfless giving

Chaplain (Capt.) Mark Diddle
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry

reflections

It happens this time every year. We have been hearing about it through the media for several weeks now.

Everywhere we turn we see red, white and chocolate. Radio stations have contests asking you to share your story about it. Valentine's Day is that one day a year that we seem to place other persons' interests before our own.

We can remember red hearts, chocolate candy, red roses and romantic dinners. These memories bring a smile to our face.

Why do we concentrate so much on this one day? Perhaps each day is an opportunity to treat others with unselfish consideration. This appears to be the way Jesus lived his life and the way he instructs us to live ours.

Philippians 2:5-11 begins with "Have this attitude in yourselves which was also in Christ Jesus."

Selfless service brought Christ great joy. Reading the previous verses helps us to understand how Jesus lived out this attitude of selfless service.

Some of what these verses tell us are; love one another and work together (versus two), work with humility (versus three) and look out for the interests of others and not just your own (versus four).

I enjoy Valentine's Day. It is exciting to see my wife's eyes light up and a smile dance across her face when I give her a valentine present. I am sure you have experienced at least one Valentine day that brings back memories similar to mine.

What memories could you build if you lived with the attitude of Christ? How would your relationships change with this new focus? I would imagine each new day would be a day to look forward to, a day that we discovered something new and exciting.

Think about the day that you discovered Christ and the excitement that happened within you. What if we decided this year we were going to extend Valentine's Day and make each day one in which we shared the love Christ shares with each of us?

Now that would be exciting ... and a way to enhance the lives of others around you.

"And in the morning, a great while before day, he rose and went out to a lonely place, and there he prayed." — Mark 11:25

Youth baseballers get new four-field complex

Close to $2 million in NAF money goes toward new facility

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

It won't be long until Youth Services baseball participants can bid farewell to their weathered and worn baseball fields and welcome in the new and improved.

Work on a new four-field YS sports complex began Jan. 10 and is projected to wrap up by mid-June, said Moe Klaus, quality control officer for The Korte Company, contractors for the project.

The close to $2 million complex is being built at the corner of McIver and Yeager avenues across from Faith Middle School and Dexter Elementary and will encompass 12 acres, said Klaus. The facility will be a wagon-wheel configuration with a concession stand located in the middle.

Some of the more prominent features of the complex is stadium-like lighting and sprinkler systems for each of the fields.

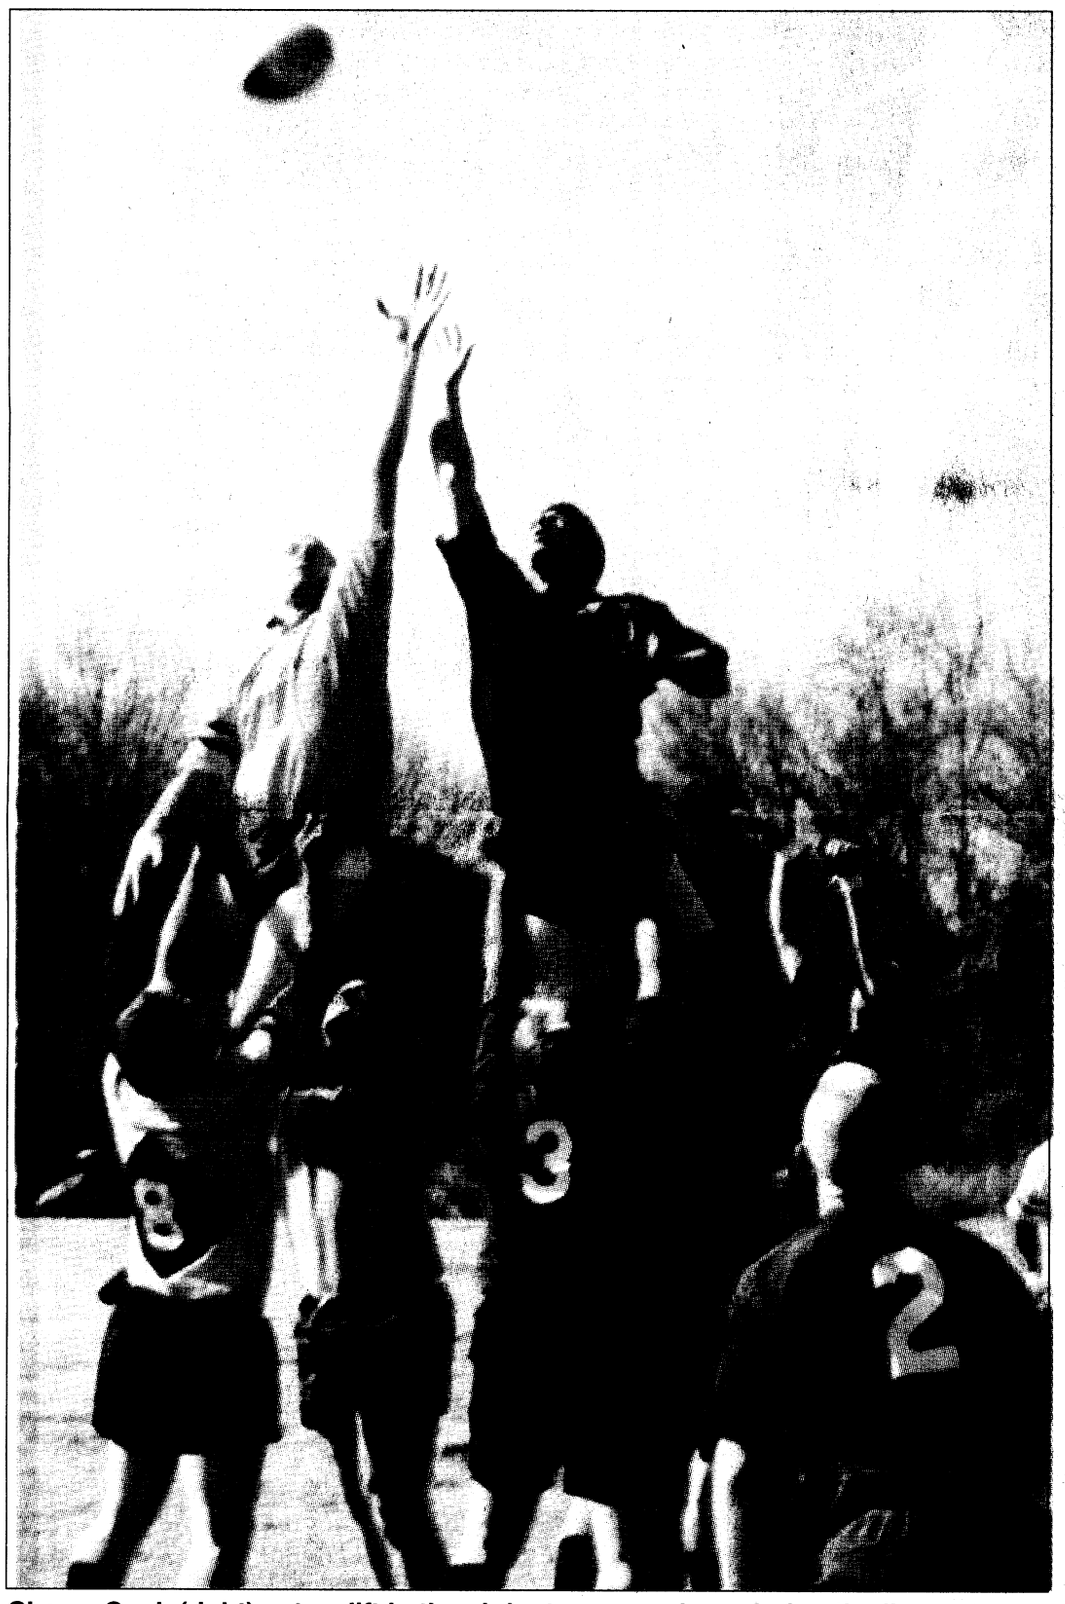
Klaus explained they just finished stripping the sod and are now working on moving dirt and leveling the site. After that they will create the footings and concrete support for the structure and hope to have that finished by March 31.

However, baseballers won't be able to take to the fields until next season, to allow time for the sod to settle, said Linda Laine, YS director.

Laine mentioned that new fields have been something YS has wanted since the mid-90s. And while a request was submitted and excepted in 1998, work was pushed back until now. The project is being paid for with non-appropriated funds.

"We requested new fields because the ones we are using are in such bad shape," Laine said. "We use them year after year and they are worn down. Ideally, you want to have a year's rest, but we haven't been able to do that."

She said although they are continually repairing the fields, safety was becoming a concern. The new complex will alleviate those concerns by offering lighted walkways and fenced fields.



Not only that but the complex is located in one central location, which it is extremely beneficial to both YS and parents, Laine said. Parents with more than one child involved in baseball will no longer have to worry about leaving their child at one field to go to another.

She added that having a central facility also makes it easier for YS because all the equipment and games will be in one location.

Fort Benning and Montgomery face off in the scrum during Rugby action Feb. 5 at the CruiserDome.

Cruise-A-Matics dominate opener

Jim Muldoon
Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Football Club

The Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club won its opening match of the season, 20-0 against the Montgomery Yellowhammers on Saturday.

After Montgomery dominated the opening 30 minutes of play by camping on the Cruise-A-Matics line, only to be turned away by the home team forwards, the local ruggers mounted an attack off a Bill Breen kick into space that the visitors could not cover. Wing Forward Darren Monaco crashed over with a quick penalty tap to secure a 5-0 halftime lead.

The Cruise-A-Matics came out strong in the second half with Monaco again surprising the Yellowhammers with a 30 meter penalty dash for a 10-0 lead. Flyhalf Tim Butterfield surprised the defenders with a high up under kick that inside center Breen cleaned up and bulled over for a 15-0 lead. Eight man Sean Cook finished the scoring with a five meter driving scrum which he picked up and was able to bury for the 20-0 final.

The Cruise-A-Matics travel to Atlanta next Saturday to challenge division rivals High Country. Home games are played at the CruiserDome located behind the Dolly Madison factory located on Victory Drive For more information, call Gary Kent at 324-4924.

Lakers trounce Redbulls in b-ball action

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The undefeated Lakers trounced the Redbulls Saturday in the 8-to 9-year-old division of Youth Services basketball.

The combined efforts of Laker teammates Travis Lush and Kahlee Tyler, guards, and Korey Williams, forward, proved too much talent for the Redbulls, resulting in a 44-10 upset.

"We need to work on the fundamentals of passing and shooting. They just executed these a lot better than we did," said Redbulls coach Don Sando.

Lakers coach Michael Gathers said his players have been honing their individual and corporate skills.

"They've come a long way since the beginning of the season. They've just jelled as a team," Gathers said. "We've been working on team-oriented skills, and more importantly, individual skills. They work together beautifully."

Tyler led the Lakers with 16 points, followed closely by Lush's 12 points.

Center Cory Bush scored 7 points for the Redbulls and proved to be a formidable opponent defensively.

The Lakers will take on the Tigers, 12:55 p.m. Saturday, at the Youth Services gymnasium.

In other divisions of play the 6- to 7-year-old's battled it out with the Black Bulls taking the Blue Bulls 20-15. Tre Powell put in 12 for the Black Bulls while Tavia James added 8 to the Blue Bulls score. The Dream Team dribbled over the Tigers, 7-4 with Sandra Lee and Chase Holbrook scoring two each for the Tiger's total. Montrel Crawford gave the Dream Team its edge with his four points.

In the 8- to 9-year-old division the Bull Dogs took a bite out of the Tigers winning 24-15. Both DeAndre Murphy and Jordan Goodman contributed eight points for the Bull Dogs while Anthony Wright put up an impressive 12 points for the Tigers. The Magics slipped past the Green Tigers 21-19. Both Robert Judkins of the Magics and James Braddy of the Green Tigers tossed up nine for their teams.

The 10- to 12-year-old Blazers fell to the 76ers 30-24. Arthur Scott and Eddie Jones contributed nine apiece for the Blazers while 76er Xavier Shaw managed to throw up 16 points.

The Ruff Ryders were steamrolled by the Tar heels 54-23. Michael Eberhart and Walter McGee put up 8 points for the Ruff Ryders. Courtland Akinlaye lead his team to victory with an astounding 30 points.

The Magics snuck past the Knicks 16-14 with Destiny James tossing up half the Magic's points and Anthony Lacour putting in 8 for the Knicks.

In 13- to 15-year-old play the 76ers nixed the Ballers 35-26. Antonio Holden was lead scorer for the Ballers with 9 points while Darnell Love gave 11 points for the 76ers.

Finally, the Blue Devils stopped the Hornets 59-41. Joey Fix helped his team to victory with 26 points while Earnest Tyler put up 14 for the Hornets.

Shooters face new course

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

More than 50 competitors faced a new course of fire and target in the monthly International Defensive Pistol Association shoot at English Range Saturday.

There were two stages. At one stage the shooters had to double tap, fire two bullets at the same target in rapid succession, five targets at ranges between five and 15 yards. At the second stage, shooters had to double tap four paper targets and knock over a steel target three times.

The switch of the target, which scored two different ways, helps shooters prepare for an upcoming Glock Sport Shooting Foundation pistol competition by getting used to a different target.

Shooters competed in four different classes, which were the stock service, enhanced service, custom service and back-up automatic classes.

The top shooters in the stock service class were Jonathan Moore, Robert Knott, and Jon McMullen.

In the enhanced service class, Moore took the top spot once again with Mel Lucas and Jesus Hernandez trailing just behind.

Topping the custom service was Al Edwards, Dennis Cavender and Frank Russo.

In the back-up automatic class Frank Russo took top honors followed by Steve Zynda and Victor Hallalf.

Jeff Bardley shot the top score for the new shooters with Rodney Lenton and Brandon Reil trailing.

Earning the title of top female shooter was Kelly Murray.

The next IDPA shoot is scheduled for March 4. It will be a warmup for the GSSF match, the largest pistol competition on Fort Benning and one of the largest in the nation.

Diverse terrain, plant life make Pine Mountain Trail ideal

Spc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

outdoor corner

I must say to my own discredit I spent a long time whining about how there was nothing to do around Columbus that would satisfy my thirst for outdoor adventure. Of course, I never really took the time to find out if there was or not, it was just easier to complain about it.

It wasn't until I saw a brochure for the Franklin D. Roosevelt State Park that I discovered there is a 23-mile foot trail crossing the Pine Mountain ridge called the Pine Mountain Trail.

So, one day on the spur of the moment I loaded up my pack and headed out there. I went out on North Alternate 27 and Georgia Highway 85 toward Warm Springs, and sure enough about 10 miles from Warm Springs was a sign for FDR State Park. Once I got into the park I only drove for about five miles before I saw a sign for the trail where it crossed the highway.

I decided that would be my starting point and got busy. The first marker had a number of destinations and their mileage; I ended up choosing a 3.5-mile hike to a place called Dowdell Knob.

At this point I was skeptical about how the hike would be, but it didn't take long before I was kicking myself for not discovering it earlier.

About a half a mile in I was greeted by mossy, rock outcrops that would make a number of appearances throughout the trail. While there are clearly marked areas that cut through the rock, I found it more fun to meander up and around, creating my own unique path. As the hike progressed so did the scenery. Plant life and terrain transformed with each new mile.

One minute I was walking through typical brown woodland and the next I was surrounded by the type of flora you'd expect to be nestled along the beach.

At one point I came to the most crystal, clear stream I had ever seen. The tranquility was absolutely mesmerizing and if it hadn't been for the frigid temperatures I would have thrown off my shoes and soaked my feet in the inviting water.

Something I really appreciated about the trail was the fact that it wasn't just a straight shot on flat ground. There were plenty of switchbacks to keep you on your toes and even more hills to get the ole heart beating. A number of times I found myself having to take a rest after plowing up a fairly steep incline.

When I finally made it to Dowdell Knob, I was more than ready to sit down, relax and enjoy my surroundings. After picking a rock that formed a kind of ledge above the valley I just laid back and soaked in the lushness of the land that appeared before me.

When I finally got done with the hike I realized that the mere 3.5 miles I had gone was only the tip of the iceberg. I still have almost 20 left to do. Recently I got a map and found there are a number of falls located along of the trail. Not only that, but 11 designated camping sites.

As I get the chance to explore more of the trail I will be sure to point out places I found particularly interesting. At this point I recommend just going to FDR State Park and stopping at the first place that sparks your fancy. Dowdell Knob is a great place to have a picnic or just take in the scenery, whether you drive or hike there.

There are plenty of other places to enjoy as well with miles and miles of hiking. I'm guessing you could make a number of trips and still not run out of things to see and do.

Aside from Alternate 27 and Highway 85, you can get to FDR State Park by taking 185 North and watching for the signs. A $2 Georgia State Parks pass is required.

USAMU hosts Olympic Selection matches to determine competitors

40 shooters compete world's top athletes

Paula J. Randall-Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the first of two Olympic Selection Matches that will choose the U.S. Shooting team to compete in the 2000 Olympic Games this September.

The first Olympic selection competition will be conducted April 19 to May 5 at Hook and Phillips Ranges and the Pool International Shooting Complex on post. The second selection match is scheduled for June 21 to July 1 in Atlanta at the Tom Lowe Shooting Grounds, formerly called the Wolf Creek Olympic shooting Center.

Shooters' scores from both matches will be added together and the top one or two shooters, depending on the discipline, will make the Olympic Team. Currently, in the 17 shooting disciplines in the 2000 Olympics, 12 have two quota slots each, four have one slot each and one has none.

Forty USAMU Soldiers, including 11 former Olympians, will be competing against 500 of the country's top shooters for 28 slots on the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team.

Out of the possible 431 Olympic slots the U.S. Team could have been given, 28 quota slots were awarded to the United States by American athletes winning them; nine Olympic quota slots were won by USAMU Soldiers.

Fort Benning's Olympic Selection Matches begin with the Shotgun Trials.

April 19 is a training day and Men's and Women's Trap competition will be conducted april 20-23. Men's and Women's Double Trap runs April 25 and 26 and Men's and Women's Skeet will be held April 28 to May 1.

The 10-Meter 30+30 Running Target Matches will be April 27-30; this competition is for men only.

Competition in Women's Three Position Free Rifle is set for April 26 and 27 and the men will compete May 1 and 2.

Men will compete in the Air Pistol matches May 1 and 2 and the women will compete May 4 and 5. Male pistol shooters will compete in the Free Pistols trials May 4 and 5.

All competition starts at 9 a.m. except for the shotgun matches, which start at 10 a.m.

The Olympic Selection Matches are open to public and the media are invited.

The Olympics will be held Sept. 15 to Oct. 1.

After the Opening Ceremony Sept. 15, the Olympic Shooting Competition will take place Sept. 16-23 at the Syndey International Shooting Centre Park, which has a capacity of 7,000 for the Games.

The Olympic closing ceremony is Oct. 1.

The foremost healthcare facility in Central California
Doctors Medical Center has a great history. Opened in 1962 by local doctors, Doctors Medical Center (DMC) has grown into a 397 -bed hospital with 2,000 employees treating over 80,000 patients each year.) But DMC is more than its history... Doctor's Medical Center has great facilities: The Women and Children's Center, Neonatal Intensive Care Nursery, California Cancer Center, California Neurological Sciences Center, Cardiology Program, Air Med Team Helicopter, Trauma Services, and Emergency Center. But DMC is more than its technology... Doctors Medical Center has a seamless network of hospitals and programs. DMC is the central management site for the McHenry Surgery Center; Tenet Home Health, and a Central Business Office. But DMC is more than its health network... Doctors Medical Center has great people.

DoD promises new barracks

Initiative gives Soldiers modern facilities by 2008

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

If the president's proposed budget announced last week earns the nod of Washington lawmakers, installations across the Army will have nearly $600 million in funding to revamp the Army's aging barracks.

The construction program, which earned its way into the books of Army planners in 1995, is aimed at creating a better quality of life for America's servicemen and women, said Col. David Reed, office of the chief of staff for installation management.

"There has been a direct link between the Soldier's quality of life and retention," Reed said. "The (barracks modernization) program is aimed at making the best quality of life for Soldiers.

"Most Army barracks were built in the early '50s, before most of our Soldiers were even born," he said. "The Army has realized the problem and that is why there is a push to get the new facilities constructed."

In a Department of Defense survey of single service members, officials established a strong link between quality of life and retention.

Seventy-three percent of the Soldiers surveyed told housing officials it was important to have a private room and 65 percent of those said they were dissatisfied with the privacy in their current room.

Reed hopes to decrease that dissatisfaction with funds appropriated in the upcoming budget to construct the Army's new One Plus One barracks.

Those rooms, according to DoD plans, put Soldiers at specialist rank and below in a barracks room with private sleeping areas joined by a shared bathroom and common area. The program puts a larger set of quarters in place for Soldiers holding the rank of sergeant and staff sergeant and gives them a private living room and bathroom.

The One Plus One concept is slated to provide more than 170,000 new or renovated barracks spaces worldwide.

The posts in this year's receiving line for funding courtesy of Clinton's new $423 million barracks building project, include Fort Bragg, N.C., Schofield

Maj. Keith Johnson, Columbus' Big Brother of the Year, plays with his 'little brother' Cortez Channey and his two sons, Julian and Kyle, at the Columbus Museum Sunday afternoon.

Officer earns 'major' honor

Health instructor named Columbus' Big Brother of Year

Maj. Keith Johnson was recently named Big Brother of the Year for Columbus, and 9-year-old Cortez Channey is very proud.

Channey, a fourth-grader at Downtown Elementary Magnet Academy, has been Johnson's little brother for about 18 months.

Saturday the two, along with other Big Brothers Big Sisters teams, made Valentines to share with nursing home patients. On Sunday, Channey, Johnson and the officer's two sons, visited the Columbus Museum after attending church together.

"He's funny and he helps me," Channey said. "If I ask him a question, he tells me the answer."

Johnson spends about three hours each Saturday and Sunday with Channey. In addition to the one-on-one time, Johnson wanted to integrate his little brother into his family. His wife, Stacy, is very supportive, and Channey attends Christ Community Church with them and participates in other family activities.

Johnson has seen considerable changes in his little brother since being partnered.

"Cortez has become a lot more outgoing, is doing better in school and respects adults more," Johnson said.

Channey's mother, Latasha, is a single parent with two younger sons. The responsibility of being the oldest didn't leave the boy much time to enjoy being a kid, Johnson said.

Website offers help with 2000 vote

Site explains absentee voting ballots

Staff Sgt. Kathleen Rhem
Armed Forces Information Service

WASHINGTON — You can tell it's an election year, because there's a nonstop media barrage telling which candidates are saying what where.

But where do uniformed members find clear-cut information on how to vote in their home districts?

Well, look no further than the Federal Voting Assistance Program new 2000 election Web site at http://www.fvap.ncr.gov.

Program officials have created the 'one-stop shop' for the roughly 6 million potential voters covered under the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act of 1986.

The FVAP is responsible for informing and educating all U.S. citizens worldwide of their right to vote, fostering voter participation and protecting the integrity of the electoral process at the federal, state and local levels.

To military members and civilian employees and their families stationed oversees, the different voting rules at federal, state and local levels may be as confusing as a maze.

Perhaps the most important thing for them to know about absentee voting is how and why to fill out the Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot, Standard Form 186.

When a Web site visitor clicks on 'Learn About Absentee Voting,' several links will lead to different information about the postcard-sized form, which isn't available online. Individuals are advised to see their unit voting assistance officer.

The site gives guidelines for determining or establishing a legal residence. Some service members mistakenly believe they may claim any state as their legal residence or that their home of record is automatically their legal residence. Actually, they must meet certain requirements.

For instance, a person must have a physical presence in a

Millions may be host to disease

Nearly 25 percent of population carry meningitis

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

It was a sunny Friday afternoon in January 1999 when an Alabama woman picked her 17-month-old daughter up from her grandmother's house just south of Birmingham.

The January Alabama sun was warm on her face, but the forehead of her little daughter, China, was even warmer.

She had a fever and her mother decided to make a stop by the neighborhood care center to get China examined before the two would spend the unusually warm winter weekend together.

The physicians at the clinic diagnosed the toddler's 102-degree fever as the result of an ear infection in her right ear. Medicine was prescribed and China and her mother were on their way home to enjoy each other's company.

But after a fun-filled day of playing, laughing and smiling on Saturday, China awoke Sunday as a different child.

She was lethargic — in and out of sleep all day long waking only for minutes at a time.

China's distant look in her eyes worried her mother and eventually prompted the woman to once again seek medical help, this time in the form a phone call to the local emergency room. Again doctors told her this was normal with an ill child, and the two went to bed.

After a quick shower and primping, China's mother returned to where she had laid China down to sleep the night before, but what she found would be the beginning of the end of the little Alabama girl.

China's eyes where blank. Her face and lips were twitching, and her mother immediately put the child in the car and rushed her to a nearby hospital.

Doctors awaited the two's arrival. After being questioned about possible drug intake, doctors diagnosed the 17-month-old with meningitis.

She was air-lifted to Children's Hospital in Birmingham where she arrived minutes later in seizure.

Throughout the day, China became more and more distant to relatives, including her mother. Later that day, doctors told the

ACOE suggestions might be hit

Spc. Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

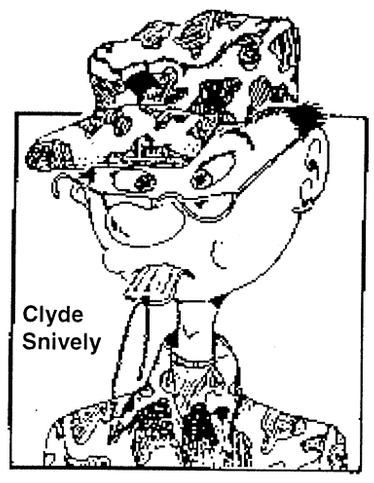
My momma used to always tell me, if you don't step up to the plate, you'll never get a hit.

She would remind me that I could strike out (I usually did), but it was guaranteed that by not coming to bat I had no chance in Hades of making it to first base. None, nil, zero, zilch.

So I've spent a lot of time striking out, which makes the few hits I do get even more precious to me.

During the next few weeks the post is going to be asking for ideas from Soldiers, civilians, family members on ways to best spend our Army Community of Excellence winnings from last year — $500,000.

Now a half-million big ones sounds like a lot of money to someone who pulls in a mere thousand or so a month (disregard what the Army Times and the Finance and Accounting people tell you on your Leave and Earning Statements each year — if the money's not in the bank, you can't spend it). But that's a subject for another column.



Anyway, guess what, $500,000 doesn't really go all that far.

For instance, it wouldn't come close to providing climate control to all the great stuff we have in the National Infantry Museum, but it would purchase a lot of playground equipment.

But oh, by the way, we ain't wasting money on playground equipment again. And you know why? Because it gets bashed. What's with society nowadays, it's as if we have to strike out and break things, or paint graffiti on walls, or key people's cars.

I thought we were all one big family and we looked out for one another. I guess not.

Now I know there are people in housing areas who are saying, "Hey, my kids didn't break the stuff, why should they suffer?" Well guess what, what did you do to prevent it being vandalized or abused to the point of uselessness?

For me, I like the trail that connects Fort Benning to Columbus and Phenix City. It gives me an easy access into the downtowns of both cities and there's this great little place that makes its own beer and ...

You get the drift.

So in my mind, the money we spent linking in with Columbus was well spent. As a cyclist I'd like to see us take some of that money and repave the shoulders on some of our key roads that go to Uchee Creek, or make the loop around the ranges. If you have to ask "why," you haven't ridden on our roads except maybe in a Bradley or an M-1 Tank.

I have no idea what paving a two foot swath would cost per foot, so I'm sure we're talking another strike out for Snively. But, hey that's my idea and I'm stuck with it.

But here's the deal, if you have a project that will improve the quality of life, is not something the Army is supposed to resource, then fill out the suggestion form you'll find around post or in this newspaper (starting next week). Or you can scribble it on a paper napkin or whatever and get it turned in to the Garrison Commander's office, Room 550, Infantry Hall.

Who knows, you may get a hit.

Fort Benning schools step above all others

Bridgett Siter

commentary

We home schooled our children at our last duty station. There, I said it. In some circles, that's tantamount to saying, "I have a contagious disease. ACHOO!"

Some people tend to view homeschool families as heretics, extremists, or to put it bluntly, weirdos. And some of us are. But by and large, we're a growing number of people so dedicated to the safety and education of our children. that we're willing to go to great lengths to protect and teach them ourselves.

I was excited to meet another group of people with these same commitments when we moved to Fort Benning. It wasn't the local homeschool network. It was the teachers and staff at Stower's Elementary School.

A lot of research and deliberation preceded our decision to put our children back in school. Along the way, I found that someone, long before me, had put a lot of research and deliberation into staffing this school. Stowers has the best group of teachers I have had the privilege of knowing in the 16 collective years my children have attended school.

Brittney, my second-grader, has been blessed with a teacher whose reputation preceded our introduction. My neighbors told me Kris Clemons was somewhat of a pied-piper of 8 year olds, and I have to agree. I've spent a lot of time in the classroom this year, often unannounced, and I have never seen her class disorderly. Nor have I ever heard her raise her voice. That would explain why all her students obviously adore her. But how do you explain the remarkable increase in reading test scores her students achieve every year?

Jacob, our fourth-grader has a disorder called Visual Perception Deficiency. That's a very technical way of saying his brain doesn't always agree with his eyes. It doesn't matter that he has an enviable IQ or an astonishing memory. What matters to Jacob is that he can't always read as fast as his classmates. In fact, he stressed so much over this early in the year, I decided to visit his teacher and discuss the problem.

Although I have always shared Jacob's medical history with his teachers in the past, few have ever tried to understand the complexities of VPD. And who can blame them? We'll all agree that teachers are overworked and underpaid. It's not reasonable to expect them to understand or make allowances for a complicated, confusing condition that few have ever even heard of.

Imagine my amazement (OK, I cried) when Jacob's teacher, Sherri Strickland, offered to help Jacob in any way possible. I believe her exact words were, "Of course we can make exceptions under these circumstances. That's what we're here for."

As it turns out, Jacob is an Honor Roll student, a Golden Stallion, and a member of the yearbook staff. The credit goes to Mrs. Strickland and her teaching partners, Suzanne Shwedo and Frankie Inman, whose constant encouragement has motivated Jacob and restored his self- confidence.

It's obvious Principal Glenn Hughes has a team of teachers who not only love what they do, but love the little ones they do it for.

In my work with the Bayonet, I've had the privilege of getting to know educators in most of the schools on Fort Benning. I'm continually amazed at the dedication and the enthusiasm they bring to work each day. They keep our Bayonet staff busy writing about new school programs and extracurricular activities because they are constantly looking for new ways to inspire and motivate their students.

The home school is a remarkable institution, one I support wholeheartedly. We may chose to do it again one day. But for now my faith in educators has been restored. Anyone who believes our education system is on the brink of demise, just needs to visit our schools here on Fort Benning.

African-Americans have contributed to our country from its founding. Most Americans are familiar with names like Martin Luther King Jr., Harriet Tubman, Colin Powell and Ella Fitzgerald. There are many others. They may not be as well known but their lives helped to shape our country as all of us know it. Here are 10 African-Americans and a very brief description of their lives. Can you match the citizens with their accomplishments?

1 His extraordinary heroism in France during World War I inspired his company to continue an attack against tremendous odds. In recognition of his actions, his surviving sisters were presented his Medal of Honor on April 24, 1991. A post school is named for him.

2 Served 10 years in the Illinois House of Representatives, voted Best Legislator every year. Went on to be the first African American woman to sit in the U.S. Senate and second African American since Reconstruction to serve as a senator.

3 First African-American general officer in the regular army. Entered military service and served as a temporary first lieutenant during the War with Spain in July 1898. Mustered out in March 1899. Enlisted in June 1899 and joined the 9th Cavalry as a private. Worked his way through the ranks and retired as a brigadier general July 31, 1941. Recalled to active duty as a brigadier general the next day.

4 Awarded the Medal of Honor for extraordinary heroism in action in 1943 when the ship he was on board was hit by enemy bombers and abandoned. Assisted several Soldiers to the safety of a raft rather than save himself. Dragged down by the sinking ship and drowned. Physical training field on main post is named for him.

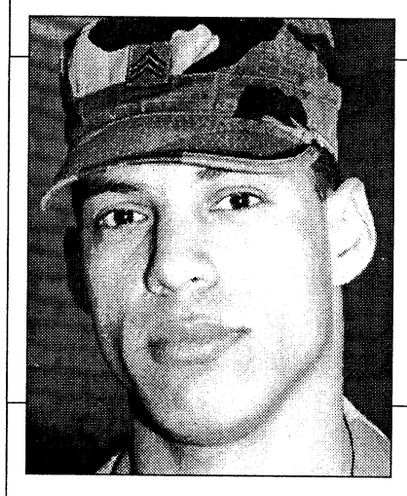
5 First southern African-American to serve in Congress since Reconstruction. Commanding public speaker. Delivered an electrifying keynote address at the 1976 Democratic National Convention.

6 Had little formal education, but was literate and became a self-taught astronomer and surveyor. In 1791 at the age of 21 he built a wooden clock, the first made in the new world. Assisted in surveying the District of Columbia. Urged Thomas Jefferson to abolish slavery through regular correspondence.

7 Awarded the first patent for a fire extinguisher in 1872.

8 First African-American to graduate from the U.S. Military Academy.

9 At one time, was the highest ranking woman on active duty in the Army. Served as the commanding general of Fort Belvoir, Va., and deputy commanding general of the Military District of Washington.



10 "Warrior Intellectual." Playwright, best known for "Raisin in the Sun." First African American to win the New York Drama Critics Circle Award. Worked to abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee.

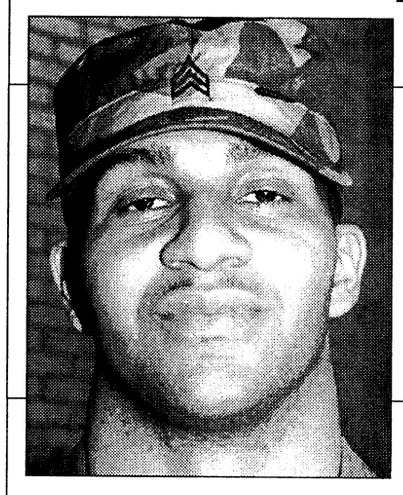
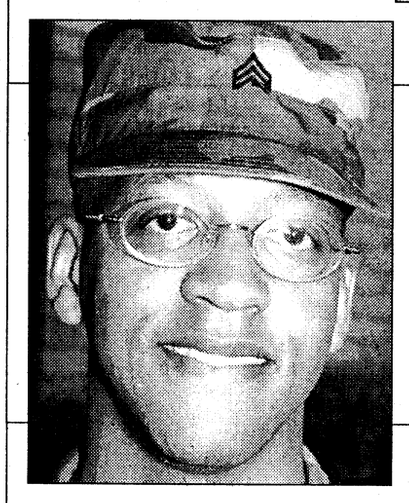
VARIOUS VOICES



How should the Army Communities of Excellence money be spent?

Sgt. Matthew Anderson, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "I think we should spend the money on a new Main Post gym."



Capt. Julie Brown, C Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think the money should be used to enhance the quality of life for single Soldiers — whether it be spent on upgrading barracks or on the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program."

Sgt. Carl Harris, Service Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery — "The money should be spent to upgrade the playgrounds, parks and recreational facilities."

Susie Nunnery, family member — "I think the money should be spent on parking in the housing areas. "

Sgt. Anthony Davis, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group — "I think they should improve the playgrounds — clear out tree lines and put in more playgrounds."

Kenya Kellogg, family member — "The money should be spent on the children, on more activities like the carnival in 1998 or upgrading and building more playgrounds."

Soldier: Finds joy as brother

On Saturdays, he likes to take his little brother to the library or athletic events around town. They also spend a lot of time playing football and basketball.

"I've taken him to Doughboy Stadium and played one-on-one football. It almost killed me," Johnson said.

At first the Johnson boys — Julian, 6, and Kyle, 4, — were leery and questioned why their dad was spending so much time with another boy.

"I explained that Cortez doesn't have what they have; he doesn't have a father," Johnson said. "They've learned that it's OK to share."

In addition to being a big brother, Johnson also serves on the advisory committee and sits on the program management committee.

"I wanted to make sure that I have an impact on the program beyond one child," Johnson said.

"He is extremely dedicated to the program," Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus Director Beth Dreyer said. "He's an unofficial spokesperson for us."

To those who say they don't have time to volunteer, Johnson proves you have to make the time.

"Although he is married and has two sons of his own, he still makes the time to be matched with a little brother," Dreyer said.

Johnson is the Combat Health Support instructor and the operations officer for the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate. Brochures about the program rest on his desk in Infantry Hall.

Before moving to Fort Benning from Fort Sam Houston, Texas, Johnson called the Columbus BBBS program. BBBS matches an adult volunteer with a child, age 6 to 14, from a single-parent family.

"I knew that I wanted to get into a mentoring program, and it provided me with an opportunity to give back to the community," he said. "If I believe in it, I'm going to push it, and I believe Big Brothers Big Sisters is a good thing."

There are about 40 active-duty volunteers working in the various programs offered by BBBS.

There is a mentoring program at Faith Middle School, and for those who don't have the time to be a "big" on a regular weekly basis, there's Big For A Day.

"Once you start, you get addicted. You get around these little kids and see that you can have an impact," Johnson said.

He encourages young Soldiers to reach out and volunteer because there are children on the waiting list. Channey waited about a year before he was matched.

"It's for anyone who has the time or if you can make the time. It's very rewarding to see the changes in these children."

Frequent moves in the military are routine, so Johnson knew from the beginning he would not be able to maintain the one-on-one relationship with Channey forever.

This summer the major will move to Koreå, and he would like to find another mentor for his little brother before he leaves.

"If I find someone willing to take Cortez, then we can have a smooth period of transition and Cortez will not have to go back into the queue," Johnson said.

For more information call Big Brothers Big Sisters at 327-3760.

Project: Constructs new barracks

Fort Benning

A barracks project on Kelley Hill and a fixed-wing aircraft facility at Lawson Army Airfield are scheduled to spend the $39 million allotted here.

The barracks project is phase two of construction aimed at updating all of Kelley Hill's barracks facilities to the One Plus One standard, said Ken Holloway, post master planner.

The entire building project began in 1994 with the addition of barracks on the west side of the Kelley Hill complex, he said.

The fiscal 01 phase of the project, which has been allocated $24 million in the new budget, will be combined with the first phase, fiscal 00, project's $21 million. Together this two-phase project will build new barracks rooms for 384 Soldiers. four battalion headquarters buildings and 12 company operations facilities, he said.

Although the plans call for all of this construction, Holloway said the $24 million will not be enough to complete the entire project.

"The entire project was originally estimated to cost $47 million," he said. "But instead of being allotted the entire amount at once, we were given less than half of the money in FY00 and the remainder is supposed to come in next year's FY01 budget."

With half of that money left in the uncertainty of next year's budget, Holloway is concerned whether that money will ever materialize.

"We hope the money will come our way next year, but we don't know anything for sure," he said. "So we are working a plan now that will see what exactly we can construct with the money we have now."

Separating funds over a two-year period for barracks construction project is new to Fort Benning, The split in funds is nothing new though for large multi-million dollar facilities such as hospitals, he said.

"This is the first time in my 22 years of working here that I have seen anything like this ever happen to a construction project of this sort," he said.

While Holloway is left to sort out the discrepancies with the Kelley Hill project, he said the 2008 initiative to bring post to the One Plus One standard is on schedule.

The 75th Ranger Regiment will be able to take possession of their new One Plus One barracks complex beginning in May.

"We funded our barracks for Soldiers and have kept faith with where we wanted to go with the One Plus One concept by 2008," said a senior Army official. "What this really means is one room for one Soldier, and another room for another Soldier — a far stretch from gang latrines and open bay-type living that we had just a couple of years ago.

"We will accomplish this by 2008," he said. "We're not going to break faith with that goal and the FY01 budget helps that."

Although completion of the barracks project is scheduled for 2008, Soldiers can get a glimpse at the new barracks online courtesy of a website launched last year at www.hqda.army.mil/acsimweb/bar-test/default.htm.

The site features a virtual tour of the new One Plus One barracks at Fort Rucker and Fort Bragg.

Total cost for the barracks modernization program is expected to cost the Army $8 billion.

Disease: May prove fatal if not detected soon woman her daughter had a good chance of being deaf and to prepare for a long hospital stay.

Breathing tubes and monitors surrounded the little girl as she laid in the hospital bed clinging to life.

By the next morning, China had suffered a stroke and became immune to any type of stimuli.

Streptococcus pneumonia meningitis claimed the life of 17-month-old China Marie Ray Jan. 12, 1999.

Her death, now more than a year ago, serves as a reminder of how lethal this unknown disease really is.

Usually referred to as spinal meningitis, the disease is an infection of the fluid surrounding the brain or spinal cord that lives in the back of the nose and throat in nearly 25 percent of the world's population, according to the Meningitis Foundation of America in Indianapolis, Ind.

Occurring in two distinct forms — viral and bacterial— the disease attacks people's immune system after making its way to the host's bloodstream. How the disease becomes blood-borne is still a mystery to doctors and scientists worldwide.

Capt. Brian Alsip, a doctor at Martin Army Community Hospital's preventive medicine center, said the least dangerous of the two strands of disease comes in the form of a virus.

"Viral meningitis is generally less severe, and resolves without a specific treatment," Alsip said. "While bacterial meningitis may result in brain damage, hearing loss or even death."

Like in China's case, bacterial meningitis' lethality can be caused by a type of the disease called Streptococcus Pneumonia. Neisseria is also another strain of bacterial disease.

While it is unknown, Alsip said, on how the disease is transferred from the carrier to their bloodstream, he did note that the disease is not easily caught through casual contact.

"The disease is far less contagious than the common cold or the flu," he said. "The bacteria responsible for the disease is transferred through the exchange of respiratory and throat secretions that commonly occur during kissing or coughing."

Even though Alsip said the disease is not easily contagious, he said meningitis has spread to other people who had close or prolonged contact with the infected person.

"In day cares or households, people who have had direct contact are at risk," he said.

While the symptoms for the disease are similar to that of a cold or flu, he said there are some combinations of things to look for.

In adults and older children, vomiting, high fever, severe headaches, neck stiffness, a sensitivity to bright lights, drowsiness and other joint pain are very common.

The disease becomes more difficult to diagnose in cases like China's where the patient is unable to tell the physician what is ailing them.

In babies and infants, he said, watch for high fever with hands and feet feeling cold, vomiting, refused feedings, high-pitched crying, a dislike of handling, neck retraction, difficulty in waking and a pale or blotchy complexion.

The skin is perhaps the best evidence of meningitis, according to the foundation.

Regardless of age, a rash that looks like small cluster of pin pricks will quickly turn into purple areas of skin damage.

This is an indicator of blood poisoning and requires the patients to seek immediate medical attention, Alsip said.

While all symptoms may not appear at once, it is important, he said, to dictate between the common cold and meningitis.

The key, he said, is meningitis sufferers will become very ill, very quickly.

Treatment for the disease varies by type of meningitis, but he said proper antibiotic treatment of most common types of bacterial meningitis can reduce the risk of death from the disease to below 15 percent, although that number is greater for those in the at-risk population, he said.

While everyone is susceptible to the disease, the MFA's website (www.musa.org) notes, those under the age of 5, between the ages of 16 and 25 and over the age of 55 are most at risk to fall victim of the deadly disease.

A vaccine is available to help thwart the spread of the disease; however, it is limited to only certain strains.

The MFA website lists possible promising new treatments for the disease, but most are still awaiting approval by the Federal Food and Drug Administration.

In the last study conducted by the Center for Disease Control, the organization found nearly 13,000 cases of meningitis were reported annually.

Ten percent of that number, including 17-month old China, proved to be fatal.

More information about the causes and treatment of meningitis is available at the MFA website or by calling Alsip at 544-1144.

Is that cold you have more than just a bug?

Here are a few symptoms of meningitis that can help you decide whether that winter bug is more than just a cold.

SYMPTOMS

- In adults and older children, vomiting, high fever, severe headaches, neck stiffness, a sensitivity to bright lights, drowsiness and other joint pain are very common.
- In babies and infants, watch for high fever with hands and feet feeling cold, vomiting, refused feedings, high-pitched crying, a dislike of handling, neck retraction, difficulty in waking and a pale or blotchy complexion.
- Regardless of age, a rash that looks like small cluster of pin pricks will quickly turn into purple areas of skin damage.

Future Bradley leaders get hands-on training

Field training exercise gives Army's new lieutenants real experience

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Spc. Amy Nyland

Students at the Bradley Leaders' Course participate in a field training exercise at Cactus Range.

After five-and-a-half weeks of learning the ins and outs of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, more than 65 Soldiers in the Bradley Leaders' Course were given the chance to experience the weapon and all its might during a field training exercise Feb. 9-11.

The three-day mission had the students making their way from Ruth Range to Cactus Range while fighting in both offensive and defensive positions, said Maj. Carlos Pignato, commander of the Bradley Instructor Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The first two days of the FTX required the students to maneuver as a platoon element against an enemy objective.

On the third day the exercise culminated with a full scale company attack. Throughout the entire event the Soldiers were required to control 600 horsepower of raw metal while working hand-in-hand with a dismounted Infantry squad.

Pignato described the FTX as the finale to all of the training received during the course.

"This (FTX) is where everything they've learned from CATD (Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate) and classroom instruction to live firing and close combat tactical training is combined together and applied," he said.

Before the exercise, everything the students did was on an individual basis, but the FTX requires a platoon collective piece, Pignato said. He added that every Soldier is given the chance to be in a key leadership position. The BLC is the only time mechanized Infantry leaders receive training on the Bradley before they go to their assignment.

A new addition to the course was the incorporation of night operations, said British Sgt. Maj. Kenny McDonald, training officer for the Bradley Leaders' Course, BIC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

McDonald said this addition taught the Soldiers how to employ the vehicles as part of a company defense at night. Which in turned helped the Soldiers understand the night observation capability of the Bradley.

While students learn a number of things from the exercise, an overall understanding of the Bradley and how it fits into a combat scenario is one of the key things the Soldiers take away, Pignato remarked. He said the most specific thing is the art of maneuvering the Bradley and their Infantry squads at the same time, which is almost always the most difficult part.

"For the first time they are physically going through the hardship and confusion of war while trying to keep control of their elements," Pignato said. "They are trying to fight on a three-dimensional battlefield with moving pieces and dismounted Infantry squads; they need to put it all together and make it work."

Bradley Leaders' Course student Capt. Robert Van Etten, mission commander, led a successful attack, but agreed that coordinating and keeping track of all of his elements was hard.

Van Etten said he believes the FTX is the most important part of the course because it gives them hands-on experience after all the weeks of practice.

"It is a great learning experience," Van Etten said. "I learned how quickly the Bradley can bring the fight to the enemy. I was a light Infantry platoon leader and seeing this I realize how fast the Bradley is and what kind of fire power it can bring to the objective immediately."

Van Etten's realization is exactly what Pignato said he thinks all students will get out of the exercise.

"This gives them more of an appreciation of the complexity of not just firing, but trying to employ it (Bradley)," Pignato said. "Compared to a simulator where there's air conditioning and you can walk out anytime, there is no place to walk out here.

They are fighting against vehicles breaking down, commo problems and trying to get everyone to go in the right place at the right time. The frustration level builds up and they learn it's a lot more difficult than they realized."

Pregnant Soldiers learn to stay in top shape

Expecting mothers continue to work on physical fitness

Sgt. Lori Smith
Assistant editor

A group of nearly 10 Soldiers and I were stretching out one cool, dark morning preparing for a run — pregnancy PT style.

Although the physical changes of our first trimester bodies were not apparent to the average eye, the changes going on inside our body were creating havoc.

While preparing for the run, one of the Soldiers said, "I sure hope I don't get sick. I just ate."

I thought to myself, "Just ate! How could anyone eat this early in the morning?"

"If I don't eat before PT I get sick," she confided to a friend.

"Oh great. If she gets sick I don't know what I'll do," I thought. We finished stretching and took off.

The pace was a nice, even jog up a hill, around a corner and to the half way point.

However painful running had become for us with our aching bladders and creeping nausea, we went on.

We are Soldiers; I thought to myself. We will not let this whole pregnancy thing get the best of us.

All was quiet, except for the sounds of heavy breathing.

But after turning our group around to head back to the Youth Activities Center I saw that we had lost one of our Soldiers. She was on the side of the road, bent over, fighting a bout of morning sickness.

It was not a pretty sight. Every few steps she tried to take, the sickness consumed her. But she did not give up and eventually finished the run.

Looks like eating didn't save her from the dreaded morning sickness after all.

Pregnancy is a time for many physical and psychological changes. Nausea often takes over for many expecting mothers, making a normal day difficult to get through, much less a physical training session.

Community Health Nursing has developed a PT program that is specifically designed for those Soldiers who are doing PT for two.

The program known as Military On the Move is mandatory for all active duty pregnant Soldiers stationed at Fort Benning, said Cindy Irwin, MOM coordinator. The program is designed to address many of a pregnant Soldier's needs.

"Four days a week we concentrate on keeping the Soldiers physically fit and the fifth day is spent in a classroom," said Irwin.

Soldiers not only get classes on fitness and nutrition but also on other areas that concern a soon-to-be mother.

Irwin said classes include subjects such as budgeting, childcare, car seat safety, family care plans and what to expect during the upcoming labor.

The majority of the MOM Soldiers are first-time mothers. But, said Irwin, classes offer something for everyone.

Sgt. 1st Class Elena Moralez, DOL transportation, who is pregnant with her second child, said she has much to gain from the classes.

There has been a span of 13 years since her first child was born. And it has been quite some time since she's belted a car seat into her car.

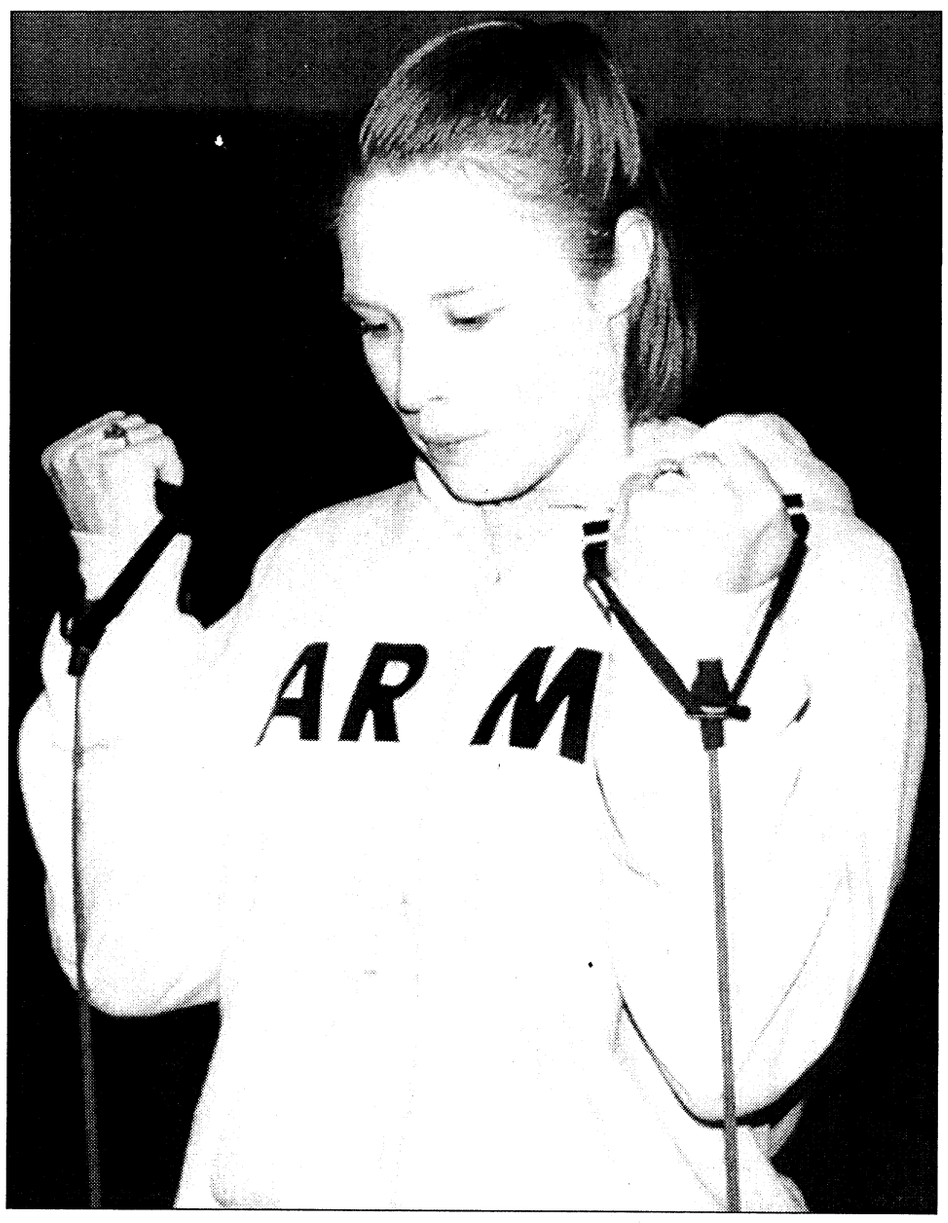
The car seat safety class was a great refresher course for her.

"The class helped me understand all the features on the seat," which, Moralez said, could save her child's life one day.

Additionally, she enjoys the guest speakers that come in to talk. "The classes are a good place to network and meet other women who are in the same situation. There is a wealth of information just talking among the Soldiers in class."

Irwin said that the pregnant Soldiers in the Army haven't always been so lucky to have their own specialized PT program.

When Moralez was stationed in Germany, pregnant with her first child, her unit did not have a PT program designed for expecting mothers. Instead, the unit alienated pregnant Soldiers from the rest of the unit.



"They made us just go off to the side and do what we could do. It wasn't anything strenuous or structured — just a lot of walking.

"Here we have a lot of variety in what we do," said Moralez. "We do a lot of step aerobics, strength training as well as walking and running."

Irwin said the MOM training program is tailored for every trimester. A Soldier can work to her ability, without overdoing it in order to maintain a level of fitness.

Soldiers in their first trimester still run, while second and third trimester Soldiers walk with the option to run. They also do step aerobics and strength training with elastic bands instead of weights.

"We would like to see Soldiers retain a high level of fitness," Irwin said. "But like all Soldiers, it is necessary for pregnant Soldiers to motivate themselves and put everything they can into their training.

Sgt. Lori Smith

Pfc. Annie Artalejo, Headquarters and Headquarter Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, participates in resistance training exercises.

After the baby is born and the Soldier returns to work, she returns to the MOM program for the six-week post partum PT.

"Our goal is to have Soldiers who complete the MOM program go back to their units and pass the APFT," said Irwin. "During this time I try to get Soldiers ready to return to their respective unit's PT program. We concentrate on preparing them to take the APFT."

Besides passing the APFT, most of her Soldiers are concerned with getting back to their pre-pregnancy weight.

"I'm determined to get my body back," said Spc. Alberta Cole, a light-wheel mechanic with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "This is why I work so hard."

Some mornings it's a little harder than others to crawl out of bed due to many sleepless nights caused by a tossing and turning baby inside. Cole said it sometimes takes a lot to motivate her in the morning. And who better to motivate Cole and other Soldiers than Irwin.

She has been there. Irwin, a certified aerobics instructor, was 37-weeks pregnant with her fourth child when she took the job as coordinator.

She said the exercise she did before her delivery made it much easier to get back to her pre-pregnancy fitness level.

The Community Health Nurse office will provide briefings on the MOM program to commanders and first sergeants upon request.

For more information on the MOM program or to register, call the Community Health Nurse Office at 545-4041.

GoreTex coat regs change

AR 670-1 now explains name tape requirements

Army News Service

A change in regulations standardizes the size and type of cloth nametapes and ranks authorized for the Extended Cold Weather Clothing System parka.

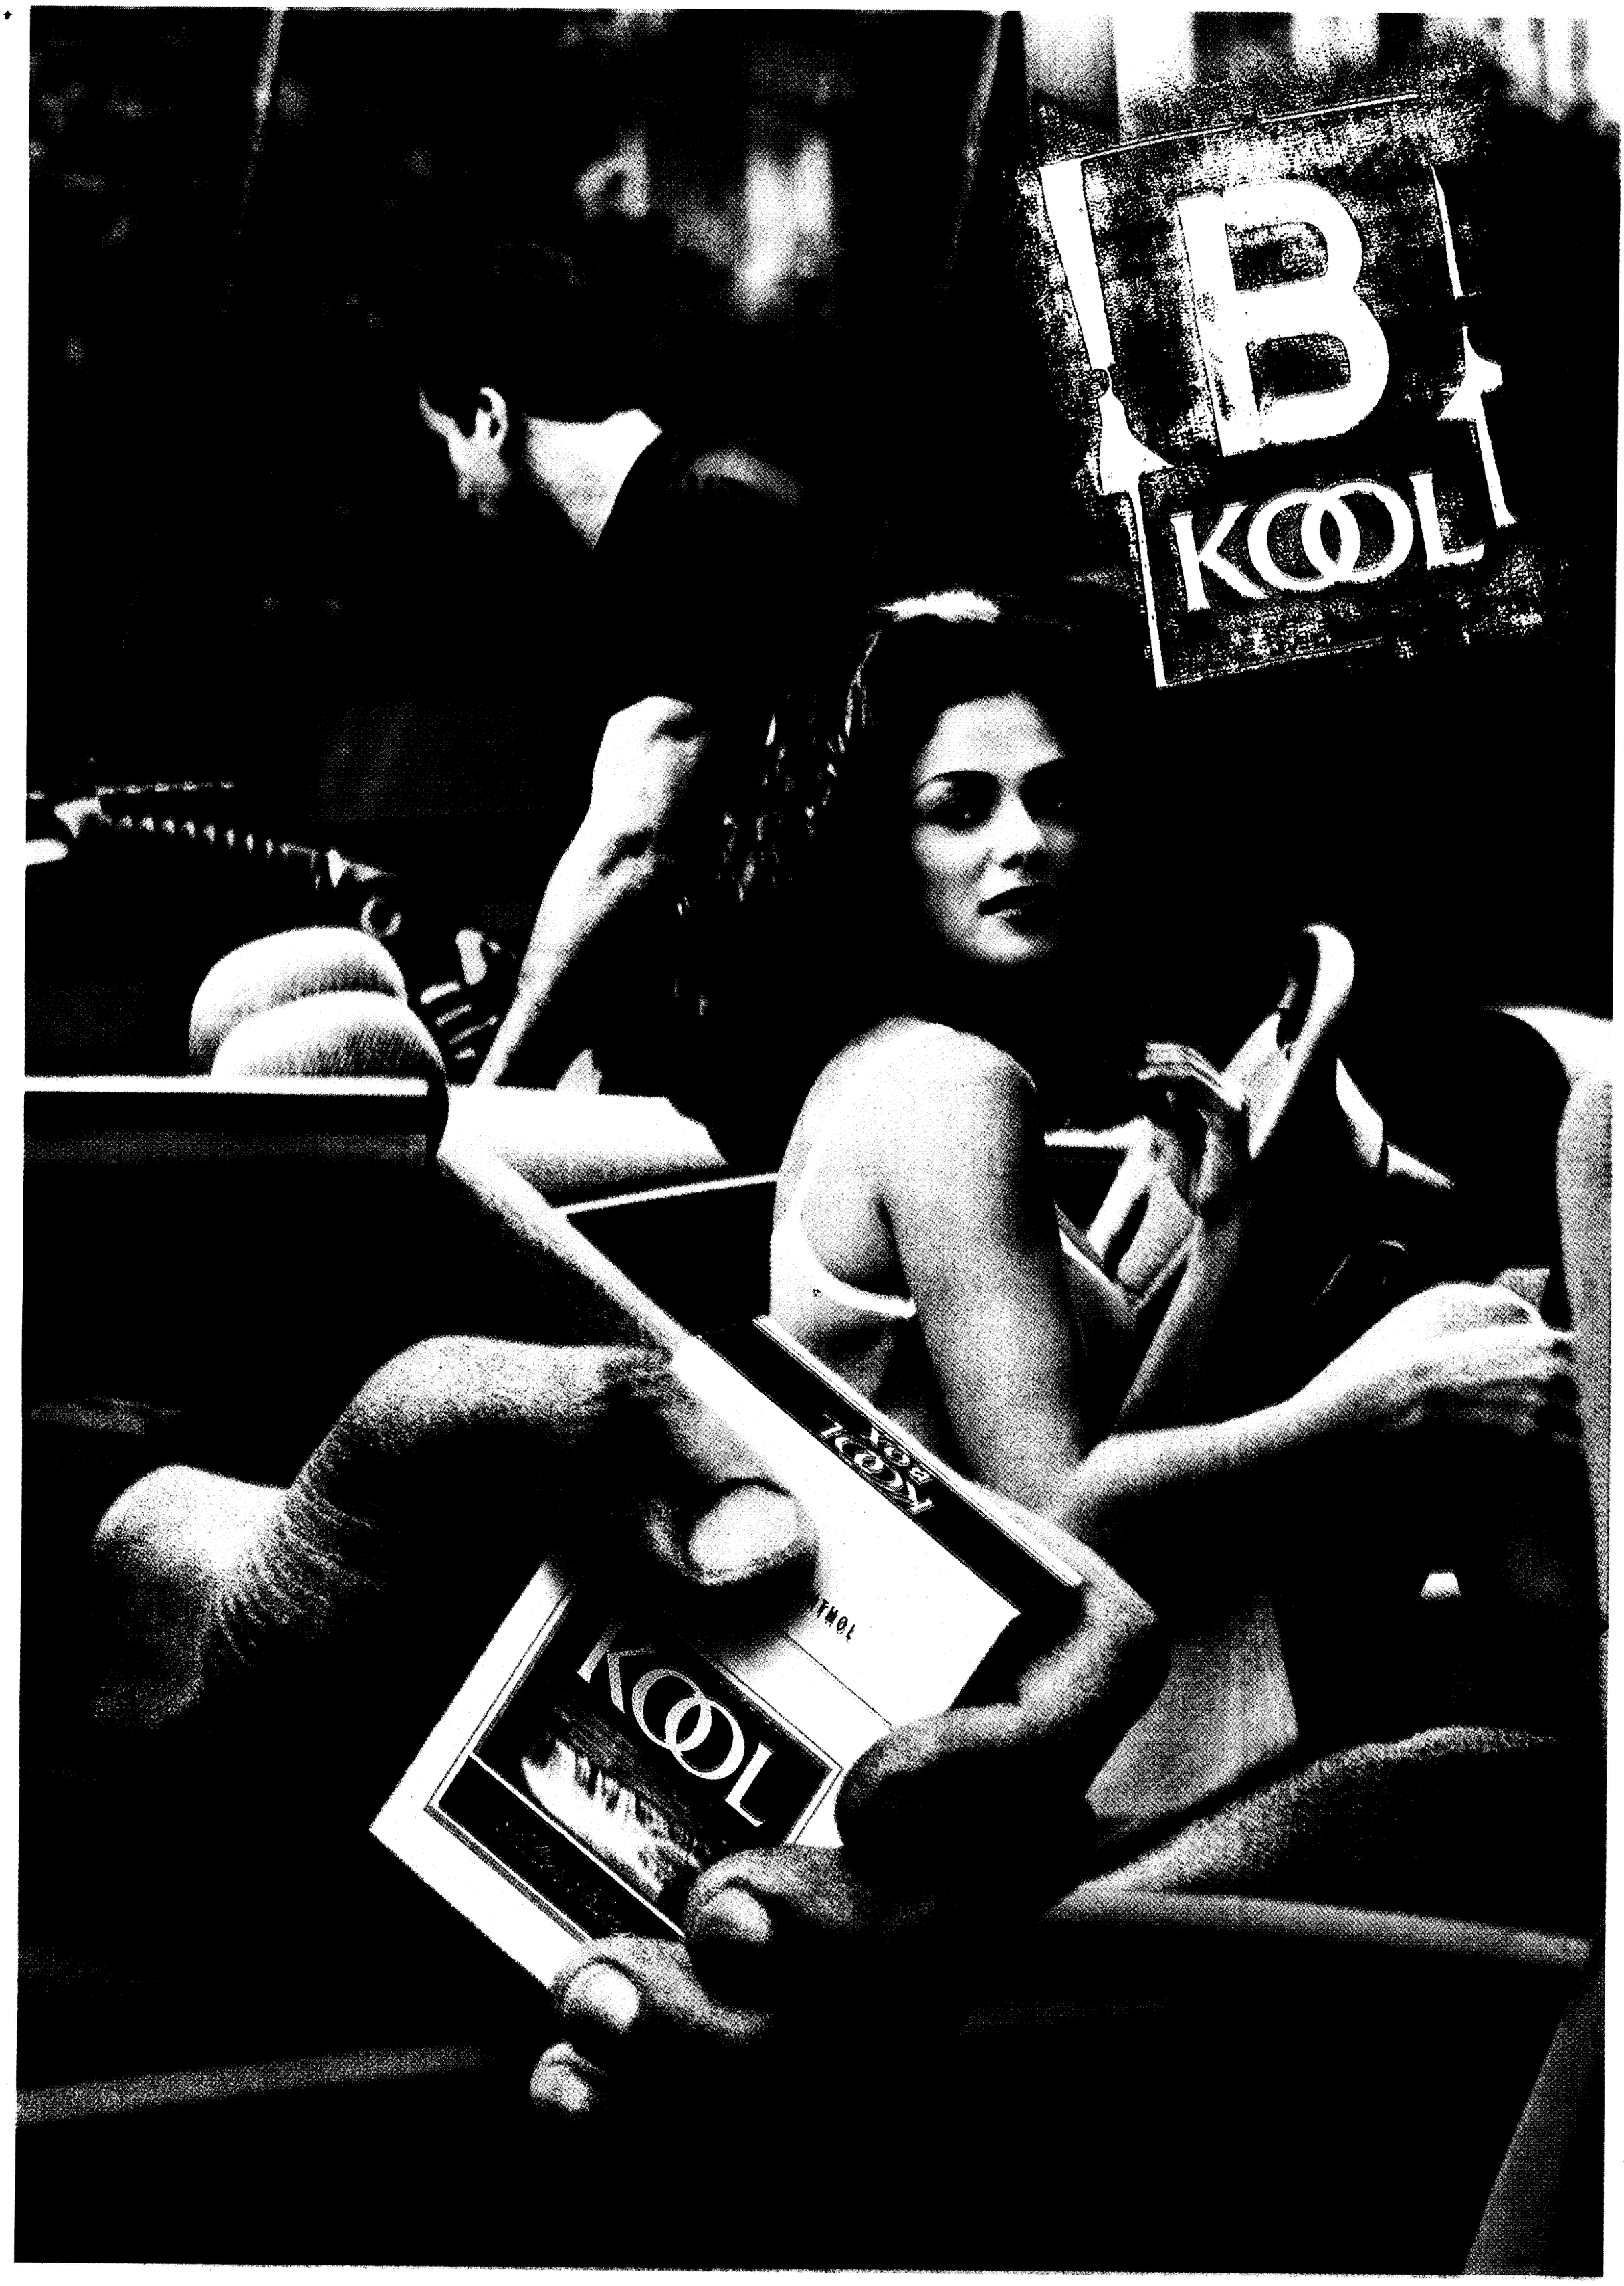
The change to Army Regulation 670-1 applies to regular Army, National Guard and Reserve soldiers wearing the ECWCS parka, more commonly called GoreTex among the ranks.

According to new Army guidance, nametapes attached to the ECWCS will be 1/2-inch wide and 3-1/2-inches long, with 1/4 -inch block lettering.

The nametapes will hold up to 14 characters and be attached to the pocket flap on the left side of the parka, only.

Cloth insignias of grade with Velcro fasteners are no longer authorized for wear.

The only authorized cloth rank insignias are those that are sewn closed, like shoulder bars.



The loops slip over the front tab of the parka the same way that shoulder boards slip over the epaulets on the green shirt and sweater.

Soldiers may use pin-on insignias of grade if they desire.

The new size nametape and closed-loop cloth insignias of grade are available in Army military clothing sales stores.

After Sept. 30, no other sizes of nametapes will be authorized for wear on the ECWCS parka.

The above information covering the wear on nametapes and cloth rank insignia on the ECWCS parka will be included in the next revision of AR-670-1.

ACAP services have time limits

Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Transitioning Soldiers, Department of Army Civilians, and family members are authorized to use Army Career and Alumni Program services from 180 days prior to separation date and up to 90 days after their separation date.

This is the official Department of the Army policy for use of ACAP services. Normally, the ACAP process begins with attendance at the almost weekly three-day ACAP Preseparation Program.

After this three day formal process ACAP becomes an as-scheduled service. Soldiers receive individual counseling sessions as needed to assist with transition planning and facilitate job searching.

A successful transition to civilian life requires hard work and starting at the 180 day point helps reduce separation stress on the Soldier and his or her family.

"Starting early also reduces problems with the chain of command because it allows greater scheduling flexibility around required Army duties," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services manager.

The policy also allows retirees additional time to begin the ACAP process. Retirees are authorized to begin up to one year before retirement date if needed.

This is sometimes necessary because of the extended time on active duty and the need to make certain all transition decisions and the job search are carried out successfully.

ACAP services may be used on an exception basis beyond the 90 days after separation and retirement. Only the TSM can grant authority, and it is only given on a case by case basis to clients who have unique circumstances for why they did not complete ACAP services in the prescribed time.

For more information, call the Transition Services Manager at 545-4913 with questions about official ACAP timeliness requirements and the window of opportunity to use ACAP services.

For more information, call the Fort Benning ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Transition and job search information is also available on the ACAP Center web site: http://www-benning.army.mil/ ACAP/.

Parents learn to give 'gift of inner discipline'

150 participants gather for annual Parent Academy

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Giving children the gift of inner discipline was the topic of the annual Parent Academy Saturday.

About 150 parents and teachers listened to keynote speaker Barbara Coloroso talk about "winning at parenting without beating your kids."

Using wit and wisdom, which Coloroso said is essential in raising children, she talked about raising children to take responsibility for their actions and become productive citizens who care about neighbors.

Three ideas she emphasized were:

• "Kids are worth it."

• "I will not treat a child in a way I myself would not want to be treated."

• "If it works and leaves a child's and my own dignity intact, do it.

"Kids are people — don't treat them in a way you, yourself, would not want to be treated," Coloroso admonished. "Remember that child will be the one picking out your nursing home."

Teach your children the three truths about life — life is not fair, life hurts and life is good.

The 52-year-old mother of three said parents need to teach children to celebrate life.

"Make life fun for them — let them experience joy.

When the kindergartner doesn't want to stop watching the TV and get ready for the day, swoop down and pick the child up and dance the child to the car, she advised. By the time you are driving to school, the child might remember he wanted to finish watching the television program.

"Celebrate in the good times with family and community, and then in the bad times you'll have rituals and traditions to fall back on."

By doing this, it helps children learn that even after they experience adversity, life will be normal.

Coloroso, who at one time was a Franciscan nun, used her background as a special education teacher to convince parents that rewards are just another form of bribery and learning has intrinsic value of it own for children.

"Most children come to kindergarten motivated to learn," she said. "By the time they graduate from high school they've learned to ask 'What do we get?' 'Do I have to?' and 'Does it count?'"

She said parents who disagree with the reward system schools often use should talk to the teachers and see if other methods are useable.

"The reward system has never worked with James," Sarah Hertig said, speaking of her second-grader. "He responds better to positive feedback."

Ask children to look over their day, to tell you the accomplishments, the failures and the plan to fix the failures, Coloroso encouraged her audience.

"Use the car pool time to listen to your children," she said.

"The best advice I got from the seminar was to give a child a chance to think for themselves," Hertig said. "If it isn't unhealthy, immoral or going to kill them

Wilson celebrates with open house

Construction ends, Wildcat Cafe opens

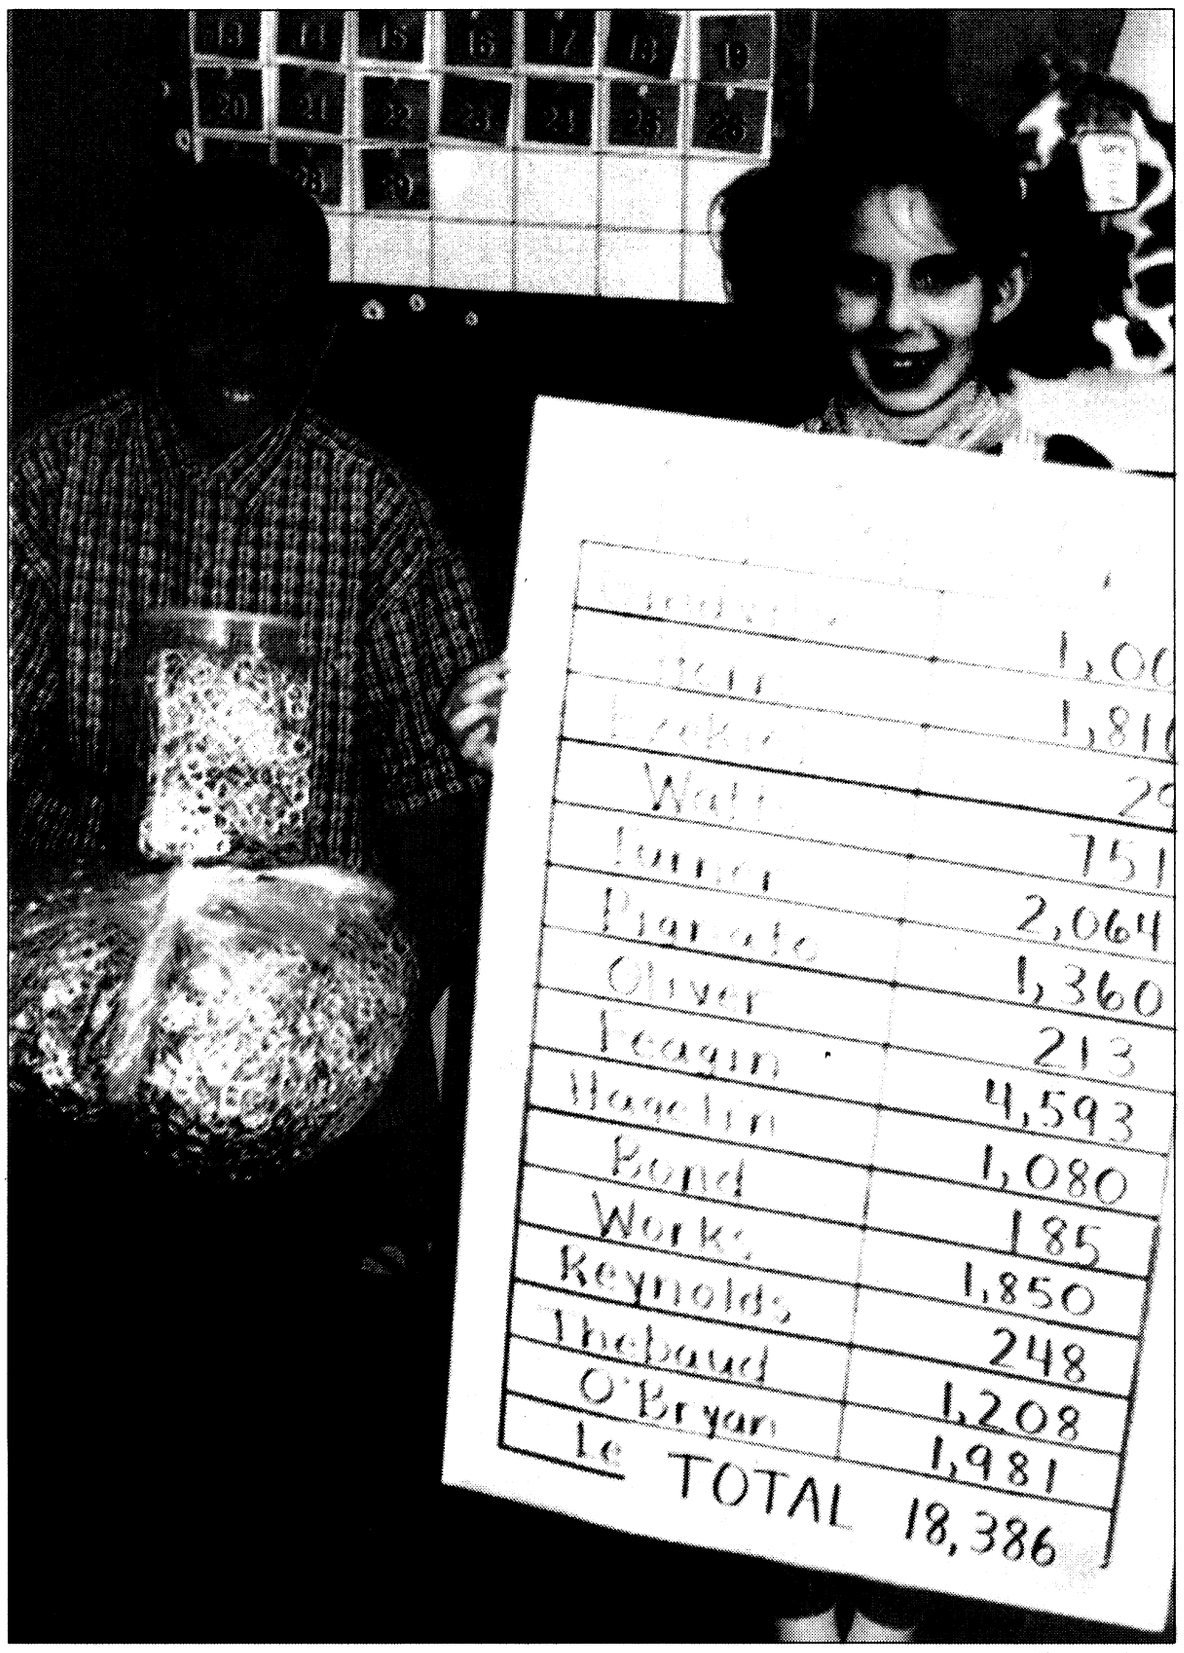
Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Wilson Elementary School celebrated the completion of its year-long renovation by hosting an open house Feb. 9.

"It's finally done, and we're here tonight to celebrate," said principal Phyllis Parker.

The celebration featured performances by the Wilson Elementary Choir, directed by Geraldine Carlvin, and a video presentation "A Day in the Life of a Wilson Student," produced by student members of the Computer And Technology Society.

The event marked the grand opening of Wilson's newly restructured cafeteria, the Wildcats' Cafe. The family-style dining room features small, round tables, checkered tablecloths, floral centerpieces and cafe-style awnings over the doorways.



"It's so much friendlier and warmer," said retired teacher Nancy Holdbrooks. "The smaller seating arrangements add to the family atmosphere." Holdbrooks was one of several retired staff members visiting Wilson for the first time since the renovations were completed.

"This is home to us. I'm excited to see the improvements," said retired counselor Ann Spencer. "The teachers are the heart of the school, and it's so nice for them to have a beautiful place to work."

Holdbrooks and Spencer both noted that new light fixtures and

Pop tabs help Ronald McDonald

Pfc. Mark Watson

Anthony Jones and Elise Anderson along with other Dexter Elementary students, have collected 18,386 pop tabs for the Ronald McDonald House to help pay the water bill.

Recycling efforts benefit local charity

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Dexter Elementary School is collecting aluminum can pop tabs to donate to the Ronald McDonald Charities of West Georgia, Inc. until the end of May.

The tabs are recycled, and the money is donated to the Ronald McDonald House on Hamilton Road in Columbus to help pay its water bill.

"The whole school collects the tabs, but we are the class that accounts for and turns in the tabs," said Terri Bond, a third-grade teacher at Dexter Elementary.

"I think it is great how we can recycle the tabs instead of throwing them away," said Elise Anderson, a student in Bond's class.

Anthony Jones, also a third-grader agreed. "I really like helping someone, even though I never have met them," he said.

Bond said she learned about the tab collection for the house while in college and wanted to carry on the collection when she finally became a teacher. Her class has been collecting since the beginning of the school year and will continue until the end of the year, when the class that collects the most tabs will receive a popsicle and soda party.

So far the school has collected 18,386 tabs. Laura Feagin's second-grade class is in the lead having collected 4,593 tabs.

The Ronald McDonald house is a "home away from home for families who have loved ones in the hospital — to help ease the bills," said Susan Yaksh, house manager.

The house has 10 rooms with bathrooms. There is also a parlor, a library, a play room for toddlers, a large family room, a kitchen and a teen room, complete with a television and games, she said.

The house is available to be used by families that live outside the city limits of Columbus and Phenix City and have a loved one in the hospital who is under 21. Soldiers and family members are eligible to use the house.

"Recently a young Soldier's wife became sick, and her family from out of town used the house for a while," Yaksh said

Although the house is not free, it is very low cost, Yaksh said.

"The guests, who are referred by hospital social workers, will pay between $3 and $10 depending on annual income," she said.

A manager is in charge of the house for two weekends a month, and volunteers take care of the house other weekends.

"We do have some rules. The families are responsible to clean for themselves. There is no smoking or drinking in the house, and they must visit the loved one in the hospital," she said.

Schools on Fort Benning and around the outlying area are collecting the pop tabs for the house to help offset the water bill and eventually help out with other bills.

The public is invited to join the school's efforts. Pop tabs can be turned in to Dexter Elementary school during the school year, or taken directly to J. T. Knight and Sons, Inc. on 6th Avenue and 6th Street in Columbus.

For more information about the Ronald McDonald house, or to volunteer, call 321-0033 or write to Ronald McDonald House Charities of West Georgia, Inc., 1959 Hamilton Road, Columbus, GA 31904.

Newest USAIC chaplain brings enthusiasm to job

Fort Benning's newest chaplain delivers brief sermon at breakfast

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Give Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell a microphone and an audience and you can expect a sermon — even a brief one delivered while welcoming guests to the National Prayer Breakfast Feb. 11 at the Officers' Club.

As the installation staff chaplain, Hartsell is the senior pastor on post.

He took about two minutes at the breakfast to remind everyone to beware of apathy in their relationships and work on building strong marriages.

It was Hartsell's first "sermon" since arriving at Fort Benning last month.

He hasn't had much time to slow down since moving from Fort Gordon, Ga., where he was the installation staff chaplain at the U.S. Army Signal Center.

His wife, Lynda, is a special education teacher in Augusta, and she will be moving to Benning this summer.

The move was a quick one for the chaplain. He arrived on a Thursday at midnight, inprocessed Friday morning and found an apartment later that afternoon. Then he left TDY for a chaplains' conference as Fort Benning's senior chaplain.

He is still unpacking boxes in his office on the fifth floor of Infantry Hall.

Hartsell grew up near the bayous of Louisiana and graduated from Louisiana State University with a degree in psychology. He received his commission through the ROTC program there.

Hartsell also holds masters' degrees in theology and education, and is working on his doctorate in ministry from Erskine Theological Seminary.

Whether in the military or in civilian life, Hartsell said he would have been a minister.

When he entered the chaplaincy 25 years ago, Hartsell knew he had found his place.

"I found that there was a special sense of community in the Army that I didn't find in the civilian sector," he said.

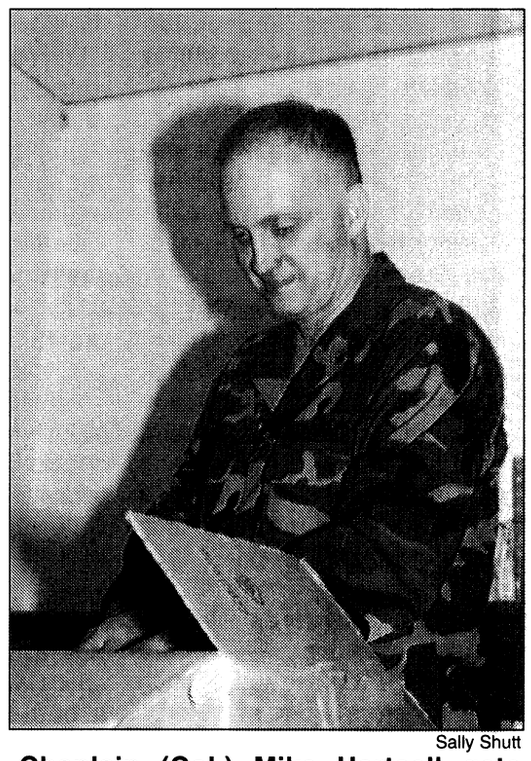
A chaplain's ministry is much more expanded and diverse than pastoring a local congregation.

"I liked the opportunity to travel and provide ministry in a wide variety of places and assignments," he said.

He also likes the emphasis on physical fitness and the challenge of being a good staff officer.

"There is nothing to compare to the kind of supervisory experience a chaplain has.

Every Army chaplain has to be a supervisor at some point in one's career, but not all local pastors have that responsibility," he said.



Hartsell is the overall supervisor of 70 chaplains and chaplain assistants at Fort Benning.

A Christian, Hartsell said that his ultimate goal is to share the gospel with others and to have "an overall positive impact on Soldiers and family members."

His overriding philosophy is "to bring joy to the workplace, to the home and to the community," he said. "There needs to be more joy in the world, in our culture and Army."

He attributes a lack of joy to stress, a lack faith and an inability to fulfill personal dreams.

Q. What is the Earned Income Credit, and how can I qualify for it?

A. Earned Income Credit is a refundable credit that is treated like a payment, such as withheld income tax. You may receive a refund even though you never paid any tax or had any tax withheld. EIC provides tax relief to low-income workers, including certain workers with no children. The EIC is available to members of the armed forces who are stationed overseas. Taxpayers eligible to claim EIC are:

• Married taxpayers who are entitled to a dependency exemption for their child, grandchild, eligible foster child or stepchild. These taxpayers must generally file jointly, but not always.

• A custodial parent, even if that parent agrees to allow the noncustodial parent to claim the child as a dependency exemption.

• Surviving spouses

• Heads of households who maintain a home for a child, adopted child, stepchild, eligible foster child or descendent of a child and

• Workers without qualifying children with earned income (or adjusted gross income) of less than $10,200.

The taxpayer (or the taxpayer's spouse) must be 25 years of age or older (but not 65 of age or older) before the end of the tax year. The taxpayer (or the taxpayer's spouse) must not qualify as a dependent on another taxpayer's income tax return. Taxpayers who take advantage of the foreign earned income exclusion are not entitled to EIC for that tax year.

Taxpayers with qualifying child(ren) must:

• Have earned income of under $26,928 if one qualifying child ($30,580 if two or more qualifying children).

• Have a qualifying child who lived with the taxpayer in the taxpayer's main home for more than six months of the tax year.

• File a joint return if married, and

• Complete and attach Schedule EIC to the tax return.

A qualifying child includes taxpayer's son, daughter, adopted child, grandchild, stepchild or foster child who at the end of the tax year was 19 (or under 24 and a full-time student) or any age if permanently and totally disabled. If a taxpayer is receiving EIC because of a qualifying child, the child must reside in the same principal place of abode as the taxpayer for more than one-half of the taxable year. The principal place of abode must be located in the United States. For purposes of determining whether a qualifying child meets the residence test, the principal place of abode shall be treated in the United States for any period during which a member of the Armed Forces is stationed outside the United States while serving on active duty. Taxpayers without qualifying child(ren) must:

• Have earned income and AGI under $10,200.

• Have main home in U.S. for more than six months of the tax year (or overseas if a member of the armed forces stationed overseas).

• Be at least 25, but under 65 (if filing jointly, either spouse may satisfy age component of test).

• File a joint return if married, and

• Not be a dependent or qualifying child of another taxpayer.

Earned income includes both taxable and nontaxable earned income. This means wages, salaries, tips and other employee compensation. For military taxpayers it also includes BAQ and BAS. This is the amount that appears on the military W-2 Form in Block 13 as the amount next to "Q."

For further information see IRS Publication 596, Earned Income Credit. Additionally, Tax Center 2000 is open for business in Infantry Hall, Classroom 1. between 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The phone number is 545-4267.

5th RTB helps with Special Olympics

Master Sgt. Dan Rhodes
5th Ranger Training Brigade

The 2000 Lumpkin County Special Olympics local winter games were held Jan. 21 at the Park and Recreation facilities in Dahlonega, Ga. Three counties, Dawson, Lumpkin and Union sent nearly 200 special needs children to the games. Several members of the 5th Ranger Training Battalion volunteered to assist the community in support of the event.

"The Olympics are great for the community and I really enjoy working with kids who are at a disadvantage," said Sgt. 1st Class Lloyd Galimore. "I really love seeing the smiles on their faces." Galimore was in charge of the basketball event.

"I have always heard about the Special Olympics and wanted to experience this with all the kids. I also believed it would be fun, and it was very enjoyable," said Staff Sgt. Chris Hansen, who also volunteered and ran the field hockey and slalom event.

Master Sgt. David Lopez also helped by escorting one of the groups to each event. "I have worked with the Special Olympics up to the state level games and I really enjoy helping these children."

"Special Olympics brings together folks from all walks of life; students and adults with special needs, families, civic organizations, leaders, sports associations, high school and college students, government, federal and social agencies and caring citizens who recognize the importance of this event and who donate their time, energy and money to make it happen," said Toni Marshall, organizer and leader of the Olympics.

As all the Special Olympics competitors and volunteers gathered for the start of the games, they recited the Special Olympics motto; "Let me win ... If I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt."

Hospital offers free vasectomies to Soldiers

Permanent male birth control safer than female sterilization

Martin Army Community Hospital

Vasectomy is a safe, permanent method of birth control that is offered free of charge to Fort Benning Soldiers. About 500,000 vasectomies are performed each year in the United States.

Soldiers who are interested in a vasectomy can visit their Troop Medical Center or Primary Care Provider to discuss obtaining a referral. The physician who will perform the procedure will then meet with the Soldier and discuss the various methods of family planning, including permanent methods and temporary methods.

Temporary methods of family planning include oral contraceptive pills, Depo-Provera shots, the rhythm method, diaphragms and condoms. Condoms used with spermacide are the most effective way to prevent the spread of the AIDS virus and other sexually transmitted diseases.

Permanent methods include female sterilization (tubal ligation) and male sterilization (vasectomy). Those who are certain that they desire no further children should seek these procedures.

Individuals seeking permanent sterilization are often over the age of 25, have 2 or more children, and are in a stable relationship.

The vasectomy is much safer than female sterilization. The failure rate is less than 15 percent. The procedure can be done in the outpatient setting under mild sedation and local anesthesia.

The patient can expect to be off his feet for 72 hours (usually Friday-Sunday) and will then be placed on a light-duty profile for 2 weeks.

A semen analysis is done a few weeks after the procedure to ensure that the procedure was effective. Vasectomy does not affect testosterone levels or sexual function in any way.

If interested in obtaining more information about vasectomy, or other forms of contraception, visit the TMC or Primary Care Provider.

lighter colored walls improved the overall atmosphere of the school.

"It is lighter and brighter," said Holdbrooks. "It just makes you feel good, and that adds to the learning ability."Among those on hand to see the results of the $3 million renovations was Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander and a school board member.

"We're here to view the product of a year's work," Mitchell said. " Although we all agree schools are a whole lot more than bricks and mortar, certainly providing a functioning physical plant and a reasonably modern facility is going to set the right atmosphere for our children."

Visitors toured the school and had refreshments in the Wildcat Cafe.

Second-grade teacher Michelle Allen said that many parents visited her room for the first time since returning to the classrooms in January.

"Wilson has always had an open door policy. It's a very inviting school. But it's nice to have a big event like this to encourage parents to visit their children's classrooms."

Chaplain: Makes plans for seminar

He plans to offer a seminar on post entitled You Don't Have To Go Home From Work Exhausted, based on a book by Ann McGee Cooper.

"It talks about recapturing one's childhood and applying the principles to your adult life. Children are hopeful, optimistic and full of joy," he said.

This is the chaplain's first assignment to Fort Benning. In addition to Fort Gordon, he has served in Germany, Korea, and at Fort McClellan, Ala., Fort Polk, La., Fort Bliss, Texas, and Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

The Hartsells have two daughters. Jenny, a graduate of Louisiana Tech, is married to an Army officer, and Debbie is a senior at Arizona State University.

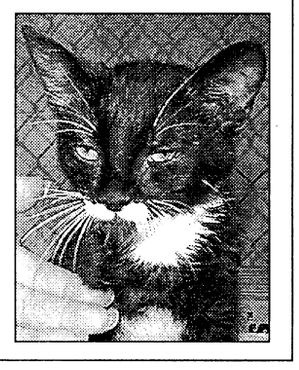
let them do it.

"The Parent Academy made me feel like I wasn't a total failure," Hertig said. Her husband, Staff Sgt. Michael Hertig, D Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, agreed.

"Coloroso is a captivating speaker who uses humor to get her point across," he said. "There are things we are doing right, and there are things we need to improve on. We'll reflect upon what we are doing now and see if change is in order."

In addition to the keynote speaker, Fort Benning educators presented classes on topics such as helping children with homework, kindergarten readiness and using computers.



"We were a little nervous about giving up our Saturday but the day flew by," Hertig said. "How many seminars do you get to go to on the outside that are free — free program, free lunch and free child care. You can't beat that."

Wilson fourth-graders create web page

Site provides due dates for assignments

Margaret Koger
Wilson Elementary School

The fourth-grade students at Wilson School are wired!

They boast their own home page that is linked to the school's web site.

Inspired by recent staff development classes offered through Columbus State University, teachers Tina Bal, Julie Miller and Kirven Boyce wanted to use technology as a tool to help motivate, teach and challenge their students.

The web site has three sections. These include "What's the Scoop?" which tells about the current units of study and other pertinent information for both the students and their parents.

The second section is "This Week in Fourth Grade" which tells about the current events in the school as well as due dates on projects and assignments.

The third section is the "Question of the Week" which is an interactive link where students can answer trivia questions based on math, science and social studies.

Although the fourth-grade teachers are presently authoring the page, students are involved in the design as well.

School photo club member Josalyne Tomczweski is the official photographer for the site. Using a digital camera, Josalyne takes pictures, then uploads them to the site.

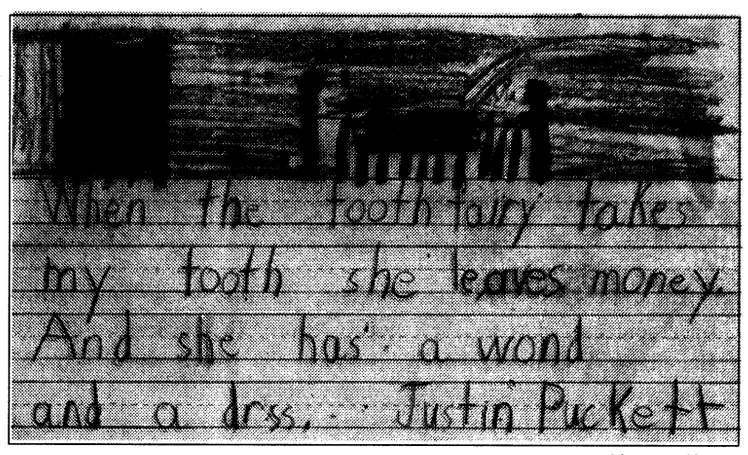
Using the philosophy of "each one teach one" Josalyne plans to teach other students so that there will be a pool of fourth-grade photographers. Teachers also plan to make the students reporters for the site. Ultimately, the goal is to have students updating the pages.

Although the creation and maintenance of the site is an ambitious undertaking, the fourth-grade teachers are committed to the task.

"We are doing so much at our school using Internet sites, and since so many of our students' families are on the Internet, we thought that this would be an exciting, challenging new educational tool," teacher Julie Miller said.

Children agree.

Margaret Koger



Josalyne Tomczweski and Deontre Bennette visit the fourth-grade web page.

"I like the web site because my mom and dad can see what I am learning, and I like the trivia question because we get prizes," said fourth-grader Mark Grimm.

The fourth-grade home page has been a welcome addition to Wilson's already comprehensive web site.

Students in other grade levels are also visiting the page and e-mailing the teachers. Teacher Julie Miller is up for the challenge.

"Education, like everything else, is changing and we see this as an opportunity for our students," Miller said

First-graders learn about dental hygiene

Dr. Wanda Person
Wilson Elementary School

First-graders at Wilson School can tell you more than a few ways to practice good dental hygiene.

The classes have been studying dental health for the past few weeks in observance of Dental Health month.

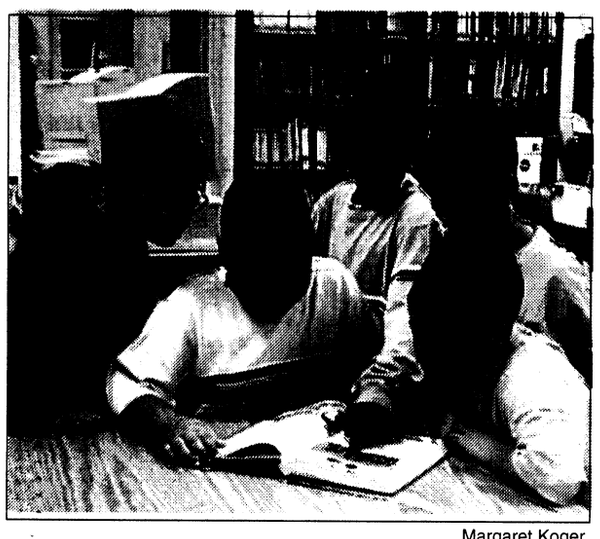
Using eggs, soft drinks and water, students experimented to find out what happens if you go to bed after eating food containing sugar without brushing your teeth.

Students submerged one egg in water and one egg in cola and left the eggs over night. The following morning, the egg in water was still clean and white. The egg in cola, however, had turned brown.

"I think this was a great visual for the students. They could really see the impact not brushing has on their teeth," Jennifer Ragan, first-grade teacher, said.

She showed students how brushing removed the brown stain from the egg and helped them to realize how important brushing their teeth every day is.

Margaret Koger



First-graders observe an experiment on the effects of sugar on teeth.

"They were very excited to share personal stories, and they were just amazed that from sitting in soda just one night an egg could be stained so badly," Ragan said.

The activity produced the desired results. "Now I know that if you don't brush your teeth they might turn all brown and you'll get cavities," said student Ryan Cofer after the experiment.

Chelsea Stephens also shared what she learned, "I learned to floss my teeth because I can't brush all of the plaque and food out with a toothbrush."

Contestants discover significant contributions

Margaret Koger

Third- and fourth-graders search for the answers to the daily trivia questions.

Dr. Wanda Person
Wilson Elementary School

Do you know who is responsible for helping millions of American drivers to avoid accidents everyday?

It's Garrett Morgan, the inventor of the automatic traffic signal.

Do you know who developed the procedures that allow blood plasma to be collected, stored and shipped?

It's Dr. Charles Richard Drew, noted for his research in blood plasma and for setting up the first blood bank.

As part of Wilson School's annual Black History celebration, teacher Joyce Leonard planned a Black History Trivia Contest.

Each day Leonard e-mails teachers the trivia question of the day, and students have the task of locating the information and e-mailing their answers back to her.

Leonard said that her goal was "to give students some exposure to the many contributions that African-Americans have made to our country."

She selected people, who are not well known, because of what they invented or discovered still impacts students' lives today.

Students in third, fourth and fifth grades participate in the contest every day. They use research resources in print and on the Internet to find the answers to the questions.

Leonard said the teachers are enjoying the contest as much as their students because they are learning new information along with the children.

Author teaches about abstinence, monogamy

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

The idea of total sexual abstinence before marriage meets with all kinds of criticism.

Why?

I think the words of Daniel E. Johnson, author of Aim for the Children, best answers this question. Johnson wrote, "... to teach abstinence and monogamy requires belief in a moral standard. Sex education without a moral base can lead our nation — and it's citizens — to only one destination: total depravity."

I ask you, is this the future society you want for your children?

Rupel

Let me make myself very clear, sex is intended for a married man and woman and anything beyond that is wrong.

Parents, don't tolerate any behavior that is going to lead to the moral decay of your children.

There is no such thing as "safe sex" outside a married, monogamous relationship between a man and a woman.

Take a stand against a permissive society which hands out condoms in our schools but won't allow New Testaments to be handed out.

Unfortunately, too many parents have bought the line that like it or not kids are going to have sex and there is nothing we can do about it. When parents adopt this mind set they are opening the door wide open for their children to do whatever makes them feel good.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston, ridiculed the idea of having free condoms distributed in Boston's public schools and was soundly criticized as being narrow-minded. However, one mother sided with the mayor and wrote the following letter to the newspaper:

"Speaking as a mother, Ray Flynn has said exactly the right thing. Quite frankly, the idea of some 15-year-old boy walking around with a pocketful of condoms does not exactly make me feel more secure about my daughter's future health and well being. When a kid gets a learner's permit to drive, you expect that in fairly short order he will want to drive the family car. What do you think happens when you hand him a condom?"

For some the idea of waiting until marriage is a Victorian-era abnormality and certainly politically incorrect. Barbara Reynolds, writing in USA Today, made this observation; "Whatever happened to waiting to have sex after marriage, or abstinence? As a society, we don't aim high enough anymore."

Safe sex as a permissive society defines it leads only to moral decay.

Don't believe this "safe sex" propaganda being fed to our society. The Biblical mandate of sex only between a married man and woman is God's way and the best way.

God's forgiveness of sins requires prayer

Chaplain (Maj.) Sherman Baker
36th Engineer Group

In Matthew 7:7, it says "Ask, and it shall be given; seek and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

Our Lord lived in an attitude and atmosphere of prayer. He was in continuous communion with the loving father.

This is not to imply that he always had his head bowed down or that he was always on his knees. He was always in immediate contact with God. He was open to God and responsive to God, but what about us?

Why do we neglect to respond to the call to prayer?

Is it because we feel self-sufficient because of our own human resources?

Is it that we feel no need for the wisdom, power and grace of God?

reflections

Do we neglect to pray because we are too busy with the common tasks of life in which we are seeking to feed our stomachs and clothe our backs?

Do we neglect to pray because we do not like to face our sins? This can be a painful and humiliating experience.

The heavenly Father reveals our sins to us only that he might grant us forgiveness, cleansing and victory.

There is a reward in praying. Jesus encouraged his disciples to believe that the heavenly Father is a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God.

He compares the heavenly Father to a wise and generous earthly father. He declares without hesitation that it is the good pleasure of the Father to give good things to those who ask him.

For it is the will of God to give salvation to all those who call upon him in repentance and faith.

The Lord's Prayer is designed to assure the disciples of the loving fatherhood of God.

It is intended to bring the one who prays into harmony with the will of God.

When we respond to the call to prayer and confess our sins, we can experience forgiveness of our sins.

We can be blessed with the guidance of God as we come to him in our times of uncertainty.

We can receive the power of the Holy Spirit for victory over evil in our lives or for a ministry to others.

The theologian Charles Spurgeon said that the Christian who departs for the day's work without first talking to God is like a Soldier who departs for battle without his weapons. By prayer we check in with the heavenly headquarters. It is in the experience of prayer that the heavenly Father communicates his wishes to us. It is when we pray that he gives us commissions and responsibilities.

"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised ... in the mountain of his holiness." Psalm 48:1

Volunteers work to quell potential reading problems

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"Those who have taken on the responsibility of defending our country are now taking on the responsibility of defending our children's reading skills."

Christi Ham, coordinator for the Columbus Literate Community program, lauded the efforts of Officer Candidate School students from the 11th Infantry Regiment who are volunteering as tutors for students at Loyd Elementary School.

The Soldiers and 10 civilian volunteers spend one hour each weekday mentoring students from Katherine Walker's pre-K class as part of the Columbus Reads initiative, sponsored by the CLC.

Columbus Reads is a pilot program with three sites in Columbus and the one at Fort Benning, which started the second week of January. The project is designed to provide additional instruction to students who qualify, based on screening test scores, for assistance with the skills needed to begin kindergarten reading programs.

"If they don't approach kindergarten with the skills they need to begin the process of learning to read, they're more apt to never develop good reading habits," Ham said. "The theory is, if we intervene before kindergarten, we will better equip them for overall success in reading, and ultimately all other areas of academics, throughout their school years."

Students in the program spend 15 minutes each day with a volunteer. The curriculum is pre-planned to concentrate on areas and concepts the individual student isn't grasping and incorporate them into daily lesson plans.

"It's the curriculum that works for the children, but it's the volunteers that make it possible to present this curriculum," Ham said.

Walker said that without the program students would not get the individual assistance needed to prepare them for kindergarten. "It's been a wonderful help to me, as a classroom teacher, to have this kind of support five days a week from volunteers. Pre-K is only a half-day, so it wouldn't be possible for me to have 15 minutes alone with each student to give them the individual attention they need."

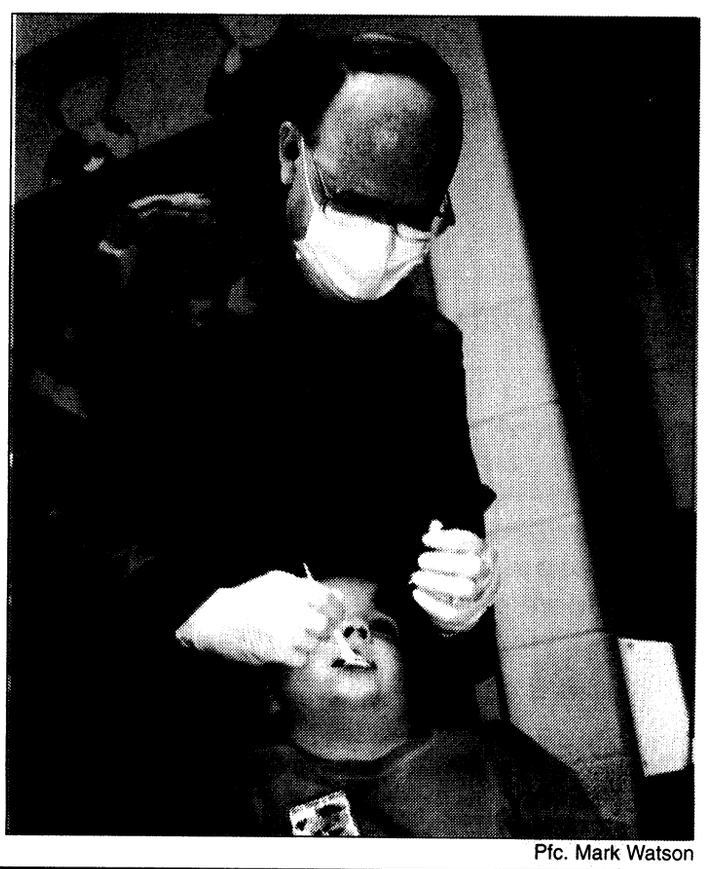
Volunteer Nancy McCallum said the two hours she volunteers each week are rewarding. "It's not much time really, but I can see the results already. It's a good opportunity to volunteer for a worthy cause and get to see the results as these students begin to understand new concepts."

"The beauty of this program is that, with only 15 minute increments of time, arm-in-arm with other volunteers willing to give this amount of time, we will impact these children's lives by showing them that their future is important to an adult," Ham said.

Mary Garcia, mother of 5-year-old Robert Garcia, said her son looks forward to the time he spends with his tutor.

"I'm so glad he's getting the help he needs. He is excited about it. Every Friday he brings home a folder to show us what he is doing. I wish this program had been available when my daughter was in pre-K," Garcia said.

Ham said the success of the pilot program will ultimately determine the future of such programs in all Fort Benning schools.



"We will evaluate the project at the end of the school year. We're looking for marked improvement based on test scores. Our goal is to show enough improvement to make it worthwhile to offer it at more sites in Columbus and Fort Benning."

For more information on volunteering with the Columbus Reads Program, call Ham at 644-0368.

Col. Bruce Clem, U.S. Army Dental Activity commander, examines first-grader Nathan Griffey's teeth at Stowers Elementary Tuesday.

The Stowers visit was part of Children's Dental month, which is when dentists visit all elementary schools on post to examine students teeth.

Children will be referred to a dentist if needed, Clem said.

Griffey is the son of Sgt. 1st. Class Rick Griffey, NCOIC at Love Dental Clinic.

Dexter takes soul train journey

Fourth graders perform for celebration

Dexter Elementary students and staff members took a ride on the Soul Train, Thursday, Feb. 10.

"A Soul Train Journey Through American History" was the theme of a Black History Month celebration performed by fourth-grade chorus students.

Music director Cy Dietrich produced the program, which featured a student-narrated slide show titled "Black Heritage and Horizons."

The chorus performed a medley of black folk songs and spirituals, including This Train, Walk Together Children, and Hello Dolly.

Led by Pam Coon, physical education teacher, the chorus used sign language and sang The Music of My Heart.

"These children did a wonderful job. The readers had to audition for the parts of narrators, and the chorus had only four weeks to prepare," Dietrich said.

The guest speaker for the program was former Dexter student Anuarite Mubangu, a seventh-grade student at Faith Middle School. Mubangu presented an essay she wrote for the Fort Benning Martin Luther King Day celebration in January.

"It was great to be here and give something back to the school I attended," Mubangu said. "And it made me feel good that someone wanted to hear my speech again."

Guard's points score Black Bulls victory

Powell's lay-ups net 13-9 win over Dream Team

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Black Bulls defeated the Dream Team, 13-6, Saturday in the 6- to 7-year-old division of Youth Services basketball.

In what looked to be an evenly matched game, the Dream Team captured an early lead and appeared determined to beat the Bulls, who had defeated them earlier in the season. However, the Dream Team's defense began to unravel when the Bulls stole a one-point lead in the second quarter.

Repeated pep talks from coach Gary Hunt couldn't revive the frustrated Dream Team.

"Once you stop having fun, everybody just gets upset," Hunt said. "We're here to have fun and learn the fundamentals of the game. Winning isn't everything at this age. Attitude is the big thing."

Attitude was the key for Black Bulls guard Tre Powell, who scored nine points and repeatedly executed lay-ups with the ease of a seasoned player.

"Tre's always the big scorer," said acting Bulls coach, Trek Dennis. "He's definitely the main guy."

Dennis and co-coach Harshiem Ross said the Bulls will continue to work on their shooting skills and defense tactics.

"We've been doing a lot of one on one drills in practice to get them more comfortable shooting under pressure. The biggest thing is just getting them to trust themselves to shoot the ball," Ross said.

The Black Bulls will face the Tigers at 9:35a.m. Saturday at the Youth Services gymnasium.

In other 6- to 7-year-old play, the Blue Bulls defeated the Tigers 12-2.

Shelia Cruz scored five points for the Bulls, and Seandre Lee scored two for the Tigers.

In the 8- to 9-year-old division, the Magics narrowly defeated the Bulls 16-15. Edgardo Rivera, of the Bulls, and the Magics' Shekia Hill both scored five points.

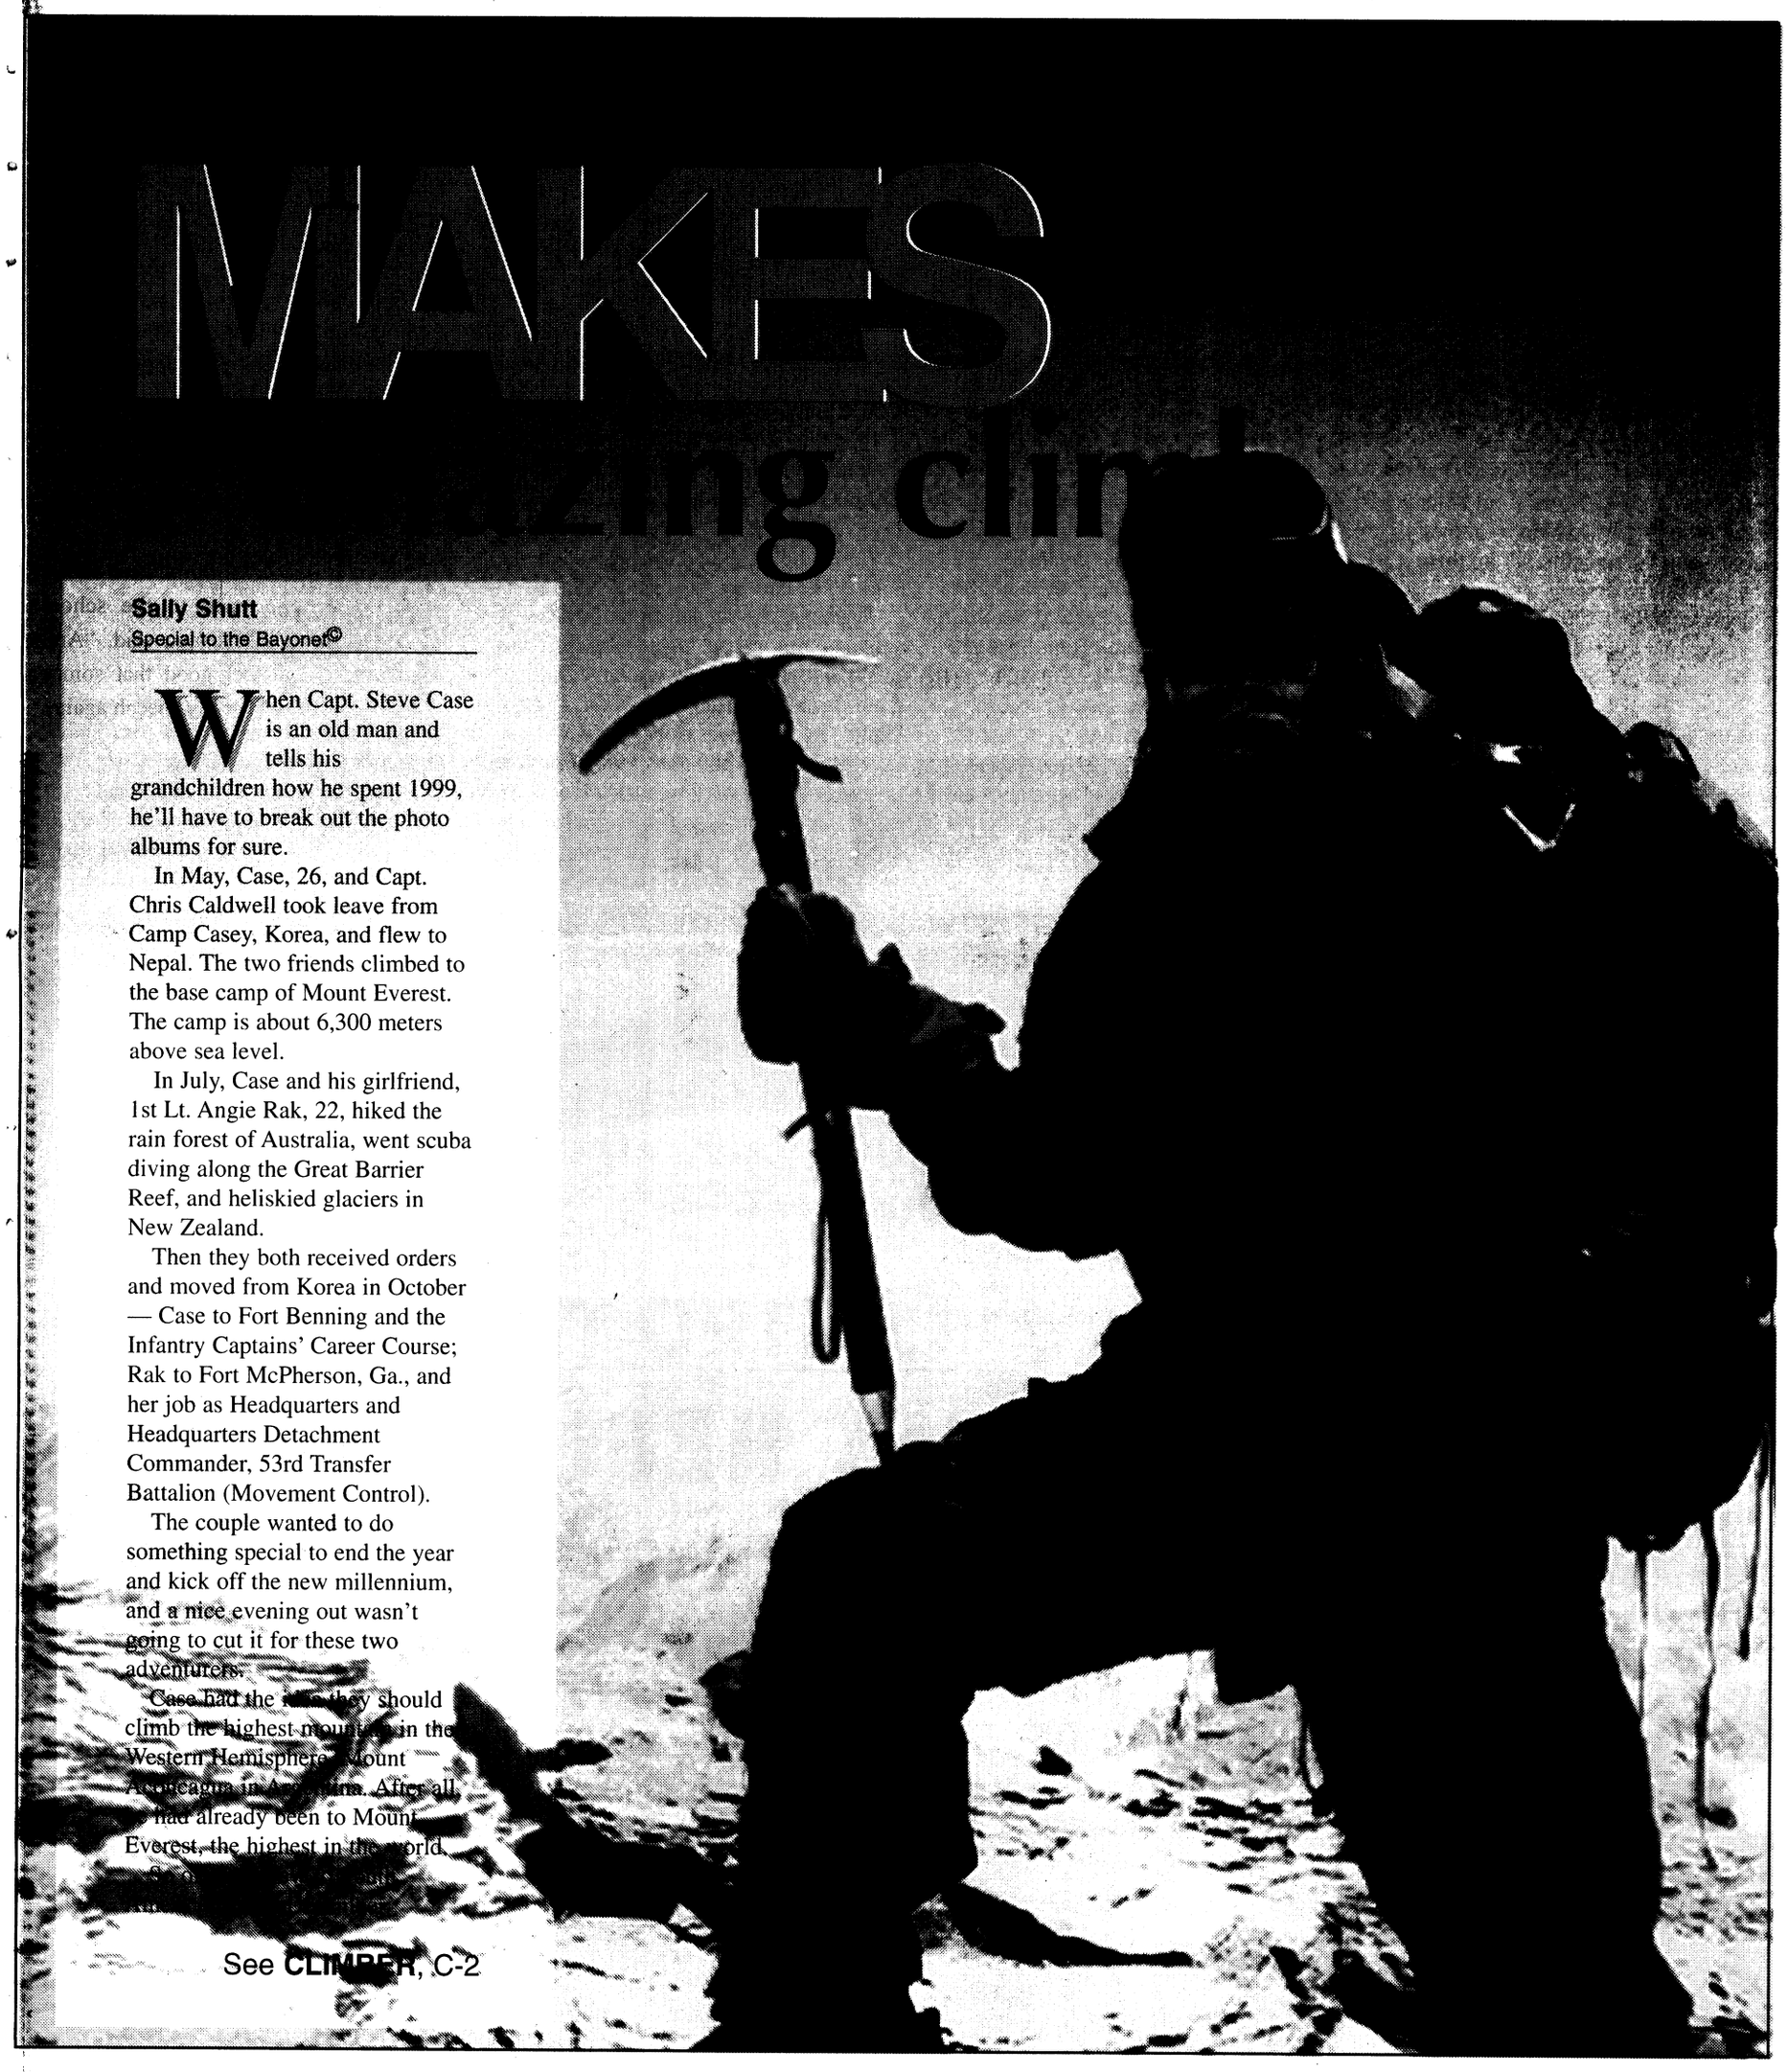
The Bulldogs trounced the Green Tigers 18-7, with Ricky Jones and Kevin Toliver both scoring six points for the Bulldogs.

James Braddy contributed seven for the Green Tigers.

The Lakers beat the Tigers, 35-16.

Anthony Wright scored eight for the Tigers, and Travis Lush scored 12 points for the Lakers.

In the 10- to 12-year-old division, the Ruff Ryders tied the Knicks 25-25. Michael Eberhart scored 12 for the Ryders, and Anthony Lacour scored 19 for the Knicks.



The Tarheels breezed past the 76ers, 46-38, with 76ers Xaiver Shaw scoring 25, and Courland Akinloye shooting 13 for the Tarheels.

The Blazers topped the Magics, 15-3. Eddie Jones scored eight points for the Magics, Graham Sherrill scored two for the Blazers.

In 13- to 15-year-old play, the Blue Devils beat the 76ers, 39-34. Joey Fix scored 13 points for the Devils, and both Darian Lyles and Ryan Roberts shot 10 for the 76ers.

The Hornets defeated the Ballers, 37-25. Robert Duff assisted the Hornets with 16 points. Dominic Whitley put up 14 for the Ballers.

When Capt. Steve Case is an old man and tells his grandchildren how he spent 1999, he'll have to break out the photo albums for sure.

In May, Case, 26, and Capt. Chris Caldwell took leave from Camp Casey, Korea, and flew to Nepal. The two friends climbed to the base camp of Mount Everest. The camp is about 6,300 meters above sea level.

In July, Case and his girlfriend, 1st Lt. Angie Rak, 22, hiked the rain forest of Australia, went scuba diving along the Great Barrier Reef, and heliskied glaciers in New Zealand.

Then they both received orders and moved from Korea in October — Case to Fort Benning and the Infantry Captains' Career Course; Rak to Fort McPherson, Ga., and her job as Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment Commander, 53rd Transfer Battalion (Movement Control).

The couple wanted to do something special to end the year and kick off the new millennium, and a nice evening out wasn't going to cut it for these two adventurers.

Case had the idea they should climb the highest mountain in the Western Hemisphere, Mount Aconcagua in Argentina. After all, [illegible] had already been to Mount Everest, the highest in the world.

Funding gives new fitness trail final touches, more amenities

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

It has been more than a year since the post Fitness Trail got a much needed make-over. Now with the help of $51,000 in Army Communities of Excellence money, Fort Benning is at it again making some final touches on the trail with a few added bonuses.

Last year Brown and Root went in and widened the fitness trail to seven feet and lined the trail with grated aggregate base, the same material that is used on roads. This year's undertaking, which began at the beginning of the year and is once again being handled by Brown and Root contracting, will mean not only completion of the existing path, but a number of equipment upgrades and trail additions as well, said Chris Flowers, contract officer representative, Job Order Contract Branch, Directorate of Public Works.

One of the major additions is a bike path that will run from the fitness trail parking lot along Dixie Road to 1st Calvary Division Road.

Flowers said there was already a worn path from bicycle use so they decided to make it official by widening it and lining it with grated aggregate base.

"We are widening the path to four feet with smooth stone so Soldiers and their families have a nice safe path to walk and bike on," Flowers said.

Another addition is the creation of a 392 foot trail extension that will run up to the housing areas just off of 1st Cavalry Division Road.

This is something that will benefit Fort Benning families because it will make the trail more accessible, he said.

"Now families won't have to drive down to the golf course and park, they can just walk from family housing right onto the trail," Flowers remarked.

As for the trail itself, the lower half, which was never completed, will be finished creating a loop connector. This means the trail will end up forming a 1.5 mile continuous loop, said Ronnie Stamey, engineer technician, Plans and Support Branch, DPW.

The trail upgrades will include refurbishing two of the wooden bridges and replacing the weathered work stations with eight durable steel stations. Stamey said these new stations will be placed throughout the entire loop.

The hope is to have all of the modifications completed by the April time frame, Stamey said.

Flowers said once the trail is finally completed as far as he knows it will be the last of the fix-em-up efforts.

Post takes proactive approach to wildlife management

NRMB program monitors animal populations

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

At the end of deer season, Fort Benning's Natural Resource Management Branch collects hunters' deer permits.

This process helps NRMB manage the population of deer on post. Hunters are required to disclose the hunt area, the gender of the animal and points of the animal harvested. This gives NRMB an idea of the health and size of the herd remaining on Fort Benning.

While hunting is one way that wildlife is managed, "planting wildlife openings with clover, wheat and other foods, reviewing plans for timber harvest and prescribed burning are other management methods," said Pete Swiderek, Fish and Wildlife supervisor for NRMB.

NRMB also conducts deer track counts, runs the deer check stations, conducts deer herd health checks and publishes hunting and fishing regulations.

By managing wildlife populations, it is ensured that the numbers remain in balance with their environment. This also minimizes animal-caused accidents, Swiderek said.

"In the past, the deer herd has been estimated at 5,000, and that number has remained constant," he said.

Additionally, the deer eat a lot of vegetation that could damage their habitat, so they need to be managed, he said. Managing wildlife not only allows the animal populations to remain in check with their habitat, but it helps wildlife watchers see a lot of animals.

"It is a really good thing that someone is watching out for the wildlife," said Patti Hails, customer service representative for Uchee Creek Army Campground and Marina.

"People comment all the time on the amount of wildlife that is seen and enjoyed. Down here on the Chattahoochee, we see tons of deer, alligators and pigs," Hails said.

"Without wildlife management, I think the animals would overpopulate, and then that could be a real problem," she said.

Managing wildlife not only helps animals and wildlife watchers, but it also helps out businesses.

"We sell all kinds of hunting and fishing supplies and licenses too. A lot of places like the PX, sell those things too, so they benefit as well," Hails said.

Although many wildlife management tools are already in effect, Swiderek said NRMB plans on replacing plantings on some dove fields, stocking, liming and fertilizing fish ponds to improve wildlife habitat.

Climber: Makes trek to Mount Everest

Aconcagua, which means Stone Sentinel, is 6,962 meters high. Located in the Andes range of mountains in west central Argentina, it's the highest peak in the world outside of the Himalayas.

Case's fondness for adventure and his determination to succeed don't surprise his father, Richard.

"He pushes himself quite a bit. He has from the time he was a little boy. When he was 10-years-old he said he was going to go to West Point and be an Army officer, and he did," his father recalled.

Case grew up in Lawrenceville, Ga., and his desire to climb mountains was evident as a child.

At age 3, he loved hanging a plastic hammer on his shorts, pretending it was a pickax, and wearing suspenders like a Swiss mountain climber, Case recalled.

At age 12, he started his own Boy Scout troop that focused on high adventure type activities like mountain and rock climbing. His father, a staff member on the Northeast Georgia Council of the Boy Scouts of America, was the troop leader.

"Steve recruited 10 of the 12 boys in the troop. When he started rock climbing, I wanted to be there to make sure he didn't get hurt," the senior Case said.

"I love the challenge and the feeling of success that you have made it. It goes back to man against nature," Case said.

Rak, an Army brat, is a rock climber, but had no high-altitude mountain climbing experience. Her family lives in Cleveland, Ohio, and they were a little worried when she shared her plans for the holidays.

"At first my mom said, 'Don't go.' But, by Thanksgiving she was going around telling her friends, 'Guess where my daughter is going.'

"Steve comes up with these crazy ideas that you think are impossible, and then we do it," Rak said.

While Case is the idea man thinking up new adventures, Rak is the one who works out the logistics of how they get there, she said.

Getting leave approval for a 19-day trip was the first priority. Then they had to spend about $3,000 each on cold weather gear — ice axes, down parkas, etc. — and $1,500 each on airline tickets.

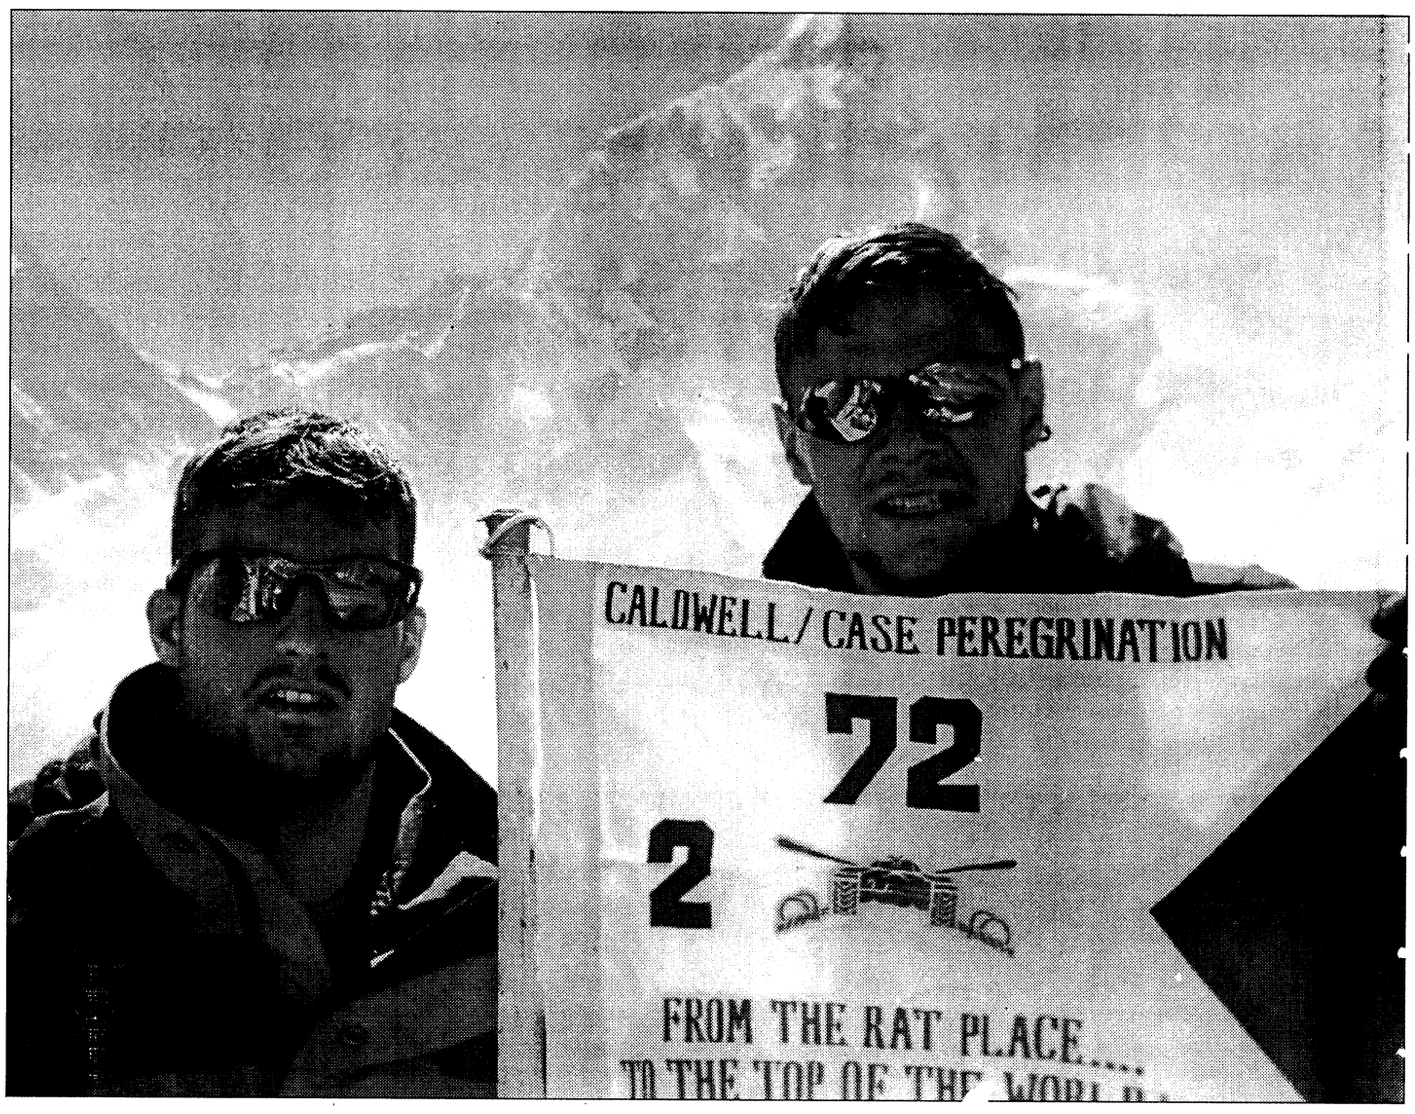
Rak researched Aconcagua on the Internet, while Case met two Marines, Lt. Col. Daniel E. Curfiss and Maj. Mark Burger. The two men were part of a group who had attempted to reach the summit of Aconcagua a year earlier.

Steve Case rests in his tent during Aconcagua climb.

Rak

Curfiss, who is the Marine Corps representative stationed at Fort Benning, shared his journal of the trip with the couple, and cautioned them to be careful.

Three deaths had occurred on the mountain while his group was there.



Dec. 15, Rak and Case flew from Atlanta to Buenos Aires and on to Mendoza, the third largest city in Argentina. From there it was a bus ride to the desert.

At Puente del Inca (2,700 meters above sea level) they put their equipment on mules and walked to Confluencia (3,300 meters).

Most climbers take a week acclimatizing at Puente del Inca, but the two had a very limited number of days.

"We got off the plane and started as soon as we could," Case said.

They traveled the normal route up the mountain to Plaza de Mulas, the base camp (4,370 meters), from there they went to Plaza de Canada (4,800 meters) and Nido de Condores (5,250 meters).

Courtesy photos

Chris Caldwell and Steve Case in the shadow of Mount Everest during 1999 climb; Case plans to return.

But when the couple reached Berlin, their expedition high camp at 6,000 meters, Rak was showing signs of acute mountain sickness, and she decided to stay there. She encouraged Case to go ahead to the summit.

Case reached the summit from Berlin in about five hours on Dec. 26 at 11:40 a.m.

"It was almost disappointing because from the summit you are looking down at the other mountains in the Andes," Case said. "It reminded me of looking out of an airplane. In fact, I was roughly at the same cruising altitude as my jetliner from Buenos Aires."

Almost as soon as he reached the peak, Case headed back down the mountain.

"Angie was ready to get off the mountain," he said. He picked Rak up at Berlin, and the two hiked down to the base camp that day.

"Even though I didn't make it to the top, I felt a sense of accomplishment," Rak said.

The headache she felt from the altitude was pure misery, but "the day we left was just wonderful. The day we came down from Berlin my head felt so clear. I just wanted to run. It was so beautiful."

During their climb, they heard from other climbers that Valparaiso, Chile, would be a good place to party, so the two rented a car and drove to Chile where they rang in the year 2000 with a family whose grandson they had met during the trip.

"The best thing about mountain climbing is the people you meet," Rak said. "They have the same aspiration to summit, and they share a sense of community to help you get to the top. There's no competition. For those who try to go too fast, the mountain will win."

They arrived back in Atlanta Jan. 4, and weekends are spent climbing in the southeast.

Local playgrounds for these two include Rocktown and Mount Yonah, Ga., Linville Gorge, N.C., and Sand Rock, Ala.

As for the future, Case mentioned climbing Chimborazo, an inactive volcano in Ecuador, and kayaking in the Arctic.

Later, he will return to Mount Everest for his attempt for the summit.

FORT BENNING'S 75th ANNIVERSARY

Fort Benning recently celebrated its 75th Anniversary, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

We knew the book would be interesting and informative. The next step was to make it as attractive as possible. An experienced layout and design firm was hired, and they have done an absolutely superb job. You will enjoy thumbing through its pages for years to come. You will also be proud to put in a prominent place at home for friends to enjoy, or at work for your customers to see. And, if you're looking for gift for a retiree, or a friend who served at Fort Benning and is no longer here, there's no better way to remind them of your lasting friendship.

Published by the contract printer of Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, The Bayonet, the hardcover book, protected by a beautiful full-color dust cover, has 168 pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, an overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and Desert Shield/Storm, detailed information on the current major units, and a variety of stories that round out the post's interesting history.

It is the perfect "coffee table book" and is a 'must have' for anyone who has been stationed at Fort Benning. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of Fort Benning, recognized year after year as. . .

"The Best Army Installation in the World!"

IN HONOR OF GEORGE WASHINGTON WHO CHOPPED DOWN THE CHERRY TREE, BUDGET CAR AND TRUCK SALES IS CHOPPING PRICES ON EVERY VEHICLE IN STOCK!

"On average, the value of a new car plummets 28% in the first week after its sale."
-HARVARD BUSINESS REVIEW

"Detroit is trying to put the brakes on sales of low-mileage, nearly new cars from rental fleets. Consumers have been snapping up the cars as bargain-priced alternatives to expensive new models."
-Wall Street Journal

"...the used rental won't even be that old. In some cases, it may even be the current model year and it will seldom be older than one and half years. So, while the neighbors will think it's a new car - someone else has already eaten the worst of the depreciation."

Think About This:

Almost All Your Investments Are In Equities. You Need Some Liquid Investments. Great, Another 2,000 Choices To Consider, Right?

There are plenty of investment choices out there. And it certainly can get confusing, even when choosing liquid investments. So we'd like you to consider Series I Bonds. They're backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Treasury, so every cent of your investment is protected. They're guaranteed to stay ahead of inflation for up to 30 years, and their interest is fully exempt from state and local income taxes. What's more, you can get started with as little as $50. And you can purchase them where you work, bank, or through the new U.S. Savings Bonds EasySaver℠ Plan. To find out more about I Bonds, point your browser to www.savingsbonds.gov, or write to I Bond Investor's Guide, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328.

I Bonds. They're one easy, and safe choice to consider.

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Loans: Lender loaces is requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered "yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you are pre-approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less than perfect credit? Self-employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge - "how much you qualify for". Credit manager Kevin Thompson or his assistant, Jim Stallings can be reached at 322-8888 ext 144 or ext 145. Open 7 days a week.

Officials say anthrax vaccine safe

DoD disregards House suggestion, continues shots

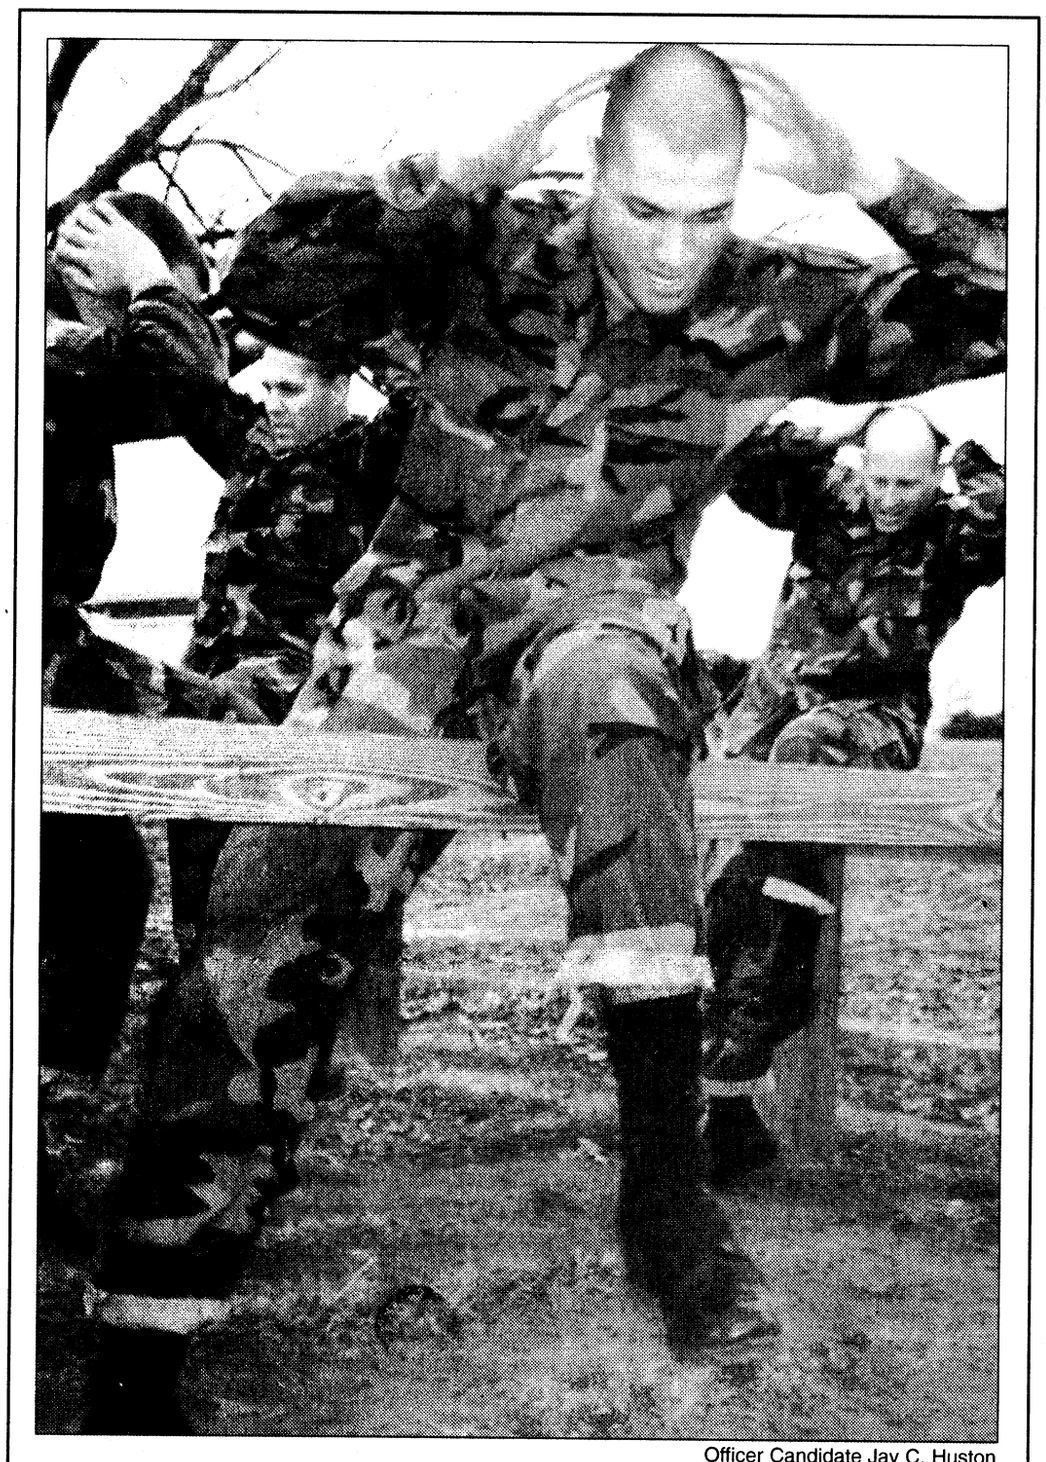
Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

"Absolutely no intention to end the program."

That was the answer Department of Defense officials gave last week in response to a rash of questions after a House of Representatives subcommittee recommended the DoD's mandatory anthrax vaccinations be halted.

The House Government Reform Committee's report noted the agency's program to inoculate 2.4 million Soldiers, airmen, sailors and Marines was based on "dangerously narrow scientific" evidence and recommended the program be halted and labeled experimental.

Defense Department officials contested the findings of the House subcommittee, calling the need to continue the inoculations paramount to the safety of America's modern military.



"Nothing the department has learned in the last two years has reduced our concern about the threat of a possible anthrax attack against our troops," said Dr. Sue Bailey, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, in a Pentagon press briefing. "As a result, military commanders consider the vaccination against anthrax a necessary element of force protection as we prepare for the threats of the 21st century."

While the verdict from the House has had no immediate impact on the present vaccination program, DoD officials did announce the halt in the second and third phase of the vaccination program until the new vaccine production plant earns the approval of the Federal Food and Drug Administration.

Presently more than 383,000 service members have been vaccinated against the bacterial disease during Phase I of the program with only 620 reported incidents of adverse reactions to the drug.

While those numbers only include the Phase I tally of troops deploying to the Gulf region or Korea, the Phase II portion that includes service members in early

New number makes CARE easier at hospital

544-CARE puts docs, meds all at same number

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Martin Army Community Hospital converted to an automated phone system last month designed to make it easier for patients to reach their primary care clinic, refill their medicines and verify appointments.

They just have to remember one phone number: 544-CARE.

By dialing that number and then pressing 1, patients can cancel, reschedule or verify an already booked medical appointment.

Other choices on the phone menu will transfer them to the Tricare Service Center, Central Triage, speciality clinics or the Patient Affairs Liaison. And, as some have already discovered, they can even leave a confidential message for the hospital commander, Col. Jim Beson.

These messages are checked daily, Carol Cain, chief of Beneficiary Services Section, Healthcare Management Division, said.

The new Access to Care automated phone service started Jan. 18.

Outside the local calling area, patients can call toll-free 1-888-293-2148.

The phone system is part of a region-wide initiative. Three months ago, Eisenhower Medical Center at Fort Gordon started its automated phone service.

"We are doing all these new innovations to improve access to health care," Cain said.

In addition to incoming calls, the system also phones between 800 and 900 patients each weekday evening reminding them of their medical appointments two days later.

However, Cain cautions patients who are undergoing certain procedures to beware. The automated message will give them the time they are scheduled for the procedure, not the time they should report, which would be earlier.

"Do as you were instructed by the clinic and report when they told you to, not at the time given on the tape," Cain said.

The reminders and the easy-access cancellation line should help improve the hospital's no-show rate, Cain said.

Some problems have been noted during the first month.

Pharmacy callers have complained that they have not been able to get through to the automated refill system, according to Capt. Dwayne Steele, assistant chief for Pharmacy Services.

After dialing 544-CARE, pharmacy callers should immediately press 3 and listen for the menu.

Thousands of dollars available for projects

Post nets $500K in ACOE competition

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

Want a new playground in your housing area? How does a new waterslide at the Main Post pool sound?

These are just some of the ideas Fort Benning's Directorate of Resource Management is fielding as possible ways to spend the $500,000 in award funds received early this year for earning the top spot in the annual Army Communities of Excellence competition.

The award marks the fourth time the post has scored the Commander in Chief's Award from ACOE and the fourth time the DRM has searched for ways to spend the grand prize pot.

"Looking back on all of the projects we have accomplished with the ACOE funds, it really is amazing everything we have built or improved," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

Now Walls, along with help from DRM, is searching for ways to once again turn those amazing projects into reality.

"We are looking for ideas on projects that we could spend the money on that would benefit all those who worked hard to win the award," he said. "We want it to be something that would touch all of the people."

Walls said in the past the funds went to numerous projects around post including the addition of playground equipment in various housing areas, addition of equipment at the auto craft center, gym renovations, an upgrade of the post telephone system and building the Fort Benning portion of the Riverwalk.

So what does Walls have in store for the expenditure of this year's funds? He said that is the question he and DRM are asking the Fort Benning team.

> "We are looking for ideas on projects that we could spend the money on that would benefit all those who worked hard to win the award."
> — Chuck Walls
> Garrison manager

"DRM will be accepting ideas for the money until this spring," Walls said. "We just ask when individuals submit their ideas it be a project that has impact on more than just one unit or one group of people.

"We want to use the money to benefit as many people as possible," he said "We want to sprinkle the wealth among all of those who worked hard to earn the prize, but we don't want to water it down."

Walls said while those suggestions for how the money is spent will be reviewed, he said renovation of barracks or building new facilities that would consume the entire ACOE award will not be considered.

Although Walls said he hasn't yet heard of any possible projects for this year's ACOE expenditures, he said he could be almost certain of two that would make the possibility list.

"We always see gyms and playgrounds appearing on the list," he said.

Those casting ballots for ideas on how the funds should be spent should direct their ballots to DRM, Building 66 on Main Post.

"If we get the decision made early this spring, we could begin making purchases in the late spring or early summer," he said. "The deadline becomes even more important in the case of a building project where a contract has to be bid."

Siren warns of coming storm

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

commentary

Tornadoes ripped through southern Georgia Feb. 13 killing 22 people.

Our area was under tornado watch and tornado warning for most of the evening and early morning.

The Fort Benning severe weather siren blasted through the air around 6 p.m. while I was fixing dinner. Apparently a funnel cloud was sighted just off Custer Road and Interstate 185. Luckily it didn't touch down.

When I heard the siren my first instinct was panic — TORNADO! Images of the Wicked Witch and Dorothy's house from the Wizard of Oz went spinning through my mind.

My second thought was wishing I had paid closer attention to the info graphics that papers run when severe weather threatens.

I had seen the severe weather graphics in the corner of the TV telling me that the surrounding counties were under tornado warnings, watches and severe thunderstorms. But what do you do? Watch the TV? Pray? Continue with dinner?

Because I have no rooms without windows and the hallway is 4 feet long and within 4 feet of any window I decided to finish getting dinner ready with numerous prayers.

I also opened the back door and went outside ... stupid. What was I thinking? Obviously I wasn't.

Next time I will think, and because of where we live — there will be a next time.

When the severe weather siren sounds next time I will have a family disaster plan and have a disaster supplies kit, which will include leftover Y2K supplies.

A family disaster plan includes information about the type of severe weather that can occur in the area and the community's warning signal (the severe weather warning siren) for the weather. The plan also includes emergency phone numbers.

A disaster supplies kit includes a three-day supply of water for each family member; a blanket or sleeping bag per person; a first-aid kit that includes prescription medicines; and the normal supplies, which include nonperishable food, extra batteries, portable radio and flashlights. I'll keep my cell phone handy in case the walls crash in.

After the family disaster plan is in place, I plan to practice it. This means I won't ask my 8-year-old daughter to run outside to see if she sees anything.

When I heard the tornado siren I immediately called the staff duty number, 545-2218, which was busy. My reason for calling was to make sure I wasn't panicking for no reason — wouldn't want to do that.

Next time the siren blasts, I will have supplies and a safe place to take refuge, and it won't be in the car trying to outrun the storm.

Pets deserve same respect as children

commentary

Just about everyone likes to make a point about something, especially me. Of course, I am lucky enough to have the paper to torture everyone with my points, this time being no different.

I feel I must take this opportunity to stand up for all of the innocent creatures who line the cages at the Fort Benning adoption kennel. Every week I visit these animals and take their pictures for the Pet of the Week feature. Every week I arrive with mixed emotions.

First, I am happy to see my friends. I go through my oooos and ahhhhhs over how cute and cuddly they all are, greet the new arrivals and find out which ones were lucky enough to go to a home. But it doesn't take long for my happiness to turn to rage when I see a blaring sign on one of the cages that reads "neglect" or "abuse." Something that is not uncommon at the kennels.

During the last year or so since I've been taking the photos, I have heard some pretty incredible stories of neglect and abuse. Not only that but I have actually witnessed instances gruesome enough to turn my stomach inside out.

I have seen dogs and cats so skinny you could literally count each and every rib. I have seen animals with horrible, festering soars and infections and cases of thick mites and fleas.

Of course, I could never forget the poor dog whose owner had tied an ordinary belt around its neck as a collar and failed to loosen it as the animal grew. The belt actually began to grow into the skin of the neck, and when it had to finally be removed it was like pulling velcro apart. Underneath the belt the skin was rotting and infected.

Then there are the stories of pets being taken from homes on post where the conditions were so deplorable it made the Animal Control sick. Or instances where animals have been locked up for ungodly amounts of time without food or water in the sweltering heat.

All of this is absolutely unbelievable to me. We are talking about adults here. Supposedly full-fledged grown-ups who have taken an animal into their home with the intent of loving and caring for it.

In my eyes there is no difference between child abuse and animal abuse. Most of these people probably wouldn't leave their children chained up in a shed for days on end to roast, starve and dehydrate, yet it's OK for an animal. I just don't get it.

I applaud those people who are looking out for their neighborhood pets. More often than not it is a concerned neighbor who calls Animal Control if they feel something is not right. This is the way it should be.

If you know an animal is being treated cruelly and you do not report it, it would be the same as just sitting back while a young child was being beaten.

I'll admit that animal abusers are the exception to the rule. Most people love and cherish their pets and would do anything for them. But, just like anything else, you always have a few bad apples in a bunch.

Of course, me telling these people they are bad isn't going to solve anything. All I can do is urge everyone to get involved and keep an eye out for their neighborhood pets. If something seems fishy, it probably is. Call Animal Control at 545-5222 to assess the situation; they will be able to make the best judgement. While these innocent creatures cannot make a stand for themselves, surely someone can.

Reader compliments military police, Soldiers

It has been my pleasure to call the Fort Benning MP station on several occasions to compliment the most visible of your troops: the MP's who patrol the highway.

Specifically, I would like to single out Specialists Tamara Lee and Brian Alford, both of whom I have spoken with and come away impressed with their professionalism and courtesy. But I see that in every MP along the road: helping motorists, giving directions, etc. This is, by far, the most professional police agency I have seen in years: not an overwhelming presence or aggressiveness, just an even-handed, approach wherein all motorists are treated the same — and very well at that.

I have lived in places (none in Georgia) where the police agencies were not all that good in terms of manpower and dealings with civilians — places you would dread being stopped because the routine varied with the officer. That's why I have been so pleased with the quality of the Fort Benning MPs, the difference really is night and day.

Additionally I want to commend the troops I see in the Cusseta area using commercial establishments. These are some of the best behaved military personnel I've seen: polite, courteous and always watchful in the restaurants that their table is not making too much noise. This may be taken for granted by old locals, but this new local is impressed. But maybe I really should not be all that surprised: elite troops always seem to have a good demeanor and snappy "YESSIR."

Many people have lamented I live near Benning with all the familiar "...living near a base is terrible ..." comments etc.

You've heard all that before. But I can't agree with any of them. Fort Benning is a good neighbor and the troops are well behaved and it's a pleasure to see it day in and day out.

I also hear comments about noise from the ranges. Surely there can be no new homeowners or residents who didn't know a military base is there. The sound is certainly no worse than a thunderstorm approaching across the desert, the distant rumblings adding a low frequency throb to the wind. The live-fire is no worse than that. Hey, it's reassuring to me: I wave at the helicopters and always smile inwardly at the sound of the live-fire ranges: the troops are out there maintaining that razor's edge of performance which stands out so well during operations.

Next open house at Benning, I'll be there — I want to see up close who is turning out such good troops and tell them it makes me feel safe and proud. The cadre deserves as much praise as the troops and I commend Staff Sgt. Jeffrey Cassell and Lt. Col. Terry Kelly on the performance of their unit.

Fort Benning is Columbus' and Chattahoochee County's home team and I am proud to consider them "ours."

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller said he is concerned about the excessive use of profanity in the workplace and all over post from military to civilian personnel. He wanted to know what the CG's policy is on profanity.

Garrison commander's response: USAIC Regulation 210-5, Garrison Regulation, Aug. 6, 1998, addresses prohibitions against profanity and obscene language on the installation, in Chapter 4, paragraph 4-5: The use of obscene, vulgar or profane language in any public area on the Fort Benning military reservation is prohibited. Language is obscene, vulgar or profane when, under circumstances and manner in which such utterance was made, it would clearly offend a reasonable person's sense of decency." The Garrison NCOIC sent e-mail reminders to all major subordinate commands and command sergeant majors to remind them of the policy.

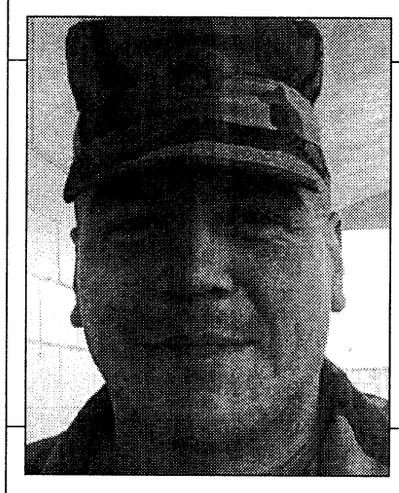
Call: Caller said he is concerned with "loose" formations of Soldiers running in dark hours at the back part of post past Eddy Bridge, and on Kelley Hill. He pointed out that these runners were lacking reflective gear and were not part of a controlled group. He said he is concerned that Soldiers are going to get hurt or killed.

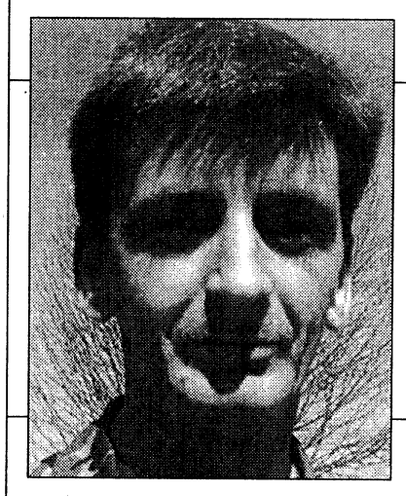
Directorate of Public Safety response: The Installation Safety Officer assured the caller that the Military Police would increase patrolling around the PT running routes and reminders would be published via a Safety Alert from the installation chief of staff. The Director of Public Safety would discuss this issue with all MSC commanders during the Commanding General's luncheon.



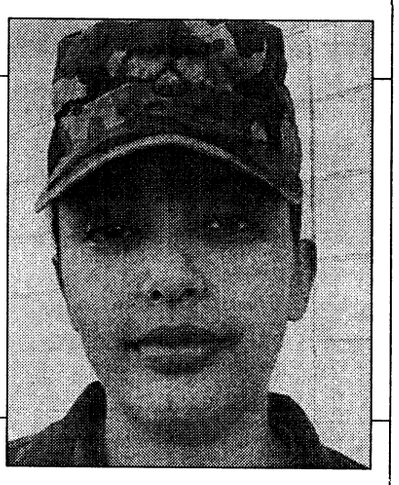
VARIOUS VOICES

What actions do you think should be taken when you hear the tornado siren?

Stephanie Powell, family member — "You should run to a closet that's in the innermost center of the house or a bathtub and use blankets, pillows or a mattress to protect yourself from flying debris."



Retired Sgt. 1st Class George Howell Jr., Columbus — "You need to locate the nearest shelter and tune into the television or radio to listen to the news to keep informed."



Staff Sgt. Frank Rodriguez, A Co., 2nd Bn, 29th Inf. Regt. — "First off, you need to assess the situation. Find out what structures are around you; for example if you are on the highway you need to get to the base of a bridge. Or if you are in a building you need to get somewhere solid such as a tub and cover yourself."

Pvt. Steve Ramos, D Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry — "Seek shelter. Go to a low lying area and cover yourself as best as possible."

British Sgt. Maj. Kenny McDonald, Bradley Instructor Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Make sure you know where your children are and get them and yourself to a safe place in the house and listen to the radio."

Pfc. JoAnn Garcia, 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group — "You really cannot prepare for it, but the best thing to do is go to the safest room in the house and make sure you are covered good."

Service sets stormy facts straight

Meteorologist explains how to survive weather

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The rain poured and the wind blew as the warm spring Georgia sky quickly changed from blue to dark gray the afternoon of Feb. 13 when a potentially lethal storm front swept into the Chattahoochee valley.

As residents flocked to take shelter from the storm, airmen from Fort Benning's weather squadron were watching the storm with a keen eye.

The storm's potential to be tornadic grew as it neared within 10 miles of the Fort Benning fringe, and it was that threat that prompted the meteorologist to issue a tornado warning for the Fort Benning community.

But when the siren sounded to issue the warning, some residents said they didn't know what to do.

"Staying calm is the first step to surviving the storm," said a national weather spokesperson. "If families monitor the weather and have a family disaster plan, there will be no trouble when a storm strikes."

He said when a storm does strike meteorologists like those here at Lawson Army Airfield will issue a warning that will give residents enough warning to react.

"We try to give residents at least 30 minutes of warning," said Staff Sgt. Wesley Mathias, a meteorologist assigned to the Lawson Army Airfield. That warning comes after Mathias and his team of sky watchers analyze storm fronts and identify certain parameters that indicate tornadic weather.

It is then and only then the team issues a warning.

"We only issue a warning after strong indications that a tornado is imminent," he said.

When that threat is imminent and the storm sirens are sounded, the national weather service has compiled the following list to ensure safety during a storm.

• Monitor radio, television and weather radios for the most current weather information.

• Have a family disaster plan.

• If a warning is issued or a tornado is imminent, move to a shelter such as a basement or interior hallway.

• If outside, seek shelter in a safe building, ditch or low area.

• Do not remain in or take shelter in mobile homes.

• Do not try to outrun a tornado in a vehicle or remain in a vehicle during a tornado — take shelter in a ditch or low area.

While these tips can be a key to storm survival, the spokesperson said it is important to know when listening to broadcasts the difference between a watch and a warning.

A tornado watch, he said, means conditions are favorable for the development of a tornado. A tornado warning means a tornado has been sighted or observed on radar.

In the last 50 years, Chattahoochee County has experienced four tornados that left a path of destruction more than a mile wide in its wake.

"Be prepared and understand that a storm can strike at any time. Listen for warnings and when one is issued for your area take heed," he said. "It could mean the difference between life and death."

Editor's note: Fort Benning residents should be aware that there is a monthly test of the storm sirens the first Saturday of every month.

Inoculations: Continue for deploying troops deploying troops to high threat areas have been placed in a temporary holding pattern until the FDA approves a new plant to manufacture the vaccine.

Originally, DoD planners hoped to fill the requests for the drug from the small Michigan-based pharmaceutical company Bioport. But when orders for additional vaccine grew beyond the capabilities of the company, officials augmented the drug maker with $10 million to demolish the old inadequate facility to construct a new, more modern high-output facility to support the entire force inoculation but that new, more modern facility is still awaiting the approving nod from the FDA.

"It has been more difficult than the department and Bioport expected to move from a small, state-regulated production facility to a large, modern production facility that meets the state-of-the-art FDA requirements," Bailey said. "Bioport has beefed up its management and production teams, and (DoD) has augmented the team that supervises the program."

That supervision and augmentation is hoped to expedite the process of getting the new facility operational since there are only 1 million available FDA approved doses in the system, Bailey said.

Presently America's military medics are administering more than 75,000 doses every month against the disease that sparked controversy ever since its vaccine was first required in 1995.

Since then rumors have plagued the vaccine program with some even naming the vaccine as a potential cause of the yet undetermined Gulf War Illness.

That, however, has been proven false in a Institute of Medicine presidential advisory committee finding that concluded there was no evidence that anthrax vaccine caused any of the illnesses of the thousands of Gulf war vets who have fallen prey to the disease.

The committee also reported the accusations of the vaccine causing cancer, sterility and birth defects false as well.

"The vaccine has very few side effects," she said, "And they are mild and temporary."

Those effects include redness, soreness of the injection site and a small lump that accompanies or closely follows the vaccination, she explained.

"The vaccination program is a necessary part of our obligation to protect U.S. forces, and it is important that all military personnel have complete confidence in the safety of the vaccine," Bailey said. "We will continue the highly successful program to vaccinate troops as they deploy."

Number: Makes phoning hospital, pharmacy easier

The pharmacy is converting from its old automated refill phone system to the Access to Care system, so individuals who call the refill phone number listed on their medicine bottles are being transferred to the 544-CARE menu.

"If the number continues to ring and no one answers, the lines are full. You will not get a busy signal. Hang up and call back," Steele said.

"That's one of the kinks we are working out."

Another kink is how to handle rotary dialers. By the end of March, the system should be equipped to handle rotary calls, Steele said.

The hospital is also developing a web page where patients can go for information. It is scheduled to go online in the next 45 days, Cain said.

DoD restores housing rates to '99 standards

Cohen said move will make allowance equal to local costs

Army News Service

Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen announced this week that many Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines will get an unexpected increase in their Basic Allowance for Housing rates as a result of his decision to restore the allowance to 1999 rates in areas where the 2000 BAH rates had been decreased.

"This action will result in greater equity among all people assigned to the same duty location, and will also allow the Department to pause and examine how we survey and determine the average cost of housing," said Cohen. "It is extremely important that in every area, nationwide, we are providing an allowance which allows our men and women to live in quality housing.

"We have heard two things: first, that the difference between the old and new rates in areas where the rates decreased is simply too much, and second, that the allowance is not enough to rent the type of housing our people are actually occupying. As a result, I have decided to return areas in which rates decreased to their 1999 rates."

The intent of the new housing allowance system is to set the allowances based on the local cost of adequate housing.

The new system also equalizes the out-of-pocket costs for members of the same grade across the country. Over the years, average out-of-pocket costs in higher cost areas had become significantly larger than in lower cost areas.

This year the out-of-pocket costs were set at an equal dollar value for every area based on 18.8 percent of the national median housing cost for each grade.

The new system resulted in significant increases in allowances for members serving in very high-cost areas, but it also led to rate reductions in many other areas.

"In response to concerns from the field, I directed my staff to look at the quality of housing for which we are paying allowances; they concluded we need to do further research into how we establish the areas within a metropolitan region," said Cohen. "Given our initiative to eliminate average out-of-pocket expenses borne by our members by FY05, it does not make sense to lower rates for some of our people until we are absolutely sure we have it right."

Service members, whether single or married, are provided either government housing or a monthly stipend known as Basic Allowance for Housing to procure commercially-owned housing in civilian communities in the United States.

The rates paid for BAH are computed using a statutory formula that is based on the actual cost of adequate housing in the areas where the people live.

The Department uses a contractor to determine what the actual cost of adequate housing is in those areas.

The Department will propose to Congress the necessary legislative changes to accomplish two actions: (1) provide authority to restore the allowance in areas where they decreased, retroactively, to January 1 and (2) eliminate the current legislation that requires service members to absorb at least 15 percent of their housing costs.

Former school chief speaks at national prayer breakfast

Bingham said spiritual fitness, prayer essential in making life better

Bridgett Siter

Special to the Bayonet©

Retired Col. Michael Bingham returned to Fort Benning Feb. 11 to encourage Soldiers and civilians to put more emphasis on their daily spiritual fitness.

As the guest speaker at the annual National Prayer Breakfast, the former deputy chief of staff, defined spiritual fitness as a daily awareness of God and a desire to see his will accomplished.

Bingham offered three simple steps for improving one's spiritual strength: read one chapter from Proverbs daily, go on an "ego fast" and go to Ranger school.

According to Bingham, an "ego fast" is an attempt to put more focus on God during prayer, and less focus on one's self.

"To reduce your prayer time and increase the impact of your prayers, stop focusing on yourself and start seeking God's will in your life," Bingham said.

Step number three, go to Ranger school, drew gales of laughter, applause, and "hooahs" from the crowd of nearly 400 who attended the breakfast.

"The reality is, there's more spiritual fitness in Ranger school than there is in Infantry Hall, because that's where the stress is," Bingham said. "Ranger students realize they are no longer in control. They need God."

Bingham concluded by encouraging listeners to consistently strive to improve their spiritual fitness.

"The bottom line is one word — daily. We need to pursue spiritual fitness daily. The reality is, if you're not growing closer to God, you're growing farther away from him. There is no status quo."

The installation Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell welcomed Bingham and special guests to Fort Benning, and presented Bingham a plaque of appreciation, on behalf of the Chaplain's Corp, for his many years of ministry at Fort Benning.

"It is a privilege to be invited to speak here today," Bingham said. "I don't know how I could feel any better this morning than coming back to Fort Benning."

Following a guitar solo of "Just a Closer Walk With Thee," by Lt. Col. Jim Shutt, and a solo performance of "The Lord's Prayer," by Chaplain (Capt.) James Blount, the audience recited the "Litany for the Nation" and "The Infantryman's Prayer." Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New gave the benediction.

"We thank God for the opportunity to serve this great nation, and we recognize, as we do that, we need to walk with him in prayer," New said. "It's important that we continue to seek his will in matters that concern our lives and our nation."

NCOA packs up, finds new home in Infantry Hall

Move aimed at creating better learning environment

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's NCO Academy will soon consolidate under one roof.

The move to Infantry Hall is geared toward creating a better learning environment for students.

Combining the NCO schools — PLDC, BNCOC, ANCOC — and the Drill Sergeant's School in one building will benefit the academy's students and the Army.

"Once over to Infantry Hall, it will be a great benefit to the Soldiers," said Command Sgt. Maj. George R. Monk, commandant of the NCO Academy. "They will be closer to the library," he said referring to the Donovan Technical Library, which provides access to technical and interactive learning.

Additionally, Monk said, PLDC will save an hour each day in walking time, and the Army will save money because students will not have to be bussed to chow.

"They will also be closer to the billets," he said.

Monk explained that the current academy dwellings, which were built in the 1960s, were identified as 'not cost effective.'

"We were losing money (on repairs) while staying in Building 880. It would have cost us too much to upgrade the building," he said.

The academy will now occupy the first and second floors of Infantry Hall's west wing, Monk said. It will occupy 62 classrooms and use some space that was unoccupied. Compared to the 35 classrooms and 14 administrative rooms that made up the 56,000 square feet of Building 880, the academy will have more room.

Actual movement of the school began December 1999 after Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst, post commander at the time, mandated the move that summer. Piece by piece, the NCO Academy will be moved depending on the amount of money that is available.

Monk said the move should be completed at the end of the year using the school's vehicles and manpower.

"So far we have saved around $24,000. We are using the school's cadre, and some of the students are helping out with the move, too," he said.

Although Monk is looking forward to his students having access to the facilities available at Infantry Hall, he said there are some aspects about the old school that will be missed.

"There I had my own institution with our own break areas and no distractions. I took a lot of pride in taking care of the school,""he said. "We would welcome dignitaries there, and we had our own auditorium and cafeteria, too."

Monk said he is a little worried about Infantry Hall not having adequate break areas for the added 550 students and 150 cadre members that the school is responsible for.

"Overall, I think it will be a good move," Monk said. "Fort Benning will continue to have top-notch Soldiers. We are the future of the Army and need the best resources to train. Here (Infantry Hall) we will have those resources."

Rangers set reunion for Oct.

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The Korean War was in its early stages in 1950 when 900 volunteers arrived at Fort Benning to undergo intensive training as America's first "Airborne Rangers."

In celebration of their 50th anniversary, Airborne Rangers from the Korean War will host a reunion for members of the Airborne and Ranger communities Oct. 4-7 at Fort Benning.

All Airborne, Rangers, their families and friends are invited.

Events will include inductions into the Ranger Hall of Fame, a barbecue with Ranger veterans, a veterans' review, Airborne and Ranger demonstrations, a night memorial service and a ceremonial banquet featuring a big-screen presentation highlighting the first 50 years of Airborne history.

Costs for the event include $5 to register, $12 for the barbecue and $25 for the banquet.

For more information, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Ranger Collin Chamberlain, 10070 Jiminez St., Lake View Terrace, Calif., 91342-7028.

National Guard Ranger instructors 'lead the way'

4th RTB Pre-Ranger, Zero Week, Vaughan's Detachment guard run

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

National Guard personnel are now in charge of new Rangers' training.

Teaching the Pre-Ranger, Zero Week, and Vaughan's Detachment at 4th Ranger Training Battalion, active-duty guardsmen lead the way.

The National Guard Ranger instructors come "from any units from throughout the guard, (and are) also graduates of the Pre-Ranger and Ranger schools," said 1st Lt. Jamison Kirby, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th RTB. Kirby is the OIC of Student operations, 4th RTB.

"They come down (right before the start of pre-Ranger), and we do a train-up with them to make sure they fit the part and are able to do the physical events that we are going to ask the students to do the very next week," he added. "We also do an instructor certification process where they teach classes to make sure they are on line for what RTB expects of their Ranger instructors."

There are three RIs in each class with eight classes being held each year. RIs will stay for three weeks, but some are asked to continue if they do an outstanding job.

RIs begin training in the Pre-Ranger course. During this course, RIs train Soldiers on weapons, tactics, patrolling and leadership skills that will be used in Ranger School. They individually assess the students to see if they have what it takes to be a Ranger.

"It used to be that everyone who went to Pre-Ranger went on to Ranger School. Since I have been here the policy has changed and for Guardsmen, about 45 percent make it through Pre-Ranger, and of those, about 75 percent complete Ranger School," he said.

One big advantage of having a guard instructor is his ability to relate to guard Soldiers who are trying to make it as a Ranger, Kirby said. They know the weaknesses that guardsmen have, such as the lack of "in your face leadership and not doing PT every day." The RIs help them overcome those weaknesses.

The guard RIs also help out with Zero Week. Zero Week, although not mandatory, submerges the students deeper into Ranger training.

They learn more about patrols, weapons and other skills that will be taught in Ranger School. The guard RIs are also in charge of the Vaughan's Detachment at 4th RTB.

Sgt. 1st. Class Thomas Siter, NCOIC of student operations at 4th RTB, instructs Pre-Ranger students on Claymores. (Below), Sgt. Eric Emde keeps a close eye on students disassembling a weapon.

"Vaughan's Detachment is where we get a student who has been medically recycled, or they fail a patrol, or are not going on with their class for some reason. We retrain that Soldier and get him back in the game and the next Ranger class," said Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Siter, NCOIC of Student Operations at 4th RTB and an instructor.

Siter said he knows of more than 200 students who went to Vaughan's and more than 190 of them passed and went on to 5th RTB. "The (guard) instructors that we have down here in student operations are outstanding. They are very knowledgeable and professional. They were Ranger instructors in line companies and then they came here to work in this section."

One of the best aspects of a guard RI is the knowledge of what active-duty and guard Soldiers have to go through. "They understand what these guys are going through," Siter said. "They have been in both the active-duty and guard positions."

Army Values applied throughout Soldiers training

1st Lt. Jacqueline Guthrie
84th Division (IT) Public Affairs Office

More than 200 young men came to E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, 13 weeks ago with the goal of becoming Soldiers. But not just any Soldier, these men want to be Infantrymen.

Reservists from 1st Brigade, 84th Division (Institutional Training), are helping them succeed.

The 84th Division Railsplitters have been rotating every two weeks teaching the young men physical training, marksmanship, hand-to-hand combat, land navigation, seven Army values and much more.

The final test, known as the Bayonet, evaluates not only the recruits' abilities, but also the competence of the trainers. However, the primary focus is on "Seven Army Value" training, said Capt. Ted Qualls, E Company commander.

All Soldiers, active and reserve, must receive training on seven Army values: loyalty, duty, respect, selfless-service, honor, integrity and personal courage.

While most service members hear about these values through videos and classroom teachings, the Soldiers in Fort Benning training brigades also get to live them.

"The Bayonet is a culmination exercise of implementing each of the seven values and Infantry skills," explained Qualls. "Each training mission requires the men to use their newly acquired Infantry skills, but also focuses on teaching them a value."

The recruits came to Sand Hill as individuals, but they left their assembly area for a 25-mile road march as a team ready to pay honor to their fallen comrades that had come before them.

The first leg of the march took them to the rock steady wall.

Named in honor of Pvt. Louis Gideon, a young Soldier who single handedly defended his wounded commander during battle, the rock steady wall required the E Company recruits to negotiate a wall obstacle under fire and move all men and equipment up and over it.

As shots rang out, the platoon leader huddled with squad leaders to develop a plan of action, while the rest of their comrades lay hidden in the grass and among the trees providing security.

With stealth, the young men moved quickly to the edges of a steep, straight wall. In teams they built pyramids to climb up, created rope swings and even used logs for leverage to move themselves, their equipment and their wounded up to the top.

Following each task the new Infantrymen reviewed their actions with their drill instructors, discussed lessons learned and determined which value was most prevalently demonstrated.

They also discussed how to use these values in their civilian life.

"As Infantrymen you don't leave your buddy behind," said Staff Sgt. David Santos, E Company drill sergeant." The recruits just learned how to truly show loyalty to themselves, their country and their unit," he said.

"These Army values don't just relate to the Army," said Sgt. 1st Class Kendall Moore, one of the reserve drill sergeants. "They also relate to everyday life. Apply them to everything you do."

The Soldiers continued on their road march ready to face new challenges, test more skills and learn more about themselves and each other.

"It's all about transformation," explained Col. Rusty Schorsch, Infantry Training Brigade commander. A transformation from a civilian to a Soldier," he said. "The Bayonet exercise allows the trainees to put into practice what they have learned. It shows that they've internalized this stuff."

It is also a transformation from being a Soldier in training, led by drill sergeants, to becoming a Soldier on a team with drill sergeants, he said. Demonstrating the Army values shows they are ready to be part of the Infantry, Schorsch added.

As the young men continued on their mission, the next obstacle they faced was anti-tank and land mines in their path. The only other way across was a river. Demonstrating their devotion to duty, the men built a one-rope bridge and transported all men and equipment to the other side, where they continued on.

Suddenly shots rang out and the men ran for cover. Unfortunately not all escaped the shrapnel and bullets.

The Infantrymen selflessly loaded their "wounded" in uniform made slings, boosted them onto their backs, and carried them in their arms. They also piled on the extra equipment and moved to a first aid station for care.

Orders from higher headquarters soon followed and the men moved out to deliver ammunition to comrades in need. However, the amount of ammunition exceeded the number of Soldiers and decisions had to be made.

"We could have just dumped some of it along the side of the road," said one young man. But the Army's newest Infantrymen instead demonstrated integrity and did the right thing by making two trips to deliver the ammunition.

The Soldiers feasted on meals ready to eat and slept on their equipment throughout their 30-hour mission.

However, fatigue did not slow them down as they came upon their next obstacle, the rock of Chickamauga cliff and a flowing, icy river.

Overcoming any fears of water or height, one by one the young men rappelled down the 60-foot cliff and waded across the icy river.

After completing all tasks the Soldiers tactically marched the final six miles to an area lighted only by fire barrels and torches.

> "As Infantrymen you don't leave your buddy behind. The recruits just learned how to truly show loyalty to themselves, their country and their unit."
> — Staff Sgt. David Santos
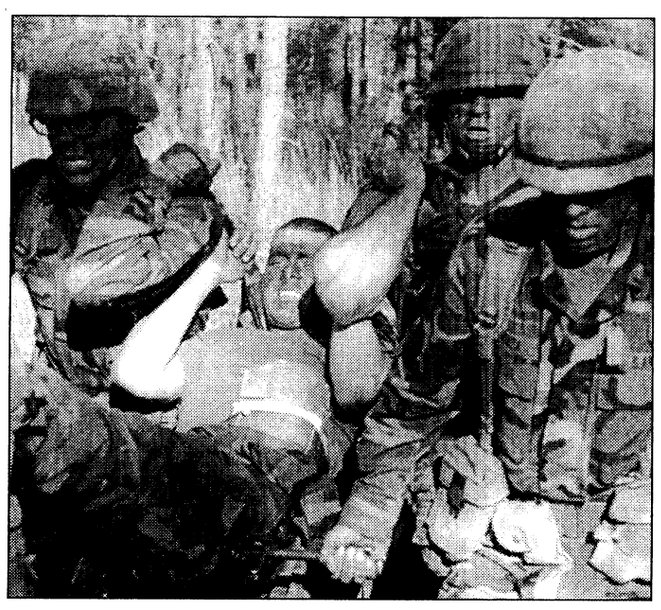
> Drill sergeant

In the glowing embers, the men filled their canteen cups with punch by dipping them into barrels. One by one they passed under the Infantry cross-rifle arch and assembled to pay honor to E Company, the training brigade, the Army, and to Infantrymen past, present and future.

After the toasts of honor echoed through the night, the command sergeant major showed his respect for the newest Infantrymen's ability to demonstrate each of the Army values by lighting seven torches.



The young men then stood at attention as their drill sergeants, the men who taught them how to be Infantrymen, welcomed them to their fraternity by pinning on crossed-rifles. One hundred and ninety men walked back to their barracks not as just Soldiers, but as Infantrymen. And the last rotation of drill sergeants returned to their quarters knowing everyone had passed the final test.

Editor's Note: *The 84th Division (IT), is headquartered in Milwaukee and has subordinate units and Soldiers throughout the states of Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, Iowa, and Indiana. As an institutional training division, the 84th currently performs a variety of missions in support of the Army school system, also known as TASS. Missions include providing basic combat training and infantry one station unit training to new soldiers and officer training to ROTC cadets. The division personnel also train active and reserve component service members in combat service, combat service support, health services and professional development courses. High school buddies take plunge

Three friends visit post before going to basic training together in July

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

In the spirit of one for all and all for one, three friends from Darville, Calif., will take the ultimate plunge together when they pack their bags and head to Fort Benning July 11 to attend basic training at the Basic Combat Training Brigade.

Although Curt Conklin, Pete Cochran and Matt Martin didn't all decide to join the Army at the exact same moment, the three seniors will tackle the first leg of their four-year tours side by side. Not only that but they are taking it one step further by going both Airborne and Ranger as well.

However, before doing so, the three teens along with Conklin's dad, made the trek from California to Fort Benning to watch Curt's older brother, Kris, graduate from Ranger School and also see just what they have in store.

The buddies spent Feb. 18 getting a taste of Army life by touring the post, watching a Rangers in Action Demonstration and seeing Airborne training.

"When I saw the Ranger demonstration it was awesome," said the 18-year-old Cochran. "I really didn't have too much of an idea about what it entailed; I mean I know who the Rangers are and what they do, but when I saw what they can accomplish, it's amazing."

Cochran, who will be a communications specialist, said he looked at all the other branches of military before deciding the Army was the best way to go.

He said the Airborne and Ranger training really appealed to him and he's excited about the challenge.

As for Conklin and Martin both of the teens signed up at the same time and will be medics with future aspirations of becoming firefighters. For them joining the Army seemed like the best way to get started.

"My brother joined in '98 and seeing what the Army has done for him with all of the schooling and fun he's having, it made me wonder what I could get out of it," Conklin said.

"Plus I want to be a firefighter when I get out and my experience in the Army will definitely help with that."

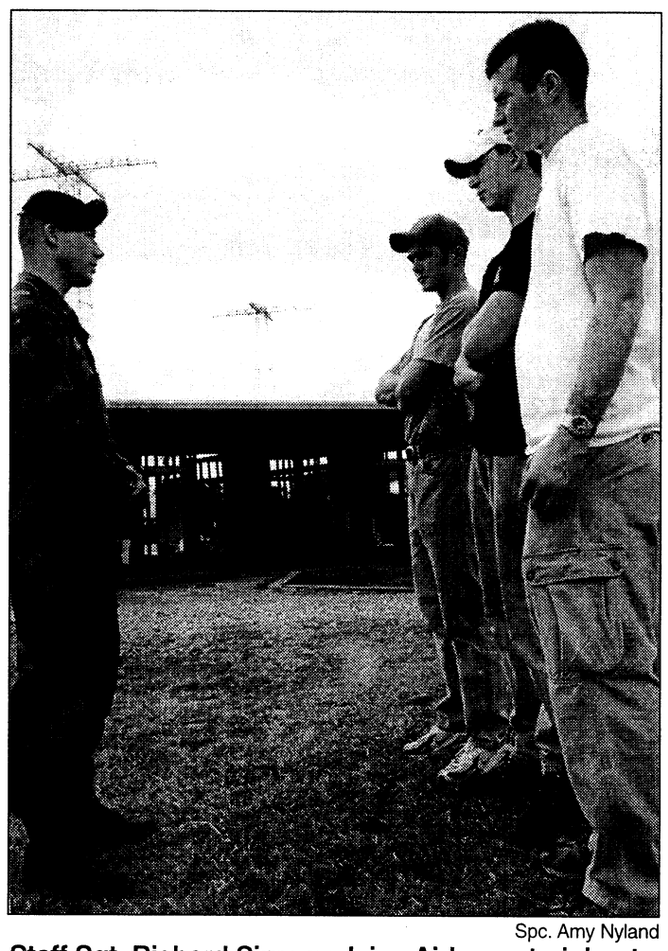
For Martin, it was a mix of family tradition, adventure and "getting the tools for his future," that made him decide to sign on the dotted line.

The teens admitted they are glad they will be able to go through basic training together because they can push one another to work harder and not give up.

Conklin said it will be nice to see a familiar face and have a friend there to lean on.

Curt's father, Mike Conklin, said he thinks its wonderful that all of the boys are joining together. He said it's something that doesn't happen enough now days.

"I think it's great," the elder Conklin said. "It's something that used to happen in the past quite a bit. There was something called the buddy system where both you and your buddy signed up and went in together. It is definitely a confidence builder."



Conklin, who is a member of the William F. Dean Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, said he works a lot with kids to promote the Army in a positive light. He said the trip to Fort Benning was a great way for the boys to see the good things about the Army and in turn relate that back to their peers.

"They all read stories in the newspaper about basic training this and basic training that, and they know about the negative part of the Army, but by them coming here and being exposed to this they are getting to see the quality people that are involved."

Martin said he is definitely glad he got the chance to come to Fort Benning because now he won't be shocked when he gets here.

The other two agreed saying nothing they saw during their visit made them feel like they made the wrong choice, in fact it was quite the opposite.

"Seeing all of this makes me want to get out of high school that much more," Conklin said. "I can't wait to get started."

OCS 2-00 rolls towards graduation

Officer Candidate Deandre L. Garner
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

If you have heard the beat of a bass drum rolling along the streets of Main Post near Infantry Hall, it is the Officer Candidate School marching to classes.

Class 2-00 began the first week in January and the class is rolling forward to graduation in mid-April.

The 14-week course is divided into three phases: basic, intermediate and senior phase.

Class 2-00 concluded its basic phase with a field leadership exercise, day and night navigation tests and an inspection by Capt. Ronnie Preston, company commander .

The basic phase culminated with Field Leadership Exercise One and the Land Navigation Practical Exam an Yankee Road.

"That has got to be the most challenging course I have ever negotiated in my 16 years in the military," said Officer Candidate Calvin J. Simpson.

The anxiety of walking in the woods in the dark posed a problem for some.

But besides a few bumps and scratches, the class completed the course successfully.

"They have worked through some tough challenges," Preston said. "This class has earned intermediate status."

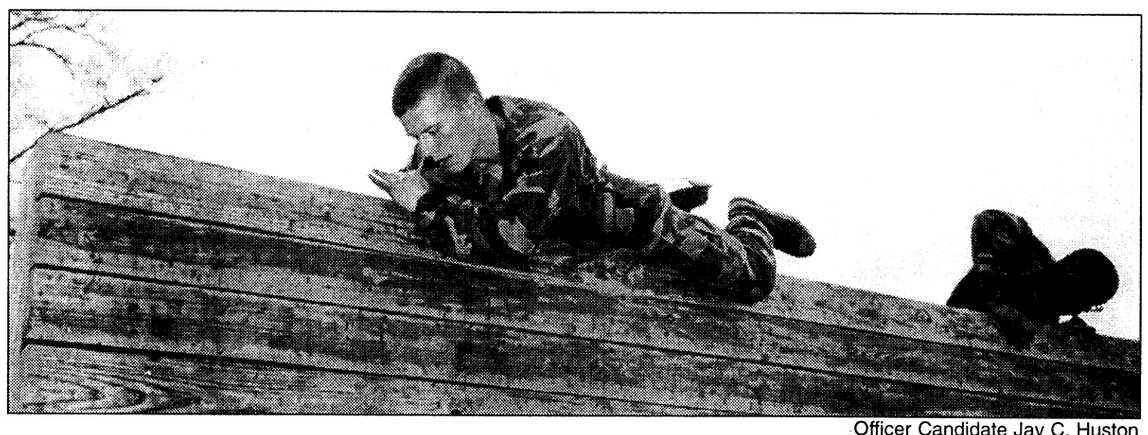
Physical fitness is paramount at OCS and the program is very intense.

For instance, in one day, in addition to regular PT, the class completed the Combat Water Survival Test and a conditioning obstacle course.

"I really think it had to be a test of coordination and endurance. I was tired after going through the course a couple of times," said Simpson, referring to the obstacle course.

The class has experienced more than just physical challenges.

Officer candidates are put in charge of the company with the student chain of command performing the day-to-day operations.



The cadre is there to teach, assess and counsel the student leaders.

"Everything at OCS is a training event," said Capt. Eric Shwedo, TAC senior officer.

Officer candidates have had written examinations on Army operations, tactics and military intelligence.

There is also a plethora of other information and knowledge the candidates are responsible for on a daily basis, that includes daily operation order information.

"It is a good idea to make people memorize things because it forces them to pay attention to details and not to overlook the small things, said Officer Candidate David R. Sandoval. "As leaders, we need not to only pay attention to the big picture but to focus in on small individual tasks."

Officer Candidate Jay C. Huston

Officer Candidates Louis Netherland and Devin Burns negotiate over the six-foot wall as their squad competed on the confidence course.

Amber Greenway, left, allows Haley and Hannah Hutcheson to pet Lucky Sunday at Cooper Creek Park, Columbus.

Woman gives puppy love, saves life

"Lucky" dog lives up to name, escapes death row

Sally Shutt

Amber Greenway saved a life three weeks ago. In appreciation, the lucky guy she rescued showered the 19-year-old blonde with kisses — well, sort of.

Greenway rescued a puppy named Lucky — an apt name if ever there was one — from the adoption facility at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic just hours before he was scheduled to be put to sleep.

An Irish terrier mix, Lucky was featured in The Bayonet's Pet of the Week column. Greenway, a secretary for the Advertiser Company, which prints The Bayonet, saw his picture in the Jan. 21 issue.

"He was scheduled to be put down a week earlier," Stevie Powell, kennel manager of the adoption facility, said. But, the veterinarians gave him a reprieve of one week.

"I really do think he lives up to his name," Powell said.

Greenway had been looking for a dog, and when she visited "death row" she decided to take the mutt home.

"It was very depressing, and I felt good after getting him," she said. "He needed a lot of love and attention. At first, he didn't eat for two days, now he eats like a pig."

Lucky's previous owner was PCSing and "surrendered" the 6-month-old puppy to the clinic in hopes someone would take him home. The canine was up-to-date on all of his shots, and for that reason he was available for free, Powell said.

"They told me at the clinic, they would call the previous owner and let him know that Lucky was adopted," Greenway said.

Lucky is the second dog Greenway has saved from an animal shelter. Back in her hometown of Dowagiac, Mich., she and her family adopted an Alaskan malamute named Zoey.

"It's a good thing to do. I encourage other people to go to the shelter first, before they go look in other places," she said.

Powell has three cats and 10 dogs available for adoption. Although a few pets are surrendered by their owners, most are captured by animal control on post.

If a dog or cat is brought in by animal control, pet owners have five days to claim the animal.

After that, the animal is given about two weeks before it is scheduled to be euthanized, he said.

"But that decision is made on a case by case basis," Powell said. Factors considered are temperament, age and the health of the animal.

To adopt a pet, individuals must pay between $20 and $30 for the animal's tests and shots, Powell said.

The adoption facility is located at the end of 10th Mountain Division Road in Building 264 next to the guest house kennel.

It is open 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday except holidays. Call 545-4826 for more information.

Mayors clarify job description

Volunteers work closely with community members to voice concerns, act as liaisons

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The volunteer mayors of Fort Benning are working hard to clarify their job description for the residents of their communities.

The duties of mayor vary from post to post, according to Jodie Bowers, president of the community life mayors' council, who has served as mayor for eight years at three installations. Therefore, many residents arrive at Fort Benning with preconceived misconceptions about their neighborhood mayor.

Bowers

"There appears to be a common misunderstanding about our responsibilities. We are not a part of the police enforcement. It's not our job to write tickets or issue ultimatums," Bowers said. "We are a positive resource for the residents of our communities. We're simply working to enrich our neighborhoods."

Darby

"The mayor's responsibility is to be encouraging, setting the tone for the whole neighborhood," said Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander. "We don't want to put our mayors in the untenable position of enforcing regulations. The mayors, the community life NCOs and the MPs have overlapping areas of interest, but it's the spirit in which they work together as allies to improve the quality of life in our neighborhoods that make this program so successful."

Secor

Bowers agreed that mayors and vice-mayors work closely with the community life office to ensure that residents' concerns are being addressed. They plan periodic town hall meetings to give residents the opportunity to meet their neighbors and voice their concerns about community issues.

"We are simply the liaison between the community and the garrison. People are often more likely to discuss their problems with another military spouse than with someone from the community life office," Bowers said. "We bridge the gap between both parties. We're here to help and hopefully make life a little smoother."

Thompson

Besides helping find solutions to problems residents may encounter, mayors and vice-mayors also plan events such as community yard sales and fun days.

"It's not a glamorous job, but sometimes it's a lot of fun, and it's always rewarding," Bowers said.

Koprek

The mayors' council is currently looking for volunteers to fill the position of vice-mayor in McGraw Manor, West and East Main Post, and the Boughton Heights-Davis Hill community. Anyone interested should call the community life mayors office at 545-5940.

Community life mayors' council president Jodie Bowers also serves as mayor for east main post. She can be reached at 685-0030.

Rosetta Darby serves as mayor for McGraw Manor. She is currently working closely with the community life officer to improve the overall appearance of her community. Darby can be reached at 687-7947.

McDonald

Danielle Secor serves as mayor for both Upatoi Terrace and Custer Terrace, with a combined total of over 1,000 units. Secor can be reached at 687-2327. Vice-mayor Lori Thompson can be reached at 685-0574.

Vanessa Koprek is the new mayor for West Main Post. Her telephone number is 687-9955.

Julie McDonald serves as mayor for the community of Indianhead Terrace. She is currently working to improve lighting conditions around the playgrounds. McDonald can be reached at 689-0354.

Nettie Calleado is the mayor for the Boughton Heights-Davis Hills community. She can be reached at 685-1959.

Fort Benning to host new youth ministries program

Post contracts minister organization

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Military youth face issues their civilian peers do not, including deployments and frequent moves. To help meet the needs of teen-agers at Fort Benning, the post has a new program designed especially for them starting March 1.

Fort Benning signed a contract with Military Community Youth Ministries to support its chapel youth program. Bruce Mulford, a 27-year-old minister and MCYM staff member, will serve as the director of the post program. His wife, Neisy, 26, will work with him.

The Mulfords moved from Lakeland, Fla., where they were house parents in a Baptist children's home for abused and neglected youngsters.

"Both my wife and I are very mission-minded and we wanted to work in youth ministry," Bruce said.

The two are settled into their new home in Columbus, and Bruce is set to run the MCYM program out of his office in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

But expect to see the couple out in the community frequenting the spots where teens hang out.

"We want to go where the kids are and meet their needs," Neisy said. "We want to extend the ministry beyond the chapel doors."

MCYM is a non-profit youth ministry and service organization for military teen-agers all over the world. It's probably better known among teens as Club Beyond. The organization works in partnership with Young Life and Youth for Christ.

MCYM is a Christian non-denominational ministry dedicated to working with chaplains, commanders and parents of military teens. Founded in 1980, MCYM is on almost 40 installations worldwide.

In the past, chaplains and other volunteers ran the chapel youth programs at Fort Benning.

"We do not have the resources to dedicate a chaplain full-time to youth ministry," Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New said.

The contract is for six months,

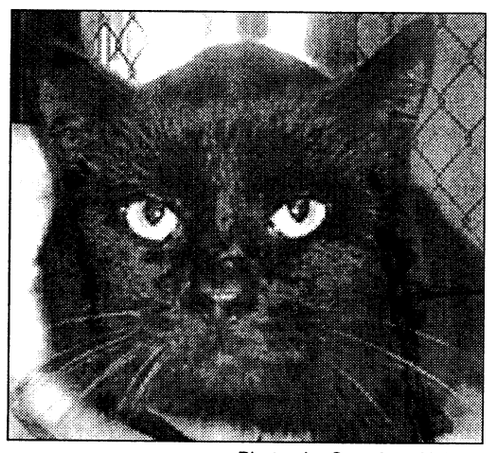
AER campaign kicks off

Sgt. Lori Smith
Assistant editor

The annual Army Emergency Relief Fund Campaign 2000 will kick off at 2 p.m. Wednesday in Room 6, Infantry Hall.

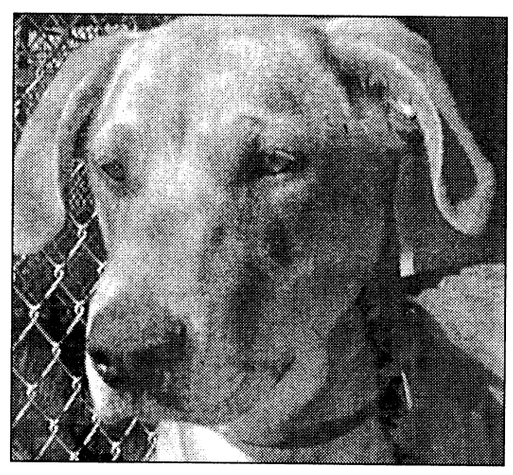


During the kick-off ceremony campaign materials will be distributed and assigned project persons will be given guidance on the procedure for collecting funds from their respective units.

AER funds are available to active-duty Soldiers and retirees with valid emergency need. In 1999, the Fort Benning's AER office provided 664 Soldiers, retirees and widows $460,468.51 in loans and 44 grants that totaled $32,133.29, said Al Deane, AER officer.

He said he is sure Fort Benning will meet its goal of $160,000.

AER has been soliciting funds from active-duty and retired Soldiers since 1947.



The AER fundraising campaign will run Wednesday through April 15.

Q. What is the child and dependent care credit on my tax form and how do I get it?

A. Generally a taxpayer who maintains a household that included one or more qualifying individuals (dependents under age 13 or dependents mentally or physically incapable of self-support) can take a credit for up to 20 to 30 percent of the work-related expenses the taxpayer paid for the care of the qualifying individuals. The expenses are subject to earned income and dollar limitations.

The credit is available to an individual who incurred employment-related expenses that enable gainful employment or search for employment. Qualifying individuals are:

• Dependents of the taxpayer who are under 13 when the care was provided and for whom the taxpayer is entitled to a dependency exemption, and

• Dependents of the taxpayer who are physically or mentally incapable of caring for themselves regardless of age. The person can be a spouse or any other dependent.

The credit is actually a percentage of the expenses paid. The percentage is 30 percent reduced, by one percentage point for each $2,000 (or fraction of $2,000) by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income (AGI) exceeds $10,000. The percentage is never reduced below 20 percent. Therefore, if the AGI is $10,000 or less, the taxpayer gets the maximum of 30 percent; but if the AGI exceeds $28,000, the taxpayer gets the minimum of 20 percent.

Regardless of actual expenses, the maximum dollar amount to be applied to the percentages is $2,400 for one qualifying individual and $4,800 for two or more qualifying individuals. Earned income includes wages, salaries, tips, other employee compensation and self-employment income. It also includes disability pensions. It does not include unemployment compensation, social security payments or worker's compensation.

If the parents of a qualifying child are divorced, the noncustodial parent cannot get the credit even if the noncustodial parent claims the child as a dependent for exemption purposes due to the custodial parent's release or a qualified pre-1985 instrument giving the exemption to the noncustodial parent.

A taxpayer maintains a household for any period if he furnished over half the cost of maintaining the household for the year. Costs include rent, mortgage interests, taxes, utility charges, repairs, insurance and food.

They do not include clothing, education, medical treatment, vacations, life insurance, transportation or mortgage principal.

Expenses are employment-related if they are paid for household services or for the care of a qualifying individual and they enable the taxpayer to be gainfully employed. The expenses must be somehow related to the care of the qualifying individual. Educational expenses for the qualifying individual are not credible expenses unless the costs are inseparably a part of the care (like nursery school). Expenses incurred for the transportation of a qualifying individual between the home and the place where care is provided are not creditable. Costs paid to a dependent care center outside the taxpayer's home are creditable if the center complies with all applicable laws and regulations of a state or local government.

Expenses must be incurred while the taxpayer is either gainfully employed or searching for employment.

No credit is allowed if the payment is to a dependent of the taxpayer or a child of the taxpayer under 19 at the close of the year.

For more information, see IRS Publication 503, Child and Dependent Care Expenses. Additionally, Tax Center 2000 is open for business in Classroom 1, Infantry Hall. The hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The phone number is 545-4267.

ACS conducts home buying seminar — Don't make the biggest purchase of your life without doing your homework.

Attend the Army Community Service Home Buying Seminar at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Family Unit Network Building, Building 359. You will discover that there is a lot more to buying a home than signing on the dotted line and moving in.

The first step in buying a house is receiving pre-approval for a mortgage loan. Do you know how? How much can you afford? The seminar will show you how to make that determination.

What do you know about the community, and what are the best sources of community information? How many houses should you look at before you make a purchase offer? And what happens once you have made the purchase offer? Do you want to save $30,000 or more on your house? You can.

These are a few of the topics that will be addressed at the seminar. But you must have a reservation.

For more information or to register, call Army Community Service at 545-7517 or 545-4043. Reservations must be made by today.

Clinic extends hours — The Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic will hold an afternoon clinic from noon until 2:45 p.m. Tuesday and will also hold an evening clinic the same day from 4 to 6:30 p.m.

AFTB seeks instructors — Army Family Teambuilding invites anyone who has ever taught an AFTB class or has ever been interested in teaching a class to a fun evening of food, fellowship and planning for the coming year.

The event will take place Thursday 7 p.m. at the Fun Center. Free babysitting is available for those who reserve it in advance.

For more information, call 545-5377.

To register, call Leigh Sales at 323-9119 or aftb@benning.army.mil.

College offers adult re-entry class — Want to start a degree? Want to finish up a degree started years ago?

Columbus State University has the answer: Adult re-entry. Classes begin March 14 and run through May 9. Students can choose from a day class or evening class. The times are 12:30 to 4:30 p.m. or 6:30 to 8:45 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The cost is $98, and includes textbook.

Registration can be as late as the first day of class. It is a refresher course in reading, writing and math; but most importantly, it helps a person "ease back" into school.

For more information, call Cynthia or Mary at CSU, Fort Benning office at 545-1085 or 689-8668.

CSU offers course — The class "Intro to Personal Computers and Windows 95/98" will be offered by Columbus State University. You will learn to navigate through Windows 95; work with Windows; use Windows Explorer; work with folders, files and floppy disks; and learn how to purchase a computer system.

The class will be offered from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. March 6 and a second session from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. April 4. The cost is $99 and includes book, CEUs and certificate. The classes will be held in Classroom 32-B, Infantry Hall.

For more information, call the Columbus State University Office at Fort Benning at 689-8688.

Medical College offers Bachelor of Science — The Medical College of Georgia in conjunction with Columbus State University is offering an information session on the Bachelor of Science in Occupational Therapy.

For more information call 545-1085 or 689-8668.

ACS relocation program — The next spouse orientation program will be held at 8:45 a.m. March 10 in Building 359, the Family Unit Network Center.

Newly assigned personnel are able to receive information about the installation's services and facilities.

For more information call ACS at 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Auction offers many items — There will be a property auction 10 a.m. March 14 at the Outdoor Recreation Equipment and Storage, Building 1704, Gillespie Street. Some of the many items to be sold are: Chevy vans and trucks, boats, jet ski, washers, dryers, ice machines, kitchen equipment, food server line, furniture and much more. Items may be previewed 9 a.m to noon March 10 and 13.

Terms of the sale are cash, visa or check with a bank letter guaranteeing the check up to a specific amount and date. All items are "as is."

For more information, call 545-2348.

Post establishes new fundraising policy — The new Fort Benning policy on fundraising has been published.

Snakes invade Stowers

Cottonmouth talks about setting goals

Mike Starrett
Stowers Elementary School

Monday afternoon brought much anticipation for the Stallions of Stowers School.

Normally a Stallion will buck at the sight of a snake, but the "Snake" was Per Fernhall of the Columbus Cottonmouths professional hockey team and the Stallions welcomed him into the barn.

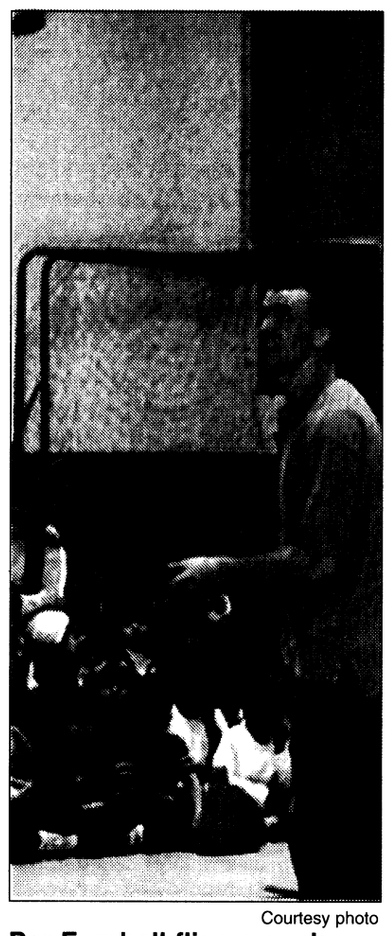
Fernhall along with the Cottonmouths front office staffer, Scott Middlebrooks and the Snakes mascot "Boomer" spent an hour with the students and teachers of Stowers.

Fernhall, who is originally from Sweden, spoke to the students about his ambition to become a professional hockey player and the road he took to get there.

Fernhall told his story of playing for the Swedish Junior National team before coming to the United States at 17. He landed in St. Louis playing junior league hockey there and attending high school, which he said was much more difficult than school in Sweden.

Fernhall also talked about coming to the U.S. without being able to speak English and how setting goals can help you achieve them.

Fernhall answered questions from the students ranging from "How long have you wanted to play professional hockey?" to "What is your favorite color?" Fernhall answered "all my life" to the first question, and "Blue" the Cottonmouths primary color to the second.



In addition to Fernhall, "Boomer" the Cottonmouths cartoon-like mascot whipped the students into a frenzy teaching them the "Go Snakes!" cheer and shaking their hands.

During all the Cottonmouth games "Boomer" spends time getting fans to cheer for the team and bringing general merriment to children as they spend time at the "Snake Pit."

To illustrate the amount of protection players have when they go into a game, Fernhall, Middlebrooks and Boomer helped a Stowers student get dressed in Fernhall's gear.

Although the size of the equipment brought giggles and grins, the student enjoyed being a hockey model for a few minutes.

Stowers school is planning a "Night with the Cottonmouths" March 10. The school's students and staff will be recognized between periods at the game with the Huntsville Channel Cats. Stowers parents can contact the PTO for more information.

Parents get test-taking tips at lunch

Meal aimed at kids making the grade on Terra Nova

Mike Starrett
Stowers Elementary School

Most parents don't plan to spend a Friday lunch at school learning about test taking skills, but that is exactly what some of the Stowers parents did.

Test taking skills was the topic presented by Kathy Einhorn, director of Curriculum for the Fort Benning schools during the Feb. 18 "Noontime Topics" session.

· The session is a regular part of the Stowers school-home connection and this session focused on test taking skills with particular emphasis on the Terra Nova, DoDEA's standardized test administered each year in March. Einhorn discussed some of the objectives of the Terra Nova as well as gave examples of the types of questions students might be asked to answer.

"The instructional focus the schools have of critical thinking is a strategy that kids will be able to use throughout the Terra Nova," said Einhorn.

She then went on to discuss some tips that parents can relate to their students:

Relax — Everyone gets nervous about tests. It's natural. Try to relax and not worry.

Listen — Listen to the directions for each test carefully. Be sure to read all the directions you find in your test booklet. Ask your teacher to explain any directions you do not understand.

Plan your time — Most parts of the test are timed. Answer each question carefully, but if a question takes too long to answer, skip it and go back to it later. Answer the questions you are sure of first.

Think — If you can't answer a question right away, give yourself some time to think about it. Rule out answer choices that you know are wrong and choose from the ones that are left.

Keep a positive state of mind — This test won't affect your grades in school. Some questions will be hard to answer and others will be easy. Just do your best.

Einhorn went on to talk about keeping a WOW book of words students do not know but will look up for their meaning. Writing them down helps to learn meaning and broaden vocabulary.

The Terra Nova Test week is scheduled for the week of March 13-17. All children grades 1 through 9 will be taking the test at their respective schools.

Students work on yearbooks

Sherri Strickland
Stowers Elementary School

Stowers Elementary School will have their first yearbook since 1997.

They have a club made up of fourth- and fifth-grade students who meet twice a week after school.

The students are responsible for designing, producing copy, editing and promoting sales of the yearbook.

Thus far, the staff has completed over half of the yearbook and met all of their deadlines.

"The students have really come together and worked as a team, we couldn't have done it without them," said Suzanne Shwedo.

Jenny Black, a teacher at Stowers, volunteered to develop a PowerPoint presentation of the yearbook to show to the entire school in order to promote sales of the yearbook.

She will use pictures from the yearbook and hopes to motivate children to want to purchase a Stowers 2000 yearbook.

The cost of the yearbook is $12 until March 10. The price will increase to $15 after this date due to final deadlines and the total amount needed to cover the charges.

The yearbook staff consists of Danielle Marker, Robert Gladden, Ashley Johnson, Eric Plump, Jacob Siter, Yalani Castro, Raymond Rivera, Stephanie Thompson, Curtis Chiles, Shemika Rose, and Jessica Elmore.

When asked how she likes working on the yearbook, Danielle Marker said, "It's fun. We paste, cut out, correlate all of the pictures and make a completed page."

"I can't wait until the yearbook is out because I want to see the pages I put together," said Jacob Siter.

With the warmer than usual weather and the approach of spring, the bats on Fort Benning are stirring again. This year, DPW's Natural Resource Management Branch personnel report they expect fewer uninvited bats dropping in on family housing residents, thanks to last year's bat exclusion.

Exclusion is the term used for the process of professionally and legally removing bats from a space for the safety of humans and bats alike.

Fort Benning is home to seven known species of bats that can eat insect pests by the thousands every night. On post, the most frequently seen bats are the twilight bat (Nycticeius humeralis) and the Mexican free-tailed bat (Tadarida brasiliensis).

Despite the benefits bats provide, they come in conflict with humans when they try to set up housekeeping too close to us.

While some species of bats use loose tree bark, bridges and abandoned structures for shelter, others (especially females about to give birth) find human dwellings much more attractive. They rarely cause a conflict by entering living spaces, but may sometimes find a way into attics through cracks and loose boards. These spaces provide shelter from the temperature extremes since the heating and cooling in the living areas below act to moderate attic temperatures.

When bats manage to establish a colony inside buildings, the sound and odor they produce can become offensive to people. When this happens on Fort Benning, the NRMB steps in.

State law protects bats as a "non-game" species; they may not be indiscriminately killed or harmed. The exclusion work is performed by a contractor with close coordination by DPW's Plans and Support Branch and NRMB. This can be accomplished only during the spring and fall seasons of the year.

Nine housing units in the Bouton Heights area were excluded last fall.

A system of pipes and check valves was installed at the bats' exit points that allowed them to leave the building, but not reenter.

All other potential entry points were sealed off with steel wool and caulk. Hopefully the bats will relocate their roost area to nearby forests and not try to infiltrate other housing units.

NRMB knows a few bats may still accidentally find their way into living areas. In fact, NRMB personnel handled 16 such cases in 1999 alone. If you should have an unexpected visitor, don't panic. Simply close and seal off the room, if possible, and call the DPW Natural Resources Management Branch at 544-7319, 544-6206 or 544-6120 during the hours of 7:45 a.m.to 4:15 p.m. Monday through Friday. On weekends and after office hours, call the MP Desk at 545-5222, 545-5223 or 545-5224.

Learn more about bats on the Internet. Here are just a few of the many interesting sites to be found:

The Adventures of Echo the Bat — an "interactive adventure" for children and a possible teaching tool for use in the classroom. The website is http://imagers.gsfc.nasa.gov/

A "bat cave" site offering a virtual tour of an Australian cave is chock full of pictures and information about bats.

This web site is the creation of a woman who runs a bird and animal shelter, and is registered with the Department of Natural Resources & Environment in Victoria, Australia. The web site is www.moneyraptor.com/bats.htm

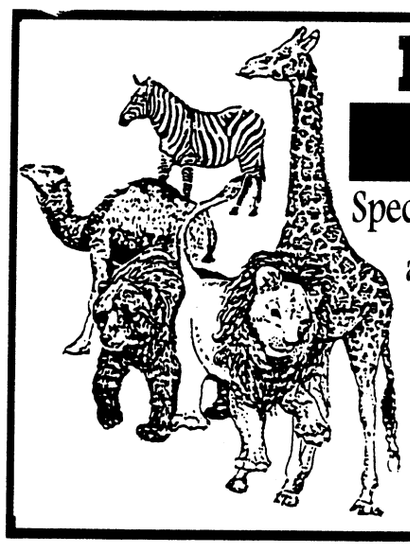
Ministry: Open to all military youth with the option to extend if the program is a success, New said.

Club Beyond is open to all military youth, not just chapel kids, Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel, family life chaplain, said.

"MCYM is a tremendous organization where the primary goal is reaching kids with the gospel and discipling them," he said.

Middle school students meet weekly at the TIC chapel on Sundays from 5:30-6:30 p.m. Senior high students meet from 7-8 p.m. Young people can expect a lot of activities through MCYM, for example, retreats, service projects, Bible studies and day trips. A parent support group will also be formed.



"In the next six months we will try to build on and develop a well-rounded youth ministry," Bruce said.

"We want to show teens that Christians can have fun, and at the same time reach them with the gospel," Neisy said.

"We want them to see that they can maintain their Christian values and beliefs and still have a good time."

Faith in God will keep you from running scared

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

There are no absolute guarantees. Even the best of plans can go awry.

However, there are those who never risk failure and end up running scared. Scared of what? Scared of living. Charles Swindoll said, "Running scared invariably blows up in one's face. All who fly risk crashing. All who drive risk colliding. All who run risk falling. All who walk risk stumbling. All who live risk something."

Running scared. It's a terrible way to go through life. Is there a cure for the one who takes no chance? Who says no to courage? I believe that it is all about trusting God.

Rupel

First of all, trust only works in the dark. If you can see where you're going then you do not need God. But King David knew the importance of having God as his guide through life. David wrote in Psalm 119:105, "Your word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light to my path." Trust is letting someone else be responsible for the obstacles. God knows what lies ahead and He will take care of anything that comes your way.

Do what you can and don't worry about what you cannot accomplish. There is nothing God wants more from us than to exercise our faith in him.

Faith is believing that which has no absolute proof. It is hanging tough when the evidence would have us bail out. It just makes good sense to not depend too heavily on our ability to make all the pieces fit. And trusting our emotions is even less reliable because they have the consistency and dependability of Silly Putty.

Trust dares us to fail. Abraham Lincoln had failure after failure but he did not give up. He was persistent and eventually became our 16th president.

Lincoln had a deep abiding faith in God and it was faith that saw him through defeat after defeat.

When I think about trusting God I am reminded of this story of a man and his encounter with God:

One day a man set off to climb the highest mountain in the area. While rounding a cliff he slipped and began falling.

It was a sheer drop of about 3,000 feet and the mountain climber knew he was headed towards his death. But about half way through his free fall there was a tree growing straight out from the side of the cliff and in desperation he grabbed hold and now found himself hanging on for dear life.

The man knew he would not be able to hang on too long and in desperation cried out, "Hello! Is there anyone up there that can help me?" Much to his surprise there came a reply, "Yes there is!" "Who is it?" asked the man. "It is God," came the reply. The man then said, "God, what do you want me to do?" "Let go!" said God. Whereupon the climber said, "Is there anybody else up there?" So much for trusting God.

Trusting in God is the only thing that will keep you from becoming cynical. Our greatest failure is not in our inabilities but in not letting God enable us.

God alone is altogether stable, so you can put your total trust in him and know that he is not going to let you down. Maybe it is time that you let go and let God take over.

chapel notes

Children's choir needs director — The fund manager is accepting applications for a children's choir director at The Infantry Center Chapel. For more information, see Master Sgt. Bridgett Starling in Room 512, Infantry Hall.

PWOC meet Thursdays — The Protestant Women of the Chapel meet every Thursday 9:30-11:30 a.m. in the Custer Terrace Chapel. The program includes Bible study, prayer, praise and fellowship. All women are invited to attend. Child care is provided at the chapel. For more information, call Heidi Cerjan at 689-9211.

Sunday School meets — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at Edward A. White School on First Division Road, from 9:30-10:30 a.m. There are classes for students from 3 years of age through adult. Everyone is invited.

Child care for children of parents who are teaching or attending Sunday School is provided at the Infantry Center Chapel. If you need a ride, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

PYOC meets — The Protestant Youth of the Chapel meet every Sunday in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Junior high and middle school will meet from 5:30-6:30 p.m. and senior high will meet from 7-8 p.m. All students in these age groups are encouraged to attend.

Confirmation class set — Confirmation classes for adults who plan to be confirmed in the Catholic tradition will begin on March 5. The classes will be from 10:10-11:10 a.m. at Faith Middle School during Confraternity Christian Doctrine. To register, call Phil Reilly at 545-5508.

Power of decision allows you to win

Chaplain (Maj.) David Giammona
Basic Combat Training Brigade

reflections

When I say the word progress, it conjures up in your mind visions of what the future is like: high-speed computers, digitized cars and other innovations.

Today, however, I want to talk about how you are making progress. None of us can truly progress until we break with everything that hinders us from being the best we can be. Misplaced affections must be abandoned, for they bind us to that which is passing away.

History provides an incident illustrating this important principle. When Julius Caesar landed on the shores of Britain with his Roman legions, he took a bold and decisive step to ensure the success of his military venture. Ordering his men to halt on the edge of the Cliffs of Dover, he commanded them to look down at the water below. To their amazement, they saw every ship in which they had crossed the channel engulfed in flames. Caesar had deliberately cut off any possibility of retreat. Now that his Soldiers were unable to return to the continent, there was nothing left for them to do but to advance and conquer. And that is exactly what they did.

Progress starts with commitment. The Roman Legion was now committed. They had to be because there was no turning back for them. That's what it takes for us to go forward in life. All or nothing. There is real power in making a decision that will ultimately allow you to win. That's the way it is in sports, academics and your everyday job. I like what missionary Jim Elliot said some years ago: "He is no fool who gives up what he cannot keep to gain what he cannot lose." Elliot was martyred for his faith, but he was so committed that he was willing to give his life for what he believed. I don't know where you are today. You may be looking for a fresh start, a new beginning. Or you may be wondering why things aren't going your way. Wherever you find yourself, don't look back and say: "If only." If only I had done this, or did that. If only I was faster, smarter, better looking or more educated. Throw that negative thinking away. Maybe you need to burn some old bridges and start directing your life with a fresh approach. Are you making progress? If not, reflect on this message for a moment, get out a piece of paper and start writing down what it is you need to do. Then look over the cliff and watch the ships burn.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters." Psalm 23:2

Youth Services needs coaches

Volunteers learn about sport through coaching

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Youth Services is looking for a few good men or women, even teen-agers.

Youth Services needs coaches.

As a child and youth specialist, it is Dorrie Wagner's job to recruit coaches for the various sports sponsored by Youth Services. It is also her responsibility to call parents when no volunteer can be found to coach their child's team.

"We are always in need of coaches. We want to give every child who wants to play the opportunity to play. No one wants to be the one to tell an 8-year-old that there's not enough coaches so he can't play," Wagner said.

With soccer and baseball seasons fast approaching, Wagner is still hoping to find volunteers to fill coaching and assistant-coaching positions.

"We don't drag folks in off the streets. We just want to clear up any misconceptions about what it takes to be a coach," Wagner said. "We have coaches from all walks of life. We have retirees, husband and wife teams, women coaching sports typically thought of as male-oriented, and even teen-agers."

One such coaching team, is David and Cheri Meyers, who began coaching together soon after they were married.

"He liked soccer, and I liked kids so this was something we could both enjoy. Now we coach our son on an 8-year-old team," Cheri said. "You don't have to have children to coach. You don't even have to have a background in soccer. Even if you've never played, you can learn the basics."

Cheri and her husband have worked with Youth Services to plan a soccer coaching clinic at the Youth Services center 9 a.m. Saturday.

Anyone interested in coaching, or simply learning the basic soccer skills, is invited to attend.

"It's a chance for people who don't think they know enough about the sport or afraid they don't have what it takes to be a coach to learn more about it," Wagner said.

Michael Dempsey had never played soccer when he first began coaching.

"I figured if they needed a rocket scientist to coach, they would have hired a rocket scientist. I had never played soccer and I had never coached 17 four- and five-year-olds," Dempsey said. "But it was a good opportunity to spend more time with my kids and I have enjoyed every minute of it."

Airborne sinks basket, secures last second win

507th pulls out to win against HHC, 1-29th

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Forward Tim Smith tipped in a three-point attempt in the last second of post intramural action Tuesday at Briant Wells Field House, to squeak out a 54-52 E Company, 1st Battalion, (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, win over Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry.

Center Shawn Bell and Smith, both of the 507th, battled for the tip-in in the last two seconds of the game after the ball was put up from three-point range.

With the last second ticking away, the ball finally fell after one final tip from Smith ending the predicted "very close game."

In the first half, with both teams frequently turning over the ball, neither team took a commanding lead.

At the end of the first half, 29th was able to hold on to the lead by only one point. After the first half, the largest spread was only five points as the 507th took the lead for the first time.

As the second half began, 29th jumped out to a quick lead, using a rapid advance down court, only to lose it briefly. After 29th missed several fast-break lay-up attempts, 507th closed the gap to within one.

With only one minute left, 507th picked up their eighth team foul, letting 29th go to the free-throw line.

The luck of 507th held as the one-on-one attempt by forward, Jason Wilson failed to drop.

With only 19 seconds left, 507th sunk a three-pointer to close the lead to one again.

Two more untimely fouls by 507th took 29th to the free-throw line twice.

Sinking only one basket, 29th fouled once again and 507th was able to rebound.

This led to the three-point attempt and Smith's tip in.

The only controversy of the game was when 29th called a time out with two seconds left on the clock and the referees were unable to give it to them.

When they called time, "it was a loose ball. They had to have team control, having the ball secured in one or both hands of a team member, to call a time out," said referee Juan Colon.

Smith agreed with Colon.

"I guess they tried to call a time out, but they never had possession. The ball was just being bounced around on the rim."

"We slowed down at the beginning of the second half and then needed to pick up the pace in the last two or three minutes as the game became do or die," he added. "The team hustled and it paid off as we won. I am really happy about that."

The post intramural basketball season started Feb. 7. Hoop action can be seen weekdays at three different gyms. Briant Wells, Audie Murphy and Santiago Fitness Centers, host the games on different days of the week.

Teamwork decides YS action

Redbulls sneak past Tigers in basketball play Saturday

Laurie Miller
Bayonet correspondent

From both ends of the court, one theme was key during the Redbulls-Tigers game in the 8- to 9-year-old-division of Youth Services basketball play Saturday — teamwork.

With the fewest players in their division, the Tigers know the importance of teamwork. Under the direction of Coach Lionel Lambert, the Tigers played a very impressive team-oriented game where good defensive skills were the goal.

Ultimately, the Tigers came up a few points short in a 18-16 final score.

Don Sando, Redbulls coach, said he felt his players "worked very well as a team, passed well, took good shots and that was the difference."

Redbulls guard Edgardo Rivera proves to be an up and coming force to be reckoned with as he shoots long from the outside and scores.

The first score of the game was made by Redbulls center, Cory Bush, who scored 5 points. High scorer for the Tigers was Anthony Wright with 7 points.

In the 6- to 7-year-old division, the Dream Team beat the Blue Bulls, 14-5, and the Black Bulls defeated the Tigers, 16-7, with Tre Powell contributing 8 points for the Black Bulls and Nathan Simons adding 6 for the Tigers.

In other 8- to 9-year-old division play, the Lakers defeated the Green Tigers, 40-10, with an amazing 20 points coming from Kahlee Tyler.

In a close match between the Magics and Bulldogs, the Bulldogs emerged victorious 23-21 with a score

Cottonmouths' goalie, furry mascot pay visit to schools

Program aims to keep students on right track

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Aaron Vickar always has a goal in mind. It's usually the one he's defending for the Columbus Cottonmouths hockey team. But when the professional goalie visited Fort Benning schools last week, he had a different goal in mind.

Vickar and his teammates have been visiting local schools, including White and Stowers Elementaries, to encourage students to work hard and stay in school.

The program, called Power Play for Schools, is sponsored by the hockey club and the parent-teacher organizations. Its purpose is to motivate students and raise funds for the schools through ticket sales.

"The program was started by the vice-president of sales for the Nashville Predators. It was so successful that this year we decided to implement it here in Columbus," said Scott Middlebrooks, Cottonmouths sales and promotions manager. "We hope to accomplish two goals. We want to help raise funds for the schools by donating a portion of the ticket sales generated through the program, and reach the kids with a positive message about the correlation between professional sports and school. They both take dedication and hard work."

As part of the program, Boomer, the Cottonmouths' mascot, and various hockey players visit each school to kick off the fund raiser. Students then earn prizes, such as T-shirts and ball caps, by selling tickets at a discounted group rate. The class with the most ticket sales will get to have a pizza party with the Cottonmouths players.

"We will use the money we raise to purchase new scholastic books," said White's PTO president Gail O'Hare. "But mostly this is just something we want to do for the kids. They're going to have a good time and learn a little about a sport many of them have never been exposed to. The money is just a bonus."

During Wednesday's assembly at White, students got the chance to sing and dance with Boomer, the big, friendly, blue monster. They learned a little about the sport of hockey, and fourth-grader LaVante Lewis modeled an official Cottonmouths uniform for his classmates.

"It was fun. I felt like a real hockey player in the uniform, except the pants were so heavy they kept falling down," Lewis said.

Vickar said the players often enjoy the school appearances as much as the students.

"The kids are always fun. They ask whatever is on their minds, whether it applies to hockey or life in general. They ask such simple questions as 'How does it feel to lose?' That kind of question can apply to all areas of life," Vickar said. "Overall, the message we try to bring is simple. Find something you love and dedicate yourself to it. It takes commitment to become a professional hockey player or to make the honor roll."

Cascade Falls captivates hikers, trail goers

Spc. Amy Nyland

outdoor corner

Walking along the Pine Mountain Trail recently I could have sworn I was in a fairytale.

I began my trek at the eastern trailhead located at the WSJV tower along Alternate 27 and Alternate Highway 85 North. My destination was a place called Cascade Falls located two miles into the trail. It is one of the many falls located along that section of the trail.

I have traversed through plenty of woods where I was taken back by the diversity, but none had my imagination whirling as much as these.

I admit the beginning of the trail is an aversion to what you will actually encounter. At first it is a little disappointing. The woods were simple, and a small cruddy looking pond was a couple feet from the path. Even the stream that laced the edge of the trail was dirty looking. However, about a half a mile in, it all began to change.

Soon I was hugged on all sides by dense areas of dark and mysterious foliage. Combine that with the mossy, rock-speckled trail and it felt as if I had been transported back to a more medieval point in time. Then without warning it was as if the page in the book had turned and it became a prehistoric wonderland filled with ancient looking trees, rocks and exotic plant life.

There was even a place where the trail crossed directly over the top of a small rock den. It would have been a most inviting place if the weathermen had been right and the skies had decided to wreak their havoc.

I think I lost track of the number of times I had to carefully hopscotch my way across where the stream interrupted the trail. By this time the water had gone from murky to clean, clear and crisp.

You end up following the stream nearly the whole time and on occasion you come to rugged clearings where smaller falls create pools of water. The banks of these pools are perfect for relaxing or picnicking.

However, my absolute favorite part of the trail was Cascade Falls itself. It wasn't like the falls were majestic tides of rushing water, rather soothing laps falling over a couple of medium-sized ledges.

What made the clearing stunning was the large rock outcrop situated like a wall directly along the trail. There was no way I could resist the temptation to throw off my pack and climb my way to the top.

Once I got up there it was stunning. I could see a bit above the tree tops and it felt like I was on top of the world, even if I was only about 50 feet off the ground. It was the perfect place to cast off all my troubles and let my mind wander.

I spent about 20 minutes on the rock before I got back on the trail and hiked for another mile before heading back the way I came.

Although I spend a lot of time talking about the hiking aspect of outdoor adventure, I must say this trail was rich in plenty of other activities. If you have an imagination, you can think of just about anything to pass the time. Whether that be a picnic, rock climbing, tree climbing, falls hopping or just sitting back and relaxing there is just so much potential for fun, whether you are by yourself or with the whole family.

YS: Divisions go head to head

9 points being added by Shekia Hill and Sean McNell for their respective teams.

In 10- to 12-year-old play, the Tarheels rolled past the Magics, 19-3. The Ruff Ryders were defeated by the 76ers, 38-17. Xavier Shaw scored an impressive 23 points for the 76ers. Anthony Lacour tipped the scales, in an otherwise evenly matched game, by adding 16 points to the Knicks 26-23 win over the Blazers. Arthur Scott was high scorer for the Blazers with 11 points.

Finally, in the 13- to 15-year-old division, Joey Fix scored all 22 points in the game between the Blue Devils and Ballers, yet it wasn't quite enough as the Ballers came up on top 27-22. Treton Fields added 8 points for the Ballers.

In a high scoring game, Roberto Duff contributed 23 points toward the Hornets 64-55 win against the 76ers. Darian Lyles almost matched Duff with 22 points of his own.

Coaches: Mentor post youth

Carl James also became a coach so he could spend more time with his son. However, when his daughter was old enough to participate, he found himself wanting to coach her team also.

"Sometimes it can be frustrating trying to schedule practices for both teams, but it's worth the effort. It's important to be involved in my kids' lives. I can be a great teacher and a great motivator for them," James said. "Hopefully, they'll develop skills along the way that will make them better athletes and better human beings."

Rick Caldwell, who is 16-years-old, began coaching to fulfill the community service requirement for his magnet high school program. Although he will not be coaching this season because he is a member of the Columbus High School soccer team, he hopes to coach for Youth Services again next fall.

"It was a pretty easy job and I think it helped me develop leadership skills. I would recommend it to other teen-agers who might not ever consider the possibility of coaching at this age," Caldwell said.

Kevin Elder considers the time he spends coaching an investment in America's future.

"We're out there building core values, like honesty and fair play. At this age, the kids are still so moldable, and they look to their coach for guidance," Elder said. "It's the neatest thing in the world to see a child's face light up when he scores a goal or blocks a kick for the first time, and he realizes he can really do this. That's building his confidence and making him believe in himself."

Youth Services director Linda Laine agreed that the ultimate goal of a coach is to make the game educational and fulfilling for the children.

"We need coaches who realize that winning isn't everything. Remember, this is a program for the kids first and foremost. We want them to enjoy their experience," Laine said.

Make a difference in the life of a child; volunteer to be a coach and attend the Youth Services soccer coaching clinic Saturday at 9 a.m. at YS center.

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Loans: Lender loosens its requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered " yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you are pre-approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self - employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge - "how much you qualify for". Credit manager Kevin Thompson or his assistant, Jim Stallings can be reached at (706) 322-8888 ext 144 or ext 145. Open 7 days a week.

Excess drinking leads to death

Soldier dies in barracks from alcohol poisoning

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A 20-year-old Fort Benning Soldier died in his barracks room last week from alcohol poisoning. His death resembles those at fraternity houses and dormitories on college campuses.

The young man, who was not known to be a drinker, was at a party where he consumed an immense amount of alcohol, including beer and hard liquor, in a short amount of time. He was taken to his room to "sleep it off" and never woke up.

"Alcohol is just like any other drug, when you overdose, it can be toxic," Capt. Bryan Alsip, chief of Preventive Medicine, said.

Alcohol-related deaths among underage drinkers across the country have shed light on binge drinking, defined as consuming five "drinks" in a sitting for a man and four for a woman. A drink is normally defined as one 12-ounce beer, one shot of 80 proof liquor or one 5-ounce glass of wine.

Generally, the body of an average person takes about an hour to detoxify one drink from the bloodstream, Alsip said.

If a person has three beers in an hour, it will take the next two hours before he is rid of the effects of the last two beers.

Factors such as body size, an empty stomach, and the presence of medications also play a part in how quickly the body absorbs the alcohol.

Young people are more likely to participate in high-risk drinking because they feel they have to show off and don't think anything will hurt them.

"They have a sense of invincibility," Alsip said. "For some, drinking is seen as a rite of passage, and they are less likely to back down from a challenge."

A 1997 Harvard School of Public Health study showed that there has been an increase in college students drinking just to get drunk. Drinking has become the primary way of socializing.

Tom Tennent, who holds a doctorate in psychology and is the chief of the Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program at Fort Benning, agrees.

"They don't realize that drinking should be a small part of life, not a main focus or a big thing," he said.

Peer pressure is a key factor in binge drinking, Sgt. 1st Class Cornell Swanier, education coordinator with ADAPCP, said.

"When that happens, I tell them they

White Elementary participates in Block Kids Program

A dozen architects, contractors, and financiers were on hand Thursday, as heavy construction began at White Elementary School.

Caution tape surrounded areas where amateur builders donned hard hats and started working shortly after 8 a.m.

In less than an hour a new space station, an ancient pyramid and several skyscrapers stood where there were once only cafeteria tables.

As part of the Block Kids Program, more than 60 first-, second-, and third-graders competed in a construction contest using only Legos, tin foil, cardboard and imagination. A panel of professionals from several Columbus area businesses served as judges.

The program, which is sponsored by the Columbus chapter of the National Association of Women in Construction, was designed to introduce students to careers in the construction industry. Each year, NAWIC presents the program at one elementary school in the Columbus area.

Evelyn Braman, White Elementary enrichment teacher, examines third-grader Robert Kaiser's construction project.

"We are quite excited to be a part of this program," said Dr. Judy Archer, principal. "With so many elementary schools in the area, we are very lucky to have been selected to host this year's competition."

Block Kids co-chairwoman Kathy Watley said the program stresses the importance of staying in school and

ITB Soldier dies

Trainee falls from inverted rope obstacle

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning Soldier in training at the Infantry Training Brigade died Feb. 26 while negotiating the confidence course.

Pvt. Adam Larson, 19, died as a result of a fall from the inverted rope descent portion of Sand Hill's obstacle course. He fell 20 to 25 feet to the ground, according to Fort Benning officials.

The inverted rope descent involves climbing a wooden tower and then sliding down a rope that suspends down toward another point away from the tower.

Post officials said that pads were on the ground during the training as a safety measure. "Safety is a primary concern during all training," said Monica Manganaro, Public Affairs spokesperson. More than 20,000 trainees go through the confidence course each year.

Larson's death was the first on the course at Fort Benning, said Regis Beighley, safety manager, Infantry Branch Safety Office

Larson was in his fifth week of basic training, and scheduled to graduate May 5.

The investigation into the accident is ongoing.

Army policy toward procedure is restrictive

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

To see without wearing corrective lenses is a possibility many people are contemplating these days.

What seemed impossible 13 years ago, when laser surgery was first performed, is now an everyday procedure.

The Army, as well as the other branches of the military, is studying Photorefractive Keratectomy and Laser In Situ Keratomilusis on several posts throughout the U.S.

Although the results of the surgeries are the same, the procedures differ, according to Maj. Scott Barnes, an ophthalmologist at Martin Army Community Hospital.

"In PRK, the laser is fired directly onto the eye, reshaping the cornea. For LASIK, a small flap of the cornea is cut and folded back. The same laser is then used to reshape the cornea. The final step is to lay the flap back in place," Barnes said.

Even with the constant advancement of the procedure, the Army still has a restrictive policy.

Currently the Army's policy on PRK and LASIK is, "a disqualification to come into the service if either of the procedures were done on the enlistee. It is also a disqualification to attend Army schools, other than academic, after either procedure has been done," Barnes said. "Currently, we do not know how well the eyes would respond and hold up to a rigorous and very physical school," he explained.

"However, once in service and finished with all combat arms schools, the Army medical regulations are less specific. While those in the flight community cannot have the surgery, others, including Rangers, Infantrymen and Special Forces Soldiers, have more lenient restrictions. While Army Regulation 40-501 does not prohibit this surgery for those mentioned, one needs to remember that altering government property, yes, your eyes belong to Uncle Sam, outside of a military hospital without prior consent from the chain of command is prohibited," he said.

However, the policy regarding the laser surgery is ever changing. "Last year at this time, no one was able to come into the service after having LASIK surgery. We actually had to discharge some new accessions from the reception battalion who had the procedure done prior to coming to the service. Unfortunately, they did not indicate they had it done until it was noticed by our astute optometrists during inprocessing," Barnes said. "Soldiers going into 'Delta Force' no longer need a waiver if they have had PRK, but LASIK surgery is disqualifying. Perhaps spurred on by this decision, on Sept. 10, 1999, the Surgeon General changed the regulations and began considering waivers for new military

Surgeries repair astigmatism, myopia, hyperopia with laser

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Two surgical procedures that last only a few minutes can improve a patient's uncorrected vision to 20/20.

Photorefractive Keratectomy and Laser In Situ Keratomilusis surgeries use an Excimer Laser to correct astigmatism, myopia and hyperopia.

According to The Shepherd Eye Center, "PRK, first performed in 1987, uses a 'cold' laser that does not burn or cut tissue. Instead, it gently breaks the molecular bonds between cells so that controlled amounts of tissue can be literally vaporized away, one microscopic layer at a time."

"LASIK surgery has been performed since the early to mid 1990s," Barnes said.

"The LASIK surgeon first uses a special oscillating blade to make a partial cut through 1/4-1/3 of the front surface of the cornea, creating a flap of clear tissue on the central part of the eye. The patient is then positioned under the Excimer Laser which is programmed to vapor away some of the internal corneal tissue under the flap," according to The Shepherd Eye Center website.

Hobby becomes hairy for spouse

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

There are hobbies, and then there are hobbies. I have several hobbies, which cycle through every few years. Those close to me could probably write volumes about what I have done in the name of one of my hobbies but they weren't asked to, so my secrets are safe.

My husband has one hobby. One. In my book, when you only have one avocation you cross the line between "hobby" and "obsession."

My husband builds model airplanes. Always has; always will. Not just any model airplanes either, but to scale (1:32 or 1:48, I can never remember which, but it's his obsession, not mine). The models are airbrushed in exact color patterns in the exactly correct shade of paint and accurately detailed past the harness buckles right down to the tick marks on the dials on the instrument panel.

I've never peeked under the seats, but I'm pretty sure if I did I would find little, tiny, itty-bitty thermoses and crumpled up coffee cups painted styrofoam white (with the insides airbrushed to look like coffee stains flecked with dregs, of course).

He's been known to strip down a paint job more than once because it dried too light (or too dark). Decals have been rejected for use because the nose art's model's hair was the wrong color, parts have been fabricated from scratch because the parts in the kit weren't "right." Models that he first built in the third grade have been disassembled, sanded, rebuilt and repainted because they needed to be "cleaned up."

Then there was the time he kept adding "liquid floor wax (CLEAR!)" to the grocery list and bugging the daylights out of me until I finally bought some. After I brought it home, he kept talking about how great it worked.

Funny. I knew I hadn't used any of it, and I was pretty sure our floors didn't look any different.

A few days later, I was marveling at how one of the perfect, to scale cockpit canopies sparkled.

I had no idea a drop of liquid floor wax could do that to a tiny piece of plastic. Our floors still don't look that great, but boy do those canopies shine!

I believe in attention to detail, but his model plane "jones" goes way past that. At one time, I thought he was going to get involved with my hobby at the time, showing our dogs. I got this idea, briefly, because of the interest he showed as I groomed our whippet the night before a dog show.

A whippet looks very much like a small greyhound. My husband watched closely as I scissored and shaved the dog's key points to accentuate his graceful lines and de-emphasize his faults.

Part of the grooming session included clipping whiskers to present a sleek, clean muzzle flowing into a properly shaped head.

When I was through I took the dog off the grooming table and was pleasantly surprised to see the model builder sweeping the dog hair into a dustpan. In the frenzy of packing the van for an early morning departure, I didn't notice his absence until he came out of the "hobby room" with a model in his hands.

"Check out the antennas! I finally found something that's exactly the texture I needed that's strong but easy to trim at the right angle and the right color and everything!"

Something about those antennas looked vaguely familiar. My suspicions were confirmed when his next remark was, "How long will it take Wilbur to grow his whiskers back? I'm working on another model like this one because they always flew in pairs and I'm going to need more antennas. The cat's whiskers won't work. They're the wrong color."

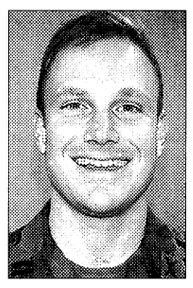
Then there was the time we were sitting side-by-side watching TV and he started playing with my hair. I had long hair back then, past shoulder length.

Contrary to popular fantasy, when you run your fingers through someone's hair, at some point, some hair will get caught and get pulled out. "Wow!" he said, "I'm keeping these (two) hairs!"

I was touched. I considered just cutting off a whole lock and tying it up with a ribbon for him ... right up to three days later when he brought out the bomber he'd been working on that he had finally got right. The one with a wire that runs from the top of the tail to the nose.

"I didn't know they made wires this fine," I said. "What is it? Piano wire?"

He looked at me as if I had just grown another arm. "No. Nobody makes wire that fine. That's why I needed one of your hairs. It looks great, huh?"



After nearly 20 years, I've learned to live with the miniature hangar in our formerly spare room.

There are days when the models are the only constant in my life. And it could be worse. The next time I'm asked to write about obsessive hobbies, I get to tell you about my cousin and his pigeons.

Facing fear leads to love of skydiving

Capt. Michael Morand
Bayonet correspondent

commentary

"Want to go skydiving, sir?" I looked up from the stack of papers on my desk and quickly tried to find an excuse not to go. Sgt. 1st Class Tracy Hickman, my tormentor, was anxiously waiting for my reply.

He then added, "C'mon, sir, you'll have a great time, I promise. We're going to be at the drop zone all day tomorrow."

Those words started my skydiving hobby. I showed up at the drop zone the next morning at 9 a.m. — sharp. Hickman was very surprised to see me.

My first jump was a tandem jump — I just wanted to see if I would like skydiving, before deciding if lessons were necessary. However, because Hickman had a lot of customers I ended up waiting to the end of the afternoon to jump.

I watched numerous planes take off loaded and land empty, followed a bit later by their human cargo. There they came, floating from the heavens like lost paratroopers on D-Day.

The watching and waiting made me feel like I was at the dentist's office listening to the hum of the drill. I really wanted to leave. Finally, it was my turn.

My tormentor gave me a half-hour class on everything — from how to get into the aircraft to what we would do should anything go wrong and how we would land.

I felt pretty good as we walked out to the small four-seater with only one seat in it. It helped that we were joined by another NCO from my unit, my platoon sergeant.

I felt good as the aircraft taxied down the runway and took off. I even felt good as we climbed past five thousand feet.

Then as we hit about eight thousand feet, my stomach started to turn into knots. Nine thousand feet and I was trying to think of a way to talk myself out of this mess.

It was at that point that I realized that it was too late. I was going to have to take my medicine like a man. That realization didn't make me feel better.

The door to the Cessna opened and the rush of air drowned our voices out totally. I was hooked up to Hickman and we prepared to jump.

My platoon sergeant went first and about 10 seconds later we followed. As we prepared to exit, I was terrified. We exited at 10,000 feet.

My tandem jump buddy decided that we would do a flip as soon as we exited.

I never realized it until he told me when we got onto the ground. In fact, I barely remember the jump.

I remember him pointing out the setting sun, the sound of the air as we fell through it at a speed of 130 mph and looking at the ground 9,000 feet below and closing.

I remember the initial jerk of the chute opening and the dysfunctional landing.

Once on the ground, back safely on terra firma, I specifically remember that I would never look at a bird, airplane, or blue skies quite the same ever again.

That next Monday, back at the office, I signed up for skydiving lessons. Some people just never learn. Years, and about a hundred jumps later, I still skydive once in a while, though not nearly as often as I would like.

Once you're out of the aircraft, you feel like you're floating on air and the view is spectacular.

Some people do it for the sport, some for the exercise ... I do it for the blue skies.

Better vision worth LASIK surgery

Master Sgt. Tracy Tanner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

"I've seen deeper into your eyes than anyone else," Chuck bragged.

Romantic?

Not exactly.

Chuck, a master sergeant buddy from Fort Jackson, S.C., was still feeling the high from watching me go "under the knife."

I had LASIK surgery. And I am a bonafide success story.

Sure, I experienced the halo vision while driving at night, and at some points, the sand-like feeling I had in my eyes was uncomfortable.

But, despite those short-lingering side effects, I can see — 20/20.

The pain during the surgery was non-existent.

In fact, I skipped the medication the doctor offered me.

After the procedure Chuck and I sat on my porch and I read him license plates from 100 yards.

It was incredible.

Before the surgery, I suffered from myopia, or nearsightedness, which meant I could see six inches in front of my face, and that was it.

You can imagine my excitement in being able to read license plates at 100 yards.

Chuck, who is dependent on glasses, was a good sport. He never tired of hearing "WKH-391 OHIO — The Heart of It All!"

He just kept saying, after checking my accuracy, "Good one you." Or "Brilliant."

Upon returning to work, I told everyone who'd listen about this wonderful procedure.

A direct victim of my "LASIK is the best," pitch, was Pfc. Mitch Frazier.

His eyes were bad.

Coke-bottle glasses bad.

He decided to do it.

Unfortunately, his procedure required more than the 15 seconds per eye that I'd spent under the laser.

His required the doctor cutting to correct his astigmatism.

"Oh, s---," is not something any patient wants to hear a doctor utter. But that's what Frazier heard.

The doctor had cut too deep. Computer operator error was to blame.

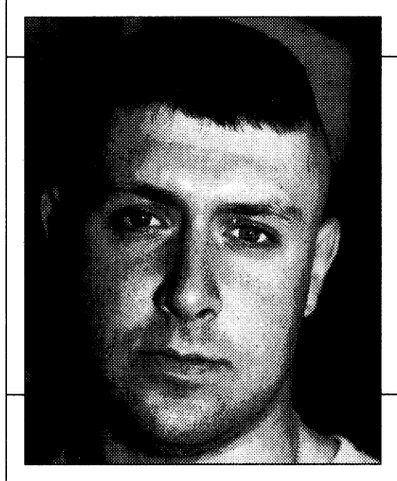
It is repairable, the doctor assured him.

And, after months of almost weekly doctor's visits, Frazier's near the end of that road and moving toward 20/20 vision.

But it's been a long road.

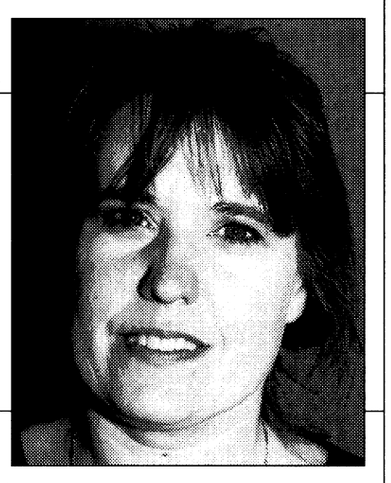
I admire Frazier's fortitude.

But, as he says, and I, too, knew, risks are involved.



I took the risks into account and went for it. I feel blessed every day.

Frazier took the risks and his surgery wasn't quite as painless, but he'll tell anyone who'll listen — absolutely, he'd do it again.



"It's hurt a lot," he says, emphasizing hurt. "But I've been wearing glasses since I was 6-months-old. Now I don't have to."

Allergy clinic moves back to Martin Army

Change will expand services to patients

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Daniel Orona and his mother, Genny, travel to Winder Health Clinic at Sand Hill twice a week so that the 4-year-old can receive allergy shots.

Starting March 13 they will go to Martin Army Community Hospital for their visits.

The allergy clinic is moving back to the hospital after spending 10 months at Winder.

The clinic was located on the hospital's ninth floor, but those offices were taken over by the Healthcare Management Division in May. When the renovated emergency room opened in January, the area that had served as the ER during the project was available, and the allergy clinic was given a new home.

The change pleases patients and the hospital's allergist who plans to expand the clinic's services.

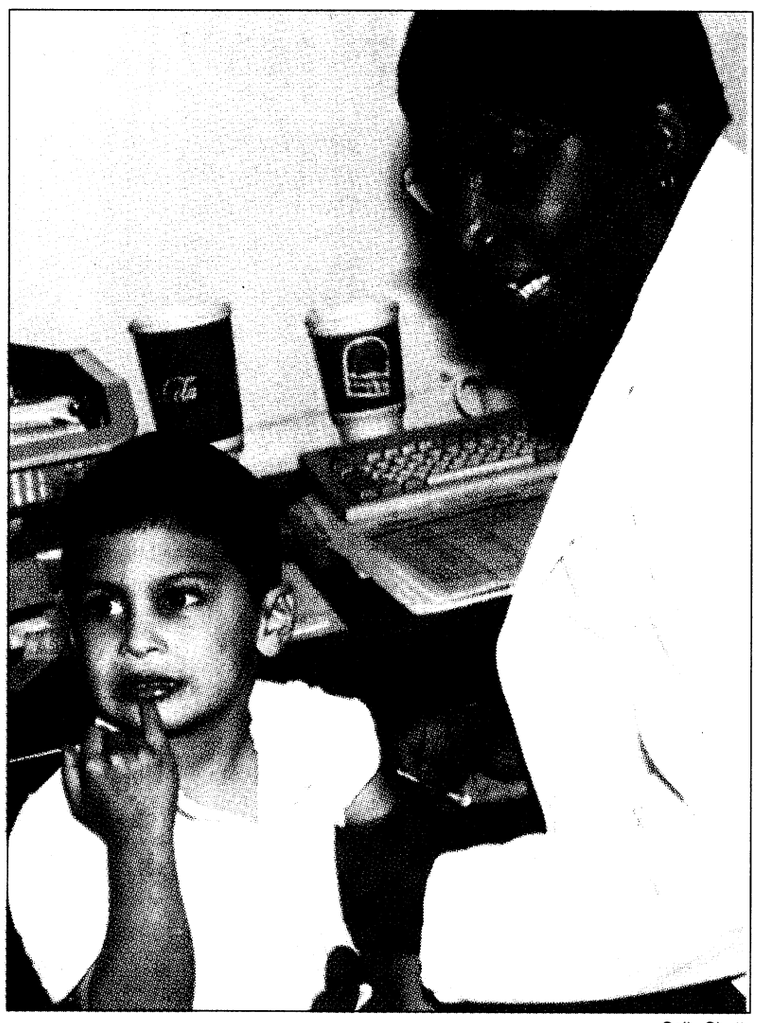
"I think it's great because it will be closer and more convenient," Genny Orona said.

Friday was Daniel's fourth birthday. He made a face when Brenda Martin, an allergy technician, gave him a shot, but when asked, he said it didn't hurt.

What could he say? Martin had just presented the boy with a birthday present.

Daniel is allergic to fire ants, and he understands what would happen if he were stung. Although he didn't call it anaphylactic shock, he said, "I would have to go to the hospital."

Daniel and other allergy patients will be offered extended services once the clinic is up and running in its new location, Maj. Stephen N. Marks, the hospital's allergist, said.



The clinic will be able to conduct challenge procedures that test for possible allergies to foods and other allergens. It will also offer increased support for inpatients with allergy-related issues, Marks said.

In addition, the doctor will be able to expand anaphylaxis evaluations and offer rapid desensitization — also called rush immunotherapy — primarily to active-duty patients who are allergic to fire ant, bee, wasp and hornet stings.

Family members and retirees who are allergic to stings are able to undergo a slower procedure that takes about six months to a year before they reach maintenance status. However, for active-duty Soldiers a slow buildup is not practical, Marks said.

In two days with rush immunotherapy a patient can be put on a maintenance schedule. The first day the patient receives shots regularly over the course of eight hours; the next day's course lasts about four hours.

"No civilians are going to do rush immunotherapy because there is no benefit in doing that. This is really a military-specific need," he said referring to getting Soldiers back into the field.

Sally Shutt

Brenda Martin, right, gives Daniel Orona an allergy shot at Winder Health Clinic.

Marks arrived at Fort Benning in August from Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., where he completed fellowship training in allergy and immunology. He passed the American Board of Allergy and Immunology exam in August.

Marks has a staff of two technicians, and he will hire a clerk soon. Patients must have a referral from their primary care manager to be seen in the specialty clinic or by the one allergist in Columbus who accepts Tricare.

The clinic will close its doors at Winder March 6-10, and re-open March 13 in its new location on the first floor of the hospital near the Family Practice clinic.

For more information call the allergy clinic at its new phone number, 544-2654.

Airborne sites get facelift

TRADOC awards $4M for safety repairs

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

The Airborne School's Eubanks and Mann Fields have been busier than normal for the past couple of months and it's not due to a student number increase.

The fields have been getting a little facelift — $3.9 million in work to improve the school's facilities.

The work is being done thanks to year-end funds from TRADOC, said Folke Ahlquist, Installation Support Manager for the U.S. Corps of Engineers.

"We got the money through the TRADOC Subject to Availability Funds program for Maintenance and Repairs," said Ahlquist. "Projects are submitted up to TRADOC for approval, and ours had a very high priority because of the training aspect. Also the structures themselves were getting worn down, so the project received higher scores when we competed with all of the installations for funding."

The renovations on the two fields include projects like resurfacing the running track; installing new wooden mock door training pits; the reroofing of several structures; replacement of the stairs, the roofs and the catwalks on the swing landers; replacement of wood poles with concrete poles and new cables on the 34-foot mock towers; painting of the mock towers and the rebuilding of the catwalks and several other projects.

"The PT pits will also get new roofs and be filled with new rubberized pit material," said Ahlquist. "And we're putting in new watering points and showers where they can run the troops through. They had showers at one time, but most of them have fallen down or are falling apart.

"A lot of the work on these structures hadn't been done since they were originally built over 30 years ago. This is the first time we've ever done any extensive repairs," he said. "It's quite a bit of work, and that's why it adds up to a big total dollar amount."

But the work will be worth it when it's all done, said Ahlquist.

"We want to have the best facilities for training our troops to be combat ready," he said. "You can't train to as high of a standard on antiquated equipment. We're trying to bring the equipment up to date. It's going to provide better facilities for them so that we can train Soldiers to the best of our ability."

School cadre said they are glad to have the work being done because it increases safety on the fields.

"We are happy in the safety level increase this will provide," said Maj. Keith Robinson, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry Regiment (Airborne) executive officer. "We are getting things done that we haven't been able to up to this point."

"Having the old roofs on the PT pits that were leaking and rusting replaced or the replacement of the catwalks on the 34-foot towers so the catwalks will accommodate our people while they work up there by having a barrier around them, all of the work makes us real happy because it increases the safety," he added.

The work is being completed in conjunction with the school's training schedule.

The work on the two fields began in October 1999 and is expected to be completed before the project deadline of October 2000.

Alcohol: High-risk behavior causes deaths are allowing someone else to make decisions for them," he said.

Many young Soldiers are away from home for the first time, and those who cave in to peer pressure have not developed proper problem-solving skills, Swanier said. In their need to belong, many will accept the challenge from others to participate in drinking games at social functions like payday parties. With little drinking experience and alcohol tolerance, they can fall prey to high-risk behavior.

Swanier also cites stress as a factor. With excess hours at work and long deployments, binge drinkers want to "play catch-up on the weekend."

Tennent cites the desire for instant gratification.

"I want to relax now, I don't want to take a few hours to relax and alcohol will make it happen fast," Tennent said.

Alsip cautions young drinkers who think alcohol poisoning only occurs in individuals with chronic drinking problems.

"It only takes one bad time to cause a life-threatening event," he said.

"It takes one night of binge drinking to have someone die of alcohol poisoning. It takes one error in judgement to get behind the wheel of a vehicle and be responsible for the death of someone in a crash."

Two years ago, the family and friends of Bradley McCue found that out when the college student died of alcohol poisoning on his 21st birthday.

A junior at Michigan State University, McCue celebrated his birthday in a way customary at MSU and other campuses — he drank his age. After he finished 21 shots, he drank three more for a total of 24 shots of liquor, beating the record of 23 among his friends. He was taken home and put to bed. His Blood Alcohol Count (BAC) reached the lethal level of .44g/100 ml and he died.

Alcohol poisoning is a medical emergency, and the signs and symptoms are recognizable.

For example, the person's skin will turn cold, clammy, pale or bluish. The individual will give no response when being talked to, shouted at, pinched, prodded or poked, and will either be unconscious or semiconscious.

His or her respiration slows to eight or less breaths per minute, or lapses between breaths can be more than eight seconds. The drinker has a rapid heart rate and a lowered blood pressure.

Passing out is not sleeping it off. Even though the person may be semi-conscious, alcohol already in the stomach may continue to enter the bloodstream and circulate throughout the body.

"The stomach is a reservoir that keeps pumping the alcohol in," Tennent said.

This is an emergency and should be handled as such by calling 911 and seeking medical help. While waiting for emergency transportation, gently turn the intoxicated person on his or her side and place a pillow in the small of the back. This will help prevent choking should the person vomit. Stay with the person.

While there is no antidote for alcohol poisoning, medical personnel can conduct support procedures to give the liver time to detoxify the alcohol. For example, patients may be intubated and have their stomachs pumped.

McCue's family and friends have established a non-profit organization B.R.A.D. 21 (Be Responsible About Drinking) to educate the public about the dangers of high-risk drinking. Their web site, www.brad21.org, provides information on alcohol poisoning and prevention.

Education is the key to prevention, and Swanier and Tennent are working hard to get the word out to young Soldiers on the dangers of high-risk drinking. They present classes to units all over post and encourage Soldiers to share information with each other.

A Soldiers Openly Discussing Alcohol (SODA) program, similar to one started at MSU for students, is in the works.

"We hope we are going to get more people to listen. Alcohol is a dangerous drug, and abusing it is a high-risk behavior," Tennent said.

Test your alcohol knowledge

Provide a true or false answer for each of the nine questions:

1. Alcohol is a central nervous system stimulant.
2. Alcohol and aspirin taken together raise Blood Alcohol Levels.
3. Alcohol abuse and alcohol dependence are different problems.
4. A large quantity of alcohol affects respiration and heart rate.
5. An average mixed drink contains nearly twice as much alcohol as a beer.
6. Everyone eliminates alcohol from their body at the same rate.
7. A glass of wine is absorbed into the bloodstream faster than a gin and tonic.
8. Drinking coffee will help you sober up.
9. Vomiting is part of the body's defense against alcohol poisoning.

Answers

1. False. Alcohol is a depressant.
2. False. Aspirin has no effect on Blood Alcohol Level. Some other medications do.
3. True. They are different. Alcohol abuse is binge drinking. Dependence means alcohol is necessary for normal functioning.
4. True. Alcohol is a central nervous system depressant that affects both functions to the point of stopping the heart and breathing.
5. False. A mixed drink with one shot of alcohol has the same total alcohol content as a 12-ounce beer or a 5-ounce glass of wine.
6. False. The rate the body eliminates alcohol is affected by several things, including body size, the amount of food and sleep you have had and other factors.
7. False. Carbonated beverages in a drink will cause faster absorption.
8. False. Drinking coffee will not make a person more sober.
9. True. Vomiting is a body's response to eliminate the poison alcohol.

Contest: Builds career choices concentrating on math, science and computers. It also gives young students the opportunity to learn more about the different professional career choices in the construction industry.

"We want them to know that construction involves more than just hammer and saws. Not only will they have the chance to meet various professionals involved in some facet of the construction community but they will also have so much fun that they won't even realize they're being educated," Watley said.

Architect Bob Kidd was on hand to help judge the competition.

"Our firm has participated in this project each year because we think it is important to encourage these students' interest in construction," Kidd said. "Programs like this make school fun and interesting. They help improve creative skills and develop well-rounded students."

Steve Brasington, of Brasington Builders in Columbus, cautioned the students to never forget the fun of playing with Legos.

"Always remember how it is to be a kid. When you grow up, chose a career doing something you enjoy — something that makes you as happy as you are when you're playing with these Legos," he said.

Third-grader Kelley Maresca has already decided he will pursue a career in the military as a demolition expert. Maresca's "wrecking ball tower" took first place in the competition, and garnered the 9-year-old a $100 savings bond.

Second-grader Demitri Johnson, won second place and a $50 gift certificate for his creative construction of a futuristic rocket ship and airport.

Chrissy Helmick was awarded a $25 gift certificate for designing a top-security museum to house rare artifacts and precious stones. Her third-place finish convinced Helmick that she might be well suited for a career in the construction industry.

"I already know I want to be a teacher, but it might be fun to teach other people how to build things," the third-grader said.

Policy: Draws Procedure: Clears fuzzy sight Army review

accessions with a history of PRK or LASIK. The same month, Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Benning began to consider waivers for combat arms school applicants with a history of PRK only. No waivers are currently considered for LASIK in combat arms schools.

The waivers are fairly specific and a number of conditions must be met before being considered, such as they must wait 12 months after the surgery before requesting a waiver," he added.

Barnes, who underwent the PRK surgery six years ago, said Soldiers who want to have the surgery done should contact their unit commander and inform him that they want to have it done, so the unit will be aware of the situation. Fort Bragg, N.C., will be the first post to receive the $500,000 laser equipment. A plan is in effect to install five new lasers throughout the Army within the next five years, but Fort Benning is not on the list.

A new study, testing LASIK surgery is under way with a small number of Ranger students here to determine the safety and wisdom of LASIK surgery in the rigorous training environment," he said.

Throughout the Army, it is widely disputed whether or not it is a good thing for Soldiers to have either of the surgeries done, Barnes said. "It is nice not to have to have the inserts for the protective masks, and it is nicer to jump without them. You have to worry about glasses being broken and the glare from the lenses giving away your position. However, glasses do protect your eyes from branches and other flying debris commonly encountered in training as well as wartime."

As in all surgery, both LASIK and PRK have their side effects. "People who have higher prescriptions and have PRK done, sometimes have a slight haze. The prolonged use of eye drops can also lead to infection," he said.

One Soldier who had LASIK done, has a slight, repairable wrinkle on his eye that was caused from the LASIK surgery, but said he would go through with it again in a heart beat.

"I have worn glasses since I was 6-months-old, and when the possibility of not wearing glasses and the problems that go along with it came up, I jumped at it. Going into it, I knew the risks involved, and I have the wrinkle, but it is fixable and it will not cost extra," said Pfc. Mitch Frazier, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "It is really great. Now I can see as good, if not better. My weapon's qualification went up because I can see the target, and I do not have glasses falling down when I do PT."

With recruiting numbers down, the Army someday may use the surgery as an incentive of getting people to enlist, Barnes said.

"I found it to be greatly beneficial to me," he said. "I do have slightly dry eyes, but it is not bothersome. My prescription was one that typically has a high success rate, and I got a great result."

The surgery sounds painful, but it really isn't, said Maj. Scott Barnes, an ophthalmologist at Martin Army Community Hospital. Numbing eye drops are used prior to the procedure.

Although newer, LASIK surgery is not necessarily better than PRK, said Barnes. And it is more expensive.

However, the LASIK patient can recover total potential of vision in one or two days compared to PRK's recovery time of one or two weeks, he said.

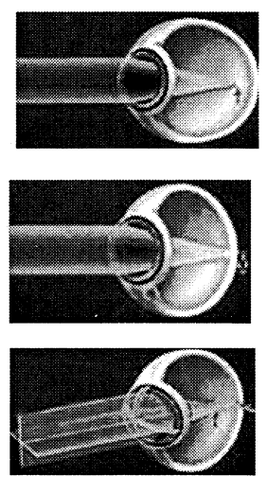
PRK patients must visit their doctor a few more times after the surgery than the LASIK patient.

With PRK, the patient generally returns to the doctor the day after, three days later, one week after, two weeks after, then one, two, three and finally six months after the surgery.

LASIK patients generally return to their doctor the following day, one week, one month and finally six months following the procedure, said Barnes, who is licensed and trained to perform the surgeries.

"The freedom from glasses or contacts is a big reason that many people undergo the surgery," he said.

People who have the surgery done have a 40-80 percent chance of 20/20 vision after the surgery and a 60-95 percent chance of having 20/40 vision afterward, depending on prescriptions, he said.



With mainly mild side effects, which include dry eyes, glare and halos with night vision, both surgeries are usually very successful.

"However, there is a .5 to 2 percent chance that the patient could permanently lose two or more lines of vision (on the eye chart), and this loss cannot be recovered with more surgery, contacts or glasses," Barnes said.

Several clinics in the Columbus-Phenix City area offer the surgeries. Kelly Brian, a patient services and market coordinator at one clinic, said, "The cost is $1,500 per eye with a $125 evaluation fee to see if the interested person is actually a patient. The surgery only lasts for about 20-25 minutes for both eyes and the patient is sent home the same day. Our clinic has performed over 7,000 surgeries with a 98 percent success rate."

"For the most part everyone can have the surgery done," Barnes said. "Although people who are diabetic, have glaucoma, herpes of the eye or eye infections may not be good candidates for the surgery."

Officer earns wings in second half of career

42-year-old nurse sets example for younger Airborne students

> "I want to experience every opportunity in the military that I can."
> — Maj. Judith Lee
> Nurse practitioner, MACH

For four months fellow Airborne graduates have dropped in to Maj. Judith Lee's office on the seventh floor of Martin Army Community Hospital just to say hello and see how things are going for the nurse practitioner.

Lee, who works in the internal medicine section, catches herself calling the young Soldiers "kids."

But at 42, she's earned that right and her own set of wings.

In October, the Massachusetts native was the second oldest student in her jump school class. An Army reserve doctor, who is five years her senior, was the oldest.

She recalled the first of her five jumps and one particular young man who approached her once they were on the ground and in the assembly area.

"I thought about you when we were in the plane," the private told her. "I thought if you could do it, I could do it."

Lee laughs at the memory, then turns serious.

"As an officer, you are supposed to be an example. If I've affected one life, that to me was a greater reward."

Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Tolle, C Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, was one of Lee's instructors.

"She showed a lot of will power and she showed the younger students that it could be done," Tolle said.

"She was a big influence on the rest of the class. There were probably more than a few students who used her as a role model."

Lee arrived at Fort Benning three years ago, and ever since she had wanted to attend Airborne school.

"I like a challenge," she said. "I like being with the troops, and I think it is important for people like myself to see what they really do."

Her roster number was A65 — the only moniker she went by for three weeks while assigned to C Co., 507th (Airborne).

"I tried to be incognito, but I was probably the shortest one over there," the 5-foot-2-inch blonde said.

The PT was not a problem for Lee. An avid runner, she has competed in two Ironman Triathlons in Hawaii.

"If you aren't in good physical shape, don't go down there (jump school)," she said.

However, there was one difference she noticed while doing parachute landing falls in the training pit.

"The young kids just spring up," she said. "I can keep up, but I just don't spring up."

Her civilian counterparts don't get a chance to do the things the Army offers.

"I want to experience every opportunity in the military that I can," Lee said.

She graduated from Air Assault School in 1993, and will leave this summer for Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. She would like to then become a chief nurse of a MASH or field hospital.

"Would I jump again? The answer is definitely yes," she said. "I am a Soldier first, and you get to be a better Soldier by the training you receive.

"These are people's sons, daughters, husbands and wives, and it's important that we (medical personnel) keep training in Soldier skills so when we follow the Infantry into conflict and when they are injured, it's our job to make sure they come home."

Ammo loaders' mission keeps Soldiers trained, qualified

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For the thousands of Soldiers who go through the Infantry and Basic Combat Training Brigades each year, Soldiering would not be the same if it weren't for a platoon assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The 30 Soldiers who make up the platoon are responsible for supplying the brigades with all of the ammunition necessary for training.

Not only that, but they are responsible for supplying the CONUS Replacement Center as well.

While it may appear that the Soldiers' jobs are clear cut and easy, it is anything but, said 1st Lt. Doug Godby, platoon leader.

Godby said the Soldiers in four different sections ensure the units get what they need when they need it.

All of the sections are responsible for making sure they do their part efficiently so the other runs smooth.

He explained that the operations section determines the ammo requirements for each unit and handles all the paperwork.

Soldiers in magazine storage area 90 draw the correct amount of ammunition, store it, segregate it and prep it for loading and delivery. Then the job is handed over to the transportation section, which helps load the trucks and deliver it to the 40 different ranges on post.

Later during the day transportation picks up the residue and unexpended ammunition. The renovation section is responsible for screening all residue and accounting for all brass.

The process is continual from the time the Soldiers get to work until they leave.

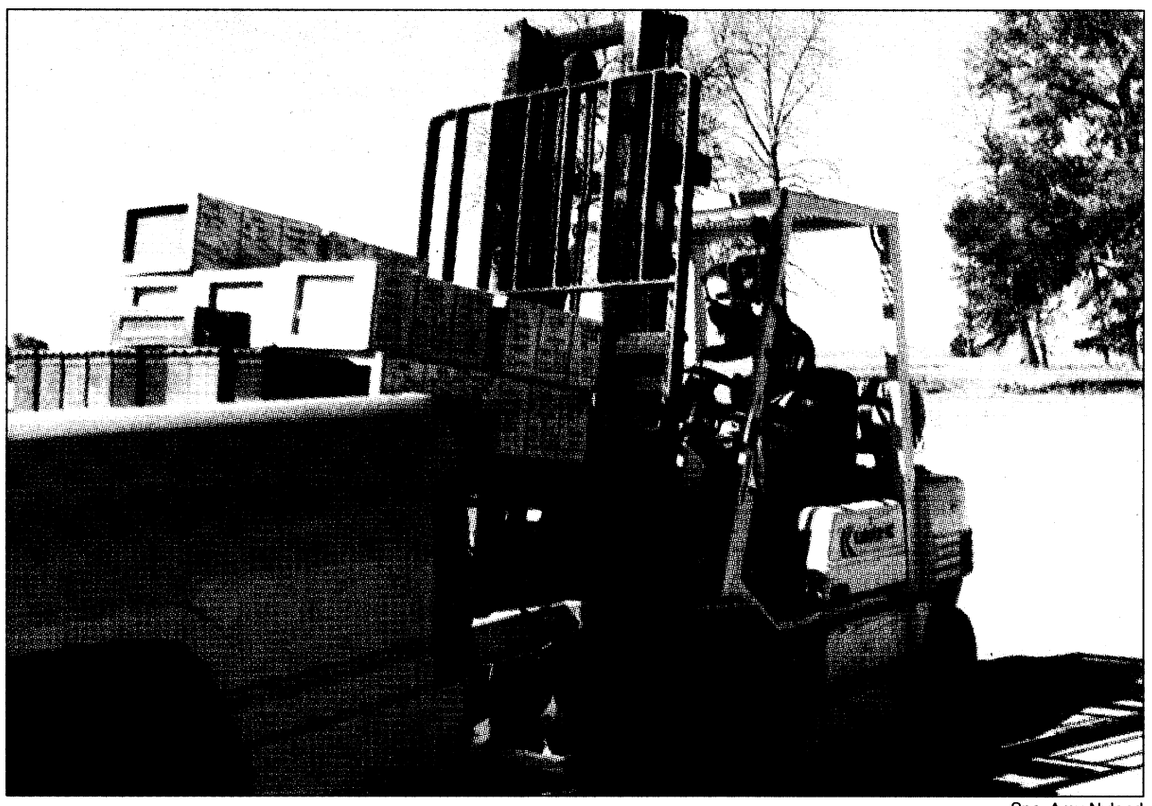
"These guys are the Fed Ex of Fort Benning when it comes to ammunition," Godby said.

Spc. Brian Meyer, who works in magazine storage area 90, said on an average he sees around 250,000 rounds a day, totaling close to 700,000 pounds.

Keeping track and accounting for the more than 50 different kinds of ammunition brass requires a lot of paperwork and meticulous attention, said Pfc. Deborah Alcaraz, renovation section.

At best she said it can be described as tedious.

"I'd say it's pretty tedious because everything needs to be accounted for," Alcaraz said. "If we are short that falls on us and there will be questions asked, because when you're dealing with ammo you can't exactly be losing this or that. You need to make sure everything adds up."



Meyer said a lot of people don't understand what their job entails.

"No one fully understands what we do, they think we have a sham job," he said. "It can be pretty stressful and its tough because there is a lot of adding and subtracting, a lot of paperwork and you have to go over everything with a fine tooth comb to make sure it's right."

He said it is important for everyone to do their job right because if not the Soldiers in training are the ones who lose out.

"To the Soldiers in training our job is vital because if we aren't paying attention we could be shorting them rounds or giving them the wrong ammunition and they wouldn't get the proper training. As long as we are paying attention to detail it makes it a lot better for them."

Even with the daily rigors, Meyer said he really enjoys his job and especially the chance to see all of the different kinds of ammunition other Soldiers may never get to see.

Spc. Brian Meyer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment unloads crates of ammunition at the supply point.

The fact that every Soldier who receives training at Fort Benning gets the personal touch of the 29th ammo platoon is what makes it so unique, said Godby.

"Every Soldier who comes to Fort Benning whether Infantry or at the Basic Combat Training Brigade all have to fire ammunition, they all see claymores go off and throw hand grenades," Godby said. "All of which is delivered by these guys."

IOBC students send rounds downrange during exercise

2nd Lt. James Bowie
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Bullets ripped through the air at Wagner Range in mid-February as the "Bushmasters" of Infantry Officer Basic Course Class 2-00 continued their training.

During this, the fourth of the 16-week course, the officers road marched to the field for a two-day exercise which involved crew-served weapon system familiarization as well as military stakes practice and testing.

The M-240B machine gun and the M-249 SAW were fired by the Soldiers during both day and night firing drills. Using the weapons was a great experience for the officers.

"The M-240B is a superb weapon system that is easy to maintain and provides for excellent control of fire," said 2nd Lt. Chris Boyce.

This is the same weapon system that is currently replacing the M-60 machine gun throughout the Army.

During military stakes, the Soldiers of B Company participated in a number of stations ranging from claymore mine employment to misfire procedures on the AT-4.

"The material covered here is great," said 2nd Lt. Dan Alder. "It allows for practical education that I can use as a platoon leader and it will help me to earn my EIB."

While 12 weeks still remain in the course, the cadre and students of IOBC Class 2-00 are working together and working hard to turn out young Infantry officers in today's Army.

Maj. Martin Reutebuch, B Company commander, said he's sure that with a continuation of intensive training and the current high level of motivation, the Army will soon have the very best Soldiers available today.

Fitness vital to OCS training

Capt. Richard Crowther
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS)

Time has proven that a Soldier's level of fitness has a direct impact on the Soldier's combat readiness and leadership potential. Leadership potential is evaluated throughout the 14-week commissioning source program of the Officer Candidate School.

OCS is an intensive, physical course. In the first five weeks of the course an officer candidate will put their bodies through an entrance APFT; the Combat Water Survival Test; the Conditioning Obstacle Course; the Leaders Reaction Course; the Confidence Obstacle Course; combatives; road marches and land navigation.

The next nine weeks continue to be intensive, stressing more intellectual skills. Yet, the Soldier's bodies will endure more road marches, combatives, tactical leader course lanes and an intensive field exercise before graduation. Everyone in the 11th Infantry Regiment is also charged to conduct 90 minutes of physical training daily.

The ever-demanding constant at OCS is that the body must remain healthy throughout the course. If not, the officer candidate is evaluated, receives a medical profile and recycled to the next available class date.

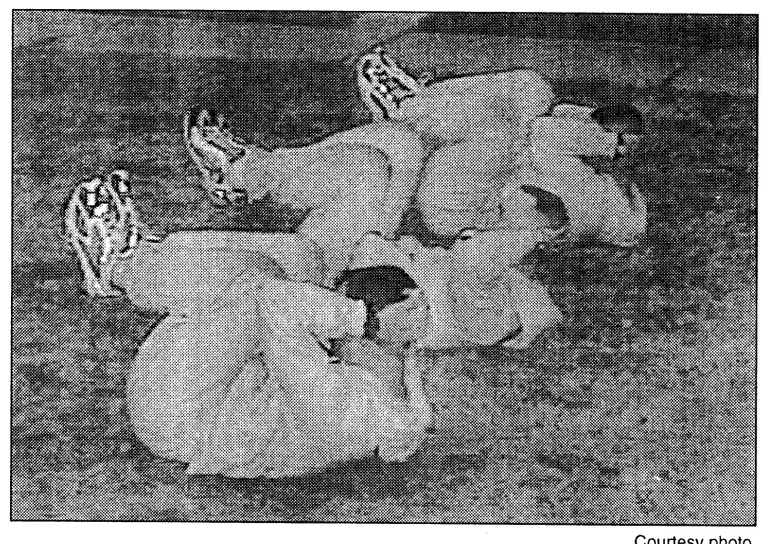
Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (Officer Candidate School) is charged with reception of all medical recycles. Normally, HHC will accept 10 percent of any given training company's officer candidates due to medical recycles. The proactive efforts are the results of work by both 1st Sgt. John Edgeworth and the former HHC Commander Maj. Bill Ramsey, who is currently Executive Officer for 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. (OCS).

Their efforts have produced a physical fitness program that would allow the medical recycled officer candidates to recover and return to the next class, help reinforce APFT scores of any early arrivals officer candidates and also provide a maintenance program for the company's Soldiers.

The physical fitness program defines three areas of concentration. The first area of concentration is that of a diagnosis of each Soldier's physical readiness. This allows not only the staff but also the student to gain a new focus on their potential for graduation as an officer.

"At Officer Candidate School, although the entrance requirement for the course is an APFT score of 180, we see a direct correlation with medical recycles and scores of less than 240 on the entrance APFT", said Ramsey.

The second area of concentration focuses on rehabilitation of injured Soldiers and returning them to the next available class.



Due to the physical nature of this course, the Physical Therapy Clinic and staff are in constant interaction with Officer Candidate School. The clinic staff offers OCS medical recycles and staff aggressive physical therapy regimens to allow everyone to return to their duties or next available class date.

The last area of concentration is a fitness program that allows each future officer candidate to enter class in the best condition possible. The program revolves around a cardio-respiratory improvement formula of alternating muscle endurance and muscle failure with ability group runs.

The frequency of the program runs over a six-day period, with alternating days (Monday through Saturday). Also, the morning physical fitness program is supplemented with an individual program, know as the MAX PT program that surfaced in NCO Journal, Summer 1993.

The candidates conduct MAX PT sessions as afternoon training and on an individual basis during the weekends.

Whether the Soldier is a medically recycled candidate or a future candidate, the unit's focus on physical fitness allows all selected personnel to either return or enter the next available class date in the best physical state of conditioning.

Children invest in stock market

Students use Dow index to learn math

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Twelve-year-old Destiny James recently invested $100,000 in the stock market. Yet she appeared strangely undisturbed by the risky financial endeavor.

"What can I say? It wasn't my money to begin with," the seventh-grader shrugged.

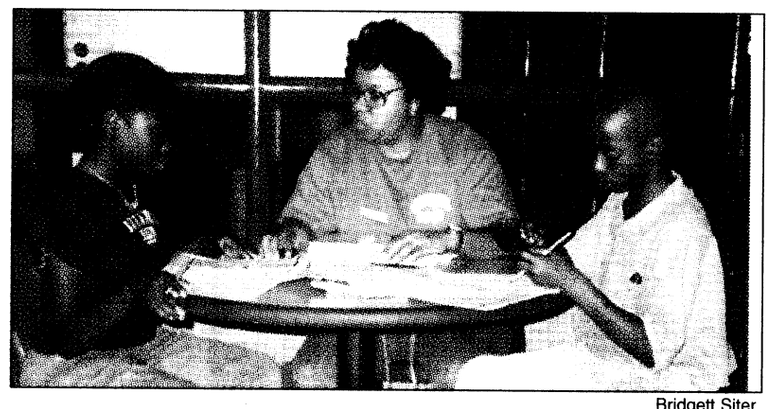
True, the money did not actually belong to James. In fact, it wasn't even real money at all.

James and 13 other students in the Youth Services middle school program was each given $100,000 to invest in the stock market. The students are using the imaginary money to learn stock market investing and trading skills during an eight-week program called The Stock Market Game.

The biannual program is sponsored by the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer and is open to all area schools and youth services. This is the first time Youth Services has participated in the program.

Quintella Thorn, Youth Services recreation specialist, attended a workshop to learn the rules and regulations of the game. She now works closely with the students to help them become familiar with the math skills needed to calculate earnings and losses.

The first week of the program students were allowed to pick one stock that interested them. The second week they had to sell and reinvest their money. They use the newspaper to check their investments every week and reevaluate their decisions.



"They are really having to use a lot of math skills and that alone is a big benefit," said Thorn.

Although the money is not real, Thorn believes the skills the students are learning will have a very real impact on their lives.

"They may not appreciate this project for another 15 years, but one day they'll be thankful they've developed a real working knowledge of the whole process," she said.

Eleven-year-old Kevin Pichardo said he'll be putting his stock market knowledge to use as a professional basketball player.

"A lot of kids think they don't need to know this kind of stuff because they're going to make a lot of money," Pichardo said. "But I'm going to invest all my money when I'm playing professional ball."

Pyramid helps keep nutritional goals

Staying healthy becomes easier by label reading

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The key to losing weight and staying healthy may be easier than people think.

Although there are an assortment of products and companies that promise quick and simple ways to shed those pounds and lower blood pressure and cholesterol, a cheap and fool proof way is simply understanding the food guide pyramid and food nutrition labels, said Maj. Colleen Kesselring, chief of nutrition care division, Martin Army Community Hospital.

Kesselring said when it comes to eating healthy it is important to look at the whole picture.

The first and vital step is to adjust a diet so that it falls into the food pyramid recommendation. This means the bulk of a person's food intake should be whole grain, breads, cereals, pasta and rice; usually between six and 11 servings a day. In between are the fruits, vegetables, dairy and meats which all require between two to five servings a day. The very tip of the pyramid are those foods that should be eaten sparingly, such as fats, oils, and sweets.

Once people adjust their diets they can use nutrition labels to guide their food choices, Kesselring said. She said the best way to do this is by comparing similar foods. So, if people want to eat something that falls into the sweets category they can use the label to compare two products to determine which is the healthier food choice.

Of course, before individuals can determine what is healthy and what is not they must first understand the different parts of the food label.

The main parts of the label a person should be concerned with are the serving size, servings per container, total calories and fat.

It is always important to look at serving size and servings per container because an item may seem to be low in fat and calories, but there may be more than one serving per container, which multiplies the fat and calories. For example a food may have 100 calories per serving, but if there are three servings per container than a person could end up eating a total of 300 calories.

If a product's calories from fat are one-third the calories then usually it will be a low-fat food, Kesselring said. And generally if it has three grams of fat per serving or less it is also considered a low

Maj. Sam Mubangu relaxes at home after helping his mother immigrate to the United States from Africa.

Soldier brings mother 'home' after 20 years

Maj. Sam Mubangu looked forward to his mother's arrival much the same as any Soldier who has been separated from his family for too long. And like any other, he is anxious to introduce her to his friends and his way of life at Fort Benning.

But for now he will have to wait for her to recover from the severe bout of hypertension and dehydration that nearly ended her life on the 21-hour plane trip from Nairobi to the U.S. It is not the first time 76-year-old Christine-Awezae Mubangu has narrowly escaped death.

Last June armed rebels invaded Christine-Awezae's home in the tiny village of Nyalukunga, in Congo, Africa. The rebels killed nearly 100 villagers, including Christine-Awezae's husband. After receiving news of his father's death, Mubangu contacted friends in his homeland who immediately evacuated Christine-Awezae to the safety of her daughter's home in Nairobi. It was there she stayed during the lengthy process of acquiring an immigration visa to the U.S.

"For my mother it was quite complicated and very, very stressful. The visa requirements for immigration are difficult," Mubangu said. "My experience coming to the United States was quite different than my mother's. I had very little to do with the whole process. Strangers were taking care of all my paperwork."

Although Mubangu said he still has no idea who was ultimately responsible for acquiring the visa that allowed him to live in the U.S., he refers to the circumstances leading up to his arrival as "very exciting and amazing."

Mubangu was born in the Belgian colony of Congo in 1954, six years before his country would win its independence, and seven years before it was divided by the civil war that still rages in parts of Africa today.

When he was in the fifth grade, Mubangu was selected to attend a Belgian Catholic seminary in Zaire. There he received the best education his country had to offer.

"I was lucky. My parents realized the value of education. They could not afford to send me, so the priests became my benefactors," Mubangu said. "It was very rigorous training of mind, body, and soul — like a military school. It was considered a grooming-ground for leaders. I knew even then that I was getting something special."

Mubangu flourished in school. He made good grades and enjoyed soccer, theater, and writing. As a young student, it was easy to remain oblivious to his country's economic crisis and mounting political tension.

YS plans workshop to help teens land jobs

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Youth Services and Army Community Services are co-sponsoring a series of job strategy workshops for teens and middle schoolers March 7, 14, and 21 at the Youth Services center.

Quintella Thorn, a recreation specialist at the center, said the workshops are designed to introduce students to the skills they will need when looking for employment.

"Our goal is to begin to prepare our kids for the whole job application and interview process," Thorn said.

Mark Mills, ACS family member employment specialist, will be presenting the workshops titled "Job Hunting Skills" "Resume and Application Forms," and "Dressing and Preparing for the Interview."

"We just want to give kids who are preparing to join the work force a chance to learn what to expect and what will be expected of them," Mills said.

The three workshops are scheduled for Tuesday evenings at 5 p.m. to accommodate the public and the students in the Youth Services middle school program. For more information, call Youth Services at 545-3070.

School plans nature trail as part of area beautification

Grade schoolers are learning what plants attract butterflies

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Now that Wilson Elementary students have had the opportunity to enjoy the beauty of their newly renovated classrooms, their thoughts have turned to improving the exterior of their school.

With the support of John Brent, chief of environmental programs for the Directorate of Public Works, members of the school's Butterfly Project are formulating a plan to landscape the front lawn of the school, create a nature trail and eventually develop beautification projects in the surrounding neighborhood.

Members of the project are meeting weekly with Brent to discuss the logistics of their plans. Project coordinator Margaret Koger said Brent's contributions to the project have been numerous.

"Not only has he helped us to focus our big grandiose schemes into something we can realistically accomplish, but he has also provided us with resources in a number of other areas," Koger said. "When we needed to know how to remove graffiti from the walls of the school, he put us in contact with someone who could do it. He's also arranging for speakers to come to the school and educate the kids about various environmental topics."

Brent has helped the students design a layout for landscaping with plants that will attract butterflies. They began taking soil samples to determine what types of plants will grow well in this climate.

"We are looking at the big picture — the goals of the project — and breaking it down into bite-size pieces. Then we'll use all our resources — the students and teachers and volunteers — to implement each step. We're being good stewards of both our environmental and human resources," Brent said.

The immediate goal is to begin planting before the end of the school year, he said.

"The kids need to see progress to become committed to the idea of taking responsibility for their environment. Once we determine which plants are suitable, prepare the soil and plan for irrigation, we'll want to get the plants in the ground as soon as possible," Brent said.

Once planting is completed, he said classes will "adopt" areas of the landscaped lawn to maintain.

"Starting plants is easy. How do you care for them and keep them alive? These are the things the students will learn," Brent said. "And they will make mistakes along the way. But that's how we learn."

Next year the Butterfly Project plans to

Flint Energies

Flint Energies is making a difference on Fort Benning.

Fort Benning's Ranger Training Brigade awarded Flint Energies' Line Crew leader, Gregg Rigsby, a certificate of achievement for outstanding support, performance, commitment to excellence and tireless efforts contributed to the training mission and welfare of the Soldiers. Rigsby was recognized during the opening ceremony of Fort Benning's "Rangers in Action" demonstration last week in the presence of 900 Army Rangers and their families.

"The Rangers invited me to attend the demonstration last week," he said. "They seated me on the front row when I arrived. When they called my name to present the award, it was a complete surprise. Fort Benning personnel are greatly appreciative of the service Flint Energies provides."

Rigsby has 10 years of line work experience with Flint Energies.

Last year he was promoted to line crew leader, a new position created to focus and serve the electric utility needs of Fort Benning. He is also a member of Flint Energies' four-man team that captured first place in the EMC Division insulator change-out event at the Fourth Annual Southeastern Electrification Council Lineman's Rodeo.

"Gregg is worthy of this award because of his endless dedication to the customers and our cooperative. He contributes to the notable recognition Flint Energies has received for the cooperative teamwork of improving the safety and reliability of Fort Benning's power system," said Flint Energies President and CEO, Joe Cade.

Flint Energies won the bid to serve the military base last year when Fort Benning led the process to privatize electric utilities at Army installations. The electric cooperative immediately began upgrading, maintaining and operating the electric distribution system June 1 when ownership of the system was transferred from Fort Benning.

Since the acquisition, Flint Energies has invested more than $1million to upgrade and maintain the military post's power system.

'Penguins' perform play

Peggy Gindville
Dexter Elementary School

I'm a little penguin, black and white, short and wobbly, cutesie sight; I can't fly at all but I love to swim so I waddle to the water and dive right in!

This is just one of the many songs 44 pre-K students sang as part of Penguins on Parade program at Dexter Elementary Feb. 23. Parents, teachers, students and family members were regaled with penguin facts during the evening performance.

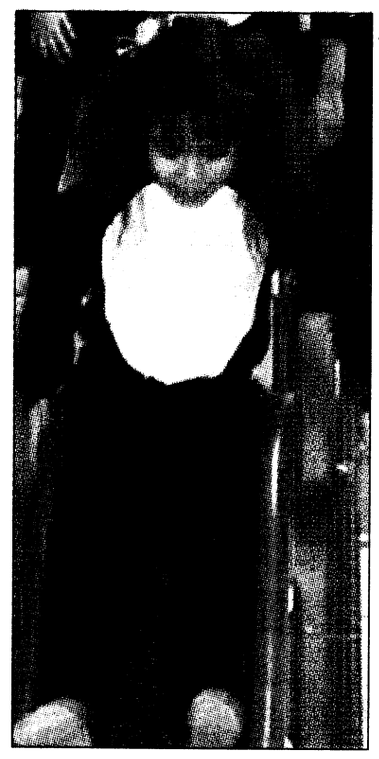
Both the morning and afternoon pre-K classes rehearsed the program that included penguin facts and other musical selections.

Under the direction of Cy Dietrich, visual and performing arts teacher, the 4-year-olds delighted the audience with a variety of songs and dances and even an occasional penguin joke.

The best part of the program, said Kortne Moore, was the snoring she did as a penguin before the other penguins told her to wake up and belly flop into the "water."

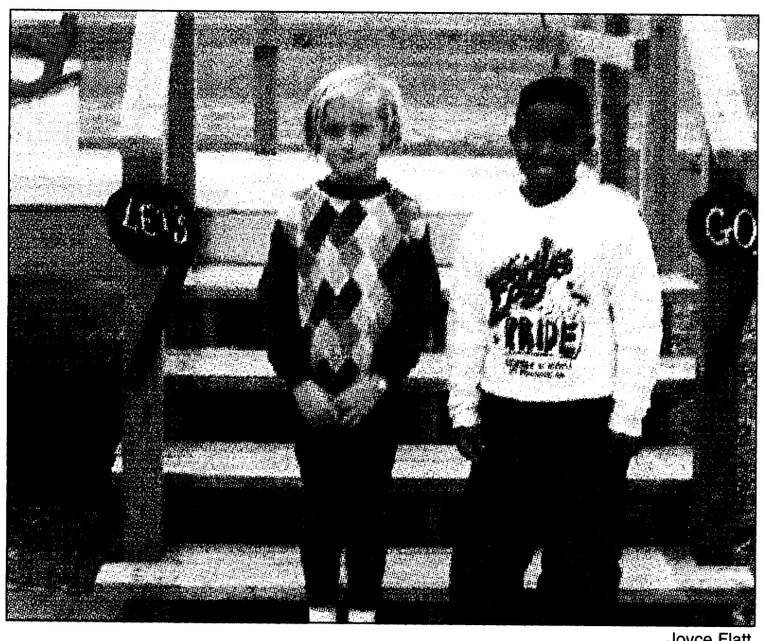
Another reason Moore enjoyed her stage performance was because she got to waddle like a penguin.

Not all family members were able to attend the performance and Marissa Brockbank's grandmother was one of them.



So the pre-K student gave a command performance Wednesday morning for her grandmother. She performed all of the penguin songs from the program, her mother, Kristina said.

She was not the only child who still knows the program.



Lindi Young remembered that penguins live at the South Pole.

The children learned all about penguins. Studying their physical attributes as well as their habitats helped students as they rehearsed for their stage debut.

Students spice up moving process

Street names, painted paths make learning in trailers memorable for students

Dexter Elementary School

Like other military schools Dexter has always had a mobile population, but now the entire school is on the move!

Because of the year-long renovation project taking place at Dexter, classrooms and offices have been relocated into mobile units to the rear of the school.

Students and staff have turned the move into a very positive experience, said Bammie Cofield, the school's guidance counselor.

She explained that by decorating their units and grounds with flags, plants, banners, gardens and street signs, they have more ownership of the move.

Fourth-grader Eric Hare agreed.

"One really neat thing about our move is our street signs," he said. "This is an election year so we (the fourth- and fifth-grade classes) voted on our street name."

The three choices were:

- Herbie's Highway (Herbie the eagle is the school mascot.)
- Trading Trail
- Switch-a-Roo Avenue

Hare explained the last two street name choices came about because the fourth- and fifth-grade classes move between classes.

"We voted on our favorite name and Switch-a-Roo was the winner," he said.

The colorful street signs were created by visual and performing arts teacher, Cy Dietrich.

Dietrich also painted a path to the music room and television studio. He added a whimsical touch to the modular school village by painting a yellow brick road out to the studio, Cofield said. The railings along the porch are decorated with musical notes. Dietrich even plans to turn the deck of the music studio into a piano.

"I like the yellow brick road that Mr. Dietrich painted on our sidewalk," said second-grader Preston Colvin. "It makes it easy to find the music room — you just have to follow the Yellow Brick Road."

The students move from their modular classroom to the music modular to areas still being used in the school building during the day.

"I thought the trailer would be really small, but it's not. It's like a real classroom," said second-grader Greta Goesch. "It's a change but I like it. It's kind of neat being outside."

Freedom: Gives opportunities

But in 1979, as a senior at the University of Zaire, Mubangu became increasingly aware of the social and political injustices forced upon his countrymen by Mobuto, the dictator who had seized power from the nation's elected officials.

Like many of his fellow students, Mubangu had once admired the new leader, until it became obvious that Mobuto was squandering the nation's wealth and destroying the economy. While Mobuto was enjoying a luxurious lifestyle, his country was suffering from a major gas shortage and many of the Congolese people were starving to death.

After Mobuto threw the country into a state of chaos by changing the national currency, Mubangu and several university students drafted a memorandum demanding government reforms.

"It was meant to be a peaceful uprising. We outlined changes that needed to be made for the political and social well-being of our country," Mubangu said. "We formed commissions and distributed these documents through the churches."

Angered by the students' actions, Mobuto infiltrated the campus with spies who were commissioned to kill the leaders of the uprising. The entire student body revolted and began destroying property and setting fire to the campus. Nationwide university students joined the uprising and the once-peaceful boycott turned into a full-scale riot.

"We were very idealistic college students. Although we knew what Mobuto was capable of, we never really believed he would turn violent on us," Mubangu said. "We did not plan for things to go in that direction, but circumstances became out of control, and the whole thing snowballed into violence."

A cousin of Mubangu, who worked for Mobuto's secret police, alerted the student leaders that Mobuto intended to have them killed. The leaders escaped and hid from the police for over six months.

"Some of the very people who were working for Mobuto hated him. Some of them knew the students they were assigned to kill," Mubangu said. "Instead, they would warn us when and where Mobuto would be searching for us."

Desperate for freedom, one night the students crossed the Congo River in a dugout canoe and reported to the United Nations embassy in Brazzaville before turning themselves in to the government. They were imprisoned for four months before the UN intervened and granted them visas to the United States.

Unable to speak English, Mubangu arrived in Oklahoma on July 12, 1981. It was here that he discovered the Catholic church of the Congo had worked diligently to secure his passport to freedom. The U.S. Catholic Charities agreed to sponsor Mubangu and provided him with a job and a place to live.

It was also here that Mubangu met his future wife, Philomena Reynolds, who was working as a secretary at the Catholic church.

"Although I had been briefly exposed to English in high school, I still could not speak a word of it. I watched television, listened to tapes, and studied the dictionary to learn the language. It was very hard," Mubangu recalled. "But Philomena understood what no one else could understand. It was very strange. We could communicate."

Working as a dishwasher for 12 hours a day left no time for Mubangu to pursue an education. He angered his church sponsor when he resigned from his job and left the Catholic Charities program to look for a position that would allow him to attend college.

"I did not come to America to be a slave. I wanted to finish college and there was no way I could do that working 12 hours each day," Mubangu said.

Six months after arriving in the U.S., Mubangu moved to Texas, where he worked as a valet and saved enough money to start college. At the University of Houston, he taped course lectures and transcribed the tapes each night until he began to understand the English language. He graduated with a 3.72 grade point average, and started law school in 1985.

"That was hell," Mubangu chuckled. "Perhaps worse than my ordeal in the Congo. Teaching methods are very different here, and I had a difficult time."

Despite these difficulties, Mubangu, now a citizen of the United States, graduated from law school and joined the military in 1989.

"When I was in law school I met a recruiter who planted a seed in my mind. I thought it would be good to give something back to the U.S.," Mubangu said.

In 1997, he moved to Fort Benning, where he assumed the position of chief of criminal justice. Mubangu and his wife have two children — a son, Deffy, who attends the Virginia Military Institute, and a daughter, Annuarite, who is a seventh-grader at Faith Middle School. Now Christine-Awezae has joined the Mubangu household.

Like her son, Christine-Awezae has begun a new life in the U.S. unable to speak a word of English. Although she still has nightmares about her husband's death, she is recuperating in her new home and enjoying the company of her daughter-in-law and granddaughter.

"Now that my father is gone, my mother is content to let me care for her. Before his death I could not persuade her to come live with me," Mubangu said. "Now she is happy to be here. She calls it 'her glorious work of coming to America.'"

Mubangu, too, considers his mother's arrival a glorious achievement.

"Bringing my mother here is the greatest accomplishment of my life — my happiest moment," Mubangu said with a grin. "Getting her here was more difficult than entering the gates of heaven. There is no paperwork required for heaven. I would rather meet St. Peter than face another U.S. consulate. But then, we are now in America — the heaven on earth."

ask the judge

Capt. Richard Henry
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am recently divorced but was separated for a while before the divorce. Are there any special tax considerations I should know about?

A: Yes — there are several things you should watch out for when you are divorced or separated when filing your taxes.

First is making sure you choose your correct filing status. Your marital status is important in determining your income tax filing status. You may file as "single" if you are unmarried and obtained your divorce, legal separation (determined under state law), or annulment by the end of the tax year (Dec. 31).

You generally file as "head of household" if you are unmarried at the end of the tax year or are married and lived apart from your spouse the last six months of the tax year, and you kept up a home for your child (listing the child's name on the return) or for the person whom you claim as a dependent.

Couples not divorced by the end of the year may be able to file "jointly" (married filing jointly status) or separate returns (married filing separately). You should figure your tax both ways to make sure you are using the method that will result in the lower tax.

A big question in divorce is who gets to claim the kids? There are several tests a parent must meet to claim an exemption for a child when the parents file separately. A child's exemption usually may be claimed by one of the parents (not both) if the child had gross income of less than $2,750 for 1999 or that child is under 19 or is a student under 24.

Generally, the custodial parent gets to claim the child. If neither a divorce decree nor agreement establishes custody, then the parent who had physical custody for the greater part of the year is considered to have custody of the child. The custodial parent can release the exemption to the noncustodial parent by signing a written declaration, Form 8332, Release of Claim to Exemption for Child of Divorced of Separated Parents, or similar statement.

When there is a divorce, frequently there is alimony.

This is how that works. Alimony is income for one person, and is deductible by the other. Alimony or separate maintenance payments you make to your spouse or ex-spouse under a divorce or separation agreement are tax deductible (they are an adjustment to your gross income reported on the Form 1040).

You do not have to itemize deductions to claim alimony payments. The recipient of alimony payments reports them on the Form 1040 as part of the recipient's gross income.

Remember this, child support is not alimony and is therefore not treated the same. You do not deduct child support payments that you make, and if you receive child support, it is not included in your gross income.

One last thing to consider. You will probably have to change your tax withholding. This is done by filing a new Form W-4, Employee's Withholding Allowance Certificate, with your employer when you become divorced or separated.

Changes in income, deductions, exemptions or filing status during the year may require you to change the amount of tax withheld or begin to make estimated tax payments.

For instance, if you are single, divorced or legally separated, you must claim single status on your Form W-4. If you receive alimony or other payments which are not subject to withholding, you may have to ask for additional withholding from your wages or make estimated tax payments.

For further information see IRS Publication 504, Divorced or Separated Individuals. It contains specific details on the tax rules on property settlements, IRAs, and other topics of interest to divorced persons.

The Tax Center 2000 is open for business in Infantry Hall Classroom 1. The hours are Monday-Friday 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The phone number is 545-4267.

School: Plans outdoor space

expand their efforts to include other areas of the school and the surrounding community.

"Some of the trees and plants that are already here have historical value to the school. They were planted in memory of former staff members or to commemorate an important event. We want to maintain them or, if necessary, replace them. Then we plan to begin work on an outdoor classroom in the courtyard area of the school," said Dr. Wanda Person, who is working on the project. "And eventually we plan to make a nature trail in the area behind the school. Through our efforts, we hope to build enough credibility in the community to begin spreading our project into the surrounding neighborhood."

Koger said she hopes the Butterfly Project will foster a sense of community awareness that will ultimately result in a nicer environment.

"Our vision is to build a pride in this school and neighborhood. And if we can channel the students energies into caring about the place they live and learn, we'll see results for years to come," Koger said.

Fifth-grader Josh Olive agreed the project will have a long-term impact on the school and neighborhood.

"I think it's a really neat thing we're doing because we're making our campus a place new students will want to come to," he said. "If we don't take care of what we have, 20 years from now there won't be anything here to take care of."

Like Olive, Brent calls the Butterfly Project a "neat" program.

"This project just has so many exciting possibilities," Brent said. "It's a neat idea and it's fun as well. On top of all that, we're educating this generation about ecology and conservation. This is just the right age to introduce a solid foundation about caring for our environment."

Labels: Provide healthy read

high blood pressure and cholesterol make is concentrating on the sodium and cholesterol contents on the label, she said. However, it is fat and saturated fat that are more important because these have a greater affect.

In fact, saturated fat is what raises blood cholesterol level, and weight has a direct impact on blood pressure. When a person loses weight their blood pressure usually drops. So it is imperative to watch fat and calories.

"If you are watching your cholesterol and you see a label you may say 'look this donut has no cholesterol, it's OK for me.' But what affects your cholesterol more than anything else is fat and saturated fat. Since one donut may have about 20 grams of fat it should not be a regular part of your diet," Kesselring said.

On the opposite end of that it is always good to have three or more grams of dietary fiber in a serving, said Ted Cristobal, a licensed dietician at MACH.

Cristobal said fiber not only increases a person's metabolism, but it can also help control blood sugar, lower cholesterol and has been known to prevent cancer.

He said when looking at diet is best to consider something he calls the rule of threes — three grams of total fat or less and three grams of fiber or more per serving.

While it is important to pay attention to food labels, Kesselring said it is best not to get too hung up on them.

She said it is more important to stay within the food guide pyramid and to use food labels as a guiding source when choosing between same food groups.

She also mentioned that it is critical for people to include their favorite foods in their diets even if they aren't entirely healthy.

"All foods can fit," she said. "I like to say, 'let's not make any hard and fast rules about what you can and can't eat.' You should have guidelines, but make sure you break those every once in awhile so you don't go crazy."

"It's all about moderation," she added.

To round out the whole picture, Kesselring said it is also important to stay active. She said it is hard to go on a diet and lose weight if someone does not exercise.

Exercising can be as simple as getting up while at work and taking a walk through the building, just as long as the body is moving.

"Everything connects, it's about balance — balance what you eat with your physical activity."

Christians fast, pray, give during Lenten season

Chaplain (Maj.) Donald Blickhan
USAIC Chaplains Office

reflections

On Ash Wednesday Christians from many denominations will come forward to the altar to receive a cross drawn on their foreheads.

As the minister signs the individual he challenges him to "Remember you are dust and to dust you shall return."

This stark injunction calls us to face our mortality and the fragility of life.

So begins the holy season of Lent. We call this season "holy" because God calls us through it to "wholeness," to becoming more fully what we can be. It is an opportunity for looking at our present lives and being open to the Lord's forgiveness, his healing and his grace. It is a profoundly positive time.

Christians have traditionally chosen three observances or paths during Lent.

The first is prayer. Prayer opens the channels of communication with God. We pray, not so much for what we can say to God (who does not need our advice), but rather for what he can say to us. His words, if we listen, are words of strength, healing, grace and peace.

The second practice is fasting. We deny ourselves some legitimate pleasure such as food, drink, entertainment in order to quiet our hearts to listen more closely to the Lord.

The last practice is that of charity.

Having opened channels to the Lord in prayer, having listened more clearly to his Word in fasting, we are able to reach out to the needy all around us.

Jesus himself emphasized the need for penitential practices when he taught that "Unless you do penance, you shall perish."

The season of Lent is an incredible opportunity to draw closer to the Lord. Those who walk with the Lord through Lent will rise with him at Easter.

Rules give children roadmap to healthy adulthood

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Healthy families need rules, without them you end up doing whatever seems right for the moment.

"All families have their own ways of doing things, or 'rules,' that define how they work together as a family. In healthy families the parents think about the rules for the family, make rules for the family and enforce the rules," said George Daub, founder of Family Wellness Associates.

Rules are a roadmap for family members. They can give clear direction to family members so they know what is expected of them and what the consequences are if the rules are not followed.

Too often rules are a list of what parents do not want instead of what is wanted.

"Rules are clear ways to tell your children what you want or value. Rules framed in a negative way — saying what you don't want — don't give direction or purpose," Daub said.

Families who have very few rules or none at all are headed for disaster.

And remember, if you as a parent do not want your child to smoke or swear then you must refrain from smoking and swearing.

"Attitudes are caught not taught," said James Dobson a noted Christian psychologist.

Here are some tips for making rules from Survival Skills for Healthy Families:

- Make rules for what you want. "Be home by midnight."
- Make rules with results you can see or measure. "I want your clothes hung in the closet."
- State the rule in a sentence. "Take out the trash by 6:30 every evening."
- Anticipate areas where the child will need a rule and make it. "When the guests arrive, the TV is to be turned off."

Get your children's thoughts on rules that affect them, especially as they get older. Then, you make the final decision.

Only make the rules you are prepared to enforce. Consider your own comfort, as well as your child's needs in deciding on rules. "You would like to stay up until 10 p.m., but your mother and I need some time to ourselves. Bedtime is 9 p.m."

Expect resistance.

Everybody needs rules, so parents should resist the temptation to have a free and open family without rules because if you do, you will raise children who are not self-disciplined.

Beginning March 14 the Family Life Ministries Center will offer a parenting class. For more information, call at 545-7777.

29th suffocates 11th's offense

2nd place team takes 64-56 win in scoring frenzy

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Using a suffocating defense and pinpoint accuracy in the last six minutes of Monday's post intramural basketball game, A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, allowed only three baskets while scoring 15 points against Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment to get a 64-56 win at the Briant Wells Field House.

David Best, a 29th forward, went on a scoring streak adding seven of the last 15 points and drew two fouls taking him to the free-throw line.

Starting off the game strong, Jeff Frye, a 29th forward, was the first to score after a rebounded foul shot and a fast break in the opening seconds of the game. The game remained close throughout the first 15 minutes of the first half with neither team taking more than a two-point lead. Fouls from 11th started early in the game while 29th was foul free for 10 minutes.

With five minutes remaining in the first half, 11th began to slowly pull away, taking a four point lead despite many "no-look passes" that traveled out of bounds.

Fighting back, 29th struggled to keep the four-point gap and began to foul a little more frequently. With only a few ticks left on the clock, 29th guard Josh Craddolph fired and sunk a half-court shot as the horn sounded. Barely late of releasing the ball, the referees were unable to count the extremely long shot leaving the halftime score 35-31 in favor of the 11th.

Paul Buremeister, an 11th forward, stole the ball and drove the length of the court for an easy lay-up beginning a short period of unanswered points.

Digging into its bag of tricks, 29th began its pressing defense that kept 11th at bay while closing the point gap and then taking the lead with seven minutes left.

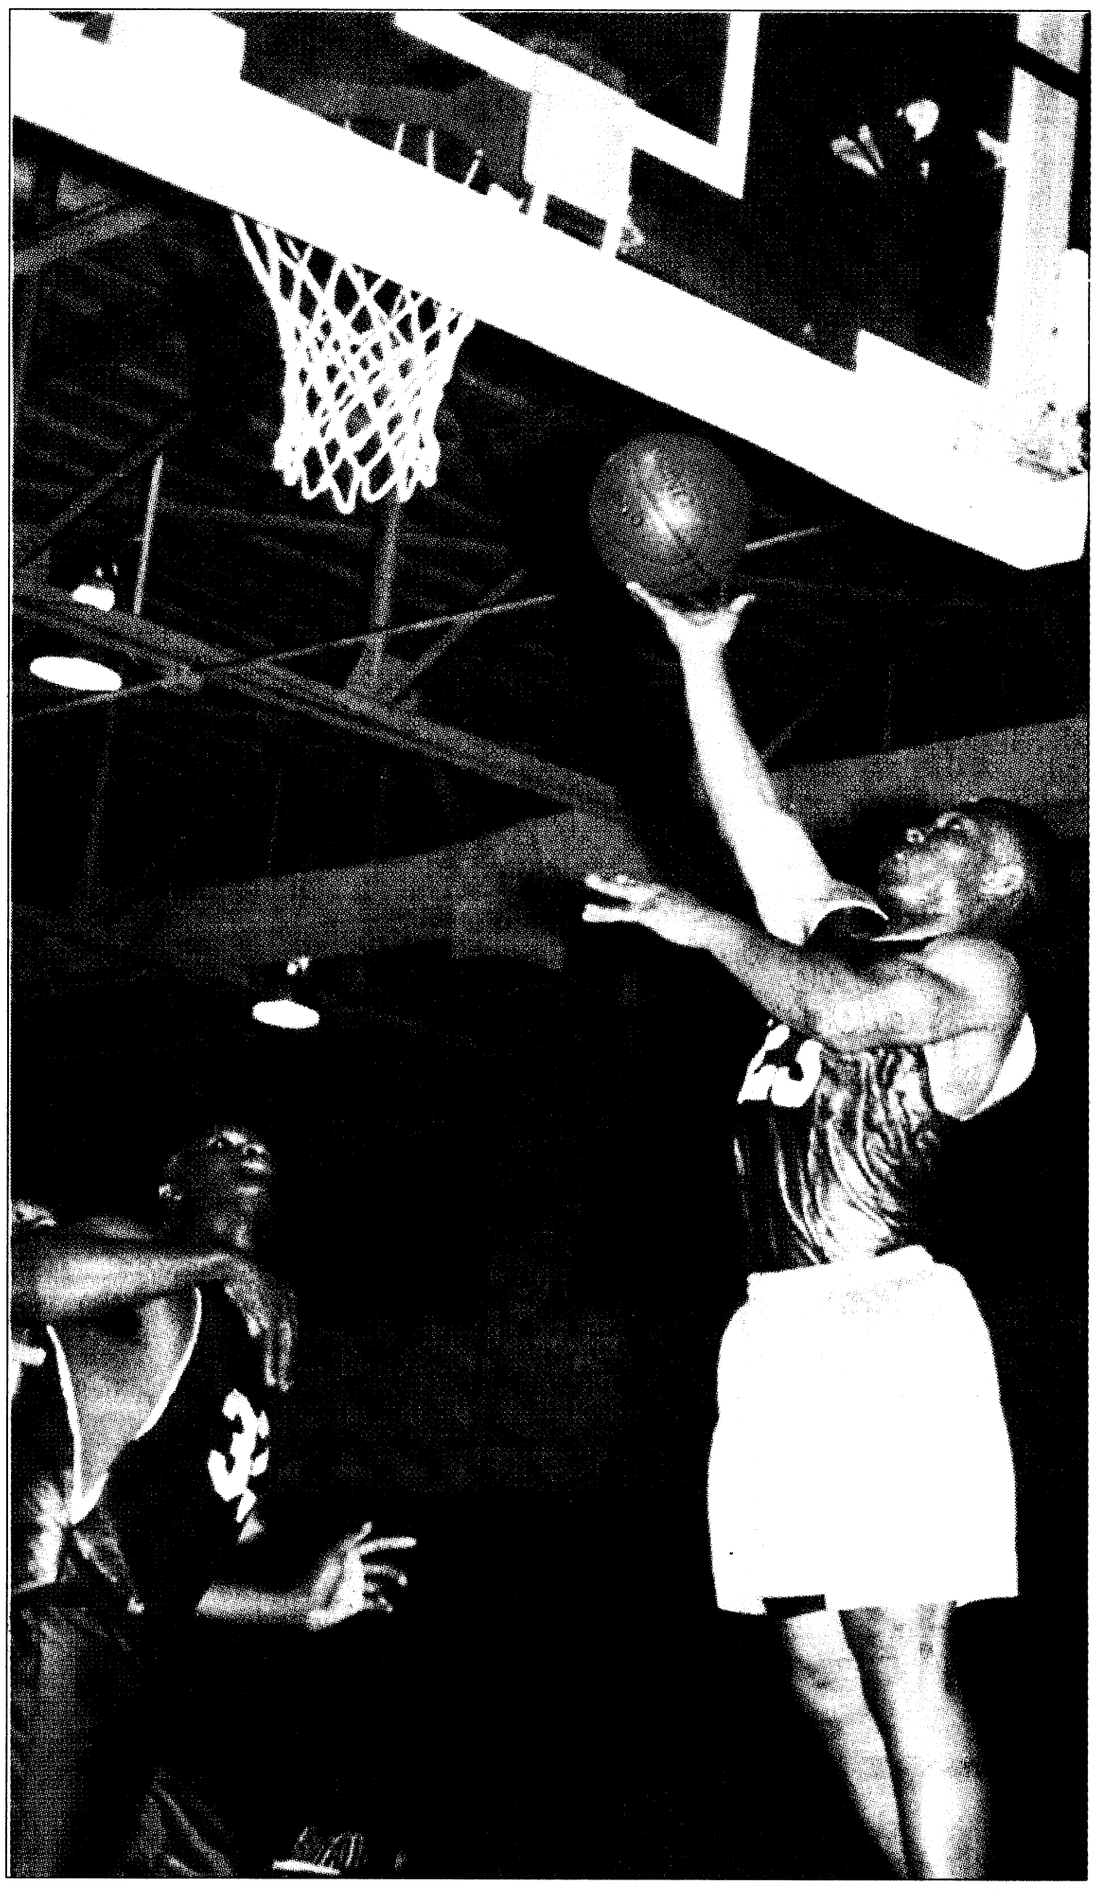
This half it was the 11th that was heavy on the fouls. Seven team fouls allowed 29th to spend time at the free-throw line.

Several of the fouls were on Best, and he punished his rivals for their costly mistakes as he sank all but one attempt within the last two minutes.

Keeping the heat turned to the max, both teams turned over many fouls, eight by 11th and nine by 29th, perhaps from rushing plays or over-aggressiveness.

With the win pretty much in the bag in the last minutes, 29th kept pressuring 11th as time expired.

"We played a good man-to-man game, but were a little sore and rusty from being at the (Expert Infantryman Badge) site all day," said James Flott, 29th's playing coach. "We adjusted our defense as they slowed down and played a really good game."



"The first half we played really good, even though we were outmanned in numbers and height," said 11th's playing coach, Robert Clegg. "In the second half, we were impatient and rushed too much. We just couldn't get ourselves out of the hole we dug."

With the second half of the Post Intramural Basketball season starting this week, both teams plan on keeping the same game plan with only slight changes.

"We need to quit turning over the ball," Clegg said. "We have won only one and lost four, but they were all close games. We don't have a lot of people on the roster, but we are a real quick team. That we use to our advantage."

"We really need to hit our open shots," said Flott. "We also need to capitalize on our defense and keep on the board," he said, after securing his team's fourth win with only one loss.

Games can be seen in three gyms across the post on weekdays at 6 and 7 p.m. Santiago Fitness Center, Audie Murphy Gym and Briant Wells Field House all host the intramural season.

Faith Race set

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If you haven't already done so, it's time to dust off those trusty sneakers and start preparing for the 21st annual Faith Spring Race, which is April 8.

The yearly race is an opportunity for the community and school to come together and participate in a fitness event, said Susan Emerson, race coordinator and physical education teacher at Faith Middle School.

Emerson said the race is a great way for families to spend time together while doing something active.

Everyone is encouraged to come out and participate. In the past the race has drawn as many as 400 runners.

"This is a fun activity that promotes physical fitness and really gives you a feeling of accomplishment when you finish," Emerson said. "If nothing else go out and participate and get the T-shirt."

The event will feature a one, two and five-mile race and has more than 10 age divisions. Awards will be presented to the top three open divisions (male and female) of the five and two mile races, and to the top five (male and female) open division winners of each one mile race. Medals will be given to the top three male and female finishers of each group in each race.

Pre-registration for participants 14 and under is $5 and $7 for those 15 and over. Registration the day of the race will be $6 for those 14 and under and $8 for 15 and over.

Maps of race courses are available at the Faith Middle School Physical Education Department. For more information or entry forms, call 545-5524 or 545-7793.

Newest USAMU addition takes gold in first 10 days

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The newest member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit brought home a Gold Medal only 10 days after being assigned to the shooting team.

USAMU international pistol shooter Pvt. 1 Grant E. Saylor won the Gold Medal in the Air Pistol Match and the Silver Medal in the Sport Pistol Event at the Junior Olympics held at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., Feb. 20-22.

Saylor

This was the third consecutive year that Saylor won the Junior Olympic Air Pistol Gold Medal, but this was the last time he was able to shoot in the competition since he will turn 21 next year.

Although he had shot this match many times before, Saylor said it felt different this time, because he was wearing an Army shooting uniform.

"I felt like I was representing the Army rather than just myself," Saylor said. "It felt a lot different."

The 19-year-old said he was the only Soldier competing in the match and "quite a few people" came up to him asking him questions about the Army.

"The Army's the best way to go for shooting; I think joining was a great choice," he said.

The native of Warner Robins, Ga., graduated from Northside High School of Warner Robins and attended Macon State College of Macon, Ga. He joined the Army in 1999 and was assigned to the Marksmanship Unit International Pistol Team Feb. 10 after completing Basic Training and Infantry and Bradley School.

Saylor started shooting rifle in 1987 and became a member of the Fort Benning Junior Rifle Club in 1993. He began pistol

Outnumbered Tigers take win

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The 8- to 9-year-old Tigers defeated the Magics 20-11 Saturday on the last day of the Youth Services basketball season.

With only six players, the Tigers have been outnumbered all season by teams with nearly twice as many players. Coach Lionel Lambert said this disadvantage ultimately proved beneficial for his hoopsters.

"We have been plagued all season by our small numbers, and sometimes these kids have had to play an entire game with no relief," Lambert said. "But they always played hard and maintained good focus. Now at the end of the season, they've all had a lot of court time and you can see it in their willingness to shoot and pass. Their hard work this year is really going to pay off next year."

Their "willingness to shoot" was the key ingredient to Saturday's victory over the Magics.

Ladies' golf group tackles green

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Catherine Cole likes to golf with her son, Andrew, and husband, Tom. But on Monday mornings, it's ladies only.

Cole spends about two hours most Mondays on the Follow Me Golf Course with fellow members of a group sponsored by the Officers' Wives' Club.

The golfer enjoys being outside and the camaraderie she shares with the other members.

"You learn from each other. There's no pressure, unless you put it on yourself," Cole said.

Kathy Burns organized the golf group in the fall and about 30 women signed up for the activity. They average between 10 and 14 golfers each week. The women play nine holes in about two hours. "We are always looking for new members," Burns said.

This group is a low-key bunch, many taking up the sport for the first time. "We want everyone to feel comfortable and give it a try," Burns said. "This course is wonderful in welcoming new people."

Jill Beard's game has improved since the fall, and she has gotten over her "fear of golf," she said.

"I'm not confident enough to go out with experienced players. The atmosphere on some courses can be intimidating," she said.

Beard now plays golf more with her husband. "We have played more together because now I'm more confident."

Carolyn Garland has owned clubs for 11 years, but used them mostly on driving ranges.

"This is a good group to learn with," she said.

For more information on the Monday morning OWC ladies golf group, call Burns at 682-0906.

Cumberland takes visitors back in time

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

If you are looking for a taste of paradise, but don't have the means to make an across-the-world trek, there is an island off the southern coast of Georgia that comes about as close to paradise as I can imagine.

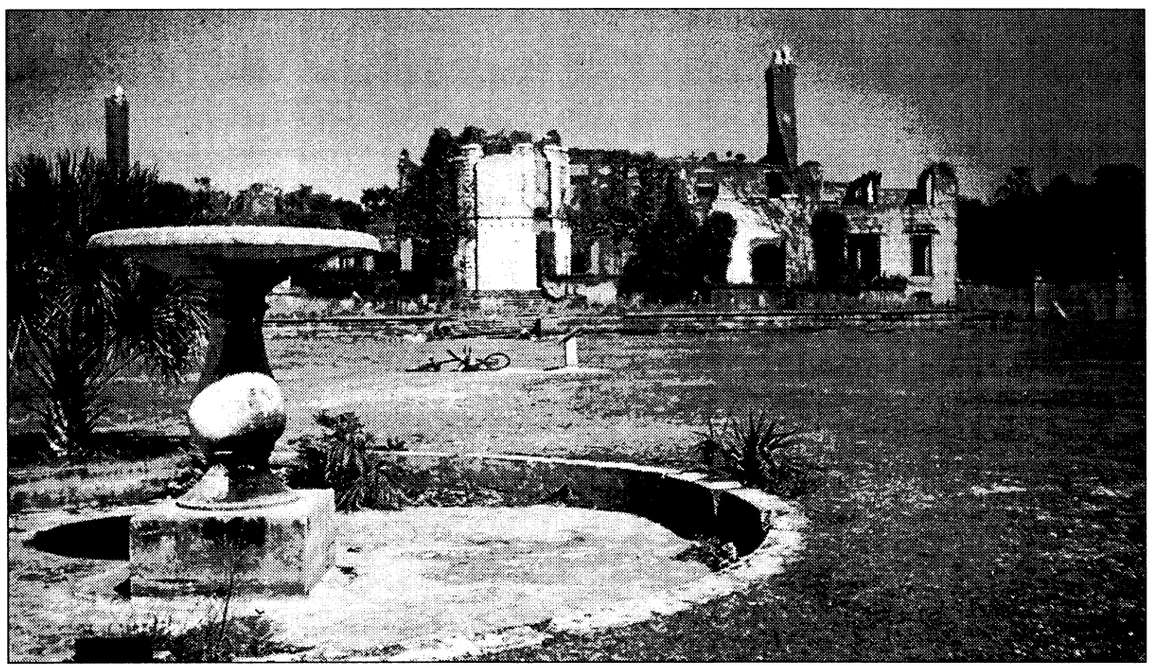
It is Cumberland Island and it is unlike anything I have ever seen.

This is one of those indescribable places where you just have to experience it for yourself.

Unless you have your own boat; the only way to get to Cumberland Island is by taking a ferry from St. Marys, Ga., which is about four and a half hours from Columbus. This may seem like a long haul, but it is definitely worth it, especially if you plan on camping on the island.

You can make either day trips or decide to camp. There are a number of standard or primitive, backcountry sites.

After leaving the ferry my first reaction was one of awe. Hauling my gear to the campsite I was stunned at the undefineable beauty of my surroundings. The sides of the trail were saturated with Palmetto trees and above me the sun filtered through an archaic canopy created by live oak branches and tangled vines. This was just my first five minutes on the island.



The campsite was just as neat. Nestled off a foot path it was very private and protected by dense trees and vegetation. There was a small storage box to keep food away from the critters, which attest to the abundance of wildlife. After my camping buddy and I set up our site we headed out to explore the island.

One of the more popular attractions are the ruins of a mansion that once belonged to Andrew Carnegie. The massive structure is dilapidated but helps paint a good mental picture of an era long gone. Walking behind the mansion you get your first glimpse of the vast salt marshes that appear as an ocean of tall grass swaying in the wind. This is just one of the dramatic changes in terrain you will experience while on the island.

I have to say visiting Cumberland isn't like taking a hike on one of the local trails. There is nothing consistent about the island. You can be gallivanting through the forest and the next thing you know you are trekking along gigantic sand dunes that look as if they had been transported from the desert. And then without warning you find yourself staring out upon an endless waterfront.

Seagulls cluster the beachfront and there are more than enough trinkets to be found lying sprinkled along the water's edge. Seashells, sand dollars, jellyfish, horseshoe crabs and more are all part of the marine life that can be inspected or taken home as souvenirs.

Of course, the marine life isn't the only thing Cumberland is known for. Barely four hours on the island and I had already seen three armadillos rooting around unaware that someone was watching them.

Ruins from a mansion once owned by Andrew Carnegie are just one of the attractions of Cumberland Island. People can also enjoy beachfront, forests, marshes and more.

Sunset was the cue for a whole bunch of creatures to come out and make their nightly rounds on the campsites, which made me thankful for the food cages. I was continually being awakened by sounds of little feet making their way around the tent.

The next morning we headed to the beach front to eat some breakfast and say our last goodbyes to the island.

I was sad to leave so soon, knowing there were miles and miles of beach and backcountry left to explore.

If there is one place that I recommend having to see this is definitely it. For more information on the island or for reservations, call (912) 882-4335 or go to parks.yahoo.com//parks/parks/cuis.

B-Ball: Youth leaguers go head-to-head

Collectively, the Tigers exhibited well-founded confidence in their ability to shoot from outside the key. Guard Anthony Wright scored a game high of nine points, and teammates Shaquille Shaw and Aubrey Crowell contributed greatly to the Tigers win.

Despite their loss, the Magics also displayed a lot of end-season bravado. Forwards Shekia Hill and Daniel Cardiel both scored five points. Hill barely missed several long shots, leading one to believe she'll be an unstoppable force next season. In the 6- to 7-year-old division, the Black Bulls beat the Blue Bulls 18-10. Tre Powell scored a game-high 10 points for the Black Bulls. Shelia Cruz and Corey Sanders both scored four points for the Blue Bulls.

The Dream Team defeated the Tigers, 21-5. Gary Hunt scored five points for the Dream Team. Kenneth Shuler and Nathan Simons assisted the Tigers with two points each.

In the 8- to 9-year-old division, the Lakers ousted the Bulldogs, 28-7, with Kahlee Tyler shooting 10 for the Lakers. Sean McNeil scored six points for the Bulldogs.

The Green Tigers and the Red Bulls tied with 13 points each. James Braddy added 12 points to the Tigers score. Dean Sando and Edguardo Rivera both scored three points for the Bulls.

The 76ers topped the Magics 19-13 in the 10- to 12-year-old division. Xavier Shaw scored 11 for the 76ers, and Joshua Vargas scored four for the Magics.

The Tarheels beat the Knicks, 40-23. Anthony Lacour scored the game high of 16 points for the Knicks. Courtland Akinloye scored 10 for the Tarheels.

The Ruff Ryders snuck past the Blazers 31-30. Arthur Scott added 20 points to the Blazers score. Walter McGee scored eight points for the Ruff Ryders.

In the 13- to 15-year-old division, the Ballers defeated the 76ers 40-36. Darian Lyles shot 15 for the 76ers. Dominic Whitley scored 10 for the Ballers.

The Blue Devils topped the Hornets, 43-30. Joey Fix scored 17 points for the Devils, and Ernest Tyler scored nine for the Hornets.

shooting in 1990, has been a member of the U.S. National Pistol Development Team since 1997.

Last year, he won Gold Medals in Junior Air and Rapid Fire and a Silver Medal in Junior Sport Pistol at the National Championships. He was also a member of the International Junior Pistol Championships U.S. Team.

In 1998, he brought home Gold Medals in Junior Free, Sport and Air Pistol at the National Championships, as well as being a member of the U.S. World Shooting Championships and International Junior Pistol Championships teams.

He was the 1997 Junior Free Pistol Champion and received Bronze Medals in Junior Air and Sport Pistol from the National Championships and was a member of the U.S. Team for the Championship of the Americas. He was also a U.S. Team member n 1995, 1996 and 1997 at the International Junior Pistol Championships.

Saylor said his goal now is to make the 2000 U.S. Shooting Team that will compete at the Conseil International du Sport Militaire — known as CISM and the Military World Games — which will be conducted in Turkey in July. As far as making the 2000 Olympic Team, Saylor said he's not nearly as good as some of his fellow USAMU pistol shooters.

"I don't think I'll be much competition to some of the other guys on the team," Saylor said. "But I'll learn a lot from them."

The cost is $15 for materials. For more information or to sign up, call 561-4943.

Kelley Hill holds chess tourney — The Kelley Hill Recreation Center is holding a USCF rated chess tournament at noon March 25. Entry fee is $4.

For more information, call Riley Lane at 687-6483.

YS needs coaches — Youth Services is in need of additional volunteer soccer and baseball coaches.

Interested individuals should call YS at 545-3070.

Georgia Wildlife hosts clay shoot — The Georgia Wildlife Federation is hosting its 3rd Annual Shoot for Conservation Saturday at the Meadows National Gun Club in Forsyth, Ga.

Proceeds from this registered shoot will directly benefit GWF's environmental education programs designed to educate young people on the importance of environmental stewardship.

The entry fee is $75 per shooter.

Included in the fee are 100 registered sporting clay targets, foam earplugs and lunch. This will be a Lewis Class competition with various shooting games all afternoon. GWF will also have a raffle featuring a Beretta shotgun as the grand prize.

To register by phone call (770) 929-3350, online at www.gwf.org/shoot.2000.htm or mail the entry fee to GWF, 1930 Iris Drive, Conyers, Ga., 30094. Be sure to indicate either a starting time of 10:30 a.m. or 12:30 p.m.

Columbus swim team hosts meet — The Columbus Hurricanes Swim Team is hosting the Division Championship Swim meet March 10-12 and needs volunteers.

The meet will be held at the D.A. Turner YMCA on Warm Springs Road. Sixteen timers are needed on March 10 from 5:30 p.m. until the meet is over. These 16 timers, two per lane, are also needed from 7:30 a.m. to noon, from 1:30-5 p.m. and from 6:30 p.m. until the end of the meet on March 11 and 12.

Anyone who wants to volunteer can call Jeff Dellinger at 561-2547 or Don McLemore at 327-5622.

2000 Golf Privilege Card available — The 2000 "Lung Card" offers golfers the opportunity to play on more than 600 of the finest courses in the Southeast including courses in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and the South Carolina Beach area. The card holder has the opportunity to play one or more rounds of golf for free or reduced green fees on every course listed.

Some courses in the vicinity include Bull Creek, Callaway Gardens, Maple Ridge, Red Oak, Woodland and more.

The cost of the Golf Privilege Card is $25.00 each. A special offer of buy three cards gets the fourth free.

For more information, call 569-1098 or go to www.golfsouth.org.

Callaway Gardens offers clinic — The Callaway Gardens Fly-Fishing School is conducting two-day clinics that include a group classroom session, field instruction and fly-fishing for rainbow, brown and brook trout in one of the Garden's premiere private lakes.

The cost of $150 per student also includes lunch both days of the class.

Register now for clinics scheduled April 1-2, June 3-4 and June 24-25. Overnight accommodations are available. They are filling up quickly, so call the Callaway Gardens Fly-Fishing Shop today at (706) 663-5142, or call 1-800-CALLAWAY (225-5292).

Georgia Games to begin — The Georgia Games, the nation's leading state games program, will return to Atlanta for its 10-year anniversary, 2000 Championships and other amateur sporting events.

All Georgia residents will have the opportunity to compete or volunteer in a wide variety of events beginning in early spring and lasting through fall. Athletes of all ages and skill levels can choose from more than 150 events taking place all over the state in 10 district sports festivals in May and June.

In July, more than 16,000 athletes and volunteers will participate in the 43 sports and 55 events offered during the five-day Olympic-style sports festival July 19-23.

Dates and locations for the 2000 Georgia Games are:

• Sunday — Spring Sports Fest, Johns Creek, Duluth

• May 13 — Centennial Olympic Park 5K Run-a-Round, Centennial Olympic Park, Atlanta

• May-June — 10 District Sports Festivals, throughout Georgia.

• July 14-21 — Torch Run, throughout Georgia.

• July 19-23 — Championships, throughout Metro Atlanta and surrounding areas

For information call the Georgia Games at (770) 528-3580 or visit the website at www.georgiagames.org.

FORT BENNING HISTORY BOOK

published to commemorate

FORT BENNING'S 75th ANNIVERSARY

Fort Benning recently celebrated its 75th Anniversary, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

We knew the book would be interesting and informative. The next step was to make it as attractive as possible. An experienced layout and design firm was hired, and they have done an absolutely superb job. You will enjoy thumbing through its pages for years to come. You will also be proud to put in a prominent place at home for friends to enjoy, or at work for your customers to see. And, if you're looking for gift for a retiree, or a friend who served at Fort Benning and is no longer here, there's no better way to remind them of your lasting friendship.

Published by the contract printer of Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, The Bayonet, the hardcover book, protected by a beautiful full-color dust cover, has 168 pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, an overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and Desert Shield/Storm, detailed information on the current major units, and a variety of stories that round out the post's interesting history.

It is the perfect "coffee table book" and is a 'must have' for anyone who has been stationed at Fort Benning. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of Fort Benning, recognized year after year as. . .

"The Best Army Installation in the World!"

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Loans: Lender loosens its requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered " yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you are pre-approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self - employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge - "how much you qualify for". Credit manager Kevin Thompson or his assistant, Jim Stallings can be reached at 322-8888 ext 144 or ext 145. Open 7 days a week.

DoD listens to women's issues

Lawyer visits post, addresses concerns of women in service

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

If you had five minutes alone with the Secretary of Defense, what would you tell him?

That's the question some Fort Benning Soldiers will have the chance to answer Wednesday when they meet with one of Secretary of Defense William Cohen's personal advisers.

Julia White is not an inspector nor an investigator. She is a civilian attorney from Atlanta serving on the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services (DACOWITS). She will spend her day on post conducting small informal discussion groups — five with active-duty women and one with male Soldiers. She will take what she learns from the Soldiers and report her findings to Cohen.

White and the more than 30 other DACOWITS members are personal advisers to Cohen on issues relating to women in the military. Each serves a three-year term and receives no compensation — it is strictly a volunteer position.

All members are required to visit nearby installations to talk with women and men to determine their concerns and suggestions. The issues that usually arise during these "off the record" sessions are health care, quality of life, frequent deployments, sexual harassment and equal opportunities for advancement, White said.

Between 12 and 15 Soldiers will attend each session with White. No one else is allowed in the room, she said. The conferences are divided by rank: junior enlisted women, senior enlisted women, officer and senior NCO women, junior officer women, senior officer women and senior male enlisted. Men are included because increasingly issues discussed are gender neutral.

Before leaving the post White will brief the Deputy Commanding General, Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, and follow that with a written report to the defense secretary.

"The idea is basically to improve the military," she said.

White's visit to Fort Benning allows her to stay informed of current activities in the

New times call for new training

Terrorism response teams take part in LR2K

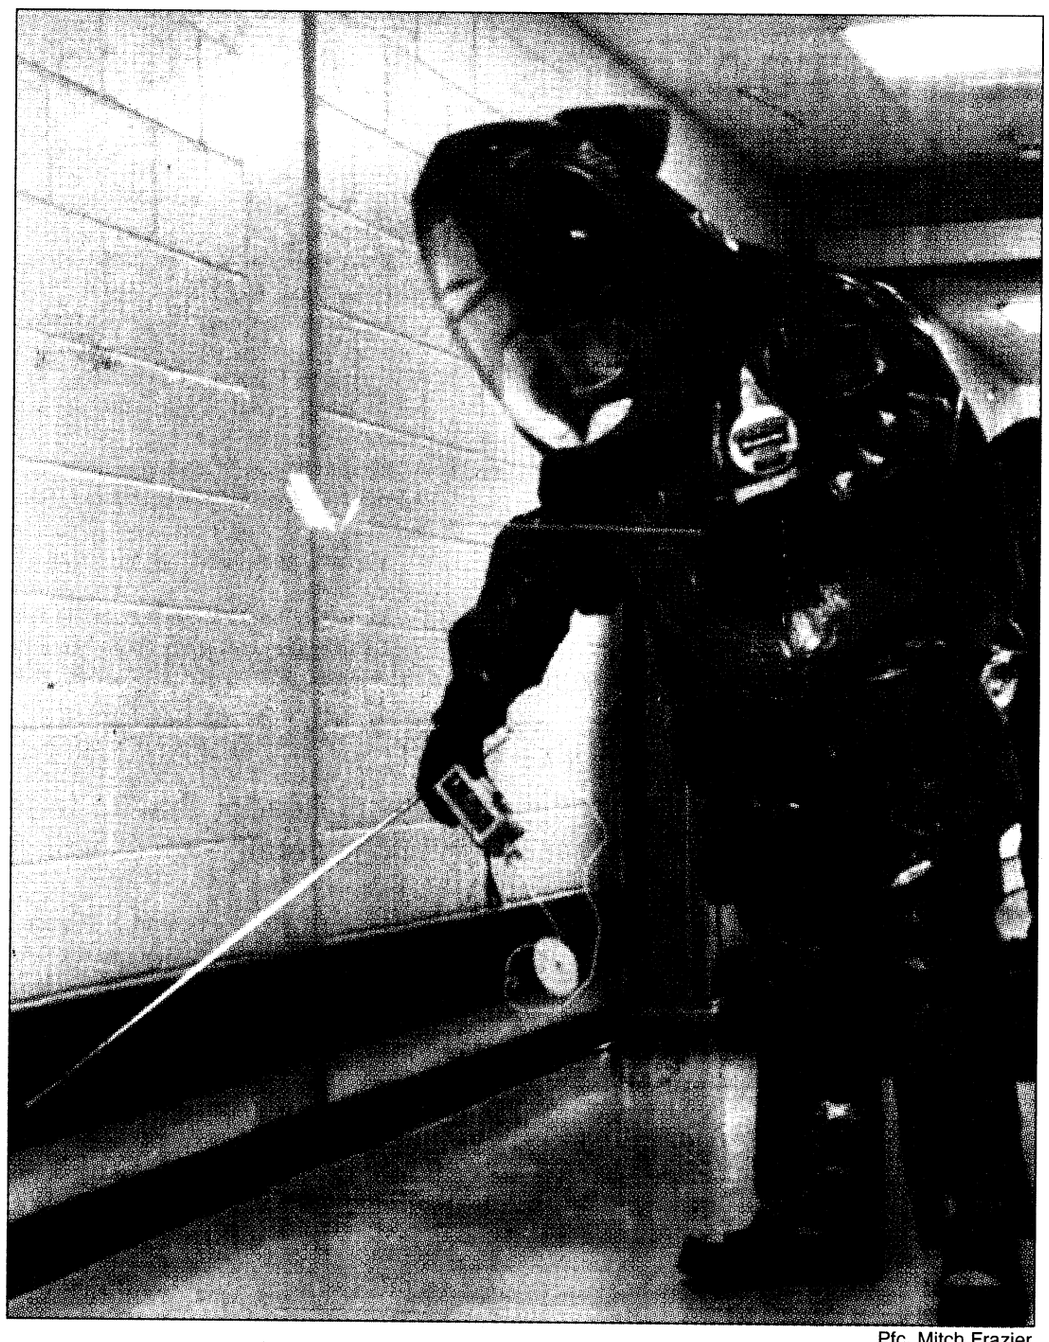
Mention places like the Oklahoma City Federal Building and the New York World Trade Center and the results of global terrorism are no longer just numbers — they are visual images that strike fear in the hearts of millions of Americans.



Add to the images the number of Americans killed by terrorists and the problem becomes even more frightening.

So how does a nation with open borders and free trade topple the threat of global terrorism — by learning and practicing to respond for possible events.

And practice is exactly what local, state and federal agencies did Monday when they teamed up for the largest Weapons of Mass Destruction exercise in the history of the Southeast.

The exercise brought officials from the Army National Guard, Center for Disease Control and

AER seeks support

Collection campaign now underway

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The Army Emergency Relief campaign kicked off March 1 to begin the 46-day program to collect emergency relief funds for Soldiers, family members and retirees.

Unit representatives from across Fort Benning converged in Infantry Hall to receive information on how to solicit voluntary contributions from Soldiers, family members and retirees.

Fort Benning's goal is to collect $200,000 for AER by April 15, said Col. John C. Latimer, Fort Benning's chief of staff who gave the kick-off remarks. "We want to give everybody the opportunity to give to this cause — it's Soldiers taking care of Soldiers. Hopefully, we will get 100 percent participation."

AER was founded in 1942, and the kickoff started in 1947. Last year, Fort Benning collected $179,294, said Al Deane, AER officer. It helps out with emergency leave, the cost of food and rent, emergency transportation and vehicle repair. It also helps with funeral expenses and provides scholarships for family members attending undergraduate studies.

Since 1942, AER has helped 2.7 million Soldiers or their families, with more than $720 million, according to an AER pamphlet.

"Last year, Fort Benning's AER distributed $833,589 through 926 loans and grants," said Latimer. "The Army looks out for its own. Our AER provided burial expenses for a Soldier whose spouse died unexpectedly. We paid for a Soldier to repair his vehicle, which was the only vehicle that his family had, and we paid for a Soldier's airplane tickets when his mother became very ill, among many other loans and grants."

AER provides interest-free loan and grant assistance for valid emergencies to people who are eligible.

AER can be reached 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. In the event of an emergency, people needing assistance should first see their unit commander, then contact the AER section. If AER is not in the local area, the American Red Cross Chapter, the Air Force Aid Society Section, the Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society Auxiliary or the Coast Guard Mutual Assistance Office can all provide assistance.

Deane said, "We really want this year to be great and need the help from everyone's contributions."

DUI can cost more than just fines

Underage drinkers face stricter drunk driving enforcement

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Just one drink can result in a driving under the influence charge for a person under the age of 21 in Georgia.

And a DUI is a DUI.

Anyone under 21 with a blood alcohol level of .02 or higher can be charged with driving under the influence. The threshold for a presumption of DUI for drivers over 21 is higher at .08.

It takes one beer, or a 5-ounce glass of wine or a shot of 80-proof liquor for a 160-pound person to raise his blood alcohol level to .02.

An individual who gives or furnishes alcohol to a person under 21 would also be in violation of the law.

Take it a step further: If there is an accident and someone dies, the person who supplied the keys or car to an intoxicated person may face charges as steep as involuntary manslaughter or negligent homicide, Capt. Paula Harrison, trial counsel, Staff Judge Advocate, said.

"If you play a part in that, you can be charged with some very serious crimes," she said, citing two military cases.

Harrison acts as a Special Assistant U.S. Attorney in Magistrate's Court for DUI cases involving Soldiers. Although most Soldiers arraigned for DUI are of age, she has prosecuted cases of underage drinkers charged with DUI.

"I don't think underage Soldiers realize how easy it is to get a DUI," she said. "They may think they are fine to drive — that at .02 they are excellent drivers — but they are violating the same law, just a different provision. It's DUI regardless."

Times have changed since the days of "happy hours" at post clubs.

"Back then it was how fast I could serve the alcohol to keep everyone with full glasses. That's a non-issue now," John Bush, chief of the Community Operations Division, said. He oversees the operation of Fort Benning's club system including the Afterhours Enlisted Club and the Main NCO, Sand Hill and Kelley Hill facilities.

There was an Army-wide ban on "happy hours" about eight years ago, Bush said.

"That culture in the Army is gone. The Army and society have completely changed their attitudes about consuming alcohol and driving a vehicle. And we have modified the way we operate these facilities to accommodate that," he said.

In recent years, commercial food operations have opened in several of the clubs on post and response from Soldiers has been positive.

The clubs only serve alcohol by the drink, not in bulk, and food sales outdistance alcohol sales, even on the two busiest nights, Friday and Saturday.

On the weekends, the club averages between two and three drinks per person.

"Sunday through Thursday we probably don't sell $10 worth of alcohol a night at the Afterhours club," Bush said.

Most Soldiers are too young to recall the past acceptance of drinking.

"I can well remember when consuming large amounts of alcohol was a part of a Soldier's lifestyle. That is no longer true," Bush said.

"You hear stories of the Army 10 years ago, and it is radically different than it is today," Harrison, the lawyer, said.

Prevention is the key and it is stressed at safety briefings and in Soldier training. Any Soldier who is listed on the MP blotter for any alcohol-related offense is automatically referred to the Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program for evaluation. Commanders will refer Soldiers

Helmetless riders expose brains

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

I am not usually at a loss for words. Ask anyone who knows me.

Better yet, call and I'll be happy to demonstrate. I'm a little weak on topics like Ohm's law, nuclear fission, Hammurabi's code, the effects of global warming on the socio-economic development of Patagonia and what, exactly, makes a Ranger tick but I'm sure we could find something to talk about.

Sadly, there are occasions when as much as I would like to talk to someone about something, I can't because I would be crossing that fine line between getting involved and butting in.

I've been spending more time on the Riverwalk lately, trying to rack up some miles on my bike. As the weather gets warmer and the days get longer, the traffic is picking up. Lots of families are coming out with fledgling bicyclists, and there is the root of my problem.

I wear a helmet. I wear it because it makes sense. I wear it because I'm sure some of the things I did in my checkered past destroyed some brain cells and I need to preserve the ones that are left. I wear it because I start my rides on post and it's a post regulation that all bicyclists wear one.

Off post it's a state law that any bicyclist 16 or younger must wear a helmet.

If I had a dollar for every child I pass wearing a bike helmet incorrectly, I wouldn't have to bike on the Riverwalk; I could build my own. It would be a nice one too, level or downhill, both out and back.

I can't tell you how many times I have passed a kid wearing a helmet that's too big, tipped back, canted to one side and with a chin strap so loose it looks like someone fitted it like a dog collar (at least two fingers of space). Technically, the kid's legal, he's wearing a helmet; but it's on wrong, making it's value questionable.

It's hard to pass his parents without making some pithy comment. Something short and to the point like "If you're not going to make her wear it right, why bother?" or "How hard can it be? There was a picture right on the box." Or maybe a more direct, to the point remark like "Why don't you level your kid's helmet? Don't you like him anymore?"

I wish I were making this up. The truth is that while most kids on bikes are wearing helmets, hardly any of them wear them correctly. (I refuse to address the issue of the bareheaded few. I figure there's no point in developing an emotional attachment to them because odds are they won't be around long.)

Maybe I should just be glad the baby bicyclists are wearing helmets at all. That's more than the kids on rollerblades can say. There's no law that says they have to wear a helmet, and hardly any of them do. I could get really snippy with their moms and dads. How about, "You know what they call 'bladers who don't wear helmets? Organ donors!"

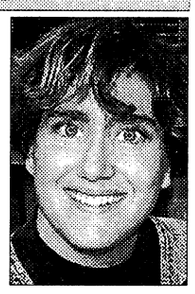
It's not just happening outdoors on the Riverwalk, either. On one memorable occasion at a local skating rink, I was completely floored by a woman sitting on the sidelines waiting for her 6-year-old daughter.

I had just gotten off the floor because there was too much traffic for me (more than two other skaters) and was pulling off my skates, helmet and wrist guards.

"My daughter noticed that you are wearing a helmet," she began. "And I told her that was pretty smart because if you fell and hit your head you wouldn't get hurt. I worry about her falling and hitting her head. You know, broken bones can heal but once you're brain damaged, that's it. I wouldn't worry so much if she wore a helmet."

I told her that my helmet was a regular bike helmet, available at any discount store for less than $20, to which she replied, "Oh, she has a helmet, a good one. We bought it even before we bought her bicycle. I make sure she wears it every time she rides her bike."

It was one of the few times in my adult life when I was totally speechless.



Maybe she was speaking of being brain damaged from personal experience. Maybe she was born that way. Maybe she's like the parents of the baby bicyclists and rollerbladers wearing their helmets incorrectly who don't know or don't care.

Too bad it's the little guys who have to pay the price.

On-the-spot corrections part of Army

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

commentary

Ever make an on-the-spot correction? Many Soldiers find out about frayed collars, untied bootlaces or the need for a haircut because of an on-the-spot correction.

Uniform violations are the cause of many of them.

AR 670-1 is pretty specific about how every uniform a Soldier wears should look. It gives guidance on hairstyles and even says how many rings a Soldier can wear.

So why the confusion about a Soldierly appearance?

According to the reg, male and female Soldiers can't have faddish hairstyles when in uniform and makeup should be worn tastefully.

I've witnessed many debates about what is considered faddish or tasteful.

One master sergeant I knew approached a junior NCO about the way her hat fit over the beehive hairdo she had. An example of an on-the-spot correction.

The junior NCO didn't like the correction, but was wrong and knew it. I don't think she actually changed her hairstyle but instead avoided Infantry Hall. Another time it was a correction about two-tone hair on a female master sergeant. I guess some Soldiers would rather be corrected than have their style questioned.

These days the issue isn't hairstyle but earrings.

I talked with a male Soldier the other day to find out if he knew what the post earring policy was for male Soldiers. He did. And he was still wearing a diamond earring while off duty in civilian clothes at the PX.

He said he has been written up twice for the earring. My on-the-spot correction went in one ear ...

Soldiers are supposed to have a uniform appearance.

Wearing a uniform isn't about individualism.

Wearing the uniform is about being part of the team.

Stats prove need for control

commentary

One of the hottest debates in Washington right now is gun control — and rightfully so.

Just like the issue of pro-life or pro-choice, gun control seems to have the public divided. Everyone has an argument and they stand behind it with full force. Most people either want guns or they don't.

This issue has been hounded to death. And I doubt that me standing on a soap box preaching about why or why we shouldn't have stricter gun laws is going to change anyone's mind about the matter. Instead, I figure it is best to present some statistics about guns and violence and let everyone draw his own conclusions.

According to the Center to Prevent Handgun Violence, in one year alone 5,285 children in the U.S. were killed by firearms. Compare that to the 0 in Japan, 19 in Great Britain, 57 in Germany, 109 in France, 153 in Canada and it is easy to see why some anti-gun advocates are steaming.

In fact, the rate of firearm deaths of children 0-14 years old is nearly 12 times higher in the U.S. than in 25 other industrialized nations combined, according to the Centers for Disease Control.

It is expected that within the next five years death by firearms will overtake vehicle accidents as the leading cause of death among American children.

Currently there are more than 200 million guns in America. There is a gun in 43 percent of households with children. There are loaded guns in one in every 10 households with children and guns in one in eight family homes aren't locked up, simply hidden away.

Guns kept in the home may be meant to protect the family but are 22 times more likely to kill someone you know rather than an intruder, according to a 1998 study by the New England Journal of Medicine.

The truth of the matter is a gun kept in the home is used as protection in as little as two percent of invasion crimes. In 1996 the FBI found that of the 9,390 total handgun murders in the U.S. only 176 were justifiable homicides.

While these statistics present a grisly picture of handgun abuse and dramatic violence in America, there is always another side to the story.

The National Rifle Association sees it another way. The NRA defends handguns by contending they do protect Americans and have their own statistics to prove it. The NRA argues that states with "Right to Carry" laws have lower violent crime rates.

Studies show that on average, states with RTC laws have 26 percent less total violent crime, 20 percent less homicide, 2 percent less rape, 39 percent less robbery and 22 percent less aggravated assault.

Of course, there is always the defense that "guns don't kill people, people kill people."

No matter which way you cut it there is no clear cut solution to America's problem with guns. The only thing we can do is be responsible. You may not be able to control outside factors, but you can make sure that your family stays safe in the home and in the homes of others.

If you have children, keep your guns locked up. If your child is going to stay at another person's house, make sure you are aware of the potenential hazards. Ask if they have guns in the house and make sure they are taken care of properly.

It never hurts to be overly cautious. It could save your child.

On Feb. 14, a distinguished veteran of combat duty in three wars was laid to rest at Fort Benning Cemetery, Master Sgt. William A. Valentini. The family of this outstanding Soldier requested that the last military honors be extended to him by airborne personnel. The commander of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, Lt. Col. Brian P. Stephenson was requested to extend these honors. Without further explanation, Capt. Ronald L. Franklin and Capt. Scott P. Noon established a coordinating staff and a burial team consisting of: Staff Sgt. Myron Frasier, Sgt. Keith Bowman, Spc. Joseph Lopez, Pfc. Roderick Jordan, Spc. Jose Hernandez and Pfc. Edgardo Rivera, a firing squad consisting of: Sgt. Pharel Petitfrere, Spc. James Small, Spc. Michael Davis, Pfc. Travis Means, Pfc. Michael Olds, Pfc. Carlos Valencia, Pvt. 2 Casey Ross and Pvt. An V. Nguyen, and coordinated with the U.S. Army Band at Fort Benning. Also, Staff Sgt. Thomas E. Whalen, bugler, gave the final salute of Taps to Valentini.

This was such an outstanding performance it is only fitting the personnel know how Fort Benning contributes to the final resting honor.

Policy sets rule on body piercings

Regulations prohibit male Soldiers from wearing earrings on post, displaying piercings

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

In the seventh-grade, the 26-year-old NCO had his left ear pierced.

"That's what was in and everybody was doing it," he said.

By the time he enlisted in the Army years later, he had four holes pierced in one ear, two in the other.

Seven years later, all but two on the left ear have closed, and he only occasionally wears an earring when in civilian clothes — and that's only off post.

It is a violation of Army regulations for male Soldiers to wear earrings while on any military installation worldwide — whether in uniform or not.

Female Soldiers can wear approved earrings while in the service, dress or mess uniforms, and other earrings while in civilian clothes on post.

The regulation doesn't stop at earrings, any body piercing (other than earrings for women) is prohibited from being displayed on military installations.

What piercings AR 670-1 prohibits

- No attaching, affixing or displaying objects, articles, jewelry or ornamentation to or through the skin is authorized while in uniform or while in civilian clothes on duty, or in civilian clothes off duty on any military installation or place under that falls unjder military jurisdiction.
- The only exception is females may wear approved earrings in their service, mess or dress uniforms, or other earrings while in civilian clothes.

According to Army Regulation 670-1, no attaching, affixing, or displaying objects, articles, jewelry or ornamentation to or through the skin is authorized while in uniform, in civilian clothes while on duty, or in civilian clothes off duty on any military installation or places under military control.

Two years ago the regulation dealt only with earrings — not other body piercing — and only prohibited males from wearing the jewelry when on duty whether in uniform or civilian clothing.

But in August 1998, 670-1 was expanded and offered the clearer guidance.

Under the present regulation, the Infantry NCO must also refrain from wearing on post the tongue ring he acquired this winter.

In December he and another Soldier had their tongues pierced.

"We are really close friends and she wanted to do it, so we did," he said.

The procedure didn't hurt, although there was a sting, he said. To prevent the hole from closing up, he wears a small stud in the center of his tongue, and says he "just doesn't talk much."

He knows about six other Soldiers who also have pierced tongues.

"I know there are a lot more out there," he said.

They wear clear flat plastic pieces and washers while on post "so you can't see it at all," he said.

Once when he wore the tongue ring on post he received an on-the-spot correction from his company commander who told him to take it out.

Fort Benning Garrison Command Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Graham has had to make such corrections on the installation.

"You have to handle it tactfully because you don't want to cause a scene," he said. After hearing the regulation explained to them, most Soldiers will comply. If they don't, their names are turned over to their chain of command.

Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of the Law Enforcement Division, first asks young men in the post exchange or other locations on post if they are family members or servicemen, because sometimes it is hard to tell, he said.

When MPs encounter male Soldiers during traffic stops who are wearing earrings, Kelley said, "You bet they will make the correction. You can't pass by an infraction because to do so would be showing that you approve of it."

Command Sgt. Maj. Mary Lepley, 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), 29th Infantry Regiment, is not one to waste words when asked about the Army's regulation on displaying body piercing.

"It's not authorized," she said.

All trainees come through Lepley's battalion on their way to basic training or one station unit training. Many young men enter the service with multiple piercings in different places — from eyebrows on down.

But, Lepley said it's not a problem at the battalion because the recruits have already read and signed a statement at their MEP station that they understand the Army's policy.

"It's really not an issue in this environment. Everything is so foreign here — the way we talk and tell time is different. They have too many other things to adjust too," she said.

"Service is a responsibility you don't take lightly."

Soldiers find deals at DRMO

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Sgt. 1st Class Charles Seegel and his wife Paula traveled five hours from Fort Stewart, Ga., to Fort Benning Thursday night, hoping to be the first in line for the monthly clothing reclamation sale.

"We've been here before so we knew it would be worth the drive and the time. The only problem is that long wait to get in. That's why we slept in the car," said Seegel, from his number two position in line.

While the Seegels were still sleeping, Pfc. James Ditmars, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, arrived at 4 a.m., and with a magazine and radio, he positioned himself in front of Warehouse 224 to wait for the doors to open at 10 a.m.

"Yeah, I heard a lot of people would be here early," Ditmars said, as he surveyed the long line of Soldiers and civilians behind him. "But I also heard this is the cheapest place to get BDUs."

BDUs, boots, Class As, and PT uniforms were among the items on most shopping lists Friday, as Soldiers, family members and retirees braved the long wait and early morning chill to get a chance to purchase these items at 75 percent off retail prices. Surprisingly few complained about the wait, perhaps because, even with the $150 purchase limit, they could save as much as $450.

"We instituted a purchase limit because people were buying items to resell elsewhere," said Lawrence Kirkpatrick, chief of storage section for the department of logistics. "We don't profit from this sale. It's here solely to help the Soldiers."

Fort Benning is one of only a handful of installations that accumulates enough clothing items from discharged Soldiers to support a monthly reclamation sale.

The sales take place the first Friday of every month from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

"This is the best deal these Soldiers can get on the clothing items they need," said Charlie Wimmer, who has been running the sale since it started 21 years ago. "These are new or like-new items, at 25 percent of what they would pay elsewhere. That's a great savings to these kids who need it most."

Wimmer has made it his mission to inform "these kids" (the young Soldiers stationed at or visiting Fort Benning) about the reclamation sale.

Despite the estimated 300-400 customers that visit each month, Wimmer worries that too few Soldiers know about this opportunity.

"I wish everyone knew we were here. We don't do much advertising, and most of these kids will tell you they heard about it from someone who's been here. We need to get the word out. This is another benefit they're entitled to," said Wimmer, a retired veteran.

Kirkpatrick said more people would be able to take advantage of the discounted prices if he could hold the sale more often.

"I wish we could have it once a week. We have enough merchandise to do that," he said. "The problem is we don't have the manpower to run it. During the one-day sale, we pull personnel assigned to other positions in to help for the day."

So for now, shoppers will continue to arrive early and wait in the Disney-like line for a shot at the bargains in Warehouse 224. And like a carnival barker, the gruff-voiced Wimmer will continue to personally assist the "kids" that pass through "his store," and bid them farewell with a wave and an appeal to "come back and bring your friends."

DUI: Can cost Soldiers more than just career to the program, and anyone can enter on a self-referral.

Units offer incentives to their troops for going DUI free. For example, a training holiday might be offered for going six months without a DUI.

For any Soldier, regardless of age, a DUI conviction has serious consequences. There are fines, and probation information is sent back to the Soldier's state of record.

And then there are the repercussions from the Army including administrative action from commanders, such as reduction in rank, bar to re-enlistment, separation from the Army and loss of driving privileges on post for one year. All Soldiers charged with DUI get a letter of reprimand from the Commanding General.

Those consequences and others are spelled out in the DUI prevention checklist Soldiers in the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment fill out and carry with them, especially over long holiday weekends.

The blue cards, designed by a Soldier in the unit, includes a Blood Alcohol Chart and lists the effects of alcohol. Phone numbers for key personnel are also listed.

Soldiers sign "My personal contract agreement" and spell out what their plans are if they decide to drink.

"The platoon sergeant follows up and checks over that card," 1st Sgt. Erik Henriksen, C Company, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt, said. March 3, C Company received a DUI-free guidon streamer for going 365 days without a DUI.

"The bottom line is if you crack a beer, just say no to driving," Henriksen said.

In addition to preventing DUI, commanders try to prevent underage drinking. But, Soldiers who are not of legal age to drink are exposed to alcohol in their barracks and in the bowling centers and clubs on post — not just at private parties.

The USAIC regulation 600-19 is Fort Benning's policy on alcohol in the barracks. It states, "There are no restrictions on the type or amount of alcohol stored or consumed in Soldiers' quarters by a Soldier 21-years of age of older. Soldiers below the legal drinking age will not store or purchase alcohol, nor will it be stored or purchased for them. It is a violation of Georgia state law to be in possession of alcohol unless 21 years of age or older."

Commanders can charge Soldiers with underage drinking by citing Article 134 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice and the Georgia code.

"Constant checking is the only way that I know that we have been able to combat that (underage drinking)," Capt. John Jackson, C Co. commander, said.

"To say that we have been able to combat it 100 percent would be overzealous. I don't think anybody would be able to do that, because if a guy wants to drink he will get a beer. But if his supervisor lets him know that it is unacceptable and makes that correction on the spot instead of looking the other way it helps."

Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of the Law Enforcement Division, agrees.

"In units, the hardest job belongs to the sergeant who must make sure the regulations are complied with. If they knowingly allow such behavior, they can be held responsible under the UCMJ."

Bush, the club system chief, knows about monitoring the behavior of young men and women under the age of 21.

"Our facilities are open to all family members and Soldiers, and we want to accommodate them," he said.

In order to do that at the Afterhours club, everyone is carded at the door and the IDs carefully checked for fakes. Customers 21 years and older are given a wristband. You must have a wristband to buy or consume alcohol.

"Some people will try to pass alcohol to their younger friends," Bush said. "If we catch them, generally speaking, we eject them from the club, and they lose their cover charge.

"A guy who is over 21 and who passes alcohol to someone younger is in violation of Georgia state law and the UCMJ."

Results of driving under the influence

Consequences:

- Civil conviction
- Fines
- Referral to Alcohol Drug Abuse and Prevention Control Program
- Letter of Reprimand from the Commanding General
- Administrative reduction in rank
- Bar to re-enlistment
- Separation from the Army
- Increased insurance rates
- Loss of driving privileges on post for one year

Exercise: Teaches

Prevention, the Federal Emergency Management Agency and numerous other federal disaster experts and set them, the Response Task Force East, in a scenario that would challenge them to a multi-state, multi-incident response.

The situation began nearly a month ago when FBI officials in Columbus received "information" of potential terrorist activity, but were forced to focus attention elsewhere as the area was torn by rising flood waters and tornadoes.

The weakness of the storm-tattered states gave the militant group, the American Liberation Army, the opportunity to attack.

After stealing biological and chemical agents from a storage facility, the ALA infiltrates orange juice companies in the three states and contaminates the distribution facilities — sickening 2,200 people and killing eight.

The group continues to wreak havoc as it claims responsibility for bombings throughout the Southeast including a bomb blast that rocked a Columbus dam.

The reign of terror ripped through Fort Benning Monday when the group sent a package to Martin Army Community Hospital that exploded upon opening, belching a white cloud-like substance suspected to be anthrax.

While this plot may seem a little more like the basis for Tom Clancy thriller rather than a training exercise for rapid responders, the organizers of the training event, Launch Relief 2000 said the complexity of the scenario was essential for its success.

"This is an exercise of multiple events, so many that you'll look at it and say it will never happen like that. But with this large of an exercise to bring together this many different agencies, we had to have such a wide-ranging scenario," said Col. Richard Durden, deputy commander, Response Task Force - East, based at Fort Gillem, Ga.

While that wide-ranging scenario enlisted the efforts of more than 1,000 of the area's feds, Maj. Dennis Bradford, the exercise's resources manager, said the exercise will benefit the teams in multiple ways.

"For a lot of these people this is the first time they have worked together," he said. "If the same situation came up in the future, the relationships they are building here will help them better respond to an incident in the future.

"They will know who to call and actually be able to have a better understanding of how things work when that call is made," he said.

The call to activate the team has come three times since the team's inception in the early '90s. The team saw its first action during the Atlanta-hosted Olympic games in 1996 and also responded in support of the presidential inauguration of 1997.

The team has been also deployed to the national capitol to support security for the state of the union address.

NATIONAL MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS SOCIETY

MS: A Disabling Disease

Multiple sclerosis is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system. Symptoms may be mild such as numbness in the limbs or severe—paralysis or loss of vision. Most people with MS are diagnosed between the ages of 20 and 40 but the unpredictable physical and emotional effects can be lifelong. The progress, severity and specific symptoms of MS in any one person cannot yet be predicted, but advances in research and treatment are giving hope to those affected by the disease.

field and to meet Soldiers in their environment, Lt. Col. Don Sando, deputy chief of staff, said.

"The sensing sessions are important because they allow our Soldiers another opportunity to express issues, concerns and suggestions for improvement," he said.

"We expect them to be candid and honest on the issues they see from their perspective," Sando added.

White is one of the original founders of the Southern Center for International Studies in Atlanta.

Her husband, Peter C. White, is the president of the center and a former Airborne Soldier. Their son was a Ranger and served with the Old Guard.

White has served with DACOWITS since 1998 and visited installations within Georgia including Warner Robbins and Fort McPherson. She has seen changes during those two years.

"I admire Soldiers because they are very dedicated," she said. "They all have to sacrifice, and I know that because I talk with them. That's not the way it should be."

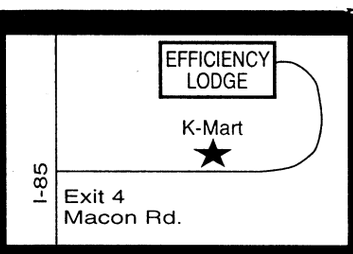
During her tenure on the committee, "The focus has shifted from sexual harassment to eliminating gender discrimination because the problem of sexual harassment has improved," White said.

DACOWITS was established in 1951 during the Korean War by then Secretary of Defense George Marshall to improve recruitment of women into the military. The emphasis changed from recruitment to improving career progression and other issues affecting retention.

Historically DACOWITS' recommendations were instrumental in bringing about changes to laws and policies pertaining to military women.

For example, in 1967 promotion ceilings placed on females were repealed.

In 1973 husbands of military women were given medical and other benefits already in effect for wives of active-duty personnel.



A year later, involuntary separations for women who became pregnant ended.

More recent changes came after the Gulf War. In 1993, women were no longer barred from serving on combat aircraft or naval vessels.

HOLA members help students

Community members welcome USARSA Soldiers, families

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Local community members united at the NCO Club to welcome students and families of the U.S. Army School of the Americas during the Host of Latin Americans, "Meet Your Family Night," Feb. 25.

HOLA is a sponsor and hospitality program designed for local families to help USARSA's Latin American students, guest instructors and their families understand the American way of life by giving them an opportunity to participate in home and community activities, according to Cecilia Alexander, USARSA, international military student officer and coordinator for HOLA.

Dolores Ortiz has been a member of HOLA for 10 years. She said during that time she has sponsored students and families from El Salvador, Peru, Guatemala, Bolivia and Venezuela.

"I've learned so much about their cultures and they learned so much about American culture," she said. "All of the families left me with wonderful memories and a friendship that lasts forever."

Besides having fun while sharing her American ways with barbecues, picnics and other events, the 35-year Columbus resident said she also helps the students and families with interpretations and any errands they may have.

"I'm here for them, whatever they need," she said. "I will be glad to help them anytime."

Mayor Peggy Martin of Phenix City, who also attended the event, said an organization like HOLA is very important because it represents who we are in America.

"The families who serve with HOLA are our ambassadors," she said. "They embed the image of America. That is so important. They are good role models."

Martin said she was honored to attend the event and said it was a chance for her to exchange ideas with members of other countries.

"It is great when we can come together like HOLA and USARSA students and families to exchange cultural values," Martin said. "That's what's going to keep relationships strong and unity across international borders."

Lt. Cmdr. Juan Pinedo from the Bolivian navy is a student with USARSA's Year 2000 Command and General Staff Officer's Course. Like the rest of his Latin American classmates, Pinedo is looking forward to his new adopted family.

"HOLA is a very positive program that contributes greatly to the student and his family," he said. "It allows us to be welcomed into the American community. In return, we share our culture with the community. It's a reciprocating experience."

While students and their families met their HOLA sponsors, a group of first year Spanish Club students from Phenix City's Glenwood School, were just having fun, meeting and speaking Spanish with anyone they could.

"This is great for them," said Donna Carter, Spanish teacher for the students. "They are getting a wealth of experience here that they could never get in our classroom," she said.

Carter said the students went to the event to learn more about Latin America and to meet as many representatives from the different Latin American countries.

"They can't wait to attend another function," she said. "They didn't want to leave."

If anyone is interested in learning more about HOLA, call Alexander at 545-1285.

USAIC to hold Women's History Month Luncheon

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Brig. Gen. Velma L. Richardson, Deputy Commanding General, U.S. Army Signal Center at Fort Gordon, Ga., will be the guest speaker March 29 at the Women's History Month Luncheon.

The luncheon, sponsored by the U.S. Army Infantry Center Equal Opportunity Office, is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

A native of South Carolina, Richardson was commissioned as a second lieutenant after graduating from Livingstone College, Salisbury, N.C., in 1973. She has been the deputy commander of Fort Gordon since July, 1998. Prior to that she commanded the 1108th U.S. Army Signal Brigade at Fort Ritchie, Md.

Musical entertainment will be provided by a local group, By De'Sign.

The cost for the lunch is $6.50. The menu includes roast turkey with dressing, green beans, rice, giblet gravy, ice tea, rolls and butter. Tickets are available from unit EO representatives or by calling 545-3200 or 545-6665.

post briefs

Military engineers to meet

The Fort Benning-Columbus Post of the Society of American Military Engineers will meet at 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Thursday at the 36th Engineers' Warrior Dining Facility, Building 2889. The guest speaker will be Harold Hartman, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, West Georgia area office. For more information, call 545-5141.

CSU offers criminal justice classes

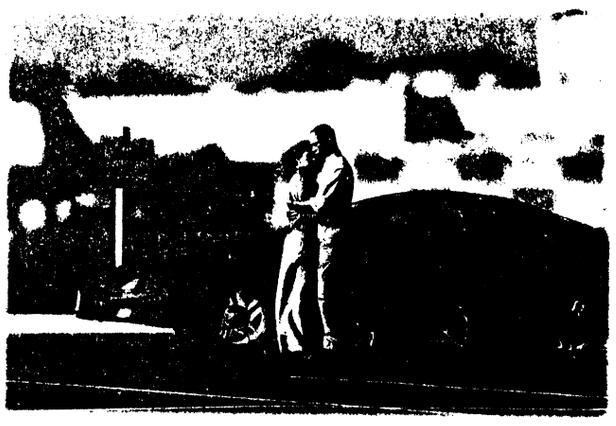
Starting May 20 through July 28, Columbus State University, Criminal Justice Department, in conjunction with the Fort Benning office, will offer four criminal justice classes. Each of the classes will meet from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Two will begin May 20, one graduate and one undergraduate. The remaining (graduate and undergraduate) will begin July 1 ending July 29.

For more information, call 689-8668 or 545-1085.

Promotions draw review

The Department of the Army selection board will convene May 31 to consider Soldiers for promotion to sergeant first class. The board will also review elimination under the Qualitative Management Program. Zones of consideration for promotion are all staff sergeants with a date of rank June 30, 1998, and earlier with a basic active service date between May 31, 1981, and May 31, 1994.

For QMP, all staff sergeants with a date of rank May 31, 1999, and earlier and basic active service date of May 31, 1981. Soldiers who meet eligibility must have a current photo. To schedule a appointment, call 545-1381. Those NCOs who meet the eligibility criteria must review their personnel records and authenticate their personnel qualification record, which goes to the selection board.



Contact the personnel sergeant or call the Adjutant General Personnel Services Readiness Division at 545-8861 or 545-5640 for an appointment.

Prescribed burning of woodland areas will take place from Monday to March 19

Runnin' on the river

Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, head into the home stretch during a run on the Riverwalk Feb. 15. More than 130 Rangers completed the 14-mile run from post to downtown Columbus in two hours.

Medics face challenge of Expert Field Medical Badge

Capt. Donald Patterson
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The road to earning an Expert Field Medical Badge is long and tough. Six Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, recently took on that challenge.

The Soldiers spent the month of January training for the EFMB course.

The training began with a four-mile road march. The second week six miles were marched, the third week eight miles were trekked and the last week a 12-mile road march ended the preparation. The Soldiers received classes on applied map reading.

They spent five days and nights at Yankee Road land navigation site, two days of commo classes conducted at the training area.

Each Friday, Soldiers were given a written exam.

During in-between time, they were involved in other training such as CPR, emergency medical technician, survival skills, evacuation of the sick and wounded and a litter obstacle course.

It was then time to test the skills they had been taught. The six candidates departed from Fort Benning to Fort Stewart Feb. 1 to compete for the EFMB.

The candidates were processed and moved to the training site where they were broken down into platoons and began lane training a little after 2 a.m.

Candidates went on to complete lane training Feb. 6 and to take a written exam.

Soldiers must score 75 percent on a 150-question exam. Two of the six Soldiers passed the exam.

The failure rate for the written exam was average for EFMB candidates. One unit sent 20 candidates and only one passed the written exam.

The next day, the two 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., EFMB hopefuls were tested on a day land navigation and only one Soldier was still in the running for the badge — Sgt. John Ellis.

Ellis went on to receive "GOs" in all remaining hands-on tasks. He finished the EFMB testing process by completing the 12-mile road march in 2 hours, 38 minutes.

Ellis said while the whole test process was tough, his most challenging area was the evacuation of the sick and wounded.

USARSA Soldiers learn leadership at NCO academy

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Latin American NCOs took a first step in their professional development at the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Roy Benavidez Noncommissioned Officer Academy.

The academy, which has set a foundation for the future of the Latin American NCOs, graduated 19 students representing Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru, from the 5-week NCO Basic Leadership Course, March 3.

"This course mirrors our Primary Leadership Development Course," said Staff Sgt. Hugo Vives, an instructor with the NCO academy.

Vives said the course is designed to prepare NCOs to plan and conduct individual and unit training at the squad and platoon level and to conduct skill-qualification testing.

He also said it teaches junior NCOs how to train and lead Soldiers who will work under their supervision. It also teaches basic leadership skills, NCO duties, responsibilities, authority and methods of conducting performance-oriented training.

"This course has set the foundation for my NCO leadership development," said Spc. Luz Miriana Hastamorir, of the Colombian Police. "It will help me train other NCOs and junior Soldiers in my country to become good leaders too."

Hastamorir said working with other junior NCOs from different countries taught her that each country has a different way of doing things their services.

"One thing that I learned works in all our countries the same way are the leadership skills I learned here at USARSA," she said. "They apply to all the services."

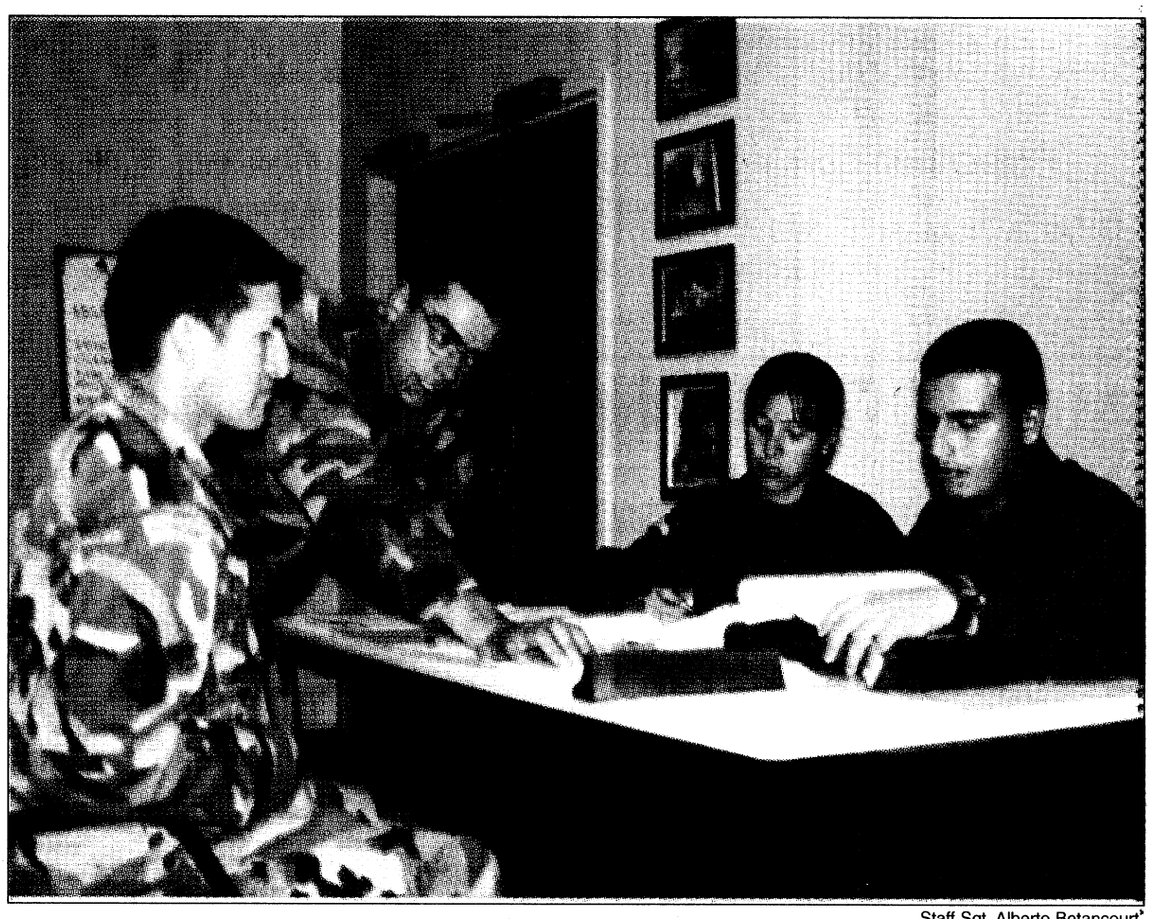
Like Hastamorir, Sgt. Edwar Rodriguez, is from the Colombian police and recent graduate of the course.

"Besides the excellent leadership training, the course applied human rights training," said Rodriguez. "Human rights training is very important. This course emphasized it throughout the 5-week session."

Both graduates agreed the course was important for the continual development of the NCO Corps in Latin America.

"It is crucial to have good leadership skills," said Rodriguez. "Without them, the Soldiers will not be properly trained — the mission a failure."

Sgt. Maj. Rogelio Schettini, of the Peruvian navy, is a guest instructor with USARSA's NCO academy.



He said it is a privilege for him to be a part of USARSA and the academy that is teaching leadership skills and instilling human rights training to the NCOs of Latin America.

"I am an example of the kind of seed being planted throughout Latin America," he said.

"Soon, seeds will sprout and green vegetation flourish. That's how I foresee Latin America's future NCO Corps. And this is possible because of USARSA and this NCO academy," he said

Schettini is convinced that USARSA's continual engagement with Latin America's NCO Corps will help them one day become as professionally developed as ours.

"This course is the first step in the professional development for these students," said Vives. "The first step is the most important. It's the foundation."

Thompson

Award: Drill Sergeant of the Cycle.
Define your leadership style: My preferred leadership style is the directive style. However, I adjust it to suit the situation.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant? I like observing the trainees transition from civilians to Infantrymen — the end product.

Spc. David Wall
C Company
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment
Hometown: Collierville, Tenn.

Award: Soldier of the Cycle.
What made you join the Army? I wanted to accomplish something for myself that was both mentally and physically taxing. The Soldiers that become Infantrymen must rely on self-determination to finish the challenges put before them.

Wall

Why were you chosen as honor graduate? I believe I excelled in the many parts of basic training. I exceeded the standards throughout the cycle in all dimensions of Infantry training.

Spc. Joshua Nicholson

New policy helps keep housing areas clean

Community Life stresses, 'housing privilege, not right'

Bridgett Siter

Community life NCOs are now required to notify the office of the garrison commander when a resident has been issued three warnings about housing regulation infractions.

The garrison commander is reinstituting a "three strikes, you're out" policy for residents of Fort Benning communities.

"It is a privilege to have on-post housing. Those who are making the living environment uncomfortable for others will be required to forfeit their housing privilege," said Master Sgt. Donald J. Blackmon, community life officer.

It is the responsibility of community life NCOs to inspect their housing areas on a daily basis. Recently Blackmon has began teaming groups of CLNCOs to thoroughly comb each community to determine what, if anything, needs to be done to improve living conditions.

"We have set a very high standard of cleanliness for our communities, so we're getting out there as much as possible, interacting with the residents, and finding out where the problems are and who is responsible," Blackmon said.

Blackmon said the groups are currently targeting areas that have had a history of noncompliance with garbage and parking regulations. In January a team of CLNCOs began canvassing McGraw Manor and the Custer Terrace and Upatoi Terrace neighborhoods, where residents have been parking on seeded areas and leaving garbage outside before the designated pick-up day.

"We're beginning to see a difference," said Sgt. 1st Class Stanley Williams, CLNCO for McGraw Manor. "People are not parking on the grass as much as they were before. I think they're getting the message that we mean business. Overall, we're seeing a change in attitudes. People are becoming more aware of their surroundings and wanting to see it look nice again."

Staff Sgt. James Morrow, Custer Terrace CLNCO, led a team of CLNCOs through Custer Terrace and Upatoi Terrace on Thursday. They observed several regulation infractions, including abandoned vehicles, tires, furniture and appliances. Morrow donned rubber gloves and searched through a bag of trash to find an envelope

Artist visits Faith School

Coker encourages students to practice art, stay in school

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Professional artist Don Coker met with budding artists from Faith Middle School's sixth-grade art classes on Tuesday.

Coker, a graphic artist and the art director of the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, specializes in portraits and caricatures. He is best known for his recent portraits of "100 People to Remember" in the Ledger-Enquirer.

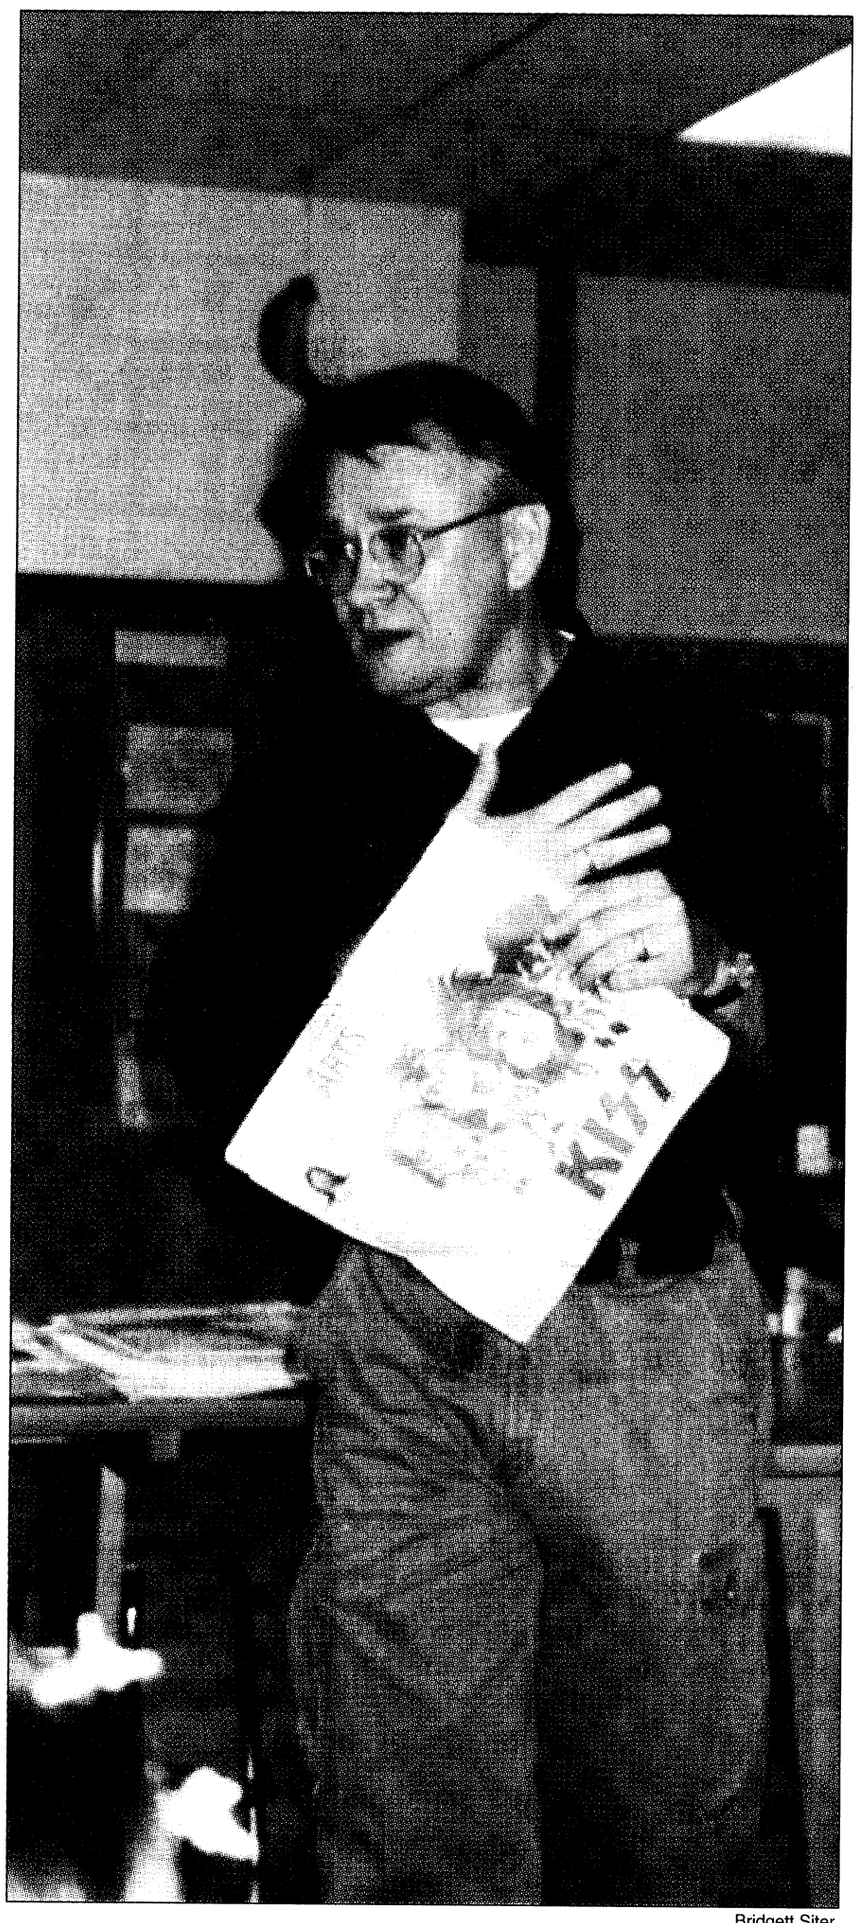
"I recognized his work from the newspaper," said 12-year-old Cameron Murdock. "His portraits are great, but I like his funny drawings the best, especially the one of Bill Clinton."

Coker's "funny drawings" are caricatures, or humorous portraits with exaggerated features. His caricatures of politicians, athletes, movie stars and musicians are featured regularly in the Ledger-Enquirer and other newspapers throughout the country, such as the Atlanta Journal-Constitution and the Detroit Free Press.

Coker began drawing portraits and cartoons 26 years ago after dropping out of college. He started working as a copy boy for the Ledger-Enquirer and eventually worked his way into the art department. Although he considers himself a "self-taught" artist, Coker said a college education is now a necessity for graphic artists.

"You can't have my job now without a college degree," Coker said. "If you want to be an artist of any kind, you must go to college and get an education."

Coker also encouraged aspiring cartoonists and caricaturists to practice their artwork every day.



"Draw, draw, draw every day. Don't give up and don't be deterred. Don't be discouraged by what others think," Coker said. "The beauty of this kind of art is that no one can tell you if its right or wrong. You're simply giving your view of the world through humor."

It was that humor in Coker's work that appealed to sixth-grader Kristen Anderson.

"It was hilarious. It was fascinating to see how he characterized peoples' unique features so well and made them funny," she said.

Coker said the humor in his artwork is therapeutic to himself as well as his audience.

"Humor is the best way in the world to deal with human emotions, whether its anger, sadness, happiness or fear. I express a lot of what I'm feeling in my work. My job is art therapy," Coker laughed.

Student testing begins Monday

Standardized tests to be administered in DoDEA schools

Bridgett Siter

Fort Benning students and teachers are preparing for the Terra Nova Multiple Assessment tests March 13-17.

The Terra Nova, a standardized assessment test administered in DoDEA schools each March, is designed to measure students' strengths and weaknesses based on national standards.

Postwide, students have been preparing for the test by practicing test-taking and critical thinking skills. Parents in all schools have been given the opportunity to visit classrooms and learn techniques to help their children successfully complete the test.

"We need to make sure parents understand what our expectations are for our students, and why we have those expectations," said Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum for the Fort Benning schools, during the March 1 "Lunch-N-Learn" session at Dexter Elementary.

The session, like similar parent involvement programs in each school, focused on the objectives of the Terra Nova and the various skills students will use during the timed test. Einhorn gave examples of the types of questions students will encounter and ways parents can help prepare their children for the test.

"This year there has been a strong focus on critical thinking throughout the whole school system. We're asking for a kind of thinking that we've traditionally only asked of our

ACS raises money for cancer research, during annual event

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

When Sgt. Todd Lysfjord was diagnosed with testicular cancer last April, to say he was a bit shocked is probably an understatement. The 25-year-old Ranger in the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, said he never believed something like cancer could happen to him.

In fact, he said he had a feeling of invincibility, something he now knows doesn't exist.

However, Lysfjord was able to find some hope and also recover a lot quicker with a little help from those he worked side by side with.

Last year while Lysfjord underwent the grueling treatment to stop the cancer, his friends and fellow Soldiers rallied behind him in a way unlike any other.

Instead of just making the usual hospital visits with wishes of get-well, they formed a group that raised money and took part in the American Cancer Society's annual Relay For Life.

The 10-year-old event, which takes place in cities across the nation brings thousands of people together for a common goal — to raise money and awareness for cancer research and education.

Even though Lysfjord was undergoing chemotherapy at the time, he made a point of taking part in the relay. He said he rested for a couple of days to gain some strength and then took his place beside his buddies, ready to tackle the 15-hour endeavor.

"I encourage everyone to do it," Lysfjord said. "Sure it heightens awareness and raises money for a good cause, but it is basically just a good time. We had a blast."

Capt. James McGahey, platoon leader for C Company, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., helped organize the group and agreed that it was a very valuable experience.

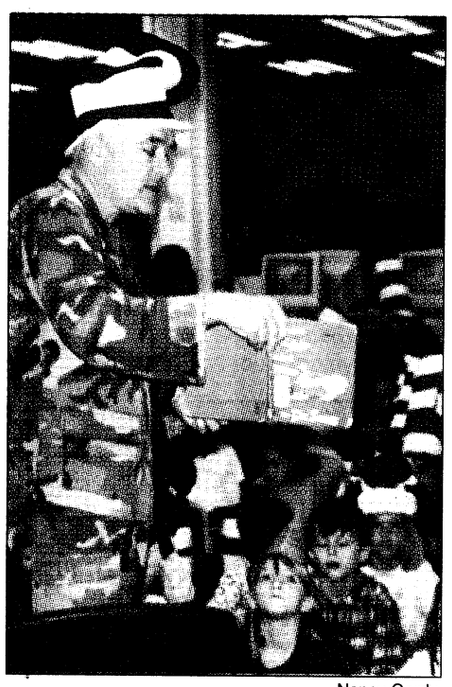
McGahey said not only did it help Lysfjord through his ordeal it also brought his platoon together and a greater awareness to his unit as well.

"It was a great emotional uplift for him (Lysfjord) and for the platoon as a whole," McGahey said. "We now care more about each other as individuals rather than so much as fellow warriors."

He said it is very important for people to get involved because just about everyone has been or will be affected by cancer in some way.

This is the eighth year the Columbus, Fort Benning Chapter of the American Cancer Society has hosted the relay. This year's event will be held from 7 p.m. May 19 until 10 a.m. May 20 at Kinnett Stadium.

Last year 60 teams made the trek raising $150,000. This year's goal is to have more than 100 teams raise at least $250,000, said Delia Postell, publicity chairperson for the relay.



Postell said it is important for people to know the relay is not a competition, rather a way for people with a common cause to come together. She explained that participants do not walk the entire 15 hours. Team members take turns, switching out to allow resting time.

"We won't be able to find a cure for cancer by just reading articles about it," Postell said. "It is going to take every single person who has been affected to get involved before we can make a change."

She said it is an overwhelming experience being around so many people who are fighting to make a difference. Especially those who are cancer victims and cancer survivors.

Of course, there will be more to the relay

Post celebrates reading

Students honor Dr. Seuss, eat green eggs, ham

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Sam would not eat green eggs and ham. He would not eat them in a box. He would not eat them with a fox. He would not eat them here or there. He would not eat them anywhere.

"I just don't like eggs," said 5-year-old Sam Wilson, who would not, could not be persuaded to try the green eggs served by his kindergarten teacher, Jodi Brown.

Sam and his classmates at Wilson Elementary took part in the third annual "Read Across America," a national celebration of the 96th birthday of Theodor Geisel, a.k.a. Dr. Seuss, March 2.

Fort Benning schools took a break from the regular routine of reading, writing and arithmetic to focus on the fun of reading. Students and faculty members dressed in trade-mark red and white hats, attended birthday parties and listened intently as special guests read Dr. Seuss favorites like The Foot Book, Oh Say Can You Say?, and Green Eggs and Ham.

First graders at Stowers Elementary pleaded for an encore performance after garrison commander Col. John Mitchell read The Cat in the Hat without tripping over words like "pudderdunk" and "gollyphant."

"That's my favorite," said 7-year-old Alissa Dillon. "I have five Dr. Seuss books at home, but I'm going to read that one tonight."

ACS offers spouse orientation — Army Community Service will sponsor a spouse orientation program 8:45 a.m. today in the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359. Orientations are held every other month.

Newly assigned personnel are able to receive information about the installation's services and facilities. For more information, call Army Community Service at 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Airlines offer bereavement airfare — Many Soldiers and family members are unaware that airlines offer reduced airfare when travel is necessary to attend the funeral of a relative. When you call the airlines, ask right away about the bereavement or compassionate fares. Expect the agent to ask you about who died, what the relationship was, name of funeral home or hospital, etc.

Volunteer Management Council meets — The next Volunteer Management Council Meeting will be at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday in the FUN Center auditorium.

Vincennes University announces hours — The following one credit hour seminars will be given:

- Preparing and Giving a Briefing — 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., March 18-19, Classroom 61
- Total Quality Management — 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., March 18-19, ARNG Armory, Columbus

The cost of each of these seminars is $90; tuition assistance will pay $67.50 if the Soldier is eligible.

To find out more about Vincennes courses, call 689-0098 or visit the office in Building 2614, Soldiers' Plaza.

First Steps seeks volunteers — The Family Advocacy First Steps Office at Martin Army Community Hospital is seeking mothers as follow-up phone callers.

Some categories needed by First Steps are mothers who have had premature babies, mothers who have had multiple births, those who were teenage moms, single moms and SIDS moms. Mothers of all descriptions are needed. The basic requirements are that they be caring and willing to contact new mothers to give them helpful information, emotional support and referrals to services they need.

If interested, call the First Steps Office at 544-2020.

CSU offers adult re-entry class — Columbus State University now offers a class for adults who want to start or finish a degree. The course is a refresher for math, reading and writing and helps with the ease back into school.

The cost is $98 and includes a textbook.

For more information call the CSU office at 545-1085 or 689-8668.

Bachelor of Science degree offered — The Medical College of Georgia in conjunction with Columbus State University is offering an information session on the Bachelor of Science in Occupational Therapy.

For more information call 545-1085 or 689-8668.

Penny O'Connor
Directorate of Public Works

Robert Fulghum, in his book All I Really Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarten, listed an important piece of wisdom learned as a child that has carried over into adulthood — "clean up your own mess." It's right. It's polite.

On Fort Benning, it's easy.

The Directorate of Public Works makes every effort to keep things simple and help everyone prevent problems. DPW provides assistance to all residents, units, activities and workers. They can tell folks just what goes where.

Once "the mess" is put in the right place, DPW carts it away and recycles it or disposes of it. Here's a quick run down on those "right places" and what's disposed of there:

Dumpsters are issued for the exclusive use of requesting units and activities.

They are to be used for garbage, trash and food waste only.

The requesters are responsible for the proper use of their dumpster. It is for their use and not other units or family housing residents.

Dumpster pick-ups are done by contractor. The contractor will not pick up any dumpsters containing hazardous waste, yard waste, construction materials, metal, furniture, mattresses, tires, batteries, etc.

The law prohibits disposal of these items in dumpsters. If the contractor attempts to drop off dumpsters with any of these items, the landfill operators may turn them away, fine them or close down their business, depending on what items are found.

Items that cannot be disposed of in dumpsters can be dropped off by units and activities between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Monday - Friday at the Recycling Center, Building 4000.

The facility is closed weekends and holidays.

For more information, call 544-6142.

Family housing residents can dispose of everything from baby diapers to sofas.

In trashcans dispose of food waste, household batteries and garbage or trash, including baby diapers.

Put out large items like washers, dryers, and furniture (but not appliances containing Freon, see special pick-ups below) at the curb in family housing on garbage pick up day.

These items will be identified by the garbage contractor and picked-up later that day or the following day.

For more information, call DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4232.

Can't wait till the scheduled pick-up day? Take it to the Recycling Center at Building 4000.

They serve family housing residents in addition to units and activities.

Arrange special pick-ups for refrigerators, freezers, and air conditioners.

Contact the DPW Customer Relations Office at 545-2117 for information.

Individuals are personally responsible for the proper disposal of the remaining items, which cannot be placed in the trash in family housing or in unit dumpsters.

The first two items can be taken to the recycling center, Building 4000 at no cost to the customer:

Scrap metal, wood, etc. can be disposed of at the Recycling Center, Building 4000.

Used motor oil can be disposed of at the Recycling Center.

The Directorate Community Activities Auto Craft Shop also will recycle used motor oil for a $2 environmental fee.

Unfortunately, not even DPW's Recycling Center can handle the next two items.

All individuals are urged to purchase these items from retailers who will take the old ones and dispose of them for their customers.

For on-post disposal of batteries and tires, the Auto Craft Shop can provide help at a modest cost:

Automobile battery — the Auto Craft Shop will dispose of it for a $2 environmental fee.

Tires — the Auto Craft Shop will recycle them for a $2 per tire environmental fee.

If anyone has difficulty in obtaining information concerning a garbage or trash disposal problem, call DPW Customer Service Office at 545-2117.

Faith's Odyssey of the Mind team to compete at Spencer

Chris Herold
Faith Middle School

The Faith Middle School Odyssey of the Mind team is having a regional competition Saturday at Spencer High School.

The day starts with the procession of teams and the opening ceremonies and concludes with the awards ceremonies when the teams find out if they placed high enough to move onto the state-level competition.

Odyssey of the Mind is a worldwide creative problem-solving competition.

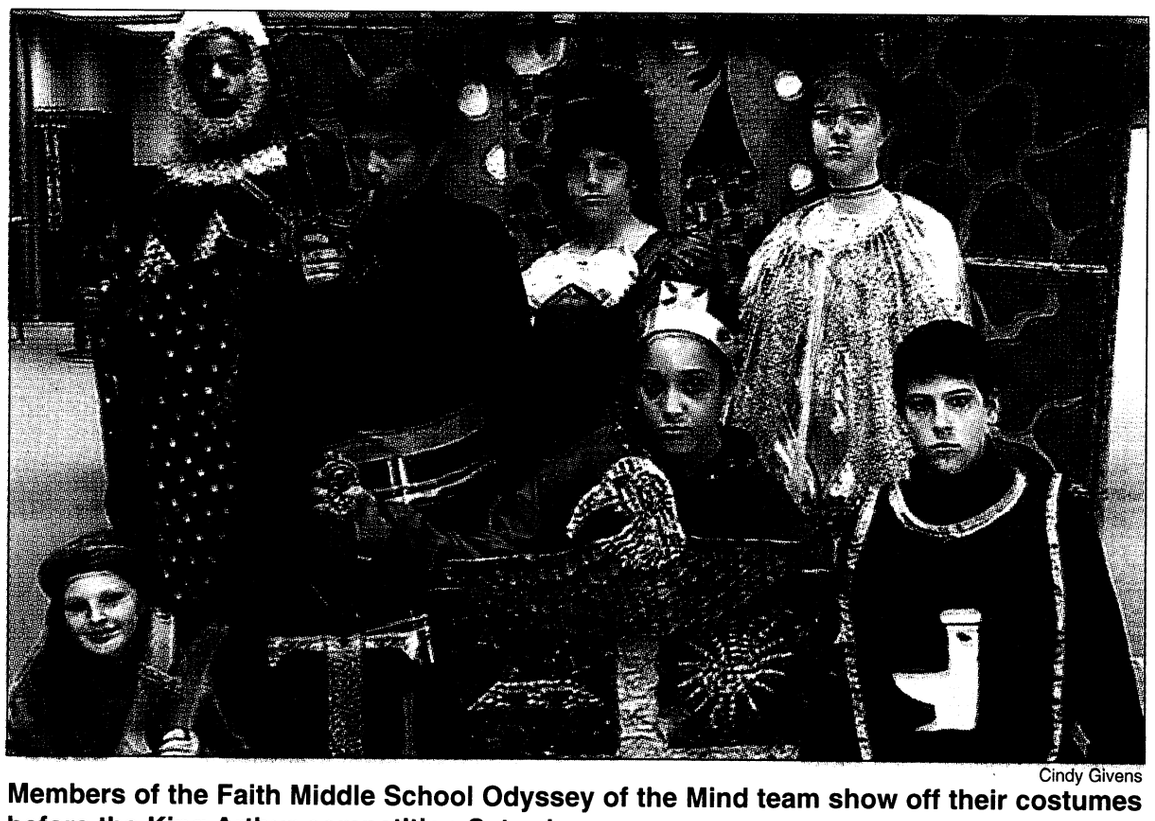
This competition is 15 years old and Faith has been competing for 13 years.

After the regional competition Saturday, there is the state competition in April. If the team wins first at state they advance to the world competition, which is in Knoxville, Tenn.

The problem that Faith is doing this year is called "King Arthur."

In this problem, the teams present one scene of a King Arthur legend as most people would know it.

In the second scene they present how the legend would have come to be if King Arthur and the knights of the round table had never lived.



A troubling twist on the problem is that all the props must be placed on stage without use of the team members' hands, nor can the props touch the ground while being transported onto the stage.

The team can only use a maximum of $100 in their solution of the problem.

"This team has the potential to go all the way," Anne Trawick, one of the team's coaches said.

According to Cindy Givens, co-coach of the team, "Tomorrow's world is going to need more people who can effectively solve problems. The skills students develop today through these competitions will be carried with them in the future."

Faith has competed at the world level 11 out of 13 years. For the last two years the team has placed seventh in the World competition.

Students design, build

Lesson ends with kids taking checkered flags

Ashley Hanson
Faith Middle School

Have you ever seen a car, powered by a CO2 cartridge, fly down a runway?

Well, during the second quarter at Faith Middle School a majority of the eighth-grade students did just that.

The students had two weeks to complete a race car that met the following standards: the car had to be one solid piece, 11-inches long, and fully painted.

The students engaged in this project with an anxious and "it is going to be a breeze" attitude. Boy, were they wrong!

First, we had to agonize over the perfect design. Then we had to trace it on our wood. Next, using our Industrial Arts implements we slowly cut and carved out our cars.

Hey, the triangular block had begun to look like a mobile racer!

Our last step at school was to sand. We slaved over our cars caressing them, sanding them, and fatiguing our hands. Our goal was to get our cars baby-bottom smooth.

At last, full of pride, we carried our partially done cars home to be showered in refreshing spray paint.

We needed perfection because our cars were to be judged in style, and of course, speed racing against everyone else's car without breaking.

Returning the now-finished cars to school was our final farewell before the races. We fitted the wheels and said, " Yes, we are done!"

The day of the races arrived and anxiety levels were high.

"It was very stressful, and had you crossing your fingers the whole time," said Lamar Cantelou, one of the racers.

In eighth period, Maurice Warfeild reigned down upon the others in victory.

Following was Robert Penn who won second place. Ashley Hanson and Peter Graessle tied for third. First, second, and third place for design were awarded to Peter Graessle and Alphonso Youngblood who tied for first, Theron Batiste and Lamar Cantelou were neck and neck for second, and in third place Tony Toliver and Jordan Johnson.

In fourth period, the race winners were Steven Salas, winner of the gold, Isreal Lopez, owner of the silver medal, and Denny Becker, holding the bronze.

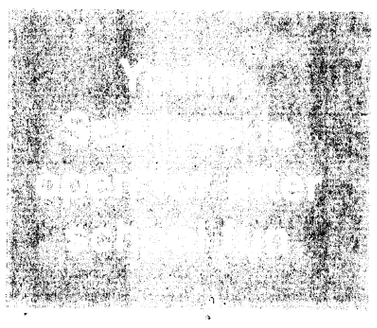
Overall, the race for glory was a close one. All participants did well and earned their title whether it was "My Broken Car" or "Grand Champion."

Congratulations, you Speed Racers you!

Jogging club to take on meet

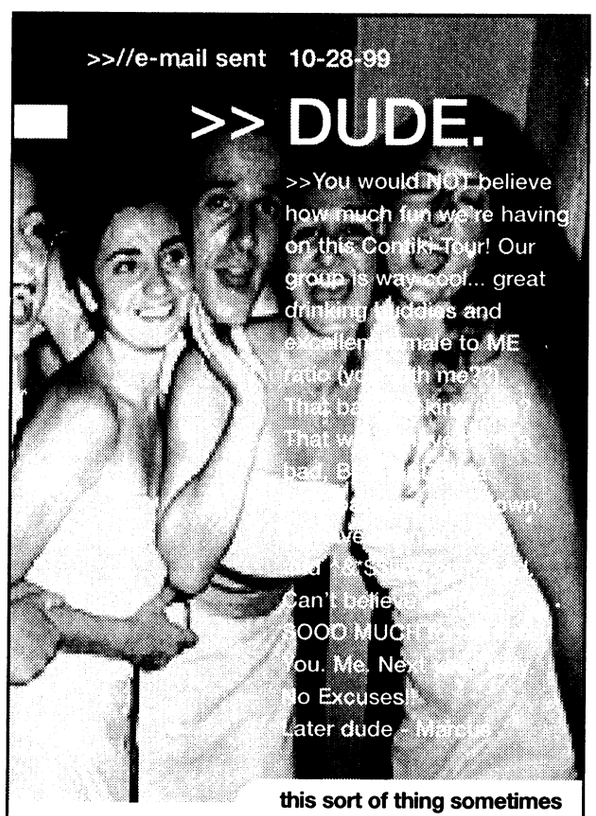
Joey Fix
Faith Middle School

The Jogging Club at Faith Middle School is off and running! We will be attending the Smith Station track meet Saturday.



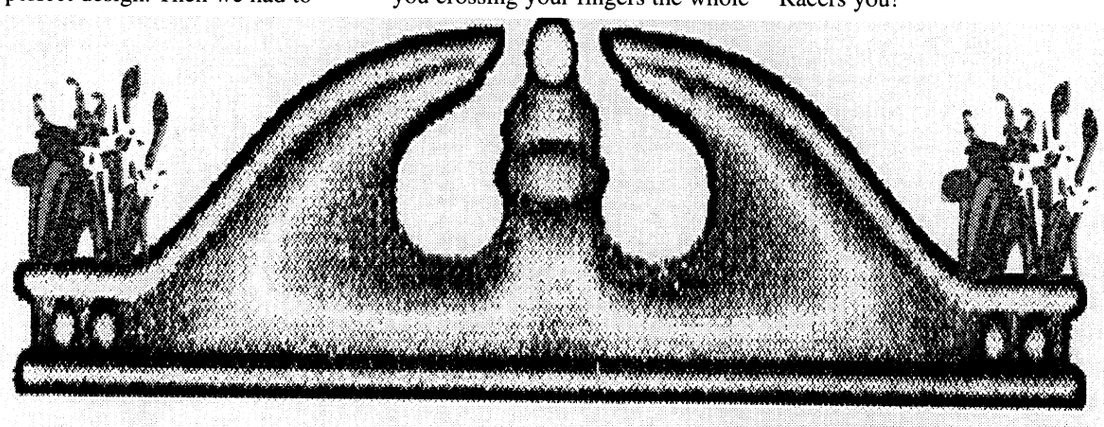
At the event students will be running in the 100-meter, 4x100 relay, 4x800 relay, and the 1600-meter (1 mile). We will compete against teams from Auburn, Opelika, Smiths Station and La Grange.

The Jogging Club will also be participating in the Faith Spring Race April 8 and a field trip to Six Flags in Atlanta on May 7. In order to run in any of the events students must be a member of the jogging club and attend three or more practices.



The Jogging Club practices every Monday and Thursday after school until 4:30 p.m. Susan Emerson and Tori Noon are the Jogging Club sponsors.

Students, friends, adults, even teachers, are invited to come out and join the fun after school. Many of the runners come to run with their friends. Some people just come because they like to run. But everyone is welcome!



Please keep in mind that there is no such thing as a slow or bad runner at the Faith Jogging Club.

Read: Students dress up for fun

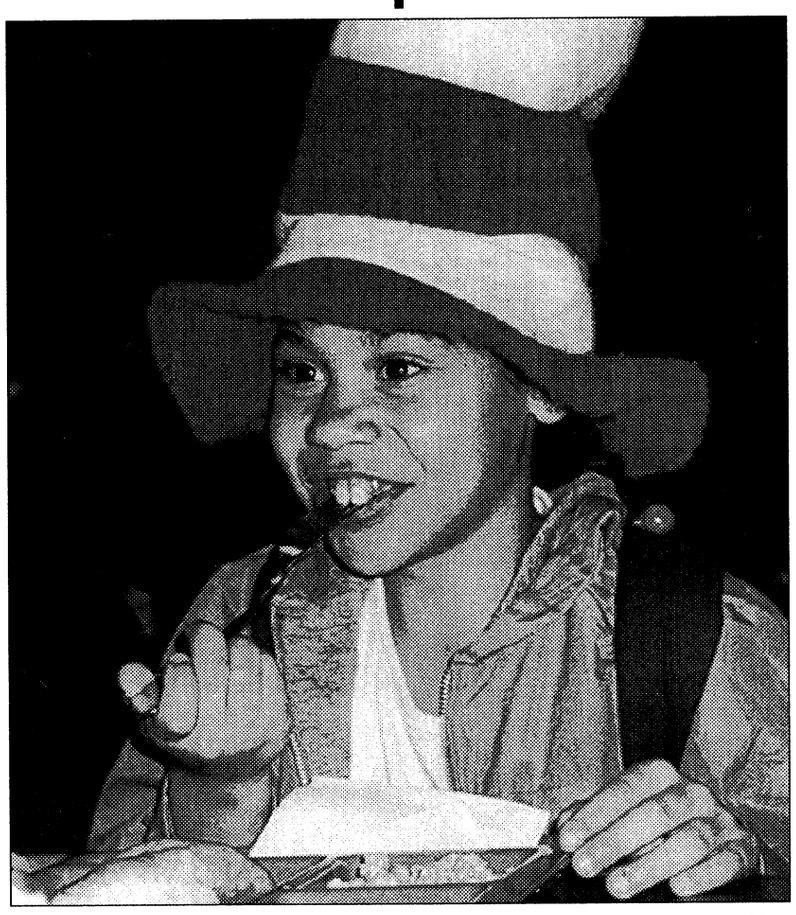
Principal Vicki Rogers dressed as the Cat in the Hat and read a Dr. Seuss book to all the students of Dexter Elementary via closed circuit television. Afterwards kindergarten students dressed as their favorite storybook characters and welcomed parents to an all day open house.

"Today is a celebration of the joy of reading," Rogers said. "It's an opportunity for parents to join with their children in remembering the pleasure of reading just for the fun of it. Who better to epitomize that concept than Dr. Seuss?"



At McBride Elementary, it was hard to tell what excited the students more — the reading of The Cat in the Hat by Col. John Latimer, U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff, or the huge birthday cake baked and decorated by Sgt. Vale Smith, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment.

Smith, father of 4-year-old pre-K student Baylee Smith, said baking the cake was a good opportunity to encourage his daughter's love of reading.

"I can't honestly say if she'll remember this event when she's grown, but for now it has sparked an interest in reading. My wife and I usually read to her three or four times a week. Now she wants to read everything she can get her hands on," Smith said.

The National Education Association, which sponsors "Read Across America," issued certificates of participation to students who pledged to read with an adult on Thursday evening. Caroline Meyers, president of the Benning Education Association, said that more than 1,000 certificates were distributed on Fort Benning.

"This event has had a tremendous success since we first began it here on Fort Benning. But I'm tickled to death that this year's celebration just surpassed our own expectations. Parental support was outstanding," Meyers said.

Trash: NCO's police areas

identifying the resident responsible for leaving the garbage by the curb a week before scheduled pick-up.

"We'll do what it takes," Morrow said after confronting the resident responsible for leaving the garbage. "We have over 1050 units in this area alone. Its not unusual to write 150 warnings a week. It takes three full-time NCOs to police and maintain the entire area. Maybe we experience more problems than other areas because we are so much larger. But we'll keep on writing warnings until they adhere to the regulations or garrison decides they should find a new place to live."

Becky Bunch, Custer Terrace resident for six years, said that she has seen an improvement in the appearance of her community.

"I have noticed the overall upkeep of the area is better. We used to have a problem with people leaving garbage out in bags instead of cans, and it would end up in everybodies yards. That's no longer an issue in my area," Bunch said.

Blackmon said the CLNCOs will continue their "clean sweep" of Fort Benning housing communities until all areas of concern have been resolved.

"We want to work with our residents to make this the post of the decade. That's our goal. Our community life NCOs are doing a terrific job of resurrecting our neighborhoods. They are working together to accomplish this all over post. Now we want to see the residents come together the same way and show some concern for the beauty and safety of their communities," Blackmon said.

Anyone wishing to voice concerns about the community beautification project can call Blackmon at 545-3069, or call their CLNCO.

The CLNCOs for the Custer Terrace and Upatoi Terrace community are Sgt. 1st Class Ed Vanicky, Staff Sgt. James Morrow, and Sgt 1st Class Roosevelt Gogin . They can be reached at 689-1058.

The CLNCOs for McGraw Manor are Sgt. 1st Class Alton L. Cambell, Master Sgt. Enrique Montana, and Sgt, 1st Class Stanley Williams. They can be reached at 544-1168.

Sgt. 1st Class Felix Ortiz, Sgt. 1st Class Reginald Walton and Staff Sgt. Lovella Duh are the CLNCOs for the Boughton Heights and Davis Hill areas. Their phone number is 544-1195.

Staff Sgt. Vanessa Carr serves as CLNCO for West Main Post. Her telephone number is 545-2910.

East Main Post CLNCOs are Master Sgt. William McKithean and Sgt. 1st Class J.B. Robinson. They can be reached at 545-2830.

The CLNCO for Indian Head Terrace is Sgt. 1st Class Robert Jackson. He can be reached at 545-2830.

Relay: Walkers save lives

than just walking around a track. The event opens with a cancer survivor's celebratory walk, in which cancer survivors make a victory lap to show others that it is possible to beat the disease.

A guest appearance will be made by Miss Georgia Osjha Andersen at 8 p.m. and a special luminary service will be held at 9 p.m. to honor cancer survivors and those who have lost the battle to cancer.

Postell encouraged everyone to come out and experience it, even if they are not involved in the relay. She said there will be a variety of activities and other attractions for people to enjoy.

"I encourage everyone to come on out and see what it is like," Postell said. "I guarantee next year they'll be on a team. It's just that kind of moving event."

As a testament to that, McGahey said he and his fellow Soldiers will once again be forming a team to participate in this year's relay.

For more information on how to form a team or become involved in Relay for Life, call 324-5614.

Test: Assesses proficiency

gifted students because our childrens' job market will be drastically different than today's job market," Einhorn said. "Therefore this test will be very different than the tests most of our students' parents were familiar with in school."

Besides the traditional subjects, like reading, language arts, math, science and social studies, the Terra Nova will also assess students' proficiency in gathering, organizing and analyzing information, generating ideas and evaluating results.

Einhorn encouraged parents to assure their children that the test will not affect their grades. She also said parents should look for signs that their children are experiencing stress before or during the test.

"It's a very natural reaction. A lot of emphasis has been put on this test these last few weeks. They've been taking practice tests and reviewing skills they'll need to use while taking the test, so it is only natural that they may begin to worry about their performance," Einhorn said. "Try to encourage them. Assure them that everybody gets nervous about tests. Help them to relax."

Einhorn also cautioned parents not to trivialize their children's reactions during or after taking the test.

"Parts of the test will be very easy for your child. Parts of it will be very difficult. It is designed to be that way. If your child feels he or she struggled over part of it, assure him or her that is normal," Einhorn said.

Einhorn discussed several tips teachers are using in the classroom to help students feel comfortable with the week-long test process.

She encouraged parents to reiterate the importance of listening and reading directions carefully, using time wisely, thinking before responding to questions, and keeping a positive attitude throughout the test.

She also requested that parents insure their children eat a good breakfast each morning and get a sufficient amount of sleep during the week of the test.

Test results are expected back before the end of the school year. Parents will receive a home report explaining their child's results.

"Our goal is to get all of our students above the 50 percentile. We accomplished that goal last year, due in part to the preparation and parental support we had," Einhorn said.

"We'll use our results to identify areas of strengths and needs, and pass this information on to the teachers and parents. Then schools and teachers can begin to formulate plans to make improvements in the areas where there are weaknesses and continue to encourage growth in the areas where we see strength. Ultimately that's the purpose of the whole process."

Recognize domestic violence, take action

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

It is estimated that every 15 seconds a woman is battered. Every year, domestic violence results in almost 100,000 days of hospitalizations, close to 30,000 emergency department visits and nearly 40,000 visits to a physician.

In 1994, approximately 3,140,000 cases of child mistreatment were reported to child protective services. That same year, an estimated 1,271 children died as a result of abuse or neglect.

The toll on victims of domestic violence is staggering. Robert Davis, former director of the National Institute of Justice had this to say about the effects of violence upon its victims: "Only recently have people come to realize that victims of crime experience crisis reactions similar to those experienced by victims of war, natural disasters and catastrophic illness."

And domestic violence is a crime.

The most important first step we need to recognize is domestic violence exists with greater frequency than we may have assumed, even within the military community.

The battered woman is in your workplace, however she or her abuser may attempt to conceal that presence. There are children in your housing area who are witnessing or enduring violence in their quarters on a regular basis.

Too often I hear supervisors of abusers say, "But Sergeant _____ is a good Soldier."

My reply is, "A Soldier who abuses his or her spouse or child is not a good Soldier!" Domestic violence is a crime and must not be tolerated.

Those who protect the abuser should realize by doing so they enable the abuser to continue his or her abusing.

You may have an adult friend who you suspect is being abused. Ask questions! The abused person will rarely announce they are being battered.

Be direct and ask the person,

"Are you in danger? Do you fear for your safety? Your children's safety?"

Listen to your friend and try to understand his or her situation (I say "his or her" because incidents of men suffering physical abuse at the hands of their wives are increasing).

Believe the abused person. The battered person will normally minimize the extent of the abuse.

By simply owning up to the truth of the abuse, the victim is taking the giant leap forward in bringing it to an end and finding help.

Encourage your friend to seek help while remembering it is not your responsibility to rescue the person. All suspected child abuse and neglect should be reported to the proper authorities and in fact both the federal government and the states now have mandated child abuse reporting laws.

It is important to note that you should not confront the abuser.

Clinical experience suggests that confrontation with abusers by untrained professionals may endanger victims and should be avoided at all costs.

Help can be found for the abused and the abuser.

The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries is a good place to begin. Call the Center at 545-1760 for more information. Domestic violence does not stop by itself and you can help bring it to an end.

Scripture recipe for living life of meaning

Chaplain (Capt.) Bill Harrison
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

reflections

Have you ever known somebody that just really had his act together, someone who always seemed to know where he was going and how he was going to get there? Are you envious of people like that? Don't you wish you could lead others to do the same?

You can! Take a few minutes today and read I Peter 4:1-11. The fact that you are reading this article suggests that you are interested in improving yourself, so I would encourage you to spend more time in God's word. If you already have a personal relationship with God through Christ, then this passage is your recipe for living a life of meaning.

This Scripture simply says we should have the same attitude as Christ and be willing to suffer for God's sake. Haven't you spent enough time doing what the pagans choose to do? Be clear minded and self-controlled so that you can pray for guidance and make wise decisions in life. The Scripture tells us to love and serve others as instruments of God's grace. Speak the words of God with the strength of God and your life will have purpose.

Are you living for yourself, or for others? Why don't you try living for God, your Creator, and see if you can find that sense of direction that so many are searching for? Trust me because there is no better way to live. Jesus himself said, "You are either for me or you are against me." Isn't it time to submit to God's will for your life, so that you can start really living? Wouldn't it be great to adopt this attitude and mature in your faith to the point where you could be done with sin? This passage tells us that this is possible!

What do you do at home when you are having trouble programming your new VCR? Don't you consult the instruction book from the manufacturer? Well, your Creator has also given you an instruction book — the Bible. Read I Peter 4:1-11. Don't let another Easter season come and go without getting to know Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord.

We would love to have you come worship with us Sunday mornings at Sightseeing Road Chapel from 9-10:15 a.m. We offer a warm and friendly, non-denominational contemporary worship service with guitars. Come check us out!

Ask, and it will be given to you; seek, and you will find; knock, and it will will be opened to you. Matthew 7:7

Swimmer of the Century

Assistant editor

Charles "Chuck" Gantner Jr. could not believe what the person on the other end of the telephone was telling him.

"Swimmer of the century — me?" Gantner questioned the man. "You must be talking about my father, Charles Gantner Sr."

Gantner, 54, who is the chief of Personnel Proponency in the Office of Infantry Proponency, U.S. Army Infantry Center, said he thought a reporter from the Newark Star-Ledger was playing a trick on him when he called to tell him that he had been chosen as the New Jersey boys' swimmer of the Century for their Feb. 27 issue.

But this high honor was no joke and neither is Gantner's swimming record.

Gantner was the first state swimming champion, as well as, the first state champion of any kind for Piscataway High School. This was no small feat considering the school didn't even have a swimming team.

Gantner was a one-man-team, coached by his father.

Gantner said he feels fortunate to have had a father who was an accomplished All-American swimmer to act as his coach. His father started assisting him early in his endeavor.

"I've been swimming competitively since I was 10 or 11 years old," Gantner said. And his father was with him all along the way.

"He was a master motivator and leader," said Gantner. "He had that gift to motivate people. He was a master at that stuff."

Because his school didn't have a pool, Gantner practiced at the Westfield YMCA where he swam with other top New Jersey competitors.

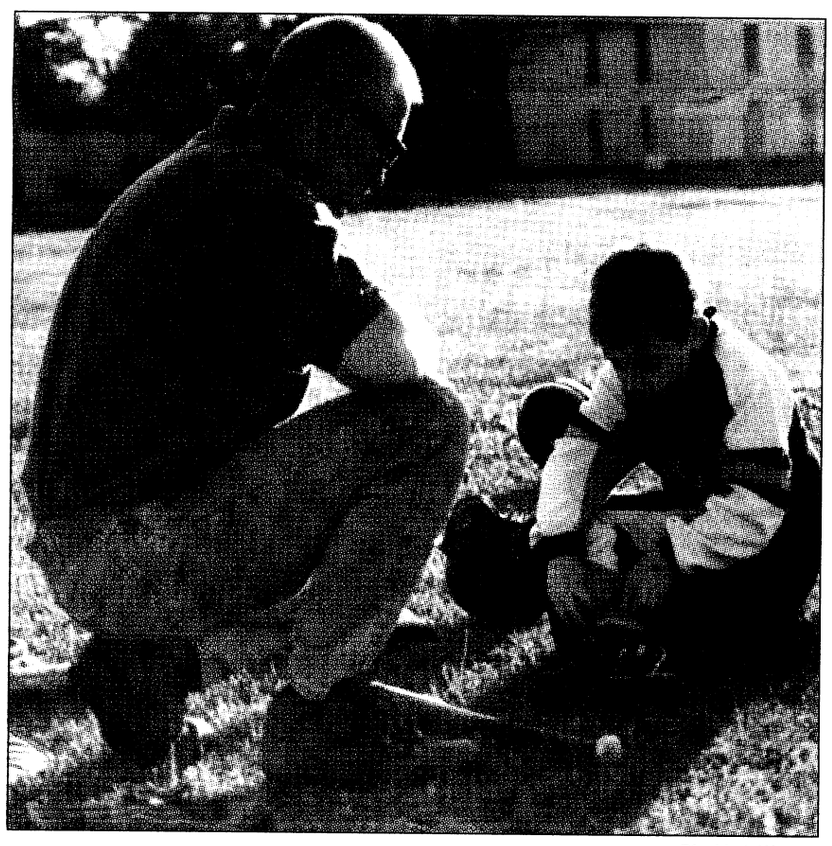
The payoff began early in his swimming career.

As a freshman at Piscataway, Gantner captured two first place finishes in the 100-yard butterfly and the 200 individual medley at the state's swimming championship in 1960. No other swimmer would ever beat him at a state championship race.

And no other boy or girl swimmer in New Jersey's swimming history has ever held two state swimming titles for four years consecutively.

"His achievements are unparalleled," said Joe Battaglia of Dorf Feature Service who in conjuction with Bruce Johnson, author of "The History of New Jersey Interscholastic Swimming" chose Gantner as the New Jersey's top century swimmer. "A lot of people say it will never be equaled. It is a premier accomplishment."

The Newark Star-Ledger is featuring a series highlighting New Jersey athletes of the last century for their outstanding contributions to interscholastic sports. The newspaper is highlighting each sport individually, selecting athletes from each decade and one overall athlete of the century.



Gantner was chosen from a list that boasts several Olympians and many All-American swimmers.

Gantner's father, who passed away in June, was chosen as one of the top 10 swimmers of the decade for the 1930s.

According to the Newark Star-Ledger, candidates chosen for consideration had to win a minimum of

Fort Benning fathers volunteer 35-plus years experience to Red Sox coach-pitch team

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

In their first year of coach-pitched baseball the 7- and 8-year- olds who comprise the American League Red Sox team have two assistant coaches who are helping teach discipline and how to be a team player.

Considering the 35-plus years of experience these two have spent in a profession that demands using these attributes daily, the Red Sox players are learning from the pros.

Professional Soldiers that is.

The Soldiers are the fathers of two sluggers and are helping turn the 11-boy and one-girl squad into a top-notch team.

Sgt. 1st Class Donald Ladakos, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and Sgt. 1st Class Clyde Glenn, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, have been assistant coaches since their children took up the sport.

Ladakos' son, Cody Ladakos, picked up a bat three years ago to play on a T-ball team and has loved it ever since.

"I really like playing, especially hitting and being the catcher," Cody said.

And the senior Ladakos is loving the time he gets to spend with his son.

"I really enjoy coaching. It gives me a great opportunity to spend some quality time with Cody. I go on TDY a lot so when I am home I try to spend as much time with him as possible," Ladakos said.

"I also really enjoy helping out in the community. I really get a lot out of it when they hit the ball out of the infield in the air for the first time, and they have that smile from ear to ear. Nothing can beat that."

Glenn agreed that spending time with his 7-year-old daughter, Kayla Glenn, is priceless. "Being in the Rangers, I deploy a lot," he said, stressing a lot. "It is hard to coach and go back and forth while deploying, but I really like being with her."

Volunteering their time, the two Soldiers help teach their team the fundamentals of baseball.

"We teach them how to throw, how to hit, which is always their favorite, and how to catch," said Ladakos as one of the Sox players missed a fly ball. Running over to the ball, the Sox right fielder hurled the ball to second base, only to have the ball drop halfway. Ladakos reiterated instructions given earlier to use the cut-off man.

Like Ladakos, Glenn is enjoying the quality time coaching allows him and Kayla to spend together.

"I have helped coach my daughter's team both years that she has played now. Last year she played T-ball, and she just loves playing baseball," said Glenn. "I really enjoy helping out in the community. But it is great to spend time with her and watch her play."

During the practice, Glenn gave his daughter some advice about fielding a ground ball by putting her body in front of the ball and also encouraged her as she fired a ball from shallow center field to the pitcher.

The Red Sox are scheduled to play eight teams and a total of 24 games. The team also practices biweekly, usually on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, said Ladakos.

He said, "We teach them all about baseball. Sometimes parents will be in the stand griping and yelling when something goes wrong, and that is what we are trying to avoid. We tell them (the players) that it is just a

Gen. Colin Powell comes to Atlanta for racing event

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

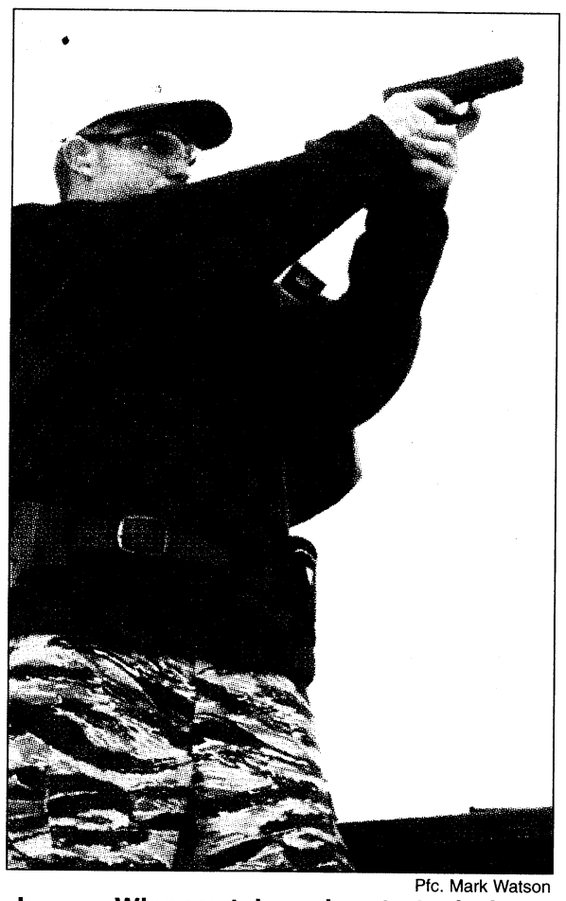
Sunday retired Gen. Colin Powell will give the order "Gentlemen, start your engines" at the Atlanta Motor Speedway for the Cracker Barrel Old Country Store 500.

But before the drivers fire up their engines Fort Benning's Command Exhibition Parachute Team, the Silver Wings, will perform a freefall demonstration as part of the opening ceremonies. Eight jumpers will land in the infield between pit row and the starting line.

"Atlanta Motor Speedway is honored to host Gen. Powell as our Grand Marshal," Ed Clark, the track president, said.

"His distinguished presence should be a highlight of the day for fans, competitors and all in attendance."

This will be Powell's first visit to a NASCAR event, and Sgt. 1st Class Craig Colberg hopes to meet the retired four-star once he and the other Silver Wings are on the ground.



Colberg is a big racing fan, especially of driver Dale Earnhardt, who he predicts will win Sunday's race.

"I know a lot about the sport, and I don't miss a race," Colberg said. He and his family had already purchased tickets for the race prior to finding out that the Silver Wings would be jumping.

"This is a great opportunity for us to represent Fort Benning and the Army before more than 250,000 spectators," Staff Sgt. Greg Windmiller, assistant team leader, said. The event organizer, J. Howard Events, has invited the team to say and see the race.

In the past the Silver Wings have performed at other NASCAR tracks such as the Charlotte Motor Speedway.

The race kicks off the team's demonstration season which extends to late summer. The team will perform March 18 at the Cherry Blossom Festival in Macon, Ga.

English Range hosts 40 shooters for practice event

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

More than 40 people gathered at Fort Benning's English Range March 4 for a warm-up pistol match.

Competitors faced the Glock targets and scoring system to prepare themselves for the Glock Sport Shooting Foundation's Old South Regional Classic VIII to be held on post March 25 and 26.

Competitors fired away at three stages. At one stage, shooters needed to double-tap five targets varying in ranges of seven to 35 yards.

At another stage, competitors faced six paper plates lined up at 15 yards. They were stapled on a cardboard backing so the shooter would be able to see where his shot went in relation to the target if he was to miss.

The final stage, and possibly the most frustrating, was the steel plates. Also set at 15 yards, six knock-down plates were the downfall of many shooters.

Like a powerful magnet, the support bar, directly below the plates attracted many bullets.

"I just kept hitting the bar over and over," said a frustrated Johnathan Frye after a practice.

There were six individual categories for the shoot: stock service, enhanced service, custom service, service revolver, back-up revolver and back-up auto.

Taking the top spot for the stock service was Jonathan Moore, with Allan Sheffield and Claude Werner close behind.

Solo shooters were Moore in the service revolver class, Regina Bowman in the back-up revolver class and Jesus Hernandez in the enhanced service class.

In the custom service class, Morris Lewark blazed his way into first place with Clayton Meals and Moore trailing.

Werner took top honors in the back-up auto class with a strong lead over Victor Hallalf and Melisa Frauendorfer.

The next monthly pistol shoot scheduled at English range will be April 1.

Call the Fort Benning Pistol and Rifle Club at 689-3371 for more information.

Athlete: Takes top honors three New Jersey State Interscholastic Athletic state prep or Eastern interscholastic championships.

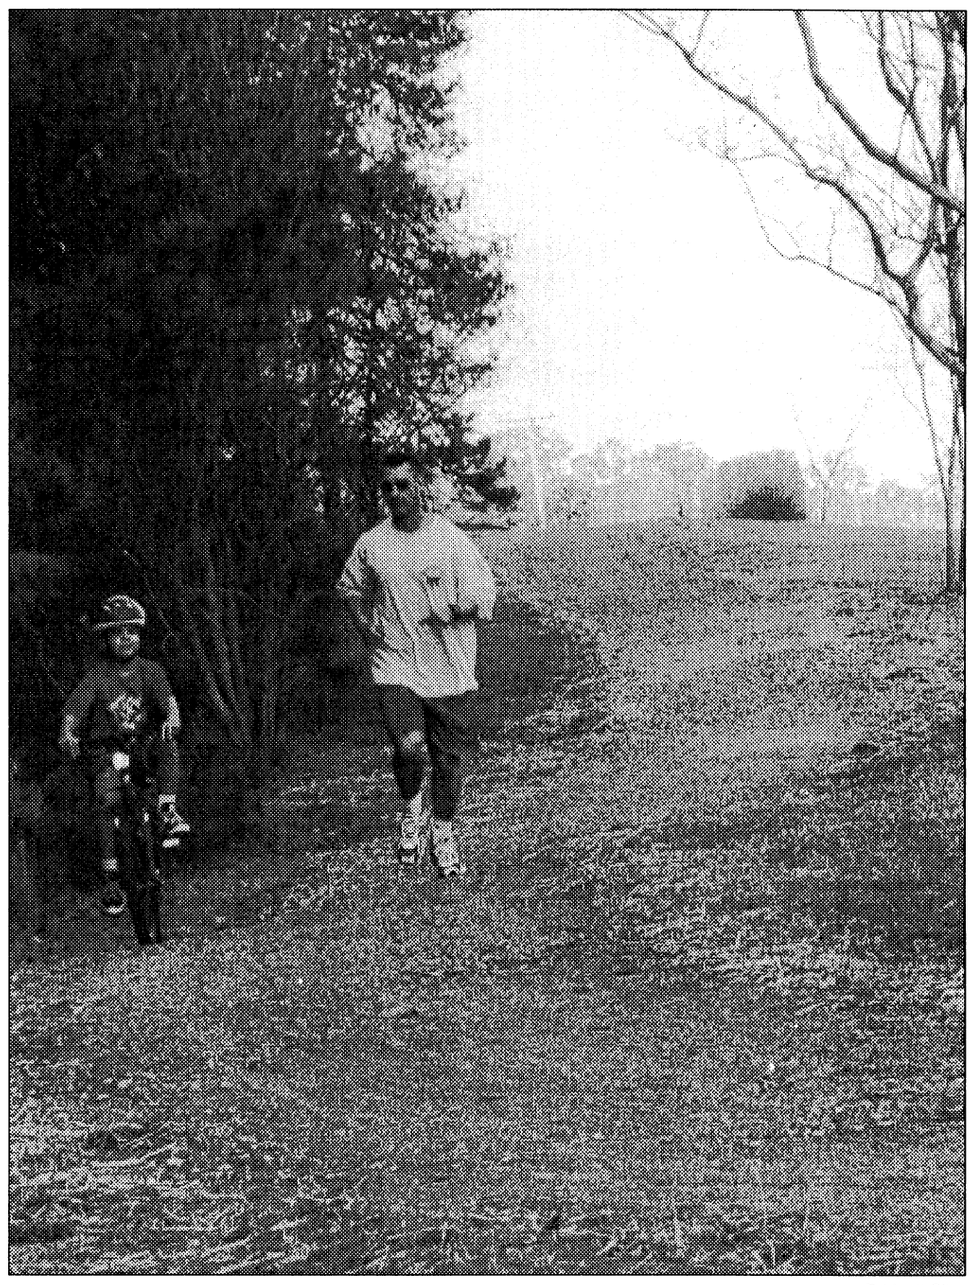
Gantner said he was shocked with the announcement. "I was really honored and surprised.

"I did well but I feel as satisfied with my masters and international-level swimming."

After high school, Gantner attended West Point for three years where he was an All-American swimmer. While there he tried out for the 1964 Olympic team but missed it by one slot.

He then graduated from North Carolina State University in 1968 where he received his commission.

Gantner was forced to put his swimming career on the back burner while he went to Vietnam as an Infantry platoon leader. He stayed in the Army for six years, got out as a captain and returned to Fort Benning as a civilian at the Infantry School.



Since that time he has competed on the national and international level.

Now a masters-level swimmer, he has earned many medals and titles along the way. This includes seven gold and three silver medals at the 1985 and 1986 World Championships in Toronto, Canada, and Tokyo, Japan.

He currently spends about three hours a week in the pool to maintain fitness.

"My focus now is to encourage my kids' interests," he said. Neither of his children have decided to swim. But he said they have many interests including soccer, tennis and gymnastics.

Gantner's wife, Lisa, is also a masters swimmer and a physician in Columbus. They have two children Glenn, 11, and Alyssa, 8.

Your children are a real credit to you. $500 each

They're your pride and joy. What's more, they can save you up to $500 each, subtracted right off your federal income tax. The Child Tax Credit is an important benefit of the Taxpayer Relief Act.

Who qualifies? Each dependent child or descendant, stepchild or foster child under 17 as of 12/31/99. The child must be a U.S. citizen or resident.

Credit is reduced when your modified Adjusted Gross Income exceeds certain limits. Special rules apply for three or more children.

Why wait for a refund? You can take home more money every payday, if you ask your employer to withhold less. (Be careful to withhold enough to avoid a penalty.)

GI Bill benefits may see boost

More money, transferability could be coming

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

What good is a benefit that is better to Soldiers on the outside than it is while wearing the green?

That is the question Sen. Max Cleland said prompted him to push for a change in the aging Montgomery GI Bill, a benefit he said gives Soldiers more incentive to leave the ranks of the service rather than to stay in.

"In a time of a booming economy in the private sector and ever-competitive job market, we need to do everything we can to retain the high quality and high caliber personnel we have serving our country," he said. "But when you only allow a serviceman or woman the chance to get full benefit from the GI Bill on the outside, we are asking for them to join the already increasing number of those leaving the service."

So how does Cleland hope to keep quality people in the ranks of the modern military? He said the answer is simple: Keep quality of life high and Soldiers, airmen and Marines will continue to re-enlist.

"Updating the GI Bill, I believe is a wonderful retention tool," he said. "Making it possible to use the benefit while in the service is the first major step."

Cleland's proposed overhaul of the bill would be the first modernization of the education bill since 1984, and this proposal aimed at retaining quality Soldiers doesn't stop with use equity issues.

"I also propose we take the modernization effort further by helping servicemen and women educate their children, which is often a parent's greatest goal," he said. "Under my legislation, the services would be given the discretionary authority to permit servicemembers to transfer education benefits they have earned to immediate family members including spouses and dependents."

Assisting those family members, Cleland said, is essential in maintaining a strong force ready to fight and win.

"With 56 percent of our total force married, this would be a benefit that would have a great impact on our entire force," he said.

Cleland's new benefit-packed plan would benefit career Soldiers the most, giving them a chance to transfer the benefits at the 10-year mark of their stint of service.

Cleland has nicknamed the bill HOPE for Helping Out Professionals with Education, and said it will be part of the GI Bill Reform package of 2000 he hopes to bring before the Senate by the end of the month.

Cleland proposed a similar bill last year that coupled the transferability option along with a hike in monetary benefits of the bill, but the bill failed twice in the Senate after twice earning passage in the U.S. House.

Infantrymen prepare for EIB testing

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

The Georgia air is cold under the moonlit sky as hundreds of Expert Infantry hopefuls fell assembled on Burroughs Range Monday morning.

The moist, arctic-like air wasn't enough to dampen the spirits of the Soldiers as they readied themselves to begin the first phase of a process aimed at earning them the right to be called the best in their profession — the right to earn and wear the Expert Infantry Badge.

Although the week of official training began the badge process, Soldiers on the site said the week was far from the beginning of their intense training regime.

"We have been working for nearly six weeks just to prepare our Soldiers to come out here and test," said 1st Lt. William Greene, an EIB hopeful assigned to C Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment. "We started out working at squad and platoon level with a certified EIB Soldier, and I think we are all comfortable with the material we are going to be tested on out here."

The testing process, which challenges Soldiers to a barrage of 33 Infantry tests during four days, certifies Soldiers are competent and capable in the Infantry career field.

Police apprehend protesters

Six SOA Watch members may face jail time

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

After an uneventful demonstration outside Columbus' federal courthouse Friday, six members of the protest group SOA Watch brought their protest to Fort Benning.

Nearly 50 supporters gathered outside the courthouse, rallying to show their support for nine of their members inside facing charges of trespassing stemming from last November's protest of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

U.S. District Court Hugh Lawson found all nine of the protesters guilty of trespassing, and said after a probation background investigation of the protesters, they will be sentenced in April.

That conviction, officials said, may have added fuel to the fire for the group who then took their cross-carrying campaign, aimed at closing the school, to the grounds of Fort Benning.

Shortly after 2:30 Friday afternoon, military police responded to a report of people outside Ridgway Hall damaging the lawn.

Military police found six individuals claiming to be members of SOA Watch planting crosses and digging what police said looked to be a shallow grave.

"The five females and one male

Leaders from across the Columbus and Phenix City area and post met at Fort Benning for the Leadership Columbus Military Day March 10.

During the visit, local organization leaders were treated to demonstrations and briefings from the Ranger Training Brigade, the 29th Infantry Regiment, the Airborne School and the U.S. Army School of the Americas. They also were able to enjoy a meal with Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group.

The day provided a great opportunity for everyone to learn more about one another, said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

"This is an annual kind of training class, for about 40 people around the community who I would consider the upcoming movers and shakers in the community, to familiarize them with all aspects of the military community," he said.

"Many of them have no idea of what goes on at Fort Benning, so this is a great opportunity for them to get a better appreciation of the size of Fort Benning, the immensity of all of the operations that go on out here and an appreciation for the Soldiers and families out here," Walls said. "I think they'll have a whole different attitude about what goes on out here and the people that dedicate their lives to being in the military."

As a part of that learning experience, the local leaders took part in a hands-on training exercise demonstration by

Beware of car transmission woes

Spc. Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Andy, my ex-brother-in-law, was the manager of one of those nation-wide transmission shops.

He used to talk about the training they underwent to make sure the customer got the "best deal."

Tricks like running a finger through a dropped oil pan in front of unsuspecting customers and saying, "you've got metal filings in here, transmission must be bad."

Or how they'd offer free transmission inspections, lay your transmission out on the floor then tell you your transmission was bad and needed either rebuilding or replacement. If you decided you needed a second opinion, they'd tell you it would cost $300 to put the transmission back together before you could leave the garage.

Since being assigned to Fort Benning, my opinion on transmission businesses has not changed. I've heard too many stories about cars being held for ransom, heard about too many instances of customers being told their car will be ready tomorrow and tomorrow never getting there.

This happened to an instructor who ended up calling the police to mediate for him. The policeman was pretty much powerless to do too much since it was a civil matter, but while the policeman was present, the shop manager promised the captain he'd get him a rental car. When the policeman left, the manager closed up shop and went to get a beer at a nearby bar, leaving the captain high and dry.

Needless to say, I'm very wary of nation-wide transmission businesses and in fact, if I see a repair shop that has the word "transmission," on the sign, I make a mental point to steer clear of it too, although I've been told there are some good ones in town. I guess if you check with your buds or the Better Business Bureau you can get a list of them.

Be that as it may, it was with great relief I learned the auto craft shop does transmission work. Of course for the Soldier who is broken down, downtown, that thought might not occur to him, especially if the wrecker service he calls is taking kickbacks from a certain garage — "hey, I know just the place to take your car. They do great work, reasonable prices." I don't trust those people either, so another relief — the auto craft shop has a contract with a wrecker company also.

Beginning to get the picture here? If you've got car problems who would you rather have working on your pride and joy — someone Fort Benning stands behind or someone you don't know?

Also, don't go traipsing in to the AER office with a $2,600 bill and ask for a loan. They'll ask you for an estimate from the auto craft shop. That's one way to ensure Soldiers don't get ripped off and one way to make sure AER money isn't being used to keep some sleaze shop in business.

I hope my car never falls apart, but if it does, I'm glad there's someone I can rely on to make sure I don't get taken for a ride putting it back together again.

And oh by the way. Before you do go searching for a place to take your vehicle, make sure to check the off-limits places. Businesses make this list for a reason.

St. Paddy's Day blessing for Soldiers

commentary

I have to say there is only one day out of the year where I really appreciate the fact that I have to wear BDUs — St. Patrick's Day.

When I was in high school, St. Patrick's Day wasn't really a holiday for me, rather a day of fear and pain.

It never failed on the only day of the year where you are supposed to wear green I would end up picking the one thing in my closet that wasn't green. I would walk into school with a dumb smile on my face, completely unaware of what was coming next.

And then it would happen. Without warning they would come at me from all directions. Ruthless and unwavering, the pinching would go on all day long. Even tears of pain weren't enough to stop the torture.

Of course, I would always try to get out of the ritual pinchings by proclaiming that I was wearing green, it was just no one could see it. Then if that failed (which it usually did) I would resort to doing what the rest of the other non-Irish, non-green wearing fools would do — paint a piece of tape green and wear it proudly. But even that didn't work all of the time.

Now those days are a thing of the past. No longer do I have to strain my brain the night before to make sure I wear something green, because that's a given. And no longer do I come home sore from hours of abuse by my peers.

Since, I've joined the Army I have been able to enjoy St. Paddy's Day and all it's festivities. Not only that, but I've taken more of an interest in the holiday and actually took the time to find out what all the hoopla is about.

Contrary to popular belief, St. Patrick's Day isn't held in honor of that cute little leprechaun from the cereal commercials. There really was a man named St. Patrick who lived around 400 A.D. He was a bishop who traveled to celtic countries preaching the gospel.

What St. Patrick is best known for is driving the snakes out of Ireland, or so they say. There are many different accounts of what actually happened, and so much of history and legend are intertwined it is hard to know what is true and what isn't. But, the tale states that St. Patrick stood upon a hill and used a wooden staff to drive all of Ireland's serpents into the sea.

And while it is true to this day there are no snakes in Ireland, the story is actually more of a symbol of what St. Patrick accomplished. Back in the days, serpents were a symbol of paganism and because St. Patrick was known for converting a great number of pagans to Christianity that is probably how the story came about.

I'm not completely sure why they decided to make it a holiday, but the Irish have been celebrating it for thousands of years. Frankly, I think it is just an excuse to get together to party and drink green beer.

It's all a bit amazing to me that one guy could cause such a fuss. But, I will admit that St. Patrick's Day isn't such a bad holiday. It can actually be pretty fun when you don't have to constantly shield yourself from people's little pinchers.

Women propel military to greater heights

In recognition of Women's History Month, the month of March is dedicated to observing the contributions and sacrifices women have made throughout American history.

The theme for this year's observance is "An Extraordinary Century for Women — Now, Imagine the Future!"

Throughout American history, women have shown the pioneering spirit and leadership in a variety of diverse arenas. Absolutely no part of American history is complete without addressing and recognizing the contributions of women.

From Susan B. Anthony, who fought for voting and equal rights for women, to Amelia Earhart, who bravely took the skies to advance aviation science; women have put their stamp on America.

Women have served proudly within the American military. While not widely known, women served in the Army during the Revolutionary War under the command of Gen. George Washington.

Women also served during the Civil War. Harriet Tubman served as a Soldier and a nurse and was a leader of the Underground Railroad. Women have continued to serve proudly and honorably in every conflict since.

The women of today, both military and Department of the Army civilians are propelling our military to new heights.

Thousands of women have and are, serving our nation throughout the world, which lets us know that this has been "An Extraordinary Century for Women — Now, Imagine the Future!"

The Bayonet wants community input

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

We get a lot of feedback from readers, and we appreciate your letters, story ideas and comments. We appreciate the positive comments, and we do our best to address the negative ones.

As Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, we are dedicated to giving you the most complete coverage possible. In order to do this, we rely on members of our audience to keep us informed about their units' or directorates' activities.

Coverage of events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include brigade-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

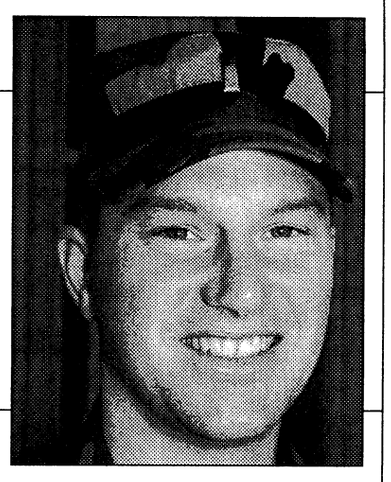
We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the brigade level, check presentations and group photos.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.



Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road if desired. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

Transmission trouble leaves Soldier out of gear

Officer accuses retailer of bad business practices

Pfc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff writer

After being told he needed repairs on the transfer case of his 1987 Ford Bronco II, Capt. Anthony Quinn did just what he was told by a Columbus tire retailer.

He drove his truck to a nearby transmission shop on Victory Drive for service. Little did he know when he drove his vehicle onto the lot Feb. 7 he would not be driving it off.

Quinn, who is assigned to the 4th Ranger Training Battalion as a platoon instructor, spent the next 10 days balancing his military career and his battle to get his truck back.

The problem, Quinn said, began the day after he took his truck to the transmission center for repairs.

"I waited and waited for a call from the shop to tell me what was wrong with the transfer case and what could be done to fix it," Quinn said. "After waiting 'til after noon, I contacted them myself to find out what the status was of my vehicle."

During that call, Quinn said he agreed for the shop to begin fixing the problem without signing a service agreement or contract. "It was just verbal," he noted.

Visits to the business Feb. 10-11 and 14 returned no guarantees on service or a completion date of the transfer case project.

Five days after Quinn delivered his vehicle to the shop, he again returned to the Victory Drive repairer to discover a bushing was the hold-up in the project and that his truck would be finished by the end of the day.

When Quinn went to pick up his truck at 4:30 p.m., he found that no work had been completed on the Bronco and the transfer case was still not installed on the vehicle.

Quinn demanded the company pay for a rental car for his inconvenience, but again his request went unanswered.

"I told them if I couldn't get a rental car then I wanted my vehicle drivable or not," he said. "And I told them I wanted my money back as well."

An argument ensued about moving the vehicle and how if moved the warranty of all the parts would be voided.

The argument continued, and as the clock passed 5 p.m., the manager of the business told Quinn it would be tomorrow before anything could be done.

That is when Quinn called for the assistance of the Columbus Police Department.

But Quinn's quest for help was not beneficial as police officials told him the matter was civil in nature rather than a criminal matter. Their hands were tied.

After arriving at 8:45 a.m. the next morning, the service shop manager told Quinn he would refund him his money and did not want his business.

Quinn's truck was towed to a nearby facility where he said mechanics told him the transfer case was in working order prior to the work at the Victory Drive retailer. The only damage to the transfer case was done by the service rendered.

That damage has led Quinn to pursue possible action against the retailer both through the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board and with the Columbus Better Business Bureau.

"I just don't want this to happen to someone else," Quinn said. "Initially I wanted compensation for my time, but I have given up on that. Now I just want to see that other Soldiers don't get treated the way I did."

Leonard Crain Jr., president of the Columbus Better Business Bureau, said Quinn's complaint was not the first the consumer-watch group had received on the repair shop.

"The bureau has received numerous complaints on this particular transmission shop," Crain said. "All of which the owner of the business has not yet responded to."

Although complaints against the shop continue to surface, Crain said the shop has recently vowed to work with the bureau to answer all bad business queries logged against them.

"The owner of the business said he did not know he was supposed to respond," Crain said. "He has now agreed to work with us in sorting out the confusion of the accusations filed against the repair shop."

Vehicle repair claims are the number one consumer complaint according to a report from the Association of Consumer Agency Administrators, but Crain said a majority of those complaints could be stymied if consumers would have done their homework before taking their car to be repaired.

"Vehicle repair is just like any other major purchase," he said. "You cannot go into it blind."

Crain suggests consumers check with their local better business bureau to see if complaints have been filed against the establishment. He also suggests that an inquiry of friends and locals about the reputation of the business in question is usually beneficial.

"In this case Quinn did not do his homework and he suffered," he said. "If he would have, he would have known the past history of the business in question."

Assistant manger of the Victory Drive transmission shop, who said his name is David Davis, said the business practices of the facility are in line with the highest standards of quality and customer service.

"We service thousands of transmissions a year without complaints," he said. "People leave here all the time satisfied with their service including Soldiers."

Davis said although they do service thousands of transmissions annually, sometimes it is tough for consumers to stay calm when parts have to be ordered, and they are forced to wait for those to arrive.

"They are already upset that they are out of an automobile and their life has to change until they get their car or truck back," he said. "I know that — I have been there."

The complaint against the repair facility will be heard during next quarter's Armed forces Disciplinary Board, a group of military leaders authorized to take formal action against a civilian run facility.

Presently the facility is not one of the two establishments listed on the off-limits list for Soldiers in the Columbus area.

Soldiers wanting to research a retailer can contact the Better Business Bureau at 324-0712 or the Army Community Services Consumer Affairs division at 545-4042.

New trainees, vets join forces for regimental ceremony

Participants say farewell, welcome incoming honorary commander

In basic training less than a week, troops from 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, stood on Pomeroy Field at Sand Hill Tuesday morning under the watchful eyes of veterans who served with the regiment during World War II and Vietnam.

The battalion participated in the 47th Infantry Regiment Association's change of authority ceremony.

The outgoing honorary commander, retired Col. Edward Thurman turned the job over to retired Brig. Gen. Douglas S. Smith.

"You've got to believe there is no more honorable profession than being a Soldier. Congratulations to you for choosing it as yours," Thurman said to the Soldiers in formation on the field and those sitting in the bleachers during the ceremony.

He then asked them to remember the warriors who went before them carrying the regimental colors.

"There are tens of thousands who have served under these colors who aren't here today. Our duty is to make sure their legacy is passed down through the generations."

Smith, who now lives in Niceville, Fla., commanded the 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., 9th Infantry Division, in Vietnam in 1969.

"These battle streamers don't stand for winning some softball tournament. They are there because of a lot of blood, sweat and tears."

The "Raider" regiment has a long lineage dating back to 1917. It participated in five campaigns in WWI, eight in WWII and 11 during Vietnam.

Although they have only been in the regiment a few days, and in the Army just a few weeks, the basic training Soldiers will still be expected to carry on the traditions of the unit, Smith said.

"These Soldiers from WWII and Vietnam are looking to them to get the job done today," Smith said after the ceremony. "We wish them well and want to help them."

Members traveled from across the country to attend the ceremony and visit with fellow veterans.

William H. Horan didn't have to drive far from his Columbus home. He and wife, Norma, arrived early and were looking forward to seeing other WWII veterans.

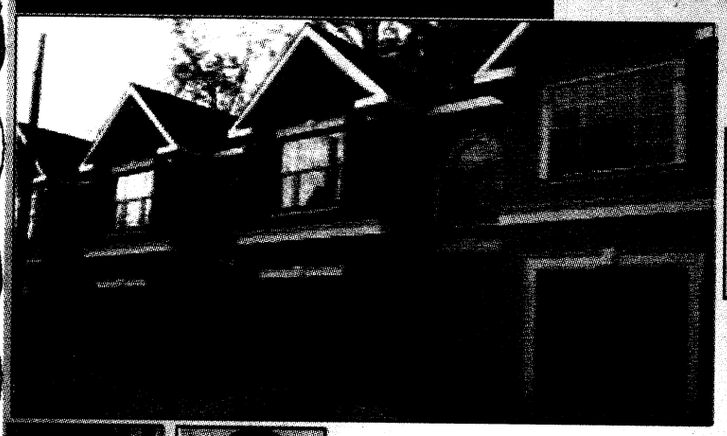
"This will be like a reunion today, if they all come," Norma said.

Chester Jordan, 78, flew from Baton Rouge, La.; and Jack Collier drove two days from St. Louis.

Retired Command Sgt. Major Kenneth Meyer, 79, flew from Texas. He served for eight years as the honorary command sergeant major of the association.

"I gave it up when I reached 78," he said.

Retired Brig. Gen. Ed Maness, 80, drove from Florida for the ceremony. He commanded the 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., as a 25-year-old.



"I grew up in this regiment," he said. "It was my home away from home during WWII, and I went through all its campaigns. The 47th has always been dear to me."

Post Inspector General warns Soldiers about car abuse

Stopping at ATMs not authorized in government cars

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

The Office of the Inspector General is on the lookout for the misuse of government-owned vehicles on Fort Benning.

Just from knowing the regulations and keeping an eye open for GOVs in areas they should not be, Soldiers who work for the IG are spotting frequent violations.

"We are finding government vehicles are being misused a lot," said Maj. Peter Mount, chief inspections branch, office of the Inspector General. "The violators may not be aware they are in violation, but the bottom line is GOVs are to be used for official duties. They are not to be used for personal use such as swinging by the PX to pick something up.

"Frequently, we see them at places where they are not supposed to be such as the PX, Burger King, the post office and the banks," Mount said. "We have even seen them at Soldiers' personal quarters."

Government vehicles must not be used for transportation to, or be parked at, commissaries, PXs, including concessions, bowling alleys, officer and NCO clubs or any nonappropriated fund activities unless personnel using the vehicles are on official government business or temporary duty travel, according to Army Regulation 58-1, the regulation governing the use of GOVs.

Being in uniform and using the vehicle during duty hours does not, by itself, constitute official business.

"If we see someone where they probably shouldn't be, we will stop them and ask if they actually have official business at the location," said Master Sgt. James Cissell, assistant IG. "If they say they do, we ask for proof, such as a receipt from a government credit card. If they do not, we make them aware of the regulation."

"If we see frequent misuse of GOVs a lot in one unit, we will definitely call the commander and make sure he is aware of the regulations regarding the use of the vehicles," according to Army Regulation 58-1, which is the regulation governing the use of GOVs, Mount said.

Stopping the misuse of GOVs can be as easy as an on-the-spot correction. It can also bring more harsh penalties.

Civilians who use or authorize the use of a GOV for use other than official purposes, shall be suspended for not less than one month without compensation, according to AR 58-1. They shall be suspended for a longer period or summarily removed from office if circumstances warrant.

Soldiers who use or authorize the use of a GOV, except for official use, may be disciplined under provisions of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, or other administrative procedures deemed appropriate.

Not only is unauthorized use against regulations, it is also expensive.

"We lease all of the vehicles from the General Services Administration that charges us per month and per mile," said Phyllis P. Peacock, supervisory motor vehicle dispatcher. "It adds extra miles and takes away from someone who needs the vehicle for an official mission."

"Commanders and leaders have a responsibility to ensure government vehicles in their command are properly dispatched and controlled to ensure proper use," said Col. Ron Greene II, post inspector general. "NCOs and officers must also make on-the-spot corrections where violations are suspected."

Commanders talk, practice safety during Safety Stand Down Day

Personnel are briefed on risk assessment

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, Fort Benning's Commanding General, designated March 9 as a Safety Stand Down Day. Units were to dedicate the day solely to safety awareness in relation to on-duty and off-duty activities.

"Recent serious accidents on this installation dictate the need for us to pause to assess the risks we face every day," Le Moyne said in a March 7 memo announcing the stand down.

Two Fort Benning Soldiers died in February — one from injuries suffered when he fell from the obstacle course during training at Sand Hill; the other from alcohol poisoning after attending a weekend party.

Commanders held briefings all over post, and the topics addressed included heat injuries, alcohol abuse, suicide prevention, water safety, vehicle operations and inspection of training devices.

The stand down gave units the chance to focus on safe operating procedures as they transition into the warmer spring and summer months.

"It (the stand down) is a time to step back and take a deep breath," Col. John Latimer, Chief of Staff, said. "It gives us a chance to appraise, equip and prepare for the summer training surge."

> "We are not where we want to be on safety. But thank goodness we are not where we used to be."
> — Col. Frank Helmick
> RTB commander

For example, Latimer said a number of briefings were distributed to units, including one on hyponatremia, or water intoxication. A Soldier at Fort Jackson, S.C., died in January from the condition — a combination of too much water and not enough sodium in the blood.

In July 1997 a Fort Benning trainee died after consuming too much water. It was the Army's first known death attributed to hyponatremia.

The Army updated its fluid replacement guidelines last year. They are based on activity level as well as temperature. For example, one quart of water per hour is the maximum recommended water intake when temperatures reach above 90 degrees.

Brigade commanders and command sergeants major attended an afternoon briefing conducted by Col. Frank Helmick, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade. The 45-minute session was designed especially for the safety day and illustrated how the RTB administers high-risk training.

The RTB commander said he stood before his fellow brigade commanders and stated up front: "We are not where we need to be on safety. We are not where we want to be on safety. But thank goodness, we are not where we used to be."

In 1995 four Ranger students died from hypothermia during swamp training in Florida.

After that incident, additional safety systems and procedures were established, and during the briefing Helmick discussed several of those including risk management worksheets, daily risk assessments and instructor certification.

During the last 18 months representatives from several outside agencies have observed Ranger training to see how the systems have been implemented, Helmick said.

They include the General Accounting Office, the U.S. Army Safety Center, Naval specialists and a team of officers, civilians and safety experts appointed by Gen. John Abrams, TRADOC Commander, to assess high-risk training.

Fort Benning has another Safety Stand Down scheduled for May 25 before the Memorial Day holiday weekend and the official start of summer.

courts-martial

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

At a general court-martial Feb. 3, Sgt. Earl M. Capers Jr., A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, was convicted of rape of a child under the age of 16 years of age.

He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of private (E-1), to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be confined for 27 years, and to be discharged from the service with a dishonorable discharge.

At a general court-martial Jan. 24, Staff Sgt. Ronnie C. Frison, Service Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), was convicted of indecent assault.

He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of private (E-1), to forfeit $1,400 pay per month for 20 months, to be confined for 20 months, and to be discharged from the service with a dishonorable discharge.

At a general court-martial Nov. 3, Pvt. Rafael Guzman, C Co., 2nd Bn., 58th Inf., ITB, was arraigned on a charge of rape.

The accused having been arraigned, the proceedings were terminated Jan. 12 because the Convening Authority withdrew and dismissed the court-martial charge and its specification.

At a general court-martial Oct. 7, Lt. Col. Jerardo Reyes, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, USA, was convicted of indecent acts upon the body of a female under 16 years of age. He was sentenced to forfeit $1,000 pay per month for eight months, to be confined for eight months, and to be reprimanded.

New washers make life easier, more troop-friendly

Spc. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers across the Infantry Training Brigade can now look forward to quicker weapons cleaning thanks to some new weapons parts washers recently installed at all of the starships.

While the washers could cut weapons cleaning time by 30 to 50 percent, there will be several other benefits in the long term, said Michael Nuckols, an environmental specialist for the Department of Public Works.

"These are a lot safer for the Soldiers to use because there is less exposure to harmful chemicals," he said. "It will also help with air quality because it doesn't put off as much off-gassing."

Nuckols said saving Army dollars will also result from using the new equipment.

"We expect to save probably $1,500 per year, per unit for waste disposal over the old method," he explained. "It will probably save the units 40 to 80 hours they would have to use otherwise turning in drums of solvent."

And those savings can't be beat, especially since the more than $35,000 for the machines came from TRADOC funding.

"There's a pollution prevention program and the environmental funding channel available through TRADOC," said Nuckols. "If we can show a way to provide costs savings, increased worker safety and a decrease in waste disposal, the headquarters will fund certain types of pollution prevention projects like this."

"We've had a couple of weapon washers at the Ranger regiment for the past four years and they really liked them. So we recently applied to funding to purchase some more of these," he said.

Soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment said the weapon washers come in handy..

"I use them every time I clean my weapon," said Pfc. William Ortiz, assistant armorer for Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt. "It eliminates using the brushes and swab pads, and it breaks down the carbon quickly."

Master Sgt. Alan Boswell, Infantry Training Brigade environmental NCO, said there are many reasons the brigade will benefit from using the washers.

"It will save us money in rags, disposal of hazardous materials and the man-hours involved in cleaning a weapon," Boswell said. "This system will be much more cost effective over the old system. Now we don't have to buy break free fluid, the only cost we are going to have is the CLP after the weapon is cleaned.

"Each Soldier, for the 14 weeks they are in basic training and AIT, spends 101 hours per cycle on the weapon. We are also looking at this machine cutting that down by one third to a half," he added.

Considering each unit trains 4,400 Soldiers per year and costs an average of $25 per hour to train, the man-hour savings is projected to save ITB $363,000 per unit annually.

"It's great because we are going to save money at the brigade and drill sergeants could have up to 50 more hours per cycle to train Soldiers. It's really cost effective for us," Boswell said.

Cadre at the units said they think the machines will benefit everyone in the units, especially the basic trainees.

"I think it will make the weapon maintenance easier for the trainees," said Staff Sgt. Glenn Greanya, a drill sergeant for 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment. Greanya said he thinks the machines could save Soldiers time later on the ranges by helping them keep the weapons clean so they can fire properly.

Bill: Could allow Soldiers to transfer benefits to family

House, said he has already begun breaking down those barriers that stopped the bill last year, and has also drafted an additional bill that would boost GI Bill monetary benefits.

Quinn has drawn together a coalition of congressional, higher education and veterans' action groups to speak out on the needed improvements of the GI Bill.

The bill as it reads now, he said, does not give military men and women enough funding to attend college.

The maximum GI Bill benefits a veteran can receive is $4,824 annually, but the cost of attending a four-year institution is nearly $9,000 annually.

"We need to close the gap between the current GI Bill allowance and the cost of higher education," he said.

The boost in benefits would also be a benefit to the ever-increasing challenge of recruiting new troops into the ranks of America's military, he said.

"During this time of such a good economy, the GI Bill is not viewed by many recruits as the incentive it once was when it was developed in the '40s," said Maj. Michelle Martin-Hung, public information officer, U.S. Army Recruiting Command in Fort Knox, Ky. "Anytime we can boost benefits and make the service more attractive, recruiting and retention will continue to increase."

"Our veterans deserve all we can give them," Quinn said. "And what better to offer them but a decent education to further their future success.

"We need to give this to our veterans, and we need to do it this year," he said.

Protesters: Will appear in court who were digging on the front lawn of the school were all individuals who took part part in November's demonstration and were on the post exclusion roster," said Master Sgt. David Jones, NCOIC traffic division, provost marshal's office. "The material we confiscated, including 12 crosses and a small coffin, also appeared to be from the November protest as well."

The six protesters were apprehended at the school and will face federal charges of criminal trespass, destruction of government property and disorderly conduct, he said.

A court date has not yet been set for the six, but Jones said they, like the other protesters found guilty Friday, will face up to six months in federal prison and up to a $5,000 fine.

"We have no problems with these individuals or any others exercising their First Amendment rights, but with those rights come responsibilities," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, law enforcement division. "When they infringe on other's rights or damage property, that is where the problem begins."

Columbus members what his unit does each day.

"This is a good opportunity so we can tie in with the people of Columbus and the leadership," he said. "We are a part of their community, and we're proud of that fact."

Getting an inside look at the post will gives the leaders an experience that will help them better understand the Soldiers in the community, said Peggy Martin, Phenix City mayor.

"This visit has been fantastic, I'm just awed by everything," she said. "I'm so proud of our Army and these young men and women. They have the ability and they want to be their best as Soldiers."

"I want to be able to share this experience with the Phenix City counsel and really encourage them to come out and see for themselves where their tax dollars are going for the protection of the citizens."

Walls added, taking that information back will benefit everyone in the community.

"Anytime we can continue to break barriers down so folks have a more comfortable feeling about the military and what it's about, it helps us because we are going to be dealing with these people," he explained. "Because more than half of our Soldiers live off the post, it's important that they understand what a Soldier's life consists of and what the families go through. Soldier issues will come up across their desks at some point. We open the post up to them so they can see what goes on here."

3rd Brigade prepares for National Training Center

Spc. Michael Maddox
Assistant editor

The Soldiers of 3rd Brigade have been on a nonstop roller coaster ride that began in February and won't stop until the middle of May.

Starting with the Marne Focus training exercise at Fort Stewart, Ga., to a sea deployment in Savannah, Ga., and then heading out to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., the Soldiers have been on the move constantly.

While it's keeping the brigade Soldiers busy, the effort they have put into their jobs has definitely been paying off in lessons learned, said Col. Anthony Cucolo, 3rd Brigade commander.

"Marne Focus was great," he said. "Just like at NTC, we arrived, and started out a little rough.

"We found out what we didn't know. Once we found out what we didn't know, we worked to make small improvements everyday," he said. "By the end of the exercise, we were smoking, I thought we were doing great. We started out seeing what we had to fix and we fixed it."

Spc. Joshua Braxton, Headquarters Service Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, agreed. He said Soldiers in his unit used the training to fine tune how they complete their mission — cutting back on down time.

"We did a lot of training out there," he said. "It helped us work out a lot before we go to NTC. We saw how things will work, and how we could cut down on wasted time. It really helped us out a lot."

Marne Focus ended March 20 and the brigade has since been performing recovery operations by making sure everything was accounted for and ready to go to the port of Savannah and on to NTC.

The Soldiers got a short break between the movements, but it's been tough, Cucolo said.

"It's been tough because we've been doing split operations. It's been nonstop, but the Soldiers are doing great," he said.

The brigade will begin training at NTC April 9 through May 12 and it promises to be a great learning opportunity, said Cucolo. He added that he's excited about the rotation for several reasons.

"This NTC rotation will be one of the largest they've ever had. I'll have 5,600 Soldiers coming from six installations," he said. "It will also be the first NTC rotation with Apache Longbows. I'll have a whole battalion of Longbows. I've also got one mech battalion from right here at the hill, one tank battalion from Stewart and an air assault task force from Fort Campbell — it'll be great.

"It's also one of the first Limited Conversion Division 21 rotations where the armor and mech battalions don't have four companies, they have three," Cucolo said.

The commander said he is looking forward to trying out the new organization of LCD 21.

"I want to see what this limited conversion division outfit can do. I'm going to push it as far as I can," he said. "For example, in the defense with four companies in each battalion, you have a certain number of options on how to defend.

"With only three companies, I have to think very carefully about what size reserve I pick because I have fewer units to work with. Because of that, I'm thinking the best defense will be a mobile defense where I have fewer fixed, dug-in forces, and more moving forces," he said. "That's going to be a challenge for us — figuring out how to fight with this organization that has fewer numbers.

"It's only a challenge because we're used to four companies each, but we'll figure it out," Cucolo said.

Even with the new configuration, Cucolo said the brigade will still be able to work on the basics.

"We'll focus on how we fight as a brigade. This is where we work it out. This is where we come up with our tactics, techniques and procedures," he said.

"This is the closest thing we have to war. If you do well there, I firmly believe you're ready to fight in combat," he said. "I think it's one of the best ways to prepare for combat. So we are going to focus on being ready for war through training at NTC."

EIB: Tests Infantry Soldiers

"These are the skills needed to keep the Soldiers alive in combat," said Sgt. 1st Class Edward Lewis, C Co., 1st Bn.., 15th Inf. Regt., on the items covered during the intensive Infantry skills test. "That is why it is so important to get all of our Soldiers qualified."

That importance is not one taken lightly during the training testing process said Spc. Matthew Ephremn who described the battle for the badge as one that is more about pride than knowledge.

"Sure this is about knowing what it takes to fight and win in combat, but to me its more about pride," said Ephremn who is a trying his hand at the EIB test for the second year in a row. "Last year I had trouble with NBC and land navigation. Those were the two things that put me out, but this year I feel more prepared."

Ephremn is one of the many Soldiers who fall victim to one of the test's most stringent rules: Two unsatisfactory performances at any two stations disqualifies the Soldier from earning his badge.

But like many who fall prey to the rule, Ephremn returned to the testing with an increased sense of awareness and readiness for the test.

"To be honest, when I got here last year, I just wasn't ready," he said. "I had only put in three days of training before the training week and I wasn't prepared.

"This year I learned from my mistakes from last year. I have been out land navigating and working on the skills I need to pass this thing," he said.

Ephremn wasn't the only one to benefit from his mistakes last year.

"Being here last year gave me an idea of what to look for during the testing and how to prepare for it," he said. "Coming into this this year I knew how to prepare and so did the rest of my squad I helped get ready for this.

"I am a lot more confident this year and after telling my squad members what to expect, I think they are too," he said.

The key to EIB success is readiness and pretesting, he said.

The testing week will start Monday, said Sgt. 1st Class Anthony B. Fowler, A Co., 1st Bn, 11th Inf. Regt.., who is a grader for the testing.

"That readiness brings with it motivation and discipline for the Soldiers out here testing," Fowler said. "And that combination makes for a more confident Soldier. I think gives him a better chance of success out here during testing week."

While the results of the training will not be revealed until after next week's naming of the Army's newest expert Infantrymen, Lewis said he can offer one piece of advice to Soldiers testing next week.

"If a Soldier listens to the grader and practices before he comes here, he will have no problem passing the test successfully," said the expert Infantryman. "Basically, if they rely upon their training they will have no problems here."

Expert discusses fighting fuel

Better diet, physical fitness key to success, she said

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers tasked to prepare for war at a moment's notice must be fit-to-fight mentally and physically, and staying in top fighting shape requires a well-rounded physical training routine and a proper diet.

For Soldiers, physical training is a given, but for the Soldiers with the 2145 Garrison Support Detachment Saturday's training was on the second element of being fit to fight — eating healthy.

So how do Soldiers prepare a proper diet and eat right?

Kay Cravon, a dietitian at West Georgia Metabolic Center in Columbus said saturated fats and high sodium diets should be avoided to maintain a healthy diet.

There are three types of fats — polyunsaturated, monounsaturated and saturated fats —but one, saturated fats, is really bad for you, she said. Saturated fats are found in foods like milk, eggs, meet and other foods that come from animals.

Less than 30 percent of calories should come from fats, but in today's fast-paced world that number is increasing with the availability of fast foods.

Fast foods are very high in fat. Cravon gave an example that a fast food hamburger may contain almost the entire 30 percent of fat calories.

While avoiding fast food and other calorie-loaded foods may be a good way to battle the bulge, Cravon said some normal myths may not help in the battle.

A lot of people try to be good about their intake of calories from fat, she said, so they use margarine instead of butter, but margarine actually has about the same amount of calories.

One way people cut calories received from fats is to eat low fat foods. However, low-fat foods often times are high in sodium. Salts, which are a high-sodium source, are added to replace flavor lost from the fats. Also, the more processed a food is the more sodium it has, she said.

A low-sodium diet is 2,000 milligrams a day. And adding butter and salt to movie popcorn pretty much tops out the sodium and fat levels that are needed, she said.

Although some people think seasoned salt may contain less sodium, it is still salt and contains the same amount of sodium, she said.

While avoiding fat-loaded foods is a good way to stay healthy, it is only a step in the right direction, she said.

Maintaining a healthy weight level is important, especially for Soldiers who need to be ready to fight and win at a moments notice, she said.

An easy way to figure how many calories are needed to stay a constant weight, take your weight and multiply that by 10. Take that number and multiply it by an activity level of 1.2 to two. A person who has an activity level of 1.2 is a couch-potato, Cravon said. That raises to 1.3 which is walking three times a week. AL 1.4 is walking briskly every day. AL 1.5 is jogging every day, and the AL increases to two, which is a marathon runner training every day. That final number is how many calories are needed to maintain a certain weight. To lose weight Cravon recommended to drop 500 of those calories.

Cravon's effort to teach nutrition is part of her campaign of fitness during National Nutrition Month as well as National Diabetes Awareness month.

Cravon and Ann Blair, a registered nurse and clinic coordinator for the West Georgia Metabolic Center tested the blood-sugar levels of the Soldiers.

"If a person has not fasted and their blood-sugar level is over 140 or if they have fasted and their level is over 126 they run a risk for being diabetic," Cravon said. "While fasting, if the test is administered in a doctors' office the blood-sugar level is over 126 twice, the patient is diabetic. There is no such thing as borderline diabetic."

"I never had an idea about all the fat and sodium that is found in foods," said Maj. Eric Ehrmann, operations officer for the 2145 Garrison Support Detachment. "I took the presentation to heart an am going to watch what I will be eating.

"We are learning how to eat better as part of our training and health awareness," Ehrmann said. "Tying this in with PT will keep us strong and able to fit wartime needs. Everyone who was at the presentation said they were going to be watching what they would be eating."

Soldiers undergo test

Training brigade Soldiers take on competition

1st Lt. Christian Knutzen
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

Good things are happening down at the Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill. New recruits are getting an old twist on new training.

"Old" Soldiers traditionally, perhaps habitually, complain that new 11Bs do not receive the same training that instilled the true grit and grime in the dogfaced Soldier of yesteryear.

However, B Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, is taking the program of instruction back to the basics in order to instill more old-school pride.

The commander and first sergeant tasked their 12 drill sergeants to make the training days tougher, more competitive and, of course, safer.

One of the best examples of this mentality is B Co.'s Squad Competition Day.

First organized in April 1999, and designed after the Best Ranger Competition with events drawn from the basic training regime, squad competition is one of the many pinnacle events for these new Soldiers.

The day began at 4 a.m. with a Army Physical Fitness Test with squad scores tallied and averaged.

Next was a timed equipment change, followed by a full-pack rucksack run to the training area.

The squads make one run through a confidence course on a go or no-go basis. This was immediately followed by a timed run through the obstacle course. The winning time by fourth squad, fourth platoon of six minutes 43 seconds.

As soon as the squad low crawls over the finish line and reforms, the drill sergeant assess a casualty. The squad litter carried this Soldier back to the company physical training field where a "smoke-out" began.

Each squad had four minutes to do as many sit-ups as they can with Soldiers "tagging" each other out in order to maintain as fast pace as possible. This "smoke-out" involved sit-ups, push-ups and pull-ups.

Fourth platoon scored well with first squad scoring 349 sit-ups and third squad scoring 228 push-ups. Third platoon's third and fourth squads tied during the pull-up competition with a score of 105.

The final event was a bracketed tug-of-war won again by fourth platoon, fourth squad.

After 16 hours of sweating, yelling and pushing their bodies to the physical envelope, the Soldiers mustered enough strength to build a crescendo "hooah" as the commanding officer read the places of each squad.

The squad competition enforced all of the Army values, especially loyalty to fellow Soldiers, which is arguably one of the strongest tenets of the "old" Soldier.

Instructors evaluate units

Sgt. 1st Class William Lawson
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Mortar Instructors from D Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, recently returned from Germany after evaluating one of the first maneuver exercises in the country in nearly 10 years.

Maj. Gen. John Abizaid, 1st Infantry Division commander, requested that instructors from the Infantry Center come to Germany to evaluate his mortar platoons in a maneuver exercise.

The exercise consisted of moving their vehicles through towns and the German countryside.

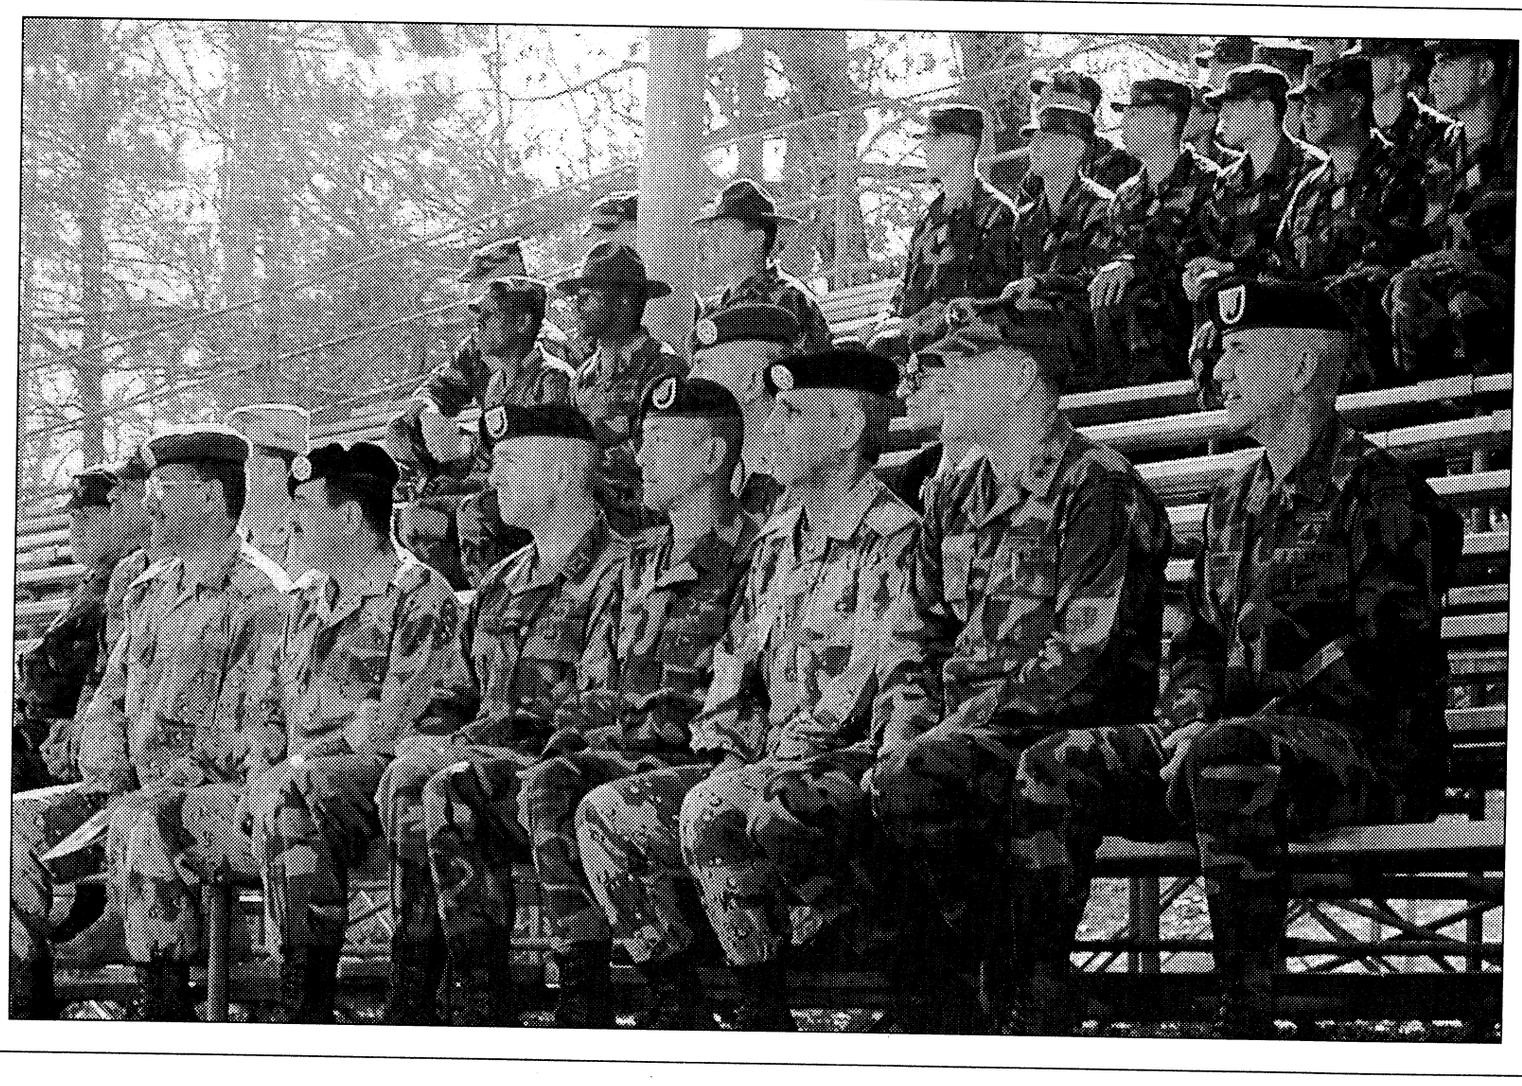
It's been nearly 10 years since Germany has allowed U.S. forces to maneuver throughout the country with limited restriction.

Sgt. 1st Class William Lawson, Staff Sgt. Robert Croak and Sgt. Milton Smith of D Co. left for Germany Feb. 8 to evaluate 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry mortar sections in a tactical environment taking them from Schweinfurt to Bamberg, Germany through March 4.

The exercise provided an opportunity for the mortar section leader to apply what they have learned from the Fort Benning Infantry Mortar Leaders Course in a combat scenario in the German countryside.

"With the pressure of maneuvering down narrow streets, and with the disagreement of Mother Nature, the leaders felt an added pressure under the watchful eye of the mortar instructors," said Sgt. Milton Smith.

Throughout the exercise Lt. Col. H.R. McMaster, 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry commander, used all assets of the squadron.



Assets, such as the OH-58 D Kiowa Warrior helicopter down to the dismounted Soldier on the ground, were used to conduct indirect fire missions on enemy positions.

Units from the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 1st Infantry Division were used as the OPFOR.

Sgt. John Briskey of C Troop, 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry, said this was a great opportunity for him, as a young leader, to experience maneuvering as a cavalry unit.

"Most mortar sections in Germany never get the opportunity to maneuver in unfamiliar terrain," said Briskey. "This enhanced my knowledge as a mortar leader and I know it helped my Soldiers gain a greater aspect to what mortars do other than firing on a normal mortar firing range."

Briskey added that he knew he would make mistakes during this exercise, but thanks to the mortar instructors from Fort Benning, he would be able to overcome his errors and apply the instructors' suggestions.

Creative team takes top honors at regionals

Students put spin on classic Excalibur, walk away with gold in Odyssey of the Mind challenge

Members of the Faith Middle School Odyssey of the Mind team rehearse their satirical presentation of King Arthur's Excalibur. The team won Saturday's regional OM competition.

Toilet plungers and soda can tabs? Discarded bed sheets and Christmas tinsel? Can this be the stuff of which legends are made?

Students from Faith Middle School used these items and many more Saturday, to rewrite history and poke fun at one of literature's most enduring legends, King Arthur's Excalibur.

Wearing kilts made of garbage bags and period costumes lavishly adorned with candy, the Odyssey of the Mind team won first place in the regional competition at Spencer High School.

Odyssey of the Mind is a worldwide competition sponsored by Creative Competitions, Inc. It is designed to promote creative problem solving for students from kindergarten to college. Faith students have participated in the competition for 13 years, and they have competed at the world finals 11 times.

"Researchers tell us tomorrow's job market is going to need people who can think 'outside the box,'" said coach Cindy Givens. "This competition is all about getting these students to take the blinders off and look at problems from a different perspective."

Using limited resources, this year's seven-member team was required to present an Arthurian legend as it might have transpired if King Arthur had never existed. They began preparing in October for the annual competition, designing costumes from recycled materials, and creating stage props out of cardboard boxes and paint.

"The rules said we were only allowed to spend $100 on the entire presentation. That alone required a lot of creativity," said Anne Trawick, who served as co-coach with Givens. "But these students have always been known for their creativity, so we knew they would be up to the challenge. Every one of them has contributed something absolutely wonderful."

Seventh-grader Dwain Watts wrote the satirical script and lyrics to songs performed by sixth-grader Abbey Cucolo. Eighth-grader Chris Herold created a bagpipe from discarded table legs. Jacqueline Schafer, also in the eighth grade, designed an elaborate coat of arms using dried leaves and pine cones. Anuarite Mubangu and Clint Loyd, both in seventh grade, and sixth-grader Michael Hutchings, constructed humorous costumes and props.

"The materials for the costumes used up most of our budget, even though a lot of it was recycled," Mubangu said. "To save on expense we just had to get really creative."

After more than five months of preparation, including most weekends, the team had only eight minutes Saturday to perform before a panel of judges.

"So much work goes into this every year. These students are really committed to giving their best and they work night and day to perfect their presentation," Trawick said. "They worked over 50 hours alone on making a tapestry. That attention to detail is what sets them apart."

The OM team will travel to Milledgeville, Ga., to compete in the state competition in April. World competition will be held in Knoxville, Tenn., in May.

Hospital liaison relates to patients

Serious tumor threatens vision, provides insight

Carolyn Bradley assists a patient over the telephone.

She has been there, done that and has the surgical scar to prove it.

And it's her experience as a patient that enables Carolyn Bradley to put herself in the shoes of her clients at Martin Army Community Hospital and help them.

Bradley is a patient representative in the Patient Affairs Liaison office. A sign on the wall of her office says "Little things do matter," and it has become her creed.

"Sometimes it is just a smile to let the patient know that someone cares," she said. "Or it could be as simple as meeting a patient in the hallway who looks lost and helping her find her way. It doesn't have to be this big enormous task to make a person feel better."

Bradley has been a patient wandering in the hallway, and she recalls seven years ago how she looked for friendly faces in the passageways of Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C.

In 1993, Bradley had a tumor removed from her pituitary gland at the base of the brain — but not before months and months of tests, doctors' appointments and referrals.

The symptoms had appeared about 18 months earlier. Prior to that, the mother of four had never had a serious medical problem. But she started feeling tired, not unusual for a woman holding down a full-time job and carrying a full credit load while earning her college degree at Columbus State University.

However, she soon developed a yeast infection in her esophagus. Stranger still, she started to notice a stale tobacco smell wherever she went, which really bothered the non-smoker.

She saw doctors at Fort Benning, then she went to specialists in Columbus and Augusta.

"When they would talk about all the things it could be, the tests would come back negative, which was good. But, still I had no answer to why I was having problems," she said.

Frustration followed the confusion.

When she mentioned the unusual tobacco smell to her allergist at Martin Army, he became suspicious and pored through her records dating back 10 years. He ordered a CAT scan one morning, and by the afternoon told her he thought there was a tumor on her pituitary gland.

A second opinion from a civilian doctor conflicted with his diagnosis, and then she received a third differing view at Walter Reed about what treatment she should have.

"Medicine is not an exact science, and you have to keep searching for someone you feel comfortable with," she said.

Thrift Shop helps tornado victims

Store donations benefit area families

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Officers' Wives' Club Thrift Shop recently donated hundreds of clothing items to tornado victims in Camilla, Ga. More than 200 families benefited from the truck-load of merchandise collected by store employees and volunteers.

After tornadoes ripped through southern Georgia Feb. 14, Thrift Shop employees Judy and Norris Pierce decided to visit the area where hundreds of families were left homeless.

When Thrift Shop employees learned about the mission, they collected 13, 33-gallon bags of clothing donations to send with the Pierces.

"The Thrift Shop often donates clothing, household goods and toys to fire and disaster victims," Norris said. "But this time they just went over and beyond what anybody expected. We were able to make this trip on behalf of the Thrift Shop because they supplied enough items to clothe hundreds of people."

Store manager Lori Lane said the employees and volunteers recognized the urgent need to get assistance to the victims as soon as possible.

"We could have collected clothes and turned them over to any charitable organization that was working in that area, but sometimes that process can take several days. These people were without homes. They could not wait. We wanted to meet their immediate needs," Lane said.

After gathering unclaimed merchandise from the store, the staff began to collect donations from family and friends throughout the area.

"It's our policy to donate items that have not sold and remain unclaimed, but we felt compelled to do more than that," Lane said. "I saw pictures of families standing in

April reception recognizes outstanding installation volunteers

Fort Benning offers more than 2,600 volunteer opportunities

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Volunteer Recognition Reception is from 4-6 p.m., April 25 at the Officers' Club, and Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander, is slated to be on hand to present awards to Fort Benning's outstanding volunteers.

The annual event is an opportunity to recognize volunteers who have distinguished themselves throughout the past year by volunteering their time and talents to various organizations on post.

Installation volunteer coordinator, Jill Crider, said the reception is the culmination of a month-long celebration of April as "Volunteer Recognition Month."

"April is the big push to recognize those that have been filling a need here on Fort Benning," Crider said. "But it's also a time to educate people about the many opportunities out there to volunteer."

Crider said there are currently more than 2,600 volunteer positions available, many of which are part-time or temporary.

"The reality of it is, the need has increased but the number of volunteers has not. We do not have 2,600 volunteers to fill these slots," she said.

"Typically we're finding that a single volunteer is often working in three volunteer activities at once," Crider said.

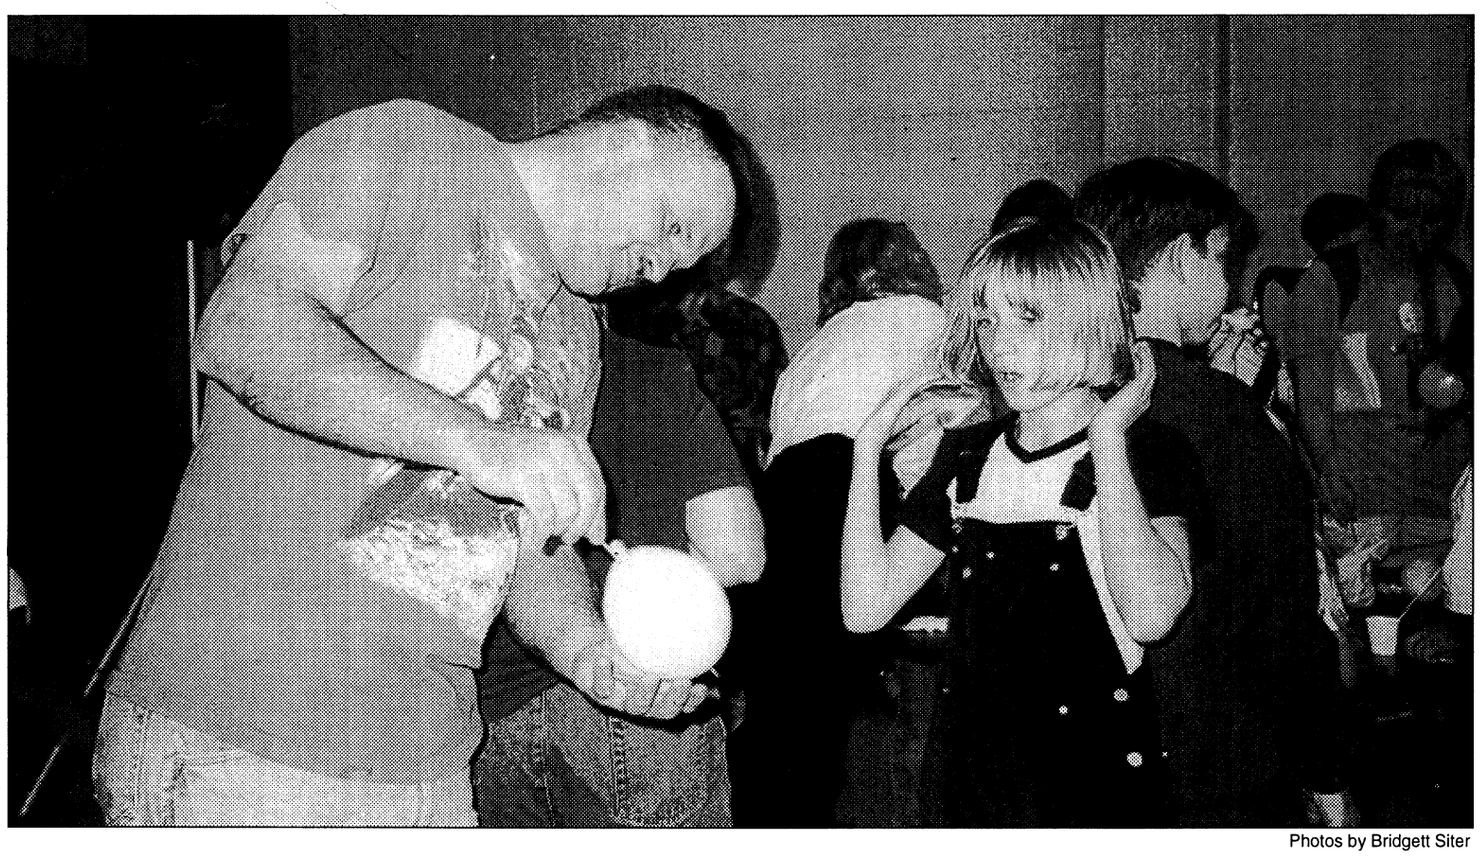
Besides traditional volunteer slots at the schools, hospital and thrift shop, Crider said there are positions available in almost every conceivable area and on every part of the installation.

"We have clerical and receptionist positions open right now," she said. "We need people to help fill bird feeders at Russ Pond." .

"Of course the Red Cross always needs volunteers. There's just no end to what a person could find to get involved in," Crider said. "The challenge is to get people to recognize that they do have something to offer, no matter how non-traditional, even if it's just for one hour here and there."

Crider said that "episodic" volunteers — those that have only a month or two to volunteer — are needed in many areas, such as youth services and other activities around post.

"Temporary residents or wives of visiting students make great coaches because they are not here long enough to seek a paid position. They have the time to give of themselves, she said.



"Stay-at-home moms who want to develop work skills or stay fresh for the job market until their children are older — these make great volunteers," Crider said.

"Volunteering is simply unpaid work experience. It looks great on a resume. It's also a smart way to get training in areas you're not familiar with," she said.

"And it's a great way for retirees to stay active in areas that interest them," she added.

Retiree Billie Galbraith, one of Fort Benning's many retiree volunteers, sa id that after eight years he still enjoys the time he spends volunteering and spending time with the Soldiers in the Tax Center every January to April.

"I've always enjoyed math. After I was injured in Vietnam, I spent the last few years sitting at a desk doing paperwork. This fits right in and I still like doing it."

The magic of science

(Right) First-grader Brittany Hope blows a bean across the table.
Students and their guests visited 10 science stations set up in the cafeteria, each designed to incorporate problem solving and processing skills, like communicating, measuring, predicting and observing.

"This is one of our school-home activities designed to involve siblings and parents as co-teachers," said principal Glenn Hughes. "We're equipping families with experiments they can expand on at home."

Bradley: Takes time for patients

"I can understand how patients get so confused. Which one do you believe? One is saying to have surgery, then another says not to. Even at Walter Reed, I had the same problem. Thank goodness I had a doctor who was persistent," she said referring to her primary care physician who continued to write referrals in search of an answer.

"When patients come in and say they aren't being told what is wrong or the doctors don't know what is wrong, I can relate to that," she said.

The tumor was benign, and she has an MRI annually to check for regrowth. The mass was extending to her right optical nerve, and had it not been removed in time her vision could have been affected. Her personal experience has helped her in her job at the hospital. Bradley has been a patient representative at Martin Army for 11 years, before that serving in the PAL office as a clerk.

"Carolyn is so good at her job because she is a military medical beneficiary. She uses and understands the system," Terry Beckwith, the hospital's public affairs officer, said.

The phone rings constantly in Bradley's office on the first floor just off the front lobby. Bradley and Penny Jenrette, the other patient representative, handle between 225 and 275 cases a month.

"I'm the commander's representative for the hospital, so if patients have problems, concerns or questions, they can come to us. If we don't know the answer, we will know where to send them," she said.

"This is a very rewarding job," Bradley said. "It's a stressful environment, but I believe in what I do and this office provides a valuable service to our beneficiaries," she said. "This is somewhere they can go where someone will listen to them."

Jenrette sees daily how Bradley assists patients.

"She never gets upset. She has such a great caring personality in that she wants to help other people," Jenrette said.

To contact the Patient Affairs office, call 544-1817 or 544-2788, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Hospital needs volunteers

Carolyn Bradley, patient representative at Martin Army Community Hospital, knows the value of doing the little things — smiling, giving directions, listening.

Martin Army needs people willing to help do those small, but very important services.

Volunteers are needed to serve as greeters and work at the front desk and other locations in the hospital. Volunteers run a shuttle service in the parking lot and work throughout the facility in various capacities — from the pharmacy to the First Steps program for new mothers.

To volunteer call Cassandra Wyatt, assistant station manager for the American Red Cross, at 545-5194 or Terry Beckwith, public affairs officer at Martin Army, at 544-4564.

Workers are required to go through the Red Cross orientation program. The Red Cross covers the cost of up to 30 hours of child care at Tot Town each month for volunteers.

"Anyone who is willing to work, we can find a place for them," Beckwith said.

line for water and basic needs. I've never personally experienced this kind of tragedy, but someday it could be me. I would want someone to help my family if it ever happened to us."

The Pierces made the 200-mile round trip to deliver the clothing to a distribution center set up in a tent at the site where homes had been demolished only days before.

"It was very worthwhile. We separated items into sizes, and people just came in and picked out what they needed to clothe their families," Judy said. "It felt good to know that these items donated were going directly to where there was a need."

Students improve grammar skills with Perfect Copy

Children use instructional support program to identify writing errors

McBride Elementary School

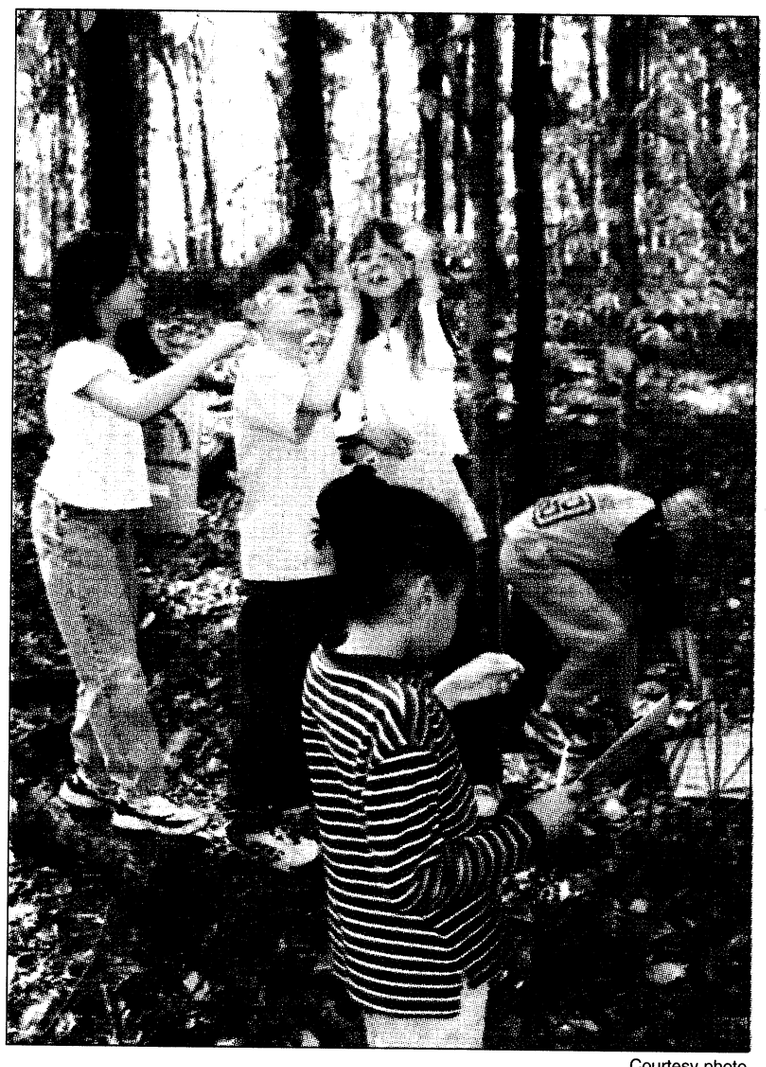
"I Can. I Will."

The second- and third-graders at McBride Elementary School have an exciting way to improve and enhance language arts skills through technology this year.

One program is Perfect Copy and is used in the instructional support classes for writing led by Caroline Myers.

Children read a story and identify errors in the areas of punctuation, grammar, and word usage.

When the class is completed each day, the child gets a printed report of his or her progress.



"We get to do fun stories. It is also fun when we have to look for mistakes and when she checks the stories that we did," Shelly Lindblade said.

"There are always new things to learn. On the computer we get to do hard, easy, and silly stories too. She helps us if we make a mistake," Ariel Tucker said.

The students look forward to the time they have in the mini-lab that has been designed for them, Myers said.

Each writing lesson is a challenge with opportunities for success available so that each student is able to achieve.

The teacher and students together have an enjoyable, educational adventure together.

McBride Elementary School students study trees in the wooded area behind the school.

Woodlands program gives class outdoor education

McBride Elementary School

The McBride students are enthusiastically engaged in a new "Woodlands" adventure at their school.

McBride Elementary has an Outdoor Education Project in their own backyard.

The school is bordered in the back with woodlands which go to a pond branching off from Upatoi Creek.

The Woodlands are the location of many lessons incorporating our school-wide focus of critical thinking skills with nature studies.

Our Outdoor Education Program and McBride teachers are committed to bringing the environment into their classrooms, Marie Hand said. Our outdoor activities center around increasing students understanding of our complex environment.

Hand said they are learning how to be responsible on behalf of the environment.

Students in first through third grades are involved in lessons centered around trees. They have each "adopted" a tree to study.

The students have documented in their outdoor education journal information about their tree.

Stephanie Smeltser, a third grader, thinks the outdoor education program could help us learn about trees, animals and our habitats; how pollution and litter can affect animals lives and about plant growth.

Hannah Courtney, a third-grader, has adopted a tree on the nature trail. When she found her tree to adopt she gave it a name and then wrote descriptions about her tree in her outdoor education journal.

"Everytime I go out to my tree I will see how it's grown, see if it looks different, and if the leaves have grown," Courtney said.

Andrew Noonam said, "We are using the computer to do research about the environment around us. Looking up nature on the Internet and learning outdoors is cool."

"I think outdoor education is terrific because it teaches you to use your mind to learn about nature," Deanna Andrews, second grader, said. "A classroom outdoors helps me see and touch things I have read about."

Children work at own pace using accelerated math program

Scan cards make math fun, allow students to master fundamentals, get feedback

McBride Elementary School

Accelerated math is a collection of objectives that go along with the math curriculum. It is a computer management program. It gives a list of these objectives and the teacher picks one or more for their class to work on. It allows the student to work at their own pace. If they need remediation it gives them more practice on that particular skill.

If the objective has been mastered they move on to the next objective. The students like it when they can move ahead and not have to wait on the others, Patsy Hanner said. The computer gives each child a practice sheet covering the objective chosen. The student pencils in the bubbles on the card.

When the student has completed the card it is scanned on the computer and graded. The graded page or TOPS report is immediate feedback and shows the teacher and student if the objective was mastered. This program supplements the math program. We can use it as reinforcement of skills being learned in the book or for practicing several objectives at one time.

What teachers have to say about accelerated math:

"I like using the program because it enables the students to work through the skills at their own pace. This program allows each student to be successful."

— Iris Kimbley

"Accelerated math allows me the freedom to focus in on each child's strengths and weaknesses. I may have each student working on the same skill or a different skill and at different levels. The student can scan their card immediately. That enables me to move to another skill or reteach that skill. Another important factor is that students love anything to do with computers so they are motivated to work harder."

— Sherian Sansom

"This program allows my students more practice with skills they are having trouble mastering. Being able to work on the computers is a big motivator for my students. They beg to do accelerated math. The TOPS report helps me to know just what each student needs help with."

— Patsy Hanner

What students have to say about accelerated math:

"It is interesting because I like to scan my card and see my scores right away."

— Elyssa Parks

"I think accelerated math is neat because it is something new ... and I love working on the computer."

— Clara Langdon

ask the judge

Capt. Richard Henry
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I do some charity work during the year. I know I can claim the money and clothing that I donate on my taxes, but what about the time and services I give?

A: Many Soldiers and their family members donate their time and services in support of bona fide charitable organizations such as churches, boy scouts and others. Although admirable, they may not take a charitable deduction for the value of their time or services.

The Tax Court has upheld regulations disallowing a charitable contribution deduction for the value of contributed services. In one case, the taxpayer performed uncompensated legal services for organizations eligible to receive deductible charitable contributions. The taxpayer did not include the value of these services as income. On his income tax returns, he deducted amounts representing the value of the time he spent performing the services. When he prepared his returns, he was aware that Treas. Reg. B 1.170A-1(g) prohibited a charitable contribution deduction for a contribution of services, but he deliberately disregarded the regulation because he believed that it was invalid.

The Tax Court held the taxpayer was not entitled to deduct the value of his contributed services to the charitable organizations. The court also determined that regulation B 1.170A-1(g), which disallows the deduction of the value of contributed services, is valid. Additionally, the court held the taxpayer had no reasonable basis in claiming a charitable contribution deduction for the value of his contributed service and was, therefore, liable for an addition to tax for intentional disregard of the regulations.

While it is well established a taxpayer may not deduct the value of his time or services contributed to charity, he may deduct the fair market value of any gift to charity and the amount of any reasonable expenses incurred in performing charitable services. For example, if the taxpayer incurs transportation expenses in service of a charitable organization, those expenses are deductible. Taxpayers may deduct the actual cost of the transportation, or a flat mileage rate of 14 cents per mile driven. Deductible expenses include parking fees, tolls, and mileage to and from the location of the charitable service.

As with any deduction, however, the taxpayer must keep adequate records of those expenses to deduct them.

While expenses incurred by those donating their services to charity are generally deductible, they are only deductible as itemized deductions on Schedule A of Form 1040. In addition, the deduction is subject to the 3 percent reduction of total itemized deductions if the taxpayer's adjusted gross income exceeds $126,600 ($63,300 if married filing separately).

Tax Center 2000 is open for business in Infantry Hall, Classroom 1. The hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m Monday-Friday. The phone number is 545-4267.

Units & Activities

Due to Fort Benning's enthusiastic participation in the campaign to increase recycling, coupled with a temporary manpower shortage in the Recycling section, DPW personnel are unable to maintain their usual schedule for pickup of recyclable items in units and activities.

DPW urgently requests the help of all units and activities. Please go the extra mile, and make an effort to bring recyclable material directly to the DPW Material Recovery Facility, Building 4000, in Harmony Church, on Old Cusseta Road. Hours of operation are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday-Friday. MRF personnel are available on site to direct units in proper disposal of all items.

Units can also assist by segregating white office paper from newsprint and colored paper (catalogs, magazines, etc.) as it accumulates. If a unit has only one container for all paper, it could be separated into paper bags (please, no plastic) or cardboard boxes. The cardboard boxes that office and copier paper is shipped in make ideal containers for temporary storage and transport when recycling office paper. Another handy tip: paper will take up less space, if it is left flat and not crumpled.

Family Housing

DPW employees do not pick up recyclables in Family Housing.

Pickups there are done under contract; therefore, they are not affected.

There are no changes to the service or schedules in Family Housing areas.

Everyone on post: It would be a big help if everyone flattens all cans and plastic containers and leaves the tops off all plastic food or beverage containers. If folks take just a few seconds more to do these two things, the crews at the MRF will be able to process materials more efficiently and quickly.

With everyone's cooperation, we can continue to recycle effectively, keep expensive landfill fees down and protect our environment.

For more information, contact Walter Nichols, Solid Waste Program Manager, DPW Environmental Branch, at 544-6142, or e-mail NicholsW@benning.army.mil for further information about recycling.
