NATIONAL MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS SOCIETY

MS:
A Disabling Disease

Multiple sclerosis is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system. Symptoms may be mild such as numbness in the limbs or severe—paralysis or loss of vision. Most people with MS are diagnosed between the ages of 20 and 40 but the unpredictable physical and emotional effects can be lifelong. The progress, severity and specific symptoms of MS in any one person cannot yet be predicted, but advances in research and treatment are giving hope to those affected by the disease.

Army needs more Soldiers

Caldera says current troops overextended

Staff Sgt. Jack Siemieniec
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera said the Army needs more Soldiers to meet future worldwide missions during a press conference held after the opening AUSA annual meeting ceremony Oct. 16.

"I think in the post-Cold War world, Soldiers are the strategic forces that help us prevent wars. If that is the case, and we project to be as busy as we are, then maybe we need a larger Army than we have today," Caldera told the media.

"In the post-Cold War world, it's your people-to-people forces that prevent wars — that become your key strategic enabler.

"If our security has evolved to the point of saying it's not just about fighting and winning wars, it is also about preventing wars by our active engagement in the world, you have to resource your principal engagement force," he stressed.

The Army is the principal engagement force for the nation and the service that performs the "lion's share of humanitarian assistance, peacekeeping, military-to-military engagement — which is a way of building confidence among nations in different regions of the world," he said.

"That means two things to me. One, you can't be a people force without the people. You have to ensure you have the people. If you're going to use them the way we've been using them, then we need a larger Army. Two, you have to give the Soldiers the tools they need to do the job both in peace and wartime."

Earlier, Caldera addressed a standing-room-only crowd at the AUSA opening ceremony.

During his speech, he broached the idea that if the Army continues being busy with worldwide commitments, it may need more Soldiers.

The audience, about 1,300, included not only AUSA members — both military and civilian — but also West Point and Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets and members of foreign militaries.

"We have been truly blessed as a people and as a country. We live in a time of great prosperity at home and we exert unprecedented influence abroad," Caldera said. He added that even though prosperity is spreading throughout the world, it remains a dangerous place.

"Consequently, everyday, people from throughout the globe call on our nation for help," Caldera said. "They call on our nation to be a world

In 1968 Capt. Dan Terry begins recovery on the USHS Repose from wounds he sustained while fighting in Vietnam. His shipmates were celebrating the 60th anniversary of the Navy's Nurses Corps.

A retired Fort Benning Soldier and Vietnam veteran was presented the Purple Heart Thursday at the Quarterly Retreat Ceremony, more than 30 years after being left for dead on the battlefield.

Retired Maj. Dan Terry was awarded the Purple Heart for the six wounds he sustained May 8, 1968, the day the 28-year-old 1st Cavalry Division company commander was scheduled to meet his replacement and return to the United States.

Instead, Terry and seven other Soldiers met with heavy enemy fire. Four didn't make it out alive. Terry was wounded in the initial engagement and shot repeatedly as he attempted to reach friendly forces.

"I had no idea I would make it out of there. There was just a lot of hell going on all around me," Terry said. "At some point I just closed my eyes, and I woke up two days later."

Terry credits his company's communications chief, Sgt. Gene Meredith with saving his life. Meredith led a detachment of Soldiers who routed enemy fire for nearly five hours to rescue Terry.

At Terry's recommendation, Meredith received a Silver Star for his heroism, and Terry traveled to Pembroke, Va. to personally present Meredith with his medal in 1970.

Watering becomes voluntary

Fort Benning lifts mandatory restrictions

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Because of water conservation measures, Fort Benning has saved nearly 2 million gallons of water a day for more than 100 days, and the watering restrictions that were once mandatory are now voluntary.

The drought conditions that plague the South haven't abated, but now the post's focus has shifted to strengthening the sod that was placed in construction areas before spring rains can wash the topsoil into the Chattahoochee River.

"Watering these areas is critical," said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Public Works, "to the success of this grass getting the proper rooting before the colder periods."

This in turn will hopefully eliminate the need to dredge sand from the water collection inlet more frequently, said Joe Wilkins, environmental specialist with the Directorate of Public Works.

Silt buildup at the water collection inlet necessitates dredging at least once in a three-to-five week period.

Although the runoff of the Upatoi Creek is still below normal for this time of year it is within the sustained flow rate that allows Fort Benning to lift the mandatory restrictions, Stelzer said.

Requesting voluntary compliance with the watering restrictions allows the residents to use their judgment on the watering demands of their yards, Stelzer said.

"The post's response to the conservation measures has been tremendous," Stelzer said.

Campaign continues collections

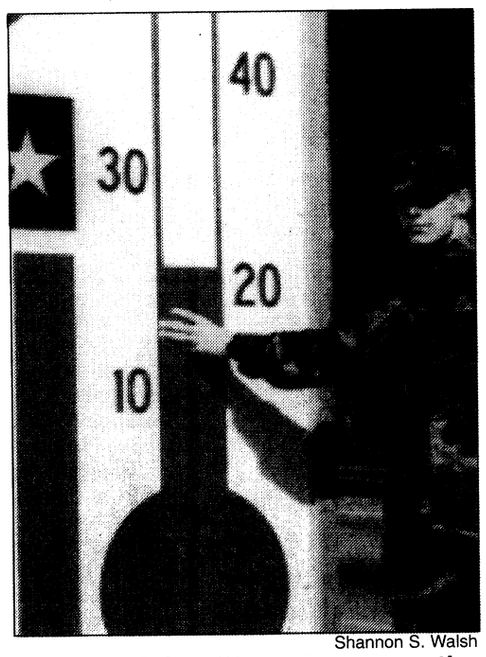
Goal attainable with Soldiers' contributions

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

The Combined Federal Campaign is looking for help as organizers strive to reach the $550,000 goal by Nov. 3.

The CFC kicked off Sept. 26 and has received about $126,000 in donations so far. Garrison manager Chuck Walls feels the Fort Benning community has the potential to raise money that exceeds this year's goal.

"We've had some people turn in their donations but we're not where we need to be. There are people and children out there that need our help and depend on these campaign dollars," Walls said.



The CFC catalogue lists more than 800 worldwide charities. There is a brief description for each organization explaining who it serves.

Donations to local organizations go toward services often used by Fort Benning Soldiers and their families.

Local charities listed include the American Red Cross, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, the Food Bank, Big Brothers and Big Sisters and the YMCA.

There is also an opportunity to give money locally through the Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association. This assists services such as youth and

Boo humbug! on Halloween

Scrooge has holiday change of heart

commentary

I am the Scrooge of Halloween. This is a title I have defended for many years.

I have stood on my soapbox many times and have written numerous commentaries declaring the day a waste of time and common sense. But I haven't always felt this way.

When I was a child, I loved dressing up as a ghost or goblin and scaring the neighbors into handing out candy. The neighbors two houses down always had freshly made caramel apples for the children they recognized. Mmmmm.

Then there was the time one neighbor tried to get us ghosts to say more than trick-or-treat. "I need to see a trick before I can give you a treat." What in the world? Perform for candy? I don't think so.

Then there was the year one of the more artistic neighbors rigged his son's sound equipment to scare the beejeebers out of anyone who had the nerve to step past the Frankenstein he built from scratch who was guarding the steps or the Dracula in the coffin next to the door.

When the doorbell rang, a low moan filled the neighborhood (one set of speakers was on the roof, another was hidden with Dracula). The door creaked open and this horribly disfigured man filled the doorway and cursed at the children. Parents of the younger children became upset and the police were called, several different times.

The year before this same neighbor made me and his daughter decoupage witches' hats. Who knew the next year would spell disaster?

Was this the beginning of my dislike for Halloween? I don't know, but I do know that when my daughter was born I couldn't imagine ever letting her roam neighborhoods asking strangers for candy. After all, I was teaching her to never take candy from strangers, so why would I let her one night out of the year?

This rationale went over reasonably for several years ... before she could walk and talk. She was satisfied with having her face painted like a cat at preschool and then handing out the candy for the next several years.

Then when she was 5, the questions started. "Why don't we trick-or-treat this year Mom? I want to be a Dalmatian puppy!" Who could say no to that? Not I; she was the cutest puppy ever. Plus she got good use out of the costume because she wore it whenever she wanted — even to the post exchange in July.

Last year she was a black cat and she convinced me to buy a witch's hat and carry a broom.

This year she's excited about dressing up as Harry Potter and last year's broom becomes this year's Nimbus 2000. She has already carved the pumpkin into a jack o'lantern. She even gave it eyebrows.

But she wants to know why we are trick-or-treating on a school night (another one of my rules has gone up in flames.)

For other children whose parents allow them to trick-or-treat on a school night, Fort Benning celebrates Halloween 6 to 8 p.m. Tuesday.

I remember one year when the Magraw Manor traffic started backing up at 5 p.m. Watch for the ghosts and goblins that are too excited to watch for traffic.

Check the treats before allowing your child to snack. Keep your pets at home while trick-or-treating.

Have a safe and happy Halloween.

Mother's Curse transends nature

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

Have you seen the calling service commercial with the young mother talking long distance to her mom in France while a toddler brings life to the words "terrible twos?"

The ad ends with the young mom saying, "You've never seen such a difficult child" and her mom replying "Oh, yes I have" as she smiles down at family photos.

Between you and me, she's not really smiling. That's a smirk on her face. She's smirking because a Mother's Curse she laid down years ago has just been validated.

You know the one. It goes, "And I hope, someday, you have a little boy (or girl) JUST LIKE YOU." There are variations, of course, the one most frequently used starts or ends with, "I just hope I live to see the day ..."

That commercial was not fabricated by some ad agency. "Mother's Curses" are real and my second-grader is living proof they work.

My mom laid one on me. My mother-in-law laid one on my husband. (She used the ever-popular and highly effective "One of these days" version). I thought we would be safe from the Mother's Curses our moms laid on us. Our daughter, after all, is adopted, and we aren't related by blood. I was wrong.

There's no other explanation for how the same things that drove both my mom and mother-in-law crazy could manifest themselves in one child. Not just any child, either. Ours.

What are the odds that we would be blessed with a little girl who refuses to wear a dress and can drink tomato soup by the gallon but refuses every other tomato product, except for catsup and spaghetti sauce, on the grounds that "It's yucky?" From the time she was a toddler, she has been fascinated by miniatures, the smaller and more realistic the better.

She spends more time coming up with excuses to put off doing her homework than she would need if she just sat down and did it. Her favorite word isn't "No," it's "Wait!" She's also a packrat. And stubborn? We got a double-whammy Mother's Curse there.

That "She gets it from YOU" stuff just doesn't cut it at our house — we can't use genetics as an excuse.

During some of our adventures in parenting, even though they live miles away, I know our two moms were laughing.

Our daughter is growing up way too quickly, undoubtedly because her grandmothers can't wait to see the results of the "Mother of Teens Curses" they planted. Basically, though, she's a good kid, and I think we'll survive her adolescence. (I do have to confess that from time-to-time I wonder if she will.)

In the meantime, I can always console myself with the thought that some day I'll be laughing just like my mom and mother-in-law are now.

In the meantime, I've got some practicing to do...

"And I just hope, young lady, that some day ... ."

545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Why isn't the Main NCO Club designated "No Smoking" like other buildings on post. The caller said people who don't smoke use the club and they shouldn't have to put up with other people smoking.

Acting chief of Community Operations Division response: The caller was told that there is a totally smoke free room, and also a nonsmoking section in the front of the club.

The ventilation system in the smoke free bingo room is separate from the ventilation system in the main room. However, in the main room there are smoke eliminators mounted in the ceiling and on the walls as well as ceiling fans that help to dissipate any smoke.

Call: A resident of family housing expressed concern about another resident's dog biting two people and the dog's constant barking and what could be done.

Garrison commander's response: The policy on pet control is governed by the USAIC Reg 210-5, Garrison Regulation, which states "The owner must take a pet that bites someone to the Vet Clinic for examination and quarantine. Owners will prevent pets from being a nuisance, and will not allow their pets to stray." The garrison commander's office is responsible for taking action against residents who violate the regulation.

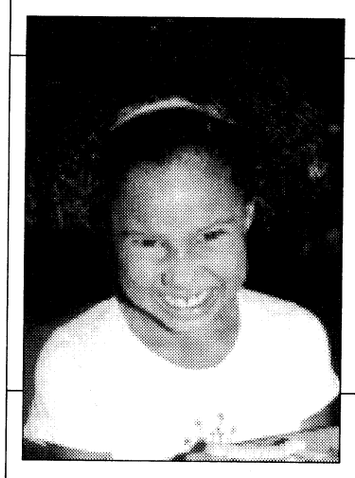
Call: Why do vehicles need to be registered on post, and why do the stickers need to be on the windshield instead of on the dashboard?



Provost marshal's response: The registration requirement for vehicles driving on post is for the safety and security of the installation. The stickers are placed at the center top of the windshield for easy visibility.

New brews flow from Reggie's taps

Microbrewery opened Oct. 20 at Reggie's

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The bartenders at Reggie's Beverage Company had additional duties assigned in October. They became brew masters when the microbrewery became operational and their first beer was ready for consumption Oct. 20.

The microbrewery now provides "the freshest beer you can get — straight from the brewery to the bar," said Jon Downing with Micropub Brew who provided the training to get the brewery up and running.

The first beers brewed on the premises were an Oktoberfest-style of beer and an American light. The next will be an amber and dark beer.

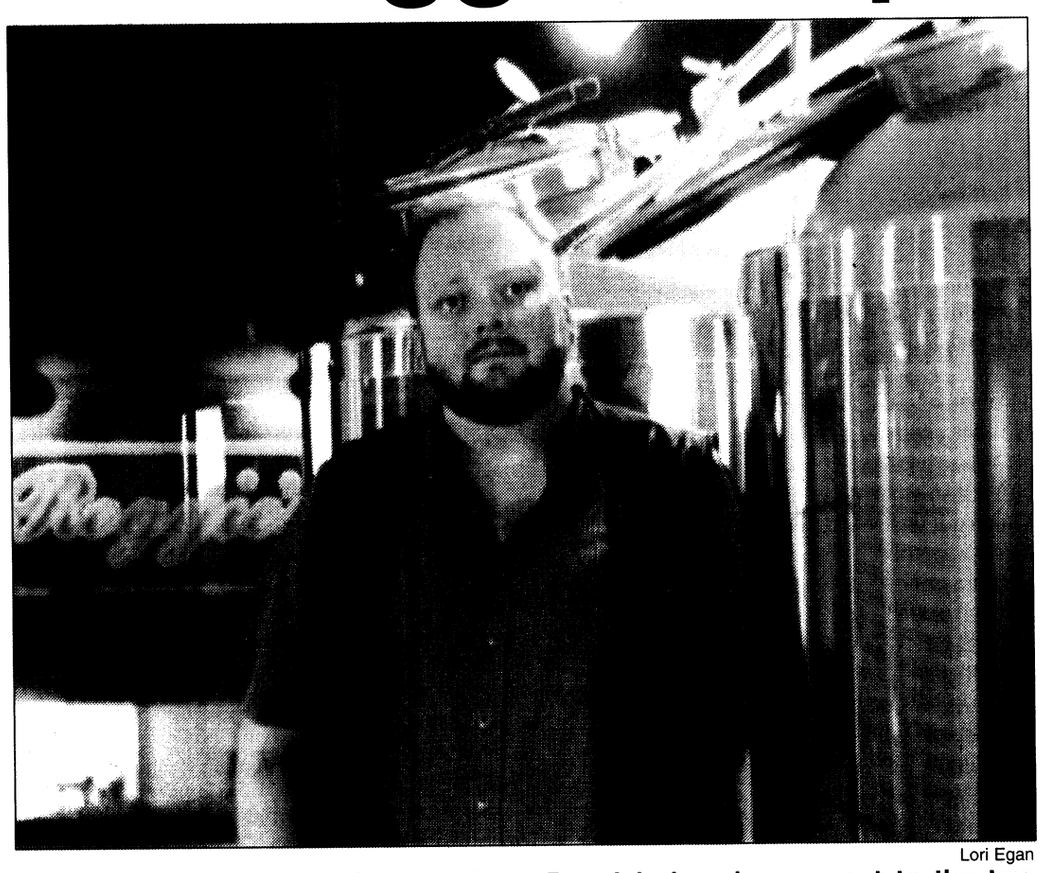
The microbrewery consists of a brewhouse with three large, stainless steel tanks — a brew kettle and two fermenters. The first tank used is the brew kettle, which is where most of the beer's flavor comes from when the malt, hops and boiling water are mixed.

Next the mixture is "cooled into" to one of the fermenters where the yeast is added, Downing said. After 14 days in the fermenter the beer passes through a triple bank of filters on its way to the cooler where carbonation is added. In the cooler the beer has a shelf life of three months.

This is the second stateside Reggie's to have a microbrewery on the premises. The other one is at Fort Irwin, Calif.

"The Reggie's in Korea had the first microbrewery and all three use the same process and recipes so the beer served in California and Korea will have the same flavor as the beer here," said Downing, who won a Gold Medal for a hefewiessen in Dusseldorf, Germany in 1996. "Water is the main ingredient in the beer and each location will add its own characteristics to the brew but the flavor profiles will remain similar." Downing's brews have been named the best beer in Atlanta for six years straight, said Michael McDonald, Micropub Systems president.

The microbrewery was in the planning stages when the restaurant opened in 1998, but funding prevented its inclusion, Paul Arthur, senior food and beverage analyst for the Community and Family Support Center, said.



It cost $120,000 from start to finish, he said, and includes the equipment and training.

"This was paid for with NAF money, Soldiers' money, not the taxpayers'," Arthur said.

"From the start, Reggie's has been a themed concept where Soldiers and their families can eat and mingle in a friendly environment," Arthur said. "We found a challenge in supporting our rank-restrictive facilities on smaller installations and Reggie's is the result of that challenge. We pride ourselves on quality food, excellent, friendly service and the brewery is complimentary to our food — it enhances the experience."

Arthur said sales projections, based on the other locations', are $2 food sales to $1 beverage and that including a signature root beer to the beverage menu should also increase sales. "We expect to sell as much root beer as we do our draft beer."

Old-fashioned root beer straight from the tap is one of the draws to bring families to the restaurant, said Patty Couture, Reggie's general manager. "Wednesday night is our kids' night and we serve $1 chicken fingers, spaghetti and hot dogs in addition to the root beer. The dining room is smoke-free and the bar has four electrostatic air filters to keep the air clean."

Lori Egan

Master brewer Jon Downing stands in Reggie's brewhouse next to the two fermenters. The microbrewery opened Oct. 20.

Other improvements to the facility include three big screen televisions and four-plasma screen TVs.

The plasma screens are sprinkled throughout the bar for viewing pleasure and come with speakers that can be placed on the table for the guest's convenience, Couture explained.

Soldiers can play trivia or watch sporting events. On Sundays NFL football coverage includes four satellite games. Friday nights feature karoake.

Reggie's is open for lunch and dinner and Couture said a 24-hour advance notice for large groups keeps waiting to a minimum.

CFC: Continues, campaign benefits local organizations handicap programs, the lending closet and food locker, volunteer services, and family support groups.

"We need to think about giving locally," Walls said. "This is your home, let's keep some money coming back here to your community."

Although a lot of Soldiers are involved with local programs and donate to the cause, the campaign still needs more effort. "Right now we have about a 40 percent rate of giving. If we could increase that to 50 or 60 percent, we would hit such a bigger goal," said Cindy Cain, CFC Coordinator for the local chapter of the United Way.

"They don't have to give a huge amount. A few dollars a pay period would make such a huge difference in the overall picture," Cain said.

"Take a moment, look at the catalogue and find something in there that touches you," Walls said.

CFC donation packets can be picked up from the campaign key person in your unit. Units are given credit for donations raised toward this cause.

2nd Lt. John Stillwell is the CFC OIC and has been tracking the campaign results for this year. "It's picking up but we're still down about $69,000 from what we were at this time last year," Stillwell said.

After the CFC ends, the United Way of Chattahoochee Valley disperses the money to all organizations.

Individual donors can contribute to the campaign from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday at the CFC Office on the 2nd floor of the First Union Bank, Wold Avenue. For donations from a group larger than 100 people, go to the office at least 1 hour prior to closing or call ahead to schedule an appointment. The phone number is 682-5142.

Walls wants to make sure that everyone at Fort Benning has been approached and has had an opportunity to give.

"If you've got the money, turn it in. If not, spread the word. It's a great program," Walls said.

Frequent fliers hit bumpy area

Officials warn DoD travelers of pitfalls

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

In spite of warnings of penalties, the personal misuse of frequent-flier miles earned through official government travel has still proven to be a problem.

A top Department of Defense employee, based at Fort Jackson, S.C., was recently accused of using more than $4,000 worth of these earned miles for personal use.

Most airlines currently have programs that reward customers with frequent-flier mile points. These points can then be used for discounts or upgrades on future trips.

Fort Benning officials want to make sure Soldiers and government personnel are aware of the rules.

"The bottom line is simple. If you earn the miles as a result of official travel, they belong to the government and may be used only for official purposes," said Bernard Pfeiffer, chief, Administrative and Civil Law Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

There was an attempt several years ago to monitor the program but it did not work because individuals were not reporting their miles earned through government travel, said Ron Johnson, chief of Fort Benning's Transportation Division.

"A lot of people either knowingly or unknowingly use those miles for personal travel or to upgrade to first-class," Johnson said.

Airlines often record frequent-flier miles in one lump sum. "Personnel who do a lot of heavy travel and belong to frequent-flier clubs need to be very cautious," Johnson said.

Johnson said it's up to travelers to keep track and separate personal miles from business miles. They should then inform their supervisor when they've accumulated enough to put toward future official government travel.

Government auditing agencies look at records for commercial travel offices on post and audit airline records to determine if this practice is occurring. There are penalties if someone is found guilty of misusing their miles.

"Soldiers who violate the restrictions are subject to punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice," Pfeiffer said. "DoD civilian employees risk adverse administrative actions, to include removal from federal service and federal criminal prosecution."

There have been few problems with the misuse of frequent-flier miles at Fort Benning to date. Education is the key to stopping this practice, Pfeiffer said. The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate presents classes that emphasize the rules and also publishes information papers and bulletins on this topic.

Two Soldiers killed in accidents

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Two Fort Benning Soldiers died in separate traffic accidents this week on Columbus roadways.

Spc. Joe Elliot Lee Cortes, 26, died in a single car accident Tuesday morning on Manchester Expressway. A memorial service will be held today at 2 p.m. in The Infantry Chapel for Cortes, who was an assistant tasking NCO in the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. Cortes had served with the unit since 1996. His home of record was Denver, Colo.

Cortes was driving a 1998 Jeep Cherokee on Manchester Expressway near the Warm Springs Connector about 1:35 a.m. when he lost control of the vehicle, which jumped the guardrail and crashed into a ravine, according to police reports.

Cortes, who was pronounced dead at the scene at 3:10 a.m., was not wearing a seat belt, and reports indicate alcohol was a factor in the accident.

In a separate incident, Sgt. Joseph M. Ekstam, 30, was killed Wednesday afternoon after the motorcycle he was driving struck the rear of a tractor-trailer on Victory Drive.

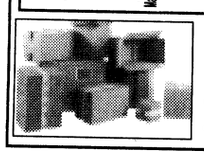
Ekstam, of Bloomington, Ill., was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade.

Initial reports indicate he was traveling west on Victory Drive near 30th Avenue about 3:35 p.m. The tractor-trailer, which was eastbound, was trying to make a left turn onto 30th Avenue.

Ekstam, in an attempt to avoid hitting the tractor-trailer, slid his motorcycle on its side and struck the rear tires of the semitruck.

The truck driver left the scene of the accident. Ekstam was taken to the Medical Center where he was pronounced dead at 3:56 p.m.

The Columbus Police Department has since charged the truck driver and is continuing to investigate the accident.



A memorial service has been tentatively scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Nov. 3 at Kelley Hill, said Maj. Boyce Evans, executive officer of 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

Future Army marching right on schedule

New doctrine to use 'vertical envelopment'

Master Sgt. Jon Connor
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The plan to develop and field the future Army remains on schedule, said the chief overseer of the new fighting force at a media update briefing at the Pentagon.

Maj. Gen. James Dubik, Training and Doctrine Command's deputy commanding general for Transformation, told reporters Oct. 20 that "everything has started on time and on schedule" in developing the Objective Force.

Dubik, who has headed up organizing and training the Initial Brigade Combat Teams since last October, will soon depart to become the commanding general of the 25th Infantry Division at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

"Transformation" as it is called, is the process of developing a new fighting infrastructure that is partly based on self-sufficient brigade-size units. The IBCTs will be "changing all the items associated with combat power," he said. IBCTs are designed to deploy quickly, be agile, very lethal, and be sustainable to meet the missions of today's unique post-Cold War Army, Dubik said.

Because Army doctrine developed decades ago required a major overseas airport and seaport to receive incoming troops and equipment, the need to develop a new strategy was evident, Dubik said referring the prolonged Gulf War buildup of forces in Saudi Arabia.

"Do you think the next one (conflict) is going to be that way?" Dubik asked rhetorically. "The answer is no."

The new doctrine could employ "vertical envelopment," which means large units would have the capability to be dropped behind enemy lines to quickly move out, Dubik said.

"We're changing the governing ideas of our Army," he said. Dubik cited immediate changes at locations like Fort Lewis, Wash., where the ICBTs are being developed and trained; Fort Benning, where lieutenants are educated on the new doctrine; and, Fort Lee, Va., where radically different approaches on logistics support are underway.

Also tied in with transformation is the way leaders communicate to each other and their subordinates.

"The senior gets the subordinates together to collaborate," Dubik said. During training, leaders at different levels work a problem and then come together to discuss, he said.

"It gives the company depth in its leader-oriented decision-making process. It helps them learn to think like their seniors," Dubik said.

"More and more is asked of junior leaders," Dubik said, citing such diverse missions in Panama, Haiti, Bosnia and Kosovo.

The IBCT transformation is a stair-step process, the general said, which continues with the delivery of several hundred Interim Armored Vehicles to replace the unit's former vehicles in March 2001. While the future of today's tanks and fighting vehicles remains to be seen, the interim armored vehicles and their successors are for certain.

"They're not tanks. They're not designed to be tanks," Dubik explained. "They're designed to go to places where tanks can't go.

"You don't want to be a force fighting this organization," Dubik said. "This force has Javelins in every platoon," he said referring to the advanced anti-tank weapons system.

And, Dubik said, the Army is merging the Infantryman military occupational specialties 11B and 11M.

> "They're not tanks. They're not designed to be tanks. They're designed to go to places where tanks can't go."
> Maj. Gen. James Dubik
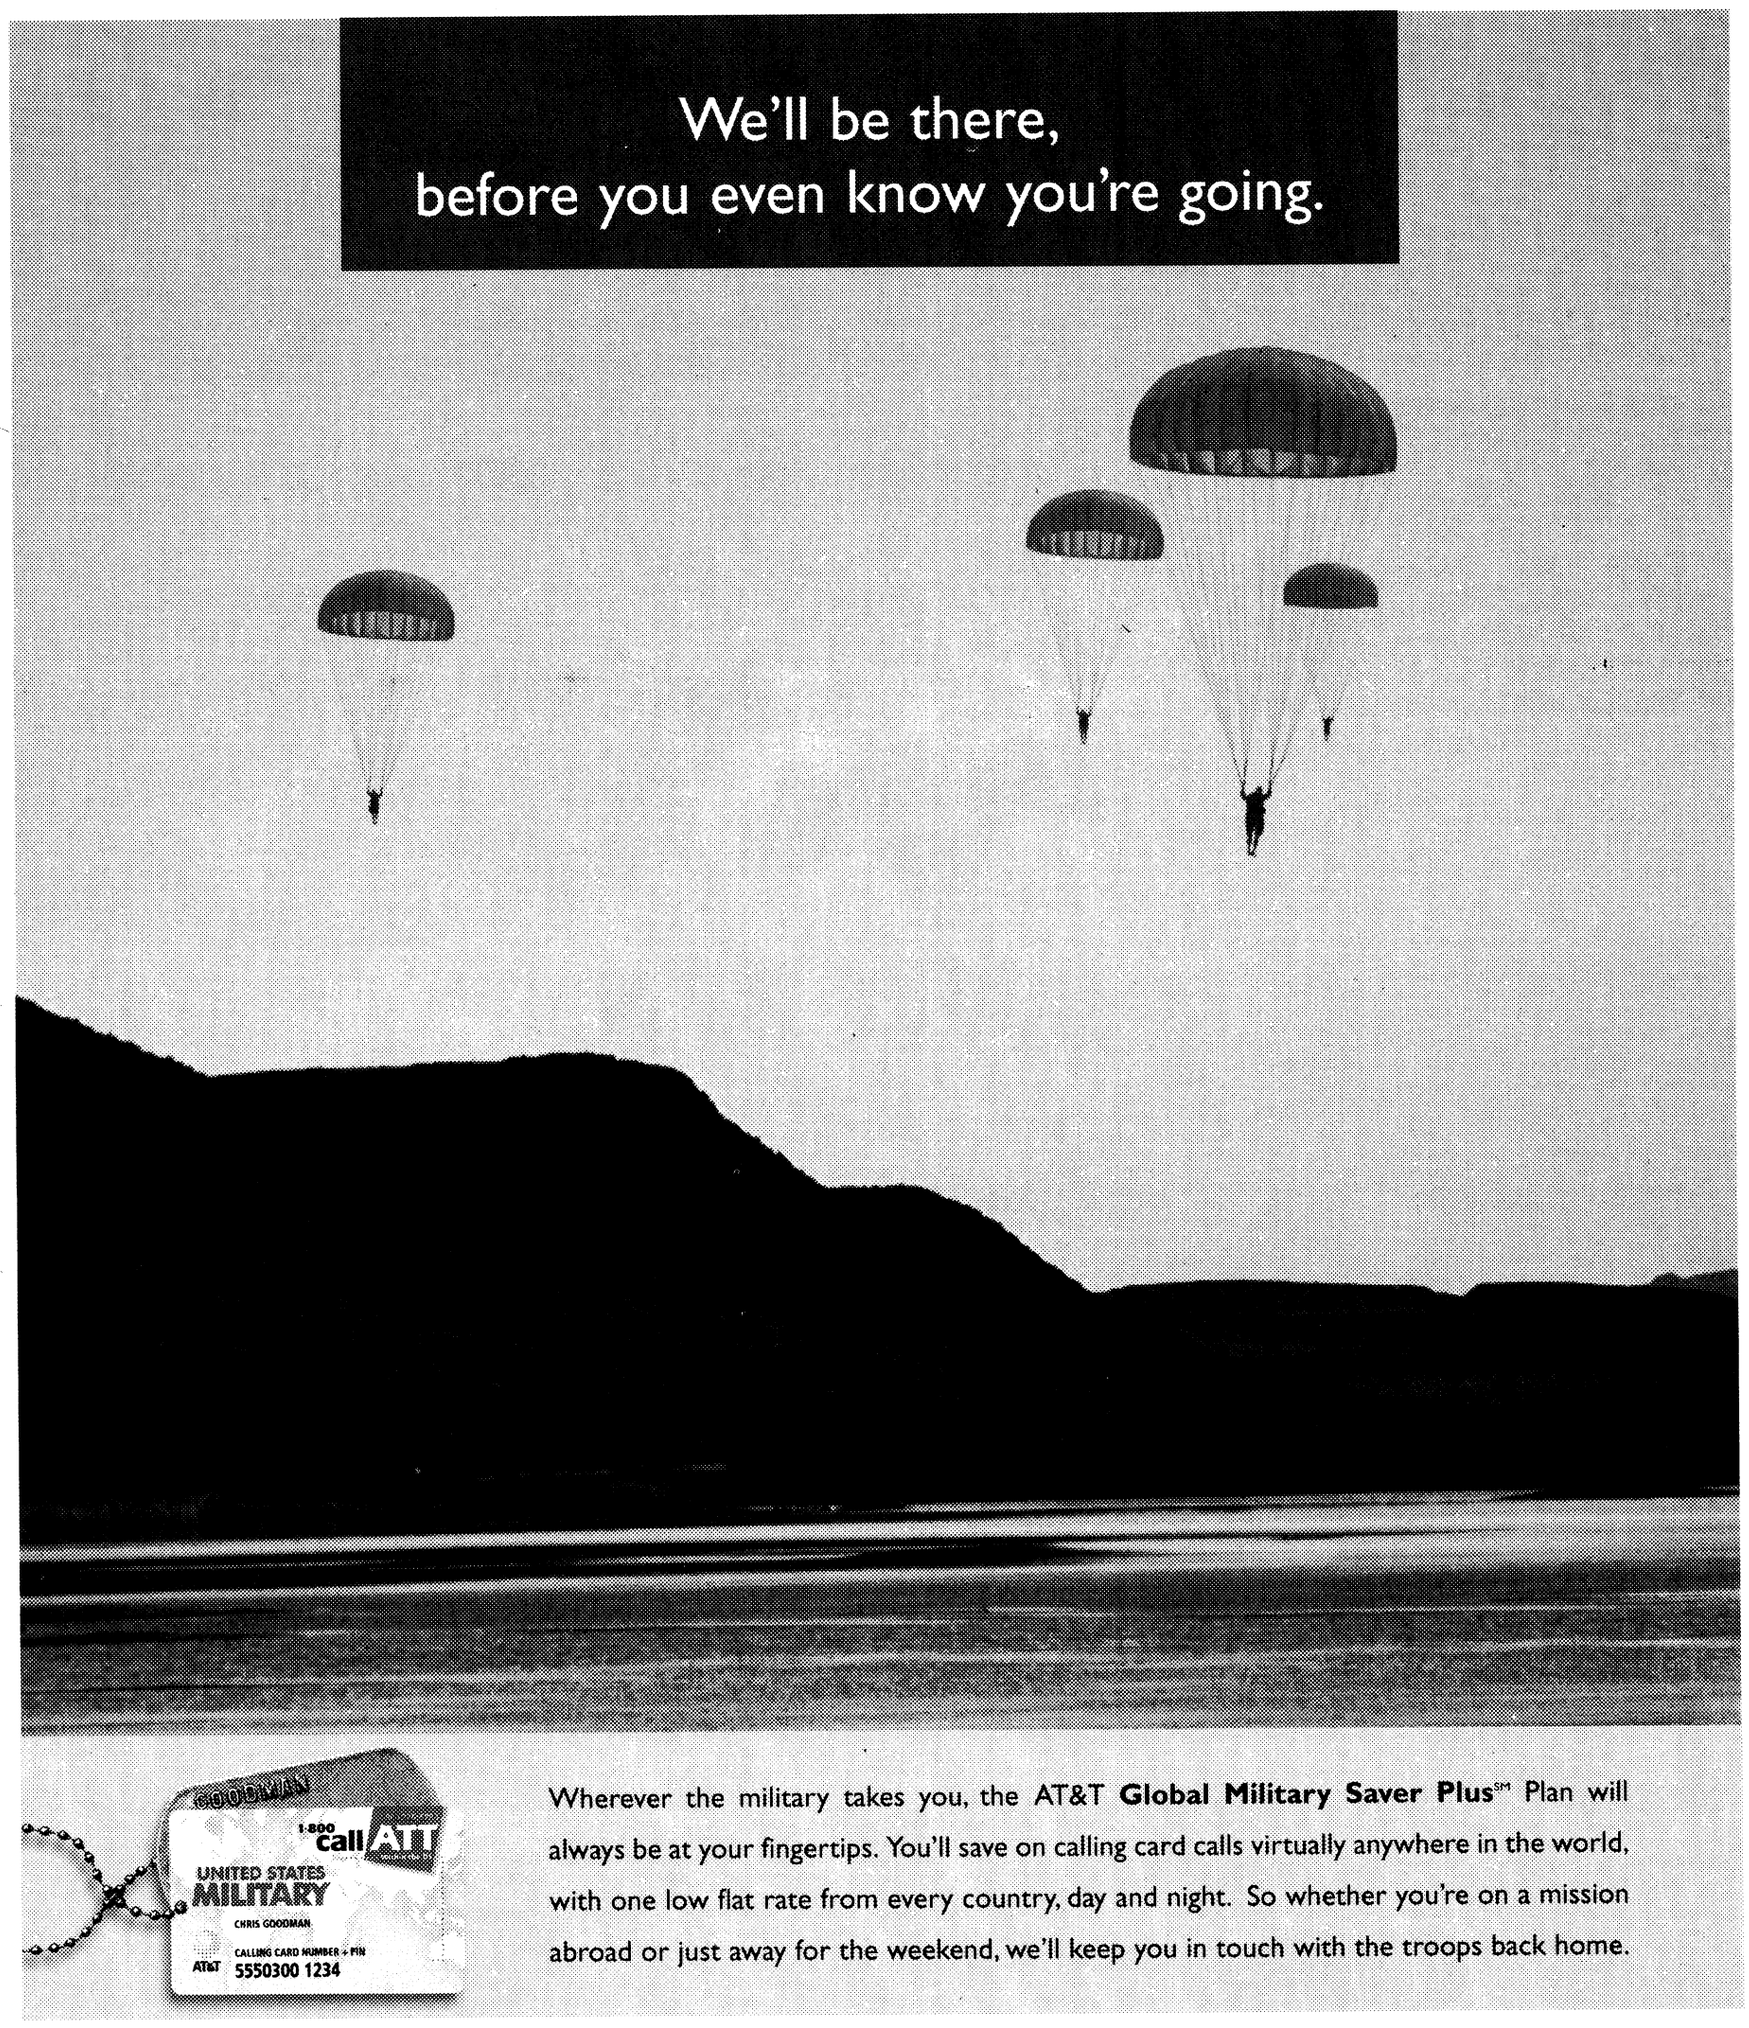
> explaining interim vehicles

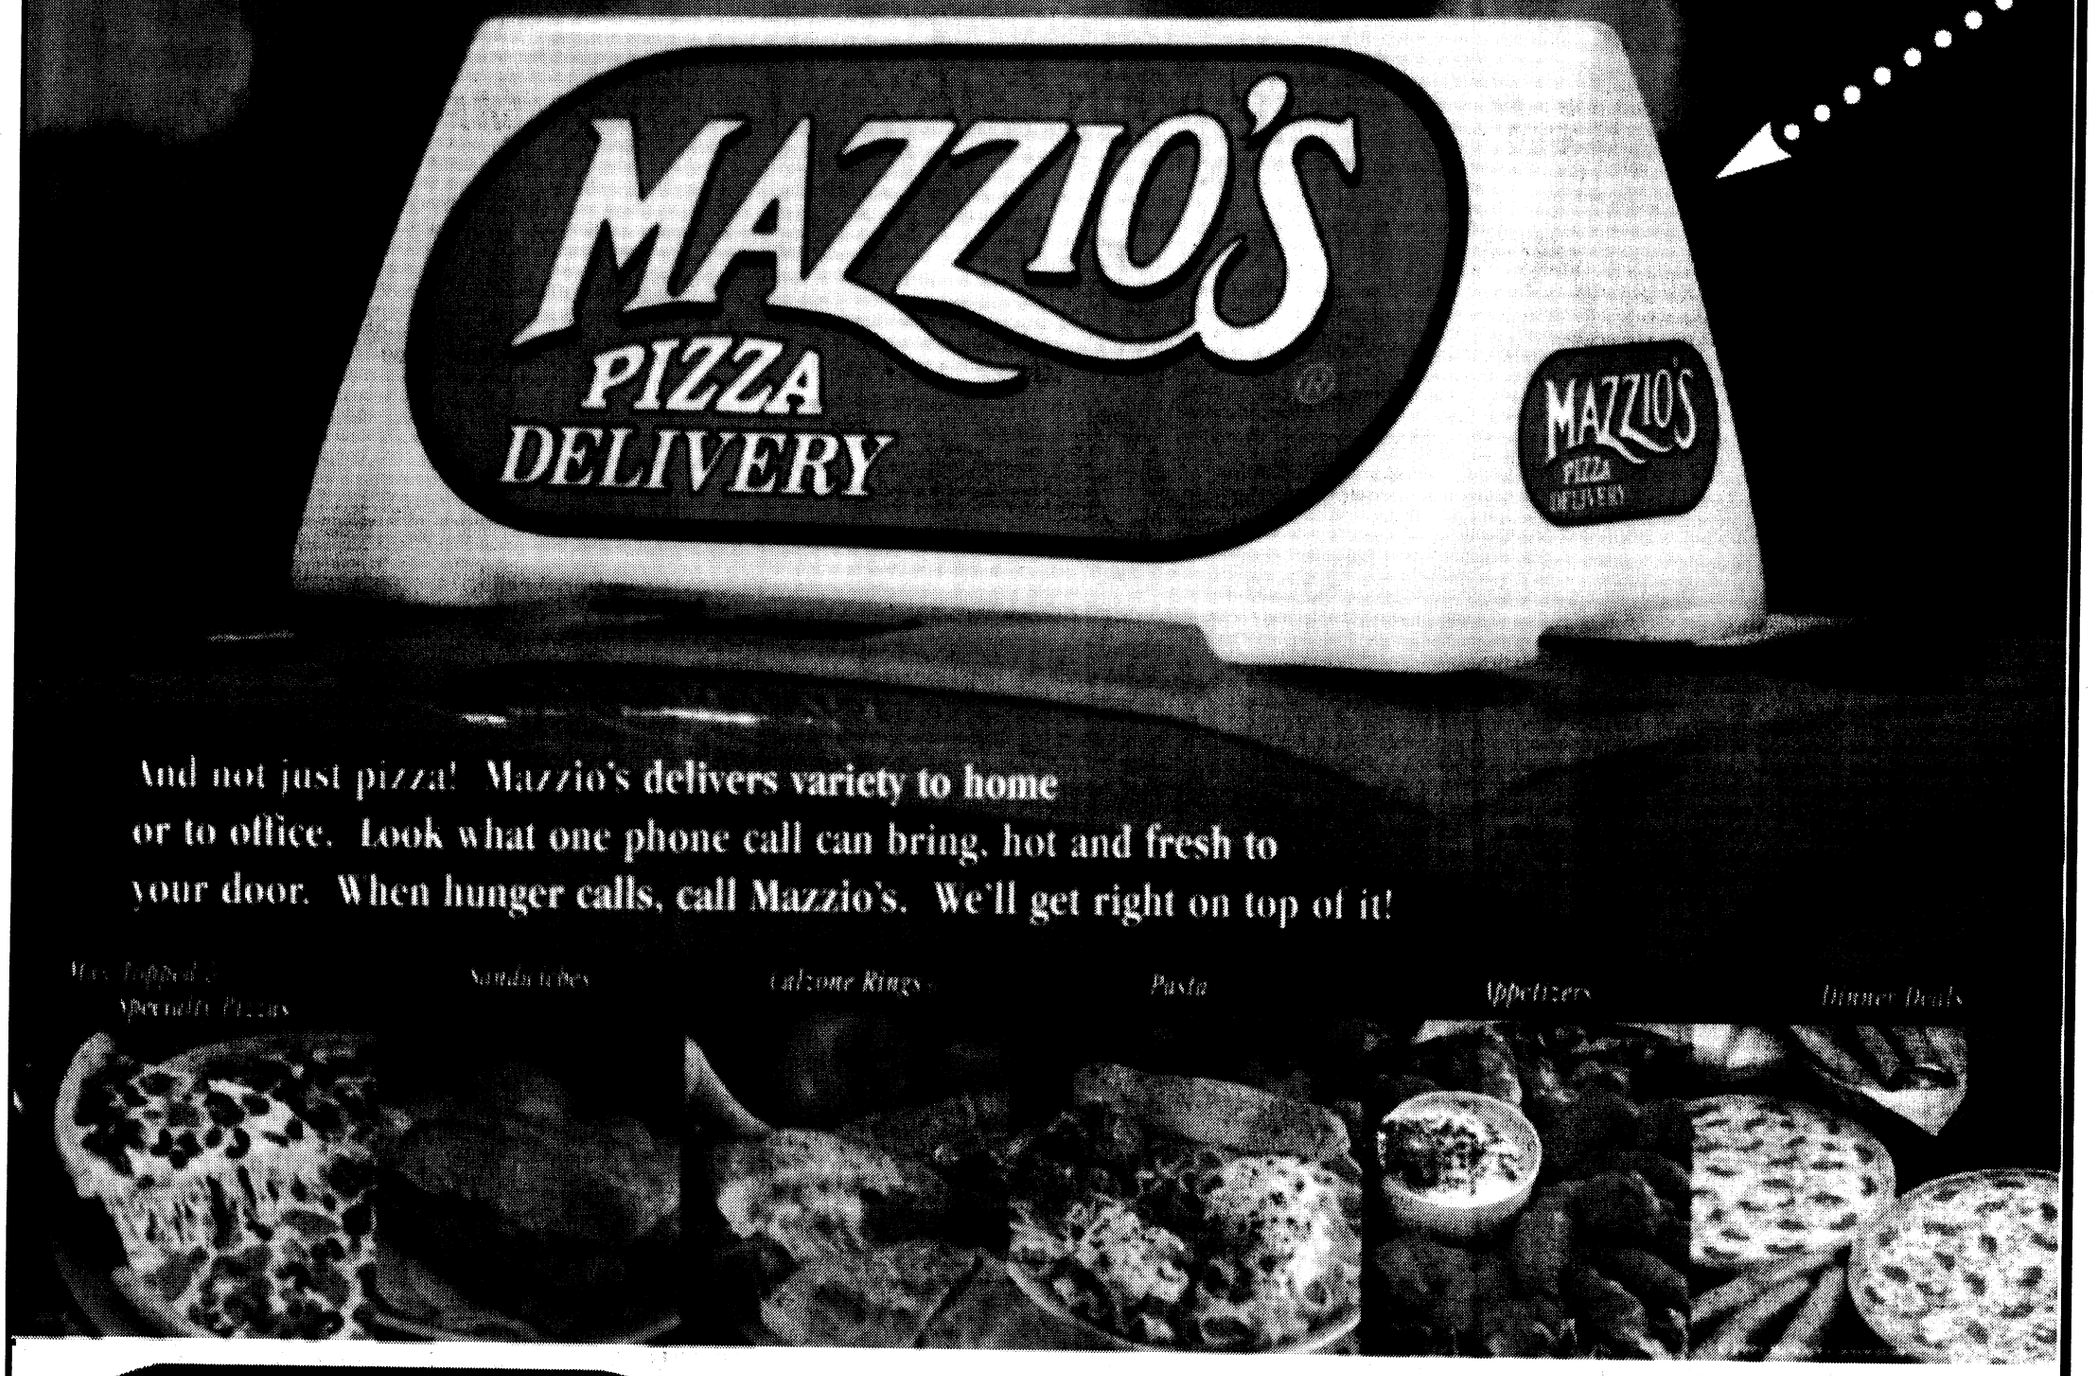
Dubik acknowledged that the new Army emerging is not one without growing pains. One goal that is nearly completed is manning the Army's 10 divisions at 100 percent. This consequently produced personnel problems in the organizational stability of losing units.

As of Sept. 30, only two divisions were less than 100 percent strength, Personnel Command reported.



"We need organizational stability," Dubik said, adding that the deputy chief of staff of Personnel must redefine what organizational stability will mean.

"The governing ideas of our Army are coming into question," he said. But by incorporating the new doctrine in TRADOC-run schools, Soldiers will embrace the doctrine as the norm.



"They're adapting very well. Very well," he said. For many captains and sergeants on down, the post-Cold War is all they've known, Dubik said.

He added that while it's natural for some to be nervous while being at the forefront, the feeling of excitement today's young Soldiers are experiencing cannot be denied.

"There's high excitement in this stuff," he said. "People like moving out and being first."

Retiree volunteers for past 13 years

Open house to provide answers

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Every Thursday morning Isabel Engeldinger volunteers her time at the Retirement Services Office and helps retirees and tries to answer a plethora questions.

From 8 a.m. to noon she, along with the rest of the RSO staff, field retirees' questions and with the Retiree Military Appreciation Days nearing, the work has picked up.

This routine has lasted her for the past 13 years and she's enjoyed the work since the day she began.

Engeldinger began her volunteer work when the head of the office at the time asked for her assistance.

"I guess I just enjoy doing it," Engeldinger said. "It seems like it helps the girls (who work in the RSO) because they get pretty busy."

People come into the office for not only retirement information, but they come in for getting their pay and address changed, she said.

The best part is greeting the people coming in, she said. Some people are not too happy about retiring but there are others who are really happy and there the ones who are a lot of fun. "You can almost see the sparkle in their eyes," she said.

Engeldinger herself needed to go to retirement services when her husband retired and was unable to clear the Army by himself because of health problems.

"I had to do a big share of the clearing," she said. "I was uptight about the move because he couldn't do anything and here we were out in California moving to here. We had the car out there and I had to worry about shipping the household goods."

Retirement services helped her and her husband as it has many other retirees.

Her husband, Ralph, said he feels Isabel's job is important to the local retirees.

It is a way to give back to the community, Ralph said.

Isabel is just one of the people who help military retirees from the Fort Benning area.

The 18th annual Military Retiree Appreciation Days, Thursday through Nov. 3, are another way for retirees to receive more help.

During the two days there will be seminars providing information about retirement, Isabel said.

People can receive physical examinations during this time and there will be briefings on retirement services.

The two days of events will also include a breakfast with trainees in basic training, attending a graduation ceremony of A and B Companies, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, as well as attending a Rangers in Action demonstration.

For more information about the appreciation days, call the Retirement Services Office at 545-2715.

Retired Soldiers talk about employment

Attendees to discuss civilian jobs

Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Fort Benning will host a special Transition Seminar 2 to 5 p.m. Wednesday in Infantry Hall's Classroom 9.

This seminar brings a panel of former Army individuals to the stage to share, on a personal level, their experiences when transitioning to civilian occupations.

This seminar complements the efforts of the Army Career and Alumni Program because it provides insight and motivation for Soldiers to plan for the inevitable separation from Army, said Ron Green who retired from the Army 1993 and will lead Wednesday's panel.

The panel will consist of seven retired Army officers and a sergeant major now employed by a cross section of businesses around the country.

Companies such as IBM, MPRI, ENRON, Logiciel Consulting, T. Marzetti Company, IBMLink, and UNISYS currently employ the panel members. Their unique perspectives and insights into the civilian job market may not be available anywhere else.

This Transition Seminar is open to anyone interested in learning more about the transition process, but may be most appropriate for Soldiers who will retire or transition within the next two years.

The format for the seminar will start with brief introductions by the participants followed by question and answer periods to delve into all aspects of successfully moving from Army green to the business suit.

The panel members will respond to questions about preparation for transition, personal and family stress, resume preparation and uses, looking for the good jobs, networking, interviewing, job search experiences, positive attitude, rejection and success, and how to keep success going after being hired. Any additional transition related questions are welcomed from the audience.

Commanders and supervisors are encouraged to release Soldiers to attend this special Transition Seminar. The participants are offering this program because they want to help others who have given so much to the Army.

Good attendance by Fort Benning Soldiers will ensure a successful event. This is a once in a career opportunity open to all Soldiers nearing separation or just getting prepared for separation down the road.

Army: Needs more new Soldiers

leader, to use our prosperity and prestige, our awesome military might, to make the world a safer place and to help spread the blessings of liberty and freedom."

In the 21st century, Caldera said, the source of the nation's strength will not only be its military might and capability to respond if attacked, but also demonstrated in worldwide day-to-day affairs.

"The Army is our nation's premier engagement force, our strategic force of choice for people-to-people interventions that further our national interests."

He added that the Army Vision announced at last year's AUSA meeting would serve to transform the service from a Cold War, Industrial Age Army into a 21st century, Information Age Army.

Caldera also pointed to record re-enlistment figures for the second straight year and noted the service had made its recruiting goal for the current fiscal year.

This was a total of 20,000 more new Soldiers than in fiscal 1999.

The Army also made recruiting goals for all three components, active, reserve and National Guard.

In addition, the secretary touted new business practices to advertise, market and communicate to young people that the service is now using to ensure continued recruiting successes.

These include direct mail advertising, telemarketing and increased use to the Internet.

Caldera said an essential part of his and Shinseki's vision of transforming the Army is a commitment to investing in its people.

His new initiative, Army University Access Online, is a distance learning program announced in July and will provide Soldiers the opportunity to pursue a college education, regardless of where they are serving.

The first three locations are scheduled to begin operation in January, at Forts Hood, (Texas), Campbell, (Ky.), and Benning.

"Army University Access Online will give Soldiers an information age, learn-while-you-serve option," Caldera said, "that eliminates many of the obstacles they routinely encounter today trying to earn a college education.

"The Army University Access Online program will benefit both recruiting and retention and importantly, will produce the better educated, more productive, and more technology savvy Soldier that our country will need in the missions and the battlefields of tomorrow."

It will ensure those serving that they can leave the Army with the education and the skills needed to succeed in the today's economy, Caldera said.

"This is just one of the many ways we are working to communicate that the Army is still a place of unprecedented opportunity for America's youth," he said.

Caldera then appealed to the members of the audience asking them to continue their efforts to educate and acquaint the general American public with the Army.

Editor's note: more information about Army University Access online can be accessed on the Internet at www.earmyu.com.

Medal: Given at Retreat Ceremony

time, so I had to enlist the help of his mother and his boss to surprise him," Terry recalled. "But it seemed only fitting to make a formal presentation after what he had done for me."

Terry, however, was never formally presented his own medal, the Purple Heart, for the wounds he'd suffered in Vietnam — wounds that kept him confined to a hospital bed for a year.

"I kept waiting to get it, and it never came.

"Finally I went to personnel at Martin Army, and they handed it to me across the counter," Terry chuckled. "I didn't think too much about it, and I didn't blame anyone. I knew there were too many who didn't get one at all. I was just happy to have it."

Terry wore his Purple Heart for the remainder of his 21-year military career, never questioning the manner in which he received it.

In 1978, he retired in Columbus with his wife, Judy, and their three children, Kel, Melissa and Laura Meredith, who was named after the Soldier who saved Terry's life. Despite 11 surgeries and a myriad of recurring health problems stemming from his war wounds, Terry refused a medical disability and pursued a second career in sales and supervision.

Ironically, it was another officer's retirement that ultimately added the final chapter to Terry's military career.

Retired Col. Greg Camp, former Fort Benning chief of staff, moved to Columbus when he retired in 1997.

He soon discovered his new neighbor, Dan Terry, was a very modest man, but friendly, with a penchant for making wine he labeled with a purple heart.

It was often over a shared glass or two that Camp would pry a little information about Terry's Vietnam experience. Camp said it took almost four years — "quite a bit of digging, a little at a time" — for the whole story of Terry's injuries and subsequent health problems to unfold.

"Here is a guy who was left for dead on the battlefield, who fought to stay alive.

"A year later, when he recovers from his wounds, he picks up his Purple Heart at the personnel office as if it were a piece of paper," Camp said. "That just isn't right. He is, to me, the epitome of the unsung hero — someone who devoted his life to his country and his family and has never once given a second thought about that."

To right the matter, Camp enlisted the aid of Terry's wife and oldest daughter and secretly arranged for Thursday's formal presentation of the Purple Heart.

Though Terry balked at the plan when he learned of it two weeks ago, he relented when he discovered his son, daughter and four grandchildren were coming from Arkansas and Birmingham, Ala., to be present for the ceremony.

"I don't like attention, and that was a long time ago. But my daughter told me I wasn't going to get out of it and I had no say in the matter," Terry laughed. "I had to do it for my family and Greg."

Just two months after undergoing surgery to fuse three vertebrae and implant metal rods in his back, Terry stood arrow straight, the outline of his body brace barely perceptible beneath his suit jacket, as he was formally presented the Purple Heart "for wounds received in action in the Republic of Vietnam on 9 May, 1968."

ITB welcomes new commander to Sand Hill

Schorsch goes to Vicenza, Hayden's back

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Trainees from the Infantry Training Brigade welcomed a new commander Oct. 20 when Col. John Schorsch relinquished command to Lt. Col. Thomas Hayden in a ceremony on Kannell Field.

Schorsch served as the brigade's commander since Dec. 16, 1998.

He and his wife, Debbie, will move to Italy where he will be the chief of staff of the Southern European Task Force (Airborne).

"These men and women will do anything you ask," Schorsch told Hayden in his final address as ITB's top officer. "Lead them well."

Then addressing his five battalion commanders, who he served with for two years, by their radio call signs, Eagle six bid them "goodbye and good luck."

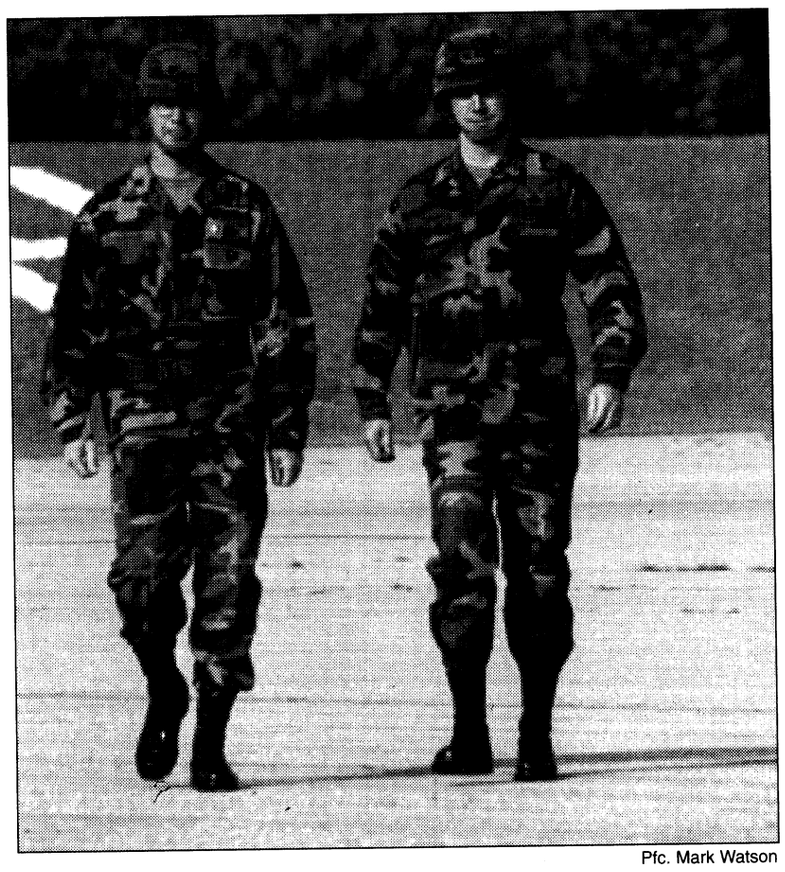
Schorsch left his legacy knowing that he oversaw the training of nearly half the Infantrymen within the Army's ranks, more than 15,000 trainees each year.

Hayden, a native of Richmond, Va., returned to Fort Benning and the ITB, where he is the former commander of 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

He most recently came from Fort Lewis, Wash., where he served with the 9th Infantry Division.

Other assignments included serving with the 3rd Armored Division in the Federal Republic of Germany, the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) in Fort Campbell, Ky.

He also served with the 24th Infantry Division in Fort Stewart, Ga., and the U.S. Army Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, N.C.



Hayden's awards include the Legion of Merit, the Meritorious Service Medal, the Army Commendation Medal, the Joint Achievement Medal, the Humanitarian Service Medal and the Expeditionary Service Medal. He has also been awarded the Expert Infantryman's Badge.

"This is a great day for the Hayden family," Hayden said after he accepted command of the largest brigade in the Army.

"We are extremely excited to have the opportunity to be back on the Fort Benning team and once again participate in the magic which takes place in this brigade.

"We are indeed fortunate to rejoin the ranks of this great unit."

Hayden brings with him his wife, Shanda, and their children, Ashley, Mark, Lindsey and John.

Officer candidates compete in squad competition

Soldiers face strenuous march, heavy task

Officer Candidate Kenneth Stewart
3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment

The shout of "first call" roused candidates from their sleeping bags to the frigid morning air of Garnsey Range Oct. 13.

Candidates from A Company, 3rd Battalion, (OCS) 11th Infantry Regiment, struggled to stow their gear into rucksacks as their first sergeant shouted for formation. The candidates were about to face one of their most strenuous challenges to date.

After three days of field training, candidates woke at 1:30 a.m. and separated into 10 different competition squads to carry a five gallon water can 11 miles in addition to the combat loads they were packing.

"The challenge was finding out how we carry the water and our gear and get to our objective together as a team," said Officer Candidate Dawn Carver.

A variety of strategies were employed by the candidates to reach the finish line in the quickest time possible.

Candidates were not allowed to leave their pre-designated course, but they were allowed to use any of their equipment and the items in their immediate surroundings to accomplish their mission. 2nd squad lashed two sticks together and hung their water can from it with 550 cord.

"It was a squad competition. Our team decided before we started that if we won, it would be great; but regardless of what place we earned, we would all finish. That was our goal and we did it," said Officer Candidate Candace Hurley.

> "The road march, obstacle course, and combatives were like an Army triathlon. It was one of the most physically challenging events I have ever completed."
> Officer Candidate Leann Courtney
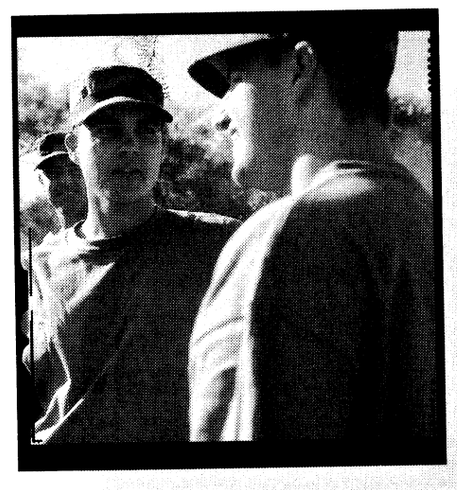
> A Company, 3rd Battalion, (OCS) 11th Infantry Regiment

After completing the 11-mile march with their water cans, the squads marched an additional 4.7 miles to the Bolton Confidence course. At the confidence course squads competed for the best time through numerous obstacles. The toughest obstacles for the candidates were the inverted wall, the log balance and the vault obstacles, Carver said.

Despite the rigors of completing a nearly 15-mile road march the candidates' morale was high.



"After completing these challenging events, I realized that as long as you have the mental toughness to win there is no physical pain that can stop you," said Officer Candidate Santos Arroyo.

Upon completion of the obstacle course, candidates once again put on their rucksacks and marched to an Airborne training pit where they practiced combatives. Candidates participated in hand-to-hand combat drills and bouts for submission for two hours.

"The road march, obstacle course, and combatives were like an Army triathlon. It was one of the most physically challenging events I have ever completed," said Officer Candidate Leann Courtney."

The competition was designed to test the candidates' strength, endurance and ingenuity, Capt. Paul Rhyne, A Co. commander, said.

Infantrymen try to earn expert title

Shannon S. Walsh

Sgt. James Taylor, A Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, disassembles a squad automatic weapon Wednesday during testing for the Expert Infantryman's Badge. The weeklong testing ends today and included a PT test, weapons knowledge, NBC warfare and first aid. Traditionally, fewer than 30 percent of the candidates will earn the badge.

Weeklong EIB testing ends today

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Testing wrapped up today for Soldiers trying to earn the Expert Infantryman's Badge.

The test measured each participant's physical fitness and ability to perform critical Infantry skills to standards of excellence.

"It shows who is the best at what we do, who is an expert at our job," said Pfc. Tyson Cole, B Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment.

Cole was among the many Soldiers hoping to end the week with a successful completion of the test.

The EIB test is administered once a year for a unit and must be completed within five days. Testing is voluntary and open to qualified officers and enlisted Soldiers. Candidates must be recommended by their commander prior to taking the test. They must also qualify as an expert with an M-16 rifle.

"It's a one-time deal and you don't have to worry about it for the rest of your career," said 1st Sgt. Dennis Jones, assistant NCOIC for the EIB test site. "After you pass, it sets you aside as someone who met that challenging test of the Infantryman."

Jones earned his EIB in 1984 and acknowledged that it can be a stressful experience. "If someone comes through and says they're not very nervous, they don't make it very far," Jones said.

Most of the Soldiers trained for two weeks prior to testing.

They were also given study guides to prepare them for the variety of tests on the course. EIB rules say there should be no practice areas on or near the testing sites.

Even if Soldiers couldn't physically practice a task, Jones said memorizing the steps helped. "You need to study the tasks, learn them and become proficient at those tasks," he said.

Soldiers trying for the EIB had to get above a 70 percent minimum score on their physical fitness tests.

Day and night land navigation were another part of the challenge. Candidates had three hours for each test to find a certain number of points along the route. Electronic navigational devices were prohibited during this phase of the testing.

There was also onsite testing of more than 30 tasks at more than 20 stations.

The tasks ranged from proficiency with hand grenades and first aid, to demonstrating knowledge of how to handle nuclear, biological and chemical warfare.

"I was most worried about the grenade station," said 2nd Lt. Curtis Cannon from B Co., 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. "It's mostly luck and you could get a bad bounce."

Sgt. James Taylor, A Co., 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. said the M-240 Bravo station was his biggest challenge. The first test at that station was to disassemble and reassemble an M-240.

"There are a lot of steps you have to go through in sequence and there's very little time to do it," Taylor said. "I'm trying to stay focused and take one station at a time."

> "After you pass, it sets you aside as someone who met that challenging test of the Infantryman."
> 1st Sgt. Dennis Jones
> assistant NCOIC of the EIB site

The last phase of testing was a 12-mile road march with a 35-pound pack.

Site instructors were certified by the EIB board prior to the testing. They had to show they could perform the same skills they were judging the candidates on. "They must be able to brief it, execute it and critique it," Jones said.

The EIB is seen as a mark of honor for hopeful candidates. "It will mean I'm a part of the great tradition of the Infantry," Cannon said.

If a candidate made up to three mistakes, or "no gos" on site tests, he will have to wait until testing begins again next year.

For candidates who made less than three mistakes, there were opportunities for retesting during the week.

Many hopefuls were ruled out early on in the testing. "Anything above 30 percent of remaining candidates is great at the end," Jones said.

Those who did make it through all five days were awarded their new badges today.

Tankers blast way into qualification tables

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Abrams tanks are making their way through the desert in a southeasterly sweep toward the positions of a well entrenched enemy force of both troops and Russian-made T-72 tanks.

The tank named "Bling Bling," along with its wing man crew of "Black Beard" are in the lead when one tank commander spots an enemy tank while looking through the night sights.

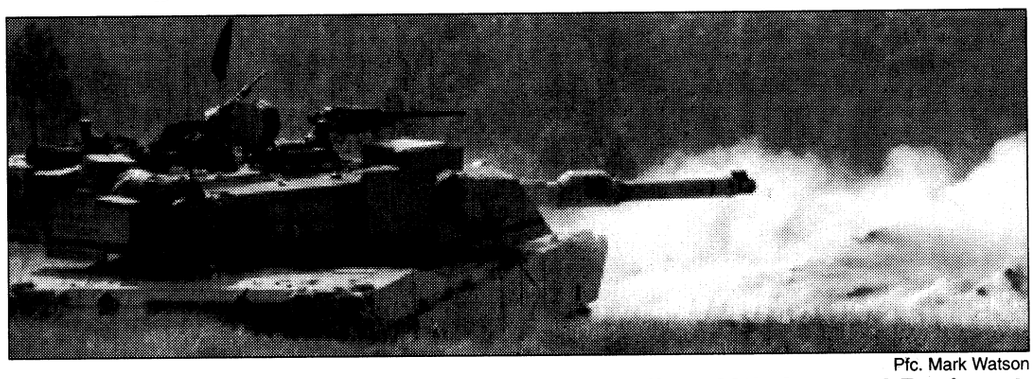
The tank stood out white from the heat it generated against the rest of the desert bathed in green.

"Tank identified," yelled the Soldier as he maneuvered the sights of the main gun to the center of the enemy vehicle.

"Up," shouted the loader as he closed the breach of the 120 mm main gun holding a sabot round, the main tank killing round for the Abrams. The tank commander ranged the enemy at 2200 meters, "Fire!" the tank commander ordered.

"On the way!" the gunner said and with that he pulled one of the five triggers inside the tank.

"Lost, lost, lost!" the commander said as the muzzle flash and the dust from the round going toward the target obscured the enemy tank from Bling Bling.



Watching through their sights, the gunner and tank commander of Black Beard watch the tracer from the round streaking toward the enemy tank. The round disappeared into the tank punching a small hole through its armored plates.

With a blinding flash, fuel and ammunition from the enemy tank explode putting it out of action.

"Target!" Black Beard's commander called out to the Bling Bling crew.

"Ohh yeahs" and "Hooahs" are heard on the radio from the Bling Bling crew.

Although this was a fictional battle, it is the reality tankers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armored Regiment, 3rd Brigade were training for.

Pfc. Mark Watson

The crew of Black Beard, B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armored Regiment, 3rd Brigade, fires from a defensive position Oct. 20 on Hastings Range.

The tankers were taking part in their biannual qualification tables to prepare them for combat. On Oct. 20 it was B Co.'s turn at Hastings Range and Tank Table Eight.

Tank Table Eight consisted of six day runs and four night runs in which the tankers faced 10 engagement opportunities. Each engagement was a little different.

"Table Eight brings all the weapons into use," Capt. David Meyer, the company commander said. "On some engagements they use only the main gun and on others they use the main gun and the machine guns."

Some had only one stationary target while other engagements consisted of stationary and moving tank targets and ground troop targets, he said.

The tankers fired from both defensive and offensive positions on targets up to 2200 meters, for the main gun, and 800 meters for the machine guns.

"Tank Table Eight is the best test to properly manipulate the firing systems to hit targets," Meyer said.

"For a lot of (the tankers) it is their first gunnery," he said. "We tell the NCOs to train their crews like they are going to war and their crews' successes are the direct result of the NCOs."

Meyer said the crews were doing fantastic. The main gun rounds struck their targets with a 94 percent accuracy rate.

Spc. Ahmed Edwards, the gunner for Bling Bling, said he was pleased with Tank Table Eight.

"You really learn a lot from it," Edwards, the gunner of Bling Bling said. "We had some problems with our tank and we fought it, but we worked on it as a crew and did a good job.

"We really came a long way from the first tank table," he said. He, along with the rest of the Bling Bling crew shot 822 points out of a possible 1000 earning them a superior rating.

The crew of Black Beard was equally satisfied with their performance.

"We really did a good job," Staff Sgt. Don Hickson, Black Beard's commander said. "We had some misfires, but our reaction time was good. We were pretty squared away even though we had a lot of breaks in firing."

After each crew completed a run, an after action report is held to critique and evaluate their actions. Video taken from a thermal camera shows the tankers where they were shooting.

After facing the tables, the tankers are able to fight as a team better than they were before. They faced problems they may face in combat and learned how to overcome them.

Minnesota business donates vintage military motorcycle

A 1942 Harley-Davidson military motorcycle, complete with sidecar, and photographs detailing life in a World War II prisoner of war camp are two of the latest exhibits on display at the National Infantry Museum.

While the motorcycle is a gift from a Minnesota corporation to the museum's permanent collection, the photographs are only on loan from the Andersonville National Historic Site.

This summer Mark Stump, vice president of Katun Corporation in Minneapolis, Minn., contacted the museum's director, Frank Hanner, with an offer. Katun owned a restored Harley-Davidson WLA and wanted to donate the vehicle to the museum.

"I think Frank thought I was joking when I called," Stump said.

It was no joke.

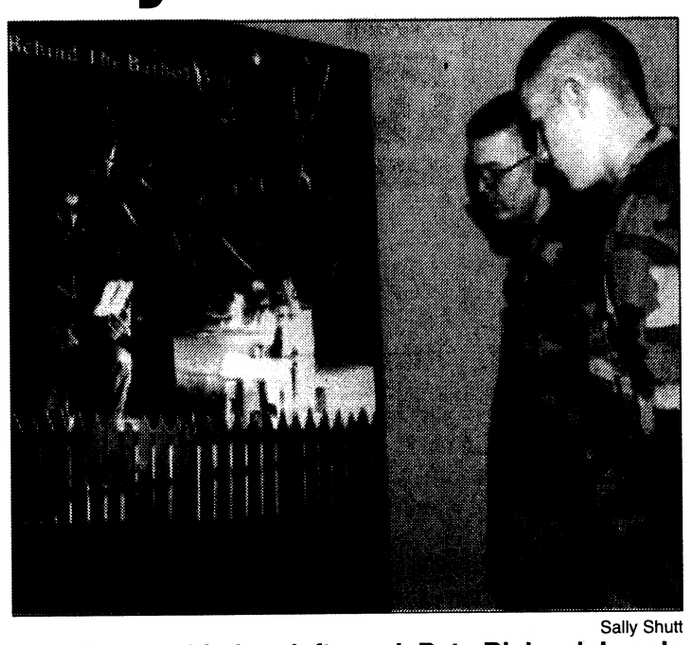
Stump and his wife, Judy, had visited the museum earlier while they were on post to see their son, 1st Lt. Matthew Stump, graduate from Ranger School.

"I was very impressed with the museum. What a wonderful place," Stump said.

But it wasn't until Katun was about to redecorate the lobby where the motorcycle had been displayed for several years that Stump had the idea of giving the vehicle to Fort Benning.

Katun, the world's largest independent provider of replacement copier parts, had purchased the motorcycle from a man and paid to have it restored to mint condition, Stump said.

"We were redesigning the lobby and thinking about selling it. One day I said, 'You know this motorcycle really belongs in a museum and I know just the one,'" Stump recalled.



Although the motorcycle is fully operational, it has been "pickled" — the gas and oil removed — in order to meet museum requirements.

Once representatives from Katun signed a gift agreement with the U.S. government, the motorcycle was loaded on a C-130 flown by the Minnesota Air Guard, which was already scheduled to land at Lawson Army Airfield.

Hanner met the plane at the airfield where he, his staff and personnel from the Directorate of Community Activities unloaded the museum's latest acquisition and transported it to its new home on the third floor.

During World War II Harley-Davidson produced a total of 88,000 motorcycles. Each armored division was assigned about 500 motorcycles used to transport personnel engaged in messenger service, reconnaissance and police operations, Hanner said.

BACK OFF! Take control!

"Any woman who has not taken the proper steps to learn the basics of defending herself from an attack is already a victim — it just hasn't been recorded yet."

Former Ranger teaches self defense

A former Fort Benning Ranger is waging a personal battle against domestic violence and rape. He's teaching women to survive any assault, whether it takes place in the home or on the street.

Kestner Edens has been practicing martial arts for 27 years. After retiring from the Army in 1999, he and a friend opened a dojo, or martial arts academy, in Columbus. Not only does he offer courses in the art of Ninjutsu, but he teaches special classes in situational awareness and self-defense for women only.

"It's not martial arts. That's the first thing I always tell people," Edens said. "I can't teach women to be martial artists in two weeks, but I can give them the tools to avoid dangerous situations whenever possible and survive and escape an assault if it does happen."

Edens and four assistants teach "BACK OFF!" — a 16-hour, two and a half week, self-defense training program designed specifically for women by Alex Mordine, Eden's friend and former Ranger buddy from Camp Zama, Japan.

"We saw the statistics — they're unbelievable. There are 78 rapes each hour, 1,872 every day in the U.S.," Edens said. "We came up with the idea to teach women to empower themselves to avoid or survive threats of rape or violence of any kind. Alex designed the curriculum and we started teaching it in Japan."

The course is now offered in various cities around the U.S. and overseas.

It addresses the most common situations where a high probability of physical assault occurs between a male aggressor and a female victim.

Students are first taught to avoid possible confrontation. They practice simple techniques to create distance between themselves and a potential aggressor or to stun and temporarily incapacitate an assailant.

When no other options are available, Edens teaches his students how to

A CLOSER LOOK

Basic steps to keep from becoming a victim:

- Use common sense and trust your intuition.
- Walk, talk and carry yourself with confidence. Be assertive. Do not allow strangers to assist you.
- Do not accept an open container from anyone.
- Never open the door to a stranger. Use a peephole rather than a chain. Talk through the door if necessary.
- Don't list your address or first name in the phone book.
- Walk facing traffic so you can see who is approaching.
- If you feel you are being followed, turn, look and stay in a crowded area. Do not be afraid or embarrassed to make a scene.
- If you must work late, have someone walk you to your car. Always park in well lighted areas.
- If you break down while on the road, stay in your car. Use your cell phone. Do not get out and accept assistance from a stranger. Ask them through the window to call for assistance.
- Don't get on an elevator with a stranger. Stand near the alarm button when you are on an elevator.
- Know your neighbors and their telephone numbers.
- When confronted by a possible attacker be assertive and show self-confidence. Make noise. Yell "Fire."
- Identify avenues of escape when you enter a building.

Former Faith principal visits post

Former Faith Middle School principal Dr. Beth Middlemiss has been named the acting deputy director of the Department of Defense Elementary Secondary Schools.

Middlemiss, who served as principal at Faith from 1994 to 1998, visited Fort Benning schools Oct. 19.

She toured various schools and the administrative building where she first began working as the director of staff development and public relations in 1985.

"I was at Fort Benning for 13 years," Middlemiss said. "I was impressed then, and now in my current role with DDESS, I still marvel at the things I see and read about Fort Benning. I love this place, and I love these people, and I'm so proud of the things they've done."

Middlemiss started her career in education as a public school teacher and principal in Coweta County, Ga., where she remained until she started working at Fort Benning.

"I never had any involvement with the military prior to Fort Benning," she said. "I rapidly developed a great respect for the military family and their involvement in their childrens' educations."

Following a stint as the director of staff development for Baltimore City Schools, Middlemiss returned to the DoDEA system as the chief of staff at DDESS in 1999, after concluding the DoDEA mission sets it apart from public schools.

"Our entire mission, our whole focus, is to serve the military family.

"I'm impressed by the ability of teachers and principals to bring new students in and instantly make them a part of what's going on in the classroom," Middlemiss said. "And the new programs being implemented and expanded every year to encourage and foster ties between the schools and the military families is phenomenal."

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning schools, said Middlemiss' visit was a combination of business and pleasure.

"She was here to work on a

Male domestic abuse victims on rise

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Talk about domestic violence and images of cowering women and hulking male aggressors automatically come to mind.

Such is not always the case.

Surprisingly only 25 percent of domestic aggression is exclusively male, according to American social scientists Murray Straus and Richard Gelles.

Straus and Gelles point out that violence is an inclination that knows no gender. Females are the sole aggressors equally as often as men.

In fact, in the 20 years Straus and Gelles have been surveying and collecting data, they've concluded women hit, slap, kick, punch, throw objects and use weapons as often as men.

The U.S. Department of Justice released a yearlong survey of emergency rooms admissions that recorded 30,000 male victims requiring treatment for domestic-violence related injuries.

That was 1997. Experts say those numbers are steadily increasing.

So who's been keeping it a secret?

For the most part — men.

Domestic violence is traditionally believed to be a man's domain. Women are often quick to deny instances of mutual combat, but men are even less likely to accept the label of victim.

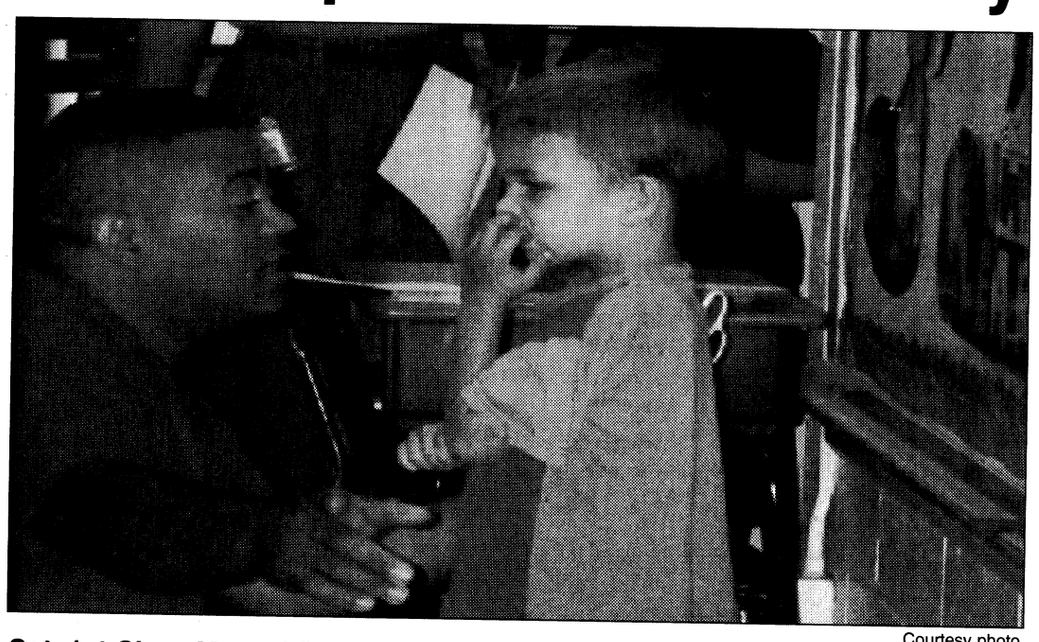
Bill Sweeney, a licensed clinical social worker, leads a men's therapy group for Fort Benning's Social Works Services. He said his clients have the same problems and complaints as women.

"They tell me they have the same issues women do," Sweeney said. "They complain about emotional abuse, verbal abuse and occasionally physical abuse."

Here's the catch, Sweeney said.

By and large, his clients only talk about being the victims of abuse in private, one-on-one counseling sessions.

Sweeney said men, and Soldiers in particular, equate the admission of abuse with an admission of weakness.



"Their egos are involved and they seem to perceive it as a blow to their pride," Sweeney said. "Even if they admit to being hit or abused in a group session, they're really quick to put on a macho front and minimize the incident."

Sharon Cox-Bevley, a licensed social worker with Social Works Services, said the men she deals with "don't want their business on the street," so they'd rather not report abuse.

Kelley Hill Soldiers are helping Columbus school children by becoming partners with Eastway Elementary School.

In conjunction with the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce Partners in Education Program, the 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, has "partnered" with Eastway Elementary School on Buena Vista Road.

Capt. Heather Mack and Pfc. Aroura Brown-Warren were chosen as the 203rd FSB PIE coordinators.

They meet regularly with Principal Tommy Bassett and Kay Dowis, assistant principal, to discuss plans for the schoolyear.

"Our commitment is to make a difference in the students' lives. If we connect with just one child, we have accomplished our mission," Mack said.

The 203rd FSB assisted with the school's hearing and vision screening in September.

In previous years Eastway was unable to screen all students within the three-day prescribed timeline.

Thanks to the Eagle Battalion, more than 550 students received the mandatory hearing and vision screening.

"We are extremely grateful for their help," said Linda Jenkins, Eastway Elementary's PIE and Parent, Teacher, Student Association coordinator.

Mack and Brown-Warren also designed certificates of achievement, which were presented at an Honors Breakfast to students who made the Honor Roll and Principal's List.

Mack said the 203rd FSB has many activities planned throughout the school year.

"Currently we are preparing for Red Ribbon Week, CPR and first-aid training for the teachers in November and a Christmas tree lighting ceremony where the students will make ornaments and serenade us with carols," she said.

"We also plan on conducting a 'Commander for a Day' essay contest," Brown-Warren said. "The winner of the contest will spend the day at Fort Benning with a commander.

"We will provide the winner with a set of children's BDUs with the Marne patch and their name, rank, and branch insignia on it.

The winner will really learn what it's like to be the commander for a day."

DoD reaches out to military kids in public schools

Directorate to support school system

Staff Sgt. Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — DoD's new Educational Opportunities Directorate hopes to provide for "quality education" of all 870,000 children in the military family — not just the 110,000 who attend DoD schools.

"Our concern was that at any given time, we really weren't reaching all of our children," said Victor Vasquez, deputy assistant secretary of defense for military community and family policy. "Overall, we do very well for the children that are in our system, but we don't have them there all the time."

Vasquez stressed civilian schools do provide a quality education, but added "military children have other issues that they bring to the table."

He said the purpose of the new directorate is to "facilitate, advocate and support" open communications between DoD and local school systems. "What I see taking place down the road is a sharing and cross-fertilization of best practices," he said.

To get the directorate off to a good start and foster good communications, officials have scheduled a series of six regional roundtable discussions over the next two years.

More than 100 state and local education experts, teachers, military parents and students, and DoD officials attended the first such roundtable in San Antonio in September.

Future roundtable discussions will be in Savannah, Ga., San Diego, the Virginia Tidewater region, Seattle, and a Midwestern site to be determined. Officials targeted areas with a high concentration of military bases.

Vasquez said the Texas officials were receptive to opening a dialogue with DoD, and they even pledged to start looking into a few issues that are particularly vexing to military families constantly on the move.

Some issues discussed at the Texas meeting were

• Reciprocity of standardized test scores. A student may get tested in one state, then move to another state and get tested again. "Will there be reciprocity for that process, or do our children spend their entire school careers being tested?" Vasquez said.

• Standardization of transcripts. "We want young people to know that if they get a grade in one school, it'll be similar to what's accepted in another school," he said.

• Continuity of extracurricular activities. "When young people are in transition, how can they continue an extracurricular activity from one school to another without being left out because they missed a tryout or because they missed a sign-up deadline?" he said.

"It was clear to me as I listened to this dialogue that they have worked with military children long enough to know that there are issues children from an average civilian community don't deal with," he said, adding that cooperation could do more than just help military children.

"Ultimately our goal is to build an education system that all will benefit from," he said. "In the long run, it will serve our nation better."

Abuse: Knows no gender

"They don't worry about the punitive aspect of reporting their wife's abuse. They just don't want their chain of command involved or their neighbors knowing their personal business."

Cox-Bevley said even when women admit they are physically violent, their spouses prefer to ignore the issue.

"I'd say almost 100 percent of the time, the men tell me the incident was blown way out of proportion and they don't want to talk about it. They're paranoid about what other people will think."

Cox-Bevley said female aggressors, like male aggressors, have been taught to believe violence solves conflicts.

"More and more, we're seeing women perpetrators who just think it's the thing to do, the way to communicate, because that's what they observed growing up," she said.

National statistics support Cox-Bevley's observation. Violence by women in traditionally male categories is on the upswing. Girls are the fastest growing group of violent offenders in the areas of robbery, homicide, gang activity and assault.

Sweeney said he's seen a steady increase in the six years he's worked on Fort Benning.

"We can't order a wife to get counseling the way we can a Soldier," Sweeney said. "But the only way things will change is if the victims frustration overrides his pride and he starts reporting incidents of abuse."

physically harm the aggressor.

He said women can learn to counter the fact that men naturally possess a greater amount of physical strength.

"We teach real-world situations, whether it's domestic abuse or a stranger assault," Edens said. "There's no way a woman can take on a 200-pound man for any great length of time, but there are techniques she can learn to defend herself long enough to escape. That's the key to survival."

Erin Contois, a 15-year-old Spencer High School student, took the course in January. She now assists Edens as an instructor and demonstrator.

"I'm not a prize fighter, but I'm a lot more confident in my ability to handle myself in any situation," Contois said. "It was so easy to learn and practicing on real people helped me know I can apply what I learned if I really need to."

Edens recommends the course for anyone over the age of 12, though he caution the course addresses various types of sexual assault.

curriculum project, but she was very eager to renew old frienships.

"We had an absolutely delightful visit," McMullen said. "We still see evidence of the incredible work she did while she was here, and we're proud of what she has accomplished since then because she's one of our own."

Middlemiss started her tour of Fort Benning at Stowers Elementary School, where she hailed the accomplishments of Principal Glenn Hughes and enrichment teacher Millie Harris, who were recently named Department of Defense Education Activity's Principal of the Year and Teacher of the Year.

"This is the first time one DoDEA school district has claimed both titles," Middlemiss said. "That's quite an accomplishment. I know they'll both represent Fort Benning and DoDEA wonderfully.

"It's truly a great day to be in education and a great day to be at Fort Benning."

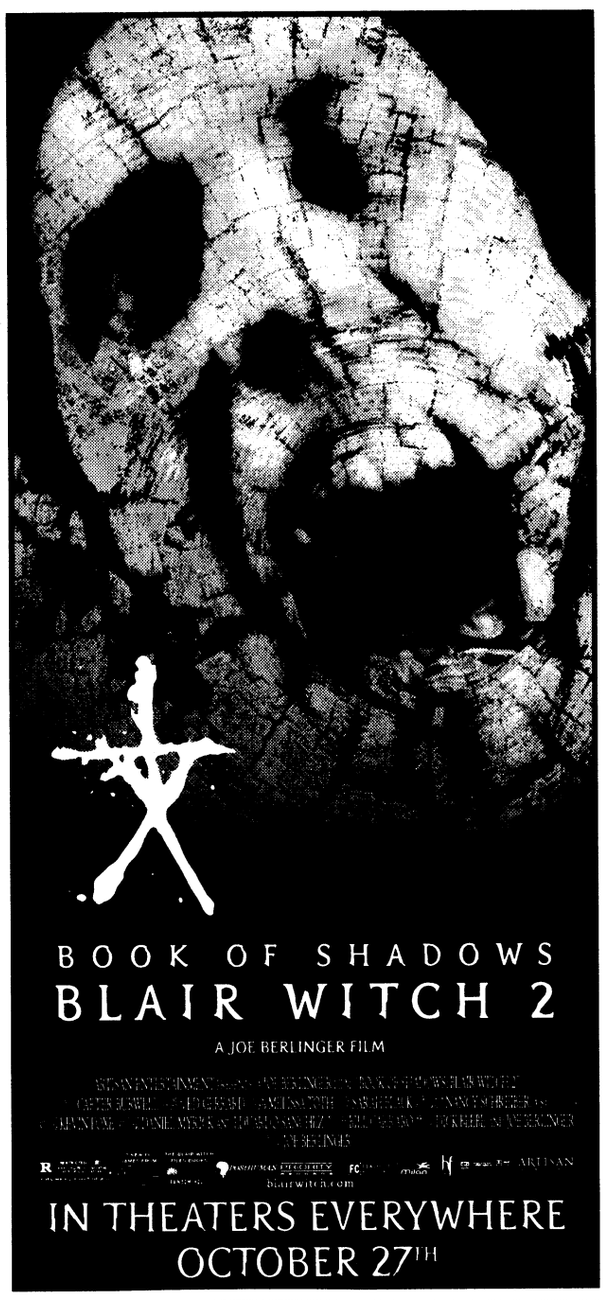
"We are thrilled to have this beautiful and rare item here at the museum," Hanner said. "It is a wonderful addition to our collection."

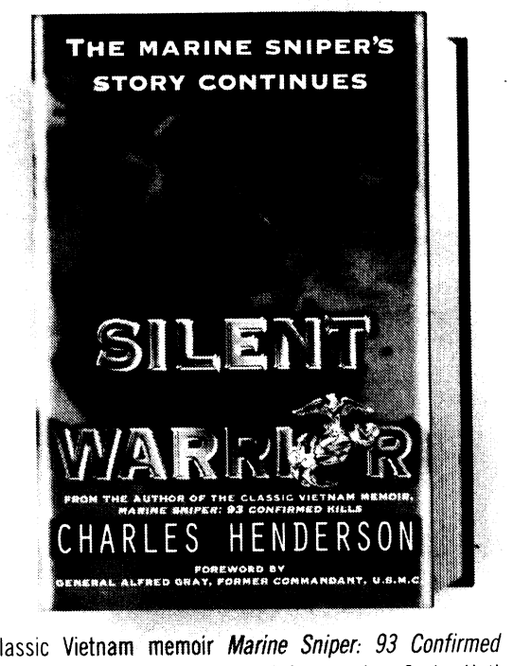
Stump was recognized Thursday at the commanding general's retreat ceremony.



In addition to the motorcycle, museum visitors will also have a chance to see in black and white what life was like in a World War II stalag.

The exhibit, Spinelli: Behind the Wire, features the work of former prisoner of war Angelo Spinelli. The traveling exhibit was produced by Andersonville National Historic Site with grants from the Georgia Humanities Council and Friends of Andersonville.

A native of New York, Spinelli was assigned to the 1st Armored Division as a military photographer. He was captured in 1943 in North Africa and eventually sent to a stalag in Germany where he spent two years.



He used cigarettes as bargaining chips with a guard, and eventually traded for a camera, film and tripod. The original camera is displayed in the exhibit.

"This exhibit gives us unique pictures of how they lived, survived and even entertained themselves to overcome the constant boredom while they were waiting to see what was going to happen to them," Hanner said. "This trained photographer made a historic record for his fellow POWs and the rest of us."

Students learn literacy lessons

Loyd Elementary School

In the glow of excitement to a new school day the children and teachers at Loyd Elementary School eagerly await the arrival of parents Oct. 18. Loyd held it's first 3-L project — Literacy Lessons at Loyd.

Literacy Lessons at Loyd is a project where students in pre-K through second grade invite parents to come and experience a literacy lesson with their child.

When you say literacy you automatically think of reading. However this lesson can indulge any subject area — reading, math, science or social studies.

Strategies are demonstrated to parents during this lesson so that parents can in turn, use them at home when reviewing daily work.

The basis of all the strategies presented will be integrating literacy in every aspect of school curricula. Parents were actively participating with their children.

Gail Stafford's pre-K classes demonstrated how they were able to use a calendar. They recognized the month, recited the day of the week and counted the days. They also made monster puppets with their parents.

The parents of the kindergartners learned how to use environmental print to reinforce skills taught in kindergarten.

One group of children copied words from empty food containers into their spiral bound notebooks. Another group circled the letter of the week on coupons and cash register receipts.

A third group made posters using letters cut from magazines. The final group made number books using numbers and pictures cut from newspaper supplements. Parents and children worked together and vowed to repeat the activities at home.

Tracy Pate and Mamie Rush's class worked on Phonemic Awareness. Both classes demonstrated strategies parents could use to increase a child's ability to recognize rhyming words. Oral blending of letters was done to form words, and listening for certain letter sounds and the beginning and ending of words.

Kathrine Walker's kindergarten class rotated through literacy workshops emphasizing phonemic awareness.

Children and their parents worked with magnetic letters and chalkboards to gain strategies to further develop their awareness of the short vowel sound. In another group, children worked individually with the teacher in reinforcing beginning consonant sounds. The other group used technology to reinforce a variety of concepts taught in kindergarten, all of which are literacy-based.

Tracy Reynolds' first-grade students surfed the Internet the day before the lesson and printed pictures of various wild "cats" — bobcat, cheetah, tiger, jaguar, and a snow leopard. During the literacy lesson, the students used a Venn Diagram to compare and contrast a regular cat to the pictures of the wild cats. They did a follow up lesson that involved sentence structure.

First-grade students participated in an activity with their parents that focused on sentence structure.

Teachers in each of these classes presented the lesson and practiced with the students, then parents and students used scrambled words to make sentences.

Mable Wilson's special needs class participated in the reading of Coco Can't Wait. This story is about a little girl named Coco who wanted to visit her grandmother. After the story, the students packed a suitcase pretending to go to Grandma's. Each student packed a particular item.

As the students approached the suitcase they were expected to tell the name of the previous item packed along with their own. The items were labeled so the children could see in print what was going into the suitcase.

This activity reinforced short term memory, repetition, sequencing and gave print meaning to concrete objects. The last student read all the items that were in the suitcase and proceeded to add his own.

The boys and girls in Louise Anderson, Robert Thorne and Doris Wamble's classes enjoyed a morning of learning with several of their parents during the Literacy Lessons at Loyd program.

The teachers taught the students a phonics lesson on the sound /a/ (ai and ay). These second-graders took turns recalling words they already know, building new words around the vowels and writing their words on the chalkboard. At the conclusion of the activity each class formed several teams with parents included.

The teams had 15 minutes to create a new list of words with long vowel sounds, to write words on paper strips and to glue the strips together to create one long paper chain.

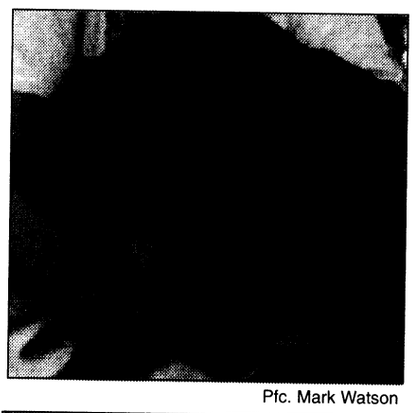
The teams worked hard. There was noise, movement, discussion and the chains grew longer and longer. Finally, the time was up and the teams measured their chains — one against the other. Yes, one was longer than the other.

However, everyone was a winner because everyone learned how to sound out and how to spell a long list of long /a/ words.

In the light of a successful day, the adventure at Loyd does not stop. Our goal was and is to expose parents to a multitude of Literacy strategies they can use while working with their children at home.

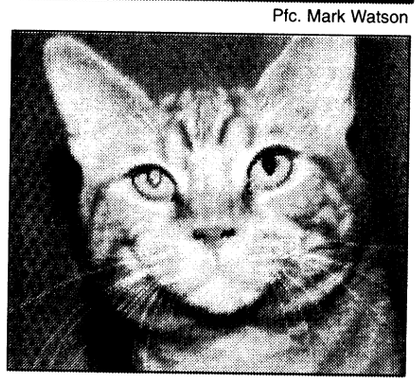
Community Oriented Policing

COPS CORNER



Fort Benning Military Police will be conducting increased speed enforcement patrols in the following areas.

Monday	Craig	11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.
Tuesday	Wold and Patch	2:30 to 3:30 p.m.
Wednesday	Burr	noon to 1 p.m.
Thursday	Davis Hill	1:30 to 2:30 p.m.
Friday	Outgoing	9:30 to 10:30 a.m.



Safety second:

Its big money if you get caught leaving the scene of an accident! Georgia Traffic Code 40-6-273 requires drivers involved in accidents resulting in injury or death to any person, or resulting in property damage of $500 or more to notify police by the quickest means of communication. It doesn't take much these days to add up to $500. Know the law and keep it!

Jesus offers spiritual road map for God's design

Chaplain (Maj.) T. Blake Bowers
Martin Army Community Hospital

reflections

When planning a journey, one of the questions is "How do we get there?"

What direction do we take? We use some sort of map or navigating aid to help us reach our destination. As the journey begins we find we've lost our way.

The map may not be up to date. Someone just put in a new road. The geography in the area may be wrong or the map has an error. We end up lost.

In St. John 14:5 the disciple Thomas said to Jesus "Lord we don't know where you are going, so how can we know the way?" Spiritually speaking there are many lost people asking this same question.

Some are just going around in endless circles. Some have a map, yet the map is wrong. Some take the wrong road, and some just don't know the way.

Thomas wanted to know the way to where Christ was going. He and the other disciples wanted to be where Christ was present.

Jesus, speaking to Thomas and the other disciples around him said "I am the way, the truth and the life."

Talk about directness! No hesitation on the part of Jesus. Jesus spoke directly to who and what he was.

His answer was clear and concise.

Jesus was saying you want to get me, I am the way. Notice he didn't answer, "I know the way," or, "Go this way or that way." He made a direct statement.

As the way, Jesus is the road map for God's design for our life.

He becomes the bridge that helps us over our s to a better way of living. Go his way and you have clear direction. A road map already mapped out in perfection.

The disciples were also told "I am the truth."

For some, truth is relative. Others see truth as abstract. Still, others see truth as situational. In Jesus, truth is consistent. It stays the same. It does not change. It does not falter or waiver. The knowledge of his truth keeps you on the right way.

It helps you avoid traps, danger and adversity from the enemy. When you follow the way, truth is made plain and clear. The truth in Christ is clear as crystal.

The last piece of this great statement is "I am the life." Life does not just mean a mortal being with blood pumping through him, but a vitalized and alive spirit that enables one to conquer the obstacles, detours, hardships and distractions one may encounter while going Christ's way.

It is also the life that is yet to come — the eternalness of how one gets there from here. When we follow Christ the way, the truth on that way, then we have life to follow with Christ as the spirit leaves the mortal body and the heart ceases to beat. Life continues in the presence of Christ. We are not lost from Christ. Life in Christ always provides us a way to be in his presence.

John Tenney said, "Without the way there is no going, without the truth no knowing and without life, no living." If you're feeling lost in your life, if you feel you're going in circles and have no direction, if you seek purpose and meaning, seek out Christ to bring you out of your lostness.

Christ is how you get there (heaven) from here (earth).

Infertility causes emotional roller coaster

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond c. Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

One out of six couples of childbearing age experience the heartache of infertility. Infertility is usually defined as the inability to conceive after attempting for a year.

Primary infertility refers to couples who have never been able to conceive.

Occasionally, the problem is not conception but the inability to bring the fetus to viability outside the womb due to miscarriage.Unfortunately the likelihood of pregnancy decreases with age. With more couples postponing childbearing to their late 20s and early 30s, fewer married women are becoming pregnant.

In addition, women who have conceived in the past may experience problems conceiving again.

This secondary infertility is just as emotionally painful to the couple attempting to conceive as it is for the couple who has never conceived.

Medical tests usually begin on the male first, since he is easier to test. Medical testing of women is more difficult and expensive.

As a general rule, in one-third of the cases, the problem is attributed to the male. In another third, the problem is attributed to the female.

In the last third, the problem is both male and female or unknown.

Modern medicine is increasingly helping infertile couples to conceive and bring healthy babies to term. The downside is that the process can be time consuming, the cost can be prohibitive and the emotions experienced can be overwhelming.

As a result, some couples elect to adopt or choose to live without children.

If you are experiencing the emotional roller coaster of infertility, free counseling and support are available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, Building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Brewers defeat No. 1 seeded team

Karen Taylor

Orlando Vega-Torres, B Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, guns the ball toward home in Sunday's game.

Baseball club earns come-from-behind win over Rockies

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The Brewers put the "fight" in fighting chance on Sunday as their battle was a long and strenuous one against the No. 1 seeded Rockies at Golden Park.

After a disastrous first inning left them in the hole by five, the Brewers slowly chipped away at the Rockies' lead to score the go-ahead run in the last inning for a 6-5 win.

"I reminded them that we've beat this team every time we've faced them (this season). (I told them) 'Now let's go out there and win inning by inning,'" said Brewers coach Ed Gawlik, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment.

Brewers' pitcher Orlando Vega-Torres, B Company, 203rd Forward Support Bn., struggled to find his rhythm in the first inning and loaded the bases, which opened the flood gates for the Rockies' power hitters.

Brennen Knight came through on a 3-2 pitch with a grand slam to left center for a quick 4-0 lead.

The Rockies still had some rally left in them as they scored one more before inning's end for a formidable 5-0 lead.

Vega-Torres seemed to shrug off any frustration and his respectable recovery on the mound gave the Brewers a fighting chance by stifling the Rockies from crossing home plate again that game.

"I just had to slow down and do what I know I had to do — throw the ball and get my head in the game. And it worked out well," Vega-Torres said.

By slowing down his mechanics he regained control on the mound especially his change-up and the fastball.

"Orlando is one of those pitchers who takes time to get rolling," Gawlik said.

Although there were pitchers warming up in the bull pen during the first few innings, Gawlik decided against pulling Vega-Torres from the game.

"He started to come back. He did what he needed to do and renewed my confidence in him," Gawlik said. "When you have confidence in your guys you can leave them in after (the other team) scores five runs on you."

As Vega-Torres gained momentum, Rockies' pitcher Walter Rivera lost his edge in the final innings. Rivera, who challenged the Brewers' batters throughout the game and tallied seven strikeouts, allowed a single, three walks and two wild pitches in the last inning that scored the tying and winning runs.

Rick Johanningsmeir, C Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., started off the last inning with a single, which continued his ability to make contact in key situations.

In their previous playoff game against the Rangers Oct. 18, Johanningsmeir hit a double for 2 RBIs, which started the Brewers first-inning scoring frenzy of six runs. The Brewers won 6-3.

Anthony Ferraioli, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., started the inning with a double that set up the scoring opportunity.

Ferraioli, who has spent many games as the lead-off man for the Brewers, said he is comfortable in that spot in the lineup and

One lucky family will spend "Christmas in the Country," compliments of Fort Benning's Youth Services.

YS is giving away a weekend stay at the new Uchee Creek Campground chalets, and the winner's name will be drawn from the list of children registered for the YS winter basketball program.

Youth family members between the ages of 6 and 15 must be registered during the Oct. 30 through Nov. 9 sign-up period to be eligible for the drawing. The "Christmas in the Country" weekend will be Dec. 15-16.

"This will be a wonderful opportunity to get back to nature, watch the deer and other wildlife, enjoy the great country atmosphere and get into the good old-time Christmas spirit," said Linda Laine, director of Youth Services.

The drawing will be held Dec. 2 at the YS football game at the Doughboy Stadium prior to evening games. The winner will be notified Dec. 4.

Individuals registering for the basketball program after Nov. 9 will not be eligible to win. The winner must remain in the program for the entire season, the exceptions are medical emergency or PCS.

For more information, call 545-3070.

API Outdoors recalls 54,000 faulty treestands, tree seats

Georgia Better Business Bureau

In cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission and API Outdoors, a division of Outland Sports Inc., of Tallulah, La., is voluntarily recalling 54,000 treestands and tree seats used by hunters. The seats of these devices can collapse causing the occupant to fall.

CPSC and API Outdoors are not aware of any injuries or incidents involving these products. The recall is being conducted to prevent the possibility of injury.

The treestands included in the recall are: the ALUM-I-Loc, model number AL50, ALUM-I-Loc Original, Model number AL100, ALUM-I-Loc Magnum, model number AL100M, Pro-Lock Magnum, model number AL050P, and Pro-Lock Magnum, model number AL100MR. A yellow and black label with the product name and model number is located on the platform. The Bobcat Tree seat, model number AL910 is also part of the recall. The seats on both the stands and seats are covered with camouflage fabric.

Hunting supply stores and catalogs nationwide sold the products from January 1999 through August 2000.

Prices for the treestands were between $60 and $90 and the seats were priced between $30 and $40. People should stop using the recalled products and contact API Outdoors for a free repair. Call API Outdoors at (888) 530-6098 between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. central time Monday through Friday.

Cherokees shut out Greenwaves 14-0; Spencer season ends soon

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

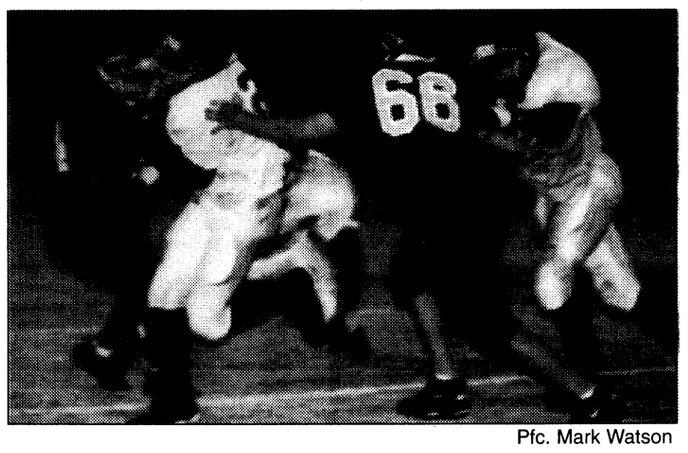
The Spencer Greenwaves defense was unable to stop the rushing of the Kendrick Cherokees and lost their homecoming game, 14-0 Oct. 20 in Memorial Stadium.

The Cherokees, a Columbus High School team, earned their fourth shutout of the season.

The Greenwaves have a record of 1-6.

The game started with a bang for the Cherokees, but after driving the ball 45 yards, the Greenwaves' defense stopped the drive.

Both coaches said that turnovers were keeping them from scoring from the opening drive on.



Receiving the ball again, the Cherokees surged down the field to the three yard line.

The Kendrick team got off to an early lead when the Cherokees' Kevin Williams took the ball off the snap and rushed in for the only score of the half.

The Greenwaves nearly scored with only seconds remaining in the half, but on a pass into the endzone wide receiver Answa Merine dropped the ball after it was tipped by a Cherokee defender.

"We missed a few key plays which could have been scoring opportunities," Oliver Davis, the Family tradition found in pumpkin patch

outdoor corner

A friend of mine once lamented that the nomadic life of the military family makes it nearly impossible to carry on holiday family traditions. I disagree.

In some cases it may be a bit more challenging, but it can be a lot more fun. It's all in the attitude.

Take for instance our family's tradition of looking for the perfect pumpkins for Halloween. If we lived in one place and never relocated, we could visit the same pumpkin patch year after year after year. We adults call that tradition. Kids calls it repetition, and therefore boring.

So we go looking each year, not so much for the perfect pumpkin, but the perfect pumpkin experience.

And if all goes well, it really doesn't matter if the pumpkin's not so perfect after all.

What really matters are the sights and sounds and smells of autumn. The weather — preferably sunny and cool, the trees painted with fall colors, the sound of leaves crunching underfoot and the smell of fresh air.

Sunday afternoon we took the kids to Sasser, Ga., on Highway 520, south of Fort Benning, hoping the trip would be worth the hourlong drive. I'd read about Mark's Melon Patch in the Ledger-Enquirer, and since I hadn't heard of another, it seemed like a good place to start our search.

Mark started raising pumpkins and watermelons and sweetcorn when he was 17. Twenty-one years later he's still in love with farming, and it shows.

For the past 10 years he's been making a big to-do about pumpkins. He's carved a nice size niche out of his fields alongside Highway 82, and every September and October he opens his pumpkin farm to the public.

That in itself is nothing to get excited about — certainly nothing to drive an hour for. What makes it worth the trip are the hayrides and face painting and clowns and live bands and haunted trails that Mark throws in to make pumpkin shopping a truly memorable experience.

We did find some great pumpkins, but that seemed only a footnote to a day full of good fun and good food. All the entertainment was free, except for the hayride, which cost $1 per person. For a buck we experienced a real hayride, not the two-bale flat-bed truck variety. Some nice guy named Glenn (or Jim or Bob or something) pulled a hay wagon with his John Deere around several acres of pumpkin patch and cotton fields.

Along the way we got a gander of the Gourd family, a friendly bunch of scarecrows that stand sentry at the pumpkin patch to greet visitors and stave off unwanted critters like crows and coyotes.

We spent about four hours at Mark's Melon patch. While the kids waited in line to get their faces painted, I shopped for my fall decorations — hay bales, corn stalks, gourds, pumpkins and sunflowers. We polished off a bag of hot boiled peanuts and a sampling of homemade peanut brittle while we listened to a local southern gospel music band.

Although Mark's Melon Patch is open year-round, this weekend is your last chance to get in on the fun. Except Monday night — did I mention Monday night?

Mark's opening his patch the night before Halloween for last-minute shoppers, and he offers an after-dark hayride amidst a bevy of lighted jack o' lanterns and tiki lights.

I recommend you bring your camera. Mark doesn't mind a bit if the kids play among the sunflowers or pumpkins, and there are so many incredible photo opportunities.

Archers compete in final post 3-D shoot of season

Donnie Kinard
Fort Benning Archery Club

The final 3D shoot for the 2000 season was held at the Fort Benning Archery Club Sept. 10.

This shoot was a little different from the previous shoots in that we offered a 15-target field point range and a five-target broadhead range. The object of this particular shoot was to help prepare bowhunters for the archery season that opened Sept. 16 in Georgia.

This shoot was an eye-opening experience for those archers who only break out their bows and practice a couple of weeks before bow season opens and then forget about it once gun season opens. I know a lot of bowhunters walked away questioning whether or not they truly had any business hunting with a bow at all.

All 20 targets on both ranges were set to portray realistic hunting encounters and archers were forced to make more complicated computations than usual during this shoot. In addition to the usual determination of range to the target, the bowhunters also had to contend with trees, scrub vegetation, sun in the eyes and other obstacles that partly obscured the targets.

Archers had to decide if the shot presented was one they might or might not take in a real hunting situation. Whether a shot was ethical or not was left entirely up to the archer. I shot at all the targets on both courses but I know that I wouldn't have taken several of the shots in a real hunting situation.

Hits on the 3D animal targets outside the outlined kill zone scored a big zero this time rather than the customary five points. Credit was not given for wounded animals. All that counted were 8s and 10s. A large number of marginal to mediocre shooters got a lesson in humility, but a good time was had by all.. We had a total of 31 shooters sign in and shoot. Many opted for the practice round with good reason because while the distances to the targets were relatively short, the placement of the targets made them deceptive — this was a tough shoot. The five competition classes and their first place winners this time were:

• Open Class (High tech, high speed, precision shooters): R.B. Smith

• Masters Class (Experienced, competitive bowhunters with pin sights): Narvie B. Nowling

• Novice Bowhunter Class (Less experienced shooters with pin sights): Shaun Darsey

• Traditional Class (Old-style longbow and recurve shooters, no sights): Donnie Kinard

• Broadhead Course Winner with a perfect score of 50: Dale Nettles

The 2000 3D Archery Season was a great success for the FBAC. We have grown in membership and range use has increased — just look at the condition of our practice targets! They are just about worn out and all need re-stuffing. Our 3D animals all need new center sections because they have been shot at so many times. We've had a shoot every month from January to September and we always had a good turn out.

Many thanks and congratulations to all of you who helped make our club and season a success. If you came to a shoot, you helped us. If you used the practice range, you helped us. If you took part in setting up or breaking down a shoot, you helped us. If you told someone about us or allowed us to post a flyer at your business or on your bulletin board, you helped us. Thank you.

Special thanks to Shooters of Columbus and Bass & Buck Warehouse. These two organizations have helped us with materials, merchandise and discounts on equipment not only this year but in the past as well. We at FBAC look forward to a continued and long lasting partnership with these two fine businesses.

I'd like to personally thank Kelly Mosher for her rock-solid support and participation in our club this year. Kelly was the acting treasurer, acting bookkeeper and food and condiment procurement officer for 1999 and most of 2000.

Additionally, the FBAC is a family affair it seems because Dewane Mosher did an outstanding job as acting club president this year. No matter what, Mosher was always there to ensure that the range was open and ready for operations. Without Mosher's leadership and dedication to the sport there may not have been a shoot for every month for the last nine months.

Frank Bue, Tim Lokker, Steve Skotzky and of course Cliff Hughes should all take a bow for their support and participation in our club as well.

For the continued success of our club, however, we need a strong, numerous, dedicated membership — please join in January.

For more information, call Dewane Mosher at 989-0156 or me at 569-6103.

Golfers link up for pairs tournament

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Temperatures in the 80s greeted Fort Benning golfers and their guests Saturday for the shotgun start of the annual Member Guest Golf Tournament.

After paying the $150 entry fee, 25 teams enjoyed beautiful golfing weather during the free practice day Oct. 20, and the two days of tournament golf.

The entry fee, $75 per player, wasn't expensive because of the practice round and then two days of golf, Larry Cruise, Fort Benning's golf pro, said.

A round of golf at the club costs $20. At the end of Saturday's play the golfers were treated to a block party in font of the club that included free barbecue.

Prizes included gift certificates and sleeves of balls.

The tournament was divided into three flights and the winners received the following prizes:

The first place prize was a $100 gift certificate; second place a $75 gift certificate and third place a $50 gift certificate.

First flight winners were:

Mark Felderman and Vernon Kirton, first place with a score of 132.

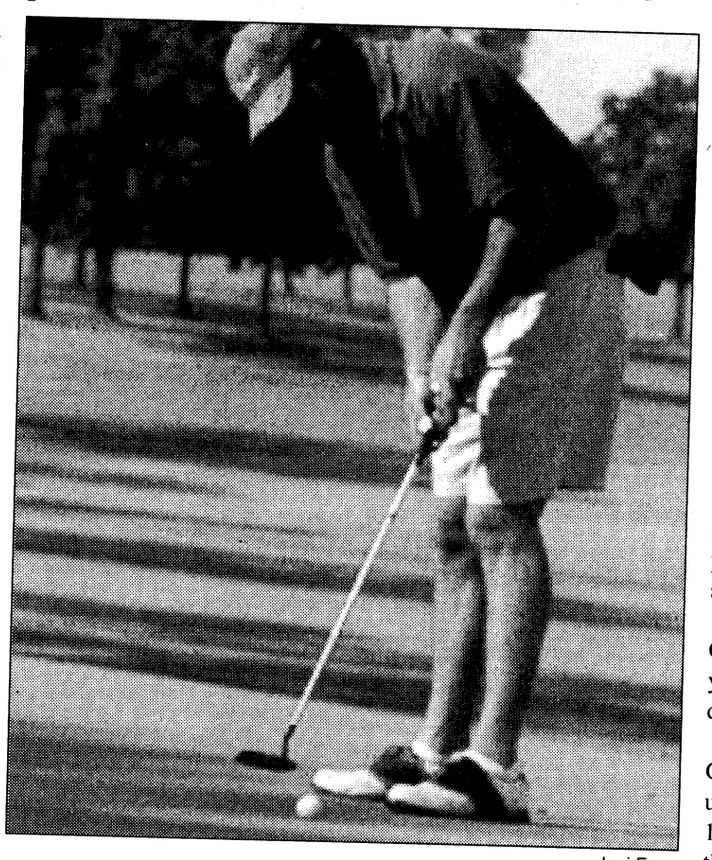
Kenny Bell and Jinson Antoskow, second place with a score of 133.

Brad Arnold and Paul Leonard, third place with a score of 134.

Second flight winners were:

Steve Thiel and Chuck Strickland, first place with a score of 141.

Bob Greenfield and Dick Rebidue, second place with a score of 141.



Fred Wadsworth and Don Russell, third place with a score of 146.

Third flight winners were:

Mike Burns and Arch Allen, first place with a score of 152.

Erik Henriksen and John Jackson, second place with a score of 156.

Lee Henderson and Randy Lewis, third place with a score of 157.

Cherokees: Win

Greenwaves coach said. "The offensive lines needs to block a little better and I think we'll do better.

"We are running the ball very well but we keep turning it over. We need to focus and we can't force issues."

The third quarter began with neither team getting within scoring distance. Early in the third quarter, Greenwaves quarterback Jimmy Cobb went down with a twisted knee.

Back-up quarterback Cedrick Mason took to the field and played one series but couldn't start any magic.

Late in the third quarter the Cherokees' Calvin Push ran 30 yard before he was brought down.

Upset with the play, the Greenwaves were penalized for unsportsman like conduct. The 15-yard penalty took the ball to the 8 yard line.

Williams ran the ball for an easy score and his second of the evening and the final of the game giving the Cherokees a 14-0 lead.

The Greenwaves took the ball to within scoring position but were unable to score when the Cherokees intercepted the ball.

Then in the final four minutes of the game, the Cherokees held onto the ball running the clock out giving them the win.

The turnovers really hurt us, Jones said. With a fumble and two interceptions the Greenwaves continued to have troubles keeping control.

Their defense did slow the Cherokees, but unlike the players predicted, the defense didn't win the game for the Greenwaves.

"They have a strong defense," Davis said. "They are a very physical, hard-hitting team."

The Greenwaves have a record of 1-6 with only three games left in the season. Their next game will be played at 7:30 p.m. tonight in Memorial Stadium doesn't feel pressure when he's the first to face a pitcher.

"There's more pressure on the third and fourth guys. You're the RBI guy, going home," he said. "If you don't get on, someone else will."

Ferraoili's nonchalant demeanor belies a hitter who takes his lead-off job seriously as "the guy to get things going."

Ferraoili set up No.3 hitter Johanningsmeir perfectly, who drove both Ferraoili and No.2 hitter Chris Folk, A Co., 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., on with an error, home.

Johanningsmeir said he does feel the pressure as the No. 3 batter a because he knows what the job entails.

"My main purpose is to drive runs in," he said.

Johanningsmeir said to deal with the pressure he takes control in the box by stepping out after the pitcher is set and make him wait, distracting the pitcher and causing him to lose his focus.

Although he makes the pitcher wait for him, Johanningsmeir doesn't wait for the pitcher. He said he almost always swings at first pitch, a trait that many players don't follow.

The first-inning boom was followed by a scoring drought as no one scored until the eighth inning, when the Rangers managed to put two more on the board.

John Holmes, C Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., pitched for the Brewers only giving up one run on a homerun by Brandon Woodham and five strikeouts in six innings pitched.

Steve Bielak, a family member, took over in the seventh, striking out two Rangers batters and Brad Larsen, B Co. 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., closed the game also with two strikeouts.

The Brewers, although seeded No. 2 in the playoffs behind the Rockies, now have an edge over them in the double-elimination tournament because after the Oct. 18 outing and Sunday night's nail-biting victory they remain undefeated.

4-year University

Med School, Here I Come!

Give It Once, It's a Nice Gift. Give It Every Year and It's a Nice Education.

Let's face it. Most gifts end up in the trash. But U.S. Savings Bonds are gifts with a future. And when you give them every year, they can make a real dent in someone's college bills. With eight denominations to choose from, you can decide how large you want that dent to be. So whether you choose the popular Series EE Bonds or the inflation-protected I Bonds, your gift will continue to grow for years to come. And when it's needed, it'll be there, safe, sound, and more valuable than ever.

Savings Bonds can be purchased through most local banks, where you work, or automatically through the new Savings Bonds EasySaver℠ Plan at www.easysaver.gov.

Call 1-800-4US BOND for recorded rate information, or write to: Savings Bonds Pocket Guide, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328.

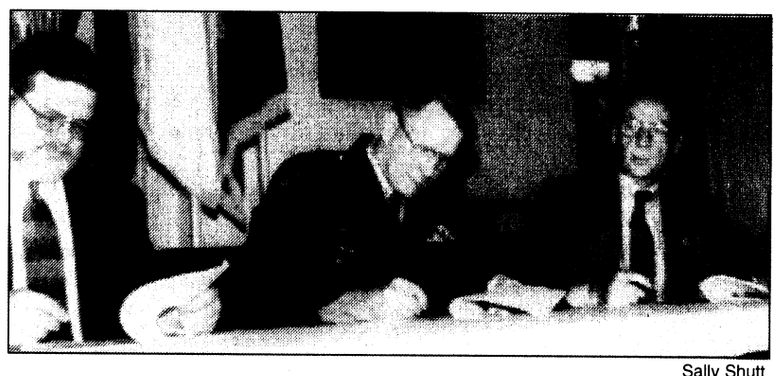
New Infantry museum in works

Stored artifacts will be displayed in planned facility

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©



An official first step was taken Tuesday morning that could mean a new state-of-the-art home for the National Infantry Museum.

Representatives from Fort Benning, the U.S. Army Center for Military History and the National Infantry Association signed a memorandum of agreement clearing the first hurdle in a long-range proposal to construct a new facility supporters hope will accurately tell the story of the Infantry.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne; Judson Bennett, chief curator of the U.S. Army; and retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White, president of the National Infantry Association, signed the document giving the NIA, a private organization based in Columbus, the legal go-ahead to proceed with the project.

The next steps for the NIA will include hiring a museum consultant to design the facility, securing property adjacent to the post on which to build the structure and then raising the funds to complete the project.

"The memorandum of agreement is like a marriage. It's a contract between the parties to agree to get along and to make this thing work," Le Moyne said of the cooperative effort between the military and the NIA.

Judson Bennett, Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne and Jerry White sign a memorandum of agreement to proceed with plans for a new National Infantry Museum.

White, a former commanding general at Fort Benning, said the journey toward a new museum actually started four years ago during a group brainstorming session about what it would take to attract more people to Columbus.

"After some discussion, we decided the 'it' was Fort Benning and

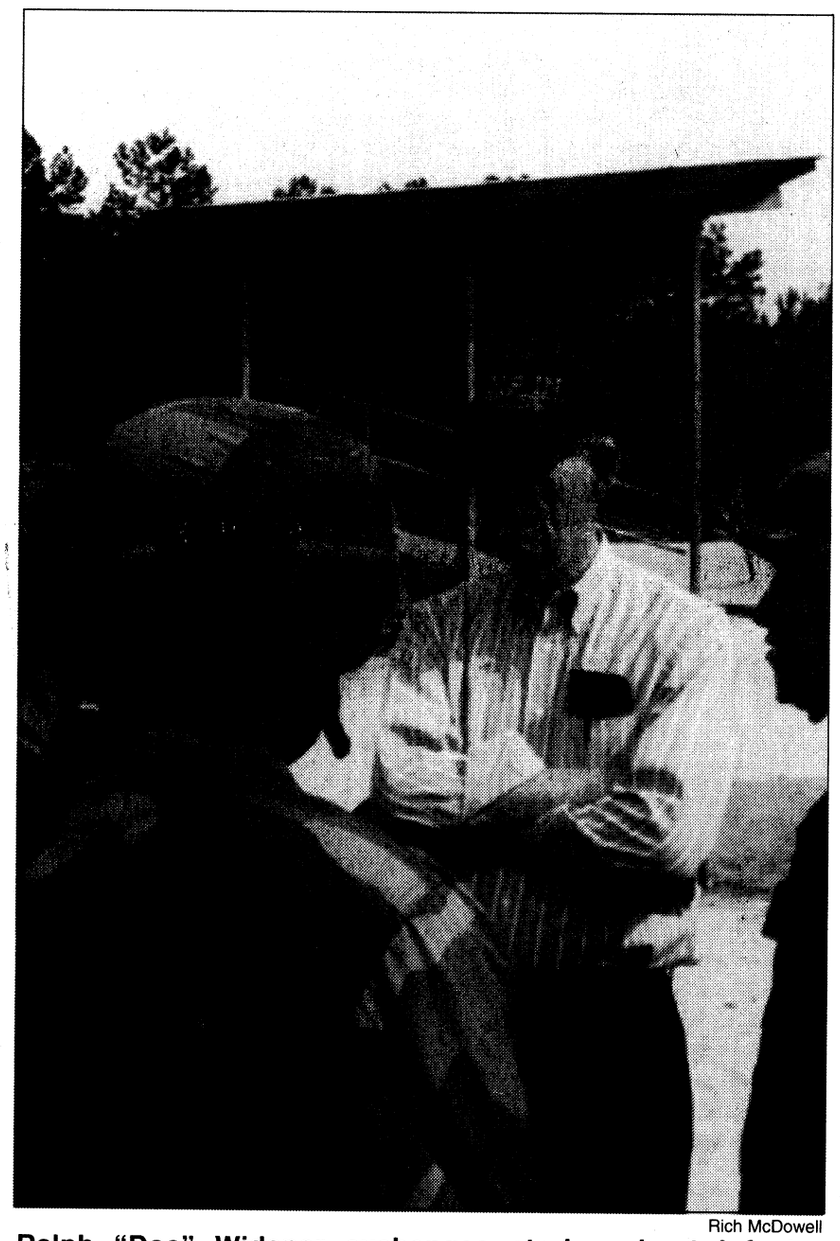
WWII vet repeats basic training

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Most Soldiers have a hard enough time with one round of basic training. Ralph "Doc" Widener conquered it twice.

Even more interesting is the fact that the second time around, Widener was 64 years old.



He originally completed basic training at Fort Benning in 1943. He was wounded in action after the D-Day invasion at Omaha Beach. He was an Infantryman in the 1st Infantry Division at the time.

Widener received a medical discharge from the Army as a sergeant in 1946.

He returned to Fort Benning in 1986 as a veteran and a journalist, planning to write an article for the Dallas Times Herald. After initially observing what the Soldiers were doing to prepare for the training, Widener felt he was up to the test.

He decided to go through basic training again with the company he was profiling, D

Fort Rucker to represent TRADOC

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A winning streak has ended at Fort Benning.

The post will not represent the Training and Doctrine Command in this year's Army Communities of Excellence competition, marking the first time in eight years the post has not won a title or the money that comes with it.

Fort Rucker, Ala., was selected as the TRADOC representative and will go on to compete at the All-Army ACOE competition for fiscal 2001.

Using sports as an analogy, Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander, said, "We know that eventually every winning streak is broken, but that doesn't mean the team is any worse at that point than it was in the preceding games."

Since 1993, Fort Benning has won close to $6.5 million from the ACOE program, which has been used to enhance the quality of life for Soldiers and their

General visits Spencer High School

Hendrix says Rangers to get different beret

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Two weeks after the announcement by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki that all Soldiers will wear black berets starting in June, Gen. John Hendrix, commander of Forces Command, said Rangers — who now wear the black cover — will still don distinctive headgear after the change next summer.

"Rangers will continue to have a distinctive beret, and they will have a voice in what color it is, Hendrix said.

"This new decision is not about decreasing the pride of the Rangers, but it is about increasing the pride and esprit of all Soldiers in the Army," Hendrix said.

Two students at Spencer High School asked Hendrix his views on the new beret policy last week when the four-star general visited the school.

"I think this is a good move. I have no problem with this at all. Most armies in the world wear berets. We are the exception," Hendrix said.

The general added he is one of the Rangers' biggest fans and supporters.

"They are the best we have. We know our Rangers are great Soldiers who take our most dangerous and difficult missions," said Hendrix, who wears a Ranger tab and served as a Ranger instructor for two years.

During the Oct. 26 visit, Hendrix, a former commanding general at Fort Benning, spoke to Junior ROTC cadets and other students about what it takes to be successful in life — whether in uniform or out.

commentary

The assignment seemed simple enough last Friday morning when I agreed to take it on. I was to write a commentary on "random acts of kindness" and talk about any instances where complete strangers helped me out or where I befriended someone I didn't know.

I thought about it all weekend, as we hustled around to soccer games, the commissary, PX and church. I could share about the time my accelerator cable disconnected on our van one morning and I coasted into a parking lot just off a school zone where a military police officer was working the crosswalk.

After all the students were safely inside the school, he used duct tape to connect the cable and then followed me to the Firestone car care center on Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

You may be thinking big deal. He was just doing his job in getting a hazard off the road. That may be so.

But you can't say the same of the gentleman behind the counter that morning. He had a mechanic fix the problem and then didn't charge me anything. Maybe it was an easy problem to fix. I don't know now, and I certainly didn't know then. But I do know he fixed the problem for free. And he smiled.

Other examples came to mind as I thought about the topic. For example, last year The Bayonet and Army Times ran the story of a Soldier who found a purse in the parking lot of Martin Army Community Hospital and turned it in to the information desk. The owner was overjoyed to have her purse and the large sum of money inside it returned.

Still something bothered me about this idea of "random" kindness. Then it hit me. I had a problem with the whole concept — not the kindness aspect, but the randomness of the acts.

I believe kindness is not something that happens on a whim, nor is it always dependent on someone's emotions. Kindness is a conscious decision to behave in a certain manner.

It is not an inherited gene passed down from father to son, but it is a learned behavior parents model for their children, teachers show their students and leaders demonstrate to those who follow.

The recipe for kindness is quite simple, and it is spelled out in the Bible: "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Treat others the way you want to be treated — whether you know them or not plays no part in the formula.

I'm sure the people who have shown me kindness during my lifetime didn't single me out from a mass of people to befriend.

I didn't pass their way on the one day of the week they decided to be kind. No, I like to think I crossed their paths on a day like any other in their lives, where kindness was the standard.

commentary

I admit I'm guilty. Sometimes the kids' constant bickering gets on my last nerve, and I send them all to their rooms without trying to find out who the real culprit is.

And when that happens, they get this incredulous look in their eyes and their chests puff up with righteous indignation. Just when I think they're about to explode at my feet, they come to their senses and direct their anger at the one responsible for all the ruckus.

"Now look what you've done. Thanks to you we're all in trouble." And then they stomp off toward their rooms vowing never to play with him or her again.

Now I know how they feel. I'm feeling a bit like a petulant child myself right now, but I don't know who to point my finger at. Whoever you are, thanks to you, we're all in trouble now.

I found a note on my door last week when I came home. It said we had to move our portable basketball goal to the back yard. Effective immediately it was no longer allowed on the curb. The subject again came up in Tuesday's Town Hall meeting.

Like myself, another frustrated parent wanted to know "why?"

Why do I have to put that goal out back where it will never be used?

Why, when we live on a court with no through traffic, does a basketball goal on the sidewalk present a safety hazard?

Why do we want to discourage those fun, wholesome neighborhood pick-up basketball games? I like what I see when I sit here at my computer and look out the window at five or 10 adolescents vying for control of the ball instead of roaming the neighborhood looking for action of another sort.

Well I knew the answer before I even asked the question. I'm sure you do too. Someone blew it for the rest of us.

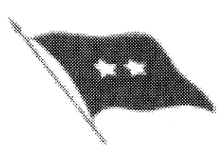
Someone didn't make sure their goal was in a safe place — a place where its use didn't impede traffic or put someone's life in danger. Someone didn't enforce the rules and make sure their little Michael Jordans were in at curfew. So their neighbors called the MPs again and again and again to complain about the incessant noise.

And the rest, shall we say, is history.

The powers that be said, "Enough is enough. We're not going to take it anymore. You all put your toys away and go to your rooms. No more playing."

So whoever you are, as a result of your carelessness, I'm relearning a lesson I've tried to teach my children since birth — life's not always fair. The rest of us are paying for your negligence.

And I'm trying hard to be mature about it, but I really want to call you all kinds of nasty names like "stupid" and "idiot" and "imbecile," but I realize you may very well be bigger than me, and you have me at an advantage. Though I have no idea who you are, you may recognize me from that picture and do a little dribbling of your own.



But I'm mad about it, you can be sure. And if I find out who you are, I'm never going to play with you again.

CG recognizes Native American month

In recognition of Native Americans, Alaskan Natives and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the period of Nov. 1-30 has been proclaimed "National Native American Indian Heritage Month."

The theme for this year is "American Indians: The Nation Next Door."

All Americans, regardless of their heritage, have gained from Native Americans and their ancestors. Native Americans have served their country not only in every conflict since the Civil War, but also as artists, scholars and scientists.

They have made great contributions in agriculture, medicine, art and government.

Today Native Americans continue to contribute immensely in the pursuit of America's national goals and in the quest for freedom and opportunity. Their diversity throughout history serves as a model for all Americans.

November not only offers an increase in national awareness of the history and contributions of Native Americans, but it also offers Native Americans serving in the armed services an opportunity to celebrate and share their heritage.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and the surrounding community to participate in this observance through the planned activities of units, staffs, directorates and other agencies.

letter

The Soldier Show has come and gone. But, there are some valuable lessons to be learned for the next time.

Noise level and families:

Why was it so loud? I had several family members in my unit leave because it was just too loud for their children's ears. This also means it was too loud for the Soldiers.

And about the families — the drill sergeants spend many long hours away from their families and here is an event that some decided to share with their loved ones. But no — we have to segregate families from their drill sergeant husbands and fathers even when it was quite obvious there was plenty of room for them to sit together.

So, families are told to break up and then later they were allowed to sit together again — only to have those seats taken by late comers. Let's not forget our families next year.

Parking:

Trying to leave parking was frustrating. On one side the road was blocked by a government vehicle so we couldn't leave that way, and the only exit was blocked by a "traffic controller," who said we couldn't leave until all the Soldiers departed.

Waiting for 7,000 plus Soldiers to leave before we could exit defies the common sense test. We may want to consider a better departure plan.

Transportation:

Great job in getting so many Soldiers downtown but one of the police officers told me that it was against Georgia law to ride in a trailer.

I saw scores of Soldiers packed into "cattle trucks" violating that law; I'm sure glad there was no accident.

Army values:

Lastly, I was told this show emphasized values. Yes, it emphasized values, but were they the Army values? Having female Soldiers dressed in short, tight, form-fitting dresses while swaying their bodies to songs about "she's so hot" concerns me. This was not a show about the Army.

The post once again let Columbus see that we genuinely care about the Soldier, and Columbus opened its civic center up for us. That doesn't need any fixing, and all should be proud of that. I hope this letter makes the next show a better success.

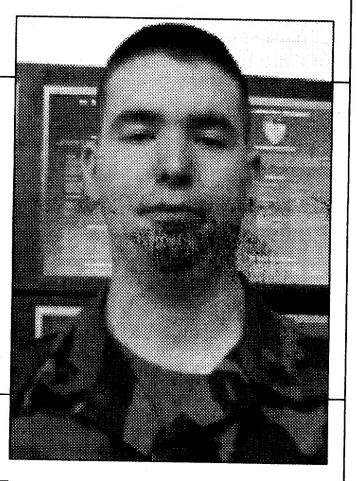
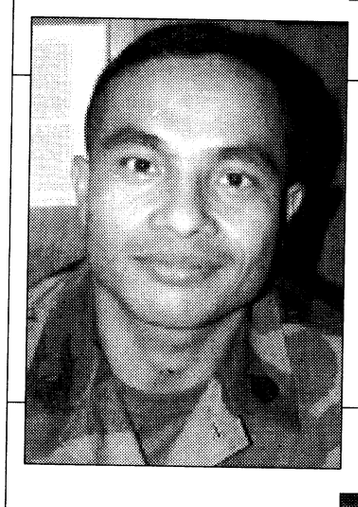
VARIOUS VOICES

Can you recall a time you were the recipient of a random act of kindness?



Sgt. Tamara Alfred, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade — "When my daughter was 16 months old, she opened the front door by herself. Someone down the street I had never met brought her home."



John Redding, Columbus — "Someone stopped to give me a ride when my car broke down by the side of the road back in 1984. I was surprised and relieved."

Carolyn Brooks, AAFES employee — "I left my checkbook at home once and found myself $5 short at the commissary. The lady in front of me insisted I take the money from her and she refused to let me pay her back."

Spc. Michael Rodriguez, B Company, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade — "I got a flat tire and a cop helped me out."

Staff Sgt. Ken Chanthakhot, U.S. Marine Corps representative — "My family was trying to come from a refugee camp in Thailand and someone we never met became our sponsor."

Eleanor Rohly, family member — "I walk with a cane. Sometimes strangers help me cross the street or open doors for me. A couple of weeks ago I fell at the hospital and two GIs helped me up."

Community prepares to honor veterans

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

It's the time of year when Soldiers and civilians alike take time to honor veterans. Veterans Day is Nov. 11, and there are a number of planned events leading up to and on that day.

At 8 a.m. Saturday the local chapter of the Gold Star Wives of America will erect the "Avenue of Flags" down Victory Drive. The flags will be put in place by members of The Retired Officers' Association and the Chattahoochee Valley Veteran's Council and will remain there for two weeks. For more information, call 327-2268.

"We hope people will stop and realize that all veterans should be honored in some way. They've given up a lot," said Wanda Funderburk, president, Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Gold Star Wives of America.

Also on Saturday there will be a pre-Veterans Day ceremony at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park on the corner of Lawyer's Lane and Buena Vista Road. Garrison commander Col. John Mitchell will be a guest speaker.

The event will be at 10:45 a.m. and is sponsored by the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park committee and the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus. For more information, call 687-5357.

At 11 a.m. Nov. 10, Phenix City and Columbus will join with Fort Benning to host the annual tri-community Veterans Day celebration at the Phenix City amphitheater, 508 Dillingham Street.

Retired Col. Mack Johnson will give the welcome and Col. Robert Hoidahl Jr., deputy assistant commandant, U.S. Army Infantry School, will participate in the comments, and 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, will perform I am the Infantry. Call 545-9734 for more information.

On Veterans Day, there will be ceremonies at the National Infantry Museum.

At 9 a.m., 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, will host a ceremony that focuses on the 3rd Infantry Division in the Korean War.

The ceremony will begin at the tank destroyer memorial in front of the museum. Retired Col. Cecil French will be the guest speaker. Call 544-1312 with any questions.

The 555th Parachute Infantry Association will host a ceremony inside the National Infantry Museum at 11 a.m. The master of ceremonies will be retired Col. William Lundy and the guest speaker will be Master Sgt. Alan Gibson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. The honor guard will be provided by 1st Bn. (Abn.), 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt. For more information, call 689-7408.

Company, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

"I wanted to see whether I could do the whole thing," Widener said. The battalion commander gave the go ahead and Widener started out from the beginning with the company.

"Some of the stuff was tough for me. The obstacle course was a burden and the temperature was sometimes up around 100 degrees," Widener said.

He spent the entire 13-week cycle with the company.

"I stayed in the same barracks, ate all my meals with them and did all my training with them. When they marched, I marched," Widener said.

Widener got his story, along with a plaque from the battalion commander for being the oldest civilian to go through basic training.

He wrote a book about his experience, called This We Will Defend. The commanding general at the time, Maj. Gen. Edwin Burba, said the book's portrayal of Infantry training was the best ever.

Widener developed close relationships with the Soldiers in the company. He sent a copy of his book to each one of them the Christmas after he met them at basic training.

"He had a much better feel for those kids and has kept in touch with a number of them over the years," said Al Garland, former editor of Infantry Magazine.

Widener has also kept in touch with his old company.

It's now C Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, and he returns there a few times each year to present an award that he created to the top member of each platoon.

He chose the name of World War II hero, 1st Lt. Audie Murphy for this award.

"He was the ultimate Soldier. He believed in doing everything to the best of his ability," Widener said. "I enjoy helping kids realize they can try to be like him."

Winners of this award are chosen by their peers. "I thought it would be a good idea for the Soldiers to decide who they thought did the best job," Widener said.

"The award is a motivational piece," said 1st Lt. Don Jamoles, C Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf., executive officer. "His presence is an inspiration, especially when they hear about all that he's done."

"He's a great role model for a lot of young Soldiers," Garland said. "He wants to recognize these boys and at the same time make sure the entire company understands that Audie Murphy is the type of man to look up to."

The money and time that go into recognizing these Soldiers comes solely from Widener. He always tries to present the awards in person and, prior to a car accident last year, used to do a road march with the company.

The award winners each receive an engraved "Follow Me" statue of an Infantry Soldier, as well as a U.S. savings bond.

Widener still takes time to get to know the Soldiers here.

When he comes to present the awards, he talks to the entire company and they watch the movie To Hell and Back, based on Murphy's book.

He also takes the award recipients to the Four Winds Cafe in Cusseta for "Ranger" burgers.

"The Soldiers love the man because he talks to them and listens to them. He gets to know them well," said Rich McDowell, Public Affairs officer.

Widener estimates he's met more than 20,000 entering recruits at Fort Benning.

In addition to the appreciation of those at C Co., Widener has received recent recognition.

Last month he was awarded the Military Order of Saint Maurice by the National Infantry Association. This award recognizes individuals who have contributed significantly to the promotion of the Infantry in ways that stand out in the eyes of their seniors, subordinates, and peers.

Widener is not comfortable with the attention he's received and prefers to stay behind the scenes.

"It's nice that they wanted to do that for me but letting me come back to Fort Benning and spend time with the Soldiers, that's my reward," Widener said.

Widener taught history at the high school level for 30 years, followed by 10 years at the University of Texas at Arlington where he taught history and public speaking.

Widener, who will celebrate his 78th birthday Dec. 3, currently lives in Dallas, Texas.

"My internist tells me that I have the body of a healthy, 18-year-old athlete. Maybe I'll live to be a 100," Widener said.

Widener also uses that energy to actively work in his community. He's been a volunteer for the local police department for more than three years.

Agreement: Means new Infantry museum in works

we started down this trail," White said.

In the last 18 months, the concept for a new Infantry museum took shape.

"We knew where we were headed, it was just a matter of getting all the parties — the Army, Fort Benning, the NIA and the community — in agreement about how it should unfold. That's why today is significant," White said. "The idea is no longer mushy; it is firm. After today, it will happen. We will stay the course."

As chief curator of the museum division of the Center for Military History, Bennett oversees 58 Army museum operations and is responsible for all historical property held by the Army. His signature was needed on the memorandum because the museum's historical property will remain in the possession of the Army after the new facility is constructed.

Partnerships between the military, different levels of government and private organizations are the wave of the future in military museums, Bennett said citing projects now underway at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., Fort Sill, Okla., and Fort Campbell, Ky.

Bennett spoke to those gathered on the museum's third floor to witness the memorandum's signing. He stressed the importance of preserving military history and the role museums play in the Army's mission.

"If you are a banker or a businessman and you don't learn the lessons from history, the mistakes you make result in a smaller bottom line. In the Army, history is far more important to us because we pay for our mistakes with people's lives. It is an awesome responsibility," Bennett said.

"Projects like this help us do two things — support Soldier and leader training and promote a closeness between the Army and the people the Army serves," Bennett said.

Preliminary proposals for the museum include interactive displays, classrooms and finding a new and compelling way to tell the story of the Infantry that will immerse the visitor into history, not just provide artifacts on display, Bennett said.

> "In the Army, history is far more important to us because we pay for our mistakes with people's lives. It is an awesome responsibility."
> Judson Bennett
> Chief curator of the U.S. Army

"In order to be effective we have to think about what kind of people our Soldiers are. They were raised with televisions and computers and had classrooms where teachers tried to make learning interesting to them. In a museum we have to do the same thing," Bennett said.

Bennett is currently working on a national Army museum in Washington, D.C.

The Infantry museum was housed in two World War II temporary buildings on Ingersoll Avenue from 1959 until 1977 when it moved into the former hospital, built in the 1920s, on Baltzell Avenue. In addition to constantly battling climate-control problems in the historic building, Frank Hanner, the museum's director, is only able to display about 20 percent of the museum's holdings.

Items in storage include a World War II glider, jeeps, a landing craft and numerous artifacts too large for the three-story building.

"This is the only way the museum will be allowed to grow and have the capability to display our larger artifacts. We have things that have never been seen because we have no where to put them," Hanner said. "Without a new building we will become stagnant here."

Hanner estimated the project will take about five years to reach fruition.

One proposed site for the new building is a wooded area adjacent to the post between South Lumpkin Road and fronting Benning Boulevard, said Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander.

Having the museum there rather than on Main Post would attract individuals who normally would not visit the installation, Mitchell said.

"We believe this will be a unique and exciting draw for people who may have never experienced military service. They may have only a secondhand knowledge of the military and the important role it has played in our country's history," Mitchell said.

The partnership the post has established with the Columbus community will be important not only for the local area, but the region as well, Mitchell said.

"Fort Benning and the Infantry stand to benefit from a new facility, and Columbus and the region stand to benefit by having a world-class center, one that may even include a convention area for reunions and a learning center for school groups," Mitchell said.

While supporters congratulated each other after the agreement's signing, they were quick to point out the real work lies ahead.

"Today formalizes the idea that if we build it, they will come," said Ben Williams, executive director of the National Infantry Foundation, an arm of the NIA, and a member of the steering committee for the project.

"I'm proud that we reached this milestone, but I realize we have a lot of work to make this a reality," Williams said.

Hendrix: Offers students advice on success

"My visit was not so much about the Army, as much as it was about the kids and talking to them about making good healthy decisions in life," he said after the assembly.

"If we don't take the time to show them we care if they succeed or not, we deserve what we get."

In his comments to the students, Hendrix, 58, emphasized three key factors — respect for others, selfless service to the community and personal accountability for one's actions.

"Whether I say it right or not, I am here because you are important," Hendrix told the assembly of about 400 students, 231 of whom are enrolled in JROTC. "You are important because you are the future of the United States of America, and I want you to make the world a better place to live in."

When the general opened the floor to questions from the audience, the subject quickly turned to Army issues, including the military's "effectiveness today," the sinking of the USS Cole in Yemen and twice, the black beret.

> "Our Army today is the best in the world, but it is not good enough. It is not large enough, it is not well-resourced enough, and it is not modernized enough."
> Gen. John Hendrix
> Forces Command commander

"Our Army today is the best in the world, but it is not good enough. It is not large enough, it is not well-resourced enough, and it is not modernized enough," said Hendrix, who commands 85 percent of the Army's combat power, about 750,000 Soldiers.

In order to support missions in Bosnia and Kosovo, the FORSCOM commander said "we are having to dip into the Army National Guard and Reserve to a greater extent than we have ever had to do in peacetime."

The final question came from Sarah Berry, daughter of Chaplain (Maj.) Steven Berry, 75th Ranger Regiment. She asked the general if he thought allowing all Soldiers to wear the black beret would somehow take away from the Rangers' identity.

"My answer is resoundingly no. If the Rangers depend on their identification and their sense of self worth based only on the black beret, then we have some problems there. But I don't believe that is the case," Hendrix said.

Samantha Johnson, a junior, waited patiently after the assembly while Hendrix shook hands and posed for photographs in the school's media center.

Although the 16-year-old said she was nervous, Johnson didn't show it later on the air rifle range in the basement of the school's gym.

The 4-foot-9-inch daughter of Sally and Wayne Johnson, a retired Soldier, showed why she is the school's best sharpshooter after a friendly shoot-out with Hendrix, who has served 35 years in the Army.

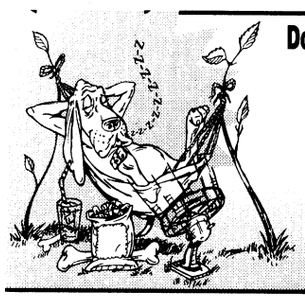
"The range is like my home and I am very comfortable here," said Johnson, who plans to go into the Air Force.

Johnson's paper target would have earned the highest rating possible, expert, during an official competition, and Hendrix would have scored sharpshooter, the next highest category, said retired Lt. Col. Thomas Jones, senior military adviser at Spencer.

"She was unbelievable," Hendrix said after signing the two targets and presenting the mementos to Johnson, who plans to frame them.

Hendrix also passed out numerous commemorative coins to cadets during the visit, telling them what a good job they had done and how proud he was of their work.

Varsah Credle, 18, a company commander in the school's JROTC, and other members of the corps greeted Hendrix at the front entrance to the high school.



"We were really nervous and he helped us relax. He presented us with coins and told us it was for all of our hard work. He was really down to earth, had a good sense of humor and spoke to us like we were on the same level," Credle said.

"I'm very happy he chose to come to Spencer, and he left us with a positive message."

Seminar helps spouses in future leadership roles

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Spouses of future or current company commanders can receive guidance from those who have been in a leadership position before.

There will be a five-day leadership seminar, Monday through Nov. 10, that will address issues a company commander's spouse may expect to encounter.

"It provides them with information about themselves and others and allows them to become more effective if they choose to take a leadership role," said Mary Ellen Keen, president, leadership seminar.

The seminar has been in place since 1984. It's usually held four times a year and generally coincides with an incoming Infantry Captain Career Course class. Although the seminar is primarily focused toward ICCC spouses' needs, it is open to anyone who wishes to take it.

"I signed up for the seminar so I will know what to expect and know how to be a commander's wife," said Ginger Hampton. Her husband, Capt. Bill Hampton, is currently in the ICCC class.

Hampton said she is mainly taking the course to learn leadership skills so she can help out in family support groups.

Other issues the seminar focuses on include conflict, trauma, communication, group dynamics, stress management, family readiness, and values.

There are about 15 volunteers who facilitate the course and serve as mentors for the students. The volunteers have been trained and all have spouses at the company command level or higher.

There are also two panels, one of NCO wives and one of officer wives, who join the seminar so students can ask them questions.

The format is both large group lecture and small discussion groups.

Keen said the small groups can break from the planned format. "This gives the wives an opportunity to talk about anything they want."

Students have an opportunity to comment on the structure of the course at the end of the week.

"The evaluations we get from students are very important to us. We've made some major changes based upon what they're telling us," Keen said.

The seminar will be 9 a.m. through 12 p.m. in Building 75. Students must preregister. For those interested, late registration is possible. Call Keen at 685-2266.

ACOE: Selects Fort Rucker to represent TRADOC families, said Sara Hodges, chief, Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management.

Eight TRADOC installations submitted application packets, but only one could be selected to represent each major command, a change from previous years, Hodges said.

Hodges and her quality management staff are anxious to read the feedback from the evaluators, which should highlight the post's strengths, weaknesses and areas for improvement.

"We will press on and continue to improve our processes," Hodges said.

Mitchell expressed confidence the post would make a comeback in future ACOE competitions.

"We remain committed to taking a systematic approach to focusing on our customers, improving our processes and responding to feedback," Mitchell said.

While the post is proud of its track record in the ACOE competition, Mitchell said, "It's just one tool we use to measure how we are doing. We understand that our commitment to quality is a journey, rather than a destination. That means we are always moving forward. It doesn't mean we will always have the same results in every measurement we take."

Although this was not Fort Benning's year in the ACOE competition, the post has been recognized in several areas on the national, state and local levels.

Mitchell cited the post's success in the environmental arena as an example. Fort Benning was named the best in the Army for electrical energy conservation, the state of Georgia applauded the post's water quality and the city presented four separate Keep Columbus Beautiful awards to the installation this year.

In the last two weeks, Fort Benning Schools and Stowers Elementary, in particular, have been in the news as the only school and system in the Department of Defense Education Activity to serve as home to the principal of the year, Glenn Hughes, and the teacher of the year, Millie Harris, during the same year.

"We can go down the line and measure ourselves at the local, state and national levels, and anyway you look at it you can see that Fort Benning is a great place to live and work," Mitchell said.

Soldiers' training pays off, saves life

Karen Taylor
Bayonet Corespondent

A Soldier overturned his sport-utility vehicle on a gravel road near Ware Range in September. The Soldier was thrown from the vehicle and was found lying in the road.

What was crucial to his recovery was the expeditious actions of the two medics, Spc. Hubert Henson and Pfc. Donald Fertgus, from the Medical Support Platoon of the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, who fielded the call.

"He was complaining of headache and spinal pain," Fertgus said.

Fertgus said he and Henson stayed focused; immediately put a C-Collar on the Soldier, and proceeded to put him on a backboard.

"I didn't feel anything, I was there to do my job," Fertgus said. "But afterwards I started thinking about it and I got a little emotional because of how the scene looked.

"He could have possibly had a severe spinal injury."

Capt. Don Patterson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., who witnessed the medics in action, described their performance as "awesome."

"It's a good feeling to know you've got capable medics," Patterson said.

"That Soldier is walking today because of those medics," he said. "That's when it really hits home."

Fortunately, the Medical Support Platoon doesn't see such a situation that often.

"Most of what we see are heat casualties," Patterson said.

Aside from the fact that Fort Benning had many 100-degree days this summer, Patterson said the reason for Fort Benning's high number of heat casualties is because Infantry training includes intense, outdoor training such as road marching and live fire exercises more than other TRADOC units.

If a Soldier was previously sick with the flu, and is still dehydrated or due to the intensity of the training a Soldier forgets to hydrate, that can lead to a heat casualty, Patterson said.

Heat casualties can turn to fatalities if it goes untreated and Patterson said there was one heat casualty in 1998 that resulted in a Soldier's death.

"If one Soldier dies, it's one Soldier too many," he said.

The medical support platoon's mission is to provide area and on-site medical coverage to the U.S. Army Infantry Center. Area coverage includes two medics and a front line ambulance with advanced lifesaving equipment such as defibrillator and oxygen, that covers a large area, like the Malone Complex. The medics also have three forms of communication, a two-way radio, cell phone and a hand-held radio.

"It keeps them mobile at all times," said Sgt. 1st Class Friedell Wilkes, Medical Support Platoon NCOIC.

Onsite, or point coverage, consists of one medic, who covers a specific training exercise and who is equipped with a medical aid bag and a hand-held radio.

Wilkes said his Medical Support Platoon is expected to increase from 15 medics to 32 because of the anticipated additional coverage they will have to provide on Fort Benning.

Fort Benning is divided into six sectors and currently the Medical Support Platoon along with the 690th Medical Co., 36th Engineer Group, provide coverage. Patterson said due to the 690th Medical Co.'s upcoming contingency missions, the medical support platoon of the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., is due to take over medical duties in the near future to provide Fort Benning with appropriate training coverage.

"We will cover everything except Ranger School, because they have their own, (assets)" Patterson said.

Patterson said it could happen as early as the new fiscal year, which began in October, but could take place in January or even March of 2001.

"We've been ready to assume coverage," he said.

The 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., Medical Support Platoon doesn't do it alone, they are supported by the Fort Benning Emergency Medical Service and the 498th Co. (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group, who will transport casualties to either Martin Army Community Hospital or Columbus Medical Center, for trauma patients.

"The key is communication;" said Mark Joyce, ambulance director for the Fort Benning Emergency Medical Service, "to have an unbroken line of communication from the field through the 911 center to us."

The 911 center is handled through the Military Police Activity, which instantly relays the message to the Fort Benning EMS and the 498th Co.

"911 is the lynch pin for medical care and all emergency care on post," Joyce said.

After receiving the call, a 498th Co. MEDEVAC helicopter will be airborne in 10 minutes or less and the Fort Benning EMS will arrive in five to seven minutes. The EMS and Air Ambulance crews are in constant communication with the medic, who relays critical information about a patient that alert crews to bring special equipment as well as patient updates en route. To coordinate such an operation, where seconds matter, the Fort Benning EMS and 498th Co., are an integral part of the medical support platoon's training.

"We couldn't be as successful as we are right now without seeing the real picture," Wilkes said.

During training exercises with EMS and the 498th Co., each step is timed from before arrival to after departure of the MEDEVAC helicopter or EMS ambulance from the sight.

The Fort Benning EMS also provides additional training for the medical support platoon by allowing medics to ride along in an ambulance as well as certifying and recertifying medics in cardiopulmonary resuscitation and emergency medical training.

Officer candidates regain control of JMAC 'bomb'

2nd Lt. Nate Swindler
3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment

It was a warm and sunny autumn day at Naval Air Station Pensacola Saturday as 120 highly motivated officer candidates, 40 each from the Navy, Air Force and Army Officer Candidate Schools, battled for the coveted "bomb."

The "bomb" is a 82 mm, 25-pound inert round that stands as the trophy for the winner of the eight event, joint service challenge of physical prowess.

The winning team takes the trophy home and has it painted to their liking — then holds it for the next six months. When the Army team arrived in Pensacola Oct.27, the bomb was Navy blue and battleship gray, symbolic of their victory this spring at Maxwell Air Force Base.

In the span of little more than 15 minutes the Army team turned what looked like the agony of defeat into the thrill of victory, shocking the defending champion Navy OCS team and their partisan crowd.

The Army OCS candidates kept their emotions in check, turning in a spirited performance in front of more than 1000 spectators and local TV coverage.

The Army team started well with second place finishes in the 3-mile run and Super Physical Fitness Test, followed by a first in the Super PFT relay. The Super PFT consists of pull ups, sit ups, push ups and a 1.6 mile run, without rest between events, for both male and female candidates. The relay has one candidate doing each event, with a team for each gender. Officer Candidate Malida Ruiz won the female Super PFT for the Army by doing 13 pull-ups, 96 sit ups and 69 push ups before finishing her run. During the men's PFT relay, OC Chris Hammonds did 35 pull-ups to pace the victorious Army relay team.

"The key at JMAC is to always come in first or second," said Maj. Jose Boria, the operations officer for the OCS battalion. "Third place will kill you," he said.

> "We worked hard on matching speed and agility ... but it's all about teamwork."
> Capt. Greg Glenn
> C Company Commander

And that's just what happened coming out of volleyball. The Navy team was on the verge of what looked like a runaway victory after stunning both the Army and Air Force OCS teams with the volleyball victory to take a commanding lead after four events. "Volleyball is a traditional stronghold of the Air Force," Boria said. "We upset the USAF team for the first time at Maxwell Air Force Base in the Spring 2000 competition, but nobody expected the Navy to have such a strong team this fall," he said.

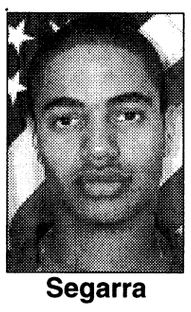
The Army moved one point closer, finishing ahead of the Navy in the 440-yard relay. But with two events to go the Army needed back-to-back victories in the stretcher carry and tug of war, then some help from the Air Force, if they were to pull out the victory.

"We traditionally win the stretcher carry, but you never know what the other services will have," said Capt. Greg Glenn, C Co. commander and the stretcher team's coach. "We worked hard on matching speed and agility ... but it's all about teamwork," Glenn said.

The Army team picked up critical time in the final transition then surged past the Navy for the event victory, setting the stage for a tug of war showdown.

"It's been a long time since the Navy has been beaten in the tug-of-war," said Maj. Bill Ramsey, 3rd Battalion executive officer. "I think it was the fall of '97."

In the Spring 2000 competition, the Army and Navy teams were tied going into the tug-of-war and the Navy won, taking home the bomb for the first time in over three years. Now the Army trailed by one point and needed a first round victory over the Navy, then to defeat the Air Force in the final pull, to guarantee a tie-breaker. The Benning team broke the hearts of the hometown favorites with a victory over the Navy in the first round. The rope was reset and the once-tested Army team went against a fresh Air Force team. The Soldiers' turned in a repeat performance with a quick victory over the Air Force to seal at least a tie in the overall competition, but their ultimate fate was determined in the last action of the day.



As the rope was aligned, the Army candidates quickly rallied behind the Air Force, knowing a victory over the Navy by their counterparts from Montgomery would be the coup d'etat, sending the bomb back to Fort Benning with the Army as the undisputed victor.

After an initial stalemate, the Air Force team steadily pulled the Navy over, ending a roller coaster turn of events for everyone involved.

"When Col. Ferriter talks to the candidates, he says never, never, never quit," said Glenn. "When Lt. Col Osborne is with them, he always talks about PMA — positive mental attitude. We saw them both in action here today."

Wilson students feed cycle of kindness

Children sacrifice Saturday to serve workers lunch

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Halloween was in the air, but a group of students from Wilson Elementary School had Christmas on their minds Saturday. They sacrificed their Saturday morning to help a local family "make it home" for the holidays.

Nearly 35 students from Wilson's Kids Care Club made and served lunch to a Habitat for Humanity crew in Phenix City, Ala. They met at the school at 9:30 a.m. to make sandwiches and pack chips, desserts and canned drinks before traveling to the construction site where lunch was served shortly after noon.

"This way the workers don't have to stop to go get something to eat," said 10-year-old Maneca Jackson, club president. "They're doing something nice for someone, so we're doing something nice for them."

The 50-man construction crew was working to complete Russell County's first Habitat for Humanity home, "something nice" for Bernice Upshaw and her three sons, who hope to be in their home before Christmas.

"At the rate they're going, they say we'll be in sometime in December," Upshaw said. "It's great what they're doing and what these kids are doing."

Many of the students gave up football games and cheerleading to participate in Saturday's event, the first Kids Care project for the 2000-2001 school year. Club coordinator Evelyn Montgomery, school counselor, said the students are learning an important lesson about giving.

"We could have done this on a weekday, and they would have missed a few classes, but that wouldn't have been a real sacrifice," she said. "They're learning that volunteering means giving your time, and sometimes that means sacrificing something that's important to you."

The students weren't the only ones sacrificing their Saturday to Ghouls and goblins celebrate Halloween

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

And they're off! At the stroke of 6 o'clock Tuesday evening screen doors all over Fort Benning slammed in unison as trick-or-treaters hit the trail like horses off the starting block.

But it was all business, no horsing around, for the hordes of ghouls and goblins who were serious about collecting candy.

"This is serious business," said 11-year-old Aubrey Coovrey, who wore running shoes under her princess costume. "You have to be polite, but you have to be fast if you want to get a lot of candy."

Fort Benning's hallowed holiday was a resounding success, said Sgt. 1st Class Brian Reinwald, Community Oriented Police platoon sergeant.

"We had an extremely large turn-out," Reinwald said. "We had no problems, no complaints from patrols or parents, and no injuries. It was a huge success."

Shannon Secules, a Davis Hill resident, said the number of trick-or-treaters in her neighborhood was significantly more than last year.

"We had at least twice as many kids come through, probably more than that. I bought tons of candy, and we ran out at 7:30," she said.

Secules said the numbers weren't the only thing growing.

"There were some mighty big creatures roaming our street," she laughed. "I guess they never outgrow their love for candy. I think I saw a Power Ranger with a 5 o'clock shadow."

Fort Benning families enjoyed a host of Halloween activities all week long, including Kelley Hill's 3rd Brigade, which sponsored a party, haunted house and hayride Oct. 28.

Library's scary story hour readies preschoolers for haunting evening

Patrons give children treats during parade

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

There weren't any ghosts or goblins but there was a variety of other costumed preschoolers at Sayers Memorial Library story hour Tuesday.

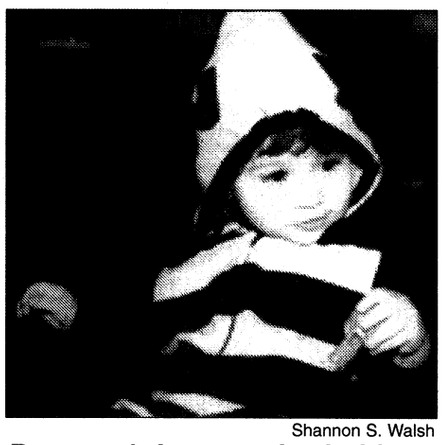
This weekly event had a special twist for Halloween. Children were invited to come decked out in their trick-or-treat finery.

The library story hour has been in place for a year and a half. Nancy Wahlstrom, public services librarian, has been in charge of the program since May.

"A lot of these kids are still at home and this gets them used to being around other kids," Wahlstrom said. "It also promotes reading."

Wahlstrom read Bedtime Stories by Lilian Moore and Old Devil Wind by Bill Martin Jr. to an audience of preschoolers and their parents.

Crafts were next as the children colored and pasted to make their own goody bags.



Library patrons studying at tables and working on computers became the audience for a Halloween parade.

The children went to each person for a trick or treat. The library provided small toys and candy for people to give the children to fill up their bags.

"I think it's great because it's just for the little ones," said Genea Rhodes. "Plus it's on post and it's safe."

Her 3-year-old twin boys, Joshua and Jeremiah, were costumed as firemen with bright yellow jackets and red helmets.

After the parade, there were homemade cupcakes and fruit punch to wrap up the event.

Wahlstrom also talked to the children about being safe while they're out trick-or-treating and about showing their parents any candy they bring home before they eat it.

Students at McBride wrap up quarter

McBride Elementary School

The students, teachers, parents, and staff members are very proud of the projects and activities that they have been working on the first nine weeks of this school year.

The pre-K classes have been working on identifying same and different, one-to-one counting, and the importance of accepting the differences in people. They will use these skills to build on lessons that will be taught throughout the school year.

The kindergarten classes have focused on fire prevention, Columbus Day and creating Hispanic hats to honor the Hispanic students. In addition to learning about the Hispanic culture, the students have been discussing the Native Americans.

The kindergartners took a field trip with the first-grade students from McBride to Hamilton, Ga., to participate in the Indian Festival. They also had a Native American visitor come to McBride and teach them about the culture. The students and teachers were very eager to learn to dance like the Indians. Learning about the many cultures in our society is a very important topic to discuss so that the young children can learn to accept differences among people.

The first-graders have been having a lot of fun reading books about fire prevention, Christopher Columbus, and the skeletal system. The hallways near the first-grade classrooms are lined with models of the skeletal system that were created by the students.

To help celebrate Hispanic month, these students had a big fiesta with a lot of food and a lot of fun music.

The second-graders have been busy working on research projects about bats, studying the weather, and learning map skills. They used their map skills to chart Columbus's journey to America. This group has also been following the election process. All of the second-grade classes got together for a fiesta to celebrate the Spanish culture.

The third-graders have been researching various Web sites, creating documents using Microsoft Word, working on an animal unit, and starting a new computer program for reading called "Reading Counts." The third-graders are very excited about the new computerized reading program and are looking forward to reading, reading, reading.

In guidance classes the focus has been on drug awareness and how to have a safe and healthy body. The classes have also discussed the importance of accepting different cultures.

In art classes the students created god's eyes to bring the focus on the Hispanic culture. They have also been working on how to draw pictures that contain a fall theme.

The PE classes are learning the skills necessary to play football and are focusing on the importance of using teamwork when playing sports.

In music all of the grade levels have been busy learning Spanish songs and dances. The students are now practicing for the Christmas play.

The Outdoor Education program is focusing on thinking skills, interviewing techniques and research skills.

The PTO worked very hard these past nine weeks getting ready for the school's annual Fall Festival.

The festival was Oct. 23 and was a huge success. There were many fun activities from the cake walk, to the fortune teller, to the other many booths that got us all in to the fall spirit." Carla Jackson, the PTO vice-president, said, "We had a great turnout this year and thanks to all the people who helped us out."

The McBride teachers, students, parents, and staff are looking forward to a very successful second nine weeks.

Owl pellets topic for 'lunch and learn'

McBride Elementary School

Owl pellets were the topic of discussion Oct. 13 when the third-graders from McBride school and their parents were able do a very exciting lesson together and then enjoy each other's company for lunch.

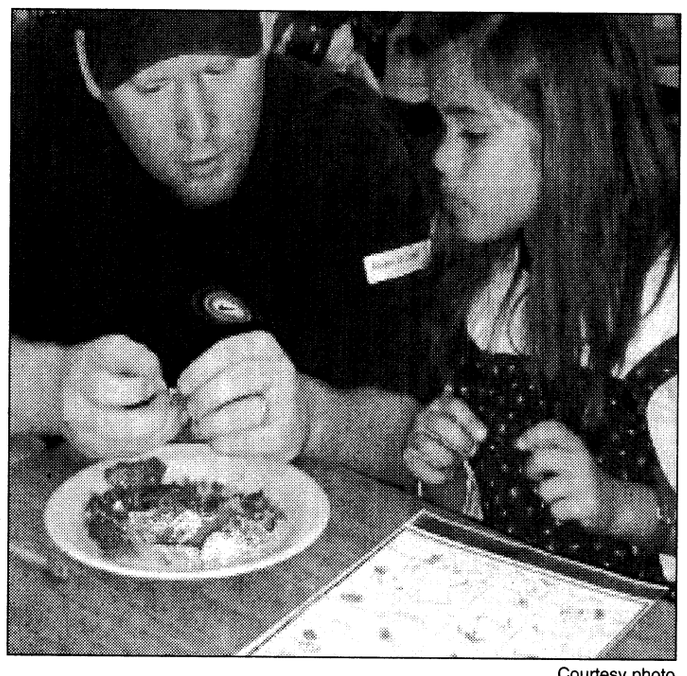
Some were a little skeptical of the lesson but it turned out to be a great learning experience for all involved, one that is sure to be remembered for some time. The parents, students, and teachers worked side-by-side to dissect owl pellets.

What is an owl pellet? Well, Sheila Cruz was able to explain exactly what an owl pellet is. She said, "Owl pellets are like little fur balls that have the stuff in it that the owls do not need. They eat their prey whole and then spit the rest out. The owl pellets contain things like teeth, bones, feathers, skulls, and fur." She added, "I thought it was going to be really gross but it turned out to be really neat."

During the owl pellet activity, the participants made predictions as to what their pellets may contain, sorted the contents by using a chart, and made a graph of the bones and other various items found within the material.

"I was amazed to see how small the rodent's and other animal's bones were," said Steven Campbell. "It was pretty hard getting the fur out of the pellet without breaking it."

Some students were able to put the bones of the prey back together to create a complete skeletal system of the animal.



"The owl pellet activity was cool," said Morgan Gadd. "Gross to me is so awesome. I learned that there could be more than one skull in a pellet."

During the course of the unit, the students completed research projects on various animals using the Internet, wrote reports on animals using Microsoft Word, created model habitats for animals, and designed various types of food chains.

"It was exciting because I like touching bones and other disgusting things," said Cory Ray.

"The owl pellet lesson is an excellent culminating activity to the third-grade animal unit, which includes the food chain," said Patsy Hanner, a third-grade teacher. "And the teachers, students, and the parents really enjoyed the entire activity."

Nikki Cady, one of the parents involved, said, "I really appreciate everything that McBride does for us. I am glad that I had the opportunity to come in and learn side-by-side with my daughter, Chelsea."

gardening tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

The cool season flowers have arrived. The most popular flowers for this time of year are in stock at all the local nurseries. And they are cheap.

Cool season annuals are plants that grow and flower during the cooler temperatures. The cooler temperatures conserve carbohydrates produced by the plant effectively generating more flowering and growth.

There is a wide range of popular cool season annuals available. Popular types to look for are pansies, snapdragons, alyssum and mums.

The forever favorite pansy comes in many colors. Pansies and violas are from the same plant family. Violas differ from pansies because of bloom size. Pansies have a larger bloom but the violas have a greater profusion of blooms. Both do well in south Georgia during the cooler months.

Snapdragons are popular as well. After blooming for a fall display they regenerate during the winter. Cool spring temperature will produce another showy display of color.

Alyssum is becoming more and more popular. It is an ideal border plant. Alyssum has a sweet fragrance giving it the "sweet alyssum" common name. This plant tolerates a light frost but withers with the onset of heat, which makes it ideal for the fall garden in Georgia.

The plants commonly referred to as mums, are descendent from the chrysanthemum family. Mums are very showy perennials. Their large flower heads make them good cut flowers. There is a wide range of colors available. Plant mums like any other perennial and have beautiful blooms every year.

An important tip concerning cool season annuals is to fertilize. Annuals need fertilization during the months they are most active. Correct fertilizing and watering make cool season annuals the focal point of the fall garden.

'Rocktoberfest' rocks Reggie's

Music makes first fest fun for all ages

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning residents looking for something different in entertainment didn't have to go far on Saturday.

The first "Rocktoberfest" was held in the parking lot of Reggie's Brewing Company from 3 to 8 p.m.

The outdoor event was geared toward single Soldiers and families.

Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers was one of the sponsors of the event. This year, Rocktoberfest replaced the previous annual "End of Summer Bash."

In the tradition of Octoberfest, German food like bratwurst and sauerkraut was available.

There were also hamburgers, soft pretzels and potato chips for people to enjoy.

The variety of beverages included beers from Reggie's new microbrewery, as well as soft drinks.

Tickets were sold for food and drinks and no item cost more than $3.

For the older crowd, the live music was a strong selling point. The three bands that performed were Dirty Work, Bedside Sock and Lithos.

Four Fort Benning Soldiers made their first public appearance as members of "Bedside Sock."

Sgt. John Kunze, Sgt. Daryl Harrell, Sgt. William Tomlin, and Staff Sgt. Jason Powell performed as the second act at Rocktoberfest.

The group did a number of cover songs and had fans in the audience cheering on their performance. All four Soldiers are with the Ranger Training Brigade.

"It's nice having the bands and music," said Sgt. Mistie Martin, CONUS Replacement Center, Harmony Church.

Martin was watching her 9-year-old daughter, Brittany, play on the Astro Jump.

The jump was just one of the events for children.

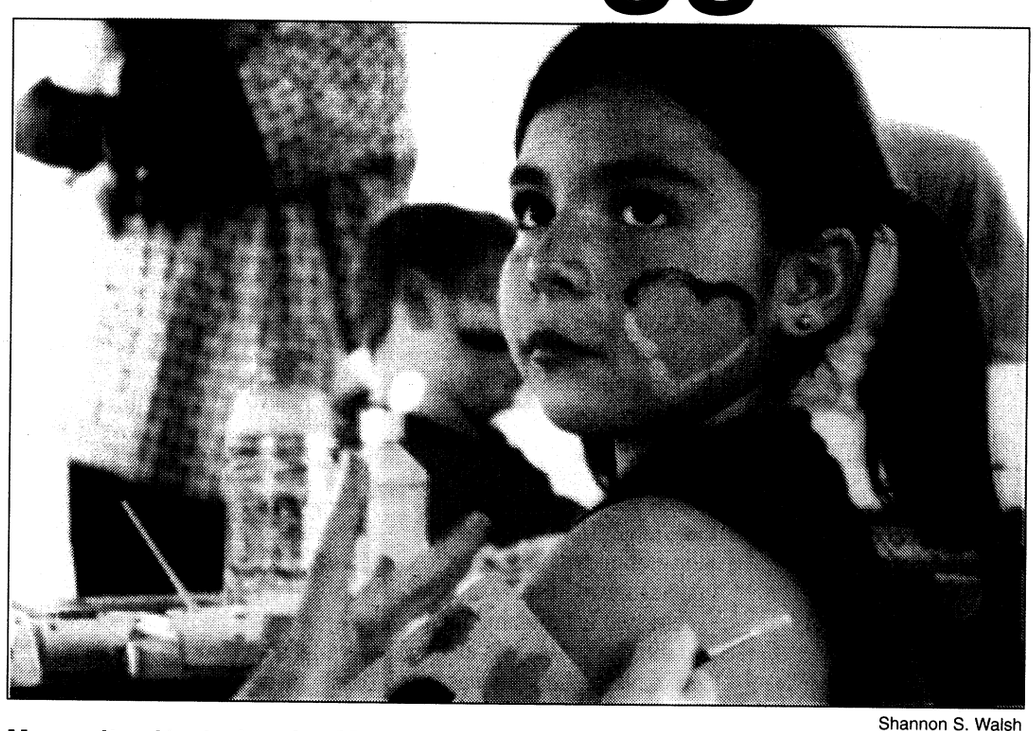
There was also free face painting and temporary BOSS logo tattoos.

The crowd was sparse early on in the day.

"People complain there aren't enough events on post but then don't participate in them when they happen," Martin said.

Sgt. Ronald Hurtado de Mendoza, 221st Military Intelligence Battalion, brought his family to the event and was looking forward to the ethnic theme.

"We've been in Germany before and went to Octoberfest there," Hurtado de Mendoza said.



His 8-year-old daughter, Margarita, took advantage of the variety of face painting designs.

"This is great for the kids," said Margarita.

"The main thing is a lot of Soldiers appreciate events like this. It gets us out," said Sgt. Allen Prather, from Fort Drum, N.Y., who is attending BNCOC

"We decided to do something different this year," said Michelle Young, publicity assistant for the marketing division of the Directorate of Community Activities.

The event had a dual purpose, Young said.

Shannon S. Walsh

Margarita Hurtado de Mendoza, 8, has her face painted at the first "Rocktoberfest" Saturday. Nearly 300 people attended the event.

"It raised awareness for BOSS, and it was also fun for the whole community," Young said.

The goal of BOSS is to provide entertainment for single Soldiers on post.

"We want to give them something to do other than sitting in the barracks," said Sgt. Robert Brown, BOSS president.

BOSS also tries to provide awareness about the needs of these Soldiers.

"We don't want Soldiers to think there isn't anything to do at Fort Benning," Young said.

The Moral, Welfare and Recreation, Reggie's Brewing Co., Econo Lodge, B&B Beverage, and Georgia Crown also sponsored the event.

Upcoming BOSS events include a possible Valentine's Day event in conjunction with Fort Stewart as well as the third annual luau in May at Uchee Creek.

work on the project. Spcs. Calvin Sistrunk and Francisco Arias, from Headquarters Service Company, Basic Combat Training Brigade, Wilson's Partner in Education, helped transport the students from Fort Benning to Phenix City.

"We're just helping out, for the kids," Sistrunk said. "It's all about coming together and working as a team."

Montgomery said the student council raised funds to purchase food through the school store, where students can buy supplies like pencils and erasers throughout the year. They researched Habitat for Humanity on the Internet and contacted the Main Post Chapel to inquire about helping at a local site.

In the end, the project turned out to be a collaborative effort of various Fort Benning groups. When the students arrived at the construction site, they discovered the construction crew was made up of students and Soldiers from the U.S. Army School of the Americas, including a Wilson Elementary alumnus.

Lt. Col. Steve Boston, the school's battalion commander, attended Wilson from 1970 to 1972 when his father was stationed at Fort Benning.

"That was such a long time ago," Boston laughed. "But it's neat to see these students helping out. Part of our goal at the U.S. Army School of the Americas is to expose our students to American culture and show them that we're about more than the Army on Fort Benning. We're here to serve the community."

God wants our words to be positive

reflections

Chaplain (Capt.) Christian Biscotti
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment

Most likely growing up, your mother said to you more than once, "If you don't have anything nice to say, don't say it at all." Wow! What wisdom mothers have!

The world would be a better place if we practiced this one truth. How many times have you said something bad about someone else when they weren't around? Or how many times have you ripped someone apart with your mouth, using your words like daggers in their back?

Growing up, when I was hurting kids with my words, sometimes in defense they would say, "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but names (words) will never hurt me." And then they would walk away with their face downcast to the ground, their eyes swelling up with tears and their heart broken into a million pieces.

I realized quickly that words are much more harmful than sticks and stones. Our words can bless people or destroy people. And unfortunately, most often we curse the people around us instead of blessing them, we stab them in the back and then smile when we see them face to face.

This is what we call hypocrisy, and it is destructive and wrong.

Now that we are all grown ups, you would think this sort of stuff would stop. But it doesn't. It is what we call gossip and slander. And wonderful people are hurt by it everyday. I take responsibility also, and despise that characteristic in myself when I catch myself saying something hurtful about another, especially knowing that each person was created in God's image and they bear God's own fingerprint. Each person God made is absolutely priceless. It doesn't matter how we rationalize gossip and slander, it is wrong, it is damaging, it is hurtful and it is very ungodly.

The Bible has more than 100 scriptures that deal with gossip and slander. Let's take a look at just a few of them:

Proverbs 18:21 "Death and life are in the power of the tongue ... ."

Proverbs 16:27 "A worthless man digs up evil, while his words are as a scorching fire."

Proverbs 16:28 "A perverse man spreads strife, and a slanderer separates intimate friends."

James 3:6, 9-10 "And the tongue is a fire, the very world of iniquity; the tongue is set on fire by hell ... with it we bless our Lord and Father; and with it we curse men, who have been made in the likeness of God; from the same mouth come both blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not to be this way."

Ephesians 4:29 "Let no unwholesome word proceed from your mouth, but only such a word as is good for edification according to the need of the moment, that it may give grace to those who hear."

In life, we have only two choices of what type of person we want to be. We can be a "plus" or a "negative" person. A "negative" person is someone who is always taking away from someone else.

They subtract from people, rob them of their dignity, self respect and character. But a "plus" person is someone who adds to people by saying good things about them.

"Plus" people are great to be around for they spark morale and lift people's spirits and literally "create" a positive atmosphere. We all need to be "plus" people! It is so easy to hate and be negative, for that is part of our sinful nature.

But as we make Jesus Christ the center of our life, he changes our nature and makes us like himself. God wants to use our mouths to build people up, to bless them, to breathe new life into them. Don't you love it when someone says something nice about you? It brings life to your soul. Proverbs 15:30 says, "Good news (words) puts fat on the bones." Are you putting fat on people's bones with nutritious, life giving words, or are you cutting their flesh away with sharp, negative words? Just know that one day, scripture says, you will have to give an account to God on judgment day for every word you have ever said.

I hope we all pass the test, for if we don't God's word to us won't be positive.

Start now; practice being a plus person. Say good things about the people around you, and just watch what happens. Your "good" and "positive" words will literally change not only the atmosphere around you, but the people themselves. Words have great power — let us use them for the good of others.

chapel notes

Choir members needed — Anyone interested in singing can join The Infantry Center Chapel choir. Practice is at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the Chapel Annex. Ability to read music is not required, though appreciated.

Rehearsals for Thanksgiving and Christmas begin soon.

Marriage enrichment class — A marriage enrichment class will begin Sunday, 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. at White Elementary School. The class will be taught by Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop and will continue through Jan. 28. All couples and engaged people are invited to participate in the class. To register or for more information, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Club Beyond meets — The junior high and middle school youth meet from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Sundays at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex. The senior high group meets from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Thursdays at Custer Terrace Chapel. All students in these age groups are invited and encouraged to attend these meetings. For more information, call Bruce Mulford at 545-2359.

Support group offers help for couples

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Current divorce estimates imply that half or more of all first marriages will end in divorce. Despite these estimates, couples continue to marry with the expectation that their marriage is going to last.

The emotional turmoil of divorce rips the insides of each partner apart. Dreams are shattered. Hope is lost. Faith is destroyed. Self-esteem is devastated.

Often the divorcing couple struggles to keep anger, resentment, bitterness and even hatred from consuming them. Sadness, guilt and loneliness often intrude upon the couple.

Divorce affects people more than the death of a loved one. Like death, divorce is a grieving process. And grieving can lead to healing.

Scripture informs us that God hates divorce (Malachi 2:16). Jesus told his disciples that men should not separate what God has joined together (Matthew 19:6).

Clearly, divorce is not God's design, but often the consequences of hearts being turned to stone (Matthew 19:8).

If your heart is growing cold and hard, and you are contemplating divorce, help is available to you.

Take the time now to work through the issues that you are facing.

Fort Benning girl tackles YS football

Bridgett Siter

Rams linebacker Ala Elsempeter, the sole female playing Youth Services football, takes a break during a team practice.

Female player packs a punch on the gridiron

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

She's a real beauty in the making. With long chestnut-colored hair and just the hint of dimples, she promises to knock 'em dead some day. For now she's content to knock the wind out of them.

At 9-years-old, Ala Elsempeter is the embodiment of a giggling third-grader, a bundle of energy and a smidgen of shyness, all packaged in a petite frame. But don't be fooled. She packs a wallop on the football field.

As a linebacker for the Rams, Elsempeter is the only girl playing football in the Fort Benning Youth Services Fall football program. It's a distinction she figures she'll have to get used to. After all, she plans on being the first female to make the NFL.

"Yeah, I want to be a superstar and be on TV and in the newspapers all the time," said Elsempeter, with a conviction that belies her whisper-soft voice. "Maybe for the Dolphins if I practice enough."

At an age when most girls are collecting Barbies and Beanie Babies, Elsempeter's collecting football cards of her favorite athletes, like Troy Aikman and Emmitt Smith. She said she's been watching the Dolphins and the Packers since she was 2 years old. Elsempeter's parents, Rachel and Donnie, have always encouraged their daughter's love for the game, though Rachel admits they tried to steer Ala toward the sideline.

"I wanted her to be a cheerleader, but she's been begging to play for years," Rachel said. "So finally we decided to let her do it. Now we tell her she can be anything she wants to be."

And she wants to be the best. So much so that she's willing to face a 14-year-old on the gridiron to hone her skills — she practices regularly with her brother, Antonio Collazo.

Elsempeter said tackling a teen makes facing the opposition a lot less daunting. Her coach agrees.

"She's not intimidated," said Rams head coach Roland Sydney. "I watched her during the two-week train up before season, and I noticed she wasn't timid at all.

"I knew when I saw her on my roster that there was one player I didn't have to worry about. She knows how to play like a boy."

Sydney said he's experimented with Elsempeter in various positions, including quarterback, but by the third game of the season, she'd found her niche.

"She found her spot as a linebacker. She's good at hitting," he said.

Teammate Patrick Thomas said he was initially surprised to learn he'd be playing side-by-side with a girl, but his surprise soon gave way to respect.

"She's good, she's a good sport, and she's tough," Thomas said. "She keeps up with the guys and plays a good game."

So what does Elsempeter plan to do during the "off season?"

"Well, I've been thinking I might like to try basketball," she said.

Losses end Brewers' season

Karen Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

The Brewers did not heed their wake-up call after a devastating 14-2 loss to the Braves Oct. 26 at Golden Park. Undefeated until that game, the Brewers had only one chance left in the double-elimination, Chattahoochee Men's Fall Baseball League playoffs and they used it against the Rockies Sunday afternoon, losing 10-3.

Their loss against the Rockies was their first to this team in four meetings and marked the highest number of runs scored on them during the season. The Brewers' record against the Rockies was 3-0 before this past loss, 8-1 over the summer and their loss against the Rockies Sunday was by the largest margin in the both the summer and fall seasons.

What does this prove? Anything can happen in baseball.

"That's always frustrating," said Jacob Stimson, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, Brewers catcher for the Oct. 26 game against the Braves.

"A couple of bad plays, a couple of good hits and we're down a lot of runs in the first inning," he said.

Hunter offers tips for deer rut

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Bayonet correspondent

During the past six years I have been collecting data and observing the whitetail deer during its most vulnerable time — the rut.

This is not based on scientific data but firsthand experience and observation.

Clues to the prerut appear when the younger bucks moving with the does instinctively start to scrape in previously used areas. The does try to separate themselves from the yearlings, and the larger bucks venture out cautiously. Within a week of Oct. 15, all velvet will be shed and the bucks will begin to rub.

Scientific studies show that most rubbing activity takes place at night in the bucks' core areas. Increasing their rubs, the bucks will start to re-mark their boundaries and select the trees and scent posts they will use during the rut. This sudden change in pattern further develops the prerut and takes place in Georgia around Nov. 1.

There are several theories on what exactly spurs the rut: moon phase, season, weather (temperature) or a combination

Youth Services brings NASCAR to life on Fort Benning

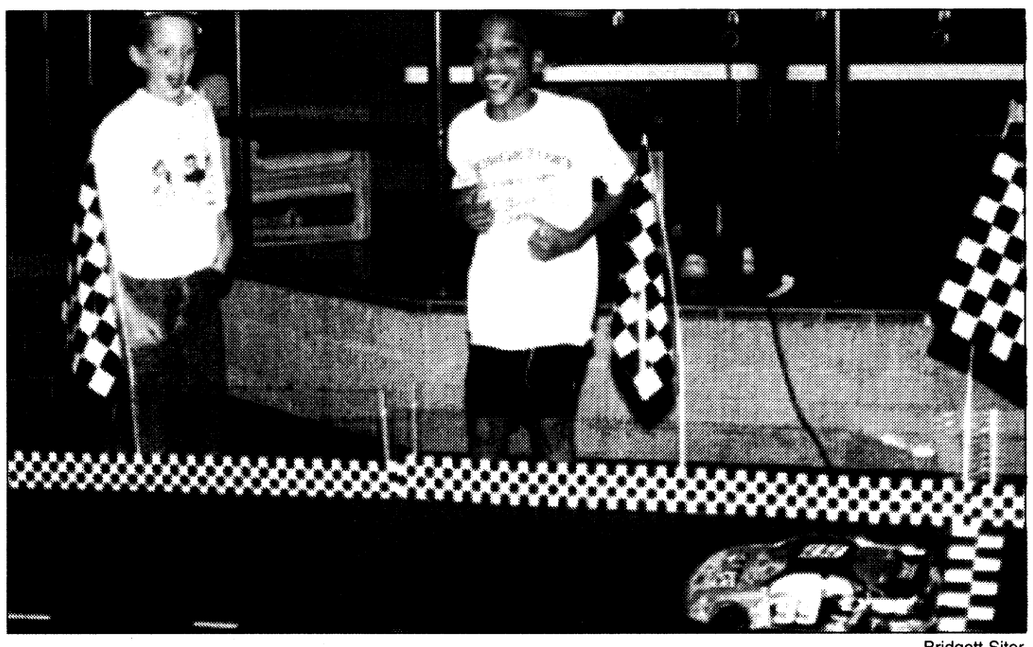
Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Youth Services members are anteing up a buck here and there to go a few rounds with the likes of Richard Petty, Jeff Gordon and Mark Martin. The YS center recently added a 16 feet by 24 feet NASCAR race track to its list of activities available to members and their families.

For $1 each, members spend five minutes behind the wheel of a micro-reality NASCAR, with one catch — the "wheel" is actually a remote control unit perched at a vantage point several feet above the track.

Drivers — as many as six at a time — select miniature versions of their favorite driver's NASCARs and compete against anybody else with spare change and a few minutes to kill.

"It's fun, and it's not too expensive if you just play occasionally," said 11-year-old Carrie Fitzwater, who likes to challenge her older brother. "He usually wins, but I'm getting better. It's a lot harder than it looks."



The track, cars and rechargeable battery packs were purchased at a cost of $25,000 with funds received from Training and Doctrine Command's Bold Grant, which awards money for projects deemed "bold and innovative," said Debbi Addison, a plans officer with Fort Benning's Directorate of Community Activities.

In 1998 Fort Benning's YS submitted a proposal to purchase and install the track to generate funds for the installation. The proposal included a detailed plan to show a return in the investment and a video and brochure from the manufacturer, Namanny Sports and Entertainment in Atlantic, Iowa.

"It's definitely a bold idea," said Linda Laine, YS director. "I was truly shocked when it was approved. I was even more shocked when it arrived. It is huge."

Laine said it took YS employees about five hours to assemble the track, "like a jigsaw puzzle," but the results are worth the effort.

"The kids are in love with it, and they're better at it then we grown-ups are," Laine said. "We're real proud of it and glad to see them enjoying it."

Nearby trail offers peace, solitude

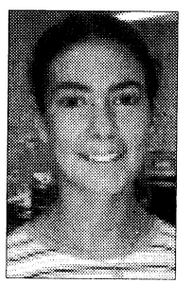
outdoor corner



Take a hike. Adhering to one of my mother's favorite figurative expressions, I did.

I took a hike along the Wolfden Loop of the Pine Mountain Trail.

Wolfden Loop is a 6.7 mile trail that winds through a thick forest. The dense canopy mostly blocks the view of the sky, creating an underworld of fragrant flora.

I started at the trailhead by the TV tower parking area off of Georgia Highway 85W, and my senses immediately opened to the aroma of mulch and flowers.

My dog couldn't keep his nose off the ground. The thicket lured him to a variety of plant life, thick branches hosting mushrooms; and dew-covered leaves. Occasionally he picked up a scent of something tasty, but not-so-natural, and I had to make him relinquish the abandoned camper snack.

Dogs are allowed throughout the Pine Mountain Trail system and FDR State park, as they are allowed in all Georgia State Parks, with one catch, they must remain on the leash.

The trail ran next to a stream that flowed into three small waterfalls along the way. Not every waterfall announced its presence with a thunderous gushing as expected. Only after I faced the falls did I hear the sonorous flow of water. The forest's density seemed to strangely mute it.

The stream conveniently provided water for my dog, who couldn't resist submerging himself in a pool of water underneath the falls. Each of the three waterfalls provide a wading pool that people can swim in, according to the Pine Mountain Trail literature.

As the trail moved away from the stream for a while, I could faintly hear the stream's burbling, but the acoustics eventually kept it out of earshot.

This is probably the most colorful time of year to go hiking on the Pine Mountain Trail, with the forest's canopy exploding in an array of oranges and reds. When I stopped to look around, I could hear the leaves dropping throughout the forest.

There wasn't much traffic on the trail, I only passed two groups of hikers along the route.

The Wolfden Loop trail only had two steep sections and a few rocky sections, where I was glad I decided to wear a light pair of hiking boots rather than running shoes to trek it. This hike provided a welcomed change of pace, and scenery, for me, as I'm always on the lookout for new ways to make exercising interesting.

Wolfden Loop is one of six trail choices in the Pine Mountain Trail system, each of different lengths ranging from the Mountain Creek Nature Trail of 3.2 miles to the Big Poplar Loop of 7.8 miles.

When planning a hike, make sure to estimate stopping time to take in the sights, smells and sounds nature has to offer. This pace equals about one mile of trail every 30 minutes.

There are also camping sites within FDR State Park, which is open all year round. Reservations for camping are advised during the Fall and Spring, which are the busiest times of the year and can be made by calling (800) 864-7275.

To get to Pine Mountain Trail, take Interstate 185 north to Exit 11, turn right on 80 toward Macon and get off on the next exit to 27 north.

Turn right onto Highway 190, which leads right into Pine Mountain. The FDR Park office is on the right, where trail maps and information are available.

There are two entrances to Wolfdon Loop, the TV tower parking area or a parking area on mile 18 on Highway 190.

A $2 parking fee is required for all trails. For more information on FDR State Park or other state parks in Georgia, call the Georgia Department of Natural Resources at (404) 656-3530 or log on to www.gastateparks.org.

Rutting: Makes deer hunting season action-filled of all. The most noticeable observation is the deer waiting for the acorns to drop. The does will congregate around the oaks and the bucks will leave their calling card — the scrape; almost always around an oak tree.

The scrape is significant because it is one place deer will frequent during the rut. The bucks have several scrapes in their area in an attempt to find the highest concentration of does. As the rut nears, the bucks will narrow their scrapes to a few select primary scrapes in doe-saturated areas.

A good primary scrape in Georgia and Alabama will normally be located at higher elevation under a pin or water oak. The key to a good tree is that the branches will be three and a half to five feet off the ground. Often the buck will gently break the branch, leaving it hanging pointing down to the scrape.

Once they have broken the branch they will strip the leaves, salivate, then rub their eye scent gland on it. Then, using their hooves they will scrape and paw the ground beneath the branch, until bare. Finally they will urinate and defecate in the two to four foot diameter circle. This is done to let all the bucks and does know this is his scrape. The does will urinate here as well, especially when in heat, letting the buck know she is ready. Often this is where the scuffles take place, when another buck tries to take over one of his buddy's scrapes or steal his does.

In some areas there are not enough trees to scrape under. In this scenario the deer will chase each other until mating is complete. In the past six years the acorns have started to drop as early as Oct. 10 and as late as Nov. 10. This depends on the weather and season related to frost. In a nutshell, the pin oaks coincide with the prerut and the rut coincides with the drop of white, red and post oak acorns. Normally, in most years the pin and water oaks will start to drop around Oct. 15.

Between the last week of October and the first week of November all the acorns begin to drop. This spurs the rut into full swing. In past years it's between Nov. 3 and 8. If you are fortunate enough to be in the woods during this time you will be amazed at the deer activity. During the rut I have seen as many as 50 deer in one sitting.

This is one time during the season you can be as successful on the ground as in the stand. This is also one of the most dangerous times and normally when most shooting accidents occur (the first three weeks of rifle season). Be careful and wear all 500 square inches of hunter orange.

In hopes of seeing a monster buck, many hunters use a variety of calls and scents.

One scent that works is Tinks 69 doe in estrus. I have taken no less than 30 bucks in several regions with this particular scent. But it must be used during the proper time. If you use this during the prerut or too early the deer will turn nose and run. If you follow the instructions on the bottle I guarantee success.

Whatever the time of year there is one consideration you must never forget, the deer's sense of smell. I have had deer wind me as far as 200 meters away. The bucks will normally try and wind their scrape 50 meters or more before tending it. Most scrapes will be on lightly vegetated ridgelines and hilltops. I prefer to position myself within 100 yards of the scrape down wind, at least 30 feet up in my climbing stand where I can easily see the scrape. Prior to getting in my stand I place Tinks 69 according to the instructions around the base of my stand.

For bow hunting the rut, try some of Fort Benning's excellent bow only areas, since the deer migrate toward these areas due to less pressure. The Alabama side is also awesome at the start of the Georgia rifle season with the prerut in full swing. This is also a good place to get away from the crowds of rifle hunters. Without a doubt Fort Benning and the surrounding areas offer some of the finest deer hunting in the U.S. I will be at JRTC for the rut, but if you can find the time to be in the woods around Sunday you will have some awesome hunting during the rut.

Brewers: Finish season with back-to-back losses

The Brewers finished the first inning against the Braves in the hole by 9, which included a three-run homer hit by Joey Jones. The Braves' lead increased to 13-0 by the end of the third inning.

"It seemed like we just weren't really there as a team," Stimson said.

In addition to uncharacteristic fielding errors, the Brewers bats went dry.

Although there were a few changes in the lineup, "the lineup doesn't matter if guys aren't hitting," said Brewers coach Ed Gawlik, 3rd Bn. (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt.

The game was finally called after five innings (10-run rule) with a score of 14-2 and all the dumfounded Brewers could do was to try to put this performance behind them.

The game against the Rockies on Sunday started with promise. The Rockies took an early lead 1-0 at the top of the third then the Brewers bounced back on a solo homerun by pitcher Orlando Vega-Torres, B Company 203rd Forward Support Bn., at the bottom of the third to tie it up 1-1.

But fielding errors cost the Brewers after a lead-off double and a missed fly ball allowed a run come in and Rockies took the lead again by one, 2-1, in the fourth.

The Brewers pulled it together in the bottom of the fourth and Chris Folk, A Co. 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., countered with a double and went to third on a wild pitch. Rick Johanningsmeir, C Co., 1st Bn. 19th Inf. Regt., walked and while Korey Brown, B Co., 1st Bn. 11th Inf. Regt., was at bat, drew the throw to first that went past the first basemen and Folk came home to tie it up again, 2-2.

The Rockies took off with the lead for good in the fifth inning scoring three more for a 5-2 lead.

The Brewers tried to battle back scoring one more, to make it 5-3, but were unable to put any more runs on the board.

The Rockies lengthened their lead to 7-3 in the sixth and then 10-3 in the seventh after a three-run homer by Brannon Kuykendall.

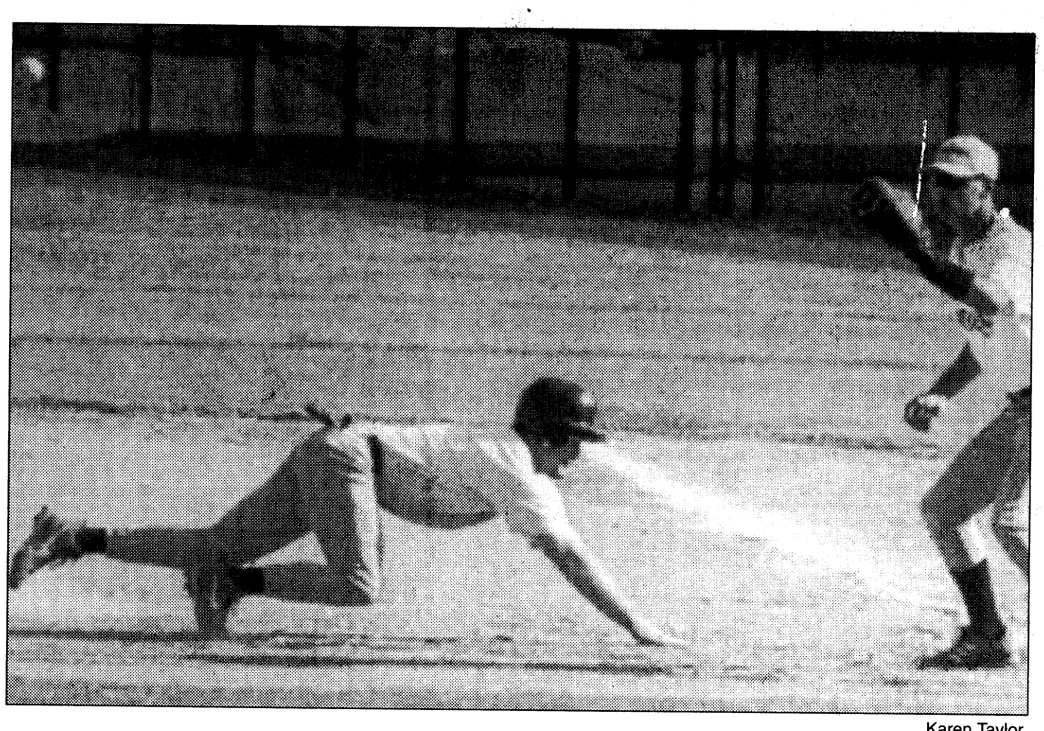
The Brewers' season was over.

Vega-Torres pitched a solid game for the Brewers with five strikeouts, but was relieved two batters in to the seventh inning by Robert Carlisle, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt.

Despite the three-run home run hit off of him, Carlisle got the job done, striking out two and forcing a pop out to end the inning.

"It's a team thing, if we don't do our jobs we all lose together," Vega-Torres said.

Gawlik said the Brewers had few errors all season but racked up about nine errors in two games. "They were costly errors," he said.



"When they make errors, they lose their mental edge and they didn't bounce back," Gawlik said.

"Mental errors take you out of ball games," said Anthony Ferraioli, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

Ferraioli, Brewers shortstop, said the players were putting more pressure on themselves to perform because it was the playoffs, which then caused a great deal of frustration when errors were made or a player didn't get a hit.

"That's disheartening. When you know you're better than that," Ferraioli said. "Today we gave up on ourselves.

"It's a heartbreaker to lose to a team that we've beaten three times before," he said.

Karen Taylor

Brewers first baseman Brad Larsen, B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, tries to pick off a Rockies runner.

Ferraioli acknowledged the Rockies for playing solid baseball and Walter Rivera's excellent game pitched with six strikeouts.

Gawlik commended the players in a post-game pep talk on a great season and reminded them that these last two losses were nothing to hang their heads about.

"Overall it was a great season with a lot of close games," he said. "There was some good competition."

"The season was great. It was an awesome opportunity to play," Ferraioli said.

The Brewers ended their season with a 11-5 record.

Gawlik looks to the 2001 summer season where he will have one team playing in the Columbus league and another team playing in the National Baseball Congress, which includes games against the Navy, Air Force and Marines.

For more information about the Soldier's Baseball Association, call Gawlik at 545-2734 or 685-4903.

Scuba meeting —The local Columbus chapter of the HammerHeads, an international scuba diving organization, will host a course meeting at 7 p.m. tonight.

The course is being offered by Joshua Blair, in conjunction with the Professional Association of Diving Instructors.

The meeting will be held at Blair's house, at 6420 Malibu Drive in Columbus with a potluck dinner.

The plight of aquatic ecosystems and the efforts being made to protect them will be discusses. All local divers, or potential divers, are encouraged to attend this complimentary course.

The HammerHeads are a group of scuba diving enthusiasts who get together to explore their local waters and are sponsored in part by the Diving Equipment and Marketing Association.

There are more than 79 HammerHead chapters worldwide that organize a variety of fun event and activities including monthly group dives, theme parties, contests and prizes.

For more information on the meeting or the HammerHeads, call Columbus Head Hammer Joe Cacciatore at 571-9222 or e-mail him at scubaprojoe@aol.com.

Steeplechase — There will be a steeplechase Sunday at Callaway Gardens. Volunteers are needed from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Volunteers will receive uniforms, lunch and infield tickets for immediate family members.

For more information, call 324-6252.

Bodybuilding contest — 17th annual Body Building Open Championship will take place at the Main NCO Club Nov. 18. All active-duty personnel, DoD civilians, retirees and family members, as well as guest are eligible to attend the event.

Weigh-ins will take place from 9 to 11 a.m. Nov. 18 at the Main NCO Club.

Prejudging will begin with the women at noon, followed by the men at 12:30 at the cost of $2 per person for spectators and final at 7:30 p.m. at a cost of $5.

For more information, call Carol Gearheart at 544-9595.

YS accepts applications — Youth Service is now taking applications for winter basketball.

THIS IS NOT THE FLOOR PLAN OF A HOUSE.

IT'S A TREASURE MAP.

Your home could be hiding some valuable treasure. More than 40 years ago, Grandma gave you a nice bundle of Series E Savings Bonds. So you put them in a safe place and forgot about them—until now. And even though your old Series E Bonds are no longer earning interest, they could still be worth more than 5 times their face value.

So why not redeem those old bonds at your local financial institution? To find out more, call 1-800-4US BOND. Begin searching your memory, then start searching your house. Because old Savings Bonds are a treasure worth digging for.

Area gears up for protest

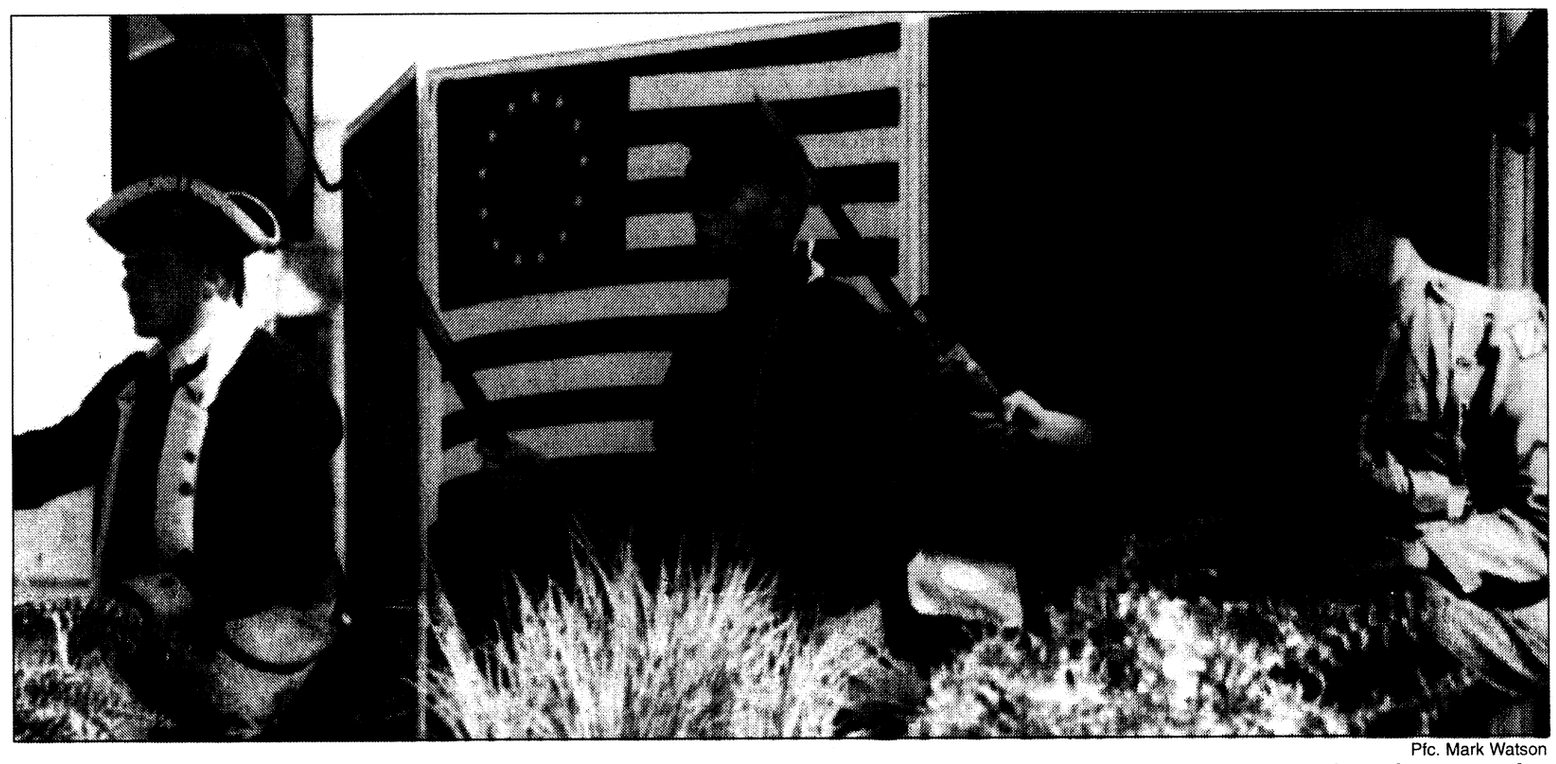
The U.S. Army School of the Americas protest started a few days early this year.

An Oregon man was apprehended and charged with criminal trespass and criminal mischief after he simulated hanging himself from the Custer Road overpass along I-185 Tuesday morning. He was also barred from entering Fort Benning property for five years.

"I think it is unfortunate he selected this means to express his protest because he placed a lot of people in jeopardy," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, Law Enforcement Division, Military Police Activity. "With the exercise of rights comes responsibility. He ignored the responsibility piece."

Drivers who saw the man hanging from the bridge reacted safely, and Kelley said, "We are fortunate someone didn't have an accident or a heart attack as a result of this man's irresponsibility."

The incident was a precursor to demonstrations scheduled Saturday and Sunday by members of SOA Watch. The anti-USARSA group will conduct its 11th annual vigil at the post's main entrance on Benning Boulevard.



Officials are expecting more than 10,000 protesters from across the country to converge on Columbus, filling hotel rooms and restaurants in the local area.

The protesters are expected to remain on the Columbus side of the gate until Sunday morning when they are scheduled to walk in a procession onto the federal installation.

Military police are expecting the protest to remain nonviolent as in years past.

Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City merged as one Nov. 10 at the Phenix City Amphitheater to honor American veterans.

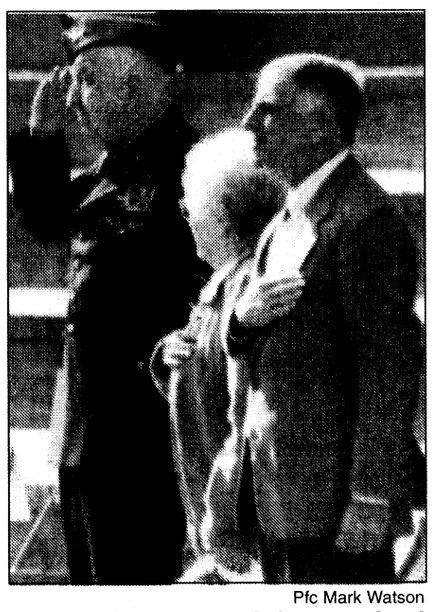
The cities joined in the observance of Veterans Day — an annual tribute to all American veterans whose service to the nation has kept our country free.

"You are not forgotten," Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne said of the millions of veterans remembered on the holiday. "We always think of you.

"They stand the watch. They man the ramparts of freedom for you and me. They uphold the values that ... make America wonderful."

Another speaker at the ceremony agreed.

"Just saying thank you doesn't say enough," Phenix City mayor Peggy Martin said, thanking the more than 25 million veterans who are still alive. "You, as veterans who so willingly served, we owe you so much. Not once out of the year ... but everyday."



Another speaker said we need to help the veterans as much as possible.

"There are 25.5 million living veterans, which is less than 10 percent of (the country's) population," said retired Col. Mac Johnson, an adviser in Vietnam and the ceremony's guest speaker. "That is a small number to shoulder the price of freedom."

Johnson said being a Soldier or a member of any other service is an honorable position.

Assistant commandant settles into job

Col. David Rodriguez, deputy commanding general and assistant commandant, U.S. Army Infantry School, has settled into his new position at Fort Benning and is focused on the task at hand.

"I hope to continue the great standards the Infantry School has set and to continue building Infantry leaders and Infantrymen for the future," Rodriguez said.

In his role as deputy commanding general, Rodriguez will serve as the assistant to the chief of the Infantry, Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne. He will also assist Le Moyne in the supervision of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab and the TRADOC System Managers for the Soldier, Bradley and Antitank Missile systems.

As the assistant commandant, Rodriguez will oversee the operation of the five brigades that make up the USAIS and also assist Le Moyne in the supervision of the School of Americas.

As for challenges of this position, he said it can be difficult to keep up with the evolving world outside of Fort Benning.

"It's a challenge to keep pace with the rapidly changing conditions around us," Rodriguez said. "To do all of that quickly so that we're leaders instead of followers is an awesome responsibility."

Rodriguez has had previous Infantry experience working with Mechanized, Ranger, Airborne and Air Assault units.

He and his family were last stationed at Fort Benning more than 10 years ago. His last position held here was commanding officer, B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, from July 1986 to June 1987.

Rodriguez was the executive officer, 1st Battalion, 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C., during Operations Desert Shield and Storm, Saudi Arabia from April 1990 to March 1992.

Rodriguez graduated from the U.S. Naval War College, Newport, R.I., in 1997, with a master's degree in strategic studies and national security affairs.

Prior to coming here, Rodriguez was assistant chief of staff, XVIII Airborne Corps, Fort Bragg.

He said this was one of the most demanding jobs of his career. He was responsible for the operations and training of more than 80,000 Soldiers with a worldwide contingency mission.

Rodriguez said he and his wife, Ginny, and their four children have all adjusted well to being back on post.

"It's the home of the Infantry, it's a great post, the surrounding communities are great and we're happy to be here," he said.

In October Rodriguez replaced Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton who is now with the Initial Brigade Combat Team as the deputy commanding general for transformation in Fort Lewis, Wash.

Military families stay on go

commentary

Where are you going? It's a question I have heard practically all my life, from my teen years as I darted out the door on the way to tennis practice or the mall, to later years as a member of a military family awaiting orders for a new assignment.

High school was pretty hectic, and my father never failed to ask, "Where are you going?" (I'm convinced he asked even when he knew my destination.)

I'd answer, and he would shake his head.

"You are the 'goingest' person I've ever seen."

It was foreshadowing the day I would marry a military man and start moving every two to three years.

Military Family Week starts Monday, and I can't think of a better time than Thanksgiving to celebrate some of my favorite people.

While I am indeed thankful for my extended family — many of whom will join us here this year to feast on turkey — I am also grateful for my surrogate family, the Army community.

Only fellow military families can truly understand our "on the go" lifestyle.

The transient nature of our military subculture has resulted in some unique characteristics our equally active civilian counterparts don't always share.

I know civilian families are busy with jobs, school, volunteer work and extracurricular activities. Packed calendars abound everywhere these days.

But, in the 13 years I've been a part of an Army family, I've noticed a few distinctive traits among my military neighbors.

Whether coming or going, the military knows how to say welcome and goodbye, and I don't just mean formal Hails and Farewells.

I'm talking about greeting new neighbors and telling those leaving how much they will be missed.

Military families hit the ground running when they move. They don't put off doing something until later, and that includes making friends.

I've been in the front yard with the moving truck and had neighbors come over and introduce themselves and offer their help.

Military families turn wherever they are stationed into home, and those they are stationed with into family. They move into a community and quickly learn what it has to offer. Not willing to sit around and eventually visit the region, they are out and about seeing the sights and offering their services to area agencies, not just those on post.

This weekend I attended a dedication ceremony for a Habitat for Humanity house. Volunteers from the Main Post Catholic Chapel and other Fort Benning units devoted their weekends to build a home for a family in Columbus.

That's just one of numerous stories I've covered of Soldiers and their families reaching out to others. In the last year I've met volunteers on post ranging in age from 14 to 80, and I feel honored to be a part of a community that truly values selfless service.

Last year my daughters attended a school in Muscogee County. My oldest soon realized she was one of only two Army brats in her class. She learned to avoid acronyms, like PT and PCS, but more importantly she learned that while she was like the other kids in her class in many ways, she was a part of something different — a military family.

Because her father is willing to serve his country, there will continue to be times when he will miss holidays due to deployments or TDY. She and her sister understand orders will arrive, and we will move regardless of how settled we feel.

My girls are now in school on post and have available the best support group around — other military kids who know the deal.

As we pause next week to give thanks for our blessings, remember not only the Soldiers who serve our country, but the family members who serve as well. They are the "goingest" people I know.

American Indians worthy of recognition

Col. Mitch Poodry
Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab

commentary

The U.S. Army has designated November as Native American Awareness Month in recognition of the contributions made by Native Americans.

Comprising only 1 percent of the U.S. population, Native Americans certainly are not one of the more active or predominant minority groups in the country. However, they have always been active participants when it comes to supporting this nation's armed forces.

The purpose of this article is to increase the readers' awareness and general education toward Native Americans and to tie it to our relationship with military service.

To illustrate this point, take this test. If you were asked, "When did Native Americans officially become U.S. citizens?" What would be your answer? In 1776, with the Declaration of Independence? In 1863, with Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation? In 1912 when Arizona and New Mexico became the last contiguous states admitted to the Union?

The typical American citizen, in my view, tends to group Native Americans as being all the same. This is just not the case. Each tribe is its own entity with its own laws, customs, religions and traditions.

There are more than 500 recognized tribes within the United States' borders. A Cheyenne is as different from a Seneca as a Frenchman is from an Englishman.

Native Americans have fought on the side of the U.S. since before there was a United States and have fought in every conflict since. In this nation's war for independence, the Iroquois nation played a vital role. Not only did Benjamin Franklin use the Iroquois Confederacy's laws as the basis for drafting the Constitution, but the loyalties of the various tribes highlight my earlier point that each tribe is its own governing body.

For example, Mohawks and Senecas, two of the six tribes of the Iroquois Confederacy, fought on opposite sides. Mohawks sided with the British and Senecas fought on the side of the colonists.

Even during the War Between the States, tribes came from as far away as the Oklahoma Territory in semi-organized brigades to fight, with units again ending up on opposite sides.

During the first major conflict off American soil, the Spanish American War, Native Americans were in the ranks. During the First World War more than 17,000 volunteered. This was nearly 25 percent of the adult male Indian population at the time.

WWII saw an equally impressive response. Navajos won acclaim in the South Pacific as Marine Corps' "Code Talkers," speaking in their native tongue over the radios and totally confusing the Japanese who were trying to decipher the messages.

The Army used Comanche native speakers in Europe but on a much smaller scale. A Pima Indian named Ira Hayes was one of the Marines who helped raise the flag on Mount Surubachi on Iwo Jima.

Perhaps the period with the most notoriety for Native Americans is the period of the taming of the American west, generally in the 1870s-1890s.

During this period, the US Army and Plains tribes were fighting each other from the Rio Grande to Canada. This period is highlighted by such historical events as the Battle of the Greasy Grass (what the Sioux and Northern Cheyenne call the Little Bighorn and what history books refer to as Custer's Last Stand), Chief Joseph's and the Nez Perce's epic 1,500 mile flight through the Rocky Mountains, and the chase and eventual capture of Geronimo.

Although the U.S. Army had used American Indians throughout its history as scouts, that practice was especially useful in the West where vast distances and the maneuverability of most of the confrontational tribes significantly challenged the cavalry and infantry units.

In fact, more than 20 Indian scouts received Medals of Honor for their actions against "hostiles" in the western campaigns.

It also, unfortunately, involved the betrayal of certain tribes that were allies to the Army. A classic example was the use of Apaches to catch an Apache.

Gen. Nelson Miles relieved Gen. George Crook in April 1886 in the Arizona Territory. Like Crook, Miles continued to use Chiricahua Apaches as scouts to eventually track down Geronimo and 20 other warriors and their families after they had eluded more than 5,000 Soldiers for more than five months. Geronimo's small band surrendered to Miles in August 1886. They were arrested, put on a train and sent to a prison at Fort Marion, Fla.

The 60 Apache scouts that were employed by the U.S. Army were also arrested, treated as criminals and also sent to Florida. Crook protested this action but got no response and the betrayed scouts spent 26 years as prisoners of war.

My last observation would be one of education and general awareness of Native American history. Native Americans, and specifically the various tribes, have their own view of history. It is usually much different than what is depicted in most school history books or depicted by Hollywood movies, if it is told at all.

To help put it in another context, the Native American population was around 5 million at the time the first whites arrived from Europe. By 1890, their numbers were about 250,000. During that same time period, the white population had gone from zero to 75 million.

Our history books normally don't tell that side of the story. Native Americans today continue to embrace their rich heritage and are willing to share that history with their fellow citizens.

And speaking of citizens, the answer to the earlier test question on when did American Indians become recognized as American citizens was in 1924.

That was six years after the end of World War I, which was yet another war in which Native Americans served as members of the U.S. armed forces but were not yet citizens of the country they had lived in all their lives.

Editor's note: The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office is sponsoring a Native American Luncheon at 11:30 a.m. Monday at the Officers' Club.

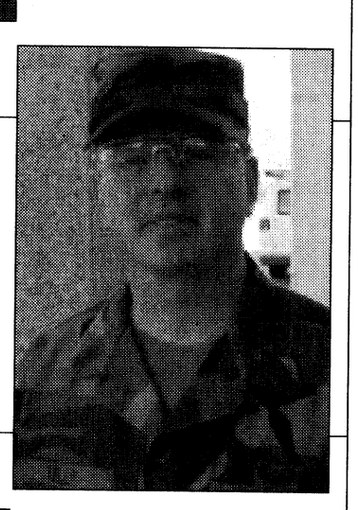
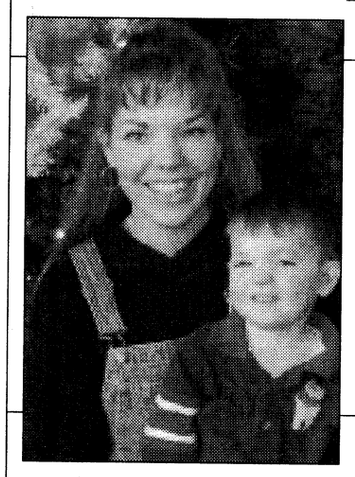
Dr. Patricia Wickman will be the guest speaker, there will be traditional American Indian Dancing and Buffalo meat sampling.

This year's theme is: "American Indians: The Nation Next Door."

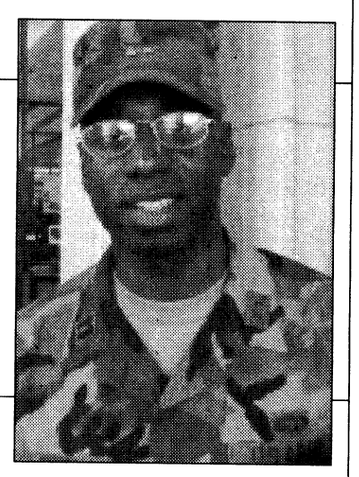


The cost is $6.50 and tickets can be purchased from your Equal Opportunity advisor or call the Fort Benning EO Office at 545-6665.

VARIOUS VOICES

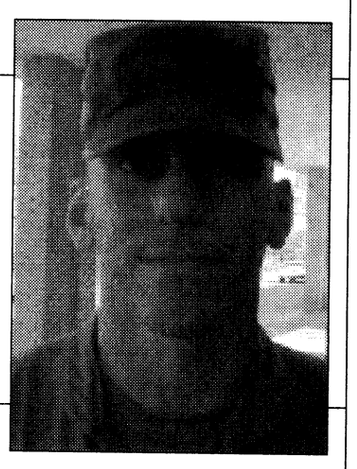


How do you deal with the challenges of being a military family?



Sgt. William O'Neal, 209th Military Police Detachment — "We take it a day at a time. I keep my wife informed and make sure she knows what's going on at all times."

1st Sgt. Eugene Kelly, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 3rd Brigade — "You have to be flexible and understand there are good and bad times in every profession. Keep a positive attitude. It gets better."



Kellie Grant and Hunter, family members — "Use all the resources available in the community, and don't feel like you're on your own. Support is out there. Keep the lines of communication open."

Capt. Tim White, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade — "We spend time together and do a lot of stress-relieving activities. Every Friday the whole family goes out together, and we take a short trip once a month."

Sharon Jackson, family member — "I just take it day to day. I try to stay positive and do a lot of praying."

Sgt. Osvaldo Gonzalez, 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group — "Keep communication going daily so you'll know what's going on ahead of time. "

Protesters intent questioned

Recent published statements by members of the SOA-Watch organization have caused me serious concern regarding the sincerity of true purpose, intent and integrity of their organization. One can only conclude from their statements they have a broader purpose than simply wanting to close the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

The groups' continuing attacks on the new institute, before its doors even open, demonstrate unwillingness to afford the school a chance with its efforts to enhance their human rights program curriculum.

A critical aspect of bringing the Latin American soldiers to the school is to expose the students to the moral and ethical standards of the U.S. Army and the seven Army core values of loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage. Admonishment of this educational approach is tantamount to admonishment of the principles of the U.S. Army and its Soldiers. I will take the liberty to remind everyone that these are the same U.S. Soldiers who are willing to make the ultimate sacrifice so that SOA-Watch protesters have the freedom to demonstrate.

When individual protesters write about members of the SOA Watch for whom they are proud because of "their outstanding courage of going to prison for trying to get the message across...," law-abiding citizens should be appalled. Repeated disregard of the laws of the land will never produce heroes.

Yes, Charles Liteky, a Medal of Honor recipient, deserved his medal. He put his life on the line during the Vietnam War. Unfortunately, his actions since then have only served to tarnish the medal and what it represents. It appears when viewing pictures of those who "got caught" for their federal crime that they are proud they are among the chosen ones. The truth of the matter is that incarceration is anything but an honorable occurrence. It is less so when it occurs due to acts committed, as Mr. Liteky stated at his sentencing hearing, to aid the "legitimate revolution of the poor." Christ was not taken prisoner and crucified because he was going out "to aid in the success of a violent uprising." He said, "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's and render to God the things that are his."

Father Roy Bougeois' statement that the school teaches students how to commit atrocities in their homelands is very simply without foundation. To imply that Noriega, who attended the school as a lieutenant, learned to be a drug-running dictator from USARSA is absurd. What USARSA does do is promote peace with emphasis on international security cooperation, the rule of law, human rights, international peacekeeping and disaster response.

The exposure that Latin American students and their families have to those Americans in Columbus and Fort Benning, who treat them with love and respect, does far more to promote human rights than any protest. If trespassing protesters of the school had taken the time to visit the school, witness the educational process and observe U.S. Army core values instilled in the students, they could have left with a newfound understanding of the school and its mission. The recent transformation of Latin America from communist insurgencies to democracies has been dramatic, although still fragile. The role USARSA plays in vitalizing these democracies has never been more important. Their mission is the stuff that produces heroes.

Death changes opinion of Army

It is amazing how a person's life can change in a matter of minutes. It is amazing how one incident can change your views forever. It is amazing how everything a person has come to believe and the views they thought they would have for life are suddenly changed and replaced with new and sometimes opposite ones faster than their life was given to them. All this just from one instance. (In my case it was) a death in the family, but not just of anyone, but that of a military man.

I know what this is like, I know how it feels and I know how a military death can change a person. I lost my brother, Spc. Michael James (Hogue) McNeill on May 12, 2000. This incident has changed my feelings about the military and military life, forever.

I remember the day my brother got hurt very clearly. It was May 5, 2000. I returned home from school to see my father walking out the door with a suitcase in one hand and a plane ticket confirmation in the other. I was informed that my brother had been struck by a car, going full speed, while he was crossing a street on foot with two of his Army buddies. He was not expected to make it through the night. My father left immediately. That is where it all began. From the minute my father and brother's wife arrived, they were treated like royalty. The Army was right there by their side, no matter what they needed. The Army provided them with a place to stay, transportation and what was needed most of all — a shoulder to cry on.

Before this point, I never thought of military people as being compassionate and caring. But as I came to learn as things went on, they are more caring, understanding and compassionate than most civilian people.

A week passed, and suddenly, on May 12, 2000, my brother breathed his last breath. He had passed away. At this point, I thought that the Army would no longer be helpful or cooperative with my family. I figured they would think that since my brother had passed away, that there was no more use in trying to please anyone. I figured they would try to save money any way they could. But, as I later learned, this was not the case at all. They helped my family return home and made them as comfortable as possible right up until the end. I would have thought that the military would think about nothing other than their own wants and needs, but once again, they proved me wrong. Apparently, they put my brother on full retirement with total disability before he died so that his beautiful wife and their soon expected child would be taken care of. This touched me deeply.

The thing that touched me the most was my brother's funeral itself. The military paid for almost all of the expenses and helped a great deal with the planning of the services. The day of the funeral is imbedded so deeply in my heart. It was May 19, 2000 to be exact. Everyone gathered at the funeral home to pay their last respects to my brother. Michael's body was soon being loaded into the hearse and proceeded, followed by many cars, to the Lakeview Cemetery.

As I followed the hearse, we entered the cemetery to see a lone man, in uniform, holding a bugle under his arm. With great discipline and ceremony, he saluted the hearse as it went by and turned, with the hearse, 180 degrees as it proceeded to the burial site.

At the burial site, the preacher said a few more words, and a silence fell all about. After the passage of a few moments, seven Soldiers in uniform with rifles shouldered came marching in perfect synchronization and stopped a short distance away. They raised their rifles and each of them fired three shots into the air with the sound of each shot piercing my heart, bringing out all the love and respect that was felt for my brother. Once again, silence fell about. Then off in the distance was heard a beautiful noise, rolling off the end of the young man's bugle. Each note slowly tearing away at me, making it easier to let go. Each note bringing the remembrance of my brother and how he served his country, his family, his God.

Intense is the only word to describe those few minutes of pain, remembrance and love that came with the playing of Taps. The playing stopped. Then the six Soldiers, unarmed, came marching in unison without a single misstep up to my brother's casket. Perfectionists, they were, folding the flag ever so carefully that had once lain upon my brother's casket, making sure not so much as a thread ever touched the ground. A single Soldier marched up to my brother's wife, Jenna, and placed the flag upon her lap, presenting it to her on behalf of the president of the United States, and with great reverence and respect, he stood in a final salute to her. But then, something very unusual happened. As with Jenna, a single Soldier approached my brother's mother and my father and presented them with flags also, ones that were already neatly folded and placed in fine wooden boxes, decorated with the United States Seal and containing all of Michael's ribbons. These did not come from the government's money. These came from the pockets of the men who served with my brother in his battalion. Knowing of Mike's beginnings and the strange turns his life had taken wherein he had two families, containing eight sisters, all of whom he loved dearly, they had raised the money to purchase these for his parents. This showed me that the military is one big family. In the military, whether you like the people you are around or not, you do everything in your power to protect one another and their loved ones.

What an honor I found this to be, to have been a part of Michael's life, someone who had served his country so diligently.

This event has changed my life and touched my heart forever. I have grown a deep love for the military and those who are a part of it. I realized that they are there to help me. The military is one big family that I may hope some day to be a part of. I hope to one day walk in Michael's footsteps, my father's only son, on a path also taken by Mike's father and his father before him. My respect and admiration for the military has grown immensely.

I want to say thanks to all of the people who have helped me, protected me and loved me enough to go to war for me, and a special thanks to the men who have helped my brother's memory live on. This is for you.

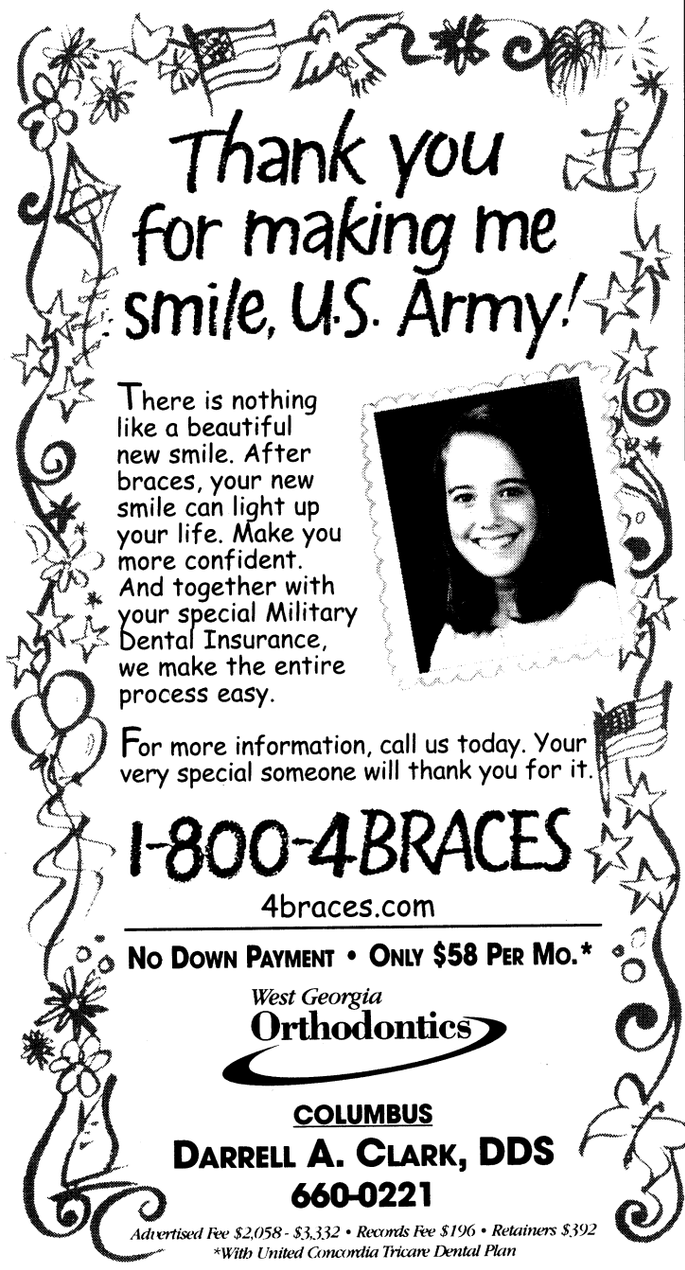
Post recognizes military families

Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program wants to remind everyone that Military Family Week is celebrated during the Thanksgiving holiday period. We take this time to express our appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices that are made by service members and their families in our community.

In the daily press of activities, which characterize our modern lives, we often overlook opportunities to express our appreciation to those who make a special contribution. To amend that oversight, we take this special opportunity to salute all military families.



Military families, who live in our community — both on post and off — are separated from their own hometowns and friends. They are also frequently separated from each other because of military duties.

We, as civilians, should value and commend every Soldier's contribution and celebrate during this week. To show our appreciation, the ACS Family Advocacy Program will have a display set up at Building 2624 Monday with educational materials for active duty Soldiers, spouses and children.

For more information on Military Family Week, call 545-3344.

Army offers free online courses

Army renews SmartForce contract

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Active-duty and reserve Soldiers, and Department of the Army civilians can continue to take free online information technology courses thanks to a recently renewed contract between the Army and SmartForce, a commercial computer-based training company.

Since the Army first started offering the service in 1998, the course catalog has grown to offer training on more than 1,100 technical subjects.

"Rather than send people away from their jobs to half a dozen places for training, why not save time and money by having them sign up for online courses," said Lt. Col. Tom Loper, the program's project manager. "We opted to offer this education to both the civilian and Soldier workforce. In an increasingly technology-based Army, these classes not only make students smarter at their jobs but give them more marketable skills for future jobs — inside or out of the military."

The program is offered on the Web at www.armycbt.army.mil. The classes range from how to use word-processor, database and spreadsheet programs for beginner through advanced users to 70 certification-preparation courses for systems administrators and computer programmers.

While all the classes are free for registered users, the program does not offer actual certifications. Arrangements for certification testing and associated testing fees — often costing several hundred dollars — must be made through commercial venders.

Links to those venders are posted on the Army CBT Web page.

Additionally, many of the offered courses may qualify for college credit. Loper recommended those interested in getting college credit for SmartForce classes check with their local Army Education Services office to determine which qualify and what costs may be involved through a college or university.

Currently, the instruction is primarily text-based with some graphics and photos. SmartForce plans to offer streaming video for instructor lectures in the future when available bandwidth is large enough, Loper said. Online mentoring service is also offered on a limited basis.

To date, 70,000-plus registered Army users have used the SmartForce instruction.

To register or view the course catalog, visit the Army CBT web site.

Registration must be made on a computer tied into an Army wide-area network using a military domain address.

However, once the registration is complete, students may log on with a student number and password at home, a local library or on any other computer connected to the Internet.

Fort Benning hosts education conference

USARSA sponsors conference

Lt. Col. George Ruff
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas and Fort Benning hosted the eighth Training and Military Education Conference at Ridgway Hall from Nov. 13-16. Fort Benning has hosted the biennial conference as part of the Conference of American Armies since 1986.

Representatives of 20 countries met and discussed a number of issues that impact the training and education of militaries throughout the Western Hemisphere. The principle theme for the conference was "The American Armies in the Framework of International Relations and International Law in the 21st century."

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, commander of Fort Benning said, "The Training and Military Education Conference directly impacts military professionalism in the hemisphere.

"It improves the interoperability between all our nations, while increasing dialogue and cooperation between civil and military institutions. This is a core element of our defense and security cooperation within the Americas."

The four-day conference was conducted with simultaneous language translations in English, Spanish and Portuguese to accommodate all participants.

Maj. Gen. Alfred Valenzuela, commander of U.S. Army South echoed his comments. "The issues being discussed here are very much the key issues facing the militaries of the hemisphere. These topics will be further discussed at the Conference of American Armies at its next session.

"Fort Benning and the School of the Americas have done a great job of providing an excellent forum for cooperation and the interchange of ideas that will be critical in the 21st century."

A number of participants expressed their gratitude for the outstanding support shown by the School of the Americas for the Conference over the years.

This is the final Training and Military Education Conference that will be hosted by the School.

The School of the Americas will close Dec. 15 following more than 50 years of service. More than 60,000 students from the United States, Latin America and the Caribbean have graduated from the school. A new school, the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, opens Jan. 17 at the former site of the School of the Americas.

The new institute will offer courses to civilian as well as military students and allow for an expanded curriculum.

Post honors first enlisted commandant

Fort Benning pays tribute to legacy

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Family, friends and Soldiers from across Fort Benning gathered for a ceremony at the Main Post Cemetery to honor a man who left a legacy on Fort Benning.

During a wreath-laying ceremony Nov. 6 at the cemetery, Command Sgt. Maj. Henry Caro, the first enlisted commandant of the Fort Benning NCO Academy, was remembered.

Caro was selected to be the first enlisted commandant of the school in December 1974, when the position was traditionally seated by officers.

"It's an honor after all these years," Caro's widow, Frankie Caro, said about the ceremony.

He was an outstanding Soldier who did so many things before he was 40, she said.

Caro's life was cut short when he died in a parachuting accident Nov. 6, 1976, in Fort Stewart, Ga.

"After all these years people still remember the special way he led his troops and the impact he had on their lives," Caro's daughter, Lisa Martin said about her dad.

The impact he had on Soldiers' lives still shows today as the commandant of the NCO Academy is still an enlisted Soldier.

"It is a very rewarding position," Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk, commandant of the NCOA, said. "There are not very many command sergeants major who have the opportunity to be a commandant."

Monk credits his position to the Caro, who he called a phenomenal NCO.

Caro served for more than 20 years in the Army, including assignments with the 101st Airborne Division in Fort Campbell, Ky., 82nd Airborne Division in Fort Bragg, N.C., and 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, in Fort Stewart.

He served three tours of duty in Vietnam, twice as an advisor and the other with N Company, 75th Ranger Infantry, 173rd Airborne Brigade.

Caro was awarded the Legion of Merit, five Bronze Stars with V device for valor and two Purple Hearts.

He also earned the Combat Infantryman's Badge, Master Parachutist Badge, Pathfinder Badge and Ranger Tab.

"He strived for excellence, and he cared about his men," said Rita Steinbook about her father. "He really was a Soldier's Soldier."

Pfc. Mark Watson

Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk, commandant of Fort Benning's NCO Academy, and Frankie Caro place a wreath at Command Sgt. Maj. Henry Caro's grave Nov. 6 at the Main Post Cemetery.

Fort Benning hosts Retiree Appreciation Days

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Retirement Services Office hosted approximately 400 veterans and their family members for the 18th annual Retiree Appreciation Days Nov. 2-3. Retirees came from Georgia, Florida and Alabama. All branches of the service were invited.

After a morning of activities that included breakfast with trainees, a Basic Training Company graduation of 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry, and a luncheon at the Officer Club Regimental Room, the retirees listened to guest speaker Gary Smith, Department of the Army Retirement Services officer.

Smith got laughs from the audience by using lighthearted cartoons to address serious concerns of retirees like healthcare, pay issues, survivor benefits and base closures.

The main theme of Smith's message was the Retirement Services Office is working to make things better and change is on the way.

He had good news about benefit checks. Retirees will see a 3.5 percent cost of living increase in their January checks. Last year's increase was 2.4 percent. Smith discussed how retirees, especially those over 65, have been disappointed by a lack of benefits.

"As life went down the line and things changed, some of the things we thought were going to be there weren't," Smith said.

He discussed how "space available" health care has become a major problem. Since 1995, the number of retirees have greatly outweighed the number of active-duty military members. Currently there are about 480,000 active-duty military and about 675,000 retirees.

Smith also recommended that the audience use the direct deposit system to receive their checks.

"It's more efficient and it's quicker to fix pay problems," he said. About 85 percent of veteran retirees currently use this system.

Retired Col. Bill Alonzo of Montgomery, Ala., was most interested in hearing about healthcare and proposed changes to the current Tricare plan. He said he enjoyed the event and was encouraged by what Smith had to say.

"I think it's great because we seldom get recognition today for our services and sacrifices," Alonzo said. "This event does that."

Smith encouraged retirees to go out and volunteer in their communities.

"Those who stay active and involved stay healthy and much more in tune," he said. "We want all of you to say the Army is taking care of me. It's not a life for everybody but most of us would say it was a good life and really mean it."

There was also a County and Health Fair at the club for the audience to attend after Smith spoke. Local agencies were there to update retirees with the latest information concerning their benefits.

"Quality Care at an Affordable Cost"

WW II artifacts find home at museum

Family donates uniform to museum

Bridgett Siter

More than 3,000 American Soldiers of Japanese ancestry served with the 100th Infantry Battalion during World War II. For the most part, they were pulled from their original units and reassigned, ostensibly for their own protection, at a time when many Americans questioned their loyalty to the Allies.

Like the others, 2nd Lt. Cloudy Gray Conner fought for the opportunity to serve his country. He was initially denied a commission with the U.S. Army after graduating from Clemson College in 1937. But it wasn't the color of his skin that threatened his dream of a career as an officer — it was his height and weight.

Standing just over 5 feet, with a 26-inch waist, Conner did not meet the Army's size requirements. He received a waiver at the onset of World War II, when the need for Soldiers outweighed Army regulations, and was commissioned with the one battalion where small stature was more the rule than the exception — the 100th Infantry Battalion.

Known as the "Purple Heart Battalion," it was one of the most decorated units in the Army. But Conner's uniform was bare, no Purple Heart or National Defense Medal, when it was delivered to his mother's home after he was killed by sniper fire at Cassino, Italy, in February 1944.

It hung in the attic of the Conner family home in Cartersville, S.C., for more than 50 years, until his cousin donated it to Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum Nov. 9. Now the uniform will be displayed, along with the medals Conner was awarded posthumously, with the 100th Infantry Battalion exhibit on the third floor of the museum.

Bridgett Siter

Gerald Conner and Frank Hanner, National Infantry Museum director, look at the meal ticket found in 2nd Lt. Cloudy Gray Conner's uniform. The lieutenant was killed in action in Italy during World War II.

Cloudy Gray Conner, known as C.G. to his family, got his unusual name from a character in a book his mother read. That's about all his 12-year-old cousin, Gerald Conner, knew about him in 1944.

"We had the same grandmother, and so we were in the same generation, so to speak, but there was 16 years difference in our ages," said Gerald. "He was the first born in his family. I was the last one born in mine, so I never really knew him very well."

Gerald is one of only two remaining family members from that generation, and even now, half a century later, he wants to know more about his cousin.

Last year he traveled from his Newnan, Ga., home to attend the dedication of the 100th Infantry Battalion monument on Sacrifice Field. He met Soldiers who fought alongside C.G. and learned the details surrounding his death.

Gerald documented all his findings and included them in a scrapbook with his cousin's pictures and military records. He included the book with his donation to the museum.

"In my mind, this is where it belongs," Gerald said. "It's the kind of thing you can't put a price on, and it should be here where everyone can benefit from it."

Frank Hanner, the museum's director, said Conner's research and documentation increased the historical value of the donation.

"He did an incredible job gathering information. A uniform is a wonderful piece to have, but it's the Soldier who wore the uniform and his story that makes history come alive," Hanner said. "The men who fought for that freedom will be forgotten if we're not careful to preserve the tangible pieces of history that tell their story.

Mementos bring history to life

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The director of Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum believes a picture is worth a thousand words.

When Hope Miller traveled from her home in Peachtree City, Ga., to Fort Benning Nov. 9, she brought along various mementos of her husband's 27-year military career. The .45 caliber pistol, binoculars and SS ceremonial sword were impressive, but it was the photographs that caught Frank Hanner's eye.

"The pictures of him wearing the holster and carrying the binoculars document the artifacts to a Soldier and a unit," Hanner said. "The pictures and documentation bring the artifacts to life. They're a testament to his loyalty and service to our country."

A picture, a uniform, an artifact of any kind — Hanner stresses the importance of preserving the mementos of the past for the children of the future.

"Material reminders of the past speak volumes for someone who doesn't want to read a book, or someone who thinks history is boring," Hanner said. "Children who don't like to study history discover that it comes alive when they look at pictures or artifacts from World War II or Vietnam or any other event they've only read about in school."

With that in mind, Hanner is very careful to document every detail about items donated to the museum. Uniforms and medals and weaponry make wonderful contributions, he said, but personal letters and photographs are priceless.

"The historical value of any piece goes up if it has provenance — who wore it, where and when, what happened to the Soldier... And a photograph accompanying the piece tells the real story."

Hanner said his office fields calls on a daily basis from people interested in donating items, and he always encourages contributors to schedule an appointment and bring as much information about the article as possible. He said worn areas and signs of age do not decrease the historical and educational value of a piece.

"It's the worn collar or the moth-eaten pants that give a piece historical character. They speak of its age and authenticity," he said. "All too often people don't know what they've got, and they throw it away or it ends up in a yard sale."

That's exactly what Miller feared would be the fate of her husband's military collection.

"I asked him to write everything he knew about them before he died, and last year I gathered it all together," Miller said. "I said before I depart this planet I'm going to make sure these are in a museum where they belong, so future generations can learn from his experience."

"Now the young Soldiers who visit the Infantry Museum will realize that skin color or height didn't matter to the men of the 100th Battalion. They fought for something bigger than the hatred and prejudices that brought them together."

Soldier collects historical military paraphernalia

Collection dates back to 1900

Bridgett Siter

BDUs and Dress Blues and PTs, jungle boots and jump boots, Army manuals, duffel bags, kevlar and berets, weaponry, badges, medals and citations — like most Soldiers, Capt. Mark Turner's accumulation of military gear threatens to take over the whole house.

But unlike most, his collection didn't start when he enlisted 12 years ago. It started sometime around the turn of the century, with the Boxer Rebellion in Peking, China. His collection spans 75 years of military history, starting with America's involvement in Peking in 1900 and ending with Vietnam.

Turner, a company commander for the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, began collecting more than 20 years ago as a child when his interest in military memorabilia was sparked by stories of his ancestors, who served in every branch of the military. His lineage on his father's side traces back to the War of 1812, his mother's side back to the Revolutionary War.

"We've had somebody serving in the military in almost every war since the revolution. I guess it's genetic," he said. "I've always been interested in all things military, and I always knew I'd join the Army myself."

Turner joined the Army on his 17th birthday, and for nearly 10 years, he stored his collection at his parents' home. It wasn't until he moved to Fort Benning in 1997 that he began displaying his entire collection.

"Displaying them is important to me. They have to be seen to be appreciated," said Turner, who calls himself "just a temporary caretaker for these historical artifacts.

"It would be a shame to hide them away in an attic. We have to be able to see these kinds of artifacts if they're to teach us about our country's heritage."

The collection, which includes hundreds of pieces of headgear and medals, nearly 400 uniforms and thousands of photos, books, documents and diaries, covers every inch of his Columbus home. Vintage photographs line the walls, footlockers store countless artifacts until they can be preserved for display, and three closets have been sacrificed for the cause.

"My wife's a good woman. She tolerates it," laughed Turner, and his bride of six months agrees.

"There's no room for my shoes, and I have to keep some of my clothes in storage, but when I married him, I married the whole person," Barbara Turner said. "He's definitely doing what he loves. His collecting is a career that combines his love of military and history."

Though his collection is insured, and valued at more than the home that houses it, Turner said his desire to collect has never been swayed by the market value of a piece.

"Their stories outweigh any value a dealer or collector might put on them," he said. "The history behind each piece intrigues me more than the piece itself."

And Turner knows the story behind 90 percent of his collection. He's spent countless hours researching. At first he used rudimentary methods, searching newspaper archives and telephone books when he found a name or serial number on a piece. The Internet has modernized the process, but Turner said he constantly discovers new avenues of information.

"Every day there's something new in the whole research process. It's like a big jigsaw puzzle, never complete, but always offering new details about the big picture," he said.

Sometimes just the right puzzle piece falls into place and Turner gets to meet and interview the veteran or a family member of the veteran who originally owned a piece in his collection.

"I guess I've spent about half my life in a library. I'm a research fanatic," he said. "I'm not satisfied having a piece without knowing all about it. Meeting the veteran who owned it is like meeting a celebrity to me, and they're always glad to know someone from my generation still cares about what they went through."

Pfc. Mark Watson

Capt. Mark Turner displays part of his collection in his home.

Turner's acquired the majority of his collection from antique stores, flea markets and estate sales. He said venues like eBay have made collecting much more difficult than when he began.

"The foundation of my collection was laid long before the Internet came along. It's made it nearly impossible to purchase pieces at an affordable price," he said. "And the growing demand has created a huge market for fraud. There's a lot of fakes out there. You have to know what you're doing."

Hard pressed to select a singular favorite, Turner pointed out several "jewels" among his trove of treasure — a Moro tribesman's spear brought to America by a Soldier who fought in the Philippine Insurrection; one of only two known original photographs of the Memphis Belle, Margaret Polk; personal correspondence and medical records of President Harry Truman's physician, Maj. Gen. Wallace Graham; and the personal effects of Frederic E. Davison, the third African-American to be promoted to brigadier general.

But it's the memorabilia Turner inherited from his own ancestors that he cherishes the most. His living room mantel is a shrine to his grandfathers, one of whom served as an MP during World War II, the other a pilot who flew 31 combat missions over Europe.

Turner plans to eventually expand his collection, turning his energies to more recent conflicts, like Grenada and Desert Storm. But in the meantime, he continues to search for the most elusive artifacts of all — the ones that belonged to his great-great-grandfather who fought in Pickett's Charge in 1863.

"He was one of the few in his company who could read and write, so he kept detailed records. It kills me that I can't find those records or his uniform or personal effects," Turner said.

"I hope someone somewhere is taking good care of it and enjoying it, because that's what's really important."

Soldiers take shot at Sniper School

Canadian Maj. Gary Yuzichuk, a Sniper School student and Fort Benning's Canadian liaison, along with his spotter, Pfc. Jason Ripp, also a student, move toward a sniper hide during the live-fire stalk. The hide will allow them to fire at a target or to collect intelligence on the enemy without being spotted and compromising their mission.

Students learn tools of trade during course

Pfc. Mark Watson

Well behind enemy lines, two Soldiers creep though the woods inching their way to a concealed position that allows them to observe enemy movement and fire without being detected.

After avoiding the enemy patrols, the Soldiers are in their "hide," a concealed position that allows them to work without being spotted. They radio information to the command post and find out the mission has changed.

Instead of gathering intelligence, they must eliminate a target.

The men make final preparations, ranging targets and clearing loopholes to fire through.

The men make a final range check on the target. It is an 800 meter shot.

The shooter settles his sights and squeezes the trigger.

As the bullet travels to its target, the spotter watches the supersonic wake of the round streak through the air and hit the target.

The sniper, who is responsible for the long-range shooting, and his spotter, who carries a back-up rifle and helps the sniper, fulfill their mission: one shot, one kill.

A sniper's purpose is to reduce targets at long range using precision fire and to collect and report battlefield data.

Although fictional, the Soldiers who graduate from the U.S. Army Sniper School are trained for such a scenario.

The new snipers began their fifth and final week of training Monday with the field training exercise.

Another requirement was a live-fire stalk where the snipers were required to move into a shooting position while under surveillance and shoot at a silhouette target.

Photos by Pfc. Mark Watson

Canadian Maj. Gary Yuzichuk, along with his spotter, Pfc. Jason Ripp, scope a target from underneath their ghillie suits.

Although it may sound simple, the sharp eyes of the sniper instructors know what to look for and where the shooting positions are located.

The snipers train to high standards, Staff Sgt. Arturo Prieto, a Sniper School instructor, said. But in the end it is worth it.

"Once they go back to their units, they are quality snipers," he said. "These guys are well trained."

The students said the school was a great learning tool.

"There is so much more a sniper can do, than a typical Infantryman," Pfc. Martin Perez, a student in the school from A Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, said. "When people think of a sniper, normally they think of an expert marksman, but we learn better ground tactics and learn better patience."

Another sniper student said the school was challenging and that upon completion, he would have more control of his training.

"I enjoy working alone and (ever since I came in) I wanted to do this," Sgt. Terrance Johnson said. "It is something different from regular day-to-day and it is more challenging." Johnson who is part of the Initial Brigade Combat Team, traveled from Fort Lewis, Wash., to receive instruction at the school.

"Now I will be able to do my own training and I will be able to shoot more (often) than others."

To learn the skills needed to successfully complete a sniper's mission the students received classes on survival, tracking, escape and evasion and counter tracking. The classes teach the future snipers how to be self-sufficient and survive in a hostile environment without support.

Along with the live-fire stalk, the students were required to move to the McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain site as part of the training exercise. During their movement, the snipers avoided opposing forces by using stealth learned at the school. The students set up security and received a counter-sniper mission.

The training ended with the "final shot," an exercise that require the snipers to use all the materials from the course. Everything from their slow deliberate movements to the camouflage technique, and their knowledge of the terrain to the snipers' main missions.

The intense courses and the high standards weeded out nearly three quarters of the class.

Of the more than 25 students who began the course, only nine Soldiers remained in the sniper school class.

11th Infantry Regiment leaders tour Gettysburg

2nd Lt. Roman Skaskiw
11th Infantry Regiment

On the afternoon of Oct. 20, the skies above Green Manor Turf Farm in Gettysburg, Pa., were astir with MC1-1C parachutes, as select personnel from the 11th Infantry Regiment jumped into Strikehold Drop Zone to tour the historic Gettysburg battleground.

The highlight of the three-day trip was a guided tour by retired Col. Thomas Vossler that included visits to Seminary Ridge, Devil's Den, and Little Round Top.

The four-hour tour focused on division and corp level maneuvers and was "just enough to whet your appetite without making you nauseous," said Maj. Francis Burns, the 11th Infantry Regiment's operations officer.

Capt. Mark Turner, from D Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, whose ancestors participated on the Confederate side of Pickett's Charge, led a very detailed tour of that failed maneuver.

"You learn more when you're actually on the ground," said Capt. Michael Belton, the Airborne School's E Company commander.

"History comes alive from this perspective, and you can see the challenges that each Soldier, north or south, had to face," he said.

"Until you've actually walked the ground and looked at the terrain as closely as they did, you can read all you want about the battle, but you won't fully understand it," said Capt. Richard Crowther, B Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt.

The indepth historic study the trip provided was only a portion of its intended goal.

"The Gettysburg staff ride allowed (11th Inf. Regt.'s leaders) to study the battlefield and reflect on the seriousness of our profession," said Col. Michael Ferriter, the regiment's commander.

"It was a low-cost and high-payoff leader development program, and a great team-building event.

"It's important to show the Army's junior leaders that you can work hard and have fun at the same time," he said, noting the importance of such events with regard to the retention of talented young officers.

The bulk of the attendees were first sergeants and company commanders from the 11th Infantry Regiment's five battalions — 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry; 1st Bn. (Infantry Officer Career Course), 2nd Bn. (Infantry Officer Basic Course), 3rd Bn. (Officer Candidate School), and the CONUS Replacement Center. Because of the vast differences in each battalion's program of instruction, company commanders from different battalions don't get many chances to interact. The visit provided an opportunity for them learn more about their peers and sister battalions.

"It's always nice to take a step back from our busy training schedules and enjoy the camaraderie, which is really what makes the Army special," said 1st Lt. Michael Troxell.

You don't pay tax on a Roth IRA

This is the big attraction of a Roth IRA—you don't pay tax when you make a qualified withdrawal, not even on the earnings and gains that build up.

You must follow certain rules, such as holding the Roth IRA for at least 5 years and reaching the age of 59½.

What's more, you can convert many traditional IRA accounts to a Roth IRA. And you can contribute to a Roth IRA after the age of 70½.

You will need to meet the guidelines, and make careful comparisons to determine which choice is best for you.

Other IRA options also offer tax advantages. For example, you can withdraw up to $10,000 from most IRA accounts without paying an early-withdrawal tax, if you use the funds to buy a first home or pay for higher education.

3rd Brigade remembers veterans with ceremony

Marne Soldiers honor Korean War troops

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Veterans of the "forgotten war" were the focus of 3rd Brigade's Veterans Day ceremony Saturday in front of the National Infantry Museum.

Brigade commander, Col. Anthony Cucolo III, said that although the Korean War received little recognition, it typified what military personnel will do for their country.

"It was selfless sacrifices, in distant places, in unexpected times, and in the name of freedom," he said. "But it was forgotten or ignored by our fellow Americans.

"We're here to honor all veterans," he said, "but especially those from our division."

During the Korean War, 11 Soldiers from the 3rd Infantry Division were awarded the Medal of Honor for heroism.

These men and their fellow Soldiers were remembered in the ceremony, which began in front of the Tank Destroyer Memorial and concluded at the 3rd Infantry Division Memorial.

Cucolo and the guest speaker, retired Col. Cecil French, placed two wreaths in front of the division monument.

French was there along with more than 10 fellow members of Outpost 60, the local chapter of the national Society of the 3rd Infantry Division.

His tie to the division came in 1950 when he was assigned to Heavy Tank Company, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Infantry Division.

French personalized the war for those gathered outside the museum by recounting the efforts and reading the citation of Korean War Medal of Honor winner Cpl. Charles Gilliland.

"I wanted to talk about what happened to a real hero," French said. He, too, was involved in that action.

French said that the Medal of Honor recipients and other Soldiers who fought in the Korean War have often been overlooked and should receive as much recognition as those who fought in World War II and other wars.

"We want to remember them like we'd like to be remembered," French said.

After the speakers' remarks, there was a roll call for recently deceased Outpost 60 members and 3rd Brigade Soldiers.

Retired Master Sgt. Edward Bunn of Outpost 60 was recognized. Bunn passed away this past year. He was French's platoon sergeant at the time Gilliland was awarded the Medal of Honor.

Sgt. Joseph Eckstam's name was also called. He was killed last month in a motorcycle accident. Eckstam was a member of 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

Soldiers from B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, made up the honor guard and firing squad at the ceremony.

The audience paying tribute outside the Infantry Museum was a mix of Soldiers, family members and local veterans.

"This is the best way we can honor what these people did," said retired Sgt. 1st Class Clarence Kelley.

Cucolo said the Soldiers were proud to be a part of the event.

"You might think of this as extra duty to be standing in uniform on your day off," he told the audience. "That's not the case. These Soldiers practiced and were excited about this ceremony."

First Sgt. Cornelius Barlow, B Co., 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., said he was happy with how motivated his Soldiers were to participate.

"They were fired up to be involved in something of this caliber," Barlow said. "That's what I like to see in young Soldiers."

"You really get a link to the past," said Capt. Jeffrey Ugino, HHC, 3rd Bde. "When you see the veterans and realize everything they sacrificed, it really puts your own job in perspective."

"We hope the veterans present today will look at us with confidence, that we will pass on their legacy," Cucolo said.

another peaceful 'non-event' like previous ones," Kelley said.

Columbus City police will be responsible for controlling the crowd outside the gate, and Fort Benning officials have been in close contact with the department in preparing for this year's event, said Col. GT Myers, the installation's provost marshal.

Federal law and Fort Benning regulations prohibit partisan, political demonstrations on the installation.

Myers said he can't predict how many will choose to break the law and come on post.

Military and DoD police officers will apprehend violators, and personnel from the Staff Judge Advocate will handle the processing of their legal paperwork.

"It's hard to say how many will be processed, but the post has made arrangements for the proper apprehension and handling of these folks," Myers said.

"We will have medical personnel standing by, and there will be water, shelter and food (MREs) available because we have no idea how long they will be detained," Myers said.

Last year, 3,168 people crossed the line, with all but 65 volunteering to walk back or ride buses off the installation once they were met by police. Those who refused to leave were processed for judicial action.

"It is our intention to work with the U.S. Attorney to prosecute everyone who violates the law whether it is their first time or not," said Col. Richard Gordon, Fort Benning's Staff Judge Advocate.

A federal magistrate has agreed to be on hand Sunday in the event some protesters refuse to identify themselves.

"They will be taken to the Fort Benning courtroom and appear before the federal magistrate who can charge them with contempt," he said.

People who live and work on Fort Benning have been driving through force protection checkpoints all week. Even those on foot or bicycles are being stopped for identification checks. Signs have been posted on the Riverwalk reminding cyclists and walkers to carry their ID if they wish to return to post. City buses are being boarded and each individual's ID checked.

The force protection checkpoints started last weekend and to date they have netted a drug bust and caught individuals trying to enter post who were already barred from the installation for reasons including shoplifting and driving while impaired, Myers said.

There are a number of events on post this weekend, including a ball, farewell dinner and body-building competition, which will bring additional traffic onto post.

"I would ask anyone coming from off post to remember to factor the checkpoints into their travel time," Myers said.

He encourages people who can avoid the area around the stone gate to do so Saturday and Sunday, although he hopes to allow traffic to continue on Benning Boulevard. Once the protesters begin crossing the line, that may change.

About 30 MPs from the 2145th Garrison Support Reserve Unit are here to help with the mission, as well as military police from the 3rd Brigade.

In addition to the extra strain on manpower at the Directorate of Public Safety and others, there is a financial burden the post has to bear to preserve the integrity of the Fort Benning installation, Myers said.

Gordon agreed.

"This is a very expensive operation for Fort Benning. It cost the post in excess of $50,000 last year in terms of overtime and garbage being cleaned up all along the roads that the protesters left," Gordon said.

A bill was sent to leaders of SOA Watch last year itemizing the Fort Benning expenses, which taxpayers eventually paid.

"The bill was for the overtime we had to pay our DoD officers, medical personnel and bus drivers, and for the cleanup. The letter was just ignored," Gordon said.

This year one added expense has been the widening of Dixie Road, a main artery off I-185 into post. A gravel checkpoint lane was added Tuesday morning by the Directorate of Public Works for vehicles without decals.

"That is a real choke point, and we identified it as a problem last year and finally got the funding to do it," Kelley said.

But, he added, it is not a direct result of the protest, rather a force protection move that was needed regardless.

Once the protests end Sunday, residents and employees will see fewer checkpoints, but they will not disappear completely.

"We are prepared to take the checkpoint operations as far as necessary past Sunday, but we hope we won't have to," Myers said.

The post is still under Threatcon Alpha, so the military police will continue random checkpoints for the foreseeable future.

"We are intent on providing the same level of law enforcement support to the Fort Benning community as we always have," Myers said.

join to fight in a war, "I don't know any more honorable profession than to willingly sacrifice yourself for the freedom of others," he said.

He added, veterans are who paid the price for freedom and must not be forgotten.

Several wives of fallen service members were on hand to pay tribute to their husbands and other veterans.

"It is important to have Veterans Day," Wanda Funderburk, of the Gold Star Wives club, said. "Each veteran has done a tremendous amount to keep freedom."

Another club member, Dorothy Putnam, whose husband died in Vietnam, echoed her words and said, "There would be no freedom if there were no veterans," driving home the fact that freedom isn't free.

Hospital to enforce new system

Martin Army will close records system

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The practice of patients carrying their own health records to all their medical appointments, even those off post, will end this winter at Martin Army Community Hospital.

In February the hospital will start a closed records system, similar to those in civilian medical centers and doctors' offices. Military treatment facilities across the Department of Defense are under a mandate to do the same.

Carolyn Bradley, Patient Affairs liaison, expects to receive phone calls from individuals upset over the change since some patients are accustomed to keeping their records themselves, taking them from appointment to appointment.

"Some of them are of the opinion their records belong to them and not the Army," she said. "But, I think, when they realize why we are doing this they will understand."

The move is the result of a DoD Inspector General study of doctor workloads, which looked at medical records to document patient visits.

"They found many records were unavailable to be screened because patients were hand carrying them everywhere," said Maj. Joseph Graham, chief, Patient Administration Division, MACH.

The IG's report included a plea to the DoD's Health Affairs to gain control of their medical records.

"The medical record is the cornerstone for documenting appropriate medical care and for legal and administrative proceedings. Therefore, the outpatient medical record must be available and maintained in the hospital," Graham said.

The civilian sector maintains close guard of its records, allowing patients to receive only copies of requested files. Likewise, Martin Army plans to maintain the originals in-house and provide patients with copies upon request.

"They (records) are the doctors' documentation and belong to them. They are the basis for medical, legal and continuity of care issues," Graham said.

The closed medical records system will minimize the loss of documents, therefore, providing doctors with a better medical history on the patient, Graham said.

Physicians depend on the patient record, especially when they are not the first physician to see an individual who has a recurring problem, said Col. Karl Kerchief, deputy commander, Clinical Services.

"It is so much easier to make patient care decisions when I can tell from the medical record what another physician was thinking, and what the patient told the physician previously. Also, I can document the changes that have happened over time, and note any increase, decrease or change of a process," Kerchief said.

"If I don't have the medical record, I can only guess by what the patient tells me, or by the ordered tests or medications, what another physician might have been considering," he said.

The hospital currently maintains 80,000 outpatient and 15,000 inpatient records. An action team including doctors, health care administrators, appointment and file clerks

Post repairs sewer lines

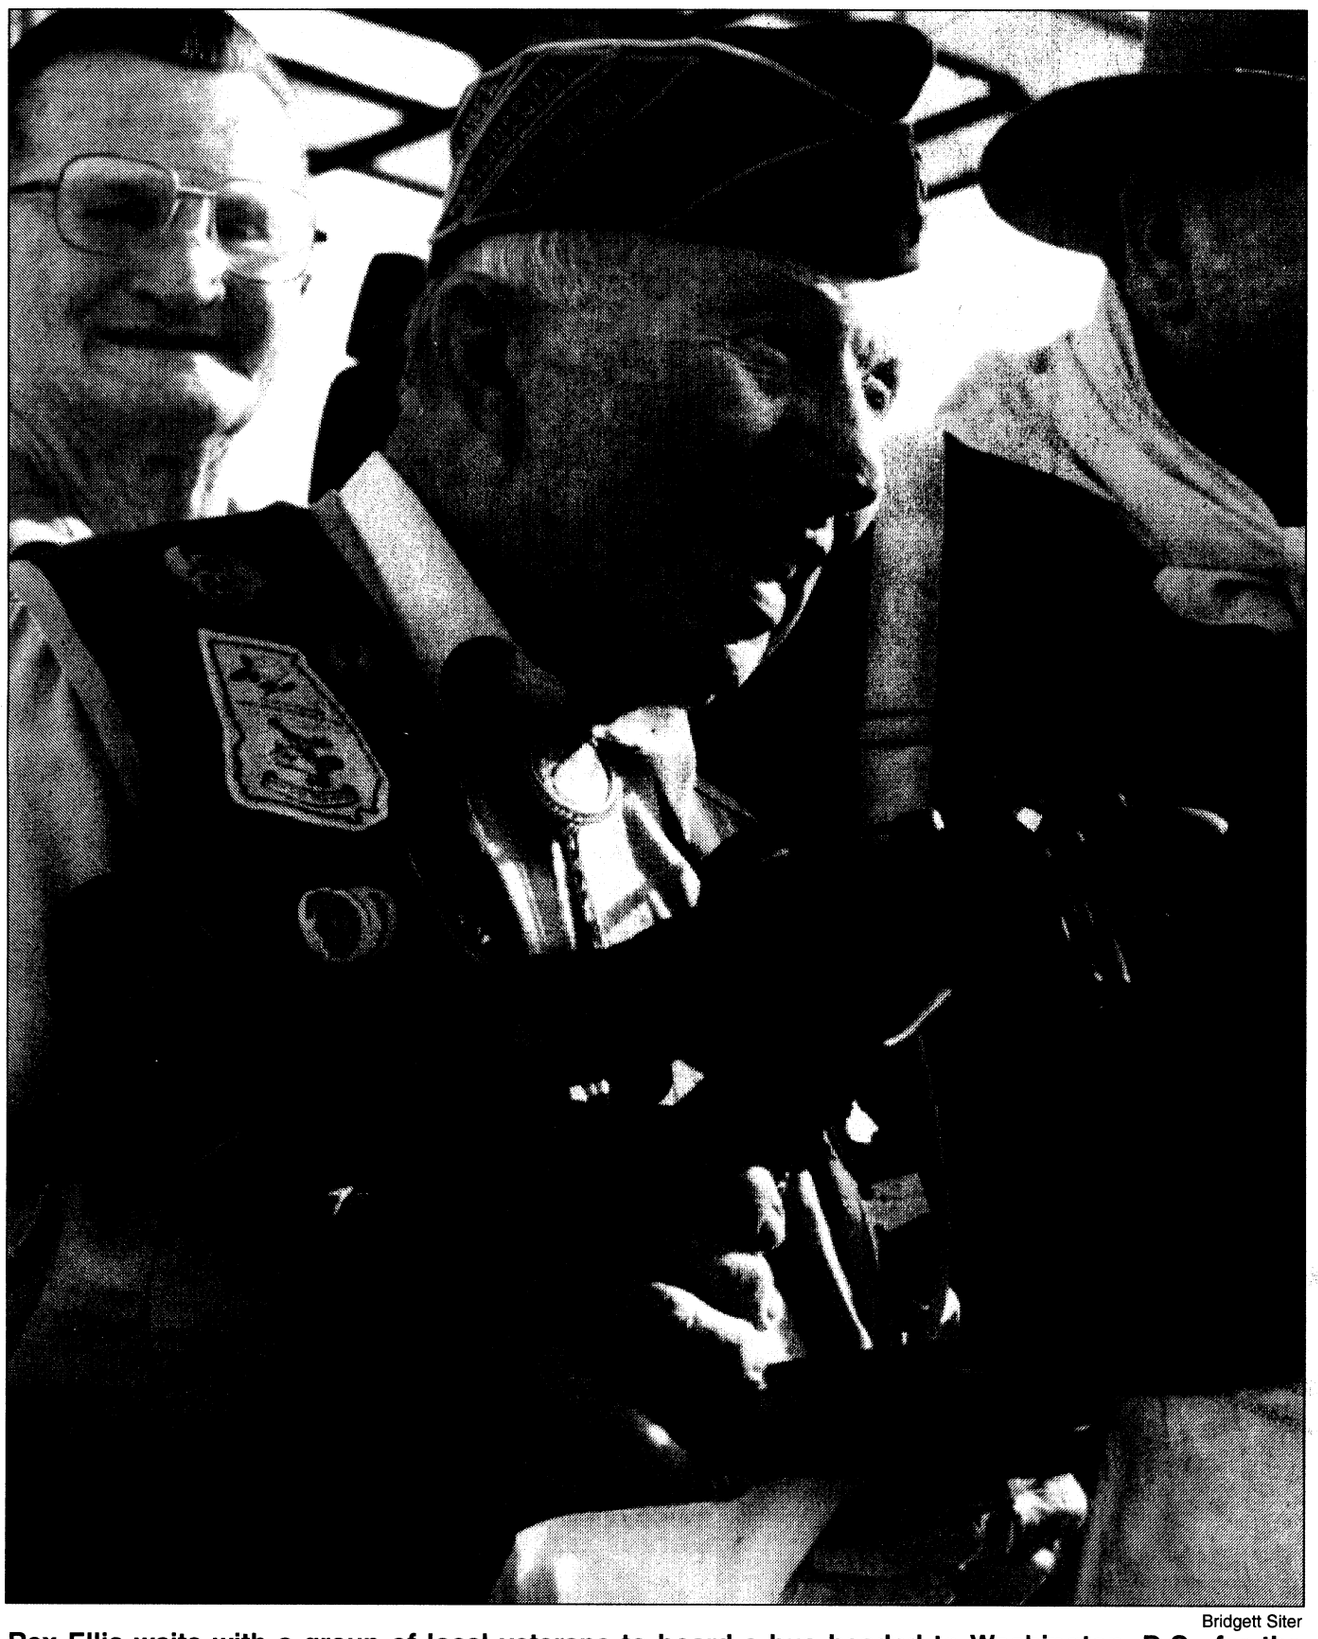
Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

There's been a lot of digging going on at Fort Benning.

The Directorate of Public Works is updating the infrastructure of sewer lines on post a little at a time. The DPW's chief of the Construction Inspection Branch, Richard Chancey, said the lines desperately needed to be fixed.

The old sewer lines were originally connected by jointed pipes, which over time, deteriorated, in some cases, to the point there was no longer a pipe in the ground at all, merely a hole where the pipe used to be.

"The lines were old and root-bound. They were infiltrated with ground water (which reduces their capacity to carry away the sewage) and easily blocked up," Chancey said.



The new sewer line is a solid piece of plastic pipe which is being inserted through the entire section of the current sewer system being treated. These new lines will be less vulnerable to problems such as blockages or breaches that release sewage.

"We're excited about it," Chancey said. "It cuts down on a tremendous amount of maintenance."

Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Public Works, added, "These repairs are paramount in protecting Fort Benning's environment from contaminants released from this aged sewage distribution system."

More than 1,000 World War II veterans die each day in America. They're called "the greatest generation," and they've displayed the same mettle that earned them that title in their determination to leave a lasting reminder of their sacrifice.

Nearly five years ago, World War II veterans across America launched an all out initiative to erect a national monument honoring the 16 million men and women who served during the war and the 134 million Americans who supported their effort. A groundbreaking ceremony for the $100 million tribute took place Saturday on the National Mall in Washington, D.C.

"Our numbers are dwindling. It could take four years to see it completed, and I might not be around that long," said 78-year-old Jim Rhodes, who spearheaded the local campaign to help fund the memorial. "At least I can be there to see the groundbreaking."

Rhodes left for Washington, D.C. last Friday with 40 local WWII veterans and their wives. The Columbus-based insurance company, Aflac, Inc., funded $7,000 for a chartered bus and lodging expenses.

Columbus mayor Bobby Peters and Aflac representatives met with the veterans Nov. 9 at the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 665 in Columbus. Peters presented the group with a check from the city for $5,126 — $1 for each surviving World

Area family receives new home

Soldiers assist Habitat for Humanity

Special to the Bayonet©

At age 4, Elisha Dowse sat quietly in her living room watching as people streamed through her new home.

When asked to show her own room, the shy preschooler's face glowed and she quickly ran and jumped on the bed.

Words aren't needed when a smile can speak volumes.

And smiles, along with a few tears, were in abundance at the Dowse home.

Richelle Dowse, Elisha's mother, is among Habitat for Humanity's newest homeowners, and Saturday she had a chance to thank the men and women who helped make her dream come true during a dedication ceremony in the front yard of the house on Fourth Avenue.

After first thanking God, Dowse recognized the volunteers who spent every weekend since Sept. 4 building the three-bedroom house, including members of Fort Benning's Main Post Catholic Chapel.

The USAA Foundation, out of San Antonio, Texas, sponsored the project. For the last three years, the company has helped build homes in military towns across the country.

"It's my house — somewhere for my kids to grow up in other than an apartment. They can play outside in their own yard, and no one can tell them to get off the grass," Dowse said while sitting in her living room surrounded by family and friends.

Dowse's son, Tony, a third-grader at St. Mary's Magnet School, offered tours of his room.

"It's great. It has a lot more space," he said.

"Richelle's smile was worth a million dollars, and to know she is going to be here raising her kids is so rewarding," said Nilsa Rodriguez, a congregation member. Rodriguez provided meals for the workers on several occasions, and her husband, Chief Warrant Officer Felix Rodriguez, worked on the construction.

Dowse works at Winn-Dixie on Veterans Parkway and as a carrier for the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer. In addition, she put in 500 sweat equity hours on the project, which is required for all Habitat homeowners.

Her mortgage payment will be $220 a month for 20 years, said Carl Hopp, executive director of the Columbus Area Habitat for Humanity Inc.

"That's a lot lower that the $770 the average three-bedroom helped develop the hospital's new process.

The computerized Composite Health Care System will play a key role. All records have bar codes, which will be scanned when they are removed from the file rooms at the assigned primary care clinic or outpatient medical records room. They will be charged out to the doctor requesting the records, a change from the past when they were assigned to a clinic. The move will help in tracking down records. Couriers will deliver the records to the appropriate clinics prior to patients' appointments. When doctors finish with the records, they will place the folders in containers to be returned to the file rooms.

Only in cases where patients have more than one appointment a day will they be allowed to carry their file to the next doctor. To do that, patients will be required to sign out the records agreeing to turn them over to the personnel in the next clinic.

"We don't have enough money — and we can't charge patients — to get the administrative support to mimic the civilian sector in this regard. But, we can get close to it," Graham said.

Patients can request copies of the records, but the original forms will remain in the hospital, even when a patient is referred off post, he said.

Graham wants to get the word out so patients will be prepared for the change. Posters will go up and personnel are being briefed on the new procedures.

War II veteran in Columbus. Aflac presented each participant with a bag of travel-size toiletries and a tiny stuffed replica of the company's icon, a duck, which elicited a chuckle from 80-year-old Grady Bates.

"They said I flunked ducking," laughed the recipient of four Purple Hearts, referring to wounds he received in World War II and Korea.

Grady wore his cavalry uniform, complete with cowboy hat, spurs and saber, just as he wore from 1936 to 1946 when he served with the 6th Cavalry Division. He shared humorous anecdotes about serving with Patton and Eisenhower, but became solemn when he talked about the memorial.

"Thank God. We felt forgotten," he said, shaking his head. "This is extremely important to us. It took a long time, but that's probably our fault. We didn't push it. I'll be so proud to be there."

President Clinton and former senator and presidential candidate Bob Dole, a veteran of World War II, greeted the Columbus veterans and thousands of others who were present at the groundbreaking of the memorial, which will occupy 7.4 acres between the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial.

Construction will begin in the spring, and officials project the dedication will take place on Memorial Day, 2003.

Plans for the memorial include 56 pillars and two large pools surrounding a sunken plaza and fountains. Visitors will enter through 41-foot-tall arches and view a wall of gold stars, representing Soldiers killed in the war.

"For some, inevitably, this will be a place to mourn," said Dole, during his address at the groundbreaking ceremony. "For millions of others this will be a place to learn and reflect and draw inspiration."

It was indeed a place of reflection for 80-year-old Rex Ellis, a former Air Force bomber pilot, who called the event a "momentous occasion, worth every minute" of the 17-hour drive.

"All in all, it was an outstanding ceremony. It's probably the last and largest assembly of World War II veterans like this," said Ellis, who estimated 20,000 veterans and family members were present.

"It was a very moving experience, seeing that many of us together, and getting to recount our stories with each other. It revolved around patriotism and remembering those gone on before who didn't get the hero's recognition they deserved. It was beautiful."

DPW: Rebuilds sewage infrastructure in family housing

This ongoing project started about seven or eight years ago and is largely being funded as money becomes available from the Family Housing Division.

Chancey said efforts were first focused on areas that had the greatest history of sewer problems, like McGraw Manor and Custer Terrace.

Since then, the digging has moved throughout the post on an "as-needed" basis.

Each area has been funded as a stand-alone project. Chancey estimated that a good portion of the work at Fort Benning's housing has been completed.

"We've got much of the post's housing areas in a pretty good situation," he said. "We're in much better shape than we have been."

Stelzer said a lot of the work has been done on the lateral lines to individual homes, and some short sections of the sewer mains have been slip-lined (the term used for this type of repair) as well. The rest of the distribution system still awaits funding.

In order to connect houses to this new sewer system, contractors have had to dig in front of individual homes to reconnect their service lines.

Consequently, some grassy front lawns and flower beds have been dug up in the process.

Norton Court resident Holly Hill said she's had to deal with red mud on her sidewalk being tracked into her house after the work was completed in her yard.

"I've been extremely frustrated," Hill said. "I didn't know who to speak with to come and take care of the mess in front of my house."

"When you have construction, there's going to be a mess. We've tried to do the best we can," Chancey said.

The contractor has been required to restore the construction sites to their prior condition. This restoration was delayed this summer, however, because of the water restrictions.

"Replanting sod without proper watering is expensive and futile," Stelzer said.

Chancey said he appreciates the residents frustrations in having to live around ditches and sometimes mud.

"There is never a good time to do this kind of work," Chancey said. "However, the end results will be a more trouble-free sewer system."

apartment rents for in Georgia," he said.

As with all Habitat homeowners, Hopp presented Dowse with a Bible, calling it a tool for life and a guidebook.

"Richelle understands what Christian love is all about because she is helping other homeowners get their sweat equity in," Hopp said.

Homeowners usually receive their keys during the dedication ceremonies, but Dowse had already closed on the house a week earlier.

Hopp set the ceremony for Veterans Day, as a tribute to the service members who worked on the project.

"Then I found out that Richelle was an Army brat, and I thought how appropriate," he said.

Dowse's father, Richard, retired as a command sergeant major.

"My husband served for 28 and a half years and to see the military community come together for her was fantastic," said Carolyn McDonald, Dowse's mother. "It was really a blessing."

Chaplain (Maj.) Donald Blickhan worked hand in hand with members of his congregation.

"I remember when this was just a concrete slab," he said. "What a joy it is to see materials become not just a house, but a home."

The priest said the congregation considered it a privilege to work on the project.

"It did far more for us in terms of building up the spirit of our community," he said.

Soldiers, Wilson make Fall Festival easy as PIE

Fall festival raises $2000 for school programs

Staff Sgt. K. Allen Whiteacre
Basic Combat Training Brigade

Headquarters Service Company and 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment of the Basic Combat Training Brigade continued and improved their partnership with Wilson Elementary School by providing a presence and support at the school's fall festival.

Partners In Education is a county-wide program to enhance the quality of education for students.

It establishes dynamic partnerships between individual schools and area organizations.

"BCTB did all the coordination for military units to support the school," said 1st Sgt. Agnes Bennett-Green.

Support included the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle as well as the Military Police Working Dog demonstration.

"The children said they wanted a tank and a truck out there, and were very excited when we made it happen," she said. "It was a team effort with units from around post.

"The support from the Soldiers was incredible," said Bennett-Green.

"They didn't have to be out there after the festival was set up, but all of them stayed to spend time with the children."

The brigade's participation in the fall festival was a tremendous success. The school was able to raise more than $2,000.

That money will be used to support programs at Wilson Elementary School like the technology program, after-school clubs and support teachers in projects for their classes.

The partnership benefits the school with more than just a contact in the military.

"The partnership gives teachers another adult to help in the classroom as a role model," said Phyllis Parker, Wilson Elementary School principal.

"We are planning to have Soldiers provide one-on-one, or small group get togethers, for mentoring and reading."

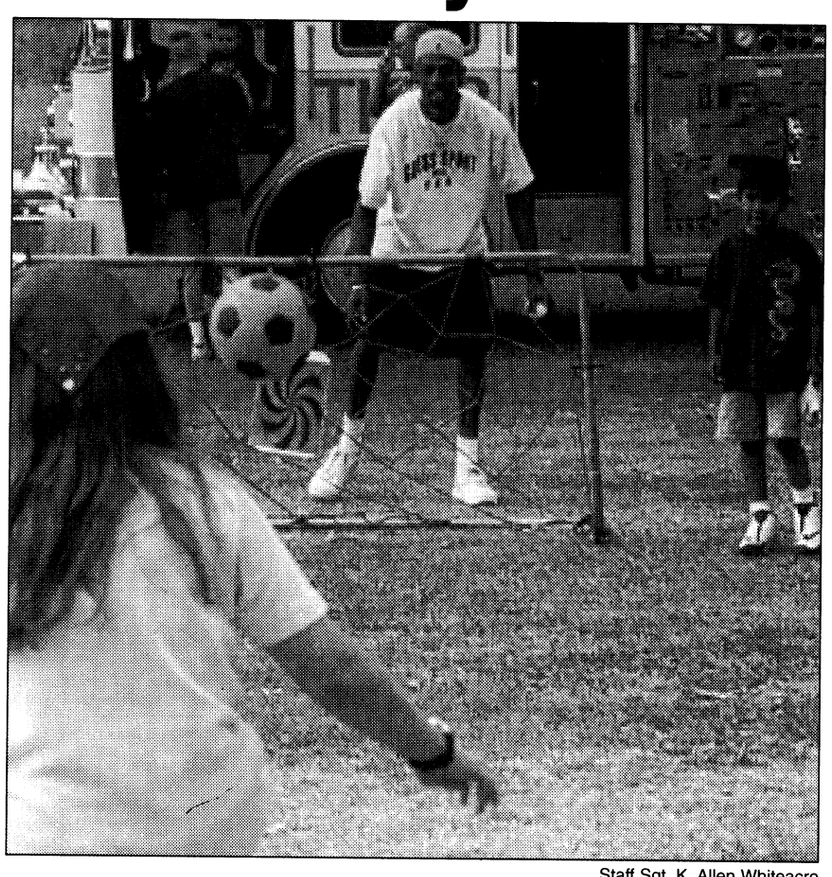
The brigade also supports the school by providing certificates for jobs well done.

The partnership is not a one-way partnership. As the Partners In Education resource guide says "Handshakes, not handouts."

"Soldiers get to really be involved in the community in which they serve," said Bennett.

"It is a mutual advantage," said Margaret Koger, the school's coordinator for the partnership.

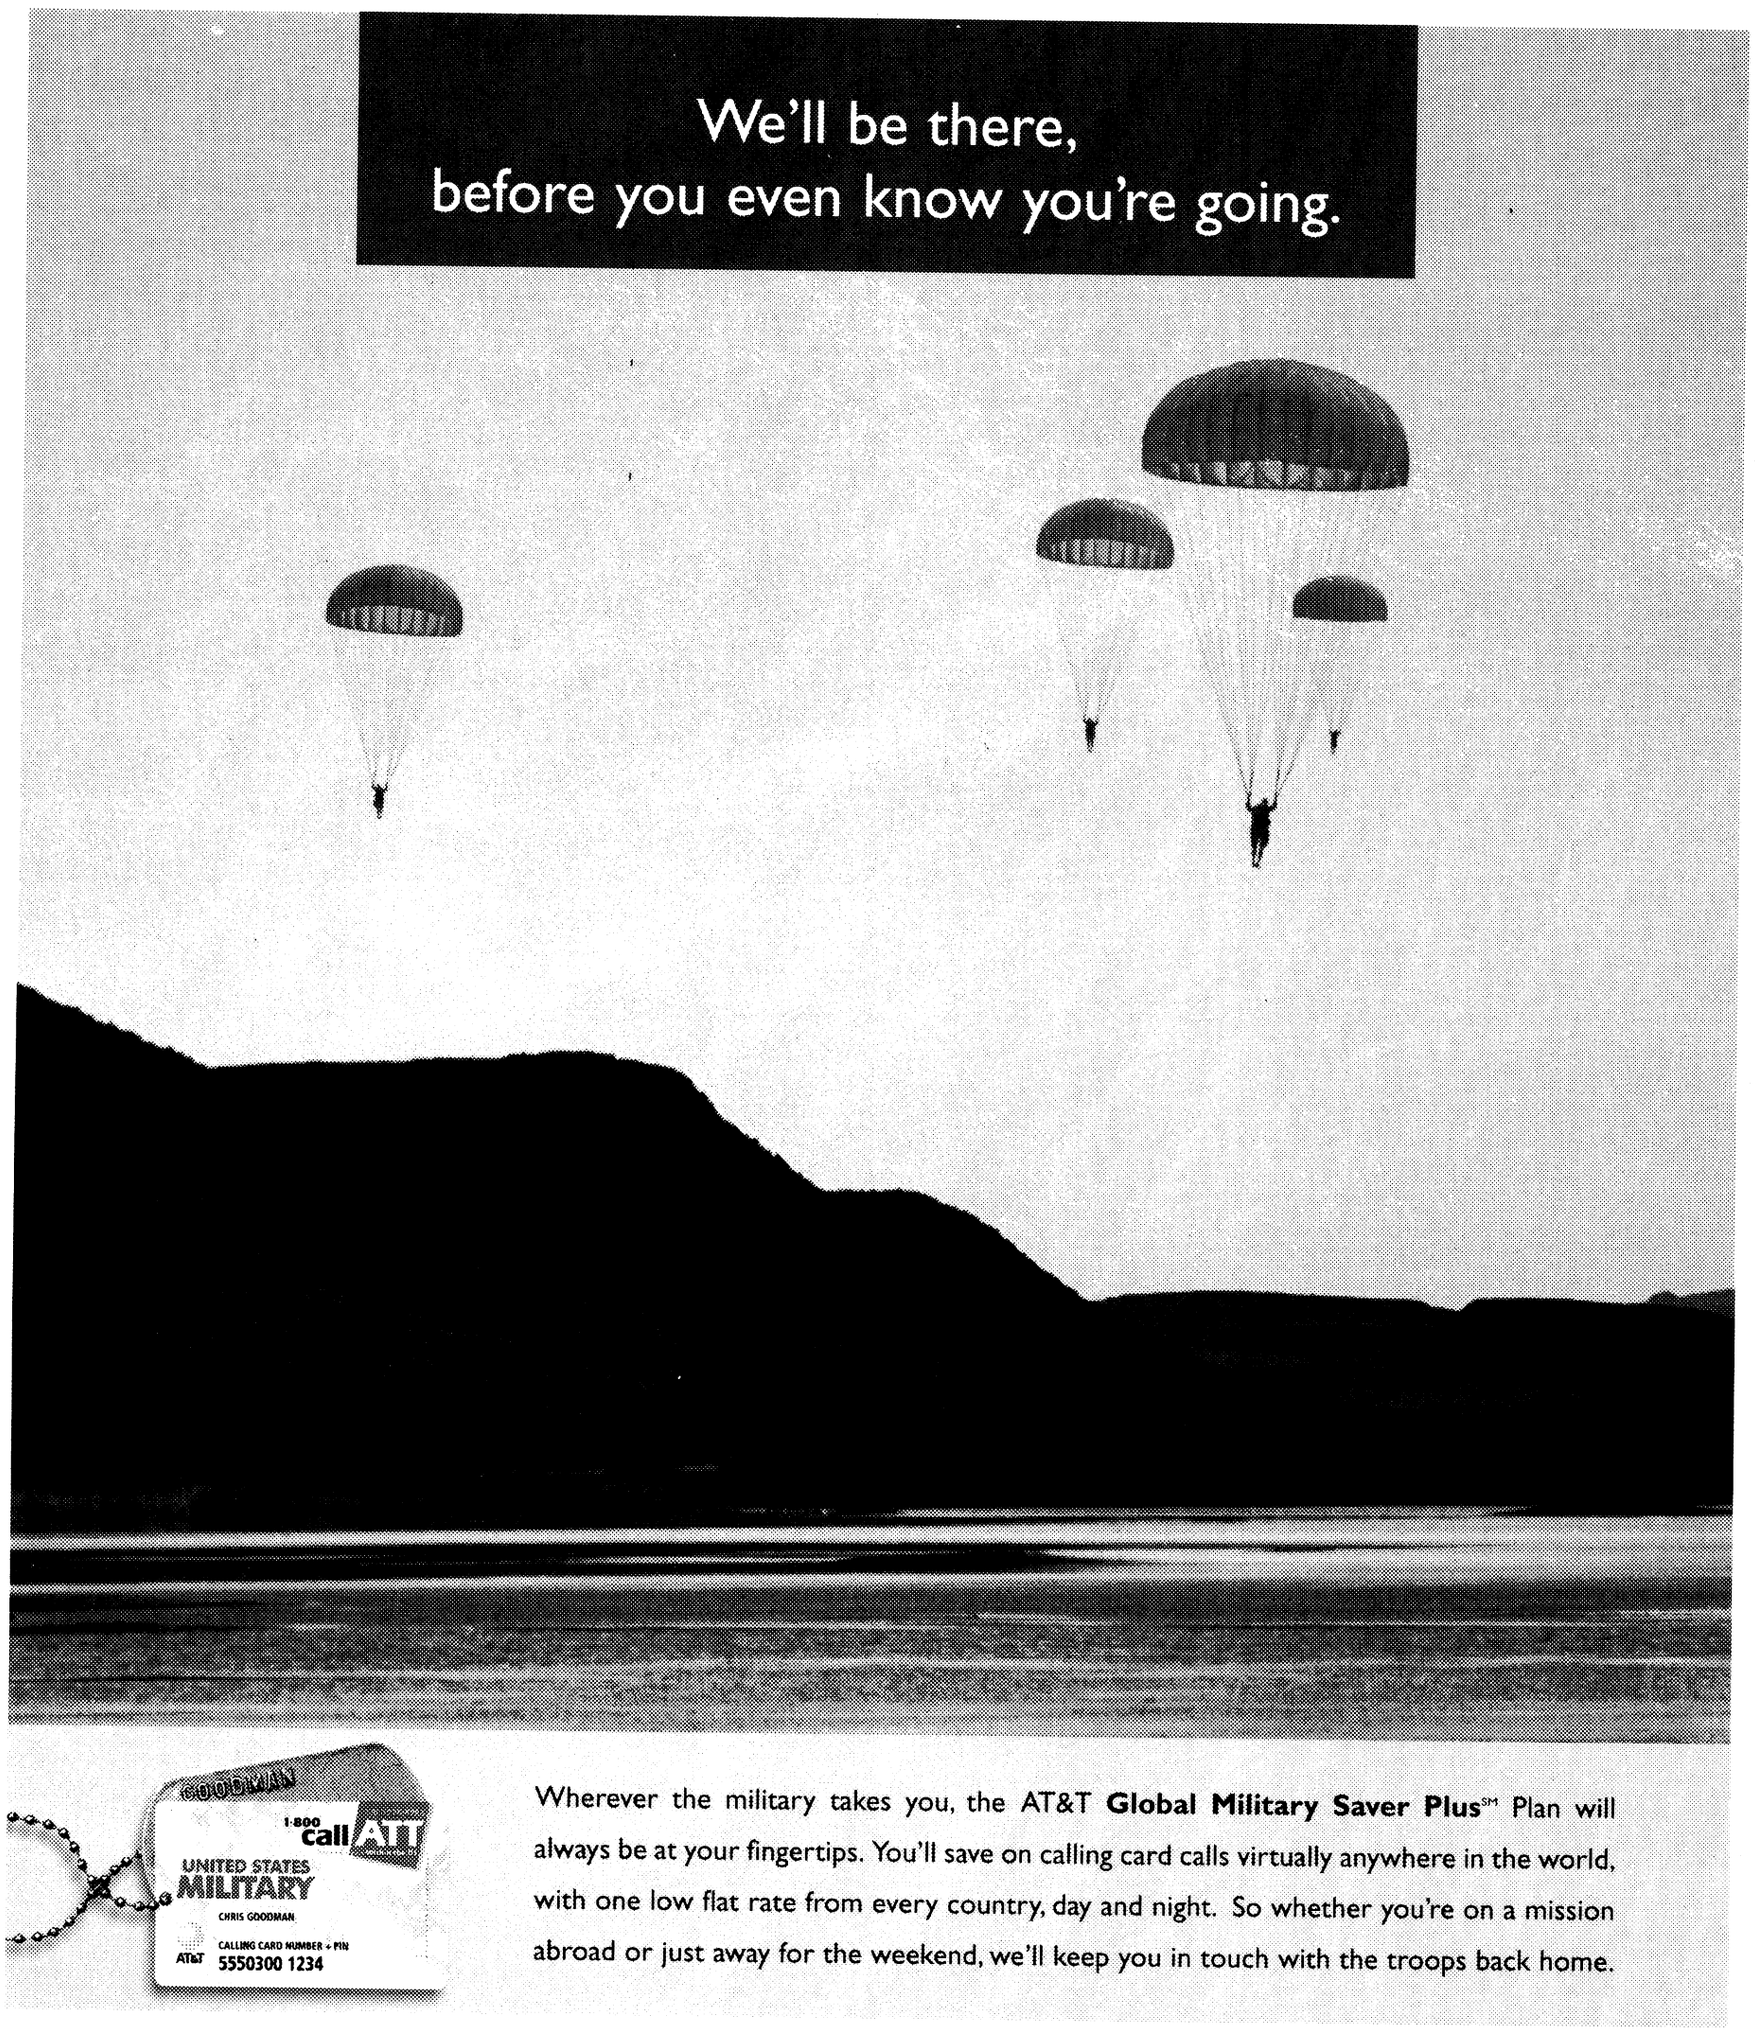
"The children get a role model, and the Soldiers have been enthusiastic about working with the children. The Soldiers enjoy the children."



The partnership is designed to be a robust interaction. Some of the future events planned by the school and BCTB include building a confidence course to improve the children's self esteem.

"The student representatives are touring the Army confidence courses to see what obstacles will best fit our needs," said Koger.

The partnership in education is a year round venture.



The fall festival was one more opportunity for the brigade to spend time with the students at the school.

For more information on how to participate in Partners in Education, call 327-1566.

Staff Sgt. K. Allen Whiteacre

Sgt. James Henry, BCTB, supports Wilson Elementary School's fall festival, Nov. 4, by working at one of the activity stands.

Rockin' Robbie not clowning around with drugs

White Elementary School

Richard Thomas' fourth grade class had a very interesting visitor. This special visitor appealed to students and teacher because of his unique qualities.

You could easily picture this person as a counselor, police officer, or even a member of the clergy.

Not only did he entertain, but he gave us important information about being drug free.

Clowns are suppose to entertain us, but this is one clown that students took seriously. He told about how proud he was to be at Fort Benning and the important role the parents play as Soldiers.

He talked about the importance of staying drug free.

Rockin' Robbie's visit provided a great opportunity for a student writing activity as evidenced by these excerpts:

Rockin' Robbie was right about a drug free life. It's not worth living a life if you do drugs. When I grow up, I don't want to do drugs. You have to know how to say no to drugs and some examples are: no way; I don't want to do those; that's a bad idea.

Kyrsten Shoemaker

I have seven people in the Army. They are all in my family. My step-dad, my step-mom, my step-sister, my two grandparents and my two cousins are all in the Army. I'm proud of all of them.

I'm also proud to say that only two people out of my whole, entire family smoke. They also don't drink. I love my family.

They're all very nice people. My mom gets on to me if I do wrong. She just wants me to have a good life and I thank her for that. I love her very much.

Daichalle Stokes

Rockin' Robbie talked about being drug free. People who take them will affect their own lives.

Smoking could cause many problems to your lungs. The names of the two known lung diseases are cancer and emphysema.

Raymond Romasewski

Rockin' Robbie was happy about our parents because he said our parents help us in America.

He was happy because we are drug free.

Zachary Gladney

Being drug free is very important. Some people, and kids, do them to look cool. It is not the right thing to do or the cool thing to do.

It can give you lung cancer or even kill you.

Kassi O'Neill

Rockin' Robbie visited us and talked to us about drugs. He said our parents give us our freedom. He said the Army gives us freedom.

He said our parents are great, trustworthy people.

That is the truth. I know how wonderful parents can be.

White Elementary School

The students in Judy Little's fifth-grade class at White Elementary School were excited about the opportunity to create fall masks with a little help from classroom parents.

Kim White, a parent, coordinated the activity, and the students collected an array of natural items to adorn the masks. The items came from a variety of places, such as their own back yards and the playground at school.

Items used included colored leaves, nuts, acorns, various kinds of berries, dried corn and cornhusks, dried beans, and peas.

The students used their creativity to arrange the items decoratively on a variety of masks that were precut by White.

The students used hot glue guns to help hold the masks together, as well as school and tacky glue.

Kathy Burns and Paula Sando, also parents, were kind enough to help with the glueing process.

Burns and Sando also made sure each child had everything positioned just right for his or her one-of-a-kind mask.

"It was a lot of fun," said Casey Shutt, 10-years-old. "Each person's mask looked different, even though we all had the same things to decorate them with. I'm going to put mine in my room."

What a fun activity for both parents and students.

Moral compass helps decide right from wrong

Chaplain (Maj.) Kenneth Yates
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

In the Old Testament book of Judges, the author ends the book by saying "Everyone did what was right in his own eyes." In describing the times in which he lived, the author tells us how people in Israel decided what was morally right and wrong. Each person was his own moral compass. Each individual determined what was right for himself.

Without a doubt, this way of determining moral behavior would be seen by many today as a perfectly logical choice. We often hear that there are no moral absolutes, that what might be right for one person may not be right for another. As a result, moral thinking and behavior become an individual exercise. This way of thinking is also seen as providing an individual with true freedom in the moral realm. With this freedom, one can experience true happiness in life.

The author of Judges, however, comes to a different conclusion. When each individual decides for himself what is right and wrong the result is misery, not happiness. The book of Judges records a time in Israel's history when the nation and individuals experienced many hardships. The author also reminds us that it was a time when "everyone did what was right in his own eyes." For him, there is a direct correlation between these two facts.

In the New Testament, the apostle Paul agrees with the author of Judges. In the book of Romans, he deals with the idea of moral freedom. The one who does what is right "in his own eyes" is not really free at all. In fact, such a person is in a type of moral slavery. He is enslaved to the "lusts" of his "heart," and his own sin nature (Romans 1:24; 6:17).

According to Paul and the book of Romans, doing what is right in "one's own eyes" is not the wise path to take when deciding between right and wrong. While it may sound good and seem to offer freedom and happiness, it really results in bondage and misery.

If we cannot rely on ourselves to be our own moral compass, where do we go to find direction in this area? Some seem to live by the rule that the majority determines what is right and wrong. We all know, however, that the crowd is often wrong. Instead of looking at ourselves or others for this direction there is another option. That option is that there is a "moral lawgiver" who has told us how to live. In my opinion, this is the wise option.

God has told us what is right and wrong in the Bible. Countless men and women through the ages have found moral truth there. In it, one finds that eternal life is given to anyone who believes in Jesus Christ for it. Once one receives this wonderful gift, the Bible then tells the believer how to live. It is by following its teachings that one finds true freedom and happiness. One is then free to serve God (Romans 6:22).

Jesus himself taught these truths. In his Sermon on the Mount he said that everyone who hears his word and acts upon it is wise. Later in his ministry he said that anyone who followed him would not walk in darkness but in light. At the end of his earthly life he told Pilate that he came to this world to "bear witness to the truth."

We live in a world that oftentimes tells us that there are no absolute moral truths. It is tempting to simply do what is "right in our own eyes." There is, however, a better moral compass. God's word will always steer us in the right direction.

Rid yourself of 'stinking thinking'

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Enough is enough. I've had it with those who want to call sinful behavior good and good behavior repressive and stifling.

I'm tired of hearing public relation experts explain away the indecent, immoral and criminal behavior of their client as a peccadillo. Let's stop ignoring it, excusing it and rationalizing it. Let's be honest with ourselves and each other. Let's call sin for what it is — sin.

Mistakes, errors and faults have negative consequences to us and to others. Denying, defending, excusing, rationalizing and justifying our wrongs lull us into complacency and fail to reform us.

The ungodly want to squeeze you into their mold. The unrighteous want to deceive you with their corrupt reasoning. Their thinking is futile, their understanding is darkened, their minds are ignorant and their spiritual compass is defective. They seek to take you captive by their hollow and misleading views that depend upon human tradition and the base principles of this world.

Rather than conforming to those who have no spiritual values, be transformed by the renewing of your minds.

The apostle Paul put it this way, "Whatever is true, whatever is noble, whatever is right, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is admirable — if anything is excellent or praiseworthy — think about such things" (Philippians 4:8). Set your minds on higher things, rather than the base things of this world.

If we are going to stop the stinking thinking, we will have to be honest with ourselves and with each other.

By being honest, we will obtain a true picture of us, and the truth will allow us to become free. If you want to rid yourself of stinking thinking, counseling is available. Call the Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

"On average, the value of a new car plummets 28% in the first week after its sale."
-HARVARD BUSINESS REVIEW

"Detroit is trying to put the brakes on sales of low-mileage, nearly new cars from rental fleets. Consumers have been snapping up the cars as bargain-priced alternatives to expensive new models."
-Wall Street Journal

"..the used rental won't even be that old. In some cases, it may even be the current model year and it will seldom be older than one and half years. So, while the neighbors will think it's a new car - someone else has already eaten the worst of the depreciation."

A Fort Benning lieutenant recently helped bring new meaning to the Army song when the Army's women soccer team "went rolling along" over the competition at the All-Forces Women's Soccer Championship held Sept. 9-16 at Fort Eustis, Va.

The only player from Fort Benning, 1st Lt. Heather M. Andrews, executive officer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, helped propel her team to victory with solid defense and outstanding leadership, said Capt. Kyle F. Jette, commander, HHC, 36th Engineer Group.

The Soldiers won the round-robin tournament with a five win, zero loss, and one tie (to Air Force) record. The team, whose assistant coach is Master Sgt. MacDonald Williams, 14th Field Hospital, played Marines, sailors and airmen two times each. (MacDonald was unavailable for comment at press time due to a Fort Polk deployment.)

Despite playing defense, Andrews contributed to the scoring with three assists.

"It was a great experience," Andrews said. "I'm excited about winning and proud to have represented the Army and Fort Benning. I owe a lot of credit to my unit, which was extremely supportive and gave me five weeks off to compete."

The native of Billerica, Mass., competed on last year's team, which lost to Air Force. The starting right fullback made the All-Star Team.

"This year we were very confident, and we expected to win because we had 50 percent of the team that competed last year returning," Andrews said. "It was not much of a surprise to win, especially with the vengeance factor to beat Air Force."

Still, she said the competition was stronger than her collegiate days when she played for and graduated from Bucknell University (Pa.) in 1997. Navy presented the fiercest challenge for Army.

One of the memorable moments came when she corner kicked the ball to her friend and former Fort Benning player Spc. Sheri Dabis who proceeded to score a goal. Dabis is stationed in Korea, but the two keep in touch.

"Besides the great competition, the biggest highlight (of the championship) was the camaraderie of the girls," said the 25-year old. "We had privates to

Crossing the finish line after consecutively swimming 2.4 miles, biking 112 miles and running 26.2 miles may be unfathomable to most, but it was just another challenge met for one Fort Benning officer.

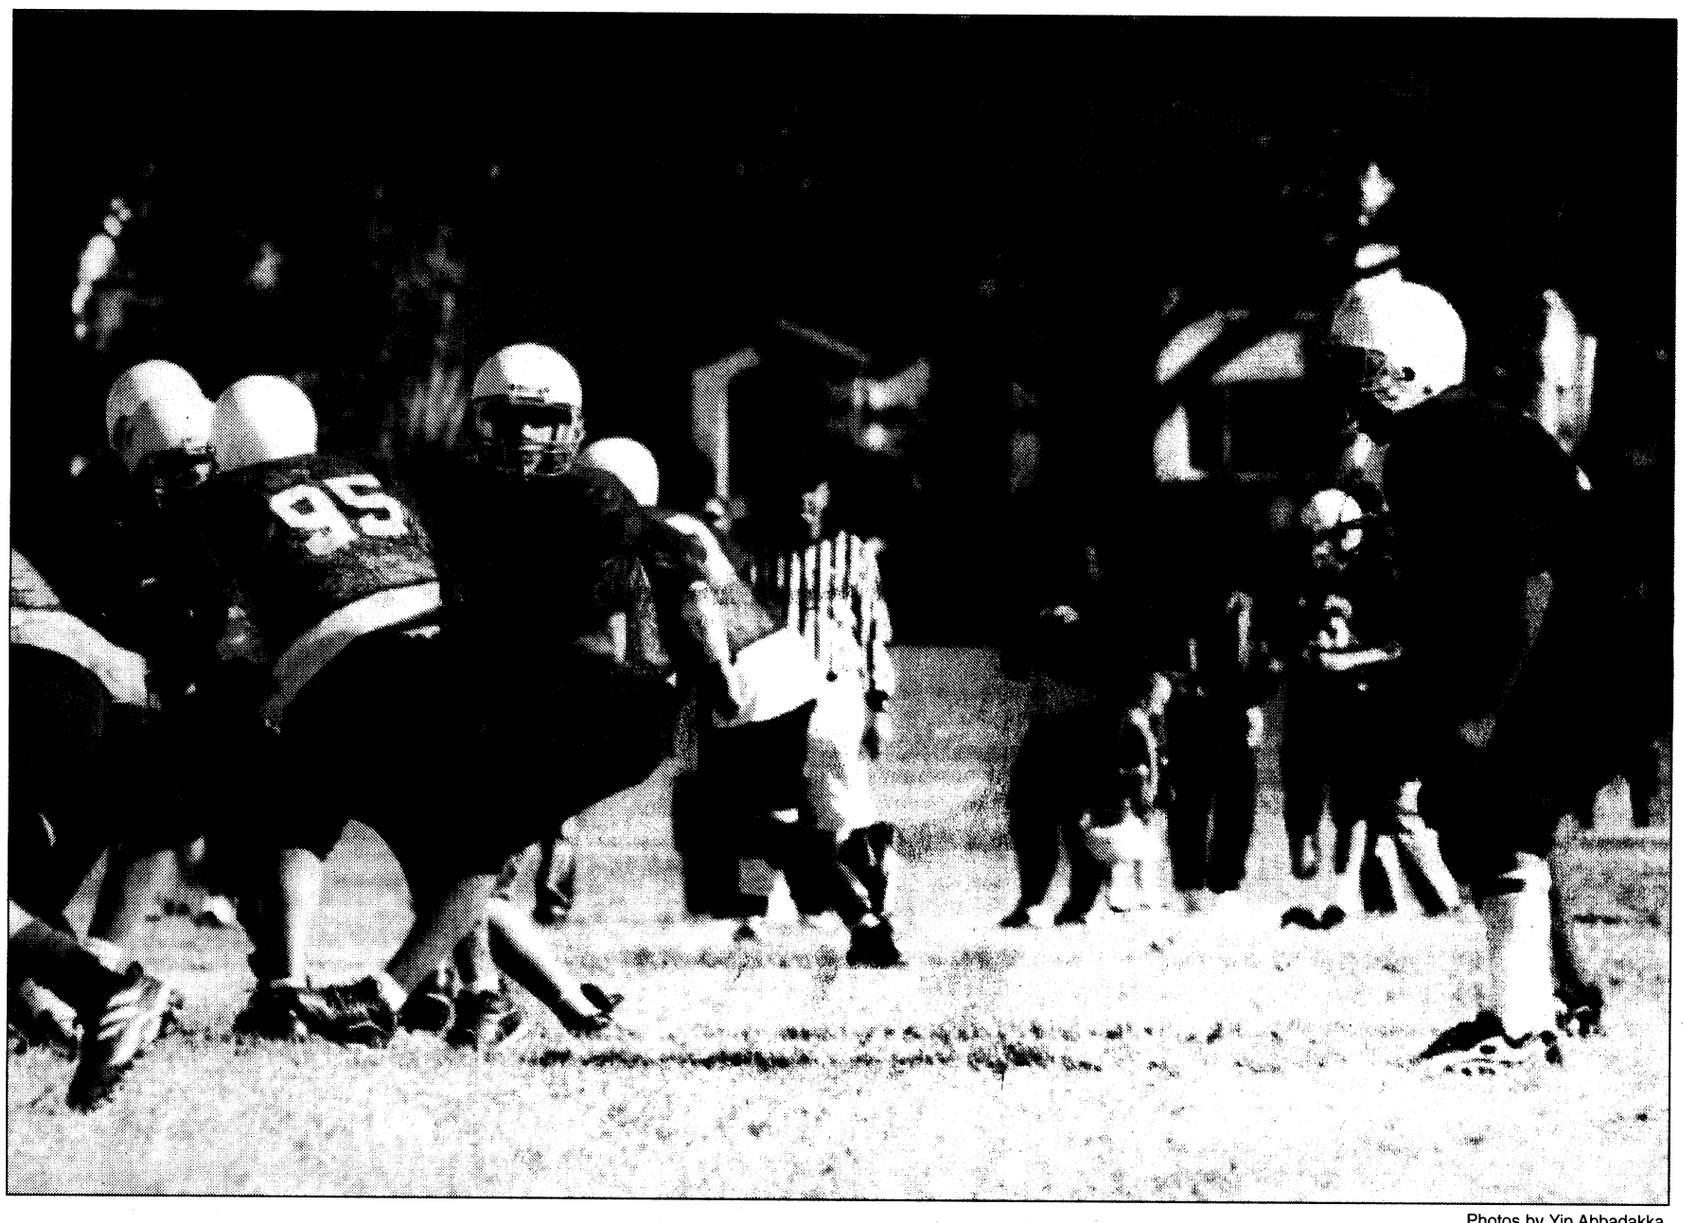
Brown

Capt. Todd Brown, a career course student at the U.S. Army Infantry School, completed the Florida Ironman Triathlon in Clermont Oct. 21 in 11 hours, 14 minutes. The 26-year-old Asheville, N.C., native finished eighth in his age group and 79th in a field which had more than 1,000 entrants.

"I don't feel any different," Brown said. "The challenge was there, and I had the opportunity, so I trained eight weeks and went down there and knocked it out."

He said he was thankful the school was very helpful and gave him a four-day pass to compete.

"It was a great race and a lot of fun," the West Point graduate said. "I encourage people who are serious about testing the limits of their athletic endurance to try it. It's not something that can't be done. All it takes is some dedication and time to train consistently."



However, the race did come with challenges. Temperatures reached a humid 87 degrees and the Clermont hills were not ant hills.

"I'm not a great swimmer, and I had just picked up biking last winter," Brown said.

AMU Olympians set to meet President Clinton, Army chiefs

Local shooters to visit D.C. Nov. 27

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The nine U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Olympians will be traveling to the nation's capital Nov. 27 to 29 to meet with the commander in chief and Pentagon officials.

USAMU Olympic shooters Maj. Michael E. Anti, Capt. Glenn A. Dubis, Sgts. 1st Class Lance D. Dement, James T. Graves, Daryl L. Szarenski and Thomas A. Tamas, Staff Sgt. Kenneth A. Johnson and his wife, Olympic Gold Medalist Nancy Johnson, Sgt. Jason A. Parker, Spc. William H.

Keever and USAMU International Rifle Coach William E. Krilling, an Olympic shooting official and juror, will take part in Operation Laurel Wreath, an opportunity for the Soldier-athletes to be recognized by the senior Army leadership.

The Olympians will arrive in Washington, D.C., Nov. 27 and will be staying with the other members of the U.S. Olympic Team at the Marriott Wardman hotel. That evening they are scheduled to be honored by Community and Family Support Center Commander Brig. Gen. Antonio Taguba at a pizza party at Generous George's in Alexandria.

The next day, the USAMU group will join other military Olympians at the Pentagon to meet with Army Secretary Louis Caldera, Army Vice Chief of Staff Gen. John M. Keane and Sergeant Major of the Army Jack L. Tilley.

Afterward, they are scheduled to meet with Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen.

After lunch and a tour of the Pentagon, the Olympians will visit Army Times Publishing Company.

The U.S. Olympic Committee is planning a reception for the Olympians that night.

Nov. 29, the shooters will join the other Olympic athletes at the White House where a meeting with President Clinton is scheduled.

Hunter offers acronym for successful hunt

Donnie Kinard
Fort Benning Archery Club

Bowhunters need to remember the acronym ARCHER: accuracy, respect, compassion, humility, equipment and responsibility.

Accuracy: A real cornerstone to success in the field is accuracy.

Hunters not only have to hit the animal but also be able to hit the animal in the kill zone cleanly, rapidly and humanely. Accuracy is not three out of five arrows, or even five out of five arrows in a pie plate from 15 yards. Accuracy is one arrow and one arrow only in the universally accepted "kill zone" on a 3D target animal at an unknown distance with the sun in the eyes, sweat pouring down the face, amidst buzzing and biting bugs, while shooting buddies are good-naturedly ribbing" and distracting the hunter.

Accuracy can only be achieved through practice.

And I mean the kind of practice which goes far beyond pulling your bow two weeks before opening day and flinging a few arrows at the proverbial pie plate. If you hunt from a tree stand, remember to practice at different heights too — seated and standing. Range is affected by shot angle and hunter elevation.

Respect: Hunters must have respect for the animal they're hunting.

Hunters must have respect for the state laws and regulations. Hunters must never take more game than is permitted and take the game legally and observe the rules of fair chase as defined by the state.

Hunters must have respect for other hunters. Avoid spoiling another's hunt and infringing on areas already occupied. Do not bother another hunter's property or hunt from his stand without permission. Observe bag limits so that other hunters will have the same opportunities, if not this season, then in the next.

Do not poach. If I were to shoot an animal and ask my buddy to claim it on his game tag, I have not only poached, but I have just attempted to involve my "buddy" in conspiracy. It is legally, morally and ethically wrong to take more game than is permitted. Bag limits are established to benefit all hunters as well as effectively manage the herds.

Respect the nonhunting public. These days, hunting is not exactly a politically correct activity. I personally despise seeing a dead deer tied down to the hood of a truck with its tongue hanging out and blood everywhere. If this is distasteful to me, image the opinion of the nonhunter. Cover the deer with a tarp. Make sure it is down in the bed of your truck or out of sight. Don't dress your deer in your yard. Let's respect our neighbors who may be sensitive to this.

Respect the land where you hunt. Don't litter. Bury or pack out the remains of the field-dressed game. Do not trespass on another's land. Get permission to track an animal onto someone else's property.

Compassion: Have compassion for the animal when hunting. Pass on the shot if a clear kill zone isn't possible. Don't take marginal or questionable shots. While hunting with archery equipment, any shot opportunity other than a broadside or slightly quartering away broadside shot is questionable. If you take the shot from above and the broadhead misses, embeds in or rolls off the spine it could very likely miss anything immediately vital and then off goes a wounded animal to suffer in anguish for no good reason.

Also, have compassion for your spouse and family. Let someone know where you are going, how long you expect to be there, when you expect to return, and who you are going with.

Humility: See the animal not only as a target, but as a living creature with great freedom. I take the life if I can, with regret as well as joy, and with the sure knowledge that nature's way of fang and claw or exposure and starvation are a far crueler fate than I bestow. Return from the hunt, even if empty-handed, refreshed in mind and spirit, knowing yourself a little better and with a better appreciation of God's creative genius.

Equipment: Have the right equipment to do the job. Maintain it and keep it prepared to do the job. Make sure your broadheads are sharp and that your arrows are flying true. Make sure your sights are set and locked. Wax your bow string regularly. Practice with your hunting equipment regularly during hunting season to stay fit, sharp and confident. If you hunt from a tree stand, use a safety strap. Carry a flashlight in the late afternoon so you can track your animal. Carry water.

Keep a first aid kit with you. And have some sort of communication — a cell phone, a flare, or whistle to let others know where you are if you need help.

Responsibility: Be a responsible bow hunter. Don't hunt under the influence of alcohol or drugs. Attend the hunter safety course whether you are required to or not. Wear orange during the gun season and don't draw on or shoot at an unknown target. Have permission to hunt on private property. The responsible, mannerly thing to do is safeguard his property and abide by the conditions placed on you. If you are successful in the hunt share your success with your host. Remember ARCHER when you hunt.

Soldier: Earns position on All Armed Forces team captains playing who were everything from vets to Apache pilots.

"Our personalities and backgrounds meshed really well though. It was good to learn about so many aspects of Army life."

The blonde, blue-eyed player said everyone on the eclectic and diverse team enjoyed the break from the regular Army routine. The players did do physical training, however, and had three practice sessions per day.

She said the only disappointment of the championship was the sparse crowds who came out to watch.

"I wish more people were as interested in soccer as much as I am," Andrews said. "I hope it continues to grow and more players will come out next year so it will be better publicized."

She said soccer has excited her since she was 3.

"I grew up on it," Andrews said.

She and her mother, Joanne, and brother, Terry, watched her father, Christopher, play often. Christopher is from England, and he encouraged her to start playing when she was nine.

"My father is extremely passionate about soccer," she said. "He would always listen to his favorite team (Manchester United) on the short-wave radio. I guess his love of the game rubbed off on me."

When not playing soccer for her local team, Andrews, who scored 357 on her latest PT test, said she enjoys playing and watching all types of sports, spending time with her fiancee, and listening to music by Dave Matthews and Creed.

The lieutenant, who will be promoted Dec. 1, will leave active duty and begin her reserve commitment in May. Her current goals are: to play for the All Armed Forces Team in February, to get married in September, and obtain a position as a project management engineer in the Atlanta area.

Jette who has known Andrews for two years, said the unit is happy for her.

"While we did miss her while she was gone, we are all proud of First Lieutenant Andrew's accomplishments and that she represented the Army and our unit so well," Jette said.

He said Andrews' dedication and outstanding leadership skills helped her excel at the championship.

"We all work late hours here," Jette said. "When I (go home and relax), she goes home and puts on her soccer cleats and practices for an hour or two. She has incredible energy."

He said everyone will miss Andrews when she leaves.

"She's a fantastic officer, and it will be a big loss for all of us," Jette said. "She is just as good an XO as she is a soccer player."

The mark Andrews left on the team undoubtedly will help it "keep rolling along" next year, he said.

Ironman: Finishes eighth in age group for first race regular triathlons he stayed focused and conquered both. This was his first Ironman, which is longer.

"My wife, Kris, was very supportive," the slender 6-footer said. "She encouraged me to train and gave me good advice for the swim. She is a good swimmer, and I learned a great deal from her."

Brown said he stayed relaxed and kept reminding himself the swim would eventually end. During the bike ride, he drank chicken broth, ate power bars and potato chips for sodium replenishment, and drank lots of water to stay energized.

The marathon was Brown's strong suit. He finished with his age group's third fastest time in 3 hours, 46 minutes.

He found motivating factors that helped him finish the race.

Brown fed off the enthusiasm of the crowd of 10,000 people on the street who cheered for the participants, he said.

The Ironman also talked with other racers and played "cat-and-mouse" games with them to pass the time.

Another key motivator was his former platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class George E. Gurrola, now stationed in Germany.

He e-mailed Brown in June and wrote he had done an Ironman.

"Knowing he had done something I hadn't done was a good motivator for me to meet the challenge," Brown said.

Another motivator was the way he puts things into perspective, said Brown's classmate, 1st Lt. Allen D. Leth, who has known him for five years.

"His funny sense of humor probably helped a lot during the race, especially having to run a marathon after the bike and swim," he said.

Leth said Brown is well liked among his classmates.

"He is a definite leader in the class," he said. "He's in charge of our PT group." (Brown scored more than 400 on the extended scale.)

Leth said Brown is laid back and does not come across as very intense.

"He holds himself to a very high standard," Leth said. "He is extremely motivated and pushes himself in everything he does. I think the Ironman shows he has a lot of guts as well."

Brown was very dedicated during his Ironman training, spending hours practicing daily, Leth said.

Brown has always been physically fit and interested in other sports. While at Fort Lewis, Wash., he climbed Mount Rainier.

Brown said he will use what he learned at the Ironman to lead his Soldiers.

"I learned a lot about physical fitness and physical therapy," the Ironman said. "I'll be able to help push my Soldiers because I know what the body can take and how to recuperate it when they beat it up."

Brown hopes to excel in more Ironmans in the future, but he said he realizes it will be tough to balance training with his job at his next duty station.

"For now, I'm taking it one day at a time because I don't know where I am going to get stationed," he said.

He is sure of one thing. Wherever he goes and whatever challenges he faces, no mountain will be too high for him to climb.

sports briefs

Bodybuilding contest — 17th annual Body Building Open Championship will take place at the Main NCO Club Sunday. All active-duty personnel, DoD civilians, retirees and family members, as well as guest are eligible to attend the event.

The competition categories for men are: light weight (up to 160 pounds), middle weight (161-185 pounds), and heavy weight (186 pounds and above).

Women's categories are: light weight (up to 125 pounds), and heavy weight (126 pounds and above).

Additional categories include: Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning (restricted to Fort Benning military and family member) and male masters (35 and above).

Awards for overall competitor also will be awarded in both male and female categories.

Weigh-ins will take place from 9 to 11 a.m. Nov. 18 at the Main NCO Club.

Prejudging will begin with the women at noon, followed by the men at 12:30 at the cost of $2 per person for spectators and final at 7:30 p.m. at a cost of $5.

Awards will be presented to the top three in all classes, plus the top two in the 35 and over age group.

The registration fee is $35 and another $10 for crossover. Entry deadline is Nov. 3. Late entry fee will be an additional $5.

Registration sites are Santiago Fitness Center, Sand Hill and the Sports Office in Room 221.

Contestants must supply their own music on a cassette tape. Music must be no more than 90 seconds in length and must start at the beginning of the tape with no other music on the tape.

For more information, call Carol Gearheart at 544-9595.

Fun Run — There will be a fun run at 10 a.m. Sunday at Flatrock Park. No entry fee is required.

For more information, call 544-3409 or 682-8560.

Race — There will be a 5k race supporting the Kiwanis Club of Phenix City Sunday.

Registration for the race begins at 7:30 a.m. Sunday at the Phenix City Amphitheater.

The cost of the race is $15 for pre-registered runners and $17 the day of the race.

For more information, call Keith Wright at 297-9749.

YS Basketball — Youth Services will conduct a NYSCA Basketball Certification clinic at 9 a.m. Nov. 18 in Building 1056. Anyone interested in coaching Youth Services basketball must be NYSCA certified. YS will also host a basketball fundamental camp. It is open to children ages 6 to 9 years old.

There is no cost for the camp; you must be a YS member.

There are limited spaces. Come by YS to sign up between Nov. 13-24, Building 1056.

For more information, call 545-3070.

YS accepts applications — Youth Service is now taking applications for winter basketball.

For more information about how to become a coach for any of the YS sporting activities, call Youth Services at 545-3070 or 545-3540 or stop by Youth Services, Building 1056.

AMU seeks shooters — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is looking for a few good shooters who are interested in competing in pistol competitions in the summer of 2001.

No previous shooting experience is required.

Soldiers in the rank of sergeant first class and below with less than 15 years service who obtain approval from their commanders can travel to Fort Benning in May at the expense of the Marksmanship Unit to participate in the initial training. The Soldiers are trained in advanced marksmanship skills.

Interested Soldiers can call Gibbs at 545-7022 or 545-3893 or DSN 835-7022.

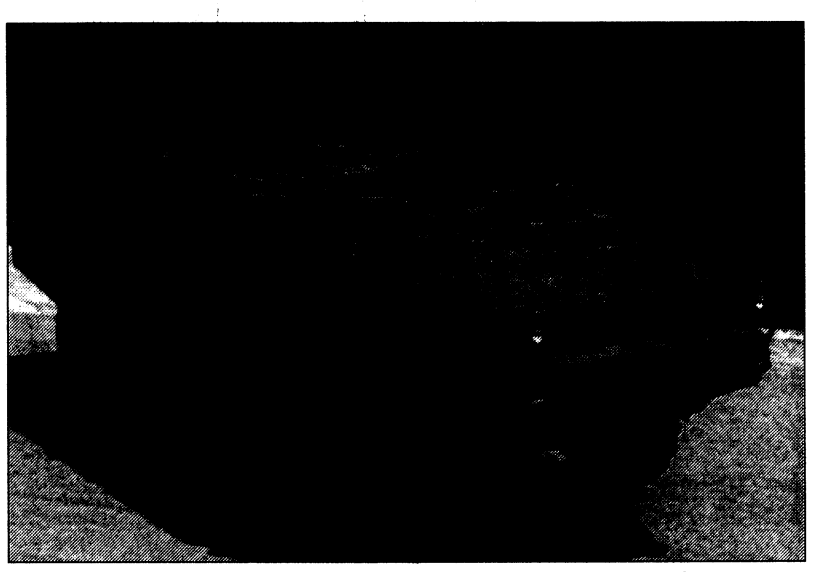
Army chooses new vehicle



General Motors gets contract for 19-ton vehicle

The Army has decided on a new Interim Armored Vehicle to carry its Soldiers to the battlefields of the future.

Officials announced Nov. 17 that a contract had been awarded to General Dynamics and General Motors Corporations to build the Light Armored Vehicle III, a 19-ton wheeled vehicle that will be deployable by C-130 aircraft and combat capable upon arrival in any contingency area.

The vehicle is part of the Army's Transformation to become quicker and more mobile.

The Light Armored Vehicle III will carry Soldiers into battle. The first models are expected by fiscal 2002.

The first LAV IIIs are expected to be delivered to the Interim Brigade Combat Teams at Fort Lewis, Wash., in the third quarter of fiscal 2002. The majority of the production will take place in four locations, including Anniston, Ala.

"We are happy there has been a selection. We look forward to working with the LAV, and we think it is going to be an excellent vehicle," said Col. Jim Stone, director of Combat Developments.

"This is a significant milestone, and clearly it will allow the BCTs to move forward rapidly as they posture themselves to meet their initial operational capability date."

Army officials estimate the first brigade will be equipped by the second quarter of fiscal 2003.

Stone pointed out the LAV III has several characteristics important for the Infantry, the first being that the vehicle will carry a full nine-man squad.

"One of the early decisions we wrestled with more than a year ago when we started doing the initial work on the Transformation was the mobility requirements for the BCTs. We had to determine how we were going to overcome the tactical mobility challenges associated with

Infantry Band to perform holiday concert

Musicians plan free concert Tuesday

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The sounds of the holidays will fill the Three Arts Theatre in Columbus when the Infantry Center Band performs a free concert Tuesday at 7 p.m.

The public is invited to the performance by the 40-member concert band. The Three Arts Theatre is at 1020 Talbotton Road.

The 75-minute program will include something for everyone, said Staff Sgt. Robert Grundy, who plays the bass clarinet.

Traditional Christmas selections will be featured along with arrangements by Mannheim Steamroller, which will spotlight the eight-member percussion and synthesizer sections. The band will also perform a selection for Hanukkah.

Santa will make an appearance, and the audience will be treated to the telling of 'Twas the Night Before Christmas.

Grundy has been performing in Christmas concerts for almost 24 years, since his days as a junior high student in band class.

"It's the music of the season that really gets me into the holiday spirit," Grundy said.

The concert is offered to the community through the support of the Salvation Army, the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer and WRBL-TV. Theresa Whitaker, news anchor for WRBL, will serve as the master of ceremonies.

New fiber network to cost $18.2 million

Project set to update infrastructure

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning and Lucent Technologies officials broke ground Tuesday on a nearly two and a half year, $18.2 million project that will update the post's information infrastructure.

Construction will begin Jan. 10 and will improve the quality and speed of the data network systems.

"Right now we're really happy when we can push 10 megabytes on our existing fiber backbone," Paul Yates, director of Information Management, said. "What the I3A will give us is the ability to harness a truly continuous network, one that has been engineered from the ground up."

The new system, once completed, will be the most modern network in the Army.

"This new system will increase Fort Benning's information technology backbone," Col. Jose Torres, garrison commander, said. "Once in place, it will provide band width, which allows state-of-the-art speeds which only can be imagined at this time. Everywhere I have been, the size of the 'pipe' (how much information can be transmitted at one time) has always hindered the commanders' electronic data exchange. This is the system commanders dream of."

Much of the networks' cable is currently strung on power and telephone poles throughout post. Part of the project includes placing new cable in a safer location: underground.

"They currently have aerial copper cables, and we are taking all that down and putting it all under ground for survivability and safety," said Brenda Earley, the program manager for the Digital Switched Systems Modernization Program of Lucent Technologies. "We're putting in a lot of new duct work because it's old, and a lot of it has collapsed.

"We're making sure that

commentary

I think I am finding my way out of a box, and I'm pretty sure the Army has had something to do with it.

I'm talking about finding my way out of a long-held type of prejudice that I call the "mirror syndrome": the finely tuned art of associating mostly with people who are pretty much like me. Those who share my beliefs, opinions, values, likes, dislikes, and the list goes on.

Don't misunderstand — I'm not the "bubble girl." But I think the syndrome may have started with my growing up in a beautiful but sleepy little rural community in a neighboring state (go Big Orange!). I lived in the same place for the first 26 years of my life. It didn't help either that I belonged to a religious denomination that can foster an atmosphere of following the rules and distancing oneself from those who don't.

But part of growing up — I just turned 30-something but I think I'm only now beginning to grow up — is realizing that regardless of family or past surroundings, I made the choice to have as friends people who were like me and to shut everybody else out.

It even extended to many of the jobs I held because in a small-town setting, I could still choose to work around people who shared my "culture."

Fortunately, when I came into the Army culture a couple of years ago, the box got pried open — busted, actually. You see, foreign languages have always come pretty easily for me, but Army lingo and culture is a different story.

So in order to survive and thrive in "outer Siberia" (it felt like that for the first nine months!), I had to depend on my "teachers" — the Soldiers and civilians who not only drilled me on acronyms and rank structure but taught me about Army life as well — and with a big dose of humor.

And those folks were and continue to be people who come from a wide variety of walks of life. Some of them don't share my beliefs or values, likes or dislikes. But it's their differences that have taught me volumes and enriched my life beyond what I ever could have imagined.

Maybe most people my age have learned this already, but it's a smart thing to have people in your life who are different from you. The friends I've made by being in Army public affairs over the last two and a half years have, by their differences, caused me to see some blind spots — that is, see myself for what I really am and do something about it!

They have taught me to look at situations from different angles, and that to do so isn't a threat to my own values or beliefs. Sometimes, they've been challenged and changed for the better. And even if others don't share my opinions, I'm reminded that at some point in life, we can and do share some good "gut" laughs, temptations, disappointment and maybe most of all, the desire to be loved.

Finally, my Army comrades have helped me learn to enjoy people for what they bring to the table instead of dissing them because they are not what I think they should be. And that's the glue of teamwork, too — laying aside personal differences to accomplish a goal.

You can spend your life getting by on the crumbs of hanging with people who are like you or you can feast at the banquet table of an eclectic but pretty neat bunch of human beings. I'm glad the Army gave me the feast.

How does your garden grow?

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Friendship is like a garden. It can be a tiny patch of flowers planted on a narrow path or a great big kaleidoscope of color that flows as far as the eye can see. It's up to the gardener to decide just how much time and energy to invest.

Personally I like a variety of colors, all kinds of flowers in every size and shape. It takes a lot of work, but the results are worth it.

Fort Benning is a lot like that flower garden. We welcome everyone who enters our gates with the spirit of friendship. We're a great big garden with all shapes and colors and sizes, and our roots reach far and wide. When the seasons pass, we uproot ourselves and move on, but we always leave behind seeds of friendship right where we planted them.

Last spring a group of students and faculty and family members from Faith Middle School planted a garden of their own and last week they gathered to dedicate it to a special friend.

Tierra Sparks was only 17 when she was murdered. She was in the spring of her life — a life full of sunshine and promises and possibilities. She died in the spring of the year, when the flowers were blooming, the trees were budding and her garden was overflowing with color. Her life was cut short when she was brutally murdered by someone she called friend.

Tierra's sudden death was a reminder of the fragility of life, the fact that we're promised no tomorrows here on earth.

It reminded us of the importance of friendship and love, the need to slow down and enjoy our garden, hug our children, call our friends ...

Tierra's father, Willie Sparks, is one of our own at Fort Benning.

He's the electronics technician for Fort Benning Schools, and therefore a member of the family.

That's why the folks at Faith decided to dedicate their garden to Tierra. They called it a living memorial.

"It's a reminder that we should show love every day," said Cindy Givens, Faith's media specialist.

I couldn't have said it any better than that. Show love every day.

It doesn't have to be a grand gesture, like the garden.

It can be a phone call or a cup of coffee, a smile, a common courtesy or a kind word to a stranger, who's really just a friend we haven't met yet.

Faith's garden has gone through a season already.

Most of the flowers have died. They're slowly being replaced by evergreens and perennials that'll blossom year after year.

I like the symbolism.

Remember true spirit behind holidays

commentary

You can always count on a child to make you think and really question why we do the things we do.

Those moments of quiet reflection often start with a child's question and the expectation that you — as a parent, teacher or certified adult — have all the answers.

So we do our best to answer their questions. But, take it from a veteran of many question-and-answer sessions, it's better to think before you speak. While a quick and flippant answer may quiet them down for a while, you may have missed an opportunity to teach your child an important lesson — and remember one yourself.

The week before Thanksgiving, my 7-year-old and I hurried into a store. She stopped suddenly and looked at the bright and colorful Christmas decorations. I waited for her to comment on how pretty they looked.

Instead, she turned to me and asked, "Why do they put up their Christmas stuff before we've even had Thanksgiving? Where are the Thanksgiving decorations?"

"That's a good question," I told her, remembering the importance of positive reinforcement and taking a second to shake off a cynical response. Then I answered, "A lot of people have already started their Christmas shopping, and this will help get them in the mood as they look for special gifts for people."

OK, I know it wasn't a real winner, but she accepted it, and we moved on. Later I wished I had taken the time to tell her that it doesn't matter what the merchants do, we set our own timetable and manner in which to celebrate Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Then Thanksgiving Day, the newspaper arrived loaded with store flyers for the after-Thanksgiving sales, and I knew the battle was on to keep my children's focus on the true meaning of Christmas and not the commercial come-ons competing for their attention.

The next day when I sat down with my husband and "calendared" the rest of the month, I had to remind myself that children aren't the only ones tempted to lose sight of why we celebrate Christmas. Busyness can distract just as easily as tinsel and toys.

Christmas is a time to celebrate the gift of Jesus Christ, and I hope to keep my family's focus on that gift, not on the ones wrapped in shiny paper.

I know there will be shopping lists and trips to the mall, but one way we can remember the spirit of the holidays is to think of others — take the focus off ourselves and put it on helping make someone else's Christmas special.

Fort Benning offers several opportunities for the community to do just that through the work of Santa's Castle and the Army Community Service's Food Locker and Holiday Turkey Program.

Santa's Castle is taking donations of new toys and monetary gifts to purchase items for children of Soldiers. Volunteers are also needed to assist parents who will be looking for the right gifts for their children.

Units submit applications for families to receive the assistance, and Soldiers and their spouses are given appointments to visit the castle. Toy selection appointments have already started and will continue through the middle of December.

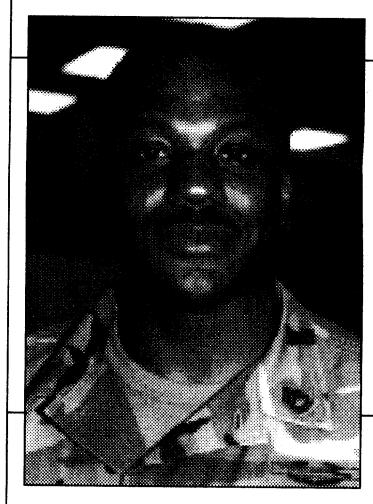
Last year the program helped 1,302 children in 541 families.

For more information, call Santa's Castle at 685-4422.

The Army Community Service Food Locker conducts a Holiday Turkey Program each year.

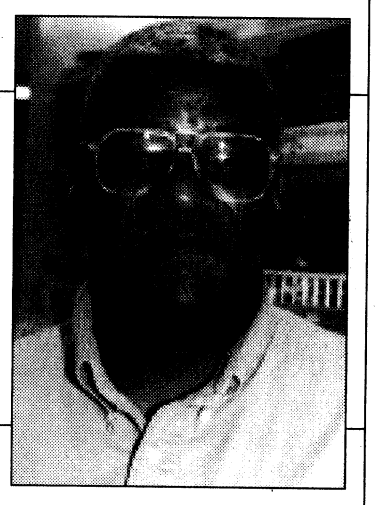
At Thanksgiving, ACS distributed 525 turkeys to the major subordinate commands to give to their Soldiers, privates to staff sergeants, who had families to feed over the holiday. At Christmas, another 525 birds will be delivered.

The turkeys were purchased with funds from the ACS Support Fund, which receives donations from individuals, chapels, and organizations such as the Enlisted Wives' Club and Officers' Wives' Club.



Nonperishable items are also needed for the food locker and donations are taken Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Building 2629.

Items needed include canned goods, rice, cooking oil, diapers, baby wipes, pancake mix, syrup, sugar, condiments and spices.



For more information, call ACS at 545-3530.

Rangers remember Soldier as quiet professional

Sergeant shot at local club during fight

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The 75th Ranger Regiment held a memorial service for one of its own Wednesday morning at the Ranger Memorial.

Fellow Soldiers remembered Staff Sgt. Jeff Lyda, who had extensive service in the 2nd Ranger Battalion and Regimental Headquarters. He arrived at Fort Benning in 1997.

"His years in the regiment will be remembered by the quiet, professional way he always accomplished the mission and cared for his fellow Rangers and our veterans," said Maj. Marcus F. De Oliveira, regimental personnel officer.

The 33-year-old Lyda was the regimental public affairs NCOIC. He used his position to help touch the lives of many Soldiers in the regiment, and his coworkers will miss him immensely, said Capt. Todd Bearden, public affairs officer for the regiment.

"He had been here over a year when I took this assignment," Bearden said. "He helped me get to know the regiment and its Soldiers. I was able to call on him for anything, and he would always accomplish the mission. He was my go-to guy."

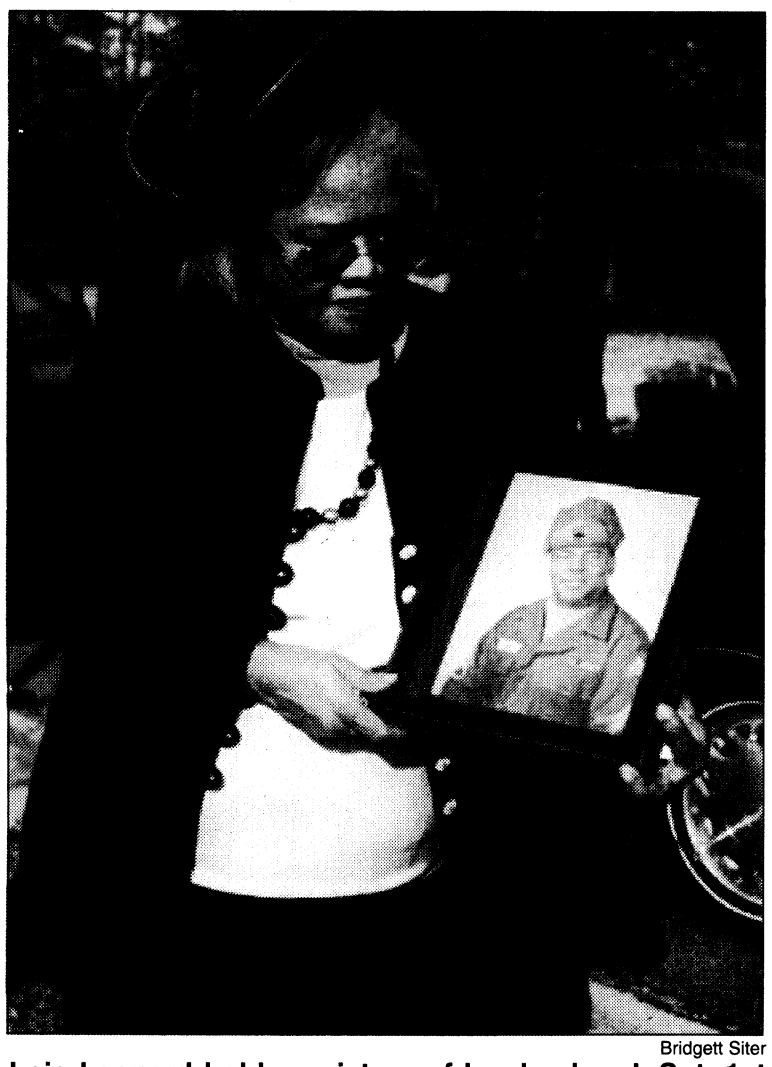
The Ranger enjoyed in-line speedskating in his spare time. He helped coach the GT Speed skating team in Columbus with Yamill Collazo, librarian at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

"There is going to be a big void in our club now, especially with our 15- to 18-year-old skaters," Collazo said. "He was consistent — like a rock, always there for them. He really touched their lives."

In May, Lyda competed in a Professional In-line Racing event which had entrants from 13 countries.

"He was very competitive and hard working," Collazo said. "He had a real passion for the sport."

Lyda was shot to death at a local Columbus club Saturday morning.



Columbus Police arrested Ricky Clark, 48, and charged him with murder, possession of a firearm during commission of a crime and carrying a deadly weapon at a public gathering.

Clark pleaded not guilty to the charges at a hearing Monday, yet he admitted to shooting Lyda. Columbus Recorder's Court Judge Michael Cielinski ordered him held without bond on the murder charge.

Funeral services for Lyda will be today at 1 p.m. in Pickens, S.C., at Dillard Funeral Home.

Lyda is survived by his wife Heather, daughters Samantha and Taylor, his mother, Kathryn G. Keith, and father, James V. Lyda.

Purple Heart association helps with cost

When years of neglect and vandalism forced the city of Birmingham, Ala., to close the Shadow Lawn Cemetery, Lois Leonard wanted to move her husband's body "somewhere it would be treated with the dignity he deserved."

The cost of such a venture was prohibitive, until a family friend contacted Bobby Randle, the senior vice commander for the State of Alabama's Military Order of the Purple Heart.

"They made it happen for me," the 68-year-old widow said. "I'm so thankful. The Lord has given me the desire of my heart. Now we can drive up here and visit any time we want."

On Tuesday, nearly 20 family members, including grandchildren and great-grandchildren, made the drive to the Fort Mitchell National Cemetery, where members of the Military Order of the Purple Heart conducted reinterment services for Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Leonard, who was posthumously awarded the Purple Heart and the Congressional Medal of Honor in 1967.

Leonard was 37 years old, a veteran of the Korean War, with nearly 20 years of active duty, when he volunteered for duty in Vietnam.

"He was a drill sergeant at Fort Leonard Wood, and they were sending the boys over there right out of boot camp, with no experience," Lois said. "My husband worried about that. He said he needed to help. It was just something he had to do."

Leonard was a platoon sergeant with B Company, 1st Battalion, 16th Infantry Division in Vietnam. On Feb. 28, 1967, his platoon was attacked by a large enemy force near Suoi Da. Although he sustained minor injuries in the first assault, Leonard rallied his Soldiers and organized a defensive perimeter. While dragging a wounded Soldier to safety, Leonard's left hand was shattered by a sniper's bullet, but he refused medical attention and continued fighting.

During the assault, the platoon's machine gun malfunctioned and the gunner was wounded, exposing the entire platoon to gunfire. Leonard charged the enemy and destroyed the gun crew, despite being hit several times by gun fire. He propped himself against a tree and continued to engage the enemy until he succumbed to his wounds.

More than 30 years after his death, Leonard's widow takes some comfort in the words of her own grandmother.

"When I was just a child, she told me, 'Lois, some had to die so the rest of us could live free.' My husband was one of those who died for us," she said.

Members of the Military Order of the Purple Heart honored their fallen comrade during Tuesday's ceremony.

"He was vibrant. He got things done that others couldn't do. He led by example and instilled a sense of pride and responsibility in his Soldiers," said Hal Meeker, who served with Leonard at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. "He was a credit to the U.S. Army and his country. I was privileged to work with him, to know him and to call him friend."

Campaign combats accidents

'Loaded 45' focus is safer roadways

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

This time of year means holiday trips and celebrations. It can also mean tragedies on the roadways.

The "Loaded 45" safety campaign at Fort Benning is one of the Directorate of Public Safety's ways of combating driving accidents.

The 45 days from Nov. 19 through Jan. 2 are the most dangerous time of the year for car accidents, said Regis Beighley, safety manager, DPS.

During this time, military police will step up their annual patrol efforts to remove impaired and dangerous drivers from the post roadways.

Last year from Dec. 10 through Jan. 1, there were 98 arrests and seven accidents related to drunk driving in the tricommunities of Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning.

Although the number of alcohol-related driving fatalities during the holiday season is at an all-time low, impaired driving is still a leading cause of death for people under age 30, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Military police will be on the lookout for unsafe and intoxicated drivers on the roadways they cover.

"If we catch them, we take them off the road and that helps everybody," Beighley said.

The MPs and local authorities will be watching for impaired drivers, both military and civilian.

"Our common purpose is to protect innocent drivers from people who recklessly drink and drive," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, Law Enforcement Division, Military Police Activity.

This includes people from off post. From October 1999 through September 2000, 64 percent of those stopped for drunk driving were civilians not affiliated with the military.

As a part of the Loaded 45 campaign, vehicle safety checkpoints will continue on post.

The MPs will be checking for proper identification, updated car registration and insurance, and looking for things like seatbelt use, carseats for children, functioning turn signals and automobile lights.

MPs will also be watching for basic signs that can indicate when a driver is unsafe behind the wheel. These include weaving, straddling the center line of a roadway, driving unusually slow, stopping abruptly, turning with a wide radius, and driving with the headlights off.

These signs can indicate that a driver has been drinking and is dangerous behind the wheel, Kelley said. "The more a person drinks, the more his response time slows down, and the greater the likelihood of an accident."

If the military police suspect a motorist of driving under the influence of alcohol (due to indicators like the odor of alcohol on breath and difficulty standing) they will conduct a field sobriety test. If the driver fails this, he will be taken into custody and given a breathalyzer test to check for blood alcohol level.

The minimum level for Georgia is .08 milligrams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood.

A person convicted of drunk driving is subject to lose his driver's license for up to one year. Repeat offenders may spend time in jail.

Kelley said in addition to the many dangers of drunk driving, motorists should keep other complications in mind.

"There are hidden costs involved, like the cost of your insurance going up, the cost of traffic school, and the cost of someone having to drive you around for a year," he said.

For those who are out celebrating over the next few weeks, Kelley had simple advice.

"If you're going to drink, don't drive. Before you go out, decide who the designated driver will be."

Fort Benning's Safety Cab is an option for those who have been drinking and are stuck with no safe way home.

The cab will travel to destinations both on and off post. The number to call for a free ride is 660-6069.

Post names 'instructors of year'

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Outstanding military instruction techniques and subject matter expertise has set three Fort Benning Soldiers apart as Instructors of the Year while teaching at the U.S. Army Infantry School.

Capt. Brian Vile, C Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment; Sgt. 1st Class William Walker, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment; and Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Czernia, A Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade; were each selected as Instructor of the Year in the categories of officer, senior and junior enlisted Soldier.

Recognizing outstanding instructors is important because they are the backbone of the U.S. Army Infantry School, said Elaine Livingston, chief, Staff Education and Training Division, Directorate of Operations and Training.

"They are the ones who teach all the students, influence the Soldiers, and maintain the standards," she said.

Each of the candidates were nominated by their peers and supervisors.

Vile is a Senior Platoon Trainer in C Co., 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. (IOBC). In this role, every 16 weeks he is responsible for training a brigade's worth of Infantry platoon leaders in technical and tactical skills. He said this duty is challenging and exciting.

"Every student I graduate will subsequently command 30 to 40 Infantrymen and will be responsible for both their lives and well-being," Vile said.

He does not take his role as an instructor lightly. "A failure on my part would be a failure to all Soldiers who would have to work for or serve with (my students).

"It's a great opportunity to be able to contribute to the professionalism and war-fighting ability of both the Infantry and the U.S. Army," he said.

The award winner on the senior enlisted level, Sgt. 1st Class Walker, has been an instructor at the Bradley Master Gunner Course since 1998. Presently he teaches the organizational maintenance of the M-242 25 mm gun.

Walker said he enjoys sharing his field experience with students. "Having done the job myself, I can tell them what it's really going to be like.

"I'm very grateful to have been selected. It's a way for me to see a measurable result of the quality of instruction I've given."

The junior enlisted winner, Czernia, is an instructor at the 4th RTB. His task is to teach his students all aspects of their tactical missions. He said being an instructor is rewarding, but difficult. "It is a thankless job with new challenges to face every day.

"I hope that what I teach them will make them better leaders both back at their home unit and in combat," Czernia said.

Training instructor Staff Sgt. Alan Simmons, Staff Education and Training Division, DOT, said these men displayed a strong command of the skills they were taught in the Instructor Training Course.

"The main thing we teach is for them to relax and be a subject matter expert. If they follow the format we teach, it will give them confidence as teachers and make them better instructors," Simmons said.

The men will each receive an Army Commendation Medal. They will also be presented with gifts from the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of The Retired Officers Association, the Association of the U.S. Army, the Army and Air Force Exchange Service and Ranger Joe's.

The ceremony will be held on Thursday from 10 to 11 a.m., in Classroom 6, Infantry Hall.

Award winners are eligible to compete for Instructor of the Year at TRADOC level.

Cooks learn to carve, shave ice sculptures

Soldiers trade pots, pans for chisels, saws

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Pvt. Melinda Andrews traded in her cooking knives and potato peeler for a chainsaw and chisels.

Andrews, along with other cooks from each of the post's dining facilities, took their turn at sculpting blocks of ice into crosses, boats and flower vases Nov. 21.

The blocks of ice were not ones people commonly buy at grocery stores to put in ice chests, large 300-pound slabs that needed to be carried by forklifts.

Many of the ice sculptors were learning the art for the first time and used chainsaws, chisels and other hand tools to cut, carve, scrape and shave 60 blocks into icy sculptures.

"I have never done this before," Andrews, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, said. "Normally we just cook and do rations. I am having fun trying to learn this."

Another newcomer to the art of ice sculpting said learning how to carve the ice has its benefits.

"Ice carving is really nice to know and it is a nice hobby," said Sgt. 1st Class Juan Rodriguez, a cook learning the trade.

People of all sculpting abilities were on hand to carve the ice, Rodriguez, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, said.

"There are people out here who are really good ... and are making works of art," he said. "Stone, marble and ice can all be works of art, and that is why we're here," he said.

The "works of art," were displayed in dining facilities on Thanksgiving.

> "It is time consuming but it pays off. We are doing this for the Soldiers. It gives them something to look forward to when they are away from their home and family during the holidays."

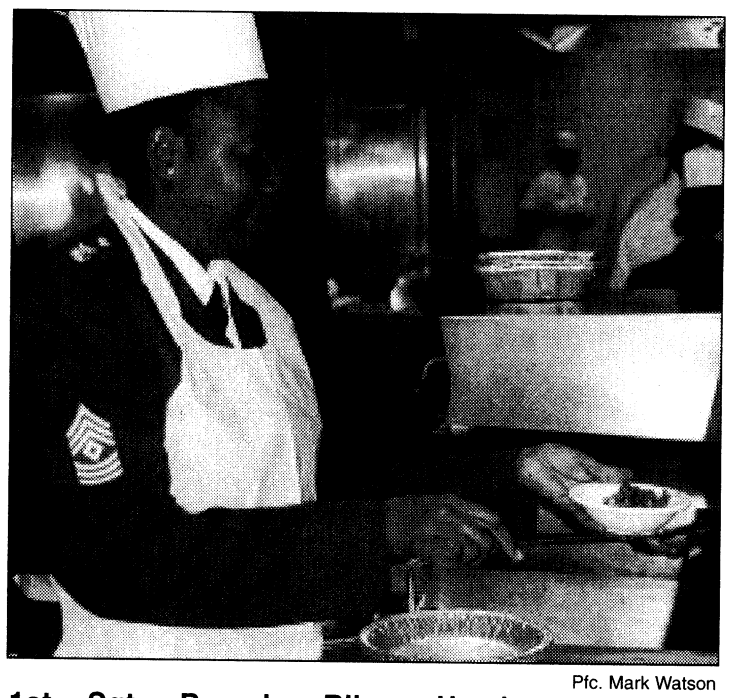
"We wanted to do something different for Thanksgiving," Andrews said.

The sculptings will help make the dining facilities more festive, Andrews added.

The day of ice sculpting also gave the cooks the opportunity to learn a new art.

"This is fun," Sgt. 1st Class Evicka Johnson, said. "Everyone is really impressed with their work.



"It is time consuming but it pays off," said Johnson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group. "We are doing this for the Soldiers. It gives them something to look forward to when they are away from their home and family during the holidays."

The cooks also carved several sculptures for the two dining facilities that will remain open on Christmas.

Engineers enjoy Thanksgiving feast

Soldiers kick off festivities before holiday

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group got an early start on Thanksgiving by sharing their meal the day before the traditional holiday at the Warrior Inn Dining Facility.

The Soldiers feasted on turkey, ham, roast, dressing, yams, shrimp, cranberry sauce and an assortment of pies in the dining facility that was decorated to mark the occasion.

"We chose to have the meal (Nov. 22) so the Soldiers would have a chance to spend time with one another," said Staff Sgt. Sharron Fentress-Bussey, the administration NCOIC for the 36th Engineer Group. "This way they can be with their families for Thanksgiving."

The food and the decorations brought out the best in the dining facility, Spc. Jason Lanier, 63rd Engineer Company, said.

"I really like the decorations," Lanier said. "It is pretty lively in here. The decorations really make the place better. It's not mom's cooking, but overall the food is good," Lanier said.

Several Soldiers brought along family to the feast.

"This gave me a chance to eat with my son," Sgt. Darrell Westbrook, 63rd Engineer Company, said. "It is his first time in the dining facility."

Although most of the Soldiers were miles from home, Westbrook said the cooks did a good job at providing home cooking and atmosphere.

"There are probably some Soldiers who will be alone. The dining facility makes up for that aloneness," he said.

However far Soldiers may be from their homes, they still have one another to rely on.

"The meal is very nice, and it allows Soldiers to spend time with their military families too," Staff Sgt. Luzmila George, 63rd Engineer Company, said. "It is a great meal and the decorations are very nice. All the work (setting up the meal and decorations) really paid off."

Firefighter talks protester down

Lawbreaker spends time with FBI

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

For the third time in less than two weeks a U.S. Army School of the Americas protester was apprehended after breaking federal law and post regulations Wednesday and was escorted to the U.S. federal magistrate judge by FBI agents.

Two SOA-Watch protesters were apprehended by military police after hanging a banner from the water tower across from Infantry Hall.

Elements of the Fire Department, Department of Defense police, military police and an EMS crew were on hand because of the inherent danger of the protesters' actions, Col. GT Myers, provost marshal, said.

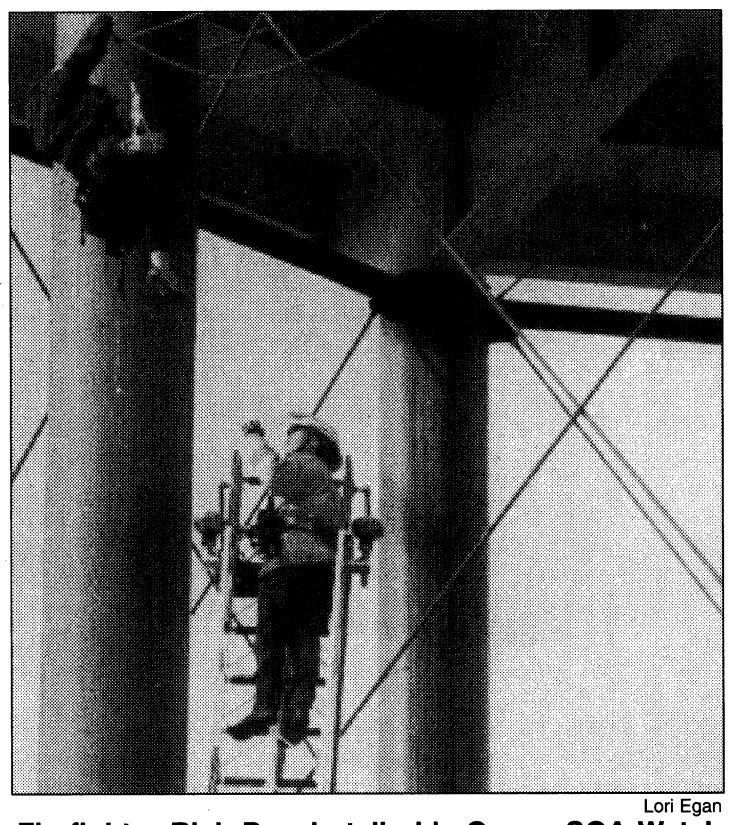
Using climbing ropes to hang the banner, the protesters were suspended from the tower approximately 75-80 feet from the ground.

Firefighter Rick Pagels with the Fort Benning Fire Department used his previous training as a crisis negotiator to talk 25-year-old Liz Guy down off the rope.

"I kept talking to her about the risk involved in a "pick off" operation," Pagels said. "She kept climbing higher every time the ladder got closer. I told her what action would be taken if she continued to resist." A "pick off" involves running ropes off the tower and then transferring the person to another rope, Pagels said. "She kept climbing higher, she was adamant about not coming down. But the other protester told her to come down when he heard what the options were."

Military police were on the ground to take Guy into custody. A few minutes later, the other protester, Josh Raisler-Cohn, 23, used the ladder to come down too. Both of them were charged with criminal trespass, resisting arrest and unlawful assembly, said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, Law Enforcement Division, Directorate of Public Safety.

Myers said the protesters actions were foolhardy.



"This was potentially a very violent form of protest," Myers said. "These people are putting lives at risk ... theirs, the firefighter who talked them down, the passersby."

Myers stressed that in addition to the dangerous nature of this type of activity, the protesters are breaking the law. Title 18 of the U.S. Code prohibits partisan, political activity on federal installations.

"Acts like this, as well as the annual 'Cross the Line' march break the law and pose a threat to our 225-year history of a nonpolitical military," Myers said. "That's an essential ingredient to our way of life. Challenges, like this, will be dealt with every single time — safely, quickly and firmly."

Military police also reminded those who work and live at Fort Benning to report any suspicious activities, noting that at least a dozen people must have seen the pair climbing up the water tower.

Call 545-5222 to report any suspicious activity.

Vehicle: Features armor protection

the light Infantry," Stone said.

"We were very happy with the light Infantry organization and wanted to keep the squad intact and not break it up. The overriding consideration was we wanted to be able to deliver a squad to the right place on the battlefield.

"For a long time we have been challenged with how to move the infantry around on the battlefield fast enough," Stone said.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, chief of infantry, and officials at Fort Benning made one of the key performance parameters for the vehicle that it had to be able to carry a nine-man squad, not including the crew.

"The job of the vehicle is not to fight as a combat vehicle in the sense of a Bradley," Stone said. "This is not a vehicle that is designed to fight other vehicles routinely, as a Bradley does or as a tank does. Clearly the lethality component of the BCT is the Infantry squad and platoon."

Calling the brigade combat team "Infantry-centric," Stone said, "It's not built around the platform. It's not built around our ability to go out and fight armored vehicles while mounted. It's built on our ability to get Infantrymen where we think they are going to need to be."

The Army's newest vehicle is not designed to replace existing heavier models.

"You can't replace Bradleys or tanks with LAVs. That is not the intent here. What we are replacing are leather personnel carriers, walking," Stone said.

For the Soldier, it will mean he will be transported closer to the objective.

"He should be fresh and able to fight. This helps carry some of his load so he doesn't have to carry all that stuff.

"This is his mobile transportation, resupply and evacuation vehicle. It does all those kinds of things for him," Stone said.

Other performance characteristics highlighted by Army officials include the vehicle's survivability. It features 14.5 mm all-around armor protection and can mount a remote weapons station with a .50-caliber machine gun.

The contract is for a family of LAVs — the Infantry Carrier Vehicle, including eight additional configurations, and the Mobile Gun System.

The other configurations of the carrier vehicle include a Mortar Carrier, Reconnaissance Vehicle, Medical Evacuation Vehicle, Anti-Tank Guided Missile Vehicle, Fire Support Vehicle, Engineer Support Vehicle, Command and Control Vehicle, and the Nuclear, Biological and Chemical Reconnaissance Vehicle.

General Motors has already produced two earlier generations of LAVs for the U.S. Marine Corps and various foreign militaries, including Canada, Saudi Arabia and Australia.

Since October 1999 when Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki announced plans to transform the Army, there has been a lot of involvement by Fort Benning units and directorates in developing the requirements for a new vehicle, Stone said.

For example, the 29th Infantry Regiment conducted numerous tests on vehicle models, while the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate was instrumental in developing the tactics, techniques and procedures for training on the vehicles.

"There has been a tremendous team effort across Fort Benning in making important contributions to the BCTs," Stone said.

Because of their expertise in training Infantrymen on the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, some NCOs from the 29th Inf. Regt. participated in the evaluation of several vehicle candidates. Other Soldiers and NCOs have expertise in machine guns, mortars and anti-armor weapons, "all of which were included in the evaluation phase," said Col. Carter Ham, commander of the 29th Inf. Regt.

"We were proud to have had the opportunity to help those charged with making the selection by rendering objective assessments of each candidate vehicle's performance."

Now that the selection has been made, Ham said, the Army can move forward in figuring out the best way to train the Infantrymen whose units will be equipped with the LAV III.

"It's an exciting challenge. For us old guys, it's almost like when our Army first chose the Bradley and, like then, the 29th Infantry Regiment is ready to lead the way as we train Soldiers for the interim force," Ham said.

The LAV III will contribute greatly to the Army's Transformation, Ham said.

"It's fast, deployable and, most importantly, can carry a complete Infantry squad. It'll be a great LAV that will enable our Infantry units to deploy rapidly anywhere in the world and win when they get there," Ham said.

Band: Performs Christmas concert accepting donations of nonperishable foods and new toys at the door, said Capt. Mark Harwell, commanding officer of the Salvation Army of the Chattahoochee Valley.

Last year the Salvation Army helped 968 families in the area, and this year the organization hopes to assist close to 1,000 families, including 2,100 children.

This is the first time the Salvation Army has offered a holiday concert.

"This is truly a first and very exciting for us. We hope folks will come out and add the concert to their list of holiday experiences," Harwell said.

The band will perform at several community events during December, including tonight's tree lighting on the 14th Street Pedestrian Bridge and the Bi-City Christmas Parade Dec. 9 at 10 a.m.

But, the concert marks a first for the band as well — a full holiday performance off post.

"This is the first time we have tried something like this downtown, and we hope it will be a success so we will be able to do something like this again," said Staff Sgt. Robert Jones, the band's operations NCOIC.

For more information on the concert and for free tickets, call 545-5313. Tickets will also be available at the door.

The Night of Lights kicks off tonight at 6 p.m. The band will perform during the festivities on the bridge. After the tree lighting, the public is invited to walk along the Phenix City Riverwalk and enjoy the holiday light displays.

The Stowers Elementary School Choir, under the direction of music teacher Lorri Blanchard, will also perform at the Phenix City Amphitheater during the celebration. About 70 third-, fourth- and fifth-graders will sing secular songs, Christmas carols and Hanukkah music.

any connectivity point will have two different routes. (Should one route be cut,) the data network will stay up because of the redundancy and survivability we've built into the design."

The duct work is also expanding so new manholes are needed as well, Earley said.

The new underground work will link Main Post, Kelley Hill, Sand Hill, and Harmony Church together with secure high speed access.

"This is the fiberoptic backbone for Fort Benning," Yates said. "The cable used now is 15-20 years old. This will be the most modern network in the Army, and the program allows for modernization."

This is an added bonus, Yates said.

Should technology advance during the time before the project is completed, workers can add the updated system giving Fort Benning the latest technology has to offer.

Lucent Technologies has serviced Fort Benning for the last three years, Yates said. During that time they have performed most of the cable work for post.

"They will do an exceptional job," Yates said. "They have an outstanding reputation."

Program keeps spouses stationed together

Policy helps families remain as one household

Michele Hammonds
Army News Service

> "The program works to keep dual military together. We have moved three times together."
> Staff Sgt. Sherrilynne Cherry
> Fort Bragg, N.C.

WASHINGTON — Some dual-military spouses endure long separations throughout the year because of work assignments, but not if the Married Army Couples Program has anything to do with it.

The program aims at keeping dual-military families together when possible, said Donny Dennis, military personnel specialist, of the Officer Distribution Management and Mobilization Branch, who handles the officer MACP program. He said the program is designed to provide a way service couples are considered for assignment together to establish a joint household while fulfilling the mission of the Army.

To date there are 5,071 officers who are currently enrolled in the program. About 80 percent (4,100) are officers serving in Army-approved joint domicile assignments. Approximately, "one third move yearly," said Dennis.

There are 21,922 enlisted Soldiers enrolled in the program. Of that number 17,377 enlisted troops are serving in joint domicile assignments.

Sgt. 1st Class Tim and Staff Sgt. Lee Donahue know first-hand the benefits of the program. That is why the Donahues, who met and married in 1994 while they were stationed in Germany, chose to enroll in the program.

"It's a great program," Lee said. "We are grateful the program has allowed us to be together."

However Lee said she doesn't take the good fortune she and her husband have found for granted.

"When you marry another military member with the same MOS (military occupational specialty) you have to be realistic and cognizant that it will be difficult if you are the same rank," said Lee who expects to be promoted sometime next year. "It's hard because we can't be in each other's rating change meaning we can't work for each other or rate each other."

The couple who are both Army broadcasters by trade have managed to be stationed together except for a short time in Korea when Tim took another job offer in Camp Casey, Korea — 30 to 45 miles away while Lee stayed in Seoul, Korea, 18 out of the 24 months the couple was there.

"It was a great job, and we made the decision that he would live up there," Lee said. "We saw each other on holidays and weekends."

Now the couple is stationed at Fort Meade, Md. Lee works for the Army Public Affairs Center and Tim works at the Defense Information Center.

Normally the Donahues are accustomed to working straight through the holiday season, providing Christmas radio programming for the troops. But with the expected arrival of their unborn child due next month they plan to enjoy being together.

"This Christmas we are having the baby, and we will be off work," Lee said.

Like the Donahues, Chief Warrant Officer Aundrey and Staff Sgt. Sherrilynne Cherry also enrolled in the program after they met in Germany and married shortly afterwards in 1991.

"Right before we got married our commander counseled us about the program," said Sherrilynne, whose husband was enlisted at the time.

After the Cherrys enrolled in the MACP, Sherrilynne's assignment orders for Fort Lewis were deleted and she rejoined her husband at Fort Carson a couple months later.

"The program works to keep dual military together," Sherrilynne said. "We have moved three times together."

The Cherrys now stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., said they don't want to be separated because they have two daughters, Jasmine, 5, and Jada, 2, who are enrolled in the Exceptional Family Member Program.

"Our branch managers worked together to make sure we received good assignments at the same place," said Sherrilynne, who is a military journalist and her husband is in the artillery field. "It is hard caring for the girls when my husband is gone (temporary)."

Maj. Craig Green, understands about being separated from his spouse, Capt. Michelle Green, who is away attending graduate school. He is assigned to the Chief Management Support Branch, Office of Personnel Management Division.

The Greens enrolled in MACP after they married in 1991. They wanted to make sure they could be stationed together.

"We PCSd (permanent change of station) here to Washington and hopefully this summer we want to go to Hawaii," Craig said.

Officers and enlisted wanting to enroll in MACP need to submit an application (DA Form 4187- Personnel Actions) along with a copy of his or her marriage certificate through the Personnel Administration Center to the servicing Military Personnel Division Personnel Service Battalion. The Soldier's servicing MPD/PSB will enter the Soldier spouse's information into the Standard Installation/Division Personnel System to enroll the Soldier in the MACP.

The spouse information must be entered on both Soldiers for enrollment in the program.

For more information about MACP, officers can call Dennis at DSN 221-5191 or (703) 325-5191.

Enlisted Soldiers can call Shirley Hodge at Plans Procedures and Operations Branch at DSN 221-2738 or (703) 325-2738.

Faith opens way for Soldier of the Year

Thoughts of leaving Army turn to award

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

An awards ceremony recognizing the NCO and Soldier of the Year at the 29th Infantry Regiment provided an unusually clear window onto the strong core of values that drive the modern Army.

Spc. Nicholas Kolowich, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Inf. Regt., had been planning to escape an environment in which he had struggled with trouble and discouragement.

"Until the middle of this year," Kolowich said, "I was thinking about getting out."

But the faith and diligence of a single NCO, Kolowich said, opened a different path for him. Sgt. Travis Johnson, C Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., was the first team leader who convinced the young Soldier that he could excel. As Kolowich's new team leader, Thompson said, he immediately made it clear that whatever was in the past was in the past; when he saw that Kolowich was capable of taking leadership, and could be relied on to successfully complete whatever mission he was given, he knew that his Soldier could be mentored to lasting success.

Kolowich

"It just took a little motivation and direction," Thompson said. "No Soldier is ever marginal. If you're a high-standard leader, you're going to have high-standard Soldiers."

With Thompson's leadership, Kolowich quickly earned the Expert Infantry Badge, Airborne Badge, three Army Achievement Medals, and two Army Commendation Medals. Kolowich, who was named Regiment Soldier of the Year and Post Soldier of the Year the same week, now has a new goal: He wants nothing less than to become Sergeant Major of the Army.

"You can overcome anything," he insisted. "You can make it better."

Also reflecting the values of today's Army was 29th Regiment NCO of the Year, Staff Sgt. John Spencer, D Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., who teaches officers and fellow NCOs at the Mortar Leaders Course.

For Spencer, the challenge of competing for the award suited his fiercely competitive nature — much like his work as an instructor. "It keeps you on your toes," he said of his day-to-day work, "not only to understand it, but to make somebody else understand it."

Speaking at the regiment ceremony last Tuesday, retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank Plass, the regiment's honorary command sergeant major, said the role Spencer and his colleagues play is a reflection of the ever-greater importance of the NCO. "In my day, it was officers on the podium," Plass said.

To Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander, the recognition of the regiment's finest Soldiers demonstrated why today's Army is "a lot better" than the organization he joined in 1964. "It's the human touch," Le Moyne said. "The self-discipline, the maturity, the dedication to making yourself better. And also, quite frankly, the teamwork."

The increasingly common recognition of exceptional Soldiers, Le Moyne believes, has roots in the Army's efforts to rebuild after the difficult years of the Vietnam War. Showing Soldiers that extra effort is appreciated and rewarded reinforces an Armywide appreciation of the value of taking leadership, the post commander said.

That example, said Col. Carter Ham, commander, 29th Inf. Regt., can sustain Soldiers who, like Kolowich, experience doubts about military service. "There are hardly any Soldiers who don't ever question what they're doing," Ham said. "We all wrestle with that."

The point, Ham said, is that leaders who take time with their Soldiers can turn those doubts around, and lead the way to excellence. Ham described Spencer, the regiment's NCO of the Year, as "a good leader and a good man," for example, and named him as an example for Kolowich to look to as he decided what course his Army career would take. Leaders like Spencer "take the time to teach and coach and mentor," Ham said, and make all the difference in the commitment and excellence of the men and women who serve.

Not only the winners of the 29th Regiment's top awards reflected the Army's values. Sgt. Mikita Edwards, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt., was named as runner-up for the title of Regiment NCO of the Year during Tuesday's awards luncheon. A few minutes later, Edwards quietly returned to doing her job, tearing down the P.A. system that had been used for the ceremony. "She has the attitude that she can basically do about anything," said 1st Sgt. Roosevelt Vickers, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt.

That kind of example, Ham said, is worth remembering. An Army that recognizes excellence and encourages leadership may make special awards to a few exceptional Soldiers, but their example will always reflect the professionalism of the colleagues who work alongside them; recognizing individual excellence leads to greater teamwork and organizational strength. That's a lesson that Soldiers continue to take to heart, said Command Sgt. Maj. Joe Bradley, 29th Inf. Regt.

"The next generation of Soldiers and leaders is counting on our mentorship, leadership, and professional expertise," Bradley said.

"They're valuable to us all. We need to put our arms around them and prepare them for leadership," he said.

Department of the Army employee earns wings

Civilian endures three-week Airborne training

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

David Nelson tried to blend in with the other Airborne students at jump school, but that was a little hard to do for the 38-year-old Department of the Army civilian.

His uniform was the first giveaway. Rather than saying "US Army," Nelson's read "DA Civilian." It bore no rank insignia, so his classmates weren't sure what to call him. The A in his roster number, A289, identified him as the equivalent to an officer, which prompted numerous questions from his fellow jump students. There is no designation for civilians.

"I tried to fly under the radar by cutting my hair and staying low key so as not to attract special attention from the cadre. But within four hours during in-processing, most everyone knew I was different in some way," Nelson, the deputy director of Project Manager, Soldier at Fort Belvoir, Va., said.

Nelson explained to those who questioned him about why he wanted to be Airborne that part of his job is to develop individual equipment for Soldiers, some of which is used on parachute jumps. His classmates gladly offered their opinions on which pieces of clothing and equipment they didn't like.

Nelson graduated from Airborne School Oct. 12 after completing the three-week course and making five parachute jumps. His boss, Lt. Col. Steve Pinter, jumped with him on the final jump and pinned on the civilian's jump wings.

"Graduation was the emotional climax to the three-week course. The training feels kind of private and out of the spotlight, the graduation ceremony brings it back into the spotlight," Nelson said.

He now plans to jump every few months with a new piece of equipment "to establish an experience base to better understand the capabilities of our equipment," he said.

It was Nelson's idea to earn his jump wings, and he had to receive a special waiver to do so.

"First and foremost, more and more command acquisition positions are becoming best qualified military or civilian. The Product Manager-Soldier Equipment is coded as a jump slot. I aspire to be selected for that job in a few years, but civilians would be hard pressed to qualify if not Airborne certified," Nelson said.

In the last decade only four civilians have been given permission to attend the school, said Maj. Kevin Petit, operations officer, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry.

The other three waivers were granted to a journalist and two DA civilians who worked for the Soldier, Biological Chemical Command in Natick, Mass.

Nelson called Petit and asked what it would take for him to be allowed to attend the school.

Petit told him the final decision would come from the commanding general and only after he had made an official request, completed the required forms, a physical and been granted an age waiver. The age cutoff for jump school is 36.

Nelson's request was granted, and Petit met him in person three weeks prior to the start of class.

"He had a goatee and was wearing several earrings. He also had a ponytail down his back," recalled Petit, who explained the grooming standards required in the course.

"He got the same treatment any paratrooper gets," Petit said.

Nelson's ponytail was one of the casualties of the training. He kept it in his rental car the entire three weeks.

"I rub my peach fuzz head as a reminder that failure is not an option I willingly accept," he wrote in an e-mail to friends and colleagues after ground week.

Nelson plans to hang the ponytail on his wall beside his Airborne certificate, he said.

"I'm really getting used to the short hair, and my wife bought a pair of electric clippers, so I think I'll keep it short for awhile. There is something to be said for towel drying your head," he said.

When he had the chance, Nelson wrote in detail to his friends, coworkers and family about his experiences, and the messages are a unique look at Army training.

In one he compared military formations to synchronized swimming in the Olympics.

"Military formations are quite a bizarre science. Only a Soldier who was taught how to do it from day one probably really understands the logic behind them.

"We do 'roll call' in roster number order by squad, then we shuffle the deck so we are in order of height just prior to the march. The formation snakes around in such a fashion as to always be oriented the same way regardless of how many turns it takes to get there. It's like some kind of synchronized ant colony," Nelson wrote.

"Fortunately I have been able to pick up many of the tricks so as not to be the dork ant who isn't receiving the telepathy signals from the queen ant. I'm sad to say I actually have to concentrate while walking. I quit doing that when I was in elementary school," he added.

Some of the instructors referred to Nelson as "Old Man" or "Grandpa" when he was slow to get on his feet during training, he said.

"They seemed pleased that I made it and held my own," Nelson said.

As for other civilians who may consider earning their wings, Nelson said, "I would prefer other civilians not pursue Airborne School if their only reason to do it is for the experience or as a 'greening' opportunity. It should be reserved for mission-related civilian jobs in order not to demean the specialness of it," he said.

David Nelson stands ready to make a jump. Nelson is only the fourth civilian in the last decade to earn wings.

Long range surveillance Soldiers travel to Korea

Rangers teach recon skills in 33-day course

Capt. Anthony Turpin
4th Ranger Training Battalion

D Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, recently conducted the first Mobile Training Team mission in support of the 2nd Infantry Division at Camp Hovey, Korea.

The team, made up of 18 Long Range Surveillance Leaders Course instructors, trained and advised 37 students from the 2nd Infantry Division Long Range Surveillance Detachment, 1st Bn., 503rd Infantry Regiment, 1st Bn., 506th Inf. Regt., 1st Bn., 9th Inf. Regt., and Joint Security Area.

The 33-day course curriculum included an Army physical fitness test, combat water survival test, and instruction and testing in land navigation, high frequency and tactical satellite communications, vehicle and equipment identification, intelligence, operational techniques, tactics.

The also received instructions on procedures, and planning area operations.

The MTT culminated in a seven-day graded field training exercise, which included helicopter insertions, movement, surveillance, reconnaissance, helicopter extractions, and debriefings.

A key player in the success of the MTT and the LRSLC Instructor of the Cycle was Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Hughes.

He led all advanced party preparation and coordination, worked directly with the division intelligence officer in developing mission planning folders, and was the primary instructor for several blocks of training.

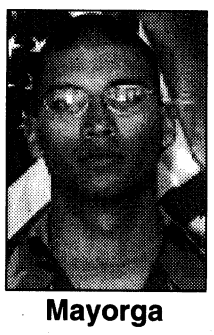
Hughes planned and executed the planning exercise, situational training exercise, and field training exercise.

The 2nd Inf. Div. commanding general and former Fort Benning deputy commanding general, Maj. Gen. Russel L. Honore, was the guest speaker at the graduation ceremony for 26 MTT students. In his address, he made it clear why the MTT was critical to the LRS mission in Korea.

"Graduating from this course reaffirms your commitment to warfighting and your warfighting skills. You will be able to pass the lessons you've learned on to other Soldiers for the rest of the time you're in the Army ... and because of your skills, we will be more effective and less of our people will be killed or injured on the battlefield because of the goodness of what you bring to the fight," Honore said. "You will be the silent hand of victory in this division."

Honore presented awards for the highest APFT score on the extended scale, achieved by Staff Sgt. Martin Angulo, and for the highest combined written and practical exercise score in land navigation, achieved by Staff Sgt. James Salyers.

Salyers was also selected the honor graduate for achieving the highest overall academic average and success in graded positions during the FTX. Both Soldiers were from LRSD, 2nd Inf. Div.



"If it had not been for the RTB in allowing Delta Company to come here and conduct this training, we would not have had this great opportunity," said Maj. Jay Dainty, the executive officer of 2nd Brigade, 2nd Inf Div. "It was the best training that LRS has had in a year."

Dainty, along with Col. William Odom, 2nd Brigade commander, are already working on next year's MTT.

Other LRSLC training missions this quarter included deployments to the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La., in support of the Joint Contingency Force Advanced Warfighter Experiment and to Kosovo in support of E Co., 51st Infantry and Task Force Falcon during peacekeeping operations in the Multinational Brigade East sector.

Future training missions include a train-the-trainer MTT for the 173rd Airborne Brigade in Vicenza, Italy.

Overseas vehicles need certificate of title

Army News Service

Soldiers and civilian employees who want to ship their vehicles overseas must now bring to the port a certificate of title.

If the vehicle is leased or has a lien, customers must also present a lien-release letter, according to Military Traffic Management Command officials.

Vehicle registration cards will no longer be sufficient when privately-owned vehicles are brought to the port or Vehicle Processing Center, MTMC officials said.

The documentation requirements are being enforced at VPCs in order to comply with U.S. Customs Service regulations and the Anti-Car Theft Act of 1992.

The new MTMC policy became effective Oct. 1. Personnel shipping vehicles overseas must now present an original certificate of title or a certified copy of the title. MTMC will no longer ship POVs to locations outside the continental U.S. without the title and, if applicable, a lienholder release letter.

The lienholder's release letter must be on the third party's letterhead paper, and contain a complete description of the vehicle, and the lienholder's telephone number.

The shipper must also present a certified copy of the title.

Vehicle Processing Centers have been instructed to hold POVs for no more than 30 days while the Soldier or civilian employee secures the release from the lienholder.

These holding procedures will remain in effect until Dec. 31. Thereafter, Vehicle Processing Centers will reject all POVs without the required letter of authorization from the lien-holder.

Service members will be responsible for disposition instructions and transportation charges associated with the return of POVs not authorized for shipment. Soldiers who are not able to obtain a lien-holder release letter are advised to contact their base legal office for assistance.

Shippers are encouraged to review the instructions in the MTMC pamphlet, "Shipping Your POV," which is available at personal property shipping offices or on the Web at http://144.101.37.133/property/gpov/POVnotice.htm.

FDA issues alert about drugs

AAFES, MACH, commissary remove medicine with PPA

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The flu season is here, but cold and cough sufferers may find some of their favorite decongestants have been removed from store shelves.

The Food and Drug Administration issued a health alert Nov. 6 on the risk of hemorrhagic stroke associated with the use of products containing phenylpropanolamine, better known as PPA, an ingredient used in many over-the-counter and prescription cough and cold medicines to relieve stuffy nose or sinus congestion. It is also used in some weight-control products to reduce appetite.

The FDA warning stated that "although the risk of hemorrhagic stroke is very low, even with phenylpropanolamine use, the conditions for which these products are used do not appear to warrant an increased risk of this serious event from using the drug."

Consumers are encouraged to read the labels on products they may be using and to stop taking those containing PPA. They may consult their pharmacists or health care providers for alternative over-the-counter and prescription products.

The move is the result of a study conducted by scientists at Yale University School of Medicine that found a link between PPA and bleeding into the brain. The study showed the risk of stroke was found primarily in women; but, men may also be at risk, the FDA reported.

Both AAFES and the Defense Commissary Agency have removed the over-the-counter products from their store shelves.

Signs are posted in the commissary and Main Mall Post Exchange informing shoppers they may return any unused products containing PPA for a full refund.

Two days after the warning was issued, the DeCA announced that it was removing

Post to light tree Dec. 12

Holiday tradition continues

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Holiday lights will glow at Fort Benning and Santa Claus will make a special appearance to hear the Christmas wishes of post children Dec. 12.

The annual holiday Christmas tree lighting ceremony is scheduled to begin at 5 p.m., at the Field of Four Chaplains. This tradition has been going on for more than 20 years.

"All members of the community are invited to join in as we formally kick off the holiday season," said garrison chaplain Lt. Col. Daniel Taylor.

The event will pay tribute to both Christian and Jewish faiths. A large menorah will also be lit to celebrate the eight days of Hanukkah. A large-scale nativity scene will be another featured attraction at the field.

Taylor said events like this are good for the entire post.

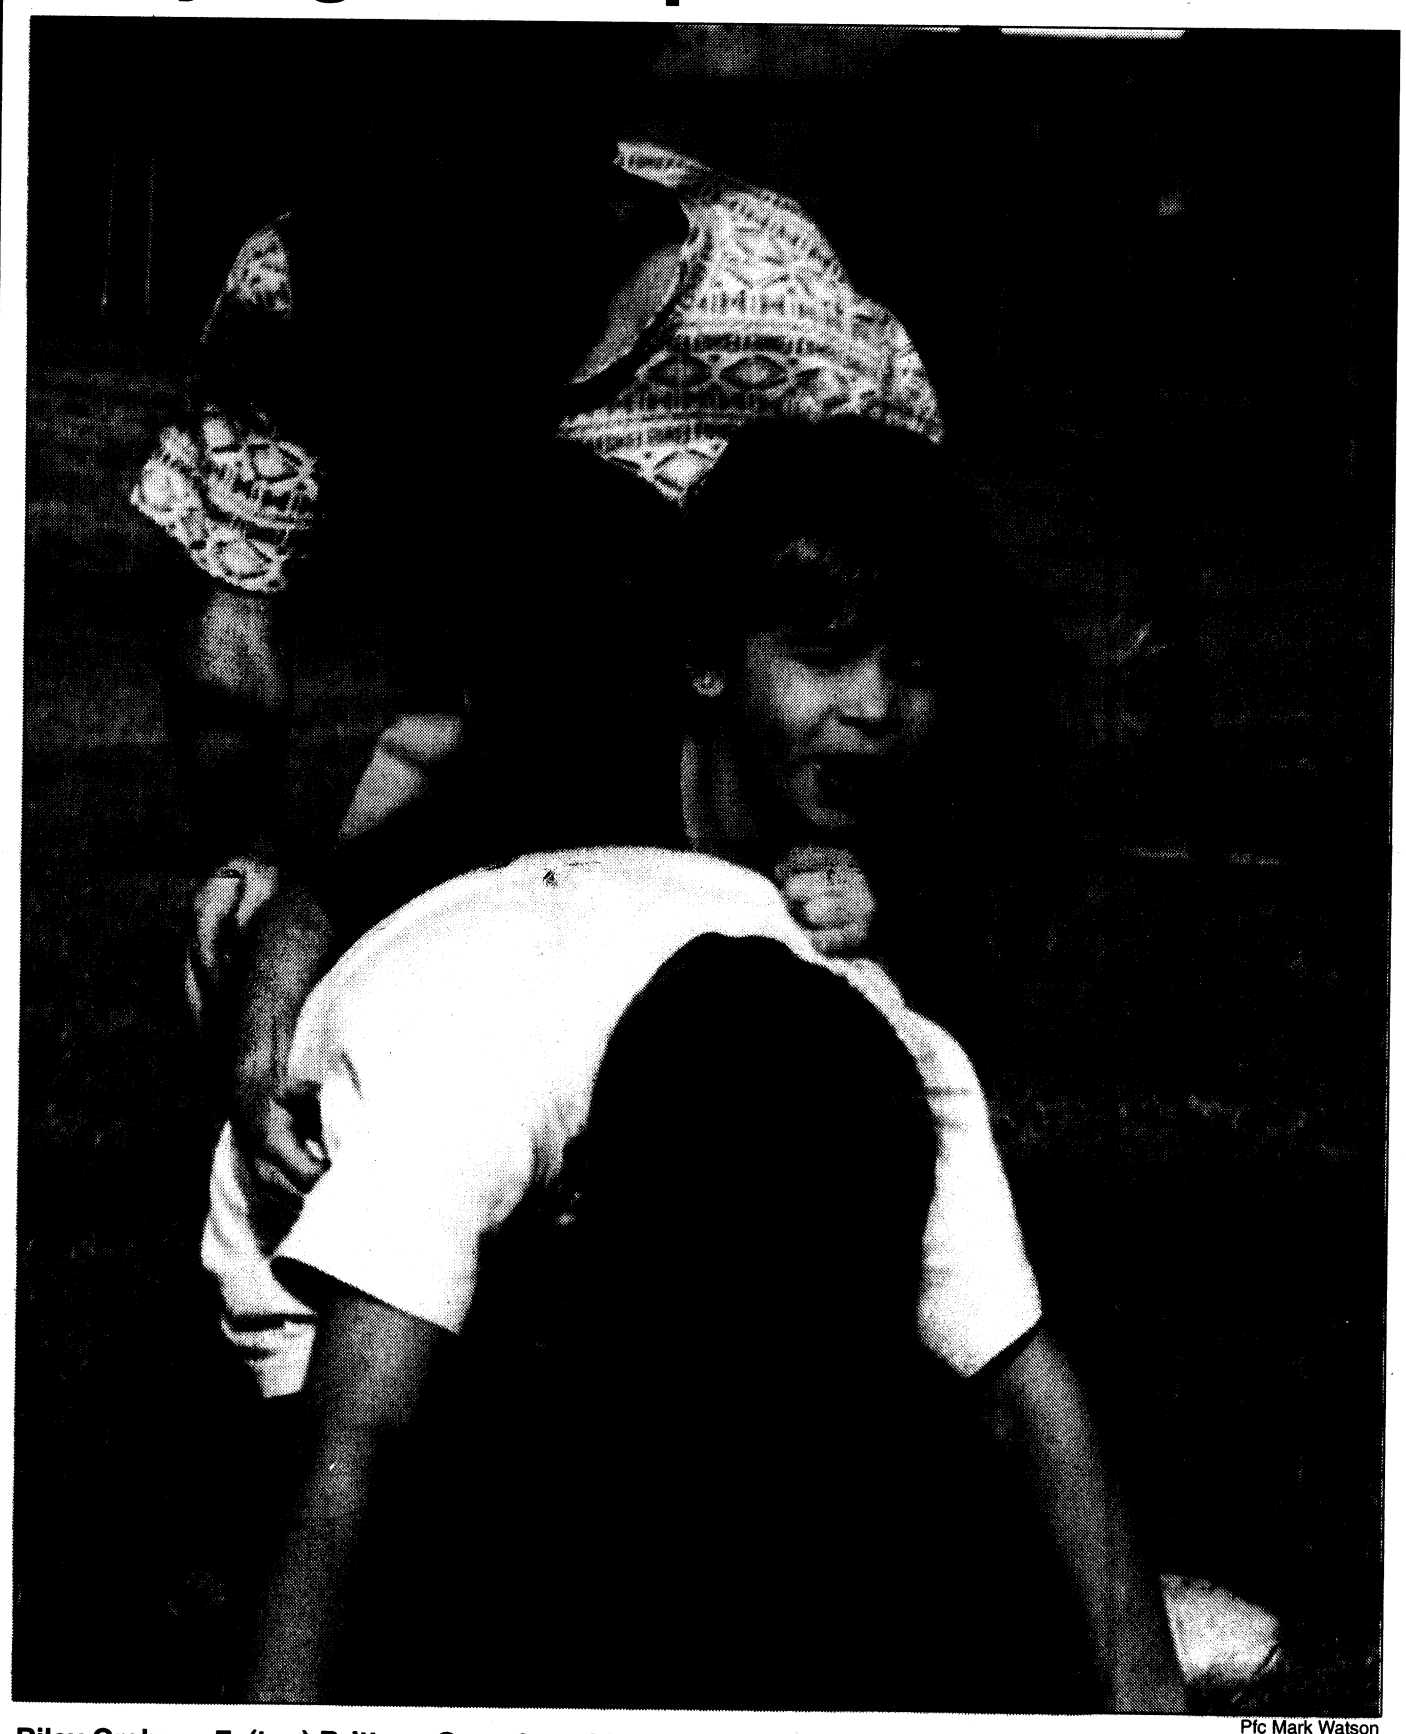
"These are common traditions and I think it draws the community together," he said.

The Infantry band will play holiday tunes at the beginning of the event to set the mood.

Taylor said the ceremony is about more than just celebrating the season of holiday festivity.

"It reminds us through these different displays that these are more than just holidays, they're also holy days," Taylor said.

Garrison Commander Col. Jose Torres will perform the official lighting with the help of a child from the audience.



Instead of his usual reindeer-drawn sleigh, Santa will arrive in a Fort Benning fire truck. Santa and his helpers will greet children in a makeshift "Santa's workshop."

Organizers are asking the community to donate snacks for the children to have when they meet with Santa

"We're expecting a lot of kids and would appreciate any donations of cookies or candy," said Sgt. Dorothy Bessmoore, Infantry Center Chapel NCOIC, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. Donations will be accepted until Dec. 11. For more information, call 545-2050.

The Field of Four Chaplains is adjacent to the Infantry Center Chapel, Building 101, on the corner of Lauber and Sigerfoos Streets.

Tricare gives advice on bills

Staff Sgt. Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — There are several steps Tricare beneficiaries can take to avoid getting in hot water over unpaid medical bills, military health care officials said.

Tricare officials have learned several lessons since implementing the Debt Collection Assistance Officer program, July 26. The program is designed to help beneficiaries deal with unpaid medical bills that have been sent to a collection agent or a credit bureau.

The beneficiary should first make sure information on the Tricare explanation of benefits notification is correct.

"It's easy for mistakes to occur when people are coding in numbers and letters," said Marcia Bonifas, Tricare Management Activity's director of customer service and beneficiary education. "If a social security number or procedure code is one number off, it can result in a claim denial.

"This can be resolved much more quickly if the beneficiary notices the problem and immediately calls the claims processor," she said.

Beneficiaries should also make better use of beneficiary counseling and assistance coordinators at each military medical treatment facility.

"When beneficiaries receive a dunning notice, a notice that the bill has not yet gone to a collection agency but it will if not paid within 30 days, the coordinators will take that on and work with the claims processor to get it paid," Bonifas said.

This advice also applies to any bill beneficiaries don't understand.

"If you get a bill and you're not sure what it is, get it in to your Tricare Service Center and get them engaged early," Air Force Col. Frank Cumberland, the agency's director of communications, said. "Individuals should identify problems as early as they sense them. We want to solve problems as early in the process as possible."

Since the program began, Bonifas noted, beneficiaries have made good use of the Internet to get correct information about the debt collection program.

"They see it on the front page (of the Tricare home page) and know exactly where they need

Benning receives $200,000 award

Post earns eighth straight recognition

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Directorate of Resource Management needs your help.

In 2000, the post took home the Chief of Staff, Army, Army Communities of Excellence (ACOE) award for the eighth consecutive year.

"The award translates into $200,000 that we can spend on quality of life improvements for Soldiers and their families," said Bobby King, director, Resource Management.

The money can go a long way, he said.

Last year, some of the funded projects included:

- Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program dayroom and promotional items.
- Youth Services sports uniforms, balls, field preparation equipment and field items.
- Post family playground equipment, picnic tables and swing sets.
- Post community exercise and library equipment, and audio equipment for Santiago Gym.
- Chapel and Youth Ministry Team improvements such as carpet for Sightseeing Road Chapel and an interior upgrade at Soldiers Chapel.

The DRM is taking suggestions for projects on which it will spend the money this year, King said. The command group, commanders and directors, will make the final selection from the suggested projects. Anyone with suggestions can send them to the DRM office, Infantry Hall, Room 547, attention: Pat Porter, management analyst. The deadline is Jan. 31.

"We want everyone to consider sending in a suggestion so that we'll maximize the opportunity to improve living and working conditions on Fort Benning," King said.

Fort Benning won the ACOE award because it received high scores on implementation of the Army Performance Improvement Criteria (APIC), said Sara Hodges, chief, Quality Management Division. In January, Department of the Army examiners also did an on-site evaluation to verify and clarify the facts about the post.

"The bottom line on why we won the award is the excellent teamwork and desire to improve — that is very evident at Fort Benning," Hodges said.

"We have to keep improving every year," King said. "More and more installations are getting involved because they see what the money can do for them."

As a result, it is more difficult to win the award because of the increased competition, he said.

In 1999, Fort Benning took home $500,000 for winning the Commander in Chief Award for Best Army Installation and was not eligible to win that award in 2000 because posts cannot win in back-to-back years.

"Our goal for the future is to continue to improve by using the APIC criteria as a management tool," Hodges said.

gardening tips

ennifer White
ayonet correspondent

Though it may seem premature to be thinking about your pring garden, now is the time o plan for an early blooming. pring blooming bulbs are a reat way to have early color in he garden.

To have that beautiful spring arden, bulbs must be planted in he fall.

During the early spring when temperatures are still dipping low in the evenings, and other plants are waiting for warmer soil temperatures, bulbs will be popping up with wonderful color displays.

The term bulb is used to refer to true bulbs and all other bulb-like structures. In Georgia, spring blooming bulbs can be planted from October through late December.

There are many varieties of spring blooming bulbs to consider. One excellent feature of bulbs is their compact growing forms.

So a gardener doesn't have to chose just a few varieties. Many different choices can be used in a small garden space.

Among the most popular here in Georgia, as well as everywhere else in the world, are tulips.

Having been overseas, many military families have been given the opportunity to see the tulips in Holland.

Don't be surprised if none of the gardens here rival those. Tulips are best used in closely planted masses and planted in color schemes.

Some of the other bulbs with great showiness are narcissus, crocus, muscari, and the ever fragrant hyacinth.

All of these bulbs do well here at Fort Benning.

A good bulb mixture would contain any or all of these varieties.

Bulbs are inexpensive and are available at most nurseries. The County Extension office has a bulletin, #918, Flowering Bulbs for Georgia Gardens, for interested gardeners.

Know charity before donating, official says

Question anyone soliciting on behalf of veterans' groups

Georgia Department of Veterans Affairs

ATLANTA — Georgia Commissioner of Veteran's Affairs, Pete Wheeler, is encouraging all state residents to question anyone soliciting money on behalf of veterans' groups during the holiday season.

"We get many telephone calls this time of year asking us to help the needy and downtrodden.

Some of these requests say they are trying to assist veterans.

Most of these requests come from reputable organizations, but not all," Wheeler said.

The commissioner encourages all people to ask for written information from the charity before making a contribution.

The information should provide the exact name of the organization, the organization's purpose, how the group intends to meet its goals and how much of each dollar will be used for true charitable purposes.

The National Charities Information Bureau recommends that a minimum of 60 cents of each dollar go toward the charitable purpose.

Wheeler said a red flag should go up if the caller attempts to high-pressure you and emphasizes emotional content rather than substance.

"If the caller says there is no time, it is too costly or they will provide the written material after you make a donation, you would be wise to terminate the conversation," Wheeler said.

It's recommended that you never give your credit card number to a stranger.

Also, don't respond to letters saying you have pledged money unless you are 100 percent certain you did. Checks should be made payable only to the full name of the charity.

"Individuals can contact the Secretary of State's Charitable Solicitations Office to determine if the organization is registered with the state," Wheeler said.

Organizations that collect more than $25,000 in the state must be registered with that office.

The Charitable Solicitations Office can also provide information from the organization's financial statement, if the group is registered with the state. The number to call is (404) 656-4910.

"A state agency cannot make recommendations regarding any charitable organization," he said.

"It's the individual's responsibility to decide whether an organization deserves his or her money and support."

ask the judge

Capt. Aimee Hobby

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My wife and I are currently going through a divorce. I would like to know if this is going to affect my taxes. Can you help me?

A: There are three main areas of concern for divorcing taxpayers: alimony, child support and division of property.

Before signing any agreement both taxpayers should understand the tax consequences of the divorce settlement.

Alimony payments are deducted from the taxable income of the person making the payments (the payer) and are included in the income of the person receiving the payments (the recipient). Alimony payments made to a spouse before there is separation or divorce agreement are not deductible as alimony.

Payments made pursuant to a divorce or separation agreement will be deductible as alimony if each of the following requirements are met:

• The payer and the recipient do not file a joint income tax return;

• The payments are made according to the terms of a divorce or separation agreement which requires alimony or spousal support;

• The payments are made in cash, check or money order;

• The payments will terminate on the death of the recipient;

• The payer and the recipient live in separate households when payments are made;

• The payer and the recipient do not make an election to avoid treating the payments as alimony.

Child support payments are not deducted from the taxable income of the payer included as income to the recipient. To be considered as child support, the agreement must:

• Specifically designate an amount as child support;

• Provide for a reduction in the amount of a spousal support payment on the happening of an event or contingency relating to a child, e.g., the reaching of a certain age by the child, or upon his marriage; or

• Provide for a reduction in spousal support payments either within six months before or after a child reaches 18, 21 or other age of adulthood under state law.

Finally, if you transfer property to your spouse incident to a divorce, you do not recognize gain or loss on that transfer.

This is true whether or not you receive property in exchange for the transfer. In addition, it does not matter whether the transfer happens before or after the divorce, if any post-divorce transfers are "incident to the divorce."

A transfer is incident to the divorce under the following circumstances:

• The transfer is made within one year after the marriage ends; or

• The transfer is related to the ending of the marriage. This means that the transfer is made pursuant to a divorce or separation agreement and occurs within six years after the marriage has ended. (The six-year period may be extended under certain circumstances.)

See IRS Publication 504, Tax Information for Divorced or Separated Individuals, for more information or call the Legal Assistance Division and make an appointment to meet with a Legal Assistance Attorney. The number is 545-3281 and we schedule appointments starting Friday morning at 8 a.m. for the following week.

the products containing PPA from the shelves of all 300 commissaries worldwide.

"Although the FDA notice is not a formal recall, DeCA leadership took the removal action to assure commissary customers they can have full confidence in the products they buy," Rick Brink of the DeCA Public Affairs Office said.

Martin Army Community Hospital's pharmacy took immediate action as well.

"All medications containing phenylpropanolamine have been pulled," said Lt. Col. Ned Schowalter, chief, Pharmacy Services.

The pharmacist programmed the hospital's computers to deny physicians access to the medications and informed them of the alternatives available to their patients.

"For example, normally doctors are very familiar with Dimetapp, but since we have lost that decongestant, they are prescribing Actifed as an alternative," he said.

Peggy Horen, a post exchange shopper, heard about the FDA warning on the television news.

Although she had used some of the products containing PPA in the past, she found numerous alternatives in the cold and flu section of the Main Exchange Tuesday.

The sign posted in the section listed 20 products containing PPA that have been removed from sale in the exchange.

Medications listed are:

Alka-Seltzer Plus
Tavist-D
Triaminic Triaminicol
Contact Severe Cold 16 count
Comtrex Deep Chest 24 count
Dexatrim XS with Vitamin C
Dexatrim Extended Duration
Accutrim Maximum Strength

Preparing for class

Tiara Mahoney (left), Kerrie Rajski-Bal, Loraine Solis and Libbie Kurinec prepare informational speeches for Kurinec's sixth-grade enriched language arts class at Faith Middle School. The students learned how to present an informational speech on a topic of their choice and prepare a three-dimensional, eye-catching visual to enhance the delivery of the presentation. Once the speeches and visuals were completed, each student presented the speech and visual to the entire class.

Advent season is one of preparation

Chaplain (Capt.) Mickey D. Jett
29th Infantry Regiment

reflections

"An angel of the Lord appeared to them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them, and they were terrified. But the angel said to them, 'Do not be afraid. I bring you good news of great joy that will be for all the people. Today in the town of David a Savior has been born to you; he is Christ the Lord. This will be a sign to you: You will find a baby wrapped in cloths and lying in a manger.'" (Luke 2:9-12)

Advent has the meaning of "coming," i.e. of Christ, Messiah or the "Anointed One." The church believes this has occurred in Jesus Christ. We believe he comes to turn wrong into right, bring healing to the heart and body and eventually take us to his and our eternal dwelling place.

The Advent season is one of preparation. The church begins refocusing on Christ's first coming and also his second coming, which will one day occur. Much like an Army prepares for deployment, the church is prepared for departure. Advent is part of our training for this future event.

I would like to leave three thoughts with you concerning advent.

First, we have good news, then there is great joy and finally we have grace.

The good news the angel proclaimed was about a little baby born to be a savior. Savior means someone who rescues, delivers and gives victory. This is exactly what the church believes that Jesus Christ did on the cross at Calvary. Paul said, "I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received and wherein ye stand; By which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures." (1 Corinthians 15:1-4) These words are good news, because we are told we have a savior who saves our soul.

Secondly, the text above said we have great joy. We have joy because no matter what happens in this life, we have someone who can right every wrong, make every crooked path straight and give us hope for the future.

The Gospels record many notes of joy in connection with Christ. The book of Acts has many stories of joy being part of the Christian's life.

Notice Luke's words, "The jailer brought them into his house and set a meal before them; he was filled with joy because he had come to believe in God — he and his whole family." (Acts 16:34)

The Apostle Paul's Letters are filled with the mood of rejoicing.

Rejoicing centers itself in the churches teaching that Christ will come again. Paul also stressed the paradox that this joy can be experienced in the midst of temporal afflictions. So if you have hope for the future, you can have joy in the present. Paul's Letter to the Philippians, written under circumstances of severe apostolic suffering, is an example of this excitement.

Finally, in Advent, we have grace (unmerited favor). The religion of the Bible is "a religion of grace or it is nothing ... no grace, no gospel." (Moffatt) Grace is so important to the Christian faith that without it there is not a Christian faith. All we can bring to the table of our salvation is the response of faith.

And even still, that may also be a gift. We have a savior though we do not deserve one.

We are saved from the debt of sin though we cannot earn it. God paid our debt of sin through his son. All we must do to receive this gospel, this joy and this grace is hold out our spiritual hands and receive it. May God's good news, joy and grace be yours during this holy season.

Iftar dinner — Fort Benning Muslims will host their Iftar dinner at 5 p.m. Saturday. An Iftar meal is one which breaks the fast that is observed during Ramadan. The Iftar will be in the Sand Hill Recreation Center and Muslim Soldiers, civilians and their families are invited. For more information, call the Fort Benning Muslim lay leader, Sgt. Ahmad Abdur-Rashid, at 544-9601.

Carols by Candlelight — The Infantry Center Chapel will present the second annual Carols by Candlelight Program at 6 p.m. Sunday. This will be a service of Advent and Christmas music and Scripture.

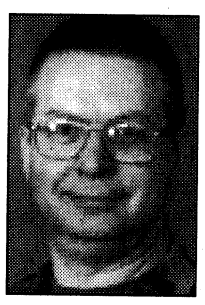
In addition to The Infantry Center Chapel Choir, the program will feature choirs from the Sightseeing Road Chapel Gospel Congregation, the Main Post Catholic Spanish Congregation, Club Beyond, Protestant Women of the Chapel and vocal and instrument soloists. The program will conclude with all attendees who previously have sung in choirs performing the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's Messiah, being invited to come to the front of the chapel to sing it with the choirs.

Everyone is invited to attend.

Advent Wreath — The Main Post Catholic Chapel will sponsor an Advent Wreath Fellowship Saturday at 6 p.m. in The Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

Marriage is more than two people

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Family Life Ministries Center



When a couple marries, they marry more than just each other. They also marry into each other's family, social network, faith and culture.

Without the blessing of their parents on their union, couples may anger and alienate their mother and father, as well as their in-laws, and may risk the support of their brothers and sisters.

Some people who marry want to maintain their single lifestyle. They want to party with their single friends as if they were not even married.

One of the early tasks of marriage is transforming from single friends to forming friendships with other married couples.

Different religious backgrounds may create disharmony in marriage.

One person may be agnostic or atheistic, and the other may be theistic. One spouse may be Jewish, Islamic or Buddhist and the other may be Roman Catholic, Eastern Orthodox or Protestant. One mate may be from a formal and liturgical background; whereas the other may be from and informal and free style of worship.

Sadly, some couples conclude that because their mate is from a different religious tradition than their own, each will worship separately at their own place of worship. In other families, one will go to worship and the other will stay home. Some stop going to worship altogether, saying that when the kids are old enough, the children can decide for themselves. By then, the teenagers have no religious affiliation, they have assumed the culture of the world, and they have no desire for spiritual things.

Worship is for the entire family.

The mate who takes the children to worship while the other stays at home really desires the family to worship together.

Without our spouse or family, worship can be very lonely.

In addition, an individual who marries a person from a different ethnic or cultural background may discover that the source for many of their arguments is based on cultural differences and on the dissimilar role expectations that they have for each other.

Are differences causing problems in your marriage? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Sappers battle for top turkey title

Football game improves morale, spirit

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

"On the fields of friendly strife are sown the seeds where on other fields on other days will bear the fruits of victory," said Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Maj. Jamie Gayton, 317th Engineer Battalion executive officer, used the famous quote to kick off the battalion's first Turkey Bowl Nov. 22 at Essebagger Field.

The flag football event pitted officers versus NCOs in the first game, which the NCOs won 21 to 6.

The winners received a turkey trophy later in the day from Lt. Col. Steve Hill, battalion commander.

Soldiers, E-5 (not in a squad leader position) and below, played for the junior-enlisted turkey trophy representing each of their companies.

In these games, A Company edged out B Co. 21 to 20, and C Co. outlasted Headquarters and Headquarters Co. 12 to 6, setting the stage for the finals between C Co. and A Co. C Co. beat A Co. 6 to 0 in the Soldiers' championship game to take home the turkey.

Sgt. 1st Class Warren Jackson, B Co., was named the most valuable player for his outstanding running back duties.

He ran for over one-hundred yards and for one touchdown.

"I thought from the beginning I would have a good game, but I didn't think I would get so many yards," Jackson said.

"The officers didn't have a chance."

"Today's athletic competition was to build solid teams and promote esprit de corps," Gayton said.

"Our battalion commander was the driving force for this event," he said.

"Despite our busy schedule, he realized the importance of the Turkey Bowl and made sure that it was a priority event."

The event was similar to a family orientation day, said Capt. Thomas D. Asbery, B Co. commander.

A disc jockey played music as the teams played, and B Co. had a food stand fundraiser.

Soldiers also played pick up games while waiting for their official games.

"It was a fun event for the Soldiers and their families," Asbery said.

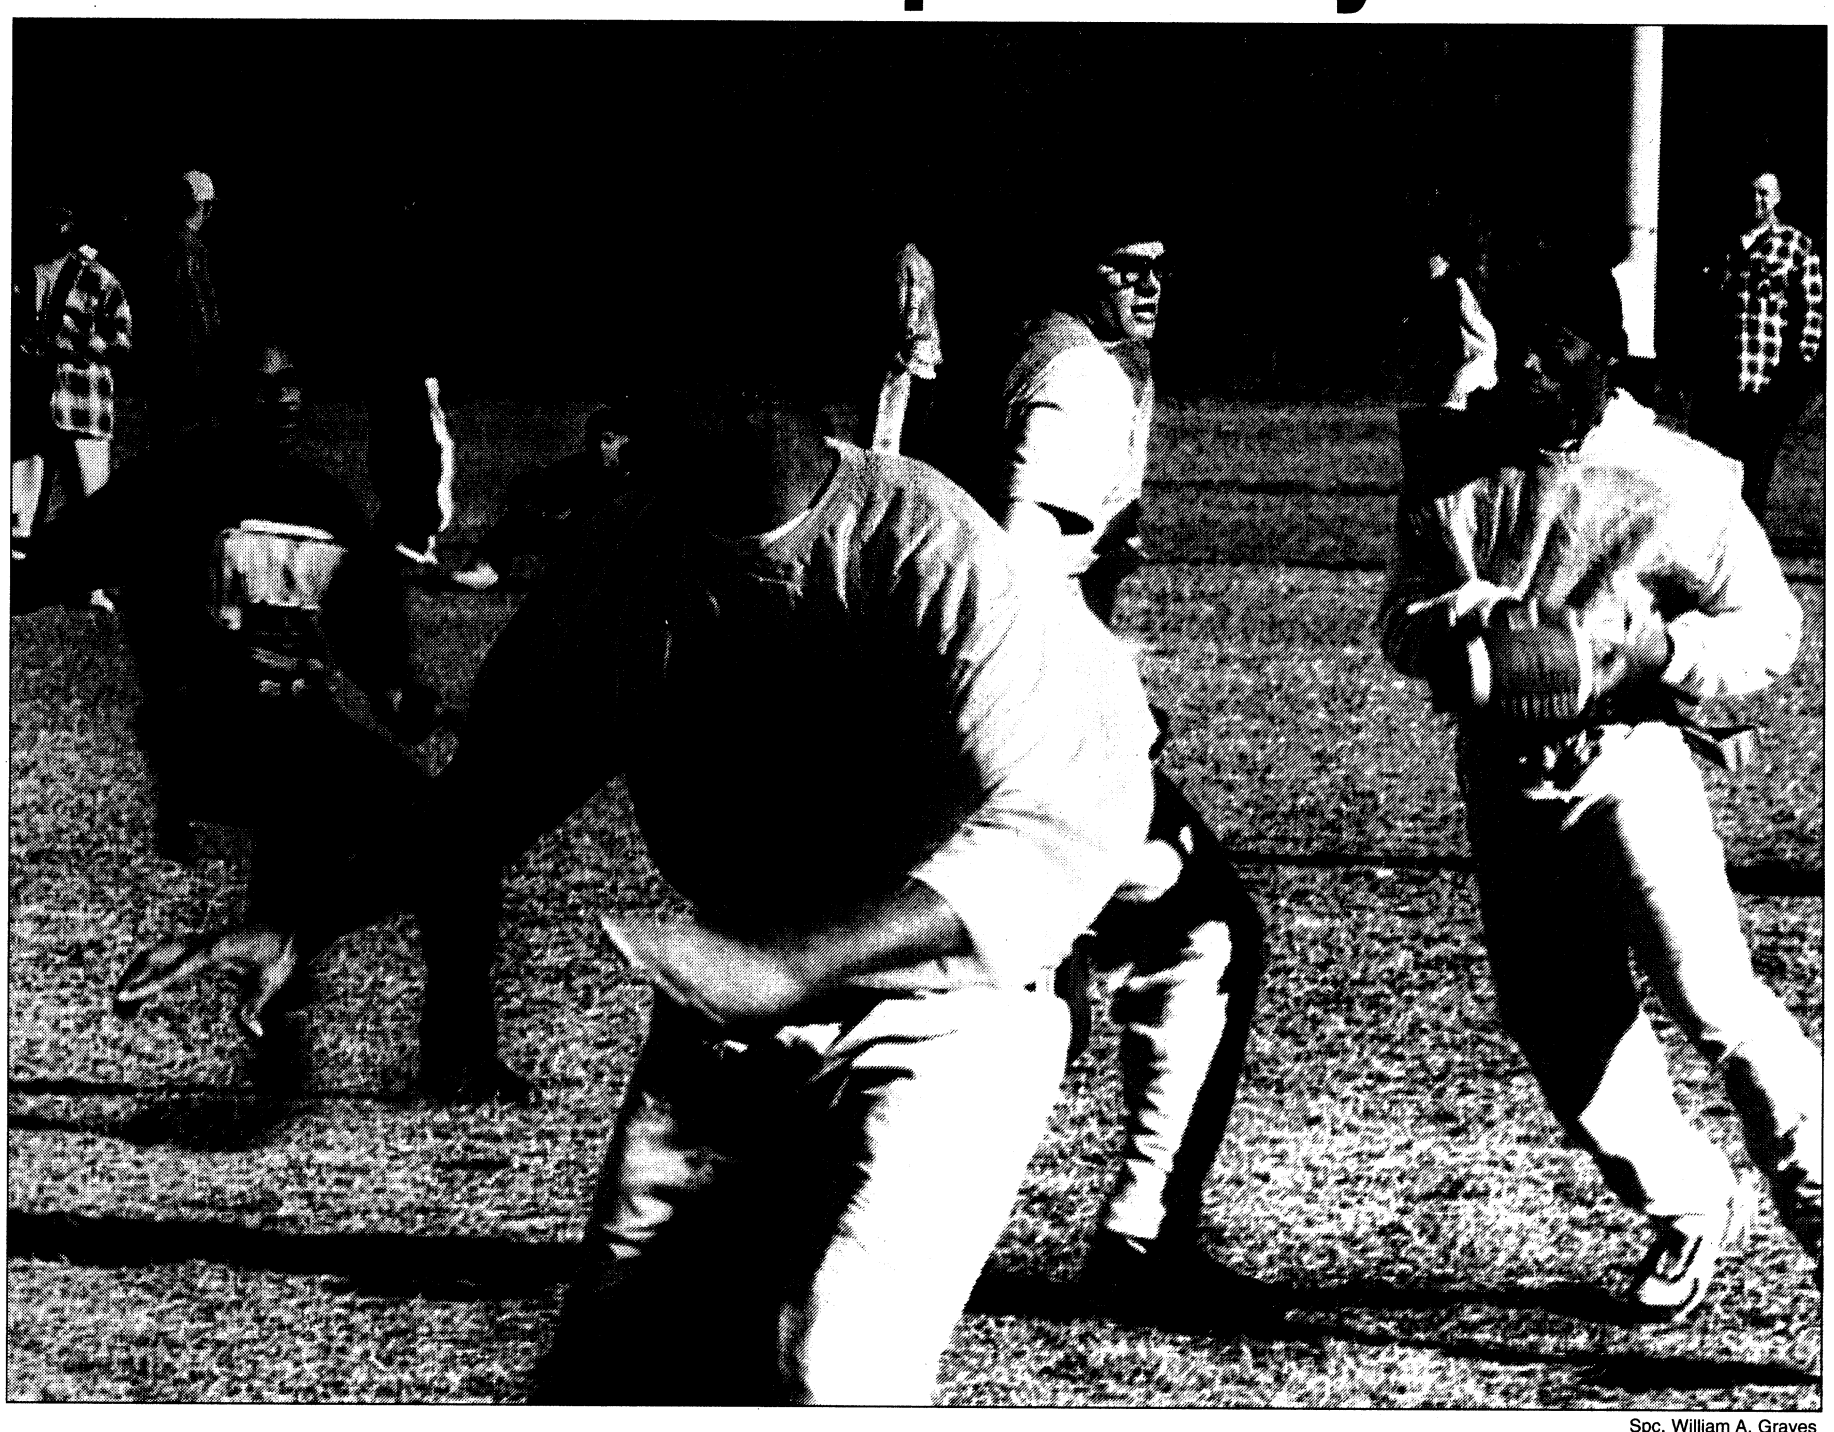
"Today was a reward for not just the winners, but for everyone.

We have worked hard, and this was a good way to relax and enjoy the start of the holidays."

He said he felt the battalion met its intent of building esprit de corps, teamwork and cohesion.

"It really lifted morale," said Cpl. Julius C. Howard, team leader, B Company.

"It was a much needed break from our ordinary schedule. Everyone was motivated and excited."



He said the event would help energize his Soldiers and encourage them to come back to work ready to accomplish their missions.

Howard said the unit emphasized to Soldiers the importance of having fun, but also reminded them that safety was paramount.

Consequently, there were no injuries.

"The teamwork built as a result of Turkey Bowl I helped build the foundation that will allow the battalion to win in combat," Gayton said.

"Witnessing the athletic competition in the 317th Engineer Battalion today would have made Gen. Douglas MacArthur proud," he said.

Spc. William A. Graves

James Hill, C Company, accepts the handoff from Ben Alter while David Buckhanner, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, blocks defenders and Warren Burrell, a C Company defensive man, moves in to pull a flag during the Turkey Bowl Nov. 22.

Rut's end forces hunters to differ their hunting strategies

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Bayonet correspondent

For many deer hunters after the rut is a dismal time, but it doesn't have to be. I used to feel the same way until five years ago.

My season hadn't been as successful as in years past and the tags were still not yet filled. I needed three more deer to complete my mission.

It was almost the end of November drifting toward December and really cold for Georgia. So I dug out the books and talked to some old timers, and made some significant discoveries. I started by rescouting my areas; the scrapes had long been forgotten and the deer just weren't exposing themselves. For three days I rescouted the area and found the deer were now in the thickest cover around. The bucks and does had already separated after a successful mating season, and were feeding in bottoms and on saplings in no set pattern. The bucks, it seemed, were back in their bachelor groups roaming the land.

Hughes

During my scouting escapades I heard some strange noises that sounded like a woodpecker tapping a tree. Come to find out after seeing one call, it was actually the whitetail buck. I call this particular vocalization the "long call." The long call is made by the buck at different times of the year and for different reasons. During prerut the yearlings call because they are lonesome and are looking for a buddy to hang out with. They sound like a lamb with a cadence of a woodpecker pecking and call for three to five seconds. The mature bucks use the long call during rut and prerut to let each other know where they are. Usually this call is made at first light and prior to sunset. To the untrained ear they sound similar to a woodpecker tapping on a hollow tree, but with a guttural tone. Their sound is also deeper than the yearling and five to seven seconds long. Later in the year the long call is used to herd the bucks and establish the pecking order for the summer bachelor groups.

By Dec. 5, I had a plan and a long weekend; it was also approximately 28 days past the rut and there was a possibility some does might still come in to heat. My gear included my hunter orange, 30-06, three calls (grunt, long call, doe bleat), rattling horns, backpack , rubber boots and scent free clothes. My plan was to cover a 2,000-acre area concentrating on the bottoms and thick areas. I would rattle and call as I stalked.

I was in position by first light, staying stationary and listening for the first hour. I heard several bucks call, which was exciting. The key, I found, was to rattle aggressively for two to five minutes using a combination of grunt and long calls. My rattling bouts were conducted every 200 meters, then I'd wait 15 minutes before moving. On my first bout I rattled up a six point and a spike. This at least got me motivated and let me know I was doing something right. I continued to do this until 10:30 a.m., when I took a break on a ridge with two thick bottoms on either side of me.

By now my knuckles were sore from rattling and I had gouged myself several times with the horns. I guess that's why the old timer told me to grind the points of the antlers. After my break, I took a knee preparing to continue.

I was almost ready to start moving when I heard a mature buck call not 200 yards away. I grabbed my call and answered his long call, "gllllll, gllllll."

He called back to me again, then I rattled loudly for 30 seconds, then stopped silently waiting. All of a sudden it sounded like a herd of elephants was coming through the woods. As they got closer I hunkered down behind a tree at the ready. Deer! A herd! The lead buck was huge, an enormous 14 point; he went from running full bore to a dead stop 30 meters from me. I immediately raised my rifle and looked through the scope. I saw his head, then moved to his shoulder, there was a tree three feet in diameter covering his vitals.

"No!" I moved the cross hairs to his rump. No shot! In a flash, he looked at me, snorted and was gone. I pulled my eye from the scope to see the most awesome sight I have ever seen. I was surrounded by at least 20 bucks, most of which were sporting 8 point racks.

I quickly drew a bead and dropped the biggest 8 point close to me; he dropped 10 meters away.

Even after I shot, the bucks continued to cluster around me as if unaware of their fallen comrade. Some were even close enough to touch! I sat there in amazement as they drifted past. They didn't even run, just walked away as if they knew I wouldn't shoot again. This particular group of deer thought I was a stray and were trying to get me back in the herd.

Since that day I have taken several bucks in a similar manner. Most of the time rattling or calling will roust one or two bucks. The old timers were right. It really does work. Be patient. Be careful and wear hunter orange. Try to act and think like the animal.

So don't give up because you don't see deer. Find the places deer bed, hide and eat.

Callaway Gardens offers Fantasy in Lights

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

outdoor corner

Callaway Garden's Fantasy in Lights is — in a word — delightful. Pardon the pun.

Named one of the south's top 20 events by the Southeastern Tourism Society, Fantasy in Lights is more than eight million lights and five acres of wooded wonderland — truly a venture into Christmas fantasy. For young and old, it's a great way to kick off the holiday season or take a temporary break from the mall madness.

Last Saturday, we took the kids for our first visit to Callaway Gardens. We arrived early, shortly before 5 p.m., so we could explore Callaway's Christmas Village before embarking on our fantastic journey.

The Christmas Village is a bit like an indoor festival, with live entertainment, hand-made treasures, souvenirs, gingerbread cookies, costumed characters and a kids' craft center. There's also a diner at the Village, the Fantasy Cafe, for those who prefer a sit-down meal. Call for restaurant reservations at 663-2281, extension 5274.

And yes, Virginia, there's even a Santa Claus — the Santa Claus, I might add. I really don't know how he finds time in his busy schedule to put in an appearance, but let me assure you, he didn't send one of his stand-ins this time. This is the real McCoy, so be sure to bring along a camera.

Afterward, we wandered outside for Callaway's orchestrated light shows — The Nativity and The Night Before Christmas.

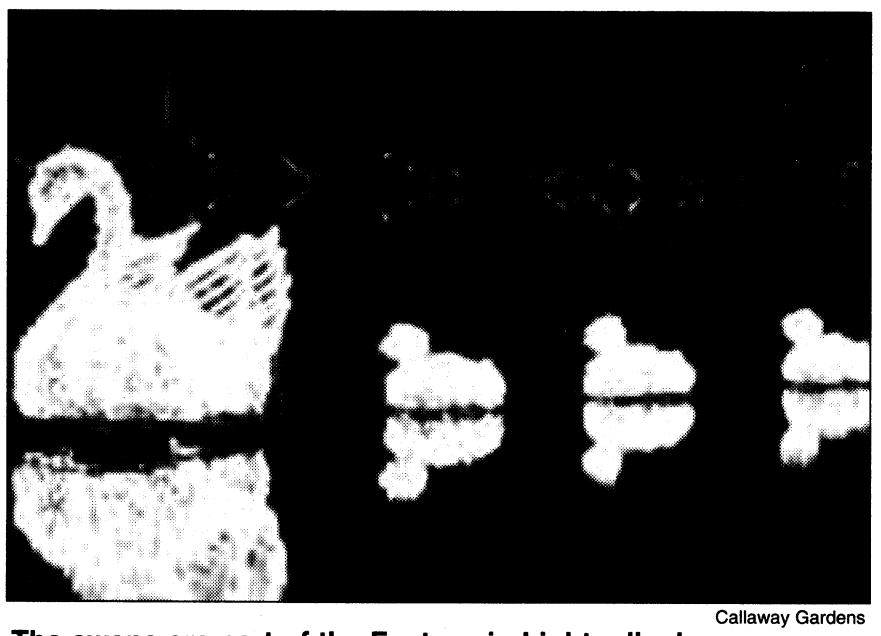
Both narrated light and sound shows take place on the beach. They begin at 6 p.m. and alternate throughout the evening.

Then we joined the queue for a ride on the Jolly Trolley, an hour-long excursion into an awesome land of lights.

We visited places like Toyland, The Twelve Days of Christmas, Nature's Wonderland and Callaway's newest scene, The Enchanted Rainbow Forest, where pixies sprinkle their magic dust and transform a winter landscape into a springtime flower garden.

Over the river and through the woods, we wound our way through 18 animated light displays, all built and arranged to enhance, not interfere with their natural settings.

We oohed and awed over the most elaborate, musical light show I have ever seen. It rivals anything Disney's ever produced.



And in between scenes we joined our fellow travelers in rousing rounds of Christmas carols.

For just an hour, all the world was a stage, and we were smack-dab in the middle of it. It was fun, really take-you-back-to-your-childhood fun.

Though the weather was mild, riding in the open air trolley was a bit chilly. They provided lap blankets, but I recommend you layer your clothes and include gloves, hat and coat. It wouldn't be a winter wonderland if it weren't a bit nippy.

For those who just don't want to brave the elements, you have the option of driving through in your own vehicle.

Callaway Gardens is located in Pine Mountain, 30 minutes north of Columbus, on U.S. Highway 27.

Companies offer product for post fitness centers

Department of Defense Armed Forces Sports Program

Soldiers may find something new and different in the Audie Murphy Fitness Center and Briant Wells Fitness Center during November and December — the addition of Nautica Latitude Longitude Daily Moisture Face Protector and After-Shave Comfort Gel product in the men's locker room. The promotion of Nautica Latitude Longitude is part of Unilever Cosmetics International, the parent company of Calvin Klein Cosmetics and Unilever Prestige, sponsorship of the 2001 Armed Forces Sports program. Through this agreement, UCI will help financially support Fort Benning post-level sports programs and armed forces athletes in their quest for gold in armed forces, national, and international championships.

"We are excited to be able to roll a promotion of this magnitude out throughout the Department of Defense," said Rob Hansgen, Armed Forces Sports Development and Marketing. "Our two main goals of this sponsorship agreement are to help local MWR sports programs purchase equipment, uniforms, etc, and also provide companies who do business in the military exchanges reach out in new marketing avenues to the military market."

Each year the Armed Forces Sports Office coordinates 12 armed forces championships in boxing, cross country, basketball, volleyball, triathlon, golf, softball, soccer, rugby, wrestling, bowling, and the marathon. The best athletes from these championships are chosen to represent the DoD and United States in national and international competitions.

"UCI is enthusiastic about its first sponsorship with the Armed Forces Sports," said Ann Swain, vice president of Regional Marketing at UCI, "The athletes and audience at the sports events are representative of our target market, and the sponsorship offers us new interactive marketing opportunities. We look forward to many more occasions to offer support to the military, for both the athletes and our loyal exchange customers who support the athletes."

For more information about Armed Forces Sports or this program log onto www.armedforcessports.com or call the Armed Forces Sports Office at (703) 681-7287. Sponsorship does not express or imply DoD endorsement.

Officials to sign land deal

Historic pact comes after 11 years of talks

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

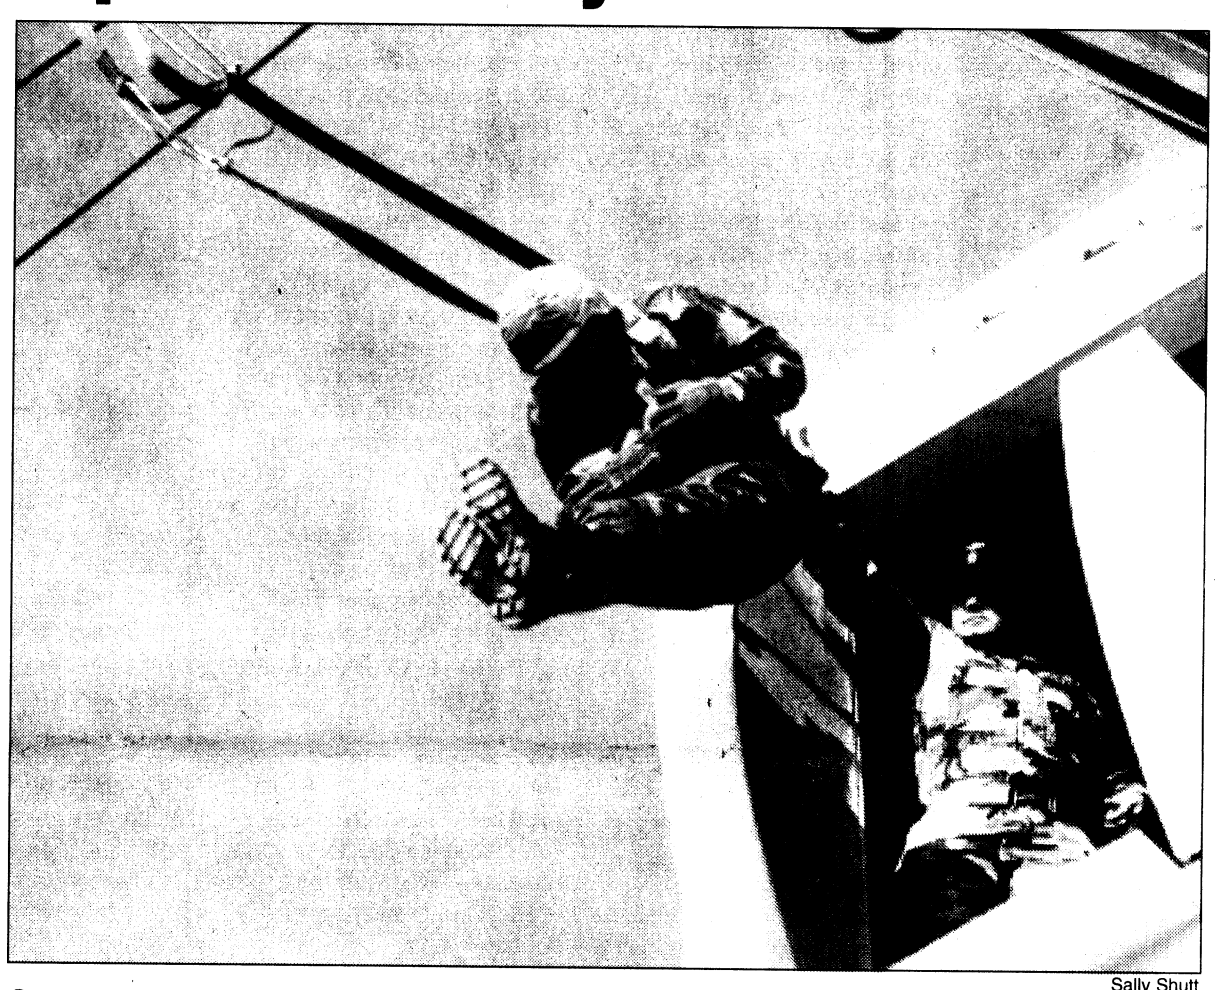
Fort Benning, the city of Columbus, the State Advisory Council for Historic Preservation and several American Indian tribes will sign a land exchange agreement Wednesday during an 11 a.m. ceremony on the steps of the National Infantry Museum.

The signing comes after 11 years of discussions between the city and the installation regarding the municipality swapping 2,156 acres in Chattahoochee County, the South Tract, for 2,113 acres of federal property off Schatulga Road, known as the North Tract, which Columbus plans to use for industrial development.

The agreement's two principal signators will be Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, representing the Army, and Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters. Representatives from the state and tribal leaders will sign as consulting parties.

The cultural resources agreement includes provisions on how American Indian cultural resources will be handled once the land exchange is finalized. Those preservation covenants will become part of the North Tract deed and will obligate the city to protect more than nine American Indian sites located on the land.

"This is a historic document, as it represents the first time the protections of the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act have been attached to land that is passing from federal to private control," said Col. John Mitchell, former Fort Benning garrison commander.



The agreement spells out how American Indian remains discovered on the land are to be handled. More than an acre on post has been set aside as a reinterment site for any discovered remains.

In 1989 when the city approached the post with a land exchange proposal, neither party had any idea negotiations would take so long.

"Neither of us had an appreciation for the significant hurdles that would present themselves along the way,"

Airborne School teaches safer exit maneuver

In an effort to reduce injuries, the Army is again changing the way paratroopers jump from airplanes.

Starting Jan. 1, Airborne Soldiers will no longer approach the door of the aircraft at an angle and step off the platform into the sky.

Under the new method, Soldiers will square up in the exit door and "vigorously jump up and out, away from the aircraft as much as possible," said Sgt. 1st Class John Styron, a master trainer at Airborne School.

"We believe this new modification to the exit is going to contribute greatly to fewer injuries," said Styron, who works at the school's Ground Branch, where students are taught the correct method using mock doors and 34-foot towers.

The change from the step-out method is based on recommendations from the Airborne School

Soldier killed in accident

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Sgt. Ectorr Garza Jr., 30, was pronounced dead at the Columbus Medical Center after a training accident Monday afternoon.

Garza, who was assigned to B Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, was a tank turret repairman. He was performing scheduled maintenance on a Paladin howitzer when the accident occurred in the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, motor pool.

Garza was immediately flown by air ambulance to the hospital. No other Soldiers were injured.

"He was a self-driven Soldier who was doing his job," said 1st Sgt. Jake Branch, B Company first sergeant. "He was a Soldier you looked forward to seeing everyday." Garza had been with the unit since May 1999.

Sgt. 1st Class Dudley Hardin worked with Garza for more than a year, four months as his section sergeant and then as his platoon sergeant.

"He was fun to be around, very upbeat," Hardin said. "On morning runs he kept other Soldiers from falling out by using comedy, telling them to shift down to the other gear to get back to the unit."

A memorial is planned for 11 a.m. Monday at the Sledgehammer Chapel on Kelley Hill.

Garza is survived by his wife, Cheryl; mother, Mary E. Sosa; and father, Ectorr Garza Sr.

The accident is under investigation.

Pvt. Dwayne Hodges wants to make sure he spends Christmas at home with his family in Greenville, Tenn., because next year he expects to be in Korea for the holidays.

Hodges stood in line Sunday morning at the Carlson-Wagonlit travel office on Sand Hill and purchased a round-trip ticket for $175. He will be among more than 5,000 Initial Entry Training Soldiers who will leave Fort Benning Dec. 18 for their homes during the post's annual Holiday Exodus.

Soldiers taking Exodus leave are set to return Jan. 3, except those traveling to Puerto Rico. They will return Jan. 7 after Three Kings Day.

Pvt. Katal Yancey reads his Exodus travel itinerary.

"I'm looking forward to going home and seeing my family and girlfriend," said Hodges, who is assigned to B Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

In addition to his airline ticket, Hodges also purchased a $35 bus ticket for a chartered ride to and from Atlanta's Hartsfield

The parking lot in front of the Fort Benning Main Mall Post Exchange was almost empty Sunday evening. But inside close to 2,500 shoppers were elbow to elbow looking for Christmas presents and fast food.

The exchange hosted a Trainee Night for 12 companies of Initial Entry Training Soldiers from Sand Hill. The store closed to the public an hour early and welcomed the troops and their drill sergeants with free sodas, snack food samples and giveaways, such as disposable razors.

Another Trainee Night is set for Sunday evening from 7-11 p.m. for the remaining companies at Sand Hill.

No excuse for driving drunk

Master Sgt. Sally Roberts
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

When I was younger, I had a friend who went to prison because he caused a car accident and people were killed. He was legally drunk and 19 years old.

Another friend lost his leg below the knee as a result of a single car accident. He was drunk and 20 years old.

He laid unconscious in a ditch with the circulation cut off to his broken leg until his overturned car was spotted at daybreak.

Both of these friends have long since gotten on with their lives. They work, have families and wish every day that they could un-do these events in their lives.

But others aren't always so lucky — if you want to call surviving and going to prison lucky.

Since I began working in Army Public Affairs I've heard of countless incidents where alcohol was a factor in some very stupid and unfortunate things. Although it's always easy to judge the other guy, I'm reasonable enough to stop and be thankful that it wasn't me.

Since states began imposing harsher penalties for driving while intoxicated and promoting greater safety awareness concerning alcohol use, fewer people are becoming victims of senseless alcohol-related acts.

National Highway Traffic Safety Administration statistics show that alcohol-related fatalities dropped by 30 percent since 1989. However, alcohol was still a factor in 38 percent of fatal crashes in 1999.

It's safe to assume that many, if not most, of the 12,321 people killed in fatal crashes in 1999 were not alcoholics and were not habitual drunken driving criminals. In fact, that statistic includes the nonintoxicated drivers and passengers who were simply in the wrong place at the wrong time.

My guess is that many of these were just normal folks who drank at a party, a wedding, a football game, or a concert ... and never gave a thought to becoming a statistic.

Sound familiar?

Drinking and driving gets a lot of attention as our year-end holidays approach. In the spirit of the season, many communities and organizations offer safe alternatives to driving yourself home after drinking.

Some businesses cover the expenses to offer safe rides to their employees.

Civic groups provide volunteers for local programs. Most cities have some type of safe public transportation available. Many people include a designated driver into their party plans.

Wherever you travel this year, take the time to find out what your alternatives are and use them. Paying a taxi fare or an overnight parking fee is well worth the price.

In Columbus, the SafetyCab program offers a free ride home within the Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning areas. Last year SafetyCab provided 173 incident-free rides during the holiday period. 98 others who chose to take the chance were arrested.

Call 660-6069 to take advantage of a free ride home. Safety Cab operates from Dec. 10 through Jan. 1 9 p.m. to 2 a.m.

Designated drivers are heroes

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

We've all heard the statistics. Here's another one for you. About every 30 minutes in the U.S., someone dies because of a drunken driver.

We're constantly reminded by tragic tales of accidents and death that drunken driving can and often does kill.

For some reason, this information is not sinking in, since there are still people out there who think they're OK to drive after they've had a few drinks.

Maybe if the U.S. had the drunken driving penalties used in other countries, some drivers would think twice before getting behind the wheel. The following punishments were originally listed in an Ann Landers column a few years back.

Australia — The names of drivers are sent to the local newspaper and are printed under the heading: "He is drunk and in jail."

Malaysia — The driver is jailed and if the driver is married, the spouse is also jailed.

United Kingdom, Finland and Sweden — Automatic jail term of one year.

South Africa — Driver gets a 10 year prison sentence and the equivalent of a $10,000 fine, or both.

Turkey — Drunk drivers are taken 20 miles from town by the police and forced to walk back under escort.

Bulgaria — A second conviction leads to execution.

El Salvador — Your first offense is your last. Driver will be executed by a firing squad.

Some foreign countries even have lower blood alcohol limits than the U.S. The legal limit in France is .05 milligrams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood. Sweden's limit is .02. The U.S. is currently either .08 or .10, depending on which state you live in.

Studies show that it is still unsafe to drive under this country's legal limits. Many people mistakenly believe only a person who appears to be drunk is unsafe to drive. The fact is thousands of Americans are killed or critically injured in crashes involving drivers with blood alcohol levels below .10.

Regardless of where you live on this planet, there is an easy way to avoid drunken driving altogether. Get a designated driver. Appoint this person before you even step foot out the door, whether you're on your way to neighborhood bars or a party at someone's house. Treat this person like gold because he or she is volunteering to take responsibility for your life and for the lives of other innocent drivers on the road.

Besides being a hero, volunteering to be a designated driver has other advantages. Many establishments that serve alcohol are now rewarding sober drivers with free nonalcoholic beverages. Another plus is that they won't have the hangovers most everybody else has the next day.

There are even options for people who go out on the town by themselves. There is always the local cab company and if you live in the Fort Benning area during the holidays, there's the free services of SafetyCab.

So the next time you volunteer to cart your friends around for the evening, give yourself a pat on the back; you deserve it.

And if you're in the passenger seat, remember to thank the sober driver behind the wheel. That person didn't just give you a ride, he or she may have saved your life.

Have a safe and happy holiday.

Writer dislikes coverage

I am writing this to comment on The Bayonet's unfair coverage of the Fort Benning Bodybuilding competition. It seems extremely unfair to me that so much coverage was given to people who placed third in their classes while another competitor who took first in two different classes did not receive one mention and Mr. Fort Benning received a mere two sentence mention.

First, it is extremely unfair to begin the article with three paragraphs about the third place winner of any category. But the paper seems to be starstruck and instead of rightly focusing on the winners, they gave all the attention to someone simply because of his bigger name and past accomplishments. The time for him to be praised for winning the contest was then. Now is the time to give mention to the winners of this contest here and now.

Second, there was a paragraph about the first place winner in the lightweight class and two paragraphs about the first place heavyweight winner.

There were even three paragraphs about the third place winner in the heavyweight class and a paragraph about the third place winner in the middleweight class. Yet nowhere in this article was there a single mention of my name. I won not only first place in the middleweight class but also first place in masters.

Are we to believe that a person who wins first place in two separate classes deserves less mention than people who take second and third?

Like Sgt. Michael Green, I was a competitor last year and showed improvement, winning not only middleweight for the second time, but also winning Masters. I cannot understand the logic behind this sort of reporting. It seems that the winners should be given the attention which they have earned instead of focusing on a few favorites or a few people who may have a bigger name and more titles under their belts.

— N.S. Pierce and Sgt. 1st Class Nestor Gomez

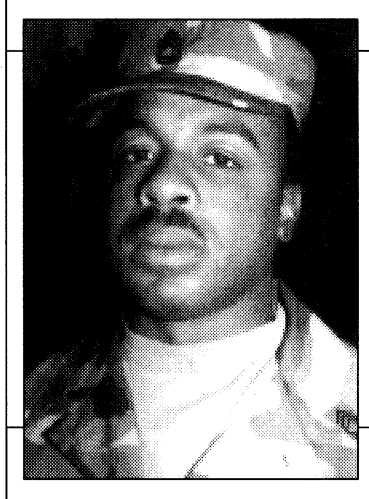
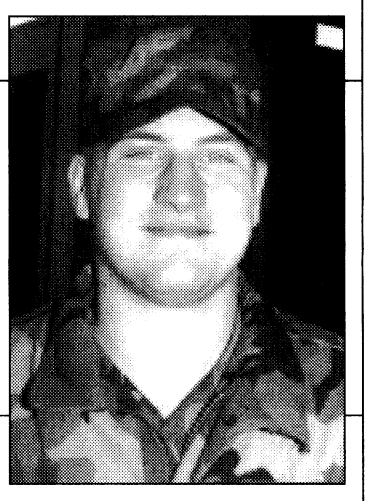
VARIOUS VOICES

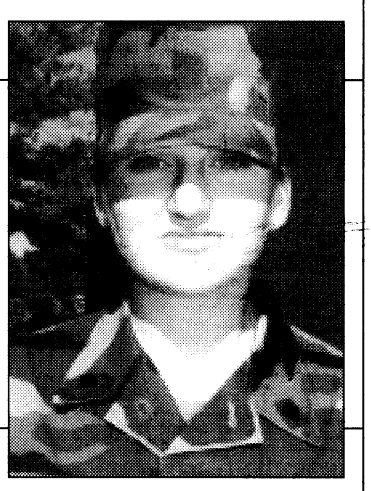


What do you think the DUI penalties should be?



Senior Master Sgt. Les Wlodarczyk, 514th Airlift Wing, McGuire Air Force Base, N.J. — "There should be accountability and it should be more than a slap on the wrist. The first time — monetary; the second should be more severe including loss of driving privileges."

Risepa McMoore, Department of Defense Education Activity — "I definitely think they should suspend their license for a year on the first offense. There are too many people killed the way the system works now. Drivers need to be responsible."



Sgt. 1st Class Garry Fuller, D Troop, 10th Cavalry — "I think a person who is convicted of DUI should have to stand outside of a club or other public place and talk about the consequences of a DUI, like at Fort Stewart, Ga. Also the person should have to write an essay for publication in The Bayonet."

Pvt. Michael Krolick, A Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "The first offense should result in a fine and schooling. The second time, a hefty fine and loss of driving privileges. The third time — 60 days in jail, 400 hours community service and one year probation."

Carolyn Miller, family member — "For the first offense there should be a warning. If it becomes repetitive then the person should be required to attend classes."

Spc. Sabrina Peves, B Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion — "I think the penaties should depend on the person's character, personality and background — this should be taken into consideration before penalties are given."

Post's top NCO to retire after 30 years

'The Plunger' pops smoke after four years

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

"The Plunger," Fort Benning Command Sgt. Maj. Mack H. Vereen, will soon pop smoke after being the Infantry Center's top enlisted man for four years.

Vereen officially relinquishes his duties Thursday to Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald E. Klein, who comes from Fort Riley's 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized). Vereen is retiring to the Columbus area. He plans to teach at Columbus Technical College and Vincennes University at night and to pursue his doctorate degree in higher education.

"Mack Vereen is the backbone of the Infantry force," said Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, commanding general. "He represents the very best of the Army."

Le Moyne said Vereen was always fiercely protective of Soldiers. He was tough on NCO standards, and he expected nothing less from the officers working with him.

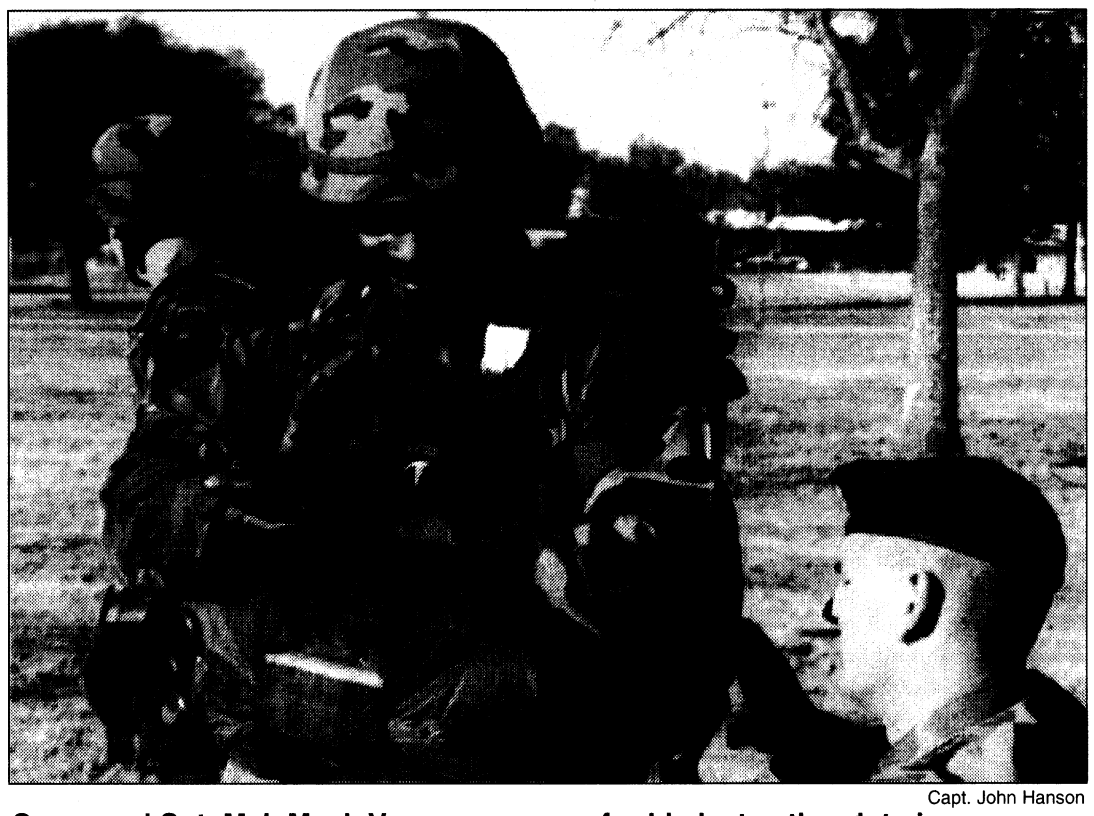
Vereen is one of two people who has walked into Le Moyne's office — cup of coffee in hand — and told him he was wrong about a plan and needed to change it. "The Plunger" was right.

"It showed competence as well as confidence in his professional standards," Le Moyne said.

He said Vereen earned everyone's respect.

"I will miss his candor and fresh point of view," Le Moyne said. "He's a good man."

Le Moyne said he enjoyed working with Vereen and believes he will do well in the civilian sector.



"The transition out of the Army puts one into the midst of pain and pleasure," Vereen said. "My Army career has produced many pleasing experiences. Going into the civilian sector will produce many unknowns, but I look forward to it."

Vereen said he is known as "The Plunger" because he removes barriers, distortions and distractions that stifle human development and productivity.

"The Plunger" said he thoroughly enjoyed his time at Fort Benning and the Infantry Center.

"We have the best NCOs and Soldiers in the U.S. Army," he said. "We systematically ensure only the finest come here, and it has been a pleasure working with them."

Besides his position here, he said he considers duties in Somalia, as the command sergeant major for U.S. Army, Joint Task Force, and Alaska, as the command sergeant major of U.S. Army, Alaska, as some of his most memorable career moments.

Capt. John Hanson

Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen prepares for his last active-duty jump.

His initiative has left a mark on the Army.

"I'm leaving a Christmas present for the Infantry," Vereen said. "Seventy-five master sergeants were selected to war-fighting sergeant major operations and training positions."

Another legacy of Vereen's is the advent of the rifle Infantryman.

"We have transformed the Army and technological battlefield through systematically fusing Infantryman, 11B, and mechanized Infantryman, 11M, into the rifle Infantryman — the most multifunctional Soldier on the face of the Earth," Vereen said.

He said the grouping of the military occupation specialties will not only render a more cohesive and advanced unit on the battlefield, but it will also make the rifle Infantryman more equal in terms of advancements, assignment locations and morale throughout the Infantry community.

"The merger will continue to sustain the existing Infantry force and propel the emerging objective and responsive forces as well," he said.

"The Plunger" offered Soldiers some parting wisdom.

"Get involved with online education," he suggested. "The living room has become an extension of the education institution, and Soldiers should take advantage of every opportunity to expand their knowledge and grow intellectually."

He also encouraged Soldiers to do everything they can to excel at physical fitness and maintain healthy lifestyles as well.

"That will help their mental toughness," Vereen said. "Leaders should always study and maintain those attributes we expect from them."

Leaders should also take it up a notch.

"Periodically, they should disconnect and look and see what can be changed in order to add validity to their existence."

He has had mutually beneficial relationship with the Army.

"The Army has introduced and produced fundamental principles of patriotism, servitude and altruism, which ultimately precipitated what I am today — an Infantryman, a clergyman and a Grand Inspector General, 33rd degree (in Masonary). My affiliation with these elements and the spirit to serve have merged into an ever-present need for a never-ending pursuit to acquire and apply myself in the service of humanity," Vereen said.

He said the Army has also strengthened him to scale the known and prepare for the unknown.

Jump: Increases safety, reduces static line ruptures and the 82nd Airborne Division's Advanced Airborne School. The Airborne School is already teaching the procedure, which will be used on all airplanes; and three classes have graduated since the exit instruction changed.

"We are being careful not to convey to them that this is a 'new' exit," said Command Sgt. Maj. Efrain Hernandez, command sergeant major of 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry. "We just say it is the proper exit."

Under the previous method, which had been in practice since 1994, students were taught to approach the door at a 45-degree angle and to step out the door "with a purpose," Hernandez said.

But problems were found with the six-year-old method after cases of static line ruptures were reported Armywide, including three that resulted in fatalities last year, Hernandez said.

The Army called for an Integrated Concept Team on Static Lines to study the problem earlier this year. The team included representatives from the Airborne School, the 82nd Airborne Division's Airborne Test Board and experts from all services. Their study showed that static lines wore as the nylon cording rubbed against or hit the "aft down lock," a jagged metal-on-metal point at the bottom of the doorway.

Lt. Col. Jeffrey Terhune, commander of 1st Bn. (Abn.), 507th Inf., has examples in his office of static lines — yellow 15-foot cords that deploy parachutes — which show wear and tear from running along the exit doorways.

"If someone makes a weak exit, it's possible this static line will ride all the way down to the lock at the bottom of the door, and the friction at that point will cause it to rupture or break," Terhune said.

"The board members, who viewed video tapes and collected a lot of data, came to the conclusion that the jump itself — jumping up and out vigorously — would contribute to the static line riding higher on the trail of the door. And it wouldn't get all the way to the bottom of the door and the down lock," Styron said.

The new method reduces the risk of a weak exit, which puts the Soldier dangerously close to the aircraft.

"In a typical Airborne operation, the jumper has a lot of weight he is carrying. Simply walking out often meant spilling out, and the weak exit was right there. Now if you are trying to vigorously jump up and out, it is more likely you will have a good exit," Hernandez said.

Terhune and the others at the Airborne School understand that Soldiers carrying 150 pounds of equipment will have a hard time getting up and away from the aircraft.

"But, if we train them the way we want them to do it, then when they have those further restrictions on them, they are still going to try. It's still going to be better than potentially just stepping off the side of the platform," Terhune said.

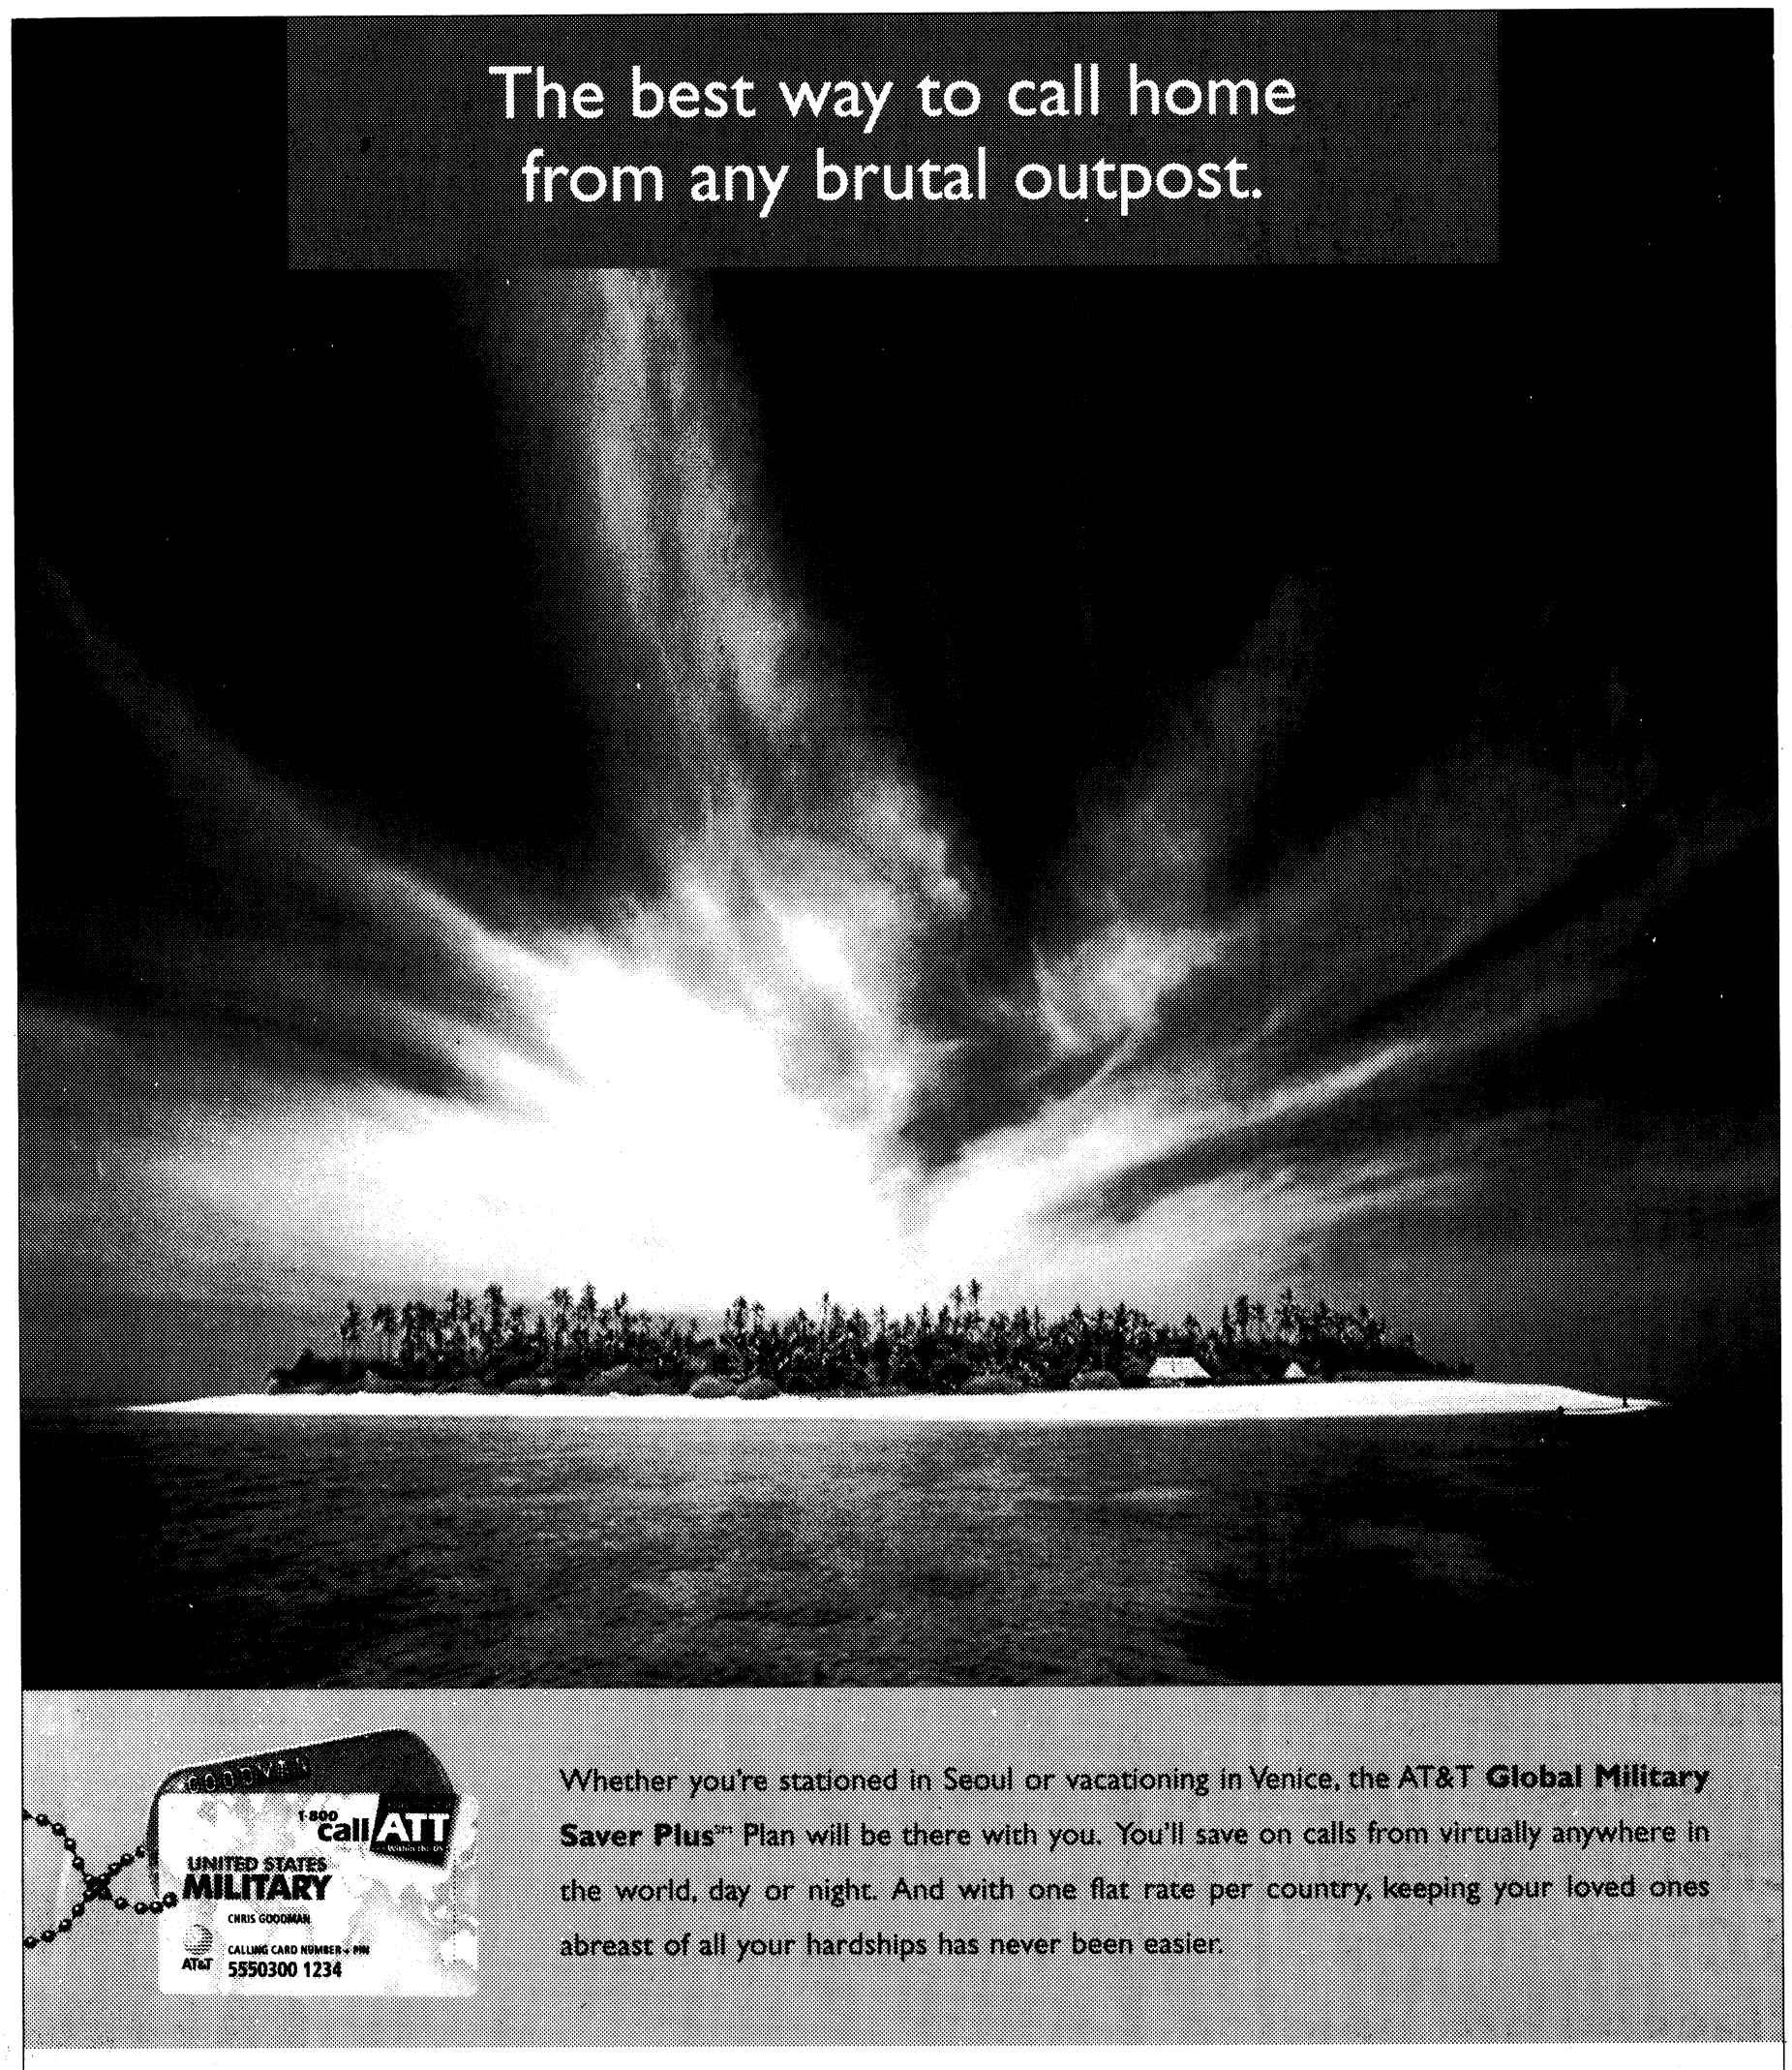
> 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry

Instructors at the Airborne School have videotaped students using the method and compared it to footage of jumpers using the step-out procedure.

"We are seeing a significant difference. When students were walking out you could see they were coming very close to the platform and the edge of the aircraft," Styron said. "Now they are definitely clearing the aircraft."

The new procedure is a modification of one used prior to 1994 for C-130s, but Terhune said there is one major difference.



"At that time you stood square in the door, but you had your hands outside the door to help you stabilize yourself and to help you get that last bit of motion," Terhune said.

That method was abandoned for the step-out version because of injuries to jumpers whose hands and arms became tangled in the static lines of the paratroopers in front of them.

Under the latest up-and-out method, hands are placed on the reserve chute.

All Airborne units, including the Ranger Training Brigade and 75th Ranger Regiment, received official messages on the new procedure months ago. During the half-day holiday schedule, Rangers with the 2nd and 3rd Bns., 75th Ranger Regt., will undergo Jumpmaster and Airborne refreshers covering the new procedure, said Capt. Jody Miller, the regiment's air operations officer. Rangers in the 1st Bn., stationed at Fort Stewart, Ga., completed refresher training in November and used the new procedure in a jump before Thanksgiving.

The first Ranger School class in 2001 will receive instruction in the new method during the first week of training, said Maj. Douglas Flohr, RTB operations officer. Students complete up to four jumps during Ranger School.

Man in the steel

Staff Sgt. Joey Medeiros, a Black Hat Airborne instructor, rescues a student who was caught in the steel tower Wednesday morning on Eubanks Field. The student, assigned to C Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, was not injured and went off the tower successfully on his second attempt. Staff Sgt. Calvin Araneta assists the rescue from the tower.

Exchange: Attracts industry

Mitchell said, referring to environmental issues — for example, the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker — as well as those related to cultural resources which had to be resolved.

During the past 18 months, the post has conducted numerous consultations, including three face-to-face meetings, with tribal leaders from 11 federally recognized tribes who have historic ties to the area.

All federal agencies are required by law to consult with American Indian tribes on a government-to-government basis when issues affecting the tribes' cultural heritage are involved.

"This agreement is clearly a significant milestone standing between us and a deed exchange," Mitchell said.

Barring any unforeseen issues, Mitchell said, the deed exchange could be completed within three months after the cultural resources agreement is finalized.

Mike Gaymon, president of the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, also noted that the exchange has been a long time coming, but "it is worth the journey," he said.

"The land (the city acquires) will provide about 1,500 acres for a business park development, helping to create new jobs and new capital investment for the region," Gaymon said.

Mayor Peters sees the exchange as a "economic blessing to the city of Columbus," he said.

"We are almost out of larger industrial tracts, and now we can market Columbus to different industries," Peters said.

The new development is just another boost to South Columbus, the mayor said.

A new marina is planned in the area, as well as a new multi-million dollar home for the National Infantry Museum.

More than 100 people have been invited to witness the signing. The Infantry Center Band will provide music, and the museum will be closed until after the ceremony.

Traffic will be redirected on Baltzell Avenue, and drivers are encouraged to avoid the area from about 10 a.m. until 12:30 p.m.

In the case of inclement weather, the ceremony will be moved to the Regimental Room of the Officers' Club.

Pvt. Kristopher Mevoli, A Co., 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., BCTB, talks with Mindy Butler, who volunteered to wrap presents at the Main Exchange during Trainee Night. Butler wore a gift box to let the Soldiers know gift wrapping was available.

Trainees: Shop late into night

This is the first year the exchange has offered nights for the trainees to shop, and the evenings are designed to let them purchase gifts and get them wrapped and processed for shipping the next day.

Family readiness group members from A Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, wrapped gifts for the Soldiers at no cost; however, donations were accepted.

Employees of All Services in Columbus weighed and ticketed the packages for shipment.

Pvt. Kristopher Mevoli, A Co., 3rd Bn., 47th Infantry Regt., Basic Combat Training Brigade, watched as a gift he purchased for a friend was wrapped in colorful paper.

"I've ordered some airbrushed shirts to be mailed home, bought a gift and had it wrapped. I plan to eat at Burger King and have this gift shipped to my friend," Mevoli said.

"I think this is nice. It's hard to be away from home and our families, and this lets us have a night to ourselves to do some Christmas shopping. But, I know tomorrow morning it will be back to work."

Pvt. Bryan Villard, E Co., 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., Infantry Training Brigade, wasn't thinking about Monday morning as he ate three slices of pepperoni pizza.

"I went straight for the pizza, and then I'm going to use the phone," Villard said.

The troops received briefings from their drill sergeants before arriving at the exchange.

"Some of them haven't purchased their tickets to go home for Christmas yet, so we talked to them about overspending," said Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Chase, B Co., 3rd Bn., 47th Inf., BCTB.

Other topics included warnings against shoplifting and trying to smuggle contraband — candy, soft drinks, tobacco products and reading materials — into the barracks.

While shoe polish was the evening's biggest seller, other hot items included portable CD players and luggage. Garment and carry-on bags sold quickly as the Soldiers prepare for Exodus.

This year they will be allowed to take only garment or carry-on bags, a change designed to help them move quickly through the Atlanta Hartsfield International airport. Last year some Soldiers missed their flights while waiting to check their bags, said Capt. William White, the assistant operations officer at BCTB.

The exchange was prepared for the shoppers and had ordered 3,000 pieces of luggage to meet the demand, said Barbara Beaudin, Sales and Merchandise Manager.

Pfc. Bradley Beverly, B Co., 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., ITB, found a carry-on with wheels that he will take home to Salem, Ore., over the holidays.

"It's pretty crowded in here," Beverly said. "But I like seeing the Christmas decorations, and everybody getting into the Christmas spirit. It's just nice seeing people shopping for their families."

Cols. Latimer, Mitchell to be honored today

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Col. John Latimer, former chief of staff, and Col. John Mitchell, former garrison commander, will be honored at a retirement ceremony at 4 p.m. today in front of Infantry Hall.

Both men are retiring from active duty Dec. 31 — Latimer after more than 28 years; Mitchell after more than 27.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne refers to them as "John squared" and the "twins," not because they look anything alike, but when you see one, you usually see the other.

The two have been assigned together for the past eight years, from the War College at Carlisle, Pa., to MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., and on to Fort Benning, where they have lived four houses apart.

"Our families have been together for all that time, and we see each other almost daily. For the past three years, we've done PT together most mornings," Mitchell said.

"As chief of staff and garrison commander, they were the best combination I've seen in 10 years at this level. Their experience showed, and not just their professional experience, out their personal experiences as well," Le Moyne said. "Fort Benning's Soldiers and families benefited from that."

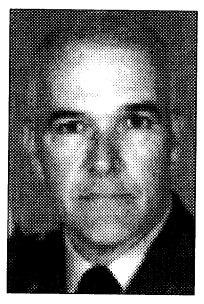
The two men have different personalities. Le Moyne described Mitchell as a "quiet professional," while Latimer is a little louder.

"John (Latimer) has the same professional focus, but he has that spark of boisterous life in him. It makes a great contrast," Le Moyne said.

But, there are striking similarities.

"Neither one of them took credit for the projects they were involved with," said Monica Manganaro, deputy public affairs officer. "You never heard either one of them say 'me' or 'I' and take credit. That's admirable."

Le Moyne agreed.



"There's no ego there at all. They are very good examples of selfless service to the benefit of others," Le Moyne said.

Manganaro recalled how Latimer was involved with many projects on post. Two examples are the renovation of Doughboy Stadium and improvements to Russ Pond.

"He really had an impact on the quality of life of the Soldiers, family members and civilians on post, and he did that by getting involved in every aspect of daily life here," she said.

Latimer, 50, served as the chief of staff from July 1997 until September.

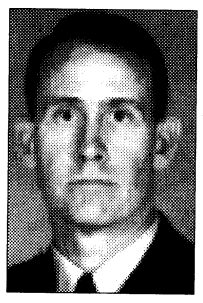
"I never missed a day of work in 28 and a half years," he said. "I just loved coming to work each day."

Latimer

After graduating from the Citadel in 1972, Latimer's duty stations varied from Hawaii to Alaska, with stops at the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C., along the way.

He served two tours in Somalia, first as the Military Liaison Officer to the U.S. Ambassador in Mogadishu, and in 1994 when he commanded the Combined Task Force (Forward), Operation United Shield, which he called his most fulfilling assignment.

He was in charge of the successful evacuation of 10,000 U.N. troops from the beach, a mission where no one died and he was the "last American on the beach," he said.



Latimer has been married for 28 years, and he is quick to give credit to his wife, Janice.

"She's the one who had to pack up and move the kids each time," he said.

The Latimers have two children, Wendy, who works with the Central Intelligence Agency in Washington, D.C., and Patrick, a businessman in Florida.

A native of South Carolina, Latimer took the advice of his older brother, Dave, when trying to decide where to retire.

"He told me you retire where your friends are, and we have a tremendous number of friends in the area, many who are military, but also the folks I've met downtown," he said.

Mitchell

Mitchell served as garrison commander from August 1998 until November.

"Colonel Mitchell has worked closely with the city of Columbus and the community on such projects as the land exchange and with plans to build a new National Infantry Museum," Manganaro said.

Wednesday he will watch as the commanding general and the mayor of Columbus sign an agreement to exchange more than 2,000 acres of land. The proposed swap has taken 11 years to complete. During the last 27 months, Mitchell has represented the Army and the federal government at the consultation table with leaders from several American Indian nations who worked with the installation in writing cultural resources provisions connected to the exchange.

In November, Mitchell received an Army Achievement Medal for his work on the project.

"I'm really just a front guy in that deal," Mitchell said, listing individuals from the Directorate of Public Works and Staff Judge Advocate whom he thinks deserve the real credit.

> "John (Latimer) has the same professional focus, but he has that spark of boisterous life in him. It makes a great contrast."
> Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne
> Commanding General

Mitchell, 49, spent 17 years growing up in Korea where his parents were Presbyterian missionaries.

"I was first exposed to the U.S. Army while living in Korea. Some of my fondest childhood memories there are of being invited by Soldiers to the mess halls to celebrate the holidays," Mitchell said.

He returned to the states to attend Auburn University, where "on a lark" he enrolled in a ROTC course. Mitchell liked the challenge, and as a cadet completed the Airborne and Ranger courses at Fort Benning.

"I thought I would stay in for a few years, get out and attend law school," he said. "Now, 27 and a half years later, I wonder where the time has gone."

Prior to assuming command of the garrison in 1998, Mitchell was the Inspector General at Fort Benning. He wears two bronze stars on his Master Parachutist Badge, signifying two combat jumps in Grenada and Panama. In 1983, he was a company commander with the 1st Ranger Battalion during Operation Urgent Fury in Grenada. He later served three years as the executive officer of the battalion and participated in Operation Just Cause in Panama. He commanded the 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 5th Infantry, in Korea.

Like Latimer, Mitchell has been married for 28 years, and he and his wife, Margery, have twin daughters, who are lieutenants. Jennifer, a graduate of West Point, is in flight school at Fort Rucker, Ala. Katie graduated from the Air Force Academy and is a contracting officer.

In keeping with their habit of moving on together, Latimer and Mitchell are going to work for the same corporation, Synovus. Latimer is already working for Total Solutions, managing the Dispute Branch.

"That's where people who have a complaint or a dispute with their credit cards call," Latimer said.

Mitchell will return to post as the group manager for the three Columbus Bank and Trust branches on Fort Benning.

"I feel fortunate to have this chance to stay in touch with the Army and to serve Army families and Soldiers," Mitchell said.

International Airport. About 106 chartered buses will carry the Soldiers to Atlanta beginning in the early morning hours of Dec. 18.

Fort Benning's trainees will join thousands of others from Fort Gordon, Ga., and Fort Jackson, S.C., who will travel through the Atlanta airport on Exodus.

Agents for the travel agency opened the doors at 6 a.m. Sunday and continued until that evening, processing approximately 1,000 Soldiers, said Vicky Northington, branch manager for Carlson-Wagonlit.

While most destinations are within the continental United States, tickets have been purchased for San Juan, Pago Pago, Somalia and Honduras, among other faraway locations, Northington said.

Weeks ago agents briefed the companies at the ITB and Basic Combat Training Brigade. "They filled out reservation forms, and we have them booked on flights before they get here, so all they have to do is pay," Northington said.

The agency started selling tickets in November and will continue through Tuesday.

To cover ticket expenses, the newest Soldiers — those who entered the service on or after Nov. 1 — could receive advanced pay. This will be repaid in four increments at mid-month and end-of-month for December and January.

Pvt. Ray Eckstein, B Co., 2nd Bn., 58th Inf., will travel to Neenah, Wis., for the holidays.

"I plan to have as much fun as I can," the 20-year-old Eckstein said.

He is not alone.

Pvt. Katal Yancey is looking forward to returning to Detroit, Mich., and seeing his family.

"I want to have a good time while I can," Yancey said.

And he's not worried about returning to One Station Unit Training on Jan. 3 after two weeks of downtime.

"No drill sergeant can be any harder than my mom," he said.

The Army Physical Fitness School is dedicating its building, Building 489, on Ingersoll Avenue, to Lt. Col. Herman J. Koehler 9:30 a.m. Thursday. The ceremony is open to the public.

Fort Benning jumpers make their mark

Local Soldiers compete against world's best

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

> "It's a sense of freedom, when you're jumping. You're seeing the world from a perspective few other people have."
> Capt. Danny Alvarez
> Golden Knights Military Parachute Championships competitor

Fort Benning Soldiers stood out among those competing at the recent Golden Knights Military Parachute Championships Nov. 17-18 at Fort Bragg, N.C.

This is the second year Soldiers from post were a part of this competition.

Lt. Col. Edward Daly, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry, Basic Combat Training Brigade, tied for top honors in the accuracy event.

After four jumps from a height of 3,000 feet, his combined total distance from the target center was 49 millimeters.

Daly compared this distance to the length of half a cigarette.

After a 17th place finish last year, Daly was somewhat surprised to take first place this time around. He attributed his success to a focused training regimen.

"I practiced harder in my spare time and bought a brand new parachute like the one I'd been training on at Fort Benning."

A local team representing the post took third place in the eight-way freefall event.

Team members included Daly, 1st Lt. Michael Troxell, Capt. Danny Alvarez, and Capt. Michael Belton. Troxell, Alvarez and Belton are all with 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry.

For this event, they were placed with four other jumpers they met at the competition.

The group simulated what the eight-person formations would feel like in the air by lying on the ground and practicing "dirt dives." This was their only chance to work together before boarding the plane to do the real thing at 12,500 feet.

"It's a great team building experience," Troxell said.

The Soldiers who competed are all former members of the recently disbanded post parachute team, The Silver Wings.

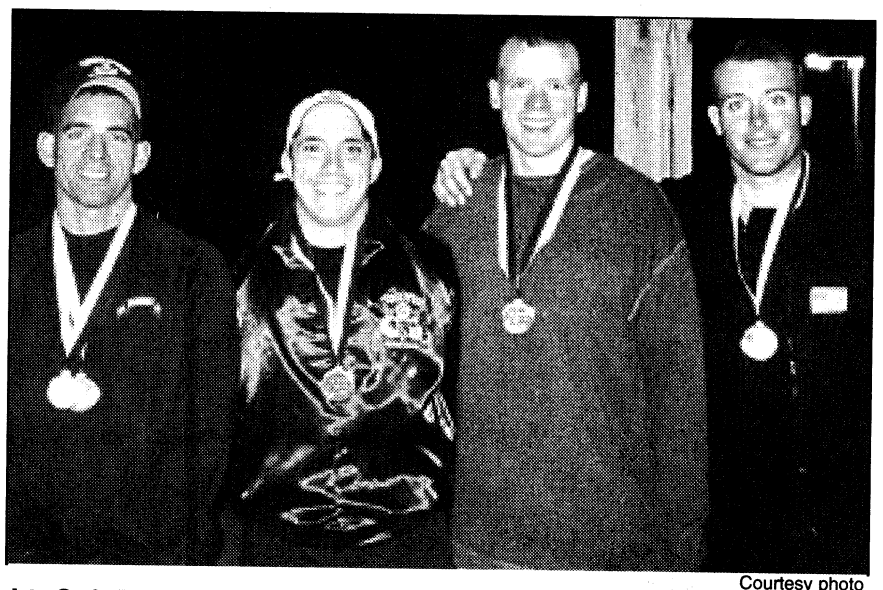
They have continued to practice on their own time at local skydiving centers to prepare for the contest.

Troxell said it was worth the extra effort. "It's a positive way to show the interest in sport parachuting in the Army."

"We just love jumping. It's a sport for us," Daly said.

"It's a sense of freedom, when you're jumping," Alvarez said. "You're seeing the world from a perspective few other people have."

Teams from military posts as far away as Canada, England and Germany competed at this event.



The championships are open to all active-duty, reserve and national guard members of all military services.

Former post residents, Staff Sgt. Greg Windmueller and Staff Sgt. Dan Leavitt, both most recently of 1st Bn. (Abn.), 507th Inf., were selected this fall to become members of the U.S. Army Parachute Team, the Golden Knights.

The 90-member team, now in its 40th year of existence, is stationed at Fort Bragg.

Members perform live aerial demonstrations for the public, compete in national and international parachuting competitions, and evaluate new parachuting equipment and techniques for improved operation and safety.

Past success at competitions has earned the Golden Knights the title of most-winning parachute team in the world.

I use all three styles of leadership. In this type of training environment it is hard to stick with one style because you're focusing on developing that civilian into a Soldier.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant? There is nothing like the feeling you get when you have a father or mother come up to you and say, "Thank you, drill sergeant, for training my son."

SafetyCab shifts into gear off post

Program offers free taxi rides back to post

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

It's the designated driver you can always count on.

From Sunday through Jan. 1, "SafetyCab" is available to Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City residents who have been drinking and need a safe ride home from off-post parties, restaurants and bars between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m.

The main goal of this local program is to promote the use of designated drivers. SafetyCab is a back-up that provides free transportation home in case there is no one safe to drive.

"In the event you feel you'd be safer off the roads, we hope you call SafetyCab," said Judy Walsh, SafetyCab coordinator, The Bradley Center, St. Francis Hospital.

"It's a nice benefit for Soldiers," said Regis Beighley, safety manager, Directorate of Public Safety.

There is criteria behind SafetyCab's services. The cabs will only pick up a driver and up to two passengers. They will also only get passengers at businesses serving alcohol. They will only bring passengers home, and they will not drive them to another bar.

The cab cannot pick up passengers from bars or restaurants on post because of a current contract with a local cab company. However, Fort Benning residents can receive rides home from locations off post.

In the past, Beighley said, some Soldiers have complained that it was hard to get through to the service. He said everyone who goes out drinking should plan ahead and have a designated driver.

The SafetyCab program is in its 18th year of existence. During its operation last year, the cabs provided more than 170 rides to people in the tricommunities. In contrast, there were 29 drunk driving related arrests last year on Fort Benning.

"It's worked very well in the past," Walsh said. "We've kept people off the highways and that's made it safer for ourselves and our loved ones."

"You may have to wait awhile for it to come, but as a last resort, SafetyCab is a good option," Beighley said.

To support the effort of designated drivers, several local nightclubs and restaurants will offer free nonalcoholic drinks to people who've volunteered to stay sober.

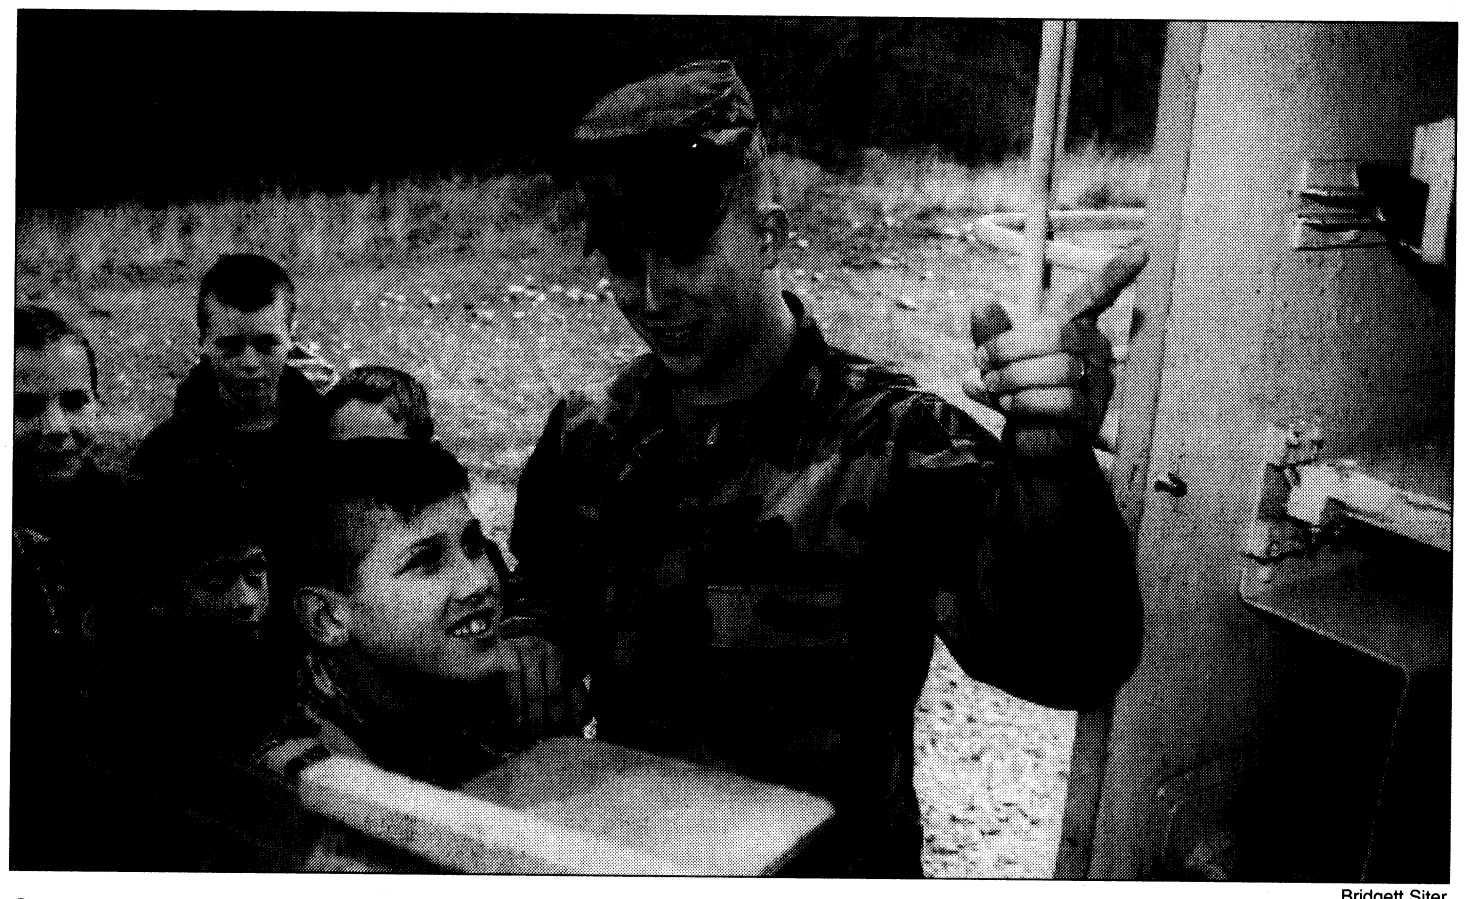
SafetyCab's number is 660-6069.

Spencer celebrates Christmas with song

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Last year was OK, Towanda McCray remembered, not sounding very enthused. The problem, she said, is that the music was so hard — but not hard enough to keep her from learning it. And what about this year? The 15-year-old Spencer High School student grabbed the sheet music for her clarinet part and waves it in the air for a visitor to see. "This year it's been harder, because I made first chair," she explained, with a shy hint of pride.

McCray is among the nearly 100 students who will perform in the school's annual Christmas concert this year, and her experience — with all its challenges and rewards — is a familiar one. "They do some things they don't think they can do," said Assistant Principal James Tanksley, a retired Army lieutenant colonel. "In order to perform, you have to practice."



Parents, and anyone else in the Fort Benning community, can see the results of all that practice at the Dec. 14 concert. The performance, hosted by the Parent, Teacher, and Student Organization, begins at 7 p.m. in the school auditorium, and is free to all. The post's young people will be well represented on stage; just about 80 percent of the students at Spencer High are from Army families. "We've got a lot of talent from the Fort Benning kids," Tanksley said.

Chorus director Mark Culpepper said the Christmas concert is "probably the best-attended event all year long" on the campus. His 65 students will perform "Salsa Noel," a jazz-waltz arrangement of "Carol of the Bells," and other songs. Band director Marci Hawkins will lead her 35 students in a performance of 30 minutes of traditional holiday fare. Both groups of student musicians have been preparing for the concert since the first week of November.

All that practice is important, said 16-year-old Letisha Collins, but the performance itself will represent another challenge altogether. This is the third year Collins will play the flute in a Spencer High holiday concert. "It teaches me not to get stage fright," she said. "I sit right up front."

That's another reason why concerts like this one are so important for Spencer students, Tanksley said; the discipline, self-esteem, and confidence they learn represent an accomplishment that's not easily had. For the rest of us, the concert represents a good chance to hear some good music, and watch Fort Benning's young people shine.

Artillery sponsors Dexter's fieldtrip

Students explore humvees

Dexter Elementary students got a close-up look at some of Kelley Hill's mechanized armor equipment Wednesday.

The 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, Dexter's Partners in Education, sponsored a schoolwide field trip to give the students an opportunity to see the equipment some of their parents work with every day.

"My dad works at a motor pool, but I've never got to climb inside before," said 10-year-old Dean Crossno, as he peered out from an ammunition carrier. "This is really cool."

Besides the ammunition carrier, the students learned about the M-1 A1 Abrams, the M-109 A-6 Paladin 155 mm cannon and the humvee. They took turns climbing on board as Soldiers explained the various uses and jobs tasked to each vehicle.

First Lt. Lance O'Bryan, B Battery's executive officer, said the field trip was designed to encourage the students to think about the various ways Soldiers use basic skills every day.

"They're seeing first-hand how we use critical thinking, math and reading skills," he said. "The skills they're learning in school are an integral part of operating this kind of equipment."

Kris Keske, a fifth-grade teacher, said the field trip served dual purposes.

"It's fun for them, but I especially like that they're getting to spend time with the Soldiers and see someone other than their parents at work," she said.

Artilleryman mentors post children

A Kelley Hill Soldier's involvement with the Partners in Education program rekindles memories of his own experience as a Fort Benning student.

Sgt. Heath Stamm, a gunner with C Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, was a fifth-grade student at Dexter Elementary School in 1988.

Now as a Soldier with the school's sponsoring unit, he's volunteering to mentor Dexter students who, like himself, often experience extended periods of separation from their parents.

"As a kid I only saw part of the picture," Stamm said. "Dad was gone a lot, and I missed him. Now, coming back here as an adult, I see the big picture, and I hope that I can be a role model for these students who's parents are away a lot too."

During a recent visit at Dexter, Stamm dropped in on his former teacher, Carroll Thebaud, who still teaches the fifth-grade. Thebaud remembered Stamm as a "very, very lively little boy with skinny legs — always smiling, always fun."

"I think it's grand that he's able to come back here and be a positive role model for these students," said Thebaud. "The kids are fascinated to meet an adult who was once a student here just like them."

It was while his father was stationed at Fort Benning that Stamm decided to become a Soldier. He enlisted five years ago, with the intention of being stationed near his father.

But a year after Stamm enlisted, his father was medically retired. One year later he died from cancer.

"Our plans didn't work out, but I got to spend a lot of time with him that last year," Stamm said. "Before he died, he helped me map out a plan for my own career. He gave me a lot of good advice."

Stamm returned to Fort Benning in August, 1999, now a Soldier with two children of his own. He said he feels "connected" to his father, now more than ever.

"Being here has helped me feel close to him. I'm doing what he did, being where he was and experiencing the things he did," said Stamm, whose father also worked on Kelley Hill.

Stamm said his unique situation — a former student returning as a Soldier — enables him to relate to the concerns and problems Dexter students face.

"They do experience separations, and they have concerns and fears civilian kids might not deal with, but they have a lot of unique opportunities, too," he said.

"They have the advantage of being here on Fort Benning and bragging to their friends and relatives back home about the neat stuff they get to see and do," he added. "I know I did that when I was a kid, and it made me want to be a Soldier like my dad."

Fort Benning to participate in Post Cleanup Days

Residents rake yards, leaves in housing areas

It's time again for Fort Benning residents to pitch in and clean. The Fall Post Cleanup Days are scheduled for Monday through Dec. 15. All units, directorates and family housing area residents will be responsible for cleaning the areas where they work and live.

"If everyone cooperates, the post can maintain a high state of excellence," said Master Sgt. Donald Blackmon, NCOIC, Community Life Office, Directorate of Community Activities.

This event takes place twice a year, once before the winter holidays and then again in the spring.

The main objective of the scheduled cleanup is to remind residents to keep their outdoor living areas neat, said Jodie Bowers, president, Fort Benning's Mayors' Association. Post residents don't have to do elaborate landscaping on their yards, she said. Instead, the goal is to have them take care of basic seasonal yardwork.

"Hopefully people will take the opportunity to clean," Bowers said. "It's a good time to get rid of outdoor rubbish."

Post residences will be pre inspected to determine what areas individual households need to work on. As always, Community Life NCOs will give out notices identifying which responsibilities residents should focus on.

They will also get visual proof of problem areas on post. "We will be out there with cameras," Blackmon said.

There are a handful of deficiencies that turn up most frequently during inspections, Blackmon said. These offenses include the need to mow and edge lawns, rake the cut grass and leaves, trim shrubbery, trees and vines around quarters, clean up untidy or foul-smelling garbage cans, and clean leaves and debris from storm drains and gutters.

The post cleanup is also a good time to focus on indoor house maintenance, Blackmon said. He suggested Soldiers change the filters on their heating units and take care of the upkeep of other indoor appliances.

During the five days of this event, it is up to each unit commander's discretion to decide when to release Soldiers to go home and take care of their quarters.

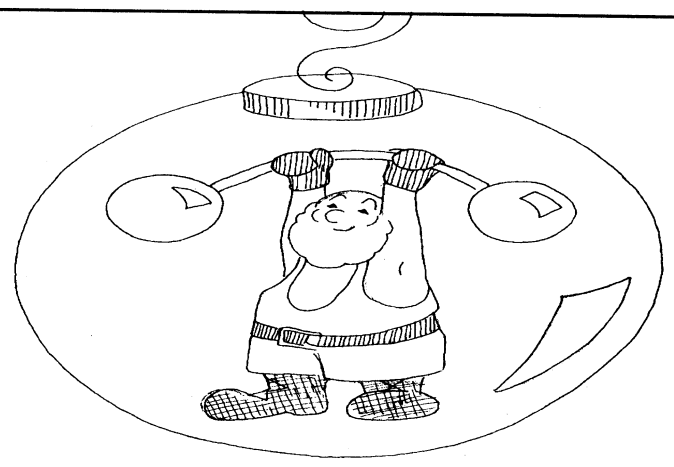
If a Soldier's residence is already squared away and passes inspection, he or she can volunteer time to help clean common areas like playgrounds around the post community, Blackmon said.

He said this event can have a positive effect on the entire post, as long as everyone pulls together and puts forth the required effort. "We're all in government housing, and we all have to depend on each other."

"The outside of a house reflects the people inside," Bowers said. "It's important for us to keep our area on post looking nice. When visitors come here and see a messy post, they may think 'how can (Fort Benning Soldiers) run a country when they can't even keep their post clean?'" she said.

There will be resources like pine straw and fertilizer available at the U-DO-IT Center on Vibbert Avenue, Building 385. Residents can also pick up biodegradable yard waste bags there. Yard waste will only be picked up for disposal if it is in this type of bag. Fort Benning residents must have attended a post self-help class and received an identification card from that office to be able to use this service. For more information, call the center at 545-1121.

There are also unclaimed garbage cans up for grabs. Blackmon said he has more than 50 cans in his possession and would be happy to give them to residents who need them.



To obtain a garbage can or to get the name of your housing area's Community Life NCO, call Blackmon at 545-3069.

Garbage, recyclable items and yard waste will be picked up on the regularly scheduled mornings for your housing area. For more information about what is and what isn't acceptable for the recycling program, call Walter Nichols at 544-6142.

For the bulk leaf collection schedule during the cleanup week, contact the Directorate of Public Works at 545-3725.

Areas that do not pass initial inspection will be re inspected on Dec. 15. Soldiers who do not comply with the scheduled cleanup will be reported to their supervisors and may be subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Pass the cookies?

It's always the same — the broken promises, the pleas for forgiveness, the utter sense of failure and self-loathing I feel when I look in the mirror.

It's not an affair or a battle with booze. It's those darned Christmas cookies. Why couldn't I just say no?

Don't laugh. You know exactly what I'm talking about. Cookies may not be your poison, but you have one nonetheless. Maybe it's too much of a good thing, like potatoes or turkey and stuffing. We're all weak, pathetic creatures — slaves to our appetites at this time of year.

But hang in there. The new year is coming. That's when we wipe the slate clean. Start all over again. Make right all our wrongs. Turn over a new leaf. We make all kinds of crazy promises — New Year's resolutions — no more sugar or refined foods, no more red meats, no more peanut butter and jelly sandwiches — until we're the perfect size six again.

It's a recipe for guaranteed failure. You simply cannot "adopt" a new life style. That's why 50 percent of us break our New Year's resolutions within six months.

After the age of 30, the average person gains about five pounds a year. They typically gain it this month, and despite all the promises and best intentions, they don't lose it after the new year.

Don't despair. It is possible to change your life by creating new, healthy habits. But don't wait for Jan. 1. It takes 21 days to create a habit, so today's the day to start thinking about the changes you'd like to put into practice three weeks from now.

Maj. Colleen Kesselring, chief of Nutrition Care Division at Martin Army Community Hospital, recommends her clients stay "focused and realistic" throughout the holiday season. Don't make any radical promises to yourself, like "I swear I'm not going to eat a single cookie this Christmas." Yeah, right.

Concentrate on maintaining your current body weight, not losing any over the holiday. And look on the bright side. Christmas shopping can hone your biceps and thin your backside as it thins your wallet. Really good, vigorous walking, reaching, shoving and hair pulling burns about 200 calories an hour. Hey, ain't that good news?

Let's say you do decide to commit to an exercise and diet regime come New Year. Start in small ways to change your old habits and create healthy new ones now.

Take the stairs instead of the elevator. Limit the number of desserts you have each week. If you eat a big lunch, eat a smaller supper, but don't skip any meals. That's a big no-no, according to Kesselring. Skipped meals result in slower metabolism.

Find a physical activity you enjoy doing. If you dread running or trekking to the gym, you won't stick to it. Ask Santa for in-line skates or a bike — or a trampoline if that's what makes you happy.

But don't ask him for get-thin-quick gimmicks, like pills or body wraps. At best they only work temporarily, and they're dangerous. You run the risk of serious dehydration or heart attack.

If you simply have to indulge in sweets, splurge on gourmet coffees instead of chocolate bonbons. But if you have a cookie craving that just won't quit, go ahead and eat a couple.

Depriving yourself of something you really want will ultimately result in a 20-minute binge and two hours of guilt. As Kesselring put it, "Robbing a bank is bad. Cheesecake isn't. Enjoy it, but eat in moderation."

Start your new year on the right foot by making minor changes in your lifestyle now. They'll become second nature in a short time, and you'll reap the rewards of healthier living.

Holiday trap snares fit & flabby

The holidays can present diet and exercise challenges to the most regimented people, including Soldiers, who make it their business to stay physically fit.

But a couple of weeks of overindulging and sporadic attempts at exercise don't have to derail a fitness routine.

Sgt. 1st Class Richard Holladay, an instructor and master fitness trainer with the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, said many people fall into the "holiday trap," allowing a few missed work-outs to end their regular diet and exercise regime.

"First of all, it takes a fairly good amount of time to lose conditioning, so just because you skip a few sessions when things get hectic, doesn't mean you're out of shape," Holladay said. "It may feel that way, but after a few days back into your regular routine, you'll find you're feeling like your old self. A couple of weeks of missed PT doesn't have nearly the negative effect on your body that it does on your mind."

The key, Holladay said, is to stay motivated. Don't let a minor setback put an end to a year's worth of hard work.

"Just don't let your diet and exercise fall by the wayside completely," Holladay said. "If you can't follow your usual routine because you're busy or on vacation, cut back on your caloric intake for the time being. Find 20 minutes a day to walk when you don't have the time to do your usual PT."

Holladay said this is a good time of year to indulge in recreational activities that might normally take a back seat to a regular exercise routine.

"Stay mobile and have fun. Go biking or skating. If you're traveling up north for the holidays, go skiing. Chances are, if it's an activity you really enjoy, you'll keep at it," he said.

Whenever possible, Holladay also recommends the use of free weights to compensate for the increase in caloric intake and the decrease in physical activity.

"This is a good time to start thinking about incorporating free weights into your routine, because you get maximum benefits from minimum time expended," he said. "If you don't already have them, they're a really good, economical Christmas gift, and you can purchase them in assorted poundage to accommodate everyone who will be using them."

When it comes to shopping for the fitness buff or the beginner, Holladay also recommends videos that focus on total body conditioning, not spot reducing. As for the myriad of other fitness products on the market, he cautions the buyer beware.

"Don't waste your time or money with anything that promises you instant results," Holladay said. "The only way to get lasting, healthy weight-loss is to burn fat, and you burn fat by using it."

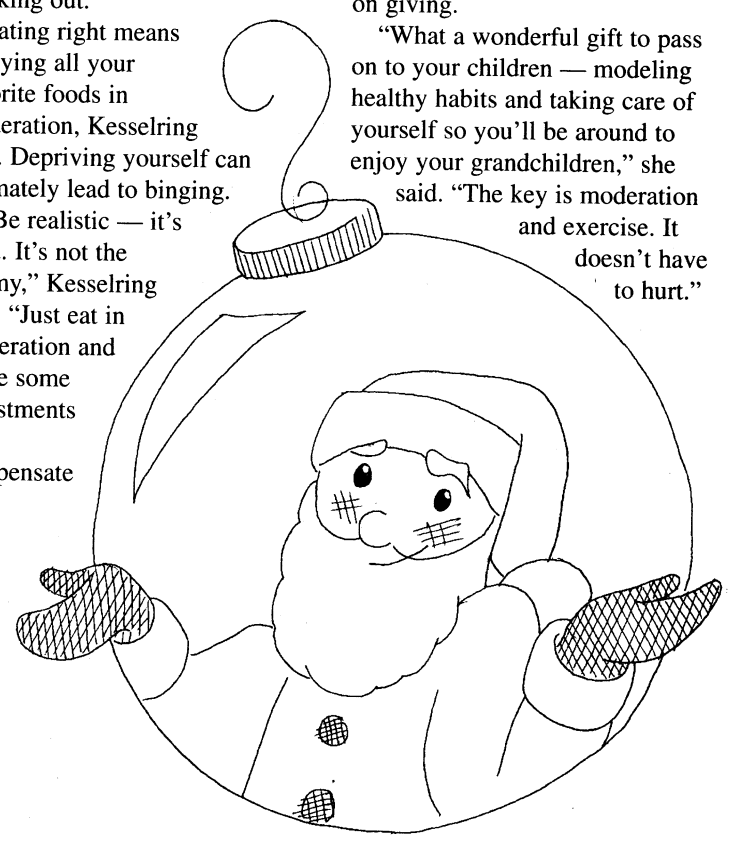
And whether you're struggling to squeeze fitness into a busy holiday schedule or planning to commit to a new routine in the new year, he recommends partnering with a family member or friend.

"Find someone who'll motivate you, and make an appointment to do it," he said. "Your partner will also be able to watch your movements, whether you're lifting weights or walking, and critique the quality of your movements. Proper form is better than quantity or repetitions."

Maj. Colleen Kesselring, chief of Nutrition Care Division at Martin Army Community Hospital, also cautions dieters not to allow overeating to undermine their diet and exercise routines.

"Concentrate on your accomplishments, not your failures," Kesselring said. "A little weight gain during the holidays is normal. Don't get depressed and give up. Just slowly get back into the habit of eating right and working out."

Eating right means enjoying all your favorite foods in moderation, Kesselring said. Depriving yourself can ultimately lead to binging.



"Be realistic — it's food. It's not the enemy," Kesselring said. "Just eat in moderation and make some adjustments to compensate for the temporary change in your diet. If you eat too much at lunch, eat a smaller meal in the evening. If you splurge on cookies, go for a longer walk later."

Kesselring said healthy eaters need to be attuned to their body's hunger and satiety signals.

"If your body's telling you it's hungry, it needs fuel. If your stomach says it's satisfied, it's time to stop eating. Tune in," she said. "Watch your eating patterns and notice if you're eating out of boredom or frustration or sadness. The holidays can intensify those feelings. Learn to address the problem instead of eating."

Kesselring said learning to incorporate these diet and behavior modifications is a gift that keeps on giving.

"What a wonderful gift to pass on to your children — modeling healthy habits and taking care of yourself so you'll be around to enjoy your grandchildren," she said. "The key is moderation and exercise. It doesn't have to hurt."

ask the judge

Carolyn E. Moller
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I was in a car accident recently, and my insurance company wants to total my car, but I don't know what that means. Do I have to accept this recommendation?

A: No, but the wiser course of action may be to accept the recommendation.

When an insurance company totals a motor vehicle, it usually means that it would cost more to repair the car than what it's worth.

While it sounds like an accident must cause a lot of damage in order for the insurance company to total a car, that is not always the case.

Insurance companies use many factors to determine a motor vehicle's worth, with the main source being the insurance company's database of prices which takes into consideration the blue book value of the vehicle.

Additionally, the insurance company considers the type of vehicle, the age of the vehicle and the cost of repairs. Under this system, a vehicle with minor damages might be totaled, even though the damages are minor because it would cost more to fix the damage than the car is worth. On the other hand, a new vehicle might suffer major damage, but still not be totaled out because the cost of repair does not exceed the value of the car.

Problems arise when the insurance company offers less for your vehicle than what you think it is worth. Basically, insurance is a contract between the insurance company and the policyholder.

The purpose of the insurance is to put you back in the position you were in prior to the accident; but, you cannot force the insurance company to pay more than what the vehicle is worth. That is what creates a Catch-22. The insurance company has totaled your vehicle, but has not paid enough to replace it or to make you whole.

According to insure.com (www.insure.com), there are some things that you can do to avoid this problem. If the cost of repairs is more than a certain percentage of what the vehicle is worth, the insurance company is going to total the car. Some insurance companies use the 51 percent rule: if the cost of repairs exceeds more than 51 percent of the value of the vehicle, then the car is totaled. Others apply an 80 percent rule, meaning the repairs must exceed 80 percent of the value of the vehicle before it is totaled.

Prior to purchasing insurance, ask which method your insurance company applies to totaled vehicles. Knowing the method that your insurance company uses to reach the decision to total a vehicle may prevent future problems.

What can you expect to receive if the insurance company totals your car? According to insure.com, the insurance company will pay you the vehicle's actual value, or blue book value, minus any deductible you may owe under your insurance policy. Once the insurance company pays you, it owns your vehicle. At this point, most insurance companies will sell any usable parts of your vehicle as salvage.

If you believe that the vehicle is repairable, you do not have to accept the insurance company's assessment to total it.

The insurance company must still pay you the actual value of the vehicle, minus your deductible and minus its salvage value. Repairs will now be your responsibility and the insurance company has met its obligation to make you whole. Before you make this decision, however, think it through.

You might have problems securing future insurance on the vehicle because many insurance companies are hesitant to insure previously totaled vehicles. As such, it is the recommendation of the National Association of Independent Insurers to "Move on. The car's been totaled."

If you don't agree with the insurance company's valuation, you can always have the vehicle appraised by an independent appraiser, usually at your expense. Or, you can pursue arbitration or hire an attorney to represent your interests.

If you need more information on this topic, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282 or 545-3281 to make an appointment, or come by Building 5 on Friday mornings to make an appointment for the following week.

gardening tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet corespondent

Fall is an important time to clean up the lawn. It is time to remove debris and take care of tasks overlooked in the summer.

The prevailing late summer heat tends to keep gardeners from doing chores and end of season maintenance. With the onset of cooler temperatures it is time to get back in the garden.

First things first, pull up summer annuals that are fading away. And pull up any vegetable plants that are finished as well. Put the disease-free plants in the compost pile.

Start a regime of raking and removing the falling leaves. Leaves that remain on the ground unattended can invite disease into the garden. Leaves getting compacted on the lawn can smother the grass and roots beneath creating a bare spot in the spring.

Use the leaves to replenish the carbon in the compost pile. Bag up the rest in a paper lawn bag and keep near the pile for replenishing later or shred them with your lawn mower and use them for mulch.

Do not use leaves to amend the soil. Adding leaves to the soil can take away nitrogen from plant roots. Decaying leaves in the soil actually steal the nitrogen to aid in their decomposing. So don't bury the leaves in the garden beds.

Clean up and oil all the garden tools. Oiling the tools keeps them from rusting over the winter when most tools aren't needed. This is a good time of year to do the maintenance on mowers and gas powered equipment. Mow the lawn, removing one-third of the grass blade. Rake the grass clippings if you are planning to overseed the lawn.

Till up the vegetable beds. Disrupting the soil now disturbs possible bacteria and disease living in the garden. Exposing these diseases to the air will kill them and aid in preventing them from coming back in the spring. If possible till again during the winter before a final tilling for planting in the spring.

There is enough maintenance to do in the garden to keep busy for a weekend. Reflect on the things that were good in the garden this year and plan for new things in the spring.

Student questions Columbus High's designation

Ricky Elsey
Spencer High School

It has come to my attention that Columbus High has become a private school, not on paper, and with public funding.

As each academic year passes Columbus High gets more praises for its academic progress while the rest of the area high schools are left behind.

Unlike most private schools, Columbus High is tuition free, only asking that you pass the entrance exam and keep your grades in good standing while in the program. The funding for the Columbus High private school program is based on tests that are given to all of our area high schools.

While Columbus High gets to pick and choose their students, who in turn get higher test scores, it leaves the rest of the schools scrambling for funds. This magnet program, which is supposed to be good for everyone, only helps the ones involved.

Some may say Carver High is a magnet school too, but I want to say that they also need to realize they have one of the most populated schools in the county! Carver also accepts students from anywhere in the school district or in their area and does not require entrance exams for their students. In other words, if you were to live across the street from Carver, you would be guaranteed a place. At Columbus, you might not know until you pass the test!

Private school should not be judged with a public school. Public schools should accept students in their area — that's why the school was put there, not to turn down the ones that are not qualified.

So why is it that Columbus High is known to be public with all the characteristics of a private school?

Interview with disciplinarian explores problems at school

Marquita Hairston
Spencer High School

As a student going to school to learn, I feel it's very important that I feel safe. Without safety, you couldn't take in the education you need to achieve in life.

I attend Spencer High School and I'm aware of the rumors of Spencer being a bad school for children to attend.

I interviewed the man in charge of disciplining the students at Spencer, Mr. Manio. He had a lot of positive and interesting things to say.

Hairston: How often would you say there are fights at Spencer?

Manio: An average of about one every month. Usually the same people are involved. Mainly girls, about "he said she said" stuff.

Hairston: Is there a high percentage of drugs in the school?

Manio: There was only one caught this year. I'm not saying they are not using them; but we need the students' help.

Hairston: How strict is Spencer's Discipline Regulations?

Manio: Fair, but firm!

Hairston: Do you think Spencer has a greater percentage of problems, more than other public schools?

Manio: We have the best, well-behaved students. We need the students and teachers pull to make Spencer a more disciplined school.

Spencer's officer Marcus Seldon added, "I found Spencer to be a well disciplined school." Adding that he has worked at every high school and most of the junior highs.

Hairston: Would you say it's safe here?

Manio: Spencer has the best safety record in Columbus. Spencer is this way because of the cooperation of administrators, teachers, students and parents. I love them all!

Spencerian describes high school as best option, privilege

Montrel Woodhouse
Spencer High School

Some children are apathetic when it comes to deciding which high school they attend. They have many choices and can decide on which option fits them. Military children, on the other hand, don't have many choices.

Transportation is only provided from Columbus High School and Spencer High School, those being the only two options unless you have your own transportation. Spencer, which is the closest to Fort Benning, in most cases, would be the only option. But it is the best choice! It's not an obligation to come to Spencer, it's a privilege.

Spencer is active outside of school including military life. There are clubs that are open for everyone to join that perform community service on Fort Benning and in the Columbus community. Spencer has very helpful teachers who go out of their way to ensure one gets the knowledge one needs in life.

Spencer has a tutoring program sponsored by the 29th Infantry. There is no admission for this service and it's performed in Spencer's library after school.

Spencer trains children into becoming a Spencerian.

A Spencerian strives for the utmost excellence in life and puts their heart into every attempt for achievement. Desire to be one? Only then will Spencer be considered as the only choice.

Spencer student claims Carver High rivalry is most emotional

Laklya Williams
Spencer High School

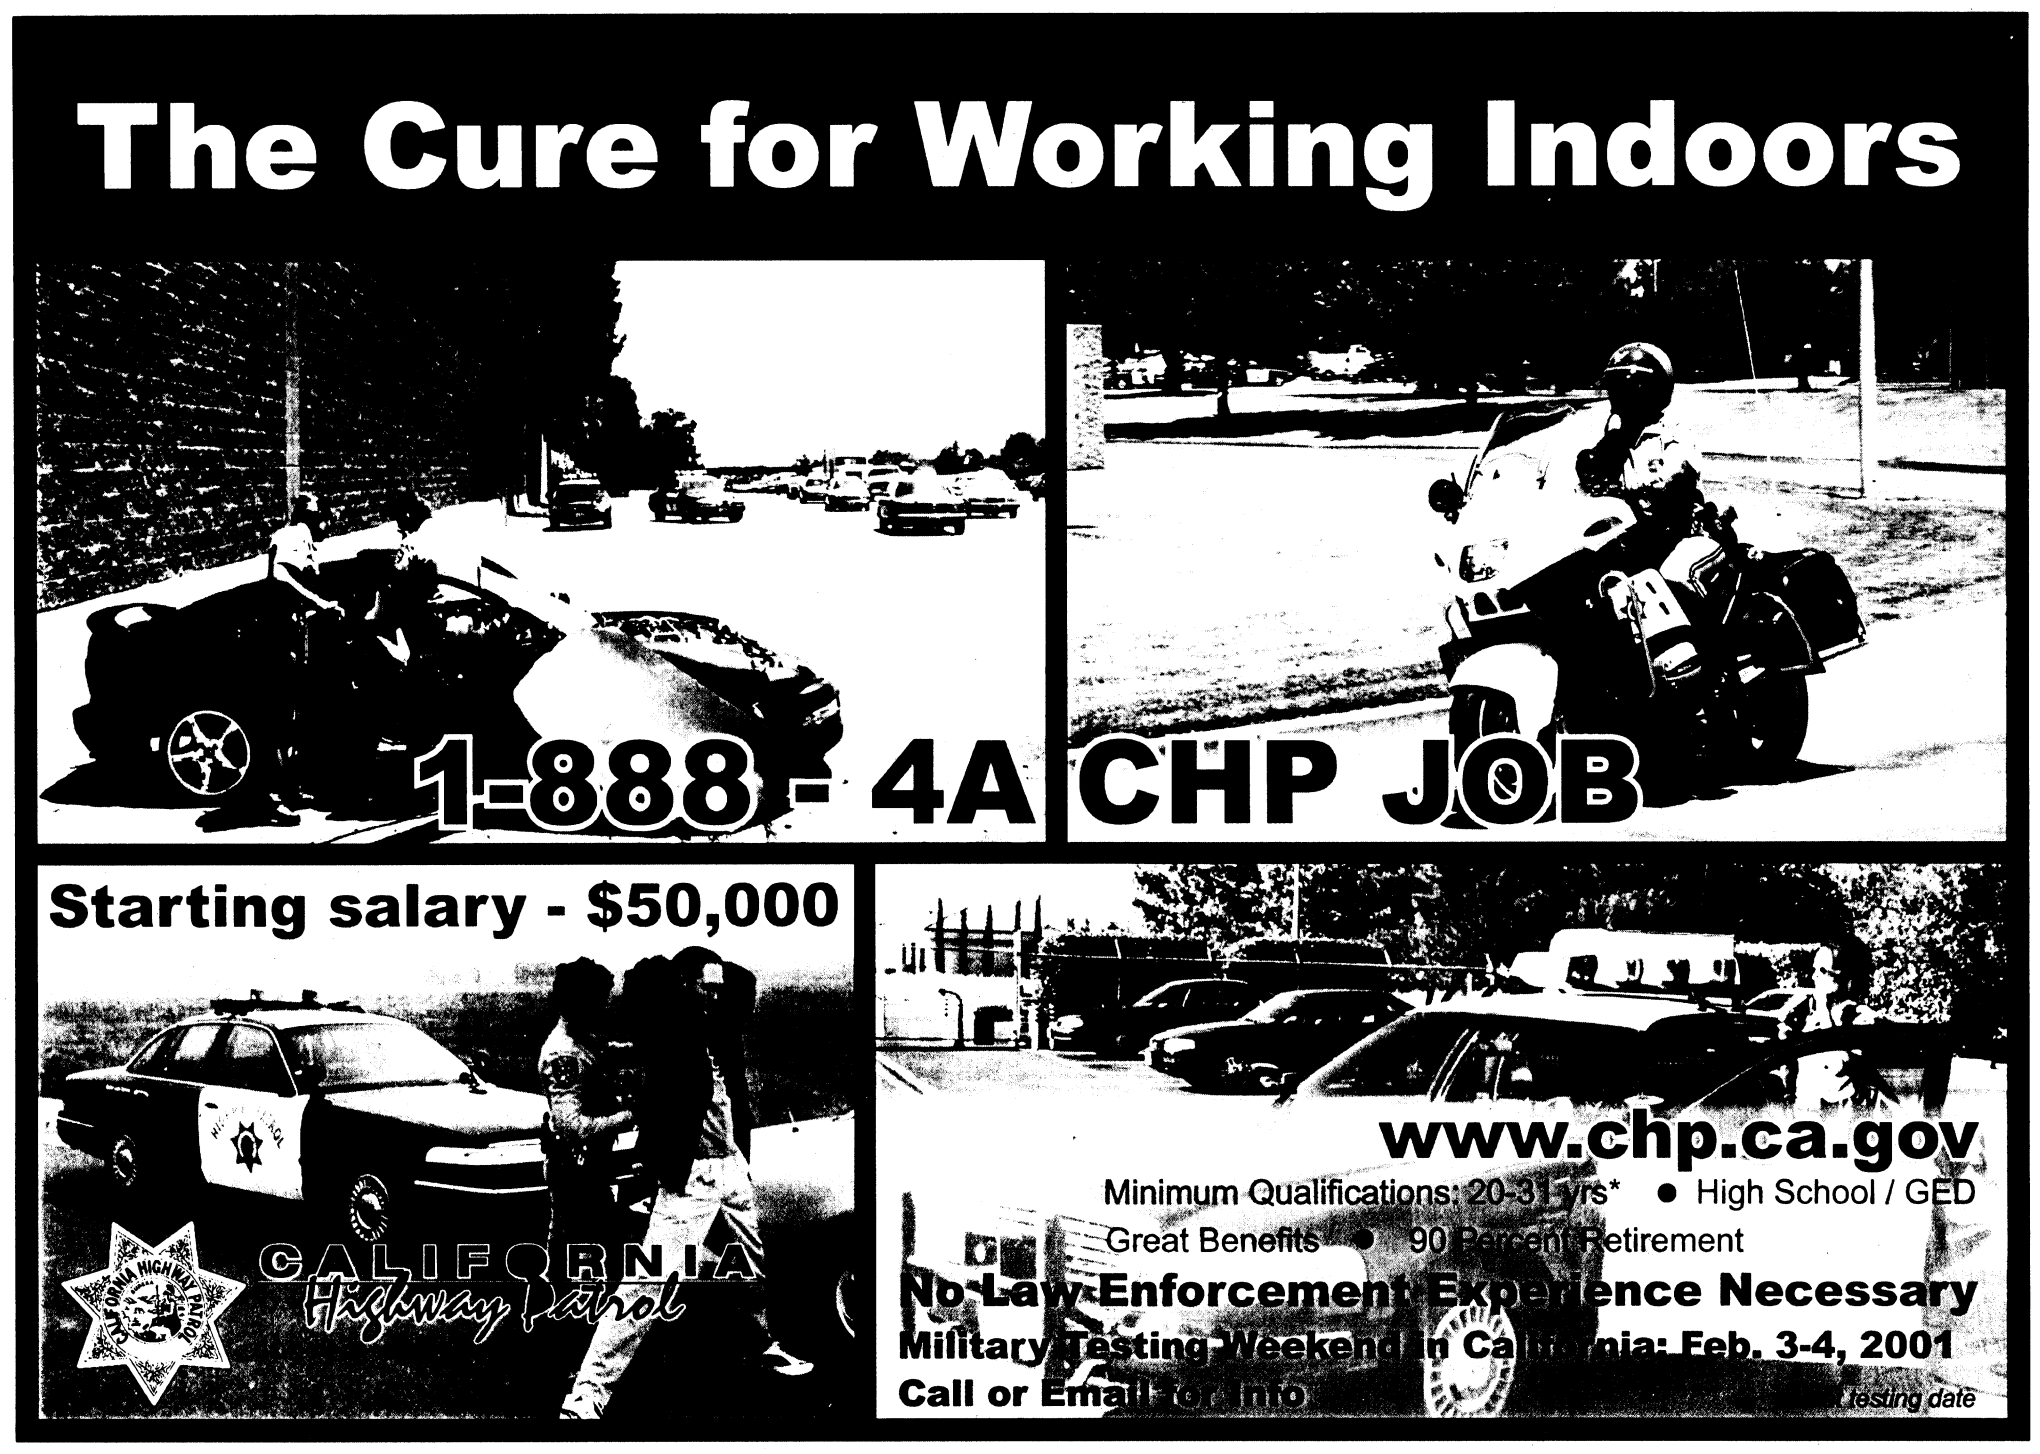
Spencer High School's longtime rival has been Carver High. No other school in the county's rivalry is as emotional as this one. It can be described as a fierce competition between two teams thriving for victory.

When the night of this basketball game finally arrived the gym was immediately packed. No one cared how uncomfortable they were in the stands, because they were concentrating on the highlights of the game. The players were under a huge amount of pressure, due to the fact that they realize one minor mistake could cost them the victory. The players all come from different backgrounds. Spencer, however, being a majority military school, contains either students whose parents are currently in the military or retired. So many of the players have played all around the world. Whereas Carver may have some students who have been around the country as well, but the majority grew up in Columbus.

Even though these two teams may look at each other in disgust, deep down inside they have respect for each other.

That is what makes this rivalry so emotional.

Homecoming pageant was very exciting, according to participants



Kenyetta Clark
Spencer High School

During our homecoming week at Spencer, we accomplished something that has not been done in a long time.

Nominating our class queens and kings on Oct. 25 was not only about popularity, but also style and talent. Competing queens and kings were first placed in front of their class to speech about why they were running for class queen and king and why they would be best in doing so.

The students then voted for the candidate they felt expressed themselves and their ideas best. The top three of each class qualified to be placed in the pageant. The pageant revolved around three categories which were: presentation of the queens, talent portion, modeling of the evening wear and a humanities question. Other questions such as organizational, sports and clubs were also presented.

Oct. 25 was a very exquisite evening under the sole sponsorship of Sonja Coaxum. Many students rely on having another pageant next year.

Muslims observe Fast of Ramadan

Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain's Office

reflections

Ramadan is the ninth month of the lunar calendar. During this month, Muslims observe the Fast of Ramadan, which lasts for the entire month during daylight hours.

Usually Muslims eat breakfast before daylight during Ramadan, and then do not partake of either food or water during daylight hours.

In the evening they eat small meals call Iftar, which means break the fast. During the evening they also visit with friends and family and observe a time of worship and contemplation.

This is a time of strengthening family and community ties.

The first day of fasting this year was Nov. 27.

Ramadan is important to Muslims for another reason. It is the month in which the first verses of the Holy Koran (the divine scripture) were revealed by Allah to the prophet Mohammed.

Prophet Mohammed, who worked as a caravan trader, used to go out from his home in Makkah, from time to time to reflect and meditate in solitude.

He never accepted his people's worship of many gods and felt a need to withdraw and reflect on the one God.

During one of these contemplative sessions in a cave, a voice revealed to him the first verses of the Koran.

The voice was that of the angel Gabriel and he confirmed that Mohammed was selected for an important and challenging mission — he was to call people to monotheism and righteousness.

The Koran is God's word recorded in Arabic and transmitted to humanity through prophet Mohammed, whom Muslims believe to be the last of the prophets.

Some of the benefits realized by Muslims by their fasting are:

• Fasting helps them to feel compassion for those less fortunate, since every day they feel greater appreciation for what they have, due to their feeling of hunger and thirst.

• Fasting builds a sense of self-control and will power, which can be beneficial in dealing with temptations and peer pressure.

• Fasting offers a time for Muslims to purify their bodies as well as their souls, by developing a greater sense of humility, spirituality and community.

A greater sense of generosity and forgiveness is characteristic of Ramadan, which is generally a time of spirituality and fellowship.

Some terms that apply to Ramadan are:

Suhoor — this is the predawn breakfast meal eaten during Ramadan.

Iftar — this is the meal at the end of the daily fast.

It usually begins with fresh fruits, dates and appetizers and includes beverages and a dinner meal.

For more information on Ramadan and the Muslim faith, call the Fort Benning Muslim lay leader, Sgt. Ahmad Abdur-Rashid through Soldiers' Chapel at 544-9601.

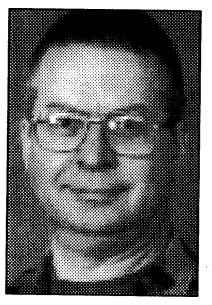
Gamblers can throw it all away

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Family Life Ministries



Excessive gambling disrupts personal, family or vocational pursuits. Social gambling usually occurs with friends or coworkers, lasts for a short period of time and does not exceed predetermined acceptable losses.

However, excessive gambling has pathological effects and affects 1 to 3 percent of the adult population.

Despite the fact that one-third of all excessive gamblers are women, only 2 to 4 percent seek help.

Twenty percent of rehabilitative gamblers have indicated they have attempted suicide when losing from gambling.

For gamblers the love of money is both the source of their evils and the only known solution to their problems (I Timothy 6:10). Excessive gamblers are preoccupied with gambling.

They seek to relive a winning gambling experience. Often they are thinking of ways to get money to gamble or they are planning or handicapping their next venture.

Unfortunately compulsive gamblers need to gamble with increasing amounts of money to get the desired emotional effect.

They may use it as a way of escaping from problems or of alleviating feelings of helplessness, guilt, anxiety or depression.

Knowing their gambling habit is adversely affecting them and their families, excessive gamblers experience repeated unsuccessful efforts to control, cut back, or stop gambling.

They may become restless or irritable when attempting to cut back or stop gambling.

Nevertheless, they look forward to gambling again to win back money lost from a previous gambling venture. Compulsive gamblers risk their relationship with their spouse and family and may jeopardize their job, education or career opportunities by continuing their habit.

As a result they may try to conceal the extent of their involvement with gambling by lying to family members or others.

Some pathological gamblers have committed illegal acts such as forgery, fraud, theft or embezzlement to finance their gambling ventures.

They often rely on others, such as relatives, friends, coworkers and loan sharks to lend them money to relieve a desperate financial crunch caused by gambling.

With help you can overcome excessive gambling. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Fort Benning Soldiers meet president

Olympians visit capital, top Army officials

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Very few Soldiers get to shake hands with their commander-in-chief. But that's exactly what a dozen service members got to do last week. The nine Olympians of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, joined three Olympians of the World Class Athlete Program at the White House and were introduced to the president of the United States.

The Olympians traveled to the nation's capital Nov. 27-29 to meet the president and Pentagon officials as part of Operation Laurel Wreath.

USAMU Olympic shooters who participated were skeet Bronze Medalist Sgt. 1st Class Todd Graves, free rifle shooters Maj. Michael E. Anti, Capt. Glenn A. Dubis and Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Tamas, running target shooter Sgt. 1st Class Lance D. Dement; free pistol shooter Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski, air rifle shooters Staff Sgt. Kenneth A. Johnson and Sgt. Jason A. Parker and double trap shooter Spc. William H. Keever. Army Olympians of the World Class Athlete Program who attended were modern pentathlete Spc. Chad Senior, long jumper Spc. Dawn Burrell and rower Navy Ensign Henry Nuzum.

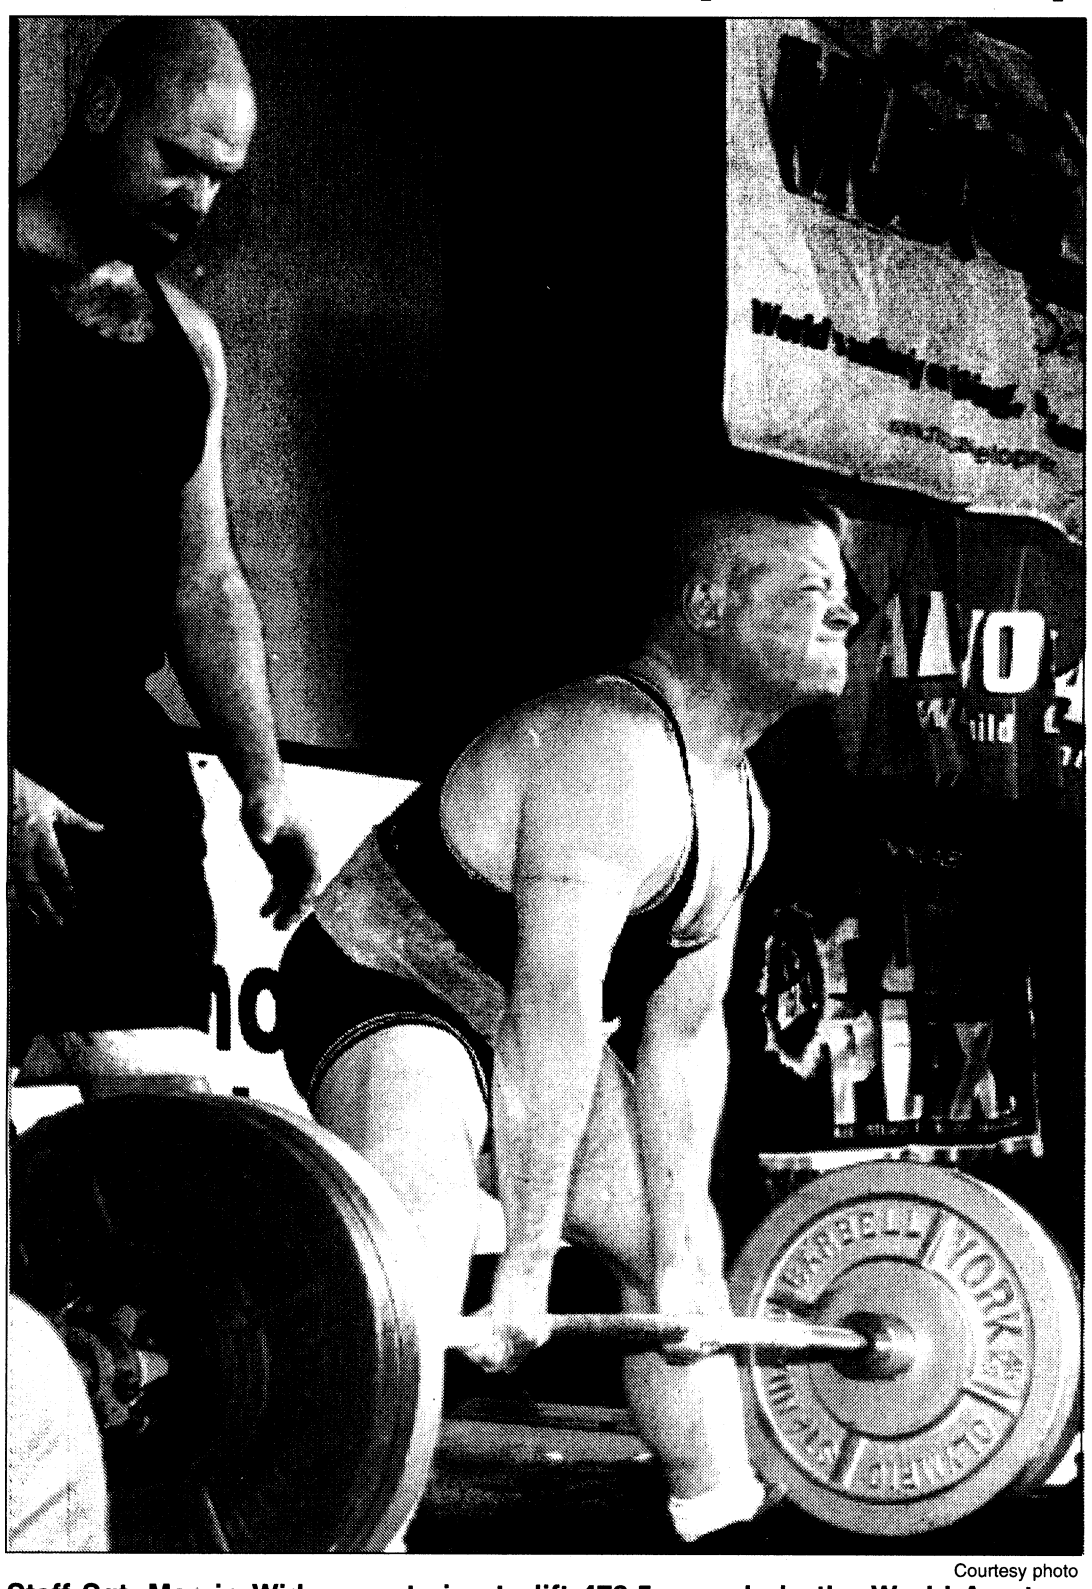
WCAP Olympic alternates who got to attend the Pentagon festivities were boxers Sgts. Deandrey Abron and James Webb, modern pentathletes Capt. Jim Gregory and Spc. Brett Weatherbie, hammer thrower Capt. Gerald Ingalls, wrestlers Sgt. Keith Sieracki and Spc. Mike Vanarsdale and runner 2nd Lt. Amy Ross.

Also participating at the Pentagon were: USAMU International Rifle Coach William E. Krilling, an Olympic shooting official and juror; USAMU Sgt. Maj. Gabriel J. Ossa; WCAP boxing coach Staff Sgt. Basheer Abdullah, U.S. Military Academy track and field coach Jay Quiller, wrestling coach U.S. Marine Corps Capt. Jon Antonelli, and WCAP Commander Capt. Stephanie Tutton and 1st Sgt. Jeffrey Davis of the Olympic Training Center in Colorado, as well as other WCAP and Armed Forces Sports staff members.

The Olympians arrived in Washington, D.C., Nov. 27 and were treated to a pizza party at Generous George's in Alexandria, Va., that evening, hosted by Community and Family Support Center Commander Brig. Gen. Antonio Taguba. The Olympians posed for photos and were interviewed by the members of the Washington media.

The next day, the Olympians went to the Pentagon where they met with their respective service chiefs.

The Army Olympians met with Sergeant Major of the Army Jack L. Tilley, who presented each athlete with a SMA Coin and challenged Burrell to a long-jumping contest in his office.



Ossa presented Tilley with a U.S. Army Recruiting Command shirt, worn by USAMU Soldiers when they are supporting recruiting missions around the country.

"I want to say how grateful I am to the sergeant major of the Army and his staff for providing such a warm reception to the Olympians," Ossa said.

Although the Olympians were next scheduled to meet with Army Secretary

Local Soldier picks up deadlift world record

Courtesy photo

Staff Sgt. Marvin Wideman strains to lift 473.5 pounds in the World Amateur Bench Press and Deadlift Championship Nov. 17 in Reno, Nev. The lift was successful. On the next lift Wideman hoisted 485 pounds for the current world record, smashing the previous record by nearly 100 pounds.

Powerlifter earns world's strongest title

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

He may not be able to leap tall buildings with a single bound, but he can muster the strength to lift a small car off its wheels.

Standing only 4 feet 11 inches tall, Staff Sgt. Marvin Wideman doesn't let anything get in the way of reaching his goal; being able to lift more than 1,500 pounds in a competition.

Wideman, B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, hoisted the world record deadlift in November at the World Amateur Bench press and Deadlift Competition in Reno, Nev.

"It is a goal that I've been trying to reach for some time," he said. "I am always trying to do better than last time. Just to be able to lift that weight and be recognized as a world record holder, I receive a lot of self-pride and self-gratification."

Although he shattered the previous record on his first lift, Wideman tried three more times to better his weight.

"The first and the second lift went up easy," he said. "That's why we (my coach, George Herring, and I) decided to put the weight up to 485. When I lifted it, it didn't go up as easy as I thought it would, so I didn't know I completed the lift till they told me to put it down.

"The crowd was screaming and going crazy, it was a great feeling. It was awesome," he said.

Wideman, an instructor and writer for the AT-4 on Duke Range, got hooked on powerlifting after he graduated from the master fitness school in 1990.

"It's a rush to lift weights that people say is unnatural," Wideman said. "I want to test my body to the ultimate level, and that is to lift as much weight as possible."

Wideman's goals are to squat 600 pounds, bench press 350 pounds and to deadlift 575 pounds totaling just more than three-quarters of a ton.

"I get a lot of personal satisfaction out of lifting," he said. "It also keeps me healthy.

"And a person of my height it helps to be a little stronger," Wideman joked.

Wideman said he never lifted weights before being introduced to the sport, but he was always involved in sports.

"As soon as I got into powerlifting I began competing," he said. "In my first competition I got first place in the Georgia State U.S. Power Lifting Federation Championships in the 132 pound weight class."

And since his first competition, Wideman has competed in a wide variety of competitions.

He has two world championships and four national championships and eight state titles under his belt.

However, his strength and titles don't come without sacrifice.

Wideman was out of competitions for more than a year after he hurt his shoulder from a bad fall, and just two weeks prior to the competition, he pulled a muscle in his back while warming up.

Wideman said that training for the competitions is nearly a full-time job.

"I have been training for this competition since July," he said. "It takes a lot of dedication and self-sacrifice. I can't eat the things I want to eat. I have to spend time in the gym. I have to do the extra work in the gym that most people don't do."

The trips to the gym last one and a half hours to two hours and include lots of lifting, he said.

The extra lifting has caused Wideman to not meet the Army's height and weight standard.

"Actually there is no height and weight standard for me," he joked. I am under the height standard. I have to get taped every time. I find it quite humorous."

He said the tape tests give false readings.

"Every time it comes around, if you were to measure me, it would show I have 23 percent body fat ... when I really have only 17 percent (according to electronic tests)."

Along with training for the competitions, Wideman said he maintains the company PT standards.

"When I get closer to competitions, my (chain-of-command) have been gracious enough to allow me to go to the gym and lift," he said. "They are all real proud of me and what I've done. In fact they have encouraged it from the beginning. They've allowed me to get in there and train with as little distractions as possible."

The work Wideman puts toward weightlifting reflects the type of Soldier he is, 1st Sgt. Anthony LaCour, B Co's., first sergeant, said.

He is one of the best Soldiers

Visitors find slice of heaven found at Butts Mill Farm

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

outdoor corner

Neil and Trish Liechty have carved themselves a little slice of heaven in Pine Mountain — "God's country," they call it — and since 1995, they've shared their fortune with hundreds of thousands of visitors.

Their story really began more than 150 years ago, in 1846, when Butts Mill Farm was first built. It operated as a working farm and grist mill for 100 years, until a flood destroyed its foundation and nearby bridge in the mid-1940s.

The farmland fell into decay until 1994, when the Liechtys saw potential in the forsaken, overgrown parcel of woods just off Highway 18, west of Callaway Gardens in Harris County. They purchased 80 acres of the original farm, including the gristmill, which they've restored and renovated into a beautiful three-story home for their growing family.

Butts Mill is once again a working farm, with an emphasis on family fun and kid-friendly activities. It's open to the public year round, except for Christmas.

Activities include a petting zoo, hayrides, pony rides, horseback riding and lessons, fishing, a playground, volleyball, tubing down the creek, horseshoes and carriage rides on one of five antique carriages.

The Liechtys host school groups, corporate dinners, family reunions and weddings. Though they can, and do, often accommodate more than 2,000 guests, they made our little party of six — two adults and four little girls — feel like we were their only guests.

We opted for an hour long trail ride through the woods, across the creek and over several acres of beautiful, rolling farmland. We rode quarter horses with names like Chief and Cloud and Lady Blaze, each selected by our guide, Anna, to suit our various levels of experience.

Afterward, Anna gave us souvenirs — horse shoes — to remember our day at Butts Mill Farm. I don't think it's something the girls will soon forget.

They're still talking about Georgia, the 150-pound, 11-month-old brown bear the Liechtys have raised since it was a tiny cub. And they loved the playground, especially its trampolines and jungle gyms.

I liked the covered bridge. It spans a rippling brook, no more than two feet at its deepest point. They've added a couple of porch swings under the bridge. That's where I'll be curled up with a good book, come spring, when the water's warm enough for the kids to play in.

We'll bring a picnic lunch — something the Liechtys encourage — and a snack for the animals. There are goats, sheep, pigs, rabbits, geese, cows and even a llama.

A day of fun at the farm costs $7.95 for adults and $5.95 for children 2 and older. Horseback riding is extra, depending on the length of your ride.

Aubrey Coovrey (left) and Marin Knisheern visit Lady Blaze at Butts Mill Farm.

Butts Mill also serves up Southern-style dinners, like barbecue or cajun boil, for weddings, reunions and unit parties. While the kids have the run of the farm, the adults enjoy karaoke and inflatable bull rides in the barn.

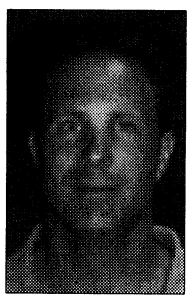
No scents just good common sense

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Outdoor Recreation

Ideally I would have liked to have written this article during early deer season, but scent control is important at any time; and probably one of the key reasons for unseen deer.



The deer's nose is its best defense, especially against hunters moving on the ground. I am not exactly sure how scientists determine this, but it is said the whitetail deer can smell 40 times better than a human. And they can process and identify over 25 different scents at one time. Few animals have a better sense of smell than the whitetail.

When it comes to hunting, there are two major areas for scent control; the scents we use to fool or lure the whitetail and the measures taken to cover the scent of gear and ourselves.

There are a variety of scents available to lure the whitetail, but I'll touch on a few basic common scents.

Cover scents: There are more than 21 different cover scents available.

Cover scents are used to blend or cover our scent with existing smells to confuse the wily whitetail. Some common cover scents are fox urine, pine, persimmon, skunk, earth, and odor eliminator, to name a few. Cover scents are normally sprayed directly on the hunter's clothing and boots.

Some work in different geographical locations and not in others. For example, persimmon scent wouldn't work well in Colorado, because persimmons aren't common there.

I have tried every different cover scent I can get my hands on and have found scent free is the best and most cost effective. There are some simple measures to take to be scent free, which I will discuss later in the article. I have known hunters who have even gone to the extent of rolling in the mud to cover their scent or dipping their clothes in gooey pine sap. As you can guess these alternatives can get quite messy.

Lure scents and dispensers: There are many more lure scents than cover scents; everything from peanut to dominant buck scent. All attempt to achieve one thing, which is to gain the whitetail's interest. All are fun to experiment with and some work very well, but some have cost me several large bucks. Others double as lure and cover scents, and have caused hunters serious injury.

For instance, one hunter tried wearing dominant buck lure on his clothes and met the real dominant buck on the way to his stand. Another hunter drenched himself in doe estrus scent. If you have ever seen what a buck can do to a deer decoy or the real thing, I wouldn't suggest trying this. Again, scent free is the way to go.

Most of the lure scents need to be dispensed. Under most circumstances, film containers with cotton balls or the new Tinks dispenser bottles will work fine. There are also some elaborate dispensers that are battery operated and heated. Others are lit with a match and burn like incense. Some hunters choose to dispense scent with a drag. A drag can be made with a scent free sock and string if you can find a scent that works.

I usually don't use drags, but experimented with one this year. The drag came in a nifty little bottle and stated it contained a real tarsal gland and buck urine. I followed the instructions on the bottle dragging the thing a mile to my stand, then hung it up in a tree where I could see it. Thirty minutes before sunset a small herd of deer approached my stand. I could see the lead spike 100 meters away. Within 30 meters of the tarsal gland, he began to curl his lips and stomp, alerting the other deer with him, one of which was a 10 point buck. If that tarsal gland had not been there, I probably could have taken the larger buck. Oh well, so much for testing new stuff! That $12 item went in the trash. The Tinks brand lures seem to be the most reliable. But, I am sure there are many others that work well also. Scent free probably would have worked just as well. The only time I had significant success has been during the rut using Tinks 69. Several times bucks have put their nose right on the scent bottle. Whatever is in that little bottle the deer really want it.

Scent free: Scent free refers to your body, clothes and equipment. Let's start with the body. There are a variety of scent free soaps, shampoos and clothes detergents on the market, all of which seem to work well. They are somewhat costly however. If you refuse to pay $6 for a bar of soap, Ivory bar soap seems to work fine. Just stay away from the perfume stuff. I personally will not enter the woods to hunt deer without bathing, even if it means taking a dip in the creek or pond. Many hunters will argue this, saying they even smoke in their stands. Maybe that camouflages human scent somehow, but I doubt it.

Some of the following methods to keep clothing and equipment scent free have been passed down by the old timers. Wear calf high rubber boots for starters. My personal experience with this was two years ago. A buddy and I were scouting, and for some reason he decided to wear sandals. At the time I really didn't think anything of it. It was 11 a.m.

One of the places we looked had quite a bit of deer sign. So I decided to go ahead and hang my tree stand. Later that afternoon I hunted the stand watching a nice eight point buck circle the area with his nose on the ground. At 30 yards out he crossed my buddy's sandal tracks, he snorted and almost did a complete flip trying to get away. Even after six hours the deer could smell my buddy's scent.

Rubber boots would have prevented that.

Some hunters take great care in preparing their clothes with cover scents and the like. I prefer the basic pine scent or no scent. I wash my clothes in Tide-free detergent and let them line dry, then break a few pine branches and place all in a scent-free bag. Sometimes after that I put baking soda on my clothes, which also keeps them scent-free.

The scent-lock suit is another excellent alternative. It is charcoal lined and comes in many levels of insulation for various climates. Ranging from $200 to $450, these costly suits are a definite advantage for the hunter. After observing the success rate of several buddies over the past few years, I too am the proud owner of one.

There are many different techniques and gadgets to experiment with, but most efforts are worth the reward. So the next time you go to the quick stop for that sausage biscuit in your hunting clothes, remember sausage is not a good cover scent. Instead, use good scents.

Stinkin' experience leaves local hunter baffled

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

"You stink," I was told Saturday evening while out hunting.

This totally caught me off guard. I looked around to see if flies were circling my head like Pigpen from the Peanuts. There were none.

"What do you mean I stink?" I thought to myself.

My hunting excursion began nearly three hours earlier when I walked into my favorite hunting area. I picked out a tree to sit under that offered me a good view of a well-used trail. The wind was in my face, so all I needed to do was sit and wait.

Shortly after 5 p.m., the sun began to set and the time for deer to leave their beds was at hand.

Soon I heard the unmistakable sound of a deer blowing directly behind me. It sounded like someone sneezing.

My heart stopped: I was caught. I turned around slowly. So slow it took me more than a minute to turn around fully and get my rifle into a shooting position.

There they were, two yearlings grazing on the grass. They were too small for me, so I watched them graze until they disappeared into the thick brush.

Within a minute I heard a shot close by. Hmm, I wasn't alone. I called out to the other hunter to let him know there were others in the area.

Hearing him climb down from his treestand, I made my way over to him to see if he got what he was shooting.

There were several deer in the group I watched, and he harvested a large doe. After a quick hello and how did you do he gave me the unforgettable, "You stink."

My mind drifted back to the present. What does he mean I stink?

I took a shower shortly before heading to my hunting area. I knew I hadn't sweated in the short walk in to my stand, so what in the world was this guy talking about. Apparently this guy has absolutely no people skills.

"Yeah I could smell ya the whole time you were sittin' there," he said, pointing to where I was sitting; more than 75 yards away.

Now I was starting to get mad. This guy must want a fat lip or something.

My only response was a very surprised, "Really."

"Yeah," he said as he folded up his tree stand. "I can smell the soap or cologne you are wearing."

This caught me equally off guard. I was wearing neither.

OK, so the deer caught my scent, but that was because they were downwind, or was it?

Yes they were, but as I sniffed my hunting jacket I realized, "Whew! I do stink."

No, not the stink most people think of, but I was definitely Mountain Fresh, the fragrance of my favorite fabric softener.

Why do they call it Mountain Fresh anyway? I live in the mountains and not once have I smelled anything like the fabric softener.

So the guy was right. I did stink. While washing my hunting clothes after my last outing I threw them in with the rest of my laundry by mistake, along with a sheet of fabric softener.

How stupid of me. I know better. Usually I hang my hunting clothes on a line and let them air dry. This allows them to dry without attracting human smells.

Many people use scent stopper products.

They are soaps and sprays that help eliminate odors from clothing. My brother swears by these products.

On a recent hunting trip an elk walked within mere yards of my brother before he was winded.

The man who I met in the woods that day also uses the scent stopper products and has had great success.

I have always thought of the scent stopper products like camouflage toilet paper.

Sure the scent stoppers may be nice to have and they help, but they are not necessary. I have to admit I have never tried them.

Some people swear that washing their clothes in baking soda works the best, others say the scent stopper products are the only way to go.

Still others put their hunting clothes in a large bag with freshly cut foliage, like small pine boughs.

I prefer to just hang my clothes outside to dry.

Whatever method of camouflaging scents are used, ideal stands positions should be downwind of where the animals are expected, and movement should be kept to a minimum.

No matter how well scent blockers work, deer, along with most animals have a keen sense of sight and can spot the slightest movement.

By taking the proper precautions, hopefully others will not have the same stinking problem that I did.

Olympians: Meet president, Army officials in D.C.

Louis Caldera, since he was unavailable, Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs Patrick Henry greeted the Olympians and gave them coins from the Secretary of the Army.

Ossa presented Henry with a USAMU bullet plaque and Tutton presented a plaque with photos of the WCAP Olympians to him.

"I appreciate the support of the service chiefs," Dubis said. "It gives me confidence to know that what we do is of interest and value to the Army."

Afterward, the Soldiers met with Army Vice Chief of Staff Gen. John M. Keane who also re-enlisted Tamas in a ceremony in his office.

"The re-enlistment by General Keane was the high point in my career," Tamas said. "I re-enlisted indefinitely so it was great that my last re-enlistment would be by the vice chief of staff of the Army."

Afterward, all the military Olympians met with Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen and Deputy Defense Secretary Rudy De Leon who congratulated them for their making the Olympic Team and thanked them for representing their country and the U.S. military so well at the Games in Sydney. Cohen told the Olympians that everyone in the Department of Defense is proud of the job they did as great athletes.

"Meeting the Secretary of Defense was great," Graves said. "He was a real likeable guy."

Parker agreed. "Meeting the Secretary of Defense was the best part of the trip," Parker said. "He gave a good speech. Meeting all the service chiefs was great. It was nice that we got that opportunity.

"It's something I'll remember for a long time."

"Going to the Pentagon and meeting the vice chief of staff of the Army and the Secretary of Defense was great," Anti said. "It's an honor that they would take time out of their busy schedule to spend time with us."

After lunch in the Pentagon Executive Dining Room, all the military Olympians got a guided tour of the Pentagon, and met with Marine Corps Commandant Gen. James L. Jones.

After visiting some of the Washington, D.C., monuments, the Olympians visited Army Times Publishing Company where they were feted at a small reception by the newspaper staff.

The Olympians signed autographs and posed for photos with the staff and their family members.

The military Olympians then joined more than 600 members of the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic teams at their hotel for a reception hosted by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

The next day, the military athletes, as part of the U.S. Olympic Team, met President Bill Clinton, First Lady Hillary Clinton and their daughter, Chelsea, at the White House. After the Clintons posed for photos on the White House South Lawn with the Olympians, the athletes got to go inside the White House where the president shook each of their hands and congratulated them for a job well done.

"The trip to the White House was a great experience," Graves said. "A whole lot of people don't get to meet the commander-in-chief. It was a great feeling to shake the president's hand."

"It was very humbling to visit the leaders of the country," Szarenski said. "The most memorable part of the trip was seeing the president. It was a fun experience and I really enjoyed it."

Dubis echoed their comments and added that when he shook hands with the president, to thank him, he handed him one of his trading cards.

He said the president thanked him in return.

in the company, LaCour said.

"He is one outstanding NCO," he said.

LaCour said Wideman's accomplishments motivate his company.

"When (the Soldiers) see him strive to be the best, they try to do better. Guys like Sergeant Wideman are who give the Army a better name.

"He goes for first and isn't satisfied unless he is first," LaCour added.

His drive to be the best even leaves Wideman awestruck.

"It amazes me each time I go into the gym and lift the weight I do," he said. "I have yet to reach my limits. There are other people in the world who can lift what I can, but for me to do it, that's exciting.

TO OUR MILITARY PATIENTS

We welcome new and previously established military patients to our practice. Those who have seen us previously at Martin Army Hospital and wish to continue with us should call our office to schedule appointments, as we will no longer be seeing any patients at the Martin Army Hospital Cardiology Clinic. You may continue to use Martin Army Hospital for all other services as usual, however. Patients who wish to be referred to our practice may obtain referrals from their primary care physicians, but referrals are not necessary. We accept Medicare, private insurance, and Tricare Standard. However, effective December 22, 2000 we will no longer accept Tricare Prime and Tricare Extra.

Call (706) 324-7377 for appointments.

Brightens rooms.

Brightens futures.

Give a Gift That Brightens More Than Just a Room.

Think about it. Most gifts are pretty unimaginative. A lamp turns on. It turns off. Pretty exciting stuff. And there are some gifts that no one knows what they're supposed to do.

But give Savings Bonds, and you'll be giving the gift of future possibilities—from a down payment on a car to help with college tuition. With eight denominations to choose from, there's a size for every occasion. You can select the popular Series EE Bond or the inflation-protected I Bond. They're available through most banks, where you work, or automatically through the new Savings Bonds EasySaver℠ Plan at www.easysaver.gov.

Call 1-800-4US BOND for recorded rate information, or write to:
Savings Bonds Pocket Guide,
Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328.

After 11 years, an exchange agreement was signed Wednesday morning between the city of Columbus and Fort Benning that moves them one step closer to the actual exchange of deeds.

Representatives from five American Indian nations also signed the historic agreement, which marks the first time provisions of the Graves Protection and Repatriation Act have been attached to land that will pass from federal to private control.

The city will deed to the post 2,156 acres in Chattahoochee County, the South Tract, for 2,124 acres of federal property off Schatulga Road, the North Tract, which Columbus plans to use for industrial development.

The city will also give the Army $3.8 million in the deal because of the difference in real estate value between the two parcels. Fort Benning is making a strong argument to have that money designated for use in environmental projects here on the installation.

The land exchange agreement will now go to the Army Corps of Engineers for final review and then to the Secretary of the Army for his signature, a process that could mean it will be up to three months before a deed exchanges hands, Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters said.

"This memorandum of agreement today should be the last hurdle in a long process," Peters said. "We've had a lot of interest in the land already, and we are looking for high-tech, environmentally clean businesses to come in."

More than 120 people, many who had worked on the project during the years, gathered in the Regimental Room of the Officers' Club to witness the signing of the agreement. Other guests included U.S. Rep. Mac Collins and Maj. Gen. Phillip Anderson of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, Fort Benning's commanding general, thanked the representatives from each American Indian nation for their

Secretary of Army to speak

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army School of the Americas will close its doors today ending tradition of fostering democracy in the Latin American region.

Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera will be the keynote speaker at the school's closing ceremony at 10 a.m. in Ridgway Hall.

During the past 16 years since the School of Americas moved to Fort Benning from Panama, its mission has been to reduce human rights abuses in Latin America while fostering democracy in many of those countries, said the school's commandant, Col. Glenn Weidner.

Weidner, who has been commandant since July, 1998, said the human rights situation in many Latin American countries has "improved dramatically" because the United States has demanded of its partners more accountability.

He said the school is one way the United States has remained engaged in Anthrax shortage stalls shots

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The Department of Defense has called for another slowdown in its anthrax vaccine immunization program due to a dwindling supply of the vaccine.

In a press conference Nov. 30, DoD officials announced the vaccinations are now authorized only for Soldiers in or deploying to Southwest Asia, the high-threat area surrounding Iraq.

It is the third slowdown in the inoculation program this year. In July, the scope was narrowed to only individuals in South Korea and Southwest Asia. This latest move means personnel going to Korea will no longer receive the series of six shots — a change that will save the Pentagon 12,500 doses a month.

The slowdown is the result of the inability of the sole contractor, Bioport of Lansing, Mich., to gain Food and Drug Administration approval for its production facility.

The newest policy is necessary to conserve available vaccine supply while protecting those service members at greatest risk and maintaining a contingency reserve for unexpected domestic or terrorist requirements, according to the DoD.

The Pentagon reported that approximately 5,000 doses each month will be given to personnel in or headed to Southwest Asia.

"We are focusing our vaccination efforts on those members serving in areas deemed to be at greatest risk, and that is Southwest Asia. We take this action to responsibly manage our limited supply of anthrax vaccine while we continue our efforts toward FDA licensing of the anthrax

Civilian aides tour post on fact-finding mission

Visitors learn about Army readiness

A group of civilian aides to the secretary of the Army paid a fact-finding visit to Fort Benning last week. From Friday morning until Saturday afternoon, the aides from more than 15 states toured different sites on post and were briefed on the current state of Army training and readiness.

"The main focus was how we prepare and process Soldiers for deployment overseas and the overall mission of Fort Benning," said CASA escort officer, Maj. Steve Bapp, operations officer, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Officer Candidate School.

CASAs are selected by the secretary of the Army and serve as his personal representatives and official Army spokespersons.

"The more we know about the plans and problems, the better we're able to ascertain ways we can be helpful to address those problems," said retired Lt. Col. Felker Ward, Georgia's CASA.

The key stops during their visit to Fort Benning were the U.S. Army Infantry Center, the U.S. Army School of the Americas, the CONUS Replacement Center, the 29th Infantry Regiment and the Theater Specific Individual Readiness Training site.

This visit, along with a recent similar stop at Fort Stewart, Ga., was enlightening for the group, said Dave Meaders, deputy public affairs officer and CASA coordinator, 1st U.S. Army.

"Somewhere within the confines of Fort Benning ..."

I read that in the Ledger-Enquirer last week, in yet another letter to the editor from a SOA-Watch protester. It smacks of something straight from a comic book: "Somewhere in the bowels of Gotham City ..."

In fact these letters are usually more fun to read than the comic page.

The gist of the letter was this: The writer had come to the conclusion, after taking part in last month's protest, that the people of Georgia are too good to have "the growing cancer" that is the School of the Americas in their midst. "The SOA is located somewhere within the confines of Fort Benning," it read.

Well, actually the U.S. Army School of the Americas is located right smack dab in the middle of Main Post. It's that big pink building — hard to miss. And if the writer would like to come visit any time other than the last part of November, I'm thinking he'd have no trouble finding it.

The word "confines," by definition, means to shut or keep in; prevent from leaving." Other than the fact we Bayonet writers are chained to our desks every Thursday, I'm hard pressed to think of another place that accurately fits that description. Maybe Sand Hill or Ranger School? A holding cell at the MP station?

As for the other part, that "growing cancer" thing, well that's a very serious accusation, so I headed over to the hospital to get a medical expert's opinion.

I ran into a couple of teens volunteering in the Central Materiel Section. No they hadn't heard anything about cancer, and they didn't have time to chat. They were too busy doing the jobs that never get noticed unless they go undone.

So I went upstairs to the pediatric ward where I ran into Beverly Brooks. She hadn't heard anything about this "growing cancer" either, she said, as she breezed past, in a hurry to make her usual rounds to deliver teddy bears to the little ones spending their holiday in the hospital.

Finding no answers there, I headed over to the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's medical platoon. These guys lead the way. If anyone would know about a cancerous epidemic, it would be them.

They had no idea what I was talking about. Not a clue. And anyway, they were really in a hurry — on a mission — to deliver packages of presents and bags of groceries to a family of six in Columbus who had fallen on tough times.

I'd almost given up, when on the way back to work, I passed a band of renegade students from the School of the Americas.

Of course! The heart of the problem lies right there at the source of all this turmoil. I followed these guys til I caught up with them just over the border, in Phenix City, where they were helping build a house for Habitat for Humanity. They knew nothing about a "growing cancer."

Knowing all the really good gossip gets tossed around at the beauty shop, I stopped by the main PX to see if my hairdresser had heard anything. She hadn't.

But she gave me the scoop on Elizabeth Gladden, a mutual friend, who's spending her holiday touring local nursing homes with a group of little ballerinas. Beth's got four children of her own and her husband's in Korea. But rather than wallow in self-pity, she's bringing a little holiday cheer to those less fortunate.

Good stuff, but hardly of the "growing cancer" magnitude. So I drove over to Wilson Elementary School, to see if anyone there had heard anything. I couldn't talk over the din of kids gathered in the foyer to pack baby bundles to send to Haiti. I left there ready to give up.

I had one last trick up my sleeve, so I stopped by to see Valerie Chinn, over on Rainbow Avenue.

The commander's wife always has the 4-1-1. But Val was busy with a kitchen full of women baking and wrapping goodies for the single Soldiers who aren't going home for Christmas.

I give up. They say no news is good news, so there you have it. I'm happy to report no serious evil lurking about — no "growing cancer" on Fort Benning.

Just a very contagious virus running rampant all over post. I

Help take care of Army family

commentary

Recently a letter written by a 16-year-old girl was published in The Bayonet and then began circulating through the e-mail system at Fort Benning.

It was addressed to her brother's battalion commander. Her brother had died while serving in the military, and she wanted to express her gratitude to his unit for their support and caring during a very difficult time.

She was deeply moved by the military honors given during his memorial service, which sparked her appreciation for the military. There were many important thoughts she had shared, but one of the most important was how she viewed the Army as one big family.

Each day we come to Fort Benning to work as a team.

We provide support to one another, both military and civilians alike, to accomplish our daily missions.

As coworkers, we confide in one another, ask for guidance or advice, and sometimes simply share a good laugh. We endure promotions, retirements, field training, disappointments and tragedies with one another. Through it all we rely on each other as members of the same organization, but in a larger sense, as a family.

This is the season when most people take time to celebrate the holidays by giving gifts and sharing their blessings with family members. Some leave the area to visit loved ones located in other cities or states.

There are, however, Soldiers who will not be rushing off to airports or bus terminals to go home for the holidays.

Instead, these Soldiers will be here, at Fort Benning or in the surrounding areas, alone for the holidays. There is something that can be done to help those Soldiers out.

It is our responsibility to help our fellow Soldiers and civilian workers during this holiday season.

One way is to invite them to have dinner for the holiday with you. It isn't a difficult task and many people are already planning to have a feast for their families. Why not add one more plate?

Some folks who are going out of town for the holidays may be able to bring a friend along with them. It is an easy fix to a small problem and gives not only a good warm feeling in our own hearts, but to those invited as well. After all, most people will not ask for an invitation to your house, but appreciate one that is offered.

During the hustle and bustle of shopping, wrapping, and preparing our houses for guests, it is important to take time to assist those in our military community.

As a one big military family, we can all help others enjoy this holiday season with us.

Soldiers still needing some place to go for Christmas can call Brian Mock at 682-3803 by Dec. 22.

Music puts balance in season

Lori Egan

commentary

It seems as if the holiday season begins earlier and earlier each year and I never have enough time to get everything done before Christmas.

The stores start catering to Christmas shoppers before Halloween. For a person who doesn't start any holiday shopping until Dec. 23 — at the earliest — this seems to be a bit excessive.

Neighbors begin decorating their homes for Christmas Thanksgiving Day. Windows turn into gift-wrapped packages and lights drip like icicles off roofs.

Thanksgiving traditions for many include shopping for a Christmas tree the day after Thanksgiving or getting up extra early to be at the mall before 6 a.m. for the best buy on the year's hottest toy.

When I was a child we didn't decorate the tree until two weeks before Christmas.

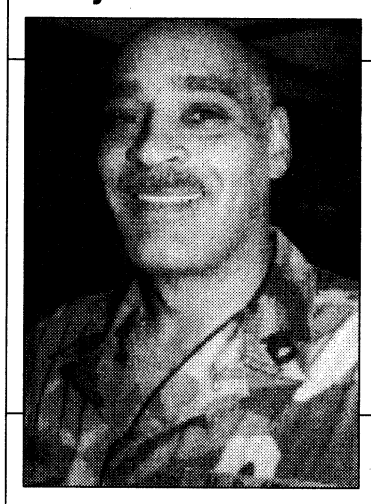
My mom would put Christmas music on the console turntable and Nat King Cole would sing about chestnuts roasting and Bing Crosby was dreaming about a White Christmas. He wasn't alone. My brothers, sisters and I would join in and living in Idaho a white Christmas was a possibility.

One of my favorite things about the holidays is the music. I listen to Christmas music year-round and sing We Three Kings during long rides when the car radio won't pick up a station.

I love Christmas music and I took the time from my hectic schedule to listen to the Infantry Band play Christmas music at three separate occasions this year: Their first Christmas Concert at Three Arts Theatre, the annual Bi-City Parade and at the Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Tuesday. Wow! These band folks can play! They are a real asset to the tricommunity area.

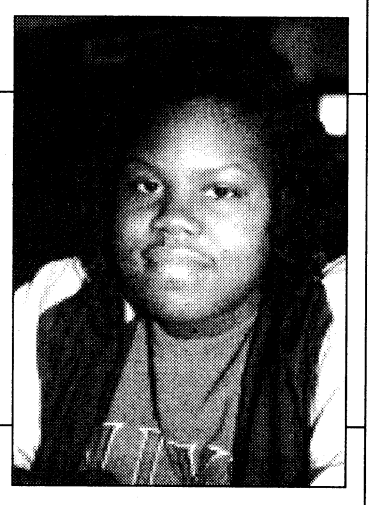
The concert at the Three Arts Theatre was wonderful. The music the band performed appealed to a wide audience.

My 8-year-old liked A Charlie Brown Christmas arrangement best while more sophisticated listeners enjoyed the Russian Christmas Music. Since I am traditionalist when it comes to Christmas music my personal favorite was the arrangement of more traditional songs in A Christmas Festival.



After the concert, the parade and the tree-lighting ceremony my daughter, who complained about going, thanked me for taking her to listen to the music and said she had fun.

Whether its Handel's Messiah or the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, Christmas music always puts me in a merrier mood. Even Granny getting run over by a reindeer puts a smile on my face.



For people who complain about the commercialism of the holidays listening to Christmas music is one of the ways to put Christ's presence back into the season.

Trainees get flu shots

Vaccine given first to at-risk populations

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Each holiday season there seems to be one hard-to-find item for which people search high and low. In the preventive health arena this year, flu shots are ranking up there with the Furbies and Tickle Me Elmos of yesteryear.

Trainees at Sand Hill received Christmas gifts in the form of flu shots this week from Martin Army Community Hospital's Preventive Health Service and the Department of Family Practice and Community Medicine.

The influenza vaccine was given to Soldiers, drill sergeants and other cadre at the Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade just in time for the holiday Exodus leave, which starts Monday.

Because trainee populations are at higher risk for epidemic influenza, staff from the hospital began vaccinating the Sand Hill Soldiers Dec. 8. The inoculations should end today.

"Medically, this is important to reduce the likelihood that this population of more than 9,000 individuals will return to Fort Benning infected with influenza, which could lead to a significant outbreak," said Maj. Bryan Alsip, chief, Preventive Medicine.

While flu shots have become routine for many people in recent years, especially those at risk for respiratory problems, this year has been anything but routine due to a delay in the availability of the vaccine.

The Centers for Disease Control encourages health care providers and the public "to be patient, but persistent in their efforts to get flu vaccine."

The Department of Defense developed a prioritization plan in September, which Martin Army has followed in dispensing the vaccine, starting with the first 1,500 doses received. These were given to the operational military personnel who were on 24-hour alert status.

Recently, the hospital received about 10,000 doses. Health care workers with direct patient contact were vaccinated Dec. 4-8, followed by the trainees this week.

"Any remaining vaccine will be reconsolidated and distributed to various clinics to begin vaccinating high-risk patients, only until we receive more vaccine supplies. Details will be announced when these become available," Alsip said.

Fortunately, the hospital received the bulk of the vaccine it had ordered for the year on Tuesday afternoon, and Alsip plans to announce in next week's The Bayonet a schedule of dates and times when vaccinations will be available to eligible beneficiaries in the various health clinics on post.

The flu season runs from October to March, and Alsip said, "Influenza vaccine administered later in the season will still provide substantial protective benefits."

Alsip recommends the vaccine for anyone, unless medically contraindicated, who would like to reduce the likelihood of becoming ill from influenza.

"Any opportunity to receive the vaccine should be taken," Alsip said.

Other basic preventive measures individuals can take include avoiding or limiting contact with ill persons and washing your hands frequently, Alsip said.

"Influenza viruses usually are spread by droplets and aerosols produced by an infected person who is coughing or sneezing. Anyone who is coughing or sneezing should cover his or her nose and mouth with a handkerchief to limit the spread of the virus," he said.

So far this season, the hospital has not noticed any significant numbers of influenza cases, Alsip said.

In addition to vaccinating the trainees, the hospital has set up a Sand Hill infirmary at the 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment.

The 60-bed facility, created through the efforts of the Department of Family Practice and Community Medicine and the commanders at Sand Hill, will house basic trainees with acute minor illnesses for which there is limited space at Martin Army, Alsip said.

"In the event of a large outbreak of disease, this facility could also be expanded to accommodate up to 200 Soldiers. This would be very useful for isolating patients to help contain the spread of an infectious disease," Alsip said.

A CLOSER LOOK

- Minimize contact with ill people.
- Wash your hands frequently.
- Cover your mouth when coughing or sneezing.
- The influenza virus spreads by droplets and aerosols produced by infected people coughing or sneezing.

input in the cultural resources agreement.

"This agreement reflects the mutual respect and understanding we have," Le Moyne said.

The American Indian leaders who represented their tribes at the signing were Mikko Clayton Sylestine, Alabama Coushatta Tribe of Texas; Rena Duncan, Chickasaw Nation; A.D. Ellis, second chief of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation; Fred McGhee, chairman of the Poarch Band of Creek Indians; and James E. Billie, chairman of the Seminole Tribe of Florida.

Duncan, director of cultural resources for the Chickasaw Nation, traveled from Oklahoma to witness the event. She will take home a copy of the document to be signed by her nation's chairman.

"This is precedent setting. It's a very good day for Native Americans because of the protection of our cultural resources and sites, which are national treasures for the U.S. as a whole, not just Native Americans," she said.

"This agreement can now be used as a precedent for other entities who are faced with having to do the same thing," Duncan said.

The agreement spells out how American Indian cultural artifacts and human remains discovered on the land are to be handled. The covenants will pass with the transfer of the land and obligate the city to protect nine American Indian sites on the North Tract and to consult with the tribes if preservation is not feasible.

"This is a historic event for Indians, as well as the the U.S. military, the federal government and the city of Columbus. Today marks the first time in U.S. history that we have been able to make the process work," said Dr. Patricia Wickman, historic preservation officer for the Seminole Tribe of Florida.

"I'm talking about the process of taking a piece of land out of federal ownership, putting it into the hands of the city and on into the hands of private developers, with permanent covenants attached to the land that will protect the interests of the Native Americans who lived here for 500 years. This is tremendous," Wickman said.

The Advisory Council of Historic Preservation and the Georgia State Historic Preservation Office acted as consulting parties to the agreement. Dr. James Huhta signed the memorandum of agreement for the Advisory Council; and Ray Luce represented the state's historic preservation office.

"This is a great celebration," said Col. John Mitchell, former garrison commander. "Not only have we moved toward completion of a land exchange, but we have developed new protocols for working through sensitive issues. This process and the completion of an agreement will serve us well in the future."

Trainees to head home for holidays

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The first chartered buses carrying trainees from Sand Hill will arrive at the Atlanta Hartsfield International Airport at 4 a.m. Monday. There will be close to 60 drill sergeants and hundreds of volunteers there ready to assist them as they leave on holiday Exodus.

Fort Benning's trainees will join those from other Training and Doctrine Command posts in the region — Fort Gordon, Ga., and Fort Jackson, S.C. — at the airport during a three-day window.

Mary Lou Austin, executive director of the USO Center at the airport, has witnessed more than 20 of these annual green-suited pilgrimages.

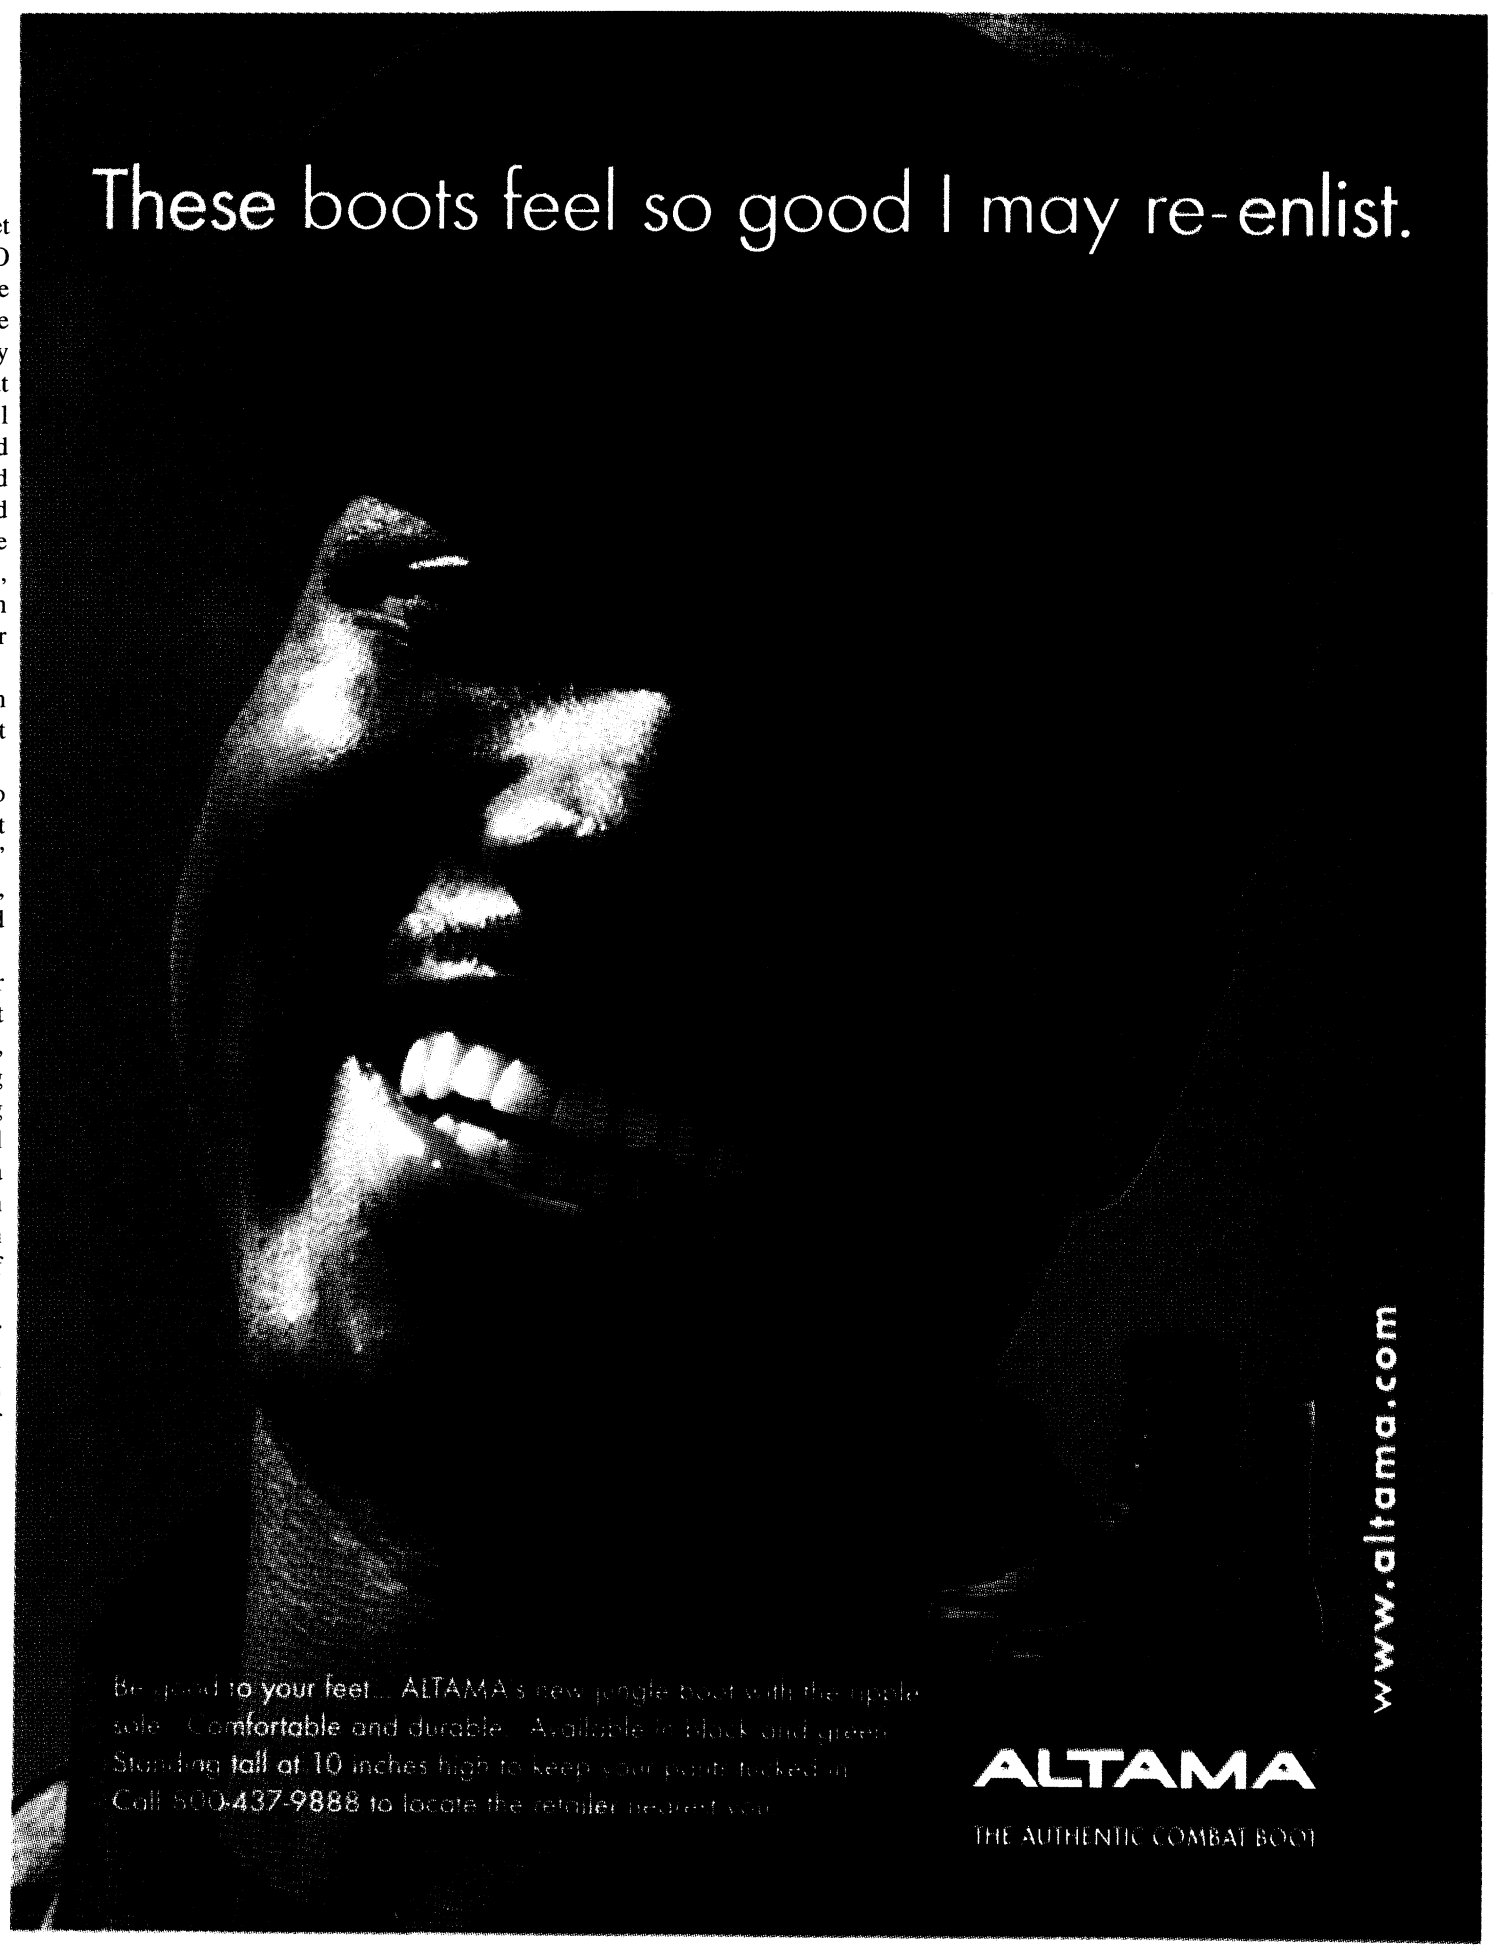
"I just say 'so long' to my family for those three days as the Soldiers leave, and then we take a breather until they start returning on Jan. 1," Austin said.

The USO has stocked up on supplies for the Soldiers with the help of donations from community and military-affiliated agencies, such as the Association of the U.S. Army. More than 500 people have signed up to volunteer during the three-day period from various organizations.

Refreshments will be available, including fruit, juice, sandwiches and sweets, and some gifts like phone cards will be distributed, Austin said. Santa may even drop by to send the travelers on their way.

Months of meetings and coordination between the Army, travel agencies, bus lines, USO and others have gone into the logistical game plan that will transport close to 5,000 of Fort Benning's newest Soldiers home for the holidays, and then back by Jan. 3.

An operations cell will be set up Sunday beside the USO Center at the airport. It will be manned by personnel from the 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade. Forty drill sergeants from the BCTB and Infantry Training Brigade and eight each from Fort Gordon and Fort Jackson will walk the concourses of the airports, facilitating the smooth movement of the troops to their gates.



The drill sergeants arrive in Atlanta Sunday and will not return to post until Thursday.

"They have permission to wear their hats inside the airport so they will be easy to spot," said Capt. Michael Shaw, assistant operations officer, 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt.

"At the operations cell our main job is to physically account for every Soldier," said Shaw, explaining the cell's tracking system. In addition to being tracked on each Sand Hill battalion's manifest, the Atlanta Operations Cell will track each man via a card system. Each trainee will check his name off as he enters the Atlanta Airport.

The drill sergeants and their leaders will stay at a hotel and shuttle in shifts back and forth to the Airport on Directorate of Logistics buses, which the drill sergeants will drive. This is the first time in three years drill sergeants have driven buses, allowed by the Infantry Center Chief of Staff, because the post's DOL could not conduct the time-consuming mission with civilians.

Soldiers begin returning to complete their training Jan. 1, and the contingent of drill sergeants and USO volunteers will return to the airport to once again shepherd them back to Fort Benning.

Risk of hitting deer on post rises

Hunting, mating season cause crashes

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The start of hunting season was great news to many Fort Benning community members, but it has increased the risk of hitting a deer in Fort Benning's cantonment areas.

"The deer are very much aware of their surroundings," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, Law Enforcement, Directorate of Public Safety. "They don't want to be hunted, and they have a good sense of danger, so they travel away from danger areas to places like Marne Road and 1st Division Road."

As a result of deer's increased presence, he said they pose a threat to drivers, especially during twilight hours when it is harder to see them.

"You need to slow down, watching both the deer you see and the car that may be behind you," Kelley said. "Sounding the horn will sometimes cause the deer to jump in front of you, so don't do it. Just proceed at a reduced speed."

He also recommended that people buy a device called a deer horn which attaches to the front bumper of vehicles. It emits a subsonic sound that the deer hear when one drives down the road and causes the deer to leave the area.

"Deer are lovely, docile animals and are nice to see except when they meet up with a car," Kelley said. "They can create a problem, especially around the holidays when people do not need the added expense of fixing their vehicle after hitting one."

The car repair cost for drivers who hit deer on post is not covered under the Personnel Claims Act, said Dan Winand, chief of claims division, Staff Judge Advocate.

"In order for the post to pay, it has to be an act of God, theft, vandalism or an unusual occurrence," Winand said. "The Department of the Army does not recognize hitting a deer as an unusual occurrence, and we have to deny those claims."

He said it helps to carry private comprehensive and collision insurance with a low deductible.

"Paying a little bit each month is better than facing a catastrophic loss because of a deer strike," Winand said.

> "When you see a deer, slow down drastically. They move in herds, so if you see one, there are probably others around. Give all of them the opportunity to cross the road."
> Staff Sgt. Kevin Sparks
> NCOIC of Traffic Division, Directorate Public Safety

Those strikes have happened 40 times this year, said Staff Sgt. Kevin Sparks, NCOIC of the Traffic Division at DPS.

"It depends on how one hits a deer as to how much damage it will cause," Sparks said.

For instance, in a head-on deer collision, a fawn can take the fender off or total the car, depending on the driver's speed.

Another collision happens when people see one deer, let it pass, and speed up. They don't see the deer following their buddy, and the followers hit the car on the side.

He suggested not making evasive maneuvers when seeing a deer.

"When you see a deer, slow down drastically," Sparks said. "They move in herds, so if you see one, there are probably others around. Give all of them the opportunity to cross the road."

It is currently mating season, and deer move around more than normal, he said. One has to be cognizant of well-known deer areas, such as around the hospital, golf course and Marne Road near the horse stables.

"People should wear their seatbelt," Sparks said. "It will reduce the risk of thrusting into the steering wheel or going through the windshield if they hit a deer. Plus it's the law."

DPS has sent deer collision statistics to the DPW's Conservation Branch Chief Pete Swiderek.

"I plan to review the data and develop a plan to reduce deer vehicle collisions," Swiderek said.

He said possible remedies will be to put up more signs, cut back the woodline and better educate the public of dangerous areas.

"We will look for trends in the statistics of various locations in order to reduce the incidence of deer collisions on post," Swiderek said.

In the event one hits a deer on post, he or she should call the MPs to file an accident report, Kelley said.

One should also watch for deer off post, said Terry Beckwith, chief of marketing and public affairs officer at Martin Army Community Hospital.

A large buck hit Beckwith's minivan on Double Churches Road in North Columbus near the post office on Halloween night. She was traveling under the speed limit.

"I'm really cautious, and here this deer hit me," Beckwith said. "They can do a lot of damage."

The deer shattered all the glass on the vehicle's passenger side, and sprayed her 5-year-old, Meagan, and 2-year-old, Morgan, with glass, but it did not hurt them.

The collision caused $2,500 in damage, but her insurance paid all but $100 of it.

"When it slammed into me, I swerved into the other lane," she said. "I'm lucky there was no oncoming traffic. I was shaken and worried about my children."

She advised people to wear their seatbelts and have their children in car restraints because they helped safeguard them.

Another wise thing to do was what she did when it happened.

"I stopped the minivan, made sure they were OK, and called 911."

Post units create holiday spirit with giant cards

Pfc. Mark Watson

Oversized Christmas cards displayed along Dixie Road are sending holiday messages to Fort Benning passersby.

Soldiers drew scenes, painted, and hung holiday decorations on large sheets of plywood to show pride in their units.

All this was done to get people thinking about Christmas.

"We're doing this to get people in the Christmas spirit and to promote unit cohesion," Col. Gene DeWolf, commander of the 36th Engineer Group, said.

Some signs were constructed by a large group, while others were created by only a few.

"We wanted to do something for the company," said Staff Sgt. Michael Anderson.

He and his wife, Victoria, volunteered to design and construct the 13th Corps Support Battalion's Christmas sign. The signs competed against each other for the best sign title.

"It has been a lot of work, but we had a good time," he said. "I really think our sign will do well against the others."

"All the signs show unit pride," Anderson added. "Each one is different, and they all bring out the holiday spirit."

One sign, from the entire "Seahorse" group had seahorses pulling Santa and his sleigh.

Another sign had Looney Toon characters in a sleigh.

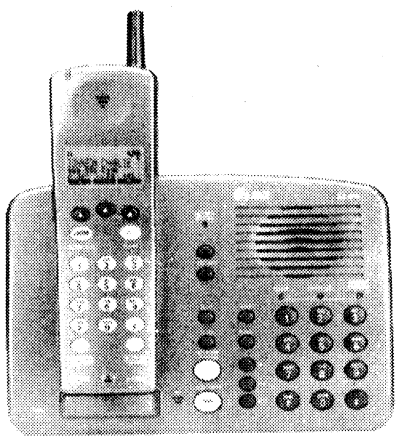
One 13th CSB Soldier said he was enjoying the time he got to work on the sign.

"I am really enjoying being out here," Pfc. Wayne Haden said as he was putting the final touches into his unit's sign. "It gives me a break from the usual stuff in the unit."

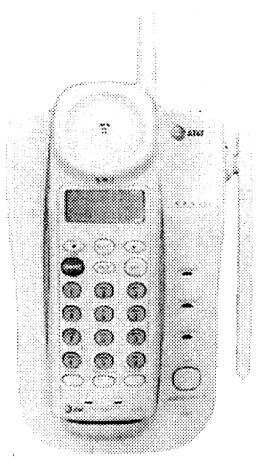
The 498th Medical Company won the most artistic sign.

The 104th Transportation Company earned the best military theme. Its sign had its company's vehicles pulling Santa's sleigh past the moon.



The winner of the best Christmas theme was the 598th Maintenance Company.

The 63rd Engineer Company was the overall winner.



"It looks like they worked hard on the signs," DeWolf said. "Their hard work has paid off. The signs look good. I was very impressed with the capabilities of the Soldiers and their artistic ability."

Army's new flash to be universal

Beret flash to symbolize transformation

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Ending the discussion whether Soldiers will wear distinctive unit flashes on their black berets when they are initially issued in June, Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Eric K. Shinseki recently decided on a universal flash.

All Soldiers will initially wear the universal flash, except for those in units that already have berets, such as Ranger, Airborne and Special Forces. These troops will continue to wear the beret flashes they currently have.

The new flash, worn on the left front of the beret, is a semi-circular shield 1-7/8 inches wide and 2-1/4 inches high. It has a bluebird background with 13 white stars superimposed just inside its outer border. Officers will wear their rank in the center of the shield.

> "It is time for the entire Army to accept the challenge of excellence that has so long been a hallmark of our special operations and Airborne units."
> Eric K. Shinseki
> Chief of Staff of the Army

"The flash is designed to closely replicate the colors (flag) of the commander in chief of the Continental Army at the time of its victory at Yorktown," said Pam Reece, an industrial specialist with the Army's Institute of Heraldry. Reece and other institute staff members created four beret flash designs from which Shinseki made his selection.

The chief of staff announced Oct. 17 the Army will begin wearing the black beret on the next Army birthday, June 14.

He said the beret will symbolize the Army's transformation to a lighter, more deployable force.

"It is time for the entire Army to accept the challenge of excellence that has so long been a hallmark of our special operations and Airborne units," Shinseki said. Adopting the berets will be "another step toward achieving the capabilities of the objective force" of Army transformation, he said.

While U.S. Army Rangers have worn the black beret since the mid-1970s, they have not had a monopoly on the stylish cap. Prior to the Rangers adopting the berets, they were worn by armor cavalry units.

Army decides on black beret's new flash

Flash replicates flag of Continental Army's chief

Wayne V. Hall
Army News Service

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — The Army flash, which will be worn on black berets in June, was designed through an intense process that sped up normal work deadlines, said Pam Reece at the U.S. Army Institute of Heraldry.

The institute's first meeting with Sgt. Maj. of the Army Jack L. Tilley was Oct. 26, Reece said. Development of the flash was completed Nov. 23, in less than 30 days.

"The thing that was most amazing was a one-day turnaround on the creation of prototypes, which were presented to the SMA Oct. 27," Reece said.

Reece is responsible for working with all Army cloth items, such as insignia, flags and ribbons, at the Institute of Heraldry, located on Fort Belvoir, Va. As an industrial specialist, she also coordinates designs with manufacturers.

On Nov. 3, Army officials were confident on their design choice, however they still needed to come to a decision on the final color, Reece said.

On Nov. 7 she was told that Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki and Tilley wanted to see examples of the flash done in old glory blue, ultra-marine blue (the color of blue currently used in many airborne flashes) and bluebird, said Reece.

She then asked a manufacturer — Rainbow Embroidery of North Plainfield, N.J. — to develop these prototypes, which were delivered to the SMA on Nov. 9.

"This was amazing," she said. "Development of a flash normally takes three months; Rainbow did this development in three days."

"Great credit for increasing the speed of this process goes to Richard Rapoza, our artist who turned the design into something manufacturable," Reece added.

"I'm proud to have had a hand in it, working with the design and turning (Shinseki's) ideas into a product," said Rapoza who has been an illustrator with the Institute of Heraldry for eight years.

During the next large-group meeting, Nov. 17, the flashes were shown to all the parties involved in this project.

"At that time, everybody was about 98-percent sure of the final flash," Reece said. "The Old Guard's replica colors were brought in to ensure that we in fact had the right color. And on Nov. 20 I got the answer — it would be bluebird."

Each new flash is a semi-circular shield measuring 1 7/8 inches wide by 2 1/4 inch high, and will consist of 4,001 stitches and two colors.

The flash is designed to closely replicate the flag of the commander in chief of the Continental Army at the time of its victory at Yorktown, Reece said.

"It's the CSA's choice and takes the Army back to its very beginning," said Reece, who has been with the Institute of Heraldry for 13 years.

"The 13 stars are significant of the original 13 colonies," Reece said. "I think it's really neat that they went back and took the colors of the Continental Army. If you want to go back and put some pride "back into the Army you can't go back any further than that."

All Soldiers will initially wear the universal flash, except for those in units that already have berets, such as Ranger, Airborne and Special Forces. These troops will continue to wear the beret flashes they currently have.

The new flash will be worn on the left front of the beret. Officers will wear their rank in the center of the shield, and enlisted Soldiers will wear their distinctive unit insignia in the center of the shield.

The black berets which will initially be issued to soldiers will be shipped with the universal flash already sewn on them, Reece said. Additionally, the universal flash will eventually be replaced by unit-specific flashes.

The universal flash is to be worn for a period of one year, Reece said. During that year, the Institute of Heraldry will be working with representatives of the Army's 16 major commands to design and develop distinctive flashes.

Just how far below MACOM level distinctive unit flashes will be created has not yet been decided, said Reece.

For now, the Institute of Heraldry's part in flash development is finished.

"We've given 160 of the new flashes to the sergeant major of the Army, and the cartoon (a manufacturing-specifications diagram) has gone out to manufacturers from the Defense Supply Center, Philadelphia, which is responsible for procurement of the berets," Reece said. "Initially some four to five million berets are to be procured."

Flash recommendations not selected included a flash with a black background and yellow boarder, colors which are assumed to represent the Army's colors; one with a green background and yellow border, also colors associated with the Army; and the third design was much the same as the one selected, however with a darker "old glory blue" background.

A CLOSER LOOK

- Each new flash is a semi-circular shield measuring 1 7/8 inches wide by 2 1/4 inch high.
- It will consist of 4,001 stitches and two colors.
- The flash is designed to closely replicate the flag of the commander in chief of the Continental Army at the time of its victory at Yorktown.
- The new flash will be worn on the left front of the beret.
- Officers will wear their rank in the center of the shield. Enlisted Soldiers will wear their distinctive unit insignia in the center of the shield.

Senior leaders conduct quality conference

Group meets; discusses how to improve post

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning senior leaders conducted their semiannual Quality Executive Steering Team conference in the Supper Club at the Officers' Club Dec. 5.

Frontline Consulting, a management consulting firm owned by Steven Chittum, facilitated the discussions geared to make Fort Benning a better place to live and work.

"The theme for the conference was transformation," Chittum said.

After briefings on Army and Training and Doctrine Command transformation from installation subject matter experts from the Directorate of Combat Developments and the Directorate of Operations and Training, senior leaders broke into six teams to focus on six areas of emphasis:

- The U.S. Army Infantry School
- The work force
- Quality of life
- Automation and technology
- Power projection and readiness
- Base operations.

"The teams identified critical impacts and issues pertaining to transformation that may affect the installation in each of the six areas and will assist Fort Benning to proactively plan for the future," said Sara Hodges, chief, Quality Management Division.

Chittum said Fort Benning leaders met their objective, but the work generated at the conference still lies ahead.

What transpired at the conference is a dynamic process, Chittum said.

"It was just another step. As the Army's best installation, we don't rest on our laurels."

He said the Army is changing in many ways, such as in structure, missions, equipment, manpower, operation tempo and deployments.

"We are going from the known to the unknown, and that's a challenge," Chittum said.

He said he is confident Fort Benning can manage the challenges and continue to be the best Army installation in the world.

Hodges agreed the conference will benefit the post.

"The planning documents resulting from the conference will allow our organizations to think ahead and be better prepared for the changes that may be imposed on Fort Benning due to transformation," she said.

Military police to spend time in 'Old Stockade'

TRADOC funds renovations for historic building

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's military police will be getting a contemporary home, in a historic building.

Recent funds from the Training and Doctrine Command will be used to convert the "Old Stockade" building on Main Post into new offices for the 988th Military Police Company, the 209th Military Police Detachment and the 71st Military Police Detachment.

Currently, the MP offices are scattered, said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, Law Enforcement Division, Military Police Activity. This project will change that.

"It will bring my people closer to the provost marshal, and I'll be able to reach out and touch the commanders a lot better," Kelley said.

The plan to open up more space for the MPs has evolved since its conception. Originally, the funds from TRADOC were going to be used to construct an entirely new building.

After the Army Corps of Engineers crunched some numbers, they performed a value engineering study, which looked at the possibility of taking this historic structure on post and turning it into a place for company operations, said Ken Holloway, master planner and acting chief, Engineering Division, Directorate of Public Works.

The total amount awarded for this conversion is $1,932,365. Holloway estimated the decision to convert the building saved about $300,000 in construction costs.

It also saved a piece of Fort Benning history. The Old Stockade building was previously on the post demolition list. It hasn't been used to house prisoners for about five years.

Now, interior and exterior work will transform the building into offices for the MPs with extra room to spare.

There will even be reminders inside of the building's history and previous occupants. Some of the jail cells prisoners stayed in will remain intact along with some original tile on the walls.

"It's really retained a lot of its historic nature," said Maj. Adrienne Eckstein, project engineer, Army Corps of Engineers, Savannah District. "It's appropriate that the MPs are there."

Although the Old Stockade building is about 60 years old, Eckstein said the engineers discovered the building was originally well-made and the shell is still actually quite solid.

"Converting a building does have some complications but the benefits outweigh them," she said.

"We're building toward the future of the post," Kelley said. "It's part of what makes Fort Benning a community of excellence."

The project completion date is set for August 2001.

Shortage: Stalls shots for Soldiers vaccine production facility and resumed vaccine production," said Marine Corps Maj. Gen. Randall L. West, senior adviser to the Deputy Secretary of Defense for Chemical and Biological Protection.

Although he isn't sure how many Soldiers are scheduled to leave Fort Benning for Southwest Asia, Maj. Bryan Alsip, chief, Preventive Medicine, Martin Army Community Hospital, said the post has a supply of the anthrax vaccine on hand to be given to those personnel assigned to a unit deploying to the high-threat area for 30 or more days.

Soldiers on orders for Korea who have already started the series of shots will have the remaining doses deferred, Alsip said.

"Once more vaccine becomes available, Soldiers who have already begun the series may resume with their next scheduled dose," Alsip said.

"As with most other vaccines, there is no data to support reduced effectiveness of the vaccine if doses are given later than the scheduled time. Thus, they would not have to restart the series," he said.

The DoD estimated that under this newest policy, it has enough vaccine to continue vaccinating service members at greatest risk until around November, without any additional vaccine.

The Pentagon expects to fully resume the vaccination effort for all service members next year when a sufficient supply of FDA-approved vaccine is available.

Nearly 492,000 service members have started their vaccinations and nearly two million vaccinations have been given since the program started in 1998.

Controversy surrounded the vaccine almost from the beginning with several Soldiers refusing to take the shots and others complaining of adverse effects after receiving a dose.

The Pentagon stands behind its decision to eventually have all 2.4 million service members inoculated against the anthrax threat as a necessary part of force health protection.

Anthax remains the top biological warfare threat to U.S. troops because it is 99 percent lethal to unprotected, untreated individuals, the DoD said.

"Although the supply of FDA-released vaccine is limited, the lethal anthrax threat from potential adversaries has not gone away. Therefore, we must make every effort to protect those service members at greatest risk. Vaccination continues to be the safest, most reliable, round-the-clock protection to counter the threat," Alsip said.

Tour: Gives aides Army information

"The CASAs were very positive in their feedback. They felt the 'big picture' about how our forces prepare to mobilize and deploy was an important subject area that was missing from other trips," he said.

One stop on the tour where they witnessed this preparation firsthand was at TSIRT. They had an opportunity to view training in action for Reserve Soldiers from the 29th Infantry Division and 155th Infantry Brigade from Mississippi.

Currently, the main focus of TSIRT is to train active-duty, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers on specific scenarios they may face while deployed to the Balkins.

On Saturday, Soldiers were being tested on conducting vehicle and personnel checkpoints.

"Site visits are very helpful in providing information and discussing ways CASAs can better serve," Ward said.

"If you can see it, observe it, and participate in it, you get a better feeling for the strengths and weaknesses," Bapp said.

Meaders said another informative part of the visit was the Quadrennial Defense Review briefing. "It helped target those areas where the Army was most badly in need of additional funding in order to meet the projected mission requirements in support of national policies."

According to Army regulations, a civilian aide's job is to interpret Army missions and objectives to the civilian community and provide feedback to the Secretary of the Army on the public's perception of the Army.

"We are another set of eyes and ears for the Secretary of the Army, to see how the Army is perceived and to take back information to him on how to improve perceptions from civilians," Ward said.

"It's a two-way thing. We also articulate the Army mission, concerns and problems to civilians to hopefully get support," he said.

Civilian aides are selected on the basis of their patriotism, interest in the Army, business or professional leadership and ability to tell the Army story. They are chosen for two-year terms and serve without pay. They represent every state, the District of Columbia, American Samoa, Guam, Northern Marinas Islands, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

that part of the Western Hemisphere.

Over the years, USARSA and its preceding institutions have trained more than 61,000 military students from Latin America and the Caribbean through professional military courses.

Classes were taught by Spanish-speaking U.S. Army officers, NCOs and civilians, as well as officers, NCOs and civilians from Latin American countries.

They all had to meet U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command instructor standards and successfully complete an instructor-training course.

In 1990, the instruction had to adapt to new needs.

"With the end of the Cold War and the resolution of many of the armed conflicts in the region, the challenges in Latin America changed," Weidner said.

"The school changed also and added many courses to improve the status of civil-military relations in those countries and to raise the level of respect and cooperation of the military institutions with their civilian governments."

In January a new Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation will open on Fort Benning, continuing the democratic traditions of the School of the Americas.

Rangers transform lot into memorial

Holdover Soldiers turn court into work of art

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A group of Soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment Training Detachment have turned an empty lot and a neglected basketball court into a tribute to U.S. Army Rangers — past, present and future.

Soldiers once played pick-up basketball games behind Building 2832, "Gentry Barracks," home to the Ranger Indoctrination Program. During the past few years, the court has seen less and less action as Soldiers opted to take their games indoors at nearby gyms.

Three months ago, the detachment's holdover platoon decided to turn what was quickly becoming an eyesore into a monumental work of art.

They enclosed the blacktop and part of an adjoining lot with 12 foot-tall walls, constructed of plywood and recycled telephone poles and supported with 6,500 sandbags. They painted the walls glossy black and handcut more than 8,000 individual shapes and letters to adorn each of the four walls.

"Every hole was dug by hand, every nail, every drop of paint — the whole thing was done by hand by Soldiers," said Sgt, 1st Class Michael Washburn, the operations NCOIC for the Ranger Training Detachment. "That's what sets this apart from every other memorial on post. It's made by Soldiers to honor Soldiers, and they put all their hard work and sweat into it."

Washburn originally designed a single half-circle wall as a backdrop the for the unit's flagpole, which is flanked by two weapons captured by the 75th's 2nd Battalion during Operation Just Cause in 1989. A 53 mm Recoilless rifle sits on the left, a 14.5 mm anti-aircraft machine gun on the right. The Ranger creed is posted on the wall behind the flag.

"It was initially designed around the Ranger creed, the heart of the regiment," Washburn said. "We wanted the students who come to RIP to know there's something very serious going on here, and when their parents come for graduation, they can see what it is their sons are getting into."

Washburn said the original wall was so well received, the platoon decided to add three more, giving the completed work a "coliseum effect."

On the north end, opposite the Ranger creed, the Ranger's Prayer, written by the regimental chaplain Maj. Steven Berry.

Now when Soldiers meet on the blacktop, it's for formation twice a day. When they face the north or south ends, where basketball goals once stood, they're reminded of a different kind of goal, the one that brings them to Fort Benning — their desire to become Rangers.

"The two end walls constantly remind each student what it is he's doing here, and why he's enduring physical and mental challenges every day," said Staff Sgt. Reese Teakell, NCOIC for the detachment's holdover platoon. "The other two walls give them a solemn look at the heritage they're about to join."

The west wall, known as the "Wall of Ribbons," memorializes every campaign or conflict in which the 75th Ranger Regiment has been involved. Directly across the blacktop stands the "Wall of Fallen Comrades."

It's this wall 250 RIP students face each morning during formation, a subtle reminder of the gravity of the Rangers' mission. The names of the regiment's deceased Rangers are listed chronologically under the Ranger's "Prayer for the Dead."

Ranger Indoctrination Program students stand in formation at the new Ranger Memorial.

"I can't really put into words how it makes me feel," said Spc. Mark Corliss, a RIP student. "It's very sobering to stand here in formation and see the names of these Soldiers who've lost their lives, or to look over and read the words to the creed they lived and died by. It makes me proud I'm here."

"Breathtaking," is how Pfc Thomas Thomas describes it. "It's a wall of dreams. It's why we're here, what we dream of becoming. It's overwhelming."

Washburn said it took 150 Soldiers nearly four weeks to design and construct the project, which was completed the third week of November, at a cost of about $2,500. Washburn went looking among his Soldiers for talent and skill. He found an electrical expert to design lighting so the monument can be seen after dark and a former construction worker to oversee the labor.

"It would have been easy to pay big money to have someone else design and cut a statue out of marble, but it wouldn't have had the kind of heart and soul these Soldiers put into it," he said. "Everybody here had a hand in it. We had Soldiers who were subject matter experts and some who were just willing to swing a hammer. The finished product is a compilation of all their skills and willingness to work."

Soldiers are usually given menial tasks, such as mowing and raking, during the short time they're with the holdover platoon, awaiting assignment with a Ranger battalion. Washburn said they were "highly motivated when given the opportunity to participate in building a memorial."

Corliss was one of those Soldiers who enjoyed a break from the usual routine. The former tattoo artist put his talents to work painting the unit crest on the blacktop.

The crest bears the regiment's own motto, "Sua Sponte," which means "of their own accord," a phrase that speaks of Ranger initiative on the battlefields of the world, and now in their own back yard, where a handful of Soldiers took the initiative to raise a monument to their own.

"It's a good feeling to have had a part in this," Corliss said. "I'm leaving here knowing I left something for everyone who comes behind me. I hope it lasts forever."

Final class graduates USARSA

Course causes cooperation

Phyllis Wallace
TRADOC News Service

Relationships were foremost in the minds of the 60 students who graduated from the last class of the Command and General Staff Officer Course taught at the U.S. Army School of the Americas. The school closes today.

The graduates represented 11 nations — Argentina, Bolivia, Columbia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Peru, the Dominican Republic,Venezuela and the United States.

"We've learned a lot about strategy and tactics," said U.S. Army Maj. Paul De Cecco. "But that military knowledge we've gained is almost secondary to the personal and professional relationships that are gained here."

Others agreed, citing as benefits the multinational friendships and shared experiences with peers.

"The knowledge I've gained will have great utility in my profession," said Maj. Luis Juarez from Guatemala, "but more satisfying is that I have been able to share this experience with peers from the United States as well as Latin America. The friendships I've developed here will bear fruit in the coming years."

The relationships that form the basis for inter-American military cooperation set the theme for the graduation speaker, John C. Speedy III, Assistant Deputy Under Secretary of the Army for International Affairs (International Policy).

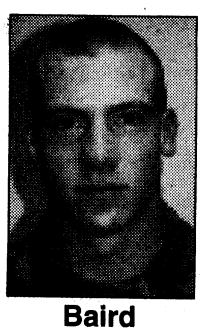
"We help each other, learn together, and are-together-the Military of the Americas," he stated. "The cooperative relations we've relied upon so successfully in the past must now be nurtured and built upon if we are to ensure peace and prosperity for generations in our hemisphere."

"Today's military personnel are cast in a new role," he said. "We protect the security of our nations by preserving the peace at home and among our neighbors.

"We bring hope to victims of natural disasters and serve as role models by loyally supporting our nations' democratically elected officials.

We combat the corruptive forces of narcotrafficking and terrorism."

The 21st century will hold increasing demands for military forces to lead humanitarian assistance operations during natural disasters and to assist in peacekeeping missions, according to Speedy.



"Currently, 13 nations of our hemisphere are contributing more than 2,100 troops to peacekeeping operations worldwide," he said. "These efforts all stabilize democracy, build bridges of friendship and exemplify the cooperation that is the wave of the future for our military forces."

Speedy noted that a map of the hemisphere from the 1970s shows only seven functioning democracies in the southern tier of nations and only 17 democracies in Latin America as a whole.

"Today of the 32 nations in the U.S. Southern Command area of responsibility, 31 are democracies with full market economies," he said. "Today, our military forces play a constructive role in supporting democratic institutions and lead the way in preserving respect for human rights."

Human rights are a major part of the CGSOC course, according to U.S. Marine Maj. David Olsen, course director. "A specific block of instruction is devoted to human rights. In addition is the ancillary instruction and discussion of human rights throughout the whole program."

SafetyCab available on, off post

Free service available until New Year

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

In an effort to cut down on drunken driving during this holiday season, the "SafetyCab" program is now in effect and will pick up passengers from Fort Benning, as well as Columbus and Phenix City.

From now until Jan. 1, this free service is available to tricommunity residents who have been out drinking and are unsafe to drive. "We're trying to keep our roads safe," said Judy Walsh, SafetyCab coordinator, The Bradley Center, St. Francis Hospital.

SafetyCab drivers will respond to the call whether you're on or off post. "They treat all phone calls the same," said Regis Beighley, safety manager, Directorate of Public Safety.

This is the 18th year SafetyCab has been available. It runs between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m., seven days a week and is available to pick up a driver and up to two passengers. The cabs will only pick up people from businesses that serve alcoholic beverages. Also, the only destination for SafetyCab passengers is home. The drivers will not take them out to other bars or restaurants.

"Fort Benning MWR facilities have fully supported and participated in this program since its beginning and will do so again this year," said Alan Stewart, director of community activities.

On post, the program covers all Fort Benning clubs, bowling centers and any other MWR or AAFES facilities that serve alcohol.

Program promoters hope that anyone who goes out drinking will first designate a sober driver to get everyone home safely. In the event this doesn't occur and no one is able to drive, SafetyCab is a safe option.

As an additional bonus for the designated driver, all year round, all post MWR facilities that serve alcohol participate in a program that provides free soft drinks and coffee for non-drinking designated drivers.

Off-post, several local restaurants and clubs are also offering free nonalcoholic drinks to designated drivers during the SafetyCab campaign.

During last year's campaign, 17 SafetyCab rides were provided to residents of Fort Benning. During that time there were also 98 drunken driving related arrests in the tricommunity area.

This year, calls were already coming in for SafetyCab rides on the first night the service was available.

"We believe it will be another successful year," Walsh said.

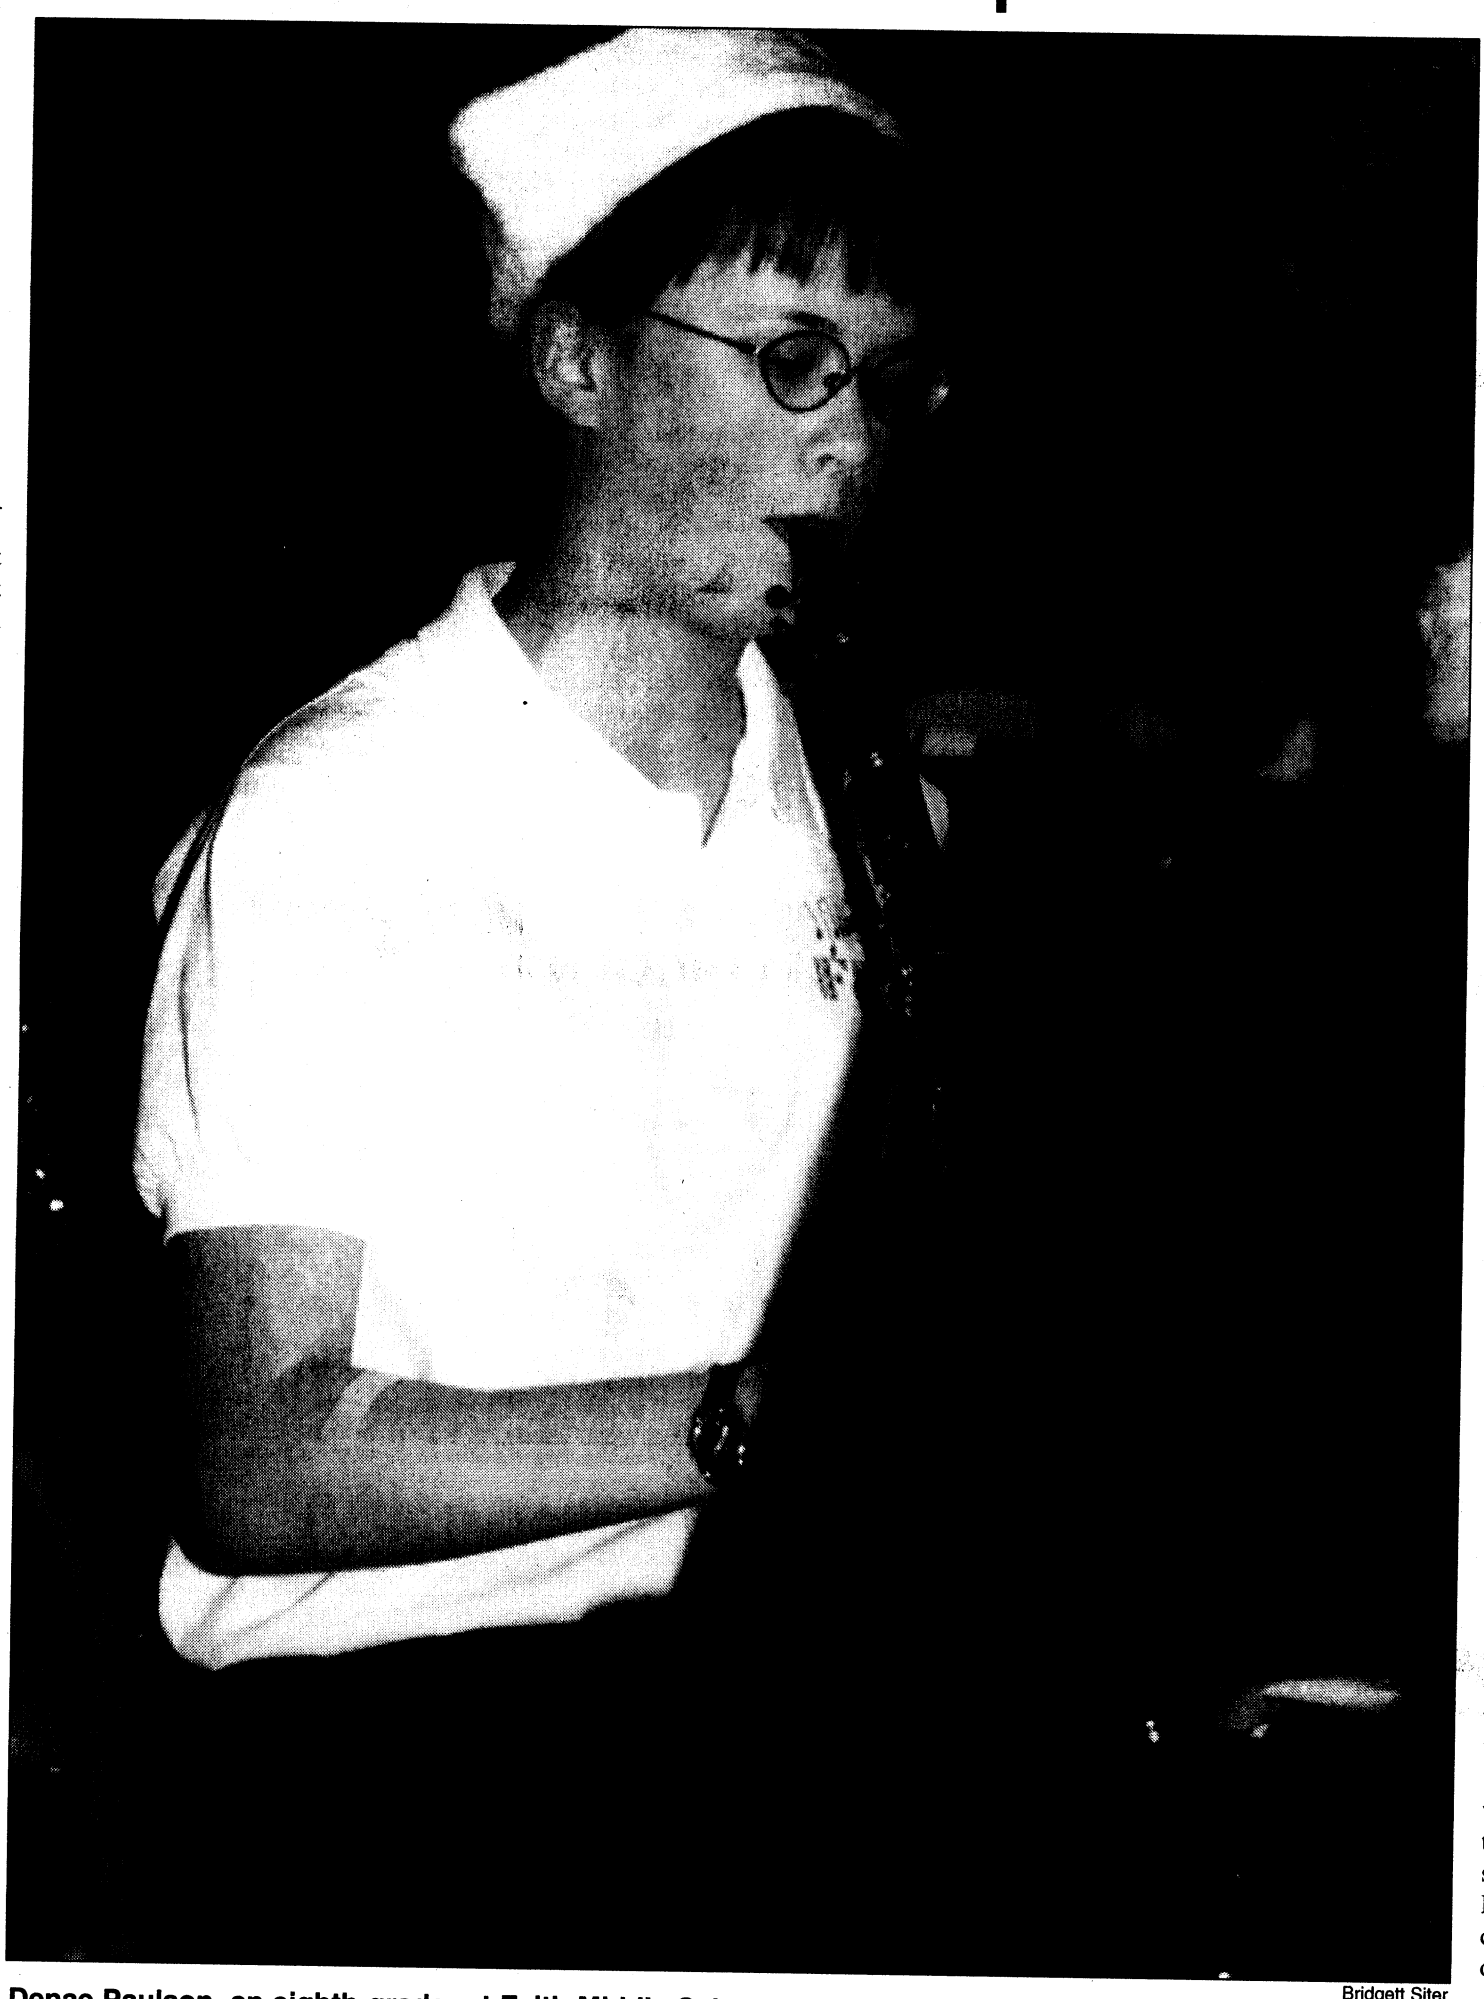
Spencer hosts science fair

29th Infantry helps judge event

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Some of the best students at Spencer High School weren't afraid to take on difficult and controversial topics at a recent social sciences fair.

Exhibits covered such diverse topics as the psychological origins of the killings at My Lai, the level of destruction caused by the bombing of Hiroshima, the apparent causes of stigmata, and the effect of abortion on civil society.



Sue Watson, a history teacher whose honor students participated in the fair, said the intellectual curiosity evident in the projects was nothing new. "They've had that for years," she said. "At the honors level, they've always asked some very probing questions, I guess is the word for it. And I tend to tell them at the beginning of the year, don't ask unless you really want to know."

The adult nature of the presentations was met with some serious judging, as officers from the 29th Infantry Regiment joined other judges to turn a critical eye to each student's work. "Check spelling," read the comments on one judging sheet. "Need to be more neat and organized." ("Not a true conclusion," read another.)

To Maj. Arthur Tulak, deputy commander, 29th Inf. Regt., the seriousness of the student exhibits demanded serious consideration from him as a judge. "We owe them a quality evaluation," Tulak said. "They worked hard on the project

Band students head to district, others to state

Nine members of Faith Middle School's eighth-grade band will perform with Georgia's District 3 Middle School Honor Band, and five were nominated to compete at state-level in February.

Band members traveled to Sumpter County Middle School in Americus, Ga., Dec. 2, for middle school district and all-state auditions. They competed with nearly 150 students from 12 counties for a chance to perform with the state's most talented musicians in May.

Kim Green, Faith's band director and teacher, said each student was given the opportunity to audition once, with the option of having the audition considered for district and state-level competition.

"It was really two auditions in one," Green said. "It was finals for district, and preliminaries for state, but they only auditioned one time. It was up to each student to decide if he or she wanted that audition to be considered for advancement to state level."

Of the 11 students who competed at district, seven were elected to compete at state level as well, and five made the preliminary cut. At district level, Carlos Velazquez was named first chair in the trumpet section, and Denae Paulson earned a second chair in clarinet. Flutists Sarah McCallum, Mallory Kniskern and Ashley Maignan were named first, second and third chair, respectively. All five will advance to state.

"It's kind of funny, because we have chairs in school, and that's the same order we're all sitting in school too," said Kniskern, a first-time competitor who said the outcome came as a big

Fort Benning hosts ceremony at Field of Four Chaplains

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

There was excitement in the air as children and their parents gathered at the Field of Four Chaplains Tuesday evening for the annual Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony.

This was the third year Michelle Raker brought her son, Josh, to the event. "It's a tradition every year," she said.

"We wanted to show support for Fort Benning," said post resident Barbara Reeves. "And I thought the kids might learn something."

While parents may have had different reasons for attending the ceremony, most of the children had one thing on their minds. They knew that Santa Claus was going to make an appearance. Kelsey Reeves, 6, said she was excited to see Santa because he brings presents.

Josh Raker, 6, knew exactly what he wanted to tell Santa. He was going to ask him for a Star Wars character and Pokemon cards for Christmas.

While the children waited with anticipation at the beginning of the ceremony, the Infantry Band played popular holiday tunes.

For the official lighting, there was a decorated Christmas tree and a large-scale menorah and nativity scene at the field.

The kids and parents had a chance to learn about the roots of these holiday traditions. Col. Jose Torres, garrison commander, spoke of the history behind the Christian and Jewish symbols.

"We're observing age-old traditions here today," he said.

"As we light these symbols, let's wish each other good cheer, hope, joy and goodwill," he said.

Torres lit the tree and menorah with the help of several children from the audience.

After the displays were lighted, Torres told the children in the audience if they sang Jingle Bells loud enough, Santa Claus would come to see them. Sure enough, after two rounds of the song, Santa pulled up in a bright yellow fire truck.

A long line quickly formed as Santa set up camp to hear the Christmas wishes of post children. The children had their pictures taken as they talked with him.

Santa even gave out some practical advice. One child asked him for a scooter for Christmas and he reminded her to always wear a helmet when she was on it.

"My hope is that all the children here will look back on these traditions and values we're living this season as some of the best days of their lives," Torres said.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

When purchasing a new package of bulbs, the direction for planting are on the bag. But what about when you are planting your old bulbs? And who holds on to those packages anyway?

An organized gardener would make a note in their journal about the proper planting of their bulbs. Busy gardeners put it off until time to plant.

That time is now. So here is a run down on planting procedures for spring blooming bulbs.

Bulbs need well draining soil. Planting bulbs in heavy clay soil without amendments is risky. When the water fails to drain, the bulbs will rot in the soil. It is best to amend the soil in the bed before planting.

This can be done by digging compost or humus into the bed. Both are cheap and easily attainable.

Bulbs should be planted in a hole three times their diameter. Mix a tablespoon of bonemeal into the soil in the bottom of the hole. Pay attention to which is the top and which is the bottom of the bulb. Make sure the soil you use to fill the hole makes good contact with the bulb. Air pockets left in the soil can trap water and cause the bulbs to rot.

The spacing of bulbs is typically one to two inches apart. Most instructions recommend planting in groups or clumps.

As a general rule with landscaping design, using an odd numbered group is the most pleasing. Since so many of the bulbs gardeners use are small flowers it is best to group them for affect. Bulbs such as hyacinths, which are larger flowers, can be spaced at an interval using one bulb per hole.

A common technique for planting bulbs is layering. To do this a gardener uses a given amount of space and digs down to the depth of three times the largest bulb.

Lay out the large bulbs and fill in the soil to the level of depth required for the next largest bulb and so on until all bulbs are planted. This creates a nice informal mixed bulb bed.

Gardeners should mulch over the beds containing bulbs. This will reduce the risk of winter damage of the bulbs.

The final step, as with all plantings, is to water. Thoroughly water the bed once the bulbs have been planted and mulched over.

Normal rainfall usually provides enough water for spring blooming bulbs.

If there are prolonged periods of dry weather, supplemental watering of one inch per week is sufficient.

To sum it up, good soil, proper planting depth, fertilizing, and enough water will produce wonderful spring blooms.

ask the judge

Carolyn E. Moller
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am divorced, and my former spouse has custody of the children; however, my divorce decree states that I, the noncustodial parent, can claim the children as dependents for state and federal tax purposes. When I filed my tax return, I attached a copy of my divorce decree, and received my tax refund based on that exemption. Now, months later, I have received a letter from the IRS stating that attaching a copy of the divorce decree is insufficient, and has denied my right to claim the children. What else do I need to do in order to receive this exemption?

A: In the past, attaching a copy of your divorce decree was sufficient proof for the noncustodial parent to claim the children as dependents. A recent case tried in the federal Tax Court, a specialized court that only hears appeals relating to tax decisions, stated that the attachment of a divorce decree is insufficient to entitle the noncustodial parent to claim children as dependents. Miller vs. Tax Commissioner, 114 TC 182 (2000). According to this court decision, the noncustodial parent must attach Form 8332, Release of Claim to Exemption for Child of Divorced or Separated Parents (or a similar declaration that complies with the form and substance of Form 8332), to the tax return in order to claim the children as dependents.

The United States Tax Code, Code Section 152(e), states that the custodial parent is entitled to claim the children as dependents, unless the custodial parent signs a written declaration that he or she will not claim the children as dependents for one or more tax years. The Tax Code is very specific as to the manner and form of the written declaration that is required to transfer this entitlement from the custodial parent to the noncustodial parent. Form 8332 requires the following information: Names and Social Security numbers of the children for which the exemption is being claimed; the years the exemption will apply; the name, signature and Social Security number of the custodial parent; the date the release is signed by the custodial parent; and, the name and Social Security number of the noncustodial parent who is to receive the exemption.

The tax court has taken this process a step further. The recent Miller decision holds that in order for this entitlement to transfer from the custodial parent to the noncustodial parent, there must be strict compliance with the Code Section 152(e).

A divorce decree or separation usually does not contain this information; thus, neither is sufficient, according to the Tax Court, to transfer the entitlement from the custodial parent to the noncustodial parent, and it will no longer be accepted for tax filing purposes.

How can you avoid this problem? Have the custodial parent sign a Form 8332 at the time the divorce decree is finalized. Or include the Form 8332 with the separation agreement so it will be signed at the same time the separation agreement itself is signed. What happens if the custodial parent will not sign the Form 8322 even though the divorce decree or separation agreement clearly states that the exemption is noncustodial parent's entitlement? You may have to file an action with the judge to force the signature. For more information, call the Legal Assistance Office to make an appointment. The telephone number is 545-3282 or 545-3281.

— they need to know how they did. Especially if they're preparing for college."

Sarah Berry, 16, researched the causes and effects of eating disorders with her partners, while Melinda Burnham created a project that caught the eye of the judges. "This one, I was just astounded by the amount of information presented," said Maj. Mike Matthews, executive officer, 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion. "And there were no typos, no misspellings."

Berry said the project was a learning experience; she knew about the subject before she started her research, thanks to health classes she'd had in school, "but I was surprised at how much it cost."

Many of those who suffer from eating disorders agree to seek treatment, Berry learned, but do so only to satisfy friends and family members who express concern; once they complete therapy and escape the spotlight, they go back to their unhealthy behavior. "It's just an ongoing process," Berry said.

Overall, the 18 student projects represented a wide range of effort and achievement.

"I could tell that some people procrastinated," Watson said. "Some of the others had a wonderful idea to start with, but weren't sure how to follow through."

More important was the fact that the experience of preparing the projects under their own initiative had taught every student a series of lessons about time management, self-determination, and the effort involved in conducting research.

The judges clearly believed that the competition raised the bar for the students. Walking from exhibit to exhibit, Maj. Joel Manning, executive officer, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., leaned over to Tulak with a question. "Did you do this in high school?" he asked.

"They're definitely preparing them for higher education," Manning said.

Soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment supported another major event involving local schools just two days later, as nine Soldiers from the 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion spent Thursday morning helping to run a Special Olympics event for local young people at the Columbus State University gym.

Capt. Mickey Turner, C Company, took turns at the microphone with 1st Sgt. Wanda Blackmon, also of C Co. "Ladies and gentlemen," Turner told the crowd, doing his best impression of a sports arena announcer, "let the games begin!"

Special Olympics area director Gina Menard said that 164 young people participated in the basketball skills competition, traveling from 17 area schools to compete for a chance to compete at the state level.

The Soldiers on hand for the event worked hard at making it run smoothly.

Sgt. Tammy Murphy, C Co., pushed a child in a wheelchair from event to event, while Sgt. Antonio Hinojosa, B Company, led a group of four boys to the edge of the basketball court to compete at throwing a ball into a square of red tape on the wall.

"We're going to do this one first, all right?" Hinojosa said, urging the boys along.

Meanwhile Staff Sgt. Kekico Patterson, C Co., stood in the middle of the court, surrounded by children and activity, wearing a big smile. And Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Fabery, senior drill sergeant, C Co., reacted with big, playful gestures as the boys and girls at the free throw line took shots at the basket.

"They're nothing but a joy," Fabery said later, sitting in the bleachers and watching the competition. "You can be in a bad mood, and see these kids running around ... ."

And then Fabery's voice trailed off, as he went back to watching the young competitors at play.

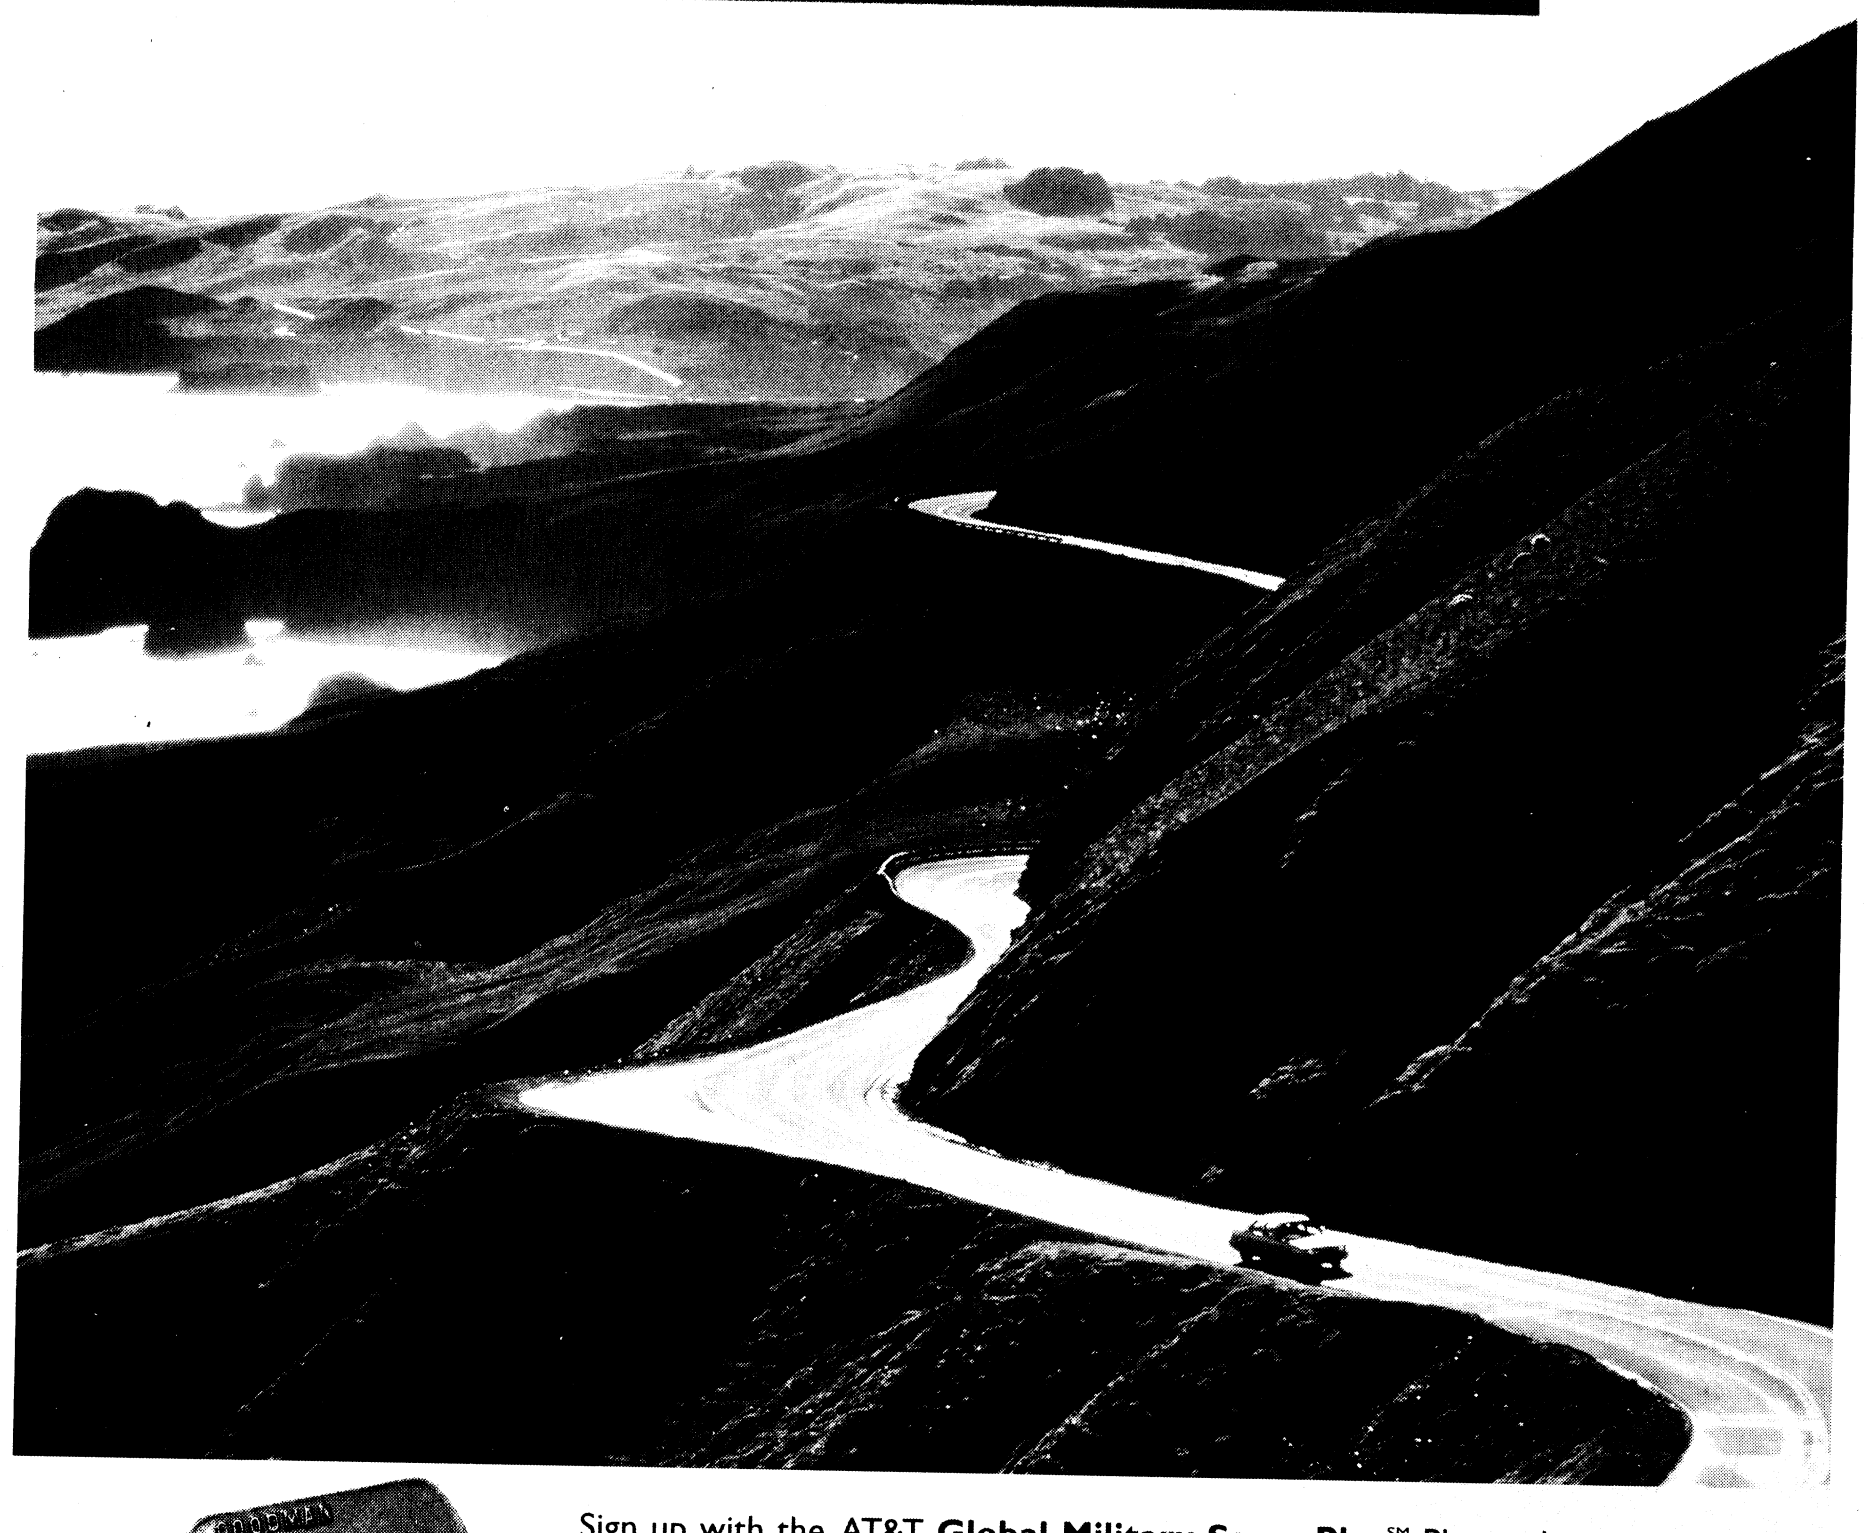
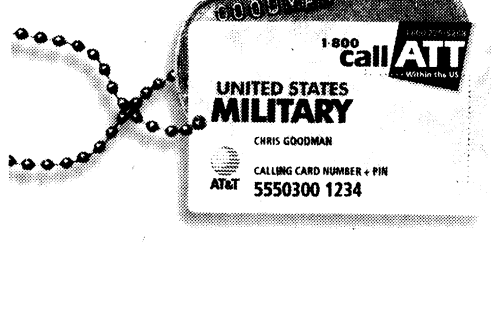
surprise.

"I was nervous, and I really didn't think I did very well. I even cried when it was over," she said.



"We had to wait until the next Tuesday to find out, and by that time I'd put it out of my mind," she added. When my friend told me I'd made it, I really didn't believe her."



Green said the competition was voluntary, and it was up to each competitor to decide if he or she was willing to dedicate extra hours to practice and rehearsals.

"They were very reliable. They started preparing for this in October, just as we were getting ready for our PTO and Christmas performances here at the school," she said. "The competition was very tough, very intimidating, but they worked really hard and it showed in their performances."

Meagan Ferry was named ninth chair in flute. Also at the audition Catarina Giammona was named 11th chair in clarinet. Ross Boston was named fifth chair in trombone, and Ben Kirkwood earned the fifth auxiliary spot in percussion.

Dexter's literacy night puts reading to test

Reading Counts! helps students better understand stories

Dexter Elementary School

Books and technology were a winning combination for Dexter parents and children recently at Family Literacy Night. Parents of students in third through fifth grades were introduced first hand to a new program called Reading Counts!

"I like Reading Counts! because I like reading and it makes me work on understanding the story a little better," said third-grader Kyle Vale. "It makes me set a higher goal for myself."

"I liked Literacy Night because my mom and I chose a book to read together, then we took a computerized test together," said Preston Colvin.

Students earn points for successfully taking the test on each book read.

"Reading Counts! is very motivating because it gives students instant feedback in a positive way," said Laura Feagin, a second-grade teacher.

Parents were also introduced to Scholastic Reading Inventory Interactive, a new reading assessment program being used in the Fort Benning Elementary Schools. SRII assesses students' critical thinking and comprehension skills and provides a wide variety of reports to include one designed just for parents.

"The SRII gives the teacher the current level at which the student is able to comprehend text. The teacher then uses this level to guide the student in selecting appropriate material for independent reading," said Terri Bond, a third-grade teacher. "We know that in order for each child to grow as a reader, he or she must continually read material that is at or little above the current level."

Creating family brochures was also on the agenda for the evening. In a session led by Terri Bond and Heather Jorgensen, both Dexter teachers and parents, families used Microsoft Publisher to create a family brochure. The computer lab was abuzz with activity as parents and children brainstormed favorite family traditions and recorded them on the brochure template along with family names, birthdates, and hobbies.

"It was really interesting and fun to make the brochure because it was a night for my mom and me to be together," said Jessica Egan.

Her mother, Lori, said, "I discovered we both are very opinionated about what we write and how it is written."

Next door, in the primary grade session, led by teachers Peggy Gindville and Nicole Leech, pre-K through first-graders were sitting at computers with their parents, excitedly reading along with electronic books on CD-ROM.

"We enjoyed having a night that was enjoyed with all of our children!" said parent Kristina Brockbank.

Principal Vicki Rogers added, "It was very touching to see young children snuggled up in their parents' lap on a cold, rainy evening enjoying electronic books together."

Favorites included Stellaluna, Dr. Seuss' ABC, and Green Eggs and Ham, and Arthur's Computer Adventure.

Bond, who is also the School Home Partnership Committee chair, coordinated the events. She said she is looking forward to many more successful parent and student nights like these. When parents, teachers and students work together, education can be fun and rewarding!

My favorite part of the field trip was getting inside the tank. There was cool stuff, like bullets and big guns.

Jews celebrate eight days of Hanukkah

Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplains Office

reflections

Hanukkah is a time of celebration commemorating the revolt and victory of the Hasmoneans in 165 B.C. Hanukkah begins on the 25th day of the month of Kislev and lasts for eight days.

In 365 B.C., Alexander the Great, king of Macedonia, crossed from his native Greece into Asia, with a huge army. He defeated the troops of Darius, king of Persia, and became the ruler of the Persian empire, including Syria, Palestine and Egypt. From that time on, for almost 200 years, Jerusalem and the Jews were ruled by foreign authorities and were the victims of numerous wars. The area became a virtual land bridge for the armies of Syria and Egypt.

In 175 B.C., Antiochus Epiphanes became the king of Syria.

Subsequently orders were issued forbidding the observance of Jewish ritual laws and religious worship. The temple in Jerusalem was ransacked and defiled. A pig was offered on the altar, and its blood was sprinkled in the Holy of Holies. Its meat was cooked and the broth was poured on the Scrolls of the Law. Antiochus himself entered the Temple's Holy of Holies, which no man except the high priest was allowed to do and only on Yom Kippur.

Finally, in 165 B.C., Judah Maccabee was victorious over the Syrians, and the Jews returned to Jerusalem. They set about cleaning up the city and the temple and preparing for worship again. Most of the oil for the lamp had been defiled, but they found enough oil to light the Menorah for one day.

They lighted the Menorah on the 25th day of Kislev in 165 B.C., and to their surprise it burned for eight days during the celebration. Since that time, the Jews have celebrated Hanukkah, which means dedication, for eight days every year, commemorating the Festival of Lights, and the Triumph of Freedom.

Some of the acts and events particular to the celebration follow. One candle on the Menorah is lighted the first night of Hanukkah, and an additional one is lighted each following night during the celebration. This is done in Jewish homes and at services in the synagogue. The Menorah is placed in or near a window facing the street, so that all may see it.

Special prayers are said and songs relating to the celebration are sung. A favorite food for the celebration is latkes, or potato pancakes. The game of dreidel is played. A dreidel is a four-sided top. Each side of the top has a letter, N, G, H or S on it. These letters are the first letters of words meaning "a great miracle happened there."

The top is spun, and the letter that lands up tells whether you have to put into the pot, take all, take half or take nothing. According to an old legend, the dreidel was invented during the time of the Maccabees. Because Antiochus forbade the study of the Torah, the Jews would put the dreidel on the table when they gathered to study. If Soldiers appeared, they would quickly spin the top, and the Soldiers only found them playing a harmless game. This saved many Jewish lives. Another custom observed during Hanukkah is that of giving gifts. In ancient times, coins were given. This became known as "Hanukkah gelt."

Although ancient coins are not given today, the gifts are often referred to as "Hanukkah gelt." Happy Hanukkah, and may you receive much "Hanukkah gelt."

Problematic people prove perturbing

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Difficult people cross our paths on a regular basis. Fortunately for most of us, these encounters are usually short lived and we are able to move on with our lives. Sometimes incorrigible people stay longer than we want.

Obstinate people bully others through intimidation, anger and fierce competition. Publicity seekers seek to take credit for other people's work.

Naysayers build themselves up by putting others down. Their obstinacy and negativity seeks to minimize the ideas and actions of others.

Two-faced people pretend to be your friend and supporter, but in reality are undercutting you and your policies when you are not around.

Whiners and complainers infect others with their negativity. Even "yes" people can be problematic because they tell us what they think we want to hear and don't tell us what we need to hear.

Dealing with incorrigible people can be difficult.

Here are some positive pointers.

- Communicate your desire to improve your relationship.
- Keep your body language non threatening.
- Be relaxed and smile.
- Use a pleasant tone of voice.

State your concern in an open way using the following formula. "When X happens, at when and where Y, I feel Z." For example, "When a Soldier is unable to control his or her anger during the duty day at the office, I feel that it reduces unit cohesion and productivity."

Actively listen. The Bible encourages us to be quick to hear (James 1:29). Face and look at the other person. Acknowledge the other person's experience.

Invite them to share their thoughts, feelings and options.

Summarize their statements frequently to ensure accuracy. Ask questions that require more than a yes or no answer.

Be specific as to what you want to see changed or to be different. "I want Soldiers to be civil towards each other, and to treat each other with dignity and respect."

Last of all stress the advantages of working together as a team.

Having understood their side through active listening, differences will be reduced and cooperation and collaboration result.

You can reduce tensions with problem people. Counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Flag football title game wraps up season

203rd FSB, 598th battle on gridiron for championship

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

The post intramural flag football championship game kicked off at 2:30 p.m. Thursday on Engineer Field ending the 2000 sports season.

As of press time the teams to play in the final game were 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade and 598th Maintenance Co., 36th Engineer Group.

However, the four teams remaining Wednesday were all undefeated in the playoffs and were all contenders to win the championship trophy.

"The teams pretty well dominated their games," Fred Woods, sports specialist at Audie Murphy Gym, said.

The teams remaining for the semifinals were: Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 203rd FSB; A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Infantry Regiment; 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.; and 598th Maintenance Co.

203rd FSB edged out A Co., 12-6; and the 598th topped the Rangers, 13-6.

"I think we will take the championships," Michael Cochran, a linebacker for A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., said going into the semifinals. "I am very confident we will win. The whole team is pretty good. We can catch the ball and are running well too. We have no problems whatsoever."

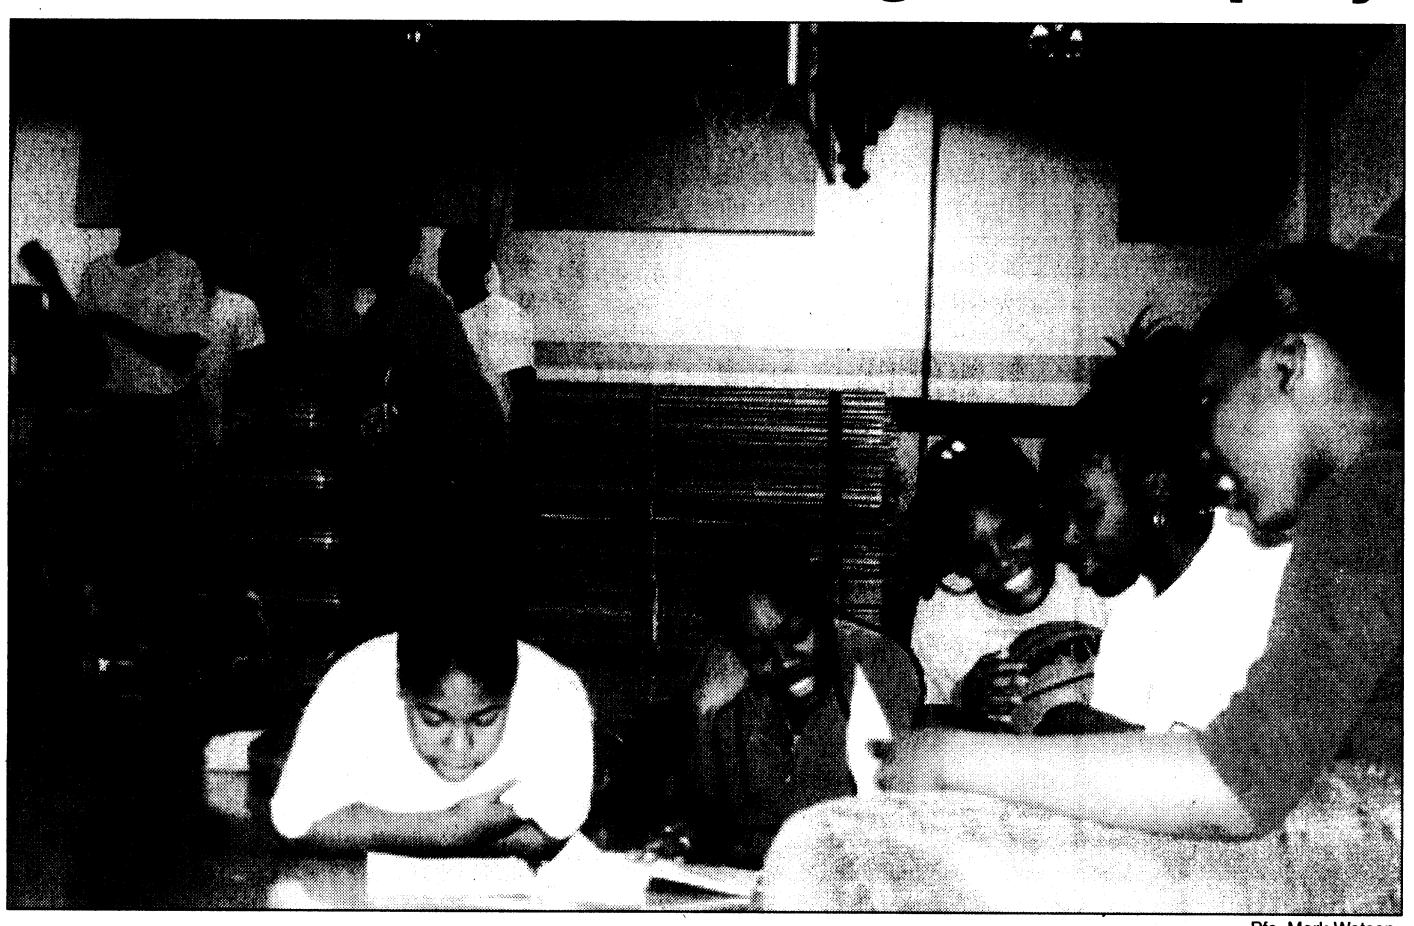
A team that was undefeated throughout the regular season, B Co., 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., 3rd Bde., was sure they would make it into the finals.

"None of our games have been real close," Cpl. Christopher Everett, said. "We won our last game 27-8. We get better as the weeks go by."

Although B Co. was sure they would win, they crumbled against 598th Maintenance Co. in the quarter finals and lost 27-20. The upset was proof that any of the teams could walk away with the championship game.

"Really anyone can win," Woods said. "It just depends on who scores first."

Woods said he predicted B Co. would play in the finals, but when the 598th jumped out to an early lead he said it was totally up in the air. With the cooler temperatures upon us, the weather has become a factor in the ability to control the ball.



"The weather is messing us up a little," Cochran said. " It is definitely harder to keep the ball stable."

The sports directors are planning next season to begin in September.

Faith students must make the grade to play

New program coaches ball, character

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Pfc. Mark Watson

Desha Jordan (right), Tiffany Jones, Alexia McCray, Paulletta Tompson and Tierra Tutson study while members of Faith's boys basketball team practice for upcoming games. A new program at Faith requires the youths to keep up their grades or risk the chance of being released from the team. The boys and girls normally alternate days of study and practice.

Obey without questioning. Don't talk back. Address superiors as sir or ma'am. And complete every bit of work assigned, on time and to standard, with no excuses.

Those are familiar ideas for Soldiers, but those are also the rules for students who want to play basketball at Faith Middle School. "Because it's not about basketball," said Robert Lewis, head coach of the basketball teams and director of the school's intramural program. "It's about character. I couldn't care less about putting a ball through a hole."

The students, of course, care about putting a ball through a hole, and that's the incentive that Lewis uses to enforce strict standards of academic performance and positive behavior; team members who bring home a bad report card no longer get to play, and they know it. Of the 70 players who turned out to play basketball this year, Lewis said, only 60 are still playing. The other 10 didn't have the grades.

At a recent afternoon practice, girl's team captain Carrie Bell, 13, took time off from drills and physical conditioning to talk to a visitor. "This is my first year playing basketball ever in my life," the eighth-grader said. "I wanted to try something new, and see what I was capable of." Bell said she enjoys the game — "very much" — and noted that Lewis constantly stressed the same thing to all the players: Grades, grades, grades. "I have no problem with that anyway," she said, leaning on one elbow against a platform at the front of the gym and smiling with confidence. The basketball program at Faith is different than the familiar kind of school sports program. As part of an intramural program, the basketball teams don't belong to a formal league, and have no scheduled season of games against other schools. "Basically," Lewis said, "I call on the coaches in the area and beg them to play us."

The intramural approach, said Dr. Tom Dignan, principal, is "part of the middle school concept. It gives the students who aren't the 12 best a chance to play."

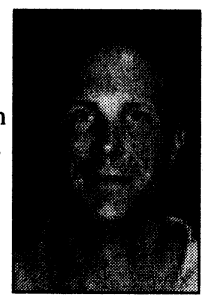
This approach also means the teams aren't funded by the school; while school funds pay for an intramural director, there's no money in the budget to pay for uniforms, equipment, and coaches. The school's Parent-Teacher Organization recently solved the first two problems, Lewis said, with a contribution of more than $800. For coaches, Lewis and his players turn to Fort Benning's most abundant resource: Soldiers. Sgt. 1st Class Jerome Coverson, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment and Staff Sgt. Todd Johnson, A Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, volunteer their afternoons to the program. Both began coaching last year, when they had children on the school's basketball teams.

This year, even though their own children have moved on, both NCOs still coach. Johnson said there's some common ground between the kids he sees on the basketball court and the young Soldiers he sees in his daily work as a drill sergeant. "They're looking for a leader, a role model. And I don't need that hat to be one."

Shooters blast way to wins

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

OKEECHOBEE, Fla. — Service Rifle Team shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit met with military shooters from around the country at the annual Mini-Interservice Championships Dec. 8-10 and walked away with most of the trophies. The competition is by invitation only and is open only to shooters who have made the high master level.



AMU's Staff Sgt. Norman L. Anderson won the National Match Course Championship and set a new match record of 989 points out of a possible 1,000 points; Sgt. 1st Class Rand E. Bentson took second place with a score of 983 points.

Anderson also won the Long Range Rifle Championship with a score of 397 points out of a possible 400, and Sgt. Erik A. Burge took third place with a 392. Anderson additionally placed third in the Long Range Service Rifle Championship.

Sgt. 1st Class Steven C. Young won the Long Range Match Rifle Championship with a perfect score of 200 points out of a possible 200 with 13 Xs (bull's eyes used in tie-breaking), followed by Sgt. Emil Praslick III and Sgt. 1st Class Charles E. Sgt. Lewis A. Tippie coached the team of Bentson, Anderson, Sgt. 1st Class Grant L. Singley and Spc. Robert M. Mango that won the Team Championship with a score of 1,952 points out of a possible 2,000 points.

Problematic porkers practice Ranger tactics, use them well

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Outdoor Recreation

For some time there have been hogs or feral swine in Georgia. I have been told they migrated from the south along the Chattahoochee River. I've also heard there are domestic pigs that escaped from area farms. It appears there are both, wild and domestic. At any rate, in the past three years the hogs have pretty much invaded Fort Benning, which is great for the hunters but bad for the more populated areas.

Recently I was privileged to help Pete Swiderek with Natural Resources Branch eradicate wild hogs from the Main Post area, specifically around Infantry Hall and the airfield. The hogs had devastated the landscape around the Ranger Memorial and were spotted in several housing areas. It took almost 40 days to eliminate the Piney Porkers.

The first week and a half was spent studying their movement patterns and locating the different groups. In previous years I had only harvested three feral swine during deer season. The study and eradication program opened my eyes to a completely different style of hunting. Some of the key things I learned about the hogs are that they have no set movement pattern. And they tend to inhabit places that can supply them with food, water and lots of muck.

Relating to them in military terms, it was almost as if they had studied Field Manual 7-8 and the Ranger handbook. Normally they would travel in team or squad size elements; usually in groups of three or four but, at times, as many as 10. Almost always there was a leader larger and smarter than the rest. When they moved they would often have a scout 50 meters to the front. Their traveling formations consisted of a feeding wedge or Ranger file. They would always disperse quickly on contact, almost as if someone snorted, "Incoming!"

Their patrol bases were always established off natural lines of drift and in the thickest, wettest, nastiest cover around — just like Rangers. From there, they would feed in team-size elements and normally be within 300 meters of their resupply swamp.

Frequently they would send teams up to five miles on reconnaissance patrols looking for a new patrol base. During movement they used handrails leaning toward waterways and ravines to guide themselves. They were also addicted to rolling in the mud, rubbing on trees and rooting. (Who does that resemble?) I won't go into why they have these previously mentioned addictions, but they are key signs to their location.

They would not root in their patrol base, only bed. And during occupation they maintained at least 50 percent security at all times. I located and studied 10 different bedding areas before the eradication. The hogs would run patrols both morning and evening, but conducted their most active harassment raid patrols at night. I observed them with night vision devices for about 20 hours. Patrols conducted during hours of limited visibility or dark included all but a select few hogs, which were left for patrol base security. (Probably those on profile.)

The best place to locate the swine was their wallow area, normally located in a dense swamp. The swamps were difficult to hunt so I concentrated on the edges and trails leading into them (transition areas). The food sources were hard to hunt as well because, like Rangers, hogs eat just about anything.

Hogs have an excellent nose and are quite smart. Their weakest sense is sight. As long as the wind is in your favor, you can often get within 10 meters of them, providing excellent prey for the archer. If you get compromised you will probably hear one or two loud grunts and all will beat hoof from the area of operation. If you can stay with them, they will move 100 to 200 meters depending on the slowest hog and establish an assembly area and reconsolidate. If there are wounded, a large sow will return, collect the young and establish a casualty collection point.

If you can catch a piglet and make it squeal be ready to defend your position. Also, when compromised they often get flustered, and on dispersal will run right over the top of you so be careful and stay near a tree. A 400-pounder almost nailed me in this very manner. That was scary.

Some of the best areas to hunt are the O and K areas skirting post, and all areas skirting the Chattahoochee River on the Georgia side. Check out A 9, and 11; Q 4, and 7; E 7; K 15, 20-22 and N areas. For the most part the pigs have invaded post and can be found in almost every drainage.

We ended up harvesting 58 feral swine during the eradication. That's a lot of pork and work. If you ever drag a 200-pound pig out of a Chattahoochee River bottom you will be smoked.

This year Fort Benning extended the feral swine season allowing firearms use from Oct. 21 to March 16, in hopes of reducing swine numbers. Last year you could only hunt with a rifle during deer season and archery all year. Hogs are very difficult to kill with a bow and require almost a perfect shot.

Because their fat closes around the wound, tracking is difficult. If you shoot a hog with a bow, the best way to recover the animal is to stay with it and not let it out of sight. Often they will run 50 meters or so, allowing another shot if necessary.

It is a good idea to wear rubber gloves when dressing any swine. This will help reduce the chance of disease passage like trichinosis. It's also a good idea to have the blood tested. If you would rather not process your own pig, Daffens in Columbus is one of the few processors that will.

The meat is excellent; best smoked or made into sausage. There are several barbecue places in the area that will smoke the meat at reasonable prices too. I prefer to smoke the 20- to 40-pound piglets myself, which usually take about eight hours.

For those of you who haven't tried pig hunting, it's a blast. Concentrate on swamps and waterways and places a Ranger might hide, for success. Like a Ranger these piney porkers are tough, so wait for the perfect shot. This Ranger is off to the worm pit. Oink!

Former Soldier helps Soldiers help themselves

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Columbus businessman is making a living "helping service members and their families help themselves."

Tim Dunnigan adopted that motto when he left the Army last year to embark on a career marketing products to help other Soldiers succeed in their chosen field.

"This business has helped me stay linked to Soldiers," Dunnigan said. "That's what I loved most about my job — the Soldiers. It certainly wasn't the money or the job security or the whole 'hooah' thing. It was the Soldiers."

And everything on his Web site, www.tylerenterprises.com, is geared toward Soldiers and their families.

Though he offers cadence music, books, software and collectible action figures, Dunnigan recently added a new product that he considers his greatest accomplishment to date — a series of exercise videos designed for men and women who are serious about fitness.

"I put a lot of thought and research into this," Dunnigan said. "I looked at the market and found that there was not an Army-based product available in the civilian market, and the exercise videos available don't focus on total fitness."

Beyond Expectations, a three-video series tailored to beginner-, intermediate- and advanced-level athletes, hit store shelves in November, nearly five years after Dunnigan first conceived the idea.

"I started thinking about writing a fitness book back when I was a drill sergeant," said Dunnigan, who had previously authored several books about various Army-related issues. "But the more I thought about it, the more I felt it needed to be videos. People need to be able to see demonstrations and be directed visually as they work out."

When his Web site began to field questions about physical fitness and maintaining a disciplined fitness regime from convalescing and retired Soldiers, Dunnigan dusted off the video idea and turned to Fort Benning professionals for help. Dunnigan contacted Maj. Danny McMillian, physical therapist and strength and conditioning therapist, for expert advice on the videos' content.

"He had a great idea, and over a period of several months, we formulated a plan to create workouts Soldiers and civilians could do in their home, with no equipment," McMillian said.

"The end result is a unique product when compared to what's out there already," he said. "There are tons of good videos on the market that focus on individual muscles, weight training or aerobics, but this series fills a niche that was not being addressed."

Dunnigan worked hand-in-hand with McMillian and certified master fitness trainers to develop "functional" exercise programs — ones that concentrate on perfecting movement rather than just building muscle.

"The end result is total fitness. We don't guarantee you'll have the body of a supermodel or a weight lifter. Our series sculpts the body, but more importantly it improves cardiovascular fitness and works all the major muscle groups for balance and body composition," he said.

Dunnigan said he always enjoyed, and experienced great success, at developing exercise programs for recruits who weren't able to meet minimum PT standards during his tenure as a drill sergeant.

"I liked working with the individual and seeing him succeed and surpass his own expectations."

Dunnigan said the videos he produced are designed to do just that — help the "doer," not the "viewer," increase his or her fitness level.

"It's a common misconception that all military people are fit," he said. "The majority of unit fitness programs are only good for sustaining your current level of fitness. To achieve more you have to make a commitment to do more."

"More" means approximately 30 minutes a day, three times a week, Dunnigan said. Each two-hour video features three, 30-minute workout segments and classes on fitness and nutrition.

"You don't get physically fit in 10 minutes a day," he said. "Thirty minutes, in the scheme of life, is not a lot to ask, no matter how busy your are."

Beyond Expectations videos are available on Dunnigan's Web site.

Winter baseball camp — Chattahoochee Valley Community College will host its Winter Baseball Camp from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday and Sunday for children ages 7 to 12.

Cost is $80 for preregistration (before Dec. 8) and $100 for late registration (after Dec. 8). Costs will include a T-shirt and hot dog and drinks.

The camp will cover: hitting, pitching, catching, infield, outfield and baserunning.

Special guest speaker will be Joe Georger, Detroit Tigers AA pitching coach and Scot Hemmings, owner of Hemmings School of Baseball and former San Diego Padre outfielder.

Baseballs, bats and helmets will be provided.

Campers will be responsible for their own gloves and cleats.

For camp information, call Coach Adam Thomas at 214-4880.

Museum marathon — The fifth annual Museum of Aviation Marathon, Half Marathon and 5K run and walk will be Jan. 20 at the Museum of Aviation in Robins Air Force Base.

The marathon and half marathon kick off at 8 a.m. and the 5K begins at 8:15 a.m.

Entry fees are $30 for the marathon, $20 for the half marathon and $12 for the 5K race.

People who register after Jan. 6 will be charged $3 more.

For more information, call John Hunter at 926-6686 or 922-1019.

YS accepts applications — Youth Services is now taking applications for winter basketball.

For more information about how to become a coach for any of the YS sporting activities, call Youth Services at 545-3070 or 545-3540 or stop by Youth Services, Building 1056.

AMU seeks shooters — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is looking for a few good shooters who are interested in competing in pistol competitions in the summer of 2001.

No previous shooting experience is required.

Soldiers in the rank of sergeant first class and below with less than 15 years service who obtain approval from their commanders can travel to Fort Benning in May at the expense of the Marksmanship Unit to participate in the initial training. Once that is complete, pistol team officials will select shooters to participate in the Interservice Championships in June at Camp Robinson, Ark. and the National Matches in July in Camp Perry, Ohio.

Upon completion of the three-month tour, Soldiers return to their units.

Interested Soldiers can call Gibbs at 545-7022 or 545-3893 or DSN 835-7022 or e-mail Charles.Gibbs@usarec.army.mil

For more information, visit the unit's Web site at http://www.usarec.army.mil/bq/amu/www.usamu.com; click on shooting teams, select service pistol and click on recruitment information.

Club seeks powerlifters — Anyone interested in powerlifting or wanting to form a powerlifting club on post for the purpose of going to competitions, call Richard Wideman at 689-2481.

YS offers Tae Kwon Do classes — Tae Kwon Do classes (two styles) are available at Youth Services.

Classes are open to youth family members, ages 6 and older, as well as active duty, retired military and DoD civilians.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Basketball camp — There will be a summer basketball camp for players 8 to 19 years old.

Applications are being evaluated for the Ten Star All Star Summer BasketBall Camp. Players are selected by invitations only.

To receive an evaluation form, call (704) 568-6801.

Georgia Parks offers annual pass — Outdoor enthusiasts can save money at any of Georgia's 48 state parks this year by buying an Annual ParkPass.

The pass is $25 and provides unlimited access to Georgia State Parks without paying the $2-$4 daily parking fee.

For more information about the ParkPass program, call (404) 657-9851.

You don't pay tax on a Roth IRA

This is the big attraction of a Roth IRA—you don't pay tax when you make a qualified withdrawal, not even on the earnings and gains that build up.

You must follow certain rules, such as holding the Roth IRA for at least 5 years and reaching the age of 59½.

What's more, you can convert many traditional IRA accounts to a Roth IRA. And you can contribute to a Roth IRA after the age of 70½.

You will need to meet the guidelines, and make careful comparisons to determine which choice is best for you.

Other IRA options also offer tax advantages. For example, you can withdraw up to $10,000 from most IRA accounts without paying an early-withdrawal tax, if you use the funds to buy a first home or pay for higher education.

For all the facts on Roth and other IRA benefits, see your 1999 tax booklet. Or check the IRS Web site: www.irs.gov

TO OUR MILITARY PATIENTS

We welcome new and previously established military patients to our practice. Those who have seen us previously at Martin Army Hospital and wish to continue with us should call our office to schedule appointments, as we will no longer be seeing any patients at the Martin Army Hospital Cardiology Clinic. You may continue to use Martin Army Hospital for all other services as usual, however. Patients who wish to be referred to our practice may obtain referrals from their primary care physicians, but referrals are not necessary. We accept Medicare, private insurance, and Tricare Standard. However, effective December 22, 2000 we will no longer accept Tricare Prime and Tricare Extra.

Call (706) 324-7377 for appointments.

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Long-time lender loosens its requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a loan? Do you need a better vehicle for your money? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered "yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you are pre-approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan, usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge how much you qualify for. Credit manager Kevin Thompson or his assistant, Jimmy Peters can be reached at 322-8888 ext 144 or ext 145. Open 7 days a week.

DoD focuses on moving blues

Fort Benning to participate in pilot program

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning is one of 23 military installations that will participate in a two-year pilot program designed to improve the moving process for service members and their families.

The Full Service Moving Project, which kicks off Jan. 8, is a joint effort between the Department of Defense and the transportation industry to provide better service through enhancements such as time-specific pick-up and delivery, a simplified claims process and full reimbursement for the replacement of lost or broken items.

The intent is to get beyond the method of selecting a carrier based solely on the lowest bid, and to move the military toward a more value-oriented approach. Under the test program, a variety of criteria will be studied, including input from customer surveys on performance, the DoD said.

The DoD is the moving industry's largest customer, accounting for nearly one out of every five moves, or more than 650,000 personal property shipments each year at a cost of more than $1.2 million.

But, customer satisfaction is low because of a high incidence of loss and damage, and the DoD reports that out of every four shipments, one will result in a claim.

A private California-based company, the Pasha Group, has been awarded the contract to serve as the Move Manager at Fort Benning for all outbound shipments during the course of the test.

"We have been contracted to provide move-management services — to be a single-point of contact for the service members from the beginning to the end of their move.

Loaded 45 nabs drunks

Pfc. Mark Watson

Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins, 71st Military Police Detachment, keeps an eye on the suspect while he counts $662 confiscated along with a 9 mm pistol, which was loaded, and 1 ounce of marijuana. The suspect tried to flee the scene but Jenkins detained him with the help of a passing motorist.

Campaign keeps roads safer

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

In an all out effort to keep drunken drivers off Fort Benning roads military police increased the number of patrols and are battling the menaces with a "Loaded 45."

"Loaded 45" is an annual 45-day campaign that takes place from Nov. 19 to Jan. 2 in which the MPs' mission is to take drunken drivers off the roads.

"During the holiday season there are a lot more vehicles on the road," said Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins, a Fort Benning traffic accident investigator. "We step up our patrols to deter drunken driving and to make the roads safer."

As of Saturday, MPs made 60 arrests for driving under the influence on Fort Benning since the beginning of the fiscal year. Nearly half occurred during the first 17 days of the "Loaded 45" campaign.

Saturday night, Fort Benning traffic was, for the most part, "driving safely," Spc. Anthony Foxworth, a traffic accident investigator, said. The MPs of the traffic section made several stops, but traffic was lower than normal.

Although there were fewer vehicles, MPs were on the lookout for dangerous drivers.

"We are looking for defective headlights or tail lights, improper lane changes, people driving too

Fort Benning Soldiers will be able to enroll in the Army's new tuition-free online education program Jan. 16.

They will receive laptop computers and technology packages through the Army University Access Online.

Sgt. Christopher Jones represented Fort Benning, one of three test sites for the program, during a ceremony in Washington, D.C., Dec. 14. He is enrolled in the program and received his laptop computer and printer from Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera.

Jones, assistant regimental schools NCO, 75th Ranger Regiment, will use the computer to take college courses on the Internet, and at the end of two years, it will be his to keep if he completes 12 semester hours within that window.

"I plan to take the laptop with me to work, and during my lunch break, work on my courses. Any free time I have at home will be spent working on my degree," Jones said.

"I couldn't pass up this chance, especially with the Army covering the tuition costs," he said.

Early retirement approved for post

VERA gives employees more options

There's good news for some of Fort Benning's federal employees who may be displaced by the upcoming reduction in force.

The Department of Defense have approved the post Civilian Personnel Advisory Center's request for Voluntary Early Retirement Authority. VERA allows federal workers to retire early from their jobs even though they do not otherwise meet the criteria for optional retirement.

"The VERA approval is good news for Fort Benning," said Kathleen Kenna, director, CPAC. "It provides an opportunity for employees to retire early and it will enable us to reduce the number of involuntary separations."

These separations will be a factor for many civilian employees over the upcoming spring and summer. Kenna said the reduction in force will affect approximately 800 post employees.

The most significant impact will be in the Directorate of Logistics and Directorate of Public Works.

"Ken (Strumpler) and I both consider the recent receipt of installation approval for the Voluntary Early Retirement Authority as a positive offering to the work force," said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Public Works. "In August when the initial decision was announced, many went on the record stating that we — Fort Benning — would do what we could for this great civilian work force."

"The RIF process creates a ripple effect as one employee's job is abolished. The employee may then displace another employee who may also be able to displace someone else," Kenna said.

Stelzer said the VERA announcement gives employees some control over their futures.

"By receiving the authority for VERA, and last month's authorization for of Voluntary Separation Incentive Program, we place a number of decisions back in the hands of our employees who can take voluntary action that is right for their particular circumstances," Stelzer said.

This means the employees get a clearer picture of who will be affected by the RIF.

Although the program is voluntary for the employees and places some of the decision making back in their hands, Stelzer said the approving authority is the organization and mission requirements are taken into consideration when reviewing the requests.

"The organization has to weigh the mission needs because, in each case, the loss of the employee cannot be filled through another recruitment," Stelzer said.

Ideal holiday includes sprinkles

commentary

This is the season to be jolly, but if you are running around a little stressed, I bet part of it stems from trying to live up to some ideal Christmas you've pictured.

It's that picture in your head of a perfectly decorated tree that never leans to one side, much less falls to the floor. Under the tree are the gifts you've carefully selected, paid cash for and wrapped weeks ago — the gifts everyone will love and not return Dec. 26. Christmas cards, including a beautiful portrait of the family all dressed in holiday wear, have been mailed, and the smell of homemade goodies fills the air.

I'm stressed just writing about such Martha Stewart perfection because it's the closest I'll ever get.

Thank goodness my children don't seem to mind that the Christmas cards are still on the dining room table, and that I have shopping still to do. I take comfort in the fact that their standards are more forgiving sometimes than my own.

They can live with a less than perfect tree, as long as there are lots of lights blinking constantly. As for homemade treats, sugar cookies can be sliced from a tube. What matters to my girls is the amount of frosting and sprinkles they can pour on top.

As a result, I've adopted the philosophy that as long as your heart is in the right place, any imperfections can be covered with blinking lights, icing and sprinkles. You just have to be sure to have plenty of all three — and a dose of patience — on hand.

After 13 Christmases as an Army wife, and traipsing across the country trailing wrapping paper and gasoline fumes, I've found that everybody's ideal is different.

For example, there's the whole manner in which gifts are opened on Christmas morning. In my husband's family, the method is long and drawn out. One person opens a gift while everyone else watches and waits his or her turn. Each opening is an event, carefully documented on film by my mother-in-law. The photographs then appear in photo albums and scrapbooks for generations of Shutts to see.

I learned after my first Christmas there to get up early, change out of my pajamas and put on makeup.

That's not the scene at the Smith house in North Carolina. We drag out of bed, enter the den, and assign a young person to pass out and stack the gifts in front of each recipient. Once all the gifts have been handed out, everyone starts opening and talking at once. Paper, bows and thank-yous fly all over the room. It's chaos, and I love it.

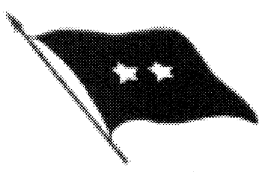
The mission is accomplished rather quickly, and we all move to the kitchen where attention is turned to the other big highlight of the day — the food.

My mother's ideal is a perfectly orchestrated holiday feast, featuring the favorite dishes of her loved ones and topped off by the unveiling of her Christmas fruitcake — a dense concoction of nuts, food-colored fruit and no telling what else.

She and my dad are the only ones who ever eat the thing, yet she still goes to the trouble of baking one each year for him.

I don't eat fruitcake, yet it's still a part of my ideal Christmas. I treasure the memories of my parents sitting at the table, eating fruitcake and drinking coffee on Christmas, offering to share the cake with all of us, but getting few takers.

To me, being with family makes Christmas perfect. And, if the tree, decorations, gifts and food all meet some preconceived standard, that's great. But, if not, pass the sprinkles and frosting.



Celebrate, remember those away

The holidays offer all of us a chance to celebrate in our varied and rich traditions.

I join with all command members and families of the Fort Benning community in wishing you the best for your 2000 holiday season. Each of us possesses our own unique ways of celebrating Christmas, Hanukkah and the New Year. The richness of our diversity, and the celebrations we embrace, add meaning and purpose to all of our lives.

As we celebrate, let us remember those families that are separated, those countries at war, those Soldiers deployed and the untold numbers of families struggling for their freedoms as a democracy.

We are indeed a privileged nation and have many reasons to celebrate this season.

Our religious roots lend to our ability to celebrate even in the gravest of times. Our world is fragile and our mission of peace is challenging. We continue to defend and preserve the freedoms we cherish and the people we love.

At Fort Benning, we hold a unique place in the role of peace and goodwill toward our world. We should all be extremely proud of that role we play in training and molding superb Soldiers. We continue to be extremely proud of all our command members who work so hard to make Fort Benning the great installation it is.

The coming new year will usher in the opportunity to highlight the successes of 2000, while looking forward to 2001 with a sense of excitement and optimistic spirit. Let us continue to pursue excellence in all our endeavors and make a real difference in our world.

I look forward to another year of work, service and celebrations with you.

Enjoy your holidays!

Soldiers' contributions deserve thanks

As the first year of the new millennium comes to a close, we pause to reflect on the remarkable contributions that American Soldiers have made to the nation and the world throughout our history.

More than 225 years ago, our forefathers ushered in a new era dedicated to democracy and liberty. The spirit of independence that they kindled produced a nation that today is acknowledged as the greatest testament to the human spirit in the history of man: a nation so committed to the blessings of peace, hope, and liberty that it sends its best sons and daughters into harm's way to keep the flame of freedom burning for all mankind.

Preserving liberty requires tremendous personal sacrifice. Like our forefathers, many of whom gave their young lives to the cause of liberty, today's Soldiers willingly shoulder the heavy burden of standing guard on the frontiers of freedom.

Each day, from Kosovo to Korea, from Saudi Arabia to East Timor, and in more than 60 other countries, men and women of the U.S. Army face the possibility of danger; they willingly sacrifice the comforts of home and family so that others may remain safe and secure.

The men and women of the U.S. Army are the best at what they do. Highly trained and highly motivated, they know that the freedom and security of our nation — and that of our friends and allies — depend on their ability and dedication. They serve out of a love for what America represents — liberty, justice, and respect for human dignity. They serve because they know that they are mankind's best hope for bringing peace, order, and stability to the most troubled areas of the world.

America is profoundly grateful and indebted to you, the American Soldier, for everything you do.

As you celebrate this holiday season, many of you deployed far from home, may each of you find joy and satisfaction in the knowledge that because of you, America is a safer and better place; that because of you, America remains a shining beacon of hope to the less fortunate peoples of the world who look to us for leadership.

We wish you a happy and safe holiday season and a peaceful New Year.

letter

Dec. 15 about 5:45 p.m. I went to the PX. When I reached the ID checker I encountered an officer going shopping before his unit's formal Christmas party.

How did I know it was formal? The way the officer was dressed. He was wearing dress blues pants, white shirt with bow tie and engineer-red suspenders.

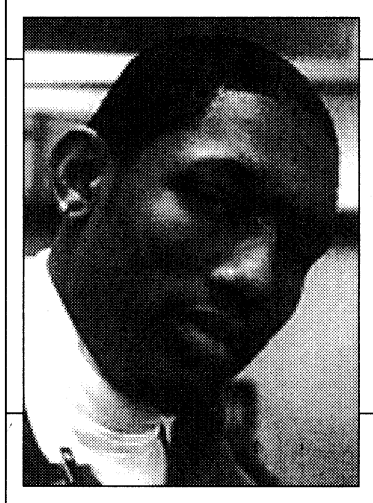
I approached him and suggested he return to his car for his uniform jacket. He protested. He said as long as he wasn't wearing the jacket he was not in uniform, and he can go or do what he likes. I informed him he was incorrect and out of uniform. At this point he walked away and went shopping. No one else in the store approached him to make the correction. Who was wrong?

The engineer captain in the jewelry department just looked at him. A lieutenant colonel with the medical corps said he was out of uniform but did not say anything to the offender. There were several sergeants major and other NCOs who commented on him being out of uniform but did nothing to correct the situation. Unfortunately, I have no influence to make corrections. Given this chain of events, I ask, "Who was wrong?"

The answer is all of the above. If you see an infraction and your ethics do not direct you to make the correction you are wrong.

I find it embarrassing that one would have to correct a Soldier for such a glaring error, regardless of rank. My fear is someone has to put this officer in charge of other Soldiers. Does his lack of pride in self and his careless attitude carry over to the way he cares for Soldiers?

Does the fact that so many others let him walk around without making corrections indicate there is a deeper problem in the ranks? One that a black beret will not fix?



Soldiers, this is your Army. It will become what you make of it.

The officers that were in the PX and saw this infraction and did nothing should hang their heads.

School of the Americas closes doors

Officials say school brought nations closer

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Under cloudy skies and a Southern Georgia chill, more than a half-century of military tradition in the Western Hemisphere came to an end Dec. 15.

Before a group of distinguished U.S. and Latin American officials gathered outside historical Ridgway Hall, the U.S. Army School of the Americas furled its flag, concluding a vibrant history of cooperation with our Latin American neighbors.

"This school brought our nations closer together in a common quest for peace and prosperity in our own hemisphere," said Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera, guest speaker for the closing ceremony. Caldera said the school's history provided a strong foundation for the establishment of a new and different institution dedicated to meeting the new challenges our hemisphere will face in the 21st century.

The Department of Defense Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation will open at Fort Benning Jan. 17.

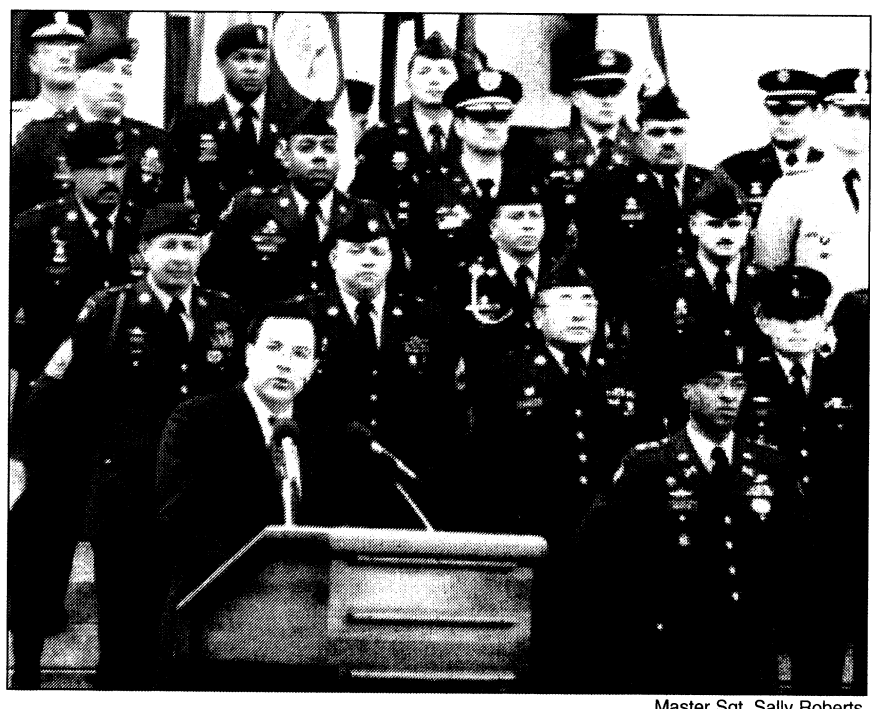
Looking back in history, Caldera said USARSA drew its roots from the experiences of our nation in World War II, where the U.S. came of age as a world power with global responsibilities, and Axis powers were attempting to project influence in the Americas.

"The U.S. Army stationed colonels in every South American country to foster and strengthen our relationships," he said. "Hitler's entreaties failed. In the end, Mexico sent an air force squadron to fight with the Allies in the Philippines and Brazil sent forces to Italy. Later, Argentina sent forces to fight by our side against tyranny in Korea."

He added that the Cold War brought threatening challenges to the democratic stability of the region and that engagement and alliances with Latin America was critical to meeting those threats — primarily that of communism — from taking root in the Western Hemisphere by force of arms.

"The struggle was not easy," Caldera said. "Sadly, the history of the 20th century is full of the loss of innocent life in the struggle against tyranny. But in the end, freedom prevailed."

He said today thanks to U.S. engagement policies, we can rejoice in how far Latin America has come.



"Every country in Latin America — save Cuba — is now governed by elected leaders accountable to their people," he said.

He acknowledged that although South America still has a host of problems including border disputes, narco-trafficking and environmental degradation, democracy, free markets and human rights are a key part of the political landscape.

He emphasized that through combined efforts those problems can be resolved peacefully.

"I believe that because of our visionary leaders who pursued a policy of engagement and developed the School of the Americas to mold leaders who would support the rule of law and their democratic, freely elected governments, Latin America is far better off today than it otherwise would have been had Marxist-backed governments prevailed," Caldera said.

The secretary honored the more than 60,000 graduates of the school, and thanked the school's Soldiers and faculty, past and present, who upheld American values and served as a force for good.

Master Sgt. Sally Roberts

Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera speaks during the U.S. Army School of the Americas closing ceremony Dec. 15. "This school brought our nations together in a common quest for our own hemisphere," Caldera said.

He also sent a message to those who criticized the United States' role in Latin America during the difficult period of the last half-century and wrongly accused the school of teaching torture and training dictators.

"Let me say very clearly that any soldier in Latin America, who had even the most remote connection to the School of the Americas, who has ever committed a human rights violation, did so in spite of the training they received at the School of the Americas and not because of it," Caldera said.

As he's said before, Caldera believed the critics' quarrel against the school was not really with the school itself or with the U.S. Army.

It was with the U.S. government's role in Latin America and the fact that the U.S. was called to support our friends and allies in their struggle for security.

Looking into the crowd as the secretary finished his speech, one could see the emotions stirring on the faces of so many people who had committed themselves to upholding the school's values — Soldiers, civilians, Latin American guest instructors and family members.

However, Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant of USARSA since 1998, said the closing ceremony was not an occasion for sadness, but one for anticipation for a brighter future.

"Today peace, democratization and a redefinition of civil-military relationships are on the march in the Americas after decades of bitter conflict," Weidner said. "Each of these accomplishments lay at the heart of the mission of the School of the Americas since its inception."

He said the scope of the institution had continually changed and grown with the dramatic events of the last 50 years.

"Today is but the latest and yes, the last chapter in that evolution," he said. "It is a day that marks the completion of a job well done — the job of securing this hemisphere from internal strife and the threat of foreign aggression."

He said it was a celebration of the democratic peace and the associated democratic progress that has come to define our converging goals.

Weidner said he was proud to have served as commandant of the school, and thanked everyone who made his mission complete by supporting the school's goals.

He presented certificates of recognition to some of those major pillars of support who were present during the ceremony including Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters; the International Friendship Ministry; Hosts of Latin Americans; Friends of the Americas and Glenwood School of Phenix City. He also recognized Walter Santamaria and Mauricio Lawson, for their more than 87 years of service combined.

Mother Nature, who gave the ceremony a bit of Jack Frost, seemed to be thanking the school for the contribution to our hemisphere, as seconds before the furling of the flag, she allowed the sun to break through the thick clouds, bringing warmth to the cool atmosphere.

Amidst a sea of green, blue, brown and beige uniforms representing USARSA's international family, and in a halo of sun light, the flag was furled and carried away where it will be stored at the Center for Military History.

Immediately thereafter, the sun disappeared — it was cold again and USARSA was a part of that history.

Program: Provides laptops for tuition-free, online courses for the Army University Access Online program in July. Fort Benning, Fort Campbell, Ky., and Fort Hood, Texas, were selected as the initial sites.

The Army awarded a $453 million contract to PricewaterhouseCoopers to provide distance education for an estimated 80,000 Soldiers during the next five years.

"I'm very excited for our Soldiers about this Army University Access online because what it is saying to young people in America is you can come into the Army and serve your country and still get that college education from leading universities across our nation, just as if you had stayed home and signed up for your local university," Caldera said Friday morning at Fort Benning, where he attended the closing of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Caldera sees the program as important to recruitment and retention, especially since "75 percent of our high school graduates go to college," so we need to give them a learn-while-you-serve option," he said.

"It will be good for retention because Soldiers won't have to leave the Army in order to get the education they feel they will need for the future job they will hold when they leave the Army," Caldera said.

The program is one reason Jones decided to re-enlist in February for three more years, the Ranger said.

"This program is very important for enlisted Soldiers. Most NCOs get out of the Army so they can earn their degrees. With this, you can take your courses online and still stay in the Army and receive your pay and benefits," said Jones, who one day plans to become a teacher.

PricewaterhouseCoopers is scheduled to have the web portal open in mid-January, and Soldiers will be allowed to register at the Education Center for the program Jan. 16, said Elaine Livingston, education service officer at Fort Benning. The center, Building 2602, is located in Soldiers' Plaza.

"Fort Benning is motivated and excited about this new educational incentive, and we are doing everything possible at the Education Center to get the information to the Soldiers," Livingston said.

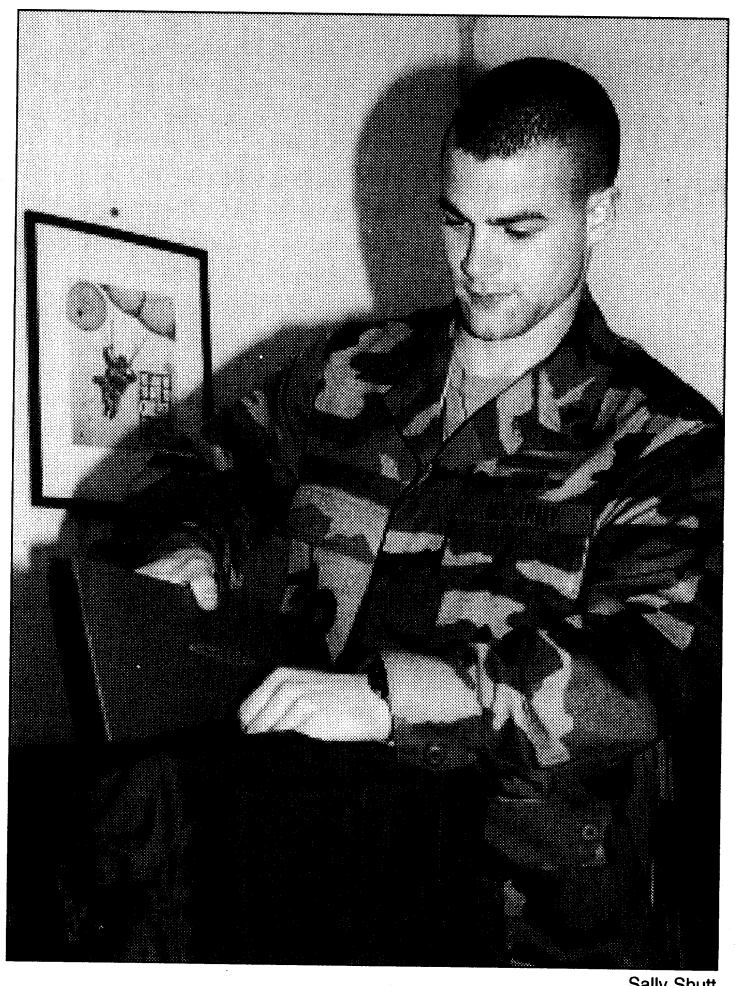
"We see this as a state-of-the-art opportunity for Soldiers to achieve their college and academic goals any time, any place, anywhere," Livingston said.

To be eligible, Soldiers — privates to sergeants major — must have three years of service remaining. If they do not have three years, they may extend their enlistment to meet that requirement, Livingston said.

The Army will pay for all tuition, course fees and books. Students who complete 12 semester hours, usually four courses, within 24 months will be allowed to keep the laptop computers, Livingston said.

"We hope they will continue on in their pursuit of education and life-long learning," Livingston said. "A better educated Soldier is a better trained Soldier."

The Army University Access Online technology package includes a Compaq laptop computer and printer distributed by TurboTek Computers, a standard suite of software and Internet browser, Internet connectivity by Fiberlink, and 24-hour call center support by Precision Response Corporation.



The set of about 25 institutions who have signed on as academic partners for the program include Florida State University in Tallahassee, Kansas State University in Manhattan, Troy State University in Alabama, University of Alabama in Birmingham, University of Texas at Arlington, University of Washington at Seattle and Utah State University in Logan.

Caldera is confident Soldiers will find the time to earn their degrees "anytime, anyplace."

"I know that all we have to do is put this tool in their hands, and they're going to take advantage of it," he said.

Moving: Becomes easier next year

We are there to interface with the moving companies and hold those carriers to commercially accepted standards and practices," said Fran Vollaro, Fort Benning's move manager for the Pasha Group.

Service members who are scheduled to begin planning their outbound moves at the Transportation Office, Building 280, on or after Jan. 8 will have their shipments handled by counselors working for the Pasha Group and will participate in the program.

Any outbound moves that have already been booked, and all incoming shipments — except from the other 22 test sites — will fall under the current system and be handled by Transportation Division employees.

The FSMP is one of three pilot moving programs being tested throughout the DoD — each designed to apply commercial standards to military moves and improve the quality of life for service members.

Features of the new program that will appeal to service members include:

- A move manager who acts as a single point of contact from the counseling appointment through the delivery. Customers can call a 24-hour toll free telephone number or access the Internet for information on their shipments.
- Full replacement value protection, with settlements based on a fair market value, not on a depreciated value.
- A streamlined claims process. The move manager will assist in getting estimates. The responsibility and cost will no longer fall on the customer. Once a claim is submitted, it must be processed and paid within 45 days. A quick claims settlement option will also be available for claims under $500. The goal is to have those paid within five working days.
- A guaranteed arrival time for packing, pick-up or delivery. Carriers must arrive within two hours of the scheduled time and on the agreed date, or face making a compensation payment to the service member for any inconvenience.

Compensation would cover items such as childcare or missed workdays, Vollaro said.

- Feedback. Two weeks after a move, the Gallup Organization will call the service member and conduct a customer satisfaction survey to find out how the system is working and rate the carrier's work.
- Binding estimates. Before a move occurs, service members will be told if they will exceed their entitlement and what the excess cost to them will be.

Entitlements, such as weight allowances, will not change under the test program, Vollaro said.

"If they ask for services that are not covered in their entitlement, they will have the option of paying for that based on a binding estimate given upfront from the carrier for the cost," she said.

- Optional relocation services available at a cost to service member.

"I think this is what the Soldiers have been asking for over the years," Linda Kelley, chief, Personal Property Section, Transportation Division, said of the test program. "Not that the present service wasn't a good service, but they more or less wanted to go commercial with it."

Shelley Marley has moved four times in the last 13 years, and she said changes are needed to reduce the stress felt by military families faced with moving frequently.

"Often it falls on the spouses to handle things because the service member has already had to go ahead and report for duty," she said.

Marley, whose husband, Cory, is a sergeant first class, has gone through the lengthy claims process for missing and damaged items and felt the frustration of receiving a depreciated value, rather than a fair market value for replacement. For example, she once received $3 for a broken Gorham crystal goblet, which sold at the post exchange for $55.

"To them, it was a just a glass. I'll never forget that," Marley said.

For more information about the FSMP, visit the www.dodfsmp.com Web site. For local information, call Linda Kelley in the Transportation Office at 545-4881.

Soldiers offer advice on professional reading

Web site offers Army chief's reading list

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Back in the days when he was still a lieutenant, Maj. Tim Karcher's second company commander gave him a book. It wasn't much to look at.

"The binding was gone, the pages were yellow," Karcher said. "And he said, 'here, you need to read this.'"

That book was Once an Eagle, Anton Myrer's 1968 novel about two Soldiers who rise through the ranks on very different paths, driven by distinctly different values. Karcher's captain was on to something; the book, Karcher said, conveys the experience of service "probably better than any book I've ever read. It goes deeper into the motivations of military professionals."

Today Karcher, the chief of Tactics Team 3, CATD, still regards Myrer's novel as a compass that can provide meaningful direction to a Soldier who faces the daily test of values that military service represents.

"In light of current attrition," Karcher said, "it emphasizes for me the importance of sticking with what you really believe in. You just read that book and understand that good and bad comes with everything, but the dedicated Soldier continues to lead."

Someone else also thinks Once an Eagle is worth reading: Gen. Erik Shinseki, the Army chief of staff. Shinseki has placed the novel on his professional reading list, citing it as a book that has "profoundly influenced the shape and character of the post-Vietnam Army" and calling it a "must-read for those young leaders contemplating a career in the profession of arms."

"We can never spend too much time thinking about our profession," reads the Army Web site that lists Shinseki's recommended books. "There is no better way to develop the sure knowledge and confidence required of our calling than a disciplined, focused commitment to a personal course of reading and study."

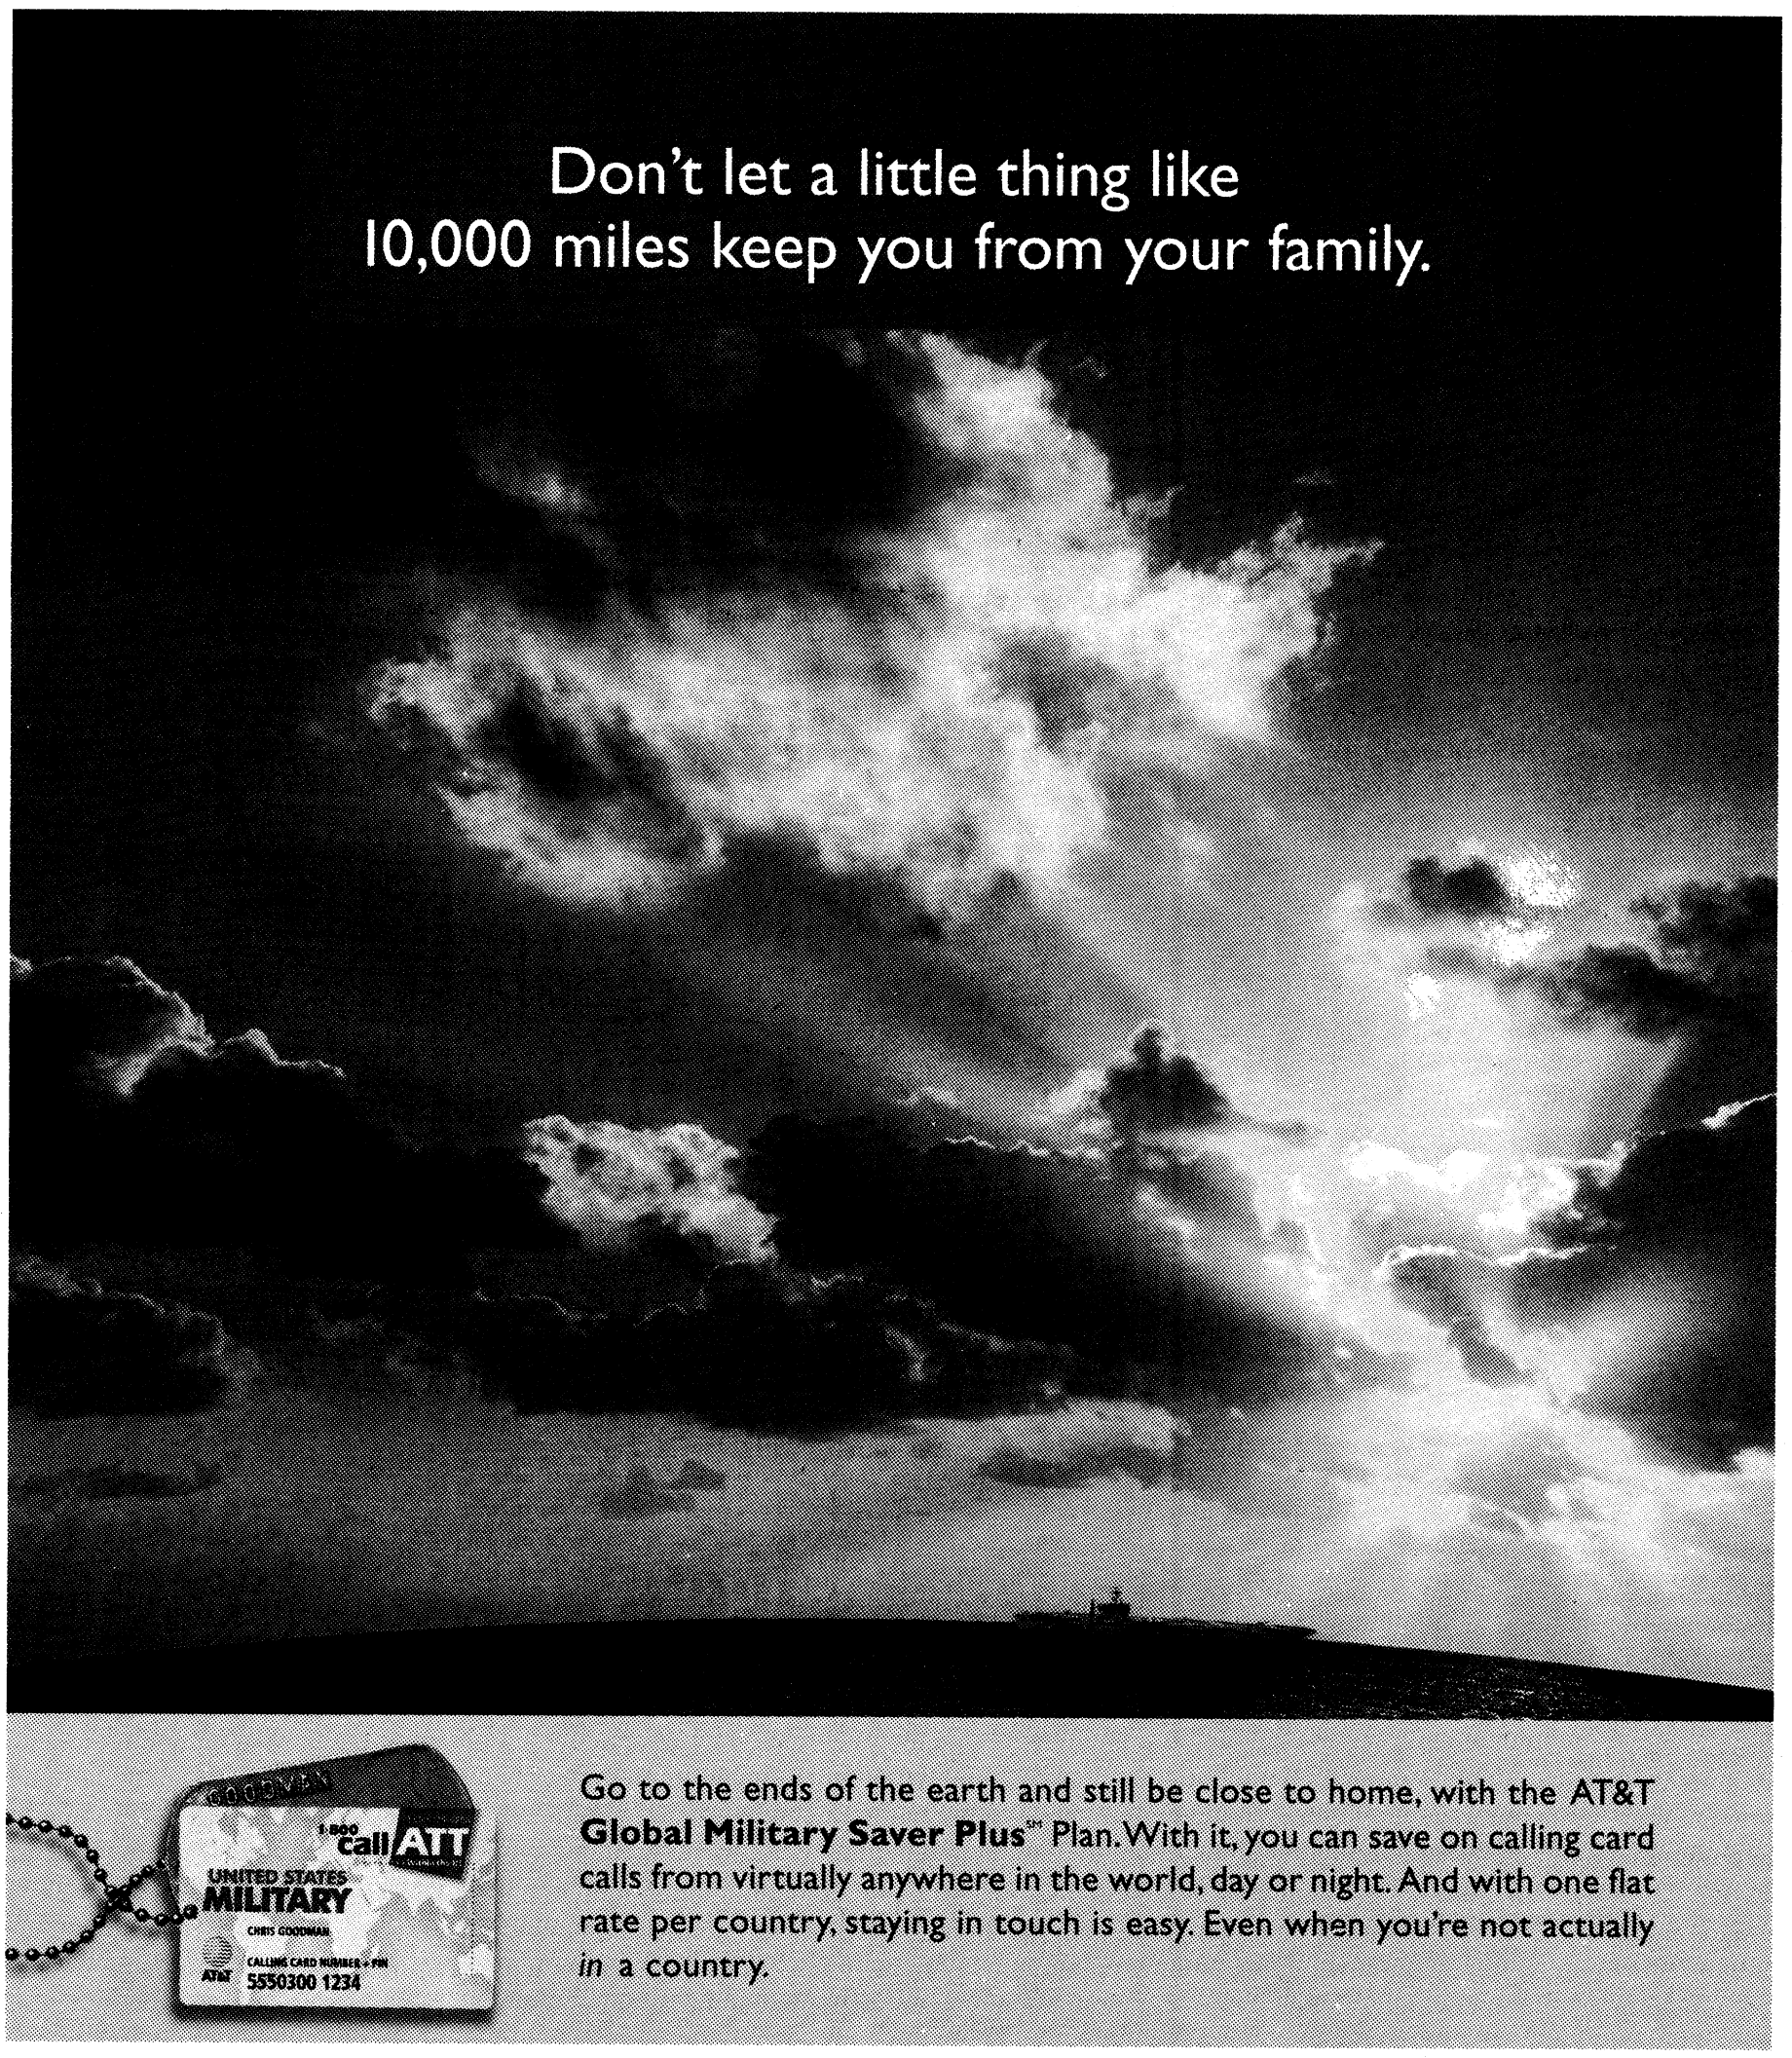
That's exactly right, said Command Sgt. Maj. George R. Monk, commandant, NCO Academy — and it's true for Soldiers in every rank. For years, Monk said, officers were given professional development reading lists and encouraged to keep learning about their role. Only in relatively recent years, though, have enlisted Soldiers and NCOs been given the same direction.

"I thought it was about time," Monk said. "If we don't take the time to get educated, then we're going to be left behind."

Monk, who holds two master's degrees and is working on a doctorate, has his own favorite books for professional growth. Army field manuals represent the "types of things we need to be successful NCOs," he said, and several of Stephen R. Covey's books, such as The 7 Habits of Highly Effective People, provide a perspective on leadership that are relevant despite coming from the civilian world. A recent book on the way that young people learn and communicate, Don Tapscott's Growing Up Digital: The Rise of the Net Generation, is a good choice for leaders who want to understand the generation behind them. "It's just a different time in life," Monk said. "Now I'm the old guy."

For some Soldiers, reading about their profession can do more than provide useful lessons; it can also provide a reminder of the value of their work. Capt. Mickey Jett, chaplain, 29th Infantry Regt., works in an office with overflowing bookshelves in three different corners. Books about the history of Army chaplains, he said, "help confirm for me that what we do, even though it's under the surface, is so valuable to the Soldier. If a Soldier's spirit hasn't been nurtured, he'll eventually fail his country. I believe that."

Among Jett's favorite books on Army chaplains are Claude D. Newby's It Took Heroes, on a chaplain serving in combat in Vietnam, and Battlefield Chaplains, Donald F. Crosby's book about Catholic chaplains in World War II.

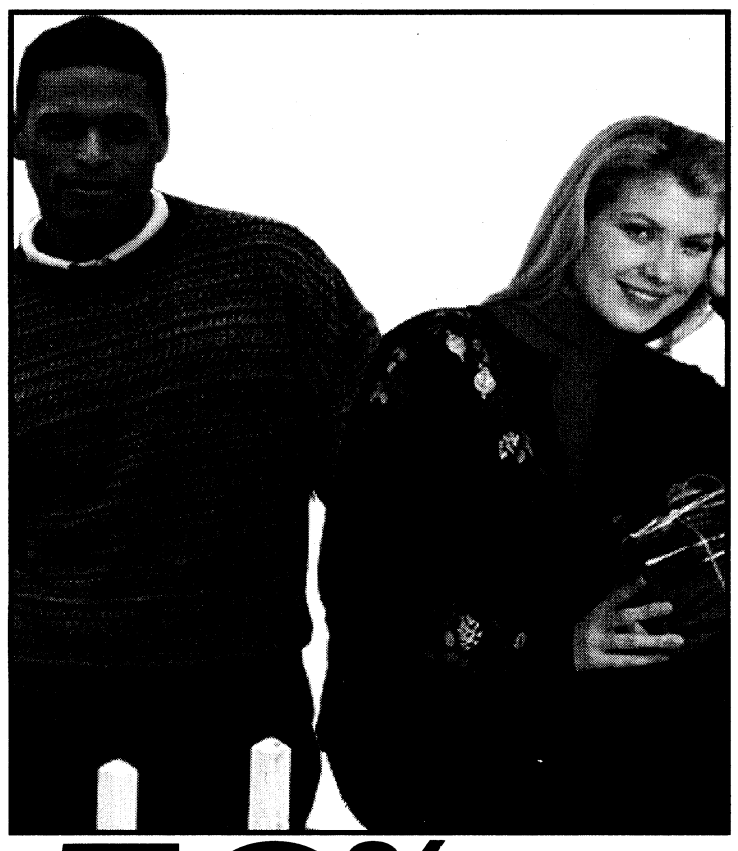


"That statement about 'there are no atheists in foxholes' is attributed to an Army chaplain," Jett said.

Soldiers also use books on the military to develop and maintain a sense of personal standards. Once an Eagle tells the story of a leader who "looked at his Soldiers as something of great value, and as people," Karcher said, but it also tells the story of a leader who was a cold careerist.

"It's rarely that black and white in reality. But despite what we want to think, there are people like that in every organization, including the military," Karcher said, and every Soldier has to occasionally find a way to put personal feelings about a leader aside in order to get the job done. More importantly, though, the two characters represented in the book can also be seen as competing sides of every individual's personality. In that sense, Myrer's story can be seen as a lesson about personal behavior.

"It gives a caution sign about yourself," Karcher said. "If I ever see that growing in me, I'm going to kill it."



The chief of staff's complete reading list can be found on the Internet at http://www.army.mil/cnh-pg/reference/csalist/csalist.htm. Many of the titles on the list can also be found at the Donovan Research Library in Infantry Hall shelved on the mezzanine in a special section. The selection is incomplete, said Dr. Germaine Pavlova-O'Neill, library director, due in part to theft, but will be completed pending the arrival of new funds.

Post, Infantry welcome new top NCO

Draftee thinks Soldiers deserve dignity

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

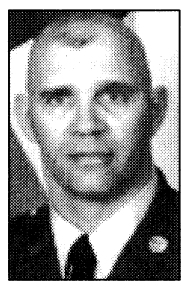
Fort Benning's new post command sergeant major in-processed Monday — officially taking over for Command Sgt. Maj. Mack H. Vereen who retired Dec. 14.

Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald E. Klein comes from the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Fort Riley, Kan.

"Command Sergeant Major Klein is first and foremost a warrior," said Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, Ranger Training Brigade, who first served with Klein in 1988. "Whether in training or leading his men in war, Command Sergeant Major Klein gives 100 percent."

He said Klein always put the Soldier first.

"Before Command Sergeant Major Klein reaches a decision, he first considers the impact of that decision on the Soldier," Kelso said.



Klein said it feels good to be back at Fort Benning.

"It is an honor to have been selected for this job," Klein said. "What better place to be to put so much into the future of our Army — to add to its ethos and values!"

He said one of his goals to develop the "one Infantry" concept, the merger of 11B and 11M.

"Once on the battlefield, whether a paratrooper from Fort Bragg or a Soldier coming off a Bradley from Fort Hood, he's an Infantryman," Klein said. "There are just different ways to get him there — Ranger, Airborne, Air Assault, light or mechanized."

The Army's transformation to the Objective Force — the lighter, more mobile and lethal force — will be another challenge he said he feels the Infantry will meet.

"While there may be questions such as what type of Soldier he will be and what skills he will have, there will always be one constant — people," he said. 'We will instill the war-fighting ethos into Soldiers and the indomitable spirit to win against all odds, which the American fighting man has done throughout history."

His style by which he will help the Infantry move forward will not change.

"I will continue to be caring and compassionate — able to empathize with Soldiers," Klein said.

Those attributes have helped him get to where he is, and he plans to continue that style.

> "Being a Soldier is not about money. It's about taking care of people and instilling the Army values into the next generation of Soldiers so that they can step in and take our place."
> Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald E. Klein
> Post command sergeant major

"I'm just a simple country boy from Minnesota who never thought I'd get this far in the Army," Klein said.

The 48-year-old 1972 draftee said Soldiers doing the right thing makes him content.

"What frustrates me is when Soldiers are not challenged by their leaders; nor held accountable for their actions by their leaders; and leaders who don't treat Soldiers with the respect and dignity they deserve," Klein said. "We are given America's greatest resource — the men and women who serve their country.

"We must treat them with respect and dignity, teach them the skills necessary to do their job in all conditions, and, when called upon, deploy them in harm's way and bring them home safe."

Another challenge Klein foresees is the Army's ability to continue to train Soldiers and develop leaders, because many are leaving for higher paying jobs.

"Being a Soldier is not about money," Klein said. "It's about taking care of people and instilling the Army values into the next generation of Soldiers so that they can step in and take our place."

He said his biggest accomplishment was being a good Soldier, and he plans to use his 28 years of experience to help lead the Infantry into the 21st century.

"It's great to be here," Klein said. "I look forward to the challenge of being the command sergeant major of the Infantry."

Klein's previous assignments include the command sergeant major position at the 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

He is a graduate of many military schools, including Ranger, Pathfinder and Special Forces Under Water Operations schools.

He is about to complete his bachelor of arts degree in history and government from Columbia College, Mo.

Guard helps Alabama recover from tornadoes

Soldiers help cleanup debris from storms

Master Sgt. Bob Haskell
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Chainsaws, front-end loaders and dump trucks were the among the tools of good will with which 110 Alabama National Guard troops helped civil authorities restore some peace on earth to thousands of their state's citizens afflicted by unseasonable killer tornadoes a week before Christmas.

The Army National Guard force, and two members of the Alabama Air National Guard, focused their round-the-clock efforts on the section of Tuscaloosa devastated at midday Saturday by a tornado reported to be about 12 miles long and up to a half-mile wide.

Eleven people, including two children, were killed by the F-4 tornado that generated winds between 175 and 200 mph, according to a Birmingham meteorologist. F-5 is the most severe tornado measured on the Fujita Scale.

Another person was killed when a smaller twister hit Geneva County in southeastern Alabama.

About half of the Guard Soldiers called out for state emergency duty during the weekend were clearing and hauling away debris, explained Col. Gil Dudley, the state's plans, operations and military support officer, on Monday morning.

Military police helped civilian law enforcers seal off damaged areas and medical citizen-Soldiers helped provide care for dozens of injured victims.

"It is catastrophic. About 350 homes have been damaged or destroyed," said Dudley, while surveying the scene hit by the deadliest twister in the country this year.

The twister that hit Tuscaloosa, famous for University of Alabama football and legendary coach Paul "Bear" Bryant, ravaged the sprawling Bear Creek Trailer Park south of the city.

Christmas decorations littered the landscape, "hanging from trees, toppled roofs and in driveways," reported the Montgomery Advertiser.

"We always do the best we can," Dudley said about the National Guard's timely response to the emergency caused by the weekend's atypical storm system that clobbered other parts of the East with high winds, torrential rains and heavy snow.

Army Guard troops were staffing generators in Arkansas, where 100,000 people were without electrical power, and nine citizen-soldiers were pulling generator duty in Louisiana, according to a spokesman at the Army National Guard's Readiness Center in Arlington, Va., on Monday morning.

Alabama, however, was ground zero for National Guard troops after leaders were notified on Friday, Dec. 15, that their services might be needed during the weekend, one official explained.

"These tornadoes caught people by surprise because the season generally runs from the spring to late summer," said Staff Sgt. Norman Arnold.

"This is a tragedy beyond words," Gov. Don Siegelman told reporters Sunday about the worst twister to tear into Tuscaloosa since 1932 when 100 people were killed.

"When you lose two children and nine adults and see the fright in the eyes of those who survive, it makes you want to do more to help them."

Army grounds attack helicopters

Military finds faulty tail rotor; stops flights

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army directed the grounding of all AH-64 Apache helicopters Dec. 14 as a precautionary measure following the discovery of a faulty tail rotor swashplate assembly.

The problem was discovered during a preflight inspection of an Apache helicopter at Fort Bragg, N.C., said Dan O'Boyle, spokesman for the Army's Aviation Program Executive Office at Redstone Arsenal, Ala.

The faulty swashplate assembly — a key component of the helicopter's flight control system, according to O'Boyle — was found on an Apache helicopter belonging to the 3rd Battalion, 229th Aviation Regiment, at Fort Bragg. Another battalion of the same regiment, the 1st Battalion, currently has a number of Apache helicopters deployed to the Balkans, officials said.

The order that grounded the Apaches calls for a serial number inspection of all 742 AH-64A and D Apache aircraft worldwide.

The inspection will determine if specific swashplate assemblies are on the aircraft, O'Boyle said. He explained that certain serial numbers have been identified as being potentially faulty and will be replaced.

An investigation will determine the status of the remaining swashplates, he said.

Failure of a swashplate assembly could result in the loss of an aircraft and crew injuries, O'Boyle said.

Army leaders said the grounding was taken as a prudent measure to ensure the safety of Soldiers.

They said the ongoing investigation will determine the cause of the faulty swashplate and how many of the 742 aircraft are affected.

The Army will work to get its priority, first-to-fight units returned to fully mission capable status, officials said.

The U.S. Army Program Executive Office, Aviation and the Army Aviation and Missile Command — both located at Redstone Arsenal, Ala.— will gather the inspection data that will identify discrepant parts.

The inspection data will result in the development of a replacement timeline, O'Boyle said.

British college students conduct training

U.K. soldiers conduct warfare simulations

Spc. William A. Graves

Bayonet staff

Approximately 160 officers from 48 different countries concluded the land element of the British Joint Services Command and Staff College's, Swindon England, Joint Course today.

The college chose Fort Benning for the course's two-week exercise because weather in the U.K is poor this time of year, and Fort Benning offers a better educational opportunity for land-warfare simulations, said Lt. Col. Sandy Malcolm, coordinator of the Land Directing Staff.

"This package was the culmination of close-operation (brigade and battalion level) training that moves the officers onto divisional and corps level operations," Malcolm said.

He said Fort Benning looked after the officers well. It accommodated the course with everything the officers needed to have a successful mission, such as office facilities, transportation and food.

"The exercise went very well," Malcolm said. "We achieved all our objectives — bringing the students up to the correct level of expertise in close operations."

He said the course was thankful to the private land owners in the Fort Gaines area, southern Georgia, for the use of their land in the tactical exercise without troops. Officers used the land to help visualize the exercise's mock scenario.

"The local southern Georgia hospitality was marvelous, and the landowners played a major part in the mission's success," Malcolm said.

He said all the officers — who came from places like the U.S., Australia, Germany and the Far East, had a good time here.

Officers enjoyed their time off in Atlanta as well as a successful battlefield tour on the grounds of the 1863 Battle of Chickamauga, near the Tennessee River. Officers stayed at the National Guard Camp Catoosa for two nights while learning about the battle.

"They had a chance to walk around the battlefield and learn a lot," Malcolm said. "The lessons they derived from the trip helped them see the relevancies such battles still have today. It also furthered their understanding of how war changes over time."

Maj. Gino S. Van der Voet of the Netherlands said the course is of the highest quality.

"It teaches all the fundamentals you need for surviving in the armed services," Van der Voet said. "The joint and intercultural nature of the class — officers from 48 countries who are in the army, navy, air force or marines — is of great value."

He said all military operations, be they peace support or crisis response, are joint. Training with officers from different countries will help lead to successful real-world missions such as Bosnia, Kosovo and the Gulf War.

"That's the future of the military," Van der Voet said. "This is how we should train."

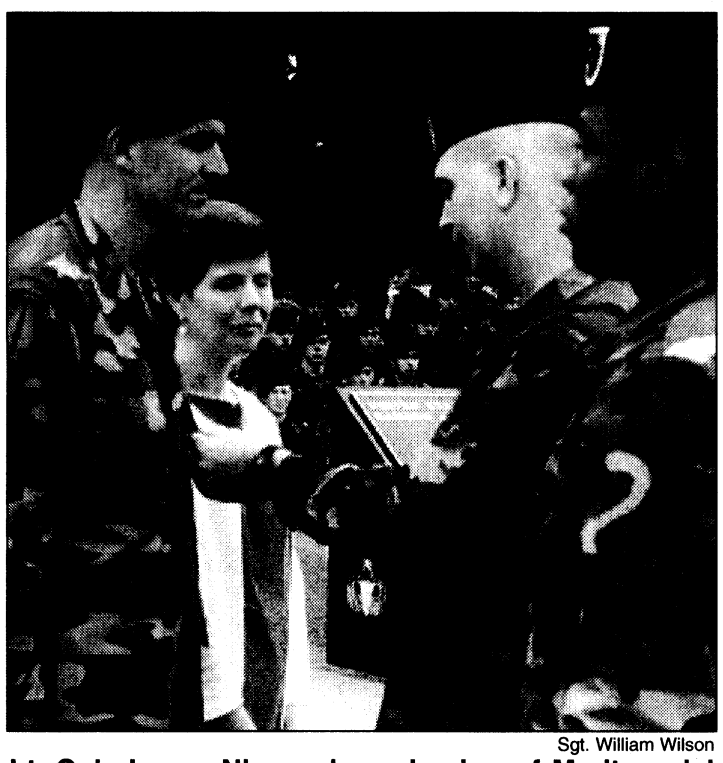
Spc. William A. Graves

Maj. Ed Brain, a British student participating in the land element of the British Joint Services Command and Staff College's two-week exercise, talks strategy to fellow students.

The exercise did come with its own set of unique challenges.

"The scale and scope of Georgia is much bigger than England," Malcolm said.

The officers had to cope with a new mapping system and the roads, or lack there of, in the field. In England, soldiers have tarmacs on which to travel everywhere, but tank trails serve as pathways here.



"It gave them a chance to see how unknown terrains effect operations and a glimpse of different ways of doing business in general," he said. "This package sets the students up with the knowledge and understanding of realistic close operations."

He said Brig. Gen. Graeme Lamb, commander of the course's land element, was pleased with the exercise.

"He is confident that the officers are ready to move on to divisional and corps level operations," Malcolm said. "They will be capable of doing business when required."

"As a result, we're grateful to Fort Benning," he added. "We hope to return next December for the next series of TEWTs."

Rangers' top NCO retires after serving 24 years

Soldier leaves Army, teaches troubled teens

Capt. David Doyle

3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Command Sgt. Maj. Kevin P. Connell, the 3rd Ranger Battalion's Command Sergeant Major, retired after 24 years of active federal service at a ceremony at the Ranger Memorial at Fort Benning, Georgia on Dec. 8

He concluded his career after serving in the 3rd Ranger Battalion since May 21, 1999.

His previous assignments all were with units on Airborne status.

Connell dedicated his entire career to training and developing Soldiers at every level in special operations units and in conventional forces.

When asked why he began his journey in the U.S. Army he responded by saying, "I wanted to do my civic part for my country, by volunteering for military service to the nation."

His perspective on his 24-year career is shaped primarily by the men he served with. "I met some of the greatest Soldiers in the world during my 24-year career. I also feel honored that I remained on jump status my entire career serving only in airborne assignments."

The Army has changed dramatically from the one he joined as a private. "The biggest changes I've seen (in the Army) include the way non-commissioned officers refocus their efforts in taking care of Soldiers.

"I've also seen more emphasis placed on reception, integration and treating a young Soldier with dignity and respect. There have also been dramatic improvements in the quality of living conditions and quality of life areas."

The most difficult challenge Connell faced during his career was in the area of training. "As a senior NCO staying current and proficient with all tactics, techniques and procedures for light Infantry and special operations, is key. To be a master trainer you have to be the expert on all skill level tasks. If you aren't you lose credibility with subordinates."

Connell decided to retire for a number of reasons.

Contributing factors included the combination of an outstanding job opportunity, the possibility of an overseas follow on military assignment, and health issues after five major surgeries in the past five years as a result of 24 years of Airborne service.

As a humble and understated man, Connell credited his mentors with the successes he accomplished. He specifically thanked his mentors, 1st Sgt. Tom Wilburn, Command Sgt. Maj. Doug Carron, Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Hall, Lt. Col. Dan Allyn, and Lt. Col. Keith Antonia.

After retiring Connell will continue to train and develop young men. He will work as a senior instructor with a wilderness program for high-risk boy ages 13-17 in Dahlonega, Ga. He wants to contribute to these teens in the same way he contributed to America's finest Soldiers by setting an example and challenging them to achieve all that their potential will allow.

What made you join the Army? I am a military brat. My father is retired Army and my brother is serving in the Army as well, so that pretty much got me interested in the Army.

Not only that, but I wanted to make something out of my life.

Why were you chosen as honor graduate? I put 110 percent in all that I do. I help others who are in need of help.

I try my best to help out as much as possible. I never just sit around, I like to keep myself busy.

Campaign: Curbs drunken drivers during holiday travel slowly or people speeding," Foxworth said. "Also we are looking for people weaving or making wide turns."

Violators with mechanical problems were warned verbally and told to get the problem fixed, to slow down and to be safe.

Shortly after midnight Jenkins pulled over a suspected drunken driver and made a call for backup.

Jenkins issued a field sobriety test to the driver, who failed, and was then arrested. Jenkins took the intoxicated driver to the MP station where the driver failed a Breathalyzer test on the Intoxalizer 5000.

With closing time for the local bars and clubs nearing, traffic increased on the post roads and the MPs continued patrolling them.

Within minutes of leaving the MP station with Jenkins, Sgt. Chris Johnson, also a traffic accident investigator, spotted a vehicle swerving and crossing the lines. He suspected the driver was drunk.

Johnson tested the driver and then placed the dangerous motorist under arrest.

Shortly after 2 a.m. Sunday a call for help came over the radio. Foxworth, along with other MPs rushed to offer assistance.

When Foxworth arrived at the scene, Jenkins was placing a man under arrest.

Later Jenkins told his story.

After clocking the man driving 80 mph in a 55 mph zone, Jenkins attempted to pull the driver over.

The man ignored the flashing blue lights of Jenkins patrol car, but finally pulled over after weaving back and forth on the road. Jenkins suspected that the driver was intoxicated.

"He opened the door of his car, and I could tell he wanted to run," Jenkins recalled. "I told him to get back in. He did. I approached the car and could see a pistol in his lap."

Jenkins said he told the man to get his hands out the window and then called for backup. The man got out of his car and took a step back and began to flee. After an altercation in which the man hit Jenkins twice, Jenkins pinned the man to the ground and waited for back-up.

A passerby, Spc. Felix Gomez, B Company, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, saw the altercation and offered his help to Jenkins.

"I saw (the man) jump out and start to run," Gomez said. "I turned around and went back where I saw (Jenkins) on the ground with the man. I didn't think he could handle it by himself so I asked if he wanted me to help."

Jenkins accepted and together they handcuffed the man.

After searching the man, Jenkins and his fellow MPs found $662 in cash, the pistol with a full magazine and a round chambered and 1 ounce of marijuana.

Jenkins took the man to the MP station where he refused to take a urinalysis to test for drug use and he also provided false information to the law enforcement officers.

Jenkins said the man would be charged with failure to drive on the road, fleeing and eluding, simple assault of a law enforcement officer, possession of a controlled substance, possession of a loaded firearm, DUI refusal, driving with no driver's license and providing false information.

Jenkins added that being an MP definitely has its moments.

"It can go from a routine traffic stop to this in a matter of seconds," Jenkins said. "It can be a matter of impounding a vehicle then hearing someone screaming for help over the radio."

While processing the man, another MP brought the fourth drunken driver of the evening into the MP station.

"Fort Benning has zero tolerance for driving under the influence," Jenkins said "Many times people say 'I've only had one or two beers.' It doesn't matter. How can we explain to your family or son or daughter that you are dead because you had one beer.

"If you drink, don't drive," Jenkins said. "If you do drink and drive, we will catch you."

Of the 26 DUIs as of Saturday, the average blood alcohol content has been .11 to .13 milligrams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood. Georgia's legal limit is .08.

"All it takes is taking your eyes off the road one time for an accident to happen," Johnson said.

Beyond the possibility of causing an accident, Soldiers who are convicted of drunken driving can face prosecution and receive a $1,000 fine and up to one year in jail, said Capt. Paula Harrison, a prosecutor in federal magistrate court.

"The information of the conviction can be sent to the state where they are licensed. They receive a letter of reprimand from the commanding general and they can receive (discharge from the Army)."

Harrison said driving privileges can be revoked on post.

Not only do Soldiers face fines and prosecution they may face the cost of higher insurance, the cost of traffic school and the cost of bailing their vehicle out of the impound lot.

For those who go out and drink, designate a driver who will not drink.

Those people with no safe ride home can call the SafetyCab. The cab will travel to destinations both on and off post. SafetyCab's number is 660-6069.

SafetyCab is a good option, Jenkins said and, "There is no excuse for drinking and driving."

A CLOSER LOOK

■ Georgia's legal limit is .08 milligrams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood.

■ Soldiers who are convicted of drunken driving can face prosecution and receive a maximum fine of $1,000 and be sentenced to one year in jail.

■ Soldiers also face the possibility of discharge from the Army.

■ People convicted of drunken driving can lose the privilege of driving on post.

■ A drunken driving conviction is expensive. Costs include insurance increases, traffic school and the vehicle towing fee, to cite just a few.

■ SafetyCab runs through Jan. 1. The number is 660-6069. Most bars offer free, nonalcoholic beverages to designated drivers. Use one.

■ "There is no excuse for drinking and driving," said Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins, a military police traffic accident investigator.

VERA: Gives employees control

The requests for VERA are reviewed in comparison with all applicants, draped across the needs of the installation.

"It is not a first come, first served decision," Stelzer said. "We will review all the requests, analyze the mission requirements and determine which applications we can afford to approve. Based on the termination of so many civilian positions later next year, we are postured to approve the requests. However, the mission needs are an important deciding factor."

Kenna said this is the first time VERA notification was received well in advance of the scheduled RIF.

"This gives employees more time to consider their options and plan for their futures," she said.

This decision should mean the most for post workers who are close to, but have not yet met, the criteria for optional retirement.

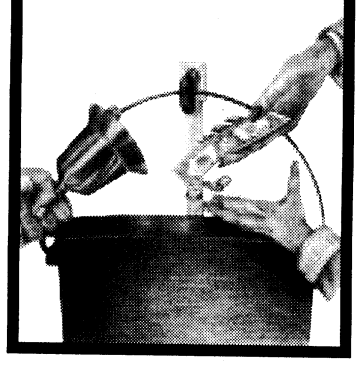
To be eligible for this, a worker must be at least 55 and have given 30 years of service, age 60 with 20 years of service, or age 62 with five years of service.

Under VERA, employees who have reached 20 years of service and are at least 50 years old, or workers of any age who have given 25 years of service are eligible to retire.

Kenna anticipates CPAC will be able able to offer enough VERA approvals to benefit those workers who need them.

"Our total of 225 VERA approvals should be sufficient to cover employees impacted by the RIF," Kenna said.

Army Career Alumni Program is conducting career counseling for civilians, and a job fair is scheduled for spring. For more information, call 545-2308.



Employees interested in VERA or VSIP should contact 545-5562.

Post uses community to fight suicide

Leaders get proactive with tough problem

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Whether you're looking at statistics for the nation, the state we live in or the Army, suicide is a problem.

According to the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention, it's the eighth leading cause of death in this country.

Statistics from the Georgia Department of Human Resources Division of Public Health show that from 1994 through 1998, an average of 848 people per year died from suicide. In 1999, the Army confirmed more than 70 suicides among the ranks.

Fort Benning has a community approach to suicide prevention with active involvement of key senior leaders, and a coalition of Army community agencies, said Yvonne Wilbanks, Fort Benning alcohol and drug control officer and suicide prevention manager.

"All Soldiers are encouraged to know the warning signs of suicide and get help for themselves and their buddy," she said.

Soldiers who commit suicide may do so for the same reasons as anyone else. Suicides are often a response to an overwhelming personal crisis. This act is usually characterized by feelings of loneliness, hopelessness and helplessness.

"Shame and guilt can play a part if the person has done something that adversely affected their military career," said Chaplain (Maj.) Ray Koop, Family Life Ministries Center.

Those most at risk for suicide get to a point where they don't think things can get better, said Capt. Douglas Lane, chief, Community Mental Health Services, Martin Army Community Hospital.

"It's often hard for them to see there are opportunities out there and people who can help," he said.

There are signals that may help indicate a person is in danger of committing suicide.

Common warning signs include a dramatic drop in job performance, the loss of a loved one, job, status or money, unkempt personal appearance, a family history of suicide or previous suicide attempts, abuse of alcohol or drugs, reckless behavior, loss of interest in hobbies and withdrawal.

Immediate danger signs such as talking or hinting about suicide, obsession with death, finalizing personal affairs or giving away personal possessions may also show that a person is at risk for this behavior.

For Koop, the real danger sign is when he finds a person he's counseling has really thought out how to commit suicide.

"When you ask 'if you were to commit suicide, how would you do it,' and they have a plan and the means to do it, we stop everything and make sure the person is safe," Koop said.

For those contemplating suicide who need to seek immediate help, contact 911 or go to the nearest emergency room, Lane said.

Soldiers can also contact Community Mental Health Services at Martin Army Community Hospital. Civilians, dependents and retirees can go through outpatient psychiatry there as well. The number in both cases is 544-3690.

If you know someone who might be thinking about committing suicide, there are preventive measures you can take. The American Association of Suicidology recommends the following courses of action.

- Be direct. Talk openly and matter-of-factly about suicide.
- Be willing to listen and be non-judgmental.
- Get involved and become available. Show interest and support of the person.
- Don't dare him or her to commit suicide.
- Don't act shocked. This will put distance between you and the person in need.
- Don't be sworn to secrecy. Seek support.
- Offer hope that alternatives are available but do not offer glib assurances.
- Take action. Remove means, such as guns or stockpiled pills.
- Get help from persons or agencies specializing in crisis intervention and suicide prevention.

"Don't keep the secret," Koop said. "Bring that person to a competent individual like the unit chaplain, a social worker, the emergency room or someone in command."

One resource on post is the Gatekeeper's Suicide Prevention course. This free training will be offered from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. on Feb. 13 at the Officers' Club.

"Gatekeepers are those squad leaders, platoon leaders, drill instructors and other helping personnel who identify high-risk Soldiers and 'open the gates to help'," Wilbanks said.

The course is opened to anyone who is interested. Topics covered will include relationship issues and signs of depression.

For more information or to register, call 545-1138.

Book-worms devour 'Big Book'

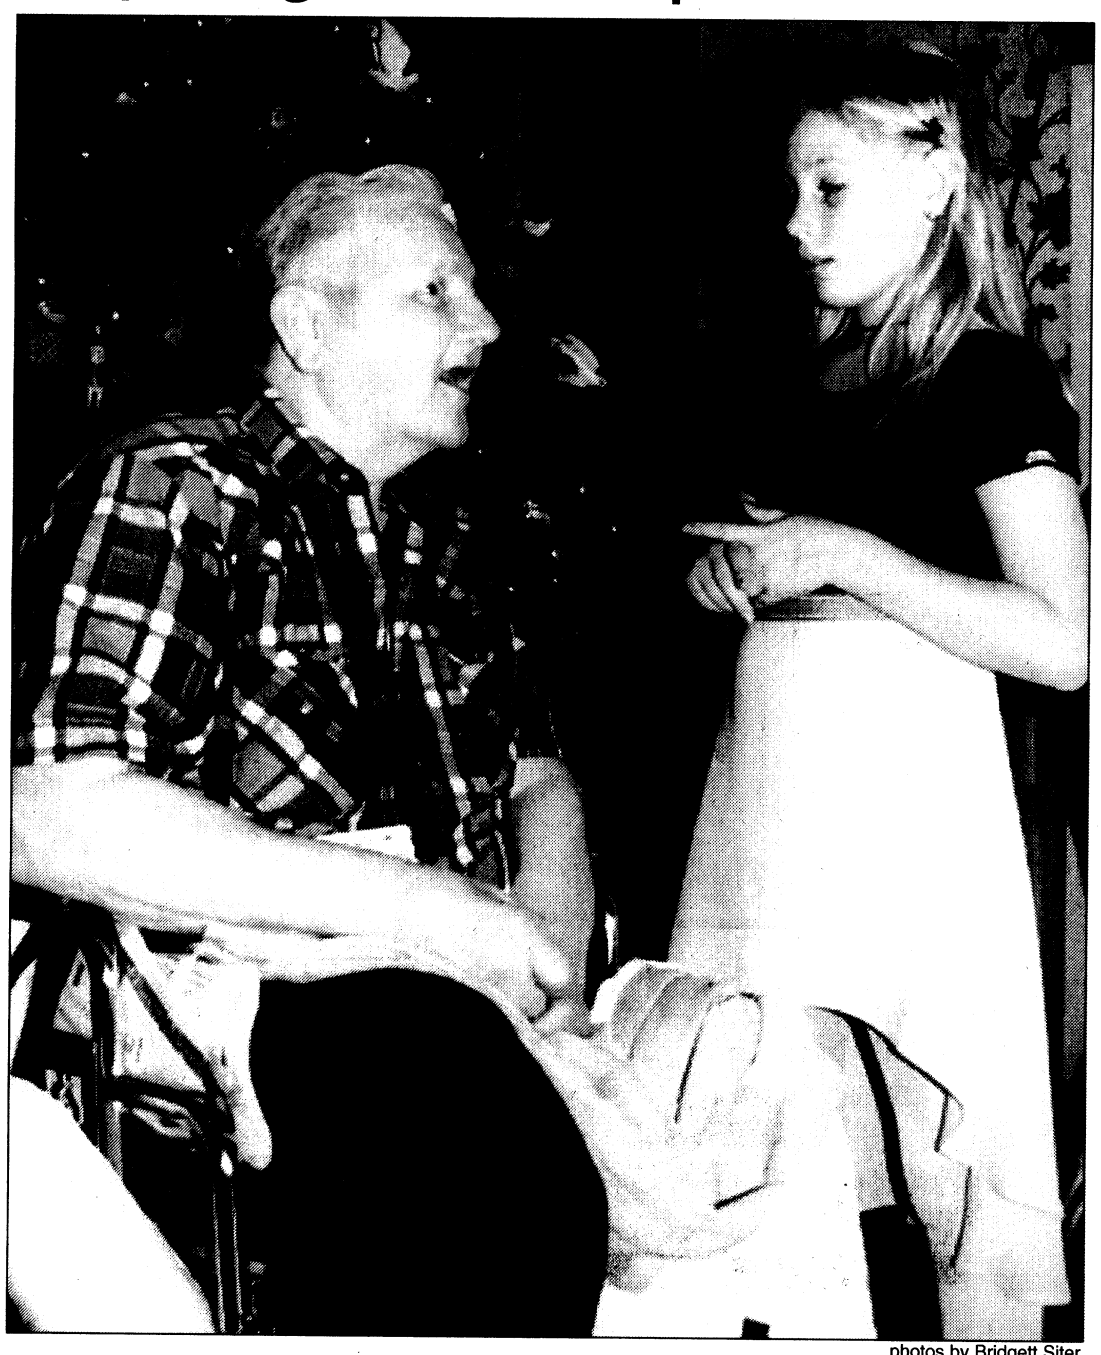
Faith students share gift of reading

Bridgett Siter
special to the Bayonet©

What started as a "big idea" 13 years ago, has become a holiday tradition for students from Faith Middle School and Dexter Elementary.

More than 100 students from Anne Trawick's sixth-, seventh- and eighth-grade literature classes hosted a Christmas party Dec. 13, and presented 40 Dexter kindergartners with a personalized "Big Book," created specifically for, and written about, the younger student.

Trawick first introduced the "Big Book" as part of a lesson plan designed to hone creative and technical writing skills. Students cut and pasted pictures and typewritten stories on 12 by 18 inch sheets of construction paper — hence the name "Big Book."



Thirteen years later, the actual dimensions of the books have decreased, but advanced technology has given new meaning to the name "Big Book." Students are cutting and pasting on the computer, superimposing digital photographs of the main character into each book and creating 21st century storylines about superheroes and Grinch-like characters. The final product is laminated and bound between colorful tag board covers.

"As we've incorporated more and more technology into this project, our books have evolved and become more sophisticated," Trawick said. "They definitely reflect our culture. Besides the obvious improvements because of technology, they've become more exciting, more action-packed. Their ideas have gotten bigger and bigger."

Take, for instance, the book created for 5-year-old Dylan Williams by a team of sixth-

Youngsters make seniors smile, cheer

At the age of 7, Daniela Cowan dreams of becoming a dancer. Recently, the first-grader got her first opportunity to perform for an audience other than a room full of dolls and stuffed animals.

"It was cool," Daniela said. "It was even more fun than I thought it would be. It made me feel good."

Daniela's one of 11 aspiring Fort Benning dancers who took their show on the road for local nursing home residents. Under the tutelage of former dancer — turned teacher, Elizabeth Gladden, the girls, who range in age from 4 to 11, donned tap shoes and ballet slippers and danced to the beat of holiday tunes from their grandparents' — maybe great-grandparents' — generation.

Last summer, Daniela learned that her neighbor used to teach a touring dance class in California. She begged Gladden to consider starting a squad here at Fort Benning. She even enlisted a few friends, mostly beginners, who were willing to perform for senior citizens in Columbus.

Gladden conceded, and in October the group began to meet

Cousins reunite at White House reception

President hosts family at celebration

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Like many Fort Benning families, Elizabeth Gladden and her four children drive hundreds of miles to celebrate Christmas with their relatives. This year marks the fourth time they've joined the family celebration at her cousin's home in Washington, D.C.

It's a tradition the Gladdens have come to cherish. Unfortunately, policy and politics have put an end to the annual family gala, and as the Gladden family embarked on the two-day drive from their Davis Hill home to the White House Dec. 15, they acknowledged the likelihood this would be the last time they will sit for supper with the president.

Her mother is Bill Clinton's cousin, making Gladden second-cousin to the president of the United States, and therefore an honored guest at the annual holiday reception. But she admits she didn't even know who Bill Clinton was until he ran for president.

"My parents used to go to the Christmas party at the Arkansas governor's mansion, but I just thought he was some distant relative," Gladden chuckled. "My granny is his aunt. They're very close. I didn't really understand the true nature of the relationship until he became a candidate, and I didn't meet him until we were invited to the White House the first time."

Sunday evening the Gladden family, minus Robert Sr., who's stationed in Korea, joined a host of brothers and sisters, nieces and nephews, cousins and aunts and uncles for the last family reception before Clinton's presidency ends in January.

Many lose sight of true Christmas spirit

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott F. New
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

From the time we were young "Merry Christmas" was a phrase that brought excitement and great anticipation. In the hearts and minds of the young, and not so young children, is the curiosity of "What am I getting for Christmas?" My son, one Christmas, was so excited he would open each present and respond by saying, "Oh, just what I always wanted!" After making this response with one gift, he then said, "What is it?" Sometimes we are so excited about getting gifts, we forget that Christmas is a time of giving. I believe every parent enjoys the opportunity of giving their children a gift that is wanted.

When I was a young parent, I had difficulty mixing the Christmas story and Santa Claus. There is a religious message on TV this year that has Santa rushing to houses, delivering gifts on Christmas Eve when he falls over a piece from the Nativity Scene. He takes a moment, takes his hat off and bows his head in respect.

We talk about getting into the Christmas spirit. The stores get in it by decorating and building their inventory before Thanksgiving. Shoppers get in it by shopping until they drop for a month! But what is the Christmas spirit? Spirit is a feeling or a sense that leads one to action. To experience the true Christmas spirit, it is important to be aware of God's spirit and recognize what he modeled in his gift. With the remembrance of the birth of Jesus we acknowledge the true Christmas spirit. We give because God gave. We can celebrate as the angels celebrated that first Christmas Eve.

This Christmas as you put up your trees and decorate your houses and go shopping for the many gifts for all those special people, take time to pause for a few moments and remember the significance of Christmas.

And when you do, your spirit may touch God's spirit. I hope each of you have a very blessed and Merry Christmas!

Profanity defames name of God

Chaplain (Maj.) Ray Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

We've all heard it. In today's society, we can't avoid it. I am disturbed that strangers, neighbors and coworkers will take the name of God in vain, even in the presence of women and children.

Profanity debases and defiles what is sacred and holy. It is sacrilege to make common what is divine. To use the name of God in an irreverent manner is a form of blasphemy.

Profanity defames the name, attributes and character of God. It often shows contempt and may be used to revile what is sacred and holy.

This year several people in Michigan have been convicted of swearing.

In the military, our communication skills are part of our rating scheme for officers and sergeants. Unwholesome speech may indicate either a lack of education or poor leadership. It demonstrates a lack of respect for spiritual, national and Army values, as well as for other people.

Gen. George Washington admonished, "...the foolish, and wicked practice, of profane cursing and swearing (a vice heretofore little known in an American Army) is growing into fashion; he hopes the officers will, by example, as well as influence, endeavor to check it, and that both they, and the men will reflect, that we can have little hopes of the blessing of Heaven on our Arms, if we insult it by our impiety, and folly; added to this, it is a vice so mean and low, without any temptation, that every man of sense, and character, detests and despises it."

In line with Washington's directive, the expletive, damn, should be avoided. It is a curse word that implicates the name of God and can be interpreted as, "God damn you to hell."

Good speech also refrains from using God or Jesus Christ as interjections. Words like, gee, gosh, golly, jeez and jeepers are euphemisms for God and Jesus and should not be used.

You can put an end to profanity. Counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

For there is born to you this day in the city of David a Savior, who is Christ the Lord. Luke 2:11

New Year means new chances

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott F. New
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

New Year's is a great time of the year. It is a time for both reflection and goal setting. For the last few years, my wife, two sons and I would plan a skiing trip. I would take an opportunity to ask each son what they learned about themselves and about their relationship with God in the past year and I would share my answers with them as well. I also asked what their goals were for the coming year. It was very enjoyable and yet at times challenging to respond.

How important it is, as we approach the new year, to recognize what was accomplished and what is the baggage we are carrying into the next year. For some there were good-byes either through death, divorce or PCS. For others there may have been hellos through weddings, births or making new relationships. These events significantly impact our lives.

How about your relationship with God this year? Has anything happened? How have you seen his presence in you or your family's life this year?

In many families it is difficult to talk about our relationship with God to one another because our family members see us not only when we go to chapel, but when we are not in chapel.

And yet if we grow in our faith, often family members will contribute to that growth.

This can also be a time to look ahead with great anticipation. Even though we do not know exactly what tomorrow may bring, we can look forward to accomplishments at work. Many leaders have opportunities to intentionally mentor those they lead. What a great challenge to be able to positively influence Soldiers' lives both professionally and personally.

It is also a great challenge to intentionally, positively, influence your family. Have you looked at what you could do differently this year to expand your family's cohesiveness? There are a lot of issues that attack the hearts of families and each family member has the responsibility to openly raise issues and come to resolution on controversial issues.

So what will 2001 look like for you? What goals have you set for yourself? Has your family set any goals? Will you have a new family member? Or will you have an "empty nest?"

What place will God play in you and your family's life in 2001?

I hope each of you have a very blessed and happy New Year.

graders, including Kyle McKibben.

After meeting and interviewing Dylan three weeks ago, the sixth-graders created a storyline that cast Dylan in the role of a superhero who saved Christmas from a villainous "Santa Clawz," Santa's own alter-ego, who only gives presents to bad little boys and girls.

"I think it was supposed to be a good experience for us, writing a story, and a good experience for Dylan, being around us older kids," McKibben said. "But it was really a lot of fun coming up with the story and sharing it with him."

> "I'm going to let my daddy read it to me at bedtime, 20 times every night."

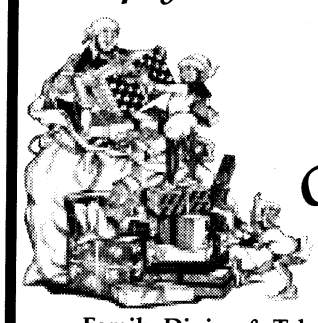
Dexter's principal, Vicki Rogers, recognizes the educational value of the project. But like McKibben, she finds real pleasure in the sharing.

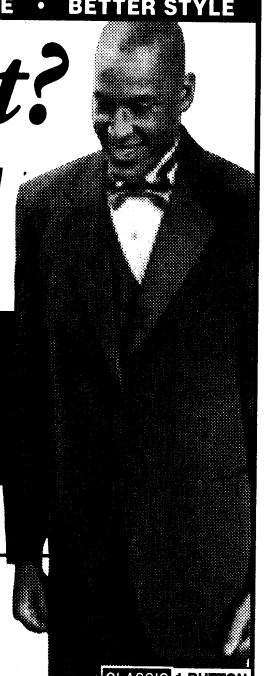
"The sparkle in their eyes is priceless," Rogers said. "Their delight in learning that this book is all about them — and it even had their pictures in it — is written all over their faces. That's the best part."



Courtney Beaton, 5-years-old, expects to enjoy her new book, "How Courtney Saved Christmas," over and over.

"I'm going to let my daddy read it to me at bedtime, 20 times every night," she said.

After two weeks of work, including many hours after school, Trawick believes her students gained a better understanding of the meaning of Christmas.



"They've put a lot of time and effort into this project, and they really like the outcome. They have a hard time giving up these books," Trawick said.

She added,"In the end I think they get the notion of what it is to give something and expect nothing in return. That's the big idea."

Post takes part in fire prevention contest

Directorate of Public Safety

Fire kills more Americans than all natural disasters combined.

A word that creates panic and fear. Fire will cause destruction and suffering to all who experience it.

Each year more than 5,000 people die in fires and property loss is estimated over 9 billion. Moreover, many Americans believe "fire can only happen to other people-not to me and not in my home." Yet, more than 80 percent of fire deaths occur in the home, most often claiming the lives of the young, elderly and the disadvantaged.

But for the community of Fort Benning, under the direction of Col. GT Meyers, Directorate of Public Safety, and Fire Chief Arthur Simmons a continuing Fire Safety program is in place.

Every year in the month of October we celebrate Fire Prevention Week. In the last three years the theme has been "The Great Escape." The National Fire Protection Association has sponsored a contest that involves all of North America and Canada.

The contest is to have students in all the schools to draw the fire escape plan of their home and practice EDITH: Exit Drill in The Home. The contest requires the student to show in detail the escape route and all the exits, the location of the smoke detectors, as well as the meeting area outside of their home and the correct number to call for help — 911.

Each year, Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools and the staff of assistants, principals and teachers, in partnership with the Fort Benning Fire Department sponsor a "Great Escape Contest." But Fort Benning went beyond that, so the competition would be strong and it was this year, as it was in the past two years.

The first-place winner received a trophy and $75, the second-place winner received a trophy and $50 and third-place also got a trophy and $30. The grand prizewinner had her drawing sent up to the National Fire Protection Association to compete with all winners thorough out North America and Canada.

The first-place winner was Brittany Hutchison, a fourth-grader from White Elementary School.

The second-place winner was Ariel Tucker, a third-grader from McBride Elementary School and the third-place winner was Raymond Rivera III, a fifth-grader from Stowers Elementary School.

Soldiers lay sod for Habitat for Humanity home

2nd Lt. Michael Starz
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

On a cold November morning, a group of Soldiers from the Infantry Officer Basic Course gathered on 26th Street, downtown Columbus, to help complete a house for Habitat for Humanity. They spent eight hours preparing the soil and laying sod.

The simple labor provided lessons as important to their development as their Infantry field training. To be effective, the Army has to represent the strength and ideals of its people. The IOBC Soldiers got the opportunity to meet a collection of citizens who these Soldiers defend and represent.

Habitat for Humanity is a non-profit ecumenical Christian organization with a mission of building affordable housing for low income people. Beyond just building homes, Habitat is an organization that builds communities. Habitat for Humanity works tirelessly for a very real and difficult problem facing America and the other 50 countries it services. Many families have inadequate housing or no housing and haven't the means to improve their situation.

Habitat buys the land and prepares it for construction, and then builds the house from the ground up. Individuals, corporations, faith groups and others provide financial support.

Sponsoring a house requires a donation of $45,000, but organizations can partially sponsor a home with half of that donation. Sponsors often provide the labor to build the home as well.

> "It's the proudest day when we hand over the keys to the homeowners. They're usually speechless."
> Bryan Miller
> Project construction supervisor

The labor comes mainly from volunteers, while Habitat provides construction supervisors and a small corps of crew leaders from its assigned AmeriCorps workers.

The local chapter chooses homeowner applicants according to their need, their ability to repay the no-profit, no-interest mortgage and their willingness to work with Habitat. Homeowners are required to complete 500 hours of labor on their home and others in the area.

Carl Hopp is the executive director of the Columbus chapter of Habitat. He estimates that small groups comprising more than 1,000 Soldiers from Fort Benning have participated in the program in the three years that he has served with the organization.

The officers of C Company, 2nd Battalion,11th Infantry Regiment, were in one such group. The Soldiers were required to participate in one community service project during their four-month course. Their mission was to smooth out the ground and lay sod around five Habitat houses.

The highlight of the work was the opportunity to associate with the area residents, including Sarah Carter, who moved into her Habitat home Dec. 2. Carter completed 500 hours, but continues to work on other homes in her community.

"It is the proudest day when we hand over the keys to the homeowners. They realize that it's the nicest thing they've ever had. They're usually speechless," said Bryan Miller, project construction supervisor.

The volunteers said they enjoyed working with community residents.

"Bringing people together was what this day was all about. I enjoyed meeting and working with a variety of the people from our community," said 2nd Lt.Travis Patriquin.

Jane M. Winand
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I bought a car in Florida when I was home on leave last weekend. The dealership asked which state I wanted to title the vehicle in. Since I'll be stationed here in Georgia for the next few years, I'm thinking of getting a Georgia title. Does it matter in which state I title and register a new car?

A: There could be serious tax consequences depending on the state in which you choose to title your new car. The state in which you purchase a new car assess sales tax at the time of purchase. If you apply to have that new car titled for the first time in a different state, and the title state has a higher rate of sales tax, the title state can charge you the additional sales tax at the time you apply for the title.

As an example, if you purchase the vehicle in a state with a three percent sales tax, you will have this three percent tax included in the purchase price. If you then apply for a title in a state with five percent sales tax, the title state can charge you the additional two percent sales tax. You were given a credit by the titling state for the three percent sales tax paid at the time of purchase.

This potential "twice taxation" occurs only with new vehicles being purchased in one state and titled for the first time in a second state.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, a federal law, does provide Soldiers with some protection from state taxes. The Act exempts a Soldier from ad valorem taxation of a vehicle owned by the Soldier and being registered in the Soldier's state of current assignment, provided that the Soldier has a permanent residence elsewhere than the state of assignment.

The ad valorem tax is assessed each year and is based on the value of the vehicle. Soldiers can avoid this tax for their vehicles by obtaining an affidavit from the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate indicating that the Soldier is a permanent resident of a state other than the state of military assignment. However, the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act does not exempt Soldiers from paying sales taxes.

Consequently, you should consider the sales tax situation before picking a state in which to title and register your vehicle. Although it may be convenient to title your vehicle here for the next few years, unless you elect to maintain permanent ties with Georgia, you will need to obtain a new title when you move from this state. Some states have annual inspection requirements which can be onerous. You should consider all factors before selecting a state for titling purposes.

For more information concerning sales tax and ad valorem tax, you can make an appointment to speak with an attorney in the Legal Assistance Division.

Appointments are made by calling the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 or 545-3282 at 8 a.m. Fridays.

Dancers: Perform at nursing home once a week in the gymnasium at Stowers Elementary, where the girls are all students. They practiced choreographed moves to numbers like "Santa Baby" and "Run Run Rudolph," with the intention of performing solely for senior citizens at the end of December. But last month the school's choir director, Lorri Blanchard, asked the group to participate in the Stowers Singers annual holiday show.

"We had to scurry," said Gladden, who's performed with the Wichita Falls Ballet Theater in Kansas, the Texas Ballet Concerto in San Antonio and the Pueblo Ballet in Pueblo, Colo. "We had to double up on practices to be ready in time for the show, so we decided just to throw ourselves into it and do all the shows before Christmas."

The dancers performed twice for the students and parents before heading for Columbus, where they danced for the residents of Pine Manor and Oak Manor.

"We made them smile," said 10-year-old Brittany Hayes. "I was kind of nervous at first, but they started clapping and singing and it made me feel good. When I got to know them, they reminded me a little of my grandparents."

Mary Nell Norman, an 86-year-old Pine Manor resident, said the dancers' visit also made her feel good.

She stood and danced throughout most of the performance.

"I like music. I like the kids," Norman said, tapping her toes and humming with the music.

After each performance, the dancers distributed Christmas cards decorated by Stowers students.

"I enjoyed it. They're wonderful," said resident Clyde Pyner, a retired printer. "Their parents have taught them well."

Pine Manor's activity director, Wilma McMahan, said the residents always look forward to interacting with children, and activities like the dance recitals benefit both the performers and their audience.

"These children, because they're from Fort Benning, and mostly away from their own grandparents, stand to gain as much from this experience as the residents," McMahan said.

Gladden said she hopes to continue working with the girls after the holidays, with an eye on performing again in the spring.

Spouse: Visits President Clinton

Elizabeth described the party as a cross between a family reunion and a black-tie affair. She admits to agonizing over the family's wardrobe before the trip, but once they got past the metal detectors and bag checks, she said she felt "at home," surrounded by family, some of whom she's only come to know through the annual event.

"I've met a lot of people I'd never met before, including the president and the first lady, who also invites her own family to the party," she said. "My granny was there this year, as well as three of my sisters and two brothers. It certainly felt like a family reunion."

And though she describes the first lady as "very friendly and likable," the president is surrounded by secret servicemen and literally unapproachable.

"You can't just walk up and talk to him," she said. "You can greet him in the receiving line and get your picture taken, or you can wait for him to approach you."

This year the reception ended with a tour of the West Wing and a personal interview with the president. However, the Gladdens had to leave the party early when Robert Jr. became sick.

> Robert Gladden
> 11-years-old

The family also missed the opportunity to have their picture taken with the president this year, something they've made a point to do each year. The kids find this part of the evening, which sometimes takes as long as three hours, tedious and boring. They prefer the movie theater downstairs next to the White House bowling alley. And of course they enjoy the smorgasbord of exotic foods and desserts.

"Seven tables of desserts," said 11-year-old Robert. "That's always my favorite part, next to the jumbo shrimp."

Robert and his 9-year-old brother, Christian, look forward to sharing their trip with their classmates when school resumes. Last year they showed pictures of their White House tour, as well as their visit to the memorials and museums around Washington, D.C.

"It's such a good experience for them," Elizabeth said. "I'm not sure they really understand the significance of the occasion, but one day they will, and the boys are old enough to remember it all."

The girls, Gena-Marie, 4, and Bryanna, 18-months, will relive the experience through photographs.

Elizabeth has documented each year's celebration on film, including photos of each room in the White House and the children with the president.

One photo even shows Robert Jr. upstaging the White House pianist.

"I just told him I could play too," Robert recalled. "And he told me to climb up and play something. It was cool."

The Gladdens hate to see this family tradition come to an end, and Elizabeth's holding on to the hope she'll get another chance to dine at the White House.

"I'm hoping Hillary runs for president," she laughed. "Then we'll go back again."

Local Soldier earns top athlete title

U.S. Army photo

Sgt. 1st Class Todd Graves recently was named the 2000 U.S. Army Male Athlete of the Year.

AMU shooter named Army athlete of year

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

First he won an Olympic Bronze Medal in Sydney in September. Then he was congratulated by President Bill Clinton who shook his hand at the White House in November. Now, the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Soldier has been named as the 2000 U.S. Army Male Athlete of the Year.

Army shotgun shooter Sgt. 1st Class James Todd Graves will go to Washington, D.C., in January to receive his U.S. Army Athlete of the Year Award at the Pride of the Nation Ceremony, hosted by the U.S. Military Sports Association.

"It is quite an honor to be the Army Athlete of the Year," Graves said. "I owe everything to the Army. If it wasn't for the Army, I couldn't have accomplished what I have. It would have been really hard to make it to the Olympics without the Army Marksmanship Unit. I'm proud to wear the green uniform."

In Sydney, Graves was not only the sole U.S. military athlete to win an Olympic Medal, but he also became the first U.S. men's skeet shooter since 1984 to win an Olympic Medal. Since the Olympics, Graves has been the grand marshal of two Christmas parades, cut a ribbon to open a state fair, was honored in the Mississippi Sports Hall of Fame and met with Army and Defense chiefs at the Pentagon.

"Meeting the secretary of Defense was great; he was a real likeable guy," Graves said. "The trip to the White House was also a very nice experience. A whole lot of people don't get to meet the commander-in-chief. It was a wonderful feeling to shake the president's hand."

A three-time Olympian, Graves finished 12th in Skeet at the 1996 Olympics and placed seventh in Skeet and 24th in Trap at the 1992 Games.

"In 1992, I was proud to be the first shooter ever to make the Olympic Team in Trap and Skeet. Although I didn't win, I was overwhelmed with pride to be at that level," Graves said. "In 1996, I was excited to shoot on my home turf at the Games in Atlanta; it was a learning experience that definitely helped me in Sydney."

Graves started shooting when he was just a small boy growing up in Laurel, Miss., with his father, James, and his mother, Tommie. One day when he was about 10 years old, he and his father saw a group of people shooting a trap tournament in a field near their home.

At his request, Graves' father let him shoot in the match. When the youngster took third place, little did he know it would start him in a career that would make him a three-time Olympian, an Olympic Bronze Medal winner and the 2000 Army Athlete of the Year.

Graves went on to coach trap shooting and had an offshore rigger job after he graduated from West Jones High School of Laurel in 1982.

Because of his shooting ability, he made a name for himself in the shotgun shooting community.

After he beat one of the USAMU shooters at his father's gun club, Graves was approached by the Marksmanship Unit about joining the Army. One day when he missed the boat to his

Last minute score key to Eagles victory

203 FSB wins intramural flag football tourney

The Eagles soared above Rough Town, 13-6, to claim the title in the post intramural flag football championship game Dec. 14 on Engineer Field.

The game-winning touchdown came with only minutes left on the clock when Eagles' Donald Stray intercepted a pass from Rough Town's quarterback Darrin January.

Both the Eagles, from B Co., 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, and Rough Town, from 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group, entered the finals undefeated in the tournament.

Neither team gained much ground in the muddy seesaw battle of the gridiron during the first half.

Then with only minutes remaining in the first half, Rough Town safety Darrin January intercepted the ball in the Eagles end zone and ran out just beyond the end zone line.

Although Rough Town tried to run the ball out, the tough Eagles' defense kept them at bay and nearly scored two safetys back-to-back.

With one last effort, Rough Town ran the ball out of the end zone as time expired.

Pfc. Mark Watson

Rough Town's Kelvin Lang breaks through Eagles defenders on his way downfield. The Eagles' tough defense beat Rough Town 13-6 to earn the post intramural flag football championship title.

"We should have two safeties," Eagles' center Milton Johnson said during the half-time break in play. "It definitely is a defensive battle. But I think we will overcome. We have a better offense."

An injured Rough Town player, Gary Washington, who was sidelined during the previous game when a player landed on his ankle, watched the game and supported his teammates.

"We are holding them," Washington said. "I think the defense will win the game for us. We just need to hold tight."

As the second half began, January intercepted the ball again snuffing an Eagles' scoring opportunity.

On the next Eagles' drive, Rough Town intercepted the ball for the third time of the game and ran to scoring position.

On the next play, Rough Town ran the ball up the left side and finally scored six points. The extra point attempt failed.

Within minutes, the Eagles answered back when Jimmie Gribson caught the ball and ran more than 40 yards for the score.

With the game tied at six, Rough Town regained control, but on their opening play, Eagles' Stray stepped up and intercepted the ball leaving Rough Town baffled and the Eagles ahead when he ran the ball in for the score.

"They've been throwing short passes all day," Stray said. "I've been waiting for one, and when I saw it coming I just jumped the coverage, and the rest is

Fort Benning brothers earn 2000 All Bi-City Cross Country team slots

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Two pairs of Fort Benning brothers — Columbus High School teammates — were named to the 2000 All Bi-City Cross Country team.

Dan and Paddy Ferriter and Bobby and Joey Fix earned their spots on the team after leading Columbus High to a third-place finish in the state this year.

Cross country is one of the largest sports at the high school, with 65 boys and girls participating.

"That's equal to the football team," said Randy Whitt, cross country coach.

Whitt thinks having brothers on the team is a definite plus.

"You can always find someone to run with, and that makes all the difference in the world," he said.

As for sibling rivalry, Whitt noticed only the positive aspect of older brothers encouraging the younger ones, who aspire to do as well as the more experienced runners.

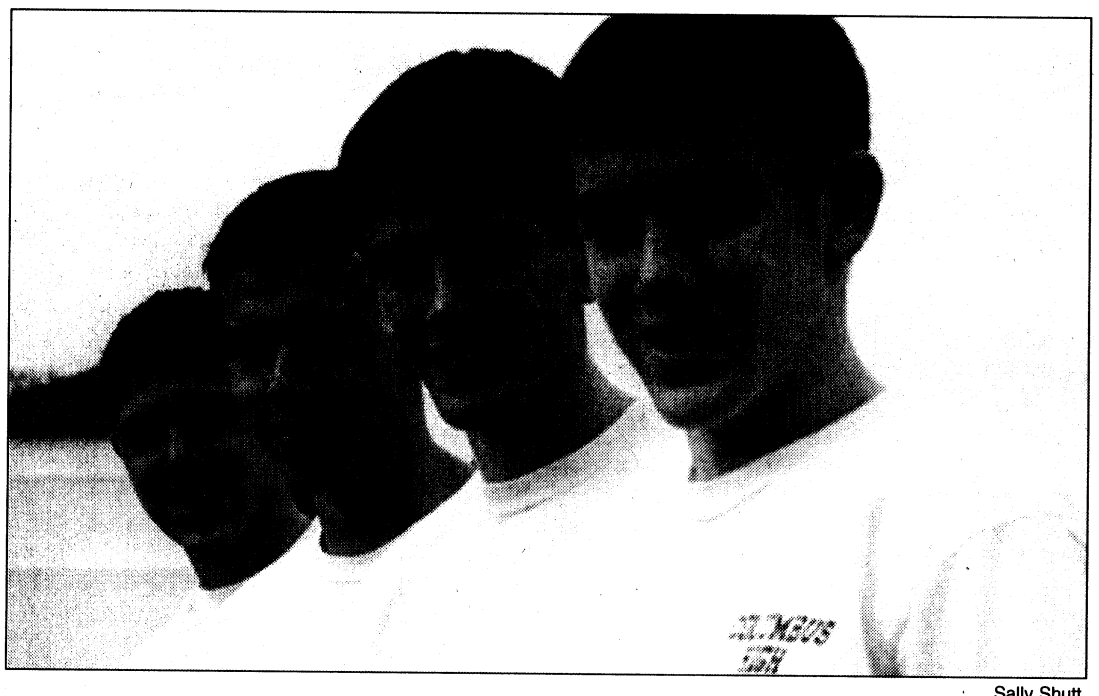
"It's great having a brother so close in age to me and one who is such a good athlete," Dan Ferriter, an 18-year-old senior, said. "Paddy really pushes me to get out there. He's a workaholic who loves to train any chance he gets. Without him, I don't know where I would be sportswise."

This is the fourth time Dan has made All Bi-City — three times for cross country and once for soccer.

He spent most of the season supporting his teammates from the sidelines due to a stress fracture in his foot, but proved himself in the four races he did run.

"It was reassuring to me that I could still run, that I still had it after being injured," Dan said.

Cross country races are 3.1 miles long, and Dan's personal best is 15:51.



Soccer, however, will be the sport he plays in college, either for Davidson College in North Carolina or Vanderbilt University in Tennessee.

Younger brother Paddy Ferriter, a junior, finished 15th in the Class AAAA this year.

Cross country appeals to Paddy because a race often comes down to "who wants it more," he said.

"If you work hard and are in Master sergeant runs to new heights

Pfc. Mark Watson

Master Sgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr. placed sixth in his division at the Huntsville, Ala., marathon.

45-year-old Soldier qualifies for April 16 Boston Marathon

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Imagine traveling 26 miles. Now picture yourself running that distance.

Master Sgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr. can and does just for fun.

Recently the 45-year-old ran in the Huntsville Marathon where he took sixth place in the masters division running the 26.2-mile course in 2:48:34.

His ranking qualifies him for the Boston Marathon April 16.

"My time was a very good time," McDonald said. "It will get me a good seed in the Boston Marathon."

Although the seasoned runner has always been athletic, he said he never competed until nearly 20 years ago.

"I never really ran till 1981 when my battalion commander at the time, Lt. Col. James D. George, challenged me to run a five miler to represent the battalion," said McDonald, Infantry Training Brigade's supply NCOIC. "After that the rest was history. That was the encouragement that got me going."

More than racing, McDonald said running is a time for him to think and reflect on life.

"Running brings things into focus," he said. "You can think about your goals in life, what you would like to achieve in life ... and you can set goals along the way.

"I do a lot of praying out there," he said. "A lot of praying and a lot of thinking."

The time to reflect helps him overcome the painful miles.

"Last year I ran the marathon in Huntsville in three hours and 15 minutes and almost fell," he said. "It was a really hard race the whole time. Some races are hard and some you go into and say 'man I feel really good.' This last race was one of those.

"I averaged about 6:24 per mile," he said. "The only time I really felt severe fatigue in this race was like mile 23."

Usually, "after you pass mile 20, that's where the wall comes in," he said. "You have to tell your body to endure the pain because the finish line is coming up."

Now in a recovery phase, McDonald cut back his daily run from 70-75 miles each week to 4-6 miles each day. He also took a PT test on "tired legs."

"I ran an 11:47 this morning on tired legs," McDonald said. "I've run a 9:28 before, but I still haven't fully recovered."

McDonald said his chain of command supports his running, and in return he gives them his very best.

"He is an executer. If something needs to be done he doesn't ask if it needs to be done he just does it," said Chief Warrant Officer Jeanettee Calderon, ITB's supply officer. "He is an outstanding NCO.

"Since I am new here he points me in the right direction," Calderon said. "He is great to work with."

She added if someone mentions running McDonald immediately is interested.

"He gets excited just talking about running," she said. "A lot of the younger guys look up to him. He does things they can't."

McDonald's passion for running can be seen in many of his activities.

"I hope I can run till the day I die," McDonald said. "I love to run. Running helps me to be all that I can be as a person. If there ever is a day I can't run, I hope and pray that I can walk."

Shooter: Earns 2000 Army Male Athlete of the Year

offshore rigger job, he decided it was fate, and left his rigger's position behind to join the Army's elite shooting team.

Graves enlisted in the Army in January 1984 and was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit after he completed Basic and Infantry Training at Fort Benning. In 1990, he was assigned as a team leader with the 20th Infantry Regiment in Korea and then returned to the Marksmanship Unit in 1991.

Since he joined the Army, Graves has had quite an impressive shooting career. He has won medals in every major shooting match in the world and was the 1997 U.S. Olympic Committee Shooter of the Year. Not only does Graves shoot skeet well, but he also excels in trap and double trap, having won medals in all three in Interservice and National Championships as well as at World Cups.

USAMU shotgun shooter Sgt. 1st Class Theresa E. DeWitt, a 1996 Olympian in Double Trap, said that she is amazed that Graves shoots all three Olympic shotgun sports so well.

"I can't imagine having to shoot all three well," DeWitt said. "It's draining enough to put 100 percent into one sport. But when you have to put forth 300 percent effort for three sports, that's an incredible achievement."

Graves is the best skeet shooter in the country and one of the top three in the world, said Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson, USAMU 1996 Olympic Trap shooter. Erickson and Graves, who both competed in the 1992 and 1996 Olympics, have been shooting together at the Army Marksmanship Unit for more than a decade together and are the best of friends.

"We're all like one big happy family here," Graves said. "I feel like I owe everything to my Mom and Dad who got me started, my coach Burl Branham who contributed a lot to my success, Bret, who's always there for me when something goes wrong, my wife, who is very supportive, and the Army, which gets most of the credit."

"Todd is one of the best international shotgun shooters in the world, and he's also a good Soldier," Branham said. "At one time or another, he has beaten the best in the world — all the Olympic Medalists — so his chances of winning at the Olympics were very good. I was very confident about Todd getting a medal; he did a tremendous job."

"It's a great feeling to win an Olympic Medal," Graves said. "I wish everybody from the Army Marksmanship Unit could have won a medal.

"I'd like to go back to where it all started, in Athens, Greece, in 2004 to win the Gold. Ascension to perfection is an ongoing struggle, but I'm going in the right direction."

He and his wife, Tracy, live in Cusseta, Ga., with their two children, James, 11, and Cody, 9. In his spare time, Graves likes to hunt, fish and coach Little League; he also performs trick-shooting demonstrations for charity, helps Boys Scouts earn their Marksmanship Badges and conducts gun safety classes for youth groups.

The 37-year-old Infantryman said he's going to stay in the Army "as long as they let me."

"All my goals have been fulfilled, except one — Olympic Gold," Graves said.

"Not very many people get it, but as long as I can, I'll keep trying."

history."

With the extra point the Eagles led 13-6 with only a minute remaining in the hard fought game.

With the ball under their control again, Rough Town's January hurled the ball 50 yards down field to cornerback Kelvin Lang who was stripped of his flags.

Although the pass got the team within scoring distance, they turned over the ball and then time ran out before either team could score again.

Rough Town players said there were several factors that contributed to their loss.

"Our defense slipped on a couple plays when we should have stopped them," Lang said.

While the game started slowly for both teams, Eagles' Stray said their defense is what kept them alive.

"We didn't excel on our offense," Stray said. But, "We really played tough defense. It feels good to be a winner."

The battle for third and fourth place took place earlier in the day when 3rd Bn. 75th Ranger Regiment, toppled A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., 36-6.

shape, it really shows when you are out there running and doing what you have to do. In the end, it often comes down to a guts race," he said.

Paddy was named to last year's All Bi-City team for both cross country and soccer.

Both Ferriters play club soccer with the Atlanta Football Club's Lighting Soccer Club, which means a two-hour drive to Fayetteville, Ga., several nights a week.

Their mother, Margie, is there to drive so her sons can study, eat and sleep during the four-hour commute.

"She's the real hero here," Dan said. "In addition to everything else she does, she keeps up with all of us and makes sure we do our homework."

The Ferriters' older sister, Meghan, plays soccer for Davidson, and 13-year-old Mary Whitney's soccer team just won the state title for the club soccer league.

Bobby, 17, and Joey Fix, 15, live just around the corner from their teammates.

"It really helps if you ever forget something or need a ride home," Bobby said.

The boys' mother, Deborah, ran at West Point, and Bobby hopes to follow in her footsteps this fall when he arrives at the U.S. Military Academy and tries out for the team.

Bobby, who made the All Bi-City team last year, finished second in the state Class AAAA this year, and his personal best time is 15:36.

For a young man who admits he spent a lot of time in front of the computer while his family was stationed in Alaska, Bobby ran every day this summer, averaging almost 50 miles a week. He will run track starting in February for Columbus.

At 6 feet and still growing, Joey also plays basketball for the junior varsity team.

Bobby is the one who introduced him to cross country.

"When I was in seventh grade, my brother and his teammates encouraged me and took me under their wings," Joey said.

Sibling rivalry has never been a problem, Bobby said.

"If he starts to beat me, then there will be a rivalry," he said.

Then, he added, "By the time Joey is a senior, he will be better than me. He is 10 times better than I was as a freshman."

As for managing their academic schedules at the school, as well as practices and other activities, the brothers shrugged their shoulders.

"We stay up late, wake up early and get as much done in class as we can," Bobby said.

TO OUR MILITARY PATIENTS

We welcome new and previously established military patients to our practice. Those who have seen us previously at Martin Army Hospital and wish to continue with us should call our office to schedule appointments, as we will no longer be seeing any patients at the Martin Army Hospital Cardiology Clinic. You may continue to use Martin Army Hospital for all other services as usual, however. Patients who wish to be referred to our practice may obtain referrals from their primary care physicians, but referrals are not necessary. We accept Medicare, private insurance, and Tricare Standard. However, effective December 22, 2000 we will no longer accept Tricare Prime and Tricare Extra.
